Reagan still supports his peace initiative

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan called on Palestinian leaders today to make "a bold and courageous move" to end the violence between Arabs and Israelis in the Middle East by supporting his faltering peace initiative.

"We will spare no effort to put an end to the killing to bring this dreadful chapter in Middle East history to a conclusion acceptable to all sides," Reagan said in an arrival ceremony for Qaboos Bin Said, the sultan of Oman.

"The choices facing the Palestinian leaders are clear — either the status quo and the continued frustration of their peoples' aspirations or a bold and courageous move to break the deadlock," Reagan said.

Administration officals insisted earlier that Reagan's Sept. 1 initiative is still alive, even though the Palestine Liberation Organization has turned it down by refusing to endorse a plan for Jordan to represent Palestinian interests in peace talks with Israel.

Officials said the leaders of Jordan and Saudi Arabia have encouraged Reagan to go on, despite the setback.

Reagan said during the arrival ceremony on the White House South Lawn that he would discuss his initiative with the sultan, who is among the moderate Arab leaders tentatively backing the U.S. proposal. It was the sultan's first visit to the United States since 1975.

Asked by reporters if his plan, first unveiled last Sept. 1, was dead because of the PLO action, Reagan said, "No, it isn't."

He said he remains "morally committed" to the search for peace and will oppose radical elements who are seeking to "prevent an agreement which would permit King Hussein of Jordan to join the peace process."

"We will not permit the forces of violence and terror to exercise a veto over the peace process," Reagan said.

The president seemed not to accept the PLO stand as the last word from Palestinian and Arab leaders on the fate of his plan.

"The plan I outlined on Sept. 1 last year is still on the table," he said. "While there may be bumps along the way, we will not be deterred from our long-term objective which is a broad-based settlement firmly grounded on U.N. Security Council resolutions 242 and 338 and consistent with the Camp David framework."

Those resolutions reeognize the right of all nations in the area to live in peace behind secure borders.

Said encouraged Reagan to continue his efforts, saying success of his initiative would "greatly contribute to peace and security" in the Middle East.

It is imperative, Said said, that efforts to find peace go forward because the turmoil in the region poses "a continuing threat to world peace" and creates opportunities for outside forces to exploit the tensions.

On Monday, State Department spokesman John Hughes said both Hussein and Saudi Arabia's King Fahd told Reagan in telephone conversations they think his plan still is worth pursuing.

"We are determined to go forward with the Sept. 1 initiative," Hughes said. "King Hussein and King Fahd share our resolve."

"The president ... as a result of those conversations, is confident that the process is going forward," said Hughes."He is confident they have not given up."

In addition, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said today that Reagan had called Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak on Monday night to discuss the Middle East situation.

Speakes would not discuss the content of the president's talk with Mubarak.

Hughes went further than the administration has ever before gone publicly about the degree of Saudi support for the Reagan plan. A Saudi peace plan, considered a rival to the U.S. plan, was approved by Arab nations at their summit in Fez, Morocco last year.

The chief difference between the Reagan and the Saudi plan approved at Fez is that the Fez plan calls for creation of a separate Palestinian state on the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, while Reagan's plan provides for Palestinian self-government in association with Jordan.

Israel has rejected both plans.

Fiddling around

Orchestra breaches wall with music

PEKING (AP) — The Fort Worth Chamber Orchestra didn't get any applause for its performance on the Great Wall of China, but after five encores the night before, the musicians were just fiddling around, anyway.

The orchestra, which had taken the day off from concerts and teaching, visited the Great Wall Monday on the third day of a tour almost canceled when China suspended cultural relations with the United States.

"The Great Wall is one of those magnificent places where you wish to make an impression," said Ann Koonsman, the orchestra's executive director.

The 40-member orchestra doodled around a bit with their instruments and then trumpet player Steve Weger started playing the "Ode to Joy" from Beethoven's Ninth. The rest of the orchestra picked it up.

The orchestra arrived last Friday, one day after China angrily canceled a package of cultural exchanges in retaliation for the U.S. granting political asylum to Chinese tennis star Hu Na.

The Fort Worth orchestra's tour was not part of that package, but two planned joint concerts with Chinese orchestras were banned because of the climate. The orchestra now will play alone on those two occasions.

Concertmaster Robert Davidovici also stood on a platform Monday and played excerpts of gypsy music.

"The impromptu concert attracted a crowd that was so nice and courteous," Mrs. Koonsman said.

"They made a circle and gave us some space, all smiling and nodding."

There was no applause, but the orchestra members still were talking about the five encores they played the previous night in their first concert in Peking.

"That was unprecedented for us," Mrs. Koonsman said.

Orchestra members also gave Chinese children at the wall balloons saying "Music Makes Friends."

After one more concert in Peking tonight, the orchestra leaves for Shanghai, Hangzhou and Canton.

The orchestra also attended a performance Monday of the Chinese dance drama silk road episodes.

"They had some instruments in the pit that we are eager to check out," Mrs. Koonsman said. "We don't know what they were. They produced very touching, soulful sounds."

Arms nomination deplored, defended as vote nears

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate began debate on Kenneth L. Adelman's nomination as arms control director today with a high-ranking Republican saying Adelman's confirmation is "too close to call."

"This one is not one that is in the bag," said a GOP source, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

"It's too close to call," said Assistant Republican Leader Ted Stevens of Alaska. Stevens added that he believed Adelman would be confirmed, but not by more than one or two votes.

Stevens said a small number of undecided senators, fewer than 10, hold the balance.

The unnamed GOP source said the first test was expected to come Wednesday on a motion by Adelman's opponents to return the nomination to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

He predicted that the motion would be defeated. If it is, the final vote will be taken Thursday.

Sen. Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland, a Republican opponent of Adelman, confirmed that such a motion was being considered.

"There has been some talk about it, as the surest poll you've got, among other things," Mathias said.

Mathias added, "I have always given the president the edge on this. Some members, rightly or wrongly, like to give the president his choice on nominations."

Some wavering Republicans were falling in line behind the nomination, although others remained undecided.

"I am normally inclined to support any president on his nominee unless I find him substantially deficient," said Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., who had indicated earlier he was undecided.

Adelman, 36, deputy U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, will become director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency if confirmed.

Meanwhile, William H. Kincade, executive director of the Arms Control Association, told the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on international security Monday that the arms control agency has been treated with "malign neglect" by the Reagan administration.

Kincade said the agency's budget for research has been pared from $4 million in the Carter administration to $1.8 million and its staff had been reduced about 25 percent in recent years.

Meanwhile, Sen. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., a leading opponent of the nomination, told Senate colleagues in a letter that Adelman lacks "significant arms control experience" and should be replaced with a "credible nominee."

Latest MX basing plan facing bitter battle in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The latest plan for basing the MX missile, similar to a proposal rejected by Congress two years ago, is awaiting President Reagan's endorsement before it faces a bitter congressional fight.

A commission appointed by Reagan proposed Monday that 100 MX weapons should be built and put in Minuteman silos in Wyoming and Nebraska and that a new, smaller land-based nuclear missile should be developed in the next decade.

"Few, if any, will consider our recommendations an optimal solution," said retired Lt. Gen. Brent Scowcroft, the former national security adviser who headed the 11-member panel. "If such were available, this commission probably would not have been convened."

"What we have, we feel, has a reasonable, has the best chance to be successful," he told a news conference.

But most of the immediate Capitol Hill reaction came from MX opponents and it was predictably negative.

Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo, D-N.Y., chairman of the House defense appropriations subcommittee, predicted defeat. The MX "is a dog that has been around too long," Addabbo said.

Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, said the panel's "recommendation to deploy 100 MX missiles in existing Minuteman silos makes no more sense today than it did when the administration proposed it as a temporary solution 16 months ago. It was rejected then; it should be rejected now.

Sen. J. James Exon, a Nebraska Democrat whose state would receive some of the missiles, called the plan "ridiculous."

"A dangerous, expensive fraud," was the reaction of Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich.

Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, called the recommendations "nothing less than mad."

"If the commission's recommendations are adopted, we might as well also announce that America has adopted a first strike nuclear strategy," Hatfield said.

Panel expected to defy Reagan

Larger allocation for social programs anticipated

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Budget Committee, which cut President Reagan's proposed defense buildup in half, is likely to defy the president again this week and approve more than he proposed for domestic social programs.

In his fiscal 1984 budget proposals, the president urged what he termed a "freeze" on overall domestic spending, including some further cuts in programs like food stamps.

The Republican-dominated committee has already added extra funds above the president's budget to account for inflationary and other increases for agriculture and energy programs.

The budget panel was scheduled to vote today on the rest of the domestic spending portion of the budget, and indications were that similar increases would be permitted. No significant cuts were expected in other categories of federal spending, including welfare programs.

Sen. Lawton Chiles of Florida, the senior Democrat on the committee, said Monday there is big difference between past years when Reagan's budget blueprints were generally accepted by Republicans, and 1984.

"For the first time, we are seeing Republicans think for themselves," Chiles said during a lunch for reporters.

After setting ceilings on domestic spending, the committee will turn to decisions on raising taxes including a Democratic proposal for elimination or changing a 10 percent tax cut this year.

Chiles conceded on Monday that time was running out, making it almost impossible to kill the tax reduction, the third part of a 25 percent cut enacted by Congress on Reagan's urging in 1981.

The actual reduction in withholding from workers' paychecks for the 1984 tax cut takes effect July 1, and Congress is unlikely to permit the withholding rate to change and then rescind it, Chiles said.

Despite the low probability of eliminating the tax cut, Chiles said he would continue to press for new ways to increase federal revenues in 1984 to reduce the deficit, including elimination or capping the tax cut so that middle income Americans would still benefit.

Reagan has said he would veto any legislation which tampers with the tax cut. He has also proposed a small tax increase under $3 billion for next year, all of it to come from taxes on employee-sponsored health care benefits, an idea Chiles said would be opposed by Senate Democrats.

Last month, the Democrat-controlled House approved a budget resolution calling for $30 billion in new federal income in 1984. That much income could only be generated by rescinding the tax cut.

Chiles said the outcome of the final budget resolution is now "a traveling crap game. Not a lot is fixed at this point."

Decisions on federal revenues will depend on what the committee decides on domestic spending, he said.

Last Thursday, the budget committee voted 17 to 4 with only four Republicans dissenting to approve a 5 percent increase in military spending next year, half the 10 percent urged by Reagan.

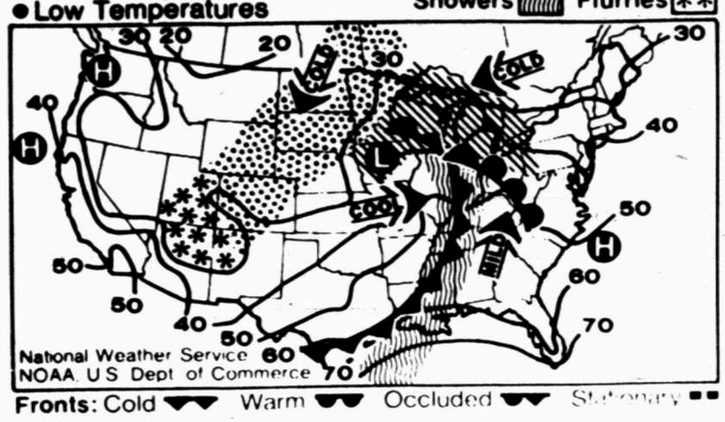
WEATHER SUMMARY

The Forecast For 7 a.m. EST Wednesday, April 13
● Low Temperatures
Rain Snow Showers Flurries



AP Laserphoto Map

Snow flurries and snow are forecast through Wednesday from the Southwest to Minnesota, according to the National Weather Service. Showers are expected from the central Gulf to the Midwest. Rain is predicted for the upper Midwest and Great Lakes.

Warm weather due for few days

Although it comes with wind, Midlanders better appreciate the warm weather the next few days, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

While temperatures are expected to reach into the middle 70s Wednesday, the highs later in the week may get stuck in the 60- to 65-degree range.

Temperatures should drop into the middles 40s tonight.

The West Texas winds will continue to blow from the southwest at 15-20 mph tonight, increasing to 20-30 mph and gusty Wednesday.

Monday's high of 87 missed by eight degrees the record high of 95, set for that date in 1972. The overnight low of 47 was 17 degrees warmer than 1957's record low of 30.

Another storm forms in Rockies

By The Associated Press

As swollen rivers receded in the rain-ravaged South and Northeast, a new storm responsible for at least one death was brewing in the Rockies and Northern Plains today, spreading snow and cold across Colorado and Wyoming.

Disaster relief specialists headed for Louisiana today, where flooding killed at least five people and caused an estimated $625 million in damage during the past week.

Winter storm warnings were posted today in Wyoming, with heavy snow headed for the Rockies and the Black Hills of the Dakotas, said forecaster Hugh Crowther at the National Weather Service's severe storms office in Kansas City.

The new storm claimed one life Monday in Colorado where a man was struck by lightning in Grand Junction, authorities said.

The storm is expected to bring widely scattered showers from Louisiana through Tennessee and the Ohio Valley by Wednesday, Crowther said.

But because the storm is moving much faster than last week's almost stationary system, the consequences for an already drenched Dixie will be "nothing as bad as last week," Crowther said.

Gov. Dave Treen is seeking federal disaster declarations for 16 southeastern Louisiana parishes, which would enable residents to apply for low-cost loans to help them mop up their flooded homes.

But by today, almost all rivers but the Pearl were back within their banks, and the Pearl continued to fall slowly from its record crest of 21.5 feet early Sunday.

An estimated 40,000 people had fled their homes in Louisiana, with 11,500 people evacuated in Mississippi, and several hundred in neighboring Southern states. Damage was estimated at $425 million in Louisiana and $200 million in Mississippi.

In Ste. Genevieve, Mo., 50 families left their homes Monday as the cresting Mississippi River threatened the one road that connects the north and south halves of the river-front town.

Paddling a pirogue through his flooded Slidell, La., neighborhood, is Jerry Thomas. Many expensive homes in the area were damaged Monday as the Pearl River crested at record levels.

"It looks like we'll have water across Main Street for two weeks," said city clerk Richard Rose.

Most Southern residents agreed the worst was over, and some felt the storm's impact had been exaggerated.

"Everybody outside Louisiana thinks New Orleans is under water," said Beverly Gianna of the city's Tourist and Convention Commission, who says the Cresent City has been high and dry since Friday. "I even had calls at home on the weekend from reporters wanting to know if they could get in."

New Orleans got 14 inches of rain in a 24-hour period last Thursday, but when it stopped waters receded, Ms. Gianna said.

The New Orleans suburb of Slidell was dunked under 15 feet of water from the cresting Pearl River and 700 homes were damaged, but sandbag dikes kept many homes dry in the city of 65,000, authorities said.

One Slidell man kept his possessions higher and drier than most in a home built on 9-foot stilts.

"I was flooded out in 1979 and again in 1980," Bobby Berryhill said Monday. "After the second one, I went to a builder and said I want me a house on top of pilings 9 feet tall."

In Maryland, heavy rains submerged about 30 roads in the western part of the state. The Monocacy River remained six feet above flood level today, but officials said the Potomac River, which runs through Washington D.C., was well below flood stage.

The nearly 4 inches of rain that fell Sunday in Connecticut caused only minor damage, authorities said.

Syria, Soviets behind breakdown?

By NICOLAS B. TATRO
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — The setback dealt to President Reagan's Middle East peace plan by the breakdown in Palestinian-Jordanian talks has given a boost to Syria and its Soviet allies.

The Soviet Union, offered no role in the proposed Reagan process, was known to have urged Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat to shun the U.S.-sponsored peace initiative.

In this regard the Soviets got support from Syria, which backs the radical wing of the eight-faction PLO. President Hafez Assad's government opposed the Reagan plan from the outset last September because it makes no specific mention f the Golan Heights seized from Syria by Israel in the 1967 war.

The decision by Jordan's King Hussein's to bow out of further negotiations with the PLO was likely to be the main topic raised by Lebanese Foreign Minister Elie Salem, who flew to Jordan unexpectedly today for talks with the king.

Lebanese officials said their government wanted to assess the impact

An Analysis

Hussein's move may have on Reagan's Middle East policy and specifically on U.S.-sponsored efforts to negotiate Israeli troop withdrawal from Lebanon.

Reagan's plan proposes Palestinian autonomy in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and Gaza Strip in close association with Jordan, but does not call for an independent Palestinian state. Israel and the PLO, which was not assigned a role in the plan, already have rejected it.

Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir said Monday the Reagan administration's hope of winning broad Arab support for Hussein to negotiate with Israel on behalf of the PLO "sounds nice, but it is fantasy, unrealistic and it cannot happen."

Hussein on Sunday said he would not join talks based on Reagan's plan, and an authoritative Jordanian source said the king believed no progress toward peace would be made until either the PLO or the United States softened their stands on a Palestinian homeland.

Syria's state-run media was ecstatic over the probable demise of the U.S. initiative.

"Syria's prediction of the failure of imperialist American and Zionist plans to rule over the Arab nation and strike at the central Arab cause has now started to take its course," the state radio said.

The Soviet Union, smarting from the defeat of its allies in the Lebanon war started by the Israeli invasion last June, is said by diplomats to have been waiting in the wings for a breakdown in the U.S. initiative. The diplomats predict the Soviets may now take a more active role in the Middle East, where American influence has been stronger.

"The Soviets are eagerly waiting for the failure of the American initiative to turn the area into a courtyard for their political and ideological activities," said a leading Lebanese columnist, Emile Khoury, in the independent Beirut daily newspaper An-Nahar.

Since Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev's death last November, Moscow has hosted Hussein, Assad and Arafat in Moscow and sent a half-dozen delegations to the Middle East in an effort to lay the groundwork for a more active policy.

Last month, the Soviets also signed a long-term friendship treaty with Libya's radical leader, Col. Moammar Khadafy.

Arafat's top aides have expressed concern that Hussein would bow out of active participation in Middle East peace efforts, leaving them without a counterbalance to Syria and the radicals.

"The fear is that King Hussein will walk out on his role in the political efforts in the area under the pretext that the PLO is not cooperating with him. We as Palestinians will remain determined to keep the bridges between us and Jordan open," Arafat's top political adviser Hani el-Hassan was quoted as saying in an interview with the Paris-based weekly magazine al-Mostaqbal.

The long-term threat to Arafat now is a loss of independent action. The PLO has no effective base except Syria after its defeat by Israel in Lebanon and the Assad government has made it clear that Syria must have a say if any peace plan is to succeed.

Families leaving embassy

MOSCOW (AP) — The six remaining Pentecostalists in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow will leave the compound late today after a five-year stay, a member of the group said.

The six believe they will receive exit visas, ending a two-decade-long battle to get out of the Soviet Union, group member Lilia Vashchenko, 25, told a reporter.

They will be returning to their Siberian hometown to file the applications, she said.

Since last Wednesday, when another of their group, Lydia Vashchenko, was allowed to leave the country, it had been expected that the remaining six might also be given permission.

The Pentecostalists — five Vashchenkos and two members of another family — dashed past Soviet guards and into the embassy compound in June 1978, in a bid to leave what one called an "atheistic system in which we cannot live."

Rain is acid, but relations aren't

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The Canadian minister of the environment says the acid rain issue hasn't affected the way Canadians view Americans — yet.

"Canadians are very much aware of this problem, the acid rain problem," John Roberts said at a news conference Monday. "I believe that they think...that most of them believe the United States is not actively responding to this problem because people in the United States aren't aware of it.

"I think if Canadians ever had the view that Americans do know about the problem...and didn't give a damn or weren't concerned about responding, then I think the reaction in Canada would be very strong," he said.

Roberts stopped in Ohio to meet with officials, including Gov. Richard Celeste. He said U.S. action on the problem of acid rain has been "agonizingly slow."

"I would like to hear Governor Celeste say: 'I understand the seriousness of the problem, the urgency of the problem and that we will do everything feasible to cut back emissions,'" Roberts said.

Paul Costello, the governor's press secretary, said Roberts met with the governor but Costello didn't know what was discussed.

Some scientists blame sulfur dioxide emissions from coal-burning power plants for acid rain, which has threatened the aquatic life in streams and rivers of eastern Canada and the northeastern United States. Many of the plants are in the Midwest. Some are in Canada.

Roberts said that if technology could reduce emissions, there wouldn't have to be any "impact" on jobs.

"We're concerned about jobs in Canada as well," he said.

During the news conference, Roberts cited a 1980 agreement between Canada and the United States to solve the problem of acid rain. But he said talks have stalled since the United States rejected a Canadian proposal for joint emissions-reduction programs last June.

"Progress since that time toward an agreement that was envisaged then has been agonizingly slow," Roberts said.

Harrelsons, Chagras needn't pay costs

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Four people convicted in connection with the 1979 assassination of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. do not have to pay their court costs, a federal judge has ruled.

Assistant U.S. Attorneys Ray and LeRoy Jahn has asked U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions to force the defendants to pay the witness' costs.

Sessions ruled Monday that doing so would penalize Jimmy and Elizabeth Chagra and Charles and Jo Ann Starr Harrelson for exercising their rights to a jury trial.

He also said the defendants had no money and that dividing the costs among them would be difficult.

The Jahns had sought witness fees, and witness transportation and hotel costs. The Harrelsons and Mrs. Chagra were tried in San Antonio; Chagra was tried in Jacksonville, Fla., on a change of venue.

Defense attorneys contended the prosecutors' motion was motivated by revenge, but Sessions disagreed.

Wood was killed May 29, 1979, in the parking lot of his San Antonio townhouse complex.

Harrelson, 44, was convicted last year of murder, murder conspiracy and obstruction of justice, while his wife was convicted of obstructing justice and five counts of perjury.

Chagra was acquitted of charges he paid Harrelson $250,000 to shoot the judge, but was convicted of obstructing justice and conspiracy to import marijuana.

Mrs. Chagra was convicted of conspiracy to murder and to obstruct justice.

Chicago's voters today making historical mayoral choice

CHICAGO (AP) — After a bitterly fought campaign shadowed by racial tensions, voters today had to choose between electing the first black mayor in the city's history or the first Republican mayor in a half-century.

Democratic nominee Harold Washington and Republican candidate Bernard Epton appeared to be burying the hatchet in the waning hours of the campaign Monday evening, although both claimed they would win today's election.

Polls were to open at 6 a.m. and close at 7 p.m. for the city's 1.6 million voters.

Political analysts predicted 1.3 million voters might turn out if the weather was good. The forecast, however, was for cloudy skies with a chance of rain in the afternoon.

Officials said Monday that absentee balloting was running at twice the pace of the last mayoral election in 1979.

In recent days, both candidates have zeroed in on the liberal lakefront area, flooding it with campaign brochures, mass mailings and radio ads.

"These are the white voters most likely to be influenced by issues rather than race," political analyst Don Rose said.

"Well, I wish you well, Bernie," Washington said in a split-screen discussion Monday with Epton on WLS-TV. "You know I will do anything I can as mayor to make things easy for you."

"I certainly wish him well," said Epton at another location. "I hope he comes in second."

Both candidates acknowledged that the campaign has been marked by bitterness.

"Harold has made some remarks that perhaps he shouldn't have," said Epton. "He may feel the same about me."

During the campaign, Epton called attention to evidence of Washington's late payment of bills and the Democrat's no-contest plea for failing to file tax returns.

"One has a tendency to slough over his own faults and exacerbate and dramatize the opponent's," said Washington, who ran a television commercial portraying Epton as a puppet of President Reagan.

The candidates agreed to meet at a prayer breakfast Wednesday. Washington also invited Mayor Jane Byrne and State's Attorney Richard Daley, whom he defeated in the Feb. 22 Democratic primary.

As volunteer poll-watchers and police geared up to oversee balloting, Washington focused on still-undecided lakefront liberals and renewed his pledge to dump the city's rickety patronage system.

Epton, meanwhile, relied on a few public appearances to thank volunteers and a last-minute radio appeal. The millionaire lawyer huddled with aides for much of the day.

Epton said later he hoped "voters would go beyond the race issue and they'll vote based upon our qualifications." After the election, he said, "regardless of who wins, I think that should be put to rest completely."

Summing up his campaign, Washington said if he had to do it over again, "I wouldn't be such a gentleman."

Autopsy ordered on TCU student

FORT WORTH (AP) — An autopsy was ordered in the death of a Texas Christian University student who apparently choked in his dormitory room, police said.

However, a spokesman for the Tarrant County medical examiner said the death of David B. Tutinskas did not appear to be a homicide.

Tutinskas, 20, of Amsterdam, N.Y., was a residential advisor at the Pete Wright Dormitory, school officials said.

His nude body was found Monday afternoon by another student on the floor of his room in the Milton Daniel Hall, said Fort Worth Police Det. Larry Steffler. A sheet was wrapped around the top half of the body, Steffler said.

An autopsy will be conducted, police said, although an initial investigation indicated that Tutinskas, a junior business major, choked to death Friday.

15-year-old boy held in stabbing

HOUSTON (AP) — Authorities were holding a 15-year-old boy today following the stabbing death of a junior high school student during a fight in a Houston park.

The victim, Stanley Conde, 14, of Houston, was stabbed once in the chest at 3:25 p.m. Monday and managed to run from the park before collapsing in front of a nearby home, said homicide Detective R.L. Ferguson.

The assailant fled the scene, but turned himself over to homicide investigators about 10 p.m. Monday, police said.

Ferguson said police did not know what the boys were fighting about it. He said Conde was not armed.

Separated Siamese twins go home

EL PASO (AP) — Three-week-old Siamese twin girls who were joined from breastbone to navel before doctors surgically separated them have been released from a hosptial here, officials say.

Brenda and Miriam Hernandez were born March 20 and separated 11 days later at Providence Memorial Hospital.

The twins are the daughters of Raul and Maria Hernandez of Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, across the border from here. Ms. Flood said the girls were staying with their mother's family in El Paso.

The infants shared no vital organs and had separate hearts. Before the surgery, Dr. Richard Heath predicted they had less than a 50 percent chance of surviving the separation.

Boy arrested in deaths shows little emotion

CONROE (AP) — A 14-year-old boy accused of killing his father and uncle was arrested after his getaway car was towed from a grocery store where he had stopped to play video games, a juvenile investigator says.

The youth has shown very little emotion since admitting to authorities he shot his uncle, then hit him with an ax, and shot his father to death about 10 minutes later last Thursday, said Ken Maaz, assistant director of the Montgomery County juvenile department.

"It's as if his daily life did not skip a beat," Maaz told The Houston Post Monday. He said since the boy was arrested, he has been "playing cards with the other juveniles. He was smiling."

Maaz also said the boy had made no attempt to talk about killing his uncle, Denton Cantrell, 35, or his father, Riley Cantrell, 34. Both men were carpenters.

George Slaughter, a detective in the sheriff department's juvenile division, said he is baffled by the boy's cool behavior.

After the killings, Slaughter said, the boy drove to a grocery store in the nearby town of Willis.

"He put the groceries in the car and then went back to the store to play video games," Slaughter said. "He didn't notice that he had parked the car partly in the road. That was our break."

City police towed the car, he said.

The boy walked back to his home to get another car, drove to Huntsville, saw the movie "Timerider," then ran out of gas, Slaughter said. He said Walker County deputies arrested the youth, thinking he was a runaway.

Slaughter said the boy told him he had not been physically abused. He said he expected the youth to be in shock, but said he was not.

"I've been in Vietnam, spent a year on the DMZ (demilitarized zone) in combat, and I've seen this before, but only in real bad situations in combat," Slaughter said. "This is the first time I've seen a kid this way."

Sheriff Joe Corley said the youth had only recently moved away from his mother's home in Riverside, Calif. Corley said the boy still wanted to live with his mother.

Corley said the killings occurred after the uncle issued a strong warning that the boy was to help more with the chores. The Cantrells were living in two shacks in a rural area near Willis while the two men built their homes.

Women critical after fire

HOUSTON (AP) — Two residents of a retirement home were hospitalized in critical condition today following a two-alarm fire that swept through two apartments.

An emergency room spokesman at Roseland General Hospital said the two women were suffering from smoke inhalation. Two others were treated for smoke inhalation but were released, he said.

"None of them are burned," the spokesman said. He said he could not release names of the victims, who were injured in a 7 p.m. fire Monday at the Treemont Retirement Apartments.

Officials said residents were quickly evacuated from one of the home's six three-story buildings in the 310-apartment complex.

A fifth resident who suffered burns was in good condition at Memorial City General Hospital, officials said.

Arson investigators were examining possible causes of the blaze, which fire department spokesman Davis Graham said may have started in a sofa in a second-story apartment.

Jean Rogers, director of the complex, said four units were gutted.

Hectarine Piercey, who was tutoring a student in French at her apartment when fire broke out two doors away, said she heard an alarm, opened the door and "all I could see was thick black smoke."

She said she walked along the hall knocking on doors and "saying a little prayer" as she and her student fled the building.

Man demands $500

FORT WORTH (AP) — A man demanding $500 surrendered to police after enclosing himself in a phone booth for more than two hours and threatening to kill himself, authorities said.

The man, identified as a 25-year-old former police officer in Arkansas who now works as a long-haul trucker, called police at 9:07 p.m. Monday and said he would kill both himself and another individual if he wasn't paid $500 in back wages, said Fort Worth Police Sgt. D.C. Malone.

About two hours later, the man armed with a small handgun gave up, Malone said.

Fifteen officers established a command post at a nearby McDonald's restaurant during the seige.

The man claimed his employer, whom he did not identify, owed him $500 when he went bankrupt, Malone said.

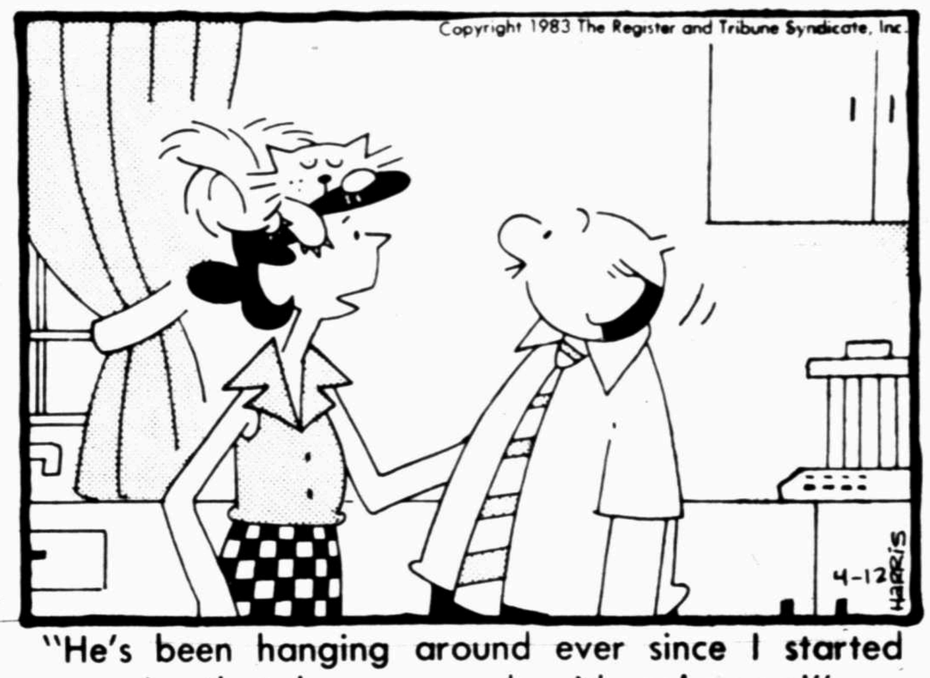
THE BETTER HALF



"He's been hanging around ever since I started using that shampoo made with real cream!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Wednesday, April 13, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: President Thomas Jefferson, playwright Samuel Beckett and merchant F. W. Woolworth were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: actor-singer Howard Keel, Nancy Kissinger, auto racing's Dan Gurney and actor-announcer Lyle Waggoner. New opportunities abound in the months ahead. Keep your eyes open and remain level-headed. Mate is a wonderful source of support. Sidestep delicate issues to preserve family harmony. You need to think twice before launching into an angry tirade. Job changes bring both more money and greater pressures. You might be wiser to stay put. A child gives you new inspiration. Follow your intuition regarding domestic arrangements.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Postpone a home improvement project until the weekend. You have more than you can handle now with just your work. Try an approach that has been successful in the past.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Romance may be getting in the way of your job. Put things in proper perspective. A financial situation quickly turns around. Call a family member who is away from home.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Good news comes in small packages. Cut back on luxury purchases. A major financial decision is required. Make the hard choice. Show more initiative at place of employment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Parents impart important information. Store it away for a time when it will be valuable. Postpone signing contracts. Find a gift for someone who has worked overtime without pay.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A "go-getter" attitude is commendable so long as you do not break the rules. Be honest about your goals. Even little white lies could land you in hot water.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): New work methods save you time and money. Take a lunch break to recharge your batteries. A letter or message brings good news concerning your financial future. Invest wisely.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): It is necessary to spend money to make money now. New equipment helps the company remain competitive. Go out with good friends this evening. You find romance when you least expect it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Business continues to jog along with no major hitches. Concentrate on what you are doing. Seek bank manager's advice if concerned about the returns you are getting on your money.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Financial problems can be alleviated. Your frame of mind is affected by the company you keep. Find more upbeat friends. Spend money on items that will help your school work or business.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Some of the things you have been spending lots of time on are not as important as you were led to believe. Socializing with good friends will restore your sense of humor.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Venture into new fields. You could make more money and find greater satisfaction by shifting gears. Be patient with romantic partner. Competitions are both lucky and profitable now.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You discover romance is interfering with your work. Think about starting your own business. Get the financial pledges that you need in writing before giving up your current position.

Carson gets more rivalry

NEW YORK (AP) — Two television titans, no longer in the prime time of their careers, will compete for the same late-night audience this September.

Johnny Carson, whose "Tonight" show is leading but slipping, will be up against a program developed by Fred Silverman, the former Wunderkind of network programming at CBS and ABC before he fell on his face as president of NBC.

Silverman will not be telling jokes against Carson's monologue, but Alan Thicke, a Canadian talk-show host, will. His syndicated "Thicke of the Night" is being developed by Silverman's InterMedia Entertainment production company.

"When I was at NBC, I knew we couldn't come up with anything better than Carson," Silverman said. "Now that I'm on the other side of the fence, I'm all too aware of the vulnerability in that time period."

Once thoroughly dominant at the witching hour, the 57-year-old Carson has lost a chunk of his late-night audience to ABC's "Nightline," CBS' rerun movies, and programming from independent stations and cable. In addition, NBC's resurgence in prime time in the big cities with young, upscale viewers is not totally compatible with Carson's strong support in Middle America.

Thicke, 35, who says his mixed bag of comedy is "Monty Python meets Art Linkletter's House Party," will appeal to the younger audiences who tend to prowl late-night television.

According to a spokesman for Silverman, "Thicke of the Night," a 90-minute, five-nights-a-week show, has received programming commitments in 80 markets, and it will go head-to-head against "Tonight" in much of the country.

So far, none of the NBC stations has canceled "Tonight," leaving both programs on the schedule. The Casper, Wyo., affiliate asked if it could delay "Tonight" by 30 minutes, but NBC said no. NBC's Baltimore station, citing Carson's slipping appeal, said it might drop "Tonight," but no decision would be made until after the May ratings are interpreted.

Probably the most bizarre development is that two independent stations owned by Carson — KNAT in Albuquerque and KUVU in Las Vegas — will carry "Thicke of the Night" against "Tonight."

It's strictly a business decision since "Thicke" doesn't cost the stations anything. Under the barter system, the producers and stations each take half the commercial time. Nevertheless, it's an awkward situation.

In 1960, a team of New York experts met a team of Los Angeles all-stars in the first of what was to become a series of intercity matches. Los Angeles eked out a narrow win, but the New Yorkers could point to several hands where they beat themselves. This was one of them.

At both tables West opened one diamond, and both Norths chose to take advantage of the vulnerability to make a light one heart overcall. The Los Angeles squad reached three no trump in quick time. New York languished in four clubs on the auction shown.

Bridge World Magazine submitted the hand to a panel of experts to adjudicate blame for the disaster. Their decision will appear in the magazine's "You Be the Judge" feature in April. Readers of this column are invited to take part in a competition, to see if they agree with the judges' verdict.

To enter, you must decide which player, in the opinion of the experts, is most to blame for the catastrophe. Also, which of the bids the panel will select as the worst. Your entry might read: East (most to blame), 2 diamonds (worst bid); or West, 3 hearts. Note that the player who is adjudged the most guilty might not necessarily be the one who made the worst bid.

To enter, send your verdict and a stamped, self-addressed envelope to: "Judgment," The Bridge World, 39 West 94th St., New York, N.Y. 10025. (Correspondents from outside the United States and Canada may send postal coupons instead of stamps; Canadian readers, please send loose stamps.)

All who enter will be sent a copy of the panel's vote and comments, plus the staff's analysis. If you correctly predict the panel's vote on BOTH questions, you will also be sent a copy of the magazine that includes the "Judge" article. Entries must be postmarked no later than April 18.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. For a copy and a scorepad, send $1.75 to "Goren-Four Deal," c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 259, Norwood, N.J. 07648. Make checks payable to Newspaperbooks.

Threat to freedom

It is sad commentary about the status of the First Amendment on the nation's campuses when the academic community must be urged to respect the right of an audience to hear an invited speaker.

This unusual plea from organizations representing college presidents, professors and students is being made and rightfully so because it is urgently required. For too long, militant student hecklers have been disrupting with impunity the appearances of speakers whose views are not pleasing.

One reason for this barbarism is the lack of disciplinary action against students who overstep the bounds of legitimate protest to violate the right of others to speak or to listen.

Various victims of boorish student censorship recently have been Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations; former Black Panther Eldridge Cleaver; and Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the oil minister of Saudi Arabia.

It was bad enough that Kirkpatrick was forced to cancel a speech at the University of California at Berkeley by students protesting U.S. involvement in El Salvador. Even worse, she had to withdraw as Smith College's commencement speaker when her security could not be assured.

Certainly, Kirkpatrick, Cleaver and Yamani espouse viewpoints that are controversial and unpopular in some quarters. But if both sides of touchy issues cannot be heard in our academic institutions, where can they be?

Intellectual freedom is the very first casualty in an atmosphere of intimidation, no matter from what source.

The organizations now issuing the campus appeal for tolerance include the American Council on Education, the American Association of University Professors and the U.S. Student Association. The broad constituency of these groups is a welcome indication that the campus threat to intellectual freedom is well understood and will not be tolerated.

Members of the academic community, who trade in the marketplace of ideas, have a unique obligation to fight any threat to free expression, especially when that threat emanates from bullies in their own ranks.

New look in space

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Ames Research Center in Mountain View now tends to believe that physically fit persons may not have the right stuff for space travel after all.

A preliminary study shows that NASA has been on the wrong track in seeking out fit young fighter pilots for space travel, believing they would be better able to tolerate the strains of re-entry into Earth's atmosphere.

"Now we're thinking that high condition may not be the best adaptation," says NASA's Dr Danielle Goldwater.

Those once believed most fit for space travel — with low heart rates and flexible arteries and veins — have a re-entry problem. Blood tends to pool in their legs until their bodies readjust to gravity's pull — and this starves the brain of much-needed oxygen.

Perhaps the next astronauts will be a little pudgy around the middle, tend to suffer a touch of high blood pressure and hardening of the arteries.

Average people who do little physically except shout and stamp our feet while watching TV football soon may be soaring into space, high above buildings.

It's never too late to get into training for a career as an astronaut — even with a six-pack in the cooler.

Another View:

Fairer arms view

There is a welcome improvement in the latest draft of a pastoral letter on nuclear arms to be debated in May in Chicago by the nation's nearly 300 Roman Catholic bishops.

The tolerant and pragmatic change in tone from the committee of five bishops headed by Joseph Cardinal Bernardin of Chicago should give those caught up in the nuclear freeze movement reason for contemplation.

Two earlier drafts placed unfair blame on the United States for the nuclear arms race by condemning the policy of nuclear deterrence as immoral. They also explicitly endorsed the nuclear freeze movement by calling on the United States to initiate unilateral disarmament.

The earlier drafts, moreover, inaccurately accused the United States of targeting civilian populations for nuclear attack in any retaliatory strike.

At best, this letter was a risky pacifistic view that ignored the realities of the Soviet threat and relied on a questionable premise that atheistic Soviet leaders will respond positively to a naive act of Christian charity.

Fortunately, the latest draft benefits from the counseling of Pope John Paul II and Western European bishops in France and Germany who have a better knowledge of the threat of Soviet communism. It also takes into consideration views of the Reagan administration as well as more traditionally minded American church leaders who still adhere to the argument that U.S. nuclear policy is justified by the church's ancient doctrine of "just wars" for national survival.

The new version includes a letter from William Clark, the president's national security adviser, as part of 40 pages of additional and clarifying material. Clark notes that U.S. retaliatory weapons are targeted on the Soviet military installations and war-making industries, rather than civilian population centers.

It also no longer endorses a nuclear freeze and gives equal weight to the just war concept. The letter opposes the first use of nuclear weapons, deliberate attacks on civilians and calls for curbs on the development of nuclear weapons while calling deterrence an acceptable first step toward genuine disarmament.

Such balance won't please extremists on either side of the nuclear debate. But it may help restore any credibility for the church that was eroded by the activist faction of theologians. It also encourages a rational discussion by church leaders on the terribly complex issue of nuclear weapons and lessens the chances of the Soviet Union getting a free propaganda ride.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

MBDA aid used as political tool

WASHINGTON — The federal agency that was created to help minority businessmen has been used to reward friends and punish enemies of the Reagan administration. When people are hired or contracts are granted, there is apt to be a quid pro quo.

Jack Anderson

This sort of political manipulation is nothing new. There has been a smell of scandal about the Minority Business Development Agency ever since it was created by President Richard Nixon.

But Ronald Reagan promised as a candidate to end such political abuse and took steps as president to do so. Orders were issued for new minority-business contracts to be awarded on a strictly competitive basis, with recommendations to Washington from regional MBDA directors after proper evaluation by a nonpartisan panel.

The orders not only have been flouted, but the responsible authorities have full knowledge of what's going on. The MBDA is under the jurisdiction of the Commerce Department, whose inspector general, Sherman Funk, has received detailed evidence of the political finagling. He has chosen to ignore it.

The nation's struggling minority businessmen, meanwhile, can expect little help from the federal government unless they have the right political connections.

For example, my associate Peter Grant investigated the new $35 million program to hire 100 consulting firms to give minority businessmen expert advice on management, financing and marketing. Here is some of the evidence he has documented:

— Nelson Rodriguez, formerly a confidential assistant to MBDA's deputy director, Theron Bell, allegedly told two agency regional directors to "stack" the evaluation panels so that politically compatible firms would get the consulting contracts. Rodriguez denies having said any such thing.

But both Bell and his boss, MBDA Director Victor Rivera, obviously believed the charges by the two regional directors. For they told my reporter that they couldn't understand how Rodriguez got the idea that the evaluation panels should be stacked and that they had verbally reprimanded Rodriguez.

— Former Chicago regional director Stanley Tate complained that he was told to change a Kansas City contract recommendation for political reasons. Originally, he had chosen the Black Economic Union's contract proposal. But Bell allegedly called Tate and told him to reconsider, explaining that the Black Economic Union was unacceptable because some of its members had supported the Democrats in 1980. At Bell's insistence, Tate changed his recommendation to Laventhol and Horwath, which was then awarded the $225,000 contract.

— In Cleveland, Tate had originally planned to recommend Price Waterhouse for a $369,000 consulting contract. But he said that Bell allegedly called him and told him to take another look at the proposal submitted by the City of Cleveland. Tate reconvened the evaluation panel, which refused to change its recommendation of Price Waterhouse. Tate recommended the City of Cleveland anyhow, and the city got the contract. Top MBDA officials allegedly wanted the award to go to the city because Mayor George Voinovich is a Republican.

Bell has admitted asking Tate to reconsider the Kansas City and Cleveland recommendations but has denied putting pressure on Tate. According to Bell's version, he and Rivera felt that the two winning firms were better qualified. Tate's charge that Bell sought to change the recommendations for political reasons, said Bell, was "a baldfaced lie."

Tate's complaints were made to the inspector general's office. He refused to comment directly, except to say he had told the inspector general's office the truth.

Footnote: In a future column, I will show how Inspector General Funk has artfully ignored the scandal.

INSIDE REPORT:

Smugness isn't only approach

WASHINGTON — Dr. Henry A. Kissinger will address a selected international audience over luncheon at the Washington Hilton Hotel on May 17, spearheading a drive against the Reagan administration's new smugness toward the rest of the Western world now that U.S. economic recovery has begun.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The luncheon will highlight a day-long conference called for the purpose of getting President Reagan to address the chaotic state of the financial world when he meets leaders of other industrialized nations at the Williamsburg summit two weeks later. What Kissinger and an assortment of bankers, academicians and politicians at the conference have in common is the belief that a decade of floating exchange rates in international currencies has produced a permanent state of financial instability worldwide. Therefore, they see change as imperative.

There is no such awareness apparent at the State Department, where the agenda planned for Williamsburg, according to a "secret" memorandum written by Under Secretary W. Allen Wallis, opposes "intervention" in international monetary affairs. Celebrating self-satisfaction, the Wallis memo suggests that Williamsburg offers "an opportunity" for the U.S. "to take credit for the growth now emerging" around the world.

That contrasts with the consensus among those who will confer at the Washington Hilton. They believe American recovery will prove illusory so long as the rest of the industrialized world is in misery. That means bringing an end to the escalating international currency war and moving quickly to resume more stable rates of exchange.

Accordingly, Rep. Jack Kemp and Professor Robert Mundell of Columbia University some six weeks ago decided to sponsor an invitation-only conference to establish "an agenda for Williamsburg." Kemp and Mundell, political and economic pioneers respectively in the supply-side movement, have never disguised their desire for a return to something like the Bretton Woods system of fixed exchange rates based on gold that was demolished by the Nixon administration in the 1970s.

But belief that floating exchange rates are an invitation to currency wars, protectionism and the economic destruction of the West are by no means limited to supply-siders. Kissinger was a passive bystander as the Nixon administration changed the financial world, but has been immersed in economics for many years since. In a Newsweek article this year, the former secretary of state assailed floating exchange rates and said that "an overhaul of the international monetary system" is a "precondition to world economic recovery."

Kissinger is not alone. The list of famous names who agree in principle with Kissinger traverse the political and economic spectrums: former West German chancellor Helmut Schmidt, former French president Valery Giscard d'Estaing, financier Felix Rohatyn, economist Paul Triffin. Among similar-minded figures planning to attend the Kemp-Mundell conference will be Othmar Emminger, former head of the German central bank; Mayor Jacques Chirac of Paris, leader of the French Right; and Democratic Rep. Fernand St. Germain, chairman of the House Banking Committee.

Secretary of State George Shultz will welcome the conference, but that scarcely connotes the administration's unequivocal blessing. On the contrary, White House sensitivity about outsiders trying to set the Williamsburg agenda may cause the meeting's working title (though not its purpose) to be abandoned.

In truth, the rigors of daily wrestling with Congress hardly give the major minds at the White House much time to consider the fate of the West's financial structure. What results is not so much high-level determination to preserve floating exchange rates as a delegation of such matters to lower-level officials truly determined not to return to the Bretton Woods.

Thus, the tone for U.S. strategy at Williamsburg so far has been set at the second level of the State Department by Allen Wallis, an ardent free-market economist. His "secret" memo of March 15 describes the principal U.S. objective at the industrialized nations summit May 28-30 as "agreement that world economic recovery depends on each country establishing the domestic conditions for sustainable non-inflationary growth and job creation, not on an international 'blueprint' of expansionary action."

If that is not clear enough, the Wallis memo goes on to boast that "we have resisted international schemes to 'fix' short-term domestic policies," set international exchange rates and "reform" international institutions. In effect, he is suggesting that Uncle Sam tell his hard-pressed cousins to follow the American example, oblivious to the danger that disordered international financial conditions pose for the American recovery.

A little evidence suggests a less cavalier attitude by President Reagan himself. When asked at a Feb. 22 press breakfast about an international conference for monetary reform, Reagan replied that "the subject ... whether to do such a thing might come up" at Williamsburg. However, he is not the president who will interrupt the hurly-burly of daily decision-making to brood about currency wars. The Kemp-Mundell conference is partly an attempt to get Reagan's attention.

But the president needs more nudging than that, and the only available nudger might be Donald T. Regan, secretary of the Treasury. He mused aloud months ago about summoning a new Bretton Woods conference, until the White House senior staff stomped him for the audacity of not seeking prior approval. Although Regan has been discreet since then, there are signs of renewed interest lately.

"I am not forecasting or promising another Bretton Woods," he told a New York Times interviewer March 29, "but I do think that the nations of the world have got to talk more about their currencies." The secretary has been invited to the Kemp-Mundell conference. If he attends, it would signify that unjustified smugness is not the Reagan administration's only approach to continuing international financial crisis.

CHARLEY REESE

Treason not to be condoned

Cicero, a Roman patriot who lived before Christ was born, gave the world a classic explanation of the danger of treason.

"A nation can survive its fools, and even the ambitious. But it cannot survive treason from within. An enemy at the gates is less formidable, for he is known ... But the traitor moves among those within the gates freely, his sly whispers rustling through all the alleys, heard in the very halls of government itself. For the traitor appears no traitor; he speaks in the accents familiar to his victims, and he wears their face and their garments and he appeals to the baseness that lies deep in the hearts of all men. He rots the soul of a nation; he works secretly and late into the night to undermine the pillars of a city; he infects the body politic so that it can no longer resist. A murderer is less to be feared. The traitor is the carrier of the plague."

Charley Reese

I realize it is out of fashion these days to speak of treason and traitors. So it was in Cicero's day. On another occasion, he said, "Too long have we said to ourselves intolerance of another's politics is barbarous and not to be countenanced in a civilized country. I tell you that freedom does not mean the freedom to exploit the law in order to destroy it."

This raises an interesting issue. Shall we give the protection of the Constitution to those who would destroy it? We do in this country as a matter of court rulings. You can, like the Communists, advocate a system that would abolish everyone's rights while claiming the protection of those rights.

This has never made sense to me. It reminds me of murderers on death row claiming the state has "no right" to take their lives. Naturally when you raise this issue liberals who don't think very clearly immediately say you are advocating a totalitarian society. They love to pose irrelevant either-or situations — in this case, either it's anything goes or it's a dictatorship.

That's nonsense. There is plenty of room within the Constitution for all kinds of dissent. There is nothing, for example, that would prevent us from adopting socialism, if that's what we wanted. The Constitution merely establishes the framework for a republican form of government; it does not dictate what kind of economic system we should have.

On the other hand, basic to the American Revolution, is a set of beliefs about human rights that are contained in the Declaration of Independence and further enumerated in the Bill of Rights. These human rights are not subject to the amendment process or to change by majority vote. These are what we will fight about. This is the social contract which has bound our nation together.

Why then should we tolerate people who openly seek to break that contract? Why tolerate people who advocate stripping Americans of their human rights? Why can we not demand that those who demand rights of their own respect the rights of others? Why not strip away the rights of those who would strip away our rights?

West Germany has such a law. There is a provision in the West German law by which charges can be brought against an organization that advocates destruction of the German constitution. The law provides for a judicial determination. If so determined, the organization is outlawed and can no longer participate in public debate.

What the West Germans are saying, and what we should also say, is that as a free people we welcome dissent and debate within the limits of our broad agreement on basic human rights. However, no one has the "right" to advocate destruction of human rights. That is out of bounds.

Surely if the founders of the country had intended the First Amendment as a license for treason, they would not have bothered to include a definition of treason and to proscribe it as a crime in the main body of the Constitution.

Any organization which advocates destruction of human rights like the Klan, the Nazis and the Communists, should be outlawed, its members prosecuted and its voice silenced. Let those who scorn our Constitution be shorn of its protection.

BIBLE VERSE

Former controller tracks pizzas instead of planes

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Doug Ramsay once plotted the course for airplanes carrying hundreds to the safety of airport runways. Now he tracks pepperoni pizzas to their destinations.

Monitoring the route of a pizza is less stressful than doing the same for a Boeing 727, and it pays a lot less — about one-fifth the $42,000 salary he made as an air traffic controller. But for Ramsay, there are compensations.

"I used to have nightmares about planes running into each other," the 35-year-old said. "I used to chew antacids like candy. No longer."

Although he works as assistant manager for a pizza franchise, Ramsay said he technically is on strike against the federal government, a year and seven months after he and 130 colleagues of the 160-member Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization Local 504 walked off their jobs.

A few days later, President Reagan grounded them and 11,400 other striking controllers. The union was later decertified as representative of the controllers by the federal government.

Ramsay led PATCO's strike in Salt Lake City in August 1981 as Local 504's president. It was the end of a 12-year career and his job in the Federal Aviation Administration's Air Traffic Route Center.

He took his new job last summer after volunteering for a year to help members of Local 504 find other jobs.

Ramsay, a cook before he became a controller, said he might try to start his own pizza franchise one day.

Monitoring the route of a pizza is less stressful than doing the same for a Boeing 727, and it pays a lot less — about one-fifth the $42,000 salary (Ramsay) made as an air traffic controller.

Would he trade pizza for directing airplanes again?

"I've thought about it," Ramsay said. "It would depend on the situation. To go back to the same system, I'd say, 'No.'"

He applied for an air traffic controller's job in Australia after Reagan fired the strikers, but was told he was too old. Others did find work in Australia, Saudi Arabia and New Guinea, he said.

Some became police officers. Three opened a country-western bar in Ogden, Utah. "Quite a few have just vanished," Ramsey said. "I don't know where they're at."

Ramsay said he still gets upset by the government's plan to train new controllers instead of rehiring old ones.

"You're talking about $2 billion to $3 billion when there's a pool of us still out there," he said.

He concedes that PATCO broke the law, but said the strike grew out of many of the same factors that prompted the union's 1970 walkout.

"Management policies. That's what most say started the strike anyway, not more money, but poor FAA management," Ramsay said.

He said he knows of a half-dozen former controllers whose marriages ended in divorce.

"I'm luckier than others," Ramsay said. "My wife supported me all the way, because she saw what the job was doing to me."

The couple survived financially on Mrs. Ramsay's salary as a clerk-receptionist and $16,000 the federal government had to refund from retirement contributions.

Ramsay got another break last month when the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver dismissed the $2,000 fine he faced and the $20,000 penalty imposed on Local 504 for ignoring the back-to-work order.

He hasn't abandoned the controllers' cause, however.

Ramsay said he is involved with a new would-be union, the U.S. Air Traffic Controllers Organization. Nationally, it is made up of 1,800 ex-PATCO members and works to advise congressmen on the air traffic control system. The organization has applied with the Department of Labor for union status and intends to organize the new controllers who replaced PATCO members, Ramsay said.

Violin was overpriced

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A discarded old violin, purchased for $15 and later valued at $140,000, may not be worth hardly anything, a consultant has told the woman who bought the instrument at a public television station's fund-raising auction.

"We didn't go out, like some people might have, and buy a new car or house," Suzanne Roberts said in a recent telephone interview. "We had virtually come to disbelieve it anyway. It never did seem real."

That probably was wise, said New York violin consultant Fred Oster.

Mrs. Roberts, at the time a secretary at WYES-TV here, was the only bidder and bought the beat-up violin for $15 at the public television station's 1970 auction.

She and her family moved in 1971 to Tempe, Ariz., and tucked the violin away in the attic until, in 1982, she came across an article about Roman Storch, once the assistant curator of Prague's Czechoslovakian National Museum.

Storch, then living in Tempe, was described as an expert on stringed musical instruments.

Shown Mrs. Roberts' violin, Storch proclaimed it the work of Italian master violin makers Lorenzo and Tomasso Carcassi. He valued it at $140,000.

After considering various options, Mrs. Roberts sent the violin last month to Christie's auction house in New York.

Christie's hired Oster, who two weeks ago questioned the instrument's authenticity and called Storch's appraisal "outrageous."

"A mint condition Carcassi only goes for between $20,000 and $40,000," said Oster.

"I don't know what it is. Its construction is reminiscent of the work in the period (late 18th or early 19th century), but I'm not even sure it's Florentine."

And, while it bears a label of the Carcassi brothers, Oster said "that's just a piece of paper."

"Still, it's an interesting violin, but my opinion now is that it's not original," said Oster.

"The best way to identify such an instrument is by the varnish, but the varnish on this one is no longer there. So much work has been done to it. A lot of the lining has been replaced and there's a crack in the back," he said.

Oster said he has sent photos of the violin to other experts, hoping to get their opinions.

Rolls Royce prices dip

LYNDHURST, N.J. (AP) — U.S. car buyers shopping for a bargain might look no farther than the nearest Rolls-Royce Motors showroom, where prices have been trimmed to reflect the British pound's slippage against the stronger dollar.

The price of the Rolls-Royce Silver Spirit was cut to $93,000, down $18,000 — more than the sticker prices of three Ford Escorts, officials said. The Silver Spur, which had been priced at $119,000, is going for $103,000.

"We're expecting a cracking year," said Reg Abbiss, spokesman for the company's United States subsidiary.

Death sentence upheld in slaying

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The state Supreme Court has upheld a conviction and death sentence in the bomb-slaying of Phoenix Republican reporter Don Bolles, saying hearsay evidence did not affect the verdict and there was no "fundamental error."

A lawyer for John Harvey Adamson said he would seek reconsideration of the court's 4-1 decision Monday.

Bolles, who had been investigating mob activity in Arizona, died in June 1976, 11 days after his car exploded. The defense had argued that the trial judge wrongly allowed testimony that Bolles, after the explosion, accused Adamson of attacking him for the Mafia.

Brownie troop finds dynamite

MOUND HOUSE, Nev. (AP) — About 20 members of a Brownie troop could have been killed if 150 unstable sticks of dynamite they found had exploded, a state fire marshal says.

Brownie leader Laura White quickly led the girls out of the area after one troop member showed her a stick of dynamite found during a hike on Saturday.

"If anyone would have started playing with that stuff, we would have lost the whole Brownie troop," said Terry Taylor, a deputy state fire marshal. Authorities on Monday detonated the explosives, apparently abandoned about 20 years ago.

Man kills friends, shoots himself

PINE HILLS, Fla. (AP) — An elderly man who shot and killed two friends before committing suicide was terminally ill with cancer and had been arguing with one of his victims about money, police said.

Alex Aroni, 70, shot himself Monday as police special weapons officers closed in on the suburban Orlando home where the killings took place, said Orange County Undersheriff Larry Shultz.

Nina Olisko said she had been sitting with her husband, John, and a a visitor, Mikita Lysenko, when Aroni arrived, began arguing and opened fire. Only Mrs. Olisko escaped, running to a neighbor's house.

Aroni had lived with the Oliskos until six months ago, she said.

Bandits use forklift to enter store

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Two bandits who took cash and jewelry in the predawn robbery of a department store used a forklift to smash through interior doors and walls, police said.

The bandits also cut phone lines into the K-mart store before Monday's heist, keeping a burglary alarm from working, police said.

Two employees were bound and blindfolded by the bandits, who then hot-wired a forklift inside the building to smash into a storage area, said officer Don Chandler. Locating a large safe, the thieves used the forklife to load it onto their getaway vehicle, he said.

Chandler said they left the forklift idling inside the store.

Holocaust survivors share memories

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thirty-eight years ago this week, a Jewish chaplain with the U.S. Third Army drove a jeep through the gates of Buchenwald, raised a megaphone and announced in Yiddish: "Yidden, ir zeit frei!" — "Jews, you are free!"

He saw a frightened, 8-year-old boy cowering behind a mound of corpses and lifted him into the air, laughing and crying.

On Monday night, in a sporting arena, the chaplain, Rabbi Herschel Shechter of New York City, and the boy, now Rabbi Israel Lau of Israel, liberator and liberated, shared their memory before 16,000 other Jews attending the American Gathering of Jewish Holocaust Survivors.

Each survivor defied Adolf Hitler's intention to slaughter all the Jews of Europe, and each had his own survival story — accounts of horror, told with distaste and disbelief; stories of atrocity, filled with corpses.

President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, stood with the survivors. The president was warmly received and applauded most when he pledged American strength to Israel's survival.

"As a man whose heart is with you, and as president of a people you are now so much a part of, I promise you that the security of your safe havens, here and in Israel, will never be compromised," Reagan said, bringing his audience to its feet.

Like the two rabbis, Reagan had a survival story. It concerned two "righteous Gentiles," Alexander Rozlan and his wife, now of Clearwater, Fla., then of Poland, who hid three Jewish children for more than four years.

"Once when German soldiers searched their home," the president recounted, "the Rozlands kept serving wine and whiskey until the troops were so drunk they forgot what they were looking for.

"Later, Rozland's son was in the hospital with scarlet fever. The boy hid half his medicine under his pillow so he could give it to the Jewish children his family was hiding, because they too had scarlet fever."

Survivor Jack Wluka, son of a blacksmith from Nowir-Dvur, Poland, now sells appliances and television sets in Stoughton, Mass. He has heard that books have been written questioning whether the Holocaust actually occurred.

"There are people who say it is not true," he said, spitting it out. "I'm looking for these people. I'll meet them anyplace, even in hell, because I was there. I would tell them dates and times. Let them talk to me."

He adds: "I survived because I was not a hero. Just plain luck. There were no heroes in the camps."

Congress recesses for funeral

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The death of 10-term Congressman Rep. Phillip Burton has prompted the House of Representatives to cut short this week's business so members can attend the funeral of the liberal California Democrat.

In an unusual tribute, all House activities will be suspended Thursday and Friday. "Everyone wanted to go to the funeral, so regular business will end on Wednesday," according to a spokeswoman for Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill.

The House also ended work early Monday after passing a resolution expressing "profound sorrow" at Burton's death.

O'Neill, who will head the House delegation to Thursday's outdoor memorial service, called Burton "a fighter for the rights of people, a champion of the environment and one of the greatest advocates ever to sit in the House of Representatives."

An autopsy performed Monday blamed Burton's death on the rupture of an aneurysm, or a ballooning-out in the body's largest artery. It was followed by bleeding into the abdominal cavity.

Coroner Boyd Stephens said he did not regard the seizure as a heart attack.

The 56-year-old congressman, complaining of back pains, collapsed in his suite at the Sir Francis Drake Hotel here and was pronounced dead early Sunday.

The American flag flew at half-staff at San Francisco's City Hall, where Burton's body will lie in state Wednesday in a closed casket.

A special election will be held in June to fill the remaining 21 months of Burton's term.

Cubs rally past Diablos

EL PASO — The Midland Cubs literally ran past the El Paso Diablos for a 6-5 come-from-behind victory here Monday night.

The win kept the 2-1 Cubs a half game behind division leading San Antonio.

After falling behind 5-1 the Cubs rallied for one run in the sixth and two each in the seventh and eighth.

Ricky Baker got things started in the decisive eighth when he stole second base after getting a one-out single. The Cubs' center fielder scored on Tom Lamboski's single after A.J. Hill was walked.

Then it was Hill's chance to steal. The fleet-footed shortstop stole third and scored the go-ahead run on an error by Diablo catcher Mike Kingslover.

Bill Hatcher hit a solo home run in the sixth for Midland and Baker added a triple to his single.

The Diablos wasted an impressive performance by Bill Max, who had a homer, a double and four RBI. Ken Pryce was the winning pitcher for Midland. Miguel Alicea took the loss.

The two teams will close out the snow-delayed series with a single game tonight when Midland's Doug Welench takes on Steve Parrot.

The Cubs return to the Tall City and begin a 10-game homestand with a single contest against the San Antonio Dodgers Wednesday.

One thing that can be said about the Texas League campaign after Monday night's action is; no one is off to a really bad start.

Only two out of the eight teams — San Antonio and Midland — have winning records and all four clubs in the East Division are knotted with 2-2 records.

Monday, Shreveport edged Arkansas 4-3; Tulsa posted a 5-0 shutout over Jackson and San Antonio tripped Beaumont 3-2.

Ballesteros wins 2nd Masters

The makings were there for a dramatic finish — four former Masters champions separated by only two shots going into the final round.

Seve's birdie-eagle-par-birdie magic on the first four holes quickly took care of that as the handsome Spaniard was home safe.

From that point on, it was simply a nice stroll through the azaleas and dogwood, magnolia and wisteria. He capped his round on the 18th hole with a par-saving chip from the fringe of the green.

"Ballesteros got off to such a good start, he kind of put a damper on everyone's spirits," said Tom Kite, who birdied the last two holes to tie for second with Ben Crenshaw. Kite, who has yet to win the Masters, now has finished fifth or better seven of the past eight years.

"Birdie, eagle, par, birdie," Kite said, recalling Ballesters' start. "It's like he was driving a Ferrari and everyone else was in a Chevrolet.

"He just blasted us. I'm surprised anyone could do that."

"I played 4-under the first four holes, and I think that was probably the key," Ballesteros said. "That put me 9-under and put my confidence straight up."

It also put more pressure on the third round co-leaders, Raymond Floyd and Craig Stadler, playing one group behind him, and on playing partner Tom Watson, who had hoped to capture his third Masters crown.

The 26-year-old Ballesteros, who also won this tournament in 1980, lost that three-shot advantage only once the rest of the way.

That came when Watson knocked in a 35-40-foot eagle putt on the par 5 eighth to move within two shots of the lead.

But, a Watson charge wasn't to be.

Ballesteros rolled in a 15-foot birdie putt on the ninth and Watson, one of the game's top putters, lost his touch on the greens.

He three-putted Nos. 9 and 11 and also bogeyed the 10th, and the game was over for the reigning U.S. and British Open king.

Stadler and Floyd never got anything going, and the only ones who did, Crenshaw and Kite, were too far back for it to matter.

Ballesteros closed with a 69 for an 8-under 280 total in the day-late finish on the still-soggy 6,905-yard Augusta National Golf Club course.

Crenshaw had the low round of the day, a 68, and Kite fired a 69.

Watson and Floyd finished at 285 with scores of 73 and 75, respectively, and Stadler, the defending champion, struggled to a 76 and was tied at 286 with Hale Irwin, who had a 69.

Watson closed to within three shots with a birdie on the 13th, but had a double bogey 6 on 14.

Watson said the 14th "sealed the coffin. The lights went out."

"I told my caddy after 13 that from here to the last hole we have to play in par," Ballesteros said. "I did.

"I made a couple of mistakes on the back nine, but I kept my cool," he said.

"The key on this course is you have to wait for the birdies. I made my birdies early in the round and that was the key."

The victory was worth $90,000 for Seve and it was his third major championship. He also won the British Open in 1979 and now owns 29 titles in his globe-trotting career — most of them overseas.

"This is my favorite course," he said. "You have to use your power ... your mind ... and be lucky."

He played the front side in 5-under, getting his birdies from 8 feet on the first hole, 2 feet at No. 4 and 15 feet at No. 9.

His two bogeys came on the backside when he two-putted from 12 feet, first on No. 10 when he caught a bunker and again at No. 12 when he missed the green.

Seve finished with a flourish, chipping in from 20 feet to par the final hole.

Watson called Ballesteros an "aggressive, flamboyant type of player" and said the start was "like a guy getting knocked down two times in the first round, and having a three-knockdown rule."

Crenshaw, who eagled the par-5 13th from eight feet, said, "I was so far behind. Seve started so well. I mean, good night! But I was proud of that round today. It was a tough day to play."

Rader turns old Rangers into new, winning ballclub

ARLINGTON (AP) — Who are these escape artists masquerading in Texas Ranger uniforms atop the American League Western Division?

They are the Texas Raders, errr, Rangers, that's who.

Rookie major league manager Doug Rader has taken basically the same team that lost 98 games last year and injected some pride into them.

Texas won five out of six games in its opening home stand and came from behind to win in every one of them. It was a season's worth of rallies in one week compared to last season's dismal sixth place club.

The biggest comeback of them all was Sunday when the Rangers spotted the Boston Red Sox seven runs and charged back to win 9-7. It was a scenariorepeated in the previous five games of the home stand which the Rangers won all but one.

Rader, who was never known to accept losing gracefully in his playing days with the Houston Astros, started shouting in the dugout after Boston piled up the big lead.

"He wasn't mad, he was just shouting encouragement," said Bill Stein.

Stein got the point.

He delivered the game-winning RBI in the bottom of the eighth inning.

Buddy Bell, the Rangers' Gold Glove tlird baseman and longtime sufferer through Texas' losing ways, said, "I don't think you would have seen last year what happened here today."

Rader made all the right moves in his first full week as the Ranger manager.

"We're playing very loose," said catcher Jim Sundberg. "We're not supposed to be any good."

Bell said, "Doug has helped give everyone a positive attitude. We're having fun."

Rader got two of his disabled starting pitchers back Sunday as Danny Darwin and Charlie Hough worked in relief.

Hough picked up the victory.

Darwin was recuperating from an ulcer and Hough was coming back from knee surgery.

"Honest," Bell said after Texas rallied to win 9-7, "we didn't think we were beaten."

Asked after the game what he told the team, Rader paused and said, "I told them to try harder."

Stein had a clightly different recollection.

"He started screaming, 'Swing the ... bat!' and stuff like that. It was a motivating thing. And it must have worked. We scored five runs right away," Stein said.

Rader was awed by the comeback.

"Wow. Spot 'em seven and come sliding back in. That's highly irregular. They battled hard. Amazing. It's a nice feeling. That feeling can carry you over some tough times. You can learn how to do something like that. Some teams get behind and think like ice cream in the rain."

Rader, 38, has developed a rapport with the players, they say. But it's a relationship in which they're afraid to fail. They don't know what he might do.

"The attitude right now is super, and that's the only kind of attitude we can have right now. Everybody knows we are going to have to give 100 percent," Stein said.

"And the way he's using the extra men, we all know we have to be ready at any time."

Rader went with basically a set lineup through the first five games. But Sunday, Rader inserted three players into the starting lineup for the first time. He went with Mickey Rivers, Larry Biittner and Wayne Tolleson in place of designated hitter Dave Hostetler (the No.4 hitter), right fielder Larry Parrish (the No.5 hitter) and shortstop Bucky Dent.

"I wouldn't do my job as manager if I didn't get all my players some game time. They needed to get in some ball games, and it was a perfect time. Boston had a fairly good right-hander (Dennis Eckersley) on the mound, and they are all left-handed. Plus, it helped us in speed," Rader said.

Rader made a hero out of Stein when he sent the veteran into the eighth inning of Sunday's game against Bob Stanley, one of baseball's top relievers.

Even though Stein hadn't played this season, Rader wasn't taking a big chance since Stein had a history of delivering in a pinch-hitting role. But Rader could have gone with sluggers Hostetler or Parrish. All three are right-handers.

"My only decision was whether to pinch-hit 'Hoss (Hostetler)' or Stein," Rader said. "Stein can put the ball in play a little better than the others. Whoever it was had to be a low-ball hitter, since Stanley throws a good sinker. Parrish is a high-ball hitter."

In the clubhouse after the game, nearly all the Rangers were praising Rader.

Jon Matlack, who was shelled in Sunday's game by the early Boston slugfest, has been in the doghouse with previous managers and general managers. They didn't want him and he didn't want the Rangers. That's changed now.

On April 9, 1978, George Gervin of the San Antonio Spurs scored 33 points in one quarter against the New Orleans Jazz, an NBA record.

Lee battles Bobcats for district lead

After ripping off victories in their first six District 4-5A baseball games, the Midland Lee Rebels have found the going a bit rough. They've dropped their last two decisions and need a win today if they hope to hold on to the first place they once controled by a two-game margin.

Lee hosts co-leader San Angelo in a 4 p.m. game at Lee Field and the winner will take sole possession of first place with a 7-2 record.

While the Rebels are playing the Bobcats, Midland High, 3-5, is on the road for a 4 p.m. game against the Big Spring Steers, 4-4. Elsewhere around the league, Abilene Cooper, 2-6, is at Odessa Permian, 2-6, and Abilene High, 4-4, hosts Odessa High, 5-3.

WHILE THE Rebels have been struggling in their last two outings, San Angelo has been on a six-game winning streak. After dropping their first two games of the season, the Bobcats have found the hitting and pitching necessary to field a winner. Their last loss was a 10-6 defeat to Lee on their home field.

At the plate the Bobcats are led by catcher Henry Klepac with a .426 average while Jim Osborn, 3-0, has been the top stopper on the mound, featuring two shutouts in his last two starts. In his three appearances, Osborn has only allowed two earned runs to cross home plate.

For Lee, Barry Blackwell continues swinging his hot bat with a .636 average but there has been no consistant team hitting behind him in the past two games. Since posting a season-high .323 average, the Rebs have fallen to .287. The once potent pitching attack has started paying the price for allowing too many free bases through walks, wild pitches and passed balls.

MIDLAND HIGH and Big Spring, of late, have the appearances of new teams with the big improvement going to the Bulldogs.

With a five-game losing skid behind them, the Bulldogs have regrouped to win two straight while Big Spring, after going 4-0 to start the season, has gone 0-4 to fall two games back in the race for first place.

In the first half of 4-5A play it was Big Spring that started Midland High's woes with a 6-0 victory at Memorial Stadium Field. However, the Steers have barely a glimmer remaining from the bright light they once flashed around the league.

The Bulldogs have slowly improved their once sub-.200 team batting average, now standing at .222, but the biggest find has been a pitcher behind the oft-used Jose Carrasco, Mike Timlin.

Against Odessa Permian Saturday, Timlin gave up only two hits to gain a 2-1 vcitory, striking out 13 and walking only three in the process.

U.L. Washington of the Kansas City Royals expresses his happiness after slidding into home plate with his first inside the park home run of the season against Boston.

Leonard uses broken finger pitch

By The Associated Press

AL Roundup

The Kansas City Royals probably proved last year that Dennis Leonard is crucial to any hopes they might have of winning the American League West championship.

Last May the hard-throwing veteran broke two fingers, stopping a line smash with his pitching hand. The Royals spent the rest of the season in a futile duel with California. Leonard missed 16 starts and the Angels won the flag, finishing three games ahead of the Royals.

But after Monday night's six strikeouts in a 6-2 victory over Boston, Leonard and Manager Dick Howser were resting a lot easier.

"Leonard threw the ball as well as he can tonight," said Howser. "He had as good a fastball as he is going to have. I have been very impressed with the way he's thrown four of his last five times. He was mixing his pitches very well."

Leonard's six strikeouts included the heart of the Boston order in the third — Dwight Evans, Jim Rice and Tony Armas. In the fourth, he struck out Dave Stapleton and Glenn Hoffman.

"I was mixing them up and getting them over the plate," said Leonard. "And that's the secret to good pitching — mixing 'em up and getting 'em over the plate."

Angels 6, Mariners 1

Tim Foli drove in four runs for California with a pair of singles and left-hander Tommy John scattered seven hits for his second complete game in two starts. Bobby Grich went 4-for-4 for the Angels.

"When I get into a groove and find my rhythm, my confidence level goes way up," John said. "I have confidence in throwing some pitches I might not throw were I struggling ... When I'm throwing well, I keep the ball down and hope the fielders behind me can come up with the good plays — which they've now done in two games for me."

Kite unhappy with second

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — It was a familiar — painfully familiar — situation for Ben Crenshaw and Tom Kite in the 47th Masters.

They were second.

That's nice, said Crenshaw, "but I've been there before."

He has, with something approaching regularity. He was second to Ray Floyd in the 1976 Masters. He's been second in two British Opens. He lost the 1979 PGA national championship in a playoff.

He's been so close so often. And he has yet to win one of the Big Four titles, the big victory he needs to confirm his position in the game.

"As Ben said, it's nice to finish there (second), but that's not what we're after," said Kite. "That's not why we came here. That's not the object."

His runner-up position, tied with Crenshaw at 284, four under par but a distant four back of runaway winner Seve Ballesteros, marked the seventh time in eight years that Kite has finished sixth or better in the Masters.

He, too, has yet to win, either in this one or any of the other majors, the U.S. and British Opens and the PGA.

And, while Crenshaw can find great encouragement at the obvious end of a lengthy slump, Kite had a different view of his runner-up finish. If anything, it seemed to confirm a reputation he's trying to shed: that of consistently high finishes and very few victories.

Since the start of the 1981 season, he has been 10th or better 40 times in 51 starts.

It is a performance that enabled him to win the Vardon Trophy for the low stroke average on the PGA Tour in both 1981 and 1982. He led the Tour's money-winners in 1981.

And yet, in that period, since the start of the 1981 season, he has won only three titles. One came this year, in the Bing Crosby. He's been second twice.

Both Kite and Crenshaw, former teammates at the University of Texas, started far back in the day-late conclusion of this weather-delayed Masters. Neither ever was in contention.

Kite finished birdie-birdie for a 69, but said he "was not sharp this week." He had, he said, very little chance at a victory.

"Barring a complete collapse by Ballesteros on those last holes, I never had a chance.

"He just buried us."

Crenshaw, who had an eagle-3 in shooting the best round of the day, 68, agreed.

"I was so far behind and Seve started so well, I mean, good night," said Ben.

Knicks in no pressure situation

NBA Roundup

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Coach Hubie Brown appreciates the luxury of not having to worry about other teams' scores, as long as the Knicks continue to win.

"I think we will win our last three games," Brown said after the Knicks' easy 121-92 victory over the Indiana Pacers in the only National Basketball Association game Monday night. "If we win all three, it doesn't matter what Atlanta or Washington does. From a positive standpoint, the best way to make the playoffs is not worry what the other teams are doing. We have to do it ourselves."

"We don't have to worry about Washington or Atlanta at all," said Bernard King, who hit 13 of 20 shots and scored 29 points to lead the Knicks. "I prefer it this way."

The Knicks are tied with Atlanta for fifth place in the Eastern Conference, and both the Hawks and Knicks are one-half game ahead of Washington. Two of the three teams will earn a postseason berth by Sunday, the final day of the regular season.

But because of the tiebreaker situation, the Knicks are assured of making the playoffs if they win their last three games, at home against New Jersey and on the road against Detroit and Chicago.

"This is a good position to be in," said center Bill Cartwright, who hit all eight of his field goal attempts and finished with 19 points. "I feel we'll win our remaining games."

Indiana's seventh straight loss dropped the Pacers, 19-60, two games behind Cleveland in the Central Division. Both the Pacers and Cavaliers have three games left, and if Cleveland finishes ahead of Indiana, the Pacers will flip a coin with Houston for the right to choose first in the June 28 college draft, with three-time All-American Ralph Sampson of Virginia the likely first selection.

Cubs send Noles for treatment

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Cubs have sent pitcher Dickie Noles back to Chicago for treatment through an alcohol rehabilitation program.

Noles, 26, was arrested Saturday night after allegedly assaulting a Cincinnati police officer outside a downtown bar. An attorney entered an innocent plea for him Monday morning in Hamilton County Municipal Court to charges of assault, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct while intoxicated.

Who will be baseball's best?

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

In keeping with the predilection for awards aroused by last night's Oscars, let's take an early peak into the envelope containing baseball's yearend accolades.

By accident, mind you, we came upon an hermetically sealed mayonnaise jar on the doorstep of Bowie Kuhn's palatial estate. Contained therein were the following winners:

American League MVP: He could have won it before, like in 1980 when he hit .300 for the Baltimore Orioles, drove in 116 runs and hit 32 homers. Or, even last year, when he batted .316 with 110 RBI and 32 homers. Last year's winner, however, was Robin Yount of the Milwaukee Brewers.

This season, after hitting .320 with 35 homers and 125 RBI, it'll finally be Orioles first baseman Eddie Murray, not to be confused with Eddie Murphy, Saturday Night Live's successor to Garrett Morris, who may have won the National League MVP as Chico Escuela.

National League MVP: This man got off to a slow start in 1982 but still finished with a .293 average, 97 RBI and 29 home runs for the Montreal Expos. Under the firm hand of new Manager Bill Virdon, each of those stats should increase by about 20 percent, and Gary Carter will win the NL MVP.

Last year's winner was the Atlanta Braves' Dale Murphy, not to be confused with Eddie Murphy, who replaced Garrett Morris, who may have won the NL MVP as Chico Escuela.

AL Cy Young: As a Yankee, this man was never appreciated by his manager, Billy Martin. Now, Martin is back with the Yankees, and Larry Gura is with the Kansas City Royals.

Martin has even better cause to dislike Gura now. He holds a lifetime mark of 9-3 against the Yankees, and this seaon, he'll be the only 20-game winner in the American League and winner of his first Cy Young award. Last year, Gura was 18-12 and missed out on the Cy Young because Pete Vuckovich of Milwaukee, out with a rotator cuff injury this year, was 18-6.

NL Cy Young: A reporter for somebody was doing another one of those Lonnie and Ozzie Smith stories in the St. Louis locker room during spring training this year, and Joaquin Andujar sat on a stool nearby.

"You gonna interview me?" Andujar asked, as a teammate was piling garbage in his locker room stall. "Look what they do to me," he cried, pleading for attention.

No pleas necessary after this season's over. Steve Carlton of Philadelphia won the award last season, but after going 22-6 with an ERA in the 2.80 range, Andujar will win the 1983 NL Cy Young, his first.

AL Batting Champion: It seemed like there was only one batting champion in the 1970s, Rod Carew, but he hasn't won a title since 1978 nor has he won since joining the California Angels.

At age 37, some say impossible. But this seven-time batting champ is ready for one more. Last year, Willie Wilson of Kansas City won it with an average of .332, but he'll go 0-for-5 in the final game of the 1983 season to lose by one point to Carew's .331.

NL Batting Champ: He plays for the St. Louis Cardinals and his name is not Keith Hernandez, who won the title in 1979 with an average of .344. This time, it will be a younger player more than capable of filling Hernandez's shoes, although he might fall down in them.

Al Oliver of Montreal won last year's title with a .331 average, but in 1983, Lonnie Smith will overcome his bad rep for pratfalls by batting .338 to win his first NL crown.

AL Manager: He won't win any awards from the Kansas City Policeman's Benevolent Association, but Dick Howser is man of the year for '83. Despite the run-in that he and coach Rocky Colavito had with some of K.C.'s finest in the Royals Stadium parking lot last season, Dick will lead the Royals to an AL West title and cop this award.

NL Manager: Don't believe for a minute that there aren't any geniuses left in baseball. After Pat Corrales is fired at Philadelphia in late May, Gene Mauch will come off the golf course to manage the same team he led to a second-place finish in 1964 after blowing a 6½ game lead with 12 games to go.

This time, it'll be different. The Phillies will never get that close, but they'll look good doing it.

Smith, Tanner post victories

LOS ANGELES — Stan Smith defeated Victor Amaya 6-4, 6-1 and Roscoe Tanner downed Tom Gullikson 4-6, 7-5, 6-4 to highlight first-round action in the $225,000 Pacific Southwest tournament.

Rozelle will rule on Schlichter's future

By The Associated Press

Art Schlichter's NFL future may be determined within 10 days by Commissioner Pete Rozelle. The Columbus Dispatch, quoting an unnamed NFL source, said the league's officials apparently will try to reach the decision before the NFL's April 26 draft because Baltimore, the team with the worst record in the league last season, will have the first pick...

Chicago Cubs pitcher Dickie Noles pleaded innocent on three charges stemming from a brawl in a Cincinnati tavern. Noles was charged with assault, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct while intoxicated in the Saturday incident. Judge Jack Rosen ordered Noles' bond continued at $650 and set April 20 for a preliminary hearing on the charges in Hamilton County Municipal Court. The arrest came after police were called to Flanigan's Landing, a bar not far from Riverfront Stadium...

Winning isn't for Cubs, Rangers

By The Associated Press

Winning isn't everything — and for the Houston Astros and Chicago Cubs these days, winning isn't anything.

The Astros, off to the worst start in the 22-year history of the franchise, have dropped their first seven games, the latest an 11-inning 4-3 heartbreaker Monday night to Los Angeles.

And the Cubs, starting their midsummer swoon a bit early, have dropped six in a row without a victory, their latest a 5-1 decision Monday in Cincinnati.

In the only other National League game, Atlanta blanked San Diego 4-0.

Bob Knepper was two outs away from his — and Houston's — first victory of the year when Derrel Thomas singled and, with two away, pinch-hitter Mike Marshall singled just over the glove of leaping second baseman Bill Doran. Then Steve Sax tied it 3-3 with a liner through the box.

NL Roundup

"Going into the ninth I didn't feel that strong," said Knepper. "I made two bad pitches, to Thomas and Marshall. If Marshall's hit is an inch lower, the game is over. Doran catches it. Sax hit a good pitch. The ball came right at me. It caught me flat-footed. I couldn't get off the ground to get it.

"I'm generally happy with my pitching," Knepper added, "but I'm not overjoyed we lost again."

They lost it in the 11th when Julio Solano walked Thomas, wild-pitched him to third and walked the bases loaded. Dave Smith took over and got Sax on a pop-up before Bill Russell's suicide squeeze brought Thomas home. It brought cheers for Russell from the crowd which had booed him earlier for his erratic fielding at shortstop.

"The crowds and I have an old thing going," Russell said. "It doesn't bother me or I wouldn't have played this long."

Reds 5, Cubs 1

The Cubs are off to their poorest start since 1962, when they lost their first seven games. "We're off to a poor start, but we've got a good ballclub," Chicago Manager Lee Elia proclaimed. "Once we start cooking, we'll be all right. Things are just magnified now because of the start of the season.

"They're not quitting," he said of his players. "Maybe they're trying too hard as a team ... Down deep every guy on this ballclub knows we've got a good ballclub."

Joe Price pitched a two-hitter for the Reds, one of them Wayne Nordhagen's home run, and Dann Bilardello hit a two-run double and Cesar Cedeno added a two-run homer, both in the second inning against Dickie Noles.

"Two swings of the bat, that's all it took — a two-run double and a home run," Elia said. "They didn't do anything after that. It's obvious we're not mustering any offense."

Wranglers deliver Flowers to Washington's Feds

USFL Roundup

WASHINGTON (AP) — On the catch that put him in the record books, and won the game for the Arizona Wranglers, wide receiver Jackie Flowers was thinking of only one thing — how to knock it down.

Trailing 21-16 in the fourth quarter, Flowers outjumped two Washington Federals defenders at the home team's 49-yard line and then rambled the remaining distance to complete a 98-yard touchdown pass, the longest in the history of the United States Football League.

"I threw the ball as far as I could and he made a heck of catch," said quarterback Alan Risher, who completed 16 of 30 passes for 310 yards, including eight to Flowers for 179 in the Wranglers' 22-21 victory.

"I saw it from the second it left Risher's hand. I thought it was a jump ball and seriously thought about knocking it down so they wouldn't intercept it. We needed to hold on to the ball at that point in the game," Flowers said.

Washington cornerback Jeff Brown and free safety Donnie Harris had surrounded Flowers when the two Federal defenders collided in midair and crashed to the turf.

The winning score spoiled what, to that point, had been a glorious return to pro football by former NFL quarterback Joe Gilliam.

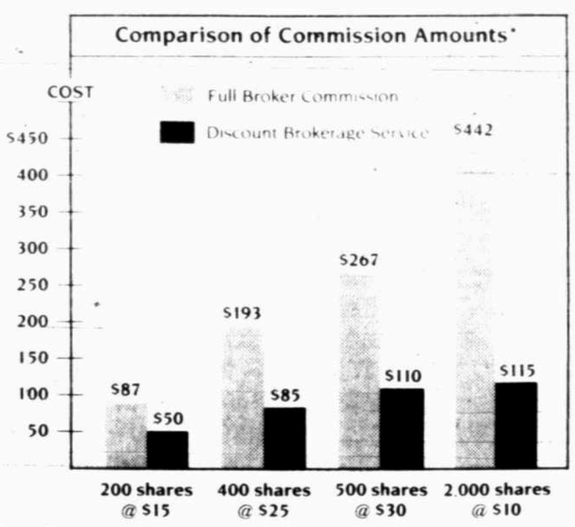
CLAYDESTA'S BROKERAGE SERVICE GIVES YOU MORE... BY GIVING YOU LESS.

Less Commission to Pay.
When you make your own investment decisions, you shouldn't have to pay a broker for advice you don't need. With ClayDesta's Brokerage Service, you make the decisions. And you save up to 70% on brokerage commissions.

Depending on the number of shares traded and the price per share, the commission you pay may be as little as one-third what a full-commission broker would charge.



Based on 1983 survey of representative full-commission brokers. Minimum commission is $35.

Less Transaction Time.
For serious investors, time is money. You follow the market by the minute, and you know exactly when you want to trade your securities. So it doesn't make sense to have your investment plans held back because a check is tied up in the mail.

Now ClayDesta's Brokerage Service lets you make securities transactions directly from your bank account with just a phone call. That means your money spends more time in your ClayDesta checking account or Insured Money Market Account. Working for you. No other financial institution in Midland offers you that convenience.

Less Paperwork.
All your stock transactions are recorded on your monthly bank statement. Plus, you always get a fast confirmation and rapid settlement. You can make transactions by phone in any NYSE, AMEX or OTC issue. You can even handle bond and option transactions.

ClayDesta's Brokerage Service is perfect for independent-minded investors. You save money. You save time. And you always get the personal, professional service you've come to expect from ClayDesta.

Thompson talks about petroleum industry, governmental regulation

By DAVID C. SODAMANN
Business-Energy Editor

Ed Thompson, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, Monday evening was the first speaker in Midland College's Free Enterprise Lecture Series. Thompson answered the question: "Is there any free enterpirse in the domestic petroleum industry?"

Thompson concluded although there is "pretty fierce competition" within the industry, attempts by governmental bodies to tax and regulate the industry have severely limited the industry's freedom to trade with those on the outside.

"I'm not finding fault with the type of government we've got, but the way they've loused things up," Thompson said.

The petroleum industry is itself to blame for many of the restrictions imposed by government, Thompson said. "The industry has let the J.R. Ewing legend grow, instead of killing it in its tracks." The result, Thompson said, has been been a greater tendancy by government to regulate the industry.

The oil and gas industry is plauged with many problems, Thompson said. Less drilling is being done, demand for oil and gas is down and many gas wells are shut in.

"You'd think the government would be working to relieve the industry of some of its problems," Thompson said.

Instead, he pointed out, the governemnt is buying imported oil to fill the strategic petroleum reserve, controlling prices and talking about controlling more.

The sitution isn't all bad, Thompson explained. "The industry won't go down the tubes if we can get the government to move back — preferably completely out of the picture."

Thompson said he believes the industry has "bottomed out" and should begin to recover. There are, however, problems to be solved still ahead. "Thank God, he said, we live in a country where we have the opprtunity to work on them."

There won't be any more 1981's for the petroleum industry, Thompson predicted, but there will be some good times ahead.

"Most of the people in the business today made money when oil was $3 a barrel .. and they're going to continue to make money," Thompson said. "We can't do it with the government hanging on our backs with a bigger load year after year."

Midland College's Free Eneterprise Lecture Series continues through April 28.

Texas Railroad Commission chairman Mack Wallace was scheduled to speak at 10 a.m. today. Sharon Laufer, an analyst with the Texas Securties Board will speak at 7:30 p.m. today on "Securites regualtion: More than the S.E.C." All lectures are in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium.

T-bill rates at low level

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on short-term Treasury securities are at the lowest level in more than a month after falling about one-half percentage point in the latest auctions, officials say.

The government sold about $6.2 billion in new three-month T-bills Monday at an average discount rate of 8.165 percent, down from the 8.664 percent of last week.

In addition, about $6.2 billion in six-month bills were sold at an average rate of 8.248 percent, down from 8.705 percent.

The rates were the lowest since the 7.944 percent of Feb. 28 for three-month bills and the 8.171 percent of March 7 for six-month bills.

The new discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 8.48 percent for three-month bills and 8.75 percent for six-month bills.

Beginning today, in private accounts linked to the T-bill rates:

—Savings and loan associations may pay as much as 9 percent interest and commercial banks as much as 8.798 percent on six-month money market certificates compared with the 9 percent and 8.955 percent of the past week.

The new commercial bank ceiling is one-quarter point above the average discount rate for six-month T-bills for the past four weeks — 8.548 percent. The S&L ceiling is set at 9 percent when the discount rate is between 8.5 percent and 8.74 percent.

Fluor, China sign pipeline deal

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

PEKING — Fluor Corp. signed an agreement Monday to design, help build and then operate a 600-mile-long coal slurry pipeline from China's coal-rich Shanxi Province west of Peking to Shanghai, the country's largest industrial center.

The China National Coal Development Corp., in announcing the agreement, gave no figures for the project's eventual cost, though it is certain to run into hundreds of millions of dollars, making it one of the biggest undertaken with American cooperation.

A Fluor representative confirmed the agreement, technically a protocol that must be followed by a series of implementing contracts for design work, construction and initial operation, but refused to provide further details. Fluor President David S. Tappan Jr. signed the agreement here Monday.

Tappan had met earlier Monday with Deng Xiaoping, China's top leader, who reaffirmed Peking's interest in expanding economic ties with the United States despite increasing political tensions.

Although Deng sharply criticized the Reagan administration's decision last week to grant Chinese tennis star Hu Na political asylum, he said that such disputes should not affect trade and economic cooperation, according to Chinese sources.

Chinese officials described the agreement with Fluor as an expression of "good-faith intent" since both sides will proceed with work, starting immediately with conceptual engineering, without defining "the liability and responsibility of each party" until implementing contracts are signed.

The pipeline will run from Changzhi in southeast Shanxi province, which has some of China's largest coal deposits, to Nantong City, about 30 miles northwest of Shanghai, where industrial growth requires greater energy production.

The Chinese announcement did not say when construction would begin or the pipeline would begin operations. In its first phase, it will have a capacity of 15 million tons a year and twice that in its second phase.

Fluor already has a contract to upgrade one of China's largest open-pit mines in Liaoning Province in northeast Chin.

With a German partner, the company has been discussing development of three even larger open-pit mines in Inner Mongolia with a projected annual production of 113 million tons.

Japan protests IRS investigation of Toyota

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — An attempt by the Internal Revenue Service to subpoena information about automobiles made and sold in Japan by Toyota Motor Co. has drawn a diplomatic protest from the Japanese government, it was disclosed Monday.

The existence of the protest note and other confidential correspondence between the Japanese government and the State Department concerning the controversial case surfaced during a U.S. District Court hearing here.

The IRS claims that the financial data regarding sales in Japan of Japanese-made products is needed to test the validity of the prices that Toyota's wholly owned U.S. sales subsidiary, Torrance, Calif.-based Toyota Motor Sales USA Inc., must pay the parent company for automobiles sold in this country.

It is seeking the data to determine Toyota Motor Sales' federal income taxes for the years 1975-78, the IRS say.

U.S. District Judge Cynthia Holcomb Hall expressed surprise that the government had not informed her about the secret correspondence.

Daniel F. Ross, a trial attorney in the Department of Justice's tax division in Washington, D.C., who is representing the IRS, responded: "The diplomatic correspondence of the United States is classified, your honor."

At Hall's request, however, Ross later offered to provide a copy of the secret correspondence within 10 days, providing that she neither make the documents public nor share them with "opposing counsel."

That was a reference to Washington attorney John S. Nolan, who is representing Toyota Motor Co.

Stock market mixed

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market turned mixed today after flirting once again with new highs in the Dow Jones industrial average.

The widely recognized average of 30 blue chips, up 17.12 Monday and another 4 points in early trading today, was down 3.48 at 1,138.35 by noontime.

Gainers outnumbered losers by a narrow margin among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The Dow Jones industrials' closing high of 1,145.90 was established on March 24.

Analysts were watching closely to see how much resistance the market would encounter today around the levels from which it turned back three weeks ago.

The latest round of buying was attributed in large measure to a downturn in interest rates in the credit markets Monday.

Brokers also pointed out that signs of stability in worldwide oil prices eased fears of further strains on the international financial system, and helped depressed energy stocks to rally.

American Motors led the active list, down ⅜ at 5⅝. The company doubled the size of a public offering set for today to 10 million shares.

The NYSE's composite index slipped .11 to 88.96. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .55 at 393.83.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 39.68 million shares at noontime, against 37.66 million at the same point Monday.

BUSINESS MIRROR

Mismanagement causes failures

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — Businesses died last year at a rate unsurpassed since the 1930s, and in almost every instance they were simply listed as victims of recession.

But it wasn't so. Lots of them died because they were mismanaged. It probably wasn't nice to say so last year, but this year some more objective analyses are gaining a hearing.

But certainly you cannot say that homebuilders could have bucked the economic obstacles presented them. Or can you?

Toll Brothers, the Philadelphia area's largest home construction company, built more homes last year than in any other year and claims it earned a return of 8 percent on sales.

Most homebuilders, said Robert Toll, president, are inflexibile. They have no systems. They remain entrepreneurs rather than expanding their enterprises into businesses. They exploit opportunities, and fail when opportunites shrink.

Most homebuilders last year sought to interest customers with the same sales tactics they had used in good times. But they failed to grasp the new factor, said Toll. They were ignorant about financing. Toll studied it.

Retailers were also on the failure list, and many of the largest retailers experienced severe problems short of bankruptcy. Once again the recession became the catchall for explaining their failure.

But poor management certainly must bear some of the blame.

"Retailers lack long-range concern for changing economic and technological situations," says Stephen J. Recobs, director of Purdue University's Retail Institute.

Recobs and colleague Richard A. Feinberg surveyed chief executives of 100 top-volume retail department stores throughout the country, asking them to list the specific issues facing their industry.

"Only 7 percent of the executives mentioned the economy, and 6 percent cited technology as significant long-range issues," he said. Said Feinberg: "Retail executives have, historically, been reactive and slow to adopt planning as an integral part of management."

Most analyses of economic conditions fix on a few bogeymen to account for what is happening, say Paul Lawrence and Davis Dyer. The list includes too much government, not enough government, worldwide recession, unfair competition from trading partners, greedy labor unions, obsolete industrial technology.

Davis and Lawrence, a professor at Harvard Business School, concede there is something to be said about such reasons, but they don't believe any of them reveal the complete truth.

In "Renewing American Industry," a book to be published April 29, they contend that many of our current economic problems follow from an inability of companies to anticipate and adapt to changing economic conditions.

Lawrence and Dyer surveyed seven major American industries — automotive, steel, hospitals, housing, agriculture, coal and telecommunications — and conclude that success or failure lies not so much in outside economic factors but in how an organization responds to fundamental changes in its environment.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

It's better not to convert debentures

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I have American General Corp. 11 percent convertible debentures, due to mature in the year 2077. These debentures are convertible into American General common stock at $55 a share. That stock is now trading above $55.

Would it be to my interest to convert the debentures to common at the stipulated $55 price and then sell the common at the higher price?

Doyle

A. No. If you want to unload that investment, you would do better by simply selling your debentures. Convertible securities can be mighty complicated, because the "conversion features" vary widely from one security to another.

You could convert your debentures into American General common stock by turning in your debentures. You would receive one share of common for each $55 face amount of debenture. For each $1,000 face amount of debenture, you would be entitled to 18 and a fraction shares of stock — 18.18 shares, to be exact. But, you would get only 18. The fractional share would be paid off in cash.

As I write this, your debentures have a market price of 130¼ — $1,302.50 for each $1,000 face amount — and American General common is trading at $67.50.

Simple arithmetic shows $67.50 times 18.18 to be $1,227.15. Each of your $1,000 face amount of debentures, at $1,302.50, has a market value $75.35 higher. So, if you sell your debentures, you'll get more money than you would by converting and selling the common stock you would receive in the exchange.

* * *

Q. I have purchased a number of bonds, issued by different corporations. None of these bonds is listed on either the New York or American Stock Exchange. As a result, there are no price quotations for them in any newspaper or any other publication I have seen.

Would you suggest I call several brokerage firms, to see what prices they quote on my bonds?

A. I suggest you start by calling the brokerage firm through which you bought the bonds. Then, you can try a few other brokerages. However, you'll find the prices to be pretty much in line.

There are literally tens of thousands of different bond issues. Most are not listed on stock exchanges, but are traded in the over-the-counter market. Even when a bond is listed on an exchange, the vast majority of trading in it takes place over the counter.

Roberts Auto Supply and Machine Shop, 1003 E. Florida, has one of the most complete and modern machine shops in Midland, as well as professional machinists Troy Roberts, Paul Bustillos and Vernon Sexon to guarantee that your parts will be done the way you need to have them"done. In most cases, work can be ready in one day. Come by Roberts Auto Supply, open from 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. weekdays and from 8 a.m. to noon on Saturday.

Roberts for machining, reconditioning parts

When you need machine work done on your automobile parts, you don't have to look far for expert machine work right here in Midland. It's Roberts Auto Supply and Machine Shop, located at 1003 E. Florida. Roberts has one of the most modern, complete machine shops in Midland, along with experienced machinists who can assure you of a superior job.

Everything you might need done in the way of auto machining can be done by Roberts. Flywheel resurfacing is done quickly and professionally with the equipment at Roberts, as well as pressing of wheel bearing and changing of wheel bearings on the axles. Roberts also has a connecting rod machine which can recondition those parts. There is a milling machine for resurfacing heads, for doing valve jobs, grinding valves and seats. Roberts can also install valve guides and seats.

Another machine is the Sunnen CK-10 honing machine. According to Bruce Hart, manager, this machine is the best machine made for honing cylinders for blocks. There is a brake drum lathe which can turn drums from golf cart size on up to 18 wheeler size. They can also turn disc rotors for disc brakes.

For cleaning your auto parts, Roberts has a glass bead blaster. This machine will not cut metal, but cuts through carbon, rust and paint to thoroughly clean your parts. Their steel blast machine which uses small stell pellets, will leave a shiney, custom finish on work.

A special jet cleaner replaces the usual machine shop vats of caustics which required overnight soaking to clean parts. This jet cleaner sprays caustics, cleaning in minutes what used to take hours by the old method.

Roberts offers one day service on most machining jobs. They also have all the parts available for reassembling the parts on your reconditioned engine.

According to Hart, Roberts doesn't just sell auto parts and do machining; they're also there to help you with any technical advice you may need, and are happy to help you at any time with questions about your automobile repairs and parts replacement.

Right now, it's time to get yor car ready for spring. Roberts has all the parts available for tune-ups, as well as belts, hoses and radiator caps. It's also time to spruce up your car, and Roberts has all the quality car-care products you might need. Come by Roberts weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and on Saturdays from 8 a.m. to 12 noon.

House of Carpets for better value, service

When you mention carpet in Midland, the name that immediately comes to mind for most people is House of Carpets, and it's no wonder. Back in 1951, when Midland's population was only 22,000, House of Carpets opened for business at its first location at 1502 N. Lamesa Rd. There were no other carpet stores in Midland at that time, so House of Carpets is literally Midland's oldest carpet dealer.

Even back in 1951, House of Carpets was more than just a carpet store. They offered furniture, lamps and other accessories, decorator window shades, vertical blinds, counter tops and resilient flooring and interior design services.

Today, House of Carpets offers all these items and services, plus many more. Included are wood flooring, ceiling fans, mini-blinds, vinyl floor-coverings, wallcoverings, draperies, upholstery fabrics and a complete professional design staff. This makes House of Carpets a complete decorating center for the entire Permian Basin area.

The friendly staff at House of Carpets are well-trained to help customers make the right decisions in their selections, and the quality products at House of Carpets are priced so reasonably, almost anyone can afford them.

House of Carpets is located in the Village Shopping Center and hours are from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday; 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday. Come by and see for yourself why House of Carpets has earned the reputation of being "Midland's most respected name in carpets".

We helped the Torturos when fire destroyed their home. Who can you turn to?

The Torturos weren't covered by any insurance. Red Cross found them a place to stay. We gave them food, warm jackets and winter boots.
Most people think it takes a major disaster like a flood, a hurricane or an earthquake for the Red Cross to respond. But Michael and Phyllis Torturo know differently. Their Red Cross disaster relief didn't stop with just food, clothing and shelter. We helped them re-establish their source of income.
Then showed them how to use those funds to obtain a trailer home for their family.
What if the next fire in town destroys your home? Who can you count on to lend a helping hand? You can count on us.
We'll Help. Will You?

Get ready for new improved U.S. Gold

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Gold is getting a new kind of glitter.

No more stodgy coins in glass cases. No more portraits of stodgy people who died before you were born.

Get ready for new improved U.S. Gold, with a capital G.

It will have fancy ridged edges, just like some potato chips, and it will have pictures of famous non-government types like Louis Armstrong and Helen Hayes. And it will be advertised on television right along with different ways to keep your lips red and underarms dry.

Tired of seeing its efforts to peddle gold sink like lead, the U.S. Treasury has turned to Broadway.

With the aid of New York's J. Aron & Co., a marketing company well-known in the investment community, gold will be subjected to what an Aron spokesman promised would be a "multifaceted media campaign." Coins will have a "striking new design." And an "exciting new name."

It also will run $430 or so for a 1 ounce coin. There will be a half-ounce piece for $225.

"This is going to be a disaster," says Bill Murray, manager of Dynamic Coin Investments in Wethersfield, Conn.

"When ... are they going to wise up and put Kennedy, Lincoln or Washington on these things?" asked Murray. "There's going to be no demand for these things. No one knows what they are."

The first of the new coins will feature musician Armstrong on the 1 ounce piece and architect Frank Lloyd Wright on the half ounce size.

Next year, poet Robert Frost and sculptor Alexander Calder will be pictured, and the following year, actress Helen Hayes and author John Steinbeck will shine.

"If you keep changing portraits, you put Booker T. Washington on it one year and Martha Washington on it another year, people get screwed up, especially the older people," said Murray. "They've got to get their act together and go with Kennedy, Lincoln or GW."

The people in the Wethersfields of America have seen this act before, and greeted it with all the excitement usually reserved for new issues of 20-cent stamps.

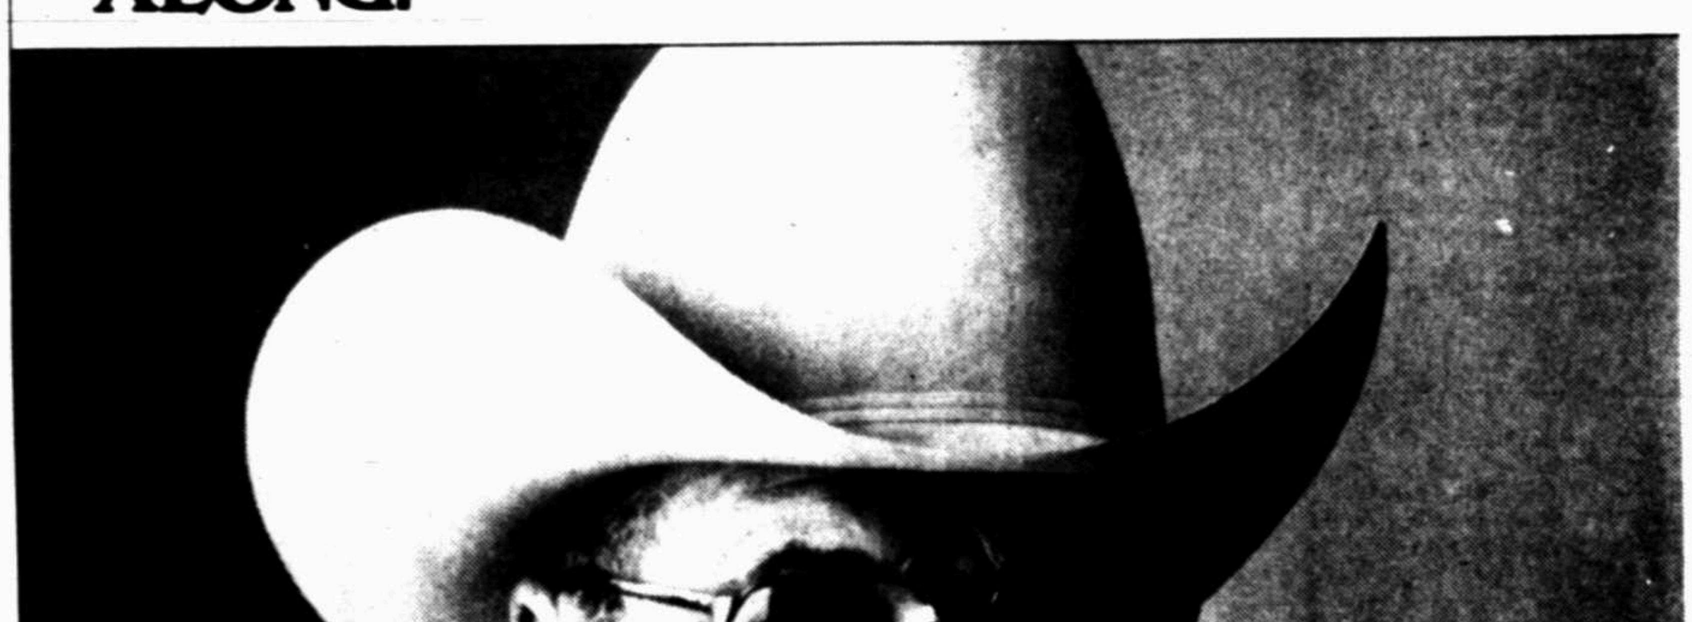
"WHEN IT COMES TIME TO RETIRE, IT'S A WHOLE LOT EASIER TO TAKE STANDING UP IF YOU KNOW YOU'VE BEEN GETTIN' READY FOR IT ALL ALONG."



"Everybody's gonna have to retire someday. I know it and so do you. That's how life is. And I believe retirement should be a good time. A prosperous time when you reap what you've been sowing all these years. So, I'm really talking about money. Unless you were born just plain rich and stayed that way, the Individual Retirement Accounts from Briercroft Savings are about the best things going to give people like you and me financial security. And that's not even to mention the tax advantages you'll have now by investing before you file your tax return.

"It's just like with football. You don't win games on Sunday. If you win, it's because you spent all week long getting yourself prepared. Stop by a Briercroft office today and open your Individual Retirement Account."

Army commander confined

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Former president and army commander Leopoldo Galtieri has been placed under detention for 60 days for criticizing the way Argentine officers waged the Falkland Islands war, the official Telam news agency says.

The agency said Galtieri, who was forced to retire because of Argentina's defeat in the war, was issued the punishment by Gen. Cristino Nicolaides, the current army commander.

Argentina's military code empowers the commander to sanction any active or retired officer whose conduct is judged to have damaged the army's honor.

Galtieri, 56, was head of the ruling military junta when Argentine troops invaded the Falklands April 2, 1982. He was sacked after the Argentines surrendered to British troops who recaptured the British colony to end the 74-day war.

Baby found near outhouse

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Authorities say they have little chance of finding the parents of a 10-day-old Mexican girl discovered abandoned in an outhouse when a passer-by heard her wails.

The dark-haired girl was listed in good condition Monday, a Juarez General Hospital spokesman said.

"She's doing fine now. She doesn't weigh much, and doesn't cry much, but she's fine," said the spokesman, who identified himself only as Juan.

Police said a teen-aged boy was walking past the outside of the outhouse on the edge of the Juarez city limits Sunday when he heard an infant's cries. Intrigued, the youth told police he walked closer, and found the baby, clad only in a light apron-like material, on the floor of the wooden paneled outhouse.

Juarez police said it is unlikely that in this city of 900,000 bordering El Paso, Texas, that they can discover the parent's identities.

The baby will be transferred to a Mexican government welfare agency until authorities can find a permanent home for the girl, the hospital spokesman said.

Explorer stranded near pole

BRISTOL, England (AP) — David Hempleman-Adams, who hopes to become the first person to walk alone to the North Pole, is stranded on Arctic ice with bad weather preventing food drops, his manager said today.

"We are certainly getting concerned. We need an aircraft out there as quickly as possible," the manager, John Pallister, told reporters in Bristol.

He said Hempleman-Adams, 26, who set out March 19, had stopped and pitched tent in attempt to conserve his food and fuel, now sufficient to last just "a few days."

Pallister said that according to reports from Canada, bad weather prevented a twin-engine aircraft from making a scheduled food drop from Ellesmere Island, and the airstrip there was now closed.

The British explorer would rapidly weaken without food in the sub-zero temperatures, Pallister added. Remaining stationary, he would need only about half the 7,000 calories a day required while walking.

The setback came as Hempleman-Adams, who has a cracked rib, was reported within about 20 days of his goal.

He had been covering about 25 miles a day since setting out from Ward Hunt Island, the northernmost tip of land in North America.

Chinese premier loses temper

PEKING (AP) — Premier Zhao Ziyang left for Australia and New Zealand today after lashing out at the Reagan administration for granting asylum to Chinese tennis star Hu Na.

Zhao's 11-day trip is the first by a Chinese head of government to the south Pacific since the 1949 Communist takeover in China.

When reporters at Peking airport asked Zhao bout Miss Hu, the premier became angry.

"Are you stationed in Peking? Did you know that Hu Na was really persecuted in China?" he snapped.

"The United States has no reason whatsoever to give so-called political asylum to Hu Na on the grounds that she was subjected to political persecution in China.

"Of course the event of Hu Na is over, but the influence remains."

The United States announced on April 4 it was granting asylum to Miss Hu, 19, who said she had been threatened in China because of her refusal to join the Communist Party and serve as a model to youth.

China filed a strong protest, calling the decision "one more case" of U.S. interference in China's internal affairs.

Oil slick closes plant

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Saudi Arabia closed one of its water desalination plants today as a massive oil slick crept to within 10 miles of its eastern coastline on the Persian Gulf, oil industry sources said.

Oil company sources in the Saudi city of Dharhan told The Associated Press by telephone that King Fahd ordered the Al Khobar water plant closed after the slick was sighted creeping towards the eastern industrial city Monday night. The king also ordered that fishing be halted in the gulf waters abutting the Saudi coastline and be shifted to the Red Sea on the country's western coast, said the sources, who refused further identification.

Saudi Arabia operates the largest water desalination plant in the world at Jubail, with a daily capacity of about 250 million gallons.

Environment officials said the latest helicopter surveillance flights have fixed the slick at about 200,000 barrels of oil with its nearest point floating about 30 miles north of Manama.

Four wells bombed by Iraqi jets have been leaking crude into gulf waters at a daily average rate of 2,000 barrels, and rescue crews can't get into the combat zone to cap them because Iraq and Iran won't guarantee their safety.

PROTECT YOURSELF FROM THE IRS WITH AN IRA FROM FIRST CITY.

Why pay more now when you can pay less later?

With a First City Individual Retirement Account (IRA), you can set aside tax-deductible funds now to use for your retirement years later, when your taxes should be much lower.

As an individual wage earner, you can make a tax-deductible IRA contribution of up to $2,000 a year, $2,250 if your non-working spouse is included, or $4,000 when both spouses work and file a joint return. Deposits made during 1982 are deductible on your 1982 return. And the tax will be deferred on the interest earned as long as it's reinvested in your IRA.

What's more, unlike arrangements with brokerage firms or regular money market funds, your First City IRA is insured up to $100,000 by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. This is in addition to the insurance you may have on other deposits.

So what it all boils down to is this: You can continue to pay the IRS more in taxes right now. Or you can save now, earn a higher interest rate, and pay a lot less later on. All you need is an Individual Retirement Account from First City.

Call Venita Gaston at 685-5292 or come visit with Venita in our personal banking lobby in First City Center.

Deadline for '82 deposits is April 15, 1983

Group formed to aid with forms

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

He was born 65 years ago in rural East Texas. His birth certificate lay long forgotten in some county file.

When Medicare was required, he needed that piece of paper, stamped with the certified seal. Finding it can often take awhile.

The documents he so badly needed arrived two months after he took his own life.

Attorney Nancy Hart knew the man. She also knows many others like him.

"I've run into this just doing it for friends," said the former Midlander, who recently returned from Europe where she was practicing international law. "There are so many that come through. People don't understand the forms and there are so many documents that they have to get together."

After seeing the confused eyes that wandered through her door, after hearing the questions about rejections for aid, after studying insufficient checks, Ms. Hart decided to do something about it.

With help of the Human Relations Department, Department of Human Resources and Social Security, almost 20 volunteers gathered Monday night for the first of two training sessions to help others.

People Who Assist in Filling Out Forms (PAFF) was formed to do just that.

According to Ms. Hart, most of the problems people encounter when applying for Social Security, Medicare, Supplemental Security Income (SSI), food stamps and Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) can be eliminated when people correctly fill out the forms and have the proper documents.

Unfortunately, many forms are difficult to understand and many people have no idea which documents are needed.

When they find out, they often don't know where to obtain them.

Handing out copies of records, forms, guidance tips and miscellaneous information, Ms. Hart led the first training session at the HRC office, 410 N. Weatherford St. Another session has been scheduled there at 6:30 p.m. April 20.

Following the training sessions, volunteers will hold clinics on the fourth Sunday of each month from 2 to 5 p.m. at the HRC office. On the second Sunday of each month, the clinics will be held from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. in Meeting Room C at the Central YMCA, 800 N. Big Spring Street. The nursery will be open at no charge and ramps for those in wheelchairs will be installed at the YMCA.

Homeless widow may be moving into new house

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A widow whose dilapidated frame home recently was destroyed by a fire may be getting a new house in Midland's windowpane area, while other residents in the economically depressed area will be getting water and sewer lines.

At the request of consultant Barbara Ellis, the Midland County Commissioners' Court on Monday approved juggling federal Community Development funds to build or acquire a new house for the widow, 67-year-old Nellie Buys.

"She's homeless right now," said Ms. Ellis, who is working with the county in its $1.6 million improvements program for the windowpane area in south central Midland. "It's an emergency situation, as she basically is without a home...Her house burned down because she had open-flame heaters in it."

Ms. Ellis speculated that "the people at HUD (U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development) would be quite amenable" to allowing $23,000 to acquire a new three-bedroom house for Mrs. Buys, who lives on about $400-a-month income, Ms. Ellis said. She said the woman could acquire a ready-built house, a mobile home or possibly a standard house and live on her old lot or wherever she could afford to move. Her present lot has a water well and cesspool.

"I sure think this is good use of money," said Ms. Ellis, who is a consultant for the architectural-engineering firm of Parkhill, Smith & Cooper.

In surveying the Buys house prior to the fire, Ms. Ellis said the house was so "structurally unsound" that HUD's allotted $8,500 for repairing the house was inadequate to finance work.

"Her house was so structurally unsound...that it was falling over," Ms. Ellis said. "If we could have fixed her house up, she wouldn't have had open-flame heaters."

The three-year $1.6 million federal program calls for replacing six houses in the 80-household area, repairing about 30 houses, paving streets and laying curbs and gutters and installing water and sewer lines. Already, a $290,000 child day-care center has been built in the area.

The windowpane area is bordered by Midland city limits, is considered part of urbanized rural Midland County but is without city water, sewer and other services.

In addition to approving efforts to get Mrs. Buys "decent" and "safe" housing, the commissioners approved a request by engineer Gary Harris to advertise for bids on installing water and sewer lines in the windowpane area.

Harris estimated the cost of laying 10,000 feet of eight- and six-inch water lines about three feet deep at about $215,000, and computed the cost of installing 10,000 feet of sewer lines six to 10 feet deep at $85,000. Bids are to be studied June 3.

In other business, the commissioners discussed means of financing drainage improvements along a five-mile segment of Loop 250 in northeast Midland. "Give us an estimate, multiply by two, and we may be close," Commissioner Durward Wright quipped in discussing the drainage with Charles Muery, right-of-way agent for the Texas State Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

"We need to get rid of the water as quickly as possible," Muery noted, "but in the natural flow."

Mind and body do have effect on one another, nurse reveals

By GAIL BURKE

Psychosomatic. No definition is usually needed. It's in the head.

Wrong, says Wanda Mohr, a registered nurse who is completing her master's degree in behavorial science.

As part of a continuing education program, about 30 Midland Memorial Hospital medical personnel gathered Monday to hear Ms. Mohr lecture on what is now called "psycho/physiological disorders."

"When I first started nursing, these two views — mind and body — were separate," said Ms. Mohr, who will enter practice with her husband, Dr. Brian Mohr.

"Nobody could come to a conclusion (about psychosomatic disorders). But, I've got news for you, we think we have an answer. Psychosomatic is a misnomer — (that) one part of the body does not affect another part is not true. The mind and the body work together."

Ms. Mohr outlined the various levels of psycho/physiological disorders, ranging from actual physical conditions related to stress to factitious disorders, which are made up illnesses.

As Ms. Mohr characterized each level of the disorders, she pointed out that "none of this is set in granite. Things may change again."

Most of the MMH employees seemed to accept most of Ms. Mohr's lecture until it came to defining stress.

"Nothing is stressful in and of itself in any situation," Ms. Mohr said, explaining that a job is not stressful, but how a person perceives that job may make the task a stressful situation.

"It's what we make of it," she added.

While one employee questioned Ms. Mohr's interpretation of stress, a few listeners arched eyebrows and others nodded in agreement.

"There are no causes — sufficient conditions — for anything which occurs in medicine," Ms. Mohr said. "Physical or mental, there must be a variety of factors.

Speaking about "learned behavior" Ms. Mohr gave an example of "a mother who pulls a kid out of school every time he has a stomach ache is setting a child up for chronic indigestion."

While women are more prone to vocalizing psycho/physiological disorders, Ms. Mohr said men are not running far behind.

What used to be called "hysteria," is now known as "conversion disorders. Most people think this kind of a condition is imaginery, but Ms. Mohr said "they (patients) truly believe there is something wrong."

She cautioned nurses and other medical personnel to be aware of all types of psycho/physiological disorders, but not to "laugh or take them lightly."

The hour-lecuture was to familiarize nurses with different levels of these disorders. Treatment procedures will be given at a later date.

Park acreage to be burned to prevent catastrophe

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

BIG BEND NATIONAL PARK — For centuries nature went unchallenged in the Great Chihuahuan Desert. Then came man, altering by livelihood and hobby the eco-system of the desert and putting to an end the grass and timber fires which once checked the accumulation of brush.

Now, National Park Service officials are faced with creating the same fires once spawned by nature so they might avert a potential hazardous blaze in the future.

"Essentially what we're trying to do is duplicate what nature would have done with lightning before we had fire fighters on the scene," said Robert Huggins, chief of interpretation for Big Bend National Park. "We want to reduce fuel loads to lessen the possibility of a major catastrophe."

About 100 acres will be "prescribed burned" in this year's project, which includes removing by fire certain brush in the Basin.

"We started doing some burning (last week) in the Basin," said Huggins.

The Basin acreage earmarked for burning consists of dead material such as fallen limbs, pine needles and grass, all of which are situated in stands of juniper and pine. Care is being taken, however, to retain the trees.

"We have a crew in from the National Forest Service, as well as the National Park Service, and they're doing a tremendous job to make sure there's no damage to trees by keeping them damp," he explained.

The Park Service also has worked to better develop Rio Grande Village, Huggins added. A new visitors'center was opened last year and a parking lot at the site should be completed in the near future.

Additionally, a Class B campground with 150 to 200 sites has been developed from a former overflow area at the village.

Huggins noted that during spring break it was erroneously reported all primitive camping sites would be permanently closed. "As a matter of fact," he corrected, "we're encouraging people to use those areas."

An ongoing project throughout portions of the park is trail renovation, including that in the South Rim area of the Chisos Mountains. High school age students, said Huggins, volunteer their time to such projects through the Student Conservation Association program.

"They do a tremendous job for us," said the interpretation chief.

While spring break saw a tremendous influx of persons at the park — an annual phenomena — Huggins noted that back-country use is down somewhat this year. The percentage of persons challenging the back-country trails with hiking boots and perseverance has dropped 6 percent compared to the same quarter in 1982, while 5 percent fewer persons are gearing four-wheelers over back-country roads.

However, shooting the rapids of Santa Elena's Rockslide or Mariscal Canyon's Tight Squeeze — as well as leisurely slicing a canoe between the myriad-colored walls of Boquillas Canyon — remains as popular as ever. Issuance of river use permits in the initial three months of 1983 has risen 4 percent over the same period last year.

Lawyers to begin questioning witnesses in Lackey trial

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Following two weeks of jury selection, testimony in the capital murder trial of Clarence Allen Lackey, 28, of Lubbock was to begin this afternoon in Midland's 238th State District Courtroom before a six-man, six-woman jury and two alternate jurors.

Defense and prosecuting attorneys had questioned more than 90 prospective jurors since March 28 when jury selection began from a 109-member jury panel.

The state has lined up 51 witnesses, including Texas Rangers, sheriff's deputies, police officers and detectives, and pathologists, in an effort to re-convict Lackey for the July 31, 1977, rape and slaying of 23-year-old Texas Tech University secretary Toni Diane Kumpf in Lubbock.

The defense will hold the defendant mute and not place him on the witness stand.

On a change of venue from Lubbock to San Angelo, Lackey was convicted in 1978 of the capital murder of Ms. Kumpf after he had crashed into her apartment near the Texas Tech University campus and abducted her. Ms. Kumpf, whose throat was slashed, was found dead in a cotton field on the day of her abduction. Lackey was sentenced to die by lethal injection.

The sentence initially was upheld in appellate court but was overturned by a higher court due to alleged improper questioning of a prospective juror. The appellate court ruled that a particular juror, who said he could not be an effective juror due to the pressure of knowing the punishment for capital murder was life imprisonment or death, was not questioned thoroughly. The appellate court held that any normal, rational and conscientious person would be adversely affected to some degree by sitting in judgment at a capital murder trial.

But the court determined that the overriding question is this: Is that hindrance so burdensome that the person effectively would be disabled as a juror. The apparent reason for overturning the verdict was that the dismissed prospective juror might have been eligible to serve on the jury and might have voted for acquittal.

Late Monday afternoon, Trial Judge Robert Wright, who presided over the 1978 Lackey trial, admonished the 12 jurors and two alternate jurors to obey court orders, including avoiding any news reports or conversation about the case outside the courtroom and not discussing the case among themselves until testimony is over and they are deliberating on a verdict.

"It is of utmost importance...that you abide by the instructions," Wright told the jurors. "It is of utmost importance for obvious reasons." Any impropriety by the jury, any jury misconduct and any semblance of the jury not being "fair and impartial" could result in a mistrial.

The judge told the jurors that the court could sequester them throughout the trial, which could be four, five or more days, but, "We do not feel that this is important at this time. Stay away from news while you serve as jurors."

Defense motions for sequestering the jury have been repeatedly denied by the judge.

Since some jurors expressed a distaste for tobacco smoking, the judge ordered no smoking in the courtroom or jury room. However, he said, "We will not overlook entirely" preferences of the smokers. "If you in the jury room want to relax it (the order) some, you have leave to do so."

Wright again reminded the jurors that they are the "sole judge of the facts" in the case and that he is the "sole judge of the law" applicable to the case.

The judge told the jurors that occasionally in the trial the jury would be ordered out of the courtroom and into the jury room when "matters of law" are discussed by the adversary lawyers and then ruled on by the judge. Wright told the jurors not to try to decipher the proceedings, particularly since sound travels from the courtroom into the adjoining jury room.

"You all talk and make some noise, because I don't want you all to know what's going on."

In a pre-trial hearing late Monday to suppress a statement made by Lackey's ex-girl friend, Carol Jean Johnson, former Lubbock County Criminal District Attorney Alton Griffin, who prosecuted Lackey in the first trial, said the woman freely gave a statement and gave permission for her home to be searched.

"She was afraid for her own safety — not of the police or myself — but from Clarence Lackey," Griffin said. He said the woman's house was in disarray and was splattered with blood. "She knew about a brutal-type murder."

Richard and Diana Lowder spent $500,000 to restore the Thomas J. Rusk Hotel to its look of the 1920's.

Couple restores hotel to its 1920's glory

RUSK (AP) — The opening of the Thomas J. Rusk Hotel, a restored version of the structure built on the courthouse square in the 1920s, was the talk of the town.

The two-story hotel opened last month to coincide with the weekend of the season's inaugural run of the celebrated Texas State Railroad, which draws tourists from around the state for a ride on antique trains powered by restored steam engines.

The hotel and the train shared about equal time in conversations throughout this East Texas community.

"Have you seen the hotel?" they asked at a barbecue the night before the train ride. The question repeatedly popped up the next day during and after the 25.5-mile train ride to Palestine.

All the interest in the hotel was generated by Richard and Diana Lowder, the new owners who will hold a grand opening April 22.

The Lowders bought the hotel about nine months ago and restored it to designs of the 1920s at a cost of about $500,000.

The hotel opened its doors March 18 to its first guests in five years.

The guests, most of them participating in the state railroad festivities, included Texas lawmakers and employees of the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department and the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

"The best way to open a hotel is to rent all your rooms, which we were quite fortunate to do," Lowder said. "That doesn't happen all the time."

Lowder is no stranger to the hotel business. The past eight years, he worked as a general manager in regional offices of the Hilton Hotels Corp. in Houston, Midland and Salt Lake City, Utah. He has opened eight major hotels for various firms.

"I did have a lot of experience in larger hotels," he said. "But it was our desire in seeking our own adventure to develop a project that has a personality of our own. We tried to do that in our design and our interior furnishing."

The original interior design lacked creativity, Lowder said. So they added wallpaper indicative of the period, wood molding on the walls and doors and tile floors in the bathrooms.

To enhance that nostalgic look, brass beds and ceiling fans were installed in each of the 36 guest rooms and three suites.

For the outside, green awnings were placed above the entrances to the lobby and the private Sam Houston Club, as well as over the windows on the second floor.

Bricks were added to the sidewalks in front of the hotel, harking back to the 1920s when brick streets and sidewalks were a familiar sight.

"People are reaching out for and touching the nostalgia of the smaller hotels," he said. "I envision that in each of the smaller communities in Texas there will be a movement in the restoration of the small hotels."

The Lowders visited Rusk upon learning that the hotel was for sale after sitting vacant for five years. It was in poor condition, and the walls had collected five layers of paint over the years.

"It's exactly what we wanted," they said.

"I wish you could see the pictures. The before and after is really dramatic," Mrs. Lowder said.

"Everyone...just couldn't believe we came up with something like this," Lowder said.

They credited civic and business leaders in the community for their support.

"Well, I think it's just great to do what they've done for the downtown area," said Chamber of Commerce President Charles Hassell. "They have spruced up the area and are bringing more people to town. We think it's a great asset to Rusk. The citizens are behind it 100 percent."

Bryan Robinson, 29, a maintenance mechanic, said "I'll tell you, Rusk hasn't seen this much traffic on the sqaure in many years."

Everybody in cars and on foot was stopping and the traffic jams on the square were amazing, Mrs. Lowder said.

DEATHS

Charley Medley

Charley Medley

Services for Charley Medley, 73, of 612 Waverly, will be at 4 p.m. Wednesday in Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Ross Payne of Cotton Flat Baptist Church officiating and the Rev. Michael D. Buchman assisting. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Medley died Monday afternoon at a Midland hospital following a brief illness.

He was born March 18, 1910, in Ada, Okla. He grew up in Mountainair, N.M. He moved to Midland from Albuquerque, N.M., where he had lived for 30 years and was a church building contractor. He also was a building contractor in Midland until his retirement 11 years ago. He helped build Kelview Heights Baptist Church among others. He was a member of Calvary Baptist Church.

Survivors include his wife, Martha Medley of Midland; four daughters, Charline Bryant and Sue Bock, both of Las Lunas, N.M., and Catherine Cornell and Patsy Richards, both of El Cajon, Calif.; a son, Jerry Medley of Vista, Calif.; a stepdaughter, Daphne Thomas of Lubbock; three stepsons, T.A. DeVore of Bloomfield, N.M., Vernon DeVore of Lillian, and Don DeVore of Denver, Colo.; two brothers, John Medley of Alburquerque, and Paul Medley of Socorro, N.M.; a sister, Mary Hanson of Willard, N.M.; 13 grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren.

The family requests memorials be made to Hospice of Midland, P.O. Box 2621, Midland, Txas 79702.

STANTON — Services for Mary Steward, 82, of Stanton, are pending at Gilbreath Funeral Home in Stanton.

Mrs. Steward died Monday morning in a Big Spring hospital following a brief illness.

Antifreeze aids seeds

An antifreeeze for cars, polyethylene glycol, may reduce the leakage in damage or aged seeds and help them regain youthful vigor. Federal researchers think the antifreeze gives the cells of seeds time to repair their membranes and thus keep such lifegiving chemicals as enzymes, nucleotides and amino acids from leaking out.

800 plants improved

"Most of (the volunteers' duties at the clinic) is going to be getting the documents together — birth certificates, marriage records, divorce records, military records," Ms. Hart said. "I also envision some people coming in with letters from Social Security they don't understand. We'll be filling out a lot of forms for them."

The volunteers will be assisting applicants with different steps. According to Joy Bates, a PAFF volunteer employed with Midland Independent School District Head Start and Family Services, the Department of Human Resources helps walk its applicants through the long steps. PAFF, however, can assist the DHR with getting the valid records together and helping to correctly fill out forms.

General information also should be shared with applicants, Ms. Hart said.

For example, people should understand they need to file for Medicare before the age of 65. They need to know what other services are available if they have additional needs, such as eyeglasses, that cannot be met by one organization.

They need to know death certificates are filed where a person dies — not where he is buried. They need to know they must prove common law marriages by having both parties acknowledge the relationship. If one partner is dead, two members of the deceased person's family must acknowledge the relationship.

People should know Medicare pays a minimum amount unless an operative report is included in the application, and parents can collect on a worker's death if they are at least 62 years old and half of their support comes from the worker.

They need to know their cases will be re-evaluated at certain time periods and if they can't meet at the appointed time they should call immediately or risk losing payment that month.

The list is long but the volunteers at PAFF hope they can alleviate some of the confusion.

By helping applicants fill out forms, they may also help eliminate whatever image of red tape may be tied up in the overworked federal agehcies.

According to Ms. Bates, one woman she knows received a Christmas basket and toys from the AFDC in December. Although short on money, the woman did find a way to show her appreciation to the agency for helping her.

She wrote a simple thank you note and delivered it to the office herself.

Twenty cattle killed when tractor-trailer rig overturns

DALLAS (AP) — Rush-hour traffic was snarled for miles when a tractor-trailer rig hauling 105 cattle overturned and steers scampered across the freeway toward the nearby Trinity River bottoms.

About 20 head of cattle were killed Monday in the accident. Sheriff's officers rounded up all but about nine or 10 of the other 85 that escaped, said Dallas County sheriff's spokesman James Ewell.

"If somebody else got to them first, they may already be on a butcher's block somewhere," he said of the loose cattle.

The cattle truck overturned about 4:30 a.m. on Interstate 35E, Ewell said. The freeway was reopened shortly before 10 a.m., he said.

The driver was not injured when his truck overturned, blocking all the northbound lanes of the freeway, Ewell said. Diverted traffic was bumper-to-bumper along side streets in the Oak Cliff area.

Peeping tom incident investigated

Police are investigating a peeping tom incident in a women's restroom at a downtown office building.

A woman employee at the Wilco Building, 415 W. Wall Ave., told officers she had entered the restroom about 1:45 p.m. Monday and noticed a man looking at her through a fresh hole in the wall that separates the men's and women's restrooms. A suspect in a similar case about a month ago was being questioned.

In burglary complaints to city police during the past 24 hours, Dick Coats of 3111 W. Louisiana Ave. said tools, fishing equipment and a lawn tiller were taken from the bed of his pickup while the vehicle was parked at his residence. Total loss was placed at $1,271.

Jewelry and a .22-caliber gun valued at $365 were reported taken in a break-in of the Babette Taylor home, 702 E. Broadway. Entry was gained by prying open the front door.

And a television set worth $300 was reported stolen in a burglary of the Teresa Forge residence at 2303 N. Main. There was no sign of forced entry, according to police.

Driver crashes through school

SEMINOLE — Seminole High School sustained extensive fire and smoke damage Monday night when a car crashed through the building's west wall and burst into flames.

The body of the driver, Jerry Dale Switzer, 43, of Seminole was recovered from the scene.

According to a Seminole Sentinel spokesman, Switzer was leaving the parking lot of a restaurant near the school when his vehicle went out of control, crossed the Hobbs Highway, went through a vacant field and crossed another street. The car then jumped an 18-inch metal guard rail, traveled across the school grounds and crashed through the west wall of the high school.

An autopsy has been ordered in Switzer's death. Officials theorize he may have suffered some type of seizure.

Firemen were summoned to the scene at 8:35 p.m.

Damage to the school resulted in cancellation of classes today.

Agency to discuss aging

AUSTIN — The Texas Department on Aging will hold public hearings Wednesday and Thursday to discuss the "Plan on Aging — 1984-85."

On Thursday, the hearing will be from 10 a.m. to noon at the Ector County Health Department, 221 N. Texas, in Odessa.

In a press release from the TDA, executive director Chris Kyker said they "welcome suggestions from any interested individual or organization."

Among the items to be considered are family assistance in the care of the elderly, determination of priority services and identification of minimum services that should be available.

Therapy not always useful

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Psychologist Bernie Zilbergeld wants to confirm our worst fears about the value of psychotherapy — those well-publicized cases in which people got worse instead of better while in treatment and committed heinous crimes.

John Hinckley had been seeing a psychiatrist when he shot President Reagan. So was Michael Miller, the son of President Reagan's tax attorney, who allegedly raped his mother and bludgeoned her to death.

Zilbergeld, known for his work in sex therapy, upon hearing such tales, offers a raised eyebrow and a cynical "You see?"

He says that the process of self-enlightenment that millions of Americans have sought since the faddish human potential movement of the 1960s isn't all it's been hyped up to be. He says it doesn't change people — except in a limited number of cases — and believes that most people who are in therapy don't need it.

Zilbergeld, 43, a clinical psychologist with a small private practice in Berkeley, Calif., wrote "Male Sexuality," a 1978 book based on his experiences conducting sex therapy. Two years later he and colleague Michael Evans created a stir when they wrote a paper questioning the high rates of success reported by sex-therapy gurus William Masters and Virginia Johnson in treating common sexual problems. His new book, "The Shrinking of America, Myths of Psychological Change" (Little, Brown, $17.50), challenges what he calls the "therapeutic sensibility," which he defines as the popular assumption that people can easily change or improve their behavior or personalities through psychotherapy.

"I'M NOT CRITICIZING one particular form of therapy," he says. "I'm criticizing the whole notion in general. People are far more difficult to change than we have been led to believe, and therapy is terribly ineffective in changing people. That's OK," he adds, "because as far as I'm concerned, most people don't need to change. But they don't know that."

Zilbergeld disapproves of psychoanalysis or any other form of long-term therapy. He says he sees most of his clients no more than 25 times — once a week for seven months. "There's nothing you can get in 10 years that you can't get in 25 sessions," he asserts.

However, he says he only handles types of cases that respond quickly to treatment. "I don't work with psychotics, addicts or criminals. I basically try to work with the kinds of problems research shows are most amenable to therapeutic change" — in his case, relationship difficulties and certain types of sexual dysfunction.

"You ask the person, 'Why did you go to therapy?' and they say, 'Because I wanted to cut down smoking' or 'I wanted to be able to deal more effectively with the children.' Then you ask them, 'Have those things happened?' They say, 'No, but I still had a good time, I had a lot of insights.' Therapy, as far as I can tell, is far better at comforting people than it is at changing them. A lot of people who go to therapy would not go if they knew that."

DEPRESSION IS ONE of the leading complaints of people who seek professional psychotherapy, but Zilbergeld says it is one of the mental health problems that is least amenable to treatment, except in mild forms.

He believes the only areas in which psychotherapists clearly are helpful are in the treatment of phobias, common sexual complaints and mild depression. For the wide range of mental problems from which people seek relief, he says that formal therapy has little to offer.

Not surprisingly, many of Zilbergeld's colleagues do not greet his charges with wild enthusiasm. Says clinical psychologist Rogers Wright, president-elect of the California State Psychological Association: "There is no way the kinds of allegations he has made can be substantiated by thorough research. If so, the whole mental health movement is dominated by charlatans and the consumers of the service are being dishonest with themselves."

But Dr. James Grotstein, associate clinical professor of psychiatry at University of California-Los Angeles, is less quick to dismiss Zilbergeld's claims. "The effect of psychotherapy is a hard thing to gage. A lot of people have been helped, and a lot have not. But they have not been canvassed. The people who have been treated aren't known, they don't talk about it. And who asks the therapist? I've never been canvassed and don't know any therapists who have been."

ZILBERGELD DIDN'T conduct massive research before arriving at his rather depressing conclusions about the efficacy of professional psychotherapy, though he does refer to other studies conducted on specific populations, such as juvenile delinquents. On the whole, he is skeptical about the validity of most research to either prove or disprove the value of therapy.

He cites a study in the book that compared a group of patients given behavior therapy and psychoanalysis with a control group that received no treatment. The survey found that 93 percent of the behavior therapy clients and 77 percent of the psychoanalysis clients showed improvement in overall adjustment.

However, 77 percent of the control group also improved. "How do you know that a lot of problems won't improve just with the passage of time?" Zilbergeld asks.

And to make matters muddier, therapists are misleading about the results they achieve, Zilbergeld says, and tend to make exaggerated claims of success. But is he saying that many of his fellow therapists are dishonest?

"Rather than saying therapists are dishonest — a case which could be made — I will say that therapists are affected by the same disease that affects everybody else: they want to be seen in the most positive light possible. You could easily get the idea that there are no failures, that there are no minimum successes, that there are no successes that then rapidly relapse. There are only these incredible cures. But cures in therapy are very rare. Problems generally do not go away," he says, although symptoms may be diminished.

Tips given for dealing with obscene callers

Hearst Feature Service

Obscene callers most probably are titillated by the fear and loathing they inspire in their victims. However harmless they may be, their calls create considerable mental turmoil and untold inconvenience.

The telephone company does not act without authorization from the police department, and advises complaining customers first to make a formal complaint.

Provoking callers, say those who deal with such complaints, usually only spurs them on. Blowing a loud whistle has been used as a deterrent successfully by some women, but it's not a recommended method, as it could also provoke the caller to respond in kind with his next call.

Stuffed flank steak unusual

DINNER FARE
Flank Steak & French Fries
Broccoli Casserole & Rolls

STUFFED FLANK STEAK

Repeated by request.

1 flank steak, about 1½ pounds
1 tablespoon butter
1 small onion, finely chopped
½ cup fine dry bread crumbs
4½-ounce can deviled ham
¼ teaspoon salt
Barbecue Sauce (homemade or bought)

Cut off excess fat from flank steak and score on one side. In an 8-inch skillet, in the hot butter, gently cook onion until wilted; stir in crumbs, ham and salt. Spread mixture over scored side of steak; roll up, beginning at short end. Fasten with short skewers. Bake in preheated 400-degree oven for 50 minutes, basting several times with barbecue sauce during last 15 minutes of baking. Makes 6 servings.

Queen's hat her crown

By ERMA BOMBECK

If the millinery industry is really serious about bringing back hats, they should keep Queen Elizabeth out of them.

With all due respect, that woman has done for hats what a shark attack does for tourism.

Every time I think maybe I'll add a hat to my wardrobe, I see another picture of the royal family and think, "Maybe next year when I see someone else wearing one."

Like most women of my generation, I've been a "Queen Watcher" for years and I've never known her to appear without a hat. She has a hat for reviewing the troops, one for receptions, a hat for polo matches, a hat for balcony waving, a hat for weddings, one for funerals, a hat for Scotland, a hat for Africa and a hat for ships returning from the Falklands.

It's the same hat.

I used to think it was just a matter of personal preference. Her Majesty liked to play dress-up with long white gloves, a big handbag and a country of her own just like the Queen Mother, but now I'm convinced it comes with the territory.

It's only theory, mind you, but remember when we first saw Princess Di? Her haircut swept this country like a designer label. All people talked about was Princess Di's hair. Next thing you know, we saw her going down the aisle in a headpiece attached to a train the size of our first apartment. We never saw her hair again.

I think when she promised to love and to cherish the future King of England and to serve the British commonwealth and all of its traditions, she became an obedient subject of the Royal Hatmaker. From that day forward, she would endure the hat drill that would prepare her for her place in English history. (You're shaking your head. So why don't Margaret and Anne wear hats? They're out of the line of succession and they know it!)

Bette Midler says the hatmaker lives in the basement of the castle and turns out hats all day long. I don't think so. I think he only makes two hats now — one for the Queen and one for Princess Di. Both of them hang on a hook by the front door, ready for service.

There is a moral to the story. All of you young girls out there who want to be storybook princesses, listen up. You know you have to kiss a load of toads before you marry a prince, but are you willing to wear that hat with everything before you wear a crown? Think about it.

Families of drug abusers can get help through Nar-Anon program

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: There is no greater problem today than drug abuse among all age groups. This devastating situation affects the family and friends of the drug abuser in countless ways.

My husband and I know, because our son returned from the service 12 years ago on drugs and has been involved with drugs ever since. For years we dealt with the problem our way, thinking we could surely resolve it. We almost destroyed ourselves and our family life by becoming totally obsessed with the problem and trying to correct it.

Then, two years ago, we discovered a support group called Nar-Anon, which uses methods similar to Al-Anon. We now realize that the responsibility to change rests with the addict, not with us. By attending weekly meetings, we have learned a new way to live our lives in a happier, more productive way.

Nar-Anon guards the anonymity of its members and does no advertising. Those who wish additional information may write to: Nar-Anon Family Group Headquarters, Inc., P.O. Box 2562, Palos Verdes Peninsula, Calif. 90274.

Please enclose a stamped, self-addressed long envelope. — A NAR-ANON MEMBER

DEAR MEMBER: I appreciate your letting me know about Nar-Anon. The information is well worth passing on to my readers, especially the pamphlet containing the open letter adapted from "Guide for the Family," written by the Rev. Joseph L. Kellerman, and published by Al-Anon Family Groups:

AN OPEN LETTER TO MY FAMILY

"I am a drug-user. I need help.

"Don't solve my problems for me. This only makes me lose respect for you.

"Don't lecture, moralize, scold, blame or argue, whether I'm loaded or sober. It may make you feel better, but it will make the situation worse.

"Don't accept my promises. The nature of my illness prevents me keeping them, even though I mean them at the time. Promises are only my way of postponing pain. And don't keep switching agreements: if an agreement is made, stick to it.

"Don't lose your temper with me. It will destroy you and any possibility of helping me.

"Don't allow your anxiety for me to make you do what I should do for myself.

"Don't cover up or try to spare me the consequences of my using. It may reduce the crisis, but it will make my illness worse.

"Above all, don't run away from reality as I do. Drug dependence, my illness, gets worse as my using continues. Start now to learn, to understand, to plan for recovery. Find Nar-Anon, whose groups exist to help the families of drug-abusers.

"I need help — from a doctor, a psychologist, a counselor, from a recovered addict who found sobriety in Narcotics Anonymous and from God. I cannot help myself." — Your User

DEAR ABBY: My future husband snores. And I mean that man really snores up a storm! I've gone on vacations with him and have returned home more exhausted that I was before I left.

I finally told him that after we're married we will need separate bedrooms. He said, "No way — you will just have to get used to it."

Abby, I don't think I can. Do you have any information on snoring? Is it sometimes caused by a medical problem that can be corrected? Please don't throw this away. It's a serious problem. I really love him, but I know I won't be able to sleep with him. — LENA

DEAR LENA: Some cases of snoring are correctable with minor surgery. Your fiance should be examined by an ear, nose and throat specialist to determine whether his snoring is correctable.

If you need some hard (and loud) evidence to support your complaint; tape his snoring and play it back to him.

(Problems? You'll feel better if you get them off your chest. Write to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

Once known as the "Battlin' Burtons," Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton live up to the name as they rehearse for the revival of "Private Lives," which opens on Broadway May 8. The scene, of course, is between a divorced couple who reunite and end up fighting once again. Sound familiar?

Shrine to Nelson planned

HILLSBORO, Texas (AP) — A Central Texas lawyer says he plans to spend $20 million for a shrine, the Southwest Hall of Fame and Museum, that will honor country music singer Willie Nelson and attract visitors from miles around.

"There are only four great people I've known in my entire life...my mother, my wife, (Baylor University Chancellor) Abner McCall and Willie Nelson," said Frank McGregor, an attorney and former state representative from McLennan County.

"My definition of 'great' is biblical. Abner McCall and Willie Nelson are completely different in their lifestyles, but they're both kind and will do anything for a friend."

Nelson, who hails from nearby Abbott, began his career began with performances at the Nite Owl Club in West, another Hill County town, and on KHBR radio in Hillsboro.

The shrine would be built at Interstate 35 and U.S. Highways 77 and 81, about 30 miles north of Waco. The hall of fame and museum would salute country music stars and honor others whose names have been etched in Texas and Southwest history.

Critical to the project's success is Nelson's vocal and visible support.

"We will depend on local support in proving to Willie Nelson that we love him, are proud of him and will go all-out for him," McGregor said. "It depends on whether the people in this area want to honor Willie Nelson. If not, Willie hasn't lost a thing.

OC jazz ensemble to present concert

ODESSA — The Odessa College jazz ensemble will perform a spring concert at 8:15 p.m. today at the Globe Theatre. Directed by Bernard Rose, the ensemble will feature drummer Butch Miles of New York.

Miles has been a part of the Newport Jazz Festival for the past five years. He has also performed with, among others, Frank Sinatra, Sammy Davis Jr., Dave Bruebeck, Mel Torme and Della Reese.

He is co-leading the Butch Miles-Glenn Zottola Quartet and completing his latest album.

Tickets, priced at $4 for adults and $2 for students, may be purchased at the door.

NBC to receive four awards

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Twenty-nine George Foster Peabody Broadcasting Awards will be presented next month, including four to NBC, the University of Georgia has announced.

The Peabody Awards, considered the most prestigious in broadcasting, are administered by the university's School of Journalism and Mass Communication. The 1982 winners announced Saturday were selected from about 730 entries by a national advisory board.

The awards will be presented in New York.

NBC News was honored for two programs — "Second Sunday: Banks on the Brink" and "The Man Who Shot the Pope: A Study in Terrorism."

NBC shared one award with Margie-Lee Enterprises Inc. and ITC Productions Inc. for "Skeezer" and another with Highgate Pictures for "Project Peacock: The Electric Grandmother."

The other winners were:

National Public Radio for "The Sunday Show" and for "Taylor Made Piano: A Jazz History;" CBC Radio, Toronto, Canada, "Morningside-1905;" WMAL, Washington, "They Served With Honor;" Mutual Broadcasting System's "The Larry King Show;" the Radio Foundation, "The Bob and Ray Public Radio Show;" Texaco Inc. and the Metropolitan Opera Association, cited for "43 years of live radio presentations;" KOCO-TV, Oklahoma City, "Oklahoma Shame;"

ENTERTAINMENT

WCVB-TV, Needham, Mass., "Ground Zero: Victory Road;" KYW-TV, Philadelphia, "Sweet Nothing;" British Broadcasting Corp., Paramount Television and Operation Prime Time, "Smiley's People;" WWL-TV, New Orleans, "The Search for Alexander;" Warner-AMEX Satellite Entertainment Co., for the Nickelodeon cable network; CBS Entertainment and Cinetex International, "The Wall;" WQED, Pittsburgh, "Stravinsky's 'Firebird' by the Dance Theater of Harlem;"

KQED, San Francisco, "Current Affairs: The Case of Dashiell Hammett;" ABC News, "ABC News Closeup: Vietnam Requiem;" CBS News, "Juilliard and Beyond: A Life in Music;" KGMB-TV and Lee Productions, Honolulu, "Beyond The Great Wall: Journey to the End of China;" WAGA-TV, Atlanta, "Paradise Saved;" WBBM-TV, Chicago, "Killing Crime: A Police Cop-Out;" WTSP-TV, St. Petersburg, Fla., "Prisoners of the Harvest;" Daniel Wilson Productions, New York, and Taurus Film, "Blood and Honor: Youth Under Hitler;" Television Corporation of America, Washington, "784 Days That Changed America — From Watergate to Resignation;" and Alistair Cooke.

'Dreamgirls' lands in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Dreamgirls" has created a sensation in Los Angeles, and Michael Bennett, who came west to redirect his Broadway smash about a trio of women singers, believes there's a special reason for it.

"'Chorus Line' (which he also directed) is about Broadway, but this show is about the entertainment industry — nightclubs, movies," he says. "That's Los Angeles' world. It's about this town. It's about New York, too, but this one is about the entertainment industry."

Jennifer Holliday, who had a hit single from the show with her rendition of "And I Am Telling You I'm Not Going," has re-created the role of Effie, the singer who is dropped by her boyfriend-manager and the group and stages a successful comeback on her own.

Otherwise, the cast is largely new, and so is some of the action. Inspired by the size of the stage at the Shubert Theater, Bennett designed a new opening for the second act.

"Instead of the medley, I did another number for the three girls," he said. "It's a real hot version of 'Dreamgirls,' lots of boy dancers and moving stairways and lights."

Bennett's perfectionism hasn't led him astray very often during his 40 years. He began his career as a choreographer for such musicals as "Promises, Promises," "Company" and "Follies." Then he worked with a group of dancers to create "A Chorus Line" — the long-running musical about the heartbreak of dancers trying to succeed in show business. It won nine Tony awards and the Pulitzer Prize in drama.

His next project, "Ballroom," based on the television play "Queen of the Stardust Ballroom," was a respectable failure, closing after three months on Broadway.

Then came "Dreamgirls," the winner of six Tony awards, the same number Bennett has now won in his career.

"The premise is that it's a fictitious group of girls," he said. "There were hundreds of black girl groups, and the story is totally fictitious."

But there are parallels. The Supremes also dropped one of their singers, Florence Ballard, although she failed to achieve solo success. And, like Miss Ross, Deena Jones — played by Linda Leilani Brown — goes on to individual stardom and film roles.

"Dreamgirls" is a high-technology show, with shifting scenery and some almost miraculous costume changes.

Actress Dolores Del Rio dies

Del Rio

Miss Del Rio died Monday afternoon at her fashionable Newport Beach apartment of natural causes, deputy Orange County coroner's investigator Bernie Mazuca said.

The convent-reared daughter of a well-to-do Mexican family, Miss Del Rio began her career as a dancer in a 1925 silent film and went on to star in "Ramona," "The Loves of Carmen," "Evangeline," "Madame du Barry" and more recently "Cheyenne Autumn."

Funeral arrangements were pending.

Humbard

CUYAHOGA FALLS, Ohio (AP) — Television evangelist Rex Humbard will be able to continue his broadcasts, at least temporarily, because of responses to an emergency appeal for donations, a spokesman says.

Jim Dailey, public relations director for the Rex Humbard Foundation, would not say Monday how much money was raised through Humbard's call for financial help. "We did eliminate a significant amount of our deficit, but this hasn't permanently solved the problem," he said.

Dailey refused to disclose the extent of the foundation's financial deficit, but he had said earlier that contributions were down by $1.2 million in January and February compared with 1982 figures.

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Mamie Van Doren hasn't lost her youthful figure, but time is making its mark and the sex goddess of the 1950s finds her name no longer attracts crowds — even in her own backyard.

Still, the 50-year-old Miss Van Doren says she has no regrets.

At the height of her career, she reportedly was making about $250,000 a year. Now she runs an antique shop, gives occasional seminars on "human sexuality," and lately has been working on a nightclub act. She left the movie business in 1967.

Her name didn't draw enough response to justify an appearance later this month at a Santa Ana nightclub just 10 miles from her home. The steak house canceled the show.

But the undaunted glamour girl says she's not disappointed and will take the show to Columbus, Ohio.

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — The husband of Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands, Prince Claus, is reported doing so well after undergoing psychiatric treatment that he has left a Swiss clinic.

The German-born prince had been at the University of Basel clinic since last fall.

Claus, 56, returned to the Netherlands on Monday from an Easter holiday with his family in Italy, the government information service announced, and left immediately for West Germany where he will be staying with friends.

Despite his improvement, the government said, Claus will not be attending the queen's birthday celebration April 30.

Earlier this year, a spokesman for the Royal House said that the prince's calendar for 1983 was being kept clear to allow more time for his recovery.

McKerrow

BALTIMORE (AP) — Ballerina Amanda McKerrow has had to cancel an appearance at a benefit to raise funds for Temple Emanuel in suburban Randallstown.

The dancer, who gained world attention in 1981 when she won a gold medal in an international ballet competition in Moscow, injured a hip Saturday night while dancing in Detroit, a spokeswoman said.

Miss McKerrow and Charles Maple, both members of the American Ballet Theatre, were scheduled to perform tonight at the Meyerhoff Symphony Hall. Instead, the bellerina was in New York seeing a doctor Monday, said Debbie Rosen McKerrow, a spokeswoman for the synagogue and Miss McKerrow's sister-in-law.

Sahlins' views on comedy have very serious ring

By SASHA ANAWALT
Hearst Feature Service

"I have not yet heard anyone discuss humor without sounding like an idiot," says Bernard Sahlins.

By all accounts, Sahlins is no idiot — he's the co-founder of Second City, a 24-year-old institution that revolutionized humor in America. Through sheer perseverance — and the expenditure of a lot of his money — Sahlins has fostered the careers of Nichols and May, Alan Arkin, Joan Rivers, John Belushi, Gilda Radner and other members of the "Saturday Night Live" team. In fact, it's arguable that the very format of SNL, which burst upon the TV scene in 1975, was an outgrowth of Sahlins' ideas about comedy. His name is hardly a household world, but one need only turn on the TV to be bombarded by his influence.

As befits an influential comedy expert, he can't hold a straight conversation for long. Sahlins, 58, gives the impression of being fresh and saucy, and proud of it. Balding and a bit jowly, he might well strike one as a benevolent uncle if it weren't for his adamant delivery and the vigorous support he gives to his own ideas. This is not a man who has slowed down.

The Second City's influence, he will tell you, is the influence of "behavioral comedy," a mix of politics and psychology that is rooted not in one-liners but in the emotions of characters. It was born from the process of improvisation — and it's a far cry from what preceded it on the American stage — the vaudevillian slapstick and banana peels.

"When we started," Sahlins recalls "during the time of McCarthy, it was easy just to get up onstage and say 'Eisenhower' and bring the house down. But we wanted to go beyond this one-line form of joke-telling." The past brings a note of solemnity to his otherwise jovial voice.

"We came out of the theater," he adds, referring to Second City's co-founders, Howard Alk and Paul Sills, "and because we were from the theater, we put acting above joke telling. The scenes we did came from behaviour and relationships. For example, the relationship of a boss and worker, a husband and wife, a football team and coach. They had truth to them. Relationships have that kind of value, they hang on longer and tell the truth better than jokes."

Just tell the truth — for Sahlins, that seems to be the bottom line. "I look in my company for intelligence, an awareness of what's going on in the world, an ability to play characters — and last, funny. Because funny comes from truth. My actors have got to be able to tell the truth," he says. Which brings up the matter of respect: how do those in his company treat him? With reverence?

"Reverence!" Sahlins exclaimed. "I demand irreverence — that's our hallmark. Irreverence is totally necessary because when the work is really at its highest form, the target is ourselves. It's easy to make fun of Reagan, but making fun of our own conservatism is better. For me, this is different from bad-boyism. To be naughty is just infantile."

Current Second City member Jim Belushi, John's brother, lends proof to Sahlin's disdain for tasteless behaviour. "The feeling of working with Bernie is that you don't want to embarrass the ghosts. I mean, I used to swear a lot onstage. Bernie hated it. He'd tell me to stop. He'd say 'Alan Arkin never had to say 's-' to get his idea across.' Dignity is important to Bernie."

"Bernie is one of the smartest men I know," says Alan Arkin. "He had the foresight to recognize that Second City was going to have great cultural impact."

Where did he gain this insight? Sahlins replies simply, "I was pig-headed. I wanted to do Second City. I was content to do Second City and that's all I did. I just kept my eye on home base and took the work at hand to be the most important. I never look at what else I could be doing."

So when it came time to commit to the theater, Sahlins put his money where his heart was — and still is. After all, he, and not Alk and Sills, had the wherewithall. "I sold my tape recorder company for enough money to be poor on for a while," he remembers.

Part Three: Trying to marry Bing

MY LIFE WITH BING by Kathryn Crosby

The proposal that wasn't

For months I had heard nothing from Bing, but on Saturday, October 6, 1954, he breezed back into town and my life with an invitation to attend a football game.

When we returned to my cottage, Bing said, "I want to talk to you."

"Come in."

There should have been a cheerful blaze in the fireplace, but at least the sofa bed was made. He sat on its new grey corduroy spread, leaning against the bolsters. I remained opposite him in the straight-backed desk chair, ready to discuss the game, listen to stories, even boil an egg on my bottom-drawer hot plate.

"Come here."

I sat by him on the bed. He faced me, took my left hand in both of his and said, "I've been thinking about you a lot this summer, and I have a question to ask you when I know what the answer is."

"Well?" I asked. "Well?"

Where was the declaration? Where was the poetry? Where was the proposal? Was he now going to slip down on his knees and....

Not a bit of it. He just sat there and looked at me. When the vacuum became unbearable, I babbled, "Well Bing, we've known each other for a while now. I think it is very important to have roots. I've seen you at the ranch, and I like it there. I think maybe we should get to know each other a bit more, but I'm glad you missed me because I missed you too."

I curled up next to him, and leaned on his shoulder. He scratched my head—not quite behind the ears like a Labrador, but something similar. I was getting comfortable, but after a brief pause he said, "I'll be calling you," and left.

One shoe had dropped. Or had it?

On October 30 Bing invited Marilyn Banks and me to Palm Springs, where he met us at the airport. After a quiet supper at home, I exchanged signals with Marilyn, and right on cue she yawned ostentatiously and declared that she'd just have to get some sleep.

Clowning with Marilyn Banks

A proposal of sorts

Bing put on a record and we went outside. There was no moon, so we simply sat and stared at the sky. What can you say about the stars in Palm Springs on the eve when your love is going to propose marriage? Of course they're glowing diamonds in night's black velvet, and you are free to conjure up any additional clichés that might trip through a twenty-year-old skull.

I prayed that I would be able to hear Bing's declaration over the thudding of my heart, but still we just sat in the poolside chairs. What was Bing's heart doing? And what was wrong with his tongue?

He finally said, "You know, Kathryn, I have done a lot of thinking about you and me. We have started growing those roots that you talked about. I wonder what you want to do with the rest of your life. I mean, if we got married, what kind of life would you envision? Would it start with a long honeymoon, say a junket around the world?"

I hoped I had the answer he wanted to hear. "I wouldn't like a big trip then. You have to travel with your work and so do I." (Thus grandly equating my activities with his.) "I'd like to come home after my marriage and have my first memories there. The beginning of a new life is too precious to waste on Niagara Falls or the isles of Greece."

"Ummm, that's a novelty. I'd have thought you'd insist on Rome at least."

"I'll get to Rome. But if you're talking about a honeymoon after my marriage, I think coming home with the man I love would be the best part. In many ways I'm not prepared for marriage, but I know it's the coming together of two lives. If we could limit the initial cast to two people, I think I could cope."

"Do you mean you would marry me?"

There was such an innocent, plaintive, adorable quality to that rich voice that I quite overlooked the simple fact that the snake-in-the-grass still hadn't proposed.

"Yes," I said, nearly tripping on my tears. And I knew then that I would marry Bing Crosby and do everything he wanted me to do, if I could just find out what that was.

Whereupon Bing disappeared. I neither saw him nor heard from him for the next two months.

An unknown threat

Hayden Lake, Wednesday, September 7, 1955. Bing and I breakfasted, but our hearts weren't in it. He was alternately hiding behind the sports page and staring at the telephone. Finally it rang, and he leaped upon it only to bark angrily "Yes. . .no. . .keep trying," and hang up.

Feeling unwanted, I left Bing to his own devices, but at noon he materialized at my elbow: "Kathryn, there is a complication in my life. That's what the phone call was about. I can't really discuss it with you, but maybe it would be better for us to postpone our marriage." He looked absolutely miserable.

There didn't seem to be any point in saying, "Wouldn't you like to share your problems with me, dear? After all we're engaged. Your life is my life. Tell me about it." In point of fact, he had just informed me to the contrary. His life was not my life, and I was obviously superfluous.

"Perhaps I'd better go on home."

"I've already called Ralph Scott. He'll have the plane here in the morning."

Couldn't he at least have let me take the initiative in leaving him? I bade farewell to beautiful Hayden Lake.

My triumph at Pebble Beach

October 12, 1955. Bing invited me to visit him at his Pebble Beach house. After we had walked a mile beside the sea, he finally broke the silence that had hung heavy between us: "I have to tell you the reason we couldn't marry last September. I wanted to confide in you then, but I didn't dare."

Horrible thoughts raced through my mind. Had his stable of slow race horses at last bankrupted him? Was he a closet queen? Had he contracted some dread social disease? Was he—heaven forbid—impotent?

I listened in vast relief as he recounted a romance with a young actress while I was away at school. In his innocence Bing really felt he was the only one in the world who could have told me a story familiar in its most intimate details to every bit player, bartender and taxi driver in the greater Los Angeles area. I had already been asked about this particular dalliance by five different columnists. I had feigned ignorance with all of them. Not one to quit when I am winning, I affected it again with Bing.

The triumphant return from our walk at Pebble Beach

"Really?" I said wide-eyed.

"You were gone for a very long time, you know, and it started out as just a party after our movie wrap-up—and then I suppose I had too much to drink and one thing led to another. Weeks later, when I told her of my previous commitment to you, she utterly lost her composure. She had always been so calm and serene, but now she wept and screamed at me. I can't understand why a woman would carry on like that. It was just terrible. Then she disappeared!"

I listened in silent glee while he re-enacted their parting scene, her threats of suicide, public exposure, perhaps a suit for breach of promise.

"I had to have her found, to be sure she wouldn't carry out her threats. I couldn't let her harm herself or cause a scandal that might hurt you or your family."

Bing thought for a while and then added, "I must be rotten to the core to have treated you like this."

We were striding down the beach at a brisk clip while I struggled to stifle my laughter. Here Bing was apologizing for having chosen Olive Kathryn Grandstaff from West Columbia, Texas, over this regal blonde, the most adored lady in Tinseltown. Whoopee!

The old clichés were all true. No man would ever understand his woman. While Bing had to be my first love, I was interested only in being his last. He was too preoccupied with the preservation of my virginal innocence to notice that I didn't require an equally spotless record from him. With a superhuman effort I controlled my facial muscles, stopped by a sheltered dune, turned to him and softly whispered, "I forgive you."

Expressions of surprise and relief chased each other across Bing's face. He took my hand and started walking back toward his house. In a moment he was whistling. Shortly thereafter he began to sing.

Inside I was singing too. He had chosen me over her! Well, I could now forgive him anything, even his all-too-evident lack of taste in women. It would be I, after all, who married Bing Crosby.

Handicapped comedienne a hit on 'The Facts of Life'

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Television stars, even when their roles are small and irregular, as Geri Jewell's is on "Facts of Life," are not often found on the streets of Washington. Outside a television studio here, a group of junior high school kids spots Ms. Jewell. It's not hard. Her walk is raggedly angular, her speech slightly slurred, hard of hearing, she leans forward to catch what's being said.

One of the kids is still trying to place her, and it finally hits him.

"You're that lady that's retarded!" He tries to pull the word back into his mouth, but it's too late.

Ms. Jewell looks up from the scraps of paper she's signing. "No I'm not!" she says.

Later, preparing for a local televison, appearance: "It doesn't bother me," she says. "I understand it."

Geri Jewell has cerebral palsy, a disabling condition resulting from brain damage and characterized by loss of muscle control. Twenty-six, but looking a decade younger, she started out four years ago as a stand-up comedian in a Los Angeles club, poking fun at herself and her handicap. Last year she made what was intended to be a one-shot appearance as "Cousin Geri" on Norman Lear's family sitcom "The Facts of Life." She was a hit and has returned to the series on a part-time, continuing basis.

It's a breakthrough role for handicapped actors and actresses on television. "I don't know the survival of this character," Ms. Jewell says, "but it is the first time that a real disabled person has taken on a regular role." Since then, Jonathan Hall Kovacs, a deaf child actor, has joined the cast on "The Family Tree," and Melanie Watson, who has multiple sclerosis, has made several appearances on "Diff'rent Strokes."

Geri Jewell uses no crutches, no wheelchair. She maintains her strength through exercises, jogging, biking and video games, which help her coordination. Around her neck she wears a locket depicting the comedy/tragedy mask. It's a symbol of her life.

"Carol Burnett used to say that 'comedy was tragedy plus time,' and now I know what she means by that," Ms. Jewell says. "It's true. It's not going to be funny at the moment that it happens, but in a while you can see the humor in it.

"I always knew how to make people laugh. I was very insecure, and it was the only way that I thought that I could be accepted in a social gathering. If I could make 'em laugh, then they'd like me. And I would always be the butt of my own jokes." (Example: "I've been pulled over once for speeding and four times for walking."

She weighed three pounds when she was born in Buffalo, and spent the first three months of her life in an incubator. The cerebral palsy was not diagnosed until a year later. Raised in Southern California in a family of four children, she studied at both regular and special schools, and tried a year of college before dropping out. Her father worked at a cemetery; her mother was a mail carrier.

"My parents didn't allow me to wear braces; they were going to make me strong whether I wanted it or not. But I did want braces, and I did want a wheelchair; without them, it was automatically assumed I was retarded. My sister and I used to play house and school with our dolls; we would take shoe boxes and make wheelchairs, take Popsicle sticks and make braces. Even our Barbie dolls had braces.

"Psychologically I didn't fit in anywhere.

"If I wasn't accepted on the 'regular' side, and I wasn't accepted on the 'special' side, where was I accepted? I was walking in the middle, sometimes deciding to be handicapped, sometimes deciding to be regular. It was like a game: Today I'll be crippled; tomorrow I'll walk."

Like most adolescents, Ms. Jewell had idols. In her case, it was Carol Burnett, whom she started writing to at age 14.

"We've never met face to face, but I read an interview where they asked her why she kept writing me back. She said that 'Geri had a very unique way of writing, a way with words,' which was very true.

"When I wrote her my first letter, I don't think consciously that I wanted her to think I wanted to be a comic. My main concern was that she write back so I could get a letter from a celebrity. I remember writing, 'Dear Carol Burnett, If your secretary is going to write me back, then don't bother!' The nerve of me to do that.

"But she wrote back and said, 'I'm sorry, I don't have that much time, but I'll try to write you personally every time.' I always felt like I owed her something, that if I really made it as a comic, a lot of my motivation was for her."

The upswing began in 1978 when Ms. Jewell channeled her irreverent humor and made her way to an open stage at Los Angeles' Comedy Store.

They had to sneak her on stage. "Are you kidding? I couldn't have gone to the owner; I never would have gotten on. I was different; I was new.

"The first night I got a standing ovation, and I know damn well it wasn't because I had good timing. I was stepping on my lines from left to right. But when I went back the following Monday with the same material, it was awful. People were screaming stuff at me like 'Get off the stage!...You're retarded!...Go back to the insitution!' I just broke down into tears and thought, 'This is it, I do not want to go back, no, no, no!'

"I knew I had to be funny consistently instead of being brave consistently. If I'm going to get a standing ovation for being strong, then I don't want it. If I'm going to be a comic, I'm going to be a good comic. I know the difference when I've made them laugh and when they're being polite."

Although she still does a lot of talk shows, Ms. Jewell has, for now, left the comedy stage.

Geri Jewell

"All the while I was doing stand-up comedy, I never stopped being scared. I had thrown away school, and what could I do except make it in comedy? It was better than sitting at home, collecting Social Security and watching soap operas.

"I developed an ulcer from stand-up comedy. When they rejected me the nights that I flopped, I took it so personally. It would just rip me up inside. But I blocked it all out so I could keep doing it. For me to hold the microphone still, to not let my nervousness affect my speech or my involuntary movements more, the fact that I'm hard of hearing and couldn't hear my hecklers and couldn't say anything witty back because I never heard what they said, all that contributed to a lot of pain.

On her sexual awakening:

"It's a common myth that disabled people are asexual. I on the other hand, no, no, just kidding. The reason they pick on me is that I'm cute, and I don't look asexual.

"When I was in high school, I did not date; nobody asked me out, not even to the prom. When I got to college, nobody dated me. When I was a struggling comic, nobody dated me. It wasn't until I was celebrity that I started dating, okay?

"It's so hard to grow from being a handicapped child to a sexually mature adult. I have been asked to speak at many organizations, including Parents of Handicapped Children, about sexuality. I'm sitting there once a week with my psychologist talking about sexuality and then suddenly I'm sitting in front of 500 people talking about sexuality. But I'm still dealing with the fact that I'm a sex symbol. Well, some people got it, and some people don't."

"I'm very attracted to people who are bright and who can fill my mind with all kinds of things; and that's often overlooked in me because of the way I look, the way I walk. So many times I've wished that my body could be equal to my head, then people would understand me better...but there's such a drastic difference between the two.

In film 'Summer Girl,' Kim Darby victimized by scheming adolescent

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kim Darby wasn't surprised when she was offered the role of a young mother victimized by a scheming nymphet in the CBS movie "Summer Girl."

"I was really kind of perfect for it at this point in my life," she says. "I was very close to the character. It wasn't a stretch for me."

In the two-hour film, to be broadcast on CBS tonight, Barry Bostwick plays her husband, and Diane Franklin is the babysitter out to seduce Miss Darby's spouse and convince everyone that she's losing her grip on reality.

"I liked the character's values. She was bright and instinctive," Miss Darby says. "What I liked was that she was happy with where she was in life and with having children.

"This young girl played a lot of tricks on her. She was susceptible to that. She had reasons to be tentative and halting because this girl was setting her up so much."

Miss Darby is 36 and the mother of a 15-year-old daughter, but her career has been affected by the fact that she still looks so young. "I'm so glad to be playing mothers and older women," the actress says.

"I was usually the girl next door. Actually, the victim next door. I never had much sympathy for those characters. They were so passive. It's hard to tolerate that in somebody. If you want an audience to go with you you have to make an effort to help yourself.

"I heard on television," Miss Darby says, "that the word 'victim' is the ugliest word in the dictionary. I agree. A victim means you don't have a choice. I think people do have a choice. Nothing is easy, but it's important that you make the effort."

Miss Darby probably is best remembered for her role as Mattie, the spunky girl who holds her own against Rooster Cogburn in "True Grit." John Wayne won an Oscar as best actor as the one-eyed U.S. marshal in the 1969 movie.

"Mattie was certainly no victim," Miss Darby says. "I wish I had another role like that. She was very self-possessed and resourceful. I had just turned 21 and three weeks before I'd had a baby. I kept turning the role down, but personal circumstances turned out that I accepted it.

"I got a taste of the golden era," she says. "They wouldn't shoot any closeups of me after lunch because I might be a little tired. That's unheard of today."

She had been married to actor James Stacy, but says, "I married much too early. I didn't know who I was. I was married one other time but I'm not married now. I'm glad I'm not married but someday I'd like to be."

Better Business Bureau warns of home improvement abuses

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

In spring, a consumer's thoughts may turn to fixing up the house, but repairs can turn to ruin if you're not careful.

Sarah Woodard of the Council of Better Business Bureaus Inc. said complaints about home remodeling are a "perennial problem...every year in the springtime."

Contractors seem to appear from nowhere, she said. They've just repaired your neighbor's house and they have materials left over. Or they've noticed a problem with your driveway that you didn't know about. Sign now and you'll get a bargain.

What you may get from high-pressure tactics, Ms. Woodard said, is trouble.

"If the deal is good, that deal will still be around the next day or the day after," she said.

Ms. Woodard said you don't have to automatically ignore someone who calls at your door unsolicited. But you should investigate a company's reputation before you sign anything or allow any work to be done.

Check local consumer authorities and the Better Business Bureau to find out how long the contractor has been in business. Ask if the firm has operated under other names — a possible clue to potential trouble. Will the company be around tomorrow if you have a problem? Have there been a lot of complaints and how have they been handled? Is the company involved in any legal actions?

A 1980 study released by the Consumer Federation of America concluded that "home improvement abuses are more in need of remedy than any other type of consumer fraud." The study said that complaints involve large sums of money,sometimes up to thousands of dollars, and are often difficult to resolve.

Ms. Woodard said miscellaneous home maintenance companies ranked fifth on the Better Business Bureau complaint list for 1981, drawing 10,230 complaints. (Mail order companies were first, with 76,076 complaints.) Home remodeling contractors — a separate category — ranked 12th, with 6,131 complaints; roofing contractors were 18th with 4,201 complaints and heating and central air conditioning companies were 21st, with 3,727 complaints.

Find out what product or products the contractor plans to use. Check with local stores to make sure the items are appropriate and insist that the materials be listed on your bill.

The Better Business Bureau's "Guide to Wise Buying" offers several suggestions for consumers who want to avoid home-repair problems. Among them:

—Get an estimate. The BBB says a reliable contractor should provide a written estimate and should include specifications on materials.

—Beware of what's known as the "model-home come-on" in which you're told that your home will be used for advertising or promotional purposes. A salesman may promise you a "commission" for everyone who views the improvements on your home. In many cases, the BBB says, the "model home" deal is available to everyone; you get nothing special and the commissions never materialize.

Biotechnology firm devises new method of growing plants

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A California biotechnology firm has devised a novel method of inserting foreign genes into plant cells, which then can grow into whole plants with altered traits.

In its first statement about work that had been rumored to be taking place, the Pasadena-based firm, Phytogen, said the development could be a major step in the promising field of genetic engineering of plants.

Resistance to disease, herbicides, cold or drought; improved yield; and higher nutritive value are traits that scientists believe may be attained through genetic engineering.

According to the firm, the carrier they have devised, called a vector, potentially could be used to genetically alter a wide variety of economically valuable crops.

The company said that while other research groups have constructed vectors that have carried genes into plant cells, the Phytogen vector is potentially applicable to a far greater range of plants.

"We now believe we have constructed a functioning vector that meets all the criteria for effectiveness, ease of use, wide applicability and benignity in host plants," said David Anderson, Phytogen vice president for research.

The development is scheduled to be officially reported at a scientific meeting Monday in Keystone, Colo. The key to the reported success, said Phytogen, is a new type of biological carrier made from pieces of bacterial and viral DNA. When attached to this carrier, the genes the researchers wanted to insert into the plant cells successfully made their way into the cells, where they functioned normally and altered the characteristics of the cells.

Previous vectors tested elsewhere have worked only in what are called dicotyledonous plants such as tobacco, tomatoes and potatoes.

A Phytogen spokesman conceded that its vector has not yet been proven effective in another category of plants, called monocotolydonous, but that tests of the vector on corn will be carried out soon.

"We expect our vector to function in monocotyledonous plants such as wheat, corn, barley and rye, where the greatest economic impact of plant genetic engineering will be achieved," said Anderson.

If this proves true, said Mary-Dell Chilton, a leading figure in plant genetic engineering at Washington University, "this is potentially a great technical advance."

A number of research groups have been trying to smuggle genes into plant cells by hitching the genes to bits of DNA from a bacterium that commonly attacks certain plants. Called Agrobacterium tumefaciens, the bacterium invades the plant cells and causes crown gall disease.

Dieters had to fend off temptation

KANSAS CITY, Mo (AP) — About 1,300 delegates to a convention for people who help others stay on their diets had to fend off temptation when their annual meeting was held just a block away from a festival featuring samples from 50 area restaurants.

The dieters, from 290 Missouri chapters of Take Off Pounds Sensibly, attended their meeting of TOPS in the Muehlebach Hotel, while down the street thousands of people were sampling foods at the third annual "EATS" festival in Bartle Hall.

Asked if they could stomach the competition, the registrar at the dieters' convention, Wanda Kiefer of suburban Belton, said, "I certainly hope nobody from here went over there. I know no one from my chapter went."

Displaying the evening's top Oscars are winners, from right, Richard Attenborough, Meryl Streep and Ben Kingsley. Attenborough won as best director for "Gandhi," with Kingsley winning best actor honors for the title roll. Ms. Streep was chosen best actress for her role in "Sophie's Choice." The film "Gandhi" also was named best picture.

Epic 'Gandhi' 20 years in making

By YARDENA ARAR
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — "Another 20 years? Without question I would do it again," said a clearly gratified Richard Attenborough as his two decades of struggle on the epic "Gandhi" paid off with eight Oscars, including best picture.

Attenborough, who produced and directed "Gandhi," said his wildest expectations were more than fulfilled Monday night at the 55th annual Academy Awards. The movie also earned him the best director award and, for Ben Kingsley, best actor honors.

Meryl Streep, who won the best actress award for her portrayal of the tortured Polish war refugee in "Sophie's Choice," said she thought she'd given her best performance ever in the role.

"I don't think I'll ever see one like that again," said Ms. Streep.

Six and a half months pregnant with her second child, Miss Streep admitted that attending the ceremony had entailed a certain amount of physical discomfort: "The baby was kicking all night long," she smiled ruefully.

It was Miss Streep's second Oscar — she won for supporting actress in 1979 in "Kramer vs. Kramer."

Louis Gossett Jr. became the first black actor since Sidney Poitier's best actor award for 1963's "Lilies of the Field" to garner an Oscar, winning best supporting honors for his steel-hard drill sergeant in "An Officer and a Gentleman."

Only one other black performer has ever won an Oscar — Hattie McDaniel for "Gone With the Wind" in 1939. Gossett previously won an Emmy as the slave Fiddler in the miniseries "Roots."

Noting that his Oscar-winning role was not written for a black man, Gossett offered some advice to other black actors: "Don't look at black parts — look at parts." He added that the part was not changed in any way after it was given to him.

Speaking to reporters backstage, Attenborough said of "Gandhi" that "no British film has ever won this many Oscars."

Attenborough commented on Gandhi's influence on Poland's Lech Walesa and the late Martin Luther King Jr. "What we should be saying to Mr. Reagan and Mr. Andropov and Mrs. Thatcher is, 'We don't want to accept confrontation,'" he said backstage.

Kingsley, who played Mohandas Gandhi from his days as a young lawyer battling discrimination in South Africa to his assassination after India's independence, said he thought the Mahatma "would have been delighted" with the film.

"We're quite overwhelmed that we've been able to capture the popular imagination with a hero of peace," said the bespectacled actor, who is part-Indian. He is an experienced classical actor on the British stage, but "Gandhi" was his first movie.

Miss Streep's primary competition this year was Jessica Lange's performance in "Frances," the harrowing story of actress Frances Farmer. But Miss Lange seemed content with her consolation prize as best supporting actress for her soap opera star role in "Tootsie."

"I feel real lucky to have worked with actors like Charles Durning, Dabney Coleman and Teri Garr and to have Sydney Pollack as my director and Dustin Hoffman as my leading lady," she said. In "Tootsie," Hoffman played an actor masquerading as a soap opera actress.

It was the only win for "Tootsie," which had received 10 nominations — second only to the 11 nominations for "Gandhi."

"E.T.," the top-grossing film of all time, could muster only four technical awards: best score, special visual effects, sound effects editing and sound.

Fans honor favorite actors

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jessica Lange, Meryl Streep, Tom Selleck, Dustin Hoffman and Christopher Reeve drew the wildest of the wild ovations that greeted a glittering parade of Oscar hopefuls, also-rans and never-weres who arrived for the Academy Awards.

For the several hundred movie fanatics who waved "Tootsie" posters, boasted "E.T." buttons and hoisted banners saying, "We Love Jessica" and "Go Get It Lou," Monday was their "night of nights" in which Hollywood served up a huge helping of glamour.

"Rocky" star Sylvester Stallone stepped from a limousine and strolled the long, red-carpeted walkway to the Music Center's Dorothy Chandler Pavilion to a hero's welcome. Kristy McNichol, in a white-pink pantsuit and punk-style hairdo, elicited bursts of approval, while Ben Kingsley's "Ghandi"-like shyness drew cries of "Hey, Ben!"

Raquel Welch, who on previous Oscar nights has proven to be a photo editor's nightmare in daringly revealing attire, wore a subdued black gown with jeweled black choker that typified most of the women's elegant evening wear.

"General Hospital" star Genie Francis had a floor-length lilac gown with ruffles, while "Superman" star Margot Kidder — also in lilac — wore a bare-shouldered Scarlet O'Hara gown.

The darkly handsome Selleck and Carol Burnett, who wore a cranberry, patterned-silk gown with beaded halter, were crowd-pleasers, as was Reeve and Miss Lange, who was the supporting actress winner.

Other stars included Jack Lemmon ("Missing"), young Drew Barrymore ("E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial"), George C. Scott, who refused his 1970 best actor award for "Patton," James Mason ("The Verdict"), Glenn Close ("The World According to Garp") and Dustin Hoffman, who lingered past the 6 p.m. seating deadline, fielding questions from reporters.

The fans had waited for hours — some camped out for more than a day listening to rock music or playing cards — to catch a glimpse of their idols. Dolly Rodarte, 15, of Los Angeles, said she had seen "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" 30 times and was hoping to catch a glimpse of the film's stars, Dolly Parton and Burt Reynolds.

"They're so good together. That movie made me cry so many times," Miss Rodarte said.

Mickey Rooney displays his honorary Oscar.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Veteran actor Mickey Rooney received one of the longest standing ovations in recent Oscar history when he accepted an honorary award at the 55th annual ceremonies.

The one-time child actor who made a comeback in 1979 in the smash Broadway musical, "Sugar Babies," and who got an Oscar nomination for the 1979 film, "The Black Stallion," walked onto the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion stage to thunderous applause Monday night.

He spoke frankly of becoming "the No. 1 star in the world" at 19, but said that, at 40, "Nobody wanted me. I couldn't get a job."

He credited his recent success, including an Emmy last year for the TV movie, "Bill," to God; his agent, Ruth Webb; and his wife, Jan, "who kept saying to me for the last seven years, 'I know you can do it, Mick. Get up off the canvas. You can do it.'"

Rooney reminisced about former colleagues. "I would like to put my arms around" such co-stars as Judy Garland, Spencer Tracy and Wallace Beery, he said, or his fellow members of the Hardy series, Lewis Stone and Faye Holden.

He said he would "love to even kiss Louis B. Mayer," his notoriously iron-fisted boss at MGM.

"Tonight you honor me with the greatest and the highest tribute we can receive in our business," Rooney told members of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, who gave him the award for 50 years of film excellence.

"I want to thank all of you for honoring me. Thank you for this glorious moment," he concluded.

Rooney received an honorary Oscar in 1938 as a child actor, but the best actor award has eluded him despite four nominations.

Controversy may have helped

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Canadian filmmakers whose anti-nuclear documentary was labeled propaganda by the United States government say the controversy surrounding the film may have helped it win an Oscar.

"It certainly didn't hurt us," said Terri Nash, a Vancouver resident who co-produced "If You Love This Planet" with Edward Le Lorraine of Montreal.

The film record of a speech by anti-nuclear activist Dr. Helen Caldicott won best documentary short subject honors Monday night at the 55th annual Academy Awards.

In accepting the award, Ms. Nash said: "For their tremendous effort in promoting this film I'd like to thank the U.S. Department of Justice."

She was referring to publicity over a disclaimer attached to the beginning of the film saying the work was prepared by a registered foreign agent and that its contents are not necessarily approved by the U.S. government.

Under a 1938 law, the disclaimer is required on all materials sent by registered foreign agents that are deemed by the Justice Department to constitute political propaganda.
