Another Soviet ship docks in Nicaragua

By CARL MANNING
Associated Press Writer

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — A Soviet ship reportedly docked on Saturday at the port where, three days earlier, a Soviet freighter berthed carrying what the Reagan administration had suspected were MiG fighter jets.

Sources in Corinto, who spoke on condition they not be named, told The Associated Press by telephone that a second ship, bearing a Soviet flag and called the Ekliptika, arrived at the port, on Nicaragua's Pacific coast, on Saturday afternoon.

An official at the Port Authority called the vessel a "very big fishing boat." The reports could not be confirmed independently.

The leftist Sandinista government announced it was preparing for an invasion after the Reagan administration last week warned Nicaragua against receiving arms from the Soviet Union.

However, a White House official, who spoke on Friday on condition of anonymity, conceded that the administration lacked proof that the Bakuriani, the Soviet ship that docked on Wednesday, was carrying MiG jetfighters.

A source in Managua on Friday that the Bakuriani might have delivered one or two Mi8 helicopters and possibly one Mi24 helicopter. The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, also had said a second Soviet ship was in the vicinity of Corinto, but he said on Saturday that report was incorrect.

It was not immediately clear if the sources in Corinto and Managua were referring to the same ship when they spoke of a second vessel.

The Managua source also said that a Bulgarian freighter, with helicopters aboard, had also been in the Caribbean port of El Bluff last week. The government has closed that port to journalists.

The Sandinistas and the Soviets have said no MiGs have been shipped, but both countries said Nicaragua has the right to receive them.

To prepare for the alleged imminent invasion, the Nicaraguan government said it would begin on Saturday to issue rifles and train students in defense tactics.

But a tour of the city at mid-morning revealed no training sessions at any of the various militia drill grounds scattered throughout the capital.

The plans apparently were postponed until Monday, according to some members of the Sandinista Youth Organizaton. No official announcement about the postponement was made, and at several schools, students were signing up for defense forces.

In its Sunday editions, The New York Times quoted unidentified senior Reagan administration officials as saying the United States is considering intensifying military and diplomatic pressures on the government of Nicaragua because of concerns that more weapons are arriving from the Soviet bloc.

The moves being discussed at high levels of the government include the recall of the United States ambassador to Nicaragua, the Navy's interdiction at sea of arms shipments to Nicaragua, an increase in the frequency and size of U.S. military maneuvers in Central America and resumption of aid to Nicaraguan rebels, the Times said.

The proposals, meant to intimidate the Nicaraguan government without using direct military force in the Central American nation, could range from shadowing ships and harassing them to a full naval quarantine.

In Managua on Saturday, the coordinator of the Sandinista junta, Daniel Ortega, reiterated allegations that U.S. spy planes had violated Nicaraguan airspace last week. He was delivering another invasion warning to reporters when a noise like a sonic boom rattled windows in the capital.

Sandinista officials have said that three previous, similar booms — the first on Oct. 31 and the other two on Nov. 8 and 9 — were caused by U.S. spy planes breaking the sound barrier over Nicaragua.

Ortega was talking to reporters about the alleged spy planes when a boom interrupted his remarks.

McFarlane: Arms talks 'passion' of president

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — Before the election, Robert C. McFarlane, the low-key former Marine colonel who is President Reagan's national security adviser, insisted that reaching an arms control agreement with the Soviet Union was the "passion and preoccupation" of the chief executive.

In the few days since Reagan's landslide re-election, there are indications the president intends to make a resumption of the stalled talks with the Soviets a top priority in his second term. It remains unclear, however, how passionately he will pursue an agreement.

He has ruled out any concessions to woo the Soviets back to the bargaining table. Nor will he reverse the installation of U.S. missiles in Western Europe — which the Soviets have demanded as a precondition for resuming talks.

In addition, some of his advisers have already concluded that not all nuclear weapons can be restricted through negotiations because the means of making sure an agreement is observed are inadequate.

Still, McFarlane and other presidential advisers are preparing a number of proposals for Reagan's consideration that might help end the breakdown in U.S.-Soviet efforts to curb the nuclear arms race.

These include the appointment of a special U.S. arms control envoy and sounding out Moscow on a possible summit meeting between Reagan and Soviet President Konstantin U. Chernenko.

For their part, the Soviets are showing interest in the "umbrella" format Reagan suggested at the United Nations in September as a way to get the talks back on track.

In private discussions here and in Moscow, a number of Soviet officials, including Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko and Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin, have asked how the formula would be implemented.

They are being told the most likely way is to have Secretary of State George P. Shultz, accompanied by a newly appointed arms control specialist, meet with Gromyko to break the impasse.

The missiles that were on the table in Geneva, Switzerland, before the suspension late last year, as well as space and anti-satellite weapons would be included within this one bargaining framework.

Negotiators would take over after Shultz and Gromyko decided on a basic approach. Presumably, this would make it easier for the Soviets to reopen talks even though the U.S. Pershing 2 and cruise missiles remained in Britain, Italy and West Germany.

"They (the Soviets) said, 'Oh, that's interesting.' They did not comment. They did not reach any conclusion," said an administration official in Santa Barbara, Calif., where McFarlane and others are mapping strategy for Reagan's second term. "But the point is they are thinking about it and without bombast."

In Washington, another knowledgeable U.S. official, who insisted on anonymity, said the Soviets "continue to emphasize substance over procedure" — appearing more concerned about the positions taken by the two sides on reducing nuclear weapons than about how the talks might be resumed.

"When we say they are interested in it, we mean they are asking questions," the official said. "It remains to be seen whether they want to pursue it."

The official said Dobrynin questioned Shultz about the format during a meeting here Oct. 26 and that Gromyko returned to the subject in conferring in Moscow five days later with U.S. Ambassador Arthur A. Hartman. Lower-level U.S. and Soviet officials also have discussed the proposal, he said.

Reagan, of course, will have the final word on how the United States will proceed in dealing with Moscow in his second term.

No agreement was reached during Reagan's first four years in office, although he authorized revisions in his initial treaty proposals. He also attacked the Soviet system as a "Mickey Mouse" operation and as "the focus of evil."

Father Frank Colacicco of Stanton hopes to convert an old convent into a home for sexually abused boys. The structure has served many purposes.

Priest seeks 'another life' for old convent in Stanton

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

The old convent in Stanton has had many lives as a monastery, convent, school, private residence and even a "fun house." If a Stanton priest gets his way, the rundown "house on the hill" may have yet another use — as a home for sexually abused boys.

The new plan to house sexually abused children and rehabilitate them is the dream of Father Frank Colacicco, the priest at St. Joseph's Catholic Church in Stanton.

"I'm planning on opening it next June or July," said Colacicco.

His idea is far from the finishing stages, however. He has not yet acquired the property, the funds to support the project or even the approval of his bishop.

"I STRESS the word 'pending,'" said Colacicco when discussing his plans.

"It is in God's hands."

The 54-year-old Italian-American from San Francisco has been a priest for five years. Prior to studying in Rome, he was employed in the San Francisco area as a hospital nurse for 12 years and later worked with elderly patients.

Council takes personal look at problems

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Identifying problems and finding ways to solve them has been the major thrust of a retreat the City Council and city staff members take each fall. But this year they reached beyond that and delved into the dark recesses of each person's background in learning how to deal better with each other.

The end result, they hope, will be an improved understanding of the perspective of where others are coming from in their decisions, especially in constroversial situations, rather than closing the mind to coworkers' ideas.

The continual problems of street maintenance and future water supply made it to the list of top priorities. Added were updating data processing, addressing employee morale and reorganizing the Municipal Court, according to Mayor G. Thane Akins.

But it was the psychological training that may unlock the door to communication between and among the employees and council.

Using Lyle Sumek, a consultant from Boulder, Colo., who does consulting work with municipal management persons, the Midland group began to explore how they think and react.

"THE CONSULTANT brought out a lot of things by testing each one of us," Akins said. "Each generation is a little different" and looks at issues in a varying manner. The mayor jokingly said he was placed in a category by himself — "radical right."

"This generation theory contributes to the positions the council takes. The work ethic for someone brought up in the Depression is different than for someone brought up in the '60s," he said. "There are differences in what people think are important on a job. And that affects how you deal with people.

"Regardless of your value system, it doesn't mean others are wrong. You have to have a tolerance for the way people operate," he added.

The mayor recalled that he and Councilman David Godfrey were judged to be the most analytical; Bart Hotchkiss fell next in line on analytical; Steve Davidson and Jesse Hatfield tend to operate more on intuition and past experiences; and Gordon Marcum II turned out to be the most flexible.

The city is a service organization, according to the mayor, and this ability to deal with others based on understanding the person's background should help, according to Akins. It also may help on one of the major priorities — employee morale. "It's important that you have a good feeling among employees in order to get the team concept to work."

THE CITY COUNCIL will consider adopting a Statement of Policy at its Tuesday meeting. This would set out in writing the attitude that city employees should have in dealing with the public, said Akins. And it would include productivity, teamwork and goal-setting.

Judge sets February date to examine prison overcrowding

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge has set a Feb. 4 hearing date to examine overcrowding in Texas prisons, the last major issue remaining in a 10-year-old prison reform case.

U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice, who in 1981 ordered massive reforms in the state prison system, scheduled the hearing on Friday to determine whether the number of inmates housed in Texas prisons is unconstitutional.

Texas Department of Corrections facilities hold more than 36,000 prisoners, about 120 of whom live in temporary housing at the diagnostic unit in Huntsville. In 1982, the state's inmates totaled 38,000, forcing TDC to house some in tents and turn away new prisoners.

"The prisons are choking with prisoners," said Donna Brorby, an attorney for the inmates who are plaintiffs in the case. "TDC prisons are human warehouses filled to the gills, and the human cargo is being destroyed.

STATE

"People are getting stabbed and raped," Ms. Brorby added. "The day rooms, infirmaries, dining halls and showers are full. The plumbing isn't working. It's a theater of the absurd."

Twenty-one inmates have been killed in TDC facilties so far this year and another 344 were stabbed, according to state prison records.

In 1981, Justice ordered TDC to eliminate two-man cells by November 1983. He also demanded the prison system provide 60 square feet of space to inmates housed in dormitories.

But in June 1982, the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals altered Justice's order and said the judge should wait a year to determine the effect of other court-ordered reforms.

Justice set a hearing on the overcrowding problem last year, but postponed it at the state's request so TDC could begin an experimental program at the Ellis and Coffield Units. Under the experiment, prisoners are released from their cells to work or exercise all day.

But Ms. Brorby said the experimental program has failed, partly because indoor recreation areas are inadequate.

Stormie Jones visits hospital for fund-raiser

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Seven-year-old Stormie Jones, reunited with the surgeons who gave her the world's first simultaneous heart and liver transplant, joined other recuperating youngsters at a party Saturday to celebrate a research fund drive at Children's Hospital.

"It's almost like being home," Lois Jones said as she watched her youngest daughter talk to reporters.

Stormie smiled shyly and turned toward her mother after blowing out 25 candles on a brightly decorated cake with the help of Dr. Thomas Starzl and Dr. Henry Bahnson, who performed the landmark operation at the hospital Feb. 14.

The brown-eyed blonde admitted quietly that she'd made a wish but refused to divulge it.

"I ain't telling," she said.

Her mother was less secretive. "She knew what she was basically here for. And she told me her wish would be for the (hospital's) research campaign to make a lot of money," said Mrs. Jones, 28.

Stormie had looked forward to her first visit to Pittsburgh since returning home to Cumby, Texas, in the spring, Mrs. Jones said. The girl was eager to see her doctors and friends at the hospital, especially Starzl, a liver transplant pioneer.

"She was all bubbly and excited about seeing Dr. Starzl. And then when she saw him, she didn't know what to say. She just said, 'Hello,'" Mrs. Jones said.

Both Starzl and Bahnson, a heart transplant surgeon, said they're impressed by Stormie's progress since the surgery.

"She's 10 on a scale of 10," Starzl said.

The doctors aren't as optimistic, however, about a 2-year-old Alabama girl who on Friday became the world's second person to undergo the double transplant.

Kellie Cochran of Birmingham, Ala., was in critical condition at the hospital after the 13-hour operation. She was breathing with the aid of a respirator, and doctors were considering using a mechanical device to assist her new heart.

"She's not doing as well at this stage as Stormie was," Starzl said.

Despite the seriousness of her own daughter's condition, Kellie's mother said she's grateful for Stormie's success.

"I'm very thankful for Stormie. If it hadn't been for her, I don't think Kellie's operation would be possible," Judy Cochran said.

Stormie, her 10-year-old sister Misty and their mother flew to Pittsburgh on Friday to attend the party marking the hospital's Research Week, part of a campaign to raise $10 million for research.

Twenty-five youngsters, all recovering from cancer and other serious illnesses, also were invited.

Stormie, Misty and the other children studied mineral samples and chipped fossil replicas out of plaster casts before eating a lunch of hamburgers, hot dogs, ice cream and cake.

"Each one of these children in their own particular way have benefited from research at Children's Hospital," said Dr. William Donaldson, the hospital's medical director.

Mrs. Jones, who's turned down "a lot" of public appearances on her daughter's behalf, said she agreed immediately to return to Pittsburgh for the party.

"Without research, Stormie wouldn't be here today," she said. "Stormie's been fantastic. I can't complain at all. We all feel very fortunate."

Aggies tackle ants, roaches

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M University will set up a $1 million endowment to study pest control in homes and businesses, a school spokesman said Saturday.

The Texas Pest Control Association has offered the university $500,000 in pledges to be matched by the school for an Endowed Chair for Structural Pest Control Studies, said Texas A&M spokesman Lane Stephenson.

The association, whose members include pest control businesses throughout the state, will pay the funds to the university over the next three years, Stephenson said.

"This is part of an overall program we have to attract nationally and internationally known faculty members," Stephenson said.

The researcher appointed to the post will study ways to control insects such as termites, ants and cockroaches that plague homes and businesses, Stephenson said.

"This will enable Texas A&M to seek out one of the best persons in the country to come in and head this study that will have a positive impact on the lives of millions of people," he said.

The endowed chair will be part of the entomology department in Texas A&M's College of Agriculture.

WEATHER SUMMARY

National Weather Service NOAA U.S. Dept. of Commerce

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts showers today for the Northeast, Northwest and parts of Florida.

Gradual warming expected Monday

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midland should experience fair temperature readings through today and tonight and see a gradual warming trend by Monday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The forecast calls for fair and warmer today with highs in the upper 60. Winds will be southerly 5-15 mph. Tonight will be fair and warmer with the low near 40. Southerly winds will be light and variable. Monday calls for fair and warmer temperatures with highs in the upper 70s.

Saturday's high of 60 was 15 degrees below the record 85 set in 1964. The record low of 16 set in 1950 was 20 degree lower than Saturday's low of 36.

STATE

Cooler and much drier air pushed into the state Saturday, bringing gusty winds and temperatures in the 60s in most areas.

Afternoon temperatures were in the 50s in the Panhandle and also in the mountains of far West Texas and in the 60s over the remainder of the state. Along the coast, temperatures were in the 70s and in the 80s in the Lower Rio Grande Valley. Highest temperature Saturday was 83 degrees at Brownsville.

North Texas will be mostly clear through Monday with highs both days in the mid-70s and lows in the mid-40s.

In West Texas, skies will be mostly fair through Monday with highs in the 60s except to mid 70s in the Big Bend. Lows Sunday night will in the upper 30s with highs Monday in the 70s except in Big Bend where the mercury will rise into the 80s.

South Texas will have clear cool nights and sunny mild afternoons through Monday. Highs both days will be in the 70s except for the lower 80s in the Rio Grande Valley. Lows Sunday night will be near 40 in the Hill Country to near 60 in the lower coast.

NATION

Thunderstorms and rainshowers covered large parts of the eastern section of the nation Saturday and snow fell over parts of the Northwest and the upper Mississippi Valley.

Thunderstorms and rainshowers extended from the central Gulf of Mexico coast across the Tennessee Valley, the upper Ohio Valley, the lower Great Lakes and northern New England through the early afternoon.

Rain also fell from Lower Michigan across southeastern Wisconsin, Illinois, eastern Iowa and much of Missouri into northern Arkansas.

A tornado watch was in effect during the day over parts of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. A tornado touched down near Savoy, Miss., about 5 miles south of Meridian, knocking down trees and power lines but causing no injuries.

Thunderstorms produced small hail from Louisiana into Illinois during the morning, and power lines were knocked down at Decatur, Ill., after funnel clouds were reported there around noon.

Late Friday, tornadoes struck communities in Missouri and Illinois, destroying homes and killing one person.

Rain turned to snow from Upper Michigan across southeastern Minnesota and central Iowa across northwestern Missouri, and snow was scattered from the Dakotas into western Minnesota.

About 5 inches of snow accumulated in northeastern Iowa, with 8 inches in southeastern Minnesota and 7 inches in northeastern Wisconsin.

Snow also was scattered from western Montana across Idaho through eastern Washington, with rain extending over the remainder of the Pacific Northwest through northern California. Rain changed to snow at higher elevations in the West. Jackson, Wyo., got 6 to 10 inches of snow.

Travelers' advisories warning of occasional snow were issued for Upper Michigan, northeastern Wisconsin, northwestern Wyoming, and the mountains of southwestern Idaho and the mountains of Washington.

Temperatures around the nation at 2 p.m. EST ranged from 20 degrees at Jamestown, N.D., to 81 at McAllen, Texas, and at Orlando and Sarasota, Fla. The low for the day was 2 degrees below zero at Gunnison, Colo.

Thunderstorm bands sweep nation

By ROGER PETTERSON
Associated Press Writer

A large storm system swept bands of hail-laden thunderstorms from the Gulf Coast across the Tennessee and Ohio valleys Saturday after a night of tornadoes that smashed homes and businesses in Missouri and Illinois. One person was killed and dozens were injured.

On the northern side of the weather system, up to 18 inches of snow fell on north-central Nebraska and wet snow iced highways from Iowa into Upper Michigan.

Another storm in the Pacific brought high wind and a threat of snow to the Northwest.

Twisters, strong wind and hail caused more than $1 million in damage and injured 11 people in southern Illinois, where Fayette County was declared a disaster area on Saturday.

A tornado touched down briefly Saturday near Savoy, Miss., about 5 miles south of Meridian, knocking down trees and power lines, the National Weather Service said. A tornado watch was posted for parts of Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama as the thunderstorms slid across the Gulf states, and one thunderstorm in northeastern Louisiana generated wind up to 50 to 60 mph.

Thunderstorms produced small hail from Louisiana into Illinois during the morning, and funnel clouds were spotted around noon near Decatur.

Parts of two communities remained sealed off in Illinois and Missouri after an outbreak of tornadoes late Friday.

"It looks like there's a lot more damage than we thought at first," said Roy Logsdon, police chief of Potosi, Mo., where a tornado hit a shopping center, destroyed part of an elementary school, killed one woman and injured 14 people. Authorities closed off damaged areas to prevent looting, he said.

"We were extremely lucky regarding casualties," said Washington County, Mo., Sheriff Sonny Richards. "With the amount of property damage we had, it could have been worse, much worse."

The tornado also hit Washington County Memorial Hospital in Potosi, cutting power and shattering windows. "It's really amazing," said nurse Mike Ferris. "Patients were sitting there with glass all around them, and there were only a few cuts."

One business at the shopping center was destroyed. "We were lucky," Logsdon said. "There were at least 80 people shopping next door when it hit."

Residents of the town of 2,500 people 50 miles southwest of St. Louis "worked through the night" to clean up the damage, and "it seems like everyone is showing up to help this morning," Richards said.

One serious injury was reported after a tornado hit Doniphan, Mo. It destroyed 35 houses and 50 more had "substantial structural damage," said police dispatcher Mark Capps. A power substation was destroyed, causing scattered outages.

Illinois Gov. Jim Thompson declared a disaster area in Fayette County, where at least a dozen houses were destroyed, 100 more were damaged and estimates of the destruction exceeded $1 million, according to Chuck Jones, assistant director of the Illinois Emergency Services Disaster Agency.

Jones said most of the damage was confined to the community of Brownstown, where all of the town's 400 homes were without electricity after a tornado ripped up power poles and injured 11 people.

The central part was sealed off while officials determined damage, said state police Sgt. Max Lecrone Saturday evening. The closed area was dangerous because of numerous downed power lines, but Lecrone said it may be reopened on Sunday.

The disaster declaration means that Fayette County homeowners may seek a property tax reassessment and that the county may use the state's disaster relief fund and may apply for federal assistance, Jones said.

More twisters caused scattered damage and injuries elsewhere across Illinois and Missouri, and hailstones as big as baseballs fell in St. Louis County, Mo.

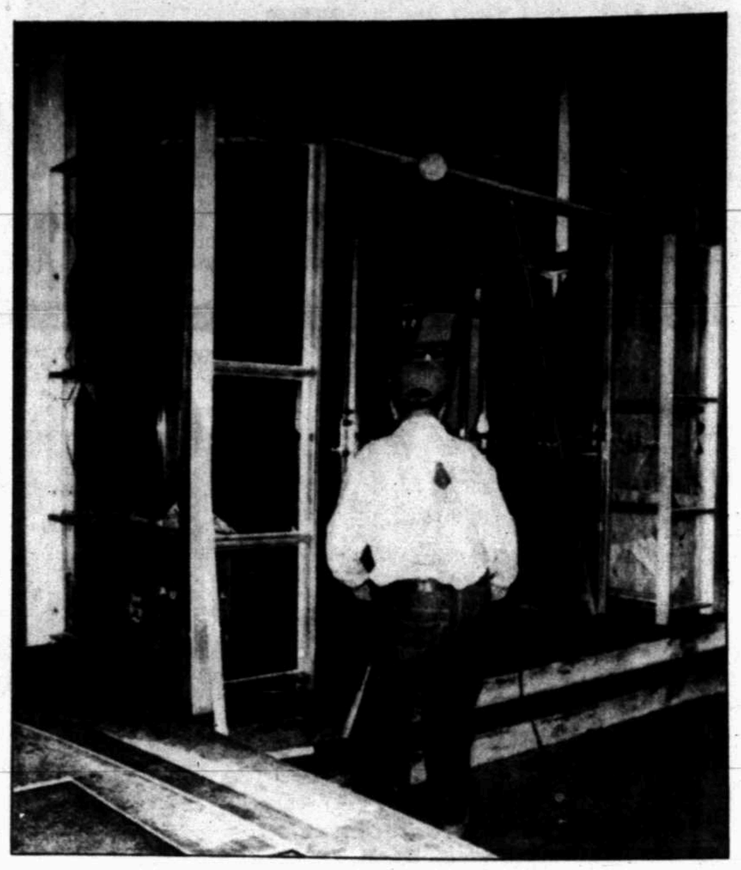

A half-dozen tornadoes were sighted Friday night over Arkansas, but authorities said little damage and no injuries were reported. Parts of the state got hailstones as big as golf balls.

A funnel cloud was reported near Quito, Tenn., in Tipton County, and Memphis got 2.2 inches of rain during the night.

A twister cut a swath near Tuscaloosa, Ala., and heavy thunderstorms and high winds ripped off roofs and knocked down trees and power lines in Alabama, but no injuries were reported.

Behind a cold front associated with the storms, temperatures dropped rapidly. Northwestern Missouri had readings in the 30s Saturday morning, while the southeastern part of the state was still near 60. Sunday morning lows in Indiana were expected to be 20 degrees colder than 24 hours earlier as the front rolled eastward.

Burlington, Iowa, had a record high of 76 degrees on Friday and Davenport, Iowa, tied its record for the date of 73 before the front moved through.

Shuttle call just a hoax

BALTIMORE (AP) — A local radio station was the victim of an "extraordinarily well-done" hoax in which a caller speaking against a background of moderate static pretended to be an astronaut aboard the space shuttle Discovery, station officials say.

WBAL was not able to determine whether the caller was astronaut Joseph P. Allen or a phony until contacting an official at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in Houston.

"We were in a real quandary as to whether it was real," Richard D. Byrd, director of station relations, said Saturday. "It was extraordinarily well done."

The caller made a couple of mistakes, one of them about the number of women who had been in space, but otherwise he sounded very convincing, station officials said.

Talk-show host Robert C. Allen received the phony call shortly after 2 a.m. Friday. The conversation lasted about four minutes.

"This is Joseph Allen from the space shuttle Discovery," the caller began. "We're enjoying the show."

"This is for real?" responded Allen, asking his caller to describe what was happening aboard the Discovery.

The caller then launched into a technical description of the flight, noting correctly that the current mission included the recovery of two communications satellites that went into wrong orbits last February.

He also explained that the four other astronauts were in a rest period.

CONVENT

Colacicco is the typical small-town priest. He makes a phone call, feeling comfortable in scolding a youngster for using incorrect phone manners. Teen-agers, confident that he is "one of them," swing by his house on their way to Mass, while the adults look to him as a leader, an example.

And like a fiery Irish priest (he can fake a brogue) he has a mission.

"I knew there was sexually-abused children — I've run into several cases," said Colacicco. "I want the home to be a long-term facility, a place for the children to live until we can rehabilitate them."

Colacicco admits that one of his inspirations was Father Ritter, a Catholic priest who has opened three homes for street children in New York and New Orleans.

"Ritter sends us articles on some of the cases he has encountered," said Colacicco.

"He writes very explicitly about what happens to those children," said Colacicco. "Young boys with gonorrhea, young girls who wind up as prostitutes, some even being cut up just to make an example — it's terrible," he said.

"WE'RE PLANNING to take boys from ages 11 to 17, the most difficult ones," he said. "We would hope to get them away from their environment by bringing them out here in the country and give them a good Christian atmosphere," he said.

Started by German Carmelite monks, the convent was originally used as a training school for the priesthood. Abandoned in the late 1880s during a severe drought, it was repaired by Catholic nuns in 1894 and used until 1938 as a finishing school for young women, later admitting boys. In the 1940s, it was sold to private hands following a tornado that destroyed much of it. "The Convent and Academy of Our Lady of Mercy" was the home of several Stanton families. Today, it is still privately owned and used once a year as a "haunted mansion" by the Stanton Jaycees during Halloween.

Colacicco estimates that the old convent will need more than $300,000 in renovations. "It needs a new roof, modern fixtures and a lot of work," he said.

"After it gets approved, we hope to work with the Texas Department of Human Resources and find a staff of five. We would like to have two sisters and two lay persons, preferably a husband-wife team. And then we will need a psychiatrist," he said.

"It is still in the planning stages."

Still, Colacicco has had a good response.

"I'VE HAD several offers of donations — the money will come in," he said.

Notwithstanding church approval, funding and public sentiment, Colacicco may have yet another obstacle — DHR, the very agency he hopes to work with.

"There is a major push to make a permanent home for the child," said Nancy Gibbons, state supervisor for DHR. "An institution does not provide permanence."

"The DHR tries to find an 'Uncle Joe' or some relative that might take care of the child," said Sue Smith, a child protective services supervisor for DHR in Midland. "It is seldom anymore that a child grows up in an institution."

The location and nature of Colacicco's proposed home could present still more problems. Colacicco is planning on rehabilitating only boys and, hopefully, boys from the larger Texas cities.

"IT IS CONSIDERED good practice to keep kids in the area that they live in," said Ms. Gibbons. "But there might be enough kids who have been completely removed from their families. If there is a good place available even as far away as Stanton, then I can see the DHR placing kids there."

Ms. Smith thinks Colacicco may be limiting himself by starting only with sexually-abused boys.

"In my own experience the majority of cases do not involve boys," said Ms. Smith. "There are very few boys in that age group (11 to 17) that have been sexually abused."

Ms. Gibbons does not agree.

"It is documented that there are increasing numbers of cases reported," she said. "We're talking about actual reported cases — who knows how many more are out there."

RETREAT

Water — how to conserve it, where to get it for the future and projects needed today — has been on the council's high priority list the previous two years.

"We're close to having something worked out" for the city's future water supply, but the council isn't ready to announce it, he said. "We'll be in better shape than any city in West Texas."

The councilmen have attempted to draw up an ordinance that would promote conservation of city water, but with no success.

"We contacted a bunch of other cities on water conservation and we didn't get a whole lot of encouragement," said the mayor. "They all have the problem and all said how do you write an ordinance you can enforce and be constitutionally correct?

"You can write an ordinance to prohibit dumping water in street in a wanton manner, but what's a wanton manner? Is it one gallon or 100 gallons? And how do you measure it once it's in the street," he said.

Some citizens argue that if they pay for the water it's up to them to decide how to use it, whether it's for a shower or dumping in the street, he said.

The council looked at a longrange plan for rebuilding streets, and the mayor suggested the residents will be facing a large bond issue sometime within the next two years.

"REBUILDING IS big money and we don't ordinarily have that to spare in our regular budget," he added.

The Municipal Court used to consist of a judge and two clerks. "Now they have 14 or 15 people and still can't keep up with the work. It's grown to be such a paper mill," Akins said. The city will be instituting a plan compiled by Peat, Marwick & Mitchell to make the court more efficient.

Part of that plan involves getting the data processing system in place at the Municipal Court Building and also at the Public Safety Building.

Ranking in the lower priority areas were expanding the garage area, developing policies about the internal streets and subdivisions, planning a downtown parking garage, continuing expansion at Midland Regional Airport, relocating Air Park and completing a master plan.

THIS MARKED the fourth consecutive year the council and staff have retreated to Ruidoso, N.M., to sort out the city's problems and each builds on the next, the mayor said.

Marcum, who said he originated the idea for a retreat, believes some results can already be seen.

As accomplishments he cited downtown street rebuilding, installing a major sewer line, building more parking at Midland Regional Airport, putting in a major sewer line in north Midland, expanding City Hall, building the new Municipal Court and renovating the Public Safety Building.

But there has been another benefit of the retreat, Marcum said. "It has created an atmosphere where people can be very frank and open about their concerns. No one has held back and that's great."

'Test-tube' family shares its story

DALLAS (AP) — The parents of one of Texas' first "test-tube babies" say they decided to go public with their story to give hope to childless couples.

Laura Hobby, 29, gave birth Thursday night in Dallas to 7-pound, 4-ounce Jessica, and then held a news conference Friday to show off their baby.

"To us, she is the most beautiful baby in the world," said 30-year-old Claud Hobby.

The baby is one of 23 conceived by in vitro — or test tube — fertilization in a program at the University of Texas Health Science Center in Houston.

Since Jessica was conceived, three in vitro programs have been established in Dallas. Doctors at the Presbyterian and the University of Texas Health Science Center have not yet announced a pregnancy, but the test tube fertilization program at Trinity Medical Center in Carrolton has one patient who is about two months pregnant.

UT Health Science Center officials in Houston said at least one other baby was born in Dallas through in vitro fertilization, but the Hobbys are the first to go public.

Mrs. Hobby suffers from endometriosis, a disease that scarred one ovary and Fallopian tube so much that it had to be removed. In addition, her remaining tube was so scarred that an egg could not move through it from her ovary.

Hobby, a pilot with Jet America Airlines, and his wife, owner of the Texas Quilt Co., had been trying to have a baby for six years.

White to Democrats: 'Y'all look alive to me'

AP Laserphoto

Texas Gov. Mark White speaks briefly to members of the State Democratic Executive Committee meeting in Austin Saturday.

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White on Saturday canceled his trip to Baylor's homecoming game to give the State Democratic Executive Committee a pep talk after its beating at the ballot box.

"They told me all the Democrats were dead. Y'all look pretty alive to me," White told the committee in the wake of the GOP landslide on election day.

Mixed in with his upbeat comments, White offered some suggestions. He wants Texas Democrats to give their presidential primary more impact — possibly by moving it to an earlier date.

The Texas caucuses began this year in May, after it became clear that Walter Mondale would be the nominee.

"Too often by the time they come to Texas it's already decided. The game is over. New Hampshire shouldn't be the nominating convention for the Democratic ticket," White said.

Chairman Bob Slagle called for consideration of a radically new system in which voters would be allowed to cast ballots for more than one candidate.

The "approval voting" system would reduce intra-party war, Slagle said.

"It's been highly divisive. We frequently come forward with a candidate who looks like he has been run over by a ball of razor blades — nicked, cut, gashed and hammered," Slagle said.

"There is no incentive under the present system for our candidates not to hack each other up. There is no incentive for them to consider after somebody is nominated whether they are crippled or not," he said.

White called for a "broadening" of the party base beyond the traditional coalition that has counted on minorities and labor.

"It does very little good to have a lock on 38 percent of the vote," White said, calling on party leaders to make sure the "rich and the poor, the educated and the uneducated and the employed and the unemployed" side with the Democrats.

The trick, according to White, is to broaden the base without "turning our backs" on the party's "natural constituency," he said.

"The traditional support has to recognize the reason we're here is winning, and losing doesn't do any good at all," said White.

Judges' ouster may lead to non-partisan selection

AUSTIN (AP) — The fallout from Tuesday's election and the ousting of many incumbent judges in Texas may result in a new push for a non-partisan judicial selection process, officials say.

On Friday, the House-Senate Select Committee on the Judiciary, an interim committee studying changes in the court system, approved a measure recommending that the Legislature take judicial positions off party ballots in general elections.

Straight-ticket Republican voting Tuesday that knocked a number of incumbent judges out of office could persuade the Democrat-controlled Legislature to adopt a proposal for non-partisan judicial selction, said Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, the chairman of the select committee.

"There's no doubt it's very disruptive to an orderly and well-trained judiciary," said Farabee, who has twice previously introduced legislation for non-partisan selection of judges.

"As soon as somebody gets to know what they're doing, they're swept out and replaced, regardless of what their records are," he said.

Republicans made strong gains in the 1980 general election, but lost ground in a Democratic domination of state offices two years ago.

Tuesday's results "certainly emphasized what we already knew from '80 and '82," Farabee said.

The committee's recommendation offers the Legislature three alternatives — all of which would require approval of a constitutional amendment, Farabee told the Dallas Times Herald.

The alternatives are:

— Allowing individual judicial districts, by local option, to have the governor appoint judges from a list of names submitted by a nominating committee. Appointed judges would periodically appear on the ballot, when voters could decide whether to keep them in office or replace them with another appointee.

— Electing judges on non-partisan ballots without party identification. Tom Rainey, president of the State Bar of Texas, said the bar association would submit legislation in the next session of the Legislature favoring non-partisan elections.

— Keeping the current partisan elections, but putting judicial races on a separate ballot so that voters could not elect judges on a straight-party vote. That option is favored by the Texas Trial Lawyers Association.

TDC chairman questions board member's actions

DALLAS (AP) — The chairman of the Texas Department of Corrections is looking at a report that TDC board member Thomas McDade may have acted improperly by supplying questions for a lie detector test of a potential witness in the prosecution of state Sen. Carl Parker, the Dallas Times Herald reported Saturday.

TDC Board Chairman Robert Gunn told the newspaper he has asked McDade to explain his involvement in the lie detector examination of TDC inmate David Johnson.

Johnson testified last June before a grand jury that later indicted Parker, D-Port Arthur, on charges of pornography, promotion of prostitution and perjury. Parker says he's innocent.

McDade denied he acted improperly, but acknowledged to the Times Herald that he had urged former acting TDC Director Red McKaskle to order a lie detector test of Johnson.

He said he had earlier supplied questions for an affidavit that Johnson signed and he understood those same questions were used in the polygraph.

Gunn said he was particularly concerned because McDade had advised him in September that he was representing Parker — a claim McDade has disputed. Gunn said McDade is expected to discuss his actions when the TDC board meets Monday in Huntsville.

The board, Gunn said, may try to determine whether it was proper for TDC personnel to conduct the examination at McDade's urging and with questions supplied by McDade when the topic of the questioning involved the Parker case, and not TDC business.

"I really can't make a judgment on Mr. McDade because I don't feel I have all the facts," Gunn said. "But I do feel that in principle it's improper for a board member to have any sort of a contact with a prisoner in a matter like this, and I would disapprove of it."

McDade said the questions related to whether local law enforcement authorities in Jefferson County were pressuring Johnson to fabricate stories about Parker.

Parents' refusal to testify dominates case of murdered postal carrier

By DENISE GAMINO

Bernard Port

HOUSTON (AP) — As the second youngest of nine children, Debora Sue Schatz knew about money problems, so it was no surprise when she finished her mail route early and offered to earn overtime pay June 7 by delivering letters for a colleague who wanted the afternoon off.

Just before 3 p.m., the 23-year-old woman parked her blue U.S. Postal Service Pinto in the grass at the edge of an unfamiliar dead-end street and began a door-to-door walk from which she would never return.

Before Miss Schatz could complete the favor for her friend, she was dead of two gunshot wounds to the back of the head.

Miss Schatz's family frantically searched for her that night, but did not find the Pinto until a resident of the West Houston neighborhood told police the next morning that the car had been there overnight. Her body was found the next day, dumped in a remote area.

Postal Service bloodhounds traced Miss Schatz's last scent to a brick house one block from the Pinto in the affluent neighborhood, where it is not uncommon to see 10 or 12 trees shading one yard.

POLICE LATER found blood-spattered mail, bullet holes, blood stains, six guns, ammunition, and empty shell casings in the house, which is owned by Bernard and Odette Port. They lived there with their 17-year-old son, David.

The slaying of Miss Schatz, a bashful woman who ate dinner at her parents' home every night before retiring to her own apartment, rocked this city.

Since then, the slaying case has taken some of the most peculiar twists in American legal history, whipping up emotions around the country.

Unusual about the case is that:

David Port, the high school junior accused of the killing, is not in jail. But his father and stepmother were behind bars for nearly two months for refusing to tell a grand jury what they knew about what happened in their home.

Miss Schatz's mother says the killing cost her not only her youngest daughter, but also her husband of 34 years. He died of a heart attack two months after the slaying, and Mrs. Schatz said his death was caused by overwhelming grief. She has filed a $5 million lawsuit against the Port family.

In a controversial move, the Ports at first cited their Jewish faith as one reason their consciences would not allow them to testify. They later relented.

THE PORTS' silence created a test case on whether Texas should protect parents from testifying against their children, much like the privilege between lawyers and clients, husbands and wives, and physicians and patients.

No evidence has been made public that would suggest a motive for the killing.

Miss Schatz was one of 15 U.S. letter carriers killed on the job in the past 11 years, but unlike her, most of the others were killed in connection with robberies.

Police theorize the younger Port shot Miss Schatz after she approached the house to deliver mail and dumped her body that Thursday night in an isolated area about 20 miles away.

The teen-ager did not return home that night, and by the time he drove his maroon Chevrolet Malibu toward his street the next day, a full-scale police search of the neighborhood on foot and by helicopter was underway. The youth sped away when he saw police, but officers arrested him a few minutes later when his car crashed in the parking lot of a nearby apartment complex.

In the automobile, police found blood, hair, and soil believed to be relevant to the case.

Police said the teen-ager confessed to killing Miss Schatz, whom he had never previously met, but because his statement was neither signed nor recorded on tape it is not admissible in court. He has been free on $20,000 bail since the day he was arrested.

ALTHOUGH A Harris County grand jury has indicted David Port on a charge of murder, prosecutors want to upgrade the charge to capital murder, which could bring a death sentence. Prosecutors say they do not have the evidence to seek the more serious charge, but that information known by the Ports would probably provide the evidence.

To prove capital murder, prosecutors must show that the victim was killed during the commission of another felony, such as robbery, rape, or kidnapping.

Until this week, the Schatz murder case had been in a sort of holding pattern, with all attention focused on Harris County Jail where the elder Ports were incarcerated in separate cells on Sept. 12.

Texas lawmakers must grapple with responding to state's hungry

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Much was said during the presidential election campaign about the so-called "compassion issue," including whether enough is being done to solve the problem of feeding the hungry throughout the nation.

Texas lawmakers face renewed arguments over that issue when they convene in January because, although the presidential campaign has ended, the problem remains.

Two recent reports have underscored the problem of hunger in Texas — a problem the reports say doesn't appear to be understood by many Texans.

In its preliminary report, the Senate Interim Committee on Hunger and Nutrition, which held hearingsthroughout Texas, concludes hunger is a widespread problem affecting as many as 961,000 people in the state.

And, the report comments, the level of hunger is more "than Texans would tolerate with an easy conscience."

Another report, by the Physician Task Force on Hunger in America, carried out by the Harvard University School of Public Health, concludes there is "substantial evidence that hunger is a serious problem in New Mexico and Texas. Hunger is a problem that is getting worse, not better."

The Senate report calls it "shocking" that in a state with one of the lowest unemployment rates in the nation," thousands of people, particularly those who are unemployed, the elderly, pregnant women, and children, are "seriously hungry."

Sen. Hugh Parmer, D-Fort Worth, who carried the Senate study, told reporters at a news conference to announce the findings that efforts by the Reagan administration to reduce welfare fraud had contributed to the problems of the hungry, if not creating some of those problems.

The administration's efforts, Parmer said, went "far beyond" what was required and have resulted in a more than fourfold increase in rejection of applications for food stamps.

In its report, the Physician Task Force also cites "restrictive federal policies" as "causing and exacerbating hunger."

But the group also criticizes Texas and New Mexico, saying neither is "exemplary" in its efforts to protect its citizens "from the vagaries of the economy and unemployment."

"In Texas," the report says, "the state economy enables it to do far more than it does. On many major indices this state is near the bottom in caring for its people ... 48th in the nation, for example, in aid to the medically needy. Texas also provides no AFDC for unemployed families if the father remains in the home. And the state is 45th in the country in the level of assistance for families it does help."

Parmer argues Texas lawmakers should appropriate $20 million next year to assist up to one-third of the neediest hungry in the state. He says $75 million is needed, but that given the budget crunch faced by legislators, approval of the larger amount seems impossible.

Both reports say many of those going hungry are people who haven't faced the problem before — the so-called "new poor".

The Senate report says 75 per cent of the people requesting food at emergency food facilities were asking for help for the first time, after having lost jobs and exhausted unemployment benefits.

Department of Human Resources Commissioner Marlin Johnston says his agencyis hoping for increased state funding to serve more people, but notes that "the only way that our appropriation request could be met is for new revenues, or shifting of programs.

Johnston admits he has reservations about asking for more funds at a time when lawmakers have called on all state agencies to hold the line, or preferably reduce, their requests for money.

"We have listened with everyone else to the kinds of problems that the state is facing ... We don't like being in the position where we need to ask for additional dollars.

"But we have to hold out the needs of the people we serve, as we see them ... They don't have the kind of lobbying support you see for highways or ... some other programs. If we do't make the request, it won't be made."

Johnston notes his agency has managed to stretch the money appropriated to it to provide an increase in Aid to Families with Dependent Children Payments, and to expand some medical coverages.

Still, he says, the money can be stretched only so far, and then more money is needed if programs are to continue.

That's the problem with 1985 Legislature will have to address — and solving it isn't going to be easy, or simple, or pleasant.

Nursing-home workers indicted in patients' deaths

GALVESTON (AP) — The Autumn Hills case involving the deaths of two elderly nursing home patients might never have seen daylight if David Marks hadn't browsed through a dusty file he found in his office five years ago.

Marks found the file after he moved into his new office with the Galveston County district attorney in May 1979. He began studying the documents, which showed that an unusually high number of patients died in Autumn Hill's Texas City nursing home between 1976 and 1978.

The young prosecutor's tenacity eventually triggered grand jury indictments against Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Inc.— the first Texas firm ever charged with murder — and four current or former employees.

On Friday, five years after Marks found the file, a grand jury handed down murder indictments against the defendants in the deaths of two elderly patients who died in the Texas City facility.

"The last five years have been like an emotional roller coaster, with lots of highs and lots of lows," said Marks, 32, who is now assistant Texas attorney general.

"Some days it seems like I've been working on this case forever. On other days, it seems like I started only yesterday," he said in a Houston Chronicle article published Saturday.

"The Autumn Hills file was dormant when I found it," he said. "I have no idea why it was in that office. I remember (former District Attorney James Hury) telling me to take a look at it if I had time to see if there was anything to it."

Marks first presented the case to a grand jury in 1981. The panel indicted the company and eight employees in the murders of eight patients. But the indictments, which were returned shortly before the grand jury's term expired, contained errors, and Marks withdrew them.

A second set of similar indictments were returned in 1982, but State District Judge Larry Gist threw out the indictments, ruling in part that state law regarding the criminal liability of corporations is vague.

In December 1982, Hury approved a plea bargain allowing the firm to plead no contest to involuntary manslaughter and pay $100,000 to the county. In return, a judge would find the firm innocent if it obeyed state law for 10 years.

Marks, who was angered by the arrangement, filed a lawsuit against Hury in an effort to block the proposal. Hury fired Marks for insubordination.

"I couldn't have lived with myself. I felt what he was doing was wrong. All along I felt the solution for these old, abused people was the criminal justice system," Marks told the Chronicle. "I was insulted and ashamed by my profession. I was beginning to question my role in this so called system of justice."

But Hury, now a state representative, has said Marks was too emotionally involved in the case and didn't see prosecutors lacked sufficient evidence to convict the firm of murder.

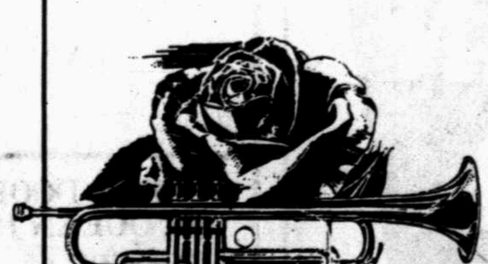

Robert Gay, the corporation's owner who was named in the indictment Friday, said Marks is an "unexpert expert" on nursing home care.

The company withdrew its plea in 1982, after current District Attorney Mike Guarino successfully argued a corporation cannot legally take part in such a deferred judgment. Guarino demanded a judge immediately find the firm guilty.

When We Cut The Ribbons You'll Get The Message

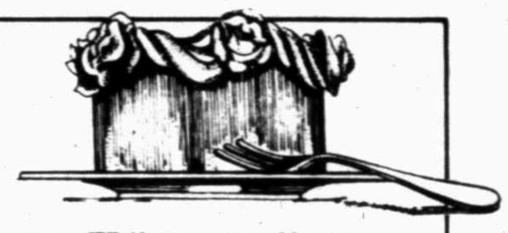

The ribbons come off at 12:15 pm on November 13th. Then the new Midland Center Electronic Message Center will begin illuminating Midlanders with messages of current and upcoming civic events.

You're invited to spend your lunch hour with us for the unveiling ceremony. To soothe your appetite, food, drinks and a giant cake will be available at the Center. To soothe your feet, toe tapping entertainment, tables and chairs will be in the plaza.

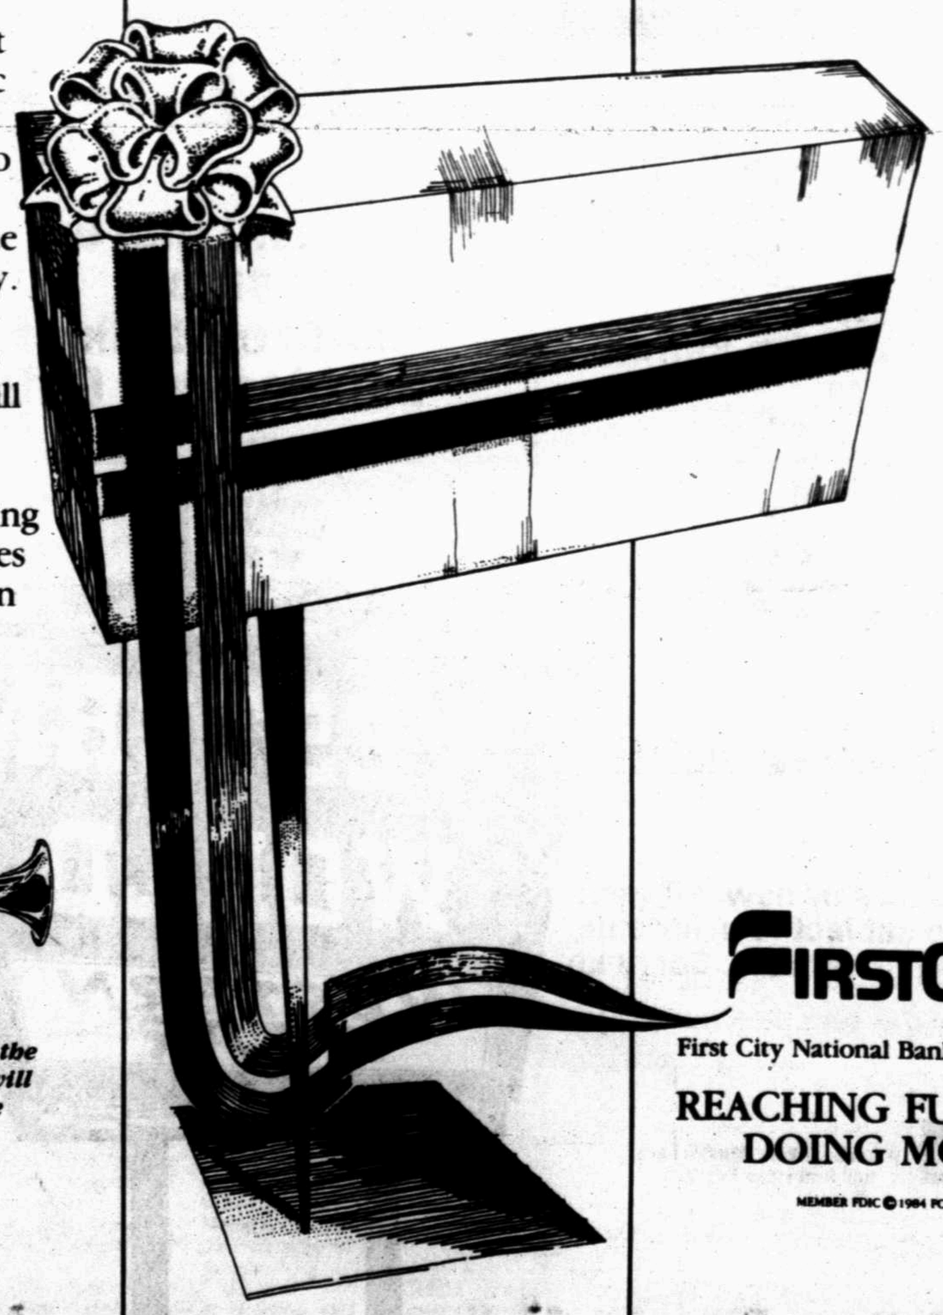

• • •To accompany the messages in your mind, the Bernie Rose Jazz Band will provide the songs for the heart—of downtown Midland!

Join us—Tuesday at noon to watch the ribbons come off and the lights go on—in the Electronic Message Center at Midland Center.

• • •While our new Message Center provides food for thought —we thought we would provide food— a four foot by eight foot cake in the plaza!

Prosecution witness admits she thinks Belachheb 'crazy'

DALLAS (AP) — Prosecutors on Monday will be trying to refute the courtroom claim of Abdelkrim Belachheb that the one-time waiter from Morocco was insane when he opened fire in a fashionable nightspot, killing six people and wounding a seventh.

That effort got off to a shaky start Friday when the state's first rebuttal witness ended up admitting on cross-examination that she had said the psychological and psychiatric testimony presented last week by defense attorneys convinced her that Belachheb is "crazy."

"I know when I've been gored," a rueful Assistant District Attorney Norman Kinne said when the trial recessed Friday afternoon.

Beth Wiser, a legal secretary who said she had introduced Belachheb to his wife, Jo Anne O'Brien Belachheb, also ended up admitting she didn't think some of the defendant's actions were rational.

The state'e rebuttal is expected to last at least through midweek and feature Dr. James Grigson, a forensic psychiatrist known locally as "Doctor Death" for his frequent testimony at capital murder trials.

Defense witnesses have told the jury that Belachheb is a brain-damaged paranoid who was out of control and unable to tell right from wrong when he began shooting patrons of a private Dallas club off their barstools.

Kinne began Friday trying to elicit testimony that will give the jury a portrait of a man on the make — not a sick man.

Mrs. Wiser testified that Belachheb, 39, was a "macho man" who told her he wanted to marry a rich woman who could help him start his own business and obtain U.S. citizenship.

"He seemed to feel that if he could find a rich woman that would be the answer," she said.

Wiser also said Belachheb beat his 55-year-old wife — who earlier testified on her husband's behalf — and spoke of her as "filthy, stupid, old and ugly."

Nicholas Zaika, the boyfriend of victim Linda Lowe, told jurors he offered Belachheb a job as a salesman at his luxury European car dealership shortly before the slayings.

Zaika described Belachheb as a suave, handsome, outgoing man who kissed the hands of women with a Continental flair and went by the name "Pierre."

Kinne also renewed his efforts to persuade the jury that the one-time waiter and former limousine driver was in control when he opened fire with a semi-automatic pistol at Ianni's Restaurant and Bar on June 29.

Sporting goods salesman Stanley Lee Woods, a regular at Ianni's, testified that Belachheb was calm and precise when he said "Take that, bitch" and fired at one of his victims.

Witnesses have said the shootings were apparently triggered when Ms. Lowe and another woman rebuffed Belachheb's advances.

Caller claims he killed girls, vows to kill again

LINCOLN, Ill. (AP) — Police have stepped up patrols at eight elementary schools after an anonymous caller claimed to have committed the Halloween slayings of two cousins in nearby Decatur and warned that he would strike again, authorities said.

Meanwhile, Decatur police said a 7-year-old girl who was abducted with the victims but not harmed was taken into protective custody Friday and placed in a home at an undisclosed location.

Lincoln police Chief Robert Hahn said Friday that the two anonymous phone calls were received Tuesday in this Logan County community 30 miles northwest of Decatur.

A male caller contacted the Washington-Monroe School and claimed responsibility for the slayings and said he would do the same to four Lincoln girls, Hahn said.

The other call went to the Lincoln Courier. A male caller told the paper he had abducted two girls from Texas, had them in a garage and would kill them, the chief said.

"We are treating it as a threat," Hahn said, adding that more officers were placed on street patrol as a result.

Decatur and Lincoln police said Saturday they did not know if there was such a case involving two Texas girls.

Decatur Police Chief Patrick F. Vaughan said 7-year-old Patricia Hall was placed in protective custody because of "the continuing nature of this investigation and the concern that there is a potential for harm by unknown person or persons against a minor child in connection with this case."

Police said Patricia will not immediately be returned to her mother, Earnestine Gordon.

No reaction was available from Ms. Gordon. No one answered the telephone Saturday afternoon at her home or at the home of her sister, Blanche Gordon, mother of the older slain girl.

Patricia had been under police guard at Decatur Memorial Hospital since she was found in a closet in a vacant apartment building two days after she and the other girls disappeared while trick-or-treating.

Patricia's 9-year-old sister, Theresa Hall, and her 12-year-old cousin, Sherry Gordon, were found strangled, and there were indications of sexual assault, authorities said.

Vaughan said there will be a court hearing in Macon County this week in order to keep Patricia in protective custody. State law permits police to take a child into custody without a hearing, but once the child is in custody, a hearing must be held to show why the custody should continue.

Shuttle crew deploys second satellite

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Discovery's astronauts successfully deployed a second satellite Saturday and then concentrated on the most daring part of their mission — tracking down and rescuing a pair of errant satellites that are trapped in useless orbits.

A short rocket firing by small jets on Discovery put the shuttle almost exactly on track to intercept the first of the target satellites Monday.

The Leasat 2 satellite, whirling like a flying pie plate, slipped out of its berth and spun away, leaving the shuttle cargo bay empty and ready to receive two satellites that are to be salvaged on Monday and Wednesday.

As the satellite spun free, astronaut Dale Gardner announced, "She's away...The second Frisbee is on its way."

A Leasat was released in a similar way during a September flight of the shuttle. The satellite is owned by Hughes Aircraft and leased to the U.S. Navy, which uses it for worldwide communications.

Forty-five minutes after release, the Leasat ignited a rocket in the first of a series of firings that will elevate the craft to its working orbit of 22,300 miles.

"We saw a complete burn, 51 seconds," Gardner said.

"Good news," replied Mission Control. "Sounds like you're two for two."

The launch followed Friday's successful deployment of a Canadian communications satellite and frees the astronauts to concentrate on preparations for a daring space-walk capture and recovery of Palapa B2 and Westar 6, two satellites that were left in useless orbits by rocket misfirings following their launches during another shuttle mission last February.

Mission commander Rick Hauck and pilot David Walker planned a small rocket firing Saturday to keep Discovery on track for a rendezvous with Palapa on Monday.

AP Laserphoto

Shuttle Discovery crew members say goodbye for the day via television Saturday. The crew successfully launched two communications satellites and is aiming for the retrieval of two wayward ones. From left, are Anna Fisher, pilot David Walker, Commander Frederick Hauck and, in front, Joseph Allen.

The astronauts unpacked and checked the space suits and equipment that Gardner and Joe Allen will use to corral Palapa and Westar. They almost immediately found a minor problem — flashlights that failed to work.

Gardner reported that the left light in each of two pairs of work lamps worn on the spacesuits failed to turn on during a test.

"On both sets of lights," he said, "the left light does not operate...It's something in the electronics of the lights."

The astronauts took the faulty lights apart and found that small button batteries that activate electronic switches were dead. Mission Control said the switches apparently had been left on before launch, exhausting the batteries. Larger batteries that power the light bulbs themselves were unaffected, but were useless without the electronic switches.

Gardner said the crew offered to use the batteries from their watches in the light system, but Mission Control said engineers had tried that and found it didn't work.

Worn like miner's lamps on the helmets of the spacesuits, the lights focus beams at arm's length and are used by space-walking astronauts when the shuttle is orbiting through darkness. Failure of the left lights will give the astronauts only half their normal illumination, but flight director Larry Bourgeois said this presented no problem.

The space walk, he said, "can be accomplished with just one of the lights, or actually, without any of the lights at all." A hand spotlight also could be used, he added.

Since its launch on Thursday, Discovery has been stalking Palapa and Westar on a 1.6 million-mile hunt through the heavens.

The wayward satellites are in an orbit of 224 miles, about 34 miles higher than Discovery. Palapa is trailing Westar by about 760 miles and both are moving at about 17,000 mph.

Rocket firings by Discovery have slowly closed the gap between the shuttle and Palapa. By Saturday, the distance had narrowed to about 4,300 miles, and Discovery was closing in at 142 miles an hour.

On Monday, Hauck will guide Discovery to within 35 feet of Palapa and then fly in formation.

Allen and Gardner will corral the satellite and lock it into the cargo bay. Allen, wearing a rocket backpack, will fly free from the shuttle and out to Palapa. He will attach a handle on the craft, using a pole-like device called a "stinger."

Astronaut Anna Fisher will use the shuttle's 50-foot arm to grasp the handle and bring the satellite into the cargo bay.

On Wednesday, Gardner will fly with the backpack to attempt the salvage on Westar.

America gets what it wants: Four more years of Reagan

By MIKE FEINSILBER

WASHINGTON (AP) — The people spoke Tuesday, and the message echoed what the crowds had shouted wherever Ronald Reagan had gone — four more years.

Four more years of the conservative Reagan presidency is what the people chose, with its claim to prosperity and patriotism and its promise to cut the government's role in society while building up its military might.

But the people opted, too, for at least two more years of divided government, with the new 99th Congress likely to be more independent of the executive than the 97th Congress that did Reagan's bidding four years ago.

"It was a victory for his philosophy and a victory for him personally, but I'm not sitting here claiming it's a big mandate," said the president's chief of staff, James A. Baker III.

For the fourth time in the last five presidential elections, the country voted for the Republican candidate.

But it did what it usually does when it puts a Republican in the White House. It stayed the president's hand by giving him a Congress with a will of its own.

In this case, the newly elected House of Representatives remained under Democratic control — virtually a carbon copy of the retiring House — and the Senate emerged slightly less Republican than the previous one.

The Republican margin of 55-45 Senate seats slipped to 53-47.

This time, too, Reagan gets no honeymoon. New presidents always have a period when Congress is inclined to go along with them. In Reagan's case, his shooting extended his honeymoon. But this time, he goes before Congress as a lame-duck president, unable to seek re-election.

Reagan, in fact, said he would take his case to the people if Congress did not go along.

In the Capitol, Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., crafty Bostonian of the old school of Irish politics, nemesis of Republican presidents, remains the leader of the opposition.

With three races still to be decided, the Republicans wound up gaining 14 House seats, fewer than half of the 33 they won with Reagan in 1980.

The figures are deceptive. Several Republicans took seats from "boll weevil Democrats" — Southerners who usually vote with the president.

Reagan now lacks the ideological majority in the House that he commanded four years ago.

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., once the fair-haired spokesman for moderate Republicanism, tacked to the right, tied himself to the president in his campaign for a fourth term, but was defeated by Rep. Paul Simon.

Percy was the biggest name candidate defeated Tuesday. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., champion of the issues of the New Right, survived his challenge.

Most politicians seemed to have no quarrel with the interpretation that defeated Democrat Walter F. Mondale gave the election.

Mondale proclaimed the vote an enormous personal victory for "an incumbent president, with the strength of the incumbency, who was very popular personally, who was very well-liked, in the midst of what is perceived as good economic times and with diminished international tensions."

Democrats seek 'place in the Sun(belt)'

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — America is moving to the Sun Belt, and it may be time the national Democratic Party did the same.

Among the lessons hammered home to the Democrats last week by Ronald Reagan was that in presidential elections, they are a minority party in the states with the highest rate of growth.

The last Democratic candidate to do well in the Sun Belt was Jimmy Carter, and his success was limited to the South and to 1976. Four years later, when he ran for re-election, Reagan took every Sun Belt state but Carter's native Georgia.

The Sun Belt includes not only the South but the Southwest and California — a collection of states the Republicans see attracting people much more in tune with the GOP than with the Democrats.

Those states have 195 electoral votes out of the 270 needed for election. If the Republicans get a lock on those votes, it may be a long time before a Democrat moves into the White House.

Those states are not yet lost to the Democrats.

Arizona has a reputation as the land of Barry Goldwater, a state that has not voted for a Democrat for president since 1948. Yet it also has a progressive Democratic governor, Bruce Babbitt; a moderate Democratic senator, Dennis DeConcini; and also is the home of Rep. Morris Udall, one of the leaders of the party's liberal wing.

Another case is New Mexico, where Gov. Toney Anaya is an unabashed liberal. Yet, New Mexico last voted for a Democratic presidential candidate in 1964, when Lyndon Johnson buried Goldwater.

That pattern is repeated throughout the West and, of course, the South has a Democratic tradition, albeit far more conservative than the national party.

A problem that has been debated in the Democratic Party ever since Reagan was elected in 1980 was whether the country was moving to the right and, if so, whether the Democrats had to shift with it.

If that assumption was accepted, the next question was how to do it without abandoning the party's traditional base — the working classes, city dwellers, blacks and other minorities.

To a degree, the party's base abandoned it. Sun Belt cities are less Democratic than the old cities of the North, which are losing population. The working classes have grown more prosperous and more willing to listen to and support Republican candidates, particularly those who talk about cutting their taxes and building up the nation's defense.

Organized labor's decision to jump in early and endorse Walter F. Mondale for the Democratic presidential nomination did little to reduce Reagan's appeal among union voters.

In fact, it may have hurt the Democratic nominee with other voters.

"I'm sure they're going to review their strategy carefully and closely," said Charles T. Manatt, the Democratic Party chairman, when asked if he thought labor ought to have second thoughts about its endorsement.

The chairman was unwilling to alienate a major force within his party, but when asked if he thought the endorsements of various interest groups had helped Mondale, Manatt replied, "The evidence this year wouldn't suggest that."

Clearly, the traditional Democratic approach — building coalitions among unions, ethnic and religious groups and racial minorities — isn't playing well in the Sun Belt.

There is a growing, morning-after feeling among many party activists that the Democrats would be better off without their presidential candidates going before various unions, teachers, women and others to seek endorsements.

There also is a feeling that the successor to Manatt ought to be someone who has held elective office in the Sun Belt. Manatt himself is a Californian, but he never has run for office.

Ferraro lost vice presidency but changed American politics forever

By EVANS WITT

WASHINGTON (AP) — Geraldine Ferraro failed to win the vice presidency, but her bid for national office changed the shape of American politics.

"She showed that a woman can do it. We're now beyond 'The First' syndrome," said Kathy Wilson, head of the National Women's Political Caucus. "Her effort has pushed awareness of women in politics ahead by 10 years."

The New York congresswoman was the first woman ever to face the voters as the national nominee of a major party, a path-breaker who had to endure the special trials of those who make history.

'We made a difference...American women will never be second-class citizens again," Ms. Ferraro said as she conceded her defeat Tuesday.

"She was the best possible pioneer we could have had," said Judy Goldsmith, president of the National Organization for Women, which endorsed the Democratic ticket.

Even Ms. Ferraro's opponents agree on her impact.

Said Betty Heitman, co-chairman of the Republican National Committee: "It was a breakthrough. It will be easier in the future to support and nominate a woman for the two top positions. People did look at her as a national candidate."

Ms. Ferraro and running mate Walter Mondale not only lost the election in a landslide to Ronald Reagan and George Bush, they also failed to win a majority of the women's vote nationwide.

During the campaign, there were many questions about Ms. Ferraro — about her family's finances, about the fitness of a three-term congresswoman to be president, about her stand on abortion. These factors may be important if Ms. Ferraro decides to run for a New York Senate seat in 1986 or for national office again in the future.

But those who talk about the long-term impact of Ms. Ferraro's campaign say those factors will fade rapidly in importance, overwhelmed by the sheer historic nature of the campaign.

"It's a piece of irreversible progress, a step forward that cannot be turned back," said Ms. Goldsmith. "It has been a validation of women's full participation in the political process."

Said Nanette Falkenberg, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League: "She was treated like a vice presidential candidate with all her strengths and weaknesses...The debate moved her from her being the first woman on the ticket to being a serious vice presidential candidate."

The principal impact of Ms. Ferraro's candidacy will be in the acceptance of women candidates running for office in the future, most agreed.

"She has changed the shape of American politics forever. I don't think the parties will every select a presidential or a vice presidential candidate again without considering a woman seriously," said Ferraro campaign manager John Sasso on the evening of the Democrats' defeat.

Already there is talk of women running for president in 1988, although much of the attention seems now to be on the Republican side.

"I think the chances are good" for a woman GOP nominee, said Mrs. Heitman.

Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole is considered interested in making a bid for national office in 1988. Other names mentioned in GOP circles include Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum of Kansas and United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick — a Democrat.

On the Democratic side, the possibilities are less clear. The party has no women senators, although the nation's two female governors — Martha Layne Collins of Kentucky and newly elected Madeleine Kunin of Vermont — are both Democrats.

Mrs. Collins was among those interviewed by Mondale for the No. 2 spot on the Democratic ticket this year.

Bush needs to stake out his own territory

WASHINGTON (AP) — After four years as President Reagan's chief cheerleader, Vice President George Bush faces the delicate task of proving he is his own man without repudiating his boss' policies if he wants to run for the White House in 1988, political strategists say.

"Loyalty and all that is good, but what George Bush has to (do is) establish himself as a leader," said political consultant David Keene. "It's the way you come across. It's your vision.

"He has to create a situation that when people look at George Bush, they say, 'There's a guy that ought to be president,'" Keene added. "At times, people say that about Bush."

Bush, himself, is not saying whether he plans to seek the presidency in 1988.

"I've really not decided whether I'm going to do it or not and I have the luxury of plenty of time to make up my mind," Bush said at a post-election news conference Wednesday.

Bush's vision and how it differs from Reagan's is frequently questioned in GOP circles in discussions about the 1988 nomination.

Bush acknowledged during the campaign that as the No. 2 man, he had to make some accommodations on political positions to be in step with Reagan. At the same time, Bush stressed that he supported Reagan's positions and insisted he was the president's top cheerleader.

His unstinting loyalty to Reagan helped bring Bush closer to the conservative wing of the Republican Party, which had always viewed him suspiciously.

"It's possible George Bush could be moving more and more to the right," said New Right leader Richard Viguerie, usually one of Bush's toughest critics. "He's got to pass a lot more tests — I mean a great deal more tests — before he'll be believable for myself and others."

For his part, Bush flatly declared, "I'm for Mr. Reagan — blindly."

Yet, doubts persist whether that is the real Bush.

"He's going to have to do something in terms of defining an image of himself," said Rich Bond, one-time deputy chief of staff for Bush and now a political consultant. "He's going to have to stand for something, you know, stake out some issues, territory."

Bond said, "First and foremost, he has to come to some kind of understanding with the president, on a personal basis, that he is going to seek to succeed the president and that there will be times when the vice president will have to be out there speaking as George Bush, presidential candidate, and not George Bush, vice president to Ronald Reagan."

Keene, who worked for Spiro Agnew during his vice presidency, said, "Bush has to project that whatever positions he is taking are his positions...not that they're the president's positions and he's supporting them because that's what he was hired to do. That's the subtle difference. Can he do that? I'd say yes. Will he do it? I'd say maybe."

Memorial reflects difference of Vietnam War

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — The designer of the Vietnam Veteran's Memorial in Washington says she wanted "to make the point that there were no heroes or villains in this war, that it was unlike any other major war in our history."

Maya Ying Lin, a second-year student at Yale University's school of architecture, chose a stark design: two black granite walls sunk into a bank of earth and coming together in a huge V, inscribed with the names of the more than 58,000 Americans killed or missing in the war.

"At first, people said that the memorial was too abstract, too morbid, too inhuman," Ms. Lin recalled last week in an interview with The Associated Press. "Then they went and saw it, saw their faces reflected in the granite between the carved names, and they realized it was the most human kind of memorial that you could have.

"The memorial represented a great maturing in our attitudes towards war. But we've been sliding back over recent years."
— Maya Ying Lin, memorial's designer

"The memorial represented a great maturing in our attitudes towards war," she said, "but we've been sliding back over recent years."

An addition to the memorial, a statue of three soldiers, will be unveiled at the site today. The statue is placed so it appears the soldiers are walking through a small grove toward the memorial.

Ms. Lin, who did not participate in the statue design, said the idea came from "people who wanted to politicize the memorial, to give it a heroic John Wayne image." She said the sculpture was not heroic because the men had "dazed" expressions and would have little effect on her design because it was situated on a plaza out of sight of the monument itself.

After winning a national competition to determine the memorial's design as a senior undergraduate at Yale, Ms. Lin, 25, of Athens, Ohio, designed sets for a professional jazz opera and for a public television program on art. She is currently studying for a master's degree in architecture.

Memorial's visitors leave bits of themselves behind

WASHINGTON (AP) — They come to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial by the thousands. Some cry softly, some run their fingers across the names on the black granite wall, and some leave a part of themselves behind.

Flowers, fresh or plastic; a scruffy teddy bear; medals; leather holsters; fatigues; candles; miniature American flags; beer for a hot day; pictures; handwritten poems encased in plastic. And letters.

Those are just some the memorabilia that visitors place at the foot of the sweeping, V-shaped memorial on which the names of the 58,022 Americans killed or missing in action are engraved.

"People treat that place more like a cemetery than a monument. It's like a grave site," said Bill Clark, an employee of the National Park Service, which is responsible for maintenance at the memorial.

For some of the tourists, reading and seeing the letters and gifts to the Vietnam dead seems to open the floodgate of emotion that marked the divisive war.

Take Lester Paquin's typed letter.

A small group of passers-by stooped or knelt to read the letter; most were crying by the time they had finished.

"Dear Neil, we never had a chance to meet," wrote Paquin, who described his anger that Neil Robert Burnham of Petersham, Mass., had died so young.

But, Paquin wrote: "You found someone who loved you very much...Mary Lou is doing well. She has two beautiful children, a promising career and is now married to a man who is perhaps my dearest friend...Your dying has forever changed our lives."

Burnham died Dec. 17, 1968, at age 20.

"People put all kinds of things here," said Gary Young, a park service volunteer and former Vietnam veteran. "Sometimes they give away their medals to their buddies, saying 'You deserve this more than me.'"

The memorabilia is collected by park service maintenance crews, who make a sweep of the memorial daily. Generally, perishable items, like fresh flowers, wreaths and fruit, are left until they wilt or look unsightly.

The other items are taken to the park service maintenance area near the Potomac River. There it is stuffed, willy-nilly, into boxes, which are locked away in a dark tool room.

Rummaging through the boxes is like going through grandmother's attic, except that the sadness of war lingers.

There are hundreds of little flags, tied by elastic bands; a hat inscribed "Vietnam — Sorry About That"; a poem entitled "The River" by Wayne Alan Stevens of Laurel, Md., who died May 1, 1969; a newspaper clipping of the memorial service held for Col. Robert Hampton, and a piece of paper handed out at a memorial service for Pfc. Ronald Eidson.

The date: Monday, July 21, 1969, at 1230. The place: LZ (landing zone) Debbie, Republic of Vietnam.

Blacks, whites protest treatment of black family

CHICAGO (AP) — About 30 marchers — blacks and whites — protested Saturday against a brick-hurling melee aimed at a black man and his family after they moved into an apartment in an all-white neighborhood. Some onlookers jeered at the demonstration.

Carrying signs reading "Jim Crow in Cicero Must Go" and "You Reap What You Sow," the demonstrators marched for about 45 minutes under the scrutiny of about 50 policemen and about 100 onlookers who gathered across the street.

Some yelled racial slurs at the demonstrators.

"We don't want them, and they don't want us," said one unidentified man in the crowd from the all-white neighborhood, known as "The Island," across the street from suburban Cicero. "And none of this is going to change that."

The black man, Spencer Goffer, a 32-year-old auto mechanic, refused to comment Friday to federal, state and local officials investigating the incident, which occurred Wednesday, four days after Goffer had moved into the house with 28-year-old Patricia Franklin and the couple's 8-year-old son.

Poles can stay in U.S.

DETROIT (AP) — Two Poles who sought political asylum after jumping ship here in August can remain in the United States for at least a year, a federal immigration official said.

After one year, the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service will decide whether Grzegorz Solowiej and Waldemar Kaczmarski must be deported or may stay, INS district director James Montgomery said Friday.

Solowiej, 25, and Kaczmarski, 23, have found homes and jobs since their defection and said they hope to remain permanently in this country. They said they had been active in Poland in the Independent Students Organization, a group they said was allied with the outlawed Solidarity labor movement.

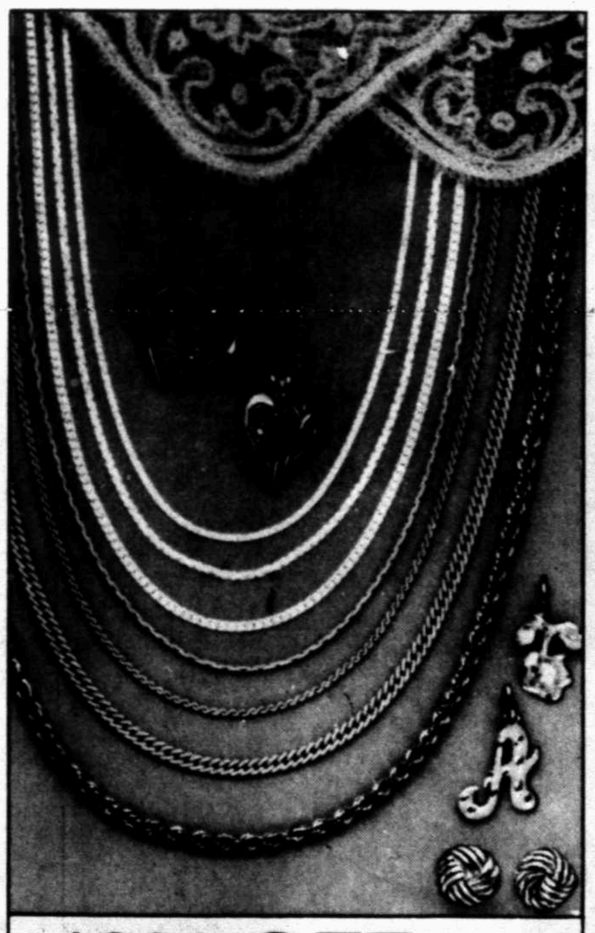

Rockslide closes highway

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A section of scenic State Highway 1 along the Pacific Coast has been closed indefinitely because of a rock slide, the Highway Patrol reported.

The slide occurred Friday night two miles south of Pacifica, where rocks and dirt have closed the steep, winding road dozens of times over the years, and thwarted state Department of Transportation workers' attempts to halt it.

With the coast road out, businesses south of the slide that count on customers from nearby San Francisco will be hurt.

India gropes uneasily toward uncertain future

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH

An Analysis

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The assassination of Indira Gandhi has left the world's most populous democracy groping uneasily toward its future under an untried leader being courted by both superpowers.

Mrs. Gandhi's son and successor as prime minister, Rajiv Gandhi, remains a largely unknown quantity even to the longest-serving foreign diplomats in the Indian capital.

The 40-year-old former airline pilot became his mother's political heir reluctantly, and only after his younger brother, Sanjay, whom she had been grooming as her replacement, was killed in an airplane crash in 1980.

Gandhi, sworn in after his mother was shot on Oct. 31 — allegedly by Sikh members of her official security detail — enjoys the unanimous backing in Parliament of the 478 legislators in his mother's governing Congress Party. He is likely to be elected in the coming week to succeed her as party president.

Taking advantage of the nationwide wave of sympathy for Gandhi, the party leadership almost certainly will go ahead with parliamentary elections due to be held by early January. Most Indian commentators and foreign diplomats predict an easy Gandhi victory.

But Gandhi's period of political grace will probably end after those elections, when the nation and the world watch how he faces India's monumental domestic problems and bears up under conflicting pressures from abroad.

For the past three years, Mrs. Gandhi used her son as her mouthpiece and troubleshooter. He echoed or sharpened his mother's views, but took few initiatives of his own. He invariably endorsed her Soviet-leaning brand of non-alignment, but his personal views on that legacy are not clear.

In the days since her death, he has conspicuously avoided committing himself to anything, saying in discreet remarks to foreign dignitaries only that he wants to continue his mother's policies.

Besides the tilt toward Moscow, those policies recently included no appreciable softening of India's 37-year confrontation with Pakistan and vigorous suppression of the Sikh terrorist campaign for political and religious autonomy.

Last June, that suppression culminated in an Indian army assault on the stronghold established by Sikh extremists in their holiest shrine, the Golden Temple in Amritsar. More than 1,000 people were said to have perished, and the Sikhs swore revenge on Mrs. Gandhi, a Hindu.

Her son so far has ignored renewed pleas for the release of Sikh leaders held without trial since June. Some politicians have urged the release of the Sikh leaders as a sign of conciliation following deaths of more than 1,000 Sikhs at the hands of rampaging Hindu mobs seeking to avenge the assassination.

Gandhi also displayed little enthusiasm for a plea from Pakistan President Mohamad Zia Ul-Haq, who attended Mrs. Gandhi's funeral and then asked her son to help remove some of the hostility from relations between the two countries.

India and Pakistan have fought three wars since the partition of British colonial India in 1947. Among the latest grievances by India is that Pakistan supports Sikh extremists, a charge Islamabad denies.

The conflicting influence of the superpowers is reflected in the India-Pakistan arms race. Shipments of conventional arms come to Pakistan mostly from Western nations and to India mostly from the Soviet Union.

According to the independent International Institute for Strategic Studies, the two countries together spent more than $27 billion on defense during the past four years, not counting investments in nuclear power plants with supposed weapons potential.

Many of India's Sikhs find they can't go home again

"How can I live here again? I see ghosts in the day! How can I cook in the same house where my husband was burned alive?"

— Satnami Bai, Sikh widow

TRILOKPURI, India (AP) — Although thousands of Sikhs are leaving refugee camps, many say the memory of last week's slaughter is still too strong for them to return to the homes where their loved ones died.

"I only came back for the photo," said 25-year-old Hukmi Bai, clutching a snapshot of her husband, one of the more than 1,000 Sikhs killed by Hindu mobs following the Oct. 31 assassination of Indira Gandhi.

"My husband was so young and loved me so much," she mumbled in a voice that seemed drained of spirit. "No family will ever return to this cursed place."

The young widow was among 30 Sikhs, most of them women, who returned Saturday with an army escort to retrieve what was left of their belongings in this New Delhi suburb, scene of one of the bloodiest confrontations between Sikhs and Hindus.

Indian officials say 98 people, all Sikhs, died in the neighborhood.

Those who survived fled to a nearby camp guarded by Indian army troops who were rushed to the New Delhi area when police failed to curb the rioting.

The Sikhs of Trilokpuri, a shabby neighborhood of small hovels on the eastern edge of the capital, said they would never return here to live.

"How can I live here again?" another widow, Satnami Bai, wailed. "I see ghosts in the day! How can I cook in the same house where my husband was burned alive?"

She shook her head as she futilely scoured the charred ruins of her home for something worth saving.

"They have left nothing," she said. "They took away all our utensils."

Anand Tigga, a student volunteer relief worker, said he helped Sikhs retrieve the bodies of their dead so the survivors could perform cremation rites "with whatever remained."

"These people have lost their moorings," he said. "They can't settle here again, but they have no plans for the future, either."

The Indian government has promised to allow refugees to remain in camps until they feel secure enough to return to their homes. But hundreds of homes were burned to the ground in the rioting. Many of the poorer Sikhs have nowhere to go.

In the trip back to their former neighborhood, the Sikhs gathered bits and pieces of personal effects from the rubble and loaded them into the army truck. A few women clutched shawls and sacks of rice distributed by relief agencies.

Chandan Singh, a 27-year-old shopkeeper, said he hid in the house of a Hindu friend on the night of the killings. He and his wife and their year-old son survived, he said, but the shop was destroyed.

Gandhi's ashes scattered in Himalayas

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The ashes of slain Prime Minister Indira Gandhi were taken early Sunday from the house where she spent her childhood to be scattered across the Himalayan Mountains she loved.

Mrs. Gandhi's son and successor, Rajiv Gandhi, joined two male cousins in lifting three urns from beneath a flowering tree in the garden of Teen Murti house.

They placed the ashes on a gun carriage which took them to the airport for a flight by helicopter to Hindon Air Base in northern India.

At Hindon, the urns which had been on public view in New Delhi will join 32 others which had been on display in cities throughout the country. Millions paid their respects to the woman who ruled India for 15 of the last 18 years.

The ashes will be placed on an AN-12 military transport plane, which will scatter them over the mountains in accordance with Mrs. Gandhi's request.

Mrs. Gandhi was assassinated Oct.31 by two gunmen identified as Sikh bodyguards. Her death touched off a four-day riot in New Delhi and elsewhere in northern India in which at least 1,000 people died.

New Delhi's police commissioner was fired Saturday, and his successor vowed to restore public confidence shaken by police failure to quell four days of deadly rioting.

Thousands of Sikhs, meanwhile, continued to leave the refugee camps where they fled during the spree of murder, arson and looting by Hindu mobs following Mrs. Gandhi's assassination.

The new commissioner, Suryakant S. Jog, said the public lost faith in the 30,000-man New Delhi police force after Hindu policemen stood by or in some cases joined in the carnage by revenge-seeking mobs.

"We will regroup the police to win back the confidence of the people," Jog told the United News of India news agency in Bombay, where he had been special police inspector-general for Maharashtra state.

Jog replaces Subhash C. Tandon, who is being transferred to the desert state of Rajasthan. Jog led the Indian forces that took control of the Portuguese territory of Goa near Bombay in 1961.

Calcutta's police commissioner, Nirupam Som, was removed from his post on Friday following allegations of police negligence. A night curfew was lifted Saturday in Calcutta, India's largest city with 9.2 million people, but army and paramilitary troops still patrolled tense areas there.

The riots have caused a loss of about 1 billion rupees (nearly $100 million) to the Indian transport industry, the Economic Times reported Saturday.

Indian exports are likely to be harmed by the widespread destruction of trucks and factories in northern India, the respected newspaper quoted commerce ministry officials as saying.

The export setback is expected to mainly affect engineering, electronic and knitwear industries, the officials said.

The paper said the burning of at least 2,000 trucks, 350 buses, 1,000 taxis and 300 scooter-cabs had partially crippled transport services in northern India and rendered more than 16,000 people jobless.

"The real pinch will be felt once the situation returns to normal. There will be an acute shortage of vehicles to move essential goods and this will result in prices skyrocketing," said Chittaranjan Das, secretary general of the All-India Motor Transport Congress.

Shortage of eggs, butter, cooking gas, medicines and other commodities transported by truck have been reported in the Indian capital.

Also on Saturday, the Indian Police Service Association expressed "anguish and shame" that two policemen had killed the prime minister. The association urged the government to fix blame for "the grave security lapse."

By official count, more than 600 people were killed in the capital alone, but many Sikhs and some leading newspapers say the figure should be much higher.

Islamic mediators try to arrange Iran-Iraq truce

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Islamic mediators will try again to arrange a one-month truce between Iran and Iraq in hopes of setting up peace talks, diplomatic sources in Bahrain and Saudi Arabia said on Saturday.

Sources close to the Saudi Arabian-based secretariat of the 45-member Organization of Islamic Conference said representatives of a seven-nation peace committee have been authorized to visit Iran and Iraq this month.

The committee, headed by Gambian President Dawda Jawara, has representatives from Senegal, Turkey, Guinea, Pakistan, Bangadesh, and Malaysia. The Islamic organization's secretary-general, Habib Chatti, and Palestine Liberation Organization Chairman Yasser Arafat are also members.

Organization spokesmen refused to discuss details of the proposal.

However, Palestinian sources said Arafat has offered a plan calling for a cease-fire and an Islamic disengagement force between Iraq and Iran. They said Iraq has accepted it but Iran did not respond. Iran consistently has demanded the ouster of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein as a condition for peace.

Diplomatic sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said a "set of new proposals" would be offered to Iran and Iraq, which have been at war for more than four years.

The assassination of Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi on Oct. 31 dimmed hopes for mediation efforts by non-aligned nations. Mrs. Gandhi was chairman of the 101-member group.

"The late Mrs. Gandhi was planning visits to Baghdad and Tehran before the end of the year, as part of the non-aligned nations mediation efforts," said one official of the Organization of Islamic Conference. "As things stand now, the Islamic mediation is the only option left," he said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Iraq said in a war communique issued on Saturday that its soldiers killed 12 Iranians in border skirmishes.

The communique said eight Iranian soldiers were killed by Iraqi artillery attacks in the southern sector of the 733-mile front. Iraqi front line forces and border gunners killed four Iranian soldiers in the central sector of the front, it said. Iraq also reported that its jets hit unspecified concentrations of Iranian troops and equipment.

Scarab 'beetle of gods'

Ancient Egyptians regarded the scarab, a black, medium-size beetle that lives in or near animal dung, as the "beetle of the gods."

The scarab symbolized the sun, rebirth and life itself and was one of the characters in the hieroglyphic alphabet.

British security forces on alert against possible IRA terrorism

LONDON (AP) — Hundreds of police mingled with crowds on Saturday for the Lord Mayor's Procession, one of London's biggest annual spectacles, and security forces throughout Britain stayed on high alert for a possible IRA attack.

Uniformed officers were spotted at 10-foot intervals all along the two-mile parade route from the Guildhall, ancient seat of the City of London government, to Mansion House, the lord mayor's official residence.

A crowd estimated by organizers at 250,000 turned out to watch the nationally televised procession of 4,000 marchers, including representatives of every branch of the military, some 50 gaily decorated floats and dozens of ceremonial bands.

There has been a heightened fear of an attempt on the life of a major political figure or member of the royal family since the Oct. 12 bombing of a hotel in which Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and her Cabinet narrowly escaped assassination.

The Irish Republican Army, which is waging a terrorist campaign to force Britain out of Northern Ireland, claimed responsibility for the hotel bombing, which killed four people were killed and injured 32.

Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative Party was holding its annual conference when the bomb exploded at the resort in Brighton.

The Defense Ministry disclosed on Friday that all military bases in Britain had been placed a higher level of alert than usual.

Press Association, the British domestic news agency, said there were intelligence reports that the IRA was planning more bombings in Britain.

A naval bomb-disposal unit blew up a suspect canister sealed with white tape, which was found Thursday at a Royal Navy ordnance depot in Hampshire on England's southern coast.

Scotland Yard refused to discuss details of Saturday's police operation. But one of the precautions was the sealing of all mailboxes along the parade route.

The three-hour procession, led by the newly installed lord mayor, Sir Alan Traill, in the traditional red-and-gilt horse-drawn carriage, passed without incident under brilliant autumn skies.

The colorful ceremony dates to 1215 when King John agreed to accept the City of London's mayor on condition he formally present himself to the king or his judges. The annual procession draws many tourists.

Special security precautions were also taken for Sunday's Remembrance Day services in honor of Britain's war dead.

Mrs. Thatcher and other top politicians planned to join members of the royal family for a wreath-laying ceremony at the Cenotaph monument near the Houses of Parliament. Press reports said scores of policemen were assigned to work on Sunday, many of them would be armed and stationed on rooftops.

Armed police and soldiers in camouflage gear threw a security cordon around Britain's royal family Saturday night as Queen Elizabeth II attended the annual Festival of Remembrance for the nation's war dead.

Scotland Yard seeks Irish woman in connection with Brighton bombing

LONDON (AP) — Scotland Yard said on Saturday it was seeking a 28-year-old Irish woman in connection with the bombing last month of a hotel in Brighton where Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and members of her Cabinet were staying.

The Irish Republican Army, which is waging a terrorist campaign to end British control in Northern Ireland, said it did the bombing.

A Scotland Yard spokesman, Martin Habgood, said the woman, whom he identified as Evelyn Glenholme, "is wanted by anti-terrorist branch officers" for questioning, and that an arrest warrant had been issued in London and provided to Irish authorities.

The Sunday Times of London called Miss Glenholme said she may have been behind other bomb attacks on the British mainland.

The newspaper said Miss Glenholme, a former Belfast resident, had been traced to a public housing complex in Dundalk, in the Irish republic, just a few miles from the border with Northern Ireland.

Irish Prime Minister Garret Fitzgerald is a staunch opponent of IRA violence, but the arrest of suspects wanted in Britain is a sensitive issue in the Irish republic.

Many Irish sympathize with the IRA's goal of severing Northern Ireland from Britain and uniting the Protestant-dominated province with the heavily Roman Catholic republic.

The Brighton bombing on Oct. 12 destroyed several stories of the Grand Hotel, where Mrs. Thatcher and many of her Cabinet ministers were staying during a Conservative Party convention.

The blast demolished her suite's bathroom, which she had left two minutes earlier. Mrs. Thatcher was unhurt but four people were killed and 32 others, including Trade Secretary Norman Tebbit, were injured.

The Sunday Times quoted unidentified British government sources as saying Miss Glenholme is "one of the IRA's most skillful planners." It quoted one of its sources as saying: "We think she is very, very dangerous. She may be the brains behind these attacks."

Habgood said detectives confirmed that they want to question her about other bombings.

These include a nail-bomb attack outside the Chelsea Army barracks in southwest London that killed two civilians and injured 37 people, including 27 soldiers; an explosion that cost former Royal Marine Commandant-General Sir Stuart Pringle his leg; and a bomb planted in a fast food restaurant on London's Oxford Street which killed a disposal expert.

Anti-Marxist guerrillas want role in peace talks

JAMBA, Angola (AP) — Bush fighter Jonas Savimbi says regional peace talks involving South Africa, Angola and the United States will fail unless his anti-Marxist guerrillas get a seat at the negotiations.

Savimbi summoned 45 reporters to his remote headquarters of thatch and reed huts Friday and told them that he will throw thousands of additional soldiers into the war against Angola's pro-Soviet government if his group, the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, remains excluded from talks.

"There is no settlement without UNITA," he said.

Savimbi said UNITA welcomed the re-election of "sympathetic" President Reagan. "At this camp there was jubilation," he said. But he accused the U.S. State Department of ambiguity concerning UNITA's role and the presence of Cuban troops in Angola.

"We want a strong position concerning the Cubans. They are invaders in our country and must leave," Savimbi said. "We want the State Department to clarify its attitude. We have not understood what they are doing in four years."

Savimbi said he wants to make his first visit to the United States since late 1981 to explain his views.

The United States has been trying for five years to undercut Soviet influence and ease the complex racial and ideological conflicts in southern Africa. It wants a withdrawal of the 30,000 Cuban troops in Angola supporting President Jose Eduardo dos Santos.

Other U.S. goals for the region include:

— An end to the Angolan civil war.

— Withdrawal of white-ruled South Africa's troops from southern Angola.

— Restraint by South-West Africa People's Organization guerrillas based in Angola.

— Independence for South-West Africa, also called Namibia, under a United Nations-sponsored plan to remove it from South African control.

U.S. officials reported progress on the Cuban issue following a U.S.-South African meeting 10 days ago in the Cape Verde islands. But Savimbi complained that he has been left out of the negotiations and said UNITA's last contact with the State Department was in March.

UNITA's nearly 40,000 fighters, aided by South Africa, operate in more than two-thirds of Angola. "Only the Cubans can stop UNITA at this stage," Savimbi said.

But Savimbi, a guerrilla fighter for 17 years, first against Portuguese colonialists and then Angola's Marxist leaders, said he feels diplomatically vulnerable and fears UNITA is being squeezed out of negotiations on the future of the region.

Savimbi said U.S. negotiators, led by Assistant Secretary of State Chester Crocker, apparently believe that dos Santos is likely to send the Cubans home if UNITA does not become too strong.

"I don't want to rock the boat. I want to be part of the boat," Savimbi said. He said his goal is a provisional coalition with the governing Marxist political faction, followed by elections for a multiparty democracy.

To reach Savimba's headquarters, reporters flew for four hours from Pretoria, the South African capital, to a dirt airstrip and drove for three hours along rutted trails to Jamba. They arrived Thursday at the end of a special congress of 400 party leaders. A lack of communications prevented reporters from filing stories until they returned to Pretoria Saturday.

A party statement read by Savimbi to 1,000 soldiers and 4,000 spectators said negotiators could not ignore UNITA without "grave risks."

"If we are not part of the settlement, we will take advantage of it," he said later. "On Dec. 20, 7,000 troops...plus commandos...will be ready to close on Luanda strongly."

Most observers doubt that UNITA, lacking an air force, could capture Luanda, the capital of Angola. But the guerrillas say they could make life dangerous in the city with attacks like the one a month ago that cut water and electricity for several days.

Savimbi also said UNITA would not be crippled if a regional settlement closed its main supply route from South Africa because Arab states and other African countries would help supply the rebels.

Salvadoran air force bombs rebel-held positions

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The air force bombed rebel positions on battle-scarred Guazapa volcano on Saturday, one day after airborne troops drove leftist guerrillas from a nearby government stronghold, military sources said.

At least 10 explosions were heard in San Salvador on Saturday morning. Military sources said they were bombs dropped by four U.S.-made A-37 fighter planes on the slopes of Guazapa.

Meanwhile, soldiers from the 1st Infantry Brigade followed up on Friday's 11-hour battle for control of Suchitoto, a government stronghold, by sweeping outlying areas. The military said 150 people had been killed or wounded in the fighting on Friday.

WORLD in brief

Chad invites Amnesty International to nation

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — The Chad government has invited Amnesty International to come to Chad to prove its claims that government troops have murdered hundreds of civilians in the southern part of the country.

The invitation, carried by the official Chad press agency ATP on Friday, came a day after the London-based human rights organization charged that the forces of President Hissene Habre have killed prisoners, randomly shot unarmed civilians and once burned people alive in a church.

In an article headlined "Amnesty International in the Service of the Enemies of Chad," ATP denied the allegations and said the group "did not take the trouble to verify the slanders of corrupt Chadians."

Students find fossils

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — Glasgow University students on a field trip in England found the fossilized remains of a 200 million-year-old reptile, one of their teachers, geologist Gordon Curry, says.

Curry said Friday that the fossil of an ichthyosaur, a long-extinct, dolphin-like sea creature, was discovered in a cliff face at Robin Hood's Bay on the north Yorkshire coast last month.

The 13 students removed the fossil in blocks of rock.

"It is very unusual to find what seems to be a complete skeleton," said Curry.

He said he hopes to raise the more than $1,000 it will take to remove the fossil from the rocks and piece it together.

Tamils killed in India

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Seven Tamils were killed and 50 were injured when Sri Lankan government troops fired on passersby in the northern city of Jaffna, the United News of India reported Saturday.

In a dispatch from Colombo, capital of Sri Lanka, the news agency quoted witnesses as saying a truckload of uniformed troops on Friday fired indiscriminately at an intersection in the heart of Jaffna.

The report said the National Security Ministry in Colombo denied knowledge of the incident.

Uganda ends transactions

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — President Milton Obote has suspended foreign exchange transactions for two weeks to reassess the east African country's hard currency auctions, the state radio reported Saturday.

Obote said the action was taken to review the "strengths and weaknesses" of the weekly auctions introduced in August 1982 to provide U.S. dollars for businessmen who might otherwise resort to the black market.

Search for waste site ends in New Mexico

Transuranics to be buried

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

CARLSBAD, N.M. — Most of the materials to be buried in salt 2,150 feet underground at the WIPP site are radioactive materials known as transuranics.

Transuranics are not classified as low-level radwastes: they will be half as radioactive in 25,000 years and be emitting hazardous levels of radiation for about 10 times that long, according to experts at the WIPP site.

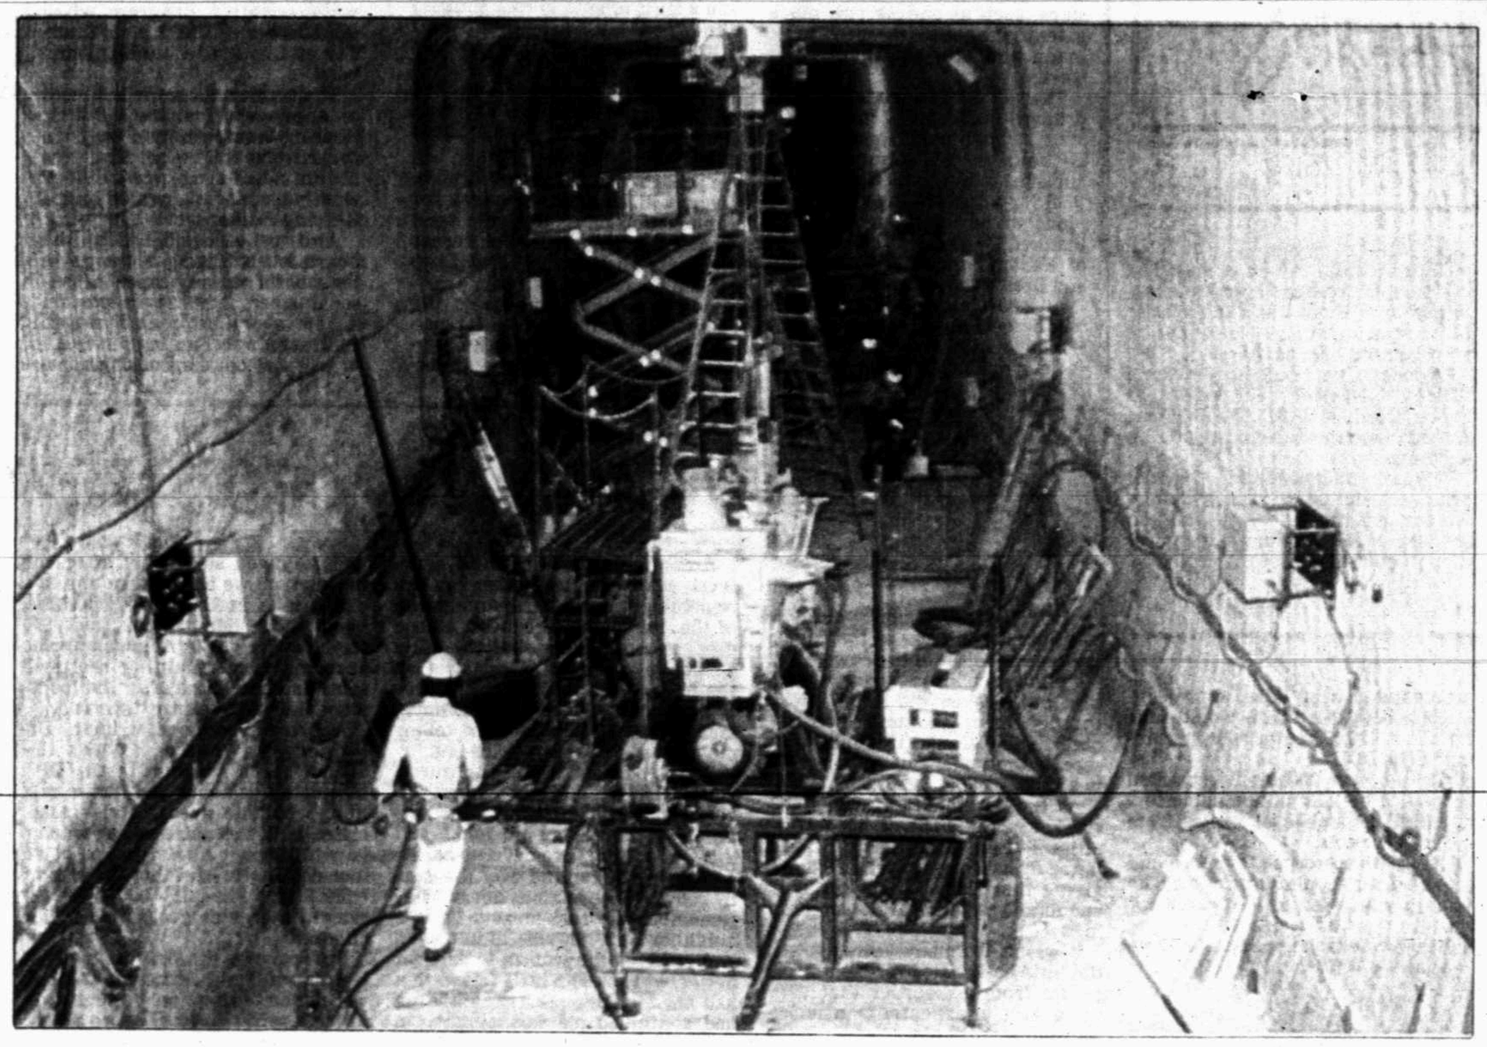

Nor are they grouped with other high-level radwastes: They decay more slowly than high-level wastes, but emit less radiation than other high-level remnants of nuclear applications.

Transuranics result from the reaction of fuel in a nuclear reactor. When the fuel — uranium oxide pellets — reacts, the uranium atoms release heat as they split.

Eventually, the fuel is spent and becomes waste. This spent fuel contains the transuranics, most of which currently are being stored at reactor sites.

Other forms of transuranic wastes are disposable items, such as protective clothing, equipment and tools, contaminated in nuclear weapons production over the past 40 years.

Please see WASTES, Page 2B

Department of Energy Photos

Currently, there are no radioactive wastes at the WIPP site. Sandia National Laboratories in Albuquerque continues to test these underground rooms mined from bedded salt formations for their reaction to heat and stress in anticipation of disposal in 1988.

Tests begin at Carlsbad

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

CARLSBAD, N.M. — About 170 miles west of Midland in southeast New Mexico lies the nation's first burial site for radioactive wastes left over from government projects.

The Waste Isolation Pilot Plant, located about 37 miles southeast of Carlsbad, is the result of a nationwide search for a place to put the remnants of nuclear projects in defense and research and development.

The Department of Energy plans to bury transuranic wastes in tunnels about 2,150 feet underground in hopes of proving they have found a safe way to dispose of the hazardous wastes. While the project here is still in the testing stages, DOE officially announced its intentions to construct the WIPP in July 1983.

Also, there are plans to test the disposal of radwastes classified as high level at the site. These more hazardous materials are to be removed when the site is closed.

But when the site's projected 25 years in operations end, the transuranic wastes stored in the 200 acres of underground tunnels are to remain.

Construction of the project began in September 1983 under DOE's direction. No waste is presently on site, pending completion of construction of the waste handling facility, tunnel system and in-depth groundwater studies.

The tunnels are being burrowed near the center of about six miles of bedded salt in the Capitan Reef, which also contains Carlsbad Caverns, and lies on the west edge of the Permian Basin.

One dilemma facing DOE and the construction contractor, The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, is where to put the 600 tons of salt taken daily as drilling continues. About 90 boreholes totaling 95,000 feet of drilling already have been made.

The WIPP site was chosen because of the salt formations, which tests have determined to have been free of water for millions of years. Other pluses of salt formations are the ability to self-seal the excavations and surround the wastes, and the ease in mining.

On the negative side, salt is highly soluble when it comes in contact with water. It also is susceptible to corrosion. Key fears in handling radioactive materials are that they might come in contact with water and contaminate water supplies or escape their barriers and enter the environment.

Many studies have been done to determine the potential harm, including a Safety Analysis Report required by the DOE, which the state can use in reviewing the project.

"The results of this multi-volume work and of many additional studies demonstrate that any potential adverse impacts of the WIPP project will not be significant and represent an acceptable environmental impact when balanced against the benefits to be derived from the safe isolation of radioactive waste," said an April 1984 DOE report.

While groups, including Citizens for Alternatives to Radioactive Dumping disagree with this opinion, the wastes are scheduled for isolation in these underground tunnels beginning in 1988.

Most wastes to be buried at the WIPP site will come from government facilities in Hanford, Wash., the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory near Idaho Falls, the Rocky Flats Weapons Plant near Denver, the Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico, the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee and the Savannah River Plant in South Carolina.

Trucks and railroad cars will carry the wastes, which are to be isolated from the environment in specially designed containers known as TRUPACTs — transuranic package transporters.

WIPP site draws some opposition in area

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

CARSLBAD, N.M. — Not all New Mexicans are comfortable with the prospect of radioactive waste being buried beneath the state's surface.

One group in particular, Citizens for Alternatives to Radioactive Dumping (CARD), has been fighting the Wast Isolation Pilot Project since 1976.

During its eight years in existence, CARD has collected about 50,000 signatures from New Mexicans opposed to the project being located near Carlsbad and the southeastern border of the state, according to CARD's Bob Aly.

Soon after Gov. Toney Anaya took office in 1982, CARD presented him with petitions bearing 15,000 signatures of voters opposed to the project championed by U.S. Sen. Pete Domenici and Carslbad Mayor Walter Gerrells.

"The reason we oppose the project is that the geology is unsuitable," said Aly. Tests prior to the site selection were to have ruled out the potential for the wastes mixing with groundwater.

But Aly said that water is flowing through the Rustler formation, located above the formation where the waste will be placed.

When shafts were drilled during construction, water ran from this aquifer into the repository at the rate of one gallon per minute, said Aly.

The Environmental Impact Statement prepared prior to final site approval projected it would take radioactive wastes infiltrating the aquifer about 30,000 years to reach the Pecos River.

But a scientist with the laboratory providing scientific support for the project has since found that the contaminated water could reach the river in 30 days.

CARD also charges that a geological fault filled with brine water and hydrogen sulfide gas lies below the underground tunnel system. A breakthrough in the fault would send the gas and brine water into the tunnels, up to the surface and into the aquifer, according to the group's studies.

"We're just really terrified that if they put anything in the ground, it's not going to stay there," Aly said.

"If the Pecos River is contaminated, we're talking about the the Rio Grande being contaminated all the way to the Gulf of New Mexico," warned Aly.

New Mexico waived its right to veto WIPP going into operation. Licensing by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission is not necessary because of the special authorization granted by Congress.

Salt beds near Lyons, Kansas were studied first, but rejected when that site's geology was found unsuitable for the project. Aly said the DOE looked at nine other sites before coming to New Mexico.

"The reason it's in New Mexico is this is a poor state," Aly said. "It doesn't have much political clout."

He pointed to the struggling potash mining industry, which historically has been the major industry in the Carlsbad area. Several of the potash mines near the WIPP site have closed down as prices abroad have undercut the local product.

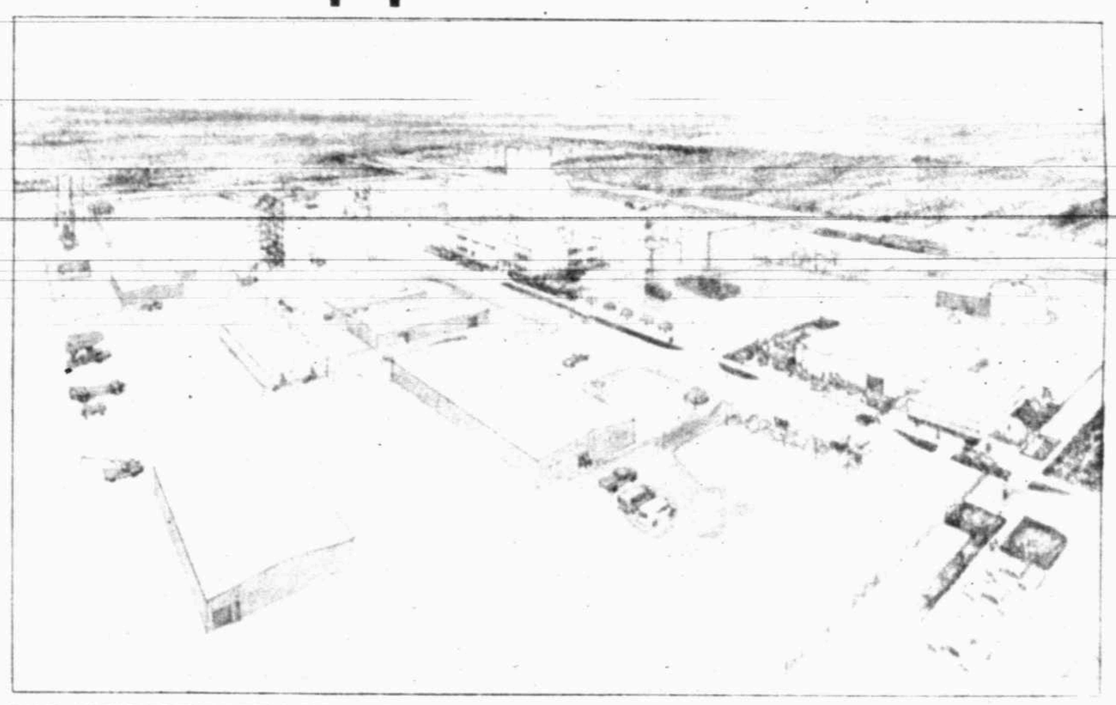

The $430 million already spent and $600 milllion budgeted through 1988 for the project should provide a boost for the struggling economy. About 600 workers are to be employed during the project's construction, with the finished plant to support a 260-person workforce.

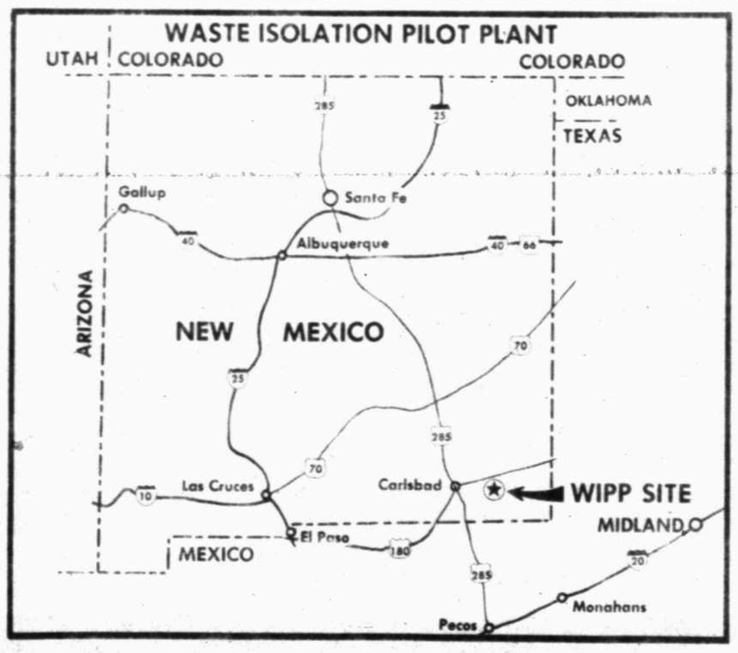

But Aly noted the technical experts and building contractors have been brought in from outside the state. "All they're going to hire out of the community are common laborers for lower paying jobs," he said.

Still, adverse reaction from the state's one million residents has not been overwhelming. "The problem I think is that people really have not been educated as to the project," said Aly. "I just don't believe they've been given the whole story."

"They can't tell us a better way, except to do nothing," charged Jack Johnson of Westinghouse, technical support coordinator at the WIPP site.

Please see CARD, Page 2B

The Waste Isolation Pilot Plant, above, located about 170 miles west of Midland, is the nation's first repository for radioactive wastes remaining from defense projects. Above the ground, about 250 acres surrounded by a 10,000-acre buffer zone will make up the WIPP site. About 2,150 feet underground, 200 acres of underground rooms are being mined in which the waste is to be placed. The facility is located near Carlsbad in southeastern New Mexico.

GARY OTT

It's time America got off Jimmy Carter's back

Now that the election is over and the American people have decided to keep Ronald Reagan on the job, I propose we let Jimmy Carter retire in peace.

Granted, it has been great fun (not to mention, convenient) using him as our favorite scapegoat for the past eight years, but the time has come to get off his back. If for no other reason, common decency demands it.

This is not to say he was a great president. History will determine that. But the point is, when a man gets fired from his job in front of millions of people on national television we ought to show a little class and compassion by letting him drift quietly into the background.

We didn't do that with Carter. We blamed him for everything that went wrong while he was president and that was justified. Like the old saying goes, "If you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen."

What doesn't seem particularly fair, however, is that we continued to blame him for the next four years when he was doing nothing more dangerous than building cabinets in his workshop. And, adding insult to injury, we did it on a hit-and-miss basis.

For example, when the budget deficit skyrocketed, it was Carter's fault. When the country went into its worst recession since the Great Depression, sending the unemployment rate soaring into double digits, it was blamed on the "previous administration's economic policies."

Which is fine, I suppose. But here's the catch. When good things happened, such as lower inflation and declining interest rates, no one talked about those same economic policies of the previous administration that were supposed to be influencing today's economy.

Now, I'm not a very smart person but it seems to me that if you are going to take credit for good things you ought be man enough to take the blame for the bad ones. Conversely, if you blame others for what goes wrong then, for crying out loud, give them some credit when something goes right.

That's logical, isn't it? Of course, it is.

But it didn't happen that way with Carter. No indeed. We made him our favorite whipping boy for eight years and apparently felt no guilt about doing it. Well, the time has come to stop. We simply must find new villians. What we have done to poor Jimmy amounts to a form of cruel and unusual punishment. We treat convicted felons more humanely. We must cut the man some slack.

Besides, some of us sorta liked him. I can't say exactly why, but we had our reasons. OK, if you insist, I'll list a few:

— He was friends with Willie Nelson and even let him play his guitar at the White House. Any president willing to invite a bearded grandfather who wore a ponytail over to his house for an evening of country music and barbecue is OK by me.

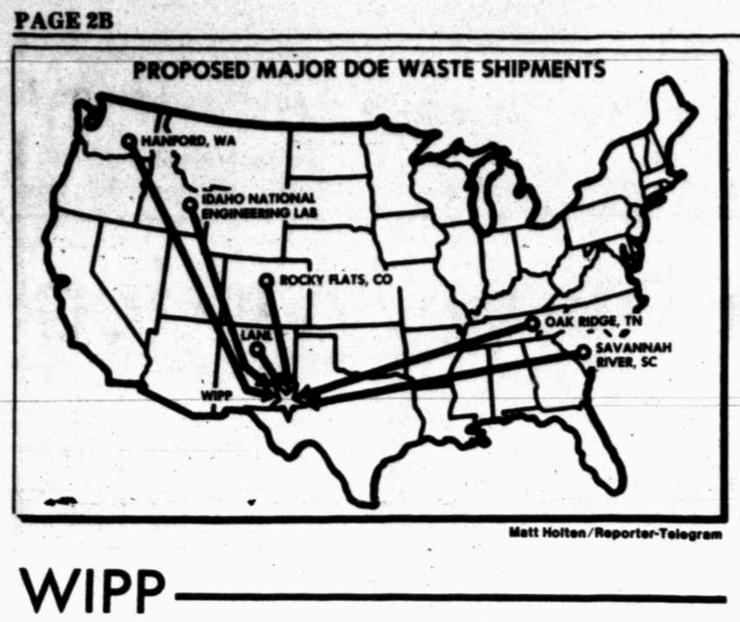

— He was a Southern white man who had black friends before it was fashionable. Having spent time in Georgia myself (back when segregated bathrooms and separate water fountains were commonplace), I know how risky that could be.

— He went to church even when there wasn't an election coming up. And, more impressively, he practiced his religious beliefs without cozying up to the Bible-thumping New Right.

— When he first arrived in Washington he enrolled his child in a public school instead of some snooty private academy for rich kids. A symbolic gesture? Of course. But it was a symbol the rest of us needed to see.

No, Jimmy Carter may not be remembered as a great president, but he is finishing up his second term as national scapegoat. For that, he deserves our thanks and a chance to retire peacefully.

WIPP

The trucks will follow specified routes to the WIPP site and enter from the north on what is now the main highway from Hobbs to Carlsbad. The DOE and state will be requesting $58 million from Congress for upgrading the state's roads along WIPP routes.

DOE literature emphasizes the unlikelihood of any accident in transit. The TRUPACT container weighs 33,000 pounds and can carry 17,000 pounds of waste. An outer steel box is separated from an inner steel container by 8 inches of rigid plastic foam which serves as a shock absorber and heat barrier.

A recent fire resistance test on a TRUPACT failed, according to Bruce Martin of CARD. The DOE has agreed to aid the state in responding to emergencies.

"We're going to design a model plant, a model operation which anyone can pick up and copy," said Jack Johnson of Westinghouse, technical support coordinator of the project.

WASTES

Dangers from all radioactive materials include exposure to heat and radiation, which have been linked to cancer and other diseases. Although not explosive, radioactive materials are poisonous if taken into the bloodstream, according to Department of Energy literature.

In 1980, 10 million cubic feet of high-level wastes (in which transuranics are found) had already accumulated from defense projects. If solidified, this waste would take up about 670,000 cubic feet, according to the DOE.

By the year 2000, it is estimated there will be 1.13 million cubic feet of solidified high-level wastes from defense projects.

It was this prospect of more and more waste accumulating with no place to put it led to the search for an underground site to test the underground isolation method to be used at the WIPP site.

CARD

Aly said CARD advocated reduction of radwastes to ease the problem with growing quantities."Once they put it in the ground, they'll essentially lose control of it," he said.

Another alternative being studied is subsea disposal about four miles below the ocean's surface in thick sediments, but a feasibility study will not be completed until 1988, with a demonstration scheduled for after the turn of the century.

"They've declared the state a national sacrifice area," he said. "Essentially, they don't care what happens."

DEATHS

Clifford A. McDaniel

Services for Clifford Allan McDaniel, 62, of Midland will be at 2 p.m. Sunday at the Ellis Chapel with the Rev. Roy R. Roach officiating. Burial will follow at Fairview Cemetary under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home. McDaniel died Friday in an Odessa Hospital.

He was born Nov. 25, 1921, in Tillamook, Ore. He served in the U.S. Army during World War II in the Pacific Theatre of Operations in Siapan.

Survivors include his wife, Lottie Fay McDaniel of Midland; one son, Richard McDaniel of Oregon; four daughters, Martha McDaniel, Linda McDaniel, Brenda McDaniel, all of California; and Rebecca McDaniel of Oregon; three step-daughters, Mrs Jodie Derryberry of Big Spring; Mrs. Johnnie Aaron of Snyder; and Mrs. Carol Stringer of Midland; his parents, Clara and Lucien McDaniel of Stroud, Okla.; two brothers and four sisters; seven grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Pallbearers are Johnny Bragg, Terry Hodges, Cecil Vest, Neil Truex, Rip Singlton, John Holt, Lawrence Reeves, Bob Langerfeld, Don Richter, Dick Ward and Tom Ward.

Bernie A. Henson

BROWNFIELD — Bernie Allen Henson, 79, of Odessa, father of Charles Henson of Midland, died Friday in an Odessa hospital following a lengthy illness.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Monday in the Brownfield Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. E.K. Shepherd, senior adult minister of the First Baptist Church of Brownfield, officiating. Burial will be in Terry County Cemetery under direction of Brownfield Funeral Home.

Henson was born Feb. 13, 1905, in Choctaw, Okla., was raised in Henryetta, Okla., and was married to Addie Mae Ivson on Nov. 29, 1929, in Hollis, Okla.

The couple moved to Tahoka in 1946 and then to Brownfield one year later.

He retired as a roughneck in 1968 and moved to Odessa that year.

Other survivors include his wife; three sons, Bob Henson of Seminole, Clay Henson of Odessa, and Kermit Henson of Farmington, N.M.; four daughters, Joan Brown and Ira Stephens, both of Roswell, N.M., Avone Buchanan of Clairmont, Calif., and Linda Ledbetter of Woodrow; a sister, Mable Hamilton of Nacona; a brother, Leroy Henson of Denver City; 26 grandchildren and 23 great-grandchildren.

Council to consider airport improvements

Midland City Council will explore ways to proceed with proposed improvements at Midland Regional Airport when the panel convenes at 10 a.m. Tuesday at City Hall.

The council has been exploring what improvements and expansions, such as adding two more gates to the concourse, need to be made and how to finance the work.

The rest of the agenda will deal primarily with zoning matters.

At 2 p.m. a public hearing will be held on the request being appealed to the council by Robert Pool for a zone change from PD, planned district, to an Amended Planned District, on the east side of Midland Drive at Crestridge and Crestwood Avenues.

At 2:30 p.m. a public hearing will be held on a request by D.L. Hannifin and Robert H. Hannifin for a zone change from IP-1 and IP-3, industrial park, to PD, planned district, on the north side of Sloan Field Blvd. in the Industrial Park Regional Air Terminal.

The council also will continue its consideration on a zone change request by Loyd Freeman on a tract of land in east Midland between Mulberry Lane and Orchard Lane. At the previous meeting, the council had no problem with the zone change but needed a clarification if Freeman was still to provide storage sheds on the mobile home lots.

Scharbauer Brothers Corporation will bring its request for annexation of an 82.4-acre tract located at the southwest corner of State Highway 191 and Loop 250 to the council.

Various amendments to the City Code to revise fees for permits, applications and other services administered by the Inspection Division will be submitted for the council's approval.

Housing Authority

Housing Authority of the city of Midland will hear a report on a weatherization program when the board meets at 2 p.m. Thursday at City Hall Council Chambers.

The commissioners will be told of approval of a State Public Housing Weatherization Program for Hillcrest Manor. The low income housing project for elderly persons is operated by the Housing Authority.

Also to be considered by the board is instituting a charge to tenants for making copies of personal papers, hearing a report on an elevator and considering a contract for accounting services.

A report on the housing rehabilitation program will be presented.

MISD Trustees

The Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees will take no action Tuesday concerning the district's present grading system, MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi reported Friday.

Based on information received from the Texas Education Agency, Baressi said the State Board of Education will take testimony concerning the topic during a public hearing Dec. 1.

Action should be taken on the subject by January, according to Baressi.

Board members Tuesday will present a summary of the district's attendance and dropout statistics for the first six weeks of the 1984-85 school year.

Family calls boy's progress miracle

Associated Press

BROWNWOOD, Texas — He likes to sit quietly in a car at the edge of the road and gaze at the cows.

For most children, a cow is just a cow, but to 7-year-old Koby Shields, the delight of his young life is to observe the passive tranquility and serene atmosphere of cows grazing in a field.

As they watch their son's eyes sparkle at the sight of his favorite animal, Pam and Larry Shields inwardly voice a prayer of thanksgiving that Koby is showing more and more animation at his surroundings.

It wasn't too many years ago that the little boy battled for his life, suffering from a disorder that came upon him unexpectedly when he was four months old.

Koby was born a normal baby. He cooed, gurgled, laughed, cried, noticed people and watched, fascinated by his crib toys. There was no warning that at four months everything would change.

It was an ordinary day, Pam Shields remembered. She was busy in the kitchen while her 4-year-old daughter played in another room. Suddenly she heard some strange noise coming from the bedroom.

Shock and disbeljef were her first reactions when she saw Koby, blue in the face, apparently choking.

"After I got to him I noticed almost immediately that even though he was not choking, his arms and legs were making little movements. I remember carrying him to the couch, putting him on his side, and opening his mouth to see if the airways were cleared," she said. "It seemed to me that God was directing my mind and my hands to do the right thing for my son.

"He was still thrashing around wildly but I managed to call the emergency room at the hospital, hysterically blurting out the situation," Mrs. Shields said.

Although this happened some seven years ago, the mother can still remember a nurse on the other end of the line giving directions, all the time reassuring her that the child would be all right. "She stayed on the phone with me the entire time until the ambulance came, calming me down, reassuring me and telling me what to do," Mrs. Shields said.

Contacted last week, the nurse, Zona Atkinson, said she had not forgotten the incident either. She simply said, "I was doing my duty."

It was one of those never-to-be forgotten days. Over and over the family relives those anxious hours. They remember the rush next door to a neighbor Mrs. Shields didn't even know, asking the woman to care for her daughter and a little friend that had been visiting. The two children had continued playing together in another room, oblivious at what was happening in the bedroom.

Koby received preliminary treatment at Brownwood Regional Hospital. Emergency room personnel brought the boy out of his seizures. He was then immediately transferred to Hendrick Medical Center in Abilene, where the family was bombarded with questions. Several times, she was asked if and when the baby had been administered the routine combination Diptheria-Pertussis-Tetanus inoculation. The answer was always the same. The shot had been administered the day prior to the seizures.

Then came the years of testing, spinal taps, questions, and more questions. Over and over she was asked how soon after the inoculations had the convulsions started.

"The doctors at Hendrick did not think the vaccines caused the seizures because he had already had one inoculation the previous month with no complications," she said.

"But through the years I cannot help but wonder if there was any connection. After Koby's second shot and knowing that the seizures had followed so closely after the inoculation, we had to take him to a pediatrician in Abilene for his subsequent shots," Mrs. Shields said. "He stayed overnight in Abilene after he received the remaining required shots and each time after the inoculation, he had a seizure," she said.

A Brownwood pediatrician, Dr. Halbert O. Woodward, says the chance for a reaction to the DPT inoculation is about one in two million, with the greatest risk associated with the pertussis, or whooping cough, portion of the inoculation. He said that the risk of contracting whooping cough is considered a greater health hazard for children.

Epilepsy was the first diagnosis of Koby's problem. Although the boy was put on medication, he continued to have seizures, 10 or more a day, some lasting an hour.

Koby was taken to a neurogolist in San Antonio where other tests were made including an EEG and CT scan. The CT scan showed no damage, but the EEG showed seizure activity in the brain.

"We went twice a year to the neurologist and various medications were tried. But despite all these trips, Koby did not develop normally. He did not talk much and what he said was unintelligible. Although he walked, it was only with great difficulty," his mother said.

"We saw no improvement up until he was three years old. The seizures never let up. Until I could cope with it and come to grips with myself, I would call an ambulance anytime I saw him turn blue," she said.

"I often wondered — why me? I had a handicapped brother who became deaf after having had whooping cough. He had not had the D.P.T. shot. Now, here's Koby who had the shots and is so handicapped. It's something we just don't understand," she said.

When Koby was 3 years old, the neurologist told the parents that their son would not advance any further than he already had. "He told us he would have the mentality of a 12-year-old child. Take him home and just love him and resign yourself to the fact that he is not going to get any better, the neurosurgeon told me," Mrs. Shields said with the hint of a tear in her eyes. "I told myself as I walked out of the hospital in San Antonio that I appreciated the honesty of the doctor, but I had made a little prayer to God that if He would just let Koby live, there would never be anything that I would not try to handle," she said.

"I decided from then on to take one day at a time and not give up. I would bring him back home and work with him and never give up. I would continue to push and to encourage him," she said.

Larry and Pam Shields followed those guidelines. The first thing they did after returning to Brownwood was enroll the child in the infant stimulation program at the Central Texas Mental Health and Mental Retardation Center.

She spoke in great praise of Sarah Gale, formerly an occupational therapist there, who at that time was in charge of the infant program designed to help youngsters with handicaps. "Sarah taught me not to give up and gave me the hope and reassurance I so desperately needed."

Mrs. Shields also praised Martha Taylor Graves, who teaches speech therapy at Howard Payne University. "She is teaching my son to talk. Martha told me last week that we might soon be able to move on to whole sentences now that he has been able to grasp words," she said.

Today, the little boy is enrolled in a self-contained classroom of the special education program of the Brownwood Independent School District. "Irene Tolston and her teachers are doing wonders for him," she said.

DOE studying ways to mark nuclear dumps

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Department of Energy task force is studying a variety of measures, including special signs or monuments, intended to prevent future generations from intruding on radioactive underground nuclear waste dumps, a department spokeswoman said Saturday.

Spokeswoman Ginger King said it was expected that the nation's first deep underground repository for radioactive waste from atomic power plants and other sources would be ready by the end of this century, and would be filled by about the year 2030.

"Between now and then we need the best base of knowledge for putting up symbols or monuments so that future generations will understand they can't drill wells or otherwise intrude on these repositories," Ms. King said.

At the direction of Congress, the Energy Department has been considering nine possible sites in six states for permanent nuclear waste burial.

"We're talking about repositories that are between 1,500 and 3,500 feet below the surface, in a geologic medium that is hard rock, salt or some other non-porous material," Ms. King said.

After each underground repository is filled with nuclear waste and then sealed off, she said, "you wouldn't have to have perpetual monitoring of the waste, but you would want to have some signs that would last through the ages."

Longevity of the warning markers will pose a particular problem because radioactive waste buried in the repositories may remain toxic for 10,000 years.

To examine ways of dealing with this challenge, the Energy Department has formed a Human Interference Task Force comprised of industry and academic specialists in nuclear waste disposal, law, sociology, language and other fields.

The Washington Post reported in Sunday editions that draft recommendations developed by this task force have included:

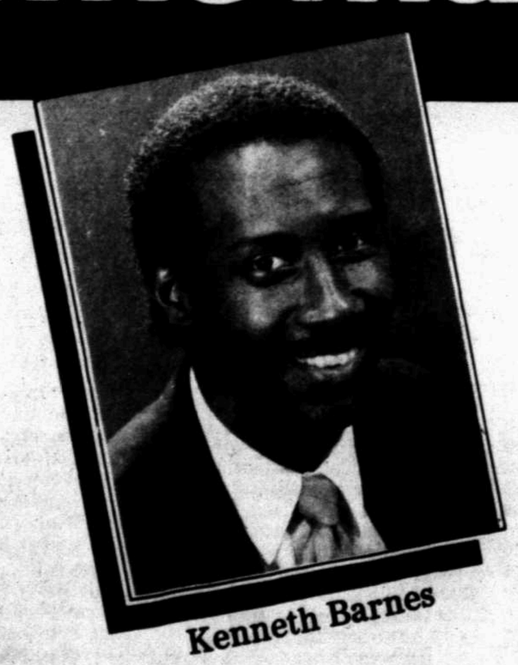

— Creating a "modern Stonehenge" of massive granite markers to ring the sites of the underground repositories.

— Establishing an "atomic priesthood" to foster "an artificially created and nurtured ritual-and-legend" that would produce "accumulated superstition to shun a certain area permanently."

— Erecting huge cartoon markers depicting in non-verbal terms the danger of the nuclear material.

— Genetically encoding a warning in human genes through "microsurgical intervention with the human molecular blueprint."

People of our community who make a difference.

Kenneth Barnes

Midland is fortunate to be known as a city of great opportunity. Everyone has a talent which can be used in valuable community service. As Kenneth Barnes, executive director of the Parks Center and Washington Branch YMCA, points out, it does not matter how great or small an individual's talent may appear to be; in Midland all that's required is a willingness to serve.

Nearly two years ago, Mr. Barnes and his wife moved to Midland from Atlanta, Georgia because they recognized Midland as a city of vast opportunity and friendly people. They have not been disappointed. Mr. Barnes is especially excited about the many opportunities he has found to serve the community.

This vivacious leader is deeply commited to young people both in his work at the YMCA and as Chairman of the Youth Committee at Macedonia Baptist Church. In addition to working with young people, he serves as president of Omega Psi Phi, a service fraternity. Leadership Midland and the Literacy Action Council also claim the commitment of this gentleman.

Moreover, Mr. Barnes serves on a number of boards in our community. The Board of the Free Will Foster Home, the Clean Midland Board of Directors, and the Texas Sesquicentennial Commission Board benefit from his leadership.

Mr. Barnes is deeply commited to each of these organizations, "...because they are all about service and trying to help others." He sees the difference that other people have made in his life, so he wants to be a positive force in the lives of others.

As this young man has become involved in many community challenges, he has been especially impressed with Midland's ability to get things off the drawing board and into action. When asked what he thinks Midland's greatest asset is, he explained, "I'm torn between voluntarism and the accessiblity of community leaders. I think the accessibilty of the leaders is the key." This open communication makes it much easier to expedite plans and projects which will benefit the community.

Concern, commitment, and action are why Kenneth Barnes makes a difference in Midland.

Adjustments made in gym

EDUCATION

Little things mean a lot. When the new gym floor was completed in the P.E. Building, basketball coach Jerry Stone discovered more of his small players could dunk the ball than when they had started practicing.

Then he realized it was because the new floor was three inches higher than the old one and the goals hadn't been raised a comparable height. Once that was taken care of, the smaller ones had to struggle again to get their dunks.

The Chaps' smallest player, 5'5"Pookey Wigington, had arthroscopic surgery on his knee Nov. 2 for cartilage damage. He was back on campus the same day and should be ready to make his debut as early as this week.

A two-day doubleheader awaits the Chaps in Waco Friday and Saturday, an event hosted by McLennan Community College. They'll spend the Thanksgiving weekend at Amarillo for a three-day tourney, then come back home for their conference opener Nov. 26 against Clarendon College.

In the meantime, you can purchase season tickets for the Chap conference season at the Athletic Office in the PE Building.

If you have new car fever, or just want to see what's new for 1985 among cars and trucks, then you need to come out to Chap Center Saturday or Sunday, Nov. 17-18. That's when the Midland New Car/Truck Dealers will have their joint showing. Hours are 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Saturday and 1-6 p.m. next Sunday, and it's free.

Another special event is slated for 6:30 p.m. Thursday when Texas Tech basketball coach Gerald Meyers brings his 1984-85 team to the Chap Center for a special "Red-Black" intrasquad scrimmage. There's no charge for what should be an interesting preview of this year's Red Raider team.

MC is hosting the Fall Conference Tennis Tournament Friday and Saturday in the MC courts. The Chaps will be playing men's and women's teams from Odessa College, South Plains College, and New Mexico Military Institute. Play begins Friday afternoon and continues all day on Saturday. This is the final event for the Chaps this fall.

The Clarence Kincaid Retrospective Exhibit in McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, is a lovely show that should be enjoyed by everyone. The late Dr. Kincaid for many years was professor of art at Texas Tech. His watecolors glow with color and style. The show is open to the public Sundays from 1-5 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m., Friday from 8 a.m.-5 p.m., and Saturday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m.

This exhibition remains up through Dec. 2.

If you ever have an opportunity to play "Trivial Pursuit" with MC business law instructor Nancy Hart and her friend you'd better be careful! Nancy and three of her friends recently won the Midland "Trivial Pursuit" Championship, sponsored by the City Parks ad Recreation Department. They get together to play ever couple of weeks, so it's more than a casual game to them.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

PTAs meeting this week

Four Midland Independent School District Parent Teacher Associations will meet for regularly scheduled meetings this week.

Parker Elementary School PTA will meet at 7 p.m. Monday in the school cafeteria. Third grade students will present a program entitled "Give Thanks to the Pilgrims."

Santa Rita Elementary School PTA will meet at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the school cafeteria. Second grade students will perform and a report will be given by the Carnival Committee.

Sam Houston Elementary School PTA will meet at 7 p.m. Thursday in the school cafeteria. Fifth grade students will present "Fifty, Nifty, U.S.A." — a brief historical sketch of United States history. Pilgrims, Indians and other topics will be featured during the program.

Fannin Elementary School PTA will meet from 7:30-9 p.m. Tuesday in the school cafeteria. MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi will speak on current education legislation.

Science display slated

About 40 science projects will be on display from 6 to 7:30 p.m. Thursday at the San Jacinto Junior High School auditorium. The exhibit will feature various projects designed by students enrolled in San Jacinto's accelerated Life Science classes. Featured exhibits will include mental illness, anorexia, diabetes, nutrition, allergies and alcoholism.

Reflections entries due

The Midland City Council Parent Teachers Association will serve as local sponsors of the 1984-85 National PTA Reflections Program.

Information may be obtained by calling the local elementary schools. Theme for this year's project is "What Sparks My Imagination." Local entries are due Friday.

Lee yearbooks for sale

Lee High School yearbooks will be sold during lunch Wednesday through Friday in Room 621 at Lee High School. Cost of the yearbook is $22.

Business workshop set

A pre-business workshop for persons wishing to start their own business will be conducted Thursday in the Devonian Room at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The program, sponsored by UTPB, Odessa College, Odessa SCORE/ACE Chapter 260 and the U.S. Small Business Administration, begins at 8:30 a.m. with coffee and registration. The $15 registration fee covers workshop costs and various literature covering various topics. For information or pre-registration, call Dr. Tom Schaefer at 367-2156.

Art gallery to open

The University of Texas of the Permian Basin will inaugurate its new art gallery from 7-8:30 p.m. in the UTPB Art Gallery. The public is invited to a reception and exhibit of paintings, monothypes, lithographs etchings and bronzes by American artist Fritz Sholder. For details, call 366-2011.

CTA members to meet

The Classroom Teachers Association of Midland will hold its November membership meeting at 4:15 p.m. Nov. 19 at the Midland High School Library.

Updates on salary, communications and legislation will be heard. TCTA Convention nominations also will be submitted.

'Fall Fun Festival' set

The Carver Occupational Development Lab will present its "Fall Fun Festival" from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Thursday in the school gymnasium. Student-made crafts and baked items will be sold.

College week observed

Midland College will observe Community College Week in Texas through Nov. 17.

Midland College is one of 48 public community colleges in Texas, operating on 62 campuses. Collectively, they enroll 63 percent of all freshmen and sophomore students and 42 percent of all college students.

PTAs to meet together

Lee Freshman and Midland Freshman High schools will conduct a joint Parent Teacher Association meeting at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Lee Freshman High School gymnasium, 1400 E. Oak St.

Cynthia Grubb, president of Mothers Against Drunk Drivers (MADD) will speak.

Board members to visit

Three members of the newly appointed State Board of Education will attend the meeting of the Permian Basin School Board Association (PBSBA) at 7 p.m. Nov. 19 at Lathan Junior High School in Monahans. Katherine Raines of Cleburne, Dr. Paul Dunn of Levelland and Maria Flood will attend the meeting to answer questions from Texas school board members.

MAKING THE GRADE

Midlander Marian Reiser is one of 15 elementary education majors enrolled at North Texas State University to be selected to the NTSU Meadows Program.

Students must maintain a B average and take courses in addition to those required for teacher certification. Also, students must receive additional experience in classroom teaching.

Pare

The Midland West Rotary Club named Jeanne L. Pare as its Student of the Week. She is a senior at Lee High School.

Miss Pare, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis A. Pare, 3620 Imperial, is a member of the National Honor Society, J.E.T.S., German Club, band and honor band.

She is the recipient of solo, ensemble and line awards at all-region band competition, as well as other awards in twirling, sewing and german. Also, she has been named academic All-American and is listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students.

Miss Pare plans to attend Texas A&M University and major in engineering.

Glen Bowen of Midland is among 26 Lubbock Christian College students named to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities.

Bowen, son of Mr. and Mrs. F.L. Bowen, 2305 Neely, is a senior majoring in music.

Jannifer J. Crawford, 3408 Humble, is one of 127 students named to the Dean's Academic Honor List at Baylor University for the 1984 summer semester.

Debose

The Negro Business and Professional Women's Club named Tabatha Debose as its Student of the Month. She is a senior at Midland High School.

Miss Debose, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Debose, 711 S. Calhoun, is a member of student council and church girls auxiliary. She also is a Sunday school teacher, church assistant announcing clerk, choir director, vice president of Sigma Theta Chi and serves as a lifeguard. She plans to attend Texas A&M University and major in computer technology.

Atlee

The Midland Downtown Rotary Club named Jennifer Atlee and Ted Ray as its Students of the Week. Both are seniors at Midland High School.

Miss Atlee, the daughter of Linda and Bill Atlee, 2802 Emerson Lane, is a varsity cheerleader, and a member of student council, 1984 Homecoming Court, president's cabinet, Young Life, Teen-age Republicans and Senior Girls Club. She plans to attend a university and major in education.

Ray

Ray, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Smith Ray, 1609 Gulf, is Spanish Club president and is a member of the cross country and track teams and National Honor Society. He also served as delegate to Pan American Student Forum and Boys State and is an academic letter winner. Ray plans to attend Trinity University and major in business.

"Making the Grade" features students who have received degrees, awards, scholarships or other honors. Items should be brought or mailed to Education Writer, Midland Reporter-Telegram, Box 1650. Photographs can be obtained from the librarian or will be returned if a stamped, self-addressed envelope is enclosed.

Second grade students from Parker, De Zavala and Sam Houston Elementary schools discover the true wonders of West Texas during a recent visit to the Outdoor Learning Center at Hogan Park.

'Prairie Dog Pete' brings imagination to great outdoors

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Few people have grown to appreciate the true wonders of West Texas.

But with a little persuasion from imaginary tour guide Prairie Dog Pete, the Midland Independent School District and Midland Soil and Water Conservation District hope to change that by educating Midland youth about the Outdoor Learning Center at Hogan Park.

The imaginary figure, created by Sam Houston Principal Keller Stamy, is being incorporated into the instruction program by life science teachers from throughout the district who are taking their students along the nature trail through the 49-acre site this fall.

Thursday, a group of second-grade students from Parker, De Zavala and Sam Houston Elementary schoolsvisited and found that even a desolate-looking plain has a wide variety of plant and animal life that most people never notice.

"Prairie Dog Pete is our guide today and he is going to tell you all about the plants and animals that were here long ago," Stamy told the students. "If you listen and watch closely you might even see a few of the plants and animals still around today.

"This is *mes*quite brushland," he continued. "With lots of rain, the mesquite could grow up to 20-feet-tall with the trunks growing a foot in diameter. Indians used the mesquite for food and so do beetles. Packrats gather the limbs to form mounds they call home."

Stamy pointed out dozens of plant life and explained each of their characteristics and uses.

"Praire Dog Pete likes this snakeweed espcially when it has pretty yellow flowers on it. His mother makes him eat some of this weed to cure his asthma.

"Pete also likes Yucca and the Santa Claus plant called Christmas Cholla. On a long walk he can stop, bite the stem of the plant and get a drink of water," he said.

The ice cream grass is a pleasure to eat, Stamy added. "It is full of sugar and one day when Pete saw the governor of Texas, he asked him to make it the state grass. The governor did just that."

Moving along the gravel trail, Stamy noted "the real name for this small pond is playa. There are many tiny fish called minnows and others living here. The grass called Johnsongrass has roots which go deep into the ground.

"Pete loves the cattails in this wet place. He likes the tall stems and the brown cattail it grew on its top. Many times Pete goes down in this wet place called a marsh and talks to the turtles, frogs and water snakes.

"If you look where the tree trunk comes out of the ground, you will see the holly but you can't see Pete. He is in the deep marsh waving good-bye to you because this is the end of the walk," said Stamy.

Book Week celebrated

From Staff Reports

National Children's Book Week will be celebrated this week at Midland County Public Library with a display of new books and free bookmarks.

Each November a week is set aside for the celebration to promote interest in reading for children.

Franklin K. Matthews, a writer of books for boys, and Frederick Melcher, a publisher, were responsible for the first National Children's Book Week in 1919. The Children's Book Council in New York City, in charge of the week's plans, reports that Book Week contributes greatly to the improvement of books for children.

Children's Read-a-thons and the increased "stepping up" in reading in the school system has increased circulation in the Young People's Department at the Midland public library, according to a spokesman. That department is located on the library's second floor. The first library card is free if the young person is accompanied by a parent.

New books in the Young People's Department include James Herriot's "Moses the Kitten." This book about a stray kitten adopted by a sow appeals to both children and adults.

Other new books include: "The 300 Pound Cat," "Anno's Flea Market," "Prince Sparrow," "Visiting Pamela," "The Rose in My Garden," "Richard Scarry's Pig Will and Pig Won't," "Red Sun Girl," "In a Dark, Dark Room and Other Scary Stories," "Cheater and Flitter Dick," "Friends Are Like That," "Revenge of the Nerd," "Supermouse," and "The Ghosts of Now."

Board lets stand contract decision

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The State Board of Education Saturday let stand a decision by Education Commissioner Raymond Bynum in a dispute involving Midland Independent School district and Mary B. Towles.

Ms. Towles argued her rights had been violated in the non-renewal of her contract by MISD.

According to findings of facts prepared for the board by the Texas Education Agency, Towles accepted a probationary teaching position as an elementary school librarian in November 1982.

Bynum concluded that the non-renewal was "not arbitrary, capricious or uniawful," and that her constitutional rights hadn't been violated.

While no hearing was held on the non-renewal, no hearing was required, Bynum ruled.

The board Saturday upheld the decision.

New soil chemist to serve area

A new soil chemist for the High Plains, Rolling Plains and West Texas has been named by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. Michael G. Hickey is supervisor of the Extension Soil Testing Laboratory in Lubbock and is soil chemist serving 100 area counties.

Hickey replaces Dale Pennington, who recently was transferred to College Station to supervise the soil testing laboratory and program.

"Since reporting to Lubbock, we have processed the soil samples on hand in the laboratory and are ready to serve area producers fully," Hickey said. In addition to supervising the laboratory and providing fertilizer recommendations for this area, he will plan and conduct educational programs in soil chemistry and fertility and assist County Extension Agents with educational programs and field demonstrations.

A native of Dennison, Hickey received the Bachelor of Science degree in crop science and the Master of Science degree in soil fertility from Texas Tech University. In 1982 he received a Ph.D. in soil chemistry and mineralogy from Washington State University.

From 1982 until accepting the Extension post in Lubbock, Hickey conducted postdoctoral research in soil chemistry and mineralogy at Oregon State University, Corvallis, Ore. His work there included completion of a long-term study investigating the effects of municipal sludge on soil environmental quality and plant uptake of heavy metals.

At Washington State, while pursuing his doctorate, Hickey was a research and teaching assistant in soil chemistry. His research there included development of a gel chromatographic technique to quanitiatively determine the amount of metal-organic complexation in soil solutions.

While a student at Tech, Hickey assisted with research on the effects of sewage effluent on the yield of bermudagrass, cotton, soybean and grain sorghum. As a graduate and teaching assistant, he was involved in research to determine the effect of soil type on potato tuber formation parameters, and the effect of manure application and source of nitrogen on the soil fertility relations of potatoes and grain sorghum.

Hickey is a member of the Soil Science Society of America, American Society of Agronomy, American Chemical Society, Society of Sigma Xi and the Texas Agricultural Extension Service Specialists Association.

Getting your soil tested has always been important.

To help producers monitor carry over nitrogen levels, the Extension Soil Testing Laboratory is now testing soil samples for nitrate nitrogen. The nitrate nitrogen analysis will determine the amount of available nitrogen present in soil. These values help generate a fertilizer recommendation that will save producers money by allowing them to get more from their fertilizer dollars.

Gaining a profitable return from fertilizer depends on the supply of available nutrients already in the soil, such as the carryover from last year's drought. Soil testing can provide an estimate of this supply.

A soil test also will determine which nutrients are deficient in the soil for a particular crop so that the producer can fertilize to supplement the soil supply. It's only profitable to supply nutrients required for a particular crop.

Now is an excellent time to take soil samples. Soil test results can be obtained quickly at this time of the year due to a smaller soil sample volume than in the spring. And, once producers have test results, they can order fertilizer they need for the coming season. So, to plan the best fertilizer program, get your soil tested now.

The Texas Agricultural Extension Service and Texas PCAs are cooperating on a seminar series entitled "Financial Planning for '85". The closest one to us will be held in Snyder, Nov. 13. It will begin at 8:30 a.m. in the Coliseum, Room A.

The program will be packed full of ideas for farmers to use in financing their business in the next decade. Leading off the program will be discussions of the 10-year outlook for agricultural credit by Dan Padberg, Head of Ag Economics at Texas A&M and Marsha Martin from the Federal Intermediate Bank in Austin.

Economist, Wayne Hayenga, will discuss "Merchandising Credit" to inform farmers how to develop more meaningful financial information for their lenders. Looking at the near term will be the topic of cattle and cotton by Carl Anderson and the upcoming 1985 farm bill by Ed Smith, Texas Extension Economist. After lunch, "Your Annual Tax Check-up," a discussion of income and estate tax planning, will be pesented by Wayne A. Hayenga.

Regulations opposed

From Staff Reports

The Midland County Farm Bureau is opposing pesticide regulations which are being proposed by the Texas Department of Agriculture, according to Chris King, bureau president.

A hearing on the proposed regulations, which deal with posting warnings, will be held at 1 p.m. Thursday in the Lubbock Convention Center. Opponents and proponents are invited to the hearing.

King maintains that existing state and federal regulations are adequate for protection of farm workers, farm operators, applicators and others. Further, he termed the proposals as unnecessary, unreasonable and, in many cases, unworkable.

The proposed regulations, which deal with the application of pesticides, would make it difficult for farmers who use pesticides to turn a profit.

The proposed regulations would establish rules for:

—Notifying persons who might be affected by pesticides.

—Posting notices and knowing specific details of chemical safety information.

—Providing oral warnings to persons who might enter a treated field.

—Determining illegal applications and clarifying drift liability.

—Establishing re-entry intervals into treated fields.

—Establishing a TDA technical advisory committee.

The proposed rules relate only to posting warnings and re-entry intervals and then only if workers are not "required to make substantial contact with plants, foliage, soil, or other sources of pesticide residue," he said.

Rental units need smoke detectors

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Intentionally or not, owners of Midland rental units may have overlooked a state law and local ordinance requiring them to install smoke detectors in rental units.

Passed by the 67th Legislature, Art. 5236j of Title 84 requires landlords, owners, lessors or sublessors to install the alarms in any home, mobile home, duplex, condominium or dwelling in a multiunit residential structure occupied by a tenant as a permanent residence.

The law went into effect Sept. 1.

"We've been working with hotel, motel and apartment people for the past two years," said Midland Fire Marshal Jerry Petree. "But I just realized the other day when I was talking to some men who had some rent property that they didn't realize it had to do with them, too."

All rented "dwelling units" issued a building permit or occupied as a residence for the first time after Sept. 1, 1981, are required to have at least one smoke detector installed by the landlord outside of or near each bedroom, according to the law.

There are exceptions to the locations of alarms for some units, such as one-room dwellings or those with bedrooms served by a single corridor.

Tenants living in dwellings built or occupied before that date could install a battery-powered alarm without prior consent of the landlord through Sept. 1.

"All new construction had to adhere to it but this made it retroactive for existing property until Sept. 1, 1984," Petree said.

The time limit has passed.

A landlord has the "duty" to install and test a smoke detector before a tenant moves into the unit and at times of lease renewals or extensions, according to the law.

The landlord also has the duty to inspect and repair it only if the tenant has given notice to the landlord of malfunction or made a request for inspection or repair.

Requests for installation or repair do not have to be in writing unless "written notice is required in the written rental agreement," the law states.

However, if a landlord has not complied with a tenant's request to install or repair a smoke detector within seven days, the tenant must notify the landlord in writing that he or she will "exercise remedies" under the act if the request is not complied with within seven days.

If the landlord still fails to act within seven days, the tenant is entitled to the following actions:

— A court order directing the landlord to comply with the tenant's request;

— A court order awarding judgment against the landlord for damages sufferd by the tenant as a result of the violation;

— A court order imposing a civil penalty against the landlord in the amount of one month's rent plus $100;

— A court order assessing against the landlord court costs and attorney's fees;

— Unilateral termination of the rental agreement by the tenant without court proceedings.

When a tenant makes a request for inspection or repair, the landlord must have failed to comply within a "reasonable time, considering the availability of materials, labor and utilities."

The landlord cannot be held responsible for noncompliance if the tenant owes rent at the time of the request, or if the tenant has not paid advanced costs requested by the landowner in full at the time a suit is filed or a lease is terminated.

The law was joined by an emergency bill, House Bill 7, after a hotel fire in Fort Worth killed several people, Petree said. That bill, which took effect Jan. 1, mandated smoke detectors in hotels and motels, lodges and rooming houses. Violation of the act is a Class B misdemeanor.

"Our local ordinance has required alarms in hotels and motels since June 1981," Petree said. "So not only do the state laws require smoke detectors, the local fire ordinances do, too."

On the local level, Petree said, "We don't go issue citations but it's a law that needs to be adhered to."

According to some sources, there is a possibility of civil lawsuits if a death occurs as a direct result of a fire in a rental unit without a smoke detector.

"It's just something that people who don't have multi-rental units don't know about," Petree said.

Picketing restricted

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — General Dynamics has won a courtroom skirmish with its striking machinists union, gaining a state judge's order barring picketers from walking in front of the aerospace firm's main gate during certain peak hours.

State District Judge William L. Hughes ruled Friday that pickets could stand on either side of the gate driveway, but could not walk in front of the gate during shift changes.

General Dynamics general counsel Hugh King said the company sought the order because it feared that a striker might be struck by a car and be injured, triggering violence between pickets and persons entering or leaving the plant.

Pat L. Lane, president of striking local No. 776 of the machinists union, said the union would contest the ruling at another hearing to be conducted by Hughes Monday.

Hughes said he granted the request "so none of them (pickets) would get hit and killed."

"I don't think they have a right to picket at all times," the judge said. "There's a public safety factor you weigh against the right of expression."

Picketing became violent on Monday and Tuesday when union members threw rocks and bottles at cars of persons entering and leaving the plant.

Bike tour planned

Le Tour de Rankin, a 110-mile bicyle ride, is to be held Saturday from Midland to Rankin and back.

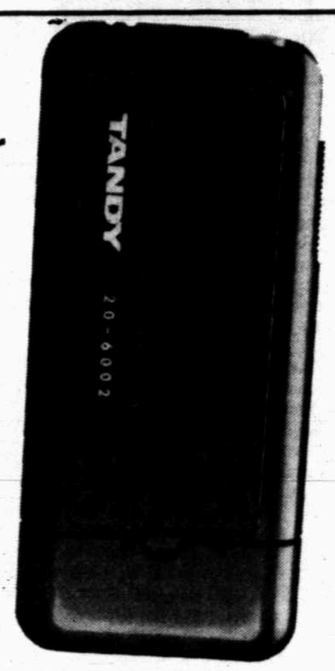

The roundtrip tour, sponsored by Peyton's Bikes, is to begin at 8 a.m. at the bicycle shop at 600 N. Kent St. Cyclists are to make the trip on Texas Highway 349.

Cyclists may pack lunches or purchase meals at a Rankin cafe food store. Two sag wagons will haul the food and water.

Cyclists interested in the ride may contact Lynn Patty or David Ham at Peyton's Bikes at 684-5984.

Troubled Texas veteran was 'wall's first casualty'

AP Laserphoto

Remembering their son in their Port Arthur home are John and Betty Davis.

By WAYNE SLATER
Associated Press Writer

PORT ARTHUR, Texas — The week before he killed himself, Jeffrey Charles Davis came home.

He wanted to talk about his marriage and his job and the war. He talked a lot about the war.

Davis was 36 and had served in combat with the 101st Airborne in Vietnam, and his recollections of the jungle had grown more vivid with time.

"He became very obsessed with the Vietnam experience," said his widow, Alice. "He wasn't making much progress putting the war behind him."

He spent a week at his parents' house on the southeastern Texas coast "walking the floor and talking," his mother said.

But by the time he boarded the airplane back to Washington, D.C., where he had served 15 years as a policeman, Davis appeared to have vanquished the demons, and his parents thought everything was all right.

Two days later, Sept. 16, he went to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial and shot himself, the first suicide at the granite monument that bears the engraved roll call of the 58,022 American dead in Vietnam.

"Lots of emotion comes out at the wall," said James "Bear" Pando, a Vietnam veteran who found the body. "They go down there at night when there's a little bit of moon to light it up, and you feel the presence of all these people whose names were there."

The monument was dedicated two years ago, a questionable remembrance of a questionable war. It spreads like two black wings, pointed at the ends and rising to an apex at the center.

The names of the dead fill the length of it, arranged chronologically so that buddies killed in the same battle are together.

Davis did not like the shape of the monument. But he visited it frequently and told friends, "It's what it stands for that counts."

"It isn't a pretty thing," said Davis' brother-in-law, Gary Sauer, a construction worker in Port Arthur. "Anything with 50,000 names on it can't be real pretty, but like Jeff said, it's there and it's for us."

Those names include men who were in Davis' company. Perhaps 160 of them, nearly the entire company, were killed in a furious night of fighting. He could not forget the sight of their bodies strewn the next morning across the terraced rice paddies of the Ashau Valley.

Whenever he visted the monument, he would read their names.

"Somehow I knew when he left here he was going to see the wall because we had talked about it," said Sauer. "I was hoping he would go with friends."

It was morning by the time Pando discovered the body. The sun slanted through the trees on the Mall. Davis was seated under a large oak tree, his head against the trunk, his service revolver in his right hand, his face turned toward the monument 50 feet away.

"Every time I close my eyes, I see that kid sitting there," said Pando. "He's the first casualty of the wall."

•••

The Vietnamese began arriving nine years ago in the sea-black bayous of the southeastern Texas coast.

They came following the fall of Saigon, first by the hundreds, then by the thousands. In Port Arthur they opened a two-block stretch of bars, restaurants and shops along 9th Avenue and turned the old white-steepled Presbyterian church into The Queen of Vietnam Martyrs Church.

About a year ago, they erected an ornate pagoda with a 20-foot-tall statue of the Virgin Mary that stands, big as a Buddha, looking down the full length of 9th Avenue from the catfish restaurants to Dixie Drive.

People call the enclave Little Saigon.

Not far from Litte Saigon is the house where Jeff Davis was raised.

It was as a young boy growing up in Port Arthur that he first encountered segregation, and it bothered him.

Sometimes a black woman named Dora, who had long worked for the family, would walk with Jeff to a nearby restaurant for lunch. He could go inside, but she had to wait on the sidewalk.

One day he saw a black cook leave the kitchen and, exultant, told his parents, "Dora can come and eat with me. I saw a lady just like her in there," his mother, Betty, recalled.

"One of the first things he did when he came back from Vietnam, things had changed then, was to go and get Dora and take her to lunch at the best restaurant in Port Arthur," she said.

HOUSE STYLE VS. PRICE

Unless you have a very definite idea about the kind of house you want, the style may be less important than location and price. Many people are attracted to the traditional two- story colonial, while others prefer more contemporary designs, such as split-levels or ranch-style houses. The style, however, will probably make a difference in the price.

According to building experts, the two-story house is the least expensive to build per square foot when measured as the cost of living area. It gives double the space of a ranch unit, for example, for the same amount of land. It is also less expensive to add a second story than to build a floor and foundation to extend the living area. The same amount of space that costs $100 per square foot in a two-story house would cost about $125 in a ranch or $120 in a split level.

Whatever your preference in style or price, let your Realtor help you make the most satisfying buy for the money.

Jeffrey Davis

VET

Jeff went to high school just across the Sabine River in Sulfur, La., where his family lived for a few years in the mid-1960s.

In the 1966 Sulfur High School yearbook, The Tornado, is the senior picture of Jeff Davis, skinny, broad-nosed, with a strong jaw and long dark hair combed down across his forehead.

His hair was unremarkable except for the time and the place and the fact that Vice Principal Billy Moses believed Davis looked suspiciously like Sulfur High's first hippie.

"I'd get phone calls from the school," said his mother. "They'd say, 'Do something about that kid's hair.' His hair wasn't even over his ears, but to them he was a long-haired hippie. We used to laugh and call him Sulfur's first resident rebel."

Davis liked the nickname: Sulfur's First Resident Rebel.

At 17, he had had enough of cruising Tom and Mac's Drive-In in Lake Charles, La., and enough of school. Davis quit six weeks short of graduation to join the Army and, after basic training and paratrooper school, he was off to Vietnam.

"He was gung ho, he was always gung ho," said his father, John Wayne "Bud" Davis, a construction worker who saw his son occasionally while building air strips in Vietnam.

Mrs. Davis added, "As Jeff used to put it, he'd bop through the bushes after Charlie."

The war was escalating rapidly. Troop strength had reached 389,000 by the end of 1966. In August 1967, President Lyndon Johnson announced the maximum limit on U.S. troops in Vietnam had been raised to 525,000.

The following January, the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong launched the Tet offensive.

"I got this letter from him all muddy as if it had been wet, and he said, 'Momma, I think I'm into something I'm not going to be able to get out of,' " said Mrs. Davis. "He mailed it. He never wrote me letters like that."

Later, she would read an article in Stars and Stripes, the armed forces newspaper, about a battle in the Ashau Valley involving the 101st Airborne. The North Vietnamese had overrun an entire company. Only a handful of soldiers had survived. Her son was one of them.

Davis came home from the war with a Bronze Star, shrapnel in one leg and a bad case of the jitters. When a passing car backfired one day, Davis fell instinctively to the ground, Mrs. Davis recalled.

He hated hedges; "over there" they often camouflaged rifles. If there were hedges in a yard, Davis would walk across the street to avoid them. At night, he would lock his bedroom door and brace it with a chair.

At first Davis would not talk to outsiders about Vietnam. If anybody asked what he had done in the war, Davis said, "I killed communists for Christ." It was his way of saying he didn't want to talk about it.

Davis completed his tour of duty at Fort Bragg in North Carolina, and it was there that police recruiters from Washington, D.C., signed him up. The anti-war movement was in full flower, and Washington needed riot cops.

"They put him on a line to stop the protesters," said Sauer, his brother-in-law.

It was an ironic welcome home. Davis never got used to people taunting and cursing him. "Always before, our soldiers had been heroes," his mother recalled him saying.

Eventually, he switched to the casual clothes division where he could wear jeans and let his hair and beard grow. Davis liked casual clothes. He told his brother-in-law it was like a continuation of the war. At night, he cruised some of the district's meanest ghetto neighborhoods. His job was to look for trouble: rapes, assaults, burglaries, robberies, arguments in the streets.

When he met and married Alice, it seemed a perfect match. She was an attractive and intelligent research biologist who listened when he talked about his work, about the street.

They bought a house in suburban Maryland. He put an American flag out front. They had two children, a girl now 6 years old and a boy now 3.

But the imprint of Vietnam remained in dark and disturbing ways, Alice Davis recalled. As more movies and books appeared, Davis tried to read everything he could find on the war. He watched "The Deer Hunter" and "Apocalypse Now" again and again.

When the Public Broadcasting System aired its series on Vietnam, Davis saw every program. And when he drove his pickup, he liked to listen to one tape in particular: Billy Joel's "Goodnight Saigon."

Inevitably, his conversation turned to the Ashau Valley.

"A few of them had got cut off from the company," said Sauer, recalling the story. "They were out of ammunition and scared to death. None of them were officers and the Cong weren't taking prisoners. Unless you were an officer, you were dead.

DAVIS

"Jeff said everybody was scared to death until they finally realized that this was the end. This was it, their time had come. It was the end. And all of a sudden, the fear was gone," said Sauer.

"Jeff said, so long as there is a chance of life, the fear's there. But when there's no chance of life, the fear's gone. He said one guy picked up a rock and the others had their rifles by the barrel, ready to John Wayne them to death.

"He said, 'Man, we were ready. We figured we could each take one with us. We were a bunch of kids and the fear was gone.' "

There was another war story, a darker story that Davis did not tell many people. The first time he told Sauer was at The Top Hat, a Port Arthur bar, some years ago.

"He looked at me and got real serious and said, 'I killed a kid.' And he started to break down," Sauer said.

Occasionally, Davis would resurrect the child he had killed in Vietnam. It was a search and destroy mission, and his squad noticed there was too much food in the village, a sure sign of Viet Cong.

A small Vietnamese child emerged from the village and Davis remembered an elemental lesson: Children carry bombs. Even the kids kill you in this crazy war. He fired. The child, it turned out, was unarmed.

"He had to shoot the kid to save himself and his buddies," said Sauer. "Jeff said it was a situation he really couldn't avoid, but he felt guilty. He said, 'The thing is, I still killed him.' "

• • •

At night, after work, Davis and some fellow officers would stop at a bar and unwind. He began getting home at 2 o'clock or 3 o'clock in the morning, sometimes later.

The street bothered him now, the robbers and the muggers and the punks. He called himself "a garbage collector." And when a 3-year-old girl was raped and murdered, Sauer said, Davis could not shake it from his mind.

His mother recalled being startled when she saw him last June in Florida, where everybody gathered for a family reunion. He had lost 10 pounds and seemed tired and irritable. He wasn't sleeping well and had grown increasingly withdrawn.

Davis spent most of the time watching TV in the motel room or sitting alone on the beach, staring out at the sea.

"I asked Alice how long this had been going on and she said he does it a lot. It seems like he just wants to be by himself," said Mrs. Davis.

Davis told a friend that he and Alice weren't getting along anymore. He felt she didn't want to hear about his job, his problems or about Vietnam.

"He couldn't let anybody touch him, he shunned them," his widow said. "Things got twisted up in his mind. It was so sad."

To make matters worse, he got into a fistfight with a fellow officer, something he never thought he'd do. He faked a story so the department never knew. But he knew. And he wondered, what kind of officer fights his own side?

On Friday, Sept. 7, after one last irreparable fight with his wife, he called the office of the police psychiatrist. The person answering the telephone said somebody would return the call later, according to neighbor Bud Wallace. Davis said forget it and hung up. He called his parents and said he was coming home.

• • •

The week before Davis flew into Port Arthur, there had been trouble near Little Saigon.

An unemployed 30-year-old Vietnamese man had argued with a tugboat operator at Judice's French Market. Later, he appeared outside with a knife and a hatchet, threatening anyone who came near.

A Port Arthur policeman ordered the man to put down his weapons, but when he lunged, the officer shot him in the chest. For two nights, relatives held candlelight vigils. The man had suffered mental problems, they said, ever since the war.

Davis was back home and there were Americans killing Vietnamese in the streets of Texas.

"He walked the floor and talked," said Mrs. Davis. "He said, 'I don't know what to do.' He told his daddy, 'I'm tired and I'm scared.' And when Bud asked what he was scared of, Jeff said, 'Sometimes I get so down I think I'm flipping my lid.'

"I noticed he kept patting me and touching me. He'd just reach out and touch me every once in awhile," she said. "We were sitting at the table having a cup of coffee and he said, 'Mom, I want to ask you a question. What would you do if I killed myself?'

"I said, 'Are you crazy? I couldn't stand it, it would just kill me.' And he said, 'Oh, I was afraid you'd say something like that.' And he shrugged."

He looked gaunt and worn and lost, his mother thought, as though something were bottled up and ready to burst.

And then, suddenly, toward week's end, the tension left him. He quit pacing, started eating, took a shower, washed his hair, trimmed his beard.

"He seemed to be back to the old Jeff, you know," Mrs. Davis said.

He seemed settled and confident and resolved, almost relieved. It was like that time in the Ashau Valley when there were no more decisions to make, when he was a kid and the fear was gone.

"When he came down here, he made a remark to me," said his mother. "He was just sitting there at the table and said, 'I feel kind of naked because I didn't bring my gun.'

"I look back on it now, at some of the things he said to me, and I just think he came down here to tell us goodbye," she said.

• • •

At night, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial is lost in the huge darkness of the Mall. The nearby Lincoln Memorial, by contrast, is a blazing white square of light. But the wall is dark. It was made for contemplation.

"It's magic," said Gregory Fulkerson, a Vietnam veteran. "Lots of guys don't like it because it's black, but you look into the black granite and you see your reflection among the names of your buddies.

"You can't go to 18 different states to visit 18 different graveyards, but here, all of a sudden you are confronted by all these names, and it's like a tombstone of a really good friend," he said.

On his last night, Davis stopped at Takoma Park Liquors about 10 p.m., closing time, and bought a half-gallon of Jim Beam.

Then he drove to the Fraternal Order of Police where he drank alone and drank heavily until nearly midnight, fellow officers said. As he left, he did something strange.

"He asked directions to the monument," said fellow officer Mike Baltes. "I mean, he knew the way. He'd been there lots of times. The only thing we can figure is that he wanted somebody to find him."

Davis went first to a table near the monument where some veterans hold a 24-hour vigil. When Fulkerson saw him, Davis was distraught and crying uncontrollably. He could barely talk for the tears.

"Tet '68, it was bad," Davis said, then looked toward the wall. "I've got a lot of friends down there."

Fulkerson came around the table and embraced him. "Welcome home, brother," he said. "Do you want to talk?"

Davis didn't want to talk. His eyes were swollen and his face was streaked, and after standing a few minutes in the yellow light of the lantern, he started walking slowly down the path toward the monument.

At about 2 a.m., he put the gun to his head and pulled the trigger.

The veterans at the vigil heard the gunshot, but they thought it was a backfire.

Jeffrey Charles Davis had disappeared into the sea-black shadows of the trees, dark as the bayous, dark and lost like Vietnam the night that Sulfur's First Resident Rebel sat waiting in the jungle, waiting for Charlie Cong.

Merchants sue 'law breakers'

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston merchants group is suing five more businesses claiming they violated the Texas "blue law" by opening their stores on consecutive Saturdays and Sundays.

The Retail Merchants Association filed lawsuits Friday against five shops in Houston's two Buyer's Market Malls that were open Sunday, Nov. 4.

Named in the suits are Sock-It-To-Me sock shop, Bart's Inc. clothing store, Textile Outlet, Draperies Etc. and Toys and Gifts Outlets.

"What gives them the right?" asked David Christensen, owner of Textile Outlet. "The city isn't going after the merchants, and neither is the DA (district attorney)."

About half fail tests for teacher training, school board told

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Almost half the college students who took tests required for entry into teacher training programs failed, the State Board of Education was told Saturday.

Also Saturday, the board approved the purchase of about $55 million worth of textbooks, including introductory biology books one board member said are "so weak and so diluted" that they are not science books.

Fifty-two percent of the 4,217 students who took the July exams passed all three parts. Only 19 percent of the Hispanic and 15 percent of the black students passed all three parts — compared to 62 percent of the white students.

"The discrepancies are large and continue to be large," said Marvin Veselka, associate commissioner for professional support.

Students must pass all three parts in order to advance to teacher training programs. The tests were first given in March, when 54 percent passed all three parts.

The tests include sections on math, reading and writing. Students can re-take portions of the test they fail.

Board member Volly Bastine of Houston said the July results were depressing.

"What can I tell you. It tells us what we already know about education. We need to strengthen the focus on education," he said.

Bastine said the results show that some colleges are not properly preparing students for the tests and for teacher training.

"I think some schools may not think we're serious yet. I don't believe there's that wide a variance" among students, he said.

Bastine said he is particularly concerned about the poor performance by blacks and Hispanics. Part of the problem is that "minorities tradtionally scare at tests," he said.

"There was at least an attempt to make the test relevant to women, blacks and Hispanics," Bastine said, adding, however, that he was "not satisfied" that all cultural bias had been removed from the exams.

"I wasn't satisfied but I was somewhat relieved. The effort has to be greater. There may have to be different tests," he said.

Despite what he sees as problems in the tests, Bastine said minority students must stop using those as an excuse.

"The time is out to use that excuse," he said.

At a time when education officials are concerned about a teacher shortage, Bastine said the exams "could cut into the whole teaching profession" if scores don't improve.

"We're not trying to make it harder to become a teacher. We are trying to make sure the people who go into the profession are qualified," he said.

Twenty percent of the students who took the July tests passed two portions. Fourteen percent passed one. Fourteen percent passed none of the portions.

The textbook approval came after Mary Helen Berlanga of Corpus Christi fought approval of books for a biology course aimed at non-college bound students.

She complained the books included non-scientific matter — such as a supermarket layout chart.

Mrs. Berlanga could not get a board member to second her motion against the biology books. Board member Katherine Raines of Cleburne said the basic course and textbook is needed although "these are not books we would want most students to use."

School leaders see lesson in paperwork

Associated Press

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Some West Texas school administrators say they'd like to teach Gov. Mark White a lesson or two about the amount of paperwork the state's school legislation has produced this year, and the amount of time it's taken away from teaching.

"Everything I'm doing is double what it was," said Joe White, superintendent of Reagan County Independent School District. "I don't think anybody foresaw all the things that were going to happen."

At his weekly press conference Thursday, the governor said the mounds of paperwork are the result of House Bill 246, passed in 1981, and later translated in Chapter 75.

The bill requires teachers to document how they are providing students with "the essential elements of education."

But some educators said that the 1981 bill coupled with the education reform package passed by the Legislature last summer is causing headaches. The 1984 package, also referred to as House Bill 72, deals more with rules and management.

"I think it is a combination of the two (bills). It has caused a lot of frustration and anxiety on the part of the teachers," Dr. Ernest Zamora, Fort Stockton High School principal, told the San Angelo Standard-Times.

"Basically, the confusion exists on what has to be done concerning the essential elements that came out of House Bill 246 and Chapter 75," he said. "The fact that they exist is not a problem, but how educators are going to determine if they're in place is what's causing the present problem," Zamora said.

Herschel Duckworth, principal of San Angelo Lake View High School, said the greatest burden for educators is new requirements to document the hours a student spends in the classroom with a teacher, documenting attendance records and each teacher's daily responsibilities.

Duckworth said signing documents for students enrolled in special education classes is even more time-consuming. He said there can be as many as six sheets of paper on one student, because of all the places he goes.

Most of the educators interviewed by the Standard-Times mentioned the rigid tutoring programs, additional attendance tabulations, lesson plan documentation and the career ladder — all results of HB 72 — as primary areas in which paperwork has increased.

"I think we could have handled Chapter 75 if they had gone into special session to deal with teacher salaries. HB 246 was the real reform package because it dealt with curricula and instruction," said White, the Reagan County superintendent.

He said the education reform package is a burden to small school districts that don't have the resources to handle the additional paperwork.

Dean Hudgins of Wall agreed, saying he believes some of the paperwork now required is unnecessary.

"High school teachers are having to document everything," said Hudgins, high school principal at Wall, outside of San Angelo. "If a child comes in for tutoring, they have to fill out a form. And if he doesn't come in, they have to fill out another form.

MEDICATING A " SLEEP ATTACK"

Narcoleptics may experience "sleep attacks" several times a day. These attacks can last anywhere from two to fifteen minutes. Upon awakening, they feel as refreshed as if they had had a whole night's sleep. This is because, during these brief naps, they enter REM (rapid eye movement) sleep, the dreaming stage that usually does not occur until a person has been asleep for an hour. What medication would you expect to have prscribed for people who can not stay wake? Logic would suggest amphetamines, stimulants that keep people alert. however, for 200,000 Americans who have narcolcepsy, codeine may be more effective. This drug, which is related to the body's natural opiates, may help regulate abnormal REM sleep episodes.

When you're looking for the kind of pharmacist who helps you to save money-while still receiving the highest quality--by suggesting generic brands of medications, come to SERVICE DRUG OF MIDLAND, A & Scharbauer (682-2519). This is a family-owned, full service drug store, with the needs of the people of our community in mind. City wide delivery is available. We're open Mon.-Sat 8-7. Feinstein visiting China

PEKING (AP) — Mountain-climbing and politicking were among the topics discussed as San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein met Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang on Saturday.

The mayor's delegation included her banker husband, Richard C. Blum, who failed in a bid to climb Mount Everest in 1981 and is planning a second attempt.

Before the mayor married Blum, they both came to China in 1979 to climb Everest, but she fell ill and had to be flown home, according to Ms. Feinstein's press secretary, Thomas Eastham.

Zhao recalled the warm reception he received in San Francisco during his American tour in January.

Ms. Feinstein recalled the turnout for him and said, according to Eastham: "I'm glad you're not coming to San Francisco to run for mayor. I think you might be elected."

The mayor's party is here to bolster trade and political ties forged since 1979, when she secured a sister-city relationship with Shanghai, China's largest industrial city.

NEW YORK (AP) — Former first lady Pat Nixon, apparently recovered from a lung infection, has been sent home from New York Hospital after a five-day stay, a hospital administrator said Saturday.

Jed Golden said Mrs. Nixon, wife of former President Richard M. Nixon, was released from the hospital Friday. "She had some sort of lung infection but apparently it cleared up and she was well enough to go home," he said.

Mrs. Nixon, 72, entered the hospital Monday. It was her second hospital stay this year for a lung ailment.

John Taylor, Nixon's assistant, said last week that Mrs. Nixon has had recurrent lung problems and has suffered two strokes — one of them major — since her husband resigned his office in 1974.

•••

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A rabbi who was with Richard Nixon when he decided to resign the presidency has donated his correspondence with the former chief executive and other memorabilia to Brown University.

Rabbi Baruch Korff, 70, gained prominence when he founded the Ad Hoc Committee for Fairness to the Presidency to rally support for Nixon during Watergate.

Korff was alone with Nixon in the Old Executive Office Building next to the White House on Aug. 6, 1974, when the president decided to resign.

The rabbi has pledged to raise $250,000 to establish an endowment fund to award scholarships to Brown University seniors in history and government. Included in his donated archives are papers that span more than 50 years of both Nazi and Soviet persecution, the Holocaust, the revival of Israel and the struggles of Jews in Europe.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Actor Glenn Ford was reported doing well Saturday following surgery at St. John's Hospital for a fractured hip, a hospital official said.

The 68-year-old actor was "up and about" and would be released from the hospital soon, head nurse Joan Nives said.

"He came in with a fractured hip and is quite stable and is doing very well," Ms. Nives said. She would not elaborate on the extent or nature of Ford's injury, only to say he entered the hospital Tuesday night.

•••

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor James Cagney, hospitalized with fluid in his lungs, responded "very well" to treatment Saturday and was expected to be released within a few days, a hospital official said.

Cagney, 85, remained in stable condition in the coronary care unit of the Lenox Hill Hospital, where he was admitted early Friday.

Albert recalls mother

By DOLORES BARCLAY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — There are gentle gifts and memories the late Princess Grace of Monaco left her family, and advice only a mother could give.

Albert

Stephanie

Her son, the shy 26-year-old Prince Albert, who will one day assume the throne of the tiny principality on the Cote D'Azur, talked in a recent interview about the grief that has not yet been dispelled and his mother's legacy to the arts — the Princess Grace Foundation.

"She toyed with the idea and she did say someday she'd like to see a foundation of hers in the United States to encourage emerging young dancers and actors," the prince said in his suite at a Park Avenue hotel.

The foundation, which was to announce the recipients of its first grants on Monday, plans to provide $1 million in awards over a five-year period.

Albert was named a trustee with his younger sister, Princess Stephanie, when the foundation was established shortly after his mother's death on Sept. 14, 1982. Other trustees include actor Cary Grant; Nancy Reagan is an honorary trustee.

According to official reports, Princess Grace suffered a stroke while driving Stephanie from their French farm to the palace in Monaco and lost control of the car. She died a day later. Stephanie had a hairline fracture of a neck vertebra.

"It's still difficult. We are all still grieving," said Albert, who has his mother's Mediterranean blue eyes and champagne hair.

Their relationship was close, he said, and they talked of many things, including the film career she abandoned after meeting Prince Rainier III in 1955 and becoming Serene Highness a year later.

"I sort of felt, even though she loved her family and home, she would have liked to pursue her career," Albert said. "It was always in her mind, I think."

For his 18th birthday, she gave him a gift he's never forgotten. It was a plaque inscribed with a verse from a Rudyard Kipling poem: "Yours is the Earth and everything that's in it, And — which is more — you'll be a Man, my son!"

"That was very strong," Albert said. "She wanted me to grow up and face responsibilities and be a loving and caring man."

But the only advice the former screen star gave her son on governing the country was to use his own judgment. "She had a lot of common sense," he said. "She felt things."

From his birth, life has been carefully orchestrated for Albert. Though his other sister, Princess Caroline, is older, he will inherit the throne. There are no career choices or whims.

"The inevitability of it all frightens me a little bit," he said. "There are still things I'd like to do in business and the arts.... And it's tough being nice to everybody."

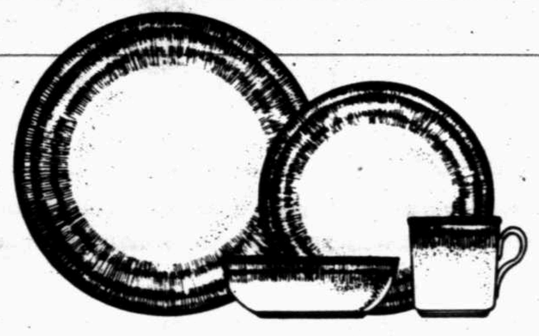

Albert spent the past year learning about corporate and private banking at the Morgan Guaranty Trust Co., advertising at Wells Rich Greene and marketing at a company in Paris. He'd like to learn more about management and international law.

"Ultimately, I will be taking over for my father. I think it's important to gather as much knowledge as I can," he said.

In Monaco, a rocky enclave of 470 acres and about 30,000 people, Albert is president of the swimming and track and field federations. He talked proudly of the new sports complex, complete with Olympic-sized swimming pool, now under way on 30 acres of landfill.

As a child, he dreamed the dreams of the young: He wanted to be a cowboy, he said. "That stuck with me for a while," he said with a laugh. "There were a lot of things I wanted to do. I loved music, so I took guitar lessons. In college, I wanted to sing, so I sang in the chorus."

Picketers greet holiday horror film opening

By DEBORAH ZABARENKO
Associated Press Writer

A horror movie about a murderous, ax-wielding Santa Claus has sparked pickets and calls to television stations, along with complaints that even the ads for the film are too "ghoulish" for children.

Pickets greeted the Milwaukee opening of the movie "Silent Night, Deadly Night" on Friday. Protesters outside the theater hefted signs, including one that read: "Santa Does Not Slay."

Kshiva Taylor of Milwaukee said she would not bring her 4-year-old daughter to see the show: "I wouldn't let her see it. This is too much killing, too much bloodshed."

But Vanessa Johnson took her two children to see the film in Milwaukee because she wanted to show them that Santa, in whatever form, is just a story. Her 13-year-old son, Billy, called it "scary," and her 5-year-old daughter, Aries, didn't want to talk about it.

Kathleen Eberhardt, whose children are 2 and 5 years old, organized the picketing in Milwaukee after she saw the television ads.

"Something has to be done," she said. "It's so ghoulish to do this near the holidays. The little children are the ones who are hurt."

The movie, distributed by Tri-Star Pictures, features a series of bloody murders committed by a maniac in a Santa suit, who kills victims with a razor, a string of Christmas lights, an arrow, a pick hammer, the antlers of a stuffed moose, shards of glass and an ax.

Shawna Reiniger, Tri-Star's director of publicity, declined to make a subjective evaluation of the movie, but said it was "for adults and not children."

An ad for the movie — "You've made it through Halloween, now try and survive Christmas" — depicts an ax-wielding Santa climbing into a chimney. It notes, "He knows when you've been naughty."

"I think it's terrible to have (the movie's prmotional ad) on television," said Dorothy Lindsay of Peoria, Ill., who said her nine grandchildren told her they didn't want anything for Christmas this year because "they didn't know if they would get a good Santa or a bad one."

None of Peoria's three commercial television stations are running the ad. WRAU and WMBD initially ran it after 10:30 p.m., but dropped it after contracts with the advertising agency expired Thursday.

WEEK said it refused to air the commerical at all because the station's general manager decided it was too "horrible" and "gruesome," said Jeff Hawkinson, WEEK director of development.

In New York City, WPIX-TV agreed to show the ad only after 11 p.m., said Martin Appel, a spokesman for the station.

"The commercial really shows a guy in a Santa outfit really committing murder — a really scary commercial," Appel said. "We began running the commercial on Monday and we got about half a dozen phone calls saying we were running it too early, that the kids were watching. When we get half a dozen phone calls we go back and rethink it, and we did and agreed with them."

"We ran it during the Johnny Carson Show (Thursday night)," said WNYT 11 o'clock news producer Rick Kissane in Albany, N.Y. "A woman called and wanted to know if we'd been running it. She said she'd seen it on other television stations and said she thought it was 'terrible, awful, immoral' and that we had no right promoting it."

Month-old Baby Fae sleeps well

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — Baby Fae, the month-old girl who has lived a record 16 days with a transplanted baboon heart in her chest, was sleeping well Saturday and still showing no signs of rejecting the organ, hospital officials said.

"She slept very well last night and she's very rested," said Migdalia Kelley, a spokeswoman for the Loma Linda University Medical Center, where Baby Fae remained in serious but stable condition.

The baby, whose identity is being kept a secret at the request of her parents, had a second picture-taking session Friday during which she heard her mother's voice by telephone.

The mother, whose identity also has not been revealed, has been kept out of her daughter's room for the past three days by doctors who don't want the infant exposed to her mother's cold.

The woman "still has her cold," Ms. Kelley said Saturday.

Baby Fae's vital signs were good and she continued to be weaned from the supplemental oxygen she has been receiving since Oct. 26, when she became the youngest person ever to receive an animal heart.

The 5-pound infant has since become the longest-lived recipient of an animal heart. The previous record for such a transplant was 3½ days.

The transplant provoked a flood of controversy among doctors, ethics experts and animal rights groups.

McCartney kidnap plot uncovered

LONDON (AP) — Authorities have uncovered an apparent plot to kidnap Linda McCartney, the wife of ex-Beatle Paul McCartney, from their home in southern England, police said on Sunday.

A Sussex county police spokesman, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said several people had been arrested in connection with a plot to hold Mrs. McCartney hostage in a woodland hideout in return for a $12.6 million ransom.

The kidnap attempt was aimed at the isolated McCartney farm in Sussex, a county south of London, the spokesman said.

"In the course of inquiries into other matters, police have learned of a possible kidnap attempt," the spokesman said, without specifying what investigators were first looking into.

"A number of people have been arrested and a report will be submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions," he said.

No further information was released. The time and location of the arrests were not known.

Baby boy born in laundromat

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The baby wasn't due for another three weeks, so Shirley L. Logan felt safe going to the neighborhood laundromat.

"The first load was done and I was trying to get it into the dryer when it happened," Ms. Logan, 28, said Friday after her son's birth. "I managed to get in the back room and lie down, and it happened real, real fast."

Coleman given another kidney

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Gary Coleman, star of NBC-TV's "Diff'rent Strokes," on Saturday underwent his second kidney transplant and was "doing well," officials said.

Publicist Larry Goldman said Coleman's parents visited their son following the 2:30 p.m. surgery and that the pint-sized 16-year-old TV star was in intensive care, where he would probably remain for about three days.

Coleman was "doing well," University of California-Los Angeles Medical Center spokesman Victor Mitry said.

Looking up

For months now economists have been predicting that if interest rates would start coming down — slowly — the economy would start heating up once again. That's what is happening now, as a number of top banks have cut their prime lending rate to 11.75 percent.

The prime, the base rate upon which banks compute interest charges on short-term loans, had stood at 12 percent since Oct. 26 and the most recent drop was a continuation of a decline that has pushed rates down about 2 percentage points in recent weeks.

While some economists have speculated that the economy may be on the verge of another recession, that doesn't seem logical. Midland's economy may not be the ideal weathervane for the country, but local business has appeared poised on the verge of an expansion for a number of months.

It's true that the economy here may be more subject to outside forces than other regions of the country because of the nature of the oil business, but local business activity while slumping has not exhibited signs of dipping further. The pace of both oil activity and construction is drastically off from the highs of the "boom" years in the late 1970s, but some local businesses appear ready to begin moving if that one spark comes along.

Unemployment figures likely won't improve much more until business expansion begins and inflation looks well under control at this point.

So it's likely the spark most businesses have been waiting for has been a drop in the interest rates. With that now occurring, the economy may experience the beginning of real sustained growth.

That would be good news for all sectors of the population.

The waning klan

The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, which keeps a vigilant eye on such developments, has reported the welcome news that the Ku Klux Klan has dwindled in membership sharply over the past two years.

The ADL figures — informally confirmed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation — show the Klan rolls have dropped about 35 percent since 1982 and that the remaining hooded diehards have lost their capacity for staging demonstrations or rallies of any magnitude. Moreover, financial contributions and income from sales of Klan publications have plummeted to almost zero.

This, however, does not mean the Klan is dead. In fact, the ADL has expressed fear that the surviving hard-core Klansmen may go underground and, out of desperation, wage a campaign of terrorism. This concept is disputed by the FBI which argues that the Klan over the past half century has lost whatever general appeal it once might have had.

It is devoutly hoped that the FBI's appraisal is the correct one. The hatred and distrust shown by the klan isn't needed in this country.

Another View:
Seeking happiness

A defection, especially from the Soviet Union to the United States, is a conspicuously political act. And so it was, 17 years ago, when Joseph Stalin's daughter, Svetlana Alliluyeva, renounced her homeland and chose to live in America.

But her decision to go home again, as disclosed the other day, seems to have been for personal, not political, reasons — however much the Kremlin may try to exploit it.

Why did Alliluyeva choose to return to a country she once called a prison?

A clue to the answer may lie in an interview she gave last March to a London newspaper. "In the beginning," she said of her expatriate life, "you are in a kind of ecstasy and euphoria. Later on, you learn what the reality is, and it is in many ways a disappointment. I would say to all potential defectors always remember that on the other shore there are the same humans — and that includes people who are imperfect, dull, incompetent, treacherous, idiotic, just like those you are leaving behind. It is human nature that rules the world, not governments and regimes."

Those are the words of a failed idealist, a person forcibly awakened from a dream world. Indeed, people who met her in this country say she struck them as warm, naive and vulnerable, as a person who wanted above all to lead a normal life. Alliluyeva could be pardoned for wanting a humdrum existence, given the traumatic turmoil of her early years.

Her infamous father was a despot and perhaps, toward the end of his life, a lunatic. Her mother killed herself when Svetlana was only 6. One of her brothers was killed and another died of alcoholism. Three of her marriages ended in divorce, and death ended a love affair.

In her self-imposed exile, she was torn between two worlds. She was the Russian mother of Russian children and grandchildren — but also of an American-born daughter, Olga, whom Alliluyeva once called "as American as apple pie."

What does Olga think of being taken to Russia by her mother? Another unanswered question: What promises were exchanged between the chastened expatriate and the Kremlin regarding her return?

Alliluyeva seems never to have found what she needed during her 17 years in the West. Perhaps she'll find it, after all, in the country of her deepest roots and most painful and enduring memories. Perhaps her quest will end happily where it began. In strictly human terms, that surely can be hoped.

JACK ANDERSON
Terrorism issue 'bombs' advisers

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George Shultz's startling speech — recommending military retaliation against international terrorists — gave a brief, tantalizing glimpse into the Reagan administration's policy councils.

Jack Anderson

After some initial confusion, in which Vice President George Bush disagreed with Shultz and President Reagan offered a cryptic response, the White House issued a statement insisting that everyone in the administration was united on the need for decisive action against terrorists.

But in reality, the president's advisers are split over how to deal with the terrorists who have turned American outposts overseas into shooting galleries.

I'm told that Shultz deliberately timed his provocative pronouncement to come just before the election. He is the leader of a hard-line faction within the administration that had been arguing, without success, for swift and punishing retaliation for the embassy bombing in Beirut.

The bitter policy dispute, papered over till after the election, remains to be resolved. Pitted against Shultz's bomb-the-bombers faction are Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, the White House "pragmatists" and an influential group in the State Department.

The lineup is by no means exact or immutable, but administration sources told my associate Lucette Lagnado that the Pentagon is as badly fragmented on this issue as the White House and the State Department. The National Security Council largely supports the Shultz "get-tough" approach.

In an earlier report, I disclosed that there had been discussions, at the highest levels, of possible targets for retaliation in the wake of the most recent embassy bombing; these ranged from Shiite terrorist camps in the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley of Lebanon to possible targets within Iran itself.

In the end, cooler heads in the White House came down on the side of caution — some would say equivocation — basing their decision on strictly political grounds. The month before the election, they reasoned, was no time to risk reviving Reagan's hard-line image, especially since there was no guarantee that retaliation would solve the problem.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff lent their weight to the theory that a military strike against Iran or Syrian-controlled areas of Lebanon would simply begin a "cycle of retaliation." As Bush and other administration spokesmen have taken pains to point out, dealing with terrorist gangs is different from dealing with established governments. Punishing a sympathetic government for the acts of irresponsible terrorists is also a questionable tactic.

The Pentagon argued that there could be no guarantee that a surgical strike against the Iranians or the Syrians would bring an end to terrorist attacks against U.S. facilities. Quite possibly, it would merely provoke another attack — and another U.S. response — starting an endless "cycle of retaliation."

While Weinberger and the Joint Chiefs have managed to keep the lid on discontent within the Pentagon, I'm told that Shultz was called by at least one Pentagon official before he made his speech and told that they were not happy with it. But Shultz decided to force the administration's hand.

What infuriates the Pentagon dissidents is that they have what they consider unequivocal proof that the government of Iran was behind at least the latest embassy bombing. They point to the mysterious visit of Iranian President Hojallislam Khamenei to the terrorist site in Lebanon a few days before the embassy attack.

As I reported recently, Khamenei's surprise visit to the Shiite terrorists' camp in the Bekaa Valley was initially misinterpreted by U.S. intelligence. It was supposed that he had either just dropped in on the expatriates for no important reason while visiting Syria President Hafez Assad, or that he had gone to order the Iranians to stop the rowdy behavior Assad had complained to him about.

In hindsight, military intelligence analysts are now convinced that Khamenei visited the terrorists to bring Tehran's orders for the embassy strike and to make sure it was going to be properly executed. Presumably he also made sure that Assad would cooperate, or at least do nothing to hinder the operation.

Shultz and the Pentagon dissenters feel that military retaliation against Tehran is justified — or at least could have been justified if it had been done within a few days of the embassy bombing. Now, they concede in frustration, it is too late to launch a retaliatory raid. The political pragmatists' delaying tactics have succeeded.

As for the Syrians, opinion within the administration is even more widely divided. The State Department, for example, got word from its Mideast intelligence sources that Assad was "angry" over the bombing. This lent weight to those who hope to cultivate Assad's cooperation in an eventual peace settlement in the region.

But these reports on Assad's reaction were greeted with skepticism at the Pentagon and in the intelligence community. They view Assad as a Machiavellian figure who is both canny and ruthless enough to shed crocodile tears over a terrorist outrage that he had helped bring to fruition.

GEORGE F. WILL
Now, how about a few changes?

WASHINGTON — As the dust settles and Democrats settle down to the chore of arguing that President Reagan was denied a mandate because he was denied the District of Columbia and his opponent's home state, the political system is slipping into what is called the "honeymoon" period, which lasts until the winner of an election claims a mandate to do something. Alexander Woollcott said that reading the last chapters of "The Brothers Karamazov" always "chokes me up and fills me with a love of mankind which sometimes lasts till noon of the following day."

George F. Will

The political "noon of the following day" — the end of the honeymoon and the beginning of a normal, which is to say occasionally stormy, marriage — is coming soon anyway. So Reagan should go ahead and raise a lot of dust by raising questions that only a second-term President can raise.

It has been so long since we have had one of those exotic creatures that we need to re-invent the rules for them. But for the fun of it, he could begin by proposing the following:

Repeal of the 22nd Amendment. In 1988 Reagan may (I am not prejudging this) be a tad too old to seek a third term. So he is just the fellow to propose uncluttering the Constitution of the two-term limit on Presidents. No one should be a lame duck the day she (I am looking after President Kirkpatrick's interests) is inaugurated. Being a lame duck makes the chief executive less fearsome, and fear is what makes Washington work — well, okay, 97 percent fear and 3 percent devotion.

Repeal of the War Powers Act. It is unwieldy, unclear and clearly unconstitutional as a derogation of the responsibilities of the commander in chief vested in the presidency and exercised by most occupants of that office. No President has yet quite complied with the Act. Repeal would be the straightforward approach.

Abolition of the Federal Election Commission and all limits on campaign spending and giving. The FEC is a bureaucracy that exists to enforce limits on spending, which are limits on the quantity of political speech. Fortunately, the FEC fails to do that. It must fail, given the inventiveness of the American mind regarding loopholes of all sorts. Still, the mere existence of the FEC is unaesthetic, and an affront.

"Quarantine" Nicaragua. This was the good idea from the Mondale campaign. I do not know precisely what he meant by it, but he now has the spare time to explain it. He proposed it when he was trying to get back to the center after his competition with Gary Hart for the Democratic "peace" constituency. Reagan could embrace the idea as an example of bipartisanship in foreign policy. What fun.

Repeal the law pertaining to special prosecutors, who now are known as "independent counsels." Too often a special prosecutor is used as a means of harassing officials of the executive branch (for example, Hamilton Jordan and Ed Meese). Besides, the law probably is unconstitutional. It establishes a law-enforcement function outside the President's control, although the Constitution vests in the President the duty to see that the laws are faithfully executed.

Challenge the court rulings that say the First Amendment means that political "protesters" have a constitutional right to litter Lafayette Square. The Square, directly across Pennsylvania Avenue from the White House, is frequently littered with huge, unsightly signs proclaiming various political and religious obsessions. These signs are the work of "protesters" who actually are mere exhibitionists. They are not making arguments; they are making a mess. Millions of people have their enjoyment of the nation's capital diminished by these acts of visual aggression. Citizens should have a right to pass through important and lovely public spaces without having their senses lacerated, just as they have a right not to be grabbed by the lapels and forced to listen to political outbursts.

Repeal of the American League's designated-hitter rule. I have hitherto addressed the President sharply about this and my patience is not inexhaustible. Conservatism means keeping your cotton-pickin' hands off fundamentals. Reformers messed with baseball's fundamentals. Today's conservatives are promiscuous amenders of the Constitution. Surely they can see the need to restore baseball to its pristine condition.

Now, these proposals would bring the honeymoon to a screeching halt, but no marriage can be all bliss. As Dan Jenkins says in his hilarious new football novel, "Life Its Own Self," marriage is one year in Heaven and 20 years in the light-heavyweight division.

ART BUCHWALD
84's old news; look to 1988!

I had no sooner finished reading my morning newspaper concerning President Reagan's win over Fritz Mondale when I got a call from Shorty Courtwright.

Art Buchwald

"Well, what do you think?" he wanted to know.

"It was an awesome victory and personal triumph of unbelievable magnitude," I said. "Reagan's landslide in 1984 is one for the history books."

"I'm not talking about 1984," Courtwright said. "I'm asking you what do you think about 1988?"

"Frankly, I haven't given much thought to 1988," I admitted. "I'm still trying to figure out the ramifications of yesterday's election."

"That's over," Courtwright said. "Your readers all want to know what's going to happen four years from now, when Ronald Reagan finishes his second term."

"They do?"

"Of course. You must be aware as well as I am, that once a president is elected the only concern Americans have is who is going to be their next president. How long do you expect us to stay with yesterday's news?"

"I was going to hold off until Reagan's inauguration before I started writing about 1988," I said. "Do you think that's too long to wait?"

"It is for me. After all, Reagan is a lame duck president. Since he can't run again, you should be speculating about '88."

"You're probably right," I said. "But I've been so busy this morning reading the election results, I haven't been able to devote much time to who the next president could be."

"That's the trouble with you people in the media. You're all involved in pack journalism. Instead of looking ahead you're still writing stories about Reagan and what he'll do for the next four years."

"It might have some relevance," I said defensively.

"Possibly to a few people. But the majority of us would rather know who's coming after Reagan. It's going to be a wide-open race in 1988, and a lot more exciting than this year's election."

"Shorty, you may be onto something," I said. "Maybe I ought to give the president credit for carrying 49 states, and then go up to New Hampshire and find out how they're going to vote four years from now."

"I would if I were you. A few exit polls in New Hampshire could decide how the wind is going to blow for George Bush and Jack Kemp."

"Is that how you see the Republican lineup?"

"It should be close, because no matter what Bush thinks, Reagan's personal popularity is not transferable to him. And if things don't go right the next four years, Bush could be tarnished with Reagan's administration. This would give Kemp an opportunity to appeal to all the conservative voters who have never trusted Bush because he was once a middle-of-the-roader."

"How do you see the Democratic race?"

"It will probably be fought out between Gov. Mario Cuomo and Teddy Kennedy. I can't wait to see them debate each other in Iowa."

"I wonder who the networks will decide was the winner?" I said.

"The Kennedy people are already putting out the word their man won."

"Well, I'm glad you called. There is no sense writing about Reagan when 1988 is just around the corner."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Nov. 11, the 316th day of 1984. There are 50 days left in the year. Today is Veterans' Day.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 11, 1918, fighting in World War I came to an end with the signing of an armistice between the Allies and Germany inside a railroad car in the Forest of Compiegne in France.

On this date:

In 1620, 41 Pilgrims signed a compact aboard the "Mayflower," which was anchored off the Massachusetts coast. In the compact, the Pilgrims agreed to a "body politick" to enact "just and equal laws."

In 1778, Iroquois indians in central New York state killed some 40 people in the Cherry Valley Massacre.

In 1889, Washington was admitted to the Union as the 42nd state.

In 1921, President Warren G. Harding dedicated the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Washington. The inscription on the monument reads, "Here rests in honored glory an American Soldier known but to God."

In 1942, during World War II, the Germans completed their occupation of France.

Television dealing with issues worthy of the medium

Bill Modisett

Two decades may not be a long time in terms of the history of the world, but where television programming is involved it's a quantum jump.

Unfortunately in terms of the fare served up to the masses that jump hasn't always been forward.

Back during what has become known as television's "Golden Age" it was easy to plop down in front of the tube, tear open a bag of munchies and drift leisurely into "I Love Lucy," "Leave It To Beaver" or "Gomer Pyle." But, then, life was simpler at that time and maybe television was merely a mirror image of who we were.

At that time, television served a void in the entertainment arena — giving tired and bored Americans a much-needed outlet. It was short-lived, though, because along came the 1960s, the height of opposition to the Vietnam War and a sexual revolution that shook American values.

So much for television's "Golden Age." It went the way of bobby sox, jukeboxes and ducktail haircuts.

What evolved for television was a reflection of American society's "great escape" — programs that either questioned morality, exploited sexuality, flaunted maniacal violence as a way of life or were so full of fluff that they couldn't hold the interest of a 2-year-old. There was a cultural void and television was missing its one great opportunity for giving to the American people what it could do best — provide great entertainment and enlightening programs that discussed the pressing social issues of the day.

That has begun to change, evidenced by an ever-increasing number of productions that are closely examining issues that society has not discussed openly and, as a result, has watched grow out of control.

One of the first aired in the past couple of years was ABC's "The Day After," which depicted what could happen in a typical American city following an exchange of nuclear missiles. While "The Day After" may have drawn its large viewing audience and acclaim because of its treatment of the controversial subject matter, it was merely the start of a new trend.

In the months following the airing of "The Day After," the various networks have placed before the American public a number of topics worthy of the medium: "Adam," which looked at the problems involving missing children; NBC's "The Burning Bed," which looked at the traumatic problem of family violence; and "Silence of the Heart," aired just this week by CBS, which dealt with the emotionally-shattering issue of teen-age suicide.

There have been others, of course, and they have brought into the light of public scrutiny a number of hush-hush subjects: Homosexuality, racism, alcoholism and drug abuse, teenage pregnancy. It's a sure bet that in most instances the "moralizing" tones of the various programs don't meet with the approval of all viewers; they shouldn't because that isn't the true intent of the programs.

It isn't the role of television producers to tell society how it should react to a particular problem. Rather, the intent of these programs is to get society to focus on particular problems and to address those problems in meaningful fashion. Problems don't go away of their own accord; they require a little "help."

Television is coming into its own, I believe, and society as a whole will be the beneficiary. That's good. We can't live in television's "Golden Age" because it no longer reflects our society. It's merely a history book chapter of our culture.

It's interesting to look at, from time to time, but not to dwell on. It's our past. We have to live in today.

Congratulations due to Rep. Tom Craddick

We would like to take this time to say congratulations to Tom Craddick on his victory in our race for the State Representative seat in the 76th District of the Texas Legislature.

We would also like to take this time to urge Mr. Craddick and the people of Midland and Odessa to get us a four-year university. UTPB needs four-year status. A four-year university will enhance the quality of life for all residents of the Permian Basin. It will be more cost effective than the current institution and a strong incentive for new and diverse industries to locate in this area.

This area has already lost one industry due to the fact that we did not have a four-year university. That is money out of the pockets of both Midland and Odessa. We believe that recently former Mayor Angelo of Midland stated that UTPB should not get four-year status until such time as it can be shown to benefit Midland. To that line of reasoning, we respond by saying that many Midlanders attend UTPB and Midland's economy would definitely be enhanced by the location of new industry in the area.

It's time to bury the hatchet of this stupid Midland/Odessa feud. A good step in that direction would be to get four-year status for UTPB. There is no other reason in the world why it should not be a four-year university. It would not be a detriment to our two fine junior colleges in the area, rather, it would be of benefit to them due to the fact that its curriculum could be coordinated with the junior colleges' curriculum and make available to students in the Permian Basin many more degree alternatives and better quality education.

Again, we extend our congratulations to Tom. We hope that the people of the Permian Basin will rally with him to get us a four-year university in the Permian Basin.

Why must Midland destroy the past?

I have lived in Midland for 33 years and have stood in the assigned area and wept while the Scharbauer Hotel was imploded. I voiced opposition to and deplored the destruction of the old Petroleum Club. I abhorred the razing of North Elementary School. I regretted the abolishment of the old Post Office building. And before my time, the Youngblood house was razed. Now, I weep while I watch the cruel and senseless razing of the Lancaster House.

The Scharbauer Hotel could have been added to and retained as a fine hotel such as the Adolphus in Dallas. The Petroleum Club could have been renovated and remained a downtown club with a personality of Midland's heritage. The school could have been maintained as an office building such as the Sedco Building in Dallas. The Post Office could have been kept and renovated for many uses — Post Office, office space, administration for the forthcoming "arts complex". The Lancaster House could have been retained as an integral part of the cultural complex of Midland which would include the Turner House which houses the Museum of the Southwest, the Haley Library and the Planetarium. This would have honored the donor's (Naomi Lancaster) intention.

I am not a world traveler but have traveled rather extensively. Most every museum I have visited in the United States has incorporated into its complex an old home or mansion. Those which have not, envy those who have had an old home given to them. Midland was in an enviable position having two homes given to be used in the cultural complex.

I have been told that restoration and preservation lawyers in Texas have been amazed that it was a "museum" who destroyed a segment of a community's heritage. A bank or an oil company yes — but a museum?

How is it that we in Midland destroy while every other community retains and restores and preserves their heritage? Isn't it a shame Midland will never have a heritage of her past because of greed and vindictiveness?

Election workers deserve our thanks

As one of the electorate of Midland County I would like to express my appreciation of the time and effort exerted on behalf of the voters by the election judges and their respective alternates and the crews who backed up these officials.

It is through the efforts of these great people we were able to learn very quickly the results of the voting in our county.

To each of you I send my grateful thank you.

Does store owner back free enterprise?

This is in reference to the recent letter you printed called "Support Midland — don't shop at home." In the letter the state of Midland's economy and fact that retail stores are closing their doors was blamed on home parties.

It greatly concerns me that this person owns two retail stores, so evidently she does believe in free enterprise but wants Midlanders to protect her business by not accepting invitations to these type gatherings. This lifestyle is very inconsistent with the attitude communicated in the letter printed.

If she is a local merchant why not get on the bandwagon to close down Walgreens, K-Mart, Sears, Dillards, etc? Aren't they also taking business away from her business? Sure they employ people and advertise but we never see any of the real profits.

We all are a part of the free enterprise system. We meet the variety of needs that come with the variety of individuals that make up Midland.

Currently, I am self-employed and in the home show business. The letter stated that we do not advertise or support causes with donations. Please note, these are only her degrading opinions and they are not facts.

It is true we do not have the overhead a retail store does but we do not have the privacy at home that a retail store owner does. This is our choice and that is her choice. And that is the beauty of the free enterprise system. We are free to choose.

We all have an important place in Midland and play an important role in keeping the free enterprise system a healthy, thriving part of Midland.

Despite massive Reagan victory, Democrats can come out of closet

By DR. JERRY FRANKS

Many Midlanders probably feel that the only graceful thing for Democrats to do at this moment in history is retreat to their lonely closets and not come out again until called. President Reagan clearly has won a great personal mandate to maintain his style of leadership. It would take a sore loser indeed not to admire the president's ceremonial talents as chief of state. In that role, he can be expected to continue to play the relaxed, affable All-American optimist who has led a revival of our country's sense of patriotism, self-respect and international dignity.

Even losers get consolation prizes, however, and I suspect that if you'll look over your shoulder, you'll notice your Democrat cousins very carefully cracking the closet door, peeking out to see whether Reagan's victory has left them any political future at all. My guess is that they will wipe the embarrassment off their faces and quickly rejoin the game.

The consolation prize is guaranteed by the nature of politics itself. America is not a distorted, antipolitical regime with a single-minded ideology that claims to know all the answers, as in Iran or the Soviet Union. These regimes are antipolitical because they do not permit open, continuing debate about the purposes of government itself. As long as America is free, there will be no final work on the philosophical boundaries of appropriate governmental activity. Republicans currently are doing quite well with their gospel of minimal governmental interference in the marketplace, while Democrats recently have had a harder time defending their tendency to maximize government's response to almost any social complaint. Still, neither of these points of view has complete possession of the American political imagination. If we ever arrive at a point where we think we've settled such questions forever, then I think we'll really be in trouble. A perfectly consistent ideology would have to be imposed on Americans, and we would be free no longer.

BUT, ONE might ask, what about Reagan's impressive victory? Doesn't it mean that we can stop arguing for a while? Haven't the Republicans defined our national agenda as far ahead as we can see? I would have to say no, not completely, and that's where Democrats can take heart.

First of all, President Reagan is now officially and finally no longer a candidate for anything. He will not head up another political ticket. He can spend the next four years in a kind of benign semi-retirement, if he pleases, and I don't think anyone would blame him or mind very much. Most of us are probably tired of hyperactive presidents, anyway. They inevitably get into political trouble that spoils their ability to provide us with satisfying symbolic leadership. As it is, President Reagan can be chief of state in his relaxed and effective way, letting his top advisors, such as Houstonian James Baker, manage the day-to-day details of Reagan's other role as chief of government. Politics will go on as usual, but the president's detractors will find it easier to focus their opposition on his policies without the risk of challenging his enormous personal charisma head-on.

EVEN THOUGH the president has managed to wrap himself rather convincingly in the flag, that's no excuse for Democrats to shrink away from the task of rebuilding their party leadership between now and the elections of 1986 and 1988. Ironically, it's probably a very convenient time for Democrats to be out of the White House for some time longer. That way they won't have to take the blame for prematurely terminating President Reagan's "supply side" economic experiment before all the results are in. President Reagan has earned more time to promote his economic ideas. If they work, and the economic expansion continues, then maybe we've learned something from the Laffers and the Kemps. If, on the other hand, the huge Reagan deficits lead to renewed inflation, or if the Reagan administration is forced to seek new revenues or to make further painful cuts in domestic social programs, then the Democrats can claim to have foreseen the outcome all along. As president, Walter Mondale not only would have had to confront the growing deficit problem, but also would have had to take the flack for any difficulties in dealing with it. Maybe he's luckier than he knows.

BY 1986, there could be an entirely new ball game. Some expensive bills will be coming due, and the administration may well be on the defensive about its handling of the deficit problem. Back in 1982, when there was a recession, Democrats did well in their effort to recapture full control of the House of Representatives. By 1986, they may once again find their voice as champions of government programs threatened by a deficit-honed budget-cutter's knife.

Between now and 1988, Democrats will have to choose their own new standard bearer, and that will probably be messy, as it always is. Still, they will have an opportunity to circulate some new blood, neither Carter's nor Mondale's. Republicans like to refer to Democrats as a circus of special interests, but in modern times the Democratic Party has always been an unruly coalition of many dissimilar groups. It is hard to imagine it succeeding in any other guise. Its role for many decades has been to form a majority out of many smaller discontented groups who somehow feel themselves left out of the economic or social mainstream of American life. Without that special mission, I don't know that the party really deserves to survive. At any rate, the old coalition appears to be hanging on in one house of Congress, if nowhere else.

IF A majority of Americans now feel that they can realistically identify with the upper-middle class and no longer have anything in common with those who can't take the competition, so be it, and let's wish everyone success. It would be wonderful to see enough individual initiative released to build the America of everyone's dreams. Nothing in politics or the economy is eternal, however, and an appropriate role for Democrats is to provide a fall-back position, a positive set of ideas for compassionate governmental assistance to those who often require and demand it, even if it means being a minority party for a while.

In the meantime, Democrats can amuse themselves by watching Republicans jockey for position to succeed President Reagan. It will be hard to find someone big enough to fill those shoes. Republican conservatism is not of a single stripe, and Democrats may find it interesting to look on while the Republican Party reveals that it, too, contains some unruly interest groups.

Reagan right about 'America's best days lie ahead'

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — President Reagan achieved a historic victory in last Tuesday's elections when voters across the nation re-elected him with a record-breaking 525 electoral votes in 49 states. Democratic challenger Walter Mondale took only the District of Columbia and squeaked through in his home state of Minnesota, giving the former vice president just 13 electoral votes.

The election was one for the history books, all right, and President Reagan in a victory speech at Los Angeles told cheering supporters that the economic boom will continue unabated as he intends to stay the course.

"America's best days lie ahead," the President declared. "I'm going to do it one more time. You ain't seen nothing yet."

Even as President Reagan spoke and as America endorsed his policies with a massive mandate, a Soviet arms buildup seemed in the works through an attempted clandestine aircraft delivery to the Marxist junta of Nicaragua, at the heart of Central America. Either Soviet attack helicopters were delivered by a Soviet freighter, or MiG-21 jet fighters, or a combination of both.

OBVIOUSLY, THE U.S.S.R. intends to test the determination of President Reagan as they did in 1962 during the missile crisis when the late President John F. Kennedy compelled the Soviets to back down. The present Nicaraguan episode is a crisis of the greatest importance and President Reagan must be thanked for having the foresight to rebuild American military defenses which monitor Communist-led machinations throughout the Caribbean region.

Naturally, the Communist-run dictatorship of Nicaragua glibly denied the shipment, carefully monitored by our Defense Department monitors. It has just loudly proclaimed a "sweeping" election win, East European style, for the Sandinistas. The opposition found it impossible to campaign and their newspaper, "La Prensa," was shut down.

Apparently the U.S.S.R. doesn't see equality our way. While Moscow indicated to Secretary of State Shultz that it didn't ship advanced fighters to Nicaragua, the Soviets deliberately violated a superpower agreement. John P. Wallach, Hearst Foreign Affairs Editor, reported some senior administration sources in Washington as having disclosed that the Soviet Union conducted the largest underground nuclear test since signing an agreement with us in 1976.

THE EXPLOSION occurred, Wallach reported, Oct. 27 in Soviet Central Asia. The blast was the equivalent of six earthquakes and went far beyond the agreed threshhold which our Senate never approved but to which America has adhered. This test obviously was meant to scare us and other countries which also monitored the explosion. So much for "serious" Soviet disarmament and peace claims.

The left-wing junta in Nicaragua just mobilized another 20,000 civilians into a home guard. The regime charged that it was acting in self-defense, accusing the Reagan administration of planning an "invasion" of its country. TASS in Moscow echoed the Sandinista charges against us.

The Nicaraguan regime has a larger military organization than the rest of Central America combined. Introduction of Soviet fighter aircraft and choppers into Nicaragua would mean escalation of armed might and revolution in sealane routes. President Reagan destabilized Soviet intrigue in Central America with the U.S. liberation of Grenada from communist control, not, I feel, fully appreciated by a lot of Americans but the Soviets showed in statements they appreciated the meaning of Grenada.

THE PRESIDENT'S unswerving adherence to a rejuvenated American military defense will, I am confident, pay dividends in this time of crisis that the U.S.S.R. has again, for the second time in a little over 20 years, fomented in our backyard.

During the long campaign and elections the American voters saw through the complaints by Mondale and his running mate, Geraldine Ferraro, that President Reagan had spent excessively to mend our military and so rang up such a large national deficit. In a situation of crisis, isn't it sound that we have capable defenses? These cost big money, remember, because we don't use make-believe missiles, toy planes or bathtub plastic ships.

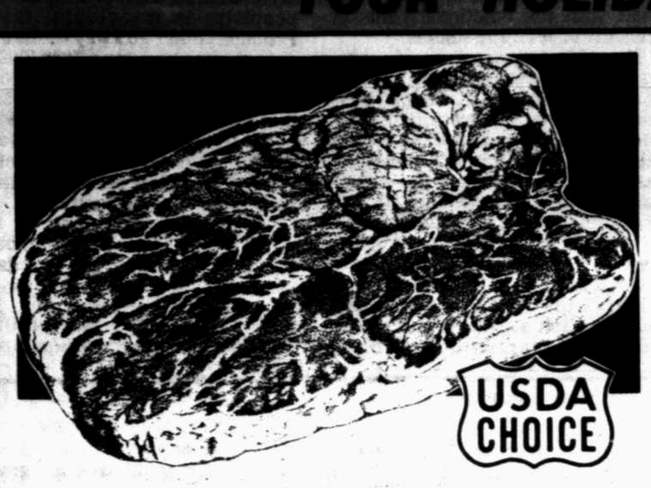

For many years the Democrats comprised the majority of the two-party system in the country. I'm not a pundit but I read a great deal and have listened to assorted arguments of people whose mother's milk is politics. Many of these students of political affairs believe that the Republican Party has taken over the minds and hearts of voters of all age groups. The carping criticism of the Mondale-Ferraro team was brushed aside in the voting booth. The Republicans are today in the mainstream.

WHETHER THIS development can persist without a nationally popular personality like that of President Reagan, I wouldn't be rash enough to predict. His unshaken faith in America and boundless confidence in responsible free enterprise are shared by tens of millions of Americans who supported him from every group. That goes for members of trade unions to the supposed "gender gap"; the middle class and small business folk. President Reagan brought the country together — and how! I think that's a lot more than a new beginning. It's a whole new book that needs a good historian to tell it.

Tomorrow, President Reagan is back at The White House dealing with priority affairs of state, and I know that the U.S.S.R.-Cuban push into our hemisphere is high on his list — as it should be.

Frogs do it again

By MIKE COCHRAN

FORT WORTH (AP) — And the beat goes on for Texas Christian's Cinderella Horned Frogs.

With Kenneth Davis rushing for 203 yards and three touchdowns, 15th-ranked TCU scrambled to a 27-16 victory over Texas Tech Saturday and will entertain Texas this week with the Southwest Conference championship and a Cotton Bowl invitation on the line.

"All the chips are on the table now for next week, and that's just what we wanted," said a jubilant Jim Wacker, TCU's second-year coach, after the Frogs' come-from-behind verdict.

"Unbelievable," he said.

"We've done the impossible week after week this season. Geez, I didn't know Cinderella was a Frog."

TCU hiked its season record to 8-1 and its SWC slate to 5-1 while the previously unbeaten Longhorns were getting upset by Houston, 29-15.

TCU and Texas are the only teams in the conference with just one loss.

"This is the one we've been waiting for," said Davis, who set a new TCU rushing record as the Frogs set a single-season scoring mark of 318 points.

"It's going to be a dog fight. TCU deserves this type of game," he said. "It's been a long time since they've had a team with a chance to go to the Cotton Bowl.

"It will be the biggest game of my life."

Saturday was no slouch.

Davis, the nation's No.3 rusher, scored on runs of 2 and 39 yards and then broke the game open with a 75-yard romp in the fourth quarter as the Frogs won their sixth in a row after a 26-17 loss to Southern Methodist.

Davis, who carried 29 times, became the only player in SWC history to have three 200-yard rushing performances in a single season and also broke TCU's single season rushing mark of 1,283 yards set by the Jim Swink in 1955.

Davis now has 1,368 yards.

TCU trailed the Red Raiders 3-0, 6-0, 6-3, 13-3, 13-10 and 16-10 before Davis barreled 39 yards for his second touchdown with 1:06 left in the third period.

Texas Tech quarterback Aaron Keesee throws on the run.

Ken Ozee, whose extra point tied his own record of 31 straight conversions, broke the school standard after Davis' third touchdown.

Ozee opened and closed the TCU scoring with field goals of 30 and 17 yards.

The Red Raiders, 4-5 and 2-4, moved out to a 6-0 lead on field goals of 20 and 49 yards by Ricky Gann and led 13-3 at halftime by virtue of a 55-yard pass from Aaron Keesee to Buzz Tatom.

Besides breaking Swink's rushing record, Davis moved within three yards of matching Swink's career mark of 2,618 yards.

The Temple junior scored from the 2 to cap a 68-yard drive in the closing seconds of the first half and his 39-yard TD was the finishing touch of an 80-yard march late in the third quarter.

In between, Gann kicked a 21-yard field goal.

With TCU nursing a one-point lead, Davis took a pitchout from Anthony Sciaraffa, cut down the sideline and blazed 75 yards for the clincher with 7:08 left.

The Raiders took an early lead on Gann's field goals, the first after a TCU punt into the teeth of a 21-mile-an-hour wind gave Tech possession at the Frog 41.

UH upsets No. 3 Texas

By JACK KEEVER

AUSTIN (AP) — Unranked Houston had to be counting its Thanksgiving blessings a little early Saturday after cashing No. 3 Texas' nine turnovers into a 29-15 upset of the floundering Longhorns.

"I guess we are leading the world in turnovers now," Texas Coach Fred Akers said.

Houston quarterback Gerald Landry threw two touchdown passes and cornerbacks DeWayne Bowden and Greg Purcell each had two interceptions off quarterback Todd Dodge.

The nine turnovers tied a record for an Akers-coached Texas team and set a record for ball-grabbing Houston.

"We just kind of hunt and pecked," said Houston Coach Bill Yeoman, whose team has lost two Southwest Conference Conference games and is 5-4 for the season.

"This is the biggest day I've ever had, one I've always dreamed about," said Bowden, who intercepted one Dodge pass in the Houston end zone and returned his other 62 yards for the clinching touchdown.

Texas in eight games has had 16 passes intercepted and has lost 19 fumbles.

"Everybody had told me that everyone has bad days, and I guess this was meant to be mine," Dodge said.

The loss was the first in the Southwest Conference for Texas, now 6-1-1, and set up a possible showdown for the Cotton Bowl next Saturday when the Longhorns travel to Fort Worth to play Texas Christian.

The Houston victory broke an 18-game conference winning streak for Texas, which also was unbeaten in its last 24 regular season games. It was the Cougars, now 5-4, who earlier this season upset Southern Methodist.

Houston scored 17 points in the second quarter on a 79-yard pass from Landry to split end Anthony Ketchem, a 48-yard field goal by Mike Clendenen and a 7-yard scoring toss from Landry to tight end Carl Hilton with only 9 seconds remaining in the half.

Texas' only touchdown came on a 2-yard run by Terry Orr after the Longhorns recovered Landry's fumble on Houston's first posession at the Cougar 13.

Bowden intercepted a pass by Texas quarterback Todd Dodge in the end zone in the second quarter and pulled down a deflected fourth-quarter Dodge pass and raced 62 yards for the clinching score.

Before a fourth-quarter completion, Dodge, who had been closing in on Texas' passing record, was 0-for-13 and had four interceptions. He later was intercepted a fifth time, which tied a school record set 40 years ago. Boos could be heard from the overflow Texas crowd of 80,348.

Hogs keep hopes alive

WACO (AP) — Fullback Derrick Thomas plunged 4 yards for a touchdown with 2:48 to play Saturday and the Arkansas Razorbacks kept their bowl hopes alive with a 14-9 Southwest Conference victory over the Baylor Bears.

Arkansas improved its overall record to 6-2-1 with scouts from the Liberty, Sun, Bluebonnet and Independence Bowls looking on. The Razorbacks are 4-2 in SWC play.

The Bears, playing before a homecoming crowd of 43,500 in Baylor Stadium, dropped to 3-6 overall and 2-4 in SWC games.

Arkansas only had to drive 15 and 33 yards for its two touchdowns courtesy of Bear miscues.

The game-winner came when Mark Lee recovered Bear quarterback Tom Muecke's bad pitch at the Baylor 33.

Backup quarterback Danny Nutt, taking his first snap of the game, completed a 23-yard pass to James Shibest to setup Thomas' touchdown.

Arkansas seized a 7-0 lead by cashing a Bear mistake for a touchdown in the second quarter.

Nathan Jones recovered a Ron Francis fumble at the Baylor 15 and five plays later Marshall Foreman punched across from the 2-yard line.

The stung Bears came right back in less than three minutes when Derrick McAdoo slipped out of the backfield and took a 44-yard scoring pass from Muecke.

On the last play of the game, Arkansas ran the ball out of the end zone to give the Bears a safety so the Razorbacks could punt without the threat of a block.

Baylor threatened at the end of the game moving to a first down at the Arkansas 33. But Muecke threw four straight incomplete passes, and the Razorbacks then ran down the clock before Taylor took the safety.

The victory snapped a deadlock in the series, giving Arkansas a 31-30-2 edge.

The game was replete with big defensive plays with Baylor defensive end Ervin Randle making several.

Arkansas tried a fake punt from midfield in the third period but Thomas was stopped cold by Randle who smelled the play out. But Baylor couldn't take advantage of Randle's tackle and had to punt.

In the fourth quarter, Arkansas gambled again from its own 42 on fourth and one and Randle stopped Taylor with no gain.

Lee in playoffs again

Ticket sales begin Tuesday

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee's bi-district date with Plainview at 8 p.m. in Lubbock's Jones Stadium Friday was tied in a neat package over a week ago and there was no mad scrambling needed Saturday morning to find a stadium to play in.

When the Rebels defeated Odessa High, 21-7, last weekend, Lee assured themselves of a playoff berth. At the same time, Plainview was ending its season with a victory over Amarillo Caprock to sew up the District 3-5A title.

There was no reason to wait to settle the playoff issue between the two schools, so Midland athletic director Gil Bartosh and Greg Sherwood, head football coach and AD at Plainview, settled everything last week by phone.

The results of those talks produced the Jones Stadium package for Friday night. Tickets for that game will go on sale in Midland at 8 a.m. Tuesday for anyone who wants a ticket.

There was no need to hold a special day for season ticket holders since all tickets will be sold on a general admission basis. There is no reserved seating since Jones Stadium will seat over 50,000 fans.

"We will have no limit on the number of tickets fans can buy," said Bartosh. "There is plenty of tickets available since Jones Stadium has such a large seating capacity. We will also sell to Lee booster club members Tuesday night at Lee High.

"We will be using the same selling policy we used last year in the playoffs. We will give season ticket holders a special day to buy in the event we play in a stadium where seating capacity may be a problem."

Tickets may be purchased at the Midland athletic office, located at the Northeast corner of Memorial Stadium. Tickets will be $5 for adults and $3 for students. Tickets will be sold from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. daily, through the noon hour. Friday's game day sell will be limited to the hours between 8 a.m. and noon.

Bartosh noted that tickets could be purchased at the gate on Friday night at Jones Stadium, but that only one ticket would be sold at that time. All tickets purchased at Jones Stadium will be $5. No student tickets will be sold at that time.

Lee will be the designated home team against Plainview, meaning Lee fans will be seated on the West side of Jones Stadium, the side of the press box. This is the third time Lee has won that honor. The Rebels produced two playoff victories over Amarillo High and Odessa Permian at Jones Stadium last year and both times Lee was the home team.

Although Jones Stadium was the selection as the bi-district site, there were discussions of other possibilities, according to Bartosh.

The major problems faced by Bartosh and Sherwood was the fact that Texas Tech plays SMU on Saturday night at Jones Stadium.

"To my knowledge, this is the first time Jones Stadium has been allowed to be used on a Friday night prior to a Tech game. We are very thankful to Texas Tech for their cooperation in this matter. Texas Tech is hosting us in this playoff game and they've gone out of their way to make us feel at home."

Bartosh said that there was some talk of flipping for home and home sites with Lee using Odessa's Ratliff Stadium as its home and Plainview using Jones Stadium as its home.

"Both teams seemed to want to play on the artificial turf and we discussed the possibility of playing in Ratliff. However, Odessa wanted to hold the stadium open in case Permian was able to use it. Still, we had no objections to playing in Jones Stadium and finally decided on Jones Stadium as the neutral site for both teams.

Denver fans hard to please

Those Denver fans must be beautiful. Last Sunday, a week after the Broncos had beaten defending Super Bowl champion Los Angeles Raiders for the second time, the boos reverberated off the furrowed canyons of Mile High Stadium with Coach Dan Reeves, quarterback John Elway and the offense in general the prime targets. Sure, the Broncos won to go 9-1 for the season, but Denver didn't make a first down rushing and just didn't show much, I guess, in the way of beating the point spread, winning only 26-19...

Everybody thought the USFL stood for United States Football League. The latest definition is the Unraveling Steadily Football League. As one wag put it, "It's really a shame if it happens. There are still several towns in the U.S. that have not experienced the spring football dispensed by the league...

SMACK, right in the kisser. The Rams Eric Dickerson injured his left toe against the Falcons, but when questioned about the Atlanta defense later, said, "They're the last team I'd ever limp off the field against."...

When Miami fullback Pete Johnson pulled a hamstring recently, Coach Don Shula observed the momentos occasion, "That has to be the biggest hamstring around."...

It seems like everybody is doing a story on Jerry Faust, the beseiged Notre Dame coach, these days.

Even though he has been a Faust supporter, knowing from experience what the pressures involved, Ara Parseghian's criticism of Faust came as a surprise. "You can't come forward and say Notre Dame's playing great fundamental football. They're not getting the ball from the center to the quarterback and as a result are hurting themselves.

"The other thing that's been bothersome to me is the delay-of-game penalties. These are fundamental things that should be corrected in the course of a year. Also, Notre Dame is not playing with the kind of intensity I'm accustomed to seeing."

ANOTHER former Irish coach, Dan Devine, "Teams do play in bad luck. From my observation, that's part of it. If I were him, I'd work on fundamentals and pray."

And still another former Notre Dame coach, Terry Brennan, who like Faust was a successful high school coach, and then had three of his five teams in the Top 10 before being fired, said, "You can't compare out situations. I was under a different recruiting policy. I had more restrictions. I also had one year as an assistant, and having played for Notre Dame helped, too. You always hope it works out for him, but if I was in his shoes, I'd try to win. That's the only thing that keeps peace."...

Going around the Metroplex during TCU's grid revival is the query, "Do you know what it tastes like to kiss a frog?"

Reply, "Tastes like Cotton."

HARVEY Salem, Houston Oilers tackle who stands 6-6, weighs 282 and wears a size 15 shoe, says he had a boyhood dream. "I always wanted to be a fullback . I wanted to be Larry Csonka when I was little." Little? Back when he was 6-2 and 220?...

Chaps claim Classic

But best or worst is yet to come

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

After three days and eleven games worth of basketball, even the enthusiast had to wonder what was next. Saturday at Al Langford Chaparral Center, when Midland College met Odessa College in the finals of the Chaparral Classic tournament, people found out.

In the aftermath of Midland College's 68-61 win over the Wranglers, one thing was certain: the best is yet to come.

"They're one of about six or seven teams that can play in this conference," said Jerry Stone, the coach of the 4-0 Chaparrals. "The conference (MC plays in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference) is really balanced."

The prospect of facing "six or seven teams in our conference just like Odessa" isn't one Stone loves, but there isn't much he can do about it except prepare for the coming task that opens in MC's next home game, Nov. 26 against Clarendon.

OC gave the Chaps a gut-check that will come in handy down the road. Ultimately, it was the defensive pressure of Stone's guards and post men Lawrence Chumbley and Tony Wright, plus the usual offensive consistency of 6-9 sophomore Teviin Binns. It was a night at the office for Stone's crew, described by the coach as "a blue-collar team. The biggest thing I'm proud of is that they had the poise to win."

POISE AND hustle were big factors for the Chaps, and it staked them to a 32-23 halftime lead that everyone knew wouldn't stand. Binns, who had had an off night (14 points) in the Chaps' semifinal win over Garden City Friday, came on strong. Three minutes into the half, Zeak Williams drove the right lane on a fast break and flipped the ball over his shoulder to the trailing Binns, and the New York giant got the crowd involved with a thunderous stuff. That pumped Binns up, and he promptly blocked a shot, tipped in his own miss and drilled two foul shots for an early 8-4 lead.

Gone for Binns was the foul trouble and sporadic offense of a night before, but it wasn't because of the head-spinning array of defenses OC coach Archie Myers threw at the Chaps.

Myers, who coached under Stone four years ago during the Chap's national title year, gave MC fits with defensive ploys - first a man defense, then a zone trap, a 1-3-1, a 3-2. But Binns shook off the pressure of each, played massive OC postman Dewayne Chism heads up and finished with 15 points in the first half.

Binns got plenty of points at the line, and the Chaps continued their torrid foul-shooting against OC. Friday the Chaps were 18-20 at the stripe, and Saturday they converted 16 of 18. An 88 percent accuracy rating is excellent on any level of roundball, and the Chaps needed every bit of help.

MC got its' biggest lift at the end of the first half, scoring the final 10 points for the 32-23 edge. Binns and Chuckie Graves had four points each in the spurt.

MC built the lead to a dozen early in the second half when Lawrence Chumbley made a spinning reverse layup and converted it into a three-point play. Chumbley motched that lead up to 11 moments later with two free throws, but OC began their long climb back into the game behind the play of Chism, gunner Mark Benoit and defensive whiz Tommie Bolden.

OC tightened the screws defensively and made a 10-3 run to cut the gap to 44-40. But with 11:16 left, Graves found Binns inside with a pass and he banked a soft jumper off the glass and drew a foul to boost MC back up by seven.

Then Benoit, Bolden and Chism took control, scoring the next 12 OC points while limiting MC to four. With Bolden disrupting the Chap attack with defense and steals, Chism drove by Binns and was hacked for a three-point play that gave OC a lead and life, 52-51.

At the time, that appeared to be the game's pivotal play. Binns' foul trouble against Garden City had been the biggest defensive tool against MC. With four fouls and almost seven minutes remaining, Stone had to go to backup Tony Wright.

But Wright, a freshman who played with Binns in New York City high school days, responded with 20 on Friday and played well again against the Wranglers.

Wright sank a layup off a feed by Vernon Coleman that re-established the Chap lead, 55-52, then Coleman did the job himself on another fast break.

Wright added another hoop off a pass from Deon Hunter to make the count 59-55.

AFTER OC had cut the gap to 60-58, Binns and Zeak Williams both missed shots, and the scene reverted to defense. With Chism being smothered alternately by Wright, Coleman and Hunter, Bolden drove and was fouled. But he hit only one shot, and MC's foul-shooting advantage became larger.

Hunter nailed both ends of a bonus, and so did Coleman in the final half-minute to ice the win.

OC shot only 15-23 at the line, and missed seven of their final 11 foul tries. That discrepancy hurt, especially since OC was in the bonus after less than ten minutes had expired in the half.

Binns scored 22 points against the Wranglers, and that performance clinched his second consecutive Chap Classic MVP award.

As for the coaching matchups, Stone and OC boss Archie Myers played chess all night. But the teacher beat the pupil in the first of at least three confrontations this season.

"Basically, when the leaders of your team are freshman instead of sophomores there's a difference. Anyone can see that. Anytime you play such a team you've got to have the guys in who really know what the coach wants," said Myers.

One of the strategic aspects of the game was Myers' variety of defenses. He threw the playbook at MC.

"Normally in the first half I like to try a lot of things out, so that if we have to play defense to win a game I know what kind to come out in in the second half."

Stone's response was to limit that plan by pulling out the ball and spreading the floor offensively. On several occasions Williams would hold the ball, and eventually OC played mostly man defense. What MC lacked in size, Stone tried to counter with speed. The Chaps can get up and down the floor.

"We wanted to widen it out a little so we could sneak in behind and in the middle. They're so quick that if you start throwing it around too much they'll intercept, so you've got to go inside, and that's why we spread it out."

MC's five sophs are being counted on in a big way to lead the Chaps. Binns' way is easy, since his scoring is always a factor.

Binns credited the shooting touch of his guards with keying the victory. "They were surrounding me, but the guards were shooting good from outside and that's why we won," he said. Binns himself still wants to better his rebounding, even though he snared a game-high dozen boards.

And the Chaps also play defense from the guard spot. Stone has to count on the likes of Coleman and Williams, both second-year men.

"We play together," said Coleman. "We hustle. We give 110 percent every time, because you can't play just 90 percent. I knew we could do it. This team will always win if we play together."

The win should give the young Chaps a boost. "It does two things," Stone commented. "First, it gives them confidence and second, it makes all the hard work in the fall seem worthwhile. That's very important - all their work paid off. Plus we appreciate each other a little more. The coaches appreciate the players, and I think the players appreciate the coaches."

Still, Stone didn't want to totally gloss over the successful defense of the Chap Classic. No team has left with the crown other than MC.

"At this time of year, we're not satisfied with anything. We're temporarily satisfied with the tourney, but that will last about 48 hours."

Howard won third-place honors with a 78-71 comeback win over Garden City. Down 16 points at one point, Howard's eight-man squad recovered behind the scoring of Michael Porter (18) and Will Rogers (17).

Barton County of Kansas won the fifth-place game with a 100-82 mashing of Grayson. Five players scored in double figures to guide the Cougars past hot-shooting Mike Williams of GC. Williams scored 32 in the loss.

Cisco's Melvin Jones scored 23 points in guiding his team to its' only tourney win in a 92-69 decision over Weatherford in the afternoon game.

Three Chaps - Wright, Chumbley, and Williams - made the All-Tournament team, in addition to Binns' MVP honors. OC placed three as well in guard Eric Chinn, Bolden and Benoit.

Wright's play was possibly unexpected by some, but not by Stone. "We know Tony Wright can play."

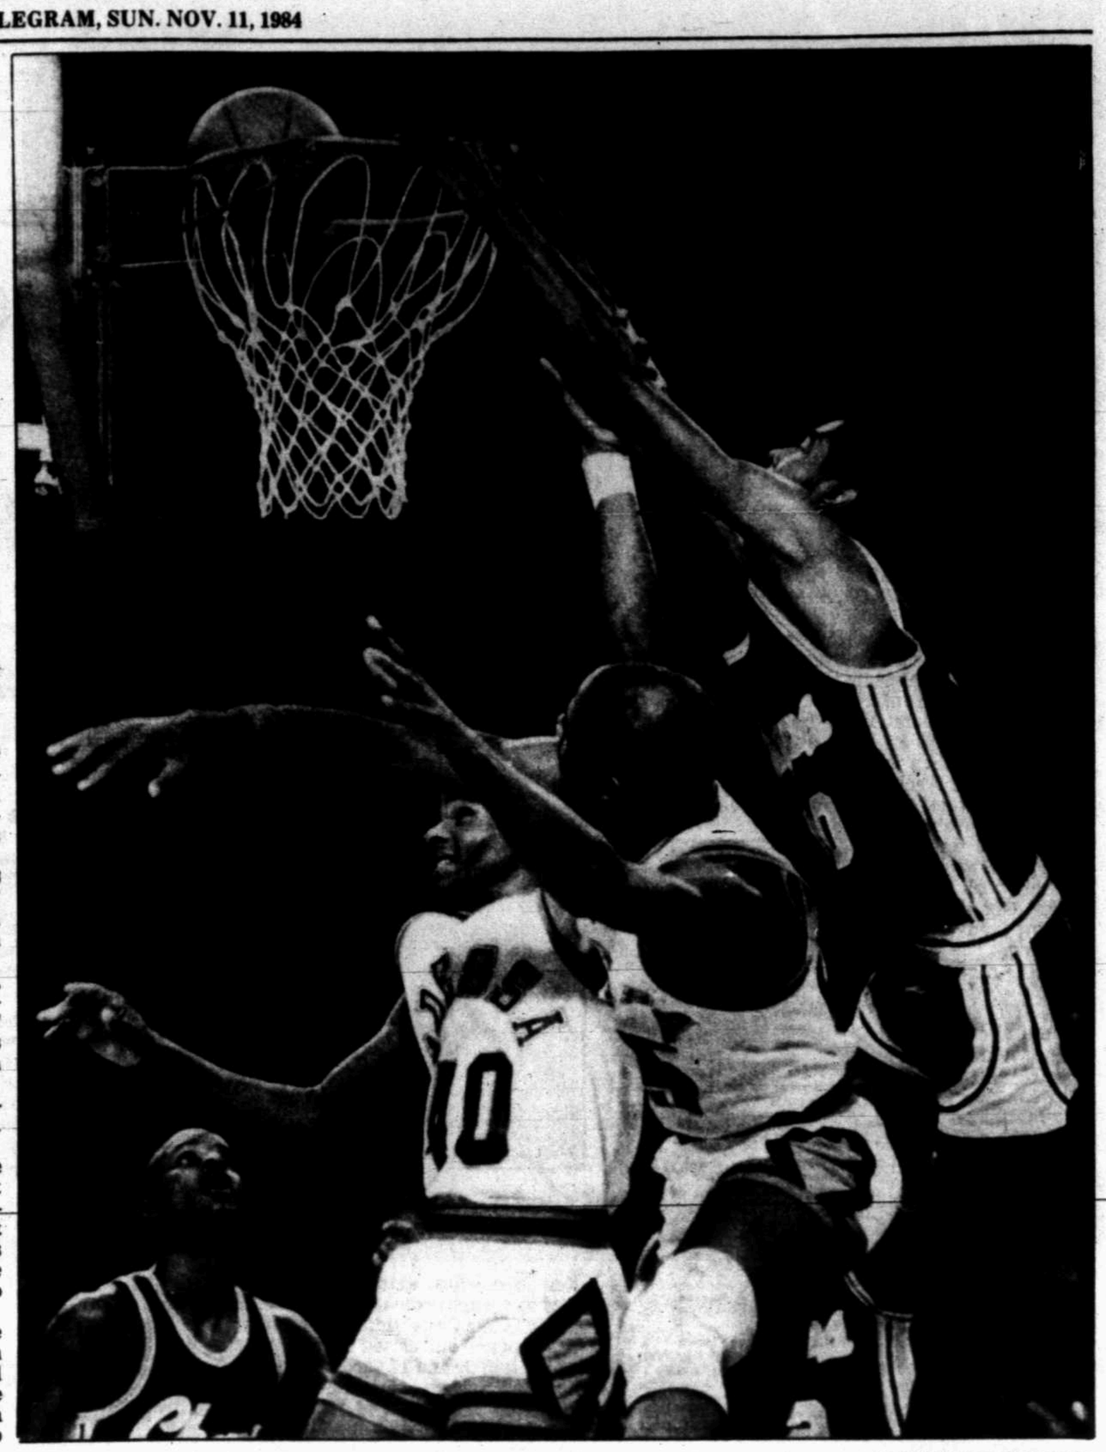

Wright has done well off the bench. "I think it helps. When I get in there the other guys may be a little tired, and I know by then what I've got to do. If the team needs scoring, that's what I'll do. If we need rebounding and defense, I'll do that too."

Other All-Tourney selections were Keith Smart and Terrence Ingram of Garden City; Michael Porter and Bruce Kimble of Howard; Maurice Smith and Andre Harris of Barton County; and Mike Williams of Cisco and Melvin Jones of Cisco.

A&I's Soza sparks victory

KINGSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Quarterback Chris Soza scored a touchdown and threw for another Saturday, leading Texas A&I past Abilene Christian 28-13 in a Lone Star Conference game.

Javelina fullback Kelt Bednapski scored on an 8-yard run in the first quarter.

Texas A&I also scored touchdowns on a 4-yard pass from Soza to tight end Mike Dyal, a 67-yard punt return by Neal LaHue and a 6-yard run by Soza.

ACU scored on a 23-yard run by Rod Mathis and a 1-yard run by quarterback Loyal Proffitt.

Falcons defeat New Mexico

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Quarterback Bart Weiss and halfback Mike Brown scored third-quarter touchdowns to spark Air Force to a 23-9 Western Athletic Conference football victory over punchless New Mexico Saturday night.

Trailing 9-3 in the third quarter, the Falcons put two touchdowns on the scoreboard inside of a three-minute span as Weiss scampered in from 24 yards out and Brown addeda 27-yard TD run.

Arizona beats Stanford

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Arizona's defense kept Stanford punter Doug Robison from getting off three first-quarter punts and the Wildcats moved to a sloppy but decisive 28-14 homecoming win Saturday night in the Pacific-10.

Arizona tailback David Adams scored first half touchdowns on one- and three-yard runs, and quarterback Alfred Jenkins added a three-yard second half touchdown run while Max Zendejas kicked three extra points and added field goals of 32 and 47 yards, as the Wildcats improved their record to 6-4, 4-2 in the Pac-10. Stanford fell to 4-6 overall and 2-5 in the league.

The Wildcats moved ahead quickly in the first quarter when safety Allan Durden's rush kept Robison, a freshman, from getting off his punt and Arizona took possession at the Stanford 13. Adams added his first score a few plays later.

Illinois 34, Indiana 7— Quarterback Jack Trudeau passed for 157 yards and two second-half touchdowns Saturday night, and safety Craig Swoope returned an intercepted pass 73 yards for another touchdown as Illinois ended its season over winless Indiana.

The Illini, getting their only road victory of the season, finished 6-3 in the conference and 7-4 for all games. Indiana, with one game remaining, dropped to 0-8 and 0-10 and stretched the nation's longest major college losing streak to 15 in a row over two seasons.

Washington St. 33, California 7— Mark Rypien fumbled to kill Washington State's first scoring threat but he came back Saturday night to throw two touchdown passes and run for another TD, leading the Cougars over California.

The Cougars' Rueben Mayes, second-ranked rusher in college football, ran for 113 yards in the game and scored on a 4-yard run in the third period. He raised his season yardage to 1,472 including 827 in the last four games, all WSU victories.

Wake Forest 20, Duke 16—Quarterback Foy White hit reserve split end Greg Scales with a 7-yard touchdown pass with 16 seconds left as Wake Forest slipped past Duke 20-16.

Bird, Erving decision soon

From Wire Reports

BASKETBALL—Friday night's big fight is under investigation. Not the Larry Holmes-Bonecrusher Smith title fight, but the NBA bout between Julius Erving and Larry Bird. All video tapes of the game have been requested by the league and Jack Joyce, the NBA's director of security, will interview the principals involved as well as observers and other persons at the game. Bird and Erving were ejected after the battling briefly. Bird, who scored 42 points in Boston's 130-119 victory, threw a wild punch at Erving before he was grabbed in a headlock by Moses Malone, the 76ers' center. The two crashed to the floor as both benches emptied. The fight broke out with Boston leading 95-75. At the time, Erving had been held to just six points. AN NBA spokesman said a decision will be rendered this week...

"I'm sure Julius was frustrated because Larry had all those points against him," said Boston's Cedric Maxwell. "Seeing him (Erving) fighting surprised me. It's like seeing the sun come up from the wrong direction. I'm not surprised seeing Larry, though. When he doesn't like what someone is doing to him, he's capable of anything." The fight began shortly after official Jack Madden suffered a knee injury early in the third period. That left referee Dick Bavetta to officiate the game alone. "When you have just one official working, the brutality out there is unbelievable," Maxwell said. "Players will do what they think they can get away with because you know that for every two fouls you commit, none will be called."

GOLF—Japan won the Men's World Amateur Team title by seven strokes over the U.Sat Hong Kong Saturday. The Japanese went into the final round with a one-stroke lead over the British-Irish team, finished with an 870. Japan's Tetsuo Sakata, who finished as joint individual leader with Argentine's Luis Carbonett at 208, fired a 72. The U.S., 10 strokes behind after the third round, came back strong with Randy Sonnier turning in a 69.

Terps make history with comeback in Miami upset

Rally from 31-0 deficit

From Wire Reports

MIAMI — Maryland made the largest comeback by a winning team in major college football history as reserve quarterback Frank Reich directed six straight scoring drives Saturday to help the Terrapins, trailing 31-0 at halftime, overcome sixth-ranked Miami 42-40.

The Terps, 6-3, needed a saving tackle of Melvin Bratton by Keeta Covington on a two-point conversion with one minute left in the game to stave off a last-ditch effort by the Hurricanes, who dropped to 8-3.

Reich tossed touchdown passes of 39 yards to Greg Hill and 1 yard to Alvin Blount and ran 1 yard for another in the third period as the Terps cut the margin to 34-21.

Then, the Terps drove 55 yards in nine plays, with Tommy Neal scooting 14 yards for the touchdown that made it 34-28 with 9:20 left in the game.

On their next possession, the Terps struck quickly as Hill ran under a tipped Reich pass and raced 68 yards for the touchdown. The kick by Jess Atkinson gave the Terps a 35-34 lead and gave Maryland the comeback record.

Previously, the biggest deficit overcome in a Division I-A game was 28 points when Oregon State rallied to beat Fresno State 31-28 on Sept. 12, 1981. Oregon State had trailed 28-0 with 9½ minutes left in the third quarter.

But the Terps weren't finished. Miami kick returner J.C. Penny fumbled and Lewis Askew recovered on the Miami 6-yard line. Two plays later, Rick Badanjek rumbled in from 4 yards out to put the Terps up 42-34.

Miami fought back, moving in for a score after Daniel Stubbs blocked a Maryland punt with 1:50 left. After quarterback Bernie Kosar hit Eddie Brown for the 5-yard touchdown with 50 second left, the Miami quarterback flipped a swing pass to Bratton on an attempted two-point conversion only to have Covington take Bratton down at the 2.

Florida 27, Georgia 0— Tenth-ranked Florida ended six years of frustration in the series behind the passing of freshman Kerwin Bell to move to the brink of its first SEC title.

Bell, a redshirt freshman who began fall practice eighth on the depth chart, hurled a 25-yard touchdown pass to Lorenzo Hampton in the first quarter and then applied the clincher with a 96-yarder to Ricky Nattiel, who caught the ball at the Bulldog 40, in the opening minute of the final period.

It was the seventh victory in a row for the 7-1-1 Gators, their sixth under interim coach Galen Hall.

Florida carries a 4-0-1 SEC mark into its conference finale at Kentucky next Saturday, where a victory would provide the Gators their first conference title in 52 years.

Georgia, which fell to 7-2 overall and 4-1 in the SEC, threatened only twice. But the Bulldogs were stopped by Jarvis Williams' interception in the end zone in the second quarter and a goalline stand at the 1 in the closing seconds of the third quarter.

Louisiana St. 16, Alabama 14— Linebacker Michael Brooks blocked a punt to set up the winning score as 12th-ranked LSU kept alive its SEC title hopes and assuring Alabama its first losing season since 1957.

Kevin Guidry recovered the blocked kick at the Alabama 12 and Dalton Hilliard scored from the 7 three plays later for the final points of the game.

Jeff Wickersham passed 2 yards to Herman Fontenot at the end of LSU's opening drive, and Ron Lewis kicked a 45-yard field goal in the second period for the 7-1-1 Tigers, who are 4-0-1 in the SEC.

Alabama, falling to 3-6 and 1-4 with two games left, got its touchdowns on a 2-yard run by Rickey Moore and a 4-yard pass from Mike Shula to Ed Pugh, the tight end's first catch of the season.

LSU capitalized on a poor kicking game by Alabama. The Tigers' first touchdown and field goal came after a 33-yard kickoff return by Garry James and a 34-yard punt return by Norman Jefferson.

Auburn 60, Cincinnati 0— Bo Jackson ran for three touchdowns as 20th-ranked Auburn built a 36-0 first-half lead in raising their record to 7-3. Jackson, a 1983 All-American sidelined for six games in the middle of this season with a shoulder injury, raced for touchdowns of 15, 36 and 2 yards while seeing only limited action.

The Tigers scored touchdowns on seven of their first eight possessions and raising their record to 7-3.

Kentucky 27, Vanderbilt 18— Sophomore Bill Ransdell threw a pair of touchdown passes and freshman Mark Higgs scampered 84 yards for another score as Kentucky downed Vanderbilt in the SEC at Lexington.

Freshman Joe Worley booted field goals of 49 and 50 yards as Kentucky, 7-2 and 2-2 in SEC, stayed alive in the postseason bowl picture. This is the first time since a 10-1 season in 1977 that Kentucky has won more than six games. With representatives of four bowl committees on hand, Vanderbilt fell to 5-4, 2-3 in the league and out of the postseason picture.

Tennessee State 24, Louisville 15 — Carl McAfee intercepted three passes and returned one for a touchdown as Tennessee State, ranked No. 2 in Division I-AA raised its record to 10-0, while Louisville, a Division I school, fell to 2-8.

McAfee intercepted an Ed Rubbert pass at the Louisville 33 with 8:48 left in the second quarter and hit Roger Robinson with a lateral at the 15. Robinson took the ball in for the score to give Tennessee State a 17-7 lead.

E. Kentucky 48, Morehead St. 38 — David Hensley rushed for three touchdowns and Barry Cox scampered for two more as Eastern Kentucky, 7-3, came from behind to defeat Morehead State and clinch its fourth straight Ohio Valley Conference title and the automatic berth to the Division I-AA playoffs.

Bobcats girls go to state

From Staff Reports

The San Angelo Bobcats, the District 4-5A champion, earned a state volleyball tournament berth at the Lee gym Saturday afternoon with a sound 15-8, 15-7 victory over Arlington Martin in the Region I volleyball tournament.

San Angelo now owns a unblemished 38-0 record and will advance to the Austin Final Four Saturday for a chance at the state championship.

San Angelo got to the finals with a 15-7, 15-2 win over Haltom City Saturday morning in the semifinals of the Region I meet. Haltom City left the playoffs with a 21-12 record.

Arlington Martin, 30-6 on the season, got into the finals with a 15-13, 6-15, 16-14 victory over Amarillo Tascosa Saturday morning. Tascosa left the playoffs with a 34-4 record.

McCullough, Highland Park win X-country

GEORGETOWN, Texas (AP) — Stacy Sutter paced Conroe McCullough to the Class 5A championship in the University Interscholastic Leagaue state cross country meet Saturday.

In girls' competition, Crystal McGuire of Dallas Highland Park romped past the finish line first but it was League City Clear Lake that took the team trophy in Class 5A competition.

Sutter finished the course at 15:10 and Conroe McCullough finished with 28 points. Running behind Sutter were Reuben Reina of San Antonio Jay, who finished at 15:20 and James Jackson of Lewisville who finished at 15:27.

Other first place finishing-teams and times were A&M Consolidated, Class 4A, 88; Boys Ranch, Class 3A, 47; Abernathy, Class 2A, 42.

In girls' competition, League City Clear Lake topped the others in 5A with 76 points; A&M Consolidated, Class 4A, 35; Dalhart, Class 3A, 83; Nazareth, Class 2A, 45.

Olathe wins takes Bass tourney loot

WARSAW, Mo. (AP) — The six members of the Olathe, Kan., Bass Club each received identically rigged bass boats and equipment for their first-place finish Saturday in the U.S. Bass Club Championship Saturday.

Gamecocks remain unbeaten

From Wire Reports

South Carolina 38, Florida State 26— Thomas Dendy scored on runs of 57 and two yards, Raynard Brown returned the second-half kickoff a school record 99 yards and Bryant Gilliard intercepted four passes as fifth-ranked South Carolina rolled to a over No. 11 Florida State.

The 9-0 record continued the Gamecocks' best start ever and marked the first time in the school's 91-year football history that a South Carolina team has won more than eight games in a season.

The victory also kept Carolina, one of the nation's Cinderella teams, in the forefront for its first major bowl bid. Bob Lafferty, president of the Orange Bowl, one of nine post-season games in attendance, said the Gamecocks were high on his list, along with Boston College and possibly Georgia and Ohio State.

Florida State fell to 6-2-1 before a wildly cheering record crowd of 75,000 at Williams-Brice Stadium.

The Seminoles, who committed nine turnovers, all in the second half, probably dropped out of the New Year's Day bowl picture. They took a 7-0 lead midway through the first period when Roosevelt Snipes' three-yard run capped a 63-yard drive. Florida State had a seven-yard touchdown pass from Kirk Coker to Jessie (CQ) Hester nullified by a holding penalty but scored anyway after being set back to the 17.

It was all Carolina after that — it took the Gamecocks less than 1½ minutes to tie the score — as the Seminoles wasted two other first-half scoring opportunities when Derek Schmidt twice missed field goal attempts from 39 yards.

Brown's 99-yard kickoff return stretched South Carolina's 17-7 halftime lead tp 24-7 with just 15 seconds elapsed in the third period.

The Gamecocks quickly made it 38-7 as Allen Mitchell flipped scoring passes of eight yards to Bill Bradshaw and four yards to Danny Smith as the contest became a comedy of errors, with the teams combining for eight turnovers in the third quarter alone, five by Florida State.

So. Miss 31, E. Carolina 27— Reserve quarterback Andrew Anderson threw for two touchdowns to lead Southern Mississippi, 2-9, from a 21-point deficit against East Carolina, 0-9, at Greenville, N.C.

Anderson replaced starter Tommy Compton after East Carolina had forged a 24-3 lead midway through the second quarter. Anderson, capitalizing on the first of three Pirate fumbles, hit Lionel Austin for a 17-yard touchdown to make it 24-10 at the half.

Andrew Mott's 66-yard punt return for a touchdown and a bootleg score by Anderson pulled the Eagles to within 27-24 by the end of the third quarter. Then, after Greg Dampier recovered a Pirate fumble, Anderson marched Southern Mississippi 60 yards in a seven-play drive culminating in a 12-yard scoring pass to Austin with 4:28 to go.

Citadel 23, Wofford 16— Robert Hill threw for 174 yards and one touchdown as The Citadel nailed down a six-game winning streak.

The Bulldogs, 7-3, were clinging to a 6-3 lead late in the second quarter when Hill hit Lee Glaze from 4 yards out. Greg Davis added the extra point and The Citadel went into the half up 13-3.

Grambling 8, S.C. State 7— Grambling State kicker Jorge Rosales booted a 23-yard field goal with 1:23 remaining to lift the Tigers over South Carolina State Saturday in Orangeburg.

The Tigers mounted their 99-yard winning drive with six minutes left in the game after stopping Bulldogs' runner Gerald Foggie on fourth and goal at the one-yard line. The Bulldogs went for the touchdown on 4th down after their kicker, Richard Dix, had missed from 22 and 25 yards out earlier.

Mississippi Valley 49, Alabama St. 7— Quarterback Willie Totten completed 21 passes, including four for touchdowns, as Mississippi Valley State.

Mississippi Valley opened the scoring in the first quarter on a 1 yard run by Carl Byrum, then scored 21 points in the second quarter on a 20-yard pass from Totten to Wilbur Corley, a 20-yarder from Totten to wide receiver Jerry Rice and a 42-yard pass from totten to Joe Thomas.

Valley is 8-1 overall and 6-1 in the conference. Alabama State is 1-9 overall and 1-6 in the conference.

Holmes, despite injury, ready to fight again

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Larry Holmes, feeling the effects of not fighting in nearly a year, says a chipped bone in his right thumb is all that stands in the way of his return to the ring on a more regular basis.

Holmes, who showed signs of rustiness and age in stopping James "Bonecrusher" Smith in the 12th round Friday night, revealed afterward that he had chipped the bone in July but went ahead with the fight anyway.

"I can't bend it, I can't support it," he said following the first defense of his International Boxing Federation heavyweight title. "I hope to get it fixed and in six weeks be training for David Bey or Michael Spinks."

The 35-year-old Holmes last fought on Nov. 25, 1983 when he scored a first-round knockout over Marvis Frazier. The inactivity and his age seemed to catch up with him against Smith.

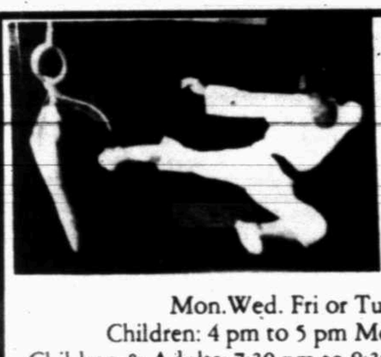

Holmes' timing was off throughout the fight and he was rocked several times by hard rights to the head by Smith. He appeared in trouble after he was cut badly above his left eye by an apparent butt in the seventh round, but came back to cut Smith even worse and force the fight to be stopped.

"I tried to get him out early but I couldn't," Holmes admitted. "The only good shots I landed were ones in close."

The win ran Holmes' record to 46-0 and he has talked of wanting to break Rocky Marciano's record of 49-0 before retiring. But he readily admits money is the real reason he keeps fighting, and he added another $1 million to his bankroll with his performance against Smith.

"I don't care what anybody says, the money is what matters in this business," Holmes said.

Washington's Jacque Robinson eludes USC's Rex Moore to score for Huskies in Pac 10 game at Los Angeles.

USC decks No. 1 Huskies

From Wire Reports

LOS ANGELES — Tailback Fred Crutcher ran for 116 yards and a touchdown and Frank Jordan kicked three long field goals Saturday as No. 14 Southern Cal downed No. 1 Washington 16-7 to give the Trojans the Pacific-10 title and a Rose Bowl berth.

Crutcher, who carried 35 times, scored on a 2-yard run early in the final period to bring Southern Cal back from a 7-6 deficit in the defense-dominated contest at the Los Angeles Coliseum.

The victory gives the Trojans an 8-1 overall mark and 7-0 Pac-10 record, assuring them their first Rose Bowl appearance since 1979. Washington is 9-1 and 5-1 in the conference.

Jordan kicked field goals of 51 and 47 yards in the first half, then booted a 46-yarder to cap the scoring 5½ minutes into the final period. He had missed a 53-yard attempt on the final play of the first half.

Southern Cal's defense, led by linebackers Duane Bickett and Neil Hope, effectively shut down the Huskies' rushing game. Washington's starting quarterback, Paul Sicuro, completed 17 of 33 passes for 190 yards, but was unable to move his team with any consistency.

The Trojans' Tim Green connected on 13 of 28 throws for 161 yards.

After Crutcher's touchdown put the Trojans ahead 13-6, the the Huskies were unable to mount a serious scoring threat the rest of the game.

In the first half, the Huskies fell behind 6-0, but went ahead on Jacque Robinson's 4-yard scoring run with 1:55 remaining before the intermission.

Southern Cal, which went 4-6-1 last year for the school's first losing season in more than two decades, had lost three straight to the Huskies, including a 24-0 defeat last year in Seattle.

Arizona St. 44, Oregon 10— Sophomore Jeff Van Raaphorst threw for four touchdowns and Darryl Clack rambled for 167 yards as Arizona State beat Oregon at Eugene, Ore.

Arizona State senior Luis Zendejas kicked three field goals and five extra points to move within one point of the all-time NCAA career scoring record of 356 points held by Pittsburgh's Tony Dorsett.

Zendejas had an opportunity to break the record, but ASU Coach Darryl Rogers decided not to go for a field goal on the Oregon 18-yard line with less than three minutes to play.

The Sun Devils, 4-5 overall and 3-3 in the conference, bolted to a 0-0 first-quarter lead and never were seriously threatened by the mistake-prone Ducks, who dropped to 5-5 overall and 2-5 in the conference.

UCLA 26, Oregon St. 17— UCLA quarterback Steve Bono fired two second-quarter touchdown passes and John Lee kicked four field goals as the Bruins topped Oregon State in a Pacific-10 game at the Rose Bowl.

The game was tied 3-3 when Bono fired a 16-yard touchdown strike to Mike Young with 10:04 remaining before halftime. Just 3:42 later, Bono hooked up with Mike Sherrard on a 53-yard scoring play to give the Bruins a 17-3 advantage.

The victory, before a crowd of 34,116, boosted UCLA's Pac-10 record to 4-2 and their overall mark to 7-3. Oregon State fell to 1-6 in conference play and 2-8 overall. Lee gave the Bruins a 3-0 lead by kicking a 35-yard field goal after 6:05 of play. The Beavers tied it 3-3 on a 46-yard field goal by Jim Nielsen with 4:37 left in the first period.

Huskers clinch Big 8 tie

From Wire Reports

LAWRENCE, Kan.—Doug DeBose and Travis Turner each scored two touchdowns as No. 2 Nebraska, 9-1, beat Kansas, 41-7, clinched at least a tie for the Big Eight championship with a 6-0 record.

The Huskers can win their fourth straight Big Eight title with a victory over Oklahoma next week.

Turner, who won the starting quarterback job midway into the season, sparked Nebraska to a 21-0 first-quarter lead as the Huskers won their 16th straight over Kansas and 27th consecutive Big Eight triumph.

Kansas , 4-6 and 3-3, did not score until after Nebraska had built a 34-0 lead.

The Huskers marched 81 yards in 15 plays for a 7-0 lead on their first possession. Turner scored on a 1-yard run, then made it 14-0 with a 12-yard scamper with 4:48 remaining in the opening quarter.

Robert Mimbs fumbled the ensuing kickoff on his 15 and Nebraska's Marc Mumford recovered on the 4. Two plays later, DuBose busted across from the 1, making it 21-0. Nebraska went up 28-0 late in the second period when Turner tossed a 17-yard scoring pass to Brian Hiemer, who made the catch on the 5-yard line and broke two tackles getting into the end zone.

Oklahoma 42, Colorado 17— Freshman fullback Lydell Carr ran 64 yards for a touchdown and Danny Bradley fired a 68-yard scoring pass to Steve Sewell in Oklahoma's Big Eight win.

The heavily favored Sooners, now 7-1-1 overall and 4-1 in the conference, took charge with two touchdowns late in the second quarter.

Colorado put together an 80-yard scoring drive and then got a 50-yard punt return from Lyle Pickens to set up a field goal and draw within 14-10 with 3:52 left in the half.

Three plays later, however, Bradley found Sewell open along the left sideline. Sewell gathered in the throw at the Colorado 40-yard line and outran the Buffalo secondary for a TD with 2:13 left.

Moments later, Oklahoma nose guard Tony Casillas sacked Colorado quarterback Craig Keenan, forcing a fumble that the Sooners' Darrell Reed recovered at the 5-yard line. Sewell ran 3 yards for a score with 1:07 left in the half, giving the Sooners a 28-10 advantage.

Whatever second-half comeback hopes Colorado might have had were vanquished by Oklahoma's defense, ranked No. 2 in the nation. The Sooners held Colorado to only one first down and nine total yards in the third quarter. Meanwhile, safety Sonny Brown intercepted a pass, setting up Bradley's 22-yard TD strike to Buster Rhymes for a 35-10 lead.

Kansas State 7, Iowa State 7— Steve Willis, who had not missed a field goal in three previous games against Iowa State, missed a 32-yard attempt with one second left Saturday, forcing Kansas State to settle for a tie with the error-prone Cyclones.

Kansas State, thwarted on two field goal attempts earlier in the fourth quarter because holder Donnie Campbell mishandled the center snap, moved into position for Willis' try for the game-winner after getting the ball on the Iowa State 49 following a 14-yard punt by the Cyclones' Jim Thompson into a 25 mph wind.

Several players began scuffling after Iowa State quarterback Alan Hood ran 18 yards on the final play of the game — played in snow flurries and a 9-degree wind chill — but order was quickly restored and the two teams walked off the field together.

Iowa State, winless in its last six games, is 2-6-2 overall and 0-4-2 in the Big Eight, while Kansas State is 2-7-1 and 1-4-1.

Kansas State took a 7-0 lead on quarterback Stan Weber's 2-yard touchdown run with 13:28 left in the second quarter. Iowa State, which had four turnovers and nine penalties, tied it on Al Watson's 1-yard scoring run with 1:51 left in the third quarter.

BYU's Bosco bombs SDSU, 34-3

From Wire Reports

PROVO, Utah — Quarterback Robbie Bosco threw for 326 yards and two touchdowns as fourth-ranked Brigham Young overpowered San Diego State 34-3 to extend its consecutive win streak to 21 games, the longest in major college football.

The Cougars, who clinched the WAC title for the ninth consecutive time the week before, intercepted three passes by SDSU freshman quarterback Todd Santos in moving to 10-0, 7-0 in the conference.

SDSU, which fell to 3-6-1 overall and 3-3-1 in the WAC, showed little of the aerial firepower that was expected when the Aztecs met college football's top passing team. The Aztecs managed only 165 yards net yardage.

Bosco drove BYU 51 yards late in the first quarter, ending with Glen Kozlowski's 17-yard touchdown reception.

Just 1:39 later, Kelly Smith swept right end for on 41-yard scoring jaunt, which quickly made it 14-3 and gave the Cougars control of the game.

Bosco passed the Cougars down the field midway through the second quarter, hitting aerials of 29 and 15 yards before Lakei Heimuli scored on a 2-yard dive. Five minutes later, the first of two Lee Johnson field goals, this one of 42 yards, made it 24-3 at halftime.

Johnson's 32-yard field goal in the third quarter and a 9-yard Bosco-to-Kozlowski pass early in the final period were the only scores in an otherwise lackluster second half.

Clemson edges Gobblers

Virginia, North Carolina win

From Wire Reports

CLEMSON, S.C.—Clemson wide receiver Ray Williams surprised a stubborn Virginia Tech defense with a 17-yard touchdown run on a reverse to lead the Tigers to win, 17-10, at Clemson Memorial.

With the Gobblers ahead 10-7 and a minute to play in the third quarter, Clemson's Donald Igwebuike hit a 42-yard field goal. But a penalty caused Clemson, 7-2, to reconsider the kick, and Williams provided the go-ahead score two plays later.

Virginia 45, N.C. State 0— Quarterback Don Majkowski ran for two touchdowns and passed for a third and Virginia's defense posted its first shutout sinced 1979.

Taiback Barry Word also scored a pair of touchdowns as Virginia, unbeaten since its season-opening loss to Clemson, improved its record to 7-1-1.

The Cavaliers, now 3-0-1 in ACC play, recorded their most decisive triumph since a 69-9 conquest of Division I-AA James Madison in 1979. N.C. State, blanked for the first time since a 54-0 setback at Penn State in 1982, fell to 3-7, 1-4.

With representatives from the Peach, Citrus, Hall of Fame and Cherry bowls watching, Virginia scored on three of its first four possessions to open up a 17-0 halftime lead.

North Carolina 24, Georgia Tech 17— evin Anthony passed for two touchdowns and caught a scoring pass from tailback Ethan Horton in a second-quarter explosion and North Carolina's defense held off Georgia Tech. 4-4-1 and 1-2-1 in ACC.

Normally, the Tar Heels rely on their ground game for much of their offense. Against the Yellow Jackets, North Carolina attempted 41 passes and completed 27 for 256 yards. Anthony hit 21 of 31 passes for 211 yards, his best day as a Tar Heel. The 27 completions set a school record, breaking the old mark of 26 set against Virginia in 1966.

Trailing 3-0 in the second quarter, Anthony pitched to Horton, who tossed the ball back to Anthony on an 8-yard scoring pass with 9:46 remaining. Robert Lavette retaliated with a 7-yard run five minutes later to give the Yellow Jackets the edge.

North Carolina, 4-5 and 2-2 in the ACC, put the game away on Anthony's 5-yard pass to freshman Eric Lewis at the 2:17 mark and a 19-yard strike to Horton 42 seconds before intermission. Ken Miller added all three conversions, then booted a 28-yard field goal in the third period to set a school record with 14 straight field goals.

BATTLES

When UCLA, because of injuries, the Bruins were down to one tight end for passing and the other for rushing plays in the California game. When Russ Warnick was in the game, it was a run. When Derek Tennell came in, presto, a pass.

"It was pretty obvious," UCLA quarterback Steve Bono admitted, "Every time I saw Tennell run on the field, I knew we were passing. I said to myself a few times that they had to know what we were doing." UCLA's secret was safe with Cal...the Bruins won 17-14 despite the giveaway.

Rough Landing

Army running back Dee Bryant watches his fumble bounce away after he was hit by Boston College defensive tackle Scott Harrington.

Mustangs muscle by Rice

HOUSTON (AP) — Southern Methodist's Reggie Dupard led a 17-point first half surge with two touchdown runs and Don King scored twice in the second half to lead the 17th-ranked Mustangs to a 31-17 Southwest Conference victory over Rice Saturday.

The Mustangs ran their record to 7-2 for the year and 4-2 in the SWC to increase their chances of a post-season bowl invitation. The Owls dropped to 1-8 and 0-6.

After trailing 3-0 in the first quarter on a 40-yard field goal by Rice's James Hamrick, the Mustangs surged for 17 points in the final 5:48 of the second quarter on Dupard's runs of 5 and 1 yards and Brandy Brownless' 36-yard field goal for a 27-3 halftime lead.

SMU's first two scores followed punts into a 25-mile per hour wind by Rice's Steve Kidd and the third score came after Antonio Brinkley fumbled and SMU's Anthony Beverly recovered.

The Mustangs' scoring drives went 25, 16 and 19 yards.

The two teams traded third quarter touchdowns with the Owls scoring on a 5-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Kerry Overton to Melvin Robinson and SMU countering with a 23-yard run by King.

SMU started a 76-yard drive to King's second touchdown on a 1-yard run after Rice Coach Watson Brown received consecutive 15-yard penalties for disputing an official's call.

Overton completed a 20-yard touchdown pass to James Givens with 3 seconds left to play for the final touchdown of the game.

Brown erupted on the sidelines after an apparent pass interference call against SMU's Reggie Phillips was withdrawn that would have given Rice a first down at the Pony five.

A flag was thrown on the play but a subsequent officials' huddle nullified the call.

SMU failed on three dives from the Rice one but on fourth down, King faked to Dupard into the line and trotted into the end zone.

The Mustangs started sluggishly against the outmanned Owls, gaining only one first down in the opening quarter and trailing 3-0.

Marc Scott's acrobatic 24-yard reception on a pass from Kerry Overton set up Hamrick's 40-yard field goal. Scott caught the ball on the sideline while falling backward.

The Owls' luck ended in the second quarter however beginning with Kidd's 16-yard punt to the to the Rice 25. Dupard capped a four-play drive with a five-yard touchdown run.

The Mustangs got the ball back on the Rice 36 following Kidd's 18-yard punt and drove to the Rice 20 prior to Brownlee's 36-yard kick

SMU settled for the field goal after a zig-zagging 24-yard touchdown run by Dupard was called back on a holding penalty.

Beverly's fumble recovery at the Rice 19 set up Dupard's second touchdown from the one after a 16-yard gain by Gary Hashaway.

Rockets still unbeaten

From Wire Reports

HOUSTON — Akeem Olajuwon scored 16 of his game-high 27 points in the second half to lead the undefeated Houston Rockets to a 117-92 win over the Los Angeles Clippers.

The Rockets, 7-0, are off to their best start in the 18-year history of the franchise and the win streak equals their third longest. The Clippers, 3-5, were led by Marques Johnson with 24, as they lost their third consecutive game and their fourth straight on the road.

Spurs 127, Cavaliers 103— George Gervin fired for 42 points to propel the San Antonio Spurs over winless Cleveland, giving the Spurs a 6-2 record. The Spurs led by as much as 42 points in the third period, building the bulk of the margin early in the game.

Mike Mitchell came in second in scoring for the Spurs with 26. The Cavaliers were led by Roy Hinson with 20 points and both Turpin and Paul Thompson with 14.

Mavericks 106, SuperSonics 102— The Dallas Mavericks used a 26-9 scoring run to overtake the Seattle SuperSonics in the second half, and Brad Davis hit four free throws in the final 31 seconds to ice it.

Seattle pulled to within 102-100 on Danny Vranes' three-point shot with 33 seconds to play, and Scooter McCray fouled Davis, who hit both shots. Jay Vincent scored 23 points for Dallas, which trailed 75-62 with 2:39 to play in the third quarter. Over the next 7:57, Dallas outscored Seattle 26-9 to go up 88-84.

Vincent had two baskets during the streak, as did rookie Sam Perkins, who finished with 16 points and 9 rebounds. Rolando Blackman added 18 points for Dallas, which won its third straight game to improve its record to 5-4.

NBA

Seattle, 2-6 and winless in five games on the road, got a season high 21 points from Gerald Henderson and 23 points from Sikma, including a basket that brought Seattle within one for the last time at 90-89.

Bullets 112, Celtics 95—Gus Williams scored 16 of his 24 points while helping Washington to a 15-point first half lead as the Bullets dealt the Celtics their first loss of the season.

The defeat lowered Boston's record to 5-1 and dropped the defending NBA champions into a first-place tie with the Philadelphia 76ers in the Atlantic Division.

Greg Ballard assumed the scoring burden in the third period, dropping in 11 of his total of 13. Jeff Ruland scored 17 points for Washington, Rick Mahorn had 14, and Cliff Robinson had 12 after missing four games following the death of a brother.

The Celtics were led by Larry Bird with 18 points, Kevin McHale added 16, and Dennis Johnson had 14.

Knicks 113, Kings 100— Bernard King scored 18 points and the New York Knicks held the Kansas City Kings without a field goal for 6:23 to break open a close game in the second half and end a six-game losing streak.

Larry Drew, who led Kansas City with 20 points, scored seven during a 9-0 run that cut a 16-point deficit to 67-60. The Kings went on to trim the margin to 73-67 with 4:15 left in the third period.

Following King in the New York scoring column were Louis Orr with 16, Pat Cummings with 15, Trent Tucker 14 and Darrell Walker 13. Eddie Johnson had 16 points for the Kings.

Pistons 104, Bucks 100— Reserve guard Vinnie Johnson scored 10 of his 16 points in the final quarter, including the go-ahead tip with 36 seconds remaining, to lead the Detroit Pistons over the Milwaukee Bucks.

The Pistons trailed 80-68 at the end of three quarters but fought back on the crisp shooting of Johnson, Kent Benson and Isiah Thomas to take the lead in the final minute.

Milwaukee's Paul Mokeski hit two foul shots to tie the score, 98-98, before Johnson put the Pistons on top for good with the tip-in.

The Bucks, playing without starting forward Paul Pressey, outshot the Pistons 56 percent to 49 percent, to take a 55-50 lead at halftime.

UTA loses 34-0

RUSTON, La. (AP) — Louisiana Tech claimed its eighth Southland Conference football championship in 14 seasons Saturday night with Kyle Gandy passing for three touchdowns in a 34-0 rout of Texas-Arlington.

Tech's defense manufactured most of the opportunities, however, forcing five turnovers. Two of the three interceptions and three fumbles resulted in Louisiana Tech points.

Tech, ranked 20th in the NCAA I-AA, finished its regular season at 7-4 overall and 5-1 in the Southland. The championship gives Tech the Southland's automatic bid to the post-season playoffs, but its first-round opponent won't be known until Nov. 18.

UTA is now 6-4 and 3-2 with one game remaining.

Texas Tech cagers play at Chap Center

From Staff Reports

LUBBOCK—Texas Tech's basketball team will hold intra squad scrimmages on the road this week, traveling to Hobbs, N.M. Monday and then to Midland's Chaparral Center Thursday.

"We want to allow our fans and alumni in the Hobbs and Midland areas to see our team during preseason and this is a good way to do it," said Coach Gerald Myers, who is heading into his 14th season as head coach.

"Our team has been practicing for three weeks now and we need to scrimmage. This will give us that opportunity to not only scrimmage, but also to let our fans see what our squad is made up of this season."

The Red Raiders will scrimmage at 7 p.m. Monday in the Tasker gym as current Raider players Vince Taylor and Tony Benford and assistant coach Rob Evans return to the high school where they played under longtime Eagles Coach Ralph Tasker.

The Thursday scrimmage in Midland is also slated for a 7 p.m. tipoff.

The Raiders began workouts Oct. 15 and will play their first game at 7:30 p.m. Nov. 24 in the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum against Chicago State's Cougars. The Raiders also play host to Utah Nov. 29, UT-San Antonio Dec. 1 and Washington Dec. 3 before going on the road for the Amana-Hawkeye Classic in Iowa City, Iowa, Dec. 7-8.

Tech was 17-12 last season and 10-6 in SWC for a fourth place finish. Nine of 10 lettermen return with starters Bubba Jennings, 5-10; Quentin Anderson, 6-9; Taylor 6-5, and 6-9 center Dwight Phillips leading the way.

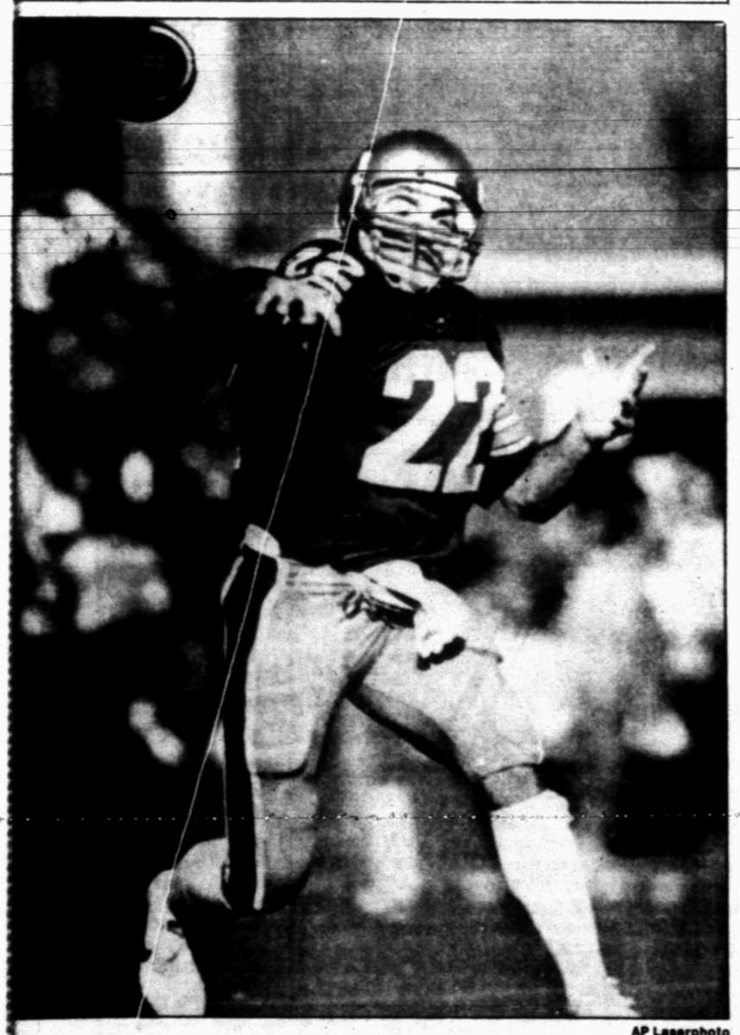

No admission will be charged for the scrimmages. The public is welcome.

Tour for bikes

Le Tour de Rankin will be held Saturday, starting 8 a.m. at sponsoring Peyton Bikes, 600 North Kent. The ride will be conducted in three stages: 1. to Rankin from Midland, 55 miles. 2. Lunch in the park at Rankin. 3. Rankin to Midland. It is emphasized that this is a ride, not a race. Participants bring their own lunch, it will be carried in SAG wagons and water will be provided. There is no entry fee.

Run at Hobbs

HOBBS, N.M.—Runners Southwest will hold a One-Hour Run at the Hobbs High School track at 2 p.m. Dec. 9. Entry fee is $5 to Jack Petty, Race Director, 2405 N. Jefferson No. 109, Hobbs, N.M. 88240. Divisions will be from 14-under to 50-plus for males and high school and under to 30 plus for women. Runners are advised to bring their own lap-counters.

Boston College's Doug Flutie, despite a shoulder separation, took over as college football all-time major college passing yardage leader.

Flutie pulls rank on Army, 45-31

From Wire Reports

NEWTON, Mass. — Doug Flutie overcame a separated left shoulder to throw for three touchdowns and 311 yards and become major college football's all-time passing yardage leader as 16th-ranked Boston College fought off an Army rally for a 45-31 victory Saturday.

Flutie, who suffered the minor injury on his non-throwing arm a week earlier when he set the major college career total offense record, boosted his aerial production to 9,695 yards. That exeeeded the mark of 9,-614 set last year by Duke's Ben Bennett.

Flutie completed 19 of 29 passes to help Boston College rebound from two losses in its previous three games and improve its record to 6-2. Army fell to 5-3-1.

The Eagles bolted to a 28-7 bulge before Army closed the gap to 28-14 at halftime and 38-31 early in the fourth quarter. Flutie's second touchdown pass to Kelvin Martin, a 17-yarder, then gave Boston College a 45-31 cushion with 6:23 gone in the final period.

With the score 7-7 after Army's Doug Black and the Eagles' Steve Strachan traded 1-yard touchdown runs, Flutie fired scoring strikes of 12 yards to Scott Gieselman and 34 yards to Martin.

Boston College grabbed a 28-7 advantage with 2:01 left in the second quarter on Martin's 45-yard punt return for a touchdown and Flutie's two-point conversion pass to Gieselman.

But the Cadets marched 68 yards in one minute, 25 seconds to score on Jarvis Hollingsworth's 5-yard pass to Rob Dickerson that made the score 28-14.Kevin Snow's 25-yard field goal boosted the margin to 31-14 at 2:21 of the third period before Army launched its comeback.

Quarterback Nate Sassaman, who rushed 25 times for 136 yards, scored on an 8-yard run, and Craig Stopa kicked a 40-yard field goal. Strachan scored on another 1-yard run on the second play of the fourth quarter, but Hollingsworth brought the Cadets to within a touchdown with a 10-yard run just 2:23 later.

Rutgers 23, W. Virginia 19— Albert Smith ran for two touchdowns and quarterback Eric Hochberg tossed a 36-yard scoring pass as Rutgers built a big first-half lead against No. 19 West Virginia. With officials from the Gator, Peach and Citrus bowls looking on, Smith scored on runs of 1 and 7 yards, and Hochberg found Andrew Baker on his long scoring pass as Rutgers opened a 20-3 lead midway through the second quarter.

Tom Angstadt added a 50-yard field goal early in the final period after West Virginia closed to within 20-13, and it proved to be the difference when Tom Gray scored on a 1-yard run for the Mountaineers with a minute left to play.

The victory raised Rutgers' record to 6-3 and snapped a four-game losing streak against the Mountaineers. The loss was the second straight for West Virginia and dropped the team to 7-3.

West Virginia's other scores came on a 57-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Kevin White to flanker Gary Mullen in the second quarter and two Paul Woodside field goals.

Woodside's seven points in the game gave him 311 at West Virginia, breaking the old school record of 305 set by Ira Rodgers, whose career ended in 1919.

Smith, who carried 23 times for 120 yards, capped a three-play, 71-yard drive at 11:10 of the opening period, sweeping right end to give Rutgers a 7-0 lead.

Woodside cut the margin to 7-3 early in the second quarter, but Smith extended the margin to 14-3 on the next series, diving over from the 1-yard line on the last play of an 80-yard march.

Rutgers' next series started at the Mountaineers' 36-yard line, and Hochberg found Baker streaking down the left sideline on the first play to make it 20-3. It was the 149th completion of the season for Hochberg, breaking the old season record set by Rich Policastro in 1969.

West Virginia came right back on its next play from scrimmage as White found Mullen on a fly pattern down the right sideline.

Pittsburgh 21, Tulane 10— John Congemi threw to Bill Wallace for two touchdowns and ran for a third score in the final six minutes of the first half as Pittsburgh took advantage of four Tulane, 2-7, turnovers.

The victory was just the second for the Panthers, 2-7-1, in their past 12 games dating back to last season and ended a four-game winless streak.

Congemi ended an 80-yard scoring drive with a 1-yard touchdown run with 5:31 left in the second quarter following the third first-half interception thrown by Tulane. Congemi set up the score with completions of 19 yards to Chuck Scales and 16 yards to Pat Schipani and a 14-yard run on a third and 9 play.

Congemi then threw a 10-yard scoring shot to Wallace with 2:26 left in the half following a short Tulane punt and threw to Wallace on an 8-yard touchdown play just 38 seconds before the half following another Tulane turnover.

Syracuse 29, Navy 0— Junior running back Harold Gayden rushed for 94 yards on 13 carries, including scoring runs of 10 and four yards, as Syracuse hammered an injury-plagued Navy at Syracuse. The Orangemen, whose stiffling defensive effort left Navy with minus rushing yardage, improved their record to 6-4, while dropping Navy to 3-5-1.

Syracuse linebacker Jamie Kimmel paced a 6-sack effort, with three solo takedowns of Navy quarterback Bob Misch. Quarterback Mike Kmetz, a sophomore making his second straight start, threw a 13-yard touchdown pass to Mike Siano.

Don McAulay opened and closed the scoring for the Orangemen, booting a 51-yard field goal in the first period and a 30-yarder with 6:59 remaining.

William & Mary 48, Colgate 39— Junior quarterback Stan Yagiello completed 23 of 39 passes for 268 yards and one touchdown including 13 passes for 183 yards to tight end Glenn Bodnar as William and Mary went to 6-4 for the season. Mark Kelso's 84-yard punt return with 3:05 left sealed the victory as William and Mary racked up 421 yards total offense and exploded for 41 second-half points.

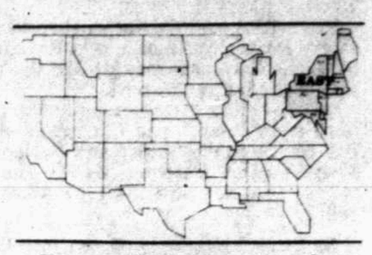

Fordham 21, Pace 0— Chip Kron scored on runs of 1 and 49 yards and rushed for 151 yards, leading Fordham to a 5-5 season.

Lehigh 21, Bucknell 15— Lehigh scored three times in the second period on runs by Peter Schreck, Marty Horn and Doug Ertz and withstood a fourth-quarter rally to defeat Bucknell.

Delaware St. 34, Liberty Baptist 11— Gene Lake rushed for 336 yards and three touchdowns to lead Delaware State to its eighth win in 10 games.

St.John's 19, Hofstra 16— Mike Burrell threw two touchdown passes and ran for one score as St. John's upset previously undefeated Hofstra 19-16.

Burrell completed 19 of 37 passes for 200 yards as the Redmen won their eighth conssecutive game, finishing the sseason at 8-2. The Flying Dutchmen, ranked fifth in the country in Division III, are 9-1.

Dartmouth 27, Brown 11— Quarterback Mike Caraviello completed 13 of 22 passes for 234 yards and two touchdowns as Dartmouth overwhelmed Brown 27-11 Saturday. Tailback Lorenzo Chambers carried 29 times for 136 yards as the Big Green won its second game in eight tries, piling up two first quarter touchdowns and holding off Brown, 3-5, the rest of the way.

Roy Green carries Cowboys' fate

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Not so surprisingly, strong safety Dextor Clinkscale says Roy Green of the St. Louis Cardinals may decide the playoff destiny of the Dallas Cowboys.

"We're going to try to just control him. You can't stop Green," said Clinkscale while preparing for Sunday's important National Football League game between Dallas and St. Louis. "Right now, he's having a great season. He's on a roll."

Statistics brought by Green into the matchup of teams sharing a four-way lead atop crowded National Conference East standings at 6-4 bear out what the Cowboys' defensive back says.

In his last five games, starting with Dallas on Oct. 7, the All-Pro receiver of the Cardinals has caught 28 passes for 687 yards. Eight of the grabs, two for touchdowns, netted 189 yards in a 31-20 victory Oct. 7 by St. Louis over the Cowboys in Irving, Texas.

Neil Lomax, who in all has delivered nine scoring strikes to his favorite target, says the bombardment will continue.

"We have to pass against the Cowboys, they're very difficult against the run," said Lomax.

Cowboys-Cards

"Obviously, we're going to try out their secondary. I think that was the key to our game down in Irving."

BOTH THE Cardinals, who have not beaten Dallas twice in one season since 1970, and the Cowboys muffed chances last week to create a two-way tie instead of the four-team logjam at the head of the NFC East.

Dallas lost quarterback Danny White with a jammed shoulder during a 19-7 setback at home against the New York Giants. Also at home, St. Louis bowed 16-13 to the Los Angeles Rams despite 341 passing yards by Lomax.

Clinkscale, a member of a Cowboys squad which has not been absent from NFL playoffs since 1974, viewed the outcomes as proof of increasing parity among teams.

"Talent is well-rounded. You never know when someone's going to win," said the Dallas back. "Who would have thought that San Francisco would beat L.A. 33-0 and L.A. would come back and beat St. Louis and hold St. Louis to zero points the second half?"

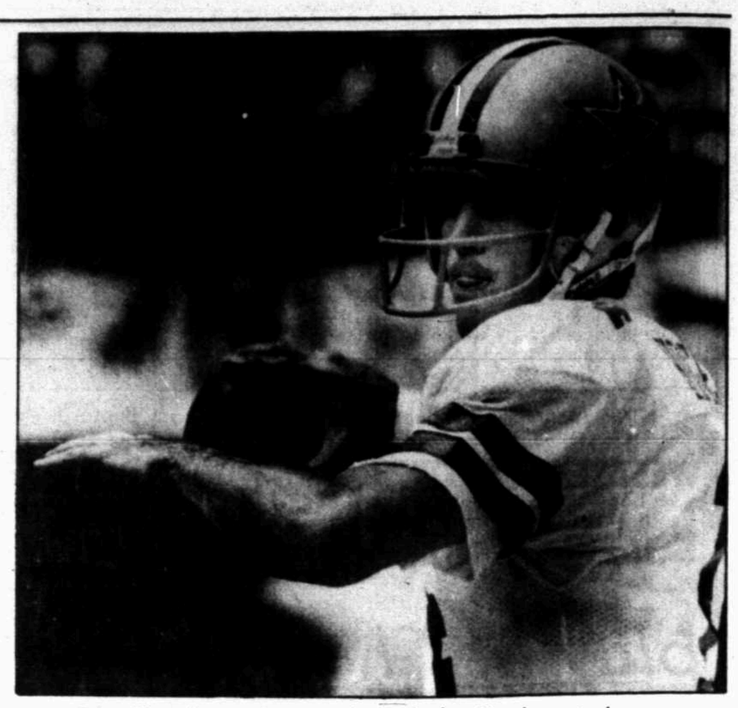

COWBOYS Coach Tom Landry said White, who missed early-week practices, might not be available for the rematch with the Cardinals and that defensive end Ed "Too Tall" Jones was also questionable with a knee injury.

Also questionable at midweek for St. Louis running backs Ottis Anderson and Stump Mitchell. "I think both Stump and O. J. will be able to play if called upon," said Lomax, however.

Dallas, off to its slowest start since 1978, hopes it can duplicate the late-season spurt of eight straight triumphs it manufactured that season en route to Super Bowl XIII.

A Cowboys defense which has yielded only one touchdown in 10 quarters and which leads the NFC with 19 interceptions and 28 total takeaways, may offer the best hope. It will be challenged by the NFC's top offense, averaging 28.8 points and 415.6 yards per game.

"We'll need to give Neil time to throw and need to pressure their quarterback as well," said St. Louis Coach Jim Hanifan. "We've got to execute on both offense and defense."

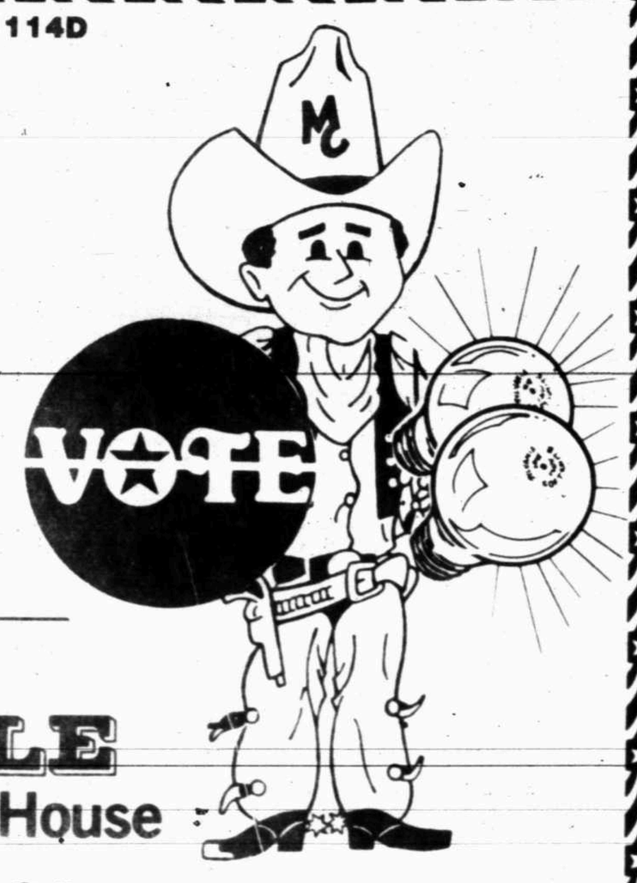

Gary Hogeboom gets starting role for Cowboys today.

Spartans derail Iowa's Rose Bowl Express, 17-16

Ohio State has inside track, if...

From Wire Reports

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Injured Iowa quarterback Chuck Long led the Hawkeyes on a second-half rally against Michigan State, but fell inches short of the winning points as the Spartans defeated No. 18 Iowa 17-16 in the Big 10.

The loss knocks Iowa from the Big 10 lead and, unless Michigan upsets Ohio State next week, the Buckeyes will represent the conference in the Rose Bowl.

Long, who injured a knee last week against Wisconsin, came off the bench in the second half to spark what had been a lethargic first-half offense.

Long's pinpoint passing led the Hawkeyes to two fourth-quarter touchdowns and closed the gap to 17-16.

But with 44 seconds left in the game, Long tried to score a two-yard conversion and fell inches short of the goal line.

The Spartans had taken a 14-3 lead at halftime behind the running of freshman Lorenzo White. But Iowa's defense held the Spartans to a 24-yard field goal by Ralf Mojsiejenko in the second half.

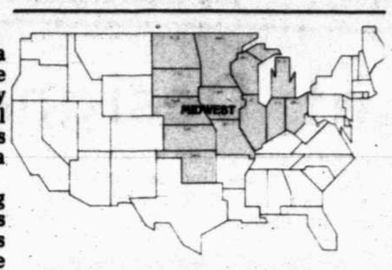

The Hawkeyes started their comeback in the fourth with an 82-yard, 12-play drive capped by a two-yard run by Owen Gill.

Long hit 11 straight passes in the fourth quarter, including three long tosses in the final drive and a three-yard toss to Jonathan Hayes for the score.

Ohio State 52, Northwestern 3— Keith Byars rushed for 151 yards and two touchdowns and Mike Tomczak hurled two touchdown passes Saturday, leading Ohio State into sole possession of first place in the Big Ten

The triumph opened the gates for Ohio State to represent the Big Ten in the Rose Bowl.

Byars, who carried 27 times, scored both of his touchdowns in the third quarter on runs of 7 and 5 yards after Tomczak had thrown touchdown passes of 31 and 29 yards to Cris Carter in the first half when the Buckeyes rolled to a 21-3 lead.

Wisconsin 30, Purdue 13— Mike Howard passed for 282 yards and three touchdowns and Marck Harrison added 225 yards rushing Saturday as Wisconsin smashed Purdue's Rose Bowl hopes. But the career-high performances of Howard and Harrison paced Wisconsin, 6-3-1 overall and 4-3-1 in the conference, to a 17-0 lead.

The Boilermakers, 6-4 and 5-3, closed to within 17-13 with 11:56 left in the game on Jim Everett's 42-yard touchdown pass to Bruce King.

But Harrison gained 15 yards on two runs and Howard passed twice for 46 yards, including a 28-yard scoring strike to Al Toon, and the Badgers rebuilt their lead to 24-13 just 1:25 after King's touchdown.

On the next play, Everett was intercepted by Ken Stills to set up Todd Gregoire's 24-yard field goal. Gregoire added another field goal with 2:05 to play for the final score.

Michigan 31, Minnesota 7—Michigan quarterback Chris Zurbrugg ran for one touchdown and passed for another Saturday as the Wolverines made it 16 out of the last 17 over the Gophers in the battle for the Little Brown Jug.

Michigan is 6-4 and 5-3 in conference while Minnesota is 3-7 and 2-6.

Zurbrugg, a 6-foot-2, 195-pound sophomore, scored on a 3-yard run in the first quarter and flipped a 2-yard TD pass to tight end Sim Nelson in the second quarter.

Freshman tailback Jamie Morris, who was the game's leading rusher with 120 yards on 12 carries, scored on an 11-yard run in the third quarter for Michigan.

Tulsa 24, Indiana St.17— Quarterback Richie Stephenson ran for two touchdowns and passed for another, giving Tulsa, 6-4, victory over undefeated Indiana State, 9-1, n their showdown for the Missouri Valley Conference football championship.

Stephenson scored his second touchdown on a 1-yard run with 4:57 to play for the winning score. The touchdown capped an 80-yard drive that took 11 plays. The drive began after Tulsa blocked a 41-yard field goal attempt by Scott Bridges.

The Sycamores, ranked No. 1 in the NCAA Division I-AA poll, had rallied from a 17-7 halftime to tie the score on a 21-yard field goal by Bridges.

Bowling Green 28, Ohio U. 7— Quarterback Brian McClure cracked the Mid-American Conference career passing yardage record and tailback Bernard White rushed for two touchdowns to pace the Falcons, 7-3 and 6-2. OU is 3-6-1 and 3-4-1.

McClure completed 20 of 35 passes for 215 yards, pushing his career total to 7,353 yards. The old league record of 7,267 was held by Gene Swick of Toledo.

McClure also has the most career passing yardage through his junior season of any major-college passer in history. Boston College's senior quarterback, Doug Flutie, had the previous high through his first three seasons with 7,125 yards coming into the 1984 campaign.

W. Michigan 13, Kent State 9— Quarterback Steve Hoffman ran 59 yards for a touchdown and Mike Prindle kicked two field goals to lead Western Michigan, 5-5 and 3-5, in the Mid-American Conference game.

Midlanders earn state swimming berths

From Staff Reports

DALLAS — Andrew Jordan and Michaela Hasek, both of the City of Midland Swim Team, earned berths on the North All-Star swimming squad here Saturday in a qualifying meet.

Berth winners will compete against the South All-Stars in Austin in early December.

Jordan won his berth in the 200 freestyle with a third place 1:50.40 while Hasek's berth was won in the 100 backstroke with a third place 1:03.88.

In other events Saturday, Hasek was sixth in the 200 free with a 2:03.87 while Jordan was fourth in the 100 back with a 57.76. Hasek was fourth in 100 free with 56.30 and Jordan fourth in the 100 free with a 50.20.

The two Midlanders will have a chance today to qualify in other events as the qualifying session comes to a close.

Cowboys show Missouri, 31-13

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Quarterback Rusty Hilger broke open a tight game with a 36-yard flea-flicker touchdown pass to Jamie Harris in the fourth quarter as No. 7 Oklahoma State escaped with a 31-13 victory Saturday over stubborn Missouri.

On the game-breaking touchdown pass, Hilger handed off to Thurman Thomas, got a pitch back and fired a pass that had Harris had to dive for in the end zone.

The touchdown, which came as the Cowboys led 17-13, was set up when Leslie O'Neal, one of two juniors nominated for the Lombardi Award as the nation's outstanding interior lineman, blocked a 33-yard field goal try by Missouri. He also blocked a Tiger extra point attempt and had two quarterback sacks.

The Cowboys, known better for a conservative offense, added to their lead with a one-yard touchdown run by Thomas in the fourth quarter set up by a 23-yard pass from Hilger to J.R. Dillard on a fourth-and-1 situation.

Thomas, who had 101 yards overall, also had another one-yard touchdown run.

Hilger, a senior, completed 16 of 25 passes for his best day this year for the Cowboys, who upped their record to 8-1 overall and 4-1 in the Big Eight Conference.

Missouri, which missed three field goal attempts, fell to 3-6-1 and 2-3-1.

Oklahoma State led 10-7 at halftime, despite being outgained by Missouri 244 yards to 191. The Cowboys' scores came on a 25-yard field goal by Larry Roach, following an interception and a one-yard run by Charles Crawford.

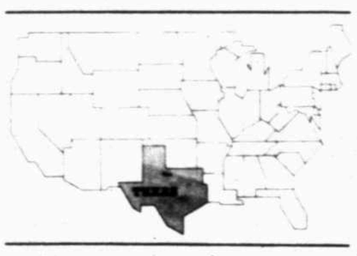

Missouri's Eric Drain scored on a one-yard plunge in the second quarter.

Missouri quarterback Marlon Adler, who completed 13 of 20 passes for 194 yards with two interceptions, had a six-yard touchdown run.

East Texas beats HPC

From Wire Reports

Nicholls St. 30, SW Texas St. 14— Lionel Vital scored on an 80-yard run on the first play of the game and Nicholls State in a Gulf Star Conference win over Southwest Texas State.

Vital finished with 117 yards on 15 carries and his teammate, Oscar Smith, had 128 yards on 25 carries as the Colonels built a 27-0 halftime lead and got a 40-yard field goal from Scott LeBlanc in the fourth quarter. LeBlanc also kicked another 40-yarder in the first quarter and one from 43 yards on the last play of the first half.

The loss dropped SWT to 7-3 on the season and 2-2 in GSC play, while Nicholls State is now 5-5 and 3-1 in conference play.

E. Texas St. 23, Howard Payne 7— East Texas State running back Stan Haggerty scored two touchdowns to lead the Lions past the Howard Payne Yellow Jackets in Lone Star Conference play. Haggerty, getting his second start at tailback in the ETSU offense, rushed for 84 yards on 19 carries. ETSU is now 5-4 overall and 1-2 in conference play; Howard Payne fell to 1-7-1 and 0-3.

E. New Mexico 42, Texas Lutheran 7— Quarterback Kevin Kott completed 36 of 56 passes for 397 yards and scored four touchdowns Saturday to power Eastern New Mexico to a 42-7 non-conference football triumph over Texas Lutheran. The Greyhounds' record this season climbed to 5-4, while the Bulldogs' mark slipped to 5-3-1.

Wichita State 17, W. Texas St. 14— Sophomore quarterback Brian McDonald ran for a first quarter touchdown and flipped a 25-yard touchdown pass to Albert Hundley with 1:12 remaining to lift Wichita State over West Texas State in a Missouri Valley Conference game.

West Texas State, 3-7 overall and 2-2 in the MVC, drove back to the Shockers 12-yard line, but Maurice Foxworth batted down a pass in the end zone with 5 seconds left.

West Texas State had taken a 14-10 lead on Randy Dean's 7-yard run. David Harbin connected with David Wood on an 18-yard touchdown pass in the first quarter for a 7-0 West Texas State advantage. McDonald ran 1 yard to tie the score in the opening quarter and Sergio Lopez-Chavero booted a 24-yard field goal for the Shockers, 2-8 and 2-2.

Colorado St. 59, Texas-El Paso 31— Quarterback Kelly Stouffer fired four touchdown passes and fullback Steve Bartalo scored on three one-yard runs as Colorado State buried stubborn Texas-El Paso with 49 second-half points.

The victory pushed Colorado State's record to 3-7 overall, 3-5 in the WAC. It was the seventh loss in a row for the Miners, who fell to 1-8 and 0-6.

Colorado State's second-half torrent negated a strong first-half showing by the Miners, who rolled to a 24-10 halftime advantage thanks to two touchdown passes from quarterback Sammy Garza, a 1-yard TD plunge by tailback James Rose, and a 39-yard field goal from Hugo Castellanos.

Stouffer, who completed of 24 of 34 passes for 308 yards, began the Rams' scoring outburst early in the third period when he hit Bartalo from 14 yards out to cut the Miners' lead to 24-17.

Austin Col. 20, Tarleton St. 19— Todd Elliott threw a 15-yard touchdown pass to Finley Woodruff late in the game Saturday as Austin College beat Tarleton State and clinched the Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association title.

Austin College had taken a 14-10 half-time lead with both TDs coming off turnovers. Tarleton had scored on a 22-yard field goal and a 3-yard run by Oscar Riggins following an interception.

Tarleton redeemed the lead in the third quarter on a 10-yard pass from Milton Dunn to Melvin Modesty but the extra point was blown away by a strong wind.

Tarleton added a 33-yard field goal by Vince Oldag, taking a 19-14 lead before the Austin College comeback.

Tarleton finished at 6-4 for the season and 4-2 in conference play. Austin College finished at 5-4-1 and 4-1-1 in conference.

Tarleton plays again on Dec. 15 in the Aztec Bowl in Mexico City.

LEE

"Since Tech and SMU are playing Saturday afternoon, that left us with either Friday night or Saturday night and we felt better about the Friday date since Tech would be having a big game on Saturday afternoon. Tech was gracious enough to let us play on Friday."

Lee coach Jack Tayrien, who has guided the Rebels to a 9-1 record which only one other team in the school's history has accomplished, said, "We are tickled to death with the arrangements that have been made. We think the artificial turf is to our advantage and Jones Stadium has proven to be a great place for our kids to play. They like playing there and that helps make it a special treat."

Tayrien, of course, is in his first year as head coach at Lee. He replaced Spike Dykes last winter when Dykes moved to Texas Tech to become the defensive coordinator of the Raiders. Tayrien, an assistant under Dykes, has put Lee back into the playoffs. Lee was 5-1 in the playoff experience last year, losing to Converse Judson in the state finals.

"Our goal this year was to get back in the playoffs and we have done that," said Tayrien. "Now we want to represent Midland the best we can. We don't talk about winning a state championship here. We just want to do the best we can do and if that means a state championship, we will take it. Of course, you don't have a chance to win anything unless you can get out of your district and this is one of the hardest districts to get out of.

"It's a tribute to our kids that we have gotten this far. They have lived under the shadow of last year's team, a team that had 55 seniors. It stripped us pretty good. And this is the smallest 5A team I've ever been associated with. These kids have accomplished a lot already and I'm proud of them."

Alicia sports a beautiful lynx coat designed and carefully crafted by T. Jeff Haughton. Mr. Haughton, formerly of Koslow's in Ft. Worth, will be at Designer Secrets Friday, Nov. 16, Saturday, Nov. 17, Monday, Nov. 19 and Tuesday Nov.20 to show his new furs and to redesign out-dated furs.

A big secret is out at Designer Secrets!

Designer of luxurious furs, T. Jeff Haughton, formerly of Koslow's in Fort Worth, Texas, will be right here in Midland at Designer Secrets Friday and Saturday, Nov. 16 and 17, as well as Monday, Nov. 19 and Tuesday Nov. 20. Laveda Boggs, owner of Designer Secrets, is proud to be able to bring this accomplished craftsman to Midland twice a year.

Mr. Haughton brings with him a rich knowledge of fur design and a wide variety of furs. The extravagant selection will feature vests, jackets, strollers and full length coats for men, as well as women and children. His offerings represent absolutely the finest quality garments of mink, fox, coyote beaver, and lynx available anywhere. Yet, the garments are offered at by far the lowest prices. Moreover, Mr. Haughton will be offering an additional discount of 10-20% while he is at Designer Secrets.

Because Mr. Haughton is a designer who grew up in the fur business, he is able to custom design furs for his customers. No more looking for the garment that is just close to what you had in mind! This craftsman can design and make just about anything. In fact, watching him work is enlightening in itself. All a customer has to do is describe what she would like to have, whether it be a full length coat of a certain style or a mink bathroom set. This artist will go to work drawing a picture of the item. Once the customer has agreed on the style and details, Mr. Haughton will make the piece and return it before Christmas.

If a customer has a fur that is a bit outdated this craftsman can redesign it. For example, last August when Mr. Haughton was at Designer Secrets a lady consulted him about a fur cape which had been her grandmother's. The cape was a beautiful but was simply out of style. To the customer's delight Mr. Haughton was able to take the fur which held much sentimental value and design a stylish jacket which will not just be hidden away in storage.

Now, you can be a part of this exciting adventure at Designer Secrets, Midland's elegant resale boutique. While you are in the shop be sure to brouse through the wide selection of like-new garments. Laveda Boggs, owner of Designer Secrets, points out, "It's smart to be frugal. No matter how much money you have it only makes sense to stretch your fashion dollar."

Designer Secrets offers fantastic bargains on fashion apparel so that more customers can afford to dress like a million dollars without spending it. You will find designer labels such as Ernest Strauss, Albert Nipon and Bill Blass.

At Designer Secrets there is a beautiful array of designer blouses such as Halston, Earnest Strauss, Ann Klein (just to name a few) for as little as $26.

Ultra suede suits, dresses, skirts and blazers are also good buys at Designer Secrets along with lovely designer shoes and leather bags.

Designer Secret's apparel, furs and accessories come from the finest closets and only currently-styled, better-labeled apparel is selected for consignment. Many items have original price tags still attached. Oftentimes the original owners have gained or lost weight or decided the color or style is not appropriate for them. Mrs. Boggs is so careful in accepting apparel that it is difficult to tell if the clothing is pre-owned.

Consignors receive 50% of the selling price for their garments. If a garment doesn't sell in 90 days, the owner can retrieve the item or let Designer Secrets donate it to a charitable organization and provide the consignor with a tax deductible receipt.

Designer Secret's consignors are middle to upper income socialites and professional ladies who can afford to turn their wardrobe frequently. Mrs. Boggs says, "We are definitely fulfilling a need. So many professional ladies are expected to (and want to) look like a million, but seldom do their salaries make that possible. This way they can dress like a million on somebody else's (million)! These ladies know that being well-dressed makes them feel good about themselves."

That's why so many area women turn to Designer Secrets for outfits for those special occassions. Alongside a beautiful Bill Blass wool suit trimed with fox and originally priced at $1400, are lovely, more moderately priced, high quality garments from $14-$20-$30-$50. There's a fantastic buy for everyone and for every occassion.

Designer Secrets can make your Christmas shopping much easier. A gift certificate from the shoppe is a perfect gift for any woman in town. After all, Designer Secrets is such a fun place to shop that you'll be giving that special lady in your life not only beautiful clothes but an exciting shopping experience.

Go by Designer Secrets this week in La Villita Shopping Center and experience it for yourself. The designer clothing, the furs, the class - it's all yours at Designer Secrets!

Color 1 Associates takes the hassle out of dressing

What is Color 1? Harper's Bazaar calls Color 1 "ingenious"; Glamour calls it "revolutionary"; Family Circle says it's "Your Color Guide to Good Looks"; Architectural Digest calls it "intriguing"; Gentlemen's Quarterly says "color your world successful"; Cosmopolitan Living says "Live with colors that flatter you."

COLOR 1 has over 500 consultants and is the most comprehensive personalized color service in the U.S. It is a self-enhancement concept through personal color use that is based on over 15 years of extensive research on the differences in human coloring. Using an individual's natural coloring, Color 1's local, trained consultant J.J. Love creates a Personal Color Harmony chart in which all colors balance, blend and interchange with one another. Because it is based on a person's natural body colors, the chart is never outgrown and thus lasts a lifetime. Used to coordinate and select clothing, accessories, decor, hair color and makeup, it helps avoid costly mistakes, putting the client in charge of the color in his life. It makes the difference between looking good and looking great.

How does this work? Rather than labeling individuals by hair color (like blond, brunette and redhead), the Color 1 concept recognizes four basic color types with most people being one type or a combination of two types: Contrast: dark hair with ivory or olive skin; Muted: brown hair with red or bronze highlights or red hair and brown-beige or golden skin; Gentle: ash-blond, ash-brown hair with ivory or pink-beige skin; Light-Bright: golden-blond or golden-brown hair with golden skin. The client's skin, hair, eyes and lips are foundation for the chart. ALL colors in the spectrum exist on each chart in the shade and clarity (brightness/softness) ideal for that individual. Each COLOR 1 charting session is private and takes place only in natural daylight, since artificial lighting of any kind distorts the skin and hair tones. During the private consultation, J.J. Love teaches the client how to combine his or her best colors to the greatest advantage, as well as what patterns, fabrics, textures, jewelry, furs and makeup colors are best for him. Color 1 does not use prepackaged color charts because each individual is unique. J.J Love selects from over 600 colors, those colors that are most enhancing to each client. These are then mounted on a Personal Color Harmony chart and pocket size chart which provide easy reference for wardrobe planning and shopping trips.

Personal color charting is only the very beginning of what J.J. Love can offer her clients. As an image consultant, she sticks with her clients through a self enhancement program. Whether the client wants to establish the image of an executive or a secretary, J.J. can help. She begins by performing "closet surgery." By getting rid of all the outfits which are never worn anyway, a client can see what he or she already has to work with. Then, J. J. will go shopping with her clients in order to help them select the proper styles for the image they are trying to achieve. This evidences J.J.'s genuine ongoing concern for her clients. Clients can feel free to call J.J. for advice even after the consultation.

Color 1 has recently responded to their clients' request for a good line of makeup. J.J. does make-overs and is especially excited that the Color 1 makeup line offers more colors than any cosmetics company.

One of the easiest ways to become acquainted with what Color 1 has to offer is to attend a Creative Dressing Program. The topics include Understanding Your Color Type, Business Dressing for Women, Accessory Drama, Wardrobe Planning and Troubleshooting, and Line and Design Seminars. The next workshop is scheduled for November 17, so call J.J. at 694-8464 to get the details. In order for the workshop to be more personal the size will be limited.

J.J. is also available for presentations for clubs and companies. This type of program is ideal for the company that is interested in their employees developing a neater, more professional image.

J.J. Love, image consultant for Color 1, can help clients get their wardrobes together. Her seminars and consultations focus on how to create an effective, attractive, and economical wardrobe. Image building is also very important to this consultant.

Village Coin Shop has the only Bid Board around

Sometimes it seems like there just aren't enough opportunities for coin collectors to get together. There's nothing more fun than meeting at a coin show where you can trade coins and show off your latest acquisition. But, coin shows only come up every once in a while. Where can you find other collectors between shows? VILLAGE COIN SHOP!

Charles and Gale Green, long time coin collectors and native Texans, have recently moved back to Midland and opened Village Coin Shop in the Village Shopping Center. They are really excited about being able to offer a place for coin collector's to meet each other. In fact, now the Coin Club meets at the shop each 3rd Thursday at 7:30. The public is invited to attend these meetings.

To help you sell and acquire coins Village Coin Shop has the only "Bid Board" in the area. Just put up the coin or coins you are ready to trade and wait for the high bid. The board has become really popular since the shop opened and sports a wide selection every week.

You'll also find a lot of rare coins, both domestic and foreign, in the store. Or, you can give Charles or Gale a call and get daily quotes. Right now bullion is moving up. Charles and Gale will also be glad to appraise small lots of coins in the store without charge.

If you want help designing a piece of jewelry, maybe around a coin in your collection or for a special Christmas present, Village Coin Shop is the place to go. They have gold chains and pendants. Those without stones are sold by weight so you get a better deal. For your convenience they also carry diamonds, rubies, emeralds, and jewelry of every style.

If you just can't decide which piece of jewelry will make the nicest Christmas present, get a gift certificate. Then that hard-to-buy for person will have a wide selection of jewelry, coin collecting books and supplies to choose from.

Don't wait till the next coin show to meet other collectors. Drop by the Village Coin Shop and put a coin on the Bid Board. You're sure to see another collector. Oh, by the way, you can use your VISA and MASTER CARD on everything except the gold and silver bullion.

Charles and Gale Green are proud to have the only Bid Board in the area. Many collector's have been taking advantage of this opportunity to trade and meet other collectors. Go by Village Coin Shop in the Village Shopping Center and see what all they have.

Midland Stained Glass Center will help you decorate for Christmas. Whether you are looking for a large glass Christmas tree to serve as a focal point or small holiday accent pieces Mary Richardson will make them for you or teach you how to make them.

Midland Stained Glass Center will brighten your holiday decorating and gift selection

Now is the time to start getting ready for the holidays. Redecorating and shopping are probably at the top of your preparation list, so let Midland Stained Glass Center help you check those items off your list.

Mary Richardson, owner of Midland Stained Glass Center, has a number of suggestions to help brighten up your holiday season. Stained glass can help you create a beautiful focal point in any room. Candelabras, glass Christmas tree center pieces, lamps, picture frames, and mirrors are just a few of the possibilities.

Unique lamps can be designed from stained glass. These colorful creations can really brighten up a room. Likewise, stained glass night lights are not only practical but add a special touch to the decor. The possibilities for picture frames and mirrors are limitless. Frame colors can be chosen to enhance your pictures while mirrors can be framed or etched.

Why not try stained glass to help you create beautiful focal point? Midland Stained Glass Center can use glass to transform a master bedroom into a beautiful master bedroom/sitting room. Whether you are looking for a small item or a stained glass door panel or room divider you will find it at Midland Stained Glass Center. Remember, quality custom work takes time so order now to insure that everything will be ready for the holidays.

Bevelled glass candelabras can be designed in a number of sizes to meet your decorating needs. Just imagine the nice atmosphere that such an accent piece will create during those special holiday gatherings.

Glass Christmas trees can be made small enough to serve as a centerpiece on your table or large enough to stand alone. Decorations for your traditional Christmas tree can also be designed at Midland Stained Glass Center. In years to come, these unique decorations will serve as a reminder of the special things that happen around your tree this year.

With the decorating taken care of you may concentrate on what will go under the Christmas tree. Mrs. Richardson has a number of suggestions. For that special colleague Midland Stained Glass can make a beautiful design of the company logo (Custom work takes time so be sure to order immediately, in order to have them by Christmas.) A beautiful jewelry box or stained glass door insert will be ideal for that special lady. Likewise, mothers-to-be will really appreciate the stained glass night lites which are available in a number of styles. The beautiful, hand-made Kaleidescopes will be enjoyed by everyone at the family gathering. If you just can't make up your mind, ask for a gift certificate. Then you'll be sure that you got the right thing.

If you plan on making your own Christmas decorations, Midland Stained Glass Center can offer you some bright ideas and special classes. They are starting their fall classes now. A variety of subjects are being offered. For example: Christmas Ornaments (for beginners and advanced), Boxes, Nite Lites, Kaliedescope Design, Acid Etching, and Little Lampshades are just the beginning of the class list. Classes on Simple Bevel Panel, Using Bevel Clusters, Tiffany Lampshades, Beginner's Stained Glass, and Advance Techniques of Panel Construction are also on the schedule.

To find out the exact dates and times call Mary Richardson at 697-0322 or drop by Midland Stained Glass Center at 4313-A W. Illinois. Redecorating and shopping for the holidays will be much more fun with stained glass. Now is the time to get started.

The professionals at Temp Time, Beth Slaton, Gayle Miller (right), and Jann Wallace (seated), are proud to be able to offer Midland outstanding temporary help during the busy holiday season. Because Temp Time is LOCALLY—OWNED, they understand the unique needs of Midland business. So, dial 687-1545 or drop by their office this week at 2500 N. Big Spring.

Temp Time helps you get through the holidays

It's countdown time to the holidays and the projects are rolling in, but the employees may be rolling out for accumulated vacation time and winter illness. How will you ever get all regular end of the year closeouts and extra holiday tasks done? There are Christmas party invitations to address for clients and employees. All your special 1984 projects need to be completed soon. And the books (are you just a little bit behind?) need to be ready for all those end of the year reports, too. It's time for Temp Time.

Temp Time is a locally owned temporary service which is prepared to help you through those rough times. Whether you need a temporary with years of bookkeeping experience, a qualified executive secretary, or a receptionist and file clerk, Temp Time has the temporary professional for you.

In addition to being equipped to handle routine office work, Temp Time has tempoararies who can address all those invitations for your Christmas Party. Just think how nice it will be to have a temporary who will lighten your load during this busy season.

BecauseTemp Time is locally owned and a local payrolling system, they can also help take the financial burden off Christmas shoppers. Whether you are qualified as a file clerk or an executive secretary, Temp Time offers you exciting opportunities and you won't have to wait weeks for your check to come from a far away city. That's why so many students turn to Temp Time during Christmas break Christmas shopping money and extra spending money. The opportunities aren't limited to students; many people enjoy the flexibility that Temp Time offers. You may want to work all day as a temporary; however, part time temporary jobs are also available. Many offices may need a little extra help, but can't justify another 40 hour a week employee. Flexibility is what you're looking for and Temp Time has it. For example, a Temp Time temporary may go in for half a day or from 9 till 2 and still be home when the kids get out of school. This helps both the temporary and the office.

Beth Slaton of Temp Timeis also concerned about the intangibles of temporary placement. Matching a temporary's skills with the job requirements is only part of the placement task. Another consideration is the personality of the office and of the temporary. How will they fit together? Will this temporary be as comfortable as possible in this setting, or is there another assignment that might be better? What about the scheduling? Can the temporary be there during the hours that the office needs them? There is so much to consider and Temp Time's professionals don't overlook a thing.

Because Temp Time, unlike many other temporary services, is locally owned and operated, they have a good understanding of Midland employers. Temp Time even has a payrolling system for other companies. Your company may want to hire a past employee or a temporary employee which you've selected but not want to put them on your payroll. Well, you don't have to, Temp Time will. The employee may be selected by your company (or Temp Time will find one for you), will work in your office, and meet your schedule, but Temp Time will do the payroll.

So whether you need a temporary during this busy season or would like to be a temporary, Temp Time is the place to call at 687-1545. Or go by this locally owned business at 2500 N. Big Spring.

Wild Again, right, Pat Day in the saddle, battles ahead of favorite Slew o' Gold, center and Gate Dancer in the $3 million Breeders' Cup at Inglewood, Calif.

Wild Again scores upset

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Wild Again, a longshot who had to be supplemented into the race, spoiled Slew o' Gold's last hurrah by winning a thrilling three-horse stretch duel in the $3 million Breeders' Cup Classic at Hollywood Park Saturday.

It was supposed to be a victorious going-away for Slew o' Gold, who had won his first five starts this year and is being retired to stud.

But Wild Again, supplemented to the 1¼-mile race for $360,000 because he wasn't nominated, beat not only Slew o' Gold, but Gate Dancer, who was supposed to be Slew o' Gold's major challenger. Then he had to withstand an inquiry involving those three colts.

Wild Again, ridden by Pat Day, finished a head in front of Gate Dancer, who was a half-length in front of Slew o' Gold. But the stewards disqualified Gate Dancer to third and moved Slew o' Gold to second.

Wild Again's victory was worth $1.35 million and gave him earnings for the year of $2,054,409. His owners are William Allen, Terry Beal and Ron Volkman.

The second richest race on the $10 million, seven-race program was a foreign affair.

Lashkari, an English-bred owned by the Aga Khan, overtook French-bred mare All Along just before the wire and won the $2 million Breeders' Cup Turf Stakes by a neck. He paid a winning mutuel of $160.80, which made Wild Again's winning return of $64.60 pale.

In the first two stakes on the program, each worth $1 million, Chief's Crown won the Juvenile and became the solid favorite for next year's Kentucky Derby, while Fran's Valentine, a 70-1 shot, almost won the Juvenile Fillies Stakes. She finished a half-length in front of Outstandingly, but was disqualified and placed 10th.

In the other three $1 million stakes on the card, Eillo won the Sprint, Royal Heroine tied a world record in winning the Mile on the grass, and Princess Rooney dominated the Distaff.

Steward Pete Pedersen, in explaining the inquiry, said Gate Dancer lugged in during the last sixteenth of a mile and placed Slew o' Gold in close quarters. "Actually he interferred with both inside horses," said Pedersen.

Breeders' Cup

Slew o' Gold was fifth going down the backstretch, as first his stablemate Mugatea, then Wild Again led the eight-horse field. Gate Dancer was seventh.

Then, Slew o' Gold, ridden by Angel Cordero Jr., began to move on the final turn and seemed to take the lead. As they turned for home, Laffit Pincay Jr. moved Gate Dancer into contention and the three horses put on a brilliant stretch duel.

Slew o' Gold's disappointing second was worth $675,000, which made him the second horse to top $3 million in earnings ($3,533,534). John Henry has won more than $6 million.

Wild Again, who carried 126 pounds, was timed in 2:03 2-5. Slew o' Gold also carried 126 and Gate Dancer 122.

In the 1½-mile Turf race, Cordero sent All Along, the 1983 North American Horse of the Year, into the lead with about a quarter-mile to go and she appeared to be headed for her first victory in five starts this year.

But she couldn't hold off Lashkari, ridden by French jockey Yves St. Martin, who was third with a quarter-mile left. English-bred Raami finished third and Strawberry Road II, the pacesetter from Australia, was fourth. The time was 2:25 1-5.

"Truly he is a champion," trainer Roger Laurin said after Chief's Crown overtook Tank's Prospect in the stretch to win the Juvenile in the time of 1:36 1-5 in the mile. Spend A Buck finished third.

"The money was not the biggest thing today," said Laurin. "This guarantees him the championship."

Star Crown Stable's Chief's Crown, ridden by Don MacBeth, earned $450,000 and paid a winning mutuel of $3.40 in winning for the sixth time in nine starts. He carried scale weight of 122 pounds.

Each winner of the $1 million stakes earned $450,000.

Fran's Valentine, ridden by Pat Valenzuela, took the lead in the Juvenile Fillies race with an eighth of a mile to go. But shortly after the finish, the steward ruled she had interferred with Bessarabian and Pirate's Glow in the upper stretch and disqualified her.

"I had a lot of horse and I didn't have anywhere to go," said Valenzuela.

"I'm waiting for him to apologize because I could have gone down and it could have caused me my life," said Fernando Toro, who rode Pirate's Glow.

Outstandingly, owned by Harbor View Farms and ridden by Walter Guerra, paid a winning mutuel of $47.60. Dusty Heart, who had finished 2¼ lengths back of Outstandingly, was moved to second and Fine Spirit was moved to third.

The time for the mile was 1:37 4-5. Each starter carried 119 pounds.

Crown Stable's Eillo, ridden by Craig Perret, led every step of the way but was almost caught at the wire by Commemorate, who was 1½ lengths ahead of Fighting Fit.

Eillo, who carried 126 pounds over the six furlongs in 1:10 1-5 and paid $4.60.

Royal Heroine, an Irish-bred 4-year-old filly who has raced all year in the United States, tied a 35-year-old world record in winning the Breeders' Cup Mile in 1:32 3-5. She carried 123 pounds home 1½ lengths in front of longshot Star Choice, who was a neck in front of Cozzene.

The winner, owned by Robert E. Sangster of Britain, paid $3.40 as part of an entry with Prego, a 4-year-old Irish colt.

Paula Tucker's Princess Rooney, a 4-year-old filly, dueled for a while with 3-year-old Lucky Lucky, then drew off in the stretch to win the 1¼-mile Distaff by seven lengths over 3-year-old Life's Magic, with Adored third.

In winning her fifth straight stakes, Princess Rooney, 123, ridden by Eddie Delahoussaye, was timed in 2:02 2-5 and paid $3.40.

CFL division finals today

TORONTO (AP) — Safety Paul Bennett, discarded by three Canadian Football League clubs this season, gets an opportunity today to make it to the Grey Cup game with team No. 4.

However, Bennett — the CFL career punt return leader with 4,858 yards on 482 carries over eight seasons — isn't bitter about all the travelling he's had to do this year.

He's more interested in leading his latest team, the Hamilton Tiger-Cats, to a victory over the Toronto Argonauts in the Eastern Division final. The winner of the game, scheduled to begin at 12:30 p.m. at Toronto's Exhibition Stadium, will advance to the Grey Cup in Edmonton, Alberta, next Sunday against either the Winnipeg Blue Bombers or the B.C. Lions.

"It was a business decision; that's what football's all about," Bennett, 30, said of his moves from Winnipeg to Toronto, then being waived by the Edmonton Eskimos and claimed by the Ticats. "Everybody asks me about the revenge factor, but there's enough pressure without the Toronto thing.

"I don't worry about what happened in the past. You can't dwell on the negative."

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Redemption is the key word to the preparation of the Winnipeg Blue Bombers for Sunday's Western Division final against the British Columbia Lions in the CFL playoffs.

"We want to redeem ourselves after the last game here," veteran center John Bonk said Saturday, referring to Winnipeg's 20-3 loss to the Lions in the final regular-season game at B.C. Place Stadium. "We have something to prove because we didn't play well last time."

The Bombers were held to a total offense of 181 yards in the Oct. 27 game which determined first place in the West.

Bonk vows it will be different in the divisional final because "this team has played well all year" and "we love being the underdog in this situation."

Yanks prefer bargain hurler

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The Mets were one of three teams that selected no one in baseball's ninth free-agent draft Thursday. The Yankees were one of six teams that wound up with negotiating rights to both Rick Sutcliffe and Bruce Sutter, who are certain to be the most expensive of the 56 players in the draft. It remained uncertain, though, how seriously the Yankees would pursue the two pitchers, Sutcliffe the starter and Sutter the reliever.

"Whitson is our first choice; we need starting pitching," George Steinbrenner pronounced after the draft in which the Yankees made Ed Whitson, a starting pitcher, the first of their 13 choices.

Whitson, a 29-year-old right-hander with a 53-56 career record, was selected by 11 clubs. Only three players were chosen by more teams — Steve Trout, a left-handed starting pitcher, by a record-tying 17; Lee Lacy, outfielder, by 14 and Don Aase, relief pitcher, by a surprising 13.

The Mets joined the Chicago Cubs and the Detroit Tigers in passing twice in the first two rounds, the fastest way to get out of the draft. It was the second straight draft in which the Mets picked no cne.

Only Texas and Pittsburgh, with 16 picks each, selected more players than the Yankees.

Of the 56 players available, 37 were named by fewer than four teams, which means they are free to negotiate with all teams. Seventeen of those players were among the 21 who were in the draft for a second or third time.

Sutcliffe, this year's winner of the National League Cy Young award with the Cubs, was selected by eight teams. Sutter, who registered a record-tying 45 saves for St. Louis, was named by six teams. Atlanta, Baltimore, California, St. Louis and Texas joined the Yankees in gaining rights to both.

The relatively low number of teams that chose the pitchers was not surprising because many clubs thought they would re-sign with their 1984 teams and everyone knew they would be expensive. Sutcliffe had a $900,000 salary this year, and Sutter just finished a four-year, $3.5 million contract.

"It's just about what we figured," said Jim Bronner, Sutter's agent. "The only team we thought would draft him that didn't was the White Sox. It makes it easier to have 6 or 7 serious teams to talk to than have to sift through 15 or 16 teams that aren't serious, although I wouldn't mind being in Trout's position."

Barry Axelrod, Sutcliffe's agent, said he was happy that the Yankees had chosen rights to Sutcliffe because they were one of the teams on the pitcher's list. Bronner was pleased, too, that Sutter was on the Yankees' list. Steinbrenner, after all, has been one of the biggest spenders in the free-agent market.

Steinbrenner, the Yankees' principal owner, said Thursday that "we don't draft people just for the sake of it," but he made other comments that indicated he just might not pursue either pitcher vigorously.

"I like to see the superstars stay where they are," said the owner who has lured an assortment of superstars to New York. "That's the way it should be."

A few minutes later, Steinbrenner, referring to the corporations that own the Cubs and the Cardinals, added, "I'd have to be bidding against The Tribune Company and Anheuser-Busch. We have a lot of money, but I don't know if we can compete against them. Anheuser-Busch isn't chopped liver."

Steinbrenner, though, also spoke of Sutter with lavish praise, calling him "the superstar of relievers," adding, "If he's available, you have to consider it."

Meanwhile, Sutter's agent went off to resume negotiations with Lou Susman, the Cardinal lawyer who attended the draft at the Omni Park Central Hotel in Manhattan. "We're going to do our best to sign him," Susman said.

Steinbrenner talked as if the Yankees would do their best to sign Whitson, who rejected a three-year, $2 million offer from San Diego before the draft. Whitson, who earned $335,000 this year, had his best season, winning 14 games and losing 8.

"We had Bob Lemon watching him," Steinbrenner said. "Lem is as good a judge on pitching as we have, probably as good as anyone in baseball. He gave him a good recommendation. He's an outstanding competitor and he's mentally tough. I don't need any guys faint of heart."

"Trout is a great young lefthander and he's just coming around," Steinbrenner said of the Cub pitcher, who had a 13-7 record.

Aase, whom the Yankees also selected, was a popular pick because he pitched well late in the season after returning to the California bullpen from an extended rehabilitation following elbow surgery in 1983.

Breath test given bus of football players

WESTMINSTER, Md. (AP) — A high school football team's road trip wound up at a state police barracks, where the players were given alcohol breath tests. Now an all-county tailback has quit in protest because two of his teammates were benched afterward for undisclosed reasons.

"I didn't like the way things were going, so I quit," said David Dyson, a junior at Westminister High School in Carroll County, who was sick at home the night of the testing.

"All I know is that two of my best friends won't be able to play ... I was just sick of the whole thing," he said.

The Westminster Owls were returning home Nov. 2 from a 19-14 loss to Meade High School when their bus was detoured to the Westminster barracks of state police. Breathalyzer tests were conducted on all 30 players on the bus at the request of football coach Guy Stull.

Principal Peter McDowell said Stull made the request after a coach discovered a soft drink can containing alcohol in the rear of the bus and no one admitted knowing about it. No other liquor or bottle was found, no one refused the breath test and none of the tests indicated a student had been drinking heavily, McDowell said.

Four other players had been cut from the team last September for violating county school regulations regarding alcohol.

This week, two players who were on the bus were confined to the bench.

Stull refused to comment and did not indicate why the two players were benched.

An American Civil Liberties Union lawyer in Baltimore, Barbara Bechtol Mello, said she believed the bus search and breath tests were illegal under the Fourth Amendment protection against unreasonable search and seizure.

But McDowell said he believed students' rights were not violated, and no one filed any immediate legal action challenging the search and tests.

Future Monday for LA's Raiders

Associated Press

NFL

As George Allen used to say, the future is now for the Los Angeles Raiders. Or more precisely, the future is Monday night.

The defending National Football League champions, losers of two straight games for the first time since 1981, go into Seattle to face one of two teams ahead of them in the AFC West. A loss and their already slim hopes of the conference title are about gone, leaving them only the wild-card route into the playoffs.

"Right now we're struggling a little bit," says Coach Tom Flores admitted. "Last year at this time, we were 7-3, but we were in first place. This year, we're 7-3 but we're in third place."

Ahead of them are the Denver Broncos, 9-1 and the Seahawks, 8-2. The Seahawks are coming off two straight shutouts and last week they returned a league-record four interceptions for touchdowns in a 45-0 victory over Kansas City. The Raiders beat the Seahawks 28-14 in their first game, but have lost twice to Denver, making them losers in any tiebreakers with the Broncos.

THE MIAMI Dolphins, the league's only unbeaten team, will try to run their string to 11 in a row at home against 4-5-1 Philadelphia. The Dolphins could clinch the AFC East should both New England and the New York Jets lose.

The game also provides another opportunity for Dan Marino, to close in on the NFL record for touchdown passes in a season. Marino has 29 with six games to go, only seven shy of the mark held jointly by Y.A. Tittle and George Blanda.

The 6-4 Jets, who beat the Colts 23-14 on opening day in Indianapolis, will try to repeat at the Meadowlands. New York's biggest problem is a secondary that has lost three starters and is so short that linebacker Bobby Bell may be called on for emergency duty at safety.

New England, also 6-4, tries to repeat an opening day win — over Buffalo, one of the league's two winless teams. The Patriots, battling for an AFC wild-card spot, dropped a key game in Denver last week and now are 1-1 under new Coach Raymond Berry.

San Francisco, 9-1, leads the Rams by three games as it closes in on the title in the NFC West. The Browns won their second game in 10 tries and gave Marty Schottenheimer his first coaching win with a 13-10 triumph in Buffalo last week.

Atlanta is 3-7 after losing four straight and will try to get healthy against New Orleans, whom it beat on the road on opening day. The 4-6 Saints, who dropped a 23-13 decision to Green Bay last week, are 1-3 since acquiring Earl Campbell for an already crowded backfield.

Mustangs celebrate homecoming, 56-16

From Staff Reports

The Midland Christian Mustangs ended its six-man football season Saturday with a loud 56-16 Homecoming victory over New Life Academy of Lubbock.

The game was called with around two minutes left in the fourth quarter due to the 45-point rule.

Jerry Greer scored on runs of one, 11 and 56 yards to pace the Mustangs. Ashford Thompson scored two touchdowns on runs of three and 57 yards and also threw a 23-yard scoring pass to Kevin Matlock, who later scored on a 56-yard romp. Midland Christian also got TD runs of three and four yards from Tim Ritchie and Todd Mimms.

The Mustangs ran to a big lead quickly, scoring 18 points in the first quarter and led by a 24-8 halftime margin before erupting for 20 more points in the third quarter.

Midland Christian ends the season with a 4-5 overall record. New Life Academy owns a 3-2 mark.

Midland Lee 9th wins Freshman conference

From Staff Reports

Junior Highs

The junior high football season came to a close Saturday with Lee Maroon winning the ninth grade Midland-Odessa Conference with a 20-0 win over Odessa Nimitz.

Maroon finished the year with an 8-0-1 record. Lee White placed second with a 34-0 win over Bowie on Thursday and ended with a 7-1-1 mark. Each Lee team posted five shutouts this year.

Midland Purple dropped a 22-8 decision to Odessa Ector Saturday in the battle for third place and Odessa Crockett defeated Midland Gold by a 25-12 count. Bonham beat Hood, 20-12, in the only other ninth grade game Thursday.

In the eighth grade Midland-Odessa Conference, Crockett won top honors with a close 13-8 win over Hood Saturday. Alamo, open on the final weekend of play, won second with a 6-2 record by virtue of an earlier win over Bonham, who was a 45-14 victor over Ector. San Jacinto lost a 30-22 decision to Nimitz while Goddard defeated Bowie 30-8.

In the seventh grade American Conference, Goddard White took a 46-6 win over San Jacinto Green and Goddard Red won a 34-8 victory over Alamo Grey. Alamo Scarlet defeated San Jacinto White by a 20-14 margin.

In the seventh grade National Conference, Alamo Scarlet dropped San Jacinto White by a 32-14 margin, Goddard Red blanked Alamo Grey 34-0 and Goddard White won a 46-0 victory over San Jacinto Green.

Father files lawsuit in pole vault death

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The father of a high school athlete who died of injuries suffered in a pole vaulting accident has filed a lawsuit contending that negligence by the Omaha and Ralston school districts caused his son's death.

Donald Ohnstad recently filed the lawsuit in Douglas County District Court. Ohnstad's 18-year-old son, Darin, died after suffering head injuries May 3, 1983.

To Lease or Not To Lease

Reasons To Lease:

1. Leasing is convenient – you only pay for what you use and not for the full price of the car.
2. There is no used car to dispose of at lease end.
3. Leasing frees your cash and you can use your available bank line of credit for other purposes.
4. Lessee – leasing for business purposes will have the benefit of simplified tax records.

1985 Lynx

Red Carpet Lease Program

	Monthly Lease Payments	Number of Months	Security Deposit	Cash Due at Lease Inception	Total Mileage Allowed	*Mileage Penalty	Total Payments
Aries	$196	48	$200	$396 & TT & L	60,000	6¢ mile	$9,408
Lynx	$149	48	$150	$299 & TT & L	60,000	6¢ mile	$7,152

The Red Carpet Lease Program lessee may have the option to purchase the car at lease-end at a price to be negotiated with the dealer at lease inception, however, lessee has no obligation to purchase the car at lease-end. (With approved credit.)

* Mileage Penalty occurs if mileage exceeds 60,000 miles in the 48 month lease period. The penalty is 6¢ per mile.

Window painting has become a high school ritual for students expressing friendship, love or revenge. "Cutie" and "so fine" are considered to be messages of flattery.

Linda Anderson

Kent Porter

Their parents stuffed telephone booths and Volkswagens; their grandparents swallowed goldfish. Each generation of young people establishes its own unique frivilous fun — some imaginative and totally useless mischief. In Midland, high school students like to write on each other's automobile windows in shoe polish, preferably white.

These kids aren't stupid, either — many were willing, even eager, to talk about this latest fad, but were not willing to use their names. Not only is the practice of shoe-polishing car windows illegal, but, as one Midland High School student said, "My parents will kill me if they find out."

CARS CAN BE seen all year sporting sayings — some witty, some no-so-witty. But according to many students, the best times to shoe-polish car windows are during football season and at the end of the school year near graduation.

The practice of shoe-polishing car windows is wide-spread among Midland's high school population. Students agree painting car bodies with polish can cause permanent damage. Several students were recently asked if they had ever participated in the fad. One teen, who asked to not be identified, said, "Life is not life without a little polish. Of course I have. Maybe you should ask 'Who hasn't?' "

THEY USE THIS unique method of communication for personal and sometimes emotional expressions. Some of their reasons are:

— "Oh, usually just for fun, sometimes for revenge and always for something to do other than sit at home and chew on my fingernails or other exciting things like that. You also have the overwhelming thrill of destroying a nice clean car with the risk of getting caught by a not-so-nice car owner/cleaner."

— "Because I wanted to and it's a lot of fun!"

— "Because they are my friends or enemies, or I want to bother someone I like!"

— "To express how you feel about someone or something."

— "Because it's entertaining."

— "Because I was in love."

— "Revenge. They did it to me."

— "To celebrate victories."

But perhaps one anonymous student summed it up best: "Because it's so much fun to cruise down the road with your lights off, to park about four houses down, to try to keep the dogs from barking — it's adventure."

Shoe-polished car windows can be a status symbol.

Ginger and her friend Jill shoe-polish cars together. Ginger said, "It's like a secret society. You drive around with shoe polish on your car and other people are driving around with shoe polish. It's like a little group. It lets people know how you really feel about them."

GINGER AND JILL said many people who are "into" the practice keep shoe polish in their cars at all times. And because those who shoe-polish others' cars are often those whose own cars are shoe-polished, most "polishers" keep a stash of glass cleaner in their cars to wash off the shoe polish.

Students express mixed emotions about being on the receiving end of the fad. "Sometimes I get angry if they write bad things," said one teen.

"I feel flattered," said another. "It means people know you exist."

Some shoe-polishers said the best times for window writing without getting caught is "late at night, in the middle of the day or in the middle of some function."

OTHERS SAID the best time is "when the person won't catch you."

"It's best not to do the front window," Ginger said, "because then they might have a wreck."

Students said most shoe-polishers are girls, although boys sometimes engage in the practice "when they are talked into it by their girl friends. Or for revenge."

Although many shoe-polish messages are written in friendship, revenge is sometimes the reason. Ginger said, "Black shoe polish is hard to get off. You use black if you want to be really mean."

"It's not good to have your mother's car done," Jill said, "especially if it's a nice car. You don't do your friends' mothers' cars unless you want to get them in trouble."

"IF YOU WANT to be really mean, you mark 'For Sale' " on the victim's car windows, Ginger added.

The fad has been popular for several years. The girls said the practice is assured continuation because "as each new year's sophomores come in they pick it up."

Flattering messages include "so fine," and "cutie," private jokes and school spirit slogans, they said. The worst messages are "something degrading."

The practice has a strict code of ethics. "You usually do it with somebody. You don't do it by yourself unless you are out for revenge," Ginger said. "You usually don't get caught. And if you do, everybody is on their own!"

Kiwi brand is the best polish to use, she said.

"DO YOU KNOW how many cars you can do with an 89-cent bottle of shoe polish?" said one student. "I had one bottle that lasted for three months!"

"Most parents are pretty easy going about it, if nothing nasty was written," Jill said. "My parents don't mind as long as I clean it off."

Sometimes shoe-polishing a friend's car is not enough, and toilet-papering the car owner's house can be part of the ritual. One Lee High School student whose family's cars and dining room windows were shoe-polished and whose trees were toilet-papered, said, "They wrote 'Where were you?' and 'We missed you.' I think that's sweet!"

Reading between lines while driving is illegal

Students who "shoe polish" messages on car windows say the fad is fun, challenging and a means to communicate with friends. To have one's windows painted is a symbol of status.

But many students are not aware the practice is also illegal.

According to the law, Section 134B of the Uniformed Act, Texas Motor Vehicle Laws, "No person shall drive a motor vehicle with any sign, poster or other non-transparent material upon the front windshield, side wings or side or rear windows of such vehicle which materially obstructs, obscures or impairs the driver's clear view of the highway or any intersecting highways," said Sgt. Bill Morgan of the Midland Police Department.

If police officers catch "polishers" in the act of marking car windows they face possible tickets, court sessions and fines of $1-$200, he said. "The judge sets the fine."

A vehicle owner who discovers someone in the act of marking his car windows may file criminal mischief charges against the marker.

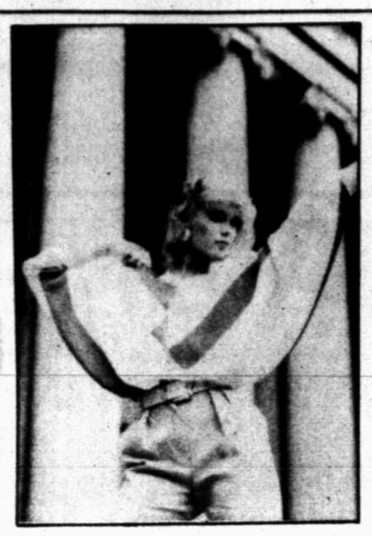

Sgt. Morgan said people who write the messages are difficult to catch because "the person driving the car is not the one who did the marking."

The law was not intended to spoil students' harmless fun, he said. It was legislated to prevent traffic accidents. "If the car is involved in an accident and we can contend the writing contributed to obscured vision, we'll file on them.

"There's usually not much damage done" Morgan said about the shoe-polish writing. If an officer sees someone driving a vehicle with shoe-polished windows, he can stop the car and have the driver wash the windows, or issue a ticket. "If he thinks it's a hazard he can pull them over and advise them to clean it off. We usually give a warning first."

Although shoe polish on glass is usually easy to wash off, shoe polish used on the painted body of a car sometimes causes damage. Morgan said the polish, left on the painted area of the car, can be absorbed into the paint and can cause a permanent stain. If the damage is over $750, "it can go up to a felony. Generally a paint job doesn't run over $750."

Fashions by designer Margaretha Ley such as those shown above will be featured at the "Escada for Christmas" style show Dec. 3

Benefit style show planned

"Escada for Christmas," a style show spotlighting designer Margaretha Ley's fashions, will be presented at 11 a.m. Dec. 3 in the atrium of ClayDesta National Bank.

Sponsored by Junior Woman's Association of Midland through the courtesy of Julian Gold Inc., the show will feature the Ley's Resort/Spring 1985 collection, shown by professional models from Midland and San Antonio.

The luncheon will be catered by Karen Hilliard, owner of Party Potpourri in Odessa. Ms. Hilliard studied in Paris at LaVarenne and L'Acadamie de Cuisine. She is a certified member of the International Association of Cooking Schools and teaches classes at her own cooking school in Odessa.

Proceeds from the show will benefit Midland Memorial Hospital Pediatric Equipment Fund and Big Brothers/Big Sisters. Since 1977, the Junior Woman's Association has raised more than $34,000 for the Pediatric Equipment Fund, for such items as a Radiant Warmer, an electronic respiration monitor, an infant care system, a bronchoscope and a Siemens Ventilator.

Invitations are $40 per person or $300 for a table for eight. Reservations should be made before Nov. 19 by calling Janet Walton at 699-2000, or Donna Kubicki at 687-4545.

Fluid leak colors can be clues

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Noticing the color of fluid leaks near your car can often be clues to the car's maintenance needs, according to an official of a maker of auto parts.

Dave Bowman of Fram says black fluid often indicates an oil leak while pink or brown might be a transmission leak. He says a greenish-yellow fluid means radiator coolant may be leaking while any fluid around the tires can mean leaks from brakes or shock absorbers.

Sugar Plum Fairy to be presented

"An Afternoon with the Sugar Plum Fairy," a presentation for children, will be staged from 2-5 p.m. Nov. 18 at the Paragon Building, 600 N. Marienfeld, on the corner of Big Spring and Louisiana Streets.

Sponsored by the Ballet Midland Guild, the program will feature excerpts from the Christmas classic, "The Nutcracker," performed by Ballet Midland, under the direction of artistic director Anthony Ferro.

Christmas treasures and photographs with characters from "The Nutcracker" can be purchased, and complimentary refreshments will be served. The event is open to all children accompanied by an adult.

"An Afternoon with the Sugar Plum Fairy" is underwritten by Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Beal, Mr. and Mrs. Bob Duke, Sam L. Majors Jewelers and Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Wagner Jr.

Friends of the Ballet are Capital Leasing, Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Dellwood Mall, MoMo Laughlin Miller, ASID, Texas Commerce Bank-Midland, the Gallery, The Shop and Troy's House of Meats.

All proceeds will benefit productions and functions of Ballet Midland.

Copley News Service

Eye paints, mascara, lipstick and powder puffs can be traced to the Middle East. Both Mesopotamians and Egyptians colored their lips and cheeks with red ochre inserted in a reed. The Sumerians used a face powder made of yellow ochre and called "Golden Bloom."

Second Sorority Sampler scheduled

From Staff Reports

The second annual Sorority Sampler Christmas Bazaar will be presented from 9:30 a.m.-4 p.m. Thursday at American Legion Hall on Airpark, behind ClayDesta. The event is open to the public and $1 donations will benefit charitable organizations.

Last year's Sampler grossed more than $9,000, according to Ellen Robinson, general chairman of the event. Door donations help support the Panhellenic Scholarship Fund. Last year, scholarships were awarded to a Midland High student and a Lee High student.

Individual sororities will use proceeds of sales at their booths for their philanthropic projects.

Sixteen sororities and their items for sale include:

— Alpha Chi Omega: Handmade Christmas clothes for children, lollipop trees, lollipops and bean soup mix with samples

— Alpha Delta Pi: Homemade pies, personalized visors and critter cages

— Alpha Phi: Cheese balls

— Alpha Xi Delta: Books, doll bassinets

— Chi Omega: Pecans, doll raffle, cookbooks featuring allergy-free recipes

— Delta Delta Delta: Gift wraps, Christmas tote bags, tins, planters, boxes, ornaments

— Delta Gamma: Craft co-op, Long Horn tree ornaments; strawberry bread and preserves

— Delta Zeta: Christmas raffle, baby raffle, assorted Christmas and baby items

— Gamma Phi Beta: "Midland" wrapping paper and yarn

— Kappa Alpha Theta: Lasagna and consignments

— Kappa Delta: Christmas boutique, stuffed muslin geese and ducks

— Kappa Kappa Gamma: Flower bulbs

— Phi Mu: Jellies, gingerbread houses, gingerbread cookie mixes, stuffed gingerbread men, Christmas aroma boil, scented garment protectors, potpourris

— Pi Beta Phi: Arrowcraft handwoven items and crafts, baked goods, "recipe cards" cookbook

— Sigma Kappa: Santa letters, wooden children's hangers, small ceramics

— Zeta Tau Alpha: painted wicker baskets, visits from Santa, caramel corn, potpourris, wooden ornaments, monogrammed hanging travel bags.

Local consignment artists will also participate in the bazaar. A percentage of their profits will be used to benefit their host sorority's charity.

Taking dance classes break teacher's routine

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — Bill Beal dressed like the other students in his break-dancing class, with a sheared T-shirt and high-top sneakers, but he still stood out.

That's what happens when a 54-year-old high school teacher enrolls in a private dance studio class devoted to knee spins, swipes, the "helicopter" and the "centipede."

The Spanish teacher encountered break dancing for the first time last fall when students asked if they could practice during lunch hour as he prepared a lesson in his classroom at Reedley High School southeast of Fresno.

"I saw them and I thought, 'Hey, this is better than having lunch with the teachers sitting around complaining about the school,' " he said.

Beal took the young dancers under his wing, supervised the formation of The Dynamic Krew and arranged shows for them at school and community functions.

"They were willing to teach me, but they had no experience," said Beal, who prefers ballroom and tap dancing. "I thought if I took a class, an adult would be teaching the class. At least, that's what I assumed."

But dance studio owner Cynthia Merrill of Fresno found "I had to get high school kids. Adults can't do it or haven't been doing it long enough to teach it."

Aside from a woman in her 20s who received the class as a birthday present, Beal was the only adult in attendance. The next oldest student was a 14-year-old girl.

Beal expected to learn strenuous moves based on what he saw in his classroom and thought he could perform them because he was acrobatic in his youth.

"Until I was 12, they didn't know which end I was going to walk on," he said. "I could walk up and down steps on my hands."

But breaking was more work than Beal had anticipated.

Famed buildings endangered

Associated Press

The Statue of Liberty, the Parthenon and other artistic treasures are becoming an endangered species that engineers and scientists are trying to preserve and restore.

Wind, salt air, air pollution and time are destroying some of the world's architectural triumphs, according to an article in the November issue of Popular Mechanics, and the cure will be expensive.

In New York harbor, restoration of the Statue of Liberty — she will be 100 years old in 1986 — will cost an estimated $30 million, most of which is being raised through small donations from all over the United States and from larger corporate grants.

The work on Miss Liberty got underway by encasing her in scaffolding that rose from her pedestal up her 151-foot 1-inch height to the tip of her flame.

Her flame has been removed and will be replaced. Blasts of liquid nitrogen have been applied to her skin. These blasts, hundreds of degrees below freezing, freeze and separate a layer of gunk that has formed on the statue's skin, so it can be stripped away like old wallpaper.

Inside, the almost 2,000 iron bars that form the latticework armature supporting her outer skin have rusted and corroded. Rivets connecting it to the skin it supports have fallen out. The bars must be replaced.

The statue also will get a new hydraulic glass elevator to take tourists from the pedestal up to the 171 steps they must climb to reach the crown. A TV-equipped viewing station for the handicapped also is planned and workmen are completing two tourist mezzanines.

Among other masterworks in need of help, there's the Leaning Tower of Pisa — in 1982 the Italian government appropriated $10.5 million to halt the lean before it went too far.

Venice, only 27 inches above sea level, is 8 inches closer to sinking now than at the turn of the century. Inflatable rubberized sausage-shaped storm gates have been proposed to control water surges into the city's lagoon.

At the Acropolis in Athens, tour guides say, "Look well, so you can tell your grandchildren what it was like. When they get here, it may have collapsed."

The problem is air pollution, which is dissolving the ancient buildings in a chemical bath. Vibration from traffic also is a problem.

The Taj Mahal also suffers from air pollution, while Egypt's Sphinx is being treated for salt decay.

Many shows from golden age of television now lost

Associated Press

Owning a VCR won't help television fans watch such vintage video gems as "Twelve Angry Men" or "Visit To A Small Planet" — they are among the thousands of golden oldies that have vanished.

Johnny Carsons's first year as host of the "Tonight" show has disappeared, according to an article in Connoisseur's November issue, and even most of "The Goldbergs" is gone.

Broadcast waves themselves do not die, of course, and even now the Goldbergs are speeding through outer space.

But back on earth, only one season of "The Goldbergs" has been preserved.

The disappearance of so much early television stems from the low regard in which TV was held in its early days when giants such as Edward R. Murrow existed side by side with dancing cigarettes.

Before the late 1960s, old programs were taped over, burned or shoved into closets.

When NBC needed storage space, Steve Allen's three years as host of "Tonight" were dumped into a furnace.

ARRANGING ART

Arranging pictures on a wall can be an art itself. There is no set rule on whether to center a painting on a wall or above a sofa. Rather, it is a matter of compostion. The decision should be made considering the relationship of the room's general balance to the proportions of the room and the wall. if there are four or more prints, drawings or photographs, it usually works best to arrange then in block or in a straight line. it requires a number of different-sized pictures to make a "composition" worthwhile. Unless you have a lot of experience, the best guideline is usually to arrange the pictures within an imaginary rectangle, and, thus, create a block composition.

Mrs. Timothy Alan Goudeau

Marion Lindley and Timothy Alan Goudeau, both of Midland, were married at 6 p.m. Saturday at Saint Nicholas' Episcopal Church. The ceremony was officiated by the Rev. Joseph H. Schley Jr.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Johnson Lindley of Midland and Sidney Schott Lindley of Houston. Parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. W.A. Goudeau of Midland.

Sydney Lindley Stickney of Midland served her sister as matron of honor. Andrea Elaine Craig of Dallas was bridesmaid. Bridesmatrons were Holly Holt Williamson and Peggy O'Shaughhessy Eckley, both of Midland. Miss Ruth Mayer Johnson of Houston was flower girl.

W.A. Goudeau was best man for his son. Ushers were Steven Johnson Lindley of Houston and John David Lindley of Kilgore, both brothers of the bride, and Vance Kimbro of Midland. Groomsmen were Nathan Goudeau of Abilene, brother of the bridegroom, David Stickney and Barry Williamson, both of Midland. Steven Justin Lindley of Kilgore, nephew of the bride, was ring bearer.

Following a wedding trip to Lake Tahoe and San Francisco, the couple will live in Midland.

BASCH-ROSS

Mrs. James Patrick Ross

Paula Marie Basch of Midland became the bride of James Patrick Ross, also of Midland, at 6 p.m. Saturday at Midland Lutheran Church. The Rev. Meyers officiated.

The bride is the daughter of Paula Anne Franklin of Hawthorne, Calif. Parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. J.R. Bowie of Midland.

Cindy Stroud of Midland was matron of honor. Maid of honor was Margaret Zambrano of Midland. Amy Adams of Midland was flower girl.

David Ross served as best man. Ushers were Dennis Eickler and Tom Holder. Groomsman was Terri Stroud of Midland. Allen Ryder of Midland was ring bearer.

Following a wedding trip to Las Vegas, Nev., the couple will live in Midland.

Lifestyle policies

The following are policies for publication of stories and announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the story is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only.

The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Portraits of the future bride and bridegroom in one photograph may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Sign language aids firefighters

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Without his special training, Phoenix firefighter Bob Walp probably wouldn't have corrected a colleague who asked him for his help in assisting an elderly "deaf and dumb" man.

"I said, 'You mean he's deaf, right?' " Walp said.

Walp said a Fire Department-sponsored course in sign language had opened another world to him. Within a two-week period, he was called twice to assist paramedics in communicating with a deaf person.

The first time was when firefighters were called to the aid of the 64-year-old "deaf and dumb" man.

The man was indeed deaf, but he was anything but dumb, Walp said.

"He had been beaten up and he was pretty excited when I got there," Walp said. "But I used sign language to talk to him and he really calmed down."

It was during a Deaf Awareness Festival 18 months ago that Fire Department officials realized it was time they considered the special problems of the hearing impaired, Sally Williams, fire inspector, said.

With her help, a 16-hour course in sign language was set up at the Fire Department's academy in June, and Ms. Williams and three other firefighters were its first graduates.

"We were taught some basic phrases we'd need on the job, such as, 'What medications do you take,' 'What illnesses have you had,' or 'Where do you live,' " Williams said.

Teen-ager advises parents, peers

NEW YORK (AP) — When teenagers in the New England area have problems, they don't have to write to Dear Abby — they can write to Dear Bobby, an advice columnist their own age.

For the past three years, Mark Godes, now 14, has been writing the "Bobby Simpson" column in the Boston Herald, and now some of his favorite letters and answers have been collected in a book, "Dear Bobby Simpson."

"If the book sells well, I'd love for the column to be syndicated," the self-possessed young author admitted in an interview in New York, first stop on a nationwide tour in connection with the publication of the book.

He receives about 25 letters a week, from which he selects up to four to answer in his weekly column, picking the problems that he feels affect the greatest number of people.

"Peer pressure, when kids are pushed by their friends into doing things that may get them in trouble, is the No. 1 problem," he says. "The reason is that all subsidiary problems — drugs, alcohol, sex — basically stem from that. I tell them that even though the decision (to resist peer pressure) may not be a popular one right now, in the long run it will pay off.

"Drug and sex things are happening at a very young age; drugs, because they are very accessible, even in elementary school. I try to tell teen-agers that even though they're available and they may be pressured, don't even experiment with them — you might get hooked."

Mark favors the teaching about the effects of drugs in school, insisting the drug use rate among teenagers would drop if they learned "how bad drugs are."

Hydrogen peroxide helps shellfish

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The nation's shrinking supply of abalone, oysters, clams, scallops and other vie shellfish is getting a boost from a chemical well-known to bleached blondes: hydrogen peroxide.

Biochemical detective work by marine scientist Daniel E. Morse at the University of California-Santa Barbara has found that abalone spawn in large numbers as soon as one of them releases a natural substance called prostaglandin. What triggers the animal to make prostaglandin is a slight increase in the peroxide levels in the sea around them.

In a report to science writers at a meeting sponsored by the Council for the Advancement of Science Writing, Morse said the addition of small amounts of peroxide to the water set off the release of sperm and eggs in many experiments. Several small companies in Southern California and abroad now are using the method for commercial shellfish farming. His studies also may provide clues to saving clams and fin fish in the East, including the shrinking rockfish supply in the Chesapeake Bay.

"What we have here is a safe, cheap and highly reliable way to control a critical step in the reproduction of these valuable molluscs," Morse noted.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

A group of Midland women who have been longtime friends have established a pleasant custom over the past several years. They attend each of the Midland Community Theatre's Sunday matinees and then adjourn to a different home each time for dinner. Naturally, the dinner talk centers around the play they have just seen.

Gertrude Alstrin was hostess to the group in her home last Sunday following the current production of the musical comedy, "Tomran." Others present were Helen Giffert, Mable Henderson, Mabel Shaw, Inez Hazlip, Kitty Ashby, Marion Culbertson, Ada Anderson, Marge Wood, Janelle Rhodes and Roma Ayres. Mrs. Hazlip's daughter, June (Mrs. Mark) McMahon of Libby, Mont., was a guest. She was visiting here en route home from a Caribbean cruise.

Mrs. Wood entertained the theatre goers, plus additional friends, with an election party in her home Tuesday evening. A buffet supper was served from a table decorated with a straw hat, holding the yellow roses of Texas and an Olympic flag the hostess obtained while attending last summer's Olympic Games, with a picture of "Ronnie" as the focal point.

BELATED BIRTHDAY WISHES to Harriet Motter, who celebrated "The Big One" recently. Her husband, Gene, and daughter, Mary (Mrs. Frank) Sims of Shawnee, Okla., arranged a clever surprise party to mark the milestone event at the Motter home and managed to pull it off without Harriet being any the wiser.

Mary and her nine-month-old son, William, came in for a visit the week before the party. Arrangements were made for the other Motter children, Liz of Austin and Jay, a student at TCU, and son-in-law Frank to fly in the day of the event. The home of longtime family friends, Hallie and Dale McCarter, served as their hiding place until party time.

The decor and birthday cake featured a golfing theme, as Harriet has taken up the sport in recent years.

Among others sharing in the fun occasion were Ginger and Jimmy Floyd, Neta (Mrs. W.S.) Dill, Marlene and Jack Byrd and Betty and Bob Hawk of Odessa.

LIZ AND FLYNT CHANCELLOR recently enjoyed a four-day trip to Lake Tahoe, celebrating both their seventh wedding anniversary and Liz' birthday while there.

They got a preview of the winter, with snow preceding their arrival and temperatures remaining in the mid-20s during their visit. They stayed at the charming old Harvey House, which has been given a new look, and particularly enjoyed a show by pop singer Melissa Manchester.

THE GHOST TOWN of Terlingua, Texas, was once more the setting for that indescribable event, the World Championship Chili Cookoff, which gets bigger and bigger each year. At last count, over 6,000 people had poured over the hill, and more were expected. Held traditionally the first weekend of November, it takes place on the desert floor in south Brewster County near Big Bend National Park.

More than 50 teams had the honor of competing for the world crown in the granddaddy of all chili cookoffs. They came from all over the country, some as far away as Virginia and California. The event began on Friday as a cold front blew in, but Saturday turned out to be a gorgeous day, with temperatures in the 80s.

Our reporter on the scene, who prefers to remain anonymous, spotted a number of Midlanders in the throng, including Joe Pope, Gene McQueen, Jonell and Jack Barton and Ken Gosnell.

TWO YOUNG MIDLAND women, Becky Lehker and Karen Barnett, had an exciting three-week trip to Europe earlier this fall.

Traveling with a tour group for the first two weeks, they visited London, Paris, Switzerland and Italy, including Venice, Florence and Rome.

Among the celebrities they encountered along the way were pro golfer Johnnie Miller and West Germany's minister of foreign affairs Hans-Dietrick Genscher, and they enjoyed having Hollywood director Maris Tobias as part of their tour group. Her picture, "Heartbeats," is to be released soon.

Becky and Karen were delighted to find members of their group with Midland ties. One of the women is the niece of longtime Midlander Faerine (Mrs. J.C.) Mayes, while one of the couples has a daughter, Amy Fults, who recently transferred here with Enserch Exploration.

At the end of the tour, the Midlanders flew to Spain for a week, dividing their time between Madrid and the Mediterranean resort of Torremolinos. They enjoyed every minute of the trip, bit declared that Switzerland and Rome were their favorites.

Sixty-two Midlanders were among the 110 geologists attending the annual fall field trip of the West Texas Geological Society recently in Chihuahua, Mexico. The theme of this year's trip was the study of the geology and petroleum potential of Northern Chihuahua and its applicaions to the Permian Basin.

A dedicated group, the "rock hounds" left for the field in three buses between 7:00 and 7:30 a.m. each day. At each stop, the leaders lectured on the geology of the area to a captive audience following along in the WTGS guidebook, "Geology and Petroleum Potential of Chihuahua, Mexico," which was edited by Edwin C. Kettenbrick Jr. of Midland.

But it wasn't "all work and no play" for the group. Social events icluded cocktails and registration at the Granada Royale in El Paso on the eve of the trip; an icebreaker the first evening out at the discotheque of the Victoria Hotel, the convention headquarters in Chihuahua, followed by dinner in the hotel dining room, and a Mexican luncheon at Nuevo Casas Grandes on the drive back from Chihuahua City to El Paso the last day.

Trip arrangements were handled by Midlanders Dean Flatt, general chairman, and Marie Bellomy, executive director of the WTGS. Other committee members from Midland on the trip included Terry McMillan, road log chairman, assisted by Gay Spears and Christine Chandler; Sally Williams and Bill Henry, registration, and Chris Beard, liaison and visas. WTGS officers participating were president Dan Kozak and his wife, Marjorie; Bruce Pearson, president-elect, and his wife, Mignon; Ms. Williams, secretary, and Ms. Bellomy. Dr. Terry Tubb of Midland was the official trip doctor and delighted the participants as unofficial field trip raconteur.

Teen competes in pageant

Sonya Henderson, 15, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Henderson of Midland was chosen a finalist in the 1985 Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant, to be March 29-31, 1985 at the Midland Center. This pageant is official regional pageant to the 14th annual Miss Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant to be June 7-9, 1985 at Texas Christian University in Fort Worth.

Winner of the Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant will receive a $500 cash award, a full four-year tuition scholarship to Oklahoma City University, a $2,400 scholarship to Wayland Baptist University in Plainview, and other prizes. Winner will be crowned by Kimberly Koonce of Midland, 1984 Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager.

Judging will be based on scholastic achievement and leadership, poise and personality and appearance. There will be no swimsuit competition. Talent or an oral essay on "What's Right About America" may be given.

Sonya Henderson

Miss Henderson will be sponsored by Adobe Oil and Gas Inc. Her hobbies include basketball, tennis and French Club.

'Toeprints' can help identify birds

MOSCOW, Idaho (AP) — Human beings can be identifed by their fingerprints, but ornithologists say the scales on birds' toes vary in size, shape and position to form a unique pattern among birds as well.

These "toeprints" could eventually replace the traditional numbered bands used to identify and keep track of protected birds, such as eagles.

Since poachers often remove numbered bands from birds that have died of natural causes and reuse them to disguise poached birds, veterinary scientists say that toeprint photographs may begin to replace the banding system.

AT WORK

Consultant's job only to give advice

BY ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

Q. I am a computer consultant to a small company in grave financial trouble. Besides being able to straighten out some of their technical problems, I recognized that three of their employees in the programming department are incompetent. They waste time and money by writing poor work and then rewriting it. I have spoken to the executive vice president about firing them, but he doesn't want to hear. I would appreciate any strategy of yours to change his mind.

A. First, a consultant is paid to give expert advice, seldom to implement it. If your heart is on the implementation end, you should be on the other side of the table and run your own business.

Second, you might document the time (and therefore money) wasted by each of the employees, one by one, on each step of the project. Then show your findings against what might be ideal and propose several suggestions, such as retaining the employees (state time and money required), hiring a more competent project leader to supervise them better, or firing them and rehiring (and what that would cost).

You can't go beyond these proposals. It is not, after all, your business.

Q. I have wanted to be a writer ever since I was young. I have been a housewife for the past 15 years and don't know where to start. I read your column every week and hope you can help me.

A. Start with what you know. If you're involved with any volunteer association that has a newsletter, volunteer your services. Or interview the soccer coaches on your son's team to motivate more parents to get involved.

From there, you can begin to see what you like best: reporting, interviewing, researching. Then look for writing classes given by colleges, as well as writer's conferences. Besides picking up practical suggestions, you can meet writers, both new and experienced, for on-going support and leads. Writing is a tough business.

Q. I am a 34-year-old secretary-receptionist in a dead-end job. I hate my role as "office mommy" so I'm working on a B.A. degree in psychology. But I am starting to realize that this may not be a winning ticket for me. Maybe I should acquire more relevant skills in business and accounting. Please help. I can hardly bear another day as a secretary-receptionist.

A. First, consider the irony: The roles of office mommy and therapist are quite the same. They differ by degree — in status, power and money. Chances are if you don't like the one, you won't like the other even though there are more benefits. Want a test? Quit your secretarial job and find a position in a psychological environment like a mental health clinic, hospital or special institution. See what's there for you. Better yet, find an aspect of the company you are in now that you can investigate or promote.

Hearst News Service

Nothing tastes fresher than a salad created from one's very own garden. Lettuce or spinach greens topped off with crunchy tomatoes, carrots, radishes, green onions and beets make a delightful lunch.

Are such delights the exclusive right of homeowners with thriving back yards? No, says Dr. Jerry Parsons, vegetable specialist for the Texas Agriculture Extension Service. Apartment dwellers can successfully grow fresh vegetables in containers on a window sill, patio or balcony. Last date for planting this season is Nov. 25.

Tomatoes, peppers, eggplant, green onions, beans and lettuce are only a few of the tempting edibles available from nurseries as seeds. And, Parsons adds, transplants of small fruited tomatoes, such as Smallfry; small-growing plants or large fruited tomatoes, such as Spring Giant; and the TAM mild jalapeno will be available this fall.

The most important factors for successful growing, Parsons emphasizes, are sufficient sunlight (at least eight hours), proper moisture, adequate fertility and, most of all, "tender loving care."

The container: Bushel baskets, drums, gallon cans, wooden boxes, washtubs and plastic garbage cans all will work. Plant smaller vegetables in 8-to-10-inch pots, and larger crops such as tomatoes, peppers and eggplant in 3-to-5-gallon containers.

Good drainage is important. A container should have at least four drainage holes.

Seeding and transplanting: Synthetic soils are best, Parsons says. Composed of sawdust, wood chips, peat moss and perlite, these soils are disease-free, lightweight, and hold moisture well. It is best to transplant healthy plants into containers, rather than seeding, he believes. Transplants can be purchased at nurseries. If you choose to seed, start the vegetables in a warm area that receives sufficient sunlight.

Fertilization: For vigorous growth and high yields, the key is adequate fertility. Prepare a nutrient solution using a water-soluble fertilizer. The difference between growing a house plant and a vegetable "is that a vegetable requires a lot more fertility," Parsons says. "We advise fertilization with the water-soluble solution during every watering." The need for watering with the nutrient solution varies, but generally two or three times per week is adequate.

Watering: Proper watering is the key to a successful container plant. Each mix, plant size, type and location require different watering techniques and schedules. "The grower should learn to test the growing mix for moisture before water is applied, to avoid over-watering," Parsons says. Under-watering is also a problem. Test the growing mix between intended waterings; if it's dry, water it. Wilting plants can be a sign of too much water, as well as too little.

Larger plants require more water. For example, a large tomato in a hanging basket may need watering twice a day. On the other hand, radishes in a container need the same amount of water throughout the growing period.

Luggage designer to display works

Jon Bon Signore of Jon Hart Designs will be in Midland from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday at Driscoll's Gifts, Inc., 305 Andrews Hwy., to introduce his line of luggage.

Don Snell launched his career as an actor in in a bit part as a gunman in "The Texas Project, 1935." Five years ago he made his debut as a luggage designer, under the name Jon Hart, known by many celebrities as the man who designs their luggage.

Hart entered the market by fashioning a handbag from a canvas-covered file folder. He sold 700 handbags at his first appearance at the Dallas Apparel Mart and later established a one-man shop in Dallas. The Dallas-based designer, who has sold his products to Saks Fifth Avenue, Marshall Field's and Neiman-Marcus, now employs 20 people in his 7,000-square-foot facility. The line features 15 styles of luggage, which includes duffle bags and shaving kits.

'...where gods have walked'

In the winter season, the Inn of the Mountain Gods in Ruidoso, N.M., located on the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation, gives visitors the warmth of a friendly fireplace and a view of snow-covered mountains.

Most of the Inn's 250 rooms face the lake and the mountains, not the parking lot.

Sierra Blanca ski area, also on the Apache reservation, is a short distance and an easy trip from the Inn.

RUIDOSO, N.M. — Ask a West Texan what Heaven looks like and chances are the answer will be "trees and water." Fortunately that dream can be experienced in this world — and it can be found only a few hours away from Midland.

The country is the mountainous land around Ruidoso. Covered with pine trees and other foliage foreign to the Permian Basin, the 460,000-acre reservation is home to the Mescalero Apache Indians.

The tribe also owns and operates the Inn of the Mountain Gods, a resort hotel located on the reservation. Advertising for the Inn invites travelers to "Come. Play where gods have walked."

And play is what they mean. The Inn has an 18-hole golf course, six outdoor and two indoor tennis courts, a lake for fishing or boating, an outdoor swimming pool, a heated whirlpool, a sauna, horseback riding, trap and skeet shooting and access to ski slopes at Sierra Blanca.

The 250-room complex also houses a year 'round convention center, according to Steve Tally, executive assistant manager.

But this time of year the accent is on hunting. From September through December hunters can find their own kind of heaven at the Inn. Tally said the bull elk hunting program, offered in September, is a four-day package which includes room and meals, hunting with an Indian guide — one guide for each hunter — and use of a four-wheel drive vehicle or pickup. Inn employees also process the meat for the hunter. "We had a 99 percent success rate last year," Tally said. "The tribe is proud of its elk herd. There is a conservation department within the tribe — each year before they issue any hunting permits they count the herd" to determine the number of permits issued and to preserve population of the herd.

The bull elk hunt package normally has a two-year waiting list, Tally said.

During December a mule deer hunting package is available at the Inn. For this hunt the participants are provided room and meals, the assistance of an Indian guide and a vehicle — or a horse, he said.

The remainder of the season is the time for open hunts, also regulated by the tribe.

For information on hunting at Inn of the Mountain Gods, write Director of Sports Activities and Package Hunts, P.O. Box 269, Mescalero, N.M. 88340 or call (505) 257-9770.

Other attractions may be more appealing to visitors not interested in hunting. The Inn sets beside a 120-acre lake stocked with rainbow trout from the tribe's fish hatchery. The lake's 2½-mile shoreline is ideal for fishermen, and boats are available for those who prefer fishing from the water.

Tennis aficionados can enjoy their sport all year long, thanks to the eight tennis courts. The courts, equipped for night tennis, are surfaced with laykold. Two indoor courts are housed in an inflated "bubble," which Tally said is like playing at a lower altitude.

Golfers can play on the Inn's 18-hole lakeside course, which includes a No. 10 green located on an island in the lake — a par-four hole, Tally said. Electric golf carts — the Inn has about 90 of them — are mandatory, he said, because most golfers at the Inn are not accustomed to high altitude and can become winded easily, which can slow down play. "We put a foursome on the course every six minutes in the summer," he said.

Indian guides are available to lead horseback riders for one- or two-hour, or half- or full-day excursions, Tally said. The Inn keeps about 30 head of horses.

The Inn strives to provide comfort for its guests and adds "the little things," such as rooms with two large closets; two sinks, one in the bath and one in the dressing area; ice buckets with real glass glasses; complimentary bottles of shampoo and creme rinse; chairs on balconies; and rooms designed to face the mountains or the lake. Few rooms face the parking lot, and even those provide a view of the lake and mountains on the adjacent side of the asphalt.

A real treat for Midlanders — another of these "little comforts" — is the water which is drawn from the lake and processed in the Inn's water treatment plant.

The Inn was opened in 1975, Tally said, and expanded to double its room capacity two years ago. The Apaches opened the facility to "make more money for the tribe and to provide more employment for the Indian people," Tally said. "All profits generated by the tribe are shared by the tribe. Several Indian tribes have opened resorts — we are one of the few that have survived."

Christmas packages offer travel, exotic to traditional

By MORRIS D. ROSENBERG
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

It may be more than a month of shopping days away, but travel packages are beginning to look a lot like Christmas. In fact, it might be difficult in some cases to get reservations even at this date. But there's a wide variety of packages available — and cancellations do occur.

Exciting adventures overseas will again vie this year with seasonal celebrations closer to home. They range from religious observances in Bethlehem and Jerusalem to wildgame viewing on African safaris, from hobnobbing with nobility at British country estates to nostalgic sleigh rides and skiing in New England. Many of the foreign journeys obviously are aimed at an upscale market.

HERE ARE a few of the possibilities:

— "Christmas in the Holyland": The 23-day journey starts Dec. 11 with a flight from New York to Cairo, includes a cruise on the Nile, a visit to Jordan and then — on Dec. 24 — a drive across the King Hussein Bridge into Israel en route to Jerusalem. Christmas Eve and Christmas Day will be spent in Bethlehem, followed by a special dinner in Jerusalem. The tour will include visits to sacred sites, trips to Tiberias and Tel Aviv, and a flight to Athens for a few days in Greece. Cost for land arrangements is $3,480 per person, double occupancy; APEX round-trip air fare from New York is $962 (with the return trip through Athens); domestic Egypt air fare, $154.

— "Christmas in Africa": The 26-day trip begins with an overnight flight on Dec. 7 from New York to Amsterdam, connecting with a flight to Nairobi. The travelers will visit the grasslands of the Masai Mara, with its large lion prides; other Kenyan game parks; and Zimbabwe and Victoria Falls. In South Africa they will travel from Johannesburg to Cape Town on the famed Blue Train and celebrate New Year's Eve at the Mala Mala Game Lodge. Land arrangements cost $3,900 per person, double occupancy. Round-trip excursion air fare from New York is $1,999; domestic Kenya air fare, $50, and Mala Mala air fare, $161.

MORE INFORMATION on both trips: Hemphill-Harris Travel Corp., 16000 Ventura Blvd., Suite 200, Encino, Calif. 91436, (818) 906-8086.

— "Christmas at Brocket Hall": For the third year, Lord and Lady Brocket will welcome 24 holiday guests at their stately home in the English countryside about two hours from London. Besides spending five of the 16 days — Dec. 23-28 — at the 1,000-acre estate, surrounded by works of art and antique furnishings and served by a staff of 10, tour members will attend parties at private clubs and mingle with the British aristocracy.

Highlights include six days at London's Dorchester Hotel, the opera at Royal Opera House Covent Garden, dinner in the home of a London family, a Christmas Eve Carol Ceremony, Boxing Day Hunt Meet, three days at Hambleton Hall and a New Year's Eve black-tie ball at the Hyde Park Hotel in London. Cost of the package is $4,980 per person, double occupancy, exclusive of air fare.

More information: William D. Buckman Traveltime, 17 North State St., Chicago, Ill. 60602, (800) 621-4725.

— "Christmas at Chalcot, New Year's at the Ritz": Chalcot, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Rudd, located between Salisbury and Bath, England, will offer the traditional crackling log fires, carol singers and mulled wine-plus a medieval banquet and typical English Christmas with roast goose-to 10 travelers. From Dec. 23-27, the estate has been reserved exclusively for guests of Lindblad Travel, as part of a 15-day program departing New York on Dec. 19.

Lindblad notes that tour members also have been invited by Lord and Lady Spencer for luncheon and cocktails on Dec. 30 at their private residence in Althorp, Northampton; Lord Spencer is the father of Britain's Diana, princess of Wales. (Titles and exclusivity are valued selling points on various British tours. Country Homes and Castles, a London firm that offers a similar holiday package for 20 Americans, has set up the luncheon both for itself and for Lindblad. But due to a scheduling problem, clients of both operators will have to share the same luncheon date, although perhaps in separate rooms. Country Homes said the Spencers do not attend tour-group lunches, but they might appear for cocktails if in residence.)

THE CHALCOT package begins and ends at the Ritz Hotel in London, where guests will attend the New Year's Eve Dinner Dance and the Ritz Resolution Tea Dance on New Year's Day. Rates are $4,200 per person, double occupancy, exclusive of air fare.

Information: Lindblad Travel Inc., P.O. Box 912, One Sylvan Road North, Westport, Conn. 06881, (800) 243-5657. Fendler-Fuller-Ward Travel (for Country Homes packages), 480 East Paces Ferry Rd. NE, Atlanta, Ga. 30305, (404) 261-1688.

— "A Traditional Christmas and Hogmanay,": From Dec. 23 to Jan. 4, and from London to Edinburgh, Scotland, a maximum of 35 guests will celebrate both the Yuletide and the New Year together.

After meeting in London, the group will drive through country villages to Norwich, with time during the next few days for sightseeing, carols, services in the Norman Cathedral, Christmas luncheon, a Meet of the Foxhounds, and the theater. Later they will visit the medieval City of Chester, drive into the Lake District of northern England, and cross the border to Edinburgh. A Scottish Hogmanay dinner will usher in the New Year. The tour will end with additional days in London and a tour of the Canterbury Cathedral. Cost: $1,492.50 per person, double occupancy, exclusive of air fare.

Information: Heritage Travellers, 41 E. 42nd St. (Suite 2312), New York, N.Y. 10017 (800-358-3330).

— "Sound of Music": Christmas dinner in Salzburg, the Vienna Opera and musical performances in Germany and Hungary are all part of this seventh annual 17-day tour departing New York by air Dec. 20 for Frankfurt.

The itinerary includes Heidelberg, Nuremberg, Rothenburg and Salzburg (scene of a Christmas Eve dinner, a Christmas Day concert and traditional dinner), Budapest and Vienna (where New Year's Eve will be celebrated at the Kaiser Ball). The return flight is from Munich after sightseeing in the Bavarian countryside. Cost from New York, including all accommodations, entertainment, escort, excursions, certain meals, private motor coach and international air fare, is $2,711 per person, double occupancy. "Shopping Tours": For gift-givers who delight in dispensing English woolens, French perfumes, Belgian lace and diamonds, nine-day shopping trips will leave New York for London, Paris and Brussels on Dec. 1 and 8.

EACH TOUR IS limited to 30 persons. It includes deluxe and first-class hotels, daily continental breakfast, three gourmet dinners, city tours, discount coupons, shopping guides and intra-Europe transportation. Price per person, double occupancy, is $899, excluding transatlantic air fare.

Eucalyptus trees at Yardenit, a Christian pilgrimage site in the Holy Land, shade the Jordan river near where Jesus is believed to have been bapitzed by St. John. Christmas travel packages to the Holy Land include trips to sacred sites in Israel, as well as visits to Athens and Cairo.

Information for both tours: The Cortell Group, 3 E. 54th St., New York, N.Y. 10022, (800) 223-6626.

— "Christmas in New England": This nine-day vacation features five nights at the Trapp Family Lodge owned and operated by the "Sound of Music" family — Baroness Maria von Trapp and her children. A blend of Austria and New England, the property overlooks Stowe, Vt.

The tour is limited to 30 guests and begins Dec. 18 at Boston's Logan Airport, with the first three nights being spent at the Deerfield Inn in Deerfield, Conn. It includes shopping in selected villages, visits to local families and churches for lunch, and stops at Mark Twain's home, Old Sturbridge Village and Woodstock, Vt.

The lodge offers sleigh rides, a Christmas tree-cutting expedition, a tree-trimming party and, on the 25th, a family-style Christmas dinner. Guests are advised to bring their ski equipment-a complimentary cross-country lesson is part of the package, plus accommodations, coach transport, full-time guide and all meals (except two lunches). Cost: $1,600 per person, double occupancy, exclusive of air fare.

Information: Country Inn Tours, 2300 Camino Diablo, Walnut Creek, Calif. 94596 (800-227-2432).

— "Christmas Tours": An illustrated booklet from Maupintour describes a number of packages close to home, including: "Williamsburg Christmas Gala," featuring the lighting of the community Christmas Tree in Market Square, a banquet with entertainment and visits to the James River plantation and Carter's Grove, from Dec. 21-28, $898 per person double occupancy; "Pennsylvania Dutch Gala," covering Philadelphia and visits to an Amish homestead, Winterthur, Longwood Gardens and Bethlehem, Pa., Dec. 19-26, $848 per person double occupancy; "New York Christmas Gala," offering a room at the Waldorf Astoria, shopping on Fifth Avenue, the "Nutcracker" performance at Lincoln Center and an excursion to Washington Irving's home in the Hudson Valley, $938 per person, double occupancy; "New Mexico Christmas Gala," exploring Santa Fe, Spanish and Indian culture, Albuquerque and joining in the Luminarias Cavalcade on Christmas Eve, Dec. 20-27, $898 per person double occupancy.

Passengers on these escorted domestic trips are transported by motorcoach, starting from each tour's originating city, and no smoking is permitted aboard the vehicles.

Information: Maupintour, P.O. Box 807, Lawrence, Kan. 66044, (913) 843-1211.

Quail season in Alexandria irresistible event

By JUDITH MILLER
New York Times News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt — The two million Cairenes who invade this city each summer have gone back to the capital. The graceful Corniche, the seafront road lined by Mediterranean-style hotels and restaurants, is navigable once more. The beach umbrellas that obscured almost every other grain of sand only a month ago have vanished.

Best of all, quail season in Alexandria is in full swing. From the end of September until early November, thousands of quail fly over Alexandria from central Europe en route to their winter habitat in the Sudan. The journey across the Mediterranean is long and tiring, so the birds fly in low over the water and land on Alexandria's shores in droves.

Handmade cotton nets laid by bedouin trappers await them. The trapping enfuriates hunters, for whom quail are favored prey. Thousands of quail are caught in nets or shot each day and shipped to homes and restaurants throughout Egypt.

The gastronomical center of the quail season is Uncle Elias's, an outdoor restaurant in the Piazza Syrian, one of the oldest quarters in the Attarine, Alexandria's spice and antiques market. By day, the piazza specializes in the sale of secondhand clothes. At night, for as many years as anyone can remember or is willing to admit, tables and chairs are unloaded from the roofs of the shops and dilapidated buildings that surround the cozy square and Uncle Elias's appears.

A simple cotton tablecloth and a plastic flower adorn each of the 15 tables. The restaurant's only decorations are bird cages containing live quail, with a small red light bulb atop each cage. Next to the entrance of the square, an old man sells strands of freshly picked sweet-scented jasmine for women to wear as necklaces for the evening.

Uncle Elias's opens for business at 9 p.m. But none of the chic Alexandrians, or those who drive three hours from Cairo to eat there, would be seen in the restaurant before 10 p.m. By 10:30 the piazza is hopping. Defense Minister Abdel Halim Abu Ghazala came last season. Mohammed Abdullah, chairman of the Parliament's Foreign Affairs Committee, is a regular. The restaurant is also a favored haunt of Egyptian film stars.

Dinner at Uncle Elias's is not a restful experience. Young boys carrying sticks run among tables chasing away the battalions of cats who descend upon the square, lured by the irresistible aroma of fresh grilled baby quail. Samra Shahata Khalil, who bought the restaurant about five years ago from Uncle Elias, who was Lebanese, began his career in the restaurant business as a cat boy.

"We only serve quail in pairs," Samra said. "That way, the birds do not get cold." Of course, patrons frequently reorder several times in the evening, bringing the number of quail served each night to about 600.

A pair of quail cost two Egyptian pounds, or about $2.40. That is expensive, by Egyptian standards. But the baby quail are so tender that regulars eat even the bones and so desirable that the line of Alexandrians awaiting seats snakes in and around the square.

The secret to making good quail, Samra said, is in the cooking and the seasoning. The quail, which are rich and require no oil, are grilled quickly over a very hot flame. Only a hand fan of turkey feathers waved vigorously by the grill master keeps the tender birds from burning.

The quail are considered such a delicacy that they are served alone. They are preceded, however, by an array of Egyptian salads: thinly sliced cucumbers with lemon wedges; tahina, a sesame-based dip for bread; baba ghanoush, a grilled eggplant and garlic mixture known throughout the Middle East, and tomatoes. The choice of beverages is limited because the restaurant operates in a public square in a country whose Moslem citizens are not supposed to drink alcohol. Only soft drinks or Stella, Egyptian beer, are available.

When the quail season ends next month, Uncle Elias's will revert to selling grilled pigeon, a specialty of Egypt's delta, much to Samra's regret. Pigeons are popular, he said, "but there is nothing quite like quail."

'Snowphone' ski report resumes

From Staff Reports

Snowphone, the recorded ski report of New Mexico ski industry, will be re-activated Thursday, according to Ted Gendron, executive director of Ski New Mexico Inc.

Snowphone, a two-minute recording of ski conditions, new snowfalls, percentage of trails open, road conditions and five-day snowfall forecasts, is the company's promotional program. During its second season of operation last year, the service received 9,885 calls, a more than 41 percent increase over the 6,996 calls the previous year.

Once again Snowphone will be updated on Mondays and Thursdays, and will be available 24-hours a day, seven days a week, through Easter Sunday, April 7, 1985.

To call Snowphone dial direct (505) 984-0606. For free New Mexico literature contact Gendron at Ski New Mexico Inc., P.O. Box 1104, Santa Fe, N.M. 87504.

FREQUENT-FLYER NEWS

Almost 10 million travelers have enrolled in one or more of the frequent-flyer bonus programs begun by the airlines in the last several years. Because of recent changes in many of these plans, the fad promises to become even more popular and rewarding in the coming months. New promotions provide mileage credits for staying at particular hotels, for renting cars from designated firms and even for sailing on selected cruise lines. Some of the airlines no longer require the traveler to patronize just one company to build up frequent-flyer points. Several major airlines now interchangeably credit mileage. The usual miles-traveled threshold for substantial rewards is 50,000 miles or more.

If you travel frequently for business, you may be surprised to find how many miles (and therfore frequent-flyer points) you have accumulated. To find out how to make these points pay off for you. we at LONES TRAVEL SERVICE will be happy to discuss this program with you. Why not stop in and see us at 319 W. Texas, in the Permian Bldg., on the street level, when you want to make the arrangements for your next get-away. We're open mon. through Fri. between 8 and 5 and by appointment on Sat. Winter best time for Stockholm

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — It is cold in Stockholm in winter; winds rushing off the Baltic Sea carry little flakes of snow that soon dust the windshields of the ubiquitous Volvo taxicabs waiting for a fare.

It is dark, too; twilight comes early in the afternoon and deep darkness soon afterward. Commuters drive home with their lights on, just as they did that morning.

Stockholm — like all of Northern Europe — is about ready to put on its long underwear, bulky sweaters and fur coats for the long journey into winter, a winter that burns into the bones with an unrelenting chill.

But despite this cold and the darkness, winter is the best time to visit Stockholm.

The crowds are gone, back to their houses in Tokyo and Cincinnati and Munich. They will huddle there during the winter and the spring, awaiting their lemming-like migration of next summer, when they will rush shoulder-to-shoulder into the palaces and museums and little islets of Stockholm. As a result, too often the treasures of this great travel destination get lost in the crush.

For for those of us brave (and smart) enough to confront the winter, we — along with the million and a half residents — have Stockholm all to ourselves.

Stockholm glows brightly during the gray, drizzle months, its cafes, concert halls, theaters and cabarets in full swing. The great Stockholm Opera bursts forth, the renowned Cullberg Ballet performs in front of appreciative audiences, the Stockholm Philharmonic gains standing ovations in the Konserthuset. During the summer months when most tourists are in Stockholm the Opera House is shuttered, the philharmonic silent, the ballet company on tour to Tokyo and Cincinnati and Munich.

Better still, hotel prices come down roughly at about the same time and with the same speed that temperatures fall, and stores have Christmas and post-Christmas sales when you can find a bargain, even in pricey Stockholm.

There are drawbacks to visiting Stockholm in the winter, of course. Some of the city's most popular summer attractions, like the Drottningholm Palace, are closed in the winter, and it's no fun to take a boat through the thousands of islands of the archipeligo — it's just too cold.

But most of Stockholm's attractions — the Royal Palace, the Music Museum, the National Museum, Skansen's collection of old Swedish buildings, the 1628 warship Wasa — are open in the winter and can be enjoyed without the summer crowds that are often overwhelming. You can see the glittering crowd jewels in the Treasury of the Royal Palace without having to look over the heads of six million tourists, and you can have a ringside seat at the changing of the guard without having to climb a pole to see the exchange of salutes.

In winter you can go to the Kungstradgarden Park and watch apple-cheeked Swedish children ice skating, or rent a pair of skis and cross-country through fresh, untarnished snow.

In winter it's fun to go into one of the 200 coffee bars and have the very strong, very heavily-roasted Swedish coffee and a creamy pastry filled with calories. And it's pleasant to walk down the narrow stairway to the exclusive Cellar Club of the Operakallaren Restaurant in the old Opera House and have a glass of the establishment's own aquavite while nibbling at schnapps-flavored crackers. Later, join the younger crowd at the Opera House's disco, and see some of the most stylish, best-looking youngsters in all of Europe.

Winter is also the best time to have dinner in the covered terrace of the Grand Hotel's Royal restaurant, watch the snow fall as you dine on poached turbot, and look across frigid, mouse-gray waters to the Old City.

That Old City (called Gamla Stan) has survived more than 700 winters so far, and its charming, cobblestoned streets are a beacon for tourists in the winter. Warm lights reach out from restaurants like Diana and Fem Sma Hus to beckon you, and dozens of small boutiques will keep you warm as you browse through their merchandise.

In Gamla Stan's Stortorget square, where King Kristian of Denmark once executed 90 Swedes for disloyalty, a Christmas market is held each December, and just across the way is the Swedish Academy, where Nobel Prize winners are selected. On Dec. 10 they are given their awards before the King of Sweden and the intellects of the world.

New Grapefruit 'Super Pill' Gives Fast Weight Loss

No Dieting - Eat All You Want Pill Does All the Work

BEVERLY HILLS, CA. (Special) An amazing new "super" grapefruit pill has recently been developed and perfected that reportedly "guarantees" that you will easily lose at least 10 pounds in 10 days. Best of all, it allows you to "eat as much as you want of your favorite foods and still lose a pound a day or more starting from the very first day until you achieve the ideal weight and figure you desire."

This "super" grapefruit pill is a dramatically improved version of the world famous grapefruit diet. It is far more effective than the original and eliminates "the mess, fuss, and high cost of eating half a fresh grapefruit at every meal."

"Pill Does All the Work"

According to the manufacturer, "the pill itself does all the work while you quickly lose weight with NO starvation "diet menus" to follow, NO calorie counting, NO exercise, and NO hunger pangs." It is 100% safe. You simply take the pill with a glass of water before each meal and the amazing combination of powerful ingredients are so effective they take over and you start losing weight immediately.

Pill Has ALL Daily Vitamins

The powerful and unique combination of ingredients are what make this a "super-pill". It contains highly potent grapefruit concentrate and a diuretic to help eliminate bloat and puffiness. No need to take any vitamins to maintain your good health and energy. The pill is fortified with ALL (100%) of the U.S. Government daily vitamin requirements.

Contains Japanese 'Glucomannan'

Each pill also contains an amazingly effective amount of "glucomannan", the remarkable natural dietary fiber discovery from Japan (used successfully for over 1500 years) that expands in your stomach and gives you a full and satisfied feeling all day long.

The super-pill is already sweeping the country with glowing reports of easy and fast weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slim, trim, and attractive again.

Now Available to Public

You can order your supply of these highly successful "super" grapefruit pills (now available directly from the manufacturer by mail order only) by sending $12 for a 14-day supply (or $20 for a 30-day supply, or $35 for a 60-day supply) cash, check, or money order to: Citrus Industries, 9903 Santa Monica Bl., Dept. 841, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard, and Amer. DEAR ABBY

Protect mail from dead-letter fate

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Part of my job as a postal worker is to deal with the letters and parcels that are undeliverable. With the holiday season approaching, I'd like to pass on some tips so that your readers can avoid some of the more common problems:

— Remember to affix postage. This is the most obvious and yet the most frequently overlooked item. Use sufficient postage, and don't try to reuse canceled postage stamps.

— Seal letters and parcels securely. Use wide tape for parcels, not string.

— Pay attention to addressing. Most common errors: no address, address unreadable, wrong or absent town, state or ZIP code. Many people absentmindedly write their own ZIP code on the address. Your post office has national ZIP code directories, so if you do not know a ZIP code, ask. It speeds up delivery.

— Do not write any other numbers — such as your phone number or Social Security number — under the address. With only a fraction of a second to look at each ZIP, a clerk can easily mistake these as the ZIP, and your letter ends up in Timbuktu.

It helps to write the ZIP near the state, on the lower right, NOT lower left, corner as many people write it. Use complete addresses, not abbreviations (except state). WRITE CLEARLY. Don't write "City" or "Local" in place of an address; it's quite likely that your mail travels 50 miles or more to a processing center where the people there might not know the city you mean. Be sure to spell out the names of foreign countries in English, including Canada and Mexico.

— Always use your return address. Unmailable items with no return addresses end up in the dead-letter office. (Don't use "Guess Who?" or similar substitutes.)

— Never tape money to a letter in place of stamps.

— The U.S. Postal Service does not handle returns for private companies such as UPS. To return packages delivered by these firms, use postage.

— Breakable items can and will break without protection. Coins are frequent victims of our processing machines, as are small hardware pieces, candy hearts, lollipops and campaign buttons. If you must mail these, cushion them with tissue, or use a box.

— Monitor your children's mail. It breaks my heart to see a carefully decorated letter addressed simply to "Grandma." (One exception: "Santa" letters are handled by the postmaster.)

— Mail early in the day. Every business in town mails at 5:00 p.m., and we can't always process it all in time for the main dispatch. Our busiest days are the days after a holiday, Mondays and Fridays. Find out about our special services, such as certified, registered or express mail. We could save you time and money.

— If you receive poor service, complain! Your local post office has official complaint forms. They're yours for the asking. It will make your local office sit up and take notice.

— If you think we deserve a compliment, let us know. During the holiday season, we can use a kind word.

Thanks, Abby! — A POSTAL CLERK

Arthritis often misunderstood

ATLANTA (AP) — More than 36 million Americans, about 1 in every 7 people, have some form of arthritis.

Yet, say the Arthritis Foundation, most people have incorrect or only hazy knowledge of what arthritis is, what treatments are available, and how they can cope with their disease.

The facts, it says, are that arthritis is 100 different diseases, that it strikes people of all ages, and that there is usually no cure.

However, it adds, with proper and prompt treatment, most forms of arthritis can be controlled and the disabling and crippling effects associated with these diseases can be prevented.

Generations torn by divorce

By ERMA BOMBECK

I have a choice.

I can either do a funny column today on the couple in Dallas who ended a six-month divorce battle by granting visitation rights to the wife to more than $4,000 worth of toy trains ...

Or I can do a report on the deluge of mail I got from grandmothers across the country on a column I did on the pain of divorce where they are left with "nothing but memories and longing" for their grandchildren.

Maybe the stories belong together.

Under the terms of the settlement in Dallas, the woman will get the right to visit the trains her husband received twice a year as long as she gives 24 hours' notice by telephone and the time is convenient.

A grandmother in Iowa wrote, "I am enduring the divorce of my twin sons. One daughter-in-law moved to Florida and I get to see my grandchildren two hours at Christmas and take them to lunch in the summer for a total of an hour and a half."

The train enthusiast said the first train set was a Christmas gift to her son, who is now 22. However, their collection got more sophisticated as the years went on and they even owned a Z gauge that was so small you could lay it out in a briefcase. She would miss it.

A grandmother from Ohio wrote, "As a child growing up, I never had the warmth and comfort of grandparents. I always said that when the time for grandchildren came along, I would always be there if they needed me. My grandson is three years old. I had him for the first time on Grandparents Day. His parents are divorced."

The wife from Dallas was awarded custody of a tin-plated 1935 Comet aqua-and-silver engine, three passenger cars, a three-piece green bridge, a standard gauge tunnel, two streetlights, toy baggage men and baggage worth $500 to $1,000.

A grandmother from Georgia wrote, "We were given custody of our grandson for four years after the mother left and our son tried to 'find himself.' The new wife moved 2,000 miles away where our grandson could 'break the child's dependency on us.'"

The laws are very explicit about the custody and visitation rights of inanimate things like trains. When it comes to human beings, we're not so clear-cut. That's why groups of grandparents throughout the country are addressing the problem through Grandparents' Rights groups.

A letter from a grandchild sums this piece up pretty well. "After 35 years, when I found my grandparents, only my grandmother was alive. She welcomed me with love and kisses. Who else but a grandmother would welcome me on sight ... no questions asked? Unfortunately, a few months later she passed on, but I choose to think God meant for me to know her, if only for a short time. For it was she who bathed me, fed me and loved me when everyone else had other things to do."

Erma Bombeck is a columnist for News America Syndicate.

Companies go back to school

NEW YORK (AP) — Many companies are sending their employees to school so they can keep up with the rapid change of technologies.

Warren Baise of the Institute of Advanced Technology says, "Subjects that were not taught in the past, such as information systems and productivity, have become essential for success, while traditional subjects, such as strategic planning and the methods of increasing market share, need a new look."

'Ideal' voice described as warm, joyful, positive

NEW YORK (AP) — Experts agree that the ideal voice should project warmth, joy, concern, color and authority that's lovingly assertive but not aggressive, according to Feeling Great magazine.

The human voice is observed as a mirror of how we feel and who we are, says Lillian Glass, a speech pathologist. "People who misuse their voices are judged to be less intelligent, less sexually attractive, less frendly, and less capable of doing a good job," she says.

She says anyone can improve their voice with exercise, self-discipline, and a positive attitude.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Rabies transmitted several ways

Dear Dr. Solomon: One of the men I work with says his son got rabies even though he was never bitten by an animal. I've never heard of this but I realize that I don't know everything. Is it possible for someone to get rabies without being bitten? — Calvin, San Francisco

Dear Calvin: Although the rabies virus cannot penetrate unbroken skin, a bite is not the only method of transmission. For example, a person can become infected if the virus comes into contact with an open wound, such as a cut or a scratch. The virus can also be inhaled, and infection has been reported among people who entered caves that contained large numbers of bats infected with the rabies virus.

Finally, laboratory workers have also contracted rabies, apparently by inhaling the virus.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Every time I go to my doctor he tells me to cut back on the amount of salt I use because my blood pressure is a little too high. Then he usually tells me to read the labels on the foods I buy so that I can void having the sodium. I know from my high school chemistry classes that salt is really sodium chloride. My question is: What about the chloride? Is the sodium the only thing to watch out for, and is the chloride just an innocent bystander? — Bill, Chicago

Dear Bill: The chloride component of salt may not be as innocent in the development of hypertension as has been assumed; experiments with rats suggest that dietary chloride may also be a factor. Although the findings stemming from animal studies may not be applicable to humans, they do provide some food (preferably salt-free) for thought.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I must differ with you on your comments regarding the treatment of a lazy eye which appeared in your column.

It is true that the best results for regaining depth perception are obtained in the youngest treated children, but the treatment of the decreased vision from amblyopia can be done much later than 5. It's better to do it before 10 but all of us have good results with patching children well into their teens.

Dr. John Flynn at the University of Miami and others have good data to show that this certainly can be true. To give up trying to bring a child's vision to somewhere in the normal range when they are past the age of 5 really isn't fair to the child.

I do enjoy reading your column but felt I had to comment on this problem. — Robert S.L. Kinder, M.D., Clinical Professor of Opthalmology, Brown University, Rhode Island Hospital, Providence, R.I.

Dear Dr. Kinder: Thank you for your helpful letter; I agree with you completely.

For Joanne, Montgomery, Ala.: The dermatitis (inflammation of the skin) you have experienced since buying new shoes may indeed be due to the shoes. Various studies have suggested that rubber soles or even the use of rubber cement may lead to the condition.

The dermatitis may clear if you simply start wearing other types of shoes for a while.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Proper insulation saves energy costs

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — While many consumers expect energy prices to rise in the next five years, more than 50 percent have less than an adequate amount of insulation in the attic.

A National Family opinion poll of 80,000 households, commissioned by Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., revealed that 9 percent of American homes have no insulation in the attic, and 43 percent have less than 6 inches, the minimum typically recommended.

Department of Energy estimates show homeowners can save up to 15 percent of their heating bills by adding insulation to an uninsulated attic.

DENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Philip O. Warlick D.D.S.

FRACTURED TOOTH EMERGENCY

QUESTION: Is there anything that can be done if you have an accident that results in a broken tooth?

ANSWER: This is one of the most common dental accidents, especially with active youngsters. Fortunately, there are a lot of avenues a dentist can take to repair, save, and restore the appearance of a broken tooth. If the injury is serious enough to expose the tooth pulp, it must be treated immediately since the potential for infection is high. Root canal therapy will solve this problem followed by the use of a crown or cap to restore use and appearance. If the chip is a minor one, there are tooth-colored materials that can be bonded directly to the tooth. It can be shaped back to its original appearance simply and painlessly in one visit.

Benjamin Franklin first American gourmet to import bottled water

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. (AP) — Bottled water was first imported to America by Benjamin Franklin, who was a gourmet as well as being a patriot, inventor, philosopher and diplomat.

During his term as ambassador to France from 1776 to 1784, Franklin was introduced to bottled spring water.

He was so impressed that he arranged to have a supply shipped to him after his return to Philadelphia in 1785.

One of America's earliest bottled waters was available as far back as 1871 from what has become known as the Mountain Valley spring and been bottled continuously in Hot Springs ever since.

Eye surgery has 'hard sell'

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — You may have noticed that eye surgery is being marketed much like hamburgers, television sets or nail care these days, with high-pressure advertisements which promise that in 15 minutes or so you can get your eyes done and throw away your glasses forever.

Dr. Michael Turan, an ophthalmologist and surgeon here, isn't enamored of those hard sells. But he thinks they're going to get louder and stronger.

"I've even been approached by people who are interested in setting up little surgical units — almost like franchises — around the country," Dr. Turan says.

The reason is radial keratotomy, a refractive surgery procedure that can be performed on an outpatient basis and has yielded startlingly impressive results in the short time it's been used in the United States.

It's designed to provide "normal" vision for near-sighted people who have had to wear glasses or contact lenses to attain that. A very fine, sharpened hand knife (lasers will be used soon) makes eight, evenly-spaced cuts into the periphery of the cornea, forming a pattern much like the spokes on a wheel or the slices of a pizza pie, and correcting the myopia.

"The procedure was first done in Japan in the late 1940s and early 1950s," Turan says, "but it was a failure because the doctor who did it made incisions not only on the outside of the cornea but on the inside, cells that keep fluid out of the cornea were damaged, and over a number of years the cornea became cloudy.

"The Russians picked up on it in 1974. The story is a woman was hit in the eye while wearing glasses, they shattered and the fragments cut one of her corneas and corrected her vision. The Russians then did a lot of animal studies and began working successfully on humans. All the formulas are based on their work, although they've been altered some since they came to this country."

Radial keratotomy has been employed in the U.S. for only about the last five years, Turan says, and done extensively only about the last year or two.

But the boom is on. It's estimated 60 percent of America's ophthalmologists will be performing the surgery in another five years or less.

Numbers will soar, Turan thinks, when results of a "very, very favorable" study of radial keratotomy are presented to the American Academy of Ophthalmologists later this month.

Up to now, the procedure has carried considerable controversy with it.

"While the risks and complications are minimal," Turan says, "there are some. No surgery is something you should go into lightly. No guarantees can or should be made. Surgeons are wrong when they blatantly promise patients they can throw away their glasses or contacts. For the most part, that is precisely what will happen. There will be people who will still need to wear glasses — to read, for instance.

"There will be also those who criticize this procedure by calling it 'cosmetic' surgery. I don't really see that as a major concern. Medicine deals with disease but it can do more. What was controversy in the past is now standard of care.

Window painting has become a high school ritual for students expressing friendship, love or revenge. "Cutie" and "so fine" are considered to be messages of flattery.

Their parents stuffed telephone booths and Volkswagens; their grandparents swallowed goldfish. Each generation of young people establishes its own unique frivilous fun — some imaginative and totally useless mischief. In Midland, high school students like to write on each other's automobile windows in shoe polish, preferably white.

These kids aren't stupid, either — many were willing, even eager, to talk about this latest fad, but were not willing to use their names. Not only is the practice of shoe-polishing car windows illegal, but, as one Midland High School student said, "My parents will kill me if they find out."

CARS CAN BE seen all year sporting sayings — some witty, some no-so-witty. But according to many students, the best times to shoe-polish car windows are during football season and at the end of the school year near graduation.

The practice of shoe-polishing car windows is wide-spread among Midland's high school population. Students agree painting car bodies with polish can cause permanent damage. Several students were recently asked if they had ever participated in the fad. One teen, who asked to not be identified, said, "Life is not life without a little polish. Of course I have. Maybe you should ask 'Who hasn't?' "

THEY USE THIS unique method of communication for personal and sometimes emotional expressions. Some of their reasons are:

— "Oh, usually just for fun, sometimes for revenge and always for something to do other than sit at home and chew on my fingernails or other exciting things like that. You also have the overwhelming thrill of destroying a nice clean car with the risk of getting caught by a not-so-nice car owner/cleaner."

— "Because I wanted to and it's a lot of fun!"

— "Because they are my friends or enemies, or I want to bother someone I like!"

— "To express how you feel about someone or something."

— "Because it's entertaining."

— "Because I was in love."

— "Revenge. They did it to me."

— "To celebrate victories."

But perhaps one anonymous student summed it up best: "Because it's so much fun to cruise down the road with your lights off, to park about four houses down, to try to keep the dogs from barking — it's adventure."

Shoe-polished car windows can be a status symbol.

Ginger and her friend Jill shoe-polish cars together. Ginger said, "It's like a secret society. You drive around with shoe polish on your car and other people are driving around with shoe polish. It's like a little group. It lets people know how you really feel about them."

GINGER AND JILL said many people who are "into" the practice keep shoe polish in their cars at all times. And because those who shoe-polish others' cars are often those whose own cars are shoe-polished, most "polishers" keep a stash of glass cleaner in their cars to wash off the shoe polish.

Students express mixed emotions about being on the receiving end of the fad. "Sometimes I get angry if they write bad things," said one teen.

"I feel flattered," said another. "It means people know you exist."

Some shoe-polishers said the best times for window writing without getting caught is "late at night, in the middle of the day or in the middle of some function."

OTHERS SAID the best time is "when the person won't catch you."

"It's best not to do the front window," Ginger said, "because then they might have a wreck."

Students said most shoe-polishers are girls, although boys sometimes engage in the practice "when they are talked into it by their girl friends. Or for revenge."

Although many shoe-polish messages are written in friendship, revenge is sometimes the reason. Ginger said, "Black shoe polish is hard to get off. You use black if you want to be really mean."

"It's not good to have your mother's car done," Jill said, "especially if it's a nice car. You don't do your friends' mothers' cars unless you want to get them in trouble."

"IF YOU WANT to be really mean, you mark 'For Sale' " on the victim's car windows, Ginger added.

The fad has been popular for several years. The girls said the practice is assured continuation because "as each new year's sophomores come in they pick it up."

Flattering messages include "so fine," and "cutie," private jokes and school spirit slogans, they said. The worst messages are "something degrading."

The practice has a strict code of ethics. "You usually do it with somebody. You don't do it by yourself unless you are out for revenge," Ginger said. "You usually don't get caught. And if you do, everybody is on their own!"

Kiwi brand is the best polish to use, she said.

"DO YOU KNOW how many cars you can do with an 89-cent bottle of shoe polish?" said one student. "I had one bottle that lasted for three months!"

"Most parents are pretty easy going about it, if nothing nasty was written," Jill said. "My parents don't mind as long as I clean it off."

Sometimes shoe-polishing a friend's car is not enough, and toilet-papering the car owner's house can be part of the ritual. One Lee High School student whose family's cars and dining room windows were shoe-polished and whose trees were toilet-papered, said, "They wrote 'Where were you?' and 'We missed you.' I think that's sweet!"

Reading between lines while driving is illegal

Students who "shoe polish" messages on car windows say the fad is fun, challenging and a means to communicate with friends. To have one's windows painted is a symbol of status.

But many students are not aware the practice is also illegal.

According to the law, Section 134B of the Uniformed Act, Texas Motor Vehicle Laws, "No person shall drive a motor vehicle with any sign, poster or other non-transparent material upon the front windshield, side wings or side or rear windows of such vehicle which materially obstructs, obscures or impairs the driver's clear view of the highway or any intersecting highways," said Sgt. Bill Morgan of the Midland Police Department.

If police officers catch "polishers" in the act of marking car windows they face possible tickets, court sessions and fines of $1-$200, he said. "The judge sets the fine."

A vehicle owner who discovers someone in the act of marking his car windows may file criminal mischief charges against the marker.

Sgt. Morgan said people who write the messages are difficult to catch because "the person driving the car is not the one who did the marking."

The law was not intended to spoil students' harmless fun, he said. It was legislated to prevent traffic accidents. "If the car is involved in an accident and we can contend the writing contributed to obscured vision, we'll file on them.

"There's usually not much damage done" Morgan said about the shoe-polish writing. If an officer sees someone driving a vehicle with shoe-polished windows, he can stop the car and have the driver wash the windows, or issue a ticket. "If he thinks it's a hazard he can pull them over and advise them to clean it off. We usually give a warning first."

Although shoe polish on glass is usually easy to wash off, shoe polish used on the painted body of a car sometimes causes damage. Morgan said the polish, left on the painted area of the car, can be absorbed into the paint and can cause a permanent stain. If the damage is over $750, "it can go up to a felony. Generally a paint job doesn't run over $750."

Fashions by designer Margaretha Ley such as those shown above will be featured at the "Escada for Christmas" style show Dec. 3

Benefit style show planned

"Escada for Christmas," a style show spotlighting designer Margaretha Ley's fashions, will be presented at 11 a.m. Dec. 3 in the atrium of ClayDesta National Bank.

Sponsored by Junior Woman's Association of Midland through the courtesy of Julian Gold Inc., the show will feature the Ley's Resort/Spring 1985 collection, shown by professional models from Midland and San Antonio.

The luncheon will be catered by Karen Hilliard, owner of Party Potpourri in Odessa. Ms. Hilliard studied in Paris at LaVarenne and L'Acadamie de Cuisine. She is a certified member of the International Association of Cooking Schools and teaches classes at her own cooking school in Odessa.

Proceeds from the show will benefit Midland Memorial Hospital Pediatric Equipment Fund and Big Brothers/Big Sisters. Since 1977, the Junior Woman's Association has raised more than $34,000 for the Pediatric Equipment Fund, for such items as a Radiant Warmer, an electronic respiration monitor, an infant care system, a bronchoscope and a Siemens Ventilator.

Invitations are $40 per person or $300 for a table for eight. Reservations should be made before Nov. 19 by calling Janet Walton at 699-2000, or Donna Kubicki at 687-4545.

Fluid leak colors can be clues

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Noticing the color of fluid leaks near your car can often be clues to the car's maintenance needs, according to an official of a maker of auto parts.

Dave Bowman of Fram says black fluid often indicates an oil leak while pink or brown might be a transmission leak. He says a greenish-yellow fluid means radiator coolant may be leaking while any fluid around the tires can mean leaks from brakes or shock absorbers.

Sugar Plum Fairy to be presented

"An Afternoon with the Sugar Plum Fairy," a presentation for children, will be staged from 2-5 p.m. Nov. 18 at the Paragon Building, 600 N. Marienfeld, on the corner of Big Spring and Louisiana Streets.

Sponsored by the Ballet Midland Guild, the program will feature excerpts from the Christmas classic, "The Nutcracker," performed by Ballet Midland, under the direction of artistic director Anthony Ferro.

Christmas treasures and photographs with characters from "The Nutcracker" can be purchased, and complimentary refreshments will be served. The event is open to all children accompanied by an adult.

"An Afternoon with the Sugar Plum Fairy" is underwritten by Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Beal, Mr. and Mrs. Bob Duke, Sam L. Majors Jewelers and Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Wagner Jr.

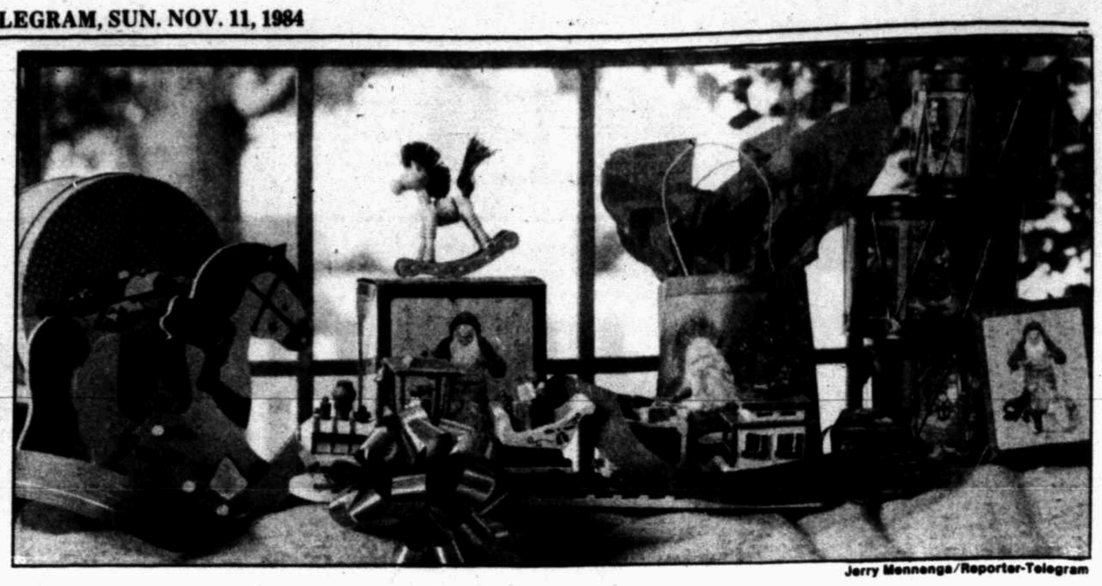

Friends of the Ballet are Capital Leasing, Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Dellwood Mall, MoMo Laughlin Miller, ASID, Texas Commerce Bank-Midland, the Gallery, The Shop and Troy's House of Meats.

All proceeds will benefit productions and functions of Ballet Midland.

Eye paints, mascara, lipstick and powder puffs can be traced to the Middle East. Both Mesopotamians and Egyptians colored their lips and cheeks with red ochre inserted in a reed. The Sumerians used a face powder made of yellow ochre and called "Golden Bloom."

Shown are some of the items to be available at the Sorority Sampler, scheduled for Thursday.

Second Sorority Sampler scheduled

From Staff Reports

The second annual Sorority Sampler Christmas Bazaar will be presented from 9:30 a.m.-4 p.m. Thursday at American Legion Hall on Airpark, behind ClayDesta. The event is open to the public and $1 donations will benefit charitable organizations.

Last year's Sampler grossed more than $9,000, according to Ellen Robinson, general chairman of the event. Door donations help support the Panhellenic Scholarship Fund. Last year, scholarships were awarded to a Midland High student and a Lee High student.

Individual sororities will use proceeds of sales at their booths for their philanthropic projects.

Sixteen sororities and their items for sale include:

— Alpha Chi Omega: Handmade Christmas clothes for children, lollipop trees, lollipops and bean soup mix with samples

— Alpha Delta Pi: Homemade pies, personalized visors and critter cages

— Alpha Phi: Cheese balls

— Alpha Xi Delta: Books, doll bassinets

— Chi Omega: Pecans, doll raffle, cookbooks featuring allergy-free recipes

— Delta Delta Delta: Gift wraps, Christmas tote bags, tins, planters, boxes, ornaments

— Delta Gamma: Craft co-op, Long Horn tree ornaments; strawberry bread and preserves

— Delta Zeta: Christmas raffle, baby raffle, assorted Christmas and baby items

— Gamma Phi Beta: "Midland" wrapping paper and yarn

— Kappa Alpha Theta: Lasagna and consignments

— Kappa Delta: Christmas boutique, stuffed muslin geese and ducks

— Kappa Kappa Gamma: Flower bulbs

— Phi Mu: Jellies, gingerbread houses, gingerbread cookie mixes, stuffed gingerbread men, Christmas aroma boil, scented garment protectors, potpourris

— Pi Beta Phi: Arrowcraft handwoven items and crafts, baked goods, "recipe cards" cookbook

— Sigma Kappa: Santa letters, wooden children's hangers, small ceramics

— Zeta Tau Alpha: painted wicker baskets, visits from Santa, caramel corn, potpourris, wooden ornaments, monogrammed hanging travel bags.

Local consignment artists will also participate in the bazaar. A percentage of their profits will be used to benefit their host sorority's charity.

Slides of Russia to be shown

Carl and Dollie Benson will present the program for the 7:30 p.m. Wednesday meeting of the World Affairs Study Group of American Association of University Women. The group will meet at RepublicBank First National Midland.

The program will feature slides and commentary on a recent trip the Bensons took to Russia. They visited Moscow and Kiev; cruised down the Dnieper River to the Black Sea; traveled on the Danube River to Bulgaria. Other points of interest they visited were Guigu, Romania and Bucharest.

Ms. Benson taught school in Midland for 15 years. Benson, a Midlander for 31 years, is a retired petroleum engineer. A graduate of Ohio state University, he has worked in Ohio, Michigan, Louisiana and Texas, and served as an officer in the European Theater of Operations during World War II.

Hosting the social hour will be Augusta White, Linda Stephens and Jackie Hammond.

Taking dance classes break teacher's routine

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — Bill Beal dressed like the other students in his break-dancing class, with a sheared T-shirt and high-top sneakers, but he still stood out.

That's what happens when a 54-year-old high school teacher enrolls in a private dance studio class devoted to knee spins, swipes, the "helicopter" and the "centipede."

The Spanish teacher encountered break dancing for the first time last fall when students asked if they could practice during lunch hour as he prepared a lesson in his classroom at Reedley High School southeast of Fresno.

"I saw them and I thought, 'Hey, this is better than having lunch with the teachers sitting around complaining about the school,'" he said.

Beal took the young dancers under his wing, supervised the formation of The Dynamic Krew and arranged shows for them at school and community functions.

"They were willing to teach me, but they had no experience," said Beal, who prefers ballroom and tap dancing. "I thought if I took a class, an adult would be teaching the class. At least, that's what I assumed."

But dance studio owner Cynthia Merrill of Fresno found "I had to get high school kids. Adults can't do it or haven't been doing it long enough to teach it."

Aside from a woman in her 20s who received the class as a birthday present, Beal was the only adult in attendance. The next oldest student was a 14-year-old girl.

Beal expected to learn strenuous moves based on what he saw in his classroom and thought he could perform them because he was acrobatic in his youth.

"Until I was 12, they didn't know which end I was going to walk on," he said. "I could walk up and down steps on my hands."

But breaking was more work than Beal had anticipated.

Famed buildings endangered

Associated Press

The Statue of Liberty, the Parthenon and other artistic treasures are becoming an endangered species that engineers and scientists are trying to preserve and restore.

Wind, salt air, air pollution and time are destroying some of the world's architectural triumphs, according to an article in the November issue of Popular Mechanics, and the cure will be expensive.

In New York harbor, restoration of the Statue of Liberty — she will be 100 years old in 1986 — will cost an estimated $30 million, most of which is being raised through small donations from all over the United States and from larger corporate grants.

The work on Miss Liberty got underway by encasing her in scaffolding that rose from her pedestal up her 151-foot 1-inch height to the tip of her flame.

Her flame has been removed and will be replaced. Blasts of liquid nitrogen have been applied to her skin. These blasts, hundreds of degrees below freezing, freeze and separate a layer of gunk that has formed on the statue's skin, so it can be stripped away like old wallpaper.

Inside, the almost 2,000 iron bars that form the latticework armature supporting her outer skin have rusted and corroded. Rivets connecting it to the skin it supports have fallen out. The bars must be replaced.

The statue also will get a new hydraulic glass elevator to take tourists from the pedestal up to the 171 steps they must climb to reach the crown. A TV-equipped viewing station for the handicapped also is planned and workmen are completing two tourist mezzanines.

Among other masterworks in need of help, there's the Leaning Tower of Pisa — in 1982 the Italian government appropriated $10.5 million to halt the lean before it went too far.

Venice, only 27 inches above sea level, is 8 inches closer to sinking now than at the turn of the century. Inflatable rubberized sausage-shaped storm gates have been proposed to control water surges into the city's lagoon.

At the Acropolis in Athens, tour guides say, "Look well, so you can tell your grandchildren what it was like. When they get here, it may have collapsed."

The problem is air pollution, which is dissolving the ancient buildings in a chemical bath. Vibration from traffic also is a problem.

The Taj Mahal also suffers from air pollution, while Egypt's Sphinx is being treated for salt decay.

Many shows from golden age of television now lost

Associated Press

Owning a VCR won't help television fans watch such vintage video gems as "Twelve Angry Men" or "Visit To A Small Planet" — they are among the thousands of golden oldies that have vanished.

Johnny Carsons's first year as host of the "Tonight" show has disappeared, according to an article in Connoisseur's November issue, and even most of "The Goldbergs" is gone.

Broadcast waves themselves do not die, of course, and even now the Goldbergs are speeding through outer space.

But back on earth, only one season of "The Goldbergs" has been preserved.

The disappearance of so much early television stems from the low regard in which TV was held in its early days when giants such as Edward R. Murrow existed side by side with dancing cigarettes.

Before the late 1960s, old programs were taped over, burned or shoved into closets.

When NBC needed storage space, Steve Allen's three years as host of "Tonight" were dumped into a furnace.

ARRANGING ART

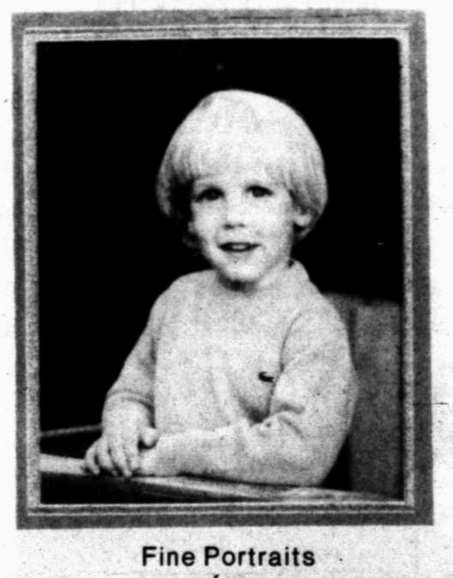

Arranging pictures on a wall can be an art itself. There is no set rule on whether to center a painting on a wall or above a sofa. Rather, it is a matter of compostion. The decision should be made considering the relationship of the room's general balance to the proportions of the room and the wall. if there are four or more prints, drawings or photographs, it usually works best to arrange then in block or in a straight line. it requires a number of different-sized pictures to make a "composition" worthwhile. Unless you have a lot of experience, the best guideline is usually to arrange the pictures within an imaginary rectangle, and, thus, create a block composition.

Lifestyle policies

The following are policies for publication of stories and announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the story is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only.

The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Portraits of the future bride and bridegroom in one photograph may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Sign language aids firefighters

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Without his special training, Phoenix firefighter Bob Walp probably wouldn't have corrected a colleague who asked him for his help in assisting an elderly "deaf and dumb" man.

"I said, 'You mean he's deaf, right?' " Walp said.

Walp said a Fire Department-sponsored course in sign language had opened another world to him. Within a two-week period, he was called twice to assist paramedics in communicating with a deaf person.

The first time was when firefighters were called to the aid of the 64-year-old "deaf and dumb" man.

The man was indeed deaf, but he was anything but dumb, Walp said.

"He had been beaten up and he was pretty excited when I got there," Walp said. "But I used sign language to talk to him and he really calmed down."

It was during a Deaf Awareness Festival 18 months ago that Fire Department officials realized it was time they considered the special problems of the hearing impaired, Sally Williams, fire inspector, said.

With her help, a 16-hour course in sign language was set up at the Fire Department's academy in June, and Ms. Williams and three other firefighters were its first graduates.

"We were taught some basic phrases we'd need on the job, such as, 'What medications do you take,' 'What illnesses have you had,' or 'Where do you live,' " Williams said.

Teen-ager advises parents, peers

NEW YORK (AP) — When teenagers in the New England area have problems, they don't have to write to Dear Abby — they can write to Dear Bobby, an advice columnist their own age.

For the past three years, Mark Godes, now 14, has been writing the "Bobby Simpson" column in the Boston Herald, and now some of his favorite letters and answers have been collected in a book, "Dear Bobby Simpson."

"If the book sells well, I'd love for the column to be syndicated," the self-possessed young author admitted in an interview in New York, first stop on a nationwide tour in connection with the publication of the book.

He receives about 25 letters a week, from which he selects up to four to answer in his weekly column, picking the problems that he feels affect the greatest number of people.

"Peer pressure, when kids are pushed by their friends into doing things that may get them in trouble, is the No. 1 problem," he says. "The reason is that all subsidiary problems — drugs, alcohol, sex — basically stem from that. I tell them that even though the decision (to resist peer pressure) may not be a popular one right now, in the long run it will pay off.

"Drug and sex things are happening at a very young age; drugs, because they are very accessible, even in elementary school. I try to tell teen-agers that even though they're available and they may be pressured, don't even experiment with them — you might get hooked."

Mark favors the teaching about the effects of drugs in school, insisting the drug use rate among teenagers would drop if they learned "how bad drugs are."

Hydrogen peroxide helps shellfish

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The nation's shrinking supply of abalone, oysters, clams, scallops and other vle shellfish is getting a boost from a chemical well-known to bleached blondes: hydrogen peroxide.

Biochemical detective work by marine scientist Daniel E. Morse at the University of California-Santa Barbara has found that abalone spawn in large numbers as soon as one of them releases a natural substance called prostaglandin. What triggers the animal to make prostaglandin is a slight increase in the peroxide levels in the sea around them.

In a report to science writers at a meeting sponsored by the Council for the Advancement of Science Writing, Morse said the addition of small amounts of peroxide to the water set off the release of sperm and eggs in many experiments. Several small companies in Southern California and abroad now are using the method for commercial shellfish farming. His studies also may provide clues to saving clams and fin fish in the East, including the shrinking rockfish supply in the Chesapeake Bay.

"What we have here is a safe, cheap and highly reliable way to control a critical step in the reproduction of these valuable molluscs," Morse noted.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

A group of Midland women who have been longtime friends have established a pleasant custom over the past several years. They attend each of the Midland Community Theatre's Sunday matinees and then adjourn to a different home each time for dinner. Naturally, the dinner talk centers around the play they have just seen.

Gertrude Alstrin was hostess to the group in her home last Sunday following the current production of the musical comedy, "Tomran." Others present were Helen Giffert, Mable Henderson, Mabel Shaw, Inez Hazlip, Kitty Ashby, Marion Culbertson, Ada Anderson, Marge Wood, Janelle Rhodes and Roma Ayres. Mrs. Hazlip's daughter, June (Mrs. Mark) McMahon of Libby, Mont., was a guest. She was visiting here en route home from a Caribbean cruise.

Mrs. Wood entertained the theatre goers, plus additional friends, with an election party in her home Tuesday evening. A buffet supper was served from a table decorated with a straw hat, holding the yellow roses of Texas and an Olympic flag the hostess obtained while attending last summer's Olympic Games, with a picture of "Ronnie" as the focal point.

BELATED BIRTHDAY WISHES to Harriet Motter, who celebrated "The Big One" recently. Her husband, Gene, and daughter, Mary (Mrs. Frank) Sims of Shawnee, Okla., arranged a clever surprise party to mark the milestone event at the Motter home and managed to pull it off without Harriet being any the wiser.

Mary and her nine-month-old son, William, came in for a visit the week before the party. Arrangements were made for the other Motter children, Liz of Austin and Jay, a student at TCU, and son-in-law Frank to fly in the day of the event. The home of longtime family friends, Hallie and Dale McCarter, served as their hiding place until party time.

The decor and birthday cake featured a golfing theme, as Harriet has taken up the sport in recent years.

Among others sharing in the fun occasion were Ginger and Jimmy Floyd, Neta (Mrs. W.S.) Dill, Marlene and Jack Byrd and Betty and Bob Hawk of Odessa.

LIZ AND FLYNT CHANCELLOR recently enjoyed a four-day trip to Lake Tahoe, celebrating both their seventh wedding anniversary and Liz' birthday while there.

They got a preview of the winter, with snow preceding their arrival and temperatures remaining in the mid-20s during their visit. They stayed at the charming old Harvey House, which has been given a new look, and particularly enjoyed a show by pop singer Melissa Manchester.

THE GHOST TOWN of Terlingua, Texas, was once more the setting for that indescribable event, the World Championship Chili Cookoff, which gets bigger and bigger each year. At last count, over 6,000 people had poured over the hill, and more were expected. Held traditionally the first weekend of November, it takes place on the desert floor in south Brewster County near Big Bend National Park.

More than 50 teams had the honor of competing for the world crown in the granddaddy of all chili cookoffs. They came from all over the country, some as far away as Virginia and California. The event began on Friday as a cold front blew in, but Saturday turned out to be a gorgeous day, with temperatures in the 80s.

Our reporter on the scene, who prefers to remain anonymous, spotted a number of Midlanders in the throng, including Joe Pope, Gene McQueen, Jonell and Jack Barton and Ken Gosnell.

TWO YOUNG MIDLAND women, Becky Lehker and Karen Barnett, had an exciting three-week trip to Europe earlier this fall.

Traveling with a tour group for the first two weeks, they visited London, Paris, Switzerland and Italy, including Venice, Florence and Rome.

Among the celebrities they encountered along the way were pro golfer Johnnie Miller and West Germany's minister of foreign affairs Hans-Dietrick Genscher, and they enjoyed having Hollywood director Maris Tobias as part of their tour group. Her picture, "Heartbeats," is to be released soon.

Becky and Karen were delighted to find members of their group with Midland ties. One of the women is the niece of longtime Midlander Faerine (Mrs. J.C.) Mayes, while one of the couples has a daughter, Amy Fults, who recently transferred here with Enserch Exploration.

At the end of the tour, the Midlanders flew to Spain for a week, dividing their time between Madrid and the Mediterranean resort of Torremolinos. They enjoyed every minute of the trip, bit declared that Switzerland and Rome were their favorites.

Sixty-two Midlanders were among the 110 geologists attending the annual fall field trip of the West Texas Geological Society recently in Chihuahua, Mexico. The theme of this year's trip was the study of the geology and petroleum potential of Northern Chihuahua and its applicaions to the Permian Basin.

A dedicated group, the "rock hounds" left for the field in three buses between 7:00 and 7:30 a.m. each day. At each stop, the leaders lectured on the geology of the area to a captive audience following along in the WTGS guidebook, "Geology and Petroleum Potential of Chihuahua, Mexico," which was edited by Edwin C. Kettenbrick Jr. of Midland.

But it wasn't "all work and no play" for the group. Social events icluded cocktails and registration at the Granada Royale in El Paso on the eve of the trip; an icebreaker the first evening out at the discotheque of the Victoria Hotel, the convention headquarters in Chihuahua, followed by dinner in the hotel dining room, and a Mexican luncheon at Nuevo Casas Grandes on the drive back from Chihuahua City to El Paso the last day.

Trip arrangements were handled by Midlanders Dean Flatt, general chairman, and Marie Bellomy, executive director of the WTGS. Other committee members from Midland on the trip included Terry McMillan, road log chairman, assisted by Gay Spears and Christine Chandler; Sally Williams and Bill Henry, registration, and Chris Beard, liaison and visas. WTGS officers participating were president Dan Kozak and his wife, Marjorie; Bruce Pearson, president-elect, and his wife, Mignon; Ms. Williams, secretary, and Ms. Bellomy. Dr. Terry Tubb of Midland was the official trip doctor and delighted the participants as unofficial field trip raconteur.

Marilyn McKnight Harrison is social columnist for the Reporter-Telegram.

Teen competes in pageant

Sonya Henderson, 15, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Henderson of Midland was chosen a finalist in the 1985 Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant, to be March 29-31, 1985 at the Midland Center. This pageant is official regional pageant to the 14th annual Miss Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant to be June 7-9, 1985 at Texas Christian University in Fort Worth.

Winner of the Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant will receive a $500 cash award, a full four-year tuition scholarship to Oklahoma City University, a $2,400 scholarship to Wayland Baptist University in Plainview, and other prizes. Winner will be crowned by Kimberly Koonce of Midland, 1984 Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager.

Judging will be based on scholastic achievement and leadership, poise and personality and appearance. There will be no swimsuit competition. Talent or an oral essay on "What's Right About America" may be given.

Miss Henderson will be sponsored by Adobe Oil and Gas Inc. Her hobbies include basketball, tennis and French Club.

'Toeprints' can help identify birds

MOSCOW, Idaho (AP) — Human beings can be identifed by their fingerprints, but ornithologists say the scales on birds' toes vary in size, shape and position to form a unique pattern among birds as well.

These "toeprints" could eventually replace the traditional numbered bands used to identify and keep track of protected birds, such as eagles.

Since poachers often remove numbered bands from birds that have died of natural causes and reuse them to disguise poached birds, veterinary scientists say that toeprint photographs may begin to replace the banding system.

AT WORK

Consultant's job only to give advice

BY ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

Q. I am a computer consultant to a small company in grave financial trouble. Besides being able to straighten out some of their technical problems, I recognized that three of their employees in the programming department are incompetent. They waste time and money by writing poor work and then rewriting it. I have spoken to the executive vice president about firing them, but he doesn't want to hear. I would appreciate any strategy of yours to change his mind.

A. First, a consultant is paid to give expert advice, seldom to implement it. If your heart is on the implementation end, you should be on the other side of the table and run your own business.

Second, you might document the time (and therefore money) wasted by each of the employees, one by one, on each step of the project. Then show your findings against what might be ideal and propose several suggestions, such as retaining the employees (state time and money required), hiring a more competent project leader to supervise them better, or firing them and rehiring (and what that would cost).

You can't go beyond these proposals. It is not, after all, your business.

Q. I have wanted to be a writer ever since I was young. I have been a housewife for the past 15 years and don't know where to start. I read your column every week and hope you can help me.

A. Start with what you know. If you're involved with any volunteer association that has a newsletter, volunteer your services. Or interview the soccer coaches on your son's team to motivate more parents to get involved.

From there, you can begin to see what you like best: reporting, interviewing, researching. Then look for writing classes given by colleges, as well as writer's conferences. Besides picking up practical suggestions, you can meet writers, both new and experienced, for on-going support and leads. Writing is a tough business.

Q. I am a 34-year-old secretary-receptionist in a dead-end job. I hate my role as "office mommy" so I'm working on a B.A. degree in psychology. But I am starting to realize that this may not be a winning ticket for me. Maybe I should acquire more relevant skills in business and accounting. Please help. I can hardly bear another day as a secretary-receptionist.

A. First, consider the irony: The roles of office mommy and therapist are quite the same. They differ by degree — in status, power and money. Chances are if you don't like the one, you won't like the other even though there are more benefits. Want a test? Quit your secretarial job and find a position in a psychological environment like a mental health clinic, hospital or special institution. See what's there for you. Better yet, find an aspect of the company you are in now that you can investigate or promote.

Hearst News Service

Nothing tastes fresher than a salad created from one's very own garden. Lettuce or spinach greens topped off with crunchy tomatoes, carrots, radishes, green onions and beets make a delightful lunch.

Are such delights the exclusive right of homeowners with thriving back yards? No, says Dr. Jerry Parsons, vegetable specialist for the Texas Agriculture Extension Service. Apartment dwellers can successfuily grow fresh vegetables in containers on a window sill, patio or balcony. Last date for planting this season is Nov. 25.

Tomatoes, peppers, eggplant, green onions, beans and lettuce are only a few of the tempting edibles available from nurseries as seeds. And, Parsons adds, transplants of small fruited tomatoes, such as Smallfry; small-growing plants or large fruited tomatoes, such as Spring Giant; and the TAM mild jalapeno will be available this fall.

The most important factors for successful growing, Parsons emphasizes, are sufficient sunlight (at least eight hours), proper moisture, adequate fertility and, most of all, "tender loving care."

The container: Bushel baskets, drums, gallon cans, wooden boxes, washtubs and plastic garbage cans all will work. Plant smaller vegetables in 8-to-10-inch pots, and larger crops such as tomatoes, peppers and eggplant in 3-to-5-gallon containers.

Good drainage is important. A container should have at least four drainage holes.

Seeding and transplanting: Synthetic soils are best, Parsons says. Composed of sawdust, wood chips, peat moss and perlite, these soils are disease-free, lightweight, and hold moisture well. It is best to transplant healthy plants into containers, rather than seeding, he believes. Transplants can be purchased at nurseries. If you choose to seed, start the vegetables in a warm area that receives sufficient sunlight.

Fertilization: For vigorous growth and high yields, the key is adequate fertility. Prepare a nutrient solution using a water-soluble fertilizer. The difference between growing a house plant and a vegetable "is that a vegetable requires a lot more fertility," Parsons says. "We advise fertilization with the water-soluble solution during every watering." The need for watering with the nutrient solution varies, but generally two or three times per week is adequate.

Watering: Proper watering is the key to a successful container plant. Each mix, plant size, type and location require different watering techniques and schedules. "The grower should learn to test the growing mix for moisture before water is applied, to avoid over-watering," Parsons says. Under-watering is also a problem. Test the growing mix between intended waterings; if it's dry, water it. Wilting plants can be a sign of too much water, as well as too little.

Larger plants require more water. For example, a large tomato in a hanging basket may need watering twice a day. On the other hand, radishes in a container need the same amount of water throughout the growing period.

Curry to present nutrition program

Miriam Curry, nutrition consultant with Associated Milk Producers Inc., will present a program on "Nutrition for the Mature Woman" at the Thursday meeting of the Woman's Club.

Mrs. Curry graduated from Texas Tech University with a degree in food and nutrition. She was Chief of Dietary Services at Midland Memorial Hospital for 15 years. She is active in district, state and American Diatetic Association. She and her husband have lived in Midland several years.

Pam Hartman

Hartman competes in teen pageant

Pam Hartman, 17, daughter of Mrs. Pamela Hartman of Midland, has been selected a finalist in the 1985 Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant to be March 29-31, 1985 at Midland Center. The pageant is the official regional pageant to the 14th annual Miss Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant to be June 7-9, 1985 at Texas Christian University, Fort Worth.

Winner of the Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant will receive a $500 cash award, a full four-year tuition scholarship to Oklahoma City University, a $2,400 scholarship to Wayland Baptist University and other prizes. The top three winners will attend the state pageant. Kimberly Koonce of Midland, 1984 Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager, will crown the winner.

Contestants will be judged on scholastic achievement and leadership, poise and personality and appearance. There will be no swimsuit competition. Talent or an oral essay on "What's Right About America" may be given.

Miss Hartman will be sponsored by Doyle Hartman Inc. and Dunlap's department store. Her hobbies include skiing, jogging, cycling and swimming.

Luggage designer to display works

Jon Bon Signore of Jon Hart Designs will be in Midland from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday at Driscoll's Gifts, Inc., 305 Andrews Hwy., to introduce his line of luggage.

Don Snell launched his career as an actor in in a bit part as a gunman in "The Texas Project, 1935." Five years ago he made his debut as a luggage designer, under the name Jon Hart, known by many celebrities as the man who designs their luggage.

Hart entered the market by fashioning a handbag from a canvas-covered file folder. He sold 700 handbags at his first appearance at the Dallas Apparel Mart and later established a one-man shop in Dallas. The Dallas-based designer, who has sold his products to Saks Fifth Avenue, Marshall Field's and Neiman-Marcus, now employs 20 people in his 7,000-square-foot facility. The line features 15 styles of luggage, which includes duffle bags and shaving kits.

'...where gods have walked'

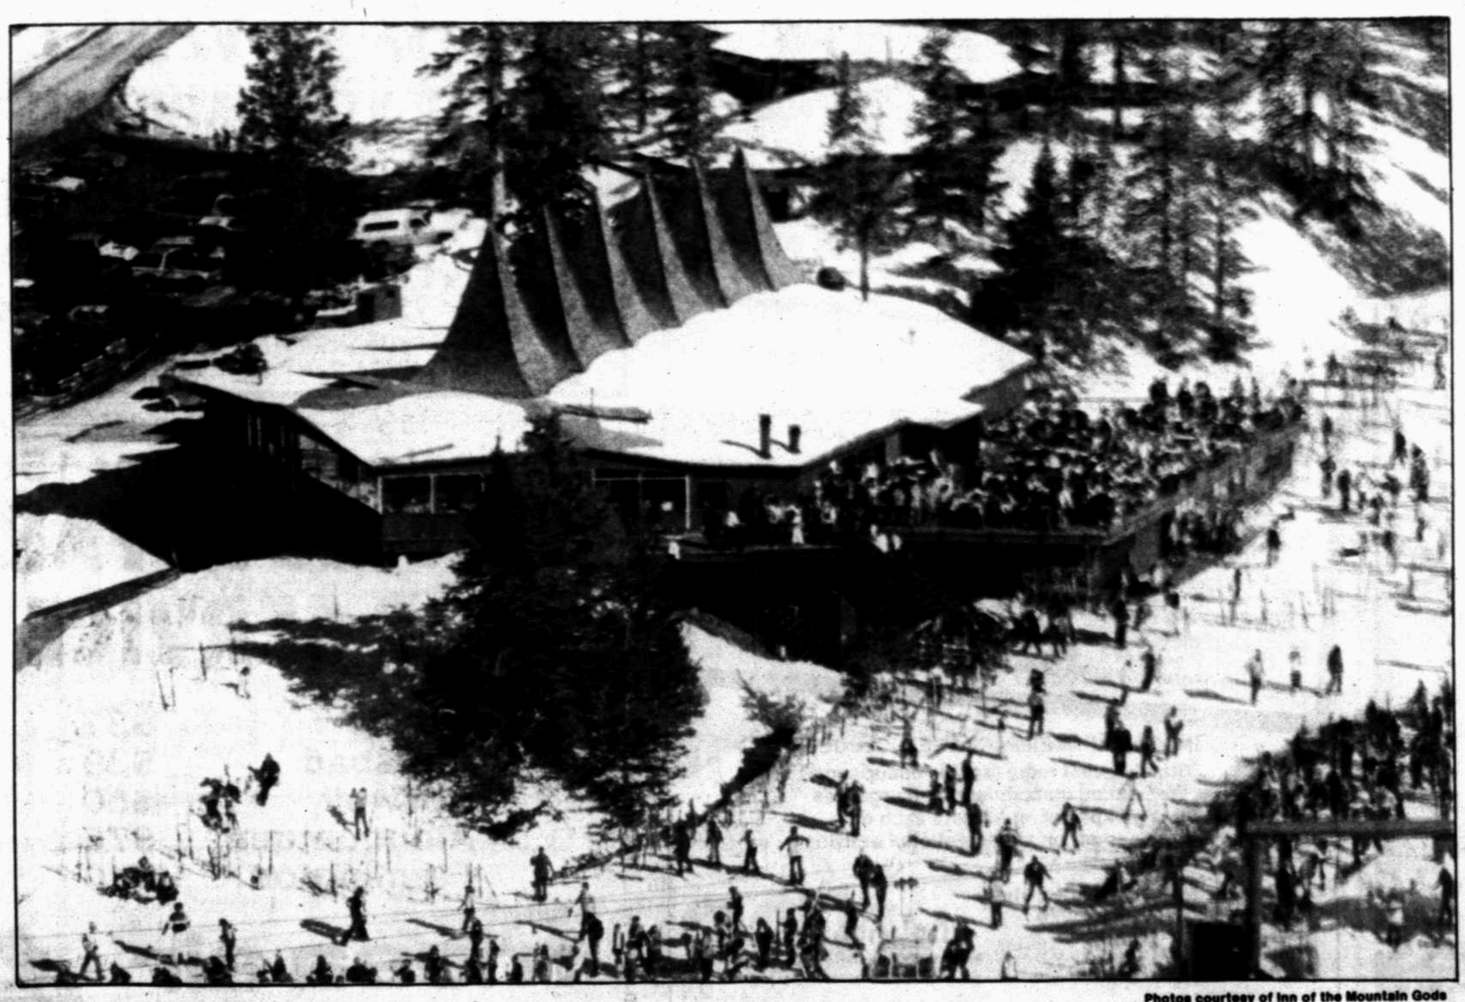

Text by
Linda Anderson

In the winter season, the Inn of the Mountain Gods in Ruidoso, N.M., located on the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation, gives visitors the warmth of a friendly fireplace and a view of snow-covered mountains.

Most of the Inn's 250 rooms face the lake and the mountains, not the parking lot.

Sierra Blanca ski area, also on the Apache reservation, is a short distance and an easy trip from the Inn.

RUIDOSO, N.M. — Ask a West Texan what Heaven looks like and chances are the answer will be "trees and water." Fortunately that dream can be experienced in this world — and it can be found only a few hours away from Midland.

The country is the mountainous land around Ruidoso. Covered with pine trees and other foliage foreign to the Permian Basin, the 460,000-acre reservation is home to the Mescalero Apache Indians.

The tribe also owns and operates the Inn of the Mountain Gods, a resort hotel located on the reservation. Advertising for the Inn invites travelers to "Come. Play where gods have walked."

And play is what they mean. The Inn has an 18-hole golf course, six outdoor and two indoor tennis courts, a lake for fishing or boating, an outdoor swimming pool, a heated whirlpool, a sauna, horseback riding, trap and skeet shooting and access to ski slopes at Sierra Blanca.

The 250-room complex also houses a year 'round convention center, according to Steve Tally, executive assistant manager.

But this time of year the accent is on hunting. From September through December hunters can find their own kind of heaven at the Inn. Tally said the bull elk hunting program, offered in September, is a four-day package which includes room and meals, hunting with an Indian guide — one guide for each hunter — and use of a four-wheel drive vehicle or pickup. Inn employees also process the meat for the hunter. "We had a 99 percent success rate last year," Tally said. "The tribe is proud of its elk herd. There is a conservation department within the tribe — each year before they issue any hunting permits they count the herd" to determine the number of permits issued and to preserve population of the herd.

The bull elk hunt package normally has a two-year waiting list, Tally said.

During December a mule deer hunting package is available at the Inn. For this hunt the participants are provided room and meals, the assistance of an Indian guide and a vehicle — or a horse, he said.

The remainder of the season is the time for open hunts, also regulated by the tribe.

For information on hunting at Inn of the Mountain Gods, write Director of Sports Activities and Package Hunts, P.O. Box 269, Mescalero, N.M. 88340 or call (505) 257-9770.

Other attractions may be more appealing to visitors not interested in hunting. The Inn sets beside a 120-acre lake stocked with rainbow trout from the tribe's fish hatchery. The lake's 2½-mile shoreline is ideal for fishermen, and boats are available for those who prefer fishing from the water.

Tennis aficionados can enjoy their sport all year long, thanks to the eight tennis courts. The courts, equipped for night tennis, are surfaced with laykold. Two indoor courts are housed in an inflated "bubble," which Tally said is like playing at a lower altitude.

Golfers can play on the Inn's 18-hole lakeside course, which includes a No. 10 green located on an island in the lake — a par-four hole, Tally said. Electric golf carts — the Inn has about 90 of them — are mandatory, he said, because most golfers at the Inn are not accustomed to high altitude and can become winded easily, which can slow down play. "We put a foursome on the course every six minutes in the summer," he said.

Indian guides are available to lead horseback riders for one- or two-hour, or half- or full-day excursions, Tally said. The Inn keeps about 30 head of horses.

The Inn strives to provide comfort for its guests and adds "the little things," such as rooms with two large closets; two sinks, one in the bath and one in the dressing area; ice buckets with real glass glasses; complimentary bottles of shampoo and creme rinse; chairs on balconies; and rooms designed to face the mountains or the lake. Few rooms face the parking lot, and even those provide a view of the lake and mountains on the adjacent side of the asphalt.

A real treat for Midlanders — another of these "little comforts" — is the water which is drawn from the lake and processed in the Inn's water treatment plant.

The Inn was opened in 1975, Tally said, and expanded to double its room capacity two years ago. The Apaches opened the facility to "make more money for the tribe and to provide more employment for the Indian people," Tally said. "All profits generated by the tribe are shared by the tribe. Several Indian tribes have opened resorts — we are one of the few that have survived."

Christmas packages offer travel, exotic to traditional

By MORRIS D. ROSENBERG
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

It may be more than a month of shopping days away, but travel packages are beginning to look a lot like Christmas. In fact, it might be difficult in some cases to get reservations even at this date. But there's a wide variety of packages available — and cancellations do occur.

Exciting adventures overseas will again vie this year with seasonal celebrations closer to home. They range from religious observances in Bethlehem and Jerusalem to wild-game viewing on African safaris, from hobnobbing with nobility at British country estates to nostalgic sleigh rides and skiing in New England. Many of the foreign journeys obviously are aimed at an upscale market.

HERE ARE a few of the possibilities:

— "Christmas in the Holyland": The 23-day journey starts Dec. 11 with a flight from New York to Cairo, includes a cruise on the Nile, a visit to Jordan and then — on Dec. 24 — a drive across the King Hussein Bridge into Israel en route to Jerusalem. Christmas Eve and Christmas Day will be spent in Bethlehem, followed by a special dinner in Jerusalem. The tour will include visits to sacred sites, trips to Tiberias and Tel Aviv, and a flight to Athens for a few days in Greece. Cost for land arrangements is $3,480 per person, double occupancy; APEX round-trip air fare from New York is $962 (with the return trip through Athens); domestic Egypt air fare, $154.

— "Christmas in Africa": The 26-day trip begins with an overnight flight on Dec. 7 from New York to Amsterdam, connecting with a flight to Nairobi. The travelers will visit the grasslands of the Masai Mara, with its large lion prides; other Kenyan game parks; and Zimbabwe and Victoria Falls. In South Africa they will travel from Johannesburg to Cape Town on the famed Blue Train and celebrate New Year's Eve at the Mala Mala Game Lodge. Land arrangements cost $3,900 per person, double occupancy. Round-trip excursion air fare from New York is $1,999; domestic Kenya air fare, $50, and Mala Mala air fare, $161.

MORE INFORMATION on both trips: Hemphill-Harris Travel Corp., 16000 Ventura Blvd., Suite 200, Encino, Calif. 91436, (818) 906-8086.

— "Christmas at Brocket Hall": For the third year, Lord and Lady Brocket will welcome 24 holiday guests at their stately home in the English countryside about two hours from London. Besides spending five of the 16 days — Dec. 23-28 — at the 1,000-acre estate, surrounded by works of art and antique furnishings and served by a staff of 10, tour members will attend parties at private clubs and mingle with the British aristocracy.

Highlights include six days at London's Dorchester Hotel, the opera at Royal Opera House Covent Garden, dinner in the home of a London family, a Christmas Eve Carol Ceremony, Boxing Day Hunt Meet, three days at Hambleton Hall and a New Year's Eve black-tie ball at the Hyde Park Hotel in London. Cost of the package is $4,980 per person, double occupancy, exclusive of air fare.

More information: William D. Buckman Traveltime, 17 North State St., Chicago, Ill. 60602, (800) 621-4725.

— "Christmas at Chalcot, New Year's at the Ritz": Chalcot, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Rudd, located between Salisbury and Bath, England, will offer the traditional crackling log fires, carol singers and mulled wine-plus a medieval banquet and typical English Christmas with roast goose-to 10 travelers. From Dec. 23-27, the estate has been reserved exclusively for guests of Lindblad Travel, as part of a 15-day program departing New York on Dec. 19.

Lindblad notes that tour members also have been invited by Lord and Lady Spencer for luncheon and cocktails on Dec. 30 at their private residence in Althorp, Northampton; Lord Spencer is the father of Britain's Diana, princess of Wales. (Titles and exclusivity are valued selling points on various British tours. Country Homes and Castles, a London firm that offers a similar holiday package for 20 Americans, has set up the luncheon both for itself and for Lindblad. But due to a scheduling problem, clients of both operators will have to share the same luncheon date, although perhaps in separate rooms. Country Homes said the Spencers do not attend tour-group lunches, but they might appear for cocktails if in residence.)

THE CHALCOT package begins and ends at the Ritz Hotel in London, where guests will attend the New Year's Eve Dinner Dance and the Ritz Resolution Tea Dance on New Year's Day. Rates are $4,200 per person, double occupancy, exclusive of air fare.

Information: Lindblad Travel Inc., P.O. Box 912, One Sylvan Road North, Westport, Conn. 06881, (800) 243-5657. Fendler-Fuller-Ward Travel (for Country Homes packages), 480 East Paces Ferry Rd. NE, Atlanta, Ga. 30305, (404) 261-1688.

— "A Traditional Christmas and Hogmanay,": From Dec. 23 to Jan. 4, and from London to Edinburgh, Scotland, a maximum of 35 guests will celebrate both the Yuletide and the New Year together.

After meeting in London, the group will drive through country villages to Norwich, with time during the next few days for sightseeing, carols, services in the Norman Cathedral, Christmas luncheon, a Meet of the Foxhounds, and the theater. Later they will visit the medieval City of Chester, drive into the Lake District of northern England, and cross the border to Edinburgh. A Scottish Hogmanay dinner will usher in the New Year. The tour will end with additional days in London and a tour of the Canterbury Cathedral. Cost: $1,492.50 per person, double occupancy, exclusive of air fare.

Information: Heritage Travellers, 41 E. 42nd St. (Suite 2312), New York, N.Y. 10017 (800-358-3330).

— "Sound of Music": Christmas dinner in Salzburg, the Vienna Opera and musical performances in Germany and Hungary are all part of this seventh annual 17-day tour departing New York by air Dec. 20 for Frankfurt.

The itinerary includes Heidelberg, Nuremberg, Rothenburg and Salzburg (scene of a Christmas Eve dinner, a Christmas Day concert and traditional dinner), Budapest and Vienna (where New Year's Eve will be celebrated at the Kaiser Ball). The return flight is from Munich after sightseeing in the Bavarian countryside. Cost from New York, including all accommodations, entertainment, escort, excursions, certain meals, private motor coach and international air fare, is $2,711 per person, double occupancy. "Shopping Tours": For gift-givers who delight in dispensing English woolens, French perfumes, Belgian lace and diamonds, nine-day shopping trips will leave New York for London, Paris and Brussels on Dec. 1 and 8.

EACH TOUR IS limited to 30 persons. It includes deluxe and first-class hotels, daily continental breakfast, three gourmet dinners, city tours, discount coupons, shopping guides and intra-Europe transportation. Price per person, double occupancy, is $899, excluding transatlantic air fare.

Eucalyptus trees at Yardenit, a Christian pilgrimage site in the Holy Land, shade the Jordan river near where Jesus is believed to have been bapitzed by St. John. Christmas travel packages to the Holy Land include trips to sacred sites in Israel, as well as visits to Athens and Cairo.

Information for both tours: The Cortell Group, 3 E. 54th St., New York, N.Y. 10022, (800) 223-6626.

— "Christmas in New England": This nine-day vacation features five nights at the Trapp Family Lodge owned and operated by the "Sound of Music" family — Baroness Maria von Trapp and her children. A blend of Austria and New England, the property overlooks Stowe, Vt.

The tour is limited to 30 guests and begins Dec. 18 at Boston's Logan Airport, with the first three nights being spent at the Deerfield Inn in Deerfield, Conn. It includes shopping in selected villages, visits to local families and churches for lunch, and stops at Mark Twain's home, Old Sturbridge Village and Woodstock, Vt.

The lodge offers sleigh rides, a Christmas tree-cutting expedition, a tree-trimming party and, on the 25th, a family-style Christmas dinner. Guests are advised to bring their ski equipment-a complimentary cross-country lesson is part of the package, plus accommodations, coach transport, full-time guide and all meals (except two lunches). Cost: $1,600 per person, double occupancy, exclusive of air fare.

Information: Country Inn Tours, 2930 Camino Diablo, Walnut Creek, Calif. 94596 (800-227-2432).

— "Christmas Tours": An illustrated booklet from Maupintour describes a number of packages close to home, including: "Williamsburg Christmas Gala," featuring the lighting of the community Christmas Tree in Market Square, a banquet with entertainment and visits to the James River plantation and Carter's Grove, from Dec. 21-28, $898 per person double occupancy; "Pennsylvania Dutch Gala," covering Philadelphia and visits to an Amish homestead, Winterthur, Longwood Gardens and Bethlehem, Pa., Dec. 19-26, $848 per person double occupancy; "New York Christmas Gala," offering a room at the Waldorf Astoria, shopping on Fifth Avenue, the "Nutcracker" performance at Lincoln Center and an excursion to Washington Irving's home in the Hudson Valley, $938 per person, double occupancy; "New Mexico Christmas Gala," exploring Santa Fe, Spanish and Indian culture, Albuquerque and joining in the Luminarias Cavalcade on Christmas Eve, Dec. 20-27, $898 per person double occupancy.

Quail season in Alexandria irresistible event

By JUDITH MILLER
New York Times News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt — The two million Cairenes who invade this city each summer have gone back to the capital. The graceful Corniche, the seafront road lined by Mediterranean-style hotels and restaurants, is navigable once more. The beach umbrellas that obscured almost every other grain of sand only a month ago have vanished.

Best of all, quail season in Alexandria is in full swing. From the end of September until early November, thousands of quail fly over Alexandria from central Europe en route to their winter habitat in the Sudan. The journey across the Mediterranean is long and tiring, so the birds fly in low over the water and land on Alexandria's shores in droves.

Handmade cotton nets laid by bedouin trappers await them. The trapping enfuriates hunters, for whom quail are favored prey. Thousands of quail are caught in nets or shot each day and shipped to homes and restaurants throughout Egypt.

The gastronomical center of the quail season is Uncle Elias's, an outdoor restaurant in the Piazza Syrian, one of the oldest quarters in the Attarine, Alexandria's spice and antiques market. By day, the piazza specializes in the sale of secondhand clothes. At night, for as many years as anyone can remember or is willing to admit, tables and chairs are unloaded from the roofs of the shops and dilapidated buildings that surround the cozy square and Uncle Elias's appears.

A simple cotton tablecloth and a plastic flower adorn each of the 15 tables. The restaurant's only decorations are bird cages containing live quail, with a small red light bulb atop each cage. Next to the entrance of the square, an old man sells strands of freshly picked sweet-scented jasmine for women to wear as necklaces for the evening.

Uncle Elias's opens for business at 9 p.m. But none of the chic Alexandrians, or those who drive three hours from Cairo to eat there, would be seen in the restaurant before 10 p.m. By 10:30 the piazza is hopping. Defense Minister Abdel Halim Abu Ghazala came last season. Mohammed Abdullah, chairman of the Parliament's Foreign Affairs Committee, is a regular. The restaurant is also a favored haunt of Egyptian film stars.

Dinner at Uncle Elias's is not a restful experience. Young boys carrying sticks run among tables chasing away the battalions of cats who descend upon the square, lured by the irresistible aroma of fresh grilled baby quail. Samra Shahata Khalil, who bought the restaurant about five years ago from Uncle Elias, who was Lebanese, began his career in the restaurant business as a cat boy.

"We only serve quail in pairs," Samra said. "That way, the birds do not get cold." Of course, patrons frequently reorder several times in the evening, bringing the number of quail served each night to about 600.

A pair of quail cost two Egyptian pounds, or about $2.40. That is expensive, by Egyptian standards. But the baby quail are so tender that regulars eat even the bones and so desirable that the line of Alexandrians awaiting seats snakes in and around the square.

The secret to making good quail, Samra said, is in the cooking and the seasoning. The quail, which are rich and require no oil, are grilled quickly over a very hot flame. Only a hand fan of turkey feathers waved vigorously by the grill master keeps the tender birds from burning.

The quail are considered such a delicacy that they are served alone. They are preceded, however, by an array of Egyptian salads: thinly sliced cucumbers with lemon wedges; tahina, a sesame-based dip for bread; baba ghanoush, a grilled eggplant and garlic mixture known throughout the Middle East, and tomatoes. The choice of beverages is limited because the restaurant operates in a public square in a country whose Moslem citizens are not supposed to drink alcohol. Only soft drinks or Stella, Egyptian beer, are available.

When the quail season ends next month, Uncle Elias's will revert to selling grilled pigeon, a specialty of Egypt's delta, much to Samra's regret. Pigeons are popular, he said, "but there is nothing quite like quail."

'Snowphone' ski report resumes

From Staff Reports

Snowphone, the recorded ski report of New Mexico ski industry, will be re-activated Thursday, according to Ted Gendron, executive director of Ski New Mexico Inc.

Snowphone, a two-minute recording of ski conditions, new snowfalls, percentage of trails open, road conditions and five-day snowfall forecasts, is the company's promotional program. During its second season of operation last year, the service received 9,885 calls, a more than 41 percent increase over the 6,996 calls the previous year.

Once again Snowphone will be updated on Mondays and Thursdays, and will be available 24 hours a day, seven days a week, through Easter Sunday, April 7, 1985.

To call Snowphone dial direct (505) 984-0606. For free New Mexico literature contact Gendron at Ski New Mexico Inc., P.O. Box 1104, Santa Fe, N.M. 87504.

FREQUENT-FLYER NEWS

Almost 10 million travelers have enrolled in one or more of the frequent-flyer bonus programs begun by the airlines in the last several years. Because of recent changes in many of these plans, the fad promises to become even more popular and rewarding in the coming months. New promotions provide mileage credits for staying at particular hotels, for renting cars from designated firms and even for sailing on selected cruise lines. Some of the airlines no longer require the traveler to patronize just one company to build up frequent-flyer points. Several major airlines now interchangeably credit mileage. The usual miles-traveled threshold for substantial rewards is 50,000 miles or more.

If you travel frequently for business, you may be surprised to find how many miles (and therfore frequent-flyer points) you have accumulated. To find out how to make these points pay off for you. we at LONES TRAVEL SERVICE will be happy to discuss this program with you. Why not stop in and see us at 319 W. Texas, in the Permian Bldg., on the street level, when you want to make the arrangements for your next get-away. We're open mon. through Fri. between 8 and 5 and by appointment on Sat. Phone 682-8645

If you buy merchandise abroad with a credit card, always save the receipt.

Winter best time for Stockholm

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — It is cold in Stockholm in winter; winds rushing off the Baltic Sea carry little flakes of snow that soon dust the windshields of the ubiquitous Volvo taxicabs waiting for a fare.

It is dark, too; twilight comes early in the afternoon and deep darkness soon afterward. Commuters drive home with their lights on, just as they did that morning.

Stockholm — like all of Northern Europe — is about ready to put on its long underwear, bulky sweaters and fur coats for the long journey into winter, a winter that burns into the bones with an unrelenting chill.

But despite this cold and the darkness, winter is the best time to visit Stockholm.

The crowds are gone, back to their houses in Tokyo and Cincinnati and Munich. They will huddle there during the winter and the spring, awaiting their lemming-like migration of next summer, when they will rush shoulder-to-shoulder into the palaces and museums and little islets of Stockholm. As a result, too often the treasures of this great travel destination get lost in the crush.

For for those of us brave (and smart) enough to confront the winter, we — along with the million and a half residents — have Stockholm all to ourselves.

Stockholm glows brightly during the gray, drizzle months, its cafes, concert halls, theaters and cabarets in full swing. The great Stockholm Opera bursts forth, the renowned Cullberg Ballet performs in front of appreciative audiences, the Stockholm Philharmonic gains standing ovations in the Konserthuset. During the summer months when most tourists are in Stockholm the Opera House is shuttered, the philharmonic silent, the ballet company on tour to Tokyo and Cincinnati and Munich.

Better still, hotel prices come down roughly at about the same time and with the same speed that temperatures fall, and stores have Christmas and post-Christmas sales when you can find a bargain, even in pricey Stockholm.

There are drawbacks to visiting Stockholm in the winter, of course. Some of the city's most popular summer attractions, like the Drottningholm Palace, are closed in the winter, and it's no fun to take a boat through the thousands of islands of the archipeligo — it's just too cold.

But most of Stockholm's attractions — the Royal Palace, the Music Museum, the National Museum, Skansen's collection of old Swedish buildings, the 1628 warship Wasa — are open in the winter and can be enjoyed without the summer crowds that are often overwhelming. You can see the glittering crowd jewels in the Treasury of the Royal Palace without having to look over the heads of six million tourists, and you can have a ringside seat at the changing of the guard without having to climb a pole to see the exchange of salutes.

In winter you can go to the Kungstradgarden Park and watch apple-cheeked Swedish children ice skating, or rent a pair of skis and cross-country through fresh, untarnished snow.

In winter it's fun to go into one of the 200 coffee bars and have the very strong, very heavily-roasted Swedish coffee and a creamy pastry filled with calories. And it's pleasant to walk down the narrow stairway to the exclusive Cellar Club of the Operakallaren Restaurant in the old Opera House and have a glass of the establishment's own aquavite while nibbling at schnapps-flavored crackers. Later, join the younger crowd at the Opera House's disco, and see some of the most stylish, best-looking youngsters in all of Europe.

Winter is also the best time to have dinner in the covered terrace of the Grand Hotel's Royal restaurant, watch the snow fall as you dine on poached turbot, and look across frigid, mouse-gray waters to the Old City.

That Old City (called Gamla Stan) has survived more than 700 winters so far, and its charming, cobblestoned streets are a beacon for tourists in the winter. Warm lights reach out from restaurants like Diana and Fem Sma Hus to beckon you, and dozens of small boutiques will keep you warm as you browse through their merchandise.

In Gamla Stan's Stortorget square, where King Kristian of Denmark once executed 90 Swedes for disloyalty, a Christmas market is held each December, and just across the way is the Swedish Academy, where Nobel Prize winners are selected. On Dec. 10 they are given their awards before the King of Sweden and the intellects of the world.

Diet Pill Sweeping U.S.

New Grapefruit 'Super Pill' Gives Fast Weight Loss

No Dieting - Eat All You Want Pill Does All the Work

BEVERLY HILLS, CA. (Special) An amazing new "super" grapefruit pill has recently been developed and perfected that reportedly "guarantees" that you will easily lose at least 10 pounds in 10 days. Best of all, it allows you to "eat as much as you want of your favorite foods and still lose a pound a day or more starting from the very first day until you achieve the ideal weight and figure you desire."

This "super" grapefruit pill is a dramatically improved version of the world famous grapefruit diet. It is far more effective than the original and eliminates "the mess, fuss, and high cost of eating half a fresh grapefruit at every meal."

"Pill Does All the Work"

According to the manufacturer, "the pill itself does all the work while you quickly lose weight with NO starvation "diet menus" to follow, NO calorie counting, NO exercise, and NO hunger pangs." It is 100% safe. You simply take the pill with a glass of water before each meal and the amazing combination of powerful ingredients are so effective they take over and you start losing weight immediately.

Pill Has ALL Daily Vitamins

The powerful and unique combination of ingredients are what make this a "super-pill". It contains highly potent grapefruit concentrate and a diuretic to help eliminate bloat and puffiness. No need to take any vitamins to maintain your good health and energy. The pill is fortified with ALL (100%) of the U.S. Government daily vitamin requirements.

Contains Japanese 'Glucomannan'

Each pill also contains an amazingly effective amount of "glucomannan", the remarkable natural dietary fiber discovery from Japan (used successfully for over 1500 years) that expands in your stomach and gives you a full and satisfied feeling all day long.

The super-pill is already sweeping the country with glowing reports of easy and fast weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slim, trim, and attractive again.

Now Available to Public

You can order your supply of these highly successful "super" grapefruit pills (now available directly from the manufacturer by mail order only) by sending $12 for a 14-day supply (or $20 for a 30-day supply, or $35 for a 60-day supply) cash, check, or money order to: Citrus Industries, 9903 Santa Monica Bl., Dept. 841, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard, and Amer. Express OK. (Send card number, expiration date, and signature.) For fastest service for credit card orders ONLY call toll free 1-(800)-862-6262, ext. 841. © Copyright 1984.

DEAR ABBY

Protect mail from dead-letter fate

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Part of my job as a postal worker is to deal with the letters and parcels that are undeliverable. With the holiday season approaching, I'd like to pass on some tips so that your readers can avoid some of the more common problems:

— Remember to affix postage. This is the most obvious and yet the most frequently overlooked item. Use sufficient postage, and don't try to reuse canceled postage stamps.

— Seal letters and parcels securely. Use wide tape for parcels, not string.

— Pay attention to addressing. Most common errors: no address, address unreadable, wrong or absent town, state or ZIP code. Many people absentmindedly write their own ZIP code on the address. Your post office has national ZIP code directories, so if you do not know a ZIP code, ask. It speeds up delivery.

— Do not write any other numbers — such as your phone number or Social Security number — under the address. With only a fraction of a second to look at each ZIP, a clerk can easily mistake these as the ZIP, and your letter ends up in Timbuktu.

It helps to write the ZIP near the state, on the lower right, NOT lower left, corner as many people write it. Use complete addresses, not abbreviations (except state). WRITE CLEARLY. Don't write "City" or "Local" in place of an address; it's quite likely that your mail travels 50 miles or more to a processing center where the people there might not know the city you mean. Be sure to spell out the names of foreign countries in English, including Canada and Mexico.

— Always use your return address. Unmailable items with no return addresses end up in the dead-letter office. (Don't use "Guess Who?" or similar substitutes.)

— Never tape money to a letter in place of stamps.

— The U.S. Postal Service does not handle returns for private companies such as UPS. To return packages delivered by these firms, use postage.

— Breakable items can and will break without protection. Coins are frequent victims of our processing machines, as are small hardware pieces, candy hearts, lollipops and campaign buttons. If you must mail these, cushion them with tissue, or use a box.

— Monitor your children's mail. It breaks my heart to see a carefully decorated letter addressed simply to "Grandma." (One exception: "Santa" letters are handled by the postmaster.)

— Mail early in the day. Every business in town mails at 5:00 p.m., and we can't always process it all in time for the main dispatch. Our busiest days are the days after a holiday, Mondays and Fridays. Find out about our special services, such as certified, registered or express mail. We could save you time and money.

— If you receive poor service, complain! Your local post office has official complaint forms. They're yours for the asking. It will make your local office sit up and take notice.

— If you think we deserve a compliment, let us know. During the holiday season, we can use a kind word.

Thanks, Abby! — A POSTAL CLERK

Arthritis often misunderstood

ATLANTA (AP) — More than 36 million Americans, about 1 in every 7 people, have some form of arthritis.

Yet, say the Arthritis Foundation, most people have incorrect or only hazy knowledge of what arthritis is, what treatments are available, and how they can cope with their disease.

The facts, it says, are that arthritis is 100 different diseases, that it strikes people of all ages, and that there is usually no cure.

However, it adds, with proper and prompt treatment, most forms of arthritis can be controlled and the disabling and crippling effects associated with these diseases can be prevented.

AT WIT'S END

Generations torn by divorce

By ERMA BOMBECK

I have a choice.

I can either do a funny column today on the couple in Dallas who ended a six-month divorce battle by granting visitation rights to the wife to more than $4,000 worth of toy trains ...

Or I can do a report on the deluge of mail I got from grandmothers across the country on a column I did on the pain of divorce where they are left with "nothing but memories and longing" for their grandchildren.

Maybe the stories belong together.

Under the terms of the settlement in Dallas, the woman will get the right to visit the trains her husband received twice a year as long as she gives 24 hours' notice by telephone and the time is convenient.

A grandmother in Iowa wrote, "I am enduring the divorce of my twin sons. One daughter-in-law moved to Florida and I get to see my grandchildren two hours at Christmas and take them to lunch in the summer for a total of an hour and a half."

The train enthusiast said the first train set was a Christmas gift to her son, who is now 22. However, their collection got more sophisticated as the years went on and they even owned a Z gauge that was so small you could lay it out in a briefcase. She would miss it.

A grandmother from Ohio wrote, "As a child growing up, I never had the warmth and comfort of grandparents. I always said that when the time for grandchildren came along, I would always be there if they needed me. My grandson is three years old. I had him for the first time on Grandparents Day. His parents are divorced."

The wife from Dallas was awarded custody of a tin-plated 1935 Comet aqua-and-silver engine, three passenger cars, a three-piece green bridge, a standard gauge tunnel, two streetlights, toy baggage men and baggage worth $500 to $1,000.

A grandmother from Georgia wrote, "We were given custody of our grandson for four years after the mother left and our son tried to 'find himself.' The new wife moved 2,000 miles away where our grandson could 'break the child's dependency on us.'"

The laws are very explicit about the custody and visitation rights of inanimate things like trains. When it comes to human beings, we're not so clear-cut. That's why groups of grandparents throughout the country are addressing the problem through Grandparents' Rights groups.

A letter from a grandchild sums this piece up pretty well. "After 35 years, when I found my grandparents, only my grandmother was alive. She welcomed me with love and kisses. Who else but a grandmother would welcome me on sight ... no questions asked? Unfortunately, a few months later she passed on, but I choose to think God meant for me to know her, if only for a short time. For it was she who bathed me, fed me and loved me when everyone else had other things to do."

Companies go back to school

NEW YORK (AP) — Many companies are sending their employees to school so they can keep up with the rapid change of technologies.

Warren Baise of the Institute of Advanced Technology says, "Subjects that were not taught in the past, such as information systems and productivity, have become essential for success, while traditional subjects, such as strategic planning and the methods of increasing market share, need a new look."

'Ideal' voice described as warm, joyful, positive

NEW YORK (AP) — Experts agree that the ideal voice should project warmth, joy, concern, color and authority that's lovingly assertive but not aggressive, according to Feeling Great magazine.

The human voice is observed as a mirror of how we feel and who we are, says Lillian Glass, a speech pathologist. "People who misuse their voices are judged to be less intelligent, less sexually attractive, less frendly, and less capable of doing a good job," she says.

She says anyone can improve their voice with exercise, self-discipline, and a positive attitude.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Rabies transmitted several ways

Dear Dr. Solomon: One of the men I work with says his son got rabies even though he was never bitten by an animal. I've never heard of this but I realize that I don't know everything. Is it possible for someone to get rabies without being bitten? — Calvin, San Francisco

Dear Calvin: Although the rabies virus cannot penetrate unbroken skin, a bite is not the only method of transmission. For example, a person can become infected if the virus comes into contact with an open wound, such as a cut or a scratch. The virus can also be inhaled, and infection has been reported among people who entered caves that contained large numbers of bats infected with the rabies virus.

Finally, laboratory workers have also contracted rabies, apparently by inhaling the virus.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Every time I go to my doctor he tells me to cut back on the amount of salt I use because my blood pressure is a little too high. Then he usually tells me to read the labels on the foods I buy so that I can void having the sodium. I know from my high school chemistry classes that salt is really sodium chloride. My question is: What about the chloride? Is the sodium the only thing to watch out for, and is the chloride just an innocent bystander? — Bill, Chicago

Dear Bill: The chloride component of salt may not be as innocent in the development of hypertension as has been assumed; experiments with rats suggest that dietary chloride may also be a factor. Although the findings stemming from animal studies may not be applicable to humans, they do provide some food (preferably salt-free) for thought.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I must differ with you on your comments regarding the treatment of a lazy eye which appeared in your column.

It is true that the best results for regaining depth perception are obtained in the youngest treated children, but the treatment of the decreased vision from amblyopia can be done much later than 5. It's better to do it before 10 but all of us have good results with patching children well into their teens.

Dr. John Flynn at the University of Miami and others have good data to show that this certainly can be true. To give up trying to bring a child's vision to somewhere in the normal range when they are past the age of 5 really isn't fair to the child.

I do enjoy reading your column but felt I had to comment on this problem. — Robert S.L. Kinder, M.D., Clinical Professor of Opthalmology, Brown University, Rhode Island Hospital, Providence, R.I.

Dear Dr. Kinder: Thank you for your helpful letter; I agree with you completely.

For Joanne, Montgomery, Ala.: The dermatitis (inflammation of the skin) you have experienced since buying new shoes may indeed be due to the shoes. Various studies have suggested that rubber soles or even the use of rubber cement may lead to the condition.

The dermatitis may clear if you simply start wearing other types of shoes for a while.

Proper insulation saves energy costs

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — While many consumers expect energy prices to rise in the next five years, more than 50 percent have less than an adequate amount of insulation in the attic.

A National Family opinion poll of 80,000 households, commissioned by Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., revealed that 9 percent of American homes have no insulation in the attic, and 43 percent have less than 6 inches, the minimum typically recommended.

Department of Energy estimates show homeowners can save up to 15 percent of their heating bills by adding insulation to an uninsulated attic.

DENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Philip O. Warlick D.D.S.

FRACTURED TOOTH EMERGENCY

QUESTION: Is there anything that can be done if you have an accident that results in a broken tooth?

ANSWER: This is one of the most common dental accidents, especially with active youngsters. Fortunately, there are a lot of avenues a dentist can take to repair, save, and restore the appearance of a broken tooth. If the injury is serious enough to expose the tooth pulp, it must be treated immediately since the potential for infection is high. Root canal therapy will solve this problem followed by the use of a crown or cap to restore use and appearance. If the chip is a minor one, there are tooth-colored materials that can be bonded directly to the tooth. It can be shaped back to its original appearance simply and painlessly in one visit.

Benjamin Franklin first American gourmet to import bottled water

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. (AP) — Bottled water was first imported to America by Benjamin Franklin, who was a gourmet as well as being a patriot, inventor, philosopher and diplomat.

During his term as ambassador to France from 1776 to 1784, Franklin was introduced to bottled spring water.

He was so impressed that he arranged to have a supply shipped to him after his return to Philadelphia in 1785.

One of America's earliest bottled waters was available as far back as 1871 from what has become known as the Mountain Valley spring and been bottled continuously in Hot Springs ever since.

Eye surgery has 'hard sell'

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — You may have noticed that eye surgery is being marketed much like hamburgers, television sets or nail care these days, with high-pressure advertisements which promise that in 15 minutes or so you can get your eyes done and throw away your glasses forever.

Dr. Michael Turan, an ophthalmologist and surgeon here, isn't enamored of those hard sells. But he thinks they're going to get louder and stronger.

"I've even been approached by people who are interested in setting up little surgical units — almost like franchises — around the country," Dr. Turan says.

The reason is radial keratotomy, a refractive surgery procedure that can be performed on an outpatient basis and has yielded startlingly impressive results in the short time it's been used in the United States.

It's designed to provide "normal" vision for near-sighted people who have had to wear glasses or contact lenses to attain that. A very fine, sharpened hand knife (lasers will be used soon) makes eight, evenly-spaced cuts into the periphery of the cornea, forming a pattern much like the spokes on a wheel or the slices of a pizza pie, and correcting the myopia.

"The procedure was first done in Japan in the late 1940s and early 1950s," Turan says, "but it was a failure because the doctor who did it made incisions not only on the outside of the cornea but on the inside, cells that keep fluid out of the cornea were damaged, and over a number of years the cornea became cloudy.

"The Russians picked up on it in 1974. The story is a woman was hit in the eye while wearing glasses, they shattered and the fragments cut one of her corneas and corrected her vision. The Russians then did a lot of animal studies and began working successfully on humans. All the formulas are based on their work, although they've been altered some since they came to this country."

Radial keratotomy has been employed in the U.S. for only about the last five years, Turan says, and done extensively only about the last year or two.

But the boom is on. It's estimated 60 percent of America's ophthalmologists will be performing the surgery in another five years or less.

Numbers will soar, Turan thinks, when results of a "very, very favorable" study of radial keratotomy are presented to the American Academy of Ophthalmologists later this month.

Up to now, the procedure has carried considerable controversy with it.

"While the risks and complications are minimal," Turan says, "there are some. No surgery is something you should go into lightly. No guarantees can or should be made. Surgeons are wrong when they blatantly promise patients they can throw away their glasses or contacts. For the most part, that is precisely what will happen. There will be people who will still need to wear glasses — to read, for instance.

"There will be also those who criticize this procedure by calling it 'cosmetic' surgery. I don't really see that as a major concern. Medicine deals with disease but it can do more. What was controversy in the past is now standard of care.

Solid record makes Adobe highly touted oil firm

Debt control, diversification, solid management set the pace

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

Adobe Oil & Gas Corp., this week, announced third quarter earnings of 41 cents per common share, an increase of 21 percent over the same period in 1983. To date per share earning for the nine months of 1984 stand at $1.12 per share and are expected to finish the year somewhere around $1.50.

It is the fifth year in a row, through boom and bust, the firm has recorded such earning, without missing a step.

That performance should come as no surprise to those who follow oil and gas stocks, because the Midland firm is renown among industry traders as one of the best-managed and most-consistent money makers on the American Stock Exchange and has become one of the most-touted stocks among the middle-ranked independent oil and gas companies.

Earlier this year, Smith Barney ranked Adobe with Service Fracturing, Halliburton, Schlumberger, Zapata and McDermott as purchase recommendations in the oil industry.

Tyler D. Smith, in April, issued a report on Adobe recommending the purchase of the stock for the intermediate and long term. He described the company as an attractive, good-quality buy, because of the firm's prudent exploration and development program, strong cash flow, ability to handle interest expense and low debt-to-total capitalization ratio.

THE PICTURE has not changed much since then. While Adobe stock is trading considerably lower, because of recent crude oil price cuts and uncertainity over natural gas demand, it is still one of the stronger stocks on the market.

What accounts for the solid track record of Adobe, which seems to only get more solid with the passing of each year?

According to analysts, the factors that apply here are: solid management, diversification, conservative operations and prudent debt control.

A recent Rauscher, Pierce, Refsnes, Inc. report predicted Adobe stock would earn $1.60 per share this year and $1.90 per share next year.

Says the report: "Adobe is a quality company whose earning have remained intact during some difficult times in the oil and gas business. One reason is that it has kept its debt under control."

"We try to live on our income," said B.J. "Joe" Pevehouse, president, "Our bank debt is now at $70 million and we feel comfortable with that. It was $117 million."

Pevehouse who was born in the oil business (at Ranger, Texas), took a geology degree from Texas Tech in 1948 and his first job in Midland, has witnessed the boom-bust saga of the West Texas oil industry more than a few times, which may account for his skill in succesfully guiding Adobe through trecherous times.

"We run a pretty tight ship," said Pevehouse. "When oil prices dropped the first dollar in 1981, we took a look at our debt and expenditures and decided to cut back. As a consequence we didn't get caught with a lot of debt, as some did."

ONE VISIT TO the offices of Adobe is enough to convice the skeptic that the "tight ship" talk is more than just talk.

Headquartered on the twelth floor of the Western United Life Building, part of Midland's earlier skyline, there is a distinct absence of plushness in the comfortable but Spartan offices. Furniture is dated and well-used, and everywhere is the open collar look of a laid back bunch of good ole boys. If one didn't know this was one of the "best-off" oil companies in town, from appearances he would think it was lacking.

"We never did go in much for fancy offices," drawled Pevehouse, who has a reputation for "making do."

One of the things that Adobe did during the boom to "make do," reduce costs and avoid expansion while maintaining a high level of activity was to buy King Air airplane, which was used to run the "rig route."

"Instead of hiring a bunch of new and inexperienced engineers, we opted to stay with our seasoned hands and let them oversee wells some of which were 400 miles apart. They did a lot of flying," said Pevehouse, "but we didn't have to hire a bunch of engineers."

DIVERSIFICATION IS another key-word in the Adobe list of management objectives. The Midland-born firm is into coal mining, natural gas gathering systems, North Sea offshore prospects as well as oil and gas production.

As an oil exploration company, the firm maintains a diversified lease portofolio of one million acres in 27 states, and is currently drilling in eight states.

The oil side of the energy company involves about 250 employees, with half in Midland. A staff of 27 hold down the Rocky Mountain office which accounts for about 15 percent of Adobe's production. Current production is in the neighborhood of 4,400 barrels oil per day and 24.3 million cubic feet per day of gas. Again diversification has played a role in keeping gas sales healthy during a time excess.

Adobe has its gas contracts spread among 15 pipelines in a dozen states,which helps to level out the price and reduce the number of shut-in gas wells.

"If gas is curtailed in one area, its probably not in another area," says Pevehouse.

Contributing to a strong cash flow is Adobe's Pennsylvania coal mine operation which provides about one-sixth of the firms total cash flow. In 1983 the relatively low-cost strip mine operation sold 1.5 million tons of coal to produce revenues of about $50 million. The mine which employees about 240 in Pittsburg was found by Adobe's oil exploration team in Pennsylvania.

"We had our oil scouts looking for a coal company," said Pevehouse, "because at the time the oil business was all tied up in government regulation. It now gives us about $10 million a year in cash flow."

WHEN THE OIL INDUSTRY went overseas in 1971, Adobe followed suit and participated in wells in Somalia and Africa which came up dry, another venture in the North Sea was not so dry.

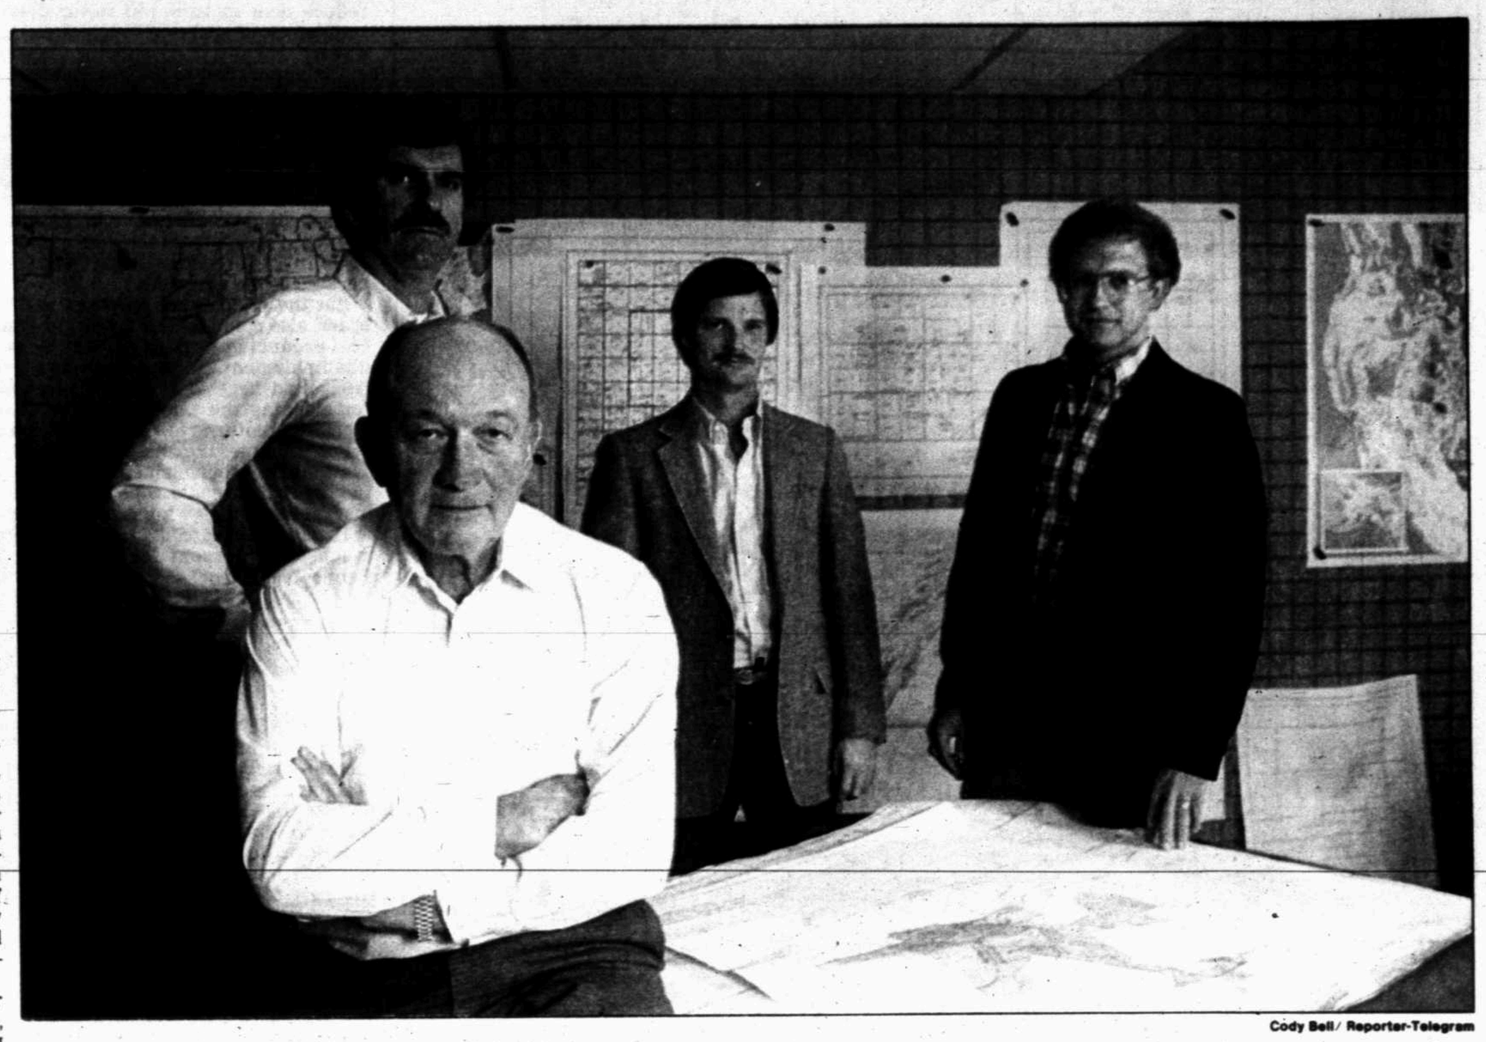

Adobe sold its North Sea interests in 1982 for $30 million retaining a small royalty interest and 25 percent of revenues after payout. The move reduced Adobe debt from $114.7 million to $89.5 million, but the firm has no future plans to take on any more international ventures, even though it is looking offshore in the Gulf.

Adobe has agreed to spend $28 million over the next four years for a small interest in 66 tracts in the Gulf of Mexico. Shell Oil Co. is the operator.

The pursuit of diversification within the energy industry has even led Adobe into the refining business. Adobe bought the Wickett Refinery, a small operation near Wickett and rebuilt it in 1975 with the intention of selling boiler fuel oil to the nearby West Texas Electric plant, but the order for the heating oil never came and the refinery is now closed.

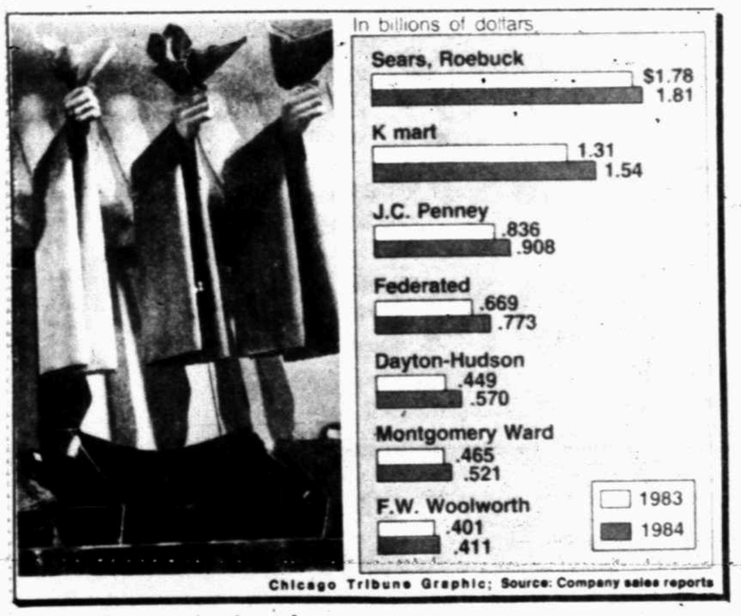

Gas gathering promises to be a major business for the firm in the future. This year Adobe became 24 percent owner in Gas Gathering Systems Inc., which will build and acquire pipelines. The operation was financed by $43.5 million raised from financial institutions and Adobe will manage the operation.

Pevehouse explains than instead of being just a producer, Adobe wants to buy, sell, trade, and build pipelines as well as transport gas.

Soviet factories 'link' with counterparts

By THEODORE SHABAD
N.Y. Times News Service

The Soviet Union, in a move aimed at closer economic contacts with its allies, has authorized factories to establish "direct links" with their counterparts in other Communist countries.

The contacts could speed the infusion of advanced technology into the Soviet economy and erode the sweeping powers of the Foreign Trade Ministry.

Konstantin U. Chernenko, the Soviet leader, has generally been viewed as reluctant to pursue changes in economic organization begun by his predecessor, Yuri V. Andropov. But the new factory-to-factory dealings appear to be part of a continuing effort to relax controls and to endow industrial managers with more initiative.

"Direct links" is a Soviet catch phrase used for short cuts in the bureaucratic maze of the highly structured economy. Traditionally factories had contacts only through the government ministries that ran them. Foreign transactions, moreover, had to be channeled through trade agencies.

By letting plants work directly with the technologically more advanced Eastern Europeans, Soviet planners hope to foster modernization. East Germany and Poland, in particular, are thought to be ahead in high-tech industries such as microelectronics.

There are no indications that Soviet plants will be allowed to deal directly with enterprises in the West.

Under a decree, signed June 7 by Premier Nikolai A. Tikhonov and made public only recently, Soviet plant managers will be authorized to turn to Soviet-bloc enterprises for tools, parts and and services. The managers will be "personally responsible" for the cost-effectiveness of these deals, and the Foreign Trade Ministry is to "facilitate" such contacts.

The decree applies not only to other members of the Council for Economic Mutual Assistance, the Soviet bloc's economic alliance, but to Yugoslavia, an independent Communist country with a market economy.

The alliance comprises the Soviet Union, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Poland, Romania, Vietnam, Mongolia and Cuba. The decree fostering direct links does not apply to China, North Korea, Cambodia and Laos, none of which are part of the Soviet-dominated economic bloc.

Provisions for direct linkages have been included in long-term economic accords, extending to the year 2000, that the Soviet Union has signed with Poland and East Germany. Late last month, at a meeting in Havana of the heads of government of the Soviet bloc, Tikhonov confirmed that factory-to-factory dealings had already gone into effect with the two countries.

The June edict, which appears in the latest issue of the Collection of Decrees of the Government of the U.S.S.R., an official gazette, seems to carry out an idea proposed 20 years ago by Aleksei N. Kosygin, then the premier.

He suggested in 1965 that Soviet plants be allowed to conduct foreign-trade operations on their own and to benefit from producing high-grade goods for export.

Parallel calls special meeting for stockholders

Staff Reports

Parallel Petroleum Corp. will call a special stockholders meeting December 12 to consider the merger of the firm into a newly formed Delaware corporation, according to Frank Delay, president.

The move which must be approved by two-thirds of the stockholders of Parallel would effectively change the company from a Texas corporation to a Delaware corporation, while the corporate name and management would remain the same.

Delay explained that if the merger is approved, Parallel will acquire the proved oil and gas properties owned by six limited partnerships in Amarillo, and will add four new directors to the board of directors. New board members would be: Thomas R. Cambridge, petroleum geologist; A.L. Nail, petrolum landman and W.P. Buckthal and Danny Conklin, both petroleum geologists.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Did the Republicans save Mack Wallace?

"Don't throw the baby out with the wash water," is an old Texas phrase for "don't get carried away."

Mack Wallace, chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission, almost got thrown out with the wash water this week as Texans got carried away and jumped the political fence, en masse, to pull the lever on a straight Republican ticket. Nowhere in the nation were the Reagan coattails as big as they were in Texas.

Political coattails can be good for a nation or state, bringing a clean political sweep where clean sweeping is needed. But, they can also have a negative effect upon seasoned, qualified and respected politicians, unfortunate enough to get caught in the wrong year with the wrong label.

So zealous were Texans in their rush to repudiate the liberal Democratic policies and politicians, that they pulled the wrong lever on some good friends of Texas, who carried the Democratic label. A number of conservative democrats throughout the state bit the dust. Mack Wallace was almost one of them.

TO GET AN IDEA how strong was the repudiation of the Democratic Party in Texas consider this:

—Wallace had 11 years as an incumbent to build name identification and win friends in the state. His opponent was a relatively unknown. No one, not even the Republicans were quiet certain who he was or what his qualifications were—if any.

—Wallace was well-versed in all the technical, legal, quasi-judicial aspects of regulating Texas' oil and gas, coal, and LPG industries as well as state utilities and transportation. Henderson was a 78-year old real, estate agent, with no visible credentials for holding the office.

—Wallace spent over $350,000 and campaigned statewide on the issue of continued, prudent conservation of Texas' resources. Henderson had no real issues, hardly campaigned and spent only $14,000, refusing contributions even from the Republican Party.

In a normal year Henderson wouldn't have had a chance against the veteran Wallace, but in this year of repudiation, he nearly beat the socks off him.

WHAT SAVED WALLACE? There is evidence that it was the Republican Party itself that saved Wallace. While no one would say it for the record, it was hinted by several ranking Republicans that this, indeed, was the case. Locally, Bob Monaghan, Midland County Republican chairman, normally anxious to talk about Republican causes, even refused to comment on the Wallace-Henderson race. And, in a pre-election interview former governor Bill Clements, actually endorsed Democrat Wallace.

"He has done a great job for Texas. I endorse him without reservation," said Clements who then asked this reporter if he had switched parties yet.

From all appearances it would seem that if the Republicans were genuinely anxious to beat Mack Wallace they could not have picked a better time to do it. A Wallace defeat could have been easily engineered with the selection of a highly qualified candidate and outpouring of campaign funds and a presidential plug or two.

No qualified Republican, however, in this opportune year approached the office, or if they did, we do not know about it. We do know that Henderson was not recruited by the Republican Party for the post.

WAS THE REPUBLICAN PARTY working behind the scenes to save Wallace's skin? We can only speculate that they were. The Republicans are no fools. It is a party saturated with oilmen and other assorted entrepreneurs that know the value to the state of having a qualified and seasoned individual on the Texas Railroad Commission who understands the complexities of the oil industry. An informal survey, by this writer, of local oil and gas operators confirmed this. Republican or no, most supported Wallace vigorously.

While Wallace may be a little miffed that his experience, intense campaign, and endorsement by nearly every major newspaper in the state counted for naught, he does understand that it was a legitimate sweep.

"It was an unusaual year for a Commission race," he said. "I got caught at the top of the ballot with Mondale and Doggett. I always thought that a man's qualifications should count for something when running for public office. It's the only way to get good public servants."

WALLACE SAID he was afraid that a coattail situation might develop in Texas and that he didn't take anything for granted.

"I made a full campaign of it," he Wallace.

GOP State Chairman, George Strake, said he hoped Mack Wallace and the few remaining conservative Democrats in the state got the message.

The message, says Strake, is that Texas is conservative...Republicans are getting straight ticket voters now, and will eventually be the dominant party in Texas.

"I'll just use the pages of the Midland Reporter-Telegram to issue a formal invitation to Mack Wallace to come on over to the Republican Party, where he belongs. His own party don't want. We do." said the Republican Chairman from his Houston office.

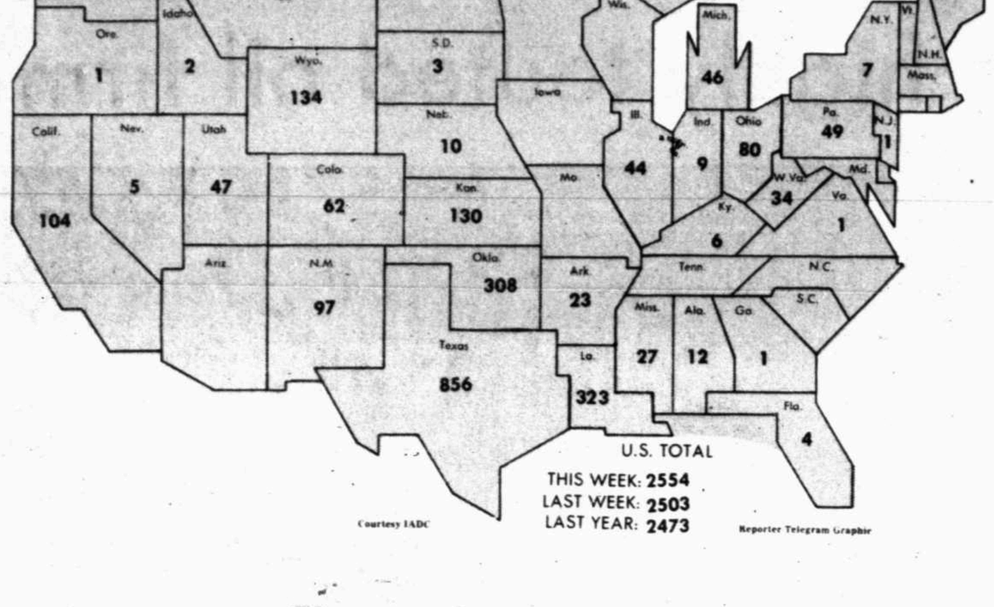

Strake said the old Democrat Party that could tolerate conservative Democrats had been confiscated by some very strange, special interest groups.

"I would hope the Charlie Stenholms, Mack Wallaces and Sam Halls of Texas would realize that they would sleep better at night if they would come on over," said Strakes.

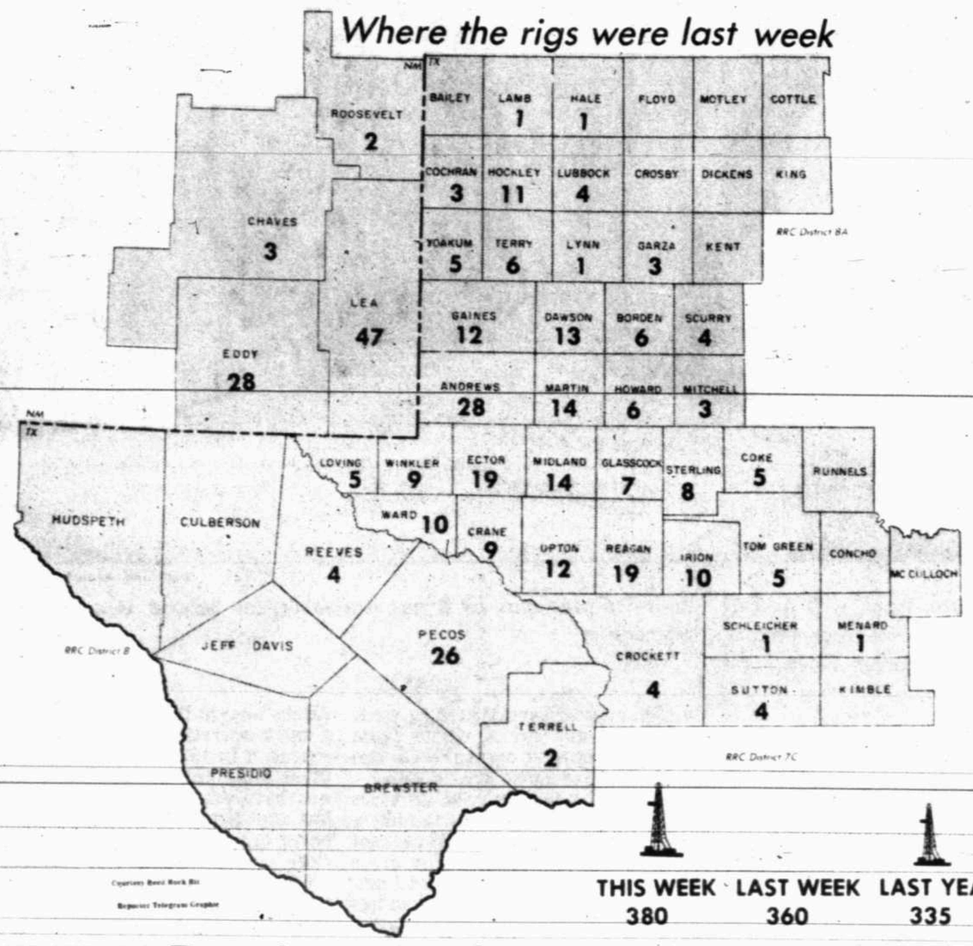

Could it be that the Republican Party saved Democrat Mack Wallace from political oblivion in hopes that he would switch? Stranger things have happened in the world of politics, as Senator-elect Phil Gramm will tell you.

U.S. Rig Count

Where the rigs were last week

Basin, nation increases

Both the Permian Basin and national working rig counts showed sizeable increases this week.

The Permian Basin's count increased by 20 rigs — up to 380 from last week's 360. A year ago the count was recorded at 335 for the week.

Lea County, N.M. continued to have 47 rigs this week while Andrews and Eddy County, N.M. both had 28.

Martin County showed an increase of four rigs, bringing its total up to 14 for the week. Gaines, Howard and Ward all had an addition of three rigs each. Dawson County gained two rigs this week as well as Ector County.

Nationally, the United States count increased by 51 rigs — from last week's 2503 to 2554. A year ago the nation had 2473 working rigs.

California showed an increase of 12 rigs this week, making its total 104 for the week over its previous total of 92. Kansas showed 18 more rigs this week. Its total was 130. Montana's total increased by 11 — up from 34 to 45.

However, Texas' total dropped from 863 to 856.

Canada's rig count also decreased. The nation showed 227 rigs for the week compared to last week's 252.

EPA proposes smokestack regulations

By MATT YANCEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Electric utilities that built tall smokestacks for dispersing sulfur dioxide to comply with clean air laws in the 1970s would incur major expenses to cut emissions under a proposed government regulation.

The new regulations, proposed Thursday by the Environmental Protection Agency, would effectively require the utilities and a few other industrial plants to reduce their emissions of sulfur dioxide — a primary component of acid rain — by 800,000 to 2.9 million tons a year.

The annual cost of the new reductions was estimated at $300 million to $1.4 billion.

Two-thirds to three-fourths of the reduction mandated by the regulations would have to come from coal-burning electric power plants in six states — Ohio, Georgia, Indiana, Missouri, West Virginia and Tennessee.

An economic analysis commissioned by the EPA shows that consumers could face electric rate increases of up to 3.6 percent in Georiga and 2.1 percent in Ohio because of the new rules.

But the regulations, proposed as a result of a court order, also could have a devastating impact on several coal-producing regions already beleagured by high unemployment. To meet the new regulations, utilities would have to either install expensive scrubbers for cleaning the smoke from their stacks or switch from high-sulfur to low-sulfur coal supplies.

For example, the analysis conducted by ICF Inc., a Washington economic consultant, for EPA shows that the regulations could wipe out up to 20 percent of the market for Indiana's high-sulfur coal production.

The regulations could cause the market to drop as much as 17 percent for Ohio coal, 5.5 percent for Pennsylvania coal, 8.1 percent for high-sulfur coal mined in western Kentucky and 5.4 percent for coal from northern West Virginia.

Smelters and paper mills would also be covered by the new regulations, but Assistant EPA Administrator Joseph Cannon said the overwhelming majority of reductions will have to come from electric power plants in the East.

Agency officials estimated that the changes will affect between 75 and 100 power plants built since 1970 and with stacks ranging from 200 to 1,200 feet in height. But they said they don't know just which ones yet.

"That's one of the things that we have to learn," Cannon said. "It's something of a magical mystery tour. Emission limits are figured on the basis of computer models, not actual reality."

EPA is under an order from the U.S. Court of Appeals here to make the regulations final by Jan 18, 1985.

The agency had issued regulations in 1982 that would have continued to allow the height of smokestacks as a consideration in meeting air quality standards.

The court, however, struck those rules down, agreeing with the Sierra Club and the Natural Resources Defense Council that 1977 amendments to the Clean Air Act require the agency to do more to reduce sulfur dioxide emissions instead of dispersing them over wider areas through tall stacks.

Blaming electric power plants in the Ohio Valley and South for acid rain that has damaged lakes in northern New York state, New England and parts of Canada, environmentalists have been demanding reductions of 9.5 million to 12 millions tons per year in sulfur dioxide pollution.

Though the regulations are not specifically aimed at acid rain, Cannon said they could have the maximum estimated reduction would reduce the total annual sulfur dioxide pollution in the United States by up to 12 percent.

U.S. free-world exports on rise

WASHINGTON—Much of the data coming out of Washington paints a bleak picture of the United States' position in world trade. The record deficits that have been reported in the current year have caused many Americans to advocate the erection of trade barriers between us and the rest of the world under the assumption that we have more to lose to world trade than we have to benefit from it. The deficit picture has caused many to conclude that America's position in world trade and its ability to compete have deteriorated significantly in recent years.

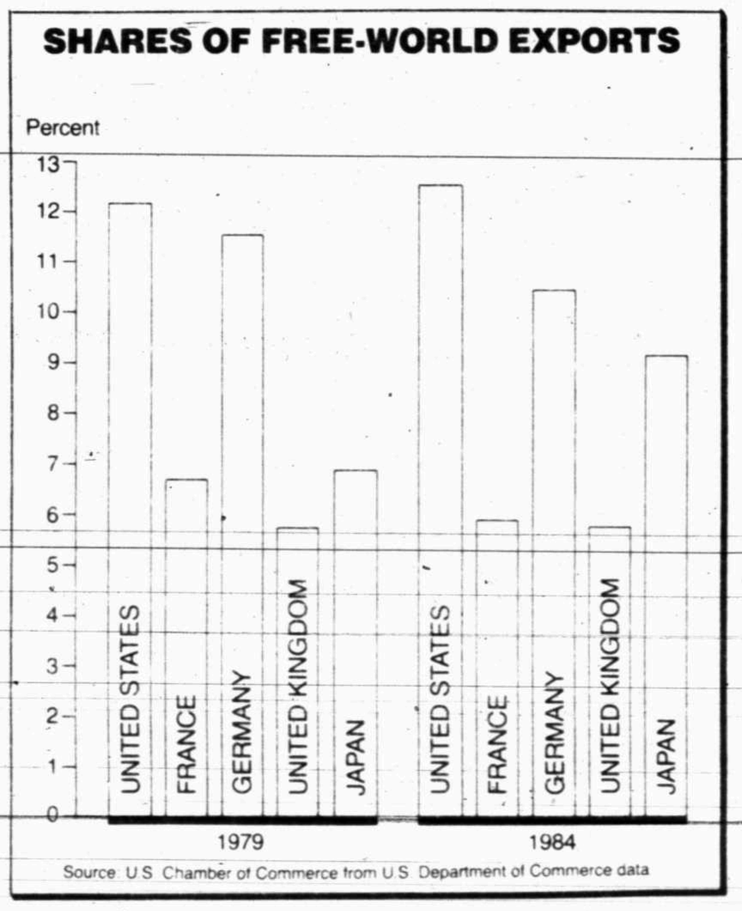

The fact of the matter is that this nation's share of free-world exports was greater in the first quarter of 1984 than it was in 1979, increasing from 12.2 percent of the total to 12.5 percent over that period. At the same time, exports from other major developed countries were shrinking in relation to the total export market. For example, France's share of free-world imports declined from 6.7 percent to 5.8 percent during those years, while exports from Germany declined from 11.5 percent to 10.4 percent, and exports from the United Kingdom declined from 5.8 percent to 5.6 percent.

Japan was the only other major free-world country where total exports as a share of free-world exports actually increased, from 6.9 percent to 9.1 percent, between 1979 and the first quarter of 1984, the latest period for which figures are available.

The United States, however, continued to maintain its position as the leading exporter, with one-eighth of all free-world exports.

Nearly five million Americans depend on manufacturing exports for their jobs. Of this total, only about one-half were directly employedin the manufacturing sector. Some 2.1 million persons were employed in trade, transporting, furnishing business services and providing utility and phone services to the exporting manufacturers.

America is the world's leading exporter of food, fertilizers, turbines, agricultural machinery, computers, household appliances and aerospace industry products.

Four bank directors sue former Cowboys owner

DALLAS (AP) — Four directors of a South Texas bank are among 16 people and trusts suing the former owner of the Dallas Cowboys and a business associate for more than $2.2 million.

The suit, filed last week in state district court against Clinton W. Murchison Jr. and Louis A. Farris Jr. alleges the money is owed on 16 notes signed by the two men since Feb. 28, 1983.

The bank directors are from Citizens State Bank in Jackson County where Murchison owned approximately 3 million shares of stock in 1983, The Dallas Morning News reported Thursday.

The plaintiffs contend one of the notes, the only one included in the suit, is scheduled for payment March 28, 1986 at the bank, located in Ganado. They say, however, that Murchison and Farris defaulted on all of the notes last month.

An attorney for Murchison and Farris Wednesday declined comment on the suit.

M. H. Brock, one of the directors filing the suit, says in the suit that his is owned $371,024 — the largest portion of the $2.2 million.

Best way to beat stock market is to outwait it

Hearst Feature Service

When you think about all of the pain and money spent on various complex investment theories and methods, you must find yourself wondering: "Isn't there an easier way?"

There certainly is, and here's a simple, common-sense idea: If you want to beat the market, outwait it. If you go long term, and stay with it, you should be able to make 6 percent to 7 percent after inflation. And that adds up.

If you pin short-term traders down, most would admit they lose money on many of their dealings. Like the horse player, they may hit that hot spell that brings them back, but often it gets them only even. That's one reason why, particularly for the smaller investor, I prefer long-term investing.

One way to do this, of course, is through the Individual Retirement Account, or IRA, everyone's tax shelter. IRAs allow you to invest $2,000 a year in almost any plan you select and deduct the amount from your income for tax purposes. But there now is another plan, sort of a super-IRA. It's called IRS Rule 401(k). It's ideal for long-term investors, both as a tax shelter and an investment.

There is only one catch. The company you work for must authorize it, for in actuality it is a salary-reduction plan. You can authorize your company to cut your salary by up to $30,000 a year, tuck the money away in a mutual fund or a money fund (almost anything you wish to invest in), and deduct the amount from your tax. Actually, it's not a deduction; you merely do not get the money. And, of course, you do not pay tax on what you do not get. The tax comes upon retirement, when your income will be much lower.

John R. Rockwell, vice president of T. Rowe Price Associates, the big mutual fund distributor, estimates that 62 percent of the 200 largest companies in the nation offer 401(k) plans. He estimates that 85 percent of the nation's thousand-largest companies will be offering them by the end of next year.

It's also of advantage to corporations, because it cuts the costs of pension plans. Many companies are replacing pension plans with 401(k) programs.

Says Rockwell: "From the company's viewpoint, it's not very expensive. It's paticularly good for a smaller growth company that doesn't have a retirement plan because of the cost. It helps to retain key employees. And it makes employees feel better about their company. If they feel better about their company, they're going to be more productive."

What is the rationale for the government doing something like this in a time of deep budget deficits? Here is Rockwell's reasoning: "Let's recognize that Social Security is not going to do the entire retirement job for most people. This is an important supplement." Also, the government will get its tax someday. It seems that's always true.

The 401(k) plan has some significant advantages over conventional IRAs, in addition to allowing a much greater annual contribution that can be deferred from tax. (Yes, interest on the investment also is deferred.) Here are some:

– Lump-sum distribution under 401(k) made at retirement qualifies for 10-year forward tax averaging. IRA plans have five-year averaging.

– You can take loans from the money stashed away for certain (as yet largely undefined) purposes. Also, if you leave the job, you can collect your cash without paying the 10 percent penalty assessed under IRA plans.

Of course, you have to decide how to use 401(k) when your company announces the plan.

Remember this: Social Security won't do it. It never was intended as full retirement protection, it was intended as a supplement.

Human needs, machinery often conflict

N.Y. Times News Service

DETROIT — Expensive machinery is much more efficiently employed when it is operated for more than eight hours a day, which is why many factories run double shifts or more. Some facilities, such as nuclear power plants, oil refineries and glass plants, are typically kept running around the clock for months.

Unfortunately for the human workers involved, the demands of these machines often conflict with the "internal clocks" we have inherited from our primitive ancestors, who generally were active during the day and rested at night.

Although these internal pacemakers can be reset — at least in some individuals — there are a variety of physical and psychological problems caused by unusual and rotating work shifts. These include chronic fatigue, mood changes and irritability, poor job performance and inattention to safety, digestive disturbances and chemical dependencies.

Since shift work is increasing, more attention is being paid to a subject known as "chronohygiene," the study of the effects of work schedules on health, safety and performance in occupations where non-standard shifts are required. As many as 25 percent of American workers have shifts other than the standard one of 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., industrial health specialists estimate, and 75 percent of workers will have unusual schedules at some point in their lives.

"The best shifts are the ones that conflict with a person's social life as little as possible," says Dennis J. Paustenbach, an official of the Syntex Corp. and a member of a committee established by the American Industrial Hygiene Association to study the health effects of shift work.

For example, he said, in industries where 12-hour shifts are standard, it would be preferable to start them at 6 a.m. and 6 p.m. rather than midnight and noon.

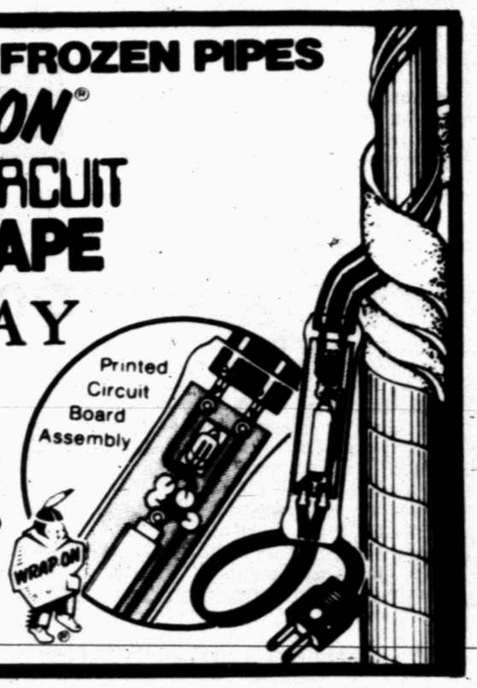

The reason is that workers starting at 6 a.m. or 6 p.m. would have some time to be with their children, either before or after school, and perhaps have a meal with the entire family. A person starting at noon, however, would probably not be awake until after school begins and one starting at midnight would probably be asleep when the children come home. "A 3-to-3 shift makes even less sense for the same reasons," Paustenbach added.

Is Bigger Better?

Midland has a very big financial community. There are many big banks, filled with many big bankers, who love to tell you just how big they are.

At Midland American Bank, we too are proud of our size. We're the smallest bank in town. We say this with pride because although we're smaller in assets and deposits than our taller neighbors, we're bigger when it comes to ideas, service and convenience.

You're probably a lot like us. Small today, with big plans for the future. Whether your financial needs are related to your business or your family, Midland American Bank offers some surprising advantages.

Our ability to expedite loan decisions is remarkably fast. Our bankers give their customers unequaled personal attention. And with our main bank downtown at Big Spring and Texas and our mini bank at Cuthbert and Andrews Hwy., we're certainly the most convenient. There's even plenty of free, ground-level parking at our downtown location.

We're not a big bank. But we feel good about the big things we do. We think you will too.

Midland American Bank — for people who want more than just a big bank. Come see us today.

Permian Landmen set Tuesday meeting

The Permian Basin Landmen's Association will meet Tuesday night, Nov. 13, at 6:30 p.m. at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Guest speaker for the evening will be Clayton Williams, Midland oil operator and rancher.

Petroleum engineers to meet Wednesday

The Trans-Pecos Section of the Society of Petroleum Engineers (SPE) will meet at 11:30 a.m. November 14 at the Odessa Country Club.

Lunch will be $10 per person.

Mark S. Dinello, senior staff plant engineering supervisor with Amoco Production Co., will speak on "Bulk CO2 Removal Achieved Using Membrane Separation," and will include the theory, design, operation and data obtained from a pilot CO2 removal facility.

Oil and gas tax expert set to speak to accountants

The Petroleum Accounting Society of the Permian Basin will hold its monthly meeting at Ranchland Hills Country Club on Wednesday, Nov. 14.

The technical session, beginning at 5:30 p.m., will feature Mr. Laddie Long, manager of the University of Texas land, oil and gas mineral interests. He will lecture on "State Oil and Gas Leases."

The featured speaker will be Mr. Paul Koehler, partner and national director of Tax Services for Fox & Co. out of Denver, Colorado. He will speak on "Current Developments in Oil and Gas Taxation."

Koehler received his bachelors's degree in business administration from Northern Illinois University in 1963. He has over 20 years of experience as a federal tax consultant, and has placed emphasis on oil and gas taxation.

He has been a speaker before a number of groups on subjects involving oil and gas taxation. He has established and is an active member of an oil and gas taxation consulting group within his firm.

Knitting in home okayed by DOL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Labor Department says it will permit manufacturers of knitted outerwear to employ people for work in their homes, if the companies first get a government certificate.

The new rule, which takes effect in 30 days, grew out of the so-called "Vermont knitters" controversy involving a few hundred women working at their homes. It was published Monday in the Federal Register.

The Reagan administration first lifted a longstanding ban on such work in the home in 1981. That action was challenged by the International Ladies Garment Workers Union and the ban was reimposed by a federal appeals court.

Under the new regulation, work at home would be permitted only by knitted outerwear makers who obtain federal certificates. A ban on six other categories of work at home, including women's apparel, jewelry manufacturing, gloves and mittens, buttons and buckles, handkerchief manufacturing and embroideries, remains in effect.

A union lawyer, Max Zimny, said the requirement that employers obtain a government certificate is "an old wrinkle with a new coat ... There is a great incentive for home workers not to complain (to the government about poor conditions). These people are not going to get themselves into trouble by complaining ... even when you find them and identify them."

Zimny said he was speaking for himself and not for the union, and said he had not yet made a recommendation to union leaders on whether to fight the latest department move in the courts.

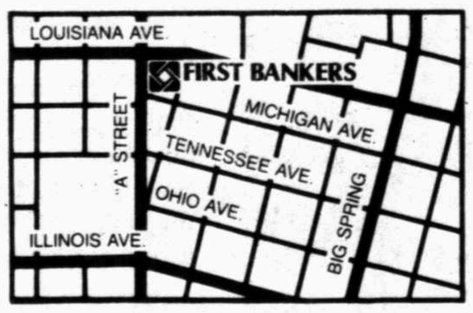

The prohibitions on home work were first imposed by the government in an effort to curb exploitation of workers who toiled long hours at subpar pay in so-called "sweatshops" in the clothing industry.

Garment workers union President Sol Chaikin has contended that lifting the ban on this sort of work would lead again to exploitation of workers and subpar wages. The so-called "Vermont knitters" became a cause celebre for unions which have charged the administration with seeking to undermine labor standards.

The union contends the new rule was proposed mainly to protect the jobs of a few hundred home knitters, mostly the women working in Vermont, at the risk of undermining the working conditions of many others in urban areas.

The Permian Business Group is pleased to announce the addition of MARK D. LAND to its staff of professionals as sales manager for its line of Oil & Gas Accounting and Distributor/Order Processing software products for use on IBM's system 34, 36 and 38 computers.

Land, a Midland native and 1976 graduate of Texas Tech School of Business, has over nine yearsof automated accounting experience including seven years as controller and manager for a group of closely held corporations in Midland.

PBG has been the area distributor for the J.D. Edwards Oil & Gas Accounting software products since 1980 and also sells and supports software packages for the distributor/supply companies as well as group medical practice software for clinics.

DON HEWETT has joined McKay Engineering, Inc., manufacturer of the 'Petro-Rod' fiberglass sucker rods, as regional sales manager.

He was previously employed with Dover/Norris Company for 12 years, and most recently served as district manager in Midland. Other oil field experience includes three years with Mid-Continent Supply and two eears with Superior Supply.

A native of West Texas, Hewett is a graduate of Big Spring High School and attended Texas Tech University. He resides in Midland with his wife, Donna, and their four children.

W. WAYNE ROYE, Midland geologist, was among a group of major contributors to the Geology Foundation and the Department of Geological Sciences of the University of Texas at Austin, who were recognized at a reception and dinner in Austin recently.

GARY J. LAMB has joined Grover Oil Co. of Midland as landman. Lamb will be responsible for Grover's land operations in the Permian Basin. Prior to joining Grover Oil Co., he was a landman with Texaco Inc. in Midland for three years. Lamb holds a business degree from the University of Texas at Austin.

Flo Dean, Vice President of Success Personnel, a Jim Sale Enterprises Co., announces the association of CHARLES LOUT as business development consultant.

Lout comes to the company with 11 years experience in human resources. His last six years were with Compressor Systems, Inc., a Midland-based corporation.

Success has begun a business development consultant division with Lout as manager of the Human Resource Sources. His expertise can now provide companies unique and special services, concerning federal and state employment.

Success is located at One Petroleum Center, Bldg 2, Suite 101.

Long-time Permian Basin resident and radio personality JERRY LOVELL has joined the staff of Big 2/KMID-TV. Lovell has assumed the position of account executive in local sales.

Lovell has been in radio broadcasting for the past 14 years, serving as general manager of KYXX Radio for eight years as well as morning show personality on the station.

A graduate of Odessa High School and Odessa College, Lovell has lived in the Permian Basin for 41 years. He resides in Odessa.

JIM BLAIN, president of Johnn Drilling Co. in Odessa, was elected to serve as the 1985 state vice chairman for the Texas Association of Business during the association's 62nd Annual Conference in Dallas last week.

After completing his time as vice chairman, he will be in line to assume the leadership role as chairman in 1986.

Blain has also served as treasurer in 1984 and was presented his 21st Life Member Award by the association. The award is earned by bringing a prescribed number of new members into the Association.

BOB HONEA, vice president of Champion Chemicals, Inc. in Odessa, was elected to serve as the 1985 Region III chairman for TAB.

The organization is a statewide alliance of about 5,600 business executives who are dedicated to enhancing and maintaining the business climate of Texas.

MICHAEL HUGHES of Texas American Bank in Midland was among more than 1,200 bankers who attended this summer's two-week session of the Graduate School of Banking at University of Wisconsin-Madison.

The bankers took 24 courses ranging from commercial loan analysis to strategic issues in bank management at this year's 40th annual session.

The conference is presented by the Central States Conference of Bankers Association, representing 16 midwestern states, and by the university.

Agri-businesses may be eligible for loans

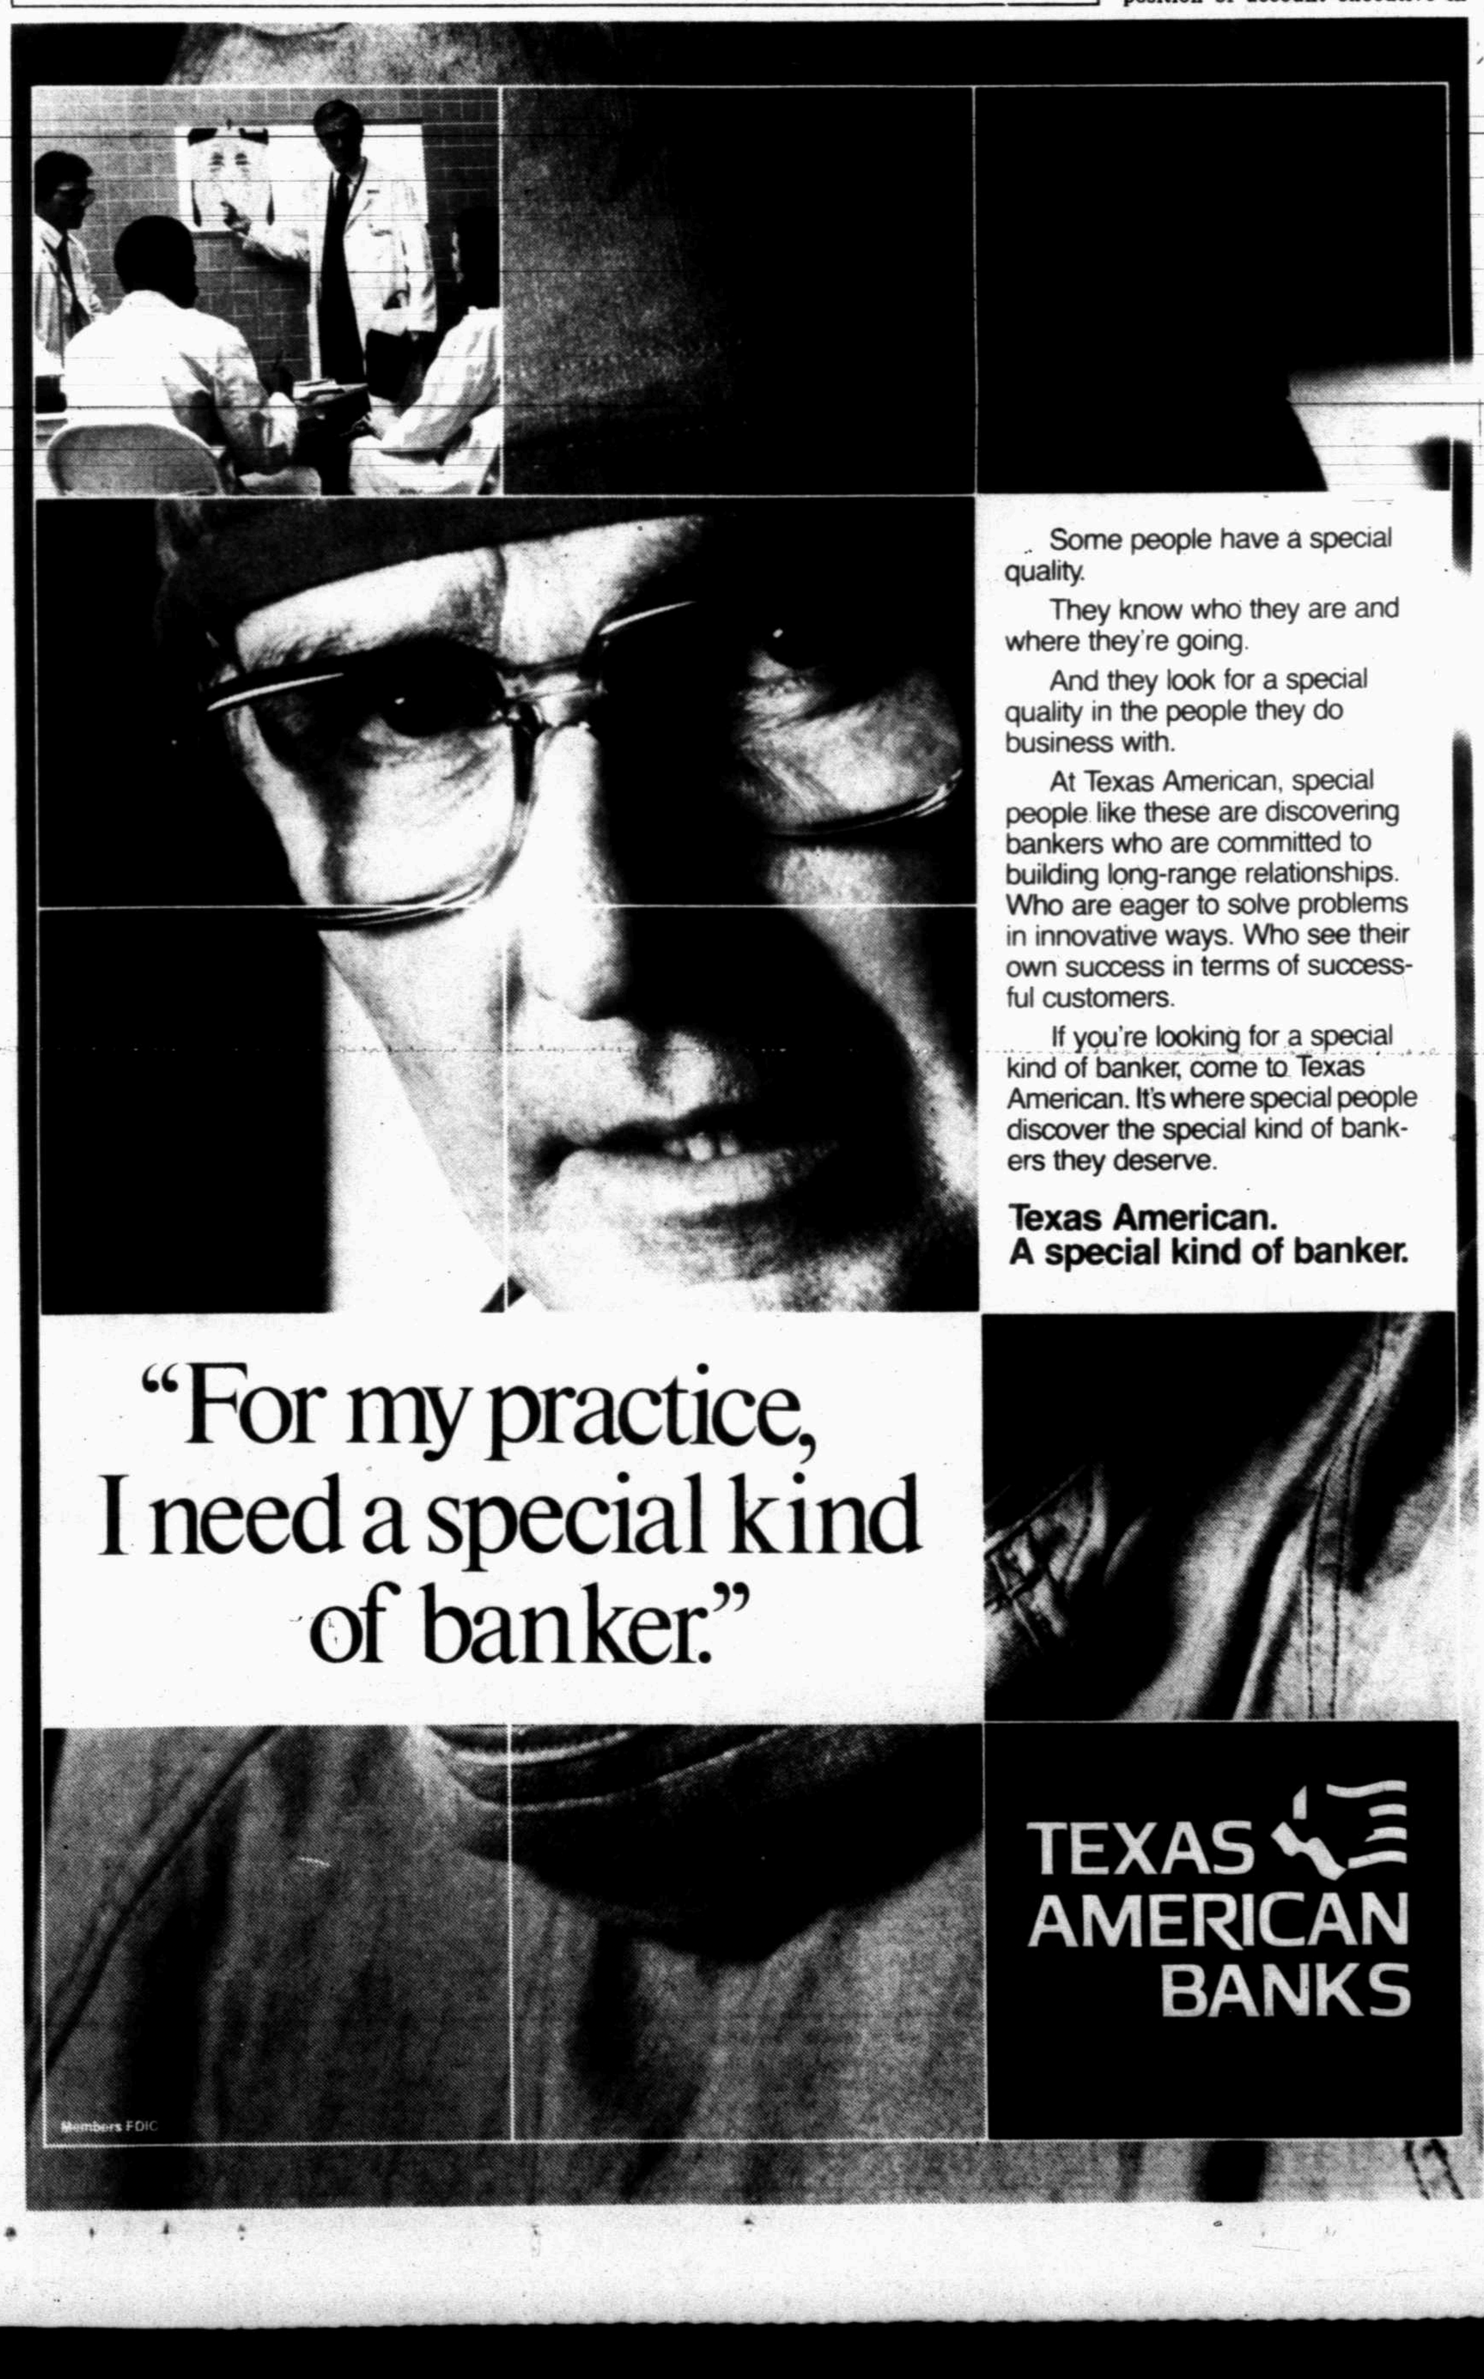

LUBBOCK — Agriculture-related businesses in three West Texas counties may be eligible to apply for financial assistance from the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) under the agency's Economic Injury Disaster Loan (EIDL) program.

Ag-related businesses sustaining losses due to severe drought beginning on Jan. 1, 1984, and continuing, may be eligible for the loans through June 3, 1985, according to Philip J. O'Jibway, district director of SBA's Lubbock office.

West Texas counties included in the recent declaration are Hansford, Knox and Martin.

"Only business loan applicants who are determined unable to obtain credit elsewhere are eligible for assistance from the SBA," O'Jibway said. "EIDL loans are made by SBA to small businesses and small agricultural cooperatives which sustained substantial economic injury as a direct result of physical disaster in their county, whether or not they had actual physical damage."

The interest rate for loans processed under this designation is 4 percent for business concerns without credit available elsewhere, and 10.5 percent for small agricultural cooperatives without credit elsewhere.

Some people have a special quality.

They know who they are and where they're going.

And they look for a special quality in the people they do business with.

At Texas American, special people like these are discovering bankers who are committed to building long-range relationships. Who are eager to solve problems in innovative ways. Who see their own success in terms of successful customers.

If you're looking for a special kind of banker, come to Texas American. It's where special people discover the special kind of bankers they deserve.

Texas American.
A special kind of banker.

KATIE KIDD has been named associate producer of the Midland-based company, The Producers, Inc. and DRU-ANNE PERRY has joined the staff as assistant to the producer for the feature film "Shadow Warriors" to be produced by the company.

Ms. Kidd uses her background in marketing research to predict trends, analyse marketresearch and draw conclusions from demographic studies. Since joining the Producers, Inc. in 1983, she has conducted an extensive study of robotics for Midland College, designed marketing and implemented marketing plans and worked on commercials. She was producer for the Producers' first motion picture "Rescue."

Ms. Perry, a former Midlander, now lives in Fort Worth and recently received a degree in radio-television-film from Texas Christian University. She worked at radion and television stations and in two films for Seburbia Studio Productions. She has assisted Lorimar's "Dallas" casting director Rody Kent. She will continue to work for the Producers in Dallas and Los Angeles until the spring shooting of the movie.

JANET POLLARD has been named director of music for "Shadow Warriors." She will be responsible for recruiting new musical talent for the film as well as coordinating the musical activities of the production. She was director of music for "Rescue", producing, recording and writing two original songs. She has also won the band of the year award from the Odessa Brand New Opry and has also been a featured performer and song leader for several national conventions of Kappa Kappa Gamma.

Howard, Weil, Labouisse, Friedrichs Inc. has announced an expansion of its Midland office with the association of three additional registered representatives, said William J. Hill, vice president and branch manager.

WAYNE CHOATE, a native of Odessa, hold both an MBA in oil and gas marketing and a B.S. in petroleum engineering from the Universty of Texas. He previously served as registered petroleum engineer with Triton Engineering and Services Co.

PATRICK A. FOLEY received a bachelor of business administration degree from Baylor University. He earned a double major in finance and entrepreneurship with a minor in accounting. Foley is a native of Alpine.

LEE G. KOONCE, a native of Midland, has a B.A. in business administration with an emphasis in accounting from Graceland College. He was previously associated with Dawson Geophysical as an accountant and computer operator.

Howard Weil is a New Orleans-based full service investment firm. The firm makes a market in a diversity of stocks and maintains a research department following research departments and the oil service and oil ad gas industries in depth.

SID ZIEGLER recently joined the staff of Colony Energy Corp. as operations coordinator. He had been with Energy Industries as Midland branch salesman since 1982.

As operations coordinator, Ziegler will be responsible for Colony's natural gas field operations. He is a 1976 graduate of North Texas State University.

FRANK THOMASY and SYLVIA BAILEY MUNOZ have been selected as employees of the quarter for Tiger Charter Corp. Among their achievements, they were cited for drafting and editing a continuous maintenance program for the company following FAA approval for large aircraft operation.

Prior to joining the Tiger staff as general manager in April of 1982, Thomasy was director of personnel for Barnett Industries in San Antonio.

Munoz has been maintenance secretary for Tiger since February of this year.

Nineteen Energas Co. employees were honored Wednesday evening at a service awards dinner at Ranchland Hills Country Club of Midland.

Charles K. Vaughan, chairman and chief executive officer from Amarillo, and B.J. Hackler of Midland, manager of the Southern Division, presented the awards.

Midland insurance agents RICHARD HARVEY and J. WOODFORD SALE recently attended the Southwestern Life Insurance Co.'s 1984 agent convention at the U.S. Virgin Islands.

Sale was recognized for his membership in the Grand Council Assembly. He and Harvey were both recognized for membership in the President's Honor Club.

TXO reports higher income for fiscal year

DALLAS — Texas Oil & Gas Corp. reported today that net income for the fiscal year ended August 31, 1984 rose 17 percent to a record $346.2 million, or $1.65 per share, compared with $295.7 million, or $1.41 per share, in fiscal 1983. (Per-share figures are adjusted for the 2-for-1 stock split made on January 13, 1984.)

Revenues in fiscal 1984 aggregated $2.09 billion, up 12 percent from $1.87 billion a year ago. Cash flow (funds provided by oper-ations) totaled $754.9 million, a gain of 21 percent over the year-earlier $622.2 million. Fiscal 1984 capital expenditures were $768.7 million, an increase of 16 percent above the prior year's $662.3 million. Cash dividends in fiscal 1984 totaled $34.6 million, up 22 percent from the $28.4 million paid a year earlier.

Return on average stockholders' equity in fiscal 1984 was 26 percent, the 10th consecutive year that such return exceeded 25 percent. Assets totaled $3.44 billion, up 18 percent. Stock-holders' equity rose 26 percent to $1.51 billion. Total capital (equity plus long-term debt) increased 18 percent to $2.21 billion at August 31, 1984, with 68 percent being comprised of equity.

William L. Hutchison, Chairman of the Board, and Forrest E. Hoglund, President and Chief Executive Officer, stated, "The record financial results were attributable to outstanding volume growth in the Company's gas gathering and producing operations, which more than offset lower unit margins and prices. Further-more, market conditions resulted in curtailments which kept TXO's volumes substantially below capabilities.

Business leaders speak out on Reagan, economy

N.Y. Times News Service

Business leaders were strong supporters of President Reagan's re-election bid and have been quick to cheer his overwhelming victory. But these corporate chieftains are also voicing concern that Reagan has yet to tackle the problem he promised to solve four years ago.

Wednesday, reporters of The New York Times asked business leaders: "What is the single most important thing President Reagan should do to help your company and the economy at large?"

One answer was sounded repeatedly: lower the federal government's budget deficit sharply and quickly.

Despite administration contentions that large deficits do not drive up interest rates, many of the business people interviewed seemed to think that borrowing by the government to finance its spending has kept interest rates uncomfortably high. Several of these business leaders called for cuts in federal spending. Some said tax increases might also be necessary.

Here are their responses:

— David M. Roderick. Chairman and chief executive, United States Steel Corp.

President Reagan must quickly address budget and trade deficits. Economic growth cannot be sustained if business must compete with the federal government for investment dollars, and compete internationally when the dollar is overvalued. Also, he must vigorously implement, monitor and enforce his steel plan to insure fair trade in steel.

— John A. Georges. President and chief executive, International Paper Co.

Actually, there are two major areas where President Reagan can help our company. He can work to keep the U.S. economy growing, and work to bring the exchange value of the dollar down to a more reasonable level. In all likelihood, lower interest rates are the key to accomplishing both these objectives. A more accommodative Federal Reserve Board and continuing strong progress toward a reduction of the federal deficit would help lower interest rates.

— James D. Robinson 3d. Chairman and chief executive, American Express Co.

The most important thing for this country, and the world for that matter, is to get interest rates down, and that, of course, means the deficit has to be reduced. I think the president's emphasis is right: first come up with spending cuts, then look at revenue enhancements. But it's got to be broad-based, and it's got to have credibility by turning the trends in the right direction.

— John V. Roach. Chairman and chief executive, the Tandy Corp.

For the long-term strength of the country, I don't think anything is more important than controlling inflation. It gives our customers, the consumer, buying power that he can depend on in making purchases. Without question that is the greatest contribution of Mr. Reagan's first term, and one of the greatest challenges facing him in his second term. From the private side, things seem to be in line to do it. From the government side, certainly the deficit needs to be trimmed.

Bernard L. Schwartz. Chairman and chief executive, Loral Corp.

I would favor increases in revenue enhancement — I'm just using the current euphemism; yes, I'm in favor of tax increases — but I hope they'll be fair. I'm against the value-added tax, because I think it's a regressive tax. I do favor some kind of a flat income tax, which begins to get the nominal rates down. I would not like to see more defense spending. The defense electronics industry is already straining to meet demand.

— John W. Teets. Chairman and chief executive, Greyhound Corp.

The most important task for Reagan in the next four years is putting people to work and giving everyone the chance to be productive. It's important that we get them off the welfare rolls, help them to restore pride in themselves and reverse the "take, take, take" mentality. The impact on the economy will be a reduction in the federal deficit as this wider revenue base begins paying taxes.

— Edward G. Jefferson. Chairman and chief executive, E.I. du Pont de Nemours Co.

The most important step to help the economy is improvement of our global industrial competitiveness so as to reduce the trade deficit. To accomplish this, the Administration and Congress should seek reduction of budget deficits to no more than 2 percent of gross national product by 1989, an easing of real interest rates, and correction of the overvaluation of the U.S. dollar against overseas currencies.

—Philip Caldwell. Chairman and chief executive, Ford Motor Co.

The president says that he wants sustained economic growth with low inflation. Attainment of these worthy objectives will require effective and prompt action to reduce our dual deficit, the federal budget deficit and the merchandise trade deficit. As long as we have the specter of continuing deficits, that specter keeps real interest rates high and inflates the value of the dollar to such a degree that it really subsidizes imports and penalizes exports.

— Robert A. Beck. Chairman and chief executive, the Prudential Insurance Co. of America.

I regard the deficit as currently the most important issue needing resolution by Congress and the president. The risks of inaction are very major, including continued high interest rates, fewer new jobs and ultimately new inflation. We will need to fashion a broad bipartisan coalition to attack the tough choices. I come down on the side that you work on the spending cuts first before you even consider taxation.

— Hicks B. Waldron. Chairman and chief executive, Avon Products Inc.

The No. 1 priority is getting interest rates down so people will not only resume their confidence but start spending again. We need continued pressure against interest rates, a la reduced deficit, from reduced spending. We also need continued deregulation steps, and on a more selfish level, I hope he continues on health-care cost containment.

— Donald H. Rumsfeld. President and chief executive, G.D. Searle & Co.

The task is to be gracious in victory and build a consensus in America to create an environment that includes all Americans and is hospitable to investment, savings, research and development and to employment and growth. This is vital if we are to reduce the deficit without tax increases, by equitable reductions in federal spending, continued efforts on deregulation, and new approaches to financing the federal debt.

— Mark Shepherd Jr. Chairman and chief corporate officer, Texas Instruments Inc.

Spending cuts and tax reform should be the top items on his economic agenda. A freeze in federal spending as a percentage of gross national product should be followed by a steady reduction in expenditure to less than 20 percent of GNP. I favor a replacement of the personal income tax with a combination of a consumption tax and flat tax.

— John K. McKinley. Chairman and chief executive, Texaco Inc.

We hope with this mandate that the Administration will follow through at an early point with its previously announced commitment to achieve the complete deregulation of natural gas.

Midland's most committed oil and gas bank just made another commitment.

We're taking the unprecedented step of adding a new full-service banking facility downtown in the Gulf building. So no matter where your office is, you can easily do business with the Permian Basin's largest independent oil and gas bank.

Steel-lined thermos sign of new era

N.Y. Times News Service

NORWICH, Conn. — Edward L. Davis Jr., a construction worker in Hazelton, Pa., used to have to replace his glass-lined thermos every month. That was until he tried a steel-lined container and one day left it on the outrigger of a 50-ton hydraulic crane.

"The thermos got jammed between one edge of the outrigger and the frame of the crane," he recalled. "It crushed a little on the side, but it still worked. I couldn't believe it. Just about everyone I work with has a stainless steel one now."

The growing popularity of steel bottles is just one change remaking the thermos industry, which is also contending with rising competition from automatic coffee makers and vending machines in the work place.

The move away from the glass thermos, long a standard in lunch boxes, has forced the Thermos Company of Norwich, Conn., which introduced the thermos bottle to this country 77 years ago, to shut down its glass-making operation in the Laurel Hill section of town earlier this month and consolidate the unit's operations with a plant in the Taftville section. Another glass plant in Macomb, Ill., was closed this summer.

At a time when most thermos companies buy their glass from suppliers such as the GTE Corp. and the Corning Glass Works, Thermos was one of the last to make its own. The company will continue to assemble glass-lined thermoses, but will now buy its glass from Thermos U.K., a sister company in Britain. Both are units of Household International Inc., of Prospect Heights, Ill.

According to Thermos, while it will continue to make glass models, it will now stress steel and plastic containers. The all-plastic market has grown in recent years out of concern about using glass in children's thermoses. The polyurethane does not insulate as well, but it costs less, and it can keep milk cold enough.

In addition to rubbing shoulders with jelly sandwiches in children's lunchboxes, many of today's thermoses are carried by blue-collar workers, hikers and campers, and other outdoors enthusiasts.

Steel thermos bottles retail for $20 to $35, as opposed to their glass or plastic counterparts, which retail for well under $10. But many customers seem willing to pay a premium for the added durability.

Steel bottles typically carry a five-year to a lifetime guarantee. And if the letters the manufacturers say they get are to believed, the bottles have been run over by tractors, fallen from six-story buildings, plunged into the depths of the Snake River — and still delivered on their promise to keep hot coffee hot, or cold drinks cold.

But Thermos and its competitors, such as Aladdin Industries of Nashville and Union Manufacturing of Meriden, Conn., are plagued by a problem that goes deeper than what bottles are made of: theirs is a mature industry with a basic product that can be little improved on.

"Every year the demand drops by large amounts," said Norman St. Jean, a spokesman for Thermos. The market loss is especially strong among white-collar workers, and is evident even in the company's own headquarters. "I don't know any execs here who carry a thermos to work," St. Jean said. "Most people go to coffee machines."

The thermos is a victim of its own success. According to Haynes W. Kelly, president of Thermos, half the nation's households already own at least two thermos bottles. So how do you sell someone a third?

"We think you can," Kelly said, "if you do something to improve the bottle." He pointed to the various flip tops and spouts that now grace many styles of thermos.

But real product improvement is harder. The basic design has changed little since the English invented the vacuum flask in 1892. Typically, one bottle is sealed within another, and the air is removed from between them. A silver finish between the outer sleeve and the core provides some insulation, but the vacuum is the most effective component. Glass is a better insulator than other linings, but much less durable.

At its peak, Thermos made as many as 15 million vacuum bottles a year. That level continued for some time after the company lost its exclusive trademark in 1962, and the word thermos entered the general vocabulary. But while the company declines to say how many it produces today, the heyday is long over.

In an effort to retrench, about a year ago the company's management decided to consolidate its production. It also cut costs and revamped its marketing. Thermos enlivened its packaging with color and illustration, overhauled its sales force and started an ambitious $3.5 million push for its newest product: the Coffee Butler, a glass-lined carafe more suitable for a dinner table than its unshapely predecessor.

Part of the consolidation was the the closing of the Laurel Hill plant, an event that saddened many Norwich residents.

The company has occupied its current site along the Thames River in eastern Connecticut since 1913. That was when William B. Walker, who founded Thermos's forerunner, the American Thermos Bottling Co. in 1907, moved there from Brooklyn. He chose Norwich partly because of its rail service and active seaport, and partly because the town gave him the property.

Romance novelist

Contemporary fiction writer Danielle Steel has written 17 novels in seven years and has 45 million books in print.

By Linda-Marie Singer
King Features Syndicate

The sign in Danielle Steel's study jumps out at you from among treasured photos, framed best-selling book jackets and letters of praise: "There Are No Miracles. There Is Only Discipline."

This philosophy sums up one of America's most-read contemporary fiction writers. For who else but Danielle Steel has had 45 million books in print, has written 17 blockbusters in seven years, and who, from 1981 to 1983, has had three best sellers simultaneously on the national lists?

"Do I consider myself popular? Let me say that it's my books that are popular," states the soft-spoken novelist. "Frankly, I'd like to think of myself as invisible." Invincible is more like it, for few writers are capable of simulating the 36-year-old's syncopated pace, or duplicating her momentum.

"It's my readers who let me know about my characters," explains Ms. Steel. "They've told me that my stories lend a genuine quality, so the individuals appear believable, real. The only drawback is the insistence of identifying me with the heroine in the books. Yet, as I look back, I've done only one fictionalized account of a novelist."

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. Can you please tell me some facts about Eddie Murphy?

Krystel Alston
Ontario, Calif.

A. He's 23 (born April 3, 1961), was born in Brooklyn and raised in slightly suburban Roosevelt, Long Island, by his mother and stepfather. (His parents divorced when he was 3 and his father died when he was 12.)

His sense of humor surfaced early in his childhood, according to his mother. According to Eddie, it was a result of almost nonstop TV watching: By the age of 10, he could do exact impressions of Bugs Bunny, Laurel and Hardy, Martin and Lewis, Tom and Jerry.

At 16, he started working as a comic in the clubs around Long Island while continuing to refine his skills at ranking (insults) in the hallways of Roosevelt High. In his senior year at Roosevelt, he was voted "Most Popular." After graduation, he enrolled at Nassau Community College to please his mother. Just after classes started, though, he went on a few auditions. One was for "Saturday Night Live." He never went back to school.

Eddie Murphy

Now, of course, his career is on a very high roll: a five-picture, $15-million deal with Paramount, with the next film, "Beverly Hills Cop," due out early next month; and projects percolating on all fronts — movies, records, TV.

One that could even lead to a series of films is a planned collaboration with pal and New Jersey neighbor Joe Piscopo. "They're having a film developed for themselves right now," explains an associate of Piscopo's. "And they'd like to do a number of them."

Q. I'm very fond of Chuck Connors and I would like you to tell me how he is and how old he is. One friend says he's dead, another says he's 80 and I don't agree with either. Please help.

Mary Martinez
San Juan, Texas

A. You're right — he's not dead or 80; he's 62, well and working. You may have seen him on "The Yellow Rose" last year and you will probably see him soon in a TV special called "The Great American Cowboy."

Chuck Connors

Q. Please tell me if Benny Hill is still with us. I heard that he passed away. Is it true?

John L. Belan
Kansas City, Kan.

A. Not at all. In fact, if negotiations work out, you should be seeing him in "National Lampoon's European Vacation" which just started shooting overseas. He'll play, of course, an eccentric whom Chevy Chase and family encounter in their travels.

Otherwise: He's still taping his comedy shows. They're all over the country in syndication.

Q. Could you please tell me everything about Bill Murray — age, background, if he's married and has kids.

V.C.
Pinehurst, N.C.

A. He's 33, the fifth of nine children, was born in Evanston, Ill., and raised in Wilmette. The Murray children slept three to a room, were sent to strict Catholic schools and were obviously raised in such an austere environment that he describes his drama training as getting his father to laugh at the dinner table. He was a premed student at Regis College in Denver and was a bad student but a great carouser.

At the same time, he decided to become a comedian and joined Chicago's Second City troupe, where his brother Brian Doyle-Murray already was working. From that group, he moved on to the "National Lampoon Radio Hour," Howard Cosell's short-lived "Saturday Night Live" and the obviously much longer-lived "Saturday Night Live."

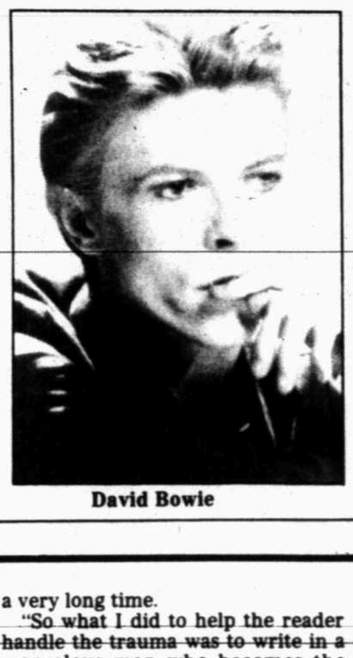

His movie successes you probably know: "Stripes," "Meatballs," "Caddyshack," "Tootsje" and the massive and still-climbing hit "Ghostbusters" which he agreed to do on the condition that the studio make "The Razor's Edge," now in release, as well.

Bill Murray

For his next film, though, he's returning to comedy: "Club Paradise," a satire set in a Club Med-type resort in the Caribbean," now filming.

More personally: He's been married for three years and has a 2-year-old son, Homer.

David Bowie

Q. I love David Bowie. Can you tell me where he lives and what he's doing?

C. Yun
Princeton Jct., N.J.

A. He's been living most recently in tax exile in Switzerland with his 12-year-old son, Joey (who was originally named Zowie, as you may remember, but then, that was during Bowie's "Ziggy Stardust" days).

Most recently, though, he's been in Scotland working with jazz musician/composer Pat Metheny on the title song for the film "The Falcon and the Snowman." In Canada he recorded his new album, "Tonight." He stars in a short, "Jazzin' for Blue Jean," in which he plays two characters: rock star Screaming Lord Byron and Vice the Bill Board Player. It just started on MTV.

Q. I agree with the lady who wrote in to say that she missed Tom Snyder — I also enjoyed him on "The Tomorrow Show." I've also missed Joey Bishop. Where does he live, how old is he and what's he been doing?

Mrs. Al Clark
Davenport, Iowa

A. He's 66, lives most of the time in California, but might be in New York soon if a project he's been working on materializes: "The History of Sex," a Broadway show he's currently discussing with Sid Caesar. (It probably isn't as dirty as it sounds. Bishop has gone on the record as saying that he is appalled by the smut level of new young comedians.)

He was also on Broadway a few years back, when he filled in for his friend Mickey Rooney in "Sugar Babies." And he was onstage in Chicago not too long ago, co-starring with his son, Larry.

Otherwise: He's produced a series of cassettes called "Greetings from the Stars," a compilation of three celebrities per tape giving birthday, anniversary, etc. wishes (celebrities such as Dom De Luise, Caesar, Buddy Hackett, Annette Funicello).

Joey Bishop

DANIELLE

In "Once in a Lifetime" (1982) Ms. Steel obviously became Daphne Fields, world-famous writer. "Daphne was notoriously prolific," writes Ms. Steel. "Daphne was used to their teasing. A touch of envy, curiosity."

EVIDENTLY A parallel exists. Ms. Steel lingers on that thought, takes a sip of coffee, and snuggles into her sofa in a living room that is enveloped with impressionist paintings and French Provincial furniture.

"Just call me a typical 15-year overnight success," she says without any sting to her voice. "It took 10 years before anyone took notice of me, and I had been at it 18 hours a day, seven days a week. All the while when I was striving to be somebody, I thought I had a lot of friends that I struggled up with. But as I neared my goal, I felt their envy grow.

"Isn't it sad to think that I even pretended at some point that I really wasn't me? Call it a coverup, but my women friends failed to see that I hadn't changed, that celebrity status didn't interest me."

Ms. Steel is interrupted by her Spanish-speaking housekeeper who has an urgent message. They both converse in lightning Spanish, and then she continues where she left off, barely missing a beat.

"What is it about writers that inspire so much jealousy and begrudging remarks?" Ms. Steel wants to know. "Don't they understand that yes, while my books sell, in order to be a novelist there is accompanying solitude, intense loneliness, and unyielding pressure.

"It's taken some time, believe me, to reach a comfortable point in my life. Still, I can't lie to you and say that the resentment didn't crush me until I learned to insulate myself."

AND WITH THIS shift in attitude came an unexpected twist — her new husband, shipping mogul John A. Traina, Jr. So harmonious is their relationship that a familiar pattern emerges: Whenever she begins a thought stream, he finishes it. And if their 3-year-old marriage caused a positive upheaval in both their lives, their only regret is that they hadn't met sooner.

Married at age 17 to her French childhood sweetheart (she was a French citizen until the age of 18), she quickly became a mother of two. But nine long years later, their union ended in divorce. "All during that time I had dreams of devoting my life to a husband I loved," said Ms. Steel. "That never happened."

That is, until she met Traina, a newly-eligible 40ish shipping executive who radiates an equal amount of sex appeal and magnetism.

"People never call me 'Mr. Steel,'" he says with a twinge of laughter. "They think I'm Roy Scheider, the actor." Ms. Steel agrees. "Even on the plane one time some stewardesses were chatting animatedly about Roy Scheider being on board. I quickly turned to catch a glimpse of him, until I understood they meant John!"

Traina laughs again, and then gets serious about the difference in both of his marriages. "Let's look at it this way. A big day for my first wife was shopping at Saks. With Danielle, it's a blessing to find someone you love who is active and accomplished in her own right." The look he sends his wife would cause any woman's heart to flutter.

What interrupts this moment is the sound of jackhammers, dogs yapping and telephones buzzing. For today starts the new house construction to make way for the Trainas' third baby due at the holiday season. With her two children by her previous husband, his two children, and their own two, the Trainas' household fizzes to visions of Jean Kerr's "Please Don't Eat the Daisies."

OBVIOUSLY, MS. Steel's staid jacket-cover image doesn't play inside the Traina home. For Mrs. Traina, while a forceful businesswoman, remsembles more the mother of six, with her blue and black maternity dress barely hiding the seventh edition to the family.

"I'm really a very shy, private person who's also resilient," Ms. Steel says as she adjusts her black-framed glasses that are propped on top of her head. Her green eyes sparkle. And just think. The 36-year-old is a smidgen over 5 feet — a pint-size powerhouse who admits that the magnitude of her success is startling.

"Whenever I go to the East Coast on business, it hits me: 'Wow! I'm Danielle Steel!'"

Is the writer recognized wherever she goes? Hardly. "Look, nobody drops dead in Safeway because I am who I am. But it mystifies me when strangers claim to know me personally, but have never met me."

Such an incident occurred recently when she rummaged around a toy shop for her children. "I was just here the other day with Danielle Steel," said one woman to another in the store. Upon hearing her name mentioned, Ms. Steel inched closer to the person who was speaking, but the woman never identified her "friend," Danielle.

Such instances are overshadowed by business people who think she can be easily manipulated. "People assume you're some kind of dummy. It boggles my mind when they believe a tooth fairy arrived with an enormous suitcase of money one day. Look, I've worked hard to have what I have, and it astounds me to be taken for granted."

"JUST LAST WEEK, for example, workmen came to our house with an estimate of $1,200 for repairs. When the bill arrived, the total came to $12,000. So I called up this man and said, 'Hey, there must be some kind of mistake.' And you know what he told me? 'Jeez, I didn't think people like you noticed these things.'"

One thing Ms. Steel has noticed is how her books seems to help readers in certain situations. "My fan mail usually revolves around 'I went through the same crisis as so-and-so,' or 'Why did you have to kill off the hero?' There was an hysterical note I just received from a dentist who was outraged that I never mention the subject of dental hygiene in any of my works!"

And which individual have admirers liked the most? The consensus is evenly divided among many of the people who dance through her 17 novels, "but as for me, I feel the most recent character is the most important one. 'Boy, this is the one,' I tell myself."

In what may be veering away from the colored cellophane side of Danielle Steel are three novels pinned for distribution during 1985 and 1986. "Family Album," Ms. Steel claims, "mirrors Hollywood in the 1950s. My main character is the first woman director who also happens to have five kids!" Slated for the following year is "Wanderlust," a 1930s woman well ahead of her time who takes off alone to China.

If this isn't daring enough, 1986 will usher in "Fine Things," a book that Ms. Steel can't stop talking about, "because for the first time I describe a woman who dies of cancer. The subject always presented a horrifying picture for me, and the truth is that I couldn't tackle this for a very long time.

"So what I did to help the reader handle the trauma was to write in a marvelous man who becomes the main character. He is Jewish, but is based upon my Portuguese mother and John's Italian mother who both should have been Jewish!

"YOU SEE, I'm always struggling to do something different, although some characters may turn on me in the middle of a book. Sometimes they refuse to be pushed around."

Traina interjects with an anecdote. "We were having lunch in a crowded restaurant, and I noticed a woman eavesdropping on our conversation. Danielle was complaining that she was fed up, that she didn't know what to do about a certain character. 'If she's so much trouble,' I told her, 'why don't you just kill her off?' The woman almost fell out of her chair."

Ms. Steel continues. "What's very special to me is how often readers let me know that they can't put the books down until they're through reading them. Well, neither can I when I'm writing them."

And this is what keeps the Danielle Steel name ubiquitous in bookshops around the world. For she posesses an uncanny knack for producing personalities who seem to gel with special times in history.

TRAINA TAKES a puff on a cigarette before explaining his special fascination with his wife. "Her mind seems to click, click away even in the middle of the night. She'll wake up instantly and race to scribble notes about a new personality or plot. And remember that every one of her books is set in a different time.

"But what's incredible," Traina continues, "is her unending flow of energy. She gets up at 7 each day, puts in calls to her publisher and publicist, responds to heaping fan mail, takes care of the kids for eight hours, and then writes sometimes until 3 or 4 in the morning. And those outlines!"

Traina shakes his head from side to side. "She handwrites a 50-to-80-page outline that is scene by scene, chapter by chapter. Then she types the book out on a 1948 Olivetti manual typewriter."

'Tomran' never runs aground, is often moored

Georgia Temple

"Tomran," Midland Community Theatre's current musical production, tells the story of a U.S. Naval ship which goes down the Amazon in 1943 in search of a missing scientific crew and discovers instead a town built in the style of the Old South and inhabited by descendents of Southerners who left the South during Reconstruction.

The script tells its own tale. The ship's captain asks for and receives directions to Brazil. The request and directions have much in common with the musical itself. "Go east 30 miles, turn right and head south. When the water changes and the air gets warm, then you can start looking for Brazil."

A humorous line in what is sometimes a funny play. However, both exclude critical details.

The script's keel (backbone) is weak. It starts and stops, rolls starboard then larboard, plugs some holes while unstopping others and moves from point A to point C without crossing into knowledge point B. It never runs aground but is often moored.

We understand these are civilians recruited with little to no training who wander aimlessly. The difficulty is they mirror the script.

Before more is said, it is important to state what "Tomran" is. Author Dr. Andrew Edington and his friends paid MCT $40,000 to give "Tomran" its premiere staging, not an unusual exchange for a work at this stage in its growth. Considered a work in progress and not a finished product, a proper showcase allows its strengths and weaknesses to be assessed.

MCT provides this platform. However, the theater's program notes are lacking. They do not explain the stage in which this work lies in its evolutionary path toward becoming a finished product.

Stunning best describes the set design by David Layman, who joined the MCT staff this fall. The lighting by John Michael Warburton is also remarkable. When the lights and special effects work as they did Friday night, the three create an exciting and constantly changing visual picture.

Although the dance routines, choreographed by Jerry Yoder of New York who also did MCT's production of "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," contain some charming moments, they lack the consistency in style and definition of line so apparent in "Whorehouse."

Portrayals by Michael McLaren, Mike Wilson, Mark Slattery, Tim Rosborough and Jim Bartlett add life and depth to the musical. It is far more difficult to work with a weak script than a strong one, and these actors do a solid job of appearing genuine on stage.

The leads are played by Rogers Tilley as the Captain and Becky Engelstad as Tomran. Ms. Engelstad replaced the leading lady 10 days before the production opened Friday week.

The Captain is stiff onstage. Both seem uncomfortable and have times when they don't know what to do with their hands. However, part of the weakness of their portrayals lies in the lines they deliver and the inconsistency in their characters.

Clever lines lie within the musical's poorly transitioned script, and it leaves one with the feeling of having spent a pleasant evening at the theater when the lighting and special effects work. Many of its problems are of the nature they can be resolved with major rewriting.

Without giving away the story line, it is possible to raise the following questions.

— What is the purpose of traveling farther down the Amazon once the "scientists" have been "found?" To fire the cannon?

— Where are the time transitions?

— Is the love between Tomran and the Captain made plausible in one day?

— Why the white dresses?

— How does knowing that the Southern ancestors who founded Belem, Brazil, intermarried with the natives there explain Tomran or her name?

— What is the author's intent?

The composer Harriette Flachmeier has created some cute songs, such as "No Comprendo," "I've Had One Too Many Women," "Pinch by Pinch," "It's Better to Lose Your Heart" and "We Don't Buy Green Bananas." And the orchestra, conducted by Tom Roberts, does a fine job of playing what's there to play.

At times, Ms. Flachmeier's word choice is questionable as in the line "a happy, shattering love." The two words seem to negate one another.

And quite frankly, much of the time this reviewer felt "no comprendo" summed up her sense of the action onstage. Had it not been for the set, lights and special effects working so perfectly together Friday, the evening would not have been enjoyable.

As the captain tells Tomran, "The first time out at sea it took us two days just to find the trigger on the cannon." It also took MCT an opening weekend to work out its technical difficulties. Although it appears salvageable, it will take the author and composer much more than that time period to smooth the rough spots, fill in the script and make a play of this play in progress.

'Body Double' slick, sharp, suspenseful

"BODY DOUBLE"
1½ cup "Rear Window"
1½ cup "Vertigo"
1 tablespoon sex
2 heaping teaspoons violence

Pour ingredients into blender and mix well at high speed. The resulting slushy but interesting mixture will be Brian De Palma's "Body Double."

De Palma is clearly a big fan of movies. His films are always full of references to other directors' works and he sometimes even sets his films in the film industry.

His best film, the 1981 political thriller "Blow Out," was partially set in the film industry (John Travolta, the film's hero, was a film sound special effects technician), drew heavily from Michangelo Antonioni's 1966 film "Blow-Up" and also makes liberal use of scenes from Alfred Hitchcock films.

For "Body Double" De Palma — who wrote the story, co-wrote the screenplay, produced and directed the film — borrows more than just one cup of plot from two classic Hitchcock movies, "Vertigo" and "Rear Window."

The protagonist, an bit actor named Jack Scully, played by Craig Wasson, loses his job in a low-budget horror flick, "The Vampire's Kiss" because he has such a severe case of claustrophobia that he can't lie in a casket during filming.

Jack also loses his girlfriend and his apartment. He ends up housesitting a "swinging bachelor pad" kind of place which comes complete with a telescope and a beautiful exhibitionist neighbor.

Jack becomes obssessed with the mysterious woman, which quickly leads the film into it's highly complex and intensely convulted story.

The film's strange female lead is loosely based on Kim Novak's character in "Vertigo." Jack's claustrophobia is used just like Jimmy Stewart's fear of heights in "Vertigo."

"Body Double's" use of voyeurism and it's murder mystery are obviously inspired by "Rear Window." The seemingly random violence also owes at least a little bit to still another Hitchcock movie, "Psycho."

Of course, what really matters is whether De Palma makes good use of all this Hitchcock material. In fact, for the most part, he does.

"Body Double" is slick, sharp, energetically paced and impressively suspenseful. De Palma's characters are interesting, even though they are a bit odd and often seem more than just a little bit sleazy, and the actors maneuver skillfully through his largely well-executed scenes (one overblown attempt at a romantic shot using a revolving camera, however, elicted laughter from the audience).

However, De Palma shares one disturbing characteristic with Hitchcock: even though he seems to almost worship women — very beautiful women, that is — with the camera, he almost always ends up butchering them before the end of the movie.

In "Body Double" this twisted ambiguity is strong enough that some viewers might even be revolted by it.

The film has very strong sexual content and a great deal of female nudity. The violence doesn't pervade the movie quite as throughly as the sex does, but one scene involving a woman and a maniac with a power drill is quite grotesque.

In De Palma's last film, the violence- and cocaine-soaked "Scarface," one character quipped "Nothing exceeds like excess."

In "Body Double," for all its stylish touches and clever action, De Palma definitely used his strongest ingredients to excess.

"Body Double," rated R for strong sexual content, considerable nudity and violence, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

'First Born's' strengths are acting, dialogue

Forrest

With the numbers of divorced families in America steadily rising, the problems of making a single-parent or step family work are becoming increasing prominent.

Because of this trend, divorced families with children have become a particularly important commodity in Hollywood.

The success of the almost soap opera-ish "Kramer vs. Kramer" in 1979 proved that these family dramas could be profitable and films like "Shoot the Moon" and "Irreconcilable Differences" have been sprouting up ever since.

"Firstborn" is the latest entry in this "Let's make money from marital breakups" sweepstakes, but it is not just a simple-minded formulaic "kids in a broken home" drama.

Fifteen-year-old Jake, played by Chris Collet, is the first-born son of his divorced mother, Wendy, played by Teri Garr. His parents' divorce has made him grow up quickly and; even though he is still very much a teen-ager, he often fills in as male head of the household and tries to look after his little brother Brian, played by Corey Haim.

After the boys' father remarries, their mother abruptly becomes seriously involved with a new boyfriend named Sam, played by Peter Weller. At first Sam seems like a basically nice guy. The kids are naturally ambivalent toward him until he suddenly moves in with Wendy, at which point they begin to actively dislike him.

The sarcastic jabs Jake takes at Sam at first can make the audience wince because they seem rather unfair, but then Sam begins to turn out not to be such a nice guy. In fact, he's a violent drug pusher.

For the sake of drama, the film perhaps gets a little carried away, much like "Shoot the Moon" did with it's gruesome ending. The cross-country chase sequence and knock-down, drag-out fight that climax "Firstborn" are exciting and well-staged but seem terribly out of place in a domestic drama.

The film's strengths are it's solid acting and dialogue. The kids in "Firstborn" really do act like kids with both youngsters' likeable characteristics and their very annoying warts.

Teri Garr could have taken the easy way out by portraying the character as a stupid, dizzy blonde, but instead does a nice job of playing the mother as a good woman who simply makes a big mistake.

Peter Weller is quite good as the vaguely menancing Sam. His performance is all the more impressive when one considers how different it is from his most recent role as the title character in the wacked-out comedy "The Adventures of Buckaroo Banzai Across the Eighth Dimension."

Even though it does resort to an ending that slightly undercuts it's more serious intentions, "Firstborn" is a well-made, well-acted film about some very important problems many families face.

"Firstborn," rated PG-13, for some strong language, violence and adult situations, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

'Soldier' has few racial stereotypes

"It's a low-down, dirty shame.
They say we're here to fight Hitler,
But they won't let us in the game."
— Song from the soundtrack of "A Soldier's Story."

"A Soldier's Story" is set in 1944 in Tynin, La., a town with a "New South Inn," "Whites Only" signs on water fountains and park benches and a predominantly black Army base nearby.

One company of soldiers, led by a Master Sgt. Waters, is made up of a black baseball team that was inducted together. Their meager and frustrating contribution to the war effort is to play exhibition games for the Army, which they win more often than not. When not on the baseball diamond they have to do low-level janitorial work.

"I hope we get to fight soon. Next, they'll have us picking the cotton crop," one soldier complains.

Things begin changing, however, when Waters, played by Adolph Caesar, is shot and killed under mysterious circumstances. Most of the men believe the Ku Klux Klan is responsible for his murder, but don't think anything will be done about it.

Into this volatile situation strides Howard E. Rollins Jr., playing a black Army captain who has been sent to investigate the murder.

He's the first black officer ever seen on the Army base and his effect is electrifying — the black enlisted men are pleased and impressed but the white officers all do shocked double-takes.

"This is the Army's business, not the NAACP," the hostile and racist commanding officer tells the captain. "You keep turning this over and you'll have an explosion."

He then gives Rollins just three days to complete his investigation.

Rollins, working against terrible odds, begins to unravel the story of Waters's life and death. Through a well-organized series of flashbacks, the characters, their relationships to one another and how they're connected to the murder, are slowly and dramatically revealed.

Admirably, there are few racial stereotypes in the film, which playwright Charles Fuller adapted from his Pulitzer Prize-winning "A Soldier's Play."

Rollins, who was nominated for an Academy Award for his performance in "Ragtime," plays the captain, a graduate of Harvard Law School, with finesse and style.

He is a keen, sharply-dressed professional soldier who, when told by another officer to take off his sunglasses, coolly replies, "I like these. They're like MacArthur's."

The role is not entirely dissimilar to Sidney Poitier's Mr. Tibbs in the 1967 drama "In the Heat of the Night," which may not be entirely coincidence since both films were directed by Norman Jewison. Rollins stands up so well to the comparison that he probably deserves another Oscar nomination for his work in this film.

Caesar does almost equally well as Waters, a decorated World War I veteran who is all spit and polish.

"I'm a soldier and I'm the kind of colored man who don't like lazy, shiftless negros," he says.

However, Waters is haunted by strange demons of his own and his fanatical belief in the "credit to your race" theory ultimately leads to his destruction.

Jewison is very good at creating atmosphere in his films and "A Soldier's Story" is a visually beautiful film. He is also unusually talented at using music in his films. He directed "Jesus Christ Superstar," the wonderful musical "Fiddler on the Roof" and the strange "Rollerball," from which most viewers may remember Jewison's impressive use of Bach's "Toccata and Fugue in D Minor," even if they otherwise hated the film.

The soundtrack in Jewison's latest effort is alternatively lively and haunting."A Soldier's Story" has wonderful music and songs by Herbie Hancock, Larry Riley and Patti LaBelle. Ms. LaBelle's vocal talents, in particular, stand out even though she only has a very minor role.

"A Soldier's Story" is a tale of racism, strength of character and having the courage to face unpleasant truths and it is a story told with wit, drama and suspense.

"A Soldier's Story," rated R for some language and violence, is now showing at the North Park Cinema.

Organist to perform works of Bach

Darryl Knapp will present an organ recital featuring works by Johann Sebastian Bach at 7:15 p.m. Sunday in the sanctuary of First United Methodist Church, corner of Main Street and Illinois Avenue.

The program is a part of the Centennial Vesper Concert Series celebrating the 100th birthday of the founding of First UMC in August of 1885. It was the first church in Midland.

The musical community is paying special recognition to Johann Sebastian Bach in recognition of the upcoming 300th anniversary of his birthday in March 1985.

GOREN BRIDGE

THE TALE OF THE TWO OF DIAMONDS

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF
©1984 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devoting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series we will go back to our weekly question and answer column.

Both vulnerable. South deals.

NORTH
♠ A 7 3
♡ A 9 8 6 3
◇ 4 3
♣ 7 3 2

WEST
♠ Q 10 8 4

◇ A Q 9 5
♣ K J 10 4

EAST
♠ K J 9 5 2

◇ 10 8 6
♣ 8 6 5

SOUTH
♠ 6
♡ K Q J 7 4
◇ K J 7 2
♣ A Q 9

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Dble.	2 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ♡.

"It's all very well for you people to boast about your exploits," said the Two of Diamonds as he lectured to the high cards in the pack, "but think for a moment of our predicament. We puny spot cards seldom, if ever, get to win a trick — more often than not we are simply lost in the flow of tricks. So what chance do we have to get our names into the press reports?

"I must admit, however, there was a time when I was cast in the leading role. You might not even think there was anything unusual about the hand, since all I did was surrender a trick. But it was done with such style and grace that the reporters had to sit up and take notice.

"We were playing against the Conservative Club. East might have bid two spades, in which case a makable four spade contract could have been reached, but such a liberal action on a scant 4 points was foreign to him. Although West did as best he could with a trump lead, my declarer displayed impressive technique.

"He won the king of trumps in hand, cashed the ace of spades and ruffed a spade high. He entered dummy with the ace of trumps, in the process drawing the last outstanding trump, and ruffed dummy's last spade. Now I was put to masterly use — declarer led me from hand!

"West could not afford to win this trick (he would be end played), so he followed low. East won and the best he could do was to return a diamond. Declarer covered with the jack and West won the queen. Now he was end played. He tried valiantly by exiting with a low diamond, but South simply discarded a club from the table. If East had the ace of diamonds, declarer would get a second club discard on the diamond king and ruff two clubs on the table.

"Pretty neat, wasn't it?"

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

Monday, November 12, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Princess Grace of Monaco and Reader's Digest publisher DeWitt Wallace were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: Romanian gymnast Nadia Comaneci.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A domestic problem is resolved following a candid conversation with mate or family members. A new work environment boosts your productivity. A Leo shares a terrific secret. Be discreet.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Let others foot their fair share of the bills. Experts will help you find wise investments. Family interests play an important role in your progress this afternoon. Romance gets a giant boost.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The financial outlook improves, thanks to aid from foreign sources. Maintain a positive attitude when around a trying teen-ager and a troublesome situation will be reversed by nightfall. Seek new romantic options.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A resurgence of personal initiative will help you attain your long-term goals. Read the small print before signing contracts. Following up a hunch could produce extra cash. Relax at home tonight.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid starting anything new this morning. A real estate deal looks better than it really is. Although a Libra will share his or her assets, there are strings attached.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Circumstances beyond your control could change your plans. Be flexible and you rise to the occasion. Others are impressed by your ability to work under pressure! A romance intensifies.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Job interviews go well. Exaggeration may help you sell yourself to some people, but it will turn off more conservative folks. A quiet setting aids your efforts to reach an understanding with mate.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A new assignment brings surprising financial benefits. Good timing is the key to gaining influential person's backing. A brother or sister is anxious to get in touch with you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An electrifying meeting or animated conversation arouses your interest. Be careful not to upset a sensitive co-worker. An important new relationship will flourish if you devote attention to it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The financial picture is somewhat hazy today. Postpone buying or selling. Think about new purchasing methods. You may not be using your asset to best advantage. Travel and distant affairs are favored.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your creative flair brings in new profits. Enjoy all the attention you are drawing! Seek out an influential person willing to support your ideas. Romance takes a temporary back seat to career.

Novel strikes out

A Review

"All the Way Home," By Ellen Cooney. Putnam. 207 Pages. $14.95.

By PHIL THOMAS
Associated Press

Hailed by the publisher as a "stunning debut in adult fiction," Ellen Cooney's "All the Way Home" is in actuality a tepid novel peopled with dull characters.

Set in a small Massachusetts town, the book tells in uninteresting prose the story behind the formation of a women's softball team and its slow — painfully slow to the reader — rise from mediocrity to near championship status.

The members of the team — women ranging in age from young to middle — come together in hope of providing therapy for Gussie Cabrini. Gussie is a standout athlete — always has been — who made it to the top ranks of women's professional baseball and then blew it all for rather unclear reasons.

Returning to her home town on a motorcycle, Gussie crashes and is badly injured. She recovers, but her body is no longer in condition to play ball so her friends get together, form a team and get Gussie to coach.

She does so with a vengeance, whipping a bunch of, for the most part, overweight and out of shape ladies into ball-playing trim. An additional bonus is that while providing Gussie with therapy the team also awakens a latent pride in its members, a pride they either didn't know they had or had long forgotten.

Along with the story of the team's rise to power and a chance to take on the top-rated women's team in the area, author Cooney has tossed in some uninteresting subplots dealing with such matters as child abuse, obesity and suicide.

As a fully realized novel, "All the Way" home is a strike-out.

Homes more efficient

Scholder believes that being artist almost a calling

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

"Art influences one completely," says Fritz Scholder. "The way I live, the way I act, truly is because of art."

His art and that of others brings Scholder to Odessa Monday and Tuesday for the opening of an exhibit of his work, "Fritz Scholder: Paintings, Monotypes, Lithographs, Etching, Bronzes, 1980-1984," in The University of Texas of the Permian Basin's new art gallery. The public reception, which Scholder will attend, is set for 7 to 8:30 p.m. Tuesday.

The film, "Fritz Scholder: An American Portrait," will be shown at 9:30 a.m. Monday in the cinema area of the student lounge. Scholder will be present at this public showing for an informal discussion following the film. The rest of his stay will be devoted to critiquing students' work and judging the William A. King Art Scholarship Competition.

The influence of art on his life is reflected in the Buffalo Room at Scholder's home. It is filled with objects he feels might sound bizarre to some, but are visually and aesthetically stimulating for him. Rhinoceros horns occupy a place of honor on his desk, and in his line of view are an Egyptian mummy and a wall covered with masks.

"If I were a banker, I'm sure I would not live the way I do," Scholder says. "My frame of reference I don't think you'd find in the regular house."

For Scholder the decision to be an artist was an easy one — he'd known since childhood. But he prepared to make his livelihood by another means — teaching.

"Most kids draw, but I never stopped, so I always thought of myself as an artist."

In junior high he began selling his work. The first went for $7 to a classmate, the next for $10 to another classmate.

Scholder knew he had the talent, but also believes formal training is important. "I truly believe the artist should be an intellectual and he can't have enough education."

You must learn the rules before you can break them. It doesn't make much sense just to go out and start breaking rules if you haven't gone through a certain development."

When Scholder began his career, he says, no one except Georgia O'Keeffe and a handful of others actually lived off their work.

"I realized that I'd probably have to teach for the rest of my life like almost all artists in America and paint whenever I could. I went to universities and colleges and received all kinds of degrees to teach."

He enjoys teaching, he says, and doesn't care about the number of students he might have. "I love to teach, I love students, but I hate the bureaucracy of the colleges and universities and art schools."

Despite his belief in the need for formal training, Scholder also holds strong to the ideas that an artist must develop a personal style and retain his individualism.

Scholder's style is distinctly his.

"Style evolves from one's own individual personality and outlook."

In order to develop style, Scholder says, "You must find out who you are and then fully accept it, which is easier said than done. Once that's established, you see, then you become a definite individual, and whatever you do, it will carry your mark."

As is true of Scholder, "There may be people who may be influenced by you, or who want to paint like you, but there's only one of each of us and that's what one looks for. So style really is automatic. I never worry about it, it's just there.

Being an artist is almost a calling, in Scholder's view. "If you must do it, then there's no question you will do it."

Painting is a maturing process, Scholder says. "School, by itself, isn't even enough. It has to go beyond that."

That point beyond is once again, reaching into self and pulling out, Scholder says, "something that is really unique. We all have that.

"It's a matter of realizing what your priorities are, what your interests are. I've always painted simply what my interests were at that particular time and so the work is almost autobiographical. One can look back on it and see where I was at that particular time."

The actual act of painting is a private affair.

"When one walks into the studio it is a very personal and private activity. You focus in on the painting. And the painting is truly a celebration of paint.

"As far as I'm concerned, color is the first thing of importance. That's what makes painting different from anything else. Secondly, I think a strong image of whatever it is is very important. An image that is somewhat unique."

This image, Scholder says, "should give the viewer a new visual experience because I don't see any sense in painting something that has been painted before."

Too often people get bored when they go to galleries because they are seeing the same old paintings time after time, according to Scholder, who tries for a "painting that will make you look twice."

In today's art marketplace, Scholder says, "Almost anyone who wants to can say they're an artist...There's tremendous activity and, in fact, artists think business."

However, Scholder says it is of primary importance that the artist paint for himself.

"If you paint to sell then you have missed the whole idea of what being an artist is all about," he says. "It's a thing of self integrity where you must do exactly what you want to do. And hopefully someone will be on your wavelength."

In going to exhibitions and galleries, it is important, says Scholder who likes to have his mind challenged, "Whenever you walk up to a painting, try not to have preconceived ideas and try to be open because really there's tremendous power in art. There always has been. And a good part of it is forcing the viewer in some cases to re-evaluate his ideas."

Scholder feels he's made no sacrifices to be an artist. "On the contrary, I feel I owe so much to art and every day give thanks that I'm able to take my craziness and make it work for me.

"I think all serious artists are rebels because any thinking person really can't just take what Norman Mailer calls factoids, and that's what most of us function on."

He uses the media as an example, saying, "The media takes the facts and grinds them up and gives them back to us. But the real facts are what the artist is interested in, and if you work on that premise, then you are constantly realizing that you are an individual."

The greatest gift Scholder has received from being an artist is, he says, "Being able to realize that one must develop sensibilities to everything around oneself. Most of us, I think, are 50 percent blind most of the time; there is so much more to perceive than we often realize."

This blindness comes about when people get involved with so many mundane things, such as trying to get from one point to another, if they are at a job that they don't necessarily like, or with the many distractions from actual living.

"As far as I'm concerned, living is when you can truly do what you want to do," he says.

"And selfish is really not a bad word. If you don't live the way you really believe, then I think you're being bad to yourself. Unfortunately, many people find themselves living their lives for others."

As does Richard Bach in his book "Illusions," Scholder calls each individual's life his own movie.

"You can do anything you want in your movie. You can have whoever you want in it, and you should. You owe it to yourself."

Violinist to guest star with symphony

Violinist Miriam Fried, winner of the Paganini International Competition in 1968, is guest artist with the Midland-Odessa Symphony during its second subscription concert of the season. Performances are set for Midland's Lee High School Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tuesday and Odessa's Bonham Junior High at 8 p.m. Nov. 15.

The program will include Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries," Bruch's Violin Concerto No. 1 in G minor, Vivaldi's The Four Seasons: "Autumn," "Winter," and Respighi's "Pines of Rome."

Miss Fried has performed with, among others, the Chicago Symphony, the Boston Symphony, the Cleveland Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Vienna Symphony and the London Symphony.

She is well known for her violin and piano recitals with the internationally acclaimed pianist Garrick Ohlsson.

A citizen of Israel, she captured the top prize in that country's 10th anniversary Violin Competition sponsored by the American-Israel Cultural Foundation and the Israel Broadcasting Service.

Her studies took her from the Rubin Academy of Music in Tel Aviv, where she was a student of Alice Fenyves, to the Conservatory in Geneva, to Indiana University, where she studied with Josef Gengold, to the Juilliard School of Music, where she was a pupil of Ivan Galamian.

In Miss Fried's appearances this week with the symphony, she will be featured in Brunch's Concerto No. 1 in G Minor and she will also perform "Autumn" and "Winter" from Vivaldi's "The Four Seasons."

Tickets are available at Texas Commerce Bank, Midland and Odessa.

Also coming up this week on the symphony's programming is the second concert in the Thouvenel String Quartet series.

The performance is set for 8 p.m. Saturday at Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Auditorium. All the quartet members play with the symphony.

Miriam Fried

Single admission tickets for both performances will be sold at the door.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Art exhibit at bank

Mary Lou King is exhibiting a selection of watercolor paintings on the mezzanine of RepublicBank First National Midland through Nov. 30.

Mrs. King's work has been shown in area shows and is collected across the country. She says her paintings aim to communicate the beauty of everyday life.

"In 20 years of Girl Scouting," she says, "I learned to see the beauty and the miracles in simple things as seen through the eyes of small girls; and in 32 years of living in Midland, I learned that the life cycle does repeat itself, even without rain. When I finished molding children, I turned to paper, paint and clay."

Mrs. King earned a bachelor of science degree in biology and chemistry from North Texas State University and has a master of technology in medical technology. She is studying art with Warren Taylor, art instructor at Midland College, and is president of the Midland Arts Association.

The public is invited to view the free exhibit during business hours.

Springfield to perform

ODESSA — Rick Springfield will be appearing in concert Wednesday at Ector County Coliseum.

Appearing with Springfield will be special guest Corey Hart. Tickets may be purchased at Endless Horizons in Midland and Odessa and Odessa's Permian Mall.

There are logical ways of getting your picky eater to eat

By JANET LORIMER
King Features Syndicate

Don't bother hitting your head against a wall. You'll only get a worse headache than the one Picky Eater has given you. Don't try reason. Logic — as utilized by philosophers and computer experts — is Picky Eater's best weapon. You can, of course, refuse to cater to Picky Eater's whims but if, as he enters his third day of fasting, you're tempted to call the paramedics, rest assured you've failed.

There are ways to meet the challenge of the Picky Eater that allow everyone to come out a winner.

A friend once promised her young Picky Eater "tires" for dessert if the dinner plate was cleaned up. Curiosity won out, the meal vanished at an amazing speed and the mother dutifully served the child pineapple rings. It works. Make it a contest. Who can think up the wackiest-sounding menu? The prize? Great fun and good nutrition.

The same idea works for the older Picky Eater, too, but you just have to go a sneaky step further. You know what happens when you tell people you're serving pate de foie gras. They're awe-struck. But tell 'em it's goose liver and watch 'em turn green.

So, try a crash course in French, or buy a Berlitz in Ancient Ethiopian and rename everything in a foreign language. Quick! How do you say in Indo-Tibetan, "Creamed mincemeat on beansprouts and please pass the lemon."

THEN WE HAVE Picky Teen! Most of the teen-agers I know can't be filled up, but there are exceptions. Renaming the food can work here, too. On my 16th birthday, my mother grandly announced that she was serving Chicken a la King for dinner. I was overwhelmed until I discovered it was creamed chicken. If that doesn't work, fall back on the tried and true. Tell the teen-agers that it's, like, designer pizza, for sure.

There are two ways to go about this. First, operating on the principle that Picky Eaters like little things, cook in miniature. Think how fascinated some kids are by those canned spaghetti-and-meatball dinners, or, for the older set, tiny meatball hors d'oeuvres (There you go again, with that fancy foreign language.) Take a look at those little suckers. Tiny little things about the size of the end of your thumb.

You, too, can make tiny meatballs and yours will be a darned sight more nutritious. Ditto tiny pancakes, tiny muffins (just use smaller portions of batter in your muffin cups), even tiny meatloaves (bake them in muffin tins or custard cups).

Quarter the whole-wheat bread slices before you make French toast and you have tiny slices of French toast. The magic of this method is that Picky Eater, who may feel stuffed just looking at a full plate of food, is charmed by miniatures.

The second method is to serve tiny portions on a very large plate. It's called psychology. What happens is that the young Picky Eater leaps to the conclusion that he's been put on short rations. He panics, gobbles up his food and usually asks for more. Oblige him with seconds, thirds and so on, served in the same way.

When that won't work, try reverse psychology. "We're all having cauliflower, but you can't have any!" It follows as the night, the day! Children always want what they can't have. Be strong. This is your finest hour. The way you play this role will determine whether or not you're nominated for an Oscar.

FOR THE TEEN, well, we're back to, like, you know, designer cauliflower, that's like, New Wave! Totally different head (of cauliflower, that is).

Snacks: the bane of your existence. Or are they? Picky Eaters will snack if given half a chance and Picky Eaters usually head right for the junk food. (Amazing how they turn up their collective noses at the green beans and broccoli but thrive on cream puffs and chocolate truffles.)

Being the smart cookie that you are, control this by guiding your Picky Eater toward the nutritious foods. A bite of cheese, a strip of raw carrot, a dab of fruit.

For kids, any food supposedly eaten on the sly takes on greater glory. ("Pssst! Here! Take this celery stick but don't tell anyone.) For the adults, call 'em what they are: hors d'oeuvres.

At this point you must stop and ask yourself if it's a matter of life or death for all family members to consume three square meals a day at certified meal hours.

Picky Eater may be the person with the small appetite who does better eating smaller portions more frequently. That's not necessarily wrong. Some people are like that. For the young Picky Eater you may need to move the mealtimes around to suit his tummy. You may find that this flexibility leads him to try different foods more often.

CUT FOODS MORE creatively. This takes a little extra time and you may wonder if it's worth the effort, but look at it this way: How does it feel to be the Leonardo da Vinci of the lunchtime set?

If Picky Eater generally turns down the sandwich you want him to eat, cut the bread into fancy shapes with a cookie cutter. Make open-faced sandwiches. Garnish them with something extra, like a carrot curl, a tiny triangle of fruit, a bit of grated cheese.

I know a Picky Eater who refused to eat slices or hunks or squares of cheese, but consumed it in quantities when it was grated. Why? Who knows or understands the strange workings of the Picky Eater's finicky little mind? Picky Eaters are weird.

These ideas also work well when you want to spruce up a brown-bag lunch. Even the best eater in the world will rebel when served the same old kind of sandwich 365 days a year!

For meals at home, try a Rag Doll or Circus Clown salad. That's a scoop of cottage cheese for a face, carrot sticks for hair, a tomato-slice mouth, celery-slice eyes and a black olive nose. Add a ruffled collar of lettuce. Or, use a peach-half face, grated cheese hair, raisin eyes and nose and an unpeeled-apple-slice mouth. Get the idea? Tell the teen-ager it's Luke from General Hospital and use more cheese. Lots more cheese!

Or you can explore new worlds and go where no Picky Eater has gone before with a Space Probe salad. That's a pineapple ring with a scoop of cottage cheese in the center. Stand a half a banana in the middle of the cottage cheese and top with a grape or apricot half fastened with a toothpick to the top of the banana for the nose cone.

FOR THE NATURE lover, try Log Crawlers. That's a celery stick filled with a mixture of cream cheese and grated cheddar cheese and topped with a row of raisins. It looks like critters crawling on a log.

Core an apple and fill with a mixture of peanut butter and raisins. Speaking of apples, thin-slice them horizontally instead of vertically (like slicing green pepper rings). Oranges, thinly sliced the same way, look like lovely translucent flowers. Use your potato peeler to make carrot curls. Cut cheese into fancy shapes.

Last but not least, consider the miracle of the modern toothpick. There's nothing that impresses people more than a restaurant's fancy sandwich, because it usually comes garnished with an olive on a toothpick. So, get creative. You can string combinations of things on a toothpick, such as cubes of fruit, vegetables, cheese or meat.

There is a time when we all enter the Picky Eater category. That's when we fall victim to a romping case of the head throbs, the tummy squirms, and even our eyelashes hurt! Bedrest and plenty of liquids are prescribed, but who wants to look at food?

So, if you're trying to perk up the appetite of a recuperating invalid, put a dollop of this and a dab of that in each compartment of a muffin tin. Serve juice or milk in a fancy glass or goblet. Serve soup in a cup instead of a bowl. Or in a thermos.

At our house, if you get sick, you are allowed to eat "sick" toast. (That's toast cut into tiny fingers.) At no other time may this delicacy be served. That is the law. So, for some unknown reason, "sick" toast always hits the spot when you're under the weather.

I BELIEVE THAT the mystical, magical healing qualities of "sick" toast lie solely in the fact that it's only used in the sickroom. Keep an ace up your sleeve and reserve certain foods or methods of cutting and serving for special times.

The moral of this story is: When Picky Eater thinks nutritious foods are fun, he's more likely to eat them. He may even come up with some clever ideas of his own, and he's going to be more interested in nutrition when you set an example by being creative with food.

Let's face it, folks, creative cookery is fun and it's amazing how you can convince people that what they're eating is true gourmet fare just by the way you cut, call and serve!

Jump on bandwagon to lose weight

By PATRICIA LORENZ
King Features Syndicate

I'm a bountiful bouncer, a heart-thumper jumper. I jump 30 minutes every morning, 20 at night. No, I'm not 25, skinny and a member of a singles gym club. I'm an inch away from 40, constantly on a diet, and run ragged by four kids and three part-time jobs.

But I'm also a jumper and do indeed feel better, have more stamina, more energy and fewer inches on my frame than I have in 20 years. It all started a year ago when a round mini-trampoline and I became roommates and exercise partners.

Why did a woman who'd never done any regular exercise other than to bend over at the front door to pick up the newspaper suddenly become a zealous bouncing bundle of fitness? Guilt. As my 40th birthday loomed closer and closer, the media refused to stop taunting me with the importance of a regular exercise regimen.

Guilt and worry about being locked inside a body of flab forced me to find something heady and sweaty that I could enjoy.

I tried floor exercise, fast-walking, tennis, biking, swimming, aerobic dancing. Each exercise was great... for the first two days. Then my lack of ambition, poor weather, sore muscles, boredom, or all of the above, erased the desire and the need for daily exercise from my mind.

BUT THE MEDIA was relentless. Exercise seemed to have become more important than the national debt, the election results or the latest military coup.

Every newspaper and magazine article screamed at me, "Exercise daily before it's too late!" "Slow the aging process with a daily exercise program!" "Stop middle-age spread with regular exercise."

I continued to look for a perfect, enjoyable, not-so-tiring or muscle-wrenching, inexpensive way to do all that. Thinking back to the lithe, boundless energy days of childhood, I remembered receiving a bright red pogo stick for my eighth birthday. I'd pulled off the wrapping paper, climbed on and spent the rest of the summer bouncing up and down, up and down, up and down.

By the end of August my mother's head even bobbled when she talked to me. I kept it up, loving every exercising bounce, and once even managed to count up a thousand bounces before falling off.

But now, at my age, I couldn't picture myself exercising on a pogo stick. When I tried to climb on my son's not-so-sturdy model, the spring groaned to within an inch of the pavement.

Still convinced that there was natural jumping talent looming inside me, I tried jumping rope. I soon discovered there was no way I could work up to a daily 30-minute exercise routine jumping rope. After 25 jumps I was so winded, my chest ached; so exhausted, I had to sit down.

PLUS THERE WAS the indignity of realizing that my bladder control muscles weren't strong enough to withstand the brutal jarring of rope jumping on the driveway.

Then a friend in her 70s told me she'd been jumping on a mini-trampoline two or three times every day, in 10-minute spurts, for over three years. She positively glowed with good health, so I bought one of those little (40-inch-in-diameter) round mini-trampolines and set it up in the family room.

That was a year ago and I am proud to announce that I have since become addicted to jumping. It's one of the easiest, most pleasant, most fun exercises I've ever attempted.

In the quiet comfort of my family room I'm reaping all the benefits of an out-of-doors high-powered jog or tennis game without any of the pitfalls, i.e. muscle strain, tennis elbow, jogger's ankle, swimmer's ear, barking dogs, cold or rainy weather or back injury.

Jumping on a trampoline, that gives way to your weight with each bounce, prevents the high-impact jarring to the vital organs, spine and legs that send doctors and orthopedic surgeons into a frenzy.

Jumping on a mini-trampoline not only doesn't harm internal organs, it actually strengthens the abdominal muscles supporting the organs, thus promoting physical fitness from the inside out.

A FEW PEOPLE who first start to jump on a mini-trampoline notice a slight top-of-the-head headache for the first couple minutes of their jumping session. Unfortunately, this discourages some jumpers and they immediately give up the sport.

Dr. John Cornell, of the Fine Lando Clinic in Milwaukee, Wis., explains that "the temporary discomfort some jumpers experience is nothing more than pressure at the top of the head caused by slight movement of the brain. As soon as the pressure is equalized by continued jumping, the discomfort goes away."

Once your body is used to the up-and-down movements of the jumping exercise, you probably won't ever experience any discomfort. In fact, the rebounding weightlessness (while you're up in the air) is good for your back, legs, arms, heart and internal organs because the downward pull of gravity is released and the body parts have a chance to float more freely for half the time you are jumping.

Jumping offers the advantage of being able to do a vigorous daily exercise program in your own home, with no equipment or financial outlay other than the trampoline itself. You can find these small trampolines for around $39 at most drug and department stores and sometimes on sale for as low as $25. Remember, that's your only investment. No special clothing, no court rental, locker-room or gym fees, nothing.

All you need in the way of space is approximately seven feet from ceiling to floor, depending on the height of the person jumping. The trampoline itself takes up about eight inches. I stand 5 feet 8 inches, and still have eight inches of head clearance when standing on the trampoline in our low seven-foot-ceiling family room. So far, the ceiling and my noggin have never been on intimate terms.

Once you get into a routine and find some interesting things to do while you're jumping, 30 minutes will often seem like five. What can you do while you're jumping? Plenty!

WHEN MY SON saw me jumping to the beat of one of the latest rock songs on the radio and at the same time watching "Good Morning America" on TV, he said I must be a Sagittarius.

"Why?" I asked.

"Because they like to do more than one thing at once and you're doing three things!" he said.

I may not be a Sagittarius but I do indeed accomplish a host of things while jumping. When I'm jumping-dancing to the latest rock music, I can soften the volume on the radio or stereo and turn up the TV to enjoy a news program or a favorite sit-com.

Or, I can talk to my children. They all know that for 30 minutes every morning before they leave for school, they have my undivided attention. "Bouncing Mama" listens to all sorts of tall tales, social plans, homework problems and good-natured joking from the grammar-school, junior-high and high-school set while whittling the flab up and down, up and down, up and down.

I've also redecorated the family room in my mind's eye a dozen times in the past year while jumping. I've mentally organized and outlined articles to write and letters to answer. Last spring I spent a week watching a bird build a nest in the lawn chairs hanging outside the family-room window.

CAMOUFLAGE ART BY BEV DOOLITTLE

Collectors of limited edition prints know that work by Bev Doolittle is perhaps the most scarce and sought-after on the market today. That's why the availability of her newest camouflage art is such an important event.

Entitled "The Forest Has Eyes," this dramatic print is now on display for your personal inspection. Until November 13, you can commission Ms. Doolittle's publisher, The Greenwich Workshop, to produce your very own print, which the artist will sign and number.

You may not be able to find all the Indians concealed in this picture, but you can collect an important new work by this artist. "The Forest Has Eyes." See it now at Church establishes village for single-parent families

By KAY MARIE PORTERFIELD
King Features Syndicate

As of 1982, one out of every four children lived in a single-parent home. Ninety percent of those households are headed by women, women who earn only a little more than half of what men earn. Combine those figures with the fact that less than half of non-custodial fathers pay child support, and it is no wonder that social scientists have begun to talk about the feminization of poverty.

Hearing sociologists talk about "learned helplessness" and "welfare mentality" makes us wonder if the problems facing single parents will ever be solved. Yet in Denver, Colo., those problems have been tackled by a unique living concept for single parents — Warren Village — with amazingly high success rates.

In 1954, the members of Warren United Methodist Church saw the need for an extensive project to help single parents. They purchased land adjacent to their church in Denver's central city neighborhood, Capitol Hill.

Once the land was acquired and the buildings on it were torn down, Warren Village was incorporated as a non-sectarian entity in order to seek outside funding in the form of grants and loans.

Federal and city money was obtained along with United Way funds, corporate donations and a number of miscellaneous contributions. By 1974, the doors to Warren Village opened and 96 single-parent families moved into the modern apartment building.

The turn-arounds made by those families were so dramatic that this year, Warren Village celebrates its 10th anniversary by opening Warren Village II, a program that will offer the same help and hope for an additional 106 families. Both facilities include a learning center for children and a family services program to provide counseling. Warren Village II will also have a jobs skills center.

HAVING THE PROGRAM copied is yet another measure of success, and communities in New York, Florida, Hawaii, Kentucky, Maryland, Texas, Utah and California have studied Warren Village in order to plan similar programs.

Although the average stay at Warren Village is only 18 months, the temporary residence helps families get on their feet. Forty-seven percent of the single parents in the program are unemployed. By the time they leave, 94 percent have found jobs.

Sixty-five percent of new residents receive some form of public assistance. That figure drops to an amazing 6 percent upon moving out. Over the course of a stay at Warren Village, the average adult resident gains nearly a year of completed schooling.

What happens at Warren Village to make this possible? "We teach people to become self sufficient," according to social worker Norma Hamilton, program director of the Family Services Department. "While they're here, we want them to have a sense of security, help and guidance. We counsel, but we don't take care of residents. Our families learn to take care of themselves."

To be eligible for Warren Village, single parents must be 18 years of age or older, have legal and physical custody of their children and have some form of income, be it from a job, public assistance or child support.

Applicants who qualify are then given a two-hour screening interview to determine whether or not they have goals and the determination to achieve them.

Once a single parent is accepted, those goals become a part of the lease agreement. Goals might include improving job skills, getting a job, getting an education, improving parenting skills or getting out of debt.

"RESIDENTS SIGN an agreement that they will work toward their goals," Ms. Hamilton says, "and every six months, the single parent sits down with someone from Family Services to evaluate just how they're doing."

Administrators for the program stress that Warren Village is not emergency housing (typically, residents must wait three to six months before acceptance and moving-in).

Neither are Warren Village apartments meant to be permanent residences. When the villagers reach the goals they have set for themselves, they are expected to leave. "Rent is paid on a sliding fee scale according to income," Ms. Hamilton says. "As residents move off public assistance or obtain better paying jobs, they pay rent at market value."

In addition, they must pay their own child-care costs if they use the learning center. Initially, they may receive public child-care assistance, and some receive child-care scholarships that is obtained through fund-raising. Eventually, as a single parent family improves its quality of life, living here is no longer practical.

Situated on the ground floor of the apartment complex, the learning center consists of seven separate classrooms for children from age 6 weeks to 12. A staff of professionals, the majority of whom have master's degrees, serves approximately 103 children. Breakfast and lunch are provided by a U.S. Department of Agriculture program.

The brightly painted rooms constantly bustle with activity from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. School-age children are walked to the nearby school by their teachers and picked up in the afternoon for activities.

"The learning center meets the special needs of children of divorce," according to Carol Bauman of the Warren Village Development Office. "Staff members are very much aware of the emotional adjustment problems these children may have. In addition, security is very tight. Children aren't released to anyone except the parent of record."

BECAUSE SOME Warren Village residents have recently escaped abusive marriages, and because child snatching is a very real fear for some parents, security precautions in the building are stringent at the residents' request.

The Family Services counseling program is offered at no charge to tenants. In addition to conducting intake interviews, the two social workers on staff offer monthly classes on topics like job training skills, sexual enrichment, parenting skills, nutrition and budgeting.

Individual counseling is available, as well, for parents and children. The issues of loss and grief that come with separation and divorce are prime topics. In addition, Family Services provides referrals to outside agencies when they are needed.

"Because we aren't reimbursed for counseling services, the funding must come from donations," says Judith Weaver, director of development. "Our office pushes hard every year to raise enough money so that services won't need to be cut back. The Family Services program is what makes Warren Village unique. It is what makes residents leave full of the stuff it takes to tackle the world."

The main thread that runs through the counseling program is goal setting. Many new residents have few decision-making skills, and some need to learn how to set goals.

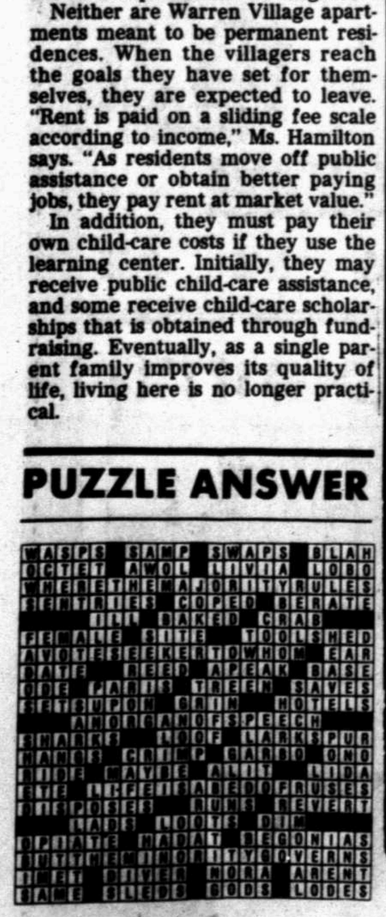

Says Rodella McClain, M.S.W., director of Family Services, "Often we need to set small goals, and we arrange the counseling appointments close together to give people a chance to succeed. That our residents succeed is very important to us."

And succeed they do. Here are a few of the accomplishments some Warren Villagers have made: One has become a lab researcher, one the owner of a beauty shop, another an ophthalmologist and another a college graduate with a master's degree in psychology. Some have purchased their own homes.

WARREN VILLAGE provides much more than light and spacious one-, two- and three-bedroom apartments, laundry facilities and on-site child care. It provides a way for a low-income, single-parent family to succeed in society instead of simply becoming another sad poverty statistic.

For more information, contact Warren Village, 1323 Gilpin, Denver, Colo. 80218.

Low calorie 'naked' pasta better when 'dressed' in sauce

By PHILOMENA CORRADENO
King Features Syndicate

Pasta, with its approximately 150 shapes, offers an almost unlimited variety of uses and adaptability to any number of sauces or dressings.

It wasn't too long ago that the word "pasta" was unfamiliar to non-Italians. To them, this great grain food was known as spaghetti, noodles or macaroni. Today, pasta is a word heard round the world.

First a few words about pasta. Enriched pasta is a low-sodium, low-fat grain food. Contrary to popular belief, it's also low in calories — if eaten unadorned. One cup of macaroni cooked al dente (firm to the bite) has 190 calories; cooked to a more tender state, it has 155. Why? Because the longer it cooks, the more water it absorbs, thus decreasing calories. Egg noodles are higher, about 260 per cup.

But who wants to eat naked pasta when it combines so beautifully with meat, poultry, fish, cheese, vegetables, even fruit.

Pesto is a classic of Genoa that has gained popularity on this side of the world. More a paste than a sauce, it's a mixture of fresh basil, garlic, olive oil, pine nuts and cheese.

Naturally, as with most traditional or classic recipes, pesto has undergone changes and variations. In one of the following recipes, broccoli is combined with dried basil; in another, parsley is combined with it. In the third, pistachio nuts and fragrant basil provide a distinctively flavorful touch.

VERMICELLI WITH BROCCOLI PESTO

12 ounces vermicelli
1 tablespoon salt
4 quarts boiling water
3 cups fresh broccoli flowerets
2 tablespoons pine nuts
1 clove garlic, quartered
2½ tablespoons olive oil
2 tablespoons freshly grated Parmesan
¼ teaspoon dried basil
Dash pepper

Cook vermicelli according top directions. Drain and keep hot.

Cook broccoli in boiling salted water 5 to 6 minutes or until stalk portion is tender. Plunge into cold water. Let stand until broccoli is cold.

Place pine nuts and garlic in blender container. Blend until mixture is very fine. Gradually add some of the broccoli, a little olive oil and cheese and blend until mixture is almost smooth.

Continue adding broccoli, oil, cheese, basil and pepper until mixture is well blended and has a slightly coarse texture, scraping down sides of blender with spatula as necessary. Toss with piping hot vermicelli, tossing to coat well.

LINGUINE WITH PARSLEY PESTO

8 ounces linguine
1 tablesppon salt
3 quarts boiling water
1 clove garlic, quartered
2 tablespoons pine nuts
3 cups parsley sprigs, stems removed
3¼ tablespons olive oil
2 tablespoons freshly grated Parmesan
½ teaspoon dried basil
Dash salt, pepper

Cook linguine according to directions. Drain and keep hot.

Put garlic and pine nuts in blender container and blend until mixture is smooth, stopping blender and pushing down parsley with spatula, as necessary. Blend in cheese, basil, salt and pepper. Toss over piping hot linguine.

PISTACHIO PESTO

1 cup packed fresh basil
⅔ cup grated Parmesan
¼ cup coarsely chopped natural pistachios
¼ cup olive or vegetable oil
1 clove garlic, peeled
⅛ teaspoon cracked pepper
3 tablespoons butter or margarine, softened
12 ounces pasta, cooked

Place basil, cheese, pistachios, oil, garlic and pepper in food processor or blender; process until well blended. Add butter to hot pasta; toss until butter melts. Add basil mixture; blend well.

Serve with additional chopped pistachios and Parmesan cheese.

In Rappalo on the Italian Riviera, this walnut sauce is served on ravioli but is delectable on any pasta shape. Preparation is a little more time-consuming than with pesto, but the results are worth it.

SALSA DI NOCI (WALNUT SAUCE)

½ pound blanched, skinned walnut meats
⅔ cup toasted pine nuts
½ clove garlic
3 tablespoons chopped Italian parsley
Pinch of salt
½ cup ricotta

The following unusual and quite delicious sauce is excellent on linguine, spaghetti, thin spaghetti or noodles. If possible, use fresh basil.

AVOCADO PASTA SAUCE

3 scallions or green onions, finely chopped
1 clove garlic, minced
1 tablespoon minced
Fresh basil, or 1½ teaspoons basil leaves, crushed
½ teaspoon oregano
¼ cup butter, melted
1 cup dry white wine
¾ cup parsley, chopped
1½ cups ricotta cheese
3 soft avocados, mashed

Saute scallions, garlic, basil and oregano in butter until scallions are tender. Add wine and parsley; simmer 5 minutes. Stir in ricotta until well blended and heated through. Remove from heat. Thoroughly blend in mashed avocado. Serve immediately over hot pasta.

Yield: enough sauce for 1 pound of of pasta, 6 servings.

Tomato sauces just can't be overlooked. The first of the following, Amatriciana, a favorite in Rome, originated in Amatrice on the Adriatic coast. The authentic version calls for pancetta, a lean-and-fat pork product somewhat like bacon. The same cut is used but it is not smoked. It's rolled and comes in a casing. It is available in Italian specialty shops. If there is none in your area, you may substitute Italian ham (prosciutto), which I think is even more flavorful and is available in almost any delicatessen section. Or you may use bacon.

The Tuna Tomato Sauce is a family recipe.

The remaining recipes are simple, yet quite different, one made with fresh tomatoes, another with a canned tomato sauce.

PASTA ALL' AMATRICIANA

1 tablespoon butter
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 small onion, chopped
2 slices pancetta, diced, each about ¼ inch thick; or 1 thick slice prosciutto (about ¼ pound), diced; or ¼ pound lean bacon, diced
½ cup dry white wine
1 (2-pound 3-ounce) can Italian plum tomatoes
1 tablespoon finely chopped parsley

Melt butter in saucepan; add oil and onion and cook, stirring until onion is soft and transparent. Do not brown. Add pancetta. Cook 3 to 4 minutes. Add wine. Cook over moderately high heat until wine evaporates. Add tomatoes and cook until thickened, stirring occasionally, 20 to 30 minutes. Sauce should not be watery. Add parsley just before serving.

TUNA TOMATO SAUCE

1 (7-ounce) can tuna, packed in oil
3 tablespoons olive oil
1 medium onion, chopped
1 (28-ounce) can Italian plum tomatoes, strained
Salt to taste
⅛ teaspoon black pepper

Drain oil from tuna into a saucepan. Add olive oil and onion. Over low heat, cook onion until soft and transparent, stirring almost constantly. Do not allow onion to brown. Add tomatoes, salt and pepper. Cover saucepan with lid slightly open. Cook, stirring occasionally, until sauce is thickened, about 45 minutes. Break tuna into chunks, or flake, and add to sauce. Cook 15 minutes longer.

BEEF AND BEAN SAUCE

1 pound ground beef
1 (15-ounce) can tomato sauce
½ cup water
½ cup chopped salad olives
2½ tablespoons chopped Tuscan (small, hot, vinegared) peppers
1 teaspoon basil leaves, crushed
1 teaspoon salt
1 (16-ounce) package spaghetti
1 (20-ounce) can red kidney beans, drained

In large skillet brown beef, stirring to break into small pieces; drain off drippings. Stir in tomato sauce, water, salad olives, Tuscan peppers, basil and salt. Bring to a boil. Reduce heat and simmer, covered, for 5 minutes, adding water if needed. Add beans to sauce mixture; simmer, covered, until heated through, about 2 minutes.

Cook spaghetti according to package directions; rinse, drain and place in a large serving bowl.

HERBED BEEF AND FRESH TOMATO SAUCE

12 ounces ground beef
3 cups chopped fresh tomatoes (1½ pounds)
½ cup diced zucchini
1 teaspoon Italian seasoning, crushed
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon paprika
¼ teaspoon garlic powder

In a medium saucepan brown beef, stirring to crumble; drain excess fat. Add tomatoes, zucchini, Italian seasoning, salt, paprika and garlic powder. Simmer, covered, stirring occasionally, until tomatoes turn into a sauce and flavors are blended, 10 to 15 minutes, adding water if needed. Serve over cooked pasta.
