London bomb

LONDON (AP) — A bomb blew a hole in the London Stock Exchange on Friday, but no one was injured and trading hummed along without interruption on computers. A telephone caller earlier had warned of an IRA bomb.

Authorities rushed to the exchange and evacuated scores of traders and other employees just minutes before the market was to open to hundreds of visitors.

Glass and chunks of concrete showered down on Old Broad Street in the heart of the city's financial district. The stock exchange index was up for the day, but options trading was suspended until Monday.

Wide response

HOUSTON (AP) — Denise Wells, a legal secretary who's gained fame from an errant trip to the wrong restroom, is having a ball.

Radio stations are calling, people are offering to pay her fines, she's even had an offer for her own personal "facility" at the next George Strait concert she attends.

"I received several calls here at the office. We've had people call that want to pay our fine. I had a call from a woman who wanted to know who she could call in City Hall."

She said the men's room "would never be my first choice. But I just could not, you know, it became kind of urgent, and I saw a guy take his girlfriend in in front of me. I saw them go in and I thought, 'he's gonna run interference for her,'" so she followed them.

New staging

Rostropovich

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet-born cellist-conductor Mstislav Rostropovich has accepted an invitation to stage Dmitri Shostakovich's opera "Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk District" in Leningrad, Tass reported Friday.

Valery Gergiyev, chief conductor of the Kirov Theater, told the official Soviet news agency the production is scheduled for the 1992-93 season.

Rostropovich, music director of the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D.C., had his Soviet citizenship restored earlier this year and made a triumphant concert return to Moscow in February. His citizenship was taken away in 1978, four years after he and his family moved abroad.

Brennan's move alters face of court

■ Justice William J. Brennan Jr.'s surprise resignation will give President George Bush his first crack at reshaping the Supreme Court.

By Dan Freedman
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The resignation late Friday of Justice William J. Brennan Jr. gives President Bush his first shot at naming a Supreme Court justice, as well as a chance to round out the court's conservative majority.

Brennan

Bush's nominee is likely to be at the opposite end of the ideological spectrum from Brennan, 84, the towering figure of the court's liberal wing despite his diminutive size.

Brennan said in a letter to Bush that the "strenuous demands of court work and its related duties required or expected of a justice appear at this time to be incompatible with my advancing age and medical condition. I, therefore, retire effectively immediately as an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States."

According to court spokeswoman Toni House, Brennan suffered a small stroke shortly after the just-concluded court term. The aging justice fell down in Newark Airport while on his way to a European vacation, House said.

Brennan's doctor advised him to "avoid stress and strain and consider retiring," House said.

On Air Force One en route to Wyoming, Bush told reporters that Brennan's decision was a complete surprise.

"Obviously, his resignation is accepted. I also thank him for his distinguished service to the United States," Bush said.

Bush said he would confer with top aides Saturday morning to "start the process of finding a successor." Bush said that he would seek the best-qualified person to replace Brennan, and that he was "not afraid of starting a nomination fight."

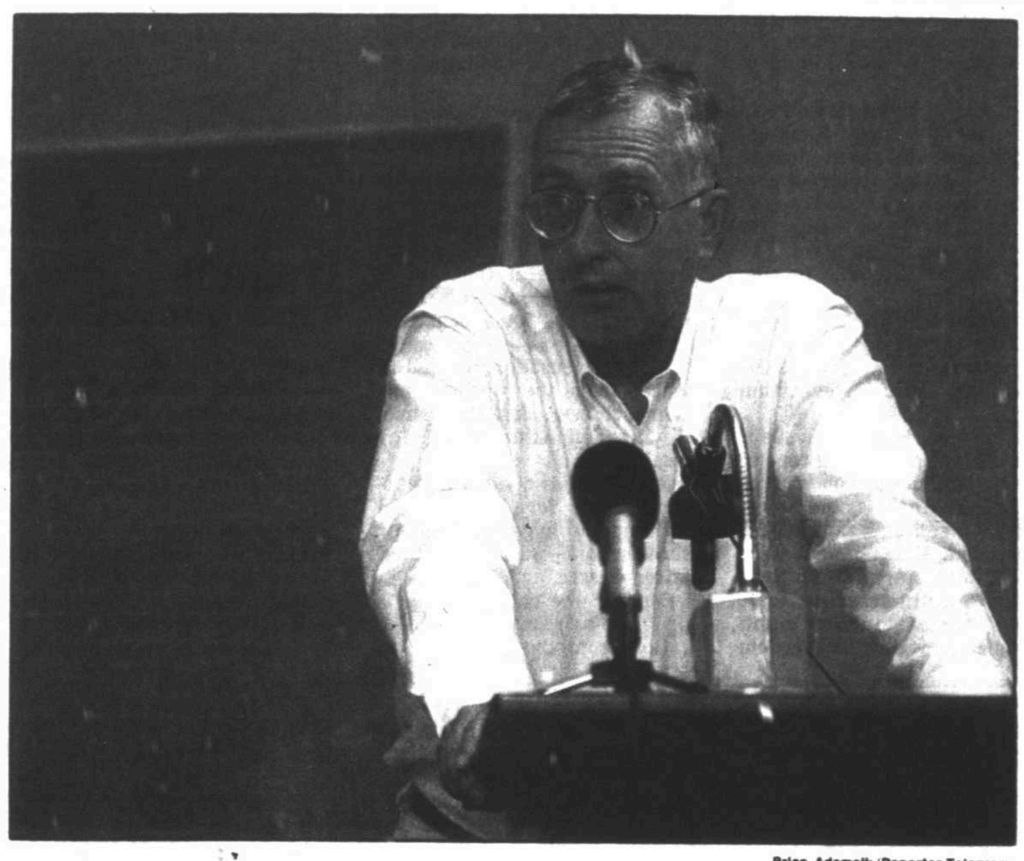

Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which will conduct hearings on Brennan's successor, said in a statement: "Justice Brennan is a great figure in American law and his wisdom on the court will be missed."

Eleanor Smeal, president of the Fund for the Feminist Majority, praised Brennan, who was a strong advocate of abortion rights and equal rights for women.

"Any nominees who refuse to disclose their opinions on abortion will be interpreted as anti-abortion, because women have the right to know when their lives are on the line," she said.

In his 33 years on the court, Brennan wrote over 1,200 opinions, including landmark decisions that required state legislatures to reapportion themselves on the basis of "one person,

Making a point

Sam Manning, Midland teacher and president of the Midland Federation of Teachers, voiced his opinon at the State Board of Education public hearing at Region XVIII Friday. Educators, parents and citizens had five minutes each to testify on issues concerning the state's long-range plan for public schools.

Long-range education plans draw complaints at hearing

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Emotions ran the gamut from subdued to explosive as concerned Texas citizens testified on the State Board of Education's long-range plans Friday.

Educators and parents complained of teachers overwhelmed by massive amounts of paperwork, overcrowded classrooms, and running up against administrative bureaucracy at the 1 p.m. Region XVIII public hearing.

Cynthia Levinson, planner for the Texas Education Association, directed the hearing which was audio taped for the state board. Testifiers were allowed to speak for five minutes on a first-come first-serve basis. Time permitted those who testified once an opportunity to speak a second time.

Ms. Levinson said the hearing was primarily designed to "solicit responses to the State Legislature's long-range plan draft and to solicit information, suggestions, ideas and complaints from the public."

State law establishes goals for education and requires the state board to develop and implement a four-year plan for achieving those goals. The first plan was prepared for the 1986-1990 and is being revised for 1990-94.

The plan's vision emphasized "collaborative efforts across agencies and institutions, across the public and private sectors and across levels of government."

North's conviction vacated

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal appeals court panel set aside Oliver North's Iran-Contra convictions Friday, reversing one outright and ordering a "witness-by-witness" review of whether all three were impermissibly tied to testimony he gave Congress under a grant of immunity.

The panel, divided 2-1, suggested that North's Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination may have been violated.

The ruling also could signify trouble ahead for the Iran-Contra case against John Poindexter, who was convicted of five felonies in April. Like North, Poindexter had given immunized public testimony to Congress in 1987.

North, in Baton Rouge, La., campaigning for a Republican Senate candidate, said he was "very plea-

Census effort being wrapped up

■ Enumerators conclude their house-to-house visits with 74 percent of city residents completing questionnaires — topping the county's 56 percent return and beating the regional average of 64 percent.

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

Were you counted?

Census enumerators won't be asking that question much longer, officials said. The last phase of the census effort ended Friday, with 74 percent of city residents and 56 percent of county residents responding to the questionaire.

Rick Menchaca, the city's public relations coordinator, said Midland has the highest return rate of the 14-county region administered by the Lubbock office of the Census Bureau. The average response rate for the region is 64 percent.

Census workers are now trying to improve on those numbers with computerized cross matches between addresses and questionaire bar codes.

"This is the phase where you count it all," Menchaca said.

"The enumerators are wrapping things up, they're no longer going house to house," he said. Instead, they're sending their information to the regional census office in Dallas.

But if you haven't been counted, it's still not too late.

Though the media blitz is over, seven-question forms and information are still available from Menchaca's office.

"We want those forms mailed in now," Menchaca said. "We'll still forward them. You'll still be in the count."

He said people out in the county who are holding forms an enumerator was supposed to collect should contact his office for a mailing address for the forms.

Menchaca attributed the lower county response rate to the high number of vacant houses in the county. The rate is based on the percentage of forms returned that were mailed out to addresses in the bureau's files.

Tomas Zuniga, a Dallas-based Census Bureau official, said the count is in its residual follow-up stage, where any addresses that may have slipped through the cracks will be checked.

In late August, the Census Bureau will compare its count of residences with those made by the city and county. If there's a discrepancy in the numbers, the bureau will run another computer check on addresses.

"The city will do everything in its power to get the best possible count, since

Texas shootings linked to satanism?

PANHANDLE (AP) — A prosecutor says satanism is being investigated in the July 13 shooting death of a Panhandle teen-ager and later attacks on a high school principal and another teen-ager.

Kenneth Glenn Milner, 19, of Panhandle has been indicted on a murder charge and two attempted murder charges in the incidents.

Carson County District Attorney David McCoy said investigators were "looking at the possibility of satanic involvement," in the shooting death.

Investigators contend that 17-year-old Frankie Gasper Garcia was shot as an occult sacrifice in a decaying barn in back of a deserted house northwest of Panhandle, the Amarillo Globe-News reported. It is known to Panhandle youth as "the haunted house."

Milner also is charged with attempted murder in the stabbing of Jimmy Britten of Groom and the wounding of Panhandle High School principal Ken Williams.

Britten was stabbed at his home about 1:30 a.m. Saturday, a few hours after Garcia was shot to death. He was treated at a local hospital and released the same day.

About two hours later, officers said, Williams was shot twice through the door of his home.

Williams, formerly the assistant principal at Horace Mann Junior High School and baseball coach at Amarillo Palo Duro High School, was wounded in the abdomen and leg. He was listed in satisfactory condition at Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo Thursday.

System tested to recycle space station water

Woodward is part of a crew working on a system to retrieve more than 90 percent of the water used on the planned $20 billion space station Freedom, scheduled for permanent manned use in 1997.

NASA and Boeing engineers at the Marshall Space Flight Center began using humans last May in around-the-clock tests of its prototype system to reclaim shower water, dish and laundry water, urine and sweat — but not all to be turned into drinking water.

In August, the first human guinea pigs will taste the drinking water — almost all of it condensation captured from the air — to make sure it's up to par.

"It might be like the Pepsi taste test. We might blindfold them and let them decide which (recycled water or tap-water) tastes best," said Kenny Mitchell, test coordinator for Environmental Control and Life Support Systems for the space station.

Mitchell said Freedom needs a water recycling system because water is too heavy to be constantly refurbished from Earth.

"Your goal is to try to see if you can avoid carrying tons of air and water ... so you want to recycle all the air and water that is needed," said NASA spokesman Mike Simmons.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration tests show that a standard eight-member crew aboard Freedom would use 40,000 pounds of water every 90 days in orbit. "It would be impossible to send the space shuttle with that kind of cargo every 90 days," Mitchell said.

Engineers hope to have astronauts at Marshall for full-scale testing by 1993-94, he said.

Inside one test room, three or four volunteers such as Woodward work up a sweat on the treadmill and use a modified Speed Queen washing machine and microwave oven. They also use a sink and urinal and take one-gallon showers — the same as the astronouts will in space.

"Most people are surprised you can take a shower with a gallon of water," said Woodward, who is Boeing's chief engineer in the project.

Woodward, 39, volunteered for the test and was cleared after undergoing a physical. He, like the 40 other volunteers, has no qualms about donating his sweat to science.

"For some of us who can't fly, this may be the second best thing," he said.

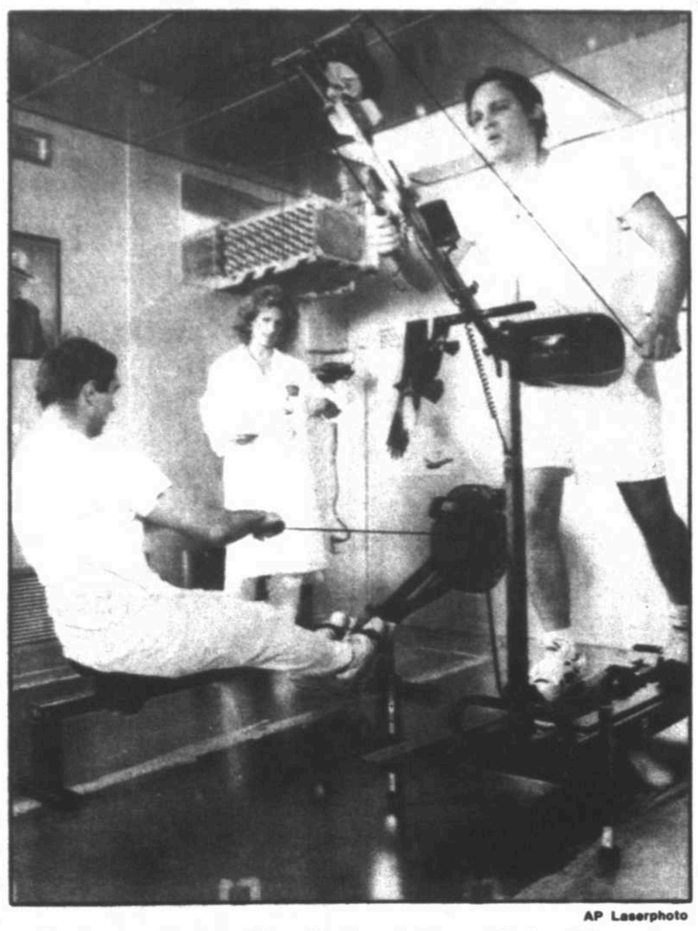

Volunteers go about their routine as condensation from their breath and sweat is snatched from the air by heat exchange coils at the rate of eight gallons a day, said Barry Roberts, a NASA mechanical engineer.

The condensation, as well as water from the washing machine, shower, sink and urinal, is filtered and tested for quality.

The water is divided into potable water for drinking and cooking and hygeine water for showers and washing clothes, Mitchell said.

Most of the potable water is provided by extracting condensation from the air, while 25 percent comes from a chemical process that uses carbon dioxide to produce water. Hygiene water is provided from urine and wash water from the shower, clothes washer, dishwasher and sink.

Urine won't be used for potable water, even though the water would probably be purer than most tap water, Mitchell said.

Karate improves concentration, too

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — When it comes to kids and karate, Ed Bame takes a hard line. "I make 'em work at it, really work," says the owner of the American Kenpo Karate Academy in El Paso.

In the case of his daughter, Asul, the ethos has paid big dividends. Six months ago, the deceivingly meek 8-year-old placed second at the World Karate Championship in Phoenix, outbattling a duo of black-belted boys to claim a chest-high trophy.

But Bame says the truest mark of her success is the gold honor-roll status she earned in school this year.

The new pitch seems to be a hit. Bame has been enjoying an upswing in kid clientele this summer as has Cliff Thomas at his Karate Center.

Both men attribute some of the surge to films such as the megahit "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles."

Texas snake charmers wear 10-gallon hats

LANCASTER, Texas (AP) — Not all snake charmers wear turbans and play the flute. Some of them in the Dallas area wear 10-gallon hats, blue jeans and cowboy boots.

Snake charming has become a popular pastime for a group of eight suburban Dallas individuals, who call themselves the Big D Snake Charmers.

"It's something fun to me even though it's dangerous," said Ricky Womack, who is a bakery deliveryman when he's not toying with water moccasin, coral snakes and copperheads.

The group's members perform occasionally at shows and festivals around the state. Their big event annually is the Itasca Arts and Crafts Festival.

At their last appearance, they performed the "three-man sleeping bag." In the stunt, three men and 90 snakes are crammed into two sleeping bags zipped together.

"No one had zipped three guys together into the bag before," Womack said.

The group also does a trick known as the "power lift." A member holds about a half-dozen snakes in each hand. By their tails. Simply charming. Snakes alive.

There is also the "balloon pop," in which a member holds a balloon in his mouth and taunts a deadly rattlesnake until it pops the balloon with its fangs.

The group doesn't leave safety to chance. They reduce their risk by practicing all their stunts countless times.

The next year, she got married in a snake pit with more than 500 wriggly witnesses.

Associated Press

Setting empty milk jugs and soft drink bottles by the curb is becoming a way of life in communities around the country that want to ease the costs of landfills.

A survey by the Council for Solid Waste Solutions turned up plastic recycling programs in cities in 35 states that are collecting tons of material each month.

One of the largest programs is in California, where 2,100 recycling centers and 88 curbside programs are collecting clear plastic, such as soft drink bottles.

In January alone, more than six tons of clear plastic was collected in a pilot program in West Los Angeles. In September, the curbside program will be expanded to 95,000 households in Los Angeles.

Dow Chemical Co. uses plastic collected in Walnut Creek, Calif., at its research laboratory to find new uses for recycled plastic, said Doug Draper, spokesman for the company, based in Midland, Mich.

Collecting the material is one thing, finding uses for it is another, Draper said.

In a recycling project in Akron, Ohio, two tons of plastic has been collected and used by Dow to test equipment that mechanically sorts one type of plastic from another.

Plastic milk jugs now must be separated by hand from plastic soft drink bottles. Draper said Dow's mechanical system uses a water bath and air streams to sort the plastics. For example, soft drink bottles can be parted in a water bath because they are heavier than other plastics, he said.

Dow and seven other companies have created National Polystyrene Recycling Co. It is building recycling centers for foam plastics in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Portland, Ore.

By 1995, the company expects to collect 250 million pounds of polystyrene a year.

Sharp seeking new proration plan

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

Texas Railroad Commissioner John Sharp told the Midland Desk & Derrick Club Friday that he would seek a new gas proration system for the state that would be simpler and not require the use of endless forms and expertise.

"It will be a producer-driven system and not a form-driven system, and it should save the industry millions," said Sharp.

Sharp said market demand would be determined for a field and the producer would be allowed to produce that demand within a year anyway he saw fit. He said the present system of gas proration was confusing and inaccurate.

He emphasized that natural gas would play a major role in the present and future economy of Texas.

Speaking at Desk & Derrick's annual Industry Appreciation Night, Sharp said politicans who say that the glory days of oil and gas in Texas are over and that the state should hitch its future to high tech projects like the Superconducting Super Collider are stupid.

He noted that it would take 42 supercolliders to have the economic impact of just the Texas oil industry, which does not count the natural gas industry in the state.

"I would have no qualms about my son becoming a geologist," said the candidate for State Comptroller.

Sharp blamed the present natural gas glut on government interference. "When the federal government, under the impression that we were running out of natural gas, outlawed the use of natural gas as a boiler fuel, it affected 65 percent of the natural gas market. When you destroy markets you create a surplus."

He noted that Texas would know when the gas bubble was gone, because natural gas would then sell on a Btu equivalent with oil.

He said the key to ending the surplus of natural gas was to rebuild markets in the Northeast and California, noting that he had sponsored gas conferences in both of those areas to help build market share for Texas.

"Gas is finally deregulated, and when the major players — the power generating companies — get back into the game, the market will be restored," said Sharp, who will leave the Railroad Commission in Janurary if he wins the race for comptroller.

HEARING: Parents share concerns

recommendations to expand early childhood before- and after-school programs. Another goal addressing curriculum suggested solutions including a lengthened school day and year.

Jenny Coston of Denver City said, "I hope curriculum will be developed which involves learning through all the senses — touching, hearing, seeing, tasting — so children can internalize these lessons." Ms. Coston, who represented the West Texas Chapter of the Association for Education of the Young Child, also said not requiring first graders to take TEAMS (Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills) tests didn't go far enough. "I'm asking for a ban on TEAMS tests from pre-kindergarten through third grade," she said. "Students need to be challenged with developmental appropriate curriculum, not testing."

JoAnn Leuhering, Midland parent, agreed with Ms. Coston. Ms. Leuhering accused the Texas education system of "teaching to test."

Ms. Leuhering who said she had experienced frustrations firsthand with her young son failing in school, said, "We don't address why children are being held back. Children are taught to take tests, not what they need to know. They can't read or write and when they get to seventh grade they can't fake it any more, so they drop out."

Sam Manning, Midland teacher and president of the Midland Federation of Teachers, said, "We tend to overuse and abuse testing." Manning said, "If we teach testing and not the curriculum, we should lose accreditation." Manning said, overall, in order to implement change in the school systems, "the fundamental structure of the schools should be changed.

Another speaker interested in changing the structure of the school system was Midland parent Cindy Walton. She said the real problem with American schools is that they are operated on "a centralized bureaucratic system." Ms. Walton said, "Private schools are successful because they must please the parents. Competition in schools is good."

Midlander Robert Volkmann also decried America's centralized school systems. "The school system is operated as a government monopoly," he said, calling the state-run school systems "as mediocre as the uncompetitive Soviet economy."

"I appeal to the planning bodies of education for the state of Texas to provide citizens a choice in the school system," he said.

"Rules come down from school boards and teachers are hamstrung. Privatization is the only solution to give citizens options," Volkmann said, urging the state to try the experiment of allowing parents to select schools which their children will attend.

Arguing against privatization was Gilberto Garcia, Midland teacher and local representative of the National Education Association. "Will school quotas be filled on a first-come first-serve basis," he asked. "Will discrimination be increased for students who don't have transportation to the schools they want to attend?" Garcia said he feared privatization would create "an ocean where a gulf now exists between the haves and the have-nots."

John McCarroll, general manager of KOCV-TV, suggested enhancing curriculum in the classroom with public broadcasting programs. "We (KOCV) and 14 other public television stations want to be your nonprofit partner,'" he said to Ms. Levinson during his testimony. McCarroll said that although other states support PBS stations, "Texas does not provide one dollar for public broadcasting."

Debbie Garrett, president elect of Ector County Unit of the Texas State Teachers Association, spoke up for teachers, saying teachers are burdened with "mountains of paperwork." She said the long-range plan — which recommends nontraditional diagnostic tools such as evaluating student portfolios — will increase paperwork and bookkeeping for teachers. "Who and how will these portfolios be evaluated?" she asked.

Opponents of cutting time slotted for music instruction in the schools were Kathy Fishburn, president of the Texas Music Educators Association and parent Susan Leshnower, both of Odessa. "It takes 10 brain steps to create one note of music," Ms. Fishburn said. "The intrinsic values learned in music and the fine arts can't be replaced."

Ms. Leshnower said economically disadvantaged students profit from music. "Music provides them with growth opportunities otherwise unavailable to them," she said.

Other issues addressed included implementing programs without funding, teachers subsidizing supplies for classes and after-school tutoring programs.

Ms. Levinson said further revisions of the long-range plan will be made following study of discussion of all the statewide hearings.

BRENNAN: Who will Bush nominate?

In recent years, Brennan took up the position as chief dissenter on major court opinions, a reflection of the court's shift to the right with President Reagan's appointments of Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Antonin Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy.

Justice Thurgood Marshall, Brennan's frequent ally on the dissenting side, praised his former colleague as a "voice of caution and compassion in urging that this court not retreat from its constitutional mission to protect individuals' rights of freedom and expression, guarantee that minorities be free from discrimination and to assure the rights of those accused of crimes."

The pressure will be on Bush in Republican quarters to appoint a reliably conservative nominee to replace Brennan, particularly since the court's new conservative majority suffered defections this past term and failed to win key rulings in cases dealing with abortion, civil rights and criminal law.

Whether male or female, white, black or Hispanic, the nominee will have to pass two tests to get Bush's nod, according to court observers and administration officials.

The nominee must be conservative enough to pass muster with rightwing Republicans who care deeply about the court's direction, but non-controversial enough to win approval of the Democratic-dominated Senate Judiciary Committee.

Already names are percolating to the surface.

The son of a San Antonio, Texas, Church of Christ preacher, Starr is a former federal appellate judge who has managed to please conservatives during the Supreme Court term just completed by authoring a brief opposing legalized abortion.

By avoiding fiery, controversial language in briefs, he has managed not to provoke liberal activists. Also, he has won points with some liberals for a moderate stance on civil rights.

Administration sources, who asked not to be identified, said Bush may offer a surprise, nominating the Supreme Court's first Hispanic justice.

There are few Hispanic judges who fit Bush's ideological mode, but among those mentioned as possibilities:

■ Ricardo H. Hinojosa, a U.S. district court judge in McAllen, Texas.

■ Ferdinand F. Fernandez, 53, a judge on the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. Fernandez was appointed to U.S. district court in 1985 by President Reagan and promoted to the appellate court last year by President Bush.

CENSUS: Counting concluded

they'll have to live with the numbers for the next ten years," Zuniga said.

He said the state could lose $1,500 in federal funds per Texan missed by the census over the next ten years.

"That's a real eye-opener," he said. "If you don't get counted now, you're invisible for ten years."

Texas also stands to gain up to three additional seats in the House of Representatives if figures reach predicted levels.

Zuniga said the census results will be presented to President Bush on Dec. 31, 1989. By April 1, 1991, the states will receive their counts broken down by counties for redistricting purposes.

Menchaca said being essentially done with the census after a year of effort is rather anticlimatic.

"The city and Complete Count Midland worked hard at educating the public, telling them how important it is for planning and how confidential it is," he said. "I think we did a good job."

Big Spring man injured in landing

BIG SPRING — A Big Spring man was injured Friday morning when his small plane crashed during an emergency landing attempt north of here, Department of Public Safety reports show.

Boyce Sneed, 53, of Big Spring suffered lacerations in the crash and was in good condition at Scenic Mountain Medical Center Friday, according to reports. No one else was on board the plane when the crash occurred, A DPS spokesperson said.

Sneed's plane, a 1979 single-engine Cessna, reportedly experienced engine failure about 25 minutes after takeoff from Big Spring. Sneed attempted to land the plane on Farm-to-Market Road 1584 about eight miles north of Big Spring, missed the road and came down in a cotton field, reports said.

The plane was heavily damaged in the crash, the spokesperson said.

TESTIMONY: Did television taint trial?

sed" by the ruling and added, "I certainly hope the special prosecutor ends it now." He said, "We've been under virtual siege."

The ruling was also celebrated by congressional supporters of the former Marine lieutenant colonel and White House aide who became a national figure during the televised congressional hearings.

Independent Counsel Lawrence Walsh, who is supervising the continuing Iran-Contra investigation, said merely, "Everyone familiar with these proceedings has recognized the difficulties presented by the grant of immunity by Congress."

Walsh could seek review of the ruling by all 12 members of the appeals court or he could go directly to the Supreme Court if he chose.

The appeals panel reversed one of North's convictions, blaming faulty jury instructions from U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell, the trial judge in the North case.

The panel "vacated and remanded to the District Court" all three convictions, telling Gesell he "must hold a ... full" hearing on the taint question. Gesell could reinstate the two remaining convictions if he found there had been no taint.

Gesell's inquiry "must proceed witness-by-witness; if necessary, it will proceed line-by-line and item-by-item," the appeals court said in an opinion supported by judges Laurence Silberman and David Sentelle, both Reagan administration appointees.

Chief judge Patricia Wald, a Carter administration appointee, dissented, saying she was "satisfied that North received a fair trial" and received "all of the constitutional protections to which he was entitled."

In six days of compelled testimony in July 1987, North admitted to many of the activities for which he was later charged with crimes.

The government must show by "a preponderance of the evidence" that no use was made of North's immunized testimony either by witnesses or by the Iran-Contra prosecutor's office, said the appeals panel. The hearing would deal with the testimony of witnesses before the grand jury which indicted North, as well as with witnesses who testified at his trial.

A jury convicted North on May 4, 1989, of three of the 12 charges he faced:

■ Aiding and abetting an obstruction of Congress in connection with a November 1985 shipment of Hawk missiles to Iran.

■ Altering and destroying National Security Council documents detailing his efforts to provide military assistance to the Contras.

■ Accepting an illegal gratuity, a $13,800 home security system, from retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard Secord whom North had enlisted to get arms to the Contras and assist the Reagan administration's initiative toward Iran.

Pentagon concedes reality of steep cuts

By James R. Owen and Stewart M. Powell
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said late this week the Pentagon may have to slash military and civilian employment by almost eight percent over the next 15 months, ending thousands of military careers.

Cheney said attrition and reductions in recruitment would be insufficient to meet the steep manpower reductions being proposed by the Senate Armed Services Committee and House Armed Services Committee.

The two committees are proposing reductions in the armed services of between 100,000 and 150,000 troops by Oct. 1, 1991.

"You can only get so far by attrition," Cheney said. "When you get to the levels that we're talking about now in terms of cuts of that magnitude there's no doubt but that you're going to be running reductions in force (layoffs)."

"...In many cases you're going to have to involuntarily separate personnel in order to meet those kinds of targets," Cheney said. "There's no question about it. It's the only way to do the job.

"My job is to cut the defense budget and that decision has been made," Cheney told reporters. "What hasn't been resolved is how deeply we're going to cut it, especially in 1991."

Cheney said defense personnel cutbacks would have an impact on the job market in the private sector.

The Pentagon employs 2.1 million military and roughly 1 million civilian personnel.

Pentagon officials have stressed their concern that force cutbacks be carried out in a humane manner, at least in part to ensure the attractiveness of service in the all-volunteer U.S. military.

Chris Jehn, assistant secretary of defense for force management, told a separate news briefing that Pentagon officials want people who leave as the result of force reductions to "leave with dignity and the appropriate compensation."

Jehn said that seeking congressional approval for separation pay packages for departing enlisted personnel would be the "biggest single objective" for the Pentagon.

The Pentagon will recommend to Congress that all military personnel dismissed because of the force reductions receive payments equaling 10 percent of annual base pay, multiplied by years of service. Only officers currently receive a lump sum payment.

Other benefits the Pentagon wants to extend to severed personnel include continued access to military post exchanges and extended health insurance for 90 days (and 1 year for pre-existing conditions) for service personnel and their dependents.

Jehn said the Defense Department will try to minimize the number of dismissals. But he said normal attrition can't be relied on exclusively to achieve personnel cuts because of the need to maintain "occupational balance" within the armed forces. That's why recruiting programs will continue even as the services undergo an overall reduction in their numbers.

The Pentagon said that between 250,000 and 300,000 service personnel are lost each year due to attrition, although most of those are first-term enlisted soldiers who do not reenlist.

Jehn said the Pentagon, in cooperation with the Labor Department, has already begun developing programs to help departing service personnel retool and market their skills to the civilian economy. The Pentagon also expects to maintain a computerized "outplacement" service to help dismissed personnel find new jobs.

Cheney said Congress and the Bush administration are "well aware" that there are "tradeoffs" as the nation trims defense spending.

"It will have some kind of an economic impact," he said. "Some communities will be fairly hard hit. The overall impact on the national economy is something for the economists to sort out."

New guidelines create costuming conundrum

NEW YORK (AP) — Three naked virgins are worrying the folks at the New York City Opera.

The ladies in question are in the production "Moses und Aron," and the opera officials fear their presence could violate new obscenity guidelines issued last week by the National Endowment for the Arts.

"I'm sorry, but this is no joke," read a memo distributed this week by Marc A. Dorfman, who handles foundation and government gifts to the opera company.

"Attached is a copy of the NEA guidelines for grants. Please look it over to see if there are any questions about our season," said the memo, which was printed in Thursday's New York Newsday.

"Will the three naked virgins in 'Moses und Aron' jeopardize our NEA grant?" asked Dorfman. "We received a special grant for this production."

'Will the three naked virgins in 'Moses und Aron' jeopardize our NEA grant?'

— Excerpt from a memorandum to the New York City Opera regarding its National Endowment for the Arts grant

NEA spokeswoman Virginia Falck said it was unlikely the virgins in question will lead to problems: "It's highly unlikely. If a grantee is worried, they should contact us."

But the idea that there could be trouble infuriated Joseph Papp, the director of the New York Shakespeare Festival.

"This is the beginning of self-censorship," said Papp. "This is a case of a valuable creative organization forced to watch its own rear because of the Jesse Helms-inspired restrictions now on the books."

The new NEA guidelines say an obscene work is one which the average person would find "appeals to the prurient interests"; which "depicts or describes sexual conduct in a patently offensive way"; and which "lacks serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value."

"Moses und Aron" is slated to debut Sept. 22.

Dale Zeidman, spokeswoman for the opera company, said the company was making no comment on any aspect of the memo. The New York City Opera is the nation's second-largest repertory opera company, behind only the Metropolitan Opera.

'Smiley face' draws frowns

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Bright, yellow happy-face pins emblazoned with the governor's name are part of a public service campaign, officials say. But some state employees complain the buttons are for his re-election campaign.

The lapel buttons, which also feature the slogan "YES, WE CAN!," are part of a campaign organized by Gov. William Donald Schaefer's office to encourage Maryland's 70,000 state employees to offer the public service with a smile.

Some state employees complained that they were being used in an election year.

"It certainly did appear that it was politically motivated," William Bolander, executive director of the state chapter of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, said Thursday.

Bolander said he was not blaming the Democratic governor, who may not have had anything to do with putting his name on the pins.

Bolander said he also supports the campaign to improve service to the public.

"It's just the way you go about it," he said. "You could get that message across without having the governor's name attached to everything."

"This has absolutely no political overtones whatsoever," Schaefer press secretary Paul Schurick said angrily. "I am deeply insulted by anyone who questions the motives of a campaign to improve public service."

Schaefer said he wasn't worried about the complaints because "only the press" is upset about the buttons.

"It's not a campaign gimmick" but an attempt to make state employees better public servants, he said.

Most of the complaints came from employees of the Department of General Services, who were told in a July 6 memo: "All DGS employees are to wear their 'YES WE CAN' buttons during working hours."

William Seth Shepard, who is seeking the Republican nomination for governor, said incumbents such as Schaefer should show "self-restraint" in putting their names on billboards, buttons and other paraphernalia purportedly promoting the state.

One man affects thousands in Pakistan

By Kathy Gannon
Associated Press Writer

KARACHI, Pakistan — When the streets of Pakistan's largest city explode in gunfire, Abdul Sattar Edhi rushes out into the urban battlefield.

With the siren on his beatup mini-van blaring, he weaves through the streets on a mission of mercy, picking up the the dead, the dying and the wounded.

A resurgence of ethnic and political violence has claimed more than 400 lives in Karachi and Hyderabad, 150 miles to the north, in the past month.

"When I go out on the streets of Karachi, I feel very sad," Edhi said of the bloodshed, which has transformed this once tranquil city on the sun-baked Arabian Sea into camps of heavily armed gangs.

Edhi, 62, operates the Edhi Welfare Foundation, a $5 million a year charity he founded 30 years ago using a battered pickup truck as a one-man free ambulance service.

Steadily he built it into one of the subcontinent's biggest and best-organized social service networks, boasting a fleet of 615 ambulances, a rescue helicopter, dozens of blood banks and shelters for mental patients, heroin addicts, battered wives, orphans, runaways and anyone else his staff finds wandering without help or hope.

"I was born a Moslem, but true religion is the service of humanity," said Edhi, a stalky man with a flowing white beard and a gruff voice. "I'm just one man. I just want to help people."

He is called saint, an angel of mercy, and his deeds have earned him the nickname "Father Teresa," the counterpart of the tiny Roman Catholic nun who has spent her life working with the destitute and dying in the slums of Calcutta, India.

AP Laserphoto

His telephone rings at all hours. He is ready for any emergency, always carrying a packed bag with a small satchel that contains a change of clothes — gray baggy pants and a matching shirt — rubber sandals, glasses, a toothbrush and a near-toothless comb.

Born in the western Indian state of Gujarat, Edhi immigrated to Pakistan during the 1947 partition that ended British colonial rule of the subcontinent. And in many ways, Edhi's simple lifestyle mirrors Mohandas K. Gandhi, the Mahatma or "great soul" who led that freedom struggle.

Edhi and his wife, Bilquis, live in a stark room sandwiched between an office and a narrow room with only a wooden table where the bodies of Karachi's unwanted and unclaimed are laid out for burial.

Mrs. Edhi, mother of four children, looks around the room at the two-burner hot plate, a wooden table and a cupbord crammed with their possessions. "This is my paradise," she said.

'There are so many people lost and alone in this world.'

— 'Father Teresa,' Pakistani social worker

The walls outside the dilapidated building are lined with fuzzy photographs resembling wanted posters, pictures of beggars who died in the alleyways around town.

"There are so many people lost and alone in this world," he sighed. "They die alone and no one cares. So we take their pictures and hope that maybe somebody will know them."

Edhi has buried a small city over the past three decades, washing more than 60,000 unidentified bodies and wrapping them in traditional white shrouds.

In less than three hours, three bodies arrived for burial. He had already washed and prepared two earlier in the day. "Where else would they go?" he asked.

While Edhi cares for the dead, his wife looks after the living, setting up adoptions.

"I have seen so many children die. They were thrown in garbage cans, in gutters. So I thought 'I'll give them to the people who want them'," she said.

She and her husband have set up homes for battered wives and centers to treat the city's 1 million heroin addicts. They also established a home for the handicapped and a girls' orphanage in two donated mansions in Karachi's affluent Clifton area, where Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto maintains a home.

"He is helping everyone," said Farhad Naz, a social worker in Karachi.

In this desperately poor and troubled country, Edhi's work fills the widening gap created by the government's inability or unwillingness. He does it solely with private donations.

"When my mother died, I promised that as long as God gave me energy, I would work to help the poor and the sick," said Edhi, who has a sixth-grade education.

"I was not educated so when I started my efforts were small, simple and practical."

Workweek cut to cut smog

LOS ANGELES (AP) — About 1,600 county workers will be switched to a four-day work week in the latest move to cut traffic and thin the smog that sits over Southern California.

The county Board of Supervisors voted this week to close the headquarters of the Department of Public Works in suburban Alhambra on Fridays, and put its employees on a 10-hour, four-day week. It is the latest effort to meet demands by the regional air-quality authority for big employers to reduce travel by their employees.

Public Works Director Thomas A. Tidemanson said that in addition to reducing smog, the change would save the county $1.7 million a year and wouldn't affect the department's efficiency.

Blast rips London Stock Exchange

LONDON (AP) — A bomb blew a hole in the London Stock Exchange Friday, but no one was injured and trading hummed along without interruption on computers. A telephone caller earlier had warned of an IRA bomb.

Authorities rushed to the exchange and evacuated scores of traders and other employees just minutes before the market was to open to hundreds of visitors.

Glass and chunks of concrete showered down on Old Broad Street in the heart of the city's financial district. The stock exchange index was up for the day, but options trading was suspended until Monday.

Five hours after the blast, employees returned to the building.

"If the purpose of this callous act was to bring the City (financial district) to a halt, they have failed singularly," said Andrew Hugh Smith, chairman of the Stock Exchange.

George Churchill-Coleman, commander of Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist unit, said the bomb had been planted in a men's restroom in a visitors' area, and contained 5 to 10 pounds of high explosives.

Asked if he believed the Irish Republican Army was responsible, Churchill-Coleman said, "That is a reasonable assumption."

Police evacuated the building and cordoned off streets after the first warning was received at 8:02 a.m. The bomb exploded at 8:49, just 11 minutes before the visitors' area was scheduled to open.

"We had only half an hour to reach the scene, evacuate the building and clear the surrounding streets," said police Commander Hugh Moore. "If we have been a few minutes later getting there, it would have been too late."

Police, firefighters, evacuated workers and sightseers jammed the district's narrow streets, marked out centuries ago for foot and horse traffic. Hundreds of commuters were delayed in cars and buses caught in traffic jams.

Churchill-Coleman said a man with an Irish accent made warning calls to a newspaper, a news agency, the fire brigade, police, the Salvation Army and the Stock Exchange. Police said the caller used a code word to confirm that it was an IRA attack.

There had been no warning before the IRA's bomb attack June 25 at the Carlton Club, a gathering place for Britain's governing Conservative Party. The IRA, seeking to undermine support for British rule in Northern Ireland, generally has concentrated its attacks on government and military targets.

Churchill-Coleman said it was "the first time in recent years" that a code had been given with the warning.

Police said the bomb destroyed the men's room next to the public visitors' gallery, which was heavily damaged.

The explosion tore a jagged hole about 20 feet high and seven feet wide in the modern concrete building, about 10 feet above ground level.

Liz Rowe, 26, a trader at Sumitomo Trust in the Royal Bank of Scotland building opposite the exchange, said police told her to run, but she had only traveled half a block when the bomb went off.

"It was not as loud as I would have thought. It sounded like loads of scaffolding falling," Ms. Rowe said.

Joe Phillips, a 21-year-old options trader, said a recorded warning was broadcast inside the exchange.

"Normally they say this was a test, but a proper voice came on the tannoy (address system) saying, 'This is not a test. Get out of the building,'" he said.

There had been 30 to 40 people on the trading floor, standing around reading The Financial Times, looking at their screens and waiting for trading to start, Phillips said.

Churchill-Coleman said the restroom had been cleaned Friday morning but nothing suspicious had been reported by the cleaning crew. It was not known when the device had been planted, he said.

A uniformed guard normally searches bags and parcels carried by visitors before they enter the gallery, which accommodated up to 100 people.

Stock Exchange staff enter through a separate entrance and are required to show their photo identification cards, a spokeswoman for the Stock Exchange said.

Security television cameras are used in the exchange but they do not make videotape recordings, Churchill-Coleman said. He said police had found no witnesses to the planting of the device.

Churchill-Coleman said posters advertising a confidential telephone number to report suspicious activities were going up around London.

"The public must be our eyes and ears," he said. "Somebody out there knows where these individuals are."

Police have made similar pleas after other IRA bombings.

"There is clear evidence that people are being vigilant," said a Scotland Yard press spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "We are attending a large number of false alarms. We have always said we'd rather attend a large number of false alarms and it is clear people are keeping their eyes open and being careful."

Salvadoran rebels threaten renewed military offensive

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — El Salvador opened a new round of talks with leftist rebels Friday under a guerrilla threat to start a new offensive unless significant progress is made. Six rebels were reported killed in new fighting.

The armed forces in San Salvador said Friday six rebels died and seven were wounded Thursday evening in heavy fighting with soldiers near Jucuapa, 68 miles east of the capital, and that one rebel was wounded near Lolotique, 75 miles east of San Salvador. It said the government's counterinsurgency Atonal infantry battalion was involved but gave no details.

Military patrols seized about 20 rebel antipersonnel mines in a raid at Tecoluca, 45 miles southeast of San Salador, and guerrillas dynamited five power line towers, briefly blacking out eastern regions, the news release said.

In Washington, State Department deputy spokesman Richard Boucher deplored the threat of a renewed offensive and accused the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, or FMLN, guerrillas of a campaign of violence.

Boucher said guerrillas engaged in "brutal assassinations" directed at Salvadoran military personnel and their families.

"The purpose ... seems to be to polarize the situation further and to elicit a reaction from extremists on the right," he said, citing the recent killings of an off-duty officer and of an army major on his way to law school.

Boucher told a briefing the peace talks can succeed if both parties negotiate seriously.

The United States has been providing President Alfredo Cristiani's rightist government with more than $1 million a day in military and economic aid to keep his war-battered country afloat. Many members of Congress complain of human rights violations in demanding that the aid be reduced or eliminated.

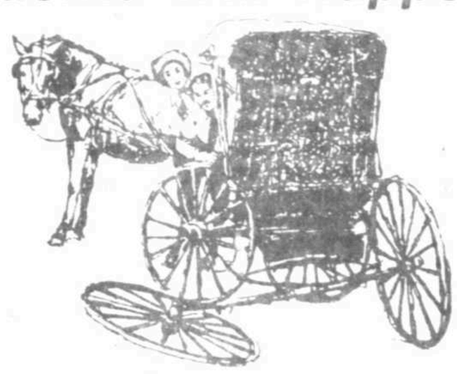

Boucher said the left "should put aside its tactics of assassination and violence and go to the table committed to a just peace."

The left demands military cuts and elimination of rightist death squads in the third round of peace talks since Cristiani took office in June 1989. So far, no substantial progress has been made in ending the decade-long civil war.

Similar efforts in 1984 and 1987 by the previous Salvadoran administration ended in deadlock. But both sides said they hoped to reach some agreements.

Driver arrested in crash of bus carrying U.S. teens

OXFORD, England (AP) — The driver of a bus that overturned while carrying U.S. teen-agers in a special program at Oxford University, killing two Americans, has been arrested, police said Friday. All 59 others on board the bus were injured.

John Radcliffe Hospital in Oxford reported Friday that 16 people were still hospitalized. One was in intensive care.

Police identified the dead as students Lawrence Levine, 16, of Chappaqua, N.Y., and Autumn Dubose, 18, of Lilburn, Ga.

The driver of the double-decker bus, Gan Sharma, was taken into custody Thursday night and charged with causing death by reckless driving, police said. They added that alcohol was not a factor in Thursday's accident.

The driver, 40, was slightly injured. After his arrest, he was released on bail Friday pending further investigation, said Chief Inspector Laurie Fray of the Thames Valley Police.

The bus was carrying gifted U.S. students who were taking a four-week summer school course at Oxford University's Magdalen College. The vehicle toppled as it turned off a highway near Wheatley, six miles east of Oxford, police said.

She said Thursday the bus had passed her just before the crash going 80 to 85 mph. The British highway speed limit is 70 mph.

Rescue workers prepare to move the wreckage of a double-decker bus, which crashed on the main London-Oxford road Thursday, killing two students from the United States, and injuring 56 others.

At Radcliffe Hospital, U.S. Ambassador Henry Catto spoke to the injured and to parents who flew here from the United States.

Brad Becker, 16, of Piedmont, Calif., told the ambassador there was panic on the bus when it went out of control.

"I said, 'Oh my God!' and people started screaming. The bus just made it onto the grass and fell over. If it had fallen into the freeway, we'd all have plummeted into the path of cars. We'd have been killed — all of us," he said.

Becker suffered a broken vertebra.

Richard Klein, 16, of Greenlawn, N.Y., was on the top deck and ended up pinned unconscious under the bus. But he said he suffered very slight injuries and was "lucky to be alive."

Michael Kramer, 17, of New York, said, "People really helped each other out. ... We are the luckiest people in the world." He suffered only minor injuries.

Diedre Walsh, a spokeswoman for the Oxford Advanced Studies Program in New York, said talks were under way at Magdalen College to decide whether the course should continue. The Advanced Studies Program in New York organized the trip.

Liberian rebels take much of northern section of capital

EDITORS: The following is based on a pool report from journalists in Monrovia, among them Associated Press correspondent Michael Goldsmith.

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — Rebels overran most of northern Monrovia Friday, pushing several hundred remaining government troops into a narrow strip of land on both sides of President Samuel Doe's executive mansion.

Witnesses reported many government casualties, and shipping sources said two Liberian coast guard cutters were sunk in the port by gunfire.

The United States said it would not intervene to halt the 2-day-old rebel offensive, the latest drive in the 7-month-old civil war.

The rebels, led by former Doe aide Charles Taylor, captured Monrovia's 2-square-mile port area in the northern suburb of Bushrod Island. They advanced toward the two bridges linking the island to the center of the city.

Infiltrating rebel troops fought pitched battles with government soldiers who remained on Bushrod Island, the witnesses said.

The main bridge across the Mesurado River was littered with the bodies of government troops, the witnesses said.

Reports earlier said the rebels had captured two boats that sank, although it was not clear who was commanding them when they were sunk.

In Washington, the State Department said the United States has no plans to dispatch a U.S. peacekeeping force requested by some Liberian officials.

Spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler confirmed President Bush had received an appeal from Foreign Minister J. Rudolph Johnson and eight other prominent Liberians for a temporary U.S. force.

Most Liberians would welcome U.S. help in "averting massive plunder and tribal revenge" and in having Doe evacuated from the country, said one of the Liberian signers, former U.N. Ambassador Winston Tubman.

But Nelson Taylor, the rebel leader's brother, said the appeal for U.S. help "is just one of the scams that Doe is using to involve the U.S. in a battle with the citizens of Liberia."

When asked if the rebels were prepared to fight U.S. forces he said: "We will fight until the U.S. can kill every one of us." He spoke from his home in Providence, R.I., and said he represented the rebel forces.

In downtown Monrovia, every shop and office was closed Friday.

Soldiers set up makeshift roadblocks at downtown intersections, firing wildly into the air to clear terrified civilians off the streets.

Hundreds of frightened Monrovians gathered at the gates of the U.S. Embassy hoping to seek refuge.

Archbishop offers to resign in sex abuse scandal

TORONTO (AP) — The Roman Catholic leader of Newfoundland offered his resignation after a commission he formed blamed him and the province's church for mishandling accusations that priests were sexually abusing boys.

Alphonsus Penney, archbishop of Newfoundland, made a public apology Wednesday to the victims and their families after the report was made public earlier in the day. He tendered his resignation to Pope John Paul II.

However, a Vatican spokesman said the pope was on vacation and no decision had been made on the resignation. Penney can resign only if the pope allows him to do so.

Five priests or former priests have been convicted in the eastern province on sexual abuse charges the past three years. Several others are awaiting trial in the scandal, which first became public in 1987.

"We are very sorry for the times you were not believed, were not supported or were ostracized in any way in our community," the archbishop said, accepting full responsibility for failing to deal with the scandal.

For 2½ years, Penney refused calls to step down while more than 20 of his priests and lay members of the Newfoundland Catholic community were charged or convicted of sexually abusing boys for more than a decade.

Soviet train blast kills 5, injures 10

MOSCOW (AP) — An explosion rocked a Moscow-bound passenger train in southern Russia overnight, killing five passengers and injuring 10, Soviet media reported Friday.

The cause of the blast, which occurred around midnight Thursday between the second and third passenger cars of the train, was under investigation, according to the Tass news agency.

The explosion occurred on the Matveyev Kurgan-Zakadychnoye section of the Donetsk railway line in southern Russia, just south of the Ukrainian border near the Sea of Azov, the government newspaper Izvestia said. The train had departed Thursday from Tshkaltubo in the republic of Georgia.

The evening television news program "Vremya" showed footage of the forest-green train, with the heavily damaged second and third cars. Both cars had a gaping holes blasted outward from where they were connected.

Police were working to identify the dead, Izvestia said.

ANC, South Africa meet

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President F. W. de Klerk and Nelson Mandela of the African National Congress met for an hour Friday and agreed the government and the black nationalist movement would hold a second round of talks next month.

Friday's meeting was their first since just before Mandela left on a six-week, three-continent tour urging the world to maintain sanctions on South Africa until irreversible changes in apartheid have been achieved.

The Aug. 6 meeting, announced by de Klerk's office, is to discuss obstacles in the way of formal negotiations on a new constitution and the end of white minority rule. The ANC and members of de Klerk's Cabinet reached preliminary agreements in their May 2-4 meetings on such issues as violence, political prisoners and returning exiles.

A joint committee since then has made recommendations on how to overcome disagreements, such as defining political crimes and who would qualify for amnesty from prosecution.

Milk cows step out

TOKYO (AP) — A university professor says he has developed summer jackets with matching hats to shield cows from the sun, insects and diseases — and allow them to produce more milk.

The outfit consists of three straw pieces that cover the head, back and abdomen, Mosaku Sakurai, of the Tokyo University of Agriculture, said Friday.

He said he had developed the jackets after observing cows for more than eight years.

Mud no bother

AUSTIN (AP) — Fans came from as far away as South Texas to watch the Dallas Cowboys practice Friday, braving muddy fields with their children, dogs and autograph books.

"I've been a fan of the Cowboys all my life ... It's great. I just couldn't believe they were coming," said Carlos Garza, a St. Edwards University student from Mexico watching the practice session with his Rottweiler, Ernie.

The Cowboys moved their summer training camp to the university campus this year after 27 years at Thousand Oaks, Calif.

On Friday, the second day of practice, about 800 spectators sat on bleachers or stood on ground that was soaked and muddy from rain earlier in the week.

Friday's Answer — John Paciorek went three-for-three with the 1963 Houston Colt 45s, but never played again after a congenital back defect was discovered. Younger brother Tom compiled a .282 average over 18 major league seasons, however.

Greg Norman displays the swing with which he captured a share of the lead after two rounds at the British Open in St. Andrews, Scotland. Norman and England's Nick Faldo are tied for the lead.

Open closed to all but two

■ Greg Norman and Nick Faldo are deadlocked atop the leaderboard and four strokes in front of any contenders at the British Open.

Associated Press

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland — They're Nos. I and 1-A on any list of the world's great golfers. Nick Faldo and Greg Norman will determine who's who over the last 36 holes of the British Open.

Faldo and Norman reached the halfway point of this 119th and lowest-scoring Open Championship in a dead heat at 132, 12 strokes under par on the Old Course, and set up a head-to-head duel for world golfing supremacy.

No one else was within four strokes of the run-away co-leaders, who will be paired together in Saturday's third round, a confrontation reminiscent of a couple of other recent British Opens in which leadership in the game was on the line.

Seve Ballesteros' triumph over Tom Watson here in 1984 made the Spaniard the undisputed leader of the game. Watson relinquished the role he'd secured in a one-stroke victory over Jack Nicklaus at Turnberry in 1977.

Neither Watson nor Ballesteros will be around to watch this latest in a series, however.

Both were victims of the unkindest cut in the history of golf's oldest tournament. A score of one-under-par 143 — the lowest ever by three strokes — was required to qualify for the final two rounds.

The old low was two-over par at Royal Troon last year. Eighty golfers made it then; 72 — par for the Old Course — advanced this time.

Norman, who has a recent history of come-from-behind, last-round challenges that seem to meet misfortune in golf's top events, returned to an

Angels blow chances

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

The Midland Angels had two golden opportunities to win Friday's Texas League encounter with the Jackson Mets, but the Mets fought off the threats and countered with two runs of their own in the 11th inning to pull out an 8-6 win at Angels Stadium.

The Angels had runners at first and third with one out in both the ninth and 10th innings, but could not put the visitors away either time.

Nichols had tied the score with a two-run double and had advanced to third on Luis Aguayo's single.

The Angels again had runners at first and third in the 10th after Scott Cerny's hit-and-run single moved Doug Davis to third. Davis thought about advancing after Jeff Barns popped to shallow left field, but opted to stay at third rather than test the outstanding arm of left fielder Jaime Roseboro.

Wiley Lee then had a chance to be the hero, but was struck out by Jackson reliever Doug Cinnella, 2-3, who got the win despite giving up four hits in 1⅔ innings.

In the 11th, the Mets ousted Mike Butcher, 2-5, with a single and walk. Alex Jimenez then greeted Tim Meeks with his second double of the evening to score one run and Roseboro followed with a slow bouncer to short on which Rudy Hernandez was able to score an insurance run.

NCAA bans UNLV

■ After a 13-year battle that even reached the Supreme Court, the NCAA finally rendered a decision on Jerry Tarkanian and his cage program.

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — UNLV was barred by the NCAA Friday from defending its men's basketball title, making it the second champion ever — and the second in three years — to be denied the right to defend.

Tarkanian

The penalty involved violations originally detailed by the NCAA in 1977 that started a 13-year battle with UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian that finally ended up in the Supreme Court.

The one-year prohibition from the NCAA tournament will not affect television appearances or the number of athletic scholarships UNLV is allowed to give.

The postseason ban would also include the NIT tournament. But it will be up to the Big West Conference to determine if UNLV can play in its postseason tournament.

UNLV has four starters returning from its national championship team, which routed Duke 103-73 in the title game. UNLV was likely to be the consensus preseason No. 1 this year.

The ruling today was separate from an ongoing NCAA investigation involving the recruitment of New York prep star Lloyd Daniels, and left school officials worried that more severe penalties could result from that probe.

After UNLV and Tarkanian were found guilty of recruiting violations in 1977, the school served a two-year probation and Tarkanian was suspended for

The United States' Greg LeMond, right, shows the centerfold of an erotic magazine to a smiling Claudio Chiappucci of Italy, but the ploy did not work. Chiappucci remained the overall leader after the 19th stage of the Tour de France.

Associated Press

BORDEAUX, France — The showdown between Greg LeMond and Claudio Chiapucci all comes down to 28.5 miles on the next-to-last day instead of 15 miles on the final day.

And it will be in the rolling green hills and forests of central France instead of the shuttered buildings around Paris.

Chiappucci, the upstart and LeMond, seeking his third title, cleared their final barrier Friday to keep on course for their rendezvous in Saturday's time trial with the Tour de France title at stake.

Both riders were relatively unbothered in Friday's stage. Guido Bontempi of Italy won in solitude after he broke away from the small lead group late in the 113.5-mile leg from Castillon la Bataille to Limoges in central France.

Temperatures again reached past 95 degrees on the trip through wine country.

Chiappucci and LeMond stayed together like bicycle buddies for much of the race, with barely a length between them except for one brief moment when LeMond dropped back for a mechanical problem. He quickly rejoined the pack and stayed on Chiappucci's back wheel in the final miles.

They were 6 minutes, 3 seconds behind Bontempi at the end. The Italian won in 5 hours, 16 minutes, 4 seconds.

"I'll be happy when it's over," LeMond said Friday. "I am still surprised that Chiappucci has the lead still. But you never know what can happen."

But most Tour observers think LeMond should beat Chiappucci on the course by at least a minute.

But the yellow jersey is also an incentive for Chiapucci, who has worn it for a week and has held a five-second lead over LeMond for four days.

"Sometimes being in the yellow jersey can help a person," the Italian said. "I feel relaxed. Greg looks nervous to me."

Roger Legeay, manager of LeMond's Z team, admits there has been some tension this week. The worst was Wednesday, when LeMond suffered a flat and lost 90 seconds to the pack before charging back to join it — still five seconds behind the leader.

"That has made him aware that the race wasn't won yet," Legeay said. "But he will relax Saturday morning with a ride around the course to get familiar with it. He knows it already."

Ryan one win away from 300

Associated Press

Nolan Ryan won his 299th game Friday night, allowing one hit in six innings as the Texas Rangers held on to beat the Detroit Tigers 5-3.

Ryan will try to become the 20th pitcher in major league history to win 300 games on Wednesday night at home against the New York Yankees. The last to reach 300 was Don Sutton in 1986.

A sellout crowd of 41,719 saw Ryan (10-4) win his fifth straight decision. He walked one, struck out four and threw 77 pitches before leaving with tightness in his back.

Ryan, who got his sixth no-hitter on June 11 against Oakland, permitted only a fourth-inning single by Lou Whitaker. Nursing a bad back, Ryan was relieved after walking Tony Phillips on four pitches to start the seventh.

Detroit scored three runs in the seventh after Ryan left. Dave Bergman hit an RBI single off Craig McMurtry and Lloyd Moseby had a two-run triple. Moseby was thrown out at the plate when he tried to score on a pitch by Brad Arnsberg that bounced 10 feet away from catcher Mike Stanley.

Kenny Rogers finished for his ninth save.

Orioles 3, White Sox 2

Randy Milligan drove home Phil Bradley with a two-out single in the 10th inning and Cal Ripken set a major league record with his 89th consecutive errorless game at shortstop as Baltimore beat Chicago.

With one out, Bradley drew a walk from Bobby Thigpen (4-4). With two outs, Milligan hit a high foul pop that first baseman Carlos Martinez misjudged and allowed to fall in front of the Chicago dugout.

Two pitches later, Bradley stole second and Milligan followed with a line drive to left field. Bradley beat the high throw from Ivan Calderon to give the Orioles their ninth win in 12 games.

Royals 5, Red Sox 0
Red Sox 3, Royals 1

Mike Greenwell's two-run homer in the seventh inning snapped Boston's 25-inning scoreless streak and lifted the Red Sox to a victory and doubleheader split with Kansas City.

In the second game, Tom Brunansky singled with one out in the seventh. With two outs, Greenwell unloaded a towering shot into the Royals' bullpen off Luis Aquino (4-1). Marty Barrett squeezed home another run in the eighth.

Mariners 6, Brewers 4

AP Laserphoto

The Mariners broke a 4-4 tie after Edgar Martinez led off with a single. Pinch-runner Jeff Schaefer moved to second on a sacrifice by Scott Bradley and scored the go-ahead run on Vizquel's hit to left off Randy Veres (0-2). Reynolds then got his third hit to score Vizquel.

Twins 2, Yankees 1

Brian Harper doubled with one out and Kent Hrbek was intentionally walked. John Moses pinch ran for Harper and Ortiz lined a single off Dave LaPoint (5-7).

Jackson goes on DL list

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Royals put outfielder Bo Jackson on the 15-day disabled list Friday, recalled catcher Bob Boone and delayed surgery on pitcher Bret Saberhagen.

Saberhagen, the 1989 Cy Young winner, will undergo arthroscopic surgery on Monday to remove a small bone fragment from his right elbow. The surgery was originally scheduled for Friday and the Royals hope the right-hander, who is 5-7 with a 3.10 earned run average, will not be out for the year.

Rangers make moves

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The Texas Rangers activated infielders Steve Buechele and Jeff Kunkel from the 15-day disabled list for Friday night's game with the Detroit Tigers.

To make room on the roster, the club optioned third baseman Scott Coolbaugh to Oklahoma City of the American Association and put designated hitter Harold Baines on the 21-day disabled list, retroactive to July 11 because of a pulled right hamstring muscle.

Buechele spent two stints on the disabled list after breaking his right wrist when hit by a pitch on April 22. He originally was sidelined until May 25, then returned to the disabled list on June 18 because of continued problems with the wrist.

Kunkel was disabled on June 24 because of a sprained ligament in his neck. He went to Oklahoma City on medical rehabilitation on Thursday of last week and batted .421 with 3 RBIs in four games.

Suns pick up Nealy

PHOENIX (AP) — Veteran power forward Ed Nealy, traded by Phoenix to the Chicago Bulls last October, signed a three-year contract with the Suns Friday as an unrestricted free agent.

Financial terms were not disclosed, in keeping with team policy, but sources said the deal was worth $650,000 and included a fourth year as an option.

The 6-foot-7, 240-pound Nealy is the second unrestricted free agent ever signed by Phoenix to a multiyear pact. The Suns signed forward Tom Chambers to a five-year, $9 million contract as the NBA's first unrestricted free agent on July 5, 1988.

Suns president Jerry Colangelo joked that Nealy regularly lost money to Chambers in card games and Chambers was anxious to have Nealy back on the team.

"In all seriousness, we felt we needed some insurance at the power forward position."

Barrowman exceeds own swimming mark

The University of Michigan senior led a spectacular, successful assault on his world 200-meter breaststroke record Friday, stealing the show from Matt Biondi and Janet Evans in the opening night of swimming competition at the Goodwill Games.

The 21-year-old from Potomac, Md., won in 2 minutes, 11.53 seconds, shattering his world mark of 2:12.89 set last August in the Pan Pacific Games at Tokyo.

Barrowman's training partner, Sergio Lopez of Spain, tied American Kirk Stackle for the silver medal at 2:12.24, also better than the old world mark.

"Today I was out to prove to myself that I could do it again after a year off," he said. "A year ago, I did it (set the record) for the first time and then the pressure was on me for a full year. Now that I've done it again, I think the pressure is off, at least a little."

Barrowman wasn't surprised that he broke the record. But he was stunned that he did it by 1.36 seconds.

"Coming into this meet, people expected me to drop the record a little," he said. "But I don't think anybody expected this."

He said intense training with Lopez helped, because he knew if he could compete with Lopez he could compete with anyone.

"So when I came here I was very relaxed," Barrowman said. "In fact, it was the most relaxed I've felt before a meet."

His record-breaking performance came despite a lack of careful planning, he said, because he hadn't had a serious race since the NCAA championships last spring.

"You always lose the feeling for racing after a short time," he said. "I think that was the biggest problem I had. I didn't have a great strategy because I didn't have a feel for a race."

He also said the performance helped to ease the pain of his disappointing fourth-place finish at the Olympic Games two years ago. But he never wants to forget that day in Seoul.

"Both records have repaired a lot of the problems and a lot of the hurt," he said. "But I hope that it's still down in there. I hope that it burns inside me somewhere, because if it doesn't, then I'm in trouble."

Biondi, who won seven medals, including the 50-meter gold, in Seoul, edged Jager with a winning time of 22.10 seconds, the fifth-fastest ever but well off the world record of 21.81 set by Jager this year.

Jager still leads the head-to-head showdown between the two in major races by 13-7. It was the first time Biondi had beaten his arch-rival in a major competition this year.

Biondi said he needed the victory to keep the rivalry alive.

"If Tom was to continue to walk away with the first places, it might not be as exciting," he said. "So this is good for us when we break it up like this and take turns winning."

"Yeah," Jager joked. "It's all planned."

The race came as the mild-mannered crowd had settled into the seats at the new King County Aquatics Center and there was little, if any, excitement shown at the outcome.

The silence confused Biondi, who felt he may have finished fourth or fifth.

"Usually at a meet we're the headliners and the crowd's more into it. It felt more like a workout," he said.

Jager said he and Biondi had wanted too much to get the competition off to a blazing start.

"Being the first ones out of the block, I think maybe we put a little more pressure on ourselves to perform at a world-record pace," he said. "My experience with the 50 is that if you put a little too much pressure on yourself, it takes away something from the race."

As expected, Evans easily captured the gold in her first event of the Games, winning the women's 800-meter freestyle in 8:28.47, well off her world mark of 8:16.22. Anke Moehring of East Germany finished second in 8:33.44.

It was the first of four events in five days for the 18-year-old Stanford swimmer, who won three golds in the 1988 Olympics.

Americans won six of the eight events Friday.

University of Texas swimmer Leigh Ann Fetter won the women's 50-meter freestyle in 25.71.

The United States won the men's 800 relay in 7:16.26, more than four seconds ahead of the second-place Soviets.

Just as he did in his only previous major-tournament triumph, the 1986 Open at Turnberry in which he led all the way, he wasted no time in this one.

He holed a magnificent sand wedge shot from 75 yards out for an eagle-three that served as the centerpiece Friday of a second consecutive 66 and now has shared the lead at the end of each of the first two rounds.

"A real shot in the arm, a bonus," he said of the soft shot that arched against a gray Scottish sky, hit the green four feet beyond the flag and spun back into the cup.

Faldo's approach was less dramatic but no less effective. Just as he has done so often in recent years, in victories in the 1987 Open and the last two Masters, the tall Englishman's elegant strokes were simply relentless.

He compiled a bogey-free 65 — matching the best score of the tournament — in the chilly weather and brisk breezes off the Bay of St. Andrews.

Faldo's may have been the more difficult role. He was playing behind both Norman and Ian Woosnam of Wales, all of whom shared the lead at one point or another.

"When you're all playing well, and holing putts, you look at the leaderboard and keep going," Faldo said.

"We were all sort of like chasing each other. It was a good mode to be in, going for every pin and trying to hole every putt. It was the key to the round. Everybody was adding to their score and when it's like that, it's a nice mode to be in."

And it provided some spectacular, record-matching golf to the 40,000-plus Scots who milled and mused over the course where the game was born. The 132 by Faldo and Norman tied the Open record for 36 holes, set by Henry Cotton at Sandwich in 1934.

Woosnam, the 5-foot-4 Welshman who won the last two events on the European tour, fell victim to the horrors of the Road Hole, the 17th at St. Andrews and often described as the toughest in the world.

He made double bogey there and drifted five strokes back at 137.

Craig Parry of Australia and Payne Stewart, the current PGA title-holder and the leader of the greatly diminished American forces, shared third at 136. Each had a 68.

Woosnam shot 69 and was tied at seven under par with Nick Price of Zimbabwe, a two-time runner-up in this event; James Spence of England; and Mike Reid, who let two major titles escape him last year.

Spence shot 65 as the first man off the tee, matching Faldo for the tournament's low round. Price and Reid each had a 67.

They were followed at 138 by Americans Jodie Mudd, Steve Pate and Peter Jacobsen, Jose-Maria Olazabal of Spain, Scot Sam Torrance and his elongated putter, and Anders Sorensen of Denmark. Mudd had a 66, Olazabal 67, Sorensen and Pate 68 and Jacobsen a 70 that included a birdie on the Road Hole.

Watson and Ballesteros each shot 145, two too many to make it into the final field. Ballesteros had a second-round 74 and Watson said he "three-putted myself to death" in a 73.

But they were not alone in their disappointment and frustration.

Take Mark Calcavecchia for example. The defending champion struggled to a 75 and was at 146 after what he called some "idiotic" play.

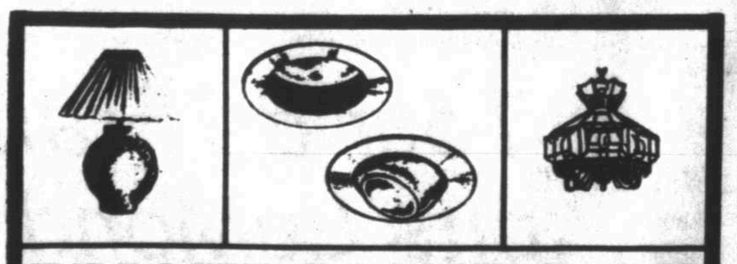

"It's painful because I came in with such high expectations," he said.

Curtis Strange also missed at 71-145.

And so did Arnold Palmer. The 60-year-old winner of this title who played his first British Open at the Old Course in 1960, shot 71-144 — even par — in his farewell appearance in the tournament he helped restore to the front ranks of golf's great championships.

While the head-to-head duel between Norman and Faldo may be a spectators' delight, Norman said he was supremely indifferent to the pairing.

"It doesn't matter who I play with or against," Norman said.

Soviets don't balk at pastime

By Kelly P. Kissel
Associated Press Writer

BALTIMORE — To make a point, a player has to touch all the pillows.

That, in a nutshell, is the theory behind baseball for 120 Soviet students and scientists who Thursday night saw their first American baseball game.

"The guy who hits the ball is the hitter. The guy who catches the ball is the catcher and the guy who pitches the ball is the pitcher," said Greg Vaserstein, 20, a Russian immigrant assigned to translating a Baltimore Orioles-Chicago White Sox game into something the Russians could understand.

Vaserstein moved from Moscow to the United States with his parents 11 years ago and picked up baseball by listening to radio broadcasts of the New York Yankees. He didn't bother explaining the balk rule or designated hitters, but got enough points across himself to illustrate why the Orioles won 4-1.

If you get four myachiks, that's good. It's a base-on-balls and you get to go to the first pillow. If you advance two more pillows, it's even better. You're only 30 meters from home, another term difficult to grasp.

"I understand the idea of baseball. It's a new kind of sport and it's interesting," said Paulina Oganova, 16, of Moscow, one of the students attending summer science courses at Penn State University.

"One of the ladies in charge of the group came up to me and said 'There are very good boys playing this game,' meaning attractive," she said.

For most of the visiting students, the first baseball game they had ever seen was on television during the last two weeks. The Soviets have put together a national team that is touring the United States now, but few know or care.

"There is no baseball in the Soviet Union," said Valery Semashko, a physics research engineer in Moscow who traveled with the students. When reminded of the national team, he didn't change his answer much.

"Will they ever be this good? I hope so," he said.

The team will play in the Goodwill Games in Seattle beginning next week.

Ron Frazier took his University of Miami team to the Soviet Union last fall for exhibition games and found the Soviet team still struggling with fundamentals.

"When you're first learning the game, it's very mechanical," he said.

But Frazier thinks the Soviets will make up for the United States' 120-year head start.

"They'll learn. They'll learn," Frazier said. "They didn't play ice hockey, either, when it was first accepted into the Olympics, but withing 20 years they were the best in the world."

Baseball becomes an Olympic sport in 1992.

Semashko and others weren't terribly interested in playing the game they were watching, but indicated an interest in patterning their behavior after American fans.

"It seems they're feeling very well," said Alexander Naumov of Zhukovsky, a town about 25 miles outside of Moscow. "They continually eat sandwiches (hot dogs) and drink lots of beer.

"We want to be similar to real American fans so we can enjoy the game in the same way," he said.

The Orioles treated the students to a pregame meal in a stadium lounge and Penn State sponsors tried to teach them the wave. Hands and bodies shot up at random until they tried it in the park.

Vaserstein couldn't adequately explain the "Let's Go, O's," cheer from the crowd, saying it wouldn't translate well into Russian and Naumov tried his hand at a jeer normally directed toward soccer and hockey referees. That didn't do the trick, either.

"He just said, 'Let's put the judge on the top of the soap,'" Vaserstein said.

Boxing displays its dirty laundry

Associated Press

NEW YORK — For two ugly weeks, boxing's dirty laundry filled a Manhattan courtroom: promoters discussing their lies, lawyers flinging charges and countercharges, the heavyweight champion of the world reduced to mere verbal sparring.

When it ended this past week with a negotiated peace, Las Vegas hotel casino owner Steve Wynn stepped into the sunshine of a downtown sidewalk and proclaimed the whole exercise beneficial to business.

"I hope so. I hope so," Wynn replied when asked if the legal shenanigans would help hype the upcoming James "Buster" Douglas-Evander Holyfield fight, which may itself visit the courtroom before it reaches the ring.

"This will be the biggest betting fight since Hagler-Leonard," said Wynn, cutting quickly to the one thing that turns boxing's bitterest enemies into fast friends: money.

As Don King, an expert on boxing's scheming and scamming, has said again and again and again, "Only in America."

Buster hates Don. Buster's manager hates Don. Don is afraid of Steve. Buster thinks Don's a liar. Don thinks Buster's breaking a contract. Which means, of course, that all four are now partners in promoting Buster's next fight after Holyfield.

Wynn's elation was over an agreement that could pit Douglas against Holyfield on Oct. 25 in the first heavyweight title fight since Feb. 10 — eight months of lawyers instead of lefts, juries instead of jabs.

Douglas has spent more time on the witness stand — 40 minutes — than he has in the ring — none — since his upset knockout of ex-champ Mike Tyson.

"It's a horrible shame that Buster Douglas' reign is characterized by repeated lawsuits," said Kathy Duva of Main Event Monitor Promotions. "This whole thing has been a sin."

Duva's company handles Holyfield, and they intend to hold Douglas to a Sept. 21 fight date to which both sides agreed before the Douglas-King legal battle. Main Event joined in the interminable litigation by asking a judge to order that the fight take place as originally scheduled.

This follows the U.S. District Court trial in a suit brought by King against Douglas. Lowlights of the case included:

— King's description of the heavyweight champion as a hot dog-and-beer fighter: "When he came on, people went to the refreshment stand."

— King and fellow promoter Bob Arum's bizarre excuses for their mendacious behavior. According to Don: "I wouldn't call it lying. That's just my style." As for Arum, he pleaded hyperbole: "Hyperbole is not lying. Hyperbole is exaggeration."

— Wynn, who will be King's co-promoter for Douglas' first fight after Holyfield, was ominously characterized by his spiky-haired soon-to-be business partner as someone "everyone's afraid of."

— Arum boasted that his description of WBC President Jose Sulaiman and WBA President Gilberto Mendoza as "two little Noriegas" was "one of my better lines."

— Arum also told the jury what constituted peace in the boxing world: just a single lawsuit pending between himself and King.

"Do you know how many times Don King and I have sued each other over the past 10 years?" Arum asked. "We've done dastardly things to each other we wouldn't do to other people."

Arum, who spent most of the last decade going after King's throat, appeared as a witness on his ex-adversary's behalf.

Things were so strange in the courtroom that U.S. District Judge Robert W. Sweet, who presided over the trial, told attorneys for both sides, "I wouldn't want to be a juror in this case for anything."

One exasperated lawyer, worn out by attempts to cross-examine King, told Sweet, "Mr. King's perception of what is being asked often differs from reality."

"Sometimes that's a problem," the judge acknowledged.

But all the problems were worked out, as they always are, so that everybody can make a buck. Forgive and forget — until next time.

"The issue was emotional. The problem started in Tokyo. But once we got together and worked things out, it went away," Wynn explained after the settlement.

Translation: King and Donald Trump received several million dollars just to walk away. Douglas will make his money again in the ring, benefiting his manager, Wynn and Wynn's Las Vegas hotel casino.

After the settlement, King announced he'd finally give Douglas a promised $100,000 bonus for defeating Tyson. "I'm a man of my word," King said in the hallway outside the courtroom, ignoring the smirks of reporters.

UTA's Speed takes his wheels to World Games

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — University of Texas at Arlington's Greg Speed has met all challenges since becoming a paraplegic at 14. So next week's World Wheelchair Games in England should be no problem.

Speed, a champion in the 100-, 200-, and 400-meter races, will compete with his lightweight three-wheeler in the Stoke-Mandeville World Wheelchair Games in England, July 27-Aug. 5.

That competition will mark a high point in his recovery from a May 3, 1984, accident that left him with a broken back. Speed was riding his bicycle through his suburban Arlington neighborhood when he collided with a car.

He spent 2½ months at Dallas Rehabilitation Institute, but left eager to get on with his life. It was then that he watched the 1984 Olympics on television and saw a wheelchair athlete from UT-Arlington named Randy Snow win the silver medal in the 1,500 meters.

"Wow! I didn't know you could do that," Speed said of the performance.

Speed, who got involved in racing in 1988, said he was encouraged by a friend to try the sport, though he "didn't imagine anyone actually being competitive in it."

He's scaled back his usual morning and evening workouts to 45 minutes daily as competition nears.

"I'm not nervous now. I'm kind of surprised," he said. "I know I will be next week though."

Speed says his awareness of wheelchair athletics has given his life an added dimension. Since entering UT-Arlington in 1988, the aerospace engineering junior has become a star guard in basketball and a sprinter in track.

Last winter, the Movin' Mavs wheelchair team qualified for the Final Four at St. Paul, Minn. They finished fourth, but Greg expects them to be even stronger next season.

"People say they're inspired by watching me," he said, "but I'm just living. You have to deal with what life gives you."

Coleman signs with Houston

Coleman, 5-7, 173, played two seasons for the Rebels after transferring from Mississippi Delta Junior College.

He caught 49 passes for 1,014 yards and 11 touchdowns in two seasons. He averaged 20.7 yards on 44 kickoff returns and 10.2 yards on 44 punt returns.

The Oilers also announced that starting defensive tackle Doug Smith, who agreed to contract last week, signed his contract.

First round pick Lamar Lathon, a linebacker from the University of Houston, signed a 5-year, $3.1 million contract on Tuesday.

Eighth round pick Brett Tucker, No. 10 Dee Thomas and No. 11 Joey Banes also are signed.

Other unsigned veterans are tackle Bruce Davis, cornerback Patrick Allen, running back Allen Pinkett and wide receiver Leonard Harris.

Oilers rookies and one-year veterans report to the club's training site at Southwest Texas State University Sunday to begin two-a-day workouts.

Tempers flare in Austin

Associated Press

NFL

Competition for jobs at Dallas Cowboys training camp will be fierce, coach Jimmy Johnson says. But it took a nasty turn Friday.

Ball-carrier Broderick Sargent was attempting to break strong safety Greg Lee's tackle when the two began pushing each other. A fight followed, teammates rushed in and as many as 10 jumped on the pile before coaches broke in to restore order.

Johnson was angry because on Wednesday he had specifically ordered his players not to join a fight in a game situation.

Even before the fight, Johnson was in a sour mood because the practice wasn't proceeding crisply.

"The practice was ragged and there were a couple of altercations, which sometimes happen in training camp," Johnson said later.

"So I took the opportunity to talk to the players about how we want it done. What leads to this...is that we have so much competition, so many people fighting for jobs right now that at times that aggressiveness gets out of hand and outside of what we want to do."

Johnson said the sloppy practice was partially the result of extreme humidity, measured at 100 percent during the morning session.

"They probably are mentally and physically tired and sometimes their minds wander a little bit," Johnson said.

Johnson also said he has been impressed with the play of former Texas A&M receiver Rod Harris, a Plan B signee.

"He's very intelligent," Johnson said. "He can play both positions. He catches the ball well and he has the speed I'm looking for. He's also an outstanding return man."

In injury news, wide receiver James Dixon remained sidelined with a kidney problem but is expected back by Sunday and running back Keith Jones sprained his right knee. Jones' condition is day-to-day.

After six straight days of heavy rain, not a drop fell during the morning session. That gave the waterlogged fields and outlying muddy areas at St. Edward's an opportunity to dry out.

Bentals

The Bengals announced Friday that Anthony Munoz, a nine-time Pro Bowl pick, has signed a new contract. Munoz, 6-foot-6 and 284 pounds, was a unanimous choice on the NFL's all-decade team for the 1980s.

Terms of the contract weren't disclosed.

The Bengals, who traditionally have had problems signing their top picks, signed No. 1 choice James Francis of Baylor on Thursday.

Broncos

Lorenzo Hampton, once the featured back for the Miami Dolphins, is now content in a backup role for the Denver Broncos.

After his role diminished in Miami, Hampton was left unprotected by the Dolphins and signed with the Broncos as a Plan B free agent.

"I knew when they signed me that they were looking for me to come in here and perform a role," Hampton said. "I'm willing to do that. The challenge is to do that as best you can.

"I'm past the stage where I care about individual goals. I just want to win. I don't need a lot of glory or anything."

Lions

Detroit's Barry Sanders led the NFC in rushing as a rookie and missed all of training camp last year.

So the Lions can't wait to see what their star runner can do after six weeks of camp. The only one who's not so crazy about it, though, is Sanders.

"I can't say I'm looking forward to it, but it should help," the former Heisman Trophy winner said Friday as the Lions opened camp at the Silverdome. "Hopefully, I can start where I left off last year.

"We (as a team) can do what we did at the end of last year. We're closing the gap on a lot of teams."

Sanders and the Lions both finished on a high note last season. Sanders rushed for 873 and 11 touchdowns in the last eight games as the Lions went 6-2, winning their final five games to finish 7-9 after an 0-5 start.

Colts

Chandler, unhappy with his contract, left Friday morning after taking a physical. He could be fined for each day he remains out of camp.

"They either have to do something for me or get rid of me," Chandler said. "I'm ready for the long haul on this. It's the only option I have."

Coach Ron Meyer said: "I kind of feel sorry for Chris. One thing that highlights or earmarks any great athlete is his ability to compete. He now has denied this."

Chandler wants to renegotiate a three-year contract he signed as a third-round pick in 1988. The Colts ended renegotiation talks with Chandler after signing top pick Jeff George to a six-year, $15 million contract.

Cardinals

"Big Daddy" is on the move again.

Defensive end Carl Hairston, a 14-year veteran, was claimed off waivers by Phoenix. Hairston had anchored the Cleveland Browns defensive line for the last six years with 37½ quarterback sacks. Last year, he had 60 tackles and 6½ sacks.

"We're delighted to add a player of Carl Hairston's character and ability," Cardinals general manager Larry Wilson said.

Flagler hocks best for worst

■ With Super Bowl jewelry in tow, Terrence Flagler moves from the NFL's winningest team to its losingest.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — From the best to the worst. From a Super Bowl ring to a uniform with a tarnished star. Why did you go, Terrence Flagler?

It's opening day of Dallas Cowboys training camp. Flagler is being swarmed upon in a live "middle drill."

The world champion San Francisco 49ers never had such a full contact drill in training camp. Why did you leave, Flagler?

The Cowboys, the NFL's sorriest team at 1-15 in 1989, used their No. 1 draft choice to take running back Emmitt Smith of Florida. Why did you come to Texas to run, Flagler?

"I was frustrated because I didn't feel I had contributed to the 49ers success," Flagler said."I was part of a great team and a great organization. A small part. I never got the football."

Flagler, the top pick in 1987 out of Clemson, carried only 42 times for 145 yards in three years with the world champions. He scored one touchdown on a 29-yard run against the Chicago Bears.

"I don't even have the football as a souvenir," Flagler said."I forgot to get it."

Flagler came to Dallas three days before the 1990 draft with defensive end Dan Stubbs for a second round pick obtained from Minnesota in the Herschel Walker trade and a third round choice acquired from Kansas City by trading quarterback Steve Pelluer.

Then Flagler got the bad news on draft day. Dallas used its top pick on a running back.

"I thought the Cowboys traded for me to be a starter," Flagler said. "I didn't want to walk into the same situation I'd just left. Now, I'm competing all over again for a job."

Smith has yet to sign, but Flagler is more worried about competition from Keith Jones, who was grabbed off Cleveland's unprotected Plan B roster.

"Jones is good, real good," Flagler said. "It's going to be tough competition but I'm not concerned. I believe I'll get a fair shot. I do want to be the starter and I don't think anybody around here is as good as Roger Craig."

Flagler ran in Craig's shadow for three years at San Francisco.

It go so hard for Flagler that he protested by refusing to practice one day. The holdout didn't work. Craig still got 99 percent of the playing time.

"Every day was a strain," Flagler said.

"After three years it begins to work on you," Flagler said. "Everyone likes to get some fullfillment from his job. You like to have an opportunity for progress. I didn't have a chance with Roger going so good so I just decided to show everyone how I felt. I was fined $200 and came back the next day."

Flagler asked to be traded. Only he didn't know he was going from the penthouse to the cellar of the NFL.

"That's the chance you take," he said. "In the NFL, you have no say where you are going. I just wanted an opportunity to compete."

To do it, he's had to climb to the bottom of the NFL totem pole.

Warrants issued for Sanders

HOUSTON (AP) — Arrest warrants were issued Friday charging Washington Redskins wide receiver Ricky Sanders with attempted murder and aggravated assault after he allegedly attacked a parking attendant outside a topless bar.

Sanders, 27, is accused of running over the valet parking attendant with his vehicle May 1, said Houston Police Department spokesman Richard Retz.

Warrants were issued charging Sanders with aggravated assault-serious bodily injury and attempted murder, Retz said. Bond was set at $5,000.

Retz said he did not know Sanders' whereabouts, but he added that the player's attorney probably would arrange for him to either surrender or post bond without going to jail.

The alleged attack occurred outside the Men's Club, an upscale topless bar that opened in west Houston less than a year ago.

The hub caps were missing. Sanders allegedly claimed there were stolen while he was at the club, while the management said they were missing when he arrived, Retz said.

"He got in his vehicle and then he ran over the valet parking attendant," Retz said.

The attendant apparently was knocked to the ground. Retz said the attendant suffered several injuries, but he did not know the extent.

Sanders is a Temple, Texas native who played football for Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos.

Fishing

There's very little in fishing as exciting as a big bass hitting a topwater lure and summer is the time for topwater fishing — if you don't mind fishing between dusk and dawn.

First come the floating poppers — those with hollowed out faces that send up a pronounced bow wave when jerked through the water. Like many surface baits they are designed to imitate frogs.

These baits can be cast right up onto the bank or a lily pad and jerked into the water, like a frog splashing in. Then let the lure sit for up to a minute, the concentric circles of its splash acting like radio waves to any bass lurking nearby.

Perhaps in a class by itself is the old standby, the Jitterbug. It gurgles and nearly tailwalks back to you on retrieve and is liable to draw attention from any predator fish in the lake, from bass to big Northern pike.

Among the newer players in the night fishing game is an assortment of plastic lures, most of which imitate frogs. The old standard in this category is the pork frog, fished without the lead-head which makes it the effective deep-water jig and pig.

When fishing any of these frog imitations remember this: frogs almost never swim in a straight line and never more than a few strokes without stopping.

Fish your bait exactly that way. Twitch your rod so the lure zigs and zags, and stop every few turns of the reel, letting the lure sit on top of the water. That stop often is the thing that triggers a bass to strike.

Floating plugs that imitate baitfish, stickbaits or shallow divers that can be worked on the surface also get their share of bass at night. Fish them with slow, jerky retrieves that imitate injured fish dying on the surface.

Worms are the most effective bass lure made, but forget your Carolina or Texas rigs to fish them on a summer night.

Leave your sinkers in the tackle-box and hook the worm weedless, burying the point in the plastic. Use lighter than usual line and a longer rod, because without the lead, you won't get as much distance on your cast.

If the worm isn't inclined to float, put a bit of cork on the hook, like a bullet sinker, before hooking the worm. Put a bit of cork in the pockets of baits with pockets to get good surface action.

Swim floatin worms around weeds and stumps.

Since there is very little light, color isn't that important. The bass is going to see a silhouette. Take your color choices from nature. The undersides of frogs and snakes usually are light colors, so go with baits with similar colors.

O'Hern up by stroke

ACME, Mich. (AP) — Chi Chi Rodriguez had the crowds but Jim O'Hern had the lead Friday after the first round of the $500,000 Ameritech Senior Open.

O'Hern had six birdies and no bogeys over the 6,679-yard Bear course at Grand Traverse Resort for a 66 and a one-shot lead over Rodriguez and Don January.

"You know, if you put the ball in the fairway, this isn't a bad golf course," O'Hern said. "I missed only two greens but I got it up and down."

Jim Dent, a three-time winner this year and the winner last week of the Kroger Senior Classic near Cincinnati, was in a group of four tied at 4-under 68.

The course, designed by Jack Nicklaus, is considered the most difficult in Michigan with its woodlands, marshes and deep bunkers. Last month, Bob Proben won the Michigan Open on the Bear course at 1-over. His best 18-hole score in four rounds was 67.

Senior PGA Tour officials moved the tees up to shorten the course by nearly 500 yards, mowed the rough and set up fairly easy pin placements for the Ameritech.

As a result, 28 golfers shot par or better Friday.

"I am surprised, but I think I know why," January said. "The greens are so soft because of the heavy rains the last two nights. If it wasn't for that, the balls would be ricocheting every which way. As a result of the rains, the greens superintendent hasn't had a chance to do squat.

"I had heard it was just a God-awful golf course. I have not seen anything to make me think differently. But we're playing membership tees and soft greens. That makes it a whole different story."

January had seven birdies and two bogeys in a round that required only 23 putts.

"I putted great. It was a pleasure to see," he said.

In the absence of Senior crowd favorites such as Nicklaus, Lee Trevino, Gary Player and Arnold Palmer — all playing in the British Open this week — the flamboyant Rodriguez had most of the fans trooping along the fairways with him.

Rodriguez, who won at Las Vegas in May, is eighth on the senior money list with $317,796, January is 44th with $61,023 and O'Hern 52nd with $44,777.

After a bogey on the third hole, Rodriguez rang up seven birdies over the next 13 holes. He rolled in a 15-foot sidewinder on No. 16 to go 6-under and into a temporary tie with O'Hern.

But he hit a fat tee shot into the rough in front of the par-3 17th to bogey that hole, and missed a 9-foot birdie putt on the last hole.

"I hit the worst shot I've ever seen in my life on No. 17," Rodriguez said. "If I'd been eating ice cream, I would have knocked my eye out."

It's no Olympics, but...

Associated Press

SEATTLE — Can the United States avenge its Olympic basketball loss to the Soviets? Will Carl Lewis beat Leroy Burrell in their first meeting of 1990? Is Randy Barnes ready for another world shot put record?

These are some of the puzzles begging solutions at a Goodwill Games that also ask the question: Why?

As competition began at the second Goodwill Games on Friday, a local newspaper observed: "For better or worse, we've got Goodwill Games II, the event nobody — least of all Seattle — knows what to make of."

It's sure not the Olympics, or Britons Steve Cram, world record-holder in the mile, and Linford Christie, Olympic silver medalist at 100 meters, wouldn't have skipped the meet to train for the European championships.

It's not the world championships, or minor injuries and infirmities wouldn't have sidelined such noteables as Steve Lewis, Olympic gold medalist at 400 meters; Butch Reynolds, world record-holder at 400 meters; middle distance champion Said Aouita of Morocco, or Mary Slaney, America's top woman middle distance runner for a decade.

Four years ago, the Goodwill Games were held for the first time in Moscow.

Goodwill

The Soviets and Americans hadn't met in athletic anger since the 1976 Montreal Games because they had taken turns boycotting two subsequent Olympics. They needed a stage on which to renew their rivalry. The Seoul Olympics two years ago settled that.

In 1986, the Cold War still gripped international politics. Nuclear arms treaties were out of the question, and President Reagan had called the Soviet Union the "evil empire." Soviet "glasnost" and the startling political changes in Eastern Europe have changed that.

Speaking at the opening of a Soviet-American exchange center Friday, the Rev. Jesse Jackson declared that the games' opening will go down in history as the end of the Cold War.

"Today the whole world gets the word," he said. "The Cold War is over, peace is upon us."

Flanked by a Soviet-American girls choir, Jackson told the Americans in his audience to hug a Soviet.

"I hugged a Russian and I hugged an American," he said. "I found that each had a heartbeat and a soul and humanity."

All that considered, what's the reason for these games now?

"The athletes like the competition," said Ted Turner, one of the founders of the games and president of Turner Broadcasting Corporation, which televises them nationally.

Perhaps it's that simple.

"They certainly fill a need for U.S. Olympians," said Pete Cava, a spokesman for The Athletics Congress, America's national governing body of track and field.

"The year before the Olympics, you have the world championships. The year after, you have the World Cup. This is kind of a down year, especially for Americans."

The U.S. swim team, for example, was told to point toward the Goodwill Games as their big meet of the year. Swimming began Friday night at the new Aquatics Center in Federal Way, Wash., about 20 miles south of Seattle.

The big event was the 50-meter freestyle matchup of Americans Matt Biondi, winner of five gold medals at Seoul, and Tom Jager, world record-holder at the distance. Biondi, who is a little more comfortable at longer distances, and Jager have met 18 times at the distance, with Jager winning 12.

"We've been 1-2 in every 50-meter race in the world, I think since 1986," Biondi said.

The first event of the games, at Spokane, saw the Chinese women's volleyball team beat Peru 3-1. Fewer than 1,000 people watched the game in the 6,216-seat Spokane Coliseum.

Business leader quits all-white club

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — A state business leader resigned from the all-white Country Club of Birmingham and two black leaders on Friday called for a protest at another all-white club hosting the 1990 PGA Championship next month.

The resignation by Alabama Gas Corp. President Mike Warren came in the midst of controversy over membership policies at the all-white Shoal Creek Club, where the PGA will be held Aug. 9-12.

In leaving the Country Club of Birmingham, Warren said, "I've been struggling with my membership in a club that did not have black members, did not have Jewish members for a while, and all the events of the last several weeks helped me make my decision."

The founder of Shoal Creek, Hall Thompson, said recently that club would not be pressured into accepting black members. He later apologized, but the Southern Christian Leadership Conference is going ahead with plans to encourage picketing during the PGA, one of the four major tournaments on the pro golf tour.

Warren, 43, said he was encouraged by private talks as several racially exclusive Birmingham clubs began reviewing membership policies in light of the Shoal Creek developments.

"People are openly and honestly trying to deal with the issue," he said Thursday.

"I think Birmingham as a community has come a lot further towards dealing with this issue than I would have thought they would," he said. "If you had asked me two months ago when country clubs would open up, I would have said years and years from now. Today, I don't feel that way."

A spokesman for the Country Club of Birmingham, Jim Hughey, said the club would have no comment on Warren's resignation, which he said was contained in one sentence that did not give a reason.

Warren said that of all the exclusionary country clubs in the Birmingham area, Shoal Creek stands the best chance of opening up its club membership. "The others have a much more deliberate process" of accepting new members, he said. "It took me two years to get in (the Country Club of Birmingham), which is not uncommon."

The Rev. Abraham Woods, Birmingham president of the SCLC, and the Rev. William Battle, local NAACP president, met Friday to discuss Woods' call for a massive protest at Shoal Creek during the PGA.

They said they will hold a strategy session with national SCLC President Joseph Lowery of Atlanta in Birmingham next week.

Battle said he has seen no progress toward black membership at Shoal Creek.

TORONTO (AP) — Streaking Michael Andretti earned the provisional pole position Friday for Sunday's Molson-Indy race over the temporary road circuit on the Canadian National Exposition grounds.

The defending race champion turned a fast lap of 105.986 mph as the 1.78-mile, 11-turn track dried after a heavy morning rain that hampered the opening practice session.

"We only had a half-hour," Andretti said of the qualifying session. "I give a lot of credit to the guys (on his Newman-Haas Racing crew) for a good setup right out of the box.

"Unfortunately, the track's going to get a lot better. It was very slippery today."

The 27-year-old Andretti, son of longtime Indy-car start Mario Andretti, will try Saturday to nail down his third pole of the season and second in a row in the final session of qualifying.

Right behind after Friday's time trials was 1987 Toronto winner Emerson Fittipaldi. The Brazilian, who finished second to the younger Andretti here last year, had a lap of 105.003. The defending CART-PPG series champion set the qualifying record here last July with a lap of 107.699.

The rest of the top 10 includes Indianapolis 500 winner Arie Luyendyk, 103.112; 1988 Toronto winner Al Unser Jr., 103.006; Scott Brayton, 100.990 before a meeting with a tire barrier, and the Porsche-powered Marches of teammates John Andretti and Teo Fabi, 100.956 and 100.885, respectively.

Rick Mears, who leads both Michael Andretti and Fittipaldi in the season standings by 13 points — 101-88 — was a disappointing 13th. The third Penske driver came up with a lap of 100.373. Unser Jr. is fourth in the standings with 85 points, followed by Rahal's 79.

Indy Racing

Toronto is the ninth of 16 races on the CART schedule.

Fittipaldi said there is no surprise in Michael being fast right off the bat despite the rain that limited him to just six slow laps in the morning practice.

"Michael is consistently fast everywhere we go," Emmo said. "He is a challenge to everybody.

"I realize he's going so fast this year, I recommend he goes to Formula One," joked Fittipaldi, a two-time Formula One champion, recognizing the recent rumors of the younger Andretti's departure for the European-based series.

Andretti, who has won three of the last four events, including last weekend's race at the New Jersey Meadowlands, said, "These are the type of habits you like to have."

Asked if he can hold onto the pole in Saturday's session, Andretti shrugged and said, "Your car is good right out of the box, it's hard to make gains. But we're still going to try some little things and see if we can't go faster. We're going to have to stay stay on top."

Dunleavy played like a coach

By T.J. Simers
Copley News Service

NBA

Seemingly always on his way out, Mike Dunleavy twice enrolled in law school and once quit to work as a program trader on Wall Street, yet he somehow managed to hang on in the NBA for more than nine years.

"I never had great ability, so I had to know the game inside and out," said Dunleavy, whose 433-game NBA career produced an 8-point-per-game average. "To survive, I ate up every scouting report I could get my hands on."

Dunleavy, now plumb full of X's and O's, will dine with the stars this season as head coach of the Los Angeles Lakers.

"The way I played lent itself to being a coach," said Dunleavy. "In order to last nine years in the NBA, and play at a high level at times, I had to know the other team's system as well as their players did. So when I guarded somebody who was a scorer and I heard the play the other team called out, I knew that play."

Dunleavy, 36 and without head-coaching experience, was hired by General Manager Jerry West recently to replace Pat Riley, who was 36 and without head-coaching experience when West placed him in command of the Lakers in 1981.

"A lot of people have told me this might not be the right place for me," said Dunleavy, "but I think I've had some tough decisions to make in my life.

"When I was a freshman in high school I was a talented baseball player and I picked basketball to play, instead. People, including my father, thought that wasn't a very smart thing to do, to become the last man on the freshman basketball team when I could have been the starting shortstop.

"The next decision I made was to pick a college. I had a choice between the University of Pennsylvania for academics, South Carolina for basketball and Duke for the best blend of the two. My parents wanted me to go to Pennsylvania, but I told them if I didn't make it, I might blame them, and if I chose South Carolina and didn't make it, only I was at fault."

As successor to Riley, the winningest playoff coach in NBA history, Dunleavy again finds himself with little margin for error.

"I had the opportunity for other jobs, but the one thing I didn't have elsewhere was the chance to win the championship," said Dunleavy. "That's all I'm about. I want to win, and I'm not afraid to take chances.

"I can't be worried about following Vince Lombardi or John Wooden or even Pat Riley. I don't have the same players Pat Riley had when he started coaching, and we won't be playing against the same league, but he was in the same position I'm in. He was 36 and a broadcaster. Billy Cunningham did the same thing and came out of the broadcast booth; the only regret I have is that I didn't put time in the broadcasting booth."

Drafted by Philadelphia in the sixth round in 1976, Dunleavy spent time with the 76ers, Rockets, Spurs and Bucks before becoming an assistant coach in Milwaukee. He also took a turn as player-coach with the Carolina Lightning of the All-America Basketball Alliance in 1977, "and we went something like 7-1 before the checks stopped coming," he said.

"I'm back to turning to the sports pages first, but for a long time there it was the Wall Street Journal first and then the New York Post," he said. "I had kept in touch with (Golden State coach) Don Nelson and he kept telling me I had to be a coach and, well, here I am."

"I came to Milwaukee having played seven years in the NBA, and thought I knew a whole lot about basketball," he said. "And offensively I think I did. But Nelson taught me a whole lot defensively and generated a number of new ideas in my head.

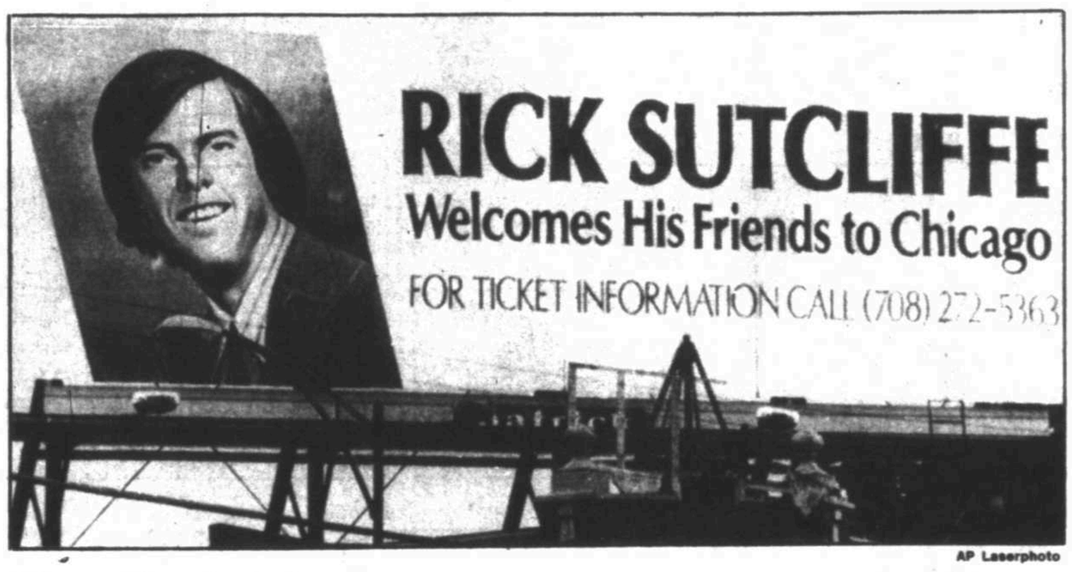

"From Del I learned the organizational part, which Nellie wasn't probably very good at. Del's really prepared; he's terrific about keeping the paperwork and records and plotting things out. Maybe at times he doesn't have the great genius Nelson has, but he plots out the possibilities and in his own way comes to the answer, which may be the same as Nellie's."

Although Dunleavy inherits a club that won a league-high 63 games last season, all is not necessarily well with the Lakers. They took an early nosedive in the playoffs against Phoenix, and though they still have James Worthy and Magic Johnson, the club appears in need of a jolt.

"The thing I had heard coming into this job, and that I've found out since coming here, is that both Worthy and Magic are not only great players, but terrific people," said Dunleavy. "I couldn't ask for a better situation to come into — to have your top two players, who really want to work and win more than anything.

"These guys are hungry. I told them, 'I don't know about you guys, but I don't have a ring and I want that more than anything else. You have them, and the question is, 'Do you really want another one?' And I believe they really do.

"As for being a coach, ultimately it comes down to basketball knowledge and how you communicate with your players. And I have the confidence I have that and can do that."

Practical Joke

The wife of Chicago Cubs' pitcher Rick Sutcliffe and a group of friends erected this billboard in Chicago as a payback to Sutcliffe for years of practical jokes. Fans calling for tickets will reach his home, but they will get a recording. Actor Mark Harmon, Bert Blyleven and Mark Grace were among those in the "payback" group.

Earnhardt playing the "Intimidator"

Associated Press

Auto Racing

Dale Earnhardt used to be called "Ironhead." He had a propensity toward sticking the nose of his stock car into places where it wasn't supposed to go.

Now, after three NASCAR Winston Cup championships and two near misses in the last decade, Earnhardt is "The Intimidator."

When he is out front, the drivers chasing him know he is nearly impossible to get by cleanly.

In either case, Earnhardt wins, as he already has done five times this season.

A brief slump knocked him out of the points lead and all the way down to fifth, but going into Sunday's race at Long Pond, Pa., Earnhardt has two straight victories and is back to second, challenging fading leader Mark Martin.

"All I can say is that we are going to race those guys every week," Earnhardt said. "They know it and we know it. ... We haven't — and won't — give up or give anything to anyone."

Talk about racing excitment.

During the recent Baja 1000 race in Mexico, Roger Mears, older brother of Indy-car star Rick Mears and an off-road star, found himself in the lead late in the race and running out of power steering fluid.

Never fear, though. Mears was not alone.

Mears won the race by five minutes.

Nigel Mansell's announcement that he will retire from Formula One racing at the end of the current season came on the heels of two of his best qualifying efforts ever.

The Englishman has won the pole position for each of the last two events — the French and British Grand Prix. He had not won a pole since the Mexican Grand Prix in October of 1987.

His last two poles came in a Ferrari, giving the Italian team the lead in all-time pole victories.

Ferrari have now started from the front 109 times. The previous mark was held by Lotus with 107 poles, followed by McLaren with 61.

McLaren, led by Brazilian Ayrton Senna, has dominated qualifying since the beginning of the 1988 season, winning 36 of 40 poles. During that period, Ferrari has three and Williams one.

Speaking of Nigel Mansell, the Brit is known to be one of the friendlier drivers in Formula One.

Mansell, wanting to avoid the traffic getting into and out of the track, stayed with his family in a motorhome at the circuit. On Saturday night, he sat on the pit wall and signed literally hundreds of autographs.

Observers said he smiled and chatted amiably throughout the mob scene.

Just about everyone involved in last Sunday's Busch Grand National stock car race in Loudon, N.H., has given a stamp of approval to New Hampshire International Speedway.

The new 1.058-mile oval circuit, 70 miles north of Boston, drew an estimated crowd of 40,000 for its first event.

The New Hampshire track, which is expected to eventually host NASCAR Winston Cup and CART Indy-car races, is the first totally new superspeedway to open in this country since the now-defunct Texas World Speedway in 1973.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Lasting success can be yours if you stop being so demanding of others. Put more of yourself into your work. An offer to compromise will work better than an ultimatum in November. Although an employment situation may be difficult next January, stick with it. You will emerge a clear winner! Your reluctance to make a permanent romantic commitment comes to an end when someone special appears in April.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: novelist Ernest Hemingway, director Norman Jewison, comedian Don Knotts, superstar Robin Williams.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Forget about work today and concentrate on domestic affairs. If planning an outing with your children, visit the zoo or a picnic site. Drop-in guests are indicated for some of you. Be hospitable.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your common sense helps a friend who has a problem. Cast away waste and extravagance. Look through an old photo album with a good friend. Evening proves more rewarding where romance is concerned.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your ability to quickly sum up others' motives comes in handy today. Be ready to strike a compromise with your romantic partner. Keep your promises if you expect others to do the same.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Rely on your instincts and intuition today. Others tend to be undependable now. Handle financial transactions with caution. A new acquaintance proves to be good company. Nurture a close relationship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take care of routine chores before lunch. It pays to listen to your mate now. Decisions partners make together will bring long-term financial rewards. Wine and dine a loved one tonight.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Use more finesse in your personal relationships. Sidestep discussing touchy subjects. Give your physical well-being some serious thought. You could get a surprise connected with home.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The spotlight is on your income, savings and tax materials. Stick to a financial decision you made with an expert's help. Be gentle with someone who makes a bid for your attention.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A creative project could receive valuable backing from a prominent person. Ask direct questions and expect to get some honest answers. Catch up on your letter-writing and other personal chores.

Simon planning 'Bluff Aid'

MONTAUK, N.Y. (AP) — Paul Simon is planning a benefit concert — call it "Bluff Aid" — to rescue the landmark lighthouse at Montauk Point from the erosion threatening its existence.

Simon

The 18th-century lighthouse is endangered by two centuries of pounding water that has cut 240 feet off the bluff where it stands. The erosion has left the lighthouse just 57 feet from the water.

The show by Simon, who has a house near the lighthouse, will raise part of the $500,000 needed to save the lighthouse.

Officials said 6,000 tickets at $25 apiece will go on sale Saturday for the Aug. 30 show at Deep Hollow Ranch in Montauk. Sales of programs and souvenirs, along with program advertising, also will go to the lighthouse.

The Lighthouse Committee of the Montauk Historical Society contacted Simon last year and discussed with him the difficulty of raising money to combat the erosion problem, said panel Chairman Richard White.

The singer subsequently volunteered to help.

ALAMOGORDO, N.M. (AP) — Five space pioneers are to be inducted into the International Space Hall of Fame here on Sept. 29.

Those to be honored include Maxime A. Faget, chief executive officer of Space Industries International Inc.; Frank J. Malina, a member of the founding committee of the International Academy of Astronautics in 1960; Shannon W. Lucid, who was in charge of releasing the Galileo spacecraft during last December's shuttle flight; Donald Kent Slayton, one of the seven original Mercury astronauts, and Karel J. "Charlie" Bossart, known as the father of the Atlas launch rocket.

Faget proposed developing the one-man spacecraft used in the United States' first manned spaceflight project, Project Mercury. Both the later two-man Gemini and three-man Apollo spacecraft were derived from the same basic design. Faget also was one of 35 scientists who formed the nucleus of the Johnson Space Center.

Malina, an aerospace and rocket pioneer, was vice president of the International Academy of Astronautics from 1960 to 1963, was its president in 1963 and served on its board of directors until 1981. He was co-founder of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

Lucid was named an astronaut in 1978 and qualified for space flight in 1979. She has worked with the deployment of satellites and with the Shuttle Avionics Integration Laboratory.

Slayton flew into space in July 1975 on a joint American-Soviet Apollo-Soyuz test project. He was director of flight crew operation for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration from 1963 to 1974 and managed tests for the space shuttle Enterprise in 1974 and the orbital test program for the first four shuttle missions. He is president of Space Services Inc. of Houston, which launched the nation's first licensed commercial payload in March 1989 from White Sands Missile Range in southern New Mexico.

Bossart designed the propellant tanks which form the main part of the Atlas rocket. The very thin steel pressure-stabilized tanks have been termed "steel balloons," a design that lightened the launch vehicle to allow for heavier payloads, later leading to manned space flight.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Court bailiffs entered retired tennis star Bjorn Borg's seaside home Friday to assess its value before a possible sale.

Borg

Bjorn Mellin, a court official, said after a two-hour inspection that the property could be auctioned if Borg fails to pay a $1 million debt.

But, Mellin added, the auction won't take place until September at the earliest because of vacations in the department that handles such cases.

The bailiffs previously visited Borg's home June 21 to establish a valuation, and nobody was home. Borg was out Friday, but one of his employees opened the door.

The house's value is put at $1.7 million-plus.

The courts put a lien on Borg's house until he honors a personal guarantee to a finance company for his former business partner, Lars Skarke. Skarke, managing director of Borg's fashion business until it collapsed last year, owes the finance company $1.1 million.

And that success created a problem for Jim Riswold, associate creative director at Nike's ad agency Wieden & Kennedy in Portland, Ore.

"It was a hard act to follow," said Riswold, copywriter on both campaigns.

Each Bo was shot separately; skillful editing made it appear they were gathering one by one in a locker room.

Pittsburgh continues to manhandle left coasters

Associated Press

Bobby Bonilla and Barry Bonds drove in first-inning runs and Bob Walk won for the first time in eight starts as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 4-2.

The NL East Division-leading Pirates, continuing their dominance of West Coast teams, beat the Dodgers for the seventh time in their last eight games. Pittsburgh is 25-9 against the three California teams and 33-17 against the National League West.

Walk (5-4), who was winless in seven starts since May 18, shut out the Dodgers on two hits until Kirk Gibson singled leading off the seventh and Kal Daniels followed with his 14th homer.

Walk left after allowing Mike Scioscia's two-out walk, with Stan Belinda getting the third out. The Dodgers had two on with one out in the eighth, but Scott Ruskin struck out Daniels and Eddie Murray grounded out.

Walk allowed four hits, struck out two and walked two in improving to 5-0 against the Dodgers since July 24, 1986. He is 7-4 lifetime against them.

Ted Power finished up for his fifth save.

R.J. Reynolds singled to start the Pirates' first, moved up on Jay Bell's sacrifice and Andy Van Slyke's double-play grounder. Bonilla then doubled inside first and Bonds, who has 18 RBIs in his last 17 games, made it 2-0 with an RBI single.

Mike LaValliere doubled and Jose Lind bounced a double over right fielder Hubie Brooks' head. Walk was credited with an RBI when Lenny Harris misplayed his high-hop grounder to third, scoring Lind for a 4-0 lead.

Astros 12, Expos 6

Glenn Wilson knocked in three runs, including two in a six-run second inning, as the Houston Astros took advantage of the wildness of Montreal pitchers to beat the Expos.

Wilson walked to force in a run in a three-run first inning, one of 10 walks issued by Montreal pitchers, then doubled home two more in the second when the Astros batted around to take a 9-0 lead.

The Expos didn't go down easy, however. Trailing 12-0 in the ninth, they scored six times off reliever Jim Clancy before Dan Schatzader got the last two outs for the Astros.

Danny Darwin (4-1) was the winner, allowing three hits and one walk in seven innings. He has a 1.03 ERA since moving into the starting rotation July 1.

The Astros chased Kevin Gross (8-6) with three runs in the first inning without a base hit.

Gross, who came off the disabled list Friday, walked five of the eight batters he faced and only retired two before leaving after throwing a ball to Darwin.

After Eric Yelding led off the game with a walk and stole second, Gross followed by walking Bill Doran. Tim Wallach fielded Javier Ortiz's grounder to third but he missed the tag on Yelding to load the bases.

Gross struck out Franklin Stubbs before walking Glenn Wilson and Ken Caminiti to force in two runs. It was Wilson's 500th career RBI.

Reds 5, Phillies 1

Norm Charlton, in his second start of the year, pitched a two-hitter through six innings as the Cincinnati Reds — punctuated by a 15-minute brawl — whipped the Philadelphia Phillies.

Charlton (8-4) won his second start since Oct. 1, 1988 as he retired the first 14 batters he faced until Charlie Hayes singled up the middle in the fifth inning.

The Reds opened the scoring in the fourth when Chris Sabo and Jeff Reed, who went 3-for-3 with two RBI, each singled in runs off Jeff Parrett (3-8).

The Reds extended their lead to 4-0 in the fifth with the help of a misplay by Phillies center fielder Lenny Dykstra. Charlton walked and Barry Larkin singled into center field, where Dykstra let the ball roll through to the wall and allow both runners to score.

NL Roundup

Cubs 5, Giants 4

Shawon Dunston and Joe Girardi hit run-scoring singles off Jeff Brantley in the ninth inning and Chicago beat San Francisco for a fifth consecutive victory.

Jeff Brantley (3-2), who had blown only two saves in 18 opportunities coming into the game, gave up a one-out double in the ninth to pinch-hitter Greg Varsho. Varsho stole third and scored one out later on Dunston's single.

Mets 6, Braves 1

The Mets got 11 strikeouts from David Cone in beating the Braves 6-2 on Thursday, and have now won 22 of their last 29 games.

Cardinals 4, Padres 2

Willie McGee continued his hot hitting with a single and a two-run double as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the San Diego Padres behind John Tudor's pitching.

McGee extended his hitting streak to 13 games (22-for-53, .415) as St. Louis won its second consecutive game at home for the first time since June 17.

Federal prison no country club for Rose

But it has recreational facilities, a softball team and even a miniature golf course

N.Y. Times News Service

The federal prison in Ashland, Ky., where Pete Rose will begin his five-month sentence for cheating on his taxes is no country club for white-collar criminals, a prison official says.

Rose may even have to share a cramped cell with an inmate serving time for a violent crime.

Jim VanOver, executive assistant to the warden, said there are "a limited number" of criminals convicted of violent crimes among the medium security facility's 1,128 inmates.

"We try not to put a murderer or rapist with someone who committed a white-collar crime," VanOver said. "But sometimes bed space dictates that we have to."

Rose was sentenced Thursday for two felony counts of failing to report income from his memorabilia sales, autograph appearances and gambling.

Rose will remain free until Aug. 10 so that he can have surgery on his recently injured right knee, though he could seek medical clearance to report at a later date to the Ashland facility, about 180 miles east of Cincinnati.

The facility is a medium security prison. U.S. District Judge S. Arthur Spiegel mistakenly announced at the sentencing that Rose would be placed in a minimum security prison, but the 150-bed camp that he mentioned will be under construction for the next three months.

A medium security complex has two razor-wire fences and one armed patrol, while a minimum security facility has neither.

VanOver said there has been some inmate violence at the facility, but no major injuries or deaths.

Inmates work five days a week for 7½ hours a day, with the most common jobs involving maintenance, construction and clerical work. VanOver said a prisoner may request a job, but might not be given that position, depending on his skills. Rose will be assigned a job his first week.

Rose would be permitted to use the recreation area, which has basketball courts and weightlifting facilities, in the evenings on workdays and all day on his days off. Prisoners have a softball league but are not allowed to play baseball.

The facility has miniature golf but no standard-length golf course. Rose has said that he spent much of his time playing golf since he was banned from baseball last August for involvement with gamblers.

Rose can watch baseball on cable-ready televisions in the facility until 11:30 p.m. He would, however, miss the finish of West Coast games and ESPN's SportsCenter, which he watches regularly.

He also would be permitted to subscribe to a newspaper. The facility's library has only the local newspaper.

Rose can see visitors from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. daily, with no time limitations. But an inmate can have no more than seven visits per month, with no more than four on holidays or weekends.

Will Rose's presence create a disruption?

"I don't think so," VanOver said.

"There will be a lot of community interest, obviously, but it won't be a problem for us."

Cone stuck in the middle

NEW YORK (AP) — Squeezed in the middle of a New York Met pitching staff that features two former Cy Young winners, David Cone sometimes gets lost in the glare of Dwight Gooden and Frank Viola.

Unless you happen to have to bat against him.

Then the glare belongs to Cone, riding a double-digit strikeout string that was punctuated with his fifth straight victory Thursday night, a 6-2 decision over Atlanta. Cone (7-4) struck out 11 Braves in 7⅔ innings — the fourth straight start in which he has retired 10 or more batters on strikes.

"I've never seen Cone not pitch well," said Atlanta's Dale Murphy, whose two-run homer was the only damage the Braves did to the Mets right-hander. "He's always tough and even tougher with men on base. We knew coming in we weren't going to score a lot of runs."

For some pitchers, strikeouts are like home runs are for hitters. They just seem to come. For Cone, lately they've been coming in bunches.

"Do I like strikeouts?" he said. "Well, when I have a lot of them, I usually have a pretty good game. I'll take a ground ball on the first pitch, but in my best games, I usually have a bunch."

Thursday night's bunch gave Cone 60 in his last 54 innings and pushed his total for the season to 117, third best in the National League behind Ramon Martinez of Los Angeles (142) and Gooden (127). His streak of four 10-or-more strikeout games ranks in the Met record book right behind Gooden's string of five such games in 1984.

Shea Stadium was like a sauna Thursday night and Cone's personal heat was a perfect match for the climate.

REBELS: Tark to appeal NCAA decision

two years by the school, as ordered by the NCAA, but he sued to block the suspension.

The case reached the U.S. Supreme Court in 1988, and a 5-4 ruling reaffirmed the NCAA's right to discipline its member schools, but ruled that only the school can discipline a coach. However, a Nevada state court injunction still in effect bars the school from taking any action against Tarkanian.

Kansas was the first champion barred from defending its title by the NCAA. It received sanctions after winning the 1988 national championship.

"This punishment does not fit the offense," said UNLV president Robert Maxson. "The university 13 years ago did everything the NCAA asked it to do. We were on probation for two years. We had no TV for two years. We suspended Tarkanian at that time and he got an injunction."

Tarkanian, reached at his San Diego vacation home, declined to comment. "I have nothing to say right now," he said.

Danny Tarkanian, the coach's son and his lawyer, said the ruling will be appealed to the NCAA Council, which next meets in October.

"This is a complete outrage," said Tarkanian. "It shows a complete disregard about people's individual rights and liberties."

He said team officials had met with the NCAA last month and were given no indication that sanctions were upcoming.

"Something happened from the time of the meeting to now or they just put on the greatest act you've seen in the meeting," Tarkanian said.

"We're the defending national champions, we were going to be ranked number one to start the season," he said. "These kids were probably 7 years old when this occurred," he said about the violations in question.

"This will be appealed," Tarkanian said. "If my dad doesn't have any fight left, there is enough people that do."

Maxson also said the decision will be appealed.

"I'm shocked. I can't believe it," Maxson said. "I think it's a miscarriage of justice. There's no question we'll appeal it. I don't know what their rationale was."

Maxson said the penalty left him worried about the Daniels investigation.

"It leaves me concerned, obviously," he said. "Before I was under the impression that no one knows of any major violations. But with this type of penalty I don't know what to expect."

Unknown boxer mystery continues

Associated Press

PENSACOLA, Fla. — An Oklahoman says he was the unknown boxer decked by Olympic silver medalist Roy Jones last weekend, but he denied knowing anything about a hoax, a newspaper reported Friday.

Jones thought he earned his ninth victory in as many professional fights against Derwin Richards of Houston in a junior middleweight bout Saturday in this Florida Panhandle city, Jones' hometown.

But Richards and his manager on Monday said they knew nothing about the fight, spurring investigations by the state attorney's office here and Florida State Athletic Commission.

Tony Waddles, 19, of Norman, Okla., told the Pensacola News Journal in a telephone interview published Friday that he was the boxer Jones, 21, knocked out 2:02 into the first round.

The auto-dealership employee said he traveled to Pensacola with Oklahoma City fight manager Elvis Belt.

"Elvis Belt contacted me and said he may have a fight for me," Waddles said. "He said I could make some good money, something like $2,000 for this fight."

Waddles said he had only three professional fights and had been working out for about two months at a small gym run by Belt. He said Belt told him he would take care of everything, including signing fight documents.

"I wasn't supposed to do nothing expect fight," Waddles said.

However, Tommy Griggs, an accountant employed by Square Ring Inc., a Pensacola company that promoted the fight, said he witnessed the imposter sign a settlement sheet and endorse a $1,960 check for his purse with Richards' signature.

After the check was signed, Griggs said he then cashed it, giving Jones' opponent an envelope containing the cash. The boxer then handed the envelope to Belt and left the room, he said.

Belt couldn't be reached for comment Friday. A clerk at a jewelry store he operates said he was traveling and not expected back in Oklahoma City until Monday. She said the store is across the street from a small gym where Belt trains boxers.

Waddles said he received $700 from Belt. He expressed shock when told the fight contract called for a $2,000 payoff minus license fees.

"I knew it would happen," Waddles said. "Man, he stiffed me, too."

"I'm just so glad the fighter has been found," said Stanley Levin, president of Square Ring Inc., a Pensacola company that promoted the fight.

"I should have seen this coming when they (Belt and his fighter) came to my office," Levin said. "I noticed the fighter sitting there and not saying anything. Nothing. His manager did all the talking."

Daniel in front by two

LPGA

VIENNA, Ohio (AP) — Beth Daniel, spurred on when playing partner Betsy King birdied the first two holes, shot a 7-under-par 65 and took a two-stroke lead Friday in the first round of the LPGA Phar-Mor Youngstown Classic.

King, who won the U.S. Women's Open last week, was tied with Dottie Mochrie and Myra Blackwelder at 67.

Jill Briles, Diane Heinicke-Rauch, Colleen Walker and Juli Inkster were at 68, three shots from the lead, and 10 others were tied at 69.

Daniel put together a birdie-eagle-birdie streak on the third through fifth holes of the 6,297-yard Squaw Creek Country Club course. She added birdies on Nos. 7, 11 and 12. She had no bogeys.

The low scores were unexpected because of swirling wind and intermittent showers throughout the day.

"I'm surprised we made it through," said Daniel, who tied for sixth in the rain-plagued Open last week. "The first storm came up while I was in my eagle-birdie binge. I was saying, 'Stay away, Stay away!' I didn't think people would shoot up the course like they are."

Daniel, King and Ayako Okamoto played in the same threesome, and King started quickly with birdies on the first two holes. Daniel had pars, and Okamoto dropped behind with a double bogey on the first hole.

"That kind of fired me up," Daniel said. "When Betsy birdied the first two holes, I said I better get going or I'd get lost in the dust."

On the par-3 third hole, Daniel sank a 15-foot birdie putt. She followed that with an eagle on the 453-yard, par-5 fourth hole, hitting her second shot within 18 feet of the hole and sinking the putt.

She finished the flurry with a short birdie putt on the par-4 fifth hole.

King had six birdies in the round but bogeyed the par-3 sixth hole, missing to the right with her tee shot. Blackwelder also had one bogey, three-putting the par-4 eighth hole.

Baylor continuing its ban on dancing

N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH — Baylor University President Herbert Reynolds has decided to continue the Baptist school's 145-year-old prohibition against on-campus dancing.

Trustees of the university — in Waco, about 90 miles south of Fort Worth — had been studying the possibility of lifting the dancing ban, and the Rev. Winfred Moore, board chairman, said he favored the change.

But the trustees voted at a meeting Friday to let the administration decide whether to lift the ban.

Reynolds immediately told the trustees that his administration would continue the no-dancing policy. But he said he would "reserve the prerogative of reviewing the issue at a later time."

"We decided that the administration should have the continuing freedom to act — and our full support in its action — concerning the issue of dancing on campus," Moore said.

"This is a sensitive matter on which the board and the administration are working hand-in-hand," said Moore, a former Amarillo, Texas, pastor who is an adjunct professor at Baylor.

By continuing the dancing ban, Baylor leaders escaped the wrath of fundamentalists in the Southern Baptist Convention who in the past have charged that the university is losing its Christian atmosphere. The fundamentalists also have charged that Baylor's religion faculty is too liberal.

Late last year a student task force studying ways to enhance campus life for Baylor students suggested to trustees that the prohibition against on-campus dances be lifted.

Students and some university officials who favored lifting the ban said it would be a way to keep students away from off-campus bars and clubs where alcohol and drugs are sold.

The task force included representatives from five student groups, including the Student Congress and Student Activities Board.

One Baylor senior, Heather Schoen of Dallas, said she thought Reynolds and the trustees used the guise of Baylor tradition to avoid the issue.

"Even though it's a tradition not to have campus dances, we have progressed beyond that," Schoen said. "Baylor students will find ways to have fun, whether on campus or off. It just shows we are behind the times."

Oswin Chrisman of Dallas, chairman of the Baylor trustees' student affairs committee, said the panel had interviewed students and others about on-campus dancing and found a diversity of views.

Chrisman said that in researching Baylor's history, he found that the trustees had never taken a policy position on dancing. His committee recommended that the administration continue to decide the dancing issue.

"It is doubtful if a change in tradition on the matter would help that many students," Wood wrote, "but it is not doubtful an action by the trustees to change the longstanding tradition could hurt Baylor in the eyes of some Texas Baptists."

Super collider gets off to a super start in Texas

By Carlos Byars
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The superconducting super collider's first part — designed by a Texas A&M graduate student — has been built, tested and delivered on time and on budget, Texas Accelerator Center officials say.

The center handed over to SSC officials Thursday what they call the accelerator's first foot — the ion generator that generates the atomic particles that will feed the finished machine.

Perry Tompkins designed the generator as part of his doctoral work in physics. The carefully machined stainless steel device weighs about 80 pounds and carries a $3 million price tag.

Arthur "Skip" Porter, president of the center, said the generator was built under a Department of Energy contract at the Houston Advanced Research Center. The DOE is funding most of the $8 billion project, to be built near Waxahachie.

Tompkins, 31, said he spent more than two years researching and designing the device. He praised the machinists who worked to tolerances of half and quarter of a thousandth of an inch to make the generator.

Hydrogen from a small tank of high-pressure gas flows into the generator and encounters an electrical field of minus 35,000 volts. This rips away the electrons from the hydrogen atoms, leaving only a concentrated 35,000-volt stream of proton ions.

Later stages of the super collider divide the particles into bunches, separate them into two opposing beams and boost their energy first to a few million volts and finally to 20 trillion volts.

By crashing these two powerful beams together, scientists hope to re-create conditions that existed only a fraction of a second after formation of the universe and reveal some of the deepest secrets of the formation of matter.

The SSC gets its name from the superconducting magnets that will guide the two streams of protons around the 54-mile circular track. Construction of the tunnel is expected to begin in 1992.

Tompkins said his design evolved from many other generators built since the 1970s. Porter said Tompkins' design produces a beam of ions five times more concentrated than generators at present accelerators.

SSC scientist Gerry Watson said the ion generator would be taken to their temporary laboratory in Dallas for additional testing.

OSHA to study local tragedies

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration is investigating two Midland deaths that occurred this week, but officials said the inquiries are routine.

OSHA is required by law to look into each work-related fatality and employers are required to notify the local OSHA office within 48 hours of a employee fatality, said Jack Hanning, a senior industrial hygienist with OSHA's Lubbock office.

Investigators are in Midland to gather information on the ditch collapse that killed Solomon Zepeda Wednesday and the electrocution that killed Michael Jacobs Tuesday.

Hanning said he could not discuss the cases while the investigations are in progress.

"It's not appropriate to release it now," he said. "It wouldn't be fair to the families, the companies or the investigators. We're just starting on this."

Jacobs, 25, died after apparently hitting a hot wire while installing a home security system at a house being remodeled at 1608 Stanolind Ave.

Calls to Cline Construction and Paving Co. of Big Spring were not returned by presstime.

Zepeda, 57, died when a telephone cable ditch near Wadley Avenue and Lamesa Road caved in on him as he worked in it.

Ed Cosgrove, the OSHA area director for West Texas, said his office has investigated 26 on-the-job fatalities since October 1989.

"They've ranged from electrocutions to trench collapses, to being struck by something, to being caught between something, to fires, to falls, to vehicular accidents," he said.

It takes OSHA an average of 47 days to issue citations on fatality accidents, Cosgrove said.

The department's Lubbock's field staff will examine all aspects of the accident sites to determine if the work was in compliance with OSHA standards.

"We see if they were following the correct way to conduct operations, in this case, to see how the trenching regulations compared with what the contractor was doing," Cosgrove said.

"The standards are very comprehensive, particularly with hazards like trenching and excavating. We just upgraded those in the past year."

"Every time you dig a trench greater than five feet deep, it's a potential grave," he said.

Besides inquiring into fatalities, OSHA also conducts complaint and referral inspections and general scheduled inspections on industries with high accident levels.

Men's room visit wins woman wave of support

Radio stations are calling, people are offering to pay her fines, she's even had an offer for her own personal "facility" at the next George Strait concert she attends.

Ms. Wells was kicked out of a George Strait concert at The Summit July 7 because, after waiting what seemed an interminable time in a long line at the ladies' room, she decided to try out the men's room.

She was nabbed by a police officer and written a ticket that could cost her $200 for violating a city ordinance that forbids one gender's use of another gender's restrooms. She also was kicked out of the country singer's concert.

When the Houston Post published her story Thursday, the phones started ringing.

"It's obviously hit a nerve with a lot of women around town," she said Friday.

"I received several calls here at the office. We've had people call that want to pay our fine. I had a call from a woman who wanted to know who she could call in City Hall."

Houston radio station KFMK told Ms. Wells it would pay any fine. Bob Wood, the station's program director, said, "The reason is because she is a listener and when you've got to go, you've got to go. Come on!"

And radio station KIKK called Ms. Wells on Thursday to tell her the station would pay for her trip to Strait's next area concert and provide her with a portable toilet to use during the show.

"We just felt like she had gone through an awful lot of hassle to see George Strait and we wanted to make it a little easier for her the next time he came to town."

She said the men's room "would never be my first choice. But I just could not, you know, it became kind of urgent, and I saw a guy take his girlfriend in in front of me. I saw them go in and I thought, 'he's gonna run interference for her,'" so she followed them.

STATE IN BRIEF

Council favors airport at base

AUSTIN (AP) — The Austin City Council has adopted a resolution aimed at putting a new airport at Bergstrom Air Force Base as an inducement to keep Air Force reserve units in Austin.

A Defense Department report Friday forecasts that Bergstrom will be closed by Dec. 31, 1992, except for the reserve units.

There are about 932 reservists, many of whom do not live in the Austin area, and 413 full-time reserve employees assigned to Bergstrom. The Air Force has estimated Austin would lose $30 million a year if the reserves leave.

In April, James Boatright, deputy assistant secretary of installations for the Air Force, said reserve units would be left behind if the city built an airport at Bergstrom.

In 1987, Austin voters, by a 56-44 percent margin, authorized a $728 million bond issue to build a new airport near Manor to replace Robert Mueller Municipal Airport. That vote capped more than a decade of debate and studies that on several occasions said the city would best be served by either sharing Bergstrom or by building an airport next to the air base.

Care rates poorly

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas has failed to provide acceptable care for more than half the state hospital patients who are both mentally ill and mentally retarded and who have been discharged in the past three years, according to a court report.

The state's failure to provide acceptable levels of care for these so-called dually diagnosed Texans is a key violation of federal court orders, said the report by U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders' court monitor.

"The monitor is appalled by the (statistics) and their implications," the report said. "The scope of the inadequacy and inappropriateness of the services is extremely disturbing."

The report shows that 344 dually diagnosed people have been discharged from Texas' eight state mental hospitals since October 1987. Forty-four percent of those discharged were sent to state institutions for retarded people, and most of the remaining 56 percent were sent home or to group homes.

Fight erupts on bridge

EL PASO (AP) — Police arrested 17 people who were returning from Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, when a fight broke out among a crowd of about 100 who had been drinking early Friday.

Lt. Eddie Ortega said the fights apparently started in Juarez and Mexican authorities chased the brawling youths across the Paso del Norte bridge. Ortega said most of the youths had been drinking at Juarez bars that close at 2 a.m.

Police were called to the bridge at about 2:45 a.m., Ortega said. When police arrived about 75 to 100 people were loitering at the bridge.

"Fights started to break out in the crowd and back-up units had to be called," Ortega said.

Ortega said one officer suffered minor injuries.

Shrimpers arrested

GALVESTON (AP) — A federal crackdown on shrimpers for not using nets equipped with devices to protect endangered sea turtles has netted six arrests in Texas waters, U.S. Coast Guard officials said.

Authorities announced earlier this week they were beefing up enforcement along the Texas coast after more than 31 sea turtles, including 17 endangered Kemp's ridley turtles, were found dead.

Two shrimp boat captains arrested Thursday off Freeport and Galveston and three others were arrested off Port O'Connor. All are accused of violating federal laws that require them to use turtle excluder devices, or TEDs, to protect turtles that can get caught in shrimp nets and drown.

No other arrests have been made since Thursday, Coast Guard officials said Friday.

The penalty for criminal TED violations can be up to six months in federal prison and $25,000 per incident.

The cause of the turtles' deaths has not yet been determined, but environmentalists have been quick to blame shrimpers.

Quayle's office apologizes for excluding Spanish media

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle's spokesman apologized Friday for any misunderstanding with Spanish-language television journalists not included in an interview with Quayle in Texas.

"I hope no one thinks we intentionally discriminated against anybody," Quayle spokesman David Beckwith said. "Next time we come to San Antonio we'll make a better effort to reach out to all the stations."

Two local stations affiliated with Spanish-language networks criticized Quayle's office for not including them in an interview Thursday at a San Antonio hotel. During the interview Quayle criticized a job bias bill passed by the U.S. Senate.

Local affiliates of ABC, CBS and NBC were called by Quayle's office and invited to the interview. A reporter for the Mexico City network ECO also was allowed in after asking to be there.

Journalists at KWEX-TV, affiliated with the Spanish-language network Univision, and KVDA-TV, affiliated with the Spanish-language network Telemundo, complained that they were not called by Quayle's office and were not told of the interview when they asked about coverage of the vice president.

Quayle staff members said they were following usual procedure by contacting affiliates of the three English-language networks.

"Our viewers were cheated out of a major news event," Patricio Espinoza, KVDA news director and anchor, said at a news conference Friday.

Espinoza said he had spoken with Beckwith earlier in the day, and Beckwith apologized. Espinoza said his station wants the public to realize Spanish-language television reaches millions of Americans and is present in cities across the country.

Ed Barrera, news director at KWEX, on Thursday called the incident discriminatory. By Friday, he said, he had received about a dozen calls of support, including one from a local high-ranking Republican he declined to name.

Barrera had demanded a written apology from Quayle's office but on Friday said he hadn't received an apology.

"I'd like to say that George Bush called me this morning, but he didn't," Barrera said. "I have left the ball in their court."

Arthur Emerson, vice president and general manager at KVDA, said Quayle's office not contacting Spanish-language news teams about the interview may hurt Republicans' chances of attracting Hispanic voters.

"Not being accessible to the vice president through our media was a major faux pas," Emerson said. "This will have an effect. How deep an effect we will not know until after the November election."

Quayle spokesman Beckwith said, "I apologized for any misunderstanding." He added that Quayle has taken a strong interest in Latin American affairs and has been to Latin America six times as vice president.

"We probably do have a lot to say that the Spanish-speaking press would be interested in," Beckwith said. "I'm sure that when Hispanics understand how this occurred it will have no effect on their decision on how they vote because there was no slight intended."

Jews' appeal presented at embassies

WASHINGTON (AP) — An appeal of Jews who formerly lived in Mannheim, Germany, has been presented at embassies of both East and West Germany urging them to recognize a "special relationship" with Jews and Israel.

The resolutions asked that the following steps be taken in moves to reunite the two Germanys:

■ That they make clear "they will not condone anti-Semitism" and will be "forever vigilant" against the "horrors of the past."

■ That German schools teach about the Holocaust, and German leaders commit themselves to a "special relationship between Germany, the state of Israel and the Jewish people."

A Little Man in a BIG WORLD

While driving through the countryside, I saw a sign in a churchyard which read . . .

"It is easier to build a child than to repair an adult."

Although he may not realize it, this smiling young man has a lot of growing up to do before he can fill this chair. On the road to adulthood, he will experience a variety of situations, conflicting emotions, and the process of maturing physically.

This youngster will need mature leadership and spiritual counseling to assist in his transition from boyhood to manhood. It is our responsibility to see that he receives the guidance he needs to assure that he will continue to be smiling and well adjusted when he is old enough to fit into the role of adulthood. Proverbs 22:6 tells us to "Train up a child in the way he should go, even when he is old he will not depart from it."

Make worship a family affair. You and your child will reap a lifetime of benefits.

Monday Psalm 119:1-16
Tuesday Psalm 119:17-32
Wednesday Psalm 119:33-48
Thursday Psalm 119:49-64

Saturday Psalm 119:113-128

Adventists retain ban

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Delegates to the Seventh-day Adventist Church's world conference voted 1,273 to 377 to continue the church's ban on the ordination of women, saying such ordinations would be disruptive.

Most support for the ordination of women came from delegations from Europe and North America while leaders from Africa, Asia and South America were overwhelmingly against it.

Bishops to gather

CINCINNATI (AP) — Roman Catholic Archbishop Daniel Pilarczyk and other leaders of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops may meet this fall with members of a group of Roman Catholic homosexuals, a spokesman said.

The conference is considering whether to grant the request for a meeting from the homosexual group Dignity-USA, Pilarczyk spokesman Ray George said. Pilarczyk, the bishop of Cincinnati, is president of U.S. bishops.

The meeting would be conducted in Washington just prior to the start of the bishops' scheduled November meeting, George said.

Dignity-USA claims 4,200 members in 90 chapters nationwide. The church has barred its chapters in various cities from meeting or holding special religious services in Catholic churches.

Patrick Roche of Seattle, president of Dignity-USA, said he was encouraged because Pilarczyk had indicated he would be receptive to some sort of discussion.

'Openness' praised

NEW YORK (AP) — A National Council of Churches delegation to El Salvador, which met with governmental officials including Salvadoran President Alfredo Cristiani, expressed gratitude for an "apparent new openness" toward churches.

But that appraisal was tempered with reports of some continuing harassment of church workers and human rights abuses.

Will Baptists fight over money?

By Jim Jones
N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH — Baptist moderates have fired the first shot in a "money war" in the Southern Baptist Convention that many believe could cripple important church programs and further splinter the nation's largest Protestant denomination.

The moderates, incensed by fundamentalist political control and recent actions such as this week's firing of the two top editors of Baptist Press, have called a meeting in Atlanta for Aug. 23-24 to discuss ways of withholding church money from Baptist organizations now under fundamentalist control.

The Rev. Jimmy Allen of Fort Worth, chairman of Baptists Committed to the Southern Baptist Convention, one of the moderate organizations planning the Atlanta meeting, said moderates aren't trying to escalate the conflict.

But he said that moderates, who in the past were major leaders of the denomination, are never appointed to key Southern Baptist committees because fundamentalists are in control. Moderates feel shut out and money is one way to have an input, he said.

"Just like the colonists in early America, we are not going to pay taxes without being represented," Allen said.

Moderates have lost the political war in the 14.9 million-member denomination. Despite an intense effort by moderates, fundamentalists won the Baptist presidency for the 12th year in a row at last month's Southern Baptist Convention in New Orleans.

Now, Patterson said, moderates plan to use their money to assert their power.

"It's a legitimate strategy but an unfortunate one," he said.

Patterson said that if the moderates are successful, fundamentalists will retaliate by withholding money from state Baptist organizations controlled by moderates.

Whether the money war escalates depends on what sort of support the moderates get for their plan at the Atlanta meeting, Patterson said.

"If enough churches withhold money, it has the potential of ultimately destroying the Cooperative Program as it has functioned in the past," Patterson said.

The Cooperative Program, which totaled $137 million this year, supports foreign and home missionaries, and six Baptist seminaries, including Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth. Other agencies funded by the Cooperative Program include the Baptist Radio and Television Commission, also based in Fort Worth.

Fundamentalists also control the powerful Southern Baptist Executive Committee, which this week fired Al Shackleford, director of Baptist Press, the Southern Baptist news service, and Dan Martin, news editor, saying that they were biased against fundamentalists.

Patterson, a chief strategist in the fundamentalist resurgence in the denomination, said he doubts moderates will be able to involve enough churches in the plan to withhold money.

"Actually, there's a lot more noise than substance to all of this," Patterson said.

A news release from moderates who met recently in Irving — between Dallas and Fort Worth — to plan the Atlanta gathering said they immediately would set up a central funding agency through which churches unhappy with fundamentalist leadership could funnel their church offerings.

Baptist moderates will continue funding foreign missionaries, but may withdraw money from such organizations as the Christian Life Commission, the Baptist Press under its new leadership and Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary in North Carolina, which are now dominated by fundamentalists, said another moderate leader, the Rev. Bill Sherman of Nashville, Tenn.

Said Patterson, president of Criswell College: "The moderates have forgotten that two can play that game, and in some ways it's a game to our liking."

Patterson said he and other conservatives would be delighted to have a chance to withhold their churches' financial support from certain Texas Baptist organizations, especially the Baptist Standard, the state Baptist newspaper, which he says is biased against fundamentalists.

Jamaican doctor to be guest speaker

Gordon

Dr. Berkman O. "Berky" Gordon will speak about the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) in Jamaica on Sunday at First Christian Church, 1301 W. Louisiana. He is the second of two guest lecturers during Global Ministries month for First Christian's centennial.

Gordon will share information at an ice cream social at 6:00 p.m. He will also attend Sunday worship services.

This is Gordon's second visit to First Christian Church. As a high school student in Kingston, Jamaica, he came to Midland in 1973 as a guest of the congregation. "Many fond memories of that trip still remain," he says. The Outreach Committee and the members of First Christian Church were instrumental in helping him finance his college education.

His father, Carlyle Gordon, was among the early members of the Christian Church in Jamaica. His family worshiped at Duke Street Christian Church in Kingston for many years. Gordon's parents helped establish other Christian churches, including Greendale Community Church in Spanish Town.

First Christian Church made significant contributions to the Greendale Church and to the Spanish Town hospital during the 1970s.

Gordon attended Culver-Stockton College and earned a B.S in biology and chemistry. He began medical studies in 1977 at the University of the West Indies, and received his medical degree in 1983.

He worked as a physician in Nassau, Bahamas from 1983 to 1988. Since then, Dr. Gordon has studied at Emory University in Atlanta. His coursework has been nearly completed for the Master of Pulic Health in Health Administration. Present studies include specialties in opthalmology, radiology or family medicine. He begins a residency training program this month.

Gordon and his wife, Norma, have three children. She works as a registered nurse at Piedmont Hospital in Atlanta. She plans to earn a Master of Nursing/Master of Pulic Health.

"Facility to move between Jamaica and the United States in academic, professional and business areas is important to us," says Gordon. "We intend to deliver quality healthcare as a team, in association with others of like mind — striving to serve Jesus Christ our Saviour and Lord. Please uphold us in your prayers."

Seventh-day Adventists applaud accession rate

Although Seventh-day Adventists reported a record accession rate during the past year at 1,581 daily worldwide, Pastor Eddie Card of a Midland congregation reminded members that there are still millions of people who have never heard the name of Jesus Christ.

"In essence, we're no longer talking about the 190 countries in which we have a presence," Card said, "We're thinking now of the 1,800 groups of one million people who speak the same language but not the language of Christianity."

"We're going to emphasize people now more than nations," the cleric said, pointing out the Biblical injunction to preach the gospel of Christ to every nation, tribe and people.

Accepting this challenge at their 55th world business session in Indianapolis this month, international Adventist leaders specially pinpointed groups in China, the Soviet Union, India and the Middle East.

"There are many lesser-numbered groups even in North America which need our attention, too," the pastor added. "We've not done much for Native Americans, for instance."

Adventists have rallied under slogans for ministry for the past decade. During the early 1980s, they spoke of the "Thousand Days of Reaping," when the goal was to baptize 1,000 daily for 1,000 days. That figure was surpassed.

Since their last business session in 1985, the church's motto has been "Harvest 90." During the second quarter of last year, the accession rate reached 1,888, although the average for the entire year was 1,581 daily.

"Our part locally, of course, is to work with other churches in promoting a Bible-based lifestyle in Midland," Card said, "but then to remember that Adventists are a worldwide family and support with our prayers and our love gifts the church's various strategies for Global Mission."

Holy Cross Lutheran installs new pastor

The Rev. Guy Bergenthal of Chicago was installed as pastor of Holy Cross Lutheran Church in a 3 p.m. ceremony Sunday, July 1. Pastor Bergenthal is a recent graduate of Concordia Theological Seminary in Fort Wayne, Ind., where he earned his Master of Divinity degree.

Bergenthal

He also has degrees from DuPage College of Glen Ellyn, Ill. and Concordia College in River Forest, Ill.

Holy Cross is the sixth and newest Lutheran congregation in Midland. It is a daughter congregation of Grace Lutheran Church, and is affiliated with the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod. It is currently conducting services at the Grace Presbyterian Day Care Center, 5200 W. Illinois.

A site for a permanent church has been purchased by the Lutheran Synod. It is located on West Loop 250, just north of the Manor Park Apartments.

Officiating at the installation service was the Rev. Carroll Kohl of Big Spring. He is the area vice-president for the Texas District of the Lutheran Church. The Rev. Donald V. Hafemann, pastor emeritus of Grace Lutheran Church was the pastor for the service.

They were assisted by the Rev. Ray Johansen, present pastor of Grace Lutheran Church, as well as the Rev. Len Ristow of Pecos, the Rev. Mike Mast of Odessa, the Rev. Mel Herring of Monahans and the Rev. Robert Pace of Lamesa. The service was followed by a public reception.

Traditions temper Ginza glitz

EDITOR'S NOTE — No other spot in Japan has quite the cachet of the Ginza in Tokyo. It's a paradise for hedonists, an elegant shopping center, a place where dinner can cost $800 a plate. It's also a place where Oriental traditions persist, where businessmen stay in touch with their local gods.
By Elaine Kurtenbach

AP Laserphoto

Tokyo's Ginza is often dubbed as Japan's Fifth Avenue with its deluxe department stores, elegant boutiques, plush bars and luxurious restaurants along its half-mile boulevard.

TOKYO (AP) — Thumping drums, wooden clappers and eerie flute music draw the people of the neighborhood out to watch as shopkeepers parade a golden shrine through the streets, oblivious to the honking horns of backed-up traffic.

Each year the Ginza's busy shopkeepers put aside their work for a few hours to celebrate their local gods, seeking protection from calamity for the world's most expensive neighborhood.

The Ginza is Japan's Fifth Avenue, Bond Street, Champs Elysees all wrapped into one. Its deluxe department stores cater to Japanese matrons and a steady stream of tourists. Its bars and restaurants offer any type of cuisine in practically any imaginable setting.

It also is home to 3,615 people who keep their traditions alive on land costing as much as $23,700 a square foot.

By day, the Ginza's urban landscape is brightened only by luxurious window displays and weeping willows and maples along quiet side streets.

By night, the neon lights of hundreds of pubs, restaurants and "hostess bars" transform the district into a glittering paradise of female companionship, good food and drink for men with deep pockets or hefty expense accounts.

No other spot in Japan has quite the cachet of the Ginza.

Since the turn of the century this tiny district squeezed between the Imperial Palace and Tokyo Bay has been THE place to be. Hundreds of optimistic shopping streets throughout Japan bear the name "Ginza," but none match its opulence or prestige.

In 1603, one of Japan's most powerful shoguns, Tokugawa Ieyasu, moved to Tokyo, then known as Edo. He ordered part of the bay filled in.

Under a later shogun, a silver mint, or "ginza" in Japanese, bequeathed the district its prophetic name. At the time, it was an earthy market and entertainment district.

After fires destroyed posh shops and villas slightly to the north, shopkeepers moved into the Ginza. Some have been there ever since.

The Ginza itself has risen, phoenix-like, from ashes several times, each time becoming more modern and Western.

A fire in 1869, shortly after rulers in the modernizing Meiji era declared that Japan would learn from the West, cleared the way for tree-lined avenues of London-style brick buildings.

Just a few feet of those brick walls remain intact. The Western-style shops crumbled and burned in 1923 when a powerful earthquake leveled most of Tokyo.

All but a few of the buildings constructed after that disaster were destroyed by U.S. firebombing during World War II.

Today, only a few prewar buildings remain, and most of the buildings thrown up just after the war have been torn down to make way for modern structures. Most conform to an eight-story limit imposed to reduce earthquake and fire hazards and to give everyone at least a glimpse of sunshine.

Ginza's night life, its department stores and small shops all have an air of cosmopolitan elegance. There are shoe stores with names like Washington and America, London-style tailors, Parisian brasseries and cafes, and some 250 art galleries crowded into an area only about 1,100 yards by 650 yards.

Beneath the veneer of Western commerce, however, the Ginza is as Japanese as its kabuki theaters.

In the morning, shopkeepers fastidiously sweep in front of their stores, wipe windows and splash the sidewalks to keep the dust down. When department stores open to waiting crowds in the morning, uniform-clad clerks bow deeply and say, "Irrashaimase" — Welcome.

Well-established department stores, with names like Wako, Mitsukoshi, Matsuzakaya and Matsuya, sell designer dresses and caviar, but they also sell tofu, sushi and dried fish and have tiny shrines or temples on their roofs to consecrate their businesses.

Naohisa Nagai, 42, is the eighth generation in his family to run the Echigoya kimono shop, which has been in the Ginza since 1800.

"People have worn kimono for ages. Now, they only wear them for special purposes, such as ceremonies or in certain professions. But even if the number of customers falls, the number of shops like ours is also falling, so we can stay in business," Nagai says.

On weekend afternoons, when Ginza Dori, the main street, is closed to traffic, families and dating couples crowd the sidewalks and shops, continuing a tradition of "ginbura," or strolling on the Ginza.

In the evenings, sidewalk vendors, left over from the times when night markets filled the streets, still sell noodles and grilled rice cakes, wind chimes, flowers, candy and toys. Palmists and fortune-tellers wait serenely for customers.

Beefy sumo wrestlers in robes and wooden sandals stride among suit-clad businessmen and women in fancy dresses or kimono, all headed for bars where a single drink could cost $127 or more.

In east Ginza, powerful businessmen and politicians gather in exclusive, traditional restaurants, called "ryotei," that charge $800 a person or more for a single meal. Rickshaws carry geisha girls, many aged but still elegant masters of traditional dance and music.

"This is the best it's ever been," says Yuji Ishimaru, who has run the Ginza Street Association of local merchants for 31 years. "The young people really love the old atmosphere, and the older men don't seem to mind being crowded out. They want new generations to follow them."

Vietnamese farmer reaping rewards of economic reform

By Peter Eng

DA TON, Vietnam (AP) — Dramatically larger crops have brought television and motorbikes to once-poor villages and turned a nation with chronic food shortages into the world's third-ranking rice exporter.

Nature has been kind the past two years, but the engine for growth has been the Communist Party's retreat from the disaster of collective agriculture and adoption of free-market policies that gave farmers incentives.

Vietnam's rice boom may be the biggest success story of the economic reforms many communist-ruled countries adopted in recent years. Industry and other sectors of the Vietnamese economy have fared poorly.

Truong Cong Tin, deputy director of the government Institute of Agricultural Science of South Vietnam, said agriculture appears able to lift Vietnam's overall economic development. About 80 percent of the 65 million Vietnamese work on the land.

Aid officials said the progress in traditionally impoverished villages of the north may help reduce the huge flow "boat people" out of the country.

In 1988, the north imported 300,000 tons of rice and appealed for emergency foreign aid for provinces where millions of people were hungry because of devastating typhoons.

Now the north feeds itself for the first time in decades and last year even exported about 40,000 tons of rice, said Tran Bach Ngoc, an official of the state rice export company Vinafood. The south produced the rest of the record 1.4 million tons of rice exported.

Officials said Vietnam had exported about 600,000 tons of rice in the first half of 1990 and the year's total might surpass 1989. They said improvements, such as replacing antiquated milling machines, could make Vietnam a threat to Thailand and the United States, the leading exporters.

"Before, we worked in the fields very regularly, sometimes eight hours a day, but we didn't work very hard," said Le Minh Re, 51, of Da Ton village on the outskirts of Hanoi, the national capital in the north.

"We did not get the amount of rice equal to the effort. Now if we work hard, we will have more rice and can use it for our own needs. Now even some city people rush here to rent out land from the cooperative to farm."

Brick houses have replaced most thatched huts in Da Ton and a new school was built last year. Farmers who once took their goods to market on bicycles use Japanese-made motorcycles. One of every five families has television.

"Some bought black-and-white TVs and now they've changed to color," said the head of the cooperative, Le Van Bui. During the interview, he was distracted occasionally by the late-morning soap opera.

Bui and other officials identified the key reform as Communist Party Resolution 10, adopted in April 1988 after several years of poor production.

Resolution 10 gave farmers long-term leases on the land, encouraging them to enrich it. It also reduced the role of the cooperative so farmers would do most of the work individually, not as part of unmotivated work groups.

"Artists love new toys, to experiment, to look for new visual results," said Karen Indeck, co-curator of the University of Illinois' Faxart exhibit. "Visual art is about images, and it's an incredible use of a new technology to create these images."

Co-sponsored by University of Illinois' School of Art and the School of the Art Institute, Faxart features the work of their alumni and other artists worldwide and is entirely composed of work transmitted by fascimile machine.

Ever since, the phone has been ringing with entries. Some artists redialed more than five hours before getting through.

Judith Kitzes, an Evanston-based artist, submitted a piece consisting only of the words "Learn to Live with Ambiguity." The computer-generated sentence is repeated 108 times on 10 sheets of paper.

"I like the idea that I wrote one sentence, repeated it, the original in the computer does not exist, the original on paper I destroyed after faxing it, and the work of art — the fax — will fade," she said.

Wild horses roam the rugged terrain in Missouri's Ozarks. The U.S. Park Service insists the horses are strays and must be rounded up and sold, but some residents say the horses were there before the Park Service and they want them to stay.

Missouri citizens want to keep wild horses

EMINENCE, Mo. (AP) — The bands of stray horses that have roamed the rugged and beautiful Missouri Ozarks for more than 20 years are heading for the last roundup.

Fugitives from farms in the mid-1960s, they have wandered through the wildflower-dotted fields of waist-high grass and drunk from the rivers and springs that flow through the lush forests and valleys. They've become as wild as mustangs.

But now the U.S. Park Service contends the two dozen or so animals can't properly fend for themselves and should be captured and sold.

The government announced in May that it plans to hire cowboys to round up the horses from the 60,000 acres of wilderness in the Ozark National Scenic Riverways in southern Missouri.

"It will be a sad day when there are no more wild horses around here," says Rolland Smotherman of Birch Tree, who trains and shoes horses for a living and often ventures out on horseback with friends to observe the strays. "Where else can you go and see wild horses, except for out West?"

Smotherman and a number of residents of this sparsely populated region, located about 150 miles southwest of St. Louis, say the horses are thriving in the wild. Several new foals were seen this spring, he says.

They believe the animals should be left alone to be enjoyed by the public, including the thousands of canoeists, campers and fishermen who flock to the Current and Jacks Fork rivers each year.

"Those horses wintered fat. I guarantee they are healthier than nine-tenths of the horses most people have around here," says Richard Wilkins of Mountain View, who owns a feed store and seven horses.

Supporters have gathered about 1,000 signatures on petitions asking the Park Service to reconsider its plan to catch the animals, break them and then allow the public to "adopt" them for a fee.

"It's silly for the Park Service to think about removing them. No matter how many times you've seem them, it's always a thrill," says Gay Healzer of Eminence, a rodeo champion in barrel competition.

The government claims the animals are not truly wild, like the mustangs roaming Western ranges, and therefore are not able to contend with harsh winters, disease, injury and food shortages.

In addition, the horses create unwanted trails, trample rare and endangered plants and occasionally raid the hay fields of farmers who lease federal land, says Tom Graham, chief ranger of the Ozark National Scenic Riverways.

The government will choose this summer from bids submitted by individuals and businesses wishing to capture the horses. The Missouri Humane Society will be asked to monitor the roundup to ensure the animals' safety, Graham says.

Jim Smith, whose family has operated wilderness trail rides at Eminence for 35 years, questions the government's contention that the stray horses aren't wild. He said he's seen the horses swim across a river or flee up a steep, rocky hillside at the mere sight of a human.

"You can't catch them," he says. "I've chased 'em a little bit myself. Shoot, they outrun you. You can run a horse to death and you'll never get a rope on one. People have tried for years."

"We have a legal obligation to do this," he says.

Cowboy recalls 60 years on South Texas ranches

GOLIAD, Texas (AP) — If you ask K.J. Oliver how long he's been a cowboy, he'll tell you since May 30, 1929.

And if you talk to him about his profession very long, he'll get around to how hazardous it is, with observations such as, "If you graduate in handling steers, you can handle any kind of cattle. They're the most dangerous kind."

The 60-odd years of Oliver's leathery career and his respect for its dangers both trail back to one pivotal day when he was only 14: May 30, 1929.

"The reason I remember that date so well is because that was the day my father drowned," Oliver said. His father, himself a cowboy, was working on a ranch in Buckeye. "He was trying to help a man who was in trouble."

Oliver speaks shyly but surely about his career, like a man who loved his work all his life but isn't at all sure whether anybody else would find it interesting.

The cowboys also signed copies of a new book by Louise O'Connor, "Cryin' for Daylight."

Oliver explained that the title springs from memories of never-ending nights spent criss-crossing sizable South Texas ranches. Mosquitoes were so bad that by the time the sun came up, cowhands would be crying for daylight.

The cowboys' lives were lessons in severity, from the use of corn cobs jammed onto wires and dipped in coal oil as torches to set grass fires ("We used to burn up the grass in order to burn up the ticks," Williams said. "People say cats have nine lives. Cats don't have any compared to a tick.") to baseballs made of stockings ("When we were kids, we didn't know what a hardball was. If you threw one at us, we'd probably run away.") to buzzard traps.

This was before the scavengers became protected by law, of course.

The cowboys also improvised corn-meal graters, which amounted to curved pieces of sheet metal, with nail holes poked through them from the inside out, nailed to boards.

Oliver first went to work for the Y-6 ranch (the brand looked like a figure six that forks at the top) in Bloomington, his hometown.

He was only 14, but he managed to get a high school education in Victoria. He caught a lot of criticism for that. People back then considered high school a luxury for a family's breadwinner.

If Oliver, who has been married 54 years, has any regrets about his livelihood, it's that he rarely got to see his four boys while they were growing up.

EL PASO (AP) — The discovery of the broken carcass of a B-17 Flying Fortress that Dick Speers ditched while under fire from Nazis brought back a flood of memories to the WWII navigator.

Speers, 68, of Santa Teresa, N.M., recalled that only two of his squadron's 36 bombers made it back to their base on Dec. 31, 1943. Speers and his fellow crew members ditched their bomber in 60 feet of water off Guernsey Island, off the coast of France.

"It's amazing that they located it," Speers said.

"It felt good in a way. But it brought everything back so rapidly," he said.

"We had to ditch the plane on the way back to our base at Polebrook, England, from a bombing mission in France," Speers said. "The plane was down to two engines and...leaking fuel. We still might have made it home if we hadn't been leaking fuel."

Speers and the other 10 crewmen from the 508th Bomb Squadron, 351st Bomb Group, had to ride the plane they called Piccadilly Commando into the waves off German-occupied Guernsey Island.

The crew — cut and bruised but not seriously injured — scrambled onto a life raft and took refuge on a rock rising from the water. After about an hour, the crew was captured by Germans. They finished the war in prison camps.

"The plane was in pieces," Speers said. "The fuselage and the main skin are gone. But they found serial numbers on the machine guns, and the last three numbers of the aircraft number — 630."

Speers went on to a 24-year Air Force career, retiring in El Paso from Biggs Air Base — now Biggs Army Air Field.

New trolley opening in August will link El Paso and Juarez

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — To the brassy clang of bells glinting in the binational Southwest sun, the El Paso-Juarez Trolley Co. will begin its new service in August.

About 17 years after the last electric trolley ran over rails between the two cities, a new trolley service on rubber wheels — aimed at tourists and shoppers — will begin making hourly loops through the border cities.

"The ownership of the company is 50 percent Juarez businessmen and 50 percent El Paso business," said Tookie Hartshorn, one of the company's managers. "Nobody else is doing this; it's the first time people in two countries have jointly owned a transportation company operating in the two ountries."

The new trolleys will join the cross-border bus-transportation field now dominated by Juarez-based "Red Buses" and El Paso's Golden Tours.

But Hartshorn said the main competition will be with Golden Tours, which is also geared to tourists.

Nancy Brown, the company's other manager, said the company will run a trolley service between its headquarters in the Tourist Information Center in the Civic Center Plaza and points in Juarez. The trolley company has also taken over the duties of dispensing tourist information at the distinctive kiosk surrounded by fountains and a moat.

"It will provide a safe, easy and convenient way to shop in Juarez and look at the sights," Brown said. "We'll leave from the Civic Center Plaza terminal, proceed over the Bridge of the Americas to ProNaF Center, then down 16th of September Avenue to Juarez Avenue, then up Juarez Avenue, over the Paso del Norte Bridge and back to the terminal.

"There will be 10 to 15 stops in between. The service will run Wednesday through Sunday, eight hours a day, with a trolley leaving every hour. For instance, if you got off at ProNaF at 12:15, there'd be another trolley coming by at 1:15."

In October, Hartshorn said, the company plans to start selling tickets and picking up new passengers in Juarez and bringing them to El Paso.

Tickets for the trolley will cost $5 and will be good for all-day travel.

Golden Tours now offers 3½-hour guided shopping and sightseeing tours of Juarez for $10 per passenger, said Inez Montes, who runs the company with her husband. She said she didn't know what effect the new company would have on her business.

"They're the same kind that are being used in Albuquerque, San Diego and Kansas City," Brown said. "If they're good enough for them, by golly, they're good enough for us."

The trolleys are painted dark green and trimmed with red and gold. As they make their international circuit, both the Mexican and American flags will fly from standards on the front of the vehicles.

Inside, the wooden-slat, park-type benches will seat 31 people, who will be surrounded by large windows, rich wooden appointments, vertical and horizontal brass bars and leather handstraps. Old-fashioned globe lights and audio speakers line the ceiling from front to back; drivers will be equipped with microphones to provide a running commentary on the sights.

"One of the drivers we've hired, Jose Castanon, used to drive the old street cars in El Paso," Brown said. "I bet he'll have a lot of stories."

A pull on white cords running the length of each side brings a loud clang from a bell. "We may have to disconnect those," laughed Brown. "Kids. . . ."

The company also has three smaller vans with which it will provide a free shuttle service from outlying hotels to the Civic Center terminal.

"We're averaging maybe 50 people a day coming into the Tourist Information Center wanting to know how to get to Juarez without taking their cars," Brown said. "Mexico is one of the No. 1 drawing cards for tourists."

The trolley company will sell ads to be placed in racks both outside and inside of the trolleys. Ad costs will range from $400 a month for an outside "billboard" ad to $75 a month for audio ads on the trolley sound systems. Some of the stops in Juarez will depend on which Mexican companies buy ads.

"We've nicknamed our trolleys the 'Border Jumpers,' " Hartshorn said.

Two recent million dollar winners haven't changed their lifestyles

N.Y. Times News Service

ARLINGTON, Texas — After the unbridled tears of joy, the faintness brought on by disbelief and the sudden swirl of media attention, things haven't changed much for two Arlington women who recently won $1 million each.

And Ruby Jean Allen, who won $1 million playing bingo in May, has done little more than deposit her first check in the bank and look at houses.

"All my life I thought I was rich," said Allen, 52. "I had my health, a pretty good job, a decent place to stay and I had God on my side."

Allen, who lives in a small one-bedroom apartment, will keep her job with the M.K. Noonan laundry and dry-cleaning plant in east Fort Worth, where she has worked for 12 years and brings home $590 every two weeks.

She will also hang on to her 1988 Grand Am.

"I'll have it paid for in a year and a half," she said. "Why would I trade it in?"

Michael Noonan, Allen's boss, has been helping her decide how to invest her winnings, but they have taken a go-slow approach, she said.

"He said the gospel must go on, and that I could help," Allen said. "I told him I'll help it go on with my church."

An inmate at the state prison in Huntsville wrote that he had read about Allen and that he was her lost brother-in-law.

"I wrote him a letter saying I didn't have any brothers-in-law in Huntsville," she said. "I haven't heard from him since."

It is with that sister, Willie Jean Howard, that Allen has played bingo for decades and with whom she has always split the winnings. It is a tradition that includes the $1 million she won playing Mega-Bingo at the Choctaw Indian Reservation in Durant, Okla.

Each sister has received half of the first payment of $100,000, and for each of the next 24 years, each will receive half the $37,500 annual allotment.

"I didn't want it all in my name, even though we knew we'd split it," Allen said. "The taxes would kill me."

Allen has given a total of $5,000 to three brothers, six other sisters and her mother. The remainder of her $50,000 went into a savings account, a certificate of deposit and a checking account.

Her sister, Allen said, has used her share of the first payment to refurnish and expand her Fort Worth home.

"That Willie Jean, she knows how to spend money," Allen said.

As for the bingo tables, Allen has not been back since winning the big one in Oklahoma.

"I felt like it was my time, that I was blessed to receive that money," Allen said. "And I wasn't blessed to go and give it back."

Cunningham said she hasn't even been paid for the national TV commercials she appeared in to promote the rub-off instant-match McDonald's game.

"I don't know how much they're paying me for those," Cunningham said of the commercials, shot June 15 at the Arlington McDonald's where she had the winning ticket verified in June. "They told me I'd get a check in 30 days."

More important, Cunningham returned the paperwork recently to receive the first of her 20 annual checks of $50,000.

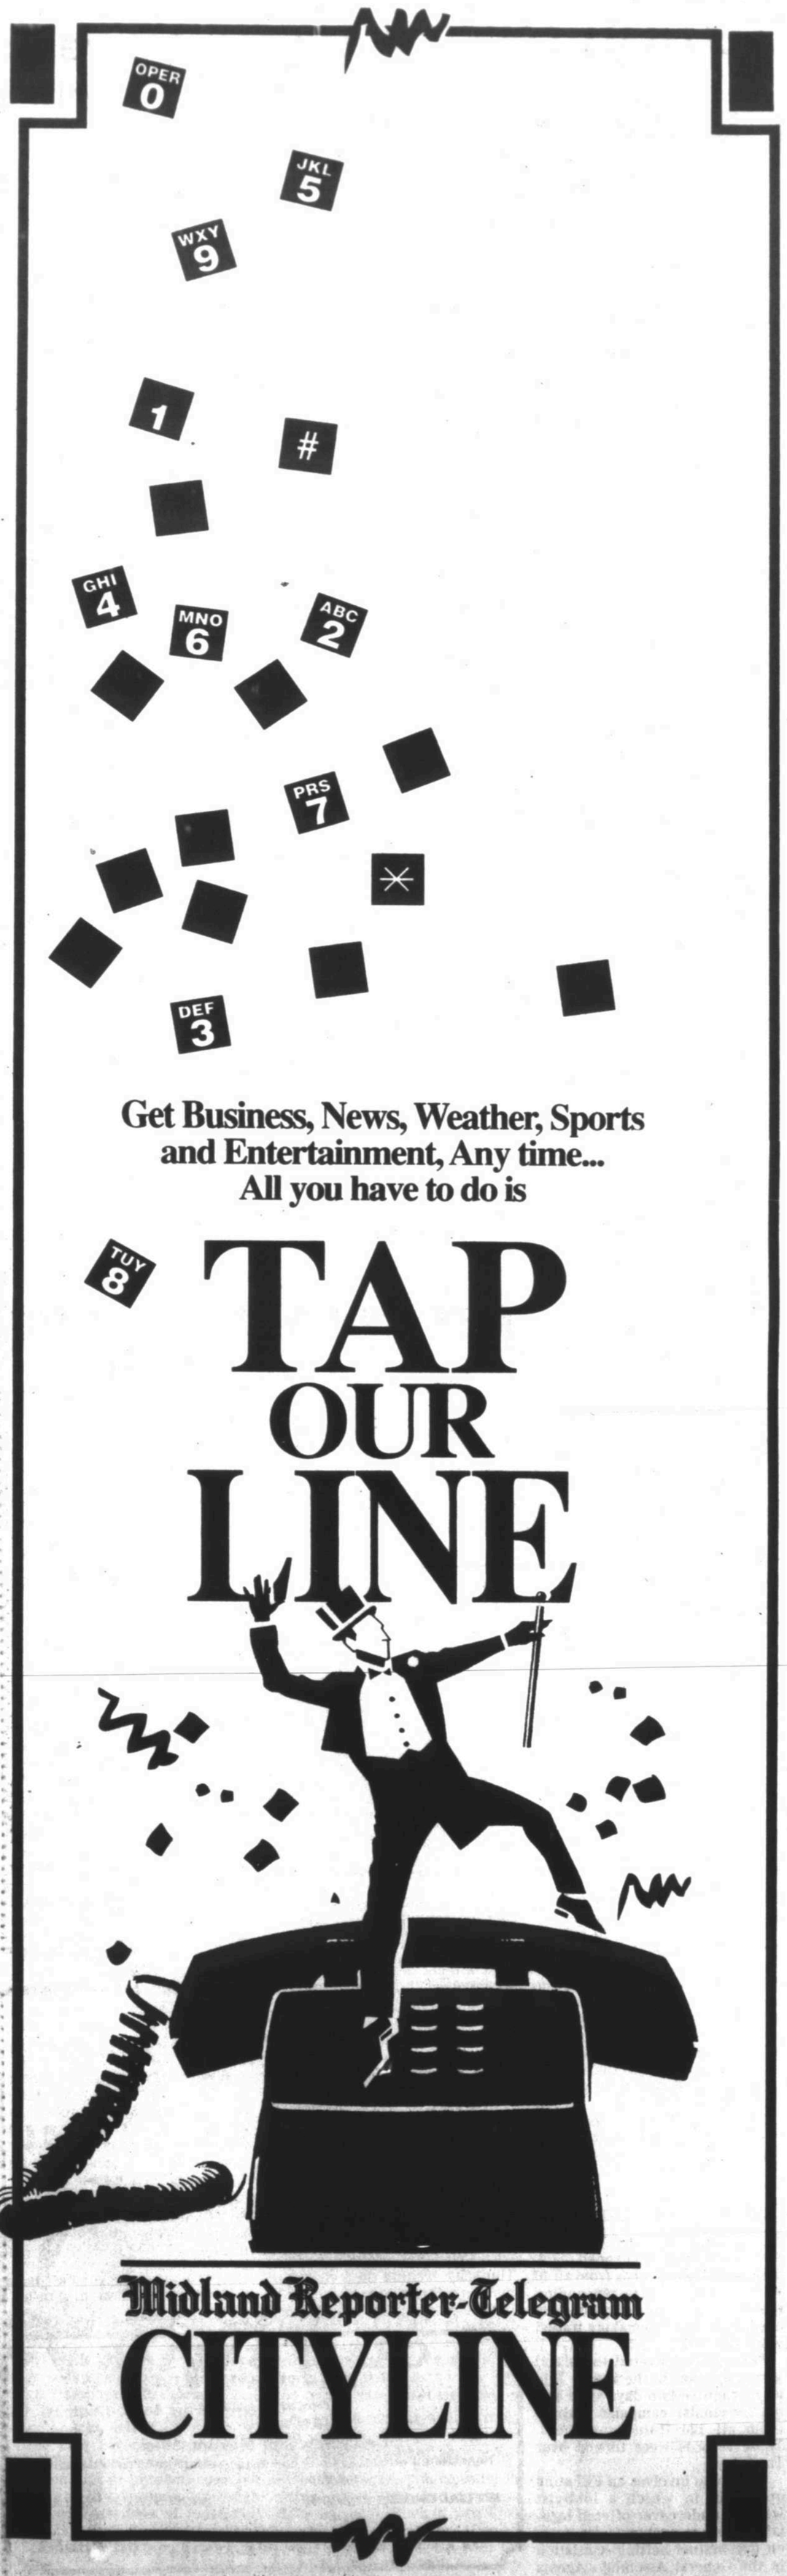

"I guess when I get my hands on that first check, it will all seem real," said Cunningham, 45.

In the meantime, since returning from a week's vacation planned before she received formal word of her winning McDonald's ticket four weeks ago, Cunningham has been back at work as a commercial teller at Bank of Arlington in this city between Dallas and Fort Worth.

"I suppose one of us will always be working," she said of herself and her husband, Garvis, 52, who works for an electrical supply company in Grand Prairie.

She said they have no plans to move from the four-bedroom home in southwest Arlington they bought about three years ago, where they live with their children: Eric, 21, and Tambra, 17.

Bush says he can accept cuts in defense spending

■ With defense budget cuts now totalling $18 billion, Bush is warning Congress against holding a military 'fire sale.'

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — President Bush said Friday he could accept the Senate Armed Services Committee's $18 billion reduction in the defense budget he proposed for fiscal 1991.

But Bush, speaking at the nation's MX missile arsenal, cautioned Congress not to hold "some kind of fire sale" of military hardware to accommodate friendlier superpower relations and budget constraints.

"The Soviets know what deters and so does this president," he said in the rain.

Addressing the committee's cuts a week earlier in his proposed defense budget — from $307 billion to $289 billion — Bush said:

"I'm asking Congress to hold the line at the already-painful reduction in the defense budget set down by the Senate Armed Services Committee. ...

"There were some positive things from the committee, especially their support for strategic modernization, as well as some other actions, on the other hand, that cause me problems."

He did not elaborate on the "problems" except to say he would like more latitude in making personnel cuts than the committee proposed.

Speaking to several hundred workers at the MX installation, Bush said:

In the House, the Armed Services Committee will begin drafting a defense bill next week with a $283 billion ceiling — less than the Senate panel's version.

The president coupled his defense comments with a sharp attack on Congress for practicing "government by gridlock" and dragging its feet on budget overhaul.

Before speaking, Bush received a private tour and briefing at Warren Air Force Base, where the nation's 50 MX missiles are stored.

On Saturday, Bush will fly to Newport News, Va., for the dedication of the nation's newest aircraft carrier, the George Washington.

Bush's proposal to deploy the MX missiles, each tipped with 10 nuclear warheads, on rail launchers has encountered stiff resistance in Congress. The Senate committee last week voted to reject the bulk of Bush's request for more than $2 billion for the program.

While saying he realized there would be a cut in defense spending, he told his audience, "We have to have an orderly build-down, not some kind of a fire sale."

After the speech, Bush drove through fog and rain to a lake about 30 miles from Cheyenne to go fishing with Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., a longtime friend.

By Benjamin Shore
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — At the recent Houston economic summit, President Bush received a pat on the back from his fellow leaders of industrialized democracies for his just-announced "Enterprise for the Americas" plan to help struggling, debt-burdened Latin American economies.

Bush also has received messages of thanks from grateful heads of government in the region, according to the White House.

But now the long, hard job of turning rhetoric into reality begins for an administration that has little spare cash to devote to the expensive cause.

Bush, in a June 27 speech before bankers and businessmen in the White House, said "the need for new economic initiatives is clear and compelling," but providing a lot of American dollars is not one of them.

"This (speech by the president) has to be put into its proper long-term context," said an official of the State Department's Bureau of Inter-American Affairs. "It's not like a treaty that requires immediate action."

The two principal courses of action are to enter into free-trade agreements with any country or trading coalition in the region that is willing to meet basic economic reform tenets, and to forgive up to $7 billion of the $12 billion in government-to-government debt owed to the United States.

The office of the U.S. Trade Representative has initiated fresh contact in the last two weeks with each nation of Central and South America and the Caribbean offering to discuss a free-trade agreement, but the accords that might result are many years away.

Although Trade Representative Carla A. Hills and her staff are tied up with the final months of negotiating a successful conclusion to the "Uruguay Round" of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), they have managed in recent weeks to conclude trade agreements with two Latin American nations.

Under the previously launched Andean Trade Initiative, Hills, spurred by Bush's speech, has reached agreements on special duty-free access for certain products from Colombia and Ecuador. Negotiations with Peru and Bolivia continue. The Andean initiative is designed to provide the four nations with alternatives to growing coca leaves, which are turned into cocaine.

Furthermore, previously announced talks aimed at achieving a free-trade agreement with Mexico will continue this year and are expected to blossom into negotiations next year, said Timothy O'Leary of the Trade Representative's office.

Bush's offer to forgive some of Latin America's official debt, which is not the same as the debt owed to private U.S. banks, will require legislation by the Congress.

"Everybody agrees on the goal" of forgiving some official debt, said Treasury Department spokeswoman Barbara Clay, and there already was legislation pending that would do that in one form or another.

In testimony Wednesday before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, David C. Mulford, undersecretary of the treasury for international affairs, said the administration was drafting legislation to achieve its version of debt relief. Most of the official debt is for food purchases and Aid for International Development (AID) loans.

"Reduction of official debt burdens can produce broad benefits for Latin America and the Caribbean, provided countries undertake vital economic reforms," Mulford said.

"Among these benefits will be an increased ability to attract new resource flows and encourage the return of capital held by their nationals overseas. If economic reforms are sustained, this capital will provide a powerful stimulant for growth."

But the outlook for adoption of implementing legislation this year is not good, said an official of the Foreign Affairs Committee. A number of committees in the House and Senate have claimed jurisdiction, and time is running out for fresh legislation to be considered in this Congress. This means the issue most likely will have to be raised anew when the 102nd Congress convenes next year.

The administration's offer to forgive some official debt, however, could have a positive impact on the Brady Plan to reschedule private debt.

The proposal "could create a key atmosphere, committing the U.S. government to put its money where its mouth is in terms of debt reduction," the State Department official said. "This has never happened before. We were encouraging the banks to reduce their payback requirements while not reducing our own."

Although most of Latin America's foreign debt is owed to private banks, the Bush proposal gives "moral weight" to credible debt reduction, he said.

"Debt-reduction negotiations have as much to do with the political environment and momentum as they do with technical considerations," the official added.

At Houston, the leaders of West Germany, Japan, Great Britain, Italy, Canada, France and the United States noted in their final communique that the "Enterprise for the Americas" initiative "will support and encourage more market-oriented policies in Latin America and the Caribbean.

"We believe that such U.S. efforts hold great promise for the region and will help improve prospects for sustained growth in the America through the encouragement of trade, open investment regimes, the reduction of U.S. bilateral concessional debt and the use of debt for equity and nature swaps."

But beyond that general praise for Bush's initiative, the industrialized nations offered nothing concrete. For the moment, "their eyes are on the Soviet Union and Central and Eastern Europe," a White House official said.

Bush timed his speech — 10 days before the economic summit — to reassure Latin American governments that the United States would not forget them in the West's euphoric rush to prop up economies weakened by a half-century or more of communism.

"I assure all of you here today... the United States will not lose sight of the tremendous challenges and opportunities here in our own hemisphere," Bush said on June 27.

But, according to a White House official, Bush also hopes his economic allies will join him in assisting Latin America. The President proposed the establishment of a multilateral development fund, with the United States kicking in $100 million — a relatively minor amount — and Japan and the European Community adding $100 million each.

The United States is especially interested in increasing Japan's contribution to developmental aid.

San Francisco to vote on 'domestic partners' bill

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — For the second straight year, San Francisco voters will consider whether to allow gay couples to register as domestic partners.

The latest proposal, written by Supervisor Harry Britt and endorsed by three other supervisors, was submitted Friday to the registrar of voters and will appear on the November ballot.

The measure is a simpler version of a landmark law adopted a year ago by board, and then narrowly rejected by the voters. It would allow any unmarried couple, gay or heterosexual, to record their relations with the city clerk.

Unlike the measure defeated in November, the law does not extend any benefits to city employees. However, it is the issue of recognizing gay relationships that evoked the strongest opposition from religious leaders.

"Since November the religious right has been trumpeting around the country that San Francisco agrees with them that gay love is evil. We have to correct that."

If adopted, San Francisco would become the first city in the nation to formally recognize gay and lesbian relationships among its residents. West Hollywood currently allows a similar registration for city employees.

The ballot measure represents Britt's third attempt to enact some sort of domestic partners law. The first attempt was vetoed by then-Mayor Dianne Feinstein in 1982, and the second attempt was rejected

"Every poll we've taken shows that the people of San Francisco are willing to recognize gays and lesbians as first class citizens," said Britt, who is gay.

Although there is nothing legally binding about the arrangement, the right to register same-sex relations is seen as a basic civil liberty by many gays and lesbians who are forbidden from marriage in the United States.

States blame government for salmonella outbreak

WASHINGTON (AP) — State health officials complained Friday that the Agriculture Department has left them to their own devices in the fight against salmonella enteritidis, a potentially fatal form of bacteria found in raw or undercooked eggs.

"The absence of a coordinated federal response has left states with no alternative but to take strong action to protect their citizens from contaminated food often produced in other states," John J. Guzewich of the New York State Health Department told a congressional oversight panel.

A.B. Park of the Maryland Agriculture Department said state officials began tracing eggs and testing chickens while federal officials were debating whether salmonellosis is a poultry disease.

The witnesses appeared before the oversight and investigations subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

The panel's chairman, Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., alleged that the Agriculture Department was late in recognizing the growing number of outbreaks traced to the bacteria and withheld information from the Food and Drug Administration, which also regulates the food supply.

AP Laserphoto

With the steady increase in salmonella poisoning cases, cooking expert Julia Child says a preventive would be to have eggs refrigerated from the time they are laid until they are eaten.

Poisoning from the enteritidis form of salmonella has been increasing steadily since 1982 and is most likely to be fatal among the very old, the very young and others whose immune systems are weak, according to the Centers for Disease Control.

The agency says the increase is directly related to contamination of Grade A eggs that are eaten raw or undercooked. Infection has been spread through scrambled, poached and over-easy eggs, as well as in home-made ice cream, cole slaw, sauces and dressings.

Since 1985, there have been 217 outbreaks responsible for 7,370 cases of infection. Of those cases, 11 resulted in death, CDC says.

Health officials say tracing the food poisoning to a particular flock is by nature difficult and is made more difficult by the lack of effective regulation.

Even an infected flock may produce only one contaminated egg in 1,000, said Dr. Robert Tauxe of the Centers for Disease Control. Testing all chickens before allowing their eggs to be shipped is also impossible for now, he said. Organ cultures are required to find the bacteria.

The problem can become worse when the eggs reach a restaurant, nursing home or institution, said Tauxe. One contaminated egg can contaminate a bowl of 500, he said.

The state officials complained that federal inspections are limited to brood hens that produce the laying hens, even though environmental contamination remains a real risk.

They also complained that no recall provision exists for eggs that have reached the market, and that no effective way exists for tracing eggs.

NATION IN BRIEF

Attack said to be race-related

BALTIMORE (AP) — A black man walking with his white girlfriend was chased by a white man into the path of a truck that hit him, leaving him critically injured in what police said was a racially motivated attack.

Daniel Porter, 21, of Baltimore was charged with assault and reckless endangerment for chasing Herbert Jennings, 38, also of Baltimore, on Thursday night. Porter was being held Friday pending a bail hearing.

Jennings and his 32-year-old white girlfriend, whom police would not identify, were taunted shortly before 10 p.m. Thursday by two white men in a pickup truck as they walked on a street in the Highlandtown neighborhood of southeast Baltimore, not far from where the girlfriend lives, police said.

Moments later, Porter and two other white men approached the couple and Porter yelled to the men in the truck, asking if they wanted him to attack Jennings, whom he called by a racial epithet, police said.

After running a short distance, Jennings slipped and fell and was accidentally struck by another pickup truck, Hill said. The driver of that truck was not charged.

The girlfriend was not injured. The first truck, whose occupants started the incident, sped away, Hill said.

Policy change urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bipartisan group of senators pressed the Bush administration Friday to make more changes in its Cambodia policy, including lifting a trade embargo and opening direct talks with the communist government.

Lawmakers at a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee hearing said administration moves to rescind recognition for a three-party rebel coalition fighting the Cambodian government won't slow a resurgence by the Khmer Rouge rebels.

"The Khmer Rouge ... remain the primary beneficiaries of our policy," said Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass.

An economic embargo imposed in 1975, when the Khmer Rouge were in power, is weakening the government that replaced that regime, Kerry said.

The Khmer Rouge ruled Cambodia from 1975 to 1979, undertaking a massive social experiment that forcibly scattered city dwellers through the countryside and resulted in the deaths of more than a million countrymen from execution, starvation and disease.

Satellite launch delayed

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A leak forced postponement of Friday's liftoff of an Atlas rocket with a satellite that will illuminate Earth's invisible magnetic field in a series of dramatic displays resembling the northern lights.

Liftoff had been scheduled for 3:33 p.m. from Cape Canaveral Air Force Station. But the launch was delayed more than an hour because of the inability to start a compressor that furnishes gaseous nitrogen to the rocket.

NASA spokesman George Diller said it was not immediately certain whether another launch attempt would be made Saturday. An announcement was not expected until late Friday or early Saturday.

Times' byline bogus

NEW YORK (AP) — Some readers of The New York Times were treated Friday to the debut of a writer they never knew existed: Fake Byline.

Byline's first — and, the Times hopes, last — appearance in the paper came on page A8, where a story about a Texas-Mexico ferry appeared under bold type declaring "By Fake Byline." In smaller type, it said, "Special to The New York Times."

"The story was not supposed to have a byline on it, but our computer format doesn't work without one," explained Times spokeswoman Nancy Nielsen. "We plug in 'Fake Byline' so the format works. It's supposed to be deleted, but ..."

The byline did not appear in all editions of the Times, so it was not known how many readers saw the error, she said.

FBI probe expanding

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — A federal grand jury demanded campaign spending records from all 46 state senators Friday, expanding the scope of an investigation into allegations that lawmakers traded votes for cash.

FBI agents delivered the grand jury subpoenas to the Senate Ethics Committee two days after asking for similar campaign records from all 124 House members. Those records were turned over Thursday.

The probe involves an FBI sting operation in which a lobbyist working undercover offered legislators cash in exchange for votes on pari-mutuel betting legislation in the General Assembly. Agents videotaped some lawmakers accepting money, a source who requested anonymity told The Associated Press.

"It will cut deep — both parties are involved. ... It crosses everything," an unidentified source told The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer for an article published Friday.

Man held for Bush threat

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — An unemployed New Hampshire man accused of threatening to shoot President Bush was ordered held without bond Friday at least until Bush concluded his visit to Cheyenne.

Gregory Joseph Hill, 34, made his initial appearance in U.S. District Court here after his arrest Thursday evening on a charge of making a threat to take the life of the president of the United States.

According to a complaint filed in U.S. District Court, Hill, who recently moved to Fremont, N.H., from Lowell, Mass., twice told a man in a Cheyenne bar on Wednesday that, "I'm here to shoot the president.'

GOP names spokesman

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican Chairman Lee Atwater named his best friend as chief spokesman for the party on Friday, saying the GOP needs a high-profile presence that he can't provide while he's fighting a brain tumor.

Atwater, 39, said GOP consultant Charles Black would serve as his and the party's spokesman until he can return to work fulltime.

Delegation's 'dean' retiring

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Rep. Lindy Boggs, the powerful, plantation-born dean of Louisiana's congressional delegation, announced Friday she won't run again for the seat she and her late husband held for 46 years.

"With my husband, I have devoted half a century to one of the most noble pursuits I know — public service. ... Today I am announcing that this chapter in my service to the public is ending," Mrs. Boggs told 150 colleagues and supporters including former Archbishop Philip Hannan and former mayor Vic Schiro.

Mrs. Boggs, her daughter Cokie Roberts, and politicians including Mayor Sidney Barthelemy and Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., spoke in a Tulane University building named after the Democratic congresswoman.

The room was small, and less than half the audience was seated. Another crowd milled about and chatted in the lobby outside. A few people stood outside, looking through the floor-to-ceiling windows that made up two walls of the room, so they could see Mrs. Boggs.

Mrs. Boggs, 74, wouldn't discuss details of her decision to retire after 17½ years in Washington.

"I don't think I can share with you all of the things that ran through my mind, because some of them are very personal," she said.

It had been widely reported that she wanted to spend more time with her daughter, Princeton, N.J., Mayor Barbara Sigmund, who is suffering from cancer.

Mrs. Boggs did not refer to Ms. Sigmund's illness. Asked if she was retiring because of the strain of travel between New Jersey, Washington and New Orleans, Mrs. Boggs said "You've been talking to some of my family!" but added, "No."

She did say the decision was a wrenching one because so many people offered to help run her office and campaign so she could take care of family obligations. And some of her colleagues appeared to refer obliquely to Ms. Sigmund's illness.

"With the dignity and grace that marked her outstanding career in the Congress, Lindy Boggs has announced her retirement from the Congress. Words cannot adequately describe how much all of us will miss Lindy, or the regret we feel at the reasons for her retirement," said House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo.

"She'll be missed beyond my ability to say. There is no member whom I've served with in 25 years whose departure from Congress I more sincerely or deeply regret than Lindy Boggs," said House Speaker Thomas Foley. "With intelligence, grace, charm, commitment, compassion, she has served the people of her district, the state of Louisiana and the United States with extraordinary dedication."

Mrs. Boggs took over the seat in March 1973 after winning a special election to succeed her husband, the powerful House majority leader, whose plane disappeared during a flight over Alaska six months earlier.

Hale Boggs had won the seat in 1940, as a young lawyer. He lost a re-election bid in 1942 but reclaimed the job in 1946 after returning from military service, beginning a string of 22 straight victories by him or his wife.

Mrs. Boggs, the only white representing a majority-black U.S. House district, said she hasn't decided whether to endorse anyone in the campaign for her seat. In a brief interview, she said she makes endorsements only "in specific runoffs or where there's a huge difference between the candidates."

"I'm enthusiastically for Bennett Johnston," she added.

Johnston is running for re-election this year against David Duke, an ex-Ku Klux Klan leader running as a Republican, and state Sen. Ben Bagert, the GOP's endorsed candidate and sponsor of Louisiana's new workfare law.

Mrs. Boggs' announcement was interrupted by applause when she said, "I am proud of my small role in opening doors to blacks and women....

"The Civil Rights and Voting Rights Acts that Hale and I supported were key to this progress, but so were the educational and economic opportunities we helped to create."

Dioxin-laced town to be cleaned up

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Federal and state environmental officials Friday announced an agreement intended to pave the way for cleanup of the dioxin-contaminated ghost town of Times Beach after seven years of study and negotiations.

Morris Kay, regional director of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, announced at a news conference that a cleanup agreement had been reached with Syntex Agribusiness Inc., a chemical and animal health company.

The settlement is subject to a 30-day public comment period and then approval by U.S. District Judge John F. Nangle. But both Kay and Syntex spokesman Ray Forrester said preliminary work could begin within days of the judge's decision.

Under the settlement, Syntex will build and later demolish an incinerator to burn the tons of dioxin-tainted soil from Times Beach and 27 other sites in eastern Missouri contaminated in the 1970s when waste oil containing dioxin was sprayed on roads to keep dust down.

Under the agreeement, Syntex must pay the government $10 million over five years to cover part of the cost of prosecuting the case. In return, all federal and state lawsuits against the company will be dismissed.

Times Beach, about 20 miles southwest of St. Louis, has been deserted since 1983, when the federal government bought up all 801 homes and businesses and moved the people out.

Announcement of the settlement brought angry words from opponents of the incinerator plan, who criticized the secrecy of the negotiations and who believe the incinerator will be unsafe and will become a permanent fixture.

"We will have created the central hazardous waste site of the United States if this goes through," said state Rep. Jim Murphy, who with several other opponents showed up at the news conference.

Dioxin, an unwanted byproduct in the manufacture of chemicals like disinfectant, is suspected of causing disorders of the nervous system, liver, kidneys and bladder. It has been found to cause cancer in laboratory animals.

EPA chief defends Bush

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Environmental chief William Reilly, on a Western tour, defended his boss, George Bush, as an environmental president and called growing criticism from conservationists "outrageous."

In answer to new complaints against the president for hanging back on a commitment to reducing greenhouse gases at the Houston economic summit and waffling on logging reductions to protect the northern spotted owl, Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Reilly said the administration has made real strides.

New legislation and agreements on clean air, acid rain controls, tree planting, banning the import of elephant ivory, halting most asbestos use and reducing ozone-depleting chemicals must be credited to the president, Reilly said.

"I think it's outrageous some of the things that have been said about the president. But I suppose it's a measure of the expectations that environmentalists brought to this administration."

Reilly met with reporters here as part of his tour, which included including an inspection of Prince William Sound, 16 months after the massive oil spill from the Exxon Valdez in the Gulf of Alaska.

The Wilderness Society and the National Wildlife Federation, two conservative groups with millions of members, have chastised Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan for suggesting that jobs get more consideration before taking action to protect endangered or threatened species.

Reilly supports a measure in the Bush pesticide bill that would preempt states' authority to pass tighter standards for chemicals in food. More restrictive states like California would have to win EPA approval.

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — High schoolers who beam sexually charged stares at classmates or exchange snippets of intimate gossip could fall afoul of new guidelines to curb sexual harassment among students.

The rules are designed to make school a more comfortable place, the principal said recently.

"We had an idea that we should have a clear statement in our student handbook about sexual harassment," said Ilene Levitt, principal of the Amherst-Pelham Regional High School.

"I think in 1970 people would have turned up their eyebrows. This is 1990 and I think students understand."

Sexual harassment at the high school generally takes the form of "little things," said Bray, 17. But hearty flirting by a "macho man" can be upsetting, he said, "especially to girls that aren't popular and don't know these people. I'm sure it made them very uneasy."

Another incoming senior, 17-year-old Jennifer Emery, said she was surprised about the policy because she had never considered sexual harassment a problem at the school.

"Plenty of people have given me strange looks and said strange things to me but it's all been a joke," she said.

At the National Association of Secondary School Principals, spokeswoman Maryellen Parker said she had not heard of a high school having a similar policy, but it is an issue the association has promoted for some time.

> 'It's long overdue.'
> — Maryellen Parker, National Assoc. of Secondary School Principles

Sexual harassment "is a widespread problem but it receives little attention from administrators or teachers so it's good to see that there are policies that are beginning to occur. It's long overdue," Parker said in a telephone interview from Reston, Va.

The policy, which has been approved in principle by school officials, lists several behaviors that would qualify as sexual harassment. Among them: staring or leering with sexual overtones, spreading sexual gossip, making unwanted sexual comments, exerting pressure for sexual activity and making unwanted physical contact of a sexual nature.

The guidelines will be printed in student handbooks this fall, pending a few changes in language that do not affect the substance of the draft, said School Committee Chairwoman Joan Hanson.

"It's something that several people have felt for a long time," Hanson said. "Times have changed."

The real Baron's mother calls him "The John" and he says his children look at him with new respect and his business partners toyed with the idea of renaming their management consulting firm Greenberg, Trump, Simon & Miller.

Trump acknowledged during testimony in a civil lawsuit in New York last week that he has used the name John Baron on occasion.

In a letter, Baron wrote Trump and said that the "use of the alias has made my mother very proud.

"I ask only that you consider inviting my mother, the estimable Betty Baron, to lunch in New York as a way of thanking her. After all, it was she who came up with the name by which we both have prospered," he wrote.

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., chairs a session of a House subcommittee Friday morning on Capitol Hill. The House ethics committee voted Friday that Barney's relationship with a male prostitute 'reflected discredit on the House' and voted to reprimand him next week.

Frank faces reprimand; Some want his expulsion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House ethics committee's recommendation Friday that Rep. Barney Frank be reprimanded for some of his help for a male prostitute prompted some Republicans to call for stiffer punishment, even expulsion.

"Barney Frank will certainly not consider it a slap on the wrist," said ethics committee Chairman Julian Dixon, D-Calif., at a news conference outlining the committee's findings. "The committee certainly does not consider it a slap on the wrist."

But Republicans said they would seek a vote to expel the Massachusetts Democrat or censure him for his official actions on behalf of male prostitute Stephen L. Gobie.

Frank, a five-term liberal, said in a Newton, Mass., news conference: "I accept the judgement of the committee report."

The ethics committee unanimously reported that aspects of Rep. Barney Frank's relationship with a male prostitute "reflected discredit upon the House" and recommended that he be reprimanded before the full House next week.

But the panel also sharply criticized the credibility of Gobie, Frank's chief accuser, saying that much of his testimony had been contradicted when investigators checked it out. Gobie's lack of credibility weighed heavily in the committee's conclusions, the report stated.

The panel also gave Frank credit for expressing regret for his actions. Its report quotes the congressman as testifying:

"I will tell you again, with chagrin, that I did not handle the pressures of having a public life, of being a closeted gay man, nearly as well as I should have. I do think I managed to confine most of the damage to myself. But when you are in a public position, inevitably something spills over."

In his news conference, he said, "I think I am justified in saying that this report bears out that ... I told the truth."

"I don't think anyone who has judged the way this process has gone, I don't think they'd say they're being soft on me."

He noted that work of the committee led to the resignation of former speaker Jim Wright of Texas: "This has been a tough group."

Gobie, meanwhile, told Boston radio station WEEI he was pleased the committee was not harder on Frank.

Frank paid Gobie $80 for sex and then hired him in July 1985 as a housekeeper and driver, paying Gobie with personal funds. Frank says he ended the relationship in August 1987 after learning that Gobie was operating a sex-for-hire ring out of Frank's Capitol Hill apartment.

The panel, which has been investigating the case since Sept. 11, unanimously concluded that Frank improperly fixed parking tickets — some of them accumulated by Gobie using Frank's car on personal business. And the panel said Frank "set in motion" a memo containing misleading information about Gobie sent to a Virginia prosecutor and "which could have affected Mr. Gobie's probation."

The committee rejected Gobie's accusation that Frank knew of a prostitution ring that Gobie ran out of Frank's Capitol Hill apartment. And the 12-member panel said it found no evidence indicating that Frank and Gobie had sex in the House gymnasium, as Gobie had alleged.

The recommended reprimand is one of the milder sanctions available to the House. Censure, the next most severe punishment, would require that Frank stand in front of his colleagues while a resolution condemning his activities is read.

"Every member is going to have to vote his or her conscience," said Rep. William Dannemeyer, R-Calif., who said he would propose that the House expel Frank. "The conduct of Mr. Frank failed to meet the standard all of us must, that we reflect creditably on the House of Representatives ... We live in a fishbowl in this business."

Republican Rep. Henry Hyde of Illinois said he expected there would also be a motion to censure Frank.

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., predicted that the lasting damage to Frank from the 10-month probe would be minimal.

"Barney Frank remains one of the most effective and, I think throughout the House, highly regarded members here," Foley said. "His abilities, his intelligence, his capacities are well respected and he's going to continue to be an extremely important and significant member."

Barry bodyguard recounts 1988 trip

WASHINGTON (AP) — A security guard for Marion Barry testified Friday that he saw no drugs during the mayor's 1988 Virgin Islands trip.

The testimony by police Detective Ulysses Walltower contrasted sharply with that of prosecution witnesses who described heavy drug use and drinking by Barry during the four-day visit.

However, Walltower said under cross-examination by the prosecution that he was not with Barry during much of the time convicted drug dealer Charles Lewis has said he used drugs with the mayor.

Lewis testified earlier in the mayor's cocaine possession and perjury trial that Barry asked him on the first afternoon of the Virgin Islands trip to buy crack cocaine. The request came when there was no one else in the room, Lewis said.

Walltower, testifying on the second day of the defense's case, said that on that afternoon he accompanied Barry's son, Christopher, and the boy's companion to a nearby beach.

"They went down several times, for 30 or 45 minutes," Walltower said. "Then they would go back to the room, mess around, and go back down to the beach."

Walltower also said he spent little time with the mayor in the evenings — periods during which Lewis and other witnesses have said drugs were used.

Lewis testified that he bought $300 worth of crack cocaine that he, the mayor and others smoked during Barry's four-day visit.

Walltower, a 20-year police veteran, also said he saw Barry in the company of only two women. Lewis testified that he brought three women to Barry's hotel room.

One of those women, Linda Maynard, testified that Barry sexually assaulted her. Another, Zena Mattias, said she rebuffed Barry's sexual advances.

Walltower, who said he did not now the names of either woman he saw, also testified that he thought one of them was with Lewis.

Defense lawyer R. Kenneth Mundy said Friday he will show a videotape he said places Barry in a government meeting at a time when a government witness has testified she delivered drugs to the mayor in Washington.

One possession charge against Barry stems from the testimony of Lydia Reid Pearson, who said she delivered cocaine — and a city job application — to Barry at a government office building Sept. 7, 1988.

Mundy said the tape is of a meeting between Barry and top fire department officials that occurred at the time Pearson said she met with the mayor.

Barry, 54, has pleaded innocent to 10 misdemeanor cocaine possession charges, one misdemeanor cocaine conspiracy count and three felony charges of lying to a grand jury about his alleged drug use.

Advocates press for right-to-die measure

WASHINGTON (AP) — Julianne Delio said her husband made her promise she would never let him live in a vegetative state connected to artificial life support machines.

Keeping that promise took more than a year of court battles, cost Delio her job and left the 36-year-old New York woman emotionally brutalized, she told a Senate subcommittee on Friday.

"You cannot imagine the psychological trauma involved in pleading for the death of the person you love most in this entire world," she said.

Delio urged lawmakers to pass a bill that would help inform people of their right to determine their own medical treatment through such things as living wills and other advance directives that legally enable others to speak for them if they cannot speak for themselves.

But an official of the Health Care Financing Administration, which handles Medicaid and Medicare, said the bill could allow some patients to be pressed into making a hasty choice.

Living wills moved to the forefront of medical issues with the Supreme Court's decision last month denying the family of Nancy Cruzan their request to have her feeding tubes removed. Cruzan is permanently unconscious but is not terminally ill and could live for years in this condition, doctors say.

— Julianne Delio, testifying before a Senate subcommittee Friday

Julianne and her husband, Daniel, were well educated, both with doctorate degrees and working in the medical field. But he, like Nancy Cruzan, did not have a living will and had never put his wishes in writing, Delio said.

"We were young and enjoying a happy life," she said. "Who would have known what was to happen to us?"

In 1986, when Danny Delio was 33 he underwent a minor operation. Because of a problem with the anesthesia, he was left brain dead, permanently unconscious, she said.

"His life was essentially over," she said of her husband, a Ph.D. in exercise physiology, an expert in cardiac rehabilitation and, until then, a marathon runner.

She and her husband had had extensive discussions about vegetative states, and "he made me promise never to let him live even one day in such a condition," she said.

She requested that his life-support systems be shut off and he be allowed to die, but the Westchester County Medical Center refused and she filed a lawsuit. Shortly after that, she was fired from her job as an assistant professor of medicine at New York Medical College, which is affiliated with the hospital where her husband was being treated.

An appeals court eventually agreed with Delio and ordered the hospital to terminate treatment or transfer her husband to another facility that would abide by her wishes. Ten days after he was transferred, he died in her arms.

"Even though the court system eventually worked for us, we were brutalized by it," she said. "No one should ever have to go to court under these circumstances. Court is the last place a family belongs when they are facing their darkest hours."

Delio urged the Senate Finance subcommittee on Medicare and long-term care to approve legislation that would require the federal Department of Health and Human Services to develop an educational program to give people information about their options in determining their own medical treatment.

Hospitals, nursing homes and other facilities that provide services to Medicare and Medicaid patients would be obligated to provide such information as a condition for participating in these programs, under the bill.

"What this issue is about is people's ability to make their wishes known ... so when they can no longer speak for themselves, they will already have spoken," said Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., sponsor of the bill.

"This is a communications problem," he said. "It's an issue of letting people know ... how they can take steps so that worst nightmare doesn't come to pass."

Rep. Sander Levin, D-Mich., who is sponsoring similar legislation in the House, said the bill "is about empowerment of the individual. Without knowledge there is no power."

Gail Wilensky, who heads the Health Care Financing Administration, testified that while she agrees with the goal of educating people about living wills and other advance directives, she opposed making such activities a federal requirement.

She said the bill does not provide adequate safeguards for poor and vulnerable patients, who could be pressured into making hasty decisions. Decisions about living wills should be made before someone gets to a hospital, she said.

Wilensky said awareness of living wills was "not directly and immediately related to quality of care," and therefore should not be made a requirement for participation in the Medicare or Medicaid programs.

Delio took strong exception to that saying, "if (informing patients of their rights) is not quality of care, I don't know what is."

Ken found in Barbie garb

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Barbie and Ken dolls have changed through the years, but a woman here believes she's purchased a one-of-a-kind — a Ken doll dressed in Barbie's clothing.

When Carina Guillot and her 12-year-old daughter, Jocelyn, shopped in a toy store Wednesday night, they were shocked to find a "My First Ken" doll clad in a purple tank top and lace apron over a turquoise and purple skirt.

"My daughter was looking at the Barbies. I was looking at the Kens," said Mrs. Guillot. "When I looked at this one, I said, 'Oh, my God, now we have a crossed-dressed Ken.'"

Toys R Us store director Greg Warren said Thursday he and other employees examined the cardboard package and concluded its seal was intact. Employees found no duplicates, Warren said.
