PAMPA — The U.S. Forest Service is reminding area residents that they can take advantage of the facilities at Lake McClellan during the summer and over the Fourth of July weekend.

Forest Service official John Pierson said trails for bicycles, motorcycles and horses are available. He also recommended taking a walking tour of the lake area to observe deer, turkeys and other wildlife.

Campsites and a group shelter with a volleyball court are available for use. Other facilities are also ready to use upon request. For reservations call 779-2590.

PAMPA — U.S. Representative Bill Sarpalus' mobile office will be in Pampa on Wednesday from 1-2 p.m. at the Gray County Courthouse.

WASHINGTON (AP) — With key committee votes approaching in both houses, Senate Republicans are circulating a scaled-down alternative to President Clinton's health reform bill that relies on tax breaks for workers and federal subsidies for the poor to expand coverage to the uninsured.

In contrast to Clinton's bill, the GOP draft contains no requirement for universal coverage and is stripped of the administration's proposal for employers to finance insurance for their workers.

It also drops the tobacco tax hike the administration and many lawmakers favor to pay for expanded health care. Financing would come from $100 billion in savings from Medicaid and Medicare over five years.

Like virtually all proposals under discussion, the GOP draft calls for changes to make it tougher for insurance companies to deny coverage to those seeking it.

WACO (AP) — A former Waco woman faces up to 30 years in federal prison and up to $1 million in fines for forging more than $50,000 in checks left in her house by a retired church music minister who lived in her residence for a short while.

Darlene Laurel Lopez, now 50, got out of prison in early 1992 after serving 18 months of a 15-year prison term for embezzling more than $500,000 from a brokerage firm. She rented a house in Waco, and about the same time, says David Bardwell Green, now 74, he became friends with her and moved into a room in the residence.

But when he moved out about two months later, he unknowingly left behind a book of blank checks, he said.

It wasn't many months later, when Green tried to open trust accounts for his grandchildren, he said, that he noticed he didn't have as much in the account as he thought he did.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Backers of the space station say they are cautiously optimistic they have the votes to prevail in the annual funding fight on the House floor.

That showdown vote could come as early as tonight, although many expect it on Wednesday.

The pool of uncommitted lawmakers dwindled Monday under a fierce lobbying effort by both sides, with President Clinton, Vice President Al Gore and Texas Gov. Ann Richards making telephone calls to wavering members.

The administration wants $2.1 billion next year for the space station. That funding is by far the most controversial in a $72.9 billion package that funds housing, veterans, space and other programs. Last year, the program squeaked through the House by a one-vote margin — a fact neither side is forgetting.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican lawmakers displayed far less concern for the savings and loan debacle that occurred largely under the GOP watch than they have for the Whitewater affair and the failure of an Arkansas savings and loan, says Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass.

Kerry, a longtime critic of the agency created to clean up the S&L mess, will take to the Senate floor this week to criticize the handling of S&L failures in Texas during the Bush administration.

Kerry, a member of the Senate banking committee and a dogged critic of the Resolution Trust Corp., isn't exempting the Clinton administration from blame.

But he complained that while Republicans have focused a lot of attention on the $60 million failure of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association run by one-time Clinton business partner James McDougal, GOP lawmakers have basically ignored a much larger Texas scandal that transpired with Republicans in the White House.

"I think there's a double standard here," Kerry said Monday. "I think it underscores the politics that are being played, and the American people ought to be a little angry about it, frankly."

Clinton names new chief of staff

By JILL LAWRENCE
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's new chief of staff said today he has full authority to make whatever changes are necessary at the White House to advance administration priorities such as health care and welfare reform.

Leon Panetta, the budget director named Monday to replace Mack McLarty, said he would work to give Clinton "room so he can be president and not have to worry about being manager at the White House."

Panetta says he'll be settling into a job he calls the toughest in town by mid-July. At the same time, McLarty, among the last of the Arkansians Clinton brought to his inner circle, will take on his new role as counselor to his boyhood friend.

The two made the rounds of morning TV talk shows today to discuss the changes, which McLarty said "don't necessarily connote that something was wrong. It says the circumstances are different."

"The president and I had a very good discussion and I have a very good relationship with the first lady as well," Panetta said.

"The first item of business was to make sure I have full authority to make changes that need to be made in the White House."

"The president really doesn't have time" to manage the White House, Panetta said, adding that it was too early to discuss any specific changes.

"What's happening is, we're now looking at a very large legislative agenda," Panetta, a former California congressman, said Monday night on CNN's "Larry King Live." "I have that kind of experience. I know the players. I know the arena."

With McLarty sitting beside him, he added: "The feeling was, this is the best time that Mack become what he really is, which is a close adviser of the president."

The shifts are part of the biggest personnel shakeup of Clinton's presidency. David Gergen, brought in as counselor last year to aid a White House reeling from image problems, will become a special adviser at the State Department, which is having similar problems. Panetta's like-minded deputy at the Office of Management and Budget, Alice Rivlin, moves up to become the agency's first female director.

McLarty had long been criticized in some quarters as a weak link in the White House operation — a poor administrator who was nice to a fault, resulting in undisciplined troops and mixed messages to Congress.

Clinton said Monday that his childhood friend had "run an open White House, treating others and their ideas with unfailing courtesy..." He praised McLarty's "decency, integrity and good will."

But his description of Panetta made clear what Clinton is after. He said his budget director had been "a pillar of strength" and a skillful manager of his 500 OMB employees in the past 18 months.

Panetta was chairman of the House Budget Committee before joining the administration. He is described as warm and funny, the kind of person who is always either making a joke or laughing at one.

But his resolute side was on display last year during the long, intense battle to shape Clinton's economic plan. A committed deficit-cutter, he eventually prevailed over political advisers who urged Clinton to invest in education and other areas rather than worry about deficit reduction.

One of the losers in that fight, consultant

Paul Begala, said Monday that he could personally attest to Panetta's tenacity. "Ask anyone who has ever disagreed with him about deficit reduction if Leon is tough," Begala said. "He is tougher than day-old rigatoni."

Some expect Panetta to bring clarity to a White House often accused of being fuzzy, indecisive and overly accommodating.

"There's not going to be any mistaking what he thinks after he tells you," said Sen. John Breaux, D-La., a moderate Clinton associate with a key vote on the Senate Finance Committee. "It's going to be pretty clear where he's coming from and what he wants done."

Clinton presented the McLarty move as something his friend had initiated. But McLarty said later that wasn't quite accurate. "The discussions we had were a response to the need the president had expressed for more of my time and my counsel," he said on CNN.

McLarty said he suggested Panetta as his successor, leading to a meeting Saturday at Camp David among Clinton, Panetta and Vice President Al Gore. The deal was sealed Sunday.

Lefors' switch to Option 4 expected to benefit PSD in school finance matters

By RANDAL K. MCGAVOCK
Staff Writer

The recent approval of a school finance payment plan for the Lefors Independent School District is being characterized as a "win-win" situation by administrators in that school district as well as the Pampa Independent School District.

Although specifics haven't been worked out between the LISD and PSD, the switch from Option 3 to Option 4 of the state's school financing legislation could mean tens of thousands of dollars to PSD as Lefors essentially pays for the education of Pampa students.

"It's a win-win situation for Pampa, they will receive some money over and above what they have been receiving... it's money that they (normally) wouldn't receive and in the process, Lefors would benefit also," said Joe Roper, superintendent of the LISD.

Since it is viewed as a property-wealthy school district, LISD was forced to send more than $300,000 to the state last year in an effort to equalize wealth among school districts across the state, according to Roper. With an agreement between the Lefors and Pampa school districts, that money will stay in this area.

"Last year we sent over $313,000 down to the state under Option 3 and, of course, we'd like to keep the money in the Panhandle," Roper said. "We understand that there would be some benefit to Pampa and helpfully some benefit to us. So whatever Pampa receives over and above what they've been receiving from the state, we hope that we get some return."

The proposed agreement between the two school districts is made possible thanks to a provision in Senate Bill 7, the legislation that some people attribute with causing the state's current school finance problems.

Specifically, Senate Bill 7 provides for a number of payment options which property-wealthy school districts like LISD can choose. Under the option plan, a school district has the choice of "contracting for the education of nonresidential students," and thereby avoid sending money to the state.

Instead of the state, the money would be used by a local school district, namely PSD.

"It would definitely benefit both schools. Rather than Lefors sending money to the state, they'd be basically purchasing attendance credits from the Pampa Independent School District," said Mark McVay, PSD's business manager.

The next step in the process is for representatives of both districts to sit down and hammer out the details of the agreement, according to Roper. After that, only one hurdle remains, the commissioner of education for the Texas Education Association has to approve the plan, after which it could be implemented.

Earlier this year in May, PSD's Board of Education tentatively approved a similar plan with the Grandview-Hopkins Consolidated School District.

At that meeting, concerns were raised about whether the commissioner of education would go along with the change to Option 4 or whether he would shut-down the loophole.

Although Roper said he had heard of the some opposition to the switch in funding and admitted that it wasn't "a sure thing," McVay said that more schools in the region are switching over to Option 4 and that generally bodes well.

"A number of school districts in our area have done this and we feel confident that we can work with the commissioner of education on this," he said.

Heat wave continues to roll over parts of Texas

By EDUARDO MONTES
Associated Press Writer

EL PASO (AP) — Texas braced for another round of record-breaking temperatures today as a heat wave kept its grip on the state.

The National Weather Service said temperatures at or above the century mark could be expected around the state for several days. No precipitation was in the forecast.

A heat advisory is in effect through Wednesday for the portion of North Texas west of a line from Bonham to Fairfield and includes the cities of Stephenville, Waco, Sherman, Denton and the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

The heat index, a measure of how hot it feels when the effects of relative humidity are combined with the temperature, is expected to range from 105 to 115 degrees in the area covered by the heat advisory.

A heat index value of 105 degrees is considered to be the level at which the body begins to succumb to the effects of excessive heat.

A few isolated thunderstorms are possible in north and northeastern sections of North Texas tonight and Wednesday. But forecasters don't expect the isolated storms to produce significant rainfall or provide significant relief from the heat.

Childress had a high Monday of 117, only three degrees off the highest temperature ever recorded in the state — 120 degrees in Seymour on Aug. 12, 1936, weather officials said.

All-time record temperatures were set Monday in several other West Texas cities — 116 at Midland, 114 at Lubbock and 113 at El Paso — breaking marks that had been set or equaled only Sunday.

The previous records were 112 at Midland, 111 at Lubbock, and 112 at El Paso, all set just 24 hours earlier.

Also Monday, Abilene (109), San Angelo (109) and Amarillo (106) all notched highest-ever readings for June 27. Abilene's reading was its highest in more than 50 years, since a high of 111 on Aug. 3, 1943.

A portion of Interstate 20 in Parker County buckled late Monday afternoon, an apparent result of the plus-100 degree weather, officials said.

A westbound section of the highway near the Trinity Meadows Racetrack was closed for about three hours while repair crews worked to ease the pressure on the roadway, a spokesman for the Department of Public Safety in Mineral Wells said last night.

The highway was reopened after the work was completed. Highway officials could not be reached to describe how the damage was repaired.

First reports of the problem came in about 6:15 p.m. from drivers calling the DPS on their cellular phones, the spokesman said.

A large dome of high pressure remains anchored over the entire southwestern United States, warming and drying the atmosphere and effectively capping any rain activity.

Surface high pressure in the Gulf of Mexico is keeping winds southerly over the region trapping low-level moisture which, in turn, kept humidity levels high.

Temperatures dropped after sundown Monday, but skies remained clear. Most cities had readings in the 80s and 90s after dark, but at 10 p.m., temperatures remained at 100 or higher in at least five Texas cities, led by 103 at Wink, where it felt like 104 because of humidity.

Morales wants LULAC to return legal fees to state

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Attorney General Dan Morales has demanded that attorneys for a Hispanic civil rights group return more than $400,000 in fees paid when they sued the state over the way it elects judges.

Morales' office wrote six lawyers who represented the League of United Latin American Citizens in the judicial election case and threatened to sue them if they did not return $410,383 within 10 days.

The lawyers and the state agreed the fees paid by the state would be returned if LULAC was "not successful at the conclusion" of the case. Morales demanded the fees be returned because the case ended with the Texas system unaltered.

"I'm not sending them a check, I can tell you that," William Garrett of Dallas told the Houston Chronicle in today's editions.

Garrett is one of six lawyers who received the letter from Morales' office. His share of the fees amounted to $135,000, which Morales wants returned.

LULAC sued the state, arguing that the state's system of electing judges at large instead of from small, defined geographic districts unfairly discriminated against minorities.

The U.S. Supreme Court agreed with part of LULAC's argument and ordered the case back to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. That was where LULAC claimed victory.

However, the appeals court ruled against LULAC on another critical point, and so Morales wants LULAC attorneys to return the money.

However, Garrett and others indicated the state would have to have won on all points to get a refund.

Before the judicial redistricting finally went to the appeals court, a plan was worked out to provide single-member judicial districts in some counties.

Commissioner favors paddling

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A City Council member who heads the San Antonio Crime Commission wants teen-aged graffiti painters to be paddled in public.

"I had it happen to me in school, and it was very effective," Councilman Lyle Larson, who chairs the Crime Commission.

Larson said he favors an ordinance subjecting graffiti-painting youths to four to 10 licks with a wooden panel in municipal court.

Parents would administer the punishment or could choose to have a court bailiff do it. If parents do not consent to the corporal punishment, they would be fined.

Larson said he will present the proposed ordinance to the City Council in the next two months.

Not everyone at the Crime Commission's Monday meeting favored the proposal.

State District Judge Andy Mireles, a commission member, said many juvenile offenders come from homes where they are abused or neglected.

Heat helps spread South Plains range fire

A range fire has burned more than 10,000 acres in Cottle County near Paducah, officials said today. No one was hurt, but at least two homes have been destroyed, the Texas Department of Public Safety said. Authorities believe a lightning strike Friday started the fire, between Paducah and Crowell. Hot, dry conditions have combined with high winds to spread the flames, officials said.

Prosecution rests in Koslow trial

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The murder trial of teen-ager Kristi Koslow headed into the defense stage today after prosecutors rested their case with a bang and a whimper.

The bang came Monday with a courtroom video of an interview the defendant gave reporters the day after her father was beaten and slashed and her stepmother slain.

The whimper came from Miss Koslow.

"I don't know what actually happened," she told the media March 13, 1992. "It's scary. It's hard not knowing why someone would do this."

Twelve days later, acting on a tip from an informant, police arrested Miss Koslow and her two purported co-conspirators, Brian Salter and Jeff Dillingham, both 19 at the time.

The pudgy, brown-haired defendant gave police a controversial statement in which she admitted soliciting Salter, her boyfriend, and Dillingham to kill Jack and Karen Koslow.

Both signed statements telling how they broke into the Koslows' elegant Rivercrest home and attacked the couple with a metal pry bar and a knife.

A jury previously convicted Dillingham of killing Mrs. Koslow and assessed the death penalty. Salter received a life prison sentence in a plea bargain agreement with prosecutors.

During seven turbulent days of testimony, the state called 23 witnesses in an attempt to convince the jury that Miss Koslow ordered her parents killed before her 18th birthday so she would inherit a perceived multimillion-dollar fortune.

Salter testified that he and Miss Koslow shopped around for cars they might buy and that she chose a BMW convertible and he a Toyota Land Cruiser.

Koslow, 51, is an ex-banker. Mrs. Koslow, 40, was a wealthy oil heiress.

The state's wrap-up witnesses Monday included several young men who attended high school with either Salter or Miss Koslow.

Clayton Hudson, a friend and former classmate of Miss Koslow's, told the jury he was present on one occasion when she looked Salter "straight in the face" and said:

"We can kill them easily. I have the house key. I know what room they're in. I know the alarm code. So you walk in and do it. It would be easy."

At another point, Hudson said: "Anything Kristi wanted Brian to do, all she had to do was say it and Brian jumped. Kristi definitely had Brian wrapped around her little finger."

Although he admittedly lied in statements to police and prosecutors, Salter insists Miss Koslow plotted her parents' death and provided him an alarm code and a map of the house.

She also was active in covering up the trio's involvement in the crime, he said.

Hudson said when Miss Koslow discussed the murder scheme with Salter she spoke in a monotone: "You know, no feeling whatsoever in her voice."

A day after the assault, Hudson recalled, he went by her house to see her. He testified that she ran out and said:

"Clayton, you know I didn't do it. I'm not that coldblooded."

Man discovers how not to steal a sneak

PASADENA, Texas (AP) — A would-be snake thief got more than he bargained for when he and an accomplice tried to steal seven snakes from a pet store, police say.

Officers said the man and a male accomplice went to the C&C Critter Co. pet store Monday afternoon on the pretense of selling two Western diamondback rattlesnakes.

Store owner Shawn Cochran said he told them he could not buy or sell venomous snakes because such sales are prohibited by a city ordinance.

While he was talking to the accomplice in the back of the store, the pseudo-salesman grabbed a handful of snakes from a tank in the front.

The man ran to his truck and drove through a trailer park behind the store, apparently unaware there were only two ways out of the park, Cochran said.

A store employee saw the man snatch the serpents and alerted Cochran, who jumped in his van and sped into the other entrance of the trailer park, hoping to cut off the thief.

The owner's vehicle struck the vehicle being driven by the snake snatcher, which overturned.

"He was trying to find an outlet, and as he turned I clipped the back of his truck and flipped it," Cochran said, who was uninjured. "He crawled out of his truck, and I saw a rattlesnake crawl out with him."

The thief then set out trying to catch the rattlers bare handed.

"I told him not to," Cochran said.

One bit him on the hand, so an ambulance was called. The ambulance, Pasadena police and the accomplice all arrived at the overturned vehicle at about the same time.

The snake-bit thief was taken to Sunbelt Regional Hospital in the Houston suburb, where he was to be treated and then taken to jail. The accomplice was arrested at the scene, and felony theft charges against were pending against the two men.

Government releases new data on human radiation experiments

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pregnant women in Iowa, newborns in Tennessee, a 67-year-old leukemia patient in Boston — different people in different circumstances, they and hundreds of others became Cold War guinea pigs.

They all were used in the government's search to learn more about how radiation affects the human body, according to new information made public by the Energy Department.

The department disclosed on Monday that a review of more than 11,000 documents unearthed at least 48 new experiments in which perhaps as many as 1,200 people were subjected to radiation exposure, often with no evidence of consent.

The additional human radiation tests were among stacks of documents made public by the department on its nuclear program as evidence of what Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary called a new era of openness in the once-secretive agency.

The summaries of the radiation tests often provided only scant information and gave little detail about the studies involved, how human subjects were selected or their identities. In many cases the experiments were conducted at research hospitals. Some were done as late as the 1980s.

Throughout many of the experiments, a lack of adequate consent "continues to be the theme," said Mrs. O'Leary at a news conference. Later, Energy Department staffers said that in only a few of the documented experiments was there clear evidence of consent, though consent may have been given.

In none of the experiments was there any "potential therapeutic benefit to the subjects" involved, although the projects might have had broader therapeutic goals, said Elynn Weiss of the department's Office of Human Radiation Experiments.

Other revelations from the newly released Energy Department data:

— Confirmation that between 1963 and 1992 there were 95 previously hidden underground nuclear bomb detonations at the Nevada Test Site. The blasts went unnoticed because they were conducted simultaneously with other bomb tests to avoid detection.

— The government produced about a third more highly enriched uranium — 994 metric tons — over the years than previously thought at facilities in Piketon, Ohio, and Oak Ridge, Tenn. An estimated 259 metric tons is still in inventory, about two-thirds of it at Oak Ridge. A metric ton equals about 2,200 pounds.

Physical inventories of highly enriched uranium show about 1.3 metric tons less than what is shown on the books, but officials attribute the difference to sloppy bookkeeping and not theft. Similar discrepancies have been found in the past for plutonium stockpiles.

The government detonated a nuclear weapon in 1962 using reactor-grade plutonium obtained from the British, confirming arguments by nuclear proliferation activists that reactor-grade plutonium should be equally safeguarded.

The department said so far nearly $3.7 million has been spent to try to learn more about human experiments involving radiation, much of them in the 1940s and early 1950s. Before a complete record is available, it may cost more than $24 million, according to department estimates.

Among the human experiment cases outlined Monday were:

— The use of pregnant women in various tests including at the University of Iowa in 1953 when women were injected with radioactive iodine-131 to determine effects on the fetus. The women all had been scheduled for therapeutic abortions and the aborted fetuses were then tested for radiation.

— The injection of radioactive iodine into newborns at the University of Tennessee and University of Iowa in the 1950s to study the effects on the thyroid.

— In 1946, six employees of a Chicago laboratory associated with the nuclear program were given plutonium-contaminated water to drink to learn more about the absorption of plutonium. These tests were described as voluntary and at least two of the workers are still alive, according to the summary.

— Researchers over a number of days gave radioactive zinc to two men, including a 67-year-old leukemia patient, in a 1947 experiment in Boston to study the dispersal of the material in the body. Neither the men nor the institution involved was identified.

— An unknown number of terminally ill cancer patients were injected with strontium-85 as part of a series of experiments dubbed by the Atomic Energy Commission as "Project Sunshine." After the patients died, various body tissues were analyzed for radiation effect, the documents said.

O'Leary said she was most troubled by some of the "Project Sunshine" experiments that also included the use of pregnant women and their aborted fetuses as test subjects.

Both sides seek more evidence in Simpson case

By LINDA DEUTSCH
AP Special Correspondent

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Defense attorneys and prosecutors are asking a judge for access to evidence that could either link O.J. Simpson to a bloody crime scene or help exonerate him.

Simpson, 46, has pleaded innocent to murdering his ex-wife and her friend, Ronald Goldman. Their stabbed and slashed bodies were found outside Nicole Brown Simpson's condominium on June 12. Simpson has been jailed without bail since June 17.

On Monday, Ms. Simpson's father disputed a coroner's report that said she was on the phone at 11 p.m. the night she was killed. A defense lawyer had said the timing of the call bolstered Simpson's alibi.

A judge scheduled a hearing today to decide whether to give defense lawyers access to blood samples and other evidence, and whether prosecutors can take a sample of Simpson's hair. Simpson was to attend the hearing.

Prosecutors say they found a knit cap at the crime scene that contained black, curly hairs of "African-American origin."

Simpson's lead attorney, Robert L. Shapiro, wants access to blood samples, Simpson's white Ford Bronco, a ski cap or mask found near the victims, and gloves found at the crime scene and at Simpson's Brentwood estate. Prosecutors said last week that there was no ski mask.

The bloody clothing on the official list of evidence came from the crime scene, not Simpson's house, a source told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity. There have been unconfirmed reports of bloody clothing found in Simpson's home.

Shapiro's motion indicated that the defense could turn the preliminary hearing, which is scheduled to start Thursday, into a mini-trial. Shapiro said nearly every witness likely to testify at the trial might be called at the preliminary hearing.

The preliminary hearing normally is a brief proceeding in which the prosecution presents a bare-bones version of its case to justify a trial.

Simpson's defense has sought to bolster his image in the media and cast doubt on the police investigation, citing a coroner's report that said Ms. Simpson talked to her mother on the telephone at about 11 p.m. on June 12.

Shapiro has said Simpson was home waiting for a limousine ride to the airport at 11 p.m.

Simpson lawyer F. Lee Bailey noted Monday that Simpson lives about 10 minutes from his ex-wife.

"So, now you begin to have a problem saying that he was at the scene or could have been," Bailey said. "That is the defense: He was elsewhere."

But Ms. Simpson's father, Louis Brown, told The Associated Press later Monday that his wife misspoke about the time of the call when she talked with investigators.

"We're reasonably sure it was about 10 o'clock, not 11," Brown said. He and his wife were waiting for their phone bill to confirm the time.

Bailey did not return messages left after business hours seeking comment about Brown's statements.

An unidentified limousine driver who says he took Simpson to the airport told the TV show Hard Copy that Simpson wasn't at his estate at 10:45 p.m., but showed up 15 minutes later looking sweaty and agitated.

Rabbits need shade, too

With Monday's high hitting 102 degrees, Pampa residents weren't the only ones seeking relief from the heat. These two rabbits find some cool shade in a narrow band underneath the North Crest Medical Plaza sign late Monday afternoon. The high summer temperatures are expected to dominate for the remainder of the week, though perhaps staying a few degrees cooler. (Pampa News photo by Darlene Holmes)

FCC wants more educational TV for kids

By JEANNINE AVERSA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal regulators are considering tougher requirements on TV stations to boost the number of educational programs for young viewers.

They also want to make sure that shows such as The Jetsons and Leave It to Beaver don't show up again as "educational" programs.

The Federal Communications Commission is collecting recommendations today from broadcast networks, program producers and watchdog groups at its first hearing in 10 years on the state of children's television.

The commission is considering whether it should adopt a definition of what constitutes an educational program and require stations to air a set amount of educational programs for children every week.

Children's television activist Peggy Charren, founder of the watchdog group Action for Children's Television, is recommending that the FCC require a minimum of seven hours of educational programs a week. The programs should be at least 30 minutes long and air between 7 a.m. and 10 p.m.

"It seems abundantly clear that almost everyone in the commercial TV business is still trying to figure out how to benefit from children instead of how to benefit children," Charren said in testimony prepared for the commission.

As a condition of license renewal, stations must demonstrate to the FCC that they have aired programs meeting the educational and informational needs of children. Two years ago, some TV stations told the FCC they had met those needs and listed, in documents to the agency, such shows as The Jetsons and Leave It to Beaver reruns.

The FCC has proposed that shows with education as a primary purpose and entertainment as a secondary one be considered educational programs for regulatory purposes. Broadcasters and program producers don't like the proposal.

"If educational programs are anything short of fully entertaining and engaging children simply will not watch," according to testimony being presented today by Kenneth Werner, senior vice president of business affairs for The Walt Disney Co.'s TV unit.

Jeannette Trias, president of children's programming for ABC, agreed: "Effective educational programming must first reach before it can teach. If a program is lacking in entertainment value, not enough children will watch to attract the advertising revenue necessary for commercial survival," she said in testimony to be presented to the commission.

The Center for Media Education, a public interest group, has recommended defining educational programs as those that further the understanding of a variety of subjects from history and science to fine arts and languages. Programs would target viewers 16 years old and younger.

While the commission hasn't had any recent incidents of cartoons being defined as educational fare, consumer groups and some lawmakers have questioned the effectiveness of the FCC's regulations.

Those regulations stem from a 1990 law designed to boost the number of educational programs broadcast to young viewers. It also restricts the number of commercials that can run with children's programs on broadcast and cable television.

Earlier this month, Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., an architect of the law, said that since its passage "there has not been a dramatic increase in children's educational programs" on broadcast television. The broadcast industry disputed the assertion.

MADD seeks happy hour ban

By CHIP BROWN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission will give serious consideration to a proposal by Mothers Against Drunk Driving that would ban "happy hours" in Texas, officials say.

On Monday, Kirk Brown, the chairman of MADD's Texas chapter, proposed a regulation to the three-person TABC panel aimed at gutting the appeal of happy hours: reduced drink prices.

"Happy hour in Texas induces people to drink more, turns more drunk drivers out on the road and causes fatalities," Brown said. "It's not a happy situation for the victims or the victims' families."

The proposal requires that bar and restaurant owners maintain the price of a drink for weekend intervals, thus wiping out the one-day or even hours-long drink discounts that often attract customers.

"We are asking for a posted price and you can change it weekly," Brown said. "So if the bar has a price for a beer of a penny, they have to sell it to everybody for a penny all week. They can't afford to do that financially."

Brown said the regulation would help eliminate a preponderance of penny beer specials in college bars across the state.

The earliest the TABC is likely to consider any new regulations is in August.

Randy Yarbrough, assistant administrator of the TABC, said MADD's proposal is based on a law already in effect in Massachusetts.

"It has some merit. This ordinance has worked well in Massachusetts," Yarbrough said. "It's not something that has been thrown together by any means. I am sure the commission will give serious consideration to it."

Officials with the Texas Restaurant Association oppose MADD's efforts and say the current regulations on happy hours are strong enough.

The two sides agreed after a public hearing Monday to meet and discuss a possible compromise.

Richie Jackson, executive vice president of the Texas Restaurant Association, said there is no evidence to show that drunken driving accidents increase during the times of happy hours specials.

Jackson said MADD's recommendation would punish restaurant owners who often create festive themes to attract customers based upon drink discounts.

"We would lose the ability to creatively merchandise our products," he said.

French rescue nuns

GOMA, Zaire (AP) — French special forces today evacuated 43 nuns from Rwanda who had been terrorized for 10 weeks by young machete-wielding men staging mock executions.

The nuns — American, Belgian, British and Rwandan — had taken refuge in a convent in the western town of Kibuye when bloodletting started in early April between ethnic Hutus and Tutsis.

Soldiers of the Hutu-dominated government and extremist militias have massacred as many as 200,000 people, mostly ethnic Tutsis. Thousands in Kibuye who had sought shelter in the church and stadium were massacred, the nuns said.

Occasionally, the soldiers and militiamen would check on the nuns.

"It was the mean people of the village, the young ones," said Sister Emma, a Tutsi. "They had machetes and clubs."

"They had a list, and now and then they'd come to see if anyone was hiding with us," she said. "We had to turn people over. It was sad but we had to."

Under the urging of Mother Superior Mary-Julian, head of the Belgian-based Sisters of the Virgin Mary order and originally of Buffalo, New York, about 100 French commandos were dispatched to the convent Sunday.

"Memories"

Two weeks we waited, While all the tests were run;
Hoping for the best when, It was all finally done.

Then came the news, We'd waited with dread;
And I couldn't believe, What the doctor had said.

The surgery was done, And you had come through;
Words can't express, My concern for you.

Then when I thought, I could sigh with relief;
Came the moment of, My most heart felt grief.

The shadows you saw, That I couldn't see;
Kept drawing you, Slowly away from me.

I just wanted to hold you, Keep you safe in my arms;
And try to shelter you, From all hurt and harm.

Tho' I realized that was, Something I couldn't do;
I just had to leave so they could care for you.

I watched and waited, My heart filled with hope;
"He has to make it, Or how will I cope?"

The staff came out, Their eyes were so sad;
I knew by the looks, That the news was bad.

The doctor spoke and, Said you were gone;
I thought to myself, "How can I go on?"

I knew in my heart, That your suffering was through;
And God and his Angels, Would watch over you.

I know deep within that, God knows what's best;
And you've gone home, To be at rest.

I know God is with me, And I'm never alone;
Through Him and his grace, He helps keep me strong.

Now sometimes when I'm thinking, And remember you;
I look up to heaven, And God helps me see through.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Feds should have less buying power

The Senate, building on Vice President Al Gore's heavy-on-rhetoric but light-on-specifics project to "reinvent government," has passed a bill designed to simplify the way the government — especially the Defense Department — buys products and services. Proponents claim the new approach could save up to $20 billion of the $200 billion the government spends each year out in the marketplace.

The Senate (the House should pass similar legislation later this month) and Gore's "reinventors" get points for good intentions. Whether those intentions will translate into more efficiency, competition and lower prices as the legislation is implemented is open to question.

As anybody who's ever tried to sell to the government knows, it can be a cumbersome process in which price and quality often (usually?) is sacrificed to proficiency with paperwork. A purchase of more than $25,000 takes 29 pages of paperwork and can take more than 200 days to process. Many products that are virtually identical to those available in the civilian marketplace can be bought only if they conform to reams of specially-written specifications.

The new legislation would increase the ceiling for "small" purchases to $100,000 (though even these will still require more paperwork than needed). It would simplify the bid protest process and allow some mandates to be sidestepped. It would encourage the government to act more like a buyer in a competitive marketplace.

All that sounds fine. But it's ominous that it's expected to take six months to write regulations to implement the new procedures. That sounds like government as usual.

The problem with encouraging government to act like a business is that government is not like a business. It doesn't face a real threat of going-out-of-business bottom line. Employees are seldom rewarded or made more secure in their jobs for being smart shoppers.

Also creating a problem are many of the members of Congress themselves. In an effort to keep themselves in office for as long as possible, many lawmakers try to throw government bucks to their constituents, either by subtly persuading various government agencies to consider businesses and industries in their home districts for the government contract purchases or by slipping in favorable tax loopholes attached to various pieces of legislation.

Another problem is created by the bureaucratic personnel, many of whom are "persuaded" to favorably recommend various contractors for government purchases in exchange for vacation trips, products or even outright sums of money (read, "bribes"). Sometimes, they get indicted, as witness recent probes into Pentagon and NASA purchases. Lobbyists add to this problem, too, by bombarding legislators and bureaucrats in favor of their employers. Too many times, though, the perpetrators just continue "business as usual" while we taxpayers get soaked.

A new, streamlined process might help for a while. But the best bet would be for government to spend less for everything.

"This piece looks vaguely familiar!"

Here's a game the IRS can't lose

One of the most obvious foundations of a civilized order is a rejection of ex post facto laws — those that punish you for doing something that was not punishable when you did it. Most Americans assume their legal system forbids this sort of injustice.

Wrong. As the Supreme Court forcefully reminded one taxpayer this month, the U.S. government is free to change most rules retroactively, any time it wants — never mind the cost to those who make the foolish mistake of trusting its promises.

In the 1986 tax reform, Congress made an obscure change in the rules for inheritance taxes to encourage the growth of employee stock ownership plans (ESOPs). This allowed the executor of an estate to deduct half the proceeds of any sale of company stock to the company's ESOP. Later that year, the executor of the will of Willametta Day took advantage of the provision, buying MCI shares and selling them to the MCI ESOP two days later. The estate lost $631,000 on the deal but saved $2.5 million in federal estate taxes.

After enacting this measure, known as Section 2057, lawmakers were shocked to discover that taxpayers were actually using it and thus keeping more of their money than was convenient for the Treasury. So in 1987, Congress decided to plug the loophole. But it went even further and made the change retroactive — to the detriment of all those who had engaged in the behavior that in 1986 had been hailed as a boon to society.

Day's estate, as a consequence, suddenly owed the government $2.5 million, plus interest. The government didn't offer to refund the $631,000 the estate had lost on the transaction.

The executor paid the bill and then filed a lawsuit challenging the retroactive application of the new rule. The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals found that the effect of the change was "so harsh and oppressive" as to violate the constitutional guarantee of due process.

Stephen

The appeals court summarized the blatant unfairness involved in this case: "Section 2057 was enacted to induce taxpayers to sell shares at a discounted price to an ESOP, thus furthering the public policy of employee ownership. Section 2057 worked. An ESOP was able to buy more shares at a lower price than before. Then, when the private sector had performed the socially desirable action of selling shares at a discount to an ESOP, the government renege on its end of the deal ... The $631,000 is gone forever."

But then the Supreme Court unanimously overruled the lower court. It said that making the change retroactive is perfectly compatible with the Constitution. Even in a case such as this, where the taxpayer had no notice that the law might be repealed, he is out of luck.

If causing Willametta Day's heirs a loss of $631,000 is not harsh and oppressive, it's hard to imagine what would be. Unfortunately for the estate, the court may be right on the constitutional issue, which is no compliment to the Constitution. The ban on ex post facto laws was meant by the framers to refer only to criminal laws, and the Supreme Court affirmed that understanding as far back as 1798.

Vastly underestimating the perversity of future lawmakers and tax collectors, the authors of the Constitution failed to realize the possible abuses that could be committed through retroactive civil laws. Recent Congresses have not only recognized those possibilities but exploited them to the utmost.

Though a measure like this one may not violate the Constitution, it ought to offend the conscience. One of the first principles of the rule of law is that people should know in advance the legal consequences of given actions, so that they can adjust their conduct accordingly.

That's one reason we don't allow Congress to pass secret laws. But a retroactive law is secret to anyone who can't see into the future. When the government can change the rules after the game has been played, citizens find themselves forced into a lottery that they can never win and the government can never lose.

Justice Samuel Chase, in that 1798 decision, denounced retroactive criminal laws in terms that are also relevant to retroactive civil laws: "The legislature may enjoin, permit, forbid and punish; they may declare new crimes; and establish new rules of conduct for all its citizens in future cases; they may command what is right, and prohibit what is wrong; but they cannot change innocence into guilt."

To allow the government the power to change the tax laws after the fact is to volunteer ourselves to be expropriated at its leisure. That was the fate of Willametta Day's heirs, whose treatment is no less cruel and unconscionable just because the Supreme Court says it is not harsh and oppressive.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, June 28, the 179th day of 1994. There are 186 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

One hundred years ago, on June 28, 1894, Labor Day was established as a holiday for federal employees on the first Monday of September.

On this date:

In 1778, Mary Ludwig Hays became known as Molly Pitcher as she carried water to American soldiers at the Revolutionary War Battle of Monmouth in New Jersey.

In 1914, Austrian Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife, Sofia, were assassinated in Sarajevo by a Serb nationalist — the event which triggered World War I.

In 1919, the Treaty of Versailles was signed in France, ending the First World War.

In 1934, President Roosevelt signed into law the National Housing Act, which established the Federal Housing Administration.

He's a draft dodger, not war resister

Charley Reese

President Bill Clinton acquitted himself reasonably well in Normandy, but then the South's mouth just couldn't leave well enough alone. He had to say in an interview how tough it was to resist the Vietnam War because he loved the military so much.

There are two things wrong with that statement. Like most of his ilk, he was not resisting the Vietnam War; he was busy evading service in it. There's a difference. Secondly, he said in a letter to the ROTC commander at the University of Arkansas, in which he thanked him for "saving me from the draft," that young men of his generation loathed the military.

I respect honest war resisters who are willing to go to jail for their beliefs. I respect genuine conscientious objectors. I don't respect people like Clinton, who evaded his legal obligation to serve in the military and sought to disguise it by being "against the war." He wasn't being asked to approve of the war; he was being asked to fulfill his legal obligation to serve his country in the military. He might not even have been sent to Vietnam. It was military service that he ran from.

Nobody asked those men who died at Normandy and in dozens of other places around the world whether or not they approved of the war, thought it was being properly conducted or believed it met the criteria of a just war. They were just told their country needed them, and they went to war. When Clinton's country needed him, he went to Oxford.

He certainly wasn't the Lone Ranger. Nor did the Vietnam War have anything to do with it. Every war has its shirkers and draft dodgers. A lot of men's patriotism is like a lot of folks' religion — it's OK as long as it doesn't inconvenience them. It's just that during the Vietnam War era you had a lot of articulate middle and upper-middle class kids who could think of lots of reasons they were opposed to the Vietnam War. The main one, of course, was that bullets hurt.

The Vietnam War was no more unjust than any other war. Americans were trying to help a people avoid dictatorial rule by a bunch of communist thugs. Despite the sacrifices of the American military men, the politicians lost their nerve and pulled out. The communist thugs imposed their dictatorial rule, and it was and is just as bad as everyone predicted it would be. Thugs who murder political dissenters are no damned good, no matter what their nationality or ideology.

It would be better if Clinton could be honest. I realize that's like saying it would be better if the desert were wet. But I don't think the American people would hold it against him if he just said, "When I was a young man, I ran from military obligation and I regret doing that and will try to make it up in some way."

But no, he gives us this can of corn about how much he loved the military and how it hurt his soul to have to oppose that "unjust" war, opposition which he says he still does not regret. It is, by the way, characteristic of sociopathic personalities that they never express guilt or remorse about anything.

Well, I try not to regret anything, either, but, boy howdy, do I regret voting for Clinton. Fortunately, the majority of the people in my state had better sense than I did, so my vote didn't really count in getting him into the White House. But I regret it anyhow. I had the red parts about Bush and so I voted for Clinton. That's like stubbing your toe and in your anger shooting yourself in the other foot.

Listening to Clinton kind of makes you nostalgic for Calvin Coolidge, who was famous for never saying much. Once, when Coolidge's wife had been laid up with a cold and couldn't go to church, she asked him what the preacher talked about. "Sin," Coolidge said. Well, his wife went on, what did he say about it? "He was against it," Coolidge said.

That's what I want: a taciturn man for president.

It ain't America that's wrong with world going to Bosnia with ground troops over issues that seem to have much more to do with ethnicity than democracy. Haiti is a puzzle. China is a big puzzle. The possible coming of nuclear weapons to North Korea could prove monstrously dangerous, but not just because North Koreans don't have freedom of expression.

In all these cases, Team Clinton has bungled, often badly. His flip-floppism — there, here and everywhere — has cost us in terms of future credibility.

But do remember that one great lesson of D-Day, and then of the Cold war, is that democracies are only indecisive and soft on the outside, and only for a while.

The struggle for the enlargement of democracy still goes on. It is the fight of our age. But while tanks, carriers, generals and diplomats are still important, it's a struggle for the culture, what the Nazis — very much on the wrong side of the issue — called the kulturkampf.

In that contest for the culture, notwithstanding all the chaos and bungling, the good guys are still winning. Free politics and free economics have a life of their own. Sometimes we can help it along, sometimes not. There is a chance that what is happening in South Africa will be a successful miracle. South America is mostly democratic, and Mexico is moving that way. What's going on now in Russia may still work out. There are Asian democracies, with different rules, some of which may make sense.

Growing international trade, which helps democratic values, knits us together without loss of sovereignty. No one knows what the "information superhighway" is, but the spread of democratic values is traveling that road, almost everywhere, most often on television screens, without much help from governments. It doesn't look like D-Day, but it's part of the same struggle.

How will the story end? It is clear that many people look at America through a love-hate lens. Quite properly, they find American domestic violence repugnant. Exemplars must set examples.

And what about the Clinton foreign policy? He says the right words. On D-Day he noted: "The Longest Day is not yet over." But he, and most of his team, came of age during defeat in Vietnam, not victory during World War II. They often fear that getting America involved anywhere causes trouble. They should remember what the late Harry Golden said: "It ain't America that's wrong with the world."

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I struck up a conversation with a very good-looking guy at a bar, and he bought me a drink (two actually). Well, before I was halfway finished with the second drink, he was giving me this "your place or mine" routine.

Abby, what gives a man the idea that all he has to do is buy a couple of drinks for a lady and she's a cinch? I realize that women have come a long way. Not too many years ago, a woman without an escort wasn't even allowed to sit at a bar!

Fortunately, times have changed, but the attitude of most men hasn't. They still don't consider women their equals.

Men continue to do the picking and choosing, and they treat women like they were put here on earth to satisfy men. I am for more equality between the sexes.

FRESNO FEMINIST

DEAR FEMINIST: One "swallow" doesn't make a summer, nor do two drinks make a strange bedfellow. But if you really want to promote equality between the sexes, the next time you strike up a conversation with a guy at a bar, you buy the drinks, and you won't owe him anything.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 35-year-old married woman who has read your column since I was a teenager. I've learned a lot and trust your judgment. Here's my problem:

I've been married to "Nicky" for four years. (He's my second husband and I love him very much.) Nicky is a salesman and makes very good money, but he spends it faster than he can make it. I work too, and I bring home almost as much as he does. He's been a wonderful step dad to my two sons, who idolize him.

Nicky is constantly in the hole, and if I hadn't bailed him out, our credit would have been ruined years ago. If I say no to him, he clams up and pulls away, so I'm damned if I do and damned if I don't.

Please help me. I don't want this marriage to end over money. I really love this man.

MONEY TROUBLE

DEAR MONEY TROUBLE: It's time to ask yourself why you continue to "bail out" a husband who obviously knows nothing about handling money. You need more help than I can give you in a letter — but some answers can be found in a book I have just finished.

Get "Money Demons" by Dr. Susan Forward (published by Bantam Books). It contains excellent advice on how to put an end to money fights.

I wish every married couple who fights about money could read this wonderful book.

DEAR ABBY: In A.M. Oglesby's letter from Tuscaloosa, Ala., about the possibility of post-mortem growth of hair and fingernails, he states that a body was buried in the 17th century in New Orleans and was dug up 100 years later, and the skeleton had long hair and fingernails.

Your reply was that the story was not true — and forensic medical experts confirmed that opinion.

Abby, that story is also bogus for another reason. There was no New Orleans in the 17th century (the 1600s). New Orleans did not exist until it was founded by Jean Baptiste le Moyne in 1718 (the 18th century). Before that, there were no cemeteries in this former swamp.

How to save money and improve the environment

By BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS
For AP Special Features

In the past 20 years Americans have learned a lot about making their homes and planet healthier, reports Better Homes and Gardens magazine.

Initially prodded into action by the 1973 oil crisis, we have reduced our appetite for energy. This is great news for the environment.

Advancing technology has produced a whole range of improved products that save energy in your home. If you take advantage of them, your family can live better, cleaner and cheaper. To save money and improve the environment, consider these products:

— Appliances. Because they run 24 hours a day, refrigerators use as much as 20 percent of household electricity. Also, manufacturers have long relied on ozone-depleting chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) for both coolants and the making of insulation for refrigerator doors and walls.

But help is on the way.

In April, Whirlpool Corp. began selling its prize-winning, CFC-free energy-efficient refrigerator. It uses as much as 50 percent less electricity than similar units and will operate for about the same cost as a continuously burning 75-watt lightbulb. Distribution is currently limited, so call 1-800-253-1301 for dealer information.

Another appliance with a major environmental impact is the washing machine. Consider purchasing a top-loader model, which requires about a third less water than the average front loader. If you wash eight times a week, it will save up to 500 gallons of water a month.

— Windows. If your home had simple double-pane windows 20 years ago, you were among the vanguard of the environmentally conscious.

But today, even untreated triple panes aren't the best. Look for low-emissivity windows with a special coating that blocks heat from escaping. Or, try new super windows, which use thin HeatMirror films as heat barriers. They are three times more effective than triple-pane glass alone.

— Toilets. About half of the water washing down household drains annually in this country passes through our toilets. These thirsty fixtures average about 5 gallons per flush. Do our streams and rivers a favor by switching to 1.6 gallon-per-flush models, which are becoming the mandated standard for new housing.

— Lights. Cutting back on electricity means fewer power plants with their attending environmental costs. So the switch to longer-lasting, energy-saving compact fluorescent bulbs reaps instant benefits.

Fluorescents require much less electricity to operate than the typical incandescent bulbs that have burned for decades.

For instance, a 75-watt incandescent can be replaced by an 18-watt compact fluorescent. Not only will fluorescents save energy, they last seven times longer.

— Heating. A good furnace in 1973 was 60 percent efficient, which meant 40 percent of its heat production was lost through leaks and poor venting. Today, many furnaces achieve 90 percent efficiency or better.

Other recent advances include improved heat-recovery ventilation systems to keep heat in the house, better insulation techniques and materials and refined passive solar designs.

The next step? Geothermal systems are being installed around the nation to pump warm air out of the ground and into our homes at less than half the cost of heat from a standard furnace.

Silver anniversary insulator show in Houston slated

HOUSTON — The Lone Star Insulator Club of Houston will host the Silver Anniversary National Show of the National Insulator Association July 1, 2 and 3 at Hobby Airport Holiday Inn, 9100 I-45 South (Gulf Freeway), at Airport Boulevard, Exit #36, Houston.

What are insulators? Insulators are those "things" we see on utility poles holding the wire.

The most familiar insulators are made of glass or porcelain; in the past they have been made of wood and rubber.

The largest one-piece glass insulator weighs 38 pounds, stands 12 inches tall and is 15 inches in diameter. Lightning rod insulators may be as small as a thimble.

Common glass insulators occur in clear and shades of aqua; however, insulators have been found in vivid colors of glass such as emerald green, lemon yellow, milk glass, amethyst and cobalt.

Porcelain insulators may vary in color from pastels to chocolate browns, to bright blues, greens, and yellows.

Insulator shapes are varied. Some peculiar shapes have inspired nicknames: Mickey Mouse, gingerbread man, sombrero, Pluto, door knob, umbrella and spook, for example.

There will be more than 100 dealers from nearby and as far away as Germany, Australia, Alaska, California and New York.

They will bring insulators, lightning rod balls, bottles, signs, advertising and other go-withs and general antiques.

On July 1, only members of the National Insulator Association will be admitted.

Saturday and Sunday will be open to the public, free of charge. Hours will be 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday and 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. Sunday.

Exhibits will entertain and educate visitors about insulators, their uses and manufacturers. Trophies will be awarded in each of ten categories.

The names of the winners of a handsome, queen-size Texas wildflower quilt, a hand crocheted round table cloth, some uncommon insulators, and a set of colored glass commemoratives will be drawn at 3 p.m. Sunday, July 3.

Club members embroidered the squares for the quilt, which was assembled and finished by a professional quilter. Winners in the Sunday drawing need not be present.

Raffle tickets can be purchased from any Lone Star Insulator Club member or at the show.

Hourly door prizes will be awarded throughout the show.

Winners will be announced at the time of the drawing.

TRACK AND FIELD

MASON—Wendell Palmer of Pampa won six events in the Masters Division at the Hill Country Classic last weekend.

Palmer threw the 1.5-k discus 153-1 to break the old record set in 1972 by Jose Celaya of Spain. He also set a pending world record of 37-9 in the 6.0-k shot put.

Palmer also won the 5.0-k shot (43-9) and missed the world record by one-half inch in the 1.0-k discus with his throw of 174.0. He won the hammer throw (129-8), 25-pound weight throw (144-1 1/2) and 35-pound weight throw (29-8), and placed second in the javelin.

"It was a pretty good meet for me," Palmer said. "I keep improving a little bit here and a little bit there."

Palmer competes in the 60-64 age division.

O.J. SIMPSON

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Defense lawyers demanded access to blood samples and gloves in the murder case against O.J. Simpson and said they may present their own evidence and call witnesses at a preliminary hearing.

A hearing was scheduled today to decide on the defense's request, and on a prosecution motion asking for a sample of Simpson's hair so they can compare it to hair recovered from the crime scene. Simpson was to attend the hearing.

Meanwhile, the father of Simpson's slain ex-wife disputed a coroner's report that said his wife had a phone conversation with their daughter at about 11 p.m. the night she was killed. Louis Brown told The Associated Press that the call was closer to 10 p.m. and that they were waiting for their phone bill to confirm the time.

Simpson has pleaded innocent to charges he murdered Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman on June 12. A preliminary hearing is scheduled Thursday.

SOCCER

DALLAS (AP)—Juergen Klinsmann scored two goals as defending World Cup champion Germany beat South Korea 3-2 to win Group C with seven points.

With its victory, Germany guaranteed it will play July 2 at Chicago. By eliminating South Korea, it also assured the United States—if it advances—of playing at Stanford, Calif., in the second round against Brazil or Sweden.

Spain, which beat Bolivia 3-1 in Chicago, finished second in Group C with five points.

NEW YORK (AP)—The Los Angeles Salsa of the American Professional Soccer League will also play in the Mexican first division this fall and winter. The U.S. Soccer Federation's Board of Directors approved the move over the weekend.

BASKETBALL

MILWAUKEE (AP)—Glenn Robinson, expected to be selected first overall in the NBA draft by the Milwaukee Bucks, won't boycott Wednesday's draft in Indianapolis, the former Purdue star's agent, Charles Tucker, said. Tucker said earlier that Robinson was considering a boycott to protest the legality of the draft and a possible rookie salary cap.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP)—The New Jersey Nets have hired former NBA player Butch Beard to succeed Chuck Daly as coach. The Associated Press learned. Beard, the coach at Howard University for the past four seasons, was a Nets assistant from 1988-90. He will be introduced at a news conference today, a source close to the situation said.

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP)—Magic Johnson realized his longtime dream to own a piece of an NBA team, purchasing a part interest in the Los Angeles Lakers. Johnson's stake was not disclosed, but probably would be less than 10 percent, the Los Angeles Times said Sunday. The team said he will hold the title of vice president and will work in "various management areas."

BASEBALL

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—Fernando Valenzuela joined the Philadelphia Phillies and was scheduled to start tonight's game against Florida.

The 33-year-old Valenzuela, who signed Friday, was 10-3 with a 2.67 ERA for Jalisco in the Mexican League. He was 8-10 with a 4.94 ERA for Baltimore last season.

NEW YORK (AP)—Houston's Jeff Bagwell, who hit .479 with four homers and nine RBIs last week, is the NL player of the week. Cleveland's Kenny Lofton, who hit .545, was honored in the AL.

NEW YORK (AP)—Seattle outfielder Ken Griffey Jr. leads American Leaguers with 3,658,841 votes in balloting for the All-Star Game on July 12 at Pittsburgh. The starters and reserves will be announced Sunday.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP)—Michael Jordan was 1-for-4 in Birmingham's 8-4 victory over Memphis in the Southern League to raise his average to .196.

FOOTBALL

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—U.S. District Judge Larry J. McKinney granted a preliminary injunction sought by the Indianapolis Colts and the NFL prohibiting the new Baltimore CFL Colts from using the name "Colts."

The Indianapolis Colts, the NFL and NFL Properties, Inc., had said the name was an infringement on their trademark.

McKinney said the CFL team would be restricted from "using or permitting or licensing or authorizing the use of the word 'Colts,' 'Baltimore Colts,' 'Baltimore CFL Colts,' or any other combinations of words including or incorporating the word 'Colts.'"

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP)—Florida State offensive tackle Juan Laureano was arrested on charges of leaving the scene of a car accident, police said. The 21-year-old junior's vehicle struck another traveling in the same direction from behind, sending it up an embankment, according to police.

GOLF

CROMWELL, Conn. (AP)—John Daly was disqualified from the Greater Hartford Open for signing an incorrect scorecard after Sunday's final round.

PGA Tour communications assistant Leslie Sinadinos said Daly's playing partner, Clark Dennis, incorrectly credited the 1991 PGA champion with a par on the par-3 fifth hole instead of a bogey. Daly signed for a 5-over-par 75 and a 278 total that was worth $11,520 for a tie for 22nd.

Navratilova advances to quarterfinals

By STEPHEN WILSON
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England (AP)

Martina Navratilova has stopped thinking of this as her last Wimbledon. The way she's playing, it could be her first.

"I've gotten much more into the tournament, and nerves are not going to play a part in the rest of the tournament," Navratilova said after overwhelming Helena Sukova 6-1, 6-2 Monday to reach the quarterfinals. "I think that was a danger in the first couple of rounds. Not any more."

Navratilova, 37, has gotten stronger with each match as she pursues a 10th singles title in her 22nd and final appearance at her favorite tournament. She has reached the Wimbledon quarterfinals for the 20th consecutive year.

"I have stopped thinking this is my last Wimbledon," she said. "I am absolutely in the 'now,' playing Wimbledon, period. I don't care if I have 10 more to go. I want this one. I want the next match. That's all I'm thinking about."

The fourth-seeded Navratilova—who hasn't lost a set so far—was expected to face a tougher challenge today when she took on No. 5 Jana Novotna, the grass-court expert who beat her in the semifinals last year.

"I'm sure I'll be thinking about what happened last year," Navratilova said. "I need to be more clear about how to play her, but the mental part is pretty set."

The other quarterfinals paired No. 3 Conchita Martinez of Spain vs. No. 9 Lindsay Davenport, Lori McNeil vs. Larisa Neiland of Latvia, and Zina Garrison Jackson vs. Gigi Fernandez.

Five of the quarterfinalists are from the United States: Navratilova, Davenport, McNeil, Garrison Jackson and Fernandez. That's the best U.S. showing since 1985, when six Americans reached the quarters.

Except for the 18-year-old Davenport, the Americans are all in their 30s.

"I think it's basically the grass more than anything," Garrison Jackson, 30, said. "It is a mature court. You have to use your head on it. Basically the more mature players are probably all-around players because you learn that the older you get."

Garrison Jackson, runner-up at Wimbledon in 1990, pulled off Monday's major upset by beating second-seeded Arantxa Sanchez Vicario 7-5, 4-6, 6-3. She said she was inspired by the success of fellow Houston native McNeil, who ousted top-seeded Steffi Graf in the first round last week and beat Florencia Labat in two tiebreakers Monday.

It's the first time in Wimbledon history that the top two women's seeds failed to reach the quarters. The 1981 U.S. Open was the last Grand Slam tournament where neither the No. 1 or No. 2 seed played in the final.

The men's quarterfinals are set for Wednesday: Pete Sampras vs. Michael Chang, Todd Martin vs. Wayne Ferreira and Goran Ivanisevic vs. Guy Forget.

The fourth-round match between Boris Becker and Andrei Medvedev was suspended by darkness Monday night with the score tied 1-1 in the fifth set. The match was to be completed today, with the winner to face Christian Bergstrom of Sweden.

The biggest name to be ousted Monday was Andre Agassi, the 1992 champion who was beaten by Martin in five sets. Agassi lost the first two sets, came back strongly to win the next two, but Martin dominated the final set 6-1.

Martin prevailed despite a Centre Court crowd which cheered his errors and pulled wildly for Agassi.

"Do you feel at all like the man who shot Bambi?" Martin was asked.

"In my eyes, there aren't too many similarities between Andre and Bambi," he replied.

"Andre and I are completely different people," Martin added. "We don't play tennis the same, we don't think the same, and we just aren't the same. You know, I'm very happy just having my parents scream for me back home."

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP)—The San Francisco 49ers are considering luring All-Pro center Mark Stepnoski from the Dallas Cowboys with a one-year deal worth as much as $1.3 million, according to a published report.

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram cited sources close to negotiations between agent Ralph Cindrich and the 49ers in reporting the deal for the free agent.

"The Cowboys have their long-term priorities, and they have prioritized other areas," Cindrich told the newspaper. "In the short term, if the Cowboys don't pay him at least $1 million, he won't be playing in Dallas."

That seems clear in light of the 49ers' willingness to consider both multiyear deals and the one-year pact is preferred by both the 49ers and Stepnoski, the source said.

"He wants to prove he's healthy now, then go for the big contract in 1995," the source added. "The only problem (with San Francisco) is how to be creative under the salary cap."

Dallas plans to have Stepnoski, who is coming off surgery to repair the torn anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee, to sign with the Cowboys for one more season, according to owner Jerry Jones.

"The logical thing is for Mark to have a big year, then get a free agency bonanza next year," said Jones.

The source told the newspaper that it is likely Stepnoski will attempt to solicit at least $1 million from the 49ers and then sign with that club if the Cowboys opt not to match the deal. The source said two other teams have expressed interest in Stepnoski.

"We haven't been told of his talks with other teams," Jones said. "I believe we're on track to have Mark with us. I think with training camp just a few weeks away, we're progressing with him very well."

Stepnoski has been selected for the Pro Bowl in each of the past two seasons.

Jones said signing Stepnoski is now the No. 1 off-season goal. But as has been the case with each of the Cowboys' high-profile free-agent departures, affordability is as much a consideration as ability.

"We've wanted to keep all our players," Jones said. "But 'want-to' and being able to are two different things. What we've done with our budgeting should allow us to make a very credible offer to Mark."

New plan to be presented on freshman academics

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. (AP)—The importance of standardized test scores to determine freshman eligibility, long criticized by black educators, would be greatly reduced under a special NCAA committee's new plan.

"The proposed standards are fair," said William DeLauder of Delaware State, co-chairman of the NCAA Special Committee to Review Initial Eligibility Standards. "They don't rely as heavily on test scores. They ensure that student-athletes have a reasonable level of academic preparedness but also ensure that the level is attainable."

A survey by the committee determined that about 500 more minority athletes would graduate under the revised academic requirements than under rules adopted five months ago over the protest of black educators.

The committee will present its findings to the NCAA Presidents Commission this week and ask that the new standards replace Proposition 16, which schools approved at the NCAA convention last January.

In addition, the committee said in a statement Monday, it will ask that the new requirements take effect in August 1996 instead of August 1995. The changes would all need approval of NCAA schools at their next convention in January.

The study was commissioned at the request of many black educators, who have fought a running battle over standardized test scores since they became a key element of freshmen eligibility requirements known as Proposition 48 in 1983. Proposition 16 is meant to tighten and replace Proposition 48.

The black coaches and educators, along with many whites, maintain that standardized test scores are racially and culturally discriminatory and do not accurately predict a young person's ability to do college work.

South Korea foiled again

World Cup roundup

By DILIP GANGULY
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP)—Two goals in the final six minutes against Spain. Two second-half goals and a late blitz that nearly tied world champion Germany.

South Korea impressed many, but could not produce a victory at the World Cup.

The agony of elimination was too much. South Korean players flung themselves on the field when it was over. Some wept—four decades of Korean soccer history repeating itself in the hot and humid Cotton Bowl.

South Korea has never won a World Cup game in 11 tries over four tournaments and 40 years.

Its last chance, at least for another four years, ended Monday in a 3-2 loss to Germany.

"The pain is too much, it hurts," said team spokesman Lee Young Soo, as he placed his right arm on his left chest.

At the Dallas-Fort Worth Hilton Hotel, the home of the Koreans since they came to the United States on June 8, most of the players went to their rooms, ignoring dinner.

"We were almost there, but as I said almost, maybe next time," said Sam H. Ka, general manager of the Korea Football Association about his team's performance.

"The spirit of Korea lives on," said Sam, as he checked Wednesday's flight plan for home to Seoul, the South Korean capital.

The two goals against Spain led to a 2-2 draw on the opening day of the tournament. Six days later they played the only 0-0 draw of the World Cup, against Bolivia, only its second point ever in World Cup competition.

On Monday, Germany led 3-0 at halftime after an impressive early display and its best half in the tournament, with two goals from Juergen Klinsmann and one from Karlheinz Riedle in the first 37 minutes.

But the Germans collapsed in the second half. South Korea got goals from Hwang Sun-hong and Hong Myung-bo and Ko Jeong-woon and Choi Young-il forced German keeper into diving saves.

"In the first half we were intimidated by the Germans," said coach Kim Ho. "But during the break I told them to play as in practice, to play normally."

Kim, wearing a suit despite Dallas heat, blamed his 32-year-old goalkeeper and captain Choi In-young for the defeat. Choi could be excused for Klinsmann's first goal, a spinning volley from the middle of the penalty area. But he gave up a rebound that led to Riedle's goal and then let Klinsmann's second slip through his hands.

By the start of the second half, Kim had replaced Choi with Lee Woon-jae.

"He is the captain, he is the leader, but our goal was to win and for that if I had to take away the captain, I will do it again," Kim said.

But this fatal defeat, which eliminated the Koreans from the 24-nation tournament, did not infringe upon the spirit of 60,000 Korean-Americans who live in Dallas.

Ignoring Texas' hot and humid weather and the defeat, dozens of Korean businessmen turned up at the DFW Hilton Hotel to talk about World Cup 2002. South Korea is bidding hard to host the championship.

U.S. faces tough odds

DANA POINT, Calif. (AP)—A day after their first loss at this World Cup, U.S. soccer players sounded like so many other big-time athletes, whining and complaining.

The referee did them in. Their federation did them in. Their coach did them in.

Well, at least they have a week before their next game. "You have to get psyched up, mentally prepared and think about it's the challenge you've been waiting for all your lives," defender Paul Caligiuri said Monday, a day after the 1-0 defeat against Romania.

Germany's 3-2 victory over South Korea on Monday means the Americans have only two options: play Brazil or Sweden next Monday at Stanford Stadium or go home.

The odds are overwhelming that the Americans will advance, so much so that most players aren't even watching other games or trying to make sense of the mathematics.

"If you do that, I think you go crazy," forward Ernie Stewart said.

Added defender Alexi Lalas: "If we're going to rely on superstition and witch doctors and all that stuff, then we're in deep crap."

Lalas was among the players who complained that the U.S. Soccer Federation failed to inform the team about the tournament rule on yellow cards. John Harkes, who was given a yellow card against Switzerland, got another against Romania and will be suspended for the second round.

USSF executive director Hank Steinbrecher and team general manager Bill Nuttall both thought that a pair of first-round yellow cards received in separate games would be erased. FIFA told them after the game they were wrong.

"It's embarrassing, actually, to tell you the truth," Lalas said. "It's the rules of the game. It doesn't matter what your experience is or how many World Cups you played in, at the very least you should know the rules of the tournament you're in and we didn't."

Nuttall took the blame Monday. The USSF's appeal of the yellow card, given to Harkes by referee Mario Van der Ende of the Netherlands for not being 10 yards back on a free kick, was made after the deadline of one hour following the game and was denied by FIFA.

"The film clearly shows that Harkes and (Mike) Sorber hadn't moved from the spot the referee designated," Nuttall said.

Harkes, who threw up after the game because of a bout with flu, still was angry at Van der Ende on Monday. "I think it was embarrassing for the referee, really, to give me a yellow card," Harkes said.

He also was upset with the USSF for not telling the team about the rule.

"It should have been explained to the players and nothing was made clear to the players," Harkes said.

Expos pull closer to Braves in East Division

By The Associated Press

Olympic Stadium was nearly full, the Expos had their best pitcher on the mound and Montreal was ready to begin its challenge for first place in the NL East.

The Expos and their 45,291 fans — the largest crowd since Opening Day — didn't go home disappointed.

Ken Hill outpitched Greg Maddux and became the National League's first 11-game winner in a 7-2 victory Monday night that pulled the Expos within 1 1/2 games of Atlanta. It's the closest Montreal has been to first place since May 29.

"The kids were prepared for battle," said manager Felipe Alou of his team. "What we showed tonight was nothing new. This team just doesn't get the credit it deserves."

But they did get a chance to end the three-game series in first place for the first time all season. To do so, they'll need victories today against Tom Glavine and Wednesday against John Smoltz.

In other games, San Francisco beat Los Angeles 3-2, Houston beat Cincinnati 7-6 in 11 innings, St. Louis rallied past New York 9-8, Philadelphia beat Florida 5-1, Colorado beat San Diego 12-7 and Chicago beat Pittsburgh 2-1.

Hill (11-3) worked 7 1/3 innings and allowed four hits and six walks while striking out three. Maddux (10-4), loser of his last two starts and winless in three, gave up five runs on nine hits in 6 2/3 innings.

"I feel I can pitch with anybody, and I showed it tonight," said Hill. "Maddux is a great pitcher and he kept his team in there. But so did I."

Montreal broke the game open in the seventh on Wil Cordero's bases-loaded sacrifice fly and Cliff Floyd's three-run homer. The Expos added two runs in the eighth on Tim Spehr's RBI double and Wil Cordero's bases-loaded walk. "This series isn't going to make or break us," Hill said, "but it gives us an opportunity to carry on some momentum." Possibly enough momentum to knock Atlanta out of first place for the first time all season. Montreal has been in second place all but one day since April 26.

"They hit better than us, they pitched better than us, and they played better than us," Fred McGriff said. "That's why they won."

Giants 3, Dodgers 2
In their first game at Dodger Stadium since a 12-1 defeat on the final day of the 1993 season eliminated them from the division race, the Giants moved within 5 1/2 games of first-place Los Angeles.

Injury-plagued Bud Black (1-0), making his second start since last August, pitched seven scoreless innings and allowed just three hits. The Giants got their runs on Royce Clayton's bases-loaded, two-run single in the first inning and Dave Martinez's run-scoring groundout in the third.

Tom Candiotti (5-3) took the loss, allowing six hits and five walks in seven innings.

Astros 7, Reds 6 (11)
At the Astrodome, Craig Biggio lined an RBI single to the wall in the 11th inning to pull the Astros within 2 1/2 games of the first-place Reds in the NL Central Division.

Cincinnati rallied with a pair of two-run homers in the ninth to tie the game, but Houston refused to give up.

"It kind of took the wind out of us (when the Reds scored four in the ninth)," said Houston's Luis Gonzalez, who had three hits and two RBIs. "But we came back. A win is a win, especially against these guys."

Todd Jones (2-2) pitched two hitless innings for the victory. Jeff Brantley (5-4) took the loss.

Cardinals 9, Mets 8
At Shea Stadium, Gregg Jefferies tied the game with a ninth-inning double and an error by shortstop Jose Vizcaino allowed the winning run to score.

St. Louis' rally ruined a great comeback by New York, which scored seven runs — five unearned — with two out in the seventh to take an 8-7 lead. John Franco (1-4) blew his fifth save opportunity of the season. Rich Rodriguez (2-2) pitched 1 1/3 innings for the win.

Phillies 5, Marlins 1
At Veterans Stadium, Shawn Boskie scattered six hits in his first complete game in four years and Jim Eisenreich hit a two-run triple as Philadelphia won its third straight.

Boskie (4-4) struck out four and allowed only one runner past first base for his second career complete game. The Phillies jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the first and knocked out Kurt Miller (1-3) an inning later.

Rockies 12, Padres 7
At Mile High Stadium, Dante Bichette hit two long home runs, including a grand slam in the eighth inning, and Colorado had 17 hits.

Bichette tied a club record with five RBIs, and Vinny Castilla and Eric Young also homered for Colorado. San Diego, losing consecutive games for the first time since June 15, left 15 runners on base.

David Nied (7-4) got the win and improved to 4-0 lifetime against the Padres. Andy Ashby (3-6) had his three-game winning streak snapped.

Cubs 2, Pirates 1
At Wrigley Field, Sammy Sosa's shallow sacrifice fly in the eighth inning ended Pittsburgh's six-game winning streak.

Sosa's pop fly was caught in short center by second baseman Carlos Garcia, whose momentum carried him further into the outfield. Kevin Roberson barely beat the throw home.

Cubs' Willie Banks (8-6) retired 20 consecutive hitters at one point and got the victory. Jeff Ballard (1-1) took the loss.

Reds' second baseman Bret Boone throws to first base to complete a double play as the Astros' James Mouton slides into second. The Astros beat the Reds, 7-6, Monday in eleven innings. (AP photo)

Yankees' Key becomes baseball's first 12-game winner

By HANK KURZ Jr.
Associated Press Writer

Maybe Jimmy Key didn't have a career year last season after all. Maybe he was just warming up for this season.

The American League's best pitcher won his 11th straight decision and became baseball's first 12-game winner Monday night, stopping Boston on six hits over eight innings as New York beat the Red Sox 5-1.

"I've never had a streak like this where everything falls for me," said Key (12-1), whose only loss came April 9 in his second start. "Whether I pitch good or bad, I find a way to win and the team finds a way to win for me."

The Yankees improved to 13-4 in Key's starts and he lowered his ERA to a tidy 3.01. In 1 1/2 seasons with the Yankees, Key is 30-7 with a 3.00 ERA.

His 11-game winning streak is the longest in a single season by a Yankees pitcher since Ron Guidry won 12 straight in 1985. Bob Wickman, who pitched a perfect ninth, won 11 straight games spanning the 1992 and 1993 seasons.

Among Key's admirers Monday night was Aaron Sele, one of the brightest young pitchers in the league and Key's opponent on the mound.

"Key makes the hitter hit his pitch, and a young guy like me learns a lot watching him," said Sele (6-4), who has lost twice to Key this season.

Elsewhere, it was Milwaukee 5, Toronto 1; Detroit 11, Seattle 1; Kansas City 2, Minnesota 1; Oakland 10, California 2; and Baltimore 7, Cleveland 6.

Mike Gallego drove in two runs with a sacrifice fly and a single, Luis Polonia had a run-scoring bunt and Wade Boggs doubled home a run for New York, which won its sixth straight.

New York's last run scored when Red Sox catcher Rich Rowland threw the ball into left field on a double steal by Gerald Williams and Randy Velarde.

Scott Cooper hit his 13th homer in the seventh for Boston's only run, and even that was an event. It was the first homer by a left-handed hitter against Key since Sept. 18 of last season, when Boston's Mo Vaughn did it at Yankee Stadium.

The Red Sox only real threat came in the sixth, and Key stuffed that, too.

Vaughn and Andre Dawson hit consecutive singles with one out and the next batter, lefty-hitting Mike Greenwell, hit a shot up the middle.

Key gloved it on one hop, turned and threw to second for the start of an inning-ending double play. He walked off pumping his fists in triumph.

"I usually don't show a lot of emotion, but I thought that was the play of the game," he said. "Mike hits me well. I was just happy I made a good pitch and made a good play."

Brewers 5, Blue Jays 1

At Milwaukee, Toronto was no match for Cal Eldred, who sent the Blue Jays to their ninth consecutive loss with his third straight complete game.

Eldred (9-7) allowed six hits, giving opponents only 12 hits in his last three starts, to win for the fifth time this month. He also extended the Blue Jays' losing streak, making it the longest for the two-time defending World Series champions' since they dropped 12 in a row in 1981.

Al Leiter (3-5) gave up three runs on seven hits and walked four in four innings in his first start since coming off the 15-day disabled list.

Milwaukee stranded 14 runners, but Jody Reed had a two-run single, B.J. Surhoff had a sacrifice fly and RBI single and Dave Nilsson had an RBI single.

Tigers 11, Mariners 1
At Seattle, Mickey Tettleton hit a grand slam and drove in five runs and Tim Belcher stymied Seattle on two hits for eight innings as Detroit ended its losing streak at four and extended the Mariners' skid to five games.

Tettleton's fifth career slam, his 14th homer, came during a seven-run fourth. Tony Phillips hit his 10th homer in the first for Detroit.

Belcher (6-8) who took a perfect game into the sixth, gave up just one unearned run. Dave Fleming (5-10) allowed eight runs in 3 1/3 innings.

Royals 2, Twins 1
At Minneapolis, Tom Gordon and three relievers made two unearned runs stand up as Kansas City bested Kevin Tapani and Minnesota.

Gordon (8-4) allowed five hits, including Scott Lewis' 10th homer, in 7 1/3 innings and struck out eight to win for the fifth time in six decisions.

Jeff Montgomery got his 12th save.

Tapani (8-5) allowed five hits and fanned eight, but a three-base miscue by center fielder Alex Cole and Tapani's own two-base throwing error set up both runs in the sixth. Vince Coleman drove in the winner with his ninth triple.

Athletics 10, Angels 2
At Oakland, Rickey Henderson had three hits, including a homer, and reached base in all five plate appearances as Oakland routed California.

Henderson, Stan Javier, Ruben Sierra and Geronimo Berroa drove in two runs apiece for the A's, who won their fifth straight and 11th in 13 games.

Henderson broke a 2-for-15 slump with a single leading off the first and scored the A's first run; hit an RBI double in a four-run second; and hit his fourth home run, a solo shot, in the third.

Todd Van Poppel (4-6) allowed two runs in seven innings, while Angels starter Brian Anderson (5-3) gave up five runs on eight hits in 1 2/3 innings.

Orioles 7, Indians 6

At Cleveland, Jeff Tackett led off the eighth inning with his first home run in two years and Baltimore handed Cleveland its third home loss in a row.

Tackett, a career .215 hitter, hit Charles Nagy's first pitch for his first homer since June 30, 1992. Harold Baines also homered, his 12th, for Baltimore.

Tom Bolton (1-1) pitched 2 2/3 innings in relief of Ben McDonald, who blew a 6-1 lead, and Lee Smith fanned three for his major league-leading 26th save.

Nagy (6-4) allowed seven runs and 11 hits in eight innings.

IRI Slips by McCarty Hull in Minor Bambino tourney

IRI slipped by McCarty Hull, 12-11, in the 9-10 Minor Bambino Tournament.

The winning pitcher was Adam Jones, who didn't allow a hit in three innings while striking out eight and walking two.

Dusty Harper had two triples to lead McCarty

Hull while Zack Ferris had a double. Harper was the losing pitcher, giving up three hits in three innings while striking out eight and walking three.

IRI led 4-2 at the end of three innings and 8-6 at the end of five innings. McCarty Hull then scored five runs to pull into the lead, but IRI came back to score four runs to pull in front for good.

Michael Cochran also pitched for IRI and Zack Ferris and Matthew Crow saw action on the mound for McCarty Hull.

Plunging U.S. dollar unlikely to be felt by most consumers

By JEFFREY HOFFMAN
AP Business Writer

For all the shuddering on Wall Street, the plunging dollar isn't likely to cause much pain on Main Street.

At the beginning of the year, one dollar was worth about 113 Japanese yen. By Monday the dollar's worth had fallen roughly 12 percent to a postwar low of 99.93 yen before rallying slightly to close at 100.35 yen on the Tokyo foreign exchange market today. The dollar is also down 10 percent from its high this year vs. the German mark, Europe's strongest currency.

In theory, the dollar's decline weakens U.S. purchasing power because it takes more dollars to buy the same amount of imported goods. It also can mean higher prices and inflation.

One old economic formula says that a 10 percent decline in the dollar's value translates into a 1 percent rise in consumer prices over 1 to 1 1/2 years.

But in reality, people planning to buy a Toshiba television set or a Honda automobile next year have little to worry about, according to economists and corporate executives.

That's because the United States imports a relatively small portion of what it consumes: Merchandise imports accounted for less than 10 percent of the $6 trillion U.S. economy last year.

The United States also imports less from Japan and Germany than it does from Canada and lower-wage nations like Mexico and China. Currencies from those countries have weakened against the dollar, making their exports cheaper here.

"The concerns are overblown," said Stephen S. Roach, senior economist at Morgan, Stanley & Co., the New York investment bank. "U.S. inflation isn't going to be driven by what the dollar does against the yen and the mark."

Roach noted that the dollar's value fell much more sharply in the late 1980s without having a major impact on consumer prices.

Wall Street has been alarmed because a cheaper dollar discourages foreigners from investing in U.S. stocks and bonds. That could ultimately lead to higher American interest rates, which would make the cost of borrowing more expensive for Americans and inevitably slow the U.S. economy.

Last year, purchases from Japan and Germany totaled $135.8 billion, while imports from Canada, Mexico and China totaled $182.6 billion.

America's imports from Germany are primarily industrial materials, such as chemicals, and capital goods, such as machine tools. Price increases on those items won't directly affect consumers.

Japanese companies are moving away from exporting mass-market consumer goods like TVs and fax machines, because they can no longer produce them profitably in Japan. Production of such items has been moved to lower-wage Asian countries or to the United States.

"We manufacture color TVs here and we import video cassette recorders from Singapore, these are our main consumer items," said Kenjiro Ishihara, a vice president at Toshiba America Inc. The dollar's decline won't have much impact on Toshiba's profits or prices, he said.

The weak dollar isn't likely to affect auto prices much either. Last year, Japanese automakers built about half of the 3.3 million vehicles they sold in the United States at their American plants, paying for the labor and a large share of the parts for those cars and trucks in dollars.

Furthermore, with Detroit now making cars that can compete with the Japanese on quality, Toyota, Nissan and Honda can't boost sticker prices too much without losing hard-won market share to their American rivals.

Reports: Charles cheated on Di

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles says he cheated on Princess Diana but only when their marriage was irretrievably broken, news reports said today.

The 45-year-old prince reportedly admits his infidelity in a television documentary to be broadcast Wednesday by the private Central Television channel.

Buckingham Palace said the reports were "speculative."

"We suggest people watch the documentary and see what he says in context. We aren't in the business of reacting to something before it has run," said a palace spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Independent Television News said the documentary interviewer asks the heir to the British throne if he has been faithful to his wife. ITN said Charles' answer is "Yes," and then he pauses and adds "until it became clear that my marriage had irretrievably broken down."

A spokesman for Central Television refused to comment on the documentary's content.

Charles and Diana, who turns 33 on Friday, separated in December 1992. The couple have two sons, Prince William, 12, and Prince Harry, 9.

News reports say the prince does not divulge in the 150-minute documentary, "Charles: the Private Man, the Public Role," with whom he was unfaithful. But British tabloids say it was an old girlfriend, Camilla Parker Bowles.

The transcript of a taped conversation allegedly between the two — in which Charles reportedly pledges his love to Mrs. Parker Bowles via portable telephone — was published in January 1993.

Mrs. Parker Bowles was quoted by three papers today as saying: "I don't know anything about this film. I don't know if I will even watch it."

Weather forecasts now include ultraviolet rating

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an effort to help Americans avoid skin cancer, the government today added a solar-hazard rating to the daily weather report.

Skin cancer is the nation's most common form of cancer and researchers say a prime factor is exposure to the sun's ultraviolet rays.

"The Weather Service will make UV forecasts approximately 30 hours in advance using satellites, ground-based weather observations and computer models," said Weather Service Director Elbert W. Friday.

The forecasts will begin immediately, he said.

"With the UV Index Forecast, the public should be better informed to take simple actions to reduce overexposure," commented Environmental Protection Agency Assistant Administrator Mary Nichols.

Ultraviolet radiation has also been cited as a cause of eye damage leading to cataracts, officials noted.

The National Weather Service will issue ultraviolet ratings on a 1-to-10 scale in most areas, rising to 1-to-15 in communities with more sun exposure. The higher the rating, the more dangerous it is to go out in the sunshine.

The daily forecast will be for approximately 12:30 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. in each time zone.

John W. Passacantando, executive director of the interest group Ozone Action, termed the new index "an important step to bring critical information to the public."

Friends of the Earth also hailed the new index, and urged that the public be advised that ultraviolet radiation can pose dangers to the eyes and immune system as well as the skin.

The ratings will be calculated by scientists at the National Meteorological Center in Camp Springs, Md., and distributed for regional and local use on the government's national weather wire.

Initial ultraviolet ratings will be focused on 58 cities, at least one in each state, but eventually could be further localized. Current daily reports showing temperature high and low and sky condition will add the ultraviolet rating.

Researchers have been working for years on methods of measuring the amount of ultraviolet radiation reaching the ground, and converting that into some sort of useful number.

With the new system in place, the Environmental Protection Agency plans an education program to warn about the dangers of ultraviolet exposure.

The ratings are somewhat subjective as far as any individual is concerned because different skin colors and types react differently to ultraviolet radiation.

But, weather forecasters say, as the rating gets higher it is a clear warning to limit exposure to the sun.

It's the sun's ultraviolet rays that give outdoor types that bronze skin color once thought to be a healthy look. But the urge to tan has faded in recent years, swamped by an ocean of sunblock as the danger of skin cancer loomed larger.

The pallid complexion that was trendy a century ago is edging back into fashion for reasons of health rather than status. In earlier times being pale was a sign of position, proof that you didn't have to earn a living outdoors with your hands.

Ozone, a form of oxygen, forms a thin layer in the Earth's upper atmosphere and blocks the most dangerous ultraviolet rays from reaching humans. But that layer sometimes thins, at least in some areas, and physicians are concerned about the potential for more cancer.

The problem isn't the so-called ozone hole, which occurs only over Antarctica, Friday pointed out. But in other areas ozone in the stratosphere thins seasonally and varies from day to day, and that affects ultraviolet rays reaching Earth.

The federal Climate Analysis Center worked out a method to use satellite measurements of the ozone to estimate how much radiation gets through on a particular day. To this information will be added such variables as dust and other haze, the time of day and season.

Thick heavy clouds block most of the ultraviolet rays, Friday said, but people can be fooled by high thin clouds. Thin cirrus clouds may make it seem less sunny while letting through dangerous amounts of ultraviolet light.

Indeed, it's on slightly overcast days that people often get the worst sunburns, mistakenly thinking it's safe to stay outdoors.

Ultraviolet forecast systems are either operating or planned in Australia, Canada, New Zealand and the Netherlands.
