Beginning next week, the city will issue warning letters to first-time offenders of the new nuisance water ordinance.

City to issue water use warnings

By DOUG DRUMMOND
Assistant City Editor

The city — in an effort to keep water from damaging the streets — will issue warning letters to first-time violators of the new nuisance water ordinance.

The warning letters are a part of a 30-day leniency period, said Assistant City Manager Mike McGregor.

The campaign will begin next week.

"We want to let the public know that the ordinance takes effect immediately," McGregor said.

Once the leniency period ends, the city's code enforcement office and police officers will issue formal complaints.

Those complaints, which would be filed in Municipal Court, may result in up to a $200 fine.

The nuisance ordinance is to keep water from running in the streets.

City officials say such a move will help ease wear-and-tear on the streets and conserve water.

The ordinance was passed by the City Council earlier this month.

The letters are being drafted this week and the process is expected to begin by next week, McGregor said.

Letters will be hand-delivered to violators and will include suggestions on how to eliminate the problem.

McGregor said the city will suggest remedies such as watering more frequently but with less duration.

The violators will be targeted after someone complains or if the water runoff is seen by enforcement officials.

The ordinance was prompted by water damage to Midland's streets.

"It's a major problem," McGregor said. "Due to the inverted crown streets, it is more severe here than in other cities."

He said many Midland streets are affected, particularly "A"and Wadley streets.

McGregor said the idea of a nuisance water ordinance has been discussed for the past few years.

"About three years ago, we changed the water rates, and we thought that might have an effect," McGregor said. "But it didn't."

McGregor said the city used to give some discounts if customers used over a certain amount of water.

That was changed where now Midland residents must pay the same price per gallon no matter how much they use.

White's call for session lays blame

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Spending as much time laying blame elsewhere as laying out priorities, Gov. Mark White used a live, statewide television broadcast Thursday evening to call the Texas Legislature into a special budget session beginning Aug. 6.

The governor offered no specific plans for solving the state's nearly $3 billion budget shortfall. Instead his six-minute speech dwelt on Saudi Arabia's decision last year to "dump oil in the world market" and on the need for legislators from both parties to work together.

White called the session even though the House and Senate are nowhere near the consensus solution the governor has said he wants before lawmakers return to the Capitol.

Later he told reporters he is working with legislative leaders to draft budget cutting plans, which could include reductions in education spending. Only after he examines the depth and reasonableness of the cuts, White said, will he consider a tax increase.

On several occasions White promised to veto any income tax and he acknowledged that his staff has been polling lawmakers to determine their support or opposition to a constitutional amendment prohibiting an income tax.

He said he is "very hopeful we can balance the budget" without harming education or state services. Asked specifically whether he would permit lawmakers to cut into education programs — for which he led a $2 billion tax increase two summers ago — White said, "I don't want to foreclose. I'm not here to say what's in and what's out."

The governor also would not specify whether he wants the Legislature to solve the entire budget shortfall or simply save enough money to allow the state to pay its bills until lawmakers return for their regular session in January. House Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Rudd favors the latter approach.

"We must solve the problem," White said on TV. "We can and we will. Without panic or fear, but with a measured and reasonable and careful set of solutions, we will do it."

Immediately following White's address, distributed to 44 stations free of charge by Communications Carrier Inc. of Austin, Republican gubernatorial candidate Bill Clements took to the airwaves from McAllen to chastise White for not calling the session earlier.

"He has procrastinated and delayed," Clements said, blaming his Democratic opponent for the state's record 10.6-percent unemployment rate. "This is Mark White's fault."

Later, Clements called the governor's speech "political pablum," to which White replied, "It sounds like a tree fell on that boy."

White's campaign paid the $2,000 tab for the satellite time for his address. Television stations that carried Clements remarks paid that bill themselves.

Only the governor has the authority to call a special session, and he sets the agenda. A special session can last no more than 30 days, and White said he has no "time frame" for the length of this session.

UT students to conduct MISD survey

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland Independent School District officials want to know how the city's schools measure up to public opinion and will pay the University of Texas at Austin $3,000 to find out.

Graduate students of the UT Foundation for Educational Administration will interview as many as 700 Midlanders at their residences during a four-day period Sunday through Wednesday.

The purpose of the poll is to determine public perceptions about Midland schools, Becky Ferguson, MISD coordinator of communications, said.

Led by Dr. Michael Thomas, the 14 students and two instructors will ask Midlanders to grade their public schools, including the Board of Education, administrators and teachers.

Cost of the survey includes transportation, food and lodging for the students and instructors.

The survey also will solicit opinions on school discipline, closed campuses, extracurricular activities, drug abuse prevention programs, bond elections and teacher salaries.

Ms. Ferguson said the survey, to be conducted every three years, is designed to determine the attitudes and opinions of a cross-section of citizens.

Results of the survey also will be used by officials to help establish two-way communication between the school district and the community, she said.

"We have to determine if there are some misconceptions about Midland public schools and go about our business of correcting the problem," Ms. Ferguson said.

MISD developed the survey instrument using questions published by Gallup Corporation.

Other questions originated from issues that may be of local interest, Ms. Ferguson said.

Other drifters had complained

KERRVILLE (AP) — Law enforcement officers testified in the sentencing phase of an organized crime trial they had received complaints from hitchhikers for years that they were forced into slavery at a Hill Country ranch.

But none of the drifters was willing to file a complaint until three men were abducted and forced to work on a chain gang at the ranch in 1984, officers testified Thursday.

The testimony came in the sentencing phase of a trial involving Hill Country rancher Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., 54, his son Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., 33, and former ranch foreman Carlton Robert Caldwell, 21.

A jury Wednesday convicted the three of conspiring to commit aggravated kidnapping and murder in the case, which included the cattle-prod torture death of one hitchhiker.

The three could face up to life in prison. The jury was to begin deliberating sentencing today after final arguments were delivered.

Charges against the three stemmed from the alleged abduction of Travis Boyd, Robert McCafferty and Ed Blanton, three hitchhikers picked up on Interstate 10 west of San Antonio in March 1984.

Boyd and McCafferty testified they went to the Ellebracht ranch after they were promised jobs. When they asked to leave, they were forced at gunpoint to dig ditches on a chain gang.

Both men testified they were shocked with an electric cattle prod.

The charges also resulted from allegations that 27-year-old Anthony Bates of Huntsville, Ala., was tortured to death with a cattle prod at the ranch.

Prosecutors alleged Bates' body was doused in gasoline and burned. Charred human bone fragments were found at the ranch.

In the sentencing phase of trial testimony Thursday, Department of Public Safety trooper Doug Overstreet of Junction, Texas, said he talked to a hitchhiker who claimed the senior Ellebracht had dropped him off nearby.

Tax negotiators prepare for tough talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional negotiators are clearing away preliminaries before the tough bargaining begins over "who benefits and who pays" in the landmark tax-overhaul legislation they hope to complete by summer's end.

Routine discussions were continuing today with little substantive action expected before next week.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the negotiations and leader of the 11-member House delegation, and Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., head of the group of 11 senators, said they hope to wrap up bargaining by the time Congress begins a three-week recess Aug. 15.

Both chambers then would ratify the work of the conferees in September before sending the final measure to the White House for the president's signature.

The legislators spent more than four hours Thursday listening to congressional tax experts offer an explanation of major differences between the House-passed and Senate-passed versions of the measure. The exercise was continuing today.

"For families who earn a modest income and pay more than their fair share of taxes, this tax reform bill is long overdue compensation," Rostenkowski said in opening the meeting of 22 House and Senate tax writers. "For those who have sought out lucrative shelters to avoid taxes, this tax reform bill is long overdue retribution."

"The crux of these negotiations — the ultimate question — (is) who benefits and who pays," Rostenkowski said.

Outside the conference, Packwood and Rostenkowski have been making joint television appearances over two days as part of an effort to make a public show of bipartisanship and cooperation.

In each of the appearances, Rostenkowski stresses the need to give as much tax relief as possible to middle-income taxpayers. Packwood then says he is willing to go along with that if a way can be found to pay for the changes.

And both say "the hottest button" in the negotiations is fully deductable Individual Retirement Accounts.

The House bill preserves IRA deductions, the Senate bill does not, in most cases.

Packwood and Rostenkowski are trying to create a momentum for the compromise effort that can overcome the problems that will surely arise when the negotiators begin the delicate work of resolving the hundreds of differences between the House and Senate bills.

Congress reaffirms stand on deficit reduction

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawmakers say their strong vote to stick with $11.7 billion in spending cuts made under the Gramm-Rudman law is the first step toward fortifying that deficit-reduction program.

But legislators are already girding for a tougher fight on the next decision: how to enforce future spending restraints.

The House by a 339-72 vote, and the Senate in a pair of voice votes, approved Thursday a joint resolution that reaffirms spending reductions imposed last March under Gramm-Rudman.

President Reagan was expected to sign the measure, which was needed because the Supreme Court ruled last week that the procedure followed in making the cuts was unconstitutional.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., echoed the remarks of other lawmakers when he said Thursday's vote was the only practical alternative, since agencies already had adjusted to lower spending levels.

"There is no cause for backtracking now," he said. "What's done is done."

Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., said the action showed Gramm-Rudman worked, but said it was only "a minor test."

The cuts were left intact despite pressure from some groups for exceptions, including federal and military retirees who lost their cost-of-living raises. The cuts trimmed many domestic agencies by 4.3 percent and most military programs by 4.9 percent.

Sens. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, Warren Rudman, R-N.H., and Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., said restoring the threat of automatic spending cuts was necessary to keep pressure on Congress and the White House to meet future deficit targets.

American missionary released

MARAWI, Philippines (AP) — An American missionary was released unharmed today by his Moslem captors after six days in captivity on the southern Philippine island of Mindanao. No ransom was paid, a negotiator said.

The Presbyterian evangelist, Brian Lawrence, 30, of Madison, Wis., was brought to Marawi by Moslem Princess Tarhata Alonto Lucman, who negotiated his release.

The tall, bearded Lawrence looked slightly shaken, but said, "I feel very happy."

"I have to say my kidnappers always treated me well," he said. "There were times when I was threatened...that if the military would operate (in a rescue attempt) I would be killed."

Lawrence was freed a day after another Moslem group released unharmed 10 Filipino Roman Catholic nuns, who were abducted from a Marawi convent last Friday.

Challenger crew 'unaware' of danger

By DEBORAH MESCE

WASHINGTON (AP) — The crew members of the space shuttle Challenger were unaware they were in danger in the final moments before their spacecraft exploded, according to NASA's preliminary analysis of a newly restored tape recording from the flight.

The tape, recovered from the ocean floor with the orbiter crew cabin six weeks after the Jan. 28 accident, gives no indication the seven astronauts knew the shuttle was in trouble, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said in a statement Thursday.

The statement marked the first time the space agency had addressed anything associated with the last moments of the astronauts, all of whom were killed when the ship exploded in a fireball 73 seconds after launch from Cape Canaveral, Fla.

"Preliminary analysis of the tape shows the crew was unaware of the events associated with the tragedy and the internal communications were being maintained as would be expected during a normal ascent," NASA said.

It has been a subject of speculation since the accident whether, in the moments before their deaths, the crew knew something was amiss. A $15.1 million damage claim filed with NASA by the widow of pilot Michael J. Smith alleges Smith "was thrown about in the spacecraft and in the few seconds preceding his death, knew of his impending death."

NASA officials have said that if the astronauts were aware something was wrong, they might have indicated their alarm in conversations among themselves, which would have been recorded on one of the two operational tape recorders. Normally in a launch, crew members do not talk among themselves, the officials said.

NASA did not release any information from the tape. Astronaut Daniel Brandenstein, contacted at his home in Houston, said the tape "had been listened to, but not enough to make a complete statement." He added, "As soon as it's completely analyzed there will be more information."

Ken Atchison, a NASA spokesman, said the recorder data stopped at the same time as the last communication received on the ground, 73.631 seconds after liftoff.

When the tapes were found, they were badly damaged because their reels made of magnesium reacted with the salt water. NASA engineers mounted an intensive effort to restore them and retrieve any information they might contain.

Besides voice communications, the tapes were used to record information from sensors aboard the spacecraft that measured such things as pressures and temperatures.

"Engineers at IBM develope process for neutralizing the ca chemicals and restoring the tap the point it can be analyzed," N said. Data on the tape still mus decoded, the space agency add

NASA previously had salvaged formation on another tape, wh was not damaged as severely cause its reels were made of alu num. That tape contained data ab on-board temperatures, stresses vibrations of the spacecraft. But cials said that recording provided information that had not been tra mitted to the ground.

Meanwhile Thursday, an Air Fo general told lawmakers that milit tasks in space have been unaffec as yet by the halt in launching hea military satellites, caused by Challenger explosion and the sub quent failure of two rockets.

"All of the missions we are quired to perform on orbit are bei performed," Lt. Gen. Bernard Randolph, deputy chief of staff research, development and acqui tion, told the House space scien subcommittee.

But he added, "We are depende entirely on those assets that are orbit today, and any failures fro this point forward will cause us som problem."

Fletcher to 'rethink' space station program proposal

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — NASA Administrator James Fletcher has agreed to "rethink" a proposal to move the space station program from Houston to Washington, Johnson Space Center Director Jesse Moore said.

"He has not agreed to change anything," Moore said of Fletcher. "I did not get any kind of new commitments out of Dr. Fletcher, but I do think Dr. Fletcher is giving some additional thought to this structure."

Moore met Wednesday with Fletcher in Washington to discuss the space station move and the potential 1,900 jobs involved in the program. Fletcher announced last month that the space station management center would be moved from Houston to NASA headquarters in Washington.

Moore explained during a Thursday news conference that the estimated 1,900 jobs were based on an assumption of how many people could be hired as the space station program progresses. He said the $1.4 billion program is in its infancy and doesn't expect a deployment until 1992 or 1993.

Moore said he expressed concern to Fletcher on Wednesday that a well-structured space station program might be better kept in Houston.

"We really wanted to make sure our center expertise here at Johnson was fully utilized in the development part and operational part of the space station program," Moore said.

He said the decision handed down by Fletcher "didn't have a lot of details associated with them. There still is a fair amount of detail that needs to be worked out."

The director said he also expressed concern to Fletcher about the manned system and habitability area, flight operations, and the distributed subsystems area.

"He has agreed to come to the Johnson Space Center," Moore said. But added, "I have no guarantee that there will be any changes to what has come out."

Fletcher is expected to meet with Johnson officials next Friday.

Fletcher has said that only about 100 jobs would be transferred to Washington, and not necessarily from Houston.

No relief in sight as heat wave spreads

Associated Press

Southeastern farmers are flooding slaughterhouses with cattle they can't feed because of a drought that's shriveled more than $300 million in crops, and Dixie's heat has spread to the Midwest, felling football players and soldiers.

No relief is in sight through the weekend from the heat that has contributed to 15 deaths and prompted farmers and officials to seek help from the federal government and states in cooler parts of the country.

Today's highs were expected to be around 100 degrees in Georgia and the Carolinas and in the 90s from the Southern Plains through the Great Lakes, the mid-Atlantic states and the Southeast.

Highs Thursdays were in the mid to upper 90s from Kentucky, Michigan and Ohio to North Carolina and northern Florida. The 96 degrees in Traverse City, Mich., broke a 22-year-old record. It was 94 in Chicago.

The temperature in downtown Columbia, S.C., hit 100 for the 12th straight day, and the same reading in Charlotte, N.C., tied a 99-year-old record.

Only scattered thunderstorms were expected today after hitting parts of Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina on Thursday, with Charleston getting a drenching 1.72 inches.

"That's quite a bit," said Scott Tansey of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo. "The only problem about the rainfall in the Southeast is that it's spotty and it's not enough."

Corn and soybeans in the Southeast have been most affected by the drought, but so has hay and even marijuana.

The Georgia Department of Agriculture estimated the damage at $140 million. Gov. Joe Frank Harris asked the U.S. Agriculture Department on Wednesday to make livestock feed available to farmers.

In North Carolina, officials said 50 counties had applied for federal disaster aid through Gov. Jim Martin because cash crops are drying up.

Virginia Gov. Gerald L. Baliles said he asked federal disaster declarations for 17 counties where crop losses are estimated at nearly $61.5 million, and that a dozen counties have asked to be included.

South Carolina Agriculture Commissioner D. Leslie Tindal said Thursday the drought is likely to cause at least $100 million in crop losses, and livestock markets are being flooded because farmers can't feed their animals.

"The beef cattle going to market now are way out of order with what we usually have this time of year," Tindal said.

Offers of hay and free transportation to get it to the state are coming from as far away as Minnesota, he said. There's a firm commitment of 30 tons of hay from Indiana and promises from Illinois and Iowa, but the state's cattle consume 200 to 300 tons daily, he said.

Sen. Mack Mattingly, R-Ga., said Thursday the USDA was assembling a task force to tour Georgia, Alabama and the Carolinas next week to develop recommendations for government assistance.

Authorities in North Carolina canceled plans for a raid on marijuana growers earlier this month after a preliminary check found that many plants were shriveled. "That tickles me to death," Burke County sheriff's Lt. Ralph Johnson said Thursday. "I hate to see the drought, but it's a blessing for our eradication program."

In the Midwest, Thursday's heat spurred record demand for electricity in Indiana, Illinois and Ohio. Demand caused a brief blackout in western Toledo, said Toledo Edison Co. spokesman Rick Kelly.

The heat has been blamed on the deaths of a 16-year-old girl in Indiana, a 19-year-old man in Illinois, and for seven people in Georgia, three in North Carolina and one each in South Carolina, Virginia and Louisiana.

Lawrence said the kidnappers did not know his name or nationality when they abducted him Saturday from his apartment in Marawi, on Mindanao 510 miles south of Manila.

He said about 20 men guarded him at any given time.

Lawrence was released at about noon. Military authorities said he was brought in a small boat from the island of Balut Masla in the middle of Lake Lanao to the lakeshore town of Ugo, about 18 miles from Marawi.

Princess Tarhata, scion of an influential Moslem family and widow of a sultan, said no money was paid for Lawrence's release. It was not known whether any concessions were made to free Lawrence.

The identity of the kidnappers was not immediately known. Military officials have said Lawrence was believed to have been abducted by a group called the Barracudas, a private army linked to Moslem kingpin Ali Dimaparo, a supporter of ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

Princess Tarhata, a political rival of Saidamen Pangarungan, the governor of Lanao del Sur province, said Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and Armed Forces Chief Gen. Fidel V. Ramos asked her to negotiate with Lawrence's kidnappers for his freedom.

She said the delay in the release was caused by rumors that the military would rescue Lawrence by force.

"I was afraid," she said, speaking of the possibility authorities might attempt a rescue. She said she told the kidnappers that "there would be no operation."

Maj. Gen. Jose Magno, chief of the southern military command, said earlier today that he assured the princess there would be no military intervention.

On Thursday, shortly after the nuns' release, the Philippine military moved a battalion of 400 soldiers into the Moslem city of Marawi. Officials had said they wanted to pressure the kidnappers.

SESSION

After White's announcment, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said he sees "no way we can cut $2.5 billion from state services without shortchanging our future." Hobby acknowledged that his position differs drastically from House Speaker Gib Lewis' stern anti-tax approach, but Hobby said he and Lewis "are both confident that we can reach agreement as we move closer to the opening date."

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Grant Jones, D-Abilene, said he wants to see a tax increase accompany "spending adjustments" during the special session.

"I hope we can meet soon ... and expand the tax base to raise the necessary funds to meet the state's reponsibilities," Jones said in a press release. "However, there may not be enough time to do the thorough job necessary in a called session."

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, said he feels lawmakers should use the special session just to make certain the state's checks don't bounce by December or January. "We can take care of the rest of the problems when we get into regular session (in January)," he said.

Sims said he sees a tax increase as extremely unlikely but said he would vote for higher taxes after exploring "all the other alternatives first."

Reps. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, and Kelly Godwin, R-Odessa, could not be reached for comment Thursday night or Friday morning.

The unnamed hitchhiker, Overstreet said, told him the same vehicle the senior Ellebracht was driving "came by and ran over his suitcase and tried to run over him."

Overstreet said he asked the man if he would like to file a complaint.

"He said, 'no, sir. I'm going to California. I want to go on.'"

Junction Police Chief Larry James said he talked to several hitchhikers in 1981 and 1982 who claimed they were enslaved at the Ellebracht ranch.

Defense attorneys Richard "Racehorse" Haynes and Ray Bass called a string of character witnesses for the Ellebrachts. All said they had known the family for years and would be willing to offer support if they were granted probation.

Geaneta Klein, who said she and her husband rented land from the Ellebrachts, said, "They were always helping people."

Mrs. Klein said her son's car broke down near San Marcos one night and the Ellebrachts went to his rescue.

The jury's verdict Wednesday created mass confusion among the attorneys.

Although the seven-woman, five-man jury ruled the three defendants were guilty as charged in the indictment, they also made a finding the men agreed to release their victims in a safe place.

POLL

University officials validated the survey following a five-month study of the community that included population and socio-economic status, Ms. Ferguson said.

"We figure we're doing a pretty good job of disseminating information, but we may not be hearing from everyone. Normally we don't hear from the silent majority and this is a way we can," she said.

Ms. Ferguson said the results of the survey will be presented to school trustees at the next regular board meeting on August 12.

The survey also is available for public review, she said.

WATER

McGregor said the ordinance should help the city.

"We want to work on this together," he said, noting the city must also control its water runoff.

"Everyone needs to work on controlling runoff water."

To control runoff water, automatic sprinkler heads near curbs were removed in June from 29 parks, said Parks and Recreation Director George Logan.

"We just want to do what we can to keep water from running off into the streets," he said.

Magazines, records pulled from Wal-Mart shelves

BENTONVILLE, Ark. (AP) — All rock 'n' roll magazines, some heavy-metal rock records and some obscenity-laced comedy recordings have been ordered off Wal-Mart discount store shelves, but not because of a TV evangelist, the company says.

Evangelist Jimmy Swaggart told the Washington Post he criticized availability of rock 'n' roll magazines at Wal-Mart and other stores in a nationally-broadcast sermon at New Haven, Conn., June 1. The sermon was broadcast June 22.

Captain Kangaroo joins battle to ban tobacco advertisements

WASHINGTON (AP) — Captain Kangaroo and the son of the late tobacco magnate R.J. Reynolds are joining the medical establishment in urging Congress to ban all advertising of tobacco products.

Bob Keeshan, a longtime cigarette smoker who created the Captain Kangaroo television character, and Patrick Reynolds, an actor who no longer owns stock in the tobacco empire begun by his family in 1913, were to testify before a House subcommittee today.

Also set to appear was Victoria Brynner, the daughter of actor Yul Brynner, a heavy smoker who before he died of lung cancer made an anti-smoking television commercial being broadcast now.

One notable absentee is Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, a longtime foe of cigarette smoking who supports a ban on tobacco advertising.

The Washington Post reported Thursday that White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan had killed Koop's testimony, which would have favored the ban. A White House spokesman said the Reagan administration objects to having its officials appear in tandem with outside witnesses.

Spokesman Albert B. Brashear said the administration has not decided whether to support the bill. When it does present its views, "We prefer it be done with the administration testifying on its own," he said.

Congressional committees often schedule panels of witnesses representing various organizations, who present their prepared testimony in written form and then are questioned by committee members.

The subcommittee on health and the environment already has scheduled a second hearing for Aug. 1. The panel, chaired by Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., is considering the best congressional approach to tobacco advertising.

Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., last month introduced a bill that would outlaw all promotion and advertising of tobacco products — in newspapers and magazines, on billboards and even as part of sales displays.

Anti-apartheid activists arrested at Shell

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four anti-apartheid activists who were arrested for refusing to leave the building housing Shell Oil Co.'s office vow to make their trial a showcase for their push to force U.S. companies to leave South Africa.

The demonstrators will appear in court today on charges stemming from their May 13 arrests during a protest of Shell's investments in South Africa.

"We intend to use this courtroom to put Shell Oil, American companies and the U.S. government on trial for their complicity in propping up apartheid in South Africa," said Randall Robinson of the Free South Africa movement, a coalition of Americans opposed to Pretoria's white-minority government.

Robinson was one of four people arrested on an unlawful entering charge, similiar to trespassing. The others were Del. Walter Fauntroy, D-D.C., Mary Berry, a member of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, and District of Columbia professor Sylvia Hill.

The defendants each face a $100 fine or six months in jail if they are convicted.

The first order of business at the trial, set to begin in D.C. Superior Court before Judge Frank Schwelb, is a request by the prosecutors to postpone the trial, Schwelb's office said.

Beth Bogart, a spokeswoman for the defendants, said their attorneys hope the trial will continue next week so they can call several prominent witnesses to the stand, including Sens. Gary Hart, D-Colo., Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Paul Simon, D-Ill., along with Coretta Scott King, the widow of slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr.

Robinson said the activists believe that Shell and other foreign oil companies are the "lubricant of apartheid." The Free South Africa group mounted a campaign recently to try to force American companies to pull out of South Africa completely.

Shirley Johnson, a spokeswoman for Shell, said the oil company did not press the charges. They were brought by Blake Management Co., the property manager.

"We don't support apartheid," added Ms. Johnson. "We think it is abhorrent."

The Free South Africa group first organized protests outside the South African Embassy in November 1984. Since then, hundreds of people have been arrested on charges of protesting too closely to the embassy, but local prosecutors have dropped all charges.

Regan's words on diamonds called 'sexist'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawmakers and others are hurling criticisms at White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan, identified by a White House official as questioning whether American women would be willing to give up their jewelry if the U.S. imposes sanctions against South Africa.

It was the second time in less than a year Regan had made a comment that critics said was sexist.

A White House official confirmed Thursday evening that Regan was the unidentified administration official quoted in Thursday's editions of The Baltimore Sun.

The Sun reported that in a talk Wednesday with reporters about U.S. policy toward South Africa, the official warned about the consequences on the world diamond market of tough sanctions against the white minority-ruled Pretoria government. South Africa is a leading exporter of diamonds.

"Are the women of America prepared to give up all their jewelry?" he said. "Are the Israelis, the Belgians, the Netherlands people prepared not to engage in any more diamond trade? Are we telling ourselves that industrial diamonds — things that we need for etching, cutting, shaping of tools and so forth — that we now have to go, if anywhere, to the Soviet Union?"

"This sounds like 'Diamond Don' Regan," House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said in a statement delivered by his press secretary, Chris Matthews. "According to him, women know nothing about throw weights, only about carats. How many people must die to keep this crowd in diamonds?"

O'Neill referred to a comment Regan made before last November's Geneva summit, when he said women would be more interested in what Raisa Gorbachev and Nancy Reagan were wearing than in throw weights and other arms control matters.

"He must be one of the slowest learners in America," said Eleanor Cutri Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women. "First he says women aren't interested in arms control or in national security, only in fashion. Now he says we're not willing to give up jewelry to end apartheid. It's the most outrageous and insulting of comments to American women. Many of us have gone to jail, been arrested over apartheid in the United States."

Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Texas, chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, issued a statement saying the comment "is not only ignorant, but insulting to the compassion and intelligence of American women."

Leland continued: "This sexist remark again demonstrates the Reagan administration's total lack of understanding of the struggle of the 24 million black South Africans. Regan's statement illustrates all too clearly that the Reagan administration underestimates the American people's commitment to ending apartheid in South Africa."

The White House official who confirmed that Regan had made the remark said, "He's put his foot in his mouth again. I don't know why he does it."

Spokesman Edward Djerejian said the White House would have no comment on the quotation.

The Sun, quoting the official without identifying him, said the administration hopes to beat back congressional pressure for imposition of tough new economic sanctions against South Africa by pointing to that country's strategic importance to the United States and its allies.

Study shows large twin-trailer trucks may damage highways

WASHINGTON (AP) — Use of large, twin-trailer trucks permitted by Congress three years ago does not pose major safety risks but will cost more in upkeep of the nation's highways, a government study released today said.

The National Research Council's report concluded that the twin trailers may cause some increase in accidents per mile traveled, over the single-trailer trucks they replace.

But it maintained that the bigger loads and more efficient shipping afforded by the twin trailers will mean fewer trucks on the road.

"The increased use of twins will have little overall effect on highway safety because a reduction in miles of truck travel will approximately offset the small possible increase in accident involvements per mile traveled," the report said.

The clean bill of health on safety concerns was challenged by another group that monitors highway safety.

Dr. Ian Jones, researcher for the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, said his group presented information to the National Research Council indicating that the twin trailer trucks do pose added risks for motorists, and that the council appeared hostile to it. His organization is supported by insurance companies.

"We are of the opinion that doubles are considerably less safe than singles (trailers)," Jones said in an interview. "Nobody contends they're safer. We should be moving to a safer environment. Progress isn't maintaining the status quo or getting a little bit worse."

The council's report said the twin rigs will accelerate wear on highway pavement and increase road maintenance costs by $50 million a year. The increased road wear is due to their increased weight, less uniform weight distribution and single-axle configuration, it said.

Use of the twin trailers will save $500 million a year for trucking companies and shippers by 1990, when the twins are fully in use, the study said.

Truck tractors pulling two 28-foot-long trailers were permitted on interstates and other principal highways by Congress in 1983. That law overruled prohibitions in 14 states and restrictions in others, where concern about safety had fueled opposition.

Also permitted were single trailers of up to 48 feet in length and 102 inches in width, three feet longer and six inches wider than before.

Since then, the report said, the bigger single trailers have become the industry standard. Twin trailers, it said, are most often used by general freight common carriers that specialize in shipments of less than a full truckload, who can break up shipments efficiently into the two trailers.

Use of the twins is expected to account for 11 percent of truck miles by 1990, it said.

The National Research Council is an arm of the National Academy of Sciences and the National Academy of Engineering. It conducted the study at the direction of Congress and with support from the Federal Highway Administration.

The study said twin trailers have slightly more accidents per mile traveled than single trailers operated under identical conditions and speeds, based on handling experiments and analysis of actual road use in states that permitted them before the federal law.

It said the twins are prone to rear-trailer rollovers as a result of abrupt steering maneuvers, tend to encroach on outside lanes and shoulders on curves at highway speeds more than conventional trailers, and have greater rear-end sway. It said drivers are also less able to sense how twin trailers are handling.

At low speeds, it said, they are more maneuverable than the single trailers.

Since 1983, it said, accident rates "show no surprising changes...that could be attributed to twins."

It said the twin trucks will allow a 9 percent reduction in truck miles.

"When all factors are considered, despite the uncertainty in comparing accident rates of twins and tractor-semitrailers, twins clearly appear to be about as safe a method of hauling freight per ton-mile of travel," it said.

House looks at bill to let businesses insure selves

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House is considering legislation that would permit a wide array of businesses, governments and associations to insure themselves or band together to buy group coverage.

The Senate, by a vote of 96-1, approved the bill allowing manufacturers, sellers and distributors to self-insure by forming so-called risk retention groups — or buy group coverage against product liability claims.

"This is a first step but only a first step in dealing with the liability insurance crisis that all of us are aware of," Sen. Robert W. Kasten Jr., R-Wis., the chief sponsor, said after Thursday's vote.

The Senate acted amid complaints from many organizations about skyrocketing insurance premiums, and in some cases an unavailability of coverage.

Sweetner 'hazard' probed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A consumer group is asking the Food and Drug Administration to declare the popular artificial sweetner aspartame, known as NutraSweet, as an "imminent hazard" to health.

The Community Nutrition Institute, which filed a petition Thursday, based its claim on reports collected by two Boston researchers from some 80 individuals who said they suffered seizures after consuming the product.

Those reports, which were presented to the FDA in April, are anecdotal rather than controlled scientific studies. But the institute's petition contends they meet legal standards for proof of "imminent hazard."

The declaration of "imminent hazard" is a legal distinction that allows the FDA to move against the substance without going through the usual regulatory procedures of advance notice and public hearing.

Navy wants to use savings

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy plans to ask Congress for the right to use $60 million in savings from aircraft production contracts for other programs, says Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr.

The savings, when added to ones identified previously, brings to more than $1.6 billion the amount the Navy has saved on major aircraft programs compared to the approved budgets for fiscal years 1983, 1984 and 1985, Lehman said Thursday.

Congress approved procurement budgets for those Navy programs totaling $14.37 billion during those three years, but the actual contracts totaled $12.76 billion.

The additional $60 million in savings was recently calculated based on the results of final negotiations with contractors for production of jet fighters, helicopters and other planes authorized in fiscal 1984 and fiscal 1985, Lehman said.

Reactor studied for safety

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's only nuclear reactor, similar in design to the Chernobyl reactor, is operated safely, but personnel at the Hanford Nuclear Reservation must guard against complacency, says a team of experts.

The 15-member team said Thursday it found that the backup control room at the Hanford N-reactor, near Richland, Wash., could not be used in a severe accident.

The team said the staff did not adequately understand that the reactor's graphite moderator could catch fire, and employees generally did not believe it is possible to reduce radiation exposure any further.

After the April 28 disaster at Chernobyl, Energy Secretary John S. Herrington ordered a speed-up of an already scheduled "technical safety appraisal" by a team of experts.

Pentagon delays projects

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon will have to delay construction on various medical facilities because of an amendment calling for construction of a new hospital that the Defense Department doesn't want to build, says an internal review.

The review concludes that the Pentagon will have to delay at least 18 projects scheduled for construction starts in fiscal 1989 and possibly seven others because of an amendment authored by Rep. Tom Loeffler, R-Texas.

The amendment, attached to the Pentagon's military construction budget, directs the Pentagon to proceed with design and site preparation work for a 450-bed replacement hospital for the Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio, Texas.

That's all, you say!

When the letter bearing the return address of "Office of the Governor, State Capitol, Austin, Texas" arrived earlier this week, we were certain it was Gov. Mark White's response to an editorial published recently criticizing him for apologizing to the teachers of the state for any anguish they may have suffered as a result of having to take this year's Texas Examination of Current Administrators and Teachers (TECAT).

Granted, we had laid it on fairly heavy, asserting the move was merely an attempt by White to get back some of the vote from teachers. And the governor is free to respond to any editorial we publish. That is, after all, what makes a free press such a valuable commodity. Journalists can openly criticize politicians and vice-versa, and hopefully in the process the institutions of government and journalism will be strengthened.

But when the letter was opened, it was found to not contain the anticipated fiery response of a politician whose actions had been called into question or even a calmly-drafted response putting forth the governor's explanation of the apology. The letter, in fact, was nothing more than a sheet of white paper with nothing — not a word — on either side.

Now being disposed to a healthy degree of suspicion, we began to consider the possibilities:

— Could this be Mark White's subtle message that he had nothing more to say in the matter or a snide way of saying, "I'm not talking to you"?

— Could it be that he was making another "statement" that he was not willing to share with us?

— Could this be the start of a "communication blackout" with the governor? While it's agreed that we definitely have not been in White's "camp," it also should be noted that editorially we have supported a number of his actions while in the Governor's Mansion, although also having been constructively critical of others.

Puzzled, we inspected the envelope closer and found a small printed line at the bottom of the front side that read: "Political advertising paid for by Governor Mark White Committee."

Hmm! An obvious error by an envelope-stuffer? Perhaps, but since we are endowed with that healthy degree of suspicion we prefer to think of it as the governor's attempt at convincing us that his "apology" was nothing but honest concern for the welfare of teachers.

That's simply all he could think of in his defense!

Another View:
End of a honeymoon

Peru, battered by economic recession and bloodied by shadowy guerrillas, desperately needed the vigor and hope offered by its young new president, Alan Garcia. But Garcia's political honeymoon has come to an abrupt, violent end.

Peru's capital, Lima, was host city last month to the first Socialist International meeting ever held outside Europe. Garcia's Peruvian political party, the American Popular Revolutionary Alliance, is affiliated with the socialist federation and planned to use the meeting to promote his vision of Latin American and Third World solidarity on the international debt crisis. Peru is one of many Latin nations unable to pay its debts and demanding more help and other concessions from international banks and lending agencies.

But Garcia's most dangerous political enemies, members of a guerrilla organization known as Sendero Luminoso, had another plan — to embarrass the Peruvian leader. They succeeded beyond their own expectations, thanks to the brutality of elements of Peru's security forces.

Days before the opening of the socialist congress, suspected Sendero guerrillas who were being held in three prisons staged a series of simultaneous uprisings while sympathizers on the outside staged bombings and a mortar attack on the hotel where the international congress was being held. In response, an angry Garcia gave Peruvian police and soldiers a free hand to control the situation. As a result, more than 250 persons were killed before the prison riots were put down. A would-be terrorist also died when an explosive device went off prematurely, and several foreigners were killed when a bomb exploded aboard a tourist train in Cuzco.

Once the smoke cleared, even more troubling events followed. In a televised speech Garcia revealed that as many as 124 of the prisoners slain when the military regained control of the Lurigancho prison in eastern Lima had been killed after surrendering. Warning that he would not tolerate human-rights abuses, the president ordered 100 police officers involved in putting down the insurrection arrested and held for trial. Now rumors of discontent within Peru's armed forces are circulating, and the danger of a coup is being openly discussed in Lima. Rumblings like that are worrisome, for the Peruvian military surrendered power to civilians only in 1980, after 12 years of military government.

Garcia's decision to suppress the disorders was made too quickly, with little thought of its possible consequences and without time to find other means of controlling the violence. But his decision to persecute abuses committed by security personnel during the outbreak was courageous. Garcia now deserves international support — especially from the United States, which has maintained a distance from Garcia and his populist policies. The Peruvian generals must see that their young president has the approval of the world in protecting human rights, even in the face of insurrection. If not, the Peruvian military may be tempted to try to settle all of Peru's problems the way some of its men apparently did at Lurigancho.

JACK ANDERSON
Senators gripe at diplomatic nepotism

WASHINGTON — By long tradition, American diplomats' wives — no matter how professionally talented they may be — have been expected to stifle any personal ambitions and serve as unpaid hostesses at their husbands' overseas posts. Recently, though, some Foreign Service wives have urged that diplomatic spouses be put on the payroll for the "unofficial" duties they perform.

Jack Anderson

This reasonable proposal is being put into practice in Washington — but at such a high and selective level that it has aroused grumbling on Capitol Hill about "nepotism." The employment of high-ranking State Department officials' family members smells like favoritism to some congressional staffers — and who could be more expert on the subject of jobs obtained by friends or relatives of influential persons?

"Even if it is not illegal it is surely unethical," griped one Senate aide. "It clearly indicates bias, even if it is done on a merit basis."

Senate sources gave our associate Lucette Lagnado these examples of big shots' relatives who have landed well-paying jobs in Foggy Bottom:

— Phyllis Habib, daughter of special envoy Philip Habib, the shuttle diplomat, is a support services officer in the State Department's family liaison office. She works on "staff evacuations, divorces and sundry other matters," a department spokesman said, and makes about $33,700 a year.

— Sheppie Abramowitz, wife of Morton Abramowitz, assistant secretary for intelligence and research, is a GS-14 in the department's office of emergency operations, earning $48,000 a year. She acts as liaison to volunteer agencies that administer emergency aid overseas.

In 1980, we saluted Sheppie Abramowitz for her (unpaid) volunteer work in Thailand while her husband was ambassador there. She and other (unpaid) embassy wives tore up their own sheets and linen to make bandages for Cambodian and other refugees flooding into Thailand.

— Marilyn Holmes is the wife of assistant secretary Allen Holmes, who heads the bureau of politico-military affairs. She produces training films for the Foreign Service, and is paid about $58,000 a year to make movies that help Foreign Service families cope with terrorism and other problems they'll face overseas. Asked what her qualifications as a movie producer were, a department spokesman said, "I know she is a professional."

— Sheila Platt, a trained social worker, is the wife of Nicholas Platt, the department's executive secretary. She works in the overseas briefing center of the Foreign Service Institute. Her specialty there is stress management, dealing with Foreign Service employees and family members who are either on their way overseas or have just returned from a foreign assignment. Her part-time salary as a GS-12 is about $1,200 a month.

Senate staffers have other complaints about the State Department, which they believe is overloaded with elitists who are out of touch with the realities of fiscal restraint. One source noted indignantly that the department asked for a $400,000 increase in its entertainment budget this year. "We did not give it to them," the staffer said, adding in exasperation: "They spend their time overseas. They never heard of Gramm-Rudman."

State Department people, the Senate aide said, "think they are special."

LAUNDROMAT HUMMING?: Unpublished Federal Reserve Board figures seem to show that money-laundering operations are still thriving in Florida. In the first five months of this year, the Miami Federal Reserve bank had a cash surplus of $2.9 billion. The figure for Jacksonville was well over $900 million. A Fed official cautioned, though, that huge currency surpluses don't necessarily translate into drug dealing or other criminal activity; it could simply mean wealthy businessmen in Latin America are moving their cash to the United States for safekeeping.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: Iran has steadfastly refused to sit down for serious peace negotiations to end the long, punishing war with Iraq. But our sources suspect that the financial drain on Iran is beginning to tell, especially with the collapse of world oil prices. Iranian cash reserves are estimated at anywhere between $3 billion and $7 billion. There is one untapped source of cash, though: the extraordinary collection of crown jewels left behind by the late shah. It's reportedly worth about $4 billion.

EVANS & NOVAK
Reagan's SALT verification level unworkable

WASHINGTON — When Ronald Reagan asked Francois Mitterrand during his New York City visit to instruct Mikhail Gorbachev that verification of SALT is the U.S. litmus test for a new arms agreement, he set a higher standard that anti-SALT senators will soon contend makes agreement nearly impossible.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The American president was talking about not merely compliance, but verification. The French president faithfully carried that word to the Soviet ruler in Moscow. There, Mitterrand got no hints of any change in Soviet practices that have repeatedly been labeled by President Reagan as violations of both SALT I and SALT II. Indeed, the Soviets will not permit verification and the U.S. cannot verify, partly because of the recent space debacles.

Whether the president fully realizes that he has driven arms control into this cul de sac, it will be pointed out to him on the Senate floor. There an amendment will be introduced to the defense bill, supporting Reagan's emphasis on verification as a condition of any new U.S.-Soviet agreement.

That could lead, by Reagan's own conditions, to the U.S. exceeding SALT II ceilings later this year because the Soviets continue to make U.S. verification of their compliance impossible. In that event, both the 1986 summit and a new arms deal look like dead letters.

Congressional resolutions cannot bind the president's freedom of action. Rather, the Senate strategy is psychological: to demonstrate to pro-SALT administration officials, and to U.S. allies who are pressing for arms control concessions, that Reagan's demand for full verification of Soviet compliance with its nuclear weapons agreements has not and will not be satisfied in Moscow.

Soviet obstinacy is matched by U.S. technological decline. There have been recent disturbing setbacks in American inspection capabilities, starting with satellite-launching problems. These setbacks are being exploited by anti-SALT senators in an effort to thwart new arms agreements that would cause eventual abandonment of Reagan's cherished Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI).

The satellite-launch crisis is worse than even some administration officials realize. While the agony of Challenger's disintegration Jan. 28 convulsed the nation, largely-unnoticed lesser failures have damaged this country's ability to conduct "broad search" by reconnaissance satellites. Broad or "area" search involves satellite inspection of areas not known for any prohibited nuclear arms activity.

In a letter last week to Kenneth Adelman, Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA) director, Sen. Jesse Helms and other SALT foes asked this question: "To what extent has the U.S. loss of the Space Shuttle and several other launch vehicles and payloads ... created a crisis in U.S. capability for SALT monitoring ... and verification?"

Behind this understated warning is harsh reality. Knowledgable administration officials admit this difficulty more candidly. They say privately that it took three or more years of "broad search" over South-Central Siberia before the illegal Krasnoyarsk radar was accidentally discovered by satellite photography. The Krasnoyarsk complex covers the area of several football fields, and contains one building that is 27 stories high. "We have less satellite capability today than we had in July 1983" (when Krasnoyarsk was first photographed), one official told us.

Mobile missiles are seldom stockpiled anywhere near fixed silos of intercontinental missiles. Thus, they can be found only through random search by the dwindling number of U.S. spy satellites.

There is reason to believe that the Soviets are developing ways to "blind" spy satellites for brief periods, using new jamming technology. If so, verifying what is being done with two dangerous new Soviet missiles — the multi-warhead rail-mobile SS-24 and the single-warhead, truck-mobile SS-25, declared a SALT II violation by Reagan — would become little more than hit-or-miss. The Kremlin never has and never will even consider unlimited on-site inspection, by far the most reliable verification tool.

U.S. officials say privately that the Soviets are completing the construction of sheds up to 1,500 feet long — more than a quarter of a mile — to conceal nuclear weapons coming off assembly lines and at missile-deployment complexes. That eliminates a previous source of accurate information on which the U.S. could base its tallies of Soviet production: loading docks visible to the skies.

As Reagan demands verification, his negotiating partners in Moscow tighten their measures to make it impossible and the U.S. loses its ability to penetrate Soviet countermeasures. That is the message anti-SALT senators want to send the country and its allies abroad. They are hoping that the president, who established the conditions, and made them clear when he asked his French colleague to deliver the message, will not forget them.

CHARLEY REESE
Four levels of activity help determine success

Here's a handy guide for assessing public issues. It consists of remembering that there are four levels of human activity — vision, strategy, tactics and operations.

Charley Reese

Credit for this insight belongs to Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., one of the few genuine thinkers in Congress.

A great deal of confusion results from the failure of people to distinguish these four levels when public affairs are being discussed. If we use LBJ's Great Society as example, we can see how critics and proponents of it arbitrarily jump back and forth among the four levels to suit the purposes of political debate.

At the level of vision, we are simply creating in our imagination the end result — the kind of society we think we ought to have. Strategy involves a broad plan on how to achieve it. Tactics involve methods to achieve particular parts of the over-all goal. Operations, of course, involve the execution of tactics.

The thing to remember is that a failure in operations does not mean the tactics, the strategy, and the vision are failures. Nor, for that matter, do wrong strategy and tactics invalidate the vision. If we have agreed on a vision — that in the kind of society we want to construct no one will be hungry or cold — then discovering that some particular programs are, because of bad design or corruption, not contributing to that goal does not mean that we should junk the vision.

Some conservative critics of the welfare state are apt to use that argument. Some liberal proponents, however, will make a similar error. They will argue that the goodness of the vision is a reason not to abandon tactics and operations which have failed.

The sensible approach is to first form a consensus on the visionary level. Let's say, for example, our vision is that no one in the United States should suffer from lack of medical care simply because they cannot afford it. Once that consensus is formed, then our commitment should be to the vision, not to any particular strategy or tactics. There may be any number of different ways we can achieve the goal.

Strategy and tactics should be subject to change according to whether they work or don't work. Unfortunately, we tend to associate the strategy and tactics and even operations with the vision. Thus it becomes politically impossible to make major changes in the Medicare Act because people are encouraged to interpret that as an attack on the vision — the end result — rather than an attempt to find a better means to the end.

I noticed that some critics of aid to Nicaraguan contras argued that it should not be given because some of the previous aid was allegedly stolen. That, however, is failure at the operational level. If there were in fact strategic and tactical reasons to supply the aid, those still exist even if there is a problem at the operational level. Those same liberal critics would not say that if some food stamp funds are stolen — as they have been — then food stamps should be abolished.

Whenever you see a debate on a public issue, it will help you understand the matter more clearly if you determine whether the debate centers on vision, strategy, tactics, or operations.

Beware, however, of people who talk only in terms of vision. Candidates are especially prone to do that. While we definitely need to know a candidate's thinking on the visionary level, we also need to know if he has the foggiest idea of how to achieve his goals. It's not enough to know where we want to go; we also have to know how to get there. There may be instances where the cost of the trip makes the destination not worth reaching.

Even we in the press often get hung up on vision and strategy and ignore tactics and operations. We might, for example, be exceedingly interested in whether or not a public project should be authorized and funded (vision and strategy) but after it's authorized pay no attention at all to how the contracts are let (tactics) or how well the construction is done (operations). Most corruption occurs at the tactical and operational levels.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Fair, warm days likely

From Staff and Wire Reports

Permian Basin area residents can expect fair skies and warm temperatures for the beginning of the weekend. The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is calling for a high in the middle 90s for Saturday.

For tonight, the NWS forecast includes a low in the upper 60s, fair skies and southerly winds at 10-20 mph. Winds will remain southerly at 10-20 mph on Saturday.

Thursday's high was eight degrees short of the record high of 103 set for the date in 1981. This morning's low tied the previous record low of 62 set in 1955.

STATE

Fair to partly cloudy skies were reported over the state today, with a few thunderstorms developing over the Southeast Texas coastal waters.

Another hot day was forecast for most of the state with readings expected to top 100 degrees in parts of North Central and South Texas, 80s expected along the Southeast Texas coast and 90s over most other parts of the state. Laredo reported 102 for Thursday's high reading.

Low level cloudiness was reported at dawn over parts of South Central Texas. Southerly winds of 5 to 15 miles per hour breezed across most of the state this morning.

Early morning lows were mostly in the 70s, with a few 60s across West Texas. Marfa reported the lowest reading overnight at 55 degrees, while Galveston was the warmest at 82.

A few scattered afternoon and evening thunderstorms were a possiblity in West Texas and Southeast Texas, the National Weather Service said.

Little change was expected in the weather pattern for the weekend, forecasters said.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms ranged along a warm front extending from the upper and eastern Great Lakes to the mid-Atlantic Coast today, while a Southern heat wave pushed into the Midwest.

Thunderstorms also were scattered across the central Gulf Coast, the southern and central Rockies and central High Plains.

Rain was scattered across northern New England and heavy rain drenched sections of western New York.

The heat wave held its grip on the Southeast as the hot weather spread into to the Midwest. Early-morning temperatures were in the 70s to around 80 from the central and southern Plains across the Great Lakes to the central and southern Atlantic Coast.

Another night worth forgetting

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

There are nights to remember, and then there are nights like Thursday.

What Jackson's Mets didn't do to the Midland Angels, the Halos did to themselves.

When it was over, even the Mets were embarrased by the 19-4 margin.

The win gave Jackson a 2-1 lead in the five game Texas League series and Midland a 10-15 record for the second half race.

Jackson collected 15 hits, including four homers, but four Midland pitchers issued 10 walks, hit a batsman and the defense committed seven errors and collected a black eye.

It was the kind of performance that drew boos from 1,159 beer night fans.

ALMOST LOST in the offensive fireworks and defensive shambles was a workmanlike 11-hit, no walk pitching effort by Bill Fultz, 3-2, a pitcher looking for a ticket back to Tidewater in the AAA International League.

On the statistics, Fultz looked like the kind of pitcher the Angels couldn't wait to get at. His walk statistics were nothing to rave about, 14, but those 80 hits in 60 innings looked like an invitation to fatten some batting averages.

"I'm coming back from a herniated disc and missed spring training and the first month of the season. I got racked pretty hard early in relief and then in my first four starts," confided Fultz, a six-year pro out of Livingston, Ala., University. "I'm just working my way back. Tonight I ran out of gas the last couple of innings. It's the first time I'd gone over six innings this year."

Johnny Wilson hit his first homer of the year to lead off the fourth. Jason Felice hit a two-runner, his 11th, in the seventh, and Shawn Abner stretched his hitting streak to 20 with a solo homer, his 10th, right after Felice hit his.

However, the night's most productive bat belonged to catcher Greg Olson, who batted in five runs with a single and home run.

DESPITE THE score, Midland was in it until the final three innings, trailing 6-4 going into the seventh thanks to Kevin King and James Randall. Both hit homers and both came with a man on base, which was the good news. Prior to Thursday, Midland's nine previous homers had accounted for just 11 runs.

"Randall hit a curve," said Fultz. "And King got a fastball on the outside. Both good pitches."

Randall's homer tied him with departed ex-teammate Glen Walker, who left with 18, for the Texas League lead. King remained right on Randall's heels with 17.

"Pat Keedy crushed everything I threw up," said Fultz. "Luckily he got just one hit. He hit everything else right at someone."

The three-run seventh, featuring the Felice and Abner homers made it 9-4, but then came the eighth. Eight runs on seven hits, two walks, two errors and a hit batsman. Thirteen Mets batted and John Hotchkiss, Manager Joe Maddon's life-saver in games like these, the third pitcher of the inning, finally got the third out.

Big Crawdaddy's back no laughing matter

Cowboys Camp

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif (AP) — "Big Crawdaddy" is back and anybody who wants to make jokes about what happened to him last season best remember the 6-foot-5, 295-pounder is a former bouncer.

Crawford Ker gives you a stare and says, "My back was so painful I couldn't even sit in meetings. But people think it was funny."

The hulking Dallas Cowboys' offensive lineman was referring to the fact that he broke two chairs trying to sit down in them at the practice field.

The last time he landed on his spine and it sent spasms racing up and down his back. The second round draft choice missed the last half of the season.

"I went to an acupuncturist three times a week and I've been taking karate in the off-season," Ker said. "I had a jacuzzi put in at home. Back problems could end my career and I'm not going to let them."

Ker has become an important cog in the Cowboys' plans now that starting right guard Kurt Petersen has a knee injury.

"I didn't want to win the job this way," Ker said. "But I'm going to give it everything I've got. I can tell you it's the hardest job I've had since I was a bouncer in Florida. You meet a lot of dirty people with guns and knives in bars.

"Athletes will beat up on you but they do it the right way," he added. "Maybe my karate lessons will help. I can get dirty if that's what it takes."

KER IS one of the fastest big men in the NFL. He's been timed at 4.82 in the 40-yard dash.

"He's having an awesome camp," said offensive line coach Jim Myers.

Ker, whose devastating blocks have made him a training camp legend, said "I'm a much better man than I was a year ago. A got worn down in rookie camp last year and I think that had a lot to do with my eventual problems."

And there's a $200 investment Ker is going to make when the Cowboys get back home to protest ole "Crawdaddies" back.

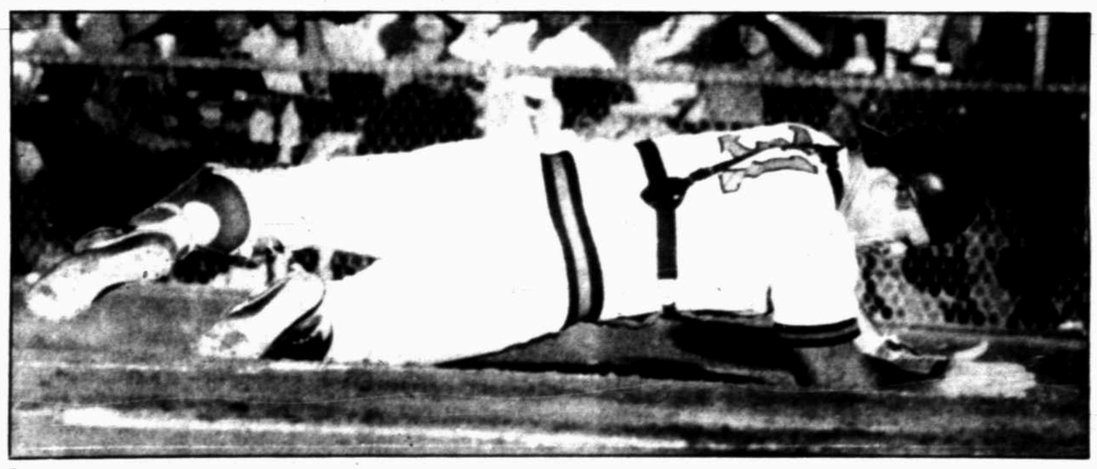

"I'm buying myself the best chair I can find and put it in the locker room," Ker said.

And nobody laughed when he said it.

Wee Welshman tames 'terrible' Turnberry Giant

British Open

By JEFF WILLIAMS
Newsday

TURNBERRY, Scotland — Just when the Ailsa course of the Turnberry Golf Club was about to claim a complete victory in the first round of the British Open, a small Welshman with a big swing struck a blow for par. That's 70 blows, if you are counting, and everybody is.

And they may still be counting, for that matter. The Turnberry Giant, a fresh wind from the west that speeds across the sea from Ireland and gives the Scottish coast its best shot, nailed the players Thursday with a Sunday punch three days early. It gusted to perhaps 30 miles per hour in temperatures beginning in the 40s and ending in the 60s, causing the players' scores to soar into the high 70s and beyond.

It meant that Ian Woosnam, at 5 feet, 4½ inches tall and 154 pounds, had left all the big boys behind. Greg Norman had a 74, Seve Ballesteros a 76, Tom Watson a 77, Masters champion Jack Nicklaus a 78 and U.S. Open champion Ray Floyd a 78. "A very strange day," Nicklaus decided.

The wind, the cold, the rough and the greens combined to confound the world's best and allow some of the world's least to have their day in the gloom. A whole bunch of Englishmen shot 71, the most notable of whom was Nick Faldo. The low Americans, at 72, were Sam Randolph, who turned pro after playing in the U.S. Open as an amateur, and Ron Commans. PGA Tour commissioner Deane Beman outplayed virtually the entire American contigent, making birdies on the last three holes for a 75. Craig Stadler shot an 82, settling down to par the last five holes after hurting his wrist during a sad triple-bogey on the unplayable par-4 14th. It was that kind of day.

"YOU'RE TALKING about the best players in the world being humiliated," Norman said. "You feel like a non-entity out there, hacking around in the rough."

And hack they did. Player after player recounted how they hit sand wedge followed by sand wedge, the first from the rough to the fairway, the second to the green, and with two putts they were lucky to make bogey. When it wasn't sand wedge-sand wedge, it was driver-driver to get home on the long par 4s, and even that wasn't always possible on the 448-yard 14th, which played dead into the wind to a stroke average greater than five.

Curtis Strange had a 79 as part of the morning group which suffered the brunt of the Giant's wrath. Strange went off wrapped in long underwear, a turtleneck shirt, a sweater, a golf shirt and a wool ski cap. "I got as close as I ever have to walking off a golf course," he said. "I didn't because I never have. I got tired of hitting the ball out of the crap all day."

There is considerably more of the bad stuff waiting to swallow up golf balls than when the tournament was held here in 1977. The fairways have been narrowed to 20 yards at a minimum, about eight yards less than the USGA would allow at a U.S. Open course. The conditions in 1977, little rough, no wind and warm temperatures, produced the immortal struggle between Nicklaus and Watson, with Watson emerging the winner.

"WHY, AFTER having an exciting tournament in 1977, would they totally change the golf course?" Nicklaus asked. "It's going to be a survival tournament rather than someone going out and winning it. There's nothing wrong with that. The question is is it too tough, have they taken something out of the golf tournament?

It's a lot more fun for the people watching the tournament if someone can shoot 67 or 68."

On Thursday, they got to see people like Guy McQuitty shoot a 25-over-par 95, the high round. They got to see Ian Baker-Finch, the Hyphenated Man who contended at the 1984 British Open at St. Andrews, shoot an 86. They got to see Andrew Broadway play the first 10 holes in 18 over par. And they got to see Woosnam shoot even par.

He did it with a fairly remarkable 4-under-par 31 on the back nine. He had started the day as did many other players, going 4 over on the front nine with a double bogey and a birdie. He made birdie on 10 and the only birdie of the day on the 14th, hitting "the best 1-iron of my life" to 20 feet and making the putt. The short par-5 17th was playing downwind, and Woosnam rode it with a 6-iron second shot to 12 feet and made the putt for eagle.

Rozelle paints new picture

By DAVE GOLDBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle has set a graphic contrast for the jury when it begins deliberation next week in the USFL's $1.69 billion antitrust suit against Rozelle's league.

Rozelle closed out the NFL's defense of the suit Thursday with testimony about a meeting with Donald Trump, owner of the USFL's New Jersey Generals, that was contrary to Trump's version on just about every point except the date and site.

Where Trump had testified earlier in the trial that Rozelle instigated the meeting then offered him an NFL franchise if he would drop the suit and keep the USFL on a spring schedule, the commissioner said just the opposite. His version was that the meeting was held at Trump's request and that the USFL owner offered to drop the suit and sell the Generals to "some stiff" if Rozelle would grant him an NFL expansion franchise.

The trial will not resume until Monday afternoon with USFL rebuttal testimony. Closing statements are expected to be heard Wednesday and U.S. District Court Judge Peter K. Leisure expects to charge the jury Thursday.

ROZELLE, THE first witness called by the USFL when the trial began 10 weeks ago, was on the stand for just 33 minutes Thursday, almost all of it spent discussing the May 12, 1984 meeting with Trump at New York's Pierre Hotel.

Rozelle said the meeting was suggested by Trump in a phone call to his office, the first telephone conversation he had ever had with the New York builder, who in his own testimony had described the commissioner as "a friend."

At the meeting, Rozelle said, Trump told him he had been assigned by the USFL to develop the antitrust suit.

"But he said, 'I don't want to do these things,'" Rozelle testified. "He said, 'I want an NFL expansion team in New York.' And he said, and I'm quoting him exactly, 'I would get some stiff to buy the New York (New Jersey) Generals, my team in the USFL.'"

Moreover, Rozelle said, quoting Trump:

"He said 'If I were to leave the USFL it would be psychologically devastating to the USFL.'"

Rozelle said he told Trump that that kind of move would be an antitrust violation and said he also discussed the problems having three teams in New York would cause for television. Rozelle also said he told Trump he could not simply approve a new owner, that was something 21 of the 28 NFL owners must do.

Trump's earlier testimony that Rozelle offered him the franchise was part of the USFL's attempt to prove that the NFL had tried to entice away its richest owners. Trump tied that to a study presented to NFL executives at a seminar given by Harvard Business School professor Michael Porter in February, 1984. USFL counsel Harvey Myerson refers to that study as "How to Conquer the USFL."

ROZELLE WAS cross-examined only briefly by Myerson, who asked him why, if he had never discussed football with Trump before, he had met with him the same day he received a call from him.

"Because he was the owner of the New Jersey team in the other league and I felt it was important to hear what he had to say," Rozelle replied.

The only other testimony from Rozelle Thursday was aimed at the Porter study, which recommended that the NFL show its displeasure at ABC's spring contract with the USFL by giving the network "bad teams" like Buffalo and Cincinnati for its Monday night schedule. But

Tigers win, but Sparky drools over Texas talent

Associated Press

DETROIT — The baby-faced Texas Rangers make Detroit look like the Over the Hill Gang and make Tigers' Manager Sparky Anderson positively drool.

The Tigers got the best of the Rangers, rallying in the ninth inning for a 2-1 victory Thursday night, but Anderson wasn't being fooled.

"You think they ain't looking ahead over there?" Anderson said, puffing on a pipe in his small office. "They've got 11 rookies. That's 11 of 24 ballplayers, with an outstanding young manager."

Actually, the Rangers only have seven rookies on their roster and two others who are in their first full season, but who wants to quibble? Anderson's point is well-taken. The Rangers have been in contention in the American League West all season and currently are in second place behind the California Angels.

Larry Parrish's 15th home run, a solo shot into the second deck just inside the right field foul pole in the second inning, staked the Rangers to a 1-0 lead and it looked for a while like it might stand up.

Texas starter Ed Correa, who at 20 is the youngest pitcher in the major leagues, checked the Tigers on only three hits in the seven innings he worked.

Hard-working Walt Terrell, 8-8, held the Rangers in check until the Tigers could get something started in their last at-bat. Terrell scattered six hits, walking one and striking out seven.

Larry Herndon's pinch double in the ninth drove in the tying run and Herndon scored the winner when Kirk Gibson drew a bases-loaded walk with two outs.

Correa and Mitch Williams, 7-2, had combined on a six-hitter through eight innings. But Darnell Coles led off the ninth with a single and scored one out later on Herndon's pinch-double into the left field corner.

After Chet Lemon was intentionally walked and Lou Whitaker flied out, Greg Harris relieved Williams. Harris walked Alan Trammell to load the bases and Gibson walked on a 3-1 pitch.

"Harris is a pro. He'll get over this," Texas manager Bobby Valentine said.

That's exactly what Sparky Anderson was trying to say.

AL Roundup

Royals 5, Indians 1

Struggling Bret Saberhagen showed the form that won him the 1985 Cy Young Award and Frank White homered to lead Kansas City past the Cleveland.

The victory moved the defending World Series champion Royals into third place in the American League West, 7½ games behind California.

Saberhagen, 20-6 last year, improved his record to 5-10 as he pitched eight innings and gave up five hits, including Joe Carter's 16th homer in the seventh. Saberhagen, who has been having trouble with his control, struck out six and walked one.

Mariners 5, Red Sox 1

Jim Presley hit a grand slam with two outs in the bottom of the 11th inning, lifting Seattle over Boston.

Red Sox reliever Bob Stanley, 5-3, retired the first two batters in the 11th before Harold Reynolds reached on an error by first baseman Bill Buckner. After Reynolds stole second, John Moses was intentionally walked and Phil Bradley then drew a walk that loaded the bases.

Presley, hitless in his previous five at-bats, sent a 2-2 pitch from Stanley over the left-field fence for his 19th homer and second grand slam of the season.

Yankees 5, White Sox 4

Dennis Rasmussen won his sixth straight decision and right fielder Dave Winfield threw out the potential tying run at the plate to end the game as New York held off Chicago.

Rasmussen, 11-2, took a five-hitter and a 5-3 lead into the top of the ninth inning, but left after a leadoff single. Reliever Dave Righetti gave up a single to Bobby Bonilla and an RBI double by pinch-hitter Jerry Hariston that made it 5-4.

Pinch-hitter Carlton Fisk followed with a tapper that Righetti fielded and threw to catcher Ron Hassey, cutting down Bonilla. John Cangelosi then hit a fly ball to medium right that Winfield caught and fired to Hassey, nailing pinch-runner Wayne Tolleson.

Blue Jays 8, Angels 5

Rance Mulliniks hit a three-run homer, capping a five-run fifth inning that sent Toronto over California.

The Blue Jays pinned the loss on Don Sutton, 8-6, who had won six straight games.

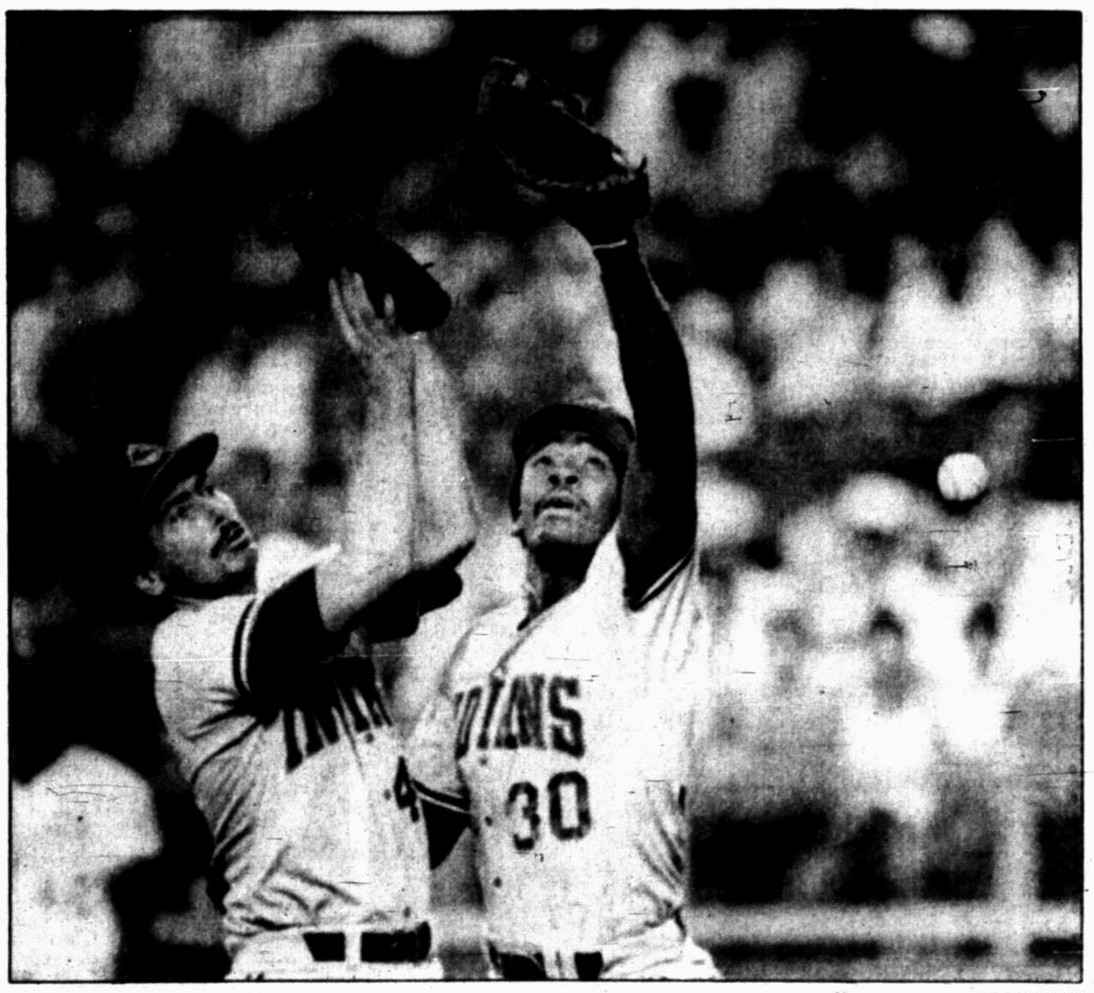

Jimmy Key, 9-6, won for the sixth time in his last seven decisions. John Cerutti got the final two outs for his first major-league save.

Orioles 6, Twins 2

Lee Lacy homered and drove in three runs and John Shelby and Cal Ripken also hit solo homers to lead Baltimore past Minnesota.

Lacy connected for a leadoff homer in the fourth and delivered a two-run single during the Orioles' three-run eighth.

Shelby, emerging from a 5-for-47 slump, broke a 1-1 tie with a leadoff homer in the sixth.

Soviets taking over in Games' final days

MOSCOW (AP) — With 19 boxers in the finals, the Soviet Union, which has dominated the inaugural Goodwill Games from the start, is set to steamroll through the competition's final days.

The Soviet Union dominated the games again Thursday, sweeping both gold medals awarded and controlling the boxing competition.

The Soviets won golds in women's team gymnastics and in judo's 189-pound division, raising its gold-medal count to 73 and its overall medal total to 167.

The United States was a distant second, with 35 gold medals and 116 overall. The multi-event games are set to end on Sunday.

The biggest American disappointment came in the boxing ring, where light-heavyweight Harvey Richards, unexpectedly handed a second chance at the gold medal, was stopped by Andrei Karavaev of the Soviet Union at 1:06 of the third round.

Earlier in the day, tournament officials overturned a referee's ruling that had disqualified Richards on Tuesday.

The 22-year-old American didn't think he was going to get reinstated, because such action is rare in international boxing.

IN THE ring, he met a big opponent in Karavaev.

"He hit me with a nice shot," Richards said. "He hurt me."

Saturday's 12 finals will feature all-Soviet matches in seven weight classes, and three Soviet-U.S. matches.

Only two other countries placed fighters in the finals, Venezuela and Mongolia, with one each.

In gymnastics Thursday, the Soviet Union, led by Elena Shushunova, easily took the women's title, with a total of 196.10 points. Bulgaria edged China for the silver medal, 190.60 to 190.25.

U.S., Soviets play for Gold

MADRID, Spain (AP) — The Soviet Union and the United States, who haven't met on a basketball court in four years, will play Sunday for the World Basketball Championship.

The confrontation came about because of some last-minute heroics by the Soviets and the Americans' ability to run.

In Thursday night's semifinal games, the Soviets beat Yugoslavia 91-90 in overtime after overcoming a nine-point deficit with less than a minute left in regulation and the United States held on to beat Brazil 96-80 after taking a 26-point lead in the first half.

The Soviets will seek to defend the title they won in 1982 when they beat the United States by one point in Cali, Colombia.

The United States, who has not won the world championships since 1954, took the gold medal in the basketball competition at the 1984 Olympics, but those Games were boycotted by the Soviets.

Guards Kenny Smith of North Carolina and 5-foot-3 Tyrone Bogues of Wake Forest led a running offense that gave the Americans a 60-37 halftime lead after shooting 69 percent from the field.

Mets bully Ryan, Astros in Dome

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Give them an inch, and they'll take a mile.

An old saying came true in Houston Thursday night as the New York Mets exploded for 13 runs in the last three innings to launch the second half of the season with a 13-2 victory over the Astros.

Leading the offensive charge for the Mets was second baseman Wally Backman, who drove in five runs with three singles.

"We're a great club. We stayed close in this game and got some breaks and took advantage of them," Backman said. "Everybody on this team does his job."

Veteran righthander Nolan Ryan, 6-7, was the victim of the Mets' explosion. With two outs in the seventh inning and the Astros leading 1-0, Ryan, who had allowed only four hits and struck out eight, walked three consecutive batters.

Len Dykstra drove in two runs with a single, Backman singled home two more, and Darryl Strawberry capped the seven-run uprising with a bases-loaded double.

"Despite the outcome, Ryan was throwing the ball the best I've seen in two years. He kept his breaking pitches down," Dykstra said.

Lefthander Bob Ojeda, 11-2, was the beneficiary of the Mets' onslaught against Ryan and four other Astros pitchers. He pitched the first six innings, allowing one unearned run and four hits.

In order to rest his relief staff, and down 10-2 going into the ninth inning, Lanier sent veteran infielder Craig Reynolds into the game as the fifth Astros pitcher. Reynolds had not pitched since high school in 1970.

The Mets won for the fifth time in a row and 14th time in 18 outings and retain a commanding 13-game lead over the Montreal Expos in the National League Eastern Division, while the Astros fall two games behind the San Francisco Giants in the Western Division.

NL Roundup

Expos 4, Braves 2

Floyd Youmans pitched a four-hitter and struck out nine over seven innings as Montreal defeated visitig Atlanta, handing the Braves their fifth straight defeat.

Youmans, 10-5, walked four en route to his sixth straight victory.

After the Expos took a 1-0 lead in the second on Vance Law's RBI groundout, they broke the game open with five straight singles in the third off Rick Mahler, 10-9. Tim Raines and Mitch Webster opened with base hits before Andre Dawson, Brooks and Wallach singled to drive in a run.

Giants 6, Cubs 4

Pitcher Vida Blue and Randy Kutcher each homered and Jose Uribe drove in two runs to lead San Francisco over Chicago. The victory for the visiting Giants was their third straight and seventh in their last 11 games.

Blue, 7-4, allowed two hits, walked two and struck out one before getting relief help in the sixth.

Blue's third-inning homer, the fourth of his career, came off loser Ed Lynch, 1-1, and tied the game at 1-1. Uribe gave the Giants the lead for good with an RBI single in the fourth, and Kutcher made it 3-1 with his seventh homer of the season in the fifth.

Padres 2, Pirates 1

Lance McCullers allowed four hits over seven innings for his first major-league victory as a starter to pitch San Diego over host Pittsburgh.

Garry Templeton had three hits and his one-out double drove in San Diego's first run in a two-run fourth inning against losing pitcher Rick Rhoden, 9-6. Tim Flannery knocked in San Diego's eventual winning run with a sacrifice fly later in the inning.

McCullers, 5-3, walked one and struck out four in his third major-league start. The right-hander became a starter July 4 after 58 career relief appearances and was a 6-4 loser to the Pirates in his previous start.

Reds 7, Phillies 6

Pete Rose's two-out triple off the glove of right fielder Glenn Wilson scored Wade Rowdon in the bottom of the 11th inning, lifting Cincinnati over Philadelphia.

The Reds scored three unearned runs off reliever Steve Bedrosian in the bottom of the ninth to send the game into extra innings, winning it in the 11th on Rose's second triple of the season.

Ted Power, 4-5, gave up one hit over the last two innings to earn the win in a ragged game that included four errors, two passed balls, a wild pitch and two hit batters. Tom Gorman, 0-1, was the loser.

Cardinals 12, Dodgers 2

Tommy Herr had three hits and John Tudor, supported by a 17-hit attack, finally won a game after six straight failures as St. Louis beat visiting Los Angeles.

Tudor, 7-5, allowed eight hits, struck out six and walked one in eight innings. The game marked the left-hander's seventh attempt at trying to win his seventh game.

Loser Orel Hershiser, 8-7, was touched for six hits and five runs in just 1 1-3 innings as the Dodgers saw their road record fall to 11-27.

NFL counsel Frank Rothman introduced — and Rozelle verified — a draft of the 1984 schedule given to Rozelle a month before the Porter presentation that had both teams on it.

The NFL also read into the record parts of depositions from two USFL owners, A. Alfred Taubman, who owned the Michigan Panthers for two years, then was part owner of the Oakland Invaders; Myles Tanenbaum of the Philadelphia-Baltimore Stars, and Clinton Manges, owner of the San Antonio Gunslingers.

Taubman's testimony concerned a meeting with Rozelle at a social function that Myerson has attempted to portray as another attempt to co-opt a USFL owner into the league. At several points, there was testimony that Rozelle had told Taubman in a brief meeting that he "would make a good NFL owner."

BUT IN that deposition, Taubman said:

"At a social function in New York, I ran into Pete Rozelle and just discussed sports generally ... but nothing specific regarding either the NFL or the USFL."

Taubman said he had never mentioned any interest in an NFL franchise and that Rozelle had never made any reference to the possibility.

Tanenbaum's deposition was limited to one small segment, which Rothman had referred to in his opening statement. In it, Tanenbaum concurs with a statement in which he had been quoted as saying there are three ways to make money in pro football — "tickets, television and triple damages," the last a reference to an antitrust suit.

As for Manges, the section of his deposition read into the record dealt with the Gunslingers' problems in paying its players. "I chose not to give them the money," Manges said.

"Why didn't you want to?" he was asked.

"Personal reasons," he replied. "I did not want to."

"Give me one personal reason," he was asked.

"Yes sir," Manges replied. "I did not want to."

What they don't have in the fold are a starting quarterback, a starting tight end, their top defensive lineman and their first-round draft choice.

The holdout list was headed by 13-year veteran quarterback Ron Jaworski, No. 1 tight end John Spagnola, nose tackle Ken Clarke and running back Keith Byars, the No. 1 pick from Ohio State...

The Houston Oilers made some progress in getting names on the dotted line, with guard Mike Munchak, linebacker Avon Riley, running backs Butch Woolfolk and Stan Edwards and tight ends Jamie Williams and Mike McCloskey agreeing to terms.

Munchak, now in his fifth season, was a Pro Bowl choice last season. Woolfolk led the team in receiving last year with 80 catches for 814 yards...

The Washington Redskins made some progress, signing running back George Rogers and linebacker Monte Coleman to a series of one-year contracts.

But the agent for defensive end Dexter Manley says the five-year veteran is not likely to report to training camp due to lagging contract talks...

In Platteville, Wis., cornerback Mike Richardson thought he was arriving early at the Chicago Bears camp, only to learn he was really a day late.

But Coach Mike Ditka wasn't amused, and said Richardson and fullback Matt Suhey would lose their starting positions because of their tardiness.

The Super Bowl champion Bears said quarterback Jim McMahon pulled a hip flexor muscle at practice Wednesday morning and will miss a couple days of workouts...

Pittsburgh's David Woodley apparently won't be around for the playoffs, or the regular season for that matter.

Woodley, 27, has never officially notified the Steelers or the NFL Management Council that he has retired — which he must do in order to collect his $90,000 severance check — but told Coach Chuck Noll earlier this year that he didn't plan to play this season...

Two of Woodley's former Miami Dolphins teammates — defensive end Doug Betters and offensive guard Ed Newman — remain unsigned. And Coach Don Shula doesn't consider it likely Newman, who missed all of last season with a knee injury, will return.

All-America tackle Brian Jozwiak has a "knot the size of a watermelon" in his stomach while talks continue with the Kansas City Chiefs.

Jozwiak's agent, Art Wilkinson, said Kansas City has offered the West Virginia University star $1.25 million over four years. Jozwiak said the price sounds nice, but still isn't right.

Denver placekicker Rich Karlis, the third all-time highest scorer for the Broncos, was signed to a one-year contract...

The New York Giants have now have signed half of their 14 draft choices. Among those agreeing to terms Thursday was defensive end John Washington, of Oklahoma State. The Giants drafted him in the third round and plan to use him as a backup to Pro Bowler Leonard Marshall at right defensive end...

San Diego cornerback John Hendy dislocated his shoulder in a workout and will be sidelined for two to four weeks, the Chargers said. Hendy, who was selected to the NFL All-Rookie team last year, injured his shoulder Wednesday...

Disgruntled running back Barry Redden plans to report to training camp, but is asking the Los Angeles Rams to trade him.

In other news, the Rams announced they signed two more of their draft choices, leaving only three of their top 10 picks unsigned after four days of practice.

Among the signees was quarterback Hugh Millen, a third-round pick from the University of Washington...

Say It Ain't So

Tom Watson gives a look like he wishes he never set foot in Scotland after the first round of play in the British Open at the gusty Turnberry Golf Club on the Scottish coast Thursday.

ANGELS—

Phil Venturino started and at the end he would never have recognized what he left one batter into the sixth. It was 5-2 and only three of the six runs the New Yorker eventually was charged with were earned.

Doug Banning, Randy Harvey and Hotchkiss took the brunt of the carnage.

HALO HOOPS— Mike Romanovsky, 0-1, goes against Jackson's Wray Bergendahl, 3-4, in tonight's 7:30 p.m. game. ...Lefthander Vance Lovelace has been optioned to Palm Springs of the California League and Julian Gonzales, the submariner, is being sent here from Edmonton. Gonzales was 8-5 with 4 saves here last season...Brian Brady was held to a single Thursday, but is 11 for 26 since returning from DL....Fultz was 7-4 for Tidewater last season and won two Governor's Cup (International League playoffs) games....Catcher David Heath wound up with a shiner when a bad bounce on a throw by Kevin King to the plate caught him just below the eye. "If I didn't have bad luck, I wouldn't have any luck," said Heath after the game. "I can't play two weeks without something happening."...

'Oil Can' in hospital for medical evaluation

BOSTON (AP) — Both the Boston Red Sox and their suspended pitcher Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd hope to determine finally what's troubling the right-hander, now that he's checked into a hospital for evaluation, including drug tests, a team official says.

"We want to find out once and for all what's bothering the Can," John Harrington, who represents the team president, Jean R. Yawkey, told The Boston Herald in an interview published today.

Harrington claimed the Red Sox management did not believe drugs were behind his walkout last week, when he was denied a slot on the American League All-Star team, or when he clashed with Chelsea police who wanted to search his car Tuesday night for drugs.

"It is Dennis' hope and intention that the test results will vindicate him of wrongdoing or speculation about who he is and what kind of habits he might have," said George Kalafatis, the pitcher's agent.

The Red Sox announced Thursday that Boyd went to the University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester one day after the Red Sox extended his suspension.

The team said the hospitalization was "mutually agreed upon."

The Red Sox said no medical information would be disclosed without Boyd's permission.

General Manager Lou Gorman has said the team decided to extend Boyd's suspension, which began last Friday, before the pitcher was stopped and searched by narcotics officers outside his Chelsea home Tuesday night.

Police said they found no drugs but that complaints of assault and battery and disorderly conduct would be sought against Boyd.

North Central last to fall

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — The final nail was driven into the Midland Little League's coffin Thursday night as Midland North Central became the final Tall City team ousted in the District III Little League tournament.

North Central fell 6-2 to Odessa Northeast Texas, despite a three-hit performance by losing pitcher Allen Chase. Chase only walked three, but was hurt by a half-dozen errors and numerous passed balls.

"We could have won it all we had to do was take care of the ball," said North Central coach Jon Chase. "I really feel we had the best team in the tournament, we just had two bad games where we couldn't catch the ball like that."

The only extra-base hit among seven for North Central was by Jimmy Patton, who lined a double to the fence.

North Central, the City League champion, finishes the season with a record of 24-3.

Opening lead: Jack of ♠

Make sure you have enough entries for the task at hand. If there are not, you might need some creative play to make up for the shortfall.

After a negative response to his forcing two club opening, North showed his power by jumping to three no trump. South's four no trump was invitational, not Blackwood, and North accepted by showing his long suit. When South decided to play in the suit because of his four-card support, a quirk of the auction made him the declarer. We have seen better auctions.

West led the jack of spades to the queen and ace, and East returned the suit to dummy's king. The king of diamonds revealed the unfortunate break, and declarer was in some difficulty. He needed two entries to pick up the trumps, and another for a club finesse. However, declarer appeared to have but two. If only the eight and nine of trumps had been switched.

The one chance for a third entry was the ten of hearts. To make that materialize, declarer was forced to take a finesse in a suit where he needed none!

Declarer led a heart from the table and inserted the ten when East played low. He finessed the jack of trumps, returned to hand by overtaking the king of hearts with the ace, and repeated the trump finesse.

The rest was simple. The last trump was drawn and the ace of clubs was cashed. The closed hand was re-entered with the queen of hearts and the club finesse taken. When that held, the slam was home.

On this particular hand, it made no difference whether the final contract was in diamonds or no trump—the same play was required for both. However, it would be easy to construct a hand where South's decision to place the slam in the suit would have been critical. And the suit slam was likely to go down fewer tricks if something went wrong.

CBS comes up Emmy winner for its mornings, afternoons

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS, no longer the leader in prime time, can at least crow about its morning and afternoon schedule, which captured half the honors at the 13th annual Daytime Emmy Awards.

CBS, in a virtual tie with ABC for the daytime ratings leadership this season, won seven of 14 performance awards Thursday, including three for the soap opera "The Young and the Restless" and two for the game show "The $25,000 Pyramid." ABC won three Emmys, including two for "All My Children," and NBC won two at ceremonies broadcast live by NBC from the Waldorf-Astoria.

On Sunday, CBS had dominated the daytime Emmys' craft categories, winning 13 to ABC's seven and NBC's four.

In all, CBS won 20 Emmys to ABC's 10 and NBC's six.

"The Young and the Restless," which is about the residents of the fictitious Midwestern city of Genoa City, won for best serial for the second year in a row and third time in four years. It also took home honors for best direction and best writing.

"Young and the Restless," which was introduced in 1973, was the second-rated daytime series this past season; the No. 1 show, ABC's "General Hospital," was shut out of the awards Thursday.

"All My Children," the fourth-rated daytime series, won a pair of acting awards. David Canary, who plays twins Adam and Stuart Chandler, was best leading man, and Michael E. Knight, who plays Tad Martin, was best younger leading man. ABC's other winner was in the best actress category, Erika Slezak, who plays Victoria Lord Buchanan on "One Life to Live."

In other drama awards, John Wesley Shipp, who plays Douglas Cummings in CBS' "As the World Turns," won for best supporting actor; Leann Hunley, who plays Anna Di Mera in NBC's "Days of Our Lives," was best supporting actress, and Ellen Wheeler, who stars as Marley and Victoria Love of NBC's "Another World," won for best ingenue.

Phil Donahue won again as outstanding talk show host, his eighth such honor and the fourth in the last five years. His syndicated "Donahue" show had won best talk show in non-performance awards announced Sunday.

Landis

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Nearly four years after the accident occurred, film director John Landis and four co-defendants will go on trial Monday for the deaths of three "Twilight Zone" movie actors.

Superior Court Judge Roger Boren set the date Thursday, and said he has ordered a panel of 200 prospective jurors. Pretrial motions will take up most of the Monday and Tuesday sessions, with jury selection expected to begin late Tuesday or Wednesday, Boren said.

Wednesday will be the fourth anniversary of the July 23, 1982, "Twilight Zone" helicopter crash that killed actor Vic Morrow and two children, Myca Le, 7, and Renee Chen, 6.

The trial is expected to last four months.

Prosecutors allege that Landis, associate producer George Folsey Jr., special effects coordinator Paul Stewart, production manager Dan Allingham and pilot Dorcey Wingo conspired to disregard laws protecting actors in their efforts to achieve realism in the film.

Cash

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Columbia Records has decided to drop Johnny Cash, who spent 23 years recording country music for the label.

"This is the hardest decision that I've ever had to make in my life," said Rick Blackburn, head of Columbia Epic/CBS Nashville.

Cash, 54, has not had a solo Top 10 hit since "The Baron" in 1981. His earlier hits include "Ring Of Fire" and "I Walk The Line."

Lou Robin, Cash's manager, said Tuesday that talks were under way to sign Cash to record under a different label.

"We don't know where we'll be going," Robin said. "Other people are talking to us. There's a lot of places where they're interested in somebody like Johnny Cash."

Cash has recorded country music for Columbia since 1958, but records gospel under the Word/Nashville Records label, which just released his "Believe In Him" album.

Cash, who began his career at Memphis Sun Records in 1955, participated in the "Class of 55" Memphis reunion album with Jerry Lee Lewis, Roy Orbison and Carl Perkins.

Natural gas revolution heats up

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Fine-tuning the regulations governing the natural gas industry is a complex undertaking, Federal Energy Regulatory Commissioner (FERC) C.M. (Mike) Naeve explained to about 350 attendees of a seminar on gas issues held Thursday.

Commissioner Naeve addressed the complexities of opening interstate natural gas transportation through FERC Order 436 and the ongoing battle to 'de-vintage' old, cheap gas supplies with Commission Order 451.

Beginning today, gas producers and their purchasers may enter voluntary renegotiation of contracts covering old, low-cost or multi-vintage gas production. Under Order 451, the parties are allowed to raise prices to a uniform ceiling maximum lawful price (MLP) of $2.57 per thousand cubic feet (Mcf).

A second phase of renegotiation begin November ~~1,~~ when the "good faith bargaining" procedure takes effect. Under this provision of the order, producers are allowed to nominate old — covered by Section 104 and 106(a) — or multi-vintage contracts for renegotiation. In response, the purchaser then nominates a price for the contract gas. If the nominated price equals the $2.57 MLP, the producer us required to accept the new price, but if the purchaser's price nomination is below MLP, the producer has the option of continuing price negotiations with the current purchasers or can market the gas elsewhere.

HOWEVER, TWO potential pitfalls require careful consideration on the part of producers under the order, explained Austin gas attorney John R. Hays Jr.:

- Any material amendments to sales contracts between today and November 1, may void a producer's right to trigger good faith renegotiation after that date.
- After nominating one contract with a specific purchaser, that purchaser has the right to nominate all other eligible contracts in force at the time.

"Sellers must seriously consider the risks in opening up all their contracts with a particular buyer," Hays warned.

Although current in force, Order 451 is still pending on rehearing by FERC commissioners, and is likely to be changed considerably upon rehearing Naeve said. "Despite the fact that the deadline for comments on the Order has lapsed, interested parties may still provide comments and likely have their views considered during rehearing."

Naeve: 'Gas bubble will disappear soon'

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

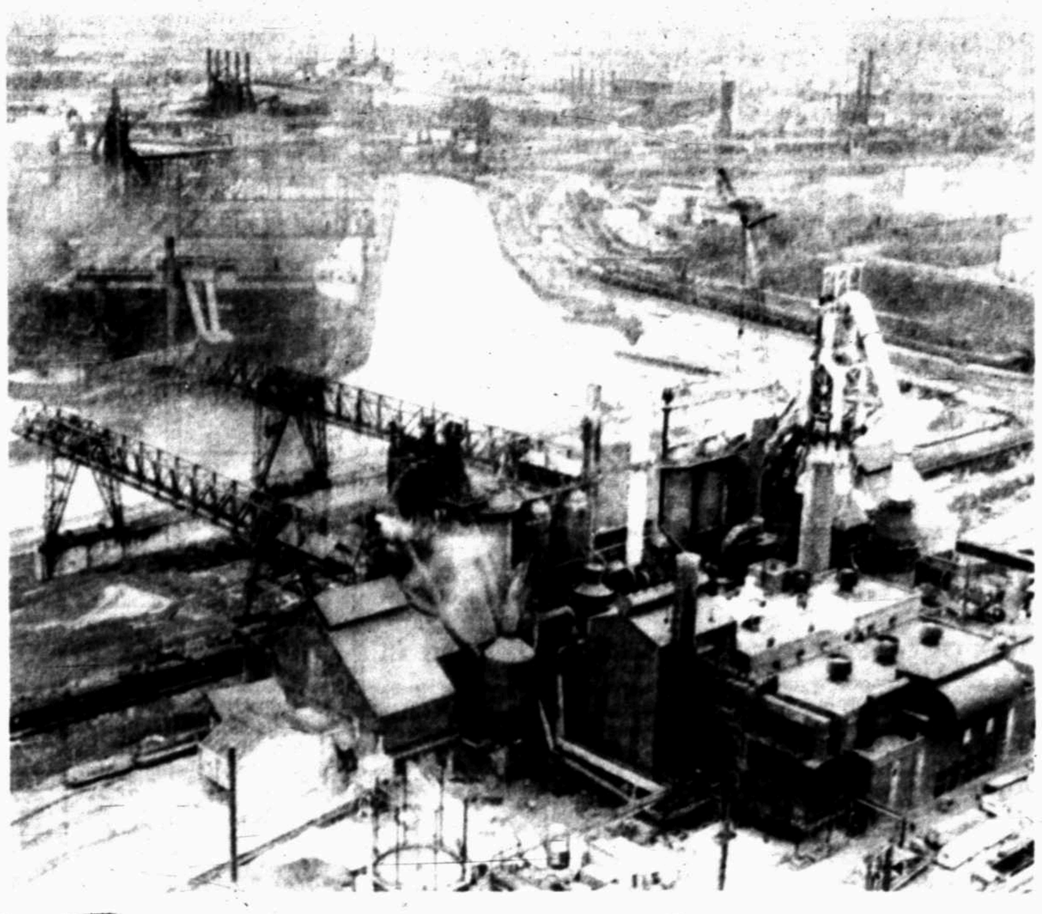

"The gas bubble is not a supply surplus, but a surplus of deliverability," Federal Energy Regulatory Commissioner C.M. Mike Naeve told members of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association Executive Committee, Thursday.

Reflecting on the gas bubble at a luncheon at Odessa Country Club, Naeve said depressed oil prices and a historical low rig count were creating a condition where the U.S. was finding only 50 percent of its natural gas needs every year. Said the native Texan: "At that rate you can see that it will not be long before the gas bubble busts." He predicted the bubble might bust as early as this winter or as late as next winter.

He said that when the bubble did bust it would not be a dramatic explosion but would start as a single isolated incident in which gas companies will not be able to meet demand in peak capacity. "It could be like a sausage," said Naeve, "a series of small oblong bubbles being burst." He explained that during the first year of the bust there would be seasonal fluctuations and shortages would occur on peak days only, but that would set the course for the next year.

Naeve, who is considered the producer representative on the five-man federal commission said there had been much debate about where the first shortages would appear in the U.S. "The last time shortages appeared first in the East and Northeast, this time I think they will happen in the Gulf and producing states." He said eastern and northeastern cities had doubled their natural gas storage capacity, whereas those in the Gulf states have only 20 percent storage and are more susceptible to shortage.

LTV Steel Co., whose furnaces along the Cuyahoga River near downtown Cleveland are shown in this photo, was affected by LTV's bankruptcy filing.

LTV filing not last for steel industry

DALLAS (AP) — Problems in steelmaking that helped push LTV Corp. into Chapter 11 will not go away soon, and another bankruptcy filing in the steel industry is not out of the question, analysts say.

"I think Bethlehem is probably the next weakest," Donald Barnett, an independent analyst, said Thursday after Dallas-based LTV, parent of LTV Steel Co., filed for reorganization under the federal bankruptcy laws.

A Chapter 11 filing by Bethlehem Steel Corp. "certainly is a possibility," Barnett said. Bethlehem, third-largest U.S. steelmaker, has lost more than $2 billion since 1982.

In a petition filed in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in New York, LTV asked for protection for the parent company and its 65 subsidiaries, including LTV Steel, LTV Aerospace and Defense and LTV Energy Products. It listed assets totaling $2.06 billion and liabilities of $1.5 billion.

LTV Corp., whose far-flung operations also include energy and aerospace, employs some 57,000 people.

Raymond A. Hay, LTV chairman and chief executive officer, blamed Thursday's action on a variety of factors, including a sudden, big drop in second-quarter steel shipments, continued steel imports, a sharp decline in active oil rigs and a reduced debt rating that hampered long-term financing efforts.

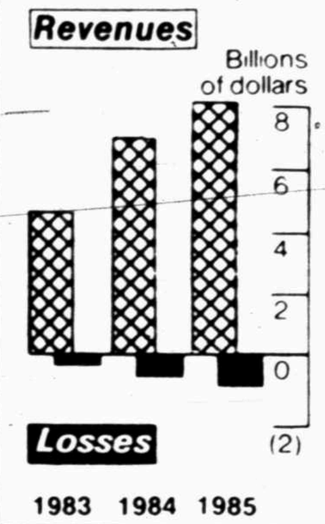

Lynn Williams, president of the United Steelworkers of America, said the union will take court action to try to protect its 30,000 members employed or laid off from LTV, as well as 61,000 retirees covered by a pension plan.

Hershey promises more bites for same price

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Chocolate lovers will get more bites to the bar when Hershey Chocolate Co. increases the size of many of its products without raising prices and other manufacturers are expected to offer consumers a sweeter deal, too.

Hershey said Wednesday the weight of most standard Hershey candy bars will increase 10 percent to 14 percent beginning next month. Most products in Hershey's "big block" line will become 27 percent heavier, said spokesman John Long.

Wall Street analysts said they expect M&M/MARS and smaller candy makers to follow suit.

"Between Hershey and M&M/MARS you have 70 percent of the candy industry right there. I guess the little guys will have to follow as well," said John McMillin, an analyst for Prudential-Bache Securities.

Hershey last increased candy weights in March 1982. Wall Street analysts said the new increase reflects a drop in the cost of cocoa since January, when candy companies raised wholesale prices about 14½ ~~percent~~.

"Brazil had a drought and everybody thought that prices for cocoa would rise. But the Ivory Coast has been shipping cocoa like crazy. There seems to be a tremendous supply," said Ronald Morrow of Smith Barney Harris Upham.

Long said "moderation in the overall rate of inflation plus stable prices

New home construction falls for second month

Construction of new homes and apartments dropped slightly in June for the second straight month, but analysts said the industry could still have its best year since 1978.

"A combination of demand plus lower interest rates will keep housing strong for the rest of the year," Ron Poe, president of the Mortgage Bankers Association, said Thursday.

Meanwhile, the Federal Reserve Board reported Thursday that the nation's basic money supply, known as M1, jumped $7.4 billion to a seasonally adjusted average of $673.9 billion in the week ended July 7.

M1 includes cash in circulation, deposits in checking accounts and non-bank travelers checks.

For the latest 13 weeks, M1 rose at a seasonally adjusted rate of 16.2 percent, compared with the 3 percent to 8 percent range the central bank has set as its target for growth.

In its report Thursday, the Commerce Department said housing construction edged down 0.8 percent in June. New homes and apartments were built at an annual rate of 1.85 million units last month after a decline of 7.9 percent in housing construction in May, the department said.

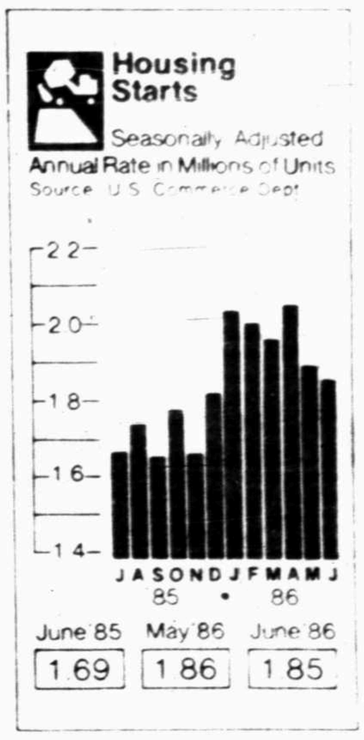

But even with the back-to-back setbacks — blamed on a rise in mortgage rates — housing for the first half of the year was running 9 percent ahead of the pace in 1985, according to the report.

Analysts said the housing industry could be headed for its best year since 1978. Fixed mortgage rates have been dropping in recent weeks and this will likely spur sales and construction in the months ahead, they said.

Mortgages fell into the single-digit range for the first time this decade during April, but began rising in May and early June.

In other economic developments Thursday:

—The House voted to reaffirm

June factory operating rate plunges

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. industry operated at just 78.3 percent of capacity last month, the slowest pace since 1983, as strikes in the aluminum, lumber and communications industries added to the woes of industrial America, the government reported Wednesday.

The Federal Reserve Board said that the factory operating rate plunged by a sharp 0.6 percentage point in June, leaving the production rate at its lowest point since November 1983.

The operating rate at the nation's factories, mines and utilities has fallen by 3.7 percentage points from its highpoint in this recovery and has dropped by 2.5 percentage points just since the beginning of this year.

This decline underscores the weakness in manufacturing, which has suffered for the past two years from the country's yawning trade deficit.

The operating rat, which had stood at 78.9 percent in May, has declined in four of the past five months. It now stands 3.4 percentage points below the average of the past two decades.

Michael Evans, head of a Washington consulting firm, said the latest weakness bolstered his belief that the economy will not rebound in the second half of the year.

He predicted the economy, as measured by the gross national product, will expand at only a 2 percent annual rate in the second half, even weaker than the 2.2 percent growth rate for 1985.

In a separate report, the Commerce Department said Wednesday that business sales plunged 1.8 percent in May, the biggest decline in 11 years, while business inventories were falling by 0.3 percent.

The inventory drop was the largest fall since March 1983 and showed that businesses, no longer optimistic about future sales, are pushing to reduce unwanted inventories, analysts said.

Texans think low oil prices help

AUSTIN (AP) — A survey of Texans show most of them think declining oil and gasoline prices have helped rather than hurt them, according to the Foundation for Education on Free Enterprise.

"More than 44 percent of those asked indicated that they had been helped by falling prices, while 30 percent said they had been hurt," said Joe Wyatt Jr., spokesman for the foundation.

Wyatt said the survey also showed 61 percent of those questioned approved an import fee on imported oil, while 26 percent disapproved.

union in spending cuts ruled invalid last week by the Supreme Court, and Senate leaders said they would try to speed the legislation to President Reagan. The high court last week ruled that the main enforcement tool of the Gramm-Rudman law, automatic spending cuts, were unconstitutional.

—Citizens for Justice, a Washington study group, reported that more than three dozen giant profitable corporations used deductions and credits to eliminate their federal income-tax liability and claim a tax refund in each of the last four years.

Canadian government offers Mobil unit guaranteed loans

OTTAWA (UPI) — The Canadian government has secretly offered Mobil Oil Canada Ltd. nearly $727 million in loan guarantees to help start construction this summer of the Hibernia offshore oilfield, an Ottawa newspaper reported.

The federal government has been meeting with the Newfoundland provincial government for several months to hammer out a tax and royalty agreement for production from the offshore oil reservoir.

Mobil Oil, the operator with a 28.1 percent interest in Hibernia, has said construction must start this summer in order for commercial production by 1992. The project would mean more than 10,000 jobs on Canada's east coast.

According to the report, the Conservative government has offered Mobil more than $727 million in loan guarantees to help finance construction of the oilfield, which contains an estimated 522 million barrels of crude oil.

According to the report, the government wants the project to proceed on schedule despite pessimistic forecasts for the international price of oil. Offshore oil companies have said previously that a world oil price of between $25 and $40 a barrel would be necessary for Hibernia to proceed. It is now trading in the $12 range.

Other companies involved in Hibernia include Gulf Canada Corp. (25 percent), federally-owned Petro-Canada (25 percent), Chevron Resources Canada (25 percent) and Columbia Gas Development of Canada (5.46 percent).

After the issuance to Pyro, Enex Resources will have approximately 27 million shares of its common stock outstanding.

Amoco high bidder on BLM lease in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Amoco Production Co., Denver, was the high bidder on a 256.5-acre oil and natural gas lease on Bureau of Land Management (BLM) lands in northern Utah.

Amoco bid $56,111.94 for the lease in the Pineview Field, in Summit County about 30 miles east of Salt Lake City, the BLM said.

The federal agency offered 55 tracts for bid in known oil or natural gas fields in Emery, Grand, Rich, San Juan, Summit and Uintah counties. Bids were received on only 29 of the tracts. The high bids totaled $210,732.82.

Yates Petroleum Corp., Artesia, N.M., submitted the next highest bid — $37,404.80 — for a 320-acre tract in Squaw Canyon in southeastern Utah's San Juan County.

And CNG Producing Co., Tulsa, Okla., submitted the high bid of $33,280 on a 640-acre section in the Greater Uinta Basin Field in Uintah County, in northeastern Utah.

Energy auctioneer reports sales up in '85

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Superior Auctioneers & Marketing, one of the largest energy-related auction companies in the nation, reported a 200 percent increase in sales for 1985.

In a recent release, the company said its sales totaled $66.23 million last year.

The company maintains the nation's leading share of market in energy and pipeline auctioneering, the release said. The San Antonio company handles oilfield and pipeline equipment, construction and transportation.

In 1985, its second year of operation, Superior conducted 47 sales in six states, with the largest a $4.34 million auction in Oklahoma City in November.

Superior president Craig Cannon said that the company increased its sales despite a downturn in the energy industry, which causes the total value of Superior's sales to drop due to devalued prices on equipment.

Seagull names new vice president, director

HOUSTON (SWN) — Seagull Energy Corp. announced that G. Thomas Wilkinson has been elected a vice president of the company and president of its exploration and production subsidiary, Seagull Energy E&P Inc.

Wilkinson, 48, comes to Seagull from ARCO, where he held a variety of exploration and production management positions over an 18-year career. He last served as vice president, Eastern Operations Area for ARCO Exploration Co., with responsibility for managing ARCO's exploration activities for the entire Gulf Coast, Michigan and Illinois Basins, the Appalachian and Atlantic Offshore areas.

William R. Grant, chairman of MacKay-Shields Financial Corp., a New York-based money management firm, was elected to the company's board.

Grant, who becomes Seagull's tenth director, was elected to a term which expires in 1987. He has been chairman of MacKay-Shields, which currently manages approximately $3.3 billion in assets, since 1981. He joined the company as president in 1979.

He also is a director of Fluor Corporation, New York Life Insurance Company, SmithKline Beckman Corporation and Witco Chemical Corporation.

Canadian asset writeoffs spark petroleum industry income decline

OTTAWA (UPI) — The financial performance of the Canadian petroleum industry improved slightly over the last twelve months, but extraordinary asset write-offs led to a reduction in net income, the Petroleum Monitoring Agency (PMA) said recently.

The PMA, a federal agency providing information about the status and performance of the petroleum industry in Canada, said in its annual report that internal cash flow rose 8 percent and capital expenditures 15 percent in 1985 over the previous year. Net income from total operations, however, fell 22 percent to $2.1 billion (U.S.).

PMA Chairman Ralph Gillen blamed the decline on the write-off of $876 million worth of assets related to exploration, development and production of oil and natural gas and the gain in 1984 in extraordinary earnings from the sale of foreign assets.

By mid-June of this year, the number of active drilling rigs in Canada fell to 100 — the lowest level in more than a decade.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

'Tax-free' funds collect freed interest from bonds

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I have investments in two mutual funds. One holds stocks and pays dividends subject to income tax. The other holds municipal bonds and pays tax-free dividends. I reinvest my dividends in both funds to buy additional shares. I'll probably redeem all the shares in both funds when I retire and will then have to figure out my profit for tax purposes.

You explained that calculation should be done by adding up all the money an investor put into a mutual fund, plus all reinvested dividends and capital gains distributions. That total is the investor's "basis." The difference between that basis and the amount received when the shares are redeemed is the investor's profit or loss.

I gather you were writing about a mutual fund paying taxable dividends. With a municipal mutual fund, I assume I should do the arithmetic in the above paragraph and then subtract all the tax-free dividends I reinvested to arrive at my taxable profit. Otherwise, it wouldn't be a tax-free fund. Am I correct?

A. Nope. You were correct, until that last step. But you're wrong in assuming you subtract your reinvested tax-free dividends from your profit to determine your taxable profit. The calculation of the basis and the profit from redemption is done the same way on both types of mutual funds.

Reinvested dividends increase your basis and, as a result, reduce your profit when you redeem — whether those dividends are taxable or tax free. Doing the calculation the way you propose would use tax-free dividends to reduce your profit twice.

Mutual funds holding municipal bonds are called "tax-free" funds because they collect tax-free interest from those bonds and pass that money along to fund shareholders as dividends, also tax free.

You have a choice of taking mutual fund dividends by check or reinvesting them. When you reinvest, you're adding to your investment, just as you would do by sending more money to the fund.

Q. If I redeem some — not all — of my mutual fund shares, how do I calculate my cost basis for tax purposes? Can I apply the first-in-first-out "FIFO" method I was taught in high school?

A. You can use FIFO, under which the shares you redeem will be those you have held the longest.

There are two other methods — "specific identification" and "average cost."

With the specific identification method, also called the "identified share" method, you select the shares you purchased at a certain time — through either purchase or reinvestment — and instruct the fund to redeem those shares. This method comes in handy if you want to redeem your highest cost shares, thereby producing the lowest taxable profit — or even a loss.

Then, there's the "average cost" method, through which you total up your cost and divide by the number of shares you own. The resulting number is your basis per share. If you do it that way, it's called the "single-category" average cost method.

You can also use the "double-category" average cost method and figure your average cost for shares owned for six months or less and for shares owned for more than six months. Under present tax law, profit from the sale of shares in the first group is fully taxable, while only 40 percent of the profit from the sale of "long-term" shares is taxable.

Q. My mutual fund has check writing privileges and I write checks for various amounts. Am I supposed to report each of these on my income tax return?

A. Yes, indeed, unless you have a money market mutual fund. When you write a check on that account, you redeem shares. With most mutual funds, that results in a profit or a loss, which you're required to report on Schedule D of your federal income tax return.

Money market mutual funds are different because they keep their share values constant — at $1, in most cases — and the redemption of their shares results in neither a profit nor a loss.

Cincinnati Museum building for sale to highest bidders

CINCINNATI (AP) — And now, a gift for the man or woman who has everything: a museum building, complete with a planetarium and an indoor man-made cave with 32-foot waterfall.

Interested? The Cincinnati Museum of Natural History could be all yours if you represent a non-profit group and can come in with the highest bid.

The museum is to move in late 1988 to Union Terminal, a former railroad station which was most recently used as a shopping mall. A voter-approved levy is allowing Union Terminal to be renovated so it can house the Heritage Center, a building devoted to history.

The museum plans to sell its current 47,000-square-foot building, which includes a 2,493-square-foot cave. A new cavern will be built at the new museum.

The museum is valued at $4.75 million.

New Mexico bank among five banks closed

By United Press International

Four commercial banks in the nation's farm belt — one each in Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and Wyoming — and a fifth bank in New Mexico were closed by authorities Thursday.

The closures brought the national total of bank failures this year to 72.

Two of the four banks have buyers, two will be liquidated and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. has not announced plans for the fifth bank. All were primarily agricultural banks except New Mexico National Bank of Albuquerque, N.M., which was closed late Thursday.

Lafayette County Bank of Lexington-Wellington, Lexington, Mo., will assume the Callao Community Bank, Callao, Mo., the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. said Thursday.

Fillmore County Bank, Geneva, Neb., is to reopen Friday under the ownership of York State Bank.

The Bank of Kiowa, Kiowa, Kan., and The First National Bank of Sheridan, Sherican, Wyo., will be liquidated by the FDIC, the federal agency that insures bank deposits.

A spokesman for Comptroller of the Currency Robert Hermann's office blamed the Albuquerque closing on bad loan decisions by the bank's previous owners.

New Mexico National was chartered Nov. 1, 1982, and sold in July 1985 by First City Financial Corp., formerly Moncor Inc.

As of June 30, the bank had total assets of $159.6 million and deposits of $148.7 million. Real estate loans accounted for 58 percent of its loan portfolio, federal regulators said.

A spokesman for the comptroller's office said the FDIC was still studying the bank's financial position before announcing whether it would be sold or liquidated.

Nebraska officials blamed Fillmore's problems on liberal lending policies and the poor farm economy. It was the third Nebraska-chartered bank to close this year.

"The department was left with no alternative but to close the bank due to the inability of the board of directors to secure its recapitalization," said James Barbee, state banking director.

The FDIC was named receiver of Fillmore.

Julie Amberson; FDIC spokeswoman in Washington, said the bank, had $12.4 million in assets. She said $11.5 million in 2,300 deposits would be assumed by the York bank, which would pay the FDIC a purchase premium of $512,075.

She also said the York State Bank would buy certain loans and other assets for $7.8 million while the FDIC would retain assets of the failed bank with a book value of $4.6 million.

Fillmore was chartered in 1965.

Geneva Investment Co., a one-bank holding company, was principal stockholder of the bank. The holding company was owned by FirsTier Bank Omaha, which acquired ownership from Roger Anderson, of Lincoln, in 1984 for satisfaction of debts.

The First National Bank of Sheridan, which was chartered in 1891 had about $63.6 million in deposits.

Robert Herrmann, deputy comptroller of the currency, ordered the bank closed and appointed the FDIC as receiver. No word was immediately available on when the FDIC would begin paying off the bank's insured depositors.

Underwood said the bank's loans were concentrated in the agriculture and mining industries and its financial condition deteriorated during the past two years due to the economic recession, poor credit practices and inadequate oversight by the bank board and management.

"The bank was unable to remedy these problems and losses finally exhausted the bank's capital funds, resulting in its insolvency," he said.

Kiowa Bank, located in the heart of Kansas wheat country near the Oklahoma border, also was hit by bad agriculture loans and became the seventh bank to close in the state in 1986.

Because no bidders emerged for the failed facility, the FDIC will begin paying off insured and uninsured depositors on Monday, a spokesman in Washington said.

The bank had $10.9 million in deposits in 1,900 accounts. The FDIC estimated that all but about $19,000 of the deposits in 11 accounts were within the insurance limit of $100,000.

The closing leaves Kiowa, population 1,400, with one other bank.

Callao Community Bank, which had assets of $5.3 million, will reopen Friday as a branch of Lafayette County Bank.

"The bank was closed due to agricultural and commercial loan losses that exhausted the bank's capital," the state bank regulator said.

Lafayette will assume about $5.1 million in 1,600 deposit accounts and has agreed to pay the FDIC a purchase premium of $50,610.

BUBBLE

According to Naeve a low price on residual fuel oil and gas-on-gas competition are currently holding the price of natural gas down, but when the bubble bursts gas-on-gas competition, that is gas companies competing for customers in the same market will be the first to go.

Gas prices have stayed low for so long, he said, because most gas was sold under long time contracts, but predicted that would not be the practice in future contracrs.

The former aid to Senator Lloyd Bentsen predicted that Canadian and Mexico gas supplies would not be able to step in and take care of shortages in the U.S. when the gas bubble breaks.

"Canadian imports are on the decline. At best they can deliver only three trillion cubic feet into our market, because they are limited by pipelines," he said. As for Mexico, he said he did not know of a gas surplus in that nation and there was no way to deliver it to the U.S. if there were. "We simply cannot fall back on Canada or Mexico in the event of shortages," he warned.

He said one of his biggest concerns was that when it came time to deal with shortages there would be no rigs left to drill for natural gas: "If low oil prices persist much longer, we will have lost one of our most valuable resources — the drilling and oil well service industry."

The commissioner added that if oil men wanted to repeal the fuel use act, now was the right time, because there would be a chance when the first shortages appeared.

FERC

Clearing up problems, addressing previously unconsidered ramifications and clarifying the commission's intent in de-vintaging gas classifications will be a long, drawn-out process, Hays predicts. Since issuance of Order 436 concerning open access carriage in October last year, more than 200 clarifications and alterations of the rule have been issued.

PROCESSING PIPELINE companies' applications for blanket transportation authorization under Order 436 is an excruciatingly slow process, Naeve says, because each emerging consideration is a new issue not previously considered by FERC.

"In addition, no two applications are the same — each has been formulated to accommodate the specific market conditions of the particular pipeline company making application," Naeve noted.

Despite the slowness of the approval process and the initial reluctance of pipeline companies to participate in open access carriage, Naeve said that with a recent increase in applications, that a "vast majority of companies have at least applied for Order 436 blanket transportation authorization and widespread participation in third-party transportation programs is inevitable."

The commission continues to extend temporary transition period authorization for open access carriage of gas carried under Section 311 of the Natural Gas Policy Act. Last month, commissioners exercised their "equitable powers" to waive FERC regulations to establish guidelines for further extensions of temporary transportation programs which expired the first of this month.

Through FERC guidelines established at the late June meeting, no gas being carried under expiring transitional programs had to be shut off at the July 1 expiration date, Naeve noted.

LTV

LTV's action underscores the union's contention "that only a massive involvement by the administration will turn around the disastrous course which has impacted the domestic steel industry in the past six years," he said.

Richard Dowdell, financial secretary of Steelworkers Local 1033 in Chicago, said that as late as a week ago, LTV officials "said the concessions we agreed to would let it keep going at the same level."

Company spokesman Charles Palmer said it is too soon to say which of the company's estimated 24 steel plants or other operations would be affected by the reorganization.

But Palmer said LTV plans to stay in steel, as well as energy and aerospace, and that job cuts are unlikely in the profitable LTV Aerospace and Defense Co., which employs 16,500 in Dallas.

The reorganization plan is likely to call for reducing some employee costs, restructuring debt and terminating some burdensome contracts, he said.

LTV lost more than half its market value Thursday as more than 6 million shares changed hands after the announcement. The stock fell $2.25 a share to $2.12½ in consolidated New York Stock Exchange trading.

Standard & Poor's lowered the debt rating for LTV Corp. and its subsidiaries from CCC and CCC-minus to D as a result of the Chapter 11 filing.

Bethlehem called the filing "a clear indication of the major difficulties still being faced by the steel industry in this country."

Ector County struggles to balance budget

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A majority of Ector County taxpayers will pay no more property taxes than last year although this year's tax rate may be higher.

A final decision is yet to be made by county officials, but the 1986 tax rate will probably be slightly more than 1.5 cents higher than 1985.

However, because of decreased appraised property values, the 34.51 cents per $100 of assessed value will produce some $2.5 million less in tax revenues for the county budget than last year's 33-cent-tax rate generated.

Following four days of hearings with department heads that have been Ector County Commissioners reduce services and personnel significantly, the nearly $23 million proposed budget has been reduced by close to $4 million and commissioners have figured out how to make up the remaining $2 million.

The $23 million figure includes nearly $6.6 million for the Farm Market Lateral Road fund.

By the time commissioners ended Thursday's session, a decision had been made to eliminate or not fill about 30 county jobs in nearly all departments. This action will result in the net elimination of at least 19 jobs and not filling 11 vacancies.

In a further effort to reduce spending, county employees in all departments will be required to take five days off annually without pay.

The Ector County Library will lose five employees and be open only 66 hours per week.

The district clerk and county clerk offices will lose two full-time positions as will the building maintenance department.

The tax assessor-collector will lose one full-time position and the district attorney and justices of the peace offices will each lose a part-time position.

The county cemetery will lose two full-time positions.

A suggestion by Precinct 2 Commissioner Bryan Henderson to transfer county tax collections to the Ector County school district tax office to save about $150,000 annually drew heated response from Tax Assessor-Collector Lea Taylor.

State law allows commissioners to effect such a transfer with consent of the tax assessor-collector, but Ms. Taylor said she would never agree to the transfer.

Ms. Taylor argued that collection of tax monies should rest with an elected public official who is directly responsible to voters, rather than someone appointed to make tax collections.

She said the state association of tax assessors-collectors plans to submit a proposal to the next session of the Texas Legislature that would call for consolidation of all tax collections under elected tax collectors.

"Would you be willing to turn collection of your taxes over to an office that violates the state tax code," she asked Henderson.

Ms. Taylor explained her allegation, saying the ECISD tax office arbitrarily grants taxpayers relief from late payment penalties and interest, which is illegal under the State Property Tax Code.

Henderson asked how, if Ms. Taylor wouldn't agree to the transfer, $150,000 could be cut from the tax office budget.

"Are you telling me I have to agree to this or take a $150,000 budget cut?" Ms. Taylor asked Henderson. He replied he was only asking how such a cut could be made and she said her office's budget was already "bare bones."

Thursday's session wound up with Fiscal Services Director Tom Pace explaining the county deficit, which has now been reduced to about $1 million, could be reduced by "a slight modification of the tax rate."

He said that would produce an additional $250,000, and, by taking the remainder, about $750,000, from the county's nearly $6 million general fund surplus.

Some commissioners suggested the entire deficit could be funded from the general fund surplus, but Pace and Judge Jan Fisher said this would leave the county with no cushion for next year, which is expected to see property values decrease again.

Ector County's tax base in 1985 was about $5.6 billion. The 1986 tax base is about $4.9 billion, a decrease of more than $700 million. The appraised value of mineral properties in Ector County decreased about 22 percent this year and real property values are down about 4.4 percent.

Professional thieves set snares for naive 'pigeons'

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A group of slick, professional thieves is operating in Midland, preying on vulnerable, mainly older citizens, in a scheme known as a "pigeon drop," according to Midland Police Department officers.

Detective Sgt. Phil Maxwell said a 77-year-old Midland woman was the latest victim Tuesday. She lost $15,000 cash.

Maxwell said the woman was approached about 9:30 a.m. Tuesday in the parking lot of Albertson's, 1002 Andrews Hwy. A white female with blonde hair holding a bag full of money asked her if she had dropped it.

The woman said no, and the suspect gleefully told the woman the money was theirs to keep, Maxwell said. After contacting a third party, who pretended to be a banker, the suspect convinced the woman to withdraw the $15,000 from her account at Western Bank as security for the recovered money.

Maxwell said the two women went to a downtown building, where the suspect said she would put the woman's money in a safe deposit box in case someone else claimed the bag full of money. She excused herself, promised to return with a receipt, and vanished, he said.

Maxwell said the victim, or "pigeon" in the groups' parlance, is usually approached, typically in a parking lot, by someone who claims to have found a large amount of cash.

"After the suspect approaches the victim about the discovery, the suspect claims his boss is a banker, and will know what to do with the money," Maxwell said. "A call is made to the 'boss,' and he talks to the suspect and the victim. He will usually tell the victim to look, and make sure there is some money there. Then the banker says the two can split the money."

Maxwell said the "banker" assures the victim the money can legally be kept, but there is a catch. The victim is told to withdraw some cash to cover the amount of found money in case there is a later, more legitimate claim made. The suspect pretends to withdraw his share from his bank, then accompanies the victim to his bank.

By this time, Maxwell said, the victim has fallen for the scheme. In some cases, the victim hands the money over to the suspect to keep in a safe deposit box, and demands nothing more than a receipt and a telephone number. In others, the victim is told to put the money in the trunk of his vehicle. The suspect, experienced and using slight of hand, quickly switches a bag of paper with the victim's bag of money, Maxwell said.

In either instance, the stolen money successfully in hand, the victim is left robbed; the "pigeon" is "dropped."

Maxwell said two other attempted pigeon drops occurred Tuesday.

In one case, a woman was approached shortly after 8:30 a.m. outside an animal hospital in the 3400 block of Big Spring. Maxwell said the suspect was a white female, who told the woman she had found some money and showed her two packets of money. The suspect asked for a ride to a convenience store at the corner of Big Spring and Wadley, where she called her "boss." She asked the woman for a ride to Odessa, but the woman refused and the suspect disappeared behind the store.

In the other case, a man was approached about 10 a.m. in a restaurant parking lot at 304 E. Florida St. by a dark-skinned male. The suspect showed the man an envelope with two packets of money inside, similar to the other attempt. The suspect wanted the man to follow him to Texas American Bank on W. Wall St., to talk to his "boss." The man indicated he wanted to report the find to the police, and the suspect vanished.

Maxwell said all three incidents Tuesday were the work of one group.

He said such groups usually originate in the Dallas area, then work their way westward along Interstate 20, stopping for no more than a few days in each city where they are successful. A group reaches El Paso, works that city for a few days, then reverses course and heads back to Dallas again looking for more "pigeons" along the way.

"Odessa has the same problem we have" Maxwell said. "One pigeon-dropper there told one of our detectives he made $200,000 to $300,000 a year. He did it every day. These people are professionals — they are very good at what they do.

"They are looking for vulnerable types, people who look like they would help someone out."

EEOC backs woman in suit against hospital

From Staff Reports

The U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has sided with the 56-year-old former assistant administrator for nursing at Medical Center Hospital in Odessa in lodging an age-discrimination federal lawsuit against the Ector County hospital.

The lawsuit's petition alleges that Gertrude Williams was "unlawfully terminated" from her job because of her age, that she was replaced by a "younger male," and that the hospital "is continuing to engage in unlawful employment practices" in violation of the federal Age Discrimination Employment Act."

Ms. Williams, who now lives in St. Petersburg, Fla., is seeking back pay, other compensation, punitive damages and a permanent injunction to enjoin the hospital from engaging in discriminatory employment practices.

The hospital's attorney, Odessa lawyer James O'Leary, said that Ms. Williams resigned her position in June 1984, was not terminated and had admitted she resigned.

"This is our position," O'Leary said. "She resigned, and as far as we are concerned, it was a voluntary resignation."

"She did get replaced by a younger man (Joe Daugherty)," O'Leary said, "but he was someone she had trained and bragged on." O'Leary said Daugherty is in his 30s.

Federal court records reflect that the lawsuit is to be tried before U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton on Oct. 20. The EEOC's trial attorney in the case is Stephen T. Hyder of Dallas.

Men arrested for cocaine possession out on bond

From Staff Reports

Two Midland men are out on bond following their arrest late Wednesday for possession of cocaine, according to the Midland Police Department.

Police said Pete Marcos Payan, 21, and Jose Ramirez, 23, were arrested about 6:30 p.m. after patrol officer Rene Flores stopped the 1986 Cadillac the two men were traveling in near the intersection of Ward St. and Andrews Hwy.

According to police, a witness saw one of the men throw items under the car after Flores walked around one side of the vehicle.

The items were later identified as a packet which contained a white powder which was tested and found to be cocaine, and several syringes.

The men were charged and bond for each was set at $7,500 by Municipal Judge James Brazell.

In other reports, a 36-piece crystal set valued at $1,000, silver trays valued at $500, brass trays valued at $400 and assorted glassware valued at $100 were reported burglarized.

Sarah Neisig, 2409 Dartmouth, told police the items were taken from a building in the 5000 block of Andrews Hwy. The burglary took place Wednesday or Thursday, police said.

Police are searching for two suspects in the burglary Thursday of a residence. Harry Hinkle told police a 19-inch color television was stolen from his residence sometime between 11:30 a.m. and 6:30 p.m.

The suspects were described as a white male, 25 years of age, five feet nine inches tall and 180 pounds, with blond hair and blue eyes. His accomplice was described as a white female, 22 years old, five feet seven inches tall and 135 pounds, with blond hair and green eyes.

Police also reported the burglary of an air conditioner valued at $500 and a microwave oven valued at $100 from a residence in the 1200 block of Burchill Dr. Richard Reed, 4500 Crenshaw, told police the items were taken sometime between July 6 and July 16. Reports said the victim of the burglary was Nancy Calhoun, 85 Tamarind Ln., Key West, Fla.

Mob in gasoline industry, highway official says

AUSTIN (AP) — Mob infiltration of the gasoline industry may have cost Texas $74 million last year as part of a possible national loss of $1 billion in unpaid taxes, says Federal Highway Administrator Ray Barnhart.

Barnhart, a former Texas House member and member of the state highway commission, said, "If we had an additional billion dollars last year, which we believe was the minimum that was not paid by the mob, it would have meant another $74 million for the state of Texas."

Barnhart told a Thursday news conference there had been recent testimony in Washington, D.C., that "the mob infiltration into the distribution of gasoline is now into some 12 to 14 states..."

"When you look at the federal and state gasoline taxes in some states, depending on what the state tax is, the price of the product, over 30 percent of it is taxes, so the mob has an ideal opportunity to move in there and make some big bucks."

He said Congress needed to revise collection methods to prevent the loss of gasoline taxes.

Barnhart described highways as "the foundation of our economy — 97 percent of everything we eat, wear, use or produce moves on the nation's highways...highway funding is essential and probably the best buy for their tax dollar the American people have ever had."

Asked about a move by some western states to change the 55 mph speed limit, Barnhart said, "As part of the (Reagan) administration, we are obligated to enforce it and we will...The law, I believe, should be changed."

In response to a question about whether the 55 mph limit saved lives, Barnhart said, "I suspect that it does but not to the extent that some people allege that it does..."

"How many fatalities are involved in speeds in excess of 55? Really, quite few...On the other hand, how many fatalities are involved with drinking drivers? Over 50 percent. And what we are doing as a government is forcing law enforcement to misdirect their efforts to look for speeders, instead of drinkers," he said.

Barnhart also was asked about the impact of environmental groups on the nation's highway system, and he said "we have a lot of professional organizations that receive funds indirectly out of the (federal) highway trust fund, always for some good and noble cause. The Sierra Club — great goals, except in practice it's pretty bad..."

He said in one unnamed state officials had been required to redesign a bridge, which saved 32 square feet of wetlands, at an additional cost of over $300,000. "I don't think anyone in the Sierra Club in his right mind would ever advocate that kind of thing," he said.

Barnhart said environmentalists in Florida had demanded that he approve 40 bridges on a proposed four-lane divided highway so 22 wild cougars "would go under the road instead of over the road, if they will, at a cost of some $38 million. Is that a proper stewardship of public funds? I think not."

"Extremism, a lack of balance in the (environmental) program, is costing the American people millions of dollars, yet there is such power in the generalized term of 'environment' that people want to buy off on that without looking at the true issue," Barnhart said.

Volunteers sought for clean up

Reagan cites aerobatics team's 'exceptional skill' in recent letter

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

President Ronald Reagan has cited the United States World Aerobatic Team members for their "exceptional skill in the spectacular sport of aerobatics" in a letter to team members.

The U.S. team, which includes Midland-Odessa pilot Gene Beggs, 42, is competing in the World Aerobatics Championships in South Cerney, England, west of London, in August.

The 21-member team, including the nine aerobatics pilots, and their aircraft and spare parts will be flown from Dover, Del., to England in a U.S. Air Force Lockheed C-5A Galaxy transport aircraft Sunday morning.

The five-member U.S. Men's Aerobatic Team won the biennial World Aerobatic Championship in 1984. That year, the four-member U.S. Women's Aerobatic Team came in second behind Russia. Precision aerobatic pilots from more than 20 free and Iron Curtain countries will be competing for the championships this year.

Since world aerobatic competition was launched in 1960, the United States Men's Aerobatic Team has won the championship and the "prestigious Nesterov trophy" four times — 1970, 1972, 1980, and 1984.

President Reagan dispatched the letter to the U.S. Aerobatic Team after his "good friend," former Midland Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. and a Republican Party national leader, brought the aerobatic competition to the President's attention.

Midlander Paul Erdmann, who is the U.S. Aerobatic Team's transportation officer, said that the team is "proud" of the president's letter.

"I'm proud to have something like this for our aerobatic team," he said. "It (aerobatics) has his attention, and we're elated to receive correspondence from him."

Erdmann said that the U.S. aerobatic pilots are "much more unified" than they were in 1984. "It is a little better of a weld."

This week, the U.S. pilots practiced their refined aerobatics in Winchester, Va., and will undergo another week of practice in Scotland before they fly to South Cerney for the competition.

Beggs, a Southwest Airlines pilot and a flight instruetor at Midland Regional Airport, is a member of the International Aerobatic Club's Chapter 71 (West Texas Aerobatic Club) here.

Of the nine pilots on the team, two are Texans: Beggs and Deborah Rihn of LaPorte.

The text of the White House letter, dated July 15, follows:

"It is a pleasure to send greetings and best wishes to the men and women of the U.S.A. Aerobatic Team as you embark for South Cerney, England to compete in the World Aerobatic Championships.

"Your exceptional skill in the spectacular sport of aerobatics has earned you the honor of competing in these international championships. This gives you a great opportunity to foster understanding between the peoples of different nations through the spirit of sportsmanship and goodwill.

"In this 'Year of Liberty,' I am especially proud that we have a group of accomplished, dedicated Americans to meet the challenging demands of participation in the World Aerobatic Championships, and I am grateful to my good friend Ernie Angelo for bringing this to my attention.

"Good bless you and God bless America!" — Ronald Reagan.

Agency may impose test for freshmen

AUSTIN (AP) — Freshmen in Texas public colleges and universities will have to pass a basic reading, writing and math test if the state agency overseeing the institutions approves a unanimous recommendation from a special study committee.

A 15-member committee of the Texas College Coordinating Board reported Thursday that almost one-third of students entering Texas' colleges cannot pass a test on material that should have been mastered in the 10th grade.

The committee asked the coordinating board to require that every public college freshman be required to take a basic skills test covering mathematics, reading and writing.

"These students represent a generation of failure in the state's educational system — a failure that can no longer be ignored," said Robert Hardesty, president of Southwest Texas State University and head of the study group.

The coordinating board was to consider the recommendation at its meeting today.

"My recommendation to the board will be that we adopt the committee's report and ask the Legislature to fund it," board chairman Larry Temple said.

Temple also is chairman of the Select Committee on Higher Education, which was named by legislative leaders to recommend steps to improve the quality of Texas' public colleges.

Hardesty said his committee had considered the testing issue for 10 months and held five public hearings.

"This is a blueprint which will help reverse this generation of failure," Hardesty said.

The committee study showed that out of 110,000 freshmen that enter Texas public colleges and universities, "at least 30,000 cannot read, communicate, or compute at levels needed to perform effectively in higher education," Hardesty said.

Hardesty said the committee was unanimous in its recommendations.

"I sincerely hope that the state of Texas is prepared for this report and is prepared to act on it, because its findings are going to be difficult to ignore," he said. "If we are not prepared to act, we would have been better off without the report."

The committee's recommendations included:

— All freshmen entering public colleges should be tested in reading, writing and math beginning in the fall of 1989. The tests would be given after students qualify for admission.

— All components of the test must be passed before completion of 60 semester hours of credit.

— Each college must report annually to the coordinating board on its testing results.

— College and university faculty members should help develop the test.

— The Legislature should provide funds to prepare and administer the tests.

— Each institution should be required to offer remedial instruction to students needing assistance.

— Colleges and universities should advise students on selection of courses early in the degree program.

Hardesty said the committee had estimated the cost of developing the test at $500,000 and an annual cost of $3 million to administer it.

Ex-Midlanders file suit against YMCA

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The YMCA of Midland Inc., the Alamo YMCA's gymnastic director Gary Seth and "Instructor Doe" are defendants in a federal negligence lawsuit filed by the parents of a former Midland girl who allegedly was injured on a YMCA trampoline on April 3, 1985.

The parents, Greg and Carla Dysert, of Ohio, alleged their daughter, Heather, injured her leg "while participating in gymnastics on the trampoline owned by the YMCA of Midland, Inc.," according to the lawsuit's petition.

The petition claims that Seth told Heather's mother that her daughter had "just pulled a muscle in her leg" and that she should walk on the leg immediately after the accident and afterward. The Dyserts maintain that the injury worsened, that Heather ultimately sought medical care which "became rather extensive, costly and painful."

YMCA Director J. Durwood Owen said Thursday that the YMCA staff was "very much unaware" of the alleged extent of the injury, which at the time appeared to be an insignificant incident.

"People recognize that there are some risks in participating in gymnastics," Owen said. He estimated the girl's age to be 7 or 8.

Each month, between 300 and 400 children are enrolled in gymnastics at the Alamo YMCA, Owen said. And injuries, such as strained or pulled muscles, scrapes and falling-down-type injuries in gymnastics and other sporting activities are relatively common.

Owen said that the Dysert lawsuit was "totally unexpected."

"Gymnastics is a sporting activity that does have a certain amount of risk in it," Owen said. "We have one of the safest trampolines that you'll find anywhere."

Odessa attorney Phillip Godwin is representing the Dysert girl and her parents in the lawsuit in which an unspecified amount of money is sought.

The lawsuit's petition alleges that the YMCA failed to "properly supervise" the Dysert girl in gymnastics, failed to have a qualified instructor in the trampoline area while the girl was in gymnastics and permitted students in the class to be unsupervised.

Further, the petition alleges that Seth failed to be qualified in first aid, gave contra-indicated instructions to the Dysert parents for the proper care and treatment of their daughter's injuries and failed to properly supervise the gymnastics class.

The petition claims that "Instructor Doe" failed to properly supervise the class.

The Dyserts are requesting a jury trial.

Jury will decide if victim was family man, drug addict

FORT WORTH (AP) — Lawyers for his widow claimed Paul Reynolds was a devoted family man who would have earned $1.7 million for his family had he not been killed in the crash of Delta Air Lines Flight 191.

But a defense witness testified Reynolds would have contributed only $365,000 to his family over the same 30-year period.

A federal jury was expected to begin deliberations today on whether the widow and two children should be compensated with as much as $2 million or less than half a million.

Reynolds, 32, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., was one of 137 people killed in the Aug. 2 crash of the Delta jetliner at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

Delta had offered to settle the case for $300,000 before the trial, which is the first among about 50 lawsuits stemming from the crash.

Attorneys for Kathy Ann Reynolds were expected to ask for $2 million. But Delta attorneys have presented witnesses who said Paul Reynolds was addicted to alcohol and cocaine and sinking deeper into financial ruin at the time of his death, greatly reducing his potential earnings.

In their deliberations, jurors will be asked to consider what damages if any Kathy Reynolds and her children are entitled to receive for Paul Reynolds' lost financial support, their mental pain and suffering, and his lost companionship and parental guidance.

Odessa official's date of resignation uncertain

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A controversy appears to have arisen over whether Deputy City Secretary Cindy Weir's resignation should be effective Tuesday or if she should stay on in her $24,000 a year job to train her replacement.

According to Mayor Don Carter and At-Large Councilman Sherman Cox, the 24-year-old Ms. Weir wanted to resign as of Tuesday and she should be allowed to do so.

However, council members Melissa Hirsch and Jaime Rodriguez want her to remain until her replacement can be become familiar with the various procedures in the city secretary's office. The office is responsible for transcribing minutes of City Council meetings, conducting municipal elections, administering oaths of office and signing and notarizing various documents.

Ms. Weir resigned so she could devote more time to her studies at University of Texas of the Permian Basin, where she expects to earn her bachelor's degree in the fall, then go on to Texas Tech in Lubbock and earn her master's degree.

Ms. Weir, who had worked under former City Secretary Tena Walker until Ms. Walker was pressured into resigning in May 1985, was named deputy city secretary and has run the office since that time. Ms. Walker has filed an age discrimination suit in connection with her termination that is still pending against the city.

"We need to make the point that everyone is invited and needed to help in this project," said City Council member Oralia Corrales.

"The work done by the volunteers Saturday will save the city about $50,000.

"When you count the cost of labor and the cost of using city dump trucks and equipment, we are saving the city Community Development Block Grant funds that can now be allocated elsewhere," she said.

Jaycee Project Chairman Jerry Longsworth said that 10 additional lots in the area will also be included in Saturday's clean-up session.

"We're hoping for a turnout of about 300 people. That would make the job a lot easier," Longsworth said.

"Just because our city is financially depressed at this time, doesn't mean that it should look that way, too," Ms. Corrales said.

Volunteers are urged to meet at 9 a.m. Saturday morning at the Park Place Motel, located at 1500 E. Hwy. 80 at Carver.

Dry beans becoming less common staple among Americans

By JIM DRINKARD

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Americans' incomes grow and their lifestyles change, they are eating less of a once-common staple: dry beans.

The Agriculture Department says rising disposable income has allowed more consumers to indulge their protein needs with other, more expensive foods. And with more women working, fewer have the time it takes to wash and cook pinto, great northern, kidney or lima beans.

While beans never have been a mainstay in U.S. diets, the department says, Americans ate an average of 7½ pounds each of dried beans as recently as the early 1960s. That has fallen by 20 percent to a current level of about 6 pounds a piece per year.

There still are regional favorites, notes a recent paper by department economist Neil Conklin: red beans and rice in New Orleans, baked beans in Boston, black-eyed peas in the South and pinto beans out West.

But nutrition surveys by the department have detected a steady decline in consumption in all regions but the West, where an increasing Hispanic population, fond of frijoles, has kept consumption steady.

"It's mostly a result of urbanization and big changes in lifestyle," Conklin says. "It's been a fairly stagnant market" for domestic sales, he added, with exports representing the brightest prospects for increases.

One well-known purveyor of beans, the U.S. Senate restaurant system, confirms the trend. The restaurants' well-known Senate Bean Soup continues to sell about 700 bowls a day while the lawmakers are in session, but the dish has lagged well behind growth in numbers of customers and menu items, manager John Hitzel said.

The department's nutrition studies confirmed the relationship between bean consumption and income level, Conklin said. Households poor enough to receive federal food stamps and other food aid generally used the added income to upgrade their diets, and were not among the largest bean consumers.

Those who ate the most beans were those at the upper edge of the lowest income range, people less likely to be eligible for food assistance and with a greater need to look for less expensive protein sources, the report said.

Conklin said he expects per-capita consumption to level off about where it is now. Some efforts are being made to blunt the slide of bean consumption, including marketing efforts and new convenience ethnic foods, he said. And health concerns about a primary competing protein source, red meat, could be making consumers take a second look at beans.

Hot temperatures bring lawn problems unless diagnosis, treatment begins

Along with hot temperatures, the summer season in Texas may bring special lawn problems — drought, weeds, insects and disease.

The lawn problems can cause concerns for homeowners unless accurate diagnosis and proper treatment takes place before they become severe.

Dry spots, thin turf and weeds can result from improper watering, fertilizing and mowing practices. Follow recommended cultural practices before applying a chemical to correct lawn problems.

Drought stress most often occurs in mid summer and shows up as wilted, discolored turf. Adjust watering schedules to wet the soil to a depth of four to six inches, and water only when grass shows symptoms of moisture stress.

Also, raise mowing heights one-half inch to improve drought tolerance in mid-summer.

Lack of nitrogen or iron often creates a lawn problem. Grass with a nitrogen deficiency may have a pale color and be heavily infested with weeds. A light application of nitrogen fertilizer will improve the lawn's appearance.

Grass leaves that have yellow stripes parallel to the leaf margins may be deficient in iron. A foliar application of iron sulfate at six inches per 1,000 square feet will usually solve this problem.

White grubs feed heavily on lawns during mid summer, and their damage resembles drought injury. If turf does not respond to applications of water, suspect these insects.

White grubs can be controlled with insecticides. Water the lawn thoroughly after the insecticide is applied, since grubs feed in the soil.

With the hay making season in full swing, producers need to give serious thought to storing bales properly. Failure to do so can result in sizeable losses to weathering. Many producers are turning to large round bales due to labor savings, but often they do not store bales properly and thereby save labor at the expense of hay quality.

A demonstration conducted by the Extension Service in south Texas was aimed at studying weathering losses. Sorghum sudangrass hay was stored by five different methods: in the barn; uncovered, outside on the ground; uncovered, outside on a pallet off the ground; covered with plastic outside on the ground; and covered with plastic and stored on a pallet off the ground.

The hay was stored from July until January during which time about 20 inches of rain fell. Weathered parts were removed and weighed to determine losses, and samples of both weathered and unweathered hay were checked for quality. Bales averaged 1,575 pounds at harvest and 1,400 pounds at feeding.

The storage method greatly influenced the amount of hay weathered. Largest losses were in bales stored on top of the ground because the hay acted as a wick and soaked up moisture from the ground. Uncovered bales on the ground lost 220 pounds on the average, while covered bales on the ground lost 110. Those that were uncovered, but stored on pallets off the ground lost 80 pounds on the average, while covered bales on pallets lost only 35 pounds.

Although the interior or outside-stored bales were comparable in quality to hay stored indoors, feed value of hay that was weathered on the top, sides, and particularly, bottom of the bales, was reduced sharply. Energy content of this weathered hay was reduced by 50 percent of the energy in the unweathered hay. These losses will be greater in loosely baled hay.

The biggest savings comes from storing hay off the ground. Old truck tires, pallets and similar items work well for this purpose. As for covering hay outdoors, the cost of a plastic covering will likely be equal to, or greater than, the value of the hay saved.

To minimize outside storage losses to hay follow these recommendations. Store hay in a well drained site and off the ground if possible; store to allow air movement around bales; align rows with flat areas facing north and south for more rapid drying after rain, and avoid storing all hay in one place to decrease fire risks.

Hot conditions boosts growth of early crops

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Hot, open weather boosted growth of early-planted crops and allowed planting of late crops in much of Texas last week, although rain pelted parts of the plains, western, south central and eastern portions of the state.

The hot, dry weather was "just what the doctor ordered" according to producers in South Texas, where cotton is opening rapidly and the sorghum harvest is nearing the halfway mark, said Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, the Texas A&M University System.

While "hot weather has been ideal for crops, it is causing ranges and pastures to suffer and begin to need rain, particularly in portions of the Southwest, Coastal Bend and West Central Districts," Carpenter noted.

The hot, cloudless days are depleting soil moisture rapidly and young crops as well as rangeland will be needing moisture soon for sustained growth.

To boost continued growth and development, some cotton fields are being irrigated in Cameron and Hidalgo counties. Corn there is moving rapidly toward maturity, and the sugarcane crop is making good progress.

Citrus also is progressing and good fruit size and a fair crop indicated, Carpenter said. The Valley okra harvest is continuing while tomato and squash harvests are virtually complete.

The onion harvest is winding down in the Winter Garden area, where some hay harvesting is under way. Young crops, however, and ranges and pastures there are suffering from the heat and lack of moisture.

Sorghum harvesting is in full swing in the Coastal Bend, which also is short of moisture in upper counties of the district. The rice crop there is 50 percent headed, and is from 40 to 80 percent headed along the Upper Coast. Some sorghum is being cut, cotton is squaring and corn is maturing rapidly in Upper Coast counties.

Heat and insect problems are taking a toll on vegetables in a number of areas, and disease pressure also is being reported.

The cotton crop around Lubbock and in Far West Texas is making slow progress due to extremely wet conditions, and replanting of storm-damaged crops also is under way around Lubbock.

District Extension directors provided these mid-week reports.

ROLLING PLAINS: Heavy rains over the central part of the district have created problems for producers in getting normal cotton stands. Grasshoppers are reported heavy in pastures. The moisture boosted watermelon and cantaloupe crops in Knox County, where potato and cucumber harvests continue.

FAR WEST: Stormy weather brought rains ranging from showers to upwards of four inches to portions of the district, along with hail and strong winds. Cotton fields are extremely wet and all grains and vegetable harvests were delayed by the moisture. Most onions have been harvested. Rains have improved the pecan nut growth but the outlook is for a lighter than average crop.

Elm leaf beetle strips leaves, causes premature defoliation

The elm leaf beetle is an annual pest on foliage of Siberian elm trees, throughout West Texas. This insect skeletonizes the leaf surface of leaves during feeding and causes premature defoliation of trees. This weakens the trees and makes them more susceptible to tree borers and disease organisms.

The adult beetle is about one-fourth inch long, yellowish to olive green, with a black stripe along each side of wing covers. The eyes are black, and there are four black spots on the thorax.

The female beetles lay eggs on the back side of leaves in groups of 10 to 30. Eggs are bottle-shaped, yellow-orange in color and hatch in a few days into small worms that are nearly black in coloration and covered with short black hairs.

The larvae, or worm stage, is the most destructive life stage of the beetle. When full grown, it is about one-half inch long with a dull yellow color and two black stripes. Larvae feed for about two weeks, then seek out crevices on the tree in which to pupate. In about seven to 10 days they change into adults. There are three to four generations per year.

Proper timing of a foliar spray application of carbaryl (Sevin®, Methoxychlor, Di-Syston and Orthene) when the eggs start to hatch will control this insect pest. Mix and apply the foliar spray according to the manufacturer's directions on the label of the insecticide container. Wettable powder or liquid formulations of these insecticides may be used. Repeat the foliar spray at second generation egg hatch.

Thorough coverage of trees with the insecticide spray is necessary to obtain satisfactory control.

Read and follow label recommendations and directions before applying any insecticide. Store insecticides safely and out of reach of children.

Cotton fleahoppers are on the increase in area cotton fields. Fleahoppers range from eight to 60 per 100 plant terminals. Cotton producers should begin scouting their cotton. During the first three weeks of squaring, the economic threshold is 15 to 20 fleahoppers, per 100 terminals, combined with less than 80 percent square set.

Soviet grain harvest smaller than predicted

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union's grain harvest this year will be smaller than previously forecast, mainly because of dry weather this spring in key production areas, the Agriculture Department said.

As it looks now, total grain output may be about 185 million metric tons, down from 190 million tons forecast a month ago, which would have matched the 1985 harvest, the department's Foreign Agricultural Service said in its report.

"Hot, dry weather in Moldavia, parts of the Ukraine, the Black Soils and the Volga Valley reduced yield potentials for the grain crops," the report said.

The reduction of 5 million tons included a decline of 2 million tons each for winter wheat and spring barley, and 1 million tons for spring wheat prospects.

Soviet production of winter wheat was forecast at 38 million tons, spring barley at 44 million tons, and spring wheat at 39 million tons.

COPING WITH JOB LOSS

Still-employed friends affected by co-workers' loss

By JIM MAY and MARTI VERMILLION

May

Vermillion

DEAR COPING: Although I am employed, my question deals with unemployment. I have witnessed many of my friends being laid off and it's very disturbing and unsettling to watch competent, but "helpless" co-workers lose both their jobs and their dignity.

But I also feel helpless. My question is what can I do to help their situation? I don't know what to say to my former co-workers. I feel guilty to still have a job and embarrassed when I bump into my friends who have lost theirs.

Any suggestions for the "survivors" who must say goodbye to the "victims." — J.L.

DEAR J.L.: First, don't say goodbye. The "victims" have lost enough without losing their friends as well.

Next, go ahead and tell them of your own feelings of guilt and embarrassment.

Then, empathize with their feelings of loss, helplessness and whatever else you have identified.

Because your letter is so timely, we asked some of those "victims" to respond to your letter directly. Here is what one long-time executive had to say:

DEAR COPING: In response to the question about how the unemployed would like the still-employed to treat us, my first response is: I'm so glad someone finally bothered to ask.

I don't feel as bad about myself as I did in the beginning, but my current negative (and now, angry) feelings have developed much as a result of how former friends have responded (or not responded) to me and in how I think others now view me.

Until a year ago, I was a seasoned professional with all the amenities that go with that lifestyle. I had "financial security" and a solid future as an integral part of my organization. I had full health, pension and insurance benefits along with the comforts of a company car, club memberships and expense-paid sporting excursions. My private life abounded with all the accouterments of luxury: those things that my present critics would envy.

My job security was high, if not guaranteed. I was told my job would always be there, which I firmly believed. I guess it's true that my position is still there; it's just that the company is not! The firm went under and took my "secure" future with it.

Losing my job was devastating to me and my family. Only after losing it did I discover that it had been my total security, physically, emotionally, socially and spiritually. For me, the biggest surprise of unemployment has been the insecurity that has lingered. Everything I took for granted crumbled down around me and I couldn't do one thing to stop it.

After the numbness wore off, the hurt began. Because suddenly much of what I took for granted at work and in life became crystal clear. It was like realizing the importance of a good friend or good health only after losing them.

But the insecurity unemployment brought me was more than a financial fear of not being able to pay my bills. I discovered that financial comfort was not the only comfort that my job brought. It also had brought me psychological comfort that held together my purpose, my identity and my direction.

Without employment, my relationships, activities and very routine have been taken away. I lost my reference points for identifying myself. Over the months, I have made much progress over the months in finding my self apart from any reference point to a career.

But what I want people to know is that much of who I've been was based on that career and my personal relationships developed there. The sad thing is that when my job ended so did those relationships. Not only did dear friends drift away, so did potential ones.

When I'm introduced to people, their first question is "Where do you work?" Now, their second question is "How long ago were you laid off?" When I tell them it was a year ago, their reaction is as if I had announced that I had AIDS. I can feel people judge, look down on me and view me as a pitiful case who is just down-and-out lazy. Being unemployed truly is a "social disease."

I want you to tell people that we hurt, feel guilty, are embarrassed, are desperate and are even moved to anger the same as they are. More than ever do we need friends. I don't want advice. I don't want lectures, preaching, problems solvers or consolers. Sometimes I just need their presence.

Tell your audience not to shun the unemployed just because they don't know what to say. They don't have to say anything.

Tell them not to drift away in a few weeks after they think we're over it. Because we're not over it. That is when reality is starting to sink in and so we need them the most then.

Tell your audience that just because 8 a.m. at the office doesn't come for us anymore, 8 a.m. still does come. That may be the hardest time of the entire day (personally, I handle 8 a.m. by sleeping through it).

Tell them we want them around, but when we're hurting so deeply, we can't always say that. We can't seek them out when we feel like the underdogs. Tell them we interpret the lack of contact as a matter of their not wanting to associate with "losers."

Tell them when our security and identity is stripped from us, we need them to stay just as they were — to help establish any sense of stability that can be maintained, since suddenly the whole world is insecure to us. Tell them not to move ... because for us, everything else has moved.

Tell them not to add to that insecurity.

Tell them we need them and that we need them the most when we're wearing the best masks.

Please tell them for me and so many others I know. I don't think they have any idea how crucial they are for our own "survival."

Most of all, tell them we're all in this together, that I refuse to be a "victim," that now I'm determined to "survive" too. Tell them that I will only become a victim if I leave and can only "survive" if they refuse to leave.

But please don't tell them my name yet, because I'm still working through my sense of abandonment and anger.

DEAR ABANDONED AND ANGRY: You've told them for me ... and much better than I ever could have. Your plea is loud and clear. A commonality I heard in yours and J.L.'s statements was the importance of relationships and the elements of guilt and embarrassment involved when those relationships are terminated by a third party — the job situation.

I think we all share some of that embarrassment in the current employment situation — even the employer who is forced to make cuts. The typical response of embarrassment is to withdraw. In this case, someone has to refuse to withdraw. Otherwise, everyone becomes a victim through isolation.

Let's hope we all heard your plea and rally in support of one another, our families and our community in this time of economic transition.

'Camelot' returns for Kennedy wedding

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

For a great many Americans, the most durable image of Caroline and John Kennedy will always be that of two innocent youngsters left fatherless by an assassin's bullet 23 years ago.

The picture of President Kennedy's two children is a freeze-frame in the mental newsreel of those anguished days. They were there as the coffin passed. Caroline, almost 6, grasped her veiled mother's hand; "John-John," on his third birthday, gave that memorable salute.

The drama of President Kennedy's slaying and the aftermath of Nov. 22, 1963, still loom large for those 168 million Americans — 70 percent of the nation's population today — who saw those days unfold on television screens. Caroline's wedding this Saturday, therefore, comes as a rite of passage not only for her but for millions who see the occasion against a larger backdrop, the passing of two decades. For them, it is cause to recall President Kennedy himself..

"It's hard to think of John Kennedy as a father-in-law," said Herbert S. Parmet, distinguished professor of history at the City University of New York and author of "JFK: The Presidency of John F. Kennedy" (Doubleday, 1983). "The image of his youth is so impressed in our mind."

In Parmet's view, Caroline's wedding underscores the realization that her father would be 69 years old if he were alive today.

There's no way that President Kennedy's children could have skirted the celebrity accorded them by birth. They were kids who played hide-and-seek in the Oval Office; celebrity was thrust on them with a heavier weight than on any of the 30 grandchildren of Joseph and Rose Kennedy of Boston.

Sure, the Kennedy gloss accounted for the throngs who turned out for the wedding of cousin Maria Shriver to actor Arnold Schwarzennegger on Cape Cod in April.

"Oh God, it was hilarious," recalled Muriel MacKenzie, who enjoyed the scene from here house opposite St. Francis Xavier Church. There were family on the roof, friends on the porch and strangers on the lawn — all documented in an album of photos taken that day by her daughter.

From all predictions, however, that festive combination of Kennedy and Hollywood styles was a mere warmup for this Saturday, when Caroline, now 28, weds Edwin A Schlossberg, 41. Some folks in Hyannis say they have friends in Connecticut and in New York who plan to come for a look. They'll get one only if they're able to penetrate the ranks of reporters, photographers and police officers who are surely to plant themselves, shoulder to shoulder, outside Our Lady of Victory Church in Centerville.

"Caroline wants to be as accommodating as she can," said Brian Delaney, a Boston public relations executive who will be on hand to deal with press coverage on the family's behalf. "Most people don't have to be concerned with the public and the media when they get married."

The plan on Saturday is to give reporters a prepared statement that will address the so-far unanswered questions about who's in the bridal party, who the guests are and so on. In addition, according to Nancy Tuckerman, spokeswoman for Caroline's mother, Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, the press will have an opportunity to photograph the newlyweds, presumably as they leave the church. Though Caroline and her mother have always zealously guarded their privacy, these concessions appear designed to prevent the gathering from turning unruly.

John and Caroline's lives have been shaped by the Kennedy family's legacy of public service. It's no small achievement that, like their mother, who is now a book editor at Doubleday & Co., they have been able to pursue personal interests amid such public attention.

Caroline recently completed her first year at Columbia University's School of Law after six years as manager and coordinating producer in the Metropolitan Museum of Art's film and television office. There, she produced a WNET-BBC documentary, "New World Visions: American Art and the Metropolitan Museum," a venture that placed her in the public eye and reminded her that the scrutiny was usually a strain.

In Schlossberg, who is said to be taking the visibility with some amusement, Caroline has a partner whose eclectic interests include some of her own. So wide-ranging are his credentials that no single occupation can be ascribed to his name.

They're two of the nicest kids you'll ever meet," said orchestra leader Peter Duchin, a friend of the Kennedy family. "He's wonderful — bright, with-it, extremely intelligent."

Kennedy's fiance a man of many talents

Magic comes back

By ERMA BOMBECK

"I don't want to go to grandma's."

The first time you hear your child say it, it's as shocking as dancing on a grave, spitting on the Flag, or knocking apple pie!

How dare she disfavor this woman who looked into her scroungy, red, wrinkled newborn face as she lay toothless and bald and said proudly, "She's beautiful." How dare she discard this woman who let her bake cookies with dirty hands and pound on her piano with sticky fingers.

When did the magic go? She used to be in the car before her parents had their coats on. Grandma hid Easter eggs behind every bush. She let her do "grown-up" things like mow the grass and iron towels and pick tomatoes. (She would never know what grandma did with all those green tomatoes.)

When did the magic go? Maybe it was the day she looked anxiously out at the "big table" in the dining room and grandma saw the look and said, "Maybe you should start eating with the adults now." (Before that, she had food fights in the kitchen with her cousins.) A door closed that day ... ever so softly ... on childhood and she never even knew it. Had she tried the door, she would have realized it swung only one way. She could never go back again. The trip through the door leading to the "big table" was awkward, not nearly the fun she thought it would be. There was cigar smoke that made her cough. They talked about washing machines and politics and who was in a "family way." And it was boring being in the crack between childhood and maturity.

From that day forward, grandma's house was never the same. The player piano sounded out of key and wasn't any fun anymore. The front steps weren't an adventure. They were broken down and a rather pathetic toy. Playing at her dressing table was childish and the make-up seemed old and stale. Rolling out cookies was dull. Children's conversation was silly and adult conversation was meaningless.

There was nothing to do at grandma's.

Why did the magic go?

It was time. It was time to move life along. There were experiences to gather, friends to cultivate, interests to be indulged and decisions to be made. There were things she had to do alone ... away from the family. It was time to expand her world.

And grandma's house? For several years, it diminished — along with grandma. Both became smaller with every visit. She took along books to cushion the boredom and feigned homework to leave early.

It wasn't until she had children of her own that she had time to reflect on the house and its occupants and what they had meant to her. And she hungered for it. In describing it to her own children, "The rooms were so large you could skate in them. And there was this wonderful piano that you played with your feet. And those magnificent steps that I played on for hours." The magic had returned.

"I don't want to go to grandma's."

Let the door close softly, grandma. They'll be back.

Rumors flying on eve of wedding

New York Times News Service

The invitation reads: "Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis requests the honor of your presence at the marriage of her daughter, Caroline Bouvier Kennedy, to Edwin Arthur Schlossberg on July 19, 1986, at 3 p.m., the Church of Our Lady of Victory, Centerville, Massachusetts."

That was not Onassis's only request. She has let it be known that advance publicity about her daughter's wedding was unwelcome.

"We made up our mind not to give out any information," said Onassis's longtime spokesman, Nancy Tuckerman. That is, not until a five-page fact sheet is released following the wedding. The wedding's suppliers — designers, caterer and hotel, for example — have all been asked to keep mum.

The result? A feeding frenzy for tidbits of Kennedy wedding news. And much of what has been reported is "inaccurate," "speculation" and "conjecture," according to Tuckerman.

Take the menu, for example. The meal planned by the caterer, Glorious Food, will not be unseasonably heavy New England seafood and boiled beef, as one report had it.

Following a two-hour champagne reception, the menu for the 6:30 dinner is cold pea soup with mint, shrimp and apples, vegetable vinaigrette, roast chicken with rice, cold sirloin of beef, salad, raspberries and two identical wedding cakes, white inside and out — and without the traditional bride and bridegroom on top.

The meal will be served, by waiters to be bused in from New York, under a tent decorated by Robert Isabell, a Manhattan florist. He is working with a close friend of Onassis, Rachel Lambert Mellon, who designed the White House Rose Garden and landscaped Onassis's summer home on Martha's Vineyard.

Then there are the invitations. It has been reported that they were designed by the bridegroom and produced by Tiffany & Co.

They were, in fact, created by Keith Godard, a British-born designer and a partner in Works, a Manhattan design group, and produced by a commercial printer in New York.

Godard was commissioned by Schlossberg, whose firm, Edwin Schlossberg Inc., specializes in museum and theme-park design. The two have collaborated on various projects for 15 years. They began planning the invitations together in February, Godard said, just before before the couple's engagement was announced by Onassis.

The invitation, engraved on off-white card stock, features a watercolor of the church painted by Godard. A second card says, "Reception immediately following at the home of Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy, Hyannis Port, Massachusetts," and features another watercolor of boats by a seashore shack at the Kennedy family compound.

Another card gives travel information, listing commuter airlines to Hyannis from Boston and New York and suggesting that guests stay at the Dunfey Hyannis Hotel.

John F. Kennedy Jr., the bride's brother, will be Schlossberg's best man; Sen. Edward M. Kennedy will give the bride away, and Maria Shriver Schwarzenegger will be the matron of honor. But Kara Kennedy, the senator's daughter, and Tina Radziwill, the daughter of Onassis's sister, Lee Radziwill, both reported to be bridesmaids, will not be in the wedding party, Tuckerman said. She did not, however, deny reports that the list of bridesmaids includes Courtney Kennedy and Sydney Lawford McElvey, two of Caroline Kennedy's other cousins, as well as Susan Minot, a novelist and a Concord Academy schoolmate of the bride.

The artists Larry Rivers and Andy Warhol have been rumored to be groomsmen.

"That's all wrong," Tuckerman said.

At the reception guests will sit on garden chairs painted cream and covered with white linen. The tables will be covered with beige, blue or yellow cloths printed with white daisies. The tableware will continue that floral theme.

George Plimpton, the author and a Kennedy family friend, has designed fireworks for the reception, each display "individualized for various members of the family, reflecting some aspects of their nature," he said. The one for Rose Kennedy, for example, will be a huge rose chrysanthemum.

The invitation list is the last area about which, Tuckerman said, a certain amount of fiction had been generated.

"My big decision," Mrs. Sorensen added, "is, should I wear a hat?"

DEAR ABBY

Testing for drugs draws praise, pans

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I totally agree with your objections to mandatory drug testing for everyone. I am in the military, and we take urinalysis tests at least once a month. Since I have never used drugs and I never plan to, I was not afraid of these tests. That is until recently.

Abby, I am one of the unlucky 10 percent who have never used drugs but came up positive on the test for the use of marijuana, and you would not believe what I have been going through. I had planned to make the military my career, but my chances are ruined. I have lost the respect of my seniors in command and lost some of my so-called friends. My family and fiancee have been harassed. And I have been branded a liar.

The military is very strict on drugs, and they should be. However, when innocent people are found "guilty" of something they never dreamed of doing, there is something wrong with the system.

I came up positive in March. It's now July, and I am still fighting the charge. I was told it would be resolved in six months. Meanwhile, I am up for special courts-martial, and if convicted I will have a federal record and go to jail! They can take my rank, my pay and I will be discharged under less than honorable conditions.

I was always proud to be a Marine, but how can I be proud when I am terrified of losing everything I have worked for? — HEARTSICK IN HAWAII

DEAR HEARTSICK: I, too, am heartsick. However, in the interest of fairness, I present an opposing view:

DEAR ABBY: Your recent column on urine testing for drugs in the workplace repeats a common and dangerous myth: the unreliability of urine testing. While it is true that a single unconfirmed urine test can be wrong for many reasons, such errors are not common and they are, in any well-run program, irrelevant.

A few years ago, when some companies did use unconfirmed tests to discharge employees, there was a serious problem. Today virtually all companies using urine testing have improved their techniques to assure reliability. First, positive tests are confirmed using a different method of analysis. The possibility of some non-drug substance causing a "false" positive under such circumstances is virtually zero. In addition, companies routinely keep samples which test positive for subsequent analysis so that if an employee protests that his test results were in error, the company can retest the same sample. Thus, when urine tests for drugs are done correctly, there is no problem with reliability.

Another problem has sometimes been used by opponents of testing to undermine public support for urine testing at work: the fact that drug use off the job can show up as a positive test in urine samples taken on the job. The fact that a urine sample taken on the job contains a prohibited drug or its breakdown product shows conclusively that the employee brought the drug to work in his body. In other words, urinalysis does not test for "past use" — it tests for drugs present in the body at the time of the testing.

The vast majority of workers do not use illegal drugs. They have a stake in establishing a drug-free work environment. After working with hundreds of drug users who came to treatment when they were "caught" at work, I can say without exception that they came to appreciate those who said "no" to their drug use.

There is no alternative to urine testing to ensure that the workplace is drug-free. Testing deserves your understanding and support. — ROBERT L. DuPONT, M.D., PRESIDENT, CENTER FOR BEHAVIORAL MEDICINE, ROCKVILLE, MD.

Security tight for Kennedy nuptials

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

There, in the Sunday bulletin of Our Lady of Victory parish, are printed the wedding banns of Caroline B. Kennedy and Edwin A. Schlossberg. They are among 80 or so couples who marry each year in the small clapboard church on Cape Cod. And, like most, they have visited the pastor, the Rev. John A. Perry, to discuss their wedding plans.

Beyond these customary moves, similarities, between Saturday's arrangements and others are few.

When the 28-year-old daughter of President John F. Kennedy gets married, extraordinary security will be brough to bear and a strong effort made to maintain privacy amid and army of spectators and reporters expected to gether. It's the kind of caution that the bride's mother. Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, has exercised since the assassination of the president in 1963.

What's known about the wedding is that about 300 guests are due to attend, including many political notables such as Abramham Ribicoff, the former U.S. senator from Connecticut who also served as President Kennedy's first secretary of health, education and welfare. In addition to friends of the couple, a sizeable number of guests will be cousins, aunts and uncles, seeing that the bride's family has booked 17 limousines to transport them from their Hyannisport homes to the Catholic church, which is located about 3 miles away, in Centrerville.

Kennedy, who is Roman Catholic, and Schlossberg, who is Jewish, will be married in a Catholic ceremony. There will not be a nuptial mass.

The bride originally had wished to have her 3 p.m. wedding at St. Francis Xavier Church in Hyannis, where her cousin, CBS newswoman Maria Shriver, wed actor Arnold Schwarzenegger in April, Kennedy, who was Shriver's maid of honor, had to chnage her plans, however, when the pastor said that he time would conflict with 3 p.m. confessions.

At Our Lady of Vcitory, a parish founded the year Caroline Kennedy was born, the Rev. Donald MacMillan will conduct Saturday's service. MacMillian, a Jesuit priest who teaches at Bishop Connolly High School in Fall River, Mass., said that he came to know Kennedy and her family during the summers he has spent working at the parish. He married another of Caroline's cousins, Sydney Lawford, and Peter McKelvy at Our Lady of Victory in 1983.

"They're very likeable, very pleasant," MacMillan said of Kennedy and Schlossbert, "and they were very easy to work with in planning the ceremony."

Kennedy will be be given away by her uncle, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, (D-Mass.) She will be wearing a grown designed by Carolina Herrera, whose clothes are known for their absence of ruffles and frills, Fashion designer Willi Smith, for whom Schlossberg once created an art T-shirt, is outfitting the groom and nine ushers.

The wedding reception will be held under tents set up at the compound on Nantucket Sound that comprises three homes belonging to the extended Kennedy family. (A party there tonight will include fireworks put together by writer George Plimpton.)

Security will be tight. The Kennedys have always had to guard against the intruders and toursits who seek them out with the aid of the picture postcards and local maps that show where they live.

"We have a security detail, and it's being paid for by Mrs. Onassis," said Lt. William Arthur of the Barnstable Police Department. He would not elaborate.

Air space over the church will be off-limits within a 1-mile radius to an altitude of 2,000 feet, according to Frederick Banks, the air traffic manager at Barnstable Municipal Airport in Hayannis. At the reception, aircraft will be prohibited from entering within a 2-mile radius of the beachfront to an altitude of 2,000 feet.

Banks explained that federal aviation regulations allow for such restrictions when security concerns are raised "with good reason." All flights will be detoured from the affected areas, including those regularly scheduled Provincetown-Boston Airline flights in the Cape Cod, Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard area. Similar prohibitions were in effect when Shriver and Schwarzenegger were married.

Idle daydreams nothing to worry about

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Q. I'm disturbed because I've only been married a year and I have these daydreams about my ex-boyfriend and my husband's best friend.

A. You dream of your old boyfriend and your husband's friend having sex together? No, I'm sure you mean you have reveries of something between yourself and those guys. Look, if these are only daydreams, leave it alone. If they haunted you night and day and nagged at you, I would say to see a mental-health professional, but daydreams...

One way to get rid of a daydream is not treat it seriously but just read some novel about swashbucklers and lovers, see movies or TV dramas, and let new daydreams replace the ones that bother you. I really do urge you never to get silly sometime and tell your husband about them. Don't tell him about your brain's idle eroticism and don't pry into his.

Q. She's six years older than I, her son is six years younger and he resents me. We don't have sex at her place, but I guess he knows we do at mine. How can I make a friend of him?

A. Never patronize him, never try to be a father to him, always show that you respect his special place in her life and in her house. That is a lot of never and always, so I add this: If you slip, it won't be fatal to your relationship with him, but slip as seldom as possible. Avoid any squabble or confrontation with him.

You do serve an important role in his life: He has to realize that his mother is free to be interested in a man, and he is learning this as you play the man in her life. You might keep in mind, too, that a boy who resents any man in his mother's life at one stage will in a few months or years show indifference to her relationships with men as he takes more and more interest in his own life. Give it time.

Q. Oral foreplay was always part of our lovemaking, but he has come to prefer it exclusively and avoids intercourse with me. He won't understand my frustration. I'm on the pill; there's no danger of conception.

A. You have to have a calm talk with him about this, not just before or after a sexual encounter, and not in the bedroom, because that is a poor place for discussing a disagreement. Say that variations of foreplay and pleasuring are agreeable, but are not a substitute for intercourse.

Tell him that what he is insisting on disregards your needs and leaves you frustrated — and, also, his refusing to regard your needs as serious makes you resentful. If he has some performance anxiety about intercourse, you wish he would discuss it with you. And if oral sex with you is all he likes, there is a major problem between you.

Q. I am marrying a great guy, but I know this other guy I've always adored. Would one last fling be OK before the wedding?

A. No. Good question.

Two famed designers to outfit ceremony

NEW YORK (UPI) — He's a 38-year-old black designer known for irreverent, humorous casual clothes that cost $50 to $250. She's a fixture in New York high society known for exquisite eveningwear with $6,000 price tags.

Together, Willi Smith and Carolina Herrera, or at least their clothes, must be the oddest pairing at the much-ballyhooed Kennedy wedding Saturday.

Willi Smith was approached by Edwin Schlossberg, 41, the Jewish artist-designer and sometime Renaissance man who is marrying Caroline Kennedy, 28.

Smith met the groom in 1984 when the designer asked Schlossberg to join a roster of artists designing T-shirts for a special exhibition.

Smith designed the wedding outfits for Schlossberg, the ushers and, despite reports to the contrary, the bridesmaids.

Carolina Herrera, who with her husband, Reinaldo, belong to New York's inner social circle and will attend the wedding, was asked by her friend Jackie Onassis to come up with an outfit for her daughter.

Herrera, who also created the clothes for the two flower girls, has been toiling on Kennedy's outfit for two months.

Texas Memorial Museum shows off for state's birthday

AUSTIN (AP) — With more than 4½ million items to choose from, it was not easy for the Texas Memorial Museum to pick out a few to show off for its 50th birthday.

But the museum staff finally came up with a list that Lynn Denton, director of acquisitions, said gives at least "a representative idea of the diversity, the scientific importance and in some cases the beauty of our collections."

The sampling has been put together in a special exhibit, "Treasures of the Texas Memorial Museum," which runs through Oct. 3.

The treasures range from a 13-foot, 75-million-year-old fossil fish collected from Collin County to the tiniest North American butterfly, measuring only one-fourth of an inch across the wings.

Also on display at the museum, which is part of the University of Texas, is an upper arm bone from Quetzalcoatlus northropi, the giant Big Bend discovery that inspired the ill-fated effort by aviation pioneer Paul MacCready to build a working model of a prehistoric flying reptile.

MacReady's model crashed in Washington a few weeks ago, but visitors to the museum will get to see earlier photographs that prove the contraption really could fly.

The exhibit also includes:

Selections from the 5,000-item Swenson Coin and Medallion Collection, from Greek and Roman coins to Renaissance medals.

An elaborately woven shirt from early Incan times.

Exotic gems and minerals, including a large specimen of Ram's Horn gypsum.

Two hand-carved ivory pistols once owned by Peter the Great.

A 277-million-year-old specimen of "the largest known fossil cockroach," which is about the size of a small rat.

Fossilized starfish from the days when South Austin was covered by a shallow sea.

And a Texas Centennial half-dollar, minted in 1936, the year ground was broken for the museum, which was envisioned by Centennial planners as a major repository, exhibit space and research facility for Texas natural and social history.

The ground breaking was presided over by remote control from downtown Austin by President Franklin Roosevelt, who was making a whistle-stop tour in Texas.

Such auspicious beginnings were followed by three years of construction, during which planners of the museum "ran out of money several times," said William Reeder, director of the museum since 1978.

That slow start may have caused headaches in the 1930s, but one result is that Reeder and his staff will get to have a three-year-long birthday celebration culminating in 1989, the 50th anniversary of the museum's opening.

Reeder said the museum is also looking a lot further into the future, with the dream of eventually having a new building that would do justice to the museum's collections in biology, paleontology, geology, history and anthropology.

"We need a building maybe four to five times this size," Reeder said.

"At this moment it's pretty clear we're not going to get a new building from state funding sources, so we've begun having conversations with the private sector. There is nothing tangible to report now, but we are actively exploring the possibility of private funding" to help with a new building.

The dream is probably 10 years or more from being realized, even if the money — perhaps $30 million to $60 million — could be found fairly quickly, Reeder said.

One reason the museum is cramped is that the four-story building, designed by Paul Cret, originally was planned as a central unit from which two exhibition wings were supposed to extend. The central unit finally was finished through state and federal grants and large contributions from the American Legion, but funds for the wings never were raised.

"That was one of those things that just never jelled between the university and the state, and now we're locked in," said Denton. The UT art building sits on one side of the museum, and a new parking garage is on the other.

Much of the material at the museum never has been exhibited, but a larger exhibit space would be only part of the benefits of a new building, Reeder said.

"We have here not just amusing artifacts, but also a data base of information just like a library," he said. "These are research collections, and they need to be maintained in groups to be studied. Unfortunately the public tends to focus only on the exhibit aspects. They don't do that with a library, and they shouldn't with a museum either."

Part of the space problem has been eased by moving some operations to another campus building, and by using buildings at UT's Balcones Research Center in North Austin.

Clements resigns from firm accused of underbidding

DALLAS (AP) — Former Gov. Bill Clements recently resigned from a multinational corporation several Texas oilmen say is trying to drive Texas firms out of business by drastically undercutting prices, the Dallas Morning News reported today.

Clements resignation from the board of directors of Schlumberger Ltd., a multinational corporation and the world's largest oil well service company, was submitted in a letter mailed six weeks ago to the company's executive committee, Clements' campaign press secretary Reggie Bashur said.

"He resigned because of the campaign," Bashur said. "It's just too hectic a schedule and he was too busy. He couldn't make the board meetings and the rest of it."

Clements, a Republican, is campaigning to recapture the governorship he lost to Democratic Gov. Mark White in 1982.

A number of Texas oil and gas service companies hit hard by plunging oil and gas prices have complained that Schlumberger, with $4 billion in capital, is trying to drive them out of business by underbidding them on the few jobs available in the state.

Members of a major Texas-based oil service company that competes with Schlumberger have met with White campaign aides and with Attorney General Jim Mattox to air the complaint, the News reported.

"Their main concern was that Schlumberger had a huge slush fund and was using it to drive those (Texas) companies out of business," Dwayne Holman, manager of White's re-election campaign, said Thursday. He declined to name the service company that made the complaint.

Two members of White's staff have been assigned to check out the accusations, Holman said.

If true, the allegations "could be very damaging" to Clements' campaign, he said.

Bashur said Clements knew nothing of the complaints. He quoted Clements as saying that White is just looking for votes.

Clements joined the board of directors of Schlumberger shortly after the company acquired his firm, Sedco Inc., in a multimillion-dollar merger in December 1984. Clements founded Sedco, an oil well drilling firm, and ran it until his election as governor in 1978.

According to a proxy statement issued by Schlumberger last March, Clements also served on the company's six-member executive committee and owned 1.76 million shares of company stock, including 106,390 shares held by a trust that he controls, the News reported.

"They (Schlumberger) are clearly pricing products below cost," said Weston M. Binford Jr. of Austin, president of BPI Wireline. "The little guy is getting crushed."

Binford said he is concerned about Clements' involvement with Schlumberger.

"Yes, it bothers me," he said. "It makes it tougher and tougher to be a Republican."

Pentagon memo attacks Loeffler-backed amendment

WASHINGTON (AP) — An amendment to the Pentagon's military construction budget attached by a Texas congressman "will devastate" work on medical facilities around the world by forcing expenditures on a new hospital that the Defense Department doesn't want to build, an internal review has concluded.

The review, in the form of a three-page "impact" memo, concludes the Pentagon will have to delay at least 18 projects scheduled for construction starts in fiscal 1989 and possibly seven others because of an amendment authored by Rep. Tom Loeffler, R-Texas.

That amendment, attached to the Pentagon's military construction budget recently, directs the Pentagon to proceed with design and site preparation work for a 450-bed replacement hospital for the Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio.

Dr. William Mayer, the assistant defense secretary for health affairs, overrode the Army and canceled construction of a large replacement facility for Brooke on June 12, saying it was unnecessary because of a surplus of hospital beds in the area. Instead, Mayer authorized planning for a 150-bed facility.

According to Bill Marinelli, an aide to the House Appropriations Committee's military construction subcommittee, on which Loeffler sits, the Texas Republican succeeded in attaching his amendment to the spending bill on June 16 by a 5-to-4 vote.

The amendment directs the Pentagon to spend $14 million to complete design work for a 450-bed facility and another $10 million to begin site preparation.

Paramilitary group concerns Hispanic leaders

AUSTIN (AP) — Two Mexican-American leaders have asked state officials to use their power to discourage a paramilitary organization from patrolling the Mexico-Texas border.

J.R. Hagan, an officer of the Civilian Materiel Assistance organization, told the Houston Chronicle from Tucson, Ariz., that patrols would be sent into deserted areas of the border between El Paso, Marfa, Del Rio, Laredo and McAllen.

Earlier this month, the group sent an armed patrol along the Arizona-Mexico border and held 16 illegal aliens until federal authorities arrived.

Sen. Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso, wrote Gov. Mark White on Thursday that he was concerned by reports of CMA plans to patrol the border.

"Whatever its motives, this organization's plans have a potential to provoke needless violence," Santiesteban said. "The patrols may or may not be of a vigilante nature, but they are vigilante in appearance, and could only be harmful to our relationship with Mexico."

Linda Ellerbee to join ABC News

Linda Ellerbee

NEW YORK (AP) — Linda Ellerbee, the popular but non-conformist TV journalist and anchor, has turned down CBS' more lucrative offer and is set to join ABC News next week, a source close to the negotiations said.

Ellerbee's main assignment will be to write and anchor "Our World," ABC's new historical news program that will compete with NBC's "The Cosby Show" on Thursday nights beginning this fall, the source said Monday. She also will do her former "Today" feature, "T.G.I.F.," on ABC's "Good Morning America" on Fridays.

In addition, she will be host of an hour news program two nights a week following "Nightline." That show is targeted to begin this winter, said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

ABC is expected to announce that Ellerbee would come to ABC the middle of next week. The agreement can't be announced until then, according to an industry source, because NBC has the right to match any offers for a 30-day period. That period expires Tuesday.

Calls to Ellerbee's home were not returned Monday. Sources at CBS said CBS executives had not been able to reach Ellerbee.

But CBS insiders said they believed Ellerbee was set to turn down CBS' offer, which was for her to anchor a revamped "CBS Morning News" program that would be called "Across America." A source at ABC familiar with both offers said the CBS deal was worth significantly more than ABC is offering.

Ellerbee, 41, who left NBC News when her contract expired last month, was reportedly getting $225,000 a year.

As anchor of the new CBS program she would have been based in New York, but would have had to travel to different regions occasionally. Her co-anchor would have been CBS' veteran radio correspondent, Charles Osgood, sources said.

Since CBS started getting indications that Ellerbee would reject its offer, CBS has been considering Jane Wallace, correspondent on CBS' news magazine, "West 57th," as a strong candidate to work with Osgood.

Wallace was substitute anchor on the "Morning News" two years ago before Phyllis George was hired as regular co-anchor, and some CBS executives believed then that Wallace was the right choice for the job.

Ellerbee's friends at NBC News, where she anchored the critically acclaimed but canceled "NBC News Overnight," advised her not to go to CBS because the third-rated morning show's ratings would likely not improve for some time.

Slow economy curbing advertisers' appetites

By SKIP WOLLENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — A sluggish economy and low inflation are curbing the appetites that major advertisers normally bring to the traditional mid-summer sale of prime network commercial time, industry watchers say.

They say the availability of less costly alternatives to network television and increased use of quick-acting marketing tools such as promotions, price coupons and direct mail are also making advertisers more choosy.

The trade newspaper Advertising Age reported this week that ABC and CBS cut rates below last year's level on advance sales of prime commercial time in their fall schedules. It said such cuts were unprecedented.

Paul Isacsson, executive vice president at the advertising agency Young & Rubicam, said the situation shows that television time is a commodity.

"Supply and demand make it act, and the economic fortunes of some companies are forcing them to use less of it," he said.

Independent television stations, cable networks and program syndication by companies that put together makeshift combinations of television stations of their own choosing nationwide have diminished advertisers' dependence on the commercial networks.

Recent mergers of consumer products companies also have created ad giants which often carry more influence in negotiating ad rates, analysts said.

Edward Atorino, who follows the media for the investment firm Smith, Barney Harris Upham & Co. in New York, said the weak market has lasted longer than many expected. "The question now is will the short term become the long term?" he said.

Industry figures indicate that network television ad revenues fell last year for the first time since 1971 when the ban on cigarette advertising on television went into effect.

This year, the ABC and CBS networks each have either trimmed or announced plans to trim a total of 700 jobs. Last September, CBS cut 125 news jobs. Despite its network ratings victory last year, the NBC network reports it currently is reviewing its operations for ways to cut costs.

All three networks are nearly finished selling season-long packages of commercial time for the fall season.

'Deer man of Jester III' calls animals 'lifesavers'

AP Laserphoto

Convicted murderer Millard Moon raises deer at the Texas Department of Corrections Jester II Unit in Fort Bend County, near Richmond. He enjoys showing off his work to children of prison employees.

RICHMOND (AP) — Convicted murderer Millard Moon walks around the prison yard with a 5-day-old deer tucked under each arm, a baby bottle showing from the pocket of his white prisoners' pants.

Since he first came to the Texas Department of Corrections Jester III Unit four years ago, he's helped raise and keep 11 wild deer.

"You've heard of the birdman of Alcatraz? Well, he's the deer man of Jester III," says Ken Dodson, an alcoholism and drug counselor at the Fort Bend County TDC unit.

The birdman was murderer Robert Stroud, who at one point during his 54 years in the California prison was given an extra cell for his pet birds. He died in prison in 1963 at the age of 73.

The newest addition was born to a deer named Grandma. It joins Toby, Venus, Bugger, Mary, Cookie, Buckoat, Skeeter and Grandpa.

"I get along with them really better than people," Moon says. "It does something for a person in prison to have something like this. These deer — they're my lifesaver."

The Lampasas native was convicted in 1980 for a slaying he now says he regrets.

"There's a lot of things you can make up for, but murder — you've taken something you can't give back," Moon says.

By helping female deer deliver babies and by nursing them to adulthood, Moon says he can protect life instead of take it away.

Jester III employees bring him plant cuttings, and he is responsible for several bright patches of flowers and greenery in an otherwise austere setting.

The deer are allowed to roam throughout the compound. Prisoners help feed them shell corn, horse and mule feed, twigs and acorns. One prisoner says the deer play baseball with them in the prison yard.

"I really love my deer like they were my children," says Moon, who has an ex-wife and nine children. "These deer are my family now."

Moore wrote a 12-page story about the deer who live in prison, but he has been unsuccessful in getting it published.

"I guess it's because I'm a convict," he says. "It's a real good story, particularly for children."

More than 700 inmates live at the Jester III unit.

Four men held on charges of smuggling aliens

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Two men from Houston and two from Laredo were held on charges they helped smuggle 140 undocumented aliens crammed into an 18-wheel tractor-trailer, authorities said.

The shipment from Laredo was part of a smuggling operation masterminded by a Mexican woman who is growing wealthy by organizing at least one human cargo shipment a week, an Immigration and Naturalization Service official said.

"It was one of the largest (loads) we've ever apprehended," said Gary Renick, assistant district director of investigations for INS.

The arrests came about 8 a.m. Thursday at a San Antonio truck stop after the aliens allegedly were unloaded near the Medina River. Immigration officials were searching for a fifth man Thursday night, and another man was arrested in Houston in connection with the operation.

Two other sizable alien transporting operations have been broken by authorities in the San Antonio area in recent weeks.

June 6, a rental truck containing 67 aliens was stopped near Seguin and a suspect arrested. July 9, two aliens died after being locked in a railroad car with 23 others who were being smuggled from Laredo. The car was stopped and opened near Cotulla, but no one has been arrested in the case.

Renick identified those charged with conspiracy to transport illegal aliens as John Frank Robinson, 40, and Willie Lee Woods, 50, both of Houston, and Francisco Rocha Jr., 36, and Raul Chapa-Tavares, 30, both of Laredo.

U.S. Magistrate Dan Naranjo set bonds of $20,000 each for Robinson, Woods and Chapa-Tavares. Rocha's bond was set at $10,000. They were taken to the Federal Correctional Institution at Bastrop and a hearing was set for July 25. The charges could bring up to 10 years in prison and $4,000 in fines.

Thursday's load was made up of Mexicans, Ecuadorians, Guatamalans and Sri Lankans, Renick said. Renick said Mexicans pay $450 to $500 each to be transported from Laredo to Houston.

He said agents in Laredo and San Antonio placed the suspects under surveillance at 6:30 a.m. Thursday when they left Laredo. The surveillance continued after the aliens were unloaded from the truck and divided into vans.

"They crossed the river at Laredo and loaded the truck on this side. They unloaded the truck down by the Medina River in the woods near Von Ormy so they wouldn't be seen," he said. "Then the driver of the truck drove up to the truck stop, dumped the trailer and drove away."

He said the aliens were loaded into vans and driven to various point in Houston.

Buffalo still roam free near Carlsbad

CARLSBAD, N.M. (AP) — Reports of buffalo roaming the ranges of southeastern New Mexico and West Texas weren't just part of Carlsbad's annual Western Week.

Officials say there really are two of the animals of Western lore lose southwest of Carlsbad, although Eddy County Sheriff John Lewis refuses to give the exact location to prevent sightseers from descending on the ranch on which they roam.

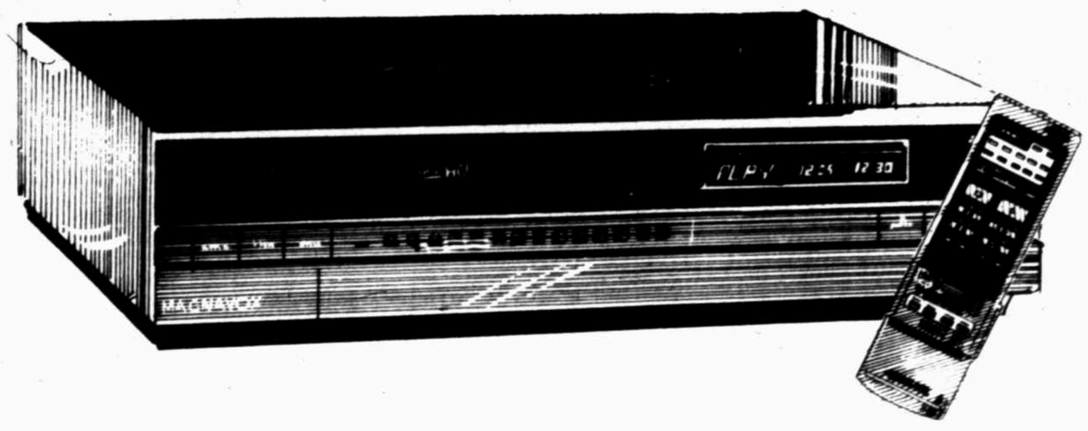

Lewis, who reported the buffalo sighting last week, was accused of making up the story because of Western Week, when spoofs abound as part of the local promotions.

A Carlsbad newspaper then reported the sightings, but still few people took it seriously.

However, Bill Hargis, inspector for the Texas and Southwest Cattle Raisers Association in Van Horn, Texas, said some buffalo have been free in the region for about two years.

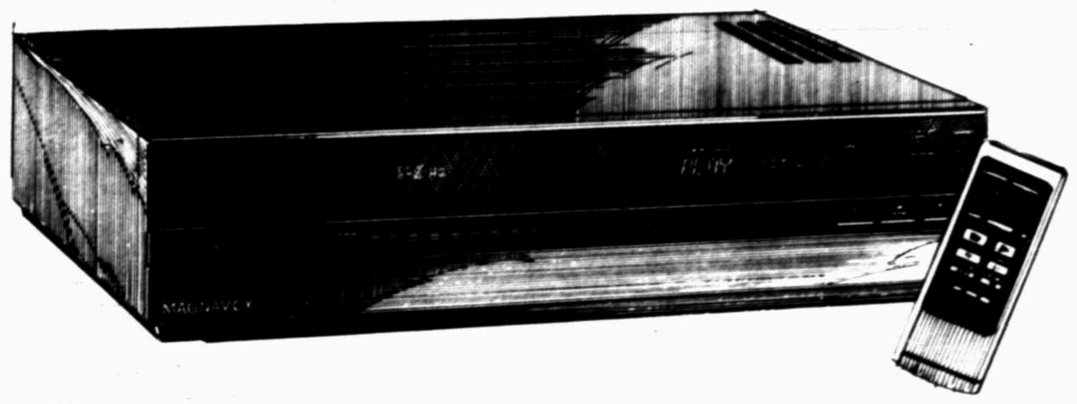

He said that a few years ago, an unidentified El Paso, Texas, resident decided against keeping two buffalo cows and a bull in the upper valley. Van Horn rancher Richard Koehn agreed to put the animals on his ranch, from which they disappeared about two years ago.

Linda Ellerbee to join ABC News

Linda Ellerbee

NEW YORK (AP) — Linda Ellerbee, the popular but non-conformist TV journalist and anchor, has turned down CBS' more lucrative offer and is set to join ABC News next week, a source close to the negotiations said.

Ellerbee's main assignment will be to write and anchor "Our World," ABC's new historical news program that will compete with NBC's "The Cosby Show" on Thursday nights beginning this fall, the source said Monday. She also will do her former "Today" feature, "T.G.I.F.," on ABC's "Good Morning America" on Fridays.

In addition, she will be host of an hour news program two nights a week following "Nightline." That show is targeted to begin this winter, said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

ABC is expected to announce that Ellerbee would come to ABC the middle of next week. The agreement can't be announced until then, according to an industry source, because NBC has the right to match any offers for a 30-day period. That period expires Tuesday.

Calls to Ellerbee's home were not returned Monday. Sources at CBS said CBS executives had not been able to reach Ellerbee.

But CBS insiders said they believed Ellerbee was set to turn down CBS' offer, which was for her to anchor a revamped "CBS Morning News" program that would be called "Across America." A source at ABC familiar with both offers said the CBS deal was worth significantly more than ABC is offering.

Ellerbee, 41, who left NBC News when her contract expired last month, was reportedly getting $225,000 a year.

As anchor of the new CBS program she would have been based in New York, but would have had to travel to different regions occasionally. Her co-anchor would have been CBS' veteran radio correspondent, Charles Osgood, sources said.

Since CBS started getting indications that Ellerbee would reject its offer, CBS has been considering Jane Wallace, correspondent on CBS' news magazine, "West 57th," as a strong candidate to work with Osgood.

Wallace was substitute anchor on the "Morning News" two years ago before Phyllis George was hired as regular co-anchor, and some CBS executives believed then that Wallace was the right choice for the job.

Ellerbee's friends at NBC News, where she anchored the critically acclaimed but canceled "NBC News Overnight," advised her not to go to CBS because the third-rated morning show's ratings would likely not improve for some time.

Slow economy curbing advertisers' appetites

By SKIP WOLLENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — A sluggish economy and low inflation are curbing the appetites that major advertisers normally bring to the traditional mid-summer sale of prime network commercial time, industry watchers say.

They say the availability of less costly alternatives to network television and increased use of quick-acting marketing tools such as promotions, price coupons and direct mail are also making advertisers more choosy.

The trade newspaper Advertising Age reported this week that ABC and CBS cut rates below last year's level on advance sales of prime commercial time in their fall schedules. It said such cuts were unprecedented.

Paul Isacsson, executive vice president at the advertising agency Young & Rubicam, said the situation shows that television time is a commodity.

"Supply and demand make it act, and the economic fortunes of some companies are forcing them to use less of it," he said.

Independent television stations, cable networks and program syndication by companies that put together makeshift combinations of television stations of their own choosing nationwide have diminished advertisers' dependence on the commercial networks.

Recent mergers of consumer products companies also have created ad giants which often carry more influence in negotiating ad rates, analysts said.

Edward Atorino, who follows the media for the investment firm Smith, Barney Harris Upham & Co. in New York, said the weak market has lasted longer than many expected. "The question now is will the short term become the long term?" he said.

Industry figures indicate that network television ad revenues fell last year for the first time since 1971 when the ban on cigarette advertising on television went into effect.

This year, the ABC and CBS networks each have either trimmed or announced plans to trim a total of 700 jobs. Last September, CBS cut 125 news jobs. Despite its network ratings victory last year, the NBC network reports it currently is reviewing its operations for ways to cut costs.

All three networks are nearly finished selling season-long packages of commercial time for the fall season.

'Deer man of Jester III' calls animals 'lifesavers'

Four men held on charges of smuggling aliens

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Two men from Houston and two from Laredo were held on charges they helped smuggle 140 undocumented aliens crammed into an 18-wheel tractor-trailer, authorities said.

The shipment from Laredo was part of a smuggling operation masterminded by a Mexican woman who is growing wealthy by organizing at least one human cargo shipment a week, an Immigration and Naturalization Service official said.

"It was one of the largest (loads) we've ever apprehended," said Gary Renick, assistant district director of investigations for INS.

The arrests came about 8 a.m. Thursday at a San Antonio truck stop after the aliens allegedly were unloaded near the Medina River. Immigration officials were searching for a fifth man Thursday night, and another man was arrested in Houston in connection with the operation.

Two other sizable alien transporting operations have been broken by authorities in the San Antonio area in recent weeks.

June 6, a rental truck containing 67 aliens was stopped near Seguin and a suspect arrested. July 9, two aliens died after being locked in a railroad car with 23 others who were being smuggled from Laredo. The car was stopped and opened near Cotulla, but no one has been arrested in the case.

Renick identified those charged with conspiracy to transport illegal aliens as John Frank Robinson, 40, and Willie Lee Woods, 50, both of Houston, and Francisco Rocha Jr., 36, and Raul Chapa-Tavares, 30, both of Laredo.

U.S. Magistrate Dan Naranjo set bonds of $20,000 each for Robinson, Woods and Chapa-Tavares. Rocha's bond was set at $10,000. They were taken to the Federal Correctional Institution at Bastrop and a hearing was set for July 25. The charges could bring up to 10 years in prison and $4,000 in fines.

Thursday's load was made up of Mexicans, Ecuadorians, Guatamalans and Sri Lankans, Renick said. Renick said Mexicans pay $450 to $500 each to be transported from Laredo to Houston.

He said agents in Laredo and San Antonio placed the suspects under surveillance at 6:30 a.m. Thursday when they left Laredo. The surveillance continued after the aliens were unloaded from the truck and divided into vans.

"They crossed the river at Laredo and loaded the truck on this side. They unloaded the truck down by the Medina River in the woods near Von Ormy so they wouldn't be seen," he said. "Then the driver of the truck drove up to the truck stop, dumped the trailer and drove away."

He said the aliens were loaded into vans and driven to various point in Houston.

Buffalo still roam free near Carlsbad

CARLSBAD, N.M. (AP) — Reports of buffalo roaming the ranges of southeastern New Mexico and West Texas weren't just part of Carlsbad's annual Western Week.

Officials say there really are two of the animals of Western lore lose southwest of Carlsbad, although Eddy County Sheriff John Lewis refuses to give the exact location to prevent sightseers from descending on the ranch on which they roam.

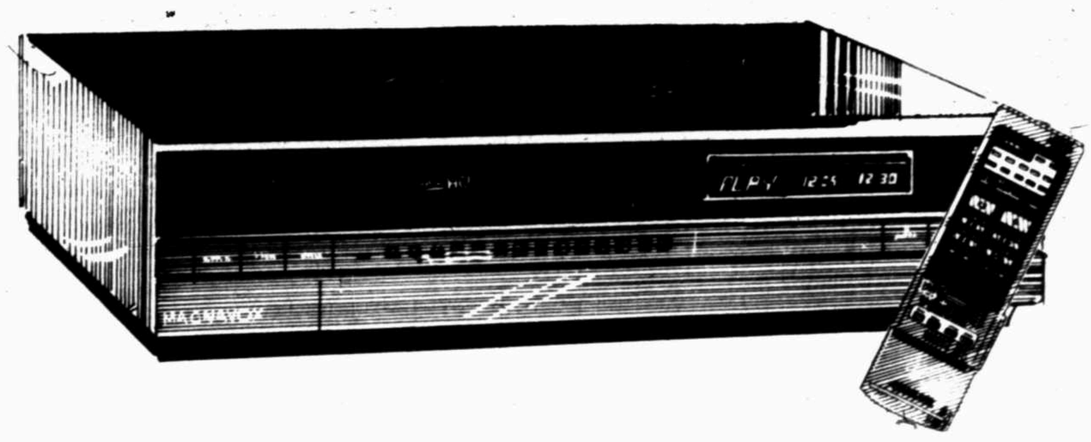

Lewis, who reported the buffalo sighting last week, was accused of making up the story because of Western Week, when spoofs abound as part of the local promotions.

A Carlsbad newspaper then reported the sightings, but still few people took it seriously.

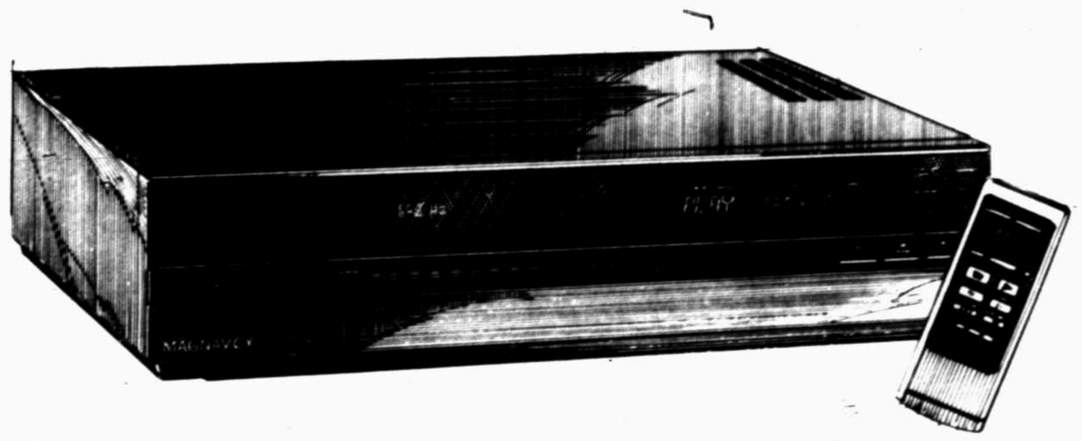

However, Bill Hargis, inspector for the Texas and Southwest Cattle Raisers Association in Van Horn, Texas, said some buffalo have been free in the region for about two years.

He said that a few years ago, an unidentified El Paso, Texas, resident decided against keeping two buffalo cows and a bull in the upper valley. Van Horn rancher Richard Koehn agreed to put the animals on his ranch, from which they disappeared about two years ago.

Radar next step in Bolivia's campaign to stall drug traffic

TRINIDAD, Bolivia (AP) — Members of a joint U.S.-Bolivian campaign to smash this nation's giant cocaine industry are installing radar to intercept planes used to ferry coca paste out of the jungle to secret drug factories, sources said.

Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy on Thursday denied the radar units were being installed.

But the Bolivian sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said portable units to track aircraft were being set up in the tropical Beni flatlands, where U.S. soldiers and Bolivian narcotics police have set up camp.

At least 100 U.S. troops arrived in Trinidad on Thursday to begin preparing with Bolivian police for the operation, aimed at crushing Bolivia's $600 million-a-year cocaine industry that officials say is the major supplier of the drug to U.S. and European markets.

Officials have not revealed where the forces plan to strike, or when the raids will begin.

"If you want to strike at criminals, in no way can you publicize the operations," Barthelemy said at a news conference in La Paz, the capital.

The U.S. soldiers' arrival raised to 160 the total American military presence in Bolivia, in what Reagan administration officials say is the first time U.S. troops have been deployed abroad to combat the illicit drug trade.

The Americans arrived at the airport in Trinidad, a tropical city 360 miles northeast of La Paz, aboard three C-130 Hercules transport planes from Howard Air Force Base in Panama.

About 60 U.S. soldiers, some heavily armed and wearing helmets and knapsacks, boarded U.S. Army Black Hawk helicopters believed headed for the base camp 75 miles northwest of Trinidad at Josuani ranch, once the property of prosperous cocaine traffickers.

The Bolivian sources said coca paste, obtained from the leaves of the coca plant, is by ferried by plane from jungle labs to clandestine refining centers, mostly in Colombia, where it is reduced to marketable cocaine.

According to a recent U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration report, between 70 and 100 such planes flying from about 630 clandestine airstrips in the Beni are used in the ferrying operations.

It was not immediately clear how the transport planes would be intercepted after tracking by radar.

The U.S. helicopter pilots have been instructed to shoot if fired upon, but Barthelemy insisted that neither U.S. soldiers nor the weaponry of the Black Hawks would be used directly in the raids.

"It is not foreseen that the helicopters will act in combat. It is expected that they will be used only to transport personnel," he said.

President Victor Paz Estenssoro is providing U.S. servicemen with diplomatic immunity during the expected two-month stay in Bolivia.

Two Drug Enforcement Administration planes, one of them a DC-3, are flying reconnaissance missions for the operation, Barthelemy added. The DEA has 15 agents in Bolivia to coordinate the raids, U.S. officials say.

Opposition parties on Thursday charged that the operation violates Bolivia's constitution.

Oscar Eid, vice president of the Revolutionary Leftist Movement, said the government "failed to comply with a series of constitutional precepts" including a requirement that all foreign military activity be approved by congress.

His and other opposition parties called for a meeting of an emergency congressional commission, set up to act when the Parliament is in recess.

But Barthelemy said the government did not consider the operation a military action, but a police one that did not require authorization by legislators.

Barthelemy declined to predict how long the U.S. force would remain in the country, saying only that "they will stay until drug trafficking is erradicated" across Bolivia.

He said the operation would not be limited to the Beni but could include any area of the country where drug trafficking and processing is going on.

Traffic along Bolivia's lengthy, sparsely populated border with Brazil also was being strictly monitored for traffickers trying to flee capture.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Foreign labor leaders releases in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — U.S., British and West German labor leaders, in a show of solidarity with South Africa's black unions, arrived today to seek the release of hundreds of union officials reported detained under the nationwide emergency.

Lane Kirkland, president of the American labor confederation AFL-CIO, said the delegation from the Brussels, Belgium-based International Confederation of Free Trade Unions also would try to visit some of the union leaders in prison.

"I trust that we can certainly make it clear to our brothers and sisters in the trade union groups we are seeing that we stand solidly with them in their efforts to secure their trade union rights," Kirkland said at an airport news conference.

He added the delegation would "do what we can to urge upon all who will listen ... our concern and our depth of outrage at the imprisonment of trade unionists for carrying out their trade union commitments and urge their release."

The 83 million-member international labor group has called for economic sanctions against South Africa. Today's visit was the second by a delegation from the confederation in less than a year.

Mandela turns 68 today

Mandela

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Black anti-apartheid leader Nelson Mandela, a focus of foreign pressure on the South African government, turned 68 today, spending his 24th straight birthday in prison.

"He is the symbol of resistance, but he's not just a symbol," said Joe Slovo, a member of the executive committee of the African National Congress, the main guerrilla group fighting South Africa's government that Mandela helped found.

"He is in substance the ... head of the resistance movement in South Africa, despite the fact that he is in jail," said Slovo, who has known Mandela for 40 years, since law school.

Mandela's wife Winnie, also a prominent anti-apartheid activist, did not return telephone calls and could not be reached for comment. Her friends said she would fast on her husband's birthday, as she does each year.

Reporter held in China

Burns

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Burns, the New York Times correspondent in Peking, was detained by Chinese authorities Thursday for questioning about travel to a region considered off-limits to foreigners, the State Department said.

The newspaper asked the U.S. government to intercede. "We are taking this case very seriously," said Anita Stockman, a department press officer.

Burns was detained at the Peking airport for visiting Shanxe province in north-central China, she said. "We have registered our concern with Chinese officials," Ms. Stockman said.

Burns has served two tours in China for The Times and worked there earlier for the Toronto Globe and Mail. He also has been based in Africa and the Soviet Union.

Juarez highway blocked

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Thousands of supporters of the main opposition party blocked a major highway outside this border city for two hours in another peaceful protest against alleged state election fraud.

Today, the fourth day of protest by the conservative National Action Party, or PAN, drivers were to stop their cars at 2 p.m. MDT, pull their hoods open and honk their horns for about 10 minutes, as they have been doing daily since Tuesday.

Alleging ballot stuffing and the disappearance of ballot boxes, PAN asked the Mexican government on Wednesday to annul July 6 elections in the state of Chihuahua, which borders New Mexico and Texas.

The government Institutional Revolutionary Party, PRI, was declared the winner in Chihuahua races for governor, all 14 state legislative seats and 65 or 67 mayoral seats.

In Ciudad Chihuahua, the state capital, PAN supporters parked dozens of vehicles across the main highway to Mexico City Thursday. The hour-long protest created an enormous traffic jam but no violence, said Fernando Ramirez, commander of the Chihuahua State Transit Police.

Captive's sister in Cyprus

LARNACA, Cyprus (AP) — Peggy Say, the sister of kidnapped journalist Terry Anderson, says she is carrying letters for her brother and four other Americans abducted in Lebanon that she hopes she will be able to have delivered from Cyprus.

"This is the closest I've gotten to Terry since I last saw him when he was home on vacation a few weeks before he was kidnapped," Mrs. Say said Thursday after arriving on this eastern Mediterranean island 150 miles off Lebanon.

Anderson, 38, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, was kidnapped in Beirut on March 16, 1985.

Mrs. Say, 45, of Batavia, N.Y., said she hopes she can communicate with her brother through the Shiite Moslem extremist group Islamic Jihad, which has claimed to be holding Anderson and the other Americans.

Group in Guatemala

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Twenty-three church workers, including 19 Americans, arrived in Guatemala after being deported from neighboring El Salvador for entering a restricted military zone without permission.

The group, which also includes two Canadians and two Australians, traveled from San Salvador by bus Thursday and was accompanied by a military escort and a U.S. Embassy official.

They arrived in Guatemala City Thursday night and stayed at a downtown hotel.

Rare cranes born at zoo

PEKING (AP) — Two rare black-neck cranes were born this week at the Xining Zoo in western China, the official Xinhua News Agency reported today.

Xinhua said the two birds were only the second and third of the internationally protected species to be hatched in captivity. There are estimated to be about 600 black-neck cranes in the world.

The parents, caught in 1979 and 1980 near Qinghai Lake in Qinghai province, produced the world's first baby in captivity last summer, but the hatchling died eight days later.

Xinhua said the two birds born this week are doing fine and are able to eat food, drink water and swim under the care of their mother.

Austerity plan revealed

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — President Jaime Lusinchi announced a new set of austerity measures Thursday night designed to contain the damage of depressed oil prices on this OPEC nation's economy.

Faced with official estimates of revenue losses of up to $5 billion this year and next, the government held firm on the official currency exchange rate and eliminated an exchange rate subsidy offered firms with foreign debts.

About 8,000 Britons sip tea, watch royals at palace garden party

LONDON (AP) — About 8,000 people who held invitations to have tea with Queen Elizabeth II streamed past the gates and guards of Buckingham Palace for a gracefully organized but distant encounter with the monarch.

It went like clockwork Thursday. A small army of retainers directed limousines through the arches, kept crowds from straying through closed doors and made sure the queen would only chat with selected people while being on view to the rest of the guests.

Every summer, the queen holds three garden parties in the 45-acre park behind the palace. In all, she invites about 20,000 people of all ranks, giving them a chance to see and be seen.

The invitation recommended arriving at 3:15 p.m. Women were asked to wear day dresses and hats, men to wear morning suits or lounge suits — a boon to British hatmakers and renters of men's formal wear.

The diplomatic corps, following its own rules, sent representatives in Far Eastern sarongs and sandals or African or Arab robes.

Other guests wore police and armed forces uniforms, clerical gowns, Salvation Army uniforms and business suits. A few hatless women got by with ribbons in their hair.

Once the guests found their way through ornately gilded palace passages into the garden, they could drink tea in gold-rimmed china cups and nibble little sandwiches and desserts laid out under a marquee at least 100 yards long.

A marquee on the other side of the garden, labeled "Royal Tea Tent," was guarded by yeomen wearing ruffle-collared Elizabethan garb and carrying sharp-pointed halberds.

Guests collected in a semi-circle of chairs facing the marquee and waited for views of the royals, the powerful and the fashionable.

A school headmistress who found a place early said she had been to two previous garden parties and at first was too embarrassed to gawk — a very un-English activity.

"But at the second one I just watched and watched, and now it's no problem at all," she said with a giggle. She spoke on condition of anonymity.

Shortly after 4 p.m., one of the two bands struck up "God Save The Queen" as Elizabeth and Prince Philip came out of the palace, followed by Prince Charles and Princess Diana and the Duke and Duchess of Kent.

Not present were the stars of next week's royal wedding, Prince Andrew and Sarah Ferguson.

The crowd seemed to known instinctively to line up in a kind of chute to get the royals from the palace terrace to their exclusive marquee.

In fact, royal retainers explain, a number of the tall men in the crowd — palace aides — subtly set out a path for the queen.

Diana says she, Sara Ferguson backed out of stag party prank

LONDON (AP) — Princess Diana and her future sister-in-law donned wigs and fake police uniforms, intending to crash Prince Andrew's stag party, but changed their minds and instead sipped champagne at a nightclub, the princess said Thursday.

The 25-year-old princess told guests at a Buckingham Palace garden party about her night on the town with Sarah Ferguson, who will marry Prince Andrew next Wednesday.

"It was so hot in the wig and my feet were killing me — the shoes were two sizes too small," the British Broadcasting Corp. quoted Diana as telling one guest.

Diana, the 26-year-old Miss Ferguson and two other young women walked into Annabel's, a top West End nightclub, early Wednesday after shelving a plan to barge into Prince Andrew's party, news reports said.

Newspapers quoted regulars at Annabel's, including a society hostess and the treasurer of the governing Conservative Party, as saying the four sat in a corner giggling and sipping champagne.

All four wore black uniforms, with peaked policewomen's hats, rented from a theatrical costume company. Miss Ferguson wore a short brown wig and Diana wore glasses and a black wig.

Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, said the practical joke was set up by comedian Pamela Stephenson, whose boyfriend, Scottish comedian Billy Connolly, was a guest at Andrew's stag party early Wednesday morning.

Nicaraguan widow still fighting regime

By BRYNA BRENNAN
Associated Press Writer

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Violeta Chamorro's husband died defending freedom under a rightist dictatorship, and her La Prensa newspaper was closed by the leftist Sandinista regime that succeeded it.

But the 56-year-old widow says she's still willing to fight for "the ideals of democracy and freedom, not the communism, Marxism, that we have here."

When the Nicaraguan government closed La Prensa three weeks ago, it accused the nation's only opposition newspaper of having printed propaganda for the Reagan administration, which has supported the anti-Sandinista rebels for four years.

Yet each day since the June 26 closure, Mrs. Chamorro has gone to her office in the La Prensa building, located in an industrial section of the capital.

Instead of poring over proofs and worrying about government censors blue-penciling her newspaper, she now works on finding ways to publicize her views about the Sandinistas, whom she once supported.

"We come here to let the world know what has happened," she said in a recent interview. "We talk to the foreign press and hope the word will get out about this injustice."

La Prensa was closed one day after the U.S. House of Representatives approved $100 million in aid to the Contra rebels. The bill is pending approval in the Senate, and is believed assured of passage.

While the Sandinistas prepare to celebrate on Saturday the anniversary of the revolution that brought them to power seven years ago, Mrs. Chamorro said the event will be "a day of sadness."

"It marks the day a joke (was played) on the people. This triumph was by all the Nicaraguans, for all the Nicaraguans," she said of the revolution that ended 42 years of iron-fisted rule by the pro-American Somoza family.

Findings in French cave indicate 6,000-year-old cannibal culture

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — Some cave dwellers living in France 6,000 years ago apparently engaged in cannibalism, say anthropologists who claim to have some of the best evidence to date that this may have been practiced more commonly among early humans than many believe.

The findings, reported today in the journal Science, indicate some neolithic-period humans who farmed, domesticated animals and used stone tools and pots also butchered and ate fellow Homo sapiens.

The discovery in a cave in southeastern France adds to the growing debate among anthropologists over whether the much-discussed practice of people eating human flesh is fact or fiction.

Critics argue that while survival cannibalism — the eating of human flesh in emergencies or during hard times — clearly has occurred, there is no reliable evidence of routine or systematic eating of one's own kind among ancient or modern peoples.

In the latest report, scientists say they found human bones, dated from about 4000 B.C., at a site called Fontbregoua Cave. The bones from several individuals bear cut marks and breakpoints indicative of food preparation, they say, and show the same evidence of butchering as nearby animal bones.

Those who used the cave, and left seeds of domestic wheat and barley there, also discarded the purported human food bones in shallow pits, the same way they got rid of other food refuse found at the site, the researchers said.

"The analysis of these bones strongly suggests that humans were butchered, processed, and probably eaten in a manner that closely parallels the treatment of wild and domestic animals at Fontbregoua," the researchers concluded.

Paola Villa of the University of Colorado, Pat Shipman of Johns Hopkins University Medical School and colleagues from France and Italy said further studies are required to see if their findings represent isolated events or more widely accepted practices of the times.

The researchers said they have evidence people used stone tools to strip raw meat from the bones of both humans and animals, such as deer, wild boar and domesticated sheep. The treatment of the human bones obviously indicated it was not part of a funeral ritual, Villa said.

"The bones were broken to extract the marrow, as were the animal bones, and disposed of in a refuse pit," she said.

Shipman, who did electron microscope studies of bone samples from the site, said in an interview that the cut marks on the human bones were identical to those on the animal remains.

"You assume people butchered animals when they were freshly killed and the human bones looked just the same," she said.

A controversy over whether cannibalism ever was a routine practice with any people has been brewing for several years among anthropologists.

William Arens of the State University of New York at Stony Brook and Lyle Steadman of Arizona State University, among others, argue that accounts of cannibalism primarily are hearsay.

Arens said in a telephone interview Thursday that the work of Villa and her colleagues in France "appears to be a reasonable piece of research."

"Assuming that this is good evidence of cannibalism, I think it would be erroneous to conclude that cannibalism was a practice in the neolithic based on the findings at one site," Arens said.

"This may be emergency behavior or strange, antisocial behavior, but not necessarily common," he continued.

However, those who say cannibalism is a factual practice say there is ample evidence supporting their opinions.

Dr. D. Carleton Gajdusek of the National Institutes of Health, who won a Nobel Prize for studying a neurological disease called kuru in New Guinea, says he has plenty of evidence cannibalism is real in that country.

Gajdusek, who declined to be interviewed Thursday, earlier told Science that he has photographic evidence of people-eating in New Guinea and charged that critics had not done proper research.

Kuru, a debilitating infectious disease caused by a slow-acting virus, is spread by cannibalistic rituals among the Fore people of New Guinea, Gajdusek says, and is particularly prevalent among women, who are said to be the most cannibalistic.

Steadman, of Arizona State, told Science he spent two years in New Guinea and found no evidence of cannibalism. He said he often heard tales of the practice, but all evidence evaporated when he tried to check it out.

Arens says his investigations show no group ever says its members are cannibals.
