Becoming a new parent is a stressful situation for both husband and wife, requiring both understanding and communication, says columnist Jim May.

Filipino troops fire on mutineers

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Troops loyal to President Corazon Aquino pounded mutineers with air strikes and mortar fire today in an attempt to quell the most serious coup attempt of her administration.

Mrs. Aquino was safe, but her only son was wounded in the combat.

The rebels, who numbered in the hundreds, had seized key military installations. By nightfall, loyalist forces had gained the upper hand in and around Manila, but the rebels were reported entrenching in Cebu City, the country's second largest metropolis.

Chief of Staff Gen. Fidel Ramos fired the Cebu area constabulary commander, Brig. Gen. Edgardo Abenina, after hearing of his support for the mutiny.

Military and hospital sources said at least 23 people were killed and 175 wounded, including Mrs. Aquino's son, in clashes that began about 1 a.m. when rebels led by a former aide of Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile launched attacks near the presidential palace, military garrisons and broadcast stations.

The rebels, who called themselves "idealistic young officers," seized a half dozen media and military facilities around Manila and a constabulary garrison in Pampanga province.

Marines and elite scout rangers backed by air strikes by World War II vintage bombers stormed the armed forces general staff headquarters at Camp Aguinaldo in suburban Quezon City, which rebels had seized early in the day.

The three-story armed forces general headquarters building was heavily damaged before the rebels withdrew to the eastern end of the sprawling camp. It was still burning by nightfall.

Armed Forces spokesman Col. Honesto Isleta said six soldiers were killed and 39 troops and civilians were wounded in the assault on Camp Aguinaldo. There was no breakdown on rebel and government losses. Ramos said a total of 350 mutineers had been arrested and he expected 200 more to give up within a few hours.

Ramos said troops set up roadblocks around the city to apprehend mutineers still at large.

Hundreds of civilians gathered near the main gate of Camp Aguinaldo and cheered pro-government troops as they launched their attack. Bursts of automatic gunfire sent them scampering. Explosions, either from misdirected mortars or air strikes, rocked streets in the area and sent huge chunks of concrete flying into the air.

In Cebu City, 350 miles south of Manila, local reporters said most military commanders joined the mutiny. Garrisons flew the Philippine flag upside down, a sign of mutiny support, while troops disarmed private security guards and took over municipal buildings.

Cebu City Mayor Jose Cuenco issued a statement saying the military had placed him under house arrest.

In a nationally televised speech, Mrs. Aquino, facing the gravest crisis of her 18-month administration, said her 27-year-old son, Benigno III, was wounded and three companions were killed when they were caught up in the fighting while returning to the presidential residence.

The dead included many other civilians caught in the crossfire, including two news photographers — a Filipino and a New Zealander.

Mrs. Aquino ordered Ramos to "terminate this mutiny immediately" and ruled out any concessions to "these traitors."

Associated Press correspondent James Hatton, reporting from outside Camp Aguinaldo, said two air force planes mounted air strikes against the rebels. Hatton said he counted at least nine bombs dropped on the rebels.

Tape of questioning released

Judge says closing of Painter session 'unjustified'

By RICK BROWN
and RAMONA NYE
Staff Writers

A peek behind closed Commissioners' Court doors revealed that Sheriff Gary Painter Monday underwent a close grilling so members could find out "what the devil is going on," in the words of Commissioner Win Brown.

A tape of the court's executive session — called to gather information about the Aug. 19 Sheriff's Department sting that netted a Portuguese national accused of helping Iran obtain arms — became available to the public Thursday.

Opening of the closed session was the result of a Midland Reporter-Telegram lawsuit filed Wednesday and heard Thursday by retired District Judge Perry D. Pickett.

The judge, who said he listened to the tapes "very, very carefully," found no justification for the closed session.

The 47-year-old quarry in the sting, Victor Fonseca of Lisbon, Portugal, remained in Midland County jail today under state charges of engaging in organized criminal activity — a second-degree felony.

The tape revealed new details about the sting, including a U.S. Army intelligence offer to conduct the operation on military property — and contribute actual army hardware to the ruse.

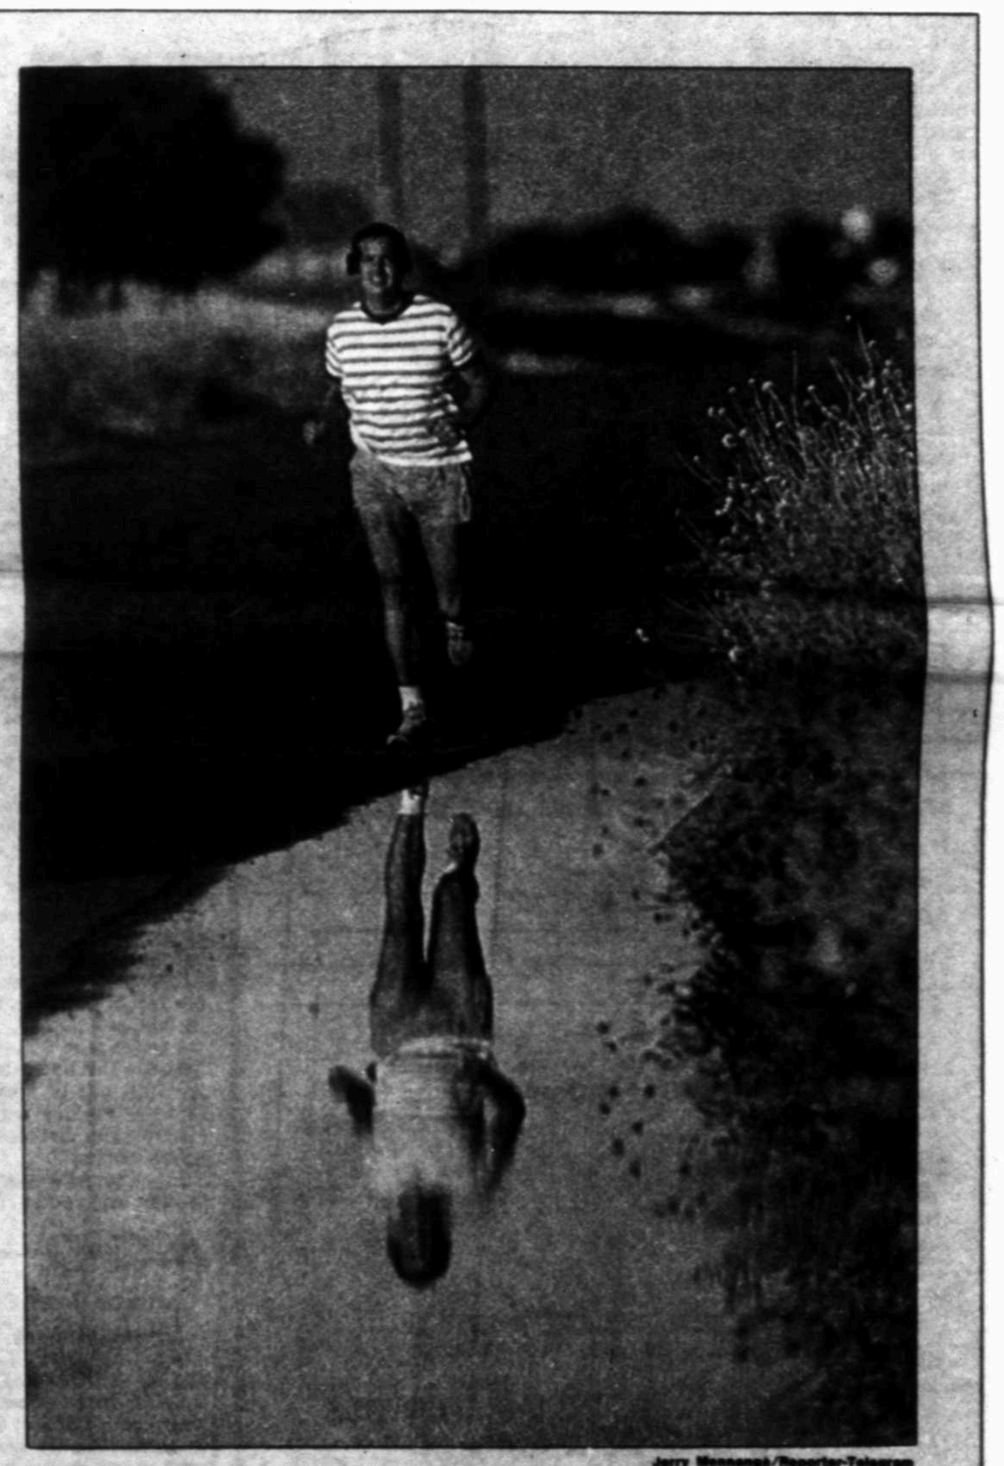

Painter said Thursday that the offer — advanced more than two months ago — came too late in the game.

Arms dealers already had been prepared for the plan to culminate in Midland County, and changing the location might have caused delay or scared targets off entirely, he said.

With the go-ahead to pull the scam in Midland County, Army officials said they could not allow equipment to leave their possession, but added, "Anything you need, just let us know," Painter quoted.

The tapes also revealed that Fonseca in his interrogation is "giving us a book," Painter said, and several national law enforcement agencies — including the Army Criminal Investigations Divisions and military intelligence — have expressed interest in interrogating the man.

Contra plan meets favorable reaction

LOS ANGELES (AP) — With President Reagan pledging not to let the Contra movement die, the White House is reacting favorably to a proposal that military aid for the Nicaraguan rebels be placed in escrow while peace is sought.

Six rebel leaders presented the plan to Reagan in a 40-minute meeting Thursday as the president continued a series of meetings on public issues during a five-day break in his ranch vacation.

He delivered an address on East-West relations Wednesday and was meeting today with a delegation headed by Illinois Gov. James Thompson supporting his nomination of federal appeals court Judge Robert H. Bork to the Supreme Court.

Asked about Bork's prospects for confirmation, presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, "We're very optimistic, think his chances are very good. He's winning solid support with his meetings and sessions with congressional leaders."

Bork faces strong opposition from some Senate liberals, however, when confirmation hearings begin Sept. 15 before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The aid plan presented by the Nicaraguan rebel leaders calls for Congress to approve an unspecified amount of aid, divided into humanitarian and military funds.

The humanitarian aid would be available immediately after the new fiscal year begins Oct. 1, but the military funds could not be spent unless it is determined that Nicaragua's leftist government is failing to live up to commitments in the peace plan it signed Aug. 7 in Guatemala City.

Alfredo Cesar Aquirre, one of the rebel leaders, said it would be up to the administration and Congress to decide how to make such a determination. Fitzwater said that was among details that remained to be worked out.

"We find the resistance proposal to be a constructive, forthcoming approach that we can generally support," Fitzwater said. "However, we will need to consider the technical aspects of the proposal before making a final decision."

Rebel leader Adolfo Calero quoted Reagan as saying of Nicaragua's Sandinista government, "We won't let them get away with a fake democracy."

The Contra leaders were going to Dallas today to meet with House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, principal author of a peace proposal the administration has embraced along with the Guatemala City plan.

MCHD appoints two new minority board members

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Ending months of controversy fueled by Midland minority rights groups, Midland County Hospital District directors appointed two new members — both minorities — to their board Thursday.

The two new directors are Assistant Midland County District Attorney Michael Williams and Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce President Sam Flores.

The five other MCHD directors are President Frank Cahoon, Gene Abbott, Barry Williamson, Mrs. Pat Estes and Mrs. Margaret Purvis.

Two other candidates were nominated for the positions but did not get selected — Midland family practitioner Viola Coleman and former Midland Memorial Hospital and Midland Independent School District trustee James Ramsoure.

"We were looking at four excellent candidates. The nice thing is that they all said they understand the hospital is trying to broaden community input," Cahoon said Thursday.

The decision — made after 45 minutes of executive session Thursday — put to an end controversy which has brewed on the subject since early spring.

Police shooting of robbery suspect under investigation

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A Midland police officer remained on administrative leave of absence today pending the outcome of an investigation into the shooting of an 18-year-old man suspected in the early morning robbery of a downtown convenience store.

"Our shooting team is investigating the incident under standard procedure," said Cpl. Jim White, the police department's public information officer.

White said Patrolman Paul Stroop, a four-year veteran of the force, was placed on leave of absence pending the outcome of the investigation after he accidentally stumbled upon a robbery in progress just after midnight at Kent Kwik Convenience Store, 2910 W. Big Spring St.

White said Stroop allegedly shot the suspect, Jesse A. Lopez, 1107 E. Pecan Ave., in the forearm after repeated attempts to convince the man to drop a "small chrome semi-automatic pistol."

The man was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital where he remained in stable condition this morning under police protection, White said.

According to police reports, the man entered the store and allegedly pulled the revolver on the store clerk, demanding money from the cash register. The suspect then forced the clerk and a customer to hand over their wallets.

The report said Stroop stumbled upon the scene when he drove into the convenience store parking lot and saw a woman running from the store shouting a robbery was taking place.

When Stroop entered the building, he noticed a customer struggling with the suspect. The suspect broke free, stood up and allegedly pointed the pistol at Stroop, who fired one round from his revolver striking the suspect in the forearm, the report said.

Charges of aggravated robbery and aggravated assault on a police officer were expected to be filed today against the suspect, White said.

Poindexter plans to leave Navy in face of indictment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former national security adviser John M. Poindexter, the pivotal witness in the Iran-Contra investigation, plans to resign from the Navy this fall to avoid having the service tainted by an expected indictment, according to Pentagon sources and a close associate.

As he requested the resignation, however, Poindexter injected what is bound to be an element of controversy by asking that he be retired at the three-star vice admiral rank he held while at the White House, instead of the two-star rear admiral title he reverted to after leaving as the affair unraveled last November.

Such a request would put President Reagan on the spot, since he would have to approve the move, as would the Senate. Poindexter testified that he shielded Reagan from knowledge of the diversion of Iran arms sale money to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

Some members of the congressional investigating committees say they have lingering doubts about Poindexter's story, and that the question of whether Reagan knew about the diversion may never be put to rest.

The Navy on Thursday confirmed that "Admiral Poindexter has announced his intention to retire" but refused to give details.

Pentagon sources, however, said Poindexter disclosed his decision to top officials Wednesday, specifying a desire to step down effective Oct. 1, after nearly 30 years service.

Reagan offers Aquino our support

Soliders take cover behind sand bags Friday as other loyal troopers prepare to dislodge mutinous soldiers holding suburban Camp Aguinaldo, headquarters near Manila of the Armed Forces of the Philippines.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today pledged "America's unqualified support" to the Philippine government of President Corazon Aquino, which was fighting for its survival against an attempted coup by mutinous troops.

"I am profoundly concerned by reports of elements of the armed forces of the Philippines who have engaged in military action against the democratic government of President Aquino," Reagan said from Los Angeles in a statement read by White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater. "The United States condemns this attempt at extra-constitutional action. I wish to make absolutely clear America's unqualified support of President Aquino."

Reagan's statement came as troops led by midlevel officers attacked and battled forces loyal to Mrs. Aquino today in a siege of the presidential palace and key military and media facilities. It was the gravest challenge yet to her 18-month-old administration.

The State Department, which had a work group monitoring the situation overnight, said in Washington it was confident that Mrs. Aquino "will be able to deal with the situation."

"The United States strongly supports the Aquino government and the democratic process and has condemned all previous coup attempts and efforts to destabilize her government," State Department spokeswoman Nancy Beck said.

A State Department spokesman who insisted on anonymity said early today that the U.S. Embassy in Manila appeared to be safe.

"We've been in touch with our embassy," he said. "They haven't said anything to us about being under attack or anything like that."

"We have no reports of any harm whatsoever to any Americans," he said. Although the embassy has advised Americans in the area to use common sense and avoid the troubled areas, no travel advisory has been issued by the department, the official said.

Lt. Cmdr. John Carmen, a Pentagon spokesman, said he had no information on the status of American military personnel in the Philippines. "In general we don't comment on what the alert status is," he added.

The United States operates six military bases in the Philippines, including Clark Air Base and the naval facility at Subic Bay. The U.S. Embassy in the Philippines is one of the largest in the world, the State Department official said, because it hosts a number of agencies for the Asian region.

On Wednesday, the new U.S. ambassador, Nicholas Platt, presented his credentials to Mrs. Aquino.

"I look forward to working with you to ensure that our security partnership remains vigorous, promotes mutual security and continues to contribute to stability in Southeast Asia," Platt told Mrs. Aquino. "I recognize this will require a lot of hard work and understanding on my part."

The five-year executive agreement allowing the United States to keep its bases in the Philippines expires in 1991. Mrs. Aquino has not said whether she would let the bases stay after that.

The Philippine Constitution, approved by referendum in February, stipulates that U.S. operation of the bases after 1991 must be covered by a treaty approved by two-thirds votes in the senates of the two countries.

Deposed Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos was allowed to live in Hawaii after his ouster in February 1986.

In July, the State Department warned Marcos against engaging in an apparent plot to topple the Aquino government and barred him from leaving Hawaii. The warning was based on tapes of a conversation Marcos had with an arms dealer, a U.S. official said at the time.

Marcos' former lover indicted for fraud

Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — A federal grand jury has indicted the former lover of deposed Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos and her husband for bank fraud, bankruptcy fraud and making false statements on loan applications.

The case is "one of the most massive cases of fraud against financial institutions in the history of Los Angeles," U.S. Attorney Robert Bonner said.

The indictment charges that Dovie Beams de Villagran and her husband, Sergio Villagran, obtained more than $18 million from 13 banks and savings and loans in Southern California by submitting fake documents that inflated their worth.

The couple also are charged with hiding $6 million worth of possessions from the bankruptcy court, including antique furniture, paintings and a Chinese ceramics collection. Bonner said authorities don't know what happened to those items. "They seem to have disappeared," he said.

The couple poured some of the $18 million into their home, used a portion to pay other loans and "some we don't know what happened to it," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Ronald Nessim.

The Villagrans, who once lived a life of luxury in a 30-room mansion, were arrested Wednesday at a small rented home in San Gabriel, Calif. They are being held on $250,000 bail.

Villagran, 55, is a former B-movie actress whose two-year affair with Marcos was described in a book called "Marcos Lovey Dovie."

Dovie Beams de Villagran, 55, is a former B-movie acress whose two-year affair with Ferdinand Marcos was described in the book "Marcos Lovey Dovie."

She and her husband, 51, once owned 26 pieces of property, including 19 homes in Beverly Hills.

Richard Kendall, an attorney for the Philippine government, said investigators have not found any hard evidence to tie the Villagrans' land holdings to Marcos.

The indictment charges the Villagrans provided the financial institutions with false federal tax returns and false financial statements about their personal worth and two businesses.

Among the banks that were burned by the Villagrans were some of California's largest, including Bank of America, Security Pacific National Bank, Imperial Bank and Lloyds Bank.

Dovie Villagran, charged with 42 counts, faces a penalty of 141 years imprisonment and a fine of $10.5 million. Her husband, charged with 41 counts, faces 136 years imprisonment and a fine of $10.25 million.

As she was being led out of the court, Villigran claimed the court-appointed bankruptcy trustee should be charged with crimes against her.

Private radio station DZRH said helicopters fired on the Camelot Hotel in Quezon City after mutineers took over the building.

The mutiny was led by Col. Gregorio Honasan, former security chief for Enrile. Mrs. Aquino fired Enrile as defense minister after a coup attempt last November.

Col. Oscar Florindo, secretary of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, quoted Col. Frank Acosta, a captured rebel officer, as saying Honasan took off from Camp Aguinaldo in a helicopter bound for an unknown destination.

Honasan was a key figure in the Feb. 1986 mutiny that led to the downfall of President Ferdinand Marcos and brought Mrs. Aquino to power. He told reporters early Friday that the attacks were aimed at restoring national unity and he accused Mrs. Aquino of losing "political will" in face of numerous national problems.

Efforts to contact Enrile were unsuccessful. His telephone was not working and guards turned away reporters from his home.

"We are quite confident that we shall be able to bring normalcy to the metro Manila area by early (Saturday) morning," Ramos told reporters. "We are now involved in some mopping up operations."

Mrs. Aquino's government has weathered several coup attempts and conspiraces since Marcos fled to Hawaii on Feb. 26, 1986.

Marcos said from Honolulu, where he lives in exile with his wife, Imelda, that he wasn't involved in the uprising.

"Everyone knows this took everybody by surprise, even those in Manila," he said in a telephone interview today with NBC. "I still maintain that even if we did not use violence, the government of Madame Aquino will collapse."

Marcos said he had not talked to rebel leaders or fighters.

"I do not want to make it look like I am very eager to go back as president of the Philippines," he said."I am very eager to help our country. If by that, there is need for me to assume the legitimate presidency from which I was taken away forcibly, then I would certainly be happy ... to serve."

While transcripts of Fonseca's questioning also have been received by the Presidential Commission on Organized Crime, Painter said Thursday he could not comment on other federal investigative agencies eager to speak to the man.

Also interested in the case are British legal authorities connected with the Thatcher administration, Painter told the commissioners.

The sheriff had explained that British arms middlemen, who originally contacted undercover deputies about the sale and were pursuing a vendetta were anxious to see the Iranian connection broken.

District Attorney Al Schorre — who also attended the closed meeting — told the court he was unsure whether federal authorities would take charge of Fonseca before the state has a chance to present its case in court.

"Don't they have the right to do that?" asked Brown.

"If we let them," said Painter. "There ain't much a way to prevent it."

However, Painter Thursday was "confident" that local prosecutors will have first bat, he said.

Court members speculated that if Fonseca pleaded guilty to the charge, he may never have a public trial.

In the course of the 45-minute fact excavation, court members chiseled hardest at Painter's basing the sting in Midland County.

Painter said, "The only difference between this operation and us working stuff out of Mexico...is the fact that the Iranians were involved, and it's a further distance to the international border."

But Commissioner Guy McCrary found "one other difference," he said. "That's what bothered me most. This was a deal where we lured it in here."

Brown added his "distress" that "we went outside of the county to bring something in here at our expense."

And Commissioner Scott Welch said, "I think we've got plenty of crooks in Midland County without going out and looking for any more," adding, "but it's your shop; you run it."

While seemingly satisfied with Painter's $1,000 cost estimate — money spent on crates, phone calls and a trip to El Paso — court members bemoaned what McCrary called the "hidden dollars" that were spent.

Mentioned among those were deputy labor and time spent by Sheriff's Capt. Clayton McKinney, who heads criminal investigations and was an integral player in the scam.

Wright had "reservations" about "the man-hours that have been spent here that could have been spent either on burglaries, robberies, rapes — whatever."

While Painter acknowledged the labor expenditure, he noted that "no overtime would be paid out." Deputies involved would take "comp time," he said.

Other topics also proved sticky for the Commissioner's Court.

"I was very uncomfortable that ABC got involved in this," said Brown, referring to the network's exclusive evening news broadcast of the arrest and Painter's subsequent "Nightline" appearance on the same network.

As he has before, Painter explained that the network's involvement was crucial because of "night vision" camera equipment whose videotapes should help the case.

Brown questioned whether local resources like the Texas Department of Public Safety might have the equipment on hand.

"I can't say that they don't," said Painter. "I don't know of any here."

Brown also "had a problem, from comments that have come to me from other people," with the two undercover deputies, billed as "international security consultants," who made initial contact with British arms middlemen.

Painter termed "understandable" Brown's concerns about freelance deputies Gary Howard and Ron Tucker, who are commissioned in the state of Texas by Midland County.

"The work that they were involved with — they had to walk a line," said Painter. "There were individuals they had to lead to believe that they were crooks.

"I trust them. I've known them for quite some time. I have no qualms whatsoever about them." The sheriff said that he had conducted background checks on the men.

Continued Brown: "There sure seems to be a tie-in between Channel 2 (KMID-TV) and these gentlemen here."

Painter said, "It could be one of them is dating one of the reporters. That could be the tie-in you're looking at.... She (the reporter) was not completely informed as to everything that was going on."

Brown also worried that Howard's and Tucker's cover had been blown.

But Painter said, "I'll tell you"— in six months, three months, they can change their names and go right back over there and do some of the same stuff.

"Not that we're going to, you understand," he added quickly.

The Commissioner's Court entered the session raring for answers.

County Judge Bill Ahders quoted from a constituent letter — one of numerous he said he received — that queried "why a county official would be involved in an operation that should have been handled by the FBI?

"The entire operation has given Midland some very unfavorable publicity," said the writer. "What can be done?"

Wright said he received letters and calls supporting the sheriff. However, "Our position as budget and financial managers of this county is such that we need to know all that there is to know relative to the operation and relative to the cost," he said.

Painter during the session asserted that "I'm not going to violate a law and get my butt put in the penitentiary for some crook.

"I will not intentionally embarrass this court or anybody in Midland County. That's not the way I work. I accept responsibility for what went down. I accept it totally and solely, and nobody else has got the responsibility."

But Commissioners Court members were not totally supportive.

"I'm not sure I appreciate your judgment in it," said McCrary. "Yes, the only kind of good Iranian is a dead Iranian. There's not anybody in town that's not going to tell you that.

"It would have been great to lure the Ayatollah down here and waste him away and bust him."

But he added: "I know you took precautions, but the risk would not have occurred to the county had it not taken place here."

While commissioners spoke freely during the meeting, they left the session agreeing with Commissioner Scott Welch's suggestion that they "pull together."

Representatives from the Permian Basin League of United Latin American Citizens and the Black Advisory Council have maintained the hospital district doesn't want minority representation and, further, that the hospital district felt minorities should be content with the fact a large part of indigent care dollars supposedly goes to their ethnic groups.

Legislation was passed in May which gave the hospital district the power to enlarge itself from five to seven members by Sept. 1, 1987.

In addition, the legislation — authored by Rep. tom Craddick — mandates that the hospital district reorganize itself into an entity containing at least four, but as many as seven, single member-districts.

The redistricting must be completed 120 days before the next hospital district election which is slated for the third Saturday next May.

Historically, the hospital district board was elected to at-large positions and board members have been hesitant to announce their plans for redistricting.

PBLULAC — via its vice president Edia Hernandez — has threatened the hospital district with a lawsuit similar in nature to the one against the MISD currently being reviewed in the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Although PBLULAC has said it would like to wait to see the outcome of its MISD suit first, it has not ruled out filing against the district should it not agree to redistricting itself into seven single member-district positions.

Upon hearing of his appointment, Williams said he wants to be involved in the community's affairs.

Williams has lived in Midland two years and prior to his position with the district attorney's office, he worked for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Flores, who is employed at First Republic Bank, told directors he appreciated "their confidence."

"I will never pretend to be speaking for anyone else. The primary issue at hand is representation and we'll be tackling it soon. A little arm-wrestling never hurt anyone," Flores said in reference to the district's redistricting chore.

The two new directors will serve terms which will expire in May 1988 and May 1989, said MCHD's counsel, Ted Kerr.

At the September's director's meeting, the two will draw lots to see who gets which term, Kerr said.

Veteran director John Huston dies at 81

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Director John Huston, who lived as hard and at times as dangerously as the characters in "The Maltese Falcon," "Prizzi's Honor" and other films which he created in a long and honored career, is dead. He was 81.

Huston died in his sleep at a home he was renting here during the filming of "Mr. North," said Patty Raya, production coordinator for the movie.

Huston had recently been hospitalized for three weeks in Fall River, Mass., for three weeks for emergency treatment of pneumonia complicated by his long-time emphysema. At the time of his release he said he would be forced to continue physical therapy and medication.

During his half-century in film, Huston ventured deep into a jungle for "The African Queen," pulled together misfits and outcasts for "Under the Volcano," drank, caroused, befriended such mavericks as Ernest Hemingway and flourished in a Hollywood that cut most rebels down to size.

A half-dozen of his 40 feature films were considered classics, including "The Asphalt Jungle," "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre," and "Key Largo."

Orson Welles once said Huston was "playing Mephistopheles to his own Faust." For his part, Huston, in his rich, deep voice, repeated his father's advice: "Don't work at anything simply for money. Choose your profession as you would choose your wife: for love — and for money."

The business was in his blood. He was the son of Walter Huston and the father of Anjelica Huston, and made film history by directing each of them in movies that won them Oscars. He won his own for writing and directing "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre."

When he wasn't behind the camera, Huston was narrating commercials and documentaries, writing screenplays or acting — in perhaps his best-known role, he played the corrupt father in "Chinatown."

He rarely trimmed his pace, though he suffered in later years from emphysema that forced him to wear tubes leading to an oxygen tank. This summer, he completed his last film as director, the as-yet-unreleased "The Dead," based on a James Joyce story and starring Anjelica. In order to get insurance, the producers, who included his son, Tony, had to have another director on standby.

"Recently I heard myself described as a living legend," he remarked upon receiving an award for his achievements in 1985. "My doctors assure me that the first wintry blasts would almost certainly change my present status."

John Marcellus Huston was born Aug. 5, 1906, in Nevada, Mo. His father was then a utility company engineer, his mother a traveling reporter. He made his stage debut at the age of 3, reciting "Yankee Doodle Dandy," and spent much of his childhood shuttling back and forth between parents, who split up when he was 6.

He was a frail child, and at age 12 was placed in a sanitarium because of an enlarged heart and kidney problems. But he would sneak out at night to swim a creek and ride it over a waterfall, discovering a joy that banished fear.

Brownsville mayor's wife sobs as husband found guilty of perjury

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Mayor Emilio Hernandez' wife gasped with emotion and fell into her son's arms after a jury found the mayor guilty of aggravated perjury.

Elma Hernandez's sobs punctuated the courtroom Thursday as the jury was polled with the verdict that her husband in January lied under oath before a grand jury investigating allegations of city government corruption.

The 56-year-old mayor showed little reaction when the jury returned after about five hours of deliberation and told District Judge Darrell Hester of its decision.

After Hernandez elected to be sentenced by the jury, Judge Hester set punishment for Monday morning.

The mayor could face up to 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

Hernandez was indicted in a Texas Rangers-led probe of alleged corruption in city government.

Central to his four-day trial was testimony centered on an inaccurate campaign spending report and Hernandez's financial troubles.

He was accused of lying under oath when he told investigators he did not pay for billboards for the 1985 re-election campaign of former City Commissioner Jesse Sloss with money from his own pocket.

"We're shocked that the jury would come back with a verdict like this," said defense attorney Rey Cantu, who added he plans to appeal the verdict.

Special Prosecutor Sharon MacRae declined comment.

" You all have the opportunity to decide what is appropriate behavior for public officials in Cameron County," MacRae told the jury in her closing argument Thursday morning.

The grand jury in January was looking into allegations of bribery in city contracts, among other allegations. Hernandez, who still faces a bribery trial, was cleared of a felony theft by a public servant charge in June.

The perjury case ended in a mistrial in July, the first time it was tried.

Prosecutors attempted to draw a connection between the perjury case and bribery allegations leveled by an employee of Browning Ferris Industries, which was attempting to win a multimillion-dollar garbage contract with the city in 1985.

Hernandez maintained he collected money from various individuals on behalf of the Sloss campaign, but did not personally give more than $200 for the Sloss billboards.

County official pleads innocent to four charges

SAN AUGUSTINE (AP) — County Tax Assessor-Collector Mary Lou Alford has pleaded innocent to charges of official misconduct in the alleged theft of money from the tax office after telling officials she would not resign her post.

Ms. Alford pleaded innocent Thursday to four indictments, including two for official misconduct, tampering with government documents and misapplication of fiduciary property.

The indictments were returned by a grand jury about a week ago.

Ms. Alford entered the plea before District Judge David Walker of Lufkin.

In a separate action, the visiting judge postponed a hearing in the state's petition to remove Ms. Alford from office.

County Attorney Wesley Hoyt told county commissioners that Ms. Alford had changed her mind about resigning.

Walker will also preside at a jury trial on the criminal charges and in a civil case filed by Hoyt.

Bomb threat ends meeting of Crystal Beach council

CRYSTAL BEACH (AP) — The first City Council meeting since the town's government was reinstated was cut short by a bomb threat, but not before a new mayor and two council members were sworn in.

A Galveston County Sheriff's Department dispatcher received a telephone threat of a bomb planted in the Crystal Beach Volunteer Fire Department building a minute before the scheduled Thursday afternoon ceremony.

No bomb was found.

On Aug. 18, State District Judge Arthur C. Lesher Jr. declared that petitions forcing the April election to abolish the city were invalid and the election should never have been held.

Even though it has a full complement of council members as of Thursday, the city still is in legal limbo.

When the city was abolished, Galveston County Auditor Phil Lohec was named as receiver to take possession of and control the city's assets under the court's guidance.

The people who gathered petitions to abolish the city have said they'll appeal Lesher's ruling on the validity of the petitions. They have 30 days in which to do it.

"I'm in daily contact with Mr. Lohec and the county legal department to decide if we can make certain decisions, how to go about implementing them," Mayor Bill Kelsey told the Houston Chronicle. "When we feel confident that we can implement some of our policies we will petition the court to terminate the receivership and return our property."

Kelsey said he hopes the court will return the city's assets within 30 days regardless of the appeals process.

Kelsey and council members Monte Potter and Millie Coleman were sworn into office and the council voted on a delinquent tax matter before Kelsey announced news of the threat.

Kelsey, 37, a real estate agent, won the mayor's office the same day voters decided by a margin of 314 to 245 to abolish the city and let Galveston County Commissioner's Court administer public affairs in the town of 1,200.

Before the bomb threat, Kelsey had planned to assure residents of his divided city that the council will be cautious as it rebuilds city government.

The council decided Thursday to let stand a decision by Lohec and the court to let a Texas City law firm collect about $250,000 in delinquent taxes.

Medicare wants $13.3 million in funds back

EL PASO (AP) — Medicare is seeking the return of $13.3 million in overpayments the agency made to patients and doctors across Texas because of a computer error by Blue Cross-Blue Shield of Texas, officials say.

Medicare has sent letters to patients and doctors requesting that the money be paid within 30 days.

"Most Medicare patients are on Social Security and have no extra money, no fat in their budgets," Dr. Melvin Fox, president of the El Paso County Medical Society, said. "Why is our government so inhuman with these patients? Why is it so lacking in compassion?"

Jerry Sconce, regional administrator of the federal Health Care Financing Administration in Dallas, said the agency "isn't coming down like gangbusters on patients who don't have the money."

"In fact, while we did overpay about $15 million, we are trying to collect only $13.3 million," Sconce said. "If an overpayment to a patient is under $50, we don't try to collect because it costs more to write the letters and go through the collection procedure."

Sconce, reached at home by the El Paso Times, did not have figures on the number of patients and doctors in El Paso who are being billed for the overpayment.

The El Paso County Medical Society and representatives of the American Association of Retired Persons were trying to find out Thursday how many patients and doctors will be affected and how much money is involved.

Robin Weinman, executive director of the Medical Society, said in a news release issued Thursday that $4 million statewide is being billed directly to patients.

The overpayments began in early 1985 after Blue Cross-Blue Shield, the Medicare contractor in Texas, changed computer codes from a four-digit locally used code to a five-digit national code created by the American Medical Association, Sconce said.

The codes reflected reasonable charges doctors could make on procedures performed for Medicare patients.

Errors were made in charge codes for 16 medical procedures, and overpayment for those procedures occurred for six or seven months before the error was discovered in January 1986, Sconce said.

It took until March 1986 to get the codes corrected, he said.

But bills for the overpayments were not sent out until last week.

"They identified this problem almost two years ago and we heard nothing about it," Fox said. "Why?

"I don't believe that in the history of Medicare this has happened before. They have never gone to a patient population of this magnitude because of a problem like this," Fox said. "The patients and the physicians had no way of knowing that the payments were not correct. They have every right to expect that payments are correct."

The delay, Sconce said, was caused by a backlog of computer work by Blue Cross-Blue Shield.

"This collection is routine in the sense that overpayments are made, and we ask for the money back," he said. "In no way did the delay increase the amount of overpayment.

Cattle roam Amarillo after fatal mishap

AMARILLO (AP) — A few steers roamed free near Amarillo following a fatal accident involving a cattle truck.

A man was killed and his brother suffered a broken leg during Thursday morning's rush hour when their cattle truck overturned at a highway interchange, releasing dozens of cattle onto Interstate 40 and U.S. 87.

Volunteers spent the day trying to round up the cattle, but six were still at large early today, a police spokeswoman said. The cattle blocked all lanes of the highways for about three hours and wandered through downtown and nearby residential areas, police said.

Police identified the dead man as Phillip Jesko, 24, of Friona. His brother, 23-year-old Jeffrey Jesko of Muleshoe, was in satisfactory condition at Northwest Texas Hospital with a broken leg, police spokesman Ralph Fletcher said. Officials said the younger brother, who owned the truck, was driving and Phillip Jesko was sleeping in the back when the semi-tractor trailer containing 134 head flipped near an exit ramp and slipped down a shallow embankment. Fletcher did not know their destination.

"We have both our sheriffs' departments involved, police and people from the Amarillo Livestock Auction on horseback looking for them," Fletcher said Thursday morning. "They're searching on foot, in pickups and cars — it doesn't make any difference. If you've got a rope, we will throw you out there."

Amarillo lies in both Potter and Randall counties, and I-40 runs along the boundary. Officials from both counties were summoned to round up portable pens, but many cattle had strayed two or three miles by the time officers arrived, Fletcher said.

About 25 volunteers had rounded up most of the cattle up by early afternoon, Fletcher said.

Bishops, Mattox reach agreement in SMU probe

AUSTIN (AP) — Agreement has been reached giving the attorney general access to information gathered by Methodist Church bishops about the Southern Methodist University football scandal, a probe court records indicate cost more than $500,000.

"It is a cordial agreement and one that should make it clear that we are serious about getting to the bottom of the sad, sordid affairs that took place at SMU," Attorney General Jim Mattox said.

Mattox's staff and lawyers for the bishops entered the agreement Thursday in Travis County District Court after a week of negotiations. It was signed by Judge Harley Clark.

The court-approved agreement allows Mattox's investigators to examine information compiled by the bishops about the pay-for-play football scandal that cost SMU its 1987 football season. The bishops' report on their inquiry was made public June 19.

According to a petition filed by the bishops' committee, SMU paid a total of $524,728 to conduct the investigation. The first payment was made in April and the last on Aug. 3.

"This agreement, worked out during the past week, will allow the attorney general's office to move forward with its investigation into this matter," Mattox said.

Under terms of the order:

— The bishops' committee will produce all documents, including those not released in the June 19 report, collected during their investigation.

— Information from the documents may not be publicly disclosed or openly discussed within the attorney general's office, except among designated supervisory lawyers.

— Information may be disclosed in the course of judicial proceedings, including a grand jury inquiry or lawsuits filed by the state.

— The information also may be turned over to the Dallas County district attorney's office.

Under state law, the attorney general is charged with monitoring charitable trusts, such as SMU, to make certain that trust funds aren't mishandled.

Mattox has said he is particularly interested in money being paid to three former members of the athletic department at SMU.

The bishops report said SMU paid more than $860,000 to former Athletic Director Bob Hitch, former football coach Bobby Collins and former assistant Athletic Director Henry Lee Parker.

In the wake of the scandal, the National Collegiate Athletic Association canceled SMU's 1987 football season and limited its 1988 season to seven road games. The university then canceled its entire 1988 football schedule.

SMU freshman shown filmed 'skit for scandal'

DALLAS (AP) — Incoming freshmen at Southern Methodist University are being shown a filmed skit produced by school officials to familiarize them with the pay-for-play football scandal that rocked the institution.

The words "Monday, March 9th, 1987" flashed on a screen in the darkness of SMU's McFarlin Auditorium before nearly 1,000 new students on Thursday.

Actors representing a football booster, television crew, students, a professor and an administrator relived the "teach-in" held last March during one of the most intense periods of the athletic scandal.

"Somebody has got to be accountable to us, the students of this university," one actor said.

"All of your ivory tower is great, but the university is a business," an actor, playing a booster's role, said.

The scene, from an hour-long show titled "The University Is...," was staged during SMU's orientation week to dramatize some of the issues provoked by last year's scandal, said Assistant Provost Judy Mohraz.

"It was not an attempt to rub salt in our wounds but to take an experience that happened at this university and suggest a way in which that discussion had a lot of dimensions that are faced in higher education today," she said.

One skit is based on the campus protest by students and faculty members who were angry about the roles of some boosters and school officials in the decision to continue payments to players after SMU was on probation for similar violations.

The NCAA, citing the continued payments, suspended the football program for the 1987 season, and SMU officials canceled the 1988 season.

Military judge to rule in case of soldier with AIDS

FORT HOOD (AP) — A military judge will rule in October whether medical records of a soldier charged with having sex without telling his partners he carried the AIDS virus should be suppressed from a court-martial.

In a preliminary hearing Thursday for Sgt. Richard Sargeant, military defense attorneys presented a motion to suppress medical records that show Sargeant carries the human immuno-deficiency virus.

Lt. Col. Stephen V. Saynisch will rule on the motion Oct. 14. If he denies the motion, the trial could begin the next day.

While Sargeant sat somber-faced with an attorney on each side of him, Saynisch said he will allow the prosecution two weeks to respond to the motion.

Sargeant, 27, worked as a medical instructor at the Academy of Health Sciences at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio before being charged with having sex with three women without informing them that he had the virus. He is formally charged with seven violations of the Uniform Code of Military Justice in connection with having sex with the women from late March through early July.

The charges include sodomy, adultery, reckless endangerment, aggravated assault and failure to obey an order of a superior officer.

Saynisch scheduled the Oct. 14 hearing at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio to announce a ruling on the motion and consider any new matters before the court.

Sargeant is expected to be arraigned and enter a plea at that hearing. He will also decide then if he wants a court-martial panel or the judge to consider evidence against him.

The preliminary hearing was held at Fort Hood, near Killeen, to accommodate the military judge who was hearing other cases at the post.

Army attorneys involved in the Sargeant case would not comment about the impact if the judge grants the defense motion for the suppression of AIDS test results.

Another military judge, in a similar case at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., recently refused to admit evidence pertaining to the AIDS test results of Pfc. Adrian G. Morris.

Travis officials warn that 80,000 may carry AIDS virus by 1991

AUSTIN (AP) — By 1991, as many as 80,000 people in the Austin area may be carriers of the AIDS virus, city-county health officials told the Austin City Council.

The health department asked on Thursday for $217,717 to respond to the AIDS epidemic in Austin and Travis County through expanded testing, counseling and educational and home care services.

At the present time, up to 100 people in Travis County may be carrying the virus that causes AIDS, the City Council was told. The number of new AIDS cases in the county doubles every 15 months, health officials said.

The health department recommended installation of 100 condom vending machines in the restrooms of high-traffic public buildings throughout the city.

The council was not required to take any action on the report or the budget request Thursday.

At the end of the health department's presentation, Mayor Frank Cooksey criticized "state leadership" as "an absolute disgrace to the state of Texas" for failing to aggressively seek available federal funds to cope with the epidemic.

An impact study presented to the council stressed that acquired immune deficiency syndrome can be prevented, but said accurate and specific AIDS education and prevention information must continuously be distributed.

AIDS was first diagnosed in Austin in 1983. By mid-June of this year, 122 cases had been reported in Travis County, including 21 this year.

16 alleged drug dealers 'main course' at barbecue

LIBERTY (AP) — An afternoon barbecue set up by undercover narcotics agents netted 16 arrests on drug charges while three others were arrested in a separate drug raid, Liberty County Sheriff's officials said.

Undercover officers organized the barbecue as part of an ongoing investigation into drug traffic in the area and invited several people under investigation for narcotics sales to the event, Liberty County Sheriff E.W. "Sonny" Applebe said.

"We had a barbecue for the dope dealers and when they showed up we arrested them," Applebe said. Suspects in the investigation were told by undercover officers that a new shipment of drugs had arrived and invited them to the Wednesday barbecue for "beer, food and a good time getting high."

"One of our officers decided we should have a barbecue and invite them so we could round them all up at once instead of one at a time," Applebe said. "It saved a lot of wear and tear on the department."

The alleged drug dealers who were arrested, 13 men and three women, were arraigned Thursday by Justice of the Peace Phil Fitzgerald on felony charges of delivery of methamphetamines and cocaine and delivery of marijuana for renumeration, Applebe said. Bonds ranging from $20,000 to $40,000 were set for each of the persons.

Bastrop drug lab raided

BASTROP (AP) — Authorities have arrested an Austin man in a raid on a suspected drug lab southeast of Bastrop which had been under surveillance for about a month.

Clifton Ray Goodson, 32, was charged with possession of methamphetamine and unlawfully carrying a weapon. Bond on the drug charge was set at $50,000, and a $5,000 bond was set on the weapons charge.

Sgt. Gene Blomstrom of the Greater Austin Area Organized Crime Unit said the raid on a trailer house netted methamphetamine oil, glassware, chemicals and a powder believed to be methamphetamine.

Monahans lawyer named

AUSTIN (AP) — Hal R. Upchurch, a Monahans lawyer, has been appointed to replace Jack L. McGowen of Pecos, who resigned his position as district attorney for the 143rd Judicial District, which includes Reeves, Ward and Loving counties.

Upchurch, 43, will assume the job Sept. 2. The post will be on the 1988 election ballot.

'Trojan Travel' nets 35

MESQUITE (AP) — At least 35 people fell into a police sting operation aimed at collecting fines from individuals named in outstanding warrants on traffic citations and other misdemeanor offenses, officials said.

Police, posing as travel agents, promised grand-opening prizes of free Jamaican vacations to a select group of customers invited to their storefront operation.

"We put a sign out front and called it Trojan Travel," Chief Michael Burns said Thursday.

But the business was really a sting operation. It resulted in arrests of suspects, some of whom had traffic fines more than eight years delinquent. Burns said police collected almost $12,000 in unpaid fines.

Lisa Shipman went to the Trojan Travel Agency expecting to collect a free guided trip to Jamaica. Instead, she got a trip to Mesquite City Jail that cost her $80.

Mrs. Shipman, 22, of Terrell, said she had not paid a $210 fine that was ordered after she was ticketed several months ago for driving an automobile without liability insurance.

Customers attack would-be robber, send him to hospital

AUSTIN (AP) — A man charged in a convenience store holdup was hospitalized after a customer knocked him down with her car and two teenagers subdued him with a baseball bat.

Dennis Coleman, 29, of Austin remained in undetermined condition today in Brackenridge Hospital after he was charged in the robbery of a convenience store early Thursday, police said.

Coleman allegedly told the store clerk he had a .45-caliber handgun and threatened her, according to police spokeswoman Kellye Norris.

He allegedly fled with the money and a woman who had just left the store struck him with her car, knocking him down as he ran across the street, Norris said.

The man was subdued by Louis Mayes and his friend, Brian Anderson, both 19-year-old high school students. Mayes said he hit the man with a baseball bat in the knee and the ribs before police arrived.

Coleman was charged with robbery by threat, a second-degree felony, and bond was set at $25,000. He did not have a gun, though, Norris said.

Police appreciate citizen involvement but generally advise against such actions, Norris said.

"We like to see more people get involved, but we do not encourage them to run down robbery suspects," Norris said. "It's good there are people out there who think of themselves last, but it could've been dangerous."

Mayes, who lives across the street, said he was outside the store using a pay phone when he saw what happened. He said he sympathized with the store clerk who worked alone.

"I stay out late. I know there's a lot of crazy people out there," Mayes said. "I was just trying to be nice and do something. I know how she felt."

Norris said police arrived and handcuffed Coleman, but that he jumped out of the police car, fell off an embankment and went over a retaining wall near the curb before police stopped him.

Critical test firing of shuttle rocket booster delayed until Saturday

NATION

BRIGHAM CITY, Utah (AP) — A rocket booster test considered critical to the space shuttle's future has been reset for Saturday after "nuisances," including a broken water main and cranky ground control equipment, delayed the firing.

Morton Thiokol Inc. engineers twice carried the countdown to within seconds of ignition Thursday before ground equipment failed. Another attempt was halted just three minutes from ignition.

The booster was redesigned to eliminate the flaws that caused the Challenger to explode last year, but the new system must pass a series of ground tests before shuttle flights can resume.

Thursday's failed test will not affect the National Aeronautics and Space Adminstration's plans to resume shuttle flights next June, but the schedule is tight, said Richard Truly, the agency's chief of space flight.

"One day or one week doesn't make a difference," Truly said.

The test failures were caused by "nuisances" not associated with the motor, said John Thomas, director of the booster redesign program for NASA.

The firing was to be the first of the redesigned rocket using the full 1.2 million pounds of solid propellant.

About 500 space industry officials stood in the bright Utah sun from 1 p.m., when the first attempt was stopped, until 4:57 p.m., when the final countdown was aborted, peering up at the 126-foot-long white rocket perched 9,000 feet away on the side of a brown hill.

A highway beside the Thiokol test site was lined with spectators for two miles, but the crowd thinned as the long afternoon wore on and the mood among officials went from upbeat to grim.

The first countdown started at midnight and "everything was just nice" until 10 a.m., Thomas said.

"The first nuisance was a six-inch water main that failed," he said. The water is used to cool the rocket casing after it has fired. The countdown was held and a plumber called.

The pipes were fixed in 90 minutes, said Thomas, and the countdown resumed just after noon, an hour before the planned ignition.

Preparations proceded smoothly and continued to within 10 seconds of ignition when the water system failed at another connection.

The countdown was stopped while repairs were made and then resumed toward a new firing time of 3 p.m.

Just three minutes before the appointed hour, a computer checked test equipment and the results "looked strange to us so we held for three minutes," Thomas said. "We couldn't explain the problem to our satisfaction so we aborted and cycled back to one hour."

At this point, some of the Thiokol technicians had been working for more than 12 hours straight. Truly visited the blockhouse and told them that if they were tired the attempt could be halted.

Truly said the engineers were eager to resume and he agreed, provided the test would be canceled for the day if one more problem occurred.

That problem came just 12 seconds before ignition, when the ground control computer determined that a rocket turbine was not up to proper speed. Frustrated officials gave up and rescheduled the test for 1 p.m. Saturday.

Thiokol officials, who had hoped for a smooth test to help restore the rocket manufacturer's reputation, said they were disappointed but not discouraged.

"We didn't have a problem with the (rocket) motor," said Allan McDonald, the Thiokol chief of the redesign effort. "We did have problems with plumbing and with some electronic systems."

The water system that failed and the ground control computer that malfunctioned are needed only for ground tests and are not used in actual space shuttle flights.

Pilots seek to maintain 'razor's edge'

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Some of the chief pilots from the nation's airlines at an FAA conference on how to maintain "that razor's edge" in the cockpit threw at least part of the blame for safety lapses back on the agency itself.

The session Thursday was called after a string of flight crew mistakes and amid growing evidence that pilot error caused the Northwest jet crash Aug. 16 in Detroit that killed 156 people in the nation's second-worst air disaster.

FAA Administrator Allan McArtor told the 250 pilots at the meeting that they and the airline industry must recapture the public's confidence with better training and insistence on professionalism.

"We've got to rededicate ourselves to professionalism in this industry," McArtor said, warning that if the industry doesn't find solutions "our non-aviation professionals will."

He later told reporters he was refering to concern that Congress may impose safety-related requirements on the industry.

Henry Duffy, president of the Air Line Pilots Association, accused the FAA of not pushing hard enough for innovations in training and cockpit procedure.

The pilots union said there was widespread agreement between the industry and the FAA in 1984 for a $9.4 million, three-year program aimed at looking for ways to solve human problems in the cockpit.

Duffy said the FAA has spent less than $1 million on the program and never allowed it to get off the ground.

McArtor, a former fighter pilot who took over the FAA less than a month ago, told reporters he was unaware of the program and promised to look into it.

At the session Thursday, McArtor said the problem facing commercial pilots is nearly as old as aviation itself: "How do you maintain that razor's edge?"

The pilots had no quick answers, but agreed more attention, training and discipline are needed in the cockpit.

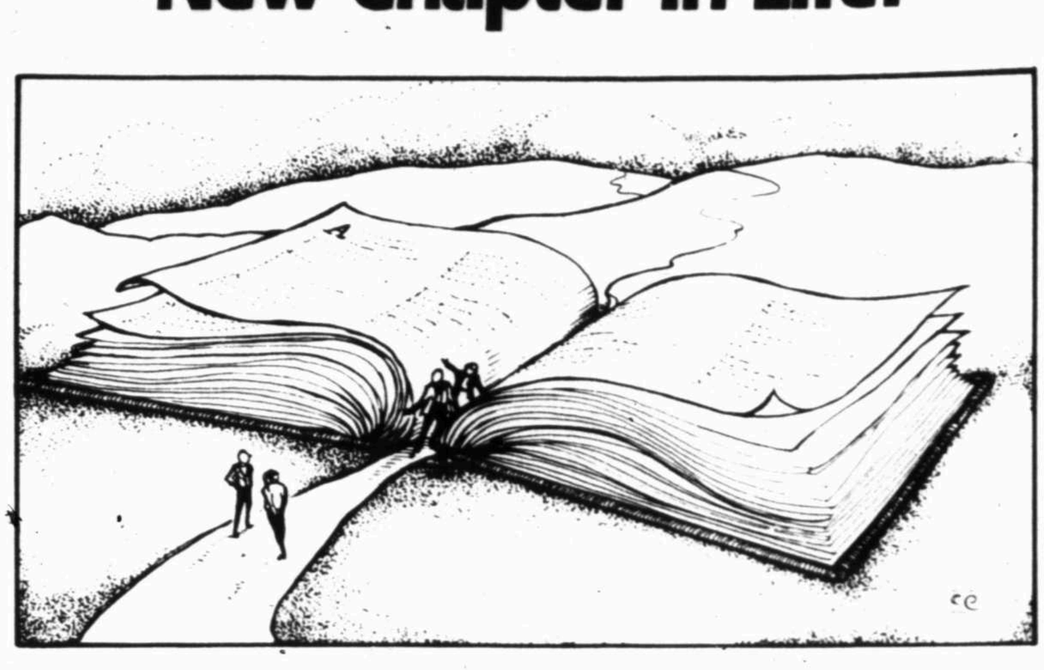

McArtor called the meeting a success because it renewed focus on human performance in the cockpit. He promised to meet with the pilots again in private.

During the session, chief pilots from more than a dozen airlines took turns commenting briefly on the need for innovative pilot training programs, but one after the other also stressed their employer's commitment to air safety.

Many participants clearly were uneasy by the public nature of the meeting at a downtown hotel. Reporters and TV cameras were not permitted in the room, but a closed-circuit TV hook-up fed the proceedings to an adjacent room.

Don Nelson, Northwest vice president for flight operations, declined to discuss pilot training altogether, saying it would be inappropriate in light of the accident.

Gore glad Nunn gone

By EVANS WITT

WASHINGTON (AP) — Albert Gore Jr. can stop looking over his shoulder. Sam Nunn isn't gaining on him anymore — he's not even in the race.

Nunn, the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, announced Thursday in Atlanta that he isn't going to run for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1988.

"I hate to express joy over a decision by him not to run," Gore said, even as he must have been breathing a sigh of relief.

An Analysis

For now the second-generation senator from Tennessee is the only Southerner in the Democratic field.

Nunn's non-candidacy "takes Al Gore out of the shadows and makes him 'The Southern Candidate,'" Atlanta pollster Claiborne Darden said.

"Now that he has decided not to run, I can say candidly that there are an awful lot of people around the country and in my native South and in Georgia who told me that in the event he doesn't run, they're going to look favorably upon my candidacy," Gore said. "So I'm encouraged by that."

But being the southern candidate doesn't mean Gore is the automatic winner in the southern primaries on Super Tuesday next March 8.

In fact, Nunn's decision throws open the door to the South for everyone in the Democratic field to try to gain an advantage in the region. Many conservative southern Democrats had been frozen in place, awaiting Nunn's decision. Those activists are now looking for another candidate, and the candidates are looking for them.

Former Virginia Gov. Charles Robb, a longtime Nunn supporter, said the Georgia senator's decision "presents a tremendous opportunity for a candidate...to move aggressively to fill that void." Robb, often mentioned as presidential timber himself, declined to avail himself of the opening and allowed as how Gore is probably in the best position to appeal to conservative Democrats who now lack a candidate.

And Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois, another Democratic hopeful, also said Gore may have an early edge in the South now.

But Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri wasted no time trying to pick off Nunn supporters, calling all the Democratic representatives from Georgia within hours of Nunn's decision. Rep. Ed Jenkins said he is going to back Gephardt's presidential bid, and Rep. Lindsay Thomas says he is leaning in that direction.

With Nunn in the race, former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt saw his Sun Belt connection as providing "an edge in the Southwest and Texas."

"I would hope I can extend that all the way across the South," he told AP Radio.

Thus Gore is going to have to work hard to inherit Nunn's supporters, particularly since Gore is quite a bit more liberal than Nunn.

Nunn alluded to that, without mentioning Gore, at his Atlanta news conference. The conservative Democrat said none of the Democratic candidates has made clear "the expression of the kind of philosophy and the kind of values that the people of the South are looking for.

That doesn't mean that could not happen."

For example, Nunn supports aid to the Contra rebels opposing the Nicaraguan government. Gore opposes it. Nunn voted for President Reagan's tax cut and budget in 1981. Gore voted against them as a House member.

For their 1986 votes, the liberal Americans for Democratic Action rated Gore a 70 and Nunn a far more conservative 30 out of a possible 100. At the other end of the spectrum, the American Conservative Union gave Gore only a 9 out of 100 in 1986, while Nunn's votes were rated a 55.

Gore is quick to deny, as he has from the start, that he is a Southern candidate, saying he is a national candidate from the South.

But the 1988 primary calendar makes it hard for Gore to shake the characterization.

Gore got a relatively late start, handicapping his efforts in Iowa and New Hampshire, the two states that will kick off the 1988 Democratic season. The rest of the early states — Maine, South Dakota, Minnesota and the like — are obviously not fertile territory for him.

Thus, the South and Super Tuesday. All the region's states — with one possible exception — will be voting in primaries or caucuses on March 8, 1988.

If Gore has not won a primary or caucus before then, he must do well on March 8 to stay in the field. And even if Gore has broken through to the winner's column in an earlier event, he will have to face high expectations of a strong showing across his home region.

Nunn's decision is actually the second break for Gore in the past few days. In an Iowa debate earlier in the week, Gore drew a lot of attention for his careful dissection of Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, who is the front-runner in New Hampshire.

That clearly marked Gore as a candidate to be reckoned with in a campaign so loaded with debates that it is hard to see when the candidates will get out on the streets to campaign in the first two months of 1988.

Nunn's decision also helped the Democratic presidential field shape up as the dog days of August are winding down. Nunn is not running and neither is New York Gov. Mario Cuomo. Within the next month or so, decisions will be announced by the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Rep. Patricia Schroeder of Colorado.

Then the preliminaries will be over and the 1988 race will be on with all the Democratic contestants on the track.

Proxmire's retirement leaves mixed reactions

Proxmire

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Sen. William Proxmire's decision to retire raised GOP hopes and saddened Democratic admirers of the five-term legislator who handed out Golden Fleece Awards for wasteful spending and once was re-elected on $178.

The 71-year-old senator, a longtime physical fitness enthusiast, said Thursday he will not seek re-election in 1988 because "I'd be almost 80 years old when I retired in 1994. ...That's too old."

The announcement, which startled many politicians, came 30 years to the day after Proxmire was first elected to the U.S. Senate to fill the seat left vacant by the death of Republican Joseph R. McCarthy.

Suellen Albrecht, state Democratic chairman, said she was "disappointed, surprised and shocked" by the news. "Sen. Proxmire is a legend," she said. "He will always be remembered as the taxpayer's friend."

"He's a class act," said Republican Gov. Tommy G. Thompson.

Proxmire, chairman of the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee, set a Senate record of answering every roll call since 1966, and captured 60 to 70 percent of the vote in his last three elections, in 1982, 1976 and 1970.

Because of his popularity, he spent little on winning re-election. In 1982, he spent only $177.75, mostly for postage and stationery to return campaign contributions.

"We obviously now have a great opportunity to recapture the Wisconsin seat from the Democrats," Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., chairman of the Senate Republican Campaign Committee, said in Washington.

One of the GOP politicians reportedly considering a candidacy, Rep. F. James Sensenbrenner Jr., scheduled a news conference for this morning.

Proxmire said the Democrats have excellent candidates for the Senate, mentioning Assembly Speaker Thomas Loftus, former Gov. Anthony S. Earl, Rep. Jim Moody, D-Wis., and former Deputy Attorney General Edward R. Garvey.

"I'm not going to endorse anyone" at this time, he said.

After losing three elections for governor, Proxmire was a surprise winner against a former Republican governor in the special election for McCarthy's seat in 1957.

The maverick senator gained wide renown as a fiscal watchdog with his sardonic Golden Fleece Awards for such examples of government spending as $59,000 for playing cards and a $46,000 study of how to break an egg.

Proxmire visits his state frequently, showing up at fairs and sporting events to greet voters. He once estimated he shook hands with 200,000 people a year.

He said Thursday he has thoroughly enjoyed being senator, and regrets he couldn't achieve his chief objective of bringing "sanity to our fiscal spending."

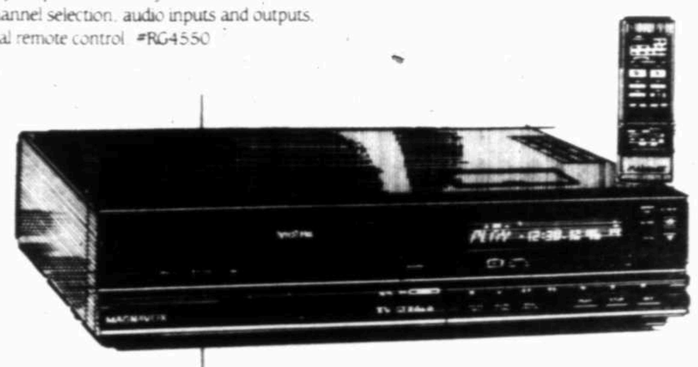

Proxmire's wife, Ellen, said the family tried to dissuade him when he confided his plans Tuesday.

Reagan's advisers serving him poorly

In the early days of the Iran-contra affair, we noted that a president must not be so aloof that those in his administration actually end up running the government. Of course, now we've seen how that sad chain of events actually came to pass in the Reagan administration.

But now we're seeing another side of how Reagan's so-called hands-off management style is backlashing on the president.

Gary L. Bauer, the former education undersecretary who became the president's chief domestic policy adviser Jan. 30, threatens to bring the administration another spoonful of woes. A White House aide in his sensitive position should have been chastened by the embarrassing revelations of the Iran-contra hearings. But while the Norths, Poindexters and Caseys of the Reagan administration were giving the nation a lesson in the pitfalls of secret foreign policy, Bauer was unabashedly plotting some congressional end runs on the domestic front.

Bauer believes the president, during his last 17 months in office, should ignore a balky Congress and unilaterally use his executive powers to push through a right-wing social agenda. His hand came into play three weeks ago when Reagan announced federal funding cuts for organizations supporting abortion. Now, the zealous young adviser is savoring the prospect of an executive order banning pornography from military post exchanges. What the president can't impose by fiat, Bauer believes, his judicial appointees will.

Now, we're opposed to both abortion and pornography, but there is a right way and a wrong way to go about establishing policy in a democratic government. No doubt Bauer's efforts will lift the spirits of forlorn fundamentalists who complain that the White House has ignored them. But it's likely to backfire against Reagan — and against his own party.

It would be no more wise for Reagan to attempt to impose his will on the nation through executive order on such controversial issues as abortion or pornography than it would for him to utilize the legal but questionably ethical "recess appointment" maneuver to install Judge Robert Bork on the Supreme Court.

Issues of this nature that are so open to debate and that fire the passions of most Americans must be fully debated in a government that brags on its form of self-government.

As the nation heads for the 1988 presidential elections, the Republicans can ill afford more feuding between religious right and moderate elements. And nothing is more likely to revive that sort of conflict than the appearance that the White House is thumbing its nose at Congress and arbitrarily reshaping domestic social programs in the waning hours of Reagan's presidency.

Reagan has been poorly served by the arrogance of several of his advisers, and Bauer is no exception. The president must not let an obscure public servant run the country.

LETTERS

Who else will do it?

I voted for Dallas Smith. I thought he had to take a few low shots. That's politics, I guess.

But Sheriff Painter, like other law officers, has had to kick a few doors and other places — figuratively speaking, of course. Doesn't he know his job could be on the line if he treads on the wrong toes?

Sure, we say we want a better city, county, state and country, but he acts like he's a servant of the people. Hasn't he learned of self-serving? Integrity — let someone else have it, if it doesn't fit the scene.

He takes the cake! Acts like getting home sometimes just in time to shower, change clothes and go back to work goes with the job. Isn't it by decree that it's 8:00 to 5:00, man, 8:00 to 5:00? He reminds me of the guy who had the unmitigated gall to stand and say, "It's not my rights I'm so concerned about; it's slacking my responsibilities."

Maybe he has a problem? Suppose he found a quiet place one day and read a book that indicated if he wished to be first, he first had to learn to serve?

Midland's got a great group of people — some of the best. If it were heaven, then it wouldn't be Midland would it? God knows we're no ghost town, but a few ghosts come back to haunt.

I wish the sheriff to "have a happy day" and that ol' ex-Texas Ranger, Capt. McKinney along with the rest of their crew.

Responsibility may be part of the "pursuit of happiness" — there is no guarantee of happiness, just pursuit.

I really don't think we desire to say damn the mines and missiles, let someone else do it. Let the swabs in the Persian Gulf worry about it?

Thanks for caring

Two weeks ago we were in the airport awaiting the arrival of our grandchildren when we heard a group of young men come in and take the seats behind us. I cringed inwardly as I waited for the cursing and foul language which usually accompanies such a gathering but, although there was a lot of talking and joking, not one offensive word did we hear!

During the course of a conversation with one of them, I learned that they were the Midland Angels baseball team and I say to them God bless you, men, for caring about the feelings of others and about the image you project.

Groups cause concern

I was glad to see the letter by Mr. Sosebee concerning the groups of people assembling on Midkiff Road. I have had to quit shopping at the Furrs store on Midkiff because I did not feel safe with the large group of kids drinking and causing disturbances in this area.

I hope that a great number of concerned citizens will voice their opposition to this problem. I would also hope that the Checker Auto Supply store would remove kids from their lot.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Aug. 28, the 240th day of 1987. There are 125 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Aug. 28, 1963, about 200,000 people joined in a peaceful civil rights rally in Washington, where they heard Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. deliver his famous "I have a dream" speech in front of the Lincoln Memorial.

On this date:

In 1609, Henry Hudson discovered Delaware Bay.

In 1749, German author Johann Wolfgang von Goethe was born in Frankfurt.

In 1774, Mother Elizabeth Ann Seton, the first American-born saint, was born in New York City.

In 1828, Russian novelist Leo Tolstoy was born near Tula.

In 1916, Italy's declaration of war against Germany took effect during World War I.

In 1917, 10 suffragists were arrested as they picketed the White House.

In 1922, radio station WEAF in New York City aired the first radio commercial. The Queensboro Realty Company of Jackson Heights paid $100 for 10 minutes of air time.

Japan subdued Borneo's head-hunters

WASHINGTON — The head-hunting tribes of the island of Borneo have finally been subdued. It is a unique irony of this century that their indirect conquerors are the Japanese — whose heads they last hunted a little over four decades ago.

Jack Anderson

Young Iban tribesmen, weaned on heroic tales of yesteryear, now go off to work on offshore rigs, drilling oil that goes mostly to Japan. They buy Japanese cars, televisions and stereos — even as the blackened, smoked skulls of the invading Japanese of World War II still hang in rattan nets in their tribal villages, swaying in the breeze.

The story of the evolution of the fierce Ibans unfolded as Dale Van Atta recently took a trip back in time, traveling up the brown, jungled Belait River of the tiny nation of Brunei to the Iban villages of today — and a house of skulls hidden along the edge of the river.

The Ibans, also known as the Sea Dayaks, are a brown-skinned people of medium build who were relative latecomers to the Moslem sultanate of Brunei, following the likes of Sinbad the Sailor and Marco Polo, and did what Kubla Khan could not: They vanquished the indigenous tribes of the islands.

In the process, it became apparent that the Ibans began a grisly practice of collecting heads based on their belief that the immortal spirit of the enemy resided in the head. To own skulls was to possess great power — for the individual warrior or the village.

The ritual became a rite of passage. Each young Iban male was required to acquire an enemy skull to prove his manhood. The more he acquired, the more he became the envy of his companions and a virile hero to the young girls of the village.

It degenerated over the centuries to even uglier deaths. Instead of taking heads in battle, Iban men soon considered any pate fair game. Children who strayed too far from their villages ran a great risk, as did elderly women gathering berries.

If live heads proved too difficult to collect, Ibans were not above grave robbery. One British governor of a nearby island was forced to secretly bury his wife for fear her corpse would be beheaded by a plundering Iban.

The practice slowly faded during a century-long reign of Britain's "white rajahs" beginning in 1841. The first, James Brooke, was a British adventurer who ended Iban piracy and then ruled the area with wisdom and brute force. When necessary, Brooke didn't hesitate to unleash the head-hunting Ibans to enforce his rule. But he and his descendants managed to substitute cock fighting as a primary means of settling disputes.

But when the Japanese successfully invaded in December 1941, the British once again encouraged the Ibans to become head hunters. Hundreds of Japanese, possibly thousands, fell to Iban parangs, sharp jungle knives. Several dozen small skulls Van Atta viewed in a rabbit-hutch-like enclosure far up the Belait River were all Japanese, according to his river guide, Benny Foo. Foo explained that the holes at the top of each skull were punctured by the Ibans, who then sucked out the brains of their victims.

Naturally, all this made the Ibans the most feared guerrillas the Japanese faced in the region — so they stayed along the coast, leaving the interior to the Ibans. When the Japanese finally fled the island before American forces, they set fire to Brunei's 38 oil wells. The blaze took four months to extinguish, and it was not many years before Brunei was selling the same crude oil to postwar Japan.

Today, half of Brunei's crude oil is sold to Tokyo, while the Japanese have the exclusive contract for Brunei's natural gas. The oil riches have made Brunei's subjects, including the Ibans, quite comfortable. Village longhouses of the interior are festooned with televisions and other modern conveniences. Bare-breasted beauties no longer wander unashamedly about. Malaysian style or Western dress prevails.

Verity nod raising concerns on trade front

WASHINGTON — Although C. William Verity's "fetish" for U.S.-Soviet trade was known at the White House before he was named secretary of commerce, nobody there seems to have read his past comments that American Jewish demands for Soviet emigration "can never be satisfied" and are regarded by the Kremlin as "interference with domestic affairs."

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

Those eight-year-old comments suggest the retired industrialist's Senate confirmation may not be so smooth as advertised. While the organized Jewish community is not opposing him, the Union of Councils for Soviet Jews is. Add in right-wing hostility, and Verity could be eating past words before his inevitable confirmation.

Picking the former head of Armco Steel points to what's afoot in the Reagan administration's fading months. His appointment fits the new primacy of improved U.S.-Soviet relations. Not only has Verity plugged ceaselessly for detente but has rejected the administration's policy of linkage between trade with Soviet behavior.

In fact, he weighed in against linkage when that issue split the Carter administration. He said the Soviets were "offended" by the Jackson-Vanik amendment's restrictions on U.S.-Soviet trade linked to Jewish emigration, and called for their removal. "Let us also remember that they regard such efforts as interference with domestic affairs," Verity wrote.

In a 1979 interview with the Washington Star noting that year's record high of 50,000 Jews permitted to leave the Soviet Union, he contended the U.S. bowed to Jewish pressure linking emigration to trade. "The American Jewish community can never be satisified on this matter," he said. "Their desires will ever be escalating." Soon after, the Kremlin closed the doors. Jewish emigration dropped to 914 in 1987, and under Mikhail Gorbachev's glasnost has risen to 4,218 this year.

If the White House staff was unaware of Verity's quotes, it is understandable. Verity did not appear on the commerce secretary short list compiled by Robert Tuttle's personnel office. His name came from the White House East Wing — from Nancy Reagan, who has become the archangel of detente. In turn, according to one administration official, the suggestion to the first lady was made by her friend and former aide, Michael K. Deaver.

Advocates of controlling technology to the Soviet Union were appalled. "I find it a very strange appointment," Zbigniew Brzezinski, whose views as Jimmy Carter's national security adviser were opposed by Verity a decade ago, told us.

Verity, former head of the U.S.-Soviet Trade Council, belongs to the detente-minded American Committee on U.S.-Soviet relations. Harvard Professor Marshall Goldman, a leading detentist, says Verity, "has a fetish for Soviet trade." Fetish or not, his views are economically grounded. Armco's multibillion-dollar plans in the Soviet Union were killed by the Carter administration after the invasion of Afghanistan.

Amid current assaults on "privatized" diplomacy, Verity fits the tradition of American entrepreneurs from Armand Hammer to Dwayne Andreas dealing directly with the Kremlin's masters. In 1984, after meeting with senior Soviet officials including Prime Minister N.A. Tikhonov, Verity returned to Washington to submit Soviet "suggestions" to then national security adviser Robert McFarlane.

While Verity's trade delegation was in Moscow, ex-NSC director Brent Scowcroft — carrying a secret Reagan letter to then Soviet leader Konstantin Chernenko — was left cooling his heels in a hotel. "That was their way of telling the president he's just bad news," Verity said upon returning. Actually, the attempt to establish another Soviet channel was scotched by the State Department.

A month later, Verity was one of the American industrialists rubbing shoulders with Soviet trade bureaucrats on the dias at Manhattan's Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. When a State Department official blamed the Kremlin for deteriorated U.S.-Soviet relations, Verity accused him of "very poor judgment" and praised the Russians for not responding.

The record is so full that even administration officials wonder how the president could appoint him. The answer is that Reagan probably sees Bill Verity as a fellow septuagenarian who frequently appeared on guest lists for White House state dinners put together by Mike Deaver and who headed the commission on private initiative that tickled the president's fancy.

Sooner or later, the gap on linkage must be resolved. Verity could truly eat his words, or the administration might buy his dictum that "trade is trade." If neither happens and the old industrialist goes his own way out of control, the president can repent in leisure his hasty appointment.

CHARLEY REESE

Central American peace plan same old song

There is a spider in that bunch of bananas called a peace plan the presidents of five Central American countries have signed.

Charley Reese

Daniel Ortega, the head commandante in Nicaragua, is no democrat. Why, after surviving in power, should he suddenly agree to negotiate away his own power? If he wanted a democratic Nicaragua, he would not have made it undemocratic. If he wanted an unaligned Nicaragua, he would not have the country stuffed full of Soviet military equipment, Cubans, East Germans, Palestinians, Libyans, and Bulgarians.

No, Ortega has no intention of being anything but the Marxist-Leninist he is nor of allowing Nicaragua to be anything but a Soviet outpost on the North American continent.

Ortega's game is to use negotiations as a weapon to undermine U.S. support of the contras. That he has picked up this weapon is a pretty good indication that the contras, nearly all of whom are now inside Nicaragua, must be making progress.

Football team managers study the plays of their opponents; baseball managers study their opponents. It's beyond comprehension why the U.S. Government seems psychotically determined not to learn anything from having dealt with communists for over 40 years.

How many times do we have to be had by ceasefires and negotiations? Did we learn nothing from 10 years in Vietnam where ceasefires and negotiations were regularly used by the communists to resupply and to rebuild assets destroyed in the war?

No, it's plain as the muzzle of an AK-47 what Ortega is up to. The mystery is what are the Central American presidents up to? Their plan provides no guarantees at all.

It may well be that having watched the United States vacillate for seven years while the Soviets have been steady as a mountain, that the Central American presidents have decided to cut the best deal they can with the communists.

Another thing the great intellect in the House and Senate have refused to consider is the effect our weakness has on third party countries. Considering the fact that the U.S. has a perfect record of never having once overthrown a communist government or even prevented one from taking power, you can hardly blame them for having no faith in the U.S. as an ally.

The ugly truth is that in the post-war era, everytime there has been a crisis in the communist bloc, the U.S. has virtually come to the rescue either by failing to act or by supplying aid and trade.

The Allende government in Chile doesn't count. The Chilean army overthrew that after the CIA failed to prevent it. You can count Granada if you like but that little comic opera regime on an island 10 by 20 miles is a pitifully small trophy to hang on an otherwise blank wall.

If Americans were less like cows, they might become uneasy about their future. Like the cow in the slaughter chute, though, most Americans think there must be something good to eat or drink up ahead because all the cows in front of them are going in that direction. The one unforgiveable sin in America today is non-conformity. Public education has done its job well.

As an exercise in clarity, let's review what our legitimate objective ought to be in Central America. It is not peace. We could have had that simply by surrendering to the demands of those who threaten to make war. It is not a capitalist economy because whatever kind of economic system Central Americans wish is properly none of our business. It is not even democracy because that, too, is really a decision Central Americans have a right to make.

Our only legitimate goal is a Central America which is not allied with our principal enemy, the Soviet Union. It is not Daniel Ortega who is a threat to the U.S. It is Daniel Ortega the armed puppet of the Soviet Union which is a threat to the U.S.

The peace plans don't banish Soviet influence. They don't accomplish our objective. A contra victory will.

Dementia in AIDS patients may be explained

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The mysterious mental disability often associated with AIDS may occur partly because the disease virus interferes with a chemical that helps nerves function, researchers say.

Studies at the University of Chicago indicate a protein from the surface of the AIDS virus keeps an important nerve growth chemical from reaching brain cells, according to a report published today in the journal Science.

The restriction of this nerve chemical from neurons, denying these cells a substance that keeps them healthy and functioning, may help explain the dementia suffered by a majority of AIDS patients, researchers say.

The progressive neurological problems associated with acquired immune deficiency syndrome have baffled scientists since they first noticed the disorders about two years ago. No one could explain why the brain is so seriously affected by a disease that primarily attacks the immune system.

About 90 percent of all AIDS patients show varying signs of brain and nervous system complications, and specialists estimate two-thirds of those who die from the disease suffer moderate to severe dementia.

Symptoms include psychosis, apathy, difficulty in concentrating, memory and speech problems and impaired body movements.

Dr. Mark E. Gurney, one of the Chicago scientists, Dr. Mark E. Gurney, one of the Chicago scientists, said the AIDS virus blocks a nerve chemical called neuroleukin, or NLK. This substance also is secreted by white blood cells and plays a role in the body's disease-fighting immune system.

"Neuroleukin also is a lymphokine, or a biological modifier like interleukin-2, that we think is important for antibody production," Gurney said in a telephone interview.

"Neuroleukin appears to have two roles in the body and acts on the two different systems that the AIDS virus affects," he continued.

> "Neuroleukin also is a lymphokine, or a biological modifier like interleukin-2, that we think is important for antibody production."
> — Chicago scientist, Dr. Mark E. Gurney

Biological modifiers, such as interferon and interleukin-2, are substances that help mobilize the immune system to attack bacteria, viruses and other material alien to the body.

While blocking NLK might explain some of the symptoms of AIDS dementia, it does not account for all of the changes seen in the brains of AIDS patients, said other experts familiar with the Chicago work.

Dr. Anthony S. Fauci, a federal AIDS expert at the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, said AIDS dementia likely is caused by multiple factors and that NLK-blocking might be one of them.

Some research indicates the AIDS virus might directly bind to nerve cells and affect them that way and other studies indicate infected cells called macrophages may secrete toxic substances that can affect brain cells, he said.

"The work with neuroleukin is promising and not inconsistent with what we know about AIDS dementia," Fauci said in an interview.

Gurney and colleagues say they found that an AIDS virus envelope protein known as gp120 is genetically and chemically similar to NLK.

The researchers, including Drs. Mark R. Lee, who now is at Temple University in Philadelphia, and David D. Ho of Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles, found that adding deactivated AIDS virus or gp120 concentrations to cultures of nerve cells prevented NLK from influencing the survival of the cells.

The AIDS virus failed to stop another chemical called nerve growth factor from doing its job with neurons, said the researchers, who noted that this growth chemical does not share the chemical similarity to gp120 that NLK has.

The researchers think nerve cells have binding sites called receptors that latch onto NLK so it can work. The gp120 viral protein, because of its likeness to NLK, may be attracted to the same receptors and keep NLK from attaching, they speculated.

AIDS is a contagious disease that attacks the body's immune system, rendering it incapable of resisting other diseases and infections.

The condition has been diagnosed in more than 40,000 Americans, of whom more than half have died, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control. No one is known to have recovered from AIDS.

Soviet pilot alleges near-miss

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal aviation officials say they have found no evidence to verify a Soviet airline pilot's report that his plane was nearly hit by a U.S. jet fighter over the New York area.

Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Fred Farrar on Thursday declined to rule out that the incident actually occurred. But he said air traffic controllers noticed no aircraft near the Soviet jetliner on their radar screens, and a replay of the radar tape showed the same thing.

Soviet officials say the Aeroflot airliner was approaching New York's Kennedy Airport on Sunday when a near-collision occurred. The Soviet Embassy in Washington has demanded an explanation.

Farrar said the United States will continue its investigation, but he added, "There's not much more we can do at the moment."

"We're not saying there wasn't something there; we're just saying that if there was, it didn't show on the radar," he said.

The Soviet pilot reported that the near-collision occurred at 1:20 p.m. Sunday over the ocean 20 miles southeast of New York at an altitude of 5,500 feet. The weather was clear at the time, Farrar said.

The pilot said a "military jet" had flown within 450 feet of his airliner, Farrar said.

U.S. officials gave Aeroflot representatives a copy of the tape of the conversation between the Soviet pilot and the Kennedy controllers, Farrar said. He said the tape gave no indication that a near-collision had occurred.

Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov said the Aeroflot pilot "noticed a fighter plane flying at the same altitude on a head-on course."

"The fighter then veered to the left at a high speed and passed at a distance of 50 to 100 yards from the airliner. The passengers in the airliner witnessed that very dangerous maneuver," he said.

Gerasimov said that after the "unprecedented and provocative" incident, the Soviet Embassy lodged a protest with the State Department.

"We expect the American side to inform us of the results of the investigation into the incident (and to) take the necessary measures to rule out the possibility of such incidents in the future," he said.

However, officials for the Defense Department, Navy and Air Force said Thursday they had no knowledge of such a near-collision.

Farrar said the FAA has been told by military officials that no U.S. planes were in the area at the time of the Soviet jetliner's descent. He also said the airport tower had no military aircraft under its control in that area at the time.

Under FAA regulations, all planes in the New York area, including military aircraft, are required to be in radio contact with air traffic controllers and to obtain the tower's permission to enter the area.

NATION in brief

Grown children eyed for welfare cuts under plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal welfare benefits would be ended for children when they reach age 18 unless they are in school or are needed at home to care for younger or disabled family members, under proposed new regulations.

Wayne A. Stanton, administrator of the federal Family Support Administration, said Thursday he has sent his proposal to the Office of Management and Budget. He said the proposed rule should appear in the Federal Register for comment in a few weeks.

Although the rule would apply nationwide, he said the impact would be felt most in New York and a few other large cities.

Mother's milk 'valuable'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lactoferrin, a natural protein found in mother's milk, may help bottle-fed babies have fewer digestive problems, the Agriculture Department says.

The Agricultural Research Service reported Thursday that adding the protein, known as milk iron, to infant formula would make it more like human milk.

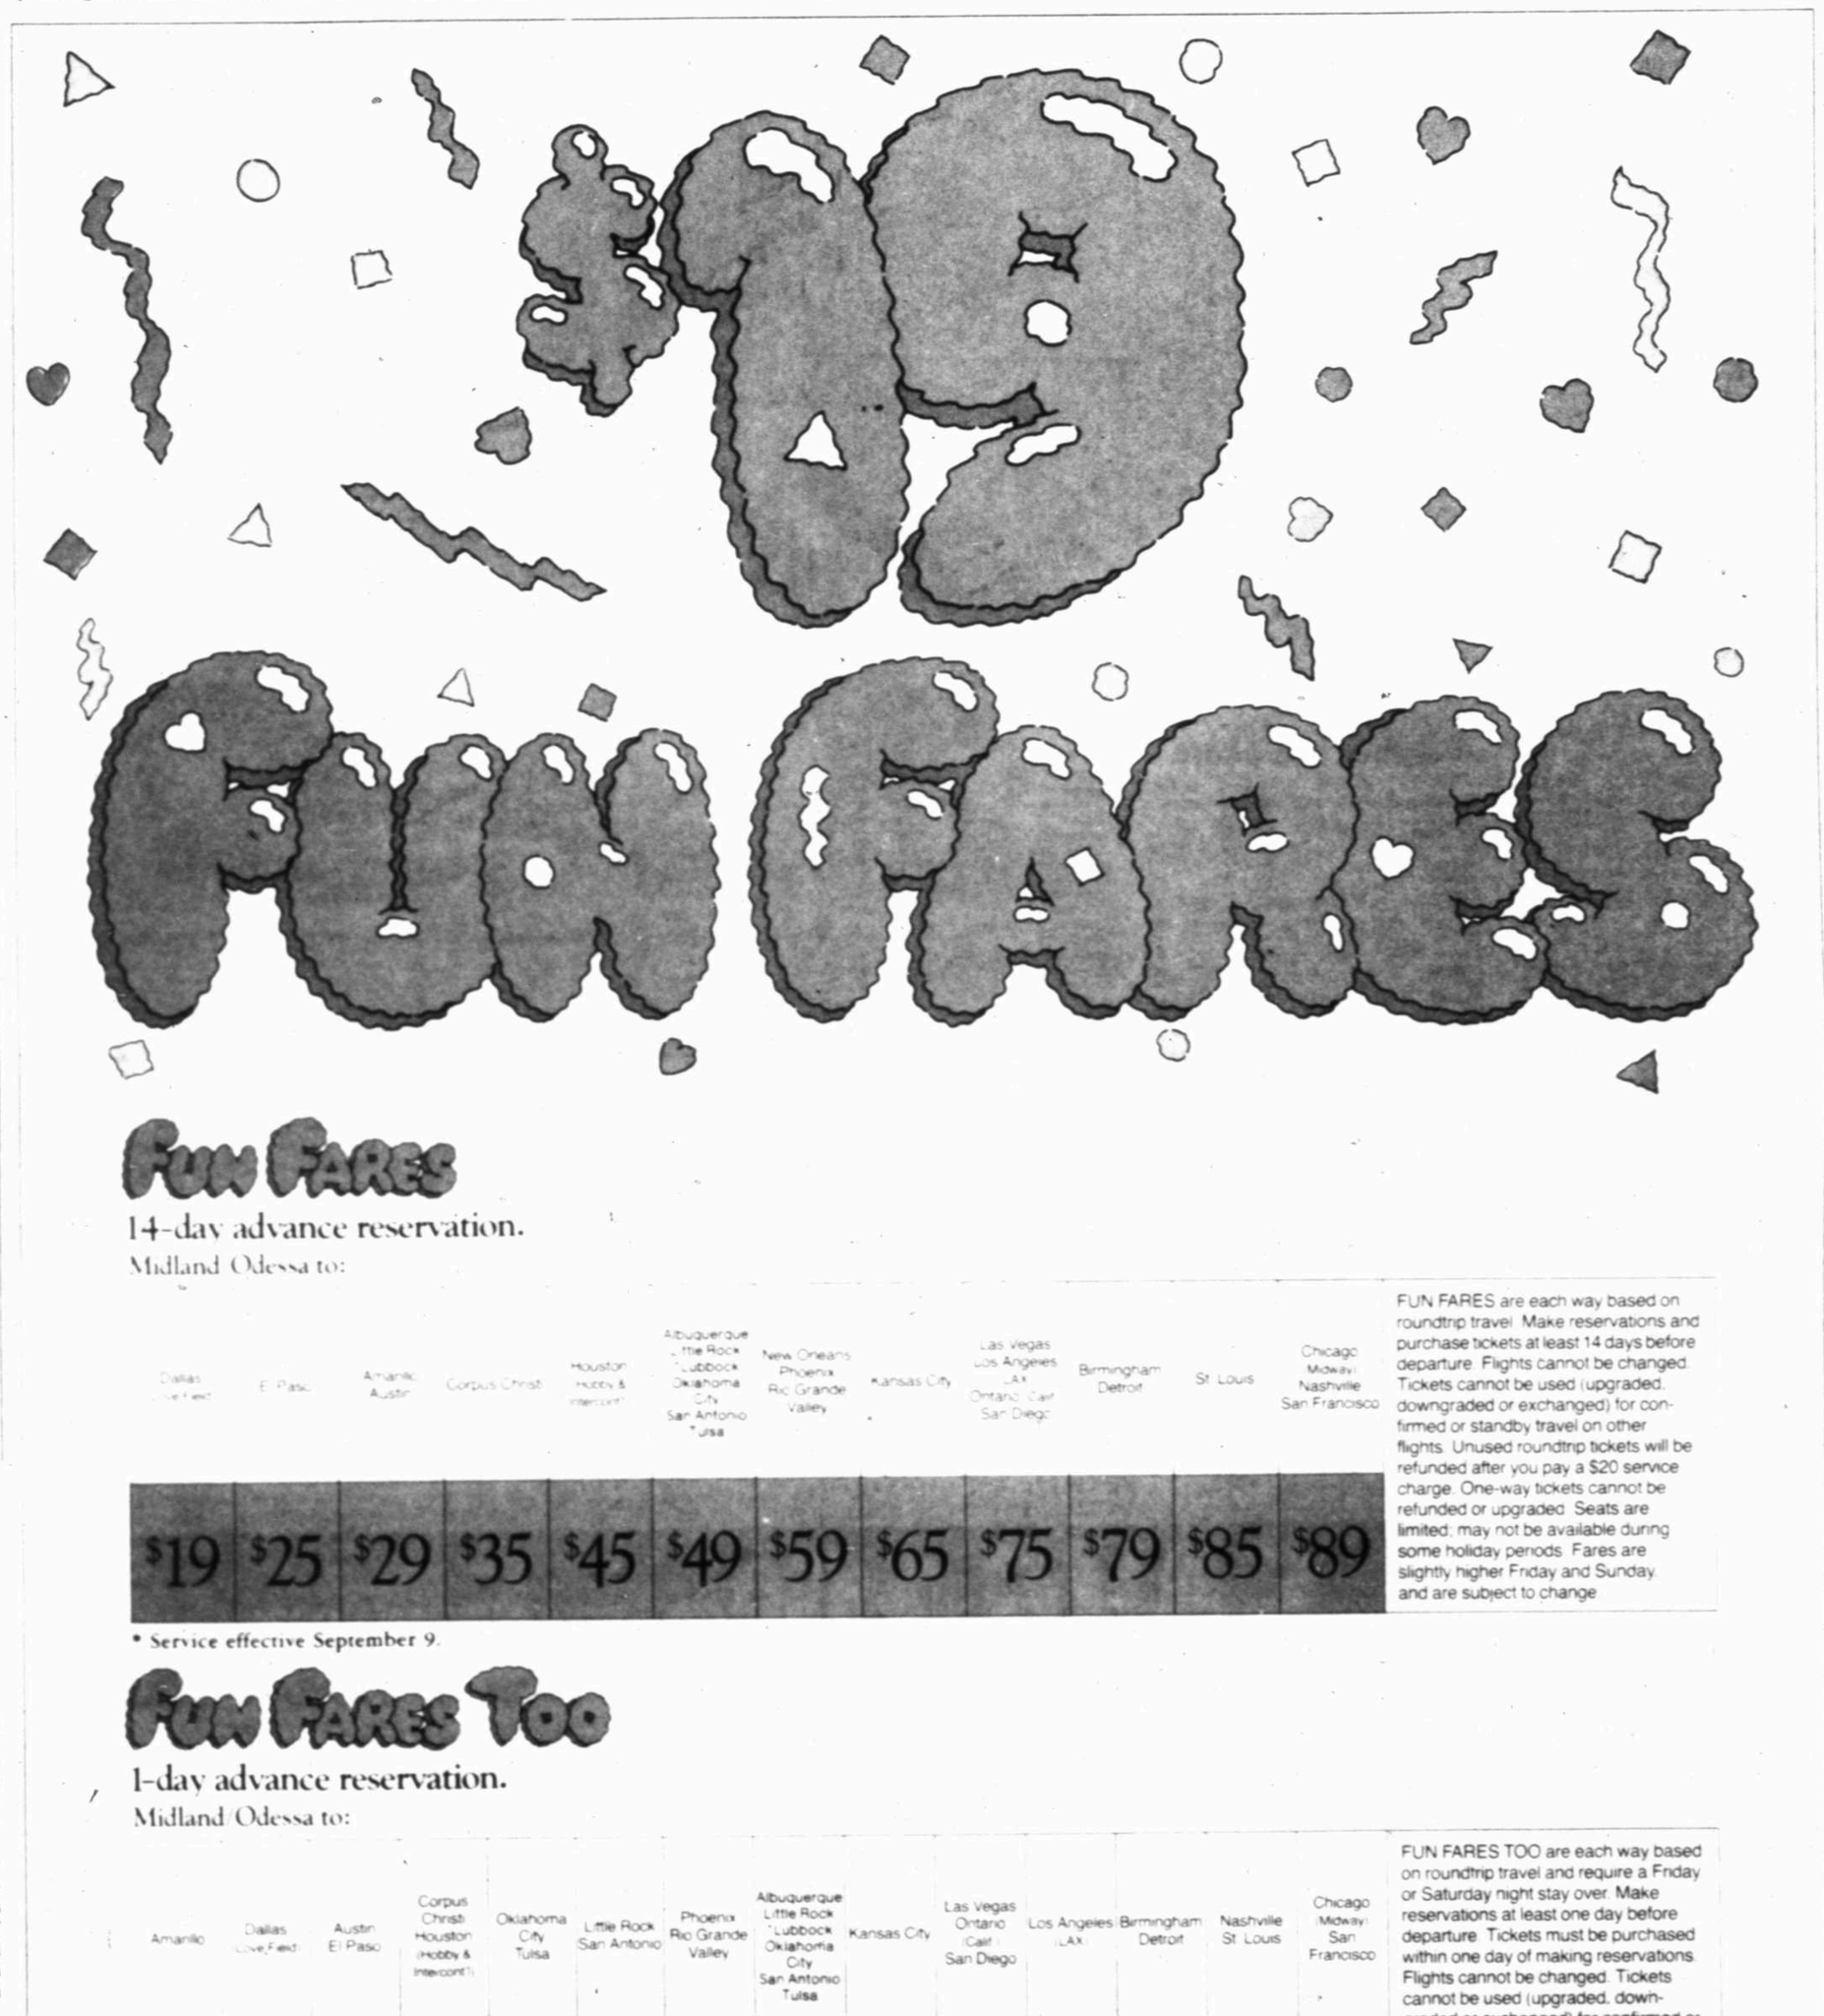

Research at the agency's Children's Nutrition Research Center in Houston shows that the protein apparently speeds growth and maturation of the gastrointestinal tract, the department said.

Elderly's wealth growing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The relative wealth of America's elderly has risen steadily over the past two decades, the Social Security Administration says.

A study by the administration says that the average income of the elderly is more than 80 percent that of the under-65 population.

The study, as have others, said much of the gains for the elderly stemmed from increases in Social Security benefits and higher interest rates that enable retirees to realize more from their investments.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Chance for rain now diminishing

From Staff and Wire Reports

The chance of showers will be diminishing to 20 percent tonight with the skies staying mostly cloudy. The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport says the low could be expected near 60 with the winds blowing out of the southeast at five to 15 mph.

Saturday will be partly cloudy with the chance of thunderstorms staying at 20 percent. The high should reach the middle 80s and winds will remain southeasterly at five to 15 mph.

Thursday's high of 85 was 15 degrees under the record high of 100 that was set for that date in 1985. Today's low of 62 was only two degrees over the record low set for this date in 1970.

STATE

A cold front moved across South Texas today, triggering showers and thunderstorms and bringing slightly cooler temperatures to a vast area.

The front early today stretched from northwest Louisiana across Southeast Texas into the middle Rio Grande plains north of Laredo.

Showers and thunderstorms were reported early today over portions of the Hill Country, South Central Texas and the Rio Grande plains. Other showers and strong thunderstorms were reported in the Trans-Pecos, the Permian Basin and the Edwards Plateau near Del Rio.

Dense fog war reported over the South Plains. Visibility at Lubbock has been reduced to about one-fourth of a mile.

It will be mostly cloudy with scattered showers and thunderstorms over the southern half of the state through Saturday. Showers and thunderstorms are also forecast through tonight over the Concho Valley and Trans-Pecos.

The rest of the state will have clear to partly cloudy skies and slightly warmer temperatures.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms splashed and rumbled from the mid-Atlantic Coast to the southern Plains today, while clear weather prevailed in the West.

Scattered showers were common in the Ohio Valley, and isolated showers and thunderstorms dotted the Gulf Coast and parts of the upper Mississippi Valley.

Skies were cloudy today over much of the nation from the Mississippi River to the Atlantic Ocean, with dense fog in the middle Mississippi Valley and western sections of the Ohio Valley.

Clear skies covered much of the Southeast, and most of the nation from the Great Plains to the Pacific Coast.

MCHD raises tax rate for 1987-88

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Citing increases in indigent care expenses, Midland County Hospital District directors voted Thursday to adopt a 1987-88 tax rate of 8.14 cents per $100 of valuation.

The figure is higher than last year's, but according to the Midland County Appraisal District, one that should garner the same amount of money.

The new rate is 8.9 percent higher than last year's adopted tax rate of 7.47 cents per $100 of valuation, said Midland Memorial Hospital Vice President of Finance Jim Kendrick.

The new tax rate should raise the district about $3,438,708 for the next fiscal year which begins Oct. 1, 1987.

The majority of the hospital district's tax dollars go to caring for the financially indigent in Midland County, Kendrick said.

That figure has increased 11-15 percent over the past three years, and MCHD directors are budgeting along that philosophy, the vice president said.

Projected totals for caring for the indigent next year are as follows: $2,954,000 to MMH; $500,000 to other hospitals; $80,000 to midwives' salaries; $49,000 to obstetricians' salaries; $10,000 for patient transfer expenses; $60,000 for indigent medicine prescriptions and — a new expense for the district — $160,000 to help defray the costs of indigent care physicians' malpractice insurance.

Board president Frank Cahoon explained at the directors' meeting Thursday all physicians at MMH are required to treat indigent patients on a rotating basis.

Those MMH physicians have found, however, indigent patients to be one of their greatest malpractice risks, Cahoon said.

To offset the skyrocketing costs of malpractice insurance costs for physicians, the district voted Thursday to help those physicians defray a "percentage" of their malpractice costs, Kendrick said.

The percentage — although budgeted at $160,000 — has yet to be cemented, Kendrick added.

Directors, however, budgeted about $300,000 less for indigent care at MMH for the upcoming fiscal year.

Kendrick said this was because the district is planning on using stringent cost containment measures with indigent patients.

In addition, the directors approved a move by the hospital to call for a 20 percent cut in the cost of its charges for indigent patients.

County hospital district directors also approved an MMH budget which estimates $46,702,947 in hospital operating expenses and $47,637,978 in operating revenues.

Budget estimates foresee a 9.49 percent increase in the next fiscal year for patient revenues, but an increase as well in the areas of uncollectible accounts.

Directors approved an MMH board of trustee recommendation Thursday which decreased the hospital's "management fee" — an account which is derived from operating revenues — from one to one-half percent.

The management fee has historically gone toward funding the hospital's healthcare insurance plan for businesses — the Premier Health Plan.

MMH President Ray Branson and Kendrick described the one percent figure as "excessive" and thus called for its decrease.

Parents in 'worst child abuse case' awarded probation

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

"What this means is that every parent in Ector County has been put on notice."
— Richard Alvarado, G. Dominguez's lawyer

ODESSA — The formal sentencing of parents Thursday apparently has ended the controversy surrounding what was initially described as "the worst child abuse case" in the memory of one veteran investigator.

District Judge Joe Connally held out hope that 22-year-old Guadalupe Dominguez and her 29-year-old husband, Genovevo, can eventually regain total custody of their 3-year-old daughter.

The fate of the child will rest in the hands of the parents during probationary periods monitored by a panel that will consist of psychologist, psychiatrists, an attorney, a representative of children services and the court.

Custody of the couple's four young sons has been restored to them.

Under a plea bargain agreement, the 22-year-old mother entered a plea of nolo contendre (no contest) to a charge of injury to a child and asked the judge to grant her probation during a brief appearance in an El Paso court Monday. A second charge against her was dismissed.

Thursday, the 244th District Court judge sentenced her to seven years probation with deferred ajudication, which means if she serves out her probated sentence without infraction of the court's rules, there will be no record of the offense.

The same situation will apply for her husband, who entered a plea of nolo contendre to a single charge of failure to report child abuse before Ector County Court-at-Law Judge George Svanas a short time after his wife was sentenced in district court.

Svanas sentenced the father to a one-year probated term, with deferred ajudication.

Richard Alvarado, representing Genovevo Dominguez, said of the sentence, "What this means is that every parent in Ector County has been put on notice. If one parent is in the habit of striking or slapping a child to discipline, then the other parent can be charged with failure to report child abuse. It's a dangerous precedent," he said.

Under the terms of probation set forth by Connally, the Dominguez's daughter will be allowed periodic visits with her parents until such time as the court may determine she should be restored to the full custody of her parents.

The panel yet-to-be named by the judge will make reports to the court every six months on the results of psychological counseling both parents will have to undergo and of visits to the parents' home.

The girl will remain in a state-designated foster home the remainder of the time.

Special Prosecutor G. David Smith described the outcome of the case as "a very common sense approach to a very difficult problem." It was "in the best interests of the child and the family," he said.

According to Alvarado, without deferred ajudication of the probated sentences, the parents would have been ineligible for the immigration amnesty program.

During a news conference immediately following the sentencing of the father, County Attorney Gary Garrison was critical of District Attorney Eric Augesen, who criticized arrangements that would allow the child to return to the home.

"It's easy to be a backseat driver in a car if you never want to get in and make a trip," Garrison said. "Mr. Augesen's comments are off base and basically he's having to look at a situation where people have gone and won a case that he said could not be won."

Bob Garcia, attorney for Mrs. Dominguez, said the couple will be under tremendous pressure. "They're going to have to meet a lot of their basic needs, just like finding a job, groceries and a place to live."

A member of the grand jury that indicted Mrs. Dominguez, Paula Abders, said Thursday, "The grand jury worked very, very hard on this" and she said she doesn't understand why the district attorney is upset. "I find it very strange," she told those attending a news conference.

Mrs. Abders said, "If it were not for the grand jury, this case would never have been resolved."

The charges against the Dominguez couple grew out of investigation of an examination of the child Dec. 31, 1986, at Women's and Children's Hospital.

The results of the examination prompted filing of charges against Dominguez of aggravated sexual assault, injury to a child and failure to report child abuse. Mrs. Dominguez was charged with injury to a child and failure to report child abuse.

Subsequent examination by several doctors slightly more than three weeks after the initial examination, which indicated the child had not been sexually assaulted or burned with a cigarette, prompted Augesen to dismiss the felony charges against Dominguez. That action left only misdemeanor charges, which he turned over to Garrison.

The county attorney carried the case alleging two charges of injury to a child against Mrs. Dominguez to the grand jury, which finally indicted her.

Suit against Odessa moved to Midland

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Tena Walker's federal lawsuit against the city of Odessa for alleged age discrimination and violations of her free-speech rights under the United States Constitution has been transferred to Midland from Abilene.

Ms. Walker, the 60-year-old former Odessa city secretary, contends that she was fired on May 14, 1985, "solely" because of her age, which then was 58, and partly because she had "criticized in public and in closed meetings of the City of Odessa City Council certain policies and procedures" of the Odessa city government.

She had been city secretary for 10 years.

Her firing was motivated in part "by a desire to retaliate" against her for "exercising her (free-speech) rights" which are protected and guaranteed by the Texas and United States constitutions, Ms. Walker said in her initial complaint, which was filed last May in Abilene in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Texas. Midland is in the court system's Western District.

Additionally, Ms. Walker claims that her firing was in violation of the good-faith and fair-dealing covenant which was "impressed upon" her job contract by the common law of Texas.

In its defense, the city of Odessa maintains that its actions toward Ms. Walker were in "good faith" and "without wrongful motive or intent," that it did not discriminate against Ms. Walker because of her age or because of her exercise of her free-speech rights.

Rather, "the employment relationship" between Ms. Walker and the city of Odessa "ended because of business necessity related to budgetary and monetary problems" experienced by the city of Odessa.

Ms. Walker, who moved to Carbon in Eastland County after she left Odessa, filed the lawsuit in federal court in Abilene rather than in Midland federal court.

Ms. Walker reasoned that the Abilene venue was "proper" because "the effect" of her alleged discrimination "is being felt" in the Northern District where she resides and because in Abilene, the city of Odessa would not "enjoy the benefit of defending on its own turf the unlawful wrongs committed against" her.

The city of Odessa disagreed.

In a July 1987 affidavit by Odessa City Manager John Harrison, Harrison noted that "it would be far more convenient" to hold a trial, rooted in Odessa, in Midland than in Abilene. Midland is about 20 miles from Odessa, and Abilene is about 167 miles from Odessa.

Harrison noted that Odessa's personnel records and City Council minutes are in Odessa and that the defendant's witnesses are in Odessa.

"The city of Odessa, because of the significant decline in the oil and gas industry, is currently operating under significant budgetary restraints," Harrison said in the affidavit. "Because of the travel and lodging expenses necessary for the defendant's representatives and witnesses, it would be considerably less costly for the City to try this case in Midland."

In ordering the case transferred to Midland, Senior U.S. District Court Judge Halbert O. Woodward of Lubbock noted that the case arose in Odessa. The judge said that Ms. Walker's arguments that the "cause of action arose in the Northern District" because the city of Odessa "continually refused to reinstate her" after she moved to Carbon "are not supported by law."

"The cause of action did not arise, either in whole or in part, in the Northern District of Texas when the plaintiff removed her residence to the Northern District," the judge ruled. Woodward said that Ms. Walker's suit "is based on the allegedly wrongful discharge" and not on the city's refusal to reinstate her.

County fees to be increased Tuesday

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Dozens of county fees will increase next week, from changes in criminal court costs to hefty increases in the price of obtaining copies of birth and death certificates.

According to Midland County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry, copies of birth certificates will cost $7.50 rather than $5 per copy beginning Tuesday. The price for death certificates also jumped from $5 to $7.50 for the first copy and $2 for each additional copy.

The cost of using the county law library will increase from $10 to $20 next week. Court costs imposed to finance the county's alternate dispute resolution system doubled from $5 to $10.

Filing fees for candidates seeking election to various county offices will go up, as well. Filing fees for county judge and county commissioner posts jumped from $300 to $600. Justice of the peace and constable filing fees will increase from $200 to $300.

Fees relating to the handling charges for district and county clerk trust funds may not be less than $50 under a law that goes into effect Monday.

A law establishing a Law Enforcement Management Institute will be financed with a special fund collected from the increase of criminal court costs. Those costs rose by 50 cents.

New fees collected by the county court in civil cases will go into effect Tuesday. The fees include, abstracts of judgment, $5; issuance and recording returns for writs and orders of sale, $5. Filing fees in justice court rose from $7 to $15. Copies of court transcripts will cost $10, while abstracts, writs and orders of sale will cost $5.

Fees concerning the operation of motor vehicles will increase this week as well.

Beginning Tuesday, the county will charge a $10 fee to persons enrolled in driver safety courses, said Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

Motorists unable to prove liability insurance will be subject to a $175 fine rather than a $100 fine, said Pine.

Motorists who fail to carry proof of liability insurance will have to pay at $10 fine to have the case dismissed, Pine said.

Man convicted of manslaughter faces sentencing

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

The trial of a former Midland parks groundskeeper who was accused of murder but convicted of voluntary manslaughter Thursday was to enter the punishment phase of deliberations this morning.

Manuel Parra Gonzales, 35, of Midland, was convicted of the lesser charge by an 8-man, 4-woman jury in 142nd Judicial District court.

In his summation, District Attorney Al Schorre told the jury that "we forget who has suffered and who's the victim in a particular case."

A Midland County grand jury May 14 indicted Gonzales for the April 23 shooting of Ruben Huitron of Midland, a distant cousin, with a .30-30-caliber rifle.

Gonzales earlier this week testified that he had been raped by the victim in 1974 and had suffered taunts from the man "on many occasions for a number of years," according to his attorney, Jeff Hinkley of Midland.

On the day of the shooting, Gonzales had searched for Huiton to find out why the man kept taunting him and to ask him to stop, Hinkley said the defendant testified.

Schorre told the jury that Hinkley had "attempted to shift or divert the attention in the case.

"If Mr. Gonzales had walked into my office and said, 'I want to file a suit of sexual assault,' I would have had to say, 'Mr. Gonzales, the statute of limitations has run out on that case,'" Schorre said.

And even if he had been able to prosecute on a sexual assault charge, "I could not have asked for the punishment he assessed Mr. Huitron," Schorre said.

The district attorney warned the jury, "If we allow this to go unpunished, it's back to an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, the Hatfields and the McCoys and the Huitrons and the Gonzaleses.

"And we can paint this town red," he said.

The jury, based on instructions from Judge Pat Baskin, could have convicted the man on charges of murder, voluntary manslaughter or involuntary manslaughter — or found him not guilty.

Mauro calls reports of improprieties 'nonsense'

AUSTIN (AP) — Published reports suggesting improprieties in his handling of an $18 million state contract awarded to a mortgage company that later loaned him money are nonsense, Land Commissioner Garry Mauro says.

Mauro and his staff on Thursday presented an hour-long defense of the contract with Dallas-based Lomas and Nettleton to administer a veterans housing loan program.

Lomas and Nettleton, headed by Democratic Party fund-raiser Jess Hay, was sole bidder for the contract despite what Mauro said were repeated attempts to attract more bids.

"I think we just showed that we put this out for competitive bids three times. We were trying to find, and we did find, the best possible way to administer the housing program for the veterans of this state," Mauro said.

"Unfortunately, from only my political perspective, there was only a single bid. The bid that Lomas and Nettleton made was absolutely competitive by any definition of the word," Mauro said.

He said that in addition to the formal request for additional bids he personally contacted other financial institutions.

"We have a 30-day cancellation clause in this contract and if any lender wants to come in and underbid Lomas and Nettleton and take over the central administration of this contract, we're ready to talk to them right now, yesterday, tomorrow," Mauro said.

Asked if his personal and business loans from Lomas and Nettleton included any unusually advantageous terms, he said, "Absolutely, unequivocally no."

Mauro said he is paying 10.875 percent interest on a $71,100 Lomas and Nettleton loan for a condominium he bought in Washington, where his wife works. According to documents released by his office, the interest rate was slightly higher than the Washington and Texas averages at the time.

The business loan involved the purchase of a 38-acre tract near St. Petersburg, Fla., on which a joint venture that included Mauro and his cousin Don Mauro planned to build an apartment complex. Don Mauro said the interest rate on that loan is 16.25 percent, which he said was above the average.

Garry Mauro owns 10 percent of that joint venture and called himself a "passive investor" who did not know of Lomas and Nettleton's involvement.

The land commissioner said the published news reports linking his personal business with the veterans housing program were nonsense. He pointed out that the Lomas and Nettleton contract also was approved by Jack Rains, who, at the time, was the only other member of the Veterans Land Board.

DEATHS

Charles R. Archer

Archer

Graveside services for Charles R. Archer, 67, of Midland, will be Saturday at 11 a.m. in the Fairmont Cemetery in San Angelo. Ellis Funeral Home will be in charge of arrangements.

Archer died at his daughter's home Thursday.

He was born Oct. 2, 1919, in San Angelo and attended the Texas School for the Deaf in Austin. While in school, he met Thelma Hutton and they were married Aug. 27, 1937. They would have celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary the day of his death.

They made their home in San Angelo and Monahans before moving to Midland in 1956. Archer was a proofreader for the Midland Reporter-Telegram for 20 years. He spent his last years working with and for deaf people. He was instrumental in having telecommunicators placed in Midland Memorial Hospital, Midland Fire Department, Midland Regional Airport, the Odessa Fire Department, the Abilene Fire Department, Abilene Police Department, one Abilene hospital and the rehabilitation center there. In 1985, he was presented with the Volunteer Award by Texas Association of the Deaf.

He was Director of Regions VII of Telecommunications of the Deaf Inc. from 1983-1987, a member of the Texas Association of the Deaf, and was presented with the honor of Editor Emeritus for GA-SK newsletter for Telecommunications of the Deaf, Inc. June 6, 1986.

Survivors include his wife of Midland; two daughters, Peggy Zugg of Midland and Norma Grimes of Victoria; one brother, Doyle Eugene Archer of Dallas; four sisters, LaRue Samford of Suffolk, Ariz., Dorothy Scokpol of San Diego, Calif., Betty Jo Kelly of West, and Joy Hunt of Tyler; six grandchildren; four great-grandchildren; one niece and five nephews.

Memorials can be referred to Hospice of Midland, P. O. Box 2621, 79702.

Peggy Joy Brideweser

Peggy Joy Brideweser, 62, of Midland, died at a local hospital Wednesday.

A rosary was recited Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Ellis Funeral Home chapel. Funeral Mass was to be today at 1 p.m. in St. Ann's Catholic Church with the Rev. Fred Nawarskas officiating. Burial was to follow in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

She was born Dec. 28, 1924, in Holiday and was reared in San Angelo, where she attended school. In the early 1940s, she moved to Los Angeles, where she married George E. Brideweser in January of 1944. In 1949, they moved to Midland and she became employed with several different retail businesses. She worked for the Hilton Hotel as a cashier for eight years before retiring in 1984.

She was member of St. Ann's Catholic Church.

Survivors include five sons, Ronald D. Brideweser, Christopher P. Brideweser, John E. Brideweser, all of Midland, Robert M. Brideweser of Costa Mesa, Calif., and Philip D. Brideweser of Austin; one brother, John L. Spurgers of Abilene; one grandchild and two nephews.

Martha D. Zorn

PLANO — Martha D. Zorn, 67, of Plano, formerly of Midland, died Wednesday at a medical center in Dallas.

Graveside services are scheduled for Saturday at 10:30 a.m. at Kermit Cemetery with the Rev. Barbara Blaisdale of Plano officiating. Arrangements are being handled by Cooper Funeral Home in Kermit.

She was born Sept. 11, 1919, in Fort Worth. She married William John Zorn Jr. on Nov. 25, 1944 in Portales, N.M. He preceded her in death on March 7, 1987.

She was a retired secretary for Whitaker & Brooks law offices in Midland and was a former resident of Midland and Kermit before moving to Plano.

Survivors include two sons, Richard B. Zorn of Plano and James R. Zorn of El Paso; and four grandchildren.

Prather Benedict

GRAHAM — Services for Prather Benedict, 82, of Austin, formerly of Midland, were held Monday in Graham under the direction of Cook-Walden Funeral Home.

He was the son of pioneer Midlanders, C.P. and Mamie Benedict. He was born in Midland June 13, 1905, and graduated from Midland High School in 1923.

He attended the University of Texas and later enlisted in the U.S. Navy Air Corps. He spent many years in the Philippines prior to and during World War II.

He was also an Episcopalian.

Survivors include one daughter, Ginger Huske of Austin; two grandchildren; three nieces and three nephews.

Mary Magdalena Hope

Mary Magdalena Hope, 93, of Midland, died Tuesday at a local nursing home.

Graveside services were to be today at 2 p.m. at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Sizemore Funeral Home.

She was born on April 14, 1894, in the Indian Territory. She was a homemaker and a member of the Jehovah Witnesses Church.

Survivors include three daughters, one son and 12 grandchildren.

Robot dinosaurs invade Dallas

By JAY JORDEN

DALLAS (AP) — Giant reptiles arch their long necks and roar among the rocks and leafy ferns in an exhibit of robot dinosaurs that startles museum-goers with an eerie look at prehistory.

One of the nine lifelike dinosaurs was even seen stalking through a representation of the Dallas skyline at The Science Place I at Fair Park. Museum officials predict the exhibit, "Robot Dinosaurs Invade Dallas," will draw hundreds of thousands of tourists through next spring.

"This is the hottest exhibit going in the science museum circuit today," Richard F. Coyne, president of The Science Place, said Thursday.

The robots, created by a California company which has manufactured them for other museum exhibits across the country, have foam-rubber skins and sinews of aluminum and steel.

The creatures bellow, blink their eyes and stomp their feet as individual computers control air pressure to pneumatic pumps. Paleontologists and others studied fossil bones, also in the exhibit, for the robots' construction.

In one exhibit, a replica of a carnivorous Tyrannosaurus rex gnashes its teeth and roars as a volcanic cone spews steam in the background. Almost 400 people previewed the $1 million exhibit Wednesday night.

"A great deal of the exhibit was designed with the help of a committee of leading paleontologists," Coyne said. "The noises made by the robots were amplified and derived from sounds made by the lizards and reptiles of today."

He said Dinamation International Corp. of California was completing a 10th robot dinosaur which will become a part of the exhibit in September. The dinosaurs are not to scale of the adult creatures but approximate the size of juvenile reptiles.

"It is really something to see them roaring and screaming and to see the expressions on children's faces," said Coyne. "Most of them are not afraid. They've just never seen anything so big."

But not all reacted to the crested Parasaurolophus like Matthew York, 6.

"I love these dinosaurs!" he yelled, jumping up and down. "They're so big!"

But his brother, Christopher, 3½, was wide-eyed with fear.

"I'm really scared," he said.

North wanted Perot to fund Contras, Earl says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lt. Col. Oliver North drew up a plan to use as much as $2 million that Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot put up for a hostage ransom effort for the Nicaraguan Contras, newly declassified testimony has revealed.

The testimony came from Marine Lt. Col. Robert Earl, who was North's deputy on the National Security Council staff, who told Iran-Contra committee investigatbrs earlier this summer that he learned about the scheme in May 1986.

Earl said he learned of the scheme only a week or two before Perot dispatched a courier to the Mediterranean with money to buy the freedom of U.S. hostages in Beirut.

The deal fell through, and Earl said Perot's money never was diverted to the Central American rebels.

North, the fired White House aide at the center of the Iran-Contra scandal, defended the plan to con Perot by citing his concern about funding for the Nicaraguan rebel army, Earl told the investigators.

"Colonel North had confided to me...that this whole process had so affected him that he had even conceived of a plan that he could get money from Ross Perot for the Contras by having him deposit some money, ostensibly for hostages, but that it would go to the Contras," Earl said.

Earl described the plan during closed-door questioning by congressional investigators last May. A declassified transcript of Earl's testimony was released Thursday.

Earl, one of the few U.S. officials known to have been aware that North funneled Iranian arms-sale profits to the Contras, said North told him about the Iranian fund diversion and claimed also to have told late CIA Director William Casey.

Perot could not be reached for comment because he is traveling abroad, a spokesman said.

Earl did not provide a specific amount that North planned to solicit from Perot for the Contras.

But Perot has previously confirmed that North asked him in May 1986 to provide $2 million for a secret ransom effort mounted with the assistance of U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency agents in the Middle East.

Perot, former Electronics Data Systems chairman, known for his efforts to free U.S. prisoners of war in Vietnam and his daring 1979 rescue of EDS employees from a Tehran prison, sent the money to Cyprus for a planned ship-to-ship exchange that never materialized.

The money was later returned, but Perot has said that $300,000 he gave North for two previous ransom efforts was not returned.

Dallas woman offers hungry, homeless home-cooked meals

By CAROL TRUJILLO

DALLAS (AP) — Clara B Sanders' dining room is a downtown Dallas parking lot. Her table is the hood of her car. Her menu is simple home cooking. Her guests are the hungry and homeless.

Using generous helpings of faith and the modest earnings from her part-time job as a maid, the 61-year-old grandmother serves hot lunch every Saturday for many of the city's poor.

"I don't take anything down there that I wouldn't eat myself," she said as she mixed a vat of cornbread at her small, crowded Oak Cliff home, where Bibles cover the coffee table and caldron-sized cookware fills the dining room.

On a recent Saturday, she served blackeyed peas, beef and macaroni, cornbread muffins, strudel, coffee, tea and milk to about 45 people, a smaller-than-usual crowd. She said she once served 130.

Mrs. Sanders' guests waited in the parking lot at Cadiz and Harwood streets near homeless shelters downtown. They called her "the lady in the gray car."

Mrs. Sanders, a tall, large woman whose dark hair and unlined face belie her years, flashed her trademark smile. "When they see me coming they start clapping," she said.

In the noon sun, the meal was quick and organized. Mrs. Sanders and a helper, Annie Jones, spread the hood with a vinyl tablecloth, then set out the main courses, coolers filled with drinks and paper utensils and plates.

Bustling from one side of the car to the other, Mrs. Sanders refilled paper cups and chatted with her regulars.

Some put in requests for potato pie or bread pudding. Few thanked her.

"If they didn't say anything, really, I'd be here. That's not what I'm looking for. But it feels good to be recognized," she said.

Last month, she received a Dallas Congressional Citizenship Award from U.S. Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas.

Mrs. Sanders said she would gladly trade recognition for helpers and practical goods, such as a folding table, large pots and mixing bowls and refrigerator space.

Some have already pitched in.

A discount grocery store donates dry goods, and a neighbor givers her fresh garden vegetables. Church members sometimes help serve.

To stretch the meals as far as possible, Mrs. Sanders makes sure everyone has had a plateful before she serves seconds.

Still, she has run out of food before her patrons ran out of appetite.

"Yes, they get angry," she said. "But I never worry (about safety). I believe that good comes out of the Lord's work. And if something bad did happen to me, I'm sure something good would come from it."

So far, the worst thing about serving is washing dishes afterward, she said.

She has not missed a week since she started the parking-lot meals eight months ago after a Thanksgiving feast.

"There was so much food. Everybody has so much food," she said about that repast. "It was just a waste to me."

She though about the homeless she often saw downtown, and she remembered when she was sometimes hungry as a girl growing up in Forney, Texas. But there were obstacles.

"I didn't have any money. It takes everything from the work I do to keep things going here," she said. "I decided I could go without a few meals a week to buy food for them."

She stopped working on Fridays so she could have enough time to shop and prepare for Saturday's cooking, which she starts as early as 4:30 a.m.

Parents want Vatican to void sex education decision

SHINER (AP) — A group of angry parents is asking the Vatican to overturn a decision by Catholic school officials that their children must attend a sex education class.

Eleven parents who have had children in St. Ludmila's Elementary School in Shiner signed the petition of administrative recourse to the Vatican.

The petition asks that the Vatican overturn a decision of Peter Pontolillo, who oversees the Catholic schools in San Antonio and Victoria dioceses, requiring the children to study the Benziger Family Life Series.

"I don't have any complaints about anybody that wants that," said Johnnine Leininger, one of the parents. "But I don't, and I don't want that rammed down my throat."

The Benziger series is an education program for grades 1 to 8 that covers a variety of family and health topics, including sex education.

The complaining parents said the series covers explicit topics, which should not be discussed with both boys and girls present.

Pontolillo said the Benziger program has been used in most San Antonio parochial schools for at least five years with no complaints and only a few of the 120 families in the Shiner school have protested it.

"When you try to sit down with them, all you get is this hysterical approach that it's vile and pornographic, which is not true," Pontolillo said. "They just don't listen to reason."

Mary Ann Bunel, another parent, said five parents had withdrawn students from the school to protest the course.

"My child is not ready for this sort of thing," she said. "They should be teaching chastity and morality."

The parents originally took their complaint to the principal, Paul Cabler, who allowed them to withdraw their children from the Benziger clases.

But in March, Pontolillo told the principal that the children must take the series or withdraw from the school.

"I feel very protective of my rights as a parent," Leininger, who has nine children, told the San Antonio Light. "Teaching them details of sexual intercourse is my prerogative."

The dissenting parents filed a protest with Bishop Charles Grahmann of Victoria in April, then sent it to the papal pro nuncio in Washington after the Victoria chancery rejected their plea.

Red & Red Hots play at Joey's this weekend

From Staff Reports

Red & the Red Hots, a band that specializes in the Big Band sound of the 1940s, will be appearing at Joey's tonight and Saturday night beginning at 9:30 p.m. each night.

Joey's is located at the corner of Midland and Neely in the Mesa Verde Shopping Center.

Red Young, the band's namesake, is a vocalist and plays the keyboard. He is joined by two female singers as well as musicians performing on acoustic bass, drums and horns.

'White racist programming' to air

HOUSTON (AP) — The Ku Klux Klan next week will sponsor "white racist programming" on a public access channel, a Klan leader says.

The purpose of the programs is to educate white people about "reverse discrimination" and improve the Klan's image, Texas Grand Dragon Charles Lee said Thursday.

"Our first program will be an hourlong documentary that's going to show our side of the Ku Klux Klan starting with our history up to today," Lee said.

The programming begins next Tuesday, and Lee said he hopes to air programs once a month on Access Houston, a non-profit company that runs two educational cable channels.

Access Houston executive director Tomas J. Cantrell said the public access channels are available to anyone, and there is no censorship.

Midland Pride Day postponed

Midlander jailed for drug charges

From Staff Reports

Police Roundup

A 33-year-old Midland man was in Midland County Jail this morning following his arrest Thursday afternoon on charges of felony possession of marijuana and possession of cocaine.

According to Midland County Sheriff's Department reports, the man was taken into custody about 3:05 p.m. after deputies entered a residence in the 3600 block of Caldera Blvd. with a search warrant and discovered three to four pounds of what is believed to be marijuana. Deputies also found a white powdery substance believed to be cocaine, the report said.

Sheriff's department officials said formal charges against the man were expected to be filed today. No bond has been set.

Crickets, an occasional nuisance, seldom 'major' problem in homes

Minzenmayer

House crickets are about seven-eighths of an inch long, yellow-brown or straw-colored. The house cricket, like the field cricket, has long, slender antennae that are much longer than the body. The wings on adult crickets lay flat on the back but are bent down abruptly on the sides. Adult female crickets have a long, slender, tube-like structure projecting from their abdomen which they use to lay eggs. Both males and females have two antennae-like structures, called cerci, that are attached to the sides at the end of the abdomen.

House crickets can live indefinitely in homes or other structures. They are able to complete their life cycle inside buildings, laying their eggs in cracks, crevices and other dark areas such as behind baseboards.

When raised under ideal conditions each female house cricket will lay an average of 728 eggs. The nymphs look much like the adults except that they do not have wings. They molt seven to eight times and take about 60 days to reach the adult stage. House crickets in the wild have only one generation per year. The eggs hatch in the spring and reach the adult stage by late summer.

House crickets are seldom a major problem in homes, apparently preferring to live outside during warm weather. They will move indoors when it gets colder. House crickets can damage clothing and some people object to the presence or the chirping noise the males make by rubbing their wings together.

House crickets can be prevented from entering buildings by the application of a residual insecticide in a six to eight foot band around the perimeter of the structure. Bendiocarb, chlorpyrifos, diazinon, malathion, propoxur and pyrethrins are all labeled for cricket control. Propoxur bait is also an effective control if spread in cricket harborage areas. Residual sprays or dusts applied indoors for cockroach control also effectively control crickets.

International farm trends down

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rural areas were once thought to be the part of the nation most remote from world and national economic trends, but not any more, says an Agriculture Department political scientist.

"Now they seem to be at least as exposed to international developments as the rest of the nation," says Norman Reid of the department's Economic Research Service.

Here are some of his assertions:

— Economic problems in many rural areas appear to be associated with world trends and events, including energy and export developments.

— Many new U.S. energy enterprises such as the manufacture of fuel-grade alcohol from grain became feasible as a result of high prices set by oil-exporting nations.

— Energy production boomed in the late 1970s and early 1980s, and prosperity associated with the boom was especially prevalent in rural regions of the West and Southwest.

— The collapse of fuel prices has produced "a significant portion of the current rural regional distress."

— New developments in foreign food and fiber production also have been detrimental to parts of the U.S. agricultural sector.

— Rural manufacturing also has been hit, although it has fared better in the South than in other areas.

"Employment in U.S. manufacturing has shown relatively little growth in recent years, mainly because we have learned how to produce more with fewer suppliers," Reid says in the latest issue of Farmline magazine. "The Southeast, historically one of the poorest regions, gained jobs rapidly in the 1970s, largely through the growth of goods-producing firms.

"But because of increases in labor productivity, it is doubtful that textiles and some other kinds of manufacturers in that region will provide as many jobs as they did in earlier years."

Rural areas will be affected increasingly by shifting big-picture economic developments and foreign trade conditions, Reid said. Those with the capacity to adjust will stand the best chances of survival.

In a related report released recently, the Commerce Department said individual incomes in different parts of the United States have widened the last 10 years as growth in booming coastal states outstripped that in the rest of the country.

From 1929 until 1979, differences in individual incomes in different geographic areas had been narrowing. But since 1979, those differences have widened dramatically, the Commerce report said.

"We are seeing a falloff in the industrial, agricultural and mineral heartland of the country while services, defense and high-tech industries have prospered," said Commerce Department analyst Rudolph DePass, who prepared the report.

In his USDA report, political scientist Reid said:

"The services and trade industries are increasingly vital to rural economic growth, while smokestack industries are declining in importance. This trend suggests that traditional policies to attract jobs by building physical infrastructure (including roads, bridges and industrial parks) may no longer be successful — if they ever were."

Healthful trend in eating habits 'healthy' for fruit industry future

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Population growth, plus a turn to more healthful foods and innovations in processing and packaging are some of the factors supporting further growth in the U.S. fruit industry, an Agriculture Department economist says.

"There will be fewer fruit farms, continued development of new varieties and increased bearing acreage for several fruits," said Ben W. Huang of the department's Economic Research Service. "Total fruit production in the long run is expected to increase more than population growth."

Approximately 88 percent of the nation's total deciduous fruit comes from seven states: California, Hawaii, Michigan, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania and Washington. Citrus fruit is concentrated in only four: Arizona, California, Florida and Texas.

Production of deciduous fruit will continue to center mostly on the West Coast. California will remain the dominant producer, probably increasing its share of the market still further.

California leads all states in deciduous fruits except apples and cherries. In 1985, for example, California produced 58 percent of all deciduous output, including all U.S. production of dates, figs, kiwifruit, nectarines, olives and pomegranates.

Washington, New York and Michigan are the leading apple producers, accounting for 54 percent of the 1985 harvest.

California and South Carolina produced 80 percent of the 1985 peach crop. Grapes are grown commercially in several states, although 90 percent of the U.S. production is in California.

Among the important deciduous fruits, apple production — a commercial crop in at least 35 states — will be growing faster than the population, Huang said. Dwarf and semidwarf apple trees planted in the past are expected to have greater per-acre yields.

In some cases, a particular apple variety has caught on. Huang cited the Granny Smith as an example in which greater consumer demand has stimulated large plantings of trees in California and Washington, promising larger future production.

"Increased acreage for avocados, grapes, kiwifruit, nectarines and plums will further boost production of these fruits in California," he said in a recent annual report on the fruit situation. "Recent plantings of new-variety pears are expected to result in increased production in Oregon and Washington."

Huang said no further uprooting of clingstone peach trees in California is expected, as the supply and demand for canned peaches recently have improved greatly.

About two-thirds of the total U.S. fruit output goes into processed items, but Huang said there have been shifts in the relative importance of the ways fruit is processed.

In citrus use, for example, a large share of the oranges used for processing go into frozen concentrated orange juice. Processing of deciduous fruit has leaned away from canning toward drying, freezing and other types of processing.

"With the expectation of increased fruit production, the processing fruit industry will further improve facilities and equipment," Huang said. "Processing plants will adopt more automated operations."

In his report and in an interview, Huang said recent technological advances have left their mark on fruit processing and that more are sure to follow.

One improvement that shows promise is the "steril-vac process" in which air is removed from both the fruit and its container but does not dilute the flavor and nutrients with water, syrup or brine used in conventional canning methods, he said.

Another is a solar-drying system using an inexpensive polyethylene heat collector for drying fruit, particularly raisins.

The process of dehydrofreezing will continue to provide a potential technique for fruit used in manufacturing products such as bakery goods, Huang said.

One innovation that has been on store shelves for some time has proved a favorite of children, he said. The juices, in various flavors, are put into small, individual-sized containers made of moisture-proof paper and foil, which can be stored on shelves without refrigeration until ready for use.

Consumer use of dairy goods growing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The farmer-supported National Dairy Board says consumer use of milk and other products continues to expand, including a 5.7 percent increase in cheese consumption.

Ice cream consumption was up 2.5 percent during the board's fiscal year that ended April 30, and milk use increased nearly 1 percent, the board said Monday in its annual report.

Since the board was established in 1984, dairy product sales have risen nearly 10 percent, the largest three-year gain in the industry's history, said Joseph J. Westwater, the dairy board's chief excutive officer.

Help on way for chickpea fungus

WASHINGTON (AP) — This year's Pacific Northwest crop of chickpeas, or garbanzos, a regular fare at salad bars in many parts of the country, has been riddled by fungus, but the Agriculture Department says help is on the way from the war-torn Mideast.

A fungal disease called Ascochyta blight is leaving fields of chickpeas looking as if "someone went through them with a blowtorch," said Walter J. Kaiser Jr., a plant pathologist in the department's Agricultural Research Service in Pullman, Wash.

Kaiser and other researchers have identified genetic resistance to the fungus in chickpea plants collected by the International Center for Agricultural Research, Aleppo, Syria.

The scientists plan to use the new plant material, or germplasm, to breed blight resistance into commercial varieties of chickpeas, the agency said Wednesday in a report released here.

Meanwhile, the Pullman chickpea team said farmers can rid their fields of the blight temporarily by plowing under straw and other crop residues. Agency scientists discovered the disease in 1983.

Kaiser said this year's blight wiped out more than half of the $6 million chickpea crop planted on 15,000 acres in eastern Washington and northwestern Idaho, the largest producing area in the country.

Another 6,000 to 8,000 acres of chickpeas are grown in coastal valleys of southcentral California and are not affected so far by the disease.

EARNEST KIKER

Time to plant, transplant 'cole' crops

Kiker

Hot weather in Texas means it's time to plant and transplant "cole" crops. "Cole" refers to any of various plants belonging to the Cruciferae or mustard family, including such cool-season crops as Brussel sprouts, cabbage, cauliflower, collards, kale, kohlrabi, mustard, broccoli, turnips and watercress.

Cole crops enjoy cool seasons and are somewhat cold tolerant. Cabbage, for instance, can withstand cold down to 20 degrees Fahrenheit, or even 15 degrees Fahrenheit. Cauliflower and chard are more sensitive to cold than broccoli, collards, kale, kohlrobi or mustard.

How well plants are conditioned by the weather prior to exposure to cold temperatures determines plant survival. Plant maturity also has much to do with the amount of cold which cole crops can survive. When broccoli plants have produced buds, even a light frost may cause considerable damage since clusters freeze, turn brown and ultimately rot.

Cole crops grow best at a monthly mean temperature of 60 to 70 degrees.

Of all the cole crops mentioned, broccoli is probably the best tasting, most nutritious and most economical of the entire group. It's surprising that such an excellent vegetable, known for more than 2,000 years in Europe and perhaps 200 years in America, has become popular only in the past 50 years.

Broccoli is high in vitamin C and supplies a substantial amount of vitamin A. It is the only crop which can be blanched and frozen and still retain its superb taste and quality. Broccoli actually is better after the freezing process which softens the stem tissue.

Plant cole crops now for an abundance of good eating this fall and early winter.

Modern life threatening Masai's ancient ways

EDITOR'S NOTE — Perhaps no African tribe stirs interest like the Masai, the tall, painted warrior-nomads who trotted past Karen Blixen on her way into Africa. But the old-style Masai, long a legend, may soon be history.

By MORT ROSENBLUM

MORIJA, Kenya (AP) — The remote and luxuriant Loita Hills remain almost the way the first Masai found them except, perhaps, for the Mother's Choice bread truck and Joseph Kiperian's broken wristwatch.

These hills, like the tribesmen trying to raise their cattle and children the way Masai always have, are dissolving into a new Africa. And the Masai, aloof, alert and fiercely proud, are worried.

"Kenya is running very fast, and we have to keep up," says Moses Kiperian, killer of six lions and owner of 130 cows, who can outrun most people in a fair race. "If not, they will force us."

The Loitas are a last redoubt of the 250,000 Kenya Masai who once held sway over all the land up the Rift Valley, from Mount Kilimanjaro to the slopes of Mount Kenya.

Here they still live simply, wearing homespun red togas and elaborate beadwork. "I had a watch once, but a cow kicked it," says Joseph Kiperian, Moses' brother.

IF MASAI men now use flashlights at night, they are likely to carry them in their earlobes, pierced at childhood and later stretched into thong-like loops.

With ancient methods, they raise productive herds at a fraction of the cost to Texas ranchers. They spear the odd eland, make huts from cow dung and tell stories over pots of honey beer.

In the Loitas, Masai still thrive on milk, enriched with a splash of blood from a cow's jugular vein. They dress up in ostrich feathers, lion manes and clanking, glittering metalwork.

But elsewhere, men who scorned digging so much they did not bury their dead are now farmers. Warriors who faced leopards with short swords now work as Nairobi night watchmen for a few dollars a month.

The Masai warrior's trademark is a thick coat of ochre paint and dreadlocks. If he shows up that way in town, he risks humiliation at the hands of policemen with shears and a scrub brush.

Masai in neighboring Tanzania outnumber their Kenyan brothers, and they live scattered over a wider area with fewer pressures to change. But even there, tribal elders say, the world is closing in.

It's a typical African conflict between ancient ways and encroaching civilization.

MASAI LORE taught that all cattle in the world were theirs and armed parties frequently set about enforcing that belief. Neighboring tribes, calling that cattle rustling, feared the Masai.

When British settlers colonized East Africa, the Kikuyu and other tribes studied their ways, especially farming and real estate law. Most Masai avoided the outsiders. Then independence came.

"See that," says Amos ole Pelu, waving an arm toward sweeping barley fields near the district capital of Narok in southwest Kenya. "That is all Masai land taken over by Kikuyus and Indians."

A new government divided into plots much of the rangeland that Masais shared in common. The idea was that all Kenyans should be entitled to their own land to use as they saw fit.

"Masai had no experience managing money," Pelu says. "They took loans on their land and could not make payments, so pretty soon they lost it."

Large areas of land went to game reserves, with little compensation to displaced clans. The Masai fought back. At Ambroseli, wardens found the carcasses of dozens of black rhino. Masai had speared them for spite, leaving their valuable horns.

Other factors were involved. Authority lies mainly with individual clans rather than a unified hierarchy. Some leaders abuse their influence to amass fortunes at the expense of others.

BUT THE main problem, most Masai say, is that their austere way of life and their rigid social system cannot help but clash with a world that is westernizing.

David Paswa has a distinctive Masai mark: His two bottom front teeth were removed to make him handsome. He also has a Yale degree in economics and a prestigious job in West Africa.

"They will have to change," he says. "If they resist, at the end of the day they will be too far behind."

Like many Masai, Paswa's family shifted course after the great drought of 1973. Of 3,000 cattle, they were left with 50. Drought forced desperate herders to find work in cities. Some never went back home.

Moses Kiperian has bridged the gap. Regularly, he puts on long pants and conducts business in Nairobi, moving easily if unhappily among the smoke and noise of monumental African traffic jams.

But he spends most of his time in the Loitas, keeping hyenas away from his cows and enlivening campfires by acting out for his friends the plot of the last Bruce Lee karate film he saw in the city.

The double life is not easy. Not long ago, a lion attacked Moses' friend as he was herding cattle. Moses heaved his spear neatly through the lion's left eye. Later, a game warden wanted to arrest him.

"HE SAID I should have come to Narok for a permit first and then gone back and killed the lion that was eating my friend," Moses says, rolling his eyes.

Moses quickly converted the evidence into Masai handicrafts.

Amos ole Pelu does it the other way. He lives near Nairobi and slips back to the old way whenever he can. Recently, he took an American friend up the rocky escarpment to the Loitas.

"Toothbrush!" he exclaims, slamming on the brakes and skidding the Land-Rover to a halt. He leaps out and bounds to a low green tree from which he carves three short sticks.

From a thicket of brilliant orange wildflowers, he produces a tangy nectar. From a bush, he squeezes some natural Vick's Vapo-Rub. For 20 minutes, he explains the use — medicinal, practical or recreational — of every plant he encounters.

In Nairobi, he is a streetwise modern Kenyan named Amos. In the Loitas, he is Meshuko, meaning "No Reverse," a man who grapples with such mysteries as Emenaumer, the man-monster of the forest.

But many Masai suffer badly from culture shock. In Ngong Town, a seedy Wild West settlement near Nairobi, Masai drink themselves into a stupor at the Embassy Bar and talk about old times.

Occasionally, someone breaks into a gay lion-hunting ditty or a fierce war chant. Sergeant Jack, a game warden at Nairobi National Park, is a source of some amusement. But the mood is mainly grim.

OFFICIALS WORK hard to make the Masai like everyone else. A district commissioner boasted in 1985: "We shall leave no stone unturned until they learn how to cook a meal of ugali (corn gruel)."

Specialists on the Masai argue that that is folly, considering what they might teach other tribes, and Westerners, about nature and survival in harsh conditions.

"It is not fair when you think of how the Masai can survive on their own," Pelu says. "When drought almost wiped them out, they came back without asking help from anyone."

Kenyan authorities will not easily suppress the essential elements of Masai customs, the specialists say.

The government, for example, has tried to phase out initiations of warriors to the status of junior elder. The ceremony, a frenzy of dancing and spiritual energy, is a centerpiece of Masai society.

All Masai boys dream of glory as a moran, a warrior. Training takes scouting to its fullest limits: years of seclusion in the bush learning old ways, merit badges in lion wrestling, sexual taboos.

Every few years, 100 or so moran are graduated in weeklong, all-night rites. If an unpure candidate tries to enter the enchanted circle, he faints dead away and the ceremonial hut collapses.

BRITISH COLONIAL authorities had given up on halting moranism. They succeeded only in limiting the training period to five years.

After independence, Kenya's government decided the whole process wasted valuable time of able-bodied youths and ran counter to the needs of development. Some Kenyans feel moranism breeds cattle rustlers and arrogant bullies.

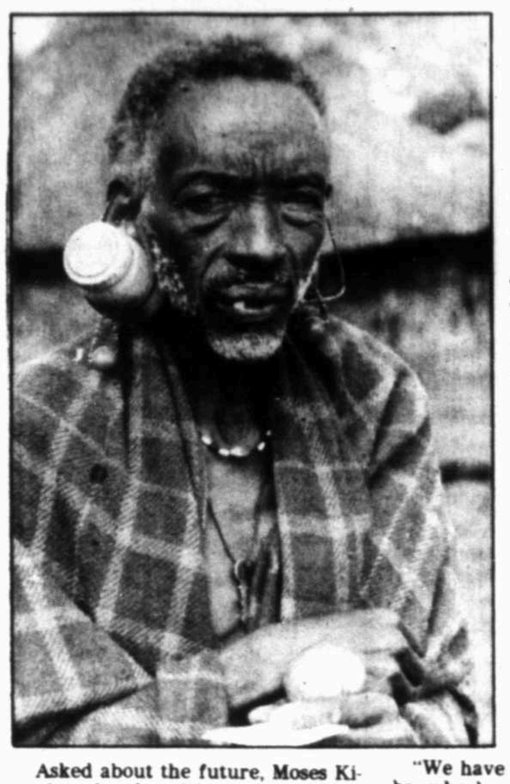

In 1985, the government issued a ban on further ceremonies.

Masai elders ignored the order, and once again built the symbolic warriors' village on a well-defended promontory deep in the Loita Hills. No one was prepared to stop them.

But many Masai are more worried about the Indian merchant's bread truck and other suppliers who regularly bring modern goods to the ramshackle little shops of the tiny settlement of Morija.

There are also policemen and district officers who are gradually bringing the apparatus of the state into the Masai's last refuge.

In a nation with a population of 20 million, growing at a rate of 4.2 percent a year, land is growing scarce. Wheat and barley farmers are gnawing away at the last fringes of Masailand.

An old Masai tribesman wears a Vaseline jar in his ear. He uses it as a tobacco pouch.

Asked about the future, Moses Kiperian abandoned his habitual half-smile.

"We have a few more years, maybe, who knows?" he says. "But it is only a matter of time."

'Guad' may not be pretty ship, but she's functional

By RICHARD PYLE

ABOARD THE USS GUADALCANAL IN THE PERSIAN GULF (AP) — The biggest war ship in the Persian Gulf it may be, but the Guadalcanal never will win any prizes for being the most beautiful.

"We don't look pretty, but we're functional," says Capt. Skip Dirren, the 44-year-old naval aviator who commands the ship. The vessel's nickname, "Guad," somehow fits its ungainly appearance.

Known officially as LPH7, for "landing platform helicopter," and semi-officially as an "amphibious assault carrier," the 18,000-ton ship was on a far more routine assignment in the Middle East — en route to maneuvers off the coast of Egypt — when it was drafted into service in the gulf.

It sailed 1,200 miles to the Indian Ocean island of Diego Garcia, unloaded most of its complement of 1,200 Marines and several helicopters, to make room for the eight huge minesweeping helicopters needed urgently by the U.S. Navy.

On the return trip, it suffered an electrical failure that delayed its arrival.

The ship now is cruising in the gulf as a late addition to the Navy's Middle East Force, the squadron assigned to escort Kuwaiti tankers reregistered under the American flag as they move through the waterway.

The 24-year-old Guadalcanal is one of seven assault carriers in the Iwo Jima class, all named for historical battles in which the U.S. Marines participated.

Built in the early 1960s under a crash program ordered by then-Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara, they are the Frankenstein's monsters of the Navy. Hurriedly and cheaply constructed, many of their parts, particularly the power plants, were cannibalized from older ships of the time.

Several saw service in Vietnam, where Marine combat units made so-called "vertical envelopment" assaults, meaning by helicopter, on the beaches from ships standing offshore.

The Guadalcanal, named for the World War II island battle in which the Marines scored their first major victory over Japan in early 1943, served during the 1960s as a recovery ship for the Gemini and Apollo space programs, and since then has seen extensive peacetime service in the Caribbean, Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East.

In early 1983 she was stationed off Lebanon for nearly six months, a tense period during which the U.S. Embassy in Beirut was hit by a truck bomb.

The carrier was back in the Middle East in July as part of a U.S. force assigned to take part in operation "Bright Start '87," a biennial joint exercise with Egyptian military units off the coast near Alexandria.

But before the exercise began, the ship was pulled out of line and rushed to Diego Garcia to pick up the RH-53D Sea Stallion helicopters destined for mine-hunting duty in the gulf.

Dirren described the three-day operation to take the Marines and their combat gear off the ship and replace them with the Sea Stallions as something that had never been done before, and therefore, "a real challenge."

Because the aging assault carriers are "in general difficult to maintain," Dirren said, the machinists and other engineering specialists among his crew of about 600 frequently are called on to improvise, even to manufacture new parts on board when something breaks down.

"There's a great pride in being able to work around the failure of a piece of equipment, some of which is pretty antique," said Dirren, a native of Upper Darby, Pa., who now lives in Virginia Beach, Va.

But as one who made his career in helicopters — now flown from the decks of almost every ship in the Navy — he concedes nothing to the glamorous "Top Guns" of naval aviation, the jet pilots aboard the world's largest carrier fleet.

Admittedly, he says, there's a difference between the "Guad" with its 603-foot flight deck and shaky plumbing, and its vastly larger, state-of-the-art sisters like the Nimitz and the Vinson.

"So maybe this ship is a mutt," he said. "But it's a mutt in the positive sense. Americans love mutts."

Mexico town relieved tree still alive

By SOLL SUSSMAN

SANTA MARIA DEL TULE, Mexico (AP) — Rainy season has come again and the massive tule tree is rustling with new green foliage.

Those who worried about the immense cypress' future are for the most part calm again. King Condoy's giant cane still lives.

Just as it has for some 2,000 years.

"In March, a lot of people thought it was dying," Florenzo Gutierrez, one of its two full-time caretakers, told a recent visitor to the tree in Mexico's southern state of Oaxaca. "But all of this is new growth. There's no problem."

He chalked off the fears to a "black frost" that settled on the southern state of Oaxaca in February, leaving the gnarled tree with an even drier appearance than normal.

People here concede that California's sequoias are the world's tallest trees, but they claim that their tule — pronounced "too-lay" — tree is the broadest on the globe.

The tree is 132 feet tall and nearly 139 feet around, not counting its many nooks and crannies that resemble everything from an elephant to the face of the Virgin Mary.

Enrique Auddifred, the director of the Oaxaca state artisanry agency and a folklore expert, said the Mixe (pronounced "me-hay") Indians who live in the region believe that the giant King Condoy planted his cane here.

They say leaves sprouted on the cane and it became the symbol of life for the people, one of Oaxaca's smaller tribes. Auddifred said the Mixes still believe that they are protected by the tule tree and that King Condoy is protecting them as long as it lives.

Some texts suggest that legend attributes the tree's planting to the great Mexican serpent god Quetzalcoatl, but Auddifred said he has not found any legends at all about the tree among the Zapotec or Mixtec Indians who are the principal Oaxacan tribes.

Even if all is well with the tree itself, those living in the town about 7 miles outside the city of Oaxaca are quarreling again.

The tree makes the otherwise unremarkable town of Santa Maria del Tule a tourist attraction. Cars, vans and buses stop here regularly on the way to the Mitla ruins that are one of the main archaeological sites in the state.

"From all over the world — Japan, China, Italy," said caretaker Gutierrez. "They come here from all over the world."

"We were very interested in seeing that the tree was taken care of," said Francisca Luis de Mathias, whose husband Victor Mathias recently resigned as town mayor. "He had a lot of plans for the tree to be maintained as a tourist attraction. But he was completely discouraged."

The couple run the Tule Family Restaurant just down the road from the tree.

Mrs. Mathias said only the town's few businesspeople were interested in any plans that meant money or work, such as her husband's hopes to have a small park installed near the tree.

"Not everybody appreciated how hard he was working," she said, adding that she urged him to resign. He was not immediately replaced.

The tree sits on a fenced in plot cared for by the federal Agriculture and Hydraulic Resources Department, which hires the caretakers and operates the irrigation system donated in 1952.

Medardo Garcia Carillo, a supervising engineer with the department, said the constant irrigation keeps the root system humid. The amount of water pumped in varies, but at the height of the dry season 520 to 780 quarts of water irrigate the tree daily.

A major cleaning of the tree last year carted away two and a half tons of dead leaves and branches, Garcia Carillo said, adding that this year only more specialized cleaning would take place.

He said the fears about the tree's health arose earlier this year "when it started to seem yellow, but that was due to its own biology. Right now we believe there is no danger."

Water is piped in daily from a well three blocks away, Gutierrez explained, delighting almost as much in the technical details as he clearly did in showing off the images that can be found in the tree.

"There's an elephant," he said, using light reflected off a shard of mirror as a pointer. "There are the Three Kings of the Magi."

Postcards of the tree feature the clearly visible images of a lion's head, a stag and a fish.

FAMILY MATTERS

Harried new parents miss 'good old days'

By JIM MAY

DEAR FAMILY: I have recently had a baby and nothing seems to be going right. My son is healthy and finally is sleeping through the night, but my husband and I do not seem to be able to have a conversation without it ending in a fight.

I have tried to keep quiet when he complains about how messy the house is or that my cooking is not as good as it used to be. Everything we talk about seems to wind up being about how good things used to be.

I am beginning to think that my husband resents our son. I haven't had the nerve to confront him with that yet, but I am getting very close. Should I confront him or is it better to say nothing? I need to say something, this just can't go on the way it is. — NEW MOM

DEAR NEW MOM: I do not know of any job that is harder on the family than being "new" parents, especially the first time.

Often, couples find that being a new parent is not anything like they thought it would be. I have had heard descriptions of the first few months of being parents in such a way that it sounded like "boot camp." The idealized view of a wonderful baby and a Madonna-like mother is seldom, if ever, experienced.

It is very normal for the father of a new baby to feel rejected or left out because of the new arrival. His wife and mate is no longer available to him — physically and emotionally — as before.

Since no self-respecting father would get angry at a helpless baby, he may direct his frustrations at his wife. When males do this, they often talk about "the good old days," about how great things were B.B. (Before Baby).

As far as whether you should confront him about all this, I have not found confrontations to be very useful in achieving goals. I suggest planning a time to talk with him (no television, not at bed time, not at baby feeding time, etc.). Try approaching him from the perspective of what a challenge your new son is for both of you.

New boundaries are being formed that did not previously exist. New rules must be established as to whom will do what to whom and when. And most of all, remember not to deny how either of you feel about the situation.

DEAR FAMILY: You have written and talked about the importance of letting a child experience the logical consequences of his actions.

We are a normal middle class family, with a teenaged son who wants to quit school and work full time.

We have another son in college and a daughter in junior high school.

I will spare you all the details of his reasoning, but should we just let him drop out and let him experience the logical consequences of his being a high school drop out?

My husband and I are growing weary fighting with him about this, but we both feel very strongly that this is a bad decision for him. Should we let him learn? — WORN OUT

DEAR WORN OUT: I firmly believe that as adults we are responsible for the consequences of our actions and that children should be taught early that they are accountable for theirs. But I also believe parents must place decide what things are appropriate for children to exercise their decision-making in.

I strongly urge you to remain an active part of your son's decision-making process relative to his dropping out of school.

There is no way any of us can know the true consequences of dropping out of school in his case, but we can guess — based on the experiences of hundreds of thousands of others — that it will have a very detrimental effect.

Several studies have reported that it is importance to listen respectfully to the input of the children about the decision that needs to be made, but, ultimately, the parents make the decision on matters that impact the family.

It is also important that both you and your husband meet with your son's school counselor to discuss this situation. School counselors typically have had a lot of experience with these situations and can offer solid professional advice.

Depression strikes newborns, parents

By MIKE DALE and CHUCK EDWARDS
Copley News Service

Even children as young as a few days old can experience depression.

What's surprising is that it is often the parents' behavior that brings it on.

According to psychiatrist and author Dr. Paul Trad, children take their cues for behavior from their parents.

In fact, research shows that up to 50 percent of kids raised by depressed parents will experience depression during their lives.

In addition, abused or neglected children are even more at risk.

Trad, the author of "Infant and Childhood Depression: Developmental Factors," says parents can shield their kids from depression by avoiding discrepancies in discipline, and getting their own lives together.

'Wheel of Misfortune' ultimate family gameshow

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

The ultimate game show is being played this week by thousands of college-bound students from all over the country. It's called "Plunder and Pillage" and is fun for the whole family.

The object of the student-players is simple. Don't leave home without it. (The home, that is.) Students park the family car in front of the house and load as many of the furnishings from the house into it as possible.

Meanwhile, the parents (who think they're playing "Wheel of Misfortune") try to hold on to their household goods ... or at least enough to qualify as primitive campers.

It's a game of youth vs. maturity ... materialism vs. poverty ... guilt vs. reason. I watched my friend and her son play the game last week. The son said, "I'm going to try for the toaster oven." The mother said, "OK, here's your question. What is a toaster oven?" The son replied, "It's an oven where toast is grown."

"You lose," said the mother, grabbing it out of his hand. "You don't even know what it is."

"I thought you wanted me to eat well while I'm at school and have well-balanced meals. Doesn't toast have grains in it?"

The mother folded under pressure and he added the toaster oven to his car full of prizes: linens and bedding, clock radio, steam iron, bathroom scales, coffee maker, electric fan, floor lamp, full set of luggage and portable TV set.

The next item he grabbed to take to college with him was her camera. She protested. He said, "OK, answer this in 10 seconds or less. When was the last time you used your camera?" The seconds seemed like hours as they ticked by. Finally, a buzzer went off and he said, "Sorry, Mom, the answer is Christmas two years ago. The camera goes." And with that he added it to his loot.

Some parents who aren't particularly good at games have been known to be left in barren rooms with barely enough kitchen utensils to get a meal together. Even though I played the game with all three children, I never seemed to get any better at it. At one point one of my sons had 20 years of our possessions in his car headed for a dormitory in California. As he jammed the skis in the station wagon (when was the last time it snowed in Southern California?), he said, "Cheer up, Mom. You and Dad have been great sports and I have a few consolation prizes for you. You can have these eight albums of baseball cards to store, 50 feet of garden hose, electric crepe maker, turkey roaster and a set of iced tea spoons. And to show you what a great guy I am, I'll return your VCR when you get another TV set. I hope you've had a good time."

He told us we could visit our belongings anytime. Just call first.

Capturing condors raises controversy

Copley News Service

The last known California condor in the wild was recently captured and hauled into captivity, but the hot debate on saving the species is still squawking.

As Jesse Grantham of the Audubon Society puts it, there's a "missing link" between zoo people, who just want to see the animal alive, and field biologists who want to see the big vultures survive in their natural habitat.

Accusing fingers have been pointed at developers greedy to build up the condors' 50-thousand-square-mile range, to the Fish and Wildlife Service's practice of removing all young condors and eggs from the wild until only a few free adults were left.

At any rate, the current plan calls for the 27 captive condors to breed in San Diego and Los Angeles zoos, with fledglings released into the Los Padres National Forest preserve in about three years.

These young birds first will be fed by humans wearing condor hand-puppets, and then carrion will be left for them on their new range.

Bird curator Bill Toone of the San Diego Wild Animal Park and Zoo admits the free lunches may last "forever," if the condors don't catch on to self-survival.

Chemicals in home may cause illness

WASHINGTON (AP) — Research in Denmark suggests that a combination of volatile organic chemicals in the home could be making people sick and may account for the so-called "Sick Building Syndrome," the Environmental Protection Agency said Thursday.

EPA said it would try to duplicate the Danish results.

In a report on its indoor pollution research required by Congress last year, EPA said the Danish work seems to show that concentrations of volatile organic compounds "at levels similar to those found in homes may cause sensory irritation and behavorial effects such as memory loss."

"This research is provocative because the effects are similar to those decribed by building occupants suffering from 'Sick Building Syndrome.' In addition, the effects observed cannot be explained by the presence of any single pollutant," the agency said.

"Sick Building Syndrome" is used to describe the headaches, dizziness, blurred vision and other feelings sometimes found in buildings where pollutants build up.

EPA has known for several years that volatile organic compounds can concentrate indoors up to several times the outdoor level, sometimes even 100 times as much.

But little is known about the extent of heavy concentrations in homes, and even less about how different chemicals might interact.

The report listed 61 chemicals or chemical groups in the volatile organic category that have been found in homes — from paints, building materials, pesticides, cleaning products, tobacco and other smoke, aerosol propellants, inks, hobby materials, automotive equipment and even drinking water.

RED & The RED HOTS

appearing at
Late Night at Joey's

Red and the Red Hots came together in 1984 as a result of a collaboration between Red Young and PATAN. Presenting the music and fashion of the 1940's, the time has come for this very concise and well-polished act.
The band's format-Red on vocals and keyboards, two female singers, acoustic bass, drums and horns, was formulated while Red and PATAN were on tour with Linda Ronstadt. Other stars Red performed with include Sonny and Cher, Joan Armatrading, Dolly Parton and Eric Burdon.
The talents combining to create Red and The Red Hots constitute an entity both positive and professional. The music and moods created are as viable today as they were 40 years ago. "People used to dance holding each other and they are wanting to return to the romance and sophistication of that day."

DEAR ABBY

Any words are right words to those grieving

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: A year ago our daughter was raped and stabbed to death. Words cannot express our horror and pain. It was bad enough to lose our daughter, but it seems we also lost our friends. Friends we had known for years didn't call or come to see us. We were shunned as though we had some kind of terrible disease — and just when we needed their friendship most. Now, when we run into former friends, they act embarrassed and say, "We would have called or come over, but we didn't know what to say."

Abby, I belong to a support group called Parents of Murdered Children, and at each meeting, some time is spent on just this subject. Most members say their friends have dropped them.

Abby, you have publicized our group in your column, and I thank you for that. Now, please, tell your readers, all they have to do is call and say, "I heard the news, and I am sorry." Or come over and say it in person — and just be there to help the suffering parents get on with their lives as normally as possible. — MICHELLE'S MOM, JOHNSTOWN, COLO.

DEAR MOM: My heart goes out to you and every other parent who has lost a child. The message in your letter is not news to me. I have read it many times from many grieving parents. So, let me send this very important message to my readers: If you have friends who have lost a loved one in death — please don't abandon them. They don't need to lose you, too.

DEAR ABBY: I recently received a wedding invitation to be held in a neighboring state. On the bottom corner was stated: "Reception: Covered dish dinner immediately following ceremony."

Surely that doesn't mean that they expect us to drive that distance and bring a covered dish, does it? I've never heard of such a thing. I always thought the bride's family gave the reception, and it could be either very lavish or simple punch and wedding cake if they couldn't afford much.

What would you interpret that to mean? And what is your opinion of that? Please hurry your answer as several others can't figure it out either. — INVITED GUEST, PORTSMOUTH, OHIO

DEAR GUEST: Seldom, if ever, does a wedding invitation state what will be served following the ceremony, so it is safe to assume that the guests are being solicited for "covered dishes." But just to be sure, either write or phone, and inquire.

DEAR ABBY: You said: "A pox on those folks who dial a number and if their party doesn't answer after the fourth or fifth ring, they hang up. Many people (especially those who are on in years) cannot spring to the telephone in 10 seconds, so give them a break and let the phone ring at least 10 or 12 times."

Do you know that MCI charges for calls over five rings whether or not the party answers the phone? I have paid twice before I realized that this is their policy. I thought you would like to know. — EVA GALLA, BILLERICA, MASS.

DEAR EVA: My staff checked with MCI and was told it is not MCI's policy to charge for calls whether the party answers or not. A spokesperson said: "Some tone difference (static in the background, picked up while dialing) could record as 'completed' on our equipment — even when a call was not completed. So check your phone bill, and if you are charged for an uncompleted call, ask for credit and you will receive it."

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Club honors those who show 'grace under fire'

Copley News Service

Benjamin Franklin, Buckminster Fuller, David Letterman, Billy Martin — and perhaps even you — have something in common.

They have all been fired.

And all it meant was that they were destined for bigger and better job opportunities, says Los Angeles PR man Robert McCarthy. That's why he formed the Golden Ax Hall of Fame.

The message is that getting fired isn't the end of the world.

For instance, after Ben Franklin was fired for being wasteful at one job, he proved lightning was electricity in action.

And Winston Churchill once was sacked by the British navy.

Members of the Golden Ax Hall of Fame receive plaques that name the honoree as showing "grace under fire."

Foyt busts speed mark at Fort Stockton oval

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

FORT STOCKTON — A. J. Foyt has his USAC approved world closed-course records and Fort Stockton was bustin' its buttons with pride after Thursday's exercise in loud blurs at the 7.721-mile Test Center track 15 miles from town.

Driving two Oldsmobile-designed Aerotech cars with innovative Quad 4 engines — four valves per cylinder with double overhead camshafts — in his record attempts, Foyt set records of 257.123 mph with the Indy-styled car and 267.399 in the supercharged 1.9 liter engine version of the Aerotech for the Flying Mile.

And, with more favorable weather conditions, he might have achieved his goal of 260 mph with the 2.3 liter "short-tailed" Indy Quad 4. Foyt had wiped out the world record of 250.918, set in Italy in 1979, with a 257.123 Wednesday and was hoping to make it even more impressive with an 8 a.m. sprint Thursday.

Unfortunately, a power outage at the track delayed the test an hour and by that time the wind was up, 10 to 12 mph in gusts that proved troublesome.

WHEN FOYT pulled into the pit after three instead of the planned four laps, he complained that he could hardly see, "the fuel fumes in the cockpit were that bad." But he had his record.

Ted Louckes, Oldsmobile's chief engineer, wasn't disappointed, "We feel comfortable with that. We've got the record, now let the others shoot at it."

"I was going great," said Foyt, "but I had to use a lot of the track to keep the car straight. The grade (1.8 per cent) on the back straightaway was where it was tough to keep the car under control. The curves (¾ of a mile each) weren't that bad. It was the straightaways where the wind gusts created problems."

BY 10 a.m., the long-tailed Aerotech was being readied for the shot at the Flying Mile record.

"It's the tough one, because you have to go from the left and then within an hour come back from the right over the same mile," A.J. explained.

"It's still strange to me coming out of the rim from the right side and going into the mile."

The wind was not as significant a factor for the Flying Mile. By this time it had subsided and the chilling morning air was warming up, which was to become a negative factor later.

Foyt was a piercing whine in going 278.375 mph from the left. Now came the race with the clock to change the tires so that the fuel would flow to the engine properly on the reverse angle run. This time Foyt whirred 257 and change from the right for an average of 267.399 mph.

That broke the 254.578 by Phil Hill in the two liter engine category at the Bonneville Salt Flats in 1959.

"That 257 was a lot better than the 240 we did yesterday," Foyt said.

ALTHOUGH THE heat would rob the engine of some of its power, the wind conditions were ideal, so again the crew raced to prepare the car within an hour for another record challenge at noon. This time it would be an attempt from the left at the Flying Mile as well as a simultaneous assault on the 257.123 early morning mark.

Foyt envisioned a 300 mph in the Flying Mile.

He pulled into the pit at the end of a lap and before making a run at either the Flying Mile or 257.123 and went into a huddle with the General Motors crew. Nothing official was announced, but it was obvious that something was burning. The car was returned to the barns for a new engine and maybe another shot at the 257.123 later.

GM BEGAN work on the Aerotech back in 1984, with the stress on aerodynamics and performance with the specific intent of evaluating the high-performance capabilities of the Quad 4.

Weighing only 1,600 pounds, the Aerotech stands 40 inches high, 86 inches wide on a 111.3 inch wheel base. It is 192 inches long.

The chassis is similar in design to an Indy car, but with significant aerodynamic improvements. The Aerotech's drag is reduced 38 percent from that of the 1986 Indy prototype and the downforce is increased 95 percent, resulting from the Aerotech's slippery body shape.

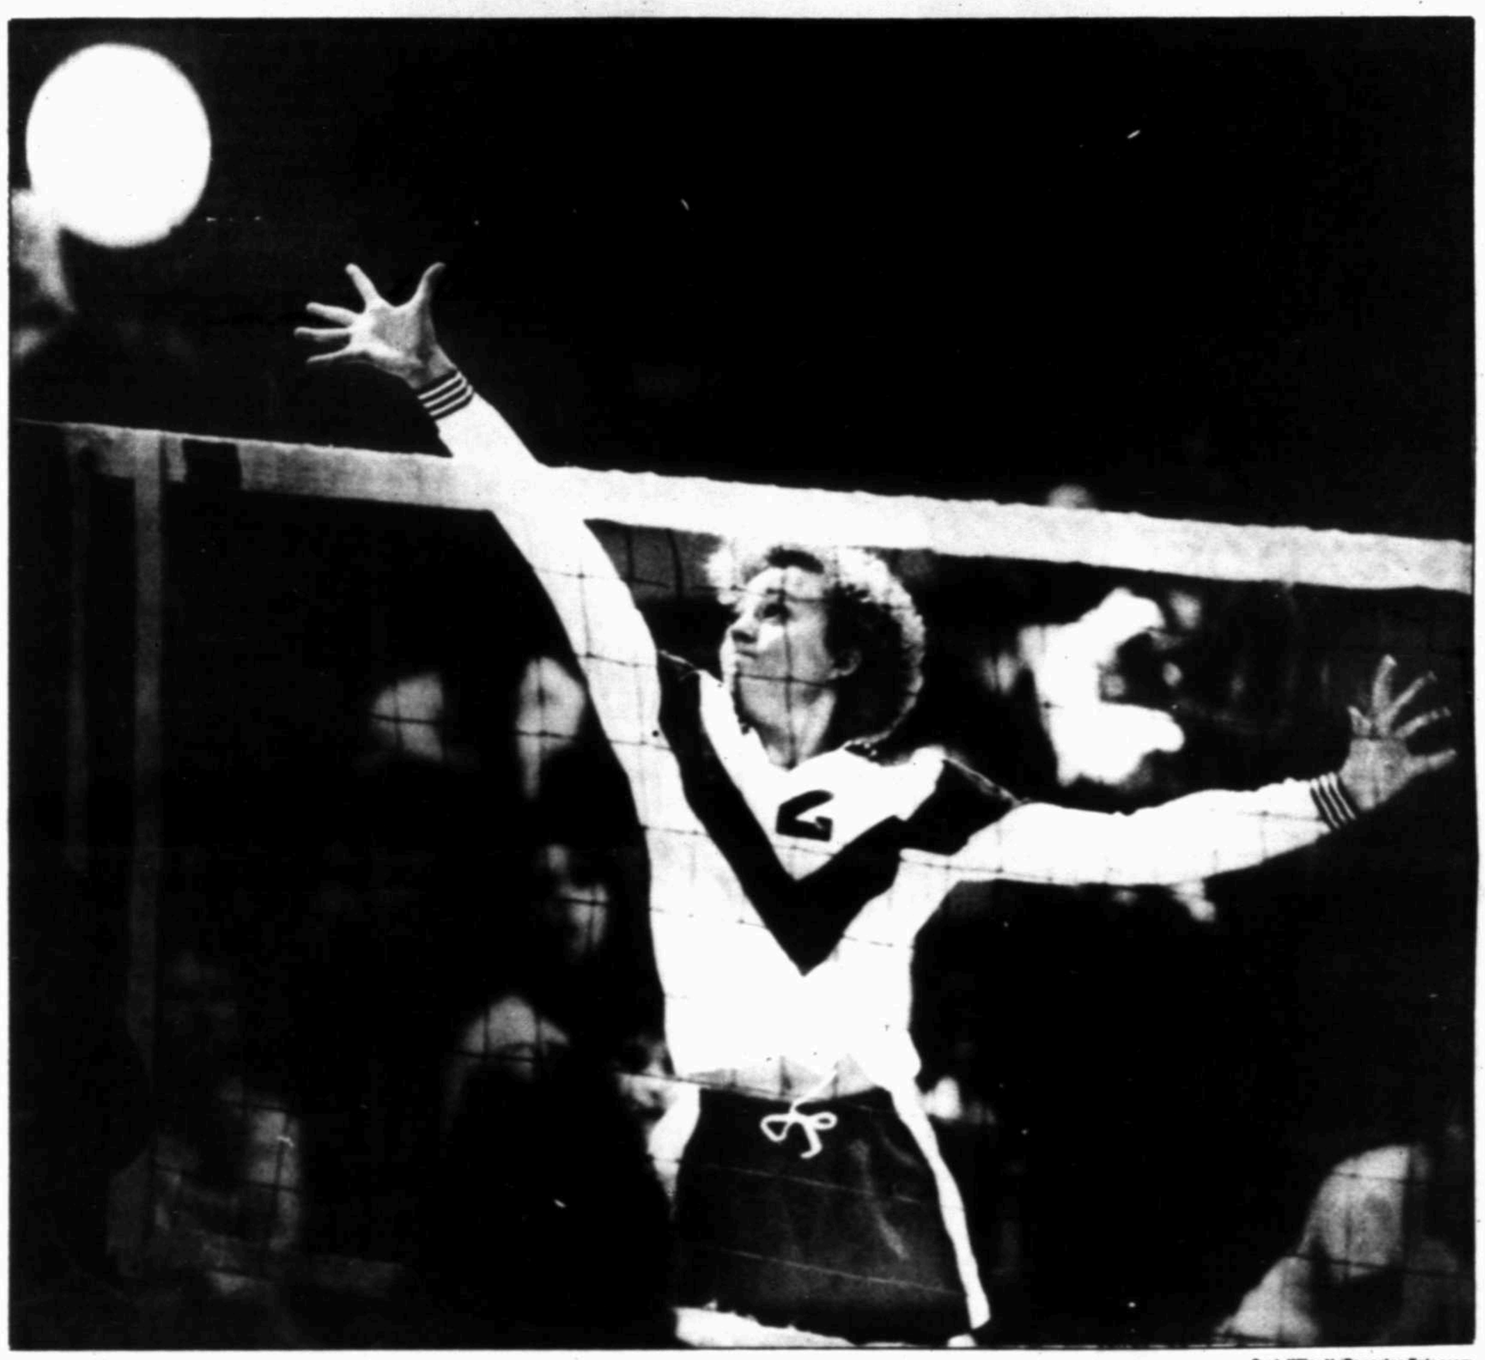

While the Aerotech is designed to take Indy type curves, it does not qualify as a 500 candidate, since the cockpit and wheels are not open.

Amazingly, the Aerotech has a ground clearance at high speeds of .5 inch to one inch.

The car will go for the Indianapolis 500 record in Oct.

One GM engineer explained, "A lot of folks will regard this as something accomplished out in the middle of no where. But they relate to Indy. The record there is 218 and we believe we can do 230."

The Quad 4 engine was introduced in the 1987 Oldsmobile Calais GT and will be offered in other models in 1988.

Midland High's Theresa Brown stretches to tip the ball over the net Thursday in Midland High's best-of-three volleyball loss to Lamesa.

Angel win keeps slim title hopes breathing

From Staff Reports

WICHITA — Chris Collins held the Wichita Pilots to just six hits and a pair of runs through six innings and Bryan Harvey came on to record his record-setting 20th save to keep the Midland Angels slim hopes of a second half pennant alive Thursday night.

Combined with El Paso's 5-0 win over San Antonio, the magic number is one for the Diablos with two games remaining. An El Paso win or a Midland loss in the final two games will clinch the second half crown in the Texas League West for the Diablos.

Doug Jennings doubled home Bill Geivett in the first inning to give Collins, 7-6, an early 1-0 lead off Candy Sierra, 8-5. It was Jennings' 104th RBI of the year.

A pair of solo homers, the first by Brian Brady, No. 7, in the second inning, the second by Joe Redfield, No. 29, in the fifth, gave Midland a 3-0 lead. Redfield's team-leading RBI total is now 107.

But the first-half champion Pilots broke back for two in the sixth on a double by Thomas Howard, a single by Chris Knaebenshue and a two-base error by centerfielder Gary Nalls and a Collins wild pitch.

But the Angels bullpen did the job, first Miguel Garcia held Wichita to one hit over 1⅓ innings, then Harvey came on in the eighth to up his franchise save record to 20 by covering the final 1⅓ without allowing a hit.

In tonight's contest, Mike Romanovsky, 8-7, will face Wichita lefty Mike Young, 4-6.

In other TL action, the Jackson Mets have clinched the second half title in the Texas League East and will face the Shreveport Captains, the first half champions, for the East title.

The playoffs will begin next week.

Todd Brown had a three-run homer and teammate Jim Opre had a solo homer to lead the Diablos to their victory over San Antonio.

The other El Paso run came when Joe Mitchell walked with the bases loaded in the first inning, forcing home Lavell Freeman.

The winning pitcher was Brad Wheeler, 8-2. The loser was Eric Sonberg, 2-7.

NFL delays extra draft for ineligibles

NEW YORK (AP) — The NFL has avoided what seemed like an unavoidable confrontation with college football by postponing the supplemental draft of Cris Carter and Charles Gladman to allow them to appeal their suspensions to the NCAA.

Following a meeting Thursday with a group of athletic directors, NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle removed both players from the draft. At the same time, he extracted an agreement from Ohio State Athletic Director Rick Bay that he would back Carter in his appeal.

There will, however, be a draft today for four little-known players not involved with agents.

Carter, an All-American wide receiver, was suspended for his senior season by Ohio State after acknowledging that he accepted $6,800 from agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom while still eligible for another year of college football.

Gladman, a running back, was ruled ineligible by Pittsburgh for refusing to cooperate with an investigation into agents.

Rozelle, who had been under fire from college coaches and administrators for "reluctantly" agreeing to the draft under threat of a lawsuit, cited the NCAA's decision Wednesday to reinstate Teryl Austin, a Pitt defensive back who acknowledged taking $2,500 from Walters and Bloom. Austin will be required to repay the money, sever his ties with the agents and sit out two games.

Carter, considered a possible first-

1926 — Emil Levsen of the Cleveland Indians pitched two complete-game victories over the Boston Red Sox, 6-1 and 5-1. He did not strike out a batter in either game.

1951 — The Pittsburgh Pirates defeated the New York Giants 2-0, snapping the Giants' 16-game winning streak. The streak enabled the Giants to cut the Dodgers 13½ game lead to six.

1960 — Ted Kluszewski's eighth inning, three-run homer gave the White Sox an apparent 4-3 lead over the Baltimore Orioles. But third base umpire Ed Hurley called time as the pitch was delivered because White Sox players Earl Torgeson and Floyd Robinson were warming up on the sideline. The home run was nullified and the Orioles won 3-1.

1977 — Steve Garvey of Los Angeles hit three doubles and two home runs in five at-bats to lead the Dodgers to an 11-0 victory over St. Louis. One of Garvey's homers was a grand slam.

Wathan debut a success

Associated Press

John Wathan's first game as manager of the Kansas City Royals was more of a reunion than a debut.

On Thursday afternoon, the Royals fired Billy Gardner as manager and named Wathan as his replacement for the rest of this season after coach Hal McRae turned the job down.

Wathan, 37, played catcher and outfield for the Royals from 1976-85 and was manager of their Class AAA Omaha team this year.

For one night anyway, he is 1.000 as a big-league manager thanks to a former roommate.

George Brett homered with two outs in the bottom of the 10th inning to lift Kansas City over Texas, 3-2.

Brett hit his 17th homer on a 2-1 pitch from reliever Dale Mohorcic, 6-4, who came off the disabled list earlier in the day. John Davis, 3-0, pitched 1⅓ innings for the victory.

"I started playing with him (Wathan) in 1971 in the instructional league and I played with him in the minors," Brett said. "I roomed with him in spring training. It's just great to see him get a chance and it's great to see him get his first win."

Wathan's best season for the Royals came in 1980 when he hit .305 drove in 58 runs and stole 17 bases for the American League champions.

"I think the nicest thing I heard was 'Congratulations skip, that's number one,'" Wathan said. "I think all the guys were excited at the win, but they were also excited for me. That made it a special, gratifying moment."

The victory moved Kansas City (63-64) past California into third place in the AL West, three games behind Minnesota.

Wathan also got a big hit from a struggling Bo Jackson, who entered the game with one hit in 19 at-bats, but went 2-for-4.

With two outs in the bottom of the ninth, Jackson hit his 21st homer, against Texas starter Paul Kilgus. Texas had taken a 2-1 lead in the top of the inning when Oddibe McDowell walked with the bases loaded and two outs.

"I think we played with more enthusiasm out there. There was more hustle, there was more cheering on the bench," Brett said.

Blue Jays 9, Athletics 4

George Bell drove in five runs with a grand slam and a double and Jimmy Key pitched two-hit ball for six innings as Toronto defeated visiting Oakland.

The victory moved Toronto into a virtual first-place tie with idle Detroit in the AL East while the A's slipped a game behind Minnesota in the AL West.

"We're in a pennant race and we've only got 35 games left," Key said. "Anytime you can get a win, that's great."

Key, 15-6, allowed two hits and four runs in the first inning before getting an out and then retired 18 straight batters. He missed his last start because of a "tired arm." Mark Eichhorn, Jeff Musselman and Tom Henke pitched the last three innings, allowing no hits.

Trailing 4-1 in the fifth, Fred McGriff and Nelson Liriano walked against starter Steve Ontiveros and reliever Greg Cadaret, 3-2, walked Tony Fernandez to load the bases. Bell followed with his 30th homer. He established a single-season team record with his league-leading 109 runs batted in.

Orioles 9, Angels 5

Eddie Murray went 4-for-4, including his 303rd career home run to equal Boog Powell's club record, and Ray Knight and Cal Ripken drove in three runs each, leading host Baltimore past California.

Murray, who also had three singles, led off the second inning with his 28th homer of the season to tie the score 1-1.

He added an RBI single in the fourth, following a leadoff double by Ripken, and Knight followed with his 11th homer to put the Orioles ahead 4-3.

Mike Flanagan, 3-6, allowed 10 hits en route to his fourth complete game for Baltimore.

California's Doug DeCinces had a two-run double and a two-run homer.

Brewers 4, Indians 3

Mike Felder keyed a four-run fourth inning with a bad-hop triple and also made two fine defensive plays as Milwaukee beat Cleveland at County Stadium.

Brewers designated hitter Paul Molitor, whose 39-game hitting streak was stopped Wednesday night, had a double and a single.

The Brewers, 27-15 since the All-Star break and 11 games over .500 for the season, completed a three-game sweep of the Indians and moved within seven games of first place in the AL East. It was the Brewers' seventh victory in eight games.

Milwaukee reliever Mark Knudson, 4-4, went 2⅔ innings, giving up a run in the sixth, before being replaced by Jay Aldrich and Chuck Crim.

Falcons, Colts make pitch for unsigned top pick

Associated Press

Two of the NFL's nine remaining unsigned first-round draft choices re-established contact Thursday with the teams that drafted, but their signing still remained some time away.

Quarterback Chris Miller or Oregon, Atlanta's No. 1 draft pick, returned to Georgia. A meeting between Miller's agent, Mike Blatt and Jim Hay, the Falcons' chief financial officer, was set for Friday.

"Hopefully that's a good sign," Coach Marion Campbell said. "Hopefully that'll bring it to a conclusion and we can get him in here."

Miller is asking a reported $2.25 million contract for four years, with the Falcons offering $1.6 million with incentives that could push it to $2 million.

"I don't know if we can get it done and I don't want to be overly optimistic, but it seems like from our conversations that there's some basis for getting together to see if we can or can't do it," said Jim Hay, the Falcons' chief financial officer.

The Indianapolis Colts, meanwhile, said they hoped to resume talks next week with their top pick, Cornelius Bennett, the second player taken overall in the April 29 draft.

General Manager Jim Irsay said his father, team owner Robert Irsay, would meet within a week with Bennett's agent, Richard Woods. Jim Irsay said his father and Woods had had what he termed "a good conversation."

The Colts withdrew their most recent contract proposal, valued at $4 million with incentives over five years, at the end of June. That action came after Woods said he wanted the linebacker from Alabama to receive a contract worth a dollar more than that given Brian Bosworth, the linebacker from Oklahoma taken by Seattle in the supplemental draft June 12.

Bosworth recently signed with Seattle for $11 million over 10 years.

Woods said Monday he still wanted Bennett to receive a contract comparable to Bosworth's. But Jim Irsay said the Colts would be reluctant to sign such a long-term contract.

"I wouldn't rule anything out, but I would say that doesn't make a lot of sense to us," Irsay said. "I think we can do something to satisfy everyone if he is willing to be flexible."

NFL Camps

Lineup Changes

George Rogers, who suffered a sprained big toe on the second day of training camp, says he's ready to see his first action against Tampa Bay this weekend. "The toe feels good," Rogers said. "It still hurts when I cut, but when I'm running full speed I don't feel any pain."

Running Kelvin Bryant also appears to have recovered from his strained quadriceps.

Veteran John Ayers, picked up by Denver after being released by San Francisco in the off-season, will start at guard for the Broncos against the Los Angeles Rams Saturday night in place of Mark Cooper, who has a sprained left foot.

"He has played well when he's played," Coach Dan Reeves said of Cooper. "His biggest problem has always been staying healthy. This is just another nick he has."

The Chicago Bears, having trouble with their special teams, are considering using some of their starters on punts and kickoffs. Coach Mike Ditka says he thinks Gary Fencik, demoted recently after starting for 11 years at free safety, may be able to help. He also hinted that some of the team's linebackers may be used on punt and kickoff coverage.

"We have a luxury here we just can't afford," he said. "We've got to get better help on our special teams."

Still Second-String

Tampa Bay Coach Ray Perkins doesn't think Vinny Testaverde is as far along as some of the local fans do.

"I think the fans and the media probably have overplayed how well he has done," Perkins said Thursday of the Heisman-Trophy winning quarterback, the No. 1 pick in the NFL draft. "He has done some things well, but he also has done some things poorly.

"He's going to be a great one, but he's not now. Nor is he ready to step into a regular-season National Football League game and win."

But Perkins didn't say that meant 11-year veteran Steve DeBerg will start the regular-season opener Sept. 13 against Atlanta.

"Testaverde isn't ready right now, but we still have two weeks," he said.

Claimed

Avon Riley, a linebacker recently released by the Houston Oilers, was signed by the injury-plagued Miami Dolphins, who have lost starter John Offerdahl and backups Robin Sendlein and Andy Hendel to injuries.

Tampa Bay acquired two players on waivers — placekicker Carlos Reveiz, cut by New England, and running back Darryl Oliver, released by Seattle. Both were 11th-round draft choices.

49ers reunite Montana-Clark

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — With Joe Montana throwing to Dwight Clark, the San Francisco 49ers' offense had a familiar look, and the home fans loved it.

"The reaction from the crowd really pumped me up," Clark said after his 1987 playing debut, which included one 20-yard reception in the first half of Thursday night's 17-3 NFL preseason victory over the San Diego Chargers.

"I feel great. Three months ago, they said I wouldn't even play."

Clark, the 49ers' all-time receiving leader, and Montana broke into the NFL together in 1979. When this summer's training camp opened, Coach Bill Walsh indicated it was doubtful if Clark, who had several knee operations in the off-season, would be able to continue his career.

"It was great having him back in there," Montana said. "I missed him in the end zone, though. I really wanted that one."

In the second period, with San Diego leading 3-0 on the strength of Vince Abbott's 41-yard field goal in the first quarter, Montana overthrew Clark on a pass from the Chargers' 23-yard line. The 49ers settled for a Ray Wersching field goal and went ahead just before halftime by driving 81 yards and scoring on Montana's 7-yard pass to Mike Wilson.

San Francisco, 3-1 in pre-season games, got a 3-yard scoring run from rookie Terrence Flager late in the game and finished with a 395-116 yardage advantageover San Diego, 1-2. Dan Fouts made his first playing appearance of the year for the Chargers, completing only three of 11 passes, and leading rusher Barry Redden totaled 16 yards on 15 carries.

THE GAME was the first in the third full weekend of preseason play.

Tonight, Seattle tries for its first victory of the exhibition season when its hosts 1-1 Detroit at the Kingdome.

On Saturday, New England (0-2) tries to break through at Minnesota against the 1-1 Vikings.

In games Saturday night, it will be Washington (2-0) at Tampa Bay (1-1), Miami (0-2) at Philadelphia (1-1), Pittsburgh (0-2) at New Orleans (1-1), Cincinnati (1-1) at Green Bay (0-2), Cleveland (1-1) at Atlanta (1-1), Buffalo (1-1) at Kansas City (2-1), Houston (1-1) at Indianapolis (1-1), the New York Jets (1-1) at the New York Giants (2-0) and Denver (2-1) at the Los Angeles Rams (1-1).

The Los Angeles Raiders (0-2) will visit 1-1 Dallas on Sunday night.

On Monday night, St. Louis (1-1) hosts Chicago (2-0).

"We didn't make any turnovers, which was a positive thing for us," Chargers Coach Al Saunders said, looking at one bright point in the loss to San Francisco. He didn't count two interceptions by the 49ers, since both came on long passes in the final seconds of each half.

San Francisco registered five quarterback sacks for a total of 62 yards.

Clark admitted he needs a lot more practice time to reach top form and said, "I don't know what my role will be. Maybe I'm too old to be a starter.

"Mike Wilson is playing great, and Tony Hill made one of the best catches I've ever seen."

Hill, the former Dallas star, gained 44 yards with a diving catch of a deflected pass to set up the game's final touchdown.

Aching Smith inspires Expos

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Montreal's Bryn Smith wasn't sure he could pitch at all when he took the mound. Then inspiration got the best of him.

Spurred on by a come-from-behind victory 24 hours earlier and the race in the National League East, the right-hander overcame a sore shoulder and became just the second Expos starter to win this month.

Smith, who had elbow surgery in the off-season and hadn't started in eight days because of an aching shoulder, checked the San Diego Padres on four hits over five innings Thursday night for a 3-0 victory.

"The shoulder's basically kind of worn down. Now, it's back in the rebuilding phase," said Smith, 8-6. "It seems to be coming back real good. There was no pain."

Smith, who hadn't won since July 29, said he and Expos Manager Buck Rodgers had decided prior to the game to pull him after five innings.

"The main thing was to find out if I could pitch," Smith said. "The last two times out I was giving up five runs a game. I was not doing myself or the team any good."

The only other Montreal starter to win this month was Dennis Martinez, who beat New York on Aug. 10.

Rodgers was thrilled with the victory, which gave the three-game series to the Expos, 2-1. It pushed the third-place Expos within five games of St. Louis and a half-game of New York.

"This is an important road trip," Rodgers said. "We'll know at the end of this trip whether we're a contender or not."

The Expos moved on to Los Angeles where they begin a three-game series against the Dodgers tonight. They face San Francisco and Atlanta before returning home to meet the Cardinals.

Rodgers said the team went into the game fired up by its come-from-behind win the night before. The Expos scored three runs in the ninth inning Wednesday to tie the score at 5-5, then overcame a bases-loaded situation in the 11th, and finally got the winning run in the 12th on Tim Wallach's single.

Thursday's victory gave the Expos a 9-3 record with the Padres this season.

NL Roundup

Braves 5, Cubs 2

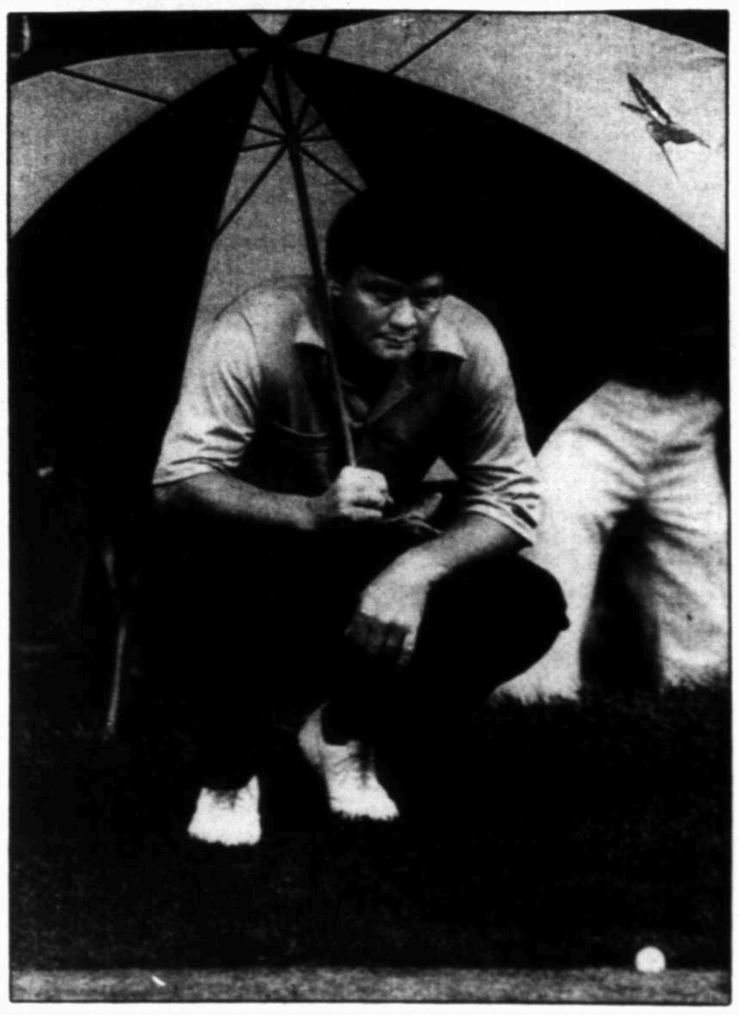

Dale Murphy's two-run homer, his 35th, backed the six-hit pitching of Zane Smith gave the Atlanta the victory in the opener.

Leon Durham homered twice for the Chicago in the second game. Keith Moreland and Jerry Mumphrey also cleared the walls at Wrigley Field.

Smith, 14-7, walked one and struck out three as the Braves stretched their winning streak to five games in the opener.

Chicago led the nightcap 8-6 when it was halted by darkness in the eighth inning. No other games were scheduled in the NL.

The second game will have to be completed at a later date, although the two teams are not scheduled to meet again this year. All the records count, including five home runs by the Cubs. Major-league leader Andre Dawson hit his 42nd for the Cubs in the nightcap.

Bobby Wadkins, yet to win on the PGA Tour, eyes a birdie putt in the World Series of Golf Thursday in Akron, Ohio. Wadkins owns a three-stroke lead going in to the second round.

Bob Wadkins opens 3-shot edge in Series

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Bobby Wadkins had a fine old time in the opening round of the $800,000 World Series of Golf, and not just because he shot a 6-under-par 64 that gave him a three-shot lead.

His playing partner was his brother, Lanny Wadkins, whose first son was born earlier this week in Dallas.

"Lanny and I were walking along, talking about the new baby, having a good time," Bobby Wadkins said. "Lanny didn't play very well (he shot a 76), but that's what you expect from a new daddy."

While Lanny Wadkins' thoughts may have been back in Dallas with wife, Penny, and the baby, Bobby's thoughts were ever more farther away.

"With all the foreign players here, I was trying to pretend that this was a foreign tournament — like I was in Akron, Japan or something like that," he said.

He had good reason to think of foreign shores. He is yet to win in 13 seasons on the American PGA Tour, but he has won tournaments abroad. He won the European Open and twice has won the Dunlop Phoenix in Japan. It was his second Dunlop victory last fall that gained him entry into the World Series.

"It just hasn't been my time to win yet, and I sure am getting tired of waiting" Wadkins said. He has been in title contention several times this year, including in the recent PGA.

"But I think I've got my game to a level of consistency now that sooner or later it's going to come," said Wadkins, who tied a tournament record with a string of four consecutive birdies and matched his best round of the year on the tough Firestone Country Club course.

"You never complain about a 64 but, realistically, it could have been a couple of shots better," he said. Wadkins missed a three-foot birdie putt on the 17th hole shortly after returning to the course following a 40-minute rain delay, and also missed two putts of 10 feet or less.

Masters champion Larry Mize, who holed a 141-yard nine-iron shot for an eagle-2, and Kenny Knox had 67s to share second in the 43-man field.

D.A. Weibring, Davis Love III and Mike Hulbert were at 68. The only others under par were PGA titleholder Larry Nelson, Mac O'Grady and Paul Azinger, all at 69.

Rosignol takes GTCC ladies title

From Staff Reports

Shirly Rosignol survived a poor tee shot off the second hole of overtime to win the Green Tree Country Club women's match play championship Thursday.

Rosignol chipped within 15 feet of the cup and sank her putt to take the title over Charlotte Marburger 1-up after 20 holes. Marburger was on the green in regulation on the par-three No. 2 hole but three-putted.

The women were tied after the regulation 18 holes and both made pars on the first hole of the playoff. Pam Camarata defeated Billie Fowler 4-and-3 to take the consolation title and Dannie Arrott beat Patty Stoltz 5-and-4 to win first flight honors.

Championship: Shirly Rosignol d. Charlotte Marburger, 1-up, 20 holes. Consolation: Pam Camarata d. Billie Fowler, 4-and-3.
First Flight: Dannie Arrott d. Patty Stoltz, 5-and-4. Consolation: Gerry Heckler d. Jean Elkin, 3-and-1.
Second Flight: Pat Dougherty d. Mary Fuller, 2-and-1. Consolation: Pat Edwards d. Joyce Coleman, 2-up.
Third Flight: Mary Ann Koerner d. Sharon Brose, 3-and-2. Consolation: Vernie Snare d. Bobi Lloyd, 1-up.
Nine Hole Championship: Ernestine Patterson 177, 2. Jo Ann Teasley 180, 3. Sara Gleb 182. Lame Duck Flight: Low Gross-Caroline Henry 86. Low Net-Flossie Larch. Putting Contest: Billie Fowler. Closest to Hole No. 6: Pat Dougherty. Closest to Hole No. 8 in nine hole: Sharon Jeffers.

Bay, who had been opposed to the appeal, changed his position after the reinstatement with Austin and the meeting with Rozelle.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 29, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Get organized so that you can make better use of your time. You cannot afford to get bogged down with petty matters. Outline the broad picture and let others fill in the details. Paying closer attention to company policy will help you climb to the top. The financial picture shows considerable improvement. Travel could create a job opportunity for a young person. Family relationships become more rewarding.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: physician-author Oliver Wendell Holmes, video star-singer Michael Jackson, director-actor Sir Richard Attenborough, infielder Doug DeCinces, superstar actress Ingrid Bergman, movie director William Friedkin, actor Elliott Gould, TV favorite Isabel Sanford.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do what you can to save a friendship and solve an intricate personal problem. Business takes a turn for the better, putting extra money in your pocket. Have faith in yourself.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Developing an athletic talent could lead to big bucks. Consult the professionals for up-to-date advice. Unique promotional activities boost your chances for success. Avoid doing anything that is against your principles.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Circumstances support your ideas. Money matters need your personal attention. Take your ideas to those in authority. Good luck and devotion make a good relationship great! Wear your heart on your sleeve in romance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A telephone call builds your confidence. There are ways to make your home more comfortable without going into debt. Use some elbow grease. A parent-child relationship is strengthened by this weekend's events.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are full of enthusiasm today, but should not expect others to feel exactly the same. Tackle projects you can handle on your own. Romance is a subject you need to discuss.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be careful about picking an argument with an outsider. You will find new career opportunities by broadening your social horizons. Be discreet.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Spontaneity is the key to a pleasurable weekend. Family questions deserve answers. Do not be too influenced by a newcomer. Rely on those who have proven their loyalty again and again.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Make sure you are getting enough rest. Take some time out this weekend to recharge your batteries. Plan activities you and partner can enjoy doing together. Romance will find a way!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are in control again. Take responsibility for your actions and a personal relationship will regain its former lustre. Seek companions who contribute and have positive ideas.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Economic conditions may not be as bad as they have been painted. Funds arrive from an unexpected source. Writing skills need to be exercised. Make a point of contributing to the arts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A pet project could fly high if you make a small revision. An expert wants to help. Love relationships thrive now that you are being more open and communicative.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The way you handle a matter of conscience determines how well the weekend will go. Look for bigger issues to occupy your time. Loved one is willing to mend a quarrel. Kiss and make up!

Many are familiar with the Seabee creed: "The difficult we do immediately; the impossible takes a bit longer." A clever bit of falsecarding by East brought about this "impossible" result for the defense.

In keeping with modern practice, North-South were employing two clubs as their game force, along with weak two-bids and 21-22 point two no trump opening bids. Therefore, the auction was routine.

West led the queen of hearts, and when dummy appeared declarer could count seven fast tricks. Since he couldn't afford to give up two ticks in the minors in an attempt to set up long cards there, his only hope was to develop the spade suit. Lack of dummy entries prevented him from taking two finesses through East, so at trick two declarer immediately led a low spade to dummy's nine. East won with the king!

Declarer did not know spades were going to split 3-3. What was a "certainty" was that West held the jack of spades. Therefore, South won the heart return and confidently led a spade to the ten. East gratefully took the trick and persevered with hearts, and the five tricks the defenders garnered (two spades and three hearts) were just enough to break the contract.

To appreciate the beauty of East's falsecard in capturing the first spade trick with the king, see what would happen if, instead, East were to routinely win with the jack. Declarer needs three more spade tricks, and the only practical way to get them would be to cross to the board with the ace of diamonds and run the queen of spades. Whether or not East covers would be immaterial; the contract would sail home peacefully.

Randy Travis dehydrated, hospitalized

WYTHEVILLE, Va. (AP) — Country singer Randy Travis was admitted to a hospital Thursday for treatment for dehydration, a spokesman said.

Newell Wright, director of public relations for Wythe County Community Hospital, said Travis was in stable condition. He did not know what caused the singer's illness, what treatment had been prescribed or how long he would remain hospitalized.

Douglas

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Kirk Douglas has filed a $17.8 million breach-of-contract suit over his firing as celebrity spokesman for the computer company Sperry Corp.

Douglas said he had a $2.5 million contract for a minimum of two years to do TV commercials and personal appearances and that it was terminated a year early after Sperry merged with Burroughs Corp. last fall.

The two companies have since renamed themselves Unisys Corp., with headquarters in Detroit and Blue Bell, Pa.

A Unisys spokesman, Peter Hynes, said company lawyers have not seen the suit, filed in federal court Thursday.

Caine

MONTREAL (AP) — Actor Michael Caine says he's ending eight years of tax exile in Los Angeles and returning to England.

At a news conference at the Montreal Film Festival on Thursday, the 53-year-old Caine said Hollywood is a wonderful place.

"But I also remember what Orson Wells once said: 'I sat down in an armchair in Los Angeles when I was 23, and when I got up I was 61,'" he said.

"I found myself drinking Perrier with every meal. I was eating things which I don't know. They kept giving me salads with something called arugula. I didn't know what arugula was. I was also getting very homesick."

Caine was the subject of a tribute at the festival, where his latest film, "The Fourth Protocol," was given its North American premiere.

NEW YORK (AP) — Mayor Edward I. Koch says he slipped on a rug and bumped his head going to the bathroom in the dark but insists the fall was unrelated to his recent stroke.

Friends "should not be concerned, because I am here," Koch said. "Look! It's me! OK?"

The mayor Thursday said he did not pass out and needed no help getting up after the fall at his official residence Tuesday. He said he did not call his doctor and has had no problems with balance.

The subject came up when reporters noticed a slight abrasion over his right eye on Thursday.

Koch suffered a minor stroke Aug. 6 and was hospitalized for four days.

Judiciary article, citizen privileges OK'd

Associated Press

1787 Constitution Daybook

Tuesday, Aug. 28, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Today was rainy and not as cool as yesterday, with temperatures in the 70s.

Retired druggist Christopher Marshall signed up for two shares in the Pennsylvania Society for the Encouragement of Manufacturing and the Useful Arts, and spent the evening studying William Prichard's sales catalog.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

There was no quorum today and Congress could not meet.

CONVENTION TODAY

The judiciary article was approved, and the Convention moved on to Article XII, which prohibited state coinage, state-issued letters of marque, state treaties and state letters of nobility.

James Wilson (Pa.) and Roger Sherman (Conn.) moved to prohibit the states from issuing bills of credit or making anything but gold or silver legal tender. The article passed.

Rufus King (Mass.) moved to prevent the states from interfering in private contracts. Sherman, Wilson, and James Madison (Va.) agreed; Gouverneur Morris (Pa.) and George Mason (Va.) thought this was going too far. John Rutledge (S.C.) moved instead that to prohibit bills of attainder and ex post facto laws.

Next came Article XIII:

"No State, without the consent of the Legislature of the United States, shall emit bills of credit, or make any thing but specie a tender in payment of debts; nor lay imposts or duties on imports; nor keep troops or ships of war in time of peace; nor enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with any foreign power; nor engage in any war, unless it shall be actually invaded by enemies, or the danger of invasion be so imminent, as not to admit of delay, until the Legislature of the United States can be consulted."

After debate and amendment, the article was agreed to.

Article XIV, giving the citizens of each state all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states, was also approved.

DELEGATES TODAY

James McHenry (Md.) wrote his "dear Peggy":

"It is extremely distressing to me to be under the necessity to remain a day longer in this place, where I find no enjoyments whatever and am even without the satisfaction of knowing that what I am assisting in will meet with the approbation of those who sent me hither."

LOOKING BACK
Voting in the Convention

On this day, Rufus King moved to prohibit the states from interfering in private contracts (no state shall pass any "Law impairing the obligation of Contracts" — Article II Section 10). King seems to have felt strongly about this issue. Yet when the vote came, Massachusetts did not vote. What happened?

Alexander Hamilton, who favored a strengthened federal government as much as any man, felt free to absent himself for weeks at a time. Why?

The answer to both questions lies in this fact: each state decided at the time it elected delegates how many of its delegates must be present to cast the state's vote. A single delegate could cast the votes of Connecticut and Maryland; New Hampshire, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia required at least two; Massachusetts, New Jersey, Delaware and Virginia required three; and Pennsylvania, four. New York did not specify, but the Convention seems to have assumed that a majority of the three-member delegation was required.

On this day, Caleb Strong had gone home to North Hampton, leaving only three Massachusetts delegates. Thus, if Elbridge Gerry, Nathaniel Gorham or King were ill, or attending to personal business, Massachusetts could not vote. Since John Lansing and Robert Yates had gone home in mid-July, New York had had no quorum and hence no vote. Hamilton could influence the Convention only by his powers of persuasion, and his attendance, except on key occasions, wasn't worthwhile.

It is this variation within delegations which permitted Roger Sherman and William Samuel Johnson to "run off" a week before the July-August recess began (Oliver Ellsworth could cast Connecticut's vote), which permitted North Carolina's William Richardson Davie and Alexander Martin to leave early, and which allowed William Pierce of Georgia to stay on at Congress while Gorham and King couldn't.

Dollar slips

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar opened marginally lower in quiet trading on European currency markets today, propped up by reported bursts of dollar-buying by the Japanese central bank. Gold was mixed.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 1.05 yen to a closing 141.50. Later, in London, it was quoted at 141.95.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Thursday:

—1.8135 West German marks, down from 1.8160

—1.4925 Swiss francs, down from 1.4940

—6.0505 French francs, down from 6.0650

—2.0399 Dutch guilders, down from 2.0435

—1,312.25 Italian lire, down from 1,315.37

—1.3183 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3170

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.6295, compared with $1.6275 Thursday.

GOLD

The weakened dollar strengthened European gold prices. The metal opened in London at a bid price of $456.25 a troy ounce, compared with late Thursday's $453.50. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $455.90.

In Zurich, the bid price was $456.00, up from $455.00 late Thursday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $2.58 to close at a bid $456.91.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $7.59 a troy ounce, up from Thursday's $7.56.

STOCKS

Dow retrenches

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market retreated for the second straight session Thursday in selling ascribed to concern over a weak dollar and rising interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 26.79 to 2,675.06, bringing its drop since it hit a record closing high Tuesday to 47.36 points.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange slowed to 163.61 million shares from 196.19 million in the previous session.

With interest rates on the rise in the credit markets, prices of long-term government bonds showed losses of as much as $10 for each $1,000 in face value in Wednesday's activity.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 2 to 1 in the overall tally on the NYSE, with 530 up, 1,034 down and 411 unchanged. The exchange's composite index lost 1.68 to 185.26.

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 192.51 million shares.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials fell 3.63 to 387.28, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down 3.58 at 326.13.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market slipped .46 to 454.80. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 361.02, down 1.96.

Texaco legal fees near $2 million per month

By MARLENE AIG
Associated Press Writer

RYE BROOK, N.Y. (AP) — Texaco's three-year court battle against Pennzoil has cost Texaco up to $55 million, a lawyer told creditors and shareholders.

Harvey Miller, the lead attorney in Texaco's bankruptcy proceedings, said Thursday that the figure was within ballpark range. He said he preferred to estimate costs in terms of $1.5 million to $2 million monthly, depending upon court activity.

His comments came during a meeting for shareholders and creditors, the first for the shareholders since they created a committee last month to protect their interests.

Richard Brinkman, Texaco's chief financial officer and a vice president who reviewed the legal proceedings, said the company was doing its annual business planning for the future. He said Texaco Inc. was operating in the black.

Most of the questions from the 40 or so who attended focused on the legal battle and the possibility of resuming divdients.

Texaco filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code. The filing stemmed from a more than $10.2 billion judgment awarded to Pennzoil by a Texas jury after Pennzoil claimed Texaco illegally acquired Getty Oil Co.

Miller said that if Texaco loses in the Texas Supreme Court it could turn to the U.S. Supreme Court because the Securities and Exchange Commission has filed a brief on Texaco's behalf saying Pennzoil violated a federal securities regulations.

He said the case in Texas was complex and that it was possible for the state's highest court to give partial judgment on Texaco's behalf, reduce the damage judgment or even return the case to a lower court for retrial.

Concerning dividends, Brinkman said Texaco wanted to see a "reasonable and equitable settlement" of the company's legal entanglements.

He could not estimate when the legal case in Texas would end.

Equity shareholders committee chairman Bob Norris, a Colorado rancher, was on hand as was the committee's attorney, Dennis O'Dea.

Neither would comment on the committee's activities or the committee's meeting with Texaco executives Wednesday.

Meetings of creditors under the supervision of U.S. Trustee Harry Jones were mandated by the bankruptcy code.

Jones said the next creditors' meeting would be Nov. 4.

Oil prices ticking higher

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices have moved slightly higher after a spurt of profit-taking.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, October contracts for West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude, closed Thursday at $19.64 per 42-gallon barrel, up 18 cents from Wednesday.

The near-month contract, which leaped 82 cents to $19.46 per barrel Wednesday, last closed above $19 on the previous Thursday, when it finished at $19.42.

Prices for refined products also were mostly higher. September contracts for wholesale unleaded gasoline closed at 51.04 cents per gallon, up .14 cent from Wednesday, when it picked up 1.60 cents. Wholesale heating oil contracts for September settled at 51.72 cents per gallon, up .54 cent after having gained 2.13 cents per gallon Wednesday.

Thursday's session was characterized by some early selling as traders took profits from Wednesday's big rally. But prices moved higher later in the session.

In recent weeks, the market has been going through a volatile period, torn between fears that a Persian Gulf confrontation might hamper supplies, driving prices up, and nervousness that growing overproduction by some members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries would push prices down.

Analysts said the market took heart when OPEC President Rilwanu Lukman told a Tuesday news conference in Lagos, Nigeria, he would meet in Vienna today with representatives from Indonesia and Venezuela to find ways to make members honor their quotas.

Another five-member team would meet to review and monitor oil prices, he said.

The 13-nation cartel's self-imposed production quota is 16.6 million barrels a day. But some industry-watchers have pegged the cartel's overall surplus at as much as 3 million barrels a day.

Jayne Ball, a commodity oil broker at the investment firm Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., said she believed most industry traders had moved to the sidelines Thursday, content with the price levels they had settled on the day before.

"I think the market is more bullish — but for no particular reason," she said. "(Traders) think OPEC overdid itself, and now is going to pull itself back into line."

"But they are giving them the benefit of a doubt more than anything else," she said.

Although wholesale prices have fallen from what they were several weeks ago, consumers are unlikely to see much difference at the retail level soon. The main reason is that it takes weeks for the raw crude to be shipped, refined and distributed to the final point of sale.

Houston bank closing state's 36th

HOUSTON (AP) — Liberal lending practices and a poor loan administration lead to the closing of the Bank of North America, the 36th such bank closure in Texas this year, banking officials said.

Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. officials Thursday approved the transfer of insured deposits to Texas Commerce Bank National Association of Houston, FDIC spokesman Steve Katsanos said.

"The failed bank's only office will not reopen," he said. "Insured deposits of the failed bank will be available to their owners on Friday at Texas Commerce Bank-Southeast Branch (in Houston). Checks drawn on the failed bank's accounts will continue to be honored."

Texas Banking Commissioner Kenneth W. Littlefield said ineffective supervision by the bank's board of directors also resulted in losses exceeding the bank's capital funds.

He said a recent joint examination by the Texas Banking Department and the FDIC identified numerous losses on loans to local customers for commercial and real estate purposes.

"Substantial lossess stemmed from the liberal financing of a local used car dealer and involved the apparent fraudulent use of fake purchase drafts and titles to nonexistent vehicles," Littlefield said. "The resulting capital deficit could not be remedied and the bank's board, finding the bank in a failing condition, tendered the bank to the commissioner for liquidation."

Crusaders work to 'stop the raid'

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Moon Landrieu, the point man of a crusade to quash hostile corporate takeovers, said Thursday that takeovers usually wind up benefitting only the corporate raider while hurting communities and companies.

Landrieu, who was secretary of Housing and Urban Development in the Carter administration and a two-term mayor of New Orleans, heads the Coalition to Stop the Raid on America.

Landrieu said at a news conference that the campaign is not against all corporate takeovers, just those that dismember companies to enrich the raiders at the expense of employees and communities.

The coalition, formed Aug. 12, supports changes in security laws that would require those seeking takeovers to disclose when they have acquired 2 percent of a company's stock, rather than the present 5 percent.

Furthermore, the coalition believes the law should require that large acquisitions be disclosed in 24 hours, rather than the ten days currently required.

The coalition also supports other restrictions on the activities of raiders, including a tightening of controls on secret practices by groups of investors.

Organizers of the coalition, whose members include Arch Robbins, the mayor of Bartlesville, Okla., and Wisconsin Gov. Tommy Thompson, say takeover contests have left tens of thousands of workers without jobs and communities drained of economic vitality.

Robbins has said the raid of T. Boone Pickens on Phillips Petroleum Co. devastated Bartlesville, where the oil company is based. The company managed to fight off the takeover attempt.

Many companies that survive takeover attempts are so weakened by debt that they can no longer compete effectively, coalition members have said.

Landrieu met Thursday morning with business and civic leaders at the offices of the Chamber of Commerce of Greater Kansas City.

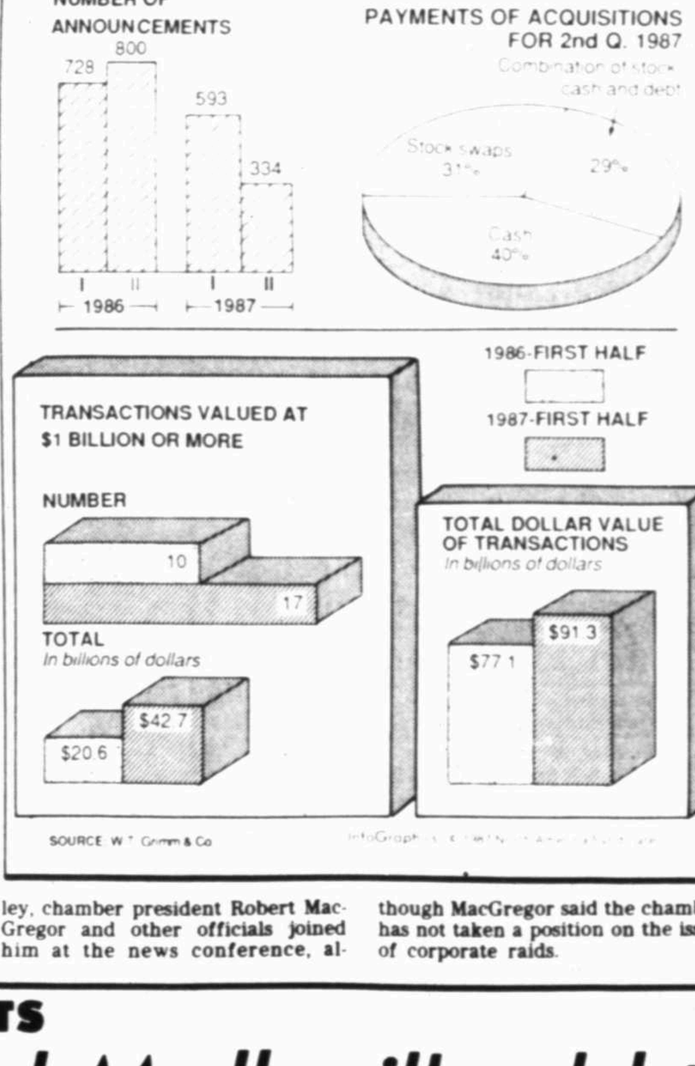

Kansas City Mayor Richard Berkley, chamber president Robert MacGregor and other officials joined him at the news conference, although MacGregor said the chamber has not taken a position on the issue of corporate raids.

Business acquisitions decline

According to W.T. Grimm & Co., business acquisitions during the second quarter of 1987 fell to 334, compared to 593 in the first quarter. Just 927 acquisitions were announced in the first two quarters of 1987, compared to more than 1,500 during the same period in 1986. Although there were fewer transactions, there was an increase in the dollar value paid from $77.1 billion in the first half of 1986 to $91.3 billion in the first half of 1987. This was for all transactions where the purchase price was reported. There was an increase in transactions valued at more than $1 billion from 10 to 17.

Inflation, deficit anxieties take toll on Wall Street

Associated Press

Investors are growing apprehensive about tightened credit, higher inflation and the voracious U.S. consumer demand for foreign goods despite their increased cost.

Stocks, bonds and the dollar's value fell Thursday in reaction to the anxiety. On Wall Street, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 26.79 points to 2,675.06, bringing its decline since reaching a closing high Tuesday to 47.36 points. Broader barometers of stock performance also fell.

Part of the stock market's decline was linked to the slumping bond market, where investors were unnerved by indications that the Federal Reserve Board was moving discreetly to raise interest rates in an effort to stabilize the dollar.

The Treasury Department's 30-year bond, the most closely watched U.S. debt security, fell as much as $15 for each $1,000 in face amount and its yield vaulted over the 9 percent mark for the first time in more than three weeks.

The bond market's weakness was caused largely by a selloff in the dollar, which makes investments denominated in the U.S. currency worth less and can lead to higher inflation.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Rosewood reaps $25 million from Van Heusen

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Rosewood Financial Inc., controlled by the Texas investor Caroline Rose Hunt, confirmed that it had sold most of its 19.7 percent stake in the Phillips-Van Heusen Corp., for $64.9 million, making a profit of about $25 million. Rosewood had said Wednesday that it had sold the shares.

In a filing Thursday, Rosewood said it had sold 2.84 million Phillips-Van Heusen shares on the open market this week, at prices ranging from $22.75 to $23.37 a share. Rosewood made an unsuccessful $333 million bid for the New York-based apparel concern. The Dallas-based investment firm still holds 141,750 Phillips-Van Heusen shares, or just under 1 percent.

Chrysler cutting K-car prices for coming year

DETROIT (NYT) — The Chrysler Corp. said it would cut the price of two car models by $1,369 in an effort to increase sales. The 1988 Plymouth Reliant and Dodge Aries, twins that are derived from the K-car family, would have a suggested base price of $6,995, compared with $8,364 for comparably equipped 1987 models. Gerald Greenwald, chairman of Chrysler Motors, said the cars would be priced at their 1981 level. He compared the discounts to a similar discount offered recently for the Dodge Omni and Plymouth Horizon. That offer produced an 86 percent increase in sales in four months over the corresponding period a year earlier.

Lawsuit filed to halt Hodel offshore lease plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of environmentalists sued the Interior Department in an effort to halt its offshore oil and gas leasing plan, calling the proposal "an attack on our nation's natural heritage."

The lawsuit, filed Thursday in the U.S. Court of Appeals, claims Interior Secretary Donald P. Hodel neglected to consider the effect that drilling on the outer continental shelf could have on the nation's coastal areas.

Environmentalists are particularly concerned about the coasts of California, Oregon and Washington, Georges Bank off New England, Bristol Bay in Alaska and the Florida Keys.

Dellwood Mall will add three new stores

Pitts

After having fallen on hard times as a result of the downturn, new life is once again being breathed into DELLWOOD MALL. Mike Lewis & Associates which manages the store reports three new businesses set to open soon in Midland's first mall.

The primary store is 50-OFF, which will occupy the 20,000 square feet formerly occupied by Kresge, and will carry name-brand clothing, gift wares, housewares, drapes, linens and towels at a 50 percent discount off the manufacturer's recommended retail price.

Operated by San Antonio-based Shopper's World Inc. the Midland store, set to open before Oct. 30, will be the 17th store opened by the fast-growing chain this year. The company also operates a 50-Off store in Odessa's Winwood Mall.

Another store opening set for Dellwood is CHINA CHEF, a Chinese fast food concept eatery, which will offer on-site dining, take-out and delivery. The restaurant will be operated by Lawrence Chen, who now operates the China Palace in San Miguel Square. Remodeling is now underway with an opening expected within 30 days.

Lewis also reports that a basket and pottery store is due to open soon in the mall.

****

Another business set for an opening soon is QUALITY BODY WORKS, 3111 W. Front Street, which is in the process of converting that location into a 20,000 square foot facility that will specialize in collision repair and painting, and will specialize in Japanese and European automobiles and trucks.

The business is owned by Terry Scott, who operates Quality Body Works of Odessa. Scott is making the move to Midland to utilize surplus equipment and personnel which were acquired during the upturn in the Permian Basin.

"The feel now is an opportune time to expand to Midland," said Scott. "There are more foreign cars in this market. We have excess equipment and trained personnel, and Midland has shown real growth in the past ten years."

Permian Basin businesses with a project that is hanging for lack of research would do well to consider the SMALL BUSINESS INSTITUTE which will be in operation at University of Texas Permian Basin this fall.

Administered by the Small Business Administration, the Institute is now selecting client businesses for the program, which uses teams of senior and graduate students to provide research, case analysis, counseling and consulting services to area businesses at no cost to the firm.

The program is designed to give firms a real assist with projects while providing qualified business students with a practical experience. In previous years UTPB student teams have performed such efforts as market research projects, advertising studies, recordkeeping and paperwork analyses, comparison of business costs versus industry ratios and similar projects.

Business persons interested in the SBI program are urged to contact Dr. Thomas Shaefer, 367-2156 at UTPB, or the Lubbock SBA office at (806) 743-7462.

MARATHON OIL CO. spokesmen have denied reports that the firm is looking for 15,000 square feet of additional office space or that the oil company intends to move up to 150 families into Midland.

"The rumor is probably the result of our moving some personnel around town," said William Ryder, Marathon manager of media relations. "We had 25 people in the Briercroft Building and decided to move them into our own building, but it became too crowded and we are now moving them back. No people are being added to the Midland office."

Actor can't get away from animals

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Alan Young can't seem to get away from animals, whether it's a talking horse named "Mr. Ed" or a cantankerous quacker named "Scrooge McDuck."

"I've been involved with lions and mice and horses and a duck, and they all talked," he said.

It started in the early 1950s when Young was a hot young actor newly arrived from Canada and New York with a hit TV show. Billionaire Howard Hughes saw him one night and signed him for "Androcles and the Lion."

George Bernard Shaw's fable didn't do well at the box office when it was released as a comedy. Hughes recalled it, filmed new scenes for two weeks and re-released it as a drama.

"He put in girls with gauze and a real lion, and it became a blood and guts film," said Young.

"Mr. Ed," the comedy that ran on CBS from 1961 to 1965, was his most famous association with an animal. He played Wilbur Post, a young architect who owned a horse whose talent for talking, and a loose lip, kept Wilbur in hot water.

Someone else supplied Mr. Ed's voice. Then Young found his own voice.

"A friend of mine was doing 'The Flintstones,'" he said. "I was writing some children's stories at the time, and he asked me to come down and do some things. I wrote some humorous Bible stories, and we put them on audio cassettes. We tied up with some puppeteers, and religious groups could put them on."

Alan Young

By that time he was in the voice business and worked on such movies as "Black Beauty" and "Through the Looking Glass."

He recently completed 65 episodes as the voice of "Scrooge McDuck" for Walt Disney Studios' new animated series "DUCKTALES." It will be syndicated this fall.

He's also done voices for "The Smurfs," "Mickey's Christmas Carol," "The Great Mouse Detective," "Mr. T," "The Chipmunks" and many others. In recent years, he's made acting appearances on "The Love Boat" and "Murder, She Wrote."

Many of the stories for "DUCKTALES" came from the "Scrooge McDuck" comic books, said Young, who was presented a three-volume collection by a fan when he was in San Francisco recently to do a commercial.

"It's nice to see the old Disney animation again," he said. "I've been working on this for almost a year. They're going to edit together four or five shows for a two-hour prime-time special on the weekend of Sept. 18. Normally, the show will be shown in the afternoons after school."

His work on "Mickey's Christmas Carol" was the first time he had worked for Disney Studios.

"I met Walt Disney years ago when I was doing 'The Alan Young Show' and he said he wanted me to do a movie," Young said. "He took me to lunch and told me the story. But by the time he was ready I wasn't hot anymore, and he got Fred MacMurray. I think it was 'The Shaggy Dog.'"

Young said that it was in "Tom Thumb" that he first did the Scottish accent he uses for "Scrooge McDuck."

"My family came from Scotland. I was born just inside England, in Tynemouth," he said. "We moved to Canada when I was 6 or 7. I started acting on the radio and on stage in Canada when I was about 12. I was a mimic. I did Gracie Fields until my voice changed.

"I went to New York after World War II when I was asked to replace Eddie Cantor on radio one summer. I didn't like America. I thought New York was America, and I wanted to go home."

He had his own show on the Blue Network (now ABC Radio).

Parrot finds place of luxury to roost

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A large green parrot looking for a place to hang his feathers had the good sense to pick the RiverPlace Alexis Hotel's $500-a-night Grand Suite.

He didn't say a word when he checked in Aug. 15, appearing in the Grand Suite and surprising a room attendant who was cleaning the marble bathroom.

Assuming he was with guests who had just moved into another suite from the fourth-floor set of rooms, the hotel staff carefully transferred the parrot on a paper towel perch along with the guests' other belongings.

The guests, however, disclaimed the bird, so he fell to the care of the hotel staff.

Newspaper ads failed to solve the mystery, and the parrot isn't helping. "He jabbers but I haven't heard him talk in our language," said hotel spokeswoman Celinda Carlisle Knott.

NOW APPEARING RUTH SHORTER

During her seven years as a performer, Ruth Shorter has become accomplished in many styles of music.
As a working vocalist and bassist in the Albuquerque area Ruth has gained many fans in the Country-Western and Country-Rock Circles. This lead to nomination for 1985 "Female Vocalist Of The Year" by the New Mexico Country Music Association.
Also in 1985 came the honor of being a featured vocalist at the very exclusive "Madrid Jazz Festival", sponsored by the New Mexico Jazz Workshop. To her credit, Ruth is often asked to perform as an "Opening Act" for major stars, the most recent include Earl Thomas Conlee, Razzy Baily and Donna Fargo.

Woman promotes Globetrotters team

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — Cynthia A. Stearns has an usual sales job: She tries to entice people in the United States and Canada to attend performances of the world-famous Harlem Globetrotters.

Ms. Stearns, a former Williamsport area woman, is the Globetrotters' domestic marketing director. This means she travels all over North America promoting the zany baseketball team, somewhat like an "advance man" for a traveling circus.

She is based at the Globetrotters' headquarters in Los Angeles, and has been promoting the team since January.

"I am responsible for all the advertising, promotions and publicity for the team at every one of their games in the United States and Canada. Last year they had more than 100 bookings," she said.

Ms. Stearns received a bachelor's degree in education from Springfield College, Springfield, Mass., in 1980.

"It's kind of funny that I got involved with the Globetrotters since Springfield College is where basketball was invented and now I am working with the magicians of basketball," she said.

At Springfield, Ms. Stearns helped market the 1980 Winter Olympics at Lake Placid, N.Y. She then went on to Ohio University in Cincinnati for a master's degree in 1981 in sports administration.

While studying for her master's, Ms. Stearns worked as an intern at the 12,000-seat Sundome at the University of South Florida, in Tampa, Fla. She coordinated the installation of stages, basketball courts, sound systems and concessions.

Her association with the Globetrotters began when she was marketing coordinator from 1983-86 at Cincinnati's 16,000-seat Riverfront Coliseum.

There, at her first full-time job, she promoted concerts, basketball games and family shows, and became acquainted with the Globetrotters. When the Globetrotters sought a new marketing director early this year, she landed the job.

Before joining the Globetrotters' organization, Ms. Stearns also worked for the U.S. Hot Rod Association in Hot Springs, Ark. She was one of three marketing directors promoting weekend motor sports around the country, such things as truck and tractor pulls, motocross and indoor mud bog racing at arenas like the Spectrum in Philadelphia, the Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J., and Pittsburgh's Civic Arena.

While marketing for the Hot Rod Association, Ms. Stearns attended the events and traveled with others to them.

But her job with the Globetrotters is different. She still travels a lot, but alone.

"I travel in advance of the games to set up promotions and to meet with the media people," Ms. Stearns said. "I don't travel with the team. I talk with the team on a daily basis but sometimes I only get to see them twice a month.

Parton confident show will be hit

MARINA DEL REY, Calif. (AP) — Talk to Dolly Parton, and it's easy to see how she convinced network executives to fork over millions to give her a weekly variety show with a two-year guarantee.

The country songstress and movie star has more confidence in her newly pared-down, 95-pound body than Madison Square Garden contains on pro wrestling night.

"I decided to do the show because I felt that I could do it well," Parton said, perched on a stool at a news conference in a yacht club. "Everybody around me has been a lot more frightened than me. I have a lot of confidence that I can do it."

Her show, "Dolly," debuting this fall on Sunday night, will be a linchpin in the ABC schedule. ABC finished third last season and has a lot riding on the upcoming television year.

Add to that the fact that network variety shows have been abandoned in recent years since cable took much of the duty of entertaining the viewing public via music and comedy, and the Parton show looks like a pretty expensive gamble.

But country singer Barbara Mandrell had a successful variety series for two years on NBC until she quit, overcome by the hectic pace. And it's Dolly Parton here, megastar in many an American social stratum, an entertainer who talks often and sincerely of "the people."

Parton's production company owns the show. The two years ABC promises to keep her on the air, she says, is enough time to "get it right." And she has signed up Don Mischer, a successful producer of variety specials like the Grammy Awards.

"I just don't believe that it's true that variety television is dead," Parton said. "I think people would like to see music and comedy and fun things again on TV."

Her show will be taped at the ABC studios in Los Angeles, but she will go on location — to a women's prison, to the reversed-sex ogling club Chippendale's, and on dream "dates" with desirable men, like Tom Selleck, perhaps. "As they say, it's a dirty job but somebody's got to do it," Parton said. Other regular segments will include "Vanity Fair," with Dolly as a beautician talking on semiserious subjects with the gals, and "Dew Drop Inn," a comic interlude set in a country-western bar.

Her guests are slated to include Lily Tomlin and Jane Fonda, Parton's co-stars in the hit movie "9 to 5," and she has already booked Pee Wee Herman, Tom Petty and Little Richard. She said her "wish list" includes Mikhail Baryshnikov, Liza Minnelli, Frank Sinatra and Bob Dylan.

"We're really going to do basically what everybody's done, but hopefully it'll be a little different because it'll be me," she said.

"The realer I can stay — even though I look phony — I think that will be one of the keys to the success of the show."

One of the most interesting guests might turn out to be the real Dolly Parton, sans big, blonde wigs and skin-tight spangles.

"Hopefully, with the show, I'll be able to have a lot of different looks, too," she said. "I'll be able to look more elegant at times. I'll be able to look softer at times, and I'll be able to dress down at times, depending on the character. And you know, it'll actually be a chance for people to see me looking different ways and natural."

There's a lot less Dolly than there used to be — try size zero jeans. It took her four years on every diet that came along — including one she had never heard of billed as "the Dolly Parton diet" — but she eventually lost more than 40 pounds, she said. She finds her current 95 pounds just fine for her height, 5 foot 1.

"A lot of people think I'm too skinny now, but I think a lot of it is because they've seen me so fat for so long," Parton said.

"A lot of people just didn't know I was such a little, bitty person until I lost all that lard...I'm just a little, bitty person with a great, big mouth."

Meteorite created rich ore deposit

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — A catastrophic meteorite impact about 1.8 billion years ago created one of the world's largest and richest deposits of metal ores, according to new evidence reported by scientists at the University of Rochester.

The findings of Asish Basu and Billy Faggart of the university confirm the theory that the metal-rich region around Sudbury, Ont., was formed when a giant meteorite hit the region. They say this caused the earth's crust in that area to melt and separate into distinctive layers of metals.

In addition to nickel and copper, of which Sudbury is one of the world's largest suppliers, the complex produces significant amounts of platinum, palladium, iridium, and other rare metals.

Iran unimpressed by U.N. arms threats

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran scoffed at the threat of a United Nations arms embargo, saying it has flight-tested its first home-produced plane and vowing to press its 7-year-old war with Iraq to victory.

Meanwhile, sandstorms blowing across the Persian Gulf on Thursday reduced visibility and made it ifficult to determine the location of the latest northbound convoy of reflagged Kuwaiti oil tankers and U.S. Navy warships.

Sources in Kuwait and Washington on Thursday denied reports the convoy was off the coast of Saudi Arabia or had arrived in Kuwait.

In another development, Pentagon officials in Washington said the aircraft carrier Ranger and eight escorting warships arrived Thursday in the northern Arabian Sea, south of the gulf, to relieve the carrier Constellation.

The scheduled turnover will enable the U.S. Navy to continue providing air cover for convoys of Kuwaiti tankers and their U.S. escorts through the Persian Gulf, where Iran and Iraq have targeted commercial shipping.

Iranian Prime Minister Hussein Musavi, speaking at a meeting Thursday of officials in charge of Iran's war effort, urged them to "be fully prepared" for a "direct conflict" with the United States in the gulf, Tehran Radio reported. "All the country's resources should be mobilized for this cause," Musavi said in a Tehran Radio report monitored in Cyprus. Musavi was quoted as saying the war with Iraq was at "its most critical juncture."

He said Iran now produces many of its own weapons and through "hard efforts" obtains arms from other unidentified sources, the radio said.

The United States has given 11 Kuwaiti tankers U.S. registry and the American flag so the Navy can protect them.

U.S.-protected tanker convoys to Kuwait began July 20.

Iran has spent billions of dollars since the war began in September 1980, buying weapons on the international black market despite a U.S.-inspired arms embargo that the United States itself violated in an arms-for-hostages deal.

U.S. officials have identified more than 20 countries, including China and North Korea, which keep Iran's arsenal supplied.

Musavi on Wednesday said Iran will not compromise in the war. That was seen as an apparent rejection of a July 20 U.N. Security Council resolution calling for an immediate cease-fire.

U.S. officials are consulting with other members of the 15-nation Security Council on the possible sanctions against Iran, including an arms embargo.

Iraq and other Arab countries have urged the United Nations to impose sanctions on Iran for failing to comply with the cease-fire call. At a meeting of the Arab League on Tuesday, Arab nations threatened a break diplomatic relations with Iran if it doesn't accept the U.N. resolution by Sept. 20.

Tehran radio on Thursday quoted an unidentified Foreign Ministry spokesman as calling that meeting "a failure" and saying Iran "will not be diverted from achieving victory."

Some military analysts do not believe an arms ban would work because Iran has in the past been able to secure weapons abroad and because communist countries are not likely to stop providing weapons.

Western military analysts say Iran has mobilized its factories, and even colleges and schools, to make missiles and guns over the last 18 months.

They estimate Tehran has saved about $1 billion by making hardware it once had to buy at often extortionate prices on the black market.

Information pieced together from Iranian statements, Western intelligence reports and other sources indicate that Iran now is manufacturing relatively primitive surface-to-surface missiles, rocket launchers, anti-tank missiles and mortars along with much of its ammunition requirements.

The Islamic Republic News Agency, also monitored in Nicosia, quoted Mohsen Rafiq-Doust, Iran's Revolutionary Guards Corps minister, as saying the nation's first domestically produced aircraft was successfully flight-tested recently.

He gave no details.

Western sources say the Iranians are now making unmanned remote-controlled reconnaissance aircraft. Iraq has claimed to have shot down several such craft.

The news agency also quoted Rafi-Doust as saying sophisticated prototypes of various types of submarines are now being built and will soon be launched.

Iran claimed its first submarine was launched last month during naval exercises in the gulf. Television footage of the semi-submerged craft indicated it was likely a mini-sub, probably for laying mines or carrying frogmen, rather than a conventional torpedo-firing sub.

The news agency quoted air force commander Brig. Gen. Mansur Sattari as claiming that Iran's U.S.-made F-14 Tomcat interceptors, most of them long grounded for lack of spare parts, were again operational because Iranian engineers are producing parts for them.

There was no immediate independent confirmation.

Lebanese demonstrators wave bank notes Thursday in Beirut, protesting soaring prices and the collapse of the Lebanese pound against foreign currencies.

Lebanese, angered by monetary decline, threaten Central Bank

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Hundreds of people angered by the plunging Lebanese pound smashed currency exchange windows, burned tires and threatened to storm the Central Bank on Thursday before troops fired into the air to disperse them.

In an apparently unrelated incident, authorities exploded a car bomb found near a Syrian checkpoint in a residential area minutes after a small bomb injured one person.

Meanwhile, state television went back on the air after a 10-day strike ended with management meeting employees' demands for pay raises and improved living conditions.

An estimated 500 motorists and pedestrians shouted "We are hungry, we want to eat!" and "Down with the dollar!" in a spontaneous demonstration after the Lebanese pound sunk to an all-time low of 300 to the U.S. dollar.

Lebanon imports 85 percent of its basic needs, and prices have soared since the pound began falling and caused the country's worst economic crisis since independence from France in 1943.

Twenty motorists set fire to rubber tires and blocked traffic along the Corniche Mazraa commercial thoroughfare to protest a gasoline shortage.

Shortly before, acting Finance Minister Joseph Hashem ordered the Central Bank to halt government subsidies for gasoline, a move that will likely triple prices.

Shopkeepers lowered their shutters and banks, government offices, movie theaters and other businesses closed down as the protest grew.

Syrian peacekeeping soldiers in west Beirut fired several shots in the air to prevent the protesters from ransacking money exchanges in the Hamra commercial district. Some demonstrators stoned the exchange booths, shattering windows, but no casualties were reported.

Lebanese troops fired in the air to stop some demonstrators trying to storm the bank building.

Lebanese have been cushioned to some degree from their war-battered country's worsening economic plight by state subsidized fuel and flour imports.

The Lebanese pound, once the most solid currency in the Middle East, has been hit hard by 12 years of civil war that has killed more than 130,000 people.

The pound, which rated 2.5 to the dollar before war broke out in 1975, has lost more than 98 percent of its value against foreign currencies since then.

The Central Bank did not release its daily list of currency exchange rates Thursday in an effort to curb the pound's decline. But money speculators traded foreign currencies according to "unrealistic rates," said one dealer who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The government-set minimum monthly salary of 4,300 pounds has declined in value from the equivalent of $120 in 1975 to about $15 at the current exchange rate.

Moderate leaders blame the decline on the government's inability to collect taxes and fees for public services in areas ruled by militias, cutting off the state's basic revenue.

Rival militias also operate a chain of illegal ports, stripping the treasury of an estimated $900 million a year in import duties.

Police said the small bomb went off at noon near a Syrian army checkpoint in west Beirut's Caracas neighborhood.

Minutes after the explosion, officials discovered a Merdedes-Benz sedan loaded with about 330 pounds of explosives. Military experts detonated the bomb.

Police said the car bomb was set to go off after the small bomb in an apparent attempt to cause a high number of casualties among Lebanese who usually rush to the scene of any explosion.

Mexican Socialists attract attention

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The newly formed Mexican Socialist Party is drawing attention with a plan to hold national primary elections to choose a presidential candidate for 1988.

That's never been done before in Mexico, where every presidential election since 1929 has been run by and won by the mighty Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI.

Many leftists would be satisfied to see the new party merely survive a race against the PRI.

"The creation of the Mexican Socialist Party as an alternative and powerful force will be the triumph of the presidential campaign. To put (expectations) any higher at this moment is unrealistic," said Eraclio Zepeda, 50, a writer, actor, ex-congressman, anthropologist, professor, journalist and declared candidate in the presidential primary.

A fellow declared candidate, Congressman Heberto Castillo, one of Mexico's best known leftists, argues the party must make clear it wants to win. Only a winning attitude, he says, will attract enough of Mexico's increasingly apathetic voters to actually give a chance for victory.

The party was founded March 30 with a broadly liberal statement of philosophy and a pledge to select its presidential candidate through a primary election.

The primary is scheduled for Sept. 6. Ballot boxes will be placed at as many city and town halls as possible around the country, and anyone eligible to vote will be registered on the spot if necessary and allowed to choose among Castillo, Zepeda and two lesser known candidates.

Although the primary will have no more official standing than a straw poll, many Mexicans will be interested to see if any opposition group can hold its own national election without interference.

The PRI-controlled Federal Electoral Commission normally runs all aspects of voting. For the primary, the Socialists have set up a special panel to print and collect ballots, count the votes and announce the results.

The primary is the Socialists' answer to the "destape," a Spanish word roughly meaning the "uncapping" or "unveiling." In Mexico it is the tradition by which the outgoing president, constitutionally limited to a single six-year term, picks the PRI's candidate — and that always has been tantamount to being elected.

In 1982, PRI candidate Miguel de la Madrid won the presidency with 70.99 percent of the vote. The candidate of the conservative National Action Party was second with 15.7 percent, while the Unified Socialist Party of Mexico, then the country's largest leftist party, was third with 8 percent.

Severe factionalism is usually blamed for the poor electoral showings by the left, in which parties and groups too small to gain party status regularly form, reform, coalesce, fuse, fight, disintegrate and disappear.

More firings threatened if miners fail to return

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The nation's largest mining company, which has fired more than 25,000 striking black miners, said 31,000 more will be sacked if they do not return to work Saturday.

The ultimatum came Thursday from Anglo American Corp., the company worst hit by the 19-day-old strike, after it fired about 18,400 gold and coal miners for defying back-to-work orders. Anglo last week fired 7,000 strikers.

The company has said it is hiring short-term replacements, but has declined to release any figures. Anglo, which produced more than 39 percent of South Africa's gold last year, employs about 180,000 black miners.

Also Thursday, the country's largest black labor federation, the Congress of South African Trade Unions, said it was considering a national strike and other "solidarity action" unless the mineworkers' wage demands were met.

The miners' union members voted Wednesday to reject an industry proposal that offered slight improvements in benefits but no additional pay.

The union said it would accept a 27 percent pay raise, instead of its previous demand of 30 percent, but the Chamber of Mines refused to alter its already implemented increase of 15 to 23 percent.

The mineworkers' strike, which began Aug. 9, is a legal walkout, but under South African labor law, companies may fire workers if they do not show up for work. The union says 340,000 men are on strike at 44 coal and gold mines, while the Chamber of Mines says 210,000 miners are striking at 29 mines.

The miners' strike is seen as a challenge to the apartheid system since blacks are demanding a greater share of what they produce. By law and custom, apartheid establishes a racially segregated society in which the 25.6 million blacks have no vote in national affairs. The 5 million whites control the economy and maintain separate districts, schools and health services.

The 18,400 miners dismissed by Anglo on Thursday included 3,000 men who staged an 18-hour sit-in inside the company's Western Deep Levels gold mine. Anglo did not say why the men staged the protest, but the National Union of Mineworkers said they were forced underground Wednesday night by mine security.

The strikers were brought to the surface Thursday afternoon, given their final paychecks and driven off the mine compound in buses, some miners said.

Meanwhile, the Congress of South African Trade Unions — of which the miners' union is the largest affiliate — announced a series of steps it would take in support of the miners. Jay Naidoo, general secretary of the 750,000-member congress, said international trade unions might be asked to order members not to handle South African coal and gold.

He also said leaders of neighboring countries, which supply about 100,000 miners for South Africa, would be urged to discourage the recruitment of strikebreakers. "If the legitimate demands of the miners aren't met, the chamber should be aware that (the congress) has already set in motion plans to mount even stronger national solidarity action," Naidoo said.

Congress leaders, at a strategy meeting Wednesday, had approved the concept of a national strike, he said, adding: "Workers in this country have very few weapons. The one weapon we have is the withdrawal of our labor."

WORLD IN BRIEF

BBC reporter claims Waite alive and well

LONDON (AP) — An authoritative Iranian source says Church of England envoy Terry Waite is alive and well in captivity in Lebanon seven months after pro-Iranian guerrillas kidnapped him, a British Broadcasting Corp. reporter said Thursday.

"Both his captors and the Iranians are anxious to ensure that nothing happens to him," said BBC diplomatic correspondent Terry Simpson in Iran.

Simpson did not identify his source, but said his information came from "high up in the Iranian structure, from a person who has access to the full facts about Terry Waite's kidnapping and imprisonment."

Simpson did not say whether he obtained news of 24 other foreigners missing and believed kidnapped in Lebanon, including eight Americans. He said Waite is held in south Beirut and is sometimes moved to the eastern Bekaa Valley to make sure that Syrian occupation troops do not find him.

Waite, 48, is personal envoy of Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, spiritual leader of the Church of England. He was on his fifth mission to seek the release of hostages when he disappeared Jan. 20 in Beirut.

Korean laborers protest

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Thousands of protesters hurling firebombs and rocks and screaming "murderers" battled riot police today after the government banned rallies to mourn a worker slain in an earlier clash.

Hundreds of people were arrested and many others were injured in the vicious fighting, but police officials declined to provide any figures.

For weeks, South Korea has been gripped with hundreds of labor strikes that have idled thousands of workers and threatened the export-oriented economy.

'Pig child' gets new life

BEIJING (AP) — A 13-year-old girl who spent her infancy being suckled by pigs while her parents neglected her has returned to normal life after three years of special training, China's official news agency said Thursday.

Wang Xianfeng, a peasant's daughter from northeastern Liaoning province, was born to a mentally retarded mother and a deaf father who has no affection for her, the Xinhua News Agency reported. It said the family has no close neighbors.

While an infant, the girl was left to live with the family pigs, sucking pig milk, crawling like a pig and imitating pig behavior, the report said.

When first tested by psychologists as a 9-year-old in 1983, she had the intelligence of a 3-year-old with no conception of sexes and colors, Xinhua said. The psychologists found she had no congenital disease, but that her mental growth had been distorted by living with pigs, it said.

Back-to-work law likely

TORONTO (AP) — The government introduced mandatory back-to-work legislation Thursday to end a four-day national strike by 48,000 rail workers after contract talks with a federal mediator broke down.

Angered union members, fearing the loss of their jobs and faced with compulsory arbitration after 10 months of negotiations, said they planned demonstrations outside Parliament in Ottawa and across the country.

Rockets fired at palace

TOKYO (AP) — At least three homemade rockets were fired at the Imperial Palace compound, but none exploded and there were no reports of injuries, police said.

The metal projectiles landed Thursday near a dormitory of the Imperial Household Agency inside the compound about 770 yards from the palace and in a park less than a mile away, said a police spokeaman, who would not give his name.

NOTICE BY PUBLICATION

TO: ROBERT TERRY WAGNER, Respondent GREETINGS:
YOU ARE HEREBY COMMANDED to appear and answer before the Honorable 318th Judicial District Court, Midland County, Texas at the courthouse of said county in midland, Texas, at or before 10 o'clock a.m. of the Monday next after the expiration of 20 days from the date of service of this citation, then and there to answer the petition of MICHELLE ANNE RISTER Petitioner, filed in said Court on the 26th day of August, 1987, against ROBERT TERRY WAGNER, Respondent, and said suit being number DR-18,361 on the docket of said Court and entitled "In the Matter of the Marriage of Michelle Anne Wagner and Robert Terry Wagner and in the Interest of Jamie Deanne Wagner, a Minor Child," the nature of which suit is a request to terminate the parent-child relationship and adoption of a stepchild. Said child, was born the 24th day of July, 1981, in Midland, Midland County, Texas.
The Court has the authority in this suit to enter any judgment or decree in the child's interest which will be binding upon you, including, but not necessarily limited to, the termination of the parent-child relationship, and the consent to the child's adoption.
Issued and given under my hand and seal of said Court at Midland, Texas, this 26th day of AUGUST, 1987.
m
