Carter noncommital on Lance question

By MICHAEL DOAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter was noncommital today when asked if he thought embattled budget director Bert Lance should resign.

"We'll see about that later," was Carter's only response to the question.

Asked if this meant he was not ruling out a resignation, Carter ignored the inquiry and returned to his Oval Office after saying goodbye to Panama's head of government, Omar Torrijos. Torrijos was at the White House in preparation for the historic signing Wednesday of a new Panama Canal agreement.

Meanwhile, a House Banking subcommittee chairman said Lance operated one of his Georgia banks like a family "playpen."

"Banks are not the personal toys of bankers — at least they are not supposed to be," Chairman Fernand St Germain said.

"While I do not want to prejudge, the evidence I have seen to date leads me to believe that Bert Lance, his family and friends regarded the Calhoun First National Bank as their playpen — to be used as they pleased."

A statement by St Germain, a Rhode Island Democrat, came as President Carter resisted efforts by two key senators to get Lance to resign.

Sens. Abraham A. Ribicoff, D-Conn. and Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., told Carter Monday that they think Lance should step down while Congress investigates what they called serious new allegations of illegality. Ribicoff and Percy are ranking members of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, which confirmed Lance and which is investigating his affairs further this week.

However, it was learned that Carter and Lance will not consider resignation at this point. The President reportedly still feels Lance has done nothing wrong and will be vindicated by the committee's investigation.

In an interview with CBS News today, Lance said he doesn't believe the Carter administration is losing confidence in him.

"I haven't seen any evidence of that at all," he said.

Asked if he thinks he will be exonerated of the allegations made against him, he said, "certainly ...absolutely..."

He also said he did not believe his problems are hurting the administration.

The House hearing today focused on the comptroller of the currency's investigation which cleared Lance before he was confirmed by the Senate as budget director.

Senators have said they did not know that Lance had made substantial overdrafts at the Calhoun bank and that the comptroller's office had reached an agreement with the bank to make him stop the practice.

Robert A. Bloom, who was acting comptroller at the time, said he did

A former officer of a bank owned by Bert Lance, Billy Lee Campbell, now serving an eight-year prison term for embezzlement, has signed an affadavit implicating Lance, the Atlanta Consitution reported Monday.

President welcomes Panamanian leader

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter welcomed Panamanian head of government Omar Torrijos to the White House today in preparation for the historic signing of a new treaty forged in 13 years of negotiations over the future of the Panama Canal.

Carter strode out of the Oval Office onto a collonade to shake hands with the Panamanian. They chatted as they walked inside, flanked by Vice President Walter F. Mondale, Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and Zbigniew Brzezinski, the President's national security assistant.

Torrijos and Carter spoke in Spanish as they posed for photographs at Carter's desk in the Oval Office.

"It's all very well organized," Torrijos noted, referring to the administration's elaborate preparations to receive more than 20 Western Hemisphere heads of state or their representatives. The dignitaries will observe the treaty-signing ceremonies Wednesday.

"I hope so," Carter replied, grinning.

"Well, we must have faith," the Panamanian replied.

Torrijos received a warm welcome at Andrews Air Force Base on his arrival Monday night and expressed gratitude to the United States for its willingness to yield eventual control over the canal.

With a military honor guard on hand, Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance greeted Torrijos and said "goodwill and determination" enabled the two countries to reach an agreement "that protects the vital interests" of both.

Vance said the proposed treaties ensure the canal will remain "open, neutral, secure and efficiently run" for all nations of the world.

Torrijos was one of seven hemispheric leaders who arrived Monday for the Wednesday ceremony, to be held at the offices of the Organization of American States.

Nineteen hemispheric heads of government will attend the ceremony, lured here by the promise of a private audience with Carter. In all, 27 nations are expected to send delegations.

But all of the pomp and ceremony will be meaningless unless Carter is able to convince two-thirds of the Senate that the new treaties deserve to be ratified.

Recent polls have indicated a majority of the American people still oppose the treaties.

36 counts listed in indictment

WASHINGTON (AP) — South Korean businessman Tongsun Park has been indicted on 36 federal charges, including conspiracy, bribery and mail fraud, stemming from the government probe of South Korean influence-buying on Capitol Hill, it was disclosed today.

An official of the U.S. District Court clerk's office said the indictment was unsealed this morning.

Meantime, Atty. Gen. Griffin Bell and one of his top assistants scheduled a news conference to announce what they described as a development in the Tongsun Park case.

The indictment of Park, returned by a federal grand jury Aug. 26, was reported by the Washington Post last week. The indictment was kept sealed and no details about the charges have been available.

The clerk's office official said the 36 counts include charges of conspiracy, bribery, mail fraud, racketeering activity, election law violations, and violations of the law requiring foreign agents to register with the government.

At the weekend, Park apparently was still in Seoul where he has been for about a week.

Priscilla to take center stage; new weapon may steal spotlight

AMARILLO, Tex. (AP) — Priscilla Davis assumes center stage today for the 11th time in the capital murder trial of her estranged husband, Cullen Davis. But a controversy over the possible murder weapon might again steal the spotlight.

The trial entered its third week of testimony this morning.

Davis, a Fort Worth millionaire, is being tried for the slaying of his 12-year-old stepdaughter Andrea Wilborn during a shooting spree at the lavish Davis mansion in Fort Worth in August 1976.

He is also charged with killing Stan Farr, Mrs. Davis' boyfriend, and wounding Mrs. Davis and a family friend in the shootings.

Mrs. Davis, the state's star witness, has repeatedly identified Davis as the "man in black" who did the shooting.

Last Friday, Fort Worth attorney Charles Baldwin, who produced the mystery gun, said that Farr told him three days before the shooting spree: "Horace Copeland is trying to kill me."

Defense attorneys said they were told the .38 caliber pistol turned over to Fort Worth police by Baldwin was the gun that killed Farr. Dist. Atty. Tim Curry confirmed the existence of the pistol, but said he didn't think it was connected to the case.

The defense team, in trying to prove that someone other than Davis did the shooting, has attempted to link Copeland to the case.

Copeland, who was found shot to death about three weeks ago, had allegedly been harrassing a woman at Farr's Fort Worth nightclub. No charges have been filed in Copeland's death.

Baldwin said he had gotten the gun from the woman, who is a client.

Copeland has been described as one of Farr's business acquaintances.

Meanwhile, Davis says he is willing to testify in his own defense, but adds that he will not get into a "liar's contest" with Mrs. Davis.

"I am not particularly looking forward to getting on the stand," Davis said, "but I wouldn't hesitate to do it for one minute."

Hanafi's chieftain sentenced

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hanafi Moslem leader Hamaas Abdul Khaalis was sentenced today to spend 41 to 120 years in prison for his role as leader of a 38-hour bloody siege that gripped this city last March.

Before the sentencing Khaalis said, "I know that whatever happens here will be the will of Allah."

Khaalis would be 97 years old before he is eligible for parole.

A second defendant, convicted of stabbing two men at B'nai B'rith headquarters, received a slightly harsher sentence. Abdul Adam, 31, was sentenced to a total of 44 to 132 years in prison.

Khaalis and Adam were the first sentenced of the 12 Hanafis who were convicted July 23 of seizing three buildings here — the B'nai B'rith building, the Islamic Center and Washington's city hall — and with taking 149 hostages in an incident that began March 9.

Prosecutors had asked D.C. Superior Court Judge Nicholas S. Nunzio Jr. to hand down stiff sentences to show "that those who use terror to victimize persons to do so at the risk of forfeiting their right ever again to be free in society."

Nunzio sentenced Khaalis to five to 15 years in jail on 24 separate counts of armed kidnaping.

However, most will run concurrently. Only those counts dealing with hostages taken at B'nai B'rith Headquarters, where Khaalis and six other men held more than 100 hostages, will run consecutively.

Christie labors hard for political support

ROUSTIN' ABOUT with Ed Todd

ODESSA — Joe Christie was working hard at winning over the support of hard-working people in a political race he's not even in yet.

He praised the virtues of untiring common folks — the mainstay of America's work force.

It was Labor Day, and he found no fault with workers, including union people. At least, he didn't mention any shortcomings.

He deemed the workers quite delectable.

But he found unsavory two fellow politicians he just might be tangling with in a U.S. senatorial race.

He thinks, perhaps, that he wants the job now held by Republican Sen. John Tower. So, too, does a fellow Democrat, U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger, who already has announced his candidacy. Christie hasn't.

The voters' choice only between Tower and Krueger would be bland, Christie said.

"So far, the only choice is between cold oatmeal and cold oatmeal, and that's not a very palatable choice," Christie told an estimated 500 people at a Labor Day celebration here.

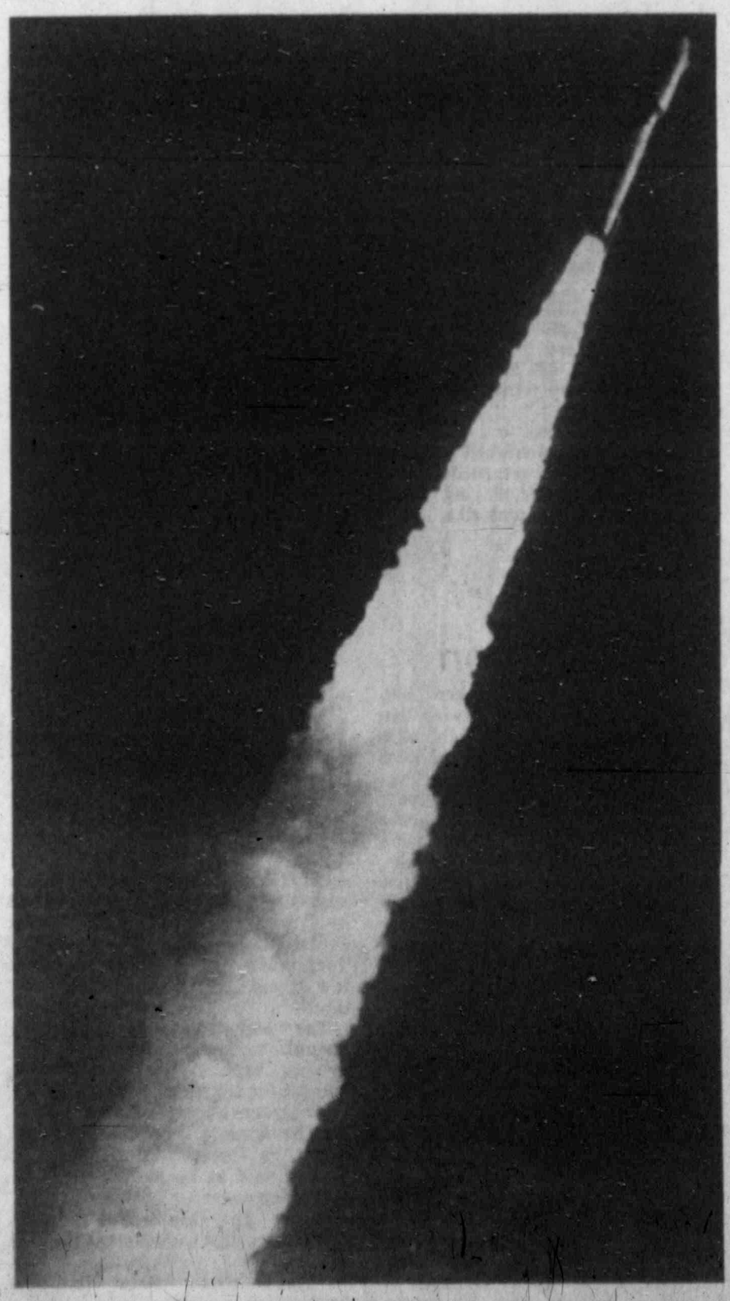

Last week, the 44-year-old Christie resigned as chairman of the State Insurance Board. His intent was to firm up his decision to run and to weigh voter support.

Apparently his decision is firm. He just hasn't given his full commitment to the task.

But Christie said he "probably will announce (his candidacy) at a little spontaneous dinner with my family at Austin."

Christie labors hard for support

pointed him to the insurance board, Christie was a state senator for six years. Now, he's returning to his law practice at El Paso.

Christie was the principal speaker at the Monday afternoon celebration, which was sponsored by 5,000-member Odessa area Central Labor Union, AFL-CIO.

And Christie, with the tact of a veteran politician, was well tuned-in to the occasion.

First off, he thanked his hard-working father for having the "good sense" to send his son into the "oil patch," where Christie said he learned the meaning of hard work.

He was a roustabout, roughneck and truck driver.

Then, he lauded the working people, on a holiday, for helping make this country what it is today.

"You're the people who built this country, and don't let anybody tell you any different," Christie told the working people and their families at the outing at Floyd Gwin Park here.

Christie was laboring at being the working man's politician.

He talked about "stripping away those layers of bureaucratic fat." He said Texas has more people on the state payrolls than it needs. Featherbedding ought to be cut out, he said.

And he said insurance policies should be readable. He had been on the insurance board for four years.

"I believe that when you pay your money for an insurance policy," Christie said, "you should be able to take it back to the kitchen table, read it, and know what you are paying your money for."

A policy holder, Christie said, should be able to understand even the finer points of a policy "without a Philadelphia lawyer . . . and a magnifying glass."

Following his talk, Dallas "Dally" Willis of Midland, president of the labor union here, presented Christie with a gavel-adorned plaque in thanking Christie for his services to "Texas consumers."

On Labor Day, Christie wasn't the only one to praise working people. Willis noted this "special day" that honors "workers who have done (so much) for this country."

Midland attorney Don Williams, who represents the union in legal matters, cited the "talent and energy" of the working people.

Williams said working people should expect politicians to work as hard at their public jobs as the workers do on theirs.

Later, while the workers on a holiday were guzzling beer and soft drinks and were eating barbecue or standing in line for the eats, Christie was mingling with the folks and rapping with the straggling "press corps."

Christie, the politician, outlined his accomplishments as a state senator.

He sponsored bills to save the horned toad, to oust the "hyprocrisy" from Texas liquor laws, to get city sales tax, to upgrade trade schools and so on.

Almost overshadowing those "laurels," however, was Christie's emphasis on congressional records of Tower and Krueger.

In so many words, Christie said Tower's record might be his downfall. He didn't elaborate.

But he did say more about Krueger, whom he'll have to face in the Democratic party's primary election.

Christie mentioned Krueger's unsuccessful efforts in trying to deregulate the price of oil and gas.

It was a good, hard, close try, he said.

"But closeness only counts in horseshoes and hand grenades," Christie said.

Christie said he would be the unbland choice in the senatorial race. He said he figured he could beat Krueger and any other in the Democratic primary election and Tower in the general election.

"First of all," said Christie, who lost in his bid for lieutenant governor in 1972, "you've got to show (the people) you offer a real choice ... (that) you perceive injustices and you can correct them."

Carter noncommital on Lance question

not tell Ribicoff's committee about the agreement because he thought it already knew about it.

Bloom had written a letter to the committee saying, Lance "enjoys a good reputation in the banking committee," but Bloom said he did not think the Senate panel was asking for a detailed account because it had given him only a day to write it.

"I tried to balance the negative comments with references to Mr. Lance's considerable positive accomplishments as a banker."

Bloom said he had suggested to Lance that he tell Carter about the agreement "and subsequent events confirm that Mr. Lance followed my advice."

Donald L. Tarleton, Atlanta regional comptroller, testified that he called off the agreement with the Calhoun bank just before Lance was nominated only because he felt it was no longer necessary.

"At no time... was I ever requested to rescind the agreement by Mr. Lance, nor did I do so for any reasons other than my conclusion...that the agreement had fully served its purpose and was no longer necessary."

Ribicoff had been a staunch defender of the budget director after previous inquiries into his finances. After hearings in July he asserted that Lance had been "smeared" by the press.

But Ribicoff told reporters Monday: "I think it would be wiser for Bert Lance to resign. I don't think Bert Lance can be an effective budget director while this is going on."

Hill to speak on legislation

Texas Attorney General John Hill will address Permian Basin officials involved in criminal justice on the subject of new state legislation and its effect on local governments during a seminar which begins at 10:30 a.m. Thursday at the West Texas Education Agency at the Midland Regional Air Terminal.

During the conference, sponsored by the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission (PBRPC), Hill will speak on legislation which will affect plea bargaining, liquor laws, speedy trials and other areas.

During an afternoon session, Tom Bullington, an assistant attorney general specializing in criminal justice, will speak on changes in criminal law and their impact on local governments.

At 2:15 p.m., there will be a panel and audience discussion on problems faced by local governments in implementing the new legislation. Panel members are Ralph Kinsey, Dawson County Attorney, Dallas Smith, Midland County Sheriff and Tom Bullington, Assistant Attorney General.

No significant cooling due

The low this morning had a touch of autumn in the air, and although the official temperature reading was 70 degrees, some thought it just seemed cooler today.

Perhaps it was only wishful thinking.

The high temperature Wednesday is expected to be in the upper 80s and the low tonight in the middle 60s, according to the National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Air Terminal.

There was a trace of rain Monday afternoon and the high temperature was 92 degrees.

Partly cloudy skies and high humidity may have contributed to that "cool feeling" that many noted this morning. According to the National Weather Service, relative humidity was 79 per cent at 8 a.m.

Andrews reported an unofficial temperature of 64 degrees early today, while Big Spring reported 66 degrees about 7:30 a.m. The Crane Sheriff's office noted that it was cloudy and cooler than usual this morning, "kind of like it ought to be."

Cloudy and cooler conditions were also noted in Lamesa, Stanton, Rankin, Big Lake, and Odessa. But both gave way to the piercing West Texas sun that doesn't seem to be ready to relinquish summer — yet.

Cyclist 'satisfactory'

A 22-year-old Midland man was in satisfactory condition this morning in Midland Memorial Hospital after being injured when his motorcycle struck a metal pole.

Timothy Adams of 2205 Huntington Ave. was traveling north on Powell Street approaching Roosevelt Street when he failed to negotiate a curve and struck a metal pole, police said.

The accident occurred about 2:30 a.m. today.

'Pauper's oath' final hurdle to Liddy liberty

By PAUL CARPENTER

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — For G. Gordon Liddy, the mastermind of the Watergate break-in who has kept tight-lipped on the burglary that toppled a president, freedom is just a "pauper's oath" and a sunrise away.

Liddy, 46, faced one final obstacle before being paroled after more than four years in prison.

Part of his sentence was a $40,000 fine, and federal authorities can release him only if he proves he has less than $20 to his name, counting debts.

To do so, Liddy was to swear the pauper's oath today before U.S. Magistrate William Askey of Williamsport. With Askey's approval, usually a routine step, Liddy can be released Wednesday from the medium-security penitentiary at Danbury, Conn.

U.S. marshals said Liddy would be brought here from Danbury and returned there after the hearing.

Liddy was sentenced to a term of six years, eight months to 20 years for his role as the architect of the Watergate break-in.

The 20-year maximum was reduced to eight years by President Carter in April, making Liddy eligible for parole beginning July 9. Without the commutation, he would not have been eligible until 1981.

Carter's action did not change the $40,000 fine, however.

"The debt is not forgiven, just the imprisonment," Askey said, noting Liddy would have to arrange to pay the fine later.

A former FBI agent and lawyer for the White House staff of then-President Richard M. Nixon, Liddy served most of his 52½-month imprisonment at the Danbury penitentiary.

He was transferred to a minimum-security prison at Allenwood, Pa., last January, but he was returned to Danbury in August after playing a key role in an inmate hunger strike.

School mascot heads agenda

ODESSA — Discussion of a school mascot will head the agenda of the first meeting of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin Student Senate at 12:30 p.m. today in the faculty dining room.

Gary Elliott, Odessa graduate student and vice president of the student senate, said the question of a mascot had been unresolved for some time.

"Whatever name is chosen will likely stay with the university for years to come, and we'd like a clear-cut majority to be pleased with it", he said.

Also on the agenda will be discussion of a faculty adviser, meeting times and places and future plans.

Councils representing the various academic colleges will meet at 12:30 p.m. Thursday to nominate officers and representatives to the Student Senate. Arts and Education Council will meet in room 292, Management Council in room 483 and Science and Engineering Council in room 382.

Officers hurt in altercation

Four persons were taken into custody, three charged and two police officers injured during a fight at a grocery store and later at the Midland Police Department.

According to Chief Wayne Gideon, officers were called to J and L Market at the intersection of Fairgrounds Road and Pecan Ave. at 10:27 p.m.

At the scene, officers found a fight in progress with a crowd of approximately 100 people observing, Gideon said. When officers tried to disperse the crowd, it became unruly, and officers took the two involved in the fight into custody.

At approximately 11:08 p.m. another crowd gathered in the lobby of the police department in an effort to obtain the release of the two taken into custody at the market, according to Gideon.

The crowd became unruly, and a scuffle followed between police officers and members of the crowd, Gideon said.

Two persons were arrested in the lobby. Officer Joe Ortez was taken to the emergency room of Midland Memorial Hospital with a possible broken nose after being struck in the fight, Gideon said. Officer Al Chitwood had several teeth chipped as a result of the scuffle.

Hurricane Babe damage assessment under way

CHAUVIN, La. (AP) — They were assessing Hurricane Babe's damage in American dollars and French expletives Monday in this South Terrebonne fishing village, one of the few areas still under the storm's tides.

The water wasn't too deep, but deep enough to keep townspeople from driving back home. It was deep enough for frolicking children to pole their pirogues down Louisiana 56.

"The water's gone down, but not much," a Terrebone Parish sheriff's deputy said as he looked at the 10-inch-deep water.

Along the highway, sheriff's deputies turned back most of the cars and trucks.

"You'll throw water into the houses," they said.

A few got through, however, and found their homes in good shape. Ernest Rodrigue and his wife returned to Dulac to find their elevated house trailer only inches above the water.

"Everything's okay," Rodrigue said. "Thank the Lord, we didn't lose anything."

Not all the buildings were so lucky. The ACLI Canning and Seafood Co. in Chauvin got inches of water, killing the power to the freezers that were loaded with about $300,000 worth of seafood, Gene Domangue, a company official, lamented.

"It's gonna be bad when that stuff begins to go," Domangue said.

Domangue's truck, which deputies had given special permission to travel the road, passed a teenage girl he recognized.

"Hey Sylvia," he shouted. "We gonna work some shrimp tomorrow."

The girl, only ankle deep in water, stopped dead in her tracks.

"We gonna work shrimp under 15 feet of water," chuckled Domangue.

Industrialist's life threatened by caller

COLOGNE, West Germany (AP) — Telephone messages threatened the execution today of a West German industrialist kidnaped in a street ambush in which his chauffeur and three bodyguards were killed.

Hanns Martin Schleyer, head of the national associations of industries and of employers, was abducted Monday at a Cologne intersection as he was being driven home from his office in a two-car convoy. Police said he was carried off by five young men but they had found no trace of them.

It was the third terrorist attack on a prominent West German in five months and the second on a business leader in less than six weeks.

A telephone call to the Munich bureau of the newspaper Bild Zeitung said Schleyer would be executed at 5:15 p.m. today (12:15 p.m. EDT) unless the government freed Andreas Baader, the leader of the Baader-Meinhof gang of urban terrorists, and his associates in the Stammheim prison in Stuttgart.

Two news agencies reported receiving similar calls from a terrorist group called the Red Army Faction.

Officials said it was not known whether the calls were authentic, but they were being investigated.

Justice Minister Hans-Jochen Vogel said a letter was found in the Volkswagen microbus used by the kidnapers and then abandoned. But he refused to disclose the contents.

"The bloody provocation in Cologne is directed against all of us," Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said in a special television appearance.

"We have to remain levelheaded. Terrorism in the long run doesn't have a chance because the will of the entire nation is pitted against it."

He called on the public to help in the hunt for the terrorists.

The kidnaping of Schleyer apparently was a sequel to the murder of banker Juergen Ponto in Frankfurt on July 30 and the assassination on April 7 of Chief Federal Prosecutor Siegfried Buback, who directed the successful prosecution of Baader and two associates.

After the slaying of Ponto, a telephone call to a news agency in Bonn said "more members of the ruling class will be executed" unless "all political prisoners of war" were released.

Schleyer, a 62-year-old director of the Daimler-Benz automobile company, became head of the West German equivalent of the National Association of Manufacturers last year. As a frequent television spokesman for business and industry, he was one of the country's best known industrialists and an obvious target for terrorists. Interior Minister Werner Maihofer told reporters protection for him had been increased two weeks ago.

A total of 21 persons have been killed in terrorist attacks in West Germany in 5½ years. Most of the killings have been blamed on the Baader-Meinhof Gang and its disciples.

Officials still await word on grant extension

With but four hours remaining until a scheduled 4 p.m. meeting to discuss the fate of the city's $946,000 Community Development Grant, city officials have received no work on a hoped-for extension.

"I'm still hopeful that we will get the extension," Mayor Pro Tem Carroll Thomas said late this morning.

But unless the extension is granted, a special session of the Midland City Council was to meet today to discuss an ultimatum by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) that would require the city to include a $66,000 rental assistance program in Community Development Grant application for 1977.

That ultimatum came by mailgram last week and gave the city until Sept. 7 to add the plan. City officials promptly asked HUD for a one-week extension. U.S. Rep. George Mahon has been attempting to aid the city get that extension.

Officials in the Dallas regional office of HUD have all agreed to the extension "and I understand all we are waiting on is the approval of (HUD Assistant Secretary for Community Planning and Development) Robert C. Embry Jr.," Thomas said.

Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. is now vactioning in Alaska and the extension would allow the matter to be postponed until the next regulary scheduled City Council meeting on Sept. 13.

The truth will out

Leon Jaworski's recent appearance before the House Ethics Committee inspires the hope that the truth will come out about the alleged South Korean influence-buying scheme.

Mr. Jaworzki himself was hopeful: "It is my firm conviction that the pertinent facts will ultimately come to light." He also was pre-monitory: "I would advise those who may believe that the investigation will blow over or prove fruitless to take a closer look."

This tone of warning, sustained by references to "Watergate-type" efforts to cover up the truth, confirms the suspicion now widespread: that the House not only is tainted with impropriety and perhaps even criminality, but also is resisting admitting either.

This situation is helped not at all by the apparent stonewalling in South Korea, where Tongsun Park, the key figure in the alleged South Korean bribes, has remained silent. Now under grand jury indictment, Park's lawyer says his client is willing to return to London from Seoul to face extradition proceedings on the still unnamed charges. The attorney also said that he would recommend to his client that he refuse to testify voluntarily if he is somehow forced to return to the United States.

Information that the sealed federal indictment mentions names of members of Congress and amounts of money raises the possibility that other indictments soon may follow.

This strengthens Mr. Jaworski's belief that pertinent facts ultimately will come to light.

The overall situation was not helped much either by the silence of Miss Suzi Park Thomson, which was broken before the House Ethics Committee.

There have not been many leaks in the Koreagate scandal; not from Miss Thomson, and certainly not any from Mr. Park, across the waters. And obviously not any from members of Congress, for whom to leak it simply is not self-serving anymore.

So Mr. Jaworski has a tremendous task in cracking several stonewalls, including the big one in the House itself.

Those hiding behind it should be advised of Mr. Jaworski's remarks about the participants in Watergate: "Those who came forward truthfully and without reservation found that they not only served their own interests but the welfare of the nation as well."

'How about a '77'?'

The government of India is in the process of chasing the U.S.-owned Coca-Cola Export Corp. out of that country, but India isn't about to give up its cola drink, for which it has developed a tremendous thirst.

It already has chosen the name "77" for its state-produced substitute cola drink.

Although "77" won't be ready for sale until 1978, the name was chosen because 1977 was the year of big changes in India such as the end of the Indira Gandhi government and the end of Coca-Cola, government officials said.

The government asked Coca-Cola to surrender its secret syrup formula to an Indian-controlled firm or get out by next April. Coca-Cola refused to reveal its secret.

So, after next April, India's Indians will be saying, "77, please" rather than "gimme a Coke."

Computermania

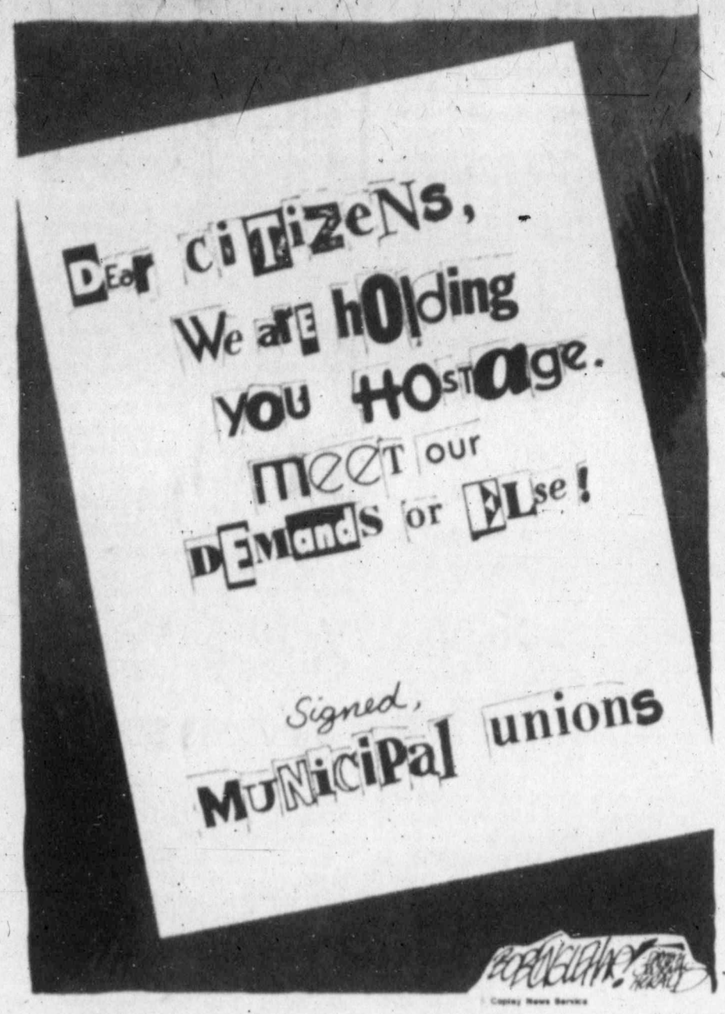

Computermania , a computer exposition, was held recently in Boston, Mass. More than 400 exhibits of computers, usual calculators, video games, video recorders, programs and assessories were on display.

The computer revolution has been going on for 20 years. It is now in full swing.

Computer technology has taken several giant leaps forward. Computer applications have fallen behind the technology and will take many years to catch up. Meanwhile, further revolutionary advances in the technology may be anticipated.

Business and industry have been in the forefront of the computer revolution. Now, the computer is coming into the home, not simply in the form of calculators but in the more sophisticated guise — to perform tasks like fiscal record keeping, and to provide entertainment.

Possibilities are unlimited — and exciting.

ART BUCHWALD

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — A federal judge has just ruled that the CIA must write a letter of apology to people whose mail they opened in the United States. The Department of Justice has suggested the text of the letter, which turns out to be a formal apology in typical governmental gobbledygook, which in my opinion would not get the CIA off the hook.

I think if the CIA really wants to show it's sorry for reading the mail of Americans they should make each letter a personal one, which would show that the Central Intelligence Agency has a heart.

Here are a few suggestions of the types of letters of apology Adm. Stansfield Turner, the head of the CIA, would send out to people whose privacy had been violated.

Dear Mr. Mac Comber,

You can't imagine how sorry all of us in the CIA are for reading your mail during the past 14 years. It was an oversight which I assure you won't happen again.

I regret your Aunt Tilly in Dublin still has pains in her back. Our medical team suggests she use a hot water bottle at night to relieve the agony. Also, I think your son is out of line when he says he wants to stay in Paris to continue his education. Our agents in Paris report that he is not going to school but is spending all of his time at cafes.

The letter you received from the Carlsons in Venice telling you what a wonderful time they were having was slightly exaggerated. Carlson came down with dysentery and Mrs. Carlson's photographs of St. Mark's Square were all overexposed.

We'll be happy to send you information on any other letters we read, if you want us to. I hope it will make up in a small way for what we now consider an illegal undercover program.

Sincerely Yours,
Adm. Stansfield Turner

Dear Ms. Halifax,

As you know the CIA was involved in a mail-reading program, and for reasons which no one here can explain all your letters from abroad were opened and scrutinized. You can't imagine how upset we are about this. Some overealous employe who will have to remain nameless for security reasons, was responsible. After going through his report on your mail, all I can say is that you have beautiful handwriting and I wish my children could write as well.

Your love letters to Mr. Cesar Randini in Rome were masterpieces and should be published in a book. The CIA would do it, but we recently went out of the book publishing business.

We're sorry that Mr. Randini broke off the relationship by marrying Signora Carmelita Verdi of 14 Via Condotti, but you must take my word for it that Mr. Randini is not a one-woman man. All the time he was calling "his little artichoke" he was spending his evenings at Signora Verdi's apartment, sometimes leaving as late as four in the morning. You are well rid of him.

Sincerely,
Adm. Stansfield Turner

Dear Mrs. Starbuckle,

I am obligated by the federal courts to inform you that we have been reading your mail and that of your husband, whose trips to London, Brussels and Antwerp on business have taken him out of the country six times a year.

I know you are suspicious that some of these trips are not all concerned with business. I can assure you that as far as Brussels and Antwerp are concerned your husband has been conducting commerce for his company.

We are unable to find out exactly what business he has in London, unless his meetings with Lady Mathilda MacIntosh of 1234 Cadogan Square have to do with steel exporting. Our records show Lady MacIntosh has never been in the steel business, nor was the late Sir Harold MacIntosh, who was 30 years his wife's senior.

Unfortunately, the bug we planted in the Cadogan Square flat has always been drowned out by Frank Sinatra music whenever your husband has been there. Since we can no longer, by law, follow this case, I might suggest you inquire about a London private detective who could investigate what Mr. Starbuckle really does in London.

In putting forth this suggestion, it is our sincere hope that you will forgive the CIA for reading your mail. And if anything good comes of our intelligence about Mr. Starbuckle's stopovers in London, we hope you will think kindly of the CIA in the future.

Sincerely,
Adm. Stansfield Turner

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

By JACK ANDERSON and LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON—In one of the most dramatic episodes of the Korean investigation, the demure, petite Korean beauty, Suzi Park Thomson, suddenly turned the tables on her congressional accusers behind closed doors last month. She sweetly refused to answer questions about her alleged role in influencing congressmen. Insteed, she offered to answer all questions in open session where her responses couldn't be distorted. She feared any testimony taken in secret might be twisted and leaked to the press. But the assembled members of the House Ethics Committee were concerned that her answers might embarrass innocent congressmen. They wanted to screen her testimony, therefore, before making it public. Rep. Millicent Fenwick, R-N.J., explaining that open hearings might defame people, demanded specifics from Thomson before opening the doors. Did she know Korean influence peddler Tongsun Park? Had she knowledge of any Korean payments to members of Congress?

"Yes," she had met Park "several years ago," she said. But she refused to elaborate, or to discuss whether she knew about the payoffs.

The congresswoman pressed until Thomson, like a fragile Korean doll suddenly come to life, protested plaintively. They were worried about other people's reputations on Capitol Hill, she pouted; what about her rights? They were spending the taxpayers' money to seek the truth about the Korean allegations, then why not let her tell her story to the taxpayers out in the open, she asked.

The flare-up, out of character for the coy Korean girl, was preceded by an earlier confrontation between her attorney and the committee. The attorney, Philip Hirschkop, said he had tried to cooperate with the committee staff but that it had violated a letter of agreement. The staff had tried to question Thomson, he said, "without me being present, which was totaly out of order."

He told the committee bluntly: "I don't trust the staff." Therefore, he would not permit his client to tell her story, he said, unless the public and the press were admitted. "In terms of my experience with the staff," he said, "leaks have caused her devastating damage. She has been maligned for trips she took."

He claimed she had been taken on Korean trips, as a U.S. citizen and congressional employe, because of her Korean background. "It was as basic as the situation where they took black people to Africa and Spanish people to Spain."

Then he added as an aside: "Both senior members of this committee were on one of the trips." To the best of our information, only the committee's top Republican, Rep. Floyd Spence, R-S.C., traveled to the Far East with a delegation that brought Suzi Park Thomson along.

"Because of leaks," Hirschkop charged, "she was maligned."

Responded counsel Thomas Fortuin: "Since I don't know what your client is going to say and what ramifications this may have on other people, we are not willing to have your client testify in open session, initially."

Hirschkop asked whether the secrecy was for Thomson's protection.

"No," conceded Fortuin, "it is to protect anyone who may be incriminated by her testimony." Before they could permit her to make a public appearance, he said, they would have to "thrash this out as to how the rights of congressmen and others can be violated."

Retorted Hirschkop: "She has never received payments from anybody. If you ask the general question first, you wouldn't have to worry about defaming anybody."

She wanted to cooperate with the committee, he said, but "it will have to be under some guidelines here she has some protection, where the staff can't take advantage in violation of all the ethics of our profession. I will never send her down here alone again. It is a lion's den."

Fortuin warned gravely that Thomson "may be held in contempt."

"I am familiar with the power of Congress," snapped Hirschkop, "but threats won't get us any place in this proceeding."

"I am not threatening you," replied the committee counsel. "I am simply asking upon what legal grounds you are advising your client not to testify?"

"That's all I am going to tell you," said Hirschkop. "Let's not play games."

Fortuin persisted until the attorney appealed to the congressmen. "I can't imagine the members trying to put this woman's back against a wall," said Hirshkop.

He charged that the press, feeding on leaks, was ruining Thomson. "The news media has seriously maligned her," he declared. "There is no way to prevent leaks from a proceeding such as this."

He complained: "She has been unable to become re-employed on Capitol Hill, where she spent so many years. She is accused of having a congressman's children, which is grossly untrue; taking pay-offs, which is grossly untrue."

"These meetings are in executive session," responded Fortuin. "The committee has almost a perfect record as to leaks."

But the attorney would not be deterred. "She is refusing to testify under this situation today beceuse it has been so destructive to her. There have been articles in sex magazines."

It took a contempt-of-Congress threat finally to get Thomson to answer specific questions at a subsequent secret session.

As we previously reported, she denied any personal role in the Korean scandal but testified reluctantly that the wheeling-dealing Tongsun Park used to pick up messages in Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill's office.

INSIDE REPORT:

Big 'decision' rests with Lance and Lance alone

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — Bert Lance's most faithful supporters privately admit the struggle to save him seems doomed, a confession whose grave impact on the presidency of Jimmy Carter through the declining economy is not yet appreciated at the White House.

While top officials assert that the true focus has shifted from budget director Lance to President Carter, they are talking in terms of morality rather than the econony. "We've all been so busy with Lance and the Panama Canal, that nobody has time to think about the economy," one presidential aide told us.

But Lance has. Alone among key Carter officials, he is fully aware of economic dangers ahead. Since even his critics within the administration concede nobody can fully replace Lance as "Deputy President," the latest decline in his prospects for survival reduces the likelihood of the administration acting to forestall economic disaster ahead.

Linkage between Lance and hard times is revealed by nightly telephone surveys across the country by economic pollster Albert Sindlinger. He finds a sharp decline in the President's popularity, but not because of the Lance affair. Rather, Mr. Carter's popularity, which had dropped to 35 per cent in Sindlinger's poll, moved back to 47 per cent after his announced decision to support Lance.

The Lance affair, Washington's obsession for weeks, interests people at the other end of Sindlinger's telephone calls not at all. Instead, they worry about Carter policies: raising oil prices, capitulating to the farm lobby, issuing confusing economic signals. Their lack of confidence leads Sindlinger to forecast recession immediately ahead.

Lance is aware of Sindlinger's data, but other officials here are preoccupied by the tenacious onslaught against Lance from the Washington press corps. Details of Lance's use of the same stock as collateral for two bank loans is much more familiar in the upper reaches of the administration than is the frightening weakness of commodity prices.

Insistence by the press that Lance leave office began breaking the administration's will last week. On Monday, one of his most sincere backers in the White House privately suggested that perhaps Lance should take a leave of absence to defend himself, possibly returning later — in another job. That was a white flag of surrender.

By Tuesday, scarcely any official honestly believed in Lance's survival. One cabinet member guessed Lance might quit when Senate hearings start Sept. 7, though the consensus was he would last longer than that. To administration officials, hopelessness was signalled by the debate's shift from Lance's financial integrity to his competence in office.

In a broader sense, the problem has become the President's, with criticism now directed at Mr. Carter for embracing his friend Aug. 18. Since the President is determined not to turn out Lance after having backed him, the decision must be made by Lance and Lance alone.

Lance tells friends that will not come soon, but he might change his mind if self-defense continues to dominate his every waking hour. Even Lance's staunchest defenders admit he is simply not running the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) while crucial spending decisions are due.

This effect is likely to transcend all the speculation about the President's loss of purity now transfixing Washington. No successor at OMB could approach Lance's effectiveness in pressing the President for restraint on federal spending.

What may be ahead is reflected in "Promises to Keep," an excellent new book by veteran Washington correspondent Robert Shogan about Mr. Carter's first hundred days. Shogan reveals that in late March, Hamilton Jordan wrote a confidential memo criticizing the President for making decisions without reference to political factors.

AT WIT'S END

Advice goes to Miss Chalkdust

By ERMA BOMBECK

One of the most personal experiences I've shared with readers over the past 13 years was the occasion of sending my last child to school.

Boy, how I had lusted for that day. I was going to have all my stomach muscles back by lunch, go to the bathroom without locking the door, pull the shades and sing duets with Barbra Streisand, and burn my maternity clothes. (The statute of limitations had run out and I had won!)

But there was no exhilaration in my victory, watching "the baby" sit pathetically at the curb. I thought of the woman he was going to — Miss Chalkdust, or whatever. And I wrote "Miss Chalkdust, give him patience and gentleness. Please have a soft lap and a warm smile. I submit to your tender, loving care my son who is a little shy and a lot stubborn. Who can't cope yet with zippers that stick or buttons on sweaters that don't come out even. One who makes his 5s sideways and doesn't know B-O-Y-S from G-I-R-L-S on the door. I may sue you for alienation of affection but for the moment, God bless you."

Those small, pathetic, scared children who are sitting out on the curbs this morning for the first time don't have their own column. If they did, they might confess that they didn't have breakfast this morning because they couldn't swallow. They didn't sleep well last night. They're afraid. Afraid they'll get lost. Afraid they'll goof up. Afraid they'll look different. Afraid they'll be called upon. Afraid they won't find the straw for their milk. Afraid they'll lose their lunch money. Afraid they won't get to the restroom on time — or ever. Afraid someone will laugh at their name. Afraid they won't find a friend. Afraid the wind will blow their papers out of their hands. Afraid of you.

One of the most poignant insights into a child's venture into education comes from a book written by Albert Cullum called "The Geranium On The Window Sill Just Died But Teacher You Went Right On." It deals with an insensitivity of the feelings of children and what they are going through. This is one of my favorites.

"I have a messy desk,
I have milk money that rolls,
I have a lazy pencil,
a book that won't open,
a mouth that whispers.
I have a zipper that doesn't want to,
homework that won't work,
and a hand that throws crayons.
I have a shirt that's out,
shoelaces that won't tie.
And sometimes I wet my pants —
but never on purpose."

Miss Chalkdust . . . this is a day for all the love you have to give.

Patricia Ellen Beverly and Clifford Ray Chalmers, both of Midland, were married in St. Nicholas Episcopal Church with Rev. James Considine officiating the double ring vows.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John T. Beverly of 109 Thornridge St. The bridegroom is the son of Rector Chalmers of Odessa and Mrs. Fred Phillips of 702 B W. Kansas St.

The bridegroom's father served as his son's best man. Matron of honor was Mrs. Ronnie Bryant of Midland. Ushers were Patrick Armstrong and Joe C. McQueen. Bryan Beverly, the bride's brother, was candlelighter.

Warren Hammel provided the organ music.

When given in marriage by her parents, the bride wore a formal gown of sheer organza and Venise lace. The fitted bodice, cap sleeves and ring collar were covered with heavy lace. The flowing skirt had a double scalloped hemline that flowed into a chapel train, also edged with lace scallops.

Her hat was trimmed with bridal illusion and flowers. The bride carried a bouquet of stephanotis and gardenias laced with greenery.

A reception was held in the Parish Hall. The couple then left for a trip to California and Las Vegas, Nev. They will be at home in Midland after Sept. 13.

Special out-of-town guests included Mrs. H. L. Bryant, the bride's grandmother of Strafford, Mo.

The bride is a graduate of Lee High School and is employed at the First National Bank. The bridegroom is a graduate of Midland High School and is owner of Midland Insulation.

'Nice' society keeps kids uninformed

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The letter about whether to have a boy babysitter caught my eye because of an experience we had years ago.

When our daughter was 3 and our son was 5, we had a nice, shy neighbor boy stay with them occasionally. When the 5-year-old told us about some of the funny games the sitter was trying to play with our daughter, we reported the incident to the sitter's parents and decided "no more boy sitter."

Today I would amend that decision: no more boy sitters unless I knew the family well enough to be assured that their attitude toward early sex education was sufficiently enlightened, and that they provided their kids with the information they asked for.

Our boy sitter did nothing violent; his transgression was the obvious result of a natural curiosity that had been consistently thwarted at home and sadly neglected at school.

Now, 17 years after that incident, I read in the papers about pregnant 12 and 13-year-old girls who don't know what "contraception" means, and teenage boys who accidentally became fathers. And I think that mothers should worry less about the danger of having a boy sitter and more about the backward attitude of the large and powerful "nice" segment of our society. This group seems hell-bent on keeping kids dangerously curious and uninformed even as they stand in the midst of wall-to-wall centerfolds.

What our kids don't know about responsible sex and parenthood is hurting us all.—CONCERNED PARENT

DEAR CONCERNED: Your concern about keeping children "dangerously curious" and uninformed is valid. But curious and uninformed sitters come in two sexes, and some GIRL sitters sometimes try to play funny games with little boys.

DEAR ABBY: A fine young bachelor has recently joined the firm where I am employed. I am not a matchmaker, but I know an outstanding single lady I think he would like. I have a feeling these two would find a lot in common, and I would like to get them together. How do I go about it without being too obvious?

Should I tell him I know a nice woman, and then wait for him to offer to take her out? That seems rather presumptuous, and I'm afraid it might make the woman appear too available. Any suggestions?—MRS. IN-BETWEEN

DEAR MRS.: Arrange an informal evening at your home and invite them separately. (The more people you invite, the less "obvious" you'll be.) And if they have as much in common as you think they have, they'll "discover" each other.

(P.S. One cardinal rule for matchmakers: Don't arrange a match unless you think you're doing them BOTH a favor.)

DEAR ABBY: I certainly hope you or your readers can help me with my problem. Is there such a group as "Spenders Anonymous" for "Clothes-aholics?" If not, I would be interested in starting a local chapter.

We are a lower middle-income family. I started working recently to help with family finances, but all I do is shop! I am compulsive about buying clothes, and I can't seem to control myself.

Please help me. I am desperate.—McKINNEY, TEX.

DEAR MC KINNEY: If there is such a group, I'll surely hear about it and let you know. If not, there ought to be.

Everyone has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply, write to ABBY in care of this newspaper. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

Pharmacist has "tried them all..." ...discovers weight control program that really works!

Pharmacist Dan Smith of Burger's Drug Store in St. Charles, Illinois is a NaturSlim "believer" after losing 18 pounds in just two weeks. After hearing so much about the NaturSlim program from customers and seeing the excellent results they were having, Dan decided to try it himself.

"In my many years as a pharmacist, I've seen and tried numerous weight-loss plans, but none have worked as well for me as NaturSlim. And NaturSlim is very nutritional too!"

After three months, Dan has not regained any of the lost pounds either, as so often happens when "rebounding" from starvation diet plans. He maintains his weight by taking NaturSlim once daily . . . and eating normally otherwise.

Dan says, "It was surprisingly easy, too! I didn't have to attend any weigh-ins, starve myself or do any special exercises."

With the NaturSlim program, there are no shots, drugs or long lists of forbidden foods. In fact, you are encouraged to eat a normal, well-balanced dinner every day.

The next time you are in the St. Charles area, stop by Burger's Drugs and see Dan yourself. He'll tell you personally what he thinks about NaturSlim!

Parity ratio again discussed

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — An old formula called the farm parity ratio is becoming a topic of concern among Carter administration farm officials these days, just as it has for each administration from time to time since the 1930s.

Last week, the Agriculture Department reported on a monthly listing of agricultural prices that the parity ratio on Aug. 15 dropped to 64 per cent from 65 on July 15. A year ago it was 71 per cent.

According to USDA records, the mid-August reading was the lowest for the ratio since it was 55 per cent in March 1933 in the depths of the nation's worst economic depression. Further, it was the lowest last month since USDA began keeping records on the indicator. The second lowest was 58 per cent in December 1932, just before it plummeted to 55 the following March.

The parity ratio roughly expresses how farmers are faring in terms of purchasing power. Theoretically, if the ratio is at 100 per cent farmers have the same purchasing power they had in 1910-14 when economists considered that farm prices and expenses were fairly well in balance.

Many modern farm economists discount the parity standard as outmoded in terms of expressing true financial wellbeing or buying power related to the 1910-14 base period. But on a shorter-term basis, the formula has its merits and is likely to have its advocates for years to come.

In fact, some federal farm programs still are linked to the parity formula, including price supports for milk, tobacco and some other commodities.

Congress ordered the USDA in 1938 to publish regularly the parity ratio for farm commodities and the parity prices for each. Thus, each month the department announces the composite parity ratio for the allcommodity list and individual dollar figures showing how much a farmer would have had to get for crops and livestock to give him the same — 100 per cent — buying power his predecessors had in 1910-14.

For example, the actual average price farmers nationally received for wheat on Aug. 15 was $2.20 a bushel, according to the USDA report. The full parity price or 100 per cent was $5.03 a bushel. Thus, farmers actually received 40 per cent of parity for their wheat.

Department experts say the parity ratio is not an indicator of farm income but that it is sort of a batting average involving prices, expenses and other factors. It is interesting to note, that in recent years when farm income was up the parity ratio also was relatively high. Conversely, when the ratio is down, as it is now, farm income sags.

In 1973, farmers' net income soared to a record of $29.9 billion from $17.8 billion in 1972. The average for the parity ratio over all of 1973 was 91 per cent, the highest since it was 92 per cent in 1953 during the inflation rise of the Korean war. The last time it averaged 100 per cent was in 1952.

But in 1974, net farm income began dropping and that year totaled $27.8 billion. The parity ratio was 86 per cent. Net income dropped further to $22.7 billion in 1975 and the ratio was 76 per cent.

Last year, according to USDA, farm income dropped further to $21.9 billion and the parity ratio averaged 71 per cent. This year's net farm income is currently projected at $19.3 billion, the lowest since 1972, and the ratio also will be down further.

Thus, although the correlation is not exact, the parity ratio does express from year to year a shorthand figure which some people still believe is a valid way of quickly telling how farmers are doing.

Decline in use of flour reversed

By The Associated Press

The high prices of 1973 and 1974 which prompted people to cut down the use of convenience foods have left a legacy in the form of continued interest in baked goods and other "do-it-from-scratch" types of food.

Government statistics show that per capita consumption of wheat flour in the United States declined steadily from 118 pounds in 160 to 106 pounds in 1974. The trend was reversed in 1975, however, and estimated per capita consumption of wheat flour for 1976 was 111 pounds.

Not all of the increase, of course, is due to more homebaked cakes and breads. A spokesman for the Wheat Flour Institute pointed out that Americans are eating more and more hamburgers every year. More hamburgers means more buns. And more buns means more wheat flour.

It is too soon to tell what the picture for 1977 will show. But some industry sources predict steady interest in home baking and consumers will find that they can save money and time if they learn what types of flours are available and which ones do what.

There are three parts to a kernel of wheat. The inner part, or endosperm, is the part which is ground to make white flour which accounts for more than 90 per cent of the flour milled in the United States.

The other two parts are the bran or outer layer and the germ — the part which would sprout. The bran and the germ are removed from white flour, but are left in whole wheat flour. They also are sold separately, usually in breakfast cereals.

Enriched white flour contains vitamins, iron and sometimes calcium which are added to replace nutrients lost when the bran is removed in processing. Laws in 36 states require that all white flour be enriched.

Bleached flour contains an oxidizing agent which is designed to whiten the flour and improve its baking quality. Food and Drug Administration standards require that a flour be labeled as "bleached" if any oxidizing agent has been used.

Here is a guide to some common types of flour on the market:

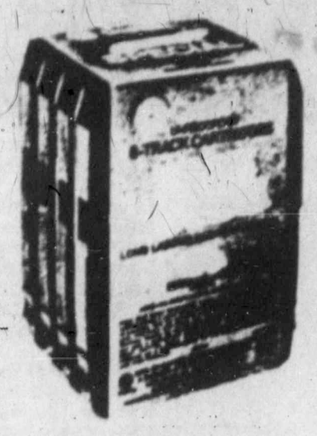

—All-purpose or family flour, available in bleached and unbleached varieties. A blend of hard and soft wheats milled for home use in a variety of products including yeast breads, quick breads, cakes, cookies and pastries.

—Cake flour. A finely ground flour made from low-protein soft wheat. It is particularly suitable for baking cakes and pastries which require light, fluffy flour. It is not suitable for baking yeast-raised breads.

—Hard-wheat or bread flour. This is milled from hard, highprotein wheat. It is used chiefly in commercial bread production where doughs must withstand machine handling.

—Self-rising flour. This is allpurpose flour with added salt and leavening agents — sodium bicarbonate and one or more acid-reacting substances. This type of flour should not be used for baking yeast-raised products.

—Quick or instant-blending flour. A granular flour which disperses easily, even in cold liquids, and requires no sifting. It does not pack down in the package. It may be used in almost all recipes in place of regular flour. It offers convenience, but is usually more expensive.

Summer 'shot' by Labor Day

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — On this day after Labor Day it's as if the summer were shot dead, executed by the same gun that begins the mad race to get everything done that should have been done the day before yesterday or earlier.

School is in, new cars are out, new TV shows are on. The calendar is loaded with big plans, conventions, sales promotions, ad campaigns, budget reviews.

Football nudges baseball. Hayfever blows into town. Congress returns. Elections begin. It's far too much for a nervous system that had lain becalmed all summer and is now fighting to keep from the rocks.

It is a time of conflict. A time when the guilty boss, trying to make up for all the time lost as he, and assumedly you, idled through the summer, clashes head-on with the subordinate determined to get a pay raise.

The stock market seems to react too. If averages rise Tuesday through Friday of this week the market probably will be higher for the next month, or so you will find in the vast archives of stock market mythology. Beware.

Greeting the new season will be a spate of statistics that should get you in the mood or, you might say, marching to the numbers again.

The Federal Reserve today will tell us all about consumer credit, which everyone is concerned about. Are we spending ourselves into a crisis? Some interpreters of those statistics will tell you we are.

Through the courtesy of the same sponsor, the Fed, we will also learn the condition of the big commercial banks, which everyone is concerned about. Some of the interpreters will say the big banks ought to tighten up.

Another house of numbers, the Bureau of Economic Analysis, will present the statistics on plant and equipment investment, which everyone is concerned about. Some of the interpreters will say we're in trouble unless spending rises more.

All this and more. And while there will be good economic news too, it seems that all news of late has been cast by critics in the shape of an ogre, in keeping with the shortening days and the lowering clouds.

Jumping the gun, the United Jersey Bank of Hackensack, N.J., announced prior to the holiday that as of today its prime lending rate is 7.25 per cent instead of 7 per cent.

United Jersey (about $1.2 billion in assets) doesn't hold the leadership role played by the Bank of America (more than $60 billion), but the timing, the eagerness to get itself on record might portend another round of general increases.

Yes, the silence of summer is shattered. Reality is here, the noise begins and most of us are off and running in the dash to next spring, when we can contemplate a little vacation.

Meanwhile, a certain few well organized individuals who have learned to think ahead, and who recognize that the secret of comfort often is in doing things when others aren't, are about to take their off-season vacation at discount rates, far, far from the madness of it all.

Israeli survey tells division

By DON OBERDORFER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Israeli electorate believes peace with the Arabs is impossible without giving up some of the occupied West Bank but is deeply divided on whether Israel should do so, according to a public opinion survey in the Jewish state by New York pollster Louis Harris.

Harris' survey of 1,026 Jewish voters and 150 Arab voters in Israel, conducted in late June and early July, indicated strong backing for Prime Minister Menahem Begin as a national leader but ambivalence and divisions about some of Begin's controversial diplomatic positions.

The survey was financed by Seagrams President Edgar Bronfman, an American Jewish leader, and the results were presented to Begin and senior White House and State Department officials in mid-July.

By 51 to 30 per cent (the rest were undecided), Israeli Jews questioned by Harris considered Begin's tough stand on the West Bank and other foreign policy issues to be "a bargaining position" that can be softened in negotiations rather than a hard and unbending position.

President Carter, Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and other U.S. leaders have pinned their hopes for a Middle East peace on just such a possibility of future flexibility by Begin.

However, their hopes have been shaken in recent weeks as Begin expressed unyielding views in private and in public and as Israel proceeded, over U.S. and Arab objections, to create additional Jewish enclaves in the West Bank.

Along with some of Begin's closest aides and associates, the Israeli public today appears to have become highly pessimistic about prospects for peace.

Harris reported that in 1970 an Israeli majority of more than 2 to 1 believed that "in the next few years, it is likely that Israel will reach a peace agreement with the Arab countries."

In the latest poll, a 2-1 Jewish majority said such a peace agreement in the next few years is "unlikely." On this point Israeli Arabs held almost identical views.

The skepticism about Arab intentions, which is an underlying factor in the Israeli position, is clearly portrayed in the Harris survey.

respondents believe that the Arabs would be "really serious" about peace if they declare nonbelligerency to Israel, and only 21 per cent would accept the Arabs as "really serious" if they recognize formally the right of Israel to exist and exchange ambassadors. Israel Arabs overwhelmingly disagreed with that skeptical view.

On West Bank-Palestinian questions, the Harris survey reported these disparate results:

—Fifty-three per cent of the Jewish respondents and 94 per cent of the Arabs said it would be impossible for Israel to obtain a peace settlement while refusing to give up any of the occupied West Bank. (Thirty-six per cent of the Jews said it would be difficult but not impossible.)

—Forty-six per cent of the Jewish voters questioned agreed with Begin's unwillingness to give up any of the West Bank, but 45 per cent disagreed. "Any flat stand over a sustained period of time by Begin that the West Bank is not negotiable will split the country down the middle into the deepest kind of controversy," Harris reported.

—By 60 to 24 per cent Jewish respondents opposed giving back "most" of the West Bank territory to Jordan under an arrangement whereby land necessary for Israeli defense would be a neutral zone jointly occupied by Israeli and Jordanian troops.

Soviets keep cool on talks in terse postponement

By DAN FISHER
The Los Angeles Times

MOSCOW — If the Kremlin plans any major change in its bargaining position in the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, it has not tipped its hand here.

The difference in tone between recent U.S. statements on the subject and those emanating from Moscow was underlined in last Wednesday's announcements of a delay in the next round of negotiations.

The official announcement out of Washington said the two sides wanted additional time to lay the groundwork for a new accord on strategic weapons. It stressed that while "substantial differences remain to be overcome," recent exchanges have resulted in progress and a "better understanding."

In Moscow, by contrast, the official news agency Tass issued a two-sentence announcement that made no mention of either progress or increased understanding.

"A meeting between the foreign minister of the U.S.S.R. and the U.S. secretary of state was scheduled to be held in Vienna Sept. 7-9 to continue negotiations on questions of limitation of strategic arms and other questions of mutual interest for the U.S.S.R. and the United States," Tass said. "It has now been agreed to postpone the meeting to the second half of September when Andrei Gromyko visits Washington in the period of work of the U.N. General Assembly session."

The proposal to delay the talks was initiated by Washington, apparently because of both preoccupation with the Panama Canal accord and the inability of the Administration's negotiating team to agree on a unified bargaining position for the talks with Moscow.

There has been no hint that any new Kremlin proposal could be behind the delay.

Sen. George McGovern (D-S.D.) said after a meeting with Gromyko here last week, "If they have a change of position they didn't indicate it in any way to me."

There is "no indication of any substantial change in the Soviet position," said another source close to the negotiations.

What the Soviet response might be to any new U.S. offer remains to be seen.

"I don't think anyone in Washington has said the United States will stick to its position and expect the other side to move," this source said.

Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev, meanwhile, said in a speech last month, "If a good initiative appears anywhere, we are always ready to respond to it."

Gromyko sounded a similar note in his meeting with McGovern.

Washington Post editor killed

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Marion Clark, 34, the editor of The Washington Post Sunday magazine, Potomac, was killed Sunday when she accidentally walked into the propeller of an airplane at an airport in Michigan.

The accident occured about 6:30 p.m. at the Iosco County airport in East Tawas, Mich., according to the county sheriff's department.

Officials said the airplane, a privately-owned, single-engine craft in which Miss Clark had been a passenger, had taxied to gas pumps and come to a stop when Miss Clark emerged.

After leaving the plane "at a fast walk," according to the sheriff's department report, she walked into the airplane's propeller while the blade was still moving.

Friends said Miss Clark's family had a summer home near the airport in northern Michigan.

In addition to serving as editor of Potomac, Miss Clark won honors as a reporter.

Greece to join drill

The Los Angeles Times

ATHENS — For the first time since Greece pulled out of the military side of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in 1974, Greek units will participate in a NATO maneuver later this month.

The move, discreetly played down by a Greek government sensitive to public opinion, is being hailed by outside observers as a major step toward restoring NATO's southern flank.

Both Greek and Turkish military units will take part in the exercise, called "Display Determination," and involving all the NATO Mediterranean powers including the United States and Great Britain. To make it possible, NATO has manipulated its command structure to overcome local sensitivities, specifically Greek-Turk enmity and suspicion.

Greece withdrew from the military wing of the alliance in the summer of 1974, following the Turkish invasion of Cyprus. The Greeks blamed NATO, and specifically the United States for not preventing the Turkish invasion.

Since then, the conservative government of Premier Constantine Karamanlis has moved slowly but gradually to restore old ties. A new defense agreement with the United States was initialled recently which makes largely cosmetic changes in the status of U.S. forces here.

To get the Greeks back into the NATO military structure is a more delicate matter. The question is closely tied to relations with Turkey, and to the solution of both the Cyprus problem and disputes over the Aegean Sea which separates the two countries.

Greek participation in "Display Determination," which starts in late September, was made possible by a break with NATO tradition. Direction of the exercise by past tradition, would have been handled out of NATO's regional headquarters in Izmir, Turkey. But it has been taken over by NATO's CINC South.

Restaurant manager ambushed

MUSKOGEE, Okla. (AP) — The manager of a drive-in restaurant was shot and killed here Monday in what authorities described as an "execution-type" slaying by an armed robber.

Police identified the victim as Bobby Bearfield, 33, who moved to Muskogee two weeks ago from San Angelo, Tex., to operate the business, which opened one week ago.

Bearfield had been shot once in the back of the head by a small caliber weapon.

His body was discovered at 8:30 a.m. by Karen Story, a store employe. Officers said the killing had apparently occurred only minutes before.

Detective John Lauderdale said that Bearfield apparently was shot after being forced to open a safe.

Authorities said about $1,400 was taken.

Lances' rise: too much too fast?

By PENNY GIRARD
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — LaBelle and Bert Lance almost personify the American dream: small town high school sweethearts who married, raised their family, went to church and gained business prominence, social stature, a 60-room mansion and all the comforts lots of money can buy.

Yet the golden couple from the tiny community of Calhoun, Ga., (pop. 5,000) are discovering that the way Lance achieved all this and the way he and LaBelle lived once they had reached the top is a little like eating a two-pound box of candy at one sitting.

It seems OK at the time, but in restrospect, you may wish you hadn't done it.

For Lance, 46, moving up the business ladder from a $90-a-month bank teller's job to the presidency of the National Bank of Georgia meant a considerable change in life-styles.

At work it meant such amenities as a private prop-jet, a private suite at Atlanta's Omnisports Arena, and entertaining at private clubs. Personally, it meant a 400-acre farm, a house in Calhoun, a Sea Island retreat, an Atlanta mansion (now for sale for $2 million) with 14 baths, a Jacuzzi whirlpool, wine cellar and tennis courts.

"He sure does like to live in a grand style," an acquaintance from Atlanta says of Lance. And after Lance lost his 1974 race for governor of Georgia, friends say he plunged into civic work, social events and personal entertaining with still greater gusto. "I think he felt he had a whole lot of ground to make up for."

When Lance moved to Washington last January with listed assets of $8 million to become director of the Office of Management and Budget in the Carter administration, he and LaBelle leased an expensive house in fashionable Georgetown for $18,000 a year. They have feted Administration officials and stepped into Washington's most glittering social circles more vigorously than most members of the new Administration.

"They wanted so much to be accepted here," said one Washington social observer.

In June, the Lances hosted a private party at the Georgetown Inn with a guest list that included Cabinet officials and Supreme Court justices. The social secretary for one prominent hostess said she remembered the invitation because it was worded in an unusual way. "We had to call to find out what the dress was because we'd never seen it worded that way."

As an extra touch, Mrs. Lance gave out favors to her departing guests: bottles of perfume.

The evening was just one of a series of formal dinners and parties which the Lances have hosted or attended as they have plunged headlong into Washington's social life, from black-tie dinners to an afternoon tea at the British Embassy for visiting Princess Anne.

When the Lances moved to Washington, LaBelle persuaded her landlord to repaint the interior of their Georgetown house in her favorite pale yellow and green colors and moved in some of her antique furniture. Their temporary home is a three-story Georgian style townhouse, formally furnished, where the Lances entertain smaller groups of friends.

Neighbors say the lights usually burn most of the night, which one friend attributes to Lance's habit of sleeping only two or three hours a night. Increasingly, however, with the developing controversy, neighbors say the curtains are drawn tigher and the house has taken on a more somber appearance.

The Lances' life-style in Washington was an extension of the way they lived when he was aggressively building up the National Bank of Georgia in Atlanta. They lived in "Butterfly Manna," a 60-room mansion which the Lances extensively renovated and refurbished.

The walls of the mansion's living room, for example, were painted, sanded and repainted six times to achieve a procelain-like finish, friends say. And Mrs. Lance filled the house with Oriental rugs and antique furniture.

One room of the house was devoted solely to a collection of letters written by past American Presidents.

If the Lances brought their elegant life-style to Washington with them, they also came with a financial problem: Lance's entry into the federal government came at a time when his personal fortune was in the building stage but not fully completed.

"Lance told me many times he couldn't afford to come to Washington," said one Atlanta businessman, referring to Lance's business investments.

"But when Carter's strength among the business community was eroding (during the campaign), Lance was used increasingly to shore it up. He became caught up in the euphoria of the campaign and became committed to it. When the call came to come to Washington it was irresistible," the friend said.

Lance, the son of a college president, is a strapping man (6 feet 4 inches, about 250 pounds). He reminds one of a big stuffed Teddy bear wedged on a too-small shelf at the country fair.

LaBelle, from an established Southern family, personifies the Southern woman with her soft complexion and warm smile. Friends say she is a woman who likes a gentle life, butterflies, being a mother, staying at home and writing religious poetry in her spare time. She is one of her husband's staunchest defenders. Though she appears by his side regularly in public appearances, the lines around her eyes are growing deeper.

LaBelle and Bert first met in Calhoun, Ga., as children. They married while both were students at the University of Georgia, and she dropped out to have the first of four sons while he left to take a job as a bank teller.

They raised their children in Calhoun where they were active in the Methodist church. Friends remember he coached the Little League baseball team and later as a bank official he helped set up a system of loans for area high school graduates to go on to college.

Friends of the Lances shy away from talking about current problems. One old-line Atlanta matron said, "LaBelle is a charming, gracious, unspoiled lady, a sincere, straightforward and spiritual woman. She is a housewife from a small town who has been thrown into both political and banking worlds and has graced both of them. But she'd probably rather be back home."

Those who know LaBelle say that she is less interested in making a big splash than her husband. Purchase of the mansion, for example, was said to be "ostentatious," and as one friend observed, "definitely not in keeping with LaBelle."

Bishop William R. Cannon of Atlanta, who has known Bert since he was a young boy, and who delivered the prayer at Carter's inaugural in January, talks regularly with the Lances. "They're good solid Christian people," he says. Cannon, who has attended functions at their Atlanta home, said that while the Lances entertained a great deal, he never considered it overly lavish.

Pattern established in Lance investigation

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The journalistic and official investigations that have dogged Bert Lance began with an unheralded, understated piece in Time magazine last May 23, reporting that Jimmy Carter's resident fiscal conservative was deeply in personal debt.

"I couldn't sleep nights if I had to service debts like Bert's," Time quoted a banker friend as saying, and went on to discuss what then seemed Lance's "most serious" problem:

He had promised Congress at his confirmation hearing to sell his large block of stock in the National Bank of Georgia, of which he had been president, to avoid any possible conflict of interest.

But he had borrowed to buy the stock, and now its price had fallen so that if he were forced to sell, a large part of his paper fortune would disappear.

Congress' answer to that early problem was — at Carter's request to give Lance additional time to sell. Supporters said Lance was being unfairly badgered. "I think we've gone completely ethics happy around here," Sen. John Glenn (D-Ohio) remarked as the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee agreed to extend the sale deadline. "We've gone crazy."

That pattern of inconclusive investigative thrust and official parry has held true ever since.

The Washington Post reported that, as Lance was negotiating for a $3.4 million personal loan from the First National Bank of Chicago, his National Bank of Georgia deposited some of its money in the Chicago institution interest-free, in a "correspondent account."

The Governmental Affairs Committee held another hearing, and Chairman Abraham Ribicoff (D-Conn.) snapped that Lance was being "smeared" by the press.

That was in July. In August, the Comptroller of the Currency concluded in a lengthy report that Lance's financial habits raised "unresolved questions as to what constitutes acceptable banking practice," but added, "We do not believe the information developed to date ... warrants the prosecution of any individuals."

"Bert, I'm proud of you," Carter said as that report was issued.

Monday, however, Ribicoff himself went to the White House, together with his committee's ranking Republican, Charles Percy of Illinois, to tell Carter of unspecified new "allegations of illegalities of a serious nature" against Lance, and to urge that the budget director resign.

These new allegations reportedly have to do with Lance's earliest years as a banker.

THE WINNER IS the player who ends the game with the most miles per gallon in the new "Amoco Mileage Game." The game, distributed nationally, instructs players on the virtues of gas mileage economy. James Nardo, Amoco Oil Co. manager of reseller-jobber light oils, said the game is a fairly realistic simulation of what operating an automobile is all about.

Environmentalists still gripe about Alaska line

WASHINGTON (AP) — Environmentalists say a series of small spills and a pumphouse explosion along the Alaska oil pipeline have confirmed the wisdom of their opposition to its construction.

But the opponents also say they're accepting defeat philosophically and are awaiting tragic events that seem inevitable.

ENERGY
OIL & GAS

"I think we're just seeing the beginning of it," said Brock Evans of the Sierra Club. "We're going to see major oil spills and the crack-up of tankers up and down the West Coast. I hope I'm wrong, but ...."

Several minor mishaps have marred smooth operation of the 800-mile-long pipeline since it began moving oil from the North Slope to Valdez on June 20. But no coastal spills have been reported since tankers began carrying the crude oil south to refineries on the West Coast.

The $7.7 billion pipeline, one of the world's major engineering triumphs, crosses the last remaining expanse of wilderness in the United States, a region of Alaska where a man could travel on foot for weeks without seeing another human.

"The pipeline breaks my heart every time I see it," said Pam Rich, Alaska coordinator for Friends of Earth, one of several organizations that filed suit to block the pipeline's construction. "The continuity of that wilderness tract has been broken," she said.

Not only has the pipeline brought a measure of human encroachment to the Arctic wilderness, "but it now looks like the caribou are shying away from it," she said.

Special care was taken to provide passages for the caribou to cross the pipeline on their migrations across the tundra. Whether the pipeline will cause caribou populations to decline is unknown at this time.

Evans said reports indicate that an oil glut exists on the West Coast, caused by the influx of Alaska oil. "I think we're seeing the oil going to the wrong place," he said.

The Sierra Club also opposed the pipeline route, arguing that the oil should have been brought down through Canada to link up with pipelines that could have carried it both to the West Coast and Midwest.

James Dean of the Wilderness Society said the environmentalists' battle against the pipeline wasn't entirely futile. He noted that the court agreed with contentions that the original pipeline environmental impact statement was inadaquate, setting a precedent that is still being followed.

Ms. Rich, who prefers that designation, said the controversy forced the oil companies to modify their pipeline design to improve safety and provide greater protection for the landscape.

But it is not simply the pipeline that alarms environmentalists. They are working to require better technology on tankers to prevent collisions or oil spills. And they see the newly built road which parallels the pipeline as spelling the doom of Alaska's Arctic wilderness.

Previously inaccessible except by plane or by foot, the road is expected eventually to open up the north.

Logistics problems in north subject for SPE conference

DENVER, Colo. — The Society of Petroleum Engineers of AIME will hold a conference Oct. 9-12 in Denver.

A spokesman for the organization said problems brought on by the bitter weather conditions and isolation of the vast Arctic regions pose unique problems to the engineer / Artic regions in the search for oil and gas will be one of the meeting topics.

Several papers on the conference's extensive 2DG-paper technical program will focus on challenges unique to extraction of energy supplies in the hostile Arctic environment.

The enormous logistics problems encountered in setting up production facilities at the far north location of Prudhoe Bay is the subject of a paper authored by James A. Heimer and L. A. Bryan, Exxon Co.USA, and J. D. Weeks, Atlantic Richfield Co.

"The Prudhoe Bay area is actually an Arctic desert receiving less than 6 inches of rain each year, mostly in the form of snow in late summer and early winter. The summer temperature rarely exceeds its 40 degree average and 50 degrees below zero is not uncommon in winter," the authors state.

Amos C. Mathews, executive vice president of Alaskan Arctic Gas Study Co., will address the subject of natural gas pipelines in the permanetly frozen ground of the Artic. He will emphasize the benefits of studying the efforts of those who have successfully worked throughout the Arctic winters in the past.

"Dealing with permafrost requires use of special techniques which have been learned through practical experience over the last 50 years," Mathews said. "Even today engineers are expanding and refining these techniques to enable us to treat more precisely and eeonomically what to most of us is still a strange and difficult substance."

Overcoming difficulties in construction planning is a major factor cited. Men and machines must be protected from the Arctic's extreme weather; during the winter months of November through January, the Slope experiences continuous darkness.

Extender completes

An extender finaled in a North Pecos field and stepout sites have been splanned for fields in Glasscock and Winkler counties.

I. W. Lovelady of Midland complete No. 2 Chalkley as a thrid well and link to production in the Lehn-Apco, South (Ellenburger) field of Pecos, 11 miles sourth of Imperial.

The 24-hour potential was for 108 barrels of 44.8-gravity oil, flowing through a 16-64-inch choke and open hole at 4,677-4,730 feet. Gas-oil ratio measured 583-1.

Location is 6,513 feet from south and 467 feet from west lines of section 4 block, 110, Mrs. L. Merchant survey.

HOUSTON — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. has announced a significant new fault block and deeper discovery in its Mesquite Bay field drilling program.

The well, No. 1-19 State Tract, contains 244 feet of net pay in 14 reservoirs, with a possible additional 62 feet in other zones. The well will be dually completed in two of the reservoirs and is expected to produce 4 million cubic feet of gas and 580 barrels of condensate per day.

The company also announced:

— Because of information developed in connection with the discovery, the pay zones of No. 2-13 State Tract have been approximately tripled. The originally-announced 72 feet of net probable gas pay have been increased to 225 net feet, and the net possible pay has been increased from 33 to 95 feet.

— A well is being drilled on State Tract 18 — 3,000 feet southeast ef No. 2-13 State Tract — but no tests have been made to date.

The newly-completed No. 1-19 State Tract, 2,000 feet northeast of No. 2-13, flowed at a daily rate of 2 million cubic feet of gas and 316 barrels of condensate on a 12/64-inch choke through Middle Frio perforations from 11,747 to 11,776 feet. Flowing tubing pressure was 5,900 pounds.

The upper zone flowed at a rate of 1.9 million cubic feet of gas and 264 barrels of condensate per day on an 8/64-inch choke through Upper Frio perforations between 10,318 and 10,334 feet. Flowing tubing pressure was 3,310 pounds. Additional zones remain to be tested.

Grace, ERDA sign ammonia deal agreement

NEW YORK - W. R. Grace & Co. and the Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) signed an agreement for a program leading to the commercial manufacture of ammonia from coal. Total cost of the program will be about $350 million and calls for ERDA to fund approximately 47 percent of the program with the remaining $185 million to cone from private enterprise.

Phase I of the program, to commence immediately and take approximately two years to complete, calls for a conceptual design and engineering of a synthesis gas demonstration plant for the conversion of coal to a synthesis gas which in turn would be used to produce ammonia for agriculturai fertilizers. Phase I, estimated to cost over $10 million, will include a feasiblity study of the economic and technical viability of the project. From this study both Grace and ERDA will determine whether to continue with the later phases which would include construction and operation of the plant as a demonstration facility. Phase I will also include the preparation of an environmental impact study. The synthesis gas demonstration plant will use approximately 2,000 tons of coal per day to produce 1,200 tons of ammonia per day.

Ebasco Services, Inc., of New York engineers and constructors of power plants and other energy systems, is expected to be the principal subcontractor on the project responsible for design, engineering and construction management. For production of the synthesis gas, Grace has selected the Texaco Coal Gasification Process, which will be operated under license from Texaco Development Corp., a subsidiary of Texaco In.

Grace, a leading producer of ammonia, brings to the project more than 20 years of experience in operating gasification facilities and ammonia plants of various types end sizes. It is presently bring on-stream two conventional-type 1,200 ton-per-day ammonia plants—one in Woodward, Okla. and the other on the Caribbean Island of Trinidad. Grace also has a substantial natural resource business in the U'S. with growing assets in coal, oil and natural gas.

The agreement for this joint project of private enterprise, and the government was completed with the assistance of the Kentucky Center for Energy Research in Lexington, Ky. and current plans are to locate the proposed coal-based ammonia plant in Western Kentucky. The location affords ready access to coal for both feedstocks and fuel, an established ammonia market and all required modes of transportation. Employment for the project during the construction and preoperating phases is estimated to peak at more than 1,000. The plant is proposed to come on-stream by mid-1982 with an estimated employment of more than 150.

The plant will be designed to demonstrate the gasification of high sulfur aggomerating coal. All applicable local, state and federal environmental requirements will be incorporated in the plant design.

Ammonia is the basic source of nitrogen nutrient in fertilizers. Presently, the U.S. is almost completely dependent upon natural gas to make ammonia. National fuel and energy conditions dictate that the ammonia industry and other natural gas-dependent industries will experience a critical period in the next decade when they must sustain their present preduction and meet growth requirements, in the face of high prices and severe curtailments of natural gas supplies.

Portrait of spy acquired

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Portrait Gallery, a branch of the Smithsonian Institution, has acquired what Marvin Sadik, director, says is the only known life portrait of Revolutionary War hero Enoch Crosby, master spy.

The portrait, which was done by the studio of Samuel Waldo and William Jewett, was commissioned by John R. Peters of New York and painted in 1830. It belonged to Peters' descendants before passing into the hands of the gallery.

Crosby, a hero in his own time, was considered one of the most skillful spies in the revolution. He worked at times directly with George Washington. Crosby was also the model for James Fenimore Cooper's novel, "The Spy."

Traffic death toll better than usual

By The Associated Press

While Labor Day weekend traffic deaths failed to reach projected levels, the Texas violent death toll was swollen by a five-fatality boat accident and several drownings.

The Department of Public Safety predicted that 44 persons would die during the three-day weekend, but early today the traffic toll stood at 28. A total of 46 persons died violently, however, as six drownings had been recorded.

"We're delighted that the traffic toll ran lighter," said DPS spokesman Jim Robinson, who pointed out that 53 persons were killed in the three-day Labor Day weekend last year.

"Strangely enough, traffic deaths last year were down, except during the holidays. This year, traffic deaths are up 6-7 per cent, but holiday deaths have been much lower," added Robinson. "Apparently, motorists are being more careful on the holidays this year."

Seven motorcyclists were killed in holiday accidents, however. Of those, the DPS said at least four wore no helmets on the first weekend since a new law took effect, making helmets optional for Texas cyclists over 18.

"We have to believe that fewer would have died if they had been wearing helmets," said one DPS spokesman.

The death count began Friday evening and ended at midnight Monday.

The Los Angeles Times

PASADENA, Calif. — Within a few hours after casting off from its Cape Canaveral quay early Monday morning, the Voyager 1 spacecraft had correctly rigged all its booms and antennae and set a course for the planet Jupiter, some 620 million miles and 18 months distant.

Unlike its twin probe, Voyager 2, which was launched from Cape Canaveral a little more than two weeks ago, Voyager 1 encountered no problems after being launched by its Titan 3-Centaur rocket. Voyager 2 had difficulty unfurling one of its booms and with the functioning of its stabilization system, although these problems appear to be cleared up now.

As for Voyager 1, a National Eronautics and Space Administration spokesman in Florida, site of Cape Canaveral, said that "everything looks good."

The unmanned probe was on its way to Jupiter at a speed of 32,381 miles per hour a little more than an hour after its early morning launch. And then, like a schooner setting sail, the Voyager 1 began to set out its various booms and antennae.

One boom, 43 feet long, holds two magnetometers which will measure the magnetic fields surrounding Jupiter and the next planetary port-of-call after that, Saturn. A second boom, 7 1-2 feet long, supports television cameras and a battery of sophisticated scientific instruments. A third boom, 10 feet long, is the spare for the Voyager's three nuclear-powered electrical generators.

In addition to these booms, there are two 33-foot-long whip antennae and a 12-foot diameter communications disk antenna. The whip antennae, for a radio astronomy experiment, will detect radio waves emitted by the planets.

"We have confirmation that (all) booms are fully deployed with everything locked in place," the space agency spokesman said.

That report was received with satisfaction at the Voyager mission control center inside the Jet Propulsion Laboratory here. According to Voyager systems engineer Ron Draper, flight controllers have determined that the troublesome science boom on Voyager 2 has extended to within a small fraction of a degree of what it should.

Although it may not be fully out and locked, as the comparable boom on Voyager 1 is, Draper said that it is very doubtful the equipment will flop around during the course of the years-long mission. He said there is more than enough outward force being exerted by the deployment springs attached to the boom to resist any inward movement by the instruments on the end of the boom.

Voyager 2 at the moment has a 9 million mile lead on Voyager 1. Voyager 1, however, has been programmed to fly a flatter, more direct path to Jupiter than the path being followed by Voyager 2 and so will arrive at Jupiter four months before its twin.

Meany charges labor target of Nazi-like extremist acts

By HELEN DEWAR
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — AFL-CIO President George Meany charged Monday that organized labor is the target of a multimillion-dollar extremist campaign that can be compared to the rise of Nazism in prewar Germany.

In a strongly worded Labor Day address on CBS radio, the 83-year-old labor chief said extremism is on the rise in America, and "its No. 1 target is the American labor movement." Meany's assault on what he called the "hate merchants of the '70s" came at what could be a crucial juncture for organized labor, whose foothold in the American work force is slipping at a time when it is pushing in Congress — with indifferent results — for its most ambitious legislative agenda in years.

Last week the Labor Department reported that American membership in labor unions dropped by nearly 4 per cent during the last two years, it first decline since the early 1960s.

Moreover, a strong and well-coordinated business lobby has emerged on Capitol Hill to threaten labor's legislative program, including the administration-backed plan for overhaul of the nation's labor laws to make it easier for unions or organize and to win contracts.

Meany said "extremists are at it again" in the fight over labor-law revisions and accused them of trying "to once again manipulate public opinion."

Pakistani police begin to interrogate Bhutto

The Los Angeles Times

LAHORE, Pakistan — Police began their interrogation of former Prime Minister Zulfikar ali Bhutto, who is accused of ordering the murder of a political opponent.

The 49-year-old Bhutto, who had headed Pakistan's government for six years before he was deposed this summer in a bloodless coup, will remain in police custody at least until Saturday.

At that time, his lawyers are scheduled to apply for bail. The police can request Bhutto remain in custody because they need more time to question him.

Bhutto, arrested on Saturday at his Karachi home and then brought to Lahore, is in detention in a comfortable bungalow in the military base here. He reportedly is under military guard.

The generals ousted Bhutto July 5, following months of political turmoil to protest Bhutto's alleged rigging of national elections last March.

Observers say Bhutto's party workers are "depressed and demoralized." The guessing here is that his supporters will be spending a lot of time and money on Bhutto's legal defense.

New elections have been scheduled for October 18, there's no indication thus far that Bhutto's arrest will change that.

Farmers protest new 'Depression'

HILLSBORO, Tex. (AP) — "If you don't like farmers, don't talk with your mouth full," read the sign on one of the massive tractors that led a Labor Day farmer's protest procession along an Interstate 35 access road.

About 75 farmers and their wives abandoned their farms Monday and drove their tractors, pickup trucks and cars in the four-hour, 30-mile procession to protest "the worst farm year since the Depression."

Similar protests were mounted last month by North Texas wheat farmers, who mailed President Carter boxes of wheat on which they claim to be losing money.

Some Texas cotton producers have also mailed Carter small bales of cotton, with an attached note telling the President that it could be the last bale he sees unless the government offers farmers some relief.

Open crowd shows who's boss

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. (AP) — They had watched Tracy Austin, Harold Solomon and Virginia Wade, but the fans at center court at the $462,420 U.S. Open Tennis Championships weren't going home without seeing Guillermo Vilas.

A chanting crowd of more than 12,000 clapped, stamped its feet and yelled Monday until tournament officials with scheduling problems relented, agreeing to bring on Vilas and Jose Higueras of Spain.

"We won't go," they cried. "We want Vilas."

They braved a thunderstorm, waited for the court to dry and watched a steady, unemotional Vilas dispatch Higueras 6-3, 6-1.

EARLIER MONDAY, 14-year-old Miss Austin overcame the scorching forehand of Romanian Virginia Ruzici for a 6-3, 7-5 victory, and Billie Jean King needed a tie-breaker to eliminate ninth-seeded Kerry Reid of Australia 6-1, 3-6, 7-6.

Ms. Wade, the Wimbledon champion and No. 3 seed from Britain, rallied to beat Fiorella Bonicelli of Uruguay 4-6, 6-1, 6-2.

No. 5 Betty Stove of The Netherlands defeated Kathy Kuykendall of Miami 6-3, 6-0, reaching the quarter-finals against Miss Austin. No. 2 Martina Navratilova of Dallas beat Tanya Harford of Melrose, Ohio 6-0, 6-2; No. 6 Rosie Casals of Sausalito, Calif. eliminated South African Brigitte Cuypers 6-2, 1-6, 6-2, and No. 10 Mima Jausovec of Yugoslavia ousted Janet Newberry of St. Petersburg, Fla. 6-1, 6-2.

Solomon, the 12th seed from Silver Spring, Md., upset eighth-seeded Vitas Gerulaitis of Kings Point, N.Y. 7-6, 6-3. The women's No. 12 seed, Australian Wendy Turnbull, downed Barbara Jordan of King of Prussia, Pa. 6-4, 6-3.

VILAS AND HIGUERAS were kept waiting in the wings as tournament officials changed their mind several times about whether the match would be played before the daytime crowd. Officials had wanted to reschedule the match for at night when the day matches ran longer than expected. There is a separate charge for night admission and the afternoon crowd knew it.

"I think it's very nice," the 25-year-old Vilas said of the crowd's insistence on seeing him. "Better they say that than 'We hate Vilas.' I was happy, for sure."

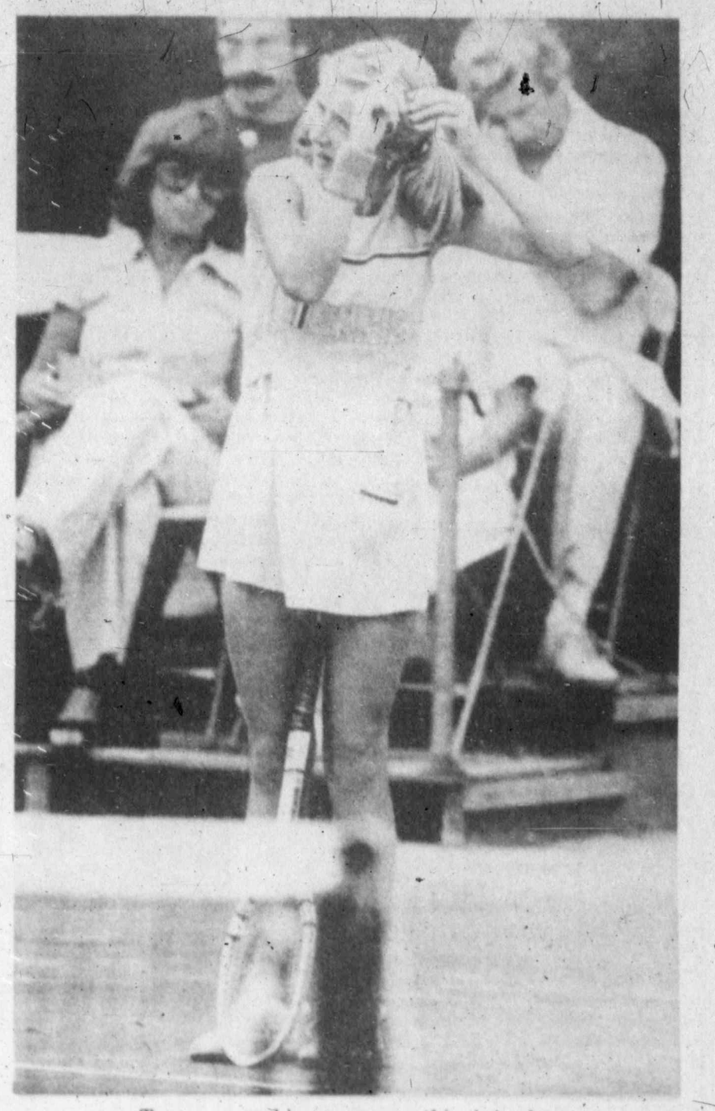

TINY TRACY, the innocent-looking ball of fire from Rolling Hills, Calif., had a far more difficult time against Miss Ruzici than she had against fourth-seeded Sue Barker Sunday.

In the second set, she answered Miss Ruzici's forehand with drives to her opponent's backhand and with lobs designed to slow the pace.

"Sometimes when Virginia started hitting harder, I'd just keep hitting it back and she'd hit harder and harder until she finally made an error," Miss Austin said.

It took the 5-foot-1 dynamo 1 hour, 40 minutes to complete the kill.

Ms. King's match ended on a sour note as she swept past Mrs. Reid at the net after her victory. She was enraged because the Australian had refused to discuss the penalty point she requested when Ms. King smacked a ball over the backstop in a fit of pique.

Tracy. . . making sure everything's in place.

Falcons beat Chiefs, 24-16

By the Associated Press

Quarterback Steve Bartkowski, playing with a brace on his injured knee Monday night, led the Atlanta Falcons on a second half surge past the Kansas City Chiefs for a 24-16 exhibition football victory.

Bartkowski sat out the first half, but came out in the third quarter and converted three KC turnovers into a pair of touchdowns and a Nick Mike-Mayer field goal while the Falcons' defense was shutting the Chiefs out.

Fought joins some 'big' company

NEWTOWN SQUARE, Pa. (AP) — Look out, Jack Nicklaus, Arnold Palmer, Jerry Pate and Gene Littler: here comes someone who started the same way you did—by winning the U.S. National Amateur golf championship.

John Fought of Tualatin, Ore., had not gotten the wet grass off his spikes after winning the National Amateur Labor Day when he announced he was turning pro.

The 23-year-old Fought annihilated Doug Fischesser of Connersville, Ind. 9 and 8 in the scheduled 36-hole final over the 6,958-yard Aronimink Golf Club course.

"I am going to turn pro," said Fought, an accounting graduate from Brigham Young University. "As much as I'd like to stay an amateur, it's a nice way to go out."

FOUGHT TRIED to make it clear that while money was necessary for security, it was the love of the game and competition that motivated him to try for a PGA tour card.

"I want to play golf eight hours a day," he said. "I want to practice and improve my game. Nobody can do two things well. Golf is a game you play with pride, whether amateur or pro. Money doesn't mean anything standing next to pride."

And Fought has set his sights high.

"A lot of guys seem content to make the top 60 on the money winners' list," he said. "But I like (Jack) Nicklaus' philosophy. He tries to win every tournament. That's where the challenge is."

Fought has the confidence of a Nicklaus or a Palmer. There isn't anything he thinks he can't do on a golf course if he sets his mind to it. He wants only to be the best.

"If I make the tour, I'll try to become the best," said Fought, who works for his father's accounting firm when he isn't playing golf. "I don't think I'd like the tour as a job per se. It's the type of work I'd like to do only as long as I keep improving. I'd like to play golf the next 15 to 20 years."

As for his easy victory over Fischesser, Fought said, "I struck the ball just the way I wanted to. I didn't let a shot get away. I played the way I wanted to."

His score was ample support. Fought shot a par-70 on the first 18 and was one stroke under after the first nine of the afternoon round. He led six up after 18, eight up through 27, and closed it out on the 28th hole.

FOUGHT LOOKS like a nice, mild-mannered youngster. And he is, off the golf course. It's sort of Jekyll-Hyde stuff.

"I get so violent, so gungho," said the nation's new amateur king. "I'm nice to my opponent, polite, all the proper etiquette. But I want to kill him. If I get him two down, I want to get him six down. Stomp on him!"

Fought added, "If you get timid and let him up, he can come back and run all over you."

The victory boosted Fought's string of consecutive match play triumphs this year to 20, six in the Trans-Mississippi, five at Broadmoor, two in the Walker Cup and seven in the Amateur. He is not so fond of match play, but says that a good golfer has to be able to compete in all kinds of competition.

FOUGHT LED just one-up after nine holes of the morning round. He was still just a hole ahead after Fischesser rolled in a 30-foot birdie putt at 11.

But Fischesser, after halving 12, fell apart. He sprayed shots all over the course, behind trees, in traps, under television stanchions and in the rough. He lost five of the last six holes on the back side, four of them on bogeys, one to a Fought birdie, and they went to lunch with Fought holding a six-up lead.

Fought increased his advantage to eight-up as they made the turn in the afternoon round. Then, on the 25th, Fought hit a fairway drive, put his second on the green and two-putted from 30 feet—the last from five. Fischesser bogeyed and it was over.

Westberg takes pin title

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP)—Steve Westberg of Cottage Grove, Ore., won his second Professional Bowlers Association title in three weeks Monday night when he defeated Tommy Hudson by 118 pins to win the $60,000 Sarastoa Open.

Westberg, a 27-year-old left-hander, earned $6,000 for the victory, boosting his winnings for the year to over $27,000.

Westbert started the sixth and final round with a 217-pin lead over Dale Glenn of Glendale, Calif. and never led by less than 150 pins during the final eight fames.

"Winning this tournament feels better than winning the first one two weeks ago at Trenton, N.J.," said Westberg, a second-year pro.

Hot Astros eying second

By The Assbciated Press

Still think the Cincinnati Reds are going to win the National League West, do you? Would you believe third place?

The streaking Houston Astros, winners of 10 of their last 11 games, defeated Cincinnati 5-1 Monday night. They ended Tom Seaver's seven-game winning streak in the process and moved within 5½ games of the second-place Reds.

"You bet we're shooting for second place," said Houston catcher Joe Ferguson. "We've got to beat the Reds and everyone else, but we're still fighting for it."

The Reds' setback reduced Los Angeles' magic number to 15 even though the Dodgers lost 1-0 to a two-hitter by Bob Owchinko of the San Diego Padres. Meanwhile, the Philadelphia Phillies maintained a seven-game lead over Pittsburgh in the NL East by splitting a doubleheader with the Pirates, losing 3-1 then winning 11-1 for Steve Carlton's 20th victory.

Elsewhere, the Chicago Cubs downed the St. Louis Cardinals 4-2, the Atlanta Braves blanked the San Francisco Giants 4-0 and the Montreal Expos edged the New York Mets 4-3.

The Astros tagged Seaver for eight hits and all five runs in six innings, including a homer by Enos Cabell and triples by winning pitcher Mark Lemongello and Cesar Cedeno.

Lemongello held the Reds to six hits and their only run came on a homer by Seaver, who must have thought he was back with the light-hitting Mets.

"I pitched badly and I lost," Seaver said. "I didn't have my good stuff. I'm going to think about it a lot tonight and come up with some answers."

Lemongello, 7-14 after a miserable 1-11 start, hurled the Astros to their 10th triumph in 15 meetings with the Reds and said it was "almost like the World Series out there. If we could beat Cincinnati and finish second it would be fantastic. We're playing good baseball and we're a young team. In a couple of years we could be there."

Padres 1, Dodgers 0

Owchinko avenged a heartbreaking 1-0 loss to the Dodgers on July 16, a game in which he retired the first 22 batters. This time, the rookie left-hander walked one, struck out five and didn't permit a runner beyond first base. The Padres scored in the third inning when Gene Richards singled, stole his 41st base of the season, went to third on a single by Bill Almon and came home on a throwing error by first baseman Steve Garvey after pitcher Doug Rau picked Almon off.

Pirates 3-1, Phillies 1-11

Carlton became a 20-game winner for the fourth time, scattering seven hits in eight innings and rapping his third home run of the season in addition to a run-scoring single. Jay Johnstone gave him all the runs he needed with a two-run homer in the second inning.

In the opener, John Candelaria, 16-4, and Rich Gossage scattered seven hits, including a homer by Jerry Martin. Duffy Dyer connected for Pittsburgh.

"Just two more games off the schedule," said Carlton. But the Pirates weren't giving up.

"It's not over," said Manager Chuck Tanner, referring to the NL East Division race. "Things can turn around in a wek in baseball. It's over when the numbers say it's over. The Phillies led by 10 games one year (1964) and had all the banners out. They didn't get to use them."

Cubs 4, Cardinals 2

Bill Buckner drove in three runs with a homer and sacrifice fly and Larry Biittner had three hits including a solo homer to back the six-hit pitching of Dave Roberts.

"I haven't been pitching as much as I like to and I was very strong at the start," said Roberts, acquired during the summer from the Detroit Tigers.

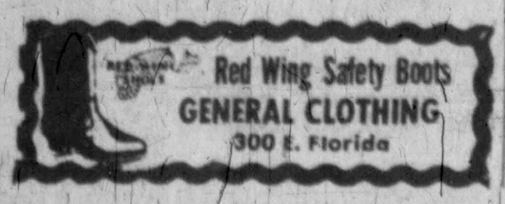

Braves 4, Giants 0

Atlanta's Dick Ruthven hurled a three-hitter for his first shutout since his first start of the season. Jim Barr was the loser, although he threw only three pitches. Jerry Royster lined the third one off Barr's right elbow with such force that it then caromed into foul territory between home plate and third base for a hit.

Barr was taken to a hospital, where X-rays proved negative, but John Curtis replaced him and allowed three runs before getting out of the opening inning. The crowd of 2,262 was the smallest of the season for Atlanta.

Expos 4, Mets 3

Tony Perez and Ellis Valentine homered as Montreal sent Jerry Koosman, a 21-game winner last year, to his 18th loss in 26 decisions. Valentine was making his first appearance since he fouled a ball off his ankle three weeks ago.

Lances' rise: too much too fast?

By PENNY GIRARD
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — LaBelle and Bert Lance almost personify the American dream: small town high school sweethearts who married, raised their family, went to church and gained business prominence, social stature, a 60-room mansion and all the comforts lots of money can buy.

Yet the golden couple from the tiny community of Calhoun, Ga., (pop. 5,000) are discovering that the way Lance achieved all this and the way he and LaBelle lived once they had reached the top is a little like eating a two-pound box of candy at one sitting.

It seems OK at the time, but in restrospect, you may wish you hadn't done it.

For Lance, 46, moving up the business ladder from a $90-a-month bank teller's job to the presidency of the National Bank of Georgia meant a considerable change in life-styles.

At work it meant such amenities as a private prop-jet, a private suite at Atlanta's Omnisports Arena, and entertaining at private clubs. Personally, it meant a 400-acre farm, a house in Calhoun, a Sea Island retreat, an Atlanta mansion (now for sale for $2 million) with 14 baths, a Jacuzzi whirlpool, wine cellar and tennis courts.

"He sure does like to live in a grand style," an acquaintance from Atlanta says of Lance. And after Lance lost his 1974 race for governor of Georgia, friends say he plunged into civic work, social events and personal entertaining with still greater gusto. "I think he felt he had a whole lot of ground to make up for."

When Lance moved to Washington last January with listed assets of $8 million to become director of the Office of Management and Budget in the Carter administration, he and LaBelle leased an expensive house in fashionable Georgetown for $18,000 a year. They have feted Administration officials and stepped into Washington's most glittering social circles more vigorously than most members of the new Administration.

"They wanted so much to be accepted here," said one Washington social observer.

In June, the Lances hosted a private party at the Georgetown Inn with a guest list that included Cabinet officials and Supreme Court justices. The social secretary for one prominent hostess said she remembered the invitation because it was worded in an unusual way. "We had to call to find out what the dress was because we'd never seen it worded that way."

As an extra touch, Mrs. Lance gave out favors to her departing guests: bottles of perfume.

The evening was just one of a series of formal dinners and parties which the Lances have hosted or attended as they have plunged headlong into Washington's social life, from black-tie dinners to an afternoon tea at the British Embassy for visiting Princess Anne.

When the Lances moved to Washington, LaBelle persuaded her landlord to repaint the interior of their Georgetown house in her favorite pale yellow and green colors and moved in some of her antique furniture. Their temporary home is a three-story Georgian style townhouse, formally furnished, where the Lances entertain smaller groups of friends.

Neighbors say the lights usually burn most of the night, which one friend attributes to Lance's habit of sleeping only two or three hours a night. Increasingly, however, with the developing controversy, neighbors say the curtains are drawn tighter and the house has taken on a more somber appearance.

The Lances' life-style in Washington was an extension of the way they lived when he was aggressively building up the National Bank of Georgia in Atlanta. They lived in "Butterfly Manna," a 60-room mansion which the Lances extensively renovated and refurbished.

The walls of the mansion's living room, for example, were painted, sanded and repainted six times to achieve a procelain-like finish, friends say. And Mrs. Lance filled the house with Oriental rugs and antique furniture.

One room of the house was devoted solely to a collection of letters written by past American Presidents.

If the Lances brought their elegant life-style to Washington with them, they also came with a financial problem: Lance's entry into the federal government came at a time when his personal fortune was in the building stage but not fully completed.

"Lance told me many times he couldn't afford to come to Washington," said one Atlanta businessman, referring to Lance's business investments.

"But when Carter's strength among the business community was eroding (during the campaign), Lance was used increasingly to shore it up. He became caught up in the euphoria of the campaign and became committed to it. When the call came to come to Washington it was irresistible," the friend said.

Lance, the son of a college president, is a strapping man (6 feet 4 inches, about 250 pounds). He reminds one of a big stuffed Teddy bear wedged on a too-small shelf at the country fair.

LaBelle, from an established Southern family, personifies the Southern woman with her soft complexion and warm smile. Friends say she is a woman who likes a gentle life, butterflies, being a mother, staying at home and writing religious poetry in her spare time. She is one of her husband's staunchest defenders. Though she appears by his side regularly in public appearances, the lines around her eyes are growing deeper.

LaBelle and Bert first met in Calhoun, Ga., as children. They married while both were students at the University of Georgia, and she dropped out to have the first of four sons while he left to take a job as a bank teller.

They raised their children in Calhoun where they were active in the Methodist church. Friends remember he coached the Little League baseball team and later as a bank official he helped set up a system of loans for area high school graduates to go on to college.

Friends of the Lances shy away from talking about current problems. One old-line Atlanta matron said, "LaBelle is a charming, gracious, unspoiled lady, a sincere, straightforward and spiritual woman. She is a housewife from a small town who has been thrown into both political and banking worlds and has graced both of them. But she'd probably rather be back home."

Those who know LaBelle say that she is less interested in making a big splash than her husband. Purchase of the mansion, for example, was said to be "ostentatious," and as one friend observed, "definitely not in keeping with LaBelle."

Bishop William R. Cannon of Atlanta, who has known Bert since he was a young boy, and who delivered the prayer at Carter's inaugural in January, talks regularly with the Lances. "They're good solid Christian people," he says. Cannon, who has attended functions at their Atlanta home, said that while the Lances entertained a great deal, he never considered it overly lavish.

Pattern established in Lance investigation

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The journalistic and official investigations that have dogged Bert Lance began with an unheralded, understated piece in Time magazine last May 23, reporting that Jimmy Carter's resident fiscal conservative was deeply in personal debt.

"I couldn't sleep nights if I had to service debts like Bert's," Time quoted a banker friend as saying, and went on to discuss what then seemed Lance's "most serious" problem:

He had promised Congress at his confirmation hearing to sell his large block of stock in the National Bank of Georgia, of which he had been president, to avoid any possible conflict of interest.

But he had borrowed to buy the stock, and now its price had fallen so that if he were forced to sell, a large part of his paper fortune would disappear.

Congress' answer to that early problem was — at Carter's request to give Lance additional time to sell. Supporters said Lance was being unfairly badgered. "I think we've gone completely ethics happy around here," Sen. John Glenn (D-Ohio) remarked as the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee agreed to extend the sale deadline. "We've gone crazy."

That pattern of inconclusive investigative thrust and official parry has held true ever since.

The Washington Post reported that, as Lance was negotiating for a $3.4 million personal loan from the First National Bank of Chicago, his National Bank of Georgia deposited some of its money in the Chicago institution interest-free, in a "correspondent account."

The Governmental Affairs Committee held another hearing, and Chairman Abraham Ribicoff (D-Conn.) snapped that Lance was being "smeared" by the press.

That was in July. In August, the Comptroller of the Currency concluded in a lengthy report that Lance's financial habits raised "unresolved questions as to what constitutes acceptable banking practice," but added, "We do not believe the information developed to date ... warrants the prosecution of any individuals."

"Bert, I'm proud of you," Carter said as that report was issued.

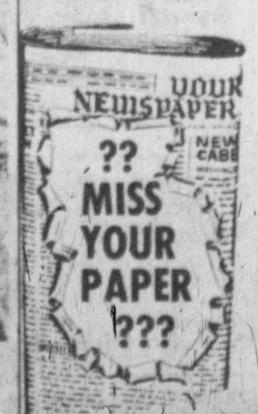

Monday, however, Ribicoff himself went to the White House, together with his committee's ranking Republican, Charles Percy of Illinois, to tell Carter of unspecified new "allegations of illegalities of a serious nature" against Lance, and to urge that the budget director resign.

These new allegations reportedly have to do with Lance's earliest years as a banker.

U. S. sales curbs aid other arms builders

By SHIRLEY CHRISTIAN

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Restrictions on U.S. military sales or aid to a number of Latin American countries are encouraging local arms industries and creating markets for European, Soviet and Israel sellers, an Associated Press survey shows.

The country put in the greatest bind is Chile, which is under a total congressional cutoff for human rights transgressions. But even it has managed to find some interested arms merchants elsewhere. The other Latin American countries have hardly felt a pause in the ability to satisfy their arms appetites.

According to the survey by AP Latin American correspondents, countries outside the hemisphere which are finding or looking for markets in Latin America include Britain, France, West Germany, Israel and the Soviet Union. Some of these countries have long been selling in the region, but the U.S. restrictions have led some governments to say they will be buying more from them.

Brazil and Argentina, which rejected American military credits in March because they were conditioned on an improvement in human rights, are working harder to develop already significant arms industries on their own soil. Brazil is exporting heavily to the rest of the continent, and Argentina is becoming a place for advanced military training.

Brazil, which also canceled its 25-year-old military agreement with the United States, is said to be manufacturing about 40 per cent of its military needs — estimated unofficially to total $300 million to $350 million a year.

The Brazilian arms industry is in private hands, with some of the businesses operated in partnership with foreign firms. Its customers are said to include Bolivia, Chile, Paraguay and Uruguay, plus several African nations.

The major Brazilian export items have been light transport aircraft, training planes and two classes of armored vehicles.

Having its own arms industry has allowed Brazil to replace obsolete foreign rifles, including the American M1, with a locally made version of a Belgian rifle.

Brazil also makes, under license, the West German antitank missile known as Cobra, the French Roland surface-to-air missile and the Italian 9mm Retta submachine gun.

Argentina considers itself self-sufficient in the manufacture of small arms such as pistols, submachine guns and rifles, but military men there are said to be worried about the resupply of sophisticated weaponry such as tanks and airplanes.

The Argentine military source say purchases can be made from France and Britain, as it has done before, but many officers express a preference for American products.

Argentina also is speeding up plans to manufacture tanks and planes. It has built eight small turbo-prop fighter planes and air force officials say 100 of them will be ready by 1985. Chile, Uruguay and Paraguay are reportedly interested in buying the Argentine turbo-props which carry French-designed engines.

Chile, under heavy criticism from the U.S. Congress since the bloody coup that ousted the late President Salvador Allende in September 1973, is prohibited by a law adopted by Washington in July 1976 from buying or otherwise receiving any military equipment from U.S. government or commercial sources. Uruguay is under a similarly strict cutoff.

Chile was able to take delivery on things it had already ordered, but there was very little on order. Most significant were two squadrons of airplanes, a total of 36 F5s and A37s. These have all arrived in Chile during the past year.

Race wide open for N. Y. mayor

By LEE LESCAZE

The Washington Post

NEW YORK — Can a Jewish liberal congressman who looks like chicken-king Frank Perdue become mayor of New York? Or will the next mayor be a former congresswoman made over for an upcoming Good Housekeeping magazine article into "Brand New Bella?"

Those are only two of the possibilities. If you like pulling levers in voting booths, you could do worse than be a New York Democrat this month.

After a campaign in which seven Democratic candidates for mayor scoured New York's streets and beaches all summer for voters' hands to shake, the voters will strike back Thursday and eliminate at least five of the aspirants.

It appears certain, however, that New Yorkers will not give any candidate 40 per cent of the vote so there will be an 11-day runoff campaign between the top two finishers and the city's Democrats will go back to the voting booths to make their final primary choice Sept. 19.

Four of the candidates entered the final week before the first vote with a chance to stay alive, according to a welter of polls and freely offered opinions.

Mayor Abraham Beame, Bella Abzug, Rep. Edward Koch — who hopes to do as well with his campaign as Perdue has done with his capons — and New York Secretary of State Mario Cuomo are all given a chance to make the runoff.

Koch's candidacy has surged only in the last two weeks, and many predict he will be in the finals with the flamboyant and anti-establishment Abzug, who has led in the polls from the start but has been slipping steadily.

Despite the repeated disasters that have afflicted the city during his administration, Beame cannot be counted out because of his labor and traditional political clubhouse backing. Cuomo has Gov. Hugh Carey behind him (and, indeed, sometimes in front of him seeming to tug along.) It is interesting that in a city where politicians used to have to furrow their brows and give public evidence of serious concern over the widening gap between rich and poor, the biggest issue with voters this year appears to be the death penalty.

The passions over reviving electrocution are so strong that the candidates are constantly asked their positions, although the mayor doesn't determine how criminals are punished.

One candidate, Koch, doesn't have to be asked his opinion. He is happy to tell all listeners that he supports the death penalty. Execution is a deterrent and is in keeping with the Judeo-Christian heritage, Koch explains.

Cuomo has attacked Koch for practicing "the politics of death." Carey, Cuomo's backer, recently vetoed a bill that would have reimposed the death penalty in New York.

In his eagerness to bolster the lackluster Cuomo campaign, Carey somewhat undermined the authority of Cuomo's position this week when he said he would reconsider his death-penalty stand — but only if New Yorkers elected Cuomo.

The first reaction from Cuomo, who strongly opposes the death penalty, when reporters brought him news of Carey's offer was to quip that he was reconsidering his position on Carey.

Cuomo has built something of a reputation for witty irreverence about his patron and his campaign, and for a refusal to take cheap shots. "It's not that simple," Cuomo says frequently.

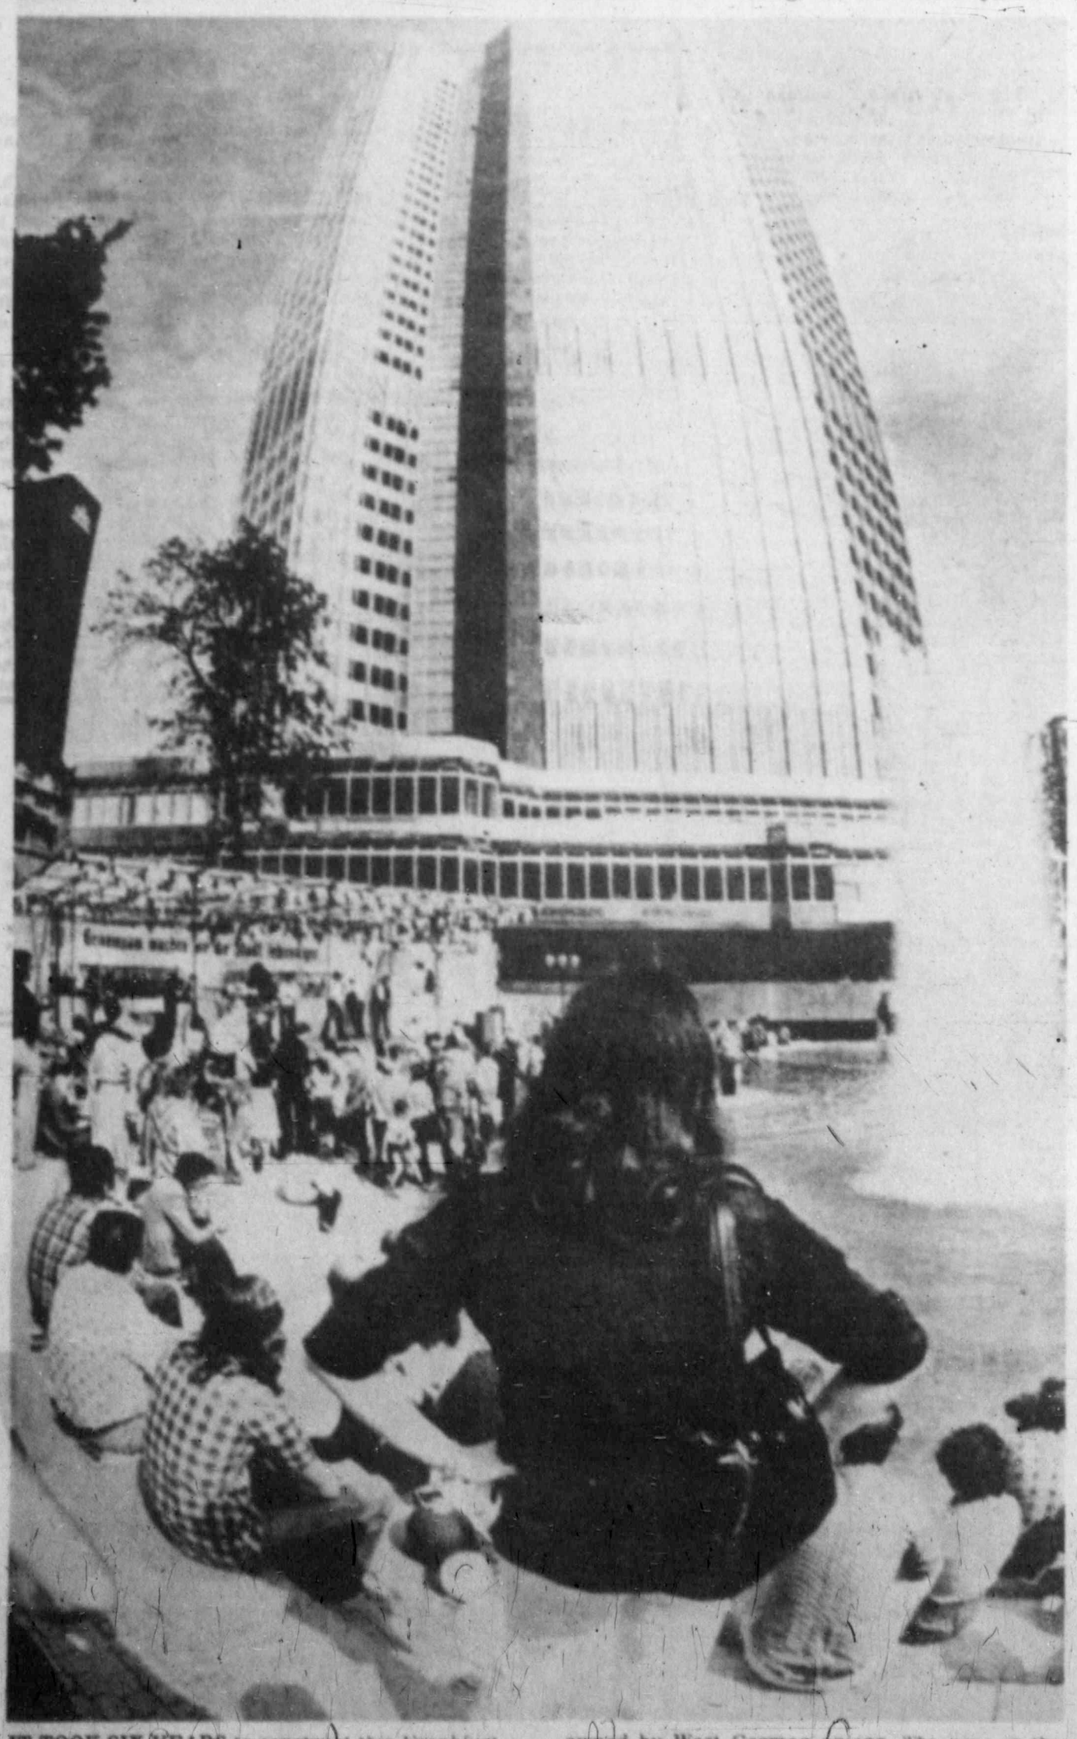

"Ask Mario a question, and he says he'll appoint a commission to study it," Koch jibes. "That campaign is Cuomotose."

The Koch-Cuomo relationship has a history. Essentially they divide the same constituency — the "I-Don't-Want-Beame-Again but-I'm-Not-Ready-to-Vote-for-Abzug" white voters.

Cuomo had been expected by many of his supporters to preempt the right-wing vote by being the white-Catholic ethnic candidate. But Cuomo doesn't like campaigning, and his refusal to be a demagogue left him with the appearance of being indecisive.

"I will do many things to be mayor, but I won't lie," he said often. When a man told Cuomo that he should change his position and advocate capital punishment or lose a lot of votes, Cuomo replied, "So I'll lose."

While Cuomo refused to play the role of Archie Bunker candidate, Koch's support of the death penalty in a city absorbed by the "Son of Sam" murders, his call to bring in the National Guard to prevent looting during the July blackout and his opposition to allowing policemen or firemen to strike, have allowed him to ride into the law-and-order position Cuomo's backers had thought they had marked out for their man.

IT TOOK SIX YEARS to construct this Frankfurt, West Germany skyscraper, which cost about $9.6 million and houses the Bank fur Gemeinwirtschaft, owned by West German unions. The area in the foreground will be a city center, housing restaurants and shops, augumented by a fountain.

Opening lead — ♠ Q

South won the first spade, drew trumps and led out three rounds of diamonds, hoping that his last diamond would be good.

Since the six missing diamonds failed to break 3-3, South had to lose a spade as well as a diamond. Down one.

After drawing trumps, South should get to dummy with the ace of trmps to lead the queen of clubs. If East plays the ace, South ruffs and gets to dummy with a king to resume the clubs.

South discards a spade on the next club. West can win the trick, but declarer returns to dummy with the other king to make his slam with the good clubs.

THROWS LOSER

If East plays low on the first round of clubs, South throws a loser at once. West wins, but South returns to dummy to lead the jack of clubs — once more planning to discard if East plays low but to ruff it East puts up the ace.

Sough makes the slam if East has one or both of the top clubs. He goes down only if West has both of the high clubs. The odds are 3 to 1 that East has at least one high club, but the odds are almost 2 to 1 against a 3-3 break in diamonds.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Ingrown toenails require patience

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: Is there any simple way that I can get rid of an ingrown toenail? I have one that just keeps flaring up. It's such a nuisance—and such a pain—Sue R.

DEAR SUE: Getting rid of an ingrown toenail can be a bit of a nuisance also, but if you are patient and follow a few simple routines regularly—hot soaks, trimming away excess tissue, gentle cleansing and redirecting of the imbedded nail edge (a small piece of cotton slipped under it may help)—you can probably get rid of it for good. However, in a chronic case such as yours, I do think you would be better off seeing a foot doctor for detailed instructions.

Ingrown toenails are usually caused by cutting the nail in a rounded shape, rather than straight, and leaving a little spike at the side that then grows into the flesh. Try cutting your nails so they have a square look—I think that will be a big help.

Shoes that do not fit properly and poor foot hygiene can be factors that contribute to this condition, and so can nonabsorbent synthetic socks, which cause your feet to perspire constantly and never give them a chance to air or dry out.

As a rule, conservative methods suffice, but it is worth noting that in very stubborn cases—when the condition has been ignored too long, surgery may be necessary. So do check your doctor soon and get started on the hot soaks.

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: I've heard that if you are a second or third child you are more likely to get on well with people than if you are the oldest in the family. Is this true? As one in the middle, I'd like to feel I have some advantage—Susie P.

DEAR SUSIE: There may be certain amount of truth to that. At any rate, it is one conclusion drawn from a recent study of 1,750 youngsters in Riverside, Calif. Apparently, the younger offspring develop their social skills in order to get along with their older brothers and sisters—whereas the firstborn has a sort of privileged status that doesn't require the same effort.

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: My brother had a tuberculosis skin test that turned out to be positive. Does this mean he actually has it, or is likely to have it, or just what? It's awfully hard for me to find out simply from talking to him—all he says is it's nothing serious—Leona A.

DEAR LEONA: A positive tuberculin test does mean that there is or has been a tuberculosis infection, but not necessarily an active one. It calls for further checks by the doctor, such as a chest X-ray, and then treatment, if any is requried. I think the important thing is that your brother take whatever follow-up action his doctor advises.

ANSWER TO PREVIOUS PUZZLE

THE WINNER IS the player who ends the game with the most miles per gallon in the new "Amoco Mileage Game." The game, distributed nationally, instructs players on the virtues of gas mileage economy. James Nardo, Amoco Oil Co. manager of reseller-jobber light oils, said the game is a fairly realistic simulation of what operating an automobile is all about.

Environmentalists still gripe about Alaska line

WASHINGTON (AP) — Environmentalists say a series of small spills and a pumphouse explosion along the Alaska oil pipeline have confirmed the wisdom of their opposition to its construction.

But the opponents also say they're accepting defeat philosophically and are awaiting tragic events that seem inevitable.

ENERGY

"I think we're just seeing the beginning of it," said Brock Evans of the Sierra Club. "We're going to see major oil spills and the crack-up of tankers up and down the West Coast. I hope I'm wrong, but ...."

Several minor mishaps have marred smooth operation of the 800-mile-long pipeline since it began moving oil from the North Slope to Valdez on June 20. But no coastal spills have been reported since tankers began carrying the crude oil south to refineries on the West Coast.

The $7.7 billion pipeline, one of the world's major engineering triumphs, crosses the last remaining expanse of wilderness in the United States, a region of Alaska where a man could travel on foot for weeks without seeing another human.

"The pipeline breaks my heart every time I see it," said Pam Rich, Alaska coordinator for Friends of Earth, one of several organizations that filed suit to block the pipeline's construction. "The continuity of that wilderness tract has been broken," she said.

Not only has the pipeline brought a measure of human encroachment to the Arctic wilderness, "but it now looks like the caribou are shying away from it," she said.

Special care was taken to provide passages for the caribou to cross the pipeline on their migrations across the tundra. Whether the pipeline will cause caribou populations to decline is unknown at this time.

Evans said reports indicate that an oil glut exists on the West Coast, caused by the influx of Alaska oil. "I think we're seeing the oil going to the wrong place," he said.

The Sierra Club also opposed the pipeline route, arguing that the oil should have been brought down through Canada to link up with pipelines that could have carried it both to the West Coast and Midwest.

James Dean of the Wilderness Society said the environmentalists' battle against the pipeline wasn't entirely futile. He noted that the court agreed with contentions that the original pipeline environmental impact statement was inadaquate, setting a precedent that is still being followed.

Ms. Rich, who prefers that designation, said the controversy forced the oil companies to modify their pipeline design to improve safety and provide greater protection for the landscape.

But it is not simply the pipeline that alarms environmentalists. They are working to require better technology on tankers to prevent collisions or oil spills. And they see the newly built road which parallels the pipeline as spelling the doom of Alaska's Arctic wilderness.

Previously inaccessible except by plane or by foot, the road is expected eventually to open up the north.

Logistics problems in north subject for SPE conference

DENVER, Colo. — The Society of Petroleum Engineers of AIME will hold a conference Oct. 9-12 in Denver.

A spokesman for the organization said problems brought on by the bitter weather conditions and isolation of the vast Arctic regions pose unique problems to the engineer / Artic regions in the search for oil and gas will be one of the meeting topics.

Several papers on the conference's extensive 2DG-paper technical program will focus on challenges unique to extraction of energy supplies in the hostile Arctic environment.

The enormous logistics problems encountered in setting up production facilities at the far north location of Prudhoe Bay is the subject of a paper authored by James A. Heimer and L. A. Bryan, Exxon Co.USA, and J. D. Weeks, Atlantic Richfield Co.

"The Prudhoe Bay area is actually an Arctic desert receiving less than 6 inches of rain each year, mostly in the form of snow in late summer and early winter. The summer temperature rarely exceeds its 40 degree average and 50 degrees below zero is not uncommon in winter," the authors state.

Amos C. Mathews, executive vice president of Alaskan Arctic Gas Study Co., will address the subject of natural gas pipelines in the permanetly frozen ground of the Artic. He will emphasize the benefits of studying the efforts of those who have successfully worked throughout the Arctic winters in the past.

"Dealing with permafrost requires use of special techniques which have been learned through practical experience over the last 50 years," Mathews said. "Even today engineers are expanding and refining these techniques to enable us to treat more precisely and economically what to most of us is still a strange and difficult substance."

The conventional chilled pipeline, he will explain, explain, was chosen by a consortium of 16 major Canadian and American producers and gas transmission and distribution companies to transport gas energy from sites at Prudhoe Bay and Mackenzie Delta over a variety of other possible modes of transportation: LNG tankers, airplanes, submarines and unit trains; high voltage direct current electrical transmission; and methanal and dense phase pipelines. The selection was based on three major criteria: environmental effect, timeliness and transportation cost.

Overcoming difficulties in construction planning is a major factor cited. Men and machines must be protected from the Arctic's extreme weather; during the winter months of November through January, the Slope experiences continuous darkness.

James Heimer will deliver the paper, "Logistics Problems in Developing Remote Oil Fields — A Case History from Prudhoe By," Oct. 11 in one of 43 technical sessions.

Mathews' presentation, "Natural Gas Pipeline Design and Construction in Permafrost and Discontinuous Permefrost," is scheduled for Oct. 12.

Approximately 5,000 engineers, scientists and managers are expected to attend the four-day 52nd Annual Meeting of the society.

Eddy test potentials

Gulf Oil Corp. No. 1-WI North Shugart Deep Unit, Eddy County, N.M., undesignated project, ⅝ mile south of the firm's No. 1-EM Littlefield-Federal Communitized, undesignated dual Atoka and Morrow pay opener in the Shugart, North area, finaled for a calculated, absolute open flow potential of 5.455 million cubic feet of dry gas per day, from the Morrow.

The well finaled through perforations at 11,679-11,684 feet. No treatment has been reported.

Location is 660 feet from north and 2,180 feet from east lines of section 29-18s-31e, eight miles southeast of Loco Hills.

The discovery finaled last April from the Morrow for a calculated, absolute open flow of 14.9 million cubic feet of gas daily, through Morrow perforations at 11,569-11,732 Feet.

Scurry gets reef project

A. J. Vogel, Inc., Midland, plans No. 2 Holbrook-Longbotham as a ⅝-mile northwest stepout to the Tri-Rue (reef) field of Scurry County, five miles southwest of Snyder.

It has a projected bottom depth of 7,000 feet, and spots 1,550 feet from north and 1,200 feet from west lines of section 170, block 37, H&TC survey.

Michell Energy hits bay field fault block

HOUSTON — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. has announced a significant new fault block and deeper discovery in its Mesquite Bay field drilling program.

The well, No. 1-19 State Tract, contains 244 feet of net pay in 14 reservoirs, with a possible additional 62 feet in other zones. The well will be dually completed in two of the reservoirs and is expected to produce 4 million cubic feet of gas and 580 barrels of condensate per day.

The company also announced:

— Because of information developed in connection with the discovery, the pay zones of No. 2-13 State Tract have been approximately tripled. The originally-announced 72 feet of net probable gas pay have been increased to 225 net feet, and the net possible pay has been increased from 33 to 95 feet.

— A well is being drilled on State Tract 18 — 3,000 feet southeast of No. 2-13 State Tract — but no tests have been made to date.

The newly-completed No. 1-19 State Tract, 2,000 feet northeast of No. 2-13, flowed at a daily rate of 2 million cubic feet of gas and 316 barrels of condensate on a 12/64-inch choke through Middle Frio perforations from 11,747 to 11,776 feet. Flowing tubing pressure was 5,900 pounds.

The upper zone flowed at a rate of 1.9 million cubic feet of gas and 264 barrels of condensate per day on an 8/64-inch choke through Upper Frio perforations between 10,318 and 10,334 feet. Flowing tubing pressure was 3,310 pounds. Additional zones remain to be tested.

Fluor Ocean dealing for first superport

LOS ANGELES, Calif. — Fluor Corp. has announced its subsidiary, Fluor Ocean Services, Inc., has received a letter of intent from LOOP. Inc., to provide project engineering and construction management services for the nation's first supertanker deepwater port.

The multimillion-dollar termimal, to be built off the coast of Louisiana, is a joint project of Shell, Texaco, Marathon, Murphy and Ashland oil companies. FOS will be responsible for the marine portion of the project, the installed value of which is expected to total approximately $150 million.

Engineering on the project will be performed in Fluor Ocean Services' offices in Houston. Construction is scheduled to begin in early 1979, with completion in 1980.

The terminal will be capable of handling tankers up to 700,000 deadweight ton capacity and offloading oil at an approximate average of 1.4 million barrels per day.

Marine facilities will include: three single-point mooring bouys; a very larqe (20-pile) metering and pumping platform; a smaller (four-pile) controLs and crew quarters platform; a 21-mile submarine pipeline 48 inches in diameter; and three submarine pipelines, one and one-half miles long, and 56 inches in diameter.

Oil received at the terminal will be transported by pipeline to underground salt domes in Lafourche Parish, Louisiana, where it will be stored for later distribution to refineries in the Midwest and Gulf Coast.

The purpose of the deepwater port, according to a LOOP spokesman, is to allow transportation cost savings, as well as reduce the probability of accidents in transporting and unloading oil.

A smaller number of larger tankers would eliminate many of the bottlenecks and risks of berthing and discharging tankers in traditional ports, as well as reduce port traffic.

Arrest may impair fair election chance

The Washington Post

BANGKOK — By arresting former Prime Minister Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto, the Pakistan army has seriously impaired the chances for fair elections next month and has cast doubt on the military establishment's claimed intentions to reestablish democratic government.

The arrest at Bhutto's suburban Karachi home before dawn Saturday may have set the stage for a permanent military takeover.

Army strongman Gen. Zia Ul-Haq, who overthrew Bhutto in a bloodless coup two months ago, has promised to hold a rerun of last March's general elections on Oct. 18. But with Bhutto confined in connection with a murder and other allegations, there will be no real contest if the elections take place.

The virtual certainty of victory by the nine-party Pakistan National Alliance, whose four months of nationwide rioting presaged the coup, seems sure to lead to further upheaval.

PNA leaders are a loosely amalgamated collection of centrists and rightists who set long-standing differences aside in order to remove Bhutto, a nominal Socialist.

With the 49-year-old former premier out of the way, the cement that bound the nine leaders together is liable to turn to water, possibly even before the elections. This would effectively leave Pakistan, a nation of 71 million whose sole cause for being is the Muslim religion, without civilian leadership.

A few weeks ago a highly regarded Pakistani political scientist said in Rawalpindi that the army was fully aware of this. Specifically, several of the army's corps commanders planned to capitalize on the alliance's weakness so that they could then appear to come to the rescue of the country, he claimed.

"The PNA is not a governing coalition," this expert hypothesized. "The result of their victory will be a short period, perhaps six months, of grave instability. The the army will move in and stay put."

It was essential to this plan, according to the political scientist, that the army seize power in July and establish itself as a "legitimate arbiter."

"Then," he said, "when the times comes that the PNA government collapses, the army will be able to make its move and say with conviction 'you see, we gave the politicians the opportunity to run the country, but they made a hash of it. We have no choice but to take over if we are to save the nation.'"

Such a scenario would seem to be contrary to Zia's publicly stated views. Speaking to journalists in Rawalpindi just three days ago, the deeply religious officer said that if the army had to intervene again, "Pakistan is finished. Take it from me, if there is a fourth martial law, Pakistan is finished."

The country, which was carved out of India by the departing British rulers in 1947 to make a homeland for Muslims of the subcontinent, first fell under military control in 1958 when the late Field Marshal Ayoub Khan seized power.

In 1969 Gen. Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan took over. Yahya fell in disgrace in 1972 when India intervened in a civil war in East Pakistan and helped to create the independent state of Bangladesh.

Bhutto then came to power and established a semblance of democratic rule, only to be overthrown by Zia after the PNA claimed the elections earlier this year had been massively rigged.

Zia, respected by most Pakistanis as a well-meaning soldier, told the newsmen that once a new National Assembly is formed following the promised elections, he would appear before the legislators and tell them.

Grace, ERDA sign agreement on amonia deal

NEW YORK - W. R. Grace & Co. and the Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) signed an agreement for a program leading to the commercial manufacture of ammonia from coal. Total cost of the program will be about $350 million and calls for ERDA to fund approximately 47 percent of the program with the remaining $185 million to cone from private enterprise.

Phase I of the program, to commence immediately and take approximately two years to complete, calls for a conceptual design and engineering of a synthesis gas demonstration plant for the conversion of coal to a synthesis gas which in turn would be used to produce ammonia for agriculturai fertilizers. Phase I, estimated to cost over $10 million, will include a feasiblity study of the economic and technical viability of the project. From this study both Grace and ERDA will determine whether to continue with the later phases which would include construction and operation of the plant as a demonstration facility. Phase I will also include the preparation of an environmental impact study. The synthesis gas demonstration plant will use approximately 2,000 tons of coal per day to produce 1,200 tons of ammonia per day.

Ebasco Services, Inc., of New York engineers and constructors of power plants and other energy systems, is expected to be the principal subcontractor on the project responsible for design, engineering and construction management. For production of the synthesis gas, Grace has selected the Texaco Coal Gasification Process, which will be operated under license from Texaco Development Corp., a subsidiary of Texaco In.

Grace, a leading producer of ammonia, brings to the project more than 20 years of experience in operating gasification facilities and ammonia plants of various types end sizes. It is presently bring on-stream two conventional-type 1,200 ton-per-day ammonia plants—one in Woodward, Okla. and the other on the Caribbean Island of Trinidad. Grace also has a substantial natural resource business in the U'S. with growing assets in coal, oil and natural gas.

The agreement for this joint project of private enterprise and the government was completed with the assistance of the Kentucky Center for Energy Research in Lexington, Ky. and current plans are to locate the proposed coal-based ammonia plant in Western Kentucky. The location affords ready access to coal for both feedstocks and fuel, an established ammonia market and all required modes of transportation. Employment for the project during the construction and preoperating phases is estimated to peak at more than 1,000. The plant is proposed to come on-stream by mid-1982 with an estimated employment of more than 150.

The plant will be designed to demonstrate the gasification of high sulfur aggomerating coal. All applicable local, state and federal environmental requirements will be incorporated in the plant design.

Ammonia is the basic source of nitrogen nutrient in fertilizers. Presently, the U.S. is almost completely dependent upon natural gas to make ammonia. National fuel and energy conditions dictate that the ammonia industry and other natural gas-dependent industries will experience a critical period in the next decade when they must sustain their present preduction and meet growth requirements, in the face of high prices and severe curtailments of natural gas supplies.

Portrait of spy acquired

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Portrait Gallery, a branch of the Smithsonian Institution, has acquired what Marvin Sadik, director, says is the only known life portrait of Revolutionary War hero Enoch Crosby, master spy.

The portrait, which was done by the studio of Samuel Waldo and William Jewett, was commissioned by John R. Peters of New York and painted in 1830. It belonged to Peters' descendants before passing into the hands of the gallery.

Crosby, a hero in his own time, was considered one of the most skillful spies in the revolution. He worked at times directly with George Washington. Crosby was also the model for James Fenimore Cooper's novel, "The Spy."

Traffic death toll better than usual

By The Associated Press

While Labor Day weekend traffic deaths failed to reach projected levels, the Texas violent death toll was swollen by a five-fatality boat accident and several drownings.

The Department of Public Safety predicted that 44 persons would die during the three-day weekend, but early today the traffic toll stood at 28. A total of 46 persons died violently, however, as six drownings had been recorded.

"We're delighted that the traffic toll ran lighter," said DPS spokesman Jim Robinson, who pointed out that 53 persons were killed in the three-day Labor Day weekend last year.

"Strangely enough, traffic deaths last year were down, except during the holidays. This year, traffic deaths are up 6-7 per cent, but holiday deaths have been much lower," added Robinson. "Apparently, motorists are being more careful on the holidays this year."

Seven motorcyclists were killed in holiday accidents, however. Of those, the DPS said at least four wore no helmets on the first weekend since a new law took effect, making helmets optional for Texas cyclists over 18.

"We have to believe that fewer would have died if they had been wearing helmets," said one DPS spokesman.

The death count began Friday evening and ended at midnight Monday.

The Los Angeles Times

PASADENA, Calif. — Within a few hours after casting off from its Cape Canaveral quay early Monday morning, the Voyager 1 spacecraft had correctly rigged all its booms and antennae and set a course for the planet Jupiter, some 620 million miles and 18 months distant.

Unlike its twin probe, Voyager 2, which was launched from Cape Canaveral a little more than two weeks ago, Voyager 1 encountered no problems after being launched by its Titan 3-Centaur rocket. Voyager 2 had difficulty unfurling one of its booms and with the functioning of its stabilization system, although these problems appear to be cleared up now.

As for Voyager 1, a National Eronautics and Space Administration spokesman in Florida, site of Cape Canaveral, said that "everything looks good."

The unmanned probe was on its way to Jupiter at a speed of 32,381 miles per hour a little more than an hour after its early morning launch. And then, like a schooner setting sail, the Voyager 1 began to set out its various booms and antennae.

One boom, 43 feet long, holds two magnetometers which will measure the magnetic fields surrounding Jupiter and the next planetary port-of-call after that, Saturn. A second boom, 7 1-2 feet long, supports television cameras and a battery of sophisticated scientific instruments. A third boom, 10 feet long, is the spare for the Voyager's three nuclear-powered electrical generators.

In addition to these booms, there are two 33-foot-long whip antennae and a 12-foot diameter communications disk antenna. The whip antennae, for a radio astronomy experiment, will detect radio waves emitted by the planets.

"We have confirmation that (all) booms are fully deployed with everything locked in place," the space agency spokesman said.

That report was received with satisfaction at the Voyager mission control center inside the Jet Propulsion Laboratory here. According to Voyager systems engineer Ron Draper, flight controllers have determined that the troublesome science boom on Voyager 2 has extended to within a small fraction of a degree of what it should.

Although it may not be fully out and locked, as the comparable boom on Voyager 1 is, Draper said that it is very doubtful the equipment will flop around during the course of the years-long mission. He said there is more than enough outward force being exerted by the deployment springs attached to the boom to resist any inward movement by the instruments on the end of the boom.

Voyager 2 at the moment has a 9 million mile lead on Voyager 1. Voyager 1, however, has been programmed to fly a flatter, more direct path to Jupiter than the path being followed by Voyager 2 and so will arrive at Jupiter four months before its twin.

Meany charges labor target of Nazi-like extremist acts

By HELEN DEWAR
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — AFL-CIO President George Meany charged Monday that organized labor is the target of a multimillion-dollar extremist campaign that can be compared to the rise of Nazism in prewar Germany.

In a strongly worded Labor Day address on CBS radio, the 83-year-old labor chief said extremism is on the rise in America, and "its No. 1 target is the American labor movement." Meany's assault on what he called the "hate merchants of the '70s" came at what could be a crucial juncture for organized labor, whose foothold in the American work force is slipping at a time when it is pushing in Congress — with indifferent results — for its most ambitious legislative agenda in years.

Last week the Labor Department reported that American membership in labor unions dropped by nearly 4 per cent during the last two years, it first decline since the early 1960s.

Moreover, a strong and well-coordinated business lobby has emerged on Capitol Hill to threaten labor's legislative program, including the administration-backed plan for overhaul of the nation's labor laws to make it easier for unions or organize and to win contracts.

Meany said "extremists are at it again" in the fight over labor-law revisions and accused them of trying "to once again manipulate public opinion."

Pakistani police begin to interrogate Bhutto

The Los Angeles Times

LAHORE, Pakistan — Police began their interrogation of former Prime Minister Zulfikar ali Bhutto, who is accused of ordering the murder of a political opponent.

The 49-year-old Bhutto, who had headed Pakistan's government for six years before he was deposed this summer in a bloodless coup, will remain in police custody at least until Saturday.

At that time, his lawyers are scheduled to apply for bail. The police can request Bhutto remain in custody because they need more time to question him.

Bhutto, arrested on Saturday at his Karachi home and then brought to Lahore, is in detention in a comfortable bungalow in the military base here. He reportedly is under military guard.

The generals ousted Bhutto July 5, following months of political turmoil to protest Bhutto's alleged rigging of national elections last March.

Observers say Bhutto's party workers are "depressed and demoralized." The guessing here is that his supporters will be spending a lot of time and money on Bhutto's legal defense.

New elections have been scheduled for October 18, there's no indication thus far that Bhutto's arrest will change that.

Farmers protest new 'Depression'

HILLSBORO, Tex. (AP) — "If you don't like farmers, don't talk with your mouth full," read the sign on one of the massive tractors that led a Labor Day farmer's protest procession along an Interstate 35 access road.

About 75 farmers and their wives abandoned their farms Monday and drove their tractors, pickup trucks and cars in the four-hour, 30-mile procession to protest "the worst farm year since the Depression."

Similar protests were mounted last month by North Texas wheat farmers, who mailed President Carter boxes of wheat on which they claim to be losing money.

Some Texas cotton producers have also mailed Carter small bales of cotton, with an attached note telling the President that it could be the last bale he sees unless the government offers farmers some relief.

Summer 'shot' by Labor Day

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — On this day after Labor Day it's as if the summer were shot dead, executed by the same gun that begins the mad race to get everything done that should have been done the day before yesterday or earlier.

School is in, new cars are out, new TV shows are on. The calendar is loaded with big plans, conventions, sales promotions, ad campaigns, budget reviews.

Football nudges baseball. Hayfever blows into town. Congress returns. Elections begin. It's far too much for a nervous system that had lain becalmed all summer and is now fighting to keep from the rocks.

It is a time of conflict. A time when the guilty boss, trying to make up for all the time lost as he, and assumedly you, idled through the summer, clashes head-on with the subordinate determined to get a pay raise.

The stock market seems to react too. If averages rise Tuesday through Friday of this week the market probably will be higher for the next month, or so you will find in the vast archives of stock market mythology. Beware.

Greeting the new season will be a spate of statistics that should get you in the mood or, you might say, marching to the numbers again.

The Federal Reserve today will tell us all about consumer credit, which everyone is concerned about. Are we spending ourselves into a crisis? Some interpreters of those statistics will tell you we are.

Through the courtesy of the same sponsor, the Fed, we will also learn the condition of the big commercial banks, which everyone is concerned about. Some of the interpreters will say the big banks ought to tighten up.

Another house of numbers, the Bureau of Economic Analysis, will present the statistics on plant and equipment investment, which everyone is concerned about. Some of the interpreters will say we're in trouble unless spending rises more.

All this and more. And while there will be good economic news too, it seems that all news of late has been cast by critics in the shape of an ogre, in keeping with the shortening days and the lowering clouds.

Jumping the gun, the United Jersey Bank of Hackensack, N.J., announced prior to the holiday that as of today its prime lending rate is 7.25 per cent instead of 7 per cent.

United Jersey (about $1.2 billion in assets) doesn't hold the leadership role played by the Bank of America (more than $60 billion), but the timing, the eagerness to get itself on record might portend another round of general increases.

Yes, the silence of summer is shattered. Reality is here, the noise begins and most of us are off and running in the dash to next spring, when we can contemplate a little vacation.

Meanwhile, a certain few well organized individuals who have learned to think ahead, and who recognize that the secret of comfort often is in doing things when others aren't, are about to take their off-season vacation at discount rates, far, far from the madness of it all.

Israeli survey tells division

By DON OBERDORFER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Israeli electorate believes peace with the Arabs is impossible without giving up some of the occupied West Bank but is deeply divided on whether Israel should do so, according to a public opinion survey in the Jewish state by New York pollster Louis Harris.

Harris' survey of 1,026 Jewish voters and 150 Arab voters in Israel, conducted in late June and early July, indicated strong backing for Prime Minister Menahem Begin as a national leader but ambivalence and divisions about some of Begin's controversial diplomatic positions.

The survey was financed by Seagrams President Edgar Bronfman, an American Jewish leader, and the results were presented to Begin and senior White House and State Department officials in mid-July.

By 51 to 30 per cent (the rest were undecided), Israeli Jews questioned by Harris considered Begin's tough stand on the West Bank and other foreign policy issues to be "a bargaining position" that can be softened in negotiations rather than a hard and unbending position.

President Carter, Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and other U.S. leaders have pinned their hopes for a Middle East peace on just such a possibility of future flexibility by Begin.

However, their hopes have been shaken in recent weeks as Begin expressed unyielding views in private and in public and as Israel proceeded, over U.S. and Arab objections, to create additional Jewish enclaves in the West Bank.

Along with some of Begin's closest aides and associates, the Israeli public today appears to have become highly pessimistic about prospects for peace.

Harris reported that in 1970 an Israeli majority of more than 2 to 1 believed that "in the next few years, it is likely that Israel will reach a peace agreement with the Arab countries."

In the latest poll, a 2-to-1 Jewish majority said such a peace agreement in the next few years is "unlikely." On this point Israeli Arabs held almost identical views.

The skepticism about Arab intentions, which is an underlying factor in the Israeli position, is clearly portrayed in the Harris survey.

respondents believe that the Arabs would be "really serious" about peace if they declare nonbelligerency to Israel, and only 21 per cent would accept the Arabs as "really serious" if they recognize formally the right of Israel to exist and exchange ambassadors. Israel Arabs overwhelmingly disagreed with that skeptical view.

On West Bank-Palestinian questions, the Harris survey reported these disparate results:

—Fifty-three per cent of the Jewish respondents and 94 per cent of the Arabs said it would be impossible for Israel to obtain a peace settlement while refusing to give up any of the occupied West Bank. (Thirty-six per cent of the Jews said it would be difficult but not impossible.)

—Forty-six per cent of the Jewish voters questioned agreed with Begin's unwillingness to give up any of the West Bank, but 45 per cent disagreed. "Any flat stand over a sustained period of time by Begin that the West Bank is not negotiable will split the country down the middle into the deepest kind of controversy," Harris reported.

—By 60 to 24 per cent Jewish respondents opposed giving back "most" of the West Bank territory to Jordan under an arrangement whereby land necessary for Israeli defense would be a neutral zone jointly occupied by Israeli and Jordanian troops.

Soviets keep cool on talks in terse postponement

By DAN FISHER
The Los Angeles Times

MOSCOW — If the Kremlin plans any major change in its bargaining position in the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, it has not tipped its hand here.

The difference in tone between recent U.S. statements on the subject and those emanating from Moscow was underlined in last Wednesday's announcements of a delay in the next round of negotiations.

The official announcement out of Washington said the two sides wanted additional time to lay the groundwork for a new accord on strategic weapons. It stressed that while "substantial differences remain to be overcome," recent exchanges have resulted in progress and a "better understahding."

In Moscow, by contrast, the official news agency Tass issued a two-sentence announcement that made no mention of either progress or increased understanding.

"A meeting between the foreign minister of the U.S.S.R. and the U.S. secretary of state was scheduled to be held in Vienna Sept. 7-9 to continue negotiations on questions of limitation of strategic arms and other questions of mutual interest for the U.S.S.R. and the United States," Tass said. "It has now been agreed to postpone the meeting to the second half of September when Andrei Gromyko visits Washington in the period of work of the U.N. General Assembly session."

The proposal to delay the talks was initiated by Washington, apparently because of both preoccupation with the Panama Canal accord and the inability of the Administration's negotiating team to agree on a unified bargaining position for the talks with Moscow.

There has been no hint that any new Kremlin proposal could be behind the delay.

Sen. George McGovern (D-S.D.) said after a meeting with Gromyko here last week, "If they have a change of position they didn't indicate it in any way to me."

There is "no indication of any substantial change in the Soviet position," said another source close to the negotiations.

What the Soviet response might be to any new U.S. offer remains to be seen.

"I don't think anyone in Washington has said the United States will stick to its position and expect the other side to move," this source said.

Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev, meanwhile, said in a speech last month, "If a good initiative appears anywhere, we are always ready to respond to it."

Gromyko sounded a similar note in his meeting with McGovern.

Washington Post editor killed

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Marion Clark, 34, the editor of The Washington Post Sunday magazine, Potomac, was killed Sunday when she accidentally walked into the propeller of an airplane at an airport in Michigan.

The accident occured about 6:30 p.m. at the Iosco County airport in East Tawas, Mich., according to the county sheriff's department.

Officials said the airplane, a privately-owned, single-engine craft in which Miss Clark had been a passenger, had taxied to gas pumps and come to a stop when Miss Clark emerged.

After leaving the plane "at a fast walk," according to the sheriff's department report, she walked into the airplane's propeller while the blade was still moving.

Friends said Miss Clark's family had a summer home near the airport in northern Michigan.

In addition to serving as editor of Potomac, Miss Clark won honors as a reporter.

The Los Angeles Times

ATHENS — For the first time since Greece pulled out of the military side of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in 1974, Greek units will participate in a NATO maneuver later this month.

The move, discreetly played down by a Greek government sensitive to public opinion, is being hailed by outside observers as a major step toward restoring NATO's southern flank.

Both Greek and Turkish military units will take part in the exercise, called "Display Determination," and involving all the NATO Mediterranean powers including the United States and Great Britain. To make it possible, NATO has manipulated its command structure to overcome local sensitivities, specifically Greek-Turk enmity and suspicion.

Greece withdrew from the military wing of the alliance in the summer of 1974, following the Turkish invasion of Cyprus. The Greeks blamed NATO, and specifically the United States for not preventing the Turkish invasion.

Since then, the conservative government of Premier Constantine Karamanlis has moved slowly but gradually to restore old ties. A new defense agreement with the United States was initialled recently which makes largely cosmetic changes in the status of U.S. forces here.

To get the Greeks back into the NATO military structure is a more delicate matter. The question is closely tied to relations with Turkey, and to the solution of both the Cyprus problem and disputes over the Aegean Sea which separates the two countries.

Greek participation in "Display Determination," which starts in late September, was made possible by a break with NATO tradition. Direction of the exercise by past tradition, would have been handled out of NATO's regional headquarters in Izmir, Turkey. But it has been taken over by NATO's CINC South.

Restaruant manager ambushed

MUSKOGEE, Okla. (AP) — The manager of a drive-in restaurant was shot and killed here Monday in what authorities described as an "execution-type" slaying by an armed robber.

Police identified the victim as Bobby Bearfield, 33, who moved to Muskogee two weeks ago from San Angelo, Tex., to operate the business, which opened one week ago.

Bearfield had been shot once in the back of the head by a small caliber weapon.

His body was discovered at 8:30 a.m. by Karen Story, a store employe. Officers said the killing had apparently occurred only minutes before.

Detective John Lauderdale said that Bearfield apparently was shot after being forced to open a safe.

Authorities said about $1,400 was taken.

AT WIT'S END

Advice goes to Miss Chalkdust

By ERMA BOMBECK

One of the most personal experiences I've shared with readers over the past 13 years was the occasion of sending my last child to school.

Boy, how I had lusted for that day. I was going to have all my stomach muscles back by lunch, go to the bathroom without locking the door, pull the shades and sing duets with Barbra Streisand, and burn my maternity clothes. (The statute of limitations had run out and I had won!)

But there was no exhilaration in my victory, watching "the baby" sit pathetically at the curb. I thought of the woman he was going to — Miss Chalkdust, or whatever. And I wrote "Miss Chalkdust, give him patience and gentleness. Please have a soft lap and a warm smile. I submit to your tender, loving care my son who is a little shy and a lot stubborn. Who can't cope yet with zippers that stick or buttons on sweaters that don't come out even. One who makes his 5s sideways and doesn't know B-O-Y-S from G-I-R-L-S on the door. I may sue you for alienation of affection but for the moment, God bless you."

Those small, pathetic, scared children who are sitting out on the curbs this morning for the first time don't have their own column. If they did, they might confess that they didn't have breakfast this morning because they couldn't swallow. They didn't sleep well last night. They're afraid. Afraid they'll get lost. Afraid they'll goof up. Afraid they'll look different. Afraid they'll be called upon. Afraid they won't find the straw for their milk. Afraid they'll lose their lunch money. Afraid they won't get to the restroom on time — or ever. Afraid someone will laugh at their name. Afraid they won't find a friend. Afraid the wind will blow their papers out of their hands. Afraid of you.

One of the most poignant insights into a child's venture into education comes from a book written by Albert Cullum called "The Geranium On The Window Sill Just Died But Teacher You Went Right On." It deals with an insensitivity of the feelings of children and what they are going through. This is one of my favorites.

"I have a messy desk,
I have milk money that rolls,
I have a lazy pencil,
a book that won't open,
a mouth that whispers.
I have a zipper that doesn't want to,
homework that won't work,
and a hand that throws crayons.
I have a shirt that's out,
shoelaces that won't tie.
And sometimes I wet my pants —
but never on purpose."

Miss Chalkdust . . . this is a day for all the love you have to give.

DEAR ABBY

'Nice' society keeps kids uninformed

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The letter about whether to have a boy babysitter caught my eye because of an experience we had years ago.

When our daughter was 3 and our son was 5, we had a nice, shy neighbor boy stay with them occasionally. When the 5-year-old told us about some of the funny games the sitter was trying to play with our daughter, we reported the incident to the sitter's parents and decided "no more boy sitter."

Today I would amend that decision: no more boy sitters unless I knew the family well enough to be assured that their attitude toward early sex education was sufficiently enlightened, and that they provided their kids with the information they asked for.

Our boy sitter did nothing violent; his transgression was the obvious result of a natural curiosity that had been consistently thwarted at home and sadly neglected at school.

Now, 17 years after that incident, I read in the papers about pregnant 12 and 13-year-old girls who don't know what "contraception" means, and teenage boys who accidentally became fathers. And I think that mothers should worry less about the danger of having a boy sitter and more about the backward attitude of the large and powerful "nice" segment of our society. This group seems hell-bent on keeping kids dangerously curious and uninformed even as they stand in the midst of wall-to-wall centerfolds.

What our kids don't know about responsible sex and parenthood is hurting us all.—CONCERNED PARENT

DEAR CONCERNED: Your concern about keeping children "dangerously curious" and uninformed is valid. But curious and uninformed sitters come in two sexes, and some GIRL sitters sometimes try to play funny games with little boys.

DEAR ABBY: A fine young bachelor has recently joined the firm where I am employed. I am not a matchmaker, but I know an outstanding single lady I think he would like. I have a feeling these two would find a lot in common, and I would like to get them together. How do I go about it without being too obvious?

Should I tell him I know a nice woman, and then wait for him to offer to take her out? That seems rather presumptuous, and I'm afraid it might make the woman appear too available. Any suggestions?—MRS. IN-BETWEEN

DEAR MRS.: Arrange an informal evening at your home and invite them separately. (The more people you invite, the less "obvious" you'll be.) And if they have as much in common as you think they have, they'll "discover" each other.

(P.S. One cardinal rule for matchmakers: Don't arrange a match unless you think you're doing them BOTH a favor.)

DEAR ABBY: I certainly hope you or your readers can help me with my problem. Is there such a group as "Spenders Anonymous" for "Clothes-aholics?" If not, I would be interested in starting a local chapter.

We are a lower middle-income family. I started working recently to help with family finances, but all I do is shop! I am compulsive about buying clothes, and I can't seem to control myself.

Please help me. I am desperate.—McKINNEY, TEX.

DEAR MC KINNEY: If there is such a group, I'll surely hear about it and let you know. If not, there ought to be.

Everyone has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply, write to ABBY in care of this newspaper. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

Pharmacist has "tried them all..." ...discovers weight control program that really works!

Pharmacist Dan Smith of Burger's Drug Store in St. Charles, Illinois is a NaturSlim "believer" after losing 18 pounds in just two weeks. After hearing so much about the NaturSlim program from customers and seeing the excellent results they were having, Dan decided to try it himself.
"In my many years as a pharmacist, I've seen and tried numerous weight-loss plans, but none have worked as well for me as NaturSlim. And NaturSlim is very nutritional too!"
After three months, Dan has not regained any of the lost pounds either, as so often happens when "rebounding" from starvation diet plans. He maintains his weight by taking NaturSlim once daily . . . and eating normally otherwise.
Dan says, "It was surprisingly easy, too! I didn't have to attend any weigh-ins, starve myself or do any special exercises."
With the NaturSlim program, there are no shots, drugs or long lists of forbidden foods. In fact, you are encouraged to eat a normal, well-balanced dinner every day.
The next time you are in the St. Charles area, stop by Burger's Drugs and see Dan yourself. He'll tell you personally what he thinks about NaturSlim!

Parity ration again discussed

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — An old formula called the farm parity ratio is becoming a topic of concern among Carter administration farm officials these days, just as it has for each administration from time to time since the 1930s.

Last week, the Agriculture Department reported on a monthly listing of agricultural prices that the parity ratio on Aug. 15 dropped to 64 per cent from 65 on July 15. A year ago it was 71 per cent.

According to USDA records, the mid-August reading was the lowest for the ratio since it was 55 per cent in March 1933 in the depths of the nation's worst economic depression. Further, it was the lowest last month since USDA began keeping records on the indicator. The second lowest was 58 per cent in December 1932, just before it plummeted to 55 the following March.

The parity ratio roughly expresses how farmers are faring in terms of purchasing power. Theoretically, if the ratio is at 100 per cent farmers have the same purchasing power they had in 1910-14 when economists considered that farm prices and expenses were fairly well in balance.

Many modern farm economists discount the parity standard as outmoded in terms of expressing true financial wellbeing or buying power related to the 1910-14 base period. But on a shorter-term basis, the formula has its merits and is likely to have its advocates for years to come.

In fact, some federal farm programs still are linked to the parity formula, including price supports for milk, tobacco and some other commodities.

Congress ordered the USDA in 1938 to publish regularly the parity ratio for farm commodities and the parity prices for each. Thus, each month the department announces the composite parity ratio for the allcommodity list and individual dollar figures showing how much a farmer would have had to get for crops and livestock to give him the same — 100 per cent — buying power his predecessors had in 1910-14.

For example, the actual average price farmers nationally received for wheat on Aug. 15 was $2.20 a bushel, according to the USDA report. The full parity price or 100 per cent was $5.03 a bushel. Thus, farmers actually received 40 per cent of parity for their wheat.

Department experts say the parity ratio is not an indicator of farm income but that it is sort of a batting average involving prices, expenses and other factors. It is interesting to note, that in recent years when farm income was up the parity ratio also was relatively high. Conversely, when the ratio is down, as it is now, farm income sags.

In 1973, farmers' net income soared to a record of $29.9 billion from $17.8 billion in 1972. The average for the parity ratio over all of 1973 was 91 per cent, the highest since it was 92 per cent in 1953 during the inflation rise of the Korean war. The last time it averaged 100 per cent was in 1952.

But in 1974, net farm income began dropping and that year totaled $27.8 billion. The parity ratio was 86 per cent. Net income dropped further to $22.7 billion in 1975 and the ratio was 76 per cent.

Last year, according to USDA, farm income dropped further to $21.9 billion and the parity ratio averaged 71 per cent. This year's net farm income is currently projected at $19.3 billion, the lowest since 1972, and the ratio also will be down further.

Thus, although the correlation is not exact, the parity ratio does express from year to year a shorthand figure which some people still believe is a valid way of quickly telling how farmers are doing.

Decline in use of flour reversed

By The Associated Press

The high prices of 1973 and 1974 which prompted people to cut down the use of convenience foods have left a legacy in the form of continued interest in baked goods and other "do-it-from-scratch" types of food.

Government statistics show that per capita consumption of wheat flour in the United States declined steadily from 118 pounds in 160 to 106 pounds in 1974. The trend was reversed in 1975, however, and estimated per capita consumption of wheat flour for 1976 was 111 pounds.

Not all of the increase, of course, is due to more homebaked cakes and breads. A spokesman for the Wheat Flour Institute pointed out that Americans are eating more and more hamburgers every year. More hamburgers means more buns. And more buns means more wheat flour.

It is too soon to tell what the picture for 1977 will show. But some industry sources predict steady interest in home baking and consumers will find that they can save money and time if they learn what types of flours are available and which ones do what.

There are three parts to a kernel of wheat. The inner part, or endosperm, is the part which is ground to make white flour which accounts for more than 90 per cent of the flour milled in the United States.

The other two parts are the bran or outer layer and the germ — the part which would sprout. The bran and the germ are removed from white flour, but are left in whole wheat flour. They also are sold separately, usually in breakfast cereals.

Enriched white flour contains vitamins, iron and sometimes calcium which are added to replace nutrients lost when the bran is removed in processing. Laws in 36 states require that all white flour be enriched.

Bleached flour contains an oxidizing agent which is designed to whiten the flour and improve its baking quality. Food and Drug Administration standards require that a flour be labeled as "bleached" if any oxidizing agent has been used.

Here is a guide to some common types of flour on the market:

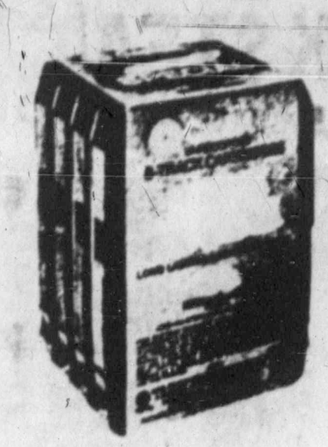

—All-purpose or family flour, available in bleached and unbleached varieties. A blend of hard and soft wheats milled for home use in a variety of products including yeast breads, quick breads, cakes, cookies and pastries.

—Cake flour. A finely ground flour made from low-protein soft wheat. It is particularly suitable for baking cakes and pastries which require light, fluffy flour. It is not suitable for baking yeast-raised breads.

—Hard-wheat or bread flour. This is milled from hard, high-protein wheat. It is used chiefly in commercial bread production where doughs must withstand machine handling.

—Self-rising flour. This is all-purpose flour with added salt and leavening agents — sodium bicarbonate and one or more acid-reacting substances. This type of flour should not be used for baking yeast-raised products.

—Quick or instant-blending flour. A granular flour which disperses easily, even in cold liquids, and requires no sifting. It does not pack down in the package. It may be used in almost all recipes in place of regular flour. It offers convenience, but is usually more expensive.

Industrialist's life threatened by caller

COLOGNE, West Germany (AP) — Telephone messages threatened the execution today of a West German industrialist kidnaped in a street ambush in which his chauffeur and three bodyguards were killed.

Hanns Martin Schleyer, head of the national associations of industries and of employers, was abducted Monday at a Cologne intersection as he was being driven home from his office in a two-car convoy. Police said he was carried off by five young men but they had found no trace of them.

It was the third terrorist attack on a prominent West German in five months and the second on a business leader in less than six weeks.

A telephone call to the Munich bureau of the newspaper Bild Zeitung said Schleyer would be executed at 5:15 p.m. today (12:15 p.m. EDT) unless the government freed Andreas Baader, the leader of the Baader-Meinhof gang of urban terrorists, and his associates in the Stammheim prison in Stuttgart.

Two news agencies reported receiving similar calls from a terrorist group called the Red Army Faction.

Officials said it was not known whether the calls were authentic, but they were being investigated.

Justice Minister Hans-Jochen Vogel said a letter was found in the Volkswagen microbus used by the kidnapers and then abandoned. But he refused to disclose the contents.

"The bloody provocation in Cologne is directed against all of us," Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said in a special television appearance.

"We have to remain levelheaded. Terrorism in the long run doesn't have a chance because the will of the entire nation is pitted against it."

He called on the public to help in the hunt for the terrorists.

The kidnaping of Schleyer apparently was a sequel to the murder of banker Juergen Ponto in Frankfurt on July 30 and the assassination on April 7 of Chief Federal Prosecutor Siegfried Buback, who directed the successful prosecution of Baader and two associates.

After the slaying of Ponto, a telephone call to a news agency in Bonn said "more members of the ruling class will be executed" unless "all political prisoners of war" were released.

Schleyer, a 62-year-old director of the Daimler-Benz automobile company, became head of the West German equivalent of the National Association of Manufacturers last year. As a frequent television spokesman for business and industry, he was one of the country's best known industrialists and an obvious target for terrorists. Interior Minister Werner Maihofer told reporters protection for him had been increased two weeks ago.

A total of 21 persons have been killed in terrorist attacks in West Germany in 5½ years. Most of the killings have been blamed on the Baader-Meinhof Gang and its disciples.

Criminal identification encouraged in report

By LOIS TIMNICK
The Los Angeles Times

Identifying "intensive" habitual criminals early and locking them up during their most active years might do more to reduce crime than any rehabilitation or prevention efforts, a Rand Corp. study released Monday suggests.

The majority of habitual felons studied said that nothing — not harsher treatment in prison, the possibility of a longer sentence, stricter parole supervision nor the certainty of being caught — would have prevented their return to crime.

Of the few who felt their course could have been changed, the certainty of being caught was cited as the most influential deterrent.

One criminal, upon release from prison, headed straight for his old neighborhood to rob a liquor store: "I wanted to make sure I still had it in me. It's like getting back up on a horse after you've been thrown off. I wanted to show myself that I wasn't scared."

For most, crime was the occupation of choice: "I wasn't equipped to handle the outside world," another explained. "I always felt really uncomfortable with straight people.

"I remember working in a dry cleaners once — I had nothing in common with those people. I was anxious to get back with my own kind. I deliberately got myself busted when things got too bad. I'd go into the joint (jail); I knew how to function there. Outside, I didn't know what my role was; I was a hustler, robber and junkie. Those things are lifestyles, not just a category that appears on a rap sheet."

The Rand study focuses on the criminal careers of 49 inmates serving time in California for armed robbery. All had extensive records. One-third were identified as professional "intensive" criminals who, interviews revealed, had committed 10 times as many crimes as their amateur "intermittent" counterparts who engaged in infrequent but reckless criminal activity.

"Unfortunately there is a poor correlation between a criminal's actual behavior and his arrest record," said Joan Petersilia, who headed the research team. "A meager arrest record often disguises a very active and dangerous criminal."

The pros, the study found, were five times less likely to be arrested and convicted as the amateurs.

Currently, older criminals with long records are sentenced harshly. The problem for criminal justice authorities is to separate the pros from the amateurs early enough to incapacitate them by imprisoning them through their most active phases, the study said. Criminal activity, this and other studies have shown, tends to decline with age.

The report recommends that better use be made of the "crime-clearance" information police obtain in following up an arrest. This refers to information linking the suspect to other crimes besides the one he is charged with — confessions similarity of operation, fingerprints, etc. — used by police to close various cases.

This is not routinely included when police transfer the charge to the proesecutor's office for the filing of a formal complaint. Charges other than the strongest one or two are usually dropped in return for a guilty plea, anyhow, the report says, and even if not dropped, multiple convictions often don't increase the sentence.

"A more systematic attempt to investigate and legally prove additional counts would undoubtedly help distinguish the intensives among habitual offenders," the report says.

Another aid in identifying the most serious offenders would be the use of a suspect's record of juvenile arrests and institutional commitments, the report says.

The truth will out

Leon Jaworski's recent appearance before the House Ethics Committee inspires the hope that the truth will come out about the alleged South Korean influence-buying scheme.

Mr. Jaworzki himself was hopeful: "It is my firm conviction that the pertinent facts will ultimately come to light." He also was pre-monitory: "I would advise those who may believe that the investigation will blow over or prove fruitless to take a closer look."

This tone of warning, sustained by references to "Watergate-type" efforts to cover up the truth, confirms the suspicion now widespread: that the House not only is tainted with impropriety and perhaps even criminality, but also is resisting admitting either.

This situation is helped not at all by the apparent stonewalling in South Korea, where Tongsun Park, the key figure in the alleged South Korean bribes, has remained silent. Now under grand jury indictment, Park's lawyer says his client is willing to return to London from Seoul to face extradition proceedings on the still unnamed charges. The attorney also said that he would recommend to his client that he refuse to testify voluntarily if he is somehow forced to return to the United States.

Information that the sealed federal indictment mentions names of members of Congress and amounts of money raises the possibility that other indictments soon may follow.

This strengthens Mr. Jaworski's belief that pertinent facts ultimately will come to light.

The overall situation was not helped much either by the silence of Miss Suzi Park Thomson, which was broken before the House Ethics Committee.

There have not been many leaks in the Koreagate scandal; not from Miss Thomson, and certainly not any from Mr. Park, across the waters. And obviously not any from members of Congress, for whom to leak it simply is not self-serving anymore.

So Mr. Jaworski has a tremendous task in cracking several stonewalls, including the big one in the House itself.

Those hiding behind it should be advised of Mr. Jaworski's remarks about the participants in Watergate: "Those who came forward truthfully and without reservation found that they not only served their own interests but the welfare of the nation as well."

'How about a '77'?

The government of India is in the process of chasing the U.S.-owned Coca-Cola Export Corp. out of that country, but India isn't about to give up its cola drink, for which it has developed a tremendous thirst.

It already has chosen the name "77" for its state-produced substitute cola drink.

Although "77" won't be ready for sale until 1978, the name was chosen because 1977 was the year of big changes in India such as the end of the Indira Gandhi government and the end of Coca-Cola, government officials said.

The government asked Coca-Cola to surrender its secret syrup formula to an Indian-controlled firm or get out by next April. Coca-Cola refused to reveal its secret.

So, after next April, India's Indians will be saying, "77, please" rather than "gimme a Coke."

Computermania

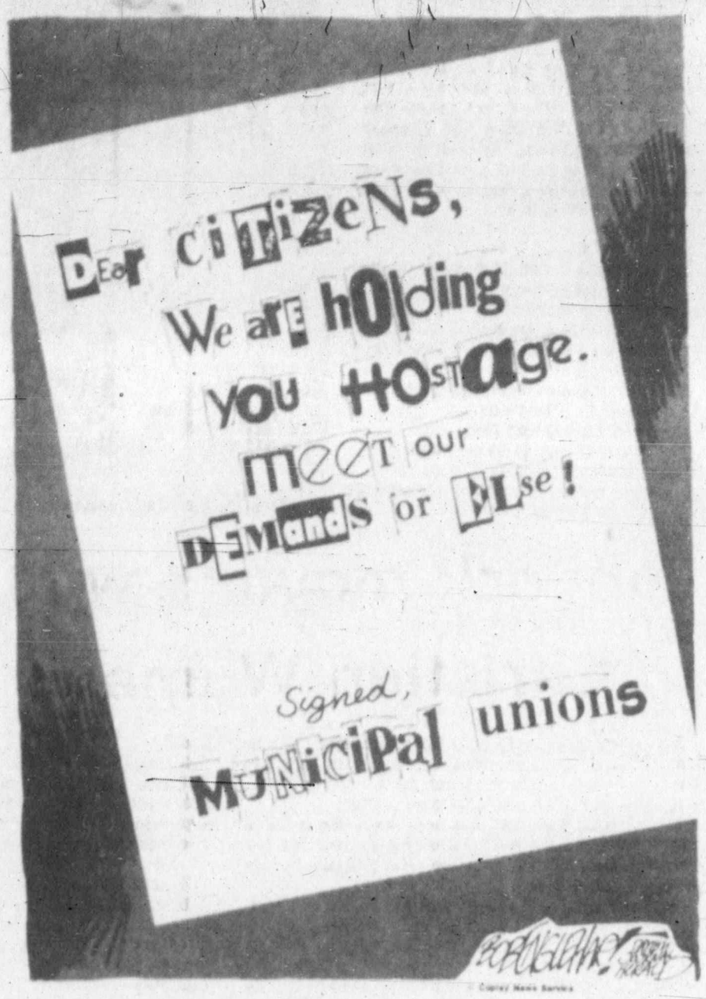

Computermania , a computer exposition, was held recently in Boston, Mass. More than 400 exhibits of computers, usual calculators, video games, video recorders, programs and assessories were on display.

The computer revolution has been going on for 20 years. It is now in full swing.

Computer technology has taken several giant leaps forward. Computer applications have fallen behind the technology and will take many years to catch up. Meanwhile, further revolutionary advances in the technology may be anticipated.

Business and industry have been in the forefront of the computer revolution. Now, the computer is coming into the home, not simply in the form of calculators but in the more sophisticated guise — to perform tasks like fiscal record keeping, and to provide entertainment.

Possibilities are unlimited — and exciting.

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — A federal judge has just ruled that the CIA must write a letter of apology to people whose mail they opened in the United States. The Department of Justice has suggested the text of the letter, which turns out to be a formal apology in typical governmental gobbledygook, which in my opinion would not get the CIA off the hook.

I think if the CIA really wants to show it's sorry for reading the mail of Americans they should make each letter a personal one, which would show that the Central Intelligence Agency has a heart.

Here are a few suggestions of the types of letters of apology Adm. Stansfield Turner, the head of the CIA, would send out to people whose privacy had been violated.

Dear Mr. Mac Comber,

You can't imagine how sorry all of us in the CIA are for reading your mail during the past 14 years. It was an oversight which I assure you won't happen again.

I regret your Aunt Tilly in Dublin still has pains in her back. Our medical team suggests she use a hot water bottle at night to relieve the agony. Also, I think your son is out of line when he says he wants to stay in Paris to continue his education. Our agents in Paris report that he is not going to school but is spending all of his time at cafes.

The letter you received from the Carlsons in Venice telling you what a wonderful time they were having was slightly exaggerated. Carlson came down with dysentery and Mrs. Carlson's photographs of St. Mark's Square were all overexposed.

We'll be happy to send you information on any other letters we read, if you want us to. I hope it will make up in a small way for what we now consider an illegal undercover program.

Sincerely Yours,
Adm. Stansfield Turner

Dear Ms. Halifax,

As you know the CIA was involved in a mail-reading program, and for reasons which no one here can explain all your letters from abroad were opened and scrutinized. You can't imagine how upset we are about this. Some overealous employe who will have to remain nameless for security reasons, was responsible. After going through his report on your mail, all I can say is that you have beautiful handwriting and I wish my children could write as well.

Your love letters to Mr. Cesar Randini in Rome were masterpieces and should be published in a book. The CIA would do it, but we recently went out of the book publishing business.

We're sorry that Mr. Randini broke off the relationship by marrying Signora Carmelita Verdi of 14 Via Condotti, but you must take my word for it that Mr. Randini is not a one-woman man. All the time he was calling "his little artichoke" he was spending his evenings at Signora Verdi's apartment, sometimes leaving as late as four in the morning. You are well rid of him.

Sincerely,
Adm. Stansfield Turner

Dear Mrs. Starbuckle,

I am obligated by the federal courts to inform you that we have been reading your mail and that of your husband, whose trips to London, Brussels and Antwerp on business have taken him out of the country six times a year.

I know you are suspicious that some of these trips are not all concerned with business. I can assure you that as far as Brussels and Antwerp are concerned your husband has been conducting commerce for his company.

We are unable to find out exactly what business he has in London, unless his meetings with Lady Mathilda MacIntosh of 1234 Cadogan Square have to do with steel exporting. Our records show Lady MacIntosh has never been in the steel business, nor was the late Sir Harold MacIntosh, who was 30 years his wife's senior.

Unfortunately, the bug we planted in the Cadogan Square flat has always been drowned out by Frank Sinatra music whenever your husband has been there. Since we can no longer, by law, follow this case, I might suggest you inquire about a London private detective who could investigate what Mr. Starbuckle really does in London.

In putting forth this suggestion, it is our sincere hope that you will forgive the CIA for reading your mail. And if anything good comes of our intelligence about Mr. Starbuckle's stopovers in London, we hope you will think kindly of the CIA in the future.

Sincerely,
Adm. Stansfield Turner

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

By JACK ANDERSON and LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON—In one of the most dramatic episodes of the Korean investigation, the demure, petite Korean beauty, Suzi Park Thomson, suddenly turned the tables on her congressional accusers behind closed doors last month. She sweetly refused to answer questions about her alleged role in influencing congressmen. Instead, she offered to answer all questions in open session where her responses couldn't be distorted. She feared any testimony taken in secret might be twisted and leaked to the press. But the assembled members of the House Ethics Committee were concerned that her answers might embarrass innocent congressmen. They wanted to screen her testimony, therefore, before making it public. Rep. Millicent Fenwick, R-N.J., explaining that open hearings might defame people, demanded specifics from Thomson before opening the doors. Did she know Korean influence peddler Tongsun Park? Had she knowledge of any Korean payments to members of Congress?

"Yes," she had met Park "several years ago," she said. But she refused to elaborate, or to discuss whether she knew about the payoffs.

The congresswoman pressed until Thomson, like a fragile Korean doll suddenly come to life, protested plaintively. They were worried about other people's reputations on Capitol Hill, she pouted; what about her rights? They were spending the taxpayers' money to seek the truth about the Korean allegations, then why not let her tell her story to the taxpayers out in the open, she asked.

The flare-up, out of character for the coy Korean girl, was preceded by an earlier confrontation between her attorney and the committee. The attorney, Philip Hirschkop, said he had tried to cooperate with the committee staff but that it had violated a letter of agreement. The staff had tried to question Thomson, he said, "without me being present, which was totaly out of order."

He told the committee bluntly: "I don't trust the staff." Therefore, he would not permit his client to tell her story, he said, unless the public and the press were admitted. "In terms of my experience with the staff," he said, "leaks have caused her devastating damage. She has been maligned for trips she took."

He claimed she had been taken on Korean trips, as a U.S. citizen and congressional employe, because of her Korean background. "It was as basic as the situation where they took black people to Africa and Spanish people to Spain."

Then he added as an aside: "Both senior members of this committee were on one of the trips." To the best of our information, only the committee's top Republican, Rep. Floyd Spence, R-S.C., traveled to the Far East with a delegation that brought Suzi Park Thomson along.

"Because of leaks," Hirschkop charged, "she was maligned."

Responded counsel Thomas Fortuin: "Since I don't know what your client is going to say and what ramifications this may have on other people, we are not willing to have your client testify in open session, initially."

Hirschkop asked whether the secrecy was for Thomson's protection.

"No," conceded Fortuin, "it is to protect anyone who may be incriminated by her testimony." Before they could permit her to make a public appearance, he said, they would have to "thrash this out as to how the rights of congressmen and others can be violated."

Retorted Hirschkop: "She has never received payments fron anybody. If you ask the general question first, you wouldn't have to worry about defaming anybody."

She wanted to cooperate with the committee, he said, but "it will have to be under some guidelines here she has some protection, where the staff can't take advantage in violation of all the ethics of our profession. I will never send her down here alone again. It is a lion's den."

Fortuin warned gravely that Thomson "may be held in contempt."

"I am familiar with the power of Congress," snapped Hirschkop, "but threats won't get us any place in this proceeding."

"I am not threatening you," replied the committee counsel. "I am simply asking upon what legal grounds you are advising your client not to testify?"

"That's all I am going to tell you," said Hirschkop. "Let's not play games."

Fortuin persisted until the attorney appealed to the congressmen. "I can't imagine the members trying to put this woman's back against a wall," said Hirshkop.

He charged that the press, feeding on leaks, was ruining Thomson. "The news media has seriously maligned her," he declared. "There is no way to prevent leaks from a proceeding such as this."

He complained: "She has been unable to become re-employed on Capitol Hill, where she spent so many years. She is accused of having a congressman's children, which is grossly untrue; making pay-offs, which is grossly untrue."

"These meetings are in executive session," responded Fortuin. "The committee has almost a perfect record as to leaks."

But the attorney would not be deterred. "She is refusing to testify under this situation today beceuse it has been so destructive to her. There have been articles in sex magazines."

It took a contempt-of-Congress threat finally to get Thomson to answer specific questions at a subsequent secret session.

As we previously reported, she denied any personal role in the Korean scandal but testified reluctantly that the wheeling-dealing Tongsun Park used to pick up messages in Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill's office.

INSIDE REPORT:

Big 'decision' rests with Lance and Lance alone

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — Bert Lance's most faithful supporters privately admit the struggle to save him seems doomed, a confession whose grave impact on the presidency of Jimmy Carter through the declining economy is not yet appreciated at the White House.

While top officials assert that the true focus has shifted from budget director Lance to President Carter, they are talking in terms of morality rather than the economy. "We've all been so busy with Lance and the Panama Canal, that nobody has time to think about the economy," one presidential aide told us.

But Lance has. Alone among key Carter officials, he is fully aware of economic dangers ahead. Since even his critics within the administration concede nobody can fully replace Lance as "Deputy President," the latest decline in his prospects for survival reduces the likelihood of the administration acting to forestall economic disaster ahead.

Linkage between Lance and hard times is revealed by nightly telephone surveys across the country by economic pollster Albert Sindlinger. He finds a sharp decline in the President's popularity, but not because of the Lance affair. Rather, Mr. Carter's popularity, which had dropped to 35 per cent in Sindlinger's poll, moved back to 47 per cent after his announced decision to support Lance.

The Lance affair, Washington's obsession for weeks, interests people at the other end of Sindlinger's telephone calls not at all. Instead, they worry about Carter policies: raising oil prices, capitulating to the farm lobby, issuing confusing economic signals. Their lack of confidence leads Sindlinger to forecast recession immediately ahead.

Lance is aware of Sindlinger's data, but other officials here are preoccupied by the tenacious onslaught against Lance from the Washington press corps. Details of Lance's use of the same stock as collateral for two bank loans is much more familiar in the upper reaches of the administration than is the frightening weakness of commodity prices.

Insistence by the press that Lance leave office began breaking the administration's will last week. On Monday, one of his most sincere backers in the White House privately suggested that perhaps Lance should take a leave of absence to defend himself, possibly returning later — in another job. That was a white flag of surrender.

By Tuesday, scarcely any official honestly believed in Lance's survival. One cabinet member guessed Lance might quit when Senate hearings start Sept. 7, though the consensus was he would last longer than that. To administration officials, hopelessness was signalled by the debate's shift from Lance's financial integrity to his competence in office.

In a broader sense, the problem has become the President's, with criticism now directed at Mr. Carter for embracing his friend Aug. 18. Since the President is determined not to turn out Lance after having backed him, the decision must be made by Lance and Lance alone.

Lance tells friends that will not come soon, but he might change his mind if self-defense continues to dominate his every waking hour. Even Lance's staunchest defenders admit he is simply not running the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) while crucial spending decisions are due.

This effect is likely to transcend all the speculation about the President's loss of purity now transfixing Washington. No successor at OMB could approach Lance's effectiveness in pressing the President for restraint on federal spending.

What may be ahead is reflected in "Promises to Keep," an excellent new book by veteran Washington correspondent Robert Shogan about Mr. Carter's first hundred days. Shogan reveals that in late March, Hamilton Jordan wrote a confidential memo criticizing the President for making decisions without reference to political factors.

Calls for resignation dent Lance's armor

By DAVID S. BRODER
and
EDWARD WALSH
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The two senators heading the congressional investigation of budget director Bert Lance, possessing what they termed new material on "alleged illegalities" involving Lance, told President Carter that the budget director should resign.

The only response from the White House was a two-sentence statement saying Carter "expressed his appreciation" that Senate hearings on Lance's financial affairs will be conducted expeditiously to "allow all parties the opportunity to present the facts to the American people."

A House banking subcommittee will begin hearings today on the Lance affair with testimony from key officials of the Comptroller of the Currency's office, as well as from bank officials with whom Lance did business.

After a 35-minute meeting with the President at the White House, Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D-Conn.), the chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, and Sen. Charles H. Percy (R-Ill.), the committee's ranking Republican, said that Lance appears determined to remain in his post to defend himself at hearings scheduled to begin Wednesday.

"I think it would be wiser for Bert Lance to resign," said Ribicoff, who until Monday was considered among the strongest supporters of the embattled budget director.

The resignation calls by Ribicoff and Percy signaled the collapse of Lance's most important congressional support in his struggle to retain his job. Both senators had warmly praised the affable former Georgia banker following his confirmation hearings before their committee in January.

A White House official confirmed that Lance has told the President he wants to appear before the Senate committee and has not offered to resign. Carter "supports and respects that decision," the official said.

What was not clear was whether White House officials, faced with a new round of allegations involving Lance, have suggested to the budget director that he resign. White House officials refused to say whether they have made such suggestions to Lance.

Asked whether Lance might resign after defending himself before the Senate committee, one official said that would depend "on the nature of the allegations and Bert's ability to respond to them."

Monday, Lance returned to Washington and, accompanied by his wife, LaBelle, met with the President before Ribicoff and Percy arrived at the White House.

Monday's events, shattering the quiet of the end of the Labor Day weekend, were set in motion on Friday when White House officials were briefed by Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal and Deputy Treasury Secretary Robert Carswell on new findings concerning Lance by the comptroller of the currency.

A former officer of a bank owned by Bert Lance, Billy Lee Campbell, now serving an eight-year prison term for embezzlement, has signed an affadavit implicating Lance, the Atlanta Consitution reported Monday.

It was clear that the briefing greatly increaseed White House concern over the Lance affair. Hamilton Jordan, the President's top political adviser, flew to Sea Island, Ga., where Lance was vacationing, and spent Saturday and Sunday with the budget director.

On Sunday, Lance called former Defense Secretary Clark Clifford and enlisted his help in preparing for the Senate hearings. Clifford said Monday night that he will meet with Ribicoff and Percy today "to learn more about these matters."

Neither senator would discuss the alleged illegalities, but Ribicoff said they were serious enough that he felt obligated to bring them to Carter's attention.

Carter, Torrijos prepare for ceremony

By GEORGE GEDDA

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter and Panamanian head of government Omar Torrijos are preparing for the historic treaty-signing ceremony that will climax 13 years of negotiations over the future of the Panama Canal.

Carter and Torrijos scheduled their first meetings at the White House today in advance of the Wednesday treaty ceremony.

Torrijos received a warm welcome at Andrews Air Force Base on his arrival Monday night and expressed gratitude to the United States for its willingness to yield eventual control over the canal.

With a military honor guard on hand, Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance greeted Torrijos and said "goodwill and determination" enabled the two countries to reach an agreement "that protects the vital interests" of both.

Vance said the proposed treaties ensure the canal will remain "open, neutral, secure and efficiently run" for all nations of the world.

Torrijos was one of seven hemispheric leaders who arrived Monday for the Wednesday ceremony, to be held at the offices of the Organization of American States.

Nineteen hemispheric heads of government will attend the ceremony, lured here by the promise of a private audience with Carter. In all, 27 nations are expected to send delegations.

But all of the pomp and ceremony will be meaningless unless Carter is able to convince two-thirds of the Senate that the new treaties deserve to be ratified.

Recent polls have indicated a majority of the American people still oppose the treaties. One treaty would remove U.S. control of the canal after the year 2000 and the other would guarantee neutrality of the Canal Zone.

But support for the agreement reportedly is accelerating and administration officials hope this week's activities will provide additional momentum.

On his arrival, Torrijos said the treaty signing is of "great historic significance" and shows the United States recognizes the need to "correct an error instead of prolonging for an eternity an injustice."

Torrijos said the Panamanian people, mindful of the "moral basis" on which the United States was founded, never lost faith that Panama's aspirations for eventual control of the waterway would be met.

Priscilla to take center stage; new weapon may steal spotlight

AMARILLO, Tex. (AP) — Priscilla Davis assumes center stage today for the 11th time in the capital murder trial of her estranged husband, Cullen Davis. But a controversy over the possible murder weapon might again steal the spotlight.

The trial entered its third week of testimony this morning.

Davis, a Fort Worth millionaire, is being tried for the slaying of his 12-year-old stepdaughter Andrea Wilborn during a shooting spree at the lavish Davis mansion in Fort Worth in August 1976.

He is also charged with killing Stan Farr, Mrs. Davis' boyfriend, and wounding Mrs. Davis and a family friend in the shootings.

Mrs. Davis, the state's star witness, has repeatedly identified Davis as the "man in black" who did the shooting.

Last Friday, Fort Worth attorney Charles Baldwin, who produced the mystery gun, said that Farr told him three days before the shooting spree: "Horace Copeland is trying to kill me."

Defense attorneys said they were told the .38 caliber pistol turned over to Fort Worth police by Baldwin was the gun that killed Farr. Dist. Atty. Tim Curry confirmed the existence of the pistol, but said he didn't think it was connected to the case.

The defense team, in trying to prove that someone other than Davis did the shooting, has attempted to link Copeland to the case.

Copeland, who was found shot to death about three weeks ago, had allegedly been harrassing a woman at Farr's Fort Worth nightclub. No charges have been filed in Copeland's death.

Baldwin said he had gotten the gun from the woman, who is a client.

Copeland has been described as one of Farr's business acquaintances.

Meanwhile, Davis says he is willing to testify in his own defense, but adds that he will not get into a "liar's contest" with Mrs. Davis.

"I am not particularly looking forward to getting on the stand," Davis said, "but I wouldn't hesitate to do it for one minute."

Christie labors hard for political support

ODESSA — Joe Christie was working hard at winning over the support of hard-working people in a political race he's not even in yet.

He praised the virtues of untiring common folks — the mainstay of America's work force.

It was Labor Day, and he found no fault with workers, including union people. At least, he didn't mention any shortcomings.

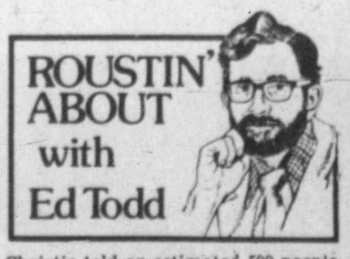

He deemed the workers quite delectable.

But he found unsavory two fellow politicians he just might be tangling with in a U.S. senatorial race.

He thinks, perhaps, that he wants the job now held by Republican Sen. John Tower. So, too, does a fellow Democrat, U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger, who already has announced his candidacy. Christie hasn't.

The voters' choice only between Tower and Krueger would be bland, Christi said.

"So far, the only choice is between cold oatmeal and cold oatmeal, and that's not a very palatable choice,"

Christie told an estimated 500 people at a Labor Day celebration here.

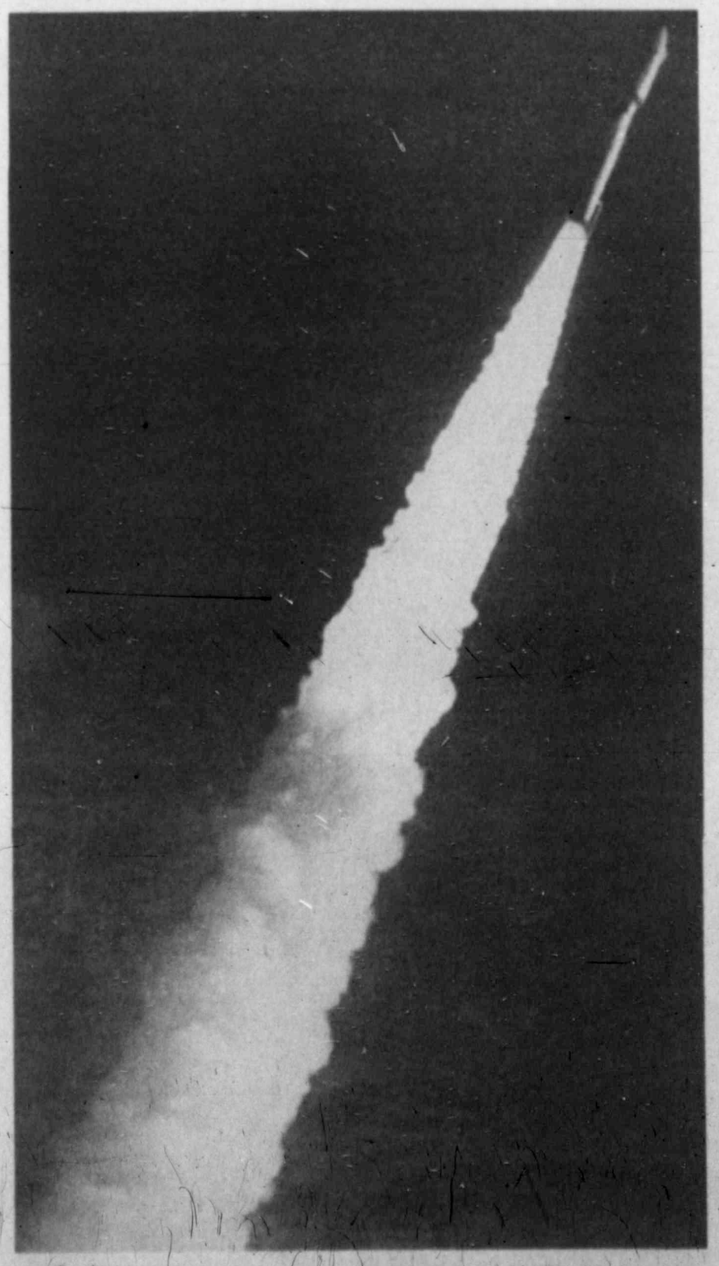

Last week, the 44-year-old Christie resigned as chairman of the State Insurance Board. His intent was to firm up his decision to run and to weigh voter support.

Apparently his decision is firm. He just hasn't given his full commitment to the task.

But Christie said he "probably will announce (his candidacy) at a little spontaneous dinner with my family at Austin."

Weather causing disease?

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The appearance of Legionnaires disease in Columbus late this summer has health officials speculating that a link may exist between weather and the infection that killed 29 persons in Philadelphia last year.

Dr. Ian Baird, director of infectious diseases at Riverside Hospital where all four confirmed cases were admitted, said the disease's recent history indicates it becomes active in late summer.

So far the disease has claimed the life of Catherine M. McCoy, 56, of Columbus, who died Aug. 6. Three other women, including one who recovered and was released Friday, are confirmed victims.

One other person, a 65-year-old woman, remains in serious condition at the hospital with symptoms of the disease, but a final diagnosis is not expected from the federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta for at least a week.

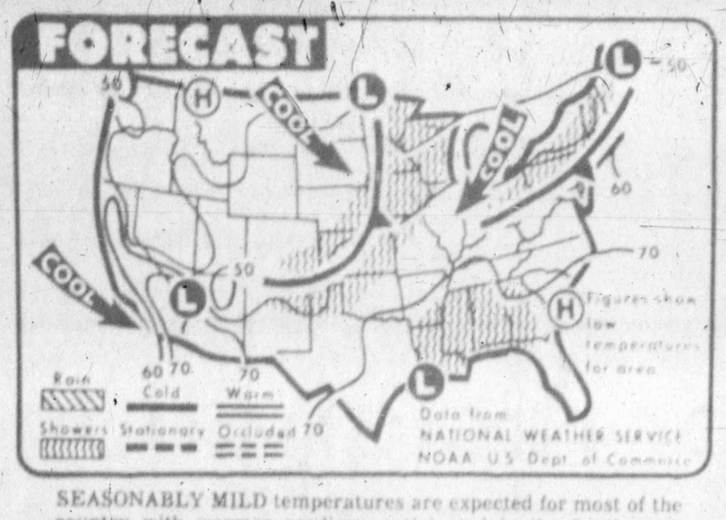

Baird said his research shows there were late summer outbreaks of pneumonia-like deaths in Pontiac, Mich., and Washington, D.C., before the infection was isolated when 29 of about 180 persons stricken with the disease died during or after an American Legion convention in Philadelphia July 21-24, 1976.

He said blood samples saved by "far-sighted health officials" in Michigan and Washington show an antibody that is the same as those found in the blood of the Philadelphia and Columbus victims.

He said the appearance of the disease in Columbus lends more credence to the theory that the weather may increase the activity of the yet unnamed organism labeled as the cause of the disease, often undetected because its symptoms are similar to those of pneumonia.

"Really with Mrs. McCoy, we didn't know it was Legionnaires disease," Baird said.

Christie labors hard for support

pointed him to the insurance board. Christie was a state senator for six years. Now, he's returning to his law practice at El Paso.

Christie was the principal speaker at the Monday afternoon celebration, which was sponsored by 5,000-member Odessa area Central Labor Union, AFL-CIO.

And Christie, with the tact of a veteran politician, was well tuned-in to the occasion.

First off, he thanked his hard-working father for having the "good sense" to send his son into the "oil patch," where Christie said he learned the meaning of hard work.

He was a roustabout, roughneck and truck driver.

Then, he lauded the working people on a holiday, for helping make this country what it is today.

"You're the people who built this country, and don't let anybody tell you any different," Christie told the working people and their families at the outing at Floyd Gwin Park here.

Christie was laboring at being the working man's politician.

He talked about "stripping away those layers of bureaucratic fat." He said Texas has more people on the state payrolls than it needs. Featherbedding ought to be cut out, he said.

And he said insurance policies should be readable. He had been on the insurance board for four years.

"I believe that when you pay your money for an insurance policy," Christie said, "you should be able to take it back to the kitchen table, read it, and know what you are paying your money for."

A policy holder, Christie said, should be able to understand even the finer points of a policy "without a Philadelphia lawyer . . . and a magnifying glass."

Following his talk, Dallas "Daily" Willis of Midland, president of the labor union here, presented Christie with a gavel-adorned plaque in thanking Christie for his services to "Texas consumers."

On Labor Day, Christie wasn't the only one to praise working people. Willis noted this "special day" that honors "workers who have done (so much) for this country."

Midland attorney Don Williams, who represents the union in legal matters, cited the "talent and energy" of the working people.

Williams said working people should expect politicians to work as hard at their public jobs as the workers do on theirs.

Later, while the workers on a holiday were guzzling beer and soft drinks and were eating barbecue or standing in line for the eats, Christie was mingling with the folks and rapping with the straggling "press corps."

Christie, the politician, outlined his accomplishments as a state senator.

He sponsored bills to save the horned toad, to oust the "hyprocrisy" from Texas liquor laws, to get city sales tax, to upgrade trade schools and so on.

Almost overshadowing those "laurels," however, was Christie's emphasis on congressional records of Tower and Krueger.

In so many words, Christie said Tower's record might be his downfall. He didn't elaborate.

But he did say more about Krueger, whom he'll have to face in the Democratic party's primary election.

Christie mentioned Krueger's unsuccessful efforts in trying to deregulate the price of oil and gas.

It was a good, hard, close try, he said.

"But closeness only counts in horseshoes and hand grenades," Christie said.

of the new allegations grew out of a new round of investigations into Lance's affairs as the head of two Georgia banks by the comptroller of the currency. The comptroller's first report on Lance's affairs, issued Aug. 18, cleared Lance of violating banking laws or regulations, but criticized him for some banking practices and left several questions unanswered.

The official said the new report deals with such items as Lance's use of bank aircraft and overdrafts on his accounts at the Calhoun, Ga., First National Bank and the National Bank of Georgia in Atlanta, both of which he headed before becoming the President's first Cabinet-level appointee.

There also was a report Monday in the Atlanta Constitution that Senate investigators have obtained a statement from Billy Lee Campbell, a former officer at the Calhoun bank, implicating Lance in an embezzlement scheme for which Campbell is now serving an 8-year prison term.

Lance, who was president of the bank when the embezzlement took place, told the Constitution such allegations are "a total lie."

Percy confirmed that committee investigators recently spoke with Campbell at the federal penitentiary in Atlanta, although Ribicoff vehemently denied that Campbell has given the committee an affidavit or other written statement.

Ribicoff said the full Governmental Affairs Committee will be briefed on the latest allegations against Lance Tuesday.

Lance, Ribicoff said, "feels very strongly he has been maligned and wants to tell his side of the story."

In calling for Lance's resignation, both senators said they were making no judgments of guilt but did question Lance's ability to continue as director of the Office of Management and Budget.

'Pauper's oath' final hurdle to Liddy liberty

By PAUL CARPENTER

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — For G. Gordon Liddy, the mastermind of the Watergate break-in who has kept tight-lipped on the burglary that toppled a president, freedom is just a "pauper's oath" and a sunrise away.

Liddy, 46, faced one final obstacle before being paroled after more than four years in prison.

Part of his sentence was a $40,000 fine, and federal authorities can release him only if he proves he has less than $20 to his name, counting debts.

To do so, Liddy was to swear the pauper's oath today before U.S. Magistrate William Askey of Williamsport. With Askey's approval, usually a routine step, Liddy can be released Wednesday from the medium-security penitentiary at Danbury, Conn.

U.S. marshals said Liddy would be brought here from Danbury and returned there after the hearing.

Liddy was sentenced to a term of six years, eight months to 20 years for his role as the architect of the Watergate break-in.

The 20-year maximum was reduced to eight years by President Carter in April, making Liddy eligible for parole beginning July 9. Without the commutation, he would not have been eligible until 1981.

Carter's action did not change the $40,000 fine, however.

"The debt is not forgiven, just the imprisonment," Askey said, noting Liddy would have to arrange to pay the fine later.

A former FBI agent and lawyer for the White House staff of then-President Richard M. Nixon, Liddy served most of his 52½-month imprisonment at the Danbury penitentiary.

He was transferred to a minimum-security prison at Allenwood, Pa., last January, but he was returned to Danbury in August after playing a key role in an inmate hunger strike.

Officers hurt in altercation

Four persons were taken into custody, three charged and two police officers injured during a fight at a grocery store and later at the Midland Police Department.

According to Chief Wayne Gideon, officers were called to J and L Market at the intersection of Fairgrounds Road and Pecan Ave. at 10:27 p.m.

At the scene, officers found a fight in progress with a crowd of approximately 100 people observing, Gideon said. When officers tried to disperse the crowd, it became unruly, and officers took the two involved in the fight into custody.

At approximately 11:08 p.m. another crowd gathered in the lobby of the police department in an effort to obtain the release of the two taken into custody at the market, according to Gideon.

The crowd became unruly, and a scuffle followed between police officers and members of the crowd, Gideon said.

Two persons were arrested in the lobby. Officer Joe Ortiz was taken to the emergency room of Midland Memorial Hospital with a possible broken nose after being struck in the fight, Gideon said. Officer Al Chitwood had several teeth chipped as a result of the scuffle.

School mascot heads agenda

ODESSA — Discussion of a school mascot will head the agenda of the first meeting of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin Student Senate at 12:30 p.m. today in the faculty dining room.

Gary Elliott, Odessa graduate student and vice president of the student senate, said the question of a mascot had been unresolved for some time.

"Whatever name is chosen will likely stay with the university for years to come, and we'd like a clear-cut majority to be pleased with it" he said.

Also on the agenda will be discussion of a faculty adviser, meeting times and places and future plans.

Councils representing the various academic colleges will meet at 12:30 p.m. Thursday to nominate officers and representatives to the Student Senate. Arts and Education Council will meet in room 292, Management Council in room 483 and Science and Engineering Council in room 382.

Hurricane Babe damage assessment under way

CHAUVIN, La. (AP) — They were assessing Hurricane Babe's damage in American dollars and French expletives Monday in this South Terrebonne fishing village, one of the few areas still under the storm's tides.

The water wasn't too deep, but deep enough to keep townspeople from driving back home. It was deep enough for frolicking children to pole their pirogues down Louisiana 56.

"The water's gone down, but not much," a Terrebone Parish sheriff's deputy said as he looked at the 10-inch-deep water.

Along the highway, sheriff's deputies turned back most of the cars and trucks.

"You'll throw water into the houses," they said.

A few got through, however, and found their homes in good shape. Ernest Rodrigue and his wife returned to Dulac to find their elevated house trailer only inches above the water.

"Everything's okay," Rodrigue said. "Thank the Lord, we didn't lose anything."

Not all the buildings were so lucky. The ACLI Canning and Seafood Co. in Chauvin got inches of water, killing the power to the freezers that were loaded with about $300,000 worth of seafood, Gene Domangue, a company official, lamented.

"It's gonna be bad when that stuff begins to go," Domangue said.

Domangue's truck, which deputies had given special permission to travel the road, passed a teenage girl he recognized.

"Hey Sylvia," he shouted. "We gonna work some shrimp tomorrow."

The girl, only ankle deep in water, stopped dead in her tracks.

"We gonna work shrimp under 15 feet of water," chuckled Domangue.

No significant cooling due

The low this morning had a touch of autumn in the air, and although the official temperature reading was 70 degrees, some thought it just seemed cooler today.

Perhaps it was only wishful thinking.

The high temperature Wednesday is expected to be in the upper 80s and the low tonight in the middle 60s, according to the National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Air Terminal.

There was a trace of rain Monday afternoon and the high temperature was 92 degrees.

Partly cloudy skies and high humidity may have contributed to that "cool feeling" that many noted this morning. According to the National Weather Service, relative humidity was 79 per cent at 8 a.m.

Andrews reported an unofficial temperature of 64 degrees early today, while Big Spring reported 66 degrees about 7:30 a.m. The Crane Sheriff's office noted that it was cloudy and cooler than usual this morning, "kind of like it ought to be."

Cloudy and cooler conditions were also noted in Lamesa, Stanton, Rankin, Big Lake, and Odessa. But both gave way to the piercing West Texas sun that doesn't seem to be ready to relinquish summer — yet.

Hill to speak on legislation

Texas Attorney General John Hill will address Permian Basin officials involved in criminal justice on the subject of new state legislation and its effect on local governments during a seminar which begins at 10:30 a.m. Thursday at the West Texas Education Agency at the Midland Regional Air Terminal.

During the conference, sponsored by the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission (PBRPC), Hill will speak on legislation which will affect plea bargaining, liquor laws, speedy trials and other areas.

During an afternoon session, Tom Bullington, an assistant attorney general specializing in criminal justice, will speak on changes in criminal law and their impact on local governments.

At 2:15 p.m., there will be a panel and audience discussion on problems faced by local governments in implementing the new legislation. Panel members are Ralph Kinsey, Dawson County Attorney, Dallas Smith, Midland County Sheriff and Tom Bullington, Assistant Attorney General.

Cyclist 'satisfactory'

A 22-year-old Midland man was in satisfactory condition this morning in Midland Memorial Hospital after being injured when his motorcycle struck a metal pole.

Timothy Adams of 2205 Huntington Ave. was traveling north on Powell Street approaching Roosevelt Street when he failed to negotiate a curve and struck a metal pole, police said.

The accident occurred about 2:30 a.m. today.

Wadkins in shock over success

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Lanny Wadkins still is in a state of shock.

The 27-year-old Virginian, his career threatened by a gall bladder operation less than three years ago, has won the PGA and the World Series of Golf titles and $145,000 in the last month.

His first prize of $100,000 in the World Series Monday exceeded his entire winnings for 1975 and 1976.

"It hasn't really hit me," Wadkins said after his record-breaking 65-267 total over the feared Firestone South course.

"The PGA still hasn't sunk in. I hear them announce, 'PGA champion' and I look around to wonder who in the heck it is."

Someone suggested Wadkins' playoff victory over Gene Littler in the PGA might have been a fluke.

"I never felt the PGA was a fluke," he answered. "If anybody else does, I don't care. I feel I'm back where I belong."

Even a record-tying 29 by playing partner Tom Weiskopf, six-under par on Firestone South's front nine, failed to rattle him Monday.

"I thought I put all the pressure I could on him. Lanny played perfect, fantastic golf. He never looked worried. That's why he's the champion," said Weiskopf, who finished in a tie for second place with Hale Irwin.

WEISKOPF MATCHED Wadkins' final-round 65. Irwin, one stroke behind the winner going into the last 18 holes on the hot, humid day, shot a 69. He and Weiskopf had 272 and earned $35,000.

Weiskopf birdied six of the first eight holes and was even with Wadkins at nine-under-par. Still, the former Wake Forest College star was unshaken.

"I told Tom, 'This is really fun. I'm having a ball.' It didn't surprise me. I've played with Tom a lot and have seen him do it before. When he plays like that, he's something to behold," said Wadkins.

"I was really pouring on the coals. I wasn't backing off. I hoped I could just hang on and something would happen."

It did. Weiskopf unleashed one of his booming tee shots at nine. Wadkins sent his drive 35 yards farther down the fairway, a total of 308 yards.

"Tom told me, "I think there's something wrong with this ball. He was serious. He declared the ball unplayable," said Wadkins.

Moments later, Wadkins sank a 15-foot birdie putt and regained the lead, at 10-underpar. Weiskopf parred from 25 feet at No. 9. He never challenged seriously again. Wadkins was ahead to stay.

WADKINS FOLLOWED with birdies at 10 and 12. His margin was four shots. The race for golf's richest prize was over. Two more birdies, at 16 and 17, ran his four-day total to 22 over the demanding 7,180-yard monster.

Even his only bogey of the tournament at 18 failed to keep him from eclipsing Ray Floyd's 72-hole course record of 268, set in the 1969 American Golf Classic.

Mark Hayes took fourth place money of $15,000, shooting 69—276.

Defending champion Jack Nicklaus, South African Gary Player and Floyd tied for fifth at 278 for $11,166 apiece. Nicklaus, now with more than $500,000 in Firestone tournaments, closed with a 68. Player and Floyd had 69s.

Nicklaus, who shot 275 in winning the 1976 World Series, said, "278 without a putter isn't bad. I didn't make anything."

Hollis Stacy captures Dystrophy Golf Classic

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — "I constantly thought of breaking the record and it kept me pumped up," said Hollis Stacy, who won the $100,000 Rail Muscular Dystrophy Golf Classic by eight strokes with with a 17-under-par total of 271 for four trips over the Rail golf course.

The 23-year-old Georgian, who has been on the LPGA tour since 1974, picked up a $15,000 check Monday and her third tournament victory of the season. She previously won the U.S. Open and the Tara Open in her home state.

She closed with a 69 over the 6,135-yard, par 36-36—72 course and broke by two strokes the LPGA scoring record for 72 holes. Kathy Whitworth set the standard at the Milwaukee Open in 1966.

Miss Stacy fired birdies on the fourth, 10th and 16th holes to shoot her fourth round in the 60s of this tourney. She had only one bogey in the rain-delayed 72 holes.

Tefertiller's Hot Idea zips to Futurity win

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (AP) — Gene Tefertiller took a chance last year. The veteran trainer talked a couple of Texas men into buying a little quarter horse with a crooked leg.

Monday, Gene Tefertiller's gamble looked like a stroke of genius as Hot Idea, who had won only $2,460 in her brief racing career, thundered down the stretch at Ruidoso Downs to put away favored Town Policy and win the $1.03 million all-American Futurity.

Tefertiller's backers had to pay only $4,000 for Hot Idea at the 1976 All-American yearling sale. But even that bargain basement price must have seen exorbitant to many horsemen.

Tefertiller, however, said Hot Idea's left front leg had been placed in a cast for six months after she was born with a birth defect in an effort to straighten the leg.

He said the cast left a scar and didn't straighten it completely, but did straighten it enough so the filly could run.

"I couldn't tell you exactly what I liked about her," said Tefertiller as he talked with reporters after watching the little filly win the $330,000 first prize.

"I went back and saw her twice," he said. "The second time I saw her in her stall I knew she had a bad leg, but I could see everything I needed to see."

Hot Idea is an ill-tempered horse in the stall, and that apparently impressed Tefertiller. In fact, last week Tefertiller's 17-year-old son Gary was in the stall with Hot Idea, and the filly kicked him in the face, breaking his nose.

"She's a real ornery-type horse," Tefertiller said. "I think that's what makes her run."

In the 19th running of the All-American, Hot Idea caught Town Policy with about 150 yards to go in the race and was steadily pulling away as she hit the wire with a lead of about 1¼ length over Town Policy.

Jun Jun Ni had grabbed the early lead with a good start from the gate, but Town Policy, running on the inside, moved to the front. However, Hot Idea came streaking up on the outside to catch the favorite and win the 440 yard scramble in a time of 21.75 seconds.

Dress rehearsal for Cowboys on Thursday

TED BATTLES battle scene

Hands are being wrung in despair, heads are shaking negatively and frantic fingers are searching for buttons to push.

The Dallas Cowboys are listing to starboard with a disturbing 2-3 NFL exhibition record and are limping home from Houston after a 23-14 torpedoing with Pittsburgh's Steelers lurking in shallow water just a coupie ot days away.

The Oilers not only shut down Dallas' running game, but made the heralded Tony Dorsett look like just another unsung rookie back from Plainfield State.

EVEN COACH Tom Landry admits, "Sure, this is distressing," but quickly admonishes, "But you're the guys (media types) who built us up. I said all along it would take time."

But before you go labeling the Oilers a Super Bowl candidate, remember their conference playmates (Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Cleveland) and the fact that Houston, good or bad, always plays that way against Dallas.

For Dallas, the Houston game is Pearl Harbor, Verdun and Chancellorsville all over again, but when it comes to the spoils dividing in Tokyo Bay, the railroad car at Versailles or the court house at Appomattox, the Oilers are always the guys checking in their swords.

HOUSTON IS the classic example of the team that wins the battle, but always loses the war.

The Cowboys had won the last three of these preseason skirmishes by the skin of their teeth, 22-22, 17-14 and 19-13. Where the Cowboys made their mistake was bringing up the subject of the Governor's Cup, the trophy that is supposed to go with this championship of Texas.

They mentioned that although Houston last won it in 1973, 27-24, the prize had never changed hands.

Apparently that was enough to get the Oilers' dander up. It took them over the top, the little extra that is the difference between a moral victory and a bird-in-hand success.

IT MIGHT also be pointed out that Dallas was lack-lustre 3-3 last year in exhibtions and in 1975, the year of the suprise Super Bowl, the Cowboys were 2-4.

It was in 1975 that the rebuilding Cowboys gave their supporters the first hint of what was to come in the final exhibition game when Dallas lost to Pittsburgh's defending Super champs, 17-16. The next week, they stunned Los Angeles and went on to that 10-4 season.

So, just as in 1975 when the Cowboys were looking for replacements to fill the yawning shoes of longtime standbyes such as Bob Lilly, the Cowboys are again plugging gaps left hy the retirement of Lee Roy Jordan and the absence of offensive linemen Rayfield Wright and Blain Nye.

And, like 1975, it may be that the Cowboys are leaving the toughest part of their schedule behind them in the exhibition season. In any event, Thursday's dress rehearsal with Pittsburgh should answer a lot of dangling questions.

Arkansas wins, 9-6

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — The Arkansas Travelers used a five-run eighth inning rally and the one-hit relief pitching of Ryan Kurosaki to jump into the driver's seat of the Texas League's eastern division playoffs with a 9-6 victory over Tulsa Monday night.

The best-of-three series continues here Tuesday night. The winner will play El Paso, Western division champ, starting Thursday in El Paso.

The Travelers took advantage of four walks, an error and two singles to stage their game-winning rally in the eighth Monday night.

Jerry Bostic, second of five Tulsa pitchers, suffered the loss.

Booster clubs meet tonight

Johnny 'Lam' out of game

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Texas Coach Fred Akers shifted junior linebacker Louis Rowlett to center Monday to shore up the depth in his offensive line and said injured Olympic sprinter Johnny "Lam" Jones would miss Saturday's season opener with Boston College.

Akers said flanker Mike Lockett and offensive guard Rick Ingraham would miss the game in UT's Memorial Stadium with knee injuries.

Akers said all three might not start and "may not suit out for Saturday's game."

Kicker Russell Erxleben returned to workouts Monday after missing several days with a back injury.

Athletes don't know how lucky they really are

PAUL DOMOWITCH SPORTS CHATTER

(Note: This column was originally run on March 31, of this year)

Little Tommy sat there in his wheelchair. The bangs of his thick blond hair hung down over his forehead and draped across the top of his horn-rimmed glasses. Suddenly, a big, broad smile surfaced across his seven-year-old face, and at that moment you never would have guessed from the hope and happiness in his expression that Tommy was a victim of muscular dystrophy.

You had only been exposed to the youngster on your television screen for little more than a few seconds, but it mattered little. It was love at first sight.

Tommy was smiling because walking across the stage to meet him was his hero — his idol, Steve Garvey, the all-star first baseman of the Los Angeles Dodgers. When he finally reached the boy, he knelt down beside him on one knee, looked into those young sympathetic eyes, and Garvey too fell in love with him.

"Mr. Garvey," the lad said to the athlete, "I love you. And when I grow up, I'm going to be just like you."

Garvey didn't answer. He couldn't. He was too choked up. Tears crept out of the corners of the big 6-foot-1, 200 pounder's eyes. Finally, pulling himself together, the words came. Words from the heart.

"I love you too Tommy."

TOMMY NEVER did grow up to be just like his hero. Two months after that touching scene on the 1976 Jerry Lewis Labor Day Telethon for Muscular Dystrophy, he died. Tommy had lost his battle for life against the dreaded disease.

Even as he spoke to Garvey that afternoon, Tommy knew his days were numbered. He knew he could never be like his hero. But it didn't stop him from hoping and praying for a miracle from the great Man upstairs.

I hadn't thought about that incident since I read of Tommy's death last November. But watching still more crippled youngsters on this past weekend's Easter Seals Telethon rekindled those memories, and once again, I was overcome with a sense of anger.

Why anger, you ask? Why would the sight of crippled children create feelings of fury within?

Look for a moment if you will, beyond that scene and at another one. Look at another boy — an athlete — who is not crippled and who does not have to wonder if tomorrow he will die.

This athlete is blessed with a special God-given talent that so many of us just dream of possessing. This athlete can either run faster, jump higher, hit harder or throw longer than 95 per cent of the rest of the human race.

And if he is really fortunate, this talent will enable him to become a very wealthy individual, and provide himself and his family someday with all of the material comforts this world has to offer. He is put in the enviable position of being a star. A nation of fans will kneel at his feet, and many will run through brick walls and dodge scores of security guards just to get his signature on a bubble gum wrapper or in an autograph book.

AN ATHLETE, especially a good one, whether he realizes it or not, is a very lucky person & he should thank God every day of his life for the talent he is blessed with. How many people get the opportunity to make a living doing something they really love? In that respect, I am very lucky. Because the day I consider sports writing work and not a love, it will be time to move on to another profession.

Athletes today have become spoiled rotten. Maybe it is us sports writers who have been responsible for that. I don't know. But I do know that there are a great many who are abusing their talent, and that's when I become irate. That's when I get sick to my stomach.

When I see a baseball player fail to give 100 per cent and not run out a ground ball, or a basketball player just go through the motions on the court, or a football player refuse to play for his team until his multi-year no-cut contract is increased from five million to five million and one dollar so he'll be making more money than his teammate Joe Schmuck, I think back to little Tommy sitting there in that wheelchair.

Tommy couldn't run with a football or hit a baseball. He couldn't even walk. What we take for granted, he would have considered a major miracle if he could have done it.

YET, DESPITE all the hell Tommy went through, he never showed it. He never displayed the frustration or the pain he was feeling. Not one bit.

He would have had every right in the world to resent anyone who could just stand up on two legs, let alone athletes who can run 9.5 hundreds.

The muscles in his arms were so weak that Tommy couldn't even hold the bat that Steve Garvey uses to hit his 450-foot home run shots with. Yet, it didn't matter.

"I'm going to be just like you," he told Garvey that day. "Just like you."

I wish some of these spoiled athletes would think about little Tommy and others like him someday when they're complaining about the rough life they have. Then and only then would they realize just how damn lucky they really are.

Right Tommy?

Area football teams experience problems

By TERRY WILLIAMSON

Area high school football teams got off to a slow start for the most part with only defending District 6-A champion Rankin and highly regarded Stanton taking opening night victories Friday.

Rankin defeated District 9-A's Eldorado, 19-13, with a fourth quarter touchdown, but even in victory, Rankin suffered a major blow when veteran quarterback Randy Doege was injured and he may be out for the rest of the season. Scott Russom, however, rushed for more than 100 yards in the game.

The loss of Doege sounds even worse when you add the fact that 6-A's Marfa and Iraan, both picked to win district by some, won big.

MARFA WHIPPED Buena Vista, 96-0, the biggest victory margin recorded in the state, and Iraan plugged Balmorhea, 50-0, in another lop sided mismatch.

The Stanton Buffaloes, who may own their best team in many years, held true to form with a 26-14 come from behind win over AA Tahoka. Tailback Marvin Jones rolled out 180 yards in 35 carries to establish his hold as an all-state candidate. He also scored four touchdowns, one on a run of 37 yards.

District 5-A, however, looked strong as district favorite Seagraves pounded Eunice, N. M., 48-6, and Plains defeated Morton, 30-2, while Shallowater won 75-0 over Sands. Stanton could have their hands full in that loop.

THIRD RANKED Andrews managed only a 14-14 tie with AAAA Big Spring with some key mistakes and their dominance of District 2-AAA looks a bit shaky now since four other loop members won Friday.

Lamesa's Golden Tornadoes never got their offense untracked in a 10-0 loss to Carlsbad, N. M. District-3-AAA had a rough night along with the Tors as only Lake View, the defending champs, and Lubbock Dunbar took wins on opening night.

Crane's Golden Cranes lost a 19-8 decision to AAA Fort Stockton while 7-AA loop opponents Ozona, Sonora and Kermit took victories.

REAGAN COUNTY found a few faults in a 49-6 loss to AA Ozona while District 9-A favorite Wall thumped AA Coahoma, 14-6. Four teams found wins in 9-A, and it could be a long year for the rebuilding Owls.

McCamey, who went 1-8 a year ago, lost six fumbles and ended up on the wrong end of a 20-7 score to Junction. McCamey dropped 14 points in the first quarter and that was the difference in the game. The Badgers wanted an early victory to help build a new winning attitude.

All in all, it looks a little bleak on the area grid front at this point in time. At least, there is still time to turn the trend around in the next 10 weeks.

Yanks' double loss tightens AL East

By The Associated Press

The New York Yankee lost twice, the Boston Red Sox were stranded and the Baltimore Orioles split a doubleheader — all of which closed the gap in the American League East Division race.

"Thank goodness they lost," said Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver about the Yankees. "Maybe they'll lose another."

New York Manager Billy Martin was glum but undaunted. "I'm not going to lose any sleep over it," he said of his team's double setback to the Cleveland Indians Monday, 4-3 and 5-4.

At the end of the Labor Day 11-game marathon, the Yankees held a 2½-game lead over Boston while Baltimore is four games back of New York.

Even with Monday's twin loss, the Yankees have won 24 of their last 29 games. But Monday, it was Cleveland's turn as the Indians ended a 13- game losing string against New York.

Bruce Bochte drove in five runs in the twinbill, including the game-winner in the opener, and Andre Thornton's checkedswing eight-inning bloop double scored the decisive run in the nightcap.

Tigers 8-0, Orioles 7-5

"I knew this week would get rough, but I didn't think it would get this rough the first day," said Manager Ralph Houk, whose Tigers face eight games in five days against Baltimore and Boston.

The Tigers used seven pitchers in the opener, which Detroit pulled out on Rusty Staub's two-out homer in the bottom of the 11th.

Baltimore came back in the nightcap as Rudy May, 15-12, scattered eight singles in hurling his 10th complete game and fourth shutout of the season.

Red Sox 8-6, Blue Jays 0-0

Rookie Don Aase, 4-1, hurled a three-hitter in the first game and Reggie Cleveland, 9-7, tossed a five-hitter in the second as Boston blanked Toronto twice.

A's 8-1, White Sox 7-2

Mitchell Page sparked Oakland in the opener and Wilbur Wood, 7-7, led Chicago in the nightcap as the two teams split their twinbill.

Twins 5, Rangers 4

Butch Wynegar knocked in two runs with a single and a homer as Minnesota broke a four-game losing streak. Paul Thormodsgard, 11-10, got the victory.

Texas starter Doyle Alexander, 13-10, gave up the Minnesota runs.

Royals 8, Mariners 4

Kansas City raced to its sixth consecutive victory behind Fred Patek, who scored twice and drove in two runs, and George Brett's two-run homer.

Jim Colborn, 16-13, snapped Seattle's three-game winning streak to get the victory. Dick Pole, 7-12, took the loss after lasting only 1 1-3 innings.

Brewers 6, Angels 5

Sal Bando and Sixto Lezcano slammed home runs to power Milwaukee over California and snap a four-game Brewers' losing streak.

Open crowd shows who's boss

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. (AP) — They had watched Tracy Austin, Harold Solomon and Virginia Wade, but the fans at center court at the $462,420 U.S. Open Tennis Championships weren't going home without seeing Guillermo Vilas.

A chanting crowd of more than 12,000 clapped, stamped its feet and yelled Monday until tournament officials with scheduling problems relented, agreeing to bring on Vilas and Jose Higueras of Spain.

"We won't go," they cried. "We want Vilas."

They braved a thunderstorm, waited for the court to dry and watched a steady, unemotional Vilas dispatch Higueras 6-3, 6-1.

EARLIER MONDAY, 14-year-old Miss Austin overcame the scorching forehand of Romanian Virginia Ruzici for a 6-3, 7-5 victory, and Billie Jean King needed a tie-breaker to eliminate ninth-seeded Kerry Reid of Australia 6-1, 3-6, 7-6.

Ms. Wade, the Wimbledon champion and No. 3 seed from Britain, rallied to beat Fiorella Bonicelli of Uruguay 4-6, 6-1, 6-2.

No. 5 Betty Stove of The Netherlands defeated Kathy Kuykendall of Miami 6-3, 6-0, reaching the quarter-finals against Miss Austin. No. 2 Martina Navratilova of Dallas beat Tanya Harford of Melrose, Ohio 6-0, 6-2; No. 6 Rosie Casals of Sausalito, Calif. eliminated South African Brigitte Cuypers 6-2, 1-6, 6-2, and No. 10 Mima Jausovec of Yugoslavia ousted Janet Newberry of St. Petersburg, Fla. 6-1, 6-2.

Solomon, the 12th seed from Silver Spring, Md., upset eighth-seeded Vitas Gerulaitis of Kings Point, N.Y. 7-6, 6-3. The women's No. 12 seed, Australian Wendy Turnbull, downed Barbara Jordan of King of Prussia, Pa. 6-4, 6-3.

VILAS AND HIGUERAS were kept waiting in the wings as tournament officials changed their mind several times about whether the match would be played before the daytime crowd. Officials had wanted to reschedule the match for at night when the day matches ran longer than expected. There is a separate charge for night admission and the afternoon crowd knew it.

"I think it's very nice," the 25-year-old Vilas said of the crowd's insistence on seeing him. "Better they say that than 'We hate Vilas.' I was happy, for sure."

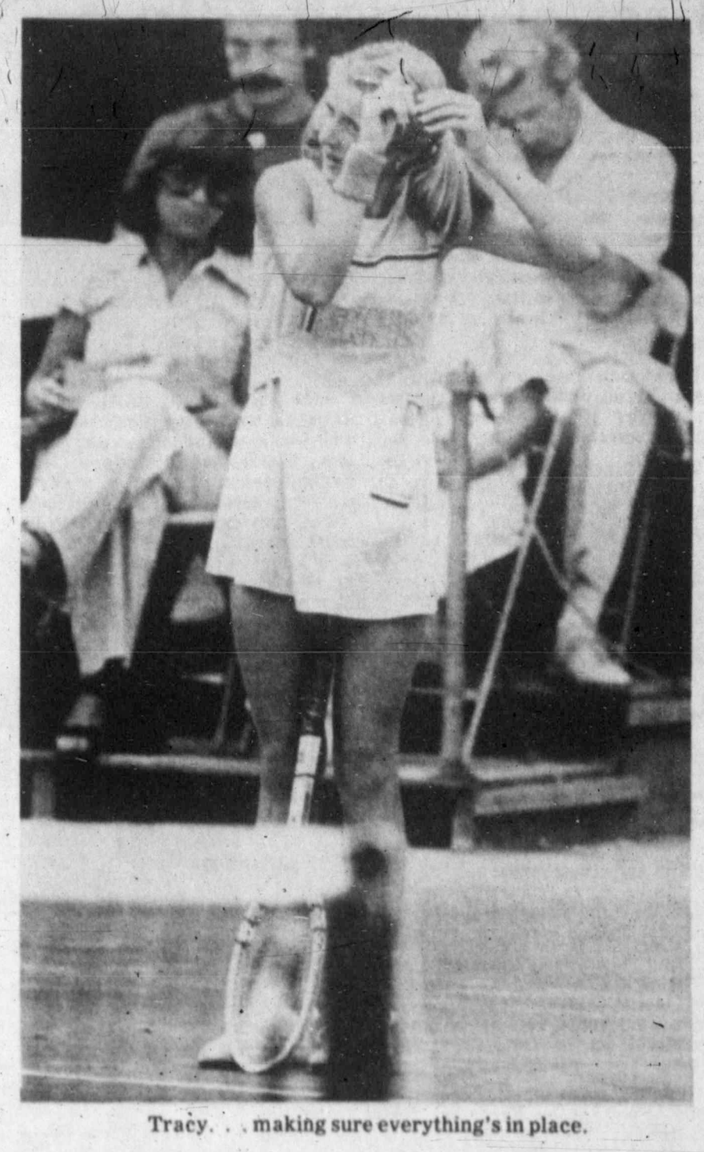

TINY TRACY, the innocent-looking ball of fire from Rolling Hills, Calif., had a far more difficult time against Miss Ruzici than she had against fourthseeded Sue Barker Sunday.

In the second set, she answered Miss Ruzici's forehand with drives to her opponent's backhand and with lobs designed to slow the pace.

"Sometimes when Virginia started hitting harder, I'd just keep hitting it back and she'd hit harder and harder until she finally made an error," Miss Austin said.

It took the 5-foot-1 dynamo 1 hour, 40 minutes to complete the kill.

Ms. King's match ended on a sour note as she swept past Mrs. Reid at the net after her victory. She was enraged because the Australian had refused to discuss the penalty point she requested when Ms. King smacked a ball over the backstop in a fit of pique.

Tracy. . . making sure everything's in place.

Falcons beat Chiefs, 24-16

By the Associated Press

Quarterback Steve Bartkowski, playing with a brace on his injured knee Monday night, led the Atlanta Falcons on a second-half surge past the Kansas City Chiefs for a 24-16 exhibition football victory.

Bartkowski sat out the first half, but came out in the third quarter and converted three KC turnovers into a pair of touchdowns and a Nick Mike-Mayer field goal while the Falcons' defense was shutting the Chiefs out.

Fought joins some 'big' company

NEWTOWN SQUARE, Pa. (AP) — Look out Jack Nicklaus, Arnold Palmer, Jerry Pate and Gene Littler: here comes someone who started the same way you did—by winning the U.S. National Amateur golf championship.

John Fought of Tualatin, Ore., had not gotten the wet grass off his spikes after winning the National Amateur Labor Day when he announced he was turning pro.

The 23-year-old Fought annihilated Doug Fischesser of Connersville, Ind. 9 and 8 in the scheduled 36-hole final over the 6,958-yard Aronimink Golf Club course.

"I am going to turn pro," said Fought, an accounting graduate from Brigham Young University. "As much as I'd like to stay an amateur, it's a nice way to go out."

FOUGHT TRIED to make it clear that while money was necessary for security, it was the love of the game and competition that motivated him to try for a PGA tour card.

"I want to play golf eight hours a day," he said. "I want to practice and improve my game. Nobody can do two things well. Golf is a game you play with pride, whether amateur or pro. Money doesn't mean anything standing next to pride."

And Fought has set his sights high.

"A lot of guys seem content to make the top 60 on the money winners' list," he said. "But I like (Jack) Nicklaus' philosophy. He tries to win every tournament. That's where the challenge is."

Fought has the confidence of a Nicklaus or a Palmer. There isn't anything he thinks he can't do on a golf course if he sets his mind to it. He wants only to be the best.

"If I make the tour, I'll try to become the best," said Fought, who works for his father's accounting firm when he isn't playing golf. "I don't think I'd like the tour as a job per se. It's the type of work I'd like to do only as long as I keep improving. I'd like to play golf the next 15 to 20 years."

As for his easy victory over Fischesser, Fought said, "I struck the ball just the way I wanted to. I didn't let a shot get away. I played the way I wanted to."

His score was ample support. Fought shot a par-70 on the first 18 and was one stroke under after the first nine of the afternoon round. He led six up after 18, eight up through 27, and closed it out on the 28th hole.

FOUGHT LOOKS like a nice, mild-mannered youngster. And he is, off the golf course. It's sort of Jekyll-Hyde stuff.

"I get so violent, so gungho," said the nation's new amateur king. "I'm nice to my opponent, polite, all the proper etiquette. But I want to kill him. If I get him two down, I want to get him six down. Stomp on him!"

Fought added, "If you get timid and let him up, he can come back and run all over you."

The victory boosted Fought's string of consecutive match play triumphs this year to 20, six in the Trans-Mississippi, five at Broadmoor, two in the Walker Cup and seven in the Amateur. He is not so fond of match play, but says that a good golfer has to be able to compete in all kinds of competition.

FOUGHT LED just one-up after nine holes of the morning round. He was still just a hole ahead after Fischesser rolled in a 30-foot birdie putt at 11.

But Fischesser, after halving 12, fell apart. He sprayed shots all over the course, behind trees, in traps, under television stanchions and in the rough. He lost five of the last six holes on the back side, four of them on bogeys, one to a Fought birdie, and they went to lunch with Fought holding a six-up lead.

Fought increased his advantage to eight-up as they made the turn in the afternoon round. Then, on the 25th, Fought hit a fairway drive, put his second on the green and two-putted from 30 feet—the last from five. Fischesser bogeyed and it was over.

Westberg takes pin title

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP)—Steve Westberg of Cottage Grove, Ore., won his second Professional Bowlers Association title in three weeks Monday night when he defeated Tommy Hudson by 118 pins to win the $60,000 Sarastoa Open.

Westberg, a 27-year-old left-hander, earned $6,000 for the victory, boosting his winnings for the year to over $27,000.

Westbert started the sixth and final round with a 217-pin lead over Dale Glenn of Glendale, Calif. and never led by less than 150 pins during the final eight fames.

"Winning this tournament feels better than winning the first one two weeks ago at Trenton, N.J.," said Westberg, a second-year pro.

Hot Astros eying second

By The Associated Press

Still think the Cincinnati Reds are going to win the National League West, do you? Would you believe third place?

The streaking Houston Astros, winners of 10 of their last 11 games, defeated Cincinnati 5-1 Monday night. They ended Tom Seaver's seven-game winning streak in the process and moved within 5½ games of the second-place Reds.

"You bet we're shooting for second place," said Houston catcher Joe Ferguson. "We've got to beat the Reds and everyone else, but we're still fighting for it."

The Reds' setback reduced Los Angeles' magic number to 15 even though the Dodgers lost 1-0 to a two-hitter by Bob Owchinko of the San Diego Padres. Meanwhile, the Philadelphia Phillies maintained a seven-game lead over Pittsburgh in the NL East by splitting a doubleheader with the Pirates, losing 3-1 then winning 11-1 for Steve Carlton's 20th victory.

Elsewhere, the Chicago Cubs downed the St. Louis Cardinals 4-2, the Atlanta Braves blanked the San Francisco Giants 4-0 and the Montreal Expos edged the New York Mets 4-3.

The Astros tagged Seaver for eight hits and all five runs in six innings, including a homer by Enos Cabell and triples by winning pitcher Mark Lemongello and Cesar Cedeno.

Lemongello held the Reds to six hits and their only run came on a homer by Seaver, who must have thought he was back with the light-hitting Mets.

"I pitched badly and I lost," Seaver said. "I didn't have my good stuff. I'm going to think about it a lot tonight and come up with some answers."

Lemongello, 7-14 after a miserable 1-11 start, hurled the Astros to their 10th triumph in 15 meetings with the Reds and said it was "almost like the World Series out there. If we could beat Cincinnati and finish second it would be fantastic. We're playing good baseball and we're a young team. In a couple of years we could be there."

Padres 1, Dodgers 0

Owchinko avenged a heartbreaking 1-0 loss to the Dodgers on July 16, a game in which he retired the first 22 batters. This time, the rookie left-hander walked one, struck out five and didn't permit a runner beyond first base. The Padres scored in the third inning when Gene Richards singled, stole his 41st base of the season, went to third on a single by Bill Almon and came home on a throwing error by first baseman Steve Garvey after pitcher Doug Rau picked Almon off.

Pirates 3-1, Phillies 1-11

Carlton became a 20-game winner for the fourth time, scattering seven hits in eight innings and rapping his third home run of the season in addition to a run-scoring single. Jay Johnstone gave him all the runs he needed with a two-run homer in the second inning.

In the opener, John Candelaria, 16-4, and Rich Gossage scattered seven hits, including a homer by Jerry Martin. Duffy Dyer connected for Pittsburgh.

"Just two more games off the schedule," said Carlton. But the Pirates weren't giving up.

"It's not over," said Manager Chuck Tanner, referring to the NL East Division race. "Things can turn around in a wek in baseball. It's over when the numbers say it's over. The Phillies led by 10 games one year (1964) and had all the banners out. They didn't get to use them."

Cubs 4, Cardinals 2

Bill Buckner drove in three runs with a homer and sacrifice fly and Larry Biittner had three hits including a solo homer to back the six-hit pitching of Dave Roberts.

"I haven't been pitching as much as I like to and I was very strong at the start," said Roberts, acquired during the summer from the Detroit Tigers.

Braves 4, Giants 0

Atlanta's Dick Ruthven hurled a three-hitter for his first shutout since his first start of the season. Jim Barr was the loser, although he threw only three pitches. Jerry Royster lined the third one off Barr's right elbow with such force that it then caromed into foul territory between home plate and third base for a hit.

Barr was taken to a hospital, where X-rays proved negative, but John Curtis replaced him and allowed three runs before getting out of the opening inning. The crowd of 2,262 was the smallest of the season for Atlanta.

Expos 4, Mets 3

Tony Perez and Ellis Valentine homered as Montreal sent Jerry Koosman, a 21-game winner last year, to his 18th loss in 26 decisions. Valentine was making his first appearance since he fouled a ball off his ankle three weeks ago.

Sniper 'daffy about war'

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A swastika-wearing white high school junior who turned an M1 carbine on a crowd of blacks at a Labor Day picnic, killing one man and wounding three other persons before killing himself, was "daffy about World War II," one of his teachers said.

Police withheld the identity of the gunman who fired at some 200 picnickers Monday while they were on an annual gathering at the Jonesville African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church.

But the Charlotte Observer today identified the youth as Kenneth Wilson, 17, who attended East Mecklenburg High School.

Acquaintances of the youth verified the gunman's identity.

Mecklenburg County police said the gunman stood about 40 feet from a softball field where some of the picnickers were playing and began firing the carbine without warning about 3 p.m.

The gunman fired 11 shots, striking four persons, as the picnickers hit the dirt and grass, police said.

The gunman then put a bullet through his throat, police said.

Lottie Carothers, organizer of the picnic, said she saw Roosevelt Davis fall from a chest wound. Davis, 29, of Charlotte, died about 20 minutes after being taken to a hospital.

"I heard a shot and saw that boy (Davis) fall backwards," she said.
