Pentecostals in buff

VINTON, La. — Police were bemused when a driver wearing only a towel got out of a car, then sped off. They were dumbfounded when the Pontiac Grand Am hit a tree and disgorged 20 people wearing nothing at all. "The Lord told them to get rid of all their belongings and go to Louisiana. So they got rid of all their clothes and pocketbooks and wallets and identification and the license plate off their car and came to our gorgeous state," Vinton Police Chief Dennis Drouillard said.

Freed child killer says he's scapegoat in broken system

By Roy Bragg
Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — For two months, Raul Meza has occupied a gray area between the law and the public's trust, a nether region created by a bureaucracy that can't deal with him and a society that doesn't want to.

Convicted, imprisoned and now free 11 years after committing the most ghastly crime — the rape and murder of a child — Meza is a man without a home.

Since his June 21 release from a prison, Meza has been met with protests in a half-dozen Texas towns and cities when his presence became public knowledge. He is now living in the South Texas town of Uvalde, whose residents have demanded he move.

By his own admission, Meza's case is one that has slipped through the cracks.

Jurors return guilty verdict; murderer faces 5 to 99 years

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

Tears of joy and sorrow poured in the 238th District Courtroom late Thursday night after jurors found John Odren Gillum guilty of the Feb. 26, 1990, murder of 14-month-old Holly Bigler.

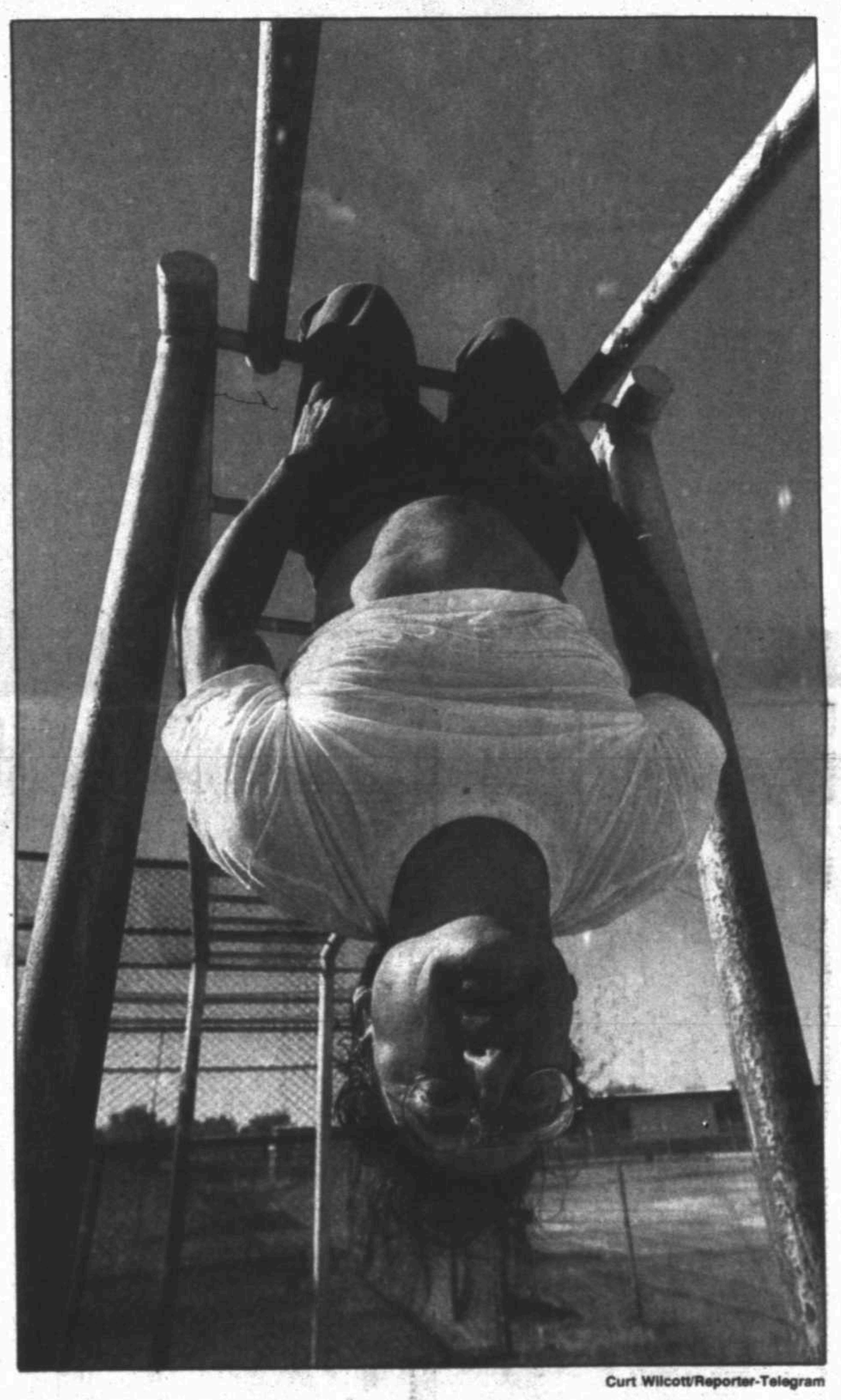

The jury returned the verdict after more than six hours of deliberation. Gillum's wife began to openly sob in the courtroom and Pam Bigler, Holly's mother, wept softly after the jury was dismissed for the evening.

Gillum, 26, faces five to 99 years in prison for the murder. He took the stand before lunch Thursday and admitted that he violently shook the toddler during a fit of rage, causing the child's death.

Gillum, who was living with Holly's mother at the time of the death, was baby-sitting the child while Ms. Bigler was at work.

During his testimony he said he

Trade deficit surges; Fed boosts dollar

■ Sheer size of June shortfall, $12.1 billion, startles trade experts, markets.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. merchandise trade deficit soared 44 percent in June to the highest level in five years, the government said Thursday, prompting a massive effort by the Federal Reserve to prop up the value of the dollar.

The startling trade report, far worse than economists had predicted, sent the value of the U.S. dollar tumbling toward a new post-World War II low against the Japanese yen. To halt the fall, the Federal Reserve intervened in foreign exchange markets by purchasing huge quantities of dollars.

"It was heavy and direct intervention and it came in waves," said economist David Jones of Aubrey G. Lanston & Co. "That means they mean business."

Americans bought more clothing, televisions and computers from abroad in June, widening the deficit to $12.1 billion, the largest gap since February 1988, the Commerce Department said.

The deterioration was produced by a 3.3 percent drop in exports to $37.6 billion and a 5.1 percent jump in imports to a record $49.7 billion.

Economists said U.S. exports are suffering, primarily because the severe downturn in Western Europe's economy has depressed demand for U.S. goods.

At the same time, American businesses seeking to improve their efficiency in a soft U.S. economy are buying foreign computers and communications equipment. And U.S. consumers haven't lost their appetite for imports, particularly Japanese cars and electronics.

Commerce Secretary Ronald H. Brown said the report "underscores the impact of slow global growth and the need to pursue export opportunities aggressively."

Brown said "the Clinton administration places high priority on expanding

Central Texas hot, dry records melt

AUSTIN — Firefighters, bats and even the Dallas Cowboys were looking for rain Thursday as Austin tied records for consecutive days without rain and for 100-degree or hotter days.

The record-tying 54-day dry spell has sparked about 220 brush fires, a lack of insects and nearly intolerable heat.

San Antonio also tied a record Thursday with its 54th consecutive dry day.

Forecasters said the odds for breaking the two Austin records were nearly 100 percent.

Texas Monthly's Big Rich list cost goes down: $110 million

Bad news. Winning Saturday's $25 million Lotto Texas drawing won't do it. You still need at least $110 million to play this game.

And some things never change. With a net worth of $3.35 billion, up $100 million from last year, entrepreneur and sometime presidential candidate Ross Perot remains the biggest rich of all.

UTPB must grow to remain viable school, president says

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

The University of Texas of the Permian Basin must grow to remain a viable four-year school for the basin, Charles Sorber, president of the university, told members of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association on Thursday.

For UTPB to survive, Sorber said the school must grow from its present 2,300 students to at least 4,000, and to do that UTPB would have to convince students that its programs were of high quality.

Sorber, who became president of UTPB in 1992, said it also would be necesssry to give the school the look and feel of a

Bosnian leaders: Final settlement is close

GENEVA (AP) — Bosnia's Muslim leader laid down conditions on Thursday for a peace accord with rival Serbs and Croats, and Serbia's powerful president later said that everything was in place for final agreement.

President Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia said after daylong talks with Bosnia's warring factions, "We made big progress. . . . I believe we have now all conditions which are needed for a final settlement."

Earlier, Bosnia's president Alija Izetbegovic spelled out conditions for ending the 16-month-old Bosnian war, including an immediate end to the Serb siege of Sarajevo.

His demands appeared to be an attempt by the Muslims to salvage whatever they can before a peace settlement that is certain to be at their expense. The Muslims control 10 percent of Bosnia, while the Serbs have 70 percent.

Izetbegovic's other demands were that Croats lift their siege of Mostar in central Bosnia; that Serbs and Croats abandon their claims on regions where Muslims were a majority before the war; that Serb forces withdraw completely from Mounts Igman and Bjelasnica near Sarajevo; and that the United Nations secure safe passage for humanitarian convoys throughout Bosnia.

"These are not conditions for the continuation of the negotiations, but for the final agreement between the warring sides," he told reporters.

Bosnia's Serb and Croat armies have received crucial help in arms, soldiers and other supplies from their patrons in Serbia and Croatia during the war, which has left up to 200,000 people dead or missing.

Serb sources close to the talks said Serbs offered Muslims 32 percent of Bosnia's land Thursday, including a vital corridor in eastern Bosnia, sweetening an earlier offer of 30 percent.

Muslims still want at least 40 percent, said the sources, speaking on condition of anonymity. They said the Muslims will be faced with a take-it-or-leave-it offer when talks resume Friday.

Izetbegovic wants Serbs to return land they seized around Muslim-held eastern enclaves and have them linked by corridors to the rest of the Muslim republic. He also wants Croats to give up parts of central Bosnia.

Milosevic said that Friday "will be a very critical day" in the talks. "I hope it will be a success."

Izetbegovic said earlier he was "a pessimist. I don't think a quick agreement could be reached here."

But asked if Milosevic would pressure Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic to give up some of the Serb gains in much-contested eastern Bosnia, Izetbegovic replied: "My impression is that Mr. Milosevic wants to solve this question."

U.S. soldiers survive attack, then fight back

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — American soldiers hit a land mine set by Somali guerrillas on Thursday, but survived the blast and fought off a gun attack, a U.N. spokesman said.

The soldiers, who included three women, were identified as Lt. Gina L. Foringer, 24, of Hampton, Va., Spc. Susan M. Moore, 32, of Elk Ridge, Md., Pvt. Latanya Bernard, 21, of Lafayette, La., and Spc. Ronald Truesdale, 22, of Cassatt, S.C.

Truesdale suffered a sprained back, Bernard suffered a bruised knee, and Foringer and Moore were treated for cuts, the Army said in a statement.

The explosion lifted the soldiers' truck off the ground, and the four suffered minor cuts from broken glass, said Maj. David Stockwell, the U.N. military spokesman. It occurred as they were approaching a logistics base in southern Mogadishu, he said.

The four came under small arms fire after the explosion, but were able to return fire and drive to safety, Stockwell said. No Somali casualties were reported.

It was the second time in two weeks that a U.S. army vehicle was hit by a remotely detonated mine. Four American soldiers died on Aug. 8 when their Humvee all-purpose vehicle was torn apart by a similar explosion.

The U.N. forces blame the faction of renegade warlord Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid for both explosions, Stockwell said.

Aidid also is held responsible by the United Nations for the June 5 ambush killings of 24 Pakistani peacekeepers. It has ordered his arrest and offered a $25,000 reward for him.

Stockwell said officials did not know just what kind of mine was used, but believed it was operated by remote control.

Japanese hold emergency talks on bad economy

TOKYO (AP) — At an emergency meeting Thursday, Japan's new government pledged to assemble a package of measures by late September to ease government regulations on business and stimulate the slumping economy.

Finance Minister Hirohisa Fujii said the most effective way of reining in the surging yen is to spur domestic demand by cutting government regulations so consumers can benefit from lower-priced imports.

Cabinet ministers at Thursday's meeting agreed that Japan's economic situation is severe and unlikely to recover quickly, Fujii said.

However, they announced no quick fixes for the yen's recent surge, which has ravaged Japanese exporters.

Thousands of regulations now impede imports and boost distribution costs by imposing tough inspection and licensing standards.

If successful, the new measures would narrow the huge imbalance between what Japan sells to other countries and what it buys from them. The imbalance is considered one reason the yen shot up from 125 to the dollar this year to around 102.

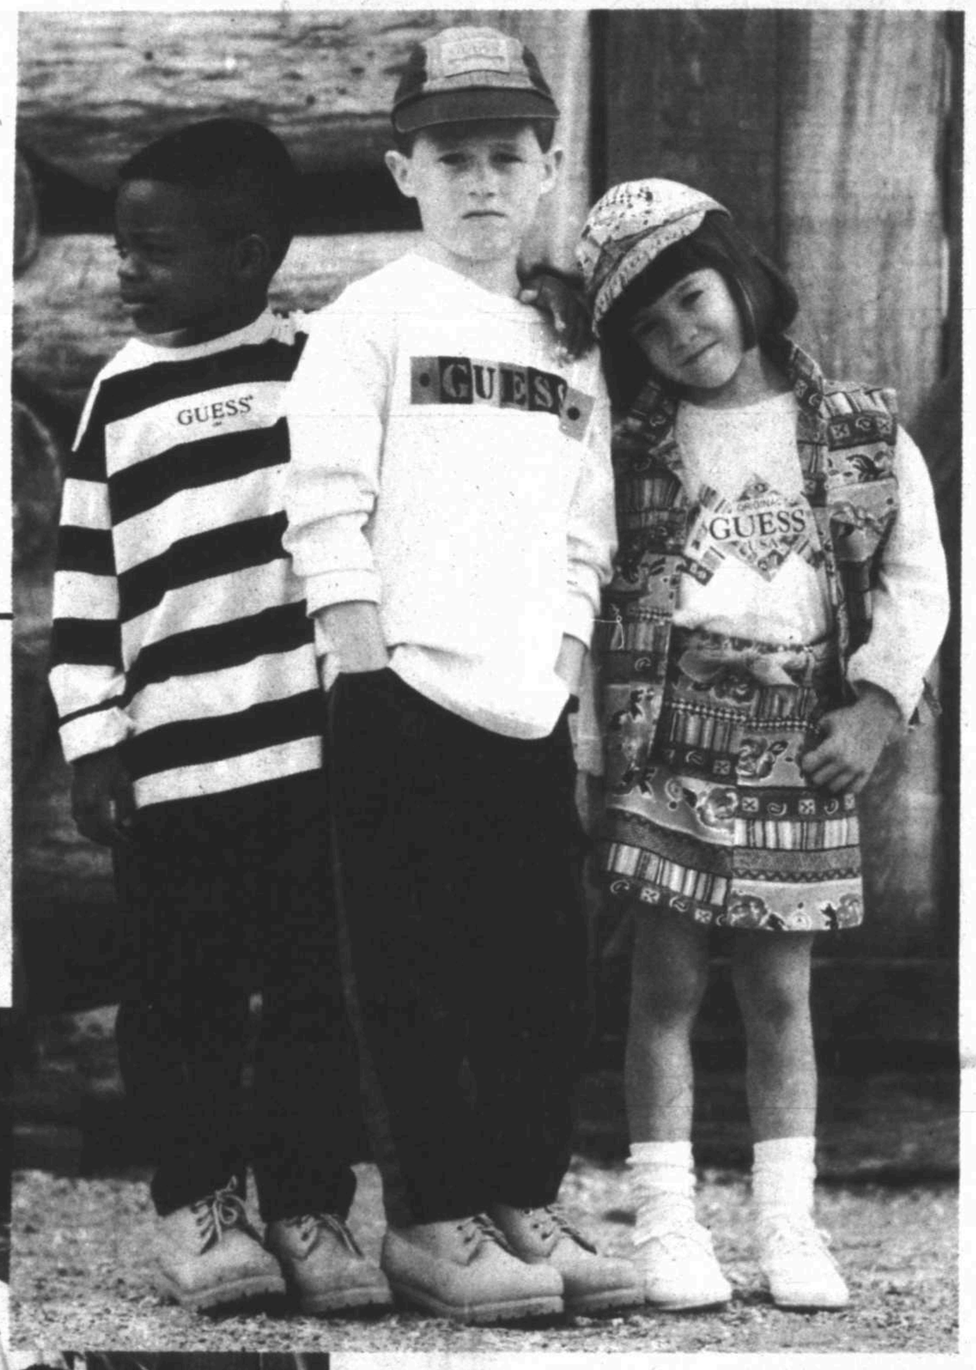

The high yen forced Japanese exporters to raise prices and reduced their profits in yen terms, thereby threatening Japan's economic recovery.

The Clinton administration has indicated it supports a stronger yen.

Trade and industry minister Hiroshi Kumagai said the government also is considering a cut in Japan's key lending rate among fiscal and monetary ways of stimulating the economy.

Expect sun, high pushing 100

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high between 95-100 and south to southeast winds at 10-15 mph. Tonight should be mostly cloudy with a low between 65-70, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Saturday should be sunny with a high between 95-100.

After an overnight low of 66, Thursday's high reached 97, compared to the record high for that date of 103 set in 1977. The record low was 58 set in 1940.

STATE

Some clouds were reported across the state, but hot, dry weather tended to be the rule Thursday.

A few clouds developed over North Texas, but no rain fell.

The sun once again managed to warm the Dallas-Fort Fort airport to 100 degrees, for the 21st day in a row. The most humid station in north-central Texas reported a heat index of 111 degrees.

Winds were from the south to southwest at 10 to 15 mph.

Today's forecast includes a heat advisory the north-central portion of the region. It will be mostly clear with highs near 103 degrees and lows in the upper 70s to near 80.

A few showers were scattered across the Panhandle Thursday. Otherwise, skies were mostly sunny with temperatures in the mid-80s to upper 90s with south to southeast winds at 5 to 15 mph and occasionally gusty.

West Texas will be partly cloudy with a chance of mainly late afternoon and evening thunderstorms in the Panhandle and far west today.

Lows will be in the 60s and 70s with highs mainly in the 90s to near 100.

NATION

Heavy rain caused flooding in Iowa as showers and thunderstorms drenched much of the nation Thursday. Temperatures soared in the South.

Flood warnings were posted for the upper Iowa River in northeast Iowa, and will continue through Saturday.

Highway 65 was flooded near Lucas, and only one lane of Highway 34, also near Lucas, was open to traffic. But high waters began to recede later Thursday when blue skies appeared.

Threats of heavy rain prompted flash flood watches Thursday afternoon and evening for central and northern New Mexico, central Illinois, and south-central Oregon, including the southern Cascade and Siskiyou mountains.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

GUILTY: Jurors convict Gillum of murder

was changing the child's diaper when she began to whine and he lost his temper. He said he just wanted the child to be quiet. He said he picked the child up, shook her for a few seconds then realized what he had done and stopped.

He testified that when he shook the baby her head came in contact with the floor several times.

"Were you banging her head against the floor?" defense attorney Richard Alvarado asked him. "Yes sir," Gillum answered.

"My anger wasn't letting me think clearly," he said.

He said when he realized what he had done he sat the child down and began to try and revive her. He said she was unconscious and he attempted to perform cardio-pulmonary resuscitation on the child and that was when some fluid came out of her mouth.

Gillum also admitted to lying to police at the hospital because he "was scared."

"It's hard to come out and say you hurt another individual regardless of how slight or bad ... it's nothing to brag about," he told the jury. "I couldn't believe what had happened. I didn't intend to hurt the child."

Upon cross-examination, Midland County District Attorney Teresa Clingman asked Gillum to demonstrate, with a baby doll, how he was sitting in relation to Holly when the incident occurred. Gillum refused and was ordered by the judge to do it.

However, the prosecution declined to have Gillum demonstrate how he shook the child and beat her head against the floor.

After both the state and defense rested and closed their cases, the prosecution called Ector County Medical Examiner Sparks Veasey to testify as a rebuttal witness.

Veasey testified that he didn't believe just shaking the child and bumping her head on the floor would cause the severe head injuries Holly suffered.

"It would have to be a forceful, hard banging of the child's head on a broad flat surface," Veasey testified.

During closing statements, co-counsel for the prosecution, Midland County Assistant District Attorney Brian Carney told the jurors that Gillum "wanted the baby to quit crying and he killed her."

"If you pound a baby's head against the floor ... you know it's going to kill it," he said.

Alvarado spoke to the jury for an hour during his closing arguments. He asked them to evaluate the testimony and consider that Gillum did not intend to kill the child.

"His objective was not murder. His objective was to quiet the child," Alvarado said. "The state has to prove his conscious intent at that time was to kill Holly Bigler.

"It doesn't matter if he shook her or hit her against the floor," Alvarado said. "You have to decide if when he picked her up in that fit of rage he said 'I want to kill Holly Bigler.'"

Alvarado told the panel that Gillum was tired and frustrated and "snapped" for 10 seconds that changed his life.

"He didn't want to kill Holly," he said.

When all of the testimony had concluded, the jury was provided instructions on how to deliberate and of the possible decisions they could make. They had the option of convicting Gillum of murder, involuntarily manslaughter or criminal negligence or of acquitting him.

The jury retired to deliberate at 3:35 p.m. and returned its verdict at 10:15 p.m. They found him guilty of murder and that he used a deadly weapon — his hands — in the commission of the crime.

tion Coordinator. "Second, they get to know the school board. And, finally, they get a pat on the back that they all deserve."

Of 80 first-time teachers entering the district, 33 were graduates of Texas Tech University, including Stacie Beam, who will teach fourth grade at Parker Elementary School.

"I found out about the Midland school district at Tech's job fair," she said. "They had a really nice packet outlining all the benefits. I was really impressed with the people who were there. Plus, I really like the town. It's smaller than Lubbock, but that's OK."

Fellow Tech graduates Kayla Kuykendall and Debbie Robbins will both be teaching at Bonham Elementary School, in resource and fourth grade, respectively.

"I had heard about the school district at Tech and got hired at the job fair," Ms. Robbins said.

Ms. Kuykendall said she came to the district because she was impressed with the special-education program.

Janice Ford, who will be teaching biligual education at the kindergarten level at Bonham, said she transferred from Odessa to Midland because she was impressed with the district's bilingual program.

Joy Lane, who graduated from San Angelo State University, will begin teaching fifth grade at Emerson Elementary School this month.

"This district has great incentives," she said. "Plus, I have family around."

Fellow Emerson teacher Jennifer Galloway said she actually has lived in Midland since last year, but was transferring to Midland for her daughter.

"I moved here from Fort Stockton last year and was offered a teaching job in Odessa," she said. "However, I really wanted to be in the same town that my daughter was going to school."

Janee Webb taught summer school in Lamesa before moving to Midland to teach fifth-grade language arts at Emerson.

The event was sponsored by the chamber, Southwest Airlines, Junior Achievement, Johnnie's Barbecue, Qualified Printers, Parker & Parsley and NationsBank.

RICH: Winning $25 million Lotto won't do it

(From 1A)

Texas' hidden rich and watch financial empires grow and crumble, one factor remains constant: Ross Perot is still the wealthiest of them all, laughing at his critics, making everyone guess what he'll do next," author Christine Carroll writes in the magazine's September issue.

For the fifth consecutive year, the magazine on Thursday issued its listing of the 100 wealthiest Texans, basing its estimates on industry analysts, brokers, financial advisers and some of the wealthy themselves.

Net worth to make the first list, published in 1989, was $100 million. That rose to $130 million by 1991, but dropped to $120 million last year and to a paltry $110 million this year — "reflecting a still-tepid Texas economy," the magazine said.

Tepid economy or not, 38 of the 95 returning multimillionaires did just fine, increasing their fortunes during the past 12 months. Another 45 held steady; 12 dropped in net worth but stayed on the list, while five were replaced.

The four Midlanders on the list are oilmen John Lee Cox, Clarence Scharbauer Jr., Jack Eugene Brown and Cyril Wagner. The four men were on last year's list and their 1993 net worth remains unchanged from a year ago, according to the magazine.

Cox, 68, is No. 29 on the list. He has a net worth of $300 million. Scharbauer, 68, is No. 37 on the list and has a net worth is $280 million. Brown, 68, and Wagner, 59, are No. 39 on the list. They share a net worth of $500 million.

Two newcomers made their fortunes not in such Texas traditions as oil or real estate but in food.

Kit Goldsbury, 50, owner of San Antonio-based Pace Foods, "whose Mexican salsa led the charge to push ketchup out of America's kitchens," hit the list at $130 million.

Texas Monthly said Arturo Torres, 56, San Antonio, $110 million, became the first Hispanic to hit the list when he sold his Pizza Management Inc. that owned 236 Pizza Hut franchises.

The third newcomers was Fort Worth's Richard Scott, 40, $185 million, who "has built a healthy fortune by buying and merging health-care facilities."

KILLER: Meza says he's forgiven for his sins

(From 1A)

"I just feel I'm a scapegoat for a lot of people right now," a somber Meza said in a Thursday interview before his first post-release news conference. "This system is broken. Totally."

Parole officials "just don't know how to deal with people like myself," he continued. "The therapy that's needed, the counseling. It's as if they brush you under the rug, so to speak, hoping (you'll) go away."

Meza, 32, spoke in Austin, his hometown, where he was convicted for the 1982 rape and murder of 8-year-old Kendra Page. He accepted a 34-year, plea-bargained prison sentence, but served only 11 years after accumulating enough "good time" credit to merit the early release.

But the day that was supposed to be his chance to start over has become a continuation of his imprisonment.

"I looked forward to that day with optimism, hope, (and) a will to succeed in whatever I pursued," he said. "I had plans. Very simple wishes. Like getting out and finding a job. Finding (a) lady friend who cared for me and I cared for her. Getting the therapy I had sought on my own before I got out. I didn't expect the outcry that had begun two weeks before I came out."

Meza apologized repeatedly for the young girl's murder, saying he has now devoted his life to God. But intermingled with the remorse, Meza made it clear that he believes he deserves, by law, to be on the streets today.

"I did (the sentence that) was given me by the state," he said. "I cannot undo my past. I've asked for forgiveness from my God, my Lord. And I am at peace."

The murdered girl's father, Don Page, was present at Meza's afternoon news conference but did not confront him. Later, he reacted bitterly to Meza's apology and request to be left alone.

"I'm angered," Page said, his voice breaking.

DEFICIT: Sheer size startles trade experts

trade abroad to create economic opportunity here at home." But private economists said there's little the administration can do to head off what likely will be the nation's worst trade performance in at least four years.

"The message is clear. U.S. exports are doing poorly, to a significant extent because of stagnation and recession in Europe and a slowdown in economic activity in Japan," said economist Allen Sinai of Economic Advisers Inc.

"This big deterioration is a sign of a weak economy losing momentum as we move into the third quarter."

He said the June trade number would make the economy's performance look even weaker in the second quarter than the lackluster 1.6 percent annual growth rate estimated earlier by the Commerce Department.

During the 1990-91 recession, trade was one of the few bright spots in the U.S. economy, with the deficit falling to $66.7 billion in 1991 from its peak of $152.1 billion in 1987. But it climbed back to $84.5 billion last year and is on track to top $110 billion this year.

The trade gap for the first six months of the year, $56.6 billion, was 55 percent bigger than the same period a year ago.

Starting in February, with comments from Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, the administration sought to improve the deficit by talking down the value of the dollar relative to the yen.

In theory, a cheaper dollar should eventually produce a smaller deficit by making U.S. goods cheaper overseas. But that can backfire. If the dollar were to fall too far or too fast, it could destabilize stock and bond markets in the United States.

The Clinton administration accompanied the Federal Reserve's dollar buying with a statement indicating it was reversing its stance.

"We are concerned that the recent rapid rise in the value of the Japanese yen could retard growth in the Japanese and world economies," Treasury Undersecretary Lawrence Summers said.

university in order to attract freshmen.

"We need sports and we need campus housing," he said.

He said that most of the growth would have to come from freshmen students and not local professional classes. To attract freshmen, he said more scholarships would be needed.

He said more professional programs were in order, but there was no need to expect a free-standing engineering program at the school in the near future.

"There are just too many engineering programs and not enought students. Every university is trying to steal the other one's students," he said.

He said UTPB would continue to offer graduate engineering studies delivered through UT Austin, and would work with the El Paso and Arlington campuses on engineering credits.

"We also need to fix our physical plant," Sorber said. "We have had a deferred maintenance program for too many years. We have a swimming pool that has not had water in it for 4½ years."

He also noted that the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification would need to begin to carry its weight with new grants and programs, and to develop new alliances. "So far CEED has been carried at the expense of academics. That will not continue. We will be successful with expanded programs."

Since appropriations are student-driven, he said the bottom line was a need for more students. "We don't have enough students. We do have a carrying capacity that far exceeds enrollment."

Sorber said the facility and administration could easily support 4,000 students and teachers could be added with the increased enrollment.

HOT: Austin ties rainless record and it looks like we're going to continue setting a new record each day for the next week or so," said Lou Withrow, a National Weather Service meteorologist.

Withrow said Austin's 1962 record of 54 rainless days, and the 1962 and 1986 record of 11 straight days of high temperatures at 100 degrees or more, likely would fall today.

So far, there's little concern about the area water supply. But dozens of grass fires have been reported, including one on Wednesday that burned about 1,000 acres in eastern Travis County and forced the evacuation of some 30 people.

Less rain mean fewer insects. So the 1.5 million Mexican free-tailed bats, which normally leave their home under Austin's Congress Avenue bridge at sunset to forage for their nightly 25,000 pounds of bugs, are taking to the skies much earlier.

And the Super Bowl champion Cowboys, who have been practicing in Austin during the past month, would give a lot for a break from the sweltering heat.

"We sure could use some rain to cool things down," said fullback Tommie Agee. "Practice has been unbearably hot."

One Austin radio station Thursday was offering $937 to the first person who could make it rain.

Kim Hollins, a spokeswoman for KLBJ radio station, said the Tribal American Network Indian group planned a rain dance in an Austin park during the 18-hour contest.

The heat wave is widespread.

San Antonio had its longest dry spell since 1962, while daily temperature records in Houston were falling like beads of sweat. Dallas, too, hit 100 degrees for the 11th straight day.

Despite the dry spell, Central Texas has received more rainfall for the year than usual, said Dan Sobien, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service.

There hasn't been a problem providing water even though it's being pumped at record levels, said Mike Howe, community relations manager for the City of Austin Water and Wastewater Utility.

What could dry up, Howe said, is the cash of homeowners who want to keep their lawns green.

"They're using a lot more water and they're going to see it on their bills," he said.

Bill McCann, spokesman for the Lower Colorado River Authority, said the river and Central Texas area lakes are in "pretty good shape."

"We've been fortunate because we did have a fairly wet spring," McCann said. "The problem would occur for us if we had a dry fall and then we had a dry spring. Then we might have some problems next summer."

French nuclear sub collides with supertanker in Mediterranean

PARIS (NYT) — A French nuclear submarine collided on Tuesday with a supertanker off the south coast of France, tearing a hole in the tanker's hull and causing oil to spill into the Mediterranean, officials said on Thursday.

A spokesman for the French navy said the accident occurred on Tuesday night while the submarine was surfacing and that it had failed to detect the enormous vessel overhead. He said the navy sub, the Rubis, which normally carries missiles and torpedoes, had damaged its bow but suffered no nuclear leakage.

Specialists rushed out on Thursday and used detergents to contain the oil trail left by the supertanker. The tanker, the Lyria, which is owned by the French arm of Royal Dutch/Shell, was steaming toward Fos-sur-Mer, the oil port near Marseilles, filled with over 270,000 tons of crude oil.

Cleanup crews said the oil slick, both offshore and in the port of Fos-sur-Mer, was almost under control. They said that under current weather conditions, there was little threat to France's Mediterranean beaches, which are packed at this time of year.

Pierre Beaussant, a Shell spokesman, said that only some 2,000 tons poured out of the gash ripped into the Lyria. The gash, he added, was 5.5 yards long and more than 15 inches wide. He said the giant ship had not noticed the collision, nor had it heard the radio calls made from the submarine.

Specialists said the collision raised a number of questions: The submarine recorded no instrument failures, but how could the surfacing sub have missed the 1,115-foot tanker? Why did the tanker not receive the radio messages from the sub, urging it to stop?

The episode is also likely to add to concerns about the crowded sea lanes around Europe.

The Shell spokesman said that the company felt its tanker bore no responsibility for the accident, which the navy said occurred 68 miles south of Toulon. He said that until an investigation was completed he could not explain why the Lyria said it did not receive the sub's messages after the crash.

In Paris, the navy said it had opened an investigation.

Yeltsin warns of 2nd coup on anniversary

MOSCOW (NYT) — Two years after the attempted coup that led to the collapse of the Soviet Union, President Boris Yeltsin said on Thursday that another "reactionary putsch" was still a possibility, but that he was confident that the Russian people would reject a return to the past.

"Very painful transformations are in progress," Yeltsin said. "But the Russian people continue to be loyal to the choice made that August."

At a news conference in the Kremlin, Yeltsin, in a jaunty mood, said he had already begun "an artillery barrage" against his opposition in the holdover Parliament. He said he has prepared documents to force through new elections this fall to break the paralysis of government that has afflicted Russia for months.

But he talked very little about plans to force through a new constitution that would dissolve Parliament, an act that regional leaders have advised against. Instead, he is concentrating on getting new elections first, apparently hoping to end up with a more malleable, market-minded legislature that might make a new constitution easier to adopt.

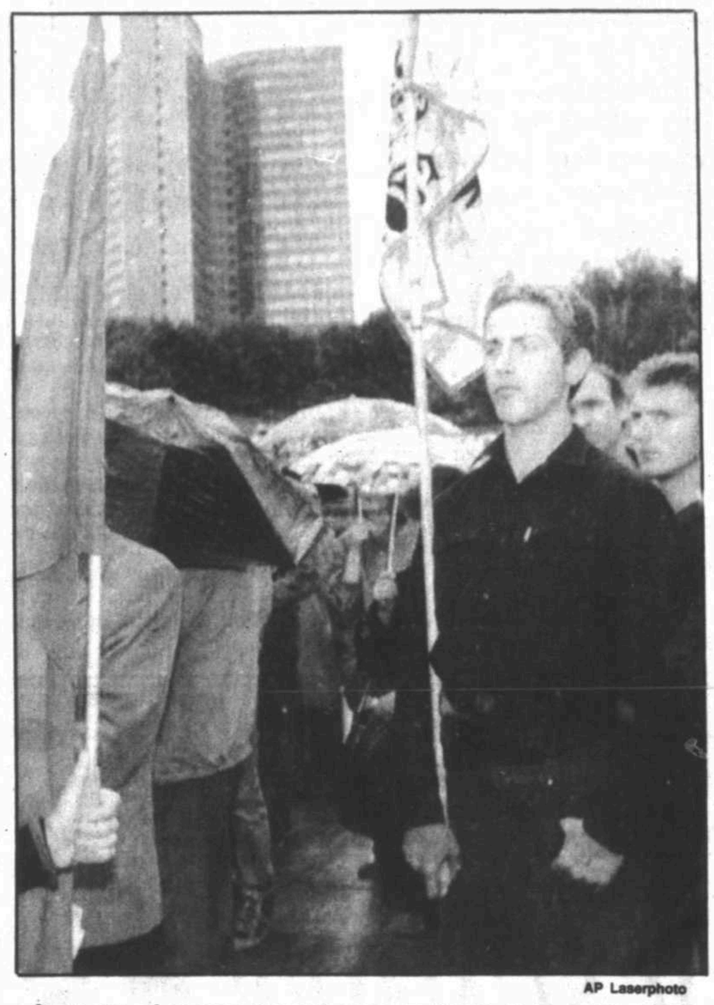

Yeltsin said his biggest mistake two years ago was to fail to dissolve Parliament and hold new elections immediately. "It didn't even cross our minds then that a parliament might need reelection," he said, suggesting that this realization was itself a measure of how much people's mentality had already changed.

As if to remind Yeltsin of his missed opportunity, the speaker of Parliament, Ruslan Khasbulatov, bluntly rejected the idea of new elections. "There will be no early elections this fall," Khasbulatov, a firm Yeltsin ally two years ago, said on Thursday.

Khasbulatov said that "what I didn't count on" in 1991 was that "we would be put in such a pitiful situation so soon: I didn't expect that the executive power would cut off the growth of democracy."

Yeltsin said the Parliament building, where he rallied Russians against the coup with Khasbulatov and Vice President Alexander Rutskoi beside him, "is now a bastion of revanchism." He added: "Reforms will fail if we don't find a way out of the constitutional crisis."

Mikhail Gorbachev, who was the last Soviet president and the immediate beneficiary of Yeltsin's courage two years ago but who was forced to resign that December, continued his complaints about Yeltsin.

YOUR PLASMA CAN HELP SAVE A CHILD'S LIFE.

When you donate plasma, you're helping children.

They are burn victims, surgery patients, shock cases. And they are very often children with a medical condition called hemophilia. It's a serious blood clotting disorder that used to shorten hundreds of children's lives every year.

Now, thanks to modern medical technology and plasma donors like you, there is hope for the child with hemophilia. When you give plasma, you are supporting new research. You are helping to extend the hemophilic child's expected lifespan. And you are helping the hemophilic child live a more normal, healthier life.

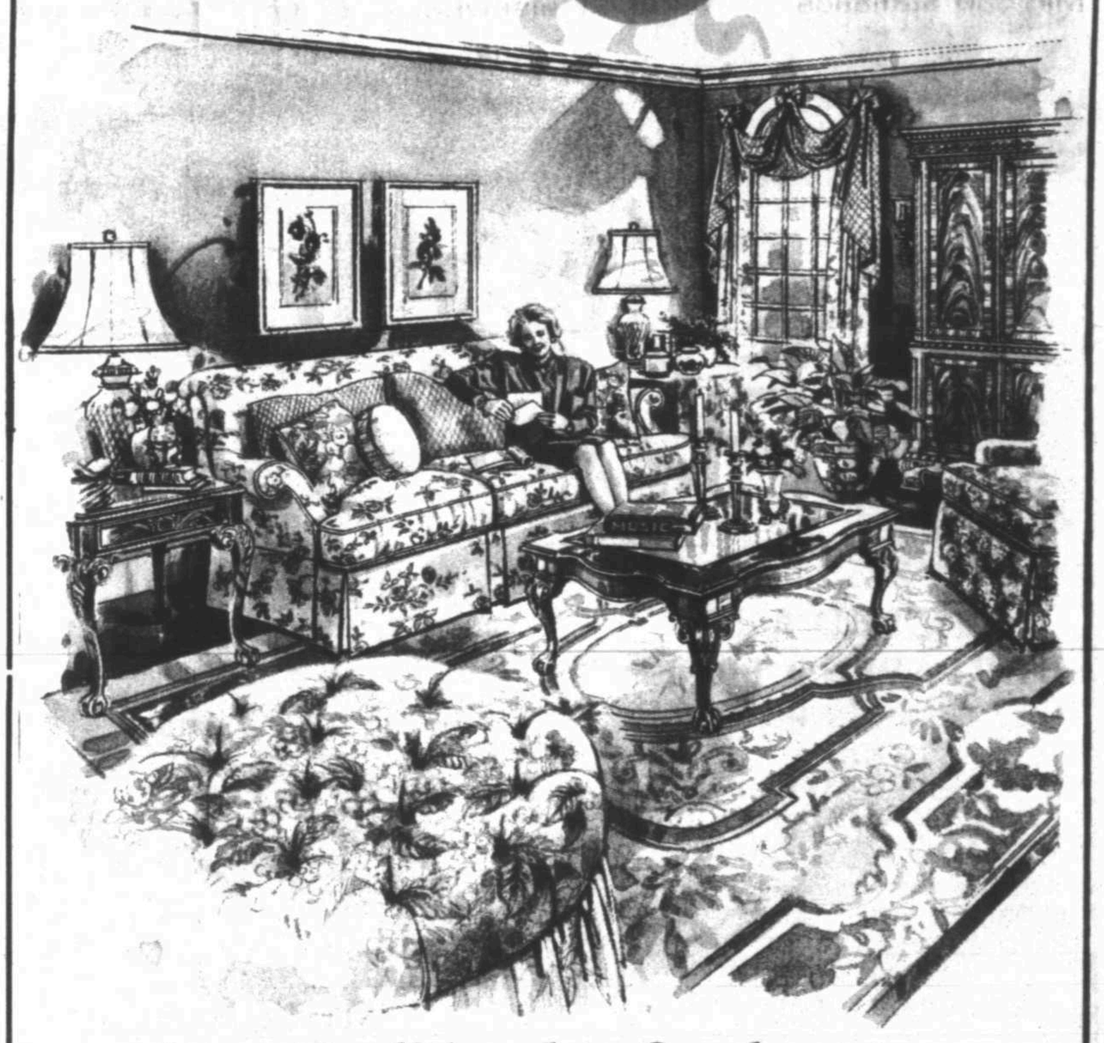

Your plasma can help save a child's life. And for that, we thank you.

Israel launches air attacks after Muslim rebels kill eight soldiers

SHIHEEN, Lebanon (AP) — Muslim guerrillas killed at least eight Israeli soldiers Thursday in their deadliest strikes in five years and Israel retaliated with air raids, an exchange echoing the lead-up to Israel's fierce attack on Lebanon last month.

Seven soldiers were killed and two wounded in an ambush shortly after dawn in Israel's self-declared "security zone" in southern Lebanon. Another Israeli soldier was killed and two were wounded in a second bombing after sundown, security sources said.

Thursday's attacks were claimed by Hezbollah, or Party of God, a fundamentalist Shiite group backed by Iran that has sought to sabotage the U.S.-sponsored peace talks.

There was no immediate word on casualties or damage from the air raids, said the security sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity. But Hezbollah said in a statement in Beirut that two of its guerrillas were killed.

A similar scenario in late July — coupled with guerrilla rocket attacks on northern Israel — escalated into Israel's biggest offensive in Lebanon since its 1982 invasion. The weeklong air and artillery attack to avenge the slaying of seven soldiers claimed 147 lives in Lebanon and destroyed hundreds of homes.

The new violence raised tensions less than two weeks before Arab-Israeli peace talks are to resume in Washington on Aug. 31.

In Oslo, Norway, Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said: "It is a big tragedy. We have done our best to calm the situation in South Lebanon and this news is most alarming."

The U.S. State Department said in a statement that the Hezbollah attack was "yet another calculated attempt by extremists to derail the peace process."

Afghanis debate whether to take radical sheik

Prime minister welcomes Sheik Abdel-Rahman calling him 'leader of the Islamic nation.' President, however, says sheik could keep country from getting financial aid.

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman is talking about trading his jail cell in upstate New York for asylum in Afghanistan. The only trouble is Afghanistan isn't sure it wants the radical Muslim cleric.

The country's bickering leadership is divided over letting the sheik into Afghanistan if he is deported from the United States, where he has been charged with lying on his visa application. He failed to reveal that he is a polygamist and that he was convicted in Egypt in 1987 of writing a bad check.

The country's fundamentalist prime minister, Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, called Abdel-Rahman a "leader of the Islamic nation" and said he was welcome in Afghanistan.

But Hekmatyar's arch-rival, President Burhanuddin Rabbani, opposes asylum for the sheik. An offer of asylum could doom the nation's attempts to get desperately needed money from countries that feel menaced by the sheik or other Muslim fundamentalists.

American lawyers for Abdel-Rahman said Wednesday they were discussing his possible deportation to Afghanistan with federal authorities, who have held the sheik in Otisville, N.Y., since last month.

Mohammad T. Mehdi, secretary-general of the National Council on Islamic Affairs, announced at a news conference in New York on Thursday that Abdel-Rahman was interested in France, and suggested Sudan and Algeria as other possibilities for his exile.

But Abdel-Rahman's lawyer, Barbara Nelson, said in an interview that he has expressed interest only in Afghanistan.

On Thursday, Abdul Jabbar Naeemi, political consular officer at the Afghan Embassy in Islamabad, told The Associated Press that "the president and foreign minister have already rejected the idea of his coming to Afghanistan."

Letting the sheik into Afghanistan would not be in the country's interests, he said, but refused to elaborate.

In Washington, Afghan Embassy charges d'affaires Abdul Rahim said the cleric has not applied for travel to Afghanistan. Rahim said he has received no instruction from the president, prime minister or foreign minister.

Afghanistan's bankrupt government needs huge infusions of cash from other countries. For the past year, Afghan leaders have been going to Muslim and Western capitals trying to drum up donations.

The West has been close-fisted with aid because of the factional fighting that has killed more than 10,000 people.

U.S. jets retaliate in force after Iraqi attack

IRAQ (NYT) — In what the Pentagon called one of the most serious clashes since the end of the Persian Gulf war, U.S. Air Force jets on Thursday bombed an Iraqi battery that fired two missiles at American planes.

Allied jets patrolling the zones over northern and southern Iraq that are banned to Iraqi flights have engaged in a long-running cat-and-mouse game with Iraqi antiaircraft crews, trading missile and ground fire.

But the Iraqi missiles on Thursday were the closest yet fired at Air Force jets, and other American planes retaliated by hitting the missile site with laser-guided bombs. Until two weeks ago, the allied air patrols in the zone north of the 36th parallel were not equipped with these high-precision weapons.

Pentagon officials said that at about 5:23 a.m. Iraqi time, Iraqi gunners fired two SA-3 surface-to-air missiles at Air Force F-4G and F-16 jets on routine patrol. The missiles missed; but in response, the F-16 dropped unguided cluster bombs on the site, 5 to 10 miles west of Mosul. Eight minutes later, another F-4G and F-16 flew near the site and determined that it was still threatening after the F-16 dropped more cluster bombs.

Two F-15Es, flying nearby, were then sent to drop four 500-pound laser-guided bombs on the site.

A senior Pentagon official said the American strikes had destroyed a guidance radar and three or four launchers, which can fire four of the radar-guided missiles each.

"There have been more than 20 incidents just in the past eight months, some minor, some serious," Kathleen deLaski, a Pentagon spokesman, said. "This is among the most serious."

Thursday's clash marked the first exchange in the northern no-flight zone since April 18, when Air Force F-4Gs fired missiles at a SA-2 missile site whose radar was tracking the U.S. planes. There have been several exchanges in the zone south of the 32d parallel, most recently on July 24 and July 29.

In late June, President Clinton ordered American warships to attack Iraq's intelligence center in Baghdad with Tomahawk cruise missiles in retaliation for what Clinton said was Baghdad's plot to assassinate former President George Bush during his visit to Kuwait in April.

Former Contra rebels capture key hostages

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Rebels took parliamentary deputies, soldiers and human rights officials hostage Thursday in northern Nicaragua and demanded the resignations of two top Nicaraguan officials, the army said.

The hostage-takers, former Contra rebels who fought the leftist Sandinistas in the 1980s and who have rearmed, demanded the resignations of presidential aide Antonio Lacayo and army chief Gen. Humberto Ortega, said Lt. Milton Sandoval, an army spokesman.

There was no immediate word on how many hostages the rebels were holding in Quilali, an isolated mountain town 30 miles south of the Honduran border.

It was the second action by a rebel group in as many months.

An attack by a different rebel group composed primarily of former Sandinista soldiers on the northern town of Esteli in July left at least 50 people dead. Former Contra rebels were also among that group.

An estimated 1,400 former Contras and some demobilized Sandinista soldiers have taken up arms again and split into different groups, saying President Violeta Chamorro has broken her promises of land and financial help to former fighters since the war.

Quilali was in the heart of the war zone between the U.S.-trained and financed Contra rebels and the Sandinista government in the 1980s. That war ended in 1990 after Chamorro ousted the Sandinistas in elections.

Gen. Ortega was the military chief during the Sandinistas' rule. The group taking hostages on Thursday, the North Front 3-80, accuses the Chamorro government of co-governing with the Sandinistas, and believe Lacayo is the mastermind of that strategy.

The rebels were holding Sandinista lawmakers, soldiers and members of a National Assembly human rights commission as hostages, Sandoval said. The rebels asked for the mediation of Roman Catholic Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo.

Thursday's hostage-taking came two days after Nicaragua's National Assembly passed a wide-ranging amnesty law for rebels.

The Assembly approved the broad amnesty law Tuesday night by a vote of 45-4, after the 42 deputies of the conservative National Opposition Union, or UNO, walked out in protest.

The measure grants amnesty to former Contra rebels and discharged Sandinista soldiers who have staged attacks against the government in recent months.

The law covers acts committed up to Aug. 15.

The rebel group that attacked Esteli is called the Revolutionary Workers and Peasants Front, or FORCE.

Cambodian troops pound Khmer Rouge positions

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Government forces pounded Khmer Rouge positions on Thursday in the second day of an offensive meant to force the Communist guerrillas to end their war against Phnom Penh.

The attacks in three provinces are part of the government's biggest assault on the guerillas since the U.N. peacekeeping mission began in Cambodia 17 months ago.

The main target was the Khmer Rouge logistics and arms center of Phum Chat, in the northwestern province of Banteay Manchey, U.N. spokesman Eric Falt said. He had no information on casualties.

Falt said government soldiers had disarmed 400 Khmer Rouge guerrillas in Banteay Meanchey, and driven about 300 rebel families from their homes.

Col. Thang Koeun, a senior government officer in the town of Thmar Puok, said the government confiscated 700 weapons and other supplies, and that rebels would not be allowed to return until the Khmer Rouge surrendered.

Information Minister Khieu Kanharith said government troops also had been advancing on the guerrillas in the northwestern province of Siem Reap and the central province of Kompong Thom.

The Khmer Rouge has promised to surrender the 20 percent of Cambodia it controls and its 10,000 guerrillas if given an advisory role in the government. But it has not stopped attacking government forces.

Gen. Tea Banh, vice minister of defense, said the Khmer Rouge had until the end of the month to stop the attacks if it wants to be part of the new permanent government to be formed in early September. The current government is an interim coalition formed after U.N.-organized elections in May, which the guerrillas boycotted.

Falt indicated the U.N. mission supports the government offensive. If the Khmer Rouge attacks persist, the government "has to take steps to deal with it," he said.

The United Nations has recognized the new government and is pulling its troops out of the country, saying it has completed its mandate of administration the country until free and fair elections were held.

More than 1,000 refugees crossed into Thailand on Wednesday, Western relief officials in Bangkok said. It was the first major exodus into Thailand since the United Nations finished repatriating more than 360,000 Cambodian refugees from Thailand earlier this year.

Clinton begins vacation with big birthday bash

By Nancy Benac
Associated Press writer

EDGARTOWN, Mass. — President Clinton used his 47th birthday Thursday to kick off an 11-day vacation on chic and scenic Martha's Vineyard.

Trading in his limousine for a beige Suburban van as soon as he touched down here, Clinton and his family arrived in time for an evening birthday bash Thursday at the home of adviser Vernon Jordan.

The president shed his suit coat as soon as he boarded Air Force One for the trip out of Washington, and offered a quick rundown of his vacation reading list.

"Al Gore gave me that new Jefferson biography — I had no idea it was out," he told aide Andrew Friendly. "And I've got my cheap thrills book in there, my Robert Ludlum book."

When Friendly told the president he was bringing along some other, work-related reading material, Clinton demonstrated he was clearly in a vacation frame of mind.

"I don't want it," he declared. "Burn it."

Adding to the holiday atmosphere, the Air Force One crew surprised Clinton with champagne, a cake and a quick serenade of "Happy Birthday." Clinton blew out the candles — limited to four — but refused to reveal his wish.

"It doesn't come true if you tell about it," he insisted.

Clinton's arrival on Martha's Vineyard — home to a host of celebrities and other public figures seeking a quiet and remote vacation spot — was big news before he and his entourage of hundreds ever hit the beaches of the 100-square-mile island.

"In Its Staid Way, Island Is Agog Over Clinton," trumpeted The New York Times, offering a front-page locator map for celebrity homes. Other newspapers and broadcast stations made an equally auspicious fuss.

Labor chief seeks minimum wage no lower than $4.50

WASHINGTON (AP) — Labor Secretary Robert Reich wants the Clinton administration to mount a drive this fall for a minimum wage of at least $4.50 — with automatic future adjustments to reflect inflation.

Clinton advocated both a higher minimum wage and indexing during the presidential campaign, but administration attention so far this year has been on other issues including deficit reduction and health-care changes.

President launches intense NAFTA campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton launched an intense campaign Thursday to overcome Democratic opposition to the trade agreement with Mexico and Canada, naming Chicago attorney William M. Daley as head of a task force to build "a strong and united front."

Mindful of opposition from organized labor and Democratic leaders of the House, Daley said his task was "quite a challenge" but he predicted Clinton would prevail.

Daley, the 44-year-old brother of Chicago mayor Richard M. Daley and son of the late legendary Mayor Richard J. Daley, is known as a shrewd negotiator with close ties to labor unions that oppose the agreement.

Clinton, at a ceremony in the Oval Office, said "it will be difficult for us to prevail" if both House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., and Democratic Whip David Bonior of Michigan stick by their opposition to the pact.

"I don't think I can change Mr. Bonior's mind but I think perhaps I can change others," the president said.

Daley's appointment was the last item on Clinton's schedule before leaving for a 10-day vacation on Martha's Vineyard, a resort island off the coast of Massachusetts.

Opponents fear the agreement will send a flood of U.S. manufacturing jobs to Mexico, where wages are lower and environmental standards are weaker. Clinton said that side agreements reached last week on labor and environmental standards should ease those concerns.

If ratified by Congress, the North American Free Trade Agreement — NAFTA — would phase out trade barriers among Canada, Mexico and the United States starting Jan. 1.

"This agreement means more trade, more exports and more jobs to the United States," Clinton said.

Clinton inherited NAFTA from the Bush administration and it has strong support among Republicans. The GOP's support appears sufficient to help Clinton win Senate approval.

FBI agent pleads guilty to bilking his bureau

WASHINGTON (AP) — An FBI agent pleaded guilty to two felonies Thursday, seven weeks after he won a mistrial because his estranged wife recanted her critical testimony and then said she did so because of threats from him.

Eugene A. Bennett entered the guilty pleas to obstruction of justice and making false monetary claims to the government on the fourth day of his retrial. Bennett, who agreed to resign from the FBI, also agreed to a sentence of one year in prison plus a possible fine of up to $500,000 and restitution.

Bennett admitted that he gave the FBI a voucher claiming he was entitled to $17,873 in connection with the sale of a home when he knew it was false. He also admitted that he tried on several occasions to influence his wife's anticipated testimony.

His original trial came to a halt June 28 after his wife, fellow FBI Agent Marguerite Bennett and key witness for the government, startled the court by testifying that she had made up the allegations that her husband had bilked the bureau.

She then told prosecutors privately that she had recanted because her husband threatened to abduct their children, prosecutors said.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson ordered a mistrial after saying her new allegations so overwhelmed her original assertions that it would be impossible for her husband to get a fair trial. Jackson presided over the retrial as well.

Bennett, who was prosecuted by the Justice Department's public integrity section, admitted he gave the FBI a false claim for reimbursement for a real estate sales commission related to the purported sale of property in Lithonia, Ga. That sale allegedly occurred when the FBI transferred Bennett from Atlanta to Washington.

"Mr. Bennett admitted that the purported transaction was a sham and that no real estate commission was actually incurred," the prosecutors said in a summary of the case.

During the first trial, Bennett's attorney, Reid Weingarten, said the entire prosecution was "the result of a marital custody dispute between Mr. and Mrs. Bennett. We've said from the beginning this belongs in divorce court."

The case began last September when Bennett, an FBI agent since 1981 and now on leave, sued his wife for divorce and sought custody of the children, alleging she had a homosexual lover. The divorce case is pending in Manassas, Va.

The next day, court documents say, she went to the FBI's Office of Professional Responsibility and alleged that her husband had submitted the phony voucher.

Based largely on her statements, the Justice Department obtained an indictment in March charging Bennett and an Atlanta couple with criminal conspiracy and theft of government property.

Russian boss, former oil man, to visit Houston

WASHINGTON (AP) — Russian Prime Minister Viktor S. Chernomyrdin, a former refinery worker who moved on to run Russia's massive natural gas industry, will start his long-awaited U.S. trip in Houston on Aug. 29, a Russian Embassy spokesman said.

The prime minister's U.S. visit, which Chernomyrdin postponed in June because of tensions over Russia's proposed missile sales to India, will focus on energy issues and cooperation on space programs, officials said Wednesday.

Chernomyrdin is scheduled to visit Houston Aug. 29-31 and then travel to Washington for a meeting of a commission on energy and space of which he and Vice President Al Gore are co-chairmen.

The prime minister's visit to Houston will focus attention on the troubled Russian oil industry and the frustrated efforts by U.S. energy firms to cut deals there.

While increased production of oil and gas would provide the Russians with hard currency to finance economic reforms, U.S. firms have been unable to break through the bureaucratic barriers to make sales or sign contracts.

In Houston, he is expected to visit Enron's facilities, attend a dinner with other energy executives and possibly visit the Johnson Space Center. U.S. Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary is expected to accompany Chernomyrdin during the Houston segment of his trip.

At Enron, Chernomyrdin is scheduled to oversee the completion of a general agreement that would guide future joint projects between the Houston gas industry giant and Gazprom, Russia's massive state-owned gas operation.

The Department of Energy wanted Houston to be on the agenda because of the city's critical role in several industries — oil and gas, space and medicine, said Deputy Energy Secretary Bill White, a Houstonian.

Other U.S. stops, including a trip to the Kennedy Space Center in Florida, may be added, said sources familiar with the planning.

NEW YORK (AP) — Meet the new Superman — just don't be surprised if he's faster than that same speeding bullet or leaping the same tall buildings in the same single bound. The new Superman, it turns out, is the old Superman. Back from the dead.

The once-in-two-lifetimes comeback of the slain superhero hits the stands Wednesday. Don't expect a repeat of this story line; even Superman, the comic's writers agree, can only pull this back-from-the-dead stunt once.

"This is a one-time only thing," said writer Roger Stern. "He will not be able to die and come back again."

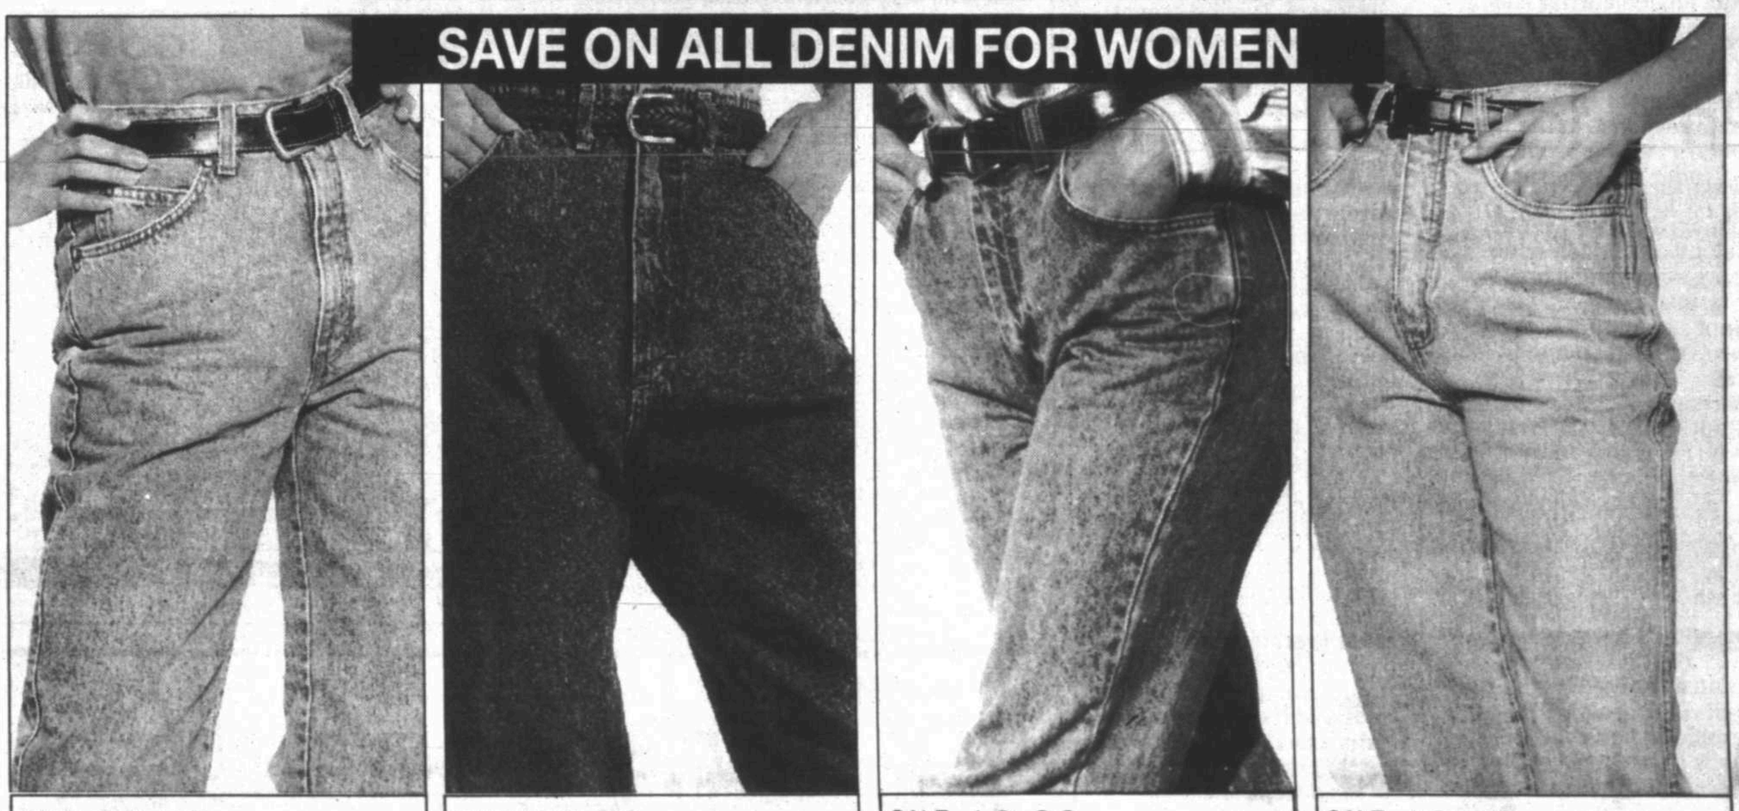

Unless sales slide a bit. The death of Superman in November's issue No. 75 was the second-best-selling comic of all time, with more than 3 million copies printed. An X-Men special from 1991 was No. 1.

Hopes are high for the Superman resurrection issue. An ad-free collectors' edition will sell for $3.50, while the standard edition will go for $2.50.

As to those four Supermen who showed up once the original Man of Steel was killed? All red, blue and yellow herrings. The original Superman was brought back to life by the Eradicator, whose job is protecting the last surviving Kryptonian.

The Eradicator was one of the four psuedo-Supes: the cold-blooded superbeing with his own strict code of order. In Superman No. 82, Superman hears how he was saved by the healing baths of the matrix chamber

Prisoner release is acceptable option

Midland County's "low-risk" prisoner release program, announced earlier this week by the Midland County Community Supervision and Corrections Department, is a reasonable response to the jail overcrowding problem.

Under the program, any eligible inmate charged with either a felony or misdemeanor may be released on a pre-trial personal recognizance bond much like probation. The hitch is that many inmates will not be eligible, according to Capt. Richard Sexton who oversees jail operations.

Sexton noted that the prisoner release program will not reduce overcrowding in the jail, which is designed to hold 300 prisoners but now houses 452. That's 152 more than approved by the state jail commission. The problem, however, relates back to the state in that the overcrowing is largely a result of the state not being able to accept prisoners that should be transferred to its facilities.

As long as that condition exists jails throughout the State of Texas will be overcrowded, which means that the prospect for inmate disturbances will be at high ebb and sheriffs will be moving to such stop-gap measures as Midland County's low-risk prisoner release program. During recent years many counties have instituted such programs because they are facing the same distasteful choices Midland County is facing.

That isn't the type of program that increases public safety or gives the public increased confidence in law enforcement's ability to control criminals, but from Midland County's perspective it was the most reasonable approach. County voters likely would not be favorable to a bond proposal for a jail expansion at this time and even if Midland County expanded its jail, that would not resolve the jail population problem existing throughout the state. If the state won't take the prisoners that are supposed to go to it and if other county jails are also overcrowded that doesn't leave many other acceptable options.

There is no easy or palatable solution to this variation of Texas' "crime problem." Midland County Sheriff's Department officials are proceeding with the most reasonable approach to this difficult dilemma.

Top Marine tries to save young lives, gets slapped

Marine Corps Commandant Gen. Carl E. Mundy Jr. is getting thoroughly bashed for simply trying to do his job, and it's time to halt the knee-jerk reactions from the politically correct.

Mundy ordered a phase-in of a plan to end the enlistment of married recruits and give counseling to young Marines considering marriage. He did so for a basic reason: to win battles with a minimum loss of life. That's his job. And, yes, there is a direct connection between that responsibility and unmarried young Marines.

Each year the Corps brings in 30,000 recruits. Of these, about 5 percent are already married. But some 40 percent of enlisted Marines marry before their four-year enlistment is up. During that first tour of duty, about half the time the young Marines are away from their wives — overseas or aboard ships. Even when the troops are based stateside, they still go out into the field for days or even weeks, their pay is low and family living conditions are not the best.

All of this puts a terrible strain on marriages: Divorce rates among all enlisted Marines — the majority of whom are 17 to 21 — are double those of civilians in the same age bracket.

This is hazardous to their health, not to mention that of their fellow Marines. It was this problem Gen. Mundy tried to solve. Yes, he should have first cleared it with his civilian superiors (who, no doubt, would not have cleared it). He got slapped down in a humiliating fashion from armchair experts. When the body bags start coming in, we must remember that.

Successful welfare reform program needs expansion

The initial results of a welfare-reform experiment under way in Newark and Camden, N.J., and Chicago since 1987 are encouraging.

The program uses a carrot-and-stick approach to encourage teen-age mothers receiving Aid to Families with Dependent Children, or AFDC, to stay in school.

The stick comes in the form of significantly reduced AFDC payments for the young mothers who drop out of school.

The carrot is "effective case management and mandatory education and training," according to Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala.

Based on its initial modest success, the program should be further expanded to other parts of the country. It appears to be, over the long term, a cost-effective use of government welfare funds.

JACK ANDERSON

Killers go free, pot smokers get jail

WASHINGTON — Kevin Roberts won't have a voice in the upcoming debate over the Democratic crime bill, but at least he has Attorney General Janet Reno on his side.

Anderson

Roberts' job is prisoners, not politics. He is a controlled-release officer in Florida's State Parole Commission, and his job is to oversee the early release of nearly 2,000 criminals per month from state prisons — many of whom are violent offenders. Thanks to a federal court order banning prison overcrowding in Florida, it's one he's compelled to carry out.

A solution to this problem has already been proposed: Repeal minimum mandatory sentences for drug offenders. It enjoys the support of Reno, the U.S. Sentencing Commission and the U.S. Judicial Conference, among others.

"Minimum mandatories" are a legacy of the 1980s, when Congress responded to the drug epidemic by intruding into judges' chambers. Where prison sentencing once was the domain of judges, with guidance from the U.S. Sentencing Commission, Congress stripped these rights by forcing judges to sentence drug offenders to mandatory terms based solely on the weight of the narcotics they were apprehended with.

"Earlier in the year, almost all our early releases were violent offenders, and a lot of those taking up their bed space were just first-time drug users or couriers," Roberts told our associate Dean Boyd. "What's the purpose of locking up a first-time user for 10 years? All you're doing is teaching him how to re-offend and it's costing a lot of money and bed space. These guys need to be looked at in terms of rehabilitation."

Since large-scale drug dealers can sometimes evade minimum mandatories by turning evidence on others, the jails often end up being clogged with first-time users and those with little information to provide prosecutors. In some overcrowded state prisons, these prisoners eventually began to crowd out violent offenders.

Reforming mandatory sentences makes for good penal policy, but bad politics. The Democratic crime bill introduced last week doesn't include a single reference to reforming minimum mandatories. To do so would risk being labeled as "soft on crime."

The Republican crime bill is full of new minimum mandatories, and at least one senator has already let it be known that a crime package without these sentences will create political problems for Clinton. "If the president's plan doesn't have minimum mandatories for drug thugs, then it's not a crime bill," says Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

While many Democrats are closet supporters of repealing minimum mandatories, most recognize that saying so publicly would be like handing the GOP a loaded assault weapon.

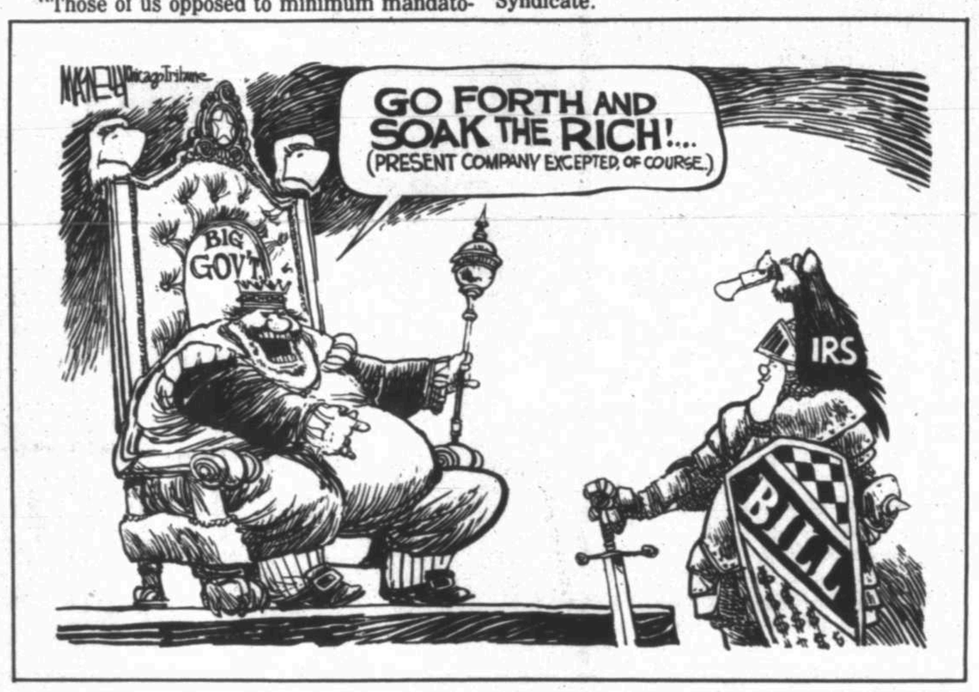

"Those of us opposed to minimum mandatories aren't doing so because we're soft on crime," says U.S. District Judge Vincent L. Broderick, chairman of the U.S. judicial conference's committee on criminal law.

Reno has spoken out forcefully against minimum mandatories, both as a Miami prosecutor and as U.S. attorney general. But Reno's star-status in the Clinton Cabinet has not proven influential enough.

The Justice Department is joined in spirit by a small group of House Democrats. The Congressional Black Caucus, led by Rep. Craig Washington, D-Texas, is organizing an effort in the House to propose an alternative crime bill. They will be joined by Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., a former FBI agent who has already introduced legislation to repeal minimum mandatories.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

High court's now available on video, CD?

WASHINGTON — If the Supreme Court gets angry at you, can it take you to court?

Yes. In 1906 the court ordered a stay of execution of a black man found guilty of raping a white woman in Tennessee, pending its review of an appeal. When a mob then lynched the defendant, the angry Supreme Court issued a contempt citation against the local sheriff for not protecting the accused. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, in U.S. vs. Shipp, made clear the Court had the power to direct discipline on its own motion.

Safire

That precedent gives weight to the mutters and grumbles emanating from the Supreme Court these days on a considerably lesser offense: the unauthorized sale of audio tapes of the Court's Greatest Hits.

"May It Please the Court," a title based on the traditional opening of oral argument, arrived at my office the other day, subtitled "23 landmark cases as argued before the Supreme Court, including the actual voices of the attorneys and justices in oral argument and questioning." Long subtitle, but a fascinating you-are-there experience, packaged with a book of transcripts and commentary by Peter Irons and Stephanie Guitton.

Here is the voice of the lawyer Abe Fortas, representing Clarence Gideon in a case that established the right of the indigent accused to legal counsel (and led Anthony Lewis to write "Gideon's Trumpet"); here is a youthful Thurgood Marshall urging school integration against a school board and governor who argued that it disrupted public order; here is the lawyer Sarah Weddington representing "Jane Roe," at first stumbling on the constitutional basis for abortion rights, then pressing her case against the Texas official representing what he called "the true silent majority" of the unborn.

This is an ear to history in the making. The accompanying transcript in the $75 tape-and-book package is useful, but the excitement is in the actual voices of disputing lawyers and probing justices.

Problem: Making it available to a wide public breaks the court's rules. On Aug. 3 the court's public information office — acting with the approval of, or at the instigation of, Chief Justice Rehnquist — issued a statement pointing out that Irons had signed an agreement to use the tapes "for private research and teaching purposes only" and had pledged "not to reproduce...for any purposes any portion of such audiotape."

Then came the chilling warning from Toni House, the ordinarily sensible press officer: "In light of these clear violations of Professor Irons' contractual commitments, the court is considering what legal remedies may be appropriate." That vague threat conjured the ghost of Sheriff Shipp in a case that did not spring unassisted to my mind.

This court is touchy about its own privacy; earlier this year it lost a contretemps with the librarian of Congress on the release of the Thurgood Marshall papers.

Public officials with their heads in the 19th century think they can keep public records from commercial exploitation by limiting their use to "scholarly research." That's like being a little bit pregnant; as the Dead Sea Scroll monopolists learned, unless a public document or tape or photo is a national secret or an invasion of privacy, it should be and will be available for dissemination in any way the market system decides.

Tapes — yesterday audio, tomorrow video — of open court argument are the public's property, not the personal trusts of the justices. If I want to photograph the Declaration of Independence and sell it on a T-shirt, that's my business, not the National Archives'.

The Supreme Court "conferences," to use its verb, on the final Monday in September, before convening on the first Monday in October. The other eight should get the chief to back off. Let the new interest in court proceedings generated by the tapes inspire them to sharpen and deepen their questioning, because tomorrow's scholars and kibitzers will be listening in digital splendor.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Rowdy Atlanta gala should be gay yardstick

Up in what is being described as a cesspool of bigotry and narrow-mindedness, Cobb County, a northern suburb of Atlanta, something has happened that is hard to believe could happen in the '90s.

Grizzard

The Cobb County Commission — and even some of the county's residents are in agreement — has officially condemned homosexuality as not in keeping with community values.

Shock and disbelief are rampant. In protest, at their next concert, Peter, Paul & Mary are thinking of holding their breaths until they turn blue.

The American Civil Liberties Union is agog with disbelief.

Editorial pages are crying out and the Atlanta Braves, some of whom live in Cobb County, are still lagging behind the San Francisco Giants.

As a resident of the enlightened city of Atlanta and Fulton County, I too am taken aback by all this, but probably for somewhat of a different reason than others.

What prompted this action by the Cobb Commission was the fact that a couple complained they went to see a publicly funded play in Cobb County and there were references to homosexuality.

That's it?

You mean to tell me all this is about a play that simply referred to homosexuality?

That's nothing. That's a mere blip on the radar screen of the changing lifestyles of the '90s.

Here in progressive Fulton County even the most heinous gay-bashers — and there are still pockets in such places as good ol' boy network law firms, men's locker rooms of golf clubs, and hardware stores — wouldn't even flinch if they heard there was a publicly funded play with homosexual references.

If the Cobb Commission has gotten itself in a stir over this minor incident, what would they do if they had seen the party recently held in midtown Atlanta?

Want a punch in the belly of community values. OK, I'll simply repeat an article that appeared recently in the Atlanta Journal Constitution. Warning: the following includes material that could give anybody living outside midtown a fatal attack of something:

"Several thousand men turned out Saturday night for a midtown block party that was part of an annual event for homosexual men.

"The dance on 6th Street, between Peachtree and Cypress streets, featured techno-pop music, scantily clad table dancers, and several transvestites decked out in high heels, wigs, and floor-length gowns.

"To honor the theme of the event, the lost city of Atlantis, Raven, who was barely dressed in ruby sequins, tassels and sparkling rhinestones, sat under a canopy drinking a vodka tonic, while men in harem pants and sequin vests fanned him.

"Asked who he was supposed to be, Raven batted his impossibly long fake lashes, tossed his long blond curls, and said, 'I'm a (expletive deleted) goddess, what does it look like?' "

So, what do we have here? We have scantily clad men dancing on tables, transvestites and a barely dressed (expletive deleted) goddess drinking vodka and tonic on the streets of the city of Atlanta, where I live.

So don't come whining to me about homosexual references in a play. Or, quoth the raven, "Nevermore," until there are scantily clad homosexual men dancing and barely dressed transvestites cavorting on your streets.

Then and only then will you have caught up and have the right to stir the liberals and wonder with fellow homophobes, What in the (expletive deleted) is this world coming to?

Woman shoots abortion doctor at Kansas clinic

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — A woman seen passing out anti-abortion literature fired several shots at an abortion doctor outside his clinic Thursday evening, wounding him in the arm, police said. She fled in a getaway car.

Dr. George Tiller was still in his surgical scrubs when he was shot in the arm while sitting in his car in the clinic driveway, said police Capt. Jack Leon. He was reported in good condition at HCA Wesley Medical Center, a hospital spokesman said.

"He's been shot in the arm," said Peggy Jarman, a spokeswoman for Tiller and the Pro-Choice Action League. "He's apparently going to be all right."

Tiller has been a frequent target of abortion protests because he performs late-term abortions. His clinic was one of three targeted by Operation Rescue during summer 1991 in six weeks of protests that led to 2,700 arrests.

Witnesses told police that the woman who fired the shots had joined a small group of protesters outside the Women's Health Care Services Clinic earlier Thursday. She handed out literature and talked with the protesters until Tiller left his clinic.

As Tiller began to drive away, the woman pulled out a gun, walked toward the car and began shooting, said Police Chief Rick Stone.

"She fired multiple rounds from a handgun, striking him once in the forearm," Stone said.

Several employees at the clinic chased the woman after the shooting, but she got into a car driven by another person and escaped, Stone said. She has not been apprehended. Investigators said the car had Oklahoma license plates.

The weapon has not been recovered, Stone said.

Witnesses told investigators the woman — described as white, in her late 30s, with long, brown hair — said she was not from Kansas, and indicated to some people that she was from the Sacramento, Calif.. area.

Stone said he didn't know if Tiller was wearing the protective clothing when he was shot. Police cordoned off the clinic.

Congressmen protest Iraqi Florida resettlement

MIAMI (AP) — About 1,000 Iraqi prisoners of war and their families are quietly being resettled in the United States, including Florida, say congressmen protesting the move.

They have asked President Clinton to "stop this policy of welcoming our former enemies to our home," according to a letter released Thursday by U.S. Rep. Earl Hutto, D-Panama City.

Many are bringing dependents with them, and resettlement costs are estimated at $4,000 to $7,000 per person, said the Pensacola-area congressman, who just returned from a tour of the Middle East.

"Given the choice, I would much rather see that $4,000 go to one of our own veterans, and not the people that were shooting at us," said Hutto's letter. It was also addressed to Attorney General Janet Reno and the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

U.S. Rep. Cliff Stearns, R-Ocala, is writing a letter on behalf of the Florida congressional delegation questioning the policy. He said the POWs are being routed from camps in Saudi Arabia to California, Michigan, Texas, Tennessee and Illinois.

"We are worried about them coming to Florida. . . . Why don't they stay in Saudi Arabia?" Stearns told The Associated Press Thursday night. "Basically, it's an insult to veterans everywhere who are not getting their fair share."

He said the relocation would cost up to $70 million because the POWS will be eligible for welfare, Medicaid, language training and other programs.

Pam Lewis, spokeswoman for the U.S. State Department's Bureau for Refugee Programs, confirmed some former Iraqi POWs were being relocated in Florida, but she didn't have any numbers or other details.

Agriculture boss says inspection system collapsed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal food safety officials blindly allowed an Omaha, Neb., slaughter plant to operate for years despite a history of rat infestation and feces-contaminated meat, according to an Agriculture Department investigation.

"The system collapsed," said Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy, who publicly released on Thursday the report he had ordered from the department's Office of Inspector General.

The report criticized the Cornhusker Packing Company, which Espy said would be used as a model for identifying what can go wrong with slaughter plants nationwide.

The report also took the entire chain of command of the Food Safety and Inspection Service to task. Espy ordered the implementation of steps recommended by investigators to improve communications and supervision.

Espy ordered the report after CBS News aired a story May 17 about conditions at the family-owned plant, which has been operating since 1950.

The broadcast had not identified the plant, which slaughters cows and bulls for other plants to make into ground beef, but department officials found it and closed it for five days starting May 20. It shut down for a day in June 7 to be fumigated for rodents, the government investigators said. The plant now operates under tight supervision, the department said.

Pot crackdown in four states nets $10 million haul

METAIRIE, La. (AP) — A two-week raid last month on marijuana farms in the New Orleans area yielded 6,646 plants with an estimated street value of almost $10 million, federal and state authorities said Thursday.

The seizures, which took place during two weeks in July, focused on rural areas inside Jefferson, Orleans and St. John the Baptist parishes.

It was part of a larger effort by the Drug Enforcement Administration — dubbed "Operation Four Corners" — to crack down on growers in four states — Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas and Oklahoma. The federal agency provided $1 million to the states for the program.

The states were chosen for their particularly suitable growing conditions for the plants, authorities said.

Ten arrests have been made in Louisiana as a result of the seizures, said state police spokesman Capt. Ronnie Jones. Several firearms also were confiscated, he said.

"Marijuana is still a very popular drug," Jones said. "Unfortunately for us, Louisiana is an ideal climate."

Several state agencies, including the state police, Louisiana National Guard, and city and parish law enforcement agencies collaborated with the DEA and U.S. Forest Service on the raids.

So far this year, more than 15,000 marijuana plants have been confiscated in Louisiana, with an estimated street value of more than $22 million, Jones said.

Trial begins for blacks accused of beating white L.A. trucker

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bloody photos of a beaten white trucker flashed on a courtroom screen Thursday as a prosecutor denounced the two black men on trial for the attack and said: "We are not here to try the Los Angeles riots."

"We are here to establish the responsibility of these two defendants for these crimes, nothing more, nothing less," Deputy District Attorney Lawrence Morrison told jurors in his opening statement.

Damian Williams, 20, and Henry Watson, 28, sat beside their lawyers staring ahead as Morrison showed the jury blownup photos from videos of the riots. He said they clearly identified Williams as the man who hurled a brick at Reginald Denny's head, then "danced in glee" around his battered body.

He said Watson is clearly seen stomping on Denny's head and neck as well as abetting assaults and robberies of other victims.

The defense says police arrested the wrong people.

"The evidence will show they are being tried as scapegoats," Williams' attorney, Edi Faal, said in his opening statement.

Faal also said the key piece of prosecution evidence — the video — distorts the reality at the crime scene.

"The videotape that the prosecution will show you is not a true account of the events that took place at Florence and Normandie as they were taking place," Faal said.

Prosecutor says TV station video clearly shows defendant Watson stomping on Denny's head, neck as well as abetting assaults, robberies of other victims.

But Morrison said the defendants are clearly identifiable by their clothing, and that a blemish on Williams' cheek makes him even more visible.

"Certain days stand out in history," Morrison said at the outset. "We the citizens of Los Angeles will never forget April 29, 1992. We saw vicious and horrible crimes broadcast into our living rooms."

Williams and Watson are accused of attempted murder and other felonies in the assaults on eight victims. But the Denny beating, a searing symbol of the violence that engulfed Los Angeles, is at the center of the case.

Morrison warned jurors that some of the visual evidence may sicken them, and some jurors appeared stunned by the graphic photos he showed. They saw Denny's face obscured by blood and the image of Fidel Lopez, his body battered, bloody and spray-painted black. "The final indignity," said Morrison, was that Williams spray-painted Lopez's exposed genitals.

To prove attempted murder, the most serious charge, prosecutors must show that the defendants premeditated their act. Morrison said the videos show Williams holding a brick and standing back "to think about what he's going to do."

"Mr. Williams hurled the brick. Reginald Denny crumbled and Mr. Williams celebrated," the prosecutor said. "He then danced with glee around Mr. Denny, Joyfully cavorting ... over what he had done."

The beating is seen by some as a symbolic counterpoint to the 1991 beating of black motorist Rodney King by four white policemen, and the state trial verdicts were mentioned by both defense lawyers as precipitating the riots.

"It was an explosion of anger and complete anarchy," said Karen Ackerson, the lawyer representing Watson. But they urged jurors to put their emotions aside when they weigh the evidence.

The policemen's state acquittal on most assault charges on April 29, 1992, triggered the unrest that ultimately claimed 54 lives and caused $1 billion in damage.

Two of the officers were subsequently convicted of federal civil rights violations and were given 2½-year sentences viewed as too lenient by many in the black community.

Review: Most oil spill money misses target

WASHINGTON (AP) — The trust fund set up to repair Alaska's coastline after the Exxon Valdez oil spill has spent the lion's share of its money so far on administrative costs, legal and travel expenses and reimbursement of the government and Exxon Corp., an Associated Press review has found.

Of the $202 million disbursed, only $45 million has gone to new environmental restoration projects, according to a review of documents from the federal-state trustee council that manages the fund.

Critics, including some in the Clinton administration, say the promise that the fund financed by Exxon would bankroll environmental restoration has taken a back seat.

"It was called a billion-dollar settlement," said Pamela Brodie of the Sierra Club in Alaska. "But some of it has gone back to Exxon and a lot of it has gone to reimburse for past costs. Things that actually help restore (the environment), there's been very little of that."

Some of the trustees acknowledged high administrative costs, especially in the first year, but said the legal settlement with Exxon dictated that.

"We don't think we have frittered away money," said Alaska Attorney General Charles Cole, one of the three state officials on the six-person council. "I think we've done well in the first couple of years."

The review of the first $202 million in expenditures found:

—$39.9 million was sent back to Exxon under a little-publicized provision in the legal settlement that allowed the oil giant to reimburse itself for its cleanup costs in 1991 and 1992.

—$49.2 million went to reimburse federal agencies — including the Coast Guard — for cleanup of the spill.

Study: Smoking is leading cause of some leukemia

ATLANTA (AP) — Smokers have a 50 percent greater risk of contracting a deadly form of adult leukemia, according to government research that presents the strongest link yet between cigarettes and leukemia.

Tobacco smoke causes 22 percent of all cases of myeloid leukemia, making it the leading known cause of the disease, the study by a Centers for Disease Control and Prevention scientist found.

"A lot of people are worried about exposure to radiation and electromagnetic fields, which are linked to leukemia," the scientist, Dr. Michael Siegel, said Thursday. "But it's clear that smoking is much more deadly."

"It's yet another cancer related to a known carcinogen, which is tobacco smoke," said Dr. Clark Heath of the American Cancer Society.

Leukemia is a cancer of the blood cells. The cancer society expects 26,700 new cases in American adults this year. About 12,000 of those will be myeloid leukemia, which is often fatal.

Doctors don't know everything that causes myeloid leukemia, although the chemical benzene, radiation and certain viruses are known to cause some cases.

In February, the strongest evidence to date was reported in the Archives of Internal Medicine. Researchers found that smokers had a 30 percent higher risk for contracting adult leukemias and that tobacco smoke caused about 14 percent of all cases — or 3,600 a year.

Now Siegel has gone a step further. For just myeloid leukemia, he found that smokers have a 50 percent greater risk than nonsmokers.

Q. Why does a fire engine respond to an emergency scene with an ambulance when there is no fire?

A. Firefighters hired after 1983 are required to have emergency medical technician certification. Emergency calls involving heart attacks, strokes and respiratory distress require extra personnel to assist in the treatment of the patient. The firefighter/EMT is an asset to the public because this one person fills two positions.

Questions about emergency medical services or firefighting should be sent to Lights & Siren, P.O. Box 1152, Midland, Texas, 79702-1152.

Shooting death

ODESSA — An Odessa woman who was shot in the head Saturday during an argument died Wednesday, police said. Vicki Lynn Robertson, 38, died at approximately 6:35 p.m. Wednesday, according to the report. An autopsy will be performed at a later date by the Ector County Medical Examiner Dr. Sparks Veasey, police said. Ms. Robertson suffered the wound during a shooting that injured Jose Holguin Gonzalez, 36, and killed 32-year-old Brenda Light and Frank Hollingworth, according to Odessa police. The shooting occured at 410 E. 6th St., where, according to witnesses, the four people began arguing. An investigation continues into the incident.

Drug bust

ODESSA — An Odessa woman was in jail Thursday after police found heroin at her residence, police said. Officers executed a search warrant at 1403 N. Lincoln St. at about 10 a.m. Thursday, according to a police report. The search resulted in the seizure of approximately one gram of heroin and the arrest of Jimmie Lou Wilson, 59, according to the report. The estimated street value of the heroin is about $250. Ms. Wilson was charged with possession of a controlled substance and also with a theft warrant out of Crane, according to the report. Bond was set at $7,500 for each charge, officials said.

First flight

The inaugural flight of an experimental single-stage rocket was a promising step toward proving its viability, but the goal of creating a new breed of reusable, affordable spacecraft remains unmet, experts said Thursday. The Delta Clipper-Experimental, developed by McDonnell Douglas, thundered aloft Wednesday for a brief flight above the White Sands Missile Range and made a historic tail-first landing, the first ever on Earth. The flight was a hop by spacecraft standards, but it provided a visible symbol of U.S. aerospace industry efforts to develop the reliable, economical space vehicles widely thought to be the key to the future of space travel.

Psychologist discusses ADHD

■ Expert speaks about Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder, need for children to learn delayed gratification.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

Can a tiny tot refraining from eating a cookie indicate the type of adult they will become?

It's highly possible, according to Dr. Sam Goldstein, a psychologist from Salt Lake City.

Goldstein said a study indicates that to succeed in life, children need to learn to delay gratification. He said it is especially true of children with ADHD (Attention-Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder). One of the symptoms of the disorder is impulsivity and an inclination toward instant gratification.

Goldstein, conducting an inservice Thursday for Midland public school educators, described a study involving pre-school youngsters given cookies by an adult.

The adult told the children not to eat the cookie until he returned to their room and gave them permission.

The researchers found that the children who ate the cookie, thought "cookie, cookie, cookie, cookie" over and over to themselves and focused only on the cookie and how it would taste.

The adult then returned to the room, gave the children another cookie and told them if they would wait to eat it they would get three more.

"The same children ate the cookies," Goldstein said. "The children who waited used language and thought about what they could do with three cookies — give one to a friend, a brother."

The consequences of not getting three more cookies did not deter some children from eating the cookie.

Years later, after the children had grown up and graduated from high school, the researchers found that the children who couldn't wait to eat their cookies had experienced trouble with the law and academic failures.

"So what did we learn? . . . You can line all of your kindergarteners up against the wall, give them cookies, and send the ones who eat their cookies right to the resource room?" Goldstein said joking.

After two years, police consider Henry case open

Staff report

On Aug. 19, 1991, Elizabeth Kathleen Henry placed a 911 emergency-call, told the operator she was tied up, screamed and the call ended. No one has seen or heard from the woman since.

Two years after her mysterious disappearance, police are no closer to finding Miss Henry, who was 17 at the time she disappeared, than the day they entered the teen-ager's empty house at 3610 Apollo Court shortly after 2 p.m. The police found the garage door open, the back door unlocked and no signs of struggle.

Henry

Two hours later, Ralph and Lynn Henry returned home to find the lights, television and stereo on, their dogs inside and their daughter missing.

The next day, Miss Henry's vehicle, a 1987 Ford Bronco II, was found at the Midland International Airport, with her purse inside.

Midland Police Cpl. Jim White said the department and the Midland office of the FBI both consider the case open.

"We probably get about a call a month over that National Missing Persons hotline about her, but none of them have panned out," White said.

"But, we still check all of them out. The case is definately still active," he said.

Anyone having any information about Miss Henry should call the Midland Police Department, Missing Persons Unit at 685-7174.

San Antonio keeps Air Force's special forces well-kept secret

By Don Driver
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO — The Air Force's elite pararescue team and combat controllers are often the overlooked warriors of the military's special operations forces.

"We are definitely the unsung people in the unconventional warfare community," said Master Sgt. Lamar Eikman, superintendent of the Combat Control-Pararescue Indoctrination Course at Lackland Air Force Base.

"Everybody knows about Marine recon, Navy SEALS, Green Berets and Delta Force but there's never been a movie about combat controllers or pararescue," he said.

But that may change as the service boosts recruiting efforts for the elite and hard-to-fill positions dubbed "the Special Forces of the Air Force."

They have launched initiatives, including enlistment bonuses, to increase awareness and spur recruitment for the beret-clad units.

The daring pararescue teams dart deep behind enemy lines to rescue downed air crews, while combat controllers are often the first ones into a combat situation to set up landing zones and navigational aids for incoming aircraft.

Pararescue personnel wear the distinctive maroon beret, while combat controllers wear a scarlet beret.

"People usually don't associate these units with the Air Force because they work closely with other services such as Army Special Forces and Navy SEALS," said Lt. Col. Greg Dahlgren, chief of the enlisted programs branch for the Air Force Recruiting Service at Randolph Air Force Base.

"They do their jobs quietly and effectively, and it's not something exposed to the world," he said.

CAF volunteers need equipment to build woodworking workshop

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

Confederate Air Force volunteers, who are loyally steeped in restoring, maintaining and flying World War II-vintage aircraft, are also into carpentry as they build museum display pieces and wooden aircraft tool boxes and compartments.

The volunteers are hoping to build a woodworking workshop at the CAF headquarters at Midland International Airport and to collect a broad mix of donated woodworking tools.

"The (CAF) people who do woodworking also enjoy airplanes and World War II-type activities," CAF volunteer Rayburn H. Williams said.

Williams, who was a creman on a Boeing B-29 Superfortress, said that the CAF is in need of saws, drills and lathes.

Williams and volunteer Marvin Harges of Midland are working to get a free-standing woodworking shop built at the CAF headquarters and to move the old shop out of the hangar.

Much of the woodworking currently is being done in the garage of volunteers Bob and Shirley Walker, in the CAF hangar, and in back-room space at the American Airpower Heritage Museum at CAF headquarters.

CAF wood-working volunteers, such as the Walkers, are among the skilled people who build the exhibits to specifications and save the CAF thousands of dollars.

"They know what they are doing," Tami O'Bannion, museum director said. "We would have to close our doors tomorrow if it weren't for them."

Currently, CAF volunteers are building a full-size wooden model of part of the fuselage of a four-engine Douglas C-54 Skymaster, a heavy World War II transport.

Trinity celebrates milestone, honors 500th enrolled student

Staff report

Trinity School celebrated a milestone Thursday morning when they honored the school's 500th student to enroll for the 1993-94 school year.

First-grader Amy Tatum, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Scott Tatum, was presented with a commemorative T-shirt, textbooks, workbooks and school supplies by administrators of the private school.

'This represents the first occasion in the 36-year history of the school for opening day to reach 500 students.'

Trinity spokesman

"This represents the first occasion in the 36-year history of the school for opening day to reach 500 students," said Floyd James, Trinity spokesman.

Although the first-grader topped the record enrollment, James said it's possible a few more students will enroll before Sept. 1, the first day of school for Trinity students.

Six-year-old Amy Tatum holds up a T-shirt with her name on the back and "Trinity 500" on the front. The shirt commemorates her being the 500th student to enroll at Trinity School this year, breaking an all-time record.

CAF: Volunteers need workshop equipment

(From 1B)

The model would be attached to the salvaged cockpit section of a C-54 and will be part of the museum's Phase III exhibit entitled, "Troops, Tanks, Food and Supplies: Air Transport and Fortification."

The exhibit is to open during the CAF's AirSho'93 on Oct. 9 and 10 and will complement the museum's previous exhibits: "War and Rumors of War: The Decade Before Pearl Harbor, 1931-41," and "A Sleeping Giant Awakens: Home-fires Forge Plowshares into Swords."

"This (the C-54 Skymaster) was the first four-engine transport that was designed as a transport" and not a bomber converted to a transport, said CAF volunteer Murrell Howell of Odessa.

Howell flew B-24s and C-54s during the war and flew the C-54 during the Berlin Airlift in 1948 when the former Soviet Union closed ground transportation corridors into Berlin.

Williams is seeking contributions to fund construction of the woodworking building as well as donations of woodworking tools, such as a table or bench saw to cut plywood, a regular table saw, 10-inch radial saw, band saw, circular saws, sanders, routers, drill press, scroll saw, wood lathe, exhaust fan, electric drills, and bits.

"We are not looking for anything gold-plated," Williams said. "We are just looking for good functional equipment" for building museum exhibits."

To make a contribution or donation, interested persons may call Williams at 694-4828 or 563-1000.

SPEAK: Psychologist talks about disorder

(From 1B)

"No, the study showed children need to delay gratification to be successful and they need to use language to delay gratification," he said. "Language plays an important role in delaying gratification."

The psychologist, addressing teachers at the Midland High School auditorium, said ADHD may be the most complex, yet common childhood disorder.

"A significant percentage of this population develop serious problems with conduct, depression, drugs and alcohol," Goldstein said.

Because of this, the psychologist gave a day-long presentation on the subject to Midland public school teachers.

He spoke on recognizing symptoms of the disorder and coping with students who have it.

Goldstein, an associate of the Neurology, Learning and Behavior Center in Salt Lake City, has written several textbooks, teachers' guides and produced an award-winning videotape on the disorder.

He said the most successful interventions teachers can use are cognitive and environmental.

"Cognitive must be done daily," he said. "You must teach the child to think about his actions. And emphasize what the consequences will be if the child doesn't use the skills."

He said teachers need to work with students to help them solve problems arising from Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD), which is characterized by difficulties with attention span, impulse control and sometimes hyperactivity.

Goldstein was brought to Midland by MISD and ADDAPT (Attention Deficit Disorder Association of Parents and Teachers).

He also spoke to the public on Wednesday night.

Sponsors of his visit included the Junior Woman's Club of Midland, Permian Basin Area Foundation, American Airlines, and the Midland Hilton.

According to criteria in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of the American Psychiatric Association, to diagnose a child as having ADHD he or she must display — for at least six months — at least eight of the following characteristics before age 7:

- Fidgets, squirms, or seems restless.
- Has difficulty remaining seated.
- Is easily distracted.
- Has difficulty awaiting turn.
- Blurts out answers.
- Has difficulty following instructions.
- Has difficulty sustaining attention.
- Shifts from one uncompleted task to another.
- Has difficulty playing quietly.
- Talks excessively.
- Interrupts or intrudes on others.
- Does not seem to listen.
- Often loses things necessary for tasks.
- Frequently engages in dangerous actions.

AIR: San Antonio has well-kept secret

(From 1B)

'A lot of people who want to do physical, thrill-seeking type jobs are drawn to Navy SEALS and Marines because they know those jobs exist there. Most people don't know they exist in the Air Force, too.'

—Master Sgt. Lamar Eikman

the specialties may fit in with the Air Force's Space-Age marketing of education and technology, the grueling, physically intensive side of the jobs more closely resembles those found in other military services.

"Marines market for down-in-the-dirt forces and the Army does that, too," Eikman said. "A lot of people who want to do physical, thrill-seeking type jobs are drawn to Navy SEALS and Marines because they know those jobs exist there. Most people don't know they exist in the Air Force, too.

"We also need people with good technical aptitude air traffic control and medical training requirements are stringent," he said. "It's very high-tech."

Even in these post-Cold War days of a draw-down in military forces, the Air Force finds it hard to fill the two career fields.

Currently, only 305 of the combat controllers' authorized 466 positions are filled, and the 240 in pararescue fall short of the 290 authorized posts, according to the Air Force Military Personnel Center at Randolph.

So, the Air Force has increased recruiters' awareness of the elite units to better seek out potential volunteers.

"It's a tough market," Dahlgren said. "Instead of just talking to students in classes, they might want to talk to coaches, too."

Pararescue units have performed valiantly in Southeast Asia and in peacetime roles such as rescue crews during the devastating 1989 earthquake in San Francisco.

They were among the few on the scene in California volunteering to crawl between the collapsed sections of an expressway to recover motorists trapped in debris.

They were also among the first to parachute into Panama in 1989 and to treat U.S. casualties in the initial assault on two Panamanian airfields.

Combat controllers, meanwhile, participated in the 1980 effort to rescue American hostages being held in Iran.

Later, during the 1983 assault in Grenada, 12 combat controllers joined Army Rangers on the first parachute jump onto the island. They soon set up a communications system to guide incoming aircraft.

But it's not easy to earn the berets.

First, volunteers have to complete the 12-week indoctrination course at Lackland. The physically intensive and stressful training averages a 60-percent dropout rate.

Those that graduate, however, are well prepared to handle the subsequent 12-to 14-month training program at various bases, including the Army Airborne School, Army Special Forces Scuba School, Air Force Water Survival School, Air Force Basic Survival School, Navy Underwater Training and Military Freefall Parachutist School.

Allegations in Graham case come under fire

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — In their effort to portray Texas death row inmate Gary Graham as the victim of a racist justice system, his attorneys are hammering away at ballistics reports, which, they say, help show that Graham is innocent of the murder for which he was sentenced to die.

But state attorneys say police and court records show that the evidence being presented by Graham's attorneys is a clever concoction of half-truths and misrepresentations.

Texas' highest criminal appeals court granted Graham, 29, an indefinite stay of execution on Monday — hours before he was scheduled to die — until the issue of a clemency hearing is decided.

Graham's lawyers are fighting to present to the Texas parole board ballistics information and testimony from several witnesses who say Graham is not the man who killed Bobby Lambert outside a Houston grocery store in 1981.

A state appeals court will hear arguments Sept. 29 in a legal battle between state attorneys and Graham's defense over whether a clemency hearing must be held.

Meanwhile, Graham's attorneys are continuing a campaign that has grown into a national cause, with Hollywood heavyweights such as Danny Glover and Kenny Rogers throwing their support to Graham. His supporters claim the young black man received an unfair trial.

Graham's attorneys, for instance, say jurors were told that Graham was arrested with a .22-caliber pistol — the same caliber weapon that killed Lambert. Yet, they claim, prosecutors withheld ballistics reports that showed the gun found on Graham was not the murder weapon.

"Prosecutors gave jurors a false impression that Gary Graham was guilty," says a flier being distributed in Houston.

"The gun is a big, big issue" and an example of how Graham's attorneys have been deceiving the public and distorting the facts of the Graham case, said Harris County prosecutor Roe Wilson.

Court records show that jurors never heard testimony about a gun during the guilt-innocence phase of Graham's murder trial. Jurors also were not told the circumstances of Graham's arrest — that he was accused of abducting, raping and robbing a 57-year-old woman with a .22-caliber pistol — or that police believe he had committed 23 other robberies and thefts. Graham pleaded guilty in 10 of those cases.

Only after finding him guilty did jurors learn of Graham's crime spree.

"There was no false impression created in the jurors' minds, because the jury had already found him guilty. They had no idea that he was arrested with a .22-caliber gun," Wilson said.

During the punishment phase of the trial, jurors heard testimony about the .22-caliber pistol as well as nine other guns used by Graham during his weeklong crime spree.

Ron Mock, Graham's defense attorney at the time, said he knew of the ballistics report and that it showed the gun found on Graham and the bullet that killed Lambert did not match. However, because the issue of the gun was not raised during the guilt phase of the trial, there was nothing for him to rebut, he said.

Wilson said Graham's attorneys have distorted facts to create the perception that Graham was wrongly convicted. The gun story is typical of their tactics, she said.

Monday's "Nightline" news program repeated allegations about the gun testimony but did not clarify the circumstances.

Richard Burr, an NAACP attorney for Graham, denies that his legal teams' claims are misleading. He says Graham's attorneys have never explicitly said that testimony about the .22-caliber pistol came during the guilt phase of the trial. Although jurors had already found Graham guilty before they heard the testimony, it could have affected their decision in deciding punishment, he says.

The latest flier being distributed by Graham's supporters contains the gun allegations along with a list of witnesses who say they saw Lambert's killer, and it wasn't Graham.

Midland plastic surgeon presents paper on implants

Staff report

Dr. Terry Tubb, a Midland plastic and reconstruction surgeon, recently presented a paper on implants at the 1993 International Symposium of Plastic Surgery in Stockholm. Sweden.

Tubb's academic paper was entitled "Exchange and Revision of Implants with Gel Extravasation."

The symposium was jointly sponsored by the American Plastic Surgery Educational Foundation and the Swedish Association of Plastic Surgeons.

Tubb is associate clinical professor at the Texas Tech Health Science Center on the Texas Tech University campus in Lubbock and is a member of the International Society of Aesthetic Plastic Surgery.

The State in brief

■ Waco man awaits execution for slayings

HUNTSVILLE — A former cement finisher insisted he should not be executed Friday for a $30 robbery and abductions in which two people where killed 13 years ago because he didn't fire the fatal shots.

Carl Kelly, 34, of Waco, faced lethal injection before dawn for the 1980 death of Steven Pryor, 18, a clerk at a Waco 7-Eleven convenience store. Another man, David Riley, a transient from Illinois who was asleep in Pryor's car outside the store, was slain in the same incident.

Kelly's attorneys asked for a rehearing before the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals to challenge the legality of his confession to police. State and federal appeals courts already had rejected their arguments once.

Pryor and Riley were abducted and robbed in the early morning hours of Sept. 2, 1980, taken to Waco's Cameron Park in Pryor's car and fatally shot. Then their bodies were hurled over a 60-foot cliff known as Lover's Leap.

Kelly's companion, Thomas Graves, also of Waco, pleaded guilty to both killings, as well as to the slaying of a third man the previous day. Graves, who was 20 at the time, received a life prison term.

Graves was arrested driving Pryor's car and Kelly's wallet was found in the trunk. Limestone dust detected on the floor of the car led police to the park, where they found the bodies at the base of the cliff.

■ Memorial service to be held for police dog

MARSHALL — A memorial service with a full honor guard is scheduled Friday for one of the city's finest: Voss the police dog.

Voss, a 3-year-old Dutch shepherd, died last Wednesday of a birth defect. An autopsy showed his heart and kidneys had never grown to full size.

He was one of two dogs in the Marshall Police Department and was considered a valuable asset in detecting drugs, tracking suspects and recovering evidence. He had been with the department since May.

"Voss had already done an outstanding job for the department and we feel a tremendous loss already," said Marshall Police Lt. R.D. Henderson.

"He was responsible for finding items from burglaries and during one incident he found two guns and 12 rocks of crack cocaine that a suspect had thrown while fleeing from officers. He was also responsible for recovering a lot of evidence in the burglary of the East Texas National Bank (drive-through location)."

Memorial services were scheduled at 9 a.m. at the Marshall Police Department firing range.

The death comes six weeks after the Harrison County Sheriff's Department's canine, Barefoot, was put to sleep after being struck by a tractor-trailer truck.

■ Texas officer fatally shoots 17-year-old

SAN BENITO — A police officer fatally shot a 17-year-old who had been taunting officers responding to a disturbance call, authorities and witnesses said Thursday.

San Benito police Chief Richard Clark said Roberto Sanchez was shot once in the chest late Wednesday.

"The suspect was acting in a threatening manner to the officers," Clark said. "At the time, the officer believed that the suspect was armed."

Witnesses told KGBT-TV that Sanchez had only a comb in his back pocket, but he taunted the officers and acted as if he had a weapon.

Sanchez made a quick motion at one of the officers, and the officer shot him, witnesses told the Harlingen station.

The officer was reassigned to administrative duties pending the outcome of an investigation by the Cameron County Sheriff's Department.

The chief said Sanchez had been trying to force his way into a home belonging to the mother of his estranged girlfriend.

Family questions death of disabled man

FORT WORTH (AP) — Family members and neighbors say Archie Terral presented no threat to the police officers who stormed his home looking for drugs.

Police say Terral pointed a gun at police from his bed Saturday night before two officers opened fire, killing him.

Terral returned in July to the south Fort Worth neighborhood in which he had grown up to stay with his son after spending five months in a hospital and nursing home recovering from a stroke.

No one inside the home was arrested during the drug raid, although police did arrest two people outside and said they found paraphernalia and traces of illegal substances in the home, which had been under surveillance for several days.

Terral himself was not suspected of involvement in drugs, police say. His relatives and minority group leaders say that makes the killing even more outrageous than recent controversial police shootings and beatings of black crime suspects. Terral was black; one of the officers who fired on him is black and the other is white.

"It's always been sort of a given that one has the right to defend oneself in one's home. If heightened law enforcement activity means that a citizen is no longer afforded that right, we at least need to inform people that that's the case," said Roy C. Brooks, president of the Fort Worth-Tarrant County Minority Leaders and Citizens Council.

Brooks said a police crackdown this summer on drug and gang activity has been effective at fighting crime but has crossed the line in violating civil liberties. Random driver's license checks, surveillance and raids such as the one on the Terral home have all been employed.

"It's becoming more and more common that people are denied their rights because of the heightened enforcement," he said. "People are being bothered more, accosted more. Whenever you receive that type of treatment, there are bound to be violations of rights."

Darryl Terral, the slain man's son, called the police raid "extremely deplorable" and poorly planned.

"If I'm going to bust into your house, I should know where everyone is," said Terral, 30. "If there's an invalid — someone who can barely move, who's hard of hearing — I'm going to go into that house a little bit differently than I'm going to go into someone else's house."

Police Chief Thomas Windham said he regrets that Terral was killed but supports the actions of the officers, Bryan N. Newell and Frederick Myers, who police say warned Terral to drop his gun. Newell, 28, and Myers, 33, have been placed on routine leave while the shooting is investigated.

Lt. Greg Bradley, a department spokesman, said the deadly raid probably will cause officials to examine their tactics.

Experts: Inaugural flight was good 1st step

Associated Press

The inaugural flight of an experimental single-stage rocket was a promising step toward proving its viability, but the goal of creating a new breed of reusable, affordable spacecraft remains unmet, experts said Thursday.

The Delta Clipper-Experimental, developed by McDonnell Douglas, thundered aloft Wednesday for a brief flight above the White Sands Missile Range and made a historic tail-first landing, the first ever on Earth.

The flight was a hop by spacecraft standards, but it provided a visible symbol of U.S. aerospace industry efforts to develop the reliable, economical space vehicles widely thought to be the key to the future of space travel.

"It's certainly an interesting start" for the DC-X, said John Pike, director of space policy for the Federation of American Scientists.

The flight proved McDonnell Douglas' fundamental assertion that a rocket can take off and land vertically, but not claims that such a vehicle will be more practical than existing spacecraft, he said.

Pike noted the space shuttle program, once touted as the efficient answer for space travel, showed it could be feasible, yet lost track of the cost and maintenance that would be involved in each launch.

"It's basically the difference between the car that's in your garage that's going to be serviced a few hours each year and the dragster that needs a complete overhaul to run for five seconds," Pike said. "With the shuttle we thought we were buying a commuter car and we wound up buying a dragster."

Yet the DC-X is only intended to prove the more basic concepts of McDonnell Douglas' single-stage-to-orbit concept.

The contractor envisions building larger, more complex experimental craft before arriving at a 127-foot, fully operational Delta Clipper capable of flying into orbit.

The DC-X was funded by the federal Ballistic Missile Defense Organization and funding for future generations is contingent upon the program's success.

Steven J. Hoeser, executive director of the Space Transportation Association a trade group in Arlington, Va., said the test flight put the DC-X program into the "realm of believability" for funding consideration.

"Obviously, not all of the questions are answered," he said.

Pay raise leads to indictment of ex-sheriff

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — James Hickey once said he was underpaid during his 10 years as Nueces County sheriff.

Shortly before leaving office last year, he wrote himself a check from a federal drug-forfeiture fund. He jotted in a litt memo: "salary adjustment."

The amount: a $48,000 retroactive salary increase.

The result: He was charged Wednesday in a federal grand jury indictment said to be the first of its kind in the nation.

The indictment alleges that Hickey and attorney Bradford Condit conspired to embezzle and misapply sheriff's department funds from August 1987 through Dec. 31, 1992.

If convicted, they each could face a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison.

"This indictment is a typical bureaucratic over-reaction to a financial dispute," said a statement by their attorneys, Robert Berg and Paul Kratzig.

Berg and Kratzig said they expected to prove the innocence of their clients.

Cary Copeland, director of the Executive Office for Asset Forfeiture with the Justice Department, said the charges against Hickey are "the first of this type."

"This was so unusual, I went down personally to testify before the grand jury, and we did want to proceed effectively and clearly in this matter," Copeland said. "We are very disappointed that this happened."

The indictment cites more than $158,000 in payments from the drug-forfeiture fund, including Hickey's $48,000 pay increase and a $100,800 check he wrote to Condit for current and future legal services.

Hickey and Condit filed government documents stating that the sheriff's department would use federal forfeiture funds for narcotics investigations, the indictment says.

It accuses Hickey of writing several checks for purposes other than those stated on the governmental forms.

He gave emergency loans — described in the indictment as gifts totaling $2,000 — to three sheriff's department employees.

Hickey also paid $3,213 from the drug fund for the purchase of 152 vacation hours to John Holsonback, who was forced to resign from the department, the indictment says.

Hickey also paid $3,996 from the fund to employee Bessie Lightner for a superior performance award in May 1992. The money actually was a gift to Lightner, who had been sick and without a paycheck, the indictment alleges.

In a payment not mentioned in the federal indictment, Hickey used $950 from the drug fund to travel to Washington, D.C., for a congressional hearing concerning abortion clinic protests.

Hickey, an ardent abortion opponent, told the hearing that he would not allow his department to arrest anti-abortion demonstrators who blockade clinics.

Hickey, 55, and Condit, 40, have contended that the payments were legal.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

FRIDAY, AUGUST 20, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your relationships become much more fulfilling. An economic turnaround in late fall helps both business and your domestic finances. Invest in the future. A combination of new alliances and modern technology will bring both extra cash and glamour your way. Early in 1994, seize a golden opportunity to get in on the ground floor of a creative venture. Your Leo flair for the dramatic will make it a great success!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: journalist Connie Chung, actress Theresa Saldana, Sen. Terry Sanford, slugger Tom Brunansky.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Avoid locking horns with your mate or you could have an uncomfortable weekend. You can learn a lot from being a good listener. Make notes for future reference.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A loving gesture from someone at a distance has you walking on air. A savings campaign will eventually produce big dividends. You feel good about your efforts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Improving your appearance boosts your self-confidence. Extra effort at work will bring new monetary gains. It may be necessary to bend over backwards to obtain the financial support you need.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make your own financial decisions and your money will begin to work for you. Broaden your horizons by socializing tonight. Nit-picking could land you in hot water with loved ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Romance has you guessing. Today's events improve your chances for forming a successful partnership. Retirement does not mean you no longer set goals and pursue them aggressively.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do not give up! Any business losses are purely temporary. Mate or partner turns to you for encouragement. Offer your wholehearted support. Follow through on the promises you make.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Although first impressions are important, they could be misleading today. Keep your guard up if someone suggests changes in money management. Tried-and-true approaches still work best.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your ingenuity could lead a former employer to invite you back. Be certain the deal is something you can live with. You will be directly involved in a project that a child begins.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): View a health problem as an opportunity to learn more about yourself. Sleep difficulties will quickly fade. Refuse to dwell on the negative.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take a short vacation before summer slips away. Financial help from a private source boosts your spirits. Let your instincts lead you in the right direction.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Keep your ambition in check and you will see things in proper perspective. Your inner resources help you solve a personal problem. Enter a contest without further delay.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You spot a new economic trend today. Do what you can to capitalize on it. Preventive medicine can save you grief. You find yourself more and more attracted to someone special.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are affectionate, family-oriented and seldom at a loss for words. They like to confide in people and may have trouble keeping secrets. For these youngsters, home is a safe harbor, a place to which to retreat and find reassurance. At other times, these Leos can be real party animals — eager to be seen in all the best places. Ambitious and diligent, they quickly climb the ladder of success.

Bridge columns do a disservice to the partscore. The perception of many players is that all the excitement occurs on game or slam hands, so the partial is relegated to second-class citizenship. However, many of the most exciting battles across the green baize occur below game level.

South almost had the values for a game try once North could raise spades. However, shortness in opener's suit and the poor quality of the trump suit caused South to adopt a conservative approach. Indeed, it was the latter flaw that allowed the defenders to prevail.

West's lead of the eight of clubs is the modern style. To distinguish between suits where the opening leader holds high cards and poor holdings, the defender leads fourth-best from a good suit and second-best from rubbish.

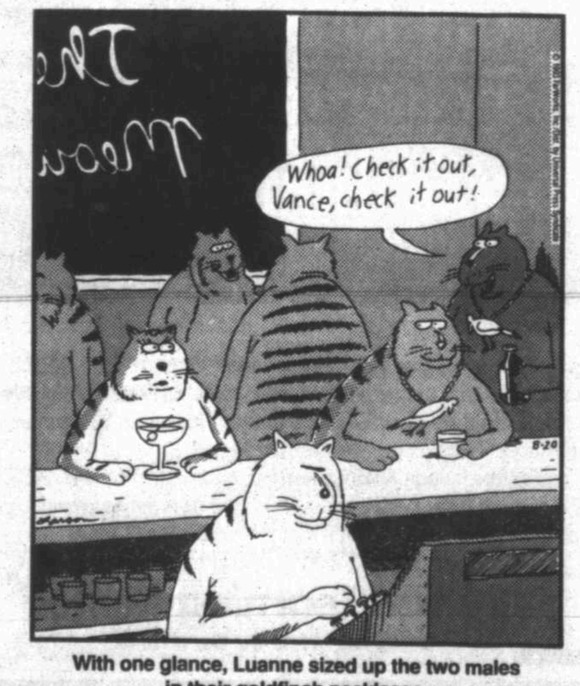

East rose with the ace of clubs at trick one and had no problem finding the shift to the six of hearts. Declarer played low, West won the queen, cashed the ace and continued with a third heart. East ruffed and reverted to a club, won in the closed hand.

Declarer tried to draw trumps, but West hopped up with the ace immediately and led another heart. Since dummy had to follow, East's ruff with the jack of trumps was the setting trick.

Note the problem East would have had at trick two had West led a low club. There would have been no way for the defender to know for sure that it was right to shift to a heart rather than continue with clubs.

Tennis star Navratilova turns to fiction, inks 3-book contract

ASPEN, Colo. — At age 36, tennis star Martina Navratilova already has written her autobiography. So naturally, her literary efforts would turn to fiction — sort of.

Navratilova and coauthor Liz Nichles signed a three-novel contract last week with Villard Books, a division of Random House.

"Her personal and political beliefs — plus her rare insights into women's tennis — will be at the heart of her books," said Doug Stumpf, Villard's executive editor.

The tennis champion is sticking with topics she knows. The first novel will be set at various tournaments, said Navratilova's publicist, Linda Dozoretz.

"Aspen will figure into some of these, I'm sure," Dozoretz said, adding Navratilova likely will creep into some of the story lines, though not by name.

The first book is to be published in 1995, the second in 1996, the third in 1997, Dozoretz said. Contract terms weren't disclosed.

Navratilova cowrote an autobiography with George Vecsey eight years ago and recently wrote a column for USA Today on Colorado's Amendment 2 and gay rights issues. Another of her columns is to be published by Time magazine.

NEW YORK — Actor Anthony Quinn confessed to a newspaper columnist that, at age 78, he recently fathered a child with a former secretary. But he pleaded for his wife of 29 years to return to him.

Quinn

New York Post gossip columnist Cindy Adams, a longtime friend of Quinn and his wife, Iolanda, wrote in a story published Thursday that Mrs. Quinn won't even take telephone calls from her husband since learning of the child.

The infant girl, Patricia, was born July 22.

"She's beautiful. She looks like me," Quinn said. "I love the child."

The mother is identified only as Kathy, a former secretary in her 30s who has known Quinn for nine years. Mrs. Quinn knew about the affair when she went to their villa in Rome in late July, but only learned about the child on Tuesday, Adams said.

Adams said Quinn asked her to print his story because he wants to patch things up with Mrs. Quinn, and because he believes supermarket tabloids have found out about the baby.

Adams closed her column by telling Mrs. Quinn to punish the actor for his infidelity, but also to return home because he needs her.

With his first wife, Katherine de Mille, Quinn has four children. He has three with Iolanda. Including Patricia, Quinn has fathered four children with other women.

Quinn gained superstardom with his title role in "Zorba the Greek." He won best supporting actor Oscars for "Viva Zapata" in 1952 and "Lust For Life" in 1956.

MOSCOW — During the Cold War, American pop music was taboo in Russia. Nowadays pop star Michael Jackson is a celebrated soldier on the Russian front of a global cola war.

Promotional blitzkriegs are old hat in the West, but in Russia's infantile advertising market, Pepsi's campaign hyping Jackson's upcoming concert appearance is revolutionary.

Pepsi ran a national television show Tuesday about Jackson's life, complete with Russian subtitles. Wednesday night, the first of 10 TV commercials will begin throughout Russia.

"We are putting a lot of promotion behind it and will be very aggressive until Sept. 15," said Raya Bandura, marketing manager for Pepsi-Cola International's Moscow office.

The Soviet Union for decades condemned rock music, forcing fans to resort to smuggled tapes. Those restrictions disappeared with the communist government's 1991 collapse.

But the cost of freedom includes ticket prices from $11 to $111 for Jackson's show, steep for Russians whose average monthly salary is about $48.

The "Dangerous" world tour starts in Bangkok August 24, and is to go to Singapore, Taipei, Japan, Tel Aviv, Istanbul and the Canary Islands.

Meanwhile, in South Korea, Culture Ministry officials rejected Jackson's application to perform there Sept. 7, saying such a show could hurt Korean society.

NEW YORK — A record company and its publisher are suing Madonna for $2.25 million, claiming two of her songs copied one of theirs.

The federal lawsuit filed Tuesday by Easy Street Records Inc. and Publishing Corp. of America names Time-Warner Inc., Madonna and others as defendants.

Christine Wolff, a spokeswoman for Warner Records, a division of Time-Warner, said she didn't know anything about the lawsuit. Wolff said Madonna's publicist also knew nothing of the lawsuit.

The lawsuit claims Madonna's 1992 songs "Bad Girl" and "Deeper and Deeper" copied portions of "You Don't Know," a song written in May 1985.

FAMILY MATTERS

Smaller income brings valuable life lessons

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: What can you tell your children (girl 12 and boy 7) when you can't afford to buy them the school clothes that they want? I have been divorced from their father almost three years because he found another woman he just couldn't live without. He is a successful businessman, but I think that he manipulated his income so he wouldn't have to give us the money he really should. I'm still mad and hurt over the money settlement.

May

My real problem now is that I have to live with the children on so little. They were used to one kind of life before the divorce and now they have to live very differently. They still have the same friends, but can't do the things that they used to do. I couldn't afford to keep the house, so we had to sell it and rent a much smaller house. I was able to find one in the same neighborhood that I could afford, but it takes most of our money.

Now I feel really badly because it's school time and my daughter wants to dress like her girlfriends and I just can't afford it. I just don't know how to deal with this. She is trying to be brave, but two nights ago I found her crying in her bed because she was so upset over not fitting in because of the way she had to dress. She is going to be going to junior high this year and she is nervous about that too.

I was so upset that I called her father as soon as I got her calmed down. He was very unsympathetic. He said that if she wanted to have more, she should come and live with him. I lost my temper and hung up on him. That will happen with hell freezes over. I know that wasn't the right thing to do, but I was so angry.

Now what do I do? I don't have any extra money and her father won't help her. It just kills me to see her so upset over something that he could easily correct. He has plenty of money to run and play with his new girlfriend, but no money to buy his children school clothes! UPSET, MAD AND HURT

DEAR UPSET: "Fitting in" with their peers is very important to children, especially when they are your daughter's age. However, teaching children about values and limits also is very important. Your life circumstance has changed and everyone must learn to adapt to change. Consider this an opportunity to teach your daughter and son a valuable life lesson.

Validating your daughter's feelings about not being able to dress like her friends is important. Consider establishing a clothes budget with her so that she can utilize the available money in the most desirable manner. Teach her about mixing clothes to get different outfits from the same purchase. Introduce her to sales and less expensive brands that look good. I know that brands are important, but other options are available. The same approach applies to your son. At his age, he may not require as large a clothes budget as your daughter.

Living on a budget is nothing to be ashamed of. Someone once said that as we try to give our children everything we did not have, we take away their learning to do without. Suffering is a normal aspect of this life. Learning to live within your means is painful but invaluable. Many adults have never learned this lesson. I am sorry that her father is so unsympathetic, but it teaches your daughter who she can depend on for financial support.

Hold your head up high! You and your daughter can solve this problem with a wardrobe that will work within a budget.

THE FOLLOWING SUGGESTIONS OF QUESTIONS PARENTS MIGHT ASK THEMSELVES WHEN THEY FEEL STRESSED WITH THEIR CHILDREN ARE OFFERED BY THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES:

- Is it so important that the children always do things my way?
- Can I let the children have it their own way sometimes?
- Do I really take enough time to try to understand what the children are saying to me?
- Do I really know what the children want and need from me?
- Is what I say or tell them to do really clear to them?
- How often do I stop and listen — letting the children tell me what they thing and feel — simply because they need to talk to me?
- After I've lost control, how do I really feel about myself?
- Can I really make it up to them?
- Am I really taking my problems out on them?
- How would I feel if someone said or did the same thing to me?

DEAR ABBY

Case for good manners is in making good neighbors

EDITOR'S NOTE: Dear Abby is on a two-week vacation. Following is a selection of some of her favorite past letters from 1977.

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Why do people place so much importance on manners? From the time kids learn to walk and talk, adults hassle them about manners and being polite.

Van Buren

I don't see what good it does to stand up when an older person or a lady comes into the room. And there are dozens of other rules that come under the heading of "manners" that make no sense at all.

Maybe you can explain it to me. — DON'T GET IT

DEAR DON'T: To answer your question, no one said it better than the late and great Amy Vanderbilt:

"Good manners are the traffic rules for society in general. Without good manners, living would be chaotic, human beings unbearable to each other. Reduced to a phrase, good manners are consideration of other people in respect of their feelings, their safety, their privacy, and their full social rights and privileges."

DEAR ABBY: I am a reasonably attractive, well-mannered bachelor in my late 30s who receives many social invitations. I recently turned down an invitation to a dinner party. I frankly told the hostess that I was no longer accepting invitations that did not allow me to bring my own date. Very irately, she told me that if I didn't want to go to parties alone, I should get married.

Why do so many people think a single person should be eager to accept invitations to go to a party alone? I always feel like a fifth wheel, or else I get stuck with a dateless woman who shares my embarrassment. Am I wrong? — SINGLE SIMON

DEAR SIMON: If you'd rather bring your own date than gamble on whom the hostess has paired you off with, say so. But most bachelors are invited to parties to provide escorts for the single women. And I'd like to see the dateless woman who would feel "embarrassed" to find her dinner companion a reasonably attractive, well-mannered bachelor.

DEAR ABBY: There is an old guy in our town who is driving everybody nuts. He's about 75 years old, and he can't keep his paws off women. No waitress will get within 6 feet of him. When he comes into the restaurant, the cashier has to take his order, and the cook comes out of the kitchen to serve it to him!

This guy went to a doctor for a checkup, and the nurse told me that if he ever came back, she was going to have a pair of handcuffs ready.

Everybody in town knows about him. I can't understand why they let a man like that run loose. Isn't he dangerous? — PASO ROBLES

DEAR PASO: Probably not. If everybody in town knows about him, they're safe. It's the ones they DON'T know about who are dangerous.

DEAR ABBY: I would like your opinion of the following situation:

When friends drop in, should the hostess excuse herself and put on a pot of coffee, or get a cold drink and serve it with a sandwich, cake, cookies or whatever she has on hand? Or should she ask her guests if they would like a hot drink, a cold one or a sandwich?

My husband and I are on opposite sides of this argument and need you to settle it for us. — MILLIE IN MARYLAND

DEAR MILLIE: The gracious hostess does not inquire. She acts. (P.S. Drop-in visitors should not expect a feed-in.)

French chef believes in tradition

By Marilyn August
Associated Press

AP Laserphoto

French chef Paul Bocuse stands in the kitchen of his three-star restaurant in Collonges-au-Mont d'Or, central France. Considered by many to be the world's greatest chef, Bocuse, 67, has come to symbolize the ultimate in French gastronomy. An advocate of down-to-earth dishes, Bocuse disdains the popular French "nouvelle cuisine," prefering that food be a spectacle enhanced with plenty of butter, cream and wine.

COLLONGES-AU-MONT D'OR, France — Paul Bocuse is so busy running his gastronomic empire that he no longer cooks. But after all, he asks, "Does Fred Chandon cork his champagne at Moet-Chandon?"

The man known as the Pope of Chefs still oversees his three-star restaurant outside Lyon and continues his war on "nouvelle cuisine." He calls it "food for snobs and anorexics where there's nothing on your plate and everything on the bill."

In addition to his own legendary establishment, Bocuse is involved with the French Pavilion at Disney World in Florida, heads an association of European chefs, has a cooking show on German television and runs a gourmet cruise ship and a bakery chain in Japan.

As is true of many celebrated chefs, Bocuse leaves daily cooking to highly trained deputies. Three of his have earned the title "meilleur ouvrier de France" — literally "best worker in France," the nation's highest award for excellence in the kitchen.

"They may be better chefs than I am," Bocuse said, smiling and sipping champagne during an interview. "But I proved myself, I earned my three stars in 1963. ... If I don't baste the duckling or whip the cream, my deputies certainly can."

Bocuse, 67, has come to symbolize the ultimate in French gastronomy. His name evokes traditional delicacies like veal kidneys, which he learned to saute in wine sauce at age 8.

Attired in stiffly starched chef's whites, Bocuse fusses over guests and casts a watchful eye over the exquisite fare at Collonges-au-Mont d'Or. He knows the rest of his culinary kingdom depends on perfection at the restaurant where it began.

"All my success depends on running a tight ship here, and I can't afford to slip," he said, scrutinizing a green salad topped with chunks of lobster shaped like croissants.

A SUMPTUOUS, hearty six-course repast "chez Bocuse" — about $300 for two — has been a must for gastronomes since he earned his three-star rating in the ultraselect Michelin guide three decades ago.

Don't bother bringing a picky appetite. Bocuse advocates down-to-earth dishes "that won't fly off the plate on the way to your table."

Dishes are prepared with the finest ingredients, such as fresh vegetables from the restaurant's garden and free-range poultry, enhanced with plenty of butter, cream and wine.

Assessing "nouvelle cuisine," small portions of decorative, low-fat fare; Bocuse fumed: "Food has become completely depersonalized: beef served without bones, poultry without skin and fish in boring filets, pureed this and pureed that. Sometimes, you don't even know what you're eating."

He believes food should be a spectacle. "Let the maitre d'hotel carve up the spit-roasted duckling at the table," he said, "not in the kitchen."

Food critics agree Bocuse's ultimate contribution to cuisine is a truffle soup created for former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing in 1976. Laden with the dark, pungent mushrooms, the broth is tightly sealed in a terrine by a feathery-light puff of pastry.

"More of an adaptation than a creation," was the chef's modest description. "Just ask any housewife from the Ardeche region."

In his restaurant, named simply Paul Bocuse, silver candlesticks and floral bouquets adorn tables set with the finest china and crystal, a touch many restaurateurs have imitated.

TIES AND jackets are not required, and even the family dog is allowed in.

A high-school dropout, Bocuse personally comes across as a kind of Horatio Alger of French cuisine. He lives simply, rising at 6:00 a.m. for a breakfast of lemon juice and black expresso at the local cafe. He has lunch with his staff of 70, who call him "Monsieur Paul."

He is the latest in a line of chefs from Collonges that extends unbroken to 1765. One day, he will pass the torch to his son Jerome, 23, who was educated at the Culinary Institute of America.

"I encouraged him to go the U.S.A. because of the mentality, the professionalism, the relaxed efficiency," Bocuse said. "I saw that, contrary to what's going on here, young chefs really learn the basics, like musicians who practice their scales, or artists who learn about pigments."

Bocuse also loves prime U.S. beef and Idaho potatoes.

After fighting with the Free French in World War II, when he was wounded and treated in an American field hospital, he returned to the family restaurant, which his father had lost. He bought it back in 1959 and earned his first Michelin star two years later.

OWNERSHIP OF restaurants by chefs, Bocuse said, has changed French gastronomy more profoundly than any fad or advent of exotic ingredients — such as kiwi fruit, which he detests.

Reflecting on the days when cooks were anonymous underlings, working in dark basement kitchens, he said: "We used to be servants. Today, cooking belongs to the chefs."

British Columbia draws Canadian seniors

By Jeffrey Ulbrich
Associated Press

QUALICUM BEACH, British Columbia — Most of the folks who live in this lovely town overlooking the Strait of Georgia came here from somewhere else.

The mild climate of Vancouver Island and the quiet lifestyle of the towns that dot its coastline have attracted older people from all over Canada. Others are flocking to the scenic Okanagan Valley in central British Columbia.

The westward movement of these retirees has transformed this Pacific Northwest province into the Florida of Canada.

That has put a strain on provincial and municipal budgets for services like health care, transportation and recreational facilities. The upside is a fresh infusion of money and new economic stability for many communities.

"Retirement and tourism are our only two industries," says Qualicum Beach Mayor Jack Collins. "All jobs are tied directly or indirectly to retirement and tourism."

The population of Qualicum Beach ballooned from 1,725 in 1976 to 4,420 in the 1991 census. Of that, 45 percent are over the age of 55.

For more than 20 years, the number of seniors and their percentage of the British Columbia population has been increasing, a trend the provincial government in Victoria is watching closely.

"In the future, we can look forward to explosive growth in the elderly population when the baby boomers begin to reach age 65. In the 15 to 20 years following, the numbers of seniors will cause nothing less than a social revolution," a provincial report on the elderly notes.

THE AGING phenomenon is nationwide. Canada's population at the June 1991 census was 27.3 million. In the 10 years since the 1981 census, the proportion of the population over 65 increased from 10 percent to 12 percent, while the proportion of those under 15 dropped from 23 percent to 21 percent.

By the year 2031, people over 65 will represent nearly a quarter of all Canadians.

The median age in British Columbia — the point dividing younger and older people into equal halves — is 34.7, compared to 33.4 for all of Canada. Of every 1,000 British Columbians, 131 are 65 or older, compared with 116 out of every 1,000 in the rest of the country.

Places like Qualicum Beach have embraced the trend.

For one thing, people over 65 possess 30 percent of Canada's personal wealth. People above 50 have 75 percent. That's a lot of buying power.

"I think it gives us a resource that other places don't have," says Fred Gingell, leader of the opposition Liberal Party in the British Columbia Legislature. "My own community is full of retired people, and they add something. They are very, very reliable. They give the community a greater buoyancy."

RETIREES COMING to British Columbia tend to be on the upper end of the social scale, have money, buy homes, pay taxes and spend money.

"All of these sleepy little resort communities are getting more lively because people are moving to them permanently," says Leonard Krog, the member of the Legislature from this area.

"On the other hand, we are running up to the limits of the water supply, of transportation. The planning has not been there.

"Forty-seven percent of hospital costs in British Columbia are related to seniors. Many people who have paid taxes in Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan and built up those (health) systems are now coming here."

But what a drawing card. Wonderful Pacific Northwest mild temperatures, a heavily forested, sparsely populated island just a two-hour drive over the mountains from the Pacific, magnificent parks, whale watching, hiking, fishing.

"In how many towns do you drive from the beach through the golf course to the town core?" asks Mayor Collins with a grin.

"You could theoretically ski in the morning, then play nine holes of golf, then end the day by going fishing," he says.

With the retirees come the young people, who open businesses such as travel agencies, beauty parlors, grocery stores.

Peter Henderson, raised in Toronto, moved to Qualicum Beach last year with his wife, Hillary, after spending 38 years in the Canadian air force.

"We are avid walkers," he said during a chat in the living room of his newly purchased ranch home. "In Ontario, you are tied up too much by winter."

"We know more people here after 10 months than in our five years in Ottawa," said Mrs. Henderson.

QUALICUM BEACH plans to remain a small community. It is pollution-free. It allows no chain stores. It has kept business in the center of town, a little bit of Old England, so most people can walk to do their shopping if they choose. Small shops and family restaurants are de rigeur.

Real estate may be in a slump in the rest of Canada, but it's booming here. Anything in the $100,000 range is sold in about three days, says Gerry Adair, owner of the local Re/Max agency.

Vacuum sealer isn't cheap, but is impressive

By Beverly Bundy
N.Y. Times News Service

Sometimes it pays to go top of the line. The $200 price tag on the Everfresh Primo FreshVac nearly stopped my interest in the Cadillac of vacuum sealers. Luckily, I pushed my garage sale instincts away and tried the appliance anyway.

Vacuum sealing is a process of extending the shelf life of food by removing air from a package, thereby reducing mold and slowing bacteria. While the price on this particular system may mean a big initial outlay, extending shelf life by three to eight times can save money in the long run. Also, separating and sealing huge purchases from warehouse clubs can result in further savings.

The system is relatively simple. A shoe box size pump attaches by means of a hose to reusable plastic bags. There are lids that fit a variety of jar sizes, and an acrylic storage and marinating tray with a 1½-liter acrylic jar with lid. All the storage containers are fitted with valves that are twisted shut after the pump has removed the air in the container.

I tried the system on several food stuffs and got wonderful results with each. I divided a huge container of my son's favorite goldfish crackers into plastic bags. More crackers went into canning jars, topped with a canning seal and ring, than into the acrylic jar, where all the air was removed and a visible, audible vacuum formed. A large batch of spaghetti sauce went into an old mayonnaise jar. It was sealed with the FreshVac lid and went into the refrigerator, where it'll last for a good two months. Garden produce can be vacuum-sealed and frozen, where the absence of air created by the vacuum will prohibit freezer burn.

The very best feature of the FreshVac, though, for this not-always-organized cook, is its marinating ability. Placing meat in a vacuum opens the cells, allowing meat to absorb the flavor of the marinade in (yes, this is right) only 10 minutes. That's a boon for cooks who've forgotten to put together tonight's chicken yesterday. Bakers will like the ability of the FreshVac to make dough rise almost instantly in a vacuum-tight container.

The system comes with a videotape that is a help for the mechanically inept and there is also a toll-free number for customers who need a live voice to help them through the steps of operating the machine. The vacuum system is available by mail order by calling (800) 722-5682.

Corporations still adjusting to part-time

By Michael Lopez
N.Y. Times News Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — Big business more frequently is allowing employees to work part time to care for their families, but women — who traditionally make these adjustments — still find supervisors and colleagues resistant to such arrangements, a new survey of corporate America has found.

In the Albany area, for example, major employers are using compressed work weeks and other flexible schedules because they help get the job done and satisfy their workers.

Growing from pioneer beginnings just four years ago, flexible job arrangements are now formal policies among 61 percent of 70 major companies surveyed last year by Catalyst, a non-profit organization meant to encourage management roles for women.

Job sharing, part-time hours and work at-home arrangements were rare in 1989, but each of nearly 39 percent of the 70 companies said last year that at least 100 of their employees were using flexible arrangements.

Three-quarters of the surveyed companies employed more than 10,000 people. Their arrangements predated the federal Family Leave Act, which was passed early this year and took effect this month, requiring large employers to provide up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave to workers for a number of reasons.

Such schedules are ironed out mainly by women to care for their children, said Marcia Brumit Kropf, Catalyst's director of research. "For many men in our culture, if you're the primary breadwinner...you don't feel like you can reduce your work hours and take a cut in pay," Brumit Kropf said. But, "women are still forced between two very difficult alternatives."

Brumit Kropf found a difference between perception and the reality of what happens when women call time out to care for their families. Twenty of 45 women in last year's survey said their peers were jealous of their part-time arrangements. Brumit Kropf said the women felt their careers were slowed, but not derailed. And more than half the 45 women were promoted while working flexible schedules and 14 returned to work full-time.

Job sharing, part-time arrangements and leaves allow Price Chopper to keep experienced employees whose lives change, by caring for elderly parents or children, for instance, said Joanne Gage, spokeswoman for the Golub Corp., Schenectady, N.Y.-based owner of the supermarket chain.

"We get the benefit of their expertise and they get the flexibility they need during that time," Gage said. "Rather than turning people over and training, which is very expensive, you're investing in people."

Golub, with a work force of 12,500 people also has a longstanding policy of granting 12-week unpaid leaves for various reasons.

A variety of benefits, from health insurance to vacation time and disability insurance, are covered by Price Chopper during leaves and temporary part-time work. That three-month option also applies to new natural and adoptive parents, Gage said.

Environment One, the Niskayuna, N.Y. manufacturer of sewer grinder pumps, began experimenting with four-day workweeks a year ago. The trial turned out so well for machinists that the compressed workweek was offered to production personnel, said Kathleen Goble, coordinator of human resources at the 120-employee factory.

For the company, a compressed workweek allows a fifth day for machine maintenance; for the employee, it becomes a three-day weekend.

NEW YORK — Never count Jimmy Connors out.
One day after it was reported he will not play in this month's U.S. Open, Connors may have pulled off his latest comeback.
"Jimmy has a wild card," Gloria Connors, his mother, said Thursday. "He has until next Wednesday to make up his mind."
The five-time U.S. Open champion is in Belleville, Ill., preparing for next week's Big Bear Champions tournament, the first competition on a new circuit for seniors. Connors, who will turn 41 on Sept. 2, will use the tournament to decide whether he is ready for the Open.
"If he's ready to give his normal 110 percent, then he'll play," Gloria Connors said. "We're hoping that he can."

Rison signs

Rison reported to training camp in Suwanee, Ga., after signing a two-year contract. Terms weren't disclosed.

Unwanted Fielder could bump Babe

Associated Press

ANAHEIM — The numbers, already mind-boggling, are close to becoming historic for Cecil Fielder, who has a chance to knock Babe Ruth off the pedestal they share.

The Detroit first baseman reached 100 runs batted in for the fourth straight season Tuesday night, hitting a two-run double in the Tigers' 9-3 victory against the California Angels. He's the first Tiger to accomplish that feat since Hank Greenberg in 1940.

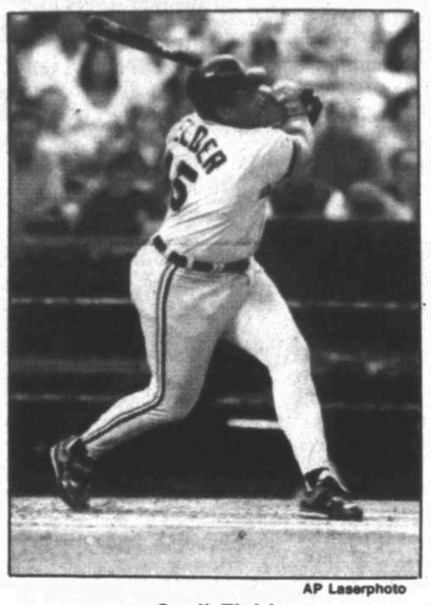

Last year, Fielder joined Ruth as the only players to lead the majors in RBIs three years running, and this year he could dump the Babe off the list.

With six weeks left in the season, Fielder's total of 100 RBIs was matched only by Frank Thomas of the Chicago White Sox, who also had 100. Even Barry Bonds, the San Francisco Giants' $40 million man, was 10 behind old Cecil.

Not bad for a guy the Tigers didn't really want, huh?

"I would like to sit here and say we thought Cecil Fielder was the guy, but I'd be lying because he was way down the list," manager Sparky Anderson said. "Everybody else was gone by then and Cecil was our last choice."

The Tigers made a generous bid for free agent Kent Hrbek of Minnesota after the 1989 season, but Hrbek re-signed with the Twins.

AP Laserphoto

Cecil Fielder ...four straight 100 RBI seasons.

The Tigers pursued free agent Pete O'Brien, a lefthanded-hitting first baseman who is now out of baseball, but he opted to sign with the Seattle Mariners.

That left Fielder, who'd hit 38 home runs in one season in Japan but only 31 in 220 games for the Toronto Blue Jays before heading to the Far East.

"I had no idea about him," Anderson said. "My first thought was that he'd be a DH. I never had any idea he was such a good athlete. I knew he'd hit some home runs, because I saw him in Toronto and I knew he was strong. But I thought he'd hit about .220."

Fielder hit .277 in his first year with the Tigers, belted 51 home runs and drove in 132 runs, the latter two figures to pace the major leagues. He was just the 11th player in history to enjoy a 50-home run season.

Beginner's luck?

The next season he hit .261 with 44 homers and 133 RBIs, and last year he had 35 homers and 124 RBIs. Add in this year's totals — 28 homers, 100 RBIs — and Fielder has 158 home runs and 489 RBIs since joining Detroit.

"When a guy has done that much for you, after you never figured on him, that's quite a thing," Anderson said. "He has done everything you could possibly do, and he has done it with a lot of class."

For his part, Fielder downplays his success, crediting his teammates with getting on base and helping him put up the numbers he has. What he doesn't seem to realize, though, is that they are numbers no one else is approaching.

"Getting a lot of opportunities is the key," he says. "We score a lot of runs on this team, so I get a lot of opportunities."

Fielder, though, says he's about producing runs.

"For me, it's a little bit more important than just hitting home runs, because I'm helping the team out more than just one way," he said. "You can hit a lot of solo home runs, but to drive in 120 or 130 runs you've got to drive in some people with hits. So I pride myself on that."

Already the best player never to win a most valuable player award, Fielder may have something else to pride himself on when the season is done.

"Cecil's on the verge of doing something no man in baseball has ever done," Tigers catcher Mickey Tettleton said. "He needs a little recognition for it, and maybe he'll get the credit he deserves one of these days."

"I've seen guys get hot and carry teams, but it's nothing like when Cecil is hot," Tigers pitcher Tom Bolton said. "He's really not swinging the bat right now, and he would be the first to tell you.

"But he's still sputtering along and getting two RBIs a night."

MHS has first test of season

By Bill Petitt
Staff writer

Midland High will takes its first test of the 1993 football campaign today when the Bulldogs face Roswell Goddard at 5:30 p.m. (CDT) at Eagles Stadium in Hobbs, N.M.

"We are looking for some good competition," said coach Ronnie Reeger. "We want our kids to get after people.

"We're not going to show a lot. We just want to run our regular offense and defense and see our kids in a game day situation."

For Midland High, traveling on its first scrimmage of the season will give the Bulldogs a chance to nail down seating arrangements for the season on the team bus as MHS will earn frequent driver mileage, traveling to El Paso, Amarillo, Lubbock, San Angelo and Abilene twice — nearly 2,000 miles during the course of the 1993 season.

Midland returns 17 letterwinners, five offensive starters and three defensive returners, from last years' 1-9 squad.

Leading the Bulldog attack is senior quarterback Johnny Paderes. Paderes replaced Brad Heidelberg during the first half of the season and passed for 682 yards with one touchdown and 10 interceptions.

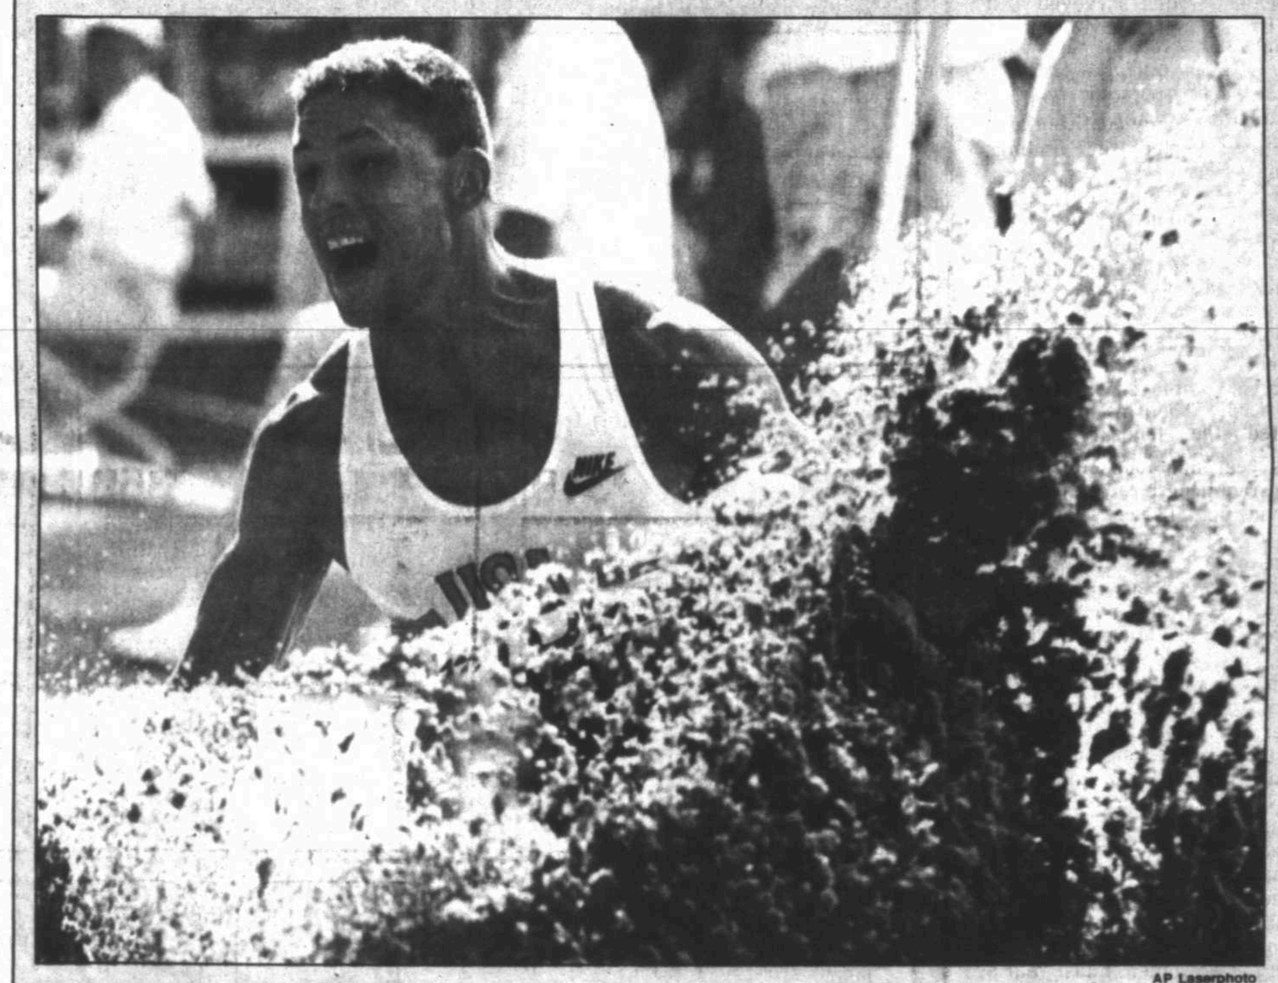

"Johnny has had a year of maturity," said Reeger. "He's worked hard during the offseason. He's stronger and understands what we are trying to accomplish after last season and spring."

Receiver Roy Ratliff will be Paderes' primary target. He caught 13 passes for 151 yards and one touchdown last season.

AMY WOLFENBARGER

Emmitt, listen to reason and suit up quick

Wolfenbarger

Putting money aside for a minute, although that's a hard task for many people, Smith ought to look what Aikman and Bates have gone through during the last year.

Bates, who is arguably the most dedicated player in the National Football League, is beginning his 11th year and is one of only three Cowboys who has been with the team that long. Last year when he was injured in the fifth week of the regular season, it broke his streak of playing in 79 consecutive games. It was only the third time in his career that he did not play in all of the Cowboys' regular-season games.

The knee injury required surgery and caused Bates to miss the rest of the season, including Dallas' playoff drive and Super Bowl championship. But he was not far from the action, continuing to motivate his team from the sidelines.

Now Bates is back once again, the little guy who would not go away. After surgery and off-season rehabilitation, Bates has once again assumed his on-the-field role as inspirational leader.

Aikman on the other hand is a Super Bowl MVP who could very well hold out for more money, even though he is already one of the highest paid quarterbacks in the league.

But Aikman's thoughts have been consumed with recovering from back surgery and getting back into pads rather than becoming the highest paid snap-taker in the history of the league. He recovered from surgery in remarkable speed, citing that all he wanted to do was get back with the team as soon as possible. Last year was the first time in four years that Aikman made it through the entire season without losing time to injury.

Aikman's projected return to the lineup is Sept. 6 when the Cowboys travel to Washington to meet the hated Redskins, in what could be an extremely physical matchup between two of the best teams in the NFC East.

What is Emmitt Smith doing? Probably sitting on a beach in Florida sipping margaritas and wondering how long he can hold out for more money before the Dallas coaching staff and the Dallas fans get fed up.

Sure he deserves to make at least the same salary as Buffalo Bills running back Thurman Thomas if not more. Smith won the NFL rushing title over Thomas for the second straight year. This was the first time a player won two back-to-back rushing titles since Eric Dickerson did it in 1983-84. He also broke Cowboys rushing records for yards in a season (1,713) and touchdowns (18) as well as the record for overall touchdowns (19).

Smith is a three-year Pro Bowl selection and the Cowboys posted a 29-1 regular-season record when he carried the ball 20 or more times. They were 21-1 when he rushed for at least 100 yards in a game.

Smith also became the first Cowboy running back to rush for more than 100 yards in a Super Bowl. Those are amazing accomplishments for a player only beginning his fourth year, provided he shows up.

But Emmitt can't rest on past achievement. If Aikman had done that, he might have retired after being named the Super Bowl MVP. Heck, Aikman might not have even been around to complete his first full season last year if he had taken the easy route.

As for Bates, his leadership has been invaluable for the Cowboys during the darkest days. And he hasn't received near the accolades that Aikman and Smith have become accustomed to.

So please Troy and Bill, talk to Emmitt. Tell him what he's missing. Tell him that most people think he deserves more money but there comes a time when enough is enough.

And besides, what are his options? Take what Dallas is offering and go back to work for the best company in the business. Or get lots more money and work for an unsuccessful company.

Aikman tired of talk about back

■ Troy Aikman wants to get back to the business of football after talk about his back and Emmitt Smith's holdout.

By Bill Sullivan
Houston Chronicle

AUSTIN, Texas — Troy Aikman is not a happy camper. He frowns. He grimaces. He endures, sometimes more gracefully than others.

Well...no.

For starters, the Cowboys quarterback explains, all anyone seems to want to talk about is his surgically repaired back. How does it feel? Any soreness? Any concerns about trying to come back too soon? "That seems to be the big topic of discussion this summer," Aikman says. "That and 'When is Emmitt coming back?'"

Ah, yes, Emmitt. The subject of missing two-time NFL rushing champion Emmitt Smith is a sore one with Aikman, too, it seems.

Just last week, Aikman told a reporter that he "had to believe" the Cowboys could be sucessful without Smith, who has missed all of camp in a contract dispute. The sentiment, Aikman says, was lost in translation, coming out in print in a manner that suggested he believed Smith wasn't needed for another Super Bowl run.

"That's ridiculous," Aikman says. "Everyone knows how much I think of Emmitt. I know as well as anyone how much he means to our football team."

So all has not been well in the world of Dallas' No. 8 as The Season After approaches. In a recent interview as he headed for practice here, he frowned. He grimaced. He endured. As a long, hot summer of discontent for the Most Valuable Player of Super Bowl XXVII draws to a close, he is more than ready to get back to the business of playing football rather than talking about it.

"I want to get this behind me," he said of his preseason debut Saturday against the Oilers in San Antonio.

As for any goals? "I'd just like to go out and do well," he said. "This isn't a Troy Aikman showcase...Let's not make it a bigger thing than it is, OK?" For Aikman, though, things are bigger now that he led his team to a Super Bowl victory.

Those January images still sparkle: four touchdown passes against Buffalo, capping a postseason in which he completed 68.5 percent of his passes, threw for eight touchdowns and suffered no interceptions. His quarterback rating for three playoff games: a whopping 126.4.

"Troy was just incredible," says wide receiver Michael Irvin. "I mean, the man just took it to another level."

As a result, Aikman has found him self much in demand since Jan. 31 in Pasadena. His face is all over Metroplex billboards, promoting a grocery-store chain and automobile dealerships. He appeared as a presenter on a country-music awards show and served as spokesman for an athletic-apparel company. He has graced the cover of just about every preseason football publication, many of which tout Dallas as the "dynasty" for the '90s.

Small wonder, then, that so many people were alarmed when a 26-year-old came down with...a bad back?

Discussion of the former began in June, when the Cowboys realized their star quarterback would need surgery for a disk injury suffered in the weight room. A public debate — in newspapers, on radio talk shows, on street corners — quickly ensued over whether the club's medical staff had been negligent in not ordering proper tests when he first complained of pain.

Surgery was performed June 19, followed by ominous projections that Aikman could miss the first three regular-season games. But a quick recovery has left him champing at the bit the past few weeks, anxious to get back in the flow even as coaches tried to protect him against his competitive instincts.

"This is what I do," he says. "I want to play."

Johnson talked of holding him out until the final preseason game, against the Bears in Chicago. After returning to drills last week, Aikman made noises about wanting to play against the Raiders last Saturday night. Eventually, Johnson compromised, deciding to play Aikman as much as a half against the Oilers at the Alamodome.

Happy? Not really.

"I don't know if two games will be enough (to get ready for the regular season)," Aikman says. "But it's going to have to be."

So far, he says, the back has been fine. "I've gone through some stiffness in the mornings, but nothing serious," he says. "Really, I'm surprised there hasn't been more of it."

To date, he has been able to make all the throws. Still, he has yet to be hit.

Time, then, for the road test, which is almost certain to come against Buddy Ryan's Oilers defense.

"The big thing is getting used to being in the pocket with the pass rush all around you," Aikman said. "Other than that, you can simulate most everything else in practice."

WORLD: O'Brien leads

(From 1C)

52.74 seconds at the World Championships on Thursday night, edging Sandra Farmer-Patrick, who also went under the previous mark at 52.79.

Ottey, 33, of Jamaica, the winner of eight individual bronze medals and two silvers in Olympic or World Championship competition since 1980, including a devastating second-place finish to Gail Devers in the 100 Monday night, outran Gwen Torrence in winning the 200 in 21.98.

The sizzling victories by Gunnell and Ottey overshadowed Sergei Bubka's fourth straight world pole vault title and near-miss at a world record, Kevin Young's second straight world title in the men's 400-meter hurdles and Dan O'Brien's struggle to lead the decathlon.

"It was a dream come true," Gunnell said after smashing the world record of 52.94 set by Marina Stepanova of Russia in 1986 and becoming the first British woman to break a world record in six years.

"I knew the race would be fast. I just wanted to win. The world record came as a bonus. To come out and run that fast is wonderful."

At first, Gunnell was uncertain she had won after dueling brilliantly with the pace-setting Farmer-Patrick. Then she saw the scoreboard at Gottlieb-Daimler Stadium, and jumped.

"At the start of the race I was having a hard time trying to concentrate ..." said Gunnell, who also was concerned about a cold that had forced her to take penicillin the past two days. "The crowd was so overwhelming. I couldn't be sure that I was the one who had won in the end."

Farmer-Patrick collapsed onto the track after breaking her American record of 53.37. She was helped into the medical area by two attendants, then got a pep talk from coach Bob Kersee.

"He said, 'You just got beat and didn't give up like in the past,' " said Farmer-Patrick, who led from the outset until being overtaken just past the final hurdle by Gunnell. "When he told me, 'Great job,' I got revived immediately. I was shocked he said that.

"He also told me, 'She's got to know now that she's got to break the world record to beat you again. I never thought of running that fast and losing."

Ottey was still convinced she was robbed of a gold in the 100 after finishing in the same time as Devers. Her anger dissipated into joy Thursday night.

"I finally got it after 13 years of waiting .. I have the gold medal," she said, before receiving a near two-minute ovation after being presented with her coveted gold. "I wanted to win it so badly that I ran the first 100 too fast and I was having problems the last 10 meters. But I had a special feeling I would win this race."

She barely won, holding off Torrence, the Olympic champion, who finished second in 22.00.

"This is not revenge after the 100," Ottey said. "I came here to win the 100 and 200. I wanted to win this race so badly because I don't know if I'll ever be able to compete in the World Championships again."

Bubka, the only athlete to win four gold medals in the same event in the four World Championships, clinched the victory by clearing 19 feet, 8¼ inches. He then had the bar raised to a world-record 20-1¾, but missed three times. He came close on his final attempt, brushing the bar on the way down.

Before his record attempts, he was involved in long, heated discussions with the officials over how much time he would have between jumps. Bubka insisted that since he was the only one left, he was entitled to six minutes, as written in the rules. The officials wanted to give him only two.

"It was a scandal," Bubka said angrily, adding the bantering made him lose his concentration when he finally did jump — with six-minute breaks.

Young, the world record-holder with a 46.78 clocking at last year's Olympics, ran the fastest time in the world this year, 47.18, in beating defending champion Samuel Matete of Zambia, runner-up in 47.60.

O'Brien, who set the world decathlon record of 8,891 points last year and won the 1991 world title, needed a personal-best 47.46 in the 400 meters, the day's last of five events, to finish with 4,598 points and a four-point margin over crowd favorite Paul Meier of Germany.

"The day was a bit rocky," said O'Brien, competing despite a groin injury.

The final five decathlon events will be contested Friday.

Meanwhile, Algeria's Noureddine Morceli, the world record-holder and defending champion in the 1,500 meters, made his celebrated debut in this year's championships and cruised to victory in his opening-round heat in 3:37.84.

Morceli had threatened to boycott the meet because of lack of prize money, but changed his mind and arrived Wednesday.

MHS: Running game unsure

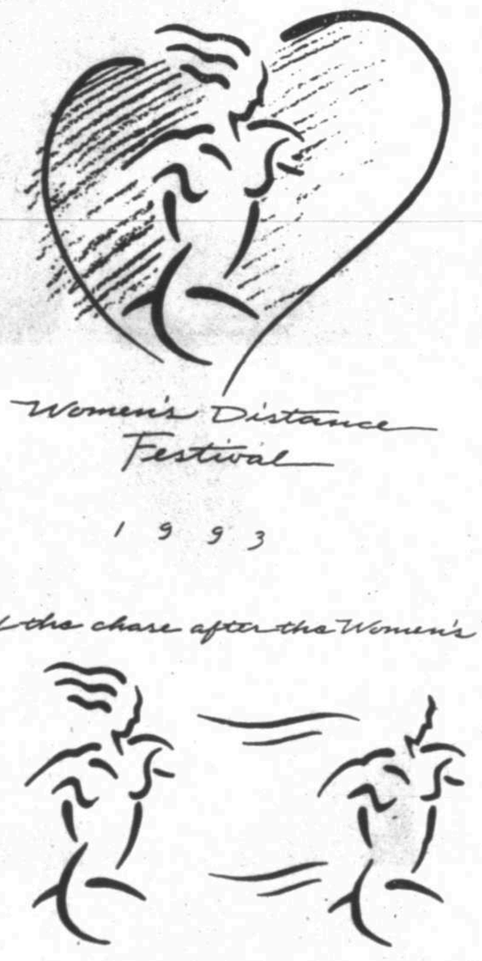

(From 1C)

Goddard, which began school on Tuesday, returns all-state quarterback Robert Gonzales. Gonzales, a 6-3, 180, senior, rushed for 972 yards and passed for 2,000 during 1992.

Gonzales' primary targets are running back Frank Espinoza and Lorenzo Snyder. Espinoza is the top returning running back, gaining 438 yards in nine games before missing the last two games of the season with an injury. Wide receiver Lorenzo Snyder caught 21 passes for 464 yards.

Following today's action, Midland High will scrimmage at Big Spring next Friday.

On August 28, 1993, the Permian Basin Road Runners Club will hold its 9th annual running of the Women's Distance Festival and the Chase After the Women's Run starting at the La Villita Shopping Center. The WDF was conceived in 1980 as a way to celebrate women's running and over 200 running clubs throughout the United States participate in this event. Runners and walkers are encouraged to come out and have fun.

Local sponsors of the race are Peyton's Bikes, Annie's Gingerbread House, and Ski Skeller. The 7:30 A.M. 5K race will be followed by a brunch and style show at Annie's. For more information, please call Alex Rose at 694-4271.

Bonds' bombs pay for Giants

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Pirates banned Barry Bonds from their clubhouse. Their biggest mistake was not barring him from the ballpark.

The Pirates couldn't pay Bonds' $43.75 million megasalary last December, so he defected to San Francisco where he's carrying the first-place Giants squarely on his shoulders.

Bonds kept the Giants 6½ games ahead of streaking Atlanta in the National League West, going 4-for-5 with four RBIs and his fifth two-homer game this season in a 9-6 victory Wednesday night over Pittsburgh.

The Braves won their ninth in a row, beating Los Angeles 5-4 in 12 innings.

"He had a great night, but then I've seen him have a lot of great nights — and, fortunately, most of them were in a Pirates uniform," Pittsburgh manager Jim Leyland said. "He's going to have a lot more great nights."

And if the Pirates didn't fully appreciate Bonds' talents while he led them to three division championships, he gave them a nine-inning reminder of the damage he can inflict. He doubled in the first, singled in the third, followed Robby Thompson's homer with an even longer one of his own in the fifth and homered again in the ninth.

He already has 38 homers, four more than he ever hit in a season in Pittsburgh, and 94 RBIs, and it's only mid-August. The effect on the both teams is obvious: A year ago the Giants were 57-63, now they're 80-40; the Pirates were 69-52, now they're 57-64.

"To me, ninety percent of this team and what it's done this year are because of him," winning pitcher Trevor Wilson (7-4) said. "He's MVP stuff. No, make that Hall of Fame stuff."

Until this night, Bonds had spared his former teammates from his hit list; he was hitless in his last 12 at-bats in Three Rivers Stadium and was batting just .138 this season against the Pirates.

They should have known he was too good for that to last. Maybe it took Leyland banning him from the Pirates' clubhouse last month to fire Bonds up.

"We talked about increasing his concentration and intensity, and that's what he did," manager Dusty Baker said. "I asked him if he was trying too hard against his old team and he said, 'No, that's not it at all.' "

"I was too laid back, too mellow, I wasn't myself," Bonds said. "I was trying to stay too calm here. I had to get my intensity back, I had to get back to playing the way I play the game."

And when he's playing that way, there's no other National League player in his league.

"He's by far the best I've ever seen," Jay Bell said. "I've seen a lot of players, but none of them can come close to doing all of the things he can do. You come to appreciate them watching him day to day, but it's still impressive seeing what he can do."

Bonds' second homer, a drive to straightaway center off rookie Brian Shouse in the ninth, cost him a possible triple and the chance to hit for the cycle. It actually may have been the first time he rooted for a ball to stay in the park, not go out.

"I thought I might have a chance for a triple, but it carried too much. I was thinking, 'Damn, it went over the fence.' "

The Pirates' problem was they couldn't keep Bonds in the park or starter Zane Smith in the game.

Smith (3-5), trying for his fourth straight win, labored from the start and was finally lifted after giving up five runs on seven hits over three-plus innings. His bullpen wasn't much better.

"He had nothing," Leyland said. "Zane didn't have anything."

Giant homers defeat Pirates

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — San Francisco kept the pressure on the Atlanta Braves in the NL West, getting homers from Willie McGee and Todd Benzinger and a strong start from Bryan Hickerson to beat Pittsburgh 6-3 Thursday.

■ NL Roundup

Despite the Braves' current nine-game winning streak, the Giants have maintained a healthy lead by winning seven of nine and 16 of their last 22. They are 41 games over .500 — 81-40 — for the first time since they won a three-game NL playoff series over Los Angeles in 1962 to finish 103-62.

Hickerson (6-4) pitched five-hit ball over seven-plus innings in his first career start against the Pirates to win for the first time since July 21. The left-hander is 6-2 in his 10 starts, but had allowed eight runs over nine runs in losing his last two starts.

Barry Bonds had an 0-for-3 day following a 4-for-5, two-homer night Wednesday. But the Giants didn't need his bat in a five-run second that gave Pirates starter Bob Walk (11-11) his fifth loss in six starts.

Benzinger, batting .409 since replacing the injured Will Clark five games ago, doubled in a run and scored when Walk threw wildly on Dave Martinez's bunt single. After Mike Benjamin walked and Hickerson followed with a run-scoring groundout, McGee hit his fourth homer to make it 5-0.

Benzinger, batting .464 (13-for-28) in his last nine starts, hit his first homer of the season in the fifth off Paul Wagner.

Walk lasted just three innings, surrendering five runs on four hits in his third straight loss. He has given up 10 runs over eight innings in his last two starts and is 0-2 with a 15.00 ERA in two starts against the Giants.

Hickerson allowed Jeff King's run-scoring double and Lloyd McClendon's RBI groundout, and was lifted after Jay Bell's leadoff homer in the eighth. Mike Jackson pitched the rest of the eighth and Rod Beck finished up for his 37th save.

Cardinals 3, Padres 2

ST. LOUIS — Mark Whiten's bases-loaded sacrifice fly snapped an eighth-inning tie as St. Louis beat San Diego to sweep a three-game series.

San Diego, which had just three hits off Allen Watson and three relievers, has lost five in a row.

Ozzie Smith led off the eighth with a bunt single off Mark Davis (1-4) and advanced on a groundout. Todd Zeile was intentionally walked, Smith stole third and Ray Lankford walked before Whiten lined to deep left.

Watson gave up two hits and two runs in 5 2-3 innings, and also had two doubles and an RBI. Mike Perez (5-2), the third St. Louis pitcher, worked a perfect eighth and Lee Smith finished for his major-league leading 41st save.

Phil Plantier gave the Padres the lead when he hit his 24th home run with two outs in the second. But the Cardinals took a 2-1 lead in the fourth on doubles by Ray Lankford, Erik Pappas and Watson off Wally Whitehurst.

The Padres tied it in the sixth when with two outs and runners on second and third, reliever Omar Olivares gloved Derek Bell's chopper in front of the plate but then dropped the ball, allowing the run to score.

Rockies 6, Phillies 5

DENVER — Freddie Benavides hit a go-ahead, three-run homer as Colorado rallied from a four-run deficit in the eighth inning and beat Philadelphia.

With Philadelphia leading 5-1, Jerald Clark hit a one-out triple off Larry Andersen, Danny Sheaffer hit an RBI groundout and Vinny Castilla doubled. David West walked Joe Girardi and Eric Young singled home a run off Roger Mason (4-9), making it 5-3. Benavides followed with his second home run of the season, a 389-foot drive to left.

Marcus Moore (2-0) pitched two innings, allowing an eighth-inning sacrifice fly to Milt Thompson, and Darren Holmes pitched a perfect ninth for his 15th save in 18 chances. Rockies starter Willie Blair gave up four runs and nine hits in four innings.

Danny Jackson, seeking to become the fifth Phillies starter with 10 or more wins, allowed one run and seven hits in seven innings with five strikeouts and four walks.

Philadelphia took a 2-0 lead in the third on Mickey Morandini's triple and doubles by John Kruk and Dave Hollins. Pete Incaviglia opened the fourth with his 21st homer and Len Dykstra hit his 15th later in the inning.

Expos 10, Cubs 2

CHICAGO — Jeff Fassero pitched a six-hitter for the first complete game of his career, and Montreal scored six unearned runs in the seventh inning in a win over Chicago.

Fassero (8-3), making his eighth start after 161 consecutive relief appearances, struck out nine and walked three.

Scott Fletcher, who had just three hits in his 38 previous at-bats, hit his sixth home run this season in a three-run fourth off Frank Castillo (5-8), who gave up four runs and five hits in four innings, struck out four and walked two.

Randy Ready, signed by Montreal on Aug. 10 after Rochester released him, hit the game's first pitch for his first home run since July 28, 1992, when he was with Philadelphia and playing Atlanta.

Dodgers 7, Braves 5

ATLANTA — Atlanta's nine-game winning streak ended as Tom Glavine (14-5) allowed four runs in the first and six overall in two-plus innings.

Atlanta, which scored one run in the ninth, had runners on second and third with one out. But Jim Gott got the last two outs and dropped the Braves 7½ games behind first-place San Francisco in the NL West.

Kevin Gross (8-11) allowed three runs and eight hits in 5 1-3 innings.

Astros 8, Marlins 3

HOUSTON — Kevin Bass homered, doubled twice and drove in five runs as Houston beat Florida and swept a three-game series.

Mark Portugal (12-4) reached 12 wins for the first time in his career, winning his sixth straight decision. He gave up three runs and eight hits in 5 2-3 innings, struck out four and walked two.

Charlie Hough (7-13) was tagged for five runs and seven hits in three innings as Florida lost its fourth straight.

Houston, which has won six of eight, took a 4-0 lead in the first.

Royals win fourth straight, sweep Twins

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — David Cone had a season-high 11 strikeouts and Brian McRae had three hits and two RBIs as Kansas City beat the Twins Thursday night for its first sweep in Minnesota since 1981.

George Brett broke out of a 2-for-29 slump with an infield hit and his 14th homer, a 455-foot shot into the upper deck in right field.

Cone (9-11) pitched seven shutout innings, giving up three hits and walking two. It was the 34th time in his career that he struck out 10 or more batters.

Cone, who has led the majors in strikeouts the past three seasons, struck out seven in the first three innings. He got out of a bases-loaded jam in the third by fanning Kirby Puckett on a 3-2 count.

■ AL Roundup

Minnesota finally scored in the ninth on Chip Hale's two-run single off Stan Belinda.

Twins rookie Eddie Guardado (3-5) gave up four runs on 11 hits in 6 2-3 innings.

McRae, who entered the game with a .394 average against the Twins this season, hit a solo homer in the third to make it 2-0. He also had an RBI single in the fifth.

Indians 5, Red Sox 1

BOSTON — Julian Tavarez, just one month out of Class A, pitched seven strong innings and led Cleveland past Boston.

Tavarez (2-1) settled down after John Valentin's RBI double in the second and allowed two hits in the next five innings.

Boston, just one game out of first place last Friday, is in third place, five games behind AL East leader Toronto. The Red Sox lost for the seventh time in 10 games, while Cleveland broke a four-game losing streak.

The Indians went ahead 3-1 in the fifth on Glenallen Hill's run-scoring single and Wayne Kirby's two-run double off Paul Quantrill (5-7).

Cleveland added runs in the sixth on a bases-loaded walk to Kirby and in the seventh on Sandy Alomar's grounder.

Tavarez, 20, struck out five, walked one and allowed six hits. He struck out the side in the seventh, fanning Bob Melvin with runners at first and second. Jeremy Hernandez pitched the last two innings.

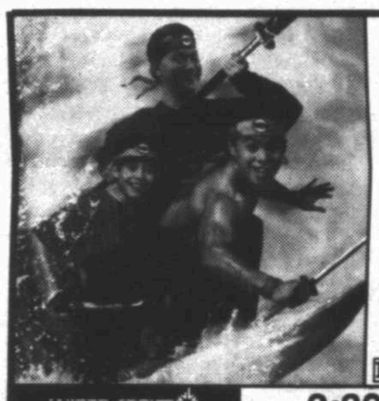

Tavarez started the season in Class A and was promoted to Canton-Akron of the Eastern League on July 19. In three appearances there, he was 2-1 with both wins coming against the Red Sox farm team at New Britain.

He lasted just three innings in his first major league start, an 8-6 loss at Baltimore on Aug. 7. He beat Texas 8-5 last Saturday, allowing three runs and seven hits in 5 2-3 innings.

The Red Sox took the lead in the second on singles by Mo Vaughn, breaking an 0-for-16 slump, and Scott Cooper and Valentin's double.

The Indians went ahead in the fifth when they got four straight hits with no outs. Singles by Jim Thome, Reggie Jefferson and Hill produced one run.

Sampras survives Stark, advances

AP Laserphoto

Pete Sampras, the top-seeded player in the U.S. Hardcourt Championships, returns the ball against Jonathan Stark Thursday in Indianapolis. Sampras, the top-ranked player in the world, hopes to retain his ranking for the upcoming U.S. Open.

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Defending two-time champion Pete Sampras survived a stiff challenge in beating Jonathan Stark 5-7, 7-6 (7-2), 6-3 Thursday in the third round of the U.S. Hardcourts.

Courier, ranked No. 2 and seeded second for the tournament at the Indianapolis Tennis Center, defeated Tomas Carbonell of Spain 6-2, 6-1 in a third-round match.

Qualifier Jimmy Arias lost five match points before defeating No. 4 Goran Ivanisevic 3-6, 6-4, 6-4. Arias, ranked 244th in the world, lost three match points on his serve in the ninth game and then double faulted before losing the game. He won the first three points of the final game, lost the next two and got the victory when Ivanisevic, No. 10 in the latest tour rankings, double faulted for the 14th time.

"At triple match point, I choked so bad it was disgusting," said Arias, who finds himself in the quarterfinals of a tournament after not playing in one since April. "My mind just lost it."

"I didn't do anything. I didn't put any pressure on him," Ivanisevic said. "I was just serving the first set and that is it. Then I got tired in the second and my serve was a little bit slower and he put some balls in."

Sampras needed 2 hours, 17 minutes to get past Stark, who lost his serve only twice while saving seven break points. Stark was only able to get one break point in the match.

Courier, who lost the No. 1 ranking to Sampras on April 12 and lost the Wimbledon final to him in June, can reclaim the top ranking by reaching the semifinals this week. If he does that, Sampras will need to reach the final to hold the No. 1 position.

Courier struggled on his first serve, recording four aces and four double faults. The slower-serving Carbonell had a higher percentage of successful first serves, but he had only one ace and six double faults.

"I hit the ball pretty well, had a good time out there. I am glad to get out of the heat early," said Courier, who played when the temperature on the court was over 100 degrees.

Volvo International

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Andrei Medvedev, two points from losing, rallied to force a second-set tiebreaker and then routed Tommy Ho in the final set Thursday in the third round of the Volvo International.

Ho, who has a 2-10 record on tour this year, was serving for the match at 5-4 in the second set but couldn't put it away, leaving Medvedev a 2-6, 7-6 (7-2), 6-0 winner.

No. 3 seed Richard Krajicek and No. 11 Marc Rosset were not as fortunate. Jonas Svensson had the hard-serving Krajicek on the run and won 4-6, 6-3, 6-2. Italy's Stefano Pescosolido beat Rosset 6-1, 7-5.

Medvedev, with little confidence or feel for the ball, had 13 unforced errors in the first set. But he began serving better in the second set, registering eight aces to help overcome 20 unforced errors in the set.

The turning point came in the 10th game of the second set with the score 30-30. Ho made two unforced errors, the last a backhander that sailed long, to give Medvedev the break.

Korda, who won the Volvo International two years ago, struggled early with his serve and return, but started playing better in the second set and kept Marc Kaplan pinned to the baseline as he won 7-6 (7-2), 6-2.

Canadian Open

In the first major upset of the Canadian Open, the unseeded Halard advanced to the quarterfinals on Thursday by beating the third-seeded Sabatini 6-4, 4-6, 7-6 (7-3).

"Anyone who plays against me, I guess, has nothing to lose, so they take risks," Sabatini said.

Despite blowing match point in the third set and allowing Sabatini to get even, the Frenchwoman took command in the tiebreaker, going up 4-0.

Sabatini held serve on second match point, closing to 6-3, then knocked the ball into the net to end it.

"I knew I had a chance today," said Halard, who had lost her four previous matches against Sabatini. "Those other times were easy matches for her. It's one of my big wins."

Halard meets Jennifer Capriati in a quarterfinal match on Friday. Capriati trounced 11th-seeded Amanda Coetzer of South Africa 6-0, 6-2.

Steffi Graf, the world No. 1 player and the top seed, meets the winner of the third-round match between Natalie Tauziat, the 12th seed from France amd No. 5 Jana Novotna of the Czech Republic. Graf advanced on Wednesday.

Pate takes advantage, lead

Associated Press

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. — Steve Pate put on the kind of late burst possible only under the peculiar scoring system in use this week and took the first-round lead Thursday in The International tournament.

"It's a little misleading," Pate said of a late rush that move him to the top of the leaderboard over a five-hole stretch. "It's not as dramatic as it looks."

That took him from 3 points to a leading 14 under the modified Stableford scoring system under which a player receives 5 points for an eagle, 2 for birdie, zero for par, minus-1 for bogey and minus-3 for double bogey and higher.

■ The International

It is a system that has worked well for Pate in the past. He is a two-time runnerup in this event and the leading point scorer in tournament history.

"This course and Torrey Pines (in La Jolla, Calif., where he has won twice), I always seem to get a good result on those two courses no matter how I'm playing," Pate said.

He could offer no realistic explanation for his mastery of this Rocky Mountain layout.

"Maybe the high altitude kills my brain cells and I can't get in my own way," Pate dead-panned.

Pate, who had a medal score of 66, held a 1-point lead over Mark O'Meara and defending champion Brad Faxon, who took different erratic routes in scoring 13 points.

Faxon had to rally from a first-hole double bogey and O'Meara holed out three times from off greens.

Midland native John Adams, who has yet to win in a 16-season PGA Tour career, and rookie Skip Kendall were next with 12 points, followed at 11 by Greg Norman, the playoff loser in the PGA Championship last weekend, and lefty Phil Mickelson.

Pate had been in a deep slump since the Harbourtown tournament the week following the Masters.

"Since then, I should have stayed home," he said. "I just played awful."

But it all came together in the late burst that took him from 10 points behind to one in front. It began with a 20-footer on the 13th. On the 15th, he rolled in a putt from more than twice that distance, then hit a 7-iron to 3 feet for birdie on the 209 yard, par-3 16th.

At the mile-high altitude, Pate needed only a 5-iron second shot from 198 yards on the par-5 17th. He put it 10 feet from the flag and made the putt for the 5 points that put him in front.

O'Meara and Faxon both indicated their strong play was at least partially caused by having the pressure of attempting to make the Ryder Cup team behind them. Both failed to make the 12-man team that was finalized after the PGA. O'Meara finished 13th on the points list from which 10 men were chosen. Faxon finished 20th but had a chance until the qualifying period closed last week.

"Frankly, it's a relief to get the Ryder Cup over with," Faxon said. "I'd been thinking about it all year long."

O'Meara said it had been in his thoughts, too.

"The last two months have been a struggle," he said. "My play since maybe the Masters — mentally, I wasn't quite there. I wasn't confident. I wasn't thinking positively."

There was a marked improvement in this round, however.

"I hit more good shots than I have in a long time. I had a little more confidence," he said.

He also got some breaks. "It was definitely my day," O'Meara said after a medal score of 66. Included was a 45-foot sand shot for a birdie, a 40-foot chip-in for birdie, and a 12-foot chip-in for par.

"That doesn't happen once in six months," O'Meara said.

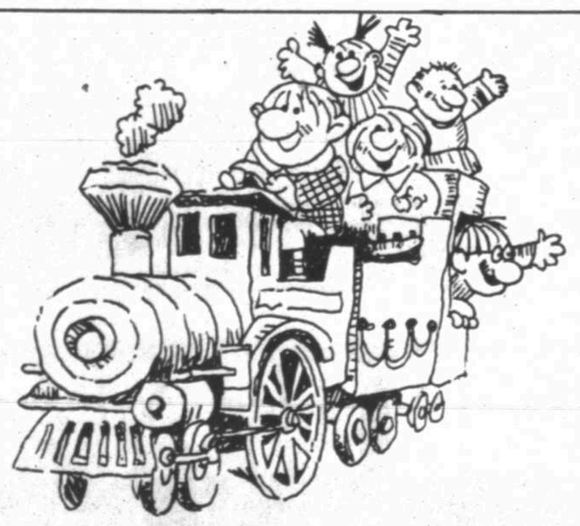

Faxon, on the other hand, got away to a start that may be unmatched as the worst in the history of this tournament.

He started play from the 10th tee, hit his second shot in the water and made double bogey.

Panel issues report on ailing airlines

■ Chairman calls for new tax breaks, less regulation, air traffic control changes.

By Ron Hutcheson
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — A presidential commission appointed to find a cure for the ailing airline industry issued a final report Thursday calling for new tax breaks, less regulation and dramatic changes in the air traffic control system.

"Unfortunately, this is an industry in deep trouble," former Virginia Gov. Gerald Baliles, the panel's chairman, said in releasing the commission's package of 60 recommendations. "This is not something that will be corrected overnight."

The commission's suggestions included rolling back airline ticket taxes from 8 percent to 5 percent, exempting airline fuel "from any proposed transportation fuel tax" and easing corporate taxes on airlines that are losing money.

Congress gave the airlines a two-year exemption from the newly enacted fuels tax increase that was part of President Clinton's economic package.

The panel also called for transforming the Federal Aviation Administration into a quasi-governmental corporation similar to the Postal Service. The proposed change is intended to lead to a drastic overhaul of the existing air traffic control network.

The commission described the FAA's current structure as a bureaucratic morass that is unable to keep pace with technology or meet the needs of the airline industry.

"The outmoded air traffic control system is costing airlines and consumers billions of dollars each year in delays, and it badly needs to be modernized," the panel reported. "Current air traffic control equipment is out of date, overworked and incapable of providing the full range of services."

Aviation officials welcomed the commission's findings as a first step toward restoring financial health in an industry that has lost more than $10 billion since 1990. But they also expressed fears that the findings will gather dust on a shelf next to countless other reports from similar presidential commissions.

"Now Congress and the Clinton administration need to give more than lip service by actually implementing changes to allow U.S. airlines to return to profitability and to ensure the jobs of millions of Americans," said James Landry, president of the Air Transport Association, which represents the nation's airlines.

The 15-member commission, formally known as the National Commission to Ensure a Strong Competitive Airline Industry, was established in April to examine the problems of an industry that employs nearly 500,000 workers.

Baliles said the panel found a host of reasons for the industry's financial problems, including the Persian Gulf War, the national economic recession, fare wars and poor airline management.

Drug firm cuts jobs

DALLAS — FoxMeyer Corp., the nation's third-largest pharmaceutical distributor, has said it will reduce its workforce by several hundred people through layoffs and attrition.

The Carrollton, Texas-based company employs about 3,000 workers nationwide, with about 700 of those in Carrollton.

"We really don't have a number (of job reductions). ... We are just going to do a little bit of pruning and some normal downsizing," Larry Pilon, senior vice president of administration, said Wednesday.

Pilon said the job reductions are intended to reduce operating costs and will cut across all levels of the company.

Lockheed deal

FORT WORTH, Texas — Lockheed Fort Worth Co. and the U.S. Air Force have signed a contract that the company says could help forestall some layoffs.

The contract is for the production phase of a program to upgrade F-16 jet fighters that are part of the defense fleets of four European nations.

Lockheed has 300 employees working in the development phase of the program. The project is not expected to create any new jobs at the Fort Worth facility, but it will provide additional work for existing employees into the late 1990s and could help forestall some layoffs, the company said.

Stocks gain

NEW YORK — Stock market measures moved to still loftier levels Thursday in another record-making session, buoyed by declining interest rates.

After staying close to even for much of the day, the Dow Jones industrial average benefitted from a late buying surge and wound up with a gain of 7.27 at 3,612.13. It was the third straight record close for the blue chip gauge and the fifth in the past nine sessions.

Other indicators also improved upon their previous best performances. The Standard & Poor's 500 stock index edged past a high point reached in March. It rose 0.39 to 456.43, just above the prior record close of 456.33.

NEW YORK (AP) — Mattel Inc. will buy Fisher-Price Inc. in a $1 billion deal that will make the famed maker of Barbie dolls the world's biggest toy company.

Under the deal announced Thursday, Mattel will use its stock to pay for Fisher Price, a leading maker of children's educational playthings and gear ranging from baby rattles to potty seats.

"The combination of Mattel and Fisher-Price will produce a leading toy company that has the strongest consumer brands, by far, in the toy industry," John W. Amerman, Mattel's chairman and chief executive officer, said in a statement.

The companies said they expect the merger to be completed by Dec. 1., subject to shareholder and government approval.

The deal was announced after the close of trading on the New York Stock Exchange. Mattel shares were unchanged at $25.62½ and Fisher-Price shares were unchanged at $23.87½.

The companies said Fisher-Price will continue to be based in East Aurora, N.Y. It reported 1992 revenue of $694 million. Mattel is headquartered in El Segundo, Calif., and reported 1992 sales of $1.85 billion.

Music software firm strikes a high note

Since going public on July 19 at $3.50 a share, Midisoft stock has climbed to more than $9 on the NASDAQ small-cap stock exchange. The company's first earnings report since going public, released this week, contained more positive news: For the six-month period ended June 30, revenues grew to $843,000, up 72 percent from the same period a year ago. Profit more than tripled to $81,000.

While the tiny company, with fewer than 20 employees, is hardly challenging to Microsoft, its mammoth neighbor in Redmond, Wash., the company's recent performance has to be gratifying to Midisoft's 32-year-old chairman.

2 potential buyers emerge for bankrupt Nutri-System

PHILADELPHIA (NYT) — As two new potential buyers have emerged for Nutri-System Inc. — which is operating under bankruptcy-law protection — owners of Nutri-System franchise centers, which are not controlled by the company, are independently pursuing an affiliation with other diet companies.

At a bankruptcy court hearing in Philadelphia on Wednesday, a lawyer representing Physicians Weight Loss Centers of America and the Calorie Shop Weight Loss Centers in Akron, Ohio, which are national franchise companies with a combined 134 centers, said the companies were prepared to pay at least $15 million in cash to acquire Nutri-System.

Also, lawyers representing American Health Companies Inc. of Pittsburgh, with 1,000 franchised Diet Center Inc. outlets in the United States and Canada, attended the hearing but did not submit a bid.

Two weeks ago, Heico Acquisitions, a Chicago investment group, reached an agreement with the seven banks that represent Nutri-System's secured creditors to buy the company.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

'Bond fund' would give investor extra income

By Bill Doyle

Q: I am a 69-year-old woman in cruddy health and divorced since 1990, after 39 years of marriage. I own my home, free and clear. My daughter and her 14-year-old girl live with me and share food and utility costs, plus providing much loving care.

Doyle

I receive $495 monthly Social Security benefits and make approximately $200 a month baby-sitting. But I am OK —so far.

Besides $5,000 in other investments, I have a rollover individual retirement account, with about $29,000 in one mutual fund and more than $13,000 in another mutual fund. The second seems to have done OK, but I think the other is going to you know where in a handbasket.

My financial planner wants me to pull the $29,000 out of the first fund and put it in the second fund, on which there would be a $1,300 front-end load. He says I would recoup that in approximately one year.

Instead, I am thinking of switching all or part of the $29,000 to the no-load mutual fund organization whose literature I have enclosed. But there are seven funds in that group. Which one should I choose?

A: Your thoughts make sense. The 4.5 percent commission on the move the financial planner recommends might or might not be recovered in a year's time —in dividends and increase in share value.

But why take that chance? If you go along with the planner's suggestion, only $27,700 would be moved to the second fund. As a "load," another word for "commission," the other $1,300, no doubt, would go to the planner and other people in his sales organization.

By redeeming all the shares you own in that first fund and moving the money to the no-load organization, the entire $29,000 would buy shares and would be working for you.

Which fund? No one has a sure answer for that.

However, given your financial situation, it's clear you need extra income. So, a "bond fund" — one holding corporate and U.S. Treasury bonds in its investment portfolio — would be a logical choice. That type of fund collects interest from the bonds in which it has invested and, after deducting the fund's operating expenses, passes the rest of the money along to shareholders in the form of dividends.

Q: A mutual fund salesman called on us the other evening and urged that we invest in his firm's tax-free insured fund. He said the tax-free feature means we would not pay income tax on dividends the fund pays, and the insured feature means we would never lose money.

A: It's awful. Don't let that clown back in the house.

Such funds do pay dividends free from federal income tax. That's because they hold municipal bonds whose interest is not subject to federal income tax. When those funds pay dividends, the tax exemption is passed on to fund shareholders.

But municipal bonds pay lower interest than other bonds of similar quality and maturities. That makes them suitable investments only for people in 28 percent and higher income tax brackets.

Individual "muni" bonds and portfolios of munis can be and often are insured by insurance companies. That insurance guarantees that, if a muni bond issuer defaults, the insurer will meet the interest payments and pay off the bonds when they reach maturity.

However, that does not mean the market values of the bonds in the portfolio can never decline. They do — from time to time.

Because they are fixed-income securities, the market prices of muni bonds fall when interest rates in general go up and rise when interest rates go down.

Texas Instruments plans microchip factory in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Instruments Inc. said Thursday that it will build a new microchip factory in Dallas at a cost of up to $1 billion, which the company hopes will keep it competitive as semiconductor demand booms worldwide.

"Obviously, it is a big investment and it's betting long-term," said Jerry Junkins, chairman of the leading semiconductor and electronics manufacturer.

The new factory is anticipated to cost $750 million to $1 billion and will be located at the company's headquarters in north Dallas. It is expected to employ about 250 workers when the first construction phase is completed in 1995, and up to 750 when the second phase is complete in 1998.

Texas Instruments expects to handle the $300 million cost for the first phase of the factory out of pocket, Junkins said. The company has not decided how to pay the $700 million for the plant's second phase, he said.

The new factory will house both a prototype line and a high-volume semiconductor manufacturing plant, which company officials hope will provide the flexibility to respond quickly to changing market demand.

"What it lays in place is the roadmap for future technology and product development that then will be fanned out again around the world to be produced wherever the market demands," Junkins said.

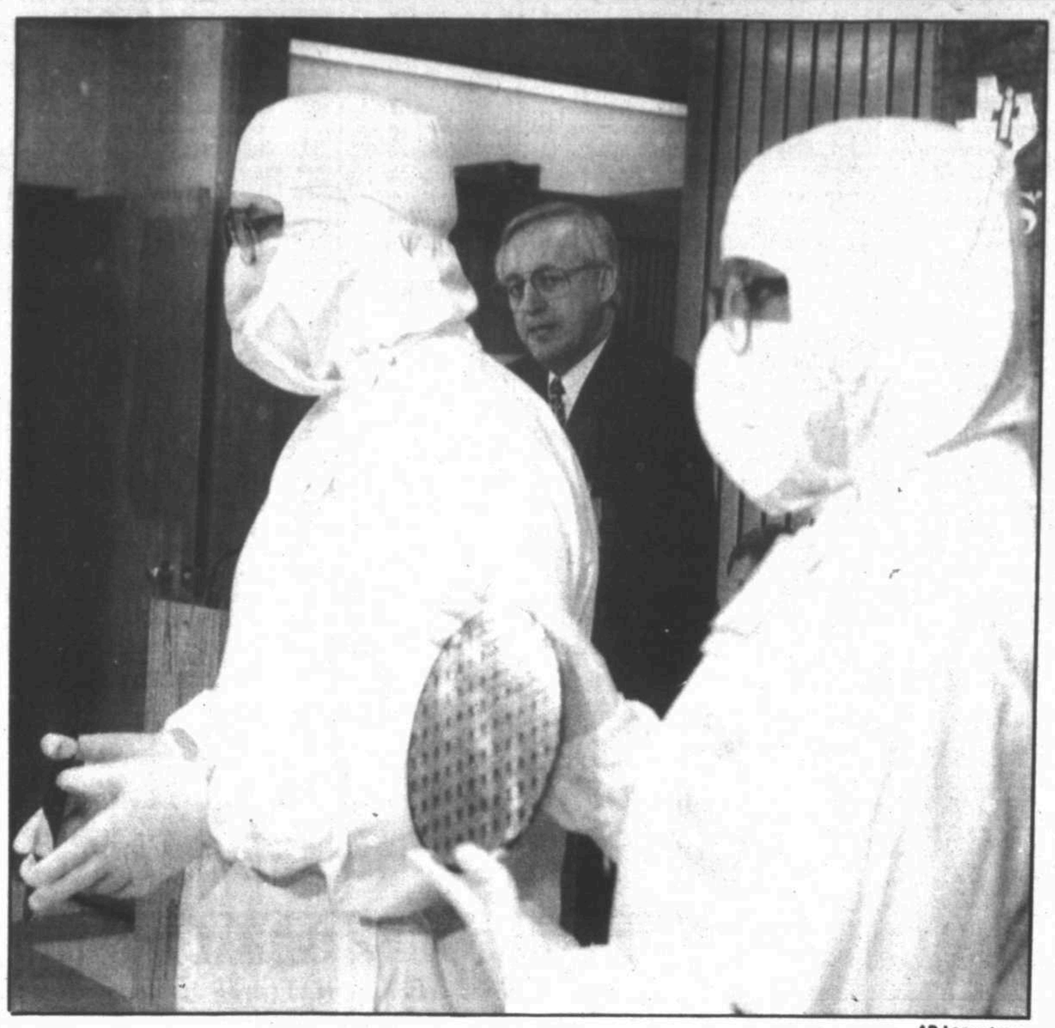

He said Texas Instruments has been very successful in providing custom products. With the new facility, the company expects to cut in half its cycle time, or the time it takes from invention of a product to final delivery.

The plant has not been designated to make a particular product, Junkins said. However, he said it largely will be dedicated to advanced processors and other differentiated custom products, and to the integration of multiple functions and technologies on a single chip. The plant likely won't make memory chips initially, Junkins said.

"This plant and the developments and the products will be going right into the teeth of the toughest competition in the world, and that's not going to get any easier," he said.

"Conversely, without this plant and without the development that emanates from it in leading to those products, you significantly lower your competitiveness."

Industry analysts said the proposed plant's price tag was standard for such a facility.

IBM wins 1st lap of disk storage race

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — A group of IBM scientists has developed a new method for manufacturing a sensitive device for reading magnetic information stored on computer disks, making it possible to store and retrieve 30 times more information than today's disks.

The discovery is likely to accelerate the rate at which disk-drive manufacturers are able to increase the density of information stored on magnetic disks. Currently it is possible to store information at densities of about 350 million bits a square inch. IBM researchers predict, however, that they will now be able to reach densities of 10 billion bits a square inch by the end of the decade.

A 3.5-inch disk drive with that storage density would be able to contain all of the text of 10,000 300-page novels, International Business Machines Corp. said.

"A race is on," said Chris H. Bajorek, vice president for technology development and manufacturing for Adstar, the San Jose, Calif., storage subsidiary of IBM. "Probably every major laboratory that is part of a computer storage company is working on this technology."

It now appears that IBM scientists have won the first lap of that race. The team of researchers is scheduled to publish its results on Friday in Science magazine.

Philip, Devin, vice president of storage technologies at Dataquest, a San Jose market research firm, said the more sensitive technology created an effect similar to turning up the volume on a hearing aid.

The new technique takes advantage of "giant magneto-resistance," a phenomenon discovered by French researchers in 1988. The discovery offers a way to cause a significant increase in the electrical resistance of a sensing device known as a head as it moves near a tiny spot of magnetic material on a computer disk.

For corporate America, security systems, services are big business

By Farrell Kramer
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — It can range from a simple sign-in sheet in the lobby of a crowded office building to a full-blown protective detail complete with a chase car, submachine guns and $1,000-a-day "advisers."

Corporate security is big business.

The kidnap and rescue of New York tuxedo executive Harvey Weinstein highlights the risks run today by business people, who can find themselves targeted because of their high profiles and perceived wealth.

Although relatively infrequent, kidnappings have become more common in recent years. In 1992, kidnappings reported to the FBI rose 22 percent from the year before.

Fear of such events, as well as concerns about growing lawlessness in the United States and abroad, is prompting U.S. companies to shell out increasingly large sums for protection.

While other industries in the sluggish economy are suffering, companies that provide security gear and services are prospering, with estimated annual growth of about 8 percent.

"Public security and safety are being privatized," said Edward Grubb, managing director, North America of Control Risks Group Ltd., a London-based security consulting firm. "Corporations and others are looking to their own resources."

Control Risks, founded by former officers of the British Army's elite Special Air Service, provides services including security awareness training for executives and the development of security procedures for companies. It has even helped negotiate the release of kidnap victims.

With all that, it's just a small part of a much larger industry.

Security companies in the United States alone will sell about $65 billion in goods and services in 1993, said William Cunningham, president of Hallcrest Systems Inc., a McLean, Va.-based research and consulting concern.

That includes alarm systems, closed-circuit television systems, computer and telecommunications security equipment, safes.

Is that MBA degree worth it in pocketbook?

By Diana Kunde
Associated Press writer

DALLAS — Don't count out the MBA degree just yet. One particular combination of undergraduate experience with the MBA is paying big dividends in starting salaries this summer.

May and June MBA graduates with technical undergraduate degrees and one to two years of working experience pulled in starting salaries nationwide that averaged 9.1 percent more than last year's graduates, according to the College Placement Council's annual summer survey of 402 colleges and universities.

Their average starting salaries were $53,345 nationwide. That's on top of last year's increase of 7.1 percent for the same degree combination.

Why?

Two factors stand out. The MBAs with technical expertise and experience are being scooped up by consulting companies advising the Fortune 1000 on how to apply technology to their business processes.

MBAs with technical expertise and experience are being scooped up by consulting companies advising the Fortune 1000.

Investment banking is another big employer of the technical background MBA, which includes mathematics majors as well as engineering and computer science or information systems.

The surge comes when starting salaries for most college and university graduates are down, in real terms. Salaries for chemical engineering grads, for example, increased only 1.4 percent from 1992, while inflation was 3 percent.

The MBA — a master of business adminstration — came under attack in the late '80s, after the stock market crash and the excesses of arbitragers like Ivan Boesky. Some executives criticized the training and preparation MBA students were getting from schools.

Recruiting has bounced back after dipping in the late '80s, said Dawn Oberman, statistical services specialist for the placement council.

Not that it's fat city out there. MBAs who graduated in May or June with non-technical backgrounds and no experience didn't quite match inflation nationally. The average starting salary was $36,657, an increase of 2.6 percent over last year. MBAs with technical undergraduate degrees but no experience garnered average starting salaries of $42,051, a 1.8 percent increase from a earlier year, but almost 15 percent more than their non-technical peers.

As major corporations cut employment and implement new information technology to stay competitive, the companies that advise them are growing. At Andersen Consulting, for example, hires from campus recruiting were up nationally 17 percent over 1992, said spokeswoman Janice Collins.

St. Pete Times buys out Bass

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — The St. Petersburg Times bought back the last shares of its stock owned by an investors group led by Texas billionaire Robert Bass and relatives of the newspaper's founder, Nelson Poynter.

Wednesday's purchase completes a 1990 deal that settled a struggle for control of the newspaper between its parent company, Times Publishing Co., and the investors group, Poynter-Jamison Ventures Ltd.

The $57 million deal will ultimately place full control of Times Publishing in the hands of the nonprofit Poynter Institute for Media Studies, as intended by Nelson Poynter.

"The agreements we signed in 1990 to buy back their stock were definitive and guaranteed the long-term independence of the company," said Andrew Barnes, president and chief executive officer of Times Publishing Co.

Under the agreement, the Times purchased 150 of Bass' 200 voting shares, and Bass donated 42 of the remaining 50 shares to Stanford University.

Bass' remaining eight shares were bought back Wednesday, and Stanford's holdings will be bought back in August 1995.

With the 1995 Stanford purchase, the total cost of the settlement will reach $57 million, and all shares will be controlled by the Poynter Institute.

1993 PROPERTY TAX RATES IN MIDLAND COUNTY

This notice concerns 1993 property tax rates for Midland County, it presents information about three tax rates. Last year's tax rate is the actual rate the taxing unit used to determine property taxes last year. This year's effective tax rate would impose the same total taxes as last year if you compare properties taxed in both years. This year's rollback tax rate is the highest tax rate the taxing unit can set before taxpayers can start tax rollback procedures. In each case these rates are found by dividing the total amount of taxes by tax base (the total value of taxable property) with adjustments as required by state law. The rates are given per $100 of property value.

	Last year's operating taxes	$7,569,880.90	$	$
	Last year's debt taxes	$867,884.43	$	$
	Last year's total taxes	$8,437,765.33	$	$
	Last year's tax base	$3,708,907,841	$	$
	Last year's total tax rate	$.2275/$100	$ -0-/$100	$ -0-/$100
	This year's effective tax rate:
	Last year's adjusted taxes (after subtracting taxes on lost property)	$8,390,588.53	$	$
+	This year's adjusted tax base (after subtracting value of new property)	$3,667,543,247	$	$
=	This year's effective tax rate for each fund	$.2288/$100	$ -0-/$100	$ -0-/$100
	Total effective tax rate	$.2288/$100
x	1.03= maximum rate unless unit publishes notices and hold hearing	$.235664/$100
	This year's rollback tax rate:
	Last year's adjusted operating taxes (after subtracting taxes on lost property and including taxes for state criminal justice mandate).	$12,796,687.38

	This year's total rollback rate	$.4063/$100

A county that collects the additional sales tax to reduce property taxes, including one that collects the tax for the first time this year, must insert the following lines.

- Sales tax adjustment rate	$.1403/$100
= Rollback tax rate	$.2660/$100

SCHEDULE A: Unencumbered Fund Balances

The following estimated balances will be left in the unit's property tax accounts at the end of the fiscal year. These balances are not encumbered by a corresponding debt obligation.

Type of Property Tax Fund	Balance
General Fund	$1,608,281
R&B Fund	405,811
Debt Service	18,665

SCHEDULE B: 1993 Debt Service

The unit plants to pay the following amounts for long-term debts that are secured by property taxes. These amounts will be paid property tax revenues (or additional sales tax revenues, if applicable).

Description of Debt	Principal or Contract Payment to be Paid from Property Taxes	Interest to be Paid from Property Taxes	Other Amounts to be Paid	Total Payment
1989 Public Works Bonds	150,000	96,713		246,713
1990 Public Works Bonds	100,000	124,013		224,013
1993 Public Works Bonds	-	140,938		140,938

Total required for 1993 debt service	$1,092,227
- Amount (if any) paid from funds listed in Schedule A	$ -0-
- Excess collections last year	$ -0-
= Total to be paid from taxes in 1993	$1,092,227
+ Amount added in anticipation that the unit will collect only 100% of its taxes in 1993	$ -0-
= Total Debt Levy	$1,092,227

SCHEDULE C: Expected Revenue from Additional Sales Tax

(For hospital districts, cities and counties with additional sales tax to reduce property taxes)

In calculating its effective and rollback tax rates, the unit estimated that it will receive $5,200,000 in additional sales and use tax revenues.

SHEDULE D: State Criminal Justice Mandate (For Counties)

The Midland County Auditor certifies that Midland County has spent $576,169.74 in the previous 12 months beginning August 1, 1992 for the maintenance and operations cost of keeping inmates sentenced to the Texas Department of Criminal Justice. Midland County Sheriff has provided information on these costs, minus the state revenues received for reimbursement of such costs.

This notice contains a summary of actual effective and rollback tax rates' calculations. You can inspect a copy of the full calculations at 707 W. Washington

Bowe knows Holyfield alright

■ Riddick Bowe won't let his friendship with Evander Holyfield get in the way of his title defense.

By John Nelson
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Friendship only goes so far. To about the opening bell, to be exact.

"I love the man. I've got all the respect in the world for Evander Holyfield, but I can't let him whup me," world heavyweight champion Riddick Bowe said. "I'm not going to let him beat me just because he's my friend."

On Thursday, Bowe's promoter, Rock Newman, and Holyfield's promoter, Dan Duva, formally announced their heavyweight championship rematch on Nov. 6 at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas.

Bowe won the undisputed title from Holyfield last Nov. 13 with a 12-round decision, but was later stripped by the WBC. Bowe still holds the IBF and WBA versions.

"I'm just thankful for the chance to fight for the heavyweight title again," said Holyfield, at 30 four years older than Bowe.

The announcement was held at a well-known Harlem soul food restaurant called Sylvia, and both fighters were mobbed by onlookers as they arrived in their limousines.

Holyfield will be paid about $10 million with Bowe expected to get just slightly more. The fight will be televised by TVKO on pay-per-view.

"We could have made fights that were easier and worth more money," Newman said. "We felt from the very beginning this would be the toughest fight we could possibly make, and because it's Evander Holyfield, he also commands more money."

The 10th round of their first meeting is considered by many boxing experts to be among the best the sport has ever offered. Bowe dominated the early part of the round, Holyfield came storming back in the middle minute, and the two boxers stood toe-to-toe in the final minute.

"In the first fight, I was very careless," Holyfield said. "I started to run into a lot of shots. He's a bigger man than I am, and yet he threw more punches in the fight than I did. I think that shows you that I was trying to hit a home run while he was fighting.

"This time, I will have to do what I have to do to win, and that means I can't go toe-to-toe with him. I will box him," Holyfield said.

Bowe said he "confused and discombobulated" Holyfield in the first fight, "and you ain't seen nothing yet. This is going to be hell for Evander Holyfield. This is Round 13. He used to have something I wanted. Now I've got it and he ain't gonna get it back."

Bowe said he weighs about 265 now but will come into the fight at around 230-235.

"I know I'm a little big, but I know what I've got to do," Bowe said. "You know what Evander once told me. He said he could hit me with his eyes closed. You know what I'm going to do? I'm going to close his eyes for him and let him try it."

Bowe has a professional record of 34-0 with 29 knockouts. He has defended the title twice, knocking out Michael Dokes in the first round last Feb. 6 and dispatching Jesse Ferguson in the second round last May 22.

Injuries having major effect for quarterbacks, linemen

By Ira Miller
San Francisco Chronicle

It's only August, and already injuries are having a major effect on the NFL. Though the 49ers have been hard hit, at quarterback and along the offensive line, the fact is several teams have suffered bigger losses.

The Washington Redskins lost offensive tackle Jim Lachey, arguably the league's best lineman, for the season because of a severed ligament in his right knee. A knee injury also has ended the season for running back Vaughn Dunbar of New Orleans, the Saints' top rusher last year.

Running back Terry Allen of Minnesota, who last season was second in the league in touchdowns and sixth in rushing, is scheduled for exploratory knee surgery today, and he is expected to miss the season, too.

In Dallas, the Cowboys are learning what other Super Bowl winners have found out before them — it's hard to stay healthy and repeat. Quarterback Troy Aikman, who underwent back surgery in June, is expected to be ready when the season begins, but blocking tight end Alfredo Roberts (broken foot) and Clayton Holmes (torn knee ligaments), a nickel back and special-teams player, are out for the year.

Also, starting strong safety Darren Woodson has a fractured forearm and will be out until at least sometime next month, and Ron Gant, a nickel back/special-teamer, has a dislocated shoulder and probably won't be ready for the start of the season.

The San Diego Chargers have lost cornerback Gill Byrd for the year with a knee injury. Dito Houston's John Flannery, the Oilers' top offensive-line backup. Starting linebacker Lamar Lathon of the Oilers will miss the first month of the season with a broken forearm, and special-teams ace Mike Dumas is out for the year with a ruptured Achilles tendon.

Guard Greg Skrepenak of the Raiders suffered a dislocated bone in his foot against the Cowboys last week and is out six to 10 weeks. Tackle Steve Wright of the Raiders has a dislocated shoulder. Tackle Don Maggs, who signed a big free-agent contract with Denver, is out at least the first month with a back injury. Defensive end Michael Strahan of the Giants, a second-round draft choice who was ticketed for a nickel pass-rush job, is expected to miss at least half the season because of strained ligaments in his right foot.

First-round pick Wayne Simmons of Green Bay, a linebacker. will miss the start of the season following minor knee surgery. Cornerback Albert Lewis of Kansas City is out a couple of months following wrist surgery. Tight end Chris Gedney of Chicago, a third-round pick, is out at least half the season with a broken collarbone.

Players complain that one of the reasons for the injuries is that camp runs too long. But the fact is that years ago camps were even longer — up to 10 weeks — and teams played six exhibition games instead of the four most teams play now. Linebacker Mike Walter of the 49ers has another explanation: Players are bigger, stronger and faster now, and they have more violent collisions.

"Whenever it happens to your own team it seems like an awful lot," said 49ers' vice president John McVay. "We have had more than our share, and I hope the wicked witch has visited us in preseason and won't come back to see us in the regular season."

Will the 49ers' injuries change the balance of power in the NFC West? Atlanta Falcons players sure think so.

Former 49er Pierce Holt: "It looks like they're starting to have the kind of injuries this team suffered last year. And I don't care who you are ... no team can survive a rash of injuries like that without it affecting them negatively. Maybe the worm has turned, huh?"

Cornerback Bruce Pickens: "First off, I thought we were the team to beat in the division, anyway. But this really throws it our way. Even if (Steve) Young comes back in time to play us (third game of regular season), his timing has to be off some. Jerry (Rice) might run a perfect pattern for instance, but the ball might not get there on time like it usually does."

Defensive tackle Tory Epps: "I think it's a big test for their organization. All these years, they've had the big-name, star players out front, and nobody ever thought about the backups. Now we're all going to find out what kind of players they were developing behind those stars."

Strange timing. Normally, in a year when TV contracts are up for renewal, the NFL goes out of its way to give a great schedule to ABC, since the Monday night games are the league's biggest showcase. But this year, for the first time in five years and only the second time since 1981, the defending Super Bowl winner (Dallas) makes only two Monday night appearances. ABC reportedly also isn't too thrilled about a San Diego-Indianapolis matchup at the end of Thanksgiving weekend, because November is a sweeps month for ratings. Neither city is a big market.

Talent judge: NFL referee Dale Hamer said he saw Joe Montana play both football and basketball at Ringgold High School in Pennsylvania — and that he was better at basketball. "I officiated a lot of games Joe played in basketball," Hamer said. "I personally thought he was a much better basketball player than he was a football player. He could do everything."

Rookie Ed Bunn, who's competing for the punting job with the Redskins, held a job repossessing cars while attending Los Angeles Valley College in Van Nuys. Punting is safer, he says. "I was chased into the locker room a couple of times because I had driven to the practice field with a car on the back of my tow truck," Bunn said. "At one point the coach wouldn't stand next to me on the field. He was afraid he would get shot."

Since Miami last went to the Super bowl after the 1984 season and was beaten by the 49ers, 38-16, every team in the league has had at least one coaching change — except the Dolphins.

A move to Hartford, Conn., remains a possibility for the New England Patriots, because Massachusetts legislators are opposed to building a new sports complex in the Boston area.

Former A&M shot putter back in world competition

By Fran Blinebury
Houston Chronicle

STUTTGART, Germany — Over the high fence, through the thick blanket of vines, beyond the trunks of the broad oak trees, the hum of expensive engines floated in from the "Mercedestrasse" and mingled with the crowd noise from Gottlieb-Daimler Stadium.

"Hear that?" asked Randy Barnes. "It's worth all the money in the world."

He wasn't talking about the expensive automobiles.

Three years after being put on the shelf, 36 months after breaking the world record, Barnes was back in the middle of the shot-put competition at the World Track and Field Championships and feeling like he was cruising down the autobahn in style.

Across the street and inside the main stadium was where all of the races were being run and the medals officially awarded. But over here on the practice field was where Barnes was reveling in the moment, soaking in all of the atmosphere and generally feeling like a captured fish who had been put back out in the water.

"I wanted my name and I wanted my reputation and I wanted my integrity returned to me," Barnes said. "But the longer the fight went on, the longer I had to spend days in court and talking with lawyers, the more that I felt that the thing I wanted the most was to be able to come back out here and start to compete again. Being here now makes me feel like I'm home again."

This is the first time Barnes has taken part in a major international championship meet since Aug. 7, 1990 in Malmo, Sweden, when, according to International Amateur Athletic Federation officials he tested positive for having used anabolic steroids. He continues to claim that charge is false.

Nevertheless, Barnes, who attended Texas A&M, served a two-year suspension that kept him out of the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona and also most of the Grand Prix circuit in Europe at the end of last summer. The 1988 Olympic silver medalist and disputed world-record holder could not get a single date to a dance.

"It was really a case of vigilantism," Barnes said. "My suspension was up late in the season, but the meet promoters just decided that they were going to make some kind of statement that they were standing up to the use of illegal drugs by making an example out of me. I talked, and I pleaded, and I did everything to be allowed to compete. But there didn't seem to be anything I could do that made a bit of difference."

His problems in dealing with meet promoters were difficult for Barnes, but doubly so because they stifled his attempts to prove that he should never have been suspended from the start.

The fact is there were many holes in the IAAF's original investigation. The paperwork on the drug test was suspect, and a five-member panel appointed by the IAAF to investigate the incident came back with only a 3-2 vote against Barnes.

However, Barnes remained on the sidelines for the full two years of his penalty simply because we was unable to prove his innocence. Unlike the American court system, the IAAF bylaws place the burden of proof on the accused, not the accuser, and that put Barnes in a situation that was unwinnable.

"How do you beat something like that?" Barnes asked between warm-up tosses. "People can make charges against you, and the workmanship can be shoddy, and you can't do anything about it. I mean, how do you fight rumor and innuendo?. ...What happened to me just wasn't fair."

But neither the IAAF nor USA Track and Field relented, and Barnes was forced to serve out the entire suspension. That denied the 27-year-old shot putter two of the prime years of his career and prompted him to file a $50 million lawsuit against both organizations.

"They just don't seem to care what they do or who they hurt," Barnes said. "They don't want the truth. They're not interested in what really happened. ...They just want to maintain their own little kingdoms.

"I can't stand here and tell you that people intentionally were out to get me. But once charges were made and things were said, what happened was very uncaring. It was vicious. It was frustrating. It was very difficult to deal with."

Now, Barnes is dealing with it the only way he can, by coming back strong. He upset 1992 Olympic champ Mike Stulce at the U.S. national meet in June to earn a berth here, and now his sights are set back on bigger things as the shot-put competition begins today.

"I'm going to come back the only way I can," he said. "I'm going to break the world record again, and I'm going to be around in Atlanta in 1996, and I'm going to keep pushing at the limits."

For now, though, he's just enjoying the atmosphere. Beyond the fence, the engines of the luxury automobiles are humming and the voices in the crowd are roaring.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Rich Gannon, his job with the Minnesota Vikings already handed to Jim McMahon, was traded to Washington on Thursday for a conditional draft choice.

Gannon, with the Vikings since 1987, split time last season with Sean Salisbury with mediocre results.

The Vikings began with an 8-3 record, but the defense carried the team for the last five games of that run. Gannon was benched in Week 12. After a two-game layoff, Gannon was given one more chance, but performed poorly.

He ended the season completing 159 of 279 passes for 1,905 yards, 12 touchdowns and 13 interceptions.

This season, Gannon was the No. 3 quarterback behind starter McMahon and Salisbury. Gannon criticized the team earlier this summer when it became apparent that McMahon would be the No. 1 quarterback.

Slocum defends reputation of SWC champs

■ The Texas A&M football program is awaiting its third NCAA ruling about alleged violations in the past five years.

By Jimmy Burch
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

COLLEGE STATION — Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum, who made his mark as a defensive coordinator, took time out yesterday to defend the reputation of a football program that is awaiting its third judgment from NCAA officials about alleged rules violations within the past five years.

"We're not a bunch of crooks," said Slocum, who has five players suspended from his current roster for accepting improper benefits from a booster. "I know time is going to bring us out OK on this. The way we run our business is going to be borne out ... We've been unfairly labeled."

School officials await a National Collegiate Athletic Association ruling on five players who had their scholarships revoked July 2 for accepting payment for work not performed at summer jobs provided by Dallas developer Warren A. Gilbert Jr., an A&M alumnus.

Included in the group is Greg Hill, a two-time all-Southwest Conference running back, as well as two other projected starters: linebacker Jessie Cox and wide receiver Brian Mitchell.

Slocum said he does not expect Hill, Cox, Mitchell or cornerback Billy Mitchell to have their eligibility restored in time to take part in the team's Sept. 4 season opener against Louisiana State.

The fifth suspended player, offensive tackle James Brooks of Fort Worth, was listed second team on yesterday's depth chart — the only one of the five to appear on A&M's two-deep list.

Slocum did not comment on the likelihood of Brooks' suspension being lifted by Sept. 4. He did, however, suggest that the Aggies would use their off-field distractions to help focus on-field efforts as the team attempts to win a third consecutive SWC title.

"Unfair innuendoes have been made. I've read and heard things that were unfair to my team, my staff and my players," said Slocum, who returns 16 starters from a 12-1 team that finished seventh in last year's final Associated Press poll. "We're not going to let this be a distraction. We've adopted the attitude of, 'Let's be positive and use this as a rallying point.'

"I know some have delighted in this. They can delight all they want to, but we're not going to roll over, play dead or fall off a cliff. They still have to play us."

When they do, Slocum said, opponents will face a team he considers the best in his five seasons at the helm of a program he inherited from predecessor Jackie Sherrill, who left in 1988 with A&M on NCAA probation and under investigation for other allegations that led to no additional penalties.

Hill said he and his teammates have had no difficulty blocking out the off-field distractions.

"We can win with me, without me or if I wasn't here at all," said Hill, a junior who has rushed for 2,555 yards and 27 touchdowns in two seasons. "It's not hard to concentrate. When I step on the field, it's 'Greg Hill Time.' Right now, I'm only worried how many times I get the ball into the end zone."

Defensive end Sam Adams said the Aggies have matured since their 28-3 loss to Notre Dame in the 1993 Cotton Bowl. That team, Adams said, "let ourselves get distracted" by the initial attention surrounding the off-field allegations, which surfaced last Dec. 20. Eight months later, Adams said, "We can use that as an example of what can happen if you lose your focus. We won't let that happen again." Blitz Brothers II?

With linebacker Marcus Buckley, the SWC sack leader the past two seasons, now blitzing opponents for the New York Giants, A&M coaches have moved Steve Solari — a starter at right linebacker last season — to Buckley's spot on the left side. Antonio Shorter, a junior with 19 career tackles and no sacks, is No. 1 on the right side.

Defensive coordinator Bob Davie said the two would be turned loose in tandem frequently. Shorter, in fact, envisions a scenario similar to the John Roper-Aaron Wallace duo in 1987-88.

"We're going to do this together. We want to be the 'Blitz Brothers II,'" Shorter said. "We talk about that a lot."

It will happen, Davie said, only if Shorter continues to improve during two-a-days. If he does not, Davie said, he will move Solari back to the right side and use a four-man defensive line. No mo' Buffalo

Defensive end Eric England has one goal for his senior season: to end it with a Jan. 1 triumph in Dallas.

"I'm sick of being the Buffalo of the Cotton Bowl," said England, who has watched his team lose consecutive Cotton Bowls in the same month that the Buffalo Bills lost their second and third consecutive Super Bowls.

"I'm tired of being the Buffalo of the Cotton Bowl, too," Hill added. "But you've got to realize not too many people go to enough Cotton Bowls to worry about that."

Danny McCray, a redshirt freshman receiver with world-class speed, missed yesterday's practice because of a sprained ankle. His status is day-to-day.

Two players dismissed last week from the A&M football team — wide receiver Percy Singleton and nose guard Darius Smith — have resurfaced at Division I-AA schools, where they can be eligible to play immediately under NCAA rules. Smith is practicing with the team at Sam Houston State. Singleton has told coaches at Alcorn State that he plans to join that team next week. Both players were among seven Aggies whose scholarships were revoked July 2 for accepting improper benefits from Gilbert.

DELIVERY

MOONLIGHTING!

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors and friends.

Depending on the size of distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subsribers'papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday-Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or a family member to substitute a for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!
