'Tractorcade' rolls through Midland

By KAY HORD

Midlanders stranded temporarily at intersections or standing on sidewalks waved and gave the "thumbs-up" signal to farmers in approximately 55 tractors and 15 pickups rolling through town this morning in Midland's first tractorcade.

Strike-supporting farmers from Midland, Midkiff and St. Lawrence joined ranks at Midland Farmers Coop and were led through downtown Midland on Texas Avenue by Midland Police.

Some of the farmers had their wives and families with them. Most onlooking Midlanders seemed not to mind the demonstration.

"This is really neat," bystander David Sapp of Midland said. "Let the public know what they're doing. I didn't think they'd ever come to Midland."

At one point, the six-block-long procession blocked intersections along Texas Avenue from Front to Colorado avenues, forcing motorists to stop on icy intersections in downtown Midland.

"We don't mind waiting for the tractors to pass. They've got a point, I guess, and if they want to have a little demonstration, we'll back them and watch," Dal Davis said as he sat in his pickup.

"We're with them," said Wanda Roedl. "I think it's great," Darlene Green said, as the pair huddled in a doorway trying to keep warm while reading the signs on the tractors and pickups.

"If we had not shown up today, people would have said, look at the farmer; they chickened out on us. Continuing with the demonstration in this weather shows we really mean business," said Midland farmer Danny Robertson.

"We work in all kinds of weather, so this is nothing new to farmers," said Midkiff farmer Tommy Thompson. Robertson and Thompson both drove tractors in the procession.

Hospital room rate increasing

By LINDA HILL SCHAFFRINA

Midland Memorial Hospital will increase its room rates by $10 a day, effective Feb. 1, Mickey Cappadonna, president of the hospital board of trustees, announced today.

The increase was approved at the trustees' regular monthly meeting Thursday afternoon, Cappadonna said.

The increase will bring the average rate for a private room to $89.

"We're fully aware of the promises we made last year prior to the election for the Midland County Hospital District," Cappadonna said. He said the trustees had promised it would be possible to rebuild and remodel the hospital without a room increase.

"Technically, we are keeping this promise in that none of the tax money is allocated for the daily operation of the hospital," Cappadonna said.

The trustee said the increase will be used only for daily operation of the Coming Sunday...

The Reporter-Telegram will publish its annual, oil, business and progress edition, West Texas Permorama '78, Sunday.

The mammoth edition — 84 more pages than the regular Sunday edition — recounts some of the history of Midland and many of its individuals. It also details the city's progress during 1977 and takes a look into the future.

Extra copies can be purchased, starting Monday, at the lobby counter in the Reporter-Telegram Building.

Midland may not be the entertainment capital of Texas, but there are a variety of places to go for an evening out.

In Sunday's West Texas Life, the first of a two-part series on night life in Midland will include a guide to places to go dancing.

Are independent truckers supporting the farmers' strike?

The farmers say yes. The truckers say no.

Explosion shatters hotel windows

By ED TODD

An explosion at the base of the 11-story Midland Hilton Inn at 7:10 a.m. today shattered windows, knocked out the power to the hotel and jammed elevators.

No one was hurt in the pre-dawn blast, which apparently was set off by a malfunctioning capacitor bank alongside a row of electrical transformers on the east side of the Hilton.

"(It was) a helluva concussion, don't you know," said Midland fireman Pete Natividad, as he observed the shattered windows in third, fifth and sixth floors of the hotel and in the Oil & Gas Building just across the alley.

An hour after the blast, the hotel's emergency generators were supplying power to service lights, such as those in the stairways.

Midlander Donn McGuire happened by the Hilton at the moment of the blast.

"It was a good-size boom; it gave me a jump, anyway," said McGuire, 28, a geophysicist, who was walking to his downtown office in the freshly-fallen snow.

He was across the street from the Hilton when the hotel's lights blinked off at the moment of the explosion.

"There was a great big puff of smoke, but there wasn't any fire," McGuire said.

At that moment, Los Angeles businessman Mike Giulianotti became trapped in the elevator that had been whisking him from the eighth floor downward. He was dressed for breakfast and business.

The elevator stopped on just above the fourth floor.

Within 30 minutes of the blast, however, Midland firemen pried open the fourth-floor doors to the elevator shaft.

Giulianotti then lowered himself onto the shoulders of fire-fighters James Snider and Pete Natividad, planted himself on the hallway and went about his business.

"I didn't hear any explosion," Giulianotti said. "I knew the power went out."

Snow causes number of minor accidents

Shortly before noon today, police had investigated approximately 25 minor traffic accidents attributed to today's snowfall, according to a spokesman for the Police Department.

Travel advisories for the Midland area were issued for tonight by the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Snow fell intermittently this morning, but became heavier and mixed with sleet shortly after noontime today. Reports indicated accumulations of one to one and a half inches of snow in various spots in Midland.

Interstate 20 from Midland to El Paso was layered with snow but there were no reports of ice on the road, according to the DPS.

Driving in the Dallas-Fort Worth area was described as hazardous by a DPS spokesman.

A 60 percent chance of continued snow is predicted for tonight and a 20 percent is predicted for Saturday.

According to a spokesman for the DPS, Ozona, Lubbock and San Angelo all reported normal weather.

"Apparently the storm is a very narrow strip extending from Pecos east down Interstate Highway 20," the spokesman said.

According to spokesmen for the airlines and bus lines, transportation in Texas has not been canceled due to weather.

At 8 a.m. today, Andrews reported about one inch of snow, Stanton about one-half inch, Rankin heavy snow, Big Lake about three inches and Crane heavy snow.

At 8:30 a.m., Lamesa had received no snow, but it was beginning to snow in Big Spring.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal forecasts a continued winter storm watch for tonight with a chance of snow accumulation tonight. Low tonight should be in the mid-20s, and the high Saturday should be near 40.

Winds should be variable at 5 to 10 mph tonight. Chance of snow tonight is 40 percent, and chance of snow Saturday is 20 percent.

'Texan of the Year' award goes to Mahon

NEW BRAUNFELS — The dean of the U.S. Congress, George Herman Mahon, has been named "Texan of the Year" by the Texas Legislative Conference. The Texas Legislative Conference is an annual event held in New Braunfels and co-sponsored by the Texas State Chamber of Commerce and the New Braunfels Chamber of Commerce.

The announcement was made jointly by H.E. Knox, chairman of the Arrangements Committee for the conference, and Joe Kilgore of Austin, who is chairman of the Conference Advisory Committee. This is the fifth such award presented by the conference with previous recipients being Judge Robert W. Calvert, Leon Jaworski,, Lady Bird Johnson and Gov. Dolph Briscoe. The award ceremony will take place at a "Texan of the Year" reception on March 2 in the New Braunfels Civic Center.

Mahon, who has announced he will retire on completion of his present term of office, became a member of the U.S. House of Representatives in November 1934. He was elected to the position of chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations in 1964, and continues to serve in that position. This position and his long tenure of office have helped to make him what many persons term "one of the most powerful men in the U.S. government."

Mahon was born in Louisiana in 1900 but his family moved to West Texas in 1908. He was reared on a cotton farm in West Texas, graduated from Loraine High School, and received a B.A. degree from Simmons College, now Hardin-Simmons University, Abilene. He received a law degree from The University of Texas Law School in 1925.

Mahon has received many awards during his years of public service but has yet to be honored by the entire State of Texas for the outstanding contribution in the field of public affairs to Texas and the nation.

Mahon will be present at the reception in New Braunfels and then will open the Texas Legislative Conference the morning of March 3.

Keep pecan trees warm

Midland County Extension Agent Charlie Green today warned recent and prospective buyers of pecan trees being sold by two local organizations to keep the trees in a warm place during the current cold spell.

Green said the trees will be "fine and will live three weeks or a month (unplanted) as long as they are stored somewhere warm.

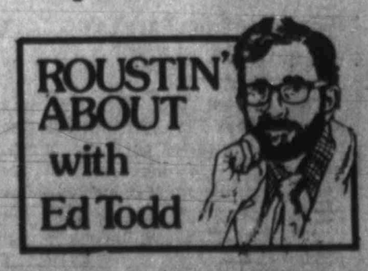

"It is very important that these people do not keep their trees in their yards."

Green added that owners of the trees should wait until a warm day before planting the young trees.

"The root system is packaged and this is going to keep a lot of cold off the tree" but they should be kept "anywhere out of the cold weather and wind."

The sale of five to six feet high pecan trees at $8 each is a joint venture of the Visual Improvement Project of the Midland Chamber of Commerce and The Midland Reporter-Telegram. Trees had been "presold" earlier at the chamber, and will go on sale at The Reporter-Telegram's employee parking lot beginning Saturday.

Nothing like snowfall to change city's look

There's nothing like a snowfall to change the appearance of a West Texas city that gets far more drifting and blowing sand than snow in any season.

Unless you are a rare one who has an aversion for nature's white wintery blessing, snow miraculously can bring with it an uplift in man's too-often drab outlook.

Unless you happen to live in it year-round, the fallen snow can be refreshing . . . until you're jinxed and end up doing some slipping, sliding and panging.

Thank the heavens for the snow. Literally.

In another season, it's comparable to unhurriedly listening to raindrops pattering on a hay loft's tin roof.

For many in other places, snow means skiing. For ski enthusiasts in Midland, it simply means getting to the snow-covered Slopes and taking it from there.

And for all those Midlanders who hail from the more snow-given country far to the north, the temporal

Gas curtailment follows 'policy'

By JIM STEINBERG and LINDA HILL SCHAFFRINA

The curtailment of natural gas experienced by about a dozen Midland businesses Thursday and continuing for two until shortly after 9 a.m. today follows a rigidly established policy adopted by the Texas Railroad Commission three years ago, an official of the Texas Railroad Commission said Thursday.

The Railroad Commission "curtailment order" established priorities causing "the minimum islocation of individuals" during a natural gas cutback, said Art Lorton of the commission's gas utilities section in Austin.

Lorton noted that the curtailment actions Thursday due to the massive cold weather front were not unique to West Texas. Similar actions were being taken in east and north Texas, he said.

"The problem is not so much cold weather as it is sustained cold weather," said Bob Mills, public relations director of Pioneer Natural Gas Co. in Amarillo, who explained the cutbacks Thursday.

Those curtailments were system-wide throughout the area served by Pioneer.

"It's not so much what the temperature is in Midland and Odessa that determines whether a cutback is needed, the real factor is the system-wide demand. The strange thing about this system is that it may be terribly cold in one portion and not so cold in another. As it turns out, there are fewer demand-days in Midland and Odessa than in most parts of the system," Mills said.

Lorton noted that Pioneer Gas had submitted a curtailment plan to the Railroad Commission that "closely resembled" the guidelines of the commission. In addition to weighing human factors in the establishment of the gas curtailment "pecking orders," Lorton said, the availablility of alternate sources of fuel such as oil, were considered.

The structure of the "curtailment order" enables gas pipeline companies to "maximize economies" by allowing them to sign up high demand users, while not forcing them to guarantee natural gas delivery during "peak days" during the year, Lorton said.

The statement by Lorton echoed one made by Pioneer spokesman Miss: "It's just not economically feasible for us to build a system to handle this type of demand (on the peak days)."

Mills said the widespread curtailment was made necessary Thursday in an effort to equalize the transmission line system pressures in the north with those in the south.

Lorton noted that industrial users sign a contract with the understanding that they will be subject to curtailment. And the price they pay for natural gas is well below what another user, such as an office building, would pay.

"I suppose if they wanted to be guaranteed a supply of natural gas, they could pay much higher price and the suppliers would only be happy to make modifications in the pipeline to supply them," Lorton said.

When asked what the prospects are for a city like Midland to get the natural gas it needs to keep pace with the increase in future demand, Lorton said, "At the prices non-industrial users pay for natural gas, I would think any company would be happy to expand pipeline facilities to serve them."

Mills said that during 1977 approximately 6,500 new customers were added to the Pioneer system. During 1976, he noted, 22 miles of 12-inch pipeline were added along the routes of existing lines. Gigures for pipeline expansion in 1977 are not available yet, he said.

Farmers return to Capitol Hill

WASHINGTON — More than 5,000 farmers returned for the second day in a row to Capitol Hill Thursday to press Congress for higher farm prices before about 200 of the more militant farmers marched into the Agriculture Department and took over the office of Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland.

The sit-in was the latest in a series of disruptions by the increasingly angry and vocal farmers in their Washington crusade to gain farm prices equal in buying power to those paid their ancestors 60 years ago. Earlier in the day, confrontation-minded truckers sympathetic to the farmers' plight, blockaded morning rush hour traffic on the 14th Street Bridge leading from suburban Virginia making many commuters late for work in Washington

As farmers left Bergland's office late Thursday afternoon, many of them shouted barnyard epithets at Deputy Secretary John C. White. Bergland was reported enroute to Washington from Colorado.

There were several tense confrontations between police and the farmers as they marched back and forth between the Capitol and the Agriculture Department.

His aim was to keep the crowd entertained for several moments before the rodeo cowboys conjured up entertainment on a bucking bronco, twisting bull or a running steer.

Taillon was talking about steer wrestling and how the task was best suited to the heavy weights on the rodeo circuit, but not entirely . . . .

"A big man has a certain advantage in this sport, particularly if he's agile and fast . . . and yet . . . .," said Taillon, who admitted that the wiry cowhand with the know-how can bring down stubborn steer.

Efforts to re-open negotiations fail

By BARRY SCHWEID

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance apparently failed today to persuade President Anwar Sadat to quickly revive the EgyptianIsraeli peace talks. Sadat denounced Israeli "arrogance" and the "twisting" of peace efforts.

NBC News reported, meanwhile, that it has learned Sadat might fly to Washington Sunday for talks with President Carter and that Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin might also go to Washington. There was no official confirmation of the report in the Mideast or in Washington.

Sadat told reporters after conferring with Vance that the political negotiations with Israel can be resumed only if the Israelis agree not to "tread on anyone's sovereignty" by insisting on maintaining settlements in Sinai.

Israel's position on the settlements is "a joke," he said.

"The whole approach to peace is being twisted. We are losing time," he said.

The Egyptian leader did not say what the next step might be but, responding to questions at a news conference, he said Egypt would study alternatives brought to him by Vance. He did not divulge any detals.

Vance said, "The door for peace is not closed."

Sadat's comments reaffirmed that the gulf between the two sides that led to his suspension of the talks in Jerusalem was still wide.

At the same time, he said, there was an agreement to resume the work of an IsraeliEgyptian military committee in Cairo but it was unclear whether this had Israel's approval.

"They want land, they want security, they want everything," Sadat said of the Israelis, "and they are not ready to understand that peace cannot be achieved without justice."

Sadat accused Begin of arrogance, his most outspoken direct criticism of the Israeli leader since Sadat visited Jerusalem two months ago and started the peace process.

"Mr. Begin in his arrogant way said in the Knesset (parliament) that he does not need recognition of anyone here," Sadat said. "Very well, let us not start commenting on this because it is still the old arrogant way, and today or tomorrow he will see that Israel will not gain by it at all."

Sadat is scheduled to make a major address to the Egyptian People's Assembly Saturday in which he will explain his view of what went on in Jerusalem and probably define his future course of action.

"Peace, everyone in the whole world knows that no one will tread on the land or the sovereignty of the other," Sadat declared.

He spoke to reporters on the lawn of his Nile-side retreat 15 miles north of Cairo, where Vance was helicoptered for talks after his arrival from Jerusalem.

American officials said even if Vance failed to repair the current rupture, the peace process will continue, possibly with another mission by the secretary of state after a cooling-off period.

Vance is appealing to Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin to call off the public war of words and resume the private negotiations between their foreign ministers which Sadat suspended Wednesday.

American Agriculture Movement, followed a route mapped out by Midland police and the farmers. According to a spokesman for the Police Department, the tractorcade had caused no traffic problems through the lunch period today.

'In fact, we got too many (units) out on them," the spokesman said. Five patrol units and several three-wheel scooters were accompanying the procession. "We've had no problems."

A spokesman for the Department of Public Safety verified that a DPS helicopter was "keeping an eye" on the tractorcade.

Final destination for the farmers before they were to return home was to be Midland Regional Air Terminal.

District to assume ownership of Midland Memorial Hospital

The Midland County Hospital District is scheduled to assume ownership of Midland Memorial Hospital April 3, district directors were told at their Thursday afternoon meeting.

Frank Cowden Jr., president of the board, said $10 million in bonds are to be sold Feb. 22, but the district will not receive the money until April 3.

Transfer of assets owned by Midland Memorial Foundation to the district is scheduled for April 3, auditor Frank Kubica said.

The only exceptions to the asset transfer, counsel Ted Kerr said, are that the foundation will continue to administer a special scholarship fund for nurses and to collect the approximately $120,000 in funds pledged to previous building projects at the hospital.

Also Thursday, the directors approved a management contract with Midland Menorial Foundation. The agreement had been approved earlier Thursday by the Midland Memorial board of trustees.

Under the terms of the contract, the foundation, through the trustees, will continue to manage Midland Memorial. The contract goes into effect the same day the foundation transfers assets to the hospital district.

The directors also approved the tax rolls for the hospital district for 1978. Total assessed valuation, which is 75 percent of market value, is $1,014,485,660, less the effect of a homestead exemption for the elderly in the Greenwood community, Kerr said.

The trustees approved a $6,000 homestead tax exemption for those over 65 years old. That is the same exemption granted by Midland College, the city of Midland and the Midland Independent School District.

In other discussion, Kerr proposed a preliminary plan which calls for six polling places within the city for the April directors election. Representatives of the city, college, Midland school district and hospital district are to meet and discuss plans for the joint election, Kerr said.

The directors agreed to look into the possibility of having a joint election with the Greenwood Independent School District, so voters in that district will not have to vote in two places.

Also meeting Thursday was the Midland Memorial Hospital board of trustees. At that meeting, Mickey Cappadonna was re-elected president of that board; Tevis Herd was elected vice president, and John Grimland, secretary.

"It just shook the hell out of me," he said of the solid "boom." "I was watching the world news."

Elmore said 600 reformed alcoholics will be in Midland for the three-day conference that kicks off tonight.

"That's an alcoholic's luck," he said of the power failure. "They're always unlucky."

If there was any "luck," it was that no one was injured in the blast.

Hotel guests, using candle light, later were drinking coffee in the ground-floor restaurant.

The atmosphere was relaxed and unhurried.

Grace White of Waco and formerly of Midland was quietly sitting in a lobby chair. A navy-blue coat was draped over her legs. When the lights went out so did the heat, only much more slowly.

"Nothing bothers me," said the gray-haired widow of oil operator J. M. White. "There's nothing you can do about it."

hospital and was made necessary by escalation of costs.

The largest cost increase was almost $800,000 in increased salaries for an increase for personnel of approximately 14 percent and an average of 20 percent in increases for nursing personnel to alleviate the "critical shortage of nurses," Cappadonna said.

Other cost increases have come in such things as utilities, laundry, workman's compensation, and drugs, he said.

He said he expects the rate increases to add about $400,000 in revenue to the hospital this year.

"This is the last raise our board will have the authority to make. For any other across-the-board increases, we will have to go to the hospital district," Cappadonna said. "Our people (the board) did not feel like we should shirk this burden...and pass this deficit along to the hospital district."

Cappadonna said the hospital district directors were not informed of the increase until after the directors' Thursday afternoon meeting.

Cappadonna said he expects this rate increase to be sufficient for about a year. The last increase in room rates was in November 1976.

The new rate schedule is as follows: four-bed wards, $70; average semi-private room, $73; average private room, $89; suites, $115; intensive care unit, $140; cardiac care unit, $160, and nursery, $60.

Hance tells Rotary of NAACP 'threat'

Because of the opposition of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to the Carter energy program, the 14 or so black congressmen who voted for it may find themselves in political hot water.

State Sen. Kent Hance of Lubbock, a candidate for the 19th Congressional District seat being vacated by the retirement of Rep. George Mahon, made this point in an overall discussion of energy at the Midland Rotary luncheon here Thursday.

Hance cited the opposition to the Carter plan of another bastion of the liberal establishment, Harper's Magazine, as another indication of how faulty the White House-backed legislation really is.

He said the plan was the joint product of Republican thinking — that of energy czar James Schlesinger — and of Democratic thinking — that of President Carter — and that, together, they had produced an "idiotic" program.

He said NAACP opposition to the Carter plan was based on careful research by that group, which concluded that the plan would do nothing to help bring down the high rate of black unemployment.

Hance said that if the Crude Oil Equalization Tax, a part of Carter's plan, was passed, it would cost the people of Texas $278 per person, and cost other Americans in other states only $135 per person.

Hance does not believe the crude oil tax will pass the Congress, at least not anytime soon.

He expects, he said, that relatively minor features of the program, such as the coal conversion and the utility conversion features, will pass in the next month or so.

Hance's opponent in the May Democratic primary will be Morris Sheats, minister of a non-denominational church in Lubbock. In the Republican primary, George Bush, Jim Reese and Col. Joe Hickox, will battle it out.

Carter speech criticized; proposals felt inadequate

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's long State of the Union agenda, while drawing the expected praise from Democratic leaders, is encountering some complaints that may signal a renewal of the problems that marked his first year of dealing with Congress.

Carter's first State of the Union message before a joint session, while interrupted 43 times by applause, brought criticism from Republicans and a few Democrats who felt the president's proposals were inadequate to deal with the nation's most pressing problems.

In a 50-page compendium of proposals accompanying his speech, Carter said the year's top priorities are a strong energy bill, creating new jobs, reducing taxes, eliminating inequities in the tax laws, revamping the federal Civil Service system and ratifying the Panama Canal treaty.

Carter was criticized last year for overburdening the legislative process with too many proposals and for not consulting sufficiently with congressional leaders. The problems were most visible in connection with his energy program, which Carter had said would be the judge of his first year in office — and which fell into a congressional quagmire.

House Minority Leader John Rhodes immediately linked the program to the last session, calling the program "a collection of cliches which, like the administration's record so far, lacked focus and direction."

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., one of Carter's most effective allies, said Carter's chiding of Congress for failing to act on the energy package was "on the mark."

Carter, addressing the continuing energy bill deadlock, said, "We have failed the American people. ... Not much longer can we tolerate this stalemate."

But the president suggested no new approach that might break the deadlock that has persisted for months.

Carter called for voluntary restraints to control prices and wages. Rep. Paul Simon of Illinois, a liberal Democrat, said the call was "a little anemic. ...The president should be asking for standby wage and price controls."

The president also proposed a $25 billion tax cut, coupled with a revision of the tax laws, a move certain to generate a long and bitter debate on Capitol Hill.

Two members of the Senate Finance Committee, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas and Sen. William V. Roth of Delaware, both Republicans, attacked the tax cut proposal.

Dole said Carter's proposal "offered token tax relief to the American people while increasing Social Security and energy taxes by many more billions." Roth said the tax cut "is neither big, bold nor beneficial."

Two other major Carter proposals, the Civil Service revamping and creating a cabinet-level Department of Education, also seem sure to run into strong opposition.

On the Education Department issue, for example, the National Education Association and the American Federation of Teachers already have split on the proposal, and special interest groups are lining up for and against the idea based on how they see it affecting their favorite projects.

For two days, farmers have clogged roads leading into Washington with their tractors and have picketed the Capitol, the White House and government agencies in their campaign to dramatize their demand for higher crop prices to offset spiraling costs of production.

He said the farm bill passed last year would "help a great deal" but added that "it's incumbent on us to monitor very carefully the farm situation and continue to work harmoniously with the farmers of our country.

"What's best for the farmers, the farm families in the long run, is best for the consumers of our country."

But Carter offered no specific proposals to raise prices paid to farmers and it is too early to tell whether the farmer protests are generating enough support in Congress for early action with or without White House recommendations.

Turning to foreign policy, the president appealed for ratification of the Panama Canal treaty, which he described as "important and controversial" but which he said would "discourage the spread of hostile ideologies in this hemisphere, and directly contribute to the economic well-being and security of the United States."

His appeal drew prolonged applause. Carter grinned as it died down and quipped, "I have to say that's very welcome applause."

Sen. Harrison Williams Jr. of New Jersey, another Democrat normally among Carter's allies, said he was "frankly a little disappointed in his lack of detail on mass transit."

As chairman of the Senate Human Resources Committee, Williams has a key role in handling many of Carter's domestic proposals.

Italian premiere asked to form government

By BERNARD D. NOSSITER
The Washington Post

ROME — Premiere Giulio Andreotti, whose government fell on Monday, was asked Thursday night to form another and lead Italy out of its political crisis.

The invitation from President Giovanni Leone was widely predicted. But Andreotti, a Christian Democrat like all the other premieres here since 1943, faces a long and difficult task.

His last government, the third he has headed, was brought down by the Communists, Italy's second biggest party. Andreotti is now expected to go back to those very same Communists to see if he can regain their support.

On paper, the Communists are demanding as the price for their support seats in a Christian Democrat cabinet. The U.S. State Department has publicly declared that Washington opposes any such deal.

In private, Communist leaders here make it plain that they will settle for less. But how much less of a share in decision-making and lower political profile they will accept is unknown.

How much Andreotti can give is also in question. A strong and militant wing of his party opposes any new deal and wants an election.

But most politicians here can think of dozens of reasons why they should not now face the voters. Among them is the fear that political terrorism, the worst in Europe, will be stepped up and an election campaign will spark more killings, bombings and kidnappings.

Thursday night at the Quirinale, the presidential palace, Andreotti told reporters he knew his minority Christian Democrats faced a hard job in trying to reform their government.

"I do not hide the difficulties," he said. "The positions of the parties are rather divergent."

He stressed that the first requirement of any new government is "to restore tranquility to all our cities," a reference to the terrorist wave. The second he said was finding more jobs, especially for the young, in a nation where unemployment is 8 percent and rising.

But the premier-designate gave no hint of how much more of a share in decision making he would offer the Communists or what common program they might agree on.

One shrewd Christian Democrat put Andreotti's problem this way: "He must invent a formula that lets us say Communists are not part of the majority and also enables the Communists to say they are."

This sort of trick sounds impossible but Italian politicians have turned it before. The betting that Andreotti will succeed, however, is no more than 50-50.

If he fails, an election is the ultimate solution. But that would mean even more months of paralyzed government in a country that must make hard decisions quickly on tough issues of economics and law and order.

Bell summons Marston to discuss dismissal

WASHINGTON (AP) — David Marston, who is fighting his removal as U.S. attorney in Philadelphia, is heading to see Attorney General Griffin Bell for a meeting that may decide how long Marston stays in his job.

Bell summoned Marston and the U.S. attorney's four top assistants to Washington to discuss the Carter administration's plans to fire the Republican prosecutor.

Today's scheduled meeting comes on the heels of new confirmation Thursday that Marston's office is investigating the law office of Rep. Joshua Eilberg, D-Pa., the congressman who urged President Carter to replace Marston.

The matter sparked a growing controversy after Carter disclosed last week that at Eilberg's urging in November he had asked Bell to speed up Marston's ouster. Bell later said he already had intended to replace him, and the administration has denied knowledge of any investigation of Eilberg until this week.

It was learned Thursday that there has been some sentiment in the Justice Department to keep Marston in his job in hopes of rescuing the administration from further embarrassment.

At least one high-ranking department official has said privately that Bell may be better off settling his differences with Marston.

The official, who asked to remain anonymous, described Marston as inexperienced in trial work and insubordinate for challenging Bell and Carter publicly.

But the official, in outlining a rationale for keeping Marston in the post, said Bell might decide it is "in the best interest of criminal justice" to retain him.

Other administration officials suggested that the 35-year-old U.S. attorney, who has 2½ years remaining in his four-year term, might be allowed to stay on until pending investigations are completed.

Marston's first assistant, Kirk Karaszkiewicz, said that Bell's deputy, Michael Egan, called Marston Thursday and said the attorney general wanted to meet with him.

"Nothing else was said," Karaszkiewicz related. The five men were scheduled to take a train to the capital and meet with Bell at 2 p.m.

Policy breakthrough

A casual announcement by President Carter while en route home from France could be the most constructive development in the Middle East negotiations since Egyptian President Anwar Sadat went to Jerusalem.

During an interview with newsmen which was embargoed until the evening of Jan. 8, Mr. Carter said the United States had decided to rule out a separate nation for Palestinians residing in the disputed West Bank and Gaza Strip areas occupied by Israel since the 1967 war. The president suggested that self-determination options for the Palestinians be restricted to an alignment with Jordan or some form of international administration.

Although he was not explicit on this point, one may assume that, in setting forth the new U.S. position, Mr. Carter was summarizing the net results of his conference with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat a few days previous at Aswan, Egypt. Even with President Carter's penchant for impulsive statements, which later have to be revised, it seems unlikely that he would announce such a fundamentally new policy without Egypt's approval. Heretofore, the Egyptians have insisted that home rule for the Palestinians would have to include the possibility of independent state if they so elected.

Ruling out an independent Palestinian state would remove the largest single obstacle to an overall peace settlement, and it would permit lesser issues to be addressed more quickly. Israel has never wavered in its adamant opposition to such an entity at its heart. With considerable reason, the Israelis fear an independent Palestinian state would fall under the control of the militant, radical Palestinian Liberation Organization and constitute a mortal peril. Now, the Israelis should be able to find some acceptable accommodation within the broad framework that President Carter has described. Pale by comparison are such difficulties as the future status of Israeli settlements in the Sinai, particularly in view of the Israeli cabinet's decision against establishing any more of them there.

Those who balk at the president's statement because it offers the Palestinians less than the ideal should not forget that limited self-rule is more felicitous than anything fate has given these people to date. It was the Arabs themselves who first denied the Palestinians the independent state promised them by the United Nations resolution creating the state of Israel in 1947. When five Arab nations attacked Israel in 1948, Jordan conquered and annexed what would have been the new Arab state, Palestine, on the West Bank of the Jordan River, and Egypt occupied the Gaza Strip.

For almost 20 years under Jordanian rule, nothing was heard in the councils of the world about the creation of a Palestinian homeland except on the soil of Israel itself; certainly Jordan entertained no notion of surrendering the West Bank to Palestinian refugees as their independent homeland. Ironically, it was Israel's conquest of the area during the 1967 war that provided the possibility of a belated, if limited, fulfillment of the original United Nations' mandate.

Although Arabs in the West Bank have prospered as never before through their close links since 1967 with Israel's expanding economy, they have been restive under their light but alien yoke. Moreover, they have been a problem and an embarrassment to the Israelis, who are not at ease in their role as military occupiers. Therefore, in an imperfect world, the compromise solution that President Carter has suggested, with the implied concurrence of President Sadat, seems to offer the best possible alternative at this time. We must hope the Israelis will recognize this opportunity for what it is and join the Egyptians and other moderate Arab nations in grasping the peace that now appears to be within reach for the first time.

CHARLEY REESE:

Uganda president termed 'equal opportunity killer'

By CHARLEY REESE
Sun Belt Syndicate

ORLANDO, Fla. — Idi Amin, the fat, dumb thug who calls himself president of Uganda and Lord of all the Beasts of the Earth and Fishes of the Sea, has murdered almost one million people.

He also has surrounded himself with mercenaries from Sudan, Lybya, the Palestine Liberation Organization, and Cuba.

Remigius Kintu, executive secretary of the Committee on Uganda, is traveling the country, telling Americans these facts in the hope that they will help him, and other Ugandans, destroy the murderous dictator.

"Amin is an equal opportunity killer," Kintu said. "There is no group or tribe in Uganda that has escaped his killers. He killed his own wife and his father. You can't get closer to a man than that."

Kintu is an accountant, a graduate of St. Mary's College and Howard University. He found himself isolated in 1972 — unable to return to his own country if he wished to stay alive. Amin has a particularly murderous bias against educated Ugandans. Some of Kintu's friends who couldn't believe what they were hearing, returned to Uganda and were promptly picked up and executed.

Kintu and some friends formed the committee that Thanksgiving Day in 1972 with the original idea of raising money to provide scholarships so Ugandan youths could come to the U.S. and study. At that time, Amin's atrocities were not widely known; Kintu's efforts to tell people often met with disbelief.

Then Amin murdered an archbishop and his shocking behavior, or at least some of it, became known to the rest of the world. Kintu and his friends decided to push harder.

"There is no question Amin will die with a bullet," Kintu said. "There is no question about that. He knows it, too. When he makes it to his bed at night still breathing, he knows he has accomplished something. He has no long range plans. He just hopes he can survive tomorrow."

So far Amin has survived largely because a number of American corporations buy Ugandan coffee. In 1975 and 1976, 33 U.S. companies bought 242 million pounds for $158 million, money which Amin uses to pay his mercenaries and to buy weapons from the Soviet Union.

Folger's bought the largest amount — 53 million pounds for $33.6 million. General Foods, which markets Maxwell House, Maxim, Sanka, Yuban, and Brim was the second largest purchaser.

U.S. Rep. Don J. Pease, D-Ohio, has worked with Kintu and the free Ugandans and has introduced legislation that would prohibit the importing of Ugandan coffee or other products as well as stop American firms from exporting to Uganda.

Until newsmen blew the whistle, U.S. firms were training Amin's pilots. Amin's cousin is still at Emory Riddle, a flight school in Daytona Beach, Fla., but he is, according to school officials, paying his own way.

Interestingly, Kintu said that not one of the 17 black U.S. congressmen will help them pass the legislation. Some of them, Kintu said, tell him privately that too many of their black constituents admire Amin for brutalizing whites.

"I tell them that they should tell their constituents that Amin may have kicked the white man's (expletive deleted) but that he is murdering the black man's," Kintu said.

"But we don't need the black congressman," Kintu said. "I believe there are enough votes among both liberals and conservatives to pass this legislation. Without those coffee dollars, Amin cannot survive. He will not be able to pay his mercenaries and he has no Ugandan support. He has literally destroyed the country. There is no economy left."

Kintu said his own father is a coffee grower but that stopping the companies from buying will not make any difference.

"Amin confiscates the coffee from the growers and sells it. He gives the growers chits which are worthless and never redeemed," he said.

If you are interested in this business, the numbers of the bills are H.R. 9524, 9526 and 9522. Kintu can be reached at P.O. Box 4626, Arlington, Va., 22204.

He hopes, by appealing to people's sense of decency, to enlist help not only to force Amin out, but in the meantime to provide some assistance to thousands of refugees who are living in misery in different parts of Africa. Eventually, he hopes to restore to Uganda a government that will in his words, ". . . promote, protect and preserve life, property, education, culture and Christianity."

Remigius Kintu is a brave and intelligent man. If Amin's PLO or Cuban friends don't kill him, he will probably emerge one day as one of the new Africa's great leaders. He has that look about him.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Warsaw visit hits double 'pays'

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — Confidential cables from Warsaw report that President Carter's recent whirlwind visit accomplished the diplomatic miracle of boosting both the Edward Gierek regime and the Polish dissidents at the same time.

Quoting Polish sources, the U.S. embassy reported that the president's visit probably "strengthened First Secretary Gierek to the extent that no leadership changes are now likely."

But the embassy's sources were also worried that "the strengthening of Gierek's authority may pull the rug out from under dissidents, making it more difficult for them to operate."

This fear apparently was not shared by the dissidents themselves. Three men, described in a confidential cable as "well known critics of the regime," told the embassy: "We are all thrilled with the President's visit. It gave us new inspiration. We know we are not alone. We don't expect the U.S. to do anything for us materially, but the President's support is immensely important to us."

In defiance of the communist regime, Carter also answered questions from an underground newspaper whose reporters were barred by the Polish authorities from the president's press conference. He offered written responses, personally signed on each page, to questions on human rights fron the dissident paper Opinia.

His answers, though cautiously phrased, were bold by diplomatic standards. In response to a question about the Helsinki human rights agreenent, he said it would be "inappropriate for one country formally to demand that another fulfill obligations of that agreement." But he added: "It would be appropriate for one signatory of that agreement to call attention to the violations of another."

Carter called for "periodic conferences" as the "best way" to deal with the Helsinki obligations. And he declared that "detente must involve not only governments but must also be supported and encouraged by non-official individuals and groups."

In a cable from Warsaw, the embassy reported that the editor had telephoned to say he had received Carter's answers. "I am very proud," he told the embassy. The president's recognition of a struggling dissident paper, said the editor, was "a very high honor and a nice New Year's gift."

The Carter visit, according to a classified report, was followed in Poland by a deluge of pro-Soviet publicity. This was "designed to counterbalance the reporting on President Carter," the report suggested.

One source was quoted by the embassy as saying the pro-Soviet stories were "an attempt to make sure that no one thinks anything has changed. But in fact, it has." For the president's trip "had great political impact."

Footnote: At the sane time that Carter pleased the dissidents "by taking the Helsinki agreements seriously," reported the embassy, his comments "about changing ideological labels and about Poland's natural role as an intermediary were welcomed by Polish officials."

FUMING SENATOR: Wading in where angels might fear to tread, a Senate aide has taken one side in a dispute between two Republican senators. Bob Boyd, the GOP's top man on the Senate Budget Conmittee staff, was intrepid enough to write an internal staff memo harshly criticizing Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, for disagreeing with fellow Sen. Henry Bellmon, R-Okla., over tax policy. Hatch is fuming. Boyd told us it was all very "unfortunate."

•

PENTAGON FIX: There's a move afoot at the Pentagon under Defense Secretary Harold Brown to try to rope in the spunky, independent Court of Military Appeals.

The little-noticed panel is known among servicemen as "the GI's supreme court." It has often been as militant as it is military in defending the rank-and-file against the brass and braid. This has, of course, rankled the military's top dogs.

For convenience, the court's budget is lumped with the Pentagon's when it goes to Congress. But the Senate has served clear notice that the court justifies its own budget ... with no control exercised by the Department of Defense."

Now, risking their jobs, civil-rights-minded workers in the Pentagon have alerted us that Brown, with the connivance of his general counsel, Deanne Siener, is arbitrarily trying to cut a $150,000 item from the court's proposed budget.

Not surprisingly, the money is wanted for a study that could wipe out vestiges of jury rigging, overly harsh sentences, brutal suppression of dissent and manipulations by generals and admirals that still pervert military justice. And just as unsurprisingly, Ms. Siemer aloofly refused to return our calls and Brown's office refused to confirm or deny the unprecedented ploy.

INSIDE REPORT:

President urged to apply 'countervailing pressure'

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — Behind the public pomp and oratory of his world tour, President Carter was warned by leaders in Western Europe and the Persian Gulf that the United States must apply "countervailing pressure" to deepening Soviet intrusion in Ethiopia or risk signalling that the anti-Communist world in the end may lose by default.

However exaggerated it may seem, that warning came from the Shah of Iran, the President of France and the King of Saudi Arabia. It points up one strong lesson of the first Carter year: three years after Vietnam, the U.S. must assert its full role in the real world of international politics or lose the confidence of its friends and allies.

Mr. Carter was urged both in Europe and in the Persian Gulf oil countries of Iran and Saudi Arabia to put the strategic arms limitation talks (SALT II) in mothballs indefinitely to compel Moscow to halt military operations in Ethiopia. One European leader told the Carter travelling party: "Detente is not a sausage to be cut up in a Soviet pattern, but a continuous process everywhere."

The huge Soviet airlift to Ethiopia started in late November. Without ever revealing the real reason, Mr. Carter sent Undersecretary of State Philip Habib to Moscow in early December, ostensibly to explain the U.S. position on Israeli-Egyptian negotiations but actually to protest the Kremlin's Ethiopian adventure.

Habib protested the Soviet airlift to the horn of Africa, the strategically important land shared by Ethiopia and Somalia that juts into the Indian Ocean at the entrance of the Red Sea. Habib's catch in Moscow: exactly nothing.

Evans

So 225 large Soviet Antonov cargo planes continue to ferry supplies to Ethiopia, violating the air space of half a dozen sovereign states and piling up military supplies far in excess of Ethiopia's conceivable needs. That newly-Marxist state, assisted by perhaps 3,000 Soviet and Cuban military advisers, is fighting a war against Somalia which could decide the future of East Africa and ultimately control of the Persian Gulf oil riches.

The angry reaction from non-Communist states came early in the Carter trip. In Teheran, the Shah of Iran said flatly that his country would "react" if and when the Soviet-backed Ethiopians set one foot across the border of Somalia. Presumably, this would mean an Iranian airlift (or sealift from Saudi Arabian bases across the Red Sea) to bolster Somali forces. Ever since Somalia expelled the Russians last year, it has sought U.S. aid—in vain.

In Paris, French President Valery Giseard d'Estaing revealed a decision to press hard for the Organization of African Unity (OAU), led by non-Marxist French-speaking states, to warn Moscow that Africa is off bounds. Mr. Carter agreed to help. Soon afterward, Giscard went to the French-speaking Ivory Coast to start organizing a massive continent-wide campaign for maximum political pressure against the Soviet Union.

In Riyadh, the agitation of King Khalid of Saudi Arabia was even more intense. Thus, during the trip, Mr. Carter agreed to persuade Somalia to seek a cease-fire in the war with Ethiopia. The U.S. would then put heavy pressure on Moscow to compel Ethiopia to accept that offer. Next would come a demand led by major African states — Egypt, Sudan and possibly Kenya — for Soviet withdrawal from Ethiopia.

If the Soviets stonewalled this international effort as Habib was stonewalled in Moscow last month, President Carter would come under heavy pressure from Iran, Saudi Arabia and U.S. allies in Europe to use SALT II as a lever against Moscow. A similar hold-order on SALT was given by President Gerald Ford in 1975 when the U.S. uncovered evidence of massive Soviet intervention in the Angolan civil war.

Many hard problems are pooed by the European-Iranian-Saudi plan, to put a stop to free-wheeling Soviet intervention in Ethiopia. The Shah, despite heavy investment in American arms, cannot legally permit their use by a third country. The same is true of Saudi Arabia, so fearful of rising Soviet involvement across the Red Sea that it now keeps at least two divisions on its southern Red Sea coast.

That raises this question: would Congress give these U.S. allies a waiver to ship their U.S. arms to Somalia? Some experts here fear the answer would be no. Nor is there any slight indication that Mr. Carter would endanger his oft-repeated pledge for a SALT II agreement by employing the arms talks as a political lever.

These caveats aside, Mr. Carter came home with a loud and clear message from this nation's most formidable friends. Whether that message struck home, as some of these nations believe, will not be known for several weeks. What is clear now is that without U.S. leadership, the pressures on the horn of Africa and everywhere else will continue in one direction. For the non-Communist world, that direction is down.

Briscoe 'stands by' GOMA decision

By LEE JONES

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Dolph Briscoe says he stands by his unilateral decision to hand millions of federal manpower dollars to the Governor's Office on Migrant Affairs (GOMA).

"It was my responsibility under terms of the (federal) Comprehensive Employment Training Act to decide how the funds would be managed. I made the decision and I stand by it," Briscoe said Thursday.

Attorney General John Hill, Briscoe's leading opponent in the race for governor, says the action was a misuse of executive power.

Hill made the criticism in a pre-taped television press panel show, Texas Weekly.

"I would not have transferred funds out of the department of community affairs into the office known as GOMA," said Hill, whose office is taking part in an investigation of state handling of federal job training money.

Briscoe, however, said, "The transfer was a logical step to see that the funds were used to help those who most needed help. The office of migrant affairs will continue to help break the migrant cycle."

Ben McDonald, executive director of the Texas Department of Community Affairs (TDCA), said Briscoe did not consult him before deciding in early 1976 to skim off 19.5 cents of each manpower dollar for GOMA.

GOMA calculated that migrants represent 19.5 per cent of all Texans eligible for job training under CETA.

The Austin American-Statesman quoted an unnamed GOMA employee Thursday as saying, "There is no way the migrant population makes up one-fifth of the rural poor in Texas."

Until Briscoe cut GOMA in, McDonald's department was the sole agency delegated to administer manpower funds coming to state government. It has administered and evaluated CETA programs since 1974.

"We had no say. . . We received a copy of the letter and we just complied with it. . . I was not consulted about the letter," said McDonald, a Briscoe appointee who serves at the governor's pleasure.

CETA grants go to local "prime sponsors" such as cities and councils of governments in 135 counties and to the governor for the 119 "balance of state" counties.

Briscoe notified the U. S. Department of Labor on May 13, 1976, of his decision to make automatic allocations to GOMA, starting with $1 million. GOMA's cut rose to $11 million by late 1977.

This month, Briscoe suspended GOMA director Rogelio Perez for taking the Fifth Amendment at a Brownsville court of inquiry into the use of CETA funds. Perez also has been charged with forging an official document.

An audit made for TDCA criticized GOMA for issuing grants that exceeded its available manpower funds by $350,000. Auditors said GOMA and its grant holders made $1 million worth of questionable expenditures.

While GOMA officially had only seven employees, another 42 persons worked directly for the agency but were paid with CETA funds channeled through a non-profit corporation, Counterpoint, Inc.

Hill said Briscoe "perpetrated an absolute subterfuge" in the Counterpoint arrangement to make his staff seem smaller than it was.

"Certainly I would not have permitted anything like that to have taken place. That smacks of Louisiana and New Jersey, where they make an art of that kind of subterfuge, or have in the past. That's not Texas," he said.

Acting GOMA director Don Adams says he is cutting off Counterpoint's funds.

Hill said if he had been governor, he would not have created GOMA without first consulting the Legislature.

"This is Dolph Briscoe's baby. He fathered GOMA. That's been overlooked, I think, by many press people. This wasn't some agency that was established by the Legislature. It wasn't some other independent state agency. By independent I mean relatively independent of the governor's office," Hill said.

He also said he would have put experienced people over GOMA's manpower programs and "watched over it very carefully myself to see the money was properly applied for, that the people who were applying for it were eligible and were competent to carry out the program, and I would certainly have seen to it that the governor's office itself audited and monitored these programs."

Hill is in the unusual position of investigating activities of a wing of the governor's office while running against the incumbent chief executive.

"But realize, I can't stop being attorney general simply because I'm challenging Dolph Briscoe. I can't fail to meet my responsibilities."

Investigator recently served as attorney

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — One of two men assigned by Gov. Dolph Briscoe to help probe possible wrongdoing in manpower training grants was attorney for a suspended Briscoe staffer as recently as Monday.

Briscoe said Thursday he had contracted with former Austin District Attorney Bob Smith and George Fred Lee, a former FBI agent in the Austin office to aid in the investigation.

As recently as Monday, Smith was lawyer for Joaquin Rodriguez, whom Briscoe suspended as program director for the Governor's Office of Migrant Affairs (GOMA).

Rodriguez is charged in Brownsville with tampering with a witness in a court of inquiry into alleged misapplication of federal Comprehensive Employment Training Act funds, including money flowed through GOMA.

Travis County District Attorney Ronald Earle said there was a possibility other charges might be filed here.

Earle said he understood that Smith had dropped Rodriguez' case, and gubernatorial press secretary Bob Bain said, "My information is he never did take the case."

Steve Brittain, chief of Earle's Special Crimes Division, said, "The investigation will begin in the Governor's Office of Migrant Affairs so that that agency can resume normal aid to migrant workers in Texas as quickly as possible."

Attorney General John Hill also has contributed two veteran investigators to the probe, which Earle is coordinating.

Bain said Smith and Lee "are gong to be reimbursed for services through a contract with the governor's office."

"I selected these individuals because of their strong records in law enforcement, their experience and widely recognized independence and integrity," Briscoe said.

"Mr. Smith was one of the best district attorneys in Texas for many years and is well acquainted with investigations involving governmental matters," Briscoe said.

"Mr. Lee will bring to the investigation the experience, dedication and thoroughness traditionally found in those who have been associated with the FBI," he said.

Smith prosecuted several legislators and other state officials, including former House Speaker Gus Mutscher, who received a probated sentence in 1972 after being convicted of conspiracy to accept a bribe.

Smith gave up the DA's office in 1976 to run unsuccessfully for a district judgeship and now practices criminal law privately.

"The investigation is now under way. We expect it to take some time, but with the high quality of this help from the governor's office and the attorney general's office, it will be thorough," Earle said.

Texas delegation reacts with praise, criticism

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's State of the Union address met with warm praise and blistering criticism from members of the Texas congressional delegation.

"It was a good speech and it set the right tone — honest recognition of our problems, and confidence in the ability of our people to solve them by working together," House Majority Leader Jim Wright said Thursday night after the speech.

"I found nothing to cheer about," countered Sen. John Tower, a Republican. "While saying the citizens of this country were tired of big government, he spoke of making it bigger. He spoke of counterproductive energy matters while asking for more production. He said nothing of the shifting balance militarily in favor of the Soviets and that is chilling to me."

Democratic congressman E. Kika de la Garza said the "President spoke with confidence and moderation, what I would call a balanced State of the Union message...I am glad the president proposes to support our proposals to reduce and try to bring some common sense into federal regulations that simply harass private business without any visable gain by anyone."

"The president is obviously trying to walk a tightrope between inflation and recession," said Democratic Sen. Lloyd Bentsen. "He's signaling he's going to take a more moderate approach with fewer new programs and emphasis on completing programs already underway. There's a recognition that you can't do everything at once."

Democratic freshman Rep. James Mattox said "the tone was important. The government can't solve all our problems."

Rep. Barbara Jordan, one of six Texans serving out their last terms this session, called the president's message "sober in tone."

"He really captured the mood of the country in calling for the limit of government on the country. That is a saleable item now," the Houston Democrat said.

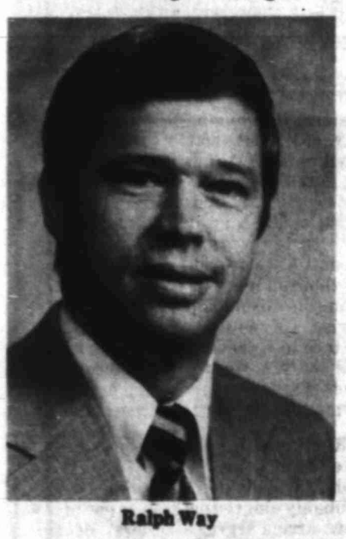

"He didn't come down as hard as some expected in the energy statement," she continued. "He did well to mention his support for the Humphrey-Hawkins bill. That should blunt some of the criticism from blacks who feel the effects of high unemployment."

She called his department of education proposal "a sticky issue" and added: "Health, as I heard it, occupied one brief sentence. I was disappointed that the president didn't make a greater emphasis on health. We all hear the news about rising health and hospital care."

House Majority Leader Wright, who plays a major role in the scheduling of legislation, set out a timetable for the passage of some of Carter's proposals.

"By spring, I believe we will have a workable energy bill on the president's desk," said Wright. "By late spring, I believe the House will have passed the major tax reduction bills — and most of the other economic stimulus measures of which he spoke.

"Before the end of the session, I expect us to have addressed ourselves realistically to the problems of welfare reform, executive branch reorganization, anti-inflation initiatives, urban policy and the festering farm problem."

Ralph Way

Oil man to seek MC post

Midland independemt oil and gas producer Ralph L. Way announced plans to run for Place 8 on the Midland College Board of Trustees in the April 1 election.

Way, who is currently serving on the college's foundation board, will be seeking the post now occupied by Robert M. Leibrock. Leibrock has announced he will not be a candidate for re-election.

In announcing his candidacy, Way said, "I have always been a strong supporter of the college and would like to have a part in helping maintain it as a first-class institution."

A Midland resident since 1964, Way was born in Texon and was graduated from Reagan County High School in Big Lake in 1954. In 1961, he received a bachelor of science degree in petroleum engineering from Texas Tech University. Prior to coming to Midland, he was associated with Pan American Petroleum Corporation in Brownfield.

Way has served as president of the Midland Country Club and as a member of its board of directors. He also is a member of the board of directors of the First Savings and Loan Association of Midland.

Way is married to the former Barbara Black of Abilene. They have five children, Karen, Karol Ann, Kathryn, Kristi and Kimberly.

Roloff seeks youths' return

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — Evangelist Lester Roloff says state welfare department officials have no authority to hold two runaways from a Roloff youth home.

The boys claim they were beaten at the home.

The two Arizona youths were placed Thursday in temporary custody of state welfare department officials, who said they were investigating it as a child abuse case.

The two boys, ages 15 and 16, were picked up by Kerrville police Wednesday as they were hitchhiking and told police they had been beaten at the home.

The Texas Department of Human Resources got temporary custody of the boys from State District Judge Bob Barton, who assigned an investigator to the case.

Roloff said the state officials had no authority to hold the youths since they had been placed in his custody by their parents. "The parents had asked us to take them back to the home. They can't do a thing with them."

Kerrville Police Lt. Bill Beasley said the youths had bruises on their legs and buttocks.

Delay granted

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A two-week delay has been granted to the state private detectives board in its fight against Attorney General John Hill to keep its investigative files closed to reporters.

Board lawyer John Foster said he needed more time to brief various points in Hill's suit, and State District Judge Jerry Dellana granted the postponement Thursday.

The trial will resume on Feb. 2.

One Foster contention is that Hill, as lawyer for all state agencies, has no right to take an agency to court.

The Texas Open Records Act provides for mandamus suits by the attorney general to enforce his opinions.

But Foster says the Texas Constitution and various court precedents override that provision.

Dellana granted a motion by Jim George, attorney for the Austin American-Statesman, to intervene. This means that if the attorney general is ruled out of the suit, the open records issue will remain before the judge with George contesting the board's refusal to release the documents.

First Asst. Atty. Gen. David Kendall asked Dellana to proceed with the trial Thursday and not grant the board any more time.

"They are fighting a stalling action and are continuing it when they ask the court to give them time to file briefs," Kendall said.

In opposing the American Statesman's request for the documents, Clema Sanders, board executive director, told Hill in writing she felt they were exempt from disclosure. She cited a provision of the open records law allowing agencies to withhold documents relating to litigation.

Foster presented Dellana two brown packets he said contained 50 documents.

The American-Statesman published a series of investigative stories in 1977 saying former board chairman Joe Connally, an Odessa district judge, had enjoyed high-priced hotel rooms and meals at state expense while traveling on board business.

World-wide information flow threatened

By JOHN M. EGER
Special to The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Brazil is stationing police censors at all post offices to intercept incoming publications that might contain anything "contrary to public order or to morality." Thailand has just raised import duties on foreign films by 1,500 percent. Several Canadian provinces now have laws that bar transmission of credit data out of their borders. Colombia has claimed all the airspace over its territory and will try to collect rent from any nation that parks a communications satellite there.

Throughout the world, the free flow of information is under fire. And because the United States is the nation where the communications revolution is most advanced, it is often our publications, our films, our credit data and our satellites that are under attack.

According to one Commerce Department study based on 1967 figures, the "information industry" accounts for 46 percent of the U.S. work force and almost half the Gross National Product.

So the prospect of an international "information war" is a serious threat to American interests in an increasingly interdependent world. Yet it is a threat that three U.S. administrations have found no strategy to meet.

The issue is not merely the flow of information in the traditional sense of news, scientific data and publications. Anything that can be sensed, recorded, stored or transmitted — an electronically monitored human heartbeat, a message transferring funds from one bank account to another, a radio signal from observation satellite in space — is vulnerable to the rising tide of new restrictions.

Many of the countries imposing these restrictions fear cultural inundation or annihilation. They speak of "electronic colonialization" or "electronic imperialism." While we see ourselves offering the developing nations information they need to servive, they see in our technology a threat of vast and unwelcome change.

Our information, esepcially when it is delivered directly to their people from orbiting satellites, is seen in the Third World as endangering traditional national roles and ways of life.

Among the industrial nations, the developing "information war" is taking different forms and stems from different motives. Long frustrated by our lead in the computer and communications field, Europe has turned to a new form of protectionism.

France's minister of justice, Louis Joinet, put the European concern most directly in a speech to an Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development symposium last September:

"INFORMATION IS POWER, and economic information is economic power. Information has an economic value, and the ability to store and process certain types of data may well give one country political and technological advantage over other countries. This, in turn, may lead to a loss of national sovereignty through supranational data flows."

To protect their "national sovereignty" against this perceived threat, many European nations are enacting a variety of data-protection laws. Most of these laws are being passed in the name of personal privacy and individual rights.

It is hard to find fault with the impulse to protect the privacy of personal data. The problem comes when these new laws are then used to protect not individual privacy, but domestic economic interests.

According to Rep. Barry Goldwater Jr., R-Calif., an author of the 1974 Privacy Act, that is exactly what is starting to happen.

"European economic interests," Goldwater testified to a House subcommittee last June, "have seriously discussed using national legislation dealing with personal privacy to discriminate against foreign, non-European business and technology."

Or as Brendan McShane of General Electric's information services division put it in an interview with the trade journal Datamation, "Europe has finally figured out a way to blunt American technology. The privacy issue provides an economic wedge that they weren't able to develop in the computer mainframe and services business."

In other words, the chief effect of the new data-protection laws being discussed or already enacted in 19 nations may be to force American and other transnational corporations to set up local subsidiaries for the handling of data within national borders.

The first nation to restrict the flow of information in the name of privacy was Sweden, which passed its Data Act in 1973 as a response to the discovery that material on Swedish citizens was stored or processed in more than 2,000 data systems outside the country.

One example, cited by OECD consultant G. Russell Pipe in a New Scientist article last year, involved the fire department in the Swedish city of Malmo, which compiled a data bank of fire hazards in the city's buildings. When an alarm is called in, the address is entered on a computer terminal, and any unusual hazards at that address are displayed on the computer screen a minute later — via a computer in Cleveland.

UNDER SWEDEN'S 1973 data law, a new Data Inspection Board must approve any export of files or personal data. For instance:

—One Swedish county contracted with a British firm to produce health identity cards for its 80,000 residents. But the data board refused to allow a list of the county's residents to be sent to Britain, on the grounds that British law would not protect the list of names against "stealing or further use."

—When Siemens, a multinational electrical manufacturing firm, tried to transfer files on its Swedish workers to a central personnel office at its Munich headquarters, the data board also said no, because Germany then lacked a data protection law.

—International credit cards may still be used in Sweden, but no data may be sent abroad without a license.

The impact of the new information laws being enacted and discussed elsewhere is still uncertain:

—West Germany's new federal data-protection act, which goes into effect this month, requires German data processors to stop the "improper input, access, communication, transport and manipulation of stored data."

—Belgium and France are making it a criminal offense even to record or transmit some data. In France violators could pay fines up to $400,000 and serve prison terms of up to five years for recording or transmitting data defined only as "sensitive."

—The Swiss, to protect the privacy and the attractiveness of their numbered bank accounts, are considering laws to prohibit all electronic data transmission across their borders.

—Canada has warned U.S. industry of its concern over the one-way flow of information to the United States. So far, the laws passed have all been at the provincial level, but the warnings have had effect: one medical information bureau owned by U.S. insurance companies already has set up a Toronto subsidiary just for Canadian data.

Some also see a potential major threat in Britain, where existing law requires that the British Post Office be able to read any transmitted message — a rule that, if applied to electronic data, would force firms to share their confidential cryptographic codes and data-compression formulas with a government body.

Restrictions on the more traditional forms of information flow are even more widespread. Television, for instance, has become a prime target.

In Canada commercial messages have been deleted from U.S programs relayed by Canadian cable TV systems, and a 15 percent tax on all non-Canadian programming has been proposed. In Brazil the government has proposed that 70 percent of all radio and television programs must be domestically produced.

American films, another information produce once welcomed around the world, are increasingly being rejected. Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, told a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee that five countries now impose higher admission taxes on foreign films than on domestic productions, and that 14 countries restrict film imports through other methods such as high rental charges.

Time magazine has now been banned or taxed out of existence in 18 countries. American and Western reporters are increasingly being kept from entering and reporting on Third World countries. "Harassment of foreign and domestic news media in the Third World is increasing," Peter Galliner, director of the International Press Institute of Zurich and London reported last June.

Move spreads to clear up legal phrases

By STUART AUERBACH
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Fashion Designer Bonnie Cashin told her lawyer she wouldn't sign any contracts that contained legal mumbo-jumbo, especially the word "whereas."

"I tried to train my lawyer, but I just couldn't escape it," said Cashin, a designer of simple, elegant sportswear whose sense of taste is offended by wordy, incomprehensible legal language. "I spent hours with him, going over the contract point by point. But he insisted on adding some legal phrases. He said, 'It will be better understood in case there is some controversy.'"

As it turned out, the contract the lawyer insisted on — full of arcane phrases and Latin words designed to avoid confusion — now is being disputed. But a simple two-page letter Cashin wrote as a contract in another deal — "I'll do this and you do that" was all she said it contained — served well without any court challenge.

Cashin is in the vanguard of a small but growing national movement as consumers and institutions across the country are rebelling against the language of the law, which retired Yale University law professor Fred Rodell described as "almost deliberately designed to confuse and muddle the ideas it purports to convey."

In New York, Citibank three years ago pioneered the move to write consumer loans, mortgages and bank card contracts in easily understandable, everyday English. "I haven't heard of any legal problems, although the lawyers of course died a thousand deaths when we took away some of their language," said Lamson Smith, Citibank's press spokesman.

Even President Carter is trying to reform the language of federal regulations, which contain some of the murkiest of legal verbiage. And a New York State law passed last summer ordering all consumer contracts to be written in understandable language is already under attack by the lawyers. They called the law — written by other lawyers and passed by a legislature 41 percent of whose members are lawyers — ambiguous and said "it conflicts with existing law."

Perhaps the clearest example of the difference between legalese and readily understandable language comes from Chicago, where the Council of Lawyers drafted an easy-to-read lease form designed to protect both landlord and tenant.

The new form simply contains boxes for the date of the lease — including the exact hour it begins and ends — the amount of the rent, and the name, address and phone numbers of the "tenant" and "lessor." Then it begins:

"Lessor hereby leases to the tenant the apartment shown above (called the 'presmises') located at the address shown above, under the terms and conditions set forth below."

"WITNESSETH, that the said Lessor, for and in consideration of the sum of (blank) rent, and also the covenants, conditions, and agreements herein contained, and on the part of the Lessee to be paid, kept and performed, and for no other consideration except as herein expressed, does hereby let and rent to the said Lessee and the said Lessee has hereby taken as tenant of the Lessor, the following described premises:"

That paragraph is almost a perfect example of legal language, which Prof. David Mellinkoff of the University of California at Los Angeles law school called "wordy, unclear, pompous, (and) dull."

But trying to make legal language understandable appears akin to trying to bail out the Queen Mary with a teaspoon.

In 1939, Fred Rodell, the Yale law professor, wrote in a book titled, "Woe Unto You, Lawyers!": "No segment of the English language in use today is so muddy, so confusing, so hard to pin down to its supposed meaning as the language of the law. It ranges only from the ambiguous to the completely incomprehensible."

Little has changed since then. Washington attorney-writer Ronald Goldfarb called legal language "jargon elevated to pomposity."

Rodell wrote that lawyers insist on conducting their business in a jargon only other lawyers can understand because it elevates their profession into something more than it is, and gives them a reason for being.

"So long as the lawyers carefully keep to themselves the key to what the words, mean," he wrote, "the only way the average man can find out what is going on is to become a lawyer, or at least to study law himself. All of which makes it very nice — and very secure — for the lawyers."

Economist John Kenneth Galbraith, who has fought against the jargon of his own profession, echoed that idea when he referred in a television discussion last week to "the desire of the lawyer, by his peculiar and obscure language, to prove that he's worth his money."

In fact, lawyers and judges often have trouble understanding the legal jargon of their peers. One Washington lawyer said a highly respected U.S. District Court judge here — the lawyer asked that both his name and the judge's not be used — issued an opinion that neither he nor the attorney on the other side could understand.

So they requested an explanation. The judge replied: "You gentlemen read and write the English language. Motion denied."

House members fill ranks with family

By PAUL HOUSTON
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Relatives of 22 House member, ranging from wife to fourth cousin, have paying jobs in the House, records show. But a Los Angeles Times investigation found no violation of the federal anti-nepotism law.

Cases include the brother-in-law of Rep. George E. Shipley, D-Ill., who serves as the congressman's $43,750-a-year administrative assistant, and the wife of Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, D-Calif., who supplements Hawkins' $57,500-a-year salary by drawing $24,110 as a clerk in his subcommittee and congressional offices.

Shipley's brother-in-law, Donald Hugh Watson, is exempted from the 1967 anti-nepotism law because he was hired eight years before it took effect. Hawkins' wife Elsie is exempted because she was hired in 1975, two years before they were married.

In a case similar to Hawkins', Rep. John H. Rousselot, R-Calif., retained his secretary, Vyonne LeMasters, on the payroll at $21,224 after they were married in 1974.

In an effort to reduce favoritism, the anti-nepotism statute bars a federal official from hiring or advocating that anyone else in his agency hire any relative including, among others, father, daughter, brother, aunt, first cousin, nephew, spouse, in-laws, stepfather, stepson, stepsister and half-brother.

The nepotism picture in the Senate is unclear because the Senate does not have the kind of public disclosure rule that the House adopted last year in the wake of the sex-payroll scandal involving former Rep. Wayne Hays, D-Ohio. Hays resigned from Congress after Elizabeth Ray charged he kept her on his payroll at $14,000 just to be his mistress.

The anti-nepotism law is almost impossible to enforce in the Senate because of the lack of disclosure, C. Braxton Valentine Jr., staff director of the Senate Ethics Committee, told The Times.

"The Senate disbursing office says it has picked up a few violations because of the similarity of names (between a senator and a relative working for him), but it is a hit-and-miss proposition at best," Valentine said.

A spot check of California's two senatorial offices found that no senators' kin work there.

The wife of Sen. Milton R. Young, R-N.D., is able to serve as his $21,542-a-year executive secretary because they were married after she joined his staff.

In several House cases, employee's said they were not aware of an employe's relation to a House member until after the person was hired on the basis of merit.

"Ginger Brown (the daughter of House Majority Leader Jim Wright of Texas) was on our payroll for four months before I knew who her father was," said Ike Webber, staff director of the Banking subcommittee on economic stabilization. "She has done excellent work for us and has never made any effort to capitalize on her relationship."

Mrs. Brown, a $15,829-a-year research assistant, said "a lot of the times it hurts" to be related to a House vember in looking for a job.

Webber said he was concerned about qualified persons such as Mrs. Brown "being penalized because they happen to be born to the 'wrong parents.'"

Wright's wife Betty worked as his $24,600-a-year administrative assistant on the Public Works and Transportation Committee until he became majority leader last year at a salary of $65,000, up from the $57,500 paid rank-and-file members. At that point, she resigned.

Rep. John Burton, D-Calif., said that Lisa Gonzalez is on his San Francisco staff not because she is the daughter of Rep. Samuel Stratton, D-N.Y., but because she is "just dynamite" as a caseworker earning $13,000 a year.

According to an aide, Rep. Joseph Early, D-Mass., did not know that Louise Buchanan was the first cousin of Rep. John Buchanan, R-Ala., when she joined Early's staff as a casework supervisor at $21,500.

"She came over from Congressman Kemp's office (Republican Jack Kemp of New York), looking for a better-paying job," the Bucnanan aide said.

Tim Miller, a nephew of Rep. Clarence Miller, R-Ohio, is an $18,000 legislative assistant to Rep. Willis Gradison, D-Ohio.

"We didn't even know Congresman Miller was Tim's uncle until sometime during the 1974 campaign when Tim said he was," Gradison aide Tonald Roberts related. "I hired him because he was good."

Price Daniel brings campaign to Midland

By BROOKS KELLER

Price Daniel Jr. brought his campaign for attorney general of Texas to Midland Thursday.

He told a press conference at the Midland Hilton that his stop here was part of a 30-day tour of the entire state. This came about because polls at Christmas showed him well ahead of his opponent, Mark White, and friends told him he was a shoo-in candidate.

Worried that he might be "coasting," he decided to hit the road.

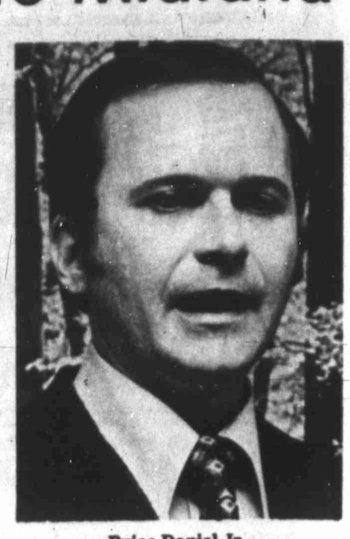

He said that his record as Speaker of the Texas House of Representatives, from 1973 to 1975, indicates "the kind of attorney general I will be."

Daniel pointed with pride to a series of reform measures that were passed under his speakership. They included an open records bill, improvements in the open meetings law, registration and financial disclosure law for lobbyists and an ethics bill requiring financial disclosure for state officials.

He emphasized that the attorney general executes the laws, but does not make them. But he stressed the need for constant consultation between the attorney general and the legislature in order to assure that all laws passed are constitutional.

One problem called to his attention in West Texas is the taxation of farm and ranch land on market value rather than productivity. He indicated he could be of real help to the legislature in any reform of this law.

He also promised to do everything he could, if elected, to prevent damage to intrastate oil and gas interests by whatever emerges from Washington in the form of a national energy program.

Price Daniel Jr.

He promised to fight organized crime if it should come to Texas, and to do all that he could to halt over-the-border drug traffic into Texas.

Commenting on abuses of police power such as that alleged in the death of Joe Torres in Houston, he said he was a full believer in law and order but that its application must be seen to be fair and impartial to every citizen, regardless of race, creed or color.

"Otherwise, people, especially the young, will lose respect for the law," he said.

Daniel has been a lawyer in his home at Liberty, Texas, since his earlier political career. He was in public office from 1966 until 1975.

Gas cut sends 50 men home

STANTON — Fifty workers at the West Texas Compress and Warehouse Co. here were sent home from their jobs today as a result of a cutback in natural gas.

Plant Superintendent Roy Porter said that when he finally did get the word that gas to run the compressor would be available today, it was too late to round up the men.

He pointed out that it would take two hours to generate steam necessary to run the compressor and even if his workers could be rounded up, most of the day would be lost.

"All we did Thursday was 'make work' type of jobs. We really didn't need to sweep out the warehouses again today. We did that yesterday. And it didn't take 50 men very long to do it," Porter said.

Mondale visits Mexico to listen to officials

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Vice President Walter F. Mondale comes to Mexico today to sign an aviation agreement, see some of the sights and listen to officials talk about the Mexican workers who are crossing the U.S. border and the Mexican natural gas that is not.

Arriving from Washington in mid-morning, Mondale's two-day visit was to begin with a private meeting with President Jose Lopez Portillo and a session with other top-ranking Mexican officials.

The visit is a courtesy call repaying Lopez Portillo's trip to Washington in February. Mondale will sign an agreement providing for new or improved service by both nations' airlines to 53 U.S. and 21 Mexican cities. In his talks, "he'll be listening to what the Mexican officials say, but he won't be doing any negotiating," an aide said. And he and his wife will see the Mayan ruins in Yucatan.

The most immediate issue between the two countries is the proposal by six U.S. companies to import 2 billion cubic feet of natural gas a day via pipeline from the Reforma oil field in southern Mexico.

Mexico wants about $2.60 per thousand cubic feet. The Carter administration is waiting for congressional approval of its energy legislation, but Energy Secretary James Schlesinger says the administration will not allow an import price higher than $2.16, the price paid for Canadian gas.

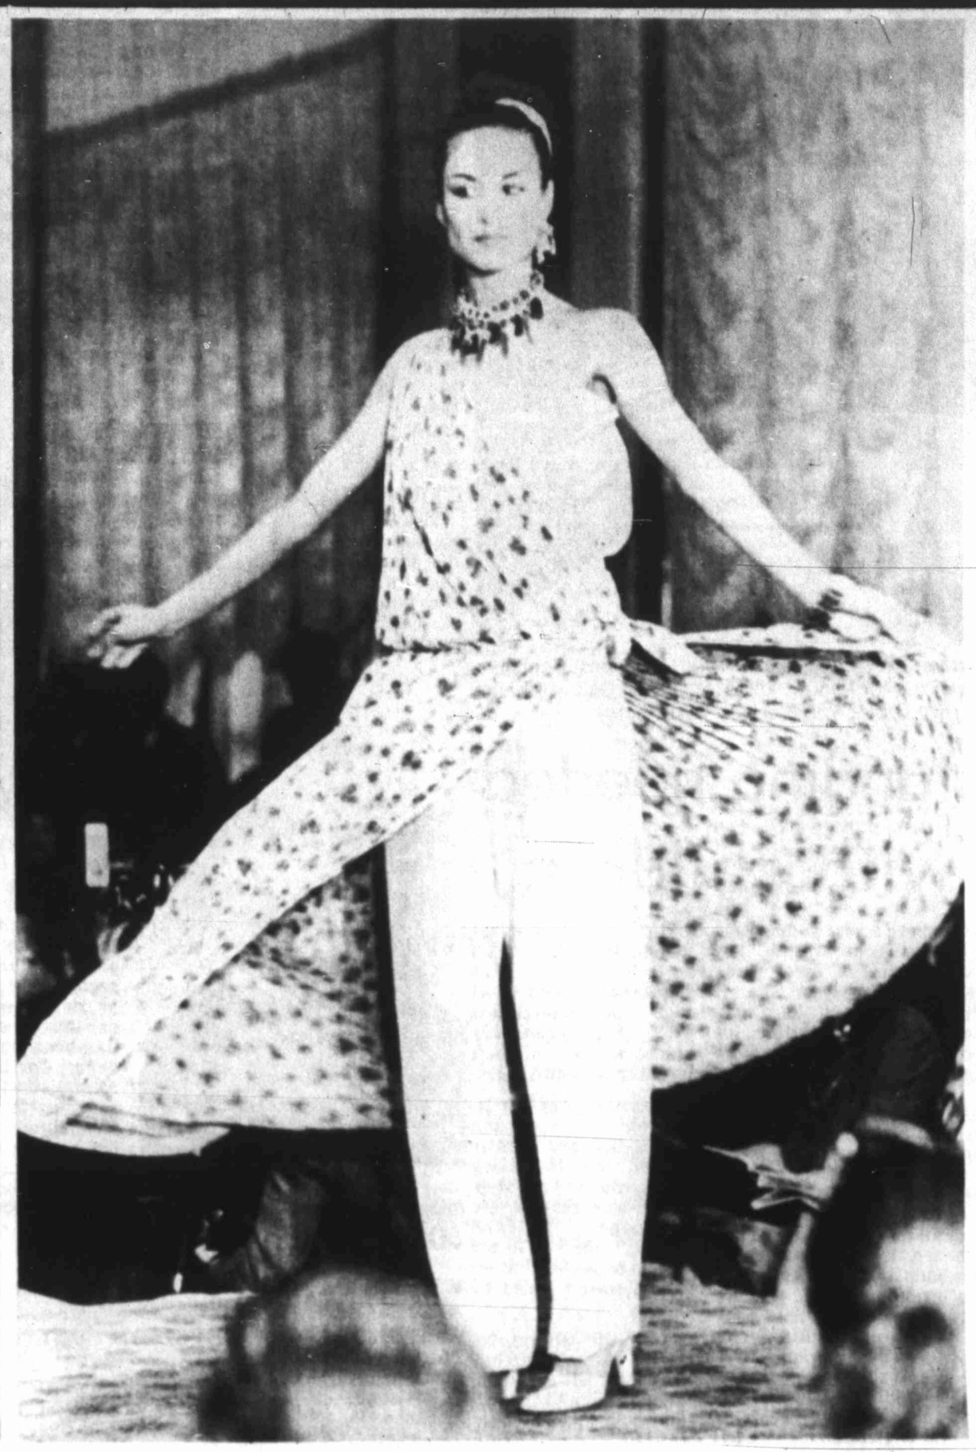

Local newspapers put banner headlines Thursday on statements by Mexican officials that the government "will never lower its asking price for natural gas."

Following procedure keeps club orderly

Mrs. Suzanna Johnson was the speaker when Altrusa Club of Midland, Inc., held its first meeting of the new year in Midland Hilton. Mrs. Johnson is the club's parliamentarian and her topic was "Parliamentary Procedure."

She stated that parliamentary procedure is a tool by which club business is conducted in an orderly and proper manner to the advantage of all concerned. Club rules, she said, are instruments by which members relate to each other and to other organizations. She also explained how to make motions, amendments, amendmemts to the amendments and how each is voted on.

Committee reports were heard from Mrs. J. P. H. McMullan Jr., community service chairman, who announced that the Woman of the Year award dinner will be held in February and that letters requesting nominations for the award have been mailed. She also urged members and others who might be interested to continue with the crime check block parties.

Mrs. E. E. Cunningham, chairman of Altrusa information committee, announced that an orientation for new members will be held at 7:30 p.m. Monday in her home at 2314 Haynes St. She emphasized the importance of all new members to attend and also urged old members to participate.

Mrs. Guy Saunders, a member of the vocational services committee, reported that the club dressed two "living dolls" at Christmas and also provided a large amount of groceries and clothing for the girls' family.

Awards for procuring new members were presented by Myrtlene Bearden, membership chairman, to Patsy Gordon, LaVerne Saunders, Lois Carter, Thelma Gardner and Mrs. Bearden.

Co-ordinator for the program was Mrs. Henry C. Libbey. Mrs. Royce Womack was soloist, singing "Be Thou My Vision," the hymn around which the year's Quiet Day program was organized. The accompanist was Mrs. Joe B. Koenig.

The theme of this year's program was hunger— physical, spiritual, emotional and intellectual.

The annual Call to Prayer and Self-Denial is sponsored by the Women's Division of the Board of Global Ministries of the United Methodist Church and is observed by UMW throughout the nation with a program each January.

This year's offering will be used in the United States for maintenance and improvement of Women's Division-owned property, and overseas for the Fund for Children and Youth in Today's World.

DEAR ABBY

Fifth wife understands why other four left

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Until I read your column today I thought I was the only woman in the world whose husband didn't trust her out of his sight.

We've been married a year and I feel like a prisoner. I have my own car (which I paid for myself), but my husband carries the keys and if I have to go anywhere he insists on driving me there.

When he comes home from work I get the third degree. "Was anybody here today? Who did you talk to?" (He places the telephone cord in a certain way so he will know if the phone has been used.)

I've never lied to him and have no reason to, but he doesn't believe a thing I say. I am his fifth wife, and now I know why the first four couldn't live with him.

Please don't write me at home because he gets all the mail before I do. Just write a message to "Stuck in Penna." and tell me what to do.—STUCK

DEAR STUCK: Obviously you are able to write, so if you really want out of that miserable marriage, write to a friend or relative and ask them to come and get you.

You appear to fear your husband, so if you have reason to believe that he's capable of doing you bodily harm, ask whoever is coming to rescue you from this tyrant to bring along police protection.

If you have no one to whom you can write, tell your husband you want to leave, and if he doesn't give you the keys to your car, telephone the police (or sheriff) and ask THEM to come and get you.

DEAR ABBY: I am the office manager for a law firm and have several women working under me. Is there in existence anywhere a standard dress code for the office?

I realize that times are changing, and office attire is more casual now, but surely there must be a limit to some of the "get-ups" women are allowed to wear to the office.

I have an extremely difficult time getting the idea across to some of my girls. Can you help?—FORT WORTH

DEAR FORT: For what it's worth, there is no "standard dress code" for all offices.

I don't know what kind of "get-ups" you consider "the limit," but if you spell out specifically what you consider inappropriate attire for your office, you'll have your own dress code.

DEAR ABBY: I am in my middle 40s, single by choice, and I have an excellent position. My widowed mother lives with me and I am not lonely.

A few months ago my favorite cousin died. She was a few years older than I, and her husband was 12 years her senior. Well, the new widower has been coming here very often to visit "us." Both Mother and I agree that he is interested in ME. The problem is, I am not interested in HIM.

So far I've been able to avoid being alone with him, but he is very persistent. If he doesn't catch on pretty soon, I may have to hurt his feelings in order to discourage him. Can you give me a few pointers?—NOT FOR HIM

DEAR NOT: Keep the conversation impersonal, don't let him get you alone, stay out of his reach, and retire early. He'll get the message. (P.S. How about introducing him to a friend? One woman's leftovers can be another woman's banquet.)

Stepparents find understanding needed to survive test period with children

By DIANE CLARK
Copley News Service

One night when Veryl Rosenbaum was putting her 12-year-old stepson in bed, he kissed her good night and said, "I love you, although I wish you were dead."

She broke up with laughter. It was comments like these that she had grown used to ever since she married Jean Rosenbaum in 1962 and inherited his three children.

"This particular stepson had been planning and plotting when he was about 9 on how he was going to shoot me," she said good-naturedly. "Today we are good pals."

But it is episodes like this that have distilled into an all-encompassing bit of advice Rosenbaum offers to all stepparents:

"Develop a thick skin. Carry a sense of humor with you wherever you go. And be flexible — expect the worst."

It was also episodes like these that inspired Rosenbaum and her husband to write a book entitled "Stepparenting."

Both are stepparents — each bringing children into the current marriage. Both also are stepchildren and have experienced the reactions that stepchildren face.

Both are professionals who daily gather research in this problem area. Jean is a psychiatrist. He also invented the artificial pacemaker now on display in the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., and wrote a best-selling book, "Is Your VW a Sex Symbol?" Veryl is a psychoanalyst who is president of the Southwest Association for Psychoanalysis and author of the book "Being Female."

There are about 50 million stepparents in the United States.

"People in our practice (in Durango, Colo.) range in age from about 3 to 73 and almost everyone you see is a stepparent or stepchild — even the grandparents ... Yet we looked around for a book on stepparenting and there just weren't any," Veryl said.

"Many people who are parents think it is easy to be a stepparent because they're a parent already. But it isn't."

Children strive to keep their original family together no matter how unpleasant the household may have been. This can lead to continual testing and attempts to provoke the new parent.

The Rosenbaums told of an 11-year-old girl, Nancy, who threw all the clothes of her stepfather out on the front lawn three different times and only referred to him as "Ick."

One new stepmother went out of her way to make a large Thanksgiving feast — that is, until one of her stepchildren turned off the oven and the turkey didn't cook. They had hot dogs and hamburgers with their cranberry sauce, squash, brussels sprouts and pumpkin pie.

In another family a 14-year-old girl wearing only a bra and panties waltzed into the living room where her stepfather was reading the newspaper, shrieked "rapist," and ran to the kitchen to get her mother — who wasn't fooled by the ploy.

There will always be retorts to the effect: "You can't tell me to do that. You aren't my real mommy." And children are forever doing something purposely obnoxious to the stepparent so that they, the children, will be punished, and the punishment can renew their hate for the stepparent, the Rosenbaums explained.

Expect this type of behavior to continue at least two years, they warn, although in each household the length and kinds of reactions will vary.

The most negative reactions to the new stepparent tend to come from children between ages 3 and 5 and in the adolescent period of 11 to 16, the Rosenbaums said.

Old South conservative pushes to block treaty

EDITOR'S NOTE — Few foreign policy matters this year concern the president more than ratification of the Panama Canal treaty. It also concerns Strom Thurmond, who will do his utmost to block it. Here's a closeup of the South Carolina senator who at 74 plans to seek a fifth term.

By LEE BYRD

WASHINGTON (AP) — He's still the Old South conservative of a couple generations ago, who preaches patriotism, state's rights, free enterprise and military strength.

Now James Strom Thurmond of South Carolina is in the forefront of the charge against the Panama Canal treaty, wielding the sort of blunt, forthright rhetoric that would suit Teddy Roosevelt just bully.

"It's ours," says the 74-year-old Thurmond. "We bought it and paid for it, and I'm opposed to giving it away."

It's been years since Thurmond enjoyed such prominence on a major issue, in which he is joined by former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California and a group of other treaty opponents.

He is the ranking Republican member on the Armed Services Committee, and he extols military strength — along with the requisite hardware. That has made him popular with the Pentagon, which in 1976 awarded him the Legion of Merit for his services as a major general in the Army reserve. The award was unusual since he had retired from the reserves about 13 years earlier.

His view of international problems is clear-cut: "The goal of the Soviets, the spread of communism, if we don't remain strong, is to put a gun to our head and destroy us."

The proposed canal treaty rankled him long before the final negotiations sealed an agreement, which must yet be ratified by the Senate. "Why, as close as Torrijos is to Fidel Castro, it (the Panama Canal) could well wind up in the hands of the Soviet Union," he contends. Omar Torrijos is the president of Panama.

Detente and accommodation with Communist powers fill Thurmond with profound skepticism. "If you don't remain strong," he says, "then everything goes to pot."

That is a credo which Thurmond applies to body as well as political soul. He is a man who married a beauty queen less than a third his age (they have four young children). He drinks prune juice and mountain spring water and gobbles Vitamin C tablets. He drives himself to work in a Maverick, which his press secretary, Ed Harril, says "is appropriate, don't you think?"

At about 6:30 "every morning, first thing," Thurmond says, "I'll do 20 to 25 sitting up exercises, some pushups and some pullups, then some pushing, kicking and bending exercises. Then I lift weights for about five minutes and run two and a half miles ... Oh, sometimes I run two miles if I don't have much time. But then other times I'll stretch it to three."

Thurmond is running for a fifth term, one that would carry him into his 82nd year. The administration would be pleased if his confidence in re-election were misplaced.

President Carter recently gritted his teeth and signed a Thurmond bill that weakened his plan to upgrade less-thanhonorable discharges for helping deserters or draft dodgers," Thurmond snapped.

Another Thurmond bill bars unionization of the military.

Aspirin daily could aid persons connected with high stroke risk

By HARRY NELSON
The Los Angeles Times

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — Two aspirin twice a day may have a beneficial effect for people who experience symptoms that are associated with a high risk of stroke.

The symptoms, medically known as a Transient Ischemic Attack (TIA), typically include fleeting episodes of blindness often accompanied by numbness in various regions of the body.

Dr. William S. Fields of the University of Texas Health Sciences Center, Houston, reported the results of a three-year study showing that aspirin can reduce the incidents of TIAs in some patients and prevent them in others.

But the study did not last long enough to determine whether people on aspirin suffer fewer strokes in the long run, Fields told an American Heart Association science writers forum here.

However, he said, a similar study conducted in Canada, but not yet reported in medical literature, shows a 50 percent reduction in death and disability from stroke in males who have TIAs. The benefit to females was not as great, he said.

Fields' study involved 307 persons who experience a particular type of TIA associated with the breaking loose of tiny clots in the carotid artery. In carotid artery TIAs, the symptoms are fleeting blindness lasting from seconds to a few hours in one eye only plus numbness on one side of the body.

Of the 307 persons, 129 were judged to be in need of surgery on the carotid artery and 178 were treated either with aspirin or a placebo drug, but not surgery.

Those who had surgery also received aspirin or a placebo after the operation, but the results of that part of the study are not yet compiled.

Of the 178 treated medically, 88 percent either had no further TIAs or a significantly reduced number, while only 58 percent of those receiving a placebo had favorable results.

Of TIA patients in general, one-third go on to have a stroke within five years. Of all persons who have a stroke, three-fourths say they have had TIAs prior to the stroke.

Aspirin is also being studied as a preventive for heart attacks. Two national studies are currently underway but results have not yet been reported.

TIAs are believed to be due to tiny emboli (clots) that form, in the cases under study, in areas of the carotid artery that have been injured. The carotid arteries (one on each side of the neck) are major suppliers of blood to the brain.

Detained yacht arrives

Agence France-Presse

SINGAPORE — The American yacht Brillig arrived here Thursday from Vietnam, where it had been detained for more than three months.

The yacht was berthed at the Singapore Yacht Club, but the whereabouts of its three crew members were unknown.

It was believed they had been met and taken away by American embassy officials, but an embassy spokesman denied any knowledge of the yacht except that it was due here Thursday.

The crew — Charles Affel, Leland Dickerman and Cornelia Dellenbaugh were detained by Vietnamese authorities last Oct. 12 while on their way from Thailand to the United States.

Unconfirmed reports said they were charged with possession of drugs and fined.

The yacht was released on Jan. 4 but could not put to sea until last thursday because of bad weather.

Affel later told a reporter he had been asked by the American embassy not to talk to the press, but an embassy spokesman denied this.

Gala to raise money for Demo party

By WALTER PINCUS
The Washington Post

ATLANTA — Bert Lance's cash flow problems may have propelled him out of the Carter Administration last September. But his golden touch with contributors has made him the financial hero of the Jimmy Carter fund-raising gala here Friday night.

With Lance helping to man the phones, a grateful constituency of fat cats is expected to shower between $650,000 and $850,000 into the Democratic Party's near-empty coffers to help pay off old debts and finance this year's Congressional campaigns.

The list of donors the Democrats tapped comprises the political funds of such blue chip corporations with with heavy Washington interests as the LTV Corp. ($10,000); Grumman Aircraft ($7,000); Braniff Airlines ($5,000); Delta Airlines ($5,000); American Family Insurance Co. ($8,000).

Individual enthusiasm ran high too, as witness the case of wealthy Florida developer E. Everett Huskey, who is buying $40,000 worth of tickets for himself and his wife. (Vice President Mondale spent an hour at Huskey's home in Orlando, Fla., on Jan. 4 warming him up on the subject of ticket sales.)

As added bait to the $1,000-a-couple catered affair in the President's political home grounds, donors were offered the dinner companionship of Cabinet members.

Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Joseph A. Califano Jr., for example, will be seated with a group of doctors who paid dearly for an opportunity to pour out their hearts to him.

A group of wealthy sportsmen associated with Safari International have been offered Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus in exchange for the purchase of a table.

Democratic National Committee Treasurer Joel McCleary and dinner chairman Tom Beard handled the day-to-day mechanics while ex-budget director Lance was the recognized front man making phone calls for donations all over the southeast.

Grumman and LTV are locked in a competitive battle with Northrop for coveted fighter aircraft contracts with the Navy. Braniff was recently awarded a controversial route to Europe by White House decision.

About 2,000 are expected to be seated at the dinner, with all but 300 to 400 of them complimentary. The dinner sponsors are paying $25-a-plate for the meal (duck l'orange, wine and bubbly) and rent.

Lance will be the host at a private cocktail party he is sponsoring for Cabinet members with whom he recently shared rank. He will also cat as master-of-ceremonies and then introduce his friend, Jimmy Carter, at the dinner.

The dinner committee is paying for the cost not only of the President's travel, but his staff and Cabinet members. That adds up.

Califano, for example, is expected in Atlanta with his secretary and three other aides. Earlier this week he sent an advance man to look over the dinner site and learn with whom he would be seated.

The Atlanta affair is the first in a string of at least five dinners from which Party officials hope to clear $5 million. The Republicans hope to raise $14 million through comparable efforts without the drawing power of a President or a Congressional majority.

Uganda showing scars of Amin's seven years

By DAVID LAMB
The Los Angeles Times

NAIROBI, Kenya — President Idi Amin of Uganda this month celebrates the seventh anniversary of the coup that brought him to power, more security-conscious of late but still as firmly in control as ever.

He appears to have consolidated his power during the past year, liquidating the remnants of civilian opposition, purging the army, banning 27 Christian churches and relying more and more on fellow Moslems and Kakwa tribesmen in key positions.

High coffee prices have eased Uganda's desperate economic condition somewhat, even though coffee production is dropping. But in every other respect, Uganda today is a sickly and dispirited nation, debilitated and scarred by seven years of homicidal rule. The streets of Kampala, the capital, are eerily still after dusk, the restuarants empty, the magnificent game parks deserted. Construction has ground to a halt, stores have long since run out of all but their most basic supplies. Butter sells for $9 a pound, beer for $1.50 a bottle. One egg costs 50 cents.

Families at homes eat alone around their backyard charcoal cookers, afraid that any cluster of even relatives or friends might create suspicion and attract the attention of Amin's omnipresent security agents. People have died for far less.

Information reaching Nairobi from refugees and diplomatic sources suggests that the wholesale slaughter of Ugandans has abated in recent months. One woman living near Makindye prison was quoted as saying she had not heard the nightly screams coming from inside the walls for some time. And what was an exodus of Ugandan refugees into Kenya early last summer has slowed to a trickle.

"I don't think it indicates that Amin has suddenly decided to become a humanitarian," a Ugandan refugee said here. "It's just that there are less and less people worth killing. Most of the people worth the price of a bullet are already dead or out of the country."

Estimates of the number of Ugandans killed during Amin's reign of terror range from 50,000 to 300,000. The political exiles number many thousands more. There is hardly a family among Uganda's 12 million people that has not lost a relative at the hands of Amin's unruly army and secret police agencies.

Analysis

So complete has been the silencing of opposition voices that intelligence analysts believe that only from within the army could anti-Amin forces pose a threat. But the 260-pound former boxing champion, who escaped alleged assassination attempts last January and June, would no longer offer an easy target.

In recent months Amin has abandoned the practice of driving himself unescorted through Kampala and mingling freely and frequently in public. He now spends most of his time in his well-guarded presidential compounds and travels by helicopter and boat when possible to avoid being ambushed on the roads.

When he is seen in public, Amin is accompanied by his presidential strike force of Nubian mercenaries recruited from Sudan. Although he professes to be unconcerned about his security, Amin surely must realize that there are few leaders in the world who have more enemies than he.

Last Autumn he sent one of his most trusted officers, Maj. Osman Mohammed, to Paris to establish a spy ring capable of infiltrating anti-Amin exile groups in Europe. Such a ring has operated covertly and with some success in Kenya for years.

Osman reached Paris about the time Ugandan resistance groups from three contiennts were meeting secretly in Lusaka, the Zambian capital and uniting under a single organization known as the Uganda National Movement. The gathering brought together Ugandans living in east and central Africa, Britain, Scandinavia, the United States, Canada and the Caribbean. Noticeably absent was Milton Obote, whom Amin overthrew on Jan. 25, 1971, while Obote was at a British Commonwealth meeting in Singapore, trying to rally support against a British decision to sell arms to South Africa. Prior to the 1977 Lusaka meeting of anti-Amin exiles, Obote had asked Zambia to cancel the conference.

Now living in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, Obote still views himself as the legal president of Uganda and has tried to reform his own former ruling party. But in discouraging the creation of resistance groups other than his own, Obote has lost the support of most Ugandan exiles.

With so many Ugandans dead or in exile, the country has virtually depleted its human resources. The once-substantial class of educated professionals no longer exists. Today the elitists are uneducated and undisciplined military officers. The general whom Amin appointed last year as the nation's vice president, for instance, can neither read nor write.

To fill the professorial void at Makerere Uniarsity in Kampala, once the finest college in East Africa, Amin has turned to Pakistan. He has brought in 50 to 100 Cubans to train his army and has found friends in Libya and the Soviet Union willing to underwrite his penchant for military hardware (As much as 50 percent of Uganda's budget is spent on defense).

What Amin has proved these past seven years is that he is a durable man. He has escaped at least 13 coup attempts. He has led a once-prospering country into steady ruin. Yet, remarkably, he remains firmsly entrenched in authority, is quoted in the media as something of a sage and is treated by some African heads of state as a folk hero.

Monkeys develop heart problems

By HARRY NELSON
The Los Angeles Times

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — Monkeys fed a diet simulating that of many American children develop high blood pressure, according to the findings of a Louisiana study reported here Tuesday.

Dr. Gerald S. Berenson of the Louisiana State University School of Medicine first surveyed the eating habits of some 5,000 children aged from a few months to 17 years of age who live in Bogalusa, La.

The typical 10-year-old was found to consume 34 percent of his calories as snacks that are high in salt and sugar. Salt consumption has long been associated with a risk of developing high blood pressure.

To learn what effect this diet may be having on the children, Berenson fed monkeys a diet roughly equivalent to that of the children in ratios of sugar, salt, fat and protein.

A special part of the monkey study was to measure the separate effects of salt and sugar on the development of high blood pressure. One group of monkeys had salt but no sugar in its diet, while another had both salt and sugar.

Not only did the animals fed salt-sugar diets develop significantly high blood pressure than animals on a low salt and sugar diet, but the animals receiving both salt and sugar had higher pressures than those on salt alone.

Berenson, who reported his study at an American Heart Association science writers forum here, said the effect of the sugar on the monkeys' cholesterol levels was as great as when the diet cholesterol was increased 10 fold.

He said some of the children in his study already are developing high blood pressure.

"Feeding monkeys the diet kids eat is a good model for producing atherosclerosis," he said.

Atherosclerosis is the disease of arteries that causes them gradually to become clogged, paving the way for a heart attack or stroke.

Another study by a Mayo Medical School pediatrician, Dr. William Weidman, compared the blood pressure readings and body weight of two separate groups of Aymara Indians living in Chile, one at 15,000 feet and the other at 10,000 feet.

It was found that the blood pressure of typical males in both groups rose steadily from birth to age 20 and then leveled off at about 120-75 for the rest of their lives — a very healthy level. Any variation in this level showed a strong correlation with an increase in body weight.

Unlike the Indians, Weidman said, Americans show an increase in blood pressure from childhood through adulthood.

A chief reason why the blood pressure of Americans continues to rise, he said, is that Americans typically continue to gain weight until old age.

"The built-in health recommendation of all this," commented Dr. Harriet P. Dustan, immediate past president of the American Heart Association, "is that people shouldn't be obese." Dr. Dustan said people should not be satisfied with weighing the same at age 50 as at 20 because the muscles of youth are gradually replaced by the fat of middle age.

"As we grow older we should weigh less," she said.

High blood pressure is one of the most important risk factors leading to heart disease. A man whose systolic blood pressure is more than 150 has more than double the risk of a heart attack and nearly four times the risk of a stroke of a man whose systolic pressure is 120. The systolic reading is the first number in a blood pressure reading, as in 150-90.

Twenty percent of Americans have high blood pressure according to national surveys. About one-half of them are unaware of their condition.

Recently, more attention has been paid to labile hypertension, meaning a condition in which the blood pressure is intermittently high and normal depending on which day it is taken. About 5 to 10 percent of the population is estimated to have this form of hypertension.

According to Dr. Robert M. Carey of the University of Virginia, there is reason to believe that much of the hypertension picked up in national surveys may actually be labile hypertension.

Volunteer searchers use dogs on teams

By GAYLE FISHER

TRUCKEE, Calif. (AP) — When people get lost in the West, authorities responsible for looking for them often seek out the help of Bridget and Hobo.

These German shepherds are far above the average family pet. They specialize in finding lost persons, whether it be in rugged wilderness or disaster areas.

The dogs are part of a Northern California-based volunteer corporation started in 1975 called WOOF, or Wilderness Finders, Inc.

Each canine works with a handler who works closely with various agencies, such as the El Dorado County Sheriff's Department, on a 24-hour call basis. There are seven teams and six others in training.

Sandy Bryson of South Lake Tahoe, who has been training dogs for 13 years, originated the idea.

She says the dogs learn to locate people through scent or tracking. If a track is fresh, the dogs will follow it. Otherwise, the dogs must search wind currents for the human scent that comes from a body — dead or alive.

"One WOOF team can cover the same area in about the same time as 30 men," she said.

But search and rescue dogs must have high-quality training first, she added, and not any dog is qualified for the job. The canine must have a good coat, strength, agility, the right temperament and intelligence before being considered, she said.

"WOOF has five German shepherds and two golden retrievers who fit the bill," she added. "It's important that a dog prefer people above all else. That way, it won't get distracted by other animals."

But the handlers must be special, too.

"They must like the outdoors and they must like dogs. They have to be more than just a dogooder," Ms. Bryson said.

It usually takes about two years to train a dog, she said.

"At first, it's only fun and games," she said. "We hide toys and they find them."

Eventually the dogs, who train from one to three times a week, can find strangers.

"We only use incentive rewards, no punishment," she added. "We give lots and lots of praise."

South ruffed the third spade, cashed the top diamonds and ruffed a diamond in dummy. He cashed dummy's aces and led a club from dummy.

West won with the jack and tried to cash the king of clubs. South ruffed, drew a round of trumps and gave up one trump trick, claiming his contract.

"You should step up with the queen of clubs," I told East, "and then lead the queen of spades. You get two trump tricks instead of only one."

ACCUSING LOOK

Everybody looked accusingly at East, but I broke in again. "You should make the contract anyway," I told South. "After you've ruffed the diamond and cashed dummy's two aces, lead dummy's last spade instead of a club. Throw your nine of clubs, and now the defense can't hurt you."

The next day the South player told another friend how he had played this hand. He got dramatic as he described his play of dummy's last spade. "It might be a good hand for your column," he remarked as he closed his artistic narration. "It might teach your readers a good lesson."

DAILY QUESTION

As dealer, you hold: S 10 4; H K 10 9 7 5 4; D A K 5; C 9 4. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid one heart. You have 10 points in high cards and 2 points for the doubletons. It is unusual to open a 12-point hand, but you should do so when you have a good major suit and when your high cards are in good combination.

'Cloudy' cliches haven't vanished

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN

RIDGEGIELD, Conn. (AP) — When James Thurber lived here in Connecticut in the pretty little town of West Cornwall, he had a cleaning lady who came every day "trailing a glory of cloudiness."

Della was her name, and she used to ask questions like, "Do you want cretonnes in your soup tonight?" Or she would inform her employer that the lawn was covered with "fletchers," not medieval arrow makers as the dictionary advised, but birds that other less gifted wordsmiths called flickers.

Speaking pure Lewis Carroll, Della would Jabber (wocky) while she dusted about her brother who worked at the town incinerator, where "they burned the refuge," and another who got high marks in his "silver service eliminations," and a beautiful sister who tragically died young "after she got tuberculosis in her teeth and it went all through her symptom."

The art of speaking obverse English, delivering a glancing blow to a cliche so that you don't quite hit the nail on the head, happily has not vanished from the lips of the common folk, the everyday conversationalist who probably watches television too much but doesn't quite listen to it.

"Language," wrote George Santayana, "is the door to knowledge." In the building where I work in New York there is an inventive linguist who leaves the door ajar, and sometimes hanging off the hinge, almost every time he opens his mouth.

Trailing further glories of cloudiness, the same rhetorician explained that teen-aged jockey Steven Cauthen, despite his baby looks, was "no shrinking violin ... he's tough as they come."

He once spoke sadly of a friend whose marriage was breaking up because the wife "drank like a fish out of water."

Both my mother and my father had this ability to put a little extra English on the Queen's English, so that words came out a rakish, jaunty angle, like the way Rex Harrison wore his tweed hat.

My mother thought I kept my 16-foot sailboat "at the marinara," probably because there was an Italian restaurant at the end of the dock.

I told her I was going out to Nebraska to do a story on the wheat harvest. "Oh," she said, "are those the migraine workers?"

I had to tell her the migraine workers were reporters sent out to wheat farms looking for stories dreamed up by bosses born on wheat farms.

Dad liked crossing the country by Greyhound because it was "very scene-i-anic," but disliked "the muriels" in the state Capitol at Baton Rouge. He had a friend at work who complained of "too many flies in the oatmeal," but was at Madison Square Garden the night Bobby Orr "did the Mexican hat rack." The friend was badly hurt in a "profane gas explosion" and wound up in the "expensive care unit" at St. Clare's Hospital.

This facility for fracturing the obvious with a karate chop must have rubbed off because in Washington recently I found myself complimenting a beautiful mother of six teen-aged girls with the line: "You look younger than all your daughters put together."

The sports scene, in particular, seems to lend itself to this sort of thing. The New Orleans Times-

Mulligan's Stew

Picayune had a stringer correspondent for high school games who wrote that Baton Rouge and Istrouma fought to a scoreless tie in the annual renewal of their bitter rivalry, "but the game actually was much closer than the score indicated."

Then there was the night when heavyweight Kingfish Levinsky was carried back to his dressing room after being pole axed by Joe Louis in the first round and told reporters he had been "knocked into a transom."

Or as Manager Joe Jacobs said after Louis dispatched his ward, Two Ton Tony Galento, to Lewis Carrolland in four rounds: "We should have stood in bed."

Harry Cohn, the immortal mogul of Columbia Pictures, said it best to his round table of yes men: "I could be wrong, but I'm not far from it."

His language was as precise and original as the deputy sheriff who phoned Howard Jacobs, the columnist on the TimesPicayune, to report that a passenger drowned on the Algiers ferry when he "leaned against a section of railing that was missing."

Sic transit Gloria Nubilorum. Which in (Howard) Cosell's Latin dictionary means "Tennessee has got to get some momentum going in the second half."

Clergy not only help available

By ROBERT WALLACE, Ed.D.
Copley News Service

Doctor Wallace: I read a letter today in your column written by an unwed pregnant girl.

Your suggestion that a clergyman could help the pregnant girl choose the correct alternative is not entirely correct. Clergymen do not always know about the choices that a frightened pregnant girl has.

Her best bet would be to go to a Planned Parenthood or a Family Planning Clinic. She needs reassurance and facts without any moral overtone. A clergyman with inadequate knowledge or improper attitude can complicate the matter further. — Ajita Kale, Executive Director, Family Planning Service, Galesburg, Ill. 61401

Dear Mrs. Kale: Thanks for your concern. Although I would not eliminate the clergy at this critical time, I agree that a Family Planning Clinic can offer necessary assistance.

The best suggestion might have been to contact both your clergyman and a Family Planning Clinic, if available.

Doctor Wallace: I am a sophomore with many friends who are lots of fun to be with, but there is just one person that ruins everything. None of us really like him.

He doesn't have any real friends of his own and we'd all like him to meet his own type of friends because he really doesn't fit in with us. We don't want to hurt his feelings any more than what we have.

I personally feel as though I've been rude to him. I know he is mad at me because I have been excluding him from our conversations.

He just isn't getting our hint that we don't want him around. I don't know how to tell him because we used to be good friends in grade school but I've found my own type of friends to be with.

What would be a good way to get the message across to him without hurting his feelings more? — C.H., Seattle, Wash.

Dear C.H.: Being rude to him is not the answer. Since he was a friend of yours in grade school why don't you tell him face to face that you no longer care to be acquainted with him. You don't say why he doesn't fit into your crowd or why he ruins everything.

Wouldn't it be nice if you could make friends with him, help correct his problem and include him in the group?

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Hyperventilation is common ill

DR. SOLOMON: Is hyperventilation dangerous?--Gillian L.

DEAR GILLIAN: Hyperventilation is common. It can have a physical cause, but it is frequently brought about by anxiety and stress. And sometimes it may be aggravated by the erroneous belief that rapid breathing is actually good for your health.

Of couse, if you exercise vigourously, you will need more oxygen, and you will automatically increase your lung action to get it. But excessive, unnecessary rapid breathing takes too much carbon dioxide out of the blood. This upsets the body's chemistry and can produce a variety of symptoms suggesting all sorts of diseases--one being chest pain quite similar to that occuring with angina.

The patient is trained to get breathing habits back to normal, and in particular to use the diaphragm more. People who hyperventflate have a characteristic way of using the upper part of their chest with a heaving motion. They also tend to yawn frequently--in an attempt to get additional air. And sometimes they get in the habit of sighing, too. But these are all things that can generally be corrected without too much trouble.

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: Can intrauterine devices cause an infection in the tubes going from the ovaries to the uterus?--Claudine F.

DEAR CLAUDINE: It does occur in some cases. A recent Swedish study found that women using an IUD had three times the risk of getting salpingitis--inflammation of the uterine tubes--compared to non-users.

If the user had never been pregnant, there was in fact an even higher risk--seven times greater. The Swedish researchers thought that might be because the utering muscles of a woman in this category were more active after the IUD was inserted--facilitating the spread of an infection from lower down in the genital tract.

Pelvic inflammatory disease, although relatively rare, is one possible disadvantage of the IUD. Others are bleeding, cramps, and expulsion. However, many women do find the IUD a satisfactory method of birth control.

DENVER (AP) — The towering peaks of the Colorado high country are blanketed with deep snow this winter.

Color them green.

After a snow-drought that cost the state's ski industry an estimated $78 million last year, the skiers are back — in force. Records are being set for snow, sales and spending.

How good is it?

Quick facts and figures:

—As of Wednesday, 171,702 skiers had been on the slopes at the Steamboat Springs ski area this season. On the same date last year, the figure was 72,919.

—Snowfall this winter at the Vail ski area has totaled 225 inches, already 5 percent above the record snowfall for the entire 1975-76 winter.

Japanese ownership gives Quasar new life

By SAM JAMESON
The Los Angeles Times

FRANKLIN PARK, Ill. — Gert Taylor, 53, who had worked for Motorola for nearly 20 years, was, as she put it, "scared to death" in May 1974, when the Matsushita Electric Co. of Japan purchased Motorola's Quasar color television division.

But now, she said in a recent interview, "I feel more confident of the future. And it seems like the work is much steadier, too."

Mrs. Taylor's comment was typical of those made by other long-time employees at the plant here that was close to collapse in 1974. Quasar has been given new life by the new Japanese ownership.

Matsushita paid $50 million for the Quasar division, the brand name and the Quasar distribution rights, plus another $16 million for new automated equipment. The sale represents one facet of a new phenomenon: growing Japanese investment in manufacturing facilities in the United States.

With protectionist pressures in the United States and the yen's value in relation to the dollar both rising, thereby driving up the cost of manufacturing in Japan for export, Japanese firms are expected to increase the volume and variety of their investments in the United States.

As a division of Motorola, Quasar had what Homer Marrs, senior vice president of Motorola, called "a 10-year record of very bad profits." Motorola made the decision to sell. Matsushitz, which makes Panasonic products, was the only prospective buyer around — "after three years of searching," Marrs said.

Now, after a rough beginning that coincided with a post-oil crisis tailspin in the TV industry as a whole, Quasar expects to register a profit in the 12-month period ending in May.

The turnaround has been accomplished in a way that defies traditional conceptions of American and Japanese industry.

To add to existing Quasar equipment, the Japanese brought the most automated machinery to the Franklin Park plant outside Chicago. Women workers have been given opportunities for advancement that they never had under Motorola, despite the male-dominated organizational structure of business firms in Japan. And, perhaps to the surprise of Matsushita itself, employment costs at the Franklin Park plant have fallen below employment costs in Japan.

MASARU NAGAI, deputy director of Matsushita's overseas operations division, interviewed in Osaka, Japan, conceded that the Quasar opration will fail to meet Matsushita's corporate standard of recovering in profits the cost of investment in the first five years. But Nagai was bullish for the long term.

"I have been challenging Bob Blumberg, the president of Quasar, to increase Quasar's share of the American television market from 6 percent to 10 percent and to double present production levels (of about 500,000 sets a year)," he said.

Matsushita sent one of its executives to oversee the Franklin Park plant and spent the first years studying how the plant operated. Then changes started.

A two-and-a-half-month shutdown was carried out in 1975 to consolidate Quasar operations at Quincy, Ill, and Pontiac, Mich., into the Franklin Park plant.

Matsuthita-developed blueprints for TV set manufacture were sent to Quasar. The number of parts in Quasar sets was cut by 40 percent and bulk was reduced as a result, Nagai said.

Modern equipment, including Matsushita-engineered automatic inserting machines, was installed. The machines, Matsushita officials in Japan said, perform jobs that once required 388 workers, inserting automatically 80 percent of all parts in the complicated printed circuit board that is one of the basic parts of a TV set. (By comparison, Zenith officials in Chicago said that Zenith inserts by machine about 50 percent of parts in seven separate boards it uses. Another $1 million investment in automatic insertion equipment is scheduled for this spring.

Assembly operations were switched from a continuous flow to a free-flow system used by Matsushita in Japan. On a free-flow assembly, any worker can stop the line when he wants more time to finish his job.

The Japanese president went home in 1976 and a new management team under Blumberg was given control. Lee Bazany, vice president in charge of finance, said that all but one executive left — "the same kind of turnover you get when a new president comes in and brings in his own team."

BLACK and white sets from 5 inches to 19 inches in size — from Matsushita factories in Puerto Rico, South Korea and Japan — were added to the Quasar product line. Blueprints for smaller color TV sets, which Motorola had not made, were brought her and a 12-inch color set made in Japan was added to products offered to customers. Videotape recorders, which no American TV company produces, were produced in Japan by Matsushita with the Quasar brand name and put on sale in 1976.

All this gave Quasar a line of TV products it had not had under Motorola, which concentrated on sets 19 inches or larger.

"You need a full range of sizes to compete in salesrooms," Nagai said. "We filled in the gaps."

Nagai said one factor in Matsushita's decision to buy Quasar was the fear that Japanese firms would be forced to curb exports to the United States.

"We had continually in the past been accused of dumping (selling at prices below cost) and feared we would face such charges again," Nagai said. "At the time, nobody was calling for restraints on exports from Japan, but we felt that such a time would come."

No new jobs have been created so far. On the contrary, there are fewer jobs. Estimates vary as to how many Quasar workers have lost their jobs in the period under Matsushita control.

Nagai, saying that management decisions are entrusted to Blumberg, added that no effort has been made to give the American workers the kind of unwritten guarantee of lifetime employment which workers at plants in Japan have. He said employment at Quasar under Matsushita ownership had dropped from 6,000 to 2,800, but both Motorola and Quasar officials contradicted him.

Marrs of Motorola said his firm was responsible for dismissing most of the workers — some 3,000 at the Quincy plant which Nagai included in his estimate — before Matsushita took over the Quincy operation in 1976, two years after the initial purchase.

Jim O'Hara, employment director at Quasar, said the Franklin Park plant now employs 2,663 workers, compared with about 2,500 in May 1974. For those still on the job, employment has become more stabilized.

Quasar officials said that productivity under Matsushita ownership has improved considerably, but refused to give specific figures. A comparison of output and number of factory assembly line workers at a Matsushita plant at Ibaragi, a suburb of Osaka, with the Franklin Park plant indicated that Quasar still has not come up to the standards that obtain in Japan.

At Ibaragi 1,375 factory workers produce 70,000 color TV sets a month, compared with 1,465 workers producing fewer than 42,000 color TV sets a month at Franklin Park. Ibaragi plant officials said productivity there has increased 400 percent since 1970.

FIGURES given for factory wages paid by Matsushita in Ibaragi and by Quasar here indicated that labor costs are lower in Franklin Park, if productivity is not considered. At Ibaragi the average wage, including fringe benefits, is $1,166 a month, Matsushita officials said. At Franklin Park, the average wage, including fringe benefits, is $1,058 a month, Bazany said.

Most Japanese executives in fields other than television have until now been reluctant to invest in manufacturing in the United States because of what they fear would be a less-hard-working, higher-paid labor force with less loyalty to the company.

NEW YORK (AP) — Jack Benny's widow says her husband's will provides for her to receive one red rose every day for the rest of her life.

Mrs. Benny writes of that and other stories from their 48-year marriage in the February issue of McCalls magazine.

Little that is funny about tax time

By GEORGE DeWAN
Newsday

What's the difference between a tax collector and a taxidermist? A taxidermist takes only your skin.

That hoary Mark Twain joke is one of the few humorous things that can be said about the income tax season, which is now upon us. Forms 1040 (baby blue) and 1040A (pink) are arriving in mail boxes. How-to-do-it income tax guides are stacking up in the bookstores. Professional tax preparers are repainting their signs. The Internal Revenue Service is sweeping out its vaults to accommodate the approximately $160 billion it will be extracting from taxpayers this year.

For the 83 million or so U.S. citizens who are about to make their annual report to the IRS, there are changes to be reckoned with. And a number of them have to do with simplification of the tax forms, which has to be good news for taxpayers. "I think it's going to be a helluva lot easier for most people to do their returns this year over last year," said James Crumlish, a manager in the New York office of the Touche Ross accounting firm. "The only thing they have to learn is that there's a change in the rules on calculating taxable income. But, if you just follow the instructions on the firm, you'll be all right."

Both form 1040 and the short form, 1040A, have been simplified. Last year, form 1040A had 25 lines and filled both sides of a half sheet of paper; this year it has 15 lines and fills one side of a full sheet. Form 1040, which is the same length as last year, has been made "linear." This means that it proceeds from line to line without having to jump back and forth to the reverse page or other schedules for computations.

One change that will most likely confuse taxpayers at first — although it is also a simplification — is that the standard deduction is no longer a percentage of income. Now it is a flat $2,200 for individuals filing singly, $3,200 for joint returns and $1,600 for married persons filing separately. This flat amount is called the "zero bracket amount." Most important is this: It requires no computation by the taxpayer, because it is incorporated into new tax tables and rate schedules as a zero bracket amount. What this means is that the tables simply do not tax the first $2,200 of single income or $3,200 of joint married income. Taxpayers who itemize their deductions may take such deductions only to the extent that they exceed the zero bracket amount. For example, a single taxpayer automatically gets a $2,200 deduction. If his itemized deductions total, say, $2,500, then he can take the additional $300, which would be subtracted from gross income to arrive at tax table income.

New tax tables are to be used generally by individuals with adjusted gross income of $20,000 or less and fewer than four exemptions, and by marrieds filing jointly with income of $40,000 or less with fewer than 10 exemptions. There is no longer any need to deduct $750 for each exemption or figure a general tax credit, because these amounts are — along with the zero bracket amount — built into the tax tables.

While the IRS updated the forms on its own, there are a number of substantive changes this year based on congressional mandates in the 1976 Tax Reform Act and the 1977 Tax Reduction and Simplification Act. Summaries of the major changes for individual taxpayers follow:

ALIMONY PAYMENTS — Previously an itemized deduction, alimony payments are now an adjustment to income. This means that the amount of alimony paid last year can be claimed by anyone, whether or not he itemizes deductions.

JOB-RELATED MOVING COSTS — If you moved in 1977 because of employment, the law now says that you may deduct moving expenses on your tax return, provided that your new job is at least 35 miles (formerly 50 miles) farther from your former home than your old job. In addition, the maximum deduction for pre-move househunting and temporary living expenses has gone from $1,000 to $1,500, and the deduction for expenses related to buying, selling or renting the home has increased from $2,500 to $3,000.

GENERAL TAX CREDIT — This credit has been extended through 1978. It is the greater of $35 for each personal and dependency exemption or 2 percent of the first $9,000 of taxable income.

CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES — On 1977 income, the new holding period that spells the difference between short-term and long-term capital gains and losses is 9 months, not 6 months. Gains or losses on assets held 9 months or less are short-term and are taxed as ordinary income. If the asset was held more than 9 months, the gain or loss is long-term In 1978, the asset will have to be held for 12 months to take the sale long-term. Another change in connection with capital losses is that the maximum amount of net capital loss that can be used to offset ordinary income in 1977 has been doubled to $2,000, and in 1978 to goes to $3,000.

INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS — Workers under the age of 70 1-2 who do not participate in any pension or annuity plan may include their nonworking spouses in their individual retirement accounts, and an extra $250 a year can be added to the maximum of $1,500 allowed the workers. In addition, contributions to IRAs can be made for an additional 45 days, until Feb. 15, 1978, and still be deducted on the 1977 tax return.

SALE OF RESIDENCE BY THE ELDERLY — If at least one spouse is age 65 or older, there is no tax on the capital gain on the first $35,000 of adjusted sales price, an increase of $15,000 in the allowance. The home must have been the principal place of residence for 5 of the previous 8 years. The adjusted sales price is the amount received after paying selling commissions and certain allowable fix-up expenses.

WORK-RELATED CHILD CARE — Expenses paid for work-related child care may now be claimed as a tax credit. The credit is 20 percent of the amount paid during the year for such care, with a maximum of $400 for one child and $800 for two children.

CHILD SUPPORT — For a non-custodial parent to claim children as dependents on a tax return — provided that this is not stipulated in the divorce decree — a contribution of at least $1,200 had to be made for one or more children. That amount has been increased to $1,200 for each child.

MINIMUM INCOME — The amount of income an individual must have made before being required to file a tax return has been raised $500, to $2,950. Also, a child with unearned income (for instance, from interest, dividends, etc.) of $750 or more who can be claimed as a dependent by his parents still must file a return.

A source of bafflement to a lot of people may be line 45 (which says "See page 12 of instructions") and line 61A (which says "See page 13 of instructions"). The lines may or may not be ignored, depending upon Congress, over which the IRS has no control. The lines are reserved for homeowner credits for energy-saving expenses. At the time of printing of the forms, Congress had not completed action on proposals to give credits of up to $200 for home insulation installed after April 20 last year, and up to $2,200 for home installation of solar, wind or geothermal equipment. In fact, Congress is still debating the issue. Those taxpayers who are afraid they will be in trouble with the IRS unless they fill in every blank space should note the admonition in the instructions: "If the legislation does not pass, do not make an entry on this line or line 61A."

Perhaps the next-to-last word belongs to the IRS.

"Whether a tax return is filed early in January or on the last day of the filing season (April 17 this year, since April 15 falls on a weekend) has nothing to do with the selection of the return for audit," a bulletin from the Brooklyn district office says. "So don't wait until the last minute. File early for an early refund — and don't forget to use the peeloff address label and envelope IRS provides."

And don't forget to sign the return.

Mexican chamber head expects gas solution

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The President of the Mexican-American Chamber of Commerce said Thursday he expected a solution would be found to the dispute between Mexico and the United States over the price of Mexican natural gas.

"Naturally the purchaser always wants to get the best price possible and the seller is looking for the same thing," said Miguel M. Blazquez in an interview published in the newspaper "Uno Mas Uno."

But Blazquez predicted the bordering countries would reach agreement because of the convenience for both of transporting the gas from Mexico's southeastern fields via a pipeline to the Texas border.

The Mexican government oil Monopoly PEMEX and six U.S. private companies have tentatively agreed for the delivery of two billion cubic feet a day to the United States by 1980.

The gas would be delivered by an 821-mile, 48-inch pipeline, crossing the border near McAllen, Texas.

Mexico has coupled its asking price to the cost of No. 2 heating oil arriving in New York harbor, which in recent weeks would work out to about $2.76 per 1,000 cubic feet of gas.

PEMEX says the companies agreed to the price, but refused to sign a final agreement pending approval by U.S. regulatory agencies. The agencies are waiting until Congress decides on President Carter's energy bill, which would set a new ceiling on gas produced in the United States, which is far below the Mexican asking price.

The issue has resulted in charges in Mexico that the United States is trying to exploit Mexican natural resources by forcing a low price for the gas.

President Lopez Portillo and PEMEX director Jorge Diaz Serrano have announced Mexico will never budge on the price.

Irion region draws 7,200-foot explorer

Great Southwest Oil & Gas Co. of Houston spotted location for a 7,200-foot wildcat in Irion County, ⅝ mile west of Canyon production in the Mertzon multipay field.

The Ford, West (4,100) field of Culberson County gained a new well with completion of Continental Oil Co. No. 4-22 G. E. Ramsey, 12 miles northwest of Orla.

It finaled on the pump for 8 barrels of 39-gravity oil per day, with a gas-oil ratio of 420-1. It also made 410 barrels of water.

The mew well is the eighth for the field and extends the producing area one location south.

Service normal

Although weather in Midland was colder this morning than Thursday, natural gas supplies were back to normal shortly after 9 a.m.

Pioneer Natural Gas Co. District Manager Norman Henry said early this morning all Midland customers except the two largest industrial users were receiving normal service.

Cutbacks begun Thursday morning at Drilco Industrial and Tube-Kote were in effect until shortly after 9 a.m. this morning, but other industrial users were back to normal use about noon Thursday.

"We're in good shape," Henry said of gas pressure in the lines. Low pressure was the cause of the cutbacks Thursday, he said.

Henry said he does not know why the pressure is higher today than Thursday. "You'll just have to use your own crystal ball for that," he said.

Inflation gets boost

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices rose a moderate 0.4 percent in December, bringing the overall rise in prices in 1977 to 6.8 percent, the government reported today.

The inflation rate was about in line with what the Carter administration predicted for the year and compared with a 4.8 percent price rise in 1976.

The Labor Department blamed last year's acceleration of inflation on higher food prices during the first half of the year when severe winter weather affected crops and reduced supplies.

The administration originally projected consumer prices to rise 6.7 percent in 1977 but revised its forecast in April to 6.9 percent because of the weather's effect during the first three months of the year.

Although inflation was higher last year than in 1976, the rate cooled during the second half of the year. Consumer prices rose at a seasonally adjusted 4.6 percent annual rate during the final three months of 1977, compared with a 10 percent annual rate in the first quarter.

Administration economists predict inflation in 1978 will rise at about the same rate as last year, with the average family's food costs increasing 4 to 6 percent.

It in his State of the Union speech Thursday night, President Carter expressed concern with the high rate of inflation and proposed a new, voluntary program to combat it through wage and price restraints. He called on government, business, labor and other groups to hold wage and price increases in each sector of the economy during 1978 below the average increases of the last two years.

Dollar drops

LONDON (AP)—The dollar dropped sharply in the first hour of trading on European foreign exchanges today as dealers expressed disappointment with President Carter's State of the Union address.

By midmorning, however, the dollar recouped some of its losses and showed a fractional gain against the Swiss franc in Zurich. Dealers said profit-taking and the buying of "cheap" dollars contributed to the rise.

"It's a lot of waffle," one dealer at a major U.S. bank in London said of the president's speech. His remark was echoed by money experts across Europe.

They said the speech contained nothing new and showed no sign that the United States will tackle effectively the main cause of the dollar's decline over the past year, the huge deficit in America's balance of payments deficit.

News of Japan's $2.2 billion trade surplus for December "certainly hasn't helped the dollar," a Frankfurt dealer commented.

Midmorning quotes in major financial centers compared with prices late Thursday were 2.0070 Swiss francs in Zurich, up from 1.9985; 2.1190 Deutsche marks in Frankfurt, down from 2.1250; 4.72875 French francs in Paris, down from 4.7470, and 872 lire in Milan, down from 873.45

In London, the pound sterling rose very slightly, to $1.9355 from $1.9333.

Traders in Asia reported Carter's speech had little or no effect on the dollar there.

Few obey speed limit

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A top Texas official says drivers don't believe there is an energy crisis anymore and their feeling is reflected in widespread disregard for the 55 mph speed limit.

More than 80 percent of the motorists on Texas highways speed above the legal 55 mph limit, according to Joe E. Milner, chief of the division of law enforcement for the Department of Public Safety.

"When the 55 mph speed limit was first enacted, there was a high degree of compliance," Milner said Thursday. "Now, people just don't believe there is an energy shortage and they don't like the federal government controlling their highways."

He said the latest figures, for last December, show 80 percent of the drivers ignore Texas' 55 mph highway speed limit.

Midland girls win in OT

Beth Thomason scored four of her game-high 27 points in the final 30 seconds of overtime Thursday night, to lead the Midland High girls basketball team to an exciting 56-55 win over Lee in the MHS gym.

The victory gave the Pack a share of the first-half District 5-4A title with Lee, as both teams finished the first portion of league play with 6-1 records.

Thomason was practically unstoppable in the victory, especially in the overtime. Her basket with just a half minute left put Midland in the lead for good, 54-53, and the talented senior put the contest on ice with a pair of pressure-packed free throws 10 seconds later.

Giving Thomason some offensive help were teammates Terry Dean and Karen Cook, who had 13 and 10 points respectively.

Lee's Dee Dee Poole put on a gallant display of basketball prowess herself as she led the Rebels with 18 points. Poole was responsible for the game going into overtime, when she hit a clutch basket with just eight second left in regulation. Also hitting in double digits for Coach Shirley Stephenson's team were Schilla McCallister, who had 14, and Deborah Kittle, who tossed in 13.

The Rebels went into the contest needing only a victory to win the first half title outright, and the way they played in the first 16 minutes, it looked like they were going to get it without very much difficulty. Led by Poole and McCallister, Lee broke out to an 11-3 first quarter lead, and held a comfortable 27-16 advantage at intermission.

But Coach Jane Young's Bulldogs came out of the dressing room breathing fire and they reeled off four straight baskets — two each by Thomason and Dean — before Lee even knew what had hit them. Thomason's bucket with 5:52 left in the quarter closed the gap to 27-24.

Midland managed to tie the game at 29 on a pair of free throws by Dean, but they never were able to take the lead until a tap in basket by Dean with 5:14 left in the fourth quarter did the trick. That put them up, 42-40.

It appeared the 'Dogs weren't even going to need the extra period to pull out the win when Sandra Rock's two free throws with 15 seconds left gave Midland a 48-46 lead. But Poole answered seven seconds later with the big bucket that forced the overtime.

Cook took over center stage in the early moments of the extra period as she hit a pair of free throws and then cashed in on a layup to make it 52-48 Midland. But McCallister countered on the other end of the floor with an unbelievable reverse layup, and turned it into a three-point play after she was fouled. That cut the Pack's lead to just one with 50 seconds left.

Poole gave Lee the lead for a few seconds when she made a pair of free throws with 45 seconds left after being fouled by Cook. Then, the Rebs got the ball back again five seconds later when Midland's Rock was called for a charge.

But Rock made amends quickly by stealing the ball right back and tossing a perfect pass to Thomason who turned it into the basket that put the Pack in the lead for good.

While Thomason and Poole stole the show offensively, there were several outstanding defensive performances turned in by players from both teams, including Midland's Susan Sloan and Jo Ann Johnson, and Lee's Cindy Harrison, Leisha Watkins and Carla Goodley.

Midland captured both the sophomore and junior varsity games as well. The Pack JV's, led by Jana Trolinder's 12 points, downed the Rebs, 44-25, and the MHS sophs were victorious, 38-33. Sandra Black of Midland was high in the sophomore game with 10 points.

Mathews elected to Hall; Slaughter snubbed again

NEW YORK (AP) — The newest member of baseball's Hall of Fame thinks some of the modern players belong in the Hall of Shame.

"The one thing I'm proudest of is that every day I played, I gave the best I had," said Eddie Mathews, the latest pledge in the fraternity of stars at Cooperstown, N.Y. "I don't think the players today do that.

"And I don't think they're as happy as we were. I feel sorry for them. Every day you read about how they don't like the way the uniform fits or their locker is too close to the shower. For the money they make, I don't think the production or attitude is there."

MATHEWS, THE slugging third baseman of the Boston, Milwaukee and Atlanta Braves in the 1950s and 60s, made the Hall of Fame because of his skill with the stick, blasting 512 home runs in a 17-year career. His three years as manager with Atlanta were much less distinguished and they have obviously left a sour taste in his mouth.

"I have no desire to manage or coach again," said Mathews, now a scout with the Milwaukee Brewers. "Basically, it's because of the attitude of the players. They're making good money, but they can't run to first base. You ask them 'Why?' and they say 'I can't get my head together.' You ask them to take extra batting practice, and they say they have to take the wife to the grocery store."

Mathews said his top salary was $67,500, which he made "fairly steady most of my career. I considered it a darn good salary."

THE BASEBALL Writers Association of America felt he had better than a darn good career, voting him into the historic shrine in his fifth year of eligibility. He received 301 votes out of the 379 cast, a comfortable margin over the 285 (75 percent) required to gain entry into the Hall.

"This is the most exciting day of my life," said the lifetime .271 batter and the fifth third baseman to gain immortality. "I think last year I was a little more excited. This year I fought it. I used reverse psychology. I just didn't want to get my hopes up again. Last year was very disappointing, but this was well worth waiting for."

Last year, Mathews, 46, finished second in the BBWAA balloting, trailing Ernie Banks, the only player selected by the writers in 1977. Banks, the buoyant Mr. Cub who is tied with Mathews in the ninth spot on the all-time homer list, called Mathews last year to help cheer him up.

MATHEWS SAID he appreciated the gesture, but he wasn't going to make any calls to this year's also-rans. Enos Slaughter finished second with 261 votes, just 24 short of the necessary total, Duke Snider had 254, the late Gil Hodges had 226 and Don Drysdale picked up 219 votes. No other player reached the 200-vote total.

Slaughter was Mathews' kind of ballplayer, running non-stop throughout his 19-year career. He's still running now, keeping his cap in the ring, even though he's failed to reach Cooperstown for the 13th straight time.

Hall is a popularity contest

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

NEW YORK (AP) — Eddie Mathews, a long ball-hitting third baseman, is the newest inductee into baseball's Hall of Fame, and hopes grow dimmer for Enos Slaughter, Duke Snider, Peewee Reese, Roger Maris and others waiting anxiously in the wings.

The list of the bride's maids — the "almosts" and the "maybe next times" — grows longer. Maybe a couple will make it. Most of them won't. With Willie Mays joining the eligibility list in 1979 and such shoo-ins as Frank Robinson, Hank Aaron and Brooks Robinson on the staggered ladder, each year finds familiar figures slipping farther back in the voting instead of making headway.

POOR PEEWEE Reese, the infield sparkplug of Brooklyn's famed "Boys of Summer." Fifteen years passed him by, now he must wait for the Old Timers Committee to vote him in. It can be the fate of many of the game's favorites.

It's tricky — this business of drawing 75 percent of the voting strength of the Baseball Writers Association of America.

As much as we protest our integrity and objectivity, all of us are guilty of being influenced by personal experiences, gossip and snap judgments. So, deny it we may, baseball's Hall of Fame is essentially a popularity contest.

Else, why the long delay in honoring Enos Slaughter, one of the fine hitters of St. Louis' old "Gas House Gang" later with the New York Yankees, and Roger Maris, whose asterisk feat of hitting 61 home runs in 1961 wiped out one of the most cherished records of Babe Ruth?

SLAUGHTER, WITH a 19-year, lifetime batting average of .300, now has been passed over for 13 years. As runner-up to Mathews, 14 short of election this year, he may have a chance to enter hand-in-hand with Mays next year. Good-bye, Maris — 202 short in the latest voting.

Slaughter and Maris are two men who have been victimized by their own negative personalities. They are snubbed by some voters who use the intangibles of the Hall of Fames guidelines — "integrity, sportsmanship, character" — as an excuse for omission.

Slaughter was a rough, unpolished gem out of Roxboro, N. C., whose teammates called him "Country." Once exposed to the glitter of baseball, he lived it to the hilt. He was a tough character on and off the field.

His social behavior offended some Puritanical natures. He had several wives. On the field, he played like a demon, going in-

Ross Browner wins Lombardi

The first time came when the Fighting Irish beat Texas in the Cotton Bowl to win the national championship. The second time was Thursday night when he won the Vince Lombardi Award as the nation's outstanding collegiate lineman.

And maybe the second time had a deeper personal meaning.

"I wanted to go out with a national championship," the senior 6-3, 247 pounder said. "We accomplished that and now I feel I can give the No. 1 signal to my father because I came out on top in this, too."

Browner addressed his No. 1 signal to his late father, Jimmy Lee Browner Sr., who died of cancer in 1976.

"I do have some reasons to dedicate the rest of my life to the fight against this dreaded disease," Browner told the sellout crowd of 1,200 at the $100 per plate dinner. "I got a lot of the discipline that I have today from my father."

Browner, a finalist for the Lombardi Award last year when the trophy went to Houston's Wilson Whitley, won out this year over teammate tight end Ken MacAfee, Texas defensive end Brad Shearer and Kentucky defensive end Art Still.

Notre Dame Coach Dan Devine said Browner, as one of four team captains, was one reason the Fighting Irish came backe from a slow start to win the national title.

"It is my philosophy to put the burden on the older people," Devine said. "The reason we turned it around was because the coaches didn't lose faith in the players and the players didn't lose faith in the coaches.

"Ross Browner is one of the finest football players I've ever known or seen and I'd like to introduce him as my friend."

Browner was the favorite to win the Lombardi last year as a junior when he also won the Outland Trophy. Shearer came in this year as a favorite along with Browner because the Texas defender earlier had been awarded the Outland Trophy.

Devine said he had tried to act as an unpaid agent for Browner during the past season. "I've tried to keep the pressure off of him, but now he is well educated and has plenty of time now to make up his own mind," Devine said.

Browner established school career records of 348 tackles, 80 of which went for losses totaling 537 yards. He also had a school record 13 career fumble recoveries.

The Lombardi Award is named in honor of the former Green Bay and Washington coach who died of cancer. All proceeds from the dinner go to the American Cancer Society for research.

The ACS received a check during the dinner for $100,000 bringing to almost $500,000 the total funds raised from eight Lombardi dinners.

Rep. Jack Kemp, R-NY, was the principal speaker and told newsmen after the dinner they were missing the big story of the televised presentation.

"The TV people kept telling me to cut, cut, cut," Kemp said. "I trimmed a 12 minute speech down to three minutes and anybody who can get a politician to do that has accomplished something."

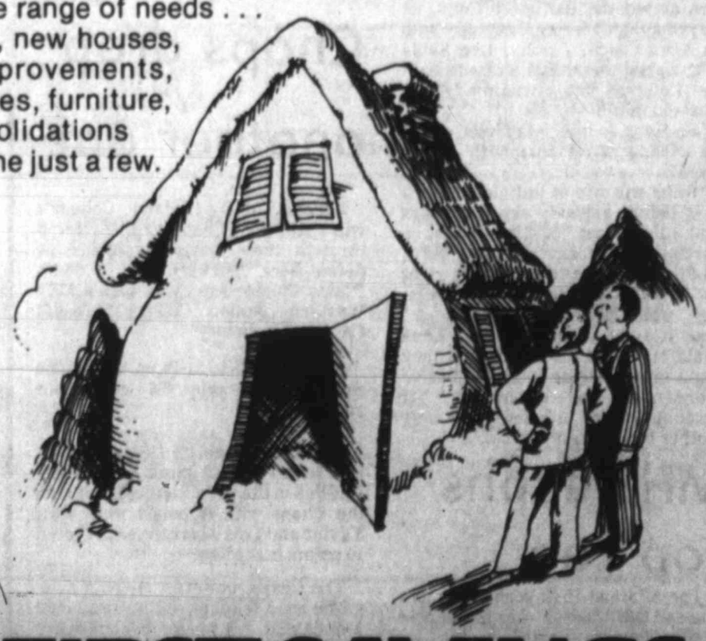

Ross Browner displays a winner's smile Thursday night after he was named the recipient of the 1978 Lombardi Award, which is presented to the outstanding college lineman in the country. (AP Laserphoto)

Pack, Rebs tangle tonight in Tall City shootout

Stueckler. . . his Rebs are playing for pride

By BOB DILLON

There's nothing at stake as far as the first half of the District 5-4A basketball race tonight, but it's still the Tall City shootout between the Robert E. Lee Rebels and Midland Bulldogs.

Tip-off for the 34th meeting between the two rivals is 8 p.m. in the Lee Gymnasium.

Lee and Midland were both knocked out of a shot at the first half crown Tuesday night when the Pack took it on the chin, 81-59, to Abilene Cooper's Cougars and the Rebels lost to hot-shooting Abilene High, 81-57, in Abilene.

The bigger shootout is in the Key City tonight when Cooper and Abilene square off in the Taylor County Coliseum for the first half title. Abilene, with a 6-0 mark can win it outright, but a victory by Cooper would see the two share the championship.

LEE AND MIDLAND stand 4-2 in the race and tonight's big battle will set the pace for the second half of the split race which begins Tuesday when Midland faces Odessa Permian in Odessa and Lee entertains Odessa High.

Coach Paul Stueckler's Rebels picked up another win Wednesday without benefit of even taking the floor when a ruling from the UIL stated that San Antonio Highlands used an inelgible player in the San Antonio Tourney back in December, so that loss to the Alamo City team is changed to a victory.

With the unexpected win, Stueckler's Rebs take a 16-8 season record into tonight's confrontation while Midland is 15-9 on the year.

Lee holds a narrow 17-16 overall edge in the series as the two teams divided a pair of games last year.

STUECKLER WILL most likely start Mike Oestmann, Joe Garner, Nate Goudeau, Mike Richard and Dave Stueckler against the Bulldogs tonight. Oestmann is a 6-5 senior while Garner is a 6-0 senior; Goudeau, a 6-2 senior. Richard a 5-11 senior and Dave a 6-2 senior.

Waiting in the wings to see plenty of action will also be Ernest Merritt, a 6-1 junior along with Tyler Alcorn, 5-10 junior; Bruce Crawford, a 6-1 junior and Mike McGaha, a 6-4 junior.

Humphrey, meanwhile, is concerned over two of his starters who have the flu. Tim Lucas, a 6-1 senior guard will not play due to the illness and 6-4 junior center Milton Sanders will play, but may be slowed down with the virus.

Steve Brittain, a 6-1 senior, will replace Lucas while the rest of the lineup will include Walter Bryson, a 5-10 junior; Kiffy Hickey, 6-3 senior and either Roy Lee Jefferson, a 6-1 junior or 6-3 junior Charles Johnson.

MIDLAND ALSO has 6-4 senior Bill Fredrickson, 6-3 Rick Foster and 6-2 Brian Miller to call upon.

Oestmann and Merritt scorers are the two top scorers on the year for the Rebs. Oestmann has scored 301 points for an average of 12.1 per outing and Merritt is scoring at a 10.0 clip with 260 points.

Sanders, Bryson and Hickey, pace the Purple Pack attack. Sanders has 302 points on the year while Bryson has tallied 292 and Hickey 294 for averages of 12.3, 11.3 and 10.9, respectively.

Humphrey. . . can his Pack bounce back?

Red-hot Gilmore throttles Hawks

By The Associated Press

Chicago Bulls Coach Ed Badger has begun a talent search of sorts. He wants to know if there's a better center in the National Basketball Association than his — Artis Gilmore.

"If anybody in the league is playing better than Gilmore, I don't know who he is," Badger said after the 7-foot-2 center scored 21 points, grabbed 12 rebounds and led the Bulls to a 105-95 victory Thursday night over the Atlanta Hawks.

"He's playing better than Jabbar right now."

ATLANTA COACH Hubie Brown said Gilmore "played a great game," not only scoring and rebounding but "our two centers went 5 for 20." Brown was talking about starting center Steve Hawes, who had one field goal for 2 points, and rookie Tree Rollins, who hit four field goals for 9 points.

Forward Scott May hit 27 points for Chicago, 10 in the third period alone to give the Bulls a 79-70 lead. John Drew, who led Atlanta with 21 points, pulled the Hawks within 7 points early in the fourth period, but they could get no closer.

The game was the first regular-season pro contest in Louisville since the Kentucky Colonels of the American Basketball Association played there. And it marked the return of Brown, who coached the Colonels, and Gilmore, who played for them.

"I would like to commend the 2,200 people who braved extreme and difficult weather dictated by Mother Nature," Brown said of the unexpectedly small turnout at Freedom Hall. "They all should have been given $5 for showing up."

Cavs 117, Sixers 109

Elmore Smith, Cleveland's heavy-handed center, scored 27 points after sitting out the second period in foul trouble and helped the Cavaliers snap Philadelpia's nine-game winning streak. The Cavs also snapped a four-game losing skein.

Julius Erving topped the 76ers with 43 points and now has scored 67 points in the last two games while Philadelphia's other forward, George McGinnis, has been sidelined with tendinitis in his left knee.

Bucks 114, Nuggets 109

Marques Johnson scored 27 points as Milwaukee snapped Denver's 10-game win streak. Bucks forward Alex English scored 4 points in a 9-2 spurt that put the game away.

David Thompson led Denver with 34 points.

"This was a must win for us, without a doubt," said Bucks Coach Don Nelson. "We hadn't been playing good, especially on the road. We had to win it, period, and we did."

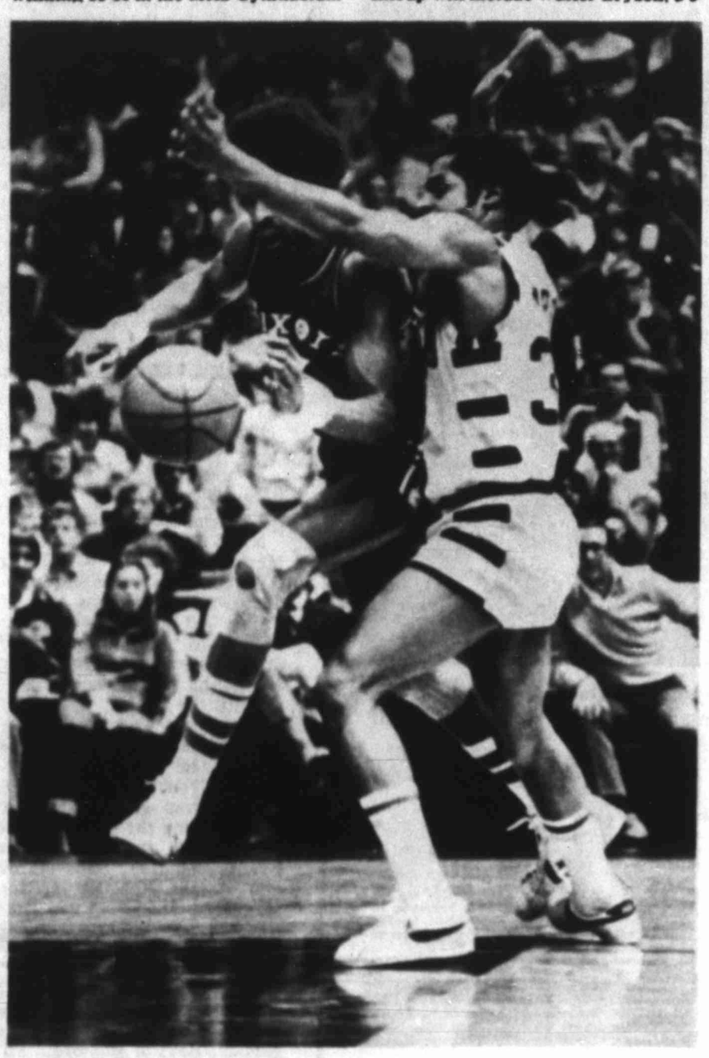

The Bucks had lost three of four coming into the game.

Suns 134, Knicks 114

Paul Westphal scored 31 points, 15 in the fourth quarter, as Phoenix dealt New York its fifth loss in a row, all to Pacific Division teams, on its current eight-game road trip.

Walter Davis added 25 points to the Phoenix scoring barrage while Bob McAdoo led the Knicks with 33 points.

This is one Doctor who doesn't make house calls, but he does make for some exciting basketball. "Dr. J," Julius Erving (with the ball) drives by Austin Carr of the Cleveland Cavaliers during their NBA game Thursday night. (AP Laserphoto)

Salukis prove they have bite

The Associated Press

For a bunch of supposedly toothless underdogs, the Southern Illinois Salukis showed a lot of bite.

"They played the finest game we've seen this season, particularly on offense," said Indiana State Coach Bob King.

It was good enough at least to erase a 38-point performance by the inimitable Larry Bird and knock the fourth-ranked Sycamores out of the unbeaten ranks with a 79-76 upset Thursday night.

"They showed excellent shot selection and their usual great quickness," said King. "Seventy-six points usually is enough to win a game, but we just didn't get down and play good enough defense.

"We seemed to be a half-step slow defensively and we're going to do our best to straighten that out at Illinois State Saturday afternoon."

INDIANA STATE'S first loss after 13 victories became a certainty when the Salukis' Milt Huggins converted two free throws in the last 30 seconds of the Missouri Valley Conference game.

Trailing 77-70 with 55 seconds left, the Sycamores pulled within three points of the Salukis on field goals by DeCarsta Webster and Bird. Huggins was then fouled and connected on his 17th and 18th points of the contest. Wayne Abrams was high for the winners with 22 points.

Elsewhere, No. 7 Notre Dame edged Villanova 70-69; No. 10 Michigan State turned back Purdue 60-51; No. 11 Syracuse defeated La Salle 106-96; Indiana outscored Ohio State 77- 63; Iona crushed East Carolina 96-74; West Virginia beat Duquesne 87-74; Minnesota defeated Illinois 70-66 and Michigan whipped Wisconsin 83-64.

DON WILLIAMS sank two free throws with 11 seconds left as Notre Dame squeezed by Villanova. The Fighting Irish were helped by Villanova's inconsistency at the foul line, where the Wildcats missed seven of 20 shots.

"We are probably the best, or one of the best foul-shooting teams in the country, and we could have won the game on foul shooting," said Villanova Coach Rollie Massimino. "But we didn't."

Noted Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps: "Villanova came into South Bend sky-high after beating us last year. With 11 seconds left, I said, 'Duck, step to the line and sink two.' He did."

FRESHMAN EARVIN Johnson scored 21 points, including eight straight free throws in the last three minutes, and grabbed 12 rebounds to lead Michigan State past Purdue.

"He is the finest freshman I've seen," said Purdue Coach Fred Schaus of Johnson. "We did what we wanted to do by not getting into a running game with them, but we didn't shoot well enough and we're not going to win games shooting only 33 percent."

Eddie Moss and Kevin James came off the bench to score eight points and lead Syracuse over La Salle; Ray Tolbert's career-high 24 points led Indiana's victory over Big Ten colleague Ohio State; Iona defeated East Carolina as Jeff Ruland scored 23 and West Virginia stopped Duquesne as Lowes Moore poured in 37 points.

Why's he over there?

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — It's a strange twist of fate, having Chuck Knox coach the National Conference team in Monday night's Pro Bowl game. Technically he's an American Conference coach.

"I guess things do work out funny sometimes," Knox observed after the NFC stars went through another light workout Thursday, beating a thunderstorm by less than an hour.

Until just a few days before last Sunday night's Super Bowl, Knox was coach of the NFC's Los Angeles Rams. Then, in an abrupt about-face (he'd signed a long-term contract to continue directing the Rams), Knox fled sunny Southern California and accepted the head coaching job with the Buffalo Bills of the AFC.

Knox is coaching the NFC here because of a new National Football League policy that states, in part: "The coaching staffs for each conference will be those full-time coaches of the division champion teams that are eliminated in the divisional playoffs." In this case, it meant the Rams in the NFC.

Knox got those Rams into the playoffs in each of his five seasons with them, compiling a 53-15-1 record in that stretch. But they never got into the Super Bowl, losing three times in the NFC title game and twice in the divisional playoffs, including a 14-7 upset by Minnesota last Dec. 26.

Carroll Rosenbloom, owner of the Rams, voiced his displeasure so often and so loud that Knox pulled his reverse and pulled out of Los Angeles.

It was almost a replay of nearly a decade ago, when Rosenbloom, who then owned the Baltimore Colts, let everyone know he was unhappy with his head coach. Finally, Don Shula quit, signed on with Miami and built the Dolphins into two-time Super Bowl champs.

Can Knox do it with the Bills, one of the NFL's worst teams in recent years?

"Knox will win at Buffalo and he'll do it before anybody expects," says Isiah Robertson of the Rams, a starting linebacker for the NFC. "He'll keep them in ballgames right away. If the Bills don't win with him, they won't win with anybody ...I thought right to the end that Knox would stay with the Rams, that they might bring in some hotshot offensive coordinator or something. If Rosenbloom had only let Chuck stay another two or three years ..."

Golden Bear claims he's a little rusty

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Jack Nicklaus describes his golf game as rusty and it has nothing to do with the rain that set back the opening of the 37th Bing Crosby National Pro-Am.

"At this time of year, I never knw what's going to come out of the bag," said Nicklaus, ready and eager to end his longest layoff ever from tournament competition.

The Crosby, which was to begin Thursday but was postponed until today because the waterlogged courses were unplayable, has become the traditional season starting point for Nicklaus, who has a record 16 major titles on his record.

It's been four months, since he failed to make the cut at the Ohio Kings Island Open, that Nicklaus has been away from the tour. He played a lot of tennis and got in some skiing before taking out his golf clubs two weeks ago for practice rounds.

"I'm capable of having a good round," said Nicklaus, but he then recalled some recent Crosby experiences to support his theory that anything could happen here.

"A few years ago, I was in contention through three rounds, but I wasn't tournament tough and shot an 82 on Sunday. Another time, I won the tournament with a final round that included a 31 for nine holes," Nicklaus said.

That infamous 82, in the 1976 tournament, included a 45 on Pebble Beach's last nine holes.

Nicklaus, whose 38th birthday is Saturday, feels he needed the recent four-month layoff. His schedule his year, as he announced late last season, will take him to less than 15 tour events

Martina advances

HOUSTON (AP) — Martina Navratilova says she plays better when she doesn't know the score.

Navratilova, the top seed, overcame a second set letdown Thursday night to defeat South African Marise Kruger, 6-2, 6-4, in the featured second round match of the $100,000 Women's Pro Tennis tournament.

Three other favorites also advanced to the quarterfinals.

Navratilova, the defending champion here, coasted to a 4-1 lead in the second set against Kruger but then began making errors.

Suddenly it was 4-4 and Navratilova struggled through two duece games but finally won when Kurger botched an easy forehand at match point.

"I got too careful," Navratilova said. "My style is to be aggressive, but, when I got ahead, I let up and tried to put her away by not making mistakes. I got defensive and, from the baseline, it's only 50-50 for me. I have to get my serves in and play the net.

"I do better on the tight points, or when I don't know the score."

In other second round matches fourth seeded Virginia Wade defeated Francoise Durr, 6-3, 62; sixth seeded Betty Stove defeated Lea Antonoplis, 6-2, 7-5; and eight seeded Wendy Turnbull struggled past Greer Stevens, 6-2, 2-6, 6-3.

Chaps drop another one

LEVELLAND—Midland College's win starved Chaparrals suffered through their fourth straight cage defeat here Thursday night as South Plains College ran away with a 93-71 Western Junior College Athletic Conference victory.

Midland fell to 11-10 on the season and a miserable 2-6 conference record.

South Plains got 25 points from K. H. Carson and 23 more from Ricky Phillips in the rout. Ricky Hudgins led the Chaps with 19 points while Cliff Taylor and Luis Alvarado each scored 10 points in the loss.

The Chaps, however, ended a nine-game road trip and will return home Monday at 8 p.m. for a conference matchup against New Mexico Junior College.

MHS sophs top Lee

Midland led at halftime, 30-24 and both teams had trouble scoring in the third period as MHS took a lead of 43-31, going into the final quarter.

Perry Boldger and David Zarate led Midland's attack with 14 and 11 points while Lee was paced by James Peterson and Craig Ellis with nine and seven, respectively.

Hall causes hard feelings to the bases with spikes flying. Off the field, he was a brooder. He feuded with newsmen.

MARIS, A deeply sensitive, introverted personality out of Hibbing, Minn., created a similar adversary relationship with both fans and the press.

He was a worthy member, along with Mickey Mantle, of the New York Yankees' "M&M" murderers' punch, a man with all-around skills and a desire to be left alone.

But fans resented him because he destroyed one of Ruth's hallowed records. Newsmen found him too blunt, too honest and too retiring. He termed his latter days in New York "a living hell."

Bill Terry, who hit .401 in 1930 and had a lifetime average of .341, antagonized the press with his gruffness and arrogance. One of the game's greatest, he waited 17 years to make the Hall of Fame.

Memphis Bill was one of the "bad guys."

IF THIS be the criterion, how, one might ask, did Ruth, Ty Cobb and Ted Williams ever make it? Ruth was a rouser who loved his beer and high jinks. Cobb was a diamond terror, an animal on spikes, boorish and contentious off the field. Williams wrangled with Boston newsmen for years.

The records of this trio were so imposing they could not be ignored. Ruth, for all his excesses, was a lovable character. Williams was greatly admired by the establishment, fellow players and fans alike. But Cobb, like Slaughter, was a fierce fighter and a brooder.

To Cobb, everyone was an enemy. He had a flaming jealousy of Ruth. "Anybody can hit home runs," he said. "I play to win games."

If he had been a man of only slightly lesser skills in a later era, he, too, may never have made the Hall of Fame.

Washington story: au revoir George, bonjour Jack

WASHINGTON (AP) — An unemployed George Allen bade his farewells and said he was headed for the warmer climate for a vacation. A job-seeking Jack Pardee blew into the nation's capital with a snowstorm.

Allen, who lost his job as head coach and general manager of the Washington Redskins the day before, made a final visit to Redskins Park Thursday to say goodbye to his assistants, scouts and office staff and pack his bags.

"I'm fired. I'm a free agent now," Allen told newsmen who had staked out the training site. "If someone wants to talk to me, I'll listen but I'm not going to worry.

"Now I think what I'll do is take a vacation. I need a vacation. I haven't taken any time off. I think I'll go some place with my family where it's warm and where I can do some swimming and play some tennis."

ABOUT THE same time Allen was at Redskins Park, Pardee was in Chicago telling the Bears management that he was resigning to seek the Washington post because he enjoyed living in the nation's capital.

Pardee, a former player and assistant coach to Allen with the Redskins, flew into Washington amid a snowstorm to meet with team President Edward Bennett Williams, who insisted that Allen wasn't fired.

"It would be more accurate to say, he quit," said Williams. "I wanted to sign him. It is a total mischaracterization to say the Redskins fired George Allen. We begged him to sign."

The Redskins and Allen allegedly reached an agreement last July on a four-year extension, calling for an annual salary of $250,000, on a contract he had since 1971.

However, Allen never signed the contract and, Williams said, the Redskins waited six months for his signature but decided last weekend they had to look elsewhere for a coach and general manager.

"I finally told him that the club was being seriously prejudiced by not knowing where we were going next year," Williams said. "I was convinced he was negotiating with Los Angeles and I was determined not to sit and react to what Los Angeles did about it and I so advised him."

ALLEN DENIED he had sought another job, even with Los Angeles, although he said he would be interested in going back to the California city where he worked from 1966 to 1970 before coming east.

Rams' General Manager Don Klosterman said the team would be interested in interviewing him for the job left vacant by Chuck Knox's move to Buffalo, along with several other candidates. However, a Washington televison reporter in Los Angeles reported that the Rams and St. Louis had worked out an agreement which would permit Cardinals' Coach Don Coryell to take the Rams post and that Allen was never seriously considered.

'Crazy' Cliff Richey upsets Wojtek Fibak

BALTIMORE (AP) — Cliff Richey, his game restored by some fatherly advice, feels he has regained tennis respectability while retaining a curious knack of being the focal point of disputes.

"That's always happened to me," Richey said of the arguments that marred his 6-1, 7-6 upset of second-seeded Wojtek Fibak in the second round of the $100,000 Baltimore International Indoor Tennis Championships Thursday night.

Richey, whose temper tantrums are legend, was calm in comparison with some of his early career escapades as he disputed several decisions. He lost some, but he won a vital reversal which wiped out an apparent 6-5 lead for Fibak in the second set.

Unnerved, Fibak eventually lost the 11th game and then dropped the 12-point tie-breaker after ablowing 4-1 and 5-3 leads.

"I tried to be calm," Richey said, "but my calm is still pretty excitable. I try to start out calm, but it doesn't matter — I've already gone crazy."

"Things like that happened to me when I was 18, when I was 22, 28, and at 31 they're still happening," said the veteran from San Angelo, Texas. "But it doesn't affect me as much now. My game used to go to hell. Now, I have a little better aftermath. But I still react too violently."

Fibak, however, was unable to cope after umpire Rod Renner gave the disputed 11th game point to Richey, and ordered play to resume with Fibak ahead 40-30.

"I was very nervous," Fibak said, "and I did not know what I was doing to the very end. After I lost that game, I just didn't feel like playing anymore. It was an unfortunate atmosphere, and put the match out of control completely."

Fibak added, "When the umpire said 40-30, it was a big surprise to me," said Fibak. "I was thinking about the next game already."

The 24-year-old from Poland was upset two points later when Richey contended he was not prepared for a second serve. That point was played over from the first serve.

Richey, who claimed he hadn't played as well in about 18 months, said he considered quitting the game last year when his game deteriorated. But Richey finally took some advice from his father, a tennis coach, and regained his touch.

"My father had basically put me where I had gotten to," Richey said, "and then I stopped listening to him. I was very bullheaded, I guess."

But after dropping to No. 94 in the computerized world rankings, some 60 notches below his average ranking over the previous four years, young Richey was ready to listen this time.

"He made some adjustments in my ground strokes," Richey said. "It took about four months for my game to come around, and I didn't start playing well until the end of last year."

In a quarterfinal match tonight, Richey will face fifth-seeded Cliff Drysdale, a native of South Africa now playing out of Lakeway, Texas. Drysdale defeated John James of Australia Thursday night, 6-4, 6-2.

The other night singles match will involve first-seeded Ilie Nastase of Romania and seventh-seeded American Tom Gorman.

Switzer gets pay boost

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — University of Oklahoma football coach Barry Switzer got a $2,000 annual salary boost Thursday and a promise that he can keep his job for at least five years.

The pay raise boosts Switzer's salary to $38,000 per year. He also receives an annual expense allowance of $3,000.

The Oklahoma board of regents also voted Thursday to raise salaries of each football assistant coach by $1,500 annually.

The state can't make a binding contract for more than one year, but university spokesman Mike Treps said the regents approved a motion committing them to retain Switzer as head coach for at least five years.

Things aren't good in land of the NFC

Los Angeles Times Syndicate

Texas E. Schramm, the president and general manager of the Dallas Cowboys, looked up at the scoreboard at the end of Super Bowl XII and announced with grim satisfaction "The National Football Conference has returned."

It was a remark worthy of MacArthur returning to the Philippines. Or was it merely Napoleon returning from Elba? Is Waterloo still ahead for the NFC?

The bare facts of the matter are that, since the introduction of the Super Bowl to the American sporting scene, only two NFC teams have ever won the Super Bowl, the Packers and the Cowboys. Six AFC teams have won, the Jets, Colts, Dolphins, Steelers, Chiefs and Raiders.

But two of these, the Steelers and Colts, are adopted. They were not part of the family at birth. This does not mean that they are not bona fide members of the family, but the fact remains they were in different leagues when the first three Super Bowls were played. In fact, one of them, the Baltimore Colts lost one of the NFC games in 1969 (to the Jets) and won one AFC game two years later over the Cowboys.

OF THE eight victories of the AFC over the NFC, four of the losses went to the Minnesota Vikings Two went to Dallas, one to the Washington Redskins and, of course, one went to the hybrid, the Baltimore Colts.

Now that Lombardi's Packers are just memories hanging on a wall in Wisconsin, does this mean that only the Dallas Cowboys can hold the line against the barbarian hordes of the AFC? Probably. Apart from the departed Packers, and the chronic losers, the Vikings, only one other "typical," i.e. by birthright NFC team, has even made the Super Bowl, the Washington Redskins. The Washington Redskins have always reminded me of a leaky, creaky old World War I aircraft which is struggling into the sky under the controls of a brave British lieutenant to take on the jet planes of the Bosch in the sky over no man's land. Whenever I see Joe Theisman or some other young quarterback running out, strapping on a helmet, to take over the Washington Redskins, I think of the movie cliche "My God, sir, you're not going to send a boy up in THAT?!"

THE WASHINGTON flying coffin tries to win games 2-0 — or, failing that, not to lose them too badly. That's like a "stooper" at a racetrack looking for winning tickets.

Still, these canny old musclemen manage to win in the NFC. Unlike the AFC, which annually sends a fiery, emotional pack of young bloods to the Super Bowl, they send this superannuated bunch who can tell by their knees when it's going to rain.

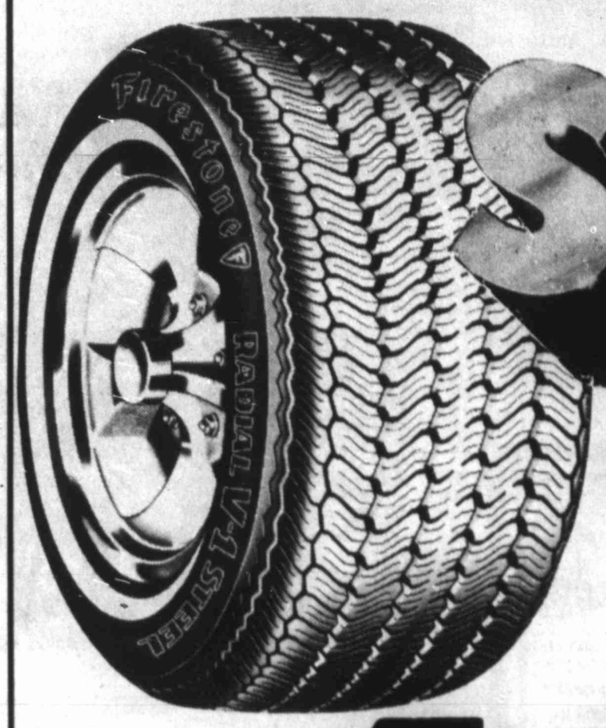

Dallas doesn't play it this way. Dallas is not addicted to ancestor worship. Dallas does not try to put new struts and baling wire and chewing gum on a leaky old biplane and go after rocket-carriers. When Chuck Howley or Lee Roy Jordan or Ralph Neely or Bob Lilly or John Niland begin to squeak when they get out of parlor chairs, the Cowboys have a fresh supply of studs to move into the gate. You don't see Carl Eller, Alan Page, Jim Marshall, Chris Hanburger, Ron McDole, etc., playing eons in the offensive and defensive sets of the Dallas Cowboys.

TO GIVE you an idea, the Cowboys' trade two years ago picked up (1) Randy White (2) Thomas Henderson (3) Burton Lawless (4) Bob Breunig (5) Pat Donovan (6) Randy Hughes. And they first drafted 18th!

I would be slow to hail the return of the NFC if I were they. From here, it looks like the success of one elite group in a bedraggled army of oldsters and fatsters trying to get by with trench warfare in an era of rockets. Instead of Dallas upholding the honor of the senior group, what might happen is that the junior group might petition the commissioner to let Dallas move over to its league. I mean, it might come up to the Cowboys and ask, "What's a nice bunch of young fellas like you doing in an old man's home like this?"

Air Force going ahead with rejected plan

WASHINGTON — Although the names and some details have been changed, the Air Force is going ahead with a computer-based accounting system that Congress has specifically rejected as a costly boondoggle.

Rep. John E. Moss, D-Calif., chairman of the House investigations subcommittee, said Congress might have to give the Air Force a lesson in "elemental civics" if the service fails to follow the directions of the lawmakers.

At issue is a computer system for determining the exact amount of time that workmen at Air Force aircraft maintenance depots actually spend on each job. Congress ruled out such a system last year when it ordered the Pentagon to cancel an $800 million program then known as Project Max.

Maj. Gen. Gerald J. Post, an Air Force expert in logistics, said in a recent interview that Project Max was canceled last September.

But he said the Air Force — under orders from Defense Secretary Harold Brown — was going ahead with a uniform cost accounting system. At least as far as the method of recording the work of aircraft maintenance men is concerned, Post conceded, the new system when fully in place "would be the same" as the one contemplated under Project Max.

"If the Air Force is trying to do it under a different name but with the same objective, then we will have to try again in this year's round of appropriation bills to make sure they don't have the authority to use any money," Moss told a reporter.

Lt. Gen. Charles E. Buckingham, the comptroller of the Air Force who in August headed a task force that recommended termination of Project Max, said the Air Force has no choice but to go ahead with some sort of uniform accounting system. He said the Navy already uses a similar system.

"The Air Force is directed by OSD (Office of Secretary of Defense) to go to a uniform cost accounting system," Buckingham said. "Congress knows we are going ahead with a uniform accounting system."

Told of Buckingham's opinion that the Air Force must go ahead with some accounting changes, Moss said, "I always thought that the military and other departments of government were subject to laws Congress makes rather than the directives promulgated within the Department. I think generals, if they don't know that, ought to be given some elemental civics (lessons)."

A. Ernest Fitzgerald, an Air Force efficiency expert, said the initial cost of the computer is "just the tip of the iceberg." He said the project ultimately would cost additional hundreds of millions of dollars through decreased efficiency at aircraft maintenance depots.

The objective of the proposed system is to compile records of the time workers actually spend on each class of job. The workers would be required to record on computer cards the starting and completion times for each job. Buckingham said such records could not be kept without the use of computers because the job is far too complex to be done by hand.

Fitzgerald agreed that the "average actual" time accounting system requires a computer base. But he said such a system was less efficient than a plan which uses industrial engineers to determine how long a job should take.

Under the "average actual" system, Fitzgerald said, the time actually spent on jobs one month will become the standard for the next month.

"You can get away with being a little bit worse than you were last month," Fitzgerald said. "Nobody would fire you for being 5 percent worse. But that becomes the new standard and you can be 5 percent worse than that the next month."

In his report recommending termination of Project Max, Buckingham seemed to support Fitzgerald's view that the average actual system permits standards to become lax.

"The basic philosophy underlying Poject Max focuses heavily on project costs and budgets and places less emphasis on the use of standards," the report said. "Under Pojrect Max, historical costs become the basic management fremework for the depots, perpetuating the status quo."

Buckingham said in an interview that the Air Force made some mistakes in earlier programs but, "I think we have learned our lesson."

Fitzgerald is a favorite with members of Congress. He was fired by the Air Force in 1969 for telling a Senate committee about massive cost overruns on the C-5A transport plane. He was restored to his Pentagon job by a court order in 1973. He is frequently cited by lawmakers as the best example of a "whistle blower," a public employee who complains about improper activities within his agency.

Senate study reveals biggest banks closely linked

By GEORGE LARDNER, JR.
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The nation's biggest banks don't quite own each other, but they come close to it, a voluminous new Senate study indicates. The leading banks in America are so closely tied together that they control the biggest blocks of stock in each other's parent holding companies.

For instance, America's second biggest bank in terms of assets, New York's Citibank, is owned by Citicorp. But the Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. is the major "stockvoter" in Citicorp.

So, too, for most of the other mammoth banks in New York. Morgan Guaranty holds — and has the power to vote — more stock in the companies that own Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. (No. 4 nationally), the Chemical Bank (No. 6) and Bankers Trust Co. (No. 7) than any other known investor.

In turn, most of the same New York sister banks — plus the Rockefeller family's Chase Manhattan (No. 3) — control the biggest blocks of stock in J.P. Morgan & Co., the holding company that owns Morgan Guaranty. Citibank, Chase Manhattan, Manufacturers Hanover and Bankers Trust Co. are, in that order, the leading stockholders, and voters, at J.P. Morgan.

The most influential money-manager of all the nation's banks, although it is only No. 5 in terms of assets, Morgan Guaranty is also the biggest "stockvoter" in Bankamerica Corp. whose Bank of America is No. 1.

"The banks are one big happy family," says an aide to the late Sen. Lee Metcalf, D-Mont., who had headed the Senate Governmental Affairs Subcommittee that conducted the detailed staff study over a six-month period.

The study found that the voting rights to stock in large U.S. corporations are concentrated in a relatively few bank trust departments (led by Morgan Guaranty), insurance companies, mutual funds and their related investment advisory companies. Other people are the real owners of most of the stock, but the financial institutions have full authority to buy it and sell it. By and large, the study found, they decide how the shares should be voted.

ENTITLED "Voting Rights in Major Corporations," the survey disclosed that the power to vote stock in 122 of America's largest corporations — companies so big that the market value of their common stock represents 41 percent of all outstanding common stock in the United States — is held by just 21 institutional investors. Their voting influence over corporate policy, the report said, "is often augmented by two other powerful levers of control, interlocking directorates and debt-holding."

According to the report, voting power in 56 of the companies, including such corporations as General Motors Corp., Connecticut General Insurance Corp., Middle South Utilities, Citicorp, American Broadcasting Co. Inc., Coca-Cola, American Airlines, Burlington Northern Inc., Shell Continental Oil and American Express, is especially concentrated. In 13 of these corporations, family interests control 10 percent of more of the votes; in another 19, a single institutional investor controls five percent or more, and in another 24, a combination of five or fewer investors control 10 percent or more of the votes.

A 235-page companion report by the Congressional Research Service on the actual exercise of voting rights by institutional investors voiced doubt of any conscious control of companies in their portfolios, but reported widespread agreement on the ability of big investors to influence corporate policies.

The Senate staff study itself included a corporation-by-corporation listing of all the identifiable major stockholders in the 122 corporations which, with their 2,259 subsidiaries and affiliates, include the biggest industrial, financial, transportation, insurance, utility and retailing firms in the country.

For General Motors, the report showed the top 34 stockholders, led by the National Bank of Detroit with voting power over 6.21 percent (17.8 million) of GM's voting shares, and by Morgan Guaranty with 1.13 percent (5.6 million) of the voting shares. (Different types of shares carry different voting weights.) The top 10 institutions in charge of GM shares, eight of them banks, control 11.8 percent of the stock in the giant corporation.

"The rapid growth of pension funds is increasing the power of these and other large institutional investors," the report stated. "Pension fund stock already amounts to 37 percent of all stock held by all categories of institutional investors; and corporate pension fund assets are expected to double in less than five years and double again by 1986."

Most pension funds, however, are not self-administered. "Management of pension assets — including the authority to buy, sell and vote equities — is concentrated among banks, insurance and investment companies and investment advisory companies."

THE REPORT, based on holdings at the end of 1976, found that Morgan Guaranty, with $19.3 billion of holdings in stocks and bonds, towered above all other investors. It was "stockvoter No. 1" in 27 of the 122 corporations.

Morgan Guaranty controls 5.2 percent of the votes in American Express Co; 7.25 percent at Connecticut General; 3.26 percent of Citicorp. and 4.03 percent of Burlington Northern inc.

The next dominant investor, the report said, is Citibank, which ranks among the top five stockvoters in 25 corporations.

At the same time, the report emphasized, "the principal stockvoters in large banks are — large banks." Citibank ranks first not only at Morgan Guaranty (with 2.63 percent of the votes to Chase Manhattan's 1.43 percent) but also at First Bank System Inc. (with 3.32 percent). A holding company headquartered in Minneapolis, First Bank System, moreover, has an "all-bank lineup of major stockvoters."

In all, the report said, the 21 leading institutional investors included 11 banks, five investment company complexes, four insurance companies and the Kirby family group, which controls the world's largest mutual fund complex (Investors Diversified Services Inc.) through the Allegheny Corp.

The information was put together primarily from reports required of all major national banks by the comptroller of the currency, voluntary submissions by some of the banks regulated by the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., insurance company reports to state authorities, and mutual fund and investment company reports.
