White House reception awaits flier

Goodman again on U.S. soil

WASHINGTON (AP) — Navy Lt. Robert O. Goodman Jr., proclaiming "God Bless America," returned to U.S. soil today after a month in Syrian captivity, then headed for a White House reception with the Democratic presidential hopeful who negotiated his release.

"I would just like to say I appreciate all the support I received," Goodman said after he and Jesse Jackson stepped out of a military transport jet provided by President Reagan.

As the men left the blue and white plane at 6:35 a.m. EST, they raised their clasped hands amid cheers from more than 200 well-wishers and the rousing sounds of a local high school band which had come to nearby Andrews Air Force Base.

Goodman, dressed in his crisp Navy uniform, received hugs from his wife and family. In brief comments on the airport tarmac, Goodman said he had "received 60,000 pieces of mail and to me that's awesome, and to me that shows what kind of country this is."

"I thought daily about the POW experience that I had been trained to withstand, and the type of POW experience the guys had to experience in Vietnam," said Goodman, 27, a bombardier-navigator from Virginia Beach, Va., whose attack jet was shot down by the Syrians on Dec. 4.

"I would like to take from that expericnece and say one quote which one man said when he came back from Vietnam — and that was 'God Bless America.'"

Jackson, in his remarks, praised Syrian President Hafez Assad for "helping to break the cycle of pain." He also complimented State Department officials and Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., for assisting in the efforts to negotiate Goodman's release. Percy is chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The civil rights leader praised Reagan for not interferring with his efforts, and said: "This mission was a political risk, not a moral risk. It was the right thing to do."

Jackson and Goodman were to meet with Reagan at the White House later today. Goodman, who went immediately to nearby Bethesda Naval Hospital for a brief check-up, was to re-enter the facility for several days of tests after his visit with Reagan.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson holds a press briefing upon his arrival at Rhein-Main Air Base in Frankfurt, Germany, en route to the United States with an American soldier whose freedom he helped negotiate. See related stories, Pages 2A and 4A.

Goodman spent the entire 10-hour trip from Frankfurt, West Germany, in the forward cabin and cockpit of the military transport. When the plane touched down, a burst of applause erupted from his cabin.

When the plane taxied to a stop, Jackson, joined by Goodman, came to the back of the aircraft and said a prayer before disembarking.

Many of those waiting in the freezing weather for the plane to arrive wore the rainbow buttons of Jackson's presidential campaign, and some carried signs saying, "God Bless Jesse Jackson," and "A Giant Step For Peace."

Kenneth W. Dam, the undersecretary of State, represented the government, joining other dignitaries at ceremony, including Percy and Washington Mayor Marion Barry were also there.

"I'm very proud and very happy. I'd love to have the opportunity to say 'Thank you very much' to Rev. Jackson," said a jubilant Marilyn Goodman, the airman's mother.

Goodman and Jackson made the trip in two legs, beginning with a flight from Damascus, Syria to Rhein Main Air Base in West Germany. Goodman appeared happy and fit as he emerged from the Air Force C-141 transport plane that flew him and the Jackson entourage to West Germany.

The bombadier-navigator was freed by the Syrians Tuesday, a month after his Navy attack jet was shot down over Syrian-controlled central Lebanon. The plane's pilot, Mark Lange, was killed in the raid, which was in retaliation for Syrian anti-aircraft attacks on U.S. reconnaissance flights.

Speaking to reporters while en route to Frankfurt, Goodman said his captors had shouted and waved guns at him during his imprisonment in Syria.

"They weren't trying to hurt me, just trying to scare me," he said.

Reagan, who a week ago refused to accept telephone calls from Jackson and warned that Jackson's mission could harm Goodman's chances for release, set aside time to meet with Jackson and Goodman in the Oval Office after their arrival in the United States.

"You don't quarrel with success," Reagan said Tuesday. In a call placed by the White House to Jackson, he said, "All Americans thank you. There have been a lot of prayers here in Washington. I have been praying for you. I couldn't be happier."

He appeared amenable to Jackson's appeal, made during the stopover in West Germany, for negotiation and not confrontation with the Syrians.

"If they talk, they will act. If they act, they will change things," Jackson said. "If I can talk to President Assad and win the release, what could a president do?"

Tax issue pending as budgeting continues

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, finishing work on another red ink budget he will send to Capitol Hill this month, is still undecided on whether to embrace new taxes to trim deficits, according to Republican legislators who have talked with the president and his budget director.

While the decision on taxes is pending, the legislators say it is clear the Pentagon's original request for a 22 percent hike in military spending will be trimmed.

The issue of taxes is the last major issue to be resolved before the president sends his new budget to Congress, probably on Jan. 30.

Administration officials and congressional sources say decisions made to date on the budget plan for the 1985 fiscal year that begins Oct. 1 would mean spending roughly in the range of $920 billion to $930 billion. The deficit is projected at about $185 billion.

The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that government spending in the current fiscal year will be about $859 billion with a deficit of about $180 billion.

House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois joined other GOP House members in meeting Tuesday with budget director David A. Stockman on Capitol Hill.

Michel said he expects no surprises or quick deficit cures.

"They're (the administration) just going to pretty much face the facts. I don't think it'll (the budget) be all phonied up and ballooned up," Michel said.

At the White House, meanwhile, Reagan met with Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn.; Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee; and Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee.

The president's senior economic advisers are worried by the persistent big deficits, but they are split on what measures to use to combat them.

One camp favors quick action, such as immediate tax increases, to shrink deficits.

However, others argue that while taxes must eventually go up, they want to delay action on taxes in hopes of forcing Congress to enact more spending cuts.

Republican senators who talked with Reagan on Tuesday and GOP House members who met with Stockman said it is unclear whether the president will again propose the "contingency tax" he recommended last year. That would have raised about $145 billion over three years, beginning in 1986.

Michel said he expects that the contingency tax idea for an income tax surcharge and an oil excise tax would be recommended again in the new budget.

Dole, who has been pressing for a three-year $150 billion package of tax increases and spending cuts, said after the meeting with Reagan "no decisions have been made ... I think the president has the reluctance we all have that no taxes (should be raised) without substantial spending reduction."

Domenici said, "There're going to have to be some taxes in future years. The question is when do you do those, and that discussion (with the president) did not proceed beyond us agreeing to get together another time with some specific ideas."

Republican congressional sources, who asked not to be identified, said that if a compromise cannot be worked out on a large deficit-reduction package, Senate GOP leaders then may seek a modest package.

Meanwhile, the senators who met with Reagan expressed hope that a compromise figure for defense spending could be agreed on.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger set off a flurry of protests from legislators when he made known late last year that he was seeking nearly $322 billion in defense spending for 1985.

Domenici said he told Reagan "that there is a major issue surrounding the defense budget and hopefully we can arrive at some compromise that would be satisfactory to the president. It certainly can't be as high a number as we've heard the secretary of defense talk about."

Family has its second 'first baby'

ATHOL, Mass. (AP) — One couple's home seems to be a favorite roosting spot for the stork on New Year's Day, with two newborns since 1981 declared the region's first arrivals of the year.

Steven Paul Belanger Jr. was the family's latest winner in the Mt. Grace Region First Baby Contest, weighing in at 8 pounds at 8:43 a.m. on New Year's Day at Franklin Medical Center.

Steven Jr.'s older brother Scott had six more ounces on him when he entered the world at 10:21 a.m. on Jan. 1, 1981.

The parents, Steven Belanger, 27, and his 22-year-old wife, Nancy, of Orange, met the year before Scott was born — on New Year's Eve.

Hunters asked to spare moose

North Dakota man befriended beribboned beast

WALHALLA, N.D. (AP) — A hunter who believes in shooting moose to "keep them under control" has befriended one and asked fellow hunters to spare her if they spot her in the woods wearing the red ribbon he tied around her neck.

"She's legal game, that's what they tell the hunters, but she is a tame moose," Carl Kartes said. "If anyone shoots her, I'd say they're not much of a hunter.

Kartes, 52, and "Sandy" got together in June 1980 when the game warden wasn't available and the county sheriff didn't know what to do with an ailing calf that apparently had been rejected by her mother. The hunter volunteered to do the parenting.

Kartes said he bottle-fed the calf every two hours for the first few days, using a mixture of condensed milk, syrup and water.

After 10 days, he released the recovering calf in a nearby wooded area. With help from the family's dog, he tracked her down for daily feedings.

The moose and the family dog "got to be just like twins," Kartes said. "If you couldn't find the moose you followed the dog."

Sandy has since lived in the woods and has delivered two calves, Kartes said. But his farm remains her home away from home on cold winter nights where she sleeps in the garage or quonset, he said.

The moose was a regular visitor during the bitter cold weather last month, he said Tuesday night. She left Friday when the temperatures warmed up but, "She knows where the gravy is.... When it get's cold she'll be back. You can just about bet on it."

In the summer months, she prefers the hills, he said.

Sandy, who weighs 1,000 pounds, stands 8 feet from hoof to head and also likes to be petted, the hunter said.

"As far as myself, I'm not afraid" of an attack, he told a recent visitor. "But with someone else, she might run them off. If she starts to lay her ears back, step behind me."

Ivy Kartes said her husband is the only person Sandy will listen to. "She won't listen to me. Why, she even kicked me once."

Moose hunting became legal in North Dakota in 1977, and this season 30 licenses were awarded in a lottery. Kartes was among the hundreds who applied.

The season begins about the first week in December and lasts 10 days. 'I believe in shooting them," he said. "You have to keep them under control."

But not Sandy. This year, he tied a red ribbon around her neck and asked hunters at a pre-season meeting to spare her.

"A lot of people say, 'Oh, you should lock her up during hunting season,' but I didn't raise her for that. I raised her to go back in the wilds."

A hunter once tracked Sandy but recognized she was the tame moose as he got closer. Instead of shooting the animal, he petted her, Kartes said.

Kartes has never touched Sandy's two calves because he wants them to remain wild. "Listen, because it happened this way doesn't mean it's the right way to do it. You just don't go picking up wild animals," he said.

U.S. may increase Salvadoran aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has promised the El Salvadoran government an increase in military aid if that country removes military officers and others linked to death squads from positions of authority, U.S. officials say.

The officials, who asked not to be identified, said no aid cutoff is contemplated if the Salvadoran government fails to take action. But they said Salvadoran authorities have sufficient incentive to carry out the administration's wishes because they recognize current aid levels are insufficient.

According to the officials, the administration has set Jan. 10 as a "threshold date" by which it expects the Salvadoran government to act against death squad chieftains. The broad outlines of the administration's intentions were conveyed to Salvadoran officials by Vice President George Bush during a visit to San Salvador last month, the officials said.

State Department spokesman John Hughes said Tuesday the recent destruction of the Cuscatlan Bridge by rebel forces, severely restricting traffic to the eastern third of the country, underscored the need for an aid increase. He did not specify figures or the conditions under which an increase would be sought.

Other officials said the administration is fully prepared to forego the proposed increase if Salvadoran authorities do not move decisively against the death squad leaders.

They said one such leader, Hector Antonio Regalado, is expected to be removed shortly from his position as chief of security for the Constituent Assembly. That step, the officials said, is being facilitated by the recent resignation of Roberto D'Aubuisson as assembly president. Regalado is regarded as a protege of D'Aubuisson.

D'Aubuisson, leader of the most powerful rightist party in El Salvador, stepped down as assembly president after announcing his candidacy for the presidential elections set for March.

The officials said other reputed death squad leaders are widely known to American and El Salvadoran officials. They said that the transfer of these individuals from their current positions would satisfy minimal U.S. requirements.

They held out little hope that criminal prosecutions would be brought against these leaders, pointing out the difficulty in producing hard evidence implicating them in death squad activities.

Groups such as the Secret Anti-Communist Army and the Maximiliano Hernandez Martinez Brigade are believed to receive money from wealthy Salvadoran exiles living in the United States.

Their list of targets has included peasant union activists and others who support the American-backed land redistribution program and other reform measures.

The Congress has approved $64.8 million in military aid for the current fiscal year but only $45 million of that is available to El Salvador until President Reagan can certify that the reform program is being carried out and that progress is being made in the investigation into the deaths of four American churchwomen slain in 1980.

The New York Times is reporting in today's editions that because of stepped up guerrilla attacks in El Salvador, the Reagan administration is preparing a request for about $100 million in extra aid to expand Salvadoran armed forces.

According to administration officials the newspaper did not identify, the armed forces would be increased by 20 percent from the current 20,000 troops.

A two-month interagency review of the Salvadoran military situation produced the new assessment of needs, but a formal request to Congress is apparently being delayed until the president receives a report from his commission on Central America headed by Henry Kissinger, the Times said.

If Salvadoran authorities take action against death squad leaders, the officials said it is not clear whether Reagan will seek a supplemental military aid appropriation from Congress or will use his emergency powers to provide additional assistance.

But one official said any aid increase is "definitely contingent" on a death squad crackdown. He said that if the United States increases military aid in the absence of such a crackdown, this would convince Salvadoran authorities the administration does not take the human rights issue seriously.

More than 100 Salvadoran soldiers killed by rebels

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Military commanders report that more than 100 soldiers were killed in a recent rebel attack on an army garrison, believed to be the single worst loss suffered by the army in the four-year civil war.

The armed forces, in a statement Tuesday, said the army base at El Paraiso was "partially destroyed" during the attack Friday by leftist rebels.

The Salvadoran government was stunned by that attack and another two days later in which rebels destroyed the key Cuscatlan Bridge linking the eastern third of the country with the west.

Meanwhile, the Secret Anti-Communist Army, a right-wing Salvadoran death squad, harshly criticized U.S. intervention and said it "would not allow" U.S. involvement in mililtary personnel changes.

Military sources said two officers whose names have been mentioned in connection with death squad activity are expected to be transferred overseas.

Elsewhere, U.S. special envoy Richard Stone arrived in Honduras on Tuesday and met with President Roberto Suazo Cordoba. Stone, President Reagan's special ambassador for Central America, is making a tour through the region.

While in Guatemala earlier Tuesday, Stone said a meeting this weekend of five Central American foreign ministers may be "very important" in bringing peace to the conflict-filled area.

The foreign ministers of El Salvador, Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras and Nicaragua are scheduled to meet in Panama City Jan. 7-9 to consider a peace document proposed by a year-old group seeking solutions to the area's conflicts.

The foreign ministers of the Contadora group — Mexico, Panama, Colombia and Venezuela — also will attend the meeting.

U.S. Embassy spokesmen, requesting anonymity, said Stone would travel to Costa Rica today and go Thursday to Nicaragua to meet leaders of the leftist Sandinista government. The Sandinistas are fighting rebels backed by the United States.

Reagan welcomes soldier home

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, abandoning his original criticism of Jesse Jackson's trip to Syria, rolled out the red carpet today to welcome him home from a triumphant mission that won the release of captured Navy flier Robert O. Goodman Jr.

Only a week ago Reagan refused to accept telephone calls from Jackson and warned that his trip to Damasacus could backfire and jeopardize U.S. efforts to win freedom for Goodman, the bombardier-navigator captured when his A-6E Intruder attack jet was downed during the only American air strike against Syrian anti-aircraft batteries in Lebanon.

The president's tack changed dramatically Tuesday when Goodman was released following Jackson's personal appeal to Syrian President Hafez Assad.

"You don't quarrel with success," Reagan said. He set aside time today to meet with Jackson and Goodman in the Oval Office shortly after they arrived back in the United States.

Jackson, who acquired new international credentials in his quest for the Democratic presidential nomination with his successful mission, equated it with some of the great peace initiatives of the time.

"History has taught us that great foreign policy requires great leadership," Jackson said, standing at the door of the plane on which he and Goodman returned. "Whether it was Eisenhower going to Korea or Nixon to China or Carter to Camp David; great moves in foreign policy are initiated by presidents and leaders."

Trying to capitalize on the momentum of Jackson's success, Reagan sent a note of thanks to Assad for releasing Goodman. Reagan said he also "suggested that this is an opportune moment to put all the issues on the table and work with the United States to bring greater stability to Lebanon and withdrawals of foreign troops."

Unlike a week earlier, Reagan spoke by telephone Tuesday with Jackson, this time in a call placed by the White House. "It is a great day here in Washington," Reagan told the civil rights leader.

"All Americans thank you," Reagan said. "There have been a lot of prayers here in Washington. I have been praying for you. I couldn't be happier."

In a conversation with Goodman, Reagan said, "It's good to hear your voice. I've talked to your wife. She has great faith in you. We all have great faith in you, and great admiration."

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said that Goodman's release would not have any impact on the U.S. policy in Lebanon, which is directed at achieving a reconciliation of the warring factions there, strengthening of the central government, and the departure of all foreign forces — Syrian, Israeli and those of the United States, France, Italy and Britain, which make up the multinational peacekeeping force.

Jackson said of his conversation with Reagan, "The president thought this gesture (by Syria) was a positive sign. I appealed to him to follow it up." He added, "I do urge President Reagan and President Assad to meet soon at a date mutually convenient to them."

Reagan met during the day with special envoy Donald Rumsfeld, who later departed on the first leg of a trip to the Middle East. "We will, with renewed spirit, continue our efforts and our negotiations to advance the cause of peace in Lebanon," the president said.

Trying to put the best political face on developments, Reagan's aides said the president had deliberately refused to sanction Jackson's mission. "He did not want to appear to be authorizing or endorsing it because that could have jeopardized any chances it might have had to succeed," said one official, who refused to be quoted by name.

The official said that in the opinion of the White House, "everybody comes out a winner and nobody gave up anything — with the possible exception of Walter Mondale and John Glenn," who had their thunder stolen by a political rival.

For their part, however, Jackson's opponents were unanimous in praising him for succeeding where the Reagan administration had failed.

"I think the Reverend Jackson deserves unanimous public approval," said Mondale, who with other Democrats used the occasion to criticize Reagan's policies and call for the withdrawal of U.S. Marines from Beirut.

One conservative Republican senator, Gordon Humphrey of New Hampshire, said Jackson accomplished in four days what might have taken Reagan "several years, and we probably would have had to pay reparations" to Syria for Goodman's release.

Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, said, "I think it's an effort on the part of the president of Syria to embarrass our president because, obviously, if he was going to release him, he wouldn't have waited until Jesse Jackson came."

Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado, campaigning in New Hampshire, said, "This humanitarian effort by Reverend Jackson and his fellow clergymen stands in stark contrast to the policy of inaction pursued by the Reagan administration ..." Hart said Reagan should pull out the Marines "before another U.S. citizen's life is placed in jeopardy."

Sen. John Glenn of Ohio commented: "Like all Americans, I am delighted that Lt. Robert Goodman is free and on his way home through the good efforts of Reverend Jesse Jackson. There are still another 1,800 Americans in Beirut exposed to great danger with no clear purpose. Neither Reverend Jackson nor any other American except President Reagan can bring them home. It is up to the president to develop and execute a plan to extricate our Marines and our nation from Lebanon."

Congressmen renew opposition to long presence in Lebanon

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The congressional chorus seeking to shorten the stay of U.S. Marines in Lebanon is turning up the volume, with Democratic Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. saying the House will act if the president doesn't and a key Senate Republican declaring the troops are more a cause of war than an encouragement to peace.

"I believe patience in Congress with administration policies in Lebanon is wearing very thin," O'Neill said Tuesday. "There is no way we are going to be idle if the president doesn't do something within the next couple of weeks."

Making no changes in diplomatic or military policies in Lebanon, said the speaker, "is absolutely unacceptable."

Like O'Neill, Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, had been a key supporter of a war powers resolution giving Reagan approval to keep the 1,600 Marines in Beirut for 18 months through April 1985.

The resolution was approved in September before 241 Marines were killed in a truck-bomb explosion at their headquarters near the Beirut airport on Oct. 23.

On Tuesday, Percy said, "It is my feeling that we are no longer really a constructive part of the peacekeeping force there. We are a target and we are causing hostile actions in Lebanon. It would be highly desirable for us now to rotate with other forces that would not be such a target."

"I would like to see the Marines home just as soon as possible," he said.

Congress does not return from a long two-month recess until Jan. 23, but Percy said he will convene a hearing on U.S. policy in Lebanon Jan. 11 because the Marines position has become so vulnerable, and the chances for peace grow more distant each day they are there.

More pressure on the administration from Republicans was expected today in separate meetings between House GOP leaders with Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, and Republican members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the president's national security adviser, Robert McFarlane.

O'Neill met Tuesday with a group of about 15 House Democratic members assigned by him to monitor the administration's diplomatic progress in Lebanon.

Participants said there was unanimous agreement that the Marines be brought back before the 18 months are up, and that the administration has not assigned the Lebanon problem a high enough priority.

"The Marines once were a part of the solution," said Rep. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., "Now, they are part of the problem."

The group of House Democrats stopped short, however, of agreeing on a specific date by which Congress would require a withdrawal of the Marines.

There is intense frustration in the House and Senate with the administration's policies in Lebanon, but some members said privately they are reluctant to force a new deadline for the withdrawal of the Marines because it would give the Syrians and warring factions in Beirut a tactical advantage as the pullout date approached.

But if nothing has happened before the end of January, Rep. Sam Gedjenson, D-Conn., said resolutions cutting the Marines stay to six months or less will be introduced in the House, and he predicted they would pass.

Already in the Senate, Charles McC Mathias Jr., R-Md., has introduced a proposal requiring a pullout by March.

During Tuesday's closed meeting, the House members heard from Deputy Secretary of State Kenneth Dam and Pentagon officials on the current situation in Lebanon.

"I am convinced after listening to administration representatives today that diplomatic initiatives need to be dramatically accelerated," Speaker O'Neill said. "We don't figure enough is being done. We don't see anything getting better."

Trooper halts course of love

WALBRIDGE, Ohio (AP) — A 12-year-old boy behind the wheel of a car stopped by a state trooper explained he was on his way to visit a girlfriend in Toledo, the Highway Patrol says.

Lt. N.D. Bush halted the car Monday just southeast of Toledo, thinking the driver was drunk.

Inside he found the boy from Ypsilanti, Mich., who said he'd borrowed the family car without permission.

Toledo is about 35 miles from Ypsilanti.

Mauro expects settlement of suit

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — Land Commissioner Garry Mauro says he expects a long-awaited settlement of a $1.7 billion lawsuit against Mobil Oil Corp. to be finalized in court today.

"We worked all weekend," he said Tuesday. "It's basically the same deal" worked out last month, a deal that fell through when Exxon intervened just as it was about to be approved in court here Dec. 20.

Mauro said lawyers for Exxon have since agreed to let the accord be approved today.

The suit was filed in 1982 when Duval County rancher Clinton Manges alleged that Mobil had not adhered strictly to a drilling schedule required by a lease on Manges' ranch dating back to 1932. Manges claimed all the oil drilled by Mobil since then. The state later joined Manges because it owns some of the mineral rights to the land.

Exxon also owns some of the mineral rights, but until last month, Exxon had not entered the dispute.

Then, on Dec. 20, Exxon filed a surprise cross-claim, and visiting Judge George Miller postponed the approval and set a hearing in the case for 9 a.m. today.

Mauro said in the meantime, Exxon has agreed to allow the original settlement to be finalized as long as all parties formally recognize Exxon's right to sue for part of the settlement.

"We finally got Exxon to say, 'that's OK.' Exxon will preserve its counterclaims, if they want to come in and try to get a piece of the pie" later, Mauro said.

He said he does not think Exxon has any share coming, but he said he wanted to get the deal approved and "argue about Exxon afterward."

"We're losing $12,000 a day until this thing is settled," he said.

The tentative agreement would turn Mobil's lease on Manges' ranch over to someone else, and they would have to pay Manges about $400 million and the state about $100 million over the next 11 years in exchange for the privilege of drilling for oil and gas on the land.

Mobil would not have to make any cash payments, but it would lose its right to the lease and would have to abandon all drilling equipment and records on oil and gas exploration on Manges' oil-rich 64,060-acre ranch.

Chinese premier seeking stabilization

AP Laserphoto

Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang addresses reporters.

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

PEKING — Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said Tuesday that he hopes his visit to the United States and his talks with President Reagan next week will stabilize Sino-American relations, which remain troubled by U.S. arms sales to Taiwan and numerous trade problems.

Zhao said that he will press Reagan for strict American compliance with the August 1982 agreement that Peking reached with Washington on limiting and gradually reducing U.S. arms sales to Taiwan but that he would not demand an immediate end to the sales.

"China has raised no new demands," Zhao said of Washington's controversial relationship with Taiwan. "There have already been three joint communiques between China and the United States (on the issue). The only request, and hope, from the Chinese side is for both to adhere strictly and implement earnestly the principles agreed in the three communiques."

China's hope for Zhao's visit, which will be the first by a Chinese head of government since Washington and Peking established full diplomatic ties five years ago, and for Reagan's return visit here in April is that many of the problems, not just the Taiwan question, that continue to trouble the relationship can be resolved and that it can be put on a "stable and durable basis."

"On the whole, there has been great progress in the development of Sino-American relations," Zhao told American correspondents in an hour-long interview. "Friendly contacts between our two peoples has increased greatly, and our bilateral cooperation has visibly expanded in political, economic, cultural scientific and technological fields.

"But, of course, the level of relations is far from what should be desired. Since the Shanghai Communique (in 1972) there have been many twists and turns, ups and downs in Sino-American relations. There are also difficulties and obstacles in their way. China attaches importance to the development of relations with the United States, and we hope that through the efforts of both sides we will be able to remove these obstacles."

Both countries had great hopes when diplomatic relations were established. China talked of an alliance of interests and extensive economic cooperation with the United States, and Americans were euphoric in their discovery of post-Mao China.

However, sharp, recurrent conflicts over Taiwan, growing differences on many international issues and a proliferation of trade disputes have left each side feeling disappointed and a bit betrayed.

"The purpose of my visit to the United States," Zhao said, "is to enhance mutual understanding, stabilize our bilateral relations, develop Sino-American friendship and maintain world peace."

His talks with Reagan, Chinese officials added, will attempt to strengthen the basis for Sino-American relations — shared strategic interests and mutual economic opportunities — that originally brought the two countries together after three decades of hostility.

American officials here say that they hope that Zhao's visit will establish a political framework for the resolution of the many problems that have developed, particularly in the three years of the Reagan administration, so that new agreements strengthening cooperation can be signed when the president visits here in April.

Reagan and Zhao, however, may sign a potentially far-reaching pact next week on Sino-American industrial cooperation that would establish a program to help start new Chinese industries and modernize old ones with the expertise, equipment and capital of U.S. businesses.

Other agreements nearing conclusion would expand scientific and technical cooperation, renew broken-off cultural exchanges and provide treaty protection for U.S. investors in Chinese enterprises, but American officials say that it is still uncertain which will be ready to sign next week and which will be deferred to April.

Tunisia fights street violence

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — Soldiers and police armed with machine guns and grenade launchers patrolled Tunis streets today under a state of emergency declared by the government to stem widespread riots sparked by a rise in bread prices.

Schools remained closed and public gatherings banned under the crackdown declared Tuesday.

The Ministry of the Interior announced today that the country was calm during the dusk-to-dawn curfew — despite the sporadic crackle of small arms fire heard by occupants of Tunis hotels.

The government had warned citizens they would be shot if they refused to obey the curfew and tried to flee police.

Tanks and armored cars were stationed at key crossroads and along the Avenue Habib Bourguiba, the capital's main artery, as normal traffic resumed.

But witnesses said they were less numerous than Tuesday, when the violence that erupted last week in the south over a 115 percent increase in bread prices spread to Tunisia's two largest cities, Tunis and Sfax.

Shops reopened, their broken windows the only evidence of the violence. Charred cars and smoking tires had been removed from the streets during the night.

Unofficial sources said put the death toll across the country at 25 with hundreds injured. The government acknowledged only four deaths and an unspecified number of injured.

Tunisia's ailing 80-year-old president, Habib Bourguiba, rushed back to Tunis from his private retreat southwest of the capital to sign the emergency decrees after holding an urgent Cabinet meeting. The decrees closed all schools and universities until Saturday and banned public gatherings of more than three people.

Prime Minister Mohamed Mzali, who is generally considered the real power in the country, said on television Tuesday night that the emergency measures would remain in effect "until we have caught those who caused the trouble and an investigation has determined who was behind them."

He said "certain youths had been manipulated" into participating in the violence, but he provided no details.

Although the violence was touched off by the food price increase, there was speculation that it was linked to long-standing economic grievances and unrest among Islamic fundamentalist groups in this North African country, which has generally followed a pro-Western line.

In Paris, Tunisian Ambassador to France Hedi Mabrouk told French television that the price increase "has very little to do with" the rioting. But he refused to speculate about any possible involvement by Tunisia's radical neighbor to southeast, Libya.

Tunis was reported calm late Tuesday, the streets deserted except for military patrols. Earlier in the day, gunfire was heard in the capital and bands of people, mostly youths, stoned police and army units, burned cars and buses and set fire to several buildings.

Columns of black smoke rose above the city during the late afternoon and tear gas fumes drifted through the streets.

The violence flared in the south Thursday after the announcement of an increase of about 115 percent in the price of bread and the abolition of government subsidies on flour and other basic staples.

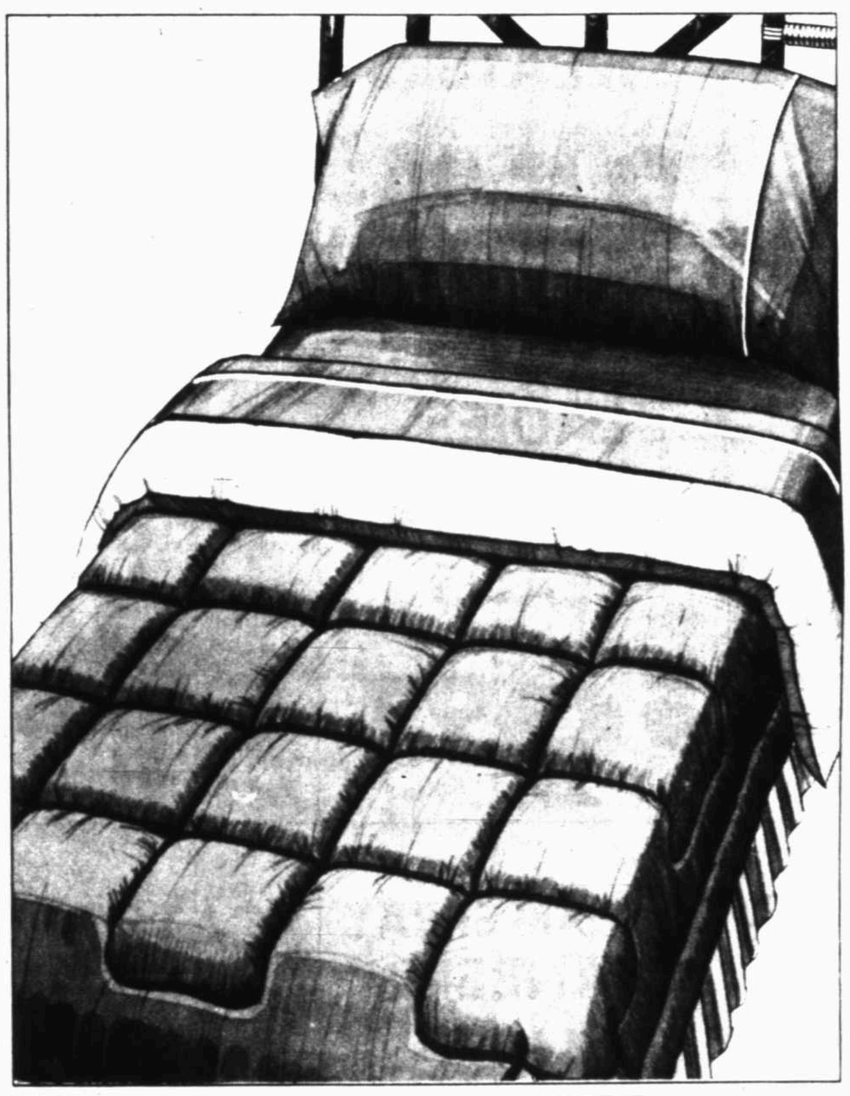

The price of bread rose from 80 millimes — about 8 cents — to 170 millimes, as part of the government's attempt to cut the national deficit by reducing food imports and raising prices.

Israel strikes at pro-Iranian strongholds in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli jets blasted pro-Iranian guerrilla strongholds in east Lebanon's Bekaa Valley today, and a prominent Moslem militia leader said at least 73 people were killed in a devastating air strike

The state radio said several non-military buildings were hit and about 300 people wounded. It said Syrian forces surrounded the targets around the ancient city of Baalbek while civil defense squads searched the rubble of destroyed buildings for victims.

Nabih Berri, whose Amal militia is a powerful force among Lebanon's 1 million Shiite Moslems, said the death toll was likely to climb past 73 as search operations continued in the Syrian-controlled valley.He appealed for blood donations to help those wounded in a "monstrous massacre" and vowed to escalate guerrilla warfare against Israel in occupied southern lebanon.

The Israeli military command in Tel Aviv said, as it had after previous raids, that the targets served as guerrilla training camps and launching sites for anti-Israeli attacks. The command said the planes' pilots reported direct hits on the targets, about 31 miles east of Beirut, but its communique did not mention casualties.

Israeli military sources said their forces had no independent means of verifying casualty figures in such raids.

Berri spoke at his Beirut command post shortly after Lebanon's state radio reported 50 people were killed and 300 wounded in the air raid.

A communique issued by the Syrian command in Damascus said the attack, Israel's second air strike in two days, left 17 civilians killed and 106 wounded in the Syrian-controlled valley.

There was no official explanation for the differing casualty tolls put out by the Syrians and the Lebanese. Police sources in Beirut said the Syrians might have referred only to civilians in their figures while the state radio included both civilians and militiamen.

The Syrian communique charged that the raiding jets dropped delayed-action time bombs to inflict heavy casualties in the target areas east and south of Baalebek, about 7.5 miles from the Syrian border.

The state radio said a vocational training school, a Lebanese police station, a restaurant and a gas stations were "obliterated" in the town of Taibe, about five miles south of Baalbek.

The privately owned Voice of Lebanon radio station said Syrian helicopters flew dozens of casualties to Syria for treatment because hospitals and clinics in Baalbek were "full to the brim."

Beirut radio stations said as many as 16 Israeli jets struck at positions identified as belonging to Shiite Moslem extremists and Iranian Revolutionary Guards.

On Tuesday, Israeli warplanes bombed and strafed positions of Syrian-backed Palestinian guerrillas in Lebanon's central mountains near Bhamdoun, about 15 miles east of Beirut.

Beirut radio reports said today's attack by four formations of Israeli jets began at 8:10 a.m. local time and lasted six minutes.

They said the positions, including Hawsh el-Ghanam and Talia, were strongholds of such Shiite extremist groups as the Islamic Amal Movement and Hezbollah, or Party of God. Both are allied with Iranian Revolutionary Guards preaching Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's brand of Islamic revolution to the Bekaa's predominantly Shiite population.

It was the ninth Israeli air strike in Lebanon since the Nov. 4 truck bombing attack that killed 29 Israeli soldiers and 32 Arab detainees in an Israeli army post at the southern Lebanese port of Tyre.

Assad casts himself at center stage of peace-making play

EDITOR'S NOTE: Tel Aviv Bureau Chief Nicolas B. Tatro has covered Middle East affairs for the past seven years from Egypt, Lebanon, Iran and Israel.

By NICOLAS B. TATRO
Associated Press Writer

Syrian President Hafez Assad, who freed captured U.S. Navy pilot Lt. Robert O. Goodman Jr., has thrust himself onto center stage during the past year with a goal of proving himself indispensable to any future peacemaking in the Middle East.

With skill and a sometimes ruthless cunning, Assad has succeeded in turning military defeat into political gain after his army was manhandled by Israel in the 1982 war in Lebanon.

He has:

—Forced Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat out of Lebanon and taken firm control of the remaining guerrilla organizations.

—Persuaded an initially reluctant Soviet Union to invest its prestige in the rebuilding of Syria's military forces.

—Consolidated his control on nearly one half of Lebanon's territory and reasserted Syria's political influence with leftist militias and traditional Moslem leaders opposed to the U.S.-backed government of President Amin Gemayel.

—Fostered guerrilla attacks designed to pressure the United States and Israel into pulling their troops out of Lebanon and forsaking the U.S.-mediated Lebanon-Israel agreement. The pact signed May 17, 1983, could have forced Syrian troops to leave Lebanon and given Israel a de facto peace treaty with a second Arab country.

With remarkable alacrity, the 53-year-old Assad has moved simultaneously on a variety of fronts to turn the tables and force recognition of his central role.

Releasing the U.S. Navy flier shot down over Lebanon is seen as part of Assad's attention-getting political campaign. It also serves to embarrass President Reagan, who ignored him in the pursuit of the Lebanon-Israel agreement and who failed to mention restoration of Syria's Golan Heights in his September 1982 peace plan.

Reagan had called for a Palestinian homeland in association with Jordan. Arafat's talks with Jordan's King Hussein fell apart under pressure from dissidents in the PLO, who feared Arafat was ready to compromise with Israel, and Assad gave his backing to the dissidents.

The PLO rebels eventually drove Arafat and his loyalists out of Tripoli, Lebanon, with Syrian tanks and soldiers behind them.

Moving on so many fronts at the same time has taken its toll on Assad personally, however. The Syrian leader suffered a heart attack on the eve of a summit meeting with Gemayel Nov. 13. It remains unclear whether he will be able to resume full control or if so, for how long.

But he apparently was well enough to appear smiling in photographs with Jesse Jackson Tuesday as Goodman was released.

Assad's military buildup has raised concern in Israel about the long-term prospects of a new war. Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's government has been alarmed by the Soviet Union's increasing involvement and the expansion of its army to 700,000 men.

Israel has stressed it does not want war with Syria but tensions have remained high because of Syrian-sponsored guerrilla attacks and Israeli counterattacks from the air, including one today in Lebanon's Bakaa Valley.

Several Israeli politicians have stressed the need for some form of an agreement with Syria over Lebanon to reduce the risk of war and Shamir indirectly acknowledged the central role that Assad is now playing in the region.

"Ever since our state was established, there has always been an Arab ruler in the Middle East who fancied himself another Saladin," Shamir was quoted as saying in the daily Maariv newspaper. Saladin was the 12th century Arab leader who defeated the crusaders and captured Jerusalem.

"Once it was (the late Egyptian President Gamal) Abdel Nasser. There was a time when Saddam Hussein, President of Iraq, dreamed that he would carry out this mission. Now it's the turn of Syrian President Hafez Assad," Shamir reportedly said.

Nigeria closes its borders

LONDON (AP) — Nigeria's new military rulers lifted a curfew and air travel ban but kept overland borders closed today, the News Agency of Nigeria said.

The military council also brought deposed President Shehu Shagari from a northern city to Lagos, where he was taken away in handcuffs, the semiofficial news agency said Tuesday in reports monitored in London.

Maj. Gen. Mohammed Buhari, the new head of state, disclosed that a battalion leader was killed during the arrest of Shagari in the military takeover Saturday.

In previous reports, the military said there was no bloodshed in the coup, which ended four years of democratic rule in the oil-rich west African nation.

Second probe forbidden

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile, responding to complaints from civilian investigators, today ordered the military to stop conducting a separate probe into the Benigno Aquino assassination.

A fact-finding board headed by a retired judge had told Enrile that the military investigation, held independently of the board's inquiry, was scaring witnesses.

Enrile, in a directive to armed forces chief Gen. Fabian Ver, said that in line with President Ferdinand E. Marcos' orders, "all matters of inquiry concerning the Aquino case shall be under the authority, control and supervision of the board."

Afghan fighting continues

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Moslem insurgents are battling the Soviet-backed regime on a daily basis in Afghanistan's second largest city, where a Dec. 22 assault on an army headquarters left 31 troops dead, Western diplomats said today.

The southern city of Kandahar was "perhaps the only provincial capital in which major fighting has been taking place on a daily basis for extended periods of time in downtown areas," said a report from diplomatic sources insisting on anonymity.

The report quoted "highly reliable sources" as saying that government control in Kandahar was "virtually nil," and that the insurgents had set up their own courts of law outside the city.

Bangladesh talks rejected

From Wire Reports

DHAKA, Bangladesh — Major opposition alliances in Bangladesh Tuesday rejected the call for a dialogue with the country's military president, Gen. Hussain Muhammed Ershad, in their first official reaction to a government invitation for political discussions.

The invitation to the leaders of the political parties was extended over radio Tuesday morning and through the government news agency.

The broadcasts said that Ershad would open a discussion Jan. 7 in the presidential palace with political leaders on important national issues, including the return to democracy and the holding of presidential and parliamentary elections.

Old prejudices linger, Gypsy leader says

SPARKS, Nev. (AP) — The days when Europe's elite hunted Gypsies for sport are gone, but old prejudices linger and the world fails to recognize that "Roms" have the same problems as other minorities, says the first Gypsy to represent his people at the United Nations.

Joseph Galalta, of Sparks, was recently appointed by the Romany Union to represent Gypsies before "non-governmental" organizations of the United Nations. His appointment came after the United Nations granted "roster status" to the union, an international organization of Gypsy leaders formed in the 1970s.

Galalta's status will enable him to represent Gypsies at meetings and gives him the right to "oral and written intervention," but he will not have a vote in any U.N. body, said Virginia Saurwein, chief of the U.N.'s Non-governmental Organizations Unit.

Galalta, 29, said in an interview that his top priority will be to help end stereotypes of Gypsies and to inform the public of problems facing the group.

"For centuries, Gypsies have had a history of nothing but persecution," Galalta said. "The time is here now that sterotypes about the Roms end." Rom, a derivative of Romany, is the word Gypsies prefer in describing themselves.

Gypsies are a nomadic people with particular folkways and a unique language who live on every continent. They are believed to have originated in northwestern India. There are an estimated 5 million Gypsies in the world, including 250,000 Americans.

Galalta said the American media perpetuates false stereotypes of Gypsies as fortune tellers, drunks and organ grinders.

"Long before Hitler went after the Jews, he stole Gypsy children and sterilized them, but no one records that," he said.

The world has largely forgotten that 500,000 Roms died in concentration camps, but the pain of that experience still lingers for many Gypsies, Galalta said.

"As far as I know there is not one memorial — not even a plaque — marking Rom victims of the Holocaust. We're not demanding one, but it's necessary for people to know."

Three to surrender in torching of shrine

GREENFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Authorities expected three men to surrender in the torching of a Buddhist shrine, reportedly meant to spotlight the problems of Vietnam veterans, after a veterans group leader made contact with one suspect.

"The state police will be making three arrests in the morning and bringing them for arraignment to District Court in Greenfield," M. Michael Ryan, district attorney for Hampshire and Franklin counties, said Tuesday night. "In the meantime, the suspects are not a threat to anyone's safety or security."

The prosecutor said the three men would be charged with arson.

Ryan said one of the men, who said he set fire to the isolated shrine in this western Massachusetts hamlet of 170 people near the Vermont border, promised to surrender today.

The man had been in contact with William F. Martin, chairman of the state council of the Vietnam Veterans of America, Ryan said.

Robert Carlson, a Greenfield attorney and president of the local chapter of the VVA, said he would represent the man and ask for him to be put in the Veterans Administration Hospital in Northampton.

"Our first priority is the safety of the public, though we're not unsympathetic to the plight of veterans and the stress they had to endure," said Ryan.

Ryan declined to identify the men or discuss the involvement of two more people in the case or say if all three were veterans.

He said the veterans' group provided police with the name of one suspect and statements from that person. He said he did not know if anyone had talked to the other two.

Martin refused to identify the man he said telephoned him several times Tuesday afternoon after the veterans group issued a plea to be contacted by those responsible for the shrine's destruction.

According to Martin, the man said he was an Army veteran who served in Vietnam in 1966 and 1967 and that he acted alone "to draw attention to what he perceived was the plight of himself and other veterans."

An anonymous caller claiming credit for the fire earlier told The Morning Union newspaper in Springfield that five veterans "living off the land" torched the ornate shrine because it reminded them of Vietnam.

However, reporters who spoke with him said he made errors in describing the geography of Vietnam and in identifying military units.

Shortly before the New Year's Eve blaze destroyed the Mahasiddhi Nyingmapa Center, two television stations and a deputy fire chief in nearby Charlemont received anonymous calls saying a "Vietnamese temple" was to be burned.

All that remained of the little shrine Tuesday was a snow-covered statue of Buddha.

The 20-member congregation has no Vietnamese members, according to Linda Albright, a caretaker for the shrine.

Ms. Albright said the congregation received no threats, but someone had written "Vietnam Vets — Tet 1983" in charcoal on a 20-foot-tall concrete stupa, or symbolic burial monument.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, January 5, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Presidential candidate and former Vice President Walter ("Fritz") Mondale, actresses Diane Keaton and Pamela Sue Martin, Pittsburgh Steeler coach Chuck Noll and dancer-choreographer Alvin Ailey celebrate birthdays today. Your home and family ties should bring you special happiness in the months ahead. Reach out to someone who has been away for a long time. A romance helps you gain new social and professional clout. Investigate any unusual business opportunities personally. A young associate is not as clever as he or she thinks. Get all loan agreements in writing. You will be able to launch a special project sooner than you think.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Good luck is written all over something you receive or do today. Stay alert. You have a chance to turn your whole life around. A money-making idea attracts wide attention.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A loving relationship grows more intimate. You are filled with enthusiasm over a new work project. People are drawn to you. Let them pay you for picking your brains.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Good things are about to happen in your private life. Do what you can to reduce stress. Be compassionate and try not to overreact to what someone says. Romance enjoys favorable influences.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are very romantic and have had trouble in finding the ideal partner. Although a creditor is cooperative, you should not try to push him too far. Everyone has his limit.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Refuse to waste your love on someone who does not appreciate you. It is time to devote your energies to long-range projects. Postpone making any purchases that are not essential.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): There will be lots of activity today. Pitch in and help with a special project. A bonus is involved. You feel bored with a romantic relationship. Fish or cut bait.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Emotions run high over a speculative venture. Early morning is the best time for projects requiring intense concentration. You can guarantee your family's financial security by making the right choices.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Creative endeavors bring the best results. Move carefully to prevent any misunderstandings. Romance enjoys highly favorable influences. A new job offer could satisfy your strong desire to excel.

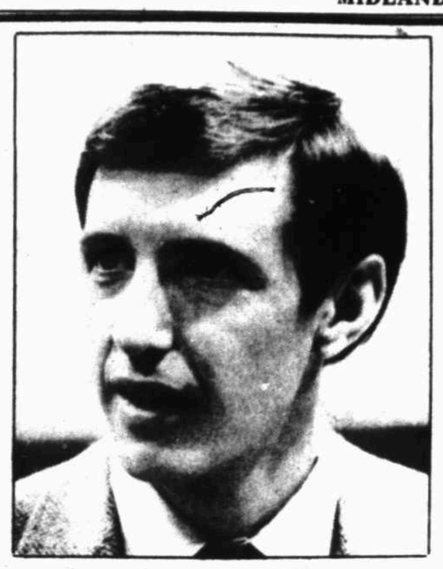

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Financial stability is the antidote to the tension you feel. Be careful not to become inflexible. A practical approach to business and career will work wonders. Look into an investment program.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A romantic interest makes your day extremely pleasant. You could be at odds with almost everyone else, however. Do what you must to smooth things over. Draw on your special talents.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Family affairs need your immediate attention. A secret agreement comes back to haunt you. Bring everything out in the open before it is too late. You need to curb your temper.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A discussion with the boss proves profitable for both of you. Go ahead and present a creative idea to potential backers. A romantic attachment makes you more ambitious than usual.

'Domestic Life' premieres

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — A comedy that harpoons corporate America sounds like a good idea. A comedy, starring Martin Mull as a TV commentator who's suburban lifestyle could benefit from his own advice, sounds worn but promising.

"Domestic Life" offers another warped view of family life. Martin Crane (Mull) and his wife, Candy (Judith-Marie Bergen), are the sniveling juveniles, while the children are wise beyond their years. Ho-hum. Wouldn't it be novel and funny to, one day, have adults act like adults and kids like kids?

Son Harold (Christian Brackett-Zika) is a smart-alecky, butterball kid who's been lucky in the stock market. This inspires wearily predictable humor, such as: "Can daddy borrow $20 so we can go out and eat?"

Daughter Didi (Megan Follows) is another of TV's bratty teen-agers, prompting the inevitable jokes about borrowing the car tonight and, in next week's equally unfunny episode, mooning over a Polynesian tribesman she met on a vacation.

Mull has done some nice turns in the right vehicles ("Fernwood 2-Night"), but his usual aw-shucks delivery and phony sincerity are grating and awfully hammy here. He and Steve Martin are the show's creators, which won't enhance their comic credibilities.

Miss Bergen is bland and embarrassing in her attempts at physical humor. According to an industry insider, when "Domestic Life" was an NBC pilot, Valerie Perrine played the wife to a flaky frenzy. "It's lost its wackiness," said the source after seeing the CBS version.

Once again, local TV news, which deserves potshots, gets ludicrously farcical treatment. One co-anchor is a woman (Mie Hunt) who, several times next week, will seductively plug a 28-part series on SEX. The male anchor (Robert Ridgely) is a pompous buffoon and also Martin's leachy neighbor.

Martin does inocuous lifestyle commentaries on the news. In tonight's episode, he suggests that hubbies buy presents for their wives, "and you'll turn down the lights faster than you can say Burt and Lonnie."

"Domestic Life" doesn't have a single likable or intriguing character.

When you hold a trump stack against Trump Coup Tommy, our bumbler who seems to do well only when everything is going against him, it is sound policy to take tricks when they are offered — you might not get another chance. Some people never learn, as this deal proves.

West's opening bid of one diamond, designed to leave him with an easy rebid should partner respond one no trump, is questionable on this distribution. A bid of one club should leave him in a position where he could handle any response. The rest of the auction, except for North's double, seems as though the players were looking at different hands from the ones in the diagram. West thought he had a lock with his double.

West led the ace of clubs and continued with a low club. Tommy called for dummy's ten and ruffed East's queen. Since West surely held four trumps for his double, Tommy led the ten of trumps at trick three. West decided to make sure of two trump tricks by covering with the jack, and that was that.

Tommy led a diamond to the ace and continued with the queen of diamonds. West covered with the king and dummy ruffed. When East showed out on a high club, the hand was an open book. Since West was obviously void in hearts (he would have led one if he had a singleton), his distribution was 4-0-4-5.

Declarer cashed dummy's other high club, then came to hand with a club ruff. He cashed two high diamonds, then exited with a diamond. West was forced to ruff and lead away from his K-8 of trumps into Tommy's A-9 tenace. The defenders made only one trump trick and the ace of clubs.

Obviously, if West grabs the king of trumps, he must still collect a second trump trick for down one. But then he would not have been able to complain about Tommy's rare talent.

Jackson's success

What can you say about Jesse Jackson's trip to Syria in behalf of captured Navy pilot Robert O. Goodman Jr.? Well, for one thing it was a notable achievement no matter how you slice it.

It undoubtedly will be the topic of numerous coffee shop conversations for the next day or two, just as it was the topic of political scrutinizers before Jackson flew to Damascus. The success of Jackson's self-proclaimed mission should be a relief for every American, just as President Reagan noted.

There already have been those who say Jackson, a Democratic candidate for president, should not have made the trip, that in so doing he politicized the Mideast conflict. Rubbish! The war-torn Middle East has been overpoliticized for ages and Jackson's maneuver should only be viewed realistically.

An even greater concern is that Jackson's trip will set a precedent for a dangerous political maneuver. What Jackson did actually was in violation of the Palmer Act.

And, of course, most probably viewed the trip from the standpoint of its political implications. Jackson obviously intended to make some points — win some votes — by doing what he did.

Few probably believed Jackson could succeed in gaining the airman's release. But who is to say that any person should not attempt to help a captured countryman?

Jackson's success may well lead some individuals to throw their support behind his candidacy, even as ridiculous as that appears.

Rather, Jackson's trip to Syria should be recognized for what it was and nothing more. He saw an opportunity to help a fellow man, he did what he believed was required and he was surprisingly successful.

It may not be worth a vote, but it's certainly worth the humanitarian respect of a nation.

Biting the hand

There is always a last straw. In the case of Zimbabwe, the new African nation that replaced the old Rhodesia, it was the resolution in the United Nations condemning the Soviet Union for shooting down a civilian airliner last September.

The delegate from Zimbabwe refused to support it.

The upshot is that the United States has sent word to Prime Minister Robert Mugabe that there will not be as much U.S. economic aid allotted to Zimbabwe this year. Mugabe's government will be getting $40 million instead of the $75 million it was expecting.

True to form, the prime minister is complaining. We have sent him $200 million since 1980 to help his country get on its feet, and what we hear mostly are complaints.

Mugabe refused to support the Korean airliner resolution on the preposterous grounds that protesting against that outrage would involve Zimbabwe in rivalry between the superpowers. He voted to condemn the United States for invading Grenada on grounds that approving the mission might justify a future invasion of Zimbabwe. Zimbabwe officials boycotted a memorial service for American and French servicemen killed by terrorists in Lebanon; they disapprove of our support of Israel in the Middle East.

In Washington, the administration is justified in wondering whose side Zimbabwe is on. Mugabe professes to be pursuing a "non-aligned" foreign policy, but he has managed to make non-alignment even more anti-American than many of his Third World cousins.

The United States has kept Zimbabwe on its list of nations receiving foreign aid because the government in Harare (formerly Salisbury) seems sincerely dedicated to building a democratic society on the ashes of the old white-dominated Rhodesia. There is still hope that Mugabe can resist the Marxists in his midst who want to put Zimbabwe squarely in the pro-Soviet camp. When the reduced aid checks begin to arrive, Mugabe should get the message that he needs to try harder.

Another View:

Space Force One?

Should the United States have a Space Force as the fourth branch of its armed services?

After reviewing the progress that has been made in space technology in recent years, C. Richard Whelan, a California military and aerospace consultant, thinks the time has come for establishing a U.S. Space Force.

In a study for the Heritage Foundation, Whelan says that an American Space Force, with a mission restricted to defense, could destroy missiles if they are ever launched against the United States and protect U.S. satellites from enemy action.

Whelan points out that present space policy is hampered by outdated U.S. strategic policy.

"That policy known as Mutual Assured Destruction relies solely on deterrence through massive retaliation with no contingencies for defending America from nuclear attack," writes Whelan.

There is no evidence that the Soviet Union ever subscribed to MAD, says Whelan.

"While the United States all but abandoned development of ballistic missile defense systems, the Soviets upgraded ABM defenses" and "have been striving for nuclear superiority. The MAD concept has not worked."

Nevertheless, U.S. military space policy is still tied to MAD. The present anti-satellite program, for example, is aimed at "deterrence by retaliation" and provides "only very limited defense of U.S. satellites in space."

Whelan is right in calling for the rejection of the MAD doctrine. It is, as he says, "a corrupt concept, based as it is on the threat of nuclear annihilation."

The time to organize a U.S. Space Force is now, so that it can go ahead with plans for defending Americans from a possible nuclear attack and building weapons of mass protection rather than weapons of mass destruction.

Under the present setup the chances of developing an effective space defense in the near future are poor due to the skepticism and foot-dragging that space defense is meeting in the Pentagon and in the Air Force.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Filipino first lady sparks feud

WASHINGTON — A strange and ironic feud has erupted in Manila, between the Philippines first lady and the American ambassador.

Jack Anderson

The irony lies in the fact that until recently, Ambassador Michael Armacost was widely regarded as one of the few friends of ailing President Ferdinand Marcos' beleaguered regime. The ambitious first lady, Imelda Marcos, continues to play a powerful role in her husband's government. Now she apparently feels that, with friends like Armacost, who needs enemies?

For his part, the ambassador is trying to put some distance between the Reagan administration and the Marcos dictatorship, which many Filipinos hold responsible for the assassination of opposition leader Benigno Aquino last August. The U.S. aim is to hedge against the day when Marcos dies or is forced out.

In angry retaliation, Mrs. Marcos has engaged in guerrilla warfare against Armacost, inspiring articles in the government-controlled press to the effect that the ambassador is "interfering" in the internal affairs of the Philippines.

A State Department source told my associate Lucette Lagnado about a strange report that Mrs. Marcos accused Armacost of saying that her husband had resigned. This was regarded as an attempt to damage the ambassador's credibility in both Washington and Manila.

Armacost has returned the fire. In a speech to the Rotary Club of Makati, the financial suburb of Manila, Armacost dwelt at length on the "brutal political assassination" of Aquino. He noted pointedly that Aquino had articulated "political beliefs most Americans share — a belief in a free press, in free elections, in due process of law." As his listeners well knew, Marcos tolerates none of these.

The ambassador also warned that failure to conduct a thorough, honest investigation of Aquino's murder would "inevitably complicate" U.S.-Philippines relations.

In another speech, to the Manila Overseas Press Club, Armacost sarcastically brushed aside suggestions in the Philippine press that American media criticism of Marcos played an important role in the refusal of international banks to renew credit to the Philippines.

"As a group," Armacost observed, "bankers do not tend to make their decisions simply on the basis of news and media reports."

CITIZENS' WATCH: Of all the complaints that flood into my office from my citizens' network, probably the most frequent have to do with lawyers.

From Oklahoma City, Earl David Shaffer writes: "A housecleaning of our court system is long overdue. American citizens are victimized by crooked lawyers who take advantage of their legal training to escape punishment."

From Seattle, Eric Peterson demands: "Have you ever tried to file a grievance against an attorney? Forget it. The grievance committee will be made up of lawyers, who are more inclined to protect fellow lawyers than wronged clients. So what is left for you to do? File a malpractice suit? Forget it. The judges are also attorneys."

From San Diego, a private detective, who requests that his name be withheld, reports: "California has been hit with an epidemic of lawsuits filed by ambulance-chasing lawyers who solicit business and offer to take their fees out of the judgments. The lawyers have little to lose: just the time it takes them to prepare the paperwork. But the victims are put through the anguish and expense of a costly legal defense. If the lawyers lose the gamble, they can write it off. The cost was nominal. But the victims are out thousands of dollars and many sleepless nights."

From Long Island, Joel Cohen writes: "There is a new breed of vultures preying upon the American public. They're the attorneys who con their clients into believing they can get something for nothing by filing claims against doctors, hospitals, corporations, etc. Don't they know that the cost of defending and settling these lawsuits is passed on to the public? High-premium malpractice insurance has become part of every doctor's basic overhead. No wonder doctor bills are so high. Just about everyone doing business must retain a stable of lawyers. No wonder prices keep soaring. Litigation is one of the principal causes of inflation in this country."

Jack Anderson writes for United Feature Syndicate.

INSIDE REPORT:

Mondale 'running mate' critical

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The cloud persistently hovering over Walter F. Mondale's presidential candidacy even as he methodically moves ever closer to the nomination is typified by the attitude of a progressive young Democrat near the top of his vice-presidential list: Gov. Bob Graham of Florida.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

In an interview at the state capitol, Graham was surprisingly blunt to us in laying out his concerns. "The real test of his candidacy," Graham said of Mondale, would come after his nomination. Mondale then would have "to shift his direction so that he becomes electable in November." Implicitly, he is not electable today as a "captive" of liberal special interests, according to the governor.

This harsh assessment is no desperation attempt by Sen. John Glenn to overhaul the front-runner. Rather, coming from a Southern liberal considered a prospective Mondale backer, it suggests the peculiar frame of mind prevailing in the Democratic Party. The growing consensus about Fritz Mondale's inevitability has not been accompanied by similar optimism about his electability.

At least until Florida's March 13 primary, Graham is committed to a fellow Floridian, former governor Reubin Askew. But Mondale, unlike his less-diligent presidential rivals, has prepared for Askew's eventual demise by never failing to telephone Graham whenever he visits the state. Mondale campaign strategist Jim Johnson has privately laid plans for stepped-up courtship of the governor.

Beyond being yet another big-name endorser, Graham has been viewed by Mondale insiders as the most attractive second half of a North-South ticket. Although the imperative of winning Texas may require Sen. Lloyd Bentsen as running mate, Mondale's men would much prefer the younger (age 47), more charismatic, better-looking and, supposedly, more liberal Floridian.

But Graham's advisers dispute the notion that he and Mondale are ideological soulmates, avowing that the governor is much more conservative and populistic. Most obviously, they part company on capital punishment. Graham permitted the second execution of his administration a few weeks ago, and there could be many more in his remaining three years as governor. One or two condemned men are added monthly to the more than 200 now on Death Row, raising the possibility of officially sanctioned carnage.

That does not bother Graham, who points to public "belief in the moral appropriateness and in the (deterrent) capacity of ... capital punishment" — a belief he shares. As for governors who pledge never to permit an execution, Graham told us they "probably shouldn't have run for office in the first place."

Such hard-line reflection of popular opinion might seem a politically satisfying complement to Mondale's affinity for Democratic activists opposing the death sentence. But political balancing aside, Graham is concerned with his party's drift from popular sentiment.

He believes the nation has now reached the condition described for Florida 40 years ago by Southern political analyst V.O. Key, who called it an "atomized" state where institutional networks have broken down. Graham sees a more mobile, better-educated American people with superior access to information and "less willing to place reliance" on "third parties" — unions and other components of the Democratic Party coalition.

The education issue that dominated his first five years as governor relects this concern. Since rousing the ire of longtime allies in the National Education Association (NEA) by successfully passing merit pay for teachers, Graham has been worried about a public conception of organized teachers running contrary to "mainstream" American efforts to achieve better education — with Mondale on the side of the teachers.

Graham raised these concerns to Mondale privately at the National Governors Conference last summer, warning that he "could become a captive" of the party's special interests. That warning was followed by no discernible change in Mondale's public posture.

Similarly, Graham frets about the surrender of Mondale, along with Glenn and all other Democratic presidential hopefuls except Askew, to United Auto Workers (UAW) demands for trade protectionism. "I happen to be a strong free-trade person," he told us. "From that point of view, I am closer to President Reagan's view than I am to some of the Democratic positions that seem willing to support a protectionist policy."

In calling for federal deficit reduction, Graham said not even Social Security should be immune from trimming. "I don't flinch at that," said the governor of a state heavy with senior citizens. Mondale, Glenn et al. — plus Ronald Reagan — certainly flinch.

Thus, Mondale's potential running mate is at odds with the NEA, the UAW and even the old-age lobby. Whether Bob Graham ever is tapped for vice president, he is delivering a stern message: Mondale had better start moving away from techniques and positions that have brought him to the brink of the nomination if he and his party are to win the public's confidence.

ART BUCHWALD

'Plastic man' demanding real thing!

Toggle woke up on January 2 bleary-eyed. A man was standing by his bed.

"Who are you?"

"I'm the Plastic Man."

"What the hell is the Plastic Man?"

Art Buchwald

"I represent American Express, Visa, MasterCharge, Diner's Club and every other charge account that uses plastic."

"What do you want from me?"

The Plastic Man pulled out two fistfuls of flimsy tissues from his pocket. "You seem to have had quite a Christmas."

Toggle took the flimsies and studied them. "It does look like my signature."

"Then there is no doubt in your mind that they are yours?"

"I don't know. I went on a Christmas bender all of December. I remember going into stores and if I saw something I wanted I just bought it. I bought things for my wife, I bought things for my kids, I bought things for my friends, and I think I even bought things for people I didn't know. I had too much good spirits."

"And how did you budget to pay for all these things?"

"It never occurred to me. No one ever asked me for money. They just asked for a credit card. Then they put the card into a machine, wrote something on a form, handed a piece of flimsy paper to me and said, 'Have a Merry Christmas.' Not one person who waited on me ever mentioned the word money."

"Are you trying to tell me that you thought everything you got in a store was free?"

"I'm just telling you I was drunk with spending power. Everybody else in the stores was too. People almost came to blows trying to hand the salespeople their credit cards."

"Do you know what a credit card is?"

"Yeh, it's a piece of plastic that has your name and a number and expiration date on it. If you have enough of them it makes a terrible bulge in your pocket."

"A credit card is more than a piece of plastic. It is an agreement between you and the issuer that it can be used in lieu of cash when you purchase something or receive a meal or a hotel room for the night."

"Did I use it for meals too?"

"Six-hundred and seventy dollars worth."

"Oh, does my head hurt. Wait a minute, now I remember. I felt so good about buying so many things for Christmas that after I did my shopping I took the family and my friends out to celebrate. Boy, was I drunk, but did I have a great time. You should have been here on Christmas morning. You couldn't get into the living room it was stacked with so much junk. The big joke was all the time I was out using my piece of plastic, my wife was out using hers. We couldn't stop giggling for two days."

"I can appreciate how you felt. Now can we talk about these flimsies?"

"What's there to talk about?"

"We need the money these pieces of paper represent. I believe they total up to $8,760.70. We'd like your personal check or cash."

"I haven't got that kind of money."

"Then we'll have to charge 21 percent interest a month until you pay it."

"That's fine with me."

"It isn't fine with us. We have to pay for all the things you bought because we have guaranteed the stores and restaurants that you would fulfill your financial obligations."

"Well, as long as somebody pays them I guess I'm out of the woods."

"You're not out of the woods, Mr. Toggle. You're up to your hips in debt, and I'm here to collect it. Whether you were drunk or not, we can't accept Christmas hysteria as an excuse for not honoring your flimsies."

"Wait a minute. Don't get excited." Toggle turned over to his sleeping wife and shook her. "Honey, there's a guy here that wants $8,760 for what we spent for Christmas."

Mrs. Toggle mumbled sleepily, "Well, give him one of my credit cards. They're in my purse on the dresser."

TODAY IN HISTORY

On Jan. 4, 1966, Ronald Reagan announced his candidacy for the Republican gubernatorial nomination in California.

On this date:

In 1785, German fairy tale writer Jakob Grimm was born.

Mondale flexes his muscle

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Former Vice President Walter F. Mondale is flexing his organizational muscle in the Deep South in an effort to blunt challenges to his presidential candidacy from the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Sen. John Glenn.

While Jackson was winning praise Tuesday for his role in winning release of a U.S. Navy flier held captive in Syria, Mondale headed south to shore up his support among blacks.

When Mondale arrived at the Bethel A.M.E. Baptist Church in Little Rock Tuesday night, a small group of people stood outside shouting, "We want Jackson. We want Jackson."

"Jackson did today what presidents do," said one of the demonstrators. They held up enlarged photos of Jackson with Lt. Robert O. Goodman Jr. and of Jackson with Syrian President Hafez Assad.

But inside the church, Mondale drew cries of "Amen" when he talked about jobs, education and civil rights.

Citing his record of working for passage of civil rights legislation, Mondale said, "I'm not here to get my civil rights card punched. You know me...I wasn't just right, I was there."

Throughout the day, the Democratic front-runner praised his rival's role in winning Goodman's release.

"I assume it will have an effect on his candidacy," Mondale told a news conference.

At a rally in Jackson, Miss., Gov. William Winter said he didn't believe many blacks in his state regarded Jackson as "a serious candidate" for president.

Joe Robinson of Jackson, a black who attended the Mondale rally, said he supported Mondale because "I think he's the one with the chance." Dan Cupit, Mississippi Democratic Party chairman, said, "Events today will certainly enhance Jackson's campaign." But he said he didn't think Jackson has either the money or organization to mount an effective campaign in a caucus state like Mississippi.

Cupit said Glenn had been active in the state for the past year but "the Mondale people seem to know more about how to organize the caucuses."

Mississippi and Arkansas will begin selecting Democratic convention delegates in caucuses on March 17. Caucus states place a premium on organization, generally acknowledged as the Mondale campaign's strongest suit.

James Johnson, acting campaign chairman for Mondale, said the two states were included on the southern swing because it was "a chance for us to get in here well in advance of the caucuses, meet with our people, and rev them up."

In other presidential campaign news:

—Democratic contender Sen. Gary Hart in Concord, N.H., criticized other candidates who just recently started calling for a withdrawal of Marines from Lebanon and reminded reporters that he has favored removing the troops for more than a year.

"It doesn't take much courage to speak out when it's popular," Hart, of Colorado, said as he formally entered New Hampshire's Feb. 28 primary.

—Sen. Alan Cranston, of California, said when the real contest for the Democratic nomination begins in Iowa and New Hampshire and other states "I believe it will then be demonstrated that it is down to basically a three-person race: Mondale, Glenn and myself."

Speaking on Cable News Network, Cranston praised Jackson's successful effort to free Goodman from Syria which some are saying bolsters Jackson's chances in the race for the Democratic nomination.

Cranston said, however that in the primaries Jackson would, "be competitive, but I do not think he will show up in the top three."

Candidates' style depends on essential ingredient — money

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — When Walter Mondale flies commercially during his presidential campaign, he goes first class. George McGovern flies coach and often drives a rental car.

As the eight major candidates pursue the 1984 Democratic nomination, some go economy and some in style. It all depends on what by common agreement is the most essential ingredient in a campaign — money.

The presidential candidates raised an estimated $24 million in the year just ended. This week, the money they've raised begins to qualify them for federal matching funds, financed by the optional $1 federal income tax check-off.

"No candidate gives up running for president," said Paul Donaldson, assistant national finance chairman for California Sen. Alan Cranston. "He only gets out when his supporters tell him they can't raise any more money."

This year there is a new urgency to fund raising. Democratic Party rules adopted in 1981 have compressed the primaries and caucuses into a short three-month season that forces candidates to spend resources in many places at the same time.

Mondale, the former vice president, was the hands-down winner of the 1983 fund-raising race. His aides estimate he raised nearly $9.5 million. Ohio Sen. John Glenn raised $6 million, say his aides. The remaining candidates lagged far behind.

AP Laserphoto

Sen. Gary Hart didn't mind holding this bag Tuesday as he filed for New Hampshire's first-in-the-nation presidential primary on Feb. 28. Hart supporters in New Hampshire kicked in $1 apiece so Hart could pay the $1,000 filing fee.

The Federal Election Commission has certified Mondale to receive $3.1 million in matching funds, while Glenn has qualified for $1.6 million. Four other candidates, who also passed the eligibility test of raising $5,000 in contributions of $250 or less in at least 20 states, will receive lesser amounts.

Reagan may use influence to publicize crime in schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, after receiving a report on crime in public schools, is signaling he may use his influence to draw public attention to the problem.

At a meeting of the Cabinet Council on Human Resources, the president was described as receptive to the idea of devoting at least part of a major speech to the topics of disorder in public schools, according to an administration official, who did not wish to be identified.

After studying the matter, the council concluded that presidential leadership was necessary to help the nation's public school teachers and principals restore their authority in the classroom and achieve educational excellence.

The council gave the president a report entitled, "Chaos in the Classroom: Enemy of American Education," which urged Reagan to publicize the issue.

Gary L. Bauer, deputy undersecretary of education, who headed the task force that developed the report, said after the White House meeting that Reagan was "extremely enthusiastic," but had not yet made any decisions on carrying out the recommendations.

The report, the result of a four-month study by the departments of Education and Justice and the Office of Management and Budget, concludes that action to counteract school violence is unlikely unless the American people demand it.

And, citing the statistic that 60 percent of teachers who were victims of an attack felt principals failed to take appropriate action, the report also said there was overwhelming evidence that the problem was mostly being ignored.

It also said the Education Department may conduct research into prevention of school violence as well as evaluate anti-crime activities under way and collect and disseminate examples of effective school discipline.

The department may hold regional hearings on school discipline to seek solutions and highlight local efforts, it said.

In addition, the Justice Department is prepared to file friend of the court briefs in cases on the side of increased authority of teachers, principals and school administrators to deal with school discipline problems.

The report said the Justice Department will establish a national school safety center to collect and disseminate data on school safety problems. It will include a computerized national clearinghouse to advise parents and school officials of their legal rights in dealing with disruptive students.

Judge postpones policeman's trial at attorney's request

MIAMI (AP) — Because the defense attorney said he is tied up with an unrelated case, a judge has postponed for a week the trial of a Hispanic policeman charged in the shooting death of a 20-year-old black man that touched off three days of riots.

Circuit Judge David M. Gersten granted Tuesday a motion by the chief defense attorney Roy Black, who said he wouldn't be available to defend suspended Miami policeman Luis Alvarez until his other case is over. The trial was rescheduled for Jan. 10.

Alvarez, 33, is charged with manslaughter in the slaying of Nevell Johnson Jr. at a video arcade on Dec. 28, 1982. The shooting sparked disturbances in the predominantly black Overtown neighborhood.

Chicago rail service shut down

CHICAGO (AP) — Rail service to the city center remained shut down today after a fire which swept through two factory buildings snarled rush-hour bus and rapid-transit traffic when walls collapsed.

Flames leaped 100 feet above the building just west of the Loop before its walls collapsed Tuesday, showering debris onto the nearby Lake-Dan Ryan rapid transit tracks.

The debris forced a cutoff of rail service to the city center from the West Side, said Chicago Transit Authority spokesman Don Yabush. "Service won't be restored until our engineers can get up there and minutely examine the structure," he said.

Judge refuses to free whites

BOSTON (AP) — A judge refused to allow three young white men convicted last month of assault in the death of a black man to remain free while appealing their prison sentences.

The three, all from Boston's Dorchester section, were convicted of two counts of assault with a dangerous weapon by a Suffolk County Superior Court jury Dec. 16 in the March 13, 1982 death of William F. Atkinson, 30.

Prosecutors said the black man was struck and killed by a subway train while fleeing a gang of jeering whites who threw stones at him.

On Tuesday, Judge Francis X. Quirico sentenced Paul MacGregor, 20, Edward J. Tuffo, 19, and Michael Nowacki, 20, to two years in prison each, one year of which he suspended.

1983 good year for comets

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The astronomer responsible for recording comets logged 23 in 1983, 13 more than in record-setting 1975 and so many that he nearly ran out of letters in the alphabet to name them.

Brian Marsden, director of the International Astronomical Union's Central Telegram Bureau, said Tuesday that he started to get worried in September, when an astronomer in California spotted three comets on three successive nights. Marsden named them 1983q, 1983r and 1983s.

Marsden, in charge of naming new comets observed by professional and amateur sky watchers around the world, this year also labeled the comets discovered by an extremely successful new satellite known as IRAS, or the Infrared Astronomy Satellite.

Court: Couple must be paid back

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A state court has ruled that a mother who changed her mind about giving up her baby must reimburse two would-be adoptive parents who provided $3,025 for hospital and medical bills.

The ruling on Tuesday reversed a lower court which had dismissed the request of John and Kathleen Gorden of Philadelphia to be paid back.

The Gordens had signed an agreement with Catherine Day, agreeing to pay costs of her pregnancy and for delivery and after-birth care.

Walnuts go up in smoke

STOCKTON, Calif. (AP) — The second multimillion-dollar fire in two months destroyed $2 million worth of nuts at the Sun-Diamond Growers walnut processing plant, officials said.

Firefighters remained on the scene Tuesday watering down smouldering stacks of English walnuts that caught fire Monday afternoon, said city Fire Capt. Gary Collins. No one was injured.

A fire at the same plant Nov. 2 caused $2.5 million damage when an explosion ripped through a walnut storage silo.

Both fires were blamed on spontaneous heating and combustion of walnut shells and meats stored in tubes in one of the plant's warehouses, Collins said.

THE IMPORTANCE OF PERSONAL DEVELOPMENT AND IMAGE PROJECTION IN TODAY'S BUSINESS WORLD

A personal development course can pave the way for smoother human relations by teaching the techniques and proper attitudes for getting along with others.

A personal development course can provide self-awareness of one's strengths, weeknesses, desires, and the knowledge to acquire the traits of personality and appearance that lead to success in the business world.

The proof of the value of personal development training is evident in the biographies of prominently successful people who have made the most of themselves and who have lived up to their potential. Many have had the kind of assistance that you will receive in your personal development course-assistance that has helped them to look at themselves objectively. Once aware of how their appearance and personality affected others, they have made a genuine effort to improve their "image projection." This simply means that they have designed their appearance and personality for success. You can do the same.

The clothes you wear have an affect on others. You will learn how to select the styles, colors, fabrics, and accessories that are appropriate and becoming for you and for the business environment in which you will work. Awareness of lines, color, fabrics and accessories will make it possible for you to discriminate and to select the apparel that is right for the image you wish to project.

Personality has been described as the total effect one person has on another. If this is true, your success demands that you learn and practice good manners, good speech and good interpersonal relations. Your personal development course contains lessons on voice improvement, how to use the businss telephone to greatest effect, and the twelve steps to a winning personality.

Summed up, your personal development course is more than a dress for success course, more than a good grooming course, more than a personality pays course In essence it is a "how-to" course to increase your self-awareness and to enhance your chances for success in the job market by teaching you how to project an image that potential employers will like so that their response to your application for employment will be: "You're hired."

Homes being rented during Olympics

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Planning a visit to next summer's Olympics and need a place to stay?

Maybe a country French coach house that sleeps four for $2,450 a week? Or a four-bedroom home with a guest house and live-in maid in the flatlands of Beverly Hills for $8,400 a week?

Or perhaps a 26-room castle, complete with maid service and riding trails, in the hills of Flintridge for $21,000 a week.

With hundreds of thousands — maybe as many as a million — extra people expected to pack into the Los Angeles area for next summer's Olympics, many homeowners are enticed by the prospect of renting out their houses for huge sums of money.

But con artists see an opportunity too.

"There's been a lot of exaggeration," says Fred Sands, founder and president of Los Angeles-based Fred Sands Realty, one of the largest and most prestigious in the state.

"The average homeowner believes he will be able to get rich in a short period, but it just isn't going to happen," he says.

Nonetheless, scores of companies that promise to try to match up homes with would-be renters have sprung up, some of them literally overnight. Most, at least initially, wanted fees of $50 to $75 up front to list each home.

One firm — Gay Housing LA 84, the offshoot of an established real estate office — is targeting its sales pitch primarily at the homosexual community "because they tend to have more discretionary money since they generally don't have expenses such as children," says spokeswoman Jean O'Leary.

Even the mayor's office has gotten into the act, hosting a seminar earlier this month to teach home-rental businesses what laws apply to them.

It was a topic well chosen. Many rental firms have been operating outside the law, either intentionally or through ignorance, officials say.

The state Department of Real Estate has ordered five firms to shut down either because they were soliciting up-front fees when they weren't licensed to do so or because it was deemed their advertising was misleading, said District Manager Tom McCrady. Another 50 companies closed voluntarily — some permanently and others until they bring themselves into compliance with state and local regulations.

One company, Vacation Rental Systems of Huntington Beach, was sued for $125,000 by the state attorney general for allegedly using false advertising to entice 2,700 homeowners to shell out $50 each to be included in the company's listing. The city attorney's office is investigating other companies.

Virtually everyone — except the Los Angeles Visitors & Convention Bureau — agrees there will be a healthy demand for private housing to rent during the Olympics. The Games, which will be held next July 28 to Aug. 12, are expected to attract between 200,000 and 325,000 extra tourists on any given day and somewhere between 650,000 and 1 million overall.

The Visitors Bureau steadfastly points out that there are enough hotel rooms to handle the situation — 149,000 of them in the region where most events will be held, stretching from Santa Barbara, 100 miles northwest of downtown Los Angeles, to Newport Beach, 45 miles south.

But as one city official put it, "Who's going to want to rent a hotel room in Riverside or someplace like that when they could get a private home near where everything is happening?"

Sands and Merrill-Lynch Realty of Los Angeles are skimming the cream of the business.

"Our least expensive listing," says Sands, "is $6,000 a week for a four-bedroom home with a pool in Westwood," the fashionable neighborhood that adjoins the UCLA campus, where some Olympic events will be staged. Sands charges no advance listing fee, but collects a generous 20 percent commission when a home is rented.

He notes that most prospective renters in that price range are likely to be corporations that want spacious homes in which to entertain.

Merrill-Lynch is offering a castle in Flintridge, in the hills about 15 miles north of downtown Los Angeles, and a "funky English Tudor on the beach in Malibu, with a pool, a spa and lots of stained glass," says broker Constance Brenner. The Malibu house is going for $60,000 for 30 days, as is a stately Pasadena mansion with a formal rose garden, facilities to entertain 200 guests and enough bedrooms to sleep 14.

But city and state officials are worried about the residents with modest homes who are attracted by the prospect of making a bundle.

"There have been some fairly outrageous claims about the amount of money homeowners can expect to get," says Gary Rowse of the consumer fraud unit of the city attorney's office.

"In the beginning, figures as high as $20,000 in two weeks were being bandied about," says McCrady. "That is ridiculous...Maybe someone could get that in Beverly Hills, but not for the average person's home."

He says his agency has made some companies delete from their advertising all references to how much money they may make for homeowners.

AP Laserphoto

This two-story English Tudor home in Beverly Hills is one of the many homes that will be available for rent during the 1984 Olympics. This five-bedroom, six-bath home, with guest house, pool, spa and maid's quarters, is renting for $10,000 a week.

Some Scottish castles for sale at low prices

EDINBURGH, Scotland (AP) — Some castles in Scotland are for sale at prices less than the cost of a four-bedroom house in the south of England.

The firm of Knight, Frank and Rutley is selling Dunmore Castle in Argyll, overlooking a loch on the west coast, for offers above 70,000 pounds — $108,750. Built in 1859, the castle stands on 79 acres.

Niddy-Seton Castle near Winchburgh, West Lothian, is a medieval tower where Mary Queen of Scots once stayed and is on the market for only 7,000 pounds, or $10,150.

But it needs renovation which could cost up to $1.45 million.

Some castles are cheap because they are isolated, in disrepair, would cost a small fortune to heat, or all three.

Last summer, however, 16th-century Earlshall Castle in Fife sold for more than $232,000.

Miami Hurricane national champs

By Associated Press

It began inauspiciously for the University of Miami Hurricanes with seven turnovers in a 28-3 loss to Florida, the worst setback ever suffered by a team destined to become college football's national champions.

It didn't get much better the following week until Jeff Davis kicked his third field goal late in the first half to give Miami a 9-7 over Houston in a game the Hurricanes went on to win 29-7.

But it was all downhill after that and it culminated Tuesday when Miami was named national champion for 1983 by AP in the wake of a stunning 31-30 upset of No. 1-ranked Nebraska in the Orange Bowl. It more than made up for the state championship the Hurricanes didn't win.

"After we got by the loss to Florida and the first half against Houston, we had pretty smooth sailing (until late in the season)," Coach Howard Schnellenberger said.

"We were never ahead against Florida and we lost badly. But almost to a man, our football team graded out as winners. We did have a better team than we thought we had coming out of that loss.

"Then we went to Houston, kicked off and they drove 80 yards for a touchdown. But when Davis put us ahead 9-7 for the first time this season, standing on the sidelines with the kids you could sense and feel the relief and all those things you feel when you go ahead for the first time."

By virtue of its thriller over Nebraska that ended the nation's longest winning streak at 22 games, Miami became the second team ever to vault from fifth place to the national championship as a result of a bowl triumph. The Hurricanes also became the first team to capture the newly named Paul "Bear" Bryant Trophy, formerly known as the AP Trophy but renamed following Bryant's death last January.

Th Orange Bowl completed a storybook rise for Miami, which had only two winning records in 11 years before Schnellenberger took over in 1979.

Schnellenberger, who played two years for Bryant at Kentucky and was an assistant coach under him for five years at Alabama, during which the Crimson Tide won three national titles, said he was "delighted" about winning the Bryant Trophy, which will be formally presented at a later date.

"I can't think of a more fitting name for the national championship trophy and I'm simply delighted to be a part of the first one," he said. "It feels great. It feels official now."

With 59 of 60 voters responding, Miami received 47½ first-place ballots and 1,168½ of a possible 1,180 points. The Hurricanes were first or second on every ballot.

Nebraska, which was bidding to become the first team to be ranked No. 1 every week from the preseason poll through the postbowl poll, slipped to a second-place finish. The Cornhuskers received 4½ first-place votes and 1,109½ oints.

The other seven first-place votes went to Auburn, which remained No. 3 with 1,079 points following a 9-7 come-from-behind Sugar Bowl victory over Michigan.

Nebraska wound up with a 12-1 record — the Cornhuskers opened the season with a 44-6 rout of defending national champion Penn State in the inaugural Kickoff Classic — while Miami, Auburn, No. 5 Texas and No. 7 Brigham Young all were 11-1.

Nebraska Coach Tom Osborne called the final rankings "fair enough," and added, "I'd like to congratulate Miami for a great game and for winning the national championship. I'm also very proud of our team and the great year the players had."

Asked if he regretted ordering a two-point conversion with 48 seconds remaining when a simple game-tying point-after probably would have given the Cornhuskers the national championship, Osborne said, "I couldn't face my players if we hadn't tried to win the ballgame."

Auburn's Pat Dye said the voting "really doesn't come as a big surprise. Naturally, I'm disappointed. I'm happy for Howard and Miami. Basically, we're good friends."

He and Schnellenberger were on the Alabama staff together in 1965, lived across the street from each other and drove to work together.

"He helped me push my car when it wouldn't start," Dye said.

Georgia jumped from seventh place to fourth with 977 points by edging Texas 10-9 in the Cotton Bowl.

Abilene, San Angelo post wins

Abilene High and San Angelo joined Midland Lee and Odessa Permian in the win column Tuesday night as District 4-5A play got underway.

The Eagles, 12-6 and 1-0 on the year, rolled to an easy victory over 2-15, 0-1 Big Spring in the AHS gym. San Angelo took care of visiting Abilene Cooper, 56-46. The Bobcats are now 6-9, 0-1 for the season while Cooper is 8-8, 0-1.

Abilene High wasted little time in sticking it to the Big Spring Steers, jumping out to a 15-7 first quarter lead and a 36-17 halftime score. The Eagles added another 20 to their lead in the third quarter and outscored the Steers by six in the final frame.

Five Eagles broke into double figures led by Kirk Robinson with 16 and Tom Simmons with 15. Big Spring had only Fred Cole in the two-digit category with 10 points.

For San Angelo it was a much tougher fight. After posting a 16-13 first quarter edge, the Bobcats failed to add to the spread and led 29-26 at the half. The third quarter gave San Angelo some breathing room as it outscored Cooper 15-10 followed by 12-10 in the final frame.

The Bobcats were led by Greg Thomas with 16 points and Brian Ross with 10. For Cooper, Darren Hooper chipped in 17 and Bob Estes 13.

Permian stuns MHS, again

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

For the third consecutive game, dating back to last season's District 4-5A play, Odessa Permian has come out on top against Midland High. Tuesday night it was by a 59-54 count at Chaparral Center as both teams opened their district seasons.

Neither team was able to find the range from the field in the first half and it was the Bulldogs' inability to correct in the second that did them in, shooting 35 percent in the final two quarters, 30 percent for the game.

Permian, on the other hand, overcame a 33 percent cold spell in the first half for 58 percent in the second.

"We shot a terrible percentage in the first half," said Permian coach Charles Pattillo. "We picked it up a little in the second half. They just played good defense in the first half. They manned up outside with their guards and played zone inside. We set up the same defense in practice but didn't work against it ourselves."

Rebounding and turnovers also didn't help the Bulldog cause much. In the first half, MHS dominated the boards by a 32-20 margin only to lose that advantage in the second by claiming only one board more than Permian. The Panthers won the turnover war 32-25.

PERMIAN OPENED the game strong, building a 7-4 lead before Midland High countered with a 6-2 spurt to go on top 10-9. The Bulldogs held a 14-11 margin at the end of the first quarter and looked ready to put Permian away early in the second.

A field goal each by Fred Franklin and Kenneth Johnson plus two Johnson free throws gave Midland High the biggest lead of the game at 20-11 with two minutes gone in the quarter. Permian fought back to cut the spread to three points twice in the quarter and left the court at halftime trailing by only a 28-24 count.

The only reason Midland High couldn't pull away from Permian in that second quarter was Panther Terry Williams who scored 11 of his team's 13 points, hitting 6-of-8 field goals and 1-of-2 free throws.

Williams kept it up for the rest of the game.

MIDLAND HIGH built up a seven-point advantage when Johnson was fouled on a bucket early in the third quarter. His free throw gave the Bulldogs a 33-26 lead.

For the next four minutes, Midland and Permian exchanged baskets until, with 2:44 remaining in the quarter, Williams scored his third bucket to cut the lead to five, 39-36. Bulldog Chris Herbert came up with MHS' last points when he stole the ball and took it in for a layup and a 41-36 score. The Panthers scored the final six points of the quarter, including Williams inside shot at the buzzer for a 42-41 lead.

Throughout the first three quarters, Midland's leading scorer Chris Rooker had been deathly quiet. He missed his first 12 shots and had only three points from the free throw line. With 40 seconds gone in the final period he hit his first shot of the game, a five footer that gave the Bulldogs their final lead of the game, 43-42.

Permian jumped out to a 49-43 lead in the next two minutes then held on as the Bulldogs made desperation runs to pull within two twice, 54-52 with 1:40 remaining on Rooker's second field goal of the game and 56-54 when Johnson hauled in an offensive rebound and scored from 10 feet out with 15 seconds left. Troy Nini iced the game three seconds later with a free throw to goup 57-54 and Williams ended the game with a layup at the buzzer for the final score.

"He's a junior and this season is his first varsity competition," said Pattillo about Williams who led all scorers with 26 points. "Every time we called on him he's done well. Barron Gage did a great job for us handling the offense and he made a key steal for us in the final minute."

Nini, with 12 points, was the only other Panther in double figures for the game.

Rooker, who has been scoring almost at will this year for a 20.8 average going into the district opener, had his worst night of the year with only seven points, 2-of-17 from the field and 3-of-5 from the line. Johnson, after a cold first quarter, picked up some of the slack in the next three with a 17-point performance while Erice Brunson added 10, eight of which came in the first quarter.

The victory gives Permian a 10-5 record for the year and a 1-0 mark in 4-5A play. Midland High falls to 17-4 and 0-1.

On Friday, the Bulldogs will take to the road and face 2-15, 0-1 Big Spring at 8 p.m., while Permian hosts 12-6, 1-0 Abilene High.

Midland Lee shocks OHS

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

ODESSA — The District 4-5A basketball campaign is less than 24 hours old and there has already been a shot fired that was heard across the league.

The Midland Lee Rebels shocked defending 4-5A champion Odessa High by a 41-35 margin here Tuesday night, a warning shot that deserves noting. This campaign may be a real war if the first battle is any indication of things to come.

The Rebels won only one district game a year ago. Odessa High returned a veteran unit from last year's championship squad and is supposed to make loud noises again this year.

But now the Bronchos face an uphill battle after only one trip down the floor while Lee's turnaround Rebs may be on the launching pad for something special in 1984.

"It's definitely a better way to start than the way we did last year," said a thrilled Lee basketball coach Paul Stueckler after the upset victory on opening night in 4-5A. "I knew we had a chance when Anthony (Dickens) went strong on the boards early in the game. I thought to myself, 'We might be able to rebound with those big guys.'"

The Rebels won the rebounding war 22-19, a thin margin in any game, but when the opponents have the likes of Joe Terry and Charles Hunter in the lineup, that's saying something. Terry and Hunter, both All-World football players who think they are still on the football field, are awesome obstacles for any team to overcome.

Terry hit for 15 points, one less than his season average. However, Terry was 0-for-5 from the field in the fourth period when he missed a layup and had a shot rejected by Dickens, the Lee sophomore.

Lee's Alvin Henry, averaging around 13 points per game, had a game high 17 points, hitting eight of 18 shots from the field. Derek Westbrook, a junior, canned 14 points with five of 11 shots from the field and four-of-four from the free throw line. That was basically the Rebel punch in the low scoring game.

"Both teams were tight to start the game and that is to be expected in the first district game," said Stueckler. "Both teams shot only 33 percent in the first half, but both teams were really fired up. There wasn't much scoring but they really went at each other."

The two squads were knotted at 16 when the first half came to a close. The ball didn't find the hoop often, but the elbows underneath found the mark on more than a few occasions.

Lee led 8-6 at the end of one period as Westbrook canned six of his 14 points with a three-of-four shooting eye. Terry got six of his 10 first half points in the second period to knot the score, but managed only five points in the second half.

The Rebs took control at the opening of the third period when baskets by Westbrook and Victor Brown were followed by a charity toss by Alton Davis for a 21-16 lead.

Lee never lost that lead and led by as many as eight points with 6:55 left in the game before the Bronchos made a final push. With three minutes left, OHS' John Bowser hit a bucket to cut the Lee lead to 34-33, but Westbrook nailed four free throws while Terry couldn't find his way around Dickens inside on the other end.

Lee is now 11-7 on the year, but more importantly 1-0 in 4-5A play. Odessa High falls to 12-8 and 0-1, facing an uphill climb to retain its championship title.

Even though Lee hit only 17 of 45 shots on the night for a meager 38 percent shooting eye, the Rebels were very crisp with the offensive patterns, passing smoothly with few mistakes.

Lee's deliberate play seemed to frustrate the run-happy Bronchos, who seemed to be pressing a bit. OHS hit only 16 of 54 shots from the field for 30 percent and had only three of 10 from the free throw line. Lee hit seven of 12 from the charity stripe.

Lee will face San Angelo at Chaparral Center Friday night while OHS will test Abilene Cooper.

The Lee junior varsity also got off to a fast 4-5A start with a 67-44 win over OHS as John Lewis led the way with 21 points. Paul Eldridge had 15 and Jake Young 14 for the Rebels. Keith Smith also had 21 points for OHS and Charles Lewis 10.

The Bronchos won the sophomore outing by a 71-55 score as five OHS players scored in double figures. Jeff Wright led the way with 16 and was followed by Terry Powell, 15; Tim Deboski, 14; Shaun Gilliam, 12; and Paul Chavez, 10. Lee's Greg Johnson had 13 and Lonnie Dixon 10.

No Kickoff Bowl for UT

Texas' loss to Georgia in the Cotton Bowl was a bitter pill to swallow, especially after Miami upset Nebraka Monday night. It cost the Longhorns a national championship.

And the defeat undoubtedly cost the Steers a berth in the Kickoff Bowl at the Meadowlands in New Jersey late next summer, the springboard Nebraska used to establish itself as No. 1 for the entire season. The Cornhuskers pistol-whipped defending national champion Penn State in that bonus-game forerunner of the 1983 season.

WHILE TEXAS has seen it's No. 1 ambitions evaporate in the Cotton Bowl the last three times they have been at stake, it hasn't always been thus. Texas successfully staved off Notre Dame in the 1970 Cotton Bowl and beat back the challenge of Roger Staubach's No. 2 Navy team in 1964....

TEXAS QUARTERBACK Rick McIvor said the Longhorn game plan for Georgia wouldn't have been materially different, regardless of which of the Steers' three quarterbacks Coach Fred Akers had decided to start. "But we still opened it up and threw more often than we have been throwing...." still only eight in the first half when McIvor unloaded his two big gainers...

It wasn't a good post-season for the SWC, Big 10, or the ACC. Texas, Baylor and SMU all were decisive losers, raising some question as to the league's strength. The Big 10's Michigan and Iowa were bowl losers while Ohio State eked by Pitt, but the big humiliation came in the Rose Bowl where Illinois, the champion and best, was mauled by below average UCLA. Someone spread the rumor that the only reason that the Bruins qualified for the Pasadena game was because UCLA and Washington were the only Pac-10 teams not on NCAA warning of some kind. That's not true, UCLA was 6-1-1 in the Pac-10 and oh-for the rest of the schedule.

Ara would have taken tie

By Associated Press

Ara Parseghian says that had he been in Nebraska Coach Tom Osborne's position in the Orange Bowl, he might have played for a tie rather than a win if a tie were sure to secure a national championship.

"It's one of those things that's very difficult to decide," says Parseghian, who was vilified for "tying one for the Gipper" after his Notre Dame team played a 10-10 tie with Michigan State in 1966.

"But if I was sure a tie would make me No.1 in the polls, I would rather be ranked No.1. Five, 10, 15 years from now, that's what people will remember —that you were the top team in the country."

Osborne, coach of unbeaten and top-ranked Nebraska, had his team go for two points after it scored with 48 seconds left to come to within one point of Miami in Monday night's Orange Bowl.

Had Nebraska kicked the extra point, it would have finished as the nation's only unbeaten team at 12-0-1, instead of the 12-1 which dropped it to second behind 11-1 Miami in the final Associated Press poll.

Parseghian, whose team indeed won the national championship after its tie game, maintains that the circumstances of his decision were entirely different. "We had to work just to get into field goal range," he said Tuesday in a telephone interview from his home in Florida.

It was Nov. 19, 1966 when unbeaten Notre Dame met unbeaten Michigan State in East Lansing, Mich. in what was billed as the Game of the Decade. Michigan State took an early 10-0 lead, but Notre Dame, playing without injured quarterback Terry Hanratty, came back in the third quarter to tie it at 10-10.

There it stood when Notre Dame took possession on its own 30 with 90 seconds left in the game. Six times the Irish snapped the ball, six times backup quarterback Coley O'Brien handed to a running back as the clock ran out.

Parseghian points out that in that sequence, the Irish went for a first down on fourth and one from their own 39. O'Brien ran a sneak that got the first down.

"We weren't going for the tie, he says. "We were running draw plays to get into position for a field goal. My quarterback was on the bench, we were going into the wind, and any mistake would have brought a field goal that would have beaten us. They had a very fine kicker (Dick Kenney).

Seahawks team of Destiny?

SEATTLE (AP) — Maybe, two-time Pro Bowl selection Kenny Easley of the surprising Seattle Seahawks says, this was just something that was supposed to happen.

"You can call us a team of destiny if you want," the talented All-Pro strong safety and former UCLA All-America said. "Right now, it seems like a destiny the way we're playing."

The Seahawks, a team which was referred derisively to by some as the Hee-Hawks just two years ago when they had a stretch of 15 losses in 16 games, are one of four survivors in the Super Bowl derby.

Coming off an shocking New Year's Eve upset over the Miami Dolphins in the Orange Bowl, Seattle will face the powerful Los Angeles Raiders in the American Football Conference title game on Sunday.

The Raiders are favored to win by a touchdown.

"You tell me," Easley said. "This is the first time this franchise has ever won four games in a row. We had to do that to get to this point in the season. That seems like destiny to me.

"If we continue to play like the way we've played the past three weeks ... "

The words trailed off. The implication was clear. The Seahawks, playing in their first playoff ever, are in a position to win Super Bowl XVIII.

The hard-hitting Easley is the heart and soul of a Seahawks' defense that has played key roles in the Seahawks' last four victories; 17-12 over the New York Giants in New Jersey, 24-6 over New England here, 31-7 over Denver in a playoff game here and finally the Miami shocker.

In Seattle's two playoff victories, he has 17 tackles, second highest on the club, and a sack. Despite being hampered by an ailing toe during the regular season, he was voted into the Pro Bowl for the second straight season, this time as an AFC starter.

Earlier in the season, Easley's sore toe kept him from practicing during the week.

Not by coincidence, the Seahawks' defense is playing inspired football since he has been able to practice during the week.

"My play," he said, "has improved quite a bit during the past month because I've been able to practice."

Walsh once cheered up Joe

Now it's Joe's turn to give pat on back

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — Early in the 1981 season, Bill Walsh of the San Francisco 49ers tried to cheer up the Washington Redskins' Joe Gibbs, a rookie head coach with an 0-5 record.

"His team was just coming of age then, as I remember. After we played them, I told Joe that his team was going to be a winner any minute. You could see it coming," Walsh recalled Tuesday as preparations continued for Sunday's National Football Conference title game with the Redskins.

Gibbs has said that the consoling words from Walsh were a big help. His first victory as a head coach came the following week.

"We had a nice conversation. But I don't think I can squirm into getting any credit for the Redskins," Walsh said Tuesday.

The 49ers went into the 1981 game in Washington with a 2-2 record. They led 24-3 at halftime and won 30-17.

"Joe lives and dies with his team, like any coach," Walsh said, recalling how hard Gibbs took the loss. "The Redskins might have been favored that day, but we were coming along about that time."

A week after beating Washington, the 49ers demolished the Dallas Cowboys 45-14. That was the first indication that Walsh's team, which was 6-10 in 1981, might be of Super Bowl caliber.

The 49ers lost only once more in 1981, were 13-3 in the regular season and 16-3 after winning Super Bowl XVI.

Washington came back from that 0-5 start in 1981 to finish 8-8, was a 12-1 Super Bowl champ last season and stands 15-2 now after its 51-7 playoff-opening victory on Sunday over the Los Angeles Rams.

"The Redskins were just in the process of putting that team together when we played them in 1981," Lott said. "Now the players all have roles and know what they have to do.

"They're very similar to our team in 1981."

College grid playoff? Forget it, Beast too unwieldy

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

The day after the day after the traditional New Year's football madness, which this year happened a day after New Year's Day, debate still boils on the need of a plan to determine an undisputed college champion.

Forget it.

Following up on a previous plea to maintain the status quo, we suggest the playoff idea is unworkable and unnecessary.

The beast has grown too big to be so easily harnessed.

There are 105 major collegiate teams now battling for unbeaten records and national recognition, with scores of others just a shade behind. How could they be squeezed down to a tournament bracket of, let's say, eight teams?

Simple, argue some. Take the winners of the eight leading bowls and put them in a quarter-final draw for eliminations which would extend the season three weeks beyond New Year's Day. By that time people are wrapped up in the National Football League playoffs and turning eyes to baseball spring training.

There are two obstacles to such a plan:

One is that it would put added emphasis on the college football program which administrators are seeking to depressurize because of costly and escalating subsidization and recruiting practices. Also when would the guys —presumably they're students — get time to study?

The second is that the bowls would be a reluctant and uncooperative ally. How are you going to convince the Rose, the grandpappy at age 81, from accepting anything but the most prestigious game? Who believes the Sugar, Orange and Cotton, who have built proud enterprises over the last 50 years, would be content with less than the best?

Other bowls — the Fiesta, Liberty, Sun, etc. — have become equally protective of their stakes.

So who's going to massage these egos?

The negatives to a playoff plan heavily outweigh the positives, although most of top line college coaches have been pushing for years for some sort of a formula.

They do it in all other sports, playoff proponents insist, why is it any different from basketball?

One main difference is that a basketball team can play three or four times a week, football teams only once. Furthermore, football is more physical and punishing game, producing incessant injuries. These would only be increased in such pressurized situations as a playoff, such as pro football's Super Bowl.

The alternative would be to erase the existing bowls and substitute a playoff plan.

This raises other questions: Who picks the teams? A special committee? Are they based on existing polls? How are they bracketed? How are sites chosen?

It becomes a strictly subjective process, as it's always been, with no likelihood that a more legitimate champion might emerge.

For 60 years the identity of a mythical national champion has depended on opinion, starting with the Dickenson System of grading in 1924 and continuing until 1941 when The Associated Press, which had inherited Walter Camp's official All-America, shifted to the poll of sportswriters and broadcasters.

The AP poll stood alone for many years. Now the coaches have a poll, as do some newspapers such as the New York Times and USA Today. Generally, all of them vary little in the final Top Ten or Top Twenty.

Playoff supporters scoff at the bowls, contending they are no more than extravaganzas concocted by the Chambers of Commerce to promote tourism and civic pride. Maybe so, but why not?

Down through the years, with all their fanfare and pageantry, they have given college football tremendous impetus and exposure. They have taken the appeal away from the strictly football-oriented and brought it home to the entire populace.

They have never pretended to be a means of determining the rankings. On the contrary, they often serve as a warm-climate holiday for coaches and players after a long, hard season. Curfews and discipline are waived to allow the players to join in the festivities.

Coaches who adopt the sterner stance, secluding their teams in remote hotels and making them work like slaves, normally lose to the blither spirits.

This year's bowls produced good football, high excitement and colorful ceremonies.

Long may they thrive.

College Basketball

Georgia whips Vols, 71-57

By Associated Press

Now that football season is over, Georgia can turn its attention to college basketball. And the Bulldogs got right into the spirit during their Southeastern Conference opener against Tennessee.

The 11th-ranked Bulldogs used an aggressive defense to pull away from a halftime tie and came away with a 71-57 victory over visiting Tennessee. The game was the only one of the night involving a Top Twenty team.

"We basically divide the season into three different sections — preseason, conference and conference tournament," said Georgia's Gerald Crosby, who scored 14 points. "Now our goal is the conference championship and we started right here."

Georgia upped its record to 9-1, aided by Vern Fleming's 22 points and James Banks' 20. Fleming scored eight of his points early in the second half as the Bulldogs used a 16-6 streak to take a 50-40 lead.

"Free-throw shooting was the key to us holding the lead in the second half, but the key to the half was our defensive play," said Georgia Coach Hugh Durham. "That's what broke the game open for us."

Tennessee managed just six field goals in the second half, a period in which Georgia made 21 of 23 foul shots.

"Their defense won the game for them," said Volunteers Coach Don DeVoe.

Dan Federmann scored 11 points to lead Tennessee, now 9-4.

LOUISVILLE, which dropped out of the Top Twenty this week after dropping two games in Hawaii, had little trouble in beating Morehead State 85-50. Milt Wagner scored 19 points and Lancaster Gordon had 15 for the winners.

The Cardinals, 6-4, led 34-26 at halftime and outscored the visitors 20-6 to start the second half.

Dwayne Washington scored 28 points and Gene Waldron added 20 to boost Syracuse past Villanova 79-70 in a Big East game. The Wildcats dropped to 3-6, their worst start since the 1974-75 season.

Jimmy Foster scored 28 points and grabbed 18 rebounds, leading South Carolina past Florida State 76-68.

Ricky Johnson's 15 points paced Illinois State over Creighton 63-54 in the Missouri Valley Conference opener for both teams.

TULSA RAN its record to 11-0 as Midland's Herbert Johnson scored 24 points in a 121-82 rout of West Texas State. Tulsa leads the NCAA in scoring, averaging 96.7 points per game.

Sophomore George Almones scored 25 points, had 10 assists and three steals in Southwestern Louisiana's 69-58 win over Weber State.

Mark Acres had 24 points as Oral Roberts took a 21-point halftime lead and cruised to a 114-87 triumph over Texas-Arlington.

Senior guard Phil Smith scored 28 points and set a school record for career free throws to pace New Mexico to an 82-74 victory over U.S. International.

Freshman Bruce Lefkowitz scored 13 points to help Penn defeat American 50-47. Lefkowitz's layup gave the Quakers a 40-32 lead with 10:15 remaining.

Senior forward Kenny Wilson tallied 22 points as Davidson overcame a 10-point deficit in the second half to beat Furman 70-65 in the Southern Conference.

SOPHOMORE guard Anthony Watson scored 26 points as San Diego State downed Navy 88-81.

In other games, Phil Robinson, a senior guard, entered the game with five seconds left, ran the length of court and hit a 26-foot jump shot to lift Northeastern over Maine 83-81; Tulane's Jon Johnson scored 16 points as the Green Wave rolled McMurray 84-35, and Howard Levy's 16 points helped Princeton top Lehigh 49-47.

Dogs welcomed home

ATLANTA (AP) — About 300 Georgia Bulldog supporters greeted the Cotton Bowl champions — minus Coach Vince Dooley — as they arrived home from Dallas on Tuesday after their 10-9 upset victory over Texas.

The enthusiastic crowd at Hartsfield Atlanta International Airport let out a wild "Go Dogs," cheer as the Dogs' arrived about 40 minutes later than their scheduled 1:44 p.m. EST arrival in a chartered jet.

Quarterback John Lastinger, who scored the 17-yard touchdown in the closing minutes Monday that gave underdog Georgia its victory, was one of the first to emerge from the plane that was missing Dooley and two of the defensive stars, back Terry Hoage and end Freddie Gilbert.

Dooley and the two players had taken an earlier flight Tuesday from Dallas to Hawaii, where Dooley was to coach and the two players were to participate on the East squad in Saturday's Hula Bowl.

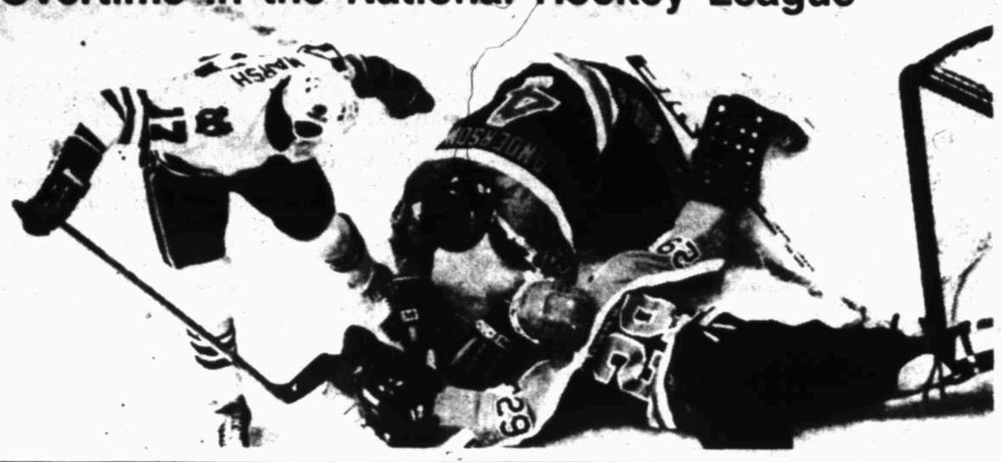

"This is a feeling that won't wear off for a while," said Lastinger of the triumph that gave Georgia a 10-1-1 record and dropped Texas from the unbeaten ranks at 11-1. "Most of us are still on a cloud now."

He said he was somewhat surprised at the airport turnout and "We appreciate it a lot. I'm very, very happy for myself and the team that we went out winners.

"The last couple of years, we haven't done well in bowl games. This is a different feeling," said Lastinger, who also got in a dig at some of his critics.

Hebert ran too quickly

NEW YORK (AP) — Bobby Hebert took the quick money and ran. He says he's not sorry he did. But now he wants more.

A year ago, Hebert was quarterback emeritus of Northwestern Lousiana State and up for grabs. But before the National Football League had a chance to throw its big bucks at him, he signed with the United States Football League's Michigan Panthers — for a lot less money, Gil Brandt believes.

BRANDT IS the master builder of the Dallas Cowboys, one of the NFL's most successful teams — the past month notwithstanding. He says the Cowboys' vaunted computer had Hebert ranked among the nation's top half-dozen college quarterbacks.

"We had a grade on him that said he would've made it in the NFL," said Brandt, the Cowboys' vice president in charge of personnel development. "He could've been drafted anywhere from the middle of the second round to the middle of the fourth.

"If he'd waited, he would've gotten a considerably higher signing bonus and salary than he got from Michigan," Brandt said. "Just about everybody who waited did far better."

But Hebert didn't wait for the NFL's April 28 draft, when six teams picked quarterbacks in the first round, some of them rated lower than Hebert. Three weeks after Michigan drafted him in the third round, behind safety David Greenwood from Wisconsin and center Wayne Radloff from Georgia, Hebert signed a five-year contract with the Panthers.

"I COULDN'T afford to be a gambler," he said. "Teresa and I had a little girl — Ryan was only 7 months old at the time — and I was broke. I couldn't afford to wait.

"I'm not really sorry," Hebert went on. "It gave me the opportunity to play right away. In the NFL, unless you're in just the right situation, like Dan Marino or Jim McMahon, it's very hard to get a chance to be a starter as a rookie. With Michigan, I made a name for myself. Things worked out pretty good. I don't regret what I did."

Still, there is the matter of money.

Ken O'Brien of the NFL's New York Jets, generally rated below Hebert, was one of those six first-rounders. He signed for an estimated $600,000.

Hebert's rookie salary, when he was the USFL's passing champion, was $70,000. He also received a $10,000 signing bonus. And when everything else is added up (incentive clauses and postseason money — he quarterbacked the Panthers to the USFL championship), Hebert said his total paycheck in 1983 came to $209,000.

THE NFL chose to keep its college draft in the spring and not compete head-to-head with the USFL, whose two-day draft began today. The NFL's reasoning was that by delaying its draft until midway in the USFL's February-June season, it could effectively keep a number of potential pro stars off USFL rosters at least temporarily.

Miami celebrates good news

MIAMI (AP) — Miami students, still celebrating the Hurricanes' stunning Orange Bowl victory over Nebraska, had more to cheer about after learning their team was named the national college football champion.

"It's got to be the greatest thing that ever happened to the university," said senior Mark Aprigliano.

He and about 100 other students crowded into the University of Miami's Rathskellar pub Tuesday night, where they celebrated by chugging beer and munching on a "Schnellen-burger," a new dish named in honor of winning Coach Howard Schnellenberger.

"We hope we can make it a permanant fixture on the menu," said pub manager Lew Yagodnik, of the beef patty topped with bacon and provolone cheese. "We've already sold about 150 of them."

Unranked before the season, the Hurricanes became the second team ever to jump from the No. 5 position to the top spot as a result of a bowl triumph.

They also became the first team to capture the newly named Paul "Bear" Bryant Trophy, formerly known as the AP Trophy but renamed follwing the Alabama coach's death last year.

"We were a bunch of nobodies before. Now, the University of Miami is finally getting the respect it deserves," said senior Dennis Ferrero.

"The whole community at large is being tied together because of this. Everybody has a feeling of unity."

While some Miami students showed their pride by painting their faces orange and green, others chose to display the school colors at the Hecht Athletic Center with crepe paper.

Congratulatory telephone calls flooded the school switchboard, and some fans even tried to get a jump on next season.

"We're getting calls left and right for season tickets for next year," said Hecht Athletic Center receptionist Dorothy Wehr.

The campus book store also found itself cashing in on Hurricane fever as dozens of students, local residents and out-of-towners bought up anything bearing the University of Miami name.

By the end the business day Tuesday, store manager Charles Canfield said the shop sold about $5,200 worth of UM memorabilia. Daily sales of such items usually run about $500, he said.

"People were looking to buy anything last night (Monday), and most of the vendors sold out," said Aprigliano, who managed to purchase a Hurricanes T-shirt. "It's well worth the money."

"To be No. 1 gives you a sense of fulfillment and completeness," said Schnellenberger, of his top-ranked 11-1 team.

No. 3 tough pill for Dye to swallow

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — A Sugar Bowl victory may be sweet, but a disappointed Auburn Coach Pat Dye said a No. 3 positions in the national college football rankings is still a tough pill to swallow.

"Our football team deserves a little something more than being third in the nation when you look at the schedule they played," said Dye after learning that his team didn't budge an inch in The Associated Press 1983 final college poll released Tuesday.

The Tigers, 11-1, placed behind national champion Miami, Fla., and No. 2 Nebraska.

"Naturally we're disappointed," said Dye, whose Southeastern Conference champion Tigers defeated Michigan 9-7 in the Sugar Bowl in New Orleans Monday night.

"There can only be one national champion," said Dye. "The only thing I can say in our behalf is to check our schedule."

Dye has harped on that schedule — which included nine bowl contenders among 12 opponents — since the start of the season.

While he had not talked with any of his players after the rankings were released, the coach said many will be disappointed. "This is what we live by in college football," he said.

"There isn't any bitterness, there will be disappointment," he said. "But in their hearts, down deep, they feel that they can beat any team in the country and I'm not so sure they couldn't."

Dye, asked about the validity of the polls, said he isn't so sure his team can't claim to be national champion.

"Really there are so many polls right now, why can't we claim to be number one?" he said.

The Auburn coach said a playoff system may be the only way "you're going to get a true national champion, but whether that's what is needed for college football I don't know."

Clovis coach honored

AMARILLO (AP) — Eric Roanhaus, whose Clovis Wildcats posted a 10-1-2 record this season and won the New Mexico state football championship, has been named outstanding high school coach of the year by the Panhandle Sports Hall of Fame.

Clovis' 50-18 victory over Roswell in the title game gave the Wildcats the championship for the third straight year in the state's Class AAAA division.

The Panhandle Sports Hall of Fame annually recognizes the top coach and player in six different sports. Eligible are players and coaches in the Texas Panhandle, Eastern New Mexico, western Oklahoma and the Oklahoma Panhandle.

Litton buys Core Labs; Sale has little local effect

From staff and wire reports

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — In an effort to enlarge its already major role in the oil services business, Litton Industries Inc. said Tuesday that it agreed to buy Core Laboratories Inc., a leading Dallas-based oil engineering and analysis company, for $190 million.

Under a definitive merger agreement, Litton, based here, will pay Core shareholders $33 per share in a tender offer opening Wednesday. A series of ancillary agreements also gives Litton options to buy unissued shares, a measure intended to ward off competitive bidding.

In Midland, Rufe S. Bynum, board member and senior vice president for Core Laboratories said he was very pleased with the merger.

"It is the greatest thing that could have happened to Core Laboratories, its employees and clients. Litton is a high tech company and should contribute immeasurably to Core Laboratories in the future through their resources and their technology. They were high tech before the word was popular," Bynum said.

Midland is headquarters for Core's Mid-Continent Division as well as its West Texas district. Together they employ about 90. Bynum said there would be no changes for the area.

"The company will proceed management-wise just as it had been before."

While Bynum did not know what Litton's future plans for Core are he did say he expects Litton to expand Core's services.

Litton already owns roughly 10 percent of outstanding Core shares, which it purchased in October and November in private placements and on the open market, a Litton spokesman said. Under the merger agreement, the tender offer expires Feb. 1, and untendered shares will be cased out at $33 per share after the merger.

Litton did not disclose the average price it paid in those earlier purchases, but Core shares were depressed through much of 1983 along with the rest of the petroleum-services industry. Core traded as low as $10.50 during 1983, but closed the year at $26.75 for a gain of 123 percent since last January.

Core is the largest provider of core sample and petroleum fluid analysis, which help geologists determine whether rock formations may contain oil. Core also performs "reservoir engineering," a service that advises drilling companies on how to develop and drill into an oil field. Core reported net income of $3.5 million on revenues of $117 million in 1982.

Meanwhile, Litton, a conglomerate best known for its defense electronics business, is also the largest independent seismic exploration company in the petroleum industry. Its Western Geophysical division, along with two smaller divisions, had fiscal 1983 revenues of $607.6 million and fiscal 1982 revenues of $846.7 million.

The combination of Western Geophysical and Core is aimed at providing "one-stop shopping" for petroleum companies and drillers. Core will operate as a separate subsidiary of Litton, but the two units will share technology and provide integrated services, a Core executive said.

"A combination of Core Lab and Litton will provide increased opportunities for both companies to offer an integrated line of oil field data services to their customers," John D. Wisenbaker, Core chairman and chief executive, said in a statement.

"Litton is an ideal partner because its leadership position in geophysical services is complementary to our strengths in core analysis, fluid data and petroleum-reservoir engineering services," he added.

Litton's acquisition comes during a major downturn at major oil service industry companies, but the $33 per share it agreed to pay for Core still represents a substantial premium over the company's book value of $9.95 as of December 1982.

"We have not been hurt as much as most of the companies in the industry," said Forrest L. Tohill, Core executive vice president. "We are not showing a loss, unlike a lot of companies."

In the quarter ended Sept. 30, Core reported net income of $1 million, up from $181,000 the year before. Sales were $24.2 million, down from $27.6 million.

Increasing profits on lower sales was attributed to "a lot of cost-cutting," including trimming the work force to 1,865 from a peak of 2,400, Tohill said.

Litton closed trading Tuesday on the New York Stock Exchange at $69.875 per share, down 75 cents. Trading in Core stock on the American Stock Exchange was suspended pending the merger announcement, which was made after the close of trading.

U.S. may lose satellite snapshot monopoly

Special To The Reporter-Telegram

For sale: Detailed satellite photos of Washington, D.C., Soviet wheat fields and Arab oil wells.

By 1985, such advertisements may be commonplace, and the decade-long American monopoly on the sale of satellite snapshots of Earth may have come to an end. Both Japan and France are currently supporting industry efforts to develop commercial enterprises that sell Earth images. Meanwhile, the future of the American remote-sensing satellite industry is uncertain, Science Digest, a Hearst publication, reports in the February issue.

The fourth in a series of government-owned and operated Landsat satellites began to malfunction last year. A replacement is scheduled for launch in March. But after that no further flights are planned because the project has consistently run in the red. At stake is a potentially vast market for satellite images.

Agriculturists depend on Lansat data to check the health and acreage of crops; hydrologists, to measure the melting of snow to predict flooding; and mining companies, to locate major new oil fields in the Sudan. Without Landsat, says a company official, the search would have required thousands of aerial photographs.

No currently operational satellite can do what Landsat does. The weather satellites, for example, are not able to see in as much detail. From its vantage point 500 miles above the Earth, Landsat has mapped more than 90 percent of the planet's land surface. Its "eyes" are sophisticated scanners. One is sensitive to the heat radiating from objects and can distinguish things as small as a tennis court. The other can see individual features of the Earth's landscape by the light and solar energy they reflect.

To keep the space images flowing and reduce its own losses, the U.S. government would like to transfer its Landsat program to the private sector. But a big stumbling block is Landsat's reputation as a money-loser. Another problem is timing. If there is a considerable gap in the picture flow, "the Japanese and French could dominate the market," says Michel Halbouty of the Department of Commerce's Land Remote Sensing Advisory Committee.

The Japanese are already drawing up blueprints for a satellite specializing in ocean views. And SPOT Image Corp., in Washington, D.C., an American subsidiary of a multinational company partly owned by the French government, plans to launch its picture taking satellite as early as April 1985. Customers will be able to buy photos with a resolution up to three times better than Landsat's – and in stereo. And the cost, says SPOT Image's Nadine Binger, will be competitive.

If the United States wants to stay on top of the satellite-imaging business, the government may have to continue to subsidize homegrown projects. Without Landsat, the United States could still buy satellite data from the French or Japanese but could be forced to pay a premium price. And there is no guarantee that American customers would get first crack at the data or that the French and Japanese would stay in business.

"No one wants to abandon the remote sensing-business to foreign countries," says Larry Heacock of the DOC's Source Evaluation Board for Civil Space Remote Sensing. "But there is a price tag associated with that, and we have to decide if we want to pay it."

Pipeline bought

DALLAS (SWN) — William L. Hustchison, Chairman of the Board, and Forrest E. Hoglund, President and Chief Executive Officer, announced Tuesday Texas Oil & Gas Corp. (TXO) and Mid-Con Corp. have completed the acquisition of natural gas pipelines and certain other assets from seven subsidiaries of Tatham Pipeline Company of Houston, Texas. The acquiring companies in November reported an agreement to purchase the facilities, with the price of $200 million being borne equally by each.

The acquired assets include 545 miles of interstate and intrastate pipelines in Louisiana and Texas.

Child support law hasn't seen 'action' yet

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

When voters passed a constitutional amendment Nov. 8 allowing child support payments to be taken from a non-custodial parent's paycheck, many thought the courts would be full of irate parents, relieved at finally having an avenue for collecting overdue payments from ex-spouses.

"I have not had one appear before me yet," Judge Barbara Culver said.

She's not alone.

According to State Rep. Rene Oliveira of Brownsville, house sponsor of the bill, it's a little early to see any action.

The amendment, which was surrounded by controversy throughout the state, was passed by the 68th Legislature this summer. Following voter approval Nov. 8, it still didn't go into effect until Secretary of State John Fainter certified it Nov. 29.

"It's only been a month," Oliveira said. "It's got to catch hold like anything else."

Under the bill, a parent who has custody of children may file a court order asking a judge to assign up to one-third of a non-custodial parent's take-home wages from a paycheck if that person is behind on child support payments.

"Before this law is even triggered, they have to be two months behind in their payments," Oliveira said. "We were trying to avoid the situation where a person is in a tight position with money or in-between jobs. We know it's still a hardship on the recipient or recipients, but we wanted to allow some safeguard in there."

Another part of the bill, voluntary wage assignment, went into effect Sept. 1. It allows a person to voluntarily deduct up to one-third of his disposable earnings from his paycheck.

In both cases, an employer may deduct $5 from the child-support payment as an administrative fee.

"I think most employers won't even bother collecting the $5," Oliveira said. "But we wanted to be fair and make it available to the employers because of the inconvenience."

A passage in the State Bar Section Report on 1983 legislation affecting family law practice states: "Incidentally, employers who actually collect the authorized fee should be shunned by decent society, as they will be guilty of taking food from the mouths of babes. The employer has an opportunity to demand a hearing, but just exactly why an employer would want to get involved in this fashion is a mystery."

If an employer fails to comply with the assignment, however, he can be held liable to the recipient of the payments for those not made as well as for reasonable attorney's fees and court costs, according to the bill.

The Texas Association of Businesses endorsed the amendment, saying if the bill is 40 percent effective, it will save $40 million of tax dollars a year, Oliveira said. Some of those savings will be seen when the attorney general's office utilizes the bill.

Those non-custodial parents who can afford the payments (but haven't) will. And the state no longer will be responsible for many families on welfare.

Also under the bill, a self-employed non-custodial parent can be required to make payments when he is two months behind. "Obviously, there's no paycheck to go after. But the court can require a self-employed person to post cash, securities, property or something else."

Oliveira said the slow start in the use of the bill can be attributed to several factors. Some may not have two months of payments coming to them yet. Still others may be waiting for the season of tight money to pass.

"The few people that have called me have been concerned about filing these around Christmas," he said. "But also there is a problem — and it's apparently in Midland, also — of unawareness.

"I've had judges and lawyers call me from all over the state with questions about it — wondering when it goes in effect and how the process works."

"It hasn't been used here, yet," said Midland attorney Bill Smith, "but I've talked to a few lawyers and they do have cases in their offices that could relate to it. We're all investigating it and thinking about starting to use it in the immediate future."

Burden of proof must be met in support cases

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Before you start down the road to collecting late child-support payments, it might be a good idea to obtain a lawyer.

If a state district court grants a garnishment of wages order, requiring payments of up to one-third of your ex-spouse's disposable earnings to be deducted from his paycheck, your attorney fees are recoverable.

According to the constitutional amendment, effective Nov. 29, which allows this process, a notice letter should be sent to the party from whom you are seeking to obtain the payments and to that party's employer. At least two months of payments must be due before the process begins.

The motion is filed in court, a hearing is held and evidence is admitted.

"There's been a misconception that this is automatic," said State Rep. Rene Oliveira of Brownsville, sponsor of the bill. "But burden of proof and all those things have to be met. As an additional safeguard, the judge still does not have to grant it. We left that discretion with the judge."

The judge also will take into account the amount of payments owed as well as the amount of payments to become due in the future. If garnishment of wages is approved, the payments will be made by the employer to the parent who is to receive them or to the court.

Effective Sept. 1, another part of the bill allows non-custodial parents to voluntarily deduct the payments of up to one-third of their disposable earnings from their paychecks. Those who are self-employed may be required to post cash, securities or property for the payments.

"But those who jump from job to job, we really can't answer that," Oliveira said. "Still, you've got the remedy of a motion for contempt of court to put someone in jail (for not paying child support)."

That used to be the only alternative.

When Texas voters approved the constitutional amendment Nov. 8, the state became the next to last to allow garnishment of wages for child support. South Carolina is the only state which does not allow child support payments to be deducted from a paycheck in some form.

Before the amendment was approved, a person who was delinquent in his payments could be found in contempt of court and thrown in jail.

"That was very ineffective," Oliveira said. "The first obvious problem is if you put someone in jail, they can't pay support and everybody loses. We were clogging up jails as well as the system and very little support was being collected." Another concern was retaliation against the custodial parent, he said.

Roughly $2.4 million in child support payments were made in 1983, according to a child-support deputy clerk in the district clerk's office. Of the 2,833 Midland County residents who voted Nov. 8, 2,111 voted for the amendment with 678 voting against it.

While some of those who opposed the bill said the money would only go to "buy beer for the mother's boyfriend," Oliveira responded, "It saddens me that people resort to that opposition because it is very poor.

"That may happen in one of every 100 cases at best. But you can bet, if it is being abused, the non-custodial parent will be down at the courthouse fighting it."

County Commissioners activate 1984 budget

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Midland County Commissioners Tuesday activated the $11.4 million 1984 budget.

The amount represents a 5 percent increase over last year's budget and includes a 4 percent pay raise for all county employees. The commissioners' salaries will remain the same, between $23,112 and $23,952.

County Judge Bill Ahders' salary will go from $44,184 to $45,948.

Commissioners also voted to raise the hourly rate paid to part-time employees from $5.70 to $5.95. Pay for vocational students employed by the county will go from $4.30 an hour to $4.45.

The court voted to eliminate the personnel director's job and make Jerrie Westmoreland head of three other departments. She will direct the Community Development Block Grant, the weatherization and the commodity distribution programs. The latter two are being implemented this year.

Former CDBG director, Richard Nunez, resigned last fall after being charged with stealing rent subsidy funds. In December, he pleaded guilty, was placed on probation for three years and ordered to repay more than $14,000.

County Sheriff Dallas Smith again asked commissioners for a larger staff. He requested two additional officers to serve civil papers and another investigator for the Criminal Investigation Division.

He pointed to a 30 percent increase in civil warrants served last year and predicted another significant increase this year due to the large number of business bankruptcies.

"Our men are burned out. They want to transfer to other areas," Smith said.

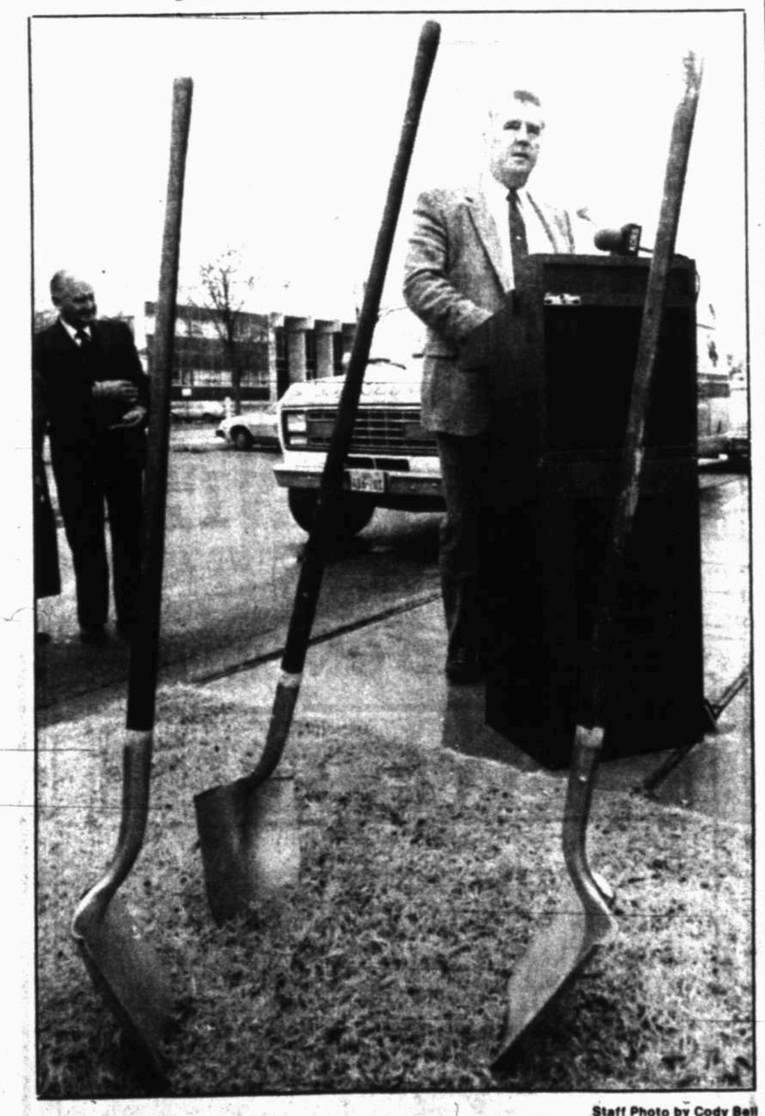

He said hiring three additional officers would cost $66,000, and proposed paying for it by increasing the fee for serving civil papers from $20 to $30. An increase in the fee and the number of warrants served could raise an additional $80,000 in 1984, Smith said.

Commissioners were hesitant to commit themselves to any increases. C. Wallace Craig said the county's financial situation, which is tight this year, may be even worse next year. He predicted the county's 1984 appraisal would see a decrease in property valuations.

"We'll have a smaller tax base in which to generate revenues. We'll be Ector County all over again," he said, referring to the upcoming rollback election in that county.

The Ector County sheriff has had to reduce his staff from 111 to 101. Smith pointed out his staff only numbers 67.

Commissioners asked Smith to return in a couple months, so that they could see if the number of civil warrants increases and determine whether or not additional officers are needed.

Readers scramble for '1984'

Local supply bought, checked out

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

Caught in the fad inspired by the coming of 1984, people around the Petroplex are clearing bookstore and library shelves of George Orwell's renowned novel, "1984."

Forget literary acceptance that Orwell titled the work inverting the last two digits to reflect his social comment on the state of affairs in 1948. Not intended as a prediction of how things would be 36 years later, Orwell apparently meant it more as a creative warning about the ominous possibilities for the future.

Still, Midland and Odessa consumers are buying out bookstore supplies of the novel, assumed by the masses to be a prediction of how things would be by this year.

B. Dalton Booksellers' best-seller's list will lead off with the novel next week, almost 40 years after a tubercular Eric Blair (Orwell's legal name) typed the last of the manuscript himself in bed.

Copies of the book at both county libraries are long gone, with Midland County having ordered more copies to satisfy readers' sudden desire to read or re-read what has long been considered a major work of fiction.

Used book dealers are also unable to help satisfy the demand with old editions. These were traded for money or new reading material by some of the same people now searching for copies to refresh their memories on a book many were required to read during schooldays.

"We've sold everything we've had," said Sherry Dummer, owner of Miz B's , a used bookstore in Midland.

Midland County is without its six new paperback editions and two hardback volumes. One of the hardbacks had been checked out six times since August, the other twice since November (the books are checked out for three-week periods.) Both Ector County's copies were gone from the library's shelves.

"We ordered extra copies and we sold out yesterday," said Leslie Thornton, assistant manager of Coles: The Book People in Permian Mall, recalling that buyers were both first-time readers and veterans seeking a refresher.

Of 20 copies Coles had on hand, Ms. Thornton estimated 15 were sold in a two-day period over the holiday weekend.

" I expected it. That's why we went ahead and ordered extra copies," she said, "I think it will continue to sell well throughout the year."

"It's been on our best-seller list for the past two or three weeks," said Dennis Barnes, manager of the B. Dalton store in Midland Park Mall. Noting his store had sold 36 copies in the past two weeks, the manager said he has a dwindling supply remaining from a reorder of the "mass-market" edition — the lowest-priced paperback version.

It has risen from 12th or 13th on this week's national list to first for next week. Barnes said B. Dalton determines the rankings by total sales at its 700 stores.

The craze is not unusual, said Barnes, recalling that when "East of Eden," premiered on TV, the rush for copies of the book was more noticeable.

"It just depends on what it is," said Barnes, " It just depends on how much interest there is."

In response to the interest, Midland County Librarian John Deats has ordered three copies of "1984 Revisited," a collection of 13 essays that discuss different aspects of the book.

With bookstores and libraries scrambling for more copies and people snapping them up faster than they can be restocked, the interest in "1984's" relationship to 1984 seems likely to last through the year.

Professors acknowledge 'Newspeak'

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

WAR IS PEACE.
FREEDOM IS SLAVERY.
IGNORANCE IS STRENGTH.

These three slogans of "the Party" are specific examples of the abuse of language which George Orwell warned against in his last novel, "1984."

Renewed interest in the 35-year-old book with the coming of the new year has sparked fresh debate and discussion of the recognized fictional effort by readers and scholars.

While denying that much of Orwell's prophecy has come true by the year gracing its cover, two local literary experts suggested that one of his basic themes — the misuse of language — is being developed by bureaucracies in society.

"Generally, the Orwellian predictions have not come true," said Dr. Jack Schneider, head of Midland College's communications department, "I don't think we've reached the point that we need to be concerned that our society is eroding."

Schneider did point to the use of a contemporary dialect of "Newspeak," the language used by the government — "the Party" — in the novel to keep citizens thinking good things in times of despair.

"Our politicians for a long time have been masters of deceit," he said, "By choosing the biggest words and the largest number of words, they make what they have to say seem important when it might not need to be important."

He referred to legal documents, insurance forms and the jargon used by various institutions in their everyday dealings with the public.

Dr. John Frazee, assistant professor of literature at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, noted other terms he uses in his classes to point to this abuse of the language in society. Bombing of villages in Vietnam was called "pacification." Banks undergo reorganization, rather than fail. Police give citations, not tickets.

"Call it by a new name and people will forget it's a bad thing," said Frazee. Recalling the Watergate burglars never called their actions burglary, the professor suggested "By not calling it that, they didn't have to admit, even to themselves, what it was."

Even before reading the book, people commonly refer to "1984" as the reason for some bad experience when dealing with a bureaucracy, said Frazee.

"Even people who haven't read the book think they understand the book, think they see it around them," he said. "That's what happens when something ends up as more than it was meant to be."

"I think ours is an extremely healthy society," said Scheider, "I don't deny there are pressures, we have to be very careful."

Promoting existing systems of checks and balances as weapons against overmanipulation, the Midland College professor said "There are plenty of us that are going to keep pointing the finger."

"What I see is a gradual slide into regimentation," he suggested. "I think we have a lot more regimentation in our society than we've had in the past."

Pointing to addition of laws by legislators that add to the rules people are expected to follow, Schneider noted that each year brought more strikes against individualism.

"We don't want too much agreement," he said.

Frazee said Orwell's "1984" was written by a socialist "afraid of a mechanistic society that would dehumanize and depersonalize society."

"We need, then as now, to be alert to the possibilities," said Frazee, suggesting that individual values can be eroded "even in ways we're not very conscious of until it's too late."

Asians may be evicted from housing project

HOUSTON (AP) — Southeast Asian families admitted to a public housing project by an official accused of taking bribes will be evicted even if their incomes qualify them to live there, a housing authority spokeswoman says.

Esther de Ipolyi said Tuesday that even if the families show they make so little money they deserve to live in the crumbling Allen Parkway Village, they will not be permitted to stay because they were allowed to bypass the 3,000-family waiting list.

"It would be unfair to others on the waiting list" to permit the families to stay, said Miss de Ipolyi.

Eviction proceedings against 10 families were to start today, she said. She said Steve Phuc, a former housing assistant with the Houston Housing Authority, improperly allowed several families into the project.

Phuc was fired in August after several residents gave affidavits alleging that Phuc had accepted bribes to find apartments for them.

Some of the families plan to fight the eviction, said Bob Sohns, an attorney at the Gulf Coast Legal Foundation. Sohns said he represents seven Vietnamese families and had requested an administrative hearing on the issue. He said if legal eviction proceedings were started against his clients, he would represent them at any hearings.

Karen Moone, director of housing, accompanied a Vietnamese interpreter on a door-to-door survey Tuesday and told several of the families that they would have to move out.

At the small apartment of Thu Van Duong, Mrs. Moone and interpreter Vinh Lai found seven members of a Viet family in residence.

Mrs. Moone asked through Lai if the family had received the notice of eviction.

"Yes," replied Duong.

"Do they plan to leave?" asked Mrs. Moone.

"No," said Lai. "An attorney on Main Street asked them if they would like to stay and told him to stay."

Duong showed a flyer that bore the name of the Gulf Coast Legal Foundation. The bulletin said an attorney for the foundation would help families fight the eviction.

"Advise him that the Houston Housing Authority will be filing action against him in court," said Mrs. Moone.

Duong just nodded his head, and Lai said, "He will fight it."

Miss de Ipolyi said 24 families originally were believed to have been wrongly admitted to the project.

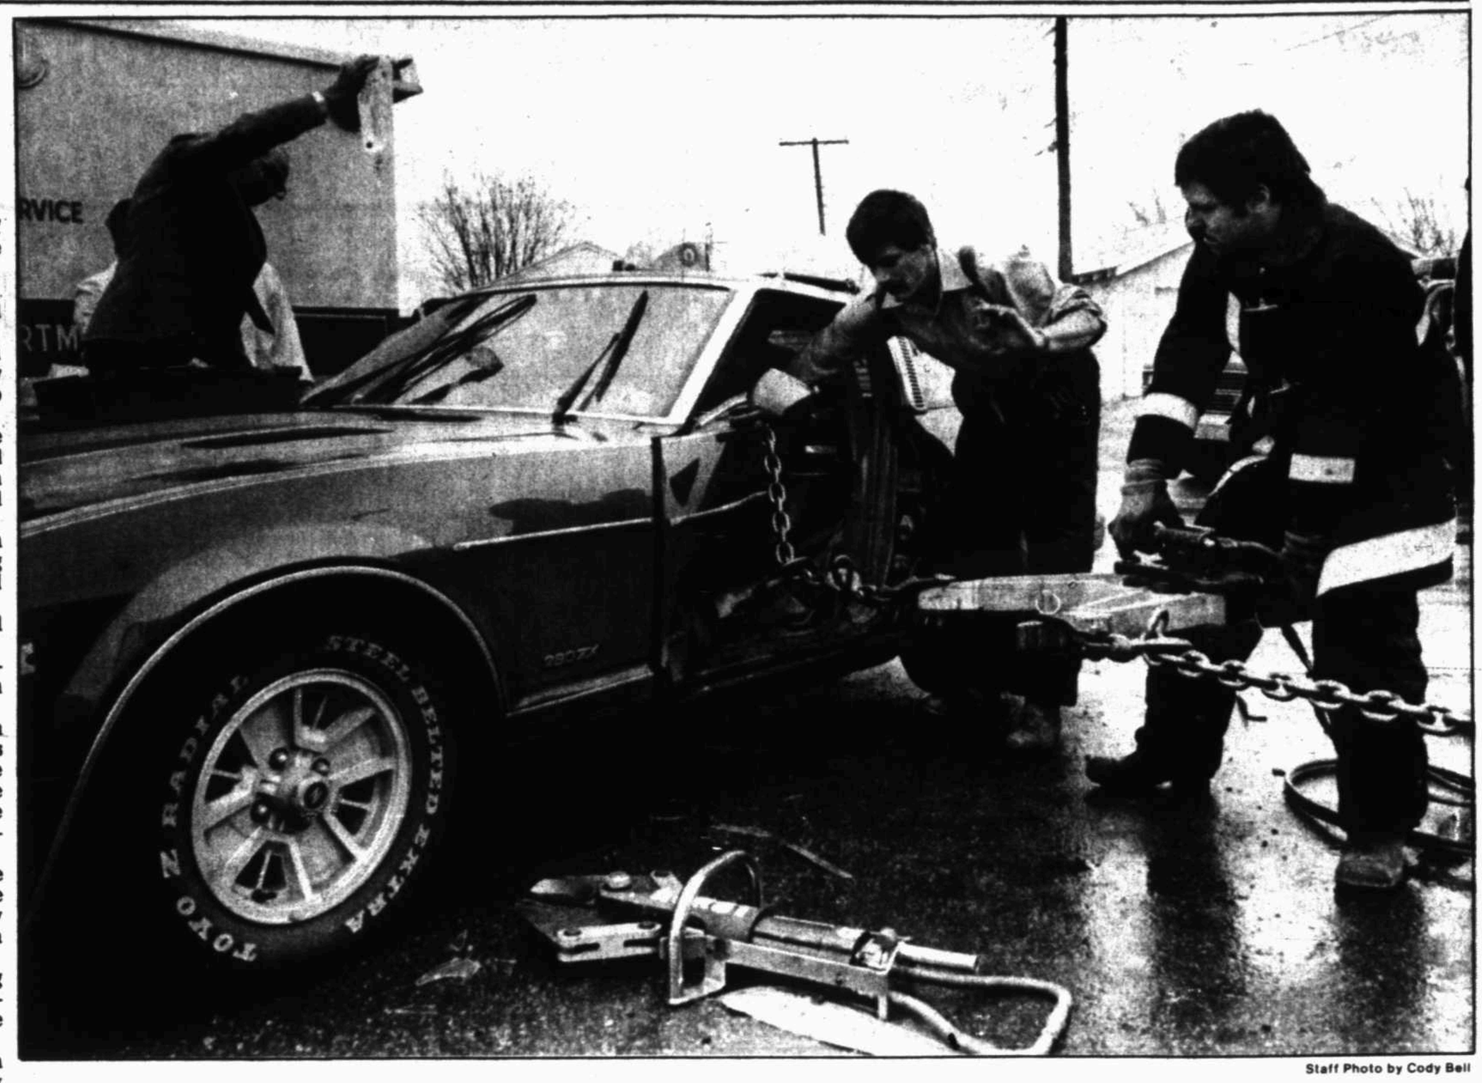

But she said further investigation showed that three were squatters not involved in bribery, seven have moved, and three were found to be legitimate residents. Officials have been unable to contact another family, she said.

Phuc was fired in August after he was accused of accepting bribes. He appealed, but the housing authority board upheld the action after a closed hearing.

Miss de Ipolyi said the housing authority offered to return the October and November rent paid by the families.

"This was a good faith gesture on our part," said Miss de Ipolyi. "Only six families claimed the refunds."

Allen Parkway Village is a 1,000-unit housing complex for low-income families. Nine hundred of the units are habitable and 644 are now occupied, said Miss de Ipolyi.

Firemen and paramedics work to remove Odessan Barry M. Stroud from his car after it and another vehicle collided at the intersection of Lousiana Avenue and Mogford Street about 12:35 p.m. Tuesday. Stroud suffered a fractured pelvis and was in satisfactory condition at Medical Center Hospital, where he was taken following initial treatment at Midland Memorial Hospital. The driver of the other car, 46-year-old Mario Rivera Romero of 500 E. Cowden, was not injured.

Ban on liquor sale part of settlement

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — As part of an unusual $1 million court settlement, the owner of a popular Mexican restaurant was ordered to stop serving liquor during the busy New Year's holiday weekend.

George Cortez, however, said his loyal customers at Mi Tierra Restaurant didn't seem to mind.

"New Year's Day was one of the busiest days of the year," he said. "We're in the food business and that's why people come here."

The parents of 16-year-old Daniel B. Davis had sued the restaurant after their son died of injuries suffered in a Jan. 16, 1981, traffic accident.

The Davises said their son and other under-aged youths were served several pitchers of margaritas at Mi Tierra and never were asked for any proof-of-age identification.

State District Judge Peter Michael Curry settled the lawsuit Friday, ordering the liquor ban over the four-day holiday and awarding the Davis family $1 million.

Beginning Feb. 1, Mi Tierra also will be prohibited from serving alcoholic beverages to anyone under the age of 21. The drinking age in Texas is 19.

Cortez stopped selling alcoholic beverages at 5 p.m. Friday, but began serving liquor again at 10 a.m. Tuesday. He said he could not estimate how much money he lost in liquor sales.

Customers continued to pour into the popular eating spot over the New Year's holiday weekend, many of them not aware of the liquor ban, he said.

But several customers said they didn't care.

"We wouldn't drink the liquor if they sold it today," said Johnny Shipman, who was with a group of visitors from Dallas. "We're with a Baptist minister...and we don't drink. We came here for the food."

Cortez said he disagreed with many of the contentions in the Davis' suit, but pledged to abide by the judge's order.

Freeze damages River Walk plants

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The unusual freezing temperatures have caused at least $10,000 worth of damage to the tropical plantings that line the downtown River Walk, city officials said.

The palm trees along the San Antonio River, which wends through downtown, also may have been hurt by the uncharacteristic cold spell, said Becky Braunig, horticultural services supervisor for the city's parks department.

Along one stretch of the river, nearly 80 percent of the plants were killed off by the freeze, Ms. Braunig said Tuesday.

But some of the damage probably won't show up until early spring, when plant growth is supposed to begin again, she said.

Odessan found dead in his car

ODESSA — A 55-year-old custodian was found by his son early Wednesday morning dead in his car in the Odessa Permian High School parking lot.

Pending an autopsy ordered by Justice of the Peace Jimmie Harris, the cause of death of Elias Delao Rangel, 55, has not been determined.

When found at 4:58 a.m. Wednesday by his son, the high school custodian's car ignition was on and the fuel tank was empty, according to police reports.

Rangel, who lived in Odessa, routinely worked the 2-10 p.m. shift at the high school. When his wife discovered he had not returned home Tuesday night, she sent her son to investigate.

Police reported no apparent signs of foul play. Rangel's body was taken to Easterling-Wilson Funeral Home, after Harris pronounced him dead.

UTPB president to address group

Dr. Duane Leach, president of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, will speak to the Midland Archaeological Society at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at the Planetarium of the Museum of the Southwest.

Titled "The University and its Communities," Leach's discussion will focus on what UTPB can do for the community, particularly for the avocational archaeologist and the historian, and the way the commmunity can respond to the university.

Before coming to UTPB, Leach was chancellor of the University System of South Texas. The historian received his doctorate from the University of Oklahoma. A Midwesterner by birth and background, he also enjoys raising and showing Arabian horses.

The public is invited to attend the talk and to meet Leach and his wife.

Orwell did foresee the development of technology as a major force in society, but Frazee disputed whether it is presently being used as in the book by "Big Brother" to keep people in line.

In the book, Big Brother watches his subjects through the use of the TV, which looks back at its viewers.

"The TV is one of the problems, but not the only problem," said Schneider. "Technology can become a problem, even in the hands of the most well meaning."

The Midland College professor called mailing lists "symptoms of what could be a problem," adding that "the telephone is at times an invasion of privacy."

"The world hasn't developed into a completly totalitarian state," Frazee said, pointing out that the citizens in the free world retain some personal freedoms.

Frazee did suggest that the abuse of language by the U.S. government did rival that of totalitarian governments where propaganda is an accepted fact.

"I think a healthy language is a sign of a healthy society," said Schneider, warning against using language in other than its "functional and purest sense."

"In any great work of fiction, I think you're going to see elements of truth that are applicable," added Schneider.

"This is his year," said Frazee, adding that Orwell would probably be very happy to see his book, which he wrote out of his political concern for "people's ability to ignore that world," getting so much attention.

Lucas reveling in notoriety received since he confessed

GEORGETOWN (AP) — Henry Lee Lucas is reveling in the notoriety he has received since he began talking about the scores of women he has killed across the nation in the past several years, his attorney says.

"He seems to be happy. He is bouncy these days," said Don Higginbotham, one of his two Williamson County attorneys.

"He is getting all this attention, all the coffee and cigarettes he wants. He's getting dental care and visitors on a daily basis. The law enforcement people are having to make appointments to see him. His cell looks like a warehouse stacked full of cigarettes," Higginbotham added.

Higginbotham said Lucas appears to be enjoying the treatment he is receiving in Williamson County, where the Department of Public Safety has set up an office to coordinate Lucas' interviews and collate information on his movements since he was released from a Michigan prison in 1974.

Lucas, 47, already has been convicted in two Texas killings and has claimed responsibility for more than 150 murders in a nationwide spree of terror.

He is being held in the Williamson County Jail in Georgetown, awaiting trial in the slaying of another unidentified young woman hitchhiker.

Officials said Monday that as many as 200 law enforcement officers from around the country will converge later this month in Monroe, La., to see how many unsolved killings can be linked to him and another drifter, Ottis Elwood Toole, who frequently traveled with Lucas.

Many of Lucas' statements about killings he claims to have committed were taken on videotape, and all of them were added to the "flow chart" that Texas officers and others are putting together to document his deadly travels.

Central Texas town calm despite triple murder

LOMETA (AP) — There's little, if any, law enforcement in this West Central Texas town of 670, and, despite, a triple murder, no one's screaming for the police.

Lampasas County Sheriff Gordon Morris said Tuesday he had a suspect in the deaths of a father, mother and daughter found shot to death in their highway-side home on Monday.

The bodies of Noah Haydon, a 60-year-old repairman, his wife Edna, 49, and 5-year-old daughter Amanda were found by James Haydon, a son, according to Morris. The sheriff said several guns were missing from the home, and robbery was a possible motive.

Lometa Mayor Mary McAnelly said her constituents "have never had to have" a police department here. The Lampasas County Sheriff's Department patrols the area, and there's not much major crime, she said.

"Periodically, we've had a deputy. We have a constable, but he's old," she said.

"We're pretty strong people around here," the mayor added.

Aaron Murphy, a Haydon neighbor, said he heard no gun shots.

"When I'm in the house it's closed up and the TV is on," said Murphy, whose home is about 100 yards from the Haydons'.

Murphy said he's not panicking about the slayings, but, "I'm nervous as hell and sick and tore up about it."

Lometa residents recall Noah Haydon as a decent citizen who kept to himself. Murphy, a neighbor for 20 years, said, "We never did neighbor a lot until the last few months."

Justice of the Peace Martin Adams said Noah Haydon "wasn't no braggart of anything, but he didn't mix too well."

Ms. McAnelly remembered "a quiet family that lived to themselves."

All three recalled Haydon's fondness for guns, although Haydon was not a frequent hunter. Adams said the collection featured weapons Haydon had restored by hand.

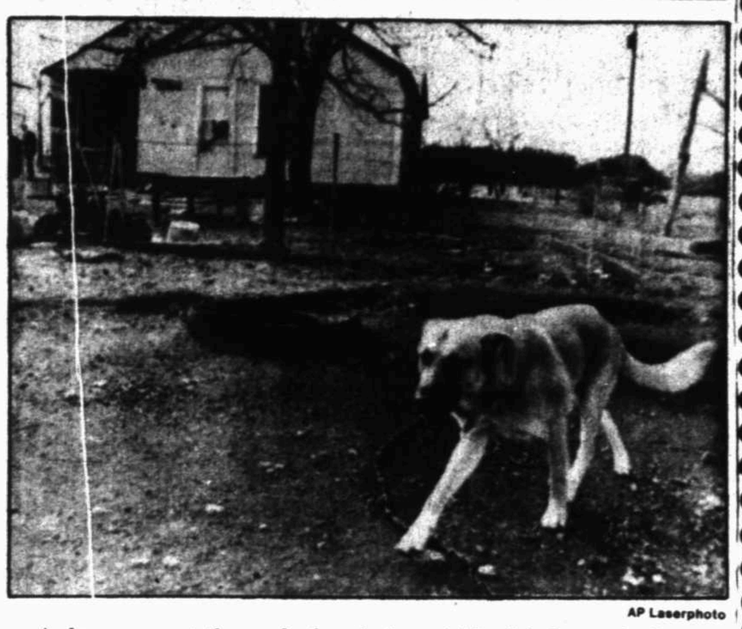

The lack of fear in the small town could be due to what Adams called "coffee table talk" about the slayings. The prevalent talk around town is that there is not a random killer at large, but rather a killer who knew the family and chose the Haydons as victims.

Morris said the three victims apparently were asleep in the same bed when Mrs. Haydon got up and was confronted by an intruder. She was gunned down, her husband was then shot and their daughter was killed while still on the bed, according to Morris. All three were shot several times in the head, the sheriff said.

"The people in Lometa are pretty calm. They feel like the situation is in hand," Morris said.

The sheriff was unsure when the slayings took place. The Haydons were last seen on Dec. 29, he said.

Record number of tourists flock to Valley

HARLINGEN (AP) — The Rio Grande Valley, winter haven for elderly residents escaping freezing temperatures in the Midwest, is bracing for the post-holiday arrival of about 100,000 tourists in the next 30 days.

Alden Schiller, executive vice president of the McAllen Chamber of Commerce, said his office has been receiving about 100 phone calls and 100 letters each day from people wanting information on accommodations in the area.

"The calls started coming with the bad weather up north last month and now we'll see the people who called begin arriving," Schiller said.

Since returning visitors reserve about 85 percent of the available space in older trailer parks by late August, new arrivals may have a little trouble finding a place to park mobile homes, Schiller said. A number of new parks still have room, but tourists should call ahead to reserve a space, Schiller said.

Schiller and other tourist officials throughout the Valley are reporting a record number of tourists this year.

Preliminary figures indicate a 15 percent increase in winter tourism over last year, when between 200,000 and 300,000 visitors spent an estimated $300 million during their stay. About half the visitors leave in April.

Schiller said that this year "we are seeing for the first time, in an important way, more and more people buying permanent residences and staying longer, some even moving here permanently."

He said the devaluation of the peso caused Mexicans to sell their condominiums. The surplus condos were such "good buys" that visitors were encouraged to move to the Valley full-time or take a plane to their permanent home rather than driving with a mobile home in tow.

In addition to offering low-cost housing, the McAllen area has also improved its health care system in an effort to attract elderly tourists, Schiller said.

McAllen now has two new hospitals with a third new facility under construction. Together, the hospitals will provide 660 new beds to replace the old 220-bed city hospital which will soon close.

While more people are making the Valley their permanent home, another large group are visitng the area for the first time this winter.

Amarillo man's handgun lawsuit to start

DALLAS (AP) — Opening arguments were scheduled today in a $43 million lawsuit of a 21-year-old Amarillo man who is suing the marketer, manufacturer and designer of a cheap handgun that accidentally discharged six years ago in a school parking lot, leaving him paralyzed for life.

Attorneys for David Duane Clancy will try to persuade a four-man, eight-woman jury that a .22-caliber Armsco revolver that injured Clancy on Oct. 4, 1977 had a defective design and was unreasonably dangerous to the user and others.

Clancy was in court Tuesday in a wheelchair. The trial is expected to last two to three weeks.

Named in the suit are Zale's, which marketed the gun; Arms Corp. of America, which manufactured it; and Rogers Research and Development Co., which designed it. The suit was filed in Dallas in 1981.

The defendants contend that the gun was not defective. They claim Clancy was shot because the boy with the gun was not handling it properly.

Clancy, then 15, was talking with a group of students on the parking lot of Alamo Catholic High School in Amarillo when he was shot.

A teen-ager who was holding the gun when it fired, wounding Clancy in the neck, testified in a deposition that he bought the gun from another student for $10 about two weeks before the shooting. He said he brought the gun to school to sell it and was showing it to a girl when it discharged. The bullet lodged in Clancy's spine.

Suggestion would help customers

AUSTIN (AP) — The staff of the Texas Public Utility Commission has recommended that most of the money that will go to Southwestern Bell, if it wins a rate hike request, should come from long distance companies.

According to recommendations by the PUC staff issued Tuesday, residential customers would have to pay only $1 more a month, and business customers would have to pay less than $2 more monthly.

When Southwestern Bell first announced its rate hike request last June, it asked for basic residential rates to triple.

But the bulk of the increase, the PUC staff says, should come instead from the companies that provide long distance service, including AT&T.

Southwestern Bell and other regional phone companies in the Bell System were forced by court order to break away from the parent AT&T as of Jan. 1.

In anticipation of the loss of long distance revenues it said it would suffer with the breakup, Southwestern Bell is seeking a $1.3 billion rate hike, but the PUC staff has recommended it be allowed $933 million.

Of that, the staff said Tuesday, $872 million should come from long distance companies.

Installation charges would go up by $4 for both residential and business customers, but some complex hook-ups would cost a few dollars less.

The PUC staff also recommended that users of directory assistance pay more — three free calls with those over three costing 30 cents each. At present, customers can make up to 10 free inquiries, with those over 10 costing 25 cents each.

Texas is Conoco Country.

Part V

Locked deep in the ground beneath the arid scrub country of South Texas, 125 miles southwest of San Antonio, are billions of barrels of untapped petroleum. There's just one hitch. Those barrels are thick tar that clings stubbornly to the sandstone that surrounds it.

But now Conoco has found a way to produce this huge energy resource. It's called "fracture-assisted steam technology" (FAST).

Here's how it works: Under great pressure, water is pushed through the tar-bearing formation, creating a network of horizontal fissures. Then steam is forced down an injection well into the fissures, melting the tar above and below them. This enables the tar to flow into production wells where it is diluted with lighter, thinner crude oil that has been pumped underground, so that the tar remains fluid when it cools. Then the mixture is pumped to the surface, where water (from the steam) is removed, leaving the tar-oil mixture ready for shipment to refineries where it can be processed into commercial products.

Although the FAST technology works, it is still very expensive. And at today's oil prices, the tar can not compete with conventional petroleum.

So for now, we'll continue to improve the technology and prepare for tomorrow. We're here for the long haul, because Texas is Conoco Country.

Magna Carta to be on display

NACOGDOCHES (AP) — A copy of the Magna Carta, on loan from England to the United States, will make its last appearance in Texas later this month when it goes on display at Stephen F. Austin State University.

The document, one of four existing copies, has been on exhibit in the nation the past several winters, with Austin as its depository. Next winter, the Great Charter, which is considered the basis of legal freedoms, will be based in California.

Strake requests Mattox inquiry

AUSTIN (AP) — The chairman of the Texas Republican Party has asked the Travis County district attorney to investigate Attorney General Jim Mattox's hiring of a temporary employee to plan a fund-raising Christmas party.

Chairman George Strake said Tuesday the El Paso Times reported on Dec. 6 that Mattox, under indictment for commercial bribery for allegedly threatening to ruin a Houston law firm's public bond business, had hired Debbie Wall to plan an office party and to help plan a December fund-raiser at which lawyers were asked to contribute to Mattox's defense fund.

"Jim Mattox used state employees, state phones, even state pencils and paper to raise money, trying to keep himself out of jail," Strake said in a statement.

Mattox, according to press aide Elna Christopher, was paying Ms. Wall out of Mattox's officeholder account and her work was not at state expense.

Thatcher's son dating Texan

LONDON (AP) - Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's son Mark has had a "whirlwind romance" with the daughter of a Texas rancher and oilman, two British newspapers reported Wednesday.

The Daily Mirror reported that Thatcher, 30, has been seen "regularly escorting" Karen Fortson, 24-year-old daughter of oil and cattle millionaire Ben Fortson. The paper described her as "one of the Deep South's most eligible young ladies of good breeding."

The rival Daily Mail said the pair met at a society Christmas party in Fort Worth and have been "inseparable since."

The prime minister's son, a marketing consultant and sometime racing driver, makes regular visits to the United States.

Director wants to activate board

AUSTIN (AP) — The executive director of a prison reform organization urged the chairman of the state prison board Tuesday to activate an advisory board for prison furloughs.

Director Charles Sullivan of CURE — Citizens United for Rehabilitation of Errants — said the Texas Work Furlough Advisory Board was created in 1977 but has never been activated.

Sullivan said only 18 inmates currently are employed in the work furlough program compared with more than 200 during George Beto's adminstration of the prison system, which ended in 1972.

Beach house trial will begin

AUSTIN (AP) — Selection of a jury for the first trial in a series of cases aimed at preventing owners of some hurricane-damaged beach houses from rebuilding was scheduled today in state district court.

Attorney General Jim Mattox claimed that Hurricane Alicia shifted landmarks on West Galveston Island and about 15 partially destroyed houses are now on public beaches.

The first defendant was Robert Matcha, Houston, owner of a West Galveston beach house. His trial was continued until today to give his attorneys more time to present their case. The continuance included a temporary restraining order that Matcha stop any rebuilding of the house until the trial.

White seeks disaster declaration

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White's office asked the Small Business Administration in Dallas Tuesday to approve a disaster declaration for Tyler County because of tornado damage Dec. 10.

DA seeks death penalty

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The district attorney has vowed to seek the death penalty for a man charged with murdering a San Antonio patrolman, promising to do "anything and everything" he can to deter such attacks on the city's police officers.

Bexar County District Attorney Sam Millsap said grand jurors took less than 30 minutes Tuesday to indict Gustavo Pimental, 42, on a capital murder charge.

Patrolman Gilbert Ramirez, 34, was shot in the face and neck late Dec. 23 after answering a disturbance call.

The officer died at an area hospital the next day, the first San Antonio policeman to be killed in the line of duty in more than five years.

Pimental, a garbage collector, has been jailed on $150,000 bond since being taken into custody near the scene of the shooting incident.

"The police officer is the first line of defense against crime in our community," Millsap said. "We want to see anything and everything done to see that they are protected from unwarranted attacks."

Millsap said he would not approve any plea bargain agreement in the case, since he hoped the capital murder charge would act as a "deterrent factor" and protect other policemen.

Ramirez was dispatched to Pimental's house after the police department received a report of two men fighting in the front yard, reports show.

The patrolman had fired three rounds from his .357 Magnum, according to the police reports, and was struck in the face and neck by a bullet from a 12-gauge shotgun.

The officer, who was buried last week, is survived by a wife and two young children.

Merger wipes out margin

AUSTIN (AP) — Comptroller Bob Bullock says a $15 million tax break that was allowed Texas Utilities Electric Co. in a merger could wipe out most of the state's expected revenue margin over spending.

He said the firm took advantage of a provision in the 75-year-old utility gross receipts tax law to save $15 million in state taxes when Texas Electric Service Co. merged with Texas Power & Light and Dallas Power & Light.

"The tax law says that since these companies merged I have to treat them as a brand new firm and only charge them a minimum tax of $50 for the first quarter of 1984," Bullock said.

The firm will pay an estimated $45 million for the remaining three-quarters of 1984, he said.

"When the Public Utility Commission approved this merger, they said they didn't know how it would affect the company's customers," Bullock said.

Entertain with Ease and Drama

One of the tricks of entertaining with style is to have most of the work done ahead. Keep the table setting bold and simple. You want to enhance the food, so choose a color that will complement each course — and make the food irresistible.

Because you can make it several days in advance, Danish Creamy Havarti en Croute is the star appetizer. Wonderful Danish Creamy Havarti encased in rich puff pastry dough can be carefully wrapped and frozen for 3 to 4 days before the party. From freezer to oven to table takes only about 25 to 30 minutes. When golden brown, lift it onto a tray with melt-in-the-mouth Danish Blue Castello, refreshing cubes of Creamy Havarti with Dill and wedges of Danish Fontina to be served with fresh fruit. It's a tray of sure winners. All Danish cheese conforms to the strict regulations of the Danish state control, so you can count on their high quality and superb taste to start the party with flair.

Continue in the same high style with a dramatic lamb entrée. Fresh American lamb is nutritious, easy to prepare and extremely versatile. Cook it to an internal temperature of 140°F. for medium rare or 155°-160°F. for medium to retain its best mellow flavor. With the introduction of the New Look in American Lamb many more cuts are available these days. But for a wonderful party entrée, traditional racks are put together in an unusual way to make a pocket for the delicious fruited stuffing that cooks right along with the lamb. Glazed the last few minutes with a tangy red cherry and almond mixture, this is a stunning roast that is deceptively simple to cook and serve. The quick convenience of easily available red cherry pie filling used as a glaze adds wonderful color and flavor to the lamb with the least amount of fuss. Little else is needed to complete the main course. Just toss a simple piquant green salad with chunks of Danish Blue cheese for a tangy accompaniment. Light in calories and flavor, the entire meal is right in line with today's life-styles.

Then for dessert, indulge their sweet tooth. A silken tart of white chocolate in a pat-in-pan crunchy almond pastry shell, is topped with a special red cherry and elegant toasted, sliced almond layer. Made ahead and refrigerated, it needs only to stand a few minutes at room temperature before serving. Be sure to sprinkle the thin crunchy almonds over the top at the last minute. That way their texture adds a crisp contrast to the tangy fruit and creamy filling. Paper thin and lightly toasted to bring out their full flavor, almonds always add a special touch from appetizers to desserts.

After coffee — collect the compliments on a dinner party filled with savory taste treats and served with flair.

DANISH CREAMY HAVARTI EN CROUTE

1 (7 oz.) round Creamy Havarti, plain or with dill, or equal size in square bulk pieces
2 frozen patty shells (or puff pastry sheets), thawed
Butter
1 (5") foil pie pan
1 egg lightly beaten

Press two patty shells together; then roll out on lightly floured cloth to an 8" circle. Place cheese in center of circle, bringing edges of pastry just over top edge of cheese, forming tucks. Place in lightly buttered foil pan, brush with beaten egg. Chill 1 hour. Brush again, then bake in preheated 375°F. oven for 15-20 minutes, or until golden in color. Remove from oven and let cool slightly in pan before serving. Or cool and chill; then reheat before serving. Serve warm, cut in wedges with crisp fresh fruit or raw vegetables. Other types and sizes of Danish cheese (approx. same weight) can be wrapped and baked following this recipe.

Variation:
Place 1 teaspoon of Dijon-style mustard on bottom of pastry together with 1 tablespoon of fresh herbs. Place cheese in center of pastry and bake as above.

CHERRY ALMOND GLAZED RACKS OF LAMB

2 racks of lamb, 6 to 8 ribs each (3-1/2 to 4 lbs. total)

1 cup cooked green peas

Glaze:
1 (21 oz.) can red cherry pie filling
1/4 cup slivered almonds

Have butcher "French" the racks so the meat between rib bone tips has been removed (approximately 1-1/2 inches). Criss-cross the two racks, forming a pocket for stuffing. Place lamb on a roasting rack to collect excess drippings. Combine all stuffing ingredients in mixing bowl. Place mixture in lamb cavity until full. Roast at 325°F. 25 minutes per pound, or until meat thermometer, placed in center of muscle, registers 140°F. for medium rare, or to the desired doneness. Place remainder of rice stuffing in a casserole and bake with lamb for approximately 30 minutes or until done. Combine red cherry pie filling and slivered almonds in a small saucepan. Heat until warm. Remove from heat and add Amaretto liqueur or almond extract. During the last 15 minutes of roasting, baste lamb with cherry glaze mixture. Pastries squash veggie-lover's hope

By LINDA ANDERSON

My favorite foods in the whole world are vegetables. Strange but true. I love produce of all kinds, but veggies are my absolute favorite. I have been known to make meals entirely out of carrots, broccoli or cauliflower.

When Pepperidge Farm introduced their frozen vegetables in puff pastry, I thought the combination was strange, but I couldn't resist trying some because I am such a nut about vegetables.

The new dishes are advertised "to be the way vegetables were meant to taste." It seemed far fetched — after all, if they were meant to taste that way they would probably grow that way — but I guess slogans are supposed to be far fetched.

The frozen dishes feature mushrooms in sauce, green beans in sauce, cauliflower in sauce and several more, including combinations of vegetables each in a sauce, set in a puff pastry.

We taste-tested two flavors — Zucchini Provencal and Broccoli with Cheese.

Pepperidge Farm pastry is usually quite flaky and delicious, and these pastries are no exception. The pastry was flaky and golden, and just the right amount — it didn't overpower the vegetables inside.

There was quite a variety in the taste testers' reactions to the pastries, however, all the way from "delicious," and "wonderful," to "gross." (Not everyone in the family shares my enthusiasm for vegetables. Some merely tolerate certain vegetables. And they won't touch some vegetables.)

The broccoli with cheese had the best reviews. The teenager who likes vegetables said it was "pretty good" (that is high praise). Even the teenager who hates broccoli said it was "okay." The adult female (who loves broccoli AND cheese) was somewhat disappointed in the flavor of the vegetable/cheese combination but thought the pastry was wonderful. The adult male tester thought both flavors of vegetables in pastry were "delicious...wonderful," and asked to try all the other flavors. The 3-year-old tasted the broccoli. That was all.

The Zucchini Provencal had mixed reviews. The two teenagers agreed that it was "icky, absolutely gross." The adult female tester was VERY disappointed in the flavor (and zucchini with tomatoes is one of my favorite combinations). The adult male ate every bite and asked for more. And the 3-year-old tasted it. That was all. (She likes spinach, though.)

The first ingredient listed in both dishes was the main vegetable — zucchini in one and broccoli in the other — which means the vegetable percentage of the combination is more that the pastry percentage. And both have a respectable amount of nutrients. A Zucchini Provencal pastry supplies 10 percent of the thiamine and 20 percent of the iron in the Recommended Daily Allowance, among other nutrients. The Broccoli with Cheese pastry supplies 10 percent of the thiamine, 10 percent of the riboflavin, 10 percent of the iron and a hefty 30 percent of the vitamin C of the RDA. (Each flavor comes two pastries in a 7-1/4-oz. box, which means each pastry is more than 3-1/2-oz.)

All in all, these vegetables in pastries were good, but not as good as I thought they would be. And the cost per serving is fairly expensive — the two varieties we tried were $1.37 for a box of two pastries. Some other varieties are priced $1.69 for a box of two pastries. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

In spite of my personal disappointment with these pastries, and in spite of the mixed reviews the taste testers gave the products, I have to admit I look forward to trying every flavor. The pastries are too expensive to have as a side dish every day, but they are fun to sample. For those who aren't too hungry, the puffs may make a light, tasty and inexpensive supper. Who knows, they may even tempt a vegetable-hater into liking veggies.

A message printed on the box warns "the delicate puff pastry of this product does not brown in microwave ovens" and is not recommended for microwave cooking.

Macaroni absorbs sauce

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

MACARONI & HAM

The sauce is absorbed by the pasta.

1 cup elbow macaroni
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
2 cups milk
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
8 ounces cooked ham, diced
8 ounces cheddar cheese, grated
¾ cup fresh bread crumbs

Cook macaroni according to package directions; drain. Make a white sauce of the butter, flour and milk; stir in the Worcestershire, macaroni and ham. Turn half the mixture into an oblong 2-quart baking dish (11¾ by 7½ by 1¾ inches); layer with half the cheese; add remaining macaroni-ham mixture and layer with remaining cheese. Sprinkle with crumbs. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until hot and crumbs are golden — about 20 minutes. Makes 6 servings.

Terrine qualifies as pate, if baked in shell

Copley News Service

What does the word "pate" call to mind? Liver. Blech. A lot of meat-eaters can't stand the stuff.

However, pate originally meant, not the smooth liver paste we usually think of, but simply a deep-dish pie. Recipes for pates are found in French cookbooks as long ago as the 14th century.

Along with the current rage for French cuisine and the enormous popularity of every variety of quiche, pate is also finding a place in the American diet. And yes, there are vegetarian versions of this old French favorite that are almost as lovely to look at as they are to eat.

A vegetarian terrine is a loaf of vegetables, blended and flavored with spices. Terrine comes from the French word for earth, "terre" — because of the earthenware mold in which this dish is traditionally baked. Generally, if the terrine is enclosed in a pastry shell, it is called a pate.

In the past, terrines were usually served cold, while a pate could appear at the table either chilled or hot. Today, the distinction between pates and terrines is no longer so rigidly observed, and the terms often are used interchangeably.

Recipes are from Carmel Berman Reingold's "The Cuisinart Food Processer Pate Cookbook," Perigee Books, Putnam Publishing Group, 200 Madison Ave., New York, NY 10016, 1983.

TOFU TERRINE KAHALA

1 lb. tofu (bean curd)
3 eggs
½ cup cooked spinach puree
½ cup cooked carrot puree
1 tsp. sesame oil
Salt and freshly ground white pepper to taste
4 ozs. tofu (bean curd)
1 tbsp. cooked asparagus puree
Tomato Concasse (recipe follows)

Using a food processor, puree 1 pound tofu and eggs until smooth. Divide tofu puree into three equal parts, and reserve one part.

Combine one part tofu puree with spinach puree and mix thoroughly. Reserve.

Combine another part of tofu puree with carrot puree and mix thoroughly. Reserve.

Line a 2-quart pate mold or a 9x5x3-inch loaf pan with cheesecloth. Season the reserved plain tofu mixture with sesame oil, salt and pepper and mix well, spreading this plain tofu in bottom of the mold. Smooth top. Carefully spoon tofu-spinach mixture into pan, smoothing top. Cover with tofu-carrot mixture and smooth top. Draw ends of cheesecloth over pate to cover and bake in a bain-marie (see note at end of column) in a preheated 350 F oven for 10 to 15 minutes, or until a sharp knife inserted in center of pate comes out dry.

Allow terrine to cool completely before slicing.

Combine 4 ounces tofu with asparagus puree in a food processor. Process until completely mixed and smooth. Spoon asparagus mixture onto a serving platter. Place terrine slices in center and serve with Tomato Concasse. Serves 8 to 10.

TOMATO CONCASSE

12 plum tomatoes or
1 (20 oz.) can of Italian plum tomatoes, drained
2 tbsps. butter
¼ tsp. thyme
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste

Chop tomatoes coarsely in a food processor and combine with butter in a sauepan. Cook over low heat, stirring, for 10 minutes. Add seasonings and continue cooking until most of the liquid has evaporated. Yields approximately 1½ cups.

Leftovers make turnovers

CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

At this time of year a cook's fancy may turn to using a holiday food, still on hand, in a new way. That's what we did with some leftover cranberry orange relish.

That relish — invented many years ago by a New York City home economist — has become a classic American offering at Christmas time, and it has been used in many ways. But interestingly enough, we were unable to find a recipe using it as a filling for baked pastry turnovers. A search through our large collection of leaflets and booklets plus several books on cranberry cooking and lore revealed no turnover recipes in which even plain cranberries appeared.

The next step, naturally, was to develop a turnover recipe in my own kitchen. Here it is for your consideration.

CRANBERRY ORANGE RELISH TURNOVERS

¼-pound stick butter (½ cup), soft
3-ounce package cream cheese, soft
1 cup unbleached all-purpose flour
Cranberry Orange Relish, well drained (see Note)
Milk

In a medium bowl with a wooden spoon beat together the butter and cream cheese until blended. Gradually stir in the flour until blended. Turn out onto a sheet of saran and shape into about a 4-inch square; wrap tightly; chill until firm enough to handle.

On a prepared pastry cloth with a prepared stockinet-covered rolling pin, roll dough so it is just a little larger than a 12-inch square. Trim edges; save the trimmings to make an extra turnover. Cut the 12-inch square into nine 4-inch squares.

Drop about a tablespoon of the Cranberry Orange Relish off center on each square. Fold each over to make a triangle; press edges with fork tines to seal well. Prick each top with the fork in 4 equidistant places. Place, well apart, on an ungreased cookie sheet; brush tops with a little milk.

Bake in a preheated 425-F. oven until golden brown — 15 minutes. Remove with a wide spatula. Serve hot or warm.

Makes 10.

Note: In my kitchen our original Cranberry Orange Relish called for 1 unpeeled, seedless medium orange (cut into 8 wedges); 1 unpeeled, cored, medium McIntosh apple (cut into 8 wedges); a 12-ounce bag (3 cups) cranberries and 1 to 1½ cups sugar.

To use our method: in a food processor with the metal blade process half the orange wedges until finely chopped; add half the apple wedges and process until the apple is fairly fine. Empty the mixture into a container. With the metal blade, chop half the cranberries until fine; add to the orange-apple mixture with half the sugar and stir well. Repeat with the second batch of orange, apple, cranberries and sugar. Before using, tightly cover, and refrigerate overnight.

To use your own leftover Cranberry Orange Relish or some made by our recipe as a filling for the Turnovers, drain enough to make 2-3rds cup and stir in 2 teaspoons all-purpose flour.

Making blue cheese stinks

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEWTON, Iowa. — For one company in this industrial town, business stinks.

The odor is so strong that it seeps into clothes and hangs on the skin like morning dew clinging to grass. Pat Perry, who works here in Newton, goes "straight home and right into the shower" when her day is done.

Nearby, in damp warehouses, the company's entire inventory is overgrown with mold. Scientists have identified it as "blue penicillium roqueforti."

But stinky and moldy is how they like things here in central Iowa where hills gently roll up from the flat prairie and dairy cows are almost as plentiful as pigs.

In a state known for corn crops and hog herds, in a city made famous by washing machines, one of the world's great blue cheeses — Maytag — is produced.

"It ranks right up there with the great cheeses," said Bert Greene, author of Honest American Fare. "I think Maytag stands up to any of the imported blues."

"It comes very close to the best (imported) blue cheeses and is by far the best of the domestics," added chef and author James Beard. "I think that originally the Maytags made the cheese more or less as a pleasant thing for themselves and you can taste that in the cheese itself," he added.

But Evan Jones, author of The World of Cheese, gives it faint praise. "It's not a bad cheese, but I don't think it's especially noteworthy. I haven't found it out of the ordinary," he said.

Creamy with a distinct bite and an equally distinct fragrance, Maytag blue is a little known product sold almost exclusively by mail. Its reputation among gourmets has "generally been spread by word of mouth," said Donn M. Campbell, Maytag Dairy president.

It is the moist creaminess that distinguishes blue-veined Maytag from many blue cheeses that tend to be more crumbly.

Maytag is also unusual because cheese is a cottage industry for the dairy.

While cheese making lends itself to a high degree of mechanization, the Maytag dairy is not a model of efficiency.

Virtually everything is done by hand. Curd forms like a custard, and workers cut it into small cubes before packing it into stainless steel hoops — the first step in making a wheel of cheese. Months later, the aged cheese is then wrapped and packed by hand in a building not much bigger than a three-bedroom house.

Most domestic blues are aged about 90 days. Maytag is aged for a minimum of six months in damp, cool and pungent concrete 'caves' carved into a hill.

Grits go western-style

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Now that American food writers are urging American cooks to learn to know and appreciate the regional cooking of all parts of the United States, hominy grits may come into their own.

The great grits-eating belt, it has been said, "starts in Texas and moves east and as far north as Carolina." Outside that belt, New York City and Chicago are probably the largest grits-eating centers.

My own way of using grits over the years, here in New York City, has been in casseroles. My first time around, I cooked the grits and teamed them with beaten eggs and melted butter to serve as I would cornmeal spoon bread. Later I often added cheese, and still later I would sometimes throw in some cooked crumbled bacon and chopped sweet green pepper cooked in the bacon drippings.

Recently, probably because Tex-Cal cooking is having its day, I tried a grits casserole made with green chilies, Monterey Jack cheese and sour cream. No eggs in this.

This latest casserole does double duty. It makes a fine accompaniment to chicken and vegetables. Or it can be the mainstay of a light supper; in this case, broiled tomatoes with a topping of buttered crumbs and steamed broccoli would add flavor and color as accompaniments.

TEX-CAL GRITS CASSEROLE

5 cups water
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup enriched regular white hominy grits
1 cup sour cream
One 4-ounce can chopped green chilies, drained
8 ounces Monterey Jack cheese, shredded medium-fine

In a 3-quart saucepan, bring the water and salt to a boil. Gradually stir in the grits; bring to a boil again. Cook, uncovered, over low heat, stirring often, until very thick — 25 to 30 minutes. Off heat, fold in the sour cream and the chilies.

Turn one-third of the grits into a round 2-quart casserole (8 by 2 inches); sprinkle with one third of the cheese; repeat in that order two more times. Bake uncovered in a preheated 350-degree oven until heated through and top is a pale gold color — 30 minutes. Let stand 10 to 20 minutes before serving.

Makes 8 servings.

Recipes feature Southwest cuisine

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

If you are interested in regional American cooking, "Cuisine of the American Southwest" by Anne Linsay Greer (Cuisinart Cooking Club-Harper & Row) is worth looking into. Since her college days in Arizona and California, the author says she has "loved this colorful and tasty cuisine."

Then residence in Texas and cooking for her family, plus a dozen years of giving cooking classes, confirmed her enthusiasm for the subject. And visits to nearly every large Mexican-American community in the Southwest allowed her to do a remarkable amount of research.

A large-format book, with lavish color photographs, "Cuisine of the American Southwest" has an excellent chapter on the ingredients needed for what has come to be known, according to Mrs. Greer, as Tex-Mex, Cal-Mex, Santa Fe Style and Sonora Style cooking.

There's a delightful section on Beverages. Appetizers and Snacks are here, too, as are Soups, Salads and Vegetables. Sandwiches featuring flour and corn tortillas that are folded or rolled, fried, grilled or heated in the oven, have savory fillings. Main Dishes and their Accompaniments, Breads and Pastries are treated. Recipes for desserts round out the book.

ANNE GREER'S SOUTHWEST SALAD

4 fresh beets, cooked until tender or 1 can cooked shoestring beets, drained and chilled
2 oranges
1 fresh papaya
⅓ cup pine nuts
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
Vinaigrette Dressing, see recipe
Lettuce leaves

Peel the jicama being sure to remove both the outer peel and the inner fibrous coating. Cut the jicama and the beets into matchstick size slices in a food processor or by hand.

Peel the mango or papaya and cut into strips. Peel the oranges, removing all the white membrane; section, reserving 3 tablespoons of the juice for the Vinaigrette Dressing.

Saute the pine nuts in the oil until lightly browned. Drain on paper towels. Wash and dry the lettuce and use to line a deep platter.

Make the Vinaigrette Dressing.

Arrange the salad atop the lettuce in the following manner: compose the vegetables and fruits in separate rows, sprinkle the pine nuts over the top and serve the dressing separately. Let everyone dress their own salad selection. Serves 3 to 4.

VINAIGRETTE DRESSING

In a screw top jar or in a food processor using the metal blade thoroughly combine 2 tablespoons cider vinegar, 2 tablespoons red wine vinegar, 3 tablespoons fresh orange juice, ½ cup safflower oil, 1 teaspoon sugar, ¼ to ½ teaspoon salt or to taste, ⅛ to ¼ teaspoon pure ground red chile powder or cayenne pepper.

Storm brews over coffee ads

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Surrounded by cameramen and wardrobe assistants, actress Jane Curtin is getting prepped for her "Saturday Night Live" newscast. A narrator's voice comes over the air: "You are the new American society. The movers and shakers."

Curtin reaches for a glass mug and takes a gulp. "You are the new coffee generation, because coffee lets you calm yourself down and picks you up. Coffee gives you the serenity to dream it and the vitality to do it," says the narrator.

This is not a rerun. It is not a live skit. It's an advertisement sponsored by the National Coffee Assn. and the International Coffee Organization.

And what's brewing as a result of the ad is a petition submitted to the Federal Trade Commission last week by the consumer advocacy group Center for Science in the Public Interest (CSPI) that asks the FTC to halt these claims and others like it.

PORTRAYING COFFEE AS a calming beverage, CSPI's petition said, is "a misrepresentation."

"The caffeine in coffee is a stimulant of the central nervous system and promotes anxiety, jitters and insomnia, not calmness or serenity," CSPI Director Michael Jacobson said.

The petition states that the ads are "likely to mislead reasonable consumers," because there is "evidence that many consumers are not aware that coffee consumption and central-nervous-system disorders are linked."

The petition contends that the ads fail to disclose information about those reactions, plus other health implications of coffee, such as the effect of caffeine on pregnant women. The advertising campaign also implies that people have achieved success in part because they drink coffee, states the petition.

The campaign is part of the coffee industry's effort to increase consumption of the beverage among 18- to 34-year olds, said William J. Brooks of the National Coffee Assn.

In 1962, according to statistics from the International Coffee Organization, 81 percent of the population between the ages of 20 and 29 drank coffee. In 1983, only 42 percent of people that age are coffee drinkers.

THE ADS, WHICH feature rock stars such as David Bowie and Joe Jackson, singers Ann and Nancy Wilson, Cincinnati Bengals quarterback Ken Anderson and author Kurt Vonnegut, are geared to tap that market, said Brooks.

Brooks said that the "weight of scientific evidence shows that normal coffee consumption causes none of the human health problems attributed to it by Michael Jacobson," and that calling coffee a calming beverage refers to "the coffee experience."

"If (you) ask people what they get out a coffee break, they'll tell you it's a relaxing moment that restores vitality," said Brooks.

As for portraying coffee as a drink for achievers, Brooks said, "We're not saying coffee leads to achievement. We're saying that coffee drinking is part of the life-style of achievers."

Brooks said that the stars chosen for the ads are all coffee drinkers, and that data gathered by the International Coffee Organization indicates a correlation between coffee drinking and successful people.

THE CSPI PETITION comes on the heels of a recently released memorandum that FTC commissioner Michael Pertschuk wrote to the commission concerning FTC strategy regarding food advertising.

In it, Pertschuk said that the FTC "has largely abandoned any effort to deal systematically with food and nutrition advertising," and that the commission's allegedly murky strategy and "reduced commitment could hardly be more ill-timed."

BETTER BUSINESS

Cautious investment resolutions wise

By LINDA TRUITT

This year as in the past, many people will resolve to make their lives better. Some New Year plans may make a resolution to make more from investments.

Investment fraud robs the public of an estimated $40 billion a year. Two such investment schemes were well-publicized in 1983.

One scheme involved a precious metals dealer who filed for bankruptcy after he had solicited investors throughout the U.S. for deferred delivery of gold and silver. As much as 25,000 customers are believed to have lost millions of dollars. They had been pursuaded to leave their gold with the firm; many were urged to send gold and silver bought from other sources to the company for storage or to invest more money with the firm in exchange for a monthly rebate check.

Another case involved several Florida oil and gas lease filing services who were charged with operating unregistered securities in September 1983. The services charged enormous amounts to help individuals file on parcels of federal lands available for lease by public lottery. Although the land for lease had no known oil and gas reserves, the filing companies interested investors by claiming a geologist picked the choice leases to file on. The FTC and other regulatory agencies have been investigating the high pressure sales tactics, exaggerated claims and guarantees made by some companies.

The following guidelines are offered for anyone thinking of changing an investment portfolio this year:

1. Caution should be taken when strangers make contacts by "cold" telephone calls, unannounced home visits or contacts from mailing lists. Phone calls from strangers offering get-rich-quick schemes can indicate a "boiler room" scam is on the line. Operators rent offices with impressive addresses and hire unlicensed salespeople to work phone banks by calling individuals from lists they buy. They promise fast profits and usually do not deliver.

2. Promises of extraordinary returns in short time periods should be strongly questioned. Too-good-to-be-true offers usually are too good to be true.

3. High-pressure sales techniques which require hurried-money commitments should be watched for. Some fraudulent schemes have been known to use messengers to pick up investors' checks almost as soon as they were off the phone; which was also the last contact the victims had with the companies.

4. Investments in which the seller has little or no written information about the company or written information about past performance should be avoided. Even printed materials, no matter how slickly presented, can be bogus. All materials should be read carefully and questions should be asked to the company and outside experts.

5. Buyers should be wary of investments sold on the basis of rumors, tips or supposedly "inside information."

6. The seller should be asked to provide written information about the investment, including the prospectus or offering circular and financial statement. The buyer should understand the information and seek help to understand them before he signs a purchase order to pay for an investment.

7. Competent help should be sought. A registered stock broker, banker, lawyer, accountant or real estate agent, securities administrator or the Better Business Bureau should be consulted.

8. Government agencies should be contacted to see if a company or individual is properly licensed for business or has a history of violating the law.

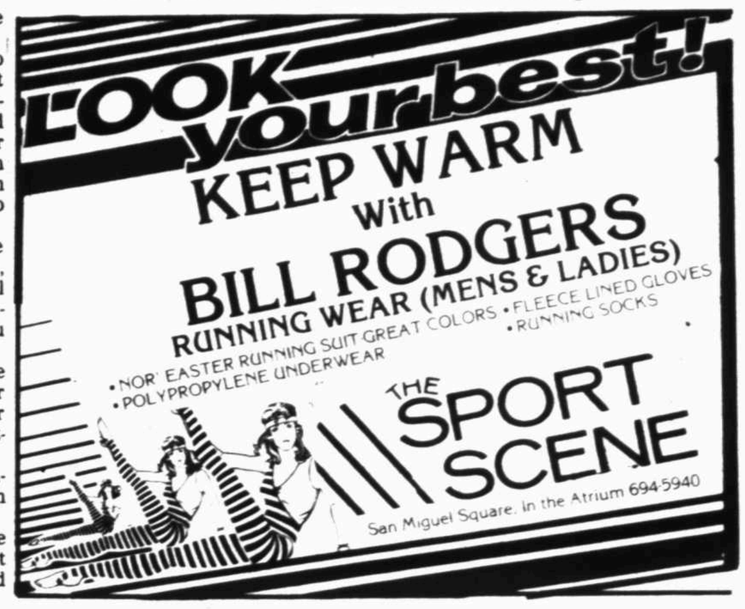

9. Dealing with established businesses whose reputations are known in the community is advised.

10. If the buyer is in doubt, he should wait. If his questions are not satisfactorily answered, he should not commit his money.

DEAR ABBY

Guests better later

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You have often dealt with the problem of guests who arrive late, but please say something about the boorishness of guests who arrive for a dinner party 15 minutes early. — IRKED HOSTESS

DEAR IRKED: Ask any hostess if she prefers to have guests arrive 15 minutes late or 15 minutes early. I think the lateniks would be more readily forgiven. The 15 minutes before guests arrive are crucial for the hostess. Considerate guests never intentionally show up early.

DEAR ABBY: I am the divorced mother of two small children. When I married eight years ago, my parents gave me a large, expensive wedding. I am being married again and refuse to let my parents give me another wedding.

My fiance has built a nice little home for us. He is not wealthy, just conservative. We're getting married in my parents' home with only immediate family members and six couples who are very close friends. After the ceremony we will all go to a small neighborhood restaurant for dinner.

I invited the guests by phone and told them all that they would be paying for their own meals. Everyone seemed to think it was OK.

I am enclosing this letter I just received from one of our "close" friends:

"Dear ( ): We regret to inform you that we cannot accept your ill-mannered invitation. To invite people to a wedding and expect them to pay for their own meals afterward shows a definite lack of class, taste, dignity and pride.

"It is really too bad that you can afford to build a brand-new house, but can't see your way clear to pick up the tab for your wedding guests. You two have some nerve! You are just plain cheap and selfish and ought to be ashamed of yourselves."

Abby, were we wrong to ask our guests to pay for their own meals? And what should we do now? — SECOND-TIME BRIDE

DEAR BRIDE: I think you went overboard trying to conserve when you asked your guests to pay for their own meals.

If it's not too late, please pay for your guests' dinners and economize somewhere else. The "close" friends who wrote that letter were cruel. A simple "no" would have sufficed.

DEAR ABBY: In response to the lady who was concerned about her husband's habit of talking to the television:

She shouldn't worry. I also talk to the television. For instance, every time I see a rerun of "The Rockford Files," and a beautiful woman comes to Jim Rockford with a sad story about why she wants to hire him as a detective, I always yell, "She's lying to you, Jim!" Does Jim listen to me? No. She hires him. Then he gets beat up by a couple of thugs who have been hiding in his trailer.

I yell at my car when it stalls at intersections. I yell at the wire coat hangers when they fall on the closet floor and get all tangled up. I yell at the door of my clothes dryer when it won't come open, and I yell at it again when it won't stay closed. I have had some very heated arguments with my home computer when it doesn't do what I want it to.

Am I crazy? I think not. It's natural to talk to inanimate objects.

I also talk to myself sometimes. Why not? I'm a fascinating conversationalist and a good listener. Sometimes I argue with myself, and there are even times when I'm not on speaking terms with myself, but I always kiss and make up. — PERFECTLY SANE

Chilly weather fitness important

By SHARON A. HILLIS

Cold, rainy winter weather can tempt even the most devoted exercisers to skip their daily walk around the block. When you skip one day, especially if you have been on an exercise program for only a short time, it just makes it that much easier to quit altogether.

People with some types of health problems such as angina or other heart conditions should stay out of the cold, but most people who exercise outdoors will find it a benefit.

Cold weather is the safest in which to exercise as long as you dress properly, because it keeps the body from overheating. For cold weather exercise wear loose clothing in layers and a cap of some sort since as much as 30 percent of body heat is lost from the head.

Regardless of the temperature brisk walking is the best exercise. If it gets too cold find an area inside to walk. Malls are a good place to walk, especially since many are almost empty during weekday mornings. If there isn't a mall nearby, try the school gym or the recreation area at your church.

If you must stay indoors try running or walking in place or even skipping rope.

Buffalo meat beats beef, store owner says

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. (AP) — Frontiersmen liked buffalo, noted food critic James Beard likes it, and Jerry Oleson Sr. likes it so much he and his family-run markets have been growing it and selling it for years.

Oleson's Food Stores owns what's billed as "the largest buffalo herd east of the Mississippi." And the 77-year-old Oleson says people who turn up their noses at the thought of downing a buffalo burger are missing out on some good eating.

In ticking off the benefits of buffalo meat, Oleson says the meat of the hairy beast is better that beef because it's leaner and richer, no one is allergic to it, it cooks in less time and has less fat.

The Oleson family, which has been running Oleson's stores in Traverse City since before the Great Depression, has been selling buffalo meat for years.

Oleson's buffalo trade got started with the store ordering sides of buffalo meat from an outfit in Oklahoma with its own herd.

But in 1956, limits were placed on individuals' orders, and that gave rise to the Oleson herd.

Originally, the stores had 20 head of buffalo. The gestation period for a buffalo, Oleson said, "is like that of a human or a cow — nine months."

But now, the company owns farms in northern Michigan that keep 500 head of buffalo in four separate herds. Buffalo work on a "harem" system, Oleson says, with one "king" bull dominating the herd. When the king is "deposed," another takes over.

The buffalo and grocery business has been and still is a family affair for Oleson. He splits duties with his two sons and his grandchildren. But lots of others are involved, too, in the business which keeps better than 200 people busy year-round.

Oleson's is also a big business, with the stores doing more than $30 million last year in groceries.

Buffalo meat is sold to the public at each of the six Oleson's stores — two in Traverse City and one each in Cadillac, Petoskey, Charlevoix and Manistee. All sorts of frozen cuts are offered — roasts, ground meat and some steaks.Buffalo meat also is shipped out.

Oleson says he has a customer in Schaumburg, Ill., who orders buffalo meat because of an allergy to beef.

According to Oleson, critic Beard, a syndicated food columnist and a noted cookbook author, once declared, "Buffalo is fantastic eating."

One of the reasons it tastes so good, Oleson contends, is that buffalo meat contains far less fat than beef, and when cooked properly, it shrinks less.

Reader requests recipe to make tangerine sherbet

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: I'd like to use fresh tangerines for a sherbet, but I lack a recipe. Can you help? — ENTERPRISING.

DEAR ENTERPRISING: Here's a recipe for Fresh Tangerine Sherbet. I'm happy you asked for it because these days light and refreshing fruit desserts are welcome at every season of the year. You can serve the sherbet as is or with vanilla ice cream — one of my favorite combinations to offer to guests. — C. B.

FRESH TANGERINE SHERBET

12 to 14 medium tangerines, cut in half crosswise
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
1 cup light corn syrup
¼ cup milk

Using a reamer, squeeze the juice from the tangerines. If necessary, use a fine-mesh strainer to remove any seeds. You will need 3 cups tangerine juice.

In a medium bowl sprinkle the gelatin over ½ cup of the tangerine juice and let soften — about 5 minutes. Heat 1½ cups of the remaining tangerine juice until it begins to boil; pour over gelatin mixture and stir until gelatin is dissolved. Stir in until blended the remaining 1 cup tangerine juice, the syrup and milk. Turn into a 9 by 9 by 2-inch pan. Cover pan with saran. Freeze until very firm — overnight if you like.

Let stand at room temperature to soften slightly — about 10 minutes. Turn into the large bowl of an electric mixer. At low speed, beat until smoothly combined but not melted. Turn into a freezer container and cover tightly. Freeze to have firm — 4 hours or longer.

Before serving, let stand briefly at room temperature to soften slightly. Offer as is or with vanilla ice cream. As a garnish, you may want to use curls or shaving of semisweet chocolate.

Makes about 1 quart.

Plum pudding rich in fruits

Hearst Feature Service

PLUM PUDDING

1 cup chopped plums
1⅓ cups raisins
1 cup currants
½ cup chopped figs
½ cup milk
½ cup each molasses and honey
2 cups dry bread crumbs
1 cup whole-wheat flour
1 tsp. each ground cinnamon, nutmeg and cloves
1 tsp. baking soda
6 tbsps. butter

Combine the plums, raisins, currants, figs, milk, molasses and honey. In a large bowl, stir together the bread crumbs and flour with the cinnamon, nutmeg, cloves and baking soda to distribute them evenly.

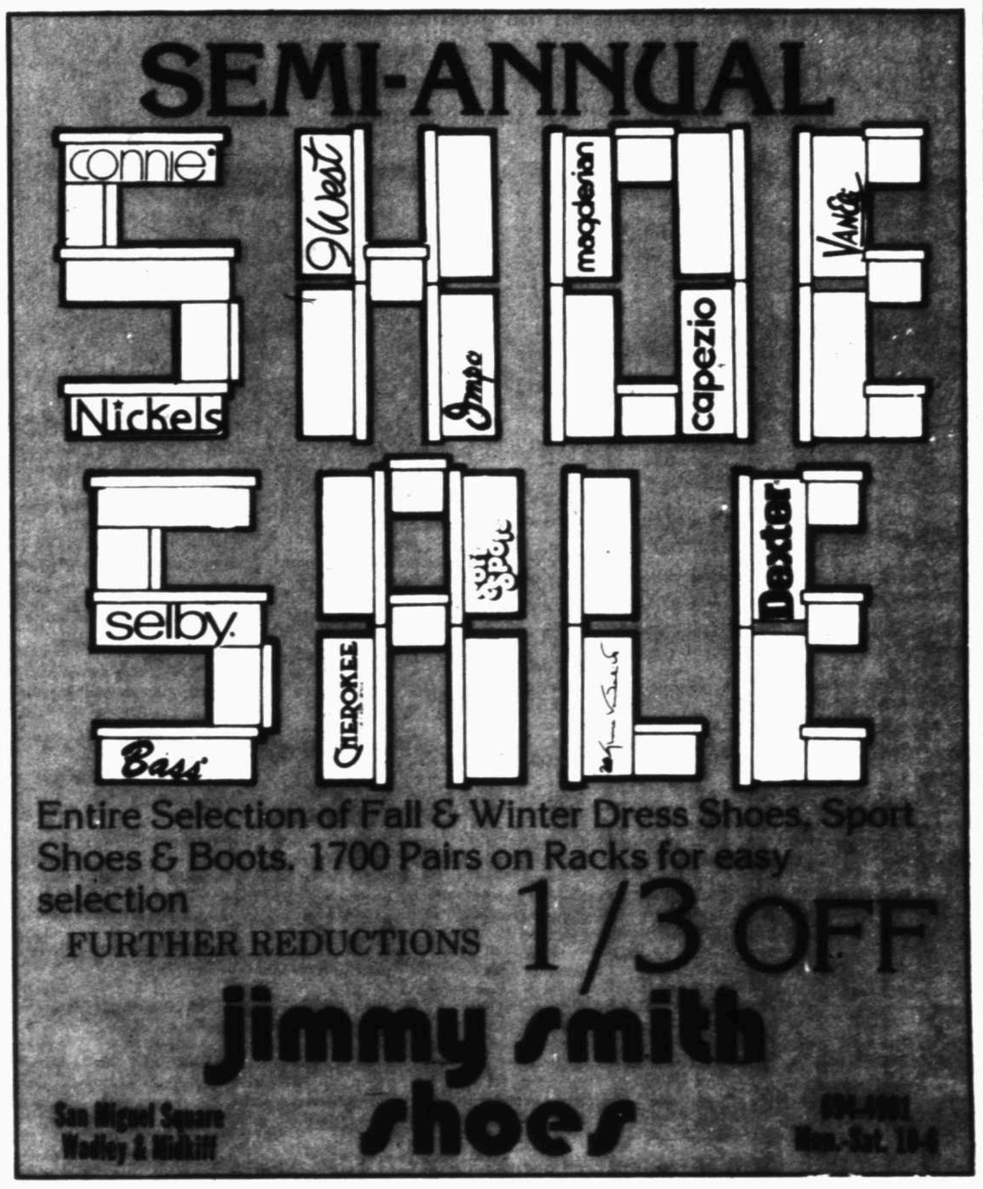

Cut in the butter until the mixture resembles coarse meal. Combine the fruit mixture with the flour mixture, blending it thoroughly. Pour the batter into a buttered 2-quart mold.

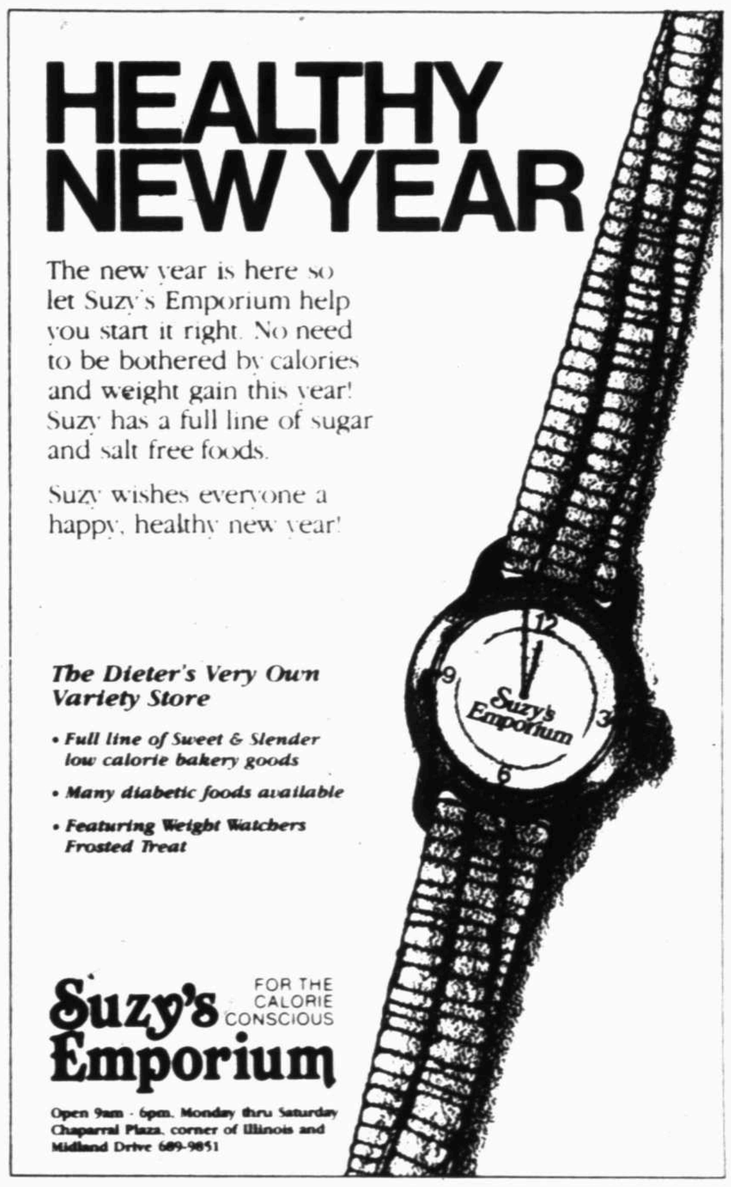

Cut foil to cover the mold, allowing an inch overhang. Brush one side of the foil with oil, and place it, oiled side down, on the pudding. Tie or seal this foil lid in place to prevent any water from getting into the pudding during steaming.

Place a trivet in a pot large enough to hold the pudding mold. Add enough water to come about halfway up the mold when it is placed on the trivet. The water should not touch the foil.

Bring the water to a boil over high heat. Reduce the heat to low and simmer the pudding for 2 hours. When done, a toothpick inserted in the pudding should come out clean.

Remove the mold from the steamer and let it cool on a wire rack for 5 minutes. Loosen the edges of the pudding and invert the pudding onto a platter. Makes 8 or more servings.

Urge to purge potentially bad

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Registered Dietitian
Copley News Service

Laxatives, who needs them? Probably 99 percent of the millions of people who take them not only do not need them, but may have actually created a dependency dysfunction of the intestinal tract for themselves.

Since castor oil was discovered and used in the earliest recorded history of the world, as long ago as 4000 B.C., the urge to purge has been with us. We have been told on every side, including today's powerful advertising in all phases of the media, that if our bowels ever miss a day, then surely a laxative is needed.

Do you believe that? Do you teach that to your children? If you do, you may, like millions of others, be doing the wrong thing.

The abuse of laxatives is far more dangerous than we used to think. Today, the near-epidemic of especially young women who use them to expel food before it can be digested properly in an effort to stay thin, is creating a severe health problem. The development of such eating disorders as bulimia and anorexia may be triggered by such practices, and indeed, life itself can be endangered if these disorders are allowed to progress.

Laxative-taking is habit that engulfs huge numbers of older people who may have developed it early in life, and now think that they cannot function without it. A daily laxative may be taken right along with their daily vitamin pills as a regular routine with no idea that they may not need them, nor do they give themselves a chance to find out.

Are these good health practices to ensure a daily movement by artificial means? What would happen if they skipped a day. Nothing, in fact many normal healthy people have varying intestinal functions and certainly every one is not alike. There is no need for panic, and usually no need for strong laxatives.

Artificial laxatives really are needed only if the doctor has diagnosed a medical problem that requires them, and not just to adhere to the edict of the daily performance.

Changes in the diet have great impact upon the function of the intestinal tract, and nature has provided us well with natural laxatives in food. They are effective, safe and do not cause dysfunction nor dependency as one finds with artificial products. What are they? The foods that provide fiber and fluids?

Water is one of the best anti-constipation measures, along with bran, fruits and vegetables and whole grains. Skins and edible seeds are excellent sources of fiber along with a variety of unrefined cereal grains.

What sense does it make to eat stripped-down, over-refined foods and then have to take artificial laxatives? None.

In some people, simply increasing the amount of fluids taken during the day, is enough to correct that overworked, overheated term "irregularity." By developing new habits in the diet to include at least a quart of water daily, in addition to other fluids, and adding some plain bran, the old laxative taking habit can be broken. Is that better for you? You bet, because it's non-dependent, less irritating and even less expensive.

Huge companies that manufacture laxatives by the billions are going to keep spending huge amounts of money to keep telling you to worry about your irregularity and if you will only take their products, you will become "regular," whatever that is.

Relaxation is another aid we can all take to help us have a better functioning intestinal tract. Tension and stress take their toll on the entire body, and some people react strongly in both the small and large intestine functions. Constipation and/or diarrhea are not uncommon conditions when people are under stress.

In the small intestine, nutrients may not be properly absorbed and utilized if irritating and strong laxatives are added to an already stressful situation. The large intestine may react by over or under function during stress, and if it is irritated and pressed to perform on a certain schedule by artificial means the problems can be made worse.

Laxatives should never be taken to control weight by anyone and especially not by teenage girls who have horror of being overweight.

If you have been on the laxative treadmill and think you cannot function without them, give yourself a chance to get off. Relax and forget the old compulsion of function each and every day. It's not bad to skip sometimes, as your diet may often cause. Drink plenty of fluids and add bran to your cereals and salads, and don't take laxatives just to be "sure."

Nancy Reagan has 'strange feeling' at hospital where her father died

Reagan

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — First lady Nancy Reagan, accepting a plaque at a new hospital suite named in honor of her mother and her late father, said it was a "strange feeling" to be among the people with whom he spent his last days.

Mrs. Reagan attended the dedication Tuesday of the Edith and Loyal Davis Surgical Suite at the $24 million Scottsdale Memorial Hospital-North, and accepted the plaque on behalf of her ailing mother.

During the ceremony, Mrs. Reagan thanked the Scottsdale Memorial Hospital staff for the care her father, a Phoenix resident, received before he died at age 86 in August 1982.

Davis served more than 30 years as chairman of surgery and neurosurgery at Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill.

The plaque noted the contributions of both of Mrs. Reagan's parents to medical excellence.

"Nothing would have pleased my father more than having your wonderful surgical suite named after him and my mother," she said.

Kelly

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Song-and-dance man Gene Kelly has rented a house while he decides whether to buy another place or rebuild the farmhouse-style residence destroyed by fire Dec. 22.

The dollar loss from the fire in Kelly's home of 40 years, ignited by lights on a Christmas tree, has yet to be determined, said publicist Dale Olson on Tuesday.

"I'm sure it's in excess of $1 million," he said.

Kelly, 71, is waiting for the insurance to be settled before making up his mind about whether to rebuild, Olson said. Meanwhile, he's moved into a rental house in Beverly Hills.

LONDON (AP) — Former Trade Secretary Cecil Parkinson has issued a statement saying he wishes the baby born to his ex-mistress "peace, privacy, and a happy life."

Word of the birth came through a statement released by an attorney representing Sara Keays, 36, who had the baby on New Year's Eve.

The child, named Flora Elisabeth, weighed 8 pounds, 3 ounces, and both mother and daughter are in good health, said lawyer Alan Hughes Tuesday night.

Parkinson, 52, who has acknowledged he is the baby's father, was one of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's closest aides before he lost his Cabinet post when news of his relationship with Miss Keays, his former secretary, became public last year.

Barry

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Gene Barry, starring in the Broadway smash "La Cage Aux Folles," and a business partner have been ordered to pay a former partner over $500,000.

Barry, 61, Michael Rafton, a San Francisco area lawyer and banker, and Harold Taines, described in court papers as a millionaire investor who lives in Beverly Hills, set up a photo-processing business in December 1980.

But Taines was forced out by Barry and Rafton in August 1981, according to Taines's lawyer, Jay F. Gordon.

'Return of the Jedi' zaps competition

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "Return of the Jedi," still zapping the motion picture universe eight months after its release, made more megabucks at the box office this past weekend to finish 1983 light years ahead of the Earth-bound movie pack.

The final episode in George Lucas' "Star Wars" trilogy collected $1.8 million nationwide from Friday through Monday, to boost its 223-day total to a staggering $249.3 million, Lucasfilm spokesman Sid Ganis said Tuesday.

The New Year's weekend showing for "Jedi" was far behind some newer kids on the block, such as the $9.1 million taken in by the Shirley MacLaine-Debra Winger drama, "Terms of Endearment," or the $7.7 million attracted by Clint Eastwood's "Sudden Impact," but those movies are likely to be distant memories eight months from now.

"Jedi" even eclipsed its immediate predecessor, "The Empire Strikes Back," released in 1980.

"It certainly beats 'Empire' both in terms of gross and film rentals, and is slightly below what 'Star Wars' (1977) did first time around in film rentals," Ganis said.

"Jedi" U.S.-Canadian film rentals — the amount returned to Lucasfilm and distributor 20th Century-Fox after theater owners have taken their share — totaled about $162.5 million, Ganis said.

In terms of rentals, "Jedi" has moved into the exclusive neighborhood of "Star Wars" and "E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial," the two most successful movies of all time.

U.S.-Canadian rentals for "Star Wars" were around $200 million, while "E.T." rentals were in the range of $210 million.

Second in the 1983 box office race was "Tootsie," which starred Dustin Hoffman playing a man pretending to be a woman. That movie, which was released in December 1982, collected $177.2 million, Columbia Pictures spokesman John Flinn said.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Pregnancy not time to try to lose weight

Dear Dr. Solomon: If a woman watches her weight when she is pregnant so that she only gains a few pounds, wouldn't she have lost weight after she gives birth as compared with what she weighed before she became pregnant? If a woman is motivated enough, this might be a good time to go on the long-postponed diet. — Vicky, La Grande, Ore.

Dear Vicky: Pregnancy is not the time for a woman to go on a weight-reducing diet. The best time for a woman to work towards a desirable weight is before she becomes pregnant. Even among obese women who become pregnant there are indications that some weight gain is desirable.

In general, a woman should gain from 22 to 26 pounds during pregnancy. A woman who attempts to lose weight during pregnancy is cheating both herself and her baby.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My brother is being treated for alcoholism, and one of his problems is that he is malnourished. I don't understand this because eating has never been a problem for him and actually he could afford to lose some weight. Why would the fact that a person drinks too much cause him to become malnourished if he makes it a point of having a good diet? — Jerry, Coatesville, Pa.

Dear Jerry: Many alcoholics have a less than adequate diet since alcohol, which is high in energy, displaces other foods that they might ordinarily consume. Moreover, excessive drinking may lead to malnutrition by interfering with the way food is digested and absorbed. Malnutrition, in turn, may then affect the liver.

An alcoholic who believes that he or she can avoid liver damage simply by adhering to a sound diet is bound for a rude awakening.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I often hear about how important it is to get enough fluids, but no one ever says how much is enough. I think I get as much as I need, but I can't be sure. How much fluid should the average, healthy adult get every day? — Bruce, Indianapolis, Ind.

Dear Bruce: According to Dr. Edward J. Kowalewski, of the University of Maryland School of Medicine in Baltimore, a normal adult should have about three quarts of fluid a day. A lack of fluids can lead to health problems, and this may be particularly true of older people.

Dr. Kowalewski advises that it is best to drink water after meals rather than during meals, or at least to chew food thoroughly and drink water only after the food is swallowed. If this practice is not followed, the food will be washed down without being exposed to the digestive enzymes that are present in the saliva.

Dear Dr. Solomon: You have written that alcohol tends to decrease a man's sexual ability. Is this true of all drugs? — Morris, Morganton, No. C.

Dear Morris: According to Dr. Sidney H. Schnoll, of Northwestern University Medical School in Chicago, almost all drugs of abuse decrease sexual performance and can even result in impotence or other forms of sexual dysfunction.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am 38 years old and have been on the pill for a good while. A friend of mine tells me that her doctor advised her to stop taking the pill when she was about my age. Do other doctors recommend that women go off the pill at a certain time? — Mrs. H.C., Lexington, Ky.

Dear Mrs. C.: Dr. Richard Hinkle, of the Geisinger Medical Center in Danville, Pa. recommends that women in their late thirties consider methods of contraception other than the pill. He adds that this holds true particularly for women who smoke cigarettes.

For Millie, Newark, N.J.: I would agree that the treatment of drug addiction is often a long and difficult process, but I do not agree that it is a hopeless one. If you feel you have sufficient influence to get a person into treatment, I would urge you to do so.

For Thelma, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.: There is some evidence, although it is not conclusive, that cigarette smoking may enhance the excretion of calcium from the body and, therefore, play a role in the development of osteoporosis (bone loss).

'Do-nothing' bill drafted

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Although he is still in his freshman term as a lawmaker, state Sen. James Pappas thinks he has found a "bill for all sessions."

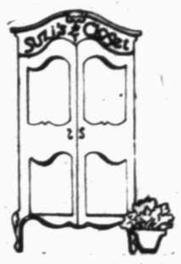

"All I've heard since I came here is that people say we introduce too many bills, we don't help anybody, we don't do anything, and everything we try to do gets screwed up some way," Pappas said.

In that spirit, Pappas said, he has drafted a "do-nothing" bill for the 1984 Legislature.

According to a draft of the legislation, "the Do Nothing Bill will not intend anything, define anything, provide any powers or duties, provide for fees or penalties, it will not declare any emergencies, repeal any statutes or cost any funds."

There's even a section that says:

"Any action taken under the Do Nothing Bill will violate the letter as well as the spirit of the bill."

Petitions prove to be powerful tool

DALLAS (AP) — Political science experts say that a rash of referendums in Dallas suburbs last year mirrors a national trend in which voters have successfully battled city hall.

Residents of Dallas suburbs from Carrollton to Duncanville circulated petitions and forced elections during 1983 on topics ranging from park land to police wages, as city officials faced an onslaught of populist policy-making.

Petitioners said that in every case, the referendums were forced as a last resort when city councils proved unresponsive to calls for change.

The power of petition has allowed grass-roots activists across the country to become an unpredictable tool of power that could continue to gain force this year, said political science experts.

Richard Hose, a leader in a recent Carrollton referendum, called the rise of referendums a "domino effect."

"Residents in communities see what others have done through referendum and think they should take that route, too," Hose told the Dallas Times Herald.

But political science experts said that activists who got what they wanted through referendum may become hooked on the process and rely on it every time city representatives make an unpopular decision.

They said that dependency could steal power from city officials and turn the municipal law-making process into an endless cycle of slick and expensive campaigns in favor of or opposed to a particular issue.

But local politicians contend that referendums can allow a minority of a city's residents who come to the polls for special elections to make decisions.

In most cities, groups must collect signatures equal in number to 10 percent or 25 percent of residents who voted in the last city election.

"That's particularly dangerous in cities like Garland, where you have 60,000 voters and a maximum of 5,000 show up for a typical mayoral election," said Garland city councilman L.D. Carpenter. "That means that during a referendum about 2,000 people vote."

In 1983, seven of Dallas' 18 largest suburbs either held referendums demanded by residents or scheduled an election for this month.

— Carrollton residents opposed to proposed State Highway 190 petitioned for an election on the issue and voted last year to force the city council to withdraw support for the highway.

— In Mesquite, police and their supporters demanded a referendum and voted to force city officials to hire more police officers for the rapidly growing city.

— Rowlett citizens made city officials hold an election to roll back taxes.

— Residents of Grand Prairie forced a vote to decide whether police there should have collective bargaining rights. The issue was rejected in April at the polls.

— In Farmers Branch, residents petitioned and voted to make city officials buy a tract of land that a developer had wanted to turn into a public housing development and instead dedicate it as a city park site.

Leaning Tower of Pisa not about to topple

PISA, Italy (AP) — The Leaning Tower of Pisa is tilting a little more but is "in good shape" and not about to topple, according to an annual maintenance report.

Professor Giuseppe Toniolo said experts had determined that the landmark leaned a little more — 0.05 inches to be precise. But there is no need for alarm.

Publication keeps tabs on young students' opinions

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. (AP) — Weekly Reader could become the George Gallup of the grade-school set.

With twice-yearly polls, the publication read by about one-third of the nation's elementary school students plans to keep its finger on the pulse of young America — beginning with a survey on citizenship.

"The question of what the perception of our future voters is of our government is very important," Lynell Johnson, editorial director of Weekly Reader, said.

"That can tell us what is happening in our country," he said. "After all, they're the future."

Polls are not new to Weekly Reader, but they have never before been a regular feature.

Every presidential election year, the publication runs a poll and has found that "the kids have predicted the winner every year since this process started about 20 years ago," except when they chose Robert F. Kennedy in 1968, shortly before he was killed, Johnson said.

Last spring, the newspaper surveyed fourth-, fifth- and sixth-grade readers while its affiliate publications polled junior high school students on their attitudes and knowledge of drug and alcohol abuse. The 500,000 responses have helped educators and others develop alcohol and drug programs for students, he said.

The citizenship survey will run the last week in January in editions read by students in second through sixth grade and in the junior high school publications, he said. Teachers will tally the results.

Students will be asked a range of questions on their feelings about patriotism and the country's leadership and handling of problems like crime, pollution and protection of rights, Johnson said.

Since 1984 is a presidential election year, the fall survey will be on the election. In the following three years, two polls each year will be conducted, sampling students' opinions on different topics. Then the topics will be repeated, to see how students' opinions have changed over the years.

Weekly Reader, published by Xerox Education Publications, reaches about 7 million elementary school students.

Mayor's killer faces hardships after release

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Dan White, the man who killed San Francisco's mayor and a supervisor five years ago, becomes a free man Friday — but may find it harder to find a peaceful life with his family than it was to win parole.

In California, public anger still simmers over White's voluntary manslaughter conviction and the brevity of his sentence for the Nov. 27, 1978, slayings in City Hall of Mayor George Moscone and Supervisor Harvey Milk.

"As in any case that has drawn great public attention," there are difficulties deciding where to parole White, said Phil Guthrie of the Department of Corrections. "The rule in most routine cases is they return to the county they came from. In a notorious case, that's something we don't do."

White, 37, will have served about five years of his sentence of seven years, eight months — the statutory maximum for voluntary manslaughter — when he leaves Soledad Correctional Training Facility. His parole probably will last a year, and then he will be discharged, Guthrie said.

"Dan White is arguably one of the more successful political assassins in the history of violent America," San Francisco writer Warren Hinckle said in California magazine, "and he is without question the luckiest."

It's another question how long that luck will last for White, a professed believer in the American dream who friends and physicians say became overwhelmed by his political and personal battles.

Earlier this month, San Diego Mayor Roger Hedgecock asked the Department of Corrections to withdraw his city as a possible parole site, noting "considerable negative comment from groups who strongly support human rights and...very threatening letters."

Even some cities that haven't been contacted such as the San Francisco suburb of Richmond, don't want White living in their midst.

"He seems to have a penchant for killing elected officials he doesn't agree with," said Richmond City Council member James McMillan.

The manslaughter verdict and sentence touched off what came to be known as the "White Night" riots. More than 5,000 people — mostly homosexuals angered because one of the victims, Milk, was gay — stormed City Hall. At least 160 people were hurt in the melee, which caused $1 million damage.

Last year, the Justice Department decided not to prosecute White on federal charges of violating his victims' civil rights, despite petitions, letters and pleas from Gov. George Deukmejian, Mayor Dianne Feinstein and several California representatives.

The department's written opinion sympathized with efforts to keep White in prison and condemned his crimes as "heinous acts," but said there was "manifestly insufficient" evidence to link the killings with campaign activities protected under the law.

The department blamed state courts for the light sentence, saying, "There is little doubt that the criminal justice system in California failed to hold Dan White adequately responsible for his actions."

White — a former Army paratrooper, firefighter and police officer — won his bid for a seat on the Board of Supervisors in November 1977 on a law-and-order platform. But he resigned on Nov. 10, 1978, saying the $9,600 annual salary left him unable to support his wife and infant son.

Less than two weeks later, with assurances of financial help from his 16 brothers and sisters, White asked for his seat back. Moscone first agreed, but changed his mind as potential candidates surfaced and opposition grew from anti-White factions — including Milk, an avowed homosexual who often opposed White on many issues.

On Nov. 27, an hour before Moscone was to appoint someone else to his seat, White strapped on his .38-caliber, climbed through a basement window at City Hall to avoid metal detectors, confronted Moscone and shot him four times in the head. He reloaded and shot Milk five times in the head.

White turned himself within hours and taped a tearful but remorseless confession.

"I've always been honest and worked hard, never cheated anybody...I'm not a crook or anything and I wanted to do a good job...I was just a lonely vote on the board and trying to be honest and I just couldn't take it anymore," White sobbed.

Woman may not have been wearing her safety belt

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — A woman killed at Disneyland when she fell off the Matterhorn bobsled ride and was struck by another sled may not have been wearing her seat belt, officials say.

Dolly Regina Young, 48, of Fremont, Calif., had the belt on when the ride began, a park spokesman said. But police Detective David Tuttle said the belt was open when he saw the bobsled at the accident scene.

Ms. Young died at about 3 p.m. Tuesday when she fell off the ride, was hit by the other sled and was trapped underneath it, said Disneyland spokeswoman Laure Dike.

She was pronounced dead at the scene, becoming the seventh fatality at the park, which has hosted more than 230 million visitors in more than 28 years of operation, Ms. Dike said.

Officials said Ms. Young was visiting the park with five friends from Tempe, Ariz., who shared the bobsled with her.

Disneyland publicity supervisor Al Flores said none of her friends saw what happened because she was seated alone in the rear seat of the sled.

The 90-second bobsled ride, attaining speeds of 28 mph, shut down automatically about 30 seconds after the accident, Flores said.

He said the park's "routine, standard operating procedure" is to check passengers twice to make sure seat belts are securely fastened before the twin 1,000-pound sleds, which hold four passengers each, roar around the man-made Matterhorn as on a roller-coaster.

The passengers are required to wear the 3-inch, nylon-mesh belts — which lock at the buckle — and the belts are checked when passengers get into the sleds and again when the cars are dispatched, Flores said.

He said maintenance workers determined that there was no malfunction of the ride and that the seat belt's moorings had not come loose.

Disneyland officials said the death was the second on the Matterhorn roller coaster ride, which winds through a make-believe snow-capped mountain that is one of the park's most visible and popular attractions.

Ms. Dike said the ride will remain closed indefinitely until an investigation is completed.
