Ambassador: Seoul didn't honor word

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea — The U.S. ambassador accused the Seoul government Saturday of not honoring "firm agreements" about the homecoming of dissident politician Kim Dae-jung, which ended with police dragging Kim and his wife away from their U.S. escorts at the airport.

The South Korean government still had not responded to an earlier "stern note" from the U.S. Embassy demanding an explanation, but it said Kim provoked the Friday confrontation at Seoul's Kimpo International Airport.

Kim, 59, a longtime opposition leader who spent the past two years in self-imposed exile in the United States, remained confined to his western Seoul home. Although he could not leave, authorities insisted he was not under house arrest. They said he was being "protected" by security forces.

Ambassador Richard L. Walker said U.S. authorities "had firm agreements and scenarios worked out with the Korean government in advance" to ensure Kim's safe and smooth arrival with a group of American supporters, including two congressmen, Reps. Edward Feighan, D-Ohio, and Thomas Foglietta, D-Pa.

"We had an agreement from the Korean government that our embassy personnel would be allowed to go to the ramp to meet the two congressmen and other leaders of the entourage," Walker said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press.

"That agreement was not honored by the government," the ambassador said.

But government spokesman Choi Tae-soon told a Saturday news conference that Seoul had not agreed to allow Kim's U.S. backers to follow him through customs. "I understand there was no agreement for them to go out with Mr. Kim hand in hand, but the government would exert (itself) to facilitate the process of exit for these visitors and take them to Mr. Kim's house," Choi said.

In the encounter at Kimpo, police forcibly separated Kim and his wife, from their American escorts shortly after they got off the plane.

The incident drew fire from U.S. officials, two months before South Korean President Chun Doo-hwan is scheduled to meet President Reagan in Washington.

A former U.S. ambassador to El Salvador, Robert White, said he was shoved to the ground by police at the airport.

White, Feighan, and Raul Manglapus, former Philippine foreign minister and senator, conveyed their concern over the incident to Foreign Minister Lee Won-kyung on Saturday.

Manglapus said the two Americans expressed regret about "violent acts" directed against Kim and themselves. Mangalapus said Lee "became defensive" when asked for an apology and "did not admit the version that the congressman articulated."

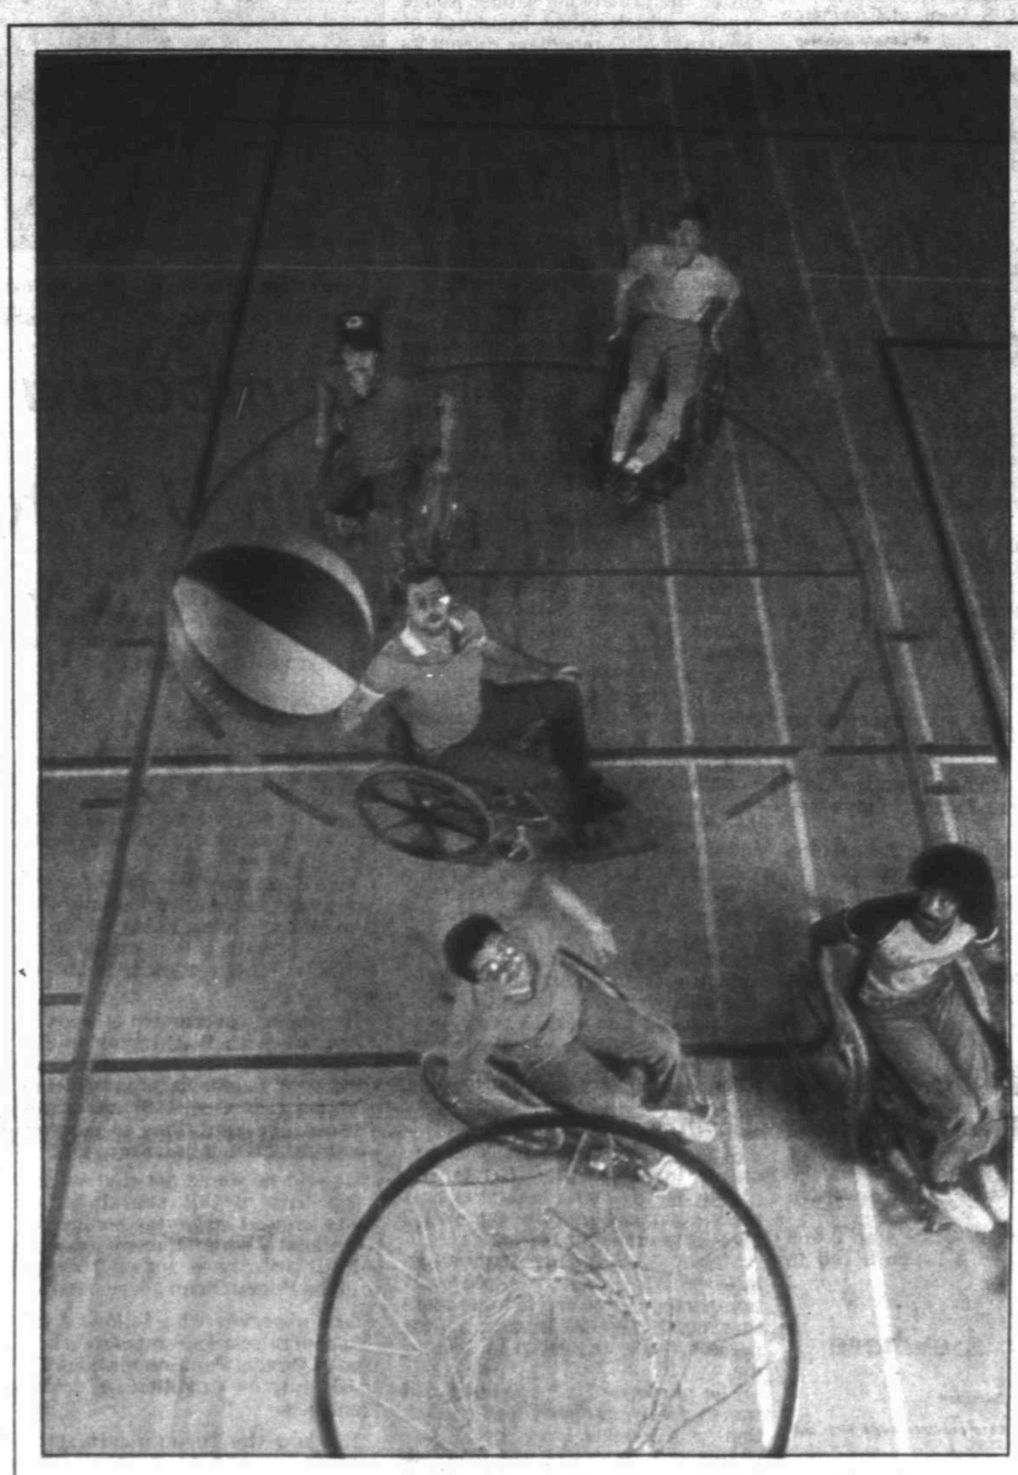

Controversy persisted over what happened in the terminal.

Government spokesman Choi said police "had been instructed not to use force" and charged that Kim slugged one policeman and swung his cane at another when officers asked him to accompany them into an elevator.

Kim, in a telephone interview with The AP, said he "pushed back" when officers tried to drive a wedge between him and his American friends, but said police were "the ones who used violence."

"How can I use force when I am so outnumbered?" Kim asked.

Choi acknowledged that "in the course of attempting to separate Mr. Kim and the others, police might have used force by pulling their hands." Kim and his wife had linked arms with their American supporters when they left the jetliner.

Basketball rolls into new arena

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Basketball in the Permian Basin hasn't been the same since the "Midessa Oilmen" rolled on to the court.

The six-man team may be only three weeks old, but it's making its presence known using wheelchairs to provide handicapped or disabled athletes an opportunity for sport.

Sponsored in part by CAHOOTS, an Odessa College student organization, the team consits of Midlanders and Odessans, thus the name "Midessa Oilmen," according to player-coach Wendell Draper.

Team members include Ricky Goodley, Troy Bowling and Steven Jeter, all of Midland; Draper and Joe Granado, both of Odessa; and Terry Weatherby of Andrews.

Practice sessions have been under way for about three weeks in the old Odessa College Gymnasium while the team prepares for its first tournament Feb. 23 and 24 in El Paso.

Other plans include competing in tournaments and special charity events this year and joining the West Texas Regional Division of Wheelchair Sports next season.

Draper said wheelchair basketball isn't exactly a "new sensation."

"The Dallas Mavericks, San Antonio Spurs and the Houston Rockets have their own teams who play in exhibition before the professional games. And some colleges have started competitive teams of their own," he noted. "If more colleges participate, the disabled might be able to get athletic scholarships to continue their education."

Any individual who, because of permanent severe leg disability or paralysis of the lower portion of the body will benefit from wheelchair basketball, is eligible, Draper said. And anyone who would be denied the opportunity to play basketball were it not for the wheelchair adaption also is eligible.

"The organization of the team provides an awareness of the ability which exists within a disability," Draper said. "I started playing in December of 1982 after I got hurt. I got hurt in October of 1982 and spent two months in the hospital in rehabilitation.

"It wasn't until three weeks ago that we decided to form an organized team. Basically, I think we're all here because we love and want to play basketball," he added.

Teammate Goodley said he pursued the sport "because I like to play basketball. I've been playing ever since I got hurt. It keeps you in shape."

Wheelchair basketball is played according to National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) rules with very few exceptions, according to Draper.

"The chair is considered a part of the player and general contact rules of regular basketball also apply to wheelchair basketball," he said. "Also, because of the varying causes and degrees of disability among participants, players must remain seated in the chair at all times."

Participants are categorized according to the varying degree of disability with each classification assigned a numerical value. The number of participants on the court may not exceed a total of 12 player points during the course of the game.

Draper said support in the form of donated uniforms, travel expenses and equipment is being sought.

"We're a nonprofit organization so we're looking for donations. We hope the celebrity game will bring in some support. Right now, the money to pay for travel and equipment comes out of our own pocket," he said.

Firm's failure to pay taxes will tap MISD reserve fund

By SUSAN LINDSAY
Business-Oil Writer

Midland school officials will be forced to dip into reserve funds until state funding resumes in March to pay employees and bills after a California-based tax service failed to pay almost $900,000 in school taxes.

Ticor Realty Tax Service's Dallas office still has not submitted $1.6 million in property taxes for its 33 Texas lenders, said Roland Wilkinson, chief appraiser for the county. He said the taxes were supposed to be paid by Dec. 31, 1984.

Of this amount, about $880,000 was owed to Midland Independent School District, he said.

Ron Bill, Ticor vice president and area manager, said the company did not pay the taxes by the deadline because of a malfunction in a new computer program. He said he expects the property taxes to be paid by the end of March.

But, MISD needs the funds now, said Don Furgeson, business manager for the school district.

24 feared dead as Polish ship sinks

Associated Press

BREMEN, West Germany — A Polish freighter rolled over and sank in the icy North Sea during a winter storm, and only one sailor is known to have survived from the crew of 25, a West German maritime agency said Saturday.

Gale-force winds and a blinding snowstorm forced rescuers to call off their hunt for 15 missing crew of the Busko Zdroj, which sank quickly Friday night.

Only one crew member was rescued, from a drifting lifeboat, and the bodies of nine others were found before searchers had to abandon their efforts after 14 hours because of poor visibility and stormy seas, according to the West German Society for Ships in Distress.

The rescued sailor, identified as Ryszard Ziemnicki, the ship's radio officer, was taken to a hospital on the West German island of Sylt, authorities said. There was no immediate word on his condition.

In Warsaw, the state-run Polish news agency PAP said 10 bodies were recovered and 14 sailors were still missing.

But officials at the Bremen agency which coordinated the search said 15 sailors were still unaccounted for and believed drowned.

"There is little hope for those missing," said an agency official who asked not to be identified. "In those waters and that storm (survivors) would have little chance," he told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.

He said rescuers believed they had spotted two other bodies early Saturday but were unable to recover them because of rough seas.

"The storm conditions make it very difficult," he said.

Officials at the Bremen-based agency said the 1,171-ton Busko Zdroj sank within 15 minutes when its cargo of steel shifted during the severe winter storm, causing the ship to roll over into the sea late Friday.

Two years ago, on Jan. 20, 1983, the Busko Zdroj's sister ship, the Kudowa Zdroj, went down off the coast of the Spanish Mediterranean island of Ibiza. Twenty sailors were drowned in that disaster.

Both ships were the same size and both apparently went down because cargo shifted to one side of the ship during rough seas.

The Bremen agency said Saturday that the Busko Zdroj was about 100 miles off the West German coast went it sent a distress signal at 9:39 p.m., reporting it was sinking rapidly in rough seas.

The rescue agency immediately dispatched a ship to the scene and summoned two helicopters from the West German Navy.

Naval airplanes joined the search at daybreak, along with six private ships that were traveling through the area, according to the agency.

Authorities said the search would be resumed when weather conditions permitted, but gave no estimate of how long the delay would be.

The water temperature in the search area was about 35 degrees and the air temperature stood at about 32 degrees throughout most of the search, officials said.

The Busko Zdroj, owned by the Polish Ocean Lines of Szczecin, Poland, was on the way to North Africa when it sank.

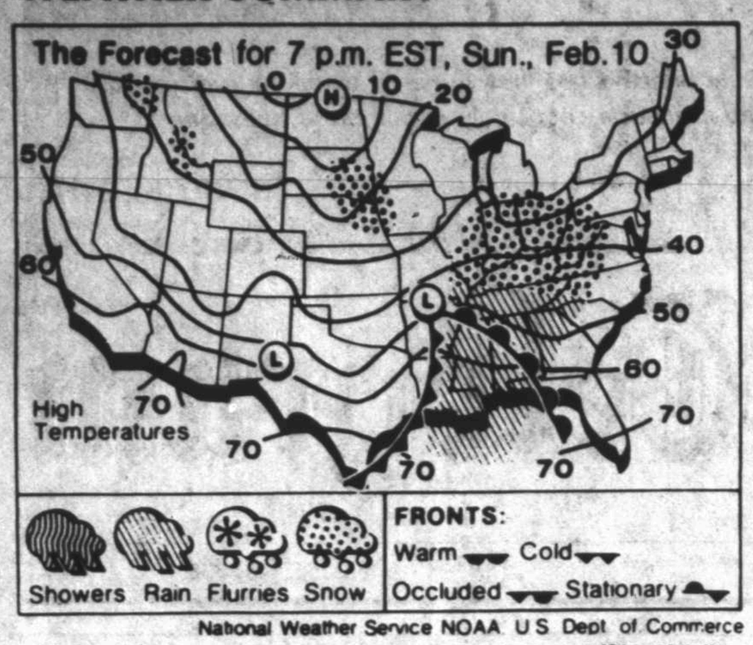

In Warsaw, PAP said the Ministry of Shipping set up a special commission to investigate the sinking.

The sinking led off Polish television's nightly news. A commentator termed it "the most tragic catastrophe in the history of Polish seafaring."

The news agency said rescue workers found three life-rafts and two small boats from the freighter, which left Oslo, Norway at 7 p.m. Friday with a full cargo, and was headed for Porto Tores in Sardinia. The ship was scheduled to stop at Ceuta, Spain, to take on fuel before steaming to Africa..

A Polish Ocean Lines spokesman told the news agency a company representative would go to identify the victims.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

A cool but pleasant and drafty Sunday is in the forecast today.

The weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport has forecast a high in the lower 60s and westerly-to-northwesterly winds at 15 to 25 mph today.

For tonight and Monday, the weatherman is calling for partly cloudy skies and colder temperatures. The low tonight is to be in the lower 20s, and the high Monday is to be in the mid-40s.

Saturday's peak temperature was 73 degrees, and the record high for a Feb. 9 is 88 degrees in 1932. The overnight low was 36 degrees, while the record low for a Feb. 10 is 13 degrees in 1933.

STATE

Colder temperatures with accompanying snow flurries were expected in West Texas through Sunday, with a chance of thunderstorms and rain elsewhere in the state.

Light showers dampened parts of South Texas just inland from the Gulf coast Saturday, with low cloudiness over coastal waters. Partly cloudy skies covered much of North and South Central Texas.

Southerly winds were strong and gusty at 15 to 30 mph in the eastern two-thirds of the state, and southwest to west across the western third.

Temperatures ranged from the 60s to low 70s across most sections of the state, with the upper 50s confined to North Central Texas. Highs Saturday ranged from 58 degrees at Sherman to 74 at Brownsville.

Other afternoon temperatures were 70 degrees at Lubbock and Wichita Falls, 65 at Waco and Amarillo and 68 at San Antonio and Corpus Christi.

NATION

Snow fell Saturday from southern Utah across parts of Colorado as well as the Dakotas and Minnesota, and across the Pacific Northwest.

A winter storm warning was posted for northeast and southwest Utah and Utah's southern mountains, and a travelers' advisory was posted for southeast Utah. Snow accumulations of 4 to 6 inches were possible in the southwestern and northeastern valleys, with 10 to 18 inches in the southern mountains.

Three to 6 inches of snow had fallen across northwest Utah, with 3 to 5 inches from west-central Utah to the Uinta Basin and between 8 and 15 inches over the southern mountains.

Thai military describes strategy

By CHUTHARAT THAWORNKIT
Associated Press Writer

PHNUM THMEI, Cambodia — Communist Khmer Rouge guerrillas have retaliated against Vietnam's attempt to pin them against the Thai border by driving deeper into Cambodia and attacking Hanoi's troops from the rear, Thai military officers and guerrilla leaders said Saturday.

Unlike fighters of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front, who are seeking sanctuary from Hanoi's dry season offensive along the Thai-Cambodian border, the Khmer Rouge have sliced past Vietnamese vanguards, staged ambushes and are trying to stall the Vietnamese until monsoon rains bog down their heavy weapons, said a senior Thai military officer who asked not to be identified.

Soldiers from communist Vietnam invaded Cambodia in late 1978 and ousted the pro-Peking Khmer Rouge regime, which killed hundreds of thousands of Cambodians during its four-year rule. Hanoi launched an offensive against Cambodian rebels last December.

Khmer Rouge leader Khieu Samphan, speaking at the Phnum Thmei enclave about 12 miles southeast of the key Thai border town of Aranyaprathet, said, "The Vietnamese are trying to prevent us from going inside, but they have failed. We still remain and are moving forward."

Samphan claimed the Khmer Rouge in recent days had raided the provincial capitals of Siem Reap and Battambang in northwestern Cambodia. He said the guerrillas, undaunted by the Vietnamese offensive, had staged their deepest penetrations of the Cambodian interior since the guerrilla war broke out six years ago.

An Associated Press reporter, who traveled to Khao Noi about nine miles south of Aranyaprathet, heard sporadic mortar shelling over a three-hour period Saturday as the Khmer Rouge struck Vietnamese positions in the Phnom Yai Som area a few miles away.

Thai officers said Khmer Rouge guerrillas repulsed a Vietnamese attack on Khmer strongholds in Phnom Malai on Friday, killing or wounding an estimated 100 Vietnamese. No independent confirmation of the reported attacks on Siem Reap and Battambang was available.

Samphan was in Phnum Thmei to welcome Prince Norodom Sihanouk, who crossed the Thai-Cambodian frontier into the war zone to the cheers of "Hail the Prince!" and applause from about 1,000 Cambodian villagers.

Sihanouk, who heads a three-party resistance coalition which includes the Khmer Rouge and the Khmer Front, vowed to fight until Cambodia was liberated from the Vietnamese.

Sihanouk declared, "We are united together, the patriots, the people. We are going to fight against the Vietnamese until the day we 100 percent liberate our nation."

Sihanouk, a former Cambodian head of state, said the three coalition partners now are fielding more than 80,000 fighters against a Vietnamese force of 200,000 in Cambodia.

The purpose of his two-hour visit was to receive ambassadors' credentials from Senegal, Bangladesh, Mauritania and North Korea to his coalition government of Democratic Kampuchea, which is recognized by the United Nations.

Phnum Thmei is one of the best protected areas in the Phnom Malai region, where Vietnamese forces over the past two weeks have sought to destroy a string of Khmer Rouge bases, weapons caches and civilian concentrations.

The senior Thai officer said Vietnamese ground forces have not been able to penetrate Khmer Rouge enclaves.

Cambodia ready to cooperate with U.S. to locate 91 missing

EDITOR'S NOTE: The writer, the last bureau chief for the Associated Press in Saigon, Vietnam, recently returned to the area for his first visit in 10 years.

By GEORGE ESPER
AP Special Correspondent

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia — The Phnom Penh government says there are no American prisoners being held in Cambodia.

"We don't have such hope for any Americans being alive," Deputy Foreign Minister Kong Korm said in an interview with this correspondent during a visit to Phnom Penh last week.

He said his government is ready to cooperate with Washington in the search for 91 Americans listed as missing in Cambodia. Phnom Penh is prepared to meet U.S. authorities without pre-conditions to pass on any information it has, Korm said.

He said he would not rule out the possibility of U.S. search teams being allowed inside the country to work jointly with Cambodian teams. The United States does not recognize the Phnom Penh government.

One observer who follows U.S.-Cambodian relations appeared skeptical of Phnom Penh's intentions. He spoke only on condition he not be identified.

He said the foreign minister's offer appeared to be a ploy by Phnom Penh to get the U.S. government to deal with it and thus give credence to the Vietnamese-installed regime of President Heng Samrin.

"Frankly," the observer said, "Phnom Penh authorities are attempting to force the United States to treat them as a government. Personally, I have my doubts about their sincerity."

The source said he was not aware of any contacts between the United States and Phnom Penh.

Kong Korm

"I suspect probably we would work through some sort of intermediary," he said.

The deputy foreign minister said details of the operations would have to be worked out at meetings between the two sides.

"After we have real contact," Korm said, "then we have real work. The actual program would take place after the meeting. The Kampuchean (Cambodian) side will examine the request. Surely the American side must listen to the Kampuchean side, too. How well we make the search depends on how well the meeting goes."

While Korm said there would be no pre-conditions, he appeared to contradict himself later.

He said that in order to encourage the population to help in the search for the missing, the United States must take no action to indicate that it opposes what he termed the "Kampuchean revival," meaning the Heng Samrin government.

The United States has not recognized a government in Cambodia since April 1975, when the U.S. Embassy was evacuated as Communist Khmer Rouge forces closed in on Phnom Penh.

Vietnam, concerned about security on its western flank, invaded Cambodia in December 1978 and ousted the Pol Pot regime, installing Heng Samrin. His government calls itself the People's Republic of Kampuchea.

The United States opposes the occupation of Cambodia by an estimated 160,000 Vietnamese troops who control most of the country, including all of its major cities.

A coalition of the Khmer Rouge and two non-communist groups including one led by former head of state Prince Norodom Sihanouk have been battling the Vietnamese forces. The coalition forces are based mainly along the Cambodian-Thai border in the northwestern part of the country.

Many of the missing Americans were captured or lost in eastern Cambodia, mostly in areas along the Vietnam border which were under Vietnamese control during the war with the United States that ended in 1973.

They are among 2,483 Americans listed as missing in action in Southeast Asia. All but one of them have been declared legally dead for family benefits.

Among the missing in Cambodia are several journalists including photographer Sean Flynn, son of the late actor Errol Flynn who was on assignment for Time magazine, and Welles Hangen, an NBC news correspondent.

According to reports reaching the U.S. Defense Department, Flynn and Hangen were captured by Vietnamese and Khmer Rouge forces and later shot to death.

Texas will join in quest for GM plant

Associated Press

DALLAS — General Motors Corp. has issued specific land, energy, water and transportation requirements necessary to secure its Saturn automotive plant, The Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story Saturday.

Industrial development representatives in Texas are beginning to receive copies of GM's detailed site selection criteria, the newspaper said.

Next Friday is the deadline for more than 150 Texas cities — as well as hundreds of others nationwide — to pitch their communities as the best location for the campus-like plant, which is expected to employ 6,000 people by 1989.

Harden H. Wiedemann, executive director of the Texas Economic Development Commission, said Friday that GM is moving quickly and will probably made a site decision by early summer, sooner than expected.

GM hopes the Saturn project will eliminate the current $2,000-per-car advantage that Japanese automakers currently enjoy over their American counterparts in the small-car field. GM says it plans to pump $5 billion into the project.

Suppliers that will locate near the plant could generate more than 20,000 other new jobs, according to Argonaut Real Estate, a GM subsidiary.

According to documents obtained by the News, GM wants to select an area that will provide job opportunities for Saturn's employee spouses. The company also wants a site of 600 to 1,000 acres with access to an interstate highway system and to main railroad lines.

All or none of the plant's employees may be hired locally, according to the GM specifications. Preference in hiring will be given to those with the required skill levels, followed by laid-off General Motors workers.

GM also is interested in vocational training and cooperative programs with universities, especially in computer science and engineering, according to the newspaper.

The automaker also has laid down specific requirements dealing with the availability of electricity, natural gas and water, the newspaper reported.

Several Texas city officials contacted Friday said they recently received applications and have been working to enter the national race for the plant.

"It's almost like running in a political campaign with who's going to put up the most money and make the most noise," said Jim Ebersole, director of industrial development for the Brownsville Chamber of Commerce.

Charles Dromgoole, executive director of the Sherman Chamber of Commerce, said his community, located 70 miles north of Dallas, "could definitely handle all the criteria requested. Keep in mind we have four years to get ready."

Bernard Weinstein, assistant director of the John Gray Institute in Beaumont, said the Beaumont-Port Arthur area is "a little Detroit."

"We have the skilled labor force, the steel plants, rubber, plastic and glass factories. All the industries they would need are right here in the Golden Triangle," Weinstein said. "We have the port, seven rail lines and we're on Interstate 10."

In Dallas, representatives from Dallas banks and utilities have scheduled meetings to prepare the city's entry, said Bob Cook, manager of economic analysis for the Dallas Chamber of Commerce.

"By looking over it, we fit," Cook said. "Some of the criteria will require more research, and that's what will be discussed Monday."

John Walsh, a loan executive and chairman of the steering committee of the Houston Economic Development Council, said Houston officials "feel comfortable in meeting the specifications," but added that the plant's demand for water might require "minor additions" to the city's water system.

TICOR

"The delays in the money funds are getting to us," he said, explaining the school district already is not receiving any funds for January and February as part of the school reform bill passed by the Texas Legislature last summer.

The bill identified Midland as one of several school districts above the statewide average per student and because of that designation, MISD will receive its share of state funding from September through December and from March through August, said Furgeson.

This year, MISD is operating with an estimated $2.6 million less during the first two months of 1985 than it did during the same period last year, he said.

"What that means is that we won't be getting one penny from the state until March and so we depend on tax revenues to meet our obligations, but now they will be late, too," he said.

Furgeson said school officials already had planned to use the school's $5 million in reserve funds to make up for the lack of state funding for the two-month period but are now forced to dip into the funds even more.

"We'll just have to tighten up," he said, by decreasing the amount of money put into interest-bearing accounts.

Furgeson estimated the school district will lose about $50,000 in interest income this year because of the loss of state funds for the two-month period and Ticor's delay in tax payments.

"This means we probably won't meet our estimate of revenue to be taken in by about $50,000," he said. "We won't know until the end of the year."

He said none of the district's programs will be deleted and none of its employees will be layed off because of the financial difficulties.

Is Kremlin facing another transition?

By ANDREW ROSENTHAL

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union marked the first anniversary Saturday of Yuri V. Andropov's death, with President Konstantin U. Chernenko at the center of rumors that the Kremlin may be facing its third transition in just over two years.

Andropov died on Feb. 9, 1984. Four days later, Chernenko was named party general secretary. He later became president, which carries the titular role of head of state.

In the 362 days since Chernenko took over, the Soviets have agreed to enter new arms talks with the United States, launched a new diplomatic offensive in the Middle East, and continued economic experiments started under Andropov.

But these efforts have been seen as the product of group leadership, rather than of the 73-year-old Chernenko himself.

And, as has been true almost constantly since the last days of Andropov's predecessor, Leonid I. Brezhnev, who died in November 1982, outside attention is focused as much on Kremlin politics as on Soviet policy.

With Chernenko out of sight for more than six weeks and reportedly ill, foreign diplomats and journalists are once again hunting for scraps of information about his health and examining potential successors.

Conflicting reports from official sources add to the confusion and speculation. But Kremlin watchers hope two impending events — a visit by the Greek prime minister and parliamentary elections — will provide more solid evidence about Chernenko's condition.

Meanwhile, the Soviets are keeping Chernenko's name in place as head of the party and state. They also are stressing the joint leadership that has been the hallmark of an administration which from the beginning was seen as one of transition and compromise.

Many Western analysts theorized when Chernenko was appointed that the old Kremlin guard didn't want a younger man who might develop the kind of personal power that characterized previous leaders, and supplant the older generation.

Reflecting this idea, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda marked the anniversary of Andropov's death with an article that praised his personal achievements but focused more on "the consistent and steady course" of the Soviet government and the concept of collective rule.

The news media have tried to give Chernenko the larger-than-life image traditionally associated with the party chief.

Newspaper articles and a movie glorified his service as a border guard, collections of his writings are published regularly, and Chernenko at first kept up a busy schedule to award medals, give speeches and greet foreign dignitaries.

But he has not created the "cult of personality" enjoyed by Brezhnev and his predecessors.

"That aura seems to elude Chernenko," said one diplomat, who asked not to be named. "Before his appointment, he was basically a faceless bureaucrat and that has not changed much."

Perhaps the major development in Chernenko's administration has been the planned resumption of arms control talks with the United States. But diplomats see this as a move by the Kremlin leadership in general.

Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, long the spokesman for foreign policy, seems to have taken on an important decision-making role, and younger Politburo members Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the reputed No. 2 man in the Kremlin, and Grigori V. Romanov also have become increasingly powerful.

Throughout the year, persistent doubts about Chernenko's health have added to the air of transition.

In late fall, Chernenko abruptly departed from his busy public schedule. He has not been seen by outsiders since a televised awards ceremony Dec. 27. Most analysts believe he has been seriously ill, despite the conflicting signals from Soviet officials.

Last week, Pravda editor Viktor G. Afanasyev said Chernenko was sick. French television then quoted a Soviet official visiting Paris as saying Chernenko had "an accident of health" on Jan. 14 that cost him his ability to speak.

But Foreign Ministry spokesman Vladimir Lomeiko has insisted Chernenko was on vacation, and just hours after the French television report, the official news media said Chernenko addressed a meeting of the ruling Politburo.

Some diplomats viewed that report skeptically.

"The Politburo story may have been to balance Afanasyev's statements," said an Arab diplomat.

Trial shows 'a piece' of how Poland operates

By MATTHEW C. VITA

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A Warsaw resident joked that the convictions of four secret police officers for the murder of a Roman Catholic priest will change her life in at least one way. She will be getting more sleep at night.

"I've spent so many long evenings awake at the dining room table, sipping tea and discussing the trial, what was said, what it means," the woman remarked. "That, at least, is over."

During six weeks that ended with the announcement of the verdicts Thursday, public attention in Poland was riveted on the northern city of Torun and the trial of the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko's murderers.

The trial, widely publicized in the state-run news media, offered unique insights about the inner workings of the huge internal security apparatus that is the Communist government's primary instrument of power.

In addition to the defendants' descriptions of how they killed the priest, the testimony revealed evidence of a general contempt for law in the secret police.

"The trial had the value that what people knew about privately became common knowledge," said Lech Walesa, leader of the outlawed Solidarity free trade union movement. "The trial...revealed the horrible truth about the work of those services as well as the mentality of those people."

The defendants told how in 1983 they vandalized Popieluszko's car as a form of harassment, how on the night of his abduction they stole license plates from a private car in case they were needed to disguise the identity of their own vehicle, and how after one failed attempt to kidnap Popieluszko they drank a bottle of vodka before driving home. Poland has strict drunk driving laws.

The revelations have left a lasting impression on the public, said Jan Jozef Lipski, a historian and veteran of the dissident movement. "The people remain conscious that the trial has shown a piece of how the authority operates," he said.

Authorities issued 10 trial passes to Western correspondents, but denied access to The Associated Press. Reporters in the courtroom provided The AP with their notes, and The AP protested its exclusion.

The impact of the murder and the convictions of four security agents is bound to affect Polish life and politics for some time.

It already has created new strains in relations between the government and Roman Catholic Church and led to a continuing effort by Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski to assert greater control over the state security apparatus.

The decision to publicly try secret police officers for murder was highly unusual in the Soviet bloc, where the security apparatus is normally beyond reproach. It carried several political risks for the Polish government, including angering its Eastern European allies over the public airing of police behavior.

One question that remains unanswered is why authorities went ahead with a public trial. But Western diplomats and Polish dissidents and official journalists advanced two reasons.

First, they said, Jaruzelski had to maintain some measure of legitimacy with the Polish people, who were outraged at the killing of a man who was both a popular dissident — an outspoken defender of Solidarity — and a priest in one of Europe's most predominantly Catholic countries.

More important, they said, Jaruzelski needed the trial to impress upon his enemies in the Interior Ministry and Communist Party that opposition to his policies would not be tolerated.

The sources spoke on condition they were not further identified.

Polish government officials close to Jaruzelski claimed the killing of Popieluszko was ordered by the general's hard-line opponents in an effort to undermine what they perceived as his overly lenient policies toward the church and dissident opposition.

The murder raised the question of "who ruled the country," Lipski said in an interview. "If there were to be no doubts about who rules in Poland, they had to carry out the trial."

Construction worker unearths WWII bomb

SHEFFIELD, England (AP) — Soldiers defused a 2,200-pound World War II bomb today that had been unearthed by construction workers in this north England steel city.

Butqthe Germans in the 1939-45 conflict, was still unstable and 300 evacuated families were ordered to remain in community hall shelters whe the Germans in the 1939-45 conflict, was still unstable and 300 evacuated families were ordered to remain in community hall shelters where they had spent the night on makeshift beds.

A workman driving a mechanical digger on the site near Sheffield's Bramhall Lane soccer stadium hit the 6-foot-long bomb Friday. He made several attempts to scrape up what he thought was a lump of metal before the foreman, an army veteran, realized it was a bomb, police said.

Soldiers called in from bases in Nottinghamshire, central England, and the southeast county of Kent, worked through the night, gingerly picking earth from around the bomb's metal casing.

Army bomb disposal experts removed the fuse from the 6-foot Herman-type bomb this afternoon, army Maj. Alistair Craib said.

Soccer fans stampede

PEKING (AP) — A rush by 20,000 Chinese soccer spectators to leave a stadium because of rain turned into a stampede in which seven people were trampled to death and more than 130 were injured, 34 seriously, the Workers Daily (Gongren Ribao) reported Saturday.

The newspaper said the incident occurred Thursday at the East Wind Athletic Stadium in the southwest city of Kunming after a match between the Yunnan provincial team and a visiting Hungarian squad. The match ended in a 3-3 tie.

Japanese seek poisoners

TOKYO (AP) — Police said Saturday they are stepping up efforts to catch candy-poisoning extortionists who have threatened to hit again on Valentine's Day.

More than 50,000 officers will patrol candy outlets nationwide this week, when Japanese girls traditionally buy sweets for their boyfriends.

A group calling itself "The Man with 21 Faces" sent a letter to the Fujiya Confectionery Co. in December, warning, "We're awaiting Valentine's Day." It also threatened to set fire to a company franchise store.

Firm to market 'bone'

KYOTO, Japan (AP) — A Japanese ceramics company plans to market a new type of artificial bone that it says is among the most flexible ever made, a company spokesman said Saturday.

Kyocera Corp., based in Kyoto, plans to market bones made of a new metal alloy.

Red Cross confirms famine victims threatened

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — An International Red Cross official confirmed today that about 200 famine victims in Ethiopia were taken at gunpoint from an emergency feeding center and said operations at the center were suspended as a result.

The Red Cross official, reached by telephone in the Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa, said the incident occurred Tuesday at Mekelle, capital of the troubled northern region of Tigre.

He said the Mekelle feeding program was suspended and that Ethiopian authorities were asked for an explanation.

Efforts to reach Ethiopian officials for comment on the report were unsuccessful. Spokesmen for the Relief and Rehabilitation Commission were not in their offices when contacted by telephone.

"The main thing that happened is that some 200 people have been taken away by armed elements."
— International Red Cross official

The incident comes at a time when Western governments donating food to help famine victims are trying to determine how voluntary Ethiopia's resettlement scheme is.

Head of state Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam has set a target of shifting 1.5 million people this year from drought-stricken regions of the Eastern African nation to more fertile areas in the south and southwest.

It was not clear whether the 200 people were moved to a resettlement site, said the Red Cross official, who declined to be identified because it might affect "sensitive" consultations on the incident.

"We did not follow them," he said. "The main thing that happened is that some 200 people have been taken away by armed elements and we had to stop the distribution of food." Red Cross regulations say the humanitarian agency cannot operate in the presence of guns.

He did not further identify those who took the drought victims away.

Ethiopian officials, while acknowledging force was used in earlier resettlement plans, deny any coercion is now employed.

The Red Cross official said the action appeared to be isolated and that food centers have not been affected in other parts of Tigre, and in Eritrea, Wollo, Gondar and Harrarghe regions.

The pro-Soviet government also denies that it is using resettlement to reduce the population base of secessionist guerrillas in Tigre and neighboring Eritrea.

The Mekelle incident occurred when Australia, Britain, Canada and Sweden reportedly are considering providing assistance to the controversial scheme.

The United States has said it views resettlement as a "development," not a "humanitarian," program. Under U.S. law, it can't give development aid to Ethiopia until some $30 million in compensation claims for nationalized property of American citizens and companies are settled.

Conservatives' high-risk gamble has paid Thatcher big dividends

By MAUREEN JOHNSON

LONDON (AP) — Virtually by accident, Britain's Conservative Party chose its first woman leader 10 years ago this month.

It seemed a high-risk gamble, but Margaret Thatcher has stamped her distinctive style and right-wing views on her party and nation more forcibly than any modern British leader.

Many thought the grocer's daughter would never survive, that she would be just an interim head until the defeated party rallied behind a more traditional Tory leader.

"She had nothing going for her," recalled Sir Fergus Montgomery, one of an initial handful of Conservative legislators who backed Mrs. Thatcher for the leadership when the party moved to replace Edward Heath, the former prime minister. Heath had led the Conservatives in 1974 to two successive election defeats by the Labor Party.

"She was an outsider," Montgomery said in an interview. "She didn't come from a landed or aristocratic family. And all the time she was fighting her sex — all those who felt that having a woman was wrong."

Ten years later, Mrs. Thatcher is 19 months into her second five-year term as prime minister, raring to run for a third — and her sex is one of the few things about Europe's first woman head of government that no longer provokes controversy.

Margaret Thatcher

Now the longest-serving Tory leader since Sir Winston Churchill's 15-year tenure ended in 1955, Mrs. Thatcher, 59, has swung the party away from her predecessors' attempts at consensus in postwar Britain.

Since she led the Conservatives back to power in May 1979 on a platform of halting economic and national malaise, Britain has, she maintains, "found self-respect at home and found a new respect and admiration abroad."

Critics, including some members of her own party, charge she has thrown millions out of work as the price of curbing inflation, that she has divided Britain, increased the nuclear threat through hawkish anti-Soviet policies and given the Conservatives a hard-faced image.

Admirers and opponents agree that, for better or for worse, the Conservative Party is not just led by Mrs. Thatcher, it now belongs to her.

Government policy is often described simply as "Thatcherism."

Despite rising unemployment, now at a record of 13.9 percent or 3.34 million people, Neil Kinnock's socialistic Laborites trail 5 points behind the Tories in poll ratings.

That reflects both continued disarray in the British left and also what many commentators see as probably Mrs. Thatcher's greatest asset — an ability to strike a chord among Britain's skilled working and middle classes.

Polls show majorities consider her bossy, dictatorial and right-wing. But she scores points for being perceived as tough, credible and honest.

Margaret Thatcher has also had luck. It helped her get elected Conservative leader just six months after she had told a reporter: "It will be years before a woman either leads the party or becomes prime minister. I don't see it happening in my lifetime."

She had held only one Cabinet post, as Heath's education secretary from 1970 until the Conservatives lost power in February 1974.

Despite imminent Israeli withdrawal Lebanon won't ask for U.N. troops

By O.C. DOELLING

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Despite mounting Western fears that violence will break out in south Lebanon when Israeli forces leave, pitting Christians against Moslems, the Lebanese government has not asked that U.N. peacekeeping troops move into vacated areas.

Lebanon's U.N. Ambassador, Rachid Fakhoury, is playing down the potential for a security breakdown as the deadline approaches for the first phase of the Israeli withdrawal. On Feb. 18 the Israeli army plans to have moved its defensive line 17 miles southward from present positions along the Awali River above Sidon.

That area includes a large portion of the Christian population of south Lebanon, which is populated mostly by Shiite Moslems.

Fakhoury, speaking to a reporter before consulting with the U.N. Security Council president on Friday, insisted that the Lebanese army will be able to contain the situation once the Israelis leave.

But Western delegates are skeptical and are trying to mobilize the Security Council to act — even if it only issues an appeal for restraint.

Western diplomats see Syria, which exerts a powerful influence over the Lebanese government, as the obstacle to an expanded U.N. peacekeeping role.

There is suspicion among Israeli diplomats that Syria would welcome a breakdown of law and order in south Lebanon as an excuse to expand its control westward from the Bekaa Valley toward the Mediterranean coast in the Sidon area.

U.N. headquarters has prepared contingency plans if last-minute help is asked. These are said to include the options of redeploying units of the 5,680-member U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon northward to the Sidon area, detaching units of UNIFIL to form part of a new international force, or dispatching only U.N. observers to the area.

But, council members concede, they cannot take effective action without a Lebanese request.

Fakhoury said Lebanon had been willing at recent Israeli-Lebanese troop withdrawal talks to consider a new UNIFIL role. But the talks broke down. Lebanon said it was because Israel refused to to supply a timetable for complete withdrawal of its forces. Israel said the talks were going nowhere and withdrawal is proceeding without an agreement from Lebanon.

Fakhoury also said Lebanon is reluctant to see the U.N. peacekeeping force shifted northward from its present position south of the Litani River. UNIFIL's original mandate, when it was created in 1978, was to help the Lebanese government regain authority over its southern frontier with Israel.

But the peackeepers were prevented from entering a buffer strip along the border that has remained in control of an Israeli-backed Lebanese militia force, the South Lebanese Army.

The chief of that militia, former Lebanese army Brig. Gen. Antoine Lahd, said Saturday he would pull his fighters out of Sidon a week before the Israelis leave, but would maintain a checkpoint.

A Statement To Owners Of SEARS BRAWNY BEDS

You may have seen recent news reports about the fatal accident of a Denver boy in December 1983 involving a Brawny Bed.

Here are some facts you should know:

- Three separate investigations—by Sears, the Consumer Product Safety Commission and the manufacturer—all determined that there is no defect in the bed and a recall is not warranted.
- The Sears Brawny Bed meets or exceeds all industry standards.
- There are over one million similarly designed beds in use today, of which Sears has sold about 100,000.

Despite these facts, some Brawny Bed owners have expressed concern about the safety of the bed.

To alleviate this concern, a modification kit has been developed as an additional safeguard. The kit consists of four metal tie-wires and screws to be securely fastened to the side rails of the beds.

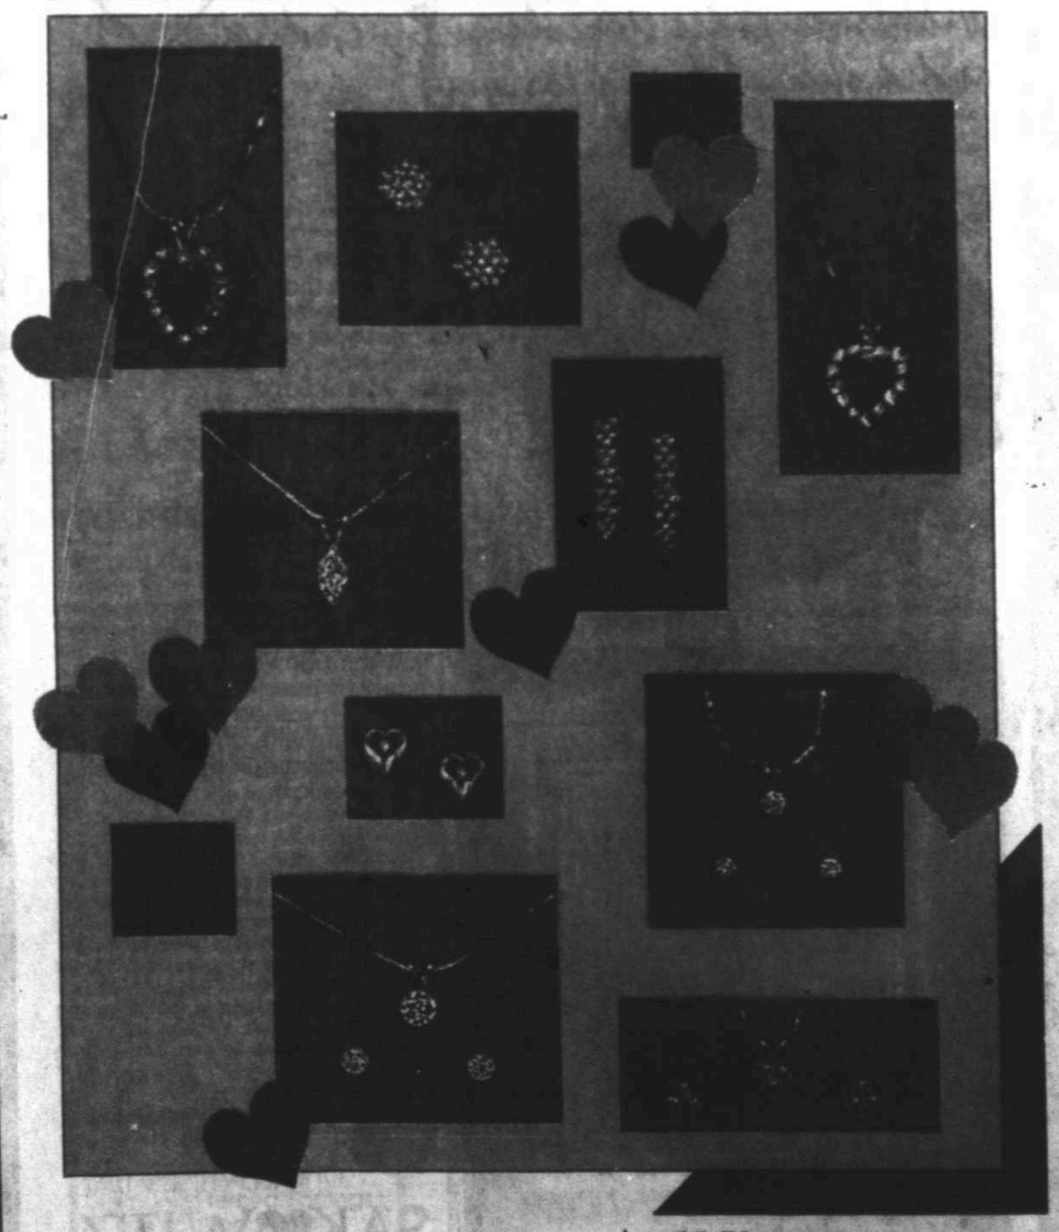

If your Brawny Bed does not already contain tie-wires that are securely fastened to the side rails, you can order the free modification kit through your nearest Sears store, or directly from the manufacturer by calling one of the following toll-free numbers:

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — In comparison with some of the cuts President Reagan has proposed in his new budget, the once-unthinkable idea of freezing Social Security benefits for a year looks positively appealing to a growing number of members of Congress.

And that same list of politically painful cuts — including elimination of revenue sharing, federal subsidies to mass transit and the Job Corps — makes the president's $30 billion defense spending increase an even more irresistible target for the deficit-cutters in Congress.

That was the irony of the $973.7 billion budget the president delivered to Congress last week for the 1986 fiscal year.

He called for another large installment in his defense buildup and a deficit-reduction program financed almost entirely with cuts in domestic programs. But the result will be a bipartisan assault in Congress on his Pentagon buildup and almost certainly a major effort to eliminate next year's Social Security cost-of-living increase.

The delivery of the president's budget marked the formal beginning of the budget-writing exercise that will occupy a large amount of Congress' time for the next several months. And many congressional leaders say most lawmakers have only recently begun to understand that freezing all the government's programs — a politically appealing solution — would still fail to meet the president's goal of $50 billion in deficit cuts.

But that $50 billion goal has been generally accepted by Republican leaders in the Senate, and the mark of House Budget Committee Chairman William H. Gray of Pennsylvania is only slightly lower, which means Congress will spend the next several months arguing about what cuts to make to meet the target.

Senate GOP leaders began their deficit-cutting effort even before the president's budget was formally submitted, hoping to get the tough votes out of the way early for the sake of the 22 Republicans who face re-election next year. Already, they have decided that many of the president's proposed domestic cuts are unacceptable.

As a result, the Republicans in the Senate Finance Committee have already decided the one-year freeze in Social Security benefits will be part of any deficit-reduction package that comes to the floor for a vote, and senior party leaders have begun to make the case publicly for what seemed only a few months ago to be unthinkable.

Senate Republican Leader Robert Dole of Kansas said he believes the recipients of Social Security "would be willing to delay a COLA (cost-of-living adjustment) for one year if it would help with deficits," and others say the change would be acceptable if it were perceived as part of a program of "shared sacrifice."

While there are Democrats who have said they would vote to freeze Social Security benefits, none of the party's leaders has yet stepped forward to advocate it. But House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. of Massachusetts and Gray have made it clear the subject is "on the table," even though other party leaders talk of helping Reagan "keep his promise" made during last year's campaign not to change the benefits.

The president's position is unclear, his campaign pledge aside. He told a news conference after his re-election he would "look" at whatever Congress sent him on Social Security, and made no mention of the program in his State of the Union speech.

There is far greater agreement in Congress about cutting the president's call for a $30 billion increase in defense spending.

'Chemical valley' residents face serious health risks, study says

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Residents of a West Virginia region known as "chemical valley" face serious health risks from chemicals, and current pollution laws are inadequate to protect them, a federal report said.

Methyl isocyanate, manufactured by Union Carbide Corp. in Institute, is "a major source of air pollutants" in that region, according to the report by the Environmental Protection Agency.

The chemical is the same one that killed more than 2,000 people in Bhopal, India, after it spewed from a Union Carbide plant Dec. 3.

The Indian accident prompted the U.S. officials to increase the monitoring of air quality in the Kanawha River valley, whose 220,000 residents would be affected by emissions from Insitute.

Chemicals produced at Union Carbide and other plants and those stored at toxic waste dumps in the area jeopardize the air and water quality of the valley.

"The presence of toxic substances in the environment pose actual and potential impacts on aquatic life in the Kanawha River," the report said. "Toxic substances in the air pose potential health risk at some locations under adverse meteorological conditions."

The EPA report obtained Friday by The Associated Press is a draft of a report that will be released officially in a few weeks.

The report already has come under fire by state officials, who said Friday that the EPA study is based partly on outdated information and that some of the problems discussed in it have been corrected.

"It doesn't reflect anything different from what we already know," said Carl Beard, the state Air Pollution Control Commission director.

The EPA study was based on data collected from 1977 to 1981. It notes substantial improvement in environmental conditions since a similar survey was taken in the area in 1977.

'God's Country' mourns deaths of priest, lay minister, custodian

ONALASKA, Wis. (AP) — In a town residents once proudly claimed God himself had smiled upon, the prayers will be continuing for some time.

But there will be no Masses on Sunday at St. Patrick's Catholic Church.

Before it can be used again for religious rites, the building must be reconsecrated — rededicated as a house of the Lord because a killer sullied it with gunshots that took three lives Thursday.

Bishop John Paul of the Catholic Diocese of La Crosse will reconsecrate the church Tuesday, sprinkling holy water where the Rev. John Rossiter and two others died.

He will bless the church with sacred oils and say prayers inside and out, both for the building and for the souls of the slain, church officials said Saturday.

It is the saddest weekend anyone can remember in this Mississippi River community of 10,000 people that once called itself "God's Country" in advertisements aimed at tourists.

Tuesday's reconsecration service will follow by one day the funerals of Rossiter, 64; lay minister Ferdinand L. Roth Sr., 55; and custodian William Hammes, 66.

Rossiter was shot from behind as he knelt praying at the altar and Roth died in the sanctuary. Then the killer went to the church basement and shot Hammes, police said.

Police say the killer objected to the priest's allowing sixth-grade girls to read Scripture during Mass. The priest had just hugged the children as they left the church to return to school.

Witnesses said the killer ran from the church shouting that he was Elijah, an Old Testament prophet who preached against false gods.

Bryan Stanley, 29, who moved to town only two days before from La Crosse, just south of here, will be charged Monday with three counts of first-degree murder, according to District Attorney Scott Horne.

The La Crosse Tribune, quoting court documents filed by police, reported that Stanley was taken for psychiatric observation two nights in a row last month after officers found him incoherent or confused. On the second night, police said, he identified himself to La Crosse officers as Elijah.

After his arrest, Stanley asked to call the pope, the documents said.

Stanley also had been hospitalized for psychiatric treatment June 21 in Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., after attacking a state trooper because he refused to say he believed in Christ, the newspaper reported.

In a letter delivered to the Tribune, the Stanley family expressed "our deepest sorrow to the families of the victims and to the community for the tragic loss we have all experienced."

As Onalaska residents mourned, some spoke about their anger.

GAO asked to probe how EPA gets chemical data

WASHINGTON (AP) — The General Accounting Office has been asked to investigate how the Environmental Protection Agency gets information about the chemical industry, following repeated after-the-fact changes in reports of toxic releases from the Union Carbide chemical plant in Institute, W.Va.

Reps. Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., and James J. Florio, D-N.J., said the discrepancies "raise serious questions about the reliability" of data EPA receives from the chemical industry. The doubts were especially troubling, the congressmen wrote Friday to GAO director Charles A. Bowsher, because "Union Carbide has a reputation of being one of the more safety-conscious" chemical companies.

Waxman and Florio are both chairmen of subcommittees of the House Energy and Commerce Committee. They began investigating the Institute plant after a Dec. 3 leak at a nearly identical plant in Bhopal, India, killed more than 2,000 people.

In three recent instances when congressional investigators questioned EPA reports of seemingly large releases of dangerous chemicals at the plant, they were told the company had made reporting errors and the releases were much smaller, the counsel to Waxman's subcommittee said Saturday.

In two cases, reports of spills of methyl isocyanate — the same chemical that caused the Bhopal disaster — were sharply downgraded. A spill originally reported at 840 pounds was revised to just five pounds and a spill of 12 pounds was cut to less than 12 ounces.

Company crews suspend efforts to re-enter mine

PRICE, Utah (AP) — Emery Mining Corp. crews Saturday suspended efforts to re-enter the Wilberg Mine after failing to reduce high levels of poisonous gas inside the smoldering tomb for 27 miners.

"They won't be trying to re-enter until Wednesday at the earliest," said Katharine Snyder, a spokeswoman for the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration.

Crews may resume the pumping of liquid carbon dioxide into the mine on Tuesday to cool the atmosphere and dilute carbon monoxide, she said.

Air samples taken Saturday from inside the mine, where a fire trapped 26 men and a woman below ground Dec. 19, showed that "carbon monoxide levels are still too high to allow them to breach the seal," said Emery Mining spokesman Bob Henrie.

Emery sealed the mine early last month in an effort to snuff the fire.

Crews worked through the night trying to "bring the atmosphere into compliance" by forcing liquid carbon dioxide into the Wilberg's shafts, Henrie said."It still hasn't brought the carbon monoxide down where it has to be."

A drop in air pressure from an approaching storm thwarted efforts to lower the carbon monoxide levels Friday.

Henrie said air still is seeping through fissures. When pressure outside the mine is high, air enters the mine; when outside air pressure is low the mine "exhales," he said.

Air Force jet crashes into cliffs

SEDONA, Ariz. (AP) — An Air Force A-10 jet fighter on a low-level training mission crashed into cliffs in a canyon Saturday, killing its pilot and forcing the closure of a highway, authorities said.

The single-seat, twin-engine plane crashed at 10:10 a.m. in Oak Creek Canyon, about five miles north of this central Arizona community, said Lousia Bailey, a spokeswoman for Luke Air Force base.

The plane crashed "in some cliffs about 200 feet west of U.S. Highway 89A," said Coconino County sheriff's Lt. Sam Whitted. He said it was raining, or raining with snow mixed in, when the crash occurred.

The narrow highway, with red mountains towering on either side, was closed because "numerous pieces of equipment responded to the crash and we felt it created a hazard and risk of accidents," said Whitted.

Woman moves out of political arena onto TV talk-show stage

EDITOR'S NOTE: When she was leading the fight against mandatory busing to integrate the Los Angeles schools, Roberta Weintraub was a frequent target of a newspaper cartoonist's barbs. Today she has her own TV talk show.

By LYNN ELBER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In the late 1970s, an outspoken, flame-haired suburban housewife jumped into the bitter fray between parents opposed to mandatory busing for integration and a liberal board of education.

Roberta Weintraub quickly made the transition from community activist to Los Angeles Unified School District board member, and helped to quash what was then the nation's most ambitious busing effort.

She is still on the board. But she says the issues have changed — and so has she. The San Fernando Valley doctor's wife has gone medium cool, tackling the challenge of television.

Her local talk show, "School Beat," began airing weekly on KHJ-TV in September 1983, featuring such diverse guests as Moral Majority leader Jerry Falwell, California Lt. Gov. Leo McCarthy, a homosexual teacher and members of a championship drill team and marching band.

Mrs. Weintraub's shift from newsmaker to news interviewer is perceptible in her appearance.

Gone is the mass of red curls, replaced by a slickly styled, blond-frosted coiffure. And her voluble and energetic manner is toned down for the airwaves.

"I HAD TO change my image," she says. "People don't listen to your message if you distract them with your appearance."

But it doesn't hurt to act as well as look the part, she says.

"Unless you can communicate on TV, you're dead in the water," Mrs. Weintraub says.

She has turned the tables on herself, from the days she appeared on TV shows such as "60 Minutes," "Donahue" and "Nightline" as champion of the anti-busing cause.

"I spent my life on television from the years 1978 to 1982," she says.

Now she allows her guests to take center stage — a tough task for a woman whose vivid personality and outspokenness made her a prime target during the busing controversy.

Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist Paul Conrad of the Los Angeles Times repeatedly tipped an acid pen in her direction. In one cartoon, the then-curly haired Mrs. Weintraub is depicted as a snooty French Poodle. "Speaking of bitches..." the caption reads.

Another Conrad effort shows her dressed as the queen of hearts towering over three woebegone black children. "Off with their heads," the caption says.

Mrs. Weintraub keeps framed copies of the cartoons although she remembers such attention as "unpleasant."

AS FOR THE passive role she plays on TV, she says, "You have to sublimate yourself to a certain extent to be host of a show. Your job is to give the people you invited an opportunity to present their issues, to not scare them, to make them feel comfortable, so that they come out their best.

"That doesn't mean you can't ask real tough questions, be probing...I've kept after people, a lot."

Mrs. Weintraub, 49, says it was seeing something she thought was wrong that prompted her to run for the school board.

"That's how most women get into politics. Women do not come up through the political ranks because they were active in the political party," says Mrs. Weintraub. A former city elementary school teacher, she managed her husband's medical practice after their marriage. They have two boys.

"My son, Richie, called up one day and said, 'Mom, they're transferring one of my teachers because they're not black,'" she recalls. "I ended up organizing the whole effort against the mandatory teacher transfer."

Mrs. Weintraub was elected to the board of education in 1979, the same year the state's voters approved Proposition 1, a measure banning court-ordered busing without proof of intentional discrimination.

IN 1980, an anti-busing majority took over the board and it moved to discontinue busing in Los Angeles the following year.

The issue, however, remains alive in the federal courts through a suit brought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. But Mrs. Weintraub says busing is dead whatever the legal outcome.

"The district is 19 percent white," she says. "Just two years from now, it will be 13 to 14 percent white — that's been a projecton for some time now. Even if we were to lose...there's no remedy. You wouldn't have enough whites to desegregate the schools."

The district, which now has 565,000 students and a $2.4 billion budget, was 40 percent white when mandatory busing began in the '70s, she says.

One of the causes she's championing is women's economic rights. She persuaded board members to approve a "comparable worth" job study for district employees and require that 50 percent of the district's administrative positions be occupied by women by 1991.

Although a Democrat turned Republican, she calls the GOP's stand on women's issues "horrible."

HER RE-ELECTION campaign for this April's municipal balloting is in gear, and "School Beat" will be off the air until it is over. For the future, however, she's weighing the attractions of politics and journalism.

Mrs. Weintraub says she is a staunch Republican — but a pragmatist as well.

"I'm a series of contradictions, as is anyone who has a bräin in her head. I'm extremely conservative on law and order and fiscal issues and extremely liberal on certain social issues, especially those relating to women.

"But I don't find any inconsistency. I'm comfortable with both stands. I try to look at things from a very practical standpoint and see what works. That was part of my stand on busing — I didn't think it would work, and it didn't."

Massachusetts officials celebrate women leaving welfare for jobs

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts officials, reveling in a 12-year low of welfare cases, celebrated Saturday as the 13,000th person to leave the rolls by landing a job through a state employment training program addressed her classmates.

"The program has given us not only the ability but also the confidence to go out with our resumes in hand and look for a job," said Cheryl Liberatore.

Miss Liberatore, 22, said she completed the 16-week clerical and office skills training program because "I couldn't afford not to."

The mother of an 18-month-old boy, Glenn, Miss Liberatore will begin work Monday at Massachusetts General Hospital as a senior secretary, earning what she said was three times the amount of money she was receiving through the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program. She disclosed no specific amounts.

She became the 13,000th person to receive a job after training in the state's Employment and Training Choices program. State officials credit the 16-month-old program with lowering the Massachusetts welfare caseload to a 12-year low of less than 83,000 families.

An average of 91,000 families had been on the state's welfare rolls for the fiscal year that ended June 30, 1983, said Barbara Burke-Tatum, associate commissioner of the state Department of Public Welfare and employment training program director.

The Massachusetts program, partly funded with federal money, is different from other state programs because it pays women transportation and day care costs while they attend classes, she said. It also allows them to choose their skills.

Ms. Burke-Tatum said she and several other department officials had been involved in employment training programs elsewhere with little results.

"It's exciting getting the chance to do it again but do it better — not just to put people in fast food jobs or jobs without training," she said.

She said the program saved Massachusetts taxpayers $21.7 million in welfare costs in 1984. Massachusetts Department of Public Welfare officials hope to place 50,000 welfare recipients into jobs in a five-year period for a net saving of $150 million.

Graduates of the program, which began Oct. 1, 1983, earn an annual average of $9,700 with more than 5,000 different companies in Massachusetts.

Robert Kennedy's voice fills court in last days of Westmoreland trial

By M.A. FARBER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The image and voice of Robert F. Kennedy, disillusioned in early 1968 by the course of the Vietnam War, filled the federal courtroom Friday that, for 17 weeks, has been the scene of the trial of Gen. William C. Westmoreland's libel suit against CBS.

Jurors and spectators watched and listened intently to a film clip of a February 1968 speech by the 42-year-old senator in which he said the Tet offensive had "finally shattered the mask of official illusion with which we have concealed our true circumstances, even from ourselves." It was, he said only four months before his death, "a time for truth."

The film was introduced in U.S. District Court in Manhattan by CBS to support the testimony of George Crile, the producer of the 1982 documentary that prompted Westmoreland's $120 million suit and one of the defendants in it.

The broadcast — "The Uncounted Enemy: A Vietnam Deception" — charged a "conspiracy" by the general's command in 1967 to show progress in the war by understating the size and nature of Communist forces. The effect of this "conscious effort," the documentary said, was to leave President Johnson and American troops "totally unprepared" for the Tet offensive that began on Jan. 30, 1968.

CRILE, WHO completed his second and final appearance on the stand Friday by testifying about his "state of mind" during the preparation of the documentary, said that Kennedy's speech was among the materials he reviewed for the program. He told David Boies, the principal lawyer for CBS, that he almost included portions of the speech in the broadcast.

Q. What was the significance, if any, to you of Mr. Kennedy's speech, Mr. Crile?

A. I think he raised a number of questions that have to be considered, and the main one was the question: Who were we fighting if the estimates that were given were to be believed?

Kennedy, Crile said, had attempted to add up the figures on enemy strength and losses after the Tet offensive, "and he came up with an irreconcilable result."

"There wasn't any enemy if you accepted those figures," he said. "And that was the exact time when General Westmoreland was asking for an additional 200,000 American troops to come out to Vietnam."

Including his first appearance as a "hostile witness" called by lawyers for Westmoreland, Crile testified for 11 days, the longest of any witness in the trial before Judge Pierre N. Leval. In effect, Crile was cross-examined during his direct testimony as a "hostile witness."

WESTMORELAND, who commanded U.S. forces in Vietnam from January 1964 to June 1968, was on the stand for nine days. The 70-year-old plaintiff contends that CBS defamed him in the program by saying he deliberately misled Johnson and the Joint Chiefs of Staff about enemy strength in the months before the Tet offensive.

Friday, in one of the brief interim summations allowed by Judge Leval, Boies challenged Dan M. Burt, Westmoreland's chief lawyer, to question Crile about "those parts of the broadcast that are critical of General Westmoreland and ask Mr. Crile whether he believes they are true.

"One of the things you have not heard," Boies told the jury, "is a specification of whatever the plaintiff believes is false."

After a conference with the lawyers, initiated by Burt, Judge Leval told the jury Boies's remarks were "certainly appropriate."

"On the other hand," the judge said, "Mr. Burt is entitled to conduct his case as he sees fit."

BURT RESPONDED with his own interim summation.

"I spent a lot of time asking Mr. Crile why he put in the broadcast what he put in," Burt said. "We've all been here a long time, and we're not fighting over nothin'."

Burt pointed to his client a few feet away. "We've got a general over there who spent his life in the military," he said. "Take that broadcast, and you'll have it with you, in context. It said that General Westmoreland lied to his superiors and caused a lot of damage to a lot of people."

Burt's only question on cross-examination Friday was whether Crile had told CBS executives after the broadcast that the Tet offensive was a "terrific military victory for the United States." The lawyer showed Crile notes taken by one of those executives during an internal CBS investigation of the documentary in mid-1982.

Crile ackowledged that he made the remark, but he recalled that "that was only a small portion" of what he had said then.

Feds hope bank's big fine will cut down on violations

BOSTON (AP) — Federal officials hope a $500,000 fine on the Bank of Boston will impress other banks that are sometimes lax about reporting large currency transactions, a government lawyer says.

"Let's just say it's a serious problem," said Patrick Walsh, special attorney for the U.S. Justice Department, declining to speculate about the number of banks that violate currency-reporting laws.

Under Internal Revenue Service and U.S. Customs regulations, financial institutions are required to report transactions involving more than $10,000. The regulations are aimed at preventing tax evasion and money laundering by organized crime figures.

The federal government's main weapon against currency-reporting violations is a 3-year-old team known as the Financial Investigative Task Force.

Its legwork last week led to a $500,000 fine against the Bank of Boston for failing to report the transfer of $1.2 billion through Swiss banks. The bank pleaded guilty Thursday.

Ship on its way off beach

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A freighter beached behind a mansion was dragged another 10 feet out to sea Saturday, giving millionaire Mollie Wilmot her first clear view of the ocean since Thanksgiving.

"I'm not angry at it anymore" Mrs. Wilmot said, adding it was "fabulous" that the Mercedes I was finally on its way out. "It's the first time I've been able to see the sea."

Saturday's movement of the 500-ton Venezuelan freighter, which was driven into Mrs. Wilmot's backyard during a Thanksgiving storm, left it 190 feet from her crumpled sea wall. The ship has been dragged bit by bit, with workers using a tug boat and winches that are welded to the ship's deck and pull on offshore anchors.

Friday night, workers aided by high tide and strong easterly wind made the most progress of the week, moving the ship's bow 110 feet.

Depression murals need aid

NORWALK, Conn. (AP) — They were painted in hard times to give work to jobless artists, and now Norwalk's 25 Depression-era murals need a little help. The city — with the nation's largest collection of Works Progress Administration murals still on their original walls — is asking residents to donate to a restoration program.

Spokeswoman Michelle Orris said Friday that a $263,000 restoration project is planned.

Eighteen murals are on the walls of the former Norwalk High School. Most were painted by Alex J. Rummler.

Birds hit drivers 'beak on'

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (AP) — Hundreds of birds have been eating fermented berries and flying beak-on into cars on U.S. Highway 101, officials said.

"It's been a field day for cats," said Karen Fraad of the Santa Clara County Humane Society.

Although no human injuries have been reported, the birds, mostly robins, have been dying by the hundreds. At least one multicar accident has been reported in a boozed-bird incident.

Ms. Fraad said the birds become drunk after eating the small red berries of the pyrocantha plant on the east side of the freeway.

Reagan's policies alter political debate

By HEDRICK SMITH

An Analysis

WASHINGTON — President Reagan paused a few minutes in the chambers of the Speaker of the House last Wednesday night before making his State of the Union Address. Typically, he passed the time not in solitary reflection but in swapping jokes and stories with congressional leaders, downing a glass of Perrier to wet his throat. Others found him in an easy, genial mood. That infectious buoyancy soon gave a lift to his performance before the television cameras, and bolstered his confident promise of "a second American Revolution."

In a classic bit of political theater, the president laid claim to having changed the nation's assumptions about government — "forever I hope."

Indeed, despite the Republican squabbling over just how much to cut from the Pentagon budget, the underlying reality is that Reagan politics have transformed the political debate and the nation's agenda. Mainstream Democrats are talking the president's game.

Virtually no one proposes new programs or expanding government. Democrats like Sen. Bill Bradley of New Jersey and Rep. Thomas S. Foley of Washington state, who is the House whip, suggest Reagan is actually less bent on cutting deficits than on shrinking the size of government and is using the huge deficits as leverage to force Democrats into retreat.

THE MOST stunning evidence of success and the most startling shift came last week from House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., a perennial defender of federal programs since the New Deal.

Although he sniped at the president for not leveling with the public on deficits, the Speaker agreed "that there are many areas where the federal government can save money without hurting the needy."

In private, he groused about mayors and governors who lobby for continued federal aid while cutting their local budgets and taxes. He said he was willing to slash billions from revenue sharing and grants to local governments for community development and urban projects. He has told fellow Democrats they must shed the image of being "knee-jerk defenders of spending" and "weak on defense."

What's more, Democrats seem to be learning from Reagan the political cost of being too identified with Washington, and they are out to change that. "The notion that we're the Washington party is killing us," said Christopher Matthews, the speaker's spokesman. "We're portrayed somehow as the government party even though we haven't had the White House for most of the past 20 years."

To cast themselves more visibly as a party of the people, the Democratic-led House Budget Committee will travel to six cities for public hearings. Likewise, the Democrats used their 30-minute televised response to the State of the Union Address to show themselves listening to disgruntled voters and promising to make changes.

ON FOREIGN policy, Reagan's message had less immediate impact in moving Congress to revive aid to the Nicaraguan rebels or to keep alive the MX missile. But O'Neill is talking about making sure American arms negotiators bargain from strength. The Reagan vision of future security based on strategic defense has begun to alter the terms of the nuclear debate. Former Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger last week dismissed the notion of an impenetrable "astrodome" defense for American cities as impossible to achieve. Nonetheless, the Reagan vision has revived an idea shelved a decade ago: a defense for American missile fields to blunt the threat of a Soviet first strike. That may persuade many Democrats as well as Republicans to finance the research the president wants.

For Republicans, too, the State of the Union Address was a telltale moment. For the optimistic mood Reagan conveyed, the bullish themes he set out, the policy emphasis he chose foreshadowed much about the Reagan presidency in its second term. Reagan finished his election campaign last year without a clear agenda, and he has been caught ever since in an internal struggle over political priorities, and more broadly, over the soul of the Republican Party.

Traditional, pragmatic Republicans like Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, the new Senate majority leader, and David A. Stockman, the president's budget director, have urged Reagan to concentrate first and foremost on the austerity economics of heavy budget-cutting, and to defer other initiatives.

BUT THE Young Turk group, led by Reps. Jack Kemp of New York and Newt Gingrich of Georgia, have warned that such a "bad news" strategy clashed with the "good news" campaign that won Reagan a landslide. As fervent supply-side ideologues, they proclaim growth as the best cure for deficits and populist tax revision as the best issue for building a long-term Republican majority.

The president chose sides in his State of the Union Address. His budget message on Monday, with its call for $47.5 billion in cuts in projected spending, echoed the pragmatists. But on Wednesday, his glowing vision of an America "poised for greatness" and his emphasis on change of the income tax system came down solidly on the side of New Right growth-economics. Glossing over pain in the farm sector, Reagan celebrated "the American miracle" of economic recovery.

MORE fundamentally, the president cast himself as a futurist. He limned the dazzling dream of a new high-tech revolution powered by super-computers, lasers and the pure efficiency of industry operating in the zero gravity of manned space stations.

His most expansive promise was "a second American Revolution of hope and opportunity; a revolution carrying us to new heights of progress by pushing back frontiers of knowledge and space."

Alien detention center may find home in Eden

EDEN (AP) — The idea of a detention center for illegal aliens — already nixed by residents in nearby Brady — is becoming a popular proposal is this tiny West Texas community, officials say.

Eden, which is 45 miles southeast of San Angelo, was approached as a location for the facility after the idea ran into a storm of controversy in Brady, 32 miles to the east.

The proposed facility is a minimum security unit for illegal aliens that will operate under a contract with the federal government.

Plans call for a $450,000, 15,000-square-foot building constructed on 5 acres of land. The facility would house a maximum of 200 inmates and would employ about 20 to 25 local residents.

"It would have helped the community a lot, but they didn't want it (in Brady)," Roy Burns, the facility's contractor, said. "But it's a possibility we can build it in Eden.

"We presented the facts to the Eden officials, they studied them and it looks like things got started on the right foot," he said.

Concho County Commissioners have scheduled a meeting for Monday to discuss the possibility of entering into a contract with Burns and his partner, Glenn Weatherman. The Eden City Council will consider the idea on Tuesday.

"I believe all of us were basically skeptical until we met with the men and started asking questions," Eden Mayor Jim Schumann said.

"After the meeting, I genuinely think all of us in attendance believed it was a good opportunity for Eden and Concho County," Schumann added.

Burns said trouble started brewing at Brady when he presented the proposal to members of the town's city council. Negative reports spread immediately, he said.

"One rumor started that it would be a hard-core felony prison," Burns said. "One story led to a bigger story, and it got all out of proportion."

The final blow to the center was dealt on Jan. 22 when more than 75 residents attended a council meeting and voiced opposition to the site. A petition with more than 750 signatures was also presented at the meeting.

FDIC 'experiment' makes recovery difficult

SEMINOLE (AP) — Almost a year ago, depositors of the failed Seminole State National Bank lost nearly $1 million and the president of the replacement bank says an FDIC "experiment" has made recovery difficult.

The jolt to this West Texas farming community was sharper than expected, Richard Watts, president of Seminole National Bank, said.

Closure of the bank last March had created "a public relations nightmare" for the bank's new operators, Watts said, because the facility was the first in a series of FDIC "experiments" concerning insured bank accounts.

Not all of the Seminole bank's depositors received full compensation, Watts said.

The FDIC reimbursed account holders with more than $100,000 at only 55 percent of their holdings above that level, resulting in losses of about $1 million, he said.

By law, the FDIC is obligated to reimburse depositors of a failed bank only up to the $100,000 limit, he said.

But Watts said depositors at other failed West Texas banks — including First National Bank of Midland — whose accounts exceeded the insured $100,000 limit were reimbursed in total.

"If the FDIC recovers enough money (from the sale of the old bank's assets), they would start to recoup the other 45 percent or a portion thereof," Watts said.

However, none of the "broad spectrum" of 40 to 50 account holders who lost money in the Seminole bank failure have recouped any funds yet, he said. Those depositors included corporations, retired people and businessmen, according to Watts.

Watts said the experiment "created a terrible resentment toward the new bank," and he and other officers had difficulty explaining why bank failures were handled differently.

Alan Whitney, FDIC corporate communications officer, said his agency's action also affected 11 other failed banks around the country, including Security National Bank of Lubbock and the First National Bank of Snyder.

Whitney said FDIC officials had noted an "erosion" in the financial "discipline" among large depositors. The FDIC's action was designed to send a message to large depositors "to be more selective in choosing banks," he said.

"Banks with the most problems are often the ones with the highest interest rates," Whitney said.

Murchison will be allowed to reduce his debt load

DALLAS (AP) — Millionaire Clint Murchison Jr., who owes about $175 million to some 30 creditors, will be allowed to reduce his debt load by $19 million as a result of a decision reached in federal bankruptcy court, his attorney says.

Friday's court action clears the way for Murchison to sell three Texas banks, according to his attorney, Philip Palmer. Proceeds from the sale will be used to repay a loan from Houston-based Allied Bank of Texas.

The banks include First National Bank of Weatherford, Citizens State Bank of Ganado and Irving National Bank. The three banks are being purchased by separate groups.

Palmer said current plans call for Murchison to sidestep an involuntary bankrutpcy action by voluntarily filing for protection under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

The creditors who filed the involuntary petition under Chapter 7 of the act agreed to the bank sale during an emergency hearing in the chambers of U.S. Bankruptcy Court Judge John C. Ford, Palmer said.

Earlier, Palmer had speculated that Murchison's attempts to sell the three banks prompted Thursday's bankruptcy filing by the creditors.

Ex-mayor joins conservative crusade to take over CBS

FORT WORTH (AP) — Former Fort Worth Mayor Clif Overcash says he bought 1,000 shares of stock in CBS Inc. and is joining Sen. Jesse Helms' conservative crusade to take over the network.

"Of the networks, CBS is easily the most anti-Reagan, which is the same as being anti-conservative," Overcash said Friday.

Helms, R-N.C., has formed a group called "Fairness in Media" to buy CBS stock. He says that he wants to eliminate the network's "liberal" news reporting and make sure that nightly news anchorman "Dan Rather would have a new boss."

If total control of CBS proves impossible, Helms has said the group will settle for appointment of two or three prominent conservatives to the CBS board of directors.

Overcash said that instead of firing Rather, he would team him with a conservative "to give the conservative side of the story."

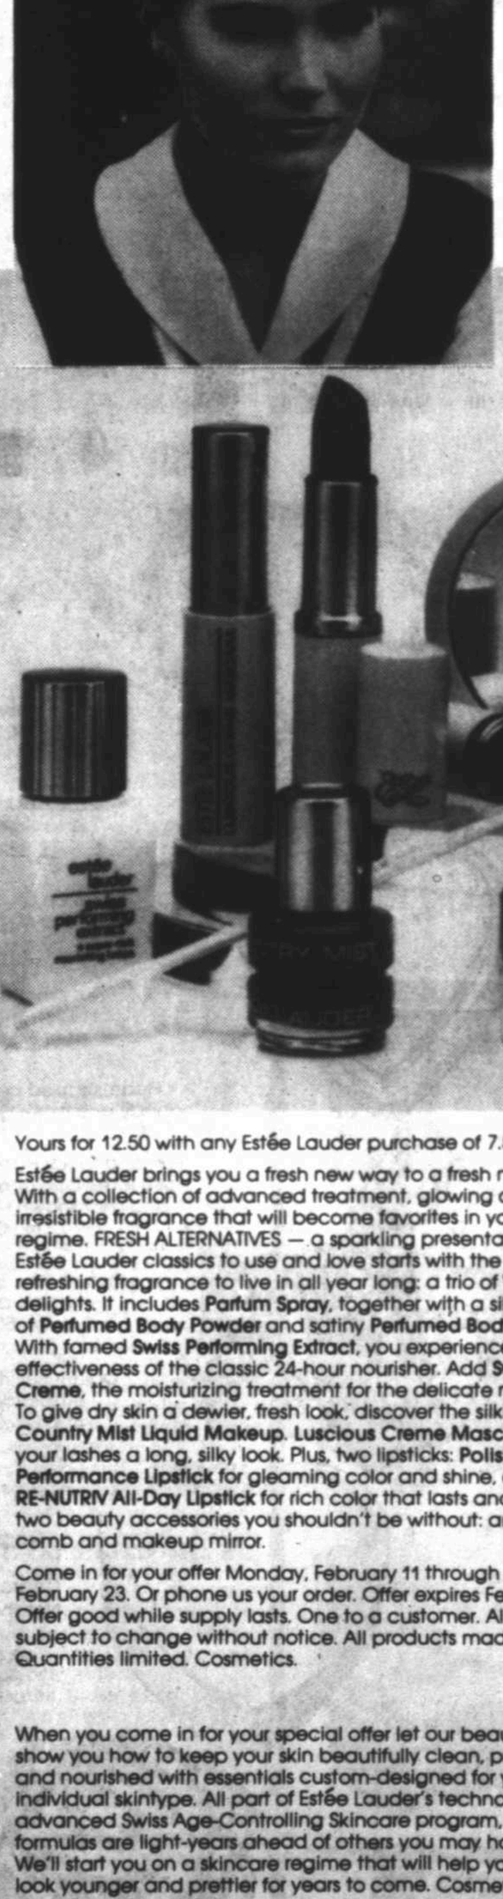

His nominee for the co-anchor position would be Patrick Buchanan, the columnist and former speechwriter for President Richard Nixon. Last week, Buchanan took a communications job in the Reagan administration.

Possibility of nuclear waste dump changes life in Deaf Smith County

By JUDY GIANNETTINO

HEREFORD (AP) — In 13 years, shortly before the turn of the century, this small high plains Panhandle city will mark its centennial.

Hereford residents, however, aren't sure they'll be celebrating the advent of 1998 — it's the year the federal government is to have the nation's first high-level radioactive waste repository operating and Deaf Smith County has been chosen as a possible home for the dump.

"We know that if it happens, it's a long way off. But it's still there, the possibility hanging over our heads. That's why we know the next few years will be a battle," said farmer and rancher Tonya Kleuskens.

Mrs. Kleuskens serves as president of a 200-member dump opposition organization, People Opposed to Wasted Energy Repositories.

POWER already has mounted an intensive protest to the dump, which if put in Texas would be within a nine-square-mile area about 16 miles north of Hereford.

The Deaf Smith County location was selected in December by the Department of Energy as one of three "preferred sites" for the controversial dump. The other locations are in Washington and Nevada.

Although a final decision on where to place the repository is at least five years away, exploratory construction work could begin in Deaf Smith County within the next two years if the DOE's preferred sites are approved by President Reagan.

SUCH A decision is expected later this year after DOE hearings on the three proposed sites are held.

Despite the lengthy process the DOE is mandated to follow in choosing a dump site, the mere suggestion that it could wind up in Deaf Smith County has most residents concerned.

And the government's proposal already has altered life in Hereford, residents say.

"It hasn't become a controversy. It hasn't pitted friend against friend. But, it is the topic of discussion," Mrs. Kleuskens said.

Mayor Wes Fisher conceded that the naming of Deaf Smith County as a preferred dump site has caused a "certain amount of division" in Hereford, a farming and ranching community of 16,000 about 47 miles southwest of Amarillo.

When the DOE first mentioned that the area was being considered as a site for the feared repository, Deaf Smith County officials passed a resolution in opposition.

The city, however, has remained neutral, Fisher said.

"The jury's still out as far as the dangers are concerned," he said. "We're concerned about the community but, I think the only thing we can do is remain neutral."

FISHER AND other officials agreed that the majority of Deaf Smith County residents appear to oppose the dump.

But, they said, some people are proponents though they probably will not talk about it.

"This is an agriculture community," said county Judge Glen Nelson. "We depend on agriculture for our subsistence. If the agriculture people are opposed, the rest of the people are likely to go along with that.

"And, if they don't, they're not about to talk about it — why create problems?"

But for the opponents, stirring up trouble for the DOE is the aim.

Mrs. Kleuskens' organization supports a lawsuit filed by Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox against the DOE.

The complaint questions "how Texas got in the list (of potential locations) in the first place," said Steve Frishman, an aide to Gov. Mark White.

Mrs. Kleuskens said several other questions also need to be answered by the government.

The principal fears of Deaf Smith County residents are the effect the dump would have on the local water supply and on the agriculture production of the area.

AND THE issues must be resolved not only for Texas, but also for the rest of the country, Nelson said.

Deaf Smith County has led Texas in agricultural production for 18 of the past 21 years. Annual revenues total about $248 million.

And Hereford, the only incorporated city in Deaf Smith County, is home to a Holly Sugar Co. refinery, Arrowhead Mills and a Frito-Lay plant.

"Even if we are assured of no dangers, people in other parts of the country who buy our products have to be convinced," Nelson said. "If people buying our products are afraid of them because the dump is here, it hurts our economy."

An economic boost for the county could be one favorable aspect of the dump, DOE officials said.

But residents aren't sure it would be worth the risk, Mrs. Kleuskens said.

"We've seen through other federal projects that promised jobs to communities, that, in actuality, they don't provide employment to local people," she said.

Nelson also questioned whether the number of jobs the dump could bring to the area would be a fair trade-off if agriculture production decreases.

He also said he believed that just listing Deaf Smith County as a preferred site was going to hurt the area.

"JUST LOOKING at it from an economical impact, there might be some people who want to buy land here, but when they see there's a possibility the dump will be here, they'll back off," he said.

"I'm not so sure that we would experience a real terrific economic boost," Nelson said.

The DOE's proposed site in Texas is on private land, while the two other sites already are owned by the federal government.

One of the land owners in Deaf Smith County, Wayne Richardson, said that when he heard of the DOE's proposal, his reaction was "utter shock."

Richardson began a hybrid seed farm in Deaf Smith County 30 years ago and each year, produces about 60 million pounds of seed, primarily from wheat and sorghum.

His seed farm also is an essential part of the Texas A&M University experimental agriculture program, he said.

"We have a very unique setup that can't be duplicated anywhere in the United States," he said. "I don't think they (DOE officials) care."

Richardson is one of many area residents who vow to fight the dump "to the very end. We'll fight it with whatever legal means we have."

IN FEBRUARY 1983, the DOE first mentioned Deaf Smith County as a possible home for the dump that is to be operational for between 25 and 30 years.

The agency selected nine areas as "potentially acceptable sites" for the repository that is to hold spent nuclear fuel.

The Deaf Smith County site was among two in Texas. The other, an area in nearby Swisher County, was virtually eliminated as a possible dump location when the DOE whittled its list of nine to five and then to three "preferred sites."

But Swisher County residents haven't removed themselves from the controversy.

"We're still concerned that it's even in our back 40," said Becky Woods, a registered nurse from Silverton, after a recent DOE briefing on the proposed repository.

The reaction from area residents came as no surprise to DOE officials.

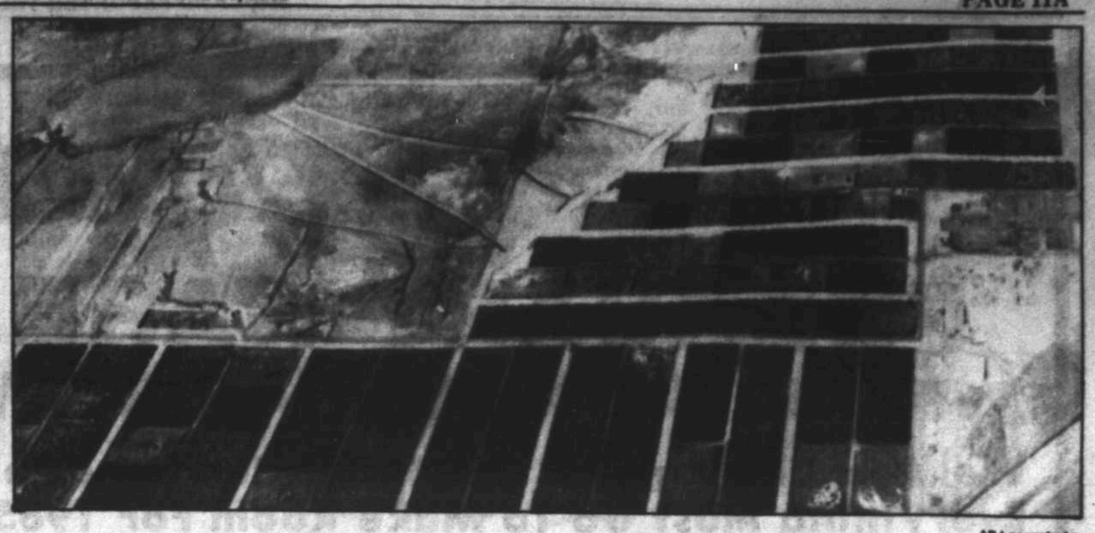

Bill Bennett, deputy director of the office of geologic repositories at the agency's office of civilian radioactive waste management, told about 400 people at a dump briefing, "I hope you're glad to see me. I'm sure many of you aren't. We are not here...to try to talk you into wanting a nuclear repository. We know that would be a foolish thing to do."

BUT THE government is trying to inform Texans about its work as much as possible, Bennett said.

Information offices have been established by the DOE in Hereford and Tulia and hearings on the proposed site are scheduled for later this month and early March.

Still, most Hereford residents have a "natural" fear of the repository and a general mistrust of the DOE.

"Most of the people are already convinced that no way is this the place for a nuclear repository," Nelson said.

Plaintiff's lawyer: Jury's award is meaningless

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A lawyer for a former state prison official who sued The Dallas Morning News over an article he claims cost him his job says a jury's award of $290,000 in punitive damages is meaningless and the newspaper "wins the case."

Although recommending that the newspaper pay the money for punitive damages to G. Presley Hardy, formerly assistant warden at the Walls Unit, the state district court jury did not find actual damages. A finding of punitive damages without actual damages under state law is meaningless, according to lawyers for both sides.

"Legally, what it means is that The Dallas Morning News wins the case. They don't have to pay anything, and the plaintiff wins nothing — much to his lawyer's disappointment," said Hardy's attorney, Harry Walsh of Huntsville.

Walsh said he has no plans to appeal the case.

Hardy had asked for $4.1 million in actual damages and "at least that amount" in punitive damages.

Hardy alleged four statements were falsely attributed to him in an article published April 26, 1981, concerning the mood at the Texas Department of Corrections following the deaths of Ellis Unit Warden Wallace Pack and farm manager Billy Max Moore.

Eroy E. Brown, a prison inmate, was accused of capital murder in the deaths, but eventually was acquitted.

Hardy was assistant warden at the Walls Unit at Huntsville when the stories were published. He resigned two days later in a meeting with W.J. Estelle Jr., who was then prison director, and Walls Unit Warden Jack Pursley.

No punitive or actual damages were assessed against the News' reporter, W.R. Deener III. The jury also said that Deener did not make a mistake maliciously or with reckless disregard for the truth.

But the jury of six men and six women recommended that Hardy receive $290,000 in punitive damages from the newspaper.

The jury said Deener falsely attributed a statement to Hardy that Brown "will die on the needle and you can count on that...he's gonna die on the needle...in fact, I hope they let me stick it in." The jury determined that the statement was false and defamatory, but not malicious, said Walsh.

Lawmakers backing tuition increase say state, students must face reality

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas university students have taken to the halls of the Legislature to fight a proposed doubling of tuition at state colleges and universities.

But lawmakers backing the idea say the time has come to boost tuition, and an aide on the House Higher Education Committee says that even a 100 percent increase would leave Texas with the lowest tuition rates in the nation.

With the state government facing a $1 billion shortfall between anticipated 1986-87 revenues and current state spending, Reps. Gary Thompson, D-Abilene, and Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin, and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby have proposed tuition hikes.

"The reality is, we have to do something and the time unfortunately has come to raise tuition," Mrs. Delco says.

The last tuition increase came in 1971. Lawmakers at that time set tuition at $4 per semester hour for Texas residents and $80 for out-of-state and foreign students in 1971. In 1957 tuition was priced at about $3.33 and $26.66 per semester hour.

If the Legislature does double the current tuition, the total cost of the 120 hours required for a bachelor's degree would go from less than $500 to less than $1000.

Texas students, however, still would get a bargain compared with those in surrounding states.

The University of New Mexico at Albuquerque charges resident students $34 per semester hour, officials said. The University of Oklahoma charges $25.90 per hour and students at Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge pay $486 a semester.

Texas tuition also would be a bargain compared to that of private schools. Southern Methodist University in Dallas sets tuition at $3,050 per semester, while Harvard University students pay $9,800 a year, spokesmen said.

If tuition is doubled, a full-time student at the University of Texas would see his entire semester's tuition go from $48 to $96, or $12 more a month, the equivalence of a large pizza and a pitcher of beer or 2½ movies.

Lawmakers say the additional money is needed.

"The wealth of Texas is legendary. Today we're not nearly as wealthy as the stereotype. We are a state in great financial difficulty. We've poured our wealth in a large degree into higher education," said Thompson.

"So while we could afford to be magnanimous at one time — in charging students 3 percent of the actual cost — I'm convinced that we can no longer afford to be as magnanimous. We no longer have the luxury to, in effect, give away higher education," Thompson said.

The cost of providing a college education in Texas has increased three-fold to almost $4,000 a year, Thompson said. Students, however, pay only 3 percent of the actual cost in tuition while out-of-state students pay less than one-third, he said.

The Texas Student Lobby, representing college and university students across the state, says that although Texas students pay less in tuition, housing costs are much higher.

"Students pay as much or more in fees and room and board. We are ranked above the national average," said Meg Brooks, a UT student and a lobby director.

She said the increased tuition plus an increase in housing may force some students to drop out of school and will keep others from starting college.

Report: State needs more equitable sentencing

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas needs more equitable sentences from county to county for people convicted of breaking state laws, according to a special commission appointed by the Legislature.

Sentences for convictions vary widely in different parts of the state, and the percentage of residents that different counties send to prison varies widely, according to a report by the Texas Commission on Sentencing Practices and Procedures.

The 15-member commission was established by the Legislature, which recently received the panel's 339-page report outlining suggestions to improve sentencing practices and make them more uniform across the state.

State District Judge Larry Gist, a commission member, said sentences sometimes depend on what issues are most prominent.

Gist said Jefferson County judges gave out unadjudicated probation terms to many defendants. Under such a sentence, an offender is not convicted unless he violates the terms of his probation.

Education board wants testing deferred

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Education on Saturday agreed to present state lawmakers with 16 legislative recommendations, including the deferment of administrative skills testing for teaching.

"We're requesting that it be deferred until we indeed see that a second test is needed," said Jack Mack Prescott, a board member from College Station.

Under the education reform bill passed last summer, teachers are required to take a basic reading and writing proficiency examination and a second test on administrative skills to teach advanced classes.

Prescott said the board is suggesting the deferment of the second exam as a safeguard for the 85 to 90 percent of the teachers expected to pass the first test.

He said the cost of implementing the first exam, which all teachers must take by June 1986, is estimated at $6 million. Deferring the second test may save the state some money, he said.

The board also is asking lawmakers to consider changing the current law regarding high school equivalency examinations.

The board's committee on personnel proposed changing legislation which entitles anyone over the age of 17 who doesn't have a high school diploma to take the equivalency test.

The personnel committee, however, wants to add a provision calling for anyone completing an academic year in which they turn 16 be eligible to take the equivalency test.

The board, under the recommendation of its committee for students, also endorsed a student discipline bill which was introduced by Rep. Bill Haley, D-Center.

Haley's bill would give teachers and administrators more flexibility in removing disruptive students from classrooms and suspending them.

The board also debated for 50 minutes the idea of whether teachers should send progress notices to parents every three weeks.

Board member Carolyn Crawford of Beaumont said the required reports may saddle teachers with additional paper work and testing.

In March, the board will review the impact of eliminating funds for full day kindergarten programs. The board wants the funds saved from the programs to go towards equalization of school districts.

'People's lawyer' goes on trial for bribery

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox, who often calls himself "the people's lawyer," is scheduled to stand trial Monday on felony commercial bribery charges, accused of threatening the bond business of a high-powered Houston law firm.

Prosecuting the case will be Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle, a rising attorney who some say has aspirations of being attorney general himself someday.

Leading Mattox's defense team is Austin lawyer Roy Q. Minton, an attorney known as a tough trial lawyer.

Both sides said they were prepared.

"He's ready to go to trial," said Elna Christopher, a spokeswoman for Mattox. "He wants this whole thing to be aired, and he has no doubt he will be vindicated."

"I think we're going this time, that's the latest indication," said Steve McCleery, Earle's executive assistant.

Earle will personally direct the prosecution, assisted by his first assistant, Phil Nelson, and Ben Florey, who heads the office's personal integrity division.

Minton will be joined by Charles Burton, another prominent Austin trial lawyers.

The trial, before state District Judge Mace B. Thurman, is expected to last about a month, the lawyers said.

According to records filed in the court last week, Mattox is subpoenaing eight newspaper reporters, asking for all "notes, written memorandums or any other kind of records" relating to news stories written about Mattox up through Aug. 31, 1983, a few days before he was indicted.

The reporters on the subpoena list include one from the Dallas Morning News, two from the Austin American-Statesman, two from the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, two from the Houston Chronicle and one from the Houston Post.

Mattox repeatedly has maintained his innocence.

HISD puts ads in Mexican paper

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Independent School District has a bilingual teacher shortage, so officials are advertising abroad in hopes of getting help.

Starting this month, the district will run advertisements for bilingual teachers in The News, an English-language newspaper in Mexico City, district officials said.

"We're trying just about everything," said Robert McCain, assistant superintendent for personnel.

McCain said he got the idea from an employee who saw a copy of a paper similar to The News. In it were ads from other regions, such as Acapulco, requesting bilingual teachers.

"I figured, hey, if they're looking for U.S.-certified teachers, we could too," McCain said.

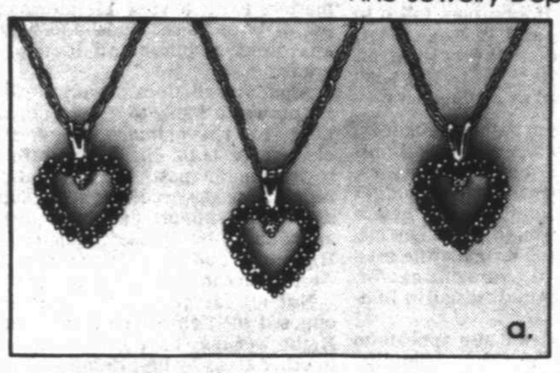

District officials predict 60 percent to 70 percent of the children who enroll in HISD's pre-kindergarten classes next fall will be non-English speaking. About 500 extra bilingual instructors will be needed to teach them.

The district currently has about 35,000 non-English speaking students, some 30,000 of whom speak Spanish. About 2,000 others speak Vietnamese, and another 2,000 students speak one of 25 other languages.

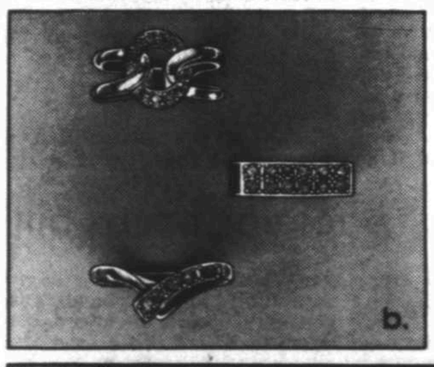

This year, more than 26,000 Houston students are enrolled in bilingual or classes promoting English as a second language.

HOUSING AFFORDABILITY INDEX

An index number gives you an immediate handle on where the value of something stands at the present moment. For many years, the stock market has had indexes, such as the Dow Jones, so you could judge the overall position of the stock market at a glance.

Well, after many, many years, the housing market now has an index too. It is called the Housing Affordability Index and it is published monthly by the National Association of Realtors. It shows the relationship between the median family income and the median priced home.

Assuming housing affordability to be 25% of gross income, the index would read 100 in a month when the median family income could purchase the median priced home. An index figure of 80 would indicate that the median family income was 20% below that needed to buy the median priced home for a particular month.

Now you can forget the index because every home has a buyer at the right price. We work with people and property and no two are alike.

GOP's Strake wants to set White up in Walter Mondale's shadow

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Mark White already has an opponent for his expected re-election bid in 1986.

White, it seems, is running against Walter Mondale.

State Republican Chairman George Strake is pushing hard to link White and Mondale, and the election of Paul Kirk as national chairman of the Democratic Party gave Strake another opportunity for some rhetorical flourishes.

Strake noted that Kirk is "a former senior political aide to Sen. Ted Kennedy," and then proceeded to link Kirk, organized labor, George McGovern, Mondale, Lloyd Doggett and White, and to conclude that "it's a clear signal that there is absolutely no room for conservatives in the Democratic Party."

Strake coupled that with an invitation for conservative Democrats to move on over to the GOP side of the ticket, "which is more closely aligned ideologically to majority conservative thought in Texas."

Republican officials agree they're planning to use any available opportunity to take a dig at White, and the policy has resulted in a stream of announcements from both sides.

Republicans obviously want to portray White as a free-spending, tax-raising wastrel, and understudy of Mondale and Kennedy, and White has been working to show that he intends to promote himself instead as a governor who is holding the line on state spending, eliminating waste in government and getting tougher with crime.

Still, even if White is successful in that, 1986 may be a tough year for Democrats. The Republicans' gains in the Legislature in the 1984 elections surprised even the GOP, and show that Texas has, at long last, a valid claim to two-party state status.

So Strake and other GOP leaders are talking about what they hope to do in 1986, and which incumbent Democrats will be targeted for political extinction.

White, of course, heads the list, although it's far from settled as to whose name will be in the column opposite White's when election time rolls around. But Strake has indicated that "friendly" Democrats, even if they don't accept the GOP's offer to switch to the GOP, may be spared opponents.

Lt. Gob. Bill Hobby may fall into that category, and in any event, Hobby appears to be rolling on towards another term if he so desires, opponent or no opponent.

Hobby has been gathering money, and winning political points with his leadership on budget matters, including preparation of a budget plan which would allow state government to limp through its budget crisis without having to make the massive cuts in higher education proposed under the Legislative Budget Board plan.

Speaker Gib Lewis also appears to have been put into the "friendly" category, at least for the time being, and there doesn't appear to be too much that conservative Democrats or Republicans in the House could complain about in the way Lewis has handled matters in the current session up to this point.

Comptroller Bob Bullock, if he runs again, isn't likely to be vulnerable on charges of not paying attention to reducing costs, having led the way in reduction of state payroll by shutting down offices and reducing his staff.

And Bullock continues to enjoy the respect of legislators and officials for his handling of tax collection matters.

Similar respect is being enjoyed by State Treasurer Ann Richards, who has overhauled State Treasury operations.

Land Commissioner Garry Mauro may come in for some GOP attention, having annoyed some oil and gas interests, but Mauro continues working on building the General Land Office's involvement in water matters (with a view to improving use of West Texas lands) and veterans' land and housing loan programs.

Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower is likely to draw an opponent, for the primary or general election or both. His recent efforts to implement pesticide application regulations has produced some damage in his support among farmers, and quite a bit of bad publicity for Hightower and Texas Department of Agriculture in the farm community.

Not all farmers, of course, are opposed to Hightower's efforts, and Hightower may have gained support in other areas by his attempts.

But the best target for the GOP has to be Attorney General Jim Mattox, who has had more than his share of difficulties.

Bill Kidd is a columnist for the Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau.

Dallas representative introduces pool-enclosure bill

From Staff Reports

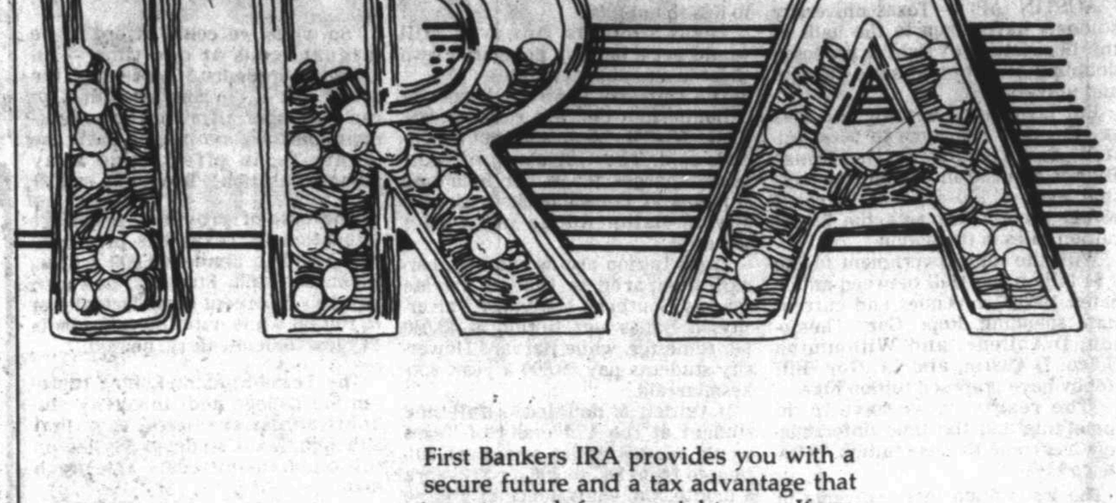

AUSTIN — Legislation to require the enclosure of swimming pools has been introduced by Rep. Lee Jackson, R-Dallas.

House Bill 686 provides that the owner of a single-family or multi-family residential swimming pool in an incorporated city or town "must completely enclose the pool with a fence or wall not less than four feet in height."

The fence or wall "may not have an opening larger than four inches in any dimension, and must be designed to prevent children from climbing" it.

A fence or wall could not use a dwelling or any other building as part of the enclosure, "unless the part of the dwelling or building used contains no doors, windows or openings capable of being used as an entrance to the enclosure."

All gates "must be self-closing and equipped with a self-latching device designed to prevent children from opening the gates."

Is Medicare cutting hospital stays short?

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

New words and phrases are being flung nervously about in the medical circles of Midland. "Prospective payment," "DRGs," "peer review" and "participating physicians" are terms that give hospital administrators headaches and wrap physicians in shrouds of anxiety.

No longer able to keep a patient in the hospital as long as necessary and expect Medicare to pick up the tab, doctors are wrestling with Diagnosis Related Groups — 468 categories of afflictions with a price tag on them. Since Oct. 1, 1983, Medicare has been paying hospitals a set amount for each of those categories. If treatment comes to more than Medicare allowed, the hospital absorbs the extra cost. If it runs under cost, the hospital keeps the difference.

The new payment method has brought sweeping changes in the way patients' charts are reviewed, wrought tension among area physicians, some of whom are banding together under the Social Security Administration's "participating physician" program to offer discounted services to patients, and has some individuals concerned that hospital stays are being cut short to keep down costs.

"THESE ARE tough times for physicians," said Dr. Gregory Bartha at the January board meeting of the Midland County Hospital District. Bartha is president of the medical staff at Midland Memorial Hospital. "We're all a little bit ignorant of these issues," he said.

One problem for physicians is the stringent review of their patients' charts by the Peer Review Organization (PRO), a quality assurance group mandated by Medicare which is designed to "weed out" patients who do not fit the bill for furthur Medicare assistance. Elderly people, who are more prone to complicated symptoms and are, according to Bartha, "difficult to handle as outpatients" seem to be square pegs in the round holes of DRGs.

"There have been times when I have had to send them home," said Dr. Paul Talboys, president of the Midland County Medical Society. "I lay it on the government. I say, 'Look, Mrs. Jones, if you stay for three more days, you will have to pay for it out of your pocket — the government won't.'"

Talboys said that many times a patient will want to stay in the hospital when there is no need.

"They say, 'I don't feel well,' or 'I can't get a ride for three days.'"

Talboys is a past member of MMH's DRG Steering Committee, which, according to finance vice president Ron Peterson, "is an internal committee that attempts to monitor and recommend to private physicians any medical treatment plans which will be reviewed by the PRO."

Talboys added, however, that "most physicians in good faith would not discharge patients if they were not ready."

"WE'VE FOUND no evidence of a patient being discharged before it's time in order to meet the DRG," said Dr. James Humphreys, a member of the statewide PRO.

Not everyone agrees.

"Everyone has seen cases where people have been sent home too early," said Connie Glover, of Community and Senior Services, Inc. "I'm not saying that local hospitals do that, though."

But a Midland woman was not so sure.

"The doctor told me that they would have liked to have sent me home sooner," said Virginia Jones, 75. "But I didn't have anyone to take care of me. When I went home I had to get help from Upjohn Nursing."

Upjohn is a local for-profit home health agency which assists the homebound with nursing services.

One problem with elderly patients stems from the nature of their illnesses.

"It's like fighting fires," said Anne Bradford of the Texas Department of Human Resources. "You take care of one symptom and another crops up."

Ms. Bradford also states that sending elderly patients home too early from the hospital causes further problems.

Impact on costs unknown

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Congress in 1982 made radical changes in the way Medicare does business to trim health care costs that had escalated more than 10 percent a year for a decade.

Federal limits on what Medicare pays hospitals for treating aged and disabled patients took effect Oct. 1, 1983. Because they are so new their impact on health care costs is not yet known, but there is some evidence they are working.

Hospitals, the medical technology industry and some patients, however, felt the impact immediately.

Admissions, length of stay, number of beds in use and surgical procedures have grown less rapidly or stopped growing since 1983, according to Edmund B. Rice, AHA's director of federal relations.

"Our average length of stay has decreased from about 5.7 days to 4.7 days," said John Holt, vice president of diagnostic and treatment services at Midland (Texas) Memorial Hospital, a public hospital with its own tax base. At the same time, MMH is treating more patients than before on an outpatient basis.

"THIS ALARMS US," said Holt. "After all, this is a program with little history. There is a bit of being in a fog about what to expect."

Under the new "prospective payment" plan, the government pays standard fees for treating heart attacks, bone fractures, cataracts and more than 400 other specific medical conditions in "diagnosis related groups" (DRG's). The goal was to hold overall Medicare expenditures to the 1982 level for at least two years.

If a hospital could treat a case for less money than the DRG provided, it could keep the difference; if it spent more than the DRG allowed, it would have to absorb the loss. Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret Heckler claims the system "rewards efficiency."

"It is reasonably clear, I think, to everybody, that the financial pressures from the new payment system is leading to earlier discharge of patients," said Peter Bouxsein, an aide to the House Energy and Commerce Committee's health subcommittee.

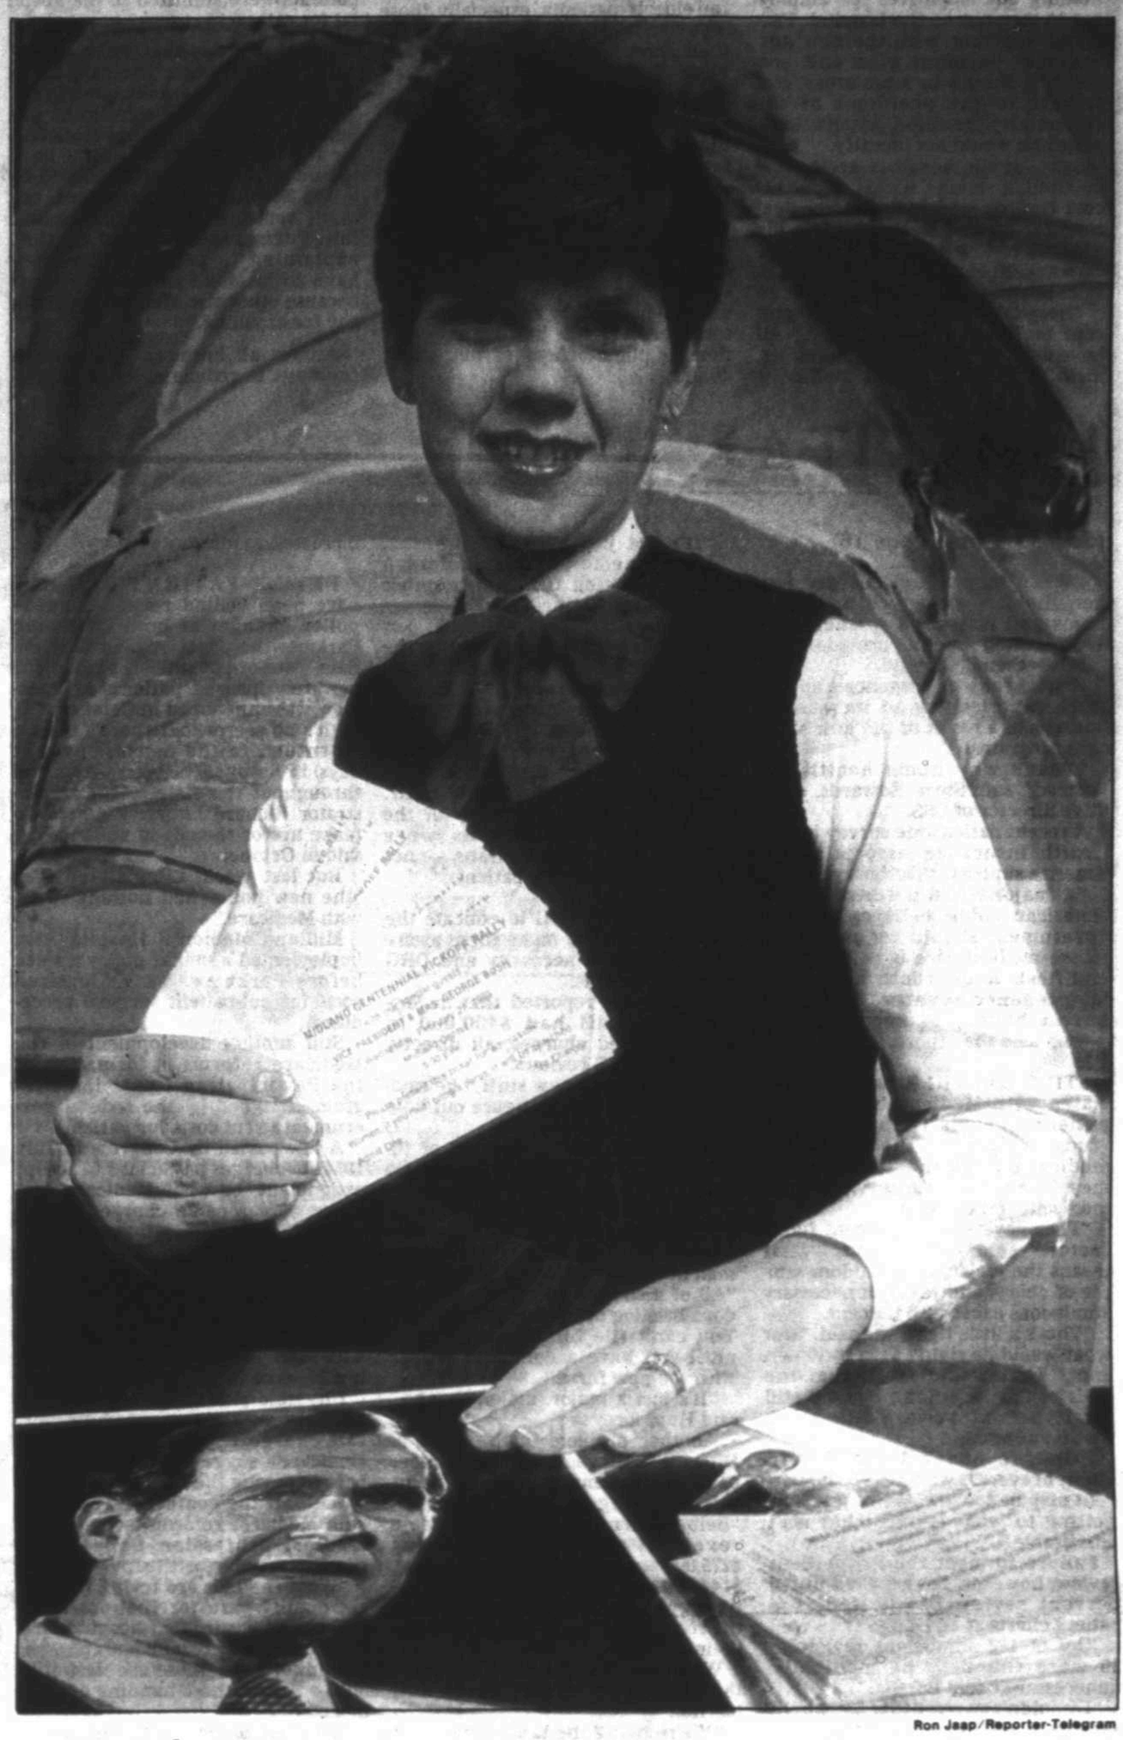

Gary Grover, administrator of Beaumont (Texas) Medical-Surgical Hospital, a "for profit" hospital owned by Humana of Louisville, Ky., has seen a decline in Medicare patients and has cut back on staffing, but he said the new payment plan has not been a big problem.

"The new rules have made both the physician and the patient spend time thinking about whether they need to go into the hospital," Grover said. "Sometimes they're finding they can handle their medical problems in some other manner — through more frequent office visits, home services, or with outpatient care."

WHILE THE Midland and Beaumont hospital officials say they are coping, some Texas hospitals are in financial trouble, according to Bill McCutchen, regional director of the Health Care Financing Administration in Dallas.

"It's really hard to sort out the reasons," he said.

Prominent Odessans to go on trial in arson-for-hire case

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

Ector County Commissioner Willie Hammond Jr. and former Odessa City Councilman Keith Weddel are to stand trial Monday in Midland federal court for the November 1981 burning of an Odessa office building.

The two Odessans were indicted in September for conspiring to destroy what was then known as the O'Michael Building and malicious destruction of the building that burned, but not destroyed, in a Nov. 25, 1981, fire.

Hammond, 44, is also charged with lying under oath twice on Sept. 27, 1983, during the civil case determining whether owners of the building should collect the insurance claim.

Weddel, 53, owned part of the building, 300 N. Jackson, when it burned, according to the indictment. Other owners included former Odessa Mayor Bob Bryant and attorney Ray Stoker Jr., but not Hammond.

If convicted, Weddel faces a maximum sentence of 15 years imprisonment and a $20,000 fine. He is represented by Lubbock lawyer Travis Shelton and Odessa lawyer Royal Caswell.

Hammond faces up to 25 years in prison and a $40,000 fine if convicted on the four counts. Odessa attorney Warren Burnett is defending Hammond.

Also named in the indictment are John and Lawrence "Cotton" Peterson of Odessa and L.C. Burditt of Midland.

Lawrence Peterson and Burditt are alleged to have set fire to the building. In late 1981, John Peterson allegedly spoke with Hammond and Weddel about burning the building for the money from the insurance claim and was paid for the fire by Hammond.

According to Texas Department of Corrections records, both Peterson brothers have been released from prison on bench warrants to Midland County.

John Peterson is serving a 15-year sentence for burglary of an Ector County building, while Lawrence Peterson is serving a 50-year sentence for burglary of an Andrews County residence.

Burditt is serving two years probation, according to Midland County records. After indictment in January 1983 on three counts of keeping a gambling place, he pleaded guilty to to one count as part of a plea bargain agreement.

Neither Peterson brother or Burditt has been indicted in connection with the fire. Hammond's attorney said the Petersons were in a federal witness program, which pays participants to testify in federal cases, while keeping them out of prison.

U.S. Attorney Ellen Byers was unavailable Friday to confirm or deny this information.

The trial in Judge Lucius Bunton's court is expected to run most of the week.

On Sept. 20, Hammond and Weddel surrendered to authorities after sealed indictments were issued. They were released on their own personal recognizance, but Magistrate Darrell Smith warned them they would be liable for the $50,000 bond set if they failed to appear for any of the proceedings.

Pre-trial motions by the U.S. Attorney Office suggested a key issue in the trial will be the relationship between Hammond and the Petersons. They requested information on the two brothers concerning any attempts made to secure their early parole from prison, particularly by Hammond.

Depositions from the civil action concerning the insurance settlement indicate Hammond had business dealings with John Peterson in the late 1970s. In an excerpt from his deposition, Hammond is quoted as saying of Lawrence Peterson, "I tried to help him get out of the pen."

Burnett filed a motion calling for federal attorneys to release any evidence of prior criminal acts by Hammond that they planned to present at the trial.

The indictment traces a chain of events beginning with Weddel purchasing interest in the building, now known as Jackson Center, in July 1980 "in speculation that a civic center would be built near the building."

In December 1980, a bond issue to fund construction of the civic center failed.

From late 1980 to November 1981, rent from building tenants failed to cover operating expenses. In May 1981, the insurance premium doubled, according to the indictment.

It alleges Hammond and Weddel "recruited and hired" people to destroy the building with an explosive.

MAA seeks applicants for Celebration shows

From Staff Reports

Visual artists interested in showing or selling their work at the second annual Celebration of the Arts must submit applications to the Midland Arts Assembly office by Friday.

This year's celebration, sponsored by the Midland Arts Assembly, is scheduled May 10-20. Visual art works will be on display at Midland Center May 17-19.

Artists who work with all types of media including painting, sculpture, photography, drawing, graphics, ceramics, glass, fiber, jewelry, textiles, mixed media and floral arranging are encouraged to apply.

This year, MAA will present the Celebration of the Arts Centennial Award. This $500 award will be presented to the artist whose work, in any media, best depicts the past 100 years in Midland. The award will be presented at the visual arts preview party May 17.

To enter, artists should contact MAA applications. Along with a completed application, artists must submit a minimum of three 35mm framed slides of sample work. The artist's name and title of the work should appear on the slide. MAA requires original works by artists residing in Midland County.

Following the Feb. 15 entry deadline, entries will be subject to selection by the jury committee and applicants will be notified by Feb. 20.

There are no entry fees. If selected, booth fees are: shared $35 per person (limit three persons per booth), individual $50, organization $100.

For more information, artists can contact Sherry Hewitt at 694-6368 or the Midland Arts Assembly at 687-1149.

GARY OTT

Duets make most of two talents

The latest craze to hit the music industry is the joining together of two or more big names to produce an album that will have crossover appeal and therefore result in more people shelling out the 10 or so bucks it takes to buy it.

It is good business, or at least one would assume that it is judging from the growing popularity of the practice.

The trend has been especially prevalent in country music where Willie Nelson, a great American, has taken the leadership role.

He and Waylon Jennings, another great American, got the ball rolling several years ago when they teamed up on several "outlaw" songs about hard living in the fast lane.

From there it mushroomed. Willie has since hooked up with such varied talents as Merle Haggard, Leon Russell, Ray Price, Julio Iglesias and, most recently, Ray Charles. Indeed, one must go on a scavanger hunt of sorts to find a solo album by Willie Nelson these days, and even then it will probably be him singing someone else's songs.

Willie obviously has gotten lazy in his old age.

Still, this teaming-up bit has paid off handsomely and, as a result, others are following suit. For example, Haggard hooked up with George Jones who in turn hooked up with Johnny Paycheck who in turn hooked up with someone else who in turn hooked up with old what's-his-name and so on and so forth.

You get the point. A big-name performer can earn a truckload of dollars if he's willing to share top-billing with an equally big-name performer.

The question is, why haven't others taken advantage of this free ticket to easy money? Maybe it's because no one has taken the time and effort to put the proper teams together. That is, until now. Here are some suggested duets, keeping in mind the key to success is getting persons from different backgrounds to unite so they can gain the largest possible audience.

— Mick Jagger and Minnie Pearl. This duo has awesome potential as they could do a delightful collection of mountain yodel tunes, laced liberally with some of Minnie's most-beloved jokes as told by Mr. Jagger.

— Perry Como and Bette Midler doing a laid-back Southern California version of "The Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy From Company B."

— Boy George and Phyllis Schlafley singing the ever-popular "I Am Woman."

— George Beverly Shea and Madelyn Murray O'Hair performing a thundering rendition of "Drop Kick Me Jesus Through The Goalpost of Life."

— Slim Whitman and Liza Minnelli. Dancing, of course, would be crucial here. Slim could do the Cotton Eyed-Joe while Liza belts out a medley of her hits from "Cabaret."

— Donny Osmond and Grace Slick doing "Amerika the Beautiful."

— Jimi Hendrix and Janis Joplin (this one is for the angels) singing "Okie From Muskogee," emphasizing the lines "We don't smoke marijuana in Muskogee" and "We don't take our trips on LSD." It should be a guaranteed best-seller in the satirical category.

COSTS

He noted that industry has followed government's lead and is holding out incentives for employees to stay out of the hospital. That trend, together with the new government payment plan and economic problems in some areas, contribute to the problems of the financially-troubled institutions, which he would not identify.

San Antonio hospitals are having no trouble staying within allowable cost figures, according to medical reporter Mark Linsalata. Their big problem is slow payment from Medicare and Medicaid, the joint federal-state health program for the poor.

"Hospitals have gone from 80 percent to 70 percent occupancy." All have done well financially, however, including the non-profit Methodist Hospital and public county hospital, he said.

In the past, physicians often tacked on a few convalescent days for elderly patients, especially those who had no one at home to care for them, and Medicare picked up the bill.

Hospital officials are quick to say no one is being discharged prematurely, but some patients and their families have complained.

THE NEW federal rules ban Medicare patients from staying in the hospital overnight after cataract surgery, the most common form of surgery for old people. Except in unusual cases, they require that doctors perform the half-hour operations in their offices or outpatient clinics.

Dr. Jared M. Emery of Baylor College of Medicine said that until the new rules went into effect in Texas on Nov. 15, about a third of his patients were admitted to the hospital for cataract surgery.

"It's that group that we're having real problems with," he said in an interview with the Associated Press. "Some of them are significant distances away from the medical center and find it difficult to come back the next day. They would like to be in the hospital for convenience, but that's certainly not possible under this system. I spend a lot of my time explaining to patients why they have to be done as an outpatient because otherwise Medicare will not pay for anything."

Almost all hospitals are looking for ways to reduce costs or supplement revenue. One way could be to fill unmet needs for longterm or skilled nursing care. Some are considering "outreach" programs for the elderly, who already consume a disproportionate share of health services — 30 percent now contrasted to 11 percent for the rest of the population.

"Many patients are not ready to go home without some kind of care or attention, and if it is not available in home health services or skilled nursing homes, hospitals should take a great interest in making sure those services are available," said Bouxsein. "But they do not necessarily have to provide it themselves."

Hospitals are beginning to be concerned about their image, said a participant at a recent national convention near Washington, D.C. "Increasingly, their clients are going to be elderly."

BUT WHILE THE revolution in Medicare is opening new fields for health care providers, it is threatening to some in the medical technology industry. Future advances in laser surgery, computerized diagnosis, artificial limbs and implants could be slowed, industry leaders warn.

The old system spawned excess teatments and waste, but it also gave hospitals an economic incentive to buy new and more expensive technologies. This, in turn, spurred medical technology companies to invest heavily in research and development for product innovation.

Now, many hospitals are planning to keep their old technologies for a few more years. "Economics is the primary motivator now," said Brian Dovey, president of Rorer Group's surgical products division, in a recent published statement. "We are now responding to the current system."

Few statistics are available to measure the success of the revolution in Medicare payment. But an Oct. 10 report by HHS showed that national health spending rose 10.3 percent in 1983 compared with 1982. That was the slowest rate in a decade, but still above the 7.7 percent rise in the gross national product, the overal production of goods and services.

Altogether, Americans spent $355.4 billion for health care in 1983, a record 10.8 percent of the GNP, according to HHS.

HOSPITAL

"When they are discharged earlier, they are sicker when they go home and may need further care. We are often asked to provide home care for them," she said.

Home health care agencies appear to be experiencing an increase in business as a result of the new Medicare programs.

"That's why home health has boomed," said Steve Edwards, executive director of CSS.

A recent nationwide survey by the Health Insurance Association of America supports this theory.

"A majority (58 percent) of the American public believes that the government should require those whose medical care is paid by federal funds to use clinics and health maintenance organizations that have a history of keeping costs down," said the report.

STILL ANOTHER problem associated with Medicare's review of patients' charts is the so-called "fudge factor" — the amount of medical dollars that the hospital may "waste" on cases considered medically unnecessary.

"They gave us a 2.5 percent fudge factor," said Humphreys. "That means the Feds take a random sample of charts and see if unnecessary admissions exceed 2.5 percent.

"That's a little tight," he said. "But what would be right? Five to 10 percent? That would mean that the Feds would be willing to hold still for 10 percent waste. That's a heluva lot of money.

"On the other hand," said Humphreys, "Two-and-a-half percent may be too low. We're just now getting to what is and what isn't admissable."

Failure to meet the 2.5 percent review, however, has resulted in 100 percent review of all Medicare patient charts at MMH.

"Out of 192 admissions reviewed, 20 were found to be medically unnecessary," said Bartha.

"I wouldn't suggest that we would ever have a 2.5 standard here," said Ray Branson, president of MMH. "It's a little bit tight.

"It's not just us," said Branson. "According to Arthur Anderson (MMH's auditing firm), all hospitals are on 100 percent review."

The hospital will stay on 100 percent review until it can bring the percentage of error back to 2.5 percent, said Humphreys.

"But there's another problem. Do they have enough bodies to audit every chart of every Medicare patient? I suspect that in the short run, they do not," he said. Humphreys suggested many of the unnecessary admissions were allowed because physicians — not the staff — admit the patients.

"WE'RE TRYING to educate the physician staff to make them aware of the medical necessity and DRG process," he said.

Humphreys reported that in September, MMH had $400,000 in unreimbursed charges, all directly related to DRG reviews.

"This is brand new stuff," he said. "We're still trying to figure out how it's going to work."

New forms and procedures of filing for reimbursement have also gummed up the works.

"We have a problem because physicians are not familiar with the new forms," said Tom Bruner, new chairman of the MCHD Board of Trustees. "All of a sudden we have a tremendous backlog of incomplete charges. You can't file for reimbursement until you have a complete charge with the new form."

"It's just a major, major change," said Humphreys.

Another problem in the wake of DRGs is a decrease in the number of days a patient stays at the hospital, resulting in revenue losses. "Being under budget in patient days revenues resulted in us being $275,000 under budget and of that, $144,000 was under budget in routine revenues from patients being in the rooms," Peterson told trustees at their January meeting.

While patient days have declined, the amount of surgery performed has not.

"We're doing the same amount of work but in one less day," said Bruner. "A lot of it is due to an increase in same-day surgery."

FEWER PATIENT days may have been behind recent financial policy changes at both MMH and Parkview hospitals. A plan to eliminate "out-of-pocket" expenses for privately insured patients at Parkview was announced in October.

"It's no secret that there's been a downturn in the census (patient days) in hospitals in West Texas and throughout the state," said administrator Richard Liley. "We hope to make up for the cut in volume," he said in October.

But last week, Liley stated that "the new policy had nothing to do with Medicare."

Midland Memorial Hospital also implemented a similar policy a week before Parkview, which lowered costs for out-patient surgical procedures.

Still another development of the Medicare reforms is formation of the Participating Physician Program, designed by the federal government to cut costs for patients.

A law passed by Congress in July 1984 encourages physicians to accept assignment, or what Medicare considers a reasonable charge for service. Physicians who accept a patient on assignment may not charge the patient more than what Medicare deems necessary. The physicians receive an 80 percent reimbursement from Medicare while the patient pays the remaining 20 percent.

Physicians who do not accept patients on assignment, however, can charge a patient more than Medicare's suggested rate, with the patient paying the excess.

With all the confusion associated with Medicare reforms, some in the medical profession believe the changes may be justified.

"What the feds are trying to do is get quality care for their medical dollars and ensure that hospitals are used efficiently," said Humphreys. "I think both of these are desirable on the part of those handing out the money.

"But," he added, "until they get it going, it's going to be a little haphazard."

Namesake movie opens in Paris

PARIS (AP) — Residents of this small city known for its lush farmland laughed at the desert landscape in opening scenes of "Paris, Texas," a film made by a German director and financed by French investors.

But the 350 people who paid $25 for tickets to the black-tie local premiere also applauded when the credits rolled at the end of the 1984 Cannes Film Festival award-winning movie.

Although portions of the film were shot in Texas, they were shot "just about everywhere except in Paris," said Joel Smith, director of the Texas Film Commission.

Midlander dies in auto mishap

From Staff Reports

A 25-year-old Midland man, John L. Smith of 603 S. Adams St., died Saturday night in Midland Memorial Hospital about a hour after he was injured in a car-pickup mishap at Lamesa Road and Spruce Avenue.

Smith reportedly was a passenger in the car. He was freed from the vehicle by Midland firemen using a jaws-of-life tool.

George Mitchell, 25, who was injured in the mishap, was admitted to the hospital Saturday night for observation.

The accident, which was reported shortly after 6 p.m. Saturday, was investigated by the Midland Police Department.

Services for Smith are pending at Thomas Funeral Home.

ARSON

Odessa police originally investigated the fire as arson. The incident also has been the object of investigations by the Ector County district attorney, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the U.S. Attorney's Office.

John Peterson was arrested in connection with the case, but never indicted at the county level.

DEATHS

Ruth McCullough

McCullough

Ruth McCullough, 72, of Midland, died at her residence Saturday morning.

Services will be at 11 a.m. Monday in St. Luke's United Methodist Church with Dr. Jerrell Sharp officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park, directed by Ellis Funeral Home.

She was born Aug. 8, 1912, in West Texas and was reared in Waco. She attended school in Waco before enrolling in Baylor University. She married Edward A. McCullough Nov. 8, 1939, in Waco. She worked for the U.S. Consulate in Columbia, South America, from 1939 to 1942, when she and her husband moved to Midland. She was a member of St. Luke's United Methodist Church and was past president of the United Methodist Women. She also was a member of the Progressive Study Club, Daughters of the American Revolution and Baylor Alumni Association.

Survivors include her husband of Midland; a son, Dr. Edward A. McCullough of Logan, Utah; a sister, Hellen Hunt of Waco; and several nieces and nephews.

The family requests memorials be directed to a favorite charity.

Carter H. Monahan

Memorial services for Carter H. Monahan, 27, of Midland, will be at 1:30 p.m. Monday in Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Glenn McNerlin of the Assembly in Christ Church officiating. Memorial services will be at 4 p.m. today in the Easterling-Wilson Funeral Home in Odessa.

Monahan died Friday morning.

He was born Oct. 9, 1957, in Odessa, where he was reared. After he graduated from high school, he lived in Houston for several years. He married Mary Snavely in Houston. They moved to Midland in 1981, where he operated Midland Window and Glass Co.

Survivors include his wife of Midland; a son, Hunter Monahan of Midland; a daughter, Hilary Monahan of Midland; his mother, Vonciel Monahan of Odessa; and two brothers, Rod Monahan of Fort Worth and Walt Monahan of Odessa.

Virgil L. Glasford, 73, of Mesa, Ariz., and formerly of Midland, died Friday in Mesa.

Services will be at 10 a.m. Monday at Melcher Mortuary, 6625 E. Apache Trail, in Mesa.

Glasford was born Sept. 2, 1911, in Saskatchewan, Canada. He moved to Nebraska the same year. He lived in Midland 2½ years. He retired as supervisor of Design Service after 30 years with Northern Natural Gas Co.

Survivors include his wife, Ethel Glasford of Mesa; a son, Richard Glasford of Omaha, Neb.; a daughter, Delores Hines of Midland; two sisters, seven grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

The family requests memorials be directed to Hospice of the Valley, 214 E. Willetta, Phoenix, Ariz. 85004.

Elizabeth Allen

Former Midlander Elizabeth Allen, 76, died Thursday afternoon in Denver.

Services tentatively are scheduled for Monday in Denver.

She had lived in Midland from 1938 to 1954 and operated Mrs. Allen's Beauty Shop at 710 N. Terrell St.

Survivors include two daughters, Mary Frances Booker of Midland and Naomi Allen of Palm Springs, Calif; seven grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

People of our community who make a difference.

Corina Hernandez

"Busy people get things done," says Corina Hernandez, president of Midland's Mexican American Professional Association. Midland is fortunate to have many busy people who exemplify this traditional maxim. Mrs. Hernandez is certainly one of those people.

This Midlander is a counselor for Job Training Partnership Act, an active Realtor, and the mother of two teenage sons, yet she finds time to serve the community in a number of areas.

Though Mrs. Hernandez spent her childhood in Midland, living in Denver for nine years made her feel like a newcomer in 1980 when her family was transferred back to our community. She found that being a participant in Leadership Midland helped her rediscover her place in Midland. The program led her to take a look at the community and conclude, "I want to be a part of that." Since she graduated from the program in 1981 she has served on the Leadership Midland Advisory Board and Curriculum Committee.

In 1982 the mayor appointed Mrs. Hernandez to a four year term as a Midland Parks and Recreation Commissioner.

Now, much of her volunteer time is dedicated to the Mexican American Professional Organization, which was formed in May 1984. Mrs. Hernandez is one of the founders of that organization as well as the current president. She explains that the organization is designed to identify and unite Midland's many Mexican American professionals in order to meet the common needs of the professionals and to help the greater community. By serving as volunteers in the schools, these professionals hope to encourage young Mexican Americans to achieve their full potential.

Mrs. Hernandez is also a member of the Midland Lee High School Bandoliers. Her younger son, who is a junior and a member of the Rebel Band, is responsible for her interest in this organization. In fact, Mrs. Hernandez says that support and encouragement from her husband and two sons is what enables her to keep her fast pace in our community.

Long range goals, dedication, and action are why Mrs. Hernandez makes a difference in Midland.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC to mark homecoming

Midland College celebrates Homecoming Thursday during the MC-Amarillo College basketball game at Chap Center, then with a dance in the Student Center.

Game time is 8 p.m. with presentation of Homecoming Queen nominees and coronation of the Queen set for halftime.

The last time these two teams met, the Chaps took a one-point win in overtime.

And if you've been wanting to see the exciting Chaparrals in action, there are only three home games remaining...and that includes the Amarillo game.

On Monday, the Chaps are playing New Mexico Military Institute in Roswell, a very dangerous team.

Both games may be heard on KCRS radio, 550AM.

Ronnie Milsap returns to Midland Saturday for a concert in Chaparral Center, and tickets are selling quickly. All seats are priced at $11.50 and are reserved. They can be purchased at Chap Center or Endless Horizons in Midland or Odessa. The opening group is "Bandana."

• • •

Chap Center director Mike Stevens, with a lot of help from the college maintenance department, has had a "production office" built in a corner of one of the building's floor-level storage rooms. It allows road managers of various attractions to have a separate place to work prior to and during a show. Previously, Stevens or his secretary had to share office space and telephones with those folks.

"We think it will give them some privacy, plus a pay phone of their own, since they usually are making a lot of calls," Stevens said. The office isn't elaborate. It just has wallboard walls, small desk, a few chairs, and some used carpet, plus the phone.

Mike Kheir, MC's media illustrator, is being honored with a one-man show of his contemporary paintings at Odessa College Monday through March 8. His works are being exhibited in the OC Instructional Building Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Mike does oil abstracts and impressionistics which have won local awards. Many of them reflect early life in his native Egypt.

• • •

Also on the art scene, the Leonard Baskin renditions of Indians continues to be shown at the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, through Feb. 28. It's a powerful show on loan from the Amon Carter Museum in Fort Worth. Almost worth the visit in the painting of General George Custer!

This show may be seen Sunday from 1-5 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m., Friday from 8 a.m.-5 p.m., and Saturday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m.

Are you interested in how management techniques differ between the United States and Europe? If so, you might wish to join a Direct Study European Tour May 31-June 15 that has been put together by MC management instructor Jack Scarbrough. It includes three hours credit and will have visits in Frankfurt, Amsterdam, Dusseldorf, Cologne, Heidelberg, Stuttgart, Munich, Lucerne, Paris and London.

Cost is $1,995, double occupancy, plus tuition of $37 for in-district and $43 for out-of-district students.

Deadline is Feb. 20, so if you're interested, contact Jack Scarbrough at 684-7851, extension 158, for details.

There will be lots of music Saturday in the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium when the Class 5A UIL High School Solo and Ensemble contests are held.

If you can't wait until the Dallas Cowboys play those hated Washington Redskins next fall, there's something that might help in the meantime. It's the "Scalp the Skins Basketball Challenge" at Chap Center Tuesday, Feb. 26, at 7:30 p.m., when some members of the Cowboys play basketball againsts some of the Redskins.

If it's anything like the Cowboys' basketball team we saw play here a few years ago, there probably will be lots of body blocks, clips, and illegal use of hands to go with the field goals and slam dunks.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director for Midland College.

Four persons benefit from death of one

AUSTIN (AP) — Four persons are enjoying the prospects of a better life after receiving the transplanted kidneys and corneas of a head injury victim.

The fifth person, Henry Logan, 36, of San Antonio was in critical but stable condition at the Texas Heart Institute of St. Luke's Episcopal Hospital in Houston, said Cindy Fox, hospital spokesman.

The heart was flown to Houston where it was transplanted into Logan.

HEAD LICE

Lice are parasites that commonly affect humans. They can exist in people of all ages and social levels. No one is immune. Infestation by head lice is more common among children. As a matter of fact, schools are sometimes closed because of an outbreak of lice that spreads in epidemic proportions. Any part of the scalp can be affected. The itching is not severe. Pustules, bleeding areas on the scalp and matting of the hair may be noticed. It is important to periodically check your children's hair. The lice can be seen on the scalp and small, white sticky eggs on the hair itself may be observed. Lice can be treated with a variety of over-the-counter products. Consult your pharmacist about application procedures.

You'd be suprised at the range of products for the range of illnesses and troubles that exist your local pharmacy carries, and we've got it all here at SERVICE DRUG OF MIDLAND, A & Scharbauer (682-2519). We are a family owned, full service drug store dedicated to serving the health needs of the people of our community. We're open Mon.-Sat. 8-7. Visa, Mastercard, and charge accounts accepted. City-Wide delivery.

HINT:

Lice can be transmitted from person to person by sharing personal articles or by body contact.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

UT Day programs set

AUSTIN — The University of Texas at Austin will sponsor two programs for high school juniors, seniors and their parents from 8 a.m.-noon Feb. 23 and March 23 at the University Teaching Center.

Topics to be discussed include admissions requirements and procedures, on- and off-campus housing, financial aid and scholarships and academic majors.

For information, write UT Day Program, Office of Admissions, UT at Austin, Austin, Texas 78712-1159. Reservations should be made no later than Feb. 19 for the Feb. 23 session or by March 19 for the March 23 session.

TCU to recruit here

Texas Christian University will sponsor a "TCU Day" program for high school students and their parents at 7 p.m. Feb. 19 at the Petroleum Club, 501 W. Wall St.

The program is designed to answer questions about collegiate life featuring an audio-visual presentation of the TCU campus. Reservations information is available by calling (915) 694-4740.

Computing class offered

AUSTIN — The Texas Computer Education Association will host a statewide conference on educational computing Thursday-Saturdaty at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Austin.

The annual conference will feature over 160 sessions covering various uses of computers in instruction. Hardware and software vendors will display products for review.

A concurrent computer conference sponsored by the Texas Planning Council for Developmental Disabilities will be held Thursday-Saturday at the Sheraton Crest in Austin. The conference will focus on technology which involves direct user interaction to enhance independent living, education and economic self-sufficiency for persons with a developmental disability.

Registration information on both meetings is available by calling Dr. Phillip Gehring at (512) 475-2259.

Another transition

President Reagan turned 74 Wednesday, the day he presented the State of the Union address to the joint houses of Congress and the American public. It was an historic occasion for that fact because Reagan became the oldest person to ever have served in the nation's highest elective office.

That doesn't appear a particularly startling fact to Americans because Reagan evidently is in good physical condition for a man three-quarters of a century old and with George Bush in the vice presidency at a mere 60 years of age, the security of the nation's leadership is insured.

But that doesn't mean the nation is free from age-related problems on the international scene. The ages of the leaders of the Soviet Union, sometimes referred to in less-than-loving fashion as the "old men in the Kremlin," apparently are having a significant impact on the diplomatic relations between the two superpowers.

Since the death in 1982 of Leonid Brezhnev, the complex transition of leadership in the Soviet Union has been in a state of virtual uncertainty. Brezhnev was succeeded by Yuri Andropov, who only served 15 months until his death and much of that time apparently was not in full control of Soviet politics.

After Andropov's death, the Soviet torch was passed to Konstantin Chernenko who, at age 73, is reportedly suffering from emphysema and is rumored possibly to have suffered a stroke recently.

The virtually constant turnover of leadership in the Soviet Union in the past four years has meant the Reagan administration has been stymied in efforts to establish a meaningful diplomatic relationship. Reagan and other U.S. officials obviously have not been able to determine the exact course the new Soviet leadership would follow.

Now, with the reported illness of Chernenko, the promising initiatives aimed at settling differences between the countries and making meaningful progress on arms control negotiations are once again thrown into jeopardy.

During his 15 months in power, Andropov reportedly promoted a number of younger people to positions of power in the Soviet hierarchy. That could well result in a significant change in philosophy when the political power changes hands in Moscow again. It's highly likely, noted Kreminologists say, that another change in leadership may mean the emergence of a Soviet leader who was born after the Bolshevik Revolution.

When that occurs, it could well mark the beginning of a different relationship between the superpowers. Some Kremlin-watchers suggest the change will mean an improvement in relations with less emphasis on revolution and aggression; others contend the party line will continue to dominate Soviet moves regardless. The change will portend a new ballgame for U.S. intelligence-gathering organizations that will be watching closely to see whether subtle changes in direction are occurring.

The reign of the "old men in the Kremlin" will have ended.

Another View:

Meter reader lament

Kremlin White House-ologists have been trying to plumb the meaning of the case of the curious tourist who strolled through the White House on Inauguration Day. We think we should help, lest misinterpretation lead to a superpower crisis.

The stroller was a water-meter reader. A nine-days-later cover-up story says the meter man simply mingled with a bunch of Marines, walked past Secret Service checkpoints, gawked at the drapes and portraits while imagining the tales he could tell his friends back home, and harmlessly penetrated a state dining room upstairs. Even Americans find that one hard to swallow. Perhaps the incident, so long hushed up, is the tip of some iceberg in a struggle for power in the Reagan administration.

One theory is that the pseudo-tourist was an agent for David Stockman, who has to help Reagan balance his budget. It makes sense, in a way. Stockman is known to suspect the president spends money like water because he first spends water like money — to hasten the rising tide that lifts all boats. So why not read the meter and bring Reagan to his senses with a clean water bill?

A rival theory has it that the upstairs intruder was really Edwin Meese. Meese is often seen in the White House halls, and he clearly had a meter-reading motive. What better way to prove to the Senate that working in the White House means taking a bath and having to float loans in order to stay liquid with one's head above water?

Too obvious, too domestic, think most experts in the Kremlin. They suspect an anti-Soviet hard-liner coup. One school focuses on Caspar Weinberger, whose Defense Department rank could have kept the Marines mum. Cap tried to tap Reagan's tap, the argument runs, to prevent any blockage of Pentagon pipelines to the Oval Office. But KGB agents say the man with the Marines was not a man at all. They suspect Jeane Kirkpatrick in drag. Hadn't she tried the same trick to get to Grenada? And didn't this happen just when she wanted a White House office?

These ingenious speculations have a ring of expertise. Yet the truth is probably simpler. No doubt Reagan's water meter really was due for reading, and the man in the hall was just doing his job. Reagan himself surprised the Secret Service interfered with the work. "Get the government off that meter reader's back," thundered the president to his staff. And it took the whole staff nine days to figure how.

TODAY IN HISTORY

In 1947, peace treaties between the Allies and five of the Axis powers were signed in Paris.

In 1949, the play "Death of a Salesman," by Arthur Miller, opened on Broadway.

In 1967, the 25th Amendment to the Constitution, dealing with presidential disability and succession, went into effect.

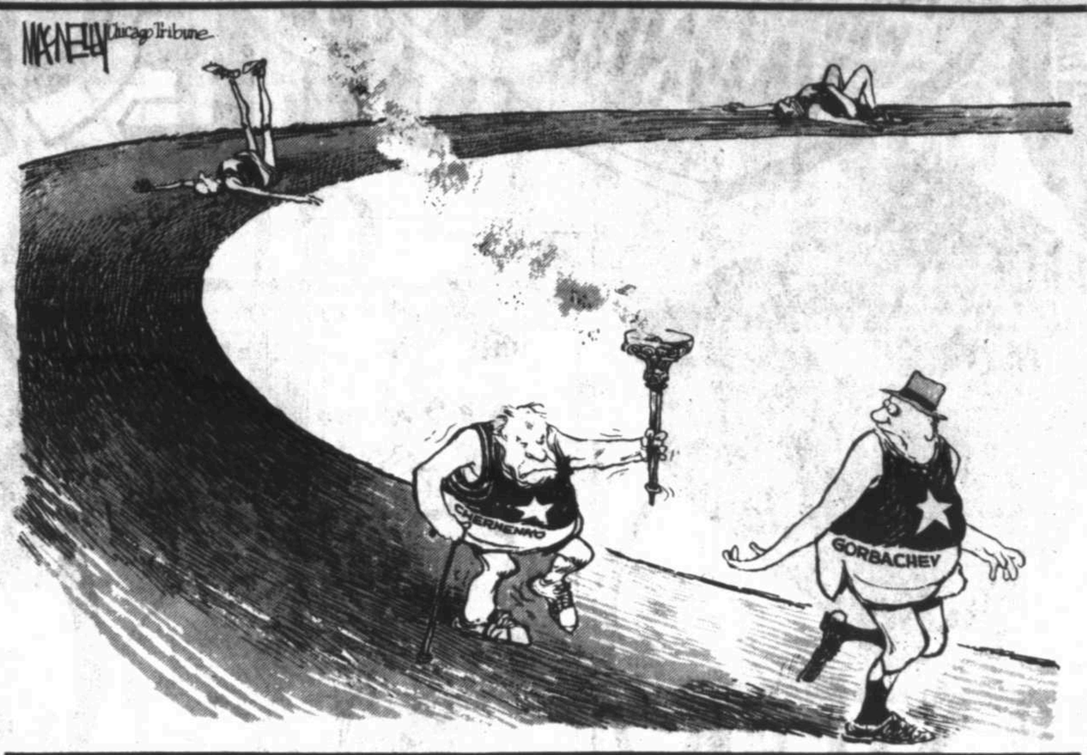

Ten years ago: Secretary of State Henry Kissinger opened talks with Israeli officials in hopes of achieving a new interim agreement with Egypt on the Sinai Peninsuln.

Five years ago: President Jimmy Carter, in his bid for re-election, won a modest victory in the Maine Democratic caucuses, edging out Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts and outdistancing California Gov. Jerry Brown.

One year ago: The Soviet Union announced the death of its top leader, Yuri V. Andropov.

Today's birthdays: Actress Dame Judith Anderson is 87. Opera singer Leontyne Price is 58. Actor Robert Wagner is 55. Singer Roberta Flack is 45.

Thought for today: "An era can be said to end when its basic illusions are exhausted." — Arthur Miller.

White House tightening secrecy

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is seeking to invest government secrecy with the halo of national security, thus raising anew the conundrum of the press's right to inform vs. the government's need for security.

Jack Anderson

No doubt some reporters stretch the First Amendment too far. They believe that no government secret is worth respecting, that official secrecy is merely a device for covering up crimes, blunders and deceptions.

There are grounds for the press's skepticism. Government officials tend to lock their misjudgments and embarrassments in all the secrecy that security and patriotism can impose. They use the secrecy stamp less to safeguard the nation than to protect themselves.

This is a practice I know something about. For 38 years, I have been in the business of exposing political intrigues, military fiascos, government waste, fraud and profiteering. In pursuit of scandal, I have always had to leap over hurdles that government officials erect between an accusatory reporter and the ready public.

Most officials would like to exercise veto power over disclosures that are damaging or offensive to their interests. I've learned that the louder the exhortations about security, the more likely I am to find a collection of Humpty Dumptys behind the secrecy shroud.

The worst offenders are in the Pentagon, where epic misjudgments and inexcusable blunders are first wrapped in the flag, then buried out of sight. When The Washington Post printed some cautiously chosen details about the recent military space shuttle, for example, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger reached for the flag. He accused the Post of betraying vital secrets; he actually described the Post story as giving "aid and comfort to the enemy" — the constitutional definition of treason.

This was unadulterated rhetoric, and Weinberger knew it. In the technological age, it's impossible to hide a spy satellite in space. The Soviets have monitoring devices that tell them far more about the secret satellite than the Post told its readers. The only possible secret about the satellite that the Soviets might not know is its capability: What quality of intelligence is it sending back to the United States? The Post took pains to avoid even hinting at the satellite's capability.

Over the past year, my associate Dale Van Atta and I also learned several details about the new "Magnum" electronic intelligence satellites. But some of these details came too close to telling the Soviets something they might not know. So, like the Post, I didn't report them.

Other reporters have come upon information that might affect the nation's safety. But I have found them to be every bit as patriotic as secretaries of Defense. In fact, the worst security violators I know are political leaders who don't hesitate to release classified information if it will win support for their policies or help them squeeze money out of Congress. Often secret papers are shown to reporters by the same officials who condemn others for leaking papers.

This may explain Weinberger's near-hysterical outburst against the Post. He was likely trying to make the Post an example to intimidate the press as a whole. The man who wouldn't let reporters into Grenada is apparently still afraid to let the press carry on its constitutional function of informing the citizenry.

If Weinberger gets away with his attempt to cloak our spy satellites in national security, the results could be dangerous. The United States and the Soviet Union are now taking tentative steps toward arms control, and the most important single factor to be considered is the capability of our intelligence agencies to verify Soviet compliance with arms treaties.

The public is entitled to know about the spy satellites that will carry the greatest burden of verification. Yet Weinberger wants to suppress even the most elementary information about these marvelous intelligence-gathering systems. This won't fool the Soviets, but it could hide a Pentagon snafu from the people who own the government and pay for its mistakes.

Let me demonstrate just how crazy the classification business has become with a story about another not-so-secret spy satellite — an antediluvian photo-reconnaissance satellite.

Six years ago, President Carter felt it was safe to tell the American people that we had some orbiting picture-snappers sending back information about the Soviet Union.

He didn't plan to discuss the satellites' capabilities, mind you, or show blowups of the photos they were sending back. He just wanted to let the public know what the Soviets and everybody else knew: that we had them.

But the satellites' very existence was classified "secret," so the president asked for guidance from the National Security Council, the arbiter of such issues. In an eight-page summary (also stamped "secret"), the NSC acknowledged that "there is an obvious, commonsense value to the forthright admission of what is already widely known." It also pointed out that public disclosure would "enable government spokesmen to make a more effective case for a SALT II agreement" by letting Carter cite U.S. verification capabilities.

GEORGE F. WILL

Case tests 'thin skull doctrine'

SAN FRANCISCO — Paul Monzione, armed with charm and the "thin skull doctrine," is about to take on the tobacco industry in a case with huge stakes and intriguing wrinkles. Monzione, 28, is a lawyer who works with Melvin Belli, who fancies himself "the King of Torts." Belli certainly is a pioneer in product-liability law, and for years has been trying to get cigarette companies found liable for willful misconduct in manufacturing an inherently unsafe product.

George F. Will

Belli solicited the case on which Monzione is working. Soliciting cases is illegal unless done pro bono publico, so Belli's firm, if successful, will give its one-third of the settlement to cancer research. Belli got the case after asking, in a speech to people who work in hospices for the terminally ill, if anyone knew of a person suffering from squamous cell carcinoma at the juncture of the bronchus, a cancer especially associated with smoking. Belli was told about John Galbraith.

Galbraith was a smoker. And how. Before he died several years ago of congestive heart failure brought on by severe emphysema and cancer, he was on bottled oxygen 24 hours a day — and he would still remove the oxygen mask and sneak a cigarette. Belli and Monzione will ask a jury to find several cigarette companies liable for Galbraith's death because the companies "expressly and impliedly warranted" that cigarettes are fit for human consumption.

The companies must argue, brazenly but carefully, that the "controversy" about smoking is universally known, yet absolutely nothing is known that connects smoking with cancer. Monzione must argue, artfully, that the connection between smoking and certain kinds of cancer is common knowledge, but that Galbraith, being addicted, had lost his capacity to act rationally in response to the knowledge.

The companies will dispute the medical evidence and conceivably could establish that Galbraith did not actually have squamous cell carcinoma. If Galbraith did have that cancer, the companies will argue that Galbraith lived in the Los Angeles basin and breathing the air there, not smoking two-to-three packs a day, caused his cancer.

(One cigarette company is currently running advertisements acknowledging that smoking is "controversial." Such advertisements cleverly suggest both that agnosticism is rational and that customers have been amply warned to be wary.)

The companies' more interesting argument will be that Galbraith, who had a master's degree, was well-read (a rash assumption about holders of master's degrees), so he knew the "controversy" about cigarettes and freely assumed the risk — Kf there is a risk. Besides, the companies will ask, what about the fact that millions of smokers do quit? Monzione will argue that Galbraith was incapable of quitting and hence the companies are liable under the "thin skull doctrine."

That doctrine says that if you accidentally strike a person on the head, striking a blow too light to injure most persons but a blow that injures the struck person because he has an unusually thin skull, you are liable. You are liable because the law says you must take the plaintiff as you find him. It is not his fault his skull is thin.

Galbraith's "thin skull" was, supposedly, his personality. Monzione will present a psychological portrait of Galbraith as an addictive personality who, as a convert to Mormonism, was driven to irrationality by guilt about his inability to quit smoking.

Product-liability law has come a long way from caveat emptor — let the buyer beware. That doctrine severely limited manufacturers' liabilities in the days when courts thought expanded liability would jeopardize American industrialism.

What is bothersome about some of today's product-liability cases is less that they broaden manufacturers' liability than that they seem to deny the individual's responsibility for his behavior. Indeed, when Belli lost a cigarette case in Louisiana, the judge suggested that if Belli had won he would have soon wanted Elsie the Cow held liable for heart disease caused by cholesterol.

But in the current case, Belli and Monzione are emphasizing addiction, understood as a chemical dependency suffered by persons who know it is injuring them. Monzione wants smokers on the jury because they, as authors of countless New Year's resolutions to quit smoking, understand addiction.

This case is coming to trial just as a queasy Congress is gingerly coming to grips with the new budget, which proposes an end to tobacco programs. Those programs subsidize production of a substance that goes into the product that has Monzione seeking huge punitive sums to deter companies from causing "a growing epidemic of death and loathesome illness." But, then, Congress is addicted to such programs.

ART BUCHWALD

Reflections on defense spending!

Secretary of Defense "Cap" Weinberger looked into the mirror in his private Pentagon washroom wearily. He had just been on the "Today Show" at 7 o'clock, "Good Morning America" at 7:30, and the CBS "Morning News" at 8:15 to make his case for a 13 percent increase in his budget.

Art Buchwald

He said, "Why can't people understand that I've cut everything to the bare bone, and if Congress doesn't give me my money the Soviets will never bargain in good faith in Geneva?"

"I understand it," the mirror replied.

Weinberger said, "I don't make up America's defense budget — the Russians dictate it. Is $26 billion too much to develop a foolproof 'Star Wars' system?"

"It's a drop in the bucket just to find out if it will work or not. Even if it doesn't, the commies will have to spend a lot of rubles on their own 'Star Wars' program."

"Am I being unreasonable about spending billions for an MX missile program which will protect us until we have our killer satellites in place?" Weinberger asked.

The mirror said, "You're overly prudent. If we don't have MX missiles you'll be throwing all the B-l bombers on order down the tube, not to mention the fighter planes you need to protect our battleships."

"Cruise missiles don't come cheap either," Weinberger said defensively.

"Don't I know," the mirror answered. "But they're a bargain compared to the Trident II submarine program which will cost $42 billion."

"Fifty-two billion," Weinberger corrected. "Can you believe Congress wants me to stretch out the weapons over a period of years so they can bring the budget deficit down?"

"It would be a big mistake," the mirror said thoughtfully. "When you slow down production each weapon costs more to make. Any fool is aware that the more you order the cheaper they are."

"Cutting the military budget doesn't help the deficit, you know," Weinberger said.

"I probably do, but tell me why again."

"Because every time you chop a billion dollars from the military you eliminate 35,000 jobs. The only real choice the government has is to put the money into either unemployment benefits or weapons."

"You ought to use that argument with Congress," the mirror said.

"I already have. They're still giving me a hard time. They claim since they're cutting out the farmers, the students, welfare, Medicare and housing for the poor, the Defense Department should at least be willing to make a few sacrifices."

The mirror rattled, "You can't put wasteful government spending on domestic giveaways in the same out basket with cost-efficient Defense Department programs. People and missiles don't mix."

"You said it, I didn't."

"So what are you going to do?" the mirror asked.

"I'm going to hang tough, and cry doom. They owe me $277.5 billion for 1986 and I'm not going to take a nickel less."

The mirror said, "I like it when you stick your jaw out. Do that on the Ted Koppel show tonight."

"I plan to. Well, I have to go up on the Hill again today and meet with six or seven congressional committees. How do I look?"

"Like a trillion dollars, give or take a billion either way."

Art Buchwald is a syndicated columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

BILL MODISETT

Reagan respected for sense of American optimism

Bill Modisett

I'll be perfectly honest. When Ronald Reagan was sworn into office in 1981 as the nation's 40th president, I was a little apprehensive.

Reagan, arch-conservative that he was, scared me to death even though I considered myself a moderate who leaned to conservative at that time.

No more. During his first term I realized Reagan wasn't the wild-eyed, budget-slashing maniac I had envisioned during the 1960s and early 1970s and recognized he couldn't get the support he needed in Congress to bring about any gut-wrenching reversal of basic — and necessary — government programs. In fact, I became concerned that perhaps he wasn't conservative enough. But Ronald Reagan has other redeeming qualities and, in fact, I quickly came to admire him as a president and a man during his first term.

After he presented the State of the Union message Wednesday evening, at the start of his second term in office, I was firmly convinced of all those facts. I didn't feel this way about Jimmy Carter or Gerald Ford and certainly not about Richard Nixon, although I respected his ability to deal effectively with leaders on the international level.

Lyndon Johnson was a blur largely because of the way the Vietnam War divided the American public. Dwight Eisenhower was a kind, grandfatherly sort of person but, then, I was just starting school during his presidency and wasn't all that politically inclined. Most 5- or 6-year-olds aren't.

From the history I've read, Harry Truman was an effective, blunt leader with a touch of country humor. He was likeable, but gruff. A no-bull kind of president.

But why do I respect Ronald Reagan so much, particularly when I was fully convinced at one point several years ago that his policies would be the ruin of the country?

It's pretty simple, really. While I don't personally approve of all his administration's policies, what impresses me most about Reagan is his vision of America's future — his ability to stimulate support for values that have been cherished by many Americans not merely for years but centuries. Ronald Reagan paints a future for this country that insures growth and prosperity, individual freedom and liberty, and above all, security.

That's a change from all recent past administrations that were stymied either by pessimism or the albatrosses of war, corruption or disillusionment. I can't speak for anyone else, but I'm fed up with pessimism and what is so regrettable is the amount of it that pervades our society today. People have no hope; they merely exist and wallow in their despair.

Whatever happened to the attitude of optimism that was so prevalent in this country before Richard Nixon, Vietnam and the rise of the drug culture? Was it thrown out in the resulting confusion? Did it waste away because of non-use? Or did it die simply because no one such as Ronald Reagan had the courage or the power of speech to verbalize the emotions of greatness and love of country during the years when such feelings fell out of fashion?

Reagan is correct. There is a need for a revolution of hope and prosperity. There is a need for a rebirth of that spirit of adventure that brought the first colonists to these shores, sent early-day settlers West in search of something better and eventually took man to the Moon and the stars beyond.

That's why Reagan is an attractive president to me. He makes me feel good about my country, my values and my future. As for the pessimists, let them wallow in their self-pity if they're not willing to stand upright and share in the glory of this nation. Sure, there's always room for improvement. But at least we have more today than we've had under past administrations:

Hope for tomorrow.

LETTERS

Columnist advocates immoral activities

This letter is written to express deep concern over the Dr. Judith Kuriansky column carried by our newspaper on Sunday, January 27. The column carried this large headline: "Best friends can share sexual relationships."

My feeling is that this writer is a product of a large segment of the present educational system in this country which is inviting everyone, especially the young people, to cast away all the moral restraints that have been traditional in our good land.

Our country became great by declaring ourselves in earliest time to be "One nation under God"...a nation that recognized the teachings of the Bible. This book states that "Righteousness exalts a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." (Proverbs 14:34). Such a lifestyle as the columnist advocates is branded by a sovereign God as sin and something He will judge. (Hebrews 13:4)

Those who have bothered to make any small study of the Communist conspiracy are aware that part of their strategy is to work through every channel possible to bring about a breakdown of morals in America. Then, they say, they can pick us off like rotten fruit. Furthermore, does not the publishing of such advice as she gives probably contribute to the teen-age pregnancies that plague our nation.

I, for one, would very much hope that the Dr. Kuriansky writings would be dropped from our local newspaper.

Illegality can't stop abortion's occurence

I cannot believe my eyes when I read the letters section in the Midland newspaper an see the ignorance of some of the townspeople.

I can't believe that some of these "intelligent" people honestly think that making abortion illegal will stop the "killing." It will not; you pro-life advocates should think back to before the Supreme Court ruled on the abortion issue and remember what it was like for pregnant women then.

Abortion is not a new matter, it has been around since the middle ages and will be around for the rest of human life. The fact is not that it is moral or immoral, to take away a life that is not wanted. You cannot stop immorality by making it illegal; immorality is in thoughts as well as actions.

"Big Brother" cannot threaten to prosecute for immorality. It is useless to punish someone for thinking; would you attempt to prosecute someone for wishing for a miscarriage, or maybe even intentionally falling in order to have a miscarriage? Is this not self abortion?

Before the Supreme Court ruling, abortionists were people who hung out a shingle, so to speak, and claimed to be able to induce or terminate a pregnancy. Some of these abortionists did not even begin to know what they were doing, some were disbarred dentists, drug addicts, alcoholics. A few were doctors who put their licenses on the line to perform these illegal operations.

For the ones who really did not know what they were doing, their patients died from "complications."Hemorraging, loss of blood and infections were just a few of the problems faced by women, who were already overwrought at the thought of having their child killed, no matter what the reason.

I can't believe you want to throw out a reasonable and safe procedure and force women to go back to the back alley method. I sincerely do not believe that a major change in the abortion laws will stop pregnancy termination by choice. If a woman wants to have an abortion, she will get one, either self-induced or through other methods. If she wants to have an abortion bad enough, she will have one.

Black history role recalled in Midland

The past four years the Negro Business and Professional Women have sponsored a public celebration of black history during February. This month has been set aside nationally to honor the accomplishments and contributions of blacks. It is during this time that we call specific attention to the role of black people in our society by providing a week-end activities to highlight those contributions.

We cordially invite the public to attend this year's celebration on February 15 and 16. The weekend's activities will begin with a banquet featuring Rafer Johnson, 1960 Olympic decathlon champion. The banquet will be held at the Midand Hilton.

Activities will continue with a display of black art and artifacts. A major accomplishment in this area is the securing of a specific exhibit from Detroit, Mich., called "The Black Odyssey," which will be on display at Carver Cultural Center.

Carver Center will also be the site of the Soul Food Tasting, which will feature traditional dishes which originated in a black cultural environment.

Further information about these activities can be obtained by contacting me at 682-9306.

We look forward to seeing you there.

To me, it sounds like same basic concept

In reference to the Jan. 29 article concerning the commissioners' court meeting that same day, it appears that Sheriff Painter has his work cut out for him, for the next two years anyway.

I found it interesting that some of the commissioners were receptive to a volunteer firefighters association, but those same commissioners were unreceptive to a volunteer reserve deputy organization. Is the basic concept not the same? Additional protection at no cost to the taxpayer. One cannot help but wonder if the reserve deputy plan would have been openly welcomed by the dissenting commissioners, had it been proposed during the previous sheriff's administration. I sense there may be some animosity developing here on the parts of certain commissioners.

It is obvious that when Sheriff Painter asks for "X" number of vehicles, personnel, etc., these particular commissioners will approve "X" divided by two, not because of budget limitations or that they honestly believe it to be in the best interest of the county, but because they still grieve over the loss of one of their political cronies.

This "sour grapes" attitude that is visibly present should not be tolerated. Commissioners, let Sheriff Painter do what we elected him to do — administer our sheriff's department as he deems necessary.

Who was alarmed when MHS 'larger?'

My letter concerns the alarming report in last week's paper about enrollment growth at Lee High School. In the report, Ms. Ferguson was greatly disturbed that Lee High School was going to have almost 150 more students than Midland High by 1990.

This alarm seems rather odd when you examine the statistics that were cited in the article. We didn't hear one complaint from the school board, administration, parents, students, or other sectors of the community even though MHS had almost 170 more students during the years cited in the article.

I wonder if all the fuss isn't really concerned with the athletic success of Lee in recent years. It may be a possibility that some people might be trying to legislate more athletes to MHS than math students.

Come on. When are you people going to quit treating Lee like a stepchild?

Tax simplification song a death knell

Treasury Secretary Regan told some oil producers to look more closely at his tax simplification plan "before you start screaming" and "to ask their tax departments to do their homework."

Most independent oil producers don't have tax departments, maybe an accountant. Most are not big enough to have a whole tax department. Regan must be talking to the major oil companies. They do have tax departments.

Ironically, the major oil producers don't pay taxes. These are corporations, who pass all costs including taxes through to their customers. So they'll likely favor his plan.

The background music to this scenario is the death knell of the independent oil producer. R.I.P.

SDI's pluses seem to outweigh minuses

Your recent interview with several local persons concerning the Strategic Defense Initiative (which the press has mislabled "Star Wars" program), brought to mind several points. Opponents of this defense system argue:

1. It will anger the Russians. Answer: So what?

2. It is too expensive. Answer: How much is your continued survival and freedom worth?

3. It is not and never can be completely effective. Answer: If only 80 percent effective, it is the most powerful deterrent to nuclear war.

I view the whole program of the Strategic Defense Initiative as comparable to law enforcement officers wearing bullet-proof vests:

1. The vests are somewhat cumbersome.
2. They aren't without cost.
3 I'd rather have a bullet-proof vest when facing an armed criminal (even though they aren't perfect). I'll bet you would too!

SPEAKING OUT

Tax simplification could hurt charities

By MARGARET PURVIS

Margaret Purvis, a 17-year resident of Midland, is chairwoman of the Government Relations Committee of the United Way of Midland.

One of the top priorities of the Reagan Administration in its second term is that of tax simplification. While most taxpayers are in agreement with the basic philosophy, serious questions arise from the Treasury Department's Tax Simplification Plan, which is presently being considered. The proposed plan will eliminate for all practical purposes any tax incentive for charitable giving from the great majority of Americans. It affects taxpayers who itemize charitable contributions and those who use the short form.

Taxpayers who itemize will be able to deduct charitable contributions only to the extent that they exceed 2 per cent of adjusted gross income. For example, a taxpayer with an adjusted gross income of $30,000 making a $1,500 gift, can only deduct $900.

The Treasury Department's Tax Simplification Plan would repeal charitable deductions for taxpayers who use the short form as of Jan. 1, 1986. Such action would remove the incentive for people who fill out the 1040 form to give to charitable organizations. Since 1981, when nonitemized deductions were enacted for the taxpayer using the short form, giving has increased by 31 percent.

The United Way of America has projected that if this measure is passed, contributions could drop as much as 17 to 24 percent, and the loss in dollars to charitable organizations could mean severe cuts in services.

Because of federal cutbacks in many social programs, and the desire for the private sector to take up the slack, the dollars given to charitable organizations are now, more than ever, critical as a support system for many individuals in communities across the country. While President Reagan has called upon the United Way and the private sector to assume greater responsibility, it is hard to believe the Treasury Department would undercut giving by as much as $12 billion a year according to some estimates. Without the voluntary sector, human services would depend solely on tax dollars and the federal government for solutions.

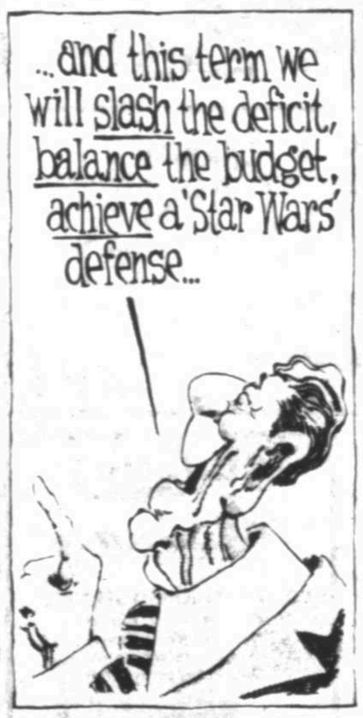

In Midland, 22 United Way agencies will offer services to over 30,000 people in 1985. After-school programs for children, a shelter for battered women and their children, services for senior citizens, counseling for troubled families, and numerous other programs depend on charitable giving.

The proposals of the Treasury Department concern all charitable organizations. Tax deductions, while certainly not the reason for giving, provide an incentive and influence the amount that people voluntarily give to charity. Ronald Reagan, as a strong advocate for voluntarism stated, "Voluntarism is a cornerstone of the American way of life and a fundamental characteristic of our American heritage. The generosity and civic mindedness of the American people has long been a noted aspect of our nation."

Supporting retention of the tax incentives for giving is essential for continuing our heritage in voluntarism and helping Americans help each other.

AIDS: San Francisco's 'freedom' also carries obligation

George F. Will

SAN FRANCISCO — Well, says Mervyn Silverman, suppose someone opened a Russian-roulette parlor, where adults so inclined could go risk their lives. Could the city be indifferent?

Silverman recently resigned as director of health in this city, where there is currently a death a day due to AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome). Two new cases are reported each day, which means that a year from now there will be two deaths a day.

This city is — depending on your idea of civic virtue — famous or notorious for its tolerant attitude toward homosexuality. Ten to 15 percent of the population (75,000-100,000) are male homosexuals. Among many such men, unlike among lesbians, there is a pattern of promiscuity.

Bathhouses, featuring private rooms and saunas or whirlpools, are relics of a generation ago. Before homosexuals felt able to "come out of the closet," such establishments were used for assignations by people who felt they had nowhere else to do what they were determined to do. Today, Silverman says, bathhouses are less used for that, although they still are used by, for example, bisexual married men or others who desire secrecy. But bathhouses are symbols of "homosexual rights," so there was protest last April when Silverman promulgated regulations to prohibit "unsafe sex" in bathhouses.

San Francisco's yeasty political process stopped the regulations, so Silverman ordered the bathhouses closed. The owners "won" in court, but the court, in allowing them to remain open, essentially imposed Silverman's "unsafe sex" regulations, requiring monitoring of activity, forbidding private rooms and requiring lights to remain on.

Silverman argues that because of AIDS (and some less-harmful diseases) bathhouse sex is inherently unsafe. Bathhouses are frequently used for forms of group promiscuity that should not be described in a newspaper.

To persons who say that the regulations will merely change the venue, not the quantity or nature, of homosexual activity, Silverman says: If couples meet in separate locations, the quantity of especially dangerous contacts will decline because group sex will decline. He says this is already happening under the tutelage of death: Watching a friend die is educational. When we see a wreck along a highway, Silverman says, we drive more slowly for the next few miles, then soon speed up. But AIDS has a more lasting deterrent effect.

San Francisco spends several million dollars a year on education and counseling about sexually transmitted diseases. Information is, Silverman thinks, the primary reason for the changed behavior that has resulted in a 75 percent reduction in cases of rectal gonorrhea.

Sexually transmitted diseases are paradigms of many of today's principal public-health problems, such as traffic accidents, cancer from smoking, alcoholism. They are "optional" diseases in the sense that they can be radically reduced by the dissemination of information that modifies freely chosen behavior.

Silverman is opposed by libertarians who say the regulations violate "civil rights." They say that publicity about AIDS has been so effective that almost everyone is informed, and that sexual activity in private between informed and consenting adults, even when dangerous, threatens only the consenters and thus is no business of government.

Silverman argues that even if the facts about AIDS have passed the threshold of public understanding that can be called "common knowledge," there are still victims who have never given "informed consent" to the risk of infection. Victims include women who have sexual relations with bi-sexual men, drug addicts who use tainted needles and recipients of tainted blood.

But the argument for Silverman's policy is most interesting when it moves beyond nuances about informed consent, and beyond the sort of argument used to justify laws requiring seatbelt use, or requiring motorcyclists to wear helmets. (If a cyclist scrambles his brains and becomes an invalid, his act is not just, as philosophers say, a "self-regarding" act. Rather, it is "other-regarding" because, thanks to the insurance industry and extensive government involvement in the provision of medical resources, we have socialized the burdens that result from individual irrationality, however consensual.)

The form of ethical argument natural to Americans and favored by libertarians favors libertarianism. It turns on strict individualism — the individual's information, the individual's consent and the individual's rights, including his right to have government share the burdens he incurs. Such an argument skews policy debates because it excludes communitarian concerns, especially concerns for community values.

The soul of Silverman's argument is that the city is not interfering with anyone's right to commit any sexual act, but only with the bathhouse owner's right to facilitate dangerous sexual activity. He says the reason the city is right to interfere is the same reason that a civilized city would close a Russian-roulette parlor: Life is good, and the law, a powerful teacher for good or ill, should affirm the preciousness of life by discouraging behavior that cheapens it.

Is this an argument for "legislating morality"? Yes.

Joan Lewellen at Lewellen's Home Improvement Center will write the check for your January heating bill if you let them replace all your old windows with quality storm windows by March 10. Call 686-8007 or go by 1811 W. Industrial to find out more.

Lewellen's will pay your January heating bill

Bill Lewellen of Lewellen Construction and Home Improvement Center is willing to pay your January heating bill (the portion of your bill which applies to heating your home) if you are will to take action by March 10 against future high heating bills. Bill points out that with the ever increasing cost of heating a home it is important to know that you are getting the most out of your energy dollar. Diamond storm windows from Lewellen's will help you lock the cold air out and the warm air inside. That's why Bill is offering to pay your January heating bill if you have let him replace all of your home's old windows with storm windows by March 10. There's no better time than now to take action against high heating bills!

Government studies have shown that both storm windows and doors can save tremendous amounts of heat energy. That's why you may qualify for a tax credit if you install storm windows in 1985. In order to qualify for a credit of 15 percent up to $300 (15 percent of $2000) your home must have been substantially completed by April 20th of 1977. According to Bill, the law which grants this tax credit is only scheduled to be in effect through 1985. Though the time period may be extended, why wait and take a chance on missing this tax savings opportunity?

Moreover, you can have confidence in Diamond storm windows which have a 15 year non-prorated limited warranty against defects in material and workmanship. Just think if you have storm windows installed now you won't have to fight all the dust in the spring.

Storm windows can also eliminate nearly all sweating from inside windows if certain rules are followed and ideal conditions prevail in the house and its construction. Windows sweat when air comes in contact with the window surface which is below the dew-point temperature. The air is chilled and condensation takes place. A residue of water is left on the surface of the glass. The installation of storm windows usually raises the temperature of the inside window above the dew-point, thereby relieving the steaming, sweating, or frosting of the INSIDE window. In the winter when an excessively high inside humidity is created it causes a vapor pressure because relative humidity outside is comparatively low. Moisture vapor will tend to equalize. Therefore, the inside humidity will leak through cracks around the inside sash, into the air space between the primary and storm sash and condense on the inner surface of the cold storm sash instead of on the inside of the primary window.

It is important to have your storm windows installed by a qualified company. If the windows are installed incorrectly they won't be as effective.

Lewellen Construction is a local company which is well known for doing quality work at a fair price not only with windows, but also with siding and patio covers. Many Midlanders who have been approached by out of town companies with big discount prices on siding jobs have found that Lewellen's fair, everyday price is far below the other company's "discounted price."

Bill and Joan Lewellen will be glad to give you a list of past customers, so you can see how pleased they are with the work Lewellen Construction and Home Improvement Center does. Bill accepts VISA and Mastercard. Home improvement loans are also available so call 686-8007 today or go Lewellen's Home Improvement Center at 1811. W. Industrial.

Zubiate can make furniture last longer

When you purchase furniture you probably expect it to last a lifetime; however, it doesn't always work out that way. Chairs that accompany dining room tables become wobbly; legs on sofas may break; cane may wear out on special chairs; and cigarette burns can really scar a coffee table. It's discouraging to think of replacing what you expected to be a life time investment, especially if it has sentimental value. That's why Richard Zubiate began Zubiate's Restoration.

Richard is a meticulous craftsman. When Richard opened his business in Midland two years ago, one of his goals was to bring old world craftsmanship to the area. Since then many people have turned to him to restore worn and broken pieces of furniture to their original beauty.

For Richard restoration involves more than just stripping and refinishing furniture; although, that is often part of the task. Patching holes with whatever material is available does not qualify as restoration. It's so much more than that.

Richard can take rickety dining room chairs and make them look like new again. If an arm on one has been broken, Richard will carefully match the wood, carve a piece to fit, and then finish the chair so that it looks like new.

If the leg on your favorite chair is broken, restoration involves carefully carving and staining another leg to match the remaining three, not just using the most similar style available. After all, shouldn't the chair look just like it did when you purchased it?

If the bevelled mirror with your bedroom suite is tarnished and a piece of wood on the dresser was damaged in a move, restoration means resilvering the mirror, as well as matching the wood and carefully fitting the new piece in place.

On the otherhand, what if your coffee table, the one that you selected after hours of searching through furniture stores, has been stained or scarred, perhaps by a cigarette burn? Then, restoration involves light sanding or bleaching to restore the original beauty. Unnecessarily replacing the entire table top may be an expensive waste.

When the rush or cane in your chair wears thin, restoration means weaving new pieces of cane, rush, or rattan in the same pattern as the old material which rotted out of the chair.

If a beautiful inlayed wood design on a buffet, which you fell in love with at an antique auction, is loose, restoration means cleaning and regluing each piece in its original place. Always using the original material when possible and meticulously matching the original design.

Richard Zubiate knows the meaning of restoration and is dedicated to that task. Along with the equipment, he has the craftsmen who can make furniture look like it did originally. Lilo Dominguez and Leo Sanchez are both skilled woodworkers and expert weavers. Gary Chizmar has many skills and is an expert at carving animals in doors and other objects. Mr. Zubiate is also an expert craftsman and has an extensive knowledge of wood types and furniture design. As part of the service, Mr. Zubiate researches the origin and history of older furniture he restores.

Often, the need is not just for repair, but also for additional pieces. If you have two chairs of a certain style and need two more, Zubiate's Restoration can help you. By using one chair as a pattern, they can make as many more as you need.

Richard Zubiate understands the sentimental value of older furniture. He also understands that people highly value their more contemporary furniture, which sometimes needs repair. Thus, Zubiate's Restoration is prepared to restore any furniture that you may have.

Maybe, you are a do-it-yourselfer that likes to refinish furniture, but find that stripping the furniture is a big chore. You can have it stripped at Zubiate's Restoration.

If you have some furniture that needs to be restored, call Mr. Zubiate today at 682-5773 or go by 1611 E. Taylor. With Zubiate's Restoration to help you, your furniture can last a lifetime.

Village Coin announces new arrivals

It is easy to see why Village Coin Shop in the Village Shopping Center has become a regular meeting place for area coin collectors. It's always fun to get together with other collectors between shows and Village Coin Shop makes it even better by constantly bringing new things to the store.

Owner Charles Green announces that they have recently acquired a coin Teletype. Now, coin collectors can get an up to the minute spot on gold and silver coins. This service is free and is even more up to date than the figures a collector can get from his broker. Just give Charles or Gale a call at 685-1711.

Though Charles and Gale are proud of this new arrival, the Teletype is going to have to share the spotlight with their first grandson who was born Wednesday, February 6. Their little champ weighed in at 5 lb., 15 oz. and is certainly getting all the attention he deserves. Be sure to congratulate Charles and Gale when you call to get a spot on gold or silver coins.

Even with all these wonderful new arrivals, Charles and Gale are continuing all the good things they already had going. You'll still find the bid board, free appraisals on small lots, daily quotes on bullion, and jewelry sold by weight at the Village Coin Shop.

The bid board is getting more and more attention so now is the time to go check it out. Just put up the coin or coins you are ready to trade and wait for the high bid. Be sure to check out the wide selection, too. You may want to bid on something for your collection.

Charles explains that jewelry is still sold by weight at the Village Coin Shop unless it has a coin or stone in it. He reports that people who shop around return to Village to make their purchase. After all, Gale will custom design jewelry for individuals. For her customers' convenience she keeps diamonds, rubies, emeralds, and jewelry of every style in stock.

Call the Village Coin Shop for a quote on gold and silver bullion. Right now, Charles says, bullion is as low as it's been in two years.

Charles and Gale would like to thank the Midland Coin Club and other Midlanders for supporting the shop. They are looking forward to getting to see everyone at the coin show on April 13. On April 18 the shop will have a big auction for the Midland Coin Club. This is a perfect opportunity for collectors and investors, and the public is welcome.

Don't wait till the next coin show to meet other collectors. Drop by the Village Coin Shop and put a coin on the Bid Board. You're sure to see another collector. Oh, by the way, you can use your VISA and MASTERCARD on everything except the gold and silver bullion and all transactions are held in strictest confidence.

Crime Stoppers joins 'most wanted' search

Teutsch

HOUSTON — State and federal law enforcement officials are looking for a 34-year-old Corpus Christi native they believe was involved in an international narcotics ring suspected of committing at least six murders.

Tommy Teutsch, a white male with black hair and brown eyes who stands 6-feet-2 and weighs 225 pounds, last week was placed on the Texas Most Wanted list. A $1,000 reward is being offered for information leading to his capture.

Investigators say Teutsch disappeared in June 1982 after failing to appear to answer federal charges of racketeering, influence, corrupt organization (RICO). The charges stem from a 1981 arrest in Corpus Christi on four counts of conspiracy to smuggle marijuana and cocaine into the United States.

Texas Department of Public Safety officials say Teutsch was a member of the late Samuel Cammarata organization, a far-flung syndicate that had international drug connections.

Prior to his disappearance, Teutsch left a note suggesting he was going to commit suicide. Investigators, however, say there have been reported sightings of him since then.

Teutsch also uses several aliases, including Tommy Titsch, Tommy Tyson and Thomas William Teutsh.

Anyone with information about Teutsch, who is an accomplished make-up artist and may have altered his appearance, is asked to call Texas Crime Stoppers toll-free at 1-800-252-8477 or Midland Crime Stoppers, 694-TIPS. Callers do not have to reveal their identities.

Texas Most Wanted, a cooperative effort between Texas Crime Stoppers and the Department of Public Safety, is designed to solicit information about the locations of fugitives wanted for serious crimes committed within the state.

KMID to host phone-in program after film on teen-age suicide

A three-hour television drama Sunday night about two teen-agers who commit suicide will be followed by a live program dealing with teen suicide in the Permian Basin.

"Surviving" will be shown by ABC and KMID-TV from 7 to 10 p.m. After the weekend update, interviews with local teen-agers who have attempted suicide and professionals in the field of suicide prevention will be shown.

The live show will begin at 10:30 p.m.

Telephone lines will be open from 7 to 11 p.m. for questions to be addressed during the live program.

For questions and answers from the panelists, persons may call 563-2222.

AUSTIN — No opposition has been received by the Texas Savings and Loan Department to an application by First Savings and Loan Association of Odessa to relocate a branch office within Odessa.

First Savings proposes to move the office from 2701 W. County Road to 5930 W. University.

The application was considered at the department's monthly docket call and has been referred to Commissioner L.L. Bowman III for a decision.

Man charged in death of teen

HOUSTON (AP) — A 28-year-old man was charged in the death of a teen-ager who was shot in a convenience store while buying a soda, police said.

Police said Fernando Lopez, 14, was shot in the chest about 8 p.m. Thursday by two men leaving the northeast Houston store after they tried unsuccessfully to buy beer.

THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT

Streets lead City Council agenda

Street improvements and calling for council elections will comprise part of the Midland City Council's work when it meets at 10 a.m. Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers.

A 2:30 p.m. public hearing will be held on proposed improvements to Garfield Street. The Public Works Department has recommended Garfield be widened and rebuilt.

Another item calls for improvement of Golf Course Road at Midkiff Road, and an ordinance would place stop signs at eight locations, if approved.

A public hearing at 11 a.m. will hear suggestions from the public on how to reallocate an excess of Community Development Block Grant funds. In addition, a contract with B&G Salvage would extend their Community Development demolition projects.

At 10:30 a.m., the council will hear a presentation by the Junior League, which is giving funds for Parks and Recreation improvements.

Temporary mobile home permit requests will be made at 1:35 p.m. and 1:40 p.m., by Albert Ray Faulkner and Ethel Barber, respectively. Faulkner wants the mobile home placed at the northwest corner of Kerth and Illinois streets; Ms. Barber wants her on the north side of Graceland Drive between Eisenhower and Meadow drives.

A 1:45 p.m. public hearing will be held on the request by James and Margaret Purvis for zoning at the southeast corner of Maxwell and Marmon to be changed from 1F-2, single family, to Planned District.

In other action, the council will consider hiring Touche Ross for a street lighting study, authorizing purchase of equipment for Midland Center, calling the city elections for April 6, establishing voter precincts and polling places and establishing single member districts, hiring Ray Kendall and Jim May to do additional work on a garage computer system, and diverting pedestrian traffic from the east side of Loraine to the west side between Wall and Illinois streets.

MISD Trustees

The Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees Tuesday will take final action on revisions of board policy mandating changes in pupil attendance requirements and hear an analysis of the impact of House Bills 72 and 246 on primary and junior high school staffing.

During the regularly scheduled meeting at 1:30 p.m. at the district's Central Administrative Office, trustees also are expected consider a proposal to name Midland High School Baseball Field in memory of longtime employee Galberson Zachery, approve the 1985 summer school session, grant an easement to Texas Electric Service Co. for the new elementary school scheduled to open in September and consider names for the school.

County Commissioners

Midland County Commissioners, in their 9 a.m. Monday meeting, are to adopt a resolution reaffirming their confidence in the necessity of the County Treasurer's Office in processing county business.

The resolution was prompted by a move to abolish the office and transfer its functions to the auditor's office.

The treasurer's duties include processing the county's payroll, maintaining the county's insurance and retirement programs, keeping personnel files and, in concert with the auditor's office, acting as a check on the county's expenditures.

In other business, the commissioners are to open bids for new cars for the sheriff's office, award bids for long-distance economy service and discuss a proposed branch library.

Home teaching bill introduced in House

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Citing fundamental constitutional rights, freshman Rep. John Smithee, R-Amarillo, has filed a bill allowing parents to teach their children at home.

Smithee's House Bill 673 would amend the Education Code to exempt children being taught at home from state requirements of compulsory attendance. Currently, children enrolled in private or parochial schools, and those with certain physical or mental handicaps, are exempted from attendance regulations.

"This is basically in keeping with the Supreme Court ruling (in 1972) of the fundamental rights of parents to instruct their children," said Smithee, who adds he expects no opposition to the measure.

Under HB 673, any child "instructed in an educational program that is conducted by the child's parent or guardian, or by an individual designated by the child's parent or guardian" would be exempt from attendance. Such a program must include "a study of good citizenship," according to the bill.

If approved by the Legislature, the measure would take effect Sept. 1.

"It's the right of the parent to instruct their child," said Smithee, noting "a number of people in the Panhandle" prefer to teach their children at home. "It's a fundamental Constitutional right."

SACROC contract takes up slack

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — Record cold weather drove municipal demands down in January, but a new contract with the SACROC repressuring unit more than took up the slack in Colorado River Municipal Water District deliveries for the month.

Total production was 1,148,472,598 gallons for January, up 41 million gallons over the same month last year. Municipal deliveries of 985,068,400 were down 22 million gallons, but deliveries to oil companies amounted to 163,404,198 gallons, up 63 million gallons.

The new contract with SACROC made it possible to supply most of its needs out of water diverted from the low flow of the river and which is non-potable. Previously, deliveries were from brine wells, which have been deactivated.

During the month, Odessa took 383,263,000 gallons, down 2.4 prcent from a year ago; Big Spring, 196,947,000, down 8.09 percent; Midland, 298,040,000 gallons, down 3.88 percent; Snyder, 61,764,000 gallons, down 22.2 percent; Stanton, 7,112,000 gallons, down 20.67 percent.

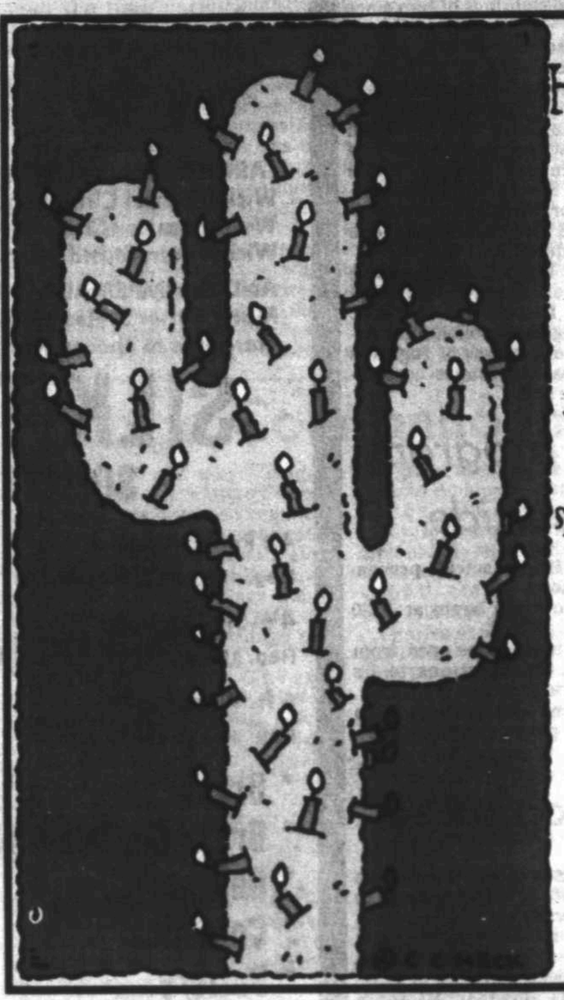

Robert Lee took 4,000 gallons, whereas in January 1984 it required 1,099,600 gallons. On the other hand, San Angelo drew 37,938,400 gallons as compared to 844,100 a year ago.

Red-eyed Robin Blake survives 'Chile'

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

It wasn't easy and it wasn't pretty, but Levelland lightweight boxer Rockin' Robin Blake got the victory he so badly wanted Saturday in a nationally televised fight against Adolfo "Chile" Medel at Chaparral Center.

In gaining the 10-round majority decision, Blake absorbed a lot of punishment. Red blotches surrounded both eyes where he'd been hit by Medel combinations and flurries throughout the bout. His left wrist was injured early and he had to adjust his style. He looked like a survivor, not a victor.

But, win he did, receiving judgements of 96-94 and 97-95 from two judges and losing 95-94 from a third.

"I tell ya how it is," said Blake as he walked into the press room adjacent to his lockerroom. "I won the fight and will fight Harry Arroyo for the title on April 6. I set out to win this fight and did everyting I had to. I went into the ring saying this guy is a lot tougher than me and I'm a tough son of a..."

Blake's manager David Gorman was also looking ahead to the title fight with Arroyo, one of only two boxers to beat Blake in his 29-fight professional career.

"We'll fight Arroyo in April if Robin doesn't have any injury to keep him from training," said Gorman. "He hurt his left hand early in the fight and we have to check that out."

IN GETTING his victory from Medel, Blake had to figure out how to handle the Chilian fighter's vastly superior quickness. At the start of nearly every round, Medel came out with all guns blazing, rushing into the middle of the ring to unleash flurries of punches. Some connected, some didn't. Mostly, it threw Blake off his rythym.

But, keeping up an all-out attack for 10 rounds is hard to do.

As the early rounds neared midpoint, Medel slowed the pace and Blake was able to use his greater reach more effectively, backing Medel into the ropes where he worked combinations to Medel's head and body.

The first round set the tempo for the fight. The only real difference between the initial round and the next four came in the final seconds when Blake connected with an overhand right that sent Medel to the canvas for a mandatory standing eight-count. It was the only knock down in the bout.

In the sixth and seventh rounds, Medel started making up a lot of the ground he lost in the opening five. He came out fast and was able to hold the pace better, seeming to gain energy as the fight progressed. Blake kept trying to force Medel to the ropes but couldn't keep him there, and in the process, lost the exchanges in the middle of the ring.

However, two rounds of all-out attack wore on Medel and he slowed in the eighth, but still managed to keep off the ropes where Blake was doing all his damage.

IN THE ninth round, Blake connected with a straight right to the head that drove Medel backward into the ropes where Blake kept him until the bell. Medel was hitting back but not as often as he was being hit.

Both boxers rushed to the middle of the ring at the start of the 10th round with Medel putting everything he had into his punches but did with negligible damage. Blake weathered the brief storm and backed Medel to the ropes for the final time and unloaded. Medel stayed on his feet and after the bell both fighters walked to their corner with the applause of a standing ovation from an estimated 3,000 spectators ringing in their ears.

DESPITE THE loss, Medel's manager Edward Gersh was proud of his young fighter's performance.

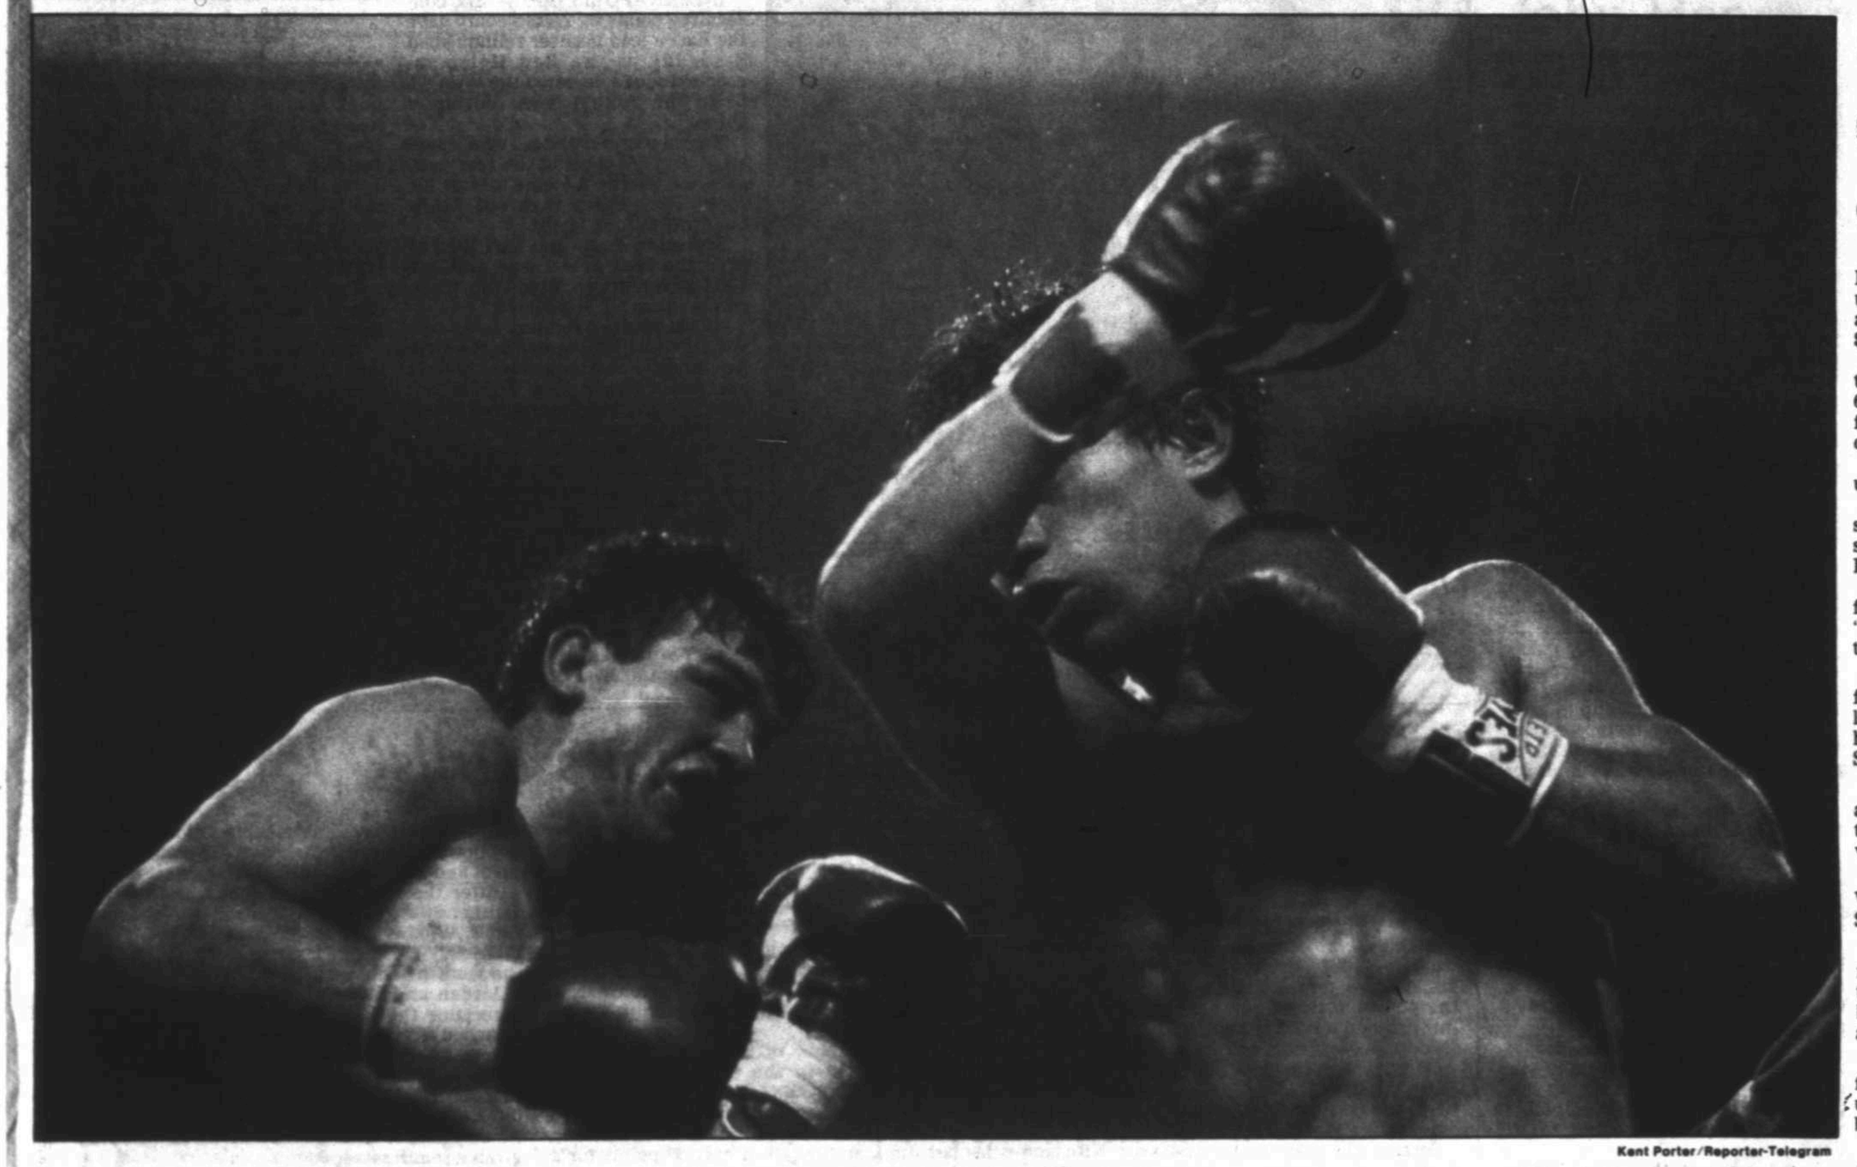

"Adolfo is only 20 years old and fought someone who is a great fighter," said Gersh. "We're not ashamed of Adolfo in any form or fashion and I know he made a lot of friends in Texas."

Medel, too, was able to accept the decision. "I'm not going to complain about it," he said. "There is only one winner in this sport and it was Blake today and it will be me next...He was very strong and I let the fight slip away from me in the last two rounds.

"I'm only 20 years old and this loss hurts but it isn't the blow to me that it would have been to Blake. I'll be there in the end. I know that and if I could have gotten the right in when I wanted, I might have been there today. After today, there is already talk that I might get the Blake-Arroyo winner."

BOTH managers, especially Gorman, sounded as if they would have preferred more time to train for the fight.

Lopez, Hayes share first at Sarasota

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Nancy Lopez and Patty Hayes fired 5-under-par 211s to claim the lead after Saturday's third round of the $200,000 Sarasota Classic.

Lopez vaulted from 14th place to a tie for the top spot with her 5-under 67. She birdied three of her first four holes and had six birdies and one bogey for the day.

Hayes shot what she called an unusual 1-under 71.

Lopez won her first Ladies Professional Golf Association event on this same 6,124-yard Bent Tree Golf & Racquet Club course in 1978.

"I putted better today than I have for the last three weeks," Lopez said. "I felt good out there today. Even the 20-footers almost went in."

Hayes, who fired a 68 Thursday for a share of the opening-round lead and was in second Friday after her 72, had two birdies and a bogey Saturday.

Patty Sheehan was at even-par 72 and Betsy King, with her 71, were tied one stroke behind the leaders with 4-under 212s.

At 3-under-par 213 were Donna H. White, Janet Anderson and Vicki Singleton.

White had entered Saturday's round tied with Lauren Howe for top honors at 5-under 139, but bogeyed three of her first six holes and took a 74.

Howe lost four shots to par on the first six holes Saturday and wrapped up the round with a 76, four shots back at 1-under 215.

Singleton carded a 67, matching Lopez for the best third-round score.

The tournament concludes Sunday.

West Texans cheer guy in pink shorts

It was easy for Midlanders to fall in line behind Rockin' Robin Blake Saturday afternoon as CBS put Chaparral Center in the living rooms of the nation.

This was classified as a national event just because TV said it was. But in reality, this was West Texas vs. the world. Blake was carrying a heavy load.

Rockin' Robin Blake now lives in Fort Worth, which we don't consider to be West Texas like the rest of the world, but he earned his gloves just up the road in Levelland. Man, that's West Texas. Robin Blake can breathe the dirt around here with the best of us.

And you knew he had to be West Texas tough when he appeared on the canvas wearing pink boxing shorts with his name on one leg for all the world to see. That's tough in my West Texas book. Here's a guy who is fighting for a title shot and he's wearing pink shorts. That's confidence — West Texas style.

There is not a thread of fear in this Rockin' Robin kid. After all, he didn't need fear — there was enough fear ringside without him carrying it with him.

Rockin' mama Blake (Charlene), Rockin' wife Blake (Denise) and Rockin' daddy Blake (Roger) did all the worrying for him. They let him concentrate on his opponent.

DENISE, Robin's high school sweetheart in Levelland who went on to become Mrs. Blake, did a lot of talking to herself prior and during the fight. She admitted that this fight business was rough on her nerves.

"I never liked boxing until I met Robin," she said prior to the fight. "I still don't know how I handle the pressure. I just do. I've been nervous all morning."

Mama Blake also admitted nervousness, saying in her decidedly West Texas drawl, "I'm just proud for Robin, but I was real nervous throughout the fight. It's always better when the fight is over."

But Daddy Blake wasn't as laid back. He, like son, has West Texas confidence too. Roger threw as many punches during the fight as his son, weaving and bobbing like he knew the next move.

But even to the end he remained the Rockin' Critic for his son.

"I thought it was a tremendous fight. Medel is a tough fighter, but I thought the intensity and pressure got to Robin in the early rounds. Fortunately, Robin sucked it up and pulled it out.

"I THOUGHT Robin looked tired and slowed down in the later rounds. This is a lot of pressure for a 22-year-old kid who is fighting for a shot at the title. This is where he slipped the first time around.

"It's not the pressure of the fight being televised, but the chance to fight for the title. The title is the goal and that's where the pressure came from.

"You must also realize that we trained for this fight only two weeks and you will see a much better Robin Blake the next time out.

"Medel will be heard from. He's a great little fighter, but this wasn't Robin's toughest fight. The fight with Tony Balazar was tougher."

Well, Roger was last seen bobbing and weaving toward the dressing room with a West Texas victory for his West Texan. Levelland is just up the road — at the gateway to the world. It's where Robin hopes to bring back a world championship.

SMU ambushed by Wolfpack

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — When North Carolina State jumped out to an early 11-0 lead over fourth-ranked Southern Methodist, Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano didn't sit down, didn't stop waving his arms, and didn't stop worrying.

He worried through a 71-71 tie at the end of regulation and he worried through overtime until the final free throws gave the Wolpfack an 82-78 upset victory Saturday.

"We started well and we finished well," Valvano said. "In between, you saw a great basketball team in SMU.

"We were up 11-zip and the crowd was into it. Then they got a great run. I was concerned that we may run out of steam," he said. "We closed it to one in the second half, then they had another spurt. You never know whether you have one left in you or not."

The Wolfpack did, holding the Mustangs, 18-4, scoreless for the final 8:14 of regulation.

And most of Valvano's praise was for 6-foot-11 senior center Cozell McQueen, who helped hold 7-foot SMU center John Koncak to five points and three rebounds. Koncak was scoreless in the second half.

"He's (McQueen) played against some of the best ... Sampson, Perkins, Olajuwon," Valvano said. "He is a mature player ... and gets the job done."

Meanwhile, SMU coach Dave Bliss blasted the referees for what he said was poor officiating.

Abila brothers post wins

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Rockin' Robin Blake's triumphant debut at the Chaparral Center will grab the boxing headlines around most of Texas, but another story was in the making Saturday on the undercard of the main event.

The Abila brothers of Midland, Richard the older and Joel the younger, gave local boxing fans a thrill by notching victories in their hometown debuts.

Richard, who decisioned "Quick Lee" Cargle of Oklahoma City in eight rounds, is now 13-1 and a strong challenger in the junior bantamweight division (116 pounds).

The younger Abila, fighting in the super bantamweight division, scored a unanimous decision over Capri Lipken of Houston in the opening bout of the six-fight card.

Both fighters were pleased to find themselves on the same fight card in their hometown.

"It feels great," Joel said. "He's older and knows his way around. It's nice to have him here to back me up."

Richard, who was unable to see his brother's fight because he was preparing for his own bout in the semi-main event, was happy to have his brother win, and was also happy to be able to fight in Midland in front of the home crowd.

"It's great to have the two Abila's fighting here because it gives us both more publicity and for Midland, too," Richard said.

With convincing decisions like Saturday's match with Cargle, Abila will start to generate his own publicity. All three judges gave Richard seven of the eight rounds, scoring a six-point spread on two cards (79-73), and a four-point spread (79-75) on the other.

Cargle started the fight showing how he obtained his nickname, shaking and dancing his way around the methodical Abila. But in the second round, Richard backed Cargle into the ropes and punished him with body blows. The round ended with a flurry of punches to the head and body by Abila.

The fourth and eighth rounds saw the best action of the fight as Cargle tried to retaliate to Abila's body blows. But Richard showed some shaking of his own — doing an impromptu boogaloo — before taking the final flurry to his quicker opponent.

"He started doing that shaking stuff early in the fight," Abila explained. "I wanted to show him that I could do that, too. He gave me a pretty funny look when I did it."

The victory over Cargle, a previously undefeated and well-regarded fighter, boosts the credibility of the budding career for the elder Abila.

It was Richard's fifth straight victory since suffering his only defeat at the hands of Harold Petty nearly two years ago. Abila, who now trains out of Fort Worth with the Gorman's Super Pros Boxing Stable, will now prepare for the upcoming ESPN tournament beginning in March.

JOEL STARTED slowly against the slippery Lipken, who more than matched the stylish Abila in qickness. Lipken tagged Abila in the first round, giving him a bloody nose and also managed to thumb Abila in the

35th NBA All-Star game takes aim at record book

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — It will be a record-setting afternoon for the National Basketball Association today when the Western Conference faces the Eastern Conference in the 35th All-Star Game.

Los Angeles Lakers center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar will be making a record 14th All-Star appearance when he starts for the West, which has lost five straight games, the longest streak in All-Star history. More than 38,000 fans are expected for the game in the Hoosier Dome, which would break the record All-Star attendance of 31,745 at the Pontiac Silverdome in 1979.

Before this season, Abdul-Jabbar shared the mark of 13 appearances with Wilt Chamberlain, Bob Cousy and John Havlicek. In the 11 years that the NBA has allowed fans to vote for the starting teams, Abdul-Jabbar has amassed more than 3 million ballots.

"It's a compliment they pay you in appreciation of what you've given to the game," he said. "It's always nice to be paid that kind of compliment, because these are the people we perform for.

"Anytime you do something no one else has done, it's something to be proud of."

ALTHOUGH HE is setting a record for most appearances, Abdul-Jabbar is not the oldest player ever to be an All-Star. On Sunday, Abdul-Jabbar will be two months and six days short of his 38th birthday, three days younger than Havlicek when he appeared in the 1978 All-Star game in Atlanta.

"I've been through a couple of eras," Abdul-Jabbar said. "It's very interesting the number of years I've been an All-Star. They are all like blurs. I've always dealt with them one at a time."

"He's the most unique athlete anyone put on the face of the earth," said Lakers Coach Pat Riley, who will coach the West against K.C. Jones, coach of the Boston Celtics. "To continue to do what he's doing, in the most demanding of sports, is unbelievable."

12:45 p.m. CBS-TV

Abdul-Jabbar is joined in the West starting lineup by forwards Ralph Sampson of the Houston Rockets and Adrian Dantley of the Utah Jazz and guards George Gervin of the San Antonio Spurs and Earvin "Magic" Johnson of the Lakers.

THE EAST starters are center Moses Malone of the Philadelphia 76ers, forwards Julius Erving of the 76ers and Larry Bird of the Celtics and guards Isiah Thomas of the Detroit Pistons and rookie Michael Jordan of the Chicago Bulls.

Erving will be making his 14th pro appearance in an All-Star game. His first five games were in the American Basketball Association.

Erving and Gervin have been All-Stars for all nine of their years in the NBA, and Gervin played in three ABA All-Star games.

East reserves are forwards Bernard King of New York and Terry Cummings of Milwaukee; centers Robert Parish of Boston and Bill Laimbeer of Detroit, and guards Sidney Moncrief of Milwaukee, Dennis Johnson of Boston and Micheal Ray Richardson of New Jersey. Laimbeer is subbing for Jeff Ruland of Washington, out with a strained right shoulder.

West subs are forwards Larry Nance of Phoenix and Alex English and Calvin Natt, both of Denver; centers Jack Sikma of Seattle and rookie Akeem Olajuwon of Houston, and guards Rolando Blackman of Dallas and Norm Nixon of the Los Angeles Clippers.

Others making their first All-Star appearances will be Natt, Nance, Blackman and Cummings.

"I've tried to play the best I could this year and now I'm on the All-Star team and it gives me a great feeling," Nance said.

Cowboys still draw crowd

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

While most of Midland may have been at the Langford Chaparral Center for the big fight Saturday afternoon, the Dallas Cowboys—past or present, playoffs or also rans—proved the lure America's Team remains.

Between 1 and 4 p.m. the official grand opening of the Kentucky Fried Chicken franchise on Big Spring street drew a steady stream of customers, gawkers and autograph seekers, lured by the presence Ed "Too Tall" Jones, Benny Barnes, Butch Johnson and Preston Pearson.

Jones is the only active Cowboy. Johnson is active, but a member of the Denver Broncos. Barnes and Pearson are heroes from the past.

"We got together about four years ago, the four of us, and formed Imperial Investors." said Jones during a breather from welcoming customers and signing autographs. "We have six franchises in West Texas—Abilene, Sweetwater, Midland, Odessa—and we plan to open some more."

ANOTHER is planned for Midland this summer and also in Odessa.

But Jones understood the media didn't particularly care to discuss the six secret spiced herbs in his product. The Cowboys and What's Wrong with the Cowboys still ranks uppermost with the Texas faithful.

"We'll be back," promised Jones. "I haven't gone home this early since my rookie year," when last Dallas failed to make the playoffs. And it was obvious Jones didn't like the feeling.

"We got into our off season program earlier than usual. We have something for which to work," he emphasized.

IN REVIEWING the Cowboys problems of the last season, Jones pointed out that the team lost 11 key players to retirement and injury.

With the draft coming up, the one-time boxer predicted that the Cowboys needed immediate help in the offensive line. "Pat Donovan, a Pro-Bowler, and Herb Scott, also a Pro-Bowler, retire and Jim Cooper, perhaps our most consistent lineman, was hurt.

At wide receiver, blamed for some of this year's failures, Jones feels the addition of Duriel Harris will be a big help. "I don't consider that a problem area. At running back, we have lots of depth and talent."

"I was glad to hear Coach Tom Landry say we will go with one quarterback. I think whomever looks best in training should get the job. I don't think this year was fair to either Danny White or Gary Hogeboom."

RETIRED DEFENSIVE back Benny Barnes, who had a chance to view his old team from afar, regarded the Cowboys' failure to make the playoffs a case of Much Ado About Nothing.

"I think Dallas had a heck of a year. They missed out on the playoffs by one game. With the new talent and the loss of key veterans," Barnes said, "You've got expect a year like this. Dallas is rebuilding, something every other organization has had to go through."

"It will be a couple of years before the team is of Super Bowl caliber."

In dissecting the team and its needs, Barnes felt the quarterback situtation was overplayed. "I love Danny dearly and I think he was under the gun too much. He received more blame than he deserved when things went wrong as well as more credit than he deserved when we lost, such is the nature of the job."

"Coach Landry said White will go into training camp as his starter, but when you sign your backup quarterback to a big, long term contract, you know the job is going to be up for grabs. It all depends on performance."

"I hope they solve it this summer."

ANOTHER TOUCHY area last season was the receiving corps, bereft of clutch performers like Drew Pearson and Butch Johnson.

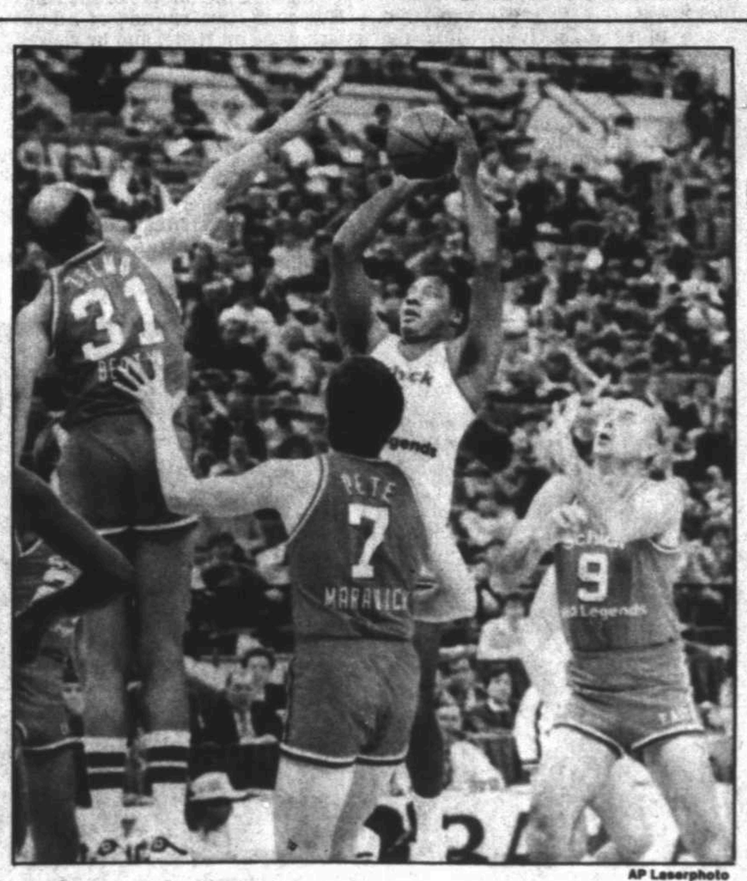

"It's a good receiving corps, Mike Renfro, Tony Hill, Doug Donley and Duriel Harris, a good addition. But it lacks the experience and that will take time."

As for missing the game, Barnes admitted, "I enjoyed watching the games on TV. You don't have the pressure. I enjoyed it so much, I wonder what took me so long to get out."

As he looks at the game today, Barnes sees "the kids coming into the pros each year as bigger, stronger, more coordinated. I think the era of the 10-15-16 year veteran is over."

On the struggling USFL, "It will be tough. A lot of teams are spending a lot of money and I understand a lot of teams are in trouble. Still, every year there's a surplus of good players coming out of college who want to play. This provides a place. I wish 'em luck."

Jones, an ex-boxer, was reminded that there was a big fight in Midland later in the day. Was he going? "I heard about it and would like to go, but I understand the last stage leaves Midland at 4:45 p.m."

Oscar Robertson goes up for shot and Zelmo Beaty blocks in NBA Legends Classic.

Beaty's splurge leads East vets

NBA Legends

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Six consecutive points by Zelmo Beaty gave the East a lead it never relinquished Saturday as the Red Holzman-coached squad defeated the West 63-53 in the annual NBA oldtimers game.

The 45-year-old Beaty, who made all four of his shots in the first half, gave the East an 8-7 edge to start his spurt. Rick Barry then fed Beaty underneath for a layup.

Baskets by Beaty and Earl Monroe gave the East a 14-9 lead and the West never drew closer than three points again.

"It was like two fighters going out. We did some feeling out in the first few minutes and then instincts took over," said former New York Knick Walt Frazier, who contributed seven points to the victory.

"We may be getting older but we still take pride in our performance whenever we get on the court," said Beaty. "This is a day I'll remember with all my pro accomplishments. I was on the same court as players who were pioneers in making the NBA as great as it is today."

Earl Monroe, a former teammate of Frazier with the Knicks, led all scorers with 14 for the East. Pete Maravich and Beaty also had 10 for the East, which was helped by a long hook shot by Tom Heinsohn, who was credited with a 3-point shot after a "dispute" with referee Norm Drucker.

"That's my first 3-point shot and the first time I've ever won a dispute with a referee," said Heinsohn.

Roger Brown, who hit a pair of 3-point shots, led the West with 10. John Havlicek scored nine for the losers, coached by former Indiana Pacer Coach Bobby Leonard.

The West took a 17-point advantage, its biggest of the game, on a Frazier basket. The field goal put the East ahead 53-36 with 7:48 to play. Eight straight points, including a 3-point shot by John Havlicek and a 3-point play by Oscar Robertson, pulled the East to within eight, 56-48, with three minutes to go.

Dave DeBusschere, the third former Knick who helped Holzman claim an NBA title, retaliated for the East with a tip-in and a rebound layup.

Rick Barry of the East only scored five points, but was the game's leading rebounder with 10.

Hawks' Wilkins slam dunks Bulls' Jordan

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Dominique Wilkins of the Atlanta Hawks got perfect scores on two dunks in the final round to defeat rookie Michael Jordan of the Chicago Bulls 147-136 Saturday in the National Basketball Association Slam-Dunk contest.

Wilkins, who won $12,000, received perfect scores of '10' from each of the five judges on his last two dunks. On the first, he bounced the ball off the floor before slamming it through and on the second he tried a two-hand "around-the world" dunk from the hip.

Wilkins, who finished third in the slam-dunk contest last year, was given 47 points on his first attempt in the final round, a back reverse dunk with a baseline approach.

Jordan, the spectacular first-year NBA star who also will start in Sunday's All-Star game, got 43, 44 and 49 points in his final round of dunks. He had a leap from the free-throw line in the semifinals for a perfect score that helped him reach the final.

Jordan had 142 points in the semifinals to 140 for Wilkins to give them berths in the finals. The semifinals had five players instead of four because of a computer glitch in the judging.

Defending champion Larry Nance of Phoenix finished with 131 points in the semifinals to finish fifth and 1984 runner-up Julius Erving was fourth with 132.

Terence Stansbury of the Indiana Pacers, a late replacement in the contest for Charles Barkley, led Wilkins and Jordan going into the final dunk of the semifinals. But he was passed by both players when he was too tentative on his last dunk and received only 39 points for a total of 136 and third place overall.

In the first round, Stansbury got the first of four perfect scores in the competition when he bounced the ball off the floor, did a 360-degree pivot and made the dunk.

After the first round, in which the top two finishers were supposed to advance to the semifinals, Wilkins had 145 points and Jordan and Stansbury 130 each. Nance and Erving reached the semifinals automatically.

Jordan and Stansbury had a "dunk-off" to determine the fourth semifinalist. Jordan was awarded 40 points, and Stansbury seemingly earned a berth with 46 points.

But a recheck of the judges' voting revealed that Jordan should have gotten 49 points for his dunk-off attempt. Since Stansbury had thought he only had to beat a score of 40, he also was given a semifinals spot.

Stansbury won $5,000 for third place and Erving and Nance $2,000 for fourth and fifth.

U.S. to ask IOC to declare 'doping' illegal

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — The International Olympic Committee will be asked by America's Olympic leaders to declare blood doping illegal in amateur sports, officaals said Saturday.

In addition, the U.S. Olympic Committee is expected to act at its next executive board meeting to ban blood doping for all U.S. athletes, according to F. Don Miller, the outgoing executive director of the USOC.

Earlier this year, it was revealed that at least five U.S. Olympic cyclists, including medalists Steve Hegg and Leonard Nitz, underwent blood doping just before their competition in the Los Angeles Games last summer. Several other cyclists said they had been offered the chance to undergo blood doping but declined.

Blood doping, or blood packing, is the practice of extracting blood from an athlete, concentrating its red blood cells and re-injecting those cells into the athlete's bloodstream.

Proponents say blood doping is a safe way to increase endurance by adding oxygen-carrying red cells to the body. But some medical experts warn that the practice can lead to illness.

Two lose in arbitration

NEW YORK (AP) — Montreal pitchers David Palmer and Bert Roberge won salary arbitration decisions while Expos catcher Bobby Ramos lost in the first three cases to be decided this year, a players' union official said Saturday.

An arbitrator ruled Saturday that Palmer, who went 7-3 with a 3.84 earned run average, should receive the $375,000 salary he requested. The Expos had offered $235,000.

Ramos, who hit .193 in 31 games, asked for $150,000, but an arbitrator ruled Saturday that he would get the $115,000 salary figure the Expos submitted.

Roberge, who was 3-3 with a 3.76 ERA with the Chicago White Sox before being traded to Montreal in December, was awarded the $95,000 salary he sought. The Expos had offered $60,000.

The decision on Roberge was made Friday, according to Arthur Schack, general counsel for the Major League Players Association.

Last year, only four of the 10 players whose cases went to salary arbitration were awarded the figures they requested. A total of 80 players filed for arbitration last year, but only 10 cases went to that stage.

This year, 98 players filed for salary arbitration and 38 are still eligible for the process.

Texas pitcher Dave Schmidt's arbitration case was heard Friday, while 55 other players either signed new contracts or agreed to terms before the arbitration stage. Cases may be heard through Feb. 20.

Women of Troy face tough task

Women's Basketball

By Associated Press

Last year, Cheryl Miller and her Southern California teammates dominated the NCAA women's basketball championship. This season, the Women of Troy, weakened by the graduation of Pam and Paula McGee, may only be bit players in next month's tournament.

"Anyone can win it this time," said Nora Lynn Finch, who chairs the selection committee. "It's got to be great for us from a marketing standpoint."

"Anyone" consists of seven strong contenders for the Final Four in Austin, Texas, March 29-31. But any of them could be upset along the way to the regional finals.

The field will consist of 32 teams — 17 conference champions and 15 at-large selections. The top eight will be seeded. The best prosects for seeding are the ones that have dominated the rankings all season: — Texas, Long Beach State, Old Dominion, Mississippi, Northeast Louisiana, Louisiana Tech and Georgia — and three or four others, including Ohio State, Penn State, Western Kentucky and Auburn.

The eastern teams considered strong contenders for berths either through automatic or at-large entry are North Carolina State, Virginia, Penn State, St. Joseph's, Old Dominion, Western Kentucky. North Carolina has been moving close to strong consideration for an at-large bid, if it doesn't win the Atlantic Coast.

West Virginia and St. Peter's are fringe prospects if they don't win the Atlantic 10 and Metro Atlantic bids. The wide-open Big East also has an automatic.

The Mideast teams with the inside track to the tourney would seem to be Ohio State, Memphis State, Georgia, Mississippi, and Auburn, the last three being members of the Southeastern Conference, which has no automatic qualifier this year because its schools don't all play each other.

Kentucky or Louisiana State could be a fourth participant, depending on performance over the next three weeks. Iowa has created interest with its recent 22,157 home crowd, but the Hawkeyes still need a strong second-place finish in the Big 10. The Mid-American, currently led by Central Michigan, has an automatic berth, as does the Ohio Valley, currently led by Middle Tennessee.

The Midwest seems ready to offer Texas, Northeast Louisiana and Louisiana Tech on the list of definites. Texas Tech would merit strong consideration as an at-large candidate by finishing a strong second in the Southwest Conference. Oklahoma could get an at-large invitation if it doesn't win the Big Eight, but its chances are not as strong as others in the nation. Drake, Southern Illinois and Illinois State are the race for the Gateway crown. Each is a fringe candidate for at-large choices.

January clings to stroke edge

FORT PIERCE, Fla. (AP) — Don January, blaming poor chip shots on his bogey, double-bogey finish, saw his lead shrink from four strokes to one after a 5-under for a 139 total in Saturday's second round of the $200,000 Sunrise Seniors Classic.

January, who fired a first-round 5-under 67, posted an even-par 72 in the second go-round to ace out Lee Elder's 67, for a 4-under 140, at the Tournament Players Club.

Tied for third at 3-under 141s were Bob Rosburg and Gene Littler, who had 69s Saturday; Gay Brewer, 70; Orville Moody, 71; and Charles Owens with 72.

Miller Barger had a low-round 66, for a 142, that included an eagle on No. 1, six birdies and bogies at the 10th and 18th.

January, trying out a new set of clubs during this opening event of the 1985 Senior Tour, won four tourneys last year and had 17 top-10 finishes in 19 starts.

On the 401-yard 17th, January was short of the green after hitting a 7-iron far out of a fairway bunker, chipping 12 feet past the cup and missing the par putt.

The 18th was also a problem, when his 4-iron effort went through the green to the back fringe of the 383-yard hole. January's chip shot back to the putting surface was 10 feet short, his putt to save par went a yard past and he missed the putt coming back.

Midlander recalls Autry way back when

One thing and another while wondering whatever happened to Jerry Tabb?...

One Midlander disappointed when California Angels' owner Gene Autry was snowed out of a visit to Midland was neighbor Bob Denton, who remembers the movies' first singing cowboy from way back when...

"I was working as night telegrapher for the Texas and Pacific Railroad in Tioga, Okla., and I remember Gene used to ride in to town bareback from the farm about a mile north of town. Sam Anderson's Barber Shop was the place where everyone hung out and Gene used to strum and sing, but I never thought anything would come of it," says octogenerian who has been a life-long railroad buff.

Autry later went to work for the railroad as a nite backup telegrapher before making it first in radio and then movies.

"I never thought much of his acting, but I liked his singing," recalls Denton, which is a pretty accurate appraisal. It was Gene's talent with music that was his fortune....all those gold records...

ERIC SCHURER, the new sports page byline, is native of Detroit and a product of Michigan State. Before coming to Midland, he worked at Lansing, Mich. His likes include 10-speeds, cross-country skiing, hockey and the Detroit Tigers. With Eric joining the staff, I no longer feel alone in Midland. There are now two hockey fans here. Cross-country skiing, maybe I can convert him to downhill now that he's out west where we have "them thar hills."...

A neighbor whose freezer went out gave us a shank of venison. The family pets got a share and it may have been a mistake. I could be in trouble with the game warden.

Stabbing changes outlook on life

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) — Brad Hastings usually held his own in the controlled violence of the football field.But the All-Southwest Conference linebacker from Texas Tech wasn't ready for the uncontrolled violence that confronted him New Year's Day.

One second there was an argument. The next second, Hastings had been stabbed, the knife puncturing his lung and nicking his heart.

"It happened so fast, I didn't know it happened," Hastings recalled. "Doctors said if the knife had hit a half an inch to the right, I would have been dead instantly."

HASTINGS chased down his attacker and cornered him until police arrived.

"Then I passed out," the 6-foot-3, 230-pound Hastings said. "I had already bled five pints of blood."

Doctors used 70 staples to close the surgical opening required to repair the damage.

Hastings has recovered to the point where he is enrolled again at Texas Tech and talking about lifting weights to regain his strength.There will be no spring football training for Hastings but he expects to play again in the fall.

Hastings was in intensive care for just two days and was home six days later.

"The doctors told me that if I had been an average person without football conditioning I would have died," he said. But being a football player might have caused the attacker to single out Hastings.

"Some friends of mine had rented out rooms to celebrate New Year's Eve at a place called Charlie's Club in Arlington," Hastings said. "It's a membership place and has a workout facility.

"There were some other people there I didn't know."

HASTINGS SAID a friend got into a brief fight with a man about 12:45 a.m. and it was broken up.

"Then a guy walked up to me and said a few words to try to provoke a fight," Hastings said. "I tried to get by him. But he got in my face then I pushed him."

A swift uppercut motion followed. The knife pierced a coat, sweater and shirt, and entered Hastings' left chest.

"Later, I heard a friend of ours say the guy who stabbed me had dropped out of school in the 11th grade, was discharged from the service, and was out to get people who had accomplished things," Hastings said. "He was trying to kill me. The only avenue he took was to my heart. The knife went in four inches."

The case is pending.

THE EVENT has changed the 20-year-old sophomore's outlook on life.

"It makes me look forward to each day now," he said. "It makes you think about going into clubs. It makes you realize what can happen. If he had had a gun I wouldn't be here today."

Hastings' chest is still numb and the staples are a constant reminder of what happened.

"Somebody upstairs was watching over me," Hastings said. "All I can say is that before someone gets into an argument he should realize the possible consequences no matter if it's junior high or high school or wherever.

"You just can't tell about people these days since things are so crazy. It's always the little guy who carries a weapon. It's becoming a violent society."

Lewis, Owens have lot in common

By BERT ROSENTHAL
AP Sports Writer

Carl Lewis and Jesse Owens have a lot in common.

Both were Olympic champions. Both won four gold medals in one Olympiad. Both won their golds were in the same event — the 100-meter dash, 200-meter dash, 400-meter relay and long jump.

Herb Douglas knows them both — and finds it very difficult to differentiate between the two athletically.

Douglas was a teen-ager when the late Owens was at his athletic peak during the mid-1930s, and later traveled with him for several years for business purposes.

He has known the 23-year-old Lewis since the quadruple 1984 gold medalist was about 16.

Wednesday, all three men were united, so to speak, as Douglas announced that Lewis was an overwhelming winner of the fifth annual Jesse Owens International Amateur Athlete Trophy. The previous winners were speedskater Eric Heiden in 1981, British middle-distance runner Sebastian Coe in 1982, women's distance runner Mary Slaney in 1983 and intermediate hurdler Edwin Moses in 1984.

"Each of these athletes exemplifies the spirit Jesse Owens showed throughout his lifetime, said Douglas, founder of the award and vice president of Schieffelin and Company.

"Carl's performance (at the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics) was equal to Jesse's (in the 1936 Berlin Olympics)," said Douglas, also an outstanding track and field athlete who won the bronze medal in the long jump (then called the broad jump) in the 1948 London Olympics.

"He was fluid, and he ran with ease, just the way Jesse ran. Carl's form is very similar to Jesse's, in all four events."

Despite the similarities, however, Douglas noted there are some significant differences between the two great track and field stars.

"Jesse came from more adverse conditions than Carl," explained Douglas, a former track and field standout and football player at the University of Pittsburgh. "Jesse came from a sharecropper's family.

"Carl came from a more middle-class family. His mother is a teacher, and his mother and father were athletes. Education begins in the home, and Carl has gotten a good education.

"But I don't think Carl is as natural (an athlete) as Jesse," continued Douglas. "He has had to acquire his form. He's had to train harder than Jesse.

"Also, Jesse never had a pulled muscle, he was never injured, he never missed a race — and I never heard him bum-rap anybody. He was a gentleman all the way. He never complained."

Douglas said he sympathized with Lewis for passing his final four attempts in the Olympic long jump — a decision that has resulted in much bad publicity.

"I know that one jump takes a lot out of you," Douglas said, recalling his younger days when he won national AAU and IC4A long jump titles. "Carl was preserving himself so he could run the 200 and the relay.

"People who have bum-rapped him should do more research into what it takes to run the 100, 200 and relay, and do the long jump. It was a chilly night (when Lewis was long jumping), and he could have pulled a muscle. Then (Kirk) Baptiste (the Olympic silver medalist) could have beaten him in the 200.

"Jesse used to do the same thing — he would take only one jump."

Douglas said he was only 13 years old when he first met Owens. That was in 1935, the year Owens broke three world records and tied another on the same day at Ann Arbor, Mich.

It was a feat that Douglas thinks makes Owens a greater athlete than Lewis, who has yet to set an individual world record, although he owns the best long jump and 200-meter performances ever at sea level and used to hold the fastest sea level time in the 100.

The first meeting between Douglas and Owens occurred in a high school in Pittsburgh, where Owens was making campaign appearances for Alf Landon as president.

"My mother took me to hear him," recalled Douglas. "When Jesse was leaving the auditorium, I was standing near the door, and I told him that I ran track in junior high school, did 21 feet, 8 inches in the long jump, ran the 100 in 10.4, high-jumped 6 feet.

Only 'perfect offer' will lure Kosar to NFL

MIAMI (AP) — Unless the National Football League comes forward with an offer that is "almost perfect," University of Miami quarterback Bernie Kosar says he'll remain with the Hurricanes for the 1985 season.

Kosar expects to graduate at the end of June, a year before his incoming class. Last month, a Miami television station reported that he was considering passing up his final two years of eligibility at UM.

But Kosar told The Miami News in its weekend editions, "I don't want to throw my name into the NFL draft just for the sake of it. If something concrete doesn't come up, I still have a good situation at the University of Miami. It's not like I'm disenchanted with the situation here."

Ever since Kosar's considerations were reported, his father has been talking with agents around the country in an effort to find out what kind of interest has been generated regarding his son.

But in the last month, not one NFL team has come forward and admitted it would take the steps necessary to draft Kosar, a redshirt sophomore who threw for 3,642 yards and 25 touchdowns last season and broke a series of school records.

"It looks like they (NFL teams) are waiting for me to make a move and I'm waiting for them to make a move," Kosar said. "It's a cat-and-mouse game, but I'm not going to go into the draft unless I know there is something solid for me. I'm in a very good position and the situation (in the NFL) would have to be good enough for me to make a move. I don't see myself making the first move."

The first move would entail Kosar either retaining an agent, who would then attempt to negotiate with interested parties, or declaring his intentions to play in the NFL next season.

Odessa's Dion Delao drops his guard for Tulsa's Keheven John son in a junior middleweight bout at Chaparral Center.

BLAKE

"I think if we had fought Arroyo, it would have been an easier fight for us because the southpaw is difficult," said Gersh. "We trained with a southpaw for two weeks, but it's still a difficult thing to adjust to."

"You have to give Medel a lot of credit," said Gorman. "He came here to fight. This wasn't the best of circumstances for Robin. He only trained for the fight for three weeks and bad weather cut into some of his running. You really need six or seven weeks for a fight like this."

About his sloppy performance, Blake said, "The bottom line is I won the fight. A lot of people excpect me to knockout everybody I face but they all don't realize how tough it is out there. I've got this shot at the title now, but first I'm going to let the swelling go down. The fighter's dream is to fight for the championship."

SATURDAY WAS also a big day for Midland brothers Richard and Joel Abila. Joel opened the day's fight card with a four-round unanimous decision over Capri Lipken of Houston to improve his record to 2-0.

Joel and Lipken used the same style of fighting, each relying on their quickness to beat the other to the punch. After the first round, which was nearly even, Joel started taking control, stalking Lipken around the ring. He dropped Lipken to the canvas in the second and third rounds for standing eight counds for the big difference in the fight.

Richard Abila also posted a unanimous decision, defeating Tulsa's 'Quick' Lee Cargle in the fight card's semi-main event.

Cargle, using a lot of showboat actions in the early rounds — fancy dancing and leg shuffles which drew a smile from Abila — couldn't stay in the middle of the ring where his quickness was most effective.

Abila kept driving his opponent into the ropes where he worked head and body combinations for eight rounds and a 79-73, 79-73, 79-75 judgement victory.

In the final round, already comfortably ahead, Abila gave Cargle a taste of his own theatrics, mimicing the Tulsa boxer's early showboating. Again, Abila was smiling in victory despite a battered nose that was swollen about twice its normal size.

The victory improved Abila's record to 13-1 while Cargle suffered his first pro defeat, falling to 10-1-1.

In other fights, Alex Medel showed a lacking of the skill that brought his brother to Chap Center's main event. Fort Worth's Vincent Releford battered the hapless Medel for six rounds to win a unanimous decision.

Releford improved his record to 3-0 while Medel fell to 6-2.

Seminole boxer Brad Bingham ended the day's fight card after the Blake-Medel bout with the card's only knockout, dropping Port Arthur's Troy Handy in the second round. Bingham is now 2-0-1 while Handy fell to 2-4-1.

Odessa's Dion Delao was little contest for Keheven Johnson as the Tulsa junior middleweight pounded out an easy unanimous decision to up his record to 4-1. Delao fell to 0-2.

eye in the first and then again in the second rounds, causing a large red swelling to pop up on his right eye.

But Joel unveiled a straight right lead that seemed to confuse his opponent, knocking him down in both the second and third rounds. Although the Houstonian was reeling, Joel could not put him out.

"He just kept coming," Abila said, "I thought I had him a couple of times, but he just kept coming back. He is a very tough man."

With more double-edged cards like Saturday's at Chap Center, the boxing world could hear a lot more about the 'tough' fighting Abila brothers of Midland.

Changes in free agency sought

By MURRAY CHASS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — If anyone believed that baseball's labor negotiations would not be troublesome, that optimistic view should be altered by the first proposals presented in the talks and the other side's reaction to them.

The players' representatives made the proposals — on the free-agency system — at the latest meeting Thursday in Chicago, and Lee MacPhail, the owners' chief negotiator, said afterward, "We understood this would be a difficult area. What they're talking about makes it more difficult."

Outlining the proposals Friday by telephone from Chicago, Donald Fehr, the players' chief negotiator, said, "These things are important to us, but we don't have to cross every 't' and dot every 'i' to have an agreement." Nevertheless, just about every proposal would move the free-agent system further from the present system. The owners appear willing to leave the system the way it is.

The players proposed eliminating the annual draft of those players declaring themselves free agents, allowing any club to sign any player but adding a condition for a player's former club. They also proposed eliminating the five-year waiting period to be a repeat free agent, changing the way amateur compensation is awarded for lost free agents and revising the definition of free agents requiring professional compensation.

IF THE draft were eliminated, the method of determining amateur draft-choice compensation would have to be changed. Under the current system, a free agent selected by four or more teams requires an amateur draft choice. The players proposed awarding an amateur draft choice for players defined as regulars over a two-year period. Furthermore, instead of coming from the first or second rounds of the amateur draft, as they do now, the compensation choices could be made between the first and second rounds.

One concern the players have had with the free-agent system has been the way former clubs of free agents have remained in the picture, thus inhibiting other teams, the players say, from negotiating seriously, even though the former clubs may not make significant offers. The players propose requiring the former team to make a bona fide offer based on fair market value or else lose the rights to negotiate with the free agent and to receive compensation when he is signed.

AS FOR professional compensation, the players proposed reducing from the top 20 per cent to the top 15 per cent of each ranking category the players who would qualify as Type A free agents and thus require professional compensation. If that policy had been in effect for the most recent free-agent group, the signings of Fred Lynn and Bruce Sutter would still have required professional compensation, but the signing of Cliff Johnson would not have.

The players also proposed redefining the pitching category to starters and short relievers, eliminating the possibility that a long reliever and spot starter, such as Tom Underwood in 1983, could be classified as Type A primarily because of number of innings pitched.

Finally, the players proposed eliminating the Type B player category altogether. Type B free agents are those who rank between the top 20 per cent and the top 30 percent and require compensation of a second amateur draft choice.

The owners' negotiators made no immediate counterproposals. The two sides are scheduled to meet Monday but only briefly. The owners' representatives may respond to the players' free-agent proposals at a meeting Feb. 19.

The University of Arkansas followed BYU's 889 total with 890 at the end of the 54-hole golf tournament that began Thursday at Campestre Country Club.

For $100, fans can be owners

By THOMAS ROGERS
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — For $100, football fans in Florida may have a chance to own a piece of a team.

The Jacksonville Bulls of the United States Football League have filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission for a public offering of 124,995 shares to be sold only in Florida at $100 a share.

That would still leave Fred Bullard as the managing general partner of the club with more than 50 percent interest. At the moment, Bullard owns almost all of the Bulls. He said he sold "less than 5 percent" to a few friends when the team was organized, before the 1984 season.

"We're on pretty sound financial footing," Bullard said Friday. "But this makes a lot of sense for us to do. It's a business decision, but it's also a way to get the community involved in our team. A guy who owns a piece of the action is a sure bet to pull for you."

Of course, an infusion of more than $12 million would also help defray some of the expense of hefty player contracts. In recent days the Bulls signed Mike Rozier, a running back, and traded with the Generals for their quarterback, Brian Sipe.

"If you're a guy like Donald Trump, with all that money, you don't have to do this," Bullard said. "But I would like to have as much money as Donald. So I have to do whatever I can."

Bullard also said that he expects the SEC to decide on the request within a month.

ALMOST everyone knows someone who does a recognizable impression of Marv Albert, the ubiquitous sports announcer whose descriptions of basketball, hockey, boxing and pro football have been filling airwaves for two decades. Albert constantly has people collaring him to display their impressions of his play-by-play technique.

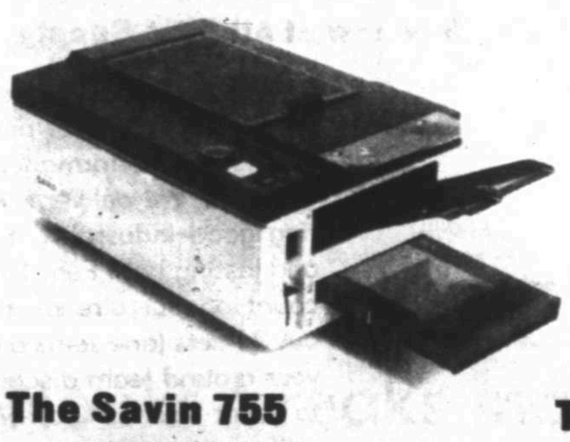

"I've even begun to rate them," he said Friday. "The best I've heard is Bob Costas of NBC, who is a shade better than a couple of other very good ones. Among athletes, Cazzie Russell is the best. He even has personal stationery with "Yes!" engraved on it.

"'It's flattering and kind of amusing to have people try to duplicate my voice and delivery. I started out trying to use things from other sports announcers — Marty Glickman's delivery, Les Keiter's flair and Vin Scully's broadcasting philosophy. But I've gone on to develop my own style, which has become lighter in terms of humor and approach in recent years."

The Madison Square Garden Network is giving Albert imitators a chance to test their talents in a "Marv Albert Sound-Alike Contest," with the winner getting to do a radio broadcast alongside Albert this spring. Benita Albert, Marv's wife, will be one of the contest's judges. She hears a different Marv around their Long Island home.

"His speech at home is slow and very low key," she says. "His words don't come out so quickly. That's probably because he uses up all his energy at games. When he's broadcasting, his feet are constantly going up and down in rhythm.

TCU surprises Arkansas, 72-66

FORT WORTH (AP) — Carven Holcombe and Dennis Nutt combined for 40 points to lead Texas Christian to a 72-66 overtime win against Arkansas Saturday, marking the Horned Frogs' first regular season win over the Razorbacks in 13 years.

Holcombe's 14-foot bank shot with 22 seconds left in regulation knotted the score at 57, and Byron Irvin's jumper at the buzzer for Arkansas was no good, sending the game into overtime.

In overtime, Arkansas jumped out to a 61-57 lead on baskets by senior center Joe Kleine and William Mills, but TCU rallied to take a 63-62 lead.

The Horned Frogs shot free throws the rest of the way to preserve the win.

Kleine led all scorers with 37 points, but he collected only six rebounds as TCU out-boarded the Razorbacks 37-26. TCU's Greg Grissom and Norman Anderson tied for game-high honors with eight rebounds apiece.

The win upped TCU's record to 13-9 overall and 5-6 in Southwest Conference play, while Arkansas fell to 16-9 and 7-4.

"I don't know whether you'd call this an upset," Arkansas coach Eddie Sutton said. "There aren't many upsets in our league any more. TCU is a good team, but so is everyone else in our league."

TCU coach Jim Killingsworth said, "He (Kleine) is such a great competitor. Their whole team is, and that's what makes this win so satisfying. Arkansas was not flat."

Holcombe led TCU in scoring with 22 points, with Nutt adding 18 and Tracy Mitchell 11. Charles Balentine, who fouled out in overtime, was the only other Arkansas player in double figures with 14 points.

The win was TCU's most recent regular season SWC triumph over Arkansas since a 98-90 Horned Frog win in 1972. Arkansas has since defeated TCU 28 of 29 times.

UTEP cuffs BYU in OT free-for-all

From Wire Reports

EL PASO — Senior forward Donnell Allen hit seven points in triple overtime to give Texas-El Paso a WAC win over Brigham Young Saturday in a heated game that saw three players ejected after a brief free-for-all.

Allen scored from eight feet out with 4:03 remaining in the third overtime to put the Miners up 79-77 and on top for good.

The win upped the Miners' season record to 18-6 and 10-2 in the WAC, and kept them in the front position in the race for the conference title. The Cougars, who handed Texas-El Paso its first WAC loss earlier this season in Utah, fell to 13-10 and 7-5.

Texas-El Paso managed to climb on top with 0:39 left in the game, 64-63, but a fight that erupted between Miner senior Luster Goodwin and Cougar senior Scott Sinek enabled Brigham Young to tie the game and send it into overtime.

Sinek, Goodwin and Miner Kent Lockhart, who also jumped into the fray, were ejected from the game.

W. Texas St. 64, SIU 57

AMARILLO — Earl Davis scored 12 points to help lead West Texas State in the Missouri Valley Conference.

The victory upped West Texas State's season record to 9-13 and 2-10 in the conference. Southern Illinois dropped to 10-12 and 2-9, and the two teams will battle the final two weeks of the league season to stay out of the MVC cellar.

The Buffaloes led by 8 at the half, 32-24, and their eventual victory snapped a six-game losing streak.

UT-SA 83, SW Texas St. 76

SAN ANTONIO— Derrick Gervin scored 28 points and pulled down 10 rebounds to power Texas-San Antonio.

Texas-San Antonio is now 12-8 on the year; Southwest fell to 5-16.

W. Texas St. 64, SIU 57

AMARILLO — Earl Davis scored 12 points to help lead West Texas State past Southern Illinois 64-57 in the MVC.

The victory upped West Texas State's season record to 9-13 and 2-10 in the conference. Southern Illinois dropped to 10-12 and 2-9, and the two teams will battle the final two weeks of the league season to stay out of the MVC cellar.

DENTON — Karl Malone scored 21 points and connected on seven of 12 shots from the field to lead No. 14 Louisiana Tech over North Texas St.

Texas

The 6-foot-9, 250-pound forward was seven of eight from the free-throw line. Reserve forward Willie Bland came off the bench to score 18 points, while Robert Godbolt also scored in double figures with 11.

North Texas was dealt its eighth consecutive conference setback. The Eagles are now 3-18 overall and 0-8 in conference play. Tech stands at 20-2 and 7-1.

SE La 70, Sam Houston St. 68

HUNTSVILLE— Junior forward Robert Cousin scored 25 points to lead Southeastern Louisiana.

The Lions, who ran their league record to a perfect 5-0, are now 14-7 for the season, while Sam Houston fell to 12-9 and 2-2 in conference play.

The Bearkats took a 36-34 halftime lead. But Cousin and sophomore guard Keith Gordon helped the Lions regain strength throughout the second half.

TTA 75, NE La 74 (OT)

ARLINGTON — Texas-Arlington scored four points in the final two seconds, including freshman Roderick Ford's shot at the buzzer after an intercepted inbounds pass, to stun Northeast Louisiana in overtime n a Southland Conference thriller.

The victory was the 100th career win for UTA head coach Bob "Snake" LeGrand. The Mavs raised their record to 12-11 for the season and 3-5 in SLC play while Northeast Louisiana fell to 15-7 and 4-4.

Arkansas St. 69, Lamar 67

JONESBORO, Ark. Arkansas State University hit 17 of 21 free throws to defeat the Lamar Cardinals in a Southland Conference game.

The Cardinals had won five straight games and eight of their past nine before losing to the Indians, who came off three straight losses.

The Indians, now 9-10 and 3-4 in the SLC, were led by junior guard Tim Norman with 18 points. Junior forward Mike Todd and sophomore guard Marchie Murdock added 12 points apiece, and sophomore forward Reggie Gordon had 11.

Angelo St. 81, Abilene Christian 65

SAN ANGELO-Bryan Essary's 22 points led Angelo State to an 81-65 victory over Abilene Christian Saturday night in a game that pushed the Rams into a tie for the Lone Star Conference lead.

Angelo State improved its record to 15-11 for the season and 5-1 in league play. Abilene Christian's Wildcats fell to 14-9 and 5-4.

The Rams led by as much as 20 points in the second half.

Ryant Greene led ACU with 18 points.

Mullin ignites St. John's charge

From Wire Reports

PHILADELPHIA — Chris Mullin scored 12 of his 21 points in the final 6:14 of the game as top-ranked St. John's, 19-1, rallied to beat Villanova 70-68 in the Big East Saturday.

The Redmen are 11-0 in the Big East. The 19th-ranked Wildcats slipped to 15-6 and 7-4.

St. John's trailed 54-52 with 7:15 remaining when the 6-foot-6-inch Mullin started his roll.

Mullin tied the score at 54 and sent St. John's ahead 56-54 with 5:39 to play. Villanova's Ed Pinckney regained the lead for Villanova at 57-56 on a three-point play. But Mullin connected again for St. John's to give the Redmen a lead they never lost. Mullin followed with a steal and layup that made it 61-57 with 3:28 left on the clock.

Villanova cut St. John's lead to 61-59 with 3:04 to go. But Bill Wennington, who scored 14 points, and Mullin followed with field goals for a 65-59 lead with 1:22 to play.

Villanova stormed back to come within two at 68-66 with a jumper at four seconds. Mike Moses made two free throws at the one-second mark for St. John's to make it 70-66. Villanova's Mark Palansky scored on a layup as the buzzer sounded.

Mullin, who had only four points in the first half, finished with 7-for-16 from the field, 7-of-9 free throws, eight rebounds and six assists.

Georgetown 78, Boston College 68

BOSTON — David Wingate and Bill Martin combined for nine consecutive points in the final 3:07 to break open a tight game and lift second-ranked Georgetown over Boston College.

Boston College had closed a 59-49 deficit midway through the second half to 67-66 on a jumper from the left corner by Michael Adams with 3:55 remaining.

Martin was fouled by Trevor Gordon and hit two foul shots to start the rally. He connected on another pair after being fouled by Roger McCready to make the score 71-66 with 1:51 left.

Wingate, who led the Hoyas with 18 points, then drove the lane for a basket and was fouled by Gordon. He hit the free throw to open the lead to 74-66 with 52 seconds to go. Wingate ended the run with two more free throws with 36 seconds remaining.

Georgetown, which led 44-38 at halftime, improved its record to 21-2 overall and 8-2 in the Big East.

Boston College, which led just once by one point early in the game, had its five-game winning streak stopped and fell to 16-6, including 5-6 in the conference.

Tulsa 87, Wichita 75

WICHITA, Kan. — Senior forward Herbert Johnson, of Midland, Texas, scored 32 points and snared 15 rebounds and Steve Harris added 18 points as 17th-ranked Tulsa Hurricane snapped the Shockers' seven-game winning streak in a Missouri Valley Conference game.

The victory left both teams tied for first place in the MVC with 9-2 league records.

Wichita State, 13-9 overall, battled back from a 16-point deficit early in the second half to pull to 51-47 with 14 minutes remaining. The Shockers trailed 65-63 with 8:09 remaining. The Hurricane, 18-4 overall, then ran off nine straight points, seven on of one-and-one free throw opportunities.

Xavier McDaniel paced the Shockers with 31 points, including 14 of their last 22. He had 20 rebounds. Aubrey Sherrod added 22 points for Wichita State.

Michigan 57, Illinois 45

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Antoine Joubert and Richard Rellford led a second-half comeback that lifted No. 8 Michigan to a Big Ten win No. 9 Illinois Saturday.

The victory left Michigan a half-game ahead of idle Iowa with a 9-2 Big Ten record, 18-3 overall. Illinois, the preseason favorite to win the conference title, slipped to 6-5 and 18-7 after losing both games on their road swing into the Great Lakes State.

The injury-riddled Fighting Illini, who dressed only eight players, took advantage of Michigan's sloppy play and forged a 26-24 lead at the half.

The two teams traded baskets in the second half until a pair of free throws by Bruce Douglas put Illinois ahead 31-30.

Joubert and Rellford each finished with 10 points but Joubert had eight in the second half — including a run of six in a row — and Rellford had seven in the final 20 minutes.

Tarpley led all scorers with 17 points — 11 in the first half — and pulled down a game-high 8 rebounds while Grant finished with 14 points for Michigan.

Duke 70, Maryland 62

DURHAM, N.C. — Mark Alarie scored 21 points and Johnny Dawkins added 20 to lead No. 5 Duke to an ACC win over 20th-ranked Maryland, denying Terrapin Coach Lefty Driesell his 500th coaching victory.

Strickland added 10 points for Duke, 17-4 and 6-4 in the ACC. Bias led Maryland with 21 points while Adkins added 14, Tom Jones added 11 and Adrian Branch 10. Maryland is 19-7, 5-3 in the ACC.

Syracuse 65, Notre Dame 62

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Dwayne "Pearl" Washington scored a game-high 20 points and Rafael Addison added 17 for sixth-ranked Syracuse, 16-4.

The lead changed hands five times in a hard-fought second half that also saw eight ties. David Rivers and Ken Barlow led the Irish with 16 points each.

Fouls hurt Notre Dame, 13-6, late in the game, and Syracuse hit nine of 12 from the free-throw line, including three by Addison in the closing minute after the Irish tied for the last time at 56-56 on a field goal by Donald Royal.

Oklahoma 81, Kansas St. 75

MANHATTAN, Kan. — All-American Wayman Tisdale scored 27 points — 17 in the second half — to lead seventh-ranked Oklahoma.

Oklahoma, 8-0 in the conference and 19-4 overall, outscored Kansas State 8-2 over a 2½-minute stretch in the second half to break open the see-saw contest. A basket by guard Linwood Davis capped the scoring drive to give the Soooners a 53-45 lead with 16 minutes remaining.

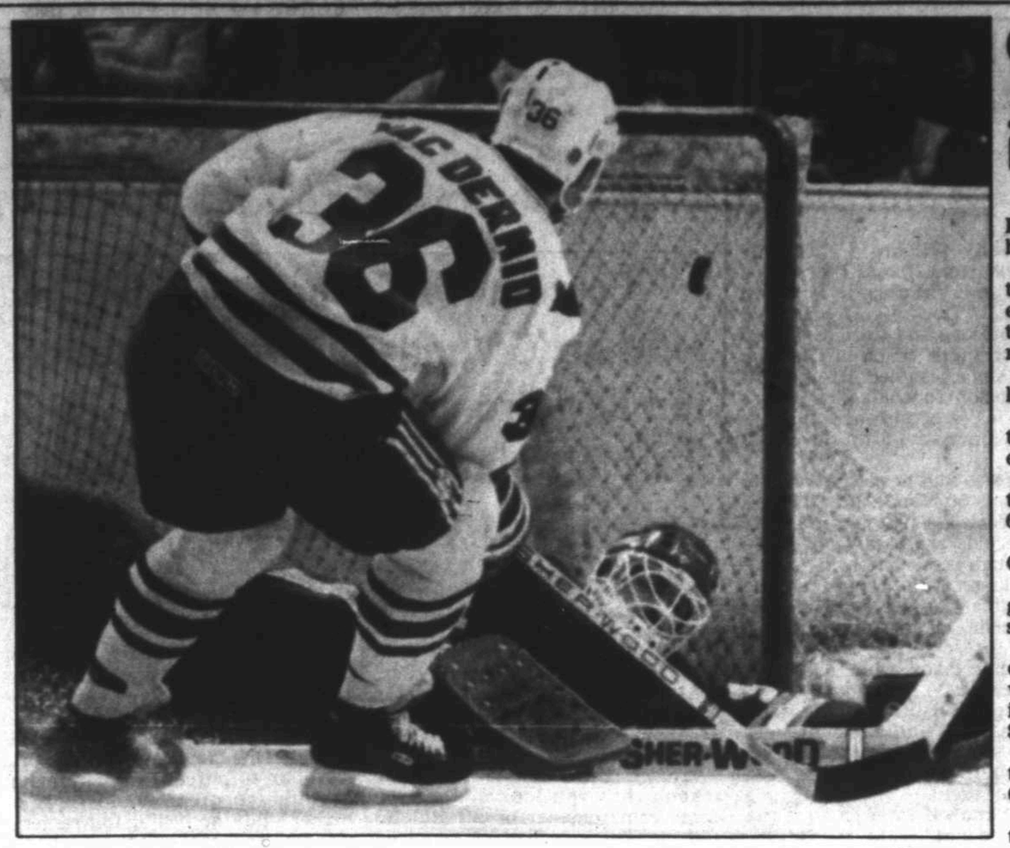

The Wildcats, 1-7 and 10-11, came no closer than three points during the rest of the game.

Fresno St. 63, UNLV 52

FRESNO, Calif. — Senior center Scott Barnes and junior forward Jos Kuipers each scored 18 points to lead Fresno State to a upset of 11th-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas in the PCAA.

The loss snapped a 17-game Las Vegas winning streak, the longest streak in the nation. It also prevented Las Vegas Coach Jerry Tarkanian from getting his 400th career coaching win and was the first loss in PCAA play for the Rebels.

Fresno State is now 9-2 in the conference and 14-6 overall. Las Vegas dropped to 11-1 in the conference and 18-3 overall.

O'Meara back in front again

HONOLULU (AP) — Mark O'Meara was the PGA comeback player of the year in 1984, now he's shooting for player of the year.

A winner last week, and playing better than that now, O'Meara shot a 7-under-par 65 and established 4-stroke command Saturday after the third round of the Hawaiian Open Golf Tournament.

O'Meara scored the second victory of his career last week in the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am.

But O'Meara, who has not yet made a bogey in this tournament, refused to let himself "get too excited.

"There are a lot of good players behind me. If the wind stays down, somebody can shot a 65 or 64 tomorrow (Sunday)," he said.

But Craig Stadler, one of those chasing O'Meara, took a different view.

"A 4-stroke lead is tough to make up on this golf course. There are too many birdie holes," he said.

"He's playing so well, playing with such confidence, it will be a difficult chase," said Simons, who is tied for second with Larry Nelson going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $90,000 first prize.

O'Meara completed three rounds in 198, a distant 18 shots under par on the Waialae Country Club course.

His effort, capped by an 18th hole birdie after the national television cameras had ended their coverage for the day, gave him an opportunity to become the first man to score consecutive victories on the Professional Golfers Association Tour since Gil Morgan won the first two tournaments in 1983.

Bossy, Trottier pace NY Islanders

NHL

From Wire Reports

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — Mike Bossy and Bryan Trottier scored two goals each as the New York Islanders won their fourth straight.

Pittsburgh is 0-7-1 in its last eight games.

Bossy, who has six goals and five assists in his last three games, got the Islanders started at 7:54 of the opening period, blasting a 30-foot slapshot past Penguins goalie Denis Herron on a breakaway. Linemates Brent Sutter and John Tonelli — who along with Bossy will start for the Wales Conference in Tuesday night's All-Star Game — set up the goal with perfect advance passes.

Black Hawks 6, Bruins 5

BOSTON — Bob Murray's power-play goal at 13:42 of the third period capped Chicago's comeback from a three-goal deficit.

With the score tied 5-5, Denis Savard passed the puck from the left board across the slot of Murray, who fired a 10-footer past goalie Pete Peeters for his third goal of the season. It came just 1:19 after Rick Middleton tipped in a pass from Butch Goring to tie the score with his 18th goal.

The Black Hawks now are 2-0 with new Coach Bob Pulford after losing their last four games under Orval Tessier.

Devils 2, Nordiques 2, tie

QUEBEC — Left wing Michel Goulet scored his 36th goal of the season late in the third period to give Quebec a tie.

With time running out, Goulet, positioned at the side of the New Jersey net, took a pass from Anton Stastny and banged a bouncing puck by goaltender Glenn Resch at 14:06.

The Devils, undefeated in their last four games, held a 2-1 lead on goals by Kirk Muller and Rich Preston. Jean-Francois Sauve scored the first goal for Quebec, a power-play effort midway through the opening period.

The tie moved Quebec into sole possession of third place in the Adams Division, one point ahead of Boston. New Jersey tied Pittsburgh with 41 points in the Patrick Division race, one point behind the fourth-place New York Rangers.

Oilers 6, Red Wings 5

DETROIT — Jari Kurri and Glenn Anderson scored third-period goals 45 seconds apart to lift the Edmonton Oilers over the Detroit Red Wings.

Kurri, whose 52 goals trail only teammate Wayne Gretzky, beat Detroit netminder Corrado Micalef with a 40-foot slapshot at 1:23 and Anderson added his 29th from a scramble at 2:08 to give the Oilers their 10th victory in 11 games.

Detroit grabbed a 5-3 edge in the middle period when John Ogrodnick and Kelly Kisio both scored their second goals of the game, but the Oilers began their comeback with 32 seconds remaining in the period on Mike Krushelnyski's second of the contest and 35th of the season.

Flyers 5, Capitals 4

LANDOVER, Md. — A goal by Paul Propp with two seconds remaining, the only Philadelphia goal not scored by Tim Kerr, gave the Flyers a victory over the Washington Capitals.

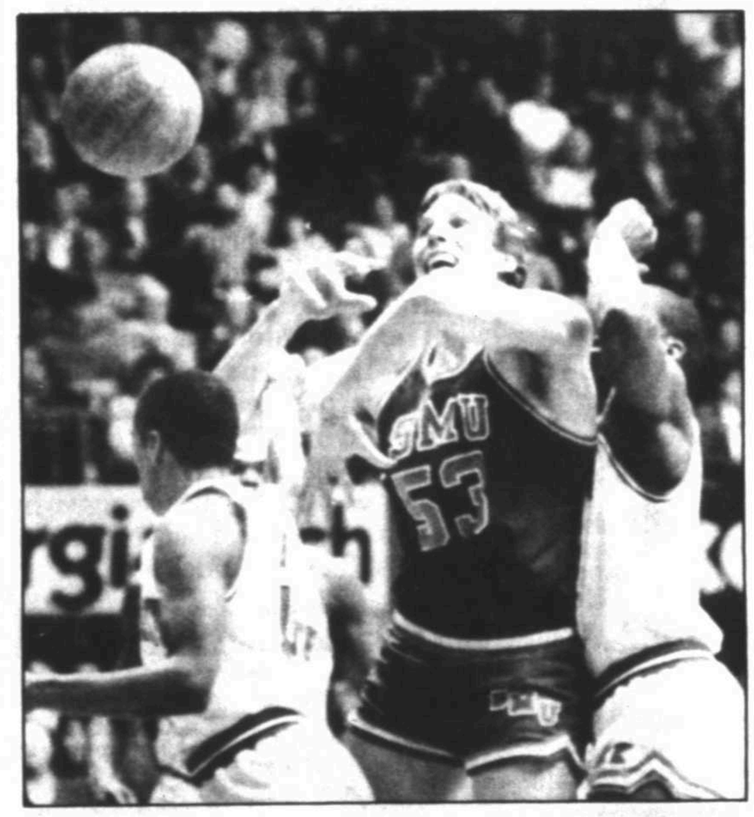

After breaking Washington's three-game winning streak, the Flyers moved to within nine points of the first-place Capitals in the Patrick Division. Philadelphia has played three fewer games than the Capitals.

Kerr, who upped his season total to 43 while scoring four goals for the third time this season, twice gave Philadelphia the lead, but the Capitals responded quickly to tie the score each time.

After scoring at 15:02 of the first period to match the first of Dave Christian's two goals, Kerr scored on a power play at 7:12 of the second period and made it 3-1 on a rebound shot at 11:51.

But Mike Gartner scored his 35th goal for Washington just nine seconds later, and Christian tied it 3-3 after another 53 seconds.

The Flyers, who had won only once in the six previous games, have a 3-1-1 record against the Capitals this season. The latest was before a record crowd of 18,130, Washington's fifth sellout of the season, which inclued a sizeable representation from Philadelphia.

Another ambush in New Mexico

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

This ought to be considered double jeopardy, or something. Midland College just escaped one New Mexico ambush. Now it faces another Monday night at Roswell.

MC defeated New Mexico Junior College, 78-75, last Thursday to end a five-game reign of terror that caught in its net the Odessa College Wranglers. It was a loss that cost OC its share of first place in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference.

Now, it's rejuvenated New Mexico Military Institute, probably still harboring a grudge for that 97-70 licking the Chaparrals doled out back in December.

MC IS 20-3 and 11-1 going into tonight's game and holds a one-game lead over the hotly pursuing Wranglers as the Chaps begin a week of walking over hot coals.

NMMI is 16-6 and 8-4 in WJCAC play and dangerous. Just ask Amarillo College, a 63-61 overtime victim of the Cadets a couple of weeks ago.

NMMI feels it needs this one to remain in a favorable position for a berth in the Region V Juco tournament at Snyder in March.

It's also an important game for the Chaps, who feel they must win here with Amarillo College looming Thursday night in a homecoming game at the Chaparral Center. The Badgers from the Panhandle handed MC one of its three losses this season.

MC Chaps

COACH JERRY Stone has been getting his usual first rate performance out of 6-9 Teviin Binns and his other starters, but the thing that has made the Chaps tough this half has been the bench. Someone is always coming off the boards to give the team a lift. Ricky Grace has been Mr. Consistency since recovering from a motorcycle accident injury and then there are Eddie Frazier, Tony Wright, Pooky Wigington, Deon Hunter to come up with a big game when it is needed.

Binns is the WJCAC leader in scoring, rebounds and blocked shots. It's essential that the Chaps get the big game out of the big guy. But the supporting cast includes Vernon Coleman, the free throw percentage leader; Zeak Williams, the man with the quick hands, and Chuckie Graves and Lawrence Chumbley who back up Binns on the boards. Chumbley came up with one of his best games of the season at Hobbs Thursday as MC avoided the upset.

Charles Brown, 16.1 per game; Johnn Wilson, 13.6; Eric Adams, 12.6, and Joe Johnson, 11.2, give NMMI balanced scoring.

Johnson also leads the league in assists with 6.9 per game, dishing out 14 in one game against South Plains.

And the Cadets have an intimidator of their own in Wilson, who is fifth in blocked shots with 29, well behind Binns' 70. In steals, Johnson is fifth with 55.

Hooks breaks mark

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Triple Olympic gold medalist Valerie Brisco-Hooks smashed the American indoor record in the women's 400-meter dash for the second straight week and four-time Olympic gold medalist Carl Lewis performed a unique double Saturday night in the Vitalis-U.S. Olympic Invitational track and field meet at the Meadowlands Arena.

Brisco-Hooks held off Diane Dixon to win the 400 in 52.63 seconds, well below the record of 52.99 she had set last week at Dallas. Her time also was the fastest ever run indoors in the United States.

The previous best was 52.88 by June Griffith of Guyana at New York in 1982.

The world indoor best for the distance is 49.59, by Jarmila Kratochvilova of Czechoslovakia at Milan, Italy in 1982.

Brisco-Hooks, the Olympic gold medalist in the individual 200-meter and 400- dashes — the first male or female to accomplish the feat — and in the 1,600-meter relay, was out fast in Saturday night's race.

She led every step of the way but in the closing stages Dixon charged at her and just missed catching her at the finish.

Dixon was timed in 52.64, only one-hundredth of a second behind Brisco-Hooks — and also was under both the previous American record and all-comers' mark.

Earlier, Lewis ran a near-perfect 55-meter dash, then sang a near-perfect national anthem in his first public attempt at "The Star Spangled Banner."

The 23-year-old, four-time Olympic gold medalist started slowly in the sprint, then accelerated quickly and won the race for elite runners in 6.15 seconds.

After the race, the globetrotting Lewis, who received the Jesse Owens International Amateur Athlete Trophy in New York Wednesday and won the long jump in Los Angeles Friday night, caught his breath and sang "The Star Spangled Banner."

His singing was near-flawless, marred only by two minor mistakes — saying "as" instead of "at" and "for" instead of "or." But his voice was loud and clear.

Before singing, Lewis sipped on a cup of tea, to soothe his throat.

"It's real dry in here," he said. "But I feel pretty good."

Vanderbilt always seemed above drug scandal

Steroid controversy clouds Rhodes scholar reputation

By SKIP LATT

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Vanderbilt University has produced 29 Rhodes scholars and no Heisman Trophy winners. It appears to be the last place one would expect to find a drug scandal in the athletic department.

Long a football doormat in the Southeastern Conference, the Commodores reached respectability in the last three seasons — only to see a controversy over the use of steroids by some athletes cast a cloud over those accomplishments.

"It was a shock to see something like steroids in the headlines," said Paul Harrawood, dean of the Vanderbilt School of Engineering and the faculty chairman of the university's Intercollegiate Athletics Committee."Of course, my initial reaction was a quick defensive posture, but then you have to realize there is something there."

"Concern would best describe my reaction," Vanderbilt Athletic Director Roy Kramer said. "These days it's pretty hard to be shocked about anything that comes down the street."

THE STEROID issue burst upon the normally quiet campus through an investigation by the Tennessee Bureau of Investigation into the source of the anti-inflammatory drug phenylbutazone found in the body of Augustinius Jaspers, a track star at Clemson University who died last Oct. 19 of heart failure.

M. Woody Wilson, a Nashville pharmacist, told Sports Illurstrated that he and Vanderbilt strength coach E.J. "Doc" Kreis provided phenylbutazone and steroids to Sam Colson, strength coach at Clemson who has since resigned. Kreis, a former Clemson football player, has taken a leave of absence and has declined comment on the investigation.

Wilson also said he sold steroids to as many as 50 Vanderbilt football players from late 1982 to September 1984. Steroids are legally available only through prescription.

Arzo Carson, TBI director, said the investigation may deal with the illegal dispensing of more than 100,000 doses of prescription drugs from Wilson's pharmacy, which closed in September 1984.

Although Wilson said his drug deliveries to Vanderbilt players were "no secret," George MacIntyre, the football coach, said he was unaware of them.

"I don't know if I was naive of the problem or not," said MacIntyre, lampooned recently in the school newspaper, The Hustler. He was portrayed in a cartoon standing among a group of one-eyed, two-headed "steroid mutants."

STEROIDS ARE synthetically produced substances similar to male hormones. Many athletes believe they help develop muscle bulk and, thus, strength. But medical authorities say there has been no proof of such help and warn that steroids have been found to lead to liver damage and other ailments.

> "Concern would best describe my reaction," Vanderbilt Athletic Director Roy Kramer said. "These days it's pretty hard to be shocked about anything that comes down the street."

Kramer said he did not feel the steroid investigation was a sign that, at Vanderbilt, the student-athlete has become the athlete-student.

"That might be the case at some schools, but you look at the academic requirements for our athletes and the programs they are required to take," Kramer said. "There is no doubt that the student is first and the athlete is second."

A full athletic scholarship to Vanderbilt is worth approximately $12,000 a year, and it is not dispensed casually by the privately endowed university. Athletes here compete not only on the playing field but also in the classroom.

The average Vanderbilt student possesses a Scholastic Aptitude Test score of 1,112.One-third of the 1984-85 freshman class ranked in the top 10 percent of their graduating class in high school and 50 percent of the school's 5,000 undergraduates who obtain their bachelor's degree will pursue some form of graduate work.

About 40 percent of Vanderbilt athletes go on to some form of higher study, according to Kramer.

While the school has enjoyed a good reputation academically, its football teams generally have not been widely respected. The program has improved under MacIntyre, however, with the 1982 team finishing 8-3 with a Hall of Fame Bowl berth and last season's club ranked briefly in AP's Top Twenty.

MACINTYRE feels that pressure to perform could be a contributing factor to the use of steroids by some athletes, not just at Vanderbilt but across the nation. Others agree.

"The great sadness is that there are people in the past who have bought athletes with money, steroids and drink," said Bill Wade, a Vanderbilt booster who quarterbacked at Vandy from 1948-52 and went on to spend 14 years in the National Football League with the Los Angeles Rams and Chicago Bears.

"College athletics is out of hand in this country and it's not due so much to the coaches as it is to the people who put undue pressure on athletics," Harrawood said. "The coaches ... are in a bind because of the pressure to win."

"These kids want to get bigger, stronger and quicker, and when we, as coaches, see them doing it, we congratulate them," MacIntyre said. "I mean, what are we supposed to say, 'Aw, now, you're getting too big. You'd better stop that.' Or ... 'You better slow down.' That's ludicrous."

Wade said that he "never saw any drugs while at Vanderbilt," but several former Vanderbilt football players said they were aware of the use of steroids.

"It wasn't for public display," said Joe Staley, a Commodore defensive end and linebacker during 1979-82. "A guy wouldn't bring steroids into the weight room and yell, 'Here's the steroids.' But you could get them."

Since the investigation became public, Kramer has announced the start of random steroid testing for all Vanderbilt athletes.

Failure to pass the test could result in the loss of both athletic eligibility and financial aid for the athlete, according to Kramer.

CHANCELLOR JOE B. Wyatt said the university had taken a "bold step" in initiating the steroid testing program.

"The measure of a person or an institution is how they deal with bad news," he said. "In this particular case, I think Vanderbilt was decisive in beginning to act once the problem was raised."

Kramer's action generally has gained approval from the school's academic community and the public, but it may still be too early to determine if steroids have tarnished Vanderbilt's image.

"Whether there is a positive or negative impact is hard to say," Kramer said. "Based on recruiting, it has not had any detrimental effect and that's the only way I have to assess it at the present time."

Wyatt said he believed that the school's football program had not been set back by the steroids issue.

"Everything that we know suggests that there were very few athletes using steroids at Vanderbilt and they were using them very privately," the chancellor said. "Most of the youngsters who built up their bodies in the strength program did so with diet and exercise."

Harrawood believes that "Vanderbilt will come out of this with a positive and possibly a better image than before because it has shown it is committed to what is proper."

MIDLAND IS NOW 100 YEARS OLD. Historians tell us that a few years prior to 1880, Lum Medlin, a lone hunter, made what was later to become Midland his home. Researchers studying this area tell us that Lum was one of the first white men to settle in this area. Early in 1880, R. N. Garrett arrived here with a flock of sheep being driven to market. Like many of those who followed, Garrett took an immediate liking to the surroundings and settled here permanently. Shortly thereafter, his California family joined him.

In those early days the railroad people dropped off a box car to service the growing community as depot, post office and general store. On February 2, 1885 Midland County was established; 26 days later Midland was designated a city.

The old, middle-aged and young enterprises of Midland have contributed immeasurably to the progress, pride and prosperity of our city. You will be interested in reading this list of leading firms and organizations whose names have been arranged by the number of years they have served Midlanders and other West Texas residents.

San Angelo wins Odessa golf tourney

From Staff Reports

San Angelo scored a two-day team total of 666 to take first place in the Odessa Invitational High School Golf tournament, beating out Odessa Permian by two strokes at Mission CC.

Abilene Cooper, the power in the District 4-5A competition the last few years, posted a 671.

Midland Lee took fourth with a 688 and Midland High was sixth with 712 after Saturday's matches played in high winds.

Bobby Cotner, San Angelo, took medal honors while Bobby Gee, Midland Lee, was second with a 162.

Midland and Midland Lee travel for the Del Rio Invitational Friday and Saturday.

The 41st West Texas Relays will be held March 8-9 at Odessa's Ratliff Stadium with more than 1,500 athletes expected to compete, according to Alan Bishop, sports committee chairman. Running events begin at 2:30 Friday and noon Saturday. Potential sponsors are advised to contact the Odessa Chamber of Commerece...

Dr. Jim Gilbert scored a hole in one on the 155-yard sixth hole at Green Tree CC Saturday. He used a wedge. He was playing with Kent Findley, Bill Gilluly and Dennis Sledge...

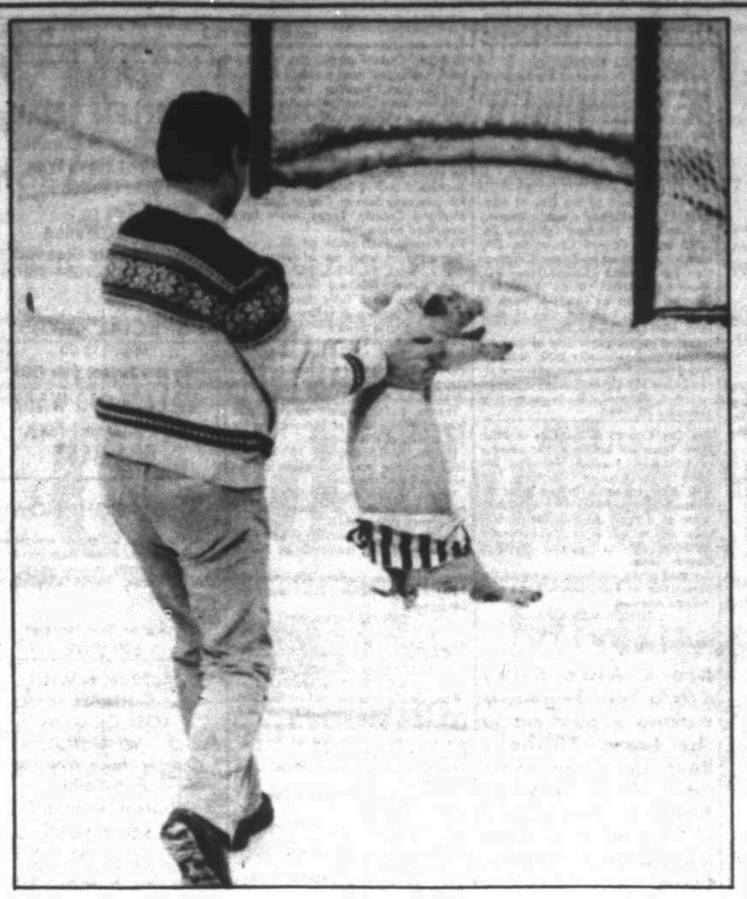

The West Texas-New Mexico Soap Box Derby will be held in Carlsbad, N.M., July 6-7. Any boy or girl 9 to 15 interested may contact Soap Box Derby Daryl Gough (885 3200) or Tuffy Hennington (887 6864)...

Wichita State plays Texas Tech March 13 at Midland's Angels Stadium, the first college game for Midland in several years...

The Midland Softball Association will hold its annual meeting 7:30 p.m. Feb. 25 at Midland Center. Team sponsor fees of $375 per team are due at the meeting along with team registration cards. Players' fees of $18 for residents and $15 for non-residents are due April 8...

The 12th annual Keystone Kaper, a 10-kilometer cross-country ski race on Keystone, Colorado's, 18-hole golf course will be held Saturday. It is open to all levels of nordic skiers and takes from 40 minutes to two hours to compete, depending on ability. If you liked Silverton's Mount Kendall run, you'll enjoy this, too...

With sign-up day at hand, James Kennedy (McCamey offensive tackle), Darrell Davis (Midland High's linebacker-tight end) and Rod Anthony (San Angelo defensive back) were among the top-rated prospects in the state, ranking in the Dallas Morning News Top 30. According to the Houston Post, Davis is the No. 2 tight end prospect in the state, right behind Lubbock Dunbar's Sam Collins, 6-5, 220. Kennedy, 6-7, 232, and San Angelo's Brian Ross, 6-4, 200, also are ranked among the top seven tight ends by the Post...The News' top prospect in the country is Quintus McDonald, 6-3, 225 linebacker from Montclair, N.J., who is leaning toward Notre Dame, Penn State, UCLA and USC...looks like New Jersey State loses out again...

Pig Be Gone

A pig wearing a referee's shirt is evicted from ice at Quebec Coliseum. The porker was turned loose on the ice by engineering students at Laval University in a contest for best joke.

Washburn waits for storm to end

RALEIGH, N.C.(AP) — North Carolina State basketball player Chris Washburn says the recent controversy surrounding his theft of a fellow athlete's stereo has been "rough" and that he just wishes it was over.

"I came almost to crying, but, no, I knew I brought it on myself and I just took it like a man with my head up," Washburn said during Saturday's NBC's halftime show of the N.C. State-SMU basketball game in Reynolds Coliseum.

"I wish it would be all over ... and I could go on with my life and just play," he said. "It is kind of rough. I'm really sorry about everything I've done and the pressure I put on the school"

Washburn, who was dismissed from the team after the incident, said he wanted to return to the team.

"Just to get the chance to play again — that's all I'm looking for," he said.

Washburn pleaded guilty following a plea bargain, to misdemeanor charges of breaking and entering for stealing a stereo from a dorm room on Dec. 19. He asid the theft was "a joke that went too far. ... I'm just paying the penalty right now."

"It is kind of rough," he added. "I'm really sorry about everything I've done and the pressure I put on the school."

Washburn said he could "abide by" his sentence, and will serve a 46-hour jail term starting at 6 p.m. on Dec. 19 and will end on Dec. 21 at 4 p.m. Those times represent the hours during which the stereo was reported missing.

"It's not going to be too hard if I just put my mind to it," Washburn said.

The controversy surrounding Washburn grew when his academic history became public record when it was included in his court files. Washburn's admission to the university will be discussed at a meeting of the school's Board of Trustees Feb. 16, Elizabeth B. Lee of Lumberton, vice chairman of the N.C. State Board of Trustees, said Saturday.

Meanwhile, Chancellor Bruce Poulton defended Washburn's admission to the university, saying he participated in the decision to admit Washburn,

Poulton, who said Washburn's athletic future at N.C State now rests with Coach Jim Valvano, said he reviews only academic scholarship applications that "are troublesome, and by troublesome I mean a difficult decision, and ... the admissions and athletic people want to have a consultation."

Although records show Washburn scored a 470 on the SAT, 70 points above the minimum possible and well below the average score of 1,030 for freshmen entering the university, Poulton said low SAT scores are no indication that a student will do poorly at NCSU.

"The SAT score was never designed as an admission criterion."

EARNEST KIKER

Horse forage demonstrated

Kiker

With the large number of horses in the Midland/Odessa area, Earnest Kiker, Midland County Agricultural Agent, in cooperation with Scotty Bray, a local 4-H leader, has initiated an irrigated forage demonstration for horse pastures. The soil type was sandy and the pasture was five acres in size. Irrigation was supplied with hand move impact sprinklers on aluminum pipes. The pasture was plowed, disked and the seed scattered on top of the cloddy soil and irrigated. The pasture was seeded on April 24th, about the earliest date possible for good germination. The four varieties planted were giant bermuda, alkali saccatone (a native salt tolerant perennial grass), kleingrass and Lehman's lovegrass.

The pasture had been in alfalfa, but because of the high-water demand of alfalfa, the grasses were planted. No fertilizer was applied prior to the seeding.

RESULTS

The alkali saccatone was the only grass not to establish a thick stand, the others established quickly. After the horses were turned in, it was interesting to note the grazing habits and which grasses were preferred. The bermuda and saccatone ran a close second and third and the klein grass was a very last fourth. In fact the horses would not eat it when the other species were available. The pasture was mowed to reduce weeds, and fertilized with nitrogen about midsummer to encourage growth and palatability. When the frost finally killed the grasses about mid November, the differences were striking. The bermuda, saccatone and love grass were about the same height, cropped close to the ground, but the kleingrass was about 3½ to 4 feet tall in the middle of the pasture. The horses would walk through the lush growing klein to forage on the others.

WHAT DOES THIS INFORMATION TELL US?

First that horses have definite preferences for the different grasses. Secondly, that it is a mistake to plant mixed grasses in a single pasture, either in strips or mixed. If a person has sufficient land to divide up the pastures, then different species can be planted in separate blocks and the animals forced to eat it through rotational grazing. If a mixture of grasses is planted, often the animals will select during grazing the grasses they prefer the most and actually kill out the preferred grass and eventually, through grazing pressure, have a pasture full of species of grass that is not palatable.

For the Midland/Odessa and Trans-Pecos area bermuda seems to be one of the best grasses for summer-irrigated horse pastures. It spreads rapidly, it is tolerant to heavy grazing pressure, is salt and heat tolerant and responds well to fertility and water. But like anything, it must be given proper care for it to do well. There are no miracle grasses, but proper management can make some close to miraculous.

* * *

As vegetable gardeners in Midland County prepare for spring planting, their first step should be to control soil insects.

Soil insects can reduce vegetable quality and yields if left uncontrolled.

For effective control, mix insecticides into the soil at a depth of four to six inches at least two weeks before the garden plot is planted.

Among destructive soil insects are wireworms, white grubs, seed corn maggots, cabbage maggots, mole crickets, sowbugs, slugs, snails and cutworms. Some destroy plant seeds, roots, tubers and underground stem parts, while others cut off young plants at or near the soil surface.

Most soil insects can be controlled with diazinon 25 per cent liquid concentration, or Spectracide 6000 applied at a 5 per cent granule. Granules give the best control.

If cutworms or sowbugs become a problem after the garden has been planted, broadcast 5 percent Sevin bait over the soil surface. Thes bait containing metaldehyde also will control slugs and snails. However, it is not formulated to be mixed into soil.

Garden sites planted for the first time, or those previously in grass or weeds, are more likely to harbor damaging numbers of soil pests. Before treating with an insectide, inspect the garden site by taking soil samples at several locations to a depth of five to six inches. Remove one square foot of soil from each location and record the number of pests present. As a general rule, an average of one or more soil insects per sample suggests the need for treatment.

Before applying any pesticide, always read and follow label instructions.

Hightower speaks at farmers' rally

JONESBORO, Ark. (AP) — The Texas Agriculture Commissioner told an agriculture rally that farmers are in a death struggle with the Reagan administration, which he says threatens to pull the plug on family farms.

Jim Hightower said Friday that farmers "should be planting, but not crops for the fall. We should be planting a new farm program."

About 1,000 farmers were at the American Agriculture Movement's Farm Crisis Meeting, which also drew Gov. Bill Clinton, Rep. Bill Alexander, D-Ark., Sens. Dale Bumpers and David Pryor, both D-Ark.

The Texas official outlined a program that he said would help solve the money crisis that many farmers are suffering. "Some are calling the program radical, but it is not as radical as what Ronald Reagan is proposing," Hightower said.

The program proposes mandatory production controls to bring supply into balance with demand, Hightower said, and also would have minimum price floors tied to the cost of production, which the American Agriculture Movement strongly supports.

Hightower also said there should be a moratorium on farm foreclosures by government agencies.

Inmate claims poor kept in jail

HOUSTON (AP) — A Harris County jail inmate is suing Sheriff Johnny Klevenhagen in federal court, claiming local authorities illegally hold poor inmates who cannot pay their court fees.

The lawsuit was filed Friday by American Civil Liberties Union attorney Bruce Griffiths on behalf of David Keith Brigham.

Brigham, 29, pleaded guilty Jan. 24 to a misdemeanor assault charge and was sentenced to six months in jail.

The Muscle behind the Market Place

Dode Harvey, Property Management — Marilyn Culp

Larry Sutton — John Pierce

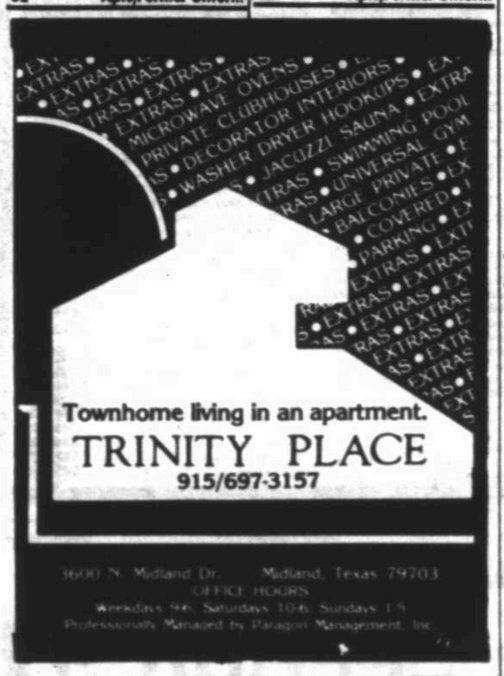

These four people represent much more than hard work, knowledge and diligence. They excel at a very important profession — commercial real estate.

Their success with Don Harvey Commercial property is a positive catalyst in the economic health of our area. The transactions they negotiate stimulate construction, revitalize neighborhoods, raise property values and create jobs.

These people represent expertise, professionalism and client confidence. But it's what they do for our community that's impressive: putting muscle behind the market place. Don Harvey Commercial, expect the best.

Don't let the chic sugar coating fool you — Chef Wayne T. Scott of the Midland Hilton says elegant candies are easy to make at home and can be the perfect Valentine's Day gift.

SWEET creations & SCRUMPTIOUS SENSATIONS

Valentine's Day is the sweetest day of the year.

It's the time when sweethearts show loved ones just how much they care by doing "sweet" things, thinking "sweet" thoughts and giving "sweet" gifts. And what gift could be "sweeter" than candy?

Wayne T. Scott, executive chef at the Midland Hilton, has the knack to create quaint confections. "Candy making and cake decorating are relaxation for me." And while many cooks may be frightened at the prospect of making candy at home, Chef Scott says many spectacular candies are easy to make.

Most ingredients for candy making are common kitchen staples. Equally important, but perhaps more rare in the ordinary home kitchen, is the proper equipment.

A marble slab, for example, is important to use as a surface for working with some types of candy, but the slab is more likely to be found in a fine department store than a Sears catalog. The surface of a marble slab is always cool, and "nothing seems to stick to it," which is important when making candies such as almond brittle.

But substitutions can be used for some obscure items such as oiled parchment paper, which is used to line pans for many candy recipes. Scott said a brown paper bag rubbed with butter serves the same purpose.

The most important tool in making candy is a good candy thermometer, Scott said. The old method of checking candy temperature by stages — soft ball stage, hard ball stage, etc. — is not accurate, and "when you're dealing with sugar, temperature is critical."

Cherry Cordials and Cherry Divinity are easy to make at home, Scott said, and make impressive Valentine's gifts.

CHERRY CORDIALS

24 maraschino cherries with stems
Enough cherry brandy to cover
1 pound semi-sweet chocolate

Bring cherries and brandy to a boil. Simmer five minutes; allow to cool completely. Remove from brandy and lightly dry cherries. Melt and temper chocolate (directions for tempering follow). Dip each cherry into chocolate. Do not drain. Place in foil cups.

To temper chocolate: Melt ⅔ pound chocolate in top of double boiler, stirring constantly until melted. Remove from heat; thoroughly dry bottom of pan. Add ⅓ pound grated chocolate and stir until melted.

Tempering prevents formation of a gray glaze which sometimes appears on the surface of chocolate.

CHERRY DIVINITY

3 cups sugar
¾ cup corn syrup
¾ cup water
2 egg whites
3-oz. package cherry gelatin
1 cup chopped candies cherries — optional

In heavy saucepan combine sugar, water and syrup. Cook over high heat, stirring until dissolved. Cover for five minutes, then continue to boil until the syrup reaches 252 F. on a candy thermometer. Remove from heat. (Do not stir while cooking.)

Meanwhile, beat egg whites until peaks form; sprinkle gelatin over surface of whites and continue beating until gelatin is dissolved.

While constantly beating whites, pour in hot syrup in steady stream and continue beating until it holds its shape. Spread out in a pan lined with oiled parchment paper or a brown paper bag rubbed with butter and chill. Cut into shapes desired.

What sweeter way to package such gooey goodness made from the heart? Scott creates edible almond brittle candy boxes decorated with sugar roses and love messages written in frosting.

Instructions for the almond brittle candy box are available by writing to Chef Wayne T. Scott, c/o The Midland Hilton, P.O. Box 2828, Midland 79702.

Marzipan blossoms into roses

To make marzipan roses, as shown in the photos on page 1E, Chef Wayne T. Scott kneads almond paste (commercial marzipan) with paste food coloring. He rolls one ball and forms it into a cone to form the rose center; he then rolls out and flattens seven tiny balls into oblongs to form petals.

The oblongs, thicker on one end, are wrapped around the cone and shaped into petals. To make leaves, he rolls out pieces of green marzipan, cuts them into leaf-shape with a cookie cutter and forms the veins with a small paring knife.

Heredia anniversary celebrated

Mr. and Mrs. Merejildo Heredia of Midland celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary wih a reception in Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church.

The couple was married Feb. 9, 1935 at Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church.

They have lived in Midland since their marriage and have been members of the church where they were married.

They have 10 children, Beatrice Madrid, Roberto Heredia, Elodia Heredia, Vicki Heredia and George Heredia of Midland; Guadalupe Zarraga of Big Spring; Mario Heredia of Lubbock; Ernestina Garcia of San Antonio; the late Virginia H. Luna and the late Merejildo Heredia Jr. They also have 16 grandchildren and 10 great-grandchildren.

Age of some cooking ingredients important

Cans of baking powder and soda or cream of tartar don't leaven properly if they are too old. Family Circle magazine advises writing the date of purchase on each can or package to keep track of their age.

Many cities boom

Associated Press

In 1950, only seven urban centers had more than 5 million residents, but today 34 cities do.

Woman optimistic 'joygerms' contagious

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — One kind of virus — the "Joygerm" — is welcome during the grim winters of upstate New York. Now its creator wants to spread joygerm fever around the world.

Syracuse native Joan White, organizer of Joygerms Unlimited, recently sponsored a "National Joygerm Day" — "a day when our goal is to smile, hug, grin and win over at least one gruff and grumpy grouch."

Her aim, she says, is simple: to make people realize that a change of attitude is tonic for the spirits. Joygerm members do not ignore the ills and problems of life; they rise above them.

"This not just for children, it's not some kind of Pollyanna trip through the tulips," she said. "Our concept is to face life despite all its problems. We have to accept and assume responsibility for the way we feel."

The ideas may come off as ephemeral and the results immaterial, but hundreds have found a source of strength in "Joygerm Joan's" communicable spirit of optimism.

THE ORGANIZATION stages visits to invalid wards, nursing homes and children's hospitals, distributing smiles, words of encouragement and homemade cookies from the "Joygerm Junkies" of Henninger High School.

"These kids get high on happiness," Miss White said.

In turn, she draws inspiration from the courage of those who triumph over handicaps.

She hopes to establish a citadel of good will in this businesslike metropolis, which some wags have labeled "The City That Never Smiles" and where her first Joygerm Jubilee parade in July 1982 drew a small contingent of self-proclaimed "Killjoys" carrying signs expressing sentiments such as "Go Home — You're Fat" and "I Hate You."

Miss White, a native Syracusan, dealt with the protesters by inviting them to join in if they needed self-expression. The group finally disbanded.

Dr. Bruce D. Carter, a psychology professor at Syracuse University, said he wasn't sure Miss White and her ideas would do any good but added, "It certainly can't hurt."

MISS WHITE'S CONCEPT of spreading joy by example has its merits, he said.

"I think what she's doing is something that lots of people should do. Any time you give somebody a smile or a kind word, you may help them out a bit. Anything to promote good feeling is wonderful; there are enough bad feelings in the world today," Carter added.

Miss White claims 7,800 members for her "No dues, just do" organization, which began on Jan. 8, 1981, with an enrollment of one.

On that day, Miss White, 50, who runs a public relations firm from her home here, noticed a newspaper article about a West Coast company which offered to "worry" for others in exchange for a $10 fee.

Jan. 8 also happened to be her late mother's birthdate, and Miss White said she felt drawn to the article again and again.

"I really feel she was up there jumping on the clouds, sliding down a rainbow, and saying, 'Come on, kid. Do it.' Finally I sat down and dashed off a letter to the Post-Standard (newspaper) about the organization I thought was needed to counter their (the worriers') kind of thinking," she said.

In the next few months, Joygerm Joan picked up a logo — a rotund head with a cowlick and an aspirin-shaped nose — a mascot, new friends and a head of steam. She began responding to requests for membership in the club, which offered its fellowship without charge in exchange for a stamped self-addressed envelope.

THE NEXT YEAR, she was ready for the first parade despite the warnings of skeptics that "no one can hold a parade on their own." About 20 entries showed up for a disorganized event which nevertheless spun off enough good will to foster 1983 and 1984 parades with close to 50 entries — and no Killjoys.

The first "national" day, held this January, began on a small scale — the formal celebration confined to a shopping mall in Syracuse, where passers-by were invited to join and to take a "smile-o-meter" test, checking their smiles in a mirror and receiving certificates of good-condition grins.

Joygerm volunteers handed out capsules containing slips of paper with uplifting messages.

Joygerm Joan says her next step is to begin organizing chapters in other parts of the country — she has sent membership cards to 48 states, Norway, England, France, Ireland, West Germany and Australia. With functioning chapters, the annual celebration pattern can be repeated in other sites, and the movement will grow.

"Right now, they're pretty much on their own," she said.

America's oldest boatyard still producing wooden boats

Hearst News Service

The first thing you notice about Lowell's Boat Shop is the smell of the wood.

The pure, clean aroma emanates from planks. It is stored in the century-old notched beams. It rises from the ankle-deep fresh wood shavings on the floor which is encrusted with six inches of dripped paint.

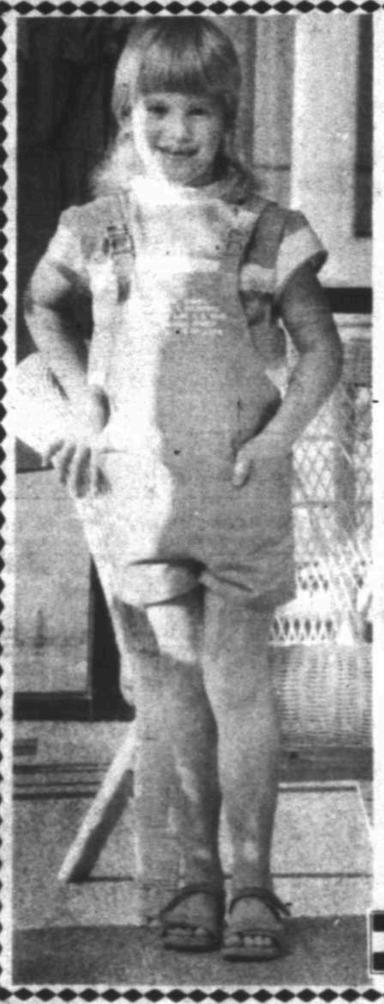

And it comes from the sturdy dories, skiffs, prams and rowboats that have been made here, one by one, for 200 years.

Welcome to Lowell's Boat Shop, the oldest boatyard in America.

Located in a crusty old barn of a building on a bend in the Merrimac River running through Amesbury, Mass., Lowell's Boat Shop has crafted more than 250,000 boats since its beginnings in 1793. The antique patterns, first used by Simeon Lowell, captain and shipbuilder, are now often adapted for 20th-century purposes. But the appeal of wooden boats remains.

"A lot more people seem to want wood than a decade ago," Jim Odell, Lowell's owner, said in the February issue of Motor Boating & Sailing. "Wood has a nostalgic and aesthetic appeal for them."

With the advent of fiberglass, many boat lovers have turned away from wood to avoid long days of early-season scraping and caulking. To make his boats practical and competitive, Odell uses epoxy resins on his boat bottoms to keep out water. If a customer asks, Odell will coat the entire boat.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Noemi Lewis experienced a joyful reunion with childhood friends from her native Argentina recently.

Noemi, her husband, Paul, and their children, Andy, Wendy, Cossette, Sam and Ariana, traveled to Miami to greet Mary and George Sanchez and youngsters, Heber, Jonathan and Pablo, upon their arrival from Buenos Aires. Following the 6 a.m. meeting at Miami International Airport, the two families spent the rest of the day touring the city and visiting the beaches. In Orlando for Christmas Eve, they enjoyed swimming, shopping and celebrating both Christmas and Heber's ninth birthday. They devoted Christmas Day and the following two days to Disney World and Epcot Center, which was a fun experience for children and adults alike.

The Sanchez family accompanied the Lewises to Midland for a three-week visit. They came by way of New Orleans (where Noemi and Mary noticed a resemblance to their old neighborhoods in Buenos Aires and experienced a wave of homesickness), Houston and San Antonio, visiting points of interest in each city.

While in Midland, the two families enjoyed several jaunts to scenic attractions in the area, including Carlsbad Caverns and McKittrick Canyon in the Guadalupe Mountains National Park. The Sanchez family also enjoyed a visit to Sulphur Springs, Texas, with old friends from Argentina, Susana and Daniel Ferrari.

Noemi says that the visitors particularly enjoyed the shopping here and they returned home with a new found appreciation for and "addiction" to those U.S. staples, marshmallows and peanut butter.

LAST WEEKEND'S SNOWSTORM and plummeting temperatures did not keep guests away from (nor diminish their enjoyment of) the wine and cheese party honoring newlyweds-to-be Vickie Bradley and Phil Dolbow.

The home of Doris and Van Howbert was the setting for the festive Saturday night affair, which was co-hosted by Judge Barbara Culver and Beverly and Forrest Muire. The serving table was beautifully decorated with spring flowers in crystal vases on a rectangular mirrored surface.

Special guests were Phil's parents, Liz and Bill Adam, and Vickie's parents, Peggy and Forrest Riggs. Among others attending were Linda George, Schatzie and Charlie Tighe, Alice and Lee Park, Corrine and George Weis, Lou and Win Brown, Carolyn and John Kirwan and Katie and Bill Heck.

The couple is planning a Feb. 16 wedding in Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity.

FROM FORT WORTH comes word that final preparations have been made for the 1985 Galaxy Ball, which benefits the Mental Health Association of Texas.

This year's event will be held Feb. 23 at the Round Up Inn at Will Rogers Memorial Complex in Fort Worth, where the first annual ball was held 22 years ago. Entitled "La Noche Comienza," or "let the evening begin," the benefit will carry out a Spanish theme in decor, entertainment and food and drink, according to chairman Carol (Mrs. William E.) McKay of Fort Worth.

"La Noche" Comienza" hails from a long tradition of successful Galaxy Balls held each year on a rotating basis in various major Texas cities. Civic and social leaders from around the state, including a Midland contingent, are expected to attend.

Further information and reservations may be obtained by calling Christine Siegfried, executive director of the Tarrant County Mental Health Association, at 817-335-5405.

EXPECTANT PARENTS K.C. and Joe Pope were honored at a couples' party and baby shower recently in the home of Lora Smith.

As guests arrived, they were served Margaritas and a tempting array of Mexican hors d'oeuvres. Covered with a brightly colored serape, the serving table featured a charming centerpiece composed of wooden figures of St. Francis of Assisi and various small animals and a basket filled with bird of paradise and other exotic flowers. Fresh fruit salad was served from a watermelon hollowed out to resemble a baby bassinet. The front entrance to the home was gaily decorated with multi-colored balloons and imitation pink flamingos.

Co-hostesses with Lora were Evette Brunell, Kris Chamlee, Sandra (Mrs. Murray) Hambrick, Pam (Mrs. Lynn) O'Neil, Rhonda (Mrs. Ronnie) Patterson, Mary Tarver and Kim (Mrs. David) Wilkinson.

K.C. also was honored with a shower Saturday afternoon at the home of Margot (Mrs. John) Vance. Out-of-town guests included Pat (Mrs. Mike) Craddock of Big Spring and Stephanie Arneeke of San Angelo. The hostess served tea-time refreshments reminiscent of her native Australia.

Planned Parenthood Community Coffee scheduled

Dr. Carol Cassell, author of the book, "Swept Away: Why Women Fear Their Own Sexuality," will be guest speaker for the Planned Parenthood Community Coffee on Wednesday, in honor of Planned Parenthood's 20th anniversary serving the Permian Basin.

Dr. Cassell is president of the American Association of Sex Educators, Counselors and Therapists and was formerly education director for Planned Parenthood Federation in New York. She earned a doctorate in community health education and serves as consulting editor to the Journal of Sex Education and Therapy.

In her book, Dr. Cassell discusses the ambivalence of women's attitudes toward their sexuality and explores the subject through social, historical and behaviorial perspectives.

"What I've discovered," she wrote in her introduction, "is that the morass of confusion and lack of understanding about modern sexuality ... have set the stage to create a strategy for dealing with sex that women almost universally take refuge in: a strategy I call Swept Away."

The confusion of sex with love can destroy self-esteem and prevent women from taking responsibility for their sexuality and emotions. She discusses romance, bargaining, power, old and new rules, contraception, expectations, fantasy and the male point of view.

Dr. Cassell offers both women and men new ways to look at themselves and their relationships and exhorts them to take control of their sexual and emotional lives.

The coffee is scheduled for 9:30 a.m.-noon Wednesday at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin Devonian Room. Tickets are $12 per person. Autographed copies of her book will be available for $14.95 plus tax. With advance paid reservations, PPPB will offer a special package of $25 for a ticket and the autographed book, tax included.

For more information call 563-2530 or 333-4133 or send a check for $25 for advanced reservation.

Dr. Cassell will also speak at the PPPB annual meeting at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Midland Petroleum Club. The public is invited to attend. Cost for the buffet-banquet will be $17.50 per person. Autographed copies of her book will be available. Call 563-2530 or 333-4133 for more information.

Copies of Dr. Cassell's book are available for $14.95 at PPPB.

Following a wedding trip to France and Switzerland, the couple will live in Dallas.

Anniversary celebrated

Mr. and Mrs. Conway Crawford of Midland celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary with a reception Saturday in the Ellenburger Room of the Hilton Hotel. Hosts were Mrs. Jen Green, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Patterson and Mr. and Mrs. Lynwood Watts.

Crawford and the former Anna Green were married Feb. 5, 1960 in Midland. They are graduates of Midland High School. They have lived in Lubbock as well as in Midland.

Lifestyle policies

The following are policies for publication of stories and announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the story is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Portraits of the future bride and bridegroom in one photograph may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Gems have symbolic meanings

NEW YORK (AP) — You may know what your birthstone is, but do you know what ancient gem lore says about it? The Jewelry Industry Council (JIC) offers this rundown:

January's birthstone, the garnet, was believed to symbolize constancy; February's amethyst, sincerity; March's aquamarine, courage; April's diamond, innocence; May's emerald, success; June's pearl, health; July's ruby, contentment; August's peridot, wedded bliss; September's sapphire, clear thinking; October's opal, hope; November's topaz, fidelity; December's turquoise, prosperity.

And is your favorite gemstone animal, vegetable or mineral? The JIC notes that pearls, coral and ivory are animal products, while amber and jet are vegetable, and other gem materials of natural origin are mineral.

Many less familiar precious stones are now showing up in new jewelry, the council reports, with these more affordable gems very much a part of today's jewelry picture.

You may know the color of emeralds, rubies and sapphires, but do you know the color of a peridot? It's yellow-green, says the JIC, which lists the hues of these other gems, sometimes heat-treated or chemically dyed to enhance or add color as used in jewelry:

Garnets, bright red; amethysts, purple; topaz, golden yellow; zircons transparent or, often, blue; carnelians, orange-red; citrines, yellow; lapis, dark blue; opal, multicolored; onyx and jet, black.

Most women not in heavy industry

Copley News Service

Mostly America's women work in industries at the bottom of the pay scale.

Bureau of Labor statistics data show that about two-thirds of all women on non-farm payrolls work in the service and retail-trade industries and in state and local governments. Only about one in six works in a goods-producing industry.

CARPET STATEMENT

When evaluating the cost of carpet, the rule of thumb is one year of wear per dollar per square yard. Good-quality carpet that lasts ten years is a better buy than cheaper carpet that must be replaced every five years. Installation costs must be paid twice with the less expensive goods. When budgeting for new floor covering, consider the price of any needed floor preparation and the cost of installation. For carpet and rugs, the cost of cushioning should also be included. Not only will a good cushion considerably add to the luxuriousness and the life of carpet and rugs, it will also help absorb noise and keep the carpet from slipping. Since a floor-covering purchase represents a major investment, the decision should be made with long-range plans in mind.

Before making any decisions on decoration come in and talk to our knowledgeable staff at WINDOW DECOR, 30 M. W. Industrial Loop, 685-0875. We can cooridinate your carpeting needs with your window and wall coverings for that just right decorator look. Installation service is available. Open: Mon. thru Fri. 8am-4:30pm, Sat. 9am-4pm, and by appointment.

DEAR ABBY

G.I. too tired to run, too scared to stop

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I need help. My son joined the Army, then after he finished basic training, he took off without leave. So far, he's still running, calling me whenever he can. He called last night saying he was tired of running and couldn't take it anymore, and he wants to give himself up.

I need to know what the Army will do to him for running away. Will he have to go to prison? Will they beat him? He's only 20.

Please answer soon because he is waiting for your answer, and so am I. — CAN'T SIGN THIS

DEAR CAN'T: All recruits are given written Army regulations, which include the consequences of going AWOL, so your son should know the consequences of "running away."

His punishment will be less severe if he turns himself in.

He may be confined to the base for a certain period of time. He could be court-martialed and discharged from the Army with a dishonorable discharge. He might have to serve time in a military prison. He could be docked in pay or assigned extra duties.

None of this can be determined until the circumstances of his running away are examined.

Tell your son to contact the nearest military police, or call his last command station and turn himself in immediately.

The longer he is gone, the more severe the punishment.

DEAR ABBY: I have been dating a man very seriously for the past year. (I'll call him Bill.) He and his wife have been divorced for four months. I had nothing to do with their breakup, but she despises me and refuses even to speak to me.

The problem is that Bill's daughter is getting married soon, and his "ex" is totally opposed to my attending the wedding. She says it's a family event, and I am not a member of the family.

I get along very well with Bill's daughter and her fiance. I have offered to stay away from the wedding rather than cause a family conflict. However, the bride, the groom and Bill have invited me to attend. The bride's mother says if I go, she will not.

My question is, should I attend the wedding under the circumstances? — BILL'S GIRLFRIEND

DEAR GIRLFRIEND: Give Bill's daughter and her fiance a wedding gift — a gift of love — by absenting yourself from their wedding.

Bill's "ex" has a lifetime of memories in raising her daughter, and even though she feels some anger and bitterness now, she is still the mother of the bride, and she, not you, should be there.

Fake antiques widespread

Associated Press

There are fakes to be found in the antiques market from glossy big city auction houses to quaint rural shops, according to the January-February issue of Colonial Homes, and a sharp eye for detail is the buyer's best protection against them.

Leigh Keno, vice president of Christie's Appraisals Inc. in New York, advised what to look for and what to avoid.

"My attitude is that an antique is guilty until proven innocent," he said, warning against buying furniture before inspecting it personally.

Caution is important in today's big money antique market, in which many collectors buy for investment. He pointed out that a bonnet-topped highboy that was considered a bargain when it sold recently for $75,000 was worth $20,000 in 1974.

He said Americans tend to buy American, while foreigners furnishing New York City apartments buy European styles.

Keno advised buyers to start examining a piece of furniture by trying to determine how many of the main structural parts are original — major replacements diminish an antique's value.

Examine secondary woods used for interior members and backboards. They can indicate the country of origin — white pine for American, beech or oak for English.

Scratch any discoloration of the finish lightly with a fingernail — virgin wood will appear beneath the oxidation of a true antique but not underneath a stain applied to "antique" furniture.

Home shipped from Sweden

BLOMKEST, Minn. (AP) — When Ettie and Goran Ivarson first visited the United States three years ago, they found that even beautiful homes were drafty and cold. Snow sifted under the door in one motel where they stayed.

Such things do not happen in Sweden, they said.

So when they decided to leave their dairy and chicken farm in Sweden and come to the United States again, the Ivarsons brought a Swedish house with them.

Everything in the three-bedroom house is from Sweden — the carpet, wallpaper, light fixtures, curtains, furniture.

The windows are triple-pane, and can be swung around so both sides can be cleaned from the inside. There are 8 inches of insulation under the floor, 11 inches above the ceiling and 7 in the walls. The roof is made of steel tiles and will last as long as the house.

According to the U.S. Customs office in Minneapolis, this is the first house to come from Sweden they have seen.

The Ivarsons hope it won't be the last. They plan to market the Swedish house in the Midwest, using the warm, energy-efficient home on the west edge of Blomkest as their model.

They intend to bring the homes over, put them up and eventually, depending on the entire family's wishes, settle in the United States. The Ivarsons' son and daughter-in-law, Joakim and Maria, are tending their farm in Lidkopins, Sweden, while the parents test the market.

The Ivarsons' Swedish corporation purchased the prefabricated house, which is very popular in Sweden, and had it shipped to the United States.

It was a blustery winter day when the house arrived and workers began putting up the walls. The house was completed in just three weeks. In Sweden, where the walls arrive already papered, a similar house can be finished in a single day.

Prior to his international work, Rev. Bell was missionary to the Blackfoot Indians in Montana, as a member of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Church.

A native of West Texas, Rev. Bell attended McMurry College and Perkins School of Theology, Southern Methodist University. Since returning from Nigeria, he has been associate pastor of First United Methodist Church in Midlnand. He and his wife, Mary Lynn Manning, have three sons and one grandson.

Hosts for the social hour will be Mrs. S.C. Curry and E.E. Reigle.

Keep kitchens safe for children

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Kitchens should be "child-proofed," with dangerous objects put out of reach, advises Donna Higgins, director of Del Monte Kitchens here. She suggests that adults should help young children prepare a simple recipe so that they can become familiar with rules of the kitchen.

Rogers to be featured entertainer

Dana Rogers

Dana Rogers, Miss Texas 1983, will be featured entertainer at the February luncheon meeting of Green Tree Ladies Association at 11:30 a.m. Feb. 19 in the main dining room of Green Tree Country Club. Voted the talent winner and best vocalist in the 1983 state pageant, Ms. Rogers was one of the top 10 finalists in the 1984 Miss America pageant.

An honor graduate of the University of Texas and a former Miss San Antonio, Ms. Rogers has appeared in television commercials and on "Good Morning America" and "Entertainment Tonight." She was recently a guest entertainer for Vice President George Bush at his inaugural ball in Washington, D.C.

Following her appearance in Midland, she will be featured as a star of the Miss America Traveling Troupe.

Members are encouraged to invite husbands or other guests to the meeting. Luncheon will be served at noon with the entertainment scheduled for 12:30 p.m.

Reservations by members must be made by Wednesday, with cancellations no later than Friday. Cost of the luncheon is $10.

Job hunting 'pitfalls' explained

Associated Press

Getting fired may be a financial and emotional crisis, but it does not have to be a disaster.

The trick is use the experience to learn about yourself, advises an article in the February Cosmopolitan, while avoiding the pitfalls that can trip up recently fired job seekers.

The first pitfall is to see and present yourself as a victim — a bad attitude in job interviews.

"When I hear peole going through a 'poor me' routine, it's a turn-off," said Gerri Weathers, a manager for Digital Equipment Corp. in Andover, Mass. "They're giving me a choice between two reactions. I can sympathize with them, which doesn't support them because they'll just continue to see themselves as victims, or I can reject them. I don't like being put in that positon."

Another trap is to bad-mouth your former boss or company during a job interview — the interviewer wants to know about your good qualities, not somebody else's bad ones.

"When I hear someone blaming someone else because they've been fired, I see they haven't analyzed their own contribution to an unhappy work situation," said Pamela Maus, program manager for career development and planning at Polaroid in Cambridge, Mass.

Lying about being fired is a foolhardy risk, according to company managers and human resource experts.

"If you aren't asked, it probably isn't necessary to bring up the subject," said Holly Freeman, a career consultant for Digital Equipment who is based in Maynard, Mass. "Should it surface after you've bee hired, you can always say you asumed it wasn't relevant. Then go on and tell the truth, emphasizing the positive rather than the negative."

Jerry Straus, a partner in the New York executive consulting and training company of JMW Consulting Inc., warned against losing self-confidence.

Noise dangerous type of pollution

Associated Press

Noise is the most inescapable form of pollution — and one that poses a long list of potential health hazards.

Scientific studies show it can harm the ears, reduce learning ability and possibly increase blood pressure, according to an article in the March issue of Science Digest. There are even indications it may injure the brain.

Audiologist John Mills of the Medical College of South Carolina believes the brain is "the most significant area in need of further study."

He reports that in several animal experiments, 65 decibels of sound — the noise level of an air conditioner — cause damage to the brain stem. He wants to discover whether the same thing happens to humans.

While the Environmental Protection Agency's $14 million noise abatement program was scrapped four years ago, much noise pollution can be hushed by common sense.

Stereo headphones top the list of controllable noisemakers. A study by otolaryngologist Phillip Lee of the University Hospital in Iowa City, Iowa, disclosed that teen-agers who used stereo headphones for three hours suffered temporary hearing loss.

Headphones proved to be exceptionally damaging when played at 100 decibels or more, the intensity of a chain saw.

"People should not turn them up above a normal conversational level," Lee said.

Environmental noise can be even more damaging than the blast of an explosion that causes deafness by rupturing an eardrum. The eardrum can be at least partially repaired by surgery, but the erosive damage caused by high noise levels over a period of time can be irreversible.

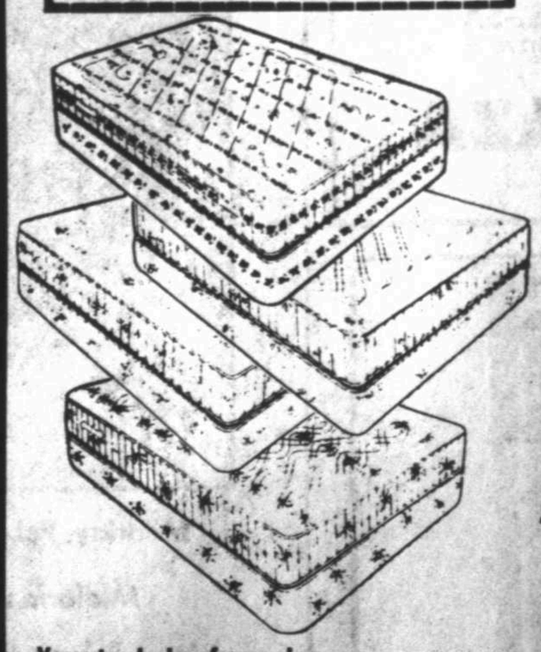

Otolaryngologist Ernest Peterson of the University of Miami found noise raises blood pressure in monkeys.

But in a letter published in the medical publication "The Lancet," a Swedish doctor reported no such effect on shipyard workers after an eight-year study.

Noise can interfere with learning. The California Department of Health Services reported children in schools on loud streets score well below their socioeconomic counterparts in quiet schools.

DENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Phillip O. Warlick D.D.S.

OVERDENTURES

QUESTION: I have heard that there is a new method of using some of your own teeth to make a full dental plate stay in more firmly. Could you explain this?

ANSWER: You are referring to an overdenture. Hopeless teeth are not extracted with this method. Instead, root canal treatment is performed, then the teeth are cut down to the level of the gumline. The roots remain inbedded in the jawbone and prevent the bone from shrinking, preserve the ridges and give good retention and support for the dentures. Another method is to cement metal studs on top of the imbedded roots so that the denture may be snapped into place with no more worries about slipping.

Famous Olympian to speak

Rafer Johnson, Decatheion gold medal winner in the 1960 Olympics, will be guest speaker at the Black History observance banquet in Midland. Sponsored by Negro Business and Professional Women's Club, the banquet will be Feb. 15 at the Midland Hilton.

Johnson's sports career included being chosen Sports Illustrated's Athlete of the Year, Helms Hall Athlete of the Year, winner of The Sullivan Award, Sports Magazine's Athlete of the Year and Associated Press Athlete of the Year. He was official bearer of the American Flag on opening day of the 1960 Olympics.

In May, 1983, Johnson was recipient of the Horatio Alger Award. He served on the Board of Directors for the Los Angeles Olympic Organization Committee and was selected to carry the Olympic torch for the 1984 summer games.

For more information call Mrs. Mamie Williams, president Negro Business and Professional Women's Club at 682-2627 or 694-9641, or any member of the organization.

Tornado leaflet available free

Copley News Service

Dorothy and Toto never would have been swept away to the Land of Oz if they had seen "Tornado Safety Before, During, After." Dorothy would have known a few safe methods of staying out of a tornado's funnel.

This brief leaflet is an outline of precautions you can take to avoid tornado hazards. It's information that could prove useful to everyone.

It describes safety procedures that should be followed before a tornado, outlines steps to take during a tornado and steps not to take.

And after a tornado, what do you do then? This guide has some well-thought-out advice for that time, too — a handy guide, not just for parents, but for young "Dorothys" and little "Totos," as well.

To get a free copy of the booklet send a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope, asking for "Tornado Safety," to Publications Information Institute, 10 William St., New York, NY 10038.

Sails computerized

NEW YORK (AP) — The oldest and newest technology of the sea — sails and computers — will be combined with the launching of two new cruise ships, reports Travel Agent magazine.

The four-masted vessels will have sails that are computer-controlled and mechanically operated without crew.

Each of the ships will also be able to cruise with alternative diesel power, according to the travel journal.

Cabins will be equipped with such electronic amenities as color television and video cassette tape recorders.

Constructed in a French shipyard, the first vessel is scheduled to begin cruise service in the eastern Caribbean in late 1986, with the second ship following in six months.

Top executives put in top hours

NEW YORK (AP) — While top corporate executives enjoy many benefits, time on their hands is definitely not one of them.

The average top executive works about 22 hours a week more than employees who hold "9-to-5" jobs, according to a survey made for Robert Half International, a recruiting firm.

Love's lore lives on

Text by David Lee Forrest
Graphic by Matt Holten

Cathy and Heathcliff riding across the windswept moors ... Bogart and Bergman bravely saying goodbye before parting in Casablanca ... couples sailing romantic seas on the Love Boat ... these are just a few of the images of love we breathe from the cultural atmosphere around us.

Much of the romance folk wisdom comes to us in the form of old sayings about the nature of love.

In the spirit of the upcoming Valentine's Day, the Reporter-Telegram asked some Midland marriage and family counselors to comment on the accuracy of the following romantic cliches:

— Love is blind —

"When 'in love,' people generally close their eyes to the 'faults' of the one with whom they are in love." — Berlin Kanady, M.S.

"Love is indeed blind. A person 'in love' most often idealizes the significant other, attending only to those things which confirm this belief and ignore or distort discrepant information." — Harvey Durbin Jr., Ph.D.

"Perhaps in the beginning ... the very characteristics that are most appealing initially and that pull couple together may become sources of major irritation later on (i.e., gay, dashing, adventuruous male may become simply childish)." — Linda George, M.S.W., A.C.S.W.

"The romantic excitement of infatuation or a new relationship can cause some 'cloudy vision.' Mature love is not blind. The more mature and developed a relationship is, the clearer people see each other." — Sam Guyton, R.N., M.A.

— Absence makes the heart grow fonder —

"This probably depends on the individuals involved. Some couples need more time and space from each other than others. Love is both a strong and a fragile thing. Love must be maintained and protected in order to survive. Involvement with each other must be maintained even though there may be absences." — Ms. Guyton.

"Not necessarily so. Many factors must be considered. In some cases it may be true, but in many more it is false." — Kanady.

"It would depend on the relationship between the couple. If there was a strong bond between them, absence could make the heart grow fonder, if not, it could serve to erode an already tenuous bond." — Durbin.

Ms. George said absence does make the heart grow fonder — but maybe fonder "for someone else. Relationships need nuturing."

— 'Tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all —

"Romantic cop-out — this way a person can keep from risking in a new relationship." — Ms. George.

"Love is the essence of life, without it one has 'missed the boat.'" — Durbin.

"Most people seem to agree that the joys of love, trust, sharing and commitment are worth the traumas of broken relationships." — Ms. Guyton.

"I think this is a very true statement. In order to develop empathy and compassion for others, one needs to have the experiences of life." — Kanady.

— The course of true love never runs smooth —

"Very true! Neither life nor love run smoothly." — Kanady.

"True — relationships take work." — Ms. George.

"Some conflict is inevitable even in loving relationships. There is a difference in healthy and unhealthy disagreement depending on how the disagreement is handled." — Ms. Guyton.

"I'm not sure how one would define 'true love,' but most couples have some degree of conflict." — Durbin.

— Love at first sight —

"This divine state of madness changes with time. Romantic, intensive infatuation progresses to a problem-solving, extensive relationship in a healthy relationship." — Ms. George.

"'Tain't no such animal. There is plenty of lust at first sight, but I raise strong doubts about one 'falling in love' at first sight. More likely it is one's glands at work." — Kanady.

"'Love at first sight' is difficult to imagine. One knows nothing about the other person, only that which is fantasized and hoped for in this person. Despite this, it is a wonderfully romantic notion and another chance to get what really counts in life." — Durbin.

Body language communicates status

Copley News Service

Throw chickens into a coop together and the first few days they will scratch and peck each other.

Sooner or later though, they will establish a pecking order.

Two dogs meeting for the first time will check each other out suspiciously. Before becoming friends, one of them will declare itself superior.

Same thing with humans.

At cocktail parties, which seem to be the favorite research grounds for sociologists, people engage in small talk and eventually some will assume dominance in conversations and in relationships.

There. That man with his feet planted firmly on the ground, spaced about a foot apart. Exuding confidence, authority and — you've got it — dominance.

But that other one, the one with his legs and ankles glued together? An introvert, for sure.

Nature provides for quick separation into these dominant-submissive roles to protect the species, whether man or monkey.

Body language is that nonverbal form of communication which sends forth positive or negative vibes about a person.

Whether you are in management, sales, law enforcement, teaching or any other occupation demanding personal contact, the vibrations that you give out are what clinches the deal, convinces your audience, sells yourself.

Sande Vardal is a young woman trying to make it in a traditionally male industry. She sells construction equipment.

"I've found I'm not as successful as I'd like to be and I think it's essentially because I don't have the authority to deal with men in a very macho industry," she said. "I'm assertive but they take one look at you, see that you're a woman and they think 'you can't possibly know my business.'

"I have to have an impact in the first few seconds," she said.

She thinks the study of body language might be the answer.

To improve her people-reading skills, Vardal learned to assume all behavior is meaningful. No behavior is accidental or without cause.

"You are a 24-hour-a-day transmitter," according to Psychologist Joseph C. Kulis. "You can see how you stop coZmunicating verbally, you just stop talking. But it's important to know how to shut off the nonverbal communication."

The military recognizes the importance of body language in determining authority. When called to attention, the rank and file stand feet together (indicating submission) while the officers stride past.

Gestures can create an aura of confidence and of being in control. Boys learn the "jock stance" by imitating older students or brothers, while girls are reminded constantly that standing with their feet apart is unladylike.

"Then after she graduates she wonders why it's so hard to show authority in her new job. There is still a great deal of sexism in our society," Kulis said. "Did you ever see your mother shake hands with a stranger?"

Bosses (those who really carry weight) have the freedom to look away from a subordinate. But they never look down! When the boss calls you into the office, your eyes follow every movement. Yet when the boss catches your eye, you look down in a sign of submission.

Did you wonder what made the Nazi characters on the "Hogan's Heroes" television series so humorous? Kulis contends it was their mixed body signals. The incongruity of clipped word endings (a sign of authority) and a high, nasally voice (a sign of lack of authority) is what won Col. Klink the loud guffaws.

A deep tone of voice signals confidence and authority. A low, slow speech pattern with clipped word endings is considered more commanding. Kulis recommends listening to yourself on a tape recorder especially if you do a lot of work on the telephone.

Touching is another characteristic that separates the dominant from the submissive. In the human pecking order, bosses are free to touch subordinates but subordinates shouldn't infringe on their employers' space.

Songwriter says old coffee jingle still pays his rent

NEW YORK (AP) — Songwriter Bernie Wayne has been appearing in concert around the country, playing and singing some of the songs he has written such as "There She Is, Miss America," and "Laughing on the Outside, Crying on the Inside."

He finishes the performance by singing a jingle he wrote 25 years ago, which "has been paying my rent ever since." It is the coffee jingle for Chock Full O' Nuts, popularized on radio and TV by Page Morton Black. "It gets a tremendous ovation," Wayne says, adding, "People don't know that I wrote it."

Height a short way to business success

Copley News Service

If you want to become a business success, it helps to be short, according to Michael Korda, writing in the February issue of Penthouse magazine.

He says because height is so important during childhood and adolescence, shorter folk are driven to compensate early on.

Furthermore, it's probably no accident that most of the world's great conquerors have been short. Alexander the Great, Napoleon and Hitler all were half-pints.

And finally, he claims it almost always is a mistake to be taller than your boss.

Garbage can humbling

By ERMA BOMBECK

No matter how big you think you've become or how much success you amass, there are some things in this world that are equalizers. They keep you humble.

The garbage can is one of them.

There isn't a day goes by that I don't look like a headless body fighting to escape being sucked into the can. There is a reason for this. I throw away everything that I need to live.

Everything is there nestled among the coffee grounds and gutted grapefruit. A grocery tape that I recorded a check on. A pair of pantyhose with runs that I can still wear under slacks. The warranty on my steam iron. A picture of a friend's baby in the Christmas card. The box with instructions and screws for the new lawn chair. My column that I forgot to clip. The inside of my coffee pot. The manual explaining how to hook up the telephone answering device. The current TV Guide. A phone number written on a paper towel.

My husband says he doesn't know why I don't just get a can in a subdued green and wheel it into my office and use it as a filing cabinet. (This is the suggestion of a man who ran after the garbage truck for three blocks begging to sift through and find the registration deadline for a 10-K.)

I consider garbage cans a second chance. They're the purgatory of our existence. It's a temporary place where trash is either condemned to the jaws of the garbage truck or given a reprieve by an hysterical woman who has decided against throwing it away.

A couple of days ago, someone tapped me on my arm as my head dangled inside the can. "You come here often?" asked my husband.

"Don't start," I said. "I'm missing something important."

"Let me guess. A recipe from Sunday's food section for something disguising liver." He leaned over the can and sniffed. "I don't remember having that. What was it?"

"Broccoli Fiesta."

"Was it blue then?"

"Green. Darn, it's not here. Move over. It's probably in the other can."

"Look, if you'll tell me what you're looking for, maybe I could help."

"It's my new charge card. You know how they send it in a plain envelope so as not to attract attention? I thought it was junk mail."

As four legs kicked in the air out of the top of the can I said, "You can't miss it. I wrapped my gum in it." I thought I heard my husband groan. On the other hand, it could have been the Broccoli Fiesta coming to life.

DR. KURIANSKY

Exercise tests commitment

By Dr. JUDITH KURIANSKY

Here's an exercise intended to help you explore your own feelings and views about sexual commitment. The following situations are ones in which people commonly find themselves. In each case, whether you are a man or a woman, put yourself in the place of the named person. Ask yourself what you would feel and how you would act if you were that person.

Also ask yourself: Is what I would do in line with how I would feel? Would I hold back my feelings in order to preserve the relationship because being with someone is better than no one — even if the someone isn't right for me? Am I getting all I want and deserve in this relationship?

In what situations would you feel guilty? When would you hold back from acting on your feelings — and for what reasons?

Which person in the scenario acts more like you? How would you like yourself and your partner to behave?

THIS EXERCISE is not a matter of "true and false" or "right and wrong." You can write down your answer if you like, or simply think about your own reactions.

1. Louise had been going with her boyfriend for a year and was thinking that marriage was a real possibility when he told her that he wanted to continue to have a relationship with her, but that he also wanted to see other women.

2. Stan had two women in his life. With one he had better sex; with the other he had more fun outside of sex and better communication. He couldn't make up his mind how to choose between them.

3. Marcia loved her husband, but he was very caught up in his work and didn't give her as much attention or affection as she would have liked. A younger man she was very attracted to wanted to have an affair with her. She couldn't stop thinking about getting involved with him.

4. Dan was extremely jealous of his wife. She told me he had to stop it or she would leave him.

5. Eric was having an affair with a woman with whom he worked. He was reasonably satisfied with his marriage but found it much easier to discuss both his work and other subjects with the other woman.

6. Lila and her husband had been experimenting with swinging. At first she found it fun, but now she doesn't like it anymore. Can she tell them she wants to stop?

7. Rochelle's husband cheated on her a lot. After their divorce she had one affair after another, but always with married men and wonders why none of them leave their wives to be with her.

8. Bill played around a lot, although casually, in the first years of his marriage. But lately he's been faithful — only to discover that his wife was having an affair with a man he knew.

YOU HAVE a high commitment quotient if you read the above situations and didn't identify with the people who didn't stick to one person; if you got annoyed at them; or if you don't have similar situations in your own sexual history.

Have your partner/significant other/spouse/lover react to these situations too.

Take one example and ask your partner to explain his position on it, or how he would handle that situation. Don't interrupt but listen closely. Then you restate his position — with his corrections — until you get it exactly. Then switch turns.

Role play. You play one person in any of the scenarios and let him play the other. Bring the situation to life. Doing this will reveal how you each see commitment. Switch roles in each situation: you do and say what he did, and vice versa. Walk a mile in his shoes.

Take about how you felt doing this.

REMEMBER, NO judgments. A high commitment quotient doesn't make you a better person. Just a different, more committed one.

"For better or for worse" is a central phrase in the marriage ceremony. It brings tears to some people's eyes, and makes others think "How old-fashioned." In the wake of the sexual revolution, a great many people abandoned the idea of committing themselves to a single individual, while others yearned nostalgically for the stability, as they saw it, of the old days.

Commitment has now come to the fore — it is the word of the 1980s.

Men and women alike desperately want it but fear it. They resist staying true to one person, wondering what sexual adventures they might be missing. They feel suffocated, trapped, or scared of being rejected.

But many of us have also relearned that without commitment the meaning goes out of relationships and eventually out of sex itself. For the first time in decades, the divorce rate is going down instead of up, the marriage rate is going up, and promiscuous sex no longer seems the hallmark of "freedom" it once did to many.

Nevertheless, people still have problems with making a commitment or sticking to it. It's a subject that large numbers of people call and write me about. I might even say, it's the most popular topic of all.

WHAT IS sexual commitment, anyway?

To begin with, it doesn't just involve being faithful. As with all areas of our sexuality, it involves not just our bodies but also our minds and emotions, the whole person.

Can you commit yourself to part of a person? Many people try. A body, a mind, talent, success, power or just plain money can persuade many of us that we're in love. Are we? Maybe so, but we have to ask what we are in love with.

This exercise is taken from "Sex...Now That I've Got Your Attention, Let Me Answer Your Questions!" a Putnam book by Dr. Judith Kuriansky.

Warning label on snuff urged

BOSTON (AP) — A high school athlete who "would not even look at a cigarette" died of oral cancer after using snuff for several years, his mother said in urging the state to order warning labels on snuff and chewing tobacco.

The state Public Health Department has recommended that Public Health Commissioner Dr. Bailus Walker Jr. require the label of manufacturers of the smokeless products use the labels:

"Warning: Use of snuff is addictive and may cause mouth cancer and other mouth disorders."

"I am extremely concerned that the tobacco industry implies in their advertising that smokeless tobacco is a safe alternative to smoking," said Assistant U.S. Surgeon General Robert Mecklenburg.

U.S. Surgeon General Dr. C. Everett Koop said recently that smokeless tobacco "does indeed pose a danger threat and is associated as well with certain other pathological oral conditions," Mecklenburg said.

Michael J. Kerrigan, president of the Smokeless Tobacco Council, a Washington-based trade group, said in an interview that there is insufficient evidence to require the warning and that "this has been a media-driven campaign."

"The tobacco industry is once again lifting a cry that nothing should be done, nor even a whisper of caution be advised, because there is yet no ultimate proof and no direct cause-and-effect relationship between the use of smokeless tobacco and oral diseases," Mecklenburg testified.

"Is it necessary to be silent until the number of people who have massive oral tissue destruction and loss of life becomes so large that the problem is glaringly obvious to everyone, except those who profit?" he added.

San Simeon: American castle's history fascinating

By EVELYN DeWOLFE
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SAN SIMEON, Calif. — The legendary castle of newspaper baron William Randolph Hearst, high above the hills here, has been described from every possible viewpoint and its contents meticulously noted and cataloged.

Still, this extraordinary landmark is that has been variously described as a museum warehouse, corporate headquarters, resort hotel and expanded camp, continues to hold history buffs spellbound and hungering for anything new to surface and be added to its rich folklore.

RELATED MEMORABILIA preserved by the castle's builder, the late George Loorz, on the most important project of his career, lay forgotten for years, shoved back in a closet in the Loorz family home. Its contents had never before been examined by Loorz's son, Bill Loorz, Stolte Inc.'s chief operating officer, until a reporter's curiosity nudged him.

"I guess I had never realized the historic value of these personal letters and notes scribbled on bits of paper, on the backs of check stubs and even on brown paper bags, that were exchanged between my father, his client, William Randolph Hearst, and Hearst's architect, Julia Morgan," Loorz said.

"It may be that, over the years, we simply took for granted the key role that Dad and other Stolte workers played in building one man's architectural whim: the Enchanted Hill."

GEORGE LOORZ became a partner of F.C. Stolte in 1932, and was for many years president of Stolte Inc., until succeeded by his son Bill.

"Actually, Dad's papers also reveal a little-known side of Julia Morgan, one of the first women to break the barrier into the male-dominated world of architects," he said. "My own childhood recollections of Mr. Hearst and of Julia Morgan in those early years in and around the Hill when my father was building the castle, are still vivid in my mind."

Drawings for the castle in this community about 120 miles north of Los Angeles were drafted in 1919, and the castle opened in 1925, although construction continued through the late 1930s.

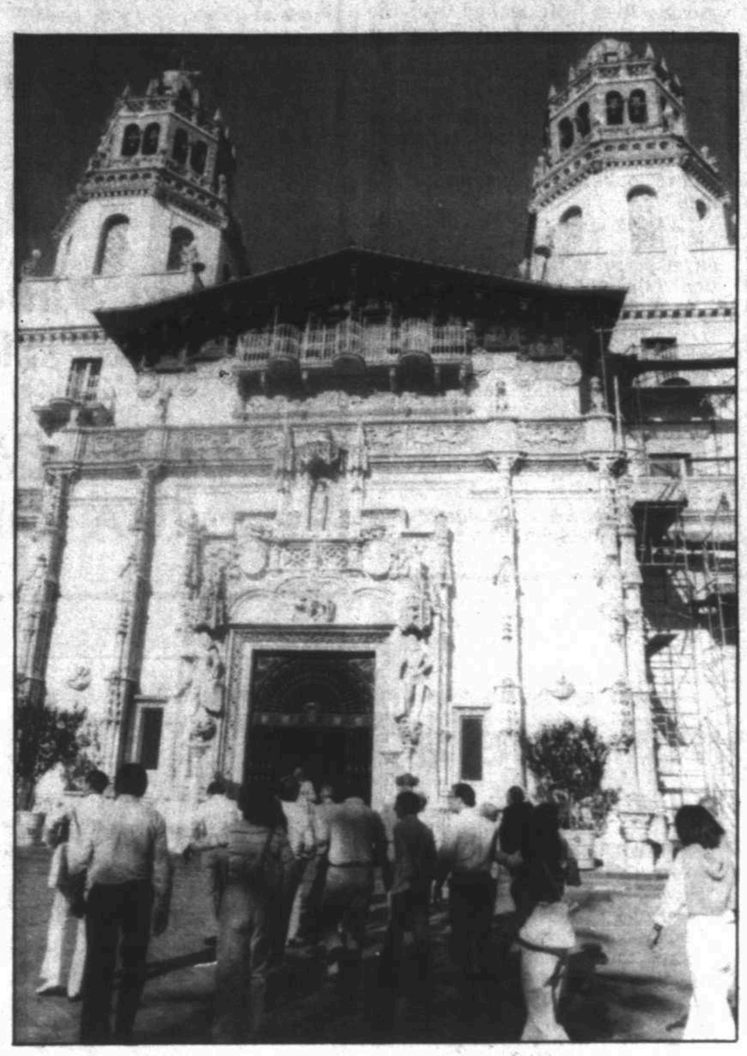

THE CORRESPONDENCE Loorz agreed to share with Los Angeles Times readers covers those early years when Bill Loorz entered first grade at the community's one-room schoolhouse shared by 12 other students.

"Julia Morgan was full of surprises and had a genuine fondness for us children. When I was about 6 years old and hospitalized in San Luis Obispo, she wrote to me every day and sent me a gift with each note. She was a fascinating woman."

Born in San Francisco in 1872, Morgan was recognized as a genius during her lifetime. She received her degree from the prestigious L'Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris (the first female student admitted to that institution) and began her profession as the first certified American architect at San Simeon in 1919 and selected Morgan as his architect.

PROBABLY THE MOST ironic remark relating to the monumental architectural undertaking that followed came from Hearst himself when he told Morgan: "We are tired of camping out at the ranch in San Simeon and I would like to build a little something."

By the time George Loorz was given the assignment to construct that "little something," it had turned into a major project that would eventually rival the most sumptuous architectural aspirations of any potentate and be visited by nearly 1 million tourists annually.

A group of tourists enter San Simeon's main building for a tour of William Randolph Hearst's legendary castle. Even though the building contains more than 100 rooms, it wa never finished.

THE ORIGINAL PARCEL of land on which the castle was built consisted roughly of 250,000 acres of coastal ranch land on a plateau in the Santa Lucia Mountains that had been acquired by Hearst's father, Sen. George Hearst, for 60 cents an acre. The property, once part of the old Piedra Blanca Spanish grant, was ringed by 50 miles of California seacoast and total wilderness.

It was at La Cuesta Encantada (The Enchanted Hill), once the heart of the Hearst publishing empire, where William Randolph Hearst kept in touch with what went on in the world through his private teletype and telephone systems. To the Hill, by coveted invitation, came the great names in every field.

KNOWN TO ONE and all as The Chief, Hearst involved himself obsessively in the smallest details of design and construction of the hilltop castle and its three guest houses, often providing magazine illustrations of complex ironwork he wished duplicated by local artisans. The main house, which Hearst named Casa Grande, had 38 bedrooms, 31 baths, two libraries and 14 sitting rooms and the adjoining houses had a total of 46 rooms.

Bill Loorz observed that all the structures on the hill designed by Morgan had been built of reinforced concrete, which was an unusual construction technique at the time, and were covered with exterior cement, plaster, stone, tile or left bare, depending on the location. "We still use some of the very same techniques today," he said.

LOORZ REMEMBERS that such grading and road building as was needed was done with a steam shovel. Work continued through the 1920s until 1937, when the Hearst organization was beset with financial problems. Several ballrooms and grand staircases that were envisioned by Hearst and Morgan were never built.

The Loorz papers show that Hearst was insistent on obtaining a certain result even when the costs of labor involved in making changes seemed prohibitive.

"Early in the construction, I remember my father announcing at the family table that while ascending his new eight-mile road that day, Hearst had decided that one of the buildings was not well displayed," Loorz said. "He ordered the building torn down and rebuilt close by, despite the fact that it was almost completed.

"Mr. Hearst was compulsive about getting things done, regardless of cost, and some caution was expressed in notes to The Chief from Miss Morgan and my father to keep within the budget. He liked to push his own budget."

THE CHIEF'S NOTES to George Loorz reflected a constant preoccupation with providing suitable areas and proper care for the rare animals he kept on the property.

In an exchange of correspondence during March 1937, George Loorz informed The Chief: "I am sorry to have to report that on Wednesday morning a carpenter was working alone when he suddenly turned to find the old black ostrich attacking him. In self defense, he swung a 2x4 he had in his hand, striking the bird on the neck and killing it. He said he meant to hit it in the body but it is easy to realize that one in fear would do just as he did."

The great dining Hall in La Casa Grande of San Simeon castle contains antique Spanish and French silver. Massive 15th century French Gothic fireplace, silk Palio festival banners from Siena and late Gothic tapestries give the hall a medieval atmosphere.

HEARST REPLIED: "As long as the ostrich did not hurt the man, there is nothing to worry about. However, we should endeavor to cure ugly birds and animals and I think the best way is to shoot them in the prat with a charge of rock salt.

"Animals are like humans; they are ugly when they think they can get away with it. A little severe discipline usually convinces them that they can NOT get away with it. The severity is not cruel. It would have saved the ostrich's life.

"When the men are working in places exposed to attack, I suggest you send a watchman along with a shotgun containing a small charge of rock salt. I think it will do the trick."

BILL LOORZ REMEMBERS how everyone was attuned to Hearst's changeable moods. Occasionally, there would be a scribbled note left for Loorz, such as: "What rattles in the wind in this South Tower? Please stop it. Furthermore, the weather vane creaks."

"If I believed in ghosts, I would think it was haunted," Hearst wrote.

Tyrannical at times, Hearst was not averse to an exchange of humor. George Loorz wrote Hearst: "Being favored with a strong appropriate southerly, I sent out a scout to locate the position of the enemy, the Ghost of La Cuesta Encantada.

"Within a short time the scout returned reporting that he had located the stronghold of the enemy. He volunteered to go out single-handedly and route the ghosts with a hammer and two plugs. This being done promptly, all again is quiet on the Gothic front."

APPARENTLY AMUSED, Hearst responded: "Dear Mr. Loorz, I am very glad the expeditionary forces have completely routed the enemy. Do you not think decorations of some kind are in order?"

Much of the correspondence between Julia Morgan and Loorz had to do with the detailing of the Early Spanish Renaissance style that also incorporated Greco-Roman and Florentine touches everywhere. In her notes to Loorz, she scribbled instructions and drew quick sketches of architectural details and interior spaces that were continually being modified to accommodate large-scale art objects that Hearst would acquire and hold in storage. The size and shape of some of the rooms in the main house and satellite structures were often determined by the rare French and Flemish tapestries that now hang on their walls.

ON WEEKENDS, Bill and the other children in the family would accompany their father to the mansion. "I used to take a little llama to the second floor of the castle. We had a run of the place when Mr. Hearst was gone. When he was there, he liked it quiet."

In those days the community surrounding the Hill had one small store, the school and a few houses, Loorz remembers. "They were building Highway 1 while I was growing up and Mr. Hearst's private plane would fly in with the actors and actresses. Because of his strictly-enforced veto on smoking around the property, the airborne visitors would all flip their long cigarettes from the plane as they were landing, and we kids used to pick them up and smoke them.

"Those were good days."

'Gourmet' tours taste of Austria

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

There will be dining of a different sort on this series of two-week "deluxe gourmet" tours to the best restaurants of Vienna, Salzburg and Innsbruck.

A Viennese "feast" at the famed Sacher Hotel will welcome participants with a menu that may begin with soup with fluffy dumplings and pate' and conclude with the Sacher's famous whipped-cream-topped chocolate torte, cream cheese dumplings with plum sauce and rich Viennese coffee.

On another evening, following the opera, dinner is at Vienna's oldest restaurant, Zu den Drei Husaren, which serves a classic venison "as you have never tasted before," says Austrian-born Annemarie Victory of New York, a New York travel executive who specializes in gourmet tours.

One night is spent in Lichtenstein and three in Switzerland, where a lunch in Crissier is planned at the restaurant of Fredy Girardet, described by some food critics as the world's greatest chef.

The price is $2,890 per person (double occupancy), which includes lodging, meals (with wine) and motor-coach travel. Air fare is extra. Departures May 31, June 12 and Sept. 13.

Korean 'Disneyland' opens

Copley News Service

The first stage of the Grand Park in Seoul, which tourism officials there are calling Korea's version of Disneyland, is now open.

Most of the amusement park's facilities are expected to be completed before the Asian Games in Seoul open in 1986.

The section which is now open is the Grand Park Zoo, which features more than 4,000 animals, including moon bears.

The zoo's grounds are 30 times larger than Seoul's old Royal Palace Zoo, which has been closed.

Munich not just for monks anymore

Hearst News Service

Munich means "village of the monks," but to millions the world over this is a city of art, history, fine beer and just plain enjoyable living.

For more than 650 years, dukes, princes and kings of the House of Wittelsbach lived and ruled here, building grandiose palaces and municipal buildings that fared well despite harsh years that included a ravaging world war. All of that was virtually destroyed by American bombs during World War II, when 50 percent of the stately inner city was razed.

The Germans managed to save many of their antique and art treasures by storing them in salt mines near the city. And the West Germans still are painstakingly rebuilding and restoring the damaged centuries-old structures to their original state. Many of the antiques and artworks now are displayed in several fine museums throughout the city.

Works of "Old Masters" such as Rembrandt and Durer can be seen in the Alte Pinakothek. It is one of the city's great museums of art, featuring 65 paintings by Rubens. Other museums include the Neue Pinakothek — the gallery of "New Masters," featuring works by Manet, Cezanne and others — and the State Gallery of Modern Art.

The Bavarian National Museum boasts the world's largest collection of nativity scenes, while the Deutsches Museum — located on an island in the Isar river — is the largest science museum in the world.

With its love for art, Munich has evolved into a city clearly atuned to aesthetics. City codes prohibit skyscrapers in the downtown area, where onion-shaped church steeples adorn much of the skyline of this staunchly Catholic community. New office and apartment buildings are based on traditional Bavarian design and painted in visually pleasing pastel yellows, blues and earth tones. And clogged traffic and cluttered parking lots are reduced by the use of subways and underground parking facilities, many located in the oldest sections of the city.

The "Old City" is the heart of Munich. There, 100,000 square yards of pedestrian walkways wind through elegant shops, churches and eateries.

The New City Hall, built in 1909 with its famous Glockenspiel, overlooks the Marienplatz in this mall area, while nearby stands the Old City Hall, erected in 1474.

Several historic churches also are still standing in the "Old City," such as the Renaissance Church of St. Michael's and the Italian Baroque Trinity Church. The Augustine Church now houses the German Hunting Museum.

Both the "Residence" and National Theater are at the end of Maximilianstrasse, a long boulevard with luxurious stores, restaurants and hotels. The shops offer everything from fine chocolate and tobacco to elegant Nymphenburg porcelain and delicate crystal.

In addition to museums and the 1972 Summer Olympics complex, another point of interest is the Nymphenburg Palace.

Entertainment in Munich ranges from symphonic concerts and opera to colorful nightclubs, jazz clubs and dicotheques. People lounge at sidewalk cafes — similar to those in Paris — in the university area of the city.

Golfers' dream in Portugal

New York Times News Service

For those who measure winter by the calendar and not by the groundhog, there is still a long way to go. And for golfers dreaming of a chance to bask in sunshine and stride along green fairways, impatience may be waxing. In the North, after all, even the official arrival of spring in March may not mean an end to cold and snow.

Which brings us to the Sunshine Classic, offering an opportunity to play five rounds of golf in a handicap tournament and combine it with a visit to Portugal. The classic is structured so that each day of play is a separate tournament, and there are overall prizes as well. March 24 to April 3 are the dates. The courses are the scenic Vale do Lobo Club de Golf, where two rounds are played; the Penina Golf Club with its unusually long holes (par 73) for one round and the tricky Quinta do Lago for one; all are in the Algarve region, with its groves and beaches. The fifth and final round is played at the famous and beautiful Estoril Golf Club in Estoril, just outside Lisbon.

In addition to the activities on the links, there are sightseeing in two colorful fishing villages in the Algarve, a cocktail party, a tour of Lisbon and an awards dinner.

Based on double occupancy, the Sunshine Classic, leaving New York March 24 and returning April 3, is priced at $1,279 a person. The price includes round-trip air fare, accommodations, daily Continental breakfast, tournament entry fee, greens fees, prizes, sightseeing, transfers and the awards dinner.

More information is available from Ridgewater Partners (116 Clapboard Ridge Road, Greenwich, Conn. 06830; 203-869-5164).

Catherine Deneuve is the reigning queen of the French cinema.

Cool, cuddly Catherine

By KATHY LARKIN
King Features Syndicate

Catherine Deneuve has been described by biographers as "Cool Catherine," a "frozen rose," the "French Garbo" who can refuse to talk in several languages. A formidable interview.

Except that it doesn't turn out that way at all. She strides quickly into the hotel lobby, blond hair winging behind her, brown leather bomber jacket open over a green sweater and brown skirt, the high heels that add inches to her 5-foot-4-inch body going rap, rap, rap firmly across the white marble floor of the chic Parker Meridien Hotel.

Ms. Deneuve is in a hurry and so quickly does she move that not a single stroller through the vaulted archway of a hotel favored by the visiting French recognizes the reigning queen of French cinema.

An extraordinary French Film Festival, which will run almost to the end of 1985 in this country, is saluting the best of the best from major directors and other major French performers such as Simone Signoret, Gerard Depardieu, Alain Delon, Jean-Paul Belmondo — stars.

That's reasonable. Ms. Deneuve, after all, catapulted into stardom with "Umbrellas of Cherbourg," winning a "best actress" award at the Cannes Film Festival of 1964, when she was just 20. That was for her role, directed by Jacques Demy, as sweet melancholy heroine Genevieve, daughter of an umbrella dealer.

Since then, she has created comic roles for other directors such as Frenchman Michel Deville and has filled the screen with horror as the pretty, outwardly pleasant manicurist of Roman Polansky's "Repulsion." She has worked for such directors Francois Truffaut, Luis Bunuel and Jean-Paul Rappeneau. And she has encompassed an incredibly rich variety of roles.

DIRECTORS LOVE Ms. Deneuve. Most of them would agree with Jacques Demy, who has said: "She gives the director everything he asks for." Or Michel Deville, who said: "She is a violin you can set vibrating."

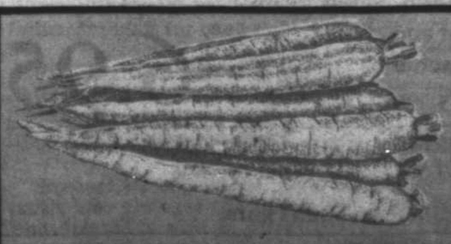

Her latest, "Le Bon Plaisir," which opened this French Film Festival and has already created a stir in Europe, casts Ms. Deneuve as the discarded mistress of a French president who bears — gossip insists — a resemblance, however unflattering, to that current occupant of the Elysee Palace, Francois Mitterand.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. Richard Gere is my all-time favorite actor. Please tell me all about him.

Michelle Russell
Prairieville, La.

A. He was born August 29, 1949 in Philadelphia and raised in upstate New York, one of five children of an insurance salesman and his wife, all of whom were musical. His brother is now a concert pianist, and Richard himself was something of a child prodigy, playing piano, guitar, banjo, and at 14 performing on trumpet with the Syracuse Symphony.

He was also a proficient gymnast, and in 1967 he entered the University of Massachusetts on a gymnastics scholarship. He majored in philosophy but dropped out after two years to try acting, first with the Provincetown Playhouse, then the Seattle Repertory Theater. He then spent some time just hanging around, hippie-style, in Seattle and in Vermont, where he tried to form a rock band.

Eventually, he moved to New York. In 1972, he made his stage debut in a short-lived rock opera called "Soon," co-starring with Barry Bostwick, Peter Allen and Nell Carter. A year later, he took over the "Danny Zuko" role in "Grease" on Broadway and then moved to London to originate the role there. While in London, he also worked with the Young Vic. Returning to New York, he did an episode of "Kojak" and vowed never to do television again.

His movie career started in 1975 with "Report to the Commissioner," continued with "Days of Heaven," but really clicked with "Looking for Mr. Goodbar," in which he played a dangerous hustler who danced around Diane Keaton in her bedroom with a switchblade.

That led to "Bloodbrothers"

Richard Gere

and a beefcake image that he has often protested, "Yanks," "American Gigolo," "An Officer and a Gentleman," "Breathless," the quickly fading "Beyond the Limit" and the current epic, "The Cotton Club," which, at the very least, allowed him to use some of his musical moves. Next up is "King David," in which he portrays the biblical figure; it's due for release next month.

Regarding his personal life: He lives in New York's Greenwich Village where he's been involved in two public incidents: one, urinating on the street at 4 a.m., which earned him a ticket; the other, an assault charge by a parking garage attendant that was recently dropped in criminal court.

His girlfriend of the last few years has been Brazilian artist Sylvia Martins who introduced herself to him one night in Elaine's. He's also been linked to a number of others.

Q. I'd like some information about Canadian tennis pro Carling Bassett.

Barry Macdonald
Kingston, Ontario, Canada

A. She's 17, from Toronto, one of the competitive, rich, athletic publishing dynasty Bassetts. Her great grandfather was publisher of the "Montreal Gazette;" her grandfather, owner of the "Toronto Telegram;" her father, a one-time reporter for the Toronto paper.

Her father was also a top hockey player, world class tennis player and, at 20, a member of Canada's Davis Cup team. He's now the principal owner of the Tampa Bay Bandits of the U.S.F.L. Her mother's side is related to the brewery-owning Carlings. Hence, her name.

Her parents didn't have a girl's name ready when she was born, and her father, known for his impatience, snapped "Name her Carling."

She took up tennis at the age of 5, already a tomboy, and immediately showed gutsiness and grit. At 11, she moved into Nick Bollettieri's pro tennis training camp in Florida, determined to become a world topper, and soon began winning tournaments.

At 15, she turned pro and quickly started to climb upward in the world rankings. At last check, she was 10, but by the end of this year, which she will mostly spend on the circuit, that should change.

Off the court, "she's pretty normal," explains an associate. "She dates a lot, like any teen-ager." She's also been working with J.C. Penney on a clothing line, "Star System," that debuts next month.

Carling Bassett

Julie Christie

Q. Has Julie Christie done any recent films, where does she live, has she ever been married and how old is she?

P. Marco
Margate, N.J.

A. She's 44, has been living both in London and in a farmhouse in Wales, and has been dividing her time of late between social causes, such an nuclear disarmament, and acting.

Her most recent films are "Heat and Dust," which is available in videotape if you missed it in the theaters, "Separate Tables, " which was shown on cable, and "The Return of the Soldier" which hasn't been released here yet.

Regarding marriage: She says she doesn't believe in it. "I don't see any reason for marriage unless you're religious and I am not," she explains. She doesn't believe, though, in being alone. Her seven-year liaison with Warren Beatty was much publicized. Her most recent companion has been radical journalist Duncan Campbell.

Q. Does Joan Collins wear a wig on "Dynasty"?

A fan
Chicago

A. Sometimes. In the first few seasons, she occasionally wore a fall to supplement her own hair for the more elaborate hairstyles. Now, though, according to an associate, she wears a wig if the hairstylists haven't got time in a particular scene to do her hair. In her jail scenes, though, her hair was her own.

Joan Collins

Q. Could you settle a hot argument between my father and me? He says Heather Thomas was Richard Channing's first blond secretary on "Falcon Crest." I say she was never on "Falcon Crest." There's $10 riding on this. Who's right?

Dawn Robbins
Las Vegas, Nev.

A. You are. The blonde in question was Shannon Tweed, former Playmate of the Year and consort of Hugh Hefner. She looks a bit like Heather Thomas, though, so your father's confusion is understandable.

CATHERINE

The script was written by former journalist Francoise Giroud who was French culture minister with Mitterand's predecessor Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

Americans envision Ms. Deneuve from another perspective. She recently ended a happy eight-year association with Chanel "by mutual consent."

But she has left behind an indelible TV image of a sexy, aristocratic blonde, cuddled up to the camera, breathing perfume from every pore; or, later in another ad campaign, relaxing in streamlined curves on the hood of a Lincoln Continental, purring like its motor.

Ms. Deneuve, like other major stars, has learned how to take care of herself. Paris-born, the third daughter of moderately successful actors Maurice Dorleac and the former Renee Deneuve, she rarely saw her parents on the stage. She attended the Ecole Lamazou, a private Catholic school until, at age 11, she switched to the chic Lycee La Fontaine.

"It was," says Ms. Deneuve, "a classic, not a binding formal education." Some of those teachings do not slot neatly into her own later lifestyle.

But the roots remain. And perhaps they help to explain the woman who sits opposite me now, arms stretched along the banquette, relaxed, articulate and intelligent.

Director Roger Vadim, father of her son Christian, once said, "She is, of course, pleased with success and what it brings. But she has an essentially bourgeois attitude toward life. Even in her love affairs, conventional, solid, bourgeois respectablity is her goal."

HE MAY be right. If so, that details some of her basic strengths in a world of famous faces — and facades. And he may have overlooked a few things.

The 17-year-old Catherine Deneuve, introduced by Roman Polanski to the much older, more sophisticated Vadim, was pregnant by him when she was 19. That was in an era when having children "out of wedlock" was not the easy headline announcement it is today for women such as Farrah Fawcett and Susan Sarandon. It meant scandal.

No matter. Ms. Deneuve bore her son Christian in the bright blaze of newspaper headlines. Did she ever consider not having him? "No," says Ms. Deneuve flatly. "I wanted my child."

She adds: "It is true, having a child when I was not even 20 years, this period of my life was very...condensed, you know. And I still don't know if that was good or bad.

"I am curious now about that other different childhood, because I didn't have it. It was something I never knew. But I would have liked, perhaps, to be 18 and laughing with young friends and not in a relationship that was already so serious."

As for Christian today? Ms. Deneuve chuckles, sounding more like a mother than a world-famous actress. "He is good looking. Very bright. A bit lazy. But really a tall, stunning, charming man."

Discussing her own reputation, Ms. Deneuve says candidly that France is a continent away from us — in more than maps and geography.

"I don't really think Americans know me as a film actress," says Ms. Deneuve. "Most of my French films haven't come to America." She shrugs, firmly dismissing movies co-starring Burt Reynolds, Gene Hackman, Jack Lemmon and a recent bomb in which she played a bisexual vampire nuzzling up to Susan Sarandon.

NOW, SHE is recalling the early years. Yes, her parents were actors. "But it's very strange to say that because I don't have the impression I was raised in a peculiar family. We were four sisters and I remember my mother stopped working when we were born."

Ms. Deneuve was a shy, frail child — closest perhaps to her sister Francoise Dorleac. It was because of Francoise that Ms. Deneuve (adopting her mother's maiden name) began her film career. It was Ms. Dorleac, already a promising movie actress, who got her neophyte sister her first movie part at 16, appearing with her in "The Young Girls of Rochefort."

It was Ms. Dorleac, just 25, whose car skidded in a crazy-quilt pattern across the rain-slick French Riviera highway, slammed into a concrete embankment, overturned and exploded into a fireball of flames consuming Ms. Dorleac and her tiny pet chihuahua. The hardest part: She was driving back to Paris after a happy vacation with Ms. Deneuve.

Ask about her sister. The answers come promptly. "I made just two films with her," says Ms. Deneuve. "But we were so close...She was black and I was white. She was absolutely extroverted and I was completely introverted.

"We were really, completely opposite. I was very classic and shy and very much inside. She was extravagant, completely outspoken. But that's the outside shape. Inside we were really much more alike, thinking and feeling the same thing."

When she learned of her sister's death, Ms. Deneuve was working on "Benjamin," in a comedy role directed by Michel Deville. As Agnes Varda, a close friend, recalled it, Ms. Deneuve was the ultimate trouper, appearing on the set, tearless, at every cue call.

But, it was not so simple.

"How did I pull myself together?" she asks now, reflecting on that time. "The first months, I don't really know. You have to make the decision to get ready for work — or everything falls down. I was forced to do things. I had to do things. I had to concentrate on the moment I was living in.

"In the end, I had to face her death because I was working. And I realized I was very lucky to have that work. When you are forced to do things, you can do things."

IN AUGUST 1965, separated from Vadim, she married English photographer David Bailey in a London registry office. The bride wore black. The groom wore a blue sweater. Mick Jagger was best man. And the marriage dissolved five years later. So far, it's Ms. Deneuve's one and only matrimonial fling, but not her last try at love.

The gossip columns in the fall of 1970 were sputtering and spattering exclamation points everywhere to announce the closely followed liaison of Ms. Deneuve and married Italian superstar Marcello Mastroianni.

It was a liaison that ended three years after she gave birth to their daughter Chiara-Charlotte in 1972, a daughter, now 12, whom Ms. Deneuve describes as "quite independent, quite strong, with a great sense of humor — and a very good observer of people. She is very good at rating people."

Ms. Deneuve will tell you what she likes in people.

"If I knew what type of man I really liked... hmmm." She pauses. "Perhaps I would still be happily married forever. I do know, male or female, I like human beings who are not too...tough. You know?"

In practical terms, that means she hates fakes, egotists, and rates the good heart higher than the arid brain.

She will tell you about her children.

"I'm sure it is difficult to be the child of famous parents. I don't think I would have liked it. I think already you must compete with those parents as you become adult, or at least try. So you are competing with these images all your life."

MS. DENEUVE, who keeps her travel to a minimum, works mainly near Paris and her countryside estate, doing two movies a year.

In the country house just on the outskirts of Paris, where she can raise her favorite flowers and guard her privacy, Ms. Deneuve is happiest.

Texas Boys Choir will perform

The Texas Boys Choir of Fort Worth will perform at 8 p.m. Saturday at Midland High School Auditorium. The performance is part of Midland Community Concerts subscription concert series.

Now in its fourth decade of performing, the Texas Boys Choir has earned a world-wide reputation rivaling that of the famed boys' choirs of England and Germany. The Choir will give a concert in Midland Saturday.

In more than 3,000 appearances throughout the United States, Canada, Mexico and Europe, this 27-member ensemble has offered musical programs ranging from old church music and Elizabethan madrigals to the latest Broadway show tunes and the folk songs of the Texas ranches. All are performed in full costume.

The Choir has sung at the Mormon Tabernacle, Westminister Abbey and Notre Dame, Paris. The Choir represented the United States at the festivals in Vienna and Holland, participated in Wales' historic Eisteddfod and appeared at the Festival Paul Claudel at La Cote St. Andre, France.

The Choir has performed in Mozart's "The Magic Flute," Puccini's "Tosca," Stravinsky's "Persephone" and the American premiere of Gian-Carlo Menotti's "Help, Help, the Globolinks" with the Santa Fe Opera in addition to performing regularly with the Fort Worth and Dallas symphonies, the Fort Worth Opera Association and the Texas Little Symphony.

Through the years, the unique sound of the Texas Boys Choir has inspired outstanding contemporary composers to write music especially for the ensemble, among them the late Hungarian master Ernst von Dohnanyi who produced a Stabat Mater for the Choir in 1956. Menotti's song suite "Miracles," for boys choir and symphony orchestra, had its world premiere by the Choir with the Fort Worth Symphony Orchestra.

Odessa College will present Ray Bradbury's 'Dandelion Wine'

ODESSA — Odessa College Theatre's production of "Dandelion Wine" opens at 8 p.m. Feb. 22 at OC. It will play at 8 p.m. Feb. 23 and 2 p.m. Feb. 24.

The play wil be a readers' theater production. "Dandelion Wine" is adapted by Leslie Irene Coger and Duane Hunt from the novel by Ray Bradbury. The play is about the summer of Douglas Spaulding's 12th year, 1928, "a summer of sorrows and marvels and gold-fuzzed bees." Some have termed the story biographical.

The OC production is directed by Paula Thompson, OC director, and Marsha Gephart, OC speech instructor. Characters will read their parts from a script and a narrator will be part of the cast.

Cast members include David Weaver Jr. as Spaulding; Amy Green as Mom, Lucy and the telephone operator; James Tice as John Huff, Reader and Miguel; John Frank Bartleson III as Grandpa, Mr. Sanderson and Pawnee Bill; John McCarroll as Tom Spaulding, Reader No. 5, Dad and Col. Sanderson; Julie Hicks Bramblett as Great-Grandma and Reader No. 6; and Bruce Drushel as the narrator.

Admission is $2 for adults, $1.50 for students and 50 cents for senior citizens. OC students will be admitted free with a valid ID card. Advance tickets will be available in the OC Information Center or by calling Ms. Thompson, 1-335-6616.

'Peter Pan' a must for all ages

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

Georgia Temple

The following riddle is really quite simple. First, we need fairy dust, a boy who won't grow up. Then...

"A place where dreams are born, and time is never planned.... It's not on any chart, you must find it with your heart...Just think of lovely things and your heart will fly on wings in...."

J.M. Barrie's Neverland; a land with hardly any space between adventures, a giver of treasure more precious than gold, eternal youth.

Between now and March 23, Neverland can be found onstage at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., in Midland Community Theatre's production of "Peter Pan." Peter, Tinkerbell, Captain Hook, Smee and the rascal pirates, Tiger Lily and her Indians, the Lost Boys, Wendy, Michael, John, Mr. and Mrs. Darling, and of course, the crocodile (tic-toc), all come to life in this delightful three-act production.

Opening night, a sense of anticipation was felt among the children of all ages in Theatre One during the scene in the Darling nursery. Once Nana (Ray Johnson), the dog, is safely chained outside, and Mr. and Mrs. Darling (Michael Stannard and Janet Considine) have left, and the nursery is dim, we know it's about to happen. The nursery window, which has just been locked by Mrs. Darling, slowly opens.

Then, it happens. Peter flies into the room. Adventure is just around the corner. Neverland awaits us. But first, Wendy, John and Michael must learn to fly.

Peter sprinkles fairy dust over all three and they are airborne. The set breaks away and they fly to Neverland.

This and the scene on Captain Hook's ship are among the high-points of the evening. Both are well staged, beautifully executed and hold the audience's rapt attention. When the pirates walk the plank (which faces the audience), and jump, the kids on the front row run to the pit to see where they went. I strongly suspect the adults wanted to look also, but were wary of the crocodile.

Other high points included:

— Michael Stannard's portrayal of Captain Hook — self-proclaimed "the swinest swine, the dirtiest dog, the slimest rat, who would stoop to the lowest, meanest tricks in the book" to have his way. Stannard aptly plays Hook with a humorous touch.

— Jim Slaughter as Smee is the right mix of sinister and inept. At one point, he mounts Hook's chair and the pirates carry him off in the direction opposite the way he is pointing. This and his facial contortions are right on target.

— The Pirates — David Houston, Marc Slattery, Rick Zamarano, Skeet Doss and Jay Hundley — a swarthy looking motley crew — do an excellent job.

— Renee Spicer as Peter is bouncy, charming and convincing as the boy who refuses to grow up. We cheer when Peter tells Hook, "I'm youth; I'm joy; I'm freedom."

— The Animals are great fun, especially for the kids. Lion is played by Brian Taylor; Kangaroo, Ken Bubin; Ostrich, Judy Coleman; and Crocodile, Scott Innes.

— David Layman has created a marvelous inside world for the inhabitants of Neverland to live in, especially Captain Hook's ship. The outside scene is slightly disappointing, however, the other sets compensate for its lack of lustre.

— Wendy (Sherri Reeves), John (Howard Griffin) and Michael (Jim Zeibler) handle the flying scenes quite well.

— The orchestra, directed by Thomas R. Roberts, does a remarkable job of keeping up with the sounds made by various characters in addition to playing well.

Distractions in the production included:

— The choreography for the Indians and their chief Tiger Lily (Carol Cristiani) needs improvement. Their dances lack the pizazz of those of the Pirates.

— In the opening scene when Peter is looking for his shadow taken by Mrs. Darling, Tinkerbell guides him to the chest. Unfortunately, the chest is a light color, and Peter's shadow is cast on it before he retrieves his shadow from its top drawer.

— In Act III, the flying apparatus stuck, thereby causing a slowdown in the opening of the final nursery scene. Then, when flying out of the nursery with Jane (Tori Stutes), Peter flew into the side of the window rather than through it. Apparently, the handler's (the person flying Peter) timing was off. Ms. Spicer made a nice recovery.

— Due to equipment problems, Ms. Spicer didn't fly in for her curtain call as Peter. Despite these problems, the flying scenes were well worth seeing.

Directed by Don Bachmann, "Peter Pan" is a must for children. One youngster of about 5 may have summed up how the young in heart of all ages felt at the end of the evening. He told his dad he liked the show and was ready to see it again. However, he didn't want to wait. He wanted them to run it again, right then.

'Killing Fields' brutal, beautiful

By DAVID LEE FORREST

David Forrest

"The full dimensions of Cambodia's martyrdom will probably never be known or understood. Nevertheless, the evidence accumulated until now already makes the Nazi holocaust seem tame by comparison." — from "Vietnam: A History" by Stanley Karnow.

"The Killing Fields" is a horrifying, brutal film. It is also an astoundingly beautiful one.

The film, based on a true story, opens in Cambodia during 1973, and follows Sidney Schanberg, a New York Times war correspondent, and his Cambodian assistant and interpreter, Dith Pran, as they try to cover the insanely complicated fighting between the Cambodian army, U.S. forces, North Vietnamese and Vietcong combatants and the Khmer Rouge communist insurgents.

Sidney, played by Sam Waterston, is a brash, hard-working journalist and Pran, played by Dr. Haing S. Ngor, is a very loyal and capable helper without whom the talented Sidney would simply be an ineffective stranger in a strange land.

After the capital city, Phnompenh, is captured by the Khmer Rouge, Sidney decides to remain there to try to cover the new regime. Pran stays with him, although he wisely sends his wife and children to the safety of America.

The Khmer Rouge prove to be dangerously unpredictable and soon Sidney flees the country but is unable to get Pran out with him. Sidney returns to New York, where he becomes obsessed with trying to save Pran.

At this point, the film focuses on Pran's struggle to survive. The Khmer Rouge began a new calendar at Year Zero to show their determination to create a new society — a bizarre, ill-conceived agricultural utopia — completely without "all sorts of depraved cultures and social blemishes."

To do this, it is estimated that they killed as many as two million Cambodians — a fourth of the country's population. They drove virtually everyone out of the cities to work as slave laborers in the countryside. Hundreds of thousands died there of torture, disease and starvation. In his book, Karnow reports that the atrocities even "included instances of cannibalism."

In the slave labor camps, Pran's existence becomes worse than what one might expect to see in a horror film.

The taut direction by Roland Joffe — amazingly, this is his first feature film — is spellbinding. In his hands, even the developing of a simple passport photograph becomes an intense matter of life and death.

The well-written script by Bruce Robinson, the razor-sharp photography by Chris Menges and jarring music soundtrack by Mike Oldfield (whose "Tubular Bells" was the memorable theme music of "The Exorcist") all complement each other perfectly.

Waterston, who first came into prominence as Nick Carraway in "The Great Gatsby," does an excellent job.

Ngor is even more impressive; when he is on the screen it's almost as though one is watching a documentary because his performance is so purely natural. Undoubtedly, it was based on his own experiences, since Ngor himself is a Cambodian who was tortured by the Khmer Rouge before he managed to flee that country.

Viewers need to be forewarned that the movie is grimly graphic in depicting the violence and psychological toll of war and political repression.

Despite the fact that it shows the potential madness of human beings at their worst, in the end, "The Killing Fields" becomes an impressively powerful tribute to the human spirit and the strength of friendship.

Even though the audience is able to leave the theater with an upbeat feeling, "The Killing Fields" is unsettling enough that a viewer may never again be able to casually ignore a news story about the continuing conflict in that haunted corner of Southeast Asia.

"The Killing Fields," rated R for realistic war violence, is now showing at North Park Cinema.

'Passage' well-crafted, subtle film

Since "A Passage to India" is set in British colonial India, many people will undoubtedly compare it to the most recent Indian film epic, Sir Richard Attenborough's "Gandhi."

However, this film directed by David Lean actually has more in common with a rather different type of movie, "The Bridge Over the River Kwai," which was also directed by Lean.

In both movies, two vastly different cultural outlooks collide. In "Bridge," a Japanese officer, an British commander and an American soldier were all hopelessly bewildered by each other's vastly different values and codes of honor.

In "A Passage to India," based on the novel of the same title by E.M. Forster, British colonial officials in India during the 1920s come up against a society so complex and so foreign to their own experience that most of them, rather than risk upsetting their tidy view of the world, don't even attempt to understand it.

The British see themselves as being the only ones there trying "to do justice and keep the peace," as one character puts it, and refuse to acknowledge the Indian natives as being even remotely close to equals.

As William Borders, who was The New York Times correspondent in India from 1975 to 1979, recently wrote, "In my days there it used to amuse me to imagine the first Englishman who saw the Taj Mahal, which was built in the 17th century in the Mogul period that preceded the British Raj. Whoever he was, when he came around the corner and cast his eyes on this magnificent structure, don't you suppose he wondered just a bit about whether or how much these people really needed the civilizing influence of the British?"

In "Passage," the Anglo-Saxon occupiers never bother to wonder about that question.

Two of the film's female characters, young Adela and elderly Mrs. Moore, are a bit more curious than their fellow Britons when they arrive in India and they actually go looking for some mild tourist-style adventure even though that goes against the accepted social conventions.

They become friends with Dr. Aziz, an educated Moslem doctor, who very much wants to fit in with the English upper-class in India.

Aziz nearly bankrupts himself to plan an elaborate picnic — complete with an elephant ride — to a local attraction, the Marabar caves, simply to please his new-found British friends.

After this trip, however, Adela accuses Aziz of attempting to rape her while they were touring the caves. Aziz is arrested by the British and put on trial.

The case immediately becomes a hot political — rather than legal — issue, with pro-independence Indians calling Aziz a political martyr and the British considering him a perfect illustration of the flaws of the "darker races."

Lean does a good job of showing the tension between the two cultures, rather than having his actors tell the audience about it. In this respect, and many others, "Passage" is a well-crafted and marvelously subtle film.

The photography is exceptional, with some of the most effective shots being ones of trains crossing the vast and mysterious expanses of the sub-continent.

It also has some very fine acting. Peggy Ashcroft as Mrs. Moore, Judy Davis as Adela and Victor Banerjee as Aziz are especially good.

Unfortunately, the screenplay fails to make clear what the characters' motivations are for many of the odd things they do. One sits through the whole film hoping that the story's great many ambiguities will be at least partially explained at the end.

Instead, "Passage's" worst flaw is its grossly unsatisfying conclusion. After reaching an emotional climax at the trial's end, the film drags on for quite a while longer without truly resolving anything.

As the final credits were rolling up the screen at a recent showing, one viewer said to the person next to him, "What kind of an ending was that?"

Despite this, if one is willing to simply go along for a beautifully scenic ride without worrying too much about the final destination, "A Passage to India" can be a journey worth making.

"A Passage to India," rated PG for adult situations, is now showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

Compositions sought marking Constitution's anniversary

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — American composers will be sought for creating six works that will premiere in 1987 on the U.S. Constitution's 200th anniversary, Philadelphia Orchestra conductor Riccardo Muti said.

"We will be trying to find the very best of the American music world," said Muti.

Stephen Sell, orchestra executive director, said the six works will include two full-length symphonic works, one overture, one work especially for the renowned string section of the Philadelphia Orchestra; one work for woodwinds, brass and percusion; and one for a chamber group.

Muti said there will be no competition among composers. He said a list will be compiled of Americans and divided into three groups: young composers just getting started, those in a middle-age range and finally the living masters.

"We are looking for those people who are considered the leaders of their generation of composers," Sell said.

Muti accepted a $90,000 check from Johnson & Higgins, an insurance brokerage firm that is marking its 100th anniversary this year. The money will pay the composers' commissions.

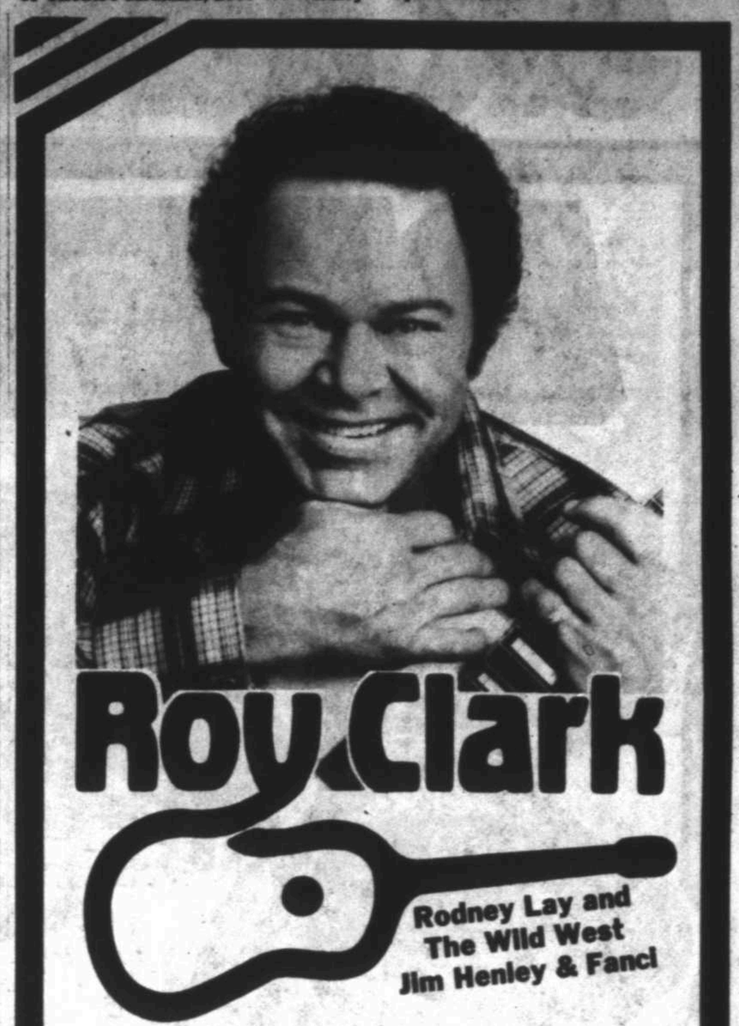

Commissions will range from $20,000 for the two symphonic works downward. In return for the commissions, the orchestra has free performance rights for one year.

"The creativity that took place in Philadelphia and resulted in this document changed the entire world," said Italian-born Muti.

"Because we believe the power of music also changes the world, the Philadelphia is glad to offer these international premieres to honor the creative spark that joins all people together."

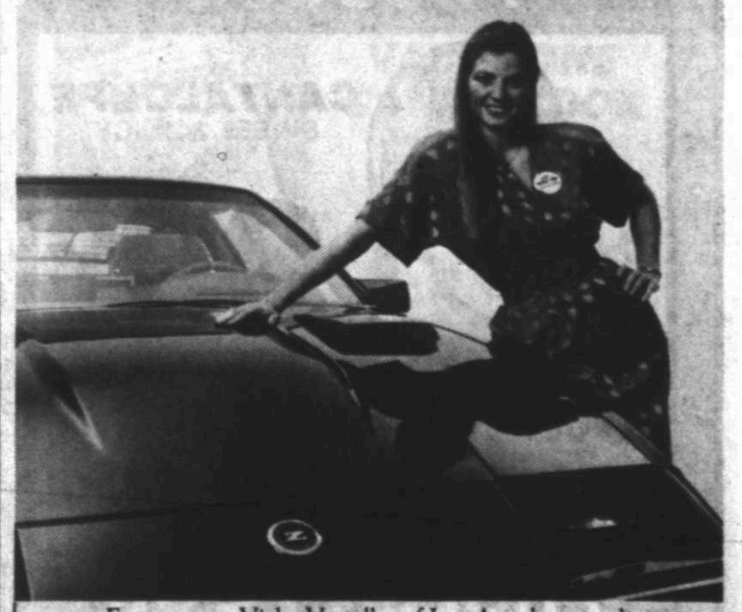

The initial performances will be at the Academy of Music, the orchestra's home base. Sell said the works will also be featured in performances already scheduled in New York and Washington and in a European tour just now in the tentative planning stages.

Mayor W. Wilson Goode, also present for the check presentation, said the orchestra's project is one in a number of events planned for the city's anniversary celebration: "We the People 200."

Wonderful dishes can be made with disliked foods

By SANDRA SCOTT KLINK
King Features Syndicate

Some of us are born crusaders, always willing to pick up the next challenge and run with it. The degree of difficulty varies with the type of challenge, of course, and the cook's true test as a crusader is in dealing with food dislikes. By dislikes we mean something bordering on outright hatred, loathing, abhorrence. No mild aversions.

Many of these dislikes stem from childhood — they're foods that many of us were forced to eat for one reason or another. More often than not, the reason had something to do with vitamins and minerals and good health. That, unfortunately, is not enough to make someone, particularly a child, eat. The best motivator is simple: good taste.

Now, for the crusaders: These 10 foods rank as the most disliked by the most people. Formal and informal surveys will verify the results every time. And, yes, virtually every one of them is healthful, nutritious and good for you (ah, those familiar words). 1. Liver 2. Broiled Fish 3. Raw Oysters 4. Milk 5. Spinach 6. Beets 7. Cauliflower 8. Broccoli 9. Cooked Carrots 10. Brussels Sprouts.

Which brings us to the next question. Just why do we have cookbooks? Learning new and appetizing ways to serve familiar (or perhaps hated) foods is surely one of the main reasons.

So, from the current crop of cookbooks, some suggestions. Do not expect miracles. It often takes a long time to convert someone. Think of your mission as an experiment in behavior modification. Most people are educable and these selections can help change some minds about the Terrible 10.

This is the best thing that ever happened to liver. It's from "The Cafe des Artistes Cookbook" by George Lang (Clarkson N. Potter, $10.95)

CALF'S LIVER WITH SESAME AND MUSTARD CRUST

8 2-ounce slices of calf's liver
Freshly ground black pepper
1 cup sesame seeds
1 cup yellow mustard seeds
3 tablespoons Dijon mustard
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
4 tablespoons olive oil

Season liver slices with pepper.

In a shallow plate, combine sesame and mustard seeds.

Lightly brush each liver slice on both sides with mustard, then dredge on both sides in sesame and mustard seed mixture, pressing seeds firmly into liver to coat.

Heat butter and oil in a large saute pan over medium high heat. When the fat is hot, slip in the liver slices and saute for 2 minutes on each side. The seeds should be golden brown, but not at all burned.

Remove liver from pan and pat off excess fat with paper towels.

Pierre Franey has a way with palate-pleasing combinations. This one is from "Pierre Franey's Low-Calorie Gourmet" by Pierre Franey and Richard Flaste (Times Books, $14.95).

BROILED FISH FILLETS WITH ORANGE-BUTTER SAUCE

¼ cup orange juice
2 tablespoons butter at room temperature
½ cup diced ripe tomatoes
4 skinless and boneless white-fleshed fish fillets, such as fluke, red snapper, striped bass or lemon sole
2 teaspoons olive oil
½ teaspoon salt
Freshly ground black pepper
¼ cup chopped fresh coriander leaves

Preheat the broiler, but remove one tray to keep it cool.

Pour the orange juice into a saucepan and reduce it by half over high heat. Add the butter and tomatoes and cook just until the butter is well blended with the tomatoes.

Brush the fish on both sides with olive oil. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Arrange the fish on the unheated broiler tray. Put the fish 2 to 3 inches from the heat source.

Broil for 3 to 4 minutes, or just until the fillets are cooked through. Remove from the heat and serve with the orange sauce. Garnish with the coriander.

Oysters may be more appealing to the oysterphobe if they're wrapped in bacon and cooked. "The Complete Book of American Fish and Shellfish Cookery" by Elizabeth Bjornskov (Knopf, $18.95) is full of good ideas.

ANGELS ON HORSEBACK

1 pint oysters
Salt and pepper to taste
Paprika
Thin slices bacon
Sprigs parsley

Sprinkle oysters with salt, pepper and paprika. Wrap a slice of bacon around each oyster and secure it with a wooden cocktail pick. Preheat oven to 450F. Place wrapped oysters on a rack in a shallow baking pan and bake, turning once, until bacon is crisp on all sides, about 10 minutes. Remove picks and serve garnished with parsley sprigs.

A lot of people hate milk, but most like some kind of fruit juice. Think of the fruit and egg as a disguise. "The Complete Book of Egg Cookery" by Ann Seranne (Macmillan, $14.95) offers this:

FRUIT AND EGG MIX-UP

1 cup milk
1 egg
2 tablespoons sugar
¼ cup apple, orange or cranberry juice

Put all ingredients into blender container. Cover and blend on medium speed until frothy. Pour into a tall glass.

A painless way to serve spinach is with pasta from "Pasta and Rice Italian Style" by Efrem Funghi Calingaert and Jacquelyn Days Serwer (NAL, $7.95):

RIGATONI WITH SPINACH AND RICOTTA

6 tablespoons butter
1 (10-ounce) package frozen leaf spinach, partially thawed and chopped
Salt
2 tablespoons onion, minced
¼ pound pancetta, diced or ¼ pound bacon, cut into ¼" strips
1 pound rigatoni
⅔ cup fresh ricotta
½ cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese

Heat 2 tablespoons butter in a small skillet over medium heat. Add the spinach and ½ teaspoon salt, and saute for 8 to 10 minutes, or until almost dry.

Heat the remaining butter in another skillet, and saute the onion and the bacon over medium heat for about 10 minutes.

Drop the rigatoni into 4 to 5 quarts boiling salted water.

While the pasta is cooking, cream the spinach and the ricotta in a heated serving bowl.

Drain the rigatoni when al dente.

Add the rigatoni to the serving bowl and mix well, until the rigatoni are well coated. Add the onion and bacon and the Parmesan cheese, and toss.

If beets are your nemesis, mix them up with potatoes and cumin. From "Food for Friends" by Barbara Kafka (Harper & Row, $19.95).

BEET AND POTATO PUREE

1 pound beets, coarsely chopped
¾ pound peeled potatoes, coarsely chopped
3 cups water
3 tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon kosher salt
1 teaspoon ground cumin, optional
6 tablespoons unsalted butter
⅓ cup heavy cream

Put the beets and potatoes in a saucepan with the water, sugar, 2 teaspoons salt and cumin. Simmer over medium heat for 30 minutes or until tender.

Drain the beet-potato mixture and place it in the work bowl of a food processor. Process with on-off pulses until the mixture is nearly smooth but small pieces of beet still show. Add the butter, 1 tablespoon at a time, then beat in the cream and the remaining teaspoon of salt.

The salami takes the edge off of the taste of the cauliflower in "All Color Book of Soups and Appetizers" (Arco, $6.95)

CAULIFLOWER AND SALAMI SOUFFLES

1 small cauliflower, broken into flowerets
⅔ cup skinned and chopped salami
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
3 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1¼ cups milk
Pinch of freshly ground nutmeg
Freshly ground white pepper
2 large eggs, separated

Preheat the oven to 400F. Use 1 tablespoon of the butter to grease four custard cups or ovenproof dishes.

Bring a pan of salted water to a boil and add the cauliflower. Simmer for 4-5 minutes, or until the cauliflower is just cooked.

Meanwhile, melt the remaining butter in a small saucepan, sprinkle in the flour and stir over low heat for ½ minute until straw-colored. Remove from the heat and gradually stir in the milk. Return to the heat and simmer, stirring, until thick and smooth. Add the nutmeg and salt and pepper to taste, remove from the heat and leave to cool for a few minutes, then stir in the egg yolks.

Drain cauliflower and set aside.

In a clean, dry bowl, beat the egg whites until standing in stiff peaks. Using a metal spoon, fold into the sauce with the salami.

Arrange the cauliflower in the prepared dishes and spoon the souffle mixture on top. Bake in the oven for 30 minutes until well risen and golden. Remove and serve at once.

Turn broccoli into a custard with a rich sauce in the French manner from "In Madeleine's Kitchen" by Madeleine Kamman (Atheneum, $22.95).

TIMBALES OF BROCCOLI

Timbales:
1½ cups broccoli flowerets and stems
3 tablespoons butter
Salt
Pepper from the mill
4 eggs
1½ teaspoons cornstarch
1 cup heavy cream
Sauce:
4 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon sesame seeds
⅓ cup heavy cream
Salt
Pepper from the mill

Blanch the broccoli for 1 minute in boiling salted water. Heat 2 tablespoons of the butter in a small skillet, add the broccoli, salt and pepper and cook, covered, for another 5 minutes, until very soft. Cool.

Transfer to the blender container. Add the eggs, cornstarch and cream and process until smooth. Season well with salt and pepper.

Preheat the oven to 325F. Butter 6 custard cups with the remaining tablespoon of the butter and fill them with the broccoli pudding. Bake in a hot water bath until a skewer inserted in the center comes out clean.

While the custards bake, prepare the sauce. Heat the butter, add the sesame seeds and cook until the butter solids precipitate into a fine brown layer at the bottom of the pan. Add the heavy cream and whisk well to obtain a light coating texture. Correct the seasoning.

Unmold the custards onto individual plates and spoon the sauce over them.

Even fussy kids will eat carrots this way. It's from "The Dumpling Cookbook" by Maria Polushkin (Workman, $7.95).

CARROT FRITTERS

5 to 6 carrots, grated
2 eggs
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon sugar
¼ cup flour
½ stick butter

Mix the grated carrots with eggs, salt and sugar, and blend in the flour to make a batter the consistency of thick cream.

Melt the butter in a large skillet and drop batter by tablespoons into the hot butter. Fry for a few minutes on each side. Remove with a slotted spoon and drain on absorbent paper.

Why do Brussels sprouts have to be served the same old way? Bert Greene offers a new twist in "Greene on Greens" (Workman, $12.95).

BRUSSELS SPROUTS A LA GRECQUE

1 cup water
½ cup olive oil
¼ cup lemon juice
Bouquet garni: 2 parsley, sprigs, 1 bay leaf, 2 tarragon sprigs, 6 peppercorns and ½ teaspoon celery seed, tied in a small cheesecloth bag
1 pound Brussels sprouts, trimmed, an X cut in each stem end
1 teaspoon red wine vinegar
1 teaspoon finely slivered lemon peel
Salt and freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoon chopped fresh parsley

Combine the water, olive, oil, lemon juice and bouquet garni in a medium saucepan. Heat to boiling; reduce the heat. Simmer, uncovered, 10 minutes.

Add the Brussels sprouts to the saucepan; return to boiling. Continue to cook, uncovered, until the sprouts are barely tender, about 10 minutes. Remove from the heat; let the sprouts cool in the liquid. Discard the bouquet garni.

Transfer the sprouts with their liquid to a serving bowl. Add the vinegar, lemon peel and salt and pepper to taste. Toss well; chill thoroughly. Serve garnished with parsley.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

Books written just for young adults

By LUCY BUCHWALD

Public libraries serve a diverse clientle. In addition to different reading and educational levels, there are ethnic, religious, philosophical, sexual, and cultural differences. A further division is created by books written primarily for adults or children, and the relatively new (since the late 1960s) literature known as young adult.

Young adulthood is the period of time when you are no longer a child and not yet an adult. It is the difficult-to-understand period of the life cycle, usually occuring between the ages of 12 and 20.

Noted psychologist Jean Piaget theorized at age 12 the "formal operational" stage of thinking begins to develop. Not until this stage can a person reason logically and consistently, handle abstract ideas, infer cause and effect, and make generalizations. The young adult is now able to consider different points of view, various possiblities, and to imagine actions and their consequences, without actually being involved.

Another eminent psychologist, Erik Erikson, sees young adulthood as an "identity crisis." Yound adults are trying to forge identities from themselves out of their childhood experiences and their aspirations for the future. As part of this identity crisis the opinions of others become very important, especially those of the peer group.

Peer-group identificiation allows young adults to postpone making their own decisions. Through their choice of group, approved clothing, language and music, they show they are no longer under adult domination. It also gives young adults a chance to try out new roles in the safety of the group. They can be leader one day, follower the next, choose to be a non-conformist, or conform to society's expectations.

Yound adult literature actually extends the peer group. It gives young adults the chance to experience life styles, tragedies, and pleasures vicariously.

Young adult literature is most simply defined as literature read by young adults. This includes fiction an non-fiction titles written especially for them, as well as those written for adults and children.

Thus at Midland County Public Library, books for young adults can be found in both the Young Peoples and Adult departments. Located on the first floor is a paperback rack filled with young adult titles. Ask the Reference Librarian or Circulation staff to point it out to you. There you will find such popular authors and titles as S.E. Hinton's THE OUTSIDERS, Paula Danzinger's THE CAT ATE MY GYM SUIT, Lois Duncan's KILLING MR. GRIFFIN, Robert Cormier's I AM THE CHEESE, Norma Klein's IT'S OK IF YOU DON'T LOVE ME and Richard Peck's SECRETS OF THE SHOPPING MALL, which may not be listed in the card catalog.

Lucy Buchwald is Reference Librarian at Midland County Library.

Magazine focuses on Asian culture

NEW YORK (AP) — About 15 years ago, with the war in her country dominating international news, a tiny Vietnamese woman decided to expose Asia in a gentler way to the world.

So in 1970, with $40,000 from her British husband, Tuyet Nguyet set up shop in Hong Kong to publish a magazine she hoped would bring Asia to life, focusing on its cuiture, arts and history.

Arts of Asia, a full color magazine, has grown to a circulation of 17,500, with subscribers in 90 countries. It examines all aspects of Asian life — from Indonesian sarongs to carved ivory cricket cages in Hong Kong.

"The reason I really wanted to start the magazine was that I had covered the war in Vietnam and although the destruction was terrible, the suffering was terrible, these things just passed by — the people who suffered were not being remembered," Tuyét Nguyet said in an interview during a recent visit to New York.

"The Vietnamese people, the Korean people, the Filipino people ought to be remembered, along with their cultural heritage, not just because of the war but because we have something else that others can learn from."

The cricket cages, featured on the cover of a coming issue, touch a chord for Ms. Nguyet, who remembers chasing crickets as child near her home in the countryside by the Mekong River.

"As a young girl in Vietnam I used to catch crickets," she said. "I used to go out with my other friends and we'd put them in little matchboxes. So when I received the article on the subject, I was delighted."

Her publication has a loyal following and articles often come to her. But it wasn't always that way.

"I started from scratch, from nothing," recalled Ms. Nguyet, a former reporter for the English-language "The Times of Vietnam" and other publications.

First she spent months compiling a list of possible subscribers. After a year of groundwork, the first issue, a 74-page edition focusing on Chinese jade, was published in January 1971.

That edition was sent free to thousands of museums, specialists, collectors and institutions.

"It took us three years to start to break even and another three years to gain back the losses," she said. But now the bimonthly magazine is solidly in the black. Ms. Nguyet donates a substantial portion of the magazine's profits to Vietnamese refugees who live in camps in Hong Kong.

Ms. Nguyet's workday revolves around the magazine. She is up at 3 a.m. to call New York, checking on an advertiser. Later, she's on the phone to Katmandu, discussing an article planned on Nepalese textiles.

In addition to being editor and publisher, Ms. Nguyet, 50, is the sole advertising agent for the magazine. Her territory includes areas from Japan to Iran.

She draws on a list of 400 writers, experts in their fields. Her staff of 13 includes her husband, Stephen Markbreiter, the associate editor, and son Michael, 22.

She proofreads every issue before it goes to the printers and checks it again when it's returned.

Pointing to a series of photographs showing the steps in bronze castings in Nepal, she said she tries to have readers learn through her eyes and get a glimpse of Asian philosophy and culture.

Old-timer tells about being cowboy

A Review

If you were warming up around the campfire after a day on the trail, you might hear old-timers reminiscing. And the cowboy likely to give you an earful is Willard "Bill" Leonard, a grandson of gold-rush pioneers who homesteaded in Oregon. "Horse Sense" (Oregon Historical Society: $15.95; $9.95, paperback) is his charming autobiography, filled to the brim with photos and historical trivia passed word-of-mouth over the years. Leonard was born in 1902 on a cattle ranch when "every man had to be a cowboy." He talks about a simpler way of life; what it was like among buffalo herds, Indians and vaqueros, the spirit of discovery and about the grandmother who reared 17 children in a log cabin in the sierra. He's a bit long-winded explaining genealogy, and his speech might sound hokey to some, but his is the voice of a romantic past, a voice kids dream of listening to under the stars.

'Jitterbug Perfume' about perfume, life, death, immortality

"Jitterbug Perfume," by Tom Robbins; Bantam; $15.95, 320 pp

A Review

By DON STRACHEN
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Robbins' first novel, "Another Roadside Attraction," was refreshingly blithesome, a rollicking collage of Joycean verbal cornucopia, Brautiganian diamond-like sentences and Fieldingesque joie de vivre — until it lapsed into a preachy, comatose coda.

His second, "Even Cowgirls Get the Blues," if rough, unleashed a soaring comic spirit and hit the best-seller charts. "Still Life with Woodpecker" was only slightly less buoyant and finally pulled a story tightly together. With "Jitterbug Perfume," Robbins has truly arrived.

"Perfume" is still less exuberant than "Cowgirls" — that's one of those magical, one-time books like "Catch-22," whose sheer brilliance steamrolls right over its excesses. But "Perfume" is less diminished than honed. The author may still occasionally stick his foot in the door of his mouth, as he would say in one of those metaphors he loves to mix with wordplay salads, but then he'll unfuri a phrase that will bring your critical mind to its knees: "...His latest beard flying in the wind like a nauseated Chinaman losing his birds-nest soup."

The plot: Beets mysteriously appear at the respective doors of perfumers in New Orleans and Paris and a genius waitress in Seattle. Meanwhile, in the 10th Century, a monarch challenges death and launches out on a profound and pungent odyssey. King Alobar is Robbins' finest character to date, less hilarious but more fully-rounded than "Cowgirls' " Sissy Hankshaw. After his differently but equally well-rounded wife Kudra crosses over to the Other Side, Alobar takes up with the god Pan, reduced to a shadow of his former self since the Christians turned him into Satan. Like the multiple tails of Borelly's Comet, the multiple tales of Alobar and the three beet recipients come to a head.

And then there's the founder of the Last Laugh Foundation, Wiggs Dannyboy — a name you want to meet. Dannyboy, like Alobar, would be immortal. Are those Pan's pipes calling, or the sound of Wiggs' roses falling? His name is dropped now and then to keep us piqued and finally he enters, smiling: It's Timothy Leary. Wiggs, alas, is less entertaining than the real Dr. Leary. His brogue is a questionable artistic decision, and he's given to a speech form which could be death to a lesser novel: the lecture. Even propped up with aphorisms and spinning veritable kaleidoscopes of blarney, Wiggs is too obviously a spokesman for Robbins' pop philosophy, too much the visiting professor.

On the other hand, Wiggs' final manifesto could have been limned by Leary himself, and mad perfumer Marcel's treatise on smell and evolution, central to the book, casts a spell. Such paeans to hitherto unappreciated items — New Orleans, February and the body motions of a bartender — more aptly suit the comic muse. Behold the elegant nonsense linking bivalve and urbopolis: "Each ritzy glob glistening upon the lustrous floor (or ceiling) of its desire. The oyster was an animal worthy of New Orleans, as mysterious and private and beautiful as the city itself."

But "Perfume" really is about perfume. About jitterbug perfume. Fragrance holds this book together as surely as it binds men to women, although you can't really smell it as you can a William Burroughs book. As much of a sensualist as Robbins is, his wigged-out similes often entertain more than they evoke: "His knuckles began rapping at his eye patch like a mongoloid woodpecker drilling for worms in a poker chip." But sometimes they are that rare blend of magic that does both: "Outdoors the snow was piled halfway to the Big Dipper, and the earth lay as passive as an eyeless potato."

"Perfume" is also about immortality, about life and death, about the evolution of consciousness, and first and last, about beets. Paradoxically, its most penetrating vegetable observation regards the onion, which "has as many pages as 'War and Peace,' every one of which is poignant enough to make a strong man weak."

But peel an onion and what do you have? Every one of "Perfume's" pages has enough belly laughs to reduce Arnold Schwarzenegger to jelly. It's a rich artichoke of a book: Peel it away and it's all heart.

Novel's characters not compelling

A Review

Carcanet (108 East 32nd St., New York, N.Y. 10016) has re-issued "The Rash Act" ($14.95), Ford Madox Ford's 1933 novel about a luckless American who assumes the identity of a wealthy Britisher who has killed himself and is thereby diverted from his own suicide. It is a solid piece of work that reaches some interesting conclusions about the Great Depression and the Lost Generation. But it also shares two faults with Ford's better-known "The Good Soldier": a meditative, rather action-less narration that confuses the reader with frequent flashbacks and the author's failure to create a convincingly American protagonist. None of the characters is truly compelling. Ford was one of the major British authors of his day, but this is not his most memorable novel.

Dogs still Americans' best friends

Dogs still are Americans' favorite pets, with 45 percent of the households owning at least one. Cats are in 31 percent of homes, fish in 9 percent and birds in 6 percent. The total pet population, excluding fish, exceeds 134 million, says the Pet Information Bureau of New York.

YOUR HOROSCOPE By Jeane Dixon

Monday, February 11, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: It is time to make a break with the past. Find out your legal rights and take action to help yourself and your family. Tension lessens when the financial picture improves. Stick with those who have proven their loyalty. Romance is a source of contentment. Do nothing to rock the boat! Partner may not realize that a certain flirtation "means nothing." New investment opportunities merit close scrutiny. Take nothing for granted. Burt Reynolds, actresses Eva Gabor and Kim Stanley, music's Sergio Mendes, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen (D-Texas), the Milwaukee Brewers' Ben Oglivie and the Chicago Cubs' Tom Veryser celebrate birthdays today.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your career plans progress nicely. You make lucrative new investments or sales. Look forward to seeing a loved one this evening. A date exceeds your expectations! Go slow on making promises.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do a favor for someone confined to hospital or home. Your kindness will be appreciated more than you know. Certain social plans could interfere with your attempts to conduct business. Know your priorities.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Examine merchandise with special care if all sales are final. Loved one could show jealousy. Get at the root of the problem. Stress the quality of the time you spend together.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Put your requests in writing. Written proposals get a warmer reception than verbal ones. You may have to be more assertive about mate's spending habits. Be firm but diplomatic.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A pay raise is possible. Get all promises in writing. Refuse to feel guilty about purchasing a few small luxuries. You and loved one will enjoy dining out this evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be careful not to overreact to constructive criticism. Someone who questions your plans could have your best interest at heart. An Aries gets in touch with you. Listen carefully.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do everything in moderation and you will feel much better. Conservative behavior and dress reassure a timid romantic partner. Be prompt to all appointments. Higher-ups promote those who are well-organized.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Sweeping changes take place at work. You benefit if you have specialized knowledge of hi-tech skills. Let offspring know your plans so that they do not worry. Uncertainty can cause anxiety.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Tackle essential work early in the day. Higher-ups are impressed by your ability to meet deadlines. New partnerships and alliances could prove profitable in the near future!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A co-worker or neighbor could get on your nerves today. Try to remember that you too were once young and inexperienced! Evening is a good time for special get-together.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A good day for stocking up on groceries. Comparison shoppers can save a lot. Quiet activities such as reading or listening to music will hold the greatest appeal this evening. Relax with mate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Career concerns could bring about a change in your daily routine. A subordinate's loyalty both surprises and pleases you. Why not see more of this person socially? A new friendship flourishes.

THE TALE OF THE SIX OF DIAMONDS

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devoting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series we will go back to our weekly question and answer column.

Both vulnerable. North deals.

Opening lead: Queen of ♡.

The Six of Diamonds was fuming as he strutted around the lobby of the hotel. "It was disgraceful," he thundered. "He made a laughing stock of me in front of my peers."

The incident that had provoked this outburst occurred during the Life Master Pair Championship for the Von Zedtwitz Gold Cup. The hand is shown above. The Six of Diamonds was in the hand of one of the world's great players, and he and his partner reached six clubs on the 4-3 fit. The problem was how to handle the hand should the minor suits follow the probabilities and split 4-2. Obviously, communications to the South hand were going to be a problem.

"I must say I have seen better contracts," continued the Six. "The hand could not be played along crossruff lines because it was unlikely that my nephew, the Six of Clubs, would stand up as a ruffer. And for the life of me I couldn't see how we were going to make the contract if we cashed a high diamond and then ruffed a couple of diamonds in dummy, because the closed hand was an entry short.

"My expert won the opening lead in dummy, led the singleton diamond and, after East produced the five he announced: 'Time for a deep finesse,' and played me to the trick. Of course, I lost the trick. After all, the opponents held four cards higher than me and none lower.

"The rest was easy. Declarer won the heart continuation, came to hand with a trump and ruffed a low diamond. Then he returned to hand with a trump and drew trumps. When they split 4-2, declarer claimed the rest of the tricks.

"At no other table did declarer lose a diamond trick. What I can't understand is why then did no other declarer succeed in making 12 tricks at a club contract?"

'Dust Bowl' photography on exhibit

"Of Dust Bowl Descent: Forty Years on the Great Plains," a photographic exhibit, is on display at the Petroleum Museum through Feb. 28.

This exhibit represents five years of work by contemporary photographer Bill Ganzel. Ganzel began with a collection of pictures shot by Farm Securities Administration photographers during the Dust Bowl years on the Great Plains.

He has located the same people, places and situations in these early photographs, photographed them again and collected oral histories from the people that describe the dramatic changes that have taken place in middle America over the past 40 years. The exhibit includes the old and new photographs side by side, accompanied by brief transcriptions from Ganzel's oral history interviews.

Produced through the cooperation of the Center for Great Plains Studies and the Nebraska State Historical Society with funding from the Nebraska Committee for the Humanities, the exhibit is being shown throughout the region.

Arts group announces spring show

The Midland Arts Association announces its Spring Arts Show will be held March 8-10 at the Midland County Exhibit Building, East Highway 80.

Area artists are invited to enter their work. Items to be exhibited need to be brought to the Exhibit Building between 9 a.m. and noon March 8.

Dorothy Peterson of Roswell, N.M., formerly of Midland, will judge the show. Cash awards of $100, $50 and $25 will be awarded in five categories. The Grumbacher Award will be given for the Best of the Show.

For more information contact Sue Jones, 685-1806, or John Long, 694-1926. Both are co-chairmen for the event.

Midland mall will sponsor fiddling contest

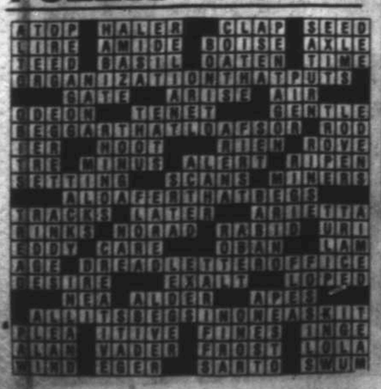

For the fifth consecutive year, Midland Park Mall will again sponsor the "Best Little Fiddling Contest in Texas." This year's contest, set to begin at 1 p.m. March 2, is planned to celebrate the Midland Centennial.

The contest is approved by the Texas Old Time Fiddler's Association. Information regarding membership in the Association may be obtained by contacting the mall office, 694-1663.

In years past, the contest has attracted a large number of entries from throughout the Lone Star State and southern New Mexico. Prize money totals $2,500.

Competition will be divided into the following age divisions: 0-21; 22-46; 47-59; and 60 and over.

In 1983 we were proud the Midland Reporter-Telegram was being read in 79.3% of Midland's homes. But the latest Audit Bureau of Circulation audit has been completed and the figures released. We're prouder than ever.

This year our penetration in the Midland market has climbed to 82.4%, an impressive gain!

We know other media boast about their "gross rating points"... their" listening audience"...their "cume"... but we're proud of the results we get for our advertisers. Your advertising message in the Reporter-Telegram gets results and we know one reason is because it is now reaching more people than ever before... 82.4% of all Midland households.

And that's not all. During this past August more than 450 different retail businesses chose the Reporter-Telegram as their advertising vehicle...a whopping 26.5% increase in accounts over August a year ago. September is looking even bigger.

In 1983 your Midland Reporter-Telegram was a great advertising investment... In 1984 It's even better!

Midland firm joins space effort

Will grow electronic crystals in outer space

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

Ron Jaap/ Reporter-Telegram

Russell Ramsland, Jr. has formed a space technology company that could grow into a billion dollar company over the next 10 to 12 years, as demand for space crystals grows.

At a time when a lot of Midland oilmen are thinking "pay out," one in particular has "pay load" on his mind.

Russell Ramsland, Jr., executive vice president Dinero Operating Co., is in the oil business, but he is also one of a new breed of space entrepreneurs, working in cooperation with NASA to develop critical new technology while paving the way for private enterprise in space.

Sometime in the middle of 1986, Ramsland and his firm, Microgravity Research Associates will have aboard the Space Shuttle one of the most important experiments to be launched into space, an experiment that could alter the shape of the future, and so important that it was mentioned in President Reagan's State of the Union message Wednesday.

It will be a project for the development of a "new and highly improved" and revolutionary material that could do for solid state electronics what the silicon chip did to vacuum tube electronics, according to Ramsland.

The young, Midland businessman is also hoping that the space experiment, which has been highly touted in science magazines and TV documentaries, will result in a new industry in which he will have a head start over the competition and be fortunate enough to share in the financial rewards.

"We're looking to grow a billion dollar business over the next 10-12 years. The future for the product is unbelievable," says Ramsland. Some of that billion dollars, he expects, will end up in the Permian Basin, employing scientists, laboratory technicians, and operations support personnel. The main operations center for the firm is Midland, but for international trade purposes Coral Gables, Florida is listed as the firm's primary office.

"I don't see how you could have a billion dollar firm in Midland, without some of it, sticking here," added Ramsland.

RAMSLAND AND his associates, Colonel Richard Randolph and Harry Gatos, PhD. and Robert Pace, are set on growing in space a super pure, highly effecient Gallium Arsenide crystal for use in sophisticated, solid state electronics, microwave and opto-electronic devices. They will even find a place of prominence in President Reagan's proposed Star Wars Defense, which prompted the mention of the project, if not the firm, in his State of the Union message. The crystals are presently grown in land-based operations, but Ramsland says that growing them in space dramatically improves the purity and quality by removing the imperfections caused by gravity.

Said Ramsland: "Gallium Arsenide crystals grown in space offer switching speeds up to 10 times faster while consuming only 3 to 4 percent of the power. They also have higher and lower temperature tolerances and higher resistance to radiation."

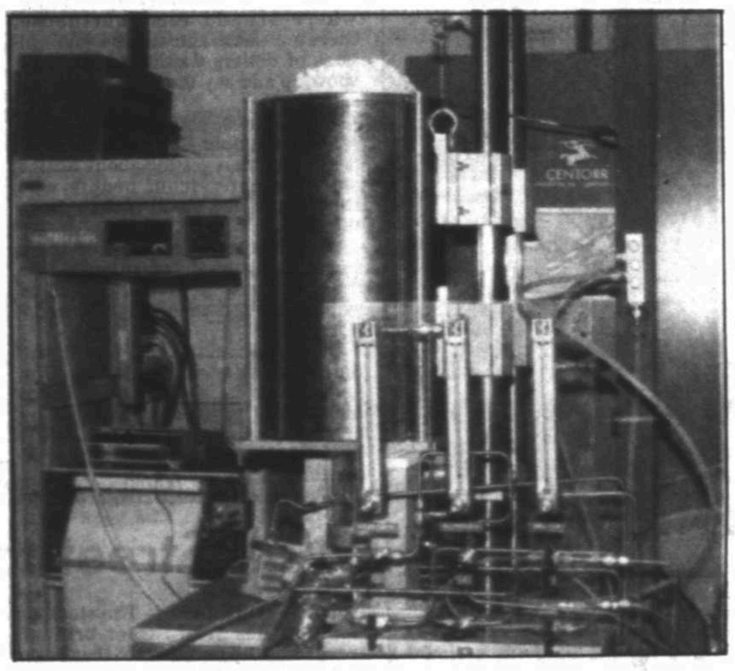

Some market analysts are now forecasting that worldwide sales of Gallium Arsenide crystals will exceed $3 billion by 1995 and approach $140 billion by the year 2,000. The primary uses will be in satellite communications, defense communications, mainline computers, artifical intelligence, high powered lasers and wafer scale integrated circuits.

"There is really no way to forecast what a piece of revolutionary technology like this can do in a free market," said Ramsland. "The scientific world never dreamed that silicon chips would have all the uses they have today. We are probably not even aware of the uses that will eventually be found for space-grown crystals."

BUT NO MATTER how the space-grown crystals are used, Microgravity Research Associates wants a piece of the market.

One use of the crystals might be to develop high frequency radio communications which cannot be monitored. "Think of the military impli-

SPE to hear Gramm

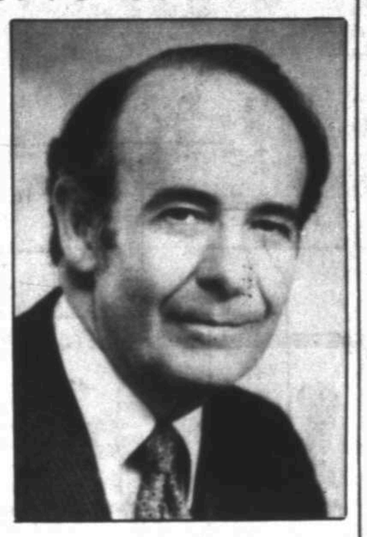

Phil Gramm

Senator Phil Gramm will speak to the Permian Basin section of the Society of Petroleum Engineers of AIME at its annual community relations program Tuesday. The program begins at 6:30 p.m. at Ranchland Hills County Club.

As a topic, Senator Gramm will present "The '85 Economic Outlook," which will be followed by a question and answer period.

The Senator taught at Texas A&M University for 12 years and has authored several books and articles for economic journals. He was elected to Congress representing the 6th Congressional District as a Democrat. After being stripped of his seat on the House Budget Committe, Gramm resigned from Congress and the Democratic party in 1983. He won re-election as tbe first Republican from the Dth District. He was elected to the Senate in November, 1984.

Martin named director federal reserve branch

Tony Martin

Tony A. Martin, chairman of the board of First City National Bank of Midland, has been appointed a director of the El Paso Branch of the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas.

The board of directors of the El Paso Branch is made up of seven members. Three members are appointed by the Board of Governors in Washington. D.C., and four members are appointed by the board of directors of the Dallas Fed., as was Martin.

Martin attended Amarillo College in 1945 after serving in the U.S. Maritime Service. Martin first was employed as an oil scout at Shamrock Oil and Gas Company. He went on to pursue a career in the life insurance industry until 1967 when he became chairman of the board of the Bank of the Southwest in Midland. After the bank's merger with Midland National Bank, he served as president and vice chairman of the board of the Midland National Bank. He has occupiedhis position with First City National Bank of Midland since 1981.

Martin is active in his community and state, having served as director of the Midland-Odessa Symphony, Midland Chamber of Commerce, and as director and president of Midland United Way. He presently is a director of the Texas Association of Tax Payers, the Texas Council on Economic Education, and is a senior board member of the Texas Lyceum Association. For the Austin-based Texas Research League, he is a director, a member of the executive committee and serves as treasurer, vice chairman of Midland Chamber of Commerce, vice president of Midland Industrial Foundation and a Fellow of Aspen Institute of Humanistic Studies.

Other members of the El Paso board of directors are: Hector Holguin, founder and chairman of the board, Holguin Associates Inc., El Paso; Mary Carmen Saucedo, associate superintendent of the central area office, El Paso Independent School District; John Sibley, president, Delaware Mountain Enterprises, Carlsbad; David L. Stone, president, Portales National Bank; Gerald W. Thomas, president emeritus, New Mexico State University; and Peyton Yates, president, Yates Drilling Company, Artesia.

The El Paso branch serves western Texas and southern New Mexico. The other branches of the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas are in Houston and San Antonio.

Two cousins claim to be heirs to Spindletop oilfield

By ANDREW M. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Three workers were lifting sections of drilling pipe out of a well in early 1901 when the hole erupted in the biggest oil gusher America had ever seen.

Now two cousins, James Clark of Cincinnati and Dan Profitt of Elsmere, Ky., have filed suit in federal court, contending they have a document which shows they and an undetermined number of others are heirs to Texas' first oil fortune.

Theirs is the latest in a paper gusher of claims from people who believe they are heirs to the Spindletop oilfield.

Spindletop produced 17.4 million barrels of oil in 1902 — 94 percent of the Texas' production that year — and made Beaumont a boomtown that grew from 9,000 people in early 1901 to 50,000 by that summer.

Clark and Profitt base their claim on a 1931 deed filed in Dallas County, granting a one-eighth interest to a man named James Meadors, says their attorney, Richard Ferris of Pittsburgh.

"They are the administrators of the estate," Ferris said. "There are other heirs who haven't been finally determined."

The two do not say what amount of money they are owed.

Ferris said he and his clients "spent many, many hours working with deed records, birth certificates and doctors' records" to support their claim. The case is pending before U.S. Magistrate Earl Hines.

Clark says he and Profitt are Meadors' nephews. He said Meadors got his interest in the field from a Dallas oilman named Ephriam Garonzik, who had in turn gotten his interest from Anthony Lucas, a driller who struck that first gusher at Spindletop.

Profitt and Clark had a similar claim thrown out of court in 1982. Dallas attorney Morris Harrell, who represents Amoco, Mobil and Phillips Petroleum, contends the new suit is no different from the first.

"A mere shuffling of parties does not constitute a new case," Harrell said. "You cannot camouflage this. It's the same deed, the same parties and the same claims."

Claims of heirship to Spindletop wealth are nothing new.

R.L. Barnes, who has worked in the Jefferson County clerk's office since 1947 and has been the county clerk since 1976, said his office has received so many inquiries about the field he has turned to a photocopying machine for help.

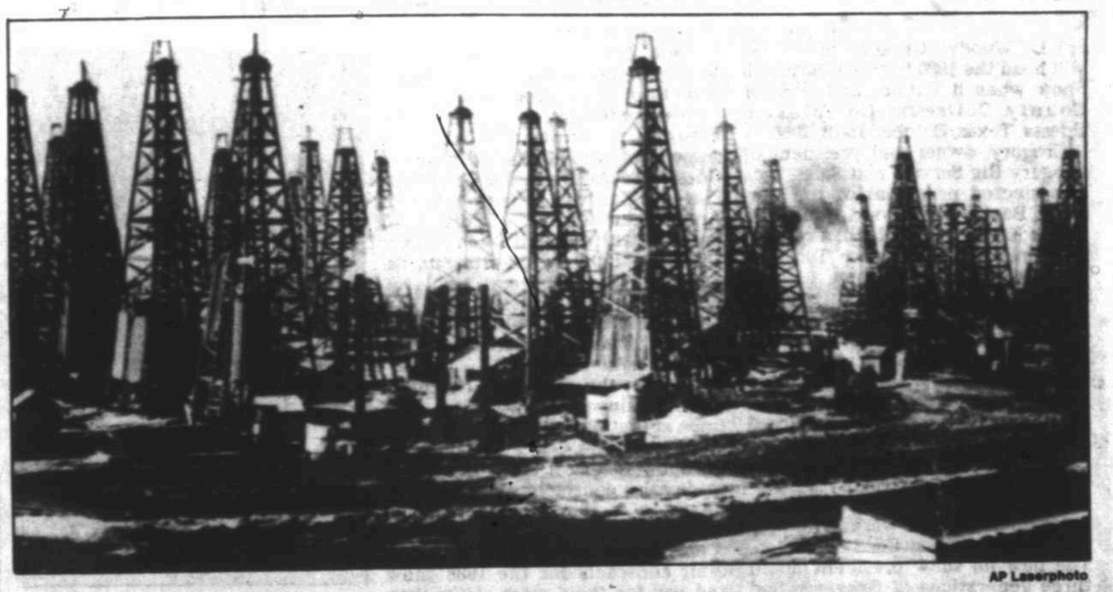

"We've got a form letter that we've been using for years and years," Barnes said. "We sign it and send it."

The office has mailed between 3,000 and 4,000-of the letters, Barnes said.

It gives information about Pelham Humphrey or Humphries, given a grant from the Mexican government in 1835.

"It also shows that he sold the land," he said. "The lettter says we don't know where he died and have no record of administration of his estate."

Future looks brighter for natural gas industry

After much gloom and doom in the natural gas industry, things are brightening slightly in that business.

Prices are depressed with downward pressure, but demand is up, with innovative expansion and diversification possible for the clean-burning fuel.

Stable prices and a recovering economy in 1984 led to a healthy rebound in natural gas demand, with supplies being adequate to meet the demand. According to the American Gas Association (AGA) consumption for the year reached about 18.5 trillion (Tcf) for an increase of 1.2 Tfc, making it the largest year-to-year increase in consumption since 1969. With a reviving, recovering economy throughout this year, as has been forecast, the demand could grow even stronger.

WHILE THE "bubble" still hangs in the market, the ultimate result might not be all that negative. For one thing, the surplus could restore confidence in would-be users, who may be looking to reconnect to natural gas, but have no desire to tie-in to a shortage and resulting high prices.

In fact, the availability of natural gas for the long term is very attractive at this point, even though the surplus is putting a downward pressure on prices. When gas completions for 1984 are totalled they will be somewhere on a level with 1983 completions, and should be about the same this year, according to A.G.A. Over a four year period from 1980 to 1983 the industry did not slip in reserve replacement, but managed to replace about 96 percent of production. It is another factor that speaks well for the stability of natural gas as a future fuel for residential, commercial, industrial and electric utility customers.

THE MAJOR concern of the industry, more so than price, is that demand for natural gas not be permanently lost to other energy sources. At the same time, a number of marketing schemes on the drawing board are designed to be aggressive market expanders.

In a recent cross country, Rally for Fuel Savings, a caravan of natural gas fueled vehicles set out to prove that natural gas was an effecient and economical fuel for transportion. On a stastical basis the Rally made its point.

On the Washington D.C. to Long Beach, California, with 16 stops, the natural gas vehicles operated for 3.8 cents per mile, while the gasoline fueled autos averaged 5.3 cents per mile.

"Natural gas as a transportation fuel is both economical and effecient," says Lawrence, "The vehicles using natural gas had cleaner engines, reducing engine wear. Also, natural gas is environmentally sound, having fewer emissions than gasoline fueled engines."

The association president is optimistic about the future use of natural gas as a transportation fuel, predicting that fleet vehicles alone could create a demand for one Tcf of natural gas in the 1990s, replacing 500,000 barrels per day of imported oil.

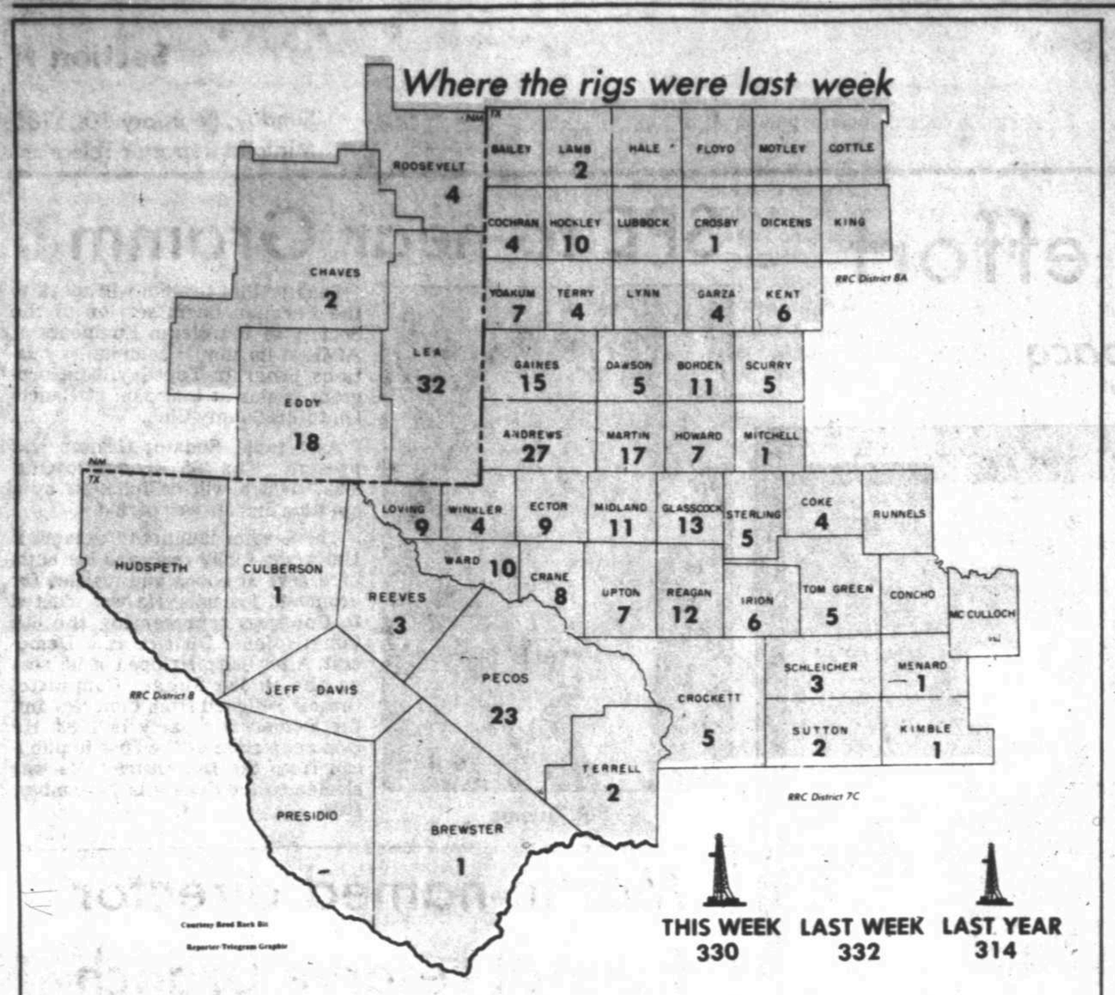

THE ONE thing standing in the way of natural gas capturing market share in the transportation fuel business at this point is the lack of an infrastructure of distribution and sales points. But there has been interest in that direction by a number of firms, including some here in the Permian Basin.

Other uses for natural gas which could expand its market share and increase demand for the commodity in the intermediate term future are cogeneration and natural gas fuel cells.

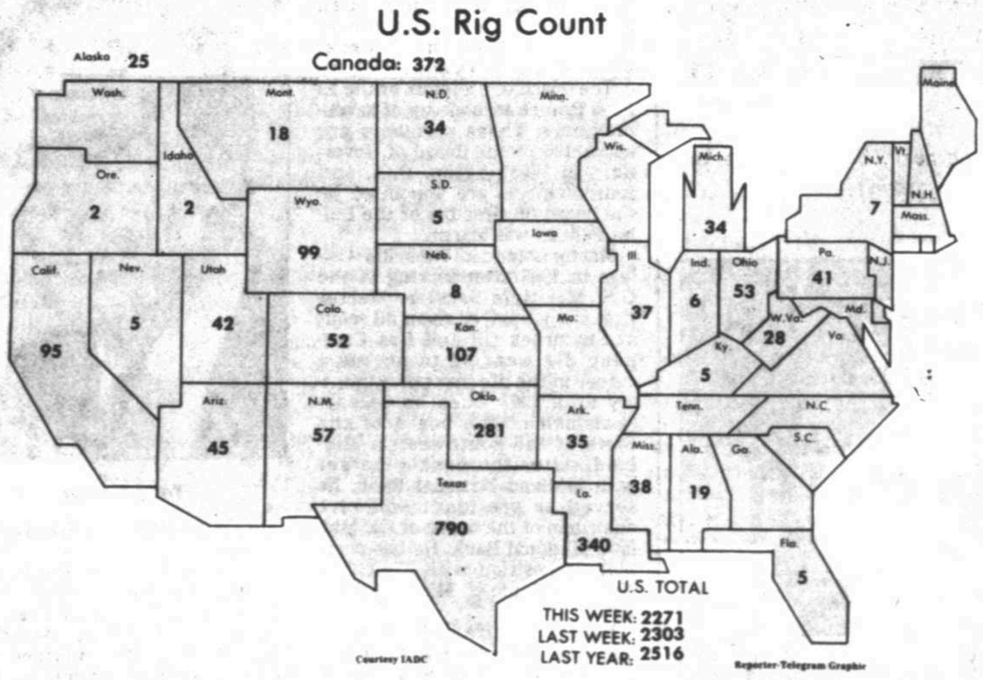

Industrial and commercial on-site cogeneration applications which use waste heat from electrical generation to save 12 to 32 percent of the energy used is seen as a prime market for the natural gas industry.

All in all, it's looking good for gas, even if some of the "shine" is futuristic. It just may be that the thing that restores and maintains natural gas demand will be good old fashion innovation.

U.S. Rig Count

Rig counts decline for second week

Both the Permian Basin and national rig counts slipped lower for a second week.

Locally, Midland County added a rig to the count, putting 11 rigs to work within county lines. Ector County dropped two rigs, lowering the total to 9 rigs this week. Glasscock County remained steady, putting 13 rigs to work for a third week.

Lea County, the most active county in the Permian Basin, lost a rig, lowering the count to 32 rigs for the week. Hockley County was the big gainer of the week, putting four additional rigs work, making the county's total 10 rigs. Lubbock and Concho counties dropped two rigs each, leaving no rigs at work within county lines.

For the week the rig count is 330. A week ago the count was 332. A year ago the count was 314.

Nationally, the state of Texas added a rig, making the state's total 790 rigs working this week.

New Mexico lost three rig, lowering the state's count to 57 for the week. Louisiana also dropped three rigs, making the state's count 340 for the week. Oklahoma lost 16 rigs, bringing the count to 281 this week.

Alaska added a rig, putting 25 rigs to work in the state this week. Canada lost four rigs, making the count 372 for this week.

For the week, the rig count is 2,271. A week ago the count was 2,303. A year ago the count was 2,516.

Gregory to head 1986 Oil Show

T.L "Woody" Gregory of Odessa will head the 1986 Permian Basin Oil Show when it unfolds at the Ector County Coliseum Complex in Odessa, Texas, October 15-18, 1986.

Gregory, owner and president of Gregory Rig Service and Sales, Inc., was elected president of the Permian Basin Oil Show to succeed Frank Ratcliff of Midland, a retired-vice president of Hughes Tool Co., the 1984 oil show president.

Gregory was named a director of the Permian Basin Oil Show in 1968. He was elected to the show's executive committee in 1977 and named one of the show's three vice presidents. In addition to serving as vice president, Gregory has also served as chairman of the show's Old Rig Committee since 1978.

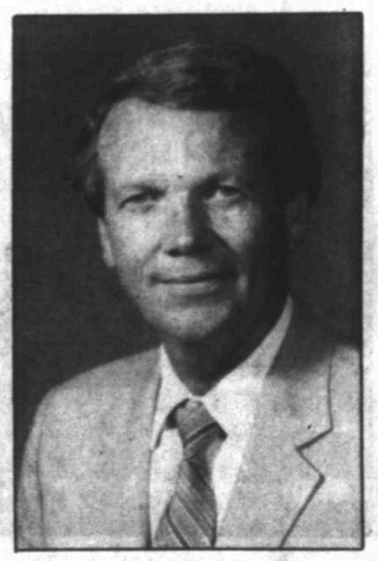

Gregory founded Gregory Rig Service and Sales in Odessa in 1961. Prior to that he had worked for Wilson Manufacturing Co. in Houston. The new oil show president noted three generations of Gregorys had worked for Wilson Manufacturing. He said his father had worked for the company for many years, and his son, Don, hadalso worked for Wilson before leaving the company to go to work for Gregory Rig.

Other officers elected for the biennial oil exposition which is staged on even-numbered years in Odessa, Texas, were vice presidents Clarence Cardwell, vice president of Arco Oil and Gas Co. in Midland; Ed Barham, with D&B Oil Co. in Odessa; and R.K. "Bob" Beggs with Sun Oil Co. in Midland.

Lewis Gray of Odessa, the Permian Basin Oil Show's treasurer for the past 25 years, was also re-elected to that position.

Jay Alvey, the oil show's executive director since 1960, will also continue at that position.

Although the 1986 Permian Basin Oil Show is almost two years away, space sales contracts will be mailed August 1, to those companies exhibiting in the 1984 oil show. Those companies will have 60 days to sign their contracts for the 1986 show and pay for their space. After that, available spaces wil be filled from a waiting list on a first-come, first-served basis.

Major retailers report mixed sales

Los Angeles Times,
Washington Post News Service

More of the nation's major retailers, including giant Sears Roebuck & Co., Thursday reported January and fiscal-year sales results that some analysts said were disappointing because of the unusually cold weather which kept shoppers out of stores.

The sales increases for both the month and year were mixed. However, they were difficult to compare because of the various ways in which retailers were accounting for this year's 53-week fiscal year compared to last year's 52-week period.

In an unusual departure from their routine monthly reporting schedules, some retailers had reported results last week for the four weeks ended Jan. 26, while others, such as Sears, Carter Hawley Hale Stores Inc., Associated Dry Goods and others, waited to report five-week January results. Still others reported results for both the four-week and five-week period. Full-year reports also varied.

Most retailers use a fiscal year that ends in January, which this year included five rather than four weeks. A 53-week year occurs for retailers once every six years because they typically operate each year on the basis of 52 weeks with seven days each, or a total of 364 days. As a result, every six years retailers must take into account an additional week in their fiscal results.

Chicago-based Sears, saying that severe weather adversely affected store traffic, reported sales for the five weeks ended Feb. 2 totaled $1.73 billion, up 1.5 percent from the comparable year-ago period. Sales for the 53-week period rose 5.3 percent to $23.7 billion.

Los Angeles-based Carter Hawley Hale Stores Inc., which operates Neiman-Marcus, Bergdorf Goodman and other chains, reported five-week sales totaled $274.3 million, up 10.5 percent from the comparable period a year ago. Sales for the 53-week year rose 18.3 percent to $3.86 billion.

Associated Dry Goods Corp. of New York said that five-week sales totaled $257.4 million, compared to the four-week January total of $190.4 million last year. On a comparable four-week basis, sales rose 9.6 percent year-to-year. Sales for the 53-week year, which included Loehmann's since that chain's acquisition in May 1983, and excluding last year's results for Stix, Baer & Fuller, totaled $4.06 billion, compared to last year's 52-week total of $3.55 billion. The comparable 52-week numbers showed a gain of less than 1 percent.

New York-based R.H. Macy & Co. said that five-week sales in January were $234 million compared to last year's four-week total of $190 million.

SPACE

cations that would have," said Ramsland. "The highest frequency for earth grown Gallium Arsenide crystals is 40-60 gigahertz, with space grown crystals the frequency can go up to 100 gigahertz. The Russians won't be able to monitor that."

He said another use might be in fiber optic communication lines under the ocean, where the cost of repeater stations now makes the operation less than ideal. Fewer repeater stations would be required with the more powerful space grown crystals and the life span would be five or six times that of earth grown crystals.

The crystals would also be used extensively in space by making for smaller computers and electronic components and thereby reducing the size of the pay load and the cost of putting it in space, making the prospect of super effecient crystals highly interesting to NASA. One estimate has put the savings at $750 million just for smaller computers on space craft.

WHY SPACE for growing crystals? According to Ramsland, the crystals are made by dissolving the ingredients into a solution, mixing them and letting them deposit epitaxial layer upon layer on a seed crystal, since the solution is a hot liquid and the seed is a cool solid, the layers deposited upon the seed are in a state of cooling. It is when the cooling begins that the difference in quality takes place. When earth grown crystals cool they are subject to convection flows, causing impurity and imperfections, but there are no gravity induced convection flows in space and the result is a nearly perfect product. Eventually he envisions entire crystal factories in outer space, put there by NASA for private enterprise. "I doubt if we will ever own one of these outer space factories," laments Ramsland, "We will probably only rent space on one built by some other firm. Fairchild, RCA and Space Industries are firms talking about building such a factory."

To make sure the project "gets off the ground" NASA, which has a high stake in the new technology, has provided Microgravity Research Associates seven free flights to work out the research and development stages of the science, before crystals will be grown commercially in space.

HOW DID a small, Midland-connected firm attain such a prominent role in a historical space project?

Said Ramsland, a Harvard MBA: "It all comes from hanging out in the right bars. A reporter, who was doing a magazine article on Harvard MBA's versus Stanford MBA's was in a bar where a friend and I were having a beer one night. She was introduced to us and interviewed us and somehow it came out in the article that MBA's at Harvard were talking already about space commercialization. I think we had only mentioned that in passing."

Ramsland said the next thing he knew he had gotten a call from NASA, asking if he would be interested in working as a consultant to see how the space commercialization process could take place in this country. He said yes, and as a result of that position was led to to Colonel Richard Randolph and Dr. Harry Gatos.

A retired veteran of 27 years in the Air Force, Randolph had handled a number of advanced nuclear projects for the Air Force. Ramsland was drawn to him, because he had purchased 10 "getaway" specials or small pay loads on the Space Shuttle.

"After much discussion, we came to the conclusion that crystals would be an ideal space project. And, when it came down to crystals, that led us directly to Dr. Gato at M.I.T., a world renown authority on the subject, who had worked on some Skylab and Apollo-Soyez projects," said Ramsland.

HE SAID that the three brought together three essential skills in business, science and technology, plus a desire to grow crystals in space, and that naturally resulted in the formation of the fledging space firm.

"It took almost four years of negotiation with NASA to hack out a project and a plan, but once we worked out the deal they have proven to be super partners. Frankly, I think they are using us as a prototype for other small businesses who will be looking to get into space," added Ramsland.

He said one reason the Midland firm was able to take a giant leap into space was the the support of some local Midland investors, his family and the personnel at Dinero Operating Co. who took up the slack when he was off taking care of space business.

SPINDLETOP

Barnes is skeptical of the notion that anyone has been cheated of money from the Spindletop field. And it is no secret that he's tired of dealing with people who think they have been.

"They get the idea that somewhere around this courthouse, there's a vault and there's just millions of dollars waiting for them to show up and say they're an heir," he said.

John Harris, assistant city editor of the Beaumont Enterprise, said his paper has been getting about a call a week recently from people who think they are owed money from the field.

"It seems to be just one of those snowballing kinds of rumors, like the one about the Procter & Gamble symbol being demonically inspired," Harris said.

David Hartman, curator of the Spindletop Museum at Lamar University, said he has also heard from his share of prospective heirs, many of whom said they had been notified by mail they should have shares of the fortune.

"I've received calls from people who say, 'I've received a letter from these people who say I am part of the Spindletop oilfield fortune.' What can you tell me about it?" Hartman said. "It never occurred to me that I should ask them who had sent them the letters."

Claiming shares of Spindletop is becoming a tradition. Hartman has a list of names of people suing for part ownership in 1939. The names run on for 15 single-spaced legal-size pages.

"It occurred to me that we're looking at the birth of an American myth — that all this money is being denied to its rightful heirs," he says. "It's like the lost gold mines of the American West. It is just a batch of nonsense."

Spindletop was the first big oil discovery in the United States. It was brought about by a partnership formed by Patillo Higgins, who operated a brick kiln in Orange.

Higgins was chiefly interested in oil to fuel his brick kiln, Hartman says. Wood did not burn hot enough or provide an even temperature.

Higgins had read enough about the infant oil production industry in Pennsylvania to know that exploration crews considered several signs optimistic. Among them were sulphurous waters, flammable gases and oil seeps.

Hartman said Higgins realized those three things were present in abundance in the Spindletop field, where he had produced jets of gas by poking his cane into the ground.

A series of drilling attempts ended in thunderous success Jan. 10, 1901.

"It blew 100,000 barrels a day," Hartman said of the first well, the Lucas Gusher. "Wells were typically brought in by letting them blow out, which they generally did in two to three days. This gusher blew for three days and started to blow harder than ever."

Workers finally controlled the flow and saved the excess behind an earthen dike. The boom began. Later that year, wooden derricks were built so close together workers could step from one to the other.

The field prouced nearly 26 million barrels of oil in its first five years, but by 1906 it was considered dead, Hartman said. Far more controlled production followed in the 1920's. Today the field has only a handful of operating wells.

Wall Street talks of bull market revival

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market's strong start on 1985 has Wall Street brimming with talk of a revival of the bull market that began 2½ years ago.

With several of the leading stock market indicators having established new highs in the past few days, there wouldn't seem to be much question about what label to put on the market.

But that leaves many unsettled matters: Has the broad rally of the past few weeks signaled a new, sustained rise in stock prices? Or is it a false start, a dangerous trap for the unwary investor?

In the jargon of the financial world, the first "leg," or phase, of the market's advance occurred between August 1982 and mid- to late 1983.

Then followed a "correction," or decline, that lasted through July 1984. At about that point, many analysts argue, the "second leg" of rising prices began.

Pinpointing exact dates and numbers in this kind of exercise can be a difficult and confusing task. There are many different gauges by which market trends can be measured, and no two produce precisely the same readings.

Nevertheless, many Wall Streeters say it is a worthwhile effort, to try to assess the market's future.

William LeFevre, an analyst at Purcell, Graham & Co., points out that the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 510.28 points, or 65.68 percent, in its initial advance from Aug. 12, 1982, to Nov. 29, 1983.

That exceeded the 52.30 percent average rise posted in the first legs of the seven bull markets since 1957.

The subsequent "correction" produced a drop of 200.63 points, or 39.23 percent of the original advance, through last July 24. That was in line with the average 40.87 percent recorded in pullbacks over the past seven bull markets.

Second-leg gains in the last six bull markets averaged 23.59 percent from the low point of the correction — or, stated as a percentage of the correction loss, 160.23 percent.

Suppose, LeFevre says, that the second leg now in progress were to match precisely either one of those average percentages. By the first measure, it would carry the Dow Jones industrials to 1,342.89; by the second, to 1,408.05.

Of course, figures from the past are no consistently reliable guide to the future of the stock market.

The Midland based Midcontinent Division of Exxon Company, U.S.A. recently announced the formation of a Producing Acquisitions group under the direction of Property Acquisitions Manager ANSE BARBER.

Barber is a 1965 graduate of Mississippi State University with accounting and engineering degrees. An 18-year veteran with Exxon, he transferred to Midland as Division Reservoir Engineer in 1980.

Barber and his staff identify promising property purchase opportunities, coordinate technical and economic analysis, secure management approval of purchase offers, andnegotiate and close purchases. His staff includes:

BERT THOMPSON, senior technical advisor, who is an engineering graduate of the University of Arkansas, joined Exxon in 1948 and has an extensive background in reservoir analysis and economic evaluation. Thompson's previous assignments include Arkansas, Michigan, Illinois, Oklahoma and the Permian Basin.

GLEN SPECHT, geological advisor, joined Exxon at New Orleans in 1955. He holds a Geological Engineering degree from the Texas A & M University. Specht has experience in California, the Gulf Coast and the Permian Basin.

CURTIS LEONARD, senior petroleum landman, holds a doctor of jurisprudence degree from Texas Tech University School of Law. Leonard joined Exxon at Midland in 1979 and has extensive experience as a landman in the Permian Basin, Oklahoma, Arkansas and the Rocky Mountains.

GAIL HANKINSON, senior engineer, joined Exxon after receiving a B.S. degrdee in civil engineering from Texas A & M University. Hankinson's career started in the Gulf Coast area in 1979 and she moved to Midland in early 1984.

DAVID BASDEN, senior project engineer, joined Exxon at Oklahoma City as a reservoir engineer in 1982 after receiving a B.S. degree in mechanical engineering from the University of Oklahoma. Basden moved to Midland in December 1984.

Other members of the staff are KIM NOBLE, a staff assistant; BETTY JOHNSON, the group secretary; and BETH ROHNE, an office assistant.

Guy McCrary, prinicipal of Bridgewater Marketing Consultants has announced that SUSAN COOPER PARKER has joined the firm as creative director.

Prior to joining Bridgewater, Parker did freelance art in the Midland and Odessa area. She was formerly a designer with Greg Weir Design in Austin.

Parker acquired a bachelor of science degree in creative advertising from the University of Texas at Austin, where she earned numerous awards in student design competition.

TOBY PARTRIDGE, owner of Patridge Fire Equipment Co., has introduced his company, which brings fire extinguishers, smoke alarms and other fire related products to the public at a reduced cost.

Patridge has served five years as a paramedic and firefighter in Midland. He has also worked in sales and servicing.

Midland attorney JACK CHAPPELL was among 408 Texas lawyers certified as members of the College of the State Bar of Texas.

The college was created by the Supreme Court of Texas as a means of recognizing members of the State Bar for their participation in continuing legal education programs.

Namedropping policy

Business Namedropping is intended to inform our readers of promotions, achievements and changes among the professional, business personnel and leaders of Midland.

New presidents, chairmen of the board, directors of major corporations or new officers of organizations are normally treated separately as free-standing stories.

Namedropping generally appears in the Sunday edition but may be published during the week if necessary.

Information for Sunday pages must be in the Business-Oil Department by the preceding Thursday at noon. Items published during the week should be in the department two days in advance.

All information must be submitted in writing and include the name and telephone number of the person submitting it.

If a photograph is included, the person in the picture must be dressed professionally.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Regulators announce most troublesome nuke plants

WASHINGTON (AP) — While declining to officially rank the nation's 80-odd operating atomic power plants from best to worst, government safety regulators list nuclear facilities in Alabama, California, New Jersey and Ohio as the most worrisome.

Administrators of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's five regional offices list the Davis-Besse plant in Ohio, Rancho Seco in California, Salem in New Jersey and Browns Ferry in Alabama as the ones that trouble them the most.

The regional administrators, who have the field responsibility for assuring that the plants are built and operated safely, were asked by the commission during a 2½-hour meeting Tuesday to specify which plants needed the most regulatory attention in 1985.

While the judgments were somewhat subjective, Davis Besse, Rancho Seco, Salem and Browns Ferry emerged as the the most troublesome facilities to the day-to-day regulators.

Also coming under criticism were the Nine Mile Point plant in New York, Beaver Valley in Pennsylvania, Maine Yankee, Wolf Creek in Kansas and the San Onofre plant in California.

While the owners of all nine plants are taking steps to improve their performance, the NRC officials said their progress is sometimes "painfully slow."

The judgments were based partially on each plant's safety record, various personnel and equipment problems, enforcement actions, emergency shutdowns and yearly "systematic assessment of licensee performance" reports.

But the single factor mentioned most often was the ability and commitment of each utility's top officers to manage the complexities of nuclear power.

"The top half-dozen people in the company make the whole difference," said Jack Martin, administrator of the commission's Region V office near San Francisco. "Their ability and willingness to be brutally self-critical ... and to communicate expectations to the people who actually run the plant are the key issues."

James Kepler, head of the agency's Region III office in Chicago, said poor ratings in five of 11 categories in the latest evaluation on the Davis-Besse plant near Toledo "reflects badly not only on the utility but also on the NRC."

Richard Crouse, Toledo Edison Co.'s vice president for nuclear power, said his company has doubled its training staff — one of the areas criticized in the evaluation — since August and is buying a $13 million control room simulator as part of the upgrading.

"There's been a flurry of activities the past couple of months," Crouse said. "One of our problems is that we just have not done a very good job of communicating with them (the NRC)."

Rancho Seco was termed by Martin as "a real Gordian knot," with the plant's operating staff often in conflict with the elected five-member board of its owner, the Sacramento Municipal Utility District.

"The board and the plant staff are of like mind now and I expect to see a lot of improvement," he said. "But we have to be realistic; it will take about a year to do."

Kerry Shearer, a spokesman for the Sacramento utility, acknowledged "strained relations" in the past between its board and the operating staff at Rancho Seco. "The process has been worked out and we're implementing many of the consultant's recommendations now," he said.

The three-reactor Browns Ferry plant near Athens, Ala., was the site of a fire that, until the 1979 accident at the Three Mile Island plant in Pennsylvania, was viewed as the nation's worst nuclear mishap.

James O'Reilly, head of the NRC's Region II office in Atlanta, said the government-owned Tennessee Valley Authority has plowed "enormous resources" into Browns Ferry since the TMI accident.

Patterson/Yowell Architects won a certificate for their design of drive-in banking facilities for First Bankers Trust & Savings Association of Midland.

Two Midland architects win recognition

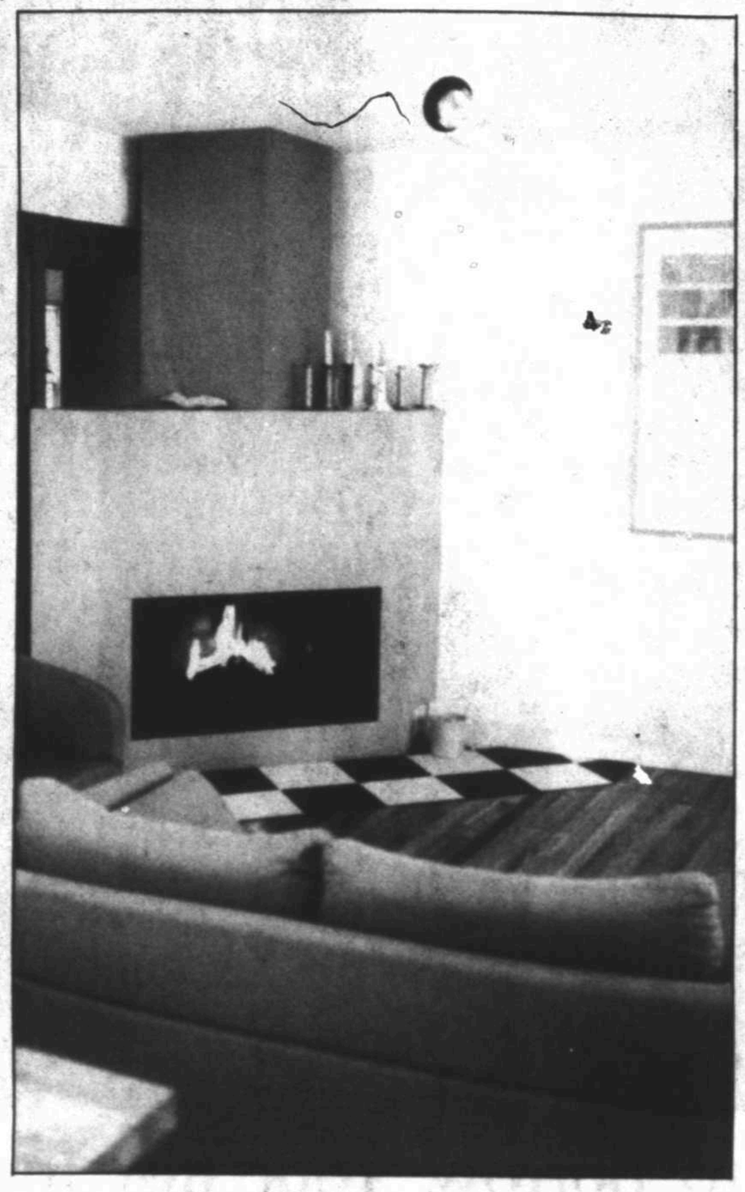

Two Midland architects won certificates of recognition at the West Texas chapter of the American Institute of Architects' biennial Design Awards ceremony at Mission Country Club in Odessa. Architectural firms from Midland, Odessa, Big Spring and San Angelo comprise the West Texas chapter.

Midland architect David Messersmith, chapter president, presented certificates of recognition to the architects and owners of seven projects judged oustanding in design quality.

The winning projects were: The Simmons residence in Dallas, by Frank Welch Associates, the Carrozza residence, also in Dallas, also by Frank Welch Associates, the Morton residence in San Antonio, also by Frank Welch Associates, the Drive-In Banking Facilities for First Bankers Trust & Savings in Midland, by Patterson/Yowell Architects, the Odessa College Sports Center, Odessa, by Peters & Fields, a residential interior renovation by Mark Wellen and a children's playroom in Midland, also by Mark Wellen.

Every two years the member firms of the West Texas chapter submit drawings and photographs of recently completed projects for review by an impartial jury.

Jurors for the 1984 entries included Nolan F. Barrick, former chairman of the Division of Architecture at Texas Tech; Tom J. Ashley III, director of the Texas Society of Architects and partner in the firm of Ashley, Humphries in McAllen; and Lynn R. McLain, partner in the firm of Taylor-Hewlett, Inc. in Dallas. The jury reviewed 28 entries from architects in Midland, Odessa and San Angelo.

Mark Wellen of Midland received recognition for his residential interior renovation.

Son's Fabrication sends 35 tons of structures to Space Center

Five truckloads of stainless-steel structures - some 35 tons in all - departed from Son's Fabrication, Inc., between Odessa and Midland, bound for the Kennedy Space Center at Cape Canaveral.

When assembled and installed at the National Aeronuatics and Space Administration (NASA) launch pads, the fabricated components will represent a new safety system for handling the liquid hydrogen that powers U.S. space shuttles.

Prime contractor for the $500,000 elevated flare-stack system is Flaregas Corporation, Spring Valley, N.Y., with the bulk of fabrication completed by the Odessa firm as sub-contractor.

David Bahar, project engineer for Flaregas, explained that the system bears similarities to flare-stacks used in refineries and petrochemical plants, a field in which his company has logged considerable experience. He added that his organization had worked with Son's Fabrication on several projects in recent years.

"We knew from experience," Bahar stated, "that we could rely on Son's for pre-qualified code welders to meet critical standards as well as a demanding schedule that included penalties for late delivery."

Terry Lawson, president of Son's, said that actual cutting, forming, and welding of the various assemblies could not begin until the third week in November. The completion and shipment was within the required time frame.

Once erected on site, the four 100-foot-tall structures will include two flare-stacks and supporting towers for each of two launch pads. Their purpose is to contain and burn off highly flammable hydrogen gases before and during both fueling and lift-off operations at the space center.

These stainless steel components were only part of 35-ton order shipped this week from Son's Fabrication, Inc., between Odessa and Midland.

Volatile liquid hydrogen must be maintained at or below minus 300 degrees Fahrenheit. Above that temperature, it "boils off" in the form of gases or vapors. The normal "boil off" which accompanies fuel transfer at Cape Kennedy has been captured in a piping system and vented underwater into burn-ponds, where it was flared at the water's surface.

The new system will divert escaping gases into one or more of the four elevated flare-stacks, each one equipped with three continuously burning pilots to ignite the gases before they escape into the atmosphere. The flare stacks are mounted within guyed derricks or towers, supported laterally by roller-guides, but allowed to move freely in a vertical direction. This arrangement protects the structural integrity of the assembly from heat expansion and contraction throughout a broad range of temperatures.

Stainless steel was specified both for its ability to withstand the corrosive atmosphere of the Florida coast, exacerbated by exhaust fumes, and for its stability in cryogenic applications. As further protection from corrosives, the contract called for Son's to paint all exposed surfaces with a special coating developed by B.F. Goodrich especially for NASA.

Farah, lenders settle 6-year law suit

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — An out-of-court settlement has been reached between Farah Manufacturing Co. and four of its former lenders it sued in 1978, ending the six-year-old lawsuit.

Farah attorney Tom Thomas said the four lenders, MBank El Paso, the RepublicBank of Dallas, Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust of Chicago and Prudential Insurance Co. of America have agreed to pay an aggregate $14.5 million to Farah.

The clothing manufacturer sued the four institutions Oct. 27, 1978, contending they illegally conspired to stop Willie Farah from managing his company.

A jury agreed with the company in January 1982 and awarded Farah $18.9 million, but the ruling was appealed by the companies.

Thomas said the out-of-court settlement reached Wednesday brings an end to the long-standing case and is to be paid within the next two weeks.

"I think it's the first time major lending institutions have been held accountable," Thomas said. "I think probably from a purist standpoint, it's a healthy trend."

Farah's lawsuit claimed that the four lenders engaged in fraud and conspiracy to keep the company's board of directors from electing Farah chief exeuctive officer in 1977.

Farah had resigned the position in 1976 after the company lost more than $37 million over a four-year period, but said he stepped down under pressure.

Farah was out of town today and could not be reached for comment.

However, company Executive Vice President Jim Farah said of the settlement Wednesday, "It's a very exciting day. We think the settlement if very fair."

OC has two classes for small businesses

ODESSA - Two courses designed for small business owners and managers will begin in February through continuing education at Odessa College.

Small Business Management will meet Wednesday, Feb. 13-April 10, at 7 p.m. in Wilkerson Hall, room 236. Course fee is $40. The course is designed for the owner/manager of an existing small business who wants to review the basic facts necessary for operating a successful small business. It will include guidance in developing a business plan.

Starting the Small Business is a one-day workshop which will meet in three separate sessions Feb. 28, March 28 and April 25. All three meet at 9 a.m. in Composite Technology Building, room 216. Course fee is $12 for either session. The course is designed to explain the steps required to establish a small business. Methods of management, planning, marketing, record keeping, causes of small business failure, banking relations and suggestions on how to make your business venture a success will be discussed.

Both courses wil be taught by Bill Young, who teaches in Odessa College's business administration program. Young has a bachelor's degree and a master's degree in business administration from Florida Atlantic University. He has worked as an independent business consultant, college professor and coordinator for the Small Business Institute in Florida.

Mastercard and VISA are accepted for registration and a 20 percent discount is available for adults 55 and older.

For more information or to register, contact the continuing education office at Odessa College, 335-6582.

Why Should ClayDesta Communications Be Your Long Distance Company?

Our 15% Discount is Competitive With Anybody's "70%" Discount.

Long Distance calls on ClayDesta Communications are always at least 15% less than AT&T — anytime — anywhere. How does that compare to MCI, U.S. Tel, Sprint and other long distance carriers that promise up to 70%?

They compare their least expensive time against AT&T's most expensive. Actually, their 70% discount may be for the middle of the night. Even AT&T discounts 60% at night.

The difference is, we save you 15% of AT&T's rates — daytime, evening, weekends — even in the middle of the night — to any city in the Continental U.S. Our discount is clear and simple. Our difference is our quality.

See how we compare. Give us a call, in Midland 687-3000, Odessa 362-7424.

Once wealthy Delta employees now down on luck

TYLER, Texas (AP) — Four years ago, Z.L. Spraggins became an instant millionaire through payoffs from a deferred compensation plan for employees of Delta Drilling Co.

Today, Spraggins says he wish he'd never seen the $1.6 million payment.

"It's ruined me," Spraggins said in a Houston Chronicle article published Sunday. "I've been thinking about suicide, bankruptcy, all sorts of things."

Delta founder Joseph Zeppa set up the plan in 1974, giving each employee of more than 15 years "participation units" based on his tenure and salary.

Spraggins and 86 other Delta employees split up $53 million in payments under the plan, which made 13 of the workers millionaires.

But the burden of tax liens, dropping stock values and a mistake in figuring the tax payments has left most of the beneficiaries deeply in debt.

Now, Spraggins and his wife, Juanita, live on Social Security check and a retirement plan. The couple owes $221,000 to creditors and another $200,000 in back taxes.

"I wish I'd never seen that money," Spraggins said.

Zeppa, an Italian immigrant, started the company in 1931 with two old oil rigs. Fifty years later the firm, now DeltaUS, became one of the leading land-based drilling companies in the United States.

Delta's revenues climbed from $38 million in 1974, when the plan was established, to $161 million in 1980, when the employees were offered the option of taking their benefits in stock, cash or a combination.

The employees decided to take 70 percent stock, 10 percent cash and 20 percent was kept by the firm for taxes.

But the stock's value began to fall. By July 1981 it fell to $13.50 a share, and early the next year it was worth $7 a share.

On Friday, Delta stock was worth $1.13 a share.

In 1982, Delta offered the employees a chance to exchange the stock for debenture notes on the company, but few employees accepted the offer.

And the Internal Revenue Service contends that more than 70 employees didn't pay enough taxes on the stock in 1982.

The employees hired Tyler tax attorney J. Robert Dobbs Jr. to help them, but even he isn't optimistic.

"You can take all the violins and sobbing widows you want to a tax hearing, but it rarely helps," he said.

The IRS hearing is scheduled for Feb. 4, but Spraggins isn't hopeful.

"I guess I made my mistake when I voted to accept stock instead of cash," he said. "But I had just read a book, Never in Doubt, about Joe Zeppa and Delta Oil, and it was impressive."

First Boston works like small bank

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Give or take a billion, the First Boston Corp. has handled $15 billion worth of interest rate and currency swaps in the last three years. But each time he gets wind of a new transaction, Leon Kalvaria, the 26-year-old vice president who heads the swap group, still scrupulously fills in the diagram — two boxes with countervailing sets of arrows — that is printed on his group's memo pads.

Among a host of arcane financing techniques, the swap — an increasingly popular tool for large corporations to manage their liabilities — is arguably the device that is least understood, even by its practitioners. Kalvaria is one of the old-timers in swaps, having worked on them for about three years, initially in First Boston's product development group where the instrument — pioneered by Credit Suisse First Boston in Europe in 1982 — was refined. But he, like many other financiers, admits to being overwhelmed sometimes by transactions that begin with zero coupon bonds in New York and end up with fixed-rate Belgian francs in London. Keeping track of the component parts "is like putting slippers on an octopus," he said.

Born in Zimbabwe, which was then Rhodesia, Kalvaria came to this country to attend Princeton, then worked briefly at a couple of financial institutions before joining Credit Suisse First Boston in London in 1980. After a year, he returned to New York and joined First Boston, where he runs the 10-member swap group. First Boston is a leader in swaps, along with Salomon Brothers, Morgan Guaranty, Bankers Trust and Citibank.

Although swaps tend to attract up-and-comers, there are few people in investment banking who are as young as Kalvaria and have as much responsibility.

It is partly his overseas experience that helps Kalvaria excel at swaps, associates say. "If there's such a thing as a global product, it's swaps," said David Batten, managing director of First Boston's capital markets group and formerly Kalvaria's boss. But another advantage, Batten said, is Kalvaria's "creative, free-wheeling mind." While there is a basic formula for handling most swaps, he said, "at the margin, there's quite a bit of room for creativity."

In a basic swap, a United States corporation may exchange its floating-rate payment obligations with those of another borrower — usually a foreign financial company — that has a fixed-rate liability. The American corporation may prefer fixed-rate debt because it will know exactly what its interest costs will be; a foreign bank or financial company may want a floating-rate obligation that would move in line with the interest rates it charges on its short-term loans.

Each side of the swap may save a few tenths of a percentage point on the market rate. Over the life of a large liability, such savings could come to a few million dollars.

A hypothetical example is a company that wants to raise $100 million and, conventionally, would plan to issue a seven-year bond at 12 percent. With swaps, however, the company could look for a "counterparty" that wants to receive floating-rate payments. The company could then issue $100 million in commercial paper, on which it would pay a floating rate equivalent to the commercial paper composite index. It would receive from the counterparty a floating-rate payment equal to the index — thus wiping out its floating-rate obligation. In turn, the company would pay the counterparty a fixed rate of 11.5 percent.

As a result of the swap, the company has raised $100 million at a fixed rate of 11.5 percent, half a percentage point less than its usual rate. For the company, that represents a savings of $500,000 a year, or $3.5 million over the seven years. Investors are in no way affected and, for the company, the savings are enough to justify investment bank fees in the range of half a percentage point of the principal amount.
