Two Red Cross workers kidnapped

SIDON, Lebanon (AP) — Masked gunmen today kidnapped two Swiss Red Cross employees who worked distributing artificial limbs to victims of Lebanon's civil war and drove them to a Palestinian refugee camp, police said.

The two workers were seized when they arrived at a Red Cross center outside this port 25 miles south of Beirut, police said.

Officials at the Geneva headquarters of the International Committee of the Red Cross condemned the kidnapping, which comes 11 months after the abduction of another Swiss Red Cross worker in Sidon.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility. A Sunni Moslem militia leader indicated a radical Palestinian group was involved.

Police and the Red Cross identified the victims as Emmanuel Christen, 32, and Elio Erriquez, 23, and said both worked as orthopedic technicians at the Red Cross center, which distributed the artificial limbs to victims of the 14-year-old civil war.

The Red Cross pulled all its 31 Swiss delegates from Lebanon on Dec. 20 after the abduction of Peter Winkler, a Red Cross official in Sidon. The Swiss man was kidnapped Nov. 17, 1988 and released Dec. 16.

News reports in Switzerland and Lebanon said at the time that Winkler's kidnappers threatened new anti-Swiss attacks, claiming the Red Cross and Swiss authorities reneged on a pledge to pay ransom for Winkler's freedom.

The Red Cross mission returned to Lebanon Jan. 22 after all parties in Lebanon pledged it would not be attacked.

The assailants today, wearing black masks, were waiting in two cars at the entrance of the center near the Ein el-Hilweh refugee camp when the relief workers' white Peugeot car arrived, police reported.

"Christen parked the car at the center's parking lot and climbed out, holding an artificial limb. Erriquez got out from the car's opposite door, followed by a Lebanese ICRC employee," a police spokesman said.

Two men immediately leaped out of a dark-colored Mercedes, one with a pistol and the other a machine gun trained at the Red Cross men, said the spokesman, who cannot be named under standing rules.

"Christen and Erriquez immediately threw their arms up, offering no resistance. They were bundled at gunpoint into the trunk of the Mercedes, which sped off followed by the other car, loaded with armed guards," the spokesman said. The spokesman said the two cars headed in the direction of the camp.

The abduction was the latest in a chain that targeted relief workers with foreign humanitarian organizations in south Lebanon.

Police blamed most of the previous kidnappings in southern Lebanon on the Fatah-Revolutionary Council, the radical Palestinian guerrilla group headed by terrorist Abu Nidal. Abu Nidal is the nom de guerre of Sabri al-Banna, a former official in Yasser Arafat's mainstream Fatah movement who split with the Palestine Liberation Organization leader in 1973.

Sidon houses the teeming Palestinian refugee camp of Ein el-Hilweh and the nearby town of Mieh Mieh, where Abu Nidal's group maintains bases.

Mustafa Saad, commander of the Sunni Moslem Nasserite militia that has governed Sidon since the outbreak of Lebanon's civil war in 1975, pointed an accusing finger at the Palestinians.

"This is an Ein el-Hilweh affair, not mine," Saad told reporters after a 10-minute meeting at his house.

Jordan makes impression on her namesake school

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

ODESSA — After passing through rows of excited, balloon-carrying youngsters outdoors, former U.S. Rep. Barbara Jordan paused briefly Thursday before a glass bookcase just inside the school.

Barbara Jordan books, pictures and other memorabilia lined the shelves. She had little trouble immediately feeling at home in Barbara Jordan Elementary School.

Ms. Jordan took part in dedication ceremonies for the northwest Odessa school, the first named for her, and one of three new elementaries opened this school year in Ector County Independent School District.

U.S. Secretary of Education Lauro Cavazos spoke at another dedication ceremony held earlier in the day at Bonham Junior High School to celebrate the opening of Jordan, Cavazos and Lyndon Johnson elementary schools.

Ms. Jordan and Cavazos spoke at ceremonies at their respective schools. Midland U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton, a friend of Johnson's, dedicated Johnson Elementary School.

Ms. Jordan emphasized the importance of learning as she addressed a crowd of children, school officials and community representatives gathered inside the Jordan auditorium.

"The world is not a playground but a schoolroom," she said, recalling what her grandfather told her. "Life is not a holiday but an education."

The native Houstonian who retired from the U.S. House in 1978 after three terms also encouraged the pupils to understand and get involved with the democratic process.

"This is a government of the people, by the people, for the people," said Ms. Jordan, the keynote speaker at the 1976 Democratic national convention and now a lecturer at the University of Texas. "You are people, so in a democracy, you people are the governors.

"I want you to know that it matters whether you go to school and learn something. If you are stupid, our democracy, our government, is at risk."

The school's Volunteers in Public Schools members presented Ms. Jordan with a quilt, while pupils gave her a Jordan Jaguars T-shirt, emblazoned with the school mascot.

ECISD board President Lee Buice, who introduced Ms. Jordan to the audience, said everyone has something to learn from the former congresswoman.

"First of all, she is a master teacher," Ms. Buice said. "We have learned from her example that good citizens speak out for what is good for all citizens.

"She is, most of all, what every American should be and would like to become."

Jordan sixth-grader Chris Phillips, 11, said he was honored by Ms. Jordan's visit.

Burmese students holding 85 on airliner

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — At least two Burmese students hijacked a Burmese airliner with 85 people aboard today and demanded that their country's military government release all political prisoners and restore democracy.

The students forced the Fokker 28 aircraft to land at a Thai military airfield and held the passengers hostage, said Col. Somchai Dhanarajata of Thailand's Supreme Command Joint Operations Center.

One hijacker appeared in the door of the plane with a hand grenade in his upraised fist. Hijackers later released several hostages, including four women and a child, said a navy spokesman, Lt. Somchai Kaewvibunphan.

They insisted on a response to their seven demands by midnight (1 p.m. EDT). It it was unclear whether they had made any threats if their demands are not met, Somchai said.

In a list given to Thai authorities, the hijackers demanded the release of top Burmese opposition leader Aung San Suu Kyi, an end to the curfew imposed by the military government and restoration of democracy in Burma.

Thai marines surrounded the aircraft of Burma's national airline, Myanmar Airways, and a U.S.-trained, anti-hijacking unit from the Thai air force was en route to the airfield, he said.

The plane was returning from Mergui to Burma's capital, Rangoon, when the hijackers ordered the pilot at gunpoint to divert to Thailand, Burma's neighbor, according to Burma's official news agency. The report said three hijackers were involved rather than two as reported by Somchai.

The plane landed at 5:40 p.m. in Utaphao, 80 miles southeast of Bangkok, and the hijackers presented a list of demands to military officials at the airfield, Somchai said.

The plane carried 81 passengers and a crew of four. The passengers were believed to be Burmese nationals since Mergui is off-limits to foreigners.

It was the first known hijack of a Burmese aircraft in recent decades.

Thailand has attempted to establish good relations with the military government in Rangoon and has made several deals to exploit Burma's resources.

One killed, two injured in stabbings incident at local all-night drive-in

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A 28-year-old Midland man was stabbed to death and two other men injured during an early morning brawl at an all-night eatery, a police spokesman said.

Jesse Padilla, Rt. 13 Box 393-H in Midland, was pronounced dead at 6:05 a.m. at Midland Memorial Hospital by Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe. He had been stabbed twice, once in the front of the neck and once in the back and taken to the hospital by ambulance, Cpl. Jim White said.

Gilbert Perez, 29, 1301 N. Jackson in Odessa, suffered at least five stab wounds to the back. He was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital where he was treated and expected to be released today, spokeswoman Sue Ristom said.

Jesse Rodriquez, 29, 205 S. College St. in Stanton was stabbed at least once in the back, White said. He was taken by private vehicle to the Martin County Hospital, and was listed in stable condition there.

The three victims were at Red's Drive-In, 1807 E. Front St., at about 4:40 a.m. when four men arrived at the restaurant, White said.

"The suspects were alleged to have entered Red's, asked the victims to come outside," White said. "When they came outside, they jumped them and the stabbings ensued."

There were several witnesses to the fracas, according to investigators.

The men sped away from the scene in what was described as a blue Chevrolet El Camino, White said.

No weapons were found at the scene, and police have not established a motive for the attacks.

"We don't know what the problem was," White said. "Until we can get more information from the victims, and perhaps until we get some of them in custody, we won't know.

"We have suspects," he said. "We are taking statements from all the witnesses, and will be taking statements from the victims."

Eight in Martin County jailed on drug charges

By PATRICK CRIMMINS

The quiet community of Stanton was abuzz late Thursday as investigators rounded up suspected narcotics dealers following a three-month undercover probe by the Permian Basin Drug Task Force.

By early today, eight suspects were in custody on Martin County indictments alleging delivery of marijuana, heroin, and cocaine. The sealed indictments were handed down Sept. 28 by a special grand jury, acording to Sheriff Dan Saunders.

The roundup began about 8 p.m., as task force officers, Martin County Sheriff's officers, and Stanton Police officers began serving the indictments in the community 20 miles east of Midland.

Arrested were: Joe Cantu and Glee Holcombe, both charged with being an accomplice to delivery of marijuana; Randall Williams, possession of a controlled substance and aggravated assault of a peace officer; Sammy Hernandez, delivery of a controlled substance; Tony Hinojos, delivery of a controlled substance; and Dennis Earl Sawyer, Pedro Vasquez and Kerry Holcombe, all charged with delivery of marijuana.

The grand jury handed down 14 indictments against 12 persons, Saunders said. Four suspects remain at large, the sheriff said.

Nine-year-old honored for saving mother, sister

ARLINGTON (AP) — An Arlington fourth-grader has received this central Texas city's annual Lifesaving Award for rescuing his mother and 5-year-old sister after their home caught on fire earlier this year.

Officials credit Drew Norris, 9, with waking his mother and sister when he discovered smoke in their home on Feb. 3 and helping them escape from the burning house.

When the boy received the Civilian Live Saving Award earlier this week, he said he had learned what to do during the emergency from training as a Cub Scout and from a shopping mall exhibit.

The youth also had received a citation in June from Arlington Mayor Richard Greene for his heroism.

Endara escapes storming of office

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Soldiers stormed the building where opposition leader Guillermo Endara was holding a hunger strike, but a colleague said he was safely spirited away before the raid.

A nearby resident said the troopers fired tear gas in the raid late Thursday. It came hours after Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, who survived a coup attempt Tuesday, told the nation that the government would get tough with its opponents.

Endara, the former opposition presidential candidate, "is now in a safe place," a collegue, Willie Cochez, said later Thursday. He would not elaborate.

Endara is in the 16th day of a fast. He wants Panamanians to delay tax payments and boycott government lotteries and casinos, thus depriving the government of needed revenues.

In Noriega's televised speech, he ridiculed Endara's hunger strike and said he had evidence that the United States had planned to install Endara as president. Noriega annulled May 7 national balloting that international observers said Endara was winning by a 3-1 margin.

Noriega compared the coup attempt with the failed U.S.-backed Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba in 1961 and said he would propose a package of "war laws" dealing with national security.

Brandishing a rifle given him by supporters and quoting a Spanish proverb, Noriega promised "blows for the undecided, lead for the enemy and silver for the friend" in a speech from Santiago, 150 miles west of Panama City.

A resident living near the opposition office where Endara had been staying said two truckloads of soldiers surrounded the block, stopped traffic and then entered the building. apparently looking for Endara.

Journalists were kept 200 yards away from the scene.

Associated Press photographer John Hopper was hit on the head and his equipment was confiscated. The wound required stitches. Equipment also was taken from a cameraman for an American television network.

Cochez would not say how Endara managed to leave the offices without being captured by troops.

Security forces were at the building throughout much of the day. When reinforcements arrived, eight gunmen in civilian clothes fired in the air outside Endara's office, dispersing scores of supporters.

Earlier, members of the Defense Forces dressed in civilian clothes entered the building and arrested two people. They held everybody inside for three hours.

Ten rebels died and 23 people, including three members of Noreiga's general staff, were arrested when troops loyal to the government crushed the revolt, the government said.

Calling the coup attempt another Bay of Pigs, Noriega said the United States "had left in the lurch those it had bribed."

He said American troops from the Southern Command military installations along the Panama Canal tried to block loyal forces from coming to his rescue when soldiers took him hostage in the Defense Forces headquarters building.

"They should not be hypocritical," Noriega said referring to the United States. "They were involved."

In Washington, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said the rebels contacted U.S. military officials in Panama and requested possible blockage of routes leading to the headquarters building. He said, however, President Bush never gave the orders to block the routes.

The United States has used political and economic pressure to force Noriega from his post as chief of the Defense Forces since February 1988, when he was indicted in Florida on drug trafficking charges.

Noriega denies the allegations and says the U.S. is trying to back off 1977 treaties that give his country control of the Panama Canal in 1999.

In a referrence to the jubilation that overtook government offices during the coup attempt, Noriega urged government employees to list "traitors" in their ranks.

"Public employees who are not nationalists must be fired so we can give those jobs to worthy men," he said.

Freedom trains carries more to West Germany

HANOVER, West Germany (AP) — A train carrying more than 600 East German refugees rolled into West Germany today after a similar exodus had been disrupted for several hours by thousands seeking to board the freedom trains.

The East Germans, chanting "Deutschland!" and shouting thanks, left Warsaw, Poland, by train Thursday night on a trip via their Communist homeland and arrived in Laatzen, a Hanover suburb, nearly 14 hours later.

The 633 refugees, who were accompanied on the train by West German envoys, cheered, whistled and hugged each other when a local politician welcomed them as "my countrymen."

They looked well-rested and more relaxed than those who arrived earlier in the week from Czechoslovakia.

West German officials and Red Cross workers readied temporary housing and other forms of care.

Those aboard had crowded West Germany's Embassy in Warsaw in hopes of joining the East Germans who have made their way through Hungary, Czechoslovakia or Poland since mid-September. More than 47,000 East Germans have left since then.

West German radio and television reported that as soon as the train left, about a dozen more East Germans entered West Germany's Embassy in Warsaw in hopes of gaining permission to go West. They crossed into Poland legally in private cars, Hessischer Rundfunk radio said.

The ZDF television network said the train's original route was apparently changed to avoid a repeat of earlier riots at the East German city of Dresden, where East Germans tried to board trains to the West as they passed through.

Passenger Lutz Kopecky, 29, said East German police and state security agents lined the route Thursday. Stations were empty and the train never slowed or stopped before reaching West Germany, he said in an interview.

Another 386 East Germans who left via Hungary reached West German soil Thursday.

The journey comes as East Germany, deeply embarrassed by the exodus, begins two days of celebrations marking the communist country's 40th anniversary.

Among those flying in to attend the festivities is Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who is expected to ask East Germany's aging hardline leaders how they plan to handle the westward flight that is draining much of the East Germany's work force.

West German radio said some people reportedly were "gravely injured" when East German police in Dresden prevented people from boarding trains heading West late Wednesday and early Thursday.

Rescue personnel tend fire victims at the Hillhaven Rehabilitation and Convalescent Center in Norfolk, Va.

Nine killed as fire sweeps through convalescent home

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — A fire that struck a nursing home while patients were going to sleep killed nine people and injured nearly 100 as rescuers rushed dazed patients to safety through halls flooded with choking smoke.

The elderly evacuees, some in bedclothes and some of whom were naked when they were saved, were helped down halls and down ladders as firefighters tackled the blaze, reported at 10:30 p.m. Thursday.

Patients huddled early today on lawns of houses near the 160-bed Hillhaven Rehabilitation and Convalescent Center, attended by paramedics and neighbors.

The fire was mostly contained to a room on the second floor of the four-story brick home, but smoke spread throughout, and many of the injured suffered from smoke inhalation, said Norfolk Fire Chief Thomas E. Gardner.

"I woke up in a roomful of smoke," said patient Robert Bell, 82. "The whole room was saturated with smoke. You couldn't see and you couldn't hardly breathe."

The cause of the fire was not immediately determined, but authorities ruled out foul play, Gardner said this morning.

Gardner said the nursing home did not have any sprinklers, but said they were not required when the home was built in 1969. He said he hoped the fire would inspire lawmakers to require sprinklers.

"I personally advocate that you don't build anything in the city that you don't put sprinklers in," Gardner said today. "I'm hoping this will cause the legislators to help make a modification to the building code that would require a sprinkler system in at least buildings of this occupancy class."

He also said the rescue efforts were hampered by the fact that many patients "were hooked up to all sorts of medical equipment."

The nine residents — eight women and one man ranging in age from 65 to 97 — died of smoke inhalation, said Deborah Myers, a spokeswoman for Sentara Norfolk General Hospital.

Senate considers changes in catastrophic coverage

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, swamped with protests from older Americans, is deciding whether to preserve some catastrophic health coverage for retirees or scrap the program altogether.

Senate leaders are rallying behind a plan by Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., that would keep most benefits of the program, wipe out drug coverage and significantly reduce the surtax on higher-income retirees that pays for most of the program.

A competing plan by Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., would repeal the surtax and keep only extended coverage of hospital bills.

But there is considerable support for outright repeal.

Durenberger's proposal was embraced Thursday by Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan, who said "the rush for repeal ... is shocking." But a short time later, Richard G. Darman, director of the White House Office of Management and Budget, said the administration has not endorsed any specific plan to salvage the program.

The Senate was expected to decide the program's fate today. The House already has voted by a lopsided margin to repeal it.

Sullivan, in a speech to the National Press Club and in a letter to Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said repeal would represent a major setback to national health policy.

"To take back from tens of millions of elderly Americans the comfort of knowing that serious illness will not cause them financial ruin would not only be unwise health policy, but would simply be an unforgivable act of political expedience," Sullivan told the press club.

Congress is considering repealing or scaling back the program because of loud complaints from its intended beneficiaries: the 33 million retirees who are eligible for Medicare.

The program is being attacked by some retirees who already have other catastrophic coverage, and from some with higher incomes, who must pay an income surtax of up to $800 a year to finance coverage for themselves and low-income older Americans.

Durenberger said his proposal "would provide seniors with the equivalent of $4,000 worth of private medigap insurance coverage at a cost of between $48 and $300 per year."

His amendment had the support of Bentsen, Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, and Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas.

This protection includes full coverage of hospital bills, after the beneficiary pays the first $560; full coverage of doctors' bills after the first $1,370 a year, starting in 1990; half of prescription drugs after a $600 deductible starting in 1991; 150 days a year of nursing home care plus other benefits for mammography, home care, hospice care and special payments for the poor.

The program is financed chiefly by a surtax of up to $800 a year on the wealthiest 40 percent of retirees who pay at least $150 federal income tax. The remaining cost is covered by a flat monthly premium of $4 paid by all but the poorest retirees.

"She taught me that people should stand up for their rights," Chris said. "I'm glad she could be here."

During a post-ceremony press conference, Ms. Jordan applauded Monday's Texas Supreme Court ruling that the state's public school financing system was unconstitutional.

"The Legislature has seen this decision coming over the years," she said. "The time to act is right now."

Although she did not offer a possible solution to fix the system, she said she does not approve of a plan that would take money from rich school districts and give it to poor ones.

"Texas has a very restricted revenue base," she said. "The money has got to be found. I know it's there."

Ms. Jordan said educators and lawmakers must make the teaching profession more attractive through better salaries and benefits combined with an attitude of respect. This would also draw more minorities into the profession, she said.

"It should be the No. 1 profession in the country as far as I'm concerned," Ms. Jordan said.

Clarification

Initial reports on events leading to the death of Jennifer Reynolds of Midland, published September 22-23, indicated the girl had jumped from the moving car in which she was riding. Those reports were based on an interview with police spokesman Jim White. However, the incident could have been accidental.

The precise language of the police report stated: "The passenger in the front right seat opened the door ... for unknown reason and exited the vehicle onto the roadway."

STANTON

Saunders said Martin County was "fortunate" the task force was able to donate an undercover officer for the three-month probe. He pointed out eight undercover officers are spread thin, over a 17-county area of West Texas.

"We're competing with some big towns, Midland, Odessa and Big Spring," Saunders said. "We were most fortunate in obtaining one of those agents."

All of the undercover drug buys leading to Thursday's arrest were made in the city of Stanton. Five of the eight suspects in custody, and nine of the 12 indictments, involve marijuana.

"Even the most minute use or sale or distribution of cocaine or heroin is more treacherous than marijuana," Saunders said. "But my experience is they start out on marijuana and then graduate to heroin and cocaine."

Saunders thinks news of the sweep will deter dope dealers in Martin County.

"I will predict it will have a deterrent effect," he said. "We have a very vigorous prosecutor in (118th Judicial District Attorney) Rick Hamby. There have been some more buys that we didn't have time to process for the grand jury. More indictments will be coming, you bet."

Mother throws children out 10th-floor window

NEW YORK (AP) — Saying "God is waiting for you," a naked woman pushed two of her children out a 10th-floor window Thursday, killing her 6-year-old daughter and critically injuring her 3-year-old son, officials said.

Rescuers stormed the apartment in time to save a third child, a 1-year-old girl, as she was being shoved through the window's safety bars, officials said.

The mother, Meenhah Abdussalaam, 32, her daughter, Zainab, and son Husein were taken to St. John's Episcopal Hospital in Queens, a borough of New York, authorities said.

Zainab died of her injuries, said Nancy Uzo, a spokeswoman for St. John's. Husein was transferred from St. John's to North Shore University Hospital on Long Island, where he was in extremely critical condition on a respirator after surgery, said Carol Hauptman, spokeswoman for North Shore.

Both suffered massive internal injuries, fractures and cardiac arrest, said Charles De Gaetano of the Emergency Medical Services. The mother, who was not physically injured, was being evaluated at the hospital.

Mrs. Abdussalaam was taken into custody at 2:20 p.m., five minutes after the children fell from the Queens apartment, said police spokesman Detective Joseph McConville. She was not immediately charged.

Meenhah Abdussalaam of Queens, N.Y., is trapped to a stretcher and placed in an ambulance after pushing two of her children from a 10th-floor apartment window.

"She was mumbling 'Mohammed, Elijah.' She was trying to move the children along to the window to jump and she was going to jump also," said Fire Lt. John Lane, who was one of the first rescuers on the scene.

"She told the children, 'God is waiting for you," said Lane, who added that they were all naked.

"The only thing that saved them was there was a window guard," which made it difficult to push the children out the window, he said.

Neighbors described Mrs. Abdussalaam as quiet and polite, a good mother and a devout Moslem, whose husband had recently moved out.

"Her husband left her last week and she went crazy," said one neighbor, Zulfar Sahar.

Firefighters passing the 20-story building on the way back to their station "saw one child, a girl, hanging by her hands from the window ledge of the apartment," said Fire Department spokesman Efrain Parilla.

"They started shouting 'don't jump' and as they did so, they saw the child trying to get back on the ledge. ... She lifted a leg and tried to get back on the ledge, then the firefighters saw an arm come out of the window and push the child away," Parilla said.

The firefighters reached the scene as the girl fell on dirt in front of the building. "We looked up and saw the arms and legs of another young child hanging out the same window," Lane said.

"We said 'Oh God, don't jump, we're here, we want to help you," the 28-year-veteran firefighter said, his voice shaking with emotion during a telephone interview.

The rescuers then broke down the apartment door, and the door to a bedroom, where the mother had barricaded herself in with the children, McConville said.

The officers managed to grab the mother as she was sliding her 1-year-old daughter, Amna, out between the window bars.

"She was mumbling 'Mohammed, Elijah,' she was trying to move the children along to the window to jump and she was going to jump also," said Fire Lt. John Lane, who was one of the first rescuers on the scene.

"She told the children, 'God is waiting for you'," Lane said.

"The only thing that saved them was there was a window guard," which made it difficult to push the children out the window, he added.

Two other children, identified as an 8-year-old boy, Askia, and a 4-year-old girl, Fatima, were in the apartment but were not harmed. It was not known if they saw their siblings being pushed out the window, police said.

Retired oil company employee teaches himself to make knives

KERRVILLE (AP) — Ebb Lilly isn't the high-tech type, and he's darned sure not out to keep up with any Joneses. He likes to do things the old-fashioned way.

But when talk turns to knives, he's on familiar ground.

Lilly, a 70-year-old retiree, is a maker of fine hunting knives. He doesn't try to make a lot of them, though.

He's a craftsman of the old school. He doesn't mind taking time to do it right, refusing to be rushed.

Softly glowing, finely honed steel, artfully shaped and finished pieces of wood and bone, leather finished and stitched for comfort and utility — these are the components of Lilly's completed product.

His knife handles are made from a wide variety of natural materials: buckhorn, scimitar-horned oryx, African ironwood, blackbuck horn — even cactus wood.

Lilly's steel comes from sawmill planer blades.

"That's all I use," Lilly said. "I get them from lumber mills. Sometimes I swap knives for them, sometimes I buy them.

"The reason I like this steel is because it's hard and it'll stay sharp. A sheriff's deputy told me he gutted and skinned 10 deer before he had to sharpen his again."

Lilly, whose career as a seismic survey crew chief for Shell Oil took him to dozens of states, didn't exactly set out to become an expert knife maker.

"We were in Vicksburg, Miss., and my son brought in a planer blade he'd found and said, 'This'll make a good knife.' That's when I started. He made one and I made one," Lilly recalled during an interview at his home/workshop in Greenwood Forest.

There were no how-to books, no classes, no instruction in knife-making for Lilly. He taught himself through trial and error.

"You just start — I just shaped it like I wanted it" and went from there, he said.

Lilly also makes fine leather sheaths for each knife — designed so that the scabbards require no snaps to hold the blade inside.

"I make two different kinds, one that hangs down and one that goes to the side," he said.

Making a knife takes "about two days, not burning the midnight oil," Lilly said. He works "whenever the urge strikes me or whenever somebody wants one. Like I say: I'm laid back — I've cut enough brush."

Pierce urged aide to back NY project

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former HUD Secretary Samuel Pierce, in a move that appears to contradict his sworn congressional testimony, urged an aide to arrange funding for a New York project backed by another federal official, agency records show.

Pierce's actions, detailed in Department of Housing and Urban Development files released Thursday, suggest that at least on this occasion, Pierce took a more active role than he has acknowledged in helping those who sought his aid.

In a handwritten instruction to top aide Deborah Gore Dean, Pierce asked her to "check into this and try to get it through."

The documents also show that then-Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger wrote Pierce to back a development seeking HUD financing. On another occasion, records show that Carla Hills, herself a former HUD secretary and now the Bush administration's top trade official, got Pierce to overrule deputies in favor of her clients.

HUD released more than 20,000 pages from the files of Dean, also a key figure in investigations of fraud, mismanagement and influence-peddling at the agency during the Reagan administration.

Pierce, Dean and her predecessor as his top aide, Lance Wilson, all have invoked their Fifth Amendment rights and refused to testify before a House subcommittee investigating the agency.

The records, released under the Freedom of Information Act, provide fresh evidence of the considerable power Dean wielded at HUD and of the persistent lobbying she faced from developers, consultants, members of Congress and local elected officials.

The documents concerning the New York project appear to contradict Pierce's May testimony, in which he said he often was lobbied by friends and political associates but never assisted them beyond asking staffers to give the projects "careful consideration."

The New York project was mentioned in a 1985 handwritten note to Pierce from the Commerce Department's assistant secretary for productivity, technology and innovation, urging HUD to back a proposed project in Manhattan near Columbia University.

It could not be immediately determined whether that firm later got HUD work.

Former PTL leader Jim Bakker waves as he leaves the Federal Courthouse in Charlotte, N.C.

Despite verdict, Bakker proclaims innocence

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Jim Bakker maintained his innocence and said he was "sad but encouraged in God" after a jury found the PTL founder guilty of using his television ministry to bilk followers of $158 million.

"I went into this courthouse several weeks ago saying I was innocent of the charges against me," a smiling Bakker said after posting bond Thursday. "I come out still innocent of the charges against me. I put my faith in God."

Today, the Bakkers left for their home in Orlando, Fla., and their lawyer said they would suspend their ministry for the time being to concentrate on their appeal.

The jury foreman said money corrupted Bakker, who prosecutors said took $3.7 million in ministry funds and spent it on vacation homes, Rolls-Royce and Mercedes cars and unusual luxuries like an air-conditioned doghouse.

"He was called by God. But eventually the money became too much for him," said Ricky Hill, who said during jury selection that he was a Christian. "We kept looking for something from the defense and we never saw it."

Bakker faces up to 120 years in prison and $5 million in fines for his conviction on all 24 counts of fraud and conspiracy. He was charged with raising $158 million by overselling lodging guarantees, called "lifetime partnerships," at his Heritage USA retreat.

"The message is you can't lie to the people and use television and the mails to get them to send you money," said prosecutor Deborah Smith, a Justice Department fraud specialist. "It doesn't matter who you are or how well known you are, you simply can't do it."

In an interview today on "CBS This Morning," Smith added, "I don't think any conviction is a cause for celebration at all. I think it's very sad for his family, very sad for him." But she said it was saddest for "the 158,000 people across the country who were defrauded, many of them of their life savings."

Bakker's attorney said he would appeal the verdict.

"We've lost a battle, but we'll win the war," lawyer George T. Davis said. "There was so much negative pretrial publicity that he was unable to get a fair trial in this community."

He said the Bakkers are "going to fold up their ministry for the present and concentrate on the appeal," but he declined to elaborate. After leaving PTL, the couple began the Jim and Tammy Ministries, which runs a church in Orlando, and conducts a five-day-a-week evangelistic television show seen on eight cable outlets.

The lawyer added that he would return to Charlotte for the Oct. 24 sentencing with "a surprise for Judge (Robert) Potter. ... I think it will be a real suprise. But I can't say now. ... The big day is really when the sentencing comes."

Bakker took off his glasses and stared straight ahead as the verdict was read. His wife, Tammy Faye, sat quietly behind him; her eyes welled with tears.

Outside the courthouse, Mrs. Bakker serenaded a crowd of hundreds with a verse of "On Christ, the solid rock, I stand. All other ground is sinking sand."

Coup attempt stresses urgency

The coup attempt earlier this week against Panamanian leader Gen. Manuel Noriega should make it clear to the general that his precarious perch is in ever-greater danger of being toppled.

At the same time, however, it should also make it clear to President George Bush that Noriega is not likely to willingly relinquish his death-grip on Panama's leadership. That means Panama must always be taken into consideration in efforts by the Bush Administration to stem the flow of illicit narcotics to the United States.

Following the coup attempt, some voices in the Congress were saying the United States should have helped the rebels who led the coup. Sen. Jesse Helms, the North Carolina Republican who is an ardent anti-communist, charged that "once again we have snatched defeat from the jaws of victory, and I think it's an outrage."

Despite Sen. Helms' closely-held convictions, many Americans — including some who share the senator's anti-communistic fervor — would oppose direct military involvement by the United States and President Bush is remaining strictly true to that position, although reiterating the administration desire to see Noriega toppled.

Noriega, indicted by a grand jury in the United States on charges of drug trafficking in February of 1988, is a burr to the Bush Administration in more ways than one and his removal no doubt would please the White House. Now that a second coup has been attempted, that possibility appears to grow more likely with every passing week, but the pressure increases as the deadline nears for the Panama Canal to be turned over to Panamanians at the end of the century.

Tuesday's attempted coup was the second against Noriega in 18 months and although the general's own elite forces quickly put down the rebels, Noriega surely received the message that those in Panama's army seeking his ouster will continue their attempts.

On some future date, the strength of the rebels likely will have grown to the point of gaining the upper hand in the battle of wills being waged in Panama. At that time Noriega will become the next in the long list of dictators by opposing forces.

Those in the United States who fear the release of the Panama Canal to Panamanian control while the Noriega regime remains in power must hope that day comes before the century closes.

Board not 'rubber stamp'

A recent letter referred to the Midland Independent School District (MISD) tax hearing as a waste of time and labeled the school board members as "rubber stamps" for the school administration. Note that this school board member voted against the tax increase!

A statement questioning my vote was made at the hearing. My response to "don't want a tax increase but won't accept anything less than quality education" is we'll consider it when MISD starts providing quality education!

The people in District 2 are the ones who struggle the most to pay taxes and receive the least from MISD! A few examples of what MISD considers quality education in District 2 are:

- The Gifted and Talented program has only identified 45 Hispanics and six Afro-Americans to participate.
- Children in the Head Start program and in the Kindergarten program were slapped by their teachers. MISD did not remove the teachers from their classrooms or schools.
- Local results have proven that the longer minorities stay in school the worse their performance on the TEAMS tests.
- A high percentage of the minorities are not passing the exit TEAMS.
- The Bilingual program doesn't have curriculum for English as a Second Language or any other subject.
- The best teacher candidates are interviewed last by principals in District 2.
- The drop rate for minorities may be more than 50 percent but there are no accurate records.
- Teachers are not fired although the principals have the required documentation.
- Teachers, counselors, substitutes and principals openly state that they do not want to work in District 2 schools.
- Traditional reading methods and materials are not working with minorities. Thanks to Casa de Amigos' tutoring program these children are being helped!
- School facilities are improving due to the impact of single-member districts. Thanks to the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) and the courts for forcing MISD to become responsible to all its citizens.

As a representative of District 2, I'm not going to rubber stamp the actions of the school administration or fellow school board members. The people in District 2 demand quality education in faculties, facilities, and curriculum. Quality education is not a privilege but a right.

I'm proud to represent the people in District 2.

MC role important role

As a middle-aged student returning to college after 20 years, I have first-hand knowledge of the tremendously important role Midland College plays in our community. Midland College is convenient, affordable, and provides high quality instruction. Classes are of reasonable size. The college serves people of many different educational backgrounds with varying career goals, as well as providing a wide variety of community services classes for recreation and self-improvement.

Universities, by contrast, are considerably more expensive to attend than community colleges. Freshman and sophomore classes, which in some cases may consist of several hundred students per section, are often taught by graduate students rather than professors. Community services and continuing education courses are rarely offered. Vocational courses are not offered at all.

If Midland College were combined with the University of Texas of the Permian Basin (UTPB), our community would lose far more than it would gain. A four-year university may well have a place in this area, but we should not destroy an excellent community college in the process. If upper-division UTPB courses were brought to Midland on or near the MC campus, both institutions and the citizens of Midland would benefit. A similar arrangement in Laredo, with Laredo Junior College and Laredo State University sharing the same campus, has worked well for many years.

It would work here. But in any case, keep Midland College!

Revolving door moves briskly at EPA

WASHINGTON — John Todhunter was once the federal government's top watchdog of pesticide manufacturers. Now he works for them.

Jack Anderson

Todhunter headed the EPA's toxic and pesticides division, which attempts to ensure that insect repellents placed on the market are safe. After leaving government service in 1983, he opened his own business and became an adviser to the bug spray makers.

Before leaving the EPA, Todhunter gained a reputation for favoring the chemical industry. We revealed two cases in which he claimed two chemicals were safe despite EPA scientists' conclusions that they could be cancer-causing.

Todhunter isn't the only EPA official to switch sides. The revolving door moves briskly at the EPA, as bureaucrats parlay inside knowledge into private sector jobs. Companies can gain a competitive edge by hiring a former insider, someone who, for example, can expedite approval for certain products.

There's no evidence linking Todhunter to unlawful or even improper conduct. He and some other government officials are lawfully exploiting what many believe is a flawed set of ethics laws. Some sources believe the situation at the EPA is a scandal waiting to happen. Todhunter defended his switch to the private sector in an interview with our associate Scott Sleek. He said the approval process for various products is open to public scrutiny, leaving little opportunity for sweetheart deals.

Others are not so sure. For example, the EPA has turned a blind eye toward health hazards associated with bug sprays. Government officials have known for years that some flammable indoor insecticides don't adequately warn the consumer of fire hazards. Only now are they talking about imposing stronger labeling requirements on the industry.

The EPA has also known for some time about another lawn and garden insecticide, Spectracide, that occasionally ruptures its container. Concerns have been stirred about the chemical's hazardous effects when it spills indoors. Spurred by public pressure, the EPA only recently is seeking solutions.

Insecticide makers must register their products with the pesticide office of the EPA. Scientific data is weighed by agency scientists who make sure the data meets government guidelines. According to EPA scientists, the pesticide office is marked by a pro-business bias. These scientists blame part of the problem on the migration of their bosses to private industry jobs.

Several EPA scientists told us that they have resisted pressure from companies that have clout to accelerate their review of products.

"I think when you're expediting anything, by definition, you're being asked to cut corners," one source said. "If you're doing an expedited tune-up on a car, I don't think the tune-up is going to be as good."

The relationship between the EPA and the bug-killing consulting business turns out to be an incestuous one. Steve Schatzow, who headed the pesticide office until 1986, is an attorney representing manufacturers. Steve Jellinek, a top pesticide official during the Carter administration, runs a successful consulting firm with the same type of clients.

Former EPA officials we contacted deny they wield their influence improperly. But they do concede they have asked for expedited approval on some products and often call to check the status of pending product applications.

In the eyes of some, that's enough to bias the system.

Israel won't ever be forced from West Bank

Agitation on the West Bank and in Gaza seems to be tapering off or at least the American news media seem to be getting bored with the story.

Charley Reese

When the so-called intifada started nearly a year ago, its leaders plainly stated their goal. They would force the Israelis to withdraw from the territories. At the time, I predicted they would fail.

Israel will not be driven out of the occupied territories for the same reason it does not lose its wars. It has no choice.

Israel is far too small a country — smaller than Massachusetts — to hand over the West Bank and Gaza to fanatics who would do to those places what they have done to Lebanon. The West Bank areas are the high ground overlooking the coastal plain. Where the road from Jerusalem comes down, the old border of the West Bank is only nine to 15 miles from the sea.

That does not mean Israel will never relinquish control of the areas but it does mean Israel will never relinquish control to hostile, armed forces who would be in a position to cut Israel in half.

Nor should any reasonable person expect Israel to do so. After 40 years of wars and terrorism, after 40 years of the Israelis asking for negotiations and peace and getting a flat no, after 40 years of unceasing anti-Israel propaganda, economic boycotts and blacklisting, the Israelis have sound reasons for proceeding cautiously.

These areas, after all, were captured in the course of defending herself in 1967 from a war launched by Egypt, Jordan and Syria. For 22 years since, Israel has asked those parties to sit down and negotiate a peace. Only Egypt finally responded.

Those Americans who wish for peace in the area can do nothing more effective than hold fast in support of Israel. Everytime the Arab governments think the United States is backing away from Israel, they become more hostile. They believe that if they can break the American-Israeli bond, they can destroy the little country. A great deal of their propaganda is directed toward this goal.

The Israeli peace proposal is a good one. It calls for direct negotiations and establishment of normal relations between Israel and the Arab governments. This would be followed by democratic elections in the territories. This would be followed by a period of interim local self-rule while the final status of the areas is negotiated.

That is essentially what the U.S. signed on to in the Camp David Accords. We should stand firm. Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak's counter proposal is nonsense — the same old Arab scam. Israel must guarantee the outcome of the negotiations before negotiations begin. Hogwash.

As for this agitation in these areas, it is being done the way the PLO always does things — backed up by murder and intimidation. Over 100 Palestinians have been executed — some tortured in the process — by the fanatics for the crime of wanting peace.

That's been the sad history of this conflict as the extremist Palestinian self-appointed leaders have for decades murdered every Palestinian who wanted to reach an agreement. The tragedy of the Palestinian people is a direct result of fanatic Palestinian leaders and the cynical exploitation of them by other Arab governments.

Nor should Americans be fooled by television superficiality into believing these protests are just kids tossing stones at soldiers. In the first five months of 1989 the terrorists used 2,140 gasoline bombs, committed 943 cases of arson, handed out 223 beatings, 75 stabbbings, used 165 explosive devices and 28 hand grenades, and staged 73 shootings. During this period, 73 percent of the victims were Arabs who had displeased the fanatics.

For once in this postwar era, we should insist that our government stand by an ally and not be made a fool of by terrorists and greedy banks and international oil companies who prefer profits to principles.

MARIANNE MEANS

Shevardnadze suffers from Russian paranoia

WASHINGTON — Oops. It turns out that Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze isn't as sophisticated and understanding of historical reality as we were led to believe.

Marianne Means

Fresh from a conciliatory, sucessful meeting with Secretary of State James Baker, the Soviet leader revealed that despite his modern outlook on the world, he suffers from typical Russian paranoia and doesn't know very much about Americans after all.

Stretching to make comparisons between the U.S. and the Soviet Union in a speech before the Foreign Policy Association, Shevardnadze suggested the United States should emulate his country in seeking to eliminate "blank spots"in its history. "There are still blank spots in our common history. There is one dark spot, left by the first explosion of the A-bomb," he said in his officially distributed text.

He proposed that the United States engage in self-criticism about President Harry Truman's decision to drop atomic bombs on Japan in 1945, just as the Soviet Union is exposing and denouncing Joseph Stalin's secret evil deeds.

Shevardnadze's text said: "Militarily there was no need to drop nuclear bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. It was a political decision taken to intimidate us. This tragedy of the century must be brought to light and its perpetrators globally denounced."

The idea that Truman's motive was scaring the Soviets instead of bringing about a quick end to World War II in the Pacific has no basis in anything other than overheated Soviet imagination. Nor is there any secret about whom its "perpetrators" were. Truman announced the nuclear attack, taking full responsibility; reams of documents detailing the development of the bomb and its one and only use are in the public record.

Shevardnadze is not the only political figure ever guilty of self-serving historical revisionism. But this particular lapse is goofy.

The facts are clear. After the defeat of Germany, the United States issued an ultimatum to Japan to surrender or be destroyed. Japan refused and vowed never to give up.

Stalin, flush with his new territorial acquisitions in Eastern Europe, was preparing to turn his sights on Japan and invade Manchuria. The bomb and the abrupt Japanese surrender ended Stalin's plans to extend his power into Asia as he had in Europe.

Truman did not tell Stalin that we possessed an atomic weapon, although he did alert Stalin that we had "a very powerful explosive" we intended to use against the Japanese. The Soviets probably guessed what it was; they had spied on the secret American program and were doing their own nuclear research.

U.S. troops had just paid a terrible price to capture Okinawa, an island only 60 miles long and two miles wide: 45,000 Americans (only 10,000 fewer than were lost in Vietnam) and 100,000 Japanese died. American intelligence calculated that Japanese troop strength on the home islands was nearly 2 million. Truman's military advisers feared that in an invasion 250,000 American soldiers could be killed before Japan was conquered.

After the bombs were dropped, Truman declared that the purpose had been to "completely destroy Japan's power to make war." Americans cheered. We hadn't started the war. Japan had, by attacking Pearl Harbor. It had been a long, grim four years.

Truman said coldly afterward that "a quarter of a million of the flower of our young manhood were worth a couple of Japanese cities."

There was, in short, a military need to drop the bombs. The horror of it — 70,000 Japanese were killed and as many wounded — has dominated global national security concerns ever since. But Truman chose to save the lives of Americans over those of the enemy.

For 40 years, historians, scientists and politicians have endlessly debated the morality and military wisdom of developing and using the atomic bomb. There has been plenty of "light" on the subject, although little agreement.

I confess a bias here. The man to whom I am married was a young lieutenant sitting on a ship in the Pacific awaiting invasion orders when the bombs were dropped. Without them, he might never have come home.

Truman's was a cruel decision, but not a mysterious or conspiratorial one. The alternative, from the perspective of millions of American families, was worse.

ITEM: When he was investigating the fund-raising shenanigans of House Speaker Jim Wright, House ethics committee special counsel Richard Phelan struck a pious stance. He posed as a politically neutral lawyer who was only interested in carrying out his civic duty to root out congressional corruption.

Now we are wiser, but sadder. He was really interested in advancing his own political career at the expense of Wright's.

This crass opportunist was so thrilled by the public exposure he garnered by bringing down Wright that only six months later he is running for office himself. After briefly eyeing the governorship, he is seeking the Democratic nomination for Cook County board president, a powerful Chicago office second only to that of the mayor.

Phelan, 52, said a poll he commissioned showed that the public wants new faces — "an outsider with fresh, new ideas and some accomplishments." He's an outsider, all right. Phelan is a wealthy lawyer who was unknown to the Democratic political establishment until he went after Wright, which is his only public "accomplishment" to date.

He's not likely to move inside any time soon, either. Democrats may be donkeys rather than elephants, but their memories are just as long as those of Republicans.

Phelan took on the task of probing Wright's affairs under false colors. How could the voters ever trust him?

NATION in brief

Amroc won't try for six months

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As the countdown reached zero and the rocket rumbled to life, Jim Bennett's emotions hopscotched from anxiety to elation to puzzlement and, ultimately, to sickening disappointment.

Bennett, president of American Rocket Co., watched on a video monitor Thursday morning as his company's product — billed as the nation's first commercially developed and built rocket — went up in flames on the launch pad.

The failure of the launch from Vandenberg Air Force Base left Bennett and his 90-some employees with an emotional hurdle to overcome as they look to the next launch attempt. The Camarillo, Calif., company will wait six months to a year before trying a second launch.

"It's just a sick feeling. We worked so hard, and it meant so much to us," Bennett said in a telephone interview. "We worked a long time to get this far and we hoped that it would be a success, that we can go on. At this point we can go on, but we don't have that success."

The attempted launch of the 58-foot-tall unmanned rocket was an especially emotional moment for Amroc's employees because of the July death of company founder George Koopman in an automobile accident. The rocket was nicknamed the "Koopman Express."

The rocket was to have soared on a $2 million, 15-minute suborbital flight, conducting two experiments.

Rape ruling 'horrendous'

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — The acquittal of a rape suspect on grounds that the woman wore a lace miniskirt with no underwear was a "horrendous" verdict that could deter victims from prosecuting rapists, counselors said.

"No woman asks to be raped," Dorothea Gallagher of the National Organization for Women's Broward County chapter said Thursday. "I can't think of any other crime in which people would say that the victim asked for it."

A jury of three men and three women said just that in explaining their acquittal of Steven Lord, 26, on kidnapping and rape charges Wednesday.

"She asked for it," foreman Roy Diamond said. "The way she was dressed with that skirt, you could see everything she had. She was advertising for sex."

"She was obviously dressed for a good time, but we felt she may have bit off more than she could chew," juror Mary Bradshaw said.

According to testimony, the 22-year-old woman wore a tank top and a short, white lace skirt without underwear last Nov. 6, the night she said she was raped.

Alexander Siegel, the woman's attorney, said his client was "bewildered, shocked, angry, astounded" by the verdict.

Detective Tom White of the Indian River County Sheriff's Department, who worked on the case, termed the acquittal "very disappointing."

"I honestly believe as a police officer that he raped her, that he forcibly had sex with her," White said. "I took her to the emergency room. We took her clothing and her car into evidence, we caught him the following day."

White said the woman told him that Lord took off her underwear when he allegedly raped her the first time.

At the trial, the woman said Lord pulled a knife on her in a Fort Lauderdale restaurant parking lot, forced her into her car, drove north on Interstate 95, and pulled over twice to rape her at knife-point.

Flag law 'inadequate'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, saying a Senate-approved statutory ban on defacing the American flag is inadequate, is renewing his support for a constitutional amendment to outlaw flag burning.

"I believe that a constitutional amendment, properly drawn, is necessary in order to provide the proper protection," Bush said Thursday after 91-9 approval by the Senate of the statutory ban.

The House-passed measure now returns there for consideration of changes made by the Senate. It calls for up to a $1,000 fine and a year in jail for burning or otherwise defacing the flag.

A constitutional amendment to ban flag burning is set to come up in the Senate on Oct. 16; the House also is expected to take up such a measure.

Republican senators kept up pressure for a constitutional amendment as the only effective counter to a June Supreme Court decision that threw out the conviction of Texas flag-burner Gregory Lee Johnson on free-speech grounds.

Air changes possible

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Transportation Department is proposing that foreign airlines be given exclusive rights to fly between their home countries and some U.S. cities that have little or no international air service.

Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner said Thursday that he will explore the possibility of opening more U.S. cities to flights by foreign airlines without the usual bilateral negotiations.

If the plan is adopted, Skinner said, "many more U.S. cities will have the opportunity to enjoy the economic benefits" of direct international flights.

Skinner did not detail what cities or routes might be affected.

Watkins foresees battle over storage of nuclear waste

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary James D. Watkins is bracing for stiff resistance to his plan to store radioactive waste from a Colorado nuclear weapons plant in several states until a permanent dump is completed in 1990 or 1991.

"People are going to say, 'Not in MY state,'" Watkins told Congress on Thursday.

The retired admiral suggested he would propose in a private meeting next week with state governors that seven states share the waste-storage burden in the interest of keeping the crucial Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant operating.

Watkins told the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee a permanent waste repository in New Mexico would not be ready to open by March, when Colorado's unilaterally imposed waste storage limit is expected to be reached.

Thus, temporary storage sites must be found by March 1 or Rocky Flats could be forced to close. The 364-acre plant near Denver is a vital link in the nation's nuclear arms complex because it is the only maker of plutonium triggers for warheads.

Watkins said he had not decided which states to approach. The most likely candidates include Colorado, Idaho, New Mexico, Nevada and Washington, which have some of the department's main weapons facilities. The two other nearest states with nuclear weapons sites are Texas and California.

Radioactive waste equivalent to 49 boxcar loads — about 4,900 cubic yards — would have to find temporary storage over the next two years, he said. The amount could be even greater if further delays are encountered in completing the Waste Isolation Pilot Project near Carlsbad, N.M.

The New Mexico repository was scheduled to open a year ago but has been hampered by a series of environmental, technical and regulatory problems.

Watkins said he expected the problem of finding a temporary storage site for Rocky Flats waste to become "a very contentious issue."

Eddie Binder, a spokesman for New Mexico Gov. Garrey Carruthers, said the governor's position had not changed.

"There's no way I'll accept any other waste than what is already in this state for temporary storage," Carruthers said two weeks ago.

The waste is contaminated with plutonium, which remains radioactive for 240,000 years, and is generated at the Rocky Flats weapons plant. The plant recovers plutonium from retired nuclear weapons and reprocesses it to make triggers for new ones.

Idaho had been storing part of the Rocky Flats waste, but Gov. Cecil Andrus closed his state's borders Sept. 1 to further shipments to protest the Energy Department's failure to open the $800 million Waste Isolation Pilot Project.

Watkins said he had received a letter from Washington Gov. Booth Gardner that said, in essence, "Don't look my way."

On a related subject, an Energy Department study released Thursday concluded that Rocky Flats, which is under investigation by the FBI for possible criminal violation of environmental laws, poses no imminent threat to public health.

The report raised doubts, however, about the accuracy of measured concentrations of plutonium in the air surrounding the complex.

Midland College gives self passing grades

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland College is a "proud example" of a successful community college with a highly responsible board of trustees, well-trained faculty, reliable administrators and diverse student body, an MC self-study shows.

But the report — released by a nine-member steering committee comprised of MC trustees, administrators, faculty and other staff members — also found that MC is not perfect.

The college received satisfactory grades in its overall performance educational programs, student development and institutional effectiveness. But the study suggests that the areas of faculty evaluations and professional development need work.

MC began the self-study in September 1988 in preparation for a visit by accreditors from the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

The college became a candidate for accreditation with the Commission on Colleges of SACS in 1973, and was accredited in 1980 following a visiting committee evaluation.

To ensure educational quality and integrity, the SACS — a recognized accrediting body in 11 Southern states — requires that member institutions conduct a periodic self-evaluation.

As a result of this year-long study, the MC steering committee identified areas of concern, specifically in the faculty evaluation process and professional development program.

The steering committee recommended that the faculty evaluation process be re-examined at regular intervals. It was last studied during the pilot year 1983-84 by a monitoring committee and subsequently modified into its present form.

In addition, a spring 1989 survey of the faculty suggests that the professional development program and administrative evaluation system be re-examined and any necessary changes made.

Specifically, the steering committee addressed the following concerns:

■ When the program for faculty evaluations was designed in 1982-83, college-wide guidelines for criteria were written by the general committee. Then each division was to write its own individual and specific criteria to reflect the unique nature of its mission and disciplines.

The steering committee recommends that criteria that do not exist be written and that all existing criteria be clearly communicated to the faculty.

■ Data collected from student evaluations represents 18 to 25.5 percent of a teacher's yearly evaluation, yet the questions are not entirely appropriate for skill developement courses, such as physical education and music.

The questions stress the classroom management aspect of teaching and do not adequately investigate higher cognitive education or foster creative thought. For example, nine of the 13 questions are of the management-related type; two relate to cognitive areas.

The steering committee suggests that this imbalance be reviewed; that different wording would make the questions more appropriate.

■ Some members of the faculty have expressed dissatisfaction with the Professional Development Program. They feel that while the policy is clearly written, it does not accomplish its purpose of improving effective education; and does not allocate points consistently, equitably and fairly.

■ Although no problems are apparent in the administrative evaluation procedure, it has been in operation for three years and has not been formally evaluated. The steering committee recommends this be done to ensure the continued effectiveness of the process.

Conviction part of EPA cleanup

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The conviction of Big Spring's former superintendent of utilities for violation of the federal Clean Water Act is evidence that the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is intensifying its enforcement of environmental laws.

"We are stepping up clean-water enforcement at a variety of levels, including municipalities and the adequacy of their industrial pre-treatment programs," EPA spokesman Roger Meacham of Dallas said Thursday.

"This is just one phase of our stepped-up enforcement activities regarding clean water," the EPA official said.

William Windham, who directed Big Spring's water operations from August 1983 through September 1984, was convicted in mid-September by a federal jury in Abilene on five misdemeanor counts of falsifying water-quality reports.

The EPA's enhanced enforcement of clean-water laws coincides with the apparent heightened public interest in environmental concerns.

"There seems to be a resurgence of public interest in the environment," Meacham said.

The 1960s was an era of much clamor over the environment, particularly the pollution of steams, lakes and the oceans. But the environmental concerns of the 1960s were preempted by other "concerns."

The date of Windham's sentencing by Judge Halbert Woodward, chief judge of the Northern District of Texas, has not been docketed, according to a spokesman in the District Clerk's Office in Abilene. However, the maximum sentence which Windham could be sentenced on each of the five counts is a six-month jail term and a $10,000 fine.

Windham currently is director of utilities for the city of Athens, Texas.

While in Big Spring, Windham was responsible for the operation and maintenance of the Big Spring water and wastewater treatment facilities. His duties included certification of the plant's discharge monitoring reports, which, according to the EPA, "provide the documentation for determining the city's compliance with the limits set in the plant's wastewater discharge permit."

Windham was convicted of falsifying reports in 1983 and 1984.

"Falsification of these vital documents threatens water quality and possibly human health and undermines our clean-water program," said Robert E. Layton Jr., EPA regional administrator.

The discharge permits strictly regulate the quality and quantity of discharges into waterways in order to prevent water pollution, the EPA said.

In order to "give the appearance of compliance," the EPA said, Windham altered figures in monthly laboratory reports and then submitted falsified reports.

The data submitted by Windham reflected that Big Spring's discharges were "within acceptable limits." However, the discharges exceeded the EPA permit limits.

War on Drugs questions 'mixed message' of anti-drinking

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans' War on Drugs says a youth program that accepts drinking so long as it is done "responsibly" sends a mixed signal to youths under 21, who should not be drinking at all.

Bobby Heard, statewide youth coordinator for War on Drugs, said his organization and Students Against Driving Drunk, or SADD, had "been trying for quite sometime to resolve our concerns."

SADD, which uses money from Anheuser-Busch, Inc., joined House Speaker Gib Lewis and others on the steps of the Capitol for a statewide organizational effort Thursday.

War on Drugs then held a news conference at which speakers said SADD's message to teen-agers is not strong enough.

John Rogers of the Department of Public Safety, who is state coordinator for SADD, said the goal of the program was to place a chapter in every junior and senior high school in Texas, reaching more than 1 million teen-agers.

"You are the backbone of the program, the model for your peers," Rogers told approximately 75 students, who wore T-shirts saying, "The best of life is yet to be."

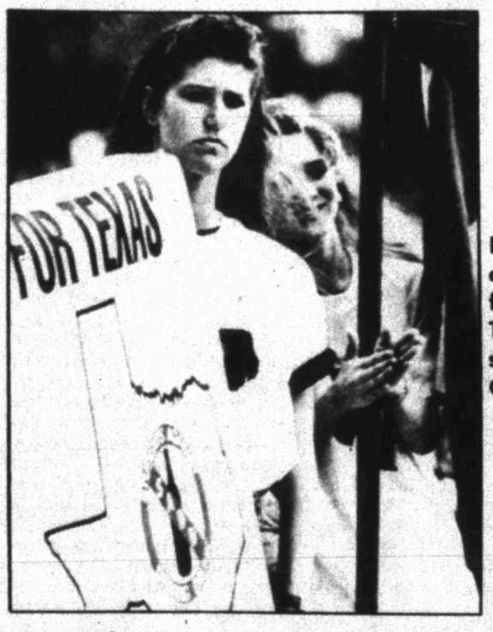
Lewis, who raised the SADD flag at the Capitol, said the organization "can make, and is making, a remarkable difference in the lives and potential of our students and their families."

SADD noted in a statement that Anheuser-Busch, the nation's largest brewing company, had recently announced that it would make available to every Texas junior and senior high school kits to start SADD chapters.

Several brewery representatives were introduced at the Capitol ceremony.

Travis Country District Attorney Ronnie Earle said the SADD effort could "have more to do with reducing crime and reducing deaths on the highways than all the laws that we can pass up here if we were working on it seven days a week, 365 days a year."

But War on Drugs said sponsorship by the alcohol beverage industry of anti-drunken driving youth groups "promote a confusing message to young people because they do not clearly express that drinking under the age of 21 is illegal and harmful."



Students against Drunk Driving conduct a pep rally and flag-raising ceremony Thursday on the stops of the state Capitol.

Four seniors from Copperas Cove High School, as well as their anti-drug club sponsor and the football coach at Austin Westlake High School appeared at the War on Drugs news conference.

Sponsor Connie Gooding said Copperas Cove, near Austin, had a SADD program but "felt it was inappropriate, because one of the concepts was responsible drinking and we didn't think that was the message we wanted to relay.

"What we chose to relay was a message of zero tolerance," she said. "I don't think there's such a thing as responsible drinking."

Ginger Caraway, a student, said, "SADD is a wonderful concept except where it relays mixed messages. It says students against drunk driving, it should say students against doing drugs."

Football coach Sam McCutchen, the SADD sponsor at Westlake, said he, too, was concerned about the "mixed message" going to teen-agers.

But he commended Anheuser-Busch's generosity and asked for its help in establishing communication to promote responsible use of alcohol.

"Without dialogue," he said, "we'll be fighting among ourselves, and a divided house will fall. We must commit to working together."

Judge may decide jail suit by special session

AUSTIN (AP) — A state judge could decide a lawsuit challenging the Texas prison system's delay in taking thousands of felons from local jails about the time lawmakers convene in special session on Nov. 14.

After a hearing in the case ended Thursday, State District Judge Joseph Hart ordered all briefs and replies to be filed by Nov. 3. He indicated he will make a decision as soon as possible after that.

Twelve counties have sued the state in an effort to force the transfer of an estimated 6,000 felons from their jails. Statewide, an estimated 12,000 inmates have been sentenced to state prison but are being held in local jails.

Because it is under a federal court order against prison crowding, the state has established a quota system for taking the inmates.

"What we're asking for today, judge, is to give them the will. Give them the will — they'll find a way," Nueces County Attorney Carlos Valdez told Hart in final arguments.

But Assistant Attorney General Bob Ozer urged Hart to allow for the implementation of new programs that address problems in the criminal justice system.

"I think we have a better chance than any other jurisdiction in the country to solve these problems because we have the framework set out," Ozer said.

Lawmakers this year approved a criminal justice package that includes new prison construction and alternative programs to incarceration in state prison.

Hart already has ruled that the state has a responsibility to take the felons. This week's hearing was on the state's claim that such a demand is impossible.

The suit, initially filed by Nueces County, later was joined by Collin, Dallas, El Paso, Hidalgo, Hunt, Galveston, Lubbock, Tarrant, Travis, Victoria and Bexar counties.

Despite work with thieves, secretary happy

ORANGE (AP) — She is remarkably perky and cheerful for someone who deals daily with with thieves, rapists, muggers and murderers — the seamier underbelly of life in Orange.

But Barbara Baker, 37, secretary to Police Chief Sam Kittrell, says she wouldn't trade her job at the Orange Police Department for twice the salary.

It's not an idle boast. She recently was offered a chance work again at an office job in Houston and double her pay.

"No way," she said. "Either I'm one of the smartest or stupidest people you'll ever talk to, but there's no way anything can compare to how interesting my job is and how happy I am here."

Though she doesn't actually come face to face with the criminal element — the closest she gets is when they pass her tidy desk on the way to the holding cell in back of the police department — she reads the reports, types Kittrell's correspondence and handles payroll and purchase requisitions for both the patrol and detective divisions.

"I was doing a lot of typing for the narcotics task force, Operation Falling Snow," which resulted in more than 50 arrests for drug possession and food stamp fraud. "But it ended in May ... I kind of felt like something was missing after that."

Before coming to work for Kittrell in February 1988, police "never represented anything but to beware of speeding tickets." Crime to Mrs. Baker, who is married and has a 12-year-old son, was "something you read about in the paper."

Mrs. Baker said getting to know the police officers and watching them work has given her a tremendous respect for their abilities. She gets angry when people don't share that view.

"They are underpaid, for one thing," she said. "And it amazes me, how quickly things can happen and how quickly they respond ... I hear somebody say something negative about the police, and I could just shake them."

Working in a police station also has made her more aware of potential problems elsewhere.

"I notice things," she said. "Like in grocery stores, when women put their purses in the shopping cart and walk away and leave them... I lock my car door all the time now."

She said that she loves her job and smiles a lot, but she also makes it a point to smile at officers who face more than their share of disgruntled individuals.

"The police deal with so much unpleasantness, from citizens irate over traffic violations to getting rocks thrown at them in the projects," she said. "If they are greeted with a smile during the day, maybe it will help them feel a little better."

DPS officials says agency needs additional troopers

AUSTIN (AP) — An official of the Texas Department of Public Safety says he needs 250 more troopers to adequately enforce new trucking safety laws that some say could have helped avoid the worst school bus accident in state history.

On Sept. 21, a soft-drink truck hit a Mission school bus carrying 81 students broadside and knocked the bus into a water-filled gravel pit, killing 21 and injuring the other 60.

The safety laws, which took effect 10 days after the accident, "give us some very good tools to enforce and improve traffic safety," said Chief Dudley Thomas, who heads DPS' traffic law enforcement division.

But he said the division needs 500 troopers to enforce the laws. DPS currently has 250 troopers assigned to the job.

The regulations took effect Oct. 1, and for the first time give troopers authority to remove unsafe trucks from the road.

The Texas Legislature passed even tougher laws in 1987. But in January 1988, enforcement of those rules was suspended after several legislators and transportation lobbyists asked DPS officials for a delay until September 1989.

During that interim, DPS officers could inspect trucks for safety violations but lacked the authority to order them out of service.

Lee Dickinson, a member of the National Transportation Safety Board, said three of the soft-drink truck's six brakes were out of adjustment before colliding with the bus. In any other state, the truck would have been ordered off the road, Dickinson said.

On Thursday, officials of the Texas Motor Transportation Association, a trade group representing 800 truck and bus firms, condemned the delay in enforcing the truck safety regulations.

"The actions of special-interest groups to postpone enforcement of these laws might have been a factor in this tragedy," said Robert Floyd, president of the association, which supported the rules.

"It's a tragic irony that the accident involved a soft-drink delivery truck because representatives of the wholesale beverage distributor industry were a major factor in postponing enforcement," he said.

Virgil Musick, the executive director of the Texas Soft Drink Association, told The Associated Press late Thursday that his group did ask for delays in enforcement.

"We have not held back on putting this into effect — except we asked for time to get our equipment ready before they started issuing citations," Musick said.

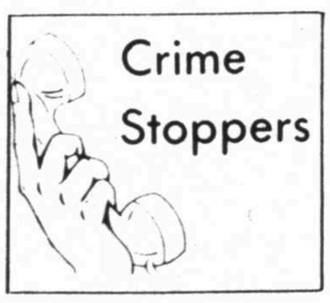
Odessa Crime Stoppers seeks help in burglary

Odessa Crime Stoppers and the Odessa Police Department are asking for the public's help in solving a residential burglary which occurred at 1902 Santa Rosa.

On Sept. 2 between 4 a.m. and 9:30 a.m., the front door of the home was kicked in. Once inside the home, burglars went to each room, ransacking and removing differing items. The suspects took cameras, radios, household goods, clothing, jewelry, and at least one rifle. The property is valued at more than $4,500.

According to investigators, pillow cases were used to carry the stolen items.

Information that leads to the arrest and indictment of the persons responsible for the burglary could be worth up to $1,000 cash this week only. Crime Stoppers pays cash rewards for information about fugitives, and for information that leads to the recovery of stolen property and narcotics valued at $1,000 or more.



In Midland, Crime Stoppers can be reached at 694-TIPS, and in Odessa at 333-TIPS. Callers can remain anonymous.

German cowboy club rides Texas Panhandle

AMARILLO (AP) — Complete with Resistol hats, spurs and boots, cowboys took to the breaking ranges on the Lighthouse Canyon Ranch this week to move the cattle herd to the canyon bottom for the winter.

Looking at them seated on their horses, they pass for real cowboys. But a closer look finds no Wrangler jeans, lots of vests and handmade leather wear not typically worn by today's cowboy.

Some of these cowboys belong to the Longhorn Cowboy Club and the Old Panhandle Cowboy Club, but they don't come from around here. They are a group of German cowboy club members in Amarillo as guests of the Chamber of Commerce.

Dieter Dorner, tour operator, said real cowboys and commercial ranches don't exist in Germany. But these men and their families try to recreate the Western atmosphere of the 1890s as close as they can by reading history books and fashioning their own clothing to fit the times.

They are brokers, merchants, truck drivers and businessmen. They come from all walks of life, Dorner said. Some are interested in gun collections, others boots and still others, authentic Western wear. And they spend every spare minute, weekends and vacation time developing this hobby.

There are 140 cowboy clubs in Germany, Dorner said. They range in size from 20 to 150 members. Some of the larger ones include the Old Panhandle Cowboy Club in Karlsuhe, the Old Wyoming Club in Frankfurt, the Spurs Cowboy Club in Dusseldorf, the Longhorn Cowboy Club in Ratingen, the Dakota Cowboy Club in Karlsuhe, the Munich Cowboy Club and the Old Timer Cowboy Club in Cologne.

The 16 Germans traveling in the United States are all high-ranking officials in some of the clubs. They are on a two-week trip, which included a visit to the historical part of Fort Worth, to Bill and Shirley Howse's ranch and then they will travel to Las Vegas, Nev., for three days before returning home.

Erwin Graves, president of the Longhorn Cowboy Club, said they hope their visit will clear the way for other members to come and do this.

Back in Germany, in addition to making authentic clothing, the cowboy clubs build ranches. Generally they are small, five to 80 acres, and include replicas of the Old West saloons, cabins, horse stables, barns and blacksmith shops.

They hold spring and fall roundups, where the people are rounded up, not cattle. Each of these meetings are held in scenic areas that lend to the cowboy image, Graves said.

"They're coming over here because Germany is such a small country," Dorner said. "There's no space for horseback riding and cattle driving and all that is involved with the cowboy way of life.

"Also, here is where it happened. This is where the history was created," he said. "It's really something many people want to do."

Investigation into the integrity of Windham's water-quality reports was triggered by an evaluation of his reports, according to Layton.

Agents from EPA's Office of Criminal Investigation worked EPA's Region 6 technical staff and the U.S. Department of Justice in carrying out the investigation. Region 6, which is headquartered in Dallas, takes in Arkansas, Louisiana, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Texas.

Windham was prosecuted by special prosecutor Claire Whitney of the U.S. Department of Justice and was defended by Abilene lawyer Roy Longacre.

Professional storyteller keeps traditional alive

BRYAN (AP) — According to a recent study, the second biggest fear children have is dying — right behind public speaking.

Professional storyteller Finley Stewart says that revealing fact alone is enough to keep people like himself, who specialize in verbal communication, in business.

Stewart made a storytelling tour of Bryan elementary schools this week. On his last stop, at Sam Houston Elementary, he kept the roomful of third-graders alternately enthralled and shouting with laughter with his folk tales about a loud-mouthed turtle, a Wichita Indian girl who turns into a fish, and "The Purple Furp," who brings fun to a little boy's rainy day.

Stewart, who has worked for five years as a professional traveling storyteller, said children need exposure to storytelling — both as listeners and participants — because oral communication is part of the human experience.

"... As a species, that's what we do. We tell stories, even when we're coming home from the office at the end of the day," he said. "The narrative in a story is an integral part of our being.

"At biology conventions, there's talk of renaming ourselves from 'homo sapiens' to 'homo narrens,' because we speak." he said.

26 sites selected for possible prisons

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Twenty-six sites were chosen as possible locations for six new prisons being built, a prison official said.

The 26 sites were selected Thursday from 46 proposals submitted July 31, prison spokesman Charles Brown said. Final selection will probably be made at a Nov. 13 prison board meeting in Austin, he said.

"Each of these 26 sites will be visited by subcommittee members of the Texas Board of Criminal Justice in the next few weeks and then the list will be shortened further," Brown said.

The six new prisons will be of both maximum and medium security, he said.

Those included in the list were Abilene, Angelina County, Beeville, Bell County, Big Spring, Breckenridge, Childress, Dalhart, Dilley, Eagle Lake, Eastland County, Freestone County and Hondo.

Also on the list were Jasper, Jefferson County, Karnes County, Lamesa, Pampa, Polk County, San Jacinto County, Seymour, Stamford, Starr County, Trans-Pecos (Fort Stockton), Wichita Falls and Woodville.

Midland man arrested for auto theft

From Staff Reports

A 21-year-old Midland man is in police custody following his arrest Thursday afternoon in a crowded grocery store parking lot.

The man was arrested just after 5 p.m. in the parking lot of Furr's Supermarket, 100 W. Scharbauer Dr. He is expected to be charged with unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, and has outstanding warrants for theft and auto theft, according to police.

A vehicle believed stolen was recovered from the parking lot, according to police.

Rubber chickens to fly

MARSHALL (AP) — Throwing fire ants wouldn't have been much of a spectator sport, of course.

But why rubber chickens?

"You get the humane society on you if you use symbols of lovable pets and tossing rubber frogs would be too much like Kermit and would upset the kids," said Harris County District Judge Bonnie Leggat, chairwoman of the world championship event that will be one of the highlights of Saturday's seventh annual FireAnt Festival.

"We haven't got any complaints," she said. "Apparently, chickens are not thought of too fondly by anybody. After all, Chicken Little was a dingbat."

About 100 people tried their hand at throwing regulation rubber chickens imported from Taiwan at last year's FireAnt festival.

Investigation of boat explosion continues

PORT ARTHUR (AP) — Federal investigators today hoped to learn why a fishing boat that exploded earlier this week when it struck an underground natural gas pipeline was in shallow water.

At least eight members of the "North Umberland" crew were killed and three others remained missing and are presumed dead.

Three survived, including the boat's captain, and investigators plan to ask them what the boat was doing in water that was only four to six feet deep.

"We're going to ask the captain, 'Has he ever in the past scraped the bottom with the hull?'" said Lee Dickinson, chief of a six-member team from the National Transportation Safety Board.

STATE

NTSB investigators Thursday started their probe into accident, which occurred Tuesday evening accident about a half-mile from shore in the Gulf of Mexico, just south of Sabine Pass. When the vessel hit the pipeline, it exploded in a giant fireball. The fire burned for more than 12 hours, fueled by gas from the pipeline and anhydrous ammonia aboard the boat.

Dickinson said he would not speculate on the cause of the accident until more evidence was gathered. Some authorities said earlier the boat's fishing nets may have snared the 16-inch transmission pipeline, but Dickinson said an initial investigation found the nets stored inside the vessel.

The federal investigators boarded the vessel Thursday afternoon and recovered the bodies of five more victims.

"What we saw was a lot of destruction. The whole inside was completely damaged. We saw nothing that was not completely scorched," Dickinson said, adding some beams were bent by the extreme heat.

Four divers tried to examine the pipeline to see at what angle it was hit, but murky water impeded the process, he said.

The interstate pipeline, installed in 1973 and regulated by the U.S. Department of Transportation, is required to be at least 36 inches below the Gulf floor. Dickinson said the NTSB would try to determine how far below the floor the pipe actually was.

Backers say plan will help mothers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Backers of a $22.7 billion child-care package say the bill will increase the availability and quality of day-care for Texas children, but opponents claim the federal government will instead be trying to manage programs around the state.

"There's no question that it's going to vastly improve day-care availability and quality," said Rep. Jim Chapman, a Sulphur Springs Democrat, after Thursday's vote approving the plan.

"The bill we passed will provide 60,000 more day-care slots in Texas — that's 60,000 mothers potentially that we can get off welfare. That is a worthwhile goal," Chapman said.

But Rep. Charlie Stenholm, a Stamford Democrat and author of a substitute bill defeated on a 230-195 vote, said the plan that passed would result in federal management of day-care centers.

Under the bill, day-care centers receiving federal aid would be subject to federal regulation.

Stenholm's bill, however, would have let states retain their regulatory authority over child care, and would have cost $5 billion less.

If the bill that passed the House becomes law, Stenholm predicts the impact on Texas day-care centers will be "very negative. ... A lot of the state and local people will be saying you did it to us again.

"The bottom line is that the federal government doesn't have a good track record in running programs at state and local levels," Stenholm said.

But Chapman said that if the federal government is going to send billions of dollars in aid to the states, "I see nothing wrong with having some type of minimal standards that will apply to those that get the funds."

Rep. John Bryant, a Dallas Democrat, said he believes the bill that passed will result in much more available day-care to lower-income Americans, "who in many cases are forced to let their children wander the streets after school.

"It will result in some assurances that child-care centers are going to be safe places for their children while they go to work," Bryant said.

Chapman said Texas already has in place standards that will meet every test of the bill, except the requirement that day-care workers have 15 hours of training.

"I don't think that's such an onerous provision. I would hope people working in day-care centers would have two days of training."

All eight Texas Republicans voted for Stenholm's proposal, along with the author and Democratic Reps. Ralph Hall of Rockwall, Marvin Leath of Waco, and Bill Sarpalius of Amarillo. The state's 14 other Democrats rejected the plan.

Dallas church slaying suspect arrested in Ohio

DALLAS (AP) — FBI agents in Ohio have arrested a Dallas man suspected of fatally shooting two fellow church deacons and wounding a third, authorities say.

Woody Specht, an FBI agent in Dallas, said Gerald King, 30, was being taken Thursday night to the Montgomery County Jail in Dayton after being arrested about 6:30 p.m. at his relatives' home in Dayton.

FBI agents obtained an arrest warrant charging King with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution after learning that the murder suspect may have fled out of state following the Sunday afternoon shootings at the Living Testimony Baptist Church, Specht said.

King is accused of shooting three fellow deacons after an argument erupted among the men in the church's finance room.

Investigators assigned to the case have not disclosed what prompted the argument.

The Rev. Robert Simmons, the church's pastor, said Thursday night he still doesn't know what prompted the shootings.

Simmons was informed of King's arrest in Ohio by his son, who serves as the church's associate minister. He said word was spreading quickly through the small congregation.

The minister said he has not discussed the shootings much and will not talk about them at all on Saturday, when he presides over the funerals of Jack Earl Ray, 51, and Artis Weaver, 60. Services are scheduled for 11 a.m. Saturday at the church.

"It's too close — too much so," he said. "I won't be trying to say anything in regard to any incident. It will just be a normal funeral."

Scientists think undersea volcanoes spew chemicals

By DAVID GRAHAM
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — Chemical elements that are rare in the ocean but necessary for ocean life may come from explosive eruptions of undersea volcanoes, scientists at the University of California at San Diego's Scripps Institution of Oceanography recently reported.

Gas bubbles propelled by powerful eruptions are able to carry chemical elements, such as selenium, arsenic, copper and cadmium, into the sea, said Ken Rubin, a geochemist at Scripps in La Jolla.

The conclusion, based upon chemical analysis of a basalt rock collected by Scripps scientists during the eruption of an undersea volcano, is reported in a recent issue of the scientific journal Nature.

"No one had considered that explosive vulcanism could have a significant effect on the total sea budget of some elements," Rubin said.

It had been thought that trace elements entered the ocean in water runoff from mountains that eventually reached the sea, he said.

The elements, including bismuth, mercury and zinc, occur only in small amounts, but often are essential to microscopic organisms such as bacteria and plankton at the start of the food chain.

"The trace elements are the poorest understood elements in sea water, and some of them act as nutrient for life forms and some are poisons to life forms," Rubin said.

Rubin and J.D. Macdougall, chairman of Scripps' Geological Research Division, studied a piece of shiny basalt about the size of a football.

Scripps scientists recovered the rock from the south Pacific Ocean when a volcano, just 150 feet below the surface, erupted under the research vessel Melville, surprising and frightening scientists who were tossed about as gas bubbles several feet wide burst onto the ocean surface.

The volcano is in the Macdonald seamount, west of Tahiti and southeast of the Cook Islands. The Oct. 11, 1987, eruption was the only undersea eruption ever witnessed, he said.

The scientists also conclude from the chemical studies that seawater pulsing through the holes and channels in the volcano's crust seals any cracks where thousand-degree hot magma might escape. As a result, the pressure inside the volcano can build until powerful explosions expel the material into the water, Rubin said.

The hot magma solidifies as it hits the water. Without the explosive force, the gas bubbles that carry the elements would not form and the elements would remain in the magma.

Magma escaping slowly through seafloor fissures does not release the same elements as the explosions because they lack the pressure to form bubbles, Rubin said.

Using radioactive decay dating techniques, the scientists found that 98 percent of the isotope polonium 210 that should have been in the basalt rock sample was missing. They reasoned that it heated to a gas and entered the water.

In terrestrial volcanoes, polonium exists in magma in known ratios with other trace elements, which allowed the scientists to estimate how much of the elements entered the water.

The work could have importance someday for assessing ocean pollution, Rubin said.

If scientists could learn how much of the trace elements all undersea volcanoes deposit in the ocean each year, they might be able to detect significant additions from industrial sources, Rubin said. Industrial pollution includes many of the same trace elements the eruptions include, he said.

"If the ocean has been able to maintain the same level that long, how much are we allowed to perturb that cycle with industrial inputs?" Rubin said.

FAMILY MATTERS

ACOAs progress at individual pace

By JIM MAY, Ph.D.

May

DEAR FAMILY: Thanks to a good friend, I have been attending Adult Children of Alcoholics meetings for several months. I have really learned a lot about why I feel the way that I do and act the way that I do sometimes. My husband is very supportive and is even keeping the children without complaining.

When I told my sister about what I was doing she acted very funny. She said that she didn't think that our parents were alcoholic at all. She said that she didn't remember that alcohol was ever a problem in our house. That conversation ended with her changing the subject very abruptly.

I am positive that alcohol did play a very big role in the problems in our family. Now that I am writing my journal and am reading and studying, I can remember several occasions when my father was drunk. I can remember hiding in my room with the door shut and hearing them screaming at each other.

I know that all this happened. Should I try to talk to my sister more about it? She is very close to my father. She has always been the one to take care of him. She just has to know that even now he's drinking too much. I have felt so much relief just knowing that I'm not crazy that I want to help her out of her denial. What can I do? HAPPIER

DEAR HAPPIER: Continue to focus on youself and your recovery. There is very little you can or should do about your sister's denial. From what you have said she is still enabling your father's alcoholism and needs help for her co-dependency.

In the early stages of recovery, it is common to have an almost overpowering urge to share that peace with spouse, family and family of origin. That enthusiasm must be moderated. Managing the compulsion to "fix" everyone and everything is a recovery issue too.

Fight the ACOA's tendency to be overly responsible. Let this go for now. Continue your journey to health. As the saying goes in recovery, "When the student is ready to learn, the teacher will appear."

DEAR FAMILY: My 23-month-old daughter whines. It is driving my crazy. Whenever she doesn't get her way, she hangs on me and talks in this dejected little voice that just sounds awful. I have found myself sometimes doing what she is whining about just to make her stop. I know that's not the right thing to do, but what is? I have tried everything that I know from, scolding to spanking. FRUSTRATED

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Don't get caught up in the "Whining Game." There are two parts to changing the game.

First, make certain that you have eliminated all the physical and environmental contributors to her whining, such as hunger, sleepiness or illness. Keep a record of when she whines and make certain she is on a consistent sleeping and eating schedule. If you see a pattern to her whining correlated with an environmental event, such as not eating all of her lunch, then change the pattern.

The second part is difficult. I have never found threats of punishment to be effective when dealing with whining. Many experts feel that whining is not just a cry for attention, it is a call for help. Try to help your daughter identify why she is whining. You can then tell her to talk to you in her "big girl voice."

You must tell her you aren't going to give in to her whining anymore, and then do not give in. Do not give her what she wants when she is whining. If you have to walk out of the room, do it. Praise her use of an appropriate tone, "It is so nice when you ask for what you want in your big girl voice."

Dealing with whining takes lots of resolve, and requires that the parents not model the behavior by whining too. Be consistent and follow the two steps.

Time rolls back when teen learns to drive car

By MICHAEL GRANT
Copley News Service

Most of the time, my daughter looks impossibly grown-up. She is suddenly 15 years old, a sophomore in high school, which is amazing for this little girl who could not have been born much more than day before yesterday.

But there she stands, looking very grown-up. Sometimes she looks older than 15. I am sure there are times when she feels older than 15. Occasionally she shows signs of feeling as old and as wise as her parents.

Fathers have no choice but to adjust to this sudden grown-upness of 15-year-old daughters. I was making good progress until lately, when I encountered an amazing phenomenon. She is just dying to drive a car, can't wait another minute, does not know how she will ever survive the nine months until her 16th birthday. She is forever asking, "Can I drive?" and occasionally she does, up and down the driveway or on back roads on the way to fishing holes.

When she slides behind the wheel, this amazing phenomenon happens. The clock starts to speed backwards. Years start to melt off the girl. Her nose shrinks to a button, her face becomes baby-soft and round, and her eyes grow huge with innocence and delight.

Then the child becomes 15 and begs to practice driving. The child slides behind the wheel and regresses to the womb. Suddenly the parent becomes aware of this opportunity to confess his or her own adolescence right in front of the child. It is all part of a grand scheme.

I sit on the passenger's side and look at my daughter behind the wheel. Her back is ramrod-straight. Both hands are on the wheel. One foot is flat on the floor, the other is on the pedals. Her eyes are locked straight ahead. She is the epitome of focus.

"I got my driver's license when I was 14," I say. There was a time, not long ago, when I taunted her with that line. Now she doesn't hear.

"The fastest I ever drove a car was 105 miles per hour," I say. She doesn't hear. "If you pull the automatic transmission into low, and stomp on it, then turn off the key and quickly turn it back on, you will produce a backfire that will awaken households for 10 square blocks," I say.

She doesn't hear me. I don't bother telling her about the drivers with green teeth. I don't tell her about intervals and stopping distances and new rain on the roads and the perils of T-intersections and the rear-view mirror as a defensive device and keeping an eye on the car beyond the car in front of her and the price these days of a new headlight unit. I don't tell her about insurance. I don't even let myself think about that. Ruins the moment, you know.

Researchers: Blood pressure may be reduced by controlling temper

By RAY FORMANEK Jr.

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — A study of anger could help determine if hypertension can be handled by teaching hotheads and people who sit and simmer how to handle the emotion more appropriately, a researcher says.

"There must be at least a hundred studies out there showing that blood pressure and anger are related, but no one has tried to change the way a person expresses their anger in order to lower their blood pressures," said West Virginia University clinical psychologist Kevin Larkin.

"We're not certain if anger causes high blood pressure or if high blood pressure causes difficulties with expressing anger. "We're hoping if we teach people to express their anger appropriately, their blood pressure will come down."

Larkin's study, funded by the American Heart Association, will test the effect of a 12-week training program on people with borderline or moderate high blood pressure. Half the subjects will receive assertiveness training and learn relaxation techniques. A control group will receive no training. Both groups' blood pressures will be tested before and after the training.

The training includes role playing and "stress innoculations," he said. "We teach people how to handle their stress and then expose them to little bits of stress and anger situations. We then increase the potential anger so they get used to handling bigger and more intense anger problems."

The trained group should be able to express anger without hurting others, react in a more subdued manner to provocation and have lower blood pressures at rest. "We're confident that we'll be able to show the first two. We're keeping our fingers crossed on being able to lower baseline blood pressures."

The training helps alleviate two types of responses shown to be harmful: "anger-in," in which the response is suppressed, and "anger-out," in which it is vented aggressively. "The anger-in person feels bad because they didn't express their anger openly," Larkin said. "The anger-out person feels pretty guilty because they attacked or offended somebody else. In both cases, people feel pretty lousy about themselves."

A third type, "reflective coping," in which anger is handled rationally after tempers have cooled, has little effect on blood pressure, he said.

DEAR ABBY

Comments on family photos focus on pleasure, pain of past

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You requested opinions from readers in response to a question posed by the mother of a child with a repaired cleft lip. This mother asked if displaying the "before" photos of her daughter in the family album was appropriate now that the defect had been corrected by surgery. Her husband felt they should not be displayed, and you said, "Display them only with the daughter's approval."

As the mother of a 13-year-old daughter born with a cleft lip and palate, I personally feel that the pre-surgery pictures should be included among other family pictures. To exclude them would make the child feel that you were ashamed of the way she looked at birth.

However, I think your suggestion of honoring the child's wishes when she is sufficiently mature to express them is a valid one.

Abby, please let your readers know about the National Cleft Palate Association. This organization is dedicated to advancing the health, welfare and education of children and adults with cleft palates and craniofacial irregularities. There are chapters and support groups all over the United States. (I am president of the New Orleans chapter.)

Parents and interested parties may call either (800) 23-CLEFT or (800) 24-CLEFT — both toll-free numbers — for more information about this non-profit organization. — LUCIENNE D. SIRAGUSA, NEW ORLEANS

DEAR LUCIENNE: Thank you for writing. My mail contained some diverse opinions concerning whether the pre-surgery pictures should be placed in the family album. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I feel I must write about the little girl who was born with a birth defect that was corrected by surgery.

I had a tumor on my pituitary gland when I was very young. Because of this tumor, my growth was stunted and as a child I was short and fat.

My mother took a lot of pictures of me as a child. I was not a very pretty sight. Fortunately, surgery corrected this condition and enabled me to grow normally. I am 18 years old now, and all the misery of my stunted growth and fat body is now a thing of the past.

Last year, I went through our family album and removed all the pictures of me when I was a short, fat and miserable child. Then I tore them into little pieces. Why should I have to relive all those painful memories? Once was enough! Thank God they are over. — HAPPY IN FLORIDA

DEAR ABBY: I'm so mad I don't know where to begin. The lady's daughter was born with a cleft palate and had corrective surgery at 4 months old. You said to put the pre-surgery pictures away until the girl was old enough to decide whether she wanted them in the album or not.

Abby, do you really think in a few years the child will feel comfortable putting those pictures back, when her parents weren't comfortable with them to start with?

My youngest son was born cross-eyed, but he had corrective surgery when he was 8 months old. I love my children for who they are — not what they look like. And I'm certainly not going to yank eight months' worth of pictures out of my family album.

I also hope parents of children born with irreversible defects don't feel ashamed to display pictures of their kids. — A PROUD MOM IN TACOMA

DEAR PROUD MOM: My mail ran 20-to-1 in favor of leaving the pre-surgery pictures in the family album. Most said to remove them would be attempting to deny reality. Many children wrote to say that they were glad they were shown pictures of themselves before their surgery. Some thought they looked "funny"; others said they appreciated the wonderful work their doctors had done.

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, and getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." Send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Seniors enjoy benefits of exercise

New York Times News Service

Helen Glashow is working out on a treadmill, panting faintly, her brow furrowed in concentration.

A red digital readout on the treadmill control panel registers 2.5 miles per hour. She will keep this up for 30 minutes or so, a routine she usually follows four times a week.

Similar scenes can be found in most any health club. What makes this one remarkable is that Glashow is 85, the "health club" she is using is a converted dining room of the Hebrew Home for the Aged in Riverdale, N.Y., and before she began her workouts last year she walked with a cane because of phlebitis and sciatica.

As the treadmill motor whirls and her walking shoes slap the belt, the cane is nowhere to be seen.

For many years as the exercise boom swept the country, the elderly were ignored where workouts, cardiovascular fitness and building muscle mass were concerned.

But in recent years, research has begun to show that the elderly who exercise can increase their strength and muscle mass, that their cardiovascular system will respond to exercise just as a younger person's will, that joints can become less stiff.

This has led some nursing homes to begin to introduce fitness classes. The Hebrew Home opened such a center last year and the residents who regularly attend the classes report that they feel better over all, are less stiff and find the activities enjoyable.

AS OFTEN happens when fitness programs are introduced into institutional settings, the impetus comes from someone high in management.

In this case it was Jacob Reingold, the home's executive vice president, who is an active runner at age 74. When told three decades ago that he needed knee surgery, Reingold shopped around until he found an orthopedist who suggested exercise instead.

"I have a very personal belief in exercise," he said, explaining why he pushed for what the home calls a "wellness center."

"These people tell me they feel better, their appetite is better, they sleep better, they can walk better," he said.

Response from residents here has borne out his belief about the benefits of exercise for the elderly.

"I feel more active; I can walk and move around better," said Clara Simon, 85, after one recent exercise class. Sue Shapiro, 78, also reported more ease of movement, and Joseph Kornbluh, 93, said, leaning on his cane after the session, "It keeps you from being so lazy."

Charles Bronz, the Hebrew Home's fitness coordinator who has a master's degree in physical education, uses armchairs as the center of the workouts.

The participants begin by sitting and performing arm and leg stretches, followed by modified sit-ups in which they slouch down in their chairs and then lean forward.

They hold elastic streamers in both hands and pass them under their feet or thighs and pull against the resistance to strengthen muscles.

They stand and hold the back of the chairs and do modest leg raises. Bronz's aim is to strengthen wrists, ankles, quadriceps, abdominal and hip flexor muscles.

ONE GOAL is to increase the length of an individual's stride. Anyone whose stride is under 16 inches is considered in danger of a bad fall that could lead to a broken hip, which often precipitates an irreversible decline in health. Bronz wants to get the stride length up to over 24 inches, considered low risk.

The arm waving and resistance movements can increase heart rate slightly, leading over several months to a cardiovascular training effect.

Bronz said some patients who entered the program with heart rates in the 100 range, considered high, had brought them down to a normal 70s range.

Pinning down the claim that the exercise has lowered the residents' heart rates would require a sophisticated study in which one group that exercised was compared with another that did not.

In a society that is often results oriented, administrators like Reingold must worry about proving the efficacy of what they advocate.

He must justify the money he has spent, prove that his program is beneficial if he wants to raise more money, whether for research or more staff, both goals he has.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Attitude toward aging should be changed

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Some evidence indicates that many people get ideas about older people from television programs. Recent studies show only 5 percent of prime-time characters are elderly, and they are nearly always portrayed in a negative manner. Many seniors are insulted by these televised images.

But television programming is not the only culprit. Media advertising has projected a fear of old age which is typified by the need to have "youthful skin" or "young hands." Old age is treated as disease, not a natural process. Consequently, many senior groups believe that television has been a major factor in spreading a negative attitude toward aging.

Unfortunately, advertising appears to have written off people over 65 as buyers of hearing aids and denture adhesives and not much else. Entertainment and advertising have been directed at young affluents. Older people were not often seen on television, and when they were they were supporting characters, not stars — except for the occasional superstar

In the past, old age began in one's 30s, and life expectancy was about 47. Today many young people believe old age is "somewhere in the 60s," until they reach that age themselves. Then "old" becomes "10 years older than me!"

"Old" is not matter of birthdays, but is an individual assessment. Unfortunately, many older people have accepted as true that they are "too old" at 60 or 70. They become "older" and begin to "act their age," accepting the myth that age means incompetence and nothingness. Yet people like Michelangelo, Gothe, Edison, Einstein and many others achieved great work in their 60s, 70s and 80s.

Evidence indicates that earning ability does not have to decline with age, but that vocabulary and conceptual skills may actually increase. Retirement years are a time a person has worked long and hard to achieve.

Retirement is meant to be lived and enjoyed, and it can be, with a positive attitude and a willingness to pursue opportunities and creative challenges that are waiting to be explored.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Delegation pushes Texas sites to lure $1 billion company

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Texas congressional delegation is backing efforts to lure U.S. Memories Inc. to one of 19 sites in the state competing for the private consortium's $1 billion computer memory chip plant.

"You never know until its done, but I think we would be very competitive," says Rep. Joe Barton, an Ennis Republican whose district includes three of the sites. "The Texas delegation has shown in the past that when we do work together we do have quite a bit of influence."

Sites in 14 states are vying for U.S. Memories' proposed complex, which would employ 3,000 people when it begins operation in 1993 and hopes to have sales of $1 billion by 1994.

In Texas, sites have been proposed in Austin, Dallas-Fort Worth, Houston, San Antonio and Bryan-College Station.

U.S. Memories, a consortium of seven private companies, will narrow its list of potential sites to about half a dozen by mid-October and will visit those areas before choosing a final site by the end of November, said company spokeswoman Joanne Howard.

The consortium of semiconductor and systems companies plans to use the plant to build DRAM — Dynamic Random Access Memory — computer chips, which are used in microwave ovens with memories, VCRs, computers and supercomputers. DRAMs also have defense ramifications, Ms. Howard said.

In a letter to Sanford L. Kane, president and chief executive officer of U.S. Memories, the Texas delegation cites the state's "major role in the semiconductor and personal computer industries."

In January 1988, Austin landed the much-sought Sematech semiconductor research consortium. Kane had been chairman of the site selection committee for Sematech.

"The fact we tree'd that last coon doesn't mean we're not interested in this new coon," says Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

"The state of Texas and all our cities have been very competitive in attracting new, large-scale economic development projects similar to the U.S. Memories plant," says the delegation letter that Gramm wrote and circulated with the help of Reps. J.J. "Jake" Pickle of Austin and Rep. Barton.

The letter says Texans voted to raise their taxes by $100 million to attract the Navy's Gulf Coast homeporting base to Corpus Christi, and will provide $1 billion for the Energy Department's superconducting super collider. The state also put up $100 million to win Sematech.

"Clearly, we have a record of being competitive second to no other state, and we expect our state and interested communities to be fully competitive for the U.S. Memories plant," the letter said.

The letter said the Texas sites offer competitive real estate already zoned for industrial use, needed infrastructure, utilities, job training assistance from the state, a lower cost of living, generally low taxes, a qualified and available labor force, and a "working spirit unmatched in the country."

Barton also cited the lack of a state income tax, a positive business climate, the state's central location and proximity to international markets to its south.

Gramm said lobbying for the plant would intensify once the short list is revealed, but "I didn't want to wait until we got to that stage — I wanted to be sure we weighed in early. We still want our dog in the hunt."

STATE in brief

9 tons of cocaine moved to Austin

HARLINGEN (AP) — A veteran of the war on drugs says recent large seizures of cocaine are not an indication that lawmen are winning the war.

"But while we're hitting them with salvos, we're not winning the war," Ken Miley, Drug Enforcement Administration resident agent-in-charge for the McAllen sector said Thursday. "I've been at this for 31 years, and it's worse than ever."

Miley's remarks came as officers escorted two heavily guarded rental trucks as they hauled the state's largest cocaine seizure from South Texas to a more secure location in Austin.

Agents continued Thursday to search for the owner of a house near Harlingen where the nine-ton cache was found.

Justice of the Peace Leo Longoria of Harlingen said three Mexican citizens arrested at the house Wednesday were arraigned Thursday morning on charges of engaging in organized criminal activity and aggravated cocaine possession.

Longoria said he ordered the three held without bond in the Cameron County Jail in Brownsville because of the magnitude of the case and because as foreigners they are considered high risks for fleeing the country.

The three arrested were identified as Hermenegildo Rivas Sosa, 51, of Matamoros, Mexico; Alfonso Tristan Gonzalez, 36, of San Antonio; and Guadencio Garcia, 38, of McAllen. All three hold resident alien status in the United States, Longoria said.

Stores ban publication

AUSTIN (AP) — The publisher of an alternative weekly said he may call for a readers' boycott against 17 area H.E.B. supermarkets, which banned the newspaper after an anti-pornography crusader complained about its personal ads.

"I hate to see them (H.E.B.) cave in to that kind of pressure with the feeling they're not going to get any pressure from us," Austin Chronicle publisher Nick Barbaro said.

A spokesman for the San Antonio-based grocery giant said Wednesday that H.E.B. had ordered removal of the Chronicle because the ads were too graphic. Activist Mark Weaver had charged that the ads promote homosexuality and promiscuity.

"The explicit nature of the classifieds was probably the deciding factor ... whether it's men seeking men or women seeking men," H.E.B. spokesman Mike de la Garza told the Austin American-Statesman.

The Chronicle is distributed at no charge in 500 outlets around Austin. Barbaro said about 2,000 copies are delivered by a San Antonio-based distributor every week to H.E.B., which has carried the newspaper for about a year.

Weaver, an ordained Baptist minister who has frequently lodged protests against publications and businesses that he claims promote pornography and homosexuality, said he will encourage Austin residents to seek the expulsion of the Chronicle from other "family-oriented environments."

In addition to features on city politics and the local entertainment scene, the Chronicle publishes a variety of personal ads in its classified advertising section under the headings "Men Seek Women," "Women Seek Men," "Men Seek Men," "Women Seek Women," and "Variations."

Discrimination discussed

AUSTIN (AP) — The NAACP's Austin branch threatened to file a federal complaint against the Texas Department of Human Services if discrimination charges cannot be resolved through negotiations.

"The Texas Department of Human Services is an agency that impacts the lives of over 1 million Texans every year ... It also employs thousands of Texans, including blacks and Hispanics," Gary Bledsoe, branch president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said Thursday.

"However, there is widespread discrimination practiced within the agency to the obvious detriment of these groups," Bledsoe told a news conference.

The NAACP branch said that blacks fill none of the 27 highest positions at the welfare agency, and that 75 percent of all agency employees terminated for insubordination are black.

Twenty-three agency divisions or sections have no black representatives, except for support staff, Bledsoe said. He said complaints have been made to the NAACP branch from Austin, Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, Abilene and Bryan.

Midland vs. Odessa: Football's title road

Bulldogs test Mojo

By BILL PRICE
Sports Writer

When Midland High takes the artificial surface at 8 p.m. today in Odessa's Ratliff Stadium the Bulldogs will be faced with a task nothing short of monumental proportions.

MHS will be playing No. 2-ranked Odessa Permian on its home field and becomes the fifth team this season to try to derail the Mojo express. The first four Panther opponents were unsuccessful in their bids to defeat Permian (4-0 overall and 1-0 in 4-5A), and few forecasters give the Bulldogs (1-3 and 0-1) even an inkling of a chance to win tonight.

However, Permian head coach Gary Gaines does show concern over a MHS offense that, after falling behind 32-7, came back to give Midland Lee a 32-27 scare a week ago. The Bulldogs, barring a few mistakes, could easily have been 2-2 and 1-0 in 4-5A.

"It really does concern me; not only their passing game, but their running game as well. James Lee and Albert Ray broke long runs last week and they're coming into this game with some momentum after last week's second half," Gaines said.

On the other hand, Gaines does feel confident in the abilities of his squad, which rolled to a 49-27 win over rival Odessa High last Friday. But will either team, coming off rivalries the previous week, fall victim to emotional bankruptcy?

Rebels host speedy OHS

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Editor

Midland Lee head football coach Earl Miller believes that the road to the state football playoffs goes through Memorial Stadium at 8 p.m. today when his Rebels take on the speed laced Odessa High Bronchos.

"I thought before the year started that Odessa High would be one of the teams in the running and one you would have to beat if you want to make the playoffs this year," said Miller. "Other than Permian, the Bronchos just might be the best team in the league."

With that said, it is little wonder that Miller is sweating blood as Homecoming game time approaches.

"We have to play our very best game in order to win," said Miller. "If we just play average, it could very well be another Killeen experience."

What has Miller worried is the fact that OHS possesses a fleet of swift feet that can burn you from anywhere on the field. It is this kind of team that can give Lee a lot of trouble.

For instance, the Lee defense has given up nine touchdowns this year. Six of those have been on plays that have covered 48 yards or more. Another was from 28 yards out. The other two have been on one yard runs. Midland High got a one-yard drive last week after a fumble recovery on the kickoff and Killeen had

Cubs even up with Giants; A's enter SkyDome lair

First things first in NL series

CHICAGO (AP) — First base is the first place to look to find out who's winning the National League playoffs.

Will Clark did it for San Francisco in Game 1. Mark Grace did it for Chicago on Thursday night as the Cubs won 9-5 to tie the series.

"I'm crazy if I try to compete with Will Clark. If you look at our stats, I'd be an idiot to try to outduel him," Grace said.

But so far, he's doing just fine. Grace got three hits and drove in four runs in Game 2, making him 6-for-8 with a homer, two doubles and six RBIs in two days. Clark singled and walked, making him 5-for-8 with two homers, a double and six RBIs.

"As a hitter, you have to tip your hat to him because he did the job. He's their clutch hitter," Clark said of his counterpart. "Someway or another, we are going to have to figure a way to get him out."

NOT MANY people did well against either Grace or Clark this year.

"They are two of the top players in the National League, if not baseball," Giants manager Roger Craig said. "They are both clutch hitters who always make contact and hit the ball hard someplace. They both can carry the club."

Clark batted .333 with 23 home runs and 111 RBIs this season. Grace hit .314 with 13 homers and 79 RBIs.

"This isn't about me versus him. It's about the Cubs and the Giants," Grace said. "The only time I'm worried about him is when I'm on defense and he's at the plate."

As it turned out, Grace made the play on Clark that blunted the Giants, catching a routine grounder with runners on first and second that ended the fifth inning and kept the Cubs ahead 6-2.

The Giants again won the home-run derby, hitting three more for a 6-2 edge in that department. But the Cubs, out-homered 141-124 by San Francisco this season, withstood the sluggers.

Meanwhile, Chicago had no trouble solving starter Rick Reuschel as the Cubs salvaged the split at Wrigley Field they needed.

Pitcher Mike Bielecki, the worst hitter in the major leagues, singled to spark a six-run first inning and Chicago then held the Giants at bay.

"Seems we got beat pretty good last night and weren't supposed to be on the same field with them," Cubs manager Don Zimmer said. "I didn't feel that way, and we showed it."

The Cubs bounced back from Wednesday night's 11-3 rout in a hurry. They chased the 40-year-old Reuschel with five hits, including an RBI double by Grace, and Jerome Walton capped the outburst against reliever Kelly Downs with his second single of the inning.

That, along with a three-run double by Grace that made it 9-2 in the sixth, was enough for three Chicago pitchers to withstand San Francisco's long balls.

KEVIN MITCHELL, who led the majors with 47 home runs, connected for the second straight night and singled twice. Clark extended his streak of reaching base to seven, while Matt Williams and Robby Thompson also homered.

The Cubs sent the series back to San Francisco even.

"We didn't expect to beat the Giants twice here," Grace said. "They're too good for that."

San Francisco didn't think it could win two, either.

"We came into this hoping for a split," Craig said. "But after we won the first one, we hoped to win the next one, too."

The next three games will be in Candlestick Park. Rick Sutcliffe (16-11) will start against San Francisco's Mike LaCoss (10-10) at 8:20 p.m. EDT Saturday.

The Cubs stopped Clark when it mattered most in Game 2, maybe because of a move Zimmer might have made one night earlier. Chicago led 6-2 in the fifth when the Giants put runners on second and third with two outs. Zimmer pulled Bielecki and brought in lefty Paul Assenmacher to face the left-handed Clark, who grounded out on the first pitch.

In Wednesday night's opener, Zimmer was second-guessed for leaving in struggling Greg Maddux — even though Assenmacher was warmed up — to face Clark with two outs and the bases loaded in the fourth.

Jays must stop Henderson

TORONTO (AP) — The Toronto Blue Jays have more to worry about than whether their dome is closed.

The Blue Jays trail the Oakland Athletics 2-0 in the best-of-7 American League playoffs. There's been a lot of talk about Toronto's 10-0 record when the roof is closed over the SkyDome stadium. But playing with or without a ceiling isn't the problem.

The problem is Oakland's Rickey Henderson.

"The roof is so high that I don't even notice if it is open or closed," said Jimmy Key, who pitches against Oakland's Storm Davis tonight in Game 3. "I am concentrating on other things when I am on the mound. The only thing you will notice on some days when the roof is open is a little more wind."

AL PRESIDENT Bobby Brown decided earlier this week to close the roof for tonight's game, and will decide later whether to open it for the other weekend games. The forecast is for afternoon highs in the 50s, so it could go either way.

"Some do prefer it closed," Toronto's Kelly Gruber said Thursday. "You seem to get a purer form of baseball when it's closed. It makes for a true game of baseball. You are able to see the pitches better. I prefer it closed."

The Blue Jays were 24-19 in the SkyDome with an open roof. They were 2-0 in games in which tghe roof was closedd after play had begun.

"I liked the other place better," Davis said of Toronto's old ballpark. "I pitched well in Exhibition Stadium. I pitched once in the dome. The ball carried well that time."

And how. Key and Davis pitched against each other in the dome on July 13 and Oakland won 11-7. Davis gave up seven hits and four runs in 3⅔ innings. Key allowed eight hits and nine runs in 4⅓ innings.

"I've had good games against them and bad games against them," Key said, "just like any other club."

Key, a left-hander, might be tougher to steal off of than righties Dave Stieb and Todd Stottleyre, Toronto's starting pitchers in the first two playoff games. The Athletics have 10 stolen bases in the series, seven by Henderson.

"Jimmy Key has an excellent move," Toronto manager Cito Gaston said. "But Rickey is probably the best baserunner I've ever seen."

HENDERSON was the center of attention Thursday in an escalating war of words. Toronto catcher Ernie Whitt was angry that Henderson stole second without a slide in the seventh inning of Game 2.

Henderson said he didn't slide because there wasn't any throw. Whitt said Henderson tried to show up the Blue Jays. Oakland manager Tony La Russa took exception to Whitt's comments.

"If he's taking it personal and he's embarrassed, he's a fool," La Russa was quoted as saying in a Toronto newspaper. La Russa said Thursday he did make the statement and then defended his team from Toronto's attacks.

"When you get to the postseason, there is a lot of emotion on both sides," La Russa said. "You celebrate. If I thought some of my people overdid it, I would be one of the first people to say, 'Keep it down.' I saw the Blue Jays celebrate a lot the last two months. Hey, you get happy when you do something good. Now that we've got something going good, I don't like some of the comments that make it sound like we're showing people up. We're excited that we're doing good, just as they would be."

Gruber, Toronto's third baseman, was upset with Henderson and with outfielder Dave Parker, who took a slow trot around the bases after hitting a home run in Game 2.

Grid history can prevent sleep

No matter how you slice your bread, tonight's meetings with Bronchos and Panthers will go a long way toward deciding who is District 4-5A's playoff representatives.

Williamson

First of all, Odessa Permian is the hands down favorite to gain one of the berths. The other is up for grabs. Midland Lee, Midland High and Odessa High are the only other three teams given a chance, unless you have been taken in by Abilene Cooper's 3-1 start.

Midland High and OHS stand to lose the most tonight since both lost last week. According to Tim McGraw, our 4-5A historian, history leans against both teams.

It's a grim story when you talk about the MHS-Permian series. Permian owns a 27-3 advantage in the overall series. You have to go back to 1973 to find the last time that MHS beat Mojo. It's been a long dry spell for the Bulldogs since that 21-8 victory. And for the most part, it hasn't been close. For instance, MHS has been outscored 119-0 over the last three years by the Panthers.

The story isn't quite as grim for the Bronchos. OHS only trails Lee in the overall series by a 15-13 margin, but Lee hasn't lost to OHS in the last six outings. Still, the games between these two teams in this decade have been closer than a Trac II shave.

It seems like the Bronchos would much rather play against Lee than cross town brother Permian. OHS hasn't beaten Permian since 1964 when one Larry Gatlin sang his way through the Mojo defense as the Broncho quarterback.

For OHS to make the playoffs, it seems reasonable that the Bronchos would need a sweep over the two Midland teams. You might also say that for the two Midland teams.

And that brings McGraw back for another bit of information. The two Odessa teams have swept the two Midland teams in the same year six times. Midland has never done that to Odessa. OHS and Permian pulled the sweep five times between 1962 and 1971 and did it last in 1980. The major problem here is that Midland High has beaten Permian only three times and both just once in 1963. Of course, Lee didn't come through that year.

Midland hasn't been very good in the sweeps. We trail Abilene, 6-3. Odessa has a 5-1 sweep advantage against Abilene.

Football history isn't always kind to Midland. Some of these facts prevent sleep.

This should be a big night for football fans. However, Norman Johnson, our "Sayer of Sooths" cartoonist, is 42 years old today. He will probably sleep through the whole thing.

After being perfect for the first week of the district campaign, here's how tonight's games look on paper:

Midland Lee 29, Odessa High 28: Lee's Farris Strambler needs 201 yards to reach 1,000. He may get it, but with the speed of OHS, this game will look more like a NASCAR race. The Rebels better practice drafting techniques...

Odessa Permian 40, Midland High 14: This is a sad story for a team that gave us a thrill last week, but the thrill is over and Mojo is 4-5A's reality this year...

Abilene Cooper 21, San Angelo 10: The Bobcats own the series by a 20-7-1 margin. However, this is 1989 and two San Angelo teams have a combined 0-7 record for the year. Some say the Bobcats couldn't win if they combined forces with Lake View...

Duncanville 28, Abilene High 7: At least Doug McCutchen will find the return to 4-5A a rewarding experience. This will be Doug's first victory at Duncanville after an 0-3 start...

Cowboys' Herschel Walker rejects trade to Vikings

IRVING (AP) — With few marketable players to use for bargaining to acquire fresh talent, the 0-and-4 Dallas Cowboys have tried to trade All-Pro running back Herschel Walker, according to published reports.

Walker rejected a trade Thursday that would have sent him to the Minnesota Vikings for "a slew of draft choices," officials said.

The Cleveland Browns also expressed interest in trading for Walker, but the running back's veto of the trade to Minnesota apparently silenced talks with other teams as well.

The Vikings sought Walker's approval of the trade, even though he doesn't have a no-trade clause in his contract with the Cowboys, because he has talked frequently about retiring from football.

Rumors of a possible trade of Walker to the Vikings swirled Thursday, but Cowboys owner Jerry Jones, head coach Jimmy Johnson and Walker refused to confirm them.

"I can't comment on that at all. You've got to tell me who tells y'all that stuff," Walker said after Thursday's workout.

Johnson was asked if it were possible that Walker could be traded. "I guess you could say nothing is completely out of the question," he said.

Meanwhile, a Cleveland executive said that team is interested in Walker now that fullback Kevin Mack has been jailed on a drug conviction.

"We have expressed interest and made an inquiry," Browns executive vice president Ernie Accorsi said Thursday night.

Mack was sentenced Tuesday to six months in prison after he pleaded guilty in August to a drug abuse charge.

Walker, 27, left the Cowboys' offices at Valley Ranch early Thursday morning and did not return until lunch. Walker said he had to take care of "personal business," and reportedly talked about a possible trade with agents Peter Johnson and Ralph Cindrich.

Johnson said Walker was excused from the morning meetings.

An unidentified "NFL executive who spoke Thursday with Vikings general manager Mike Lynn" said Lynn told him the tentative deal with the Cowboys was for "a slew of draft choices."

Reports early in the day regarding a potential trade of Walker revolved around Minnesota players Joey Browner and Darrin Nelson. Browner is an All-Pro safety who is seeking a $1 million contract, and Nelson has been the Vikings' leading rusher the past four seasons.

"Are there ongoing discussions? Yes. Have I had discussions with Dallas? Yes. Is there a deal? No," Lynn said.

Prior to the Cowboys' afternoon workout, Johnson called the trade reports "a rumor," but did not deny that Dallas and Minnesota officials had talked.

Jones also declined to deny that the Cowboys and Vikings had talked about a trade.

"Basically, there was no deal," Jones said. "I can't even say there was a deal at a conceptual level. It just never was on the table."

The Cowboys placed rookie defensive back Eric Brown on the injured reserve list Thursday.

Brown, a 5-10, 168-pound defensive back, strained a hamstring in practice Wednesday.

The Cowboys originally signed him as a free agent last spring. He was released prior to the start of the regular season and then re-signed for the developmental squad on Sept. 5. He was moved to the active roster Sept. 27 and played against the New York Giants.

Coach Jimmy Johnson said the Cowboys will fill Brown's roster position today.

Pari-mutuel racing returns to Texas

BRADY, Texas (AP) — Horsemen appeared more concerned with a nepotism rule, but the Texas Racing Commission warned about track safety as G. Rollie White Downs prepared to usher in the return today of pari-mutuel wagering in the state.

Racing commissioner Glenn Blodgett said the panel gave the track the go-ahead to open after he and inspectors walked around the complex Thursday morning and ordered a last-minute repair along parts of the inside back stretch.

Soil from the nearby infield had been removed, causing a troublesome slope that could affect horses' footing, Blodgett said. Material to pack down soft areas was being brought in, and workers would be attending to the problem areas Thursday night and this morning, he said.

Despite his warning, horse trainers said they were not worried about their animals' safety.

"I haven't seen anything to be concerned about," said trainer Jim Hodges of Bandera, who works with several horses. "The track's going to be slow because it's been so dry here."

Kenneth Farquhear, part-owner of the thoroughbred Devilkin, said he was not worried either.

"I don't think there's anything wrong with it. I've galloped horses all around it," he said. "I ain't got but a $450 horse."

Mel Pugh, the other owner of Devilkin, said he and his partner do look out for their horse's safety even though his purchase price was low. "But we're not worried about the condition of the track," Pugh said as he petted the large gray thoroughbred.

Landscaper Anatolia Medina plants shrubs in front of tote board as opening of G. Rollie White Downs in Brady nears.

Horsemen were, however, complaining to Blodgett and his staff about a state racing nepotism rule.

The racing commission regulation prohibits an owner or trainer from participating at the same track where a relative is a track veterinarian, jockey, apprentice jockey, horseshoer or race track employee.

Blodgett and Walter Smith, president of the Texas Professional Horse Trainers Association, told a group of horsemen that the racing commission would take up the matter Monday.

Meanwhile, presiding track steward Roy Manfredi said he had told the approximately 40 people affected at G. Rollie White Downs that only one of the family members could participate this weekend.

"It's not fair," said Hodges, whose son, Jamie, works the horse gate at the track. "We know what we're doing. We've been training horses for years."

Hodges said other states where his family races have no such rules and said both he and his son were planning to take part as planned at the Brady track.

Smith urged the trainers and jockeys to circulate petitions opposing the rule and said he believes the commission will change the regulation, which he claimed has been taken out of context.

"As long as we've got some communication between the commission and the horsemen, there's nothing that can't be worked out," Smith said, attempting to calm the trainers and jockeys.

John Hendley, track marketing director, said workers would be at G. Rollie White Downs throughout the night Thursday to have it ready to open.

"What we're trying to do now is just make it safe for everybody and get it cleaned up," he said. "Everybody's worked so hard for so long. They realize we're already to that point that we've been trying to get to."

Blodgett said track officials had yet to build a horse treatment area, isolation barn and a covered area for the horse ambulance. Also, the clubhouse was not complete and was not expected to be ready for opening weekend and a panning video camera stand was not ready.

Workers also were trying to finish the men's and women's restrooms, and Hendley assured they would be ready for use today.

"They felt like they could get ready, and we didn't want to deny them that right to try," Blodgett said."It's not going to be perfect, but it's going to be adequate."

Raiders need perfect game against Aggies

LUBBOCK (AP) — They've been tied up like a goat and beaten up, been forced to take their medicine and still have a lot of fight in them.

Now, Texas Tech Coach Spike Dykes says, the Red Raiders have to play a perfect football game.

Tech's opponent Saturday is 19th-ranked Texas A&M. If the contest is like the previous five played in Jones Stadium in Lubbock, the game will be close.

Three of the past five Tech-A&M games in Lubbock have been decided by one point: 21-20 Tech in 1979, 24-23 A&M in 1981, 28-27 A&M in 1985. Tech won 3-0 in 1983 and 27-21 in 1987.

Dykes and Aggie Coach R.C. Slocum prefer not to dwell on A&M's 50-15 rout of Tech last year in College Station, Dykes because it's too depressing and Slocum because it could make the team overconfident. Slocum remembers the 1987 game as the team's only Southwest Conference loss that season.

"They've usually already played some good teams," Slocum said in explaining why he thinks the games in Lubbock have been nail-biters lately. "They've always had a good crowd there, and they just outplayed us in the games we lost."

Both teams go into Saturday's game with 3-1 records, but the Aggies have won their sole conference game, against Texas Christian two weeks ago. Tech lost its conference opener last week at Baylor, 29-15.

The Bears passed for 347 yards and running back James Gray rushed 15 times for 78 yards — well below his average of 104 yards.

Baylor beat the Red Raiders "like a tied-up goat," Dykes said, adding that the loss "tastes bad, like castor oil, but it's not rat poison.

"I don't think our guys are going to turn belly-up. They've still got a lot of fight in them," Dykes said.

The A&M game is probably a bigger rivalry in the Tech players' eyes than for the Aggies, but Slocum said it's not for lack of ability.

"Tech is pretty far away and we don't hear as much about it as someplace down the road," he said. "On the other hand, it's a Southwest Conference opponent, and from that standpoint, it's a big rivalry."

Gray is Tech's only marquee player, and even those lights appear dim from the distance most Southwest Conference schools are watching. The Aggies have one of the Southwest Conference's premier running backs in Darren Lewis and a highly regarded linebacker in Aaron Wallace.

Soviet players play to mixed reviews as NHL opens 1989 campaign

Associated Press

It was a star-spangled night for Sergei Makarov and a pretty good one as well for Alexander Mogilny.

Others didn't fare quite so well Thursday night as the National Hockey League and several Soviet standouts began the season.

Makarov, a member of the Red Army's famed KLM Line, had a goal and two assists as the Calgary Flames opened defense of their Stanley Cup title with a 10-7 victory over the Detroit Red Wings.

Mogilny needed only 20 seconds to score his first NHL goal, helping the Buffalo Sabres beat the Quebec Nordiques 4-3.

"He's going to be a star in the league," Sabres coach Rick Dudley said of Mogilny. "It may take him a while to get used to the various subtleties in the league. He's got a great skill level and he seems to be a proud athlete who wants to excel, and those two things together make you a pretty good shot to be a star at some point in time."

Other Soviets were pretty much no-shows, some literally.

Viacheslav Fetisov and Sergei Starikov could only manufacture a point between them — an assist for Fetisov — in the New Jersey Devils' 6-2 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers.

Igor Larionov and Vladimir Krutov were both held without a point as the Edmonton Oilers beat the Vancouver Canucks 4-1.

Helmut Balderis, a 37-year-old forward making a comeback, was held pointless in the Minnesota North Stars' 6-5 victory over the New York Islanders. Goaltender Sergei Mylnikov didn't play for Quebec and Sergei Priakin didn't dress for Calgary.

Flames 10, Red Wings 7

Along with Makarov's big opening-night effort, Jiri Hrdina and Joe Nieuwendyk each scored twice for Calgary.

Oilers 4, Canucks 1

Jimmy Carson, Kelly Buchberger, Glenn Anderson and Mark Messier scored for the Oilers to put a damper on the start of Vancouver's 20th season in the league.

North Stars 6, Islanders 5

Brian Bellows scored twice and assisted on two goals as Minnesota recovered from a 1-8-1 exhibition record to win their first season opener in seven years.

Kings 4, Maple Leafs 2

Rookie Hubie McDonough scored a goal and added an assist to help Los Angeles beat Toronto in the debut of Tom Webster as the Kings' head coach. It was also the first game for Doug Carpenter as the Maple Leafs' head coach.

Bruins 5, Penguins 4

Cam Neely scored two power-play goals as the new-look Bruins opened their 66th season with a victory over Pittsburgh.

Canadiens 4, Whalers 1

Goaltender Patrick Roy continued his domination of the Whalers, stopping 30 of 31 shots.

Blues 8, Blackhawks 3

Sabres 4, Nordiques 3

Left wing Mike Hartman, known more for his fighting, scored twice for Buffalo.

Hartman, whose 316 penalty minutes led the team a year ago, was an unlikely hero in a game marking not only the debut of Soviet defector Mogilny but the Nordique debut of former Montreal Canadiens star Guy Lafleur.

Devils 6, Flyers 2

Sylvain Turgeon scored three goals in his first game with New Jersey and goaltender Chris Terreri got his first NHL victory as the Devils beat the Flyers.

the only drive for a score, covering 63 yards.

"Giving up the big play is a major concern for us," said Miller. "It's obvious we don't have the skilled talent we've had in the past in our secondary. We can get the kids on station, but you can't give them speed. Speed in our secondary is really lacking.

"In fact, after watching the Midland High film, we felt we played a good defensive game, but we made three mistakes and paid for them all. We can't afford to make mistakes because we can't recover from them."

The OHS offense is scary. The Bronchos put 27 points in lights against Odessa Permian last week and that was against a team that had given up only seven points in three previous games.

However, the Bronchos gave up 49 points on defense and that is what concerns OHS coach Jerry Taylor.

"We didn't even slow Permian's offense down last week," said Taylor. "We had hoped to do better than that. Until Friday, we had been pretty consistent on defense, but we didn't tackle against Permian and we didn't line up properly. We need a lot of improving if we want to be competitive."

Taylor knows this could be the game of the year for his Bronchos, who have not been playoff bound since the '60s, but he also knows that Lee will be a tough nut to crack.

"Lee is big and powerful," said Taylor. "They've just been stalking about in the shadows and I think they are about ready to come into their own. I know they'll be breathing fire when they play us."

Kevin Skinner has been the starting since the second half of the Lee game a year ago, and he can make teams pay. He can both run and pass and is one of the three Bronchos who went to the state finals in the sprint relay last spring. We're talking about state-class speed.

Tailback Patrick Brown is another of the sprint relay members and he can break from anywhere on the field. Receiver Dallas Cowan, the third relay member back this year, doesn't even start. But it shows that the Bronchos can even come off the bench with blazers.

"Skinner and Brown scare you to death," said Miller. "Those two are great athletes and they like to have the football. That can be a deadly combination."

Lee's attack has centered around running back Farris Strambler, who has 799 yards rushing through his first four games. He has had two 200-yard plus games this year, so is a threat to break the 1,000-yard rushing mark tonight, which would be the earliest of any Lee back in history.

"Strambler is a big part of Lee's offense, but you can't put all your eggs in one basket because they have great receivers and a good quarterback," said Taylor. "You have to defense the entire field. And I'm sure Strambler will come by every so often. We'll see enough of him, I sure."

Lee quarterback Vince Henderson doesn't pass often, but he has been effective. Two of his three TD passes this year have covered 93 and 79 yards. John Valles, Greg Rich and B.J. Parrish, who seemed to find a place for himself during the MHS game, have been the major targets for Henderson.

In fact, when you look at this game on paper, you have visions of the scoreboard rolling like a Las Vegas slot machine.

Last year, Lee won a 10-7 verdict on the toe of Arthur Donnelly. Donnelly is back for Lee and is coming off a game where he produced a career best 46-yard field goal against MHS. This game is expected to be a high scoring one, but Donnelly's toe could still play a big role.

BULLDOGS

"I hope there won't be a drop off in the level of play on our part. In this particular district you have got play at a pretty high level of performance week in and week out or you run the risk of getting beat," Gaines said. "And our play has been in spurts.

"We've had moments when we played well in all areas, but we haven't done that over a complete game yet."

What the Panthers have done is relied on an explosive offense. Not only can Mojo rely on the prowess of running back Chris Comer, wide receiver Lloyd Hill and quarterback Stoney Case, but also on running back Arvey Villa. Comer has 550 yards rushing this season with a hefty 6.8 yards per carry average and 10 touchdowns. Hill has caught 14 passes for 385 yards and five TDs, while Case has tossed eight scoring passes while completing 23-of-33.

Villa stepped to front of the line in the Panthers' 21-7 win over Marshall with 202 running yards in only 11 carries.

"We have been able to run the football with Arvey and Chris, and Case has done a good job of running the offense. Hill has caught some big passes, but I think where our offense has really improved is in the line. We have come on strong in that area the past couple of games," Gaines said.

"I don't think we can overpower anybody up front, but we're pretty solid"

"They're definitely a good football team or they wouldn't be ranked No. 2 in the state," said Davis Corley, MHS head coach. "They have got tremendous skill people. All you have to do is look at the stats to see that."

But playing Lee and Permian back-to-back is not an enviable schedule, even though Corley said the Bulldogs will try to make the best of the situation.

"It's always tough to play those two teams back-to-back. It's a little like last year. We had and emotional game against Lee (at 35-20 MHS win) then got beat by Permian (a 42-0 shutout). That's a thing we have got to guard against."

Even though he does not dwell on it, what Gaines said Mojo should guard against is overconfidence.

"I'm not too worried about overconfidence. This crew understands that they haven't played a complete game and that is what they will be striving for," he said.

That is not good news for MHS, but Corley still thinks his troops can compete if the 'Dogs can hang onto the ball.

"We played well in the second half against Lee and we played well in the second half at Lubbock Coronado (a 28-19 MHS loss). We just have to cut down on mistakes and play for an entire ball game," he said.

Banished Pete Rose
...finding another diamond

Rose still hitting at cool .500 clip

MILFORD, Ohio (AP) — Pete Rose is batting .500 since his banishment from baseball.

Rose put on a red, white and blue uniform Thursday night to play in a charity softball game. It was his first such appearance since he was banned from baseball Aug. 24 for illegal gambling.

He hit line drives, going 2-for-4. He played first base and spiked the ball after an inning-ending out. He also made an error — and laughed it off.

The former Cincinnati Reds manager was back in uniform, and he loved it.

"It feels good, but my knee still hurts," Rose said.

That's the knee that required arthroscopic surgery one year ago, during the same time period when then-National League president A. Bartlett Giamatti suspended him for one month for shoving umpire Dave Pallone.

Rose got a lifetime ban five weeks ago from Giamatti, the baseball commissioner, for his admitted gambling with bookies. Rose can apply for reinstatement next August from Fay Vincent, who became commissioner after Giamatti's death.

Since his banishment, Rose has kept a low profile. He has played in a couple of charity golf events and appeared on cable television selling memorabilia.

Several hundred fans turned out on a crisp autumn evening in suburban Cincinnati to watch Rose, Reds pitcher Tom Browning, and other local celebrities raise money for a local children's toy fund. Rose has been a regular in helping to raise money for the fund.

"I didn't play last year because I had that knee operation," Rose said. "I played most every other year. It's a situation where you hope you don't play because if you don't play, (it means) you're in the playoffs or the World Series."

For now, Rose will have to be content with what he had Thursday night — charity softball in all its glory.

The pitcher threw exploding softballs and one attached to a string that pulled it back into his hand. The players wore numbers usually reserved for spring training newcomers, although Rose wore his customary No. 14. Once the game ended, participants and spectators headed home to watch San Francisco play Chicago in the National League playoffs.

Texas Open leaders counting up woes

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Just call it the Hard Luck Golf Classic.

To hear Lanny Wadkins and the boys tell it, the leaders entering the second round of the Texas Open today could be on welfare or, worse, forced to be out there somewhere earning an honest living.

"It's my worst year since 1981," grumbled Wadkins after firing a record-equalling 62 to share the first-round lead Thursday with Tom Sieckmann and Mark Wiebe.

After 18 tour victories, he is winless in 1989 and has missed the cut in six of his last nine outings. He plunged from his usual lofty ranking to 63rd on the money list.

Wiebe's dilemma was even more dire. "The last two weeks I played so terrible," he confessed, "I didn't know if I could go on."

His last victory was at the Hardee's Golf Classic in 1986.

Sieckmann's troubles have been just the opposite. Said he:

"I've been playing the best golf of my life but the results don't show it. It's been a really disappointing year."

Sieckmann won last year at the Anheuser-Busch Classic but his 26 outings in 1989 have produced no trophies and only $82,500, which is 139th on the money list.

Dan Forsman provided still another tale of woe but it was good mostly for chuckles after his 63 left him alone at 7 under par and just one shot off the lead.

His pilot failed to show up in Salt Lake City Wednesday for the trip to San Antonio and he scrambled aboard a

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You have an opportunity to prove yourself a true pioneer in business. Progressive leadership will be rewarded with a promotion or pay raise in December. Concentrate on building up your assets so you will have the financial resources needed to strike out on your own when the right moment arrives. Art or music is a natural outlet for creativity. You could find a hobby becoming a second career next summer. Be careful not to ride roughshod over the feelings of that special person closest to your heart.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Archbishop Desmond Tutu, actress June Allyson, author Helen MacInnes, physicist Neils Bohr, poet James Whitcomb Riley.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look forward to a day when you can be both creative and loving. People will be putty in your hands. Comparison shopping should find wonderful bargains. Your social plans could hit a snag tonight.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Today you will communicate with great confidence. Tune in to everything you read and hear. Fresh plans beckon. Focus on personal and romantic associations rather than work this evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A great time to buy things you need. A new outfit will give your spirits a big lift. Repay a debt to stay within the good graces of a friend. Follow a strong hunch.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stick to projects already under way. A generous gesture does wonders for your popularity. Corresponding with someone who lives overseas could have a profound effect on your outlook.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Other people could be touchier than usual; this is no time to act aggressive or seek favors. A go-it-alone attitude is probably your best bet. A secret plan is right on target.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A friend or family member could act in an erratic manner. A message needs to be clarified before action is taken. Someone who brings bad news may be misinformed; refuse to panic.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Learn to be more self-reliant and you will save yourself some big disappointments. Follow your instincts in an affair of the heart. A pending wedding could be distracting your mate or partner.

The bidding:

6 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♡

Most of us complain that we are dealt few enough tricks in our bridge lifetime. Therefore, we must make every effort to husband those that are our due.

South's two-spade opening was natural and forcing. Over West's preempt, North felt three trumps and a ruffing value in diamonds made a bid of four spades preferable to a double. Since North was unlikely to have as much as an ace and a king for his competitive action, South decided a small slam was more than adequate.

West's king of hearts was the natural opening lead. Declarer called for dummy's ace, East ruffed and returned a trump, and declarer eventually had to concede a diamond for a one-trick set.

A pause for reflection before playing to the first trick would have enabled declarer to count 12 tricks—seven spades, three clubs and the two red aces. Therefore, the spade slam was unbeatable as long as declarer did not indulge in a trick-reduction play. Since West almost surely had a seven-card suit to jump to four hearts, putting up the ace of hearts for East to ruff away is a prime example of that type of folly.

To preserve his 12 tricks, declarer should simply play low from the table at the first trick, retaining the ace for a later role. Declarer can then ruff the heart continuation, again playing low from dummy, draw trumps and cross to the table with a trump. The ace of hearts serves as a parking place for declarer's losing diamond, and the small slam is in the bag.

Comedian includes jokes on deafness

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Nightclub comedian Katherine Buckley makes clear that she's unashamed of being legally deaf. In her act, she even pokes fun at the hearing device she wears.

"Women love it when guys kiss them on their hand, move up to their shoulder and neck and stick their tongue in the ear," she told an audience in Arlington. "Do that with me and he gets electrocuted."

Ms. Buckley, who grew up in suburban Cleveland, has become a fixture on the Los Angeles nightclub circuit after only 15 months.

At first she thought people were laughing at her slight speech impairment, "but now I can sense that the laughter is sincere. People really think this stuff is funny."

Ms. Buckley said she was touched when she found 80 hearing-impaired fans waiting for her as she left a Houston club after a recent show. But their praise was a bit hard to understand.

"Can you imagine 80 hands all going at once?" she said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Independence is paramount to Mikhail Baryshnikov, who recently quit the American Ballet Theater after nine years at its helm.

In the Oct. 8 issue of Parade magazine the Soviet-born dancer recalls from his childhood "this absolutely pathological urge to be independent from everybody."

"I still do want independence," he said.

Baryshnikov, 41, defected when the Bolshoi Ballet visited Toronto in 1974. He since has expanded his artistic horizons in movies and on Broadway, and he's become adept at capitalism, successfully hawking his line of dancewear and introducing a new perfume.

Independence also prevails in his personal life.

Baryshnikov, who remains unmarried, has two children — 8-year-old Alexandra, by actress Jessica Lange, and 3-month-old Peter, by ballet dancer Lisa Rinehart.

"Am I handicapped? A weirdo that I cannot deal with it? Or am I too selfish?" he said. "My idea about the family ... it's not everybody's idea. My close friends — that's my family."

Peterson

PLUM, Pa. (AP) — Cassandra Peterson, hostess of the television show "Elvira — Mistress of the Dark," is no stranger to blood and gore, but she says killing animals for fur makes her sick.

Ms. Peterson is miffed that Nikki's, a suburban Pittsburgh nightclub, will give away a fur coat to the winner of an Elvira look-alike contest Oct. 28.

"I'm amazed that someone could be this discourteous to someone whose image they are stealing," Ms. Peterson said Wednesday from her home in Hollywood, Calif.

"Fur used to turn my head and now it just turns my stomach," said Ms. Peterson, who drives a black Mercedes around Hollywood with a license plate that reads "Ban Fur."

Peterson's manager, Mark Pierson, said he contacted Nikki's owner, Nick A. Veltri, and offered to substitute a fake fur or an Elvira pinball machine as prizes.

Veltri said he declined the offer for the fake fur and never was offered a pinball machine.

"The fur is here. It's already dead," Veltri said.

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — A heritage center and Lawrence Welk museum planned for the site of the Welk family farm recently got a boost from the bandleader himself.

Sharon Eiseman, secretary-treasurer of Welk Heritage Inc. in Strasburg, said on Thursday the Lawrence Welk Foundation of Santa Monica, Calif., sent a $35,000 check two weeks ago.

Welk Heritage hopes to raise $750,000 for the project. Eiseman said the Welk check is to be used for fund-raising efforts, paying a curator-coordinator and getting construction under way at the old farmsite three miles northwest of Strasburg.

Welk Heritage is looking for a local fund-raiser, Eisemann said. The group had been negotiating with a national fund-raising company.

Shirley Fredricks, Welk Foundation executive director and Welk's daughter, said her 86-year-old father is in good health and "is honored to think that people in the state, friends and family would do this."

Although he is retired, Fredricks said, her father comes to the foundation offices each day to check the mail, play pool and putt on an office putting green.

Brando

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Marlon Brando says MGM-UA studios excised crucial scenes from his new movie "A Dry White Season," weakening the film's anti-apartheid message.

"I think they made a money decision. If I know corporate executives, especially in the movie business, I know they were thinking of the money," Brando said in an interview to be shown on "Saturday Night With Connie Chung" this weekend.

"They did not take into consideration the benefits that might befall people in Africa who are suffering as a result of the policies of apartheid," Brando said, according to a transcript supplied by CBS News.

"They're hoping I will go away like some evil wind," Brando said. "But they're mistaken because I'm not gonna go away."

Mary Stevens Hardy, MGM-UA's director of corporate communications, did not return a telephone call seeking comment.

FORT WALTON BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Comedian Bob Hope and retired Air Force Col. Bob Gates have been friends ever since they endured a harrowing flight together in a crippled airplane over Alaska 47 years ago.

Hope and Gates, a resident of this Florida Panhandle city, renewed their acquaintance before the entertainer performed in a benefit for military widows and dependents Thursday.

Together, they recalled the flight.

"It was my first trip overseas. Gates was the co-pilot on the way to Anchorage, and he almost killed us," Hope cracked.

Gates was a 21-year-old pilot when he was assigned to fly Hope and other entertainers around Alaska and the Aleutian Islands on a United Service Organizations tour during World War II.

"We took off and went to 14,000 feet over Cordova to miss the mountains," Gates recalled. "We got all iced up, lost an engine, the radios went out and only by the grace of God did we escape being killed."

To compound the problem, it was after dark and Elmendorf Air Force Base where they were trying to land was poorly lighted.

"We circled in, broke through the murk and clouds and there was the airport," Gates said. "That was the worst hour and a half I ever spent in an airplane in all my 44 years of flying."

Hope and Gates keep in contact by telephone and the entertainer visits every other year or so to put on a show for the Air Force Enlisted Men's Widows and Dependents Home Foundation.

Employed edges up in Texas

DALLAS (AP) — The state unemployment rate fell to 6.3 percent in September, a sharp drop of 1.2 percent, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said today.

The decrease can be attributed to students leaving the work force and returning to school, said Nic Santangelo, a bureau analyst. He said an estimated 516,000 Texans were looking for work last month.

"Although it's a significant (change) ... still it is not one that we can make anything good about yet until we see more information develop," Santangelo said.

"We are just about where we were last spring overall. Except for some summer dynamics, we really haven't changed too much," he said.

The state's jobless rate in August was 7.5 percent. A year ago in September, Texas' unemployment rate was 7.1 percent.

Mining, construction and financial sectors are still losing jobs compared to a year ago, Santangelo said.

In addition, the trade and manufacturing sectors, the combination of which forms more than one-third of the state's economy, are showing almost no growth, he said. Trade has grown seven-tenths of a percent over the year for manufacturing just three-tenths of a percent.

"That pretty much lays the ground for the sluggish aspect," Santangelo said.

Meanwhile, the The nation's civilian unemployment rate edged up 0.1 percent to 5.3 percent in September as a rise in joblessness among adult men more than offset a decline among women, the government said today.

Trump bid met with skepticism

By JOHN A. BOLT
AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Donald Trump's $7 billion buyout proposal for American Airlines was met with skepticism by analysts who wonder if the billionaire developer really means it or is after another quick buck through stock plays.

"That seems to be a popular question," said Duff & Phelps Inc. analyst Robert Decker Thursday after AMR Corp. revealed Trump's proposal.

Trump wrote AMR Chairman Robert L. Crandall offering to pay $120 for each of AMR's 58.9 million shares of stock. The deal, if completed, would be the largest airline takeover ever.

In Thursday's trading, AMR closed $16.87½ higher at $99.87½ a share in heavy trading on the New York Stock Exchange. Other airline stocks also jumped in related speculation.

Government officials, concerned about the effect of high levels of debt in the industry, also viewed the deal unfavorably.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, a member of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation, called for the immediate adoption of legislation approved by a committee Thursday that would require Department of Transportation approval for airline takeovers.

Others called for the Department of Justice to review the deal for antitrust violations because of Trump's previous purchase of the Northeast shuttle from Eastern Airlines.

The proposal followed weeks of speculation about airline takeovers, much of it centered on American, the nation's largest carrier with 21.8 percent of the domestic market.

Trump said his offer would expire on Oct. 20; AMR said it would consider the proposal "in due course."

But the Fort Worth-based airline added, "There has been no change in (AMR's) policy and belief that AMR and its shareholders will be best served by AMR remaining an independent company and continuing the strong partnership among American Airlines, its employees, the communities it serves and the public."

Analysts said the company's response could involve selling assets, including jets or its computer reservations system, or searching for a friendly buyer to compete with Trump.

Trump said he was prepared to put up at least $1 billion in equity in the deal.

Some of the concern over recent airline takeovers has focused on foreign participation, but Susan Heilbron, executive vice president of the Trump Organization, said Trump has no foreign partners in the deal.

AMR and analysts questioned Trump's financing, but Ms. Heilbron, said further details would be discussed with AMR officials when they meet with Trump, although no meeting has been set.

"I think Wall Street is skeptical," said analyst Kevin Burke, who follows airlines for First Union Corp., a bank holding company in Charlotte, N.C.

"One reason is Trump's history," he said. "He has a history of coming off better off in these deals" than if the buyout has gone through.

In many cases, Trump has accumulated stock in companies and suggested he planned takeovers, only to sell out at a profit after the price rose on ensuing takeover speculation or when another bidder emerged.

"I'm very skeptical of everything this man does," said Andrew Geller, an airline analyst at Provident National Bank in Philadelphia. "He wants to put (AMR) in play and make profits from it."

Trump no stranger to bluffing

Trump

NEW YORK (AP) — Developer Donald Trump has made ambitious and splashy acquisitions that have earned him the title of tycoon. But like a high-stakes baccarat player in one of his Atlantic City casinos, he also has made some profitable bluffs.

"I keep a lot of balls in the air, because most deals fall out, no matter how promising they seem at first," Trump says in his best-selling book, "The Art of the Deal".

His shrewd acquisitions have expanded his empire of hotel-casinos and prime Manhattan real estate. Most recently, Trump purchased Eastern Airlines' lucrative Northeast shuttle service for $365 million in early June, pledging to turn it into "an absolute diamond."

In July 1987, Trump took control of Resorts International Inc., a New Jersey gaming and real estate company he won in a takeover battle. He sold Resorts last year to entertainer Merv Griffin.

Trump has added other jewels to his crown: the landmark Plaza Hotel near Central Park; Trump Tower on Fifth Avenue; Trump Plaza; several casinos in Atlantic City, N.J., and the Bahamas; buildings in West Palm Beach, Fla.; and undeveloped land holdings.

But not all his deals have ended up by putting properties in his hands. Trump also has made takeover feints at Golden Nugget Inc., Pan Am Corp. and United Airlines parent Allegis Corp., now called UAL Corp.

In each case, he accumulated shares in the company — sometimes later indicating he might possibly be interested in mounting a buyout — and later sold all or some of his shares at a profit after the price rose on the ensuing takeover speculation or when another bidder emerged.

Texas bank failures set record

Associated Press

With Thursday's announcement of the state's 114th and 115th bank closings of the year, 1988 is officially erased from the record book as the state's worst year for bank failures.

There were 113 bank closings last year, a mark that was tied last week.

On Thursday, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation announced bank closings in Arlington and Strawn.

Commonwealth Bank of Arlington's two offices will reopen Friday as branches of Comerica Bank-Texas, FDIC officials said.

Strawn Security Bank of Strawn will reopen on Friday as a branch of the First National Bank of Albany, FDIC officials said.

Comerica Bank-Texas is assuming about $78 million in 23,100 deposit accounts and will pay a purchase premium of $2.377 million. It will purchase about $54.5 million of the failed bank's assets, including $3.1 million in small loans.

The FDIC will advance $21.1 million to Comerica Bank-Texas and will retain assets with a book value of $24.7 million.

Texas Banking Commissioner Kenneth W. Littlefield blamed the Arlington bank's failure on the board of directors' inability to correct previously identified financial problems and previous management's lending policies. Loans to current and former directors had resulted in substantial losses, he said.

Strawn Security Bank had assets of $14.6 million. The First National Bank of Albany will assume about $14.2 million in 2,600 deposit accounts and will pay a purchase premium of $83,254. The FDIC is advancing $12.1 million to the Albany bank and will retain assets of the failed bank with a book value of about $12.5 million.

Clinton Manges asks court for Chapter 11

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Four creditors of south Texas oilman Clinton Manges asked a bankruptcy judge to put him and his Man-Gas Transmission Co. under Chapter 11 protection.

The move stopped a Seattle bank that also is a Manges creditor from selling some of his oil leases.

Patrick Deely, a San Antonio lawyer who represents Seattle-First National Bank, said the four creditors are all friends of Manges. The bankruptcy court has temporarily put on hold the bank's foreclosure of Manges' mineral interests in Webb and Duval counties to pay off a $55 million judgment for business loans dating back to 1979.

First National has not decided how they will proceed, Deely said.

Former San Antonio bankruptcy judge Bert Thompson, who is representing the four creditors, said Wednesday that his clients filed the request to prevent First National from taking all of Manges' assets and leaving nothing for other creditors, including them.

"If the bank takes over all the assets, that wipes out the other creditors," Thompson told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times.

Under Chapter 11 reorganization "everybody gets an equal shot" at recovering part of the debt owed them by Manges, he said.

The creditors, M.W. Huan, Duard A. Howard, Morris D. Jaffe and David W. Myers, claim that Manges has not paid more than $475,000 in overdue loans and bills and that Man-Gas owes the group nearly $220,000.

Court documents show that Huan, a San Antonio real estate developer, claims Manges owes him $453,000. Huan also claims that Man-Gas owes him more than $149,000.

Howard, of San Antonio, said Manges owes him $8,000 and that Man-Gas owes another $20,000.

Jaffe, another San Antonio real estate developer, requested $10,000 for loans made to Manges.

Boeing workers on strike, block a gate at the Wichita Kansas plant.

SEATTLE (AP) — Boeing Co. supervisors worked Thursday on production of jetliners close to delivery as a strike by 57,000 Machinists union members continued with no new talks in sight.

Boeing chairman Frank Shrontz apologized in a telegram to Defense Secretary Richard Cheney for any delays the strike might cause in delivery. Boeing manufactures structural components for the B-2 bomber and other military planes.

If the strike continues, "delivery delays of our products will be inevitable, but we will keep you apprised of our progress," Shrontz told Cheney. "We hope the strike will be short-lived."

Also Thursday, industry analysts said the strike's outcome could set a trend for contracts at other aerospace companies.

No new negotiations were scheduled in the Boeing strike that began Wednesday when a three-year labor contract expired without agreement over a new pact.

Strikers include 43,300 in the Seattle area, 12,000 in Wichita, Kan., 1,700 in Portland, Ore., and smaller numbers at a half-dozen other locations.

Boeing spokesman Harold Carr said company officials met Wednesday to discuss the strike "but I'm not going to characterize them as to what was discussed, nor would I want to go into any detail as to what might happen next." He said he was not aware of any further meetings Thursday.

Union officials have said they'd be willing to resume talks at any time, but haven't heard from Boeing.

"The company is mute," said spokesman Jack Daniels. "They're doing their aristocratic aloof act."

MARKETS

Crude futures weaken further

From Staff Reports

Petroleum futures were reported at mid-morning down 3 cents to $19.93 per barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

On Thursday, crude futures prices weakened further, continuing a correction in the oil market rally of recent days.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the price of West Texas Intermediate Crude for November delivery fell below $20 per barrel. It finished Thursday at $19.96 a barrel, down 19 cents.

Traders cited technical reasons and new bearish fundamentals for the declines.

A correction had been anticipated after the recent runup, and the bearish news included a report by the U.S. Department of Energy that confirmed earlier industry statistics on a rise in U.S. gasoline inventories. That led to new worries about an apparent drop in demand.

Also contributing to the selloff was a report from a Malaysia meeting of oil exporters which aren't members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. According to the report, representatives of the non-OPEC group said they wouldn't discuss output curbs. But the exporters hadn't been expected to resume cuts announced early this year only for the second quarter.

Dollar stuns markets with resilience

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was rising in Europe early today, stunning the markets with its resilience against higher European interest rates. But trading was calm.

Gold prices moved lower.

West Germany's central bank led the interest rate increase on Thursday by pushing up its key interest rates a full percentage point. The central banks of Britain, France, Switzerland and other European countries responded by raising their rates as well.

The move was designed to curb inflation and steady their currencies, but it failed to weaken the dollar.

The market was waiting for the release of U.S. employment figures for September, which were expected to show a flat jobless rate of 5.2 percent and a rise in non-farm payrolls of 279,000.

Strong job data could provide the dollar with the momentum to rise further, a U.S. dealer in Frankfurt said.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose 1.40 yen to 142.45 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted higher at 142.85 yen.

In London, the dollar rose against the British pound. It cost $1.606 to buy one pound, cheaper than $1.61 late Thursday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $363.40 a troy ounce, down from late Thursday's $365. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a higher recommended price of $363.60.

In Zurich, the bid price was $363.60, down from $364.75.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $2.91 to close at a bid $364.20.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.16 a troy ounce, down from Thursday's $5.27.

Foreign rate rise blunts stock rally

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices hovered in a narrow range Thursday as a round of increases in European interest rates blunted the rally that has carried the market to record highs this week.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 2.47 to 2,773.56, hitting a new high for the third straight session.

Since the start of the week the average has climbed 100.74 points.

Advancing issues and declines were evenly balanced in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 741 up, 743 down and 494 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 178.89 million shares, down from 194.59 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 213.91 million shares.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Mine workers join ranks with AFL-CIO

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United Mine Workers of America, independent of labor's umbrella organizations since its legendary leader John L. Lewis broke ranks more than four decades ago, has requested affiliation in the AFL-CIO.

The 14 million-member AFL-CIO received the request from the UMW's executive board Wednesday and members of the federation's executive council were being polled by telephone. The board is expected to unanimously welcome the UMW.

The UMW's strike against Pittston Coal Group, meanwhile, has grown more divisive and expensive to both sides as it turns six months old.

Phillips, Northwest Pipeline agree to share San Juan Basin interests

BARTLESVILLE (SWN) — Phillips Petroleum Co. and Northwest Pipeline Corp. have entered into an agreement that gives both companies a shared working interest in some 111,000 acres in the San Juan Basin area of New Mexico and Colorado.

Under the agreement, Phillips will hold an 82 percent working interest in the acreage, with Northwest holding the remaining 18 percent interest. Phillips will become operator for most of the acreage and will establish an office in Farmington, New Mexico.

As a result of the new agreement, Phillips and Northwest contemplate increased production from the acreage.

The two companies also expect prompt development of the Fruitland coal seam formation to produce coalbed methane gas. A drilling program is now beginning.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Options can perform as poorly as 'junk bonds'

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I wouldn't touch "junk bonds" — those rated lower than BB by Standard & Poor's Corp. and Ba by Moody's Investors Service, and therefore below investment grade — with a 10-foot pole. And I certainly won't invest in a mutual fund holding that junk.

Thanks to your column, I now know that junk bond mutual funds are called "high yield" or "high income" funds. They are ashamed to put "junk" in their names.

That clues me in on mutual funds holding corporate bonds. But what about "treasury" and "government" bond mutual funds? Some of them have "high yield" in their names. Surely, they don't invest in junk bonds.

A. No, but many of them deal in options. As a result, some of their performances have been as bad as corporate junk bond funds.

Doyle

As the name indicates, a "government" fund uses the money investors pay in to buy securities issued by the U.S. Treasury and federal agencies. A "treasury" bond fund usually buys only U.S. Treasury securities.

Many government and treasury funds with "high yield" or "plus" in their names sell options on the bonds they hold and collect fees, called "premiums," from those sales. By doing that, a fund increases its income and the distributions it can make to fund shareholders. The rest of the fund's income and distributions to shareholders is from the interest the fund collects from the bonds it holds.

In theory, this is great. In practice, it often has terrible results. An option gives the buyer the right to purchase securities at a price set when the option is written.

When bond prices rise, the buyer "calls" the bonds from the fund. That reduces the value of the fund's portfolio. When bond prices fall, the fund keeps the bonds on which the calls were written, but the premiums collected on the calls seldom offset the drop in the bonds' market prices. Either way, the total value of the fund's portfolio — and the value of fund shares — decline.

You should see that the option-selling technique works well only during times when bond prices remain unchanged. Given the gyrations in the bond market, such periods are few and far between.

Nevertheless, many of those funds have used options to boost distributions to shareholders despite the unhappy fact that this resulted in driving fund share values down. As a result, shareholders have seen the values of their investments go down, down, down.

Q. It seems unethical, to say the least, for high yield and government and treasury mutual funds to include option premiums in the yields they pay to shareholders.

Why is this allowed?

A. It's not, any more. The Securities and Exchange Commission finally cracked down. The percentage yield that type of mutual fund now quotes in its literature must come from interest it collects, minus fund expenses, and passes on to shareholders as dividends. Option premiums no longer can be added to the stated yield.

But there's no way the SEC can stop every broker or other salesperson from mentioning higher distributions, while keeping mum about the erosion of fund share values.

Q. By word and deed — including a handwritten calculation, a copy of which I have enclosed — a broker assured us of a 12 percent annual return on what you will see he called a "safe, conservative" high-yield government bond fund. The $25,001.90 we invested on Dec. 2, 1986, is now worth $18,456.90.

In much correspondence, copies also enclosed, I asked to recover our $6,456 loss, plus the approximately expense we incurred in the loan we took out to make this "investment" and the $385 per quarter gain in value originally projected. I have been refused.

Do we have a leg to stand on, if we file a complaint with the National Association of Securities Dealers?

A. You might recover your loss through NASD arbitration. Your only hope is that handwritten broker's note. However, your correspondence does show you received the fund's prospectus, which explains there is risk involved. Frankly, you should have studied the prospectus.

In March, Trump acquired Eastern Airlines' profitable Northeast shuttle for $365 million, adding it to an empire built mainly on huge real estate holdings that include hotels and Atlantic City, N.J., casinos.

Trump said his experience with the shuttle has given him "substantial insight" into airline competition and he praised AMR management for putting the company "in a unique position to respond to an increasingly competitive environment."

Trump said he intended for current management to continue running AMR and "work with me to build on the company's reputation as the premier airline in the industry."

AMR is considered an attractive candidate because of its dominant market position, gates in many regional airports, airliners on order and ownership of the industry's largest computer reservation system.

Ms. Heilbron said Trump believes AMR "has a terrific asset base, stellar performance and opportunity for growth. .. It's a wonderful company."

The recent wave of airline takeovers, including the $3.65 billion buyout of Northwest Airlines parent NWA Inc. and pending $6.75 billion employee-management takeover of United Airlines parent UAL Corp., has brought renewed government scrutiny of the business.

BLUFF

With Allegis, for example, Trump is believed to have paid around $50 a share for his 4.9 percent stake, which exceeded 2.5 million shares. He later reportedly sold them at nearly $74, netting around $80 million on the deal.

Trump also sought and received federal antitrust clearance to buy up to 15 percent of Federated Department Stores Inc.'s shares in 1988, although he never made a buyout offer. He is estimated to have netted $100 million on his investment in Federated, which he made two weeks before Canadian retailer Campeau Corp. launched a hostile, and ultimately successful, bid.

In Trump's latest move, a $7 billion buyout proposal for AMR Corp., parent of American Airlines, his strategy is different. He came out openly with an outright buyout proposal in a letter to AMR Chairman Robert L. Crandall — offering to pay $120 a share in cash in a deal that would be the biggest airline buyout ever if completed.

Trump's letter provided no details on how the mammoth takeover would be financed.

Trump's track record of making runs at companies has made some financial analysts wary of his intentions concerning AMR.

"I'm very skeptical of everything this man does," said Andrew Geller, an airline analyst at Provident National Bank in Philadelphia. "He wants to put (AMR) in play and make profits from it."

Wall Street showed its skepticism. AMR stock closed Thursday at $100 a share, up sharply from $83 on Wednesday but well below Trump's bid of $120.

Trump is believed to have discreetly snapped up AMR shares in recent weeks, keeping his holding below 5 percent of AMR's total outstanding shares — the level at which the stake must be reported to the SEC. Observers speculated Thursday that the developer paid around $70 to $80 a share — allowing him a tidy profit if he sells out.

Still, his reputation could be on the line. Because he's made his buyout intentions official this time, Trump has to be prepared to have his bluff called by AMR or this could be "his last deal," Geller suggested.

Trump insists he's not in it for the money, except as a "way to keep score."

"The real excitement is playing the game," he says.

GM, Chrysler plan joint venture

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — In a move that underscores a long-term change in the auto industry, General Motors announced Thursday that for the first time it would establish a joint venture with its smaller competitor, Chrysler Corp., to make manual transmissions and other components.

The deal will combine GM's Hydramatic plant in Muncie, Ind., with Chrysler's New Process Gear plant in Syracuse, N.Y.

A total of 4,100 employees is involved.

The companies said in a joint announcement that a Chrysler subsidiary, Acustar Inc., would have 64 percent of the equity ownership and GM the rest.

Farmers encouraged to protect themselves from lung diseases

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Respiratory diseases that were once lumped together as "farmer's lung disease" have now been diagnosed as a variety of different syndromes affecting agricultural workers.

Farmers can protect themselves against the diseases — which include silo fillers' disease and silo unloaders' disease — through better ventilation and protective masks, said Dr. Michael Bauer of Bassett Hospital in Cooperstown.

Bauer was among a number of health professionals speaking Wednesday at the New York Farm Bureau's Health and Nutrition Conference.

Farmer's lung disease itself now refers to an allergic reaction to microscopic organic material, usually mold, which causes the lungs to swell. The symptoms include chills, fever, shortness of breath, coughing and aches. Over a long period of time, the allergy can lead to scarring of the lungs.

Silo fillers' disease occurs when farm workers breathe the toxic gases emitted by crops stored in silos.

The gases, forms of nitrogen oxides, are released within 48 hours of the crops being stored and can burn the lungs.

Silo unloaders' disease, also known as organic dust toxicity syndrome, is a reaction to dusts and molds that accumulate at the top of rotting silage.

Better ventilation of silos can help prevent those diseases, he said.

Dr. B. Dale Wilson of the Roswell Park Cancer Institute in Buffalo said farmers are not adequately informed about the health threats they face.

"They're out on the farm all the time and nobody warns them about skin cancer," he said.

Farmers need to protect themselves against the sun by wearing hats, sunglasses, lip balms and sunscreens with a protection level of at least 15, Wilson said.

They should also be on the lookout for the warning signs of skin cancer, he said. Dark spots on the hands, thickening of skin, scaly patches and blood vessels on the surface of the skin are signs of sun damage and the possibility of cancer, he said.

"These can be treated," he said. "Don't wait until it's big."

Moles should be checked if they are asymmetrically shaped, have irregular borders, vary in color or change size rapidly, Wilson said.

Factors that increase the risk of getting skin cancer include heredity — people with light hair and fair skin are more at risk — and the aging process.

"The older you get, the body loses its ability to repair itself," he said.

Heredity and aging can't be helped, he said, but exposure to the sun can.

"That's the only thing you can change."

Other speakers at the conference discussed the effects on farmers of fatigue and stress, cholesterol, lyme disease and high blood pressure.

Herbs gaining popularity and that's no chive

WASHINGTON (AP) — Something is happening to herbs. They're no longer just for gourmet cooks and snooty restaurants, says Agriculture Department economist Cathy Greene.

From the well-known garlic clove to jasmine and foxglove, herbs are used for such diverse purposes as cooking, landscaping, bridal wreaths and aromatherapy.

According to recently released 1987 census of agriculture estimates, there has been a dramatic increase in U.S. herb farming, Greene said. The acreage rose 122 percent between 1982 and 1987 and the quantity harvested jumped 248 percent.

Greene, writing in the October issue of Agricultural Outlook magazine, said food service and retail suppliers are enlarging their herb-growing operations and are building new high-tech packing houses to handle the crops.

The International Herb Growers and Marketers Association, for example, has more than doubled its membership from 450 only three years ago to 1,050 today.

But Greene, who works for the department's Economic Research Service, added Thursday in a telephone interview that no, herbs aren't about to crowd wheat and soybeans off the charts, at least not yet.

Aromatherapy is something new in the scent world. Greene said it's hard to define satisfactorily, but it has to do with fragrances affecting human well-being and attitudes. Something like that.

"We know that use of fresh culinary herbs has skyrocketed," she said. "But right now there's no way to get a good estimate of their total value."

Why the herb surge? One reason is the availability. Herbs garnish produce counters virtually in every supermarket.

"Instead of having to go to a restaurant and having them served to you, where they have made special arrangements to get herbs, having them available at grocery stores has made a difference," Greene said.

Sometimes herbs can be marketed through several channels. For example, both fresh and dried rosemary is available at some supermarkets. And it's also sold as a potted plant at herb garden nurseries. Farm markets often carry rosemary wreaths during the winter.

Garlic is also sold for cooking, as a dietary supplement, and is braided with dried flowers for sale as decorations by upscale kitchen boutiques and farmers' markets. It's supposed to ward off vampires, too.

Feverfew is used in herbal landscaping design, and some medical reports suggest it may be effective in preventing migraine headaches.

Fall weather ideal for growing vegetables, planting shrubs, trees

Don't put up your garden tools yet. There's still lots of gardening left to do. And what better time to be gardening than during the beautiful days of fall when the harsh elements of summer are over but you still have some great growing weather.

Kiker

Fall weather is ideal for fall vegetable gardens, planting woody trees and shrubs and many flowering annuals and perennials. During fall weather, soils are warm but not too warm. And soil moisture is usually better in the fall due to late summer rains. The combination of these two factors lead to better root growth and plant performance.

Other bonuses of fall growing is less aggressive weed and insect pests. During spring and summer pests can wage a stiff battle and sometimes come out ahead, but by fall most insects and weeds are on the decline.

In addition to being easy on plants, fall is easy on the gardener. Even if you are an occasional gardener, fall should be your gardening season of choice. Milder air temperatures and less harsh winds make it a pleasant time to be outdoors.

Since there are so many things that can be done in the yard and garden at this time of the year, let's just look at one ... fall flower gardening. Color can be extended into the season with careful plant choices.

Some of the plants that will give you a good fall color show include, pansies, stock, dianthus, chrysanthemums, dusty miller, petunias, snapdragons, flowering cabbage, flowering kale, calendula and carnations. Many of these are available as transplants in your local nursery right now. Before setting out your transplants, be sure to take time to clean up old pest-infested plant material and weeds. Improving the soil with some organic matter will also help with plant performance.

And don't forget about the existing plants in your landscape that will continue to bloom right up until frost. Geraniums, marigolds, dahlias, coreopsis, lantana and more. These plants can be kept at their best with proper watering, fertilizing and pest control. Deadheading or pinching faded blooms off will encourage and prolong blooming.

While planning your fall colorscape be sure to use plenty of one color to get a good color impact. Use, at the very least, six plants of the same color for color impact.

Another principal that will help you make decisions about plant and color choice is the color wheel. Complimentary colors, analogous colors and monochromatic colors are some color schemes you can look into.

While you are outside tending your fall colorscape, be sure to take a snapshot of your colorful landscape, patio, flower bed, container garden or garden and enter your landscape in the Flowering Plants Fall Color Contest, sponsored by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Midland County Horticulture Task Force, Midland Association of Nurserymen and Keep Midland Beautiful.

Anyone can enter the contest and everyone is welcome. Midland County will be divided into three sections for residential entries and one division for apartment dwellers. Three winners will be selected from the entries in the four divisions, making a total of 12 winners. Entries will first be prejudged according to photo entry and the final winners will be selected by an on-site judging.

Entry forms may be picked up at your local nursery/garden centers or at the Midland County Extension Service at 2445 E. Highway 80. Photos should be attached to the entry forms and either delivered to the Extension Office or mailed to the Midland County Extension Service at P.O. Box 1070, Midland, Texas 79702.

Family of prisoners held hostages

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Twenty relatives of political prisoners and "disappeared" people held 13 hostages at the Costa Rican Embassy to protest repression by the rightist government but said they would leave today.

The group, the Federation of Committees of Mothers and Relatives of Political Prisoners, initially took 16 hostages when they stormed the embassy compound Thursday.

But Ambassador Jesus Fernandez was taken from the embassy in an ambulance later in the day and two other diplomats were allowed to leave the offices.

Fernandez, who had heart bypass surgery two months ago, appeared to be breathing with difficulty as he left the building. He was taken to a hospital and then sent home, the ambassador's wife, Janine, said.

The 20 human rights activists, who were mostly women, allowed Consul-General Humberto Murillo and First Secretary Rene Aldama to leave the third-floor offices to talk to Fernandez's wife through the back gate.

The consul said four women and nine men were still being held. Also in the offices but not being held hostage early today were four journalists, three of them Americans.

A spokeswoman for the group said on condition of anonymity that the activists would leave the embassy today.

The action was to draw attention to alleged human rights violations under the rightist government that took power June 1 and to pressure the administration "to take concrete measures" to end the decade-old civil war, the spokeswoman said.

The Federation of Committees for the past eight years has protested the kidnapping and killing of suspected leftists by rightist death squads.

Fernandez said some of the activists were armed. He did not say what weapons they carried, but reporters saw what appeared to be a handgun tucked into the pantwaist of one woman.

There were also several packets of what looked like fuses wrapped in newspaper.

In a communique late Thursday, the government said the demonstrators were armed with grenades and handguns. It called the takeover "a flagrant violation of the human rights of the people taken hostage."

The government statement said the takeover was intended "to frustrate the dialogue process," a reference to preliminary peace talks with leftist guerrillas that began last month in Mexico. They are scheduled to proceed Oct. 16-17 in Costa Rica.

Fernandez said the hostage-takers made no specific demands or stated conditions for eventually abandoning the embassy.

"They have made their point," he said.

Several dozen soldiers and police surrounded the six-story embassy building shortly after the takeover. But Fernandez asked that the cordon be lifted, and by early today only 20 troopers manned unobtrusive positions around the block.

The government of President Alfredo Cristiani considers the group — as well as dozens of other union, peasant and human rights organizations — leftist guerrilla fronts.

More than 70,000 people have been killed since a leftist guerrillas began their war against a succession of U.S.-backed governments a decade ago. Human rights groups say many victims have been civilians slain by right-wing death squads.

Cristiani's party, the Republican Nationalist Alliance, has been linked to the death squads. After taking office, Cristiani said he planned to introduce draft legislation giving the police, armed forces and courts a freer hand against suspected subversives.

Opposition political, union and human rights organizations have described the proposed measures as totalitarian.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Government to free jailed black leader

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government will free jailed black leader Walter Sisulu but is irritated by Western pressure to negotiate with his African National Congress guerrilla movement, according to news reports Thursday.

Foreign Minister Pik Botha, as well as several pro-government newspapers, criticized comments this week by U.S. State Department official Herman Cohen, who said he expects the white-controlled government to legalize outlawed groups and begin talks with them within nine months.

The state broadcasting company belittled a French plan to invite South African officials and leaders of the African National Congress to a conference in Paris.

Sisulu, 77, the outlawed group's general secretary, was sentenced in 1964 along with Nelson Mandela and other ANC leaders to life in prison for plotting ani-government sabotage.

The Citizen, a Johannesburg daily, quoted an unidentified government source as saying the Cabinet had decided to free Sisulu but said the source refused to give a date. The newspaper said black activist Oscar Mpetha, 80-year-old leader of the United Democratic Front, also was likely to be released.

Mandela, considered by many blacks as their paramount leader, is unlikely to be freed this year, The Citizen said.

The Daily Mail newspaper in London quoted diplomatic sources Wednesday as saying Sisulu and Mpetha would be freed before British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher goes to Malaysia for the annual Commonwealth summit conference on Oct. 18. Mrs. Thatcher has been criticized by other Commonwealth leaders for her refusal to impose tough sanctions on South Africa.

Second strike begins in France

PARIS (AP) — Premier Michel Rocard's government won a battle with prison guards, who gave up a weeklong strike, but tens of thousands of civil servants marched in the capital Thursday in another labor dispute.

In eastern France, police went to a Peugeot auto plant in case they were ordered to expel militants, and the government appointed a labor expert to mediate the strike.

Unions representing nurses, police officers, firefighters and public transport workers have either threatened walkouts or staged short work stoppages this week.

Rocard, a Socialist, told the National Assembly on Wednesday that the disputes were "worrisome, very worrisome in some respects, (but) far from being catastrophic."

Bomb explodes at office

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — A bomb placed at the office where ex-president Raul Alfonsin works exploded before dawn Thursday, damaging the doorway and shattering windows.

The two-story building was empty at the time, but a woman who lives nearby was cut on the arm by glass shards, police said.

No one claimed responsibility for the blast.

President Carlos Menem, who was elected May 14 and took over from Alfonsin on July 8, said the incident was "terrorism of the lowest kind" that only "animals or beasts" would do.

Alfonsin remains the president of the Radical Civic Union, Argentina's second-biggest political party. His office is located about four blocks from Congress in this capital city of 11 million.

An East German refugee is helped with her bag shortly before a train left from Warsaw carrying at least 663 of the refugees to new lives in West Germany.

East Germany in turmoil as anniversary celebrated

BERLIN (AP) — Huge red banners proclaiming the triumphs of four decades of socialism flap in the breeze outside the austere Communist Party headquarters in East Berlin.

But as East Germany today begins an extravagant two-day celebration of its 40th anniversary, it is in turmoil.

A generation reared on socialist verities is deserting the country by the tens of thousands, saying their homeland is unbearable. And dissidents have dug in for a long struggle for democratic reforms in one of Eastern Europe's most tightly controlled societies.

The desperation of many East Germans was underlined this week in Dresden, where thousands of people shouting "We want out" swarmed the train station hoping to jump on freedom trains rolling to the West. They were refuffed by police, and some of the would-be refugees were bloodied in the riot.

East Germany's aging leaders have rejected the need for democratic and economic reforms. And while the economy remains the envy of their East Bloc neighbors, frustration is boiling over because virtually every facet of life is controlled from above.

"I had to join the Communist Youth League and other organizations or I never would have been allowed to study, to get a degree or get a good job," said a 30-year-old chemist.

"We're treated like children and patronized by petty officials who do everything but tell us when to go to the bathroom."

The mass flight West is the No. 1 topic for those left behind.

"The place is falling apart, and for good reason," said a 39-year-old truck driver from East Berlin.

"For years they told us to work hard, that things would get better. But it was a terrible lie. After awhile you ask yourself what this is all for because it's getting worse, not better."

Many are outraged at the way East Germany's state media have portrayed daily life in the country and the resulting flight of refugees West.

"The gap between reality and what is officially said has grown too great," said a 25-year-old East Berlin engineering student. "It used to be just a joke, now it's an outrage that people are finding more and more difficult to tolerate."

He called the 40th anniversary celebrations "an empty farce."

The exodus of thousands of East Germans over Hungary's newly-open border and the desperate flight of thousands more to West Germany's embassies in Czechoslovakia and Poland has deeply embarrassed the hard-line government.

Those who have fled say they can no longer endure the nation's tough policy on travel to the West, its intolerance toward dissent and pluralism and an economy that is still fraught with shortages and distribution problems.

Many of their compatriots left behind agreed in conversations Thursday in East Berlin. They declined to be identified because they feared reprisals.

East Germans still wait for up to 15 years for a new car and 10 years for a new apartment.

New Colombian official named; Bombs explode

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — President Virgilio Barco named a new justice minister to lead Colombia's crackdown on drug traffickers after they sent death threats to the previous official and reportedly warned other candidates for the job.

His government also announced plans Thursday for a referendum on whether suspected drug traffickers should be extradited to the United States.

Late Thursday, two bombs exploded at a supermarket and a bank in Bogota, injuring two people, police said. The explosions were believed part of the traffickers' violent response to the government's unprecedented 7-week-old crackdown on drugs.

Since Aug. 23, when cocaine chieftains declared a "total war" against the government, traffickers have been blamed for 148 bombings that have killed 10 people and wounded 165.

A government spokesman said Roberto Salazar Manrique, former treasury official and deputy director of the national bank, accepted the job as justice minister.

But five people, including three government officials, turned down the post after receiving death threats from drug traffickers, according to Colombian news reports.

Traffickers from the powerful Medellin cartel are blamed in the 1984 slaying of Justice Minister Rodrigo Lara Bonilla. Since 1981, about 50 judges and 170 judicial employees have been killed.

Traffickers also threatened Salazar's predecessor, Monica de Greiff, who quit on Sept. 21 after disagreements with President Virgilio Barco on the country's anti-drug policy. Salazar becomes Barcos' ninth justice minister.

As justice minister, Salazar heads the government's war against trafficking. He processes extraditions of Colombian drug traffickers to the United States.

As part of emergency measures declared during the crackdown, the government revived Colombia's extradition treaty with the United States.

Cocaine bosses have enjoyed relative impunity from Colombian courts through payoffs or intimidation of judges and they want the government to reverse its stand on extradition.

So far just one suspect has been extradited, but proceedings are under way against another. Two more are being held pending the arrival of U.S. documents asking for their extradition.

Barco's plan for a referendum on the extradition issue was announced in a communique late Thursday. The vote could come as early as January.

The naming of a new Justice Minister came as part of Barco's second Cabinet change in three months. Communications Minister Carlos Lemos Simmonds was named interior minister.

Replacing him at the Communications Ministry will be Enrique Danies Rincones, the former governor of Guajira state.

The army late Thursday caught three alleged hired assassins just before they were to meet with leaders of the Medellin cartel, according to national television news.

The army reportedly caught the two men and one woman on a farm in Versalles, in the state of Antioquia, which includes the city of Medellin.

The three were reportedly waiting for Pablo Escobar and Gonzalo Rodriguez Gacha, who together with Jorge Luis Ochoa, are thought to control the Medellin cartel.

The Barco administration has offered a $250,000 reward for information leading to the capture of Rodriguez and Escobar, both on the list of 12 Colombian drug figures most wanted for extradition.

The Barco government declared war on the traffickers following the Aug. 18 assassination of leading presidential candidate Luis Carlos Galan, an anti-drug crusader.
