Communist Students In Mass Meeting Demand Armed March Into Manchuria

MOSCOW TENSE AS WAR THREAT CASTS SHADOW

Grave Possibility of Armed Clash Continues To Menace Nations

REDS STRENGTHENED

German Press Seeks Test Of Kellogg Pact For Ending Trouble

MOSCOW, July 18. (US)—More than 1,000 Chinese Communist students in a mass meeting tonight here shouted for armed Soviet intervention in Manchuria, offering to be among the first to shoulder arms against their own countrymen.

There were no public parades in Moscow today, although the "atmosphere" is extremely tense.

War Declaration Checked

Two important things are holding back the Soviet declaration of war against the Chinese:

1. The government's communistic pledge to the world proletariat to defend oppressed nations and not to interfere for imperialistic reasons, such as defending property.
2. Internal economic conditions would be strongly affected by such a war.

Nevertheless war is a grave possibility. The white guard troops in Manchuria might advance into Soviet territory, thus giving the Soviets reason to say they are invading Manchuria to suppress the white guards instead of the Chinese.

Japanese Menace

Over all looms the menacing power of Japan which would unquestionably gain greater influence in Manchuria if the Soviets should decide to give Chang Hsueh-Liang a good beating.

Russia's modern tools and implements of war, including a powerful air squadron and cavalry forces already concentrated and being reinforced at the Manchurian border, will be displayed to drive China into a more humble and polite attitude.

Gen. Georg Budenny, commander of the red armies, has ordered the reinforcement of all frontier forces in the northeast, and all rail lines leading in the direction of and through Siberia have been commandeered for the exclusive use of the military.

Troop Movements

Great movements of troops have been begun.

It is not understood that these troop movements are a theat of war but are Soviet preparations to repel possible attacks, and to curb guerilla warfare along the line of the railways, particularly west of Harbin.

It is believed here that a number of American travelers have found themselves stranded in the

Don't Mind The Taste And Smell, Boys, It Aint Got No Bacteria Hardly

Raw water direct from the open ditch between Lake Wichita and the city has been by-passed into the city mains for the last few days with only heavy shots of chlorine to prepare it for use in the homes of Wichita Falls, it was learned Thursday night by The Record News from Dr. A. H. Douglass, manager of the city water department.

Dr. Douglass' statement followed on the heels of a warning Thursday morning from George D. Fairtrace, city manager, that unless the consumption in Wichita Falls could be reduced, it would be necessary to turn considerable quantities of the water into the mains. Dr. Douglass said the raw water had already been turned in for the last few days when pressure fell below the safety point.

"Well, folks it looks like we'll have to quit drinking so much water and putting any of it on our lawns and flowers, or pretty soon we'll be taking it right out of the ditch into our homes."

That wasn't the exact language of the two city officials, but it was the substance of what they had to convey to Wichitans on the status of the city's inadequate system.

The unusual odor of the water for the last few days was attributed by Dr. Douglass to dead vegetation in the ditches from which it is taken. The muddy color, he said, was caused by the lack of facilities for filtering enough of the water to meet the peak demands durings the heat wave.

Several complaints have been received during the last week because of the evil smell of the water, Dr. Douglass said. The department is doing everything possible to eliminate the dead and rotted vegetation from the ditches, especially since the water has to be by-passed. Chlorination of the water has been heavily increased, and it contains no bacteria, despite its smell and taste, it was declared.

The Wichita Falls filtration plant is capable of filtering the total amount of water used daily if that amount is evenly distributed over the 24 hours, Mr. Fairtrace said. Since the peak consumption comes between the hours of 4:30 and 9:30 o'clock in the evening, however, all of the water cannot be filtered, and the city plant draws upon its storage reserve of 3,000,000 gallons. When this reserve proves insufficient to meet the demand, the only recourse left to the city water department is to pass the water directly after chlorination into the city mains.

The total consumption of water during the last several days has exceeded 7,000,000 gallons daily, greatly in excess of the capacity of the plant here, it was said. An appeal by city officials, urging that lawns and gardens be watered in the morning, brought an increase of 750,000 gallons in consumption Thursday before 2 p. m., and a considerable decrease after that hour. Total consumption for the day, however, was 7,220,000 gallons.

The chlorination process removes the possibility of bacteria, Mr. Fairtrace said, but the inability to properly filter the water often causes it to be cloudy when reaching the consumer. Allowing the water to stand in the city's settling pools removes part of the dirt and mud, but fails to make it entirely clear, it was stated. In such an event, water for drinking purposes should be boiled for several minutes, as an added health precaution. The boiling will also help to remove the cloudy appearance and the slight odor, it was pointed out.

Water which is brought to the city for consumption passes through an open and unprotected ditch from Lake Wichita. The ditch is a favorite swimming and fishing place for boys and men, although the swimming is "prohibited" by the city. It is practically impossible to keep the ditches clear of weeds and mud in spite of cleaning, according to Dr. Douglass.

Other instances have arisen in the past when the water department has been forced to pass raw and heavily chlorinated water into the city mains. Changes in the machinery at the plant were made last winter in anticipation of excessive use of water during the summer months, but the added capacity has not proved sufficient to care for the unexpected use of water during the hot part of the afternoon and evening when residents water their lawns, Mr. Fairtrace said.

The water problem has been a recurring one here for the last few years, and more recently was brought to the attention of the city council when Mr. Fairtrace pointed out the inadequacies of the plant here, and the many drawbacks of the open ditch supply. Mr. Fairtrace's recommendations for radical changes were made in his annual report, and council members agreed to go out and talk the matter over with the public. Subsequently, the matter has not been discussed.

BODIES OF NINE TRAIN WRECK VICTIMS FOUND

Vacation Bound Party Goes Into Swollen Creek In Colorado

STRATTON, Colo., July 18. (UP)—A wreck that hurled Pullman coaches of a crack Rock Island express train through a bridge and into a swirling stream beneath, had yielded nine known dead tonight, with rescue work still incomplete.

Hours had elapsed since the train left the rails and toppled from a bridge over Spring creek, four miles west of here, before any headway was made in extricating bodies from one of the coaches, which had been completely submerged in the swollen waters of the creek.

The bodies recovered included those of three men, three women, a 16-year-old girl and a Pullman porter, who were taken from the sunken Pullman after workmen had hacked their way through its sides. The body of another porter, Brooks Cline, was found downstream.

Morris Gest Aboard

The train, bound from Chicago to Denver with coaches from St. Louis and other midwestern points, left the tracks and crashed through the bridge when the latter had become weakened by a cloudburst.

Morris Gest, theatrical producer, was among the passengers who escaped safely. There were about 400 aboard the train with its 15 cars.

E. W. Bremken, Pullman conductor, said he was confident there were eight persons in the car that plunged lengthwise into the torrent and only one of them, E. J. Perry of New Bedford, Mass., is known to have come out alive.

His hands and face cut by glass from a car window through which he fought his way, Perry tonight was able to give an account of what happened to the other passengers in the ill-fated Pullman.

Perry considers that he owes his life to the act that he was awake when the speeding train hit the bridge across the "dry wash" that had suddenly taken on the proportions of a maddened mountain torrent.

"I felt a terrible blow at shortly before 4 a. m.," said Perry. "It seemed that I had been thrown against a stone wall, but somehow I was not rendered unconscious. I could hear screeching of brakes and then we seemed to float off into space as we dropped to the bottom of the creek bed. The sensation was that of being in a falling elevator. Then the crash as we hit the bottom. Water began pouring into the car and I vaguely realized that I should get out. I took my shoes and broke through a window, the water rushing behind me. As

The gasoline was valued at approximately $1,000 wholesale.

COUNTY HEADS DIP INTO TAX TANGLE TODAY

Marrs and Bundy Oppose Raise; Delinquent Tax Figures Disputed

With the auditor's recommendation for a 10-cent raise awaiting them, and county officials in sharp disagreement about the measures needed to meet the financial situation, members of the county commissioners court will assemble in a special meeting Friday morning to dig into the job of setting the county tax rate for 1929 and of apportioning the available money among the various funds.

In the face of Paul Barnett's declaration that a 10-cent increase is necessary to avert a serious crisis in 1931, officials Thursday hurried into conferences and stirred through records in an effort either to support or to oppose the recommendation. The opinion that more money will be needed in special road and bridge funds Nos. 1 and 2 before April, 1931, became almost unanimous in the face of the auditor's figures but the suggested method of getting the money was emphatically contested.

Battle Opens Today

Prospects were Thursday afternoon that the meeting Friday morning would do little more than scratch the surface of a problem which may not reach its solution before the end of the month.

John P. Marrs, county judge, and M. A. Bundy, commissioner for precinct 1, which includes Wichita Falls, Thursday took their stands in opposition to the proposed increase, both of them declaring that such a raise would be avoided if there were any other way out. Both officials added that if a raise were proven unavoidable, they would hold out for a much smaller one, making five cents the maximum limit. The present rate is 75 cents on the $100 valuation and early this month Judge Marrs had expressed a hope that it might be lowered. The recommendations of Mr. Barnett, county auditor, are based on an estimated $60,000,000 valuation.

T. W. McHam, county treasurer, agreed with the auditor in the assertion that more money had to

Taxpayer Writes Manager "Open Letter"

Jim Marlow's Famous Well Recalled

Dear Mr. Fairtrace:

I have been a citizen of Wichita Falls for quite a while, in fact I was a citizen and a taxpayer when a former mayor, Jim Marlow, during a drouth dug a well in front of his real estate office on Ohio avenue between Seventh and Eighth streets to supply water for the citizens of Wichita Falls. That was some drouth, and it was some enterprising mayor who said he could dig a well in the street and get water, which he did and it was good water, too. I drank it myself.

But it seems I have slid back or something. I don't seem able to keep up with our modern and up-to-date city government any more, and as a favor to me won't you please help me out by answering the following questions through the columns of either The Record News or the Daily Times.

In our present water crisis, why did you deem it necessary to issue instructions that the water at the Riverside cemetery be shut off at 2 p. m. and at the same time permit and prohibit the water from being shut off at the golf course, and at least two of our parks that were running two fire hose for the pleasure of the children? At one of the parks the water was flowing all the way to the Wichita river, and the amount of water flowing

POWDER BLAST PLAYS HAVOC

Three Killed, Score Hurt In Explosion at Plant

NEW KENSINGTON, Pa., July 18. (UP)—A terrific explosion in the United States Aluminum company plant at Logan's ferry late today killed at least three workers and injured 27 others.

Eight of the injured were in such dangerous condition tonight that it was feared they would die.

Firemen and volunteer rescue workers worked late into the night searching the blackened ruins of the plant for bodies of missing men. More than 100 workers were said to be in the plant at the time of the blast.

The powder plant is situated on the Allegheny river about a mile below the city. The explosion came without warning and was said to be similar to one which occurred here during the world war, when nearly 50 men were killed.

The plant was wrecked by the blast.

Fright scenes followed the disaster as rescuers searched the ruins for the dead and injured workers. Trucks were pressed into service as ambulances and entire truck loads of injured men, many unconscious, were brought to New Kensington and rushed to the Citizens General hospital.

Although officials at the plant said they believed no more than three men had lost their lives, they ordered the firemen to continue searching the ruins of the demolished powder works.

The immediate cause of the explosion has not been determined, they said, but an investigation will be started immediately.

The blast was heard for many miles around Logan's ferry. The powder plant was about 17 miles above Pittsburgh.

WICHITA FALLS AREA SOAKED BY DOWNPOUR

Electrical Storm Accompanies Torrential Rain Early Friday Here

A torrential downpour which started in Wichita Falls shortly after midnight continued unabated as 1 o'clock Friday morning arrived. The rain was accompanied by an electrical storm and was apparently general over this vicinity.

At 1:30 o'clock Friday morning many streets in the southern part of the city were impassable owing to the overflow which reached up into the yards of numerous homes. The wind subsided after a while and the rain fell quietly but in no less volume.

Fears of heat prostrations Wednesday gave way to fears of storms Thursday as a welcome cool breeze, bringing a light rain, put an end to one of the most severe heat waves in the Wichita Falls section in several years.

Many heat records toppled over the area during the period of high temperatures, but the storm fears had proved unfounded Thursday night. Train dispatchers reported no violent disturbance of any kind in the Wichita Falls area.

A light rain which fell here early Thursday night, and over this section, brought further relief from the high temperatures. The atmosphere had been considerably cooled earlier in the evening by a hard north wind. The Fort Worth and Denver dispatcher reported a slight rain at Chillicothe, which was falling at 9 p. m. Dawson county also received rain, while Iowa Park reported good showers in that area.

A four-year temperature record was equalled here Wednesday when the mercury soared to 108 degrees. The maximum temperature Thursday was only one degree less, 107, but the cool winds and light rains did much to dispel the effects of the severe heat of the last few days.

A heavy downpour of rain, accompanied by an electrical disturbance, set in at Electra shortly after 11 o'clock Thursday night. Very little wind came with the cooling precipitation, according to the Electra correspondent of The Record News.

UNSOLD GRAIN GLUTS PORT'S STORAGE SPACE

American Railway Association Declares Ban On New Shipments

FIVE ROADS JOIN

Sufficient Vessels Booked To Move Accumulation At Island City

GALVESTON, July 18. (AP)—Efforts to modify or obtain an early lifting of embargo restrictions placed on export grain to Galveston will be pushed by local traffic men and shippers following announcement of the embargo this afternoon by R. C. Andrews, Dallas, district manager of the American Railway association car service division.

The embargo becomes effective at midnight and restricts further loadings at inland points for Galveston export. Cars now en route here, totalling 2,924, will be allowed to continue and cars consigned to Fort Worth for inspection may be reconsigned to Galveston until midnight Saturday. The order will be effective only until accumulation of grain here is relieved, Andrews explained. The situation, he explained, was unfavorable and unforeseen and is a result of peculiar market conditions and not lack of facilities to move the wheat.

E. H. Thornton, traffic manager, saw hopes of an early lifting of the embargo or at least a modification of the order to the permit system. Galveston business men and shippers will confer tomorrow on plans to clear the congestion and lift the restraining order. The embargo was brought about by accumulation of unsold grain in cars and elevators, held up by lack of foreign buying due to a rise in the price of wheat, it was explained.

Railroad cars and vessels were available to move the grain but the high market has caused buyers to wait for a drop, shippers explained.

EFFECT SERIOUS IN MID-WEST, SAYS HUNT

"The embargo placed upon shipments of wheat into Galveston Thursday will create a very serious situation for midwestern wheat growers unless relieved within a few days," J. C. Hunt, local grain dealer, told The Record News Thursday night in discussing the action of the American Railway association in closing the principal wheat export city against further receipts.

"So far as this section of Texas is concerned, the effect will not be so noticeable, for the heaviest part of our crop already has moved out. In the upper part of the Panhandle, in western and northwestern Oklahoma, and in Kansas, however, there are still vast amounts of wheat to be shipped, and the natural outlet is by way of the Galveston port.

"The crop from Kansas will occasion the major problem, in case the embargo is continued in effect. Frequent storms in that state during the last few weeks have dam-

Houston Plane Up 29 Hours In Try at Endurance Flight Record

HOUSTON, Texas, July 18. (AP)—The Billion Dollar City, Houston endurance plane, received its third midair load of fuel at 6 p. m. just before rounding out 29 hours of flight.

Using a larger hose, 150 gallons of gasoline, five gallons of oil, some grease and a gallon of water were given the plane at an altitude of 4,000 feet, 20 miles from the Houston airport, contact lasting six minutes.

Fuel loss by evaporation resulted in a call for a cork stopper to plug the main gasoline tank refueling aperture, but this was not regarded as a distress sign. The earlier call, however, necessitated another flight by the refueling plane to the pilots Joe Glass and Glenn L. Loomis their chicken supper.

SHREVEPORT, La., July 18. (UP)—The endurance ship KWKH sailed through clear skies near here late today following a rainfall earlier in the day.

Van Lear Leary and Curry Sanders, pilots, were in fine spirits as they sent greetings to their friends. The refueling ship and endurance plane are equipped with telephone wires for communication purposes reducing refueling contacts. The pilots took off at 10:29 a. m. Wednesday.

War on Cattle Tick to Be Waged In 11 Additional Texas Counties

FORT WORTH, July 18. (AP)—Tick eradication work will be extended to 11 counties early next year, according to present plans of the live stock sanitary commission. Plans have been announced for beginning work in February and March in Atascosa, Willacy, Cameron, Hidalgo, Panola, Rusk, Cherokee, Duvall, parts of Live Oak and Fort Bend and the west half of Anderson counties.

The commissioners said that with sufficient appropriations Texas could eradicate cattle fever ticks in four years. An appropriation two years hence of $2,000,000 would effect this result, they estimate.

Ten counties are scheduled to be released from quarantine next December.

Scabies have been eradicated from practically all sheep flocks in Texas but during the past 12 months have been found in many goat herds, according to Carroll Drew, chief inspector, and J. H. Rasco, chief sheep inspector.

JUST THE Baer Facts

By Bugs Baer

HOLLYWOOD, Calif., July 18. (US)—Of all the senatorial gadgets we have inhaled so far, the one that cops the frozen gravy is the suggestion that the government take over the press.

We do not know which senator laid this magnificent egg.

Whoever he was, he was a guy who could raise a tempest in a teapot by drinking out of the saucer.

And they say Hamlet was crazy. Well, crazy or not, Hamlet never tried to think with Yorick's skull.

After a suggestion like that we think we could do better in the future by allowing the senators to simmer at their desks while we called a roll of the hats in the cloakroom.

Whose ever idea it was, he must have been proceeding with full steam sideways.

His miniature intellect must have been befuddled with the impression that the Congressional Record was literature.

Let's see how John J. Government would run the newspapers of this bundle of states.

The first thing they would get wrong would be the weather reports.

While the secretary of war was writing advice to the lovelorn we would probably be attacked by 16 small but hopeful nations.

The cabinet would naturally go in for writing sports and baseball. The navy would drop target practice and take up yacht racing with Sir Thommaso Lipton, the man who sells us tea and makes us like it.

We would naturally have to make a comic artist secretary of the treasury so that he could draw $10 bills that would make us laugh.

Of course, the old $10 bills make us laugh, too. But how would you like to see a hundred dollar bill with Mickey McGuire on the front and Mutt and Jeff on the back?

The advertising angle of cohesive by-products would be great.

We would send out the navy to sell an ad.

Then we would send out the army to collect the bill.

The committees on ways and means would write the editorials. We sure would get some fine educational information on how to table a resolution.

At least, the officeholders would stick around and earn their money. Nobody ever heard of a summer recess in the newspaper racket.

Before Oscar Government takes over all our newspapers in earnest, we suggest that it gets some preliminary practice editing the house journal of the Piggly Wiggly stores.

When you are running a string of newspapers, you ain't juggling lily cups.

Deportation Figures Show Big Increase

WASHINGTON, July 18. (US)—Deportation figures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, more than doubled those of five years ago, with a total of 12,908 undesirable aliens sent back to their respective countries as compared to 6,409 returned in 1924, according to figures made public today by the labor department.

It was explained that the increased figure is largely due to increased appropriations for deportation work, and a consequent improvement in the efficiency of the work.

BOY SCIENTISTS PURLOIN TOOLS

Police Have Hard Time Keeping Faces Straight

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 18. (UP)—It's hard for the police to keep a straight face sometimes while upholding the law.

Cases come up such as the one today when 17-year-old David Heyse and 16-year-old Harold Carpenter were brought to the station for attempting to steal laboratory equipment through the back window of a hospital. They had taken ring holders, retorts, mortars, pestles and the like. Scientists—no doubt about it.

Officers were more familiar with leather-necked adults carrying smoking pistols. Easy to determine what should be done in such cases. But here was "Scientist" Heyse, sitting in the station reading a book he carried when arrested, "Inorganic Chemistry," with all the indifference of one devoted to a single purpose in life.

Heyse ignored questions bearing on the method he and Carpenter employed to obtain tools for their work. Genius must be permitted certain latitude.

"Now Professor Millikan is a good chemist," Heyse told inquisitors a bit patronizingly, "but the professor hasn't scratched the surface in his work of stripping the atom."

Detective Chief Ed Boyle was not one to stand in the way of the advancement of science. If the atom must be "stripped," he wasn't going to delay the task by holding up the boys who were about the work. He sent the scientists back to their laboratory with an admonition or two about methods of getting their equipment, just to impress his prisoners with the presence of law in society as well as in science.

Strange slants a detective chief gets on humanity.

By ROBERT WELLES RITCHIE

LONDON, July 18. (US)—"It is too ridiculous for even a denial," declared Count Ludwig Salm Von Hoogstraeten, divorced husband of the former Millicent Rogers and son-in-law of H. H. Rogers, when I told him tonight of the New York report that he is planning to marry his former mother-in-law, Mrs. Mary Rogers.

I told Count Salm that the report followed the news of the divorce of Colonel Rogers in Utrecht, Holland, on June 26, and his marriage yesterday in Paris to Mrs. Basil Miles.

The count vented a deep throated roar of laughter and turned to a friend, saying:

"This is the funniest thing ever said about me yet. What next?"

Then more soberly he turned to me:

"What can one possibly say when asked seriously if he is planning to marry his own former mother-in-law? I have deep respect for Mrs. Rogers, but you may say for me that I am sure I never had any more idea of marrying her than she could possibly have had of marrying me. Why, I have not even seen the lady since the last time we met in Paris at the end of May."

When I told the count that Mrs. Rogers was reported to be at Baden, he said that he did not even know she was in Germany. I asked him what comment he had to make on the Rogers divorce.

"That is no matter for me to comment on," he answered.

Count Salm has been living with friends in Mayfair for the last few weeks.

Broker Loans Increase

WASHINGTON, July 18. (AP)—Loans to brokers and dealers held by New York federal reserve member banks for the week ending July 17 were announced by the federal reserve board today as $5,813,000,000, representing an increase of $58,000,000 over the preceding week and establishing a new high record.

CROQUET BOYS NEEDING DOUGH

Rule Barber and Tailor Ask For Assistance

DALLAS, July 18. (UP)—A call of help was sounded from Dallas tonight as two penniless croquet cronies sought a place to park their car where they might sleep off their sorrows.

Defeated by an empty pocketbook in their efforts to knock a croquet ball from Galveston to New York, only one hope remained to G. C. Hart and L. R. Rose, the batting barber and tapping tailor. Their hope was to get aid from the world outside of Texas.

The home state has turned a cold shoulder to their exploit. In appeals made near Bryan where they discontinued their enterprise temporarily after socking croquet balls for more than 100 miles, the efforts were fruitless.

With $10 between them, they piled into the car of their manager, R. F. Walton, and headed for Dallas where money was presumed plentiful. They found chamber of commerce heads out on a good will trip. Without their approval, "big business" refused to assist the croquet athletes.

Meanwhile, they unravelled a map of the United States. They discovered that Bryan, Texas, was rather close to Galveston and surprisingly distant from New York. But they also found some big cities between Bryan and their eastern destination. It was from these they believed succor would come.

Dallas had failed them, but Dallas still had pen and ink. Borrowing this equipment, the cronies engaged themselves in penning artistic words to the various "John J.'s" of the country. Another 24 hours will probably decide the story. If a check doesn't come from some unknown Santa Claus, the two will return to Rule, Texas, to cutting the hair and clothes of the villagers.

It is expected that the hatching season will begin on Sept. 1.

31 Drown as Ship Sinks

BUCHAREST, July 18. (AP)—Ships arriving at Rumanian Black sea ports today reported 14 passengers and 17 members of the crew had been drowned when the Russian ship Volga sank last night. The vessel struck a floating mine in the Black sea. Its SOS said 31 persons had already been drowned. The Volga sailed Tuesday from the Russian port of Novorossiisk.

The federal railway of Germany estimates that every German on the average takes 23 railroad trips a year.

Severe Test for Kellogg Pact Promised

zone in which all civil travel has been suspended.

Active plans were being made today by all Chinese officials in legations and consulates in Russia, to leave the country as quickly as possible. Commercial agents of Chinese concerns are also making hasty preparations to depart.

KELLOGG PACT TO RECEIVE TEST

BERLIN, July 18 (US)—The German government tonight accepted the diplomatic and consular representation of Russia in China and similar representation for China in Russia.

The requests of Russia and China to take over their diplomatic affairs during the break in their relations is seen as likely to give Germany the opportunity to play the role of mediator, but Wilhelm-Strasse was not in a position tonight to state anything except its disinterestedness and neutrality in the conflict.

Germany as a signer of the Kellogg pact, and incidentally the first nation to accept the pact without reservations, would be in a position to call upon other signatories for a joint reminder to Russia and China that they also signed the pact, and to ask them to take part in negotiations to prevent armed conflict arising out of the dispute over the Chinese Eastern railway.

Soviet Asks Help

The Soviet government today was the first of the two hostile nations to ask Berlin to take over their diplomatic business following breaking off relations with China last night. The request was made through the German ambassador in Moscow.

Later the Chinese minister in Berlin also asked the German government to take over the Chinese representation in Russia.

The Vossiche Zeitung, Democratic organ friendly to Foreign Minister Stresemann, declares that Moscow is evidently counting on a mediator coming forward, making it possible for Russia to "squeeze out as high a price as possible for her rights in the Chinese Eastern railway."

Whether Japan, who has by far the greatest interest of all foreign powers in Manchuria, is suitable for a mediator, appears doubtful.

"It would certainly be better if America accepted the role of mediator," says the Vossiche Zeitung. "This does not appear to be out of the question, since the Soviets as well as China, signed the Kellogg pact, and America would have the chance to prove for the first time the practical effect of this world peace pact inaugurated by her."

Test for Pact

Lokal Anzieger, nationalist newspaper, believes that Japan may invoke the Kellogg pact to intervene, and says—

"This dispute will be a test by fire for the Kellogg pact—a test to which friends of the pact may look with no little discomfort. So far not a word has been spoken in the whole affair about the Kelogg pact, which should long ago have been in operation."

The Tageblatt declares:

"Russia as well as China signed the Kelogg pact and it would be the most terrible of all experiences if just at the moment when the American president is about to announce that it is in force, the ineffectiveness of so important an international arrangement should be proved.

"A war for Manchuria would mean a vital danger not only for Europe and Asia, but for America also."

Though the seriousness of the situation is not underestimated here, doubt is expressed in semi-official circles that the Chinese-Soviet dispute will actually come to war. Neither country, is believed, is financially equipped to conduct a war.

Eight Victims Of Wreck Are Found

I came to the surface and could discern what I was doing, some timber, probably a piece of the wrecked bridge, floated close to me and I grabbed it. It carried me to shore at a point where the torrent made a bend.

Vacation-Bound Party

"My attire was my pajamas, but later I found my trousers and in them were my money and also my watch, which had stopped at eight minutes to four."

It was a vacationland-bound party that made up the major portion of the passenger list of the train, the cars of which late today still are strewn about much after the fashion of matches tossed carelessly to the ground. From Eastern, Central and Southern states they were speeding to the Rockies and already the change in altitude and atmosphere was evident, even to the sleeping tourists. A few hours—and today they would be at their objective ready for recreation that in many instances had been planned long in advance. For those in one car, with one exception, today never dawned. For scores of others, unable to shake loose the frightful memories of a terrifying experience, vacation joys will not carry the same meaning. They are coming to Denver and taking quarters—stunned.

The train was rushing west into the approaching dawn when it struck the bridge that spans what is termed a "dry wash." There had been a cloudburst in higher land above, and what ordinarily is a sandy stretch of sun-baked earth this morning was swept with a furious torrent. The engine and baggage cars passed over the weakened bridge. Then the rails spread and a Pullman turned and dropped lengthwise into the torrent with its load of sleeping travelers.

Passengers Asleep

According to Mr. Gest the majority of the passengers, like himself were asleep when the crash came. He said:

"There was, of course, some confusion immediately following the crash. But, there was no hysteria. Courage and grim determination seemed to grip the survivors. These, many in their night clothing, started at once heroic efforts to help the injured and recover bodies of the dead from the swirling water.

"I saw the third car sticking up out of the water—but only for a few minutes. The rapidly rising water soon covered it completely. It was said that there were 15 or 20 persons in the submerged car—but no one seems to know for certain.

"The bridge, a 75-foot span, was completely wrecked. One car was sunk in the stream; the two locomotives and three cars were sitting at a 45 degree angle on the west bank and the remainder of the cars were on the east bank. Four of the cars, the last four, did not leave the tracks.

"The car in front of mine was the one that went under the water. The car immediately in front of the submerged car was badly smashed and the car that followed the baggage car was just hanging on the banks of the river."

CRIME BOARD FREE TO THINK

Law Commission Given Full Power in Study

WASHINGTON, July 18. (US)—The federal crime commission will be given a free rein in forming its own conclusions on prohibition enforcement and other law problems, it was emphasized at the White House today.

It was stated that President Hoover considers it as an independent body and will make no effort to force his opinions or have the opinions of others forced upon it in an effort to influence its findings.

This was in response to some statements that the now-famous letter of George W. Wickersham, chairman, to the governors' convention, in which he urged the states to shoulder a greater burden of dry law enforcement, was prompted by the president.

The contrary is true, it was declared.

It was said that the president did not confer with Chairman Wickersham connection with the preparation of his letter to the governors and that he will not confer with him as a consequence of the criticism which followed.

While the White House position was being made clear Chairman Wickersham returned to Washington and resumed his study of the problem of law enforcement.

He declined to amplify his views as outlined in his letter to the governors or to make any statement whatever on the storm of comment it started. If he has anything further to say it will not be until the full commission meets here July 22, he said. He will remain here until that time.

SMOOT PLANS TO CUT SUGAR TARIFF FIGURE

WASHINGTON, July 18. (INS)—Senator Reed Smoot, Republican of Utah, chairman of the senate finance committee, today announced to the committee that he is contemplating a reduction in the sugar tariff fixed by the house in the Hawley tariff bill.

He indicated his proposed reduction is contained in a sliding scale of sugar rates which he has prepared and is holding in secret until actual rate making begins.

Under the house bill the sugar tariff was boosted from 2.4 to 3 cents a pound except against Cuba.

Tiny Keith, a 326-pound life guard at an Indianapolis bathing pool, claims to have rescued 1,133 persons from drowning.

THE SCOWLY OWL

A scowly owl
Is in the room!
It must have come
On a witch's broom.

It's a sort of a thing
With a terrible scowl,
I'm afraid if you touch it
It's likely to growl.

The scowly owl
Looks very mad,
—Why, bless my soul,
It's only Tad!

PEEPS AT PEOPLE

By MRS L. N. CASON

Too hot for people to do anything but bathe and relax when the sun goes down. One feels wilted after a burning day. But the weather has no effect on the birds. We hear them singing such happy songs in the early twilight—love songs for their young. Mocking birds have made their nests in the trees near us and the sweet, plaintive little sounds they make encourage us to "keep on keeping on."

There's a kitten across the street from us, owned by Mrs. Al Bedinghaus, (who, by the way owns every kitten that comes along, for they go no further) who paddles in water and plays like a puppy. It's long legged and long necked and peculiar, but it doesn't hesitate to crawl into her welcoming arms.

Out for a drive the other evening, we saw a row of Lombardy poplars standing slim and graceful against the rosy western sky. We felt that in all the beautiful things there are, nothing could have been much more beautiful than their swaying slenderness.

There's a place down on Bluff street, that, hidden in the privacy of its hedges and trees, is a kingdom to itself. We saw it early in the morning, when the big cool back yard was all in shade. The waterlilies were blooming, white, yellow, flesh and pink in their long pool, and myriads of gold fish rushed greedily to take the food Miss Chamberlin offered them. For this is the home of Miss Ethel Chamberlin.

One of the first things we asked her was "Where are you from?" for we knew her voice had some other state's background. "Boston," she said, and we were not surprised. How she did love that velvet turfed back yard with the loaded pear and peach trees and the grape arbor heavy with laden vines and the tall black walnut trees and the red birds and mocking birds singing their morning songs.

We saw the studio where she teaches and her own private studio and odd frames "picked up" by friends and lovely studies in bas relief that she had made and tinted.

We saw a quaint daguerrotype of her mother—a winsome little bright faced, pantaletted girl of 6 or 7, and thought how anyone would have wanted to pick up and hug the sweet faced child.

We saw a diary kept by her father during the civil war and the delicate, perfect script was so much like letters we had poured over written from our great uncle, at college, to our grandfather, that we wondered if all men of education took more time for writing in those days.

We saw a primer that must have been used by her mother or father as a child; the quaint old style letters and the quainter thoughts thrust upon a child.

"Xerxes did die
And so must I."

Then another thing we could not forget is the banjo clock. It is 100 years old and an experienced clockman says it will run another hundred years. What, after all, is time?

A home shut away from the street with hedges and trees; treasures of old times; an artist's desire to create that fills today; a charming personality. It means something to meet such stertling riches.

American Wives Earn Everything Spent on Them

The American Wife May Demand More Upkeep Than the European Wife, but She Has to Combine All the Virtues of Grand Dame and Scullery Maid to Satisfy Her Husband.

Mr. Samuel Hopkins Adams, the famous novelist, is a bear on the American woman. As an investment he regards her as a total loss.

He says that the American men spend more money on their women than the men of any other nation spend on theirs, and that they get less in return. He figures out that they don't even get a conservative 6 per cent on their money and then he asserts that the Frenchman expects his wife to be a good cook and to make her own clothes. The Englishman expects his wife to run his home expertly and to hold her own in any circle in which she may be put. The German expects his wife to be a good housekeeper and a good mother. And they all get what they demand.

But the American man expects nothing of his wife except that she will be extravagant. And she is. Wherefore, Mr. Adams concludes that the woman's stock is too high in this country and should be brought down to its proper level.

Of course, American women will rise en masse and dispute these allegations. They will point out that the American man is noted as the world's shrewdest trader and the one that is hardest to put anything over on, hence it may be safely concluded that if he plunges on American feminine common it is because he regards it as a gilt-edge investment returning an adequate dividend.

Also, if he spends money lavishly on his woman it is because he derives the same pleasure and satisfaction out of having a wife who looks a million dollars than he does of having an expensive car. A truck or a flivver would serve every useful purpose and cost little for upkeep. So would a purely domestic woman who is industrious and economical. But he wouldn't get the glow of pride and satisfaction out of either that he does out of the ornate article that advertises his prosperity to the world. And when you come to getting self-starters with streamline effects, with artistic color schemes and the latest thing in upholstery, you have to pay for it, whether it is an automobile or a woman.

Furthermore, Mr. Adams is sadly mistaken if he thinks that the American man demands less of his women than the man of any other nation does. On the contrary, he demands more, not less. He is the most generous man in the world to his wife and the most exacting. He pays well, but he expects value received.

To begin with, the American husband is the only man who expects his wife to be both a parlor ornament and a kitchen utensil. The foreign husband is satisfied if his wife makes good on the one particular qualification for which he married her. If he picked her out because she was a good cook and a penny-pincher, that is all he asks of her. He doesn't expect her to perform on the kitchen range with one hand and the piano with the other. But the American husband expects his wife to be able to pull off this neat little feat in legerdemain as part of the regular day's work.

If a foreign man marries a woman who is elegant and brilliant and capable of presiding over a salon, that's that. All she is expected to do is to scintillate. But the American man who marries a clever woman not only expects her to be a star, but to be a housefrau as well. Probably no English political hostess ever cooked with her own hands the dinner at which she presided with grace and distinction, but the wife of many an American politician has cleaned the house and polished the silver and set and decorated the table and prepared the food and led the conversation when she entertained her husband's guests.

In foreign countries men entertain and amuse women. They make the talk. The American man lolls back in his chair like a grand Turk and makes women do all the work of diverting him. Look about you at the theater, at restaurants, at parties, wherever men and women are gathered together. It is always the women who are being vivacious and sprightly, who are smirking and smiling and going through their tricks like a monkey on a stick trying to amuse men.

It is always the women who are doing the talking and who feel humbly repaid for their efforts if the men will only grunt now and then to show that they are still awake. It is always the women who are studying and reading up on topics in which men are interested so that they may be able to meet them on their own conversational ground, but no American woman is ever silly enough to expect any American man to talk to her about the things she is interested in.

Why, American men even expect the women to do the courting, and if they didn't there would be mighty few wedding bells. It is the girls who make the dates, who call up young men over the telephone, who call for young men in their cars, who write three letters to the young man's one, and who finally practically do the proposing. One of the reasons that American women fail so hard for foreign men is because it is such a novelty to have a man run after them instead of their having to track down the man they want, and such a luxury to have a man put some pep into the love-making instead of the girl's having to do it all, that they can't resist him.

The American man expects his wife to make his place in society. In foreign countries, where people stay more or less in that station in life in which it has pleased Heaven to call them, the man settles the family status, but in this country, where the poor man of today is often the millionaire of tomorrow, it is the wife who determines the family position in the great majority of cases.

The husband is absorbed in his money-making, but he expects his wife to change with their changing fortunes, and to make the social contacts that he has not the time nor inclination to make. He expects the grub he married to flutter forth as a butterfly of society, and, curiously enough, the adaptable American woman frequently does turn the trick, and rolls down her sleeves as she comes out of the kitchen and whisks off her checked apron, and takes her place as a grand dame in high society. And that is something no other woman in the world can do.

The American wife has her faults, but she is worth all that she costs her husband. Long ago the astute Mr. Morgan said anybody would go broke who went short on this country. And that goes double for the American woman.

Oh, These Women

By LEOLA ALLARD

NEW YORK, July 18. (US)—The city fathers of Hollywood object to the bathing beauties wearing bathing suits with no backs.

A chorine howls: "The idea! My bathing outfit weighs 14 ounces and the clothes I wear on the street weigh only 13."

She forgets that the extra ounces is in the soles of the shoes. And what city father ever looked at a bathing beauty's soles?

Dr. Deba returns to Paris to say: "The American woman is one of the most beautiful in the world, but she lacks the sentiment and affection of the French girl. She is absolutely heartless."

When visitors recognize something superior to their own home product, they never like it.

It is the fad to take cod liver oil to whiten the teeth. But it also adds weight as nothing else will. It's up to the woman to decide which they rather have. Beautiful white teeth or a slim body.

The choice is easy.

Women can keep their mouths shut—on occasion—but there is nothing they can do to hide obesity.

Boy, bring on the grapefruit!

A Council Bluffs widow, who runs a bureau for lonely widows and widowers, married one of them herself. Now she wants $15,000 alimony, claiming her husband "deserted her practically at the altar."

Of course if she doesn't get the money, one might say that he "very practically deserted her at the altar." But the outcome of the suit will decide which he had.

Paris announces that during the tourist season, it is noted that the men do not drink. The women do their drinking for them. Parisians attribute this to the awful effects of bootleg hooch on the male stomach in America. Evidently they believe the American women drink only in Paris.

Yet every day in New York, some poor girl has to call off her "tea party" because her bootlegger is in jail! And it is difficult to find men drinking alone, as they used to, before prohibition. The women drink here, there and everywhere. They have India rubber stomachs.

Paris is always belittlin'!

We Women

By BETTY BRAINERD

Here Is a Man!

I have a new hero. He isn't a movie actor, an aviator or athlete. Women don't know my hero, well enough. They should. His name has been in the papers a great deal in recent months, but the headlines have dealt with a subject in which women have taken little, if any, interest.

When we see headlines in the newspapers concerning such things as international conferences on the vast and vexing problem of war debts and reparations, we turn the page with a sniff of impatience and indifference to the more interesting goings-on in the world, such as fashions, movies, etc. There seems to be nothing especially appealing or, apparently, exciting about a meeting of business men.

Notwithstanding, Owen D. Young, chairman of the committee of international experts who, for four months, applied themselves with magnificent devotion to end "the war after the war," is a man who, more than any other since Lindbergh, has captured my imagination and excited my admiration.

Emerging from a long, drawn out session in which national interests clashed and often threatened to result in a disrupting row, which conceivably could cause another war, Mr. Young appears to me to possess all those qualities of heart and mind which are contained only in men of extraordinary intelligence, understanding, patience, tact, sympathy and gentleness.

It was no easy thing he did—steering such a meeting to a successful and peaceful conclusion. It was an astounding accomplishment—one that required a special ability amounting almost to genius.

I like what the Japanese envoy to the meeting said on his return:

"Owen Young is an American but he belongs to all the world. Without him the meeting would not have been a success, and if it hadn't been, God alone knows what would have happened."

So Owen D. Young is now my pet hero. He has those qualities which in our incurable disposition to indulge in hero worship we attribute to our heroes but which, actually, they do not always possess. There is a distinct difference between a man like Owen Young and, say, a man who hits a home run, swims the English channel or knocks out another man.

And, finally how could you help being attracted irresistibly to a man who, when the mayor of New York wanted to arrange a public welcome on his return and a parade radioed: "Please let me come home quietly." And returning quietly, he decried the tendency to give him more credit than he deserved at the expense of his American associates on the committee of experts. Here is a man, I say!

Betty Brainerd will be glad to help her readers with their problems. Send a self-addressed stamped envelope to her in care of this paper.

TWO RURAL SCHOOLS NEAR HOLLIS DESTROYED BY FIRE

ARSON SQUAD STARTS PROBE

Valley View and Bitter Creek Schools Lost

Special to the Record News.

HOLLIS, Okla., July 18.—Fire of unknown origin completely destroyed the Valley View and Bitter Creek rural schools northwest of Hollis Thursday morning. All fixtures and school supplies together with personal belongings and household goods of Prof. Paul J. Selman were stored in the Valley View school.

It is believed by county officers that the buildings were fired intentionally and investigation is under way. The schools burned are two of three which were to have been consolidated into a union graded district, bonds for $21,000 having been voted for that purpose last spring.

Building activities have been tied up due to dispute among patrons as to location of new building. The case is now pending in court. The third school, Eyper Hill, is on the north side of the newly formed district while the two burned are on the south side and dispute as to site of the new building was between the north and south location.

P. C. Grissom, deputy sheriff and head of the county arson squad, is conducting the investigation but no definite clues have yet been found. Both buildings were fully covered by insurance.

COTTON NEAR FRIBERG GOOD

Pests and Hot Weather Do Little Damage

Special to The Record News.

FRIBERG, Texas, July 18.—Cotton prospects in this section of the county continue in good shape despite the dry weather and indications point to an unusually heavy yield. Most of the cotton growers have completed the chopping and hoeing of the crop and fields are in fine shape. Small damage has been reported from pests.

The cotton season is late due to the six weeks' drouth during March and April. A greater acreage has been devoted to cotton farming this year than last due partly to the fact that unfavorable grain acreage was replowed and planted in cotton.

CROWELL TAX VALUES GAIN

Total Valuation Placed at $5,440,000

CROWELL, Texas, July 18. (Spl.)—Foard county tax valuations are $144,000 higher than last year, according to Tax Assessor Claude Calloway. Valuations for this year are $5,440,000, while for last year they were $5,296,000.

Mr. Calloway attributes the gain largely to real estate and the building program that has been carried out through 1928. A slight gain was noted in the equalization of taxes.

There was a loss on personal property, horses and mules losing about $24,000, while cattle lost in number but not in valuation. A loss of $8,000 is noted on merchandise while corporations and railroads showed quite a gain.

The valuation of the railroad was raised from $5,000 to $6,000 per mile, making a total gain of $21,000.

The pipe line of the Gulf company, crossing the southwest corner of the county, had its valuation raised $7,000 over last year and there was a new assessment on the Stamford Gas line going across the county, between Margaret and Rayland, which amounted to $32,000. The Culbertson Gas company added $20,000 and oil well machinery in the county on Jan. 1, was assessed at $15,000.

The county valuations have gone up steadily with each year for the past five years.

CLIMB HILLS with a COOL ENGINE all Summer long

EXTRA power for the hills—and anti-knock to keep the engine cool! That's what you get with Conoco Ethyl Gasoline.

Conoco Ethyl is the one fuel for high-compression motors. But it's more than that. It puts new life into old motors, too. It converts the carbon-coated veterans into fiery colts—just "rarin" to go.

Fill your tank with Conoco Ethyl—then pick out the steepest hill you can find and hold tight while Conoco Ethyl releases a flood of power. Up you go—and you reach the summit behind a cool, quiet engine. That's real motoring—and that's the extra satisfaction you get from using Conoco Ethyl Gasoline.

Of course, Conoco Ethyl costs a trifle more than ordinary gasoline, but it saves many times its extra cost by reducing wear and tear and by delivering all the power your motor was designed to develop.

Try Conoco Ethyl on your week-end trip. Then you'll understand.

Conoco Ethyl is a proper admixture of Conoco, the extra-miles motor fuel, and Ethyl Fluid, developed by General Motors. All Ethyl Gasoline is not Conoco Ethyl. To be sure you are getting Conoco Ethyl, fill only at those pumps which display the Conoco Ethyl sign.

Herbert Kaufman's GETTING TOGETHER Daily Editorial

IF CONSOLIDATION keeps up its present lick, greeting card manufacturers will soon be flooding the market with a line of "get-to-together" mottoes.

Meanwhile, the American dollar is doing the job quite satisfactorily with its own slogan.

The theory of competition is having a hard time justifying itself in financial circles. Steadly mounting overheads concur with William Tecumseh Sherman that, "war is hell," instead of agreeing with Brother John that combination is the evil genius of trade.

Industry can't reduce wages, but it can produce methods for less and cutting selling costs by uniting batches of cognate companies under centralized management, which, of course, creates a surplus problem in the executive field, but pronouncedly benefits the dividend rate.

Commerce, adopting the best engineering practice, is simplifying its transmission to obtain needed operating energy with fewer working parts.

The salaries of a dozen presidents, board chairmen, secretaries and treasurers, not to mention costs of other expensive officials, are thriftily conserved every time a group of enterprises is welded into a unit. And lesser budget items, thereby eliminated, total a much tidier sum. All of which explains why the Bordens have decided that it's more profitable to absorb 52 concerns in various parts of America, Canada, Europe and China and expand their milk, creamery, egg and ice cream activities into a worldwide gesture.

Certain theater supply and movie equipment houses have likewise concluded that they can render more lard and service by chipping together.

And the American Coty company, intrigued by the limitless possibilities of foreign territory, is acquiring heavy stock holdings in the mother concern and its widely scattered subsidiaries.

Bigger and better, if not cheaper, pies are promised from a six million dollar federation of Chicago pastry bakeries.

And the Curtiss-Wright deal, involving 11 aeroplane factories, will be formally plighted by an exchange of vows and securities on Aug. 15. Politics, too, have caught the fever and begin to reach into the opposition to strengthen party power and influence.

Higher Taxes to Pay Smaller Bills?

AUDITOR PAUL BARNETT'S recommendation of a 10-cent increase in the county tax rate, and his warning of a serious deficit which may follow the failure of the commissioners court to vote such an increase, do not appear so alarming on close study as at first glance. Judge John P. Marrs and Commissioner M. A. Bundy have definitely declared they hope to continue the operation of the county's affairs with little, if any, raise in the levy, and they are to be commended for their stand if they can successfully maintain it.

While The Record News cannot be as familiar with the county's financial standing as Auditor Barnett, it would appear that the threatened deficit and the 10-cent tax increase are indeed strange and unexpected things. Estimates of assessments give a two million dollar increase in our property values subject to taxation. Our interest and sinking fund payments on old bond issues should be decreasing each year. Yet, we are told it is necessary to raise the tax rate on higher valuations in order to pay smaller bills. No conscientious or intelligent citizen would have Wichita county default on any debt, nor to fall into arrears on any such payments. Neither does the intelligent citizen wish to have his taxes increased 10 cents on the $100 valuation to build up a nice, substantial unused bank balance for the county.

If Auditor Barnett is entirely correct in his recommendations, it would seem likely that economies in other county departments might provide for such an increase in the interest and sinking fund rate as is found NECESSARY without raising the total county rate. A 10-cent increase this year, with a nice reduction next year on the eve of election time, does not appear as attractive to this newspaper as a medium rate sufficient for our needs for both years.

As between the views of Auditor Barnett and County Treasurer T. W. McHam, who may justifiably in their positions look upon county finances more or less as an unemotional matter of figures and bank balances, and the opinions of Judge Marrs and Commissioner Bundy, who perhaps view money matters less scientifically but with more understanding of the average man's feeling, The Record News is rather inclined to look to Judge Marrs and Mr. Bundy for a solution of the matter. Even should they miscalculate the needs of the county, the credit of Wichita would be unimpaired, and the shortage, if there should be one, could be easily and legally met. Under present conditions, Wichita citizens doubtless would find it much easier to forgive county commissioners for underestimating than overestimating the tax rate.

Shipping by River Again

ALONG with a revival of the use of inland waterways in the Middle West, as exemplified by the growth in popularity of the Mississippi barge lines and the pending extension of service to the Missouri river, comes word that eastern rivers, too, are to have their part in the renaissance.

The Connecticut river once had many steamboats and barges, which carried passengers and freight from Long Island sound far up into Massachusetts. For years the river has been practically unused. Now, however, business is picking up. Oil companies are discovering that shipping by water is economical, and are preparing to send their freight as far as Springfield, Mass., by river. River terminals are being expanded at Hartford, and preparations are being made for extensive use of the river's facilities.

It is interesting to note this revival in river traffic. The rivers were for a time our chief arteries of commerce. Then they fell into almost complete disuse. Now they are coming back. Modern industrialism demands that every form of cheap transportation be used to the utmost.

Eliminating the Guides

THE CITY OFFICIALS of Fredericksburg, Va., have hit upon a system of handling sightseers that, for its good taste and common sense, deserves to be copied widely.

Fredericksburg, scene of Washington's boyhood and filled with interesting historic landmarks, draws many tourists every year. But Fredericksburg does not propose to be overrun with sight-seeing buses, leather lunged guides and the other paraphernalia of the ordinary tourists' haven.

So the city has printed little maps, with the places of interest all marked, numbered and described. And whenever a tourist comes to town he is given one of these and told to go and show himself around.

This scheme is better for the tourist—for who would not prefer to see the sights that way than to listen to the singsong speech of a bored guide? And it is better for the town, too. Would that some other of our historic towns could copy it?

Shooting at the Lee's Record

TWO FAST MOTOR YACHTS will leave New Orleans some time this month in a race to St. Louis, in which they will try to break the record set in 1870 by the famous old river steamer Robert E. Lee—90 hours and 31 minutes for the 1,250-mile course.

We wish these sporting yachtsmen all kinds of luck, of course—but somehow we can't help harboring a sneaking hope that the Lee's record stands unbroken.

A motor yacht is a thing of beauty and a joy forever, to be sure. But the Lee's record is part of the great tradition of the river. It belongs to the packet boats. It has stood for nearly 60 years; and lovers of the river would not mind if it stood for 60 years longer.

The Rope of Pearls

An hour had passed.

The two candles on the mantel were still projecting their pale sheen across the floor. Alexander Ferryman, alias Doctor Moffett, occupied a chair at the window. He was a gloomy, silent man, and his hands and feet were bound with curtain ropes. Facing him sat Axelson, equally silent and gloomy, his hands and feet similarly tied. And in a room on the upper floor Joan of Arc was a prisoner behind a locked door. The ferocious Caesar had been chained to a tree outside.

The door opened and Dale walked in. He had removed the trappings which, in the deceptive green light, had given him superficial resemblance to Mr. Castle. He dragged his feet a little, an unusual thing for him to do, and his head was a trifle bowed, as if weighted down with perplexities.

"Did you get Captain Summers?" Adele inquired.

"Summers?" Dale looked up and blinked his eyes, as if slow to understand. "Oh, yes. He growled like a bear when I got him out of bed. I had to say the same thing over six times before I could make him understand that I am ready to make good my promise to deliver the murderer of Miss Conway into his hands."

He gave a tired laugh. "Poor Summers! Even now he half suspects that the Picaroon is up to another trick. But he will come. He really ought to be here in an hour."

She scanned his face in the dim light of the candles. "What else?" she inquired shrewdly.

He gave her an uncomprehending look.

"You were gone over half an hour," she pointed out. "It didn't take you as long as that to telephone Captain Summers."

"No, it didn't," said Dale reluctantly. "I had—er—a few other things to attend to. I stationed Bilkins at the gate to see that no undesirable persons got in till Summers arrives. Oh, I forgot to tell you. I didn't bring any policemen with me, but I brought Bilkins. It was he who set the gong in motion and fired the shots. Bilkins can make as much noise as a regiment. Best of all, he does as he is told without asking questions."

She smiled a little. "Yes, you telephoned Summers and placed Bilkins at the gate. What else? I can tell from your looks that there is something more."

"Yes, there is." He seemed reluctant to proceed. "I also telephoned for a doctor."

"A doctor? Are you ill?"

"No, but—" with an anxious expression he studied her white, faintly smiling face, "Paul Ainsworth is in the house. I found him when I went to look for a telephone."

"Paul!" She sprang up from the chair she had occupied. "I just felt he was here! It must have been Paul who found me in the dark room. I thought his voice sounded familiar, but I couldn't be sure." She paused suddenly startled by his expression. "Where is he? Has anything happened to him?"

"Yes—an accident," said Dale awkwardly. "But it's nothing serious, I am sure. I think those ruffians—" with a glance at the two men at the window, "mistreated him."

She was at the door before he had finished speaking. She flung an excited question over her shoulder. "Where?"

"Second floor. First door to the left in the hall."

She was gone in an instant. Dale gave a sigh that was a little wistful. For a few moments he gazed moodily at the door and then he stepped to the table and opened the bag which Doctor Moffett had packed so hurriedly when he thought the police were at the gate. He emptied the contents on the table. Among other things there were several papers and he gave them a hurried glance before he flung them into the fireplace.

Doctor Moffett turned in the chair and gave him a baneful glance.

"What are you doing?" he demanded.

"It's a chilly morning," said Dale, feigning a shiver. "It will take a $100,000 bonfire to thaw me out."

He struck a match. Doctor Moffett strained violently against the ropes that held his hands and feet. Dale laughed quietly as he touched the match to the papers and watched them flare up and curl into a black flake.

"So much for your little game, Moffett. All that's left is ashes."

Moffett twisted his lips into an ugly sneer and looked in the other direction. Dale glanced out the window and saw a man with a small black kit crossing the lawn. He went to the door and directed the physician to the room where Paul Ainsworth was. Then he went back and resumed his search of Dr. Moffett's bag. Most of the remaining articles were of little interest, but a murmur of admiration escaped him as he drew out a rope of pearls. He held them at arm's length and inspected them in the light of the candles.

"Gorgeous!" he said softly. And then his lips twisted into a comical smile. "They are the same ones, of course. And it was very cleverly arranged, Moffett. And it was one of the finest compliments I have ever received. You wouldn't have gone to such lengths unless you had been very much afraid of me."

"I was," Moffett grumbled, and there was a glint of genuine admiration in the hateful gaze he fixed on Dale.

"I think I understand Summers was searching the house. You placed the pearls in the aperture in the wainscoting, knowing he would find them there. Then, very deftly, you worked his mind around to the point where he was ready to accept the idea that they had been left there by the murderer and that the murderer would come back for them. So you and Summers went to work and baited the trap. You were in no danger of losing your pearls, for the house was being carefully watched. But tell me this, Moffett. The trap was set for me, of course, but how did you know I was going to walk into it?"

"You did," said Moffett with a shrug.

"But how did you know?" Dale insisted.

Moffett grinned insolently. "Remember the talk we had in the library of my house? You came there to inquire for Dr. Moffett." He chuckled contemptuously. "I knew then that you were the Picaroon, but I didn't let on that I knew."

"And how did you know?"

"I had known it for a month." There was a trace of malicious glee in the doctor's voice. "You visited my house one night—in your role of the Picaroon, of course. You didn't find anything of particular value, and so you went away, thinking that your visit had passed unnoticed. It hadn't though. That night you were followed to your residence. A simple process of putting two and two together made it evident that Martin Dale was the Picaroon."

"As I said, I knew you were the Picaroon the day you came to my house inquiring for Dr. Moffett. I caught you stealing a glance now and then at the point where there appeared to be a defect in the wainscoting. Something in your eyes told me you would come back and investigate."

"Not bad," said Dale. "If the frame-up had succeeded you would not only have gotten rid of a bothersome meddler, but you would also have made doubly sure that no suspicion would attach to you in connection with Miss Conway's death. Just one more question, Moffett—or Ferryman, whichever you prefer. Did these pearls really belong to your wife?"

"They did," said Moffett shortly. "And your wife and Miss Conway were the same person?"

With a shrug the doctor evinced his determination to answer no more questions.

Dale laughed. "That's one time the Picaroon took the booby prize. He wouldn't keep the pearls because he discovered they were Ferryman's property. It never occurred to him—bless his simple soul—that Ferryman and Dr. Moffett might be one and the same." He laughed again, a little ruefully. "But it was a neat frameup, Moffett—much cleverer than the second one. The second one didn't do you justice. Joan of Arc imitated your wife's voice fairly well—"

"Who?" Dr. Moffett excalimed, turning suddenly a little paler.

"Joan of Arc. I believe you call her Annie. Great little actress! You persuaded her to imitate your wife's voice and pour those horrible cries and groans into the dictaphone. It wasn't badly done, but you forgot the thunder."

"It's a lie!" Moffett shouted, straining violently against the ropes.

"No, it's the truth. Annie told me. I had a talk with her after I telephoned Summers. What's more, she is willing to tell the police all she knows."

Moffett stared at him in a horrified way. Axelson looked badly shaken.

"It's all your fault," he bleated. "Annie and I only did what you told us."

"You rat!" Moffett remarked.

Dale fixed his longing eyes on the pearls again. One by one he let them slip gently through his fingers.

"Where did you steal them, Moffett?" he asked softly.

"Steal them? Haven't I just told you they belonged to my wife?"

"Yes, but you stole them for her, didn't you? Or, if you didn't literally steal them, you got them by extortion. You're clever at that. If they were your legitimate property, you would leave them in a safe-deposit vault instead of lugging them along wherever you go. Where did you get them, Moffett?"

The doctor merely gave him a malevolent glance.

"There's one thing you can tell me without incriminating yourself," Dale suggested. "It's worrying me a lot. Has Ainsworth ever seen you face to face?"

Moffett continued to glare and said nothing.

"I owe that chap a humble apology," Dale murmured. "Can't get the hang of it even now, but I certainly got things twisted. You can generally trust a woman's instincts, Moffett. They're more reliable than our most brilliant deductions. Ah ——"

Adele came into the room and stepped up to Dale.

"Aren't they lovely!" she exclaimed, gazing at the pearls he was fondling. Her eyes shone.

"How is the patient?" Dale asked.

"He is sleeping now. The doctor says it isn't at all serious, but that we mustn't disturb him for a while."

"Do you think he will ever forgive me?"

"But how do you mean?" Adele asked.

"Forgive you for what? For disliking him?"

"No, it wasn't dislike. I simply got the wrong slant on him at the start. I believe you were right when you said I would like him better. What I can't forgive myself for is getting the crazy notion into my head that he was Doctor Moffett."

"You actually thought that?"

"I did," was Dale's shamefaced confession. "That's what prejudiced me against him at the start. And he, seeing I was prejudiced against him, treated me as I deserved. I don't understand it all yet, but I understand just enough to realize that I've been a fool."

"You have been a wonderful friend!" she exclaimed softly. Her big, shining eyes were full upon him. Her lips quivered a little with the depth of her feelings. "How can I ever repay you?"

"I've been repaid," said Dale. "You have paid me this moment—with that look. If you wish to pay me a little extra, break Ainsworth of his unpleasant habit of shadowing people on the streets. It's embarassing sometimes."

"Did he shadow you?"

"Ask him," said Dale lightly, and in the same instant he slipped the rope of pearls around her neck. "That's where they belong."

"How exquisite!" she exclaimed. "You certainly are!"

"Oh, but I meant the pearls."

"The pearls," said Dale, looking at her with soft, wistful eyes, "are not half so exquisite off you as on you."

Her warm, smiling eyes went from the pearls to his face. With a little sigh of ecstasy she removed the ornament from her throat. "Where did you find them?"

"In Moffett's bag. He says they belonged to his wife. He will never have any use for them. They are not in fashion where he is going." He looked at the pearls out of eyes full of admiration and a trace of desire.

"Mr. Picaroon," she whispered, searching his face, "you are not tempted?"

"No." he dropped the pearls with a sigh. "This is one of the nights when the Picaroon is immune against temptation." He glanced out of the window. "Ah, here comes Summers!"

A stocky figure was coming across the lawn toward the house. Dale went to the door and held it open. Summers bustled in with a sour and determined air.

What's this? A joke?" he grumbled. He bowed stiffly before Adele and gazed suspiciously at Dale.

"No Summers, this is the fulfillment of a promise."

"Is it?" asked Summers doubtfully. "That was a neat get-away you made tonight, Dale—one of the neatest I ever saw. But I'm not through with you yet. You have a lot to explain. If you've called me out here on a wild-goose chase—"

"Calm yourself, Summers." Dale waved his hand airly toward the window. "I think you have met Mr. Ferryman, alias Dr. Moffett, the perpetrator of the Bank street murder."

"What?" asked Summers in a dull, hollow voice. He stared at Ferryman, noticed his bound hands and feet, fixed Axelson with a passing glance, and then he stared at Dale. "Say that again."

The Day Book of a New Yorker

Broadway Chatter by Grant Dixon

NEW YORK, July 18.—I have a friend from Texas who has lived in New York several years. He keeps his western "scenery" on a rack beside his desk in his office—a four-gallon hat and a loud vest. In his desk he keeps a pair of cowboy boots which set him back $40. They are nicely inlaid and stitched—regular Tom Mix affairs.

I asked why all this was done.

"You'd be surprised what these western togs will get you in New York," he said, as he began to climb into his boots. "I don't have to patronize the ticket scalpers to get into a show that's running at a premium. I go right up to the box office and ask for a pair of good seats—and I get them. It's the same at restaurants, night clubs, or anywhere. I get the best there is going, and the big hat and the boots do it. I guess New Yorkers have a streak of affection in their hearts for westerners. Anyway, I wouldn't be without these little western touches to my make-up for anything."

Then we walked out in the street and he demonstrated the truth of his words at the very first crossing. For didn't a New York taxi driver actually slow down to avoid hitting us?

Survival of the Pitchmen

New York regulations are getting more and more strict against street-corner salesmen, or "pitchmen," as they are professionally known. The Broadway association recently proposed more limitations to the hours and activities of these vendors of medicines, health books, fountain pens and what-not.

Yet the pitchmen keep right on pitching. The sidewalk pitchmen or "grinders," use "tripes and keister" (tripod and case) which they will put up under the very nose of a policeman. The "high pitchmen" talk from automobiles or rent vacant store buildings.

There are some gifted fellows among the "high pitchmen" who drift in and out of New York according to the state of business outside. County fair time is their harvest in the outlying districts but New York is always "steady money." The reason is, so one of the pitchmen confided to me, that New York sophistication is largely a myth and the percentage of gullibility runs as high in the big city as in the small town.

One More 'Racket'

Selling "stolen" goods is a game that goes on regularly in New York's streets. With a companion, I was hailed by a young fellow on a light truck in Forty-second street. He wanted to sell us two $60 suits for $6 apiece. When we asked his name and address, he pretended to be alarmed, and drove off. The intimation was that the suits had been stolen. The same "racket" is worked regularly with fur pieces. But the buyer generally finds that he has paid plenty for his purchase. The people who get something for nothing are just as few in numbers as ever.

A New York Puzzle

A friend of mine from Utah has been in town several days, on his first trip to New York. Just before he went home he said:

"Say, there's something on my mind that I've hesitated to ask about, for fear of being laughed at. The things in New York that have puzzled me most are those queer little boxes on wheels that are pushed around the streets. They have clothes draped around them and they look darn mysterious."

What he meant was the four-wheeled pushcarts used for transporting dresses and sometimes furs in the clothing and fur manufacturing districts along Seventh and Eighth avenues in the Thirties. The materials are suspended from an iron bar overhanging the pushcart, which is merely a box on four wheels. The whole consignment is then wrapped with a light tarpaulin, to keep out the dirt. Scores of office boys can be seen pushing these contraptions in and out of the manufacturing district mentioned. A crude means of transportation but apparently something that can't be bettered. The noisy devices are familiar enough to New Yorkers, but it is no wonder that they puzzle the occasional visitor. They look mysterious enough, in their swathing, to contain anything from wax figures to the latest Rothstein suspect making his getaway from the police.

Summer Sidelights

The woman, alone in a parked car in Greenwich village, very carefully combing the whiskers of a wire-haired terrier. . . . The girl on the public library steps, smoking a cigaret. . . . The girl on the rear seat, top floor, in a Fifth avenue bus, smoking a cigaret. . . . The girls and their escorts, walking around Washington square in the evening, all smoking cigarets. . . . Gay, striped awnings on the "low necked" taxicabs. . . . The couple disputing, at the "Little show," whether the girl in evening dress, several rows in front of them, had a case of sun-made tan, or whether she had it painted on. . . . The sign, "Canaries boarded," in a pet shop. . . . Wonder just how much a canary's bird seed would amount to during a yacation season.

The Once Over

By H. I. PHILLIPS

The Professional Indorser Has a Casual Conversation

Friend: Nice day, isn't it?

Indorser: I can state without fear of contradiction that after trying more than 1,000 types of days this one is without a peer in its field. You can't go wrong with a day like this. I give it my unqualified approval.

PHILLIPS

Friend: How're you feeling?

Indorser: Over a period of some 35 years I have made a special study of how I am feeling. I have taken nothing on hearsay, nor have I made any snap judgments. My conclusion is based on sound research and I am very happy to assure you that I never felt better in my life. I offer a reward of $5,000 to anybody who can prove this statement untrue.

Friend: How's the wife?

Indorser: You may quote me as giving her my 100 per cent approval. I know of no wife who in any way compares with her. She has beauty, personality, charm—everything that goes to make the perfect wife and mother. She is in a class by herself and outdistances all competitors.

Friend: And the children, how are they all?

Indorser: I cannot say too much for them. Every day I give them personal study and they are absolutely grade A kiddies who would be a credit to any home and any circle. There are no better children to be had in this land today. They are delicious and refreshing.

Friend: Still got that dog?

Indorser: I would allow no other type of dog in my home. Five years ago I bought this Doberman-Pincher on the advice of a friend and I am indeed happy to say that I know of no dog that is a better companion, friend and protector. Reach for a Doberman-Pincher. Accept no substitute.

Friend: I met your Aunt Minnie on the street the other day. She is still living with you, is she not?

Indorser: Aunt Minnie has been in my home six years next June and she has proved the best aunt we ever had. We would not think of changing. I want the whole world to know how much I think of Aunt Minnie. Have you an Aunt Minnie?

Friend: No.

Indorser: Get one by all means. Don't run the risk of an aunt-minnieless home.

Friend: Well, I've got to be running along. Glad to have seen you again.

Indorser: And I'm glad to have seen you. I have met dozens of persons during the past 24 hours and I know of no person I would be gladder to meet. You have stood the test of time. You are the genuine article. Why take foolish chances meeting other people when I can walk right out and meet you? I am a better man through having met you. I want people everywhere to know about you. Goodbye!

PARIS, July 18. (INS)—Roger Q. Williams and Lewis A. Yancey, American aviators who flew from Old Orchard, Maine, to Rome in the monoplane Pathfinder with a forced landing near Santander, Spain, were received today by French Air Minister Laurent-Eynac, who congratulated them upon their achievement.

The fliers visited the United States embassy and placed a wreath on the tomb of France's unknown soldier.

The airmen plan to fly to Cherbourg tomorrow embarking upon the liner Republic for New York with their plane.

Health and Diet Advice

By DR. FRANK McCOY
Author of "The Fast Way to Health"

Questions in regard to health and diet will be answered by Dr. McCoy who can be addressed in care of this paper

(Copyright, 1929, by The Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

Doctor McCoy's menus suggested for the week beginning Sunday, July 21:

Sunday

Breakfast—French omelet, toasted triscuit, ripe figs.

Lunch—Ice cream, fresh peaches.

Monday

Breakfast—Cottage cheese, Melba toast, applesauce.

Lunch—Corn, string beans, lettuce.

Dinner—Roast mutton, zucchini (Italian suash), McCoy salad (lettuce, tomatoes and cucumbers), apricot whip.

Tuesday

Breakfast—Baked eggs, retoasted shredded wheat biscuit, stewed prunes.

Lunch—Watermelon as desired.

Dinner—Steak with mushrooms, cooked small carrots and peas, head lettuce, pineapple gelatin.

Wednesday

Breakfast—Retoasted breakfast food with milk or cream, stewed figs.

Lunch—Melon as desired.

Dinner—Roast pork, cooked spinach, salad of tomatoes, cabbage and endive, baked apple.

Thursday

Breakfast—Eggs poached in milk, Melba toast, dish of fresh or canned berries (no sugar).

Lunch—Ice cream with one kind of fresh fruit.

Dinner—Salisbury steak, baked grated carrots, cucumbers cooked, salad of shredded lettuce, prune whip.

Friday

Breakfast—Coddled eggs, crisp bacon, Melba toast, stewed raisins.

Lunch—Avocado salad.

Dinner—Baked white fish, cooked egg plant, cooked celery, salad of sliced tomatoes, no dessert.

Saturday

Breakfast—Crisp waffles, butter, with a small amount of maple syrup, stewed apricots.

Lunch—Berries with milk or cream (no sugar).

Dinner—Roast veal, summer squash, cooked greens, salad of asparagus tips, prune whip.

"Cooked Cucumbers—Peel the desired number of medium sized cucumbers and cut into strips lengthwise or in cubes. Cook in a small amount of boiling water for 20 minutes. If all the water has not been absorbed, drain, and season with butter while hot. Serve as a border for the Salisbury steak. Cucumbers prepared in this way may be appetizingly served in the center of a platter of lamb or mutton chops. For variety, sprinkle with minced ripe olives.

Botanists tell us that there is a little gall pocket at the stem end of cucumbers. If this is punctured the bitter liquid is spread by the blade of the knife. Always peel cucumbers from the blossom end.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Improper Coordination of Muscles

Question—J. O. S. writes: "There frequently comes a tense condition so that I cannot relax while reading, lying down or sitting, and this also prevents my going to sleep. What is the cause and remedy? What do you think of orange peel? I eat the peeling of one daily with another food. My age is 71."

Answer—Something is preventing the proper coordination of your muscles. Try taking calisthenic exercises twice daily. If you will do this I am sure you will be able to relax when you wish to do so. I would not advocate your using orange peel with a meal, but orange juice, including some of the peel if you wish it, may be taken by you to advantage early in the morning or just before retiring.

Pain Over Body After Eating

Question—Mrs. N. J. D. writes: "I have terrible pains all over me about 20 minutes after eating even the smallest meal, such as one slice of wholewheat bread, cooked or raw fruit, and perhaps one cup of postum or milk. Pains are from lower abdomen right up under the arms, especially around left breast. Puts me in a fever while they last, sometimes for half an hour."

Answer—The combination of food you mention is not a good one and produces excessive stomach gas which is probably the principal cause of the pains you feel after meals. Try using the wholewheat bread with one or two of the non-starchy vegetables, such as spinach, celery, string beans, etc. If this agrees with you, you can be sure that your trouble is nothing worse than that caused by poor food combinations.

CHAPTER I

The most dangerous people in this world of ours are the gossips.

Not the wicked, back-biting kind of gossips who deliberately try to harm other people, but the ordinary busybodies who go around telling things they never should tell—simply because their tongues are hung in the middle and wag at both ends.

This world is full of them, too!

We all know people who take us aside and whisper: "Now, promise me you won't repeat a word of what I'm going to tell you—"

Or: "I know I shouldn't tell this to a living soul, but I'm going to, anyway—"

All of us have been talked about behind our backs by just such people, too, at some time or another—by the human newspads who "don't mean to stir up trouble"—by the common garden variety gossips whose chatter often does stir up trouble of the very worst kind.

Behind a good many quarrels and divorces and lawsuits—yes, and behind some of the murders and suicides, too—is some careless talker who dropped the wrong word to the wrong person at the wrong time.

And that is the kind of gossip that Charlotte Corday Chatterton was. One of those people who talk from the teeth out, who poke their noses into everybody's business—and then tell everything they know about it and a lot that they don't know.

This is her story, and the story of the people upon whom she brought disgrace and disaster—the helpless victims of her sharp, busy little tongue.

It is the story of a born gossip and mischief maker!

It was the Saturday before Easter Sunday—the one day in all the year when women's hats should certainly have been selling like hot cakes.

But the weather was wet and wild. The wind shrieked like a lost soul as it ran up and down the streets. The rain came hammering down on the pavements. The gutters ran water. In short, it was anything but Easter hat weather.

And there was not a single customer in Mrs. Mayberry's little Mode Millinery shop on West River street.

Moreover, there had not been a single soul in it all day long but Mrs. Mayberry, herself, and Charlotte Chatterton, who worked for her.

It was almost noon now, and the two of them stood at the wide rain-splashed show window, watching the passers-by who went hurrying along with their heads down against the high wind.

"We surely are out of luck today, aren't we, Mrs. Mayberry?" Charlotte Chatterton asked, turning her eyes away from the street for a moment to look gloomily at the dozens and dozens of gay new Easter hats that were perched everywhere into the brightly lighted, mirror lined showroom behind her. "You just can't imagine any woman being silly enough to want to buy a spring hat in weather like this, can you? It makes me just sick to think how we've slaved for weeks to get all these hats ready for today, and then to have it pour down like this! It's cold as Greenland outside, too, isn't it?"

Mrs. Mayberry did not answer.

"I wonder why Easter Sunday has always been the day for women to wear their new summer hats," the girl went on, in her sweet, high-pitched voice. "And isn't it funny the way men always start wearing their new straw hats on Decoration day and stop wearing them on Labor day?"

Mrs. Mayberry said nothing. Nothing at all.

But that did not seem to worry Charlotte Chatterton. She turned around to the window once more and went on talking just as if she had been answered.

"The flower shop seems to be doing a lot of business today," she said. "Just look, Mrs. Mayberry, there goes their wagon again. That's the third trip they've made this morning!"

On the other side of the street a smart little delivery automobile, with the words "Tallman, the Florist" painted upon it in gold letters, was starting away from the curb. Lights twinkled in the shop beyond it, and tall white Easter lilies and potted rose bushes filled the windows.

"It's too bad people can't order their Easter hats from us by telephone, the way they can phone for their Easter flowers," the girl went on, her eyebrows drawn together in a little frown. "Isn't it a shame that they can't, Mrs. Mayberry?"

There was not a sound from Mrs. Mayberry, whose eyes were dreamily following the florist's little automobile down the street.

"It's a shame, isn't it, Mrs. Mayberry?"

Still there was no answer.

"Mrs. Mayberry, you're not listening to me!"

Mrs. Mayberry came out of her dreary day dream then. She laughed.

"Good heavens, Chatty, if I listened to you every time you opened your mouth," she said, "my ear drums would have been worn out ages ago!"

"Chatty" was Charlotte Chatterson's nickname, and no word in the English language could have described her half so well as that little nickname did.

For Chatty was a born talker.

She chattered like a babbling brook from the time she got out of bed in the morning until she got back into it at night. It was as natural for her to be talking most of the time as it was for Mrs. Mayberry to be still.

That was probably the reason they got along so well together . . . Chatty talked and talked and talked, and sometimes Mrs. Mayberry listened to her.

Day in and day out, for nearly three years, they had worked side by side without a single quarrel of any kind.

For 10 hours daily they trimmed hats and waited on the people who came to buy them. They swept and dusted the little shop, with its pretty gray furniture, its moss-green carpet and its flattering rose-shaded lights. Every day at noon they sat down together for lunch at one end of the long work table at the back of the shop.

Here Chatty had come at 17, a week after she was graduated from Central high school, in answer to the "Girl Wanted" sign in Mrs. Mayberry's front show window. And here she had been ever since, learning to steam hats and shape them, to stretch and trim and sell them.

She felt as if she were Mrs. Mayberry's partner now, instead of her $18 a week assistant. She worried when the hats did not sell, and she crossed her fingers when they did sell. She unlocked the shop every morning, and locked it up at night after Mrs. Mayberry had gone home . . . . And the shop was the most exciting thing in her life.

As a matter of fact, there was nothing else in life for Chatty but home and her family.

Home was a four-room flat on the second floor of a shabby red brick apartment building, far out on Lipton avenue. And Chatty's family was her hard working mother and 14-year-old brother, Putnam, who never had been called anything but "Pud."

Between the four-room flat and Mrs. Mayberry's hat store ran the quiet stream of Chatty's life at this time. There was nothing else for her. Nothing.

It was a very dull existence for a girl of 20. A girl whose smooth bands of honey colored hair and big gray-green eyes and white skin made her a pretty girl.

"You ought to have a sweetheart, Chatty," Mrs. Mayberry, who never spoke unless she meant what she said, would tell her sometimes. "Every girl your age should be meeting young men and going around with them. That's only natural. I was married when I was 20—and it's a crying shame for you to be shut up here, where you never see anyone but a lot of women who want to try on hats!"

But Chatty would shake her head firmly.

"I'm not thinking of men, Mrs. Mayberry," she would say sharply. "Not me! And I'm not thinking of marriage, either, if it's all the same to you. I'm perfectly happy just as I am."

That was miles from the truth, of course.

For like every other normal young woman under the sun, Chatty had begun to think a great deal about young men and about meeting some of them. She had begun to long for the things that every girl longs for, sooner or later.

She found herself wishing lately that there was someone who would be waiting outside the shop for her at the end of the long busy day . . . someone who would tuck his hand under her arm and pull her close to him as they walked home through the spring twilight . . . someone who would call her up and makes "dates" with her to take her driving or dancing, and who would hold her hand as they sat watching some picture-story unfold on the silver screen of a "movie" theater.

No matter how much she might rattle on about everything else that came into her head, Chatty never spoke to anyone about these thoughts of hers. But here they were, far back in her brain, just the same . . . The time had come for Chatty to fall in love, and she knew it.

"But where will I ever meet anybody?" she often asked herself with despair in her heart. "Stuck in this store! . . . I might just as well be buried alive as hidden away here in this place!"

She turned away from the streaming windows now, and looked around the shop as if it were a prison . . . If only it were a downtown office or a bank or any other place where men worked. Young single men. Good looking, broad shouldered young men, who might ask her to have lunch sometimes or—

"Look at those two crazy youngsters!" Mrs. Mayberry's slow voice broke in upon her thoughts. "Out in all this downpour—"

Across the street an automobile was stopping—a gray, snub-nosed roadster that looked as if it went out in all kinds of weather and enjoyed it. Its top was down, and so was its windshield. It was splashed with yellow mud. A great deal of its gray paint was gone.

And the pair of people who jumped out of it looked as if they did not mind the wind and the weather, either. They were a man and a girl, both of them in shiny black "slicker" coats. The girl had a black tam pulled down over her head, but the man was hatless, and his read hair was plastered flat against his head by the rain. He was just as good looking as he could be, nevertheless.

"Young idiot—trying to catch his death of cold!" Mrs. Mayberry, that woman of few words, cried, as the careless pair vanished into Tallman's shop. "He'd better be buying himself a hat instead of getting flowers for that girl!"

"Oh, do you think he's buying flowers for her?" Chatty asked, trying to see beyond the roses and lilies banked in Tallman's front window.

Mrs. Mayberry's lips twisted in a sarcastic smile.

"Well, what else do you suppose he's going to buy in a flower store?" she wanted to know, and her tone was not so pleasant as usual.

She was not in a very happy frame of mind, poor woman! For weeks and weeks she had been counting upon doing a lot of business for Easter—and here she was, doing none at all!

"Of course, he's gone in to buy flowers—but he might be buying them for his mother, or someone like that," Chatty answered after a moment. "He doesn't have to be getting them for that girl, just because she happens to be with him, you know." And her tone was snappy, too.

For no reason that was clear to herself, she found herself wishing suddenly that he was not buying them for the girl in the black tam and slicker.

"What difference can it make to you whether he's buying them for that girl or not? You talk as if you were jealous of her, Chatty. You don't know those people, do you?" Mrs. Mayberry turned to give the girl a quick, questioning look.

Chatty shook her head.

"Of course not! I don't know anybody—or anything, but a lot of hats," she said, bitterly. "And how could I be jealous of that girl when I've never seen her before? It's nothing to me if her man buys every flower in Tallman's shop for her!"

But she was jealous of the girl, nevertheless. At that moment she was jealous of her and of all girls like her — pretty, gay, laughing girls, whose sweethearts would give them violets or orchids or rosebuds to wear on Easter Sunday. Girls who were part of a "crowd" of happy young people. Girls who went riding around with young men in gray roadsters while she, herself, worked all day long in Mrs. Mayberry's hat shop and never had a bit of fun from one year's end to the other.

"I'll put the kettle on for our tea. It's lunch time," she said, as the noonday chimes of Saint Martin's church in the next street came to her, muffled by the sound of the storm outside.

She turned away from the window . . . She didn't want to see the good looking red-headed man and his girl come out of Tallman's shop, laden with flowers, as they probably would be.

She wanted to get away by herself and cry because all at once she had seen that her life was just as dreary and gray as the dull, sad-looking sky above the store fronts across the street.

For once she had nothing to say. There was a lump in her throat and a lead weight in her heart, as she filled the little tea kettle in the room at the back of the shop, and set it on the tiny electric stove to boil.

And afterward — long afterward, when she had a chance to look back at a good many things—Chatty knew that that Easter Saturday morning marked the beginning of the bitterness and jealousy that poisoned her life for a long time—and the lives of a good many people who came in touch with her.

It was the end of whatever peace and mild happiness that she had found in the little hat shop on West River street for three years . . . A milestone along her way.

But she did not know it then.

Things seemed just as usual as she set two cups and plates at one end of the long work table in the middle of the room. As she cut and buttered the bread, and opened the glass of crab apple jelly, She and Mrs. Mayberry never had more than what they called a "snack" at noon.

Usually Chatty rattled on cheerfully all through the meal. But today both women were depressed and silent as they buttered their bread and drank their cups of weak, hot tea.

"Chatty," Mrs. Mayberry said finally, "up on the top shelf of that cupboard in the corner is a card that I bought down town a year or so ago when business was poor. I never used it because things seemed to brighten up a little right after I bought it. But I'm going to put it in the window today, if you'll get it down for me."

Chatty stared at her.

"You don't mean that 'For Sale' sign, do you?" she asked, quickly. "You don't mean you're going to get rid of the store?"

Mrs. Mayberry nodded. "That's just what I do mean," she said. "I'm going to sell out if I can. Today's just finished me. For months I've been running behind, and I've just given up trying to make this store pay. Get the card, Chatty!"

Stunned, Chatty climbed up on a chair and got it for her.

"Stand it up in the front window," Mrs. Mayberry ordered, briskly.

Obediently, Chatty dusted it off and set it in the show window that looked out upon West River street, among Mrs. Mayberry's bright colored spring hats that made her think of so many bright colored spring flowers that had come up too soon.

She stood there a moment, looking at it, dazed and shaken and frightened.

For even if the shop was a sort of prison, it was safe harbor for her, too, in a way. And while she worked in it, Chatty was sure of the $18 a week that meant so much to her and her family.

"And where on earth will I find another job that pays that much?" she asked herself, feeling as if the bottom had fallen out of her little world. There's not a thing that I know how to do except hat trimming. Not a thing!"

Out in the back room Mrs. Mayberry had tied a rubber apron around her waist, and was stacking the soiled dishes in a tin dishpan.

"I'll wash and you wipe 'em, Chatty," she said, and tossed the girl a tea towel. "Maybe we'll feel more cheerful if we keep busy. Listen!"

There came the tinkle of the bell

"It's a habit that'll grow on you, Chatty—the talking habit," she warned her.

in the front of the shop, and then the sound of the door slamming.

"Customer!" whispered Mrs. Mayberry. "You go, Chatty . . . I'm all soap suds and rubber apron. Sell her two hats, if you can!"

The customer was standing in the middle of the shop, looking around the pretty gray and rose room from behind a pair of nose glasses. She was tall and thin and middle aged, and she wore a rain-soaked brown hat that looked like a burned pancake soaked in syrup.

Chatty walked up to her, smiling pleasantly.

"Something in a spring hat?" she asked, in her very best saleswoman voice.

Before the woman had time to say "Yes" or "No," she went on:

"Your hair isn't bobbed, is it? So you'll need a fairly big head size, won't you?" And she began to open and shut drawers and cupboards, looking for a hat large enough to take the place of the pancake.

"This is a nice place you have here," said the customer. "I imagine you do quite a lot of business, don't you?"

In the back room Mrs. Mayberry gave a warning cough. But Chatty did not hear it.

"Well, no, we don't, to tell the truth," she answered. "I don't know why we don't, for we have good hats and we don't overcharge . . . But somehow we just don't seem to make expenses . . . We're selling out. You probably saw the sign in the window."

"Yes, I did. And that's why—" began the woman.

But Chatty drowned her out. "I tell Mrs. Mayberry that we're too near the big fashionable shops downtown," she went on, rummaging in the bottom of a drawer. "Most all the women in this neighborhood go downtown to shop . . . Why, you're the very first person who's come in for a hat today!"

As usual, Chatty was letting her tongue run away with her—telling all of her own business, and all of poor Mrs. Mayberry's, too.

She turned around from the chest of drawers to find that the customer was backing away towards the street door. She had not even taken off her hat.

"Why—what's wrong? Don't you want a hat?" Chatty stared at her in amazement.

The woman shook her head, and pushed the door open.

"No . . . I tried to tell you I came in because of the sign in the window," she explained. "I—I've been looking around for a little hat shop I could afford to buy. I used to have one—I just happened to be passing, and saw that this one was for sale. But if you haven't any business — why, naturally — I wouldn't want it—would I?"

Jerkily, she finished what she had to say. She street door closed after her. She was gone.

"Well!" Chatty said aloud. "Well, of all things—"

"I should say so—" The sound of Mrs. Mayberry's voice close behind her made her jump. She swung around.

Mrs. Mayberry's eyes seemed to shoot sparks, and her soapy hands were on her hips. "Well, you're a fine kind of a girl!" she cried, and her fury was in her voice. "That woman probably would have bought me out if it hadn't been for you! Here she walks in two minutes after we put that card in the window, all pepped up to buy the store! Thinks it's the very thing she wants—and then you tell her that we aren't making any money—O-oh, I could shake you till your teeth rattled!"

Chatty opened her lips, but said nothing.

"Yes sir-ee! I could have sold her this store if it hadn't been for you, and that yard-long tongue of yours!" Mrs. Mayberry was all but crying now.

Suddenly she wheeled and dashed back into the workroom behind the shop. When she came flying out again she had Chatty's hat and her shabby little winter coat in her wet hands.

She threw them down upon the floor.

"Put 'em on, and get out!" she stormed. "Get out of my sight. Go on! Get out!"

Too surprised to speak, or even think clearly, Chatty picked them up without a word, and did as she was told.

It was not until she was almost home that she realized that she had left her handbag behind her in the shop, and that Mrs. Mayberry had not paid her for her week's work. . . . And how noisy and hysterical Mrs. Mayberry had been! Not like her quiet self at all.

"And what did I do to make her so wild?" Chatty asked herself, going up the stairs of the apartment where the Chatterions lived. "All I did was to tell that woman the simple truth about the store—and why should I keep the truth bottled up inside of me?"

She felt as though Mrs. Mayberry had done her a great wrong.

Mrs. Chatterton was sewing in the room that the family called the front room.

The front room was used for many things. It was a sitting room, and sometimes a dining room. In it Mrs. Chatterton, who sewed for a living, greeted her customers, cut out and stitched their dresses together, and tried them on.

"Well, what's happened to my girl?" she asked, looking up in a startled way when Chatty came walking into the flat that wet Saturday noon.

Without stopping to take off her sodden clothes, Chatty dropped down on a chair beside her and told her the whole story.

"She said I talk too much all the time—she said my tongue was a yard long," she wound up her tale of woe. "And then she pushed me out into the rain—and never paid me a penny of my salary for this week!"

Mrs. Chatterton frowned. "Hmm," she said quietly. "She'll have to pay you, of course. And she needn't have been so rough with you. But I suppose she was upset and didn't know just what she was doing. And then, you do talk too much, Chatty. You always have—all your life."

Chatty's chin went up, and her jaw set in a hard little line.

"Yes, you have!" her mother repeated, looking at her solemnly. "A year ago the people in the flat on the first floor moved out because you let them know that they paid $10 a month more rent than we do—and you knew you shouldn't have told it. It's a bad habit—and it's a habit that will grow on you unless you watch it, Chatty. The talking habit."

Chatty glared at her. "That's not true!" she declared hotly. "No one can tell me I talk too much! I don't! I'm not deaf and dumb, I admit—"

"There's the door bell," her mother broke in quietly. "Do hush up and go and see who it is."

CHAPTER II

Still in her dripping clothes, Chatty flew to open the door of the little flat.

Her mother's one and only fashionable customer stood just outside, filling the tiny hallway with the fresh, sweet, woodsey smell of the violets she wore pinned on her coat.

"It's Mrs. Van Nuys, mother!" Chatty called over her shoulder as she swung the door wide open for the visitor.

"Come right in, Mrs. Van Nuys!" she went on in her quick, bright way. Chatty always talked as if she were short of breath and full of excitement.

"Weren't you the brave lady to come out on a dreadful day like this!" she ran on. "Isn't it the worst weather you ever saw in all your life? But you're not very wet, are you? You came over in your car, of course—but take a look at poor me! I had to walk home all the way from West River street! and there isn't a dry thread on me! I'm a walking fountain, no less."

Chattering like a squirrel, she led the way down the short, narrow hall to the "front room."

Mrs. Chatterton had left her sewing machine and was standing in the middle of the room with a blue taffeta silk dress across her arms.

"It's all ready for you to try on, Kate," she said to Mrs. Van Nuys. "I think it's prettier now than when it was new."

They had been friends, these two women, for 20 years. Long before Chatty's father had died, and long before Mrs. Van Nuys' husband had made his money, they had been neighbors. And they never had lost track of each other, somehow, and were still "Kate" and "Harriet" to each other.

Sometimes now Mrs. Chatterton made over or mended Mrs. Van Nuys' beautiful and expensive dresses. But most of the work she did was plain sewing for the people in the neighborhood of the Lipton street flat, and it brought her in very little money.

"You'd better peel off those wet clothes and hop into a hot bath before you catch your death of cold," she said anxiously to her daughter, while she waited for Mrs. Van Nuys to take off her violets and her coat and the French hand-made dress she wore under her coat.

As Chatty went out of the room she heard her telling her friend about the quarrel in Mrs. Mayberry's shop that morning.

"And would you believe it, Kate, that Mrs. Mayberry just pushed Chatty out of the store!" she heard her say, indignantly. "And the poor child walked all the way home in the rain—and that woman didn't even give her her salary for the week—"

"But I'll get it, never worry!" said Chatty, silently, shutting herself into the bed room that she shared with her mother, and began to take off her wet, uncomfortable clothes.

She was sorry now that she had not given Mrs. Mayberry a good piece of her mind before she left. She was just as sorry as she could be that she had not given her the "bawling out" of her life . . . Above all, she was sorry that she had left without her $18.

"But I'll go back and get it just as soon as I can get into some dry clothes," she promised herself, running steaming water into the bathtub and unwrapping a large new cake of soap from the shelf above it.

For, while $18 is no more than the price of a new hat or an enchancing pair of high-heeled slippers to some girls, it was the very staff of life to Chatty—and to her family.

They never could have kept going without it.

It paid the rent for the little flat. It paid the heating bills and the electric light. It paid for the telephone.

And it was the only sum of money that the Chattertons could always bank on. Sometimes Mrs. Chatterton made almost that much in a week, but there were other weeks when people did not pay their bills, and so she did not make so much.

Young Pud, who was 15, went to high school and worked afternoons in the West River Drug store, where he was a "soda shooter." The six dollars a week that Ben Tomlinson, the owner, paid him for this work was just enough to buy young Pud the loud "collegiate" clothes that he loved to wear, and the cigarets that his mother did not know he smoked. Young Pud was quite the sheik!

But Chatty knew nothing about clothes.

Besides that, she knew none of the cunning little tricks that can turn a simply pretty girl into a real beauty. . . . She was as golden blond as a buttercup, but she wore her shining hair long, and twisted it into a hard knot at the back of her little head.

She never had used face cream or face powder. Sometimes if her straight, sudden little nose was shiny, she would rub it with a tiny bit of talcum powder—but that was all. She never had polished her nails or tinted them a coral pink to make them look like little jewels. She had one pair of silk stockings at a time, wore them only to church on Sunday mornings. All the rest of the week she was perfectly contended with cotton ones.

No man ever yet had turned his head to take a second look at Chatty as she passed him by. For she was as small and demure-looking as a little Jenny Wren among all the silk stockinged, short skirted, painted beauties that fill the streets . . . . she did not hit the eye.

But she had a dainty beauty that was all her own. Her long, straight hair was always soft and shining with sheer cleanliness. And many a girl would have given up all her next year's lipstick and face powder for Chatty's smooth, coral colored lips and the faint pink in her satiny cheeks.

Her great beauty was her eyes. They were brilliant, gray-green ones, and the lashes that fringed them were thick and jet black. They were always wide open, except when Chatty was asleep at night, and they saw everything. Everything. . . . They never missed a thing that happened anywhere near Chatty.

"I'm not so bad," she said to herself, when she had bathed and was slowly dressing before the old-fashioned bureau in the bedroom. "I'm just as good looking as lots of girls who have plenty of men running after them. The only trouble with me is that I never have a chance to meet any men, myself."

And then and there, standing in front of the long mirror in the old dresser, the Big Idea came to her . . . . She would go out into the front room and ask Mrs. Van Nuys if Mr. Van Nuys could give her any kind of a job in his big offices down town! Mrs. Van Nuys would surely help her if she could. She was such afriend of Chatty's mother—and to help Chatty to get a job would be helping Mrs. Chatterton too.

But when Chatty came out into the front of the flat once more Mrs. Van Nuys had gone, and her mother was ripping the hem out of the blue taffeta dress.

"She says this skirt is too long," Mrs. Chatterton explained. "I'll have to shorten it, and then perhaps you'll take it over to her, Chatty. She wants it for early church tomorrow."

"Tickled to death to do it," answered Chatty. "My coat will be dry by the time you've put that hem in—and I'll stop in at Mrs. Mayberry's on my way home and collect those 18 simoleons she owes me."

"I won't say a word to mother about asking her to get me a position until after I've done it," she decided. "I'll surprise her with the good news when I get back."

Surely there would be some kind of odd job that Mr. Van Nuys could give her in the offices of his bond house down on Kinney street—in those offices where fully a dozen young men worked. Single men . . . Good looking young men who were neither married nor engaged, and who might possibly ask a girl to have lunch with them, sometimes, or date her up for the movies or for dancing.

"Funny, I never thought about Mr. Van Nuys' office before," thought Chatty, drying her coat before the kitchen stove. She smiled to herself, and her heart was suddenly light.

It was after six when Chatty reached the Van Nuys' big lemon-yellow colonial house on Wuthering hill.

A neat white-aproned maid sent her upstairs, where Mrs. Van Nuys was having a cup of hot tea before the fire in her bedroom.

"I got my feet wet, running around from store to store this afternoon," she said. "And I'm not young like you. I have rheumatic pains if I get cold or wet."

But she did not look old. She looked 15 years younger than Chatty's mother, who was just her age. Her plump face was pink from a beauty "treatment," and her light hair had been "touched up" until it was as bright and smooth as beaten gold.

"If you'll give me my purse from the desk I'll send your mother the money I owe her. I imagine she'll be glad to get it," she went on, pouring herself another cup of tea from the silver pot on the table beside her.

"I didn't come for the money, though," the girl answered. "I came to ask you to do me the biggest kind of a favor. I've lost my job, and I wonder if you'll ask Mr. Van Nuys to give me some kind of work in his office."

"What kind of work do you want to do, Catherine?" Mrs. Van Nuys asked. Her own name was Catherine, although she was called "Kate," and there had been some talk of naming Chatty after her when she was a baby. So Mrs. Van Nuys had always called her "Catherine."

"Any kind of work," said Chatty, her eyes shining with eagerness in the firelight. "I'm not trained to take dictation or do typewriting or anything like that. But I know I could answer telephones—or make myself generally useful. I'll do anything—anything!"

"Well—I don't know whether he can hire you if you aren't trained along some line or other," Mrs. Van Nuys replied, "but—I'll ask him. "I think I'll be able to see that you get a place there, Catherine."

She looked up at the little gilt clock on the mantel piece. "Mr. Van is having some people in for dinner—some of the men at the office," she added, getting up from her sleepy hollow chair. "I think I'll have to get dressed now if you'll excuse me—Mr. Van has the men in for dinner and a smoke two or three times a year, and I always say 'hello' to them when they come."

Outside it was still raining—a steady drumming rain that sounded as if it was going to keep on all through the night.

It was almost dark, too, and the lights were turned on in the three automobiles that were parked in the driveway of the Van Nuys house.

As Chatty came down the steps, a fourth car turned in and stopped with a great shrieking of brakes behind the other three . . . It was a snub-nosed roadster, splashed with mud. Its top was down, and so was its windshield. And in it sat a young man whose hair was unmistakably red, even in the deep twilight.

CHAPTER III

There was no doubt about it. The red-headed man who was getting out of his roadster was the same red-headed man who had brought flowers for his girl in Tallman's shop that very morning.

He was wearing the same black oilskin "slicker" that he had worn that morning. And as he went across the wet lawn towards the Van Nuys' house, the wind blew it back from his tall, broad, young figure, and Chatty saw the gleam of a white evening shirt under it.

"He must be one of the men Mr. Van is having in for dinner!" Chatty said to herself. "He must be one of the bond salesmen who work for him downtown—where I'm going to work, too! And I'll meet him!" Her spirits went sailing up like a kite.

She stood, smiling to herself in the dusk near the tall evergreen hedge that ran along the driveway, and watched him run up the steps and ring the bell.

She did not move until the front door was opened, letting a broad shaft of yellow light out into the dusk, and he vanished behind it.

Even then she stayed where she was a second or two longer, looking up at the house where the lamps within made golden oblongs out of all the windows. Behind those windows the red-headed man was slipping out of his oilskin coat by this time, and shaking hands with Mr. Van, no doubt.

"It's only half past six." Chatty looked down at the cheap little silver watch she wore on her wrist. She could just make out the time in the dimness.

By nine the dinner and the "smoker" would be over probably. Then in all likelihood the red-headed man would jump in his open car and speed to his girl's house to spend the rest of the evening with her.

She would be wearing the flowers he had bought for her, of course, and she would smile up into his face the way she had smiled up at him that morning—

"Oh, poppycoddle! What do I care?" Chatty asked aloud of the west spring evening, as she started down Wuthering hill, sloshing through the puddles, and taking deep breaths of the sweet, cool air.

Before she reached the bottom the rain had stopped, and down in the town she could see the smoke rising straight into the still air. In the dark west there was the faintest glow of pink . . . It was going to be a fine day tomorrow, after all.

"It ain't goin' to rain no more—no more," sang Chatty, under her breath.

She felt cheerful and happy once more . . . She was going to have the kind of job she wanted. She was going to meet some men at last, and life looked pretty fine to her.

"I won't go down to Mrs. Mayberry's and fight with her," she told her mother when she got back to Lipton street. "I'll write her a note and ask her for my salary and Pud can take it down when he gets home from the drug store and, oh, mother, Mrs. Van Nuys says that Mr. Van will give me a job down in his office! She says she's sure she can make him give a chance—and I'm not a bit sorry that Mrs. Mayberry fired me, after all! It was the best thing that ever happened to me—the very best thing ever!"

And then Mrs. Chatterton, without raising her head from the seam she was putting in by hand, said something that made Chatty very cross—something that hurt her feelings, besides.

"Yes—it will be a fine thing for you to go down there to work. But not unless you learn to keep your tongue between your teeth!" was what she said.

Chatty actually glared at her with her bright gray-green eyes.

"Mother, that's mean of you!" she blazed. "You know I don't talk too much . . . You are just rubbing it into me that I do because Mrs. Mayberry said so, today. And it's not fair of you!"

Mrs. Chatterton shook her head and raised her gentle blue eyes to Chatty's flushed and angry little face.

"No—but I've been thinking about you a lot this afternoon while I sat here alone," she answered very quietly and soberly. "You've always talked too much—ever since you were a little thing, Chatty. You used to run around the neighborhood, telling everybody what we'd had for supper, or that the grocer wouldn't charge anything more until we'd paid the bill . . . It was cute, then, because you were just a little girl—"

"Oh, mother!" Chatty snapped, and turned to walk out of the front room. She wasn't going to stand here and let her mother talk to her like this! She didn't deserve it . . . She knew she didn't.

But Mrs. Chatterton stopped her.

"No, you've got to listen to me, Chatty," she went on. "You're going out into the world, in a way, when you go down to work for Mr. Van Nuys—it won't be like working for Mrs. Mayberry, and seeing nobody but her for weeks and weeks at a time. You'll be on trial in the business world, and you'll find that it's necessary to guard your lips there."

"Oh, why preach at me like this?" now. "I have a few brains, mother—"

"Yes, and you have a busy tongue too!" Mrs. Chatterton came back at her firmly. "You haven't forgotten the time at high school when the girls put you out of their secret society because you told everybody the secrets, have you? Now, Chatty, be sensible, and take this advice in the right spirit—"

"Oh, to the dickens with the right spirit!" cried Chatty, and went out, slamming the door behind her.

On Easter Sunday morning the Chattertons had late breakfast in the front room.

The dresses that Mrs. Chatterton had been working on were hidden away in the closet, and Chatty put the cover on the sewing machine and pushed it into the corner.

The day was sunshiny, and the table was pushed up beside the windows. The geraniums on the sills were in bloom, and the little room took on a gay holiday look.

Just as Chatty was bringing in the platter of omelet and the fat silver coffee pot that was a left-over from better days, the doorbell rang in the vestibule downstairs.

"It's the Van Nuys' big town car," Mrs. Chatterton said, leaning over in her chair to look down into Lipton street.

"Oh! Do you suppose they've come to tell me about the job?" Chatty's eyes were starry with excitement as she flew to let them in.

"No, we can't sit down," Mrs. Van Nuys said, when Pud brought two chairs for them into the middle of the room. "We're on our way to church—we just stopped in for a minute. This is for you, Harriett. Just a little remembrance for Easter."

She put a large square box into Mrs. Chatterton's lap, and then turned to Chatty.

"And Mr. Van says he has a place for you," she went on, her pink, good-natured face covered with the good and happy look of a person who is doing a kind deed and knows it.

"It's in our filing department," Mr. Van Nuys explained, heavily, looking very handsome and very grand, with a gardenia in his buttonhole and a silk hat in one hand. "Just the other day Miss Langenau, who looks after the files, asked me if she could have someone to help her out. I think you can do the work. You don't need any special training for it—just a few brains. And you'll soon learn to typewrite."

Chatty beamed her thanks at him. If he had given her a corner lot in the moon she couldn't have been much happier than she was about the wonderful position.

"It doesn't pay much, you understand," he told her, holding the door open for his wife, as he was leaving.

"That's all right—and I'll be down early tomorrow morning!" breathed Chatty, watching them go down the stairs to the car that was to take them to church. "And thank you—thank you—thank you—"

NEW TESTS IN WEST INCREASE

Locations Total 20 During Last Week

Special to The Record News.

SAN ANGELO, Texas, July 18.—Locations for new oil tests in the West Texas Permian basin numbered 20 last week, an increase of four over the preceding week, but completions were fewer, only three wells being completed in three counties rating total daily initial production of 12,267 barrels compared with 17 completions in four counties good for a total of 35,326 barrels daily the week before.

INVENTOR'S PET CAUSES DEATH

Maker of Monoplane Dies In Crash

DETROIT, July 18. (INS)—Melvin E. Dare, Detroit airplane inventor, and Slygh W. Brown, his pilot, today were numbered as the most recent martyrs to the science of aviation.

The two were killed late yesterday when a monoplane invented by Dare, which they were flying at Scully airport, plunged 75 feet to the ground as its left wing collapsed.

The tragedy was witnessed by about 75 persons, including a number of capitalists whom Dare was attempting to persuade to come into his company. Dare is said to have sold patent rights for various aeronautical devices for more than $1,000,000.

He had spent many years in perfecting a monoplane with a more flexible wing play which would allow landing at lower speed. He had entered the craft in the Guggenheim aircraft safety contest, and it was the 13th entry received.

Scores Inspect Lawton Still

Special to The Record News.

LAWTON, Okla., July 18.—Hundreds of persons were today inspecting the "Dada" whisky still of Comanche county, which was on exhibition in the yard of the county court house, having been hauled in early this morning from the southwest end of the military reservation. It has a capacity of 2,500 gallons.

Deputy sheriffs located the mammoth still early Wednesday morning "before the crack o' day" and waited several hours in hiding in hopes someone would appear to start it in operation, but no one showed up. It is believed the still had been moved to its latest site Saturday night or Sunday, as it was "ready to go," but no run had as yet been made. Recent activities of federal officers have either caused the whisky makers to dismantle their outfits or "move." This one had moved. One hundred and twenty-five barrels of mash were found nearby, which were destroyed. It is a "whole copper" still, with a copper "worm" of 75 feet in length. It was located in a draw near a creek of good water, and was carefully screened by timber and brush.

Trading Quiets Down Preceding Issuance of Reserve Statement

By BROADAN WALL

NEW YORK, July 18. (US)—Stocks slipped off slightly in quieter trading today due to nervousness as to what the reserve statement would show when issued late in the afternoon. Call money eased from renewal of eight to seven per cent and somewhat offset the other reactionary influences. Steel held well throughout and gained close to two points while other Standard Industrials lost fractionally on the average. Specialties and Utilities scored the best individual advances with Commercial Solvents jumping 12 points more, Electric Auto Lite gained three, Johns Manville 5¼, Macy five Public Service of New Jersey 2⅛, United Corporation 3¼ and Southern California Edison 2⅞. Copper met a little better support while the Oils remained irregular. Rails were quiet and lower. Turnover fell off to below the 3,500,000 share level.

Everyone now talks of the Radiator-Johns Manville merger that was first told of exclusively in this column. The next important development in the buildings industry stocks, however, may not influence Radiator-Standard Sanitary at all. The latest rumors indicate that Manville may negotiate acquisition of another company in the not distant future. Buying in Congoleum, today was influenced by such report as Congoleum is controlled by the bankers who dominate the affairs of Manville. It is pointed out that the company would be a logical acquisition. The grouping of American Radiator and Manville, it is stated, is quite a ways off as no official conversations have been held thereon as yet. Important stockholders in both companies, however, favor such consolidation.

New interests are taking a position in Bullard company in expectation of increase in dividend. The company by reason of its new patented process is likely to revolutionize the Iron and Steel casting industry as its machines do away with hand labor to an extent that cuts cost of production down to 50 per cent. Group activity was reported in City Ice & Fuel also, coincident with report that business now is running 30 per cent ahead of what it was a year ago and as a result an increase in dividend is to be expected before long. Profit taking in Alleghany Corporation followed announcement of appreciation of $44,000,000 in market value of its holdings. Bankers for the corporation do not appear to want a following in the stock at this time.

The character of buying in the Copper shares was reported as vastly improved during recent weeks. The leaders in the industry have hopes of holding the price of the metal for the next few weeks when fall demand will be added to by reason of consumers holding off from normal buying in recent weeks. Chicago interests continued favorable toward Montgomery Ward and further gain in sales was forecast over the next several months. Postum controlling interests were said to be planning to take in another company in their consolidation. Brokers usually identified with Warner Brothers activity reported that more stock had been taken out of the market in recent weeks than at any time before. Preparations were talked of for special activity in Electric Auto Lite before long.

Brokers' loans showed increase of over $50,000,000 to a new high record figure of $5,813,000,000 as was forecast in this column. During the afternoon there was wide circulation or report that the loans would show a decline and as a result some selling may result this morning. While the local banks obeyed the reserve board and reduced loans $65,000,000 the out-of-town banks took advantage of profit in high rates and increased loans $52,000,000 while corporations and others whose accommodations are shown in loans for the "account of others" loaned $72,000,000 more. The reserve statements showed no change of importance. While there was increase in government security holding there was corresponding drop in bills discounted so that no change in the money market would result. In fact the statements are further indication that the money powers do not want an active stock market at this time.

WINNIPEG GRAIN

WINNIPEG, July 18. (AP)—Another erratic-trend marked today's wheat market, values moving within a range of 7 cents, opening 3⅝ cents to 4⅛ cents lower than yesterday's close, wheat shot up suddenly to score gains of 2⅝ cents in all months. Weak Liverpool cables caused the opening weakness but good buying which entered the pit after the first hour quickly turned the price trend upward.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, July 18. (AP)—Eleventh hour speculative buyers of wheat today met with a waterloo. Especially was this the experience of those who either had scanty financial resources, or who lacked nerves or steel.

Wheat closed unsteady around the day's bottom figures, 2⅝c to 3⅛c a bushel under yesterday's finish. Corn closed 1½c to 2¼c down, oats ⅝c to 1⅛c off, and provisions unchanged to 10@12c advance.

Observers put the 1929 yield of wheat in the Canadian prairie provinces this season as low as 175,000,000 bushels, about one-third of last year's harvest.

A temporary advance when wheat was strong carried the corn market up the first time this season to $1.00 a bushel for December delivery, representing the new 1929 corn crop.

White Deer Wheat Harvest Nears End

Special to The Record News.

WHITE DEER, Texas, July 18.—With harvest estimated at about 72 per cent finished approximately 515 cars have been shipped from the four White Deer grain elevators Tuesday evening.

The long wished for price of $1 per bushel was paid the first of the week by local dealers here. Many farmers were optimistic about the price at the beginning of harvest and filled their granaries to capacity.

The car shortage situation is considerably relieved. It is thought that the Santa Fe will furnish cars from now on as fast as they can be loaded in the local yards. This is no indication whatsoever that there will be no more wheat piled on the ground, as the numerous combines and hundreds of trucks will deliver the wheat to the elevators much faster than it can be loaded into cars.

Many farmers throughout this wheat section have been plowing stubble just behind the combines. Frank Skaggs, a prominent wheat farmer and business man, states that he has finished harvesting his 600 or 700 acres of grain. He also broke the ground as he harvested the grain.

BARNES TALKS ON DAIRYING

Young County Residents Hear Farm Agent

Increasing interest in dairy development among the farmers in Young county led the Hutch-Manning Pioneer association of Newcastle to include a discussion of that subject on the program for the annual reunion now in session there, according to information received at the local chamber of commerce offices.

O. K. Barnes, agricultural agent of the Wichita Falls Chamber of Commerce, will be the principal speaker on the dairy development program Friday afternoon, it was announced.

Indicative of the attention being given to the growth of alfalfa as a valuable food for the rapidly increasing dairy herds in Wichita county is the 35-acre tract devoted to this crop on the farm of R. O. Harvey on the lower Charlie road, northeast of the city. Five harvests from the piece are assured during the current year, it was said, with the possibility that it will make hay sufficient for a sixth cutting before the end of the year. The yield was estimated to run about three-fourths of a ton per acre at each harvest, on the average. The first cutting in the spring naturally produces a heavier crop than succeeding ones.

It was said that on parts of the field which were seeded down to alfalfa last fall, the Johnson grass which is fairly abundant in other sections, planted this spring, has been quite entirely eliminated. Many of the plants in this field reach a height of from 30 to 36 inches, it was stated. The crop contributes heavily to the feeding of about 100 cattle kept on the farm.

But Not Until McGraws Bat Brame for 4-1 Win

NEW YORK, July 18. (AP)—Masterful pitching by Carl Hubbell, who is becoming something of a Pirate Nemesis, enabled the Giants to defeat Pittsburgh 4 to 1 at the Polo grounds today in the opening game of a series of four.

The home forces assaulted Ervin Brame for two runs in the second and for two more in the third, but made no headway against Fussell or Swetonic who followed. Score:

New Star

ADAM COMOROSKY

The third man in the Pittsburgh outfield refuses to permit the Waner brothers to become the whole show. His name is Adam Comorosky.

On July 4, Young Comorosky, playing his first year as a Pirate regular, had a batting average of .343 for 54 games.

This gave him a five-point margin over Paul Waner and placed him only six points behind Brother Lloyd.

The Joyful Knock-Out

"A clean knockout blow to the chin is painless. One may have visions or even hear birds singing before recovering consciousness."—Scientific report.

Hit me, dear heart, upon the chin;
Massage me in the good old way.
Hit me as if you meant to win
The hope that Schmeling holds today;

For lately I have felt the stab
Of dull routine in endless range.
Yes, I have found existence drab
And I am yearning for a change.

I'd like to hear the brown thrush pipe
His melody, well known of old,
Out where the summer blooms are ripe
In sprays of scarlet, blue and gold.
I'd like to watch the rivers run
Rock-fretted, as they whirl and pass
Between tall cliffs that hide the sun
Where vagrant shadows streak the grass.

And somewhere out beyond the walls,
With all their driving, hurried bands,
I'd like to hear the rainbirds call
Through gray days on the meadowlands;
Or, by the marshes and the bog,
Where swallows wheel in restless flight,
I'd like to hear the fluting frogs
In earnest chorus greet the night.

Soak me, dear heart, upon the jaw
Unfettered with the block and feint;
Nor let the province of the law
Hold you to any light restraint;
For lately I have felt the lure
Of stream and mountain, bird and bough.
My soul is craving for a cure,
But travel's too expensive now.

The Orphan Crown

It has been just a year now since Doctor Tunney lifted the heavyweight crown from his brow and chucked it through an open window to let it light where it might, if at all.

In this space of time some headway has been made, but nothing to get steamed up about. Sharkey had his chance to prove he belonged in the Stribling matter, but the proof was lacking on both sides. Schmeling has looked better than any of the rest, but he has yet to prove he is a champion capable of picking up where Dempsey and Tunney left off. Perhaps he can prove his case in full. But the fact is, he still has to prove it.

Word from Mr. Tunney has been quite scarce. He will be one champion who won't try to come back. The odds are that Dempsey himself doesn't know what he will do. I have always believed he would come back for one more shot—something like a $750,000 shot. But the longer he waits the less of a drawing card he will be. Fame is not only not eternal, but it is rarely robust enough to live out a year of inactivity.

If Schmeling flops, there will be no heavyweight champion for another year at least and the crown that Tunney chucked away will continue whirling through open space without a spot upon which to light and stick.

The Future of Horton Smith

The next big tournament stand of Horton Smith will be interesting to watch. After his brilliant winter career he slowed down quite a little, due in part to inexperience in big open championships and in part to golfing staleness. He has been over-golfed for some time. But he will have had a good tournament rest since the Winged Foot party and he should be heard from in noisy accents.

No one can take away from young Smith the fact that he has one of the greatest swings in golf. It is as close to perfection as that of any one lifted from golf history, present or past. He has shown that he has the ideal temperament, but big championships are hard to win in a year or two. Hagen and Ouimet broke through in a hurry, but most of the boys had to hang around for quite a spell before they could scramble to the main elevation.

Horton Smith should be good for several major championships, provided he doesn't overdo it and burn himself out. A golfer's nerves are subjected to heavy pressure and if part of the motive power is ever worn away it is something difficult to replace.

Only a golf player with a smooth flawless swing could have gone through the tournament campaign Horton Smith tackled from December to July. It was a murderous pace.

The Athletics will never have to bother much about any extended slump as long as Bob Grove's left arm remains intact. And one great pitcher can mean more to a ball club than the number of victories he turns in. Quite a lot more.

IDLE SPUDDERS GO INTO LEAD

Galloways Open Three-Day Stand Today at Houston

Special to The Record News.

BEAUMONT, July 18.—The Spudders were idle today—but went into first place. While rain caused the Wichita Falls and Beaumont athletes to take a day off, the Spudders edged into the league lead while Waco was taking it on the chin from Shreveport. The Spudders hold only a mathematical margin over the Cubs, with 10 victories and seven defeats to 11 wins and eight losses by Waco.

Beaumont held its own today while Fort Worth was losing to Houston and the Exporters are firmly entrenched in third place. Houston advanced from fifth to sixth and Shreveport from seventh to sixth while San Antonio fell from fifth to seventh.

Race Is Close

The race continues to be a hectic affair as in the first half, with only four and a half games separating the leaders from the last-place Dallas champions.

The Spudders packed hit-and-run bags and entrained tonight for Houston, where they open a three-game series tomorrow. Wiltse or Steengrafe will chuck the first game in the Bayou City.

Buffs Are Tough Now

Wichita Falls has won four and lost two games at Houston this year but the Buffs are going at a fast pace now, sweeping a three-game series with Fort Worth by winning yesterday, and the Spudders will have to be at their very best to gain ground in the next three days.

With his club going good, however, Skipper Galloway figures on two out of three for the series.

Germans Enthuse Over Net Heroes

Teutons Give Adulation to U. S. Foes This Week

BERLIN, July 18. (AP)—With Germany meeting the United States here this week-end for the right to battle France in the Davis cup challenge round, the eager attention of all Germany is focused upon two young stars whose might has carried the Fatherland to new heights in the tennis world.

This country never saw such white hot tennis enthusiasm as has been evoked by the showing of Daniel Prenn and Hans Moldenhauer, singles aces, in winning the European zone final against England. In fact the German Tennis federation is in a quandary as to what to do to accommodate the thousands desiring to witness the interzone finals against the American team headed by Bill Tilden on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Polish-Russian-German

The younger and perhaps more promising of Germany's twin sensations is Prenn, national titleholder since 1928. Prenn is Polish by extraction, Russian by birth and German by adoption.

Moldenhauer's victory over H. V. Austin of England last Friday is said to be due largely to the tactical advice given him throughout by Prenn who approached him after each change of sides.

Moldenhauer Another Star

Moldenhauer, since 1926, continuously third in Germany's tennis ranking list, was born in 1901 and received his early training in the Blauweiss Tennis club in Berlin, later joining the Rotweiss.

By 1924 Hans was able at various times to defeat such German cracks as Heinz Landmann and Heinrich Leinschroth, the present Davis cup doubles pair, as well as Froitzheim, and in 1926, he won the international championship of Germany in singles although Froitzheim and Landmann still ranked ahead of him for all events. He has been a frequent partner of Fraulein Cilly Aussem in mixed doubles.

Texan Is U. S. Tennis Hope

It's up to these young men to bear down on the opposition in the Davis cup doubles. Unless they do the United States will have little chance of winning the cup.

NEW YORK, July 18. (AP)—In the happy combination of young Johnny Van Ryn and Wilmer Allison the United States has lit upon a Davis cup doubles team to tackle the best that France can offer with something like an even chance to win.

Already these promising youngstars have flattened one of the best French pairs, accounting for Henri Cochet and Jacques Brugnon on the way to the British championship a few days ago, and it just happens that their type of game is calculated to prove even more deadly against Jean Borotra and Cochet, the team they are likely to be pitted against in the challenge round.

The style of the Allison-Van Ryn alliance, as described by no less an authority than Big Bill Tilden, is "a flashing, battering net attack," and it is particularly noteworthy that Tilden, shortly before his departure for Europe, delivered the opinion that "only a driving, net rushing attack has a chance" against such a wonderful smashing team as Borotra and Cochet.

Tilden and Hunter, playing a softer, slower game, failed to stop these two great Frenchmen in the challenge round a year ago. George Lott and John Hennessey, master lobbers, would be feeding Jean and Henri just the kind of overhead fare they thrive upon. But Van Ryn and Allison, with their slashing, dashing forecourt game, carry the guns that are calculated to do the most harm.

Van Ryn, the dark-haired Orange, N. J., youth who captained Princeton's tennis team last year, and the blond Allison, former intercollegiate champion from the University of Texas, form one of the greatest potential doubles pairs this country has ever put together.

Allison is ranked fifth and Van Ryn sixth among America's leading players, and in single combat neither youth can hold much hope of beating any of the first three Frenchmen, but some strange touch of tennis necromancy multiplies their strength when they are combined as a doubles team. They played together some last season, but on their performances were ranked only fourth among the country's leading pairs. Hennessey and Lott, Lott and Doeg and Tilden and Hunter all out-ranked them, and it was not until the Wimbledon tournament that perfection on team work was achieved.

"The victor's assignment now is to win the Davis cup doubles, an accomplishment which would make it possible for the American forces to win back the cup with only an even break in singles.

Three D Stock Farm to Stage 10-Day Betless Race Meeting in November

FORT WORTH, July 18. (AP)—Five hundred of the finest thoroughbreds from the most famous racing stables in the United States will gather at the Three D stock farm, near Arlington, Texas, Nov. 6 to 16 when the Waggoner interests will tage a 10-day series of races.

Paul Waggoner, who is associated with his father, W. T. Waggoner, and his brother, Guy Waggoner, in the enterprise, returned yesterday from a trip to all of the big tracks. He has received the assurance of any number of owners that they would have their best strings here in November.

The meet will be operated strictly within the law. There will be no betting of any kind. In a way, it is an experiment to determine if it is possible to operate a meet successfully without betting, but the main purpose is to stimulate Texas stock owners' interest in the breeding of fine horses.

Petty and Riconda Fail With Pirates

PITTSBURGH, July 18. (AP)—That famous deal whereby Glenn Wright went to Brooklyn in exchange for Jess Petty and Harry Riconda has assumed a different aspect.

Wright's arm is useless, but both Riconda and Petty have failed here. Riconda finally was shipped to Kansas City of the American association. Petty has been of little use to the Pirate pitching staff.

Fans Mistake Coach For Manager of Cubs

CHICAGO, July 18. (AP)—Like the important looking supernumeraries preceding the star upon the stage, Jimmy Burke, Chicago Cubs coach, frequently is mistaken for Manager Joe McCarthy.

Burke, who has had managerial experience, usually is first at this coaching post on the first base line and frequently draws many of the opening taunts intended for the Bruins' boss.

None of this disturbs the dignified Jimmy, who carries himself like an aristocrat.

A Reporter's Note Book

By DAMON RUNYON

(Copyright 1929, Universal Service, Inc.)

Oh, some folks like their yachting,
And some folks like their golf;
And some folks get all heated up
When a ball game's coming off.
Now perchance my tastes are vulgar,
And my favorite sport a sin;
But I love to hear those big bums fall,
When hit upon the chin!

The late Bill Brennan talking to Dempsey during their fight at old Madison Square garden, and saying: "So you're the champion of the world are you, you bum?"

And Dempsey answering not a word.

Mr. Leo Phelonius Flynn's adoption of my suggestion that he write the boxing commission demanding that a black foul line be painted around the terrible Sharkey man's middle, thus establishing a background of foul-claiming on Sharkey's part.

And the glory that Leo Phelonius claimed for this bright thought.

The same Mr. Mack being questioned by Police Commissioner Grover Whalen, of New York, in connection with the investigation into the murder of Frankie Marlow, whose fighter, Riccardo Bertazzolo, fought for Mr. Mack.

"What d'ye mean by bringing me in here, anyway?"

"A man has been killed."

"Well, there was a million men killed in France—am I responsible for that?"

The new German waiter in Lindy's answered the phone the other night.

"Is Sam Weiss there?" a voice demanded.

The waiter peered about the premises, and answered:

"Yah, he iss nod here."

"Is Manny Post there?" the voice inquired.

"Yah, he iss nod here all-so," said Herr Max Schmeling's fellow countryman.

Daily Dope

By LARRY DAILEY

LACK OF pitching, a plaint common to most ball clubs but particularly to the Phillies, is keeping down Burt Shotten's team in the National league pennant race. The Phillies have lots of power and a defense that, except for chucking, is entirely capable. Save for Benge and Willoughby there isn't a hurler on the Philadelphia roster who can be depended upon to go nine respectable innings.

Chuck Klein, the newest sensation of baseball, heads an array of hard and dangerous hitters and an efficient outfield completed by Southern and O'Doul. Fresco Thompson is a great all-around ball player and on a team up in the race would be receiving lots of publicity as one of the real stars of the game. Don Hurst, a tremendous hitter, Whitney and Thevenow round out a fast and dependable infield and Lerian and Davis are fine young catchers.

Youth is the predominating feature of the Phillies. Thompson, Thevenow and O'Doul are the only veterans of the regulars and none of that trio is ancient, even as baseball ages are reckoned.

BOXING stands in need of a Landis. It is remarkable that the glove sport has survived its many vicissitudes; and, indeed, seems to thrive on adversity. In California recently Ace Hudkins and Charley Belanger participated in what the boys call a barney. That affair was framed and in the bag and though the principals were heavily fined, the damage done to boxing, at least on the west coast, was incalculable.

Vitterio Campolo, a highly touted Argentine heavyweight, making his American debut before 15,000 people, was permitted to win on a foul from Arthur DeKuh, the Italian, in the third round Wednesday night at Brooklyn. DeKuh was guilty of landing several low punches before the tame mill was halted by the referee, and the Italian apparently had no purpose in the ring other than to end it as rapidly as possible.

Those 15,000 people who paid to see that fight were bilked and again the ring sport suffers. Fighters of the Hudkins-Belanger-DeKuh ilk should be heavily punished. A year's suspension is not too severe a penalty for such chicanery. But the difficulty is that while they may be fined and banned in some states, there are other states in which they will be permitted to ply their trade.

A commissioner of boxing to deal with such fellows and occurrences would put a stop to those funny affairs and would help greatly to further the cause of the game.

MILLIONAIRE IS BOXERS' BOSS

Edward F. Hutton Manages Trio of Scrappers

By JACK LAWRENCE

NEW YORK, July 18. (US)—When Anthony Drexel Biddle, millionaire society man of Philadelphia, took up the business of professional pugilism in a big way and became manager of Rene de Vos, Belgian middle weight, he came in for a lot of good-natured kidding from his friends, but he was setting a fad that was destined to spread and which may have revolutionizing influences on the ancient cauliflower racket.

The latest millionaire to take up professional fisticuffs in a serious way is Edward F. Hutton, society leader, broker, banker, director in a score of great corporations and an all-around sportsman.

Mr. Hutton already has three boxers in his stable, and he says he hopes to have many more before another outdoor season rolls around. On his 187-acre estate at Roslyn, L. I., he is building what he says will be the largest and most up-to-date training camp for boxers in the world. It will be completed next spring.

The inmates of Mr. Hutton's boxing stable at this writing are nothing to get excited about, but he believes that among the three he has at least one potential champion. They have been doing their training in the midst of Southampton's exclusive social colony, and a list of "those present" about their ring each afternoon would read like a chapter from "Who's Who," or a dozen pages torn from the social register.

Mrs. Hill Scores 73 In Trans-Mississippi

DENVER, July 18. (UP)—In winning her match in the women's trans-Mississippi golf championship here today, Mrs. O. S. Hill, present titleholder of Kansas City, established a new course record for women when she shot the 6,580 yard, 18-hole course in a brilliant 73.

Mrs. Hill defeated Mrs. C. N. Johnson of Omaha, 8 and 7, in the match play.

MACKMEN GAIN ON IDLE YANKS

A's Hammer Uhle for 8 to 4 Victory Behind Walberg

DETROIT, July 18. (AP)—George Walberg snapped back into winning form here today after a brief slump and the Athletics defeated Detroit by 8 to 4 in the first game of the series.

George Uhle remained in the box throughout, giving 16 hits. He was handicapped by five Tiger errors.

The victory enabled the Macks to add a half game to their lead as the Yanks were idle. Score:

LOUGHRAN WINS DECISION TO RETAIN LIGHT HEAVY CROWN

TOM OUTBOXES JIM BRADDOCK

Champion Blocks Desperate Rushes of Challenger

By ALAN J. GOULD

YANKEE STADIUM, New York, July 18. (AP)—Tommy Loughran dispelled all doubt about his ability to dominate the light heavyweight division tonight by administering a sound thrashing to his youthful New Jersey challenger, Jimmy Braddock, in 15 rounds that for the most part were dull and one-sided.

Few masters of ringcraft have ever manifested so clear and undisputed superiority as did Loughran in the skillful manner he cuffed, punched and punished.

Tommy Easily Wins

In the opinion of a majority of ringsiders, Loughran won 12 or 13 rounds. The unanimous decision of the two judges and referee, Eddie Forbes, at the close of the bout was a mere formality.

On just two occasions in the first end seventh rounds was the world's 175-pound champion apparently in any danger. Almost the first punch of the fight, a short inside left by Braddock, opened a severe cut over Loughran's left eye. This not only strated a stream of blood that half blinded the titleholder, but so flustered him that Braddock was able to land telling punches to the head and body.

Braddock in Distress

Safely past this bothersome episode, Loughran had Braddock in distress in the seventh round. In the previous rounds, the facial damage was evened when Tommy opened a gash at the side of Jimmy's right eye.

As they emerged from a mixup near the end of the seventh, Loughran's face quickly became a mass of blood from a fresh cut, almost in the center of his forehead, apparently caused from a grazing left. It was claimed in Loughran's corner that the challenger had butted the champion to open the cut.

Loughran, hastily repaired, came out in the eighth to turn the match into a rout and cuff Braddock all over the ring for the rest of the fight.

Street Car Rolls On Campus After Collision

Even the street cars in this fast age turn toward education at times. Early Thursday evening a collision between a street car and an automobile at the corner of Polk street and Avenue G diverted the street car from its usual path and sent it meandering up on the sidewalk near the Zundelowitz Junior high school building, several feet from the tracks. Motorman McYea pushed and pulled at the controls but street car controls don't have the power of guidance, it was pointed out. There was but one passenger on the car. No one was injured.

The Fight by Rounds

ROUND ONE: Loughran led with his left jab and handled the challenger easily in a clinch. The champion came out of the mixup with a nasty gash over his left eye. Blood streamed from the cut. It seemed to spur the champion into action and the fight began at a fast clip. Braddock smashed a hard right to Tommy's head but missed two swings. Loughran kept jabbing with his left but was unable to keep the challenger from coming in close with a body attack. They were in a clinch at the bell.

ROUND TWO: They swapped punches in the center of the ring and clinched. The champion fought carefully, showing a healthy respect for Braddock's right. Tommy slipped and only a clinch saved him from slipping to the floor as he dodged Jimmy's charge. The challenger was forcing the fight but missing as often as he landed. Braddock landed an overhand right to the head as he forced the champion into a corner. Loughran went back on his heels from a solid left to the head just before the gong sounded.

ROUND THREE: Loughran boxed and jabbed as he sought to stop Braddock's doggedly persistent rushes. The challenger started a fresh flow of blood from the cut over Tommy's eye and gave the champion both fists in a lively mixup. Loughran's defensive tactics slowed up the fight. Loughran backed up against the ropes. Loughran chose to fight and smashed Braddock solidly about the head. One of the champion's jabs opened a cut on Braddock's nose just before the end of the round.

ROUND FOUR: After a succession of clinches, Braddock drove the champion back with a right to the head and a left hook to the stomach. The champion kept sticking his left into Jimmy's face and had the Irishman swinging wildly. There was a cut now under Loughran's right eye. Braddock stalked his rival with right hand poised but seldom found a target as Loughran shifted and boxed cleverly. Jimmy took a stiff left to the nose just before the bell.

ROUND FIVE: Braddock drove a right hook to the ribs and repeated with an uppercut that landed under Tommy's heart. They spent a lot of time clinching at close quarters and the champion clearly outgeneraled the young Jersey man. Loughran smashed a series of rights to the jaw and took a light left to the body as he sidestepped Braddock's counter attack. Tommy's left seemed to puzzle the challenger but he connected to the champion's jaw with a hard overhand right. Loughran hooked his left to the body as the round ended.

ROUND SIX: Braddock came out of his corner with head lowered to open a determined charge. He forced the champion about the ring but found difficulty connecting. Loughran sidestepped and jabbed to upset the challenger's rushes. Repeatedly he threw Jimmy off balance and punished the challenger about the head at close range. Braddock was buffeted around but kept up the pursuit. One of Loughran's sharp lefts opened a cut at the side of Braddock's right eye. The champion had his young rival in a bad way at the bell.

ROUND SEVEN: They came out for action and each with patched up eyes. The champion drove several hard lefts and rights to Braddock's head and blocked the challenger's counter. Loughran had Braddock backing away from his two-fisted drive. Just when Loughran appeared to have Jimmy in distress another severe cut was opened by a glancing blow to the champion's forehead. In a twinkling Tommy's face was a mass of blood. Loughran backed away and appeared half blinded by the stream but he had a smile left as he came to his corner at the end of the round.

ROUND EIGHT: Loughran came out to set a fast pace. He first was fighting with a succession of sharp clouts to the challenger's head and the crowd was in an uproar. The champion had Braddock missing badly. They clinched after exchanging lefts to the body. Tommy took a left smack to the head but cuffed Jimmy around the ring. The champion handled his young rival as a master would his pupil. Braddock was taking a scientific boxing lesson at the bell.

ROUND NINE: Loughran lost no time poking his efficient left hand into the challenger's face. Jimmy did not seem discouraged but apparently realized that his main chance was to connect with his right, providing he could find the target. Loughran out-smarted the challenger at every turn but Jimmy kept boring in. One of Braddock's blows started the blood flowing again slightly from the champion's cut head. The challenger absorbed two stiff lefts to the head and had his counter blows plucked out of the air. Braddock missed an overhand right by a foot and the crowd groaned as the round ended.

ROUND TEN: Jimmy came out with determination written all over his face. The challenger worked both fists to the body forcing the champion to clinch. Loughran brought his defensive tactics into play to check Braddock's lunges. He brought Jimmy up short once and then again with right uppercuts. Loughran picked off most of Braddock's blows and put the challenger repeatedly off balance by clever use of his left. They were sparring at the bell.

ROUND ELEVEN: Braddock plunged right in where he left off, still hunting for Loughran's chin. Instead his own was clipped by a right uppercut. Jimmy was smiling after taking several light blows to the face. After being handled easily in a series of clinches Braddock gestured to the champion to "come on and fight." Loughran responded with a pair of stiff wallops to the head. Jimmy forced the champion into the ropes but took enough time out to answer several loud voiced ringside critics. They broke from a clinch at the bell.

ROUND TWELVE: Braddock stalked the champion about the ring without getting much satisfaction. The champion, realizing the big margin he had piled up on points, took no chances and stayed strictly on the defensive. The crowd clapped for action and got clinches. Tommy danced in and out of his rival's reach, meanwhile massaging the challenger with his left. The champion fired both hands to the Jersey boy's head and ducked a vicious left just as the bell sounded.

ROUND THIRTEEN: Braddock bored back into a flurry of blows. The crowd yelled as the champion speared Jimmy with his left and skipped out of the challenger's reach. Tommy was content to spar and clinch but Tom took one to the face. The champion waded in for a moment with both hands, punishing Braddock about the body. But there was comparatively little action. Loughran was in complete command of the situation and stood Jimmy off easily with well directed jabs as the round ended.

ROUND FOURTEEN: Braddock plunged in with a body attack and drove the champion to the ropes. Tommy gestured to Braddock to step in and fight. The challenger let both fists fly and clipped the title-holder on the jaw. Both appeared to be exchanging remarks that were anything but complimentary. Tommy in derision and Jimmy in some desperation. Meanwhile Braddock connected with an overhand right to the head but took punishment at close range. Loughran smacked his right to the face and took a straight left to the jaw. The challenger missed half dozen other swings just as the round ended.

ROUND FIFTEEN: Braddock charged in taking another series of baffling pokes from Tommy's talented left. Loughran tied up the challenger easily but was forced into a corner by Jimmy's impetuous rush. Loughran landed his right to the head and avoided another of Jimmy's wild plunges. They were tied up most of the time in clinches but Loughran took a few light blows to the head in a corner. They were sparring at the bell.

Young Stribling Victor Over Cook

Babe Hunt Stops Montgomery; Tramel Gets Draw

KANSAS CITY, July 18. (AP)—W. L. (Young) Stribling, Macon, Ga., heavyweight, tonight won a newspaper decision over George Cook, Australian champion, in a 10-round bout.

Babe Hunt, Oklahoma heavyweight, knocked out Sully Montgomery, former Centre college football star, in the second round of a scheduled 10-round bout. Hunt came out of his corner in the second round and with several lefts and two rights floored Montgomery for a count of seven. Sully got to his feet and was floored again. Hunt's third attack sent Montgomery to the mat for the count of 10.

Wichita Boy, 4, Bitten by Dog

Bob Kilgore, 4-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Kilgore, 1106 Seventeenth street, who was bitten by a neighbor's German police dog Thursday morning, was reported greatly improved Thursday afternoon at his home. His condition is not considered serious, it was said.

The dog is being kept under surveillance, but there is no indication of rabies, inoculation for rabies having been administered to the dog last month. The attack, in which the child suffered bites on the chest and arm, was thought to have been brought on because the dog was feeding, the boy probably having come near the animal and caused it to fear that its food would be taken away, it was pointed out. The incident occurred in the neighbor's back yard.

The boy had previously been bitten by a dog last summer when he was forced to take anti-rabies treatment, and an older brother was bitten several years ago.

MRS. M. E. STEPHENS

Funeral services for Mrs. M. E. Stephens, 76, who died Tuesday morning at the home of her daughter, Mrs. O. B. Dudley, 709 Lamar avenue, will be held from the chapel of the Hines mortuary at 10 o'clock Friday morning with Rev. O. L. Powers, pastor of the First Baptist church, officiating. The body will be forwarded at 12:25 to Bowie for burial.

The body had been held at the Hines mortuary pending the arrival of J. C. and J. A. Stephens, sons of the deceased, from Los Angeles, Calif. They arrived in Wichita Falls late Thursday. Survivors are Mrs. Dudley, the daughter, and the two sons. Mrs. Stephens had lived in Montague county 50 years prior to moving to Wichita Falls in 1919.

CHURCH CLUB HOLDS PICNIC

Burk Man Chief Speaker at Floral Heights Meet

About 60 members of the Men's club of the Floral Heights Methodist church attended the monthly meeting and picnic held in the Dan Boone park Thursday evening at 6:30 o'clock.

R. H. Henry of Burkburnett was the principal speaker on a program which followed the dinner. Mr. Henry spoke on "The Place of the Layman in His Church and in the Community." Referring to the regular worship and service activities of the church, the speaker declared that no member has the right to ask more of the minister than he himself is ready to give. One of the greatest contributions of modern Christian laity to society generally, Mr. Henry said, is through the membership of the various civic clubs.

"Whatever of high idealism and practical service to mankind is included in the programs of our numerous service clubs is imparted to their work by the Christian laymen included in their memberships," the speaker declared.

Spell Gives Talk

K. C. Spell gave a brief talk which contained much of autobiography, pointing the importance of each individual seriously studying his own habits with a view to self-improvement. "From my own experience," said Mr. Spell, "I sincerely believe that every man, regardless of his vocation, should read the Bible at least a half-hour every day. From the standpoint of business and education alone, it will prove an unequalled investment of his time. I believe thoroughly in the Bible; but even if I knew it were a myth, I should regard it as invaluable as a source of an education."

Walter Nelson Jr. gave a humorous address, and musical numbers were given by Honey Boy and Sassafras of the KGKO studios. Leon Deaton was in charge of the program.

Before the dinner, a score of men participated in a horseshoe tournament, while at baseball Arthur Salmon's Hill-Billies vanquished Frank B. Creighton's Alley-Rats, 14 to 9, it was reported.

Shower Cools Crowd

Vast quantities of food, cold drinks, and watermelon, prepared by Mr. Salmon, were dispensed in cafeteria style on long tables spread under the trees. Illumination was furnished by a portable electric service furnished by Whit Smith. Arrangements for the affair were in charge of Milton Gaines.

During the program of speeches and music, light showers which sprinkled the audience generously were received with obvious pleasure as an aftermath of two weeks of burning temperatures. Dr. Austin F. Leach, president, announced that the next meeting of the club will be held in September, and an invitation was extended to Mr. Henry to address the club again.

Embargo Bans Wheat Trains

Restriction Placed on Port Of Galveston

aged extensive fields of wheat more or less, and such grain, which grades as less than No. 1, is the first to be exported. Furthermore, Kansas has been given a reduction of 11½ cents in freight rates on wheat this year to assist in moving the crop, making more certain the early movement of heavy shipments toward the normal point of exportation—Galveston.

Vessels as Storage

"The only solution which I can see, and which seems feasible, is the immediate use of all available vessels for the relief of the elevator and freight-car congestion in and near Galveston. The shipping board through its secretary recently stated that the rush of wheat shipments had been anticipated; and that abundant vessels were ready for the movement. When the congestion became serious, a few days ago, the explanation given was that the wheat can not be taken out of Galveston because the foreign customers of export trade are not yet ready for their consignments, and that the grain therefore must remain in elevators and cars.

"It seems to me this is a golden opportunity for the government to show its ability to make good on a promise of much-needed service. The abundance of ships has been admitted. I see no reason why the accumulated wheat at Galveston can not be loaded at once upon these waiting ships, and held in the harbor if delivery can not be made at this time. The obligation to keep the port of Galveston clear exists, and that plan, it seems to me, would discharge the obligation, and make of immediate value to the wheat industry of the country the fleets of ships prepared for handling of the wheat crop. This is the plan followed regularly on the Great Lakes in the north.

Speedy Harvest Causes Jam

"The whole situation originates in the changed methods of harvesting. A quarter of a century ago, the farmer went into the field with his binder, and left the wheat in bundles. There followed the work of putting it into the shock. Days elapsed, some times weeks, before it was stacked. Sometimes it was two months after cutting before the engine and separator got around, and the farmer had 'threshing day,' which was an annual event of great significance. With the use of modern combines, wheat that stands uncut in the field in the morning is in the elevator before the afternoon is gone. The tremendous speeding up of harvesting and threshing has not been accompanied by a corresponding development of facilities for moving the crop. The entire yield of millions of bushels from a certain section descends precipitously upon the transportation systems within a few days. The situation which formerly took care of distribution automatically no longer exists. That is the origin of the present congestion and embargo at Galveston.

"The secretary of the Texas Grain Dealers' association will be urged tomorrow to call the executive committee into session for the purpose of bringing all possible pressure to bear immediately upon President Hoover and the shipping board in an effort to obtain an early solution of this serious problem."

WHEAT MARKET VERY NERVOUS

CHICAGO, July 18. (AP)—Wheat prices teetered nervously up and down the scale today, racing up to new seasonal records for the fifth successive day. Then, to vary the story, they gave way under the weight of huge profit taking sales and finished 2⅞ to 3¼ cents a bushel lower.

World crop conditions showed little change.

December wheat was sold at $1.51½ to ¾, Sept. at $1.45¾ to $1.46 and July futures at $1.41½.

At midsession the recurring tale of "fair and warmer" weather in the northwest, without a hint of relief in a drought afflicted region where relief now would come almost too late, spurred the market up to the highest levels of the year. Forty seven cents a bushel above the season's bottom mark at yesterday's close, wheat bounced up two cents higher after the early sinking spell today, the top was $1.57 for December wheat, $1.51¼ for Sept. and $1.46¼ for July.

Corn followed wheat closely. December futures crossing the dollar mark for the first time this year and then reacting to close at 97½ to ⅝ cents a bushel. July corn finished at $1.01 and Sept. at $1.03 to ⅝. The range was 1½ to 2¼ cents lower.

RITES TODAY FOR KELLEHER

Body of Veteran Oil Man To Go to New York

The body of Frederick M. Kelleher, 69, veteran Wichita Falls oil man who died in a local hospital about 9:30 o'clock Wednesday night, will be forwarded to Wellsville, N. Y., at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon by the Merkle Undertaking company, following funeral services here.

The funeral ceremony will be held from the Sacred Heart church at 9 o'clock Friday morning, with Father Patrick J. F. O'Beirne, pastor, officiating. The body will be held at the Merkle Undertaking company from 10 a. m. until 3 p. m. Friday.

Mr. Kelleher had spent 23 years in the oil business in Texas and Oklahoma and was known to his many friends as "Uncle Fred." He was connected with the Texas company during the whole time until two years ago when he became an independent operator.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mary Kelleher; one son, Harold M. Kelleher of Wichita Falls, and two grandchildren, John Cupler and Lois Mary Cupler, both of Cumberland, Md.

Taxpayer Writes City Manager

from one hose in one hour would have watered every lot in Riverside cemetery.

My wife and I worked hard on our lot at the cemetery this year, planting flowers and filling in, and had it looking nice at a cost of something in the neighborhood of $25. We went out yesterday evening to water. No water. The same condition this evening, and upon inquiry I was informed that you had issued orders to cut off the water at 2 p. m.

It occurs to me, Mr. Fairtrace, that since we have municipal swimming pools for the kids, and very few are without bathtubs if they cannot afford the public pools, that it would be showing more civic pride and respect for our loved ones to allow us the small amount of water that would be necessary to maintain the lots in our cemeteries in preference to giving it to pleasure and amusement. Not that I begrudge the kids their pleasure, nor the grownups their fun at the links, but in all fairness, tell me please why you put these pleasures above a sacred duty that we owe the ones that have gone beyond.

I possibly am biased in my opinion, and I am just merely asking you to put me straight. I stood in Riverside cemetery this afternoon and saw eight cars drive in, saw their owners get out hose to water their lots, and witnessed the disappointment on their faces when they found no water available. Yet, all afternoon water had been flowing out of a fire hose to the Wichita river in waste, while owners of lots in cemeteries were denied the vital water to maintain their lots.

If we must conserve water, let's cut out the waste from pleasure first. Then if any to spare is found devote it to pleasure. I like pleasure, but I do not see the logic of the above described condition. That is why I ask you to please explain why the cemetery is first to be considered in the conservation of our water supply.

Incidentally, we have never before been without water in our cemetery, and we have had just as hot weather in the summer. Is it to bring before the taxpayers the necessity of another bond issue?

This letter is merely written to set me straight. I possibly have the wrong view, but as a taxpayer for some years I feel that I am due an explanation or answer to the above questions.

E. LUCAS.
2007 Taylor street.

COP ENTERS HALL OF FAME

He Rescued Cat, and Scores Praise Him

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 18. (UP)—Police officers have saved human lives with less monetary profit and praise than that accorded Detective Harry Hirsch, who rescued a cat from a padlocked saloon here. Out of thousands of letters which Hirsch has received from cat fanciers, he has gleaned $28 in one dollar rewards.

The cat, which was left behind when officers padlocked the place and had become a first page newspaper character called "Volstead," suffered an imprisonment of more than a week before Hirsch defied federal injunctions and climbed through a transom to the wailing creature.

His name has been engraved on the scroll of Humane society heroes from Philadelphia to the Pacific.

TWO POLICIES ABOVE $500,000

Hamilton's $726,000, Perkins' $510,000, Head List

At least 15 Wichita Falls men are insured for $100,000 or more according to The Texas Index, just issued by W. A. Callaway, editor of the Southland Life Insurance company publications. The total insurance on their lives according to the Index is $3,950,180. Dallas leads the entire state with 68 names, Houston is second with 56, Fort Worth third with 23, and San Antonio fourth with 21.

The list shows two Wichita Falls men are insured for more than $500,000. They are: Joe J. Perkins with $510,000 and William B. Hamilton with $726,760.

"It was impossible to secure all of the names that have rightful place in this list of Texas men and women whose lives are insured for $100,000. The list, however, is growing larger year by year and the booklet is doing a wonderful work among those whose lives are inadequately insured and among those whose lives are without life insurance protection," says Callaway in the foreword.

The list shows that there are at least 266 Texans whose lives are insured for $62,899,390.00 as compared with 251 whose lives were insured for $58,367,953.00 last year.

The wichita list follows:

Wichita Woman's Suffering of One Full Year Ended

Tried Every Kind of Treatment She Could Hear of But Got No Relief Until She Took Orgatone

"Orgatone has really worked wonders in my case," said Mrs. Pauline Ross, who resides at the the Studio hotel, Wichita Falls, Texas, recently.

"For almost a year," continued Mrs. Ross, "I have suffered with indigestion and dyspepsia and during the past six months especially I have tried everything imaginable, with no results, until I got Orgatone. Rheumatism went to bothering me and I would have terrible headaches which I can tell you made me suffer misery. Finally my nerves seemed to give way and I have been unable to get sufficient sleep and rest.

"Although I had tried many remedies, nothing seemed to help me. By the high endorsements of local people right here in Wichita, I was induced to try Orgatone and now, after taking it a few weeks, I can truthfully say I feel better than I have in the past 12 months. My sleep is sound and restful and, oh, it is such relief to be able to eat what I want without suffering those terrible bilious spells afterward. I feel very grateful and am only too glad to tell others about the medicine that has done so much for me."

TAX PARLEY OPENED TODAY

Marrs Says Big Sums Due From Delinquents

be poured into the special road and bridge funds to meet 1931 payments, but he expressed the belief that it could be obtained without a 10-cent tax increase.

McHam Urges Economy

"We can shave on the other funds which now have a surplus, cut out the public building fund and get by with a much smaller increase if not without any increase at all."

The treasurer, interpreting figures prepared by Mr. Barnett for the consideration of the court, said that several big cuts in the apportionment of the interest and sinking funds during the past few years had brought these funds face to face with a prospective shortage within two years.

Judge Marrs held to his earlier plan for meeting the situation by the collection of delinquent taxes, in spite of an opposing view from the office of Guy C. Raley, county tax collector. Judge Marrs quoted from a state comptroller's report, bearing the signature of an examining clerk and dated in May, 1929, in asserting that around $1,800,000 in delinquent county taxes were due Wichita county since 1908.

"This statement says that $4,042,236.41 in state and county taxes have become delinquent since 1908," the judge declared. Of that amount $3,141,982.42 was delinquent to the county itself. The comptroller has estimated that 55 per cent of these taxes have been collected, leaving approximately $1,800,000 still due us.

"If we cut that estimate half in two, leaving $900,000 and collected only a percentage of that, our needs would be met. I am absolutely convinced that at least $200,000 can be added to the county's fund by clearing up these delinquencies for the last two years. Of every $100,000 collected, $30,000 would go into the funds where it is most needed."

Judge Marrs' statement came in answer to an announcement from the office of Guy C. Raley, county tax collector, in which Mr. Raley declared that only $101,508.61 in delinquent taxes are now on the rolls. Of that amount, the collector added, only about 75 per cent is collectible, much of the other property being worth less than the taxes assessed against it. The only addition hoped for is a possible $35,000 due in delinquent taxes on oil and gas leases, the collector added.

Small Roll, Says Raley

Mr. Raley said that he has reduced the delinquent tax roll to a little more than $100,000 from a $500,000 total at the time he took charge of the collector's office. He has announced the intention of asking the commissioners court to allow him to employ an additional man to spend all his time for a few months compiling material for tax suits. This material, he explained, would be supplied the county attorney's office and would result in a practical depletion of the delinquent roll.

"I would be proud to compare the delinquent roll in Wichita county to that of any other county in the state," the collector declared.

Teams from five park districts will be entered in the track meet sponsored by the city park department Saturday morning at Scotland park, it was announced Thursday by Mrs. Maude Bartholomew, head supervisor of playground activities, who is planning the events. The meet will start at 9 o'clock.

Elimination contests have been completed at all the parks except Scotland, where they will be held Friday morning. The other teams will be from Sixth street park, Bellevue park, Carrigan school ground and Northside community, each having three contestants. The events will be divided between the boys and the girls from the ages of 7 to 10 and from 10 to 13.

Boys in the first age group will have the following events: 50 yard dash, 100 yard dash, 50 yard relay, handball throw for distance, and broad jump. The park department will furnish transportation to and from the track meet. C. C. Bunnenberg, city park superintendent, and Mrs. Bartholomew will be in charge.

Prizes for the events are being arranged with local merchants, it was said, and the prizes will go to the park represented by the team instead of to individuals. Mrs. Bartholomew has promised a surprise for all the contestants at the termination of the meet.

ABILENE HOTEL CONTRACT LET

$400,000 Building to Be Erected

Special to The Record News.

ABILENE, Texas, July 18.—The general contract for the erection of the new 16-story hotel and theater building to be erected in this city by H. O. Wooten was awarded Thursday morning to E. V. McCright and company of Dallas and Oklahoma City.

Actual construction work on the building which is to cover ground space of 150 by 140 feet will be started within 10 days, it was said.

The contract calls for a fixed fee and a guarantee basis and it is understood that the general contract will amount to approximately $400,000.

Letting of the plumbing, heating, wiring and elevator contracts has been deferred, according to David S. Castle, architect of the building.

The new building will contain 156 guest rooms, a theater with a seating capacity of 1,600 people and numerous other modern hotel facilities. The third floor of the hotel will be occupied by the city club.

The agreement now in effect calls for a 16-story building, with the provision that the height can be increased to 18 stories at any time before the building is completed.

Excavation for the basement of the building has been underway for a month and that work will be at such stage as to allow the building operations to start within two weeks.

This building will be built with a structural steel frame, the first of that kind to be put up in West Texas, the architect says.

Concrete Poured Today On Arch for New Bridge

Pouring of the concrete for the north arch of the new bridge across Wichita river at Scott avenue will begin late this week, according to the estimates of J. M. Isbell, county engineer. The last work on the forms for the arch was being completed Thursday, the engineer explained, with prospects for an early beginning of the concrete work.

The contractors are a little ahead of their schedule, the engineer said, in spite of the delays from flood waters in the early spring. The bridge is expected to be completed some time in October. The builders Thursday said that the structure was already far enough advanced for the start of the work on the approaches which are to be built by the city.

RING THIEVES FOUND GUILTY

Two Negroes Given Terms In Penitentiary

After hearing confessions in which the defendants accused each other of planning the affair, juries in the 30th district court Thursday morning denied suspended sentences to Grover Johnson and Ben Jones, negroes, who pleaded guilty to charges growing out of the theft of two diamond rings from the Kirby Jewelry store here several weeks ago. Both men were sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the state penitentiary.

Johnson was indicted for snatching the stones from a tray on the counter of the store; Jones for receiving and concealing them. Both rings have been recovered. The negroes made no appeal from the verdict of the jury and were sentenced at once by Judge P. A. Martin, who took the pleas because Judge Allan Montgomery, 30th district judge, was in the midst of the trial of a civil suit.

ROTARY CLUB HEARS TALKS

Five Classification Speeches Feature Luncheon

Members of the Rotary club heard five classification talks at the weekly luncheon Thursday noon at the Kemp hotel, designed to portray the respective contributions of different professions to the satisfaction of human needs.

The field of medical practice was represented by Dr. Curtis Atkinson, with emphasis upon the importance of the doctor in connection with a man's entrance to the world. The manifold uses of electricity were outlined by Albert E. Kelly, of the Texas Electric Service company. Service rendered to man at the second terminus of his life was discussed by George Merkle. The function of the law profession in assisting the various other professions to operate with comparative smoothness was detailed by Luther Hoffman, attorney. Julian Montgomery supported the claims of engineering to a high place among the factors which make for civilization.

Following the debate on professions, Father Patrick O'Beirne gave a short talk on Rotary ethics and ideals, emphasizing the thought that the underlying principle of the Rotary code is one of self-sacrifice.

Dr. O. T. Kimbrough reviewed the conference of Rotary presidents and secretaries recently held in Sweetwater, which he and Tom B. Smock attended.

Howard C. Federer, manager of the local Dent theaters, was received as a new member of the club. Walter D. Cline presenting the code of ethics. Members were presented with complimentary tickets for swims in Westmoreland pool by Otto Lazenby, manager.

Buttermilk Quenches Fire

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP)—E. M. Masters, construction engineer of Lexington, was driving his motor car when it caught fire. Unable to quench it otherwise, Masters dumped a pint of buttermilk on the blaze. It went out peacefully.

Hearing on Opium Smuggling Plot Waits Few Days

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18. (UP)—Preliminary hearing of Ying Kao and Suen Foon, officials of the Chinese consulate here, and Mrs. Susie Kao on complaints charging conspiracy to smuggle $500,000 worth of opium, was continued until Monday when the trio appeared in federal court here today.

Lack of instructions from the justice and state departments at Washington, which have proceeded cautiously because of the international scope of the case, caused the continuance.

Mr. and Mrs. John A. Kendall of Wadesboro, N. C., 77 and 67 respectively, have spent less than $5 on sickness bills in their 50 years of married life.
