Five years have passed since Wang Dan marched in front of columns of idealistic students into Beijing's Tiananmen Square and onto the front pages of newspapers worldwide. The skinny 19-year-old college freshman was for a time one of the most famous people in China. But like most of the players in 1989's events, Wang is much less in the spotlight these days./6A

State high court: Saying 'no' isn't enough in rape charge

By Dave Ivey
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — She kept saying "no."

She said it when Robert Berkowitz lifted her shirt and bra. She said it when he locked his college dorm room. She said it when he pushed her on the bed and removed her underwear.

She didn't try to escape. She didn't try to fight. He didn't use force.

Under Pennsylvania law, Berkowitz didn't commit rape, the all-male state Supreme Court ruled last Friday.

The 7-0 ruling, women's rights advocates say, is a crime and runs counter to advice often given about what to do if attacked.

"What is it about the word 'no' they don't understand?" said Deborah Zubow, program coordinator for the Women's International

Clinton, oil-state lawmakers to mull energy industry relief

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

President Clinton's scheduled June 16 meeting with 107 members of an ad hoc Congressional coalition supporting the energy industry is being viewed with equal parts optimism and skepticism.

U.S. Representative Larry Combest, who represents portions of Midland and Odessa, said, "This is at least a first step, a chance for us to let him know a number of us are and have been for years concerned about the domestic energy industry."

U.S. Representative Lamar Smith, who represents a portion of Midland, like Combest, plans to attend the meeting, which he views with cautious optimism.

"Whether he'll support our proposals, I don't know. But I don't think they would be scheduling a meeting if they didn't expect to seriously discuss measures that

North Korea defiant; U.S. turns up heat

■ White House calls for sanctions after U.N. says it cannot verify status of country's nuclear programs.

Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — The U.N. atomic watchdog agency reported Thursday it can no longer verify the status of North Korea's nuclear program, prompting the United States to seek economic sanctions against the reclusive communist state.

The International Atomic Energy Agency said North Korea's refueling of a small nuclear reactor has gone so far that it is no longer possible to determine whether any plutonium had been diverted to other uses.

Pyongyang insists its nuclear program is peaceful, but there is widespread concern the government is using diverted plutonium to develop atomic bombs. North Korea has refused to allow unfettered inspections of its nuclear sites as required under the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

U.S. Ambassador Madeleine Albright said the atomic energy agency's findings showed the issue had entered "a new phase."

"We have been indicating all along that at some time we would have to move toward sanctions. It's something that we're looking at," she told reporters at the United Nations.

A Clinton administration request for sanctions, after more than a year of delicate and secretive negotiations, would rachet up tension with North Korea. The communist government has threatened to attack South Korea if sanctions are imposed.

North Korean Foreign Minister Kim Yong Nam sent a letter to U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali on Saturday warning sanctions would "bring devastating consequences menacing peace in Asia and the rest of the City champ falls under the spell, trips in national bee's 4th round

By Vic Ostrowidzki
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A disappointed Tarfia Faizullah of Midland misspelled "hyperbole" Thursday by ending it with an "i" and was eliminated in the fourth round of the 67th National Spelling Bee.

Tarfia, 13, an eighth-grader at Trinity School, faltered after the word pronouncer, Alex J. Cameron, associate professor of English at the University of Dayton in Ohio, defined the word as "extravagant exaggeration."

Tarfia, who had won several spelling contests in her own school, said she was "slightly upset" because she thought she would do better.

But she added: "I knew I wouldn't be one of the finalists; so I don't really feel that bad. I look on this as a great experience."

Growing 'underclass' emerges in work force

By Robert Naylor Jr.
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The American work force is dividing ever more distinctly into an upper tier and a burgeoning "underclass of low-paid labor," a government report said Thursday.

The report from President Clinton's Commission on the Future of Worker-Management relations said lower level workers are paid markedly less than comparable workers in other industrialized countries while well-educated employees at the top do better than their foreign counterparts.

The report also noted that the pace at which the productivity of American workers is growing has slowed while government regulations on businesses have increased. It said the incidence of on-the-job injuries had not improved in the last decade, but the level of confrontation among employers and workers had gotten better.

'A society divided between the haves and have-nots or between the well-educated and the poorly educated . . . cannot be prosperous or stable.'

Seeking 'lasting peace,' Clinton recalls Europe's 'cruelest war'

■ President: World must remember battles, look to future. Clinton also discusses ticklish abortion issue with Pope, meets with Italian leader.

Associated Press

ROME — With a blend of pomp and policy, President Clinton recalled Europe's cruelest war Thursday, embarking on a 50th anniversary mission he called an effort to help secure "lasting peace."

He hailed Italy's new prime minister as a man dedicated to democracy, discounting his government's links to a party with neo-fascist roots.

Clinton also met for 40 minutes with Pope John Paul II, the two differing irreconcilably on abortion. The Roman Catholic leader urged him "not to be insensitive to the value of life" in U.S. policies on world population growth, the president said.

Clinton's overwhelming purpose on his eight-day trip to Europe is to commemorate another time, the turning points in World War II a half-century ago.

"I have come to Europe to recall its cruelest war and to help secure its lasting peace," the president told Romans in front of their city hall, atop Capitoline Hill.

Just as he uttered the words, someone unfurled a banner protesting inaction on Bosnia and Rwanda from a ledge beside the piazza. Security men quickly snatched it down.

A crowd of 4,000 to 5,000 stood in the late afternoon sun as Clinton spoke of the past, "no moment prouder" than the liberation of Rome on June 4, 1944.

"We must resolve never to forget such hallowed words as Anzio, Nettuno, Salerno, Normandy," Clinton said. "These names speak of the sacrifices of our parents and the freedom of their children and grandchildren."

Looking toward the future, he voiced the hope "that 50 years from now, the world will say of us, the children of freedom and democracy were the builders of lasting peace."

After his one-on-one meeting with the pope, Clinton acknowledged that differences remained but sought to focus on their common commitment to the family.

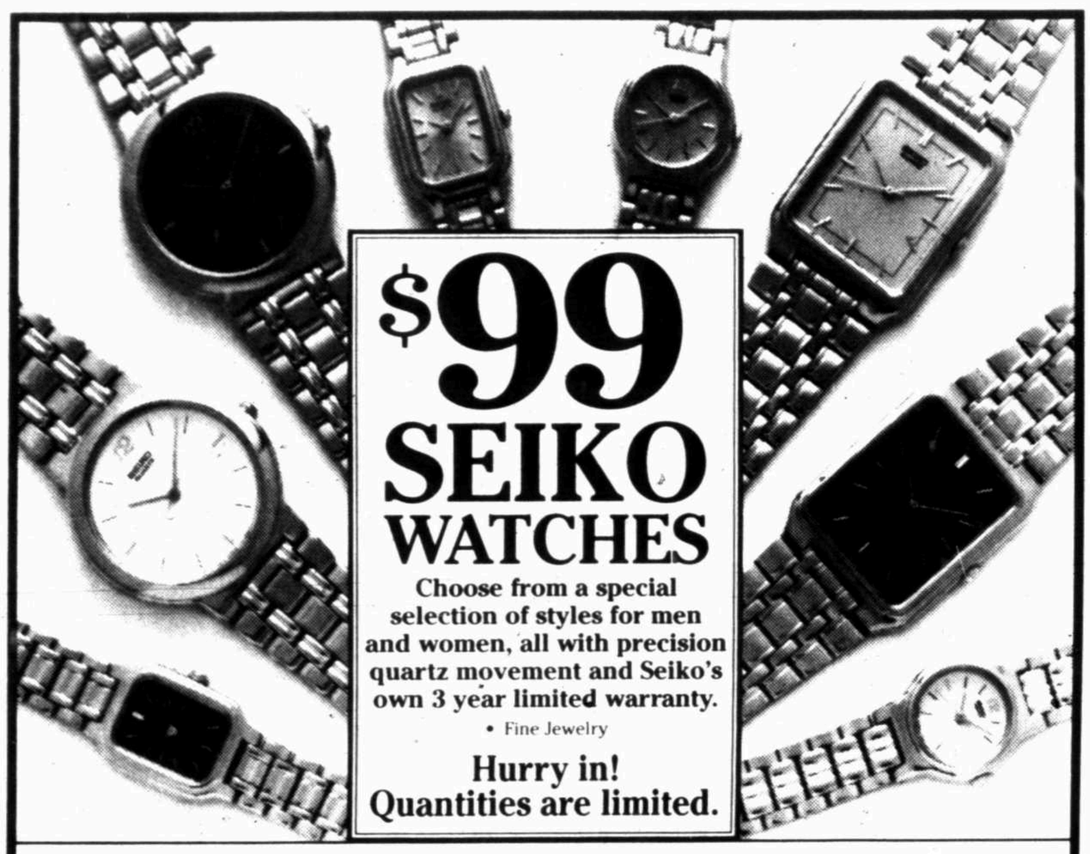

"There are some genuine disagreements between us on the question of the role of contraception and population policy, and in attempting to slow the rate of population growth in the developing world," he said.

The president was the first foreign leader to confer in Rome with Silvio Berlusconi, prime minister of a coalition government that includes politicians with neo-fascist ties.

That has stirred misgivings elsewhere in Europe, raising the specter of revived fascism just as the World War II allies commemorate the decisive battles of the struggle against it.

"The first thing the prime minister said to me was his government, from top to bottom, is unequivocally committed to democracy," Clinton said at a news conference in the courtyard of Berlusconi's headquarters at Palazzo Chigi.

The president said not only in Italy, but in Poland, Argentina, "and any number of other countries there are many political parties which have their roots in a less democratic past."

Son, 51, visits hero dad's grave in France

By Terril Jones
Associated Press

ST. JAMES, France — Sherwood Hallman Jr. gently placed a wreath for the first time on Thursday at the grave of a decorated war hero he never knew — his father, Sherwood Hallman Sr.

Four days before the 50th anniversary of D-Day, it was a journey come full circle for Sherwood Jr., a month shy of his second birthday when his father was killed in action in the fighting following the massive Normandy invasion.

"I had a lot of mixed emotions. My heart felt real heavy," Hallman said at his father's graveside at this American military cemetery in Normandy.

"I mourned for my father, I spoke with him," he said after his first-ever visit to the simple, white marble cross. "I missed him. And I'm just so very proud of him. And I wish we could have spent some time together."

Sherwood Sr. was a handsome, caring army sergeant of extraordinary courage, a rare Medal of Honor winner and a hero of the 29th Infantry Division.

The younger Hallman, 51, who lives in Pennsburg, Pa., has his father's rugged looks and a gentle, thoughtful demeanor.

Hallman and his mother, Virginia Hallman Reinbold of nearby Emmaus, were among 400 visiting veterans and family members of the 29th Division who stormed Omaha Beach the morning of June 6, 1944, to open the D-Day invasion of Normandy. The 29'ers spearheaded the 156,000 men who made up the largest assault force ever assembled.

The 29th lost 1,000 men in the first two days of the invasion and accounts for many of the 4,410 graves in this cemetery 220 miles west of Paris.

Two huge American and French flags were at half-staff, and pairs of small ones were in front of each grave. Veterans wore blue 29'er hats with white or yellow trim.

It was a time for all 29'ers to remember their place in history.

Sidney Smith, 73, then a lieutenant in the division's 121st Combat Engineer Battalion, recalled disaster as his outfit landed in the first waves.

"We were sent in to do de-mining, but we lost all our equipment in the water," he said of their flustered landing under heavy fire.

"I was dumbfounded because when we went in on Omaha Beach, there was a German division moved in a day or two before," said Smith, of Bradenton, Fla. "The worst part was the wounded. As the tide was coming in, they kept saying, 'Pull me out.' But anytime you stood up to help them, you'd get shot at."

On Sept. 13, Sherwood Sr., then 30, single-handedly captured a German machine gun nest and a dozen enemy soldiers.

The next day he was felled by a German sniper and never lived to receive his Medal of Honor, the highest U.S. military decoration awarded for exceptional bravery in engaging the enemy.

For Hallman's mother, a simple ceremony by his tombstone "was overwhelming, it was beautiful."

Widowed twice again later in life, she said she never really got over the death of her first husband.

"There was always something missing," Mrs. Reinbold said. "There were many years that went by that I thought (his death) wasn't true, that I thought he would appear on my doorstep."

Thursday's pilgrimage was also a turning point for her son.

"I just feel like we were together again, my mother, my father and myself," he said. "It was a good feeling, one I missed all my life."

RAPE: Saying 'no' isn't enough, court rules

(From 1A)

League for Peace & Freedom, based in Philadelphia.

The Supreme Court said state law specifically defines rape as the use of force — physical or psychological — or at least a threat of force. Justice Ralph Cappy, in writing the opinion, said the woman acknowledged Berkowitz didn't use force, didn't restrain her during the assault.

"As to the complainant's testimony that she stated 'no' throughout the encounter with appellee, we point out that, while such an allegation of fact would be relevant to the issue of consent, it is not relevant to the issue of force," Cappy wrote.

Berkowitz's lawyer, Mark Sheppard, said the ruling was merely a further definition of the legal term rape.

"I don't think it's a step backward," Sheppard said. "All the court did was to interpret the statute and its fair meaning and gave strength to the view that just saying 'no' wasn't enough if force wasn't used."

However, Nancy Duff Campbell, co-president of the National Women's Law Center in Washington, D.C., called the ruling a "unique interpretation" of rape.

"Usually the focus is on lack of consent," Campbell said. "Focusing on the force issue is an aberration peculiar to Pennsylvania."

The attack occurred at East Stroudsburg University in 1987 after the woman — a student — entered Berkowitz's room, looking for his roommate.

Berkowitz was convicted in Common Pleas Court of rape and indecent assault. He was sentenced to one to four years in jail but remained free on bail pending appeal. The convictions were overturned in Superior Court and prosecutors took the case to the Supreme Court.

The high court said the rape conviction had rightly been reversed. It reinstated the conviction on indecent assault, a misdemeanor punishable by six to 12 months in jail.

"We're still perpetuating the same old myths. It's archaic to continue to blame the victim," said Vanessa Grant Jackson of the group Women Organized Against Rape.

The Supreme Court reinstated Berkowitz's indecent assault conviction on a technicality related to evidence on the woman's sexual history.

Kathryn Geller Myers, spokeswoman for the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Rape, said the ruling sends a dangerous message.

"We don't teach women to fight back because it escalates the violence in an already violent situation," she said. "No one can say why she didn't kick or scream. The law can't dictate what an individual's survival instincts should be."

State Rep. Karen Ritter has introduced legislation with the support of the state attorney general's office to change the definition of rape. The current law allows for no charges between rape and indecent assault.

"I'm outraged that the justices would interpret the law the way they have," Ritter said. "It's ridiculous to say that a woman has to do more than just say 'no,' that she has to do more than refuse the sexual acts.

"Our job now is to make it clear enough that even judges can understand that if someone says 'no,' then it's a crime. This decision sends a message that you need to physically resist, and that will lead to more victims losing their lives."

Low 90s sounds predictable

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high in the lower 90s and east to southeast winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of rain and a low between 65-70, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Saturday should be partly cloudy with a high in the lower 90s.

After an overnight low of 67, Thursday's high reached 91, compared to the record high for that date of 101 set in 1993. The record low was 47 set in 1947.

JOBS: Split widens between top, bottom

(From 1A)

The Labor and Commerce departments jointly released the report, which also noted that lesser-skilled workers suffer higher levels of unemployment than better-educated ones. It comes at a time when American companies are demanding better-educated and, more frequently, white-collar employees.

Labor Secretary Robert Reich said the report exposed a disturbing trend.

"A society divided between the haves and have-nots or between the well-educated and the poorly educated that becomes sharply divided over time cannot be a prosperous or a stable society," he said.

"The findings constitute a stunning indictment of labor relations and workplace fairness in our country," said Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., chairman of the Citizens Committee for Employee Rights, a coalition of civil rights, religious and civic groups.

He said information on wage disparities was "nothing short of a powerful mandate for new laws to protect worker rights and promote workplace cooperation in the place of workplace confrontation."

The report is the first of two expected from the 10-member commission, which Clinton appointed last year to study ways of improving U.S. productivity and competitiveness through improved labor-management cooperation.

The panel heard from 354 witnesses in 17 hearings across the country and reviewed more than 4,000 pages of written testimony. A second report in November will contain recommendations for federal initiatives to improve worker-management cooperation.

The commission's objective was to "get out the facts in a reasonably dispassionate way" and allow interested parties to "engage in some discourse about where we go from here," said John T. Dunlop.

MEET: Industry voices optimism, skepticism

should be taken to revitalize the oil and gas industry."

Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Industry, said he was surprised, pleased yet skeptical about the meeting.

Going into the meeting in two weeks, Combest said he expects Clinton to listen and let the Congressmen state the case for the industry and present what he calls constructive proposals to aid the industry.

But, he said, "Receptiveness is not my concern. It's action. We know what the problems are. They've been studied to death. We don't need studies, we need action."

Smith said that "what I want to come out of the meeting is actions, not words, and unfortunately all we've gotten so far is words. I'm hoping there will be a change in direction from the White House and we'll see some concrete proposals for specific actions to help the industry. That's what I'm looking forward to hearing and I hope we will get beyond words and getting to the action."

And while he is appreciative Clinton has agreed to the meeting, Smith plans to call him on a few issues.

"The president has a lot to explain, I think. I will be interested to hear him explain what all he's been doing is calling for studies rather than taking direct action, why his administration has proposed even more regulations on drilling, as in the case of Gulf of Mexico drilling, and it will be interesting to see if he says anything about his campaign promises to work for price stability and lower oil imports."

Said Spannaus: "What we need first out of this meeting is for the president to publicly acknowledge that gas and oil is important as an industry and as an energy source for the American way of life."

Spannaus said most of the proposals to be presented to Clinton are revenue-neutral and would not affect tax revenue. In fact, he said, most of the proposals are things the industry has had before but that were eliminated during the tax reform years beginning in 1986.

The most important things, he said, are to restore depletion allowances and relief from the Alternative Minimum Tax and ways to attract outside investment capital into the industry.

Smith said he plans to push for tax credits on marginal producing wells, a benefit to the industry he thinks has the best chance of being enacted this year.

Noting that the industry has been told it needs a spokesman like Lee Iacocca to help lead a national image repairing effort for the industry, Spannaus said the meeting would be a perfect opportunity for Clinton himself to take that role "instead of bashing oil and gas and other fossil fuels as bad news for the general public and the environment."

And Perry Consultants Inc. — headed by Ray Perryman, husband of Odessa Mayor Lorraine Perryman — has donated its services as economic consultant.

Wilshire said his firm has been gathering data that will determine the best route to link Interstate 27 with Interstate 10 — which appears to be the western most route supported by MO-TRAN.

The Midland/Odessa route — which would run from Lubbock to Farm to Market Road 1788 between the two cities and join I-10 south of McCamey — is the most direct route, Wilshire said. As for construction, the route offers the best topography and weather conditions, no environmental problems, right-of-ways generally available and few bridges, he added.

This route would best link transportation — railroad, highways and airports — and communication systems, Wilshire said.

In addition to gathering facts to substantiate those claims, the firm will monitor the state's consultant examining several routes and the progress of the route competitors.

Two other proposed routes are: 1) Lubbock to Lamesa to Big Spring to San Angelo to I-10 at Junction, and 2) Lubbock to near Synder to Sweetwater to Abilene to I-10 at Junction or Comfort.

MO-TRAN must be aggressive in its pursuit especially in light of some political clout going for the other routes, local supporters said.

As a result, MO-TRAN must offer the best route and be heard, Perryman responded.

He said the Midland/Odessa way would pass through the biggest population centers and economic centers of all the routes.

In addition to advantages of linking Texas and the rest of the country to Mexico — in light of the North American Free Trade Agreement — the route would link West Texas together, he said.

Also on hand Thursday to lend their support of the western route were U.S. Rep. Larry Combest; Skip Nichols, chairman of the West Texas Transportation Alliance; and several local dignitaries.

MO-TRAN has been working to promote the Midland/Odessa route for about two years, Perry said.

Congress has appropriated $2.9 million for a study by the state to determine the most feasible route. That study, being conducted by HDR Engineering Inc. out of Nebraska, is expected to be completed later this year.

In addition to deciding the best route, there must be a determination on whether the federal government will finance the project.

If the western-most route is selected and funding secured, motorists may be on the extended I-27 by the year 2005, with a mature system in place by 2020, according to speculation by Perryman.

HEAT: U.S. seeks sanctions

world," the official Korean Central News Agency reported Thursday.

In a dispatch before the IAEA's announcement, North Korea also accused the IAEA of playing "sinister" politics, sending inspectors late, then threatening economic sanctions.

IAEA inspectors wanted North Korea to set aside 300 fuel rods crucial to determining how much plutonium Pyongyang produced after replacing some of the rods in 1989. They also needed to know what part of the reactor core the rods were taken from.

Last week, the IAEA, based in Vienna, Austria, sent a new negotiating team to North Korea to see if they could get permission for sampling the rods.

Those talks ended without agreement. IAEA director-general Hans Blix reported to the Security Council last weekend the agency could lose "within days" its ability to determine what had been done with the plutonium.

North Korea's atomic energy department said Thursday that information has been preserved, meaning the IAEA can conduct the necessary inspections at "any time."

"The agency secretariat has pursued a sinister political purpose of stifling" North Korea, a unidentified department spokesman said, according to the North Korean news agency, monitored in Tokyo.

But in its report Thursday, the IAEA said the continued refueling "has now made it impossible to select fuel rods for later measurements which would show whether there has been any diversion of fuel from the reactor in the past years."

Blix was expected to brief the Security Council today. But it could take days or weeks of debate to reach any decision on sanctions.

Assistant U.S. Secretary of State Robert Gallucci said he would meet in Washington with South Korean and Japanese officials today and Saturday to discuss what kind of sanctions to propose.

In Rome, Clinton said North Korea had only itself to blame if sanctions are imposed. "They have triggered this, not the United States or anyone else," he said.

Clinton said he recognized the U.S. proposal for sanctions was a "more difficult question for China and for Russia," but added he was impressed by the gravity with which all sides were approaching the issue.

NUMBER: Cityline kicks off summer 'Y-Line'

lar basis.

Areas that will serve Midland youths' concerns include:

Youth Answer Lines

Seven categories exist to kick off the project, with expansion planned in the coming weeks.

Categories now on-line that strive to answer health and social concerns of youths include Mental Health Information (1972), Pregnancy Testing (1974), Testing for AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases (1975), Date Rape (1976), Abusive Relationships (1977), Child Abuse (1978), and an Inspirational Message of the Day (1972).

Lawrence M. Stone, president of Nashville-based Rutledge Hill Press, which publishes "Life's Little Instruction Book" and "Life's Little Instruction Book, Volume II" has given Cityline permission to read passages from the best-selling books, authored by H. Jackson Brown, Jr.

Local Organizations, Activities

Local youth organizations involved in the projects include D-FY-IT (1961), MHMR (1962), Girl Scouts of America (1963), the Midnight Basketball League (1964), Teen Court (1965) and the Boys & Girls Club of Midland (1966).

Youths can access general information and the activities each group sponsors by entering the categories assigned to each group.

Voice Mail Lines

Young people will have the opportunity to air concerns on a number of matters through several 60-second voice mailboxes, including:

■ Non-Crisis Concerns (1981). Youths with non-emergency problems can leave their name, phone number and a brief description of their concern. Volunteers from the Information and Referral Service-Midland, a branch of Casa de Amigos, will monitor the messages and return calls on an as-needed basis.

■ The Dumpline (1982). Oftentimes, teens need to blow off steam, much like adults. By calling the Dumpline, young people will have 60 seconds to record what's on their mind to help them "cool down." No volunteers will return calls in this category.

■ The Youth Input Line (1983). In this category, suggestions will be taken on what users think will make "The Y-Line" a service that will better suit their needs.

■ Crisis Line-Direct Connect (1984). In non-police emergency situations, local teens will be directly connected to a member of the 24-Hour Crisis Hotline to talk about more serious concerns. Upon entering category 1984, those using this service will then be prompted to press 1 to be directly connected to the crisis volunteers.

■ YouthPulse (1997). YouthPulse, an off-shoot of the popular weekly Community Pulse Poll conducted each Sunday-Tuesday in the Reporter-Telegram, will deal with what is important to young people. The first week's YouthPulse question deals with the recent suicide of rock star Kurt Cobain and how the star's death affected each caller.

Entertainment

■ Weekly Movie Poll (1991). Each week, a new movie showing in Midland will be voted on by those who have seen it. Youths will have the opportunity during the first week to voice their opinion on whether "The Flintstones" is "pretty bad," "just OK," "pretty good," or "excellent."

■ Weekly Movie Reviews. A panel of up to 15 youths that make up the Y-Line Movie Review Board will offer its reviews of as many as three current movies each week. Movie reviews can be found on categories 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Also available on the Y-Line is a Teen Concerns Library, a service provided by the Bright Voice System, a network that services cityline systems across the country.

Issues found in the Teen Concerns Library include alcoholism, substance abuse, depression, eating disorders and other topics.

In the works for the Y-Line are Music Reviews, and a KidLine, devoted for children under 12.

SPELL: City's entrant trips

(From 1A)

Her father, Dr. A.M. Faizullah, a physician, said that Tarfia had "tried her best," and added, "We prepared her for fact she might not finish first.

Her mother, Fahmida Faizullah, told her, "It's all right. You did well. We're proud of you." Mrs. Faizullah manages her husband's internal medicine office in Midland.

The Faizullahs, natives of Bangladesh, are U.S. citizens. Tarfia was born in Brooklyn, and her father practiced medicine at several New York City hospitals. The family moved to Midland 10 years ago.

Tarfia, who wants to follow in her father's footsteps as an internist, said she loves living in Midland.

"There is no crime in Midland; the people are friendly, and life is peaceful and quiet," she said.

Tarfia, an honor student, said she likes to write poetry, read English literature and study mythology. She said she has started writing a novel about medieval times.

For relaxation, she said, she plays tennis and volleyball and gets together with friends, but doesn't date.

"My parents don't want me to date," she said. "I don't mind because I don't know any boys that I really like that much."

Tarfia said that during the past week, she and her parents have seen a number of Washington sights. They plan to visit the Holocaust Museum before returning home Saturday.

Israeli jets bomb Muslim guerrilla base in Lebanon; at least 26 die

BAALBEK, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli warplanes bombed a training base for Muslim fundamentalist guerrillas near Lebanon's border with Syria early Thursday, killing at least 26 and further clouding moves toward Middle East peace.

The Lebanese army said most of the victims were 12- to 18-year-olds who died in their beds. Israeli officials justified the predawn action as necessary for self-defense, saying only guerrillas were killed.

Hours after the raid, guerrillas fired 20 rockets on northern Israel, and after nightfall they fired four more into northern Israel and 10 into Israel's buffer zone in south Lebanon.

There was no immediate report of damage or casualties.

Israel radio said the army was on alert and urged border residents to spend the night in bomb shelters.

Israeli Deputy Defense Minister Mordechai Gur warned Israel would respond "sevenfold" on the Hezbollah guerrillas if the rocket attacks continued.

Lebanese President Elias Hrawi denounced the raid — the deadliest attack on Lebanon in almost a year — as a massacre and called for an emergency session of the U.N. Security Council. The Hezbollah, backed by Iran, vowed "swift and merciless" revenge.

Syria, the undisputed master of Lebanon and Israel's arch rival, said the attack was in line with Israel's "policy of state-organized terrorism."

"The timing of this aggression underscores Israel's endeavors to undermine the peace process and hinder U.S. efforts to steer peace negotiations out of the logjam," Syrian Information Minister Mohammed Salman said in a statement.

The attacks were bound to raise the stakes between Israel and Muslim fundamentalist guerrillas,

N. Yemen turns around, accepts U.N. call for truce

ADEN, Yemen (AP) — The government in northern Yemen reversed its position Thursday and accepted a U.N. call for a truce in the month-old war against southern secessionists.

It was not clear what caused the government's change of heart about the U.N. resolution adopted Wednesday. Northern forces appeared to be overpowering the south, and the north had called international attempts to win a truce a "flagrant interference" in Yemen's internal affairs.

The announcement of the government's new position coincided with reports that northern troops had come within 10 miles of Aden, the stronghold of the southern secessionists.

Tribal, conservative North Yemen and socialist South Yemen merged into a single state in May 1990. The union was popular but beset by cultural and ideological differences and a power struggle between President Ali Abdullah Saleh, a northerner, and Vice President Ali Salem al-Beidh, a southerner.

"The government is ready to respond to the resolution in a positive spirit. This will lead to full implementation of the resolution by all concerned," the government in the northern capital, San'a, said in a statement read on San'a Television.

The resolution, backed by the southern forces, called for an immediate cease-fire, an arms embargo of the warring parties and the dispatch of a U.N. fact-finding mission to Yemen.

There was no immediate comment from the south on the statement from the San'a government.

Some Tiananmen dissidents keep faith, five years after uprising

By Charlene L. Fu
Associated Press

BEIJING — Five years have passed since Wang Dan marched in front of columns of idealistic students into Tiananmen Square and onto the front pages of newspapers worldwide.

The skinny 19-year-old college freshman, his eyes direct behind thick glasses, his voice hoarse from shouting slogans, was for a time one of the most famous people in China.

He and few dozen other young people were the strategists and spokesmen for the hundreds of thousands of students who camped in the square throughout the spring of 1989, demanding a dialogue with their government on democratic reform.

Like most of the players in 1989's events, Wang is much less in the spotlight these days.

After the government sent troops to end the protests and retake the square on June 3-4, Wang was one of the first student leaders to be arrested. He spent four years in prison, emerging in 1993 with his pro-democracy views intact.

"Autocratic things and undemocratic things will surely be worn down by the passage of time and ultimately collapse," he said in an interview before leaving to spend the anniversary of the 1989 crackdown outside tense, security-conscious Beijing.

"I think I can play a pretty obvious role . . . to be a kind of spokesman, to publicize our views," he said.

Wang has been denied permission to resume his studies at Beijing University. Living at his family's central Beijing apartment, he studies English from correspondence courses.

He also writes columns for Hong Kong and foreign newspapers, and his prison memoirs are being published abroad. His prospects for employment inside China are slim, but he's resisted pressure from the Communist authorities to go abroad, believing he would lose his effectiveness.

Other 1989 players have not had a choice.

Han Dongfang, a railroad worker who founded Communist China's first free trade union during the 1989 protests, is an unwilling exile in Hong Kong.

Han was imprisoned for 22 months after the military crackdown in 1989, but was released when authorities feared he might die from tuberculosis. Authorities let him go to the United States for treatment.

Report: Assault rifles from U.S. may go to Mexican rebels

MEXICO CITY (NYT) — Mexican government ministries refused comment Thursday on published reports that 2,000 AK-47 assault rifles may have been smuggled into Mexico on their way to new rebel groups.

The contraband may also be destined for drug smugglers or other criminals in the Pacific coast state of Guerrero, according to a report in the Mexico City newspaper El Financiero. The newspaper quoted an "urgent and confidential" letter sent by Defense Minister Antonio Riviello Bazan to Interior Minister Jorge Carpizo in February.

While officials of both ministries declined comment, a spokesman for the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in Washington said, "We are concerned, but we couldn't verify such a shipment."

The letter, dated Feb. 8, notes that "a very reliable source" informed the military attache at the Mexican Embassy in Washington about the imminent shipment of 2,000 AK-47s from the United States to Mexico.

The letter quoted the source as saying the shipment could be part of 20,000 AK-47s destined for the state of Guerrero.

Letter: 'Very reliable source' informed military attache at Mexican Embassy in Washington about imminent shipment of 2,000 AK-47s from U.S. to Mexico.

The Defense Ministry said in the letter it was not known if part of the contraband had already entered or was on its way to Mexico.

"In that state, primarily in the region of La Montana and La Costa Chica, there have been some actions that allow us to presume the possibility that narcotics trafficking and delinquency in general could be confused with a budding subversion," the defense secretary said in the letter to Carpizo.

Riviello said Guerrero state officials already had taken measures to search for the illegal weapons, and he asked Carpizo to find out whether the weapons could have come into the country by land or sea.

Military authorities told the newspaper they doubt the shipment could be related to a new insurgency movement.

If the weapons were destined for rebel groups, however, it could be worrisome for the Mexican military, which remains on alert in the state of Chiapas five months after putting down a rebellion by a small group of peasant Indians calling itself the Zapatista National Liberation Army.

When Guerrero newspapers began publishing reports in February of the resurgence of guerrillas in the state, Gov. Ruben Figueroa denounced the reports as "irresponsible" and denied the existence of new armed insurgency groups.

A small leftist rebel band headed by Lucio Cabanas was broken up in the mid-1970s in Guerrero.

There also have been reports of unidentified men dressed in beige military-style uniforms visiting small rural communities in Guerrero.

Oil tanker runs aground off Puerto Rico

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — A Liberian tanker carrying 13 million gallons of fuel oil has run aground off southern Puerto Rico.

The 749-foot vessel is carrying almost 10 times as much heavy black No. 6 fuel oil as the barge that spilled more than 600,000 gallons into the sea after hitting a reef off San Juan in January.

The self-propelled Mantinia ran aground Wednesday evening about a quarter-mile off Guayanilla, U.S. Coast Guard spokesman Chris Haley told The Associated Press.

Haley said the master of the Mantinia told authorities he lost control due to wind and current when he slowed to take on a licensed local pilot to guide the tanker into the channel, a routine maneuver.

An attempt to pull the vessel off the bottom using three tugboats failed Wednesday night, so more powerful tugs were being sent to the scene, Haley said.

No oil spilled, and the ground beneath the tanker was supposed to be "soft," Haley said, "but there's no way to tell whether you're going to find a hard spot in the pillow."

"This could turn into something big," he said, "but if everything goes right it'll be nothing as far as the environmental impact."

A barge was being sent from San Juan so that crews can pump out 1.5 million gallons of oil to lighten the tanker enough to lift it from the ocean floor, Haley said. The effort could take several days, he said.

The Mantinia is owned by Metro Freighting Corp. of Monrovia, Liberia, and operated by New York-based National Shipping and Trading.

Bobbitt decides to admit he's child's dad

By David Germain
Associated Press

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. — John Bobbitt recanted his denials Thursday and said he's the father of a 17-month-old boy.

"I am thrilled, excited and blessed to be the father of this beautiful baby boy," Bobbitt said in a statement released by his manager, Aaron Gordon.

Two blood tests indicated Bobbitt was the likely father of Beatrice Williams' child, but his lawyer insisted the tests weren't proof enough and the two were tangling in court on her claim for child support.

Now, Williams and Bobbitt are trying to work out a settlement.

"I will be there for Andrew as much as humanly possible, emotionally, physically and financially," Bobbitt said. "I am ready to love him with all my heart and hope Beatrice and I can work out our differences."

Neither Bobbitt nor Williams would talk to reporters after a five-minute hearing in Niagara County Family Court. The hearing was closed to the public.

Williams' attorney, William Berard III, said he was trying to get a handle on Bobbitt's assets so he can reach a fair settlement for child support. Bobbitt said he wants to arrange visitation with the child.

Williams, 21, said Bobbitt got her pregnant while they were dating in spring 1992, a year before Bobbitt's wife cut off his penis. Andrew was born in December 1992.

Under New York law, Williams could get up to 17 percent of Bobbitt's income.

Michael Iacono, Bobbitt's lawyer, said his client is up to $250,000 in debt because of mismanagement of his finances. A state Supreme Court justice refused Bobbitt's request Wednesday for a court-appointed guardian to sort out the money mess.

Court records show Bobbitt, 27, has earned up to $500,000 from publicity appearances and merchandising, but he has received only a fraction of the money. Most of it was squandered on business expenses, Iacono said.

"His finances are bleak at best," said Gordon, who Bobbitt hired in April after firing his previous agents and managers.

Bobbitt is due in court today in Las Vegas for arraignment on misdemeanor charges of assaulting his fiancee, Kristina Elliott. He has patched things up with Elliott, who accompanied him to court Thursday.

Bobbitt is living with an aunt and uncle.

John Bobbitt holds hands with his fiancee, Kristina Elliott, as they leave the Niagara County Family Court in Niagara Falls, N.Y. Thursday. Bobbitt admitted that he is the father of a 17-month-old boy whose mother had sued Bobbitt for child support. Beatrice Williams said he got her pregnant while they were dating in the spring of 1992.

Analysts weigh possible sanctions on N. Korea

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

■ News Analysis

WASHINGTON — U.N. economic sanctions against North Korea would raise tensions in northeast Asia to the highest point since the Korean War. But would they work against a defiant, already isolated country?

This question, which has lurked in the background of debate over North Korea's nuclear intentions for more than a year, moved to the forefront Thursday.

A U.N. atomic watchdog agency reported that North Korea had killed the agency's last chance of finding the truth about its nuclear past, and the Clinton administration announced that as a result it will push for U.N. sanctions.

North Korea has now stepped beyond a line drawn by the Clinton administration, which just last week offered to resume high-level talks that could have led to establishing normal diplomatic relations. It was all but certain the administration would withdraw that offer now.

Sanctions, if they are adopted, are most likely to be imposed as a series of increasingly tough measures.

But it is far from clear that China, which has veto power in the Security Council and which is an ideological ally of North Korea, would support strong sanctions. China's cooperation in enforcing sanctions is especially important because it is a leading supplier of oil to North Korea and has other economic ties.

President Clinton, asked Thursday in Rome whether he thought China would go along with sanctions, noted that the Chinese have not ruled it out. Clinton said he knew it was hard for China and Japan particularly to take a step that would move the world closer to a possible war with North Korea, but he said the greater danger was allowing North Korea to have nuclear weapons.

"I just don't think we can walk away from this," Clinton said.

Beyond the question of what kind of sanctions are chosen, and which countries cooperate in enforcement, is a more fundamental issue: Would sanctions, which North Korea has likened to an act of war, do the trick?

North Korea, after all, imports only about 10 percent of what it consumes.

One of North Korea's main sources of money is wealthy Korean families living in Japan. No one knows for sure how much money is funneled from Japan; estimates in Japan range from $600 million to $1.6 billion a year, mostly cash.

Rostenkowski, attorney to cut ties, aide says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Dan Rostenkowski and attorney Robert S. Bennett are parting company, a Bennett aide said Thursday, confirming speculation that began after Rostenkowski's indictment.

"They have mutually agreed to part ways," said the aide, who commented only on condition of anonymity.

Charges against Rostenkowski include hiring ghost employees, obtaining cash illegally from House Post Office.

Bennett will stay on until Rostenkowski finds other legal representation, said the aide.

A rift in the way the case should be handled became evident after Rostenkowski decided to fight Tuesday's 17-count indictment rather than accept a plea bargain.

One legal source said Wednesday the Illinois Democrat "lost confidence" in Bennett after the lawyer decided to take on representation of President Clinton without first consulting Rostenkowski.

Sources familiar with the Bennett's thinking said the problem had to do with his needing more control as the case proceeded toward trial. Arraignment is scheduled for June 10 before U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson.

Bennett felt he was losing control when Rostenkowski rejected his advice to publicly comment after the indictment and earlier when Rostenkowski refused to accept Bennett's guidance that he accept a plea bargain with a six-month prison term, the sources said.

Bennett repeatedly has denied any conflict in his representation of Clinton and has said the two cases have no relationship to one another. Clinton is being sued by a former Arkansas state employee, Paula Corbin Jones, who has accused him of making unwanted sexual advances when he was governor.

The grand jury indictment against Rostenkowski accuses him of hiring ghost employees, including some who performed personal services for him, of having some of the workers kick back part of their paychecks to his office, of asking a witness to withhold information from the grand jury and of obtaining cash illegally from the House Post Office.

Scientists detect water in galaxy far from Earth

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Astronomers have detected water at the most distant point from Earth so far, a discovery that adds to the growing belief this essential ingredient of life may be present throughout the universe.

The water was found 200 million light years away by radio telescope in Markarian 1, a galaxy emitting so much energy from its center that it is believed to contain a black hole, said James A. Braatz, an astronomer at the University of Maryland, College Park.

Appropriately, Markarian 1 is located in the constellation Pisces — or fish.

The discovery was announced Thursday at the American Astronomical Society's national meeting.

Jack Welch, director of the radio astronomy laboratory at the University of California, Berkeley, called it "very exciting" and said it adds to the idea that water may be found everywhere, possibly nurturing life.

"If this stuff is out there, then there is a good chance that there are living beings elsewhere," Welch said. "The presence of water makes for the likelihood of life emerging in a numbe: of places."

Welch was a member of the team that first found interstellar water in the Milky Way in 1969.

Braatz said the water in Markarian 1 was found near the highly energetic galactic center by a radio telescope tuned to detect the unique electromagnetic signature for water.

'If this stuff is out there, then there is a good chance that there are living beings elsewhere.'

Astronomer

Normally, the signature for the water molecule is too weak to detect by radio telescopes on Earth. But so much energy spews from Markarian 1's center that it is creating an extremely powerful beam of concentrated radio signals, Braatz said.

Before the new study, only five such beams showing the presence of water had been found, all closer to Earth than Markarian 1.

Braatz said his team of astronomers had searched more than 150 active galaxies before finding the evidence for water in Markarian 1.

"The fact that we didn't find it elsewhere doesn't mean it's not there," he said.

Water usually can be detected only if the Earth intersects the narrow beam of concentrated radio signals called MASERs, Braatz said. If a natural MASER in a galaxy is beamed away from the Earth, the radio signature of water cannot be found, he said.

Betty Ford credits family for saving her life

By Judie Glave
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Betty Ford hasn't forgotten April 1, 1978.

It's the day her family confronted her about her addiction to prescription pills and alcohol. Looking back Thursday, the former first lady said the combination "would have probably killed me" had her loved ones not intervened.

"I was stunned at what they were trying to tell me about how I disappointed them and let them down," Mrs. Ford told The Associated Press in a rare interview about her 15-year addiction.

"I was terribly hurt — after I had spent all those years trying to be the best mother, wife I could be. . . . Luckily, I was able to hear them saying that I needed help and they cared too much about me to let it go on."

Mrs. Ford, 76, and her daughter, Susan Ford Bales, were in Manhattan to address a conference, "Women and Substance Abuse: A Family Problem, A National Crisis."

Four times as many women — 200,000 — will die of substance-abuse related diseases this year than of breast cancer, said Joseph Califano Jr., who served as secretary of health, education and welfare under President Carter.

Alcohol, tobacco and drug abuse, and their effects on women, have been on the back burner for too long, said Califano, host of the conference.

"For decades, medical researchers have neglected testing drugs on women for fear of liability for damaging a fetus," he said in a speech.

"As a result, it took years to understand the reality of fetal alcohol syndrome and the damage of smoking, and it took the drama of crack babies to drive home to the nation how vulnerable the fetus is to what a woman eats, drinks and smokes," he said.

Califano noted that nearly $4 billion a year is spent on research for cancer, heart disease and AIDS but only $600 million is spent on substance abuse research.

Mrs. Ford began taking pain killers and other prescription drugs after suffering a neck injury in 1963. After recovering from her addiction, she founded the Betty Ford Clinic in 1982. The rehabilitation clinic in Rancho Mirage, Calif., near Palm Springs, has had many celebrity patients.

Ms. Bales was 21 when she became the first in her family to realize her mother was in trouble. Her father, former President Ford, was on the road a lot; her three brothers — Michael, Jack and Steven — had moved away.

Texas to join ranks of litigious states

Gov. Ann Richards and Atty. Gen. Dan Morales are proceeding in the proper manner with their decision to file suit against Uncle Sam for his failure to control illegal immigration. That failure, Morales estimated recently, has cost the state government, municipalities, counties and the state's citizens as much as $1 billion.

Morales' plan to file suit is entirely in line, even though belated. The point is, if someone doesn't challenge the federal government on its misguided course on illegal immigration — as well as other vital topics, such as public education, health care and prisons now facing the nation — there will be no incentive for it to change.

Morales said in the announcement that he will file suit that "the federal government has not been paying its fair share of the cost of its immigration policies." Gov. Richards added that it is important to send Washington the message to "enforce your laws or pay up."

We aren't naive enough to assume that the Texas suit will cause the feds to suddenly see the error of their ways and alter the way they deal with individual states on such important matters. The name of the game in Washington is power and the more the feds can throw their weight around, the more they'll do so. That's a primary reason for the federal government being as huge and powerful as it is today.

Through its lawsuit, however, Texas will join the growing number of states that have sued the federal government because of the steady chipping away of states rights in recent years and the concentration of power at the federal level. At some point, lawmakers and Washington bureaucrats will begin to get the idea that there is a movement afoot among the states to reclaim what is theirs and has been largely lost in recent times due to a lack of vigilance.

'Green Queen' feuds with 'Ozone Man'

WASHINGTON — When the "Green Queen" feuds with the "Ozone Man," it's a strange day for the environmental movement.

That's what unfolded recently when Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland harpooned Vice President Al Gore over American hypocrisy on international whaling.

Anderson

Norway has come under fire for allowing fishermen to resume killing whales within coastal waters. They're restricted to harvesting smaller minke whales, which Brundtland contends are no longer an endangered species. But environmental groups took out full-page ads in American newspapers blasting Norway as a "bloody" and "outlaw" nation — terms normally reserved for terrorists.

With the Clinton administration threatening trade sanctions against Norway, a furious Brundtland sought a private White House meeting with Gore. "She had to show that we weren't going to chicken out," one of Brundtland's top aides told us. "She wanted to make our case to Gore even though she knew there was a risk of sanctions."

Bruntland, the former chairwoman of a U.N. commission on the environment, was offended at the assault on her credentials. The "Green Queen" — as she's known around the world — dug in against the "Ozone Man."

Brundtland perhaps could have bypassed Gore and gone straight to her friend first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton. The two women became fast friends during the Olympics earlier this year.

Brundtland fought her own battles against Gore. According to a transcript of the meeting, Brundtland exploded when Gore threatened sanctions. "By sanctioning Norway, it seems you view us in the same light as China after Tiananmen, or the former Soviet Union after Afghanistan, when we've done nothing wrong!" shouted Brundtland.

The Clinton administration backed off sanctions. "I had a long talk with the prime minister and she was very impressive," U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor told us. "In most cases we see eye to eye. But the Norwegians' insistence to continue to carry out whaling operations in violation of not only U.S. law but international standards is not acceptable."

Brundtland won't be bullied, and questions the right of the United States to moralize. In an interview with our associate Ed Henry, Brundtland said: "I had to stick a pin in the balloon of these extremist environmental groups." She also noted that Americans hunt whales off the coast of Alaska. "(These groups) somehow think whales are more important than humans."

Brundtland illustrated her point by citing a Norwegian who visited America recently and wrote Brundtland to describe a confrontation he had while in this country. A Californian indignant about Norway's whaling record confronted the Norwegian about the barbarism of the whale kills.

"Do you like hamburgers?" the Norwegian retorted.

"The Californian didn't understand what the Norwegian was saying," said Brundtland. "Do you understand?"

CHARLEY REESE

Americans should reappraise politicians

If you asked Bill Clinton how many pairs of running shoes he had, my guess is his first instinct would be to lie. He would either overstate or understate the number, depending on which answer he thought would be most politically advantageous.

Reese

This is a common characteristic of professional politicians. Clinton has never been anything but a politician or an aspiring politician. A professional politician necessarily must always be thinking about manipulating public opinion, and it becomes a reflex.

Since I enjoy a genuine exchange of ideas, I can hardly stand to be in the same room with a modern politician. I know that whatever words are coming out of his or her mouth, they are carefully calculated for political effect. Some journalists waste a lot of time interviewing politicians and reporting what they say. I avoid them.

There are some exceptions, of course. There are some men and women in public office who actually have genuine convictions about public issues and political philosophy. Whether their ideas are on the left or the right, I respect such people. They are the only ones who see public office as a public service rather than as a vocation.

That's why the American people have made a huge mistake by allowing politicians to raise their salaries and benefits to the point of being in the top 1 percent of income in the country. The idea that you have to pay a lot to get a good public official is not only wrong but actually achieves the opposite result.

It makes the office attractive to people who simply need a job and aren't very successful in any other endeavor. Or it attracts greedy people. Remember, pay and perks are only the legal part of the rewards. It's amazing how many public officials suddenly become, for the first time in their lives, astute investors and the objects of warm affection by bank loan officers.

Here's a simple way to test this proposition. Think of a politician in your community. Ask yourself if you had ever heard of the guy before he won an election. In most cases, the answer will be no. Let undistinguished people occupy positions of power and you get — at best — undistinguished leadership.

Benjamin Franklin actually boasted to a British critic that since Americans didn't pay their public officials much, they got good representatives. On another occasion, Franklin observed that all schemes to reform bad government would never work. The only answer, he said, was to keep the government too poor to pay bribes.

Our government, of course, is today handing out in one way or another $1.5 trillion per year. Anybody surprised there is political corruption? Anybody surprised there are highly organized factions bidding for a slice of that pie? Anybody surprised that politicians barter their votes for campaign contributions and other considerations?

It is always a mistake to believe that the experience of generations can be discarded and that you can do what history teaches no one else was ever able to do successfully. You can't have sound families and no morality. You can't have honest but luxurious government. You can't have a free society and an all-powerful government. For that matter, you can't have a free society and a people who want to be taken care of.

Another thing people ought to avoid is treating public officials as if they were athletes or movie stars. It's adolescent to be either fanatically devoted or fanatically opposed to any public official. They are just temporary employees. To the extent they do what's right, they should be supported; to the extent they don't, they should be opposed. But to see any individual as either a messiah or an antichrist is to make a mistake.

The job of self-government never ends and involves every citizen, not just the politicians.

Baby boomers suffer from post-war malaise

The generation that the D-Day generation fought prospectively to make happy and free isn't altogether impressed with the results — a curious thing to note during a celebratory time like this one. But, then, maybe the lesson is that our worst enemies don't necessarily scowl at us from beneath coal-scuttle helmets. Some stare back from the mirror.

Murchison

The baby-boom generation, which debuted less than two years after D-Day, ought by all rights to have been the happiest of generations: not only happy and free but prosperous beyond all previous expectations. The reality is something else, J. Kerbey Anderson relates in a new book, "Signs of Warning, Signs of Hope." The 76 million boomers, born during the social and economic upswing that lasted from 1946 to 1964, are beset by interior and exterior challenges. In "Signs of Warning, Signs of Hope," Anderson lists seven such challenges. (And we used to think seven was lucky!)

Mid-life challenges gnaw: Who am I? What am I doing here? There's disillusionment, inasmuch as things aren't as roseate as had been foretold and expected.

Boomers thought they could "have it all"? Hah! The sheer amplitude of choice overwhelms them, nor is there the time anyway to enjoy what they choose. If you try to have it all, you work yourself to death. Divorce and the reluctance to commit one's self to another are barriers to enjoyment of the family satisfactions they knew when they were young. What Anderson, head of an evangelical think tank and himself a boomer, calls a "crisis of loneliness" takes hold upon his generation.

The boomers, meanwhile, are spiritual enough but unfocused: catalog shoppers rather than open-palmed recipients of grace. The moral toughness that orthodox religion always has fostered — a toughness that would stand the boomers in good stead amid today's difficulties — seems to many in the post-D Day generation as alien as a moon crater. Hence, a "crisis of spirituality" — as if there weren't enough else to worry about.

Is it just Americans who bite their fingernails over the present and the future? Not precisely. After a generation in exile, Alexander Solzhenitsyn returns to his homeland, Russia, dismayed by nearly everything he sees. Russian politics represents "false democracy." Prices make the Nobel laureate's eyes "pop out of (his) head." Neither the political nor the economic reforms of the past few years have helped Russia in its time of need. The disarray isn't generational, it's general.

When the Allies poured ashore at Normandy in 1944, Solzhenitsyn was enlisted, all the way across Europe, in the same enterprise — the defeat and eradication of Nazi Germany. Eleven months after D-Day, the war ended in absolute, irrevocable Allied victory. The Americans went home to initiate, among other things, the baby boom; Solzhenitsyn languished in a labor camp for disparaging Joseph Stalin in a private letter. While America soared, Russia would stumble and stagnate. Fifty years after D-Day, neither nation — as far ahead as our own may be reckoned — could be accurately described as the worldly paradise.

Anderson and Solzhenitsyn, each from his own late 20th century perspective, offers approximately the same answer: It's not the economy, stupid. Ultimately, it's not how we earn or spend, it's how we live our lives — in the spirit of me-centeredness or of devotion to things infinitely higher and more durable: family, country, yes, and God.

New quartet shines bright

I wish to commend the newly arrived Everest Quartet for their stellar performance on Friday, May 13. In a program of Haydn, Turina, and Brahms, this band of talented string players showcased an impressive array of skills, including secure intonation, sumptuous tone, absolute unanimity of ensemble and the ability to communicate a coherent and meaningful interpretation — in short, all of the earmarks of great chamber playing. Midlanders would be well advised to sample these talents during the upcoming concert season. Regular concert-goers will find that the Everest Quartet attains a level of performance unrivaled in this area.

Folks should learn English

If the non-English-speaking people cannot understand their utility bills, then let them learn English. If the non-English-speaking people are missing out on benefits or discounts, then let them do without until they are educated enough to understand. If the U.S.A. continually makes things easy for non-English-speaking people, there is no incentive to encourage them to educate themselves and rise above their lack of English proficiency. And who pays for this help to non-English-speaking people? Mr. and Mrs. English Speaking, Middle Income, Born in the U.S.A., Taxpayer. How about if we do some things for our middle-income, English-speaking, natural U.S. citizen taxpayer and lower the taxes and give them a break on their income tax deductions instead of raising the taxes, reducing the deductions and forcing them to support the non-English speaking population against their wishes?

Until the U.S.A. is declared a bilingual country, the official language is English, and I should not be required to pay for public services specifically for non-English-speaking people. If a U.S. citizen moved to France and became a French citizen, would the French utility companies even consider printing the utility bills in English as well as in French because the new French citizen could not read French? I think not. The U.S.A. is the only non-official bilingual country that persists in pampering the non-English-speaking population.

Does local TV make sense?

Reading from the Reporter-Telegram Sunday TV Guide: Tuesday night (5/24), 9 p.m., KMID: Tot fatally shot, car strikes child, burning and submerged car rescues, abandoned baby, drug-crazed woman, violent driver, speeder has drugs, troopers foil interstate spree (Emergency Call and Real Stories of the Highway Patrol). This is what is scheduled so that our children aren't corrupted by watching NYPD Blue. Makes perfect sense to me.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The shorter the letter, the better its chance of publiction.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis.
- We do not publish 'open' letters or copies of letters sent to others.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702.

American journalists go to war armed with notepads, cameras

By Robert Dvorchak
AP national writer

WASHINGTON — It was well before the TV or satellite age. Yet the enduring images of World War II came to life in the copy of war correspondents, the dispatches of radio broadcasters, the frames of photographers and the drawings of cartoonists and artists.

That is, if they could survive the ever-present censors.

Those censors played their role on D-Day and, as a consequence, word of the Normandy invasion came three hours after the first assault troops hit the beaches on June 6, 1944.

The official communique was distributed to war correspondents quarantined inside a London Ministry of Information office.

Under the gaze of the censors, Associated Press war correspondent Wes Gallagher crafted his bulletin, which then was rushed by motorcycle messenger to AP's Fleet Street headquarters to be transmitted to an anxious world.

"The big problem on D-Day was getting reports from off the beaches," said Gallagher, who later became AP's president. "You had to improvise, find a medic who was taking wounded on the ship back to England and get him to deliver copy to the AP office. You just got your stories out any way you could."

World War II was a watershed for the media. Although methods seem primitive today, it was the first time the public could get word of a battle as it was still going on.

Correspondents, photographers parachute from planes, go along on bombing raids, ride in amphibious landing craft. Thirty seven also die in war.

CBS' William Shirer radioed word of the French surrender to the Nazis a day before Hitler could tell the Germans — and before Winston Churchill knew of it. And CBS colleague Edward R. Murrow's broadcasts from London during the Nazi air blitz are the stuff of legend.

Cartoonist Bill Mauldin won a Pulitzer Prize for his depictions of GI life through his fictitious Willie and Joe. Walter Cronkite reported the D-Day landings as a print reporter for United Press. And photojournalists captured images that were impossible to shoot in previous wars.

The most widely disseminated picture of the war was one of the Marines raising the flag on Iwo Jima, which won a Pulitzer for the AP's Joe Rosenthal.

Robert Capa of Life magazine, who was in the first wave on D-Day, lived by the creed: "If your pictures aren't good enough, you aren't close enough."

And Life's W. Eugene Smith said of photographing the war: "You have to stand up when anyone with any sense is lying down." He was wounded by a Japanese mortar.

Print reporters featured the likes of Ernest Hemingway, who violated convention by fighting in the French underground, and GI buddy Ernie Pyle, who was killed by a Japanese sniper in 1945, one of 37 journalists to die in the war.

In an age when the relationship with the military was less adversarial, the media parachuted from planes, hitched along on bombing raids or rode in amphibious landing craft. They often wore military uniforms adorned with the prized patch "U.S. War Correspondent."

And just like sleeping in foxholes or writing stories in the rain, censorship was a fact of life. The constitutional right of a free press can fit awkwardly during war, when the military demands curbs for security reasons.

Only one journalist came close to being jailed for violating the censorship rules under the Espionage Act.

Not all of the abuses were on the media side, of course.

For a time, Gen. Douglas MacArthur insisted that reporters use the imperious dateline: FROM MacARTHUR HEADQUARTERS.

"If a reporter's dispatch did not square with one of MacArthur's communiques, his press office simply refused to let it pass through censors. They were known to clear only those stories that enhanced their boss' reputation," said Frederick Voss, historian at the National Portrait Gallery.

IRS: Firms can get deduction for cleaning up waste

WASHINGTON (AP) — A business can take an immediate tax deduction for cleaning up hazardous waste, the Internal Revenue Service said Thursday in a ruling expected to encourage companies to promptly rid their property of pollution.

The IRS said cleanup expenses, such as those incurred to remove contaminated soil and treat groundwater, are "ordinary and necessary business expenses." That means the costs can be deducted in the year spent, rather than over a much longer period or not at all.

In previous years, most companies had been deducting those expenses. But their deductibility was thrown into question in 1992 when the IRS issued what are known as private-letter rulings to two companies, saying cleanup costs should be considered capital expenditures.

"Since land is not depreciable, it would have meant that companies incurring enormous costs wouldn't have gotten any tax benefit at all," said Tom Ochsenschlager, a partner in the Washington office of the Grant Thornton accounting firm.

As a result of Thursday's ruling, companies will be able to deduct 35 percent or more of cleanup costs, depending on their tax bracket.

"Fewer companies will be going belly up because of these cleanups and more companies are going to be willing to do them because the out-of-pocket costs have just gone down," he predicted.

A Treasury official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said, "Had we not reached this conclusion, in many cases taxpayers would not have been able to recover the costs of the cleanup until they sold the land."

The official said the new ruling also covers the expense of cleaning up contamination on adjoining properties and on land that was contaminated, for instance, as a company's trucks passed by.

Ochsenschlager said the IRS and Treasury Department were under pressure from Congress to issue Thursday's ruling. To fix the problem by passing a new law would have required Congress, under its budget rules, to find hundreds of millions of dollars in offsetting tax increases or spending cuts, he said.

Telethon contributions aid family

Miracles can happen. Midlanders Rick and Gaydon Adams can testify to that.

On March 22, Mrs. Adams gave birth to twins while she was only 28 weeks pregnant — 12 weeks before her due date.

The infants' chances for survival could have been slim, but thanks to the contributions of the Children's Miracle Network Telethon, Medical Center Hospital in Odessa had high-tech equipment and a highly trained staff to increase their chances for survival.

Now, the Adams' identical twin daughters, Trinity Carmell and Bethany McKell, are on the road to recovery.

The couple's 3-year-old son, Christian, gets to see his sisters once a week and nurses claim to hear him singing to the girls to try to soothe

Q. Are fire lanes enforceable and who is responsible for them?

A. Most fire lanes that the public sees are on private property and are not under police enforcement. Stores have to enforce their own fire lanes in front of their buildings. Those fire lanes that have been dedicated by city ordinance — such as Memorial Hospital and Medical Center's — can be enforced by police. There are 20-foot-wide lanes surrounding all public buildings for use by emergency vehicles and must always be clear.

Questions about emergency medical services or firefighting should be sent to Lights & Siren, P.O. Box 1152, Midland, 79702-1152.

TAAS test

AUSTIN (AP) — Another 3,405 seniors have passed the state achievement test required for them to graduate, bringing the passing rate to 92.5 percent of the class of '94, according to the Texas Education Agency.

That's up from the 90 percent of seniors who last year passed all sections of the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills, which tests reading, writing and mathematics.

Results of the latest administration of the test on May 5-7 brings the total number of passing seniors this year to 165,376. They had six chances to pass the test, beginning when they were juniors.

A total of 12,474 seniors took the exam last month. The 9,069 who still failed one or more tests represents 5 percent of current seniors; TEA officials estimate that more than half of them didn't have enough credits to graduate even if they had passed the exam.

Prison term

DALLAS (AP) — A 20-year prison term has been imposed on a man who confessed to shooting a Dallas oil heiress.

Buddy Ray Gunn, 46, was sentenced yesterday in the attack on Linda Hill Guthrie. The sentence will run concurrently with a life sentence he was serving in a federal drug case.

Guthrie, 45, was attacked in August 1992 during what she thought was a flower delivery. She is now in a wheelchair.

Police urge safe celebrations of graduation

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

With high school graduation only 24 hours away, Midland police are urging graduates to celebrate safely.

"We are really encouraging kids to attend non-alcoholic, drug-free parties such as Project Graduation," said Sgt. David Garcia. "They can have just as much fun there without getting in trouble."

Garcia said the Police Department will use three or four Driving While Intoxicated (DWI) STEP officers from Saturday night until early Sunday morning to catch intoxicated drivers.

"We have been really fortunate in that we haven't had any students killed after graduation," he said. "We always have a lot of accidents involving alcohol, and we get an increase in vandalism. However, that doesn't mean the potential isn't there."

Garcia said charges for those drinking include DWI and Minor in Possession. Criminal Mischief and vandalism could be included if the students decide to commit vandalism.

He also warned parents about renting motel rooms for their children or having parties with alcohol at their homes.

"If we get a call to a hotel room or house for loud noise or a disturbance and we don't find any adult supervision, those kids are still going to be in trouble," Garcia said. "Even if parents are at the house with the kids, they could be charged with contributing to the deliquency of a minor for kids that aren't theirs.

"We certainly aren't trying to tell people what to do in their own homes," he continued. "But, parents as well as the kids need to think about what they are doing. We want everyone to have fun, but not to get hurt."

Midland College to hold summer class registration

Staff Report

Official registration for Midland College's Summer I session is scheduled for Monday from noon until 2 p.m. and from 5-7 p.m. in the Student Center.

Only those students with time permits will be admitted until 6 p.m. Those without time permits will be processed after that time.

Summer I classes begin Tuesday and end July 12. Monday, July 4, will be observed as a holiday. Summer session classes meet Monday through Thursday. The late registration period for Summer I lasts through Monday, June 13.

A second summer session also is scheduled, with registration on July 13 and classes starting on July 14 and ending on Aug. 18.

Students are encouraged to register Monday. Enrollment for Summer I is expected to be in the range of about 1,100 to 1,300 students, based on previous years' records.

Persons going to registration are reminded that the Chaparral Circle is being repaved and that not all entrances and parking lots are accessible. At least one of the entrances on Garfield will be open, and the entrance from Wadley at I Street, adjacent to Hillander School, will be open at all times.

Classes being offered during Summer I include: Accounting, Air Conditioning, Heating and Refrigeration, Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counseling, Art, Automotive, Aviation Maintenance, Biology, Business Administration, Chemistry, Computer Information Systems, Economics, Electronics, English, Environmental Technology, Fire Protection, Geology, Government, History, Journalism, Legal Assistance, Mathematics, Music, Nursing, Office Systems, Photography, Physical Education, Physics, Psychology, Radiography, Reading, Respiratory Care, Sociology, Spanish, Speech Communication, and Theater.

Many of the courses are offered in both daytime and evening. Some of the specialized classes are open only to students already enrolled in specific programs, such as nursing.

Additional information will be available Monday morning from 8:30 a.m. until noon at the Student Center or by calling 685-4501.

Texas National breaks ground for new branch

By Mella McEwen

The newest construction project on Loop 250 was launched Thursday morning as Texas National Bank held a groundbreaking ceremony for its new banking facility located at the southwest corner of Midland Drive and North Loop 250.

In a twist to the ceremony, several customers were invited to turn over the first shovelfuls of dirt.

As Wayne Merritt, chairman of Texas National explained, "we invited our customers because without them we wouldn't be doing this."

Customers joining Merritt included Betty Smith, Steve Rogers, owner of Medical Center Pharmacy, and David Mims of Mims and Stephens Insurance.

Smith came upon a "buried treasure" — a chest containing Susan B. Anthony dollars that were handed out to all those attending the ceremony.

Merritt noted that plans for the new West Branch had been worked on for

Jury convicts bankers in $30 million money laundering case

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Antonio Giraldi, whose Beverly Hills office looked more like a boutique than an international bank, thrived in a world far removed from that of drug dealers and their bags stuffed with cash.

But a federal jury on Thursday connected those two worlds, finding him guilty of laundering $30 million for a drug organization reputedly headed by Juan Garcia Abrego of Mexico.

"This case is a good example of how a bank officer legitimized a drug dealer," Assistant U.S. Attorney David Novak said.

Giraldi, 37, a boyish-looking senior officer for American Express Bank International, lowered his head slightly as U.S. marshals escorted him in handcuffs out of the courtroom.

Jurors found him guilty on all charges: conspiracy, 10 counts of money laundering, two counts of bank fraud and four counts of misapplication of funds.

Giraldi's former assistant, Lourdes Reategui, 46, was found guilty of conspiracy, one count of bank fraud and four counts of misapplication of funds. She was acquitted of the 10 money laundering counts and a second bank fraud count.

U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela ordered Giraldi held on a $1 million cash bond until sentencing, which was scheduled for Aug. 12. Bond for Ms. Reategui was set at $500,000.

As the jury deliberated for over three days, Giraldi, a second-generation international banker, had paced the court's hallways, often patting reporters on the back and making small talk about his hopes to return to work and take a mountain biking vacation someday.

Instead, Giraldi likely faces about 15 years in prison under federal sentencing guidelines, according to a motion Novak filed after the verdict. Ms. Reategui would face about five years, the motion said.

Defense attorneys vowed an appeal.

"I cannot fathom how we arrived here," said Giraldi's attorney, Christopher Milner. "I think the basis for an appeal is clearly in the record based on the dearth of the evidence (against Giraldi)."

Ms. Reategui's attorney, Robert Turner, called the verdict inconsistent.

"The jury has decided that my client is guilty of conspiracy and not guilty of the money laundering. You figure it out," he said.

The three-week trial, watched closely by international banks, focused on the relationship between bank officers and their wealthy, often secretive clients.

"We're greatly disappointed by the verdict, said Simon Barker-Benfield, a spokesman for American Express in New York. "But we do emphasize that the bank does have a strict policy against doing business with clients engaged in criminal activities."

DEATHS

Ernest Blackburn

Graveside services for Ernest C. Blackburn of Midland were Thursday at Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Blackburn died Wednesday at a local hospital.

He was born Nov. 3, 1911, in Shawnee, Okla., and grew up in California. He worked at Union Pacific and Southern Pacific railroads, retiring at Southern Pacific. He moved to Big Spring in 1987 and to Midland in 1988.

Survivors include his daughter, Vera (Midge) Jones of Midland; a sister, Lorene Vadagriff of Colton, Calif.; eight grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren.

Memorials may be made to the charity of one's choice.

Oralia Corrales

Services for Oralia Corrales will be at 9:30 a.m. today at Cornerstone Christian Fellowship with the Rev. Richard F. Spence officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Corrales died Tuesday at her residence.

Pallbearers will be Joe Chavez, Camel Dakil, Tom Scott, Ciro Sanchez, Fred Poe, C.B. Nunez and Art Correa.

Honorary pallbearers will be Joey Corrca and Danny Corrales.

Memorials may be made to Casa De Amigos, 1101 E. Garden Lane, Midland, 79701.

Henry Hartfelder

Henry Hartfelder died Wednesday at a local hospital.

No services are scheduled. Arrangements are under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

He was born Aug. 22, 1920, in Kansas City, Kan., and was raised and educated in Kansas City, Mo. He attended Kansas City College prior to enlisting in the Canadian Air Force at the beginning of World War II. When the United States entered the war, he joined the U.S. Coast Guard, serving until 1945. Following his discharge, he moved to Dallas and joined Mortician Supply. He then worked for the sales staff of Kimberly-Clark in 1947 in Dallas and retired as regional sales manager in 1980. He married Helen Murrie on May 24, 1947. He moved to Midland in 1977.

Survivors include his wife, Helen Hartfelder of Midland; a son, Charlie Hartfelder of Hickory, N.C.; a daughter, Laura Hartfelder of Odessa; a brother, T.K. Hartfelder of Sturgeon Bay, Wis.; three sisters, Esther Peirson of Dallas, Marie Beuhring of Salinas, Kan., and Ruth Mensch of Kansas City, Mo.; three grandchildren; and numerous nieces and nephews.

POLICE REPORTS

Assault

A Midland teen-ager remained in critical condition at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center Thursday after being assaulted Wednesday during a burglary.

Coleman Smith, 18, sustained head injuries and underwent surgery Wednesday after he was hit in the parking lot in the 3500 block of Neely Street at 5:13 p.m., according to police officials.

Smith and Carson Elliott, 18, were skateboarding in the parking lot when they were approached by four males. One of the subjects reached into Elliott's car and took a wallet. Another subject then struck Smith in the face, causing him to fall and strike his head against the pavement. Elliott was not injured in the incident.

The four males — Undra Graves, 17, Gregory Watson Jr., 18, Corey Haynes, 19, and a juvenile — fled the scene and were apprehended at Peppertree Apartments, 2700 N. Midland Drive.

Graves faces 13 charges, including burglary of a motor vehicle and aggravated assault. Watson and Haynes were both charged with burglary of a motor vehicle and aggravated assault. Haynes also was charged with resisting arrest. All three were in jail Thursday.

The juvenile also was charged with burglary of a motor vehicle and aggravated assault and remained in Culver Youth Center.

Arrest

ODESSA — An Odessa woman was in jail Thursday after an investigation revealed mishandled money that was being used to buy a home.

According to a report, Joseph Vincent Gibson Jr., 71, reported the loss of $68,633.01 during an attempt to a buy a home to the Ector County District Attorney's office on May 6. An investigation alleged that Lenora Ruth Black, 51, of Basin Management misapplied the amount, which was given in the form of a cashier's check for a mortgage payment on a home at 1701 Doe Lane. The money was to be applied to satisfy the mortgage, but was never paid to the mortgage company, the report said.

Ms. Black was arrested and charged with misapplication of fiduciary property. Bond was set at $5,000.

Wednesday

Vandalism: Vandalism to a vehicle in the 4400 block of Crockett Ave. was reported at 7:05 p.m.

Burglary of a Vehicle: Nolan Potter reported a wallet and $35 taken from a vehicle at Pizza Hut, 427 Andrews Highway, at 9:10 p.m.

Thursday

Burglary of a Building: Donny Orender reported furniture and household appliances taken from Falcon Marine storage building, 1920 N. Loop 250, at 6:58 a.m.

TELETHON: Twins benefit from hospital staff, equipment

"He's been real good through the whole thing," his mother said.

Now, Christian may get to experience having his sisters home with him in the next week or two.

Mrs. Adams said she learned she was pregnant with twins at 18 weeks. She was ordered to bed for a little more than a month, spending the last two weeks of that time in the hospital.

It was at her second sonogram that doctors told her one of the fetuses (which turned out to be Trinity) was smaller than the other.

"He told me if there wasn't any growth they would send me here and on the third sonogram there wasn't much," Mrs. Adams said. "I was admitted right then."

During her hospital stay she had the equivalent of four pounds of amniotic fluid removed. After that, the situation looked better, but she remained in the hospital until delivery.

The babies had what is called twin-twin transfusion syndrome in which one baby gets more blood supply, Adams said.

On March 22, Mrs. Adams and her unborn babies underwent a fetal stress test in which the twins' heart-rates were monitored as they were watched during a sonogram. She said the doctor didn't like the results of the test and decided to deliver the babies that day.

She had a Cesarean section at 28 weeks of gestation.

Trinity weighed 1 pound 14.8 ounces and was 12 3/4 inches long while Bethany weighed 2 pounds 4.6 ounces and was 14 1/2 inches long. Both babies have been in the Neo-Natal Intensive Care Unit since then.

Adams said if the babies had been born just two weeks earlier, one had only a 50 percent chance of survival and the other had a 75 percent chance of survival. But, after 28 weeks, both had a 95 percent survival rate.

Mrs. Adams was discharged from the hospital three days after giving birth.

"When I went home it really hit me that I had them and they were little. I went to the nursery and just started crying," she recalled.

Adams said thankfully the time has gone by quickly. He said all of the specialists at the hospital went to great lengths to "be optimistic, yet realistic in preparing us for all the possible outcomes.

"The idea is if you know what the worst is, then anything else is better," he said.

In their first few weeks of life, Adams said the babies had some problems but they usually overcame them by the next day.

"We'd come in and they'd be off the ventilator, then they'd be back on it the same day," Mrs. Adams said.

"For the (gestation time) they were born, they really haven't had any problems other than the ones you'd expect," he said.

Mrs. Adams said the babies are healthy despite being born three months early and said they're doing "really good."

Trinity is now up to 4 pounds 5.4 ounces and Bethany is up to 5 pounds 4 ounces.

Both babies suffer from chronic lung disease, which their parents said they will likely outgrow. The problem is caused by being premature as well as from the ventilators the babies needed to keep them alive for the first month of their lives.

Mrs. Adams visits the babies daily and feeds them. She said her parents, who live in Odessa, come by in the evening and stay with her and the babies. In the time the babies have been in neo-natal ICU, the family has grown close to the nurses on the staff.

Her husband agreed, noting the dedication of the nurses is outstanding. He said the compassion and love the nurses showed for the babies, even after working 12-hour shifts, was incredible.

"They have been so special. It will be hard when we leave and I'm sure there will be a crying moment," Mrs. Adams said.

But, the family is welcoming the thought of taking their girls home for the first time.

"It was a long ride. We've had our ups and our downs," Mrs. Adams recalls.

But, the long wait appears to be almost over. If everything goes as planned, tonight Mrs. Adams will be rooming with the babies

Adams said he and his wife will go through some special training on giving the babies their medication and knowing how to use the monitors they'll be hooked to. The babies are on medication to help develop their breathing and digestion.

The Adams are happy at the prospects of taking their babies home. They believe the Children's Miracle Network may have played a part in their quick return home.

"A lot of the equipment here the hospital couldn't have afforded without the Children's Miracle Network," Adams said. "We have been told more than one time that a hospital and town this size shouldn't have this quality of equipment."

He said his girls have benefitted from the high-tech ventilators because they didn't have to stay on the machines as long as with the older models.

The family will be just one family featured on the Children's Miracle Network s 12th annual telethon starting at 8 p.m. Saturday through 5 p.m. Sunday on KWES-Channel 9.

The Children's Miracle Network is unique among national charities because 100 percent of local donations stay in the community to benefit the participating CMN hospital. Medical Center Hospital has participated since 1988 and received $141,587 from last year's telethon. The money raised goes toward new equipment and training for nurses.

The most exciting and heartwarming part of the telethon is seeing the miracle stories of children throughout the Permian Basin who have been treated at Medical Center Hospital and have benefitted from the donations through the Children's Miracle Network, said Christina Padilla, telethon coordinator.

One of those miracle stories is the Adams twins.

CONVICTS: Jurors find one banker guilty on all charges

(From 1B)

But Novak, the lead prosecutor, said American Express "absolutely did not cooperate" with the investigation.

"We are going to continue the investigation. We are not done yet," said Novak, who then refused to indicate whether other bank officers were targets of criminal charges.

Barker-Benfield said the bank feels it cooperated.

"We believe so," he said. "But bear in mind that we are not a party to this criminal case. It's the two officers, not the institution itself. And I think that's a distinction that needs to be made."

Giraldi currently is a senior vice president in the bank's Miami office. He worked in the bank's posh branch in Beverly Hills when many of the transactions occurred.

Ms. Reategui, Giraldi's assistant in Beverly Hills, now works for a Los Angeles real estate company.

Defense attorneys, whose fees were paid by American Express, contended their clients had no reason to suspect they were handling tainted money.

But prosecutors charged that Giraldi and Ms. Reategui intentionally schemed and lied in bank records to make their biggest client, Ricardo Aguirre Villagomez, appear to be a legitimate businessman.

The government alleges Aguirre, a gas station manager in Matamoros, Mexico, was handling millions of dollars for Abrego.

Abrego is the reputed head of a drug empire in northeastern Mexico that imports Colombian cocaine.

quite some time and that the site was chosen because it was "smack in the middle of the city's growth.

"We did some research on the city's four quadrants, where our customers lived and the direction of the city's growth, which is west towards Grassland Estates and north toward Mockingbird Lane and Greentree Country Club," he said. "This is a corridor the city has had for 30 years."

He added that the bank most likely will close its current western branch at Cuthbert and Midkiff after the new building is completed. Another branch is located downtown in the Petroleum Building.

The new full-service branch includes lobby teller services and new accounts services as well as 10 drive-in lanes, including two commercial drive-in lanes, a queuing drive-in that allows the customer to go to the first available teller, an automated teller machine (ATM), night depository and the bank's traditional Saturday banking hours. Merritt said there is a possibility of extended evening hours as well, to be decided when the branch opens.

Customers will enter from Midland Drive and can exit to either Loop 250 or Midland Drive.

Landscaping, designed by Midlander Kelly Cook, will have a Southwest flair featuring native plants. The building was designed by Midland architect Rodney B. Roberts, AIA. General contractor is N.C. Sturgeon of Midland.

Construction is set to begin immediately, and completion is set for early next year.

Restoration of Texas Capitol nears completion

AUSTIN (AP) — The restoration of the 106-year-old Texas Capitol is returning the building to its 1888 architecture, but bringing it up to date in safety, officials said Thursday.

"It was time for it to have a facelift, and it needed a major facelift," said Dealey Herndon, executive director of the State Preservation Board.

"From a safety standpoint ... we're going to have a fabulous building when its finished."

David Stauch, project manager, said that the building was in good structural shape, "but it had been jeopardized over the years far more than anybody knew.

"We found more damage by ongoing, half-baked repair work and all kinds of remodeling work. That was the biggest surprise to me."

Ms. Herndon and Stauch led reporters on a tour inside the Capitol past mazes of scaffolding and dozens of workers cutting wood, breaking through walls and installing electrical and plumbing systems.

The building has been closed for nearly a year as part of a $187 million project to restore the Capitol, build an underground annex and renovate the old Land Office building.

Legislative staffers and some state senators will start moving into offices in the Capitol in August. By October, the building should be re-opened to the public.

The Senate chamber is nearly finished, but the House chamber is practically unrecognizable, as workers installed a new floor.

But Ms. Herndon promised that the House chamber would be ready for the regular legislative session that starts in January. "You can't find anyplace else in town for the House members to meet, vote, do all the things they have to do. This has always been the driver and this chamber has got to be ready and it will be."

The most drastic changes completed so far are in the basement, which used to be crowded with cubbyhole staff offices with low ceilings of exposed wires.

Herndon said the basement, which also housed the building's electrical transformers, used to be a fire trap.

Now the ceilings have been raised to 12-feet, and the cubbyhole offices have been knocked out.

Morales: Schools, police may share information

AUSTIN (AP) — Law enforcement agencies can give detailed information to school officials concerning students who have been arrested or detained on suspicion of criminal activity, Attorney General Dan Morales says.

Morales said in a legal opinion Thursday that a new state law allows police to tell the proper school official the nature of the charges against an arrested or detained student and the identities of any alleged victims who are students or school personnel.

The law also authorizes law enforcement agencies to share "all other information about the arrest or detention of a student that will enable the school official to take appropriate action to prevent violence, protect students and school personnel, and further educational purposes," according to the opinion.

The information must be kept confidential and may be provided only to the school superintendent or a person designated by the superintendent under the law.

The opinion was requested by Nueces County Attorney Carl E. Lewis, who said some people had interpreted the law to limit the information that may be shared to just a student's name.

Morales said his opinion was based on a comparison of the old law and the new one, which took effect Sept. 1, 1993; the problems the law was trying to correct; and the intent of the Legislature.

Dry spell causes most damage to Texas wheat farmers' crops

SPUR, Texas (AP) — Troubles took to Texas wheat farmers this season like green bugs to a juicy leaf.

Sporadic outbreaks of a viral disease turned plants yellow and stunted their growth.

Late freezes burned wheat in the Panhandle; a hailstorm May 9 wiped out 10,000 acres north of Dalhart.

And the most widespread devastation was caused by a dry spell last autumn that just wouldn't go away.

Drought is getting most of the blame for estimates that Texas wheat farmers will harvest 27 percent less than last year's production, and 33 percent less than their total in 1992.

Some farmers already have plowed their wheat under, rather than continue messing with a crop worth less than its cost to harvest.

Dickens County extension agent Robert Herrington pointed to a barren field during a recent drive near Spur.

"This was wheat right here," Herrington said. "And let me tell you, that's not good. That's not good at all."

As of May 10, the U.S. Department of Agriculture projected a U.S. winter wheat harvest of 1.66 billion bushels, 6 percent less than last year.

"Texas is probably worst off as hard winter wheat states go," said Vaughn Siegenthaler, USDA agriculture statistician. "The panhandle of Oklahoma, I've heard horror stories about it. Whether that's so, we don't know yet."

Timing determines whether dry spells damage a crop. Ironically, dry conditions are helping out the winter wheat in the Midwest, said USDA agriculture statistician Greg Preston.

"The dry weather for the Midwest actually is ripening their winter wheat early and helping out with insects," he said.

But no such luck in the Texas plains.

The 1994 Texas winter wheat harvest is projected at 87 million bushels with revenue of $282 million, said Beverly Boyd, spokeswoman for the state Department of Agriculture.

Around Spur, about 60 miles southeast of Lubbock, wheat farmers usually let their cattle graze on the fields for several months.

Eddie Clark's cattle grazed on wheat for only six weeks this spring.

"It just didn't grow," Clark said. "A cow got one bite, and that was the end of it for that plant."

Clark said he had to sell 130 calves in January, when they weighed about 700 pounds, rather than waiting until the spring, when they should weigh about 900 pounds. Supplemental feeding was getting too expensive, he said.

Agriculture experts say a poor wheat crop hurts the farmer economically, saps a cow's strength and reproductive capacity and strains the native pastures.

FAMILY MATTERS

Divorce takes couples through stages, stations

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: With great interest I read your article titled, "Adult children still feel the effects of parents' divorce." I am recently divorced. Since I have moved out of the house, my ex-wife and her father have been intentionally trying to alienate my kids from me. In the past, my oldest child would never visit me when I went over to pick up the others. Once when I forced my visitation rights, my ex-father-in-law called the police. After talking to several counselors, I refrained from forcing my visitation rights in the children's best interests. I did this because I love them. I still called all of them every week and invited them to go to dinner, the movies, lunch with them at school, etc. Each time they said things like "No" or "We hate you" or "You embarrass us" or "Don't talk to our friends or our friends' parents." Even during times that I had been traveling, I wrote postcards to all my children on a very frequent basis and called them regularly to talk to them.

May

My ex-wife would not talk to me and still refuses to. Needless to say, I was never informed of my children's activities so I could attend as a normal participating parent. My children would not even tell me about their activities. Most of the time they would hang up on me when I called. It was so bad that in the temporary orders, the judge instructed my ex-wife to call me once a week and tell me about my children's activities. She rarely complied, and then tried to differentiate between special activities versus normal activities. She wanted to make sure that I did not attend my children's events. Even to this day I have to call teachers, parents or my children's friends, and use whatever means I can to find out about what my children are doing.

To try and negate this hostility, I was able to negotiate counseling for my kids as part of the final divorce settlement. After several visits, the counselor quit requiring the kids to attend, as she felt there was too much damage. Her decision really crushed me, as I felt counseling was my only hope for getting an objective third party to talk to my children. She felt that only through time and persistence would my relationship with my kids would change.

Again the divorce has been extremely hostile from the viewpoint of my ex-wife and her father intentionally trying to alienate my children from me and replace me in my children's lives. As evidence of the hostility, I have enclosed copies of letters and articles sent to me by my ex-father-in-law. Contrary to what he says, I do provide a generous monthly child support and property settlement.

Since I moved out, I never see my children as I do not physically force my visitation rights with my children. Obviously, this is a horrible situation. What do you suggest so I can try to re-establish a relationship with my children? FRUSTRATED

DEAR FRUSTRATED: As you know, I have edited your letter to fit the column. Divorce has a profound effect on the couple, the children and the families of origin. Dr. Florence Kaslow, a noted authority on divorce, suggests that it is helpful to consider "stages and stations" of divorce, and she identifies (from Bohannon), emotional divorce, legal divorce, economic divorce, co-parental divorce and the problems of custody, community divorce and the problems of loneliness, and psychic divorce. During the emotional divorce station, the "seeds of dissatisfaction can be deeply sown."

You and your ex-wive seem to have not completed the work of this first station — which normally sets the stage for the divorce. The process is not simple to complete, even though other stations — for example legal divorce — have been completed. Ahrons and Miller, in their study of post-divorce paternal involvement, found that, "At least in divorced families in which the mother has primary physical custody, the implication is that mothers are the 'gatekeepers' of the children; they are able at least partially to control and regulate father-child involvement and contact." They believe that it is helpful for the divorced parents to think of themselves "as a bi-nuclear family in which they must continue to serve the same function for their children as they did in the prior nuclear family."

I would agree with your counselor's view that through time and persistence your relationship with your children will change. Reaching some resolution with your ex-wife, to get beyond the emotional station and its anger, will speed up the process. Research findings encourage you to continue to be available to your children. You may also find Vicki Lansky's book, "Divorce Book for Parents," to be helpful.

Jim May is the director of the Family Wellness Center.

Lessons on feelings are valuable to families

By Susan Chira
N.Y. Times News Service

A new study suggests that how parents handle their own and their children's emotions may have striking and wide-ranging effects on their children's physical health, academic achievement and emotional well-being.

The study, conducted by three researchers at the University of Washington in Seattle, found that when parents paid attention to their emotions and could teach their children self-awareness and self-control, children scored higher on math and reading achievement tests, had longer attention spans and had fewer behavior problems in school, at home or with friends. These children also had lower levels of stress hormones in their urine and a lower heart rate.

The research does not prove that parents' ability to handle emotions causes these results in children, but suggests a correlation because children with emotionally skilled parents had better intellectual and physical outcomes, regardless of their IQ or their parents' social class, ethnicity or educational level.

While many psychologists have theorized that parents' emotional states affect their children, this study is one of only a few to find an empirical link between parents' emotional lives and children's physical and emotional health, experts said.

"THIS IS a very provocative, intriguing and important study that develops a new way of looking at parents' feelings about feelings," said Judy Dunn, a professor of human development at Pennsylvania State University. She is one of the professionals who were asked to evaluate the study, which will be published in a few months in the journal Cognition and Emotion.

But she added that the findings should be interpreted with caution for several reasons: genetics or children's innate temperament could cause these outcomes; the family studies came from a largely small-city setting, and different cultures, both inside and outside the United States, prescribe different ways to handle emotion.

"If the study was done in England, it might not come out the same, because there is not the same attitude about talking about feelings," Professor Dunn said.

John M. Gottman, a psychologist and an author of the study, said in a recent interview that his findings could be used to help teach parents how to "coach" their children on managing their emotions — an emphasis he said was lacking in most child-rearing books, with the exception of "Between Parent and Child," by the late psychologist Haim Ginott.

"So much of the popular parenting literature is oriented toward getting obedience, control and consistent discipline," Gottman said. "But so little really talks about how to make an emotional connection with the child."

GOTTMAN AND two colleagues, Carole Hooven and Lynn Fainsilber Katz, studied 56 families in Champaign and Urbana, Ill., over several years. They chose parents whose marriages were judged in screening as ranging from happy to unhappy. They interviewed them once when their children were 4 or 5, before they entered school, and interviewed them again when their children were 8. They asked the parents to talk about their marriages as a way to measure how well they understood and accepted their own emotions.

They also observed how well parents helped children manage frustration and anger in two settings: Once, when the children were deliberately told a hard-to-follow story and the parents were asked to get them to summarize the story, and again when the parents were asked to teach the children how to play a video game. Several years later, when the children were 8, they measured their achievement and behavior in school.

The researchers divided parents into four categories: those who disapproved of their children being sad or angry; those who dismissed those feelings, making comments like "What's a kid got to feel sad about?"; those who were laissez-faire, saying that all emotion should be accepted, and those who actively helped their children to think about their emotions and express them in acceptable ways. The children of parents in the last group scored best physically and intellectually.

Gottman said the researchers theorized that when parents taught their children how to understand and manage their emotions, the children experienced less stress and were better able to focus in school, and so scored higher on achievement tests.

MANY PARENTS who are loving and emotionally expressive, the researchers found, are not necessarily good emotional coaches. For example, Gottman said, one father talked about how he tried to help his daughter when she was sad by holding her or distracting her by watching television. But that actually did not teach his child how to cope with her sadness, the professor said.

"It's not a dimension of being nice, caring and loving," Gottman said. "It's a matter of parents who can say, 'What do you think is making you feel sad, and what can you do now?'"

Dunn said that the study's results should not make parents feel guilty about being inadequate emotional coaches, but rather could help them think about the importance of teaching their children how to manage emotions.

JOHN M. Gottman, a psychologist and co-author of the University of Washington study, offers these principles to parents on how to coach their children's emotions:

- Explore the emotion, don't ignore it. Find out which emotions your child is feeling. Listen. You don't have to have the answers. Don't try to solve the problem before you understand it.
- Validate and empathize. Don't disapprove of feelings. It is O.K. to set limits on behavior, but all feelings are acceptable.
- Explore what may have produced these emotions.
- Explore alternative ways of dealing with the emotion. It works best if you help your child come up with ideas instead of always suggesting all the answers. This way, your child can do this kind of problem-solving when you are not there.
- Bad interaction can be repaired. Some coaching interactions won't go well. Repair things by talking about feelings, including your own.

Gottman also gave examples of how a parent should and should not handle different situations. Although these examples are geared to preschool children, he said the same principles apply to all ages.

In one situation, a child is sad and is moping around the house. One response, which Gottman calls dismissive of a child's emotions, could play out like this:

Parent: Cheer up honey. Do you want to go outside? Do you want to watch TV? Are you hungry?

Child: I'll go outside.

A response that involves coaching could create this dialogue:

Parent: You seem kind of sad.

Child: Yeah.

Parent: How come?

Child: Lisa called me a baby.

Parent: What could you do when she calls you a baby?.

Child: I don't know.

Parent: What did you tell Raymond just yesterday? I admired what you told him.

Child: Let's see. I could say that she hurts my feelings and I don't like it when she says that, then I'll walk away and play by myself.

Parent: Sounds good.

Allergic reactions treatable

Staff Report

For most people, a bee sting is a minor nuisance, but if you're insect sting-allergic, your next encounter could be deadly. Medical studies show that once a person has had an allergic reaction, there is a 60 percent chance that their next reaction could be worse. Symptoms include:

- Dizziness and/or nausea
- Difficulty in breathing and/or swelling of the throat
- Hives and/or swelling away from the sting site
- Unconsciousness or cardiac arrest

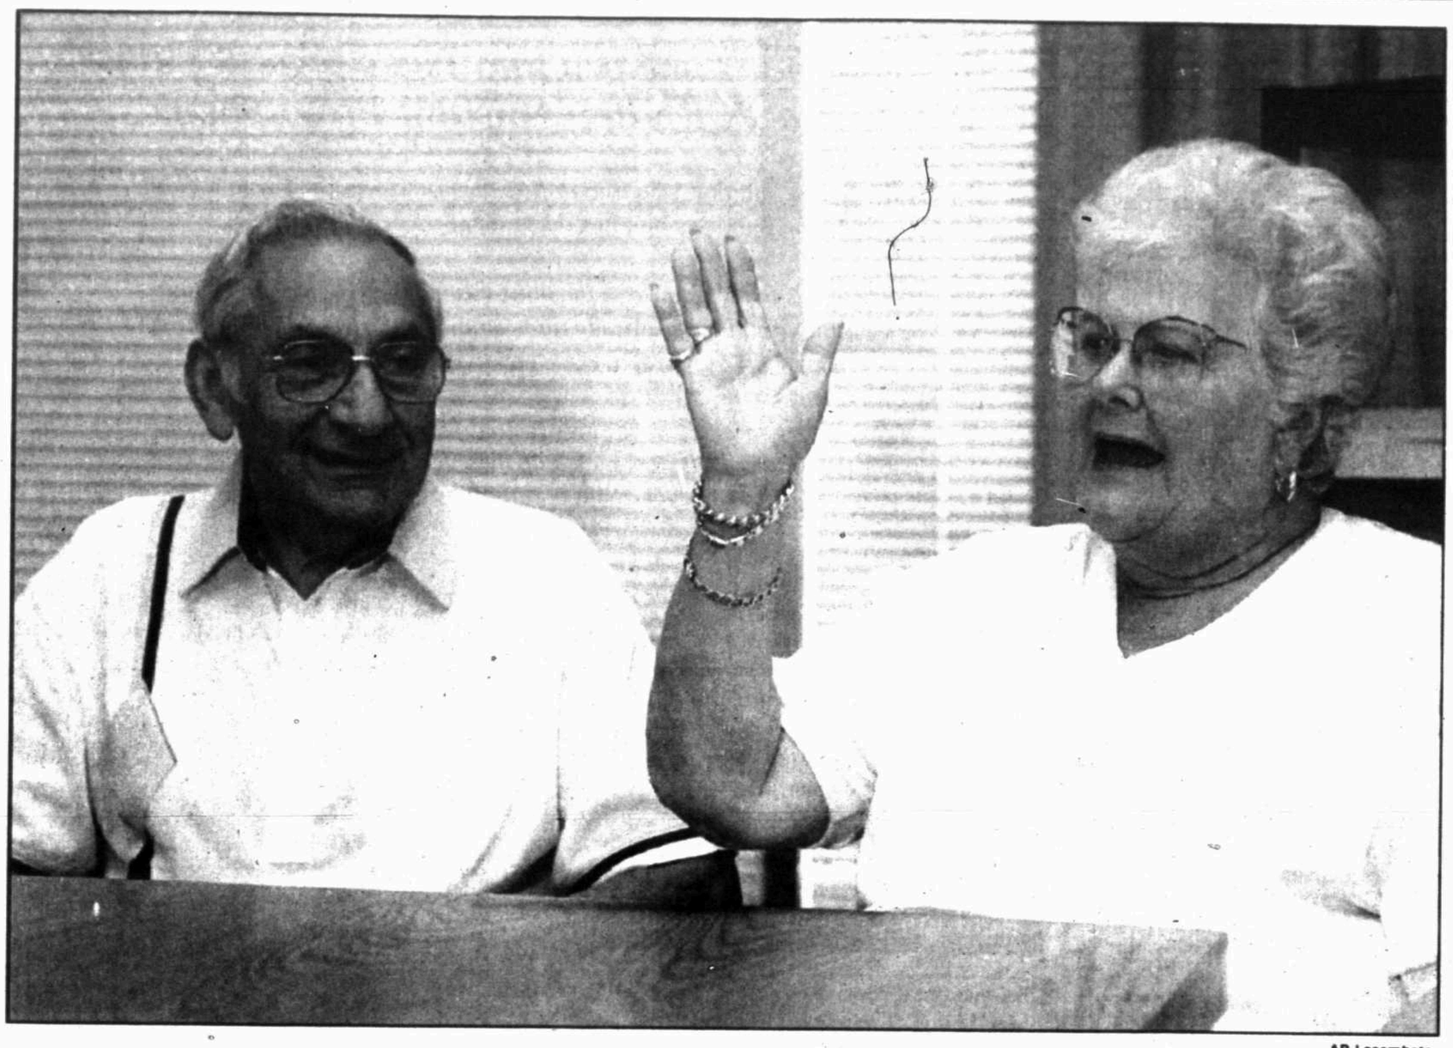

If you've experienced any of these symptoms following an insect sting, there is hope. A new treatment call "immunotherapy-sting allergy vaccine" provides compete protection from future allergic reactions, and is currently available through your local allergist.

For a free brochure on insect sting allergy, an the name of an allergist in this area, call 1-800-23-STING.

Doctor's Note: A non-allergic or local reaction to an insect sting results in swelling, itching and redness at the sting site. Sometimes the swelling becomes quite large (a sting on the elbow can cause an entire arm to swell to twice its normal size). This "large local" reaction is often confused with an allergic reaction, but is an non-threatening condition usually treated with ice and antihistamines. Both local and large local reactions rarely require medical treatment by a physician.

Daniel and Vivian Bagatelle talk about their experiences with Alzheimer's and with the Duke University support group they belong to in Durham, N.C. The group is unique because it combines Alzheimer's patients with their spouses or caregivers in open discussion about their problems.

Alzheimer's group helps families

By Estes Thompson

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Before the Bagatelles met the Reeves, their experience with Alzheimer's disease was a lonely struggle.

It's still a struggle, but both couples say the loneliness has been eased by a support group at Duke University's Bryan Alzheimer's Disease Research Center.

The group joins Alzheimer's patients with their spouses or caregivers in open discussions about their problems. Participants say the group ends their isolation. However, some critics say separate groups for patients and caregivers are more productive.

The Duke group, one of only 20 in the nation, was formed about two years ago.

"One of our patients started it," said Sarah Vann Wyne, a research coordinator. "He wrote an article and in the article he said 'I'd like to meet somebody.' "

For Tom and Peggy Reeve, the group has eased their transition from a normal retired life to the lives of a patient who can't remember things and a wife who has to keep up with all the things that are forgotten.

"Tom, before we started coming to the group, wouldn't admit he had Alzheimer's," Mrs. Reeve said. "Being with the group has helped us. It helps to know there are other people who are going through the same thing. You're not alone."

'I have friends (in the group) who help me and I help them. ... You have to understand that you're hurt. You can sit and cry sometimes.'

— Daniel Bagatelle
member of Alzheimer's support group

NOW, THE Reeves vacation with Daniel and Vivian Bagatelle and look forward to visiting and discussing their problems and successes at the group's monthly meetings.

Alzheimer's, which strikes some 4 million Americans a year, causes confusion, memory loss, personality changes and impaired judgment, according to the national Alzheimer's Association. There is no cure and its cause is unknown.

The disease generally hits after age 65; people can live three to 20 years after getting it.

The disease changes married people's relationships drastically, usually coming at a time when retirees look forward to spending time together away from the demands of working life.

"It's a loss of a person I knew," 75-year-old Betty Beckerman said of her 83-year-old husband George, a retired doctor. "He was a vibrant man. His memory was absolutely perfect."

As the disease manifested itself, Mrs. Beckerman said, she first thought there was a problem in their marriage. But signs such as memory problems and Beckerman wrecking two cars in six months pointed elsewhere.

"We really knew something was wrong one day when he came home from the store with 13 bags of every kind of chip manufactured," she said. He told her he couldn't remember that she wanted only corn chips, so he brought one of everything.

ALZHEIMER'S HAS separated the Bagatelles from many of their friends. Because people feel uncomfortable around Alzheimer's patients, they have stopped getting invitations to parties.

"It's tremendously isolating," said Elisabeth Himan-Smith, a clinical social worker who helps lead the group, which has about two dozen members.

In February, members of the support group presented themselves at an annual research conference sponsored by the Bryan center. Members told some 500 people who attended what the group meant to them.

"Here, we support one another," said Mrs. Bagatelle, whose 71-year-old husband likes the group because there are people for him to talk to. "I've learned not to expect anything. That's why we take care of ourselves."

The national Alzheimer's Association, however, wonders how productive it is to join patients and caregivers in a single support group. Most of the 2,000 support groups organized by the association are for caregivers, although some are forming for patients.

"Our philosophy is a patient should be meeting in a different group than caregivers because they have different needs," said Diane Young of New Orleans, an Alzheimer's Association director and chairwoman of the association's patient and family service committee.

"It's important for patients and caregivers to have a little time away from that situation. ... How productive a meeting can that be if a patient is aware of what we are saying about him and his situation?"

BAGATELLE, A RETIRED department store executive, said the combined group is good therapy because "I have friends who help me and I help them. ... You have to understand that you're hurt," he said. "You can sit and cry sometimes."

RSVP

The Retired and Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP) has opportunities for volunteers 55 years and older. RSVP will match volunteers' skills and interests to community agencies' needs. The program operates from Community and Senior Services, 3301 Sinclair. For more information, call 689-6103. A sample of current opportunities include:

- Change someone's life by teaching them to read. Adult literacy tutors are provided training to teach basic reading skills to individuals.
- Several agencies are looking for volunteers to help with landscaping, planting or trimming trees. This will be a short term project.
- Share time with a singing group learning or helping others learn to sing.

DEAR ABBY

Driver pursued on freeway longed to hear siren's call

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I was recently followed on the freeway by a male driver who stayed directly behind my car through a series of lane changes and speed changes. I went from suspicious, to nervous, to really scared as I realized that he was, indeed, following me.

Van Buren

He then followed me off the freeway and through a series of turns while I searched in vain for a police station. I could find absolutely no signs indicating the location of the police station, sheriff or highway patrol. Finally, I pulled into a business where there were a number of men standing outside. After slowing to survey the situation, the pursuer drove on.

Abby, why don't police stations have more signs indicating their location, just the sheriff and highway patrol? Without a car phone, it could be dangerous to stop to call 911.

Your readers would benefit from some advice on the best course of action if they are pursued on the road — DESPERATELY SEEKING THE POLICE STATION

DEAR DESPERATELY: I hope that law enforcement and transportation departments everywhere will take note of your suggestion for better police "locator signs." It's a good idea.

Incidentally, the California Highway Patrol said that you acted appropriately when you were being pursued on the road. You headed for a lighted, populated area; kept your car doors locked and the windows rolled up; left a space cushion around your car for easier maneuverability, and were alert to strangers. Most important, if you are faced with weapons, surrender your vehicle calmly, without a fight. Vehicles can be replaced. Lives cannot.

DEAR ABBY: I am asking you a question I am sure many people would also like answered. Why do doctors prescribe medicines to patients that cost a fortune, then after a few doses, change the medication to something else that also costs a fortune?

I have a full bottle of medicine that cost me $26. I took it twice, then the doctor gave me another prescription to fill. When I asked him, "What should I do with the bottle I have?" he said, "Just throw it out."

My son-in-law had two full bottles of insulin — never opened. His doctor changed his prescription to another type.

I am close to 80 and cannot afford to throw money away. Please put this in your column because the next time a doctor prescribes 100 pills to be taken one a day, I'm going to say, "Why don't you prescribe only 20 pills, and if you want me to take more, I'll order more?"

Please don't use my name. — NOT MADE OF MONEY

DEAR NOT MADE OF MONEY: When the doctor gives you a prescription, if you are concerned that it may not agree with you or that it may be changed, ask the pharmacist to give you only part of it. If it works out OK, then you can return to the pharmacist for the remainder of the medication. The cost may be a little higher in smaller quantities, but if the medication is changed, at least you won't be stuck with medication you can't use.

NOT CONFIDENTIAL TO HELEN BRODKEY IN OMAHA: Happy birthday, dear sister. Who's counting?

DEAR ABBY: I was an 18-year-old single mother, raising a 9-month-old son. Jack was a divorced parent raising a 16-year-old daughter and a 14-year-old son.

We didn't even know each other until I rang his doorbell — selling Avon products. He invited me in and he bought a little glass pumpkin with a perfumed candle in the middle. (He later confessed that the only reason he bought it was to get a date with me.)

Well, to make a long story short, both Jack and I got a lot more than we bargained for. We got married!

That was 11 years ago. I am now 29 and Jack is 45. We have a terrific marriage, and we didn't have to learn to love our stepchildren — we loved them from the very beginning. (We now have five grandchildren!)

I feel sorry for those stepmothers who are "fed up" with their stepchildren and think that being a stepparent is "hell on earth." For me, it's heaven on earth, and I thank God every day for the wonderful family he has given me. You may use my name. — RHONDA HECKMAN, POTTSTOWN, PA.

DEAR RHONDA: Congratulations to you and Jack, and may God continue to bless you and your beautiful blended family.

Readers: When I telephoned the Heckmans for permission to use their name, I asked if they still had that pumpkin with the candle. Jack replied, "You bet we have. I wouldn't give it up for anything."

(Confidential: This is not a paid advertisement for Avon products.)

Police to target hand signals in fight against gang violence

FORT WORTH (AP) — City officials have taken yet another unusual, and somewhat controversial, approach to try and quell gang violence.

Police have been authorized to ticket — under narrowly defined circumstances — anyone who uses hand signals to incite violence.

The new interpretation of the disorderly conduct law was sent to officers May 4. It follows a highly publicized proposal to hire gang members as street counselors, as well as discussion on reviving a teen curfew.

Ron Flowers, president of the Greater Fort Worth Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, doubted the limits would infringe on free speech.

"My own reaction is we wouldn't have any problems with that, but we would certainly watch the city very closely to make sure they did not fudge on those guidelines," he said.

But civil liberties scholar Robert Hardgrave was not so sure.

"It's intriguing," the University of Texas law professor said. "This provides some interesting legal questions regarding free speech and invites a legal challenge."

Police said gang members often use hand signals to challenge or insult rival gangs or identify themselves to each other.

A police memo said officers may ticket people for flashing signs only if the officers can describe the hand signs, understand what they mean and show "how the resulting disturbance was directly related to the throwing of the sign."

Disorderly conduct is a Class C misdemeanor punishable by a $500 fine.

Sgt. Oscar Ramirez, intelligence chief for the police department gang unit, refused to describe a typical gesture, saying it "would glorify the gangs."

However, Ramirez said the signals are generally a single gesture on one or both hands used to identify a member's gang and to provoke a response.

The policy is "at least another tool to try," said Lt. Ed Daniels, head of the police department's gang unit. "I think what we're looking for is something where an officer sees something beginning and can breach it before it escalates."

But other officers are skeptical that the new policy will work.

Study: Many lottery retailers violate access law

AUSTIN (AP) — Nearly two-thirds of Texas lottery retailers surveyed by the state Lottery Commission are violating a federal requirement to be accessible to people with disabilities.

Disability rights advocates — who have announced a fresh campaign of lawsuits to force businesses to remove barriers to the disabled — call the compliance rate inexcusable and shameful .

But lottery spokesman Steve Levine said Wednesday the state is "fairly pleased with the amount of people who have been in compliance or who indicated to us they would comply."

Mickey Moore, president of the Texas Retailers Association, said retailers, especially small ones, still might be poorly informed about requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act.

State law requires all businesses selling lottery tickets to comply with the federal civil rights law, but 65 percent of the retailers surveyed by the state this year do not, the Austin American-Statesman reported.

There are more than 14,500 lottery outlets in Texas, and 2,851 of them have been investigated since January as part of a random survey that eventually will evaluate each outlet.

The state inspections are educating retailers, who usually do not argue with the state's findings, Levine said. Only one retailer has filed a formal complaint opposing a finding of noncompliance, he said.

Since last fall, the lottery commission has been withholding a retailer's share of lotto jackpot winnings if the outlet is in violation of the federal law. Often when that happens, the retailer quickly removes any architectural barriers that inhibit services for customers with disabilities, Levine said.

"Lot of times, overnight or within hours, they will call us back and say, 'We're ready,'" he said.

Justice Department objects to at-large judges in 2 counties

HOUSTON (AP) — The Justice Department's civil rights chief says two new at-large judicial positions in Fort Bend and Harris counties will dilute minority voting power.

Deval L. Patrick, head of the Justice Department's civil rights unit, said data shows that black and Hispanic voters in Harris and Fort Bend counties have been unable to elect a minority candidate, because their votes are outnumbered by whites.

"I must object to the creation of the Harris County Criminal Court at Law No. 15 and the creation of Fort Bend County Court at Law No. 3," Patrick, wrote in a May 31 letter to Ronald Kirk of the Texas Secretary of State's Office.

Harris County currently has 14 county criminal courts at law to hear Class A and Class B misdemeanor cases. The 15th such court is to begin operation next year, as is the third in Fort Bend.

"Numerous federal court decisions have chronicled instances where at-large elections, numbered post requirements, and the runoff system have been adopted in Texas with clearly discriminatory motives, and where their use has produced the intended discriminatory results," Patrick said.

The Texas Legislature created the two courts to reduce backlogs. But Patrick said that goal could be reached without adding more at-large elected judges.

Voting boundaries must be submitted to the Justice Department for approval.

Judge: Dallas can use state trespassing law to move its homeless

DALLAS (AP) — The city of Dallas may use a criminal trespassing law to rid its property of homeless people, but the statute must be applied to all people who trespass on city land, a federal judge ruled Thursday.

U.S. District Judge Joe Kendall agreed with the American Civil Liberties Union on some issues concerning indigent people who live under the Interstate 45 bridge. He granted a preliminary injunction prohibiting enforcement of ordinances such as sleeping in public and aggressive panhandling.

But the city may use the state trespassing law to remove the homeless from the city property just east of downtown, where 40 to 50 people reside.

City housing officials have had mixed success luring denizens of the overpass into public housing. Police had been preparing to evict or arrest those who remained beneath the bridge, before the ACLU of Texas sued to block the campaign.

The case still faces trial and the ACLU vows to press for a permanent injunction, but the city could begin enforcement as soon as next week.

"What I think they are going to do is chase the homeless people around with criminal trespass warnings and just keep them moving and harass them with it," said John Fullinwider, a homeless advocate.

Others said the ACLU now needs to work with local officials to find decent housing for the homeless.

Separated from children, immigrant mothers grow desperate

By Deborah Sontag
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — For many West Indian women in New York, long-term separation from their children is a heartbreaking fact of immigrant life. And for some, like the Jamaican mother whose son was held for ransom by smugglers this week, it is just too much to bear.

The arrest of five people in a Jamaican child-smuggling operation on Tuesday illuminates the desperate methods that some immigrants will employ to be reunited with their children.

Immigration experts do not know of any widespread child smuggling from the West Indies. This case, in which the Jamaican mother, Kay White of the Bronx, paid smugglers to transport her child to the United States, appears to be an isolated one, said Doug Mosier, a spokesman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Washington.

But West Indian immigrants themselves say that some parents do pay counterfeiters to forge immigration documents for their children. The parents know — as Chip Bogdanski, an INS spokesman in New York City, acknowledged yesterday — that airport inspectors are less likely to scrutinize a child's documents.

Immigration agents, in fact, did not notice that Ms. White's son carried a forged passport when he arrived at John F. Kennedy International Airport on a Jamaica Air flight Sunday night. The 9-year-old boy was met at the airport by the smugglers, who hid him in a cluttered apartment in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn, and demanded a $2,000 ransom from his mother.

Cheryl Pearl, a babysitter who works in Greenwich Village, said she empathized with Ms. White.

Ms. Pearl's two young children live with their grandmother in Kingston, Jamaica. Ms. Pearl, an illegal immigrant, said she would probably buy them forged American birth certificates if she could scrape together $1,000, the amount she thought it would cost.

"You do not know how much pain I feel to be separated from my kids by so much land and sea," she said. "Sometimes I feel I would do anything — anything — just to be able to kiss their cheeks and smell their skin."

In most West Indian immigrant families, the women are the pioneers, traveling here alone to find domestic work, settle into new lives and then send for their families.

But even legal immigrants from Jamaica must now wait three years to have their children follow them. For instance, government officials are now processing Jamaican applications filed in August 1991, according to the State Department's latest bulletin on visas. And illegal immigrants must wait up to a decade.

"In that much time, my children will be grown," Ms. Pearl said. "And they'll be strangers."

Ms. White, who is in her late 20s, had been separated from her 9-year-old son for three years when she met a woman who offered to arrange his transit for $1,100, police said. That woman, whose identity police do not know, contacted the smugglers. The smugglers told Ms. White not to go to the airport to pick up her son.

Faced with the smugglers' demand for more money, Ms. White went to the 67th precinct and, with a nervous composure, sought the police's help. The police raided the smugglers' five-story brown building, and found eight children: six relatives, Ms. White's son and another smuggled child, the 9-year-old daughter of a Jamaican immigrant from New Jersey.

Four of the five adults arrested were legal immigrants; the fifth was a citizen, immigration officials said. The police and immigration officials are now searching for their co-conspirators in Jamaica.

After the arrests, two of the related children were turned over to grandparents and four to child welfare officials. Ms. White's son, dressed in jeans, was reunited with his mother, and the 9-year-old girl, who wore a plaid skirt, rejoined her father.

Illegal immigrant women like Ms. White often find themselves in an emotional and practical bind they had not anticipated. They cannot leave the United States until they are legalized, and their children cannot obtain even temporary visas to visit them.

U.S. consulates in the Caribbean scrutinize all visa applicants as potential immigrants, and grant tourist visas sparingly.

And so the years go by, and the mothers grow desperate.

"I never imagined it would take more than three years to get my papers, and I been waiting six so far," said a 36-year-old Jamaican woman whose employer is sponsoring her for a visa. "So now I found an illegal way to get my kids."

The woman said she had arranged by telephone with a "broker" in Jamaica for her teen-age daughters to get fraudulent immigration papers. Her brother paid the man $1,500. "I got my fingers crossed it will work," said the woman, who would not give her name for fear the plan would be aborted.

Another Jamaican woman, who also spoke on condition of anonymity, said that women are sometimes extorted by men who take their money but never arrange transit for their children.

"People constantly lose," she said. "But you do it until you have lost track of how much you have spent."

Immigrants say women in those situations do not believe they have any recourse, and so they swallow their financial loss and their hopes for a family reunion.

"I can't say it surprises me," said Kathleen Masters, lawyer for the Church Avenue Merchants Block Association, a community group in Flatbush. "There are people out there who for a fee will make money off the human misery of others."

Even when Caribbean immigrant families are lucky enough to be reunited, the years apart often have taken their toll.

"The parents try to re-establish their authority, and the kids say, 'You left me. What do you want from me?' " said Una Clarke, a Jamaican-born member of City Council. "We get a breakdown in discipline. It's a wrenching problem for our community."

And sometimes, after all the years of pining for their children, immigrant women find it difficult to fit them into their hectic American lives.

GALVESTON — Houston Rockets forward Robert Horry was unhurt after being involved in a minor accident en route to Thursday's practice at the Texas A&M-Galveston campus.

Teammate Kenny Smith was following behind Horry and saw the accident that occurred as both players left Houston to join their teammates.

"Some guys will do anything to miss a practice," Smith joked. "Everybody is fine but both cars are beat up. Actually it was scary. I didn't know it was Robert until I circled around to check that no one was hurt."

Horry's accident caused him to miss the team's first workout since clinching the Western Conference championship on Tuesday night, a 94-83 victory over Utah in Game 5.

McMahon to Cards

TEMPE, Ariz. — Quarterback Jim McMahon, changing teams for the fourth time in his career, signed Thursday with the Arizona Cardinals.

The team also waived defensive backs John Booty and Chuck Cecil and signed cornerback Lorenzo Lynch, an unrestricted free agent.

McMahon, who said after Tuesday's tryout he knew he'd be coming aboard as a backup for Steve Beuerlein, brings an irrepressible spirit to the Cardinals as well as experience gained through eight playoffs and 12 seasons with other teams.

He quarterbacked Chicago to victory in the 1986 Super Bowl and has a 67-28 career record as a starter. McMahon, 35, spent his first seven seasons with Chicago. He then had one at San Diego and three in Philadelphia before playing last year with Minnesota.

Terms of his contract weren't disclosed.

No Bull

NEW YORK — Holy Bull, the beaten Kentucky Derby favorite but a dazzling winner of the Metropolitan Handicap on Monday, will not race in the Belmont Stakes on June 11.

Instead, Holy Bull is scheduled run against 3-year-olds in the 1-1-16-mile Dwyer on July 3 at Belmont.

Steers hope for senior trip to state event

■ Big Spring meets Fort Worth Brewer with a trip to the Class 4A tournament up for grabs.

By Mike Butts
Staff Writer

Big Spring's baseball team enters today's Region I championship against Fort Worth Brewer with seniors at all but one position. And Steer coach Bobby Doe thinks his team has the right kind of "senioritis."

"You can go one or two ways if you're seniors," said Doe. "You can have a lot of desire because it's your last year, or you can hope it's over so you can go out and do your own thing. I think our guys are wanting to stay in and keep playing."

Big Spring plays its best-of-three series with Brewer at 7:30 p.m. today and 1 p.m. Saturday at Abilene Christian University's Scott Field.

But the Steers (26-7) almost fell into the "go out and do your own thing" category Friday in their Class 4A region quarterfinal series with Fort Worth Arlington Heights. Big Spring's seniors had graduation exercises the night before, and it showed in the Steers 12-4 loss.

It also may have made Arlington Heights think beating Big Spring, which is making its second trip to the Region final in three seasons, would be a walk.

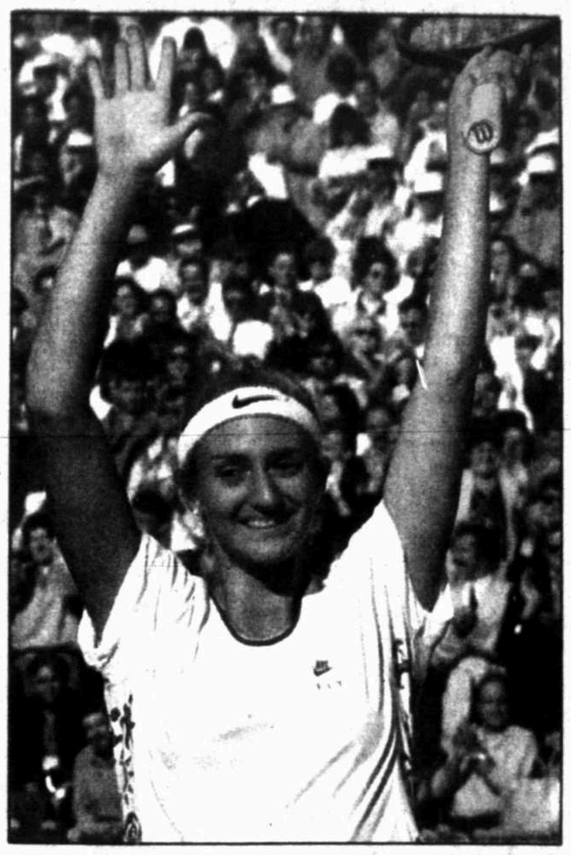

"They were overconfident Saturday," Doe said. "In fact they got out there a little late and acted like we were no problem."

But Big Spring proved to present the worst of problems, taking the first game 4-2 and coming from three-runs down to win the rubber match 5-4 on Trey Terrazas' bottom-of-the-seventh single.

Teen 'Pierce's' Graf in semis

Florida-based Mary Pierce of France took just 77 minutes to beat the world's top player, Steffi Graf, in straight sets in the French Open women's semifinals Thursday.

Aranxta Sanchez-Vicario easily defeated fellow Spaniard 6-3, 6-1 to move into the finals

PARIS — Even Mary Pierce couldn't believe what she had done.

Not only did she beat the indomitable Steffi Graf, she overwhelmed the three-time champion 6-2, 6-2 Thursday to reach the finals of the French Open — and give women's tennis a badly needed boost.

It was the biggest victory of the 19-year-old's career and moved her into a Grand Slam final for the first time. It was one of Graf's most one-sided losses, ending her streak of four consecutive Grand Slam titles and her run of 20 straight tournament finals.

"I'm a little shocked at the way I won so easily," said the 12th-seeded Pierce, who handed Graf only her second defeat of the year and became only the seventh player ever to beat her in a Grand Slam event. "I felt there wasn't much that she could do because I was just playing so well.

More surprising than Pierce's victory was the way she thoroughly dominated Graf, winning the rain-interrupted match in just 77 minutes.

"It's a dream for me to beat the No. 1 player in the world here at Roland Garros," she said.

Pierce, who is based in Florida but plays for France because she has a French mother, became

COM hosts WT Invite

By Mike Butts
Staff Writer

City of Midland swim team coach Brad Swendig hopes this weekend's Wagner and Brown West Texas Invitational meet will provide some good competition for his swimmers. And because teams are coming from as far as El Paso and New Mexico, he thinks it will.

"With the kids from New Mexico and El Paso we don't know what to expect," said Swendig. "Usually when they make that kind of drive they're pretty good."

The seven teams competing in the West Texas Invitational begin swimming today at 6 p.m. and finish up Saturday and Sunday, getting under at 9 a.m. those days. The meet is at Midland's Doug Russell Pool.

The competition gives COM swimmers one of their last times to qualify for Texas Age Group Swimming, West Texas Championship and Junior National meets later this summer season. That makes the West Texas Invitational an important one for COM.

It's also significant because it's one of the two biggest COM hosts each year. And since the summer season is shorter than the winter season more rides on the summer meet.

"We host about 20 or 30 meets a year and this is our biggest one," Swendig said. "It's kind of our time to show everybody what we've

Mets take Wilson, A's grab Grieve in draft

■ Florida State hurler Paul Wilson was the first player taken in the amateur baseball draft Thursday.

By Hal Bock
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Four years ago, when baseball's amateur draft reached the 57th round, the Pittsburgh Pirates chose pitcher Paul Wilson out of Boone High School in Orlando, Fla.

Thanks, but no thanks, Wilson told them, choosing Florida State instead. "It wasn't the right time," Wilson said. "If they drafted me sooner, I might have gone. I wanted to play ball."

■ Baseball Draft

The wait paid off on Thursday when Wilson went No. 1, picked by the New York Mets in what club officials have termed the most important draft in club history. The Mets are in the middle of a major reconstruction and they hope Wilson can play a prominent role in the project. For his part, Wilson is anxious for the chance.

Waiting for today's College World Series opener against LSU in Omaha, Neb., Wilson learned the Mets had selected him. "I'm going to the Big Apple," he said, clapping his hands. "Being No. 1 makes it a little bit sweeter."

Signing him may not be a major problem for New York. "There will be some negotiations, but I don't think it'll last that long," the 21-year-old said. "I don't plan on holding out. I want to play ball."

Wilson is 12-5 with a 2.08 earned run average. Equipped with a 95-mph fastball, he has 154 strikeouts in 134 innings this season that left little doubt about his status as the No. 1 prospect.

Ben Grieve (left) and his father Tom Grieve became the first two-generation, first round draft picks in the amateur draft Thursday. Ben was the second overall pick by the Oakland A's Thursday. Tom was first pick by the Washington Senators in 1966.

"There were hints beginning about 1½ months ago, but nothing concrete," Wilson said. "They kept me at a safe distance. That's why it feels so good."

Wilson got the call early Thursday. "They woke me up," he said. "It was a good wakeup call. I didn't do much sleeping."

After the Mets chose Wilson, Oakland selected high school outfielder Ben Grieve from Martin High School in Arlington, Texas. Grieve, the son of Texas Rangers general manager Tom Grieve, batted .485 with three home runs and 11 RBIs in this season and was rated the high school prospect closest to the majors by Baseball America.

When the A's picked Grieve, that left Kent University right-hander Dustin Hermanson available for San Diego. Hermanson, also 21, was 5-4 with a 2.69 ERA this season and had a higher rating than Wilson with the Major League Scouting Bureau.

Arizona State third baseman Antone Williamson went next, drafted by Milwaukee after batting .356 with 13 home runs and 67 RBIs. Then Florida picked high school shortstop Josh Booty from Shreveport, La. Booty hit .429 with 12 home runs and 36 RBIs.

California followed, selecting high

Angels 'pen stinks in loss

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Staff Writer

Angels pitching coach Kernan Ronan found himself battling mixed emotions after Midland's pitching performance Thursday night at Christensen Stadium.

After pitching his first career no-hitter, Shad Williams pitched a shutout through seven innings despite playing in only his second game after coming off an ankle injury.

But a 90-pitch limit forced Williams out of the game after the seventh and the Angels' 3-0 lead was left in the hands of the Midland bullpen. That's when a good day turned into bad right before Ronan's eyes.

After connecting for only three hits in the first seven, the San Antonio Missions erupted in the last two and scored five runs to rally in the eighth and four more to break a tie in the ninth and blew past four Angels relievers for a 9-5 win.

The San Antonio win snapped a three-game Angels winning streak, broke Midland's seven-game home winning streak and narrowed Midland's five-game series lead to 2-1.

El Paso defeated Wichita and increased its first-place Western Division lead to nine games. Midland is still four games ahead of San Antonio for second place.

"Shad competed very well without having his good stuff," Ronan said about the seven innings of shutout ball. "His pitches weren't as sharp as they were (in the no-hitter) but he competed well and kept himself in the game.

"He's really exceeded all my expectations," he said.

With the scoreless innings, Williams has now gone 21 consecutive innings without allowing a run. And after the no-hitter on Saturday, Williams treated the team to a celebration cake.

But what turned out to be a strong night for Williams — who should throw 100-110 pitches in his next start — turned out to be a very bad night for his relievers.

"I would have to agree with that assessment," Ronan said. "They're not happy about their performances but I just have to tell them, 'Hey, you're going to have to get something positive from this. And next time, I'll put you in the same situation.'"

The final reliever, Shawn Purdy, picked up the loss to fall to 0-6 for the season. But all but one of the four relievers was battered around but the suddenly hot-hitting Missions.

Julian Heredia started the eighth and had the second-best earned-run average on the team (2.08) behind Williams (1.42) going into the game. But a home run by leadoff batter Henry Blanco opened up a can of worms for Midland. After striking out the next batter, Heredia gave three straight singles to load the bases.

That's when Ron Watson got the call. He struck out another with the bases loaded, but then walked in two runs to

Rangers even series with Canucks, 3-1

By Mike Nadel
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Glenn Anderson finished what Mark Messier started as two of the best clutch players in hockey history combined to keep the New York Rangers from almost certain doom.

Messier stole the puck, got goalie Kirk McLean out of position and fed Anderson for a shorthanded goal midway through the second period and the Rangers held on to beat the Vancouver Canucks 3-1 Thursday night to pull even after two games of the Stanley Cup Finals.

Games 3 and 4 are at Vancouver on Saturday and Tuesday before the best-of-7 series returns to Madison Square Garden for Game 5.

STEERS: Big Spring aims at state berth

(From 1C)

The win was reminiscent of the Steers' 6-5 comeback triumph over Lamesa in the Region I championship two years ago at Angels Stadium, a game Big Spring also won on the last play. But Doe isn't leaning on 1992 accomplishments this year.

"We're just dwelling on the task at hand," Doe said. "We're not saying anything about going back to state."

The task at hand is 21-9 Brewer, a team with deep pitching like the Steers but more of a peck-away offense.

"We're pretty much a contact hitting ball club," said six-year Brewer coach John Herrick. "We've got a few guys with some power but for the most part we're line drive (hitters)."

Maybe the biggest obstacle the Bears had to overcome this season was poison ivy. Five starters came in contact with the plant over spring break and missed a complete tournament. The Bears struggled to recover, itching for wins but entering District 6-4A play at around .500.

Since then the Bears have won 14 and lost only one, including five straight in the playoffs. They beat Big Spring's District 4-5A winner Sweetwater 5-2 in a region quarterfinal on a combined two-hitter by J.C. Conyers and Matt Chapman.

Conyers and Chapman are the Bears aces. They'll start the first two games against Big Spring with Craig Fowles set for Game 3.

Conyers (7-3) is a left-handed senior with a fastball that has accounted for over 100 strike outs this year. Chapman's fastball doesn't have the pop of Conyer's, but his repertoire includes a knuckleball. He is 10-1.

Brewer suits up much younger players than the Steers. They have four seniors on their roster and only two senior position players starting. But Herrick said they have plenty of experience for their age.

"You can't really call them sophomores and juniors because they've played so many ball games ... they've matured," Herrick said.

The Bears have only three home runs this year. Their offensive leaders are Conyers and second baseman Jason Stockton, who both hit over .400 coming into the playoffs.

Doe will start either Frankie Martinez (9-3) or Todd Parrish (8-2) Friday.

And if the Steers continue to play like seniors who aren't quite ready to do their own thing, they may end up in Austin June 9 and 10 for their second state tournament appearance in three years.

Duo scorch Texas course for NCAA lead

■ Texas in sixth place after first round of NCAA Men's Golf Championship.

MCKINNEY (AP) — Stanford junior Notah Begay III set a course-record 62 to match one NCAA mark and tie Georgia Tech's Mikko Rantanen for the individual lead after Thursday's second round of NCAA Division I Men's Golf Championships.

Begay's 10-birdie dream round equalled the 62 by Arizona's Robert Gamez in 1988. Begay's 10-under effort was a tournament record, bettering the nine-under scores by Arizona State's Phil Mickelson in 1992 and Oklahoma's Jim Begwin in 1984.

Begay also set the all-time low score of 65 for a competitive round over the Pete Dye-designed Stonebridge Country Club course and set a Stanford record.

"This was the best day of my life, as far as golf is concerned. It wasn't a perfect round, but it was close," said Begay of Albuquerque, N.M. "I don't think I've ever played that well."

Begay and Rantanen are deadlocked in the medalist race with 36-hole totals of 134, three shots ahead of Oklahoma State's Alan Bratton.

UNLV's Chris Riley, Justin Leonard of the University of Texas and Christian Chernock of host Southern Methodist are at 139.

The tournament continues through Saturday at the par-72 course north of Dallas.

After the second round, the 30-team field was cut to the top 15, plus the top three individuals from the schools that failed to qualify.

Following Begay's lead, Stanford took over the team lead, shooting a 15-under 273, a school record by six shots after opening with a 292 on Wednesday. Stanford stands at 565, two better than Arkansas.

Florida and Georgia Tech are at 570. Top-seeded Oklahoma State remains in the picture at 572, seven off the pace. The Cowboys got a five-under 67 from Bratton Thursday for a two-under 286.

Arkansas, the first-round leader by seven shots over OSU, stayed in contention with a par 288 on Thursday.

The Longhorns are tied for sixth with UNLV at 574.

SWIM: About 80 COM swimmers to compete

got."

The COM coach said his team will win the meet. About 80 COM swimmers have qualified, significantly more than swim in out of town meets. Two hundred area swimmers will participate.

The meet is COM's second of the summer or long-course, season, in which teams compete in 50-meter pools. Most of the 50-meter pools, like Doug Russell, are outdoors.

Unlike most swim meets, the West Texas Invitational will have timed finals. No preliminary or final races are conducted. Winners are determined purely from times recorded in the different heats.

The summer meet has more participation than any COM meet with the possible exception of the winter invitational.

"Our winter invitational probably draws more swimmers because our summer invitational comes at a time of year when a lot of kids are going on summer vacation," said West Texas meet director Steve Robichaud.

Age groups are from eight-and-under to 15-and-up. The meet will run until about 9 p.m. Friday, 3 p.m. Saturday and 2 p.m. Sunday.

"It's going to be a good meet for us just because it's our home pool," Swendig said.

Local Activities sponsored by area youth groups.

It's all on the Y-Line. And it's all free.

The Y-Line will be entirely voiced by youths in Midland County. It's a service for young people. By young people.

One problem -- we need your help. In order to make the Y-Line as successful as many youths have said they foresee it, the Y-Line is in need of sponsors to help underwrite operating costs. Sponsorships are available beginning for as little as $100 per month.

A $100 sponsorship will give you the opportunity to display your company's support of our youth in a weekly directory publicizing the Y-Line in the Reporter-Telegram; a $350 sponsorship will get you the same directory ad, plus an on-line sponsorship of one of the 25 categories available on the Y-Line.

For more information on how you can help, call Jimmy Patterson at 687-8852.

Help Midland's youth help themselves.

BOISE, Idaho — Florida freshman Jeremy Stallings of Stanton failed to make the finals here Wednesday in the NCAA men's 800 meters.

Stallings placed sixth in his heat with a 1:50.92, failing to make the top eight that advanced to the finals.

This was Stallings first trip to the NCAA Track and Field Championships.

The NCAA qualifying results in the men's 800 meters Wednesday.

Heat 1—1. Alex Morgan, George Mason, 1:48.55. 2. Brandon Rock, Nevada, 1:48.60. 3. Ronald Thorne, Miami-Florida, 1:49.44. 4. Albert Royster, Seton Hall, 1:49.70. 5. Greg Rhymer, Eastern Michigan, 1:49.81. 6. David Krummenacker, Georgia Tech, 1:50.21. 7. Joey Woody, Northern Iowa, 2:05.27.

Heat 2—1. Jose Parrilla, Tennessee, 1:47.65. 2. Joseph Chapeiro, Iowa State, 1:47.91. 3. Shaun Benefield, Georgia, 1:48.31. 4. Mario Vernon Watson, George Mason, 1:48.72. 5. Simon Bowen, George Mason, 1:48.88. 6. Jeremy Stallings, Florida, 1:50.92. 7. Iamont Vaughn, Kentucky, 1:53.54.

Heat 3—1. Marko Koers, Illinois, 1:47.44. 2. Conrad Nichols, Georgia Tech, 1:48.18. 3. Tommy Asinga, Eastern Michigan, 1:48.21. 4. Elliott Gaskins, Temple, 1:48.51. 5. Warner Sherman, Wake Forest, 1:48.23. 6. Donnell Johnson, Florida, 1:48.24.

Elder aces Hogan's No. 22

Tom Elder shot a hole-in-one Thursday at Hogan Park Golf Course. He fired the ace on the 140-yard No. 22 hole using an 8-iron. Witnesses were Mary Elder, Les Preese and Gloria Preese.

Easterner wins NCAA heptathlon

■ SWC duo records year's fastest time in 400 meter prelims Thursday.

■ NCAA Track and Field

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Diane Guthrie of George Mason on Thursday night became the first athlete from an Eastern school to win the heptathlon at the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships.

She also became the first to win a multi-event title and an individual championship in meet history, adding the heptathlon to the long jump crowns she won at the 1991 NCAA indoor and outdoor meets when she was a freshman.

Guthrie, who finished third in the long jump Wednesday night, easily won the multi-event competition, accumulating 6,032 points, the best by a collegian this year, in the two-day competition at Boise State's Bronco Stadium.

The 22-year-old Jamaican barely missed her personal best of 6,041 points.

In the seven-event competition, she won two events — the long jump at 21 feet, 1¾ inches, and the javelin at 149-3 — tied for first in the high jump at 5-10½ and was second in the shot put at 43-5.

Her shot put in Wednesday's third event moved her into the lead for good, and she finished the first day's four events with an advantage of 25 points over defending champion Kelly Blair of Oregon.

When Guthrie opened the second day with her big long jump and Blair went only 19-8¼, it was over. Blair finished a distant second with 5,877 points.

In other events, Indiana State sprint star Holli Hyche showed she is again on target for a second consecutive double in the women's 100 and 200 meters.

She won her quarterfinal heat in 11.09 seconds, the third fastest time in the world this year, after winning her quarterfinal heat in the 200 Wednesday night in 22.41, fourth best in the world.

Hyche also has won the 55-meter and 200-meter dashes in each of the last two NCAA indoor championships, and if she wins both outdoor races again, she would be the first to sweep the indoor and outdoor sprints for two straight years.

"I didn't think I was going that fast, but I guess I was," Hyche said. "I guess it means I can run faster in the final."

Hyche will run the 100 and 200 semifinals Friday night, and both finals Saturday.

LSU's Cheryl Taplin, the co-world leader this year at 11.07, and Southern Cal's Inger Miller, the two biggest challengers to Hyche, won their heats, but were not nearly as impressive. Taplin was timed in 11.30 and Miller in 11.46.

Baylor's Tony Miller and Rice's Chris Jones won their semifinal heats in the men's 400 in 45.27, the fastest by Division I collegians this year, but the big surprise was the failure of defending champion Calvin Davis of Arkansas to advance to Saturday's final. Davis, also the NCAA indoor champion, finished fourth in his heat in 45.87, far off his career-best of 45.04.

"I had a hard time picking up the leader and I misjudged it," said Davis, who ran in Jones' heat. "They were farther out than I thought."

Baylor's Deon Minor won the other heat in 45.35.

LSU's Danyel Mitchell outclassed the field in winning the women's discus title for the second straight year. Mitchell had the three best throws in the competition, winning with a heave of 193-10 on her first attempt.

Alana Preston of Tennessee finished second at 173-7, more than 20 feet behind Mitchell, and Melisa Weis of Colorado was third at 173-3.

DRAFT: Angels grab two-sport star in first round

school outfielder McKay Christensen from Fresno, Calif. Christensen a running back who scored 44 touchdowns last season, has signed to play football at Brigham Young and had advised all major league teams that he plans to begin a two-year Mormon mission either this summer or after the fall semester.

Left-handed pitcher Doug Million from Sarasota, Fla., High School went next to Colorado. Million was 12-2 with a 1.21 ERA this season. Minnesota then chose LSU second baseman Todd Walker, who hit .380 with 12 homers and 56 RBIs this season. Then Cincinnati took left-hander C.J. Nitkowski from St. John's, a program that has sent lefties Frank Viola and John Franco to the majors.

Jaret Wright, a right-handed high school pitcher from Anaheim, Calif. whose father, Clyde, pitched for California, Milwaukee and Texas, went next to Cleveland, followed by third baseman-outfielder Mark Farris from Angleton, Texas, High Schoool, who was picked by Pittsburgh.

Georgia Tech supplied two of the next three picks — shortstop Nomar Garciaparra, chosen by Boston, and catcher Jason Varitek, selected by Seattle. They were sandwiched by high school catcher Paul Konerko from Scottsdale, Ariz., who was chosen by Los Angeles.

The remainder of the first round went this way:

Chicago Cubs, right-handed pitcher Jayson Peterson, East HS, Denver; Kansas City, first baseman Matt Smith, Grants Pass HS, Grants Pass, Ore.; Houston, catcher Ramon Castro, Rivera HS, Vega Baja, Puerto Rico; Detroit, right-handed pitcher Cade Gaspar, Pepperdine University; St. Louis, left-handed pitcher Bret Wagner, Wake Forest University; New York Mets (from Baltimore), first baseman Terrence Long, Stanhope Elmore HS, Millbrook, Ala.

Montreal, shortstop Hiram Bocachica, Rexville HS, Bayamon, Puerto Rico; Sanm Francisco (from Texas) outfielder Dante Powell, Cal State-Fullerton; Philadelphia, right-handed pitcher Carlton Loewer, Mississippi State University; New York Yankees, first baseman Brian Buchanan, University of Virginia; Houston (from San Francisco) right-handed pitcher-first baseman Scott Elarton; Lamar HS, Lamar, Colo.; Chicago White Sox, catcher Mark Johnson, Warner Robins HS, Warner Robins Ga.; Atlanta, right-handed pitcher Jacob Shumate, Hartsville HS, Hartsville, S.C.; Toronto, shortstop Kevin Witt, Bishop Kenny HS, Jacksonville, Fla.

Ripken hits home run, 4 RBI in Orioles win

Associated Press

■ Baseball Roundup

CHICAGO — Danny Jackson pitched four-hit ball over eight innings in his 100th career win Thursday night to lead the Philadelphia Phillies to a 4-2 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Jackson (7-1) gave up two singles to Mark Parent and a home run and a double to Shawon Dunston. Jackson, who ranks among the National League leaders in several categories, including ERA, struck out four and walked one.

Doug Jones gave up one hit in the ninth and earned his 13th save. Anthony Young (3-4) took the loss, giving up six hits and walking six. He struck out four.

Back-to-back doubles by Pete Incaviglia and Jim Eisenreich in the second gave the Phillies a 1-0 lead. Dunston tied it with one out in the fourth, hitting the first pitch from Jackson for his fourth homer.

Orioles 11, Tigers 5

BALTIMORE — Cal Ripken Jr. homered and drove in four runs and rookie right-hander Scott Klingenbeck won his major-league debut, as Baltimore broke a three-game losing streak by beating Detroit.

Klingenbeck (1-0) was recalled from the Double-A Bowie Baysox when a strained groin forced Ben McDonald to miss his first start after 80 straight turns. Klingenbeck pitched seven innings and gave up four runs on six hits, walked four and struck out five.

Ripken's four RBI on a single and three-run homer came after the game was tied 4-4.

The victory helped the Orioles avert a four-game sweep at the hand of the Tigers. Detroit could have reached .500 for the first time this season, but instead had a four-game winning streak snapped..

Tigers left-hander Bill Krueger (0-2), making only his second start of the season, lasted only two innings plus two batters. He gave up five runs on five hits.

ANGELS: Bullpen squanders big lead

(From 1C)

tie the game at 3-3. A throwing error by third baseman Chris Smith gave the Missions a 5-3 lead. Jerry Nielsen was then brought in and struck out Blanco for the final out.

Vernon Spearman, who was 3-for-4 and scored two runs for San Antonio, said it took the Missions a little while to warm up. Having Williams out of the game, however, may have helped a little.

"We were doing pretty good at the plate and we were hitting some balls hard, but we just weren't getting the breaks," Spearman said. "Fortunately, we were able to come up against their relievers and we were able to capitalize."

Midland tied the game at 5-5 in the eighth after J.D. Ramirez, who has now hit in 18-of-19 games, and Mark Sweeney both singled to start the inning. Then with one out, designated hitter Ty Boykin hit a sacrifice fly to right field to score Ramirez. Emmitt Cohick then got his third RBI of the night with a double to score Sweeney.

Purdy, however, gave up four runs in the ninth, all earned, on four hits and three walks.

Behind Williams, the Angels built a 3-0 lead with one run each in the second, third and fourth innings. Cohick got his first RBI of the night with a two-out double in the second to score Sweeney.

In the third, Sweeney singled a line drive up the gap at second base to score Tim Harkrider, who reached on a walk and advanced to second on a Ramirez single.

Cohick picked up his second RBI with a single in the fourth to score Pritchett and give the Angels the lead which would hold through Williams stint on the mound.

ANGEL NOTES: First baseman Chris Pritchett made his return after a suffering a knee injury on Midland's last road trip and made two sparkling line drive grabs. Pritchett has been available for the last couple of days but saw his first action Thursday, when he also got a hit and scored a run for the Angels...Dom Johnson (3-1, 4.55) will be on the mound for Midland today at 7 p.m. while David Pyc (1-3, 4.45) will pitch for San Antonio in the fourth game of the series...The Texas League roster for the Texas League-Mexican League All-Star game will be announced today. Halos gamble early in draft

By Scott Wolf
N.Y. Times News Service

ANAHEIM, Calif. — The Angels' recent penchant for surprise moves — see Buck Rodgers, Marcel Lachemann — continued Thursday when the team ignored conventional wisdom by drafting high school outfielder McKay Christensen of Clovis, Calif., with the No.6 pick overall in baseball's amateur draft.

The move raised eyebrows because prior to the draft, indications were that the Angels would pick an accomplished college pitcher, much like last season when they selected left-hander Brian Anderson with the third pick.

Assistant vice president of scouting and player personnel Bob Fontaine admitted the Angels were intent on selecting a right-handed pitcher, possibly Pepperdine's Cade Gaspar, as late as Wednesday afternoon.

"We decided to go in a different direction," Fontaine said.

Christensen, officially listed at 5-foot-11, 175 pounds, already had the Angels on their heels Thursday by missing a scheduled conference call with reporters.

Another possible doubt for the Angels was that Christensen underwent major reconstructive surgery for a torn knee ligament suffered his sophomore year but returned in time to play baseball his junior year.

A running back on Clovis West's footba'l team, Christensen tied a Northern California record last year with 44 touchdowns.

Among the Angels' other picks Thursday was UC Davis shortstop Greg Morris (6-4, 210). Morris, who will switch to third base.

'Wild Thing' ponders Texas, retirement

FORT WORTH (AP) — Mitch Williams has told a newspaper that he either will sign to pitch for the Texas Rangers or retire from baseball.

The "Wild Thing" spoke from his Hico ranch one day after the Houston Astros placed the 29-year old left-handed reliever on waivers for the purpose of giving him his unconditional release.

"The only way I would come back is if it's with the Rangers," Williams told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram for its Thursday editions. "I'm going to stay close to home. If I could play in Arlington, I could commute from here."

OPEN: Pierce slams Graf in semis

the first French woman to reach the final in Paris since Francoise Durr in 1967. She has done it while losing only 10 games in six matches, a modern-era French Open record.

Pierce's opponent in the final will be second-seeded Arantxa Sanchez Vicario, who beat No. 3 Conchita Martinez 6-3, 6-1 in an all-Spanish semifinal that included 48 unforced errors by the loser. Saturday's match will be only the second of the last 29 Grand Slam finals without either Graf or Monica Seles.

Since Seles left the tour after being stabbed in April 1993, Graf has dominated women's tennis with almost-boring regularity. She came into the French Open with a 1994 record of 42-1 and victories in six of seven tournaments.

Graf had lamented that other players hadn't improved their games to give her more of a challenge. But she felt no enjoyment against Pierce.

"No, not at all," said Graf, who committed 27 unforced errors. "There was respect for the way she was playing, but it has been difficult for me to enjoy tennis in the last few weeks. I haven't really played very well. My confidence wasn't as high. I just didn't have a good feeling on the court."

Graf offered praise for Pierce's game, saying she hits harder than Seles.

"She played very, very well today," Graf said. "She attacked the ball, took the ball early and played very deep. There was very little I could do."

Graf said Pierce's rise was a plus for women's tennis.

"It has definitely been very healthy, especially because she is French and it's exciting for the spectators and for television," she said. "I think it's a good thing, although it's difficult for me to say that right now."

But Graf said it was too early to consider Pierce as a long-term challenger.

"She seems very strong in this tournament, but you have to take the results of all the year and they haven't been all the way up there. I think you just have to give her some more time for that."

"I hope so," Pierce said when asked whether the victory marked the start of a long rivalry with Graf. "That would be something fun for me."

From the start of the match Pierce looked relaxed and Graf was tight. Hitting out with abandon, Pierce broke in the first game with two straight forehand return winners.

Pierce, who broke again for a 4-1 lead, fell behind 0-40 as she served for the set. But she saved all three break points and closed out the set with a backhand winner.

TOUR OF DUTY

Think firefighters get hot on the job? Wait til we ride 500 miles around West Texas in June!

Yes, it's crazy, but it's also for a good cause - we're raising money for the Odessa Charity Fund, which supports the Children's Miracle Network, March of Dimes, the American Heart Association, Easter Seals and the American Cancer Society.

As firefighters we are reminded every day of the good work these organizations provide to the citizens of Odessa.

You can help us support them! Join us (for all or part of the trip) June 3 at 9 a.m. as we head out from Central Fire Station to Brownfield, then Plainview, Lubbock, Colorado City and Odessa on our five-day tour. Or support a rider by pledging a donation. Either way, it's a great way to make a difference!

Daniel, Gibson fire 67s to lead Olds

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Beth Daniel and Ellie Gibson each shot 67 Thursday to share the lead after the opening round of the $600,000 LPGA Oldsmobile Classic at Walnut Hills Country Club.

The two led the field of 144 players, each shooting 5-under par on the 6,166-yard course.

Daniel, who won the Corning Classic two weeks ago, rallied with three straight birdies and four in five holes on the back nine.

"I definitely had to do some scrambling," Daniel said. "I got myself 1-over real quick, but I putted very well today. I'm very happy to start 5-under. I have been working on my swing in the off-season and I'm hitting the ball much better this year."

Lisa Kiggens, Amy Benz, Meg Mallon, Nancy Ramsbottom and Marianne Morris were behing by a stroke at 68.

Helen Alfredsson, Sherri Stenhauer and Cindy Figg-Currier were two strokes back. A foursome that includes LPGA Hall of Famer Pat Bradley was three strokes off the pace at 2-under.

"I'm feeling pretty good now because I am starting to make some putts," said Gibson, who missed the cut in the first two Olds Classics. "I think if the weather is nice, the scores will be lower than in the past."

More Sports/12C

The tournament record at the three-year-old Oldsmobile Classic is a 12-under 276 by Barb Mucha two years ago.

Morris opened by playing the back nine at even-par. She birdied holes five and six, eagled seven and birdied No. 8.

"It was a good day for me," Morris said. "I made a couple of bogeys but I never got upset about it. Everything fell into place."

Defending champion Jane Geddes posted a 2-over 38 on the front nine on her way to a 1-under 71.

■ TV: Kemper Open, 3 p.m., USA.

POTOMAC, Md. (AP) — The huge gallery that followed John Daly and Phil Mickelson were treated to a dazzling display of golf by the first-round leader of the Kemper Open — Mark Brooks.

Brooks, playing in a threesome with two of the finest young players on the PGA Tour, shot a 6-under-par 65 Thursday for a three-stroke lead over three players.

His bogey-free round included three straight birdies that enabled him to pull away from the field.

When asked if he felt out of place before a crowd obviously more interested in his prestigious partners, Brooks said: "I'm leading the tournament. They were lucky to get paired with me, I guess."

Mickelson, playing in his second tournament since he broke his leg in a skiing accident in March, was one of nine players at 70. Daly, one of the longest hitters in the sport, shot a 73.

Wayne Levi, Ed Dougherty and Bobby Watkins had 68s. Scott Hoch and Mark O'Meara were among five players at 69.

Lee Janzen, the 1993 U.S. Open winner, birdied four of the first five holes but fell victim to the fierce wind that tormented the late starters and finished with a 70.

Brooks has three career wins and is ranked 57th on the all-time money list. But the gallery that followed him around the course was more interested in Mickelson, a left-hander who reached $1 million in earnings quicker than anyone in history, and Daly, whose booming drives are almost legendary.

"I hit mine 245 yards and John goes around 320," Brooks said. "But we play completely different styles, and the only thing that's important is the score."

Brooks, starting on the back nine, sank 12-foot birdie putts on Nos. 13 and 17 to make the turn at 2-under. He then birdied No. 1 with a 10-foot putt, made an 18-foot birdie putt on 2 and birdied the par-3 third hole after hitting his tee shot within 12 feet of the pin.

Brooks put his approach shot on No. 4 beyond the green but saved par with a 15-foot putt.

"That was the pivotal shot of the day," he said.

Brooks missed an eagle by three feet on the par-5 6th hole before finishing with three straight pars. On a day in which he missed the fairway only twice, he was particularly pleased with his birdies on the three par-5s.

"The thing that's hard to do here is play without 5s," Brooks said. "I can probably count on my hands the number of rounds I've had without 5s."

Levi played the front nine in 1-under, then moved up the leaderboard with birdies on 10, 11 and 14. He dropped out of sole possession of second place by missing a short putt for par on 18.

"It's the way I've been playing all year," he said. "I can't finish the round."

Chief gauge flat; economy cools

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A flurry of government data is adding to mounting evidence that economic growth will be subdued this year, particularly as higher interest rates apply the brakes in the second half of 1994.

The Commerce Department said Thursday the Index of Leading Economic Indicators, the government's main forecasting gauge of economic activity, was unchanged in April.

While the index is at a record high, it has shown no advance in two of the three most recent reports after increasing for six straight months.

The Commerce Department also said orders to U.S. factories declined 0.1 percent in April, the second drop in three months.

And retail stores reported clothing sales were down in May, putting a crimp in what had been a good year so far for merchants.

Also, the Labor Department reported the number of first-time unemployment claims declined by 4,000 last week, the third consecutive weekly drop. But the four-week moving average of weekly claims was up to its highest level in more than three months.

"I see a pause. I don't necessarily believe the economy is in danger of stalling or going into recession," said economist Paul Kasriel with the Northern Trust Co. in Chicago.

"It may be a pause that refreshes," he said, noting the Federal Reserve has boosted short-term interest rates four times this year to keep growth in check and head off inflation. Slower economic expansion could influence the Fed to postpone further rate increases.

"It should be noted that the flattening of the economy came about before the May increase of interest rates," said Robert Barr of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. "The economy is in no danger of overheating."

The Index of Leading Economic Indicators remained at 101.2, matching the March figure, which was the highest since the government began keeping the gauge in 1948.

The index has risen in seven of the last nine months, remaining unchanged in February as well as April. The March advance was a healthy 0.7 percent as the economy began stirring after a winter slowdown.

Analysts expected April's flat report, which came in the wake of similar data earlier in the week.

They now are awaiting unemployment figures for May to be announced by the Labor Department today. Unemployment was at 6.4 percent in April and many economists expect it stayed there last month.

Five of the 11 components of the leading indicator index advanced, led by slower business delivery times that usually are a sign of increasing orders. Other advances were a growing inventory of durable goods, more building permits, higher raw material prices and a larger money supply.

On the negative side were lower stock prices, more weekly initial claims for unemployment insurance, fewer business orders for plant and equipment, a lower index of consumer expectations and fewer orders for consumer goods.

The length of the average work week was unchanged.

Despite the index rating for April, most economists expect the economy to grow at a healthy pace this spring — at an annual rate of about 4 percent — due to a rebound from a winter lull. Many predict it will slow to around a 3 percent rate in the second half of 1994.

The gross domestic product, which measures the nation's economic growth, expanded at a moderate 3 percent rate in the first three months of this year, held in check by the bitter weather and the California earthquake after booming in the last quarter of 1993.

The government's index of forward-looking statistics is designed to predict economic activity six to nine months down the road. Three straight moves by the index in the same direction are considered a good gauge of where the economy is headed.

Oil prices

NEW YORK — Prices for oil and refined products settled little changed Thursday after a government revision of gasoline supply estimates briefly sent prices sharply higher.

At midday the Department of Energy changed its estimate that gasoline supplies rose 800,000 barrels last week. Instead, the department said supplies fell by 3.4 million barrels. The news sent prices to their highs of the day.

The revision brought the gasoline supply estimate more in line with figures released Wednesday evening by the American Petroleum Institute, which tempered its impact.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in July settled at $18.23 per barrel, up 2 cents. July crude ranged between $18.08 and $18.50. Later delivery months were lower.

Natural gas prices increased as some anticipated higher demand to run electric generators and air conditioners in the South. Contracts for delivery in July settled 9.2 cents higher at $1.982 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Dollar advances

NEW YORK — The dollar advanced Thursday in global foreign exchange trading, strengthening on technical influences and a weaker German currency.

Gold prices rose domestically after falling overseas. On the Commodity Exchange in New York, gold for current delivery gained 70 cents a troy ounce to $384.20.

In New York, the dollar fetched 104.85 yen, up from 104.55 late Wednesday.

The British pound finished at $1.5105 in New York, down from 1.5170 Wednesday.

Other late dollar rates in New York compared to late Wednesday: 1.6535 marks, up from 1.6460; 1.4035 Swiss francs, up from 1.4015; 1.3863 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3866; 5.6465 French francs, up from 5.6270; 1,605 lire, up from 1,593.

On the New York Comex, silver for current delivery fetched $5.369, up from $5.333 Wednesday.

Dow slips

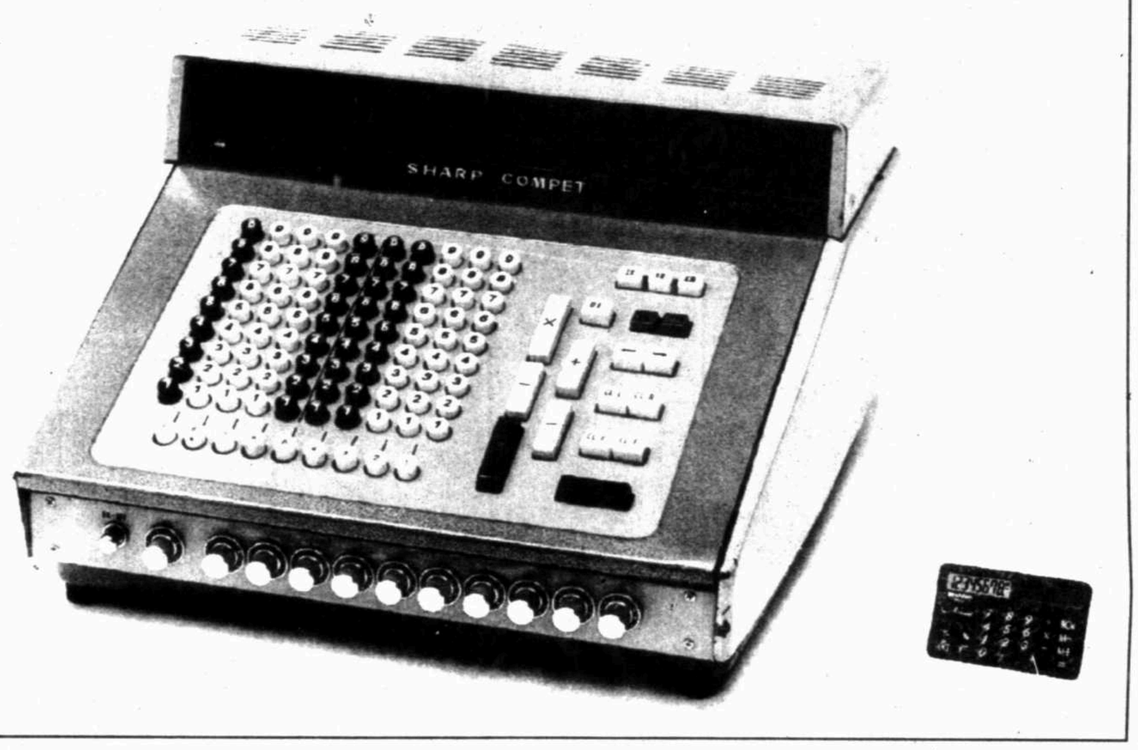

NEW YORK — Most stocks inched higher on Thursday, boosted by firmer bonds, but investors huddled in the sidelines ahead of Friday's employment data.

Stocks rose early in the session as bonds rallied in reaction to economic data that showed inflation cooling. But the Dow Jones industrial average of big blue chip stocks settled back in late morning when investors cooled their buying in anticipation of Friday's release of May nonfarm payroll and unemployment data.

The Dow closed the day at 3,758.99, down 1.84, after trading in a 15-point range all day.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by about 3 to 2 on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume totaled 271.12 million shares, down from 278.46 million on Wednesday.

Allied Signal wins $2 billion equipment contract with Boeing

N.Y. Times News Service

Allied Signal Inc. said Thursday that it had won an uncommon all-or-nothing contract to provide up to $2 billion worth of equipment for the Boeing Co.'s next generation 737 airliner.

The Sundstrand Corp., based in Rockford, Ill., came up the loser in the months-long competition to make auxiliary power units for Boeing's most popular narrow-body jetliner. The first plane is scheduled for delivery to Southwest Airlines in October 1997.

The auxiliary power unit is a critical component that provides electrical power to the plane while it is on the ground and begins its ascent. The units are to be located in the 737's tail.

Industry analysts said the award affirms that Allied Signal, a diversified manufacturer based in Morristown, N.J., has paid heed to glitches in quality, technology and service that hurt the company in the late 1980s.

Allied Signal stock closed Thursday on the New York Stock Exchange at $35.375, up 62.5 cents.

"Allied Signal has corrected the problems that gave Sundstrand an opportunity and has given Boeing the confidence to remain reliant on Allied Signal," said Eli S. Lustgarten, an aerospace analyst for Paine Webber Inc.

"Allied's win demonstrates that its product line and strategy of satisfying customers is paying off," said Howard A. Rubel, an analyst with Goldman, Sachs & Co.

The contract differs from previous ones in that the winner's product becomes standard equipment on the 2,000 737s expected to be built by Boeing over the next 20 years. Previously, airline customers could select power units made by either Allied or Sundstrand, said Steve Thieme, a Boeing spokesman in Renton, Wash.

Having a single supplier helps Boeing competitively, Thieme said.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Mutual funds spell out charges in prospectus

By Bill Doyle

Q: An advertising circular for a financial newsletter arrived in the mail recently and is causing all kinds of problems at our house. The newsletter's female writer-editor obviously favors buying individual stocks over investing in mutual funds.

Doyle

That's OK. Everyone is entitled to his or her own opinion. But this woman makes accusations I find hard to believe.

She claims, "Many (mutual) funds carry hidden charges such as management fees and back-end redemption fees as high as 5 percent. Funds with so-called 12b-1 plans use 1 percent of your money to pay for advertising and other expenses. Don't be fooled. Even many 'no-loads' have concealed fees."

My wife takes this as gospel. She wants to cash our mutual fund shares, but she promised to wait until she sees your reply to this letter. Can you refute this woman's allegations?

A: Easily. There are absolutely no "hidden" charges at any of this nation's mutual funds. All expenses must be listed and explained in each fund's prospectus.

There was a time when mutual funds could hide — or, at least, fudge — expenses such as that newsletter rails about. But the Securities and Exchange Commission put an end to that some years ago. Besides spelling out those charges, funds levying them no longer can claim to be "no-load" funds.

The SEC requires every mutual fund prospectus to carry a fee table showing all transaction expenses and operating expenses, as well as a hypothetical example of the expenses a shareholder would pay on a $1,000 investment over one, three, five and 10 years.

Even though it makes brokers and other salespeople unhappy, this column has long warned against both front and rear sales loads and 12b-1 fees, which enrich sellers of fund shares — not investors who buy those shares.

There are plenty of true no-load funds available.

Q: I own 5,731 shares of a mutual fund headquartered in the San Francisco Bay area, having purchased my first shares in 1968. From that time until recently, the fund's prospectus had no mention of 12b-1.

In March of this year, they sent me a proxy for the annual shareholders' meeting, asking for approval of a 12b-1 plan. I voted yes but later phoned to revoke my proxy. I was told it was too late, as the 12b-1 proposal had been approved by a majority of shareholders.

Should I keep this investment or cash in my fund shares?

A: Hang on, at least for a while. If that fund's per-share net asset value heads downhill faster than mutual funds with similar investment objectives, it could mean the constant drain of 12b-1 fees is rapidly reducing the fund's total assets, the per-share NAV and the value of your investment.

If that happens, it will be time to redeem your shares and move your money to some investment that doesn't levy constant asset-depleting charges.

It always amazes me that the majority of shareholders invariably vote "yes" on proposals by fund management, even though approval will cost shareholders money.

Q: I notice that preferred stocks seem to pay higher dividends than regular stocks. Is there a mutual fund that holds just preferred stocks?

A: No. Some mutual funds with income as their investment objective hold preferred stocks, bonds and other fixed-income securities in their investment portfolios. But none holds only preferreds.

A straight preferred stock is sort of a hybrid security — a cross between common stock (because it represents ownership in a company) and a bond (because most preferreds pay the same dividend year after year).

On the flip side, preferreds have little potential for gaining in value and — unlike bonds — have no maturity dates.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

FRIDAY, JUNE 3, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You get a number of chances to advance your career. Financial worries should soon be a thing of the past! Nothing makes you happier than winning a battle of wits. Do not let unethical behavior go unchallenged. Romance will produce both unusual contentment and some new personal goals. Show your deep commitment to romantic partner.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: poet Allen Ginsberg, legendary dancer Josephine Baker, golfer Hale Irwin Jr., singer Deniece Williams.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Curb the urge to argue with those who act petty. Your frugality pays off when family members begin to follow your example. Show appreciation for partner's considerate attitude.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Make the most of an unusual financial opportunity. Mate or business partner backs you to the hilt. A well-intentioned friend or loved one could mess up your plans for the evening. Stay home!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Experts you meet at social events could pass along valuable information. Business and friendship mix beautifully. Go ahead and put your cards on the table.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Avoid asking favors during morning hours when others are involved with their own concerns. Afternoon will find people in a more receptive mood.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Garner support for a family project through quiet, thoughtful discussion. A loved one's enthusiasm is almost always contagious. You would be wise to enlist this person's assistance in endorsing your ideas. Be subtle.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An older person becomes an ally. A family member applauds your choice of a new partner. Enroll in high-tech courses to improve your earning potential.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Keep calm today. You will need your wits about you when dealing with a difficult executive. Financial matters enjoy favorable influences. Focus on work sure to turn a profit. Get out and socialize tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Begin the day in a cheerful, positive way, keeping any suspicions to yourself. Be cautious if you go out with a group this evening. Do nothing to jeopardize a friendship. Loyalty pays big dividends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your domestic responsibilities are lightened. Romantic partner is entirely supportive of a new personal goal. A surprise gift could make this evening very special. A sense of humor serves you well when dealing with youngsters.

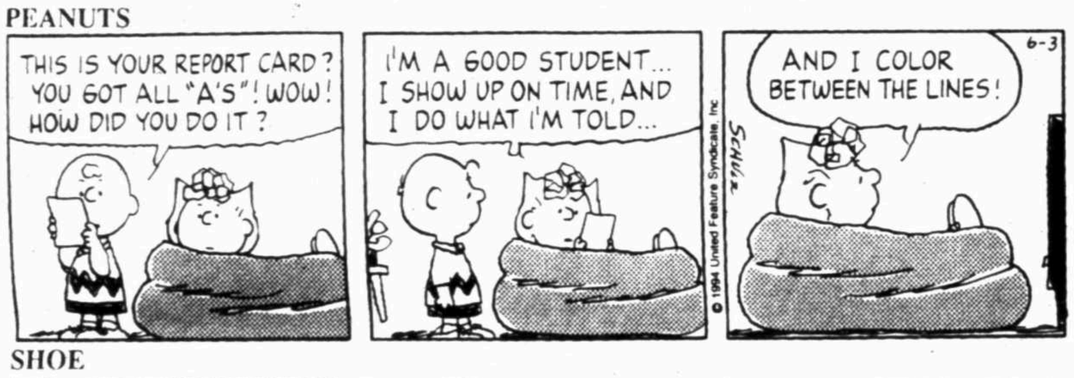

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Happily, a financial goal is within easy reach. Celebrate a recent success without breaking the bank. Close friends and loved ones are in your corner. Romantic ties deepen. Some couples set the date!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone is putting you to a test; you pass with flying colors! Previously obtained information will help you solve a current puzzle. An old friend comes to your rescue when the chips are down.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone special will help make this a red-letter day. Refuse to settle for anything less than the best. Proceed full speed ahead with your professional or personal goals. Pull out all the stops!

TODAY'S CHILDREN are quick-witted, outgoing and eager to make a name for themselves. In school or work, these bright youngsters will do best when given the opportunity to make full use of their potential. Their way with words makes them superior writers and salespeople.

Opening lead: King of ♠

It is not necessary to know the exact mathematics of suit combinations to be a good declarer. However, you do need to know which possibilities are better to make an educated choice.

West could not afford a takeout double of one heart because a two-club response would have been impossible to handle, hence the overcall on a four-card suit. North judged well to support hearts with a doubleton king and a reasonable four-heart contract was reached.

West led the king of spades, then shifted to a trump. Since there was no point to declarer leading a spade (the defenders would win and remove dummy's remaining trump), declarer elected to bank everything on the club finesse. The second trick was won in dummy, three more rounds of trumps were drawn and a club was led to the jack. When that lost to the queen, the defenders cashed two more spade tricks for a one-trick set.

Chances of a finesse succeeding are 50 percent; chances of five missing cards breaking 3-2 are almost 68 percent. Had declarer gone for the better line the contract would have succeeded.

After winning the trump shift in dummy, declarer should immediately lead a low club. If the defenders win and revert to spades, the third round of the suit can be ruffed with the board's last trump. Better defense is for East to shift to a diamond. Declarer must spurn the finesse in favor of rising with the ace, drawing the outstanding trumps and then relying on a 3-2 club split to take 10 tricks—five trumps, four clubs and the ace of diamonds.

Whitney Houston and Bobby Brown, above, are being sued for more than $4.4 million

Couple's lawsuit claims threats by Bobby, Whitney bodyguard

MORRISTOWN, N.J. — A couple claims in a lawsuit that they were threatened by a bodyguard for Whitney Houston and Bobby Brown after videotaping near the singers in Puerto Rico.

Barry and Alice Baum of Suffolk County, N.Y., seek more than $4.4 million from the entertainers over the alleged confrontation at a resort April 26.

The bodyguard, identified in court papers as "Vernon Doe," demanded Baum stop videotaping and erase the tape in his recorder, the lawsuit said. The bodyguard allegedly had a wooden stick and threatened to beat Baum if he didn't comply. Baum erased the tape.

Houston and Brown directed the bodyguard to accost Baum, according to the Superior Court lawsuit filed Wednesday.

Attorneys for Houston and Brown, who live in Morris County, denied the incident occurred.

NEW YORK — Billie Dove, a beauty from the silent screen, starred with Douglas Fairbanks in one of his most famous pictures, "The Black Pirate." But that's not her kissing Fairbanks in the closing scene.

Fairbanks' wife, Mary Pickford, wouldn't stand for such a thing, the 90-ish Miss Dove said.

"It was Mary with my wig on, but you couldn't tell from that far away," she said in the June issue of Classic Images, a magazine for old-film fans.

"The Black Pirate," made in 1926, was notable as an early all-Technicolor production. Miss Dove didn't think the part of the heroine gave her much to do. "I just stood around and looked scared," she said.

Miss Dove last appeared in a film in 1932, not counting a bit part in the 1962 "Diamond Head." She lives in Rancho Mirage, Calif. The magazine said it was her first in-depth interview in decades.

LOS ANGELES — Oh baby! There's a new chapter to the Tom and Roseanne Arnold saga.

Tom Arnold was seen this week at a Beverly Hills restaurant with an obviously pregnant Kim Silva, the couple's former assistant, newspapers reported.

Arnold denies it all.

"Kim is not pregnant and she's certainly not pregnant by me and she's certainly not pregnant to give Rosie and me a kid," he told KCBS-TV.

Reached at her father's home in New Jersey, Silva denied she is pregnant. She said the sweat pants she was wearing at the restaurant might have made her look heavy.

"I'm a thin girl, and if I was pregnant, it would show, and there's nothing showing on me!" Silva told The Associated Press.

Mrs. Arnold, star of the TV series "Roseanne," has been in Europe on vacation and was likely unaware of the reports, her spokesman said.

In April, Mrs. Arnold fired Silva from her $100,000-a-year job as executive assistant on the hit show, threw her husband out of the house and filed for divorce after publicly accusing the two of carrying on an affair.

Three days later, she withdrew the divorce papers and apologized to her husband and Silva for not believing their denials. But within a week, Mrs. Arnold filed for divorce again.

The Arnolds said last year they had planned to "marry" Silva, 24.

Silva called her relationship with Arnold strictly professional and said suggestions that the two are having an affair are "absolutely untrue."

Miller's magic gives NBA playoffs life

By Ron Rapport
N.Y. Times News Service

I am here today with a smile on my face and a prayer of thanksgiving in my heart.

I am here to say thank you to Reggie Miller. May his tribe increase.

Miller, as all professional basketball fans west of the Hudson River will attest, came along just when he was needed the most. He came along when the NBA playoffs were threatening to become — oh, God, anything but that — the World Cup of basketball.

Do I exaggerate? I do not. The longer the playoffs have gone on this spring, the more I have been sitting here hating myself. Me and my prediction that the New York Knicks will win it all, that is. Never in my life have I more fervently hoped I would turn out to be wrong.

I don't know what bothers me most—the way the Knicks have played in the playoffs this far or the possibility that they might find a way to climb back up the rope they are presently dangling from and make the finals.

New York vs. Houston. Patrick Ewing vs. Hakeem Olajuwon. Seven rounds for the heavyweight championship of basketball. Just the thought of it makes me sick.

The fact that the Knicks have held on this long is one of the great wonders of our times.

They have done it despite scoring fewer points than have ever been accounted for since the introduction of the 24-second clock. They have done it despite two games against Indiana in which they committed a couple of dozen turnovers each. They have done it despite a game in which Ewing didn't make a single basket. They have done it despite winning only one game on the road since the playoffs began.

But for my money, the Knicks have committed an even worse sin than any of the above. They have taken the air and the grace out of the game and turned it into a slugfest. They have banged bodies and thrown their weight around like a convention of tight ends high from a biker-movie marathon. They have taken a soaring, elegant game and brought it down into the dirt.

That is was why it was such a pleasure watching Miller take the Knicks apart in sections during his record-setting performance in Madison Square Garden the other night.

As he made 25 points in the fourth quarter — the entire New York team only had 16 — as he made five three-pointers, as he brought the Pacers back from a 12-point deficit at the end of the third quarter, Miller reminded us of what the championship round of the playoffs will be missing if the Knicks are in it and he isn't.

What Miller gave us was a prime example of one of the NBA's most exquisite pleasures. He gave us a player reaching beyond himself and for a period of time attaining a level he would have trouble believing himself.

Miller was in a zone where he knew he couldn't miss, where he knew he was his team's moral center, where he knew it would win no matter how much the scoreboard might disagree.

The NBA has come to count on such performances in recent years, of course.

Here's to Reggie Miller doing it to the Knicks one more time tonight.

College baseball's best begin World Series

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The days when the College World Series had a weak link in the field are gone, said the eight coaches who open the NCAA's Division I baseball championship today.

"It's no longer possible in Omaha, with the structure in Omaha and seedings in regionals, no longer possible to have a bad field," said Arizona State coach Jim Brock, who is making his 13th College World Series appearance. "There were some years it was possible."

With national parity brought about by scholarship and practice limits, what used to be an elite 10 powerhouse college programs probably has evolved to an elite 40 schools played at a top level, Brock said.

The NCAA seeding of regionals to give some of the nation's best teams a chance against opponents in other geographic areas also has helped eliminate weaker teams from the CWS, said Brock.

His Sun Devils went to Knoxville, Tenn., for their regional and knocked off top-seeded Tennessee to get to the CWS.

Other veteran CWS coaches — Mike Martin of Florida State, Augie Garrido of Fullerton State, Skip Bertman of defending champion LSU and Larry Cochell of Oklahoma — agreed with Brock.

Newcomers Danny Hall of first-time qualifier Georgia Tech, Miami's first-year coach Jim Morris and Auburn's Hal Baird said they only had to look up and down the table of coaches to know they were in good company.

"I think the field is outstanding," Hall said. "You don't get here by accident. Everybody can play."

Garrido, whose seventh-seeded Titans open the tournament Friday at 2:36 p.m. CDT against No. 2 seed Georgia Tech, said he is happy to be in his bracket only because it means being in Omaha. There's no easy road to the title, he said.

LSU, the No. 3 seed, meets Florida State at 6:36 p.m. Friday in the other opening day game. Both teams are making their seventh CWS. LSU has won two titles. The Seminoles are looking for their first.

Saturday's first-round games match top-seed Miami and No. 8 seed Arizona State at 12:06 p.m. and No. 4 Oklahoma against No. 5 Auburn at 6:36 p.m.

"Whoever wins it will play up to and beyond their abilities," said Brock.

Brock, Garrido and Bertman is each a two-time CWS champ. Cochell is the only coach ever to bring three schools to the CWS (previously with Oral Roberts and Fullerton State), and Morris' team was good enough to be seeded No. 1, and Baird came through a regional against top-ranked Clemson.

Panel gives views on college playoff, payoff

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — If a college football playoff nets a financial bonanza for schools, don't players deserve a slice of the pie?

Lake Dawson and Rob Zatechka say yes. And unlike millions of fans watching with rapt interest today as findings are announced by an NCAA playoff committee, their opinions count.

As top scholar-athletes at high-profile programs, they were invited to join the 24-member panel, representing what critics have called the most overlooked, underpaid, taken-for-granted people in college athletics.

They have brought to the table, it can be safely assumed, a point of view rarely heard in NCAA decision-making circles.

"If there's a playoff, I think most players would like to see some form of compensation for the athletes involved," said Zatechka, the starting center at Nebraska and a straight-A student. "I don't necessarily mean a salary. There are lots of ways of getting money back to the student-athletes in some form."

"It's nice to play for a championship," said Dawson, an honor student and wide receiver at Notre Dame. "But you'd have to be compensated a little bit because you're going to be generating a lot of revenue through a playoff system. We're not talking about a pro-like compensation, but something similar maybe to a per diem. All the players would look forward to that."

Player compensation is the most delicate issue facing college sports. Lurking always in the background, it has crept closer to center stage during the expanding television age as millions flow from the NCAA basketball tournament and the college bowls.

The irony is that despite mega-dollar TV contracts and sold-out arenas, most athletic departments still are operating in the red. Monies paid to football or basketball players would come from the account that pays for non-revenue and women's sports, say officials, and could turn the whole system topsy-turvy.

Fear of bringing the issue to the front burner and losing control of it is one reason some college chiefs may be hesitant to institute a football playoff, regardless of how popular and lucrative it might be.

Others point to the NCAA's newly created student-athlete assistance fund as the answer. Drawn from the $1 billion CBS basketball contract and distributed through conference grants, it already has funneled several million dollars to needy athletes for such things as winter clothing and emergency trips home and classroom fees not covered by scholarship grants.

The panel, which met in May, was supposed to announce a recommendation for the NCAA members to vote on during their January convention. But there were signs a decision could be delayed. Sept. 1 is the deadline for submitting legislation.

"There is a genuine interest that if there were to be an NCAA football championship, there would be an obligation to do something more for the student-athlete," said Tom Jernstedt, chief operating officer for the NCAA.

"Whenever there has been a windfall of new dollars, the No. 1 objective has been to get it back to the membership. We want to do more for the student-athlete, but it's a delicate line."

"I don't think a salary is going to be feasible," Zatechka said.

It's a Hail of a Sale!

Recently, a major hail storm hit Midland, damaging almost every new and used car on our lot. Although the damage was slight, these cars can no longer be sold as new, and the used cars must be drastically reduced.

Hurry, the best ones will go first and when these hail damaged cars are gone, the sale is over!
