Soviet party names Brezhnev's successor

Kremlin leaders pay respects to late president

MOSCOW (AP) — Former KGB chief Yuri V. Andropov took over as head of the Soviet Communist Party today and then led the Kremlin hierarchy in paying respects to the late Leonid I. Brezhnev.

Brezhnev's widow wept silently near the open casket in a flag-draped building guarded by a mile-long line of troops and police. The first wave of an expected crowd of hundreds of thousands of Soviet citizens began entering after she and the Kremlin leaders left.

Andropov was unanimously elected to the most powerful job in the nation on the nomination of his chief rival, Konstantin U. Chernenko, who many expected to be named president.

Brezhnev

Brezhnev was Communist Party general secretary and president, and a division of the two offices by the new leadership could signal a period of collective rule. But the position of party chief has traditionally been the springboard to supreme rule in the Soviet Union.

Brezhnev's widow, Viktoria, 74, and the couple's daughter Galina, who is in her late 40s, sat about 20 feet from the casket for the ceremonial farewell in the House of Unions in central Moscow — a pastel green and white building draped with red Soviet flags bordered in black.

Andropov and other members of the ruling Politburo, in dark suits with red and black mourning bands on their left arms, stood in a line facing the casket, which rested on a bier of red and white flowers.

Brezhnev's many medals were displayed at the foot of the casket on a red cloth background, and an honor guard of four soldiers stood on either side, below Soviet national flags.

After staring silently at the casket for about one minute, the gaunt, white-haired Andropov walked over to Mrs. Brezhnev and expressed his condolences. She raised her black veil to receive kisses on both checks, and he then kissed Galina.

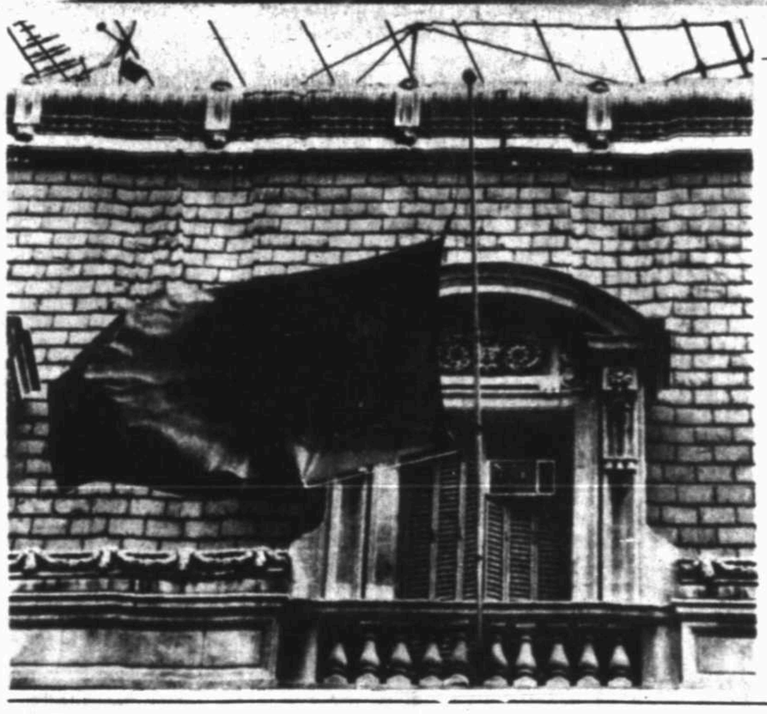

The other Politburo members followed Andropov in offering condolences and kisses to both women, who were dressed in black suits.

The 300 members of the Communist Party Central Committee also paid their respects shortly after meeting in an emergency session to elect the 68-year-old Andropov as the party chief.

Soviet citizens, some of them wiping tears, then began filing past the casket in the afternoon, walking to the hall between a mile-long line of police and soldiers.

Andropov was named to succeed Brezhnev as general secretary of the party in a swift assumption of the nation's most powerful post.

Death watch

Muscovites this morning lined up at Kirovskaya subway station to buy newspapers, which featured large portraits of late Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev. All Soviet publications, in tribute to the dead leader, printed front pages framed in a broad black border. Meanwhile, at the Soviet Embassy in Washington, the hammer and sickle of the Soviet flag flies at half staff.

Andropov vows to follow lead of predecessor

MOSCOW (AP) — Acting swiftly to fill a power vacuum, the Central Committee unanimously elected former KGB chief Yuri V. Andropov today to succeed the late Leonid I. Brezhnev as head of the Soviet Communist Party.

Andropov, who in 15 years as secret police chief crushed dissidents at home and collected intelligence from abroad, vowed to pursue Brezhnev's policies and build the power of the Soviet armed forces.

"We know full well that imperialists will never meet one's pleas for peace. It can be upheld only by resting upon the invincible might of the Soviet armed forces," Tass quoted him as telling the committee.

Andropov was nominated for the top job in the Soviet Union by his chief rival, Konstantin U. Chernenko, any there was speculation Chernenko would be named president in an attempt to demonstrate unity.

Andropov

Andropov, the Soviet ambassador to Hungary during the 1956 uprising, did much of the talking for the Kremlin leadership, which finally sent in tanks to crush the workers' rebellion.

Andropov, named Thursday to head the committee arranging Brezhnev's funeral, later viewed Brezhnev's body, on display in the House of Unions in downtown Moscow.

The health of the 68-year-old Andropov, like that of Brezhnev, has been questioned but the nature of any possible illnesses is not known. When he returned from his summer vacation this year he looked drawn and pale.

The tall, gaunt Andropov wears wire-rimmed glasses and has receding white hair which he combs back.

Andropov's new title is general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. Although the job does not make him head of state, it is the most powerful position in the Soviet Union.

Andropov, in his address to the Central Committee after his election, assured members he would follow the "domestic and foreign policies that had been pursued under Leonid Brezhnev."

Tass said he pledged to "devote all his energy, knowledge and experience of life to the successful implementation of the program of building communism...and to ensuring continuity in solving the tasks of further enhancing the economic and defense might of the U.S.S.R."

Brezhnev, who died Wednesday after an 18-year rule, also held the largely ceremonial post of president.

No announcement of a new president was expected until Nov. 23, when the appointment can be ratified by the Supreme Soviet, the rubber-stamp national Parliament.

Andrews residents voice their concerns

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

ANDREWS — A standing-room-only crowd of Andrews residents packed the municipal administration building here for Thursday night's city council meeting to argue that where the city's combined police-ambulance service is concerned, what man has joined, the council should put asunder.

The meeting follows Tuesday's announcement by Andrews Mayor Steve Smith that a six-member citizen's panel — chosen by the city council and approved by Andrews county commissioners — has been charged with studying the ambulance issue and returning its recommendations to the governing bodies.

Glen Williamson, spokesman for Citizens for a Safe Andrews (CSA), a recently-formed group in favor of separate services, quickly apologized to Smith and the five-man city council for threatening to file a lawsuit against the city unless quick action was taken on the ambulance problem.

Williamson, a former Andrews district attorney, called the threatened litigation "a rash statement," but he said the citizenry is firm in its demand for separate and adequate police and ambulance service.

"What brings us here is not necessarily one single, emotional issue," said Williamson, "but a deep concern for our community.

"The citizens of Andrews deserve adequate fire, police and ambulance protection," he said. "I think it's a situation where it may cost more, but I think the people in this room are willing to pay the price."

When Singleton Funeral Home grounded its ambulance service in 1970, Andrews was left with a city-operated, combination police-ambulance service. Andrews County presently assumes 60 percent of the ambulance service expense, while the city bears the remaining cost.

CSA maintains that police and ambulance service suffer because police officers are required to assume both duties.

They cite several instances when officers were called away from a crime scene — in some cases leaving an assailant and a smoking gun behind — in order to respond to a medical emergency. They suspect that criminals are growing wise to the combined service's limitations and are summoning police on fictitious, distant emergencies in order to perpetrate crimes inside the city.

CSA members also insist that police officers often are not adequately trained for their ambulance attendant duties.

Williamson offered the results of two recent, informal polls as evidence that citizen support for separate services is strong.

The first, a ten-minute telephone poll a few weeks ago by radio station KACT, found 60 respondents in favor of, and

Well fire reported

Fire department personnel from Midland and Garden City were at the scene of an oil well blowout and fire near Garden City late this morning.

According to a spokesperson for the Glasscock County Sheriff's Department, the well is five to six miles south of Garden City on State Highway 33. The spokesperson said trucks from Garden City and Midland fire departments were battling the blaze, as well as officers from the Glasscock County Sheriff's Department.

Additional details were not available at press time.

Reagan meets Egytian leader in preparation for Begin talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan met with Egyptian Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Ali today for a review of recent Middle East developments in advance of a Washington visit by Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Ali also was having lunch with Secretary of State George Shultz in what U.S. officials described as an "open-ended" discussion about the Mideast.

Ali flew here Thursday after a visit to Canada. Begin will arrive next week during a 10-day U.S. visit devoted largely to speeches before Jewish audiences.

Egypt has supported in priciple Reagan's Sept. 1 negotiating initiative for the Middle East and has joined the United States in condemning Israel's decision to move ahead with construction of new settlements in occupied territories.

Also on Reagan's mind is a deadlock in negotiations over withdrawal of foreign forces in Lebanon, which prompted him to send special envoy Philip Habib back to the Middle East.

The decision to dispatch Habib, announced Thursday, was a signal that the three-week-old negotiating mission headed by Ambassador Morris Draper had failed to make headway, even though Reagan told his news conference Thursday night that he thinks his effort to free Lebanon of Israeli, Palestinian and Syrian forces is working.

Motion seeking suspension of MMH application to be filed

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A motion was to be filed today with the Texas Health Facilities Commission requesting the suspension of an application from Midland Memorial Hospital to construct an addition, an attorney for another Midland hospital said.

Attorney Ace Pickens, representing Midland's Parkview Hospital for an application to construct a new 100-bed facility, said the motion would be filed because Midland Memorial officials did not comply with an order to produce long-range planning documents.

Lawyers for both hospitals argued the point late Thursday as the third day of hearings on the two proposed projects at the health commission ended.

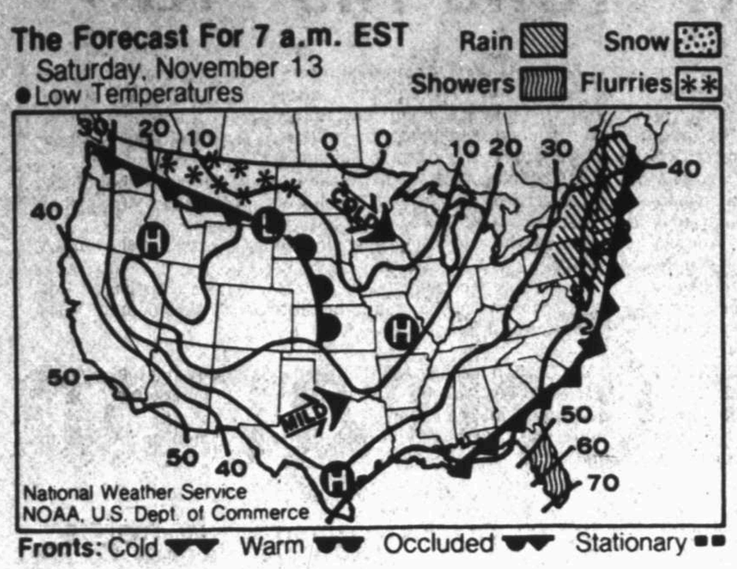

Midland Memorial seeks to construct a 77-bed expansion at its existing facility and Parkview seeks to build a new facility and convert the present operation into a psychiatric facility.

The health commission issued an order for discovery Monday asking MMH for documents relating to long-range planning written since Jan. 1, 1979. Attorneys for the hospital did not produce any documents by Thursday's 5 p.m. deadline, saying it is privileged information.

Ray Branson, president of MMH, testified Thursday he was advised by his counsel such documents are privileged.

Branson said the Midland County Hospital District has long-range objectives listed through 1987.

Cold front hits state

By The Associated Press

A cold front stretched across extreme Southeast Texas today bringing mostly fair skies and cooler temperatures to northern portions of the state.

Cloudy skies prevailed across the southern two-thirds of Texas.

Pre-dawn temperatures dipped into the 30s in the Panhandle and South Plains, while readings in the 50s and 60s were reported immediately behind the front. The mercury was in the 70s ahead of the front.

The forecast called for decreasing cloudiness and colder temperatures through tonight. Fair skies and cool temperatures were expected statewide Saturday.

Sign-carrying supporters greet Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin as he arrives at New York's Kennedy International Airport on Thursday. Begin, on a U.S. tour including visits in New York City and Los Angeles, will confer with President Reagan next week.

Special security needed for Begin's visit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin's weekend visit poses special security problems for police concerned about possible violence between pro-Palestinian and militant Jewish demonstrators.

The Committee to Oppose the Begin Visit, a coalition supporting Palestinians, has a permit to demonstrate Saturday night in a blocked-off street outside the Bonaventure Hotel, where Begin is to address 3,000 delegates at the Jewish Federation Council's annual meeting.

Coalition spokeswoman Phyllis Bennis predicted about 1,000 demonstrators would call for a complete Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon, an end to U.S. aid to Israel and "self-determination for the Palestinians."

But Jewish Defense Organization activist Mordechai Levy said he expects about 400 counter-demonstrators from his militant organization to support Begin and "confront" the pro-Palestinians.

"I'm not suggesting violence," Levy said. "But we won't back off. We're prepared to do what we have to do."

Los Angeles police were coordinating security with the Secret Service, spokesman Rod Bernson said. He declined to elaborate.

"When we have diverse groups with different viewpoints holding demonstrations, it increases the likelihood of an incident," Bernson said. "Suffice it to say that anytime we have a head of state, we do whatever is required to see that his visit is safe, uneventful and peaceful."

Begin's address to the council will be his first public appearance after the Jewish Sabbath. Council spokesman Frank Strauss described the organization as an umbrella group of about 200 Jewish groups in the United States and Canada.

The prime minister is to appear on the CBS program "Face the Nation" Sunday morning, attend an Israel Bonds dinner Sunday night and speak to students at Yeshiva University in the Simon Weisenthal Center for Holocaust Studies in West Los Angeles on Monday morning.

His visit comes less than a week after he testified before a special Israeli panel investigating the Sept. 15-17 massacre of Palestinians in Beirut refugee camps.

Arriving Thursday at Kennedy International Airport in New York, Begin deplored an explosion outside Israeli military headquarters at Tyre in southern Lebanon that killed at least 25 people.

"I can only say that such an outrage will not deter us from doing our duty to ensure peace and security to our people," he said.

Polish labor leader to be freed Saturday

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Martial law authorities have signed an order for release of Solidarity chief Lech Walesa and said he will leave the remote villa where he has been held for 11 months on Saturday, a reliable source reported today.

The unofficial source, who requested anonymity, said Walesa was expected to be brought to his home in Gdansk by Sunday for a reunion with his wife and seven children.

A government source said Walesa would leave the government resort of Arlamow, the woody, hilly area near the Polish-Soviet border, on Saturday and taken directly to Gdansk. The source, an aide to a top official, requested anonymity.

Reports that Walesa had already been set free swept the capital today, but the Justice Ministry spokesmen denied them, saying "it is not true that Walesa has already been freed."

"The order of internment has been lifted, but that does not mean it has begun to function in his place of internment," an Interior Ministry spokesman said.

Officials refused to say on the record precisely when Walesa would leave Arlamow or how he would be taken to Gdansk where his wife, Danuta, is awaiting him.

Technically, Walesa could be considered a free man from the moment Interior Minister Czeslaw Kiszczak ordered his release which was announced Wednesday by government spokesman Jerzy Urban.

In announcing that Walesa would be freed, Urban skirted a reporter's question about whether the 39-year-old labor leader would be forced into exile.

"Walesa has not expressed his intentions to leave the country, but I can add that his passport is at his disposal at any moment," Urban told foreign reporters at a hastily called news conference Thursday.

Word of Walesa's impending release was the latest in a string of events indicating martial law chief Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski is now confident of control in this nation of 36 million people.

The government and the influential Roman Catholic Church announced Monday that Pope John Paul II will pay a second visit to his homeland next June.

On Wednesday, Solidarity's second bid to stir nationwide protests over its Oct. 8 outlawing fizzled when only about 2,000 of the Poland's 13 million workers reportedly attempted to strike.

Urban did not link either development to the decision to free Walesa.

He said Walesa offered to cooperate with the military government but added that "no conditions were put to Walesa concerning his release."

The news spread quickly. An estimated 6,000 demonstrators in Warsaw and 2,000 in Krakow rallied to mark Poland's re-emergence as an independent state after World War I and chanted "Walesa is free!" and "Solidarity, Solidarity!"

Police broke up the crowd with tear gas.

Walesa's wife greeted news that her husband would soon join her and their seven children with a hint of skepticism.

Two men jailed on burglary charges

Two men were in jail this morning after police say they were caught in the act of burglarizing the Hargrove Automotive Supply Co. at 801 S. Johnston St. shortly before 10 p.m. Wednesday.

Officers Dale Seago and Robert Sandoval said they were responding to a burglary call and found one suspect, age 29, crouched next to a vehicle parked near the building.

The other suspect, 22, was coming out of the building and was captured after a brief chase.

Entry had been gained by prying a hole in the sheet metal wall of the building. Formal burgalry charges are expected to be filed against the men sometime today.

In theft and burglary complaints, Carter Monahan of 1900 W. Loop 250 South said a TV set and jewelry worth a total of $4,602 were taken after someone pried open a door of the residence sometime Thursday.

And an employee of The Shop for Pappagallo in Oak Ridge Square reported the disappearance of purses, watches and jewelry valued at a total of $2,575. The theft was discovered Monday.

RRC members say agency should remain on ballots

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Members of the Texas Railroad Commission agreed Thursday the state's oldest agency should continue to be elected by Texas voters, not appointed by the governor.

The three officials testified before the Sunset Commission, which will recommend to the 1983 Legislature whether the powerful oil and gas regulatory body is continued for another 10 years.

Waiting to appear before the commission were large groups of witnesses to speak for and against the Public Utilities Commission, which regulates most telephone, electric, water and sewer utilities in Texas.

According to the 1977 Sunset Act, the state agencies will be automatically terminated unless the 1983 Legislature votes to continue their operation.

Texas Railroad Commission Chairman Jim Nugent and Commissioners Buddy Temple and Mack Wallace were asked if they found any conflict of interest from the fact they receive campaign contributions from oil and gas companies which are regulated by the commission.

"I don't think this is any reason to move toward an appointive commission," said Temple. "I think the rest of the commission feels the same way. What is needed is election campaign reform.... This problem involves not just the Railroad Commission but the whole Legislature, the judges and other state officials.

"I personally would like to see campaign spending limits set in all races," Temple said.

Temple and Wallace said most cases handled by the Railroad Commission are not "public interest vs. private interest but more of private interest vs. private interest."

The commissioners also were asked what they thought about changing the name of the Texas Railroad Commission, created in 1891, to a more modern name, such as the Energy and Transportation Commission. All were against it.

Former U.S. Rep. Robert Krueger, D-Texas, told the Sunset Commission that a state law, first written in 1929 and still administered by the Railroad Commission, discourages competition. The regulation allows truck operators to sell or transfer a motor carrier certificate.

"Any amount paid by one would-be motor carrier to another in order to purchase certificates necessary to offer carrier service is a direct cost to Texas consumers, and it is essentially an unproductive and unnecessary expenditure," Krueger said.

Rick Lowry, representing the Lone Star Sierra Club and other soil and water conservation interests, appealed to the Sunset Commission to recommend that all water pollution control powers be taken from the Railroad Commission and given to the Water Resources Department.

"The Railroad Commission is basically in a conflicting position," he said. "Their position is to promote oil and gas resources, and water loses out."

Lowry said the Water Resources Department should take over regulation of water injection wells and disposal wells for fluids and solid wastes in oil fields.

"We are against the use of fresh water in secondary recovery efforts when salt water is available," he said.

only three against, separate services. A second poll by CSA revealed 401 respondents in favor of separating the services and only 35 against the move.

Smith said the city council has been analyzing the ambulance service for several months. He indicated that the county and city would be inclined to follow the committee's suggestions, but added that committee findings would not be binding.

"It's not new to us that we have a problem," said Smith. "I realize that right now all of you are in a hurry to get something done.

"We're going to have to let these people (the committee) allow that study to run its course," he said.

The six-member committee includes Gordon Cox, a rancher; Eugene Cummins, an accountant; Dr. Brian Gordon, a surgeon; Gertrude Kinney, an investor; Ron Ragsdale, an attorney; and Jo Ann Sealy, a legal secretary.

Smith said the committee will call witnesses and study the issue thoroughly before returning its findings and recommendations to a joint meeting of the county commissioners and city council.

While no deadline has been set for completion of the study, Smith said it's likely that it could be completed within three months. The committee's first meeting is Saturday morning.

According to rules established by the committee, meetings will be closed to the public. Appearances before the committee will be by invitation only. Any persons wishing to offer their views must submit, in typewritten form, their suggestions for remedying the ambulance problem.

Williamson suggested that the committee be able to call police department personnel as witnesses, and that police officers be allowed to testify "without fear of recrimination, if this is truly an in-depth study."

Police officers will be allowed to testify without fear for their jobs, Smith said. "That was never a question," he said.

"I would hope that they (committee members) get flooded with letters," Smith added. "I think that would be the ideal."

Councilman Denny Porter said the council chose as committee members only those individuals that had not formed an opinion on the ambulance issue. But some members of the audience questioned the impartiality of two committee members; Cummins, who works for an accounting company which audits city finances, and Ms. Sealy, secretary to City Attorney Robert E. Barber.

But Smith remained firm on the committee selections, saying he would adjourn the meeting before allowing continued questioning of the members' integrities.

"Who they were working for, I'll admit to you, was not foremost on our minds," he said. "I think we'll just have to put our trust in these people, who in my opinion are very trustworthy."

Following the meeting, Ellen Hoffman, a CSA organizer, said her group is determined not to let the ambulance issue be studied into silence."

"We'll wait till their study comes in," she said. "But we won't let it die."

Italian premier's resignation rejected

ROME (AP) — Premier Giovanni Spadolini, whose resignation was turned down by President Sandro Pertini, is expected to survive a parliamentary vote of confidence and save his coalition government at least for the time being.

Spadolini was to asked Parliament tonight to vote on the record on a confidence motion, the government said. The request was expected to save the troubled government for the time being, since no party is believed to want the onus of bringing down the government once again.

The confidence motion was not expected to be voted on before Saturday, officials said.

Spadolini, a Republican, offered to resign Thursday because of bickering between the dominant Christian Democrats and the Socialists in his five-party coalition. The 11-week-old government, Italy's 42nd since the end of World War II, also includes Republicans, Liberals and Social Democrats.

If Spadolini loses the vote, most observers believe Pertini, will name a Christian Democrat to form a new government. The Christian Democratic party is Italy's largest, with 38 percent of the vote.

The next regular elections are scheduled for 1984, but a government crisis may lead to early voting.

Barbara Gordon's 'Prince Valium' tells his side

By SUZANNE CHONEY
Copley News Service

She was hooked on Valium, and he was hooked on her.

Together they attempted to battle her addiction, and television writer-producer Barbara Gordon painfully described her traumatic tale in a best-selling book called, "I'm Dancing as Fast as I Can."

The book was made into a movie with the same name this year, drawing nationwide attention to the controversial tranquilizer, which is generally used to treat anxiety.

Anton Holden experienced some anxiety himself. Along with the nationwide attention to Valium, the book and movie focused on him, and not in a very flattering way.

HE WAS THE "tennis partner, best friend and lover" known as Eric, whom Ms. Gordon described in her book, in which she fictionalized the names of persons she wrote about.

The two lived together in New York City from 1973 till 1976. The troubles between them began in 1976, when Ms. Gordon attempted to kick her Valium habit, going through unnerving withdrawals and winding up in a mental hospital.

Ms. Gordon praised Holden initially for his loving help in trying to get her off the drug, ministering to her needs by staying home with her, cooking her "healthy" food and ensuring she got the proper vitamins.

They laughed together when he dubbed himself "Prince Valium." But, as Ms. Gordon told it, during her withdrawal Holden turned anything but princely. He became as much of a demon to her as the drug.

Toward the end of her eight-week withdrawal period, he prevented her from leaving the apartment to see her doctor, she said. He wouldn't let her see or talk to her friends. He was managing her life to the point that she "listened to him as if I were hypnotized," she said. The final blow came with blows, when Holden started beating her, Ms. Gordon said.

HOLDEN REFUTES THOSE assertions in his own recently published book, "Prince Valium," and claims that at one point Ms. Gordon became violent and attacked him with a pair of needle-nosed pliers.

In each of their books, Ms. Gordon and Holden marvel that they were not killed by the other.

A spokesman for Morton Janklow, Ms. Gordon's press agent in New York City, said Ms. Gordon could not be reached for comment and would probably not want to comment on Holden's book.

A writer and TV producer who is camouflaged in the book as an attorney, Holden met Ms. Gordon in 1972 when they were both working on a documentary for public television in New York.

Holden, 49, said in an interview he started working on his book long before Ms. Gordon's book was published. The book is, in part, an effort to clear his name, he said, as well as a "love story from a man's point of view."

It could have been subtitled, "My Woman Done Me Wrong."

WEARING DENIM jeans and a matching jacket, Holden looks like he belongs in the '60s. His hair is, by today's standards, a little long, and his conversation is dotted with "Oh, wow"s.

Some of the hurt and anger he experienced is still evident when he talks about Ms. Gordon. His face punctuates the conversation with winces.

He is a man, he said, who basically loves women. He was raised by women — his father left his mother when Holden was a tot — and he married and divorced three of them before he met Ms. Gordon.

When her book came out he felt betrayed and "briefly toyed" with the idea of suing her, but instead viewed his book as a more constructive recourse — he doesn't use the word revenge.

"I'm not looking for sympathy," Holden said. "She just left out a lot in her book. I felt it had a meanness of spirit, painting me in such a bad light to get sympathy. We had a good life together, and she didn't give me any benefit of the doubt."

HOLDEN CONTENDS Ms. Gordon's problems did not stem from Valium alone, and he says Ms. Gordon "scared a lot of people with that book, by making herself out to be a victim of a drug, thus exonerating herself from having anything to do with her own behavior."

"I think people should know no drug has ever addicted anybody," he said. "No drug company ever shoved a pill down anyone's throat."

If anything, Holden said, Ms. Gordon's "use of Valium forestalled the breakdown she experienced."

Hoffman-La Roche, which markets Valium, seems to hold similar beliefs. The company, which Ms. Gordon is suing, issued a statement earlier this year saying Ms. Gordon's experiences with the drug "have more to do with her personal situation and serious problems" than the movie about her acknowledged.

In the beginning of their relationship, Holden said, he saw Ms. Gordon taking a couple of Valium once a day or so, and he thought no more of it "than someone who has two drinks before dinner and can still function."

"WHEN I MET Barbara, I didn't know anything about any drugs at all. I met this woman, and something was clicking between us. She was taking this Valium a mile-a-minute, and telling me something about 'I'm taking it for anxiety.' I was skeptical, but it wasn't something she wanted to talk about, so we didn't talk about it," he said matter-of-factly.

He let the issue slide until Ms. Gordon asked for help to get off the Valium. Her withdrawal from Valium was nerve-racking for the two of them. Ms. Gordon couldn't sleep and started taking sleeping pills, Holden said.

He urged her to get medical help but she refused to go out of the apartment and said she didn't want to see any doctors, Holden said.

On the other hand, Ms. Gordon says in her book, Holden refused to let her leave the apartment. She described how he fought with her, binding her wrists when she tried to leave the apartment.

"You bet I tied her up," he said. "She came close to killing me. But she doesn't tell you that in the book."

Following that incident — whether you believe Ms. Gordon's version or Holden's version — Ms.Gordon went to a mental institution and started on her road to recovery, and the relationship was over.

SINCE THEN, MS. Gordan has been on the lecture circuit around the country, and Holden has moved to Los Angeles, where he is working on another book — about his grandmother, a "child concubine."

He remains single, has "terrific relationships" with women and wants to remarry eventually.

Kenyan government reportedly holds ex-vice president under house arrest

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NAIROBI, Kenya — The Kenyan government of President Daniel Arap Moi has placed former Vice President Oginda Odinga, 71, its most prominent critic, under house arrest, it was learned here Wednesday.

State Security Minister Justus Ole Tipis said in a letter handed to Odinga Tuesday that he was no longer allowed to leave his house, where he lives under police guard.

Odinga may be visited by his wives, children and grandchildren but only by one at a time. He is not allowed to have any other visitors.

In May Odinga was expelled from the ruling African national Union of Kenya after attacking Moi for his pro-Western "capitalist" policies.

In June Kenya was proclaimed a one-party state and one month later Odinga's passport was seized.

Odinga's son, Raila, was charged with treason and arrested after the abortive Aug. 1 military coup. Odinga himself was ordered not to leave the district in which he was living.

Institution cancels deer hunt

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Smithsonian Institution, supervisor of the National Zoo, has dropped plans for a controversial deer hunt at its animal research center in Front Royal, Va., after vocal opposition from animal welfare groups.

Phillip Hughes, the Smithsonian's undersecretary, said earlier this week that the institution will use an alternate plan to this month's hunt for white-tailed deer on the National Zoo's 3,100 acre center in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains.

The hunt, conducted during the regular Virginia licensed deer hunt season, was initiated in 1981 as the only method to curtail the rising deer population at the center, about 80 miles west of Washington.

Company reports increase

DALLAS (AP) — Record profits for Texas Oil and Gas Corp. were reached for the fiscal year ending Aug. 31, along with a 29 percent increase in net income over last year's record earnings, company officials said earlier this week.

The company reported net income of $247 million for the latest fiscal year, which officials said marks its 25th consecutive year of earnings gains.

Every operating division worked at an all-time high level in fiscal 1982, said chairman William Hutchison.

He said start-ups of two major new pipelines were a significant factor in the company's income picture. The company's main business is gathering, transporting and processing natural gas, plus oil and gas exploration.

Alabama women freed

TUSKEGEE, Ala. (AP) — Two black women convicted of vote fraud have been freed from jail, and a civil rights leader says their 11 months behind bars helped extend the Voting Rights Act.

Julia Wilder, 70, and Maggie Bozeman, 51, convicted of forging names on absentee ballots, appeared earlier this week at a party wearing corsages provided by their work-release supervisors after they were paroled.

Attending was Joseph Lowery, head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, who led a march on Washington to protest the sentences and call for extension of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

"Because you put them in prison, all of us are stronger today," he declared.

Visiting professor named

AUSTIN (AP) — Marquis Childs, winner of the first Pulitzer Prize for commentary in 1969, will be a visiting professor at the University of Texas next spring, teaching government and the press and investigative reporting.

Childs, a former Washington correspondent, holds degrees from the universities of Wisconsin and Iowa and has taught at Iowa, Johns Hopkins University and the universities of Michigan and Oregon.

His 17th book was published last summer.

Course teaches confidence

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Patricia Winter says if anyone had told her she would spend her first day of her banking job scaling 10-foot walls and rappelling down the side of a six-story building, she might have looked for some other kind of work.

But Ms. Winter, along with 13 other people, had nothing but praise for First Union National Bank's "confidence course" at the end of the day-long ordeal.

"I think this will build teamwork and self-confidence," said Ms. Winter, 21, of Raleigh. "I think this has taught me a lot about myself and others. It has shown me I can depend on myself, but I can also depend on other people if I need help."

First Union set up the volunteer course last year for trainees in the bank's six-month management program.

In the course, participants learn to fall backward from a height of six feet into the arms of their colleagues. They climb ropes, help each other scale a 10-foot wall and end the day rappelling off a six-story building.

Course director Steve Anderson says the course teaches the trainees to work together to solve problems and gives them confidence in their abilities.

Anderson, who participates in the course with the trainees, said he had been terrified when he had gone through the program for the first time last year.

"I was really afraid, more afraid than anybody else out there, I think," he said. "But everybody kept saying, 'You can do it,' and I did.

"It doesn't take strength or athletic ability," he added. "It just takes teamwork and a little time to figure out how to do things."

Much of the course is devoted to problem solving. For example, the eight women and six men in the program recently spent about 30 minutes trying to figure out how to get 14 people on a small metal platform after a course supervisor told them to pretend they were saving each other from a tidal wave. After several tumbles onto the ground, the group finally managed to balance on the platform for the required 10 seconds. The accomplishment brought on a round of cheers.

Anderson says the course helps the trainees learn to cope with problems and interact with other people.

"We have found that when we put members of the teams into branch offices together, they work better as a bank team," he said. "We have also found that the course participants give better customer service because they can work with people better."

Property valuation lowered

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The State Property Tax Board has lowered the valuation of property in two school districts in West Texas after hearing appeals last week.

In the Big Spring School District, the valuation of commercial and industrial property was reduced to $108,051,803, utilities were reduced to $21,249,196 and personal business property was reduced to $80,731,996. An appeal to lower the valuation of farm and ranch improvements was not granted.

The valuation of utilities was lowered to $7,561,073 in the Forsan School District, but a request to lower the values assigned to acreage and vehicles was not granted by the board.

Social security issue may become albatross for Democrats

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Social Security issue was one of the Democrats' most potent weapons in the 1982 elections. But if House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill and his cohorts don't play their cards right in the current squabble over how to reform the system, it could quickly become an albatross around their necks.

The blue-ribbon Greenspan commission that President Reagan created after shelving his own unpopular reform plan is meeting now to try to forge a consensus on how best to raise Social Security revenues or reduce benefits by up to $200 billion over the rest of this decade.

An Analysis

Even if the commission comes up with a plan that garners the support of most, if not all, of its 15 members, there is no guarantee that it will get through Congress intact.

There is no painless way to cure what ails Social Security. Somebody is going to get hurt.

Workers may be asked to bear the larger share of the pain in the form of higher payroll taxes. They swallowed that in 1977, the last time Congress tried to bail the program out of a crisis.

There may be some belt-tightening for the 25 million retired or disabled workers and their 11 million relatives or survivors who count on getting those green government checks on the third day of each month. But there is little chance they will be asked to absorb the entire shortfall.

If the liberal Democrats on the panel want to get the votes of the conservative Republicans and business leaders for higher taxes in any form, they probably will have to agree to slow the growth of benefits in the long run. That could be done by modifying the cost-of-living formula or, as President Reagan suggested last year, tinkering with the way benefits are figured for new retirees.

But former Social Security Commissioner Robert M. Ball, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland and other liberals on the panel will be reluctant to do that. They argue Social Security's current crisis has nothing to do with the problems awaiting it 40 years from now when the baby boom generation retires.

Social Security is over a barrel now because its $12 billion-a-month in benefits rise in lockstep with the Consumer Price Index, while its income goes up only as fast as workers' wages. When prices climbed 40 percent in recent years while wages rose only 30 percent, the system rapidly slid onto thin ice.

Although Medicare faces its own hard times in the next decade, the old age and disability funds should build up large surpluses from 1990 until 2020, then gradually run into debt again.

Ball thinks it is pointless to try to fine-tune the system for events 50 years from now, but to restore public confidence he favors putting a "relatively modest" payroll tax hike on the books for the year 2020. To get past the 1980s, Ball would raise the payroll tax by roughly 15 percent in 1984, but give workers a new, offsetting income tax credit.

That would just shift some of Social Security's red ink over into the gaping deficit column of the rest of the federal budget.

The Democrats cannot be blamed for being suspicious about Reagan's intentions toward Social Security. Despite his oft-renewed promise never to take a cent away from anybody "presently dependent" on Social Security, Reagan did try last year to take the minimum benefit away from 3 million people and to slash benefits for early retirees on barely seven months' notice.

But Ronald Reagan did not cause the problems Social Security is facing. And Reagan was still living in California when the public opinion polls started to show the most young and middle-aged adults don't believe Social Security will be there when they retire.

Police compile list of those 'most likely' to commit crimes

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Police here have taken the "most wanted" concept a step further with a list of eight people designated as most likely to break the law — based on their past illegal acts.

The eight Minneapolis residents will be watched closely for evidence they are committing crimes, said Deputy Chief Bernard Jablonski, the program's organizer.

The seven men and a 17-year-old "have selected themselves" by repeated convictions and criminal activity, and city attorneys have concluded that police can keep a special eye on them without violating privacy rights, Jablonski said.

"A tiny segment of the population commits an enormous number of crimes," Police Chief Anthony Bouza said earlier this week. "I want to incapacitate the criminal repeaters."

"It doesn't violate any constitutional rules that I am aware of," he said.

Photographs of the eight and other information about them have been distributed throughout the police department, and officers have been instructed to call a special number to report sightings of them.

But, according to Jablonski, police have been instructed not to harass those on the list.

Each member of the target group was assigned "points" for either convictions or charges that did not lead to conviction, he said. One man had 13 convictions since 1969.

To qualify for the target list, candidates had to meet at least one of the following criteria: two felony convictions, involvement in crime serious enough to indicate "a state of mind consistent with a major offender," or, if a juvenile, a conviction for murder, aggravated robbery, rape or aggravated assault.

The type of victim also plays a role. Points are added if the victim was a stranger, younger than 12 or older than 60. More points are added if the offense involved intentional injury or sexual contact.

Anyone who wants to know if he is on the list can call to find out, Jablonski said.

One of the eight has been arrested on a charge of third-degree murder, Jablonski said, and was convicted of robbery and burglary in that case. He also has been convicted of another burglary and of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle.

Another has been convicted twice of breaking and entering and assault and battery and was arrested for possessing an injection device for drugs.

'Love is blind' true for California couple

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

GLENDALE, Calif. — Ethel Erwin and Ralph Bartz faced each other and smiled as they sat before their wedding cake.

"Ralph can only see straight ahead and I only have peripheral vision, so we only have one set of good eyes between us," Erwin said. "But between us, we can see everything, and we both have something to make us happy."

Erwin, 71, and Bartz, 78, are legally blind. They cannot get around much without aid from sighted family members and friends. But their happiness and joy with one another was unmistakable Wednesday as they were wed at the Foothill Service Club for the Blind, a club for the blind and legally blind based in this Los Angeles suburb.

The two met about a year ago and "fell in love."

It was the first time in the 43-year history of the club that a wedding marked the organization's regular Wednesday meeting.

It was only natural that they should want to hold their nuptials with "our family, all the people we love and care about here," said Bartz, who was dressed in a brown suit. "I love everyone here; they've been so good to us."

Standing before the Rev. William Bowman and about 100 friends and club members, they smiled, embraced and kissed much as would newlyweds 50 years their junior. Some of those in the audience could not see what was happening, but others leaned over and described the proceedings.

Erwin, who wore a frilly pink blouse and a long black skirt, turned to the audience and said: "We love you all, and we feel very lucky to have our wedding here. We wouldn't be together without you."

She added, "You know, when we went to get our license, they gave us a Planned Parenthood pamphlet."

Club members, mostly elderly, meet regularly to make crafts and dishes, knit and talk with friends. Some lost their sight gradually, some suddenly. Several said the club offered them "salvation" from feeling self-pity and useless.

A person is legally blind if he cannot see farther than 20 feet with corrective lenses or if his peripheral vision is less than 20 degrees, according to the federal definition. A normally sighted person can usually see detail in objects at about 200 feet.

Erwin, a former secretary at an aerospace company, became legally blind in 1960. Bartz, a former maintenance man with the Compton, Calif., school district, lost most of his sight in 1978.

College costs vary widely

NEW YORK (AP) — Two newly published college cost guides list the Massachusetts Institute of Technology as the nation's most expensive university, while Cooper Union, which hasn't charged tuition in 123 years, is cheapest.

The just-published "Competitive Colleges" by Peterson's Guides of Princeton N.J., places M.I.T. on top with total student costs — including tuition and fees, books and supplies, and room and board — put at $12,250. A second guide published by The College Board, the "College Cost Book," says a year at M.I.T. is $13,500, when a student's miscellaneous personal costs are included.

M.I.T.'s director of student financial services, Jack Frailey, didn't dispute the accuracy of either estimate, nor did he find it surprising that his school was the nation's most high-priced. "It isn't the first time."

A year ago, small, highly competitive Bennington College in Vermont was listed as most expensive at $12,030.

Other schools on the most expensive list in "Competitive Colleges" are Bennington, $12,140; Harvard-Radcliffe, $12,100; St. John's College, in Annapolis, Md., $11,900; Barnard College, $11,842; Yale University, $11,790; Tufts University, $11,763; Bard College, $11,762; Sarah Lawrence College, $11,750, and University of Pennsylvania, $11,700.

By contrast, Cooper Union, a private college in New York City enrolling about 900 students, charges no tuition, just $300 in fees covering such things as student activities and publications. The school manages this with the help of a $43.9 million endowment started by its 19th century founder, New York businessman, Peter Cooper, who once said that "education should be as free as air and water."

Hip replacements would cost $1 billion

BOSTON (AP) — It would take 122,000 operations and cost $1 billion a year to perform hip replacements on everyone in the United States who needs one, according to a new study.

Doctors replace hips in treating joint degeneration, arthritis and fractures, mostly in the elderly. In 1980 they performed about 60,000 such operations in the United States. But doctors from the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., calculated that about twice as many replacements are needed.

"The potential bill for direct medical costs alone would probably exceed $1 billion if the potentially needed number of total hip-joint replacement were actually performed," they wrote in Thursday's edition of the New England Journal of Medicine.

"This is a staggering sum, but it must be balanced by the potential savings in health care and social costs," they said, including more mobility for the elderly and a reduced need for other social services for many shut-ins.

The study, directed by Dr. L. Joseph Melton III, reviewed the 381 total hip replacements performed on residents of Olmsted County, Minn., between 1969 and 1980.

Blast kills more than 40 at Israel's Lebanese headquarters

TYRE, Lebanon (AP) — Israel today confirmed at least 41 dead in the explosion that shattered its military headquarters here, and Israel Radio said at least 60 people were still missing in the rubble. Beirut newspapers said Israeli forces arrested 500 people in connection with the blast.

The military command in Tel Aviv said three survivors were pulled from the wreckage of the eight-story building nearly 24 hours after the Thursday explosion.

The confirmed death toll included 26 Israelis and 15 Arabs, the Israeli command said. More victims were feared buried beneath the rubble.

The search teams still combing the wreckage were joined today by investigators trying to determine whether the explosion was a tragic accident or the deadliest terrorist attack since the Lebanese invasion began.

All major Lebanese newspapers focused on the bombing theory in their front page accounts and reported massive Israeli roundups in the search for the alleged bombers. The politically independent daily An-Nahar said Syrian and Palestinian forces in eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley went on maximum alert in anticipation of an Israeli reprisal.

The Israeli Cabinet met in emergency session today to discuss the blast.

"We have just a lot of wild speculation," a spokesman for the Tel Aviv military command said early today. "We cannot know the cause until we remove all the rubble and find out what's down there."

Israeli officers at the scene indicated that exploding ammunition or cooking gas cylinders may have caused the blast. But the Israeli military command initially blamed a car packed with explosives, and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin seemed to discount the possibility of an accident.

Begin, speaking to reporters at New York's Kennedy International Airport on the first leg of a U.S. tour that includes a meeting with President Reagan, called the blast a "new outrage perpetrated by the enemies of mankind."

It "will not deter us from doing our duty to ensure peace and security to our people," he said.

Two obscure groups claimed responsibility for the 12:15 p.m. (7:15 a.m. EST) explosion Thursday.

In the first announcement of the blast, the Tel Aviv military command said it was a suicide mission by a driver who smashed a bomb-packed car into the building 50 miles south of Beirut.

Israeli military authorities at the scene later said no cause had been pinpointed and that ammunition or gas cylinders could have exploded accidentally.

Israel television also theorized that a small charge attached to one of the building's foundation pillars might have brought it down.

Report says confessed spy passed no nuclear secrets

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has given Parliament the intelligence report it has been demanding, saying confessed Soviet spy Geoffrey Prime "damaged" British and U.S. interests but passed on no nuclear secrets.

Mrs. Thatcher, appearing before the House of Commons on Thursday, also said Prime appears to have acted alone and was not in contact with other spies. She said he alerted Moscow to the West's knowledge of Soviet military arrangements but had no access to nuclear secrets or details on British spy networks.

The prime minister announced that the Security Commission, created in 1964 to look into security breaches, would launch an investigation to confirm these and other preliminary government conclusions.

She said the commission will also recommend a tightening of security where "necessary or desirable."

"It is not only British interests which have been damaged," she said of Prime's 15 years of treachery at the top-secret Cheltenham electronic espionage complex.

"The damage extends to the interests of the United States government, and, of course, the damage to our own and United States interests is damage to the Atlantic Alliance as a whole," Mrs. Thatcher said.

"There is, however, no evidence that Prime had access to any classified information about our own or allied military dispositions or intentions, or about nuclear weapons, or to any information which could have endangered the lives of agents," she added.

Prime, 44, a translator of intercepted Soviet bloc communications at the top-secret Government Communications Headquarters 90 miles northwest of London, pleaded guilty Wednesday to charges of spying from 1968 to 1982.

He was sentenced to 35 years in jail on seven espionage counts and another three years for molesting three young girls.

The Cheltenham center, which is said to operate in conjunction with the U.S. National Security Agency, collects, decodes and analyzes Soviet communications intercepted throughout the world.

"Over a period of 15 years to 1977, during which he was engaged in highly classified work, Prime had access to information of the utmost secrecy," Mrs. Thatcher said.

"By his own admission, from the beginning of 1968 to at least until 1980, he passed a lot of that information to the Russians," she said. "That information must have alerted them to the state of our knowledge of certain important aspects of Russian defense arrangements."

Soviet government seeks return of three who hijacked airliner to NATO base

MOSCOW (AP) — The government has asked Turkey to "hand over immediately" three Russians of German descent who hijacked a Soviet airliner to a NATO base in the Turkish town of Sinop, the official news agency Tass reported today.

The Turkish Foreign Ministry has said the three hijackers would be tried in Turkey.

They surrendered to Turkish authorities and asked for political asylum last Sunday after forcing the Aeroflot Antonov-24 turbo plane to land at the North Atlantic Treaty Organization base on the Black Sea.

The aircraft was on a domestic flight from Novorossisk to Odessa when it was hijacked. The pilot of the plane and two passengers were wounded in a scuffle with the hijackers, Turkish police said.

Marital relations not 'right, wrong'

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am happily married even though I find that my sexual relations with my husband are unsatisfactory. Would there be anything wrong if I tried stimulating myself while we were having sexual relations? — Mrs. F.J., New York City

Dear Mrs. J.: I don't believe it is helpful to discuss sexual activities between husband and wife in terms of "right" or "wrong." If there is mutual affection and respect, and neither party objects, I fail to see how any activity between husband and wife can be considered "wrong." Communicating your desires to your husband with positive "I want" messages would also be a step in the right direction. Finding out what pleases him would be another.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Some friends and I were having a bull session the other night and we got to talking about how long a person could live. If we found a cure for more diseases, wouldn't a person be able to live for many, many more years? — Frankie, Queens, N.Y.

Dear Frankie: Some researchers who have studied the subject maintain that the human lifespan is fixed, but that the elimination of disease would enable people to live those years in good health. Drs. James F. Fries and Lawrence M. Crapo, of the Stanford University Medical Center, conclude that medical science may be unable to prolong life past the average age of 85 years.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I suppose my wife should be writing this letter to you, but she is too upset to do so at the present time. She is scheduled to undergo a hysterectomy and she is afraid, as she puts it, that it will make her less a woman. I love my wife and I tell her that nothing will change the feeling between us, but I think she's too upset to hear what I'm saying. I would appreciate it if you would write something about how a hysterectomy can affect sexual relations between husband and wife. — Mr. K.G., Columbus, Ohio

Dear Mr. G.: Although I have repeatedly said that I will not make a prognosis from a distance for a patient I've never seen, I will say that the feeling that comes through in your letter is the best assurance that your wife will have a successful outcome from her surgery.

To answer your question more specifically, a hysterectomy should not change the sexual reactions or satisfaction experienced by a woman who had previously had a satisfactory sexual relationship. This does not mean that she will not experience some change. For example, a woman who has had her uterus removed obviously will not feel the uterine contractions that women commonly experience during sexual intercourse.

But with the kind of relationship you describe, I do not anticipate that such changes will constitute a serious problem between you and your wife.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Brain's growth chemical synthesized

By WARREN FROELICH
Copley News Service

A chemical in the brain that triggers growth has been isolated and synthesized by a team of scientists at the Salk Institute in La Jolla, Calif.

In what is being termed "a major advance in understanding how the brain controls growth," the Salk scientists believe synthetic versions of the chemical in question one day may play a role in combating certain kinds of dwarfism.

Plans for treatment trials with such patients — roughly 2,500 in the United States — already are under way at the University of California at San Diego and the University of California at San Francisco.

The chemical — called growth hormone releasing factor or GRF — also may be used to treat forms of diabetes, help aid in the healing of burns and wounds and even be used to increase growth of domestic animals for meat.

"There have been many laboratories throughout the world that have been trying to isolate this material," said Dr. Roger Guillemin, who headed the Salk team. "This has been a long search over many years."

Indeed, the findings being published in Science magazine — mark the culmination of 20 years of research for Guillemin, who shared a Nobel Prize in 1977 for his work in brain chemistry.

It also represents the discovery of yet another major hormone produced by a tiny region located deep in the brain called the hypothalamus. During the past several years, scientists in Guillemin's lab and elsewhere have found that these hormones — called releasing factors — exert an enormous influence over a neighbor, the pituitary gland.

In turn, the pituitary releases other chemicals that play a profound role in how the body controls stress and anxiety, burns energy and maintains sexual function.

One chemical released by the pituitary called growth hormone, triggered by GRF, is responsible to a large degree for skeletal growth and body weight, the formation of connective tissue and the development of internal organs. The hormone also plays an important role in glucose and fat metabolism.

The search for releasing factors, found in incredibly tiny amounts, often has involved painstaking examination through tons of sheep brains to extract enough material for analysis.

But GRF proved even more difficult to isolate.

"The amount of substance found in the hypothalamus was equivalent to one-one millionth of a few grains of salt," said Dr. Paul Brazeau, a member of Guillemin's research team, which also included Drs. Peter Bohlen, Frederick Esch, Nicholas Ling and William B. Wehrenberg.

To overcome this problem, Guillemin speculated that larger amounts of the chemical could be extracted from individuals suffering from a growth ailment called acromegaly.

In most cases this disease — characterized by grotesque enlargement of the body's extremities such as nose, jaw, fingers and toes — is caused by an abnormally large secretion of growth hormone by the pituitary gland. In extremely rare cases — five or six have been reported in medical literature — the disease can be caused by tumors of the lung and pancreas.

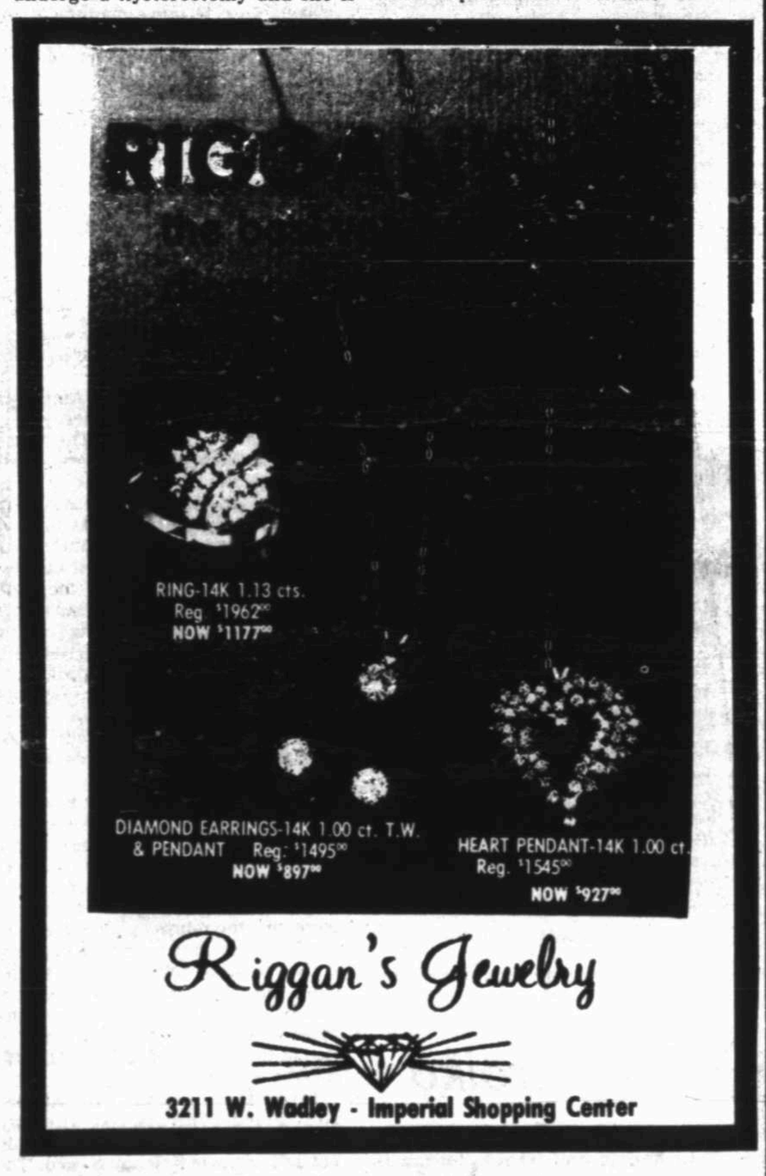

The Salk scientists, believing these tumors would contain large amounts of releasing factor, asked physicians in this country and elsewhere to be alert for such patients.

Last spring, they "hit the jackpot," according to Brazeau. A French physician working in Lyon, France, notified Guillemin that she would be removing a pancreatic tumor from a man with acromegaly.

A member of the Salk team flew to France to watch the surgery and retrieve the tumor. She packed the orange-sized mass in dry ice and returned to La Jolla the next day.

The scientists found the tumor contained roughly 5,000 to 10,000 times as much GRF as a typical hypothalamus. They confirmed the chemical's activity in animals, as well as tissue culture, and had enough left over to re-create its blueprint.

The chemical isolated from the tumor — which appeared to be identical to native brain GRF — was composed of 44 amino acids.

The disappearing stripes

For all the Midland motorists who've been straining to see the traffic lane stripes on a large number of Tall City streets recently, there is cheerful news. You are not experiencing problems with your eyesight; the stripes are, in fact, getting lighter.

What may prove to be even better news is that in coming weeks the stripes will start re-appearing and future stripings should not disappear so readily.

The problem with the stripes has been a multi-faceted one, according to traffic coordinator Van Cook. The city's main problem has been with a striping machine that suffered problems with "slowed us down significantly" and improperly mixed the striping paint and reflective glass particles which give the paint its reflective quality. The result has been disappearing lane stripes, said Cook.

City council members acted wisely recently when they recognized the problem by authorizing bidding on a new striping process since the new machine will about double the striping capacity of the current machine.

The lack of stripes on downtown streets has created some dangerous situations in recent days since motorists have been unable to determine the boundaries of their traffic lanes. Compounding that problem has been the fact that many motorists have been utilizing Illinois Avenue as though it was meant for five lanes of one-way traffic when it actually only features three lanes of one-way traffic and a parking lane on either side of the street.

Cook said the city considered installing raised "buttons" on some streets to help delineate traffic lanes although such a lane striping system would be considerably more expensive than the current one. For the time being, he said, officials rejected that idea.

A striping program now in progress will result in the restriping of a number of streets throughout the city within the next few weeks. If motorists resume use of the two outer lanes of Illinois for parking, Cook says, that move should define the traffic lanes for motorists.

If not, city officials should strongly consider eliminating parking on Illinois altogether and expanding the number of traffic lanes. There's no logic in continuing to offer additional space for parking on a street if that space is not being utilized.

City officials appear to have made the wise decision initially regarding installation of the buttons to delineate traffic lanes. But if motorist confusion continues to be a problem on some streets and is creating a dangerous situation, officials should reconsider at least a limited use of street buttons in the interest of traffic safety.

Abuses threaten aid

The kidnapping of above-ground leftist political leaders in El Salvador has provoked concern in the Reagan administration about the continuation of U.S. military aid to that country.

Recently, reports from El Salvador said 15 opposition leaders were abducted by men wearing civilian clothes. The Salvadoran military announced it was holding eight leftists on charges of terrorism. At the same time, two Salvadoran judges have failed (reportedly because of death threats against their families) to bring to justice the accused assassins of two American labor leaders killed in a San Salvador hotel in 1981.

Foot-dragging in the Salvadoran courts is routine. But the kidnapping of political leaders is a new level of outrage against human rights. Congress is growing angry and may cut off military aid. President Reagan must certify in January if El Salvador has improved its human rights situation, in order for military aid to be sent. Mr. Reagan has dispatched Under Secretary of Defense Fred C. Ikle to El Salvador to communicate U.S. concern.

Ikle's trip coincides with a diplomatic initiative by exiled opponents of the El Salvador regime who are headquartered in Mexico City. At a recent news conference, political and military leaders of five anti-government groups proposed "unconditional" negotiations with the government. Acting archbishop of San Salvador Arturo Rivera y Damas handed copies of the negotiation proposal to Salvador's president, defense minister and president of the constituent assembly.

The rebels have not been successful in their military campaign. The war appears to be at a standstill, with neither side capable of winning. Meanwhile, the civilian and military death toll mounts and congressional support for military aid diminishes.

Mr. Reagan was right to send Ikle to tell the Salvadoran government to improve its human rights policy. But the administration must also push for the Salvadoran government to begin negotiations with the rebels. If the opportunity for a political settlement is lost and human rights abuses continue, El Salvador should fight its guerrilla war without U.S. guns.

Another View:

A beanball for Bowie

The planets probably won't pop out of their orbits because Bowie Kuhn has been denied a third seven-year term as commissioner of baseball. But the owners, in conclave assembled, again exhibited themselves as clumsy and possessed of a voting procedure appropriate to a medieval principality.

In his 14 years as commissioner, Kuhn was not the clown he was often portrayed as being. Although critics called his tenure "a reign of errors," Kuhn was adequate and, on his good days, rather more.

However, he looked especially overmatched, during the 1980-81 strike, when he gave the appearance of believing it was an indictable offense for the commissioner to wade into the dispute and roughly sort out the mess.

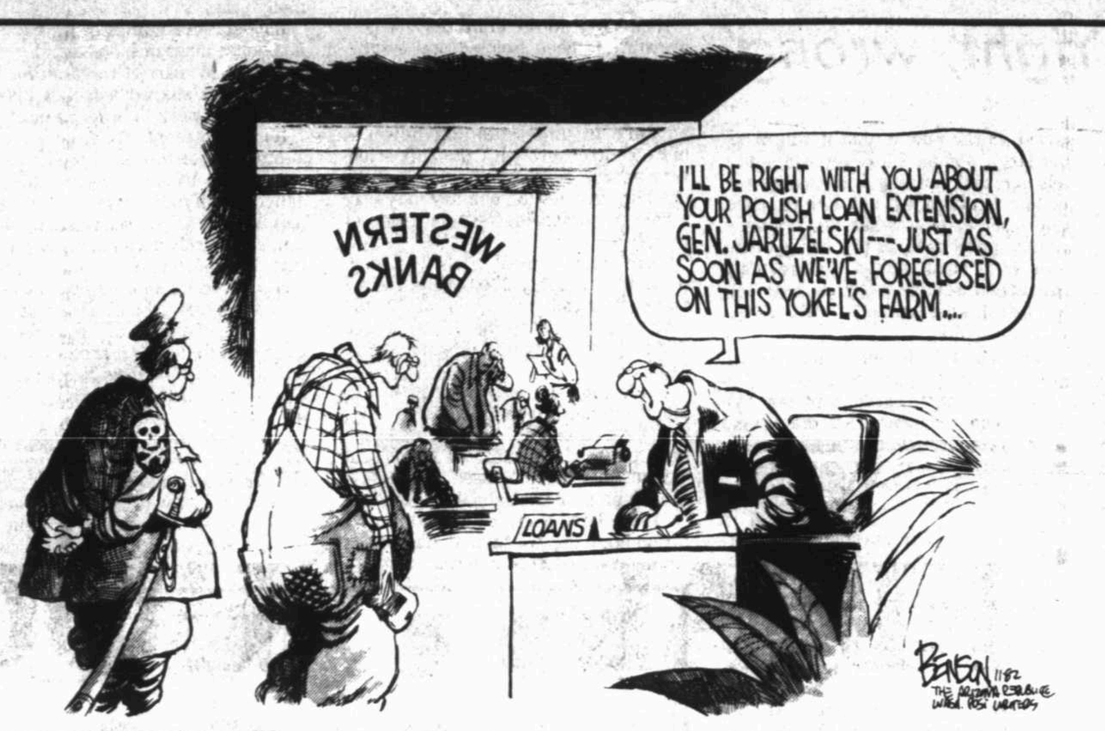

Kuhn was far off base in opposing free-agentry in baseball, which finally ended the indentured status of players. He did the game no favor, either, in pandering — no, that's too harsh — in eagerly catering to television's demands. The Fall Classic increasingly looks like a Winter Carnival.

But a final verdict on Kuhn has to recognize that his span as commissioner covered a chaotic period of transformation in baseball. That was especially true of the game's — pardon the expression — socioeconomic aspects. It would have required a combination of Thomas Aquinas and Frederick Barbarossa to have presided over so great a change in values and expectations, and so many celebrities and routine seven-figure salaries, without toppling off the cliff.

Fourteen years is also a very long haul. Thus it's probably time for a change in the commissioner's office — although league owners may be hard pressed to find a quality candidate who will put up with some of the indignities Kuhn was subjected to.

We will remember the commissioner fondly for one thing at least: He kept Charlie Finley's orange baseballs out of the game.

— The Milwaukee Journal

CHARLEY REESE

Restricted free market works best

If your child is dying of thirst and I have the only water, I could charge you two ounces of gold for a small cup and you'd pay it. That is the free market at work.

Charley Reese

But we're revolted by such a thought. That's what pirates do to Vietnamese boat people. That's not what most of us mean when we say we believe in the free market.

Precisely. Most of us believe in a free market system limited by morality. Unfortunately, some libertarians and some propagandists for special interest groups overlook that American tradition of binding its free market economic system with decency and fairness.

A totally unrestrained economic system is not what Americans believe in or want and as long as the Libertarian Party advocates that, it will remain a party of cranks.

From an economic point of view, it is more efficient to move capital to areas of the cheapest labor. Economically it makes sense to move manufacturing jobs to countries where labor is cheap and pollution and safety laws are lax or non-existent.

From the point of view of the welfare of the nation and its citizens, it is the wrong thing to do. If you want to know the basic cause of widespread unemployment, I can tell you with just two statistics. In 1962, manufactured imports in the United States totaled just $7.6 billion; in 1981, they totaled $142.5 billion.

Now, whenever you raise this topic, someone always says, "Well, the blankety-blank unions just drove wages up so high, American products aren't competitive anymore."

If that were true, then American workers ought to be the highest paid in the world. They are not. They rank fourth or fifth behind several European countries.

You see, the fallacy of the argument about competitiveness is that there is no truly competitive basis. Most countries, for example, have full employment policies which mean they will export products at below costs rather than lay off employees. In many countries, workers are virtually slaves with no chance at all of bargaining for decent wages. It is absurd to say that American textile plants are "inefficient" because they can't produce textiles as cheaply as the slaves in Red China.

What we should strive for is a compromise between a planned economy in which the government tries to manage all economic activities and a totally unrestricted economy in which the only criteria for making a decision is increasing the return on investment.

What we seem to have at the present is the worst of both systems. On the one hand, government meddles ferociously in domestic business, but on the other leaves American capital free to flee to the most profitable places outside the United States.

Take oil, for example. We slapped first price controls and then an excessive excise tax on domestic oil, but left imported oil untouched. The sensible course would be to lift the excessive tax on domestic oil and levy a heavy import tax on foreign oil. That would do two things. I would encourage domestic production and therefore energy independence. And it would discourage the multinationals from investing their American profits in foreign production.

In Montana, copper mines are shut down because Chilean copper is cheaper. Economically, it makes sense to buy the cheaper copper. But, when other factors are considered, it's a bad deal. American communities are devastated by the closed mines and Americans are put on the dole. The American government must inevitably get entangled in Chile's politics. Chilean workers who are taken advantage of will learn to hate America.

What you have is an unfair system. The capital makes a high return on investment, but the price is levied on the American people.

I part company with libertarians because I want a free market economy, but one restricted within the bounds of morality and the interests of the nation.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

MIA hunt provides much noise, few results

WASHINGTON — John LeBoutillier's election to Congress two years ago was a political accident that the voters have now remedied. But his involuntary retirement at age 29 did not come in time to prevent him from plunging into some deep diplomatic water earlier this year.

Jack Anderson

"The Boot," as his forbearing colleagues call him, is a shoot-from-the-lip conservative from Nassau County, N.Y. He likes to engage in polemics about the evils of liberalism and the rewards of virtue.

To the dismay of his colleagues on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, and to the absolute horror of the State Department, LeBoutillier barged off to Laos and Thailand to attempt what all the president's men have failed to accomplish — the return of American servicemen, living or dead, who may still be in communist Southeast Asia.

This is an issue that has occupied the persevering professonals at the State Department for years. They were properly aghast at the prospect of a brash 29-year-old politico jumping into the middle of their delicate negotiations.

Nevertheless, LeBoutillier not only set off on this quixotic venture but persuaded Rep. Bill Hendon, R-N.C., to accompany him. The equally conservative Hendon is more responsible than "The Boot."

The errant pair made at least two mysterious trips to Laos and Thailand. In true private-enterprise fashion, they sought to negotiate outside government channels. But LeBoutillier suggested in an angry telephone call to my office that their mission had the blessings of William Clark, the president's national security adviser. Spokesmen for Clark did not return calls for comment.

Once on the scene, LeBoutillier and Hendon charged around Laos with undiplomatic abandon. "Who were those guys running around like schoolboys?" a bewildered observer asked a member of Congress. In Thailand, the Rover Boys disdained even to check in with veteran U.S. Ambassador John Gunther Dean. "They did not ask support from us," Dean told my associates Lucette Lagnado and Jack Mitchell.

LeBoutillier has claimed positive results from his negotiations, which are not apparent to others. He refused to discuss the details of the mission but denied it had caused any discomfiture at either Foggy Bottom or Capitol Hill. Both he and Hendon stressed the sensitive nature of their dealings.

There was sufficient high-level interest at least to lead officials of the Agency for International Development to find a loophole in its regulations to justify paying about $8,000 for Hendon's travel expenses. Hendon said he had been helping the government and therefore was entitled to go at the taxpayers' expense. AID officials, who don't like to argue with congressmen, agreed. LeBoutillier said he paid his own way.

Footnote: An official of one private organization which dedicates its efforts to the return of missing prisoners or their remains insisted that LeBoutillier and Hendon deserve credit for initiating a medical-relief program for the Laotians. The congressmen's actions, the official said, had prompted the Laotian government to cooperate more freely in the search for MIAs.

PUZZLED PLUMBER: Like the legendary little Dutch boy, Richard W. Allen of the Consumer Product Safety Commission set out to plug a leak. But he failed.

The leak involved an internal commission document. It was a devastating indictment of Robertshaw Controls of Richmond, Va., for alleged failure to promptly recall some dangerous gas water-heater controls. Robertshaw sued the agency, claiming the leak was officially inspired.

So Allen set out to track down the source of the leak and prove that it had not come from the top. He insisted that no lie detectors were used in his investigation. In the end, he concluded that it was impossible to find out who had leaked the document to me. I could have told him that at the start, but he never asked.

DIPLOMATIC DIGEST: State Department officials are privately calling Pakistani President Muhammed Zia ul-Haq "obtuse" for his stubborn refusal to let the widow of the late Zulfikar Ali-Bhutto leave the country for medical treatment. Mrs. Bhutto is suffering from lung cancer. In more diplomatic terms, our embassy in Islamabad has been urged to seek help for her at the highest level of the Pakistani government, on both humanitarian and political grounds. Part of the political grounds, of course, is the heat the White House will get from Congress if the Bhutto matter is unresolved by the time Gen. Zia visits Washington next month.

— A confidential Senate committee report warns that a solid U.S. ally in Africa — Liberia — may be in dire straits because of its chaotic economy. "The potential for future instability is significant," the report says. "To (President Samuel K.) Doe's credit, it is generally acknowledged that he has learned a great deal in a short period of time, and understands the need to strengthen the operation of the government and begin to restore business confidence," the report adds.

INSIDE REPORT:

Reagan finds himself trapped in the troika

WASHINGTON — White House chief of staff James Baker's decision to cancel his regular 7:30 a.m. breakfast with Edwin Meese and Michael Deaver beginning last week was the first post-election symptom that the troubled White House troika is creating more problems for Ronald Reagan than it solves.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The intimate half-hour over scrambled eggs and bacon has been a staple on Reagan's White House menu. Assurances that all is well with the troika, explicitly conveyed to us in an unsolicited conference telephone call from Baker and Meese on Nov. 9, are contrary to what one aide calls "observable facts."

Discordant personalities are envenomed by feuds over policies for the next two years. Reagan must choose whether to engineer a mid-term housecleaning — or remain trapped in his troika. Watching what one adviser calls "extreme anxieties" within the troika from his small office in the White House basement is National Security Adviser William P. Clark, heir presumptive to power if Reagan cleans house.

Although precise details are shrouded, this much seems certain: Early this week, Baker and Deaver, who often join forces against Meese, talked to the president about staff "problems." Published reports that the president was asked to find a new job for Meese or face Baker's resignation are discounted by other staffers. Baker's less convulsive aim appears to be a more centralized staff under his control — "a Baker preemptive strike," in the words of one insider.

But that would risk immediate reactions from the quiet man in the White House basement Clark, one of Reagan's first political aides in Sacramento, remains close to Ed Meese both personally and ideologically.

Clark has been spending far more time with Reagan lately than national security concerns dictate. Since the election, Clark has told Reagan what the president himself suspects: He should have followed his own instincts in the campaign and he must follow them, particularly on defense and foreign policy, as he prepares for the next two years.

Symbolic of the struggle in the troika is the Baker-Deaver agreement that Reagan should yield to Budget Director David Stockman and cut the new defense budget by a full 10 percent, roughly $25 billion. Meese views this as hoisting the white flag. Clark joins Meese, convinced that Reagan's surrender on rearming America would have disastrous worldwide repercussions.

The Baker-Deaver duo controlled Reagan's part in the 1982 campaign. Deaver, whose personal influence with both Ronald and Nancy Reagan is thought excessive by some White House aides, kept Reagan scrupulously removed from the nuclear-freeze debate. That's why the Oct. 26 Soviet nuclear test of a new counterforce missile was concealed, astonishing Clark. Clark considered the Soviet test an unexpected political bonus for Reagan in battling the nuclear-freeze issue on nine state ballots.

Baker persuaded Reagan to politically exploit the offer of huge U.S. grain sales to Moscow during the campaign. The NSC adviser was shocked, viewing the offer as an unseemly contradiction of Reagan's anti-Soviet posture.

Meese was excluded from 1982 campaign decisions. "He was told to disengage," a White House aide told us, and to concentrate on post-election strategy. But Baker, backed by Deaver, is gaining control of that strategy.

By long habit, Reagan temporizes when confronted with harsh decisions involving his staff, but there have been sensational exceptions. If he does cut the harness of his troika, the quiet man in the White House basement will be brought upstairs.

Supreme Court decision on tuition issue expected soon

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

It's an all-too-common experience: A sullen young boy comes home from school complaining that classmates laugh at his awkward attempts at reading. The boy is given extra tutoring, but his classwork doesn't improve. Exasperated, the boy's parents pull him out of public school and enroll him in a private academy, hoping that there he will get the extra help he needs. But tuition charges are steep and the parents wonder: Isn't there any way the government can help pay for this?

Richard and Margie Hollingsworth of St. Paul, Minn., have been asking themselves that question for the past nine years, ever since they enrolled their son, Todd, in a Lutheran-run elementary school. Now, they are to receive an answer from the U.S. Supreme Court.

Within a few months, the high court is expected to hear arguments in a Minnesota lawsuit known as Mueller vs. Allen. The suit challenges Minnesota's practice of granting tax deductions to families who, like the Hollingsworths, pay for their children's tuition and other school-related expenses. Over the past decade, the court has struck down a variety of other state-level schemes for aiding private and parochial schools, saying that such systems violate the constitutional separation of church and state. But Mueller vs. Allen is somewhat different, in that Minnesota's law provides a bit of relief for parents who send their children to public schools as well. Results of the case will be followed carefully in states such as New York, which have tried unsuccessfully to grant similar relief to their own families.

"It'd be nice to get some of our money back," says Mrs. Hollingsworth, who is among the dozen parents who have joined with Minnesota officials in defending the state's tax-deduction system. The system is being challenged by a taxpayers' group assisted by the American Civil Liberties Union.

Originally, the Hollingsworths enrolled their son in a private school for reasons familiar to millions of parents: As a young child, Todd attended a local public school but was barely learning to read. When he reached third grade, his parents sent him to a nearby Lutheran school, believing that the private school offered more personal attention and better discipline. Religion was not a factor; the Hollingsworths are Presbyterians. They now pay $2,150 a year for their son's tuition, and feel they are entitled to government help.

"I just wish every private school would close down," says the mother facetiously. "then we'd all have to send our children back to public school, and they'd realize they have to do something to help us."

Constitutional scholars will be somewhat surprised, however, if Minnesota's system is upheld. Up to now, federal courts have ruled that government aid to private schools is unconstitutional unless it first, has a secular purpose; second, has a primary effect that neither advances nor inhibits religion, and third, does not lead to excessive entanglement between church and state. These criteria have so far resulted in the rejection of all but the most peripheral forms of aid to non-public schools, such as loans of textbooks and use of public buses.

Still, Minnesota's law attempts to skirt the constitutional bans in several intriguing ways. For one thing, it allows parents to deduct up to $700 a child for school-related expenses, regardless of whether that child attends public or non-public schools. Thus, parents can claim deductions for purchase of such items as gym clothes, band instruments, and art supplies, even if their children attend public schools.

Moreover, Minnesota's system is somewhat less generous to parents than others previously rejected, in that it provides tax deductions rather than tax credits. That is to say, it allows parents to deduct school expenses from their taxable incomes, rather than from the taxes themselves. (The maximum savings is only slightly more than $100 a child.) Thus, supporters argue, the law does not reward families for sending their children to private schools by granting them tax credits, but simply allows them to do so without paying a financial penalty. It is this provision that leads some observers to predict that the Minnesota law could survive. "There is some precedent for tax deductions," says Andrew Kaufman, a professor at Harvard Law School. "And that precedent is the fact that the Supreme Court has already upheld the tax-exempt status of (donations to) churches."

Space shuttle crew will attempt to place mission's second satellite

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The crew of shuttle Columbia reported for work today, preparing to dispatch a second satellite to its "geosynch" outpost 22,300 miles high. The maneuver will fulfill NASA's first commercial contract — a $17 million commitment to deliver the satellites to space.

The first gleaming purple satellite was sent spinning out of Columbia's cargo bay just eight hours after Thursday's liftoff and Mission Control told the four astronauts this morning: "It's going to be awfully hard for you guys to top yesterday."

The crew was determined to do so, because NASA officials believe double success will give the space agency a decided edge over the European Space Agency and others competing with the shuttle for commercial launch services.

The astronauts awakened to a loud rendition of "76 Trombones" from Broadway's "The Music Man."

Mission specialist Joseph Allen was to monitor the afternoon deployment of Telesat Canada's Anik-C communications satellite. The flight plan also listed spaceship system checks and some scientific tests today.

The astronauts began their daily regimen of exercises intended to keep their muscles from weakening in weightlessness. Each ran in place for 30 minutes on the treadmill in the shuttle's mid-deck.

"Either Vance has started on the treadmill, or somebody has got the biggest coffee maker brewing," mission specialist William Lenoir commented as commander Vasnce Brand started exercising.

The crew activated a pair of experiments selected by NASA from hundreds submitted by students around the country. The first studies the growth of sponges in zero gravity, the second the formation of crystals in this environment.

Before retiring after a long and accomplished first day in space, Brand thanked the launch team for "a great ride" and said his crew was looking forward to four more days in orbit. They return to Earth next Tuesday.

Lenoir launched the first communications satellite, SBS-C, from the shuttle's cargo bay Thursday afternoon, just eight hours after Columbia blazed away from Cape Canaveral on its inaugural mission for hire.

"Okay, Houston, we delivered; we got SBS off on time," Lenoir told Mission Control, noting the satellite was popped into its own orbit. A voice replied: "You got a lot of happy people down here, you guys do good work."

Forty-five minutes later a motor fired to propel the 3½-ton payload from 184 miles high toward, as Lenoir put it, "geosynch" — a stable orbit 22,300 miles out. A second engine ignition Saturday will circularize the satellite at that altitude — the geosynchronous point in space where satellite speed matches the earth's rotation and the station seems to hover over one point.

"We had a beautiful launch this morning and a beautiful launch this afternoon; it was a fantastic day," flight director Jay T. Cox told reporters late Thursday. "We have started a new era. NASA has now gone into the transportation business."

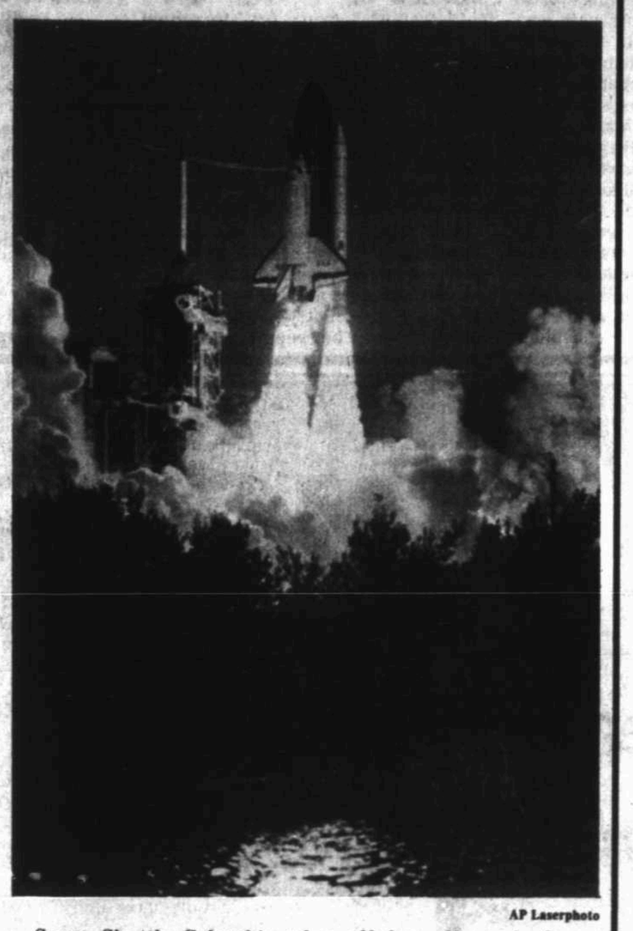

The space agency's first customer also was pleased.

"This is an outstanding beginning for the shuttle's operational era," said Robert C. Hall, president of Satellite Business Systems of McLean, Va. He called the deployment "great milestones for NASA and SBS." SBS can't be sure its satellite is in operating condition until tests on Monday.

SBS and Telesat are paying the National Aeronautics and Space Administration a total of $17 million for launch services on this flight. They're getting a bargain because the agency estimates the cost of the flight at about $250 million.

NASA says it doesn't expect to break even until 1986 or 1987 when its rates are much higher and launch costs lower because of a greater number of flights, with at least four shuttles operating. Starting in 1985, it will cost $90 million to rent the cargo bay, with several customers able to share the price.

As the shuttle has matured through four test flights over the last 19 months, more and more customers have signed on to have the shuttle haul their communications and other payloads into space. About 150 are booked into 1987.

MHS to test Region I volleyball waters Saturday

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Midland High has faced pressure situations since hosting San Angelo on Oct. 21 in a must volleyball match in the District 4-5A race. At the time, the Bulldogs were trailing the Bobcats by one match with three left to play.

Well, they won that one and added victories over Abilene High and Midland Lee to finish the league season with a 10-2 record and tied with San Angelo for the district crown. In a one-match playoff in Big Spring against the Bobcats, the Bulldogs rose to the occasion to claim the title and and have been rising since.

Last week Midland High, gaining the home court advantage with the flip of a coin, played host to Amarillo Tascosa in a bi-district match. The Bulldogs won that one easily to move into the Area game against El Paso Bel Air.

WITH FIVE straight matches of superb play behind them, it was only a matter of time before the Bulldogs would suffer a let down. In the sixth match they did.

After posting a 15-10 win in the opening game against Bel Air, the Bulldogs suddenly found themselves in an unusual situation — they were being blown off the court in the second game, 13-7. Largely due to the fact that the estimated 1,200 home court fans rallied behind their Bulldogs and to a never-say-die attitude, Midland High rallied in the game only to lose by a 15-13 count.

But it set the trend for the third and final game, a 15-8 victory and set up a third opportunity for the Bulldogs to play in front of their fans during the playoffs as they enter Saturday's Regional Tournament at Midland Lee against South Grand Prairie at 11 a.m.

"We've played five times very strong, excellent," said MHS coach Linda Jolly about her team's performance since that seemingly long ago San Angelo match at Midland High Gym. "I knew they would come down eventually. Before the match (against Bel Air) they were confused because of the way they felt. They couldn't get up for the game and they were worried."

EVEN THOUGH the Bulldogs had their problems against the Highlanders, they were able to find it in themselves to win the match and it's that characteristic plus another probable big crowd that should help them against South Grand Prairie when they take the court Saturday morning.

"We'll try to go in with the attitude, and I think they (SGP) are too, that they've come a long way and we're going out there and just play," said Jolly. "They've accomplished so much this season that I can't ask them to believe there is no tomorrow. I'm confident they'll go out and play their best and I can't ask for more than that."

Since her team's opponent in the first match of the Regional Tournament is some 300 miles away, Coach Jolly has had only one opportunity to see them play. Tuesday night, the day after the victory over Bel Air, she flew to Dallas and saw SGP's match against Arlington Heights and came away with a high opinion of the Warriors.

"They are a very aggressive team, an excellent team," said Jolly. "I think at this point though, every team is going to be tough."

SPIKING AND blocking were two areas that Coach Jolly saw as the strong points to the South Grand Prairie game plan, largely due to the Warriors height advantage.

But, she isn't without offensive and defensive threats of her own. Three spikers, Penny Griffin, Sheila Christian and Laura Sherman, can hit the ball with authority and each, along with Lisa Coldeway, provides a strong front-line defense.

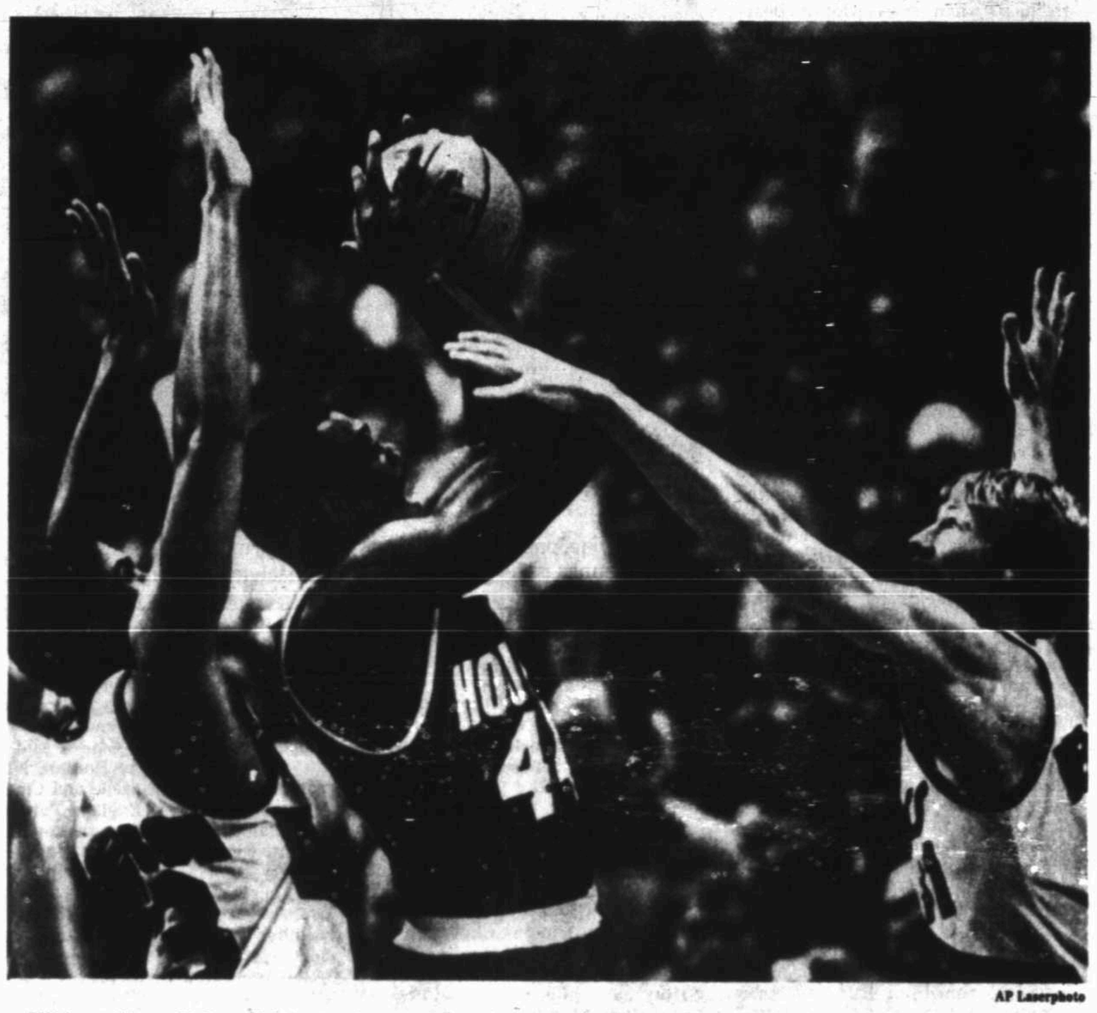

"The only disadvantage I can see is height," said Jolly. "We don't have that much height. But my girls are real confident and know they can get out there and out jump them."

Defensively, it's in the back court where the Bulldogs have been showing some of their best play with sophomore Denise Lanz showing an outstanding ability to dig out seemingly lost points. She, as well as the remaining players on the team, doesn't appear to know the meaning of "out of reach."

If there was a weakness in the Warriors game plan for Coach Jolly to find from her night of scouting, it might just be that "they have a lot of open spots on coverage, defense," said Jolly. "That's really all I could see. They reminded me of our ball club. They can spike, block and are quick, but I think we're quicker. Another thing, my girls won't give up."

Jolly sees one other advantage in the match that could play a heavy roll in the final outcome, the non-home court advantage at Midland Lee. As a neutral site in Midland, it's about as nonpartisian as a court can be in Midland. Nonpartisian, that is, when the Bulldogs are playing the Rebels. But against out-of-town opponents, the dominant cry should be for "Purple & Gold."

I hope we see a big crowd," said Jolly. We have a good crowd behind us and that's an added plus for us. The girls have worked so hard and we are representing the town. If the community comes out and supports us, it would be great. It would be what we need."

Convict shoots for the Blitz

George Allen is impressed with Mike Sifford's speed

LINCOLN, Ill. (AP) — Mike Sifford faces a unique obstacle in trying to prove he can play for George Allen's Chicago Blitz in the new United States Football League. He has to get out of prison first.

Sifford, serving a 12-year sentence for armed robbery, got the opportunity of his dreams Thursday. He was given a tryout by the Blitz in the prison yard, under the watchful eyes of his parents and Allen — and a half-dozen guards.

"I've tested (free agents) all over, but never under these circumstances," said Allen, while sweeping his arm toward the medium-security Logan Correctional Center surroundings and the prison guards.

"This is great," Sifford, 23, said in the prison gymnasium after the hour-long tryout in the rain-soaked yard.

"I feel if I'm given the opportunity to play, I can do it," he said. "I've always admired George Allen and figured if anybody would give me an opportunity, he would."

ALLEN SAID he was impressed by Sifford's speed.

"The thing I liked the most about him is he's got real quick feet. That's not something you can teach someone," Allen said after Sifford had lifted weights, sprinted and run through several defensive scrimmage patterns.

"He looks better than I thought he would," said Allen, the Blitz' general manager, part owner and coach. "He moves well."

The 6-foot, 225-pound former college tackle from suburban Chicago ran the 40-yard dash in 4.9 seconds, a feat Allen said was equal to about 4.7 seconds if done on short, dry grass.

ALLEN SAID if he decides he wants Sifford — and Sifford can be released from prison — the 1981 Most Valuable Player for the maximum-security Stateville Prison team would join the Blitz' training camp in February to try for a job at linebacker.

Allen said he would decide within 10 days whether to offer Sifford a $20,000 to $22,000 a year contract for the season that begins in March.

Sifford has been behind bars for nearly 4½ years. He's due for parole at the end of 1983, but hopes his football prowess — and the fledgling USFL Blitz — will be his ticket to an early release in mid-January.

That's when he becomes eligible for a work-release program, under which he could live at a minimum-security center in the Chicago area, a state Corrections Department official said.

Sifford could come and go nearly as he pleased under the program, as long as center officials always knew where he was and would be able to reach him within a two-hour period, said department spokesman Nic Howell.

Allen would argue Sifford's case before prison officials if that would help him get into the work-release program, the coach said.

"I think the fact that we're here today looking at him, though, is pretty good for his case," said Allen.

Sifford's chance to impress Allen came after the inmate wrote letters to the Blitz and from recommendations by his prison football coaches and other coaches who had seen him play.

"I love football. I can play," Sifford told Allen in one letter. "Give me a chance and I will make you proud to say you did."

"Tough. Just tough. The kid could not be intimidated," is how Stateville Prison Coach Willie Raines recommended Sifford, who was sent to the maximum-security prison, near Joliet, on his 19th birthday, July 31, 1978.

SIFFORD HAD decided not to return to the University of Dubuque (Iowa) after his freshman year, where he was a tackle on a football scholarship. Tired of living at home and of working at a steel fabricating plant for $4 an hour, Sifford said he was befriended by a man 10 years his senior who had a way of coming by money the easy way.

Sifford was convicted of armed robbery in connection with a series of seven holdups at Chicago-area stores, such as stereo shops.

Sifford said inmate gang members at Stateville roughed him up when he first was sent there, breaking his nose and "shanking," or stabbing him, a couple of times.

But after the prison's football coach heard he had played at West Leyden High School in Northlake, Ill., and in college at Dubuque, Sifford joined the Stateville team. His ability on the field earned him respect in the celiblocks. Gang members called a truce to the violence.

He was transferred to the medium-security facility in this central Illinois city about 30 miles north of Springfield earlier this year.

Oops...Clippers sting Spurs

SAN DIEGO (AP) — San Antonio Coach Stan Albeck warned his players that the San Diego Clippers wouldn't quit. It was advice the Spurs should have heeded.

The Clippers were down by 10 points with 6½ minutes remaining Thursday night, but managed a championship-level comeback to defeat the Spurs 109-105.

It was San Diego's first win of the season after seven losses and the Clippers' third victory over the Spurs in the last four games between the teams dating back to last season.

San Diego went ahead to stay at 106-105 on a short jump shot by rookie Terry Cummings with 29 seconds left in the game.

Lionel Hollins, who had 21 points and a game-high nine assists, added a free throw with seven seconds left go give the Clippers a two-point lead and San Diego's Al Wood completed the scoring with a pair of foul shots with three seconds to go.

"I told our team that San Diego wouldn't quit," said Albeck. "They were down 10 and kept coming. They were directed superbly by Hollins.

"Our concentration fell apart in the third quarter. We had eight turnovers in the third period and they seized the opportunity."

San Antonio led by six points entering the fourth quarter and extended its advantage to 94-84 before the Clippers rallied to snap the Spurs' five-game winning streak.

"The monkey's off our back," said San Diego Coach Paul Silas. "We had big plays all night. We really had the spark. The team enjoyed playing. It's taken time for us to really jell. This is our eighth game, we feel like we just got out of training camp.

"Terry Cummings is a winner. Besides his skills, he has leadership qualities. Lionel (Hollins) really came on in the second half and directed us well."

"I hate when I go out to do something and I don't do it with the kind of expertise I possess," said Cummings, who led the Clippers with 23 points. "I feel so at ease out there.

"We got the breaks that we needed. A tipped ball, a long rebound on a shot, that's what we need."

San Antonio's George Gervin led all scorers with 42 points. Mike Mitchell added 24 points for the Spurs, who fell to 6-2.

"Gervin can get 60 points as long as we win," said Silas, echoing Gervin's sentiments.

"I don't have trouble scoring points," said Gervin. "But winning is what counts. The last play wasn't called for me but I wish it was."

The Clippers led 106-105 when Mitchell missed a jump shot with about 10 seconds remaining. A San Antonio turnover led to Wood's two free throws.

Tom Chambers added 19 points and hauled down 10 rebounds for the Clippers. San Diego's Michael Brooks also had 10 rebounds. Gene Banks had 13 points, 10 rebounds and nine assists for the Spurs.

Portland 111, Houston 90

Jim Paxson and Calvin Natt combined for 46 points, 16 during a first-period blitz, as Portland rolled over winless Houston.The Blazers took an 11-point lead over the Rockets, 0-6, in the first quarter and built it to 23 in the second half in a wire-to-wire victory.

West Virginia duo destroys Rutgers

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Quarterback Jeff Hostetler teamed up with Rich Hollins on touchdown pass plays of 54 and 43 yards Thursday night, triggering West Virginia's 44-17 college football victory over Rutgers at Giants Stadium.

West Virginia, ranked 19th by The Associated Press, was trailing 10-7 early in the second quarter. But the Mountaineers outscored the Knights 23-0 for a 30-10 lead late in the third period.

Paul Woodside pulled West Virginia even with a 26-yard field goal, then gave the Mountainers a 13-10 lead with another three-pointer, this one from 30 yards, just 25 seconds before halftime.

Hostetler, playing in his first game in three weeks after recovering from a toe injury, threw a 46-yard strike to Hollins, who gathered in the ball on the 8-yard. The junior wide receiver ran it in to cap West Virginia's opening drive of the second half.

On the first play of the ensuing drive, Rutgers quarterback Jacque LaPrairie's pass was intercepted by Jay Getzendanner, who ran the ball back 15 yards to the Scarlet 10. Fullback Ron Wolfley carried twice, the last time powering in from the five for the score.

Woodside's 24-yard field boosted West Virginia's lead to 30-10.

Hostetler's second scoring pass to Hollins came in the fourth quarter after Rutgers had scored its second touchdown of the game.

The victory boosts West Virginia's chances of making a postseason appearance, possibly at the Gator or Sun Bowl. The Mountaineers, 8-2, have only Syracuse left on their regular season schedule.

Rutgers' chances of finishing with a winning season are dim. The Knights, 5-5, meet eighth-ranked Pittsburgh next week.

Sophomore Willie Drewrey stunned the crowd of 27,132 when he gathered in a punt and broke three tackles as he sped up the middle for 75 yards and West Virginia's opening touchdown.

Aaron Pryor puts title on line

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Aaron Pryor, who attacks with tropical storm ferocity, tries tonight to block a bid to make boxing history by Alexis Arguello, who blends power with patience.

Arguello will be trying to become the first man to win four world championships when he seeks the World Boxing Association welterweight title held by Pryor in a scheduled 15-rounder set to start at about 9:20 p.m., CST, in the Orange Bowl.

Pryor, besides trying to protect his turf, is seeking the recognition he doesn't feel has received despite being a champion who has won all 31 one of his pro fights, 29 by knockout, including the last 23.

The 27-year-old Pryor and the 30-year-old Arguello have been evenly matched in praising each other in the days leading up to the bout.

Now it is time to match the skills that have made them champions and match the styles that have made them exciting fighters and reflect their personalities.

Arguello, who became the sixth triple champion when he won the World Boxing Council lightweight title, is conservative in the ring, plotting patiently, looking for an opportunity, reacting quickly and dramatically when he it occurs. In 80 pro fights, he has lost only four times, and 62 of the 76 victories have been by knockout. He also has won 19 straight title fights, including five as featherweight champion and nine as WBC super featherweight champ.

His life out of the ring is that of a businessman — a construction company and a travel agency are among his interests — and his dress is as impeccable and as quiet as his lifestyle.

The only sounds at an Arguello workout are murmuring voices, the smack of glove against body or bag, the crack of jump rope on the floor. Arguello doesn't conduct business to music, and to him boxing is all business.

Arguello, who has three sons and a daughter, and who lives quietly with his third wife, Loretta, in nearby Kings Bay, has become known as boxing's wondering champion.

His native Nicaragua doesn't allow professional boxing and Arguello, who was honored by the government of Anastasio Somoza, had property he values at $2 million confiscated after Somoza was deposed. He says he gave money to the revolutionary Sandinista movement and notes his 17-year-old brother, Eduardo was killed fightig for the Sandinista.

The blare of a recording accompanies the 27-year-old Pryor's workouts — often the strains of a tune called "Aaron Pryor, the Hawk." Pryor likes to shout, "What time is it?" and have members of his entourage bellow, "It's Hawk time."

Pryor, of Cincinnati, seems to be a man who enjoys a good time, but he does not enjoy the attention given to some things that have happened outside the ring, such as managerial squabbles and his being shot during a domestic quarrel two years ago.

A victory in the Orange Bowl ring, which will be covered with a canopy in case of rain, would go a long way in focusing attention on Pryor, the fighter.

The weather forecast is for less than 20 percent chance of rain, with temperatures in the mid-60s. A sellout would mean a crowd of about 40,000. Tickets are scaled from $500 to $20. Pryor gets $1,6 million and Arguello $1.5 million.

The fight will be televised by Home Box Office, a cable company; shown in some areas on closed-circuit television and be beamed throughout South American and to some other countries.

The show also will feature three former world champions in scheduled 10-rounders.

In a junior middleweight bout after the main event, Roberto Duran, the former lightweight and WBC welterweight champion from Panama, will fight Jimmy Batten, a Briton now living in Chicago.

Two other fights will match lightweights Claude Noel of Trinidad, the former WBA champion and Howard Davis of Dix Hills, N.Y., and junior welterweights Alfredo Escalera of Puerto Rico, the former WBC super featherweight champion, and Maurice "Termite" Watkins of Houston.

Sayers calls for a grass root uprising

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Gale Sayers, one of football's most exciting ball carriers whose shifty legs carried him into the Hall of Fame, thinks an uprising from the grass root ranks is the only solution for the stalemated strike in the National Football League.

"I don't think most of the players know what's going on," the former University of Kansas and Chicago Bears running back says. "The union is giving them information piecemeal.

"I think it's a shame. The players are getting hurt worst of all. They have families, babies to feed, mortgage payments to be paid. There's a lot of money on the table. It seems to me the owners have made a decent offer.

"I think players should demand that they be heard instead of leaving it up to Ed Garvey and the union reps. I'm not sure all of them are getting the right picture."

EVEN AS Sayers spoke, player solidarity behind Garvey, the executive director of the NFL Players Association, was beginning to develop cracks. With the New Orleans Saints leading the way, many players back home were showing increased impatience.

"Hey, let's take another look at the owners' offer," they seemed to be saying. "With a little revision here and there, we think we could live with it."

Garvey, meanwhile, maintained that his lines were holding firm in their opposition to the management figures on the table.

Sayers, who recently ended a five-year tenure as athletic director at Southern Illinois University in Carbondale, was in New York pursuing his new career as a marketing director for Skil Power Tools, a Chicago-based company.

"I enjoy the academic atmosphere," said Sayers, who formerly served as assistant athletic director at Kansas. "But I felt I had to explore new opportunities.

"I MISS trying to steer kids in the right direction. Most of them think all they have to do is concentrate on sports and they'll have their lives cut out for them for 10 or 15 years.

"That's not the way it happens.They don't see examples of short careers where something happens and guys are left out in the cold — with no degree, no skills and nowhere to go. It's tragic."

It's a story Gale Sayers himself has lived.

All American at Kansas, he scored a record 22 touchdowns, six in one game, his first year as a pro and was the NFL's "Rookie of the Year." He became the ball-carrying sensation of the league.

In 1968, Sayers' knees began to fold under the strain and he underwent a series of operations. He was forced to retire in 1972.

"There I was only 27 years old, my football career ended, and I was looking for another job," he said. In 1977, he was named to the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

He went into the kind of work for which he trained — assistant AD at his alma mater, followed by the athletic directorship at Southern Illinois in 1976.

"You can't count on a football career as permanent security," he said. "I try to impress on the kids how important it is to learn another skill and to get a degree."

SAYERS, VERY active in the players' union when he was with the Bears, expresses resentment of Garvey's pitch line for the players: "We Are the Game."

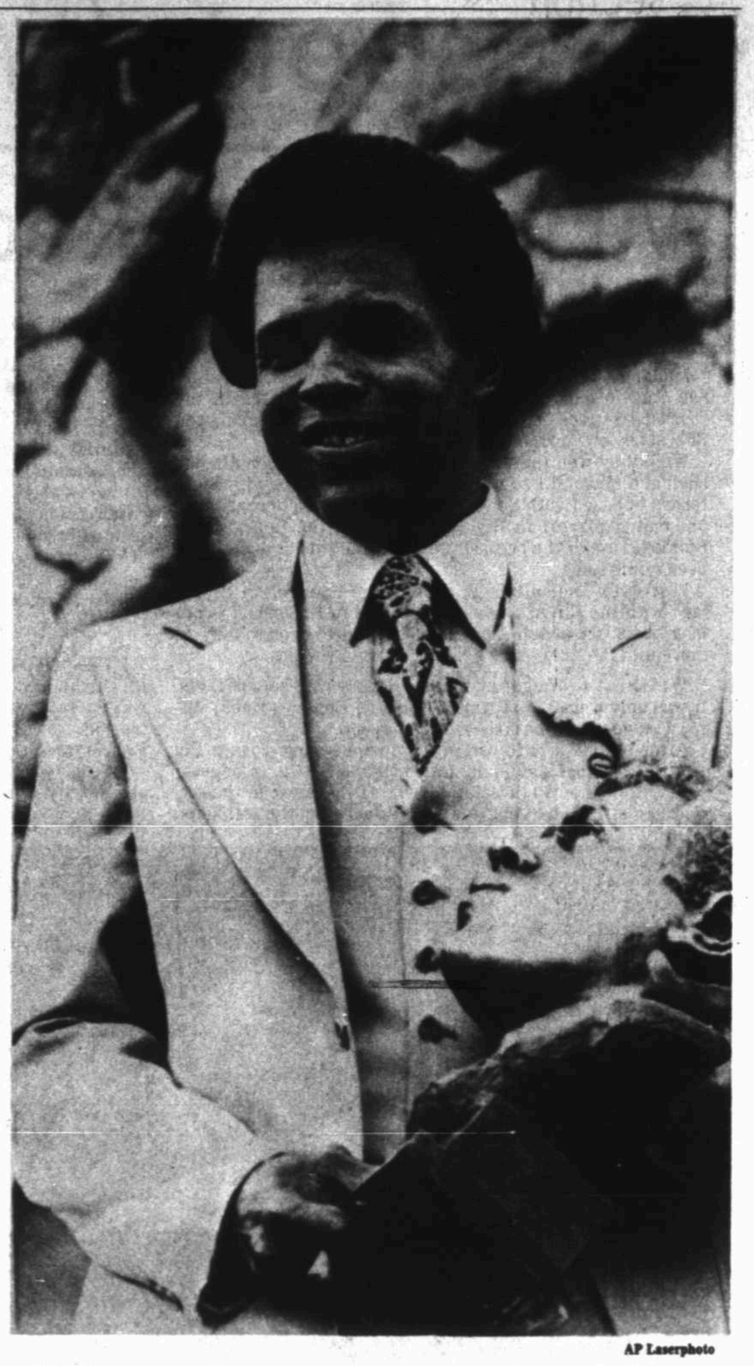

"What does he mean: 'We are the game?' " Sayers retorts. "What about Frank Gifford? What about Bronko Nagurski? What about Gale Sayers? Haven't we all been part of the game?"

The former ace ball carrier said it was difficult for him — and for other former players — to understand how current players could turn up their noses at proffered bonuses up to $60,000.

"Some of the old guys played for $55 a game and were happy to get a $50 bonus," he added. "I can't understand how Garvey feels he can dictate salary scales. What right have they to take over the club? The Bears developed me. I created interest for them. When I left, that interest died.

"It's crazy to say an old player on the bench, near the end of his career, should get as much as a player who is producing. The concept is all wrong.

"The players should jump in and help get back their game."

Striker erosion seen in NFL

By The Associated Press

The early vote is in and players from six National Football League teams have decided to accept, with certain modifications, management's latest proposal to end the 53-day-old strike.

And there are more indications of possible erosion in the ranks of NFL Players Association even among the teams that did not vote, or would not reveal the results of a vote. A consensus shows that many players are willing to ease up on issues earlier said to be unalterable by the players union.

The teams voting to accept "in principle" the owners' offer of $1.31 billion over five years are the New Orleans Saints, Miami Dolphins, Los Angeles Rams, Houston Oilers, Cincinnati Bengals and Denver Broncos. Voting to reject the offer were the Atlanta Falcons, St.Louis Cardinals, San Francisco 49ers and Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

OTHER TEAMS, including the New York Giants, New England Patriots, Green Bay Packers, Washington Redskins, Philadelphia Eagles, Detroit Lions, Baltimore Colts and Seattle Seahawks, did not vote but have voiced strong objection to management's offer.

Still other teams, did not vote but showed signs of growing uneasiness with the union's steadfast demands.

Members of the New York Jets met Monday to discuss the management proposal. One player who asked not to be identified, said that the presence of the Washington Redskins' Mark Murphy, a players association executive committee member, inhibited open discussion. Two players were said to have asked Marvin Powell, the Jets' player representative, to have a secret ballot. Powell is reported to have refused the request stating that players polled by telephone had already rejected the offer.

The Pittsburgh Steelers first met Sunday, voting 20-3 to reject the latest management proposal. Then, Tuesday, between 30 and 35 players again met for about three hours at Three Rivers Stadium, with Steelers President Dan Rooney on hand, reportedly at the request of Jack Ham, to answer any questions and further explain the proposal. Tom Condon of the Kansas City Chiefs and Jim Haslett of the Buffalo Bills were present to represent the union.

Condon interrupted Rooney several times during the meeting, but Steeler players asked Condon to let Rooney continue speaking.

The Minnesota Vikings did not vote. But player representative David Huffman said, "we feel we would like to see some significant movement on the union's part in regard to our wage scale and some other things. We're willing to make concessions on certain things to get back to negotiating."

Wide receiver Ahmad Rashad said after the meeting, "It doesn't matter whose terms you talk on as long as you talk. Those guys (the owners) got all the money. You can't sit by your wage scale and say, 'That's it or nothing' and go broke."

The Los Angeles Raiders' Mickey Marvin said that while his team did not actually vote, no more than four or five players would have rejected the offer. The 49ers and Cowboys voted to reject the offer, but did say that the owners' offer constituted a "framework" for further negotiation.

The Bills met Tuesday for three hours without taking a vote, but an envoy of Isiah Robertson, Phil Villapiano and Jon Borchard was sent to New York to meet with union officials. The Bills were to meet again today to discuss what transpired in the meeting and to possibly take a vote.

The Houston Oilers met Wednesday with a turnout of about 20 players, not enough for a vote. Player representative David Carter said that the players are prepared to accept the offer if player rosters could be frozen at 49 and adequate arrangements could be reached with regard to 1982 salary.

Ed Fisher, a non-union member of the Oilers said, "If it's the union's job to negotiate the best contract p ossible, if they don't negotiate a contract and the season is ended, then I don't think we've been represented very well."

To the dismay of Buccaneers quarterback Doug Williams, his team voted resoundingly in rejection of the owners offer.

"I lost respect for a lot of people," he said. "This is the pits to me. I thought a lot more would accept it."

NFLPA must move much closer to owners before talks resume

NEW YORK (AP) — Management negotiator Jack Donlan says talks with striking National Football League players will not resume unless the union takes a position much closer to that of the club owners.

"We have vast economic and conceptual differences and it's time they realized that they have to move substantially and dramatically in our direction," Donlan said Thursday in response to a four-page memorandum from the union. The letter called for renewed negotiations "in the spirit of compromise" to end the 53-day-old players strike.

But Donlan replied: "Our money proposal is out there. Compromise is not the watchword at this time. Realism is."

Donlan said Garvey had provided "no basis for a settlement or the resumption of meaningful negotiations," and he described the outlook for going back to the bargaining table as without hope, "based on their position as stated in the memorandum."

"This weekend is critical if the season is to resume," Garvey said, "but management refuses to bargain. It is incumbent on them to get on with it. The only hope to salvage the season is to reach a collective bargaining agreement."

Garvey said 17 player representatives at a meeting in the Summit Hotel Thursday night were upset about teams "bargaining privately with their players."

"You can't have 28 separate negotiations going with club personnel who do not know the issues," Garvey said. He called "ridiculous" the situation in Dallas, with Cowboys President Tex Schramm talking with quarterback Danny White.

"There's something like nine issues and they've resolved eight of them," Garvey added. "What if they resolve all of them? Who does it bind, Danny and Tex? Does it affect the commissioner, the other players in the league?"

Garvey called the private negotiations an invitation to anarchy.

Meanwhile, Miami on Thursday reversed its position and joined five other teams in accepting the owners' latest offer in principle.

Although Garvey says the union is still solid, the Dolphins, Cincinnati Bengals, Denver Broncos, Houston Oilers, Los Angeles Rams and New Orleans Saints have now voted conditional approval of the owners' package.

"No team, and, as far as we know, no individual member has endorsed your proposal as it stands," Garvey said in the a memorandum to Donlan, NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle and Chuck Sullivan of the New England Patriots, chairman of the management council's executive committee. "In total, approximately 100-125 out of 1,600 players have accepted in principle your last proposal. It's quite possible the same number would have accepted your Sept. 8 proposal."

An Associated Press survey Thursday showed at least 197 votes to accept the management proposal in principle.

Army-Navy may move

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — California senator-elect Pete Wilson says substantial progress has been made in negotiations to bring the next year's Army-Navy football game to Pasadena's Rose Bowl.

Wilson told a news conference Thursday that bringing the game from its traditional site in Philadelphia would cost about $5 million because of the cost of transporting and housing an estimated 8,500 midshipmen and cadets.

The San Diego Republican said he not only expects to see an agreement reached on bringing the game to Pasadena, but he expects no problem in selling tickets. The contest is scheduled for Dec. 3, 1983.

"In California there is a heavy concentration of active duty and retired military personnel to form a base of support. We expect the game to be a sellout," he said.

The two service academies have played their annual game in Philadelphia for many years, but the current contract there has a clause permitting it to be transferred on occasion.

Rolfe Arnhym, executive vice president of the Pasadena Chamber of Commerce, explained that the project is a non-profit venture.

Clemson Tigers suffer from rampant investigation rumors

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — If defending the 1981 national college football championship weren't enough, the Clemson Tigers have been shadowed all year by a long-running NCAA recruiting investigation that's bred speculation and rampant rumors.

"We've got so many distractions right now, it's unfair for the kids," Clemson coach Danny Ford said in a telephone interview Thursday.

The subject of Clemson's possible probation heated up this week as sportswriters ran wild with tidbits tossed by unnamed sources claiming the National Collegiate Athletic Association and Clemson's Atlantic Coast Conference had already decided the Tigers' fate.

The 34-year-old Ford said the stories were making it just that much tougher to keep his players pumped up. "We're trying like hell to do that," he said. "But it's getting harder and harder every day now because it doesn't let up."

Clemson's policy ever since the NCAA investigation began 19 months ago has been to defer all official comment to school President Bill L. Atchley.

In a statement issued by his office late Thursday afternoon, Atchley said he couldn't be very specific, but acknowledged that he had received letters from the ACC and the NCAA. "We're evaluating these reports right now and will have a comprehensive statement to make soon.

"We're very close to having this thing resolved and we want to get it behind us so we can get on with our business," Atchley said.

Ford wouldn't talk about the reports, saying he has his players to consider.

"I'm not trying to be hard to get along with," he said. "But they don't need to be reading anything in the paper about me talking about it and taking my time away from them."

"We're really just trying to put that out of our heads and concentrate more on the rest of the season," sophomore quarterback Mike Eppley said.

"Coach Ford said he'd tell us as soon as he received official word," said Eppley. "So we're just taking everything that's in the papers now as publicity and rumors. In other words, just wait for the final word before we worry about it."

Despite reports published by The Washington Post quoting unnamed sources as saying both the ACC and the NCAA Committee on Infractions have voted to put Clemson on probation for two years, the conference and the association have officially remained mum.

Asked about possible NCAA sanctions against Clemson, NCAA spokesman Dave Cawood said Thursday, "We have no plans to make any announcement on any school today, this week or any time in the near future."

The investigation has put pressure on the team, but no worse than last year, said Clemson sports information director Bob Bradley.

"These things surfaced three or four times last year," Bradley said. "It's been something both the 1981 team and the 1982 team have had to live with."

Published reports have traced the NCAA's most recent interest in Clemson's recruiting practices back to January 1981, when James Cofer and Terry Minor asked to be released from their letters-of-intent to play at Clemson.

The two Knoxville, Tenn., high school players claimed in a $12 million suit, which they lost and are now appealing, that Clemson had violated recruiting regulations.

More recently, starting quarterback Homer Jordan's purchase of a 1982 Monte Carlo has been called into question by NCAA investigators. Jordan, an All-American candidate at the start of the season, accompanied Clemson officials to a closed session with the NCAA's infractions committee last month.

The Athens, Ga., senior led the Tigers to the national championship last year with a victory over Nebraska in the Orange Bowl. Atchley pulled him out of the starting lineup moments before kickoff in the Clemson-Kentucky game Oct. 2.

The school president said Jordan was benched "due to what may be construed in a very strict interpretation of the NCAA constitution as a technical violation."

Eppley, the sophomore from Charlotte, N.C., was called on to take Jordan's place in the Kentucky game, which Clemson won 24-6. Jordan underwent exploratory knee surgery 10 days later and missed the next three games.

Eppley, who quarterbacked the Tigers to victories over Duke, N.C. State and North Carolina, said he wasn't pleased with the way he got the starting job, but he was trying to make the most of the opportunity.

Ponies remember Lubbock

By The Associated Press

Remember Chuck Hixson, who holds numerous Southern Methodist University passing records?

Well, he was the quarterback for the Mustangs the last time they beat Texas Tech in Lubbock. That was 12 years ago.

The high-flying No. 2 ranked Mustangs visit the South Plains again Saturday where they are 5-9 lifetime.

And they remember what happened to them out there two years ago. It snowed, Gabe Rivera played noseguard like a demon possessed, and Tech blanked the Ponies 14-0.

"That was humiliating," recalls tailback Eric Dickerson.

"It was one of the worst games we ever played," said tailback Craig James. "We were flat because we knew we had the Holiday Bowl bid wrapped up.

"That was our last shutout," he said. "I didn't think anybody could shut us out, but Tech sure did. We don't need a whole lot of incentive to go out there. I know the people who saw us play that day weren't too impressed."

SMU was a 13-point favorite, but that doesn't sit too well with Coach Bobby Collins.

"Ask Washington if they thought Tech has a good team," Collins said.

Tech fought the Huskies to the wire before losing 10-3. Washington then was ranked No. 1 in the nation.

In other games, Arkansas was a 15-point favorite to recover from the shock of its upset loss to Baylor by rebounding against the Texas Aggies in a night game at Little Rock; Texas was a 13-point favorite to roll over Texas Christian in Fort Worth; and Baylor was an 11-point pick over Rice in Houston.

SMU is 9-0 and 6-0 in the conference. The Ponies play their final game in Texas Stadium next week against Arkansas.

Both Arkansas and Texas, who meet Dec. 4 in Austin, are a game behind SMU and the Ponies can clinch at least a tie for the SWC title by beating the Red Raiders.

Tech has three SWC victories, two of them in the last seconds.

"Some good things have happened to this team and I don't think we are through yet," said Tech Coach Jerry Moore. "You can talk forever about SMU. Dickerson is the kind of guy that if you make one mistake it's six points. And Craig Jmes is just as impressive."

SMU crushed Tech 30-6 in Texas Stadium last year, with James getting 134 yards and Dickerson earning 129.

"A win would mean a lot to Tech's program," Collins said. "It would mean a lot to our program, too."

Dickerson needs 189 yards to reach Earl Campbell's SWC career rushing mark of 4,443. Dickerson would need 323 yards in his last two games to top the former Texas All-American's single season rushing record of 1,744 yards.

CFL Concordes to lower prices

MONTREAL (AP) — Following a dismal season on the field and at the box office, the Montreal Concordes have decided to lower ticket prices for 1983, the Canadian Football League club announced Thursday.

General admission seats at Olympic Stadium, which once sold for $4 and $6 but were discontinued in 1978, will be reintroduced at $3 each.

Nittany Lions get nod over Irish

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Penn State never has won college football's national championship. And unless Georgia, Southern Methodist and Arizona State all stumble somewhere down the line, chances are the Nittany Lions won't win it this year, either.

But they have a strong supporter in Notre Dame Coach Gerry Faust.

"At the end of the (1981) season, after they beat Pitt and Southern Cal, I felt Penn State was the best team in the country," Faust said. "And this team this year is even better than last year."

Of course, Faust may just be indulging in a little game coaches play — the object of which is to convince everyone that your next opponent are the Monsters of the Midway reincarnated.

If you haven't guessed by now, fifth-ranked Penn State is Saturday's opponent for No. 13 Notre Dame, which got back into the Top Twenty by knocking Pitt from the No. 1 spot last week. The Nittany Lions are 6-point favorites in what Faust calls "a big game — the players know it, we know it, the fans know it and Penn State knows it."

IF ANYONE knows who the winner will be, please tell the bowl people. Representatives of the Cotton, Orange, Sugar, Fiesta and Gator Bowls will be in South Bend to watch ... Penn State 21-14.

Last week's score was 31 right and 19 wrong for a percentage of .620. For the season, it's 346-119-11—.744. Against the points, last week's count was 13 right, 18 wrong and one tie for a .419 percentage, dropping the log for the year to 130-137-1— .487.

No. 7 Washington at No. 3 Arizona State (favored by 4): You win with defense, and these are two great defensive teams. But the better one belongs to ... Arizona State 17-10.

No. 11 Clemson at No. 18 Maryland (2½): Two winning streaks collide — Clemson's six in a row vs. Maryland's unlucky seven ... Clemson 20-13.

No. 1 Georgia (6½) at Auburn: Auburn's Bo Jackson may be the next Herschel Walker, but the original plays for ... Georgia 24-17.

No. 2 Southern Methodist (14) at Texas Tech: The Dickerson-James Pony Express runs into Senor Sack, alias Gabe Rivera. Close, but no cigarillo for el senor ... SMU 21-17.

No. 4 Nebraska (21) at Iowa State: The Cornhuskers have scored a total of 100 points in their last two games ... Nebraska 35-10.

No. 6 LSU (8) at Mississippi State: LSU leads the nation in defense and stuffed Alabama's Wishbone last week. Another Wishbone to snap, but the Upset Special of the Week ... Mississippi State 14-13.

No. 8 Pitt (30) at Army: Army Coach Ed Cavanaugh wasn't cheer-cheering for old Notre Dame last weekend. Now he gets the Panthers on the rebound ... Pitt 41-7.

Louisville at No. 9 Florida State (no line): The Seminoles have scalped Southern Illinois 59-8, East Carolina 56-17, South Carolina 56-26 and now it's Louisville's turn ... Florida State 52-17.

Texas A&M at No. 10 Arkansas (16): It may be too much to expect a poor old coach like Lou Holtz to beat a rich young one like Jackie Sherrill ... Arkansas 28-14.

Stanford at No. 12 UCLA (8): UCLA's Tom Ramsey heads the NCAA's passing efficiency chart and Stenford's John Elway is fifth. Second Upset Special ... Stanford 31-27.

Purdue at No. 14 Michigan (21): Purdue has a history of giving Bo Schembechler fits, but the Wolverines can smell the roses ... Michigan 36-13.

MISSOURI AT No. 15 Oklahoma (13): Here comes Marcus Dupree — and there he goes ... Oklahoma 28-17.

No. 16 Southern Cal (4½) at Arizona: The Wildcats have beaten Notre Dame and Stanford and tied UCLA, but their bag of upset tricks is empty ... Southern Cal 27-13.

Southern Mississippi at No. 17 Alabama (10½): The Crimson Tide hasn't lost in Tuscaloosa since 1963 and Bear Bryant is (a) fighting mad and (b) still the coach at ... Alabama 28-10.

No. 20 Texas (13½) at Texas Christian: The Longhorns haven't given up a point in their last two games ... Texas 28-7.

Oklahoma State at Kansas State (7): The Cowboys are due to catch a break. Third Upset Special ... Oklahoma State 24-21.

Baylor (11) at Rice: The Owls catch the Bears in a valley between Arkansas and Texas. Fourth Upset Special ... Rice 24-21.

No Dodger Blue for Steve Garvey

By Ken Gurnick
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Now it's official. There is no longer any chance of Steve Garvey playing in a Dodger uniform.

If Garvey is ever to play in Dodger Stadium in a regular season game again, it will have to be in the uniform of one of the five National League teams that selected him: the Chicago Cubs, Houston Astros, San Diego Padres, San Francisco Giants or Pittsburgh Pirates.

Garvey also was picked by the Texas Rangers, New York Yankees, Seattle Mariners and Chicago White Sox in the American League, making a total of nine teams he can negotiate with. Only Seattle pitcher Floyd Bannister, Dodger pitcher Terry Forster, Cincinnati pitcher Bob Shirly and Milwaukee pitcher Bob McClure were selected by more teams.

"I think the Dodgers made a big mistake in not retaining Garvey," said Kurt Bevaqua, a utility man for the Padres who is hoping his club lands him. "When the draft is over, I think Garvey will be the highest paid player in baseball. If we get him and another pitcher, we can win the division next year."

Garvey spoke with writers about his final negotiating session with the Dodgers. "I realized, in essence, that what had gone out over all those years was not coming back."

That was about as close as Garvey got to criticizing the franchise with whom he has associated for the past 27 years, beginning as a bat boy, rising through the minor league system and becoming one of the most productive and dependable players in recent times.

Only occasionally did he refer to the low points of his tenure — the teammate jealousies and his highly publicized breakup with wife Cyndy ("We still are separated," he said.).

He refused to discuss specifics of the negotiations and to comment on a report that the two sides agreed to a four-year contract, with money being a final hangup. "There will be a time to discuss details," he said. "Now is not the time."

He did say he could not understand why the Dodgers would stick to their policy of not retaining his rights.

"I believe not having a contract offer had an effect on Steve's play," said Garvey's agent Jerry Kapstein.

Altobelli expected to become Bird boss

BALTIMORE (AP) — Baltimore Orioles General Manager Hank Peters says "the wait is close to ending" — and the words could apply equally to his manager-less team and its heir apparent Joe Altobelli.

Announcement of a skipper to succeed Earl Weaver was scheduled for this afternoon, and baseball sources said Altobelli, a New York Yankees coach who has been out of major league managing for three years, will be named.

Altobelli arrived at Washington's National Airport Thursday night after a flight from his Rochester, N.Y., home. But upon his arrival refused to say that the purpose of his trip was to attend a press conference in which he would be named to manage the Orioles.

"Nothing has been finalized yet," Altobelli said. "The last I heard, I was just one of three guys who might get the position. I'll attend the press conference and find out."

Contacted at their Rochester home, Altobelli's wife Pat also refused to reveal the purpose of her husband's trip. But she graciously accepted a reporter's offering of "congratulations."

Earlier, the Orioles also declined to confirm or deny he was the team's selection. "We don't dispute it, we just don't have any comment," sais Oriole spokesman John Blake.

Peters would only confirm Thursday that Altobelli was among the three finalists, which included two current Orioles coaches.

"He and Cal Ripken Sr. and Ray Miller are the three people we have had under consideration and one of the three will be named manager tomorrow (Friday)," Peters said. "Our decision's been made."

Altobelli won National League Manager of the Year honors in 1978, his second year at the helm of the San Francisco Giants and a year before he was fired by the club. Then Altobelli managed in the International League before going to New York.

The 50-year-old former first baseman was given permission by the Yankees to apply for several major league managerial openings.

Ripken, the Orioles' third base coach, became the Orioles' acting manager last season when Weaver was suspended for a week following an altercation with an umpire.

Miller, the Orioles' pitching coach, reportedly is a top candidate to succeed Billy Martin as manager of the Oakland A's.

The Rochester Times-Union and the Baltimore Evening Sun, reported Thursday that Altobelli would sign a two-year contract with the Orioles.

Altobelli spent nine years in the Baltimore organization as a minor league manager. And team owner Edaward Bennett Williams had expressed a desire to name a manager with an Orioles "organization identity."

Altobelli is well know by several Oriole players. During his six years as skipper of the Orioles' AAA farm team at Rochester, Altobelli managed players such as Eddie Murray, Scott McGregor, Rich Dauer, Dennis Martinez and Mike Flanagan.

"Joe is a mixture of toughness and compassion," Flanagan said. "He had moments at Rochester when he would display both. I think he handled the veterans with strength and he could communicate. He let us play."

Lasorda signs one-year pact

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Manager Tommy Lasorda of the Los Angeles Dodgers will start his seventh season at the helm of the National League as the dean of major league skippers.

The Dodgers signed Lasorda to another one-year contract Thursday that will make him the manager with the most continuous service with the same club in the big leagues in 1983.

He earned the distinction with the retirement of Earl Weaver, who managed the Baltimore Orioles for 14 years before quitting at the end of the 1982 season.

The terms of Lasorda's contract were not disclosed, but its length is in keeping the Dodger policy of one-year deals for managers.

Lasorda was named as Walter Alston's successor in the final days of the 1976 season and became the Dodger manager in 1977. Alston managed the team for 23 years under 23 separate one-year agreements.

"All I want is a one-year contract," the 55-year-old Lasorda said in response to a question at a press conference. "I don't believe I want to be tied down."

The Dodgers have won three NL pennants and one World Series under Lasorda, who has completed 33 years as a player, coach, scout and manager in the organization.

Choice of hypnotist is important, says Moore

Paid Advertisement

Hypnotism as a means of behavior modification has finally gained much respect, as well as increased popularity during the past few years, according to Dr. Marie Moore, certified hypno-therapist and psycologist. But Moore warns that before undergoing hypnotherapy, one must be sure that the person they choose is competent to practice hypnosis on another person. "If the hypnotherapist does not have at last 300 hours of training in hypnotherapy and a minimum of a bachelor's degree in psycology, I would not consider that person a qualified, trained hypnotherapist," says Moore.

Moore, who has a Ph.D. in psycology, and is a state-certified hypnotherapist, believes that hypnosis can help in curing many behavioral problems, such as smoking, obesity, nail-biting, bed-wetting and others. Moore has had a great deal of success, particularly, with helping men and women with weight problems.

Attempting to lose weight can sometimes be more depressing than being overweight, according to Moore. In today's world, the emphasis is on being slim. Fashions are designed for the slender figure and the overweight person is often ignored. The back to basics approach for the 80's is one of exercise and proper diet. This is great for the individual who can resist the temptation of overeating and has the time and inclination to devote to exercise. This is where hypnotherapy can help.

There is one primary reason people are overweight, according to Moore: they overeat. "It's that simple," says Moore, "but the reasons why a person overeats is not that simple."

According to Moore, most of the reasons for overeating come under the classification of stress. These include nervous tension, anxiety, depression, and many others which will vary from individual to individual. Moore says that because we are trained from birth to overcome anxiety through oral gratification, food is sometimes used as a "pacifier". There are many causal factors which lead to overeating, but Moore stresses hypnosis as the natural way to lose weight. Weight is lost without pills, shots, crash diets or any strenuous exercise programs. All efforts are directed toward reasonable weight loss and permanent maintenance through behavior modification hypnotherapy, with continued practice through learned autohypnosis.

Moore explains some of the facts surrounding hypnosis:

The phenomena of hypnosis is popularly believed to be attributable to some extent to the greatly increased degree of suggestability of the patient while under hypnosis. One example of this, according to Moore, is that of a properly motivated subject being convinced in hypnosis that his addiction to cigarettes is lessened, and having this occur.

Emotional control in hypnosis and hypnotherapy has been generally attributed to the deep state of relaxation and the degree of increased suggestibility accomplished. However, researchers in Scotland have found that natural substances called endorphines can signal receptors in the brain, and these natural body chemicals can alleviate pain. It is plausible, then, to assume that these endorphine receptors are found not only in the pathways of the brain, but also in the deep brain area that rules the emotions. From that point, it seems a possibility that effective control of emotions, moods, tension and anxiety in hypnotherapy may involve the utilization of those receptors and natural body chemicals in much the same way that drugs are used.

Moore stresses, however, that it isn't required that we fully understand the processes and capabilities within ourselves in order to be the beneficiary of our own healing capabilities.

For more information concerning the benefits of hypnosis as an aid to weight reduction, call Dr. Moore at 685-3344.

Country has special 'heavenly hash'

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — The Milky Way youth center has everything — music, movies, dancing and six kinds of hashish on sale — all right across the street from the police station.

"Lebanon, Red Lebanon, Moroccan, Turkish, Kashmir, Afghan," reads the multinational menu at the hashish sales booth in the city-subsidized youth center.

A former dairy, the Milky Way is one of hundreds of youth centers, cafes and coffee bars throughout the Netherlands where police — backed by prosecutors and liberal drug laws — turn a blind eye to small, retail sales of what they call "soft drugs" — marijuana and its far more popular and powerful derivative, hashish.

Low price, high quality, easy availability and almost no legal risk has given the Netherlands the nickname "Hash Heaven," for Dutch and foreign users alike.

As a result, places like the Milky Way, with rock-bottom prices starting at about 25 guilders for 5 grams (the equivalent of $50 an ounce), have become a prime tourist attraction.

More than 90 percent of the several hundred American troops arrested on drug offenses while crossing borders into West Germany in the last year obtained their drugs in the Netherlands, according to U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration statistics.

Jerome Mattioli, the agency's chief in the Netherlands, refers to it as "the drug capital of Western Europe...because of the permissiveness and the amounts of drugs flowing into the country."

"The novelty of just going to a place and purchasing hash doesn't wear off," agreed one Milky Way patron, 22-year-old American Joao Silverstein, one recent evening.

"There are people who come here every day. I just come when I have friends I want to show the multimedia experience," he said.

At the core of the hashish traffic is a nationwide law enforcement policy of neglecting hashish enforcement and concentrating on the trade in "hard drugs," which police define as heroin, cocaine and amphetamines.

A 1976 amendment to the drug law reduced to a fineable misdemeanor possession of up to 30 grams (about an ounce) of marijuana products for personal use, but still forbids dealing in the substance.

However, 1980 prosecutors' guidelines drawn up by the Justice Ministry stress enforcement of laws against "hard drug" traffickers rather than house dealers in soft drugs, unless they advertise their product or act "provocatively." Police decisions to prosecute must be approved by the local prosecutor's office, according to the guidelines.

Hashish has been the soft drug of choice here ever since the drug culture took root in the 1960s, with Lebanon the major source.

Its popularity is reflected in the position of the Justice Ministry's consultation bureau for alcohol and drugs.

"It's not really physically addictive," maintained a spokeswoman for the bureau. "It shouldn't really harm your mind and body. But of course nobody's really sure about that." She asked to remain anonymous because she also is a welfare caseworker and deals with patients.

Most major Dutch cities have youth centers like the Milky Way with so-called hashish "house dealers" unofficially sanctioned by local authorities, according to the government's Central Criminal Research and Information Service.

In addition, the drug is also sold under the table at coffee houses with the acquiescence of police.

Amsterdam alone has hundreds of such places, as well as about 10 youth centers with house dealers, according to Chief Inspector Barry Thomas de Koningh, head of the Amsterdam police narcotics squad.

"Everything is illegal," he said. "With the shortness of manpower, we have to make priorities. My priorities are cocaine, amphetamine and heroin."

There is no steady monitoring of hashish sales, de Koningh added, and therefore no official estimate of how much is sold to Amsterdam's "tens of thousands" of hashish smokers.

The Amsterdam narcotics squad confiscated about 4,400 pounds of hashish last year, with about 30,800 pounds seized nationwide.

De Koningh estimated seizures as only about 5 to 10 percent of the total smuggled into the Netherlands by air, land and through Rotterdam, the world's largest port.

Indian government hardening laws regarding travelers without visas

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW DELHI, India — Indian authorities Wednesday clamped down on travelers arriving in India without valid visas as a security precaution for the Asian games, which are scheduled to begin here Nov. 19.

The sudden decision, announced last weekend but enforced from midnight Tuesday, caused confusion at the country's international airports and for airlines, travel agents and embassies.

Video junkie turns his addiction into dollars

Copley News Service

Combat in the stratosphere, one against 13.

Even for a practiced veteran like Ray Giguette, death seemed certain. But Giguette was expressionless and calm as he worked the controls of his ship.

Electronically guided missiles were streaking down on him even before the enemy was within range of his own weapons. Giguette coolly sideslipped the incoming fire and waited for the enemy to come into range.

Giguette positioned himself on the leader and pressed the red button marked "FIRE."

A white-hot blast left his nose cannon and caught the lead ship on the left wing. The entire craft exploded in a burst of red. A clean kill. Giguette kept firing.

The ship positioned behind the leader exploded. But now the enemy was yawing back and forth, evading him.

Suddenly, flanking fire was coming in from the right now. He sideslipped to the left to evade it. Another burst. This time from the left!

There was a blast of fiery red. And 24-year-old Giguette of Downey, Calif., was dead.

But even in death, he was calm. He fished another token out of his pocket, fed it into the video game, and renewed the battle.

In the world of video games, latest arena in the battle of Man vs. Machine, Giguette has spent a year developing an edge for himself, collecting tips on 10 of the more favored — and frustrating — video games from electronic arcade enthusiasts as old as 22 and as young as 12.

He has compiled his findings into a small paperback book entitled simply, "How to Win! at Video Games."

Giguette, who holds a bachelor's degree in business computers from California State University, sees himself as an ally of the consumer.

He's hoping his book will enable video-game addicts like himself to play better, thus earning more free plays and thereby slowing the games' consumption of their quarters and dollar bills.

For each of the 10 games on which he writes, Giguette includes a brief description of the game, an interview with an expert — usually identified only by a first name — and a list of suggested tactics.

Those who take on Space Invaders, for example, are advised to "destroy whole columns, especially the two end columns."

Some other tips on games include:

—Space Invaders: "After the first two waves, concentrate less on the saucers and more on the aliens."

—Missile Command: "Begin your defense with a saturation line across the screen, then pick off the remaining targets."

—Pac-Man: "Eat an energizer when at least three monsters are close behind."

Other games Giguette investigated are Asteroids, Berzerk, Armor Attack, Astro Invader, Phoenix and Galaxian.

For the dedicated video gamesman, such advice is a matter of dollars and cents, if not "life and death."

After spending a year's time — and by his own estimate, about $600 — researching his book, Giguette says a video addict like himself can expect a steady diet of more and tougher electronic opponents.

"I think Pong was about the first. It was very, very simple and people got bored," he said. "The trend now is to make them as hard as possible without frustrating people from the very beginning."

Problems in Ireland's prisons mirror problems in Irish streets

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Protestants and Roman Catholics fear a new outbreak of violence in Northern Ireland's prisons, where convicted guerrillas from both sides carry on their sectarian feuding behind bars.

The crisis in the heavily guarded prisons, long a battleground in Northern Ireland's 13-year-old conflict, mirrors the mounting sectarian tension in the streets. Twenty-one people have been killed in the last two months.

The prison feuds, with convicted Protestant and Catholic gunmen demanding segregation from each other, erupted last month into cellblock clashes in Belfast's Maze prison, Magilligan prison near Londonderry and a women's institution at Armagh.

Tommy Lyttle, a leader of the militant Protestant Ulster Defense Association, said the cellblocks are "a powderkeg" and warned "people are going to get killed if the situation worsens.

Security authorities say the trouble could spread to the streets.

At least 12 inmates in Magilligan were hospitalized after a riot Oct. 20 between convicted Protestants and guards of the mainly Protestant prison service. The outbreak occurred the same day as violence-marred election for a new provincial assembly.

In a three-day rampage, 120 Protestant loyalists wrecked cellblocks in the Maze, where last year 10 jailed Catholic nationalists starved themselves to death in a seven-month hunger strike demanding political prisoner status.

And the weekly Republican News, an IRA publication, said three Catholic women in Armagh were beaten by Protestants while a movie was being shown in the prison chapel.

Under Britain's controversial "criminalization" policy of treating convicted guerrillas as criminals rather than political prisoners — the root of the IRA hunger strike — Protestants and Catholics are mixed regardless of politics or religion.

The British believe that segregation will bestow a form of political prisoner status on the guerrilla groups and permit them to establish tight command structures that would turn the cellblocks into virtual training camps, as happened in the "special category" compounds before 1976.

Cellblock segregation was one of the demands made by the hunger strikers, all members of the outlawed Provisional Irish Republican Army or its Marxist splinter faction, the Irish National Liberation Army.

Reagan may propose jobs program backed by more taxes

By OWEN ULLMANN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In major post-election shifts, President Reagan is hinting he will propose a job-creating public works program financed with higher gasoline taxes, and reduce his record military budget.

Reagan said Thursday night he is giving "deep thought" to a plan to rebuild the nation's transportation system — and create 320,000 jobs in the process — with a 5-cents-a-gallon rise in the federal gasoline tax. The tax is now 4 cents a gallon.

Thus, he backed away from his previous hard-line stands against tax increases and government "make-work" programs,

Reagan justified his consideration of the plan by saying that job creation is not the main objective of the program, and by calling the gasoline levy a "user fee," not a tax.

Nevertheless, his comments at a nationally televised news conference suggested he is open to some alteration of his economic policy course in the wake of Democratic gains in last week's congressional elections, a continued rise in unemployment and mounting calls from congressional Democrats and Republicans for a federal jobs program.

At his last news conference six weeks ago, the president said it would take "a palace coup" for him to support new tax increases and he scorned public works projects as "artificial programs that make for dead end and temporary jobs" and only delay economic recovery.

In another policy change Thursday night, the president said he would look for savings in the new military budget he will send Congress next year, provided the cuts do not delay his plans for closing the weapons edge that he contended is held by the Soviet Union.

"We're looking at everything," he said. "I would have to say that, yes, if there are savings that can be made without delaying or setting back what we think is the improvement we must have if we are going to close that window of vulnerability (to Soviet military superiority)."

Reagan did not alter his position on Social Security, however. He pledged he would do nothing to cut present benefits of people now retired, raised the possibility of changes in benefits for future retirees and spoke against raising the retirement system's payroll taxes beyond previously scheduled increases as a way to restore it to solvency.

Both parties in Congress favor some type of jobs program to combat unemployment, which rose from 10.1 percent in September to 10.4 percent last month. The Democrats, however, are pushing a more ambitious plan than the one Reagan is considering.

Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., chairman of the Congressional Joint Economic Committee, is proposing a $3.6 billion program that would create 600,000 public works jobs in communities hardest hit by unemployment. Reuss would finance the plan with money Reagan is now earmarking for defense.

The Republican plan, promoted by Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis, would raise $5.5 billion a year, with the primary purpose of rebuilding crumbling highways and bridges and aiding mass transit systems most in need. But the secondary effect of the program, job creation, has not been lost to the administration.

Members of Congress from both parties also are pressing Reagan to scale back the record military build-up plan he has drafted for fiscal 1984 to cut the unprecedented budget deficits the government faces — more than $150 billion a year in 1983 and 1984, by most estimates.

Reagan said Lewis proposed the transportation rebuilding program just the day before. "No decision has been made," he said, but added that "it is under consultation and deep thought by all of us."

"I don't view this proposal as, let's say, a job-creating program, although, obviously, there would be jobs created by going forward with that effort," he said.

"But what we're talking about here is ... if we do it, it would be a user fee. It would be dedicated to rebuilding our highways and bridges," he added. "This is a problem that must be met sooner or later."

At his Sept. 28 news conference, by contrast, Reagan was asked if he could flatly rule out any tax increases, specifically an increase in the gasoline tax.

"Unless there's a palace coup and I'm overtaken or overthrown, no, I don't see the necessity for that."

On Thursday night, Reagan insisted he remains adamantly opposed to the types of public works programs sponsored by Demnocrats in the past. He said he will not return "to things that have been tried before in previous recessions, namely make-work job programs with the government taking billions of dollars out of the private sector to spend on these projects."

He said the government has spent $66 billion on jobs programs over the past seven years, yet unemployment has continued to climb. "We're not going to go down the dead-end street that just leaves us set up for another recession," he added.

Contending his administration is "on the right course," Reagan said "we can't resolve the problem and really do what is right for the unemployed unless we make the economy sound, expand the economy, and thus create the jobs that we must have."

Asked if he thought the unemployment rate, now at a 42-year high, would climb higher, he said, "It could possibly go up some more. It could go the other way or it could stay level."

Tax experts taking wait-and-see attitude toward WPT ruling

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Energy producers and royalty owners may applaud last week's decision by U. S. District Judge Ewing T. Kerr against the Crude Oil Windfall Profits Tax, but tax experts are in a wait-and-see posture.

"It looks like the next thing that's going to happen is an appeal, but since the judge said the government can continue to collect the tax, I wonder who is going to initiate the appeal," said John Grimland, tax partner with Main Hurdman.

"Why would the government want to appeal?"

Another local accountant says if the tax is ultimately repealed, it will be the salvation of some small energy companies here.

If the decision is appealed to the Supreme Court, will the justices agree with Kerr? "We expect the decision to be appealed, and we realize that while the government may have a difficult case, there will be political overtones which may influence the eventual outcome," said Stephen Huggins, tax partner with Price Waterhouse.

"We've found in the past that it's very difficult to predict the outcome of tax issues brought into the court system," he added.

If the decision is upheld, will Congress write a new windfall profits tax? Will it include natural gas along with crude oil in a new tax?

"We fully expect Congress to rewrite the law because they don't seem bent on reducing expenditures," said John H. Tompkins, tax partner with Peat Marwick Mitchell & Company of Midland. "They are apparently motivated by increasing revenues.

"The Reagan Administration could be between a rock and a hard spot."

The President has repeatedly stated he would repeal the tax, yet as Tompkins said, "What Reagan will do is anybody's guess. And he has been silent to this point."

Both Reagan and Congress are staring down the barrel of a deficit estimated to reach $155- to $175 billion in fiscal 1983. That money has to come from somewhere.

The tax was supposed to have brought in $227 billion in the next six years, based on ever-escalating oil prices. If the tax is finally killed, the nation's coffers stand to lose $37 billion in revenues and/or tax refunds in fiscal 1983 alone, Tompkins said.

Twenty percent of that amount, or $7.4 billion, would be directly tied to the Permian Basin, where about 20 percent of all American crude oil is produced. An influx of that kind of money, or the absence of a pay-out of that amount in taxes, and could be the salvation of some struggling companies, he added.

"Our belief is that the 25 percent decline in oil and gas production in the current year is due, at least in part, to the windfall profits tax," Tompkins said. "The tax has not been to their (oil operators) advantage, though it has lessened their federal tax burden. But it is a cash outlay, so they have had less funds to plow back into looking for oil and gas."

The future is clouded. The Treasury Department has announced it will appeal the decision, but that action has to be made by the Justice Department, which has 60 days from the date of Kerr's ruling to file its appeal.

The Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA), a party to the suit, has also announced it may appeal the decision, which did not address the question of taxing property unjustly, but did say that such a tax should be uniformly assessed in all energy producing states.

Some Alaskan crude oil had been exempted from the tax.

Tompkins did not discount the possibility that if the timing is right, in relation to decontrol of natural gas prices, Congress might add taxation of gas to the oil WPT, if and when it rewrites the law.

If the tax should be repealed, the refund energy companies might receive would be considered ordinary taxable income. Currently, the WPT, an excise tax, is deductible for federal income tax purposes.

Public accounting firms such as Peat Marwick believed the tax was wrong two years ago and let Congress know it. "The law was not passed without Congress having been warned it was unconstitutional," Tompkins says. Frank Burke of Dallas, director of Peat Marwick's energy tax practice, spearheaded the move against the WPT by lobbying aggressively in Washington.

"Burke first raised the issue at the time the bill was on the floor, and he provided information to members of Congress showing the tax was unconstitutional."

There is no question the WPT has affected accounting firms as much as it has oil companies. "It's been a very difficult tax to administer," Grimland said. The U.S. Treasury department has in fact recently issued a 136-page tract explaining the regulations involved.

According to Tompkins, the tax "increased our work load as well as our problems. The amount of paperwork is insurmountable. The number of people it takes to comply with the law has not yet reached its peak."

Most public accounting firms have increased their accounting, engineering and computer programming staffs as a result, as have most of their clients.

Personal computer explosion puts Briton's products on top

By JAMES PELTZ
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Amid the explosion of personal computers, nowhere has the combustion been more intense than in sales of the under-$150 machines designed by a reserved Briton named Clive Sinclair.

His first wedge-shaped, 12-ounce computer, the ZX80, came out in early 1980 and Sinclair Research Ltd. sold 100,000 of them in a year. In March 1981 came the ZX81, a more advanced but similarly sized model that logged sales of 500,000 units by last August.

And this year Timex Corp., which manufactures the ZX81 in Scotland for Sinclair, agreed to build and market a machine similar to the ZX81 but with more memory, the Timex Sinclair 1000. Whereas the ZX81 has been available in the United States through mail-order only, the TS1000 is being sold directly through U.S. retail outlets at a suggested price of only $99.95.

Sinclair also has a more advanced computer, the ZX Spectrum, that is sold in the United Kingdom and is slated for export early next year.

Combined, some 200,000 Sinclair computers are produced monthly — output Sinclair and some industry analysts say is the highest in the business.

But the man behind the success, a bearded and balding 42-year-old redhead, appears unimpressed by the popularity of his machines, perhaps because he has had his share of close calls with failure.

Indeed, Sinclair views success and failure as did Kipling: "I treat the two imposters both the same," he says.

In a recent interview during one of his several U.S. trips a year, Sinclair sketched how he manages his Cambridge, England-based firm of which he owns 95 percent. Slim, with silver-rimmed glasses and freckles creeping up his forehead, Sinclair answers questions quietly but briefly and is shy about expressing his feelings.

Success to him mainly is the "excitement of developing a product that's really new and which people really take to." Financial reward, he says, "is the means to the end," meaning development of new products, and work is under way for a "flat-screen" television and an electric car.

Sinclair Research posted revenue of about 27 million pounds last year, he says, or about $45 million at current exchange rates. And revenue will be up this year, although he declines to be more specific.

Sinclair sees his job mainly as the firm's innovator. "My work is in the mind," he says and, while he may design his ideas on paper, much of a machine's final details are often drawn by an employee.

"Having got the ball rolling, the project under way, I monitor it on a weekly basis," Sinclair says. "I watch that side very closely. The other sides of the business I'm less close to, really. I'm not a particularly good manager, pe se. I'm not a 'hands-on' man."

Born in London, Sinclair learned basic electronics in school and at age 17 he went to work as a technical journalist.

Two years later he joined Mensa, which describes itself as an international association of intelligent people and which requires a high IQ score for membership. Sinclair, currently chairman of the British Mensa Society, downplays the membership as having any special significance, saying "it's a social thing" and simply gives him a chance to meet people.

In 1962 he founded his own company called Sinclair Radionics, whose first products included radio and amplifier kits that were sold by mail order.

Sinclair Radionics grew, and its product line expanded into hi-fidelity systems and electronic instruments. He married at age 22, had three children and moved from London to Cambridge in 1967.

Later that year Sinclair launched the $185 Executive, one of the first true pocket calculators, and with revenue rising, he invested heavily in other projects, mainly digital watches and a pocket TV.

But matters soured by 1975. A new digital wrist watch introduced that year, the Black Watch, ran into problems when Sinclair had difficulty getting sufficient supplies of a new computer chip used in the watch.

Revenue began turning down, yet other Sinclair projects were demanding substantial funds for development. By the end of its fiscal year ended April 1976, the firm was losing money.

Sinclair went to the government-financed National Enterprise Board for an injection of cash in late 1976. A pocket TV, with a two-inch screen, was unveiled in early 1977 and new calculators emerged the following year.

But by 1979 the board and Sinclair were falling apart. Published reports suggest the board was losing faith in Sinclair's ability to generate profitable products and that he was encouraged to concentrate on electronic instruments rather than consumer electronics.

In July 1979 the enterprise board and Sinclair split, with the board retaining the instrument business and Sinclair taking part of his research team to form Sinclair Research Ltd.

Good tax news sparks late stock rally, death boosts dollar

By The Associated Press

Encouraging tax news lifted the stock market to a late rally, while news of Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev's death sparked the dollar to new highs against the weak French and Italian currencies.

In the weak auto industry, meanwhile, indefinite layoffs among U.S. workers rose this week and car production fell.

The late upsurge Thursday on Wall Street apparently was in response to hopes for passage of a bill to give more favorable tax treatment to some investment profits.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down more than 4 points with 30 minutes left in the session, closed with a 10.21 gain at 1,054.73.

Trading was relatively quiet, however, with many financial institutions closed Thursday in observance of Veterans Day. Volume on the New York Stock Exchange slowed to 78.41 million shares from 113.24 million Wednesday.

As the session headed into its final minutes, financial news wires carried a report that a Wall Street official was hopeful about chances for passage of a bill to cut the holding period for long-term tax treatment of capital gains from a year to six months.

Edward I. O'Brien, president of the Securities Industry Association, assessed prospects for the measure as "fairly good." Three times in the past two years, similar proposals have worked their way close to passage, only to be killed in last-minute congressional maneuvering.

Short-term capital gains are taxed as ordinary income, at rates up to 50 percent. The maximum tax rate on long-term gains was lowered to 20 percent last year.

Traders evidently saw the prospect of a shortened holding period as a potential stimulus to the market in general, and brokers in particular. Some of Thursday's biggest gainers were the shares of publicly held Wall Street firms and financial-services companies that own brokerage houses.

Brezhnev's death sent European investors scurrying to the safety of the dollar in what one London dealer called "a gut reaction."

Besides hitting record peaks against the French franc and Italian lira, the dollar flirted with six-year highs against the British pound and West German mark. It also rose in lackluster U.S. trading, but continued to lose ground against a strengthening Japanese yen.

Gold, another haven for cash in times of political uncertainty, surged briefly. But bullion fell back in listless trading, ending the day at $404.50 a troy ounce, off nearly $10 from the day's highs but up $2 from Wednesday's late bid.

Indefinite layoffs reported among U.S. autoworkers rose this week to 252,199, the second straight week the number has been above 250,000, the five major domestic automakers reported.

The increase from 251,490 last week was due to increased furloughs at Ford Motor Co., Chrysler Corp. and American Motors Corp. Before last week, the last time reported layoffs had topped 250,000 was in the first week of April.

Temporary layoffs totaled 41,000, down from 41,935 last week.

Meanwhile, Automotive News said the companies will build 19.3 percent fewer cars in this country this week than they built last week.

The 88,730 cars this week will compare with 109,908 last week, it said. It is a 10.1 percent drop from 98,652 built the same week last year.

But the lower production does not affect plants making luxury cars, according to another industry journal, Ward's Automotive Reports. In fact, overtime is planned at Ford's Wixom, Mich., luxury car plant and General Motors Corp.'s Cadillac plant in Detroit, it said.

So far this year, U.S. car production remains 21.3 percent behind 1981's already depressed level, Automotive News reported, adding that 4.51 million cars have been assembled so far in 1982, down from 5.74 million at this time last year.

Air Force says TI broke rules

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Texas Instruments Inc. violated federal regulations by submitting three reports containing sensitive information for use at an international computer conference without first obtaining Defense Department approval, the Air Force says.

"The papers were about design testing and manufacturing process of micro circuitry. They involved fairly sensitive data concerning advanced technique and technology," Air Force spokeswoman Capt. Valerie Elbow said Thursday in Washington.

She said Air Force officials had refused to grant TI clearance this week because they were afraid the papers would give communist countries information they have not obtained through independent research.

The three reports were to be included in papers distributed at the International Test Conference, which was scheduled to open here today. The two-day conference is expected to draw more than 2,000 computer experts from around the world.

Conference chairman Conrad Zagwyn said TI's last-minute withdrawal will force the organizing committee to rip apart the conference's digest of papers.

Two trade magazines that received the reports for study have been told to destroy them, conference officials said.

Norman Neureiter, vice president of corporate staff for TI in Richardson, Texas, refused to comment on the content of the reports or the Air Force objections. TI is under contract with the Air Force for computer development.

The three papers were called "Concurrent Checking of Program Flow in VLSI Processors," "An Architecture of Testable VLSI Processors" and "Analysis and Simulation of Parallel Signature Analyzers," a conference spokesman said.

"This happens in the high-tech business and mistakes can be made. You have to expect that," Zagwyn said.

Last ditch attempt being made to stop Getty project

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Florida environmentalists have launched a last-ditch effort to halt Getty Oil Co.'s plans to drill in Santa Rosa County's East Bay, urging Gov. Bob Graham and state lawmakers to convene a special legislative session on the issue.

"Having met with the governor," said Charles Lee of the Florida Audubon Society, "it's clear that he would like to do whatever is legally possible to prevent the drilling from taking place."

But Steve Hull, Graham's press secretary, said Thursday in Tallahassee that the governor won't call a special session.

"We don't have any plans to call a special session on the Getty Oil matter," Hull said.

The 1983 Legislature could bring the issue up by mustering a two-thirds vote in both houses when it convenes Tuesday for its ceremonial swearing-in.

"There have been a lot of rumors going around that several legislators are considering that (bringing matter up Tuesday)," Hull said.

Environmentalists hope to get around a Sept. 8 state appeals court order that could force the Florida Cabinet to issue drilling permits when it meets Tuesday. One possibility, Lee said, is a special bill declaring the court's interpretation of a disputed 1972 no-drill law is wrong.

"I would say that it's almost certain that the Cabinet is going to act on the 18th to issue the permit," said Lee. "The question, I suppose, is whether there is a legislative solution to beat them to that decision."

Michelle Beale, a Getty Oil spokeswoman in Houston, told the Pensacola News-Journal Thursday, the firm may be sending a lobbyist to Tallahassee, although "we don't anticipate they could block us retroactively."

Successful firm in Producers Forum spotlight

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Anytime a corporation starts spending money like mad, it's bound to attract attention, so the string of purchases made recently by Petro-Lewis Corporation of Denver is hard not to notice.

So far in 1982, the firm has raised 60 percent of all the income funds raised in the oilpatch — last month it raised $113 million alone.

Since its inception 12 years ago, the company has acquired $2.6 billion in producing oil and gas properties. It raises capital by offering the public limited partnerships in $2,500 minimum increments, with an average rate of return around 20 percent.

The money is used to buy and manage production. In the past 10 months, Petro-Lewis bought a chunk of Placid Oil interests for $412 million, and paid $110 million for Midland oilman Clayton Williams' Austin Chalk properties. Now it is wrapping up a purchase of $165 million worth of Coquina producing properties and $770 million worth of Conoco's.

"People all of a sudden are trying to find out who we are," admitted Bud Isaacs, senior vice president — property acquisitions at Petro-Lewis.

"It's been a fairly wild and woolly time for us, but we feel there has never been a better time to buy than now."

He spoke Thursday to the West Texas Producers' Forum.

The key to the 12-year old firm's success is that it buys cash flow, and does so only after lots of research.

"You have to know more about what you are buying than the seller knows about what he is selling," Isaacs said. "There's no rule of thumb on the purchase price, but when you walk into a seller's office, you have to determine if he's off his rocker or not — if there's pride of ownership.

"And, the seller always offers you what he thinks he owns, so we check all ownership and burdens."

Petro-Lewis buys from majors, independents, deceased oil operators' estates, drilling program sponsors and individuals.

Before making an offer, the company tears a prospect down to its lowest common denominator and looks at it lease by lease, inspecting reserves and estimated recoverable hydrocarbons, predicted rate of recovery, production and workover expenses and possible future net revenues.

The company began when drilling contractor Jerry Lewis moved to Denver and started a small drilling fund company. Almost as an afterthought, he decided to start raising money from the public to create an income fund, where the money would be used to buy producing properties.

Today, Petro-Lewis has 2,200 employees, almost 126,000 limited partnerships, and a computer as big as NASA's to handle the mountain of paperwork associated with lease management, royalty and delayed rental payments, taxes and so on.

The goal stated in the original prospectus offerings was to offer the investor a 12 percent rate of return, but, Isaacs said, results have often been much better, especially for older properties bought several years ago.

"Our rate of return now is averaging 16- to 24 percent. We had a couple of gas partnerships back in 1973 that were worth about a $10,000 investment, and we couldn't give them away. Today, those properties are worth about $200- or $250,000."

The company does no direct retailing itself, but wholesales whatever it has "in the warehouse" to regional investment bankers who, in turn, offer the partnerships to the public.

Petro-Lewis can raise a great deal of money fast because it is strong in marketing, Isaacs said. It offers satellite transmissions and slide shows of its meetings and presentations to investment houses.

"It's just amazing," Isaacs said. "When we did the Beta Field deal (offshore California), we raised $300 million in 33 days and we had to turn back $50 million because the offering was oversubscribed."

The average investment in the firm's deals is $8,500, or $6,000 more than the required minimum. "Sixty percent of the partners' money in, is re-invested in subsequent Petro-Lewis deals because people elect not to take the distribution (profits)", Isaacs said, which makes for a "pretty good built-in thing for us to grow."

"It's a completely different type of people than the drilling funds draw. We're not looking for people who are looking for a tax shelter. We want people who are measuring the value of this investment for investment's sake."

Petro-Lewis is facing more competition now, but the firm still expects 1982 sales income to be $466,321,650. Sales continue to be strong because the public and analysts perceive that with lower oil and gas prices, now is a good time to buy producing properties, Isaacs said. Coupled with that, Petro-Lewis has increased its marketing efforts.

No one acquisition has the characteristics the company wants, he said. "You've got to mix deals, just like you can't put all your money in one drilling prospect. The key to our success is we've been able to spread, to diversify, and put a partnership into many acquisitions. Each partnership has interests in no less than 10, and sometimes up to 20, different acquistions."

Petro-Lewis inspects potential items for its warehouse by examining each prospect lease by lease. The company checks all engineering reports "to try to undress it and see what's really there." It's title people go to the courthouses and check all ownership records. A team of accountants looks at all the check stubs involved.

"This Conoco deal is one of the better buys of the decade," Isaacs said, "but in six weeks' time, we evaluated everything they had.

"If you don't do all this, to check for variances, you'll get hooked," he added. "It's buyer beware. We throw out three-fourths of what we're offered."

Since July 1970, Petro-Lewis has been offered a total of 3,723 possible acquisitions. The company gave a cursory look, with no bid, to 74 percent of them. It did an engineering review and made a bid for 19 percent, and ultimately, successfully acquired only 272 properties, or 7 percent.

Isaacs said the company tries to buy the Mercedes, not Chevrolets, of the oil field, because there is a better resale value.

Sunset Commission takes look at RRC

AUSTIN — Austin attorney Richard Lowerre, on behalf of the Sierra Club and West Texas landowners, urged the Sunset Advisory Commission Thursday to transfer responsibility over underground injection wells totally to the Department of Water Resources.

Speaking to the SAC during its review of the Railroad Commission, Lowerre argued that the RRC is in a "conflict position" in attempting to regulate injection efforts associated with oil and gas production because the agency's principal duty is to promote development of such production.

Lowerre, who has represented the Southwest Soil and Water Protection Association in battles between its members with oil and gas interests, said transfer of authority to DWR "would not cause major problems" for either agency.

He restated the arguments of West Texas farmers and ranchers that use of fresh water in some oilfield operations is wasteful, and that the RRC hasn't acted to protect freshwater sources from pollution from drilling and disposal operations.

The RRC, Lowerre said, has taken the position "that it lacks authority to stop the use of fresh water for enhanced or secondary recovery type injection operations," although the association has asked the RRC to require use of saltwater when saltwater is "reasonably available."

"Unless the commission or the Texas Department of Water Resources has the authority and directive to limit injections of freshwater when saltwater is available," Lowerre said in a statement delivered to the SAC, "injection of freshwater in areas short of fresh water will continue."

"For example," he said, "in Gaines County, where the water table is dropping and farmers are finding that full costs for pumping of groundwaters for irrigation is getting very high, over a dozen operators are taking millions of gallons of freshwater for secondary recovery.

"That injected freshwater is lost forever," he said, "but salt water could be used with negligible added costs to the oil and gas operators."

"As in most cases," Lowerre added, "the injection facilities in Gaines County are disigned to handle saltwater. It's simply cheaper to pump freshwater under existing law."

Lowerre also argued that the divided jurisdiction between the RRC and DWR is hampering efforts by Texas to receive delegation from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to administer the Federal wastewater discharge permit.

Transferring of authority over all injection programs to DWR would eliminate the "conflict that exists in the Railroad Commission," and make it possible for Texas to receive control from EPA, he said.

The SAC also heard from Midge Erskine, Midland, who complained that the Railroad Commission has not corrected "horrible contamination problems" with water pollution in the West Texas area.

If the RRC enforced its own regulations, there would not be such problems, she commented.

The SAC also received a resolution from Sterling County regarding saltwater pollution problems in that area.

Offshore suit witnesses to be called this month

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — The U.S. Justice Department will begin calling witnesses later this month in a $1 billion suit brought by the State of Texas over a 3-year-old offshore oil revenues squabble.

The state rested its case Thursday after calling Los Angeles-based economic consultant Dr. Jeffrey Leitzinger, who testified the federal government received $106 million in benefits from development of its off shore leases that adjoin state-owned leases.

U.S. District Judge Robert Parker rejected a federal government request for dismissal of the suit; but recessed the trial for two weeks because of a previous commitment. Testimony will resume Nov. 30 with the first defense witnesses.

Justice Department attorney Margaret Strand had made the request for dismissal, saying Texas has "failed to show as a matter of fact or law any entitlement" to compensation for any alleged enhancement of federal land values and requested a halt to the trial.

Federal attorneys criticized Leitzinger for the methods he used in arriving at the state benefits figure.

The state contends the value of offshore federal lands to oil and gas developers has been enhanced by developing adjoining offshore, state-owned tracts without federal compensation.

Attorneys for the state argued that the enhancement hurts the state's ability to compete for top-dollar oil leases.

Amoco refinery does business as usual

TEXAS CITY, Texas (AP) — The atmosphere at an Amoco Oil Co. refinery here is "business as usual" despite threats against the facility, a spokesman for the firm says.

The plant still is operating normally despite "a threat of unspecified nature," spokesman John Vesey said Thursday night.

"Amoco Oil Co.'s Texas City refinery has received a demand that terminated employees be reinstated in their jobs. Threats against Amoco facilities were made if Amoco did not comply," Vesey said.

"We do not have a bomb threat," he said.

The demand comes about a month after Gulf Oil Chemical Co.'s largest chemical plant was shut down for about five days by a threat to blow up the facility unless extortionists were paid $15 million.

Union official Billie Jones Jr. said there have been discharges but no layoffs at the Amoco facility, but declined to detail the "discharges."

"I know something about it (the threat)," said Jones, secretary-treasurer of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Local 4-447. "But I won't comment any further. I just have nothing to say."

In Houston, Charles Craft, a spokesman for Amoco's parent company, Standard Oil of Indiana, refused to disclose when the demand was made, how many facilities were involved, or whether monetary demands were made or deadlines set.

Vesey said FBI agents were investigating the matter. FBI spokesman Ron Kettler declined comment.

Asked if the threat was a copy of a highly publicized extortion-bomb plot against the Gulf plant near Baytown, 30 miles east of Houston, Craft responded, "I have no idea, but we are taking it seriously."

Amoco's 1,200-acre refinery was built in 1934 about 45 miles south of Houston. It employs 1,800 people and processes about 415,000 barrels of crude oil daily.

The plant is Amoco's largest and is the nation's third-largest refinery. Only Exxon's refineries in Baytown and in Baton Rouge, La., are bigger.

The five-day shutdown of the Gulf chemical plant cost the company an estimated $5 million. Five bombs were found in the Gulf plant; one exploded while being disarmed and the other four were defused safely. Five Durango, Colo., residents have been charged in that extortion plot.

Pentagon considers F-18s

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon says it is reviewing how many F-18s to buy after pilots who tested the new jet recommended that the Navy should not use it as a carrier-based bomber.

The new evaluation will be part of a Pentagon decision, due Nov. 30, on whether to purchase the McDonnell Douglas-built plane as both a fighter and a bomber.

The Navy issued a statement earlier this week saying a six-month series of operational tests showed the jet's "combat radius fell short of Navy expectations. Additionally, as is common in new aircraft, some technical problems were uncovered which will require correction."

Navy sources, who declined to be named, said the operational tests, conducted in California, showed the plane couldn't fly the planned 550-mile range with a bomb load. The tests also showed the plane might be too heavy to land on a carrier and raised safety questions about the pilot's parachute.

Later, Pentagon spokesman Ben Welles said the Defense Department is "intensely reviewing" the entire question of how many of the planes to buy and how to use them.

"The F-18 has demonstrated it will fly the mission for which it was designed, both fighter and attack," said Frank Tomlinson, a spokesman for McDonnell Douglas Corp.

The Navy originally wanted 1,366 F-18 Hornets. They were to do double duty as a light fighter, replacing the aging F-4 Phantoms, and a bomber, replacing the current Grumman-built A-6. The plane's chief role would be as a bomber in conjunction with the F-14, the Navy's main carrier-based fighter.

The Pentagon has already approved purchase of the Hornet as a fighter. Forty of the planes have been purchased and 63 more are on order, all as fighters.

Navy officials have raised the prospect that if they don't buy as many of the problem-plagued F-18s as planned, they could purchase an improved, cheaper version of the A-6. Grumman has reportedly proposed to upgrade its plane and provide it more cheaply than the F-18.

The latest report of problems with using the F-18s as carrier-based bombers comes only three months after Navy Secretary John Lehman publicly threatened to stop buying the jet unless McDonnell Douglas cut the price. The company agreed to a new figure of $22.5 million, a figure Lehman said he was happy with.

The F-18, plagued by cost overruns, is expected to be the target again of congressional budget cutters when Congress reconvenes Nov. 29 for a lame-duck session. Pentagon spending measures for the current fiscal year will be considered then by both the House and Senate.

Next week, the House Appropriations defense subcommittee plans to start drafting the defense spending bill for fiscal 1983, which began Oct. 1. Rep. Joseph Addabo, D-N.Y., the panel's chairman, has been a critic of the plane.

Canine in dog house

PROVINCETOWN, Mass. (AP) — Deke, a 6-year-old husky who gets on well with people but hounds his fellow canines, is in the doghouse with local officials who have ordered him banished.

After several complaints last summer that Deke had attacked other dogs on private property, selectmen warned owner Walter Bogan that the animal must be leashed.

But after dog officer William Fields reported that Deke was still running unrestrained and that police had received two new complaints about his attacks, selectmen banished him from Provincetown.

Kennedy's yacht not lost at sea

Kennedy

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, taking a holiday cruise on a yacht, landed on Mykonos Island after harbor authorities lost touch with the luxury vessel, the island's mayor said today.

"The senator and his party anchored in the harbor on Thursday and spent an evening in a tavern in the port," said Mayor Matthew Apostolou.

Rumors had circulated Thursday in Washington, D.C., that Kennedy's yacht had lost radio contact with the outside world while cruising in the Aegean Sea in stormy weather. Aides to the Massachusetts Democrat said, however, that they talked to Kennedy several times via ship-to-shore phone and there were no indications of trouble.

Greek harbor authorities said they lost contact with the Lady Sarah, a large motor yacht belonging to shipowner Yannis Latsis, soon after the vessel left Ios Island on Wednesday.

Instead of heading for Santorini Island, as harbor authorities were informed, the Lady Sarah had cruised north to Mykonos in the shelter of other islands in the Cyclades group.

Apostolou said the Lady Sarah left Mykonos today, apparently headed back to Piraeus, the port of Athens.

A lieutenant in the Greek coast guard, Pan Galanis, said Kennedy "was missing only from the journalists."

Kennedy, on vacation after winning re-election last week, may meet with Socialist government officials on his return to Athens, Greek newspapers reported.

Herman

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A nightclub created to bring back big-band leader Woody Herman and his 15-piece Thundering Herd to the birthplace of jazz has closed after less than a year.

"The club didn't have the funds to pay us," said Bill Byrne, a member of the band and its road manager. "Most of the guys are going home."

The club, located in the Poydras Plaza shopping mall next to the Hyatt Regency Hotel, fulfilled Herman's longstanding desire to find a home base for his band.

It opened in December 1981 and reopened last month, after a summer break, but never achieved the popularity it needed.

Herman said Tuesday that things were picking up, but Byrne said the band members had been without pay for two weeks.

He said Herman and the band had stayed on while the club's owner, Poydras Productions, tried to raise the money, but their last performance was Tuesday night.

Noguchi

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Dr. Thomas Noguchi, demoted as Los Angeles County coroner after controversy about his statements on celebrity deaths, has been elected president of the National Association of Medical Examiners.

Noguchi, 55, said he felt honored that he was chosen for the post at the association's annual convention on Thursday. He will be officially installed tonight.

He said the vote "overshadows recent political decisions made about me."

Noguchi was demoted from coroner to physician-specialist by the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors in April after being accused of poor management, excessive absenteeism, misuse of powers to further his private interests and unprofessional speculation about the deaths of actress Natalie Wood and actor William Holden.

Noguchi, who is appealing his demotion to the Civil Service Commission, told his colleagues he expects to get his job back by next year.

"I will be returning to the office; it is certain," he said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jewish and evangelical Christian leaders, meeting in Washington in an effort to foster mutual understanding and cooperation, are urging support for Israel.

"It's time evangelical Christians spoke out with our traditional support for Israel and Jews," Doug Shearer of T.A.V. Evangelical Ministries in Hayward, Calif., said Thursday at the start the conference.

Rabbi David Z. Ben-Ami of Harrisburg, Pa., welcomed exchanges between Christans and Jews. "If we had had this dialogue in Germany, Naziism would not have arisen," he said.

Editors hear Reaganomics debate

CORONADO, Calif. (AP) — Democrats and Republicans can find a way to change the nation's economic course without participation by President Reagan, says Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., a member of the House Budget Committee.

And Rep. Jack Kemp, R-New York, said Thursday at a panel discussion on Reaganomics that he was "not going to 'stay the course,'" even though Reagan "has the nation headed in the right direction."

"Democrats working with Republican leaders like Jack Kemp and others who recognize the need for adjusting this course ... can come together whether or not the president is part of it," said Panetta at the 48th Associated Press Managing Editors convention.

"The president can be a part of it, that is an option," Panetta added.

The APME invited the White House to have a representative on the panel, but the White House declined when it learned Kemp was to appear.

"Since we felt many of the things he would be saying would be representative of the administration viewpoint, it did not make sense for us to send another person out there," said Deputy White House press secretary Pete Roussel.

However, Newsweek magazine reported this week that the White House wants to discredit Kemp as an economic spokesman. The magazine quoted unidentified White House sources as saying administration officials wouldn't make appearances with Kemp.

Roussel denied that the White House pulled out because it did not wish to share a stage with Kemp, a leading advocate of supply-side economics who opposed a Reagan-supported tax hike during the summer.

Panetta and Kemp agreed that the U.S. economy has been on a "roller coaster ride" between unemployment and inflation for the past 30 years. But they differed on what to do about it.

Panetta said some corrections can be made by creating public works projects; increasing revenue, particularly from a higher gasoline tax; cutting defense spending and changing the method of figuring cost of living increases for Social Security and other entitlement phograms.

But Kemp, whose district in Buffalo, N.Y., is suffering from 12 percent unemployment, said: "We have to put people baqk to work where they want to work, in the private sector, not the public sector. The idea of trying to balance the budget by raising taxes or slashing social programs is doomed to failure."

He said, "The challenge of 1983 before Congress is to not go back to the 1970s and fight unemployment with inflation."

Panetta said, "For the past 35 years, rapid swings in government policy have added to the instability of our economy. We've been on a roller coaster ride."

Panetta said that in the November elections, "There was a sense that the program was not working and the sacrifice being demanded was not legitimate for the program that was being implemented.

"All the signals right now signify change in the government policy," Panetta said.

"I told my constituents I was not going to 'stay the course,'" Kemp said. "Full employment without inflation is not impossible. We had it in the early 1960s under (President John F.) Kennedy and coming out of the war with (President Harry) Truman."

Kemp said that "economic freedom, justice, opportunity, and particularly, restoring incentives for non-inflationary economic growth," are the keys to economic health.

He said that despite Democratic gains in the mid-term elections last week, "The president has the nation headed in the right direction — irregardless of side issues and the terrible unemployment."

Bonilla says voting rights suits could be filed in Midland

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

In an attempt to provide fair representation for all people, voting rights lawsuits which were filed Thursday in Dawson and Howard counties on behalf of Mexican-Americans may be filed in Midland and Odessa, according to Ruben Bonilla, general counsel for League of United Latin American Citizens.

And if the outcome of the cases is similar to others filed in the past, Mexican-Americans in the area will have a long overdue chance to be represented by an elected official of their choice, Bonilla, former LULAC national president, stated during a luncheon meeting of the PetroPlex News Association Thursday.

The suits, filed against the City of Big Spring, Big Spring Independent School District, Howard County Junior College District, City of Lamesa and Lamesa Independent School District charge that continued use of at-large election schemes, by-place devices and racially polarized voting have kept minority candidates from winning seats on city councils, school boards or college boards of trustees.

FILED BY Southwest Voter Registration Education Project, the suits are not the first ones to be brought against city and county voting procedures. According to William Velasquez, SVREP executive director, 36 previous suits have been filed in Texas — and all were won.

Velasquez said that while registration and participation of Mexican-American voters has increased dramatically over the last few years, the number of candidates seeking positions has remained stagnate.

"Dawson County is about 40 percent minority," Rolando Rios, SVREP legal director, told media representatives. "Its school board elects seven board members, it's student body is over 50 percent minority, and yet there has never been a minority on the school board. In the city of Lamesa, as far as we know, there has only been one minority elected. In Big Spring, you have approximately 25 percent of the population in minorities and there has never been a minority elected to any of these elected positions. And there are 21 defendants named in this case against Howard County.

"Our position is that it's not that people don't register to vote and turn out to vote, our position is that the at-large system makes it impossible for minorities to get elected," he continued. "It works very simply. Fifty-one percent of the voting population elects 100 percent of the elected officials. What that means is that if you don't have numerical majority of the population in terms of voting strength, you will not get your representatives elected."

IN 1966, THERE were 488,000 Mexican-Americans registered to vote in the Southwest, Velasquez noted. In 1982, the number had risen to 870,000. SVREP estimates indicate that by 1984, 1 million Mexican-Americans will be registered to vote, he said.

"But we still can't win," Velasquez said. "There is something wrong with the election scheme that makes it impossible for Mexicans to win."

"For years now, Hispanics have continued to develop impressive demographic data," Bonilla said. "Hispanics continue to make up a greater and greater proportion of the overall West Texas population. In spite of this phenomenal population growth, here in West Texas and across Texas, Hispanics, by and large, are still denied access to major, governing bodies in all levels of government.

"We find that when there is ineffective, inadequate or no representation of Hispanics, that the resulting services to the Hispanic community also suffer," Bonilla continued. "At the city council level, we mean that city streets in Hispanic neighborhoods largely are unpaved, the lighting is poor, the crime element may be greater, services, sewer, water and electricity often are inferior.

"At the college level, when we find that there are no Hispanics on the board of trustees, they will find no effort to implement aggressive, affirmative action policies that will promote an increase in the recruitment and retention of either Hispanic students or Hispanic instructors and professors," Bonilla said. "The same can be true at the county level — of whatever municipality, of whatever county. Our effort here, in behalf of LULAC, is to lend the full strength and prestige and resources to this initiative."

BONILLA POINTED out that the local suits are not a first-time effort. Similar cases were filed in counties across the state, including Victoria County which resulted in the election of a Hispanic to a governing board for the first time. Other cases in South Texas have resulted in favor of SVREP, and an increase in the level of representation for the Hispanic community, he added.

"We're simply stating to the officials at this level (in the Howard and Dawson counties cases) that we share a common interest in improving the sensitivity and responsiveness of government to all people — and that includes Hispanic Americans.

"We hope that they will not consider the law suit simply as an adversary proceeding but as an opportunity for them to break bread with us and to allow us to reach a meaningful conclusion of this litigation that will increase the level of representation for all Mexican-Americans," Bonilla stated.

According to Velasquez, the previous suits filed pertained to gerrymandering and malapportioning in the county votes. Recently, SVREP has begun the process of single-member districts for the city and for the school board, he said.

"Gerrymandering is atrocious," he said of studies made in South Texas. "We caught one county with 35 voters in one county commissioner precinct and the other one had 1,500. The law says you can't vary more than 10 percent. There are some counties right now that haven't redistricted since 1935. We won a case in May against a county that hadn't been redistricted since 1896," he said, adding with a laugh, "Those are easy to win."

WHENEVER A district is reapportioned so that minorities do elect their own representatives, such as in Victoria County, more minorities are elected, Rios said. The quality of the candidates, including education, articulation and conversing with issues also improves, Velasquez added.

"What has been happening in the past is that they've been alienated because everytime they run against somebody, they lose," Rios said. "It happened in Dawson County I know, where eight or nine minorities have run and they lose. Why run, spend money, put your name up and then lose?

"We're hoping that elected officials realize that this is a democracy," he continued. "When you have a democracy, you have to have representation from all groups in society. Lamesa Independent School District is 52 percent minority and they've never had a minority on the school board. Those people are sensitive to the needs of minority students."

Bonilla said that if the suits are decided in favor of SVREP and LULAC, changes in Midland could be forthcoming.

"SPEAKING ON behalf of LULAC, possibly, if they establish favorable precedence in this case, whether by agreement or by court order, that results in some form of restructuring of the electoral system, then we would actually move to Midland and Odessa

Brezhnev's death no surprise

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Impressions of past events were intermingled with future fears as a few area educators voiced their opinions Thursday concerning Russia's status following the death of leader Leonid I. Brezhnev.

Although the death of the 18-year Soviet Union leader did not surprise them, instructors in Midland, who were not aware that Yuro V. Andropov had been named today to succeed Brezhnev, did have varying views about the future governmental regime and the period of restlessness during which a successor would be chosen.

"I think it is going to create a situation that is tense because of the positioning among the upper echelon of Russia's government," Dennis Stratton, Midland High School social studies department chairman, said. "It's going to create a period of unrest. There is not a natural or peaceful transfer of power set up in the Soviet Union like there is in our election process," he explained.

According to Stratton, due to "the military pressure in the Soviet Union that is making itself known, the person who has the military behind them will be chosen as the next leader of Russia."

"I think they will use the military to arouse people and gain sympathy," he said, citing possible weapons for incitement as fear of the American president and a nuclear war as well as the need for strong leadership.

Stratton then proved prophetic when he predicted that Andropov, the former KGB chief, could be Russia's next leader."I think the KGB is scrutinized more by people in the outside world (than in Russia)," he said. "But he (Andropov) may take it. He may have the resources to do it because of his military connections and his civilian connections. It (the military connection) is much like it is in our country. He knows all the secrets; he knows where all the bodies are hidden, so to speak. But that arm of the government doesn't have the restraints that our government has — the checks and balances."

Dr. Will Morris, Midland College's chairman of the history department, referred to the near future as "a period of watchful waiting.

"I imagine it (the successor) will be a moderate, at least for awhile," he said. "I think they have too much to lose by changing abruptly and I'm not really concerned."

James Bradford, Lee High School social studies department chairman, said he didn't have any one person in mind as a possible successor, but he predicted a battle for the post.

"When we have several strong people, struggles behind the scene take place and we'll know that struggle took place. Unless," he added, "some drastic leader emerges. But I haven't heard of any body who's ready to go to war tomorrow."

All three instructors thought there might be a joint leadership, at least until a single leadership figure could be established, as was the situation following Stalin's death

"It could be a collective leadership or maybe even a dual one," Morris said. "But I'm more inclined to think that to have one overall leader would be better."

"I think all of our presidents have been able to work with him (Brezhnev) as far as working with Russian leaders go," Bradford said. "They've worked with him cautiously and they'll possibly do the same thing with his successor."

MidTran rolls ahead with plans despite rumored cutbacks

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

As rumors float around that the federal government will be cutting back its subsidies to cities' transportation systems and letting them ride on their own four wheels, MidTran is rolling ahead with plans for the future — albeit with a few detours and potholes in the way.

MidTran, the city's public transportation system, is running in the midst of raising fares while coping with recession in other parts of the country. Director Jim Johnson has been on the road this week looking for a new bus manufacturer. The firm which had the contract for seven new buses went bankrupt about the time the new vehicles were to be delivered in mid-September.

It was a year ago that the city sought bids for the buses, and the contract was awarded in December to Microbus, located in California. The vehicles — four for handicapped and all with diesel engines — were due in Midland Sept. 27 at a cost of $286,994.

"I'd heard some rumors about the company but UMTA (Urban Mass Transportation Administration) said they had heard nothing," said Johnson, who came to Midland from San Diego, Calif., as director about a year ago.

HE WENT TO California in mid-August to check on the buses. Three were completed and the remaining four were in various stages of construction. "Everything looked great," Johnson said. "They (management) were all smiles and acted like nothing was wrong."

In September, when the buses were due in Midland, UMTA called and told Johnson the firm had gone bankrupt.

But the city hasn't lost any money, he said, explaining that the city still has funds for the buses and is working on a settlement with the company that held the performance bond on Microbus.

"The city requires anyone who submits a bid to put up a performance bond," he said. Under the Microbus bond, the holding company must pay $50 per day per vehicle for each day they aren't delivered. "The bonding company is liable to us for $350 per day for every day those vehicles are late."

As part of the contract, the bonding company has suggested other companies take over the contract and it is these places where Johnson and two members of the MidTran Commission have been.

"We'll put our heads together and come to a concensus and make a recommendation to the legal department," he said. "If we don't like any of the companies, the bonding company will have to find some more companies."

Under the contract, the specifications are detailed. "We have to make sure whoever manufactures these vehicles can cross every T and dot every I. It shouldn't be a substandard vehicle," he said.

PROGRESS IS being made on solving this problem of the nonexistent buses, he contended. "I think the bonding company has finally realized we're not a bunch of hay seeds from Texas and that we want the best for our money."

Johnson expects the problem to be resolved soon and that seven new buses will be on Midland's streets within six months.

Because these new vehicles haven't arrived to relieve the first buses that got MidTran rolling, Johnson is planning some face-lifting to help the system until the other buses can arrive.

"The problem we're having now is the fact that our fleet is three years old. For a gasoline engine that runs 12 hours a day, most are in excess of 120,000 miles. Some of the engines have been replaced. Others we're holding together with prayers and bubblegum, and the prayers come first," Johnson said light-heartedly.

The staff has been spending extra time to clean up the buses on Saturdays, he noted.

"The next big job is repainting. I want to try and give the whole system a facelift. Any way you go is going to cost a few bucks. By doing it in-house, it will be cheaper and it will be an education for all of us. I think overall we can do an excellent job in repainting the buses," Johnson said.

HE SEES THE effort benefitting the staff by giving them a sense of pride. "I really enjoy getting everyone involved throughout the system. It makes you feel a part of the system."

In addition to shining up a better image before the public with the repainted buses, Johnson said the vehicles will have a better resale value.

Trying to get his foot in the door before everyone else, Johnson had applied with UMTA for a grant for fiscal year 1983, he said. But UMTA told him two months ago to hold off for awhile. "My opinion is they wanted to see the outcome of the election. We're in a holding pattern for 1983."

As with other city transportation systems across the country, MidTran is subsidized by the federal government. On operating expenses, the outlay is 50 percent. On capital expenditures, such as new buses or an office, the subsidy is 80 percent. The rest is made up by the state, 13 percent, and the city, 7 percent.

"I think we're in good shape for the next couple of years," Johnson said of federal funds. The cuts that have been mentioned have been directed toward metropolitan bus systems. For cities under 100,000 population, little mention has been made of reducing subsidies.

If that holds true, then Midland shouldn't have to worry. But, Johnson noted, Midland already has 82,000 people and is growing. And in a few years, the Tall City may fall into the higher category that receives less money.

DESPITE THE subsidizing, the Midland system still operates with a deficit. This week, State Sen. Hector Uribe proposed a one-cent sales tax that could be imposed by cities to make up for any loss in federal payments.

Johnson added that he has heard of a proposal to increase the gasoline tax to assist public transportation systems. "That type of tax would be beneficial to the transit system."

He theorized that by raising the gasoline tax more people might decide to ride buses, thus upping revenues.

Operating expenses for a bus system have gone up tremendously since MidTran was initiated, he noted. And bus fares haven't been increased for a year and a half. For that reason, at the last City Council meeting the proposal for higher fares was approved.

Starting Jan. 1, fares will be $2 for door-to-door pickup; handicapped, 50 cents; subscription service one way, $21; subscription service two way, $35. Senior citizens with proper identification will continue to ride free. Flex-routes will remain at 75 cents each way.

Johnson hasn't heard any complaints from riders about the higher prices, he said. "One thing we have to be careful about is not to price ourselves out. We don't want to make it too high that people can't afford it."

THE DECISION to hike prices didn't come easily, the director said. "We have grave concerns every time we have a fare increase. You spend a lot of nights doing your homework.

"I think it's the overall concensus of riders that our fares are comparable to our service, efficiency, consistency, involvement between the passengers and driver."

MidTran is operating 21 vehicles plus five buses for The First National Bank. Johnson noted that MidTran has contracted with the bank to drive the buses until 1985, and then the public bus system will have the first option on buying the vehicles.

The types of service provided by MidTran has changed over the three years, conforming to the public's needs. "The transit image changes constantly," said Johnson. "It used to be if you rode the bus to work every day, then you were poor. Then came park and ride and that was thought to be for the middle income people."

The director is considering adding Saturday service for the three Saturdays in December to aid shoppers. It was tried last year with some degree of success, he noted.

With changes over the years, Johnson said MidTran is operating almost at capacity now. "For what we do, we can't pick up a lot more people. One of the biggest problems is one vehicle has to do two or three different things."

As an example, he said a bus will operate on subscription in the early morning hours, flex-route and then go on a maid run to take maids home during mid-day. At 3 p.m., it is ready to go back into subscription service to take downtown workers home.

LOOKING AT THE number of passengers per mile, Johnson contended that MidTran is doing better than some other cities. "We're comparable to any system. San Antonio and Fort Worth average six people per hour and 24 miles per hour. Ours is about 12 people per hour. And after it snowed last winter, we were up to 18 people per hour."

To support his contention that ridership is increasing, Johnson pointed out that in October 1981, MidTran carried 19,425 passengers. Six months later in March 1982, the figure had risen to 22,335.

As ridership has increased so has MidTran's budget. From $702,000 last fiscal year, the money required to run the system has increased to $936,000. Half of that, he noted, comes from the federal government.

But the system has been operating on a deficit of about $22,000 per month, Johnson said, adding that is another reason for fare increases. He's hoping to reduce the deficit about 10 percent.

The attitude of Midlanders is that a transit system is needed, he said, "but it better be as efficient as possible."

Stating that it's easy to start a transit system, but it's a lot harder to reduce the deficit, Johnson said citizens here "are looking at how much it's going to cost and is the cost going down."

And because the fleet is old and new buses haven't arrived, maintenance costs are increasing.

Operating out of the two mobile buildings that were erected three years ago at the city garage, Johnson said the city is looking at a permanent site for MidTran. But the going is slow because of money — the combination of operating deficits and uncertainty about future federal funds.

"I'm stingy when it comes to spending taxpayers dollars," he remarked.

"If I had a couple of wishes it would be this: I'd wish for the wisdom to figure out this system to make it as efficient as possible and I'd have it make a profit."

Federal wage, hour board may go to part-time staff

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

The federal Wage and Hour Board may start staffing its Midland office on a part-time basis next month.

Bill Belt, regional administrator for the employment standards division of the U.S. Department of Labor in Dallas, said this morning an employee is tentatively scheduled to man the office one morning a week, starting in December.

The office has been empty for the past two or three months, due to the retirement of one staff member and the voluntary transfer of a second staff member to another federal agency.

Callers are being advised via tape recording to contact the labor board's Albuquerque, N.M., office if they have complaints or questions about their jobs.

In commenting on the proposed part-time staffing of the office, Belt said: "We are continuing to try and get someone hired for permanent staffing. But we may have to start taking innovative approaches as our staff (agency-wide) gets leaner."

The Wage and Hour Board has encountered recruiting difficulties because of the highly technical nature of the work and requires two to three years' experience in the complex field of U.S. labor laws.

The agency has been trying to draw someone to Midland from within its national ranks, but has been unsuccessful to date — due in large part to people not wanting to pull up stakes in the face of high interest rates on home mortgages, according to Belt, who said details of the part-time staffing will be announced at a later date.

Arrested Midland man learns honesty not always best policy

Honesty may not have been the best policy for 21-year-old Charles Eugene Walls of 4201 N. Garfield, who was arrested after allegedly admitting to being drunk and having drugs in his possession before police could even question him.

Two police officers said they were behind Walls' pickup truck on Wadley Avenue about 2:15 a.m. Thursday when he suddenly pulled to a stop near Ward Street. The officers said they did not have their lights or siren on, but that Walls had been driving erratically.

The officers said they approached the vehicle and Walls produced a West Virginia driver's license and proof of insurance before they had a chance to ask for identification.

When they asked him why he had stopped, Walls is alleged to have said: "I'm drunk, I guess."

He was arrested on an intoxication charge and during an inventory of the pickup, officers said they found a partially filled syringe under the front seat. Walls told them he was not a diabetic and on the way to the police station said, "I might as well spill the beans now. I use the syringe for cocaine and I have a lot of pot in my shirt."

Drug violations were added to the drunk charge after police said they found a plastic film canister containing marijuana, hashish and rolling papers in Walls' shirt.

Justice of the Peace Robert Pine set bond of $10,000 and Walls remained in jail this morning.

Odessan robbed outside home

ODESSA — An Odessa store owner reported that he was robbed of an undisclosed amount of money after being outside his home late Thursday night.

John Willard, owner of Big John's Food Stores, told police he came home from work about 11:15 p.m. and was accosted on the sidewalk outside the residence by a heavy-set Hispanic man who demanded the day's receipts, which Willard was carrying in two bank bags.

A fight broke out and Willard's wife came out of the house after hearing the commotion, according to police. She joined the fight and the man fled after grabbing the bank bags.

He was further described as in his 20s, about 6-feet tall, weighing over 200 pounds and having a moustache, large hands and thick lips. He was wearing blue jeans and a sweater.

Midland nurses honored for Texas Nurses Week

Two registered nurses and two licensed vocational nurses were honored this week as part of Texas Nurses Week.

"Nursing: A Force for Texans' Health," is the theme of week, recognizing the role and contributions registered professional nurses and licensed vocational nurses make in hospitals, clinics, nursing homes, schools and a multitude of other health care settings.

Gail Wilson, a registered nurse who is the patient coordinator for Hospice of Midland Inc., was recognized as community nurse of the year.

Sandra Covin, a licensed vocational nurse at Parkview Hospital, was named Parkview's nurse of the year.

Margarette Pape, a registered nurse at Midland Memorial Hospital, received the honor of MMH's nurse of the year.

Donna Lutker, a licensed vocational nurse at MMH, was recognized as LVN of the year by the Licensed Vocational Nurses Association.

Gov. William P. Clements Jr. proclaimed Nov. 7 through 13 as Texas Nurses Week, stating that he observed that professional nurses provide better caring, comfort and compassion when they adhere to high practice standards and uphold the professinal association's ethical code for nurses.

Texas governors have set aside a week every fall to recognize nurses since 1957 when the Texas Legislature designated the special week be celebrated annually.

Man held in murder of Big Spring citizen

BIG SPRING — A 38-year-old man has been charged with murder and is being held on $20,000 bond in connection with the Wednesday night stabbing death of a Big Spring man, according to Big Spring police.

Elias Reuben Brown, of 1405 Benton in Big Spring, was formally charged Thursday night after a police investigation into the death of Carlos "Charlie" Escobedo, 25, of 311 Eighth Ave. NW, Big Spring.

According to Lt. Alvin Jeffcoat, of the Big Spring detective division, an ambulance was dispatched to 505 Fourth Ave. NW at about 8:37 p.m. Wednesday and arrived to find Escobedo bleeding from an apparent stab wound. He was transported to Malone-Hogan Hospital and declared dead shortly after arrival by a hospital physician. Peace Justice Lewis Helfin declared Escobedo dead at 9:20 p.m. Wednesday.

Jeffcoat said the two men had argued and then fought at the stabbing scene, across from a local tavern. He said Brown was taken into custody for questioning following the incident.

Municipal Court Judge Melvin Daratt set bond in the case.

Money raised for transplant patient

BOSTON (AP) — Residents of Bridgewater lined up bake sales, a pancake breakfast, car washes and a road race today to raise money for an 11-month-old neighbor, liver transplant patient Jamie Fiske.

Gov. Edward King has declared today "Jamie Fiske Day" in Massachusetts in honor of the baby girl whose plight received national attention.

Jamie, who had suffered a fatal liver disease, is recuperating in Minneapolis after receiving a new liver from a Utah baby. Insurance covers most of the cost of the $60,000 transplant, but there are other expenses, such as an $8,000 bill to rent the jet that flew the donated liver to Minneapolis.

Bonilla says suits may be filed here to implement the same change," Bonilla said.

SVREP conducts 30 to 40 campaigns for voter registration in the Permian Basin area, Velasquez noted.

"We have done our share in participating in both the explosive growth of registration and the explosive growth of participation in the American democratic process by Mexican-Americans," Velasquez said. "The problem is that we still can't win. And the reason we can't win is you've got racially polarized voting which means an awful lot of ranchers aren't going to vote for Mexicans, no matter what happens. And you add up the several hundred thousand Mexican-Americans that live in this area, and they have no representation. Not only do they not have representation now, they never have had representation.

"It appears to us by evidence, that despite the large increase in registration, the large increase in participation, we're not going to have any representation in the future. And the problem is not that the Mexican-Americans don't want to vote or to register. That is not the case."

Bingo tax revenues are placed in Ector County's general fund, said Assistant County Auditor Dan Ramirez.

Drinking by pregnant women may cause dangers to unborn

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists say that even moderate alcohol consumption by pregnant women may result in their children being mentally retarded because of oxygen deprivation in the womb.

Studies with monkeys show that alcohol can severely restrict blood flow through the umbilical cord, which carries nutrients to and waste from the fetus, according to researchers at the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development.

In a report published recently in Science magazine, Drs. Anil B. Mukherjee and Gary D. Hodgen say this transitory collapse of umbilical vessels causes periods of acute oxygen deprivation to the fetus and also raises the acid levels of its fluids.

Because brain cells of fetuses and newborns are extremely susceptible to damage from oxygen deprivation, the findings "may explain one of the mechanisms of mental retardation, a frequent manifestation in children afflicted with fetal alcohol syndrome," the report says.

Numerous studies indicate moderate to high alcohol consumption during pregnancy can cause a series of problems collectively called fetal alcohol syndrome. An estimated one in 750 infants born in the U.S. is afflicted to some degree with these problems.

Among manifestations of the syndrome are low birth weight, distorted facial features, muscle coordination problems and mental retardation.

Although most of these problems have been associated with heavy, chronic drinking, federal health authorities have suggested that pregnant women avoid any alcohol consumption.

In the latest study, five monkeys in the last one-third of their pregnancy period received intravenous injections of pure alcohol (ethanol) mixed in a sugar and salt solution. The injections raised blood alcohol levels to the equivalent in humans after three to five mixed drinks.

Four other monkeys were used as controls, with two receiving only salt-sugar injections and two getting none.

Immigrants from many lands seeking new homes in U.S.

By CHARLES T. MOSES
CARYN EVE WIENER
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — This city, one that has traditionally opened its doors to newcomers from distant lands, is awash in a new, diverse tide of immigrants.

In the past quarter century, a growing rush of immigrants from various parts of the world has brought to the city's streets a fresh surge of passions and pathos. But where successive waves of immigrants in previous decades spoke chiefly in the languages of northern, western — and later, eastern — Europe, the past 15 years have seen the countless scores of dialects heard in this city joined by countless scores more.

It was a change in the federal immigration law in 1965 that brought that new world of settlers to the nation. And as a result of that change, in New York, one of the nation's major ports of entry, the new immigrants' first words and last names now speak of such homelands as Korea, Ecuador, Haiti, the Soviet Union and the Dominican Republic.

FIGURES SUPPLIED by the Immigration and Naturalization Service show sharp changes in European and Asian immigrant patterns on a national level, between the 1950s and the 1960s.

Between 1951 and 1960, 1,325,000 European immigrants entered the United States, compared to only 150,000 Asian immigrants. But between 1961 and 1970, Asian immigration nearly tripled, to 427,000, while the European immigration total dropped to 1,123,000.

Even the last decade has shown a difference in immigration patterns. In 1970, for example, 116,000 European immigrants arrived in the United States, compared to 94,000 Asians, 21,000 South Americans, 129,000 North and Central Americans, 8,000 Africans and 3,000 from Australia and other "Oceania" nations.

But in 1979, the European immigration total dropped to 60,000, while the Asian figure grew to 189,000, South Americans to 35,000 and North and Central Americans to 157,000. There were also 12,000 African immigrants and 4,000 from Australia and other "Oceania" countries.

IN NEW YORK, the annual immigration total has increased by more than 20,000 within the last 20 years, said Frank Vardy, a city demographer. He said the city received only 45,419 aliens in 1958 but the figure grew to 53,584 in 1964 and had grown to 72,977 by 1972. "In fact, it was between 70,000 and 75,000 throughout the 1970s," Vardy said.

Today, he added, the city's foreign-born population is close to one in four. By contrast, at the turn of the century, when the city was in the midst of one of its first major immigration waves, the city had a foreign-born population of one in three, Vardy said.

But said the ethnic breakdown between then and now is vastly different. Out of 1,270,000 foreign-born persons in the city in 1900, most came from Germany (324,000), Ireland (275,0000), Russia (182,000) Italy (145,000), Austria-Hungary (122,000), Great Britain (90,000) and Scandinavia (45,000). The city's total population at the time was close to 3.5 million.

The 1965 law, which revised the immigration quota system so it no longer favored Europeans, released the "pent-up demand" for immigration from Asian and South American countries, he said.

THERE ARE OTHER differences. Unlike their European predecessors who came in the first waves, some of the newcomers, such as the Asians, arrive from higher-income communities and settle into relatively affluent life-styles. But for most immigrants, the struggle to find new lives already has followed the well-worn path marked out by earlier arrivals: They must settle for less than they had expected while working and hoping for more.

In a city that prides itself on its technological and intellectual progress, the abuses, sweatshops and substandard living conditions that prevailed in the "old world" of immigrants have not vanished.

A resurgence in sweatshop working conditions has occurred within the last 10 years, union and city officials said. As in past times, persons involved in community-assistance programs for immigrants and refugees in neighborhoods around the city report some of the worst exploitation of newcomers in desperate need of housing, money and jobs is done by their fellow countrymen.

IN 1965, when the immigration law change altered the nation's quota system, the scales were tipped, for the first time, away from favoring immigrants from European countries. The new quota system put American shores within reach of peoples who previously had been all but locked out.

Today, the overwhelming majority of newcomers are Hispanics, said Bishop Anthony Bevilacqua, director of the Brooklyn Diocese's Catholic Migration and Refugee Office. He estimated about 700,000 Spanish-speaking persons live in Brooklyn and Queens — the boroughs that city planners say are home to two-thirds of the city's new residents.

To follow the line along which immigrant neighborhoods develop, "just follow the IRT subway line," Bevilacqua said.

The new immigrants arriving in those two boroughs opt, in large part, to live in neighborhoods in south Brooklyn and northern Queens for the usual reasons: available housing and public transportation, Vardy said. More importantly, the new immigrant often finds a burgeoning community of fellow transplants in those neighborhoods to give him economic and social support.

WITH NO CITY RESOURCES to assist them directly in their efforts to improve their lives, immigrants must rely on family members already here; resettlement agencies, such as the New York Association for New Americans and International Rescue Committee, which serve primarily refugees; and community-based groups, such as the Chinatown Planning Council, Polish Slavic Center and Hellenic-American Neighborhood Action Committee.

But as they make their way in their new homeland, the immigrants fan out across the city's neighborhoods.

In Jackson Heights and Flushing, the mom-and-pop shops that once lined main streets, run by Eastern European settlers of the postwar era, have given way to Korean fruit and vegetable stands, Hispanic bodegas and Indian sari stores.

In Brooklyn's Bay Ridge and Sunset Park, formerly a first home for Scandinavian, Irish and German immigrants, there has been a steady influx of Greeks and Chinese, whose presence is most evident in the commercial strips' greengrocers and restaurants.

In the Bronx, foreign-born blacks have changed the face and flavor of predominantly Jewish co-op city.

REGARDLESS OF THEIR backgrounds or economic standing, many of the aliens have come to this country for economic reasons, as immigrants always have. Others arrive to escape oppression. The latter are often refugees who arrive, not through quotas, but by act of Congress.

There is, however, yet another major unaccounted group of aliens. According to city demographers and officials at immigrant-assistance agencies, for each person to enter the country through legal means there is at least one who arrives "undocumented."

Delight your family with old-fashioned Spoon Bread

BRUNCH FARE
Sausage & Apple Rings
Spoon Bread & Coffee

SPOON BREAD

A particularly good version.

2 cups milk
1 cup finely stone ground white cornmeal
½ teaspoon salt
½ of a ¼-pound stick butter (¼ cup), at room temperature or cut into thin pats
4 large eggs, separated

In a 2-quart saucepan heat 1 cup milk until bubbles appear around edge. In a 2-cup measure, into remaining milk, stir cornmeal and salt until smooth; gradually stir into scalded milk. Over moderate heat stir constantly until thick enough to mound — about 3 minutes. Off heat stir in butter until melted; vigorously whisk in egg yolks, one at a time. Beat egg whites until stiff; with a rubber spatula fold into cornmeal mixture. Turn into a buttered 1½-quart round casserole (about 7½ by 2¾ inches). Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until a table knife inserted in the center comes out clean and top is puffed and browned — 35 minutes. Serve at once because spoon bread sinks rapidly. Serve with sweet butter. Makes 6 servings.

Boring men's fashions out

By EILEEN PUTMAN
AP Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The humdrum in men's fashion has been banished, and shopping for men no longer means "going out for a blue suit." Even the least fashion-conscious man will be encouraged to go into the stores this spring.

But flash isn't necessarily the rule — there's more than enough for the most conservative businessman in the current series of fashion shows displaying the newest styles.

The cut, admittedly, is more extreme. Jackets are longer, shoulders are wider, pants are fuller at the top and narrower at the ankles. The V-shape is making its first appearance since the zoot-suiting 1940s. Pleats are everywhere, another '40s throwback.

"After World War II, we went back to the tight shoulders, straight legs and then bells. It was a complete reversal of the V-shape. Now the top is filling out," said Jack Herschlag of the National Association of Men's Sportswear Buyers.

Unlike women's fashions, change in menswear comes slowly, in long cycles. Men, it seems, are creatures of habit.

"The male habit is to find something he likes and keep buying the same thing. They tend to gravitate towards dead center and stay there," said Herschlag.

And, he said, they also tend to shy away from spending money on clothes.

Dressing the women of the family well used to be enough for many men.

"It's always been a matter of male ego to dress their women well. The psychology carries over even though the social basis for it largely disappeared," Herschlag said.

But men are now thinking of themselves when it comes to fashion. They account for a third of the $88 billion in annual apparel sales in the country.

This season's offerings are aimed at nudging men out of their armchairs and into the stores. Fabrics are elegant — linens, silks, cotton sheeting and combinations of several materials.

The double-breasted look is making news in a six-button version for the longer jacket. Ties are skinnier and designs are beginning to be used only in the center of the tie, rather than all over. Lapels are wider.

For the upwardly mobile corporate guy, the Ivy League look is a must. Button-down collars continue to be the most popular shirt, but a wide variety of collars — wings, band, round, pin — are being shown. The two-tone look is also popular.

Cotton sweaters and rugby shirts continue strong for casual wear, evidence that the preppie look has become institutionalized.

There is wide variety in colors for the traditional golf knit shirts, and even the old fraternity-style cardigan shown by one manufacturer last week took on a new exciting look, its button-hole band done in orange, yellow, green and blue stripes.

For the upper crust jet-setter, Perry Ellis offers his version of menswear, unlined linen jackets in wine and navy worn with the sleeves pushed up. He also offered a whimsical sweater with a simulated tie knitted at the neck.

Even if such touches are not likely to find themselves in the average male's closet, retailers are betting that their availability will get more men into the stores.

Shopping is becoming more and more a couple activity, some say.

"Whether it's man and wife or man and girlfriend, the shopping has become something they do together. It's almost like a date," said Milton Guttenplan, director of advertising and marketing for Barney's men's store in New York.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is to "Desperate Mom": Please don't panic. I was your little girl at age 7. By age 9 I was wearing a 36-B bra. I survived because my mom never showed signs of concern. She never cried for me. (God forbid I should carry the guilt of making my own mother cry about something over which I had no control.) Thank heavens she didn't take me to doctors or psychologists. I would have thought there was something terribly "wrong" with me if she had.

Sure, I got teased, just like the girl in my class with the prominent nose and the one across the room with a funny name nobody could pronounce. Boys called me "Milkshake." I'd scream at them and go home crying, then Mom would tell me what a big problem THEY had. The teasing made me strong and non-judgmental because I had a mom who gave me support and comfort.

Your little girl will be OK, just as I was, but it's up to you whether she feels like a freak or not. — EARLY BLOOMER

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Desperate Mother," whose 7-year-old daughter is developing at an early age: I also had a daughter who had to wear a bra at 6 and started her menstrual period at 7. She was 5 feet tall and fully developed at 8. I was sure she would be a freak — an Amazon!

Fortunately, she was sufficiently mature mentally and emotionally to cope with her premature development.

Today she is a beautiful, intelligent, 20-year-old college student and engaged to be married. She's STILL 5 feet tall and has a lovely figure. Relax, Mother! — K'S MOM

DEAR ABBY: Please tell "Desperate Mother" not to push the panic button. I was 8 when I blossomed into womanhood. I was the first one in my class to wear a bra. (The other girls envied me.) My mother tried to be casual about it, but I knew she was a little perturbed about my early development.

When I saw my own 7-year-old daughter develop early, it was no big deal. I told her what she needed to know as it became relevant and she handled it quite gracefully and naturally. That's what it is — natural. Her timetable is just running a little faster than the majority.

If Mother freaks out, Daughter will feel strange and "abnormal." If Mother takes it in stride, Daughter will accept her body changes for what they are — natural steps toward becoming a woman. — BEEN THERE

DEAR BEEN THERE, K'S MOM AND EARLY BLOOMER: You were only three of many who wrote to offer comfort and counsel to a mother who was about to have a nervous breakdown when her 7-year-old daughter showed symptoms of premature physical development. Thank you all for writing to help a stranger. The longer I write this column, the more convinced I am that people are better than ever.

Measles complications decline in past decade

By FRANK BLANCHARD
AP Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — A rare but deadly brain disease linked to measles declined tenfold from 1970 to 1980 as fewer Americans contracted measles, the national Centers for Disease Control reports.

The incurable brain disease, subacute sclerosing panencephalitis, is a rare complication that can occur months or years after measles, CDC researcher Roger Bernier said Thursday.

The disease, which often begins with mental confusion and slowly progresses to convulsions, insanity, coma and death, usually strikes children or adolescents.

In 1970 there were an estimated 0.61 cases of the brain disease per 1 million people. But that fell tenfold to 0.06 cases per 1 million people in 1980, the CDC said Thursday in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

As of July 1982, there were 634 suspected cases of subacute sclerosing panencephalitis. All of the victims first reported symptoms between 1956 and 1981, the CDC said. Of those, 368 were U.S. residents who met the case definition of the disease and had symptoms appear between 1969 and 1981.

Nationwide efforts begun in 1978 to eradicate measles has helped reduce cases of sclerosing panencephalitis, the CDC said.

The number of measles cases reported to the CDC fell from 47,351 in 1970 to 13,506 in 1980. But as of Oct. 30, only 44 cases had been reported for 1982.

However, a new study reported in today's Journal of the American Medical Association says new measles cases continue to be brought into the country by travelers.

The study says cases that could be related to persons entering the country during 1981 totaled about 17.6 percent of all measles cases and was slightly higher than in 1980.

Once measles is eliminated as a domestic disease, scientists will be able to study what relationship, if any, the measles vaccine has on the brain disease.

"Any cases (of the brain disease) after that would have to be because of the vaccine and not the virus," Bernier said.

Don't treat school phobia lightly

By JAN JENNINGS
Copley News Service

Generally a good-natured, attentive student, Johnny suddenly announces he won't go to school.

Would you (in so many words and actions):

—Pat him on the head, cheerfully say "now, now" and firmly send him on his way?

—Become irritated with such apparent defiance and make it unquestionably clear who makes such decisions?

—Decide he's generally a good boy and pamper him a bit by letting him enjoy a day off? (Maybe he needs a break, too.)

If you reacted in any of those ways, you would be wrong.

Chances are Johnny is experiencing an extremely traumatic ordeal for a child — school phobia, an irrational and persistent fear that if he leaves an anxiety-causing situation at home to go to school the situation at home will worsen. This is not uncommon and not to be treated lightly — or heavy-handedly.

It can hit children of all school ages, triggered by an emotional upheaval (mother's sickness, parents' divorce, birth of a sibling, etc.) with which the child is unprepared to cope. He internalizes his feelings, withdraws and will not leave what he feels is the nurturing site, the home. He will not go to school.

This child is reacting with intense emotions and needs help in working out these anxieties, according to Ron Rowe, a marriage, family and child counselor.

The fears, though unfounded, are all too real to the youngster suffering from school phobia. For instance, the child may reason that if mother got sick last week when he was at school, she may get sick again if he leaves the house to go off to school. In such a case, assistance for the child would be aimed at helping him accept that if mother does get sick again, she will probably get well again — just as she did before.

"This child is far different from the truant child," said Rowe. "He is also different from the child who fears or is upset by one particular situation at the school site, such as a peer calling him 'Fatty.'" (Working through a problem caused to the child by a classmate or staff member at the school involves a complex conciliation process among the involved parties. Consultation with a counselor is recommended in all these situations.)

"The important thing is to get the phobic child back to school right away," said Rowe. "Treatment can begin at once, and generally the problem can be dealt with within a few months."

But, first, who is the child with a school phobia? How does he or she differ from the truant child?

Rowe said it is relatively easy to tell the difference between the truant child and the phobic child. "The truant child is generally a youngster doing poorly academically. His negative experience of failure in school leads him to seek his peer group for support. It is likely his parents don't emphasize education.

"Basically, school bores him. He doesn't care about it — so there is no anxiety attached to the school situation."

Rowe describes the school-phobic child as the more "dramatic situation." He likes school. He is motivated. There are no behavior or attendance problems. He may be a little dependent upon an adult, but he is a child who does well and gets along with everyone."

Except with unforeseen trauma.

"An anxiety level around some precipitating event, such as the mother's sickness, may become so high that the child cannot get himself to go to school," said Rowe. "He has no insight how to deal with this foreign situation, so he cannot even explain why he feels as he does."

"To complicate the situation, the parents, in the midst of their own emotions concerning the mother's illness, may not recognize the seriousness of the child's response." (He may be expected to just snap out of it and get on with it.)

Rowe emphasized that the child's phobia is not toward the school, per se. Rather it is a reluctance of the child to leave the "felt" security of the home for fear some fantasized catastrophe may occur there in his absence.

"This is no time to pamper or censure the child at home," said Rowe. If necessary, the parent should accompany the child to school to talk with a school counselor. "Get the child back into school and discuss the situation with counselors. If not attended to immediately, the building anxiety becomes almost insurmountable."

Treatment within the school environment involves the attention of the school counselor, nurse or psychologist who is advised that the child is not a "brat," but is experiencing accute anxiety. By being supportive of the child and counseling with the family, the school therapist can help the child work through the anxiety.

Award honors black achievements

NEW YORK (AP) — Most youngsters can reel off the names and claims to fame of black sports and entertainment figures with no trouble.

But "not very many" children — or adults — are aware of the accomplishments of black women and men who are scholars, writers, philosophers, artists or inventors, notes Jewell Jackson McCabe, president of The National Coalition of 100 Black Women.

To bridge this "social and historical information gap," the Candace award has been established to celebrate the intellectual achievements of black Americans, according to Ms. McCabe, a coordinator of the awards, presented for the frst time this fall.

"For centuries black women and men have excelled in fields that requre rigorous discipn aningenuity, but they have rarely been honored or even associated with these significant accomplishments," Ms. McCabe said.

"The Candace Award will set a standard and a precedent for recognizing serious black achievement in the future," she added. "The recipients and the objective will clearly demonstrate that blacks aren't only performers and athletes."

Candace, (pronounced can-DAA-say), Ms. MCabe explains, "was the ancient Ethiopian name for empress or queen, and thus a reminder of black female power and accomplishments dating back to 332 B.C."

Two winners widl be selected annually on each of eight categories: Arts andDLetters, Business, Community Servee, Economic Development, Education, Health and Science, History and Technology.

A special scholarship program has been established aspart of the Candace Awards, named for Ennis Francis, considered one of the nation's leading champions of peace, who died in 1980.

The Ennis Francis Scholarship will be awarded to an outstanding student at Meharry Medical College, Nashville, Tenn. Founded in 1876, the college has educated more than 50 percent of the black dentists and physicians now practicing in the United States.

Announcement of the creating of the Candace Award was made jointly by Ms. McCabe, who heads The National Coalition, an organization created to foster cooperation between feinists and civil rights organizations; Al Ferro, president of Bailey's Original Irish Cream Liqueur, spo.sor of the award; and Bill Tatum, publisher of the Amsterdam News in New York City.

"Corporate America has a responsibility to promote and inspire the accomplishments of todax's blacks," Ferro said. "It will act as a strong motivator for the youth of today."

From the people who invented culture.

Mikimoto has quite a reputation when it comes to pearls. And we earned it.

We invented the cultured pearl in 1893. And we've led the industry ever since . . . in methods, in design, and in quality.

Pearls, after all, are something very special. And Mikimoto, after all, is a very special company

Defeated politicians turning toward White House for jobs

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

WASHINGTON (AP) — This is the time of year in Washington when defeated candidates start casting hopeful glances at the White House, for help finding a job, and bureaucrats cast wary glances in the same direction, fearful about losing theirs.

One week beyond one election, and 103 weeks from the next, Washington is starting a new biennial cycle.

At the White House, that means taking advantage of the calendar to shuffle personnel, under the guise of a midterm break. With the last election fading and the next still far away, it also means it is time to chop up, with the least likely political damage, the budget requests that are flowing in from the government's agencies.

President Reagan has set aside 10 hours this week to listen to budget deliberations, returning to a pattern he followed last year.

THIS YEAR, the talks have begun later than usual. Had they been held before Election Day, preliminary ideas about cutting spending could have leaked out and possibly hurt the Republicans. So, the first budget talks on Reagan's schedule occurred a week ago, on the very day Americans were going to the polls to cast ballots and their verdicts on the first two years of the Reagan administration.

Larry Speakes, the chief deputy White House press secretary, was talking about the number of defeated Republican candidates when the subject turned to helping them find jobs in Washington.

"There are a lot of well-qualified, soon-to-be-former (Republican) governors out there," he said.

Those ranks include Gov. William Clements of Texas, a Reagan loyalist who sampled Washington's lures during the Ford administration by taking a job at the Pentagon.

The problem is this: there aren't many jobs open. Clements was rumored to be a candidate for the job of energy secretary, even up to the day it was filled by Donald P. Hodel, who will move over from the Interior Department if given Senate approval.

The White House is a prime topic for anyone spreading shakeup rumors. Speakes went to great lengths earlier this week to deny that two of Reagan's top aides, chief of staff James A. Baker III and deputy staff chief Michael K. Deaver, had gone to Reagan with the ultimatum that if the third member of the "Big Three," counselor Edwin Meese III, did not leave, they would.

"FOOLISHNESS. Wrong. Off-the-wall," he said.

As for the budget, Reagan and his top aides will be meeting on an almost daily basis into mid-December, "when the president will begin to make final decisions," Speakes said.

"He will make decisions (on the budget) right up until Christmas," said Speakes.

This week, the president is dealing with an overview of the budget situtation. That means he is focusing on the general problems posed by trying to build up defenses, hold down the deficit, fend off the political liabilities inherent in domestic program cuts, and keep to his vow not to raise taxes in 1983.

An Analysis

At the same time, he must demonstrate that he is willing to compromise, as he has asked the new Congress to do.

With a net Republican loss of 26 seats in the House last week, Reagan has already begun singing a tune of reconciliation as he faces a House less likely to feel the threat of White House pressure, and a Senate that is already talking about demonstrating greater independence than it has in the past two years.

White House aides are aware of the political risk if intransigence on the part of the White House — which one aide described as "government by veto" — becomes a way of life over the next two years.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Those born on this date are blessed with many different talents and options. Recognize the need for self-control and make careful choices. In the months ahead, you will have to face important decisions regarding your career and family. Be unselfish and happiness and luck will mark romance. There is no clear-cut way to go where employment is concerned. Several different paths will take you to your goals. Farmers and doctors receive special benefits. Be especially cautious if responsible for managing someone else's money. The risks involved could be greater than you realize. Spiritual insights strengthen existing relationships.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): It is time to stop procrastinating. Tackle those home repairs you have been avoiding. Recruit your friends or relatives to help if you lack some of the skills required.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New kitchen gear could prove expensive to repair. Check the costs involved before you make a purchase. Travel enjoys favorable influences. Romantic possibilities multiply.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Settle family differences promptly so that you can enjoy a peaceful weekend. Old-fashioned values are uppermost in your mind. Children are jealous of the time you spend with others.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You receive good news. Share it with those you love! Ask for second opinions before buying furniture or a used car. You need to allow plenty of time for romance this evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You have underestimated someone's ability to strike back. Be prepared to pay the price if you indulge in gossip. Take romantic partner's suggestions seriously.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Romance, finance and children take up most of your weekend. Your high principles help you make the right decision. An authority figure gets on your nerves at a family dinner.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Someone you have aided in the past may be asking too much this time. You reach a sensible decision despite the many temptations placed in your path.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A young person comes to your assistance. The validity of the Golden Rule is proven once again. Romance moves new directions. You are eager to make a fresh start.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	1 ♠
2 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠.

It is easy to complain about a bad break. Sometimes it is almost as easy to protect against one!

The auction was straightforward. The only point of interest was North's sensible decision to raise competitively to two hearts despite the fact that he had only three-card support. He had a sound opening bid with prime values and a ruffing value in diamonds, so his raise has the endorsement of this department.

This hand cropped up in a team match. At both tables the defenders attacked with three rounds of spades, with declarer ruffing the third round. One declarer now cashed the king and queen of trumps to learn of the bad break. He then started on clubs.

East ruffed the second club and shifted to the nine of diamonds. Declarer found that he was forced to take the diamond finesse (if he rose with the ace, he either could not draw the last trump or else had to give up on establishing the clubs). West won the king of diamonds and gave his partner another club ruff for down two.

At the other table, declarer adopted a far sounder line. He cashed the ace of clubs, returned to his hand with the king of hearts and led a club to the king. If East now ruffs and returns a diamond, declarer can rise with the ace, draw trumps with the ace and queen and then run clubs with the help of a finesse for the jack to make his contract.

So East discarded a diamond, but that was no better. Declarer crossed back to hand with the queen of hearts and took the club finesse. He simply ran clubs until East decided to ruff. On the diamond return he rose with the ace, drew the last trump by crossing to the ace of trumps, and he was in dummy to cash whatever high clubs remained. Making four-odd.

Boring men's fashions out

By EILEEN PUTMAN
AP Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The humdrum in men's fashion has been banished, and shopping for men no longer means "going out for a blue suit." Even the least fashion-conscious man will be encouraged to go into the stores this spring.

But flash isn't necessarily the rule — there's more than enough for the most conservative businessman in the current series of fashion shows displaying the newest styles.

The cut, admittedly, is more extreme. Jackets are longer, shoulders are wider, pants are fuller at the top and narrower at the ankles. The V-shape is making its first appearance since the zoot-suiting 1940s. Pleats are everywhere, another '40s throwback.

"After World War II, we went back to the tight shoulders, straight legs and then bells. It was a complete reversal of the V-shape. Now the top is filling out," said Jack Herschlag of the National Association of Men's Sportswear Buyers.

Unlike women's fashions, change in menswear comes slowly, in long cycles. Men, it seems, are creatures of habit.

"The male habit is to find something he likes and keep buying the same thing. They tend to gravitate towards dead center and stay there," said Herschlag.

And, he said, they also tend to shy away from spending money on clothes.

Dressing the women of the family well used to be enough for many men.

"It's always been a matter of male ego to dress their women well. The psychology carries over even though the social basis for it largely disappeared," Herschlag said.

But men are now thinking of themselves when it comes to fashion. They account for a third of the $88 billion in annual apparel sales in the country.

This season's offerings are aimed at nudging men out of their armchairs and into the stores. Fabrics are elegant — linens, silks, cotton sheeting and combinations of several materials.

The double-breasted look is making news in a six-button version for the longer jacket. Ties are skinnier and designs are beginning to be used only in the center of the tie, rather than all over. Lapels are wider.

For the upwardly mobile corporate guy, the Ivy League look is a must. Button-down collars continue to be the most popular shirt, but a wide variety of collars — wings, band, round, pin — are being shown. The two-tone look is also popular.

Cotton sweaters and rugby shirts continue strong for casual wear, evidence that the preppie look has become institutionalized.

There is wide variety in colors for the traditional golf knit shirts, and even the old fraternity-style cardigan shown by one manufacturer last week took on a new exciting look, its button-hole band done in orange, yellow, green and blue stripes.

For the upper crust jet-setter, Perry Ellis offers his version of menswear, unlined linen jackets in wine and navy worn with the sleeves pushed up. He also offered a whimsical sweater with a simulated tie knitted at the neck.

Even if such touches are not likely to find themselves in the average male's closet, retailers are betting that their availability will get more men into the stores.

Shopping is becoming more and more a couple activity, some say.

"Whether it's man and wife or man and girlfriend, the shopping has become something they do together. It's almost like a date," said Milton Guttenplan, director of advertising and marketing for Barney's men's store in New York.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is to "Desperate Mom": Please don't panic. I was your little girl at age 7. By age 9 I was wearing a 36-B bra. I survived because my mom never showed signs of concern. She never cried for me. (God forbid I should carry the guilt of making my own mother cry about something over which I had no control.) Thank heavens she didn't take me to doctors or psychologists. I would have thought there was something terribly "wrong" with me if she had.

Sure, I got teased, just like the girl in my class with the prominent nose and the one across the room with a funny name nobody could pronounce. Boys called me "Milkshake." I'd scream at them and go home crying, then Mom would tell me what a big problem THEY had. The teasing made me strong and non-judgmental because I had a mom who gave me support and comfort.

Your little girl will be OK, just as I was, but it's up to you whether she feels like a freak or not. — EARLY BLOOMER

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Desperate Mother," whose 7-year-old daughter is developing at an early age: I also had a daughter who had to wear a bra at 6 and started her menstrual period at 7. She was 5 feet tall and fully developed at 8. I was sure she would be a freak — an Amazon!

Fortunately, she was sufficiently mature mentally and emotionally to cope with her premature development.

Today she is a beautiful, intelligent, 20-year-old college student and engaged to be married. She's STILL 5 feet tall and has a lovely figure. Relax, Mother! — K'S MOM

DEAR ABBY: Please tell "Desperate Mother" not to push the panic button. I was 8 when I blossomed into womanhood. I was the first one in my class to wear a bra. (The other girls envied me.) My mother tried to be casual about it, but I knew she was a little perturbed about my early development.

When I saw my own 7-year-old daughter develop early, it was no big deal. I told her what she needed to know as it became relevant and she handled it quite gracefully and naturally. That's what it is — natural. Her timetable is just running a little faster than the majority.

If Mother freaks out, Daughter will feel strange and "abnormal." If Mother takes it in stride, Daughter will accept her body changes for what they are — natural steps toward becoming a woman. — BEEN THERE

DEAR BEEN THERE, K'S MOM AND EARLY BLOOMER: You were only three of many who wrote to offer comfort and counsel to a mother who was about to have a nervous breakdown when her 7-year-old daughter showed symptoms of premature physical development. Thank you all for writing to help a stranger. The longer I write this column, the more convinced I am that people are better than ever.

Measles complications decline in past decade

By FRANK BLANCHARD
AP Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — A rare but deadly brain disease linked to measles declined tenfold from 1970 to 1980 as fewer Americans contracted measles, the national Centers for Disease Control reports.

The incurable brain disease, subacute sclerosing panencephalitis, is a rare complication that can occur months or years after measles, CDC researcher Roger Bernier said Thursday.

The disease, which often begins with mental confusion and slowly progresses to convulsions, insanity, coma and death, usually strikes children or adolescents.

In 1970 there were an estimated 0.61 cases of the brain disease per 1 million people. But that fell tenfold to 0.06 cases per 1 million people in 1980, the CDC said Thursday in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

As of July 1982, there were 634 suspected cases of subacute sclerosing panencephalitis. All of the victims first reported symptoms between 1956 and 1981, the CDC said. Of those, 368 were U.S. residents who met the case definition of the disease and had symptoms appear between 1969 and 1981.

Nationwide efforts begun in 1978 to eradicate measles has helped reduce cases of sclerosing panencephalitis, the CDC said.

The number of measles cases reported to the CDC fell from 47,351 in 1970 to 13,506 in 1980. But as of Oct. 30, only 44 cases had been reported for 1982.

However, a new study reported in today's Journal of the American Medical Association says new measles cases continue to be brought into the country by travelers.

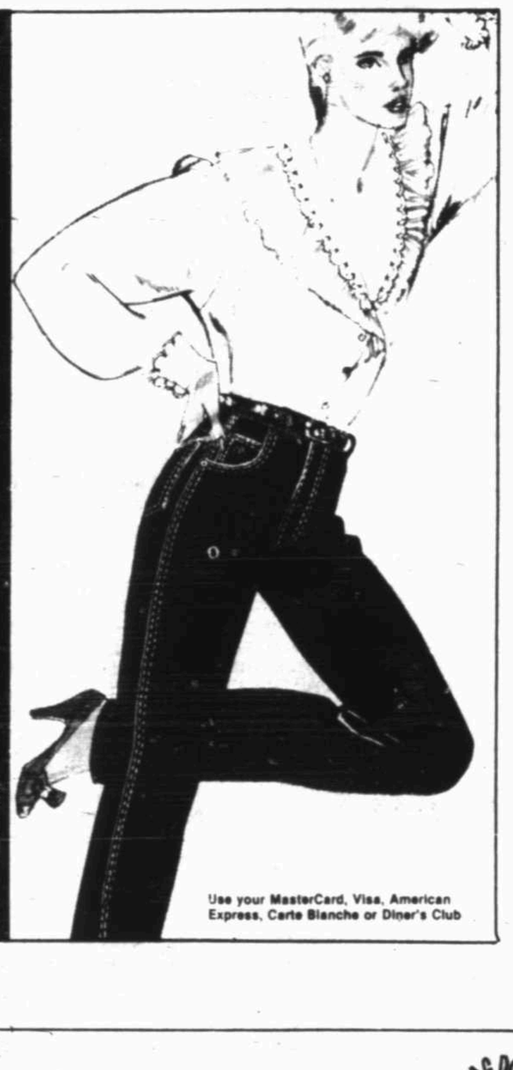

The study says cases that could be related to persons entering the country during 1981 totaled about 17.6 percent of all measles cases and was slightly higher than in 1980.

Once measles is eliminated as a domestic disease, scientists will be able to study what relationship, if any, the measles vaccine has on the brain disease.

"Any cases (of the brain disease) after that would have to be because of the vaccine and not the virus," Bernier said.

Don't treat school phobia lightly

By JAN JENNINGS
Copley News Service

Generally a good-natured, attentive student, Johnny suddenly announces he won't go to school.

Would you (in so many words and actions):

—Pat him on the head, cheerfully say "now, now" and firmly send him on his way?

—Become irritated with such apparent defiance and make it unquestionably clear who makes such decisions?

—Decide he's generally a good boy and pamper him a bit by letting him enjoy a day off? (Maybe he needs a break, too.)

If you reacted in any of those ways, you would be wrong.

Chances are Johnny is experiencing an extremely traumatic ordeal for a child — school phobia, an irrational and persistent fear that if he leaves an anxiety-causing situation at home to go to school the situation at home will worsen. This is not uncommon and not to be treated lightly — or heavy-handedly.

It can hit children of all school ages, triggered by an emotional upheaval (mother's sickness, parents' divorce, birth of a sibling, etc.) with which the child is unprepared to cope. He internalizes his feelings, withdraws and will not leave what he feels is the nurturing site, the home. He will not go to school.

This child is reacting with intense emotions and needs help in working out these anxieties, according to Ron Rowe, a marriage, family and child counselor.

The fears, though unfounded, are all too real to the youngster suffering from school phobia. For instance, the child may reason that if mother got sick last week when he was at school, she may get sick again if he leaves the house to go off to school. In such a case, assistance for the child would be aimed at helping him accept that if mother does get sick again, she will probably get well again — just as she did before.

"This child is far different from the truant child," said Rowe. "He is also different from the child who fears or is upset by one particular situation at the school site, such as a peer calling him 'Fatty.'" (Working through a problem caused to the child by a classmate or staff member at the school involves a complex conciliation process among the involved parties. Consultation with a counselor is recommended in all these situations.)

"The important thing is to get the phobic child back to school right away," said Rowe. "Treatment can begin at once, and generally the problem can be dealt with within a few months."

But, first, who is the child with a school phobia? How does he or she differ from the truant child?

Rowe said it is relatively easy to tell the difference between the truant child and the phobic child. "The truant child is generally a youngster doing poorly academically. His negative experience of failure in school leads him to seek his peer group for support. It is likely his parents don't emphasize education.

"Basically, school bores him. He doesn't care about it — so there is no anxiety attached to the school situation."

Rowe describes the school-phobic child as the more "dramatic situation." He likes school. He is motivated. There are no behavior or attendance problems. He may be a little dependent upon an adult, but he is a child who does well and gets along with everyone."

Except with unforeseen trauma.

"An anxiety level around some precipitating event, such as the mother's sickness, may become so high that the child cannot get himself to go to school," said Rowe. "He has no insight how to deal with this foreign situation, so he cannot even explain why he feels as he does."

"To complicate the situation, the parents, in the midst of their own emotions concerning the mother's illness, may not recognize the seriousness of the child's response." (He may be expected to just snap out of it and get on with it.)

Rowe emphasized that the child's phobia is not toward the school, per se. Rather it is a reluctance of the child to leave the "felt" security of the home for fear some fantasized catastrophe may occur there in his absence.

"This is no time to pamper or censure the child at home," said Rowe. If necessary, the parent should accompany the child to school to talk with a school counselor. "Get the child back into school and discuss the situation with counselors. If not attended to immediately, the building anxiety becomes almost insurmountable."

Treatment within the school environment involves the attention of the school counselor, nurse or psychologist who is advised that the child is not a "brat," but is experiencing accute anxiety. By being supportive of the child and counseling with the family, the school therapist can help the child work through the anxiety.

Award honors black achievements

NEW YORK (AP) — Most youngsters can reel off the names and claims to fame of black sports and entertainment figures with no trouble.

But "not very many" children — or adults — are aware of the accomplishments of black women and men who are scholars, writers, philosophers, artists or inventors, notes Jewell Jackson McCabe, president of The National Coalition of 100 Black Women.

To bridge this "social and historical information gap," the Candace award has been established to celebrate the intellectual achievements of black Americans, according to Ms. McCabe, a coordinator of the awards, presented for the frst time this fall.

"For centuries black women and men have excelled in fields that requre rigorous discipn aningenuity, but they have rarely been honored or even associated with these significant accomplishments," Ms. McCabe said.

"The Candace Award will set a standard and a precedent for recognizing serious black achievement in the future," she added. "The recipients and the objective will clearly demonstrate that blacks aren't only performers and athletes."

Candace, (pronounced can-DAA-say), Ms. MCabe explains, "was the ancient Ethiopian name for empress or queen, and thus a reminder of black female power and accomplishments dating back to 332 B.C."

Two winners widl be selected annually on each of eight categories: Arts andDLetters, Business, Community Servce, Economic Development, Education, Health and Science, History and Technology.

A special scholarship program has been established aspart of the Candace Awards, named for Ennis Francis, considered one of the nation's leading champions of peace, who died in 1980.

The Ennis Francis Scholarship will be awarded to an outstanding student at Meharry Medical College, Nashville, Tenn. Founded in 1876, the college has educated more than 50 percent of the black dentists and physicians now practicing in the United States.

Announcement of the creating of the Candace Award was made jointly by Ms. McCabe, who heads The National Coalition, an organization created to foster cooperation between feinists and civil rights organizations; Al Ferro, president of Bailey's Original Irish Cream Liqueur, spo.sor of the award; and Bill Tatum, publisher of the Amsterdam News in New York City.

"Corporate America has a responsibility to promote and inspire the accomplishments of todax's blacks," Ferro said. "It wiii act as a strong motivator for the youth of today."

The award, created by Tiffany, is an ebony and crystal statue with a stylized representation of a black woman's head, which is the logo of The National Coalition.

Defeated politicians turning toward White House for jobs

An Analysis

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

WASHINGTON (AP) — This is the time of year in Washington when defeated candidates start casting hopeful glances at the White House, for help finding a job, and bureaucrats cast wary glances in the same direction, fearful about losing theirs.

One week beyond one election, and 103 weeks from the next, Washington is starting a new biennial cycle.

At the White House, that means taking advantage of the calendar to shuffle personnel, under the guise of a midterm break. With the last election fading and the next still far away, it also means it is time to chop up, with the least likely political damage, the budget requests that are flowing in from the government's agencies.

President Reagan has set aside 10 hours this week to listen to budget deliberations, returning to a pattern he followed last year.

THIS YEAR, the talks have begun later than usual. Had they been held before Election Day, preliminary ideas about cutting spending could have leaked out and possibly hurt the Republicans. So, the first budget talks on Reagan's schedule occurred a week ago, on the very day Americans were going to the polls to cast ballots and their verdicts on the first two years of the Reagan administration.

Larry Speakes, the chief deputy White House press secretary, was talking about the number of defeated Republican candidates when the subject turned to helping them find jobs in Washington.

"There are a lot of well-qualified, soon-to-be-former (Republican) governors out there," he said.

Those ranks include Gov. William Clements of Texas, a Reagan loyalist who sampled Washington's lures during the Ford administration by taking a job at the Pentagon.

The problem is this: there aren't many jobs open. Clements was rumored to be a candidate for the job of energy secretary, even up to the day it was filled by Donald P. Hodel, who will move over from the Interior Department if given Senate approval.

The White House is a prime topic for anyone spreading shakeup rumors. Speakes went to great lengths earlier this week to deny that two of Reagan's top aides, chief of staff James A. Baker III and deputy staff chief Michael K. Deaver, had gone to Reagan with the ultimatum that if the third member of the "Big Three," counselor Edwin Meese III, did not leave, they would.

"FOOLISHNESS. Wrong. Off-the-wall," he said.

As for the budget, Reagan and his top aides will be meeting on an almost daily basis into mid-December, "when the president will begin to make final decisions," Speakes said.

"He will make decisions (on the budget) right up until Christmas," said Speakes.

This week, the president is dealing with an overview of the budget situation. That means he is focusing on the general problems posed by trying to build up defenses, hold down the deficit, fend off the political liabilities inherent in domestic program cuts, and keep to his vow not to raise taxes in 1983.

At the same time, he must demonstrate that he is willing to compromise, as he has asked the new Congress to do.

With a net Republican loss of 26 seats in the House last week, Reagan has already begun singing a tune of reconciliation as he faces a House less likely to feel the threat of White House pressure, and a Senate that is already talking about demonstrating greater independence than it has in the past two years.

White House aides are aware of the political risk if intransigence on the part of the White House — which one aide described as "government by veto" — becomes a way of life over the next two years.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	1 ♠
2 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠.

It is easy to complain about a bad break. Sometimes it is almost as easy to protect against one!

The auction was straightforward. The only point of interest was North's sensible decision to raise competitively to two hearts despite the fact that he had only three-card support. He had a sound opening bid with prime values and a ruffing value in diamonds, so his raise has the endorsement of this department.

This hand cropped up in a team match. At both tables the defenders attacked with three rounds of spades, with declarer ruffing the third round. One declarer now cashed the king and queen of trumps to learn of the bad break. He then started on clubs.

East ruffed the second club and shifted to the nine of diamonds. Declarer found that he was forced to take the diamond finesse (if he rose with the ace, he either could not draw the last trump or else had to give up on establishing the clubs). West won the king of diamonds and gave his partner another club ruff for down two.

At the other table, declarer adopted a far sounder line. He cashed the ace of clubs, returned to his hand with the king of hearts and led a club to the king. If East now ruffs and returns a diamond, declarer can rise with the ace, draw trumps with the ace and queen and then run clubs with the help of a finesse for the jack to make his contract.

So East discarded a diamond, but that was no better. Declarer crossed back to hand with the queen of hearts and took the club finesse. He simply ran clubs until East decided to ruff. On the diamond return he rose with the ace, drew the last trump by crossing to the ace of trumps, and he was in dummy to cash whatever high clubs remained. Making four-odd.

CBS's 'The Blue and The Gray' mixes 'True Romance,' 'Huckleberry Finn'

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — Mix "True Romance," "Huckleberry Finn" and some crib sheets on American history in the CBS television blender and out comes "The Blue and the Gray," the network's version of the Civil War.

"The Blue and the Gray," which runs Sunday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights, is not compelling drama. It's not another "Roots." Still, the eight-hour miniseries is a sprawling spectacle and, for the most part, it is entertaining.

The movie is based loosely on the personal views and impressions of Civil War historian Bruce Catton, so the expectation was that it would frame its action with a certain amount of historical perspective and stress such things as battle strategy and political skulduggery.

CBS, however, chose to trace the Civil War through personal relationships. It is a reasonable approach — if done well. The problem here is with the characters. They are ordinary and one-dimensional, like "The Waltons." That may be OK for series TV, but not for epic TV.

For instance, it's a nice touch to show a regular Joe named Abe personally test a repeating rifle before it is given to the troops. But what kind of leader was Lincoln? Could he control his generals?

And, as television does repeatedly, to its everlasting detriment, the war is made to seem parenthetical to some cornpone love story: Jonas marries Mary. Mary dies. Jonas sees Mary in a vision. It's not Mary, but Kathy. Jonas kisses Kathy. Kathy belongs to John. John sees the kiss. John leaves in a huff...

Humanizing the national strife that split families is fine, but inserting a slew of simpleton courtships does not enhance this lavish production.

The story is told from the perspective of the fictitious John Geyser (John Hammond), a Virginian who abhors slavery and refuses to side with his brothers and the South. He won't fight against them, either, so he uses his talents as an artist to describe the war for newspapers and magazines.

This enables him to witness the Battle of Bull Run, the siege of Vicksburg and Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox.

John is helped through his ordeals by Jonas, a Union scout played with dash by Stacy Keach. The role of John's mother is given special warmth by Colleen Dewhurst. Lloyd Bridges plays John's father.

And, as they like to say on television, Gregory Peck IS Abraham Lincoln. Peck makes his first television role a memorably stately one.

The war begins, as wars are wont to do, as a romanticized conflict, in which the young march eagerly and boastfully to the slaughter. "Every woman loves a soldier," says one Union enlistment officer.

As the troops prepare for the skirmish that became the Battle of Bull Run, near the village of Manassas, Va., Washington politicians and their wives frolic behind Northern lines, dressed in their Sunday finest.

Once the battle starts, the picnickers quickly discover the difference between bullets and butter, and so will the viewers. The authentic-looking battle takes almost 15 minutes of TV time.

Throughout, "The Blue and the Gray" pays close attention to period detail, offering an 1860s texture in its makeup, costumes and sets. Nearly 800 scenes were filmed in pastoral Arkansas and Oklahoma. Many of the battle scenes were shot at Prairie Grove Battlefield State Park, Ark., site of an actual Civil War battle.

"The Blue and the Gray" never soars dramatically or historically. But it's also never uninteresting. It would have been a sin to open old wounds and be boring, too.

Practice sends Perlman to White House

NEW YORK (AP) — "If you practice these days, you get to the White House, not to Carnegie Hall," says virtuoso violinist Itzhak Perlman.

Perlman was making a play on New York's oldest musical joke, an exchange between two men on a street corner: "How do you get to Carnegie Hall?" "Practice, man, practice."

He was doing that because he will be master of ceremonies for "In Performance at the White House" concerts broadcast on public TV this season. He performed — with pianist Ken Noda — on the first concert, Wednesday night.

Noda, at 20, "is starting to have a career," Perlman says. "He's ready to do it and is doing it."

Music selections included Stravinsky's "Suite Italien," featuring Perlman and Noda, Mozart's Fantasia in d minor-K.397, with Noda, and the music of Fritz Kreisler and Pablo Sarasate, with the two teamed once more.

Beverly Sills was mistress of ceremonies for the premiere season of "In Peformance at the White House" last year.

Perlman, known for his gregarious and ebullient manner, was asked to be master of ceremonies for the series shortly after he'd played at the White House, for the president of Egypt.

"Maybe that did it, I don't know," he says. "When you see a pop singer, he tells the audience what he's going to sing and makes some light-hearted comments. The audience feels it is participating in the concert. I believe, why not do it in classical music?

"I'm already working on some jokes for the White House," he says, then smiles broadly and corrects himself, "No, it's going to be very, very dignified."

The premiere concert was rehearsed Saturday afternoon and taped, before an invited audience, in the East Room of the White House, Sunday. The advance taping is done so that the Public Broadcasting Service can send a cassette of the show to stations who can, in turn, invite local critics to see and comment on the show before it is broadcast.

"It's a double-edged sword," Perlman says. "They (the critics) could say, 'The latest White House show, forget it, don't watch it,'" Perlman says. "They could say I played all right but I didn't host very well.

Backstage 'artists' model clothes

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — When an elegant, European-based fashion boutique opens its doors with a Beverly Hills party, movie stars usually are the main attraction.

But not at Robert Phillips-Beverly. When the exclusive clothier staged a fashion show reception, the "stars" were men who usually stay backstage at party time — the town's caterers, car parkers,florists and shopkeepers.

Makers of 'Waltz' hunt for best western hoofers

There are some great dancers in the Southwest, but the makers of "Waltz Across Texas" are on a treasure hunt for only the best.

A five-state dance contest is being conducted to find the couple who can out two-step, western swing and waltz everybody else. The winners of the contest will be treated to four days and three nights in Reno, Nev.

When "Waltz" was filmed last year in Midland, the cast and crew got caught up in country dancing. The movie's lead, Anne Archer, had starred in such movies as "Hero at Large" with John Ritter and "Paradise Alley" with Sylvester Stallone, but she'd never shuffled across a dance floor with a cowboy. Her husband, Terry Jastrow, had grown up in Midland, but had to relearn the steps for his co-starring role in the movie.

Almost 300 extras crowded into the Stardust in Midland for the filming of a dance hall scene in the movie, while Pepper Martin and the Texas Band provided the musical backdrop for the movie.

Strict rules will be enforced to keep the competition consistent in all five states. Midlander Susie Hitchcock, the choreographer for the movie, will travel to 21 cities setting up the rules for the judges and filling the contestants in on the criteria. Only one couple will travel to the Midland finals from each city.

Susie Hitchcock

On the local level, there will be prizes for first, second and third. The finals will be held at the Midland Stardust Dec. 5.

For more information on the competition call The Producers at 683-8622.

'Celebrate Jazz' performance Saturday

The Midland School of Piano will be sponsoring a performance experience for piano students, "Celebrate Jazz," Saturday at First Christian Church, 1301 W. Louisiana Ave. The day's activities will be followed by a 4 p.m. performance.

Students will have the opportunity to play and receive a critique from adjudicators, Dr. Stanley Engebretson, the University of Texas of the Permian Basin faculty member; Darryl Knapp, musical coordinator for the Friends of Music; Linda Cody and Nancy Knapp, co-directors of the Midland School of Piano; and Mary Anne Vancott and John Mornig, faculty members of Midland School of Music.

Guest artist will be pianist Shirley Hansen accompanied by Bill Godwin, bass, and Vic Chapman, drums. Miss Hansen has been musical director for the Summer Mummers and numerous Midland Community Theatre productions. She also has composed the music for three children's musical plays in collaboration with former Pickwick Players' director, Ed Graczyck.

Miss Hansen, Godwin and Chapman have been playing together for five years and are well known to audiences at the Petroleum Club, the executive dining room of The First National Bank and local country clubs.

Shirley Hansen

The trio will give a special performance for the participants of "Celebrate Jazz" at 4 p.m. which is open to the public.

Olivier's life as dramatic as his roles

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Lord Olivier of Brighton, who no longer lives in Brighton, was in Los Angeles for a few days recently, principally to visit his son, Richard, who is a junior at the University of California, Los Angeles, majoring in theater arts.

Laurence Olivier was also in the United States to do some preliminary throat-clearing in behalf of his autobiography, "Confessions of an Actor," which is being published in this country in December.

In a real sense, Olivier's life for the last decade or so is as dramatic and suffused with courage as any he has declaimed on stage or in front of cameras.

As he finished shooting "Marathon Man" here in 1975 it was difficult to believe that Olivier, simultaneously battling cancer, thrombosis and a painful and wasting condition called myositis, could find the strength and the mobility to work again.

Rising from a chair was an ordeal; his arms and legs were ulcerous; he had to rest frequently. Yet, almost as if he could summon forth and feign good health as he could become Othello maddened by jealousy or Henry V inspiring his men at Agincourt, Olivier somehow managed the physically demanding last scenes of the film (difficult even with director John Schlesinger's careful staging).

Not only that, Olivier — to the astonishment of his friends and the high anxiety of his colleagues on the production — rode a bicycle in "A Little Romance," a feat of daring (not to say insanity) that brought to mind the equally daring and dangerous leap toward the camera that the younger Olivier had done in his film of "Hamlet."

HE HAS KEPT BUSY almost continuously ever since, in "Dracula," "The Jazz Singer," "The Boys From Brazil," "A Bridge Too Far," "The Betsy" and, more recently, in the ill-fated and unesteemed "Inchon!" as Gen. MacArthur.

The roles have occasionally seemed well beneath his immense gifts, and a sort of all-purpose middle-European accent was not always as beguiling as in "A Little Romance," when it went nicely with his con-man role.

But when the script matched the talent, as in his appearances in "Brideshead Revisited," there was the deep pleasure once again of watching one of the century's foremost actors at work.

All the busyness had something of desperation about it. At retirement age (Olivier is now 75), he found himself with more laurels accumulated than pounds.

The tidy piles of dollars he and Vivien Leigh had earned in Hollywood were all lost in their commercially disastrous touring production of "Romeo and Juliet." His role as artistic director of the National Theater paid little by U.S. standards.

Married, very contentedly, to the actress Joan Plowright and with three children, the youngest now 16, Olivier needed to create an estate. With due thanks to the world of international film making, he has now done so.

NEAR-MIRACULOUSLY, he professes himself in better health than he has been in for several years, paces himself carefully but gets about with a remarkable agility.

There have been nearly a dozen biographies of him, Olivier guesses, none to his liking or with his approval. "You do think they'd have had the decency to ask what I thought about the project, wouldn't you?" Olivier asks.

Kenneth Tynan proposed to do yet another, which many of both men's friends agree might have been definitive, but by then Olivier had decided to do the autobiography.

"I was very mean to him," Olivier says. "I told him I wouldn't answer one question. But the only reason was that I was going to do my own. He would've done a damned interesting one. He was a brilliant and intelligent critic, and he did prove that the pen is sharper than the sword.

Olivier's decision to bring Tynan into the National Theater as his dramaturgist, or literary manager, set off a storm among the organization's lordly trustees that never really died down.

Olivier resigned from the National in 1973. His last production and last appearance was in "The Party" by Trevor Griffith ("a writer first, a communist second, if I'm not hanging him by his necktie") about the Communist Party of Great Britain, seen as a tragedy.

HE STARTED WRITING the autobiography in March 1980, hunting and pecking at the typewriter until his hands cramped.

"If you're going to write an autobiography," Olivier says, "your duty is clear. You've got to open up them golden gates and let all the filth out, the full horror."

Since it seemed to Olivier that the book had to be honest if it was to have any usefulness at all, he made up his mind to be "absolutely frank, no cover-up. I tried to do that as best I could without bitching people, although I confess I was rather bitchy about Peter Brook" (over Brook's raunchy and free-wheeling production of Seneca's "Oedipus," although the bitchiness was mutual).

The first reviews of the book in England were uncomplimentary, disliking the candor, especially as it involved the last, mad years of Vivien Leigh.

On the other hand, Olivier's lack of reticence extends to himself and he leaves no doubt he was quite a self-centered and supercilious young fellow. Indeed, he remembered a conversation with the late William Wyler when they were making "Wuthering Heights."

"He was being the perfectionist, as always, and I made some absolutely asinine and sneering remark about this gypsy medium as contrasted to the grandeur of the stage. Willie for a wonder didn't knock me down, but he said, quite calmly enough, that one day I would feel very differently about film. But I knew I was being the fool even as I said it. Oh, God, what an ass I was."

HE AND WYLER'S friendship survived the foolishness and the years.

Olivier does not talk, even now, of slowing down. He has done for television John Mortimer's play, "A Voyage Round My Father," based on Mortimer's remarkable father, a queen's counsel who went blind in middle life but continued to practice.

Olivier has also performed for television the work, "King Lear," with which he has often said an actor might well wish to crown his career.

Children of men missing or killed in action in Southeast Asia carry baskets of roses to place at the foot of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington Thursday. The memorial will be dedicated on Saturday.

U.S. honors Vietnam veterans

By The Associated Press

With flowers, bands, candles and cheers, Americans on Veterans Day gave "long overdue" recognition to Vietnam soldiers, gazed fondly back at World War I doughboys and looked to the future at nationwide teach-ins on the threat of nuclear war.

In Washington, 20 teen-agers whose fathers were casualties in the Vietnam War placed red roses Thursday at the new memorial for Vietnam veterans. In New York City, 1,500 people marched down Fifth Avenue. And six World War I doughboys paraded through Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

Retired Army Gen. William C. Westmoreland, former commander of U.S. forces in Vietnam, led the Veterans Day parade in Greenville, S.C., and welcomed the late recognition of the men he led.

"I hope this is a turning point for the country and especially these men who fought so bravely," he declared. "It's long overdue."

About 50 young Vietnam veterans in faded camouflage jackets joined elderly men in World War I wool caps in a march down Greenville's Main Street. All were applauded, but it seemed that the loudest cheers were for those who fought in Vietnam.

"We weren't allowed to cry walking down there, but I sure felt like I could have," said Dale Rilley, who served in Vietnam in 1970-71. "The people applauded and saluted like it was coming from their hearts."

New York's parade focused attention on American soldiers believed to be still in Vietnam — alive or dead. But Mayor Edward Koch, who noted that the men killed in Southeast Asia now have their own granite monument, also spoke of Americans who came back.

"It is not adequate to simply have stone memorialize their sacrifice," Koch said. "We should have a living memorial...The best living memorial must be jobs."

About 30,000 Bostonians crowded streets throughout the city to watch veterans march in step with bands and color guards. Gov. Edward J. King said in a speech at the Statehouse that 65 servicemen from Massachusetts are still missing in Vietnam, and said resolution of their fate should be a top national priority.

In San Francisco, about 100 people turned out Thursday night for a candlelight vigil on the steps of City Hall to honor Vietnam veterans, and in nearby Fremont, about 1,000 spectators lined city streets to cheer nearly 180 civic and military groups who marched in the 20th annual Alameda Veterans Day Parade.

In Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Oral "Moose" LaCombe, 86, said, "They weren't going to have a parade at all." So he decided to organize one himself, saying, "We don't want our young people to forget World War I."

The parade consisted of six former doughboys, ranging in age from 84 to 90, who rode 10 blocks through the city in a jeep borrowed from the local National Guard.

In Washington, two guitarist strummed the Vietnam-era song "Where Have All the Flowers Gone?" during ceremonies at the new Vietnam War Memorial. Across the Potomac River at Arlington National Cemetery, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger cited a "terrible lesson" of that war: "We learned that we should never again ask our men and women to serve in a war that we do not intend to win."

In Philadelphia, Mayor William Green linked ceremonies marking the 250th birthday of Independence Hall to Veterans Day, said, "The price of freedom is not cheap, and its light is kept alive by the many who died."

Veterans Day was not all parades. Teach-ins at some 500 colleges and universities focused on the issue of nuclear war and disarmament.

About 200 people heard both sides of the nuclear weapons debate at Harvard University in Cambridge, Mass. Henry Kendall, chairman of the Boston-based Union of Concerned Scientists, urged the United States and the Soviet Union to sign an agreement in which each would promise not to be the first to use nuclear weapons.

But John Silber, president of Boston University, said the Soviets have broken agreements in the past.

College senior falls to death

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — A University of Maryland senior died after falling four stories while trying to jump to a friend's dormitory room, campus police said.

John O'Reagan, 24, of Oxon Hill, Md., was pronounced dead of head and body injuries shortly after 3 a.m. Thursday, about half an hour after the accident at Cambridge Hall, said officer Don Smith.

O'Reagan, a mechanical engineering major, was apparently trying to leap from a third-floor lavatory window to a balcony to gain access to a friend's dormitory room, but fell four stories to an outside stairwell, Smith said.

An emergency crew took O'Reagan to Leland Memorial Hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

Veterans to march Saturday

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two guitarists strummed a song from the Vietnam era — "Where Have All the Flowers Gone?" — as 20 children whose fathers were casualties of the war placed red roses at the new memorial to Vietnam veterans.

It was a solemn moment in America's salute to the 2.7 million who served in that war. But there was cheer as well as painful memory in a Washington full of thousands of ex-GIs, many engaged in an endless round of back-slapping reunions.

In one hotel ballroom, "The Big Red One," a division that saw combat aplenty, got together again, to tell old war stories, and other hotel corridors rang to the proud shout of "Airborne!"

On Saturday, thousands of these former soldiers will try to remember how to march. They will participate in a 10-block parade, moving down Constitution Avenue, by states rather than military units.

After the parade, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial — built by veterans to honor veterans — will be dedicated.

At the black walls bearing 57,939 engraved names of Americans who did not come home, the 20 children — teen-agers now though they were just tots when their fathers went to war — placed little American flags into the new grass and laid red roses beside them Thursday in a brief ceremony to which the guitar music served as backdrop.

Across the Potomac River at Arlington National Cemetery, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, observing Veterans Day, said one "terrible lesson" resulted from Vietnam.

"We learned that we should never again ask our men and women to serve in a war that we do not intend to win," he said.

The Vietnam veterans in his audience applauded in agreement.

Everett Alvarez Jr., said the 8½ years — longer than any other American — he spent as a prisoner of war in North Vietnam gave him "an outlook on freedom that is impossible to get anywhere else."

"It is this," said Alvarez, deputy director of the Veterans Administration. "A man's life loses most of its meaning if he is not free, and if he must fight halfway around the earth to preserve that freedom, he best do it."

Back at the new monument, Bill Lewis, a former Marine from Lindenwold, N.J., said he felt a strange emotion when he saw some familiar names on the walls — including some he had not known to expect.

Reagan expresses dislike for higher payroll taxes

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — As a blue-ribbon panel sifts through dozens of proposals to rescue the financially ailing Social Security system, President Reagan is indicating he does not think higher payroll taxes should be one of them.

The president, at his nationally televised news conference Thursday night, said, "I don't think there's very much more room" to raise the payroll tax.

And he again promised that no one, "especially me...is going to support any program for restoring fiscal solvency that reduces the checks below the level that the present beneficiaries are getting."

But he suggested there are "a number of opportunities" for reforms, including changes in the benefits of people who are now "paying in and are a long way from collecting."

The National Commission on Social Security Reform was meeting for the second day today in this city just outside Washington. The first order of business was to discuss its staff's laundry list of nearly 100 options to reduce the system's deficit, estimated to be $150 billion to $200 billion over the next seven years.

THEY WILL ALSO DECIDE whether to recommend taking Social Security out of the federal budget.

On Thursday, the panel of Democrats and Republicans agreed unanimously on the size of the deficit in the old age and disability funds in the 1980s and that the long-range deficit amounts to 1.8 percent of the taxable payroll.

To balance the books, the system needs to take in about 15 percent more revenue or reduce its expenditures by a like amount over the next 75 years.

The 15 commission members attended a private dinner Thursday night, and Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., said they would likely discuss on an informal basis ways to fix the Social Security system.

"I think we're going to be visiting around tonight, a lot of us, seeing if there's some common ground on some area, everybody give and take a little bit," he said. "I'm very willing to vote for a specific proposal. But I'd want some assurance that it was going to be a 13-to-2 vote or something in that neighborhood."

One way to wipe out the deficit would be to raise the combined Social Security payroll tax by 1.82 percentage points. Workers and their employers each now pay 6.7 percent for a total of 13.4 percent, part of which pays for Medicare.

MOST OF THE 15 members seemed to favor the idea of removing Social Security from the federal budget, if only to blunt the charge that Reagan or anyone else was trying to balance the budget on the backs of the elderly.

Former Social Security Commissioner Robert M. Ball and other Democrats on the panel favor a speed-up in payroll tax hikes to generate more cash for the system. Ball wants to cushion that with a new, offsetting income tax credit for workers' contributions to Social Security.

Alan Greenspan, the economist who chairs the panel, said it should recommend some type of "fail-safe mechanism" for Social Security. "Even if we don't agree on its details, we might agree one is necessary," he said.

Also, he said his proposal to limit cost-of-living raises to the increase in workers' average wages minus 1.5 percentage points would help stabilize the system. Benefits now rise in lockstep with consumer prices, while revenues rise only as fast as workers' wages.

Ball told reporters that allowing Social Security to borrow from the Treasury if it gets in a bind would be a good fail-safe mechanism.

CONSERVATIVES ON THE PANEL are expected to insist on changes to modify cost-of-living increases and other benefit adjustments as their price for going along with any increase in Social Security taxes.

Video court' remains on air

MIAMI (AP) — An experimental program to record misdemeanor arraignments on video tape — with judges in the courtrooms and defendants remaining in jail, but on camera — is being extended another 90 days.

A preliminary study recommending continuation of the program said it has saved $27,700 per week since it was launched in mid-August for an original 90-day run. The extension was announced Thursday.

The arraignments are videotaped Monday through Friday, without a court reporter. Only one courtroom and one judge, instead of the usual two, are needed for the arraignments, which also require fewer jailers and court officials than normal.

The arraignments in the Dade County Jail chapel are on misdemeanor charges ranging from minor traffic offenses to drunken driving and public intoxication. Defense attorneys stay in the chapel with the defendants.

A study prepared by the Dade-Miami Criminal Justice Council recommends that officials purchase wide-angle camera lenses for the video equipment and use more microphones in the courtrooms.

Nearly $40,000 has been spent on equipment so far.

Nine-year-old Amy Plank, of Edwardsville, Ill., is all smiles as she is greeted by Thaao Penghlis, who stars as Tony DiMera on NBC's "Days of Our Lives." She visited the network studios on Thursday. Amy, who suffers from leukemia, is on a "dream vacation" in Southern California that will last throughout the week.

Tylenol returns in new packaging

NEW YORK (AP) — After spending $100 million to pull Tylenol capsules off the nation's store shelves, Johnson & Johnson is reintroducing the popular pain reliever while conceding that some customers will never come back.

The drug company plans to retain the Tylenol name and the package will look the same — except for three tamper-resistant features and warnings that consumers should not buy the product if the box or bottle have been opened.

"In the final analysis, we believe that the American consumer...will make an eminently fair decision about the future of Tylenol," said James E. Burke, J&J's chairman.

Company officials discussed Thursday their plan to salvage the commercial future of the aspirin-free drug. The New York news conference, televised via satellite to reporters in 29 other cities, came almost six weeks after seven Chicago-area people died after taking cyanide-tainted Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules.

Tylenol, in capsule, tablet and liquid form, was the nation's leading non-prescription pain reliever before the poisonings, with an estimated 37 percent share of the market.

But the company voluntarily recalled 22 million bottles of Tylenol capsules after the tampering. Whoever tainted the capsules has not been found.

"We are certain there are those who will never use Tylenol again," Burke said after the news conference. "We wish we knew how many."

Burke said McNeil Consumer Products Co., the Johnson & Johnson subsidiary that manufactures Tylenol, began taking retail and wholesale orders for the product Thursday. He predicted it would begin reappearing on store shelves "in a few weeks."

The federal Food and Drug Administration has determined that McNeil was not responsible for the cyanide contamination, but the government has ordered tamper-resistant packaging for a wide range of drugs.

The new Tylenol package will feature a box glued shut at both ends. A red plastic seal will surround the cap and neck of the bottle, and a foil seal beneath the cap will cover the bottle's mouth.

A yellow label on the bottle will be imprinted with red letters warning, "Do not use if safety seals are broken." The boxes also will bear the inscription, "New safety sealed."

Burke said the packaging, "with the cooperation of alert consumers, affords the public the best protection we could reasonably devise."

J&J President David R. Clare said the $100 million cost of recalling the capsules, media messages and tests on the recalled product, along with the cost of manufacturing the tamper-resistent packaging, would not be passed on to consumers.

Burke announced that coupons worth $2.50 toward the purchase of any Tylenol product would be printed in newspapers across the nation later this month and in December.

Polls conducted since the poisoning showed that most people who used Tylenol in the past probably would resume using it if it were reintroduced, officials said.

"We consider it a moral imperative, as well as good business, to restore Tylenol to its pre-eminent position in the marketplace," Burke said.

Sick children visit 'seventh heaven'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An Oregon boy with a rare bone cancer found "seventh heaven" at Disneyland and a 9-year-old leukemia victim from Illinois was "too excited to feel any pain" on her Hollywood tour, in two trips for the sick children financed by generous donors.

A fund-raising campaign that brought in about $28,000 — far more than needed — enabled 8-year-old Abe Cooper and his family to travel from Oregon to visit Southern California for a week.

On Thursday, Abe took in about one-fourth of Disneyland, enjoying the antics of Pirates of the Caribbean, the exotic tropics of the Jungle Cruise and the festive atmosphere of the Mark Twain riverboat.

"Some of the stuff is hard to get Abe on," said his father, Roger Cooper. But he said the youngster was excited about the entire trip. "He's just in seventh heaven."

Meanwhile, little Amy Plank was so enthusiastic Thursday about kissing actors John Travolta and Sylvester Stallone that she was "too excited to feel any pain," said her mother, Sheila Clements.

The visit, which included trips to the sets of popular television shows, began Tuesday night for the young leukemia victim, who arrived in Los Angeles from Edwardsville, Ill., with her mother and an aunt.

The Coopers also arrived Tuesday after a doctor advised them to make the trip as soon as possible because Abe is weakening.

Cooper, a 29-year-old car salesman from Sweet Home, Ore., who is divorced from Abe's mother, Patricia, said the trip has helped bring his family together.

"We have just been able to put our past aside...We have been able to pull together for Abe's benefit," he said. "This trip has been kind of what you might say the grand finale of that coming back together as a family."

Doctors told the Coopers that Abe probably will live only a matter of weeks. He has been suffering for about a year from the cancer, called Ewing's sarcoma.

The trip for Amy was arranged by Stella Southmayd of Florissant, Mo., who read of Amy's plight and rounded up $2,200 in donations.

"We watched them making 'Happy Days' and 'Joanie Loves Chachi,' and we played around with the actors on 'Days of Our Lives,'" said Amy's mother. "All day people have been saying she's been on cloud nine in Studio 9 — that's where we were.

"She got to kiss Sylvester Stallone, and John Travolta kissed her and gave her his autograph," the mother said, adding, "Stars really are human."

Amy wasn't the only one to get excited.

"My knees are weak, too," Mrs. Clements said. "Imagine. John Travolta kissed me."

Tylenol poisonings prompt rash of tampering hoaxes

By The Associated Press

The Tylenol poisonings in Chicago have prompted a rash of contamination hoaxes, with more than half a dozen reported "victims" of tampered products turning out to be culprits.

Authorities generally say they don't know why these people — adults and youngsters — acted the way they did. One youth said he put a nail in a frankfurter to scare his girlfriend and another teen-ager said an impulse for publicity prompted him to spike chocolate milk with drain cleaner.

No one has been seriously injured in any of the incidents and police in several cases decided not to press charges.

Among the hoaxes:

—Marion Barrow, 14, of Minneapolis, admitted putting Drano in a carton of chocolate milk from the cafeteria at Northeast Junior High School on Oct. 26. Barrow had complained of throat pains after drinking the milk and was admitted to the hospital where doctors found a reddening of the esophagus. "I guess it was just mischevious," Barrow said. "We were studying about that Tylenol thing...I got the idea." No charges were filed.

—Michael McDaniel, 19, pleaded guilty to falsifying a police report after telling Pittsfield Township, Mich., authorities on Oct. 29 that he had found a nail in a Ball Park frankfurter manufactured by Hygrade Food Products of Southfield, Mich. McDaniel, who faces up to 90 days in prison and a $100 fine, said he put the nail in the hot dog to frighten his girl friend.

—Janet Melonio, 31, of Redford Township, Mich., told police on Oct. 29 that she found a razor blade in a Ball Park frank. Police said she later admitted putting the blade in the hot dog herself. They said they would not prosecute because of "extenuating circumstances" which were not disclosed.

—An 11-year-old boy at St. Helena's School in Wilmington, Del., showed his teacher an oatmeal cream pie from his lunch with a knife blade in it on Nov. 1. Cpl. Barry Beck of the state police said the boy's father "apparently suspected something was amiss," and talked with his son who admitted putting the blade in the pie. Beck said he did not know the motive for the boy's action, but said the youngster said he'd seen a report of a similar incident on television. No charge was filed; Beck said "it didn't seem to serve any purpose."

Text selection will change, group says

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — If the State Board of Education does not open its textbook selection process to all Texans, the 1983 Legislature or the courts will do it for them, says the Texas coordinator of a national organization formed to protect constitutional freedoms.

Michael Hudson of People for the American Way said Thursday that numerous legislators had encouraged him to suggest ways of changing the process, which allows only textbook critics and publisher representatives to make oral presentations.

"I believe that either through state board action, the Legislature or the courts this process will be changed next year," Hudson told a Capitol news conference.

State education commissioner Raymon Bynum was scheduled to make his recommendations today as the 24-member board prepared for a final vote on $37.6 million worth of new textbooks Saturday.

Special books, such as those in Braille, and replacements for other volumes will raise total textbook spending to $60.5 million for the 1983-84 school year.

Only California spends more money on textbooks, and the president of the Texas Council for Science Education, who is critical of how books are chosen in Texas, said, "Texas calls the shots" for the nation.

Steven Schafersman said textbook critics Mel and Norma Galber of Longview wield such "enormous influence" over the Board of Education that it adopted a 1974 "anti-evolution" rule at their request.

Schafersman, a Ph.D. candidate in geology at Rice, said the Gablers had complained that biology textbooks taught evolution as a fact, not a theory, and omitted any reference to creation.

In a written statement to the board, Schafersman said the Gablers' "scientifically ignorant" 1973 letter to the board "has had by far the greatest negative impact on science education in the entire country during the past nine years."

"The education results have been uniformly regrettable," he said. "Textbooks today include equivocations and misrepresentations about evolution, have reduced coverage of evolution and other biological phenomena, and even include pro-creationist statements.

S. Schafersman

"The result has been that high school graduates have received a second-rate biology education in most schools in the country," he said.

The Gablers were registered Thursday against 12 proposed textbooks in civics, homemaking, world geography and health.

"If the objections raised by the majority of this morning's protesters were accepted, one of the purposes of public education would be defeated," said Barbara Parker of Washington, director of American Way's National Schools & Libraries Project.

"For example, virtually every time a teacher's guide...even suggested that a teacher engage her students in an activity with a question that began with, 'What do you think?' 'How would you react?' 'What is your opinion of?' the petitioners knee-jerk reaction was 'invasion of privacy,'" she said. "To them, the notion that students might become involved in a subversive activity such as thinking for themselves is something that cannot be tolerated in our nation's schools.

PUC to examine alternatives to fuel-adjustment clause

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Public Utility Commission, besieged by consumer complaints, says it will take another look at the practice of letting utility companies pass on fuel cost increases to ratepayers.

PUC Chairman Moak Rollins told the Sunset Commission Thursday night his staff was preparing alternatives to the fuel-adjustment clause that heated up the recent gubernatorial race.

The Sunset Commission reviewed the work of PUC and the Texas Railroad Commission in a hearing lasting into the night Thursday. It will be up to the commission to make recommendations to the 1983 Legislature of any changes needed in the agencies' operations.

"We have asked the staff to prepare alternative rules," Rollins testified Thursday. "When they are completed they will be published and there will be full public hearings on them."

Generally, witnesses from the utility companies recommended the present three-member appointed commission be retained by the 1983 Legislature.

Representatives of the Association of Concerned Organizations for Reform Now asked the Sunset Commission to recommend a six-member commission, elected from separate districts.

"Utility rates are lower in states with elected commissioners," said Ovara Harris of Houston, an ACORN witness.

"We need our hands on the throats of PUC by electing commissioners from single districts," said Orell Fitzsimmons of Houston, another ACORN witness. "We're beginning to fight and we hope you people are with us."

Joe O'Brien, who said he was a spokesman for the Texas Association of Concerned Taxpayers and Ratepayers called for the resignation of PUC commissioners.

"The Texas Public Utility commission should be abolished at sundown and the control of the rates for utilities should be returned to local officials and the courts of Texas," he said.

The fuel adjustment clause allows electric utilities to pass on to consumers the increased cost of generating electricity. It was a hot issue between Gov. Bill Clements and Attorney General Mark White. White said if he won, which he did, he would see the PUC did away with the clause.

Donald K. Hill, law professor at Texas Southern University in Houston, urged the Sunset Commission to recommend PUC investigate fuel cost pass-throughs.

"A utility company should have to come in and justify the cost of fuel," he said. "I've heard some utilities have sweetheart contracts with their affiliates."

Robert K. Campbell, president of Texas Power & Light Co. and representing the Association of Electric Companies in Texas, urged that commissioners be appointed, and said there was no need for a special counsel to speak for consumers.

Rollins, who appeared with Commissioners George Cowden and Tommie Gene Smith, said he thought consumers were adequately represented in hearings before the commission.

"The general counsel of the commission has the charge to represent the consumer and see that each party presents its position," he said. "I think it is working."

He also said he did not think it feasible to hold PUC hearings in different parts of the state "but if the Legislature will provide the money and the extra staff we will provide such hearing."

Earlier, the commission heard from the three members of the Texas Railroad Commission.

Texas Railroad Commission Chairman Jim Nugent and Commissioners Buddy Temple and Mack Wallace were asked if they found any conflict of interest from the fact they receive campaign contributions from oil and gas companies that are regulated by the commission.

"I don't think this is any reason to move toward an appointive commission," said Temple. "I think the rest of the commission feels the same way. What is needed is election campaign reform. This problem involves not just the railroad commission but the whole Legislature, the judges and other state officials.

Just what is the difference between a 2 wheel and 4 wheel drive sport utility. Unless all terrain travel is important to you, consider these advantages in a 2 wheel drive. Less machinery in the 2 wheel Ramcharger means less on the sticker price and the cost of repair. 2 wheel drive uses normal highway tires for less cost and for a more comfortable ride. And the 2 wheel drive tows your boat, camper or trailer with as much ease as the 4 wheeler. Over all the 2 wheeler is a practical choice. But we of course, stock 4 wheel drive Ramchargers.
