City will demolish abandoned park

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

An abandoned west Midland water park noted more recently for satanic graffiti and concrete expanses enticing to skateboarders will fall before bulldozers early next month and ultimately may wind up a new city park.

The City Council voted unanimously Tuesday to raze Wild River Canyon as a public nuisance.

"Over a year ago was when we started trying to get something done," council member Robert Rendall, in whose district the water park lies, said after the vote.

Rendall noted that Wild River Canyon has taken on a air of notoriety over the last few months.

Concern that the area is a haven for criminal activity — including drug use and alcohol consumption by minors — played a significant role in the council's decision, Assistant City Attorney Kirk Swinney said.

The council also "was concerned about assaults that might go on," Swinney said. "It's so out of view, and we can't patrol it constantly, obviously," he said. "You could dump a body back that and it wouldn't be known for months."

The 34-acre park, located near the intersection of Andrews Highway and Loop 250, is nearly hidden from drivers on either thoroughfare.

According to Rendall, "What really got our initial attention was there were some fires out there over a year ago.

"They had been set," he said.

The final straw came March 25, when a larger blaze leveled the park's wood-frame structures and caused significant damage to two cinder-block buildings that were left standing.

The park — with three concrete flumes that formerly served as water slides and several concrete pools empty save for standing rain water — continues to be a safety hazard, Swinney said.

Rendall said municipal action was delayed while park ownership was tied up in bankruptcy proceedings and other litigation.

An October 1987 court order tendered by State District Judge Vann Culp empowers city work crews to enter the land and begin demolition, Swinney said.

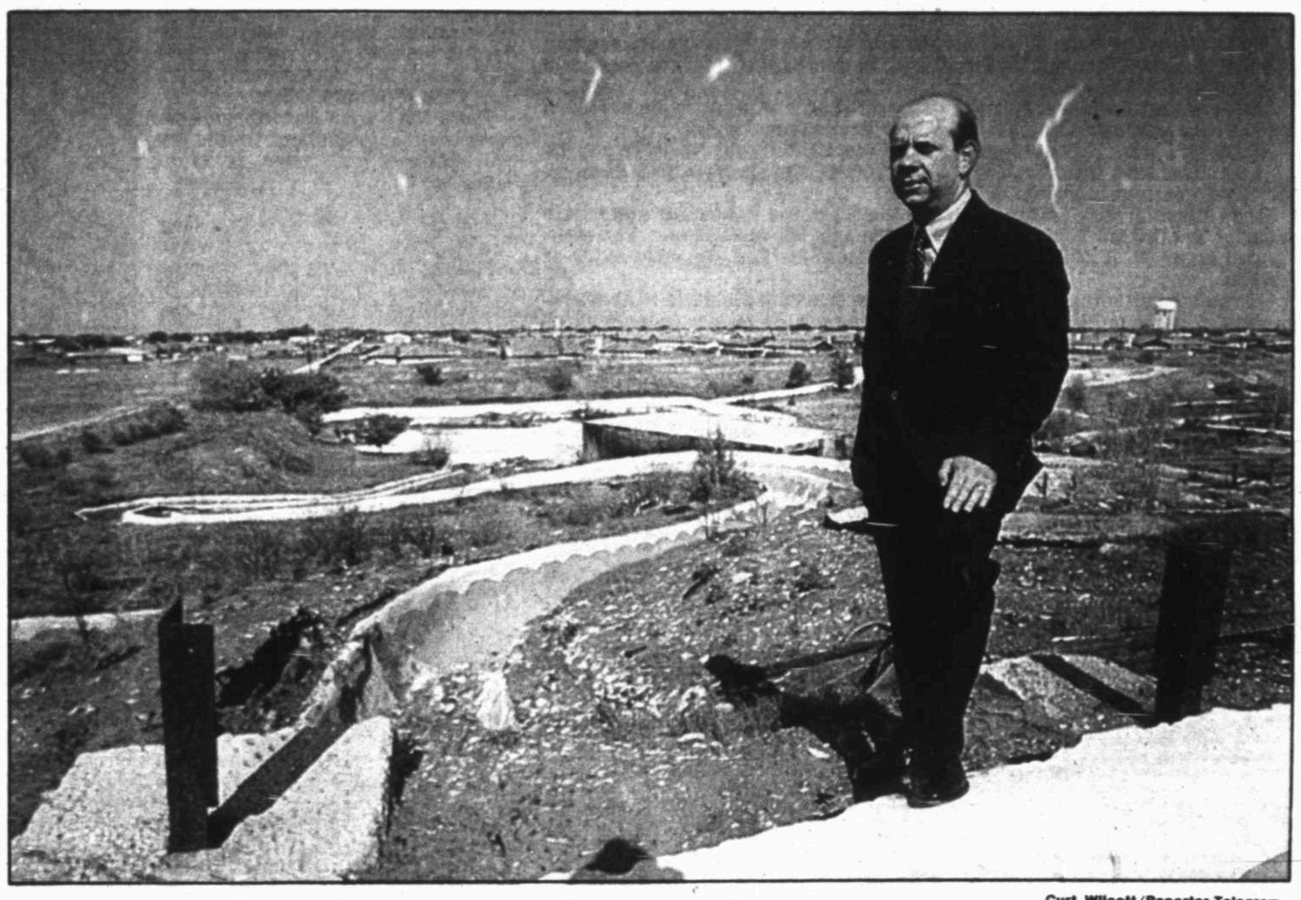

Initial work, scheduled to begin about June 1, will raze the three slides and two concrete structures, according to the assistant city attorney. Crews also will hammer holes in the remaining pools to drain standing water.

The city intends to finish clearing the area next fall, Swinney said.

Officials have devised a plan whereby the park would come under city ownership if no private sector bidders tender offers during a courthouse auction June 7, Swinney said.

With about $201,000 in back taxes owed to Midland taxing entities, the land likely won't draw private bids, Rendall said.

Reagan leaves for superpower summit talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan left today for his fourth meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, extolling advancements in superpower relations but pledging "to go still farther" in the interests of freedom and peace.

"We have many differences — deep differences, moral differences," Reagan told a White House departure ceremony minutes before he left for the Moscow summit, which begins Sunday and ends four days later.

"But we are still fellow human beings. We can still work together to keep the peace. And in working with the Soviet Union, the United States can still remain true to its mission (of) expanding liberty throughout the world," Reagan said.

Several hundred people were escorted onto the South Lawn of the White House to witness Reagan's departure remarks. Under a steady rain, Reagan spoke as an aide held a black umbrella over him. First lady Nancy Reagan stood next to the president, sheltered from the rain by an umbrella held by a second aide.

But the umbrella failed to keep the president dry. His wife was overheard remarking to Reagan, "Honey, you're just soaked."

He answered, "I know it." She then asked, "Why didn't you put on a raincoat?" His answer was not overheard.

A military band had played patriotic marches as the Reagans emerged from the Diplomatic Entrance. Among those in the large crowd standing by were several members of the Cabinet and Soviet ambassador Yuri Dubynin.

As the brief ceremony ended, the Navy's Blue Angels precison flight team staged a low-altitude fly-by.

Before leaving for a stopover in Helsinki, Finland, the president asked for the prayers of Americans "as I embark on this great task."

Prostitute's story says she had sex with Swaggart

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — A prostitute claims television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart engaged in sexual intercourse with her once and asked that her 9-year-old daughter watch sex acts, according Penthouse magazine.

■ PTL needs funds — 7A

The article in the July issue is the first report on Swaggart's alleged sexual encounters to say that he engaged in sexual intercourse. In previous interviews, the prostitute, Debra Murphree, has said Swaggart paid her to perform lewd acts while he watched.

The Penthouse interview is accompanied by explicit photos in which Ms. Murphree demonstrates the acts she said Swaggart asked her to perform.

She said she had at least 20 encounters with him during a one-year period.

The issue containing the article is scheduled to go on sale in June, but some copies were sold in advance here Tuesday.

The reported meetings with Ms. Murphree led to Swaggart's removal from the pulpit by the Assemblies of God church. Swaggart stopped preaching for three months but returned to the pulpit Sunday without his denomination credentials.

Swaggart has never admitted a sexual encounter, but said from the pulpit that he had sinned and suffered a moral failure.

William Treeby, an attorney for Jimmy Swaggart World Ministries, refused to comment on the Penthouse article.

"We will have no comment about that ever," Treeby said.

In the article, Ms. Murphree claimed that she and Swaggart once had brief sexual intercourse.

She also said she performed oral sex on Swaggart more than once.

She said Swaggart was unwilling most times to pay her the going rate of "$30 or $40" for her to perform oral sex.

"God, what a freak! Kinky! Here he is up there preaching for all this money, and when I see him, he's kinky and cheap, too," she said.

Panelists in Tuesday night's forum on exposing Satanism in Midland include, from the left, Greg Reid, an El Paso researcher into the occult and crime; Chuck Chapman of the Midland Police Department's Crime Prevention Unit, and Michael Chase of Teen Challenge of Midland.

Panel encourages 'purpose' in battle against Satanism

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The power of Satanism — the dark occult movement — that tries to control youth and seeks out the innocent to sacrifice can be combated through calling on the name of God and offering youth "meaning" and "purpose" in their lives.

That stance seemed to be the consensus of a Tuesday night meeting in Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church Parish Hall on exploring the depths of the occult movement in the Midland area.

The focus of Satanism, whose objective is power, is on youth and children and the sacrifice of those young people "because of their purity and innocence," Greg Reid, an El Paso consultant with Occult Research & Crime Consultants, told more than 300 parents and youth. And "lonely" boys and girls who are "very sensitive to spiritual matters" and who are "without a lot of purpose in their daily lives" often are victims of the satanic power, Reid said.

"You're dealing with a lot of Charles Mansons" — those who would slaughter the innocent in their gaining power, Reid said.

"The churches need to get together" to combat the movement, Reid said. "Kids need meaning; they need purpose."

Teachers seeking pay hikes

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

It's easy. Raising teacher morale equals raising teacher pay, Midland educators told a freshman class of school district trustees Tuesday.

Two Midland Independent School District teacher groups offered no grace period for seven new trustees Tuesday as they presented requests for a five to 10 percent pay raise, sick leave policy alterations and the addition of two "personal business" days off each year.

■ New board meets — 1B

No board action was taken in the matter at the Tuesday board meeting.

The first presentation was given by Lee High School teacher Sam Manning who represented the salary and benefit committee of the Midland Federation of Teachers and the Classroom Teachers Association.

Manning called for a teacher pay hike of five or 10 percent.

If the 10 percent raise proves to be unfeasible, Manning asked trustees for a five percent across-the-board hike with a fully-funded "career ladder" program.

Implementing the career ladder request would mean employing state eligibility criteria for for step increases instead of the the district's eligibility criteria, which are slightly stricter, he explained.

Also included in the LHS educator's plan was a .5 percent raise in the district's matching contribution to the teachers' tax shelter investment plan.

Manning also called for two additional personal business days off whereby teachers could have time off without having to explain why.

Other requests included a future reassessment of sick leave policy to enable teachers to include greater accrual of sick days for catastrophic illnesses.

Manning said the teacher salary schedule should be extended to guarantee $1,000-a-year pay raises for educators who obtain master's degrees and a $2,000 to $3,000 per year raise for teachers who obtain a doctorate while employed by the district.

Currently teachers get a $500 a year raise for obtaining a higher degree.

"We need to deal with the economic necessities of the teachers," Manning said, adding that he believed at least 60 percent of the community would favor raising taxes to cope with the teacher pay raises.

Passengers applaud pilot's unplanned landing

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Passengers broke into applause for a pilot after he safely landed his 3-week-old Boeing 737 on a narrow strip of grass 20 miles from New Orleans' airport without power in either engine.

"The plane was going up and down, sideways, and twisting," said the Rev. Leo Humphrey, 52, a Baptist missionary returning from El Salvador. "Lightning was everywhere. The lights went out on the plane and the engine died. Everyone thought it was over.

"As the pilot said, 'By the grace of God, I got this sucker on the ground,'" Humphrey said after the smooth landing between a drainage canal and a levee.

■ San Angelo boaters aid crash victims — 1B

Also Tuesday, five plane crashes killed seven people and injured 10, while six others were injured when severe weather buffeted a Braniff Airlines jet on its approach to Orlando, Fla.

Investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board were to investigate today why the engines of the TACA International Airlines jet failed about 20 miles from New Orleans International Airport and about 5 miles from another airport to which the jet had been diverted.

TACA, based in San Salvador, El Salvador, has business offices in New Orleans. The flight, from San Salvador to New Orleans, hd made a stop in the Central American country of Belize.

The plane, with 35 passengers and six crew members, was at 11,000 feet when it was diverted 15 miles to the U.S. Naval Air Station at suburban Belle Chasse, said a source with the Federal Aviation Administration.

The pilot then managed to restart both engines, the source said, and asked for clearance to New Orleans International before power went out again.

Suspected hijacker takes his life after 1,600-mile Lear 'joyride'

DENVER (AP) — A man believed to work for a flight-training company stole a private jet in Virginia early today and took it on a 1,600-mile joyride to Denver, where he shot himself as authorities closed in, officials said.

"The indication was that he just wanted to fly around for a while," said Richard Boulware, spokesman for Stapleton International Airport.

Denver police, FBI agents and emergency vehicles were waiting at the edge of a runway at the airport when the Learjet 36 came to a stop.

"As the crash crew and law enforcement personnel approached, he was ordered to lock his brakes," said Boulware. "They heard a noise and when they looked in the cockpit they found him dead. Things happened really fast."

The dead man, who was alone in the plane, was not immediately identified.

Showers and thunderstorms fell over southeast Georgia and along the Carolina coast, and extended from southern New England to eastern Kentucky and the southern Appalachians.

Thunderstorms and showers also dampened eastern New Mexico and northwest Texas. Showers and a few thunderstorms fell over the northern High Plains.

Mother surprised by birth of quintuplets

McALLEN (AP) — Maria Esther Chavez said doctors told her she would probably have twins, but she got a lot more than she was expecting.

Mrs. Chavez gave birth to the three boys and two girls early Tuesday morning at McAllen Medical Center, where doctors performed a Caesarean section.

The 28-year-old Reynosa, Mexico, resident said her doctor told her she might have twins, but she never suspected there were three more.

"They told me two," the surprised mother said Tuesday in Spanish.

The babies, whom hospital officials were calling "Babies A through E," were listed in stable condition this morning. Nurses have named an area of the neonatal intensive care unit "Chavez Boulevard," said Judy Gomez, the hospital's marketing director.

"They're fine, thanks to God," Mrs. Chavez said.

Her 41-year-old husband, Baldemar Chavez, was working in Mexico, and unavailable for comment.

She was visiting her parents in the Lower Rio Grande Valley city of Pharr on Monday when the labor process started, said Dr. John Garcia, the attending physician.

The girls were born first, Garcia said.

"We delivered both and then I said, 'Wait everybody here's another one,'" Garcia said, adding that neonatologist Ramiro Caballero "let out an exclamation point which I will not repeat."

"And then we told him we had four, then we had five and it was really exciting," Garcia said.

The doctor had examined Mrs. Chavez three times before, and told her she probably would have twins.

He said she had not taken fertility drugs, which often are associated with multiple births.

The babies' weights ranged from two pounds, three ounces to three pounds, said hospital spokeswoman Nelda Hernandez.

"A few years back, these babies would have had a poor chance of survival, but now with the neonatology advances, these babies have an excellent chance," Garcia said.

Mrs. Chavez said she and her husband have one other child, a 4-year-old girl.

When asked if she planned to have any more children, she answered with an emphatic, "No."

OCCULT

Youths who may be attracted to Satanism initially may experience terror and nightmares, lose weight, draw satanic symbols, change their friends, become more reclusive, and may listen to "black-metal" music that advances satanic acts.

There have been unconfirmed reports that some Midland youths are practicing a self-styled form of Satanism.

ADVOCATES OF Satanism "use black-metal music to recruit youth to Satanism," Reid said. And listening to that music, which screams of death, rape, blasphemy, suicide, hate, sexual acts, destruction and "killing for killing's sake," can cause a young person to go "stone nuts," he added.

Those who are drawn into Satanism usually are "smart" youths who may play the "Dungeons and Dragons" game.

Reid acknowledged that "Satanism as a religion is protected by the First Amendment of the United States Constitution." And books on the satanic movement are the "hottest selling items in book stores," Reid said.

Reid, who said reportedly that 20 "children have signed a suicide covenant" in Midland, said Midlanders should "pray hard and keep looking" for signs of any impending suicide.

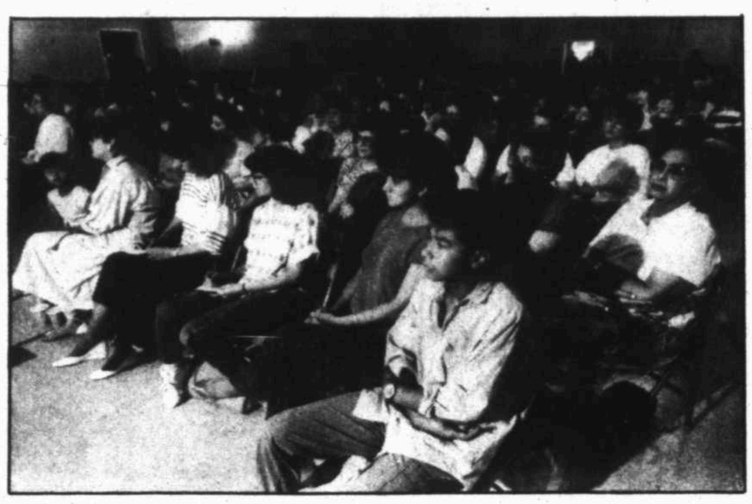

No local officials have been able to confirm the existence of the suicide covenant.

Reid was one of four panelists in a forum moderated by Ernie Davis of the Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church's Knights of Columbus chapter, which sponsored the forum.

"The program is to bring the occult out into the open," Davis said, "and expose it for what it is — a cancerous growth on the body of the Christian society."

DAVIS LIKENED combating the satanic movement to rescuing baby Jessica McClure from an abandoned water well last October, when "all of Midland joined hands, brought in experts and special equipment when needed, and with prayers of friends and strangers from around the world, we rescued Baby Jessica."

On the panel with Reid were the Rev. Domingo Estrada, pastor of the Catholic Church; Chuck Chapman, crime prevention specialist with the Midland Police Department; Michael Chase, staff worker with Teen Challenge; and Steve Miles with the Midland County Sheriff's Department Youth Division.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

More than 300 Midland parents, teen-agers and younger children listen to a forum on exposing Satanism and the dark occult in Midland.

Miles, who said that the First Amendment's essential harboring of Satanism as a religion "goes against every grain" in his being as a Christian, but as a "law-enforcement officer, I am sworn to uphold the laws of the land."

Those with a Satan pull "can worship Satan" if they wish, Miles said, "but they can't violate the laws of the land."

Miles noted that the satanic materials are in book stores, which are "in business to make money." And the material is not just in the so-called "adult" bookstores but is in the "high-class bookstores," he said.

And "unfortunately," said Miles, many children's lives are "so empty" that they resort to "Satanism to get their thrills."

THOSE WHO PROFESS to be Christian should take a "loud stand" against Satanism.

From another perspective, Miles said that youth who are cognizant of the satanic movement "know they have a very powerful tool" to frighten adults, including their parents.

"A lot of these kids will blow smoke," Miles said, "because they like to see the reaction."

"Most people die from smoke rather than from fire," responded Joe Caddell, whose 17-year-old son, Neil, was given a telephonic satanic death threat — to tear out his heart and drive his leg bones through his skull.

"Our children are being threatened," said an emotional Teri Caddell, Neil's mother.

"Midland is our home," Caddell said. "We need to stand up and clean it up."

One teen-ager, who requested anonymity, said that Midland law-enforcement officers are denying the prevalence of the satanic movement, including animals sacrifices, in Midland.

"You guys deny it, and the (pro-occult) people love it. They are jumping for joy because you officers are denying it," said the teen-ager. "I'm staying here, and I'm fighting it head-on."

"THERE ARE RUMORS, and there are facts," replied Miles. "I cannot tell you, yes, I have (seen animal sacrifices) because I personally have not."

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, who did not appear before the panel but who attended the meeting, said that, "Of course, we haven't definitely established that we have a problem with the occult.

"We do have some people who have been dabbling with the occult."

Chapman noted the importance of gaining knowledge to fight the occult movement.

"A very wise Person once said, 'For lack of knowledge, my people perish,'" Chapman said.

Chase warned of the Biblical last days when "Men will become lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God." The American society, he said, is on the "downswing," the family is less structured, and matters of "right" and "wrong" are becoming gray.

"The occult is on the rise because Christians are on the decrease," Chase said. "The Christian sits in the church and does nothing."

A MIDLAND COUPLE, Gene and Anna Washam, said that their 17-year-old daughter, Kimberly, was caught up in the satanic movement but denies it. She left home for about a month but has returned, Washam, 42, said.

"We wanted our daughter back," he said, "to get her to listen and to let her know that we care."

Washam said he did not "want to believe" that the occult had influenced his daughter. "I was too scared," but "I knew I had to deal with it. It was there, and it does hurt."

Mrs. Washam said that friends, family, the church and "most of all, the Lord," have come to their support.

Washam said that parents should, without feeling as if they are snooping, check up on their children out of care and love. "What you are doing is helping," he said.

Alan Williams, chaplain of Midland Memorial Hospital, expressed concern over dark and violent messages in television music-videos. "We do have the power," he said, "if we take time to write letters" to television stations and to the Federal Communications Commission to express the views. "Some of that (video) blows me away, makes me want to cry."

Bill Leasure, an Odessa out-reach minister, said that the people who are influenced by Satan are "not your enemy. Satan is your enemy. God loves that man (an advocate of Satan). But He doesn't love that sin he's in." The Christian commitment is to "tell the word of God."

LANDING

Flying at about 5,000 feet, the pilot then was diverted 6 miles away to the less congested Lakefront Airport, said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The pilot responded with two "Mayday" messages and began looking for somewhere else to land, the source said.

The plane finally glided to a stop on the grass strip on the grounds of a National Aeronautics and Space Administration complex in eastern New Orleans. The plane's wings barely fit between the drainage canal and the levee.

Two witnesses said they heard no engine sounds as the plane landed.

Saidy Duran, 35, of Costa Rica said she and other passengers showed their appreciation with a round of applause — "a big one."

The pilot, Carlos Dardano, about 35 years old, is from San Salvador and has been with TACA about five years, said Peter Messina, the airline's U.S. regional manager.

"He's a pretty cool captain. He doesn't get flustered very easily," Messina said.

Messina said the apparently undamaged aircraft was only 3 weeks old.

Crew members refused to talk with reporters.

"We went through rain and severe turbulence and I thought I heard them say lightning hit the plane," said passenger July Mora, 25, of New Orleans.

Officials could not confirm the report.

In West Paterson, N.J., a corporate jet crashed early Tuesday on Garrett Mountain and exploded, killing the two crewmen and two female passengers aboard.

In Dillingham, Alaska, two people were killed Tuesday night when a Manakotak Airways Cessna-207 collided with a helicopter 2 miles south of Dillingham-Alaska Airport, officials said.

The two pilots were the only people aboard, authorities said.

In Pontiac, Mich., a 48-year-old pilot died after his home-built airplane crashed Tuesday afternoon at Oakland-Pontiac Airport, officials said.

In Oklahoma, an Atlantic Southeast Airlines commuter plane crashed on takeoff from Lawton Municipal Airport and ignited, injuring the six passengers and two crew members, authorities said. Six were hospitalized, two in serious condition.

Near San Angelo, Texas, boaters rescued two men after a U.S. Customs Service plane lost power in both engines and crashed into a lake, officials said. One was hospitalized in stable condition, while the second was treated and released.

Braniff's Flight 723, carrying 55 passengers from Indianapolis, was hit by heavy rain and winds at 13,000 feet and about 35 miles west of Orlando International Airport, an airline official said.

The BAC-111, two-engine aircraft landed safely without emergency procedures, he said.

Four passengers and two flight attendants were in stable condition with cuts and bruises at Orlando Regional Medical Center. Two flight attendants were treated for minor injuries and released.

PARK

"I don't think you'll find anyone thinking that property is worth $201,000," said Swinney.

Other Midland taxing entities like the school and college districts have agreed to forgive their shares of the owed taxes if the city's bid for the land is successful, he said.

"It's not neccessarily that the city wants the property, but it's such a blight that we felt something needed to be done on a permanent basis," Rendall said.

Officials have fielded a variety of proposals for the land should it come under municipal control, said the councilman. Included among those are a new park that would include an amphitheater and a west side parking area for city vehicles.

In other action Tuesday, the council:

— Tabled consideration of sight obstruction regulations for city right of ways to allow further discussion between city attorneys, landscapers, developers and Keep Midland Beautiful officials,

— Tabled consideration of a new telecommunications system for City Hall and the Police and Fire Departments to allow further discussions with bidders, — Approved an emergency budget amendment for funds to clear stagnant water, filth and brush from vacant and abandoned lots, and — Approved on second reading an ordinance regulating junk and second hand goods dealers.

PAY

Trustees also heard a second presentation from the Midland Educators Association, a wing of the Texas State Teachers Association and the National Education Association.

An MEA representative told trustees that MISD "can't pride itself on paying higher than the state base anymore" because salaries on average are lower than the national teacher salary average of $28,031.

MEA calls for an 8 percent across-the-board increase in salaries.

The MEA also called for a "sick leave bank," as did Manning, which would allow the district to give 100 days of sick leave to a needy teacher for every unused sick day donated to the "bank" by another teacher.

MEA also wants voiced support for the personal business days off plan and an increase in the district's contribution to the teacher's annuity fund.

These, among other requests by the teacher groups, will be discussed by the board throughout the summer, said Ted Miller, MISD's director of communication.

SWAGGART

She said she refused Swaggart's request that she have her 9-year-old daughter watch sex acts.

"I said, 'You can do whatever turns you on but don't ever mention my daughter again,'" Ms. Murphree told the magazine.

HIJACK

The man, believed to be a pilot and mechanic for Flight International, a company that trains pilots and airplane workers, took the jet from Patrick Henry International Airport in Newport News, Va., said Dick Stafford, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Washington.

"We're not sure whether he had a gun when he started, but when he landed he was surrounded and he shot himself, shot and killed himself," said Stafford.

Air traffic controllers at several airports had tracked the plane for parts of the flight across the country, Stafford said. Controllers in Longmont picked up the plane over Colorado Springs, south of Denver, according to Boulware.

"We got an experienced Lear 36 pilot up in the Stapleton control tower and he managed to talk him down into a good landing," Boulware said.

The jet landed at 5:18 a.m.

"This is bizarre," Boulware said. "Rarely do you find someone stealing a plane like this worth millions of dollars.

"Thiane or the runway."

According to Jane's All The World's Aircrafts, the Learjet has a flight range of about 1,640 miles when carrying four passengers and a full load of fuel.

SUMMIT

"Since my first meeting with Mr. Gorbachev,... we have come a long way," Reagan said. "My task in the next week will be to go still farther, farther in the interests of peace. Farther toward a universal respect for fundamental human rights. Farther toward world freedom. Farther toward a safer world for all people," Reagan said.

Reagan was leaving without a ratified U.S.-Soviet treaty banning medium-range nuclear missiles, the highlight of his last summit in December with Gorbachev.

The pact is still awaiting Senate approval and White House chief of staff Howard Baker is staying behind in the hope the Senate may act and the treaty can be rushed to Reagan before he meets with Gorbachev.

Several of Reagan's own conservative colleagues have stalled action on the pact, arguing it is one-sided and does not address concerns about potential Soviet cheating.

But Senate leaders moved Tuesday to halt debate.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., told Reagan on Tuesday that "in all likelihood, the Senate will be able to act on the treaty by Friday."

The president, summing up his four-part agenda for the May 29-June 2 talks with the Soviet general secretary, noted in his departure remarks that he and Gorbachev have "plenty of work" to do.

"I do not expect it to be easy," Reagan said.

Feathers fly as firms fight over 'ducky' name

DALLAS (AP) — The president and founder of Rubber Ducky Inc. says he was cheated when a Massachusetts company got trademark rights to market condoms under that name.

Steve Finley said Tuesday his company, of suburban Irving, came up with the idea before the Marshfield, Mass., company.

Finley filed a complaint Monday in federal court in his bid to win exclusive rights to the name more commonly associated with bathtub toys and public television's "Sesame Street."

Rubber Ducky Inc. uses the name to promote condoms, T-shirts and other items, an idea Finley said he came up with last July, beginning a national campaign on Texas beaches during spring break.

But Dianne Giles said she and her sister came up with the Rubber Ducky idea in 1986 and began selling condoms with that name in March 1987. Her company obtained a U.S. trademark registration April 19.

Ms. Giles contends Finley was the one who stole the idea and says she may countersue.

"We had the idea first, we got the trademark rights first and we feel like we've really been violated here," she told the Dallas Morning News.

Finley's complaint, however, argues that Ms. Giles has lost exclusive rights by not using the name to sell a product. He says his research has not validated her claim that she is already selling "Rubber Ducky" condoms.

"The whole argument right now is only on the condom. I own the shirts, stickers...They are not arguing about that," Finley said.

Finley said he also has filed a complaint with federal authorities to overturn Ms. Giles' trademark registration.

His duck is a worldly, cartoonish character, while Ms. Giles said hers is more subdued and inspired in part by feminist feelings that traditionally packaged condoms are "too macho."

"I found the name 'Rubber Ducky' not to be offensive. Some people even think of 'Sesame Street'," said Ms. Giles, a real estate agent.

Parole officers would quit, lawmaker says

BEAUMONT (AP) — If parole officers could get other jobs in related criminal justice work, they would all quit, a state representative says.

State Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, said Tuesday parole officers are caught in the middle of court orders to limit the number of people in overcrowded prisons and the number of prisoners being released on parole.

After the reported rape of a Beaumont parole officer and the as yet unexplained death of a Dallas parole officer, several parole officers have gone public with their concerns at the risk of losing their jobs.

The Beaumont officer was attacked while making a required visit to a parolee's house May 10 and the headless corpse of the Dallas officer was found in a park after he vanished after leaving his office to visit some parolees.

Concerns of the parole officers focus on job safety, including what they call inadequate training, unmanageable workloads and high-pressure working conditions, unaccompanied home visits to parolees' houses and the inability to carry a gun.

Southeast Texas officers have gone public because central office personnel in Austin have resisted discussing these concerns through normal channels, says Glenn Walker, a Beaumont district parole officer.

The large caseload allows parole officers little time to get to know each parolee and know what each is capable of doing, he said.

Walker said he has received three death threats, two verbally on his answering machine and one typewritten and left on his windshield at a department store parking lot.

"These people (parole officers) are not qualified to handle the kinds of people on parole now," he said. "If they are releasing the best TDC (Texas Department of Corrections) has to offer, I sure don't want anything to do with the worst."

Several officers say they received little or no training for the position. Many, when interviewing for the job, were not aware they would be required to visit parolees at their residences.

Walker, who has been with the agency for more than a year, said that within two weeks after he was hired, he was handling 100 cases.

"The only safety training I received," he said, "was (my supervisor) saying, 'you should use good judgment.'"

Glenn Heckmann, executive director of the state Board of Pardons and Paroles, told the Beaumont Enterprise in a telephone interview that board has approved money for a two- to three-week academy for new officers.

County jail inmates joined in life sentence

JASPER (AP) — He was a Cuban national awaiting a decision on citizenship from immigrations officials. She was about to begin a 25-year prison sentence for fatally shooting her husband.

Tuesday, Geraldine Myers and Adaberto Leiva were married by Jasper County Justice of the Peace Clifford Woods. The bride and groom, both wearing orange coveralls, took their vows and kissed in front of the county jail.

No wedding ring was available, but the jailer took photographs.

Following a trip to the courthouse where they received a marriage license, it was back to their separate cells. The newlyweds gave their address as 101 Burch Street — the Jasper County Jail.

Woods said the romance began when Leiva, a jail trusty, was mopping floors and saw Mrs. Myers in her cell. Woods said Leiva almost mopped a hole in the floor in front of her cell as he courted her through the window in the steel cell door.

Leiva then asked Woods if he would perform a wedding ceremony.

"I told him that if he could find someone to marry him, I would do the ceremony," said Woods.

State District Judge Monte Lawlis waived the state's new mandatory 72-hour waiting period to permit the couple to marry.

Married life looks like this:

Ms. Myers, 24, is to be taken Thursday to the Texas Department of Corrections in Huntsville where she will begin serving a 25-year sentence for the April 29 shooting death of her estranged husband, Gerald Calhoun.

She pleaded guilty to the killing and received a 25-year sentence.

Leiva, 25, is being held at the jail for the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Chief Deputy Causey Weaver, who is in charge of the Cuban nationals being held in the Jasper jail on a contract with the INS, said the INS is aware of the marriage and approved it.

Weaver said Leiva served a prison sentence and is being held at the jail until he goes before the INS's review board which will consider granting him citizenship.

Judge's convicted killer moved to federal prison

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The man convicted of assassinating U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. has been moved to a federal prison to begin serving two life prison terms, state prison officials say.

Charles Voyed Harrelson, 49, a three-time convicted felon, was granted "more than 11 years good time" for the time he served in a state prison and was transferred to the federal prison in Marion, Ill., to begin serving two life terms for the May 29, 1979, assassination of Wood, officials said Tuesday.

Harrelson was convicted in federal court of accepting $150,000 to kill the federal judge known as "Maximum John" for lengthy prison terms he handed defendants in drug cases.

Harrelson, who has maintained he was the patsy in a government-organized conspiracy to cover up the real killers, was released from the Texas Department of Corrections Monday, after serving seven years, eight months and 28 days of a 20-year sentence for firearms and drug convictions in Harris and Culberson counties.

U.S. Marshals then transported him to Illinois, according to Texas Department of Corrections spokesman Charles L. Brown.

Brown said Harrelson, once suspected of plotting an escape from the Eastham Unit in Lovelady, had been advanced 11 years, six months and 12 days of "good-time" credit.

While Harrelson could not be described as a model prisoner, Brown said he had not caused any problems other than the escape attempt.

"I don't think he was an agitator," Brown said. "There weren't a lot of disciplinary infractions."

After rumors circulated that Harrelson had planned a 1984 prison escape with a pair of smuggled guns, a foreign sports car and $500,000 in cash, he was moved to the high security Ellis I prison unit that also houses Texas' death row prisoners.

TDC inmates earn good time based on a complicated formula involving the type of offense for which they were sentenced and their behavior while in custody, Brown said. It amounts to a reduction in sentence for good behavior.

Prison officials had discovered in late April 1984 an escape attempt involving unidentified outside sources who reportedly were to smuggle weapons in to Harrelson. No weapons were ever found during a series of searches of the Eastham Unit.

Harrelson insisted he was in Dallas the day Wood was assassinated. He claimed he was convicted as a result of a complicated government conspiracy that involved federal drug agents he believes were involved in the murder, threats of reprisals against anyone who attempts to initiate a new investigation and political payoffs.

A co-defendant in the case, Joe Chagra of El Paso, was released earlier this year after serving almost six years of a 10-year plea-bargained sentence.

Stenholm denies hearing designed to affect Idaho congressional race

POCATELLO, Idaho (AP) — Democratic Congressman Charles Stenholm of Texas is defending a May 13 hearing he held in southern Idaho, claiming the criticism from Republican congressional candidate Dane Watkins revealed a lack of knowledge about the political process.

Watkins, who went into Tuesday's primary election as the clear favorite for the GOP nomination to face Democratic Congressman Richard Stallings, claimed Stenholm's hearing on emergency livestock feeding programs was a "political dog-and-pony show for Dick Stallings."

Watkins, a former state senator who failed to win the GOP congressional nomination in 1986, contended the Stenholm hearing was a blatant attempt by liberal Democratic House leaders to depict Stallings as sympathetic to farmers.

"Before making a false statement," Stenholm shot back in a letter to newspapers in the conservative southern Idaho congressional district, "I would ask him to study my voting record. I am a Democrat and I am a conservative and I have voted with the Reagan administration more times than many Republican members."

He denied the hearing was staged specifically to benefit Stallings, pointing out that a similar hearing was held the next day in Montana and others would be held elsewhere in the coming weeks.

Even though Stallings is not a member of his Agriculture subcommittee, the Texas lawmaker said his panel was concerned about drought this summer in all parts of the country. Stallings has cosponsored a bill to consolidate existing government emergency livestock feed assistance.

Democrats make issue of trade veto, to debate today

Associated Press

Republican nominee-to-be George Bush picked up what could prove to be an unwelcome piece of baggage on the campaign trail — President Reagan's veto of a massive trade bill. Democratic presidential contenders Jesse Jackson and Michael Dukakis, meanwhile, were facing off tonight in their first one-on-one debate in a month.

Bush cruised to an easy victory in Idaho's presidential primary on Tuesday. He was picking up 15 of the 18 national convention delegates, as Dukakis won a non-binding Democratic "beauty contest" with no delegates at stake.

With 65 percent of the precincts reporting, Dukakis was taking 74 percent to Jackson's 15 percent in Idaho, while Bush was gaining 82 percent to 9 percent for Pat Robertson, who suspended his presidential bid earlier this month.

Robertson was winning one delegate, with two going to the uncommitted column. Bush already has more delegates than he needs for the GOP nomination.

The vice president was leaving Washington today to spend a week at his summer home in Kennebunkport, Maine. He was expected to keep a low profile to avoid upstaging Reagan during the superpower summit.

As Reagan was leaving this morning for Moscow, Bush was heading for West Point, N.Y., to give a commencement address at the military academy.

Tonight's Jackson-Dukakis debate in San Francisco comes as the two campaign for California's June 7 primary. Candidates' debates were almost painfully commonplace earlier in the campaign, as the then-crowded Democratic field met frequently for talkfests.

But the last time Jackson and Dukakis met for a debate was in April, prior to the Pennsylvania primary. Back then, the two were exchanging mainly pleasantries. But Jackson has been more critical of Dukakis in recent weeks as the delegate gap between the two widened.

Dukakis is now within striking distance of the 2,081 delegates needed to nominate. He has 1,669 to Jackson's 983, according to the latest Associated Press count.

The Democratic front-runner was in Washington today, where he was picking up an assortment of congressional endorsements. He also had a meeting set with former rival Albert Gore Jr., the senator from Tennessee, who suspended his Democratic presidential campaign a month ago.

On Tuesday, Dukakis denounced Reagan's veto of the trade measure, which would require advance notice of plant closings.

"Any administration that is willing to give Gen. (Manuel Antonio) Noriega 120 days notice and a plea bargain ought to be willing to give the American worker 60 days notice before they are thrown out on the street," the Massachusetts governor said, referring to talks aimed at easing the Panamanian military leader from power. Noriega is under indictment on drug charges.

Dukakis made it clear the plant-closing issue would be used as ammunition in his expected campaign against the vice president. Reagan and Bush, he said, "don't understand that for working families...there is nothing more painful than losing a job."

Even some Bush backers broke with the administration on the trade bill. Rep. Guy Molinari, Bush's New York campaign chairman, was one of 60 House Republicans who joined in the 308-113 vote to override the veto. Senate Democratic leaders have said they expect the veto to stand in their chamber.

Bush has not come out directly in favor of the president's position, but he hasn't publicly dissented either.

He has edged slightly away from Reagan by speaking favorably of the plant-closing law in Massachusetts, Dukakis' home state. But Bush has said that he approves of the Massachusetts measure because it is voluntary, whereas the federal one would be mandatory.

For the vice president, the trade bill was the latest example of an administration action that has left him on the defensive as he campaigns. In one such controversy — the Noriega affair — Bush let it be known, if in cautious terms, that he disagreed with the president.

Former Philippines president hospitalized

Marcos

HONOLULU (AP) — Former Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos was hospitalized in intensive care because of chest pains, officials said.

Marcos, 70, was listed in guarded condition Tuesday night at St. Francis Medical Center, and was undergoing tests, said Eugene N. Tiwanak, the hospital's assistant administrator.

He began suffering chest pains during the day. After an hour-long interview with Allen Neuharth, chairman of the Gannett newspaper group, Marcos continued to feel the pains. The family consulted with Marcos' personal physician and it was decided he should be taken to the hosital for a checkup, said Arturo Aruiza, Marcos' chief spokesman.

Marcos was taken to the hospital by car at about 8 p.m. Tuesday, said Aruiza.

There were unconfirmed reports Monday that Marcos' health was deteriorating, but his spokesman, Gemmo Trinidad, said at the time Marcos was healthy, although still grieving the death of his mother.

"He's admitted that he's feeling ill — that he is not well," Aruiza said at the hospital.

Also at the hospital was Marcos' wife, Imelda, who was wearing her customary black dress and sunglasses.

Mrs. Marcos left the hospital through a side door and appeared to be escorted by four people. She told them, "Thank you so much for coming."

Asked if Marcos was going to be all right, she replied, "Yes, I think so. I hope so."

Marcos was hospitalized briefly at St. Francis last October during which a parathyroid gland was removed to ease chronic pain in his legs, doctors said.

Marcos, his wife and their three children have lived here since fleeing the Philippines during the February 1986 civilian-military revolution toppled him after 20 years in power.

Marcos, who was first elected president in 1965, ruled the Philippines with a mixture of dictatorship and democracy, reform and stagnation.

He was re-elected in 1969. In 1972, he declared martial law as troops arrested scores of opponents, saying it was needed to save the country from communism and to reform society. Marcos ruled with an iron hand for the next eight years.

He lifted martial law in January 1981 but gave up little of his vast powers. A few weeks later, he won another term against a little known candidate in an election that was boycotted by all his major opponents.

Senate likely to vote on missile treaty Friday

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D.W.Va., said today he believes the chamber will vote Friday or Saturday on the superpower medium-range nuclear missile treaty.

A few dissident opponents have been using delaying tactics against the pact. But Byrd and his Republican counterpart, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, filed petitions Tuesday to limit debate and force it to a vote in time to present the ratified document to President Reagan for his summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, which begins Sunday.

"I'm fairly confident we will be able to finish the treaty Friday or Saturday," Byrd said. But he noted that potential problems still exist, including competing items on the Senate's legislative agenda, such as attempting to override President Reagan's veto of a trade bill.

Reagan left Washington today for the summit, with a three-day stopover in Helsinki, Finland, en route.

At the same time, a group of key senators met in an effort to work out a deal to let treaty opponents offer and debate their amendments, but still provide for a vote on final approval Friday in time for the summit.

"I get the feeling that maybe the time has come now to get this done," Dole said after meeting late Tuesday with the leader of treaty opponents, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

Reagan, meanwhile, was looking ahead to the next arms-control treaty, one he hopes will call for massive reductions in U.S. and Soviet arsenals of intercontinental nuclear missiles. He said he hoped such a pact could be reached before his term expires in January.

"It is the requirements of a good treaty, and not some arbitrary deadline, that will determine the timetable," Reagan said in an remarks broadcast on the government's "Worldnet" satellite service.

The treaty, which requires elimination within three years of all U.S. and Soviet nuclear missiles with a range of 300 miles to 3,400 miles, requires 67 votes for Senate approval. Estimates of Senate support for the measure range from 87 to 95 votes, so its ultimate outcome is not in question.

The Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces treaty, as it is known, would result in the elimination of 867 U.S. missiles in Europe, and elimination of 1,752 Soviet missiles.

But Helms and a few other conservatives have sought to delay the measure, raising questions about the validity of intelligence data on the numbers of some Soviet missiles and the crafting of the treaty language. They have offered a series of amendments since the treaty was brought up last week, all of which have been defeated by overwhelming margins.

"Both sides fouled up on this treaty," Helms said during Tuesday's debate.

But Byrd and Dole filed motions Tuesday to limit the debate, and a vote on that matter was scheduled for sometime Thursday. It was considered virtually certain to win the 60 votes needed to cut off debate, and that would set up a vote on final approval of the treaty for sometime Friday.

Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., a treaty supporter, said he believed opponents were not attacking the intermediate-range missile treaty but were instead trying to sow doubt about a future treaty cutting long-range missile arsenals.

Byrd said he was confident Democrats would still be able to bring up and debate the one amendment adopted during committee consideration of the treaty, one that would force the president to get Senate approval for any later change in interpretation of the treaty.

Swaggart's return signals new beginning

Jimmy Swaggart, the evangelist defrocked in April by the Assemblies of God church, returned to the pulpit Sunday at Metropolitan Christian Center in New Orleans, saying, "What's passed has passed."

For some, that may be true. But for others, it may take longer for this scandal to be put aside.

In returning to the pulpit after making a public admission of an encounter with a prostitute at a New Orleans hotel, Swaggart joins what has, at times, seemed like a growing list of evangelists and television ministry personalities who have admitted to affairs of various sorts, usually involving something of a sexual nature. A New Orleans prostitute, Debra Murphree, claims Swaggart paid her to pose nude for him at a motel.

On a Feb. 21st telecast, Swaggart tearfully confessed unspecified sins and on his return to the pulpit this weekend noted that, "I am sure there will be many ... that will see to it that I don't forget. I realize it will be the hardest task."

For Swaggart the road back will be a long and difficult one. To his credit — and to the credit of all the fallen ministers who have confessed their sins — they have taken the first important step on that road. Of course, the Christian faith teaches about human susceptibility to the sins of the flesh, the frailty of faith and of the importance of forgivance. No doubt all the ministers have been forgiven by many of those who followed them and believed their words of faith and nurture.

But forgivance isn't the only obstacle to be overcome. Next will be the test of faith. Swaggart and all the others have broken faith with their followers. Many of those people no doubt feel betrayed and regaining the trust of those flocks may take a bit longer than gaining their forgivance.

If so, that will mean fewer dollars will be rolling in to their ministries meaning they'll have to work harder to serve the needs of their following and, in that regard, perhaps this scandalous affair in the annals of religion will have a "silver lining" of sorts. Faith, after all, is more important than money.

But where the latter is concerned we hope all television ministries that seek funding from the public have learned a lesson or two from the antics of the Bakkers, Oral Roberts and Swaggart.

Non-family boards and financial audits made public would be two good places to start.

As for donors, may we slightly alter that old marketplace maxim — caveat emptor, "Let the buyer beware" — to "Let the giver beware"?

Statement criticized

I would first like to say that your article, "AIDS curriculum called unrealistic by health experts," has some good points. It is certainly true that some people will not abstain from sex and therefore we need to educate young people about safe sex. It should be taught because the spread of venereal diseases and especially AIDS is harmful to everyone, not just those who get it through sex.

However, it should be emphasized that these protection devices are never fool-proof. Abstinence is a real option. It is practical and practicable. What makes this article disturbing is its treatment of young people when it implies that they can not abstain. Chris Hall, a local AIDS expert, is quoted as saying, "They aren't going to abstain. They are at the mercy of their hormones." This is certainly atheistic and humanistic and reflects little respect for teens. He is putting young people on a level with animals that can't control their actions. Young people can control their desires and emotions. This doesn't mean that all will, but to say that none can is a sick reflection of society. Fortunately, it's not true. There are few ways to explain such an irresponsible statement.

Why no coverage?

On Saturday, May 14, the Jesse Owens Games were held at Midland Memorial Stadium with 590 children ages 7-14 competing in 42 events. This was made possible by Arco's money and the Midland Parks & Recreation Department. This was an important event for each one that participated and for each school they represented.

I noticed as I sat in the stands as a spectator that not one T.V. station camera was present and not one picture was taken by the Midland Reporter-Telegram to show the excitement in each of these winners as they had a medal placed around their necks. Our children become our youth and they seem to only receive publicity when they err.

Why not have your staff reporter check our school and church calendars for these important events and publicize them?

Student found future

Back in the summer of '86 I had just graduated from Midland High and I was wondering what my plans were. I decided, unknowingly, I would wait and see what happened. It just happened to be the summer to wait and see.

While in Waco watching the news I discovered my decision. The Abell-Hanger Foundation announced they would pay for a year or two at Midland College just for graduating. This year I understand that Abell-Hanger will pay everything but the books. It's still a great chance to get an education and Midland College is a great place to start. I majored in Radio and Television with Speech Communication as a minor and I'm currently employed with KCRS because of Midland College.

After two years and 57 credit hours later I know my future.

Did writer take 'tea'?

Regarding Mrs. J. Evetts Haley's unbiased account of life in South Africa published recently, she failed to tell us if she took tea with President Botha.

And, too, did she admire "the Emperor's New Clothes"? I think so.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, May 25, the 146th day of 1988. There are 220 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 25, 1787, the Constitutional Convention convened in Philadelphia after enough delegates had shown up for a quorum. In the months that followed, the delegates drew up the Constitution.

On this date:

In 1803, American essayist and poet Ralph Waldo Emerson was born in Boston.

In 1810, Argentina began its revolt against Spain.

In 1935, baseball great Babe Ruth hit the 714th and final home run of his career, for the Boston Braves, in a game against the Pittsburgh Pirates at Forbes Field.

In 1946, Transjordan (now Jordan) became a kingdom as it proclaimed its new monarch, King Abdullah Ibn Ul-Hussein.

In 1963, the Organization of African Unity was founded, in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

Report shows Soviets at their worst

WASHINGTON — When a Soviet sentry killed an American Army major three years ago in East Germany, the Soviets compounded the tragedy with a callous act of bullying. They kept the major's body for 24 hours and tried to intimidate Americans into allowing a Soviet autopsy against the wishes of the widow.

Jack Anderson

In a series of columns, we reported the previously confidential details of this tragedy. U.S. Maj. Arthur Nicholson was shot to death March 24, 1985, while performing his legal "observer" duties at a Soviet training area in Ludwigslust, East Germany. He had every right to be there as an observer under the terms of an agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union, but a Soviet sentry shot him without warning.

The incident serves as an indicator of how the Soviets respond when they are clearly in the wrong. The Army has released to us the investigative report on the incident, which includes many facts never revealed before — how the Soviets left Nicholson's body on the ground for eight hours, how they refused to let another American on the scene go to his aid, how they tried to blame Nicholson for his own death, how they tried to prove he was spying in restricted territory.

The record describes what amounts to a day in the life of Lt. Col. Lawrence G. Kelley, who was assigned to stay with Nicholson's body when the Soviets refused to turn it over to his American commander. Nicholson was shot at 3:45 p.m. About midnight, after holding Nicholson's driver at gunpoint and arguing with American officers, the Soviets released the driver, but took Nicholson's body to a Soviet medical examiner's lab in Potsdam.

Kelley's instructions were to stick with the body and not allow an autopsy. Mrs. Nicholson didn't want it, and the Americans were not willing to allow it. That infuriated the Soviet commandant on the scene in Potsdam, who had orders of his own from the highest-ranking Soviet officer in East Germany to expedite an autopsy.

The first deputy procurator of Soviet forces in East Germany, Col. V.P. Mel'nichuk, arrived on the scene in Potsdam and took over. He bullied Kelley for hours, trying to get him to allow an autopsy. Then Mel'nichuk tried the soft approach — food and drinks. With what Kelley described as "mellifluous tone and new found amicability," Mel'nichuk offered vodka and light banter. He "steered the conversation away from controversy and toward more general and innocuous themes, such as the places where he had been, sports he enjoyed and the like," Kelley wrote in his report to investigators. "He made two toasts during the lunch, one to good health and the other to a similarly innocuous ideal."

Mel'nichuk failed, and the Soviets didn't get their autopsy. About 5:10 p.m., more than a day after Nicholson was shot, the Americans were allowed to take his body. The transfer was made on a bridge into free Berlin. An American honor guard received the body and draped it with an American flag.

Kelley had kind words for some of the Soviet subordinates he met that day. But he was appalled at the tactics used by the highest Soviet military officers. "The unmitigated villain in my narrative is Col. Mel'nichuk," he said. "Abrasive, pompous, aggressive and, I believe, quite dangerous, this individual pressed for the completion of his investigation with single-minded scorn. He would brook no compromise, offer not succor, and tolerate no dissent.

Kelley continued, "He (Mel'nichuk) steadfastly refused to take 'no' for an answer... Devious in his workings, repeatedly threatening, and extremely intolerant of opposition, he is a man who cannot and should not ever be trusted.

"Ruthless, tempered only by the force of resistance, and unbelievably dogged in his stubbornness, Mel'nichuk turned an already tragic personal situation into a faceless, bureaucratic disaster."

REBELLION IN THE RANKS — The gradual withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan has had an electrifying effect on other Soviet satellites. Suddenly, opposition to Soviet domination is simmering throughout the communist bloc.

Central Intelligence Agency dispatches tell the story. In Poland, the strikes are spreading. In East Germany, young people have been filling the churches to protest communist oppression. Here and there across Eastern Europe, workers are turning in their party cards and students are speaking out against the system. There seems to be a ray of hope that if Afghanistan can expel the Soviets, maybe other satellites can shake loose, too.

But the bad news is that the Soviets have already taken steps to temper any rebellion. Apparently, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev fears that a satellite rebellion would compromise his shaky control of the Kremlin. He has personally contacted several Soviet-bloc leaders and warned them to squelch any signs of dissent.

MINI-EDITORIAL — It didn't take some folks in Chicago very long to forget the 200th birthday of the Constitution. When an art student hung up a portrait of the late Mayor Harold Washington wearing only ladies lingerie, several black aldermen got their shorts in a knot. They stormed the gallery and confiscated the painting. They called it an insult to Washington and an affront to all blacks. They may not know art, but they know what they don't like. They also don't know the law. In this country, artists can paint what they want.

What we need is less posturing on drugs

Drug-itics — the demogogic posturing of candidates to appear tough on the subject of drugs — has become a new national narcotic.

Chief trafficker in this demeaning business is Michael Dukakis, candidate for sheriff/president, who stoutly sloganizes that we "say no to Noriega." The impression he leaves is that it is a sign of weakness to trade a federal indictment of the Panamanian strongman for his removal from office.

William Safire

George Bush took a long look at the polls and let it be known that he disagreed with the Reagan administration on its policy to negotiate the removal of the drug-running ruler. He thus demonstrated that he is no longer merely the president's man. On this issue, he is now Governor Dukakis' man.

Nancy Reagan, we are told by eastwingers, has read the signs of the times and is joining Bush and Ed Meese in urging her husband to drop his "dealings" with the recalcitrant Panamanian lest plea-bargaining be seen as appeasement of a kingpin.

Democratic editorialists have applauded the posturing, as if the issuance of a written charge were somehow proof of puissant law enforcement. "Prosecutors across the nation," thunders The Miami Herald, "need a pat on the back, not a slap in the face."

On that theory, why doesn't a publicity-hip U.S. attorney impanel a grand jury to indict Moammar Gadhafi for terrorism, or the Ayatollah Khomeini for kidnapping, or Iraq's Saddam Hussein for poison-gassing thousands of innocent Kurds? We could all then strut about refusing to deal with those indictees, too, as if our impotent accusations were some manifestation of American power.

Does supertough Dukakis propose to send in troops to arrest the indicted drug dealer and bring him to justice in Miami? Of course not. The Democratic candidate wants the problem to fester throughout the fall campaign, while the Republican candidate will not allow himself to be "out-drugged."

Don't give up the indictment! shout the Democratic posturers. Hang the culprit! echoes the Republican, adding the twist of twisting him in the wind. If such a Draconian prescription for paralysis takes over U.S. policy, a drug dealer would remain in power in a nation at the crossroads of world commerce. Debilitated by the need to appear strong, we would embrace real weakness.

Where stands Ronald Reagan? At first, he made a grandiose statement of our purpose in negotiating the removal of Noriega — "to restore democracy in Panama," which is not the name of this game at all. As his vice president and first lady defected to the drugiticians, Reagan claimed that he has not been dealing with a drug dealer at all; that display of woolgathering recalls his long insistence that he never traded arms for hostages.

Of course we are dealing with a drug dealer, who happens to be the man we are trying to coerce. "The purpose of the foreign policy of the United States," as White House chief of staff Howard Baker stated it this weekend, "is to get Noreiga out of power and get him out of the country."

No, we will not have the satisfaction of marching him in chains down Pennsylvania Avenue. Instead, we will grit our teeth as he cops a plea. But the alternative is the drugtator's continuance in power, and a new facility in illegal narcotics operations. Dukakis would rather have the issue than the solution, which is why he denounces the "dealings" and in effect helps perpetuate the Noriega regime.

Where are the Democracts who are serious about the curbing of the flow of drugs, and who know that the removal from power of Noriega requires unpopular compromise? They stand smirking on the sidelines, tut-tutting about past payoffs, irresponsibly encouraging their candidate to engage in the kind of hypocrisy that precludes a profile in courage. If this is the sort of ends-defeating, holier-than-thou policy we can expect from Dukakis as president, we are indeed inviting the return of Jimmy Carter.

When all the mice got together to figure out a way to defend themselves against the cat, one hotshot mouse came up with a plan to tie a bell around the feline neck. Great idea! squeaked the multitude, until an old mouse asked: but which one of us will bell the cat?

Dukakis is not going to lead a detachment of Marines into the presidential palace to arrest the indicted man. Rule of law, OAS treaty, etc. Nor will the new Rambo-combo of Bush and Nancy Reagan.

That means "dealing" to achieve our primary purpose. That is strength in the real world, not phony toughness in the fantasyland of drug-itics.

Noriega believes in going for sweepstakes!

Hello, is this Elliot Abrams? This is the President. What have you worked out with Noriega?"

"We have it all wrapped up in a neat package, Mr. President."

"That's what you told me two months ago. Why hasn't he stepped down?"

"He's making a few demands — but none that we can't live with. For example, he says if he has to leave Panama he wants to be Attorney General of the United States."

Art Buchwald

"That's out of the question and you know it, Elliot. I'm sticking by Ed Meese. If I replace Ed with Noriega it will look as if Meese did something wrong. You tell him it's no deal."

"I will, but I know what he is going to say. He'll tell me that if he can't be Attorney General he wants to be chief of the Drug Enforcement Agency."

"No way, Elliot. The head of the DEA has to be an American citizen, hopefully with an unblemished record."

"I'm aware of that, but the trouble is Noriega thinks he is calling the shots because he knows we'll do practically anything to get him out of Panama. The last time I talked to him he told me that if he can't be director of the DEA he wants Lee Iacocca's job."

"Why does he want to do that?"

"He said he has a bad image in the United States and he thought he could improve it by doing television commercials for the Chrysler Corporation."

"I might consider that."

"There is more. He not only wants to head up Chrysler but he also wants a free pass to Space Mountain at Disney World."

"That's too much. As President of the United States I can't OK a free pass for Disney World. Congress will say I'm soft on cocaine smugglers. Tell Noriega if he doesn't step down in a week I will resort to stronger methods."

"That's what you said to tell him the last time we made our absolute final offer. Noriega told me to tell you that he is sitting tight unless we give him a Trident submarine."

"What does he want with a Trident submarine?"

"He said it is perfect transportation for cruising from Colombia to the Florida Keys. Mr. President, I think he's toying with us. I have a hunch he would accept a plain, everyday missile destroyer if we made a hard offer."

"Elliot, the Pentagon is not for sale. If we give Noriega a destroyer how do we know he won't come back the following week and demand 20 Stealth bombers? We must let him know we are a superpower and that we will not be subjected to blackmail by a tinhorn dictator."

"We could always offer him Jimmy Swaggart's evangelical TV program. Noriega can raise more money on the show than he can selling dope."

"Try it out on him. If he turns us down what do we do then?"

"We have intelligence, Mr. President, that Noriega told several cronies that he would like to be a guest on 'Wheel of Fortune.'"

"What for?"

"He is very excited about the prizes someone can win if they get lucky. What I suggest is that we telecast a 'Wheel of Fortune' show from Panama and have Vanna White rig it so Noriega will win an electric organ, a camper and a ceramic bulldog. But he has to pick them up in Guatemala."

"All right, Elliot. But that's our last offer. Tell Noriega that if he won't listen to reason I'm going to send Don Regan down there and have him write a 'kiss and tell' book about him."

Scientists battling 'killer bees' in Mexico

WASHINGTON — Belligerent bees and agricultural experts are battling it out in Mexico. A lot is riding on the outcome.

Since African bees escaped from quarantined hives in Brazil in 1957, Africanized bees known as "killer bees" — the result of breeding between the aggressive African bees and the far more numerous local honeybees — have been moving relentlessly northward, as much as 300 miles a year.

The African bees have genetically overwhelmed the more manageable European bees commonly used to pollinate crops and produce honey.

Hundreds of people and thousands of animals have been stung to death.

The fight against the Africanized bees is now centered north of Mexico's Isthmus of Tehuantepec, where defenders are using booby traps as their main weapon. The traps are made from cardboard boxes baited with synethetic pheromones. The chemical substances lure the bees to stop and cluster in the traps, which are mock hives. Once they settle in, they can be destroyed.

As many as 40,000 traps will be deployed in potential bee pathways in an area near the isthmus, which has been given the warlike acronym of BRZ — bee-regulated zone.

"Theoretically, they could turn the tide," says Orley "Chip" Taylor, a University of Kansas entomologist. "But it's rugged country down there, and many of the places where we need the traps are accessible only by mule or horseback."

With support from the National Geographic Society, Taylor has set up 180 colonies of European bees in various sectors of the zone and will study how Africanized bees hybridize with them.

"For the first time, we'll be able to analyze the genetic changes that take place when two genetically different populations of creatures come together," he says. "It's never been done before."

If Taylor and other researchers can figure out what makes the African bees so dominant, they may find ways to block or at least control them.

William F. Helms, deputy administrator of the Department of Agriculture's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, concedes that the baited hives are only a holding action. He thinks the bees will eventually move into the United States somewhere around Brownsville, Texas. They could arrive as early as 1989.

The threat comes at a bad time. Pesticides and dwindling open spaces have put American honeybees in short supply. Commercial beekeepers now sell pollination services, trucking hives from one flowering crop to the next.

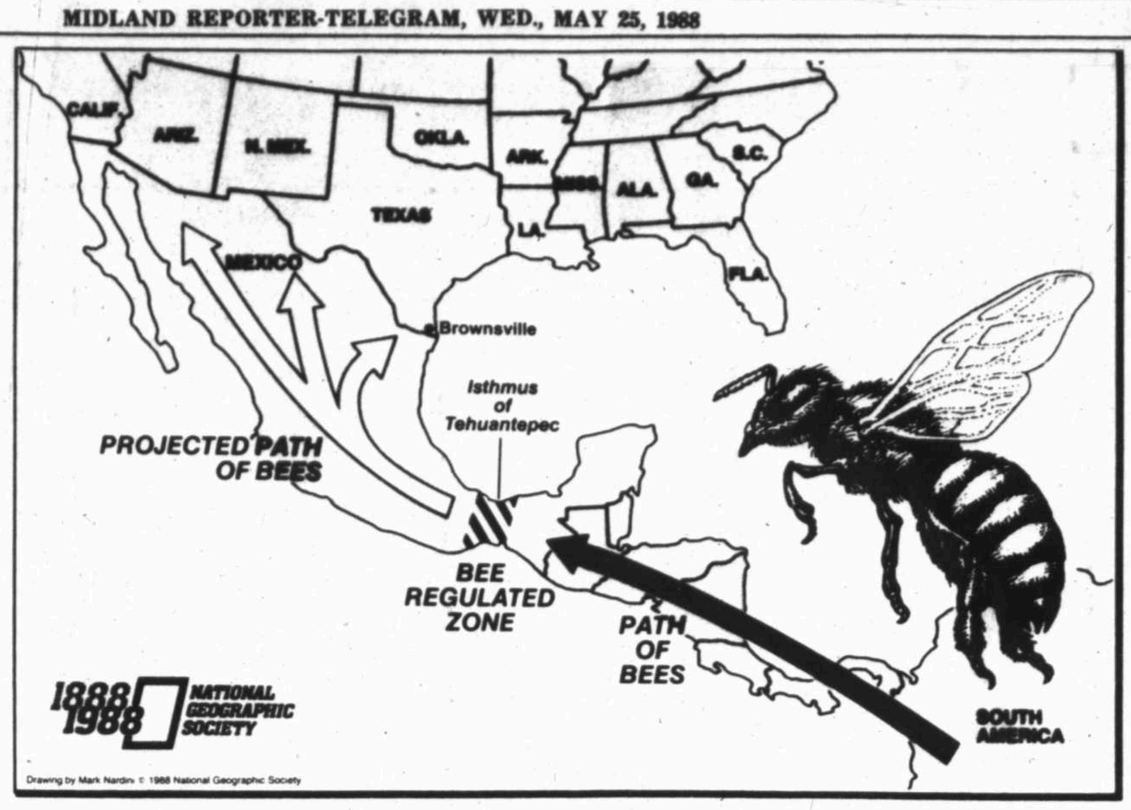

"We hope the scientists find the answers in Mexico, so future field studies won't be necessary in Arizona, Texas, California or Florida," says Helms.

Big money is involved. Bees annually pollinate crops valued at $19 billion and produce honey worth about $200 million. Alfalfa, one of the major crops pollinated, provides much of the feed for the livestock and dairy industries.

Besides being poor pollinators, Africanized bees feed most of the honey they produce to their own broods.

They apparently cannot tolerate harsh winters so it's unlikely they'll spread their genes to the cooler areas of the country. However, the warmer regions where they could prosper are home to most of the beebreeding industry, which provides pollination services and ships bees to the northern states and Canada every spring.

The threat is more than economic. Skittish and unpredictable, killer bees swarm to the attack when they feel threatened. Taylor describes their barbed stinger as "kind of like a double-sided harpoon."

The "killer bees" move relentlessly northward. Swarming into Mexico from Central America, the aggressive insects are advancing at a pace that could put them in Texas in 1989. Hoping to stop them, scientists have set thousands of baited cardboard traps north of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec.

FAA proposes strengthening Boeing 737s

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration is preparing a formal regulation that could require the metal skin of older Boeing 737s to be strengthened and reinforced, the agency's administrator, Allen McArtor, says.

The proposed regulation is expected to be formally announced within a week.

McArtor's comments on Tuesday came in the wake of last month's in-flight breakup of an Aloha Airlines Boeing 737. A flight attendant was swept to her death when a 20-foot section of the plane tore away. The pilots managed to bring the aircraft to a safe landing, but 61 people were injured.

The Aloha plane was 19 years old and had made nearly 89,000 landings.

FAA officials also reported on Tuesday that a special inspection of 96 older Boeing 737s, begun after that accident, found small cracks in one of every nine aircraft but none of a magnitude that they are cause for alarm.

Anthony Broderick, the FAA's associate administrator for aviation standards, said that of the 96 planes inspected under the order, 10 were found to have some cracks, the largest of which was one-fourth of an inch. He said none of the cracks should be considered "alarming."

Investigators believe that a 20-foot section of the forward cabin wall and roof tore away from the Aloha Boeing 737 during April 28 flight because of a structural failure stemming from cracking and corrosion.

Low donations may force PTL to go off air

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — PTL's new trustee has warned that the TV ministry built by Jim and Tammy Bakker will have to go off the air and close its Christian theme park next month if contributions keep dwindling.

After Tuesday's hearing in U.S. Bankruptcy Court, tearful PTL contributors urged the trustee to allow Bakker's appearance on cable television to solicit donations they said would save the ministry.

M.C. "Red" Benton, the trustee, said he wouldn't rule out allowing Bakker's limited return — "if it's the best and logical next step for the ministry."

PTL, with current debts of about $130 million and assets of $160 million, filed for reorganization and protection from creditors in bankruptcy court in June after Bakker's resignation in a sex and hush-money scandal.

"We're considerably short of money now, and we're going to have to have some money soon to operate. Contributions have about dried up," Benton said at the hearing.

In the last three weeks, contributions have dwindled from $60,000 a day to $22,000 a day, Benton said. It costs $27,000 a day just to pay the network affiliates, he said later.

Benton testified that the ministry may not be able to keep airing the "PTL Club" TV show, its primary method of seeking contributions. "The next step is to shut down, and that I'm prepared to do," he said.

Benton was appointed Friday to succeed former Christian Broadcasting Network executive David Clark, who said he resigned so he wouldn't have to preside over the ministry's liquidation.

A revised reorganization plan filed last week called for the trustee to liquidate PTL's assets in order to pay creditors.

Under the proposal, the 2,300-acre Heritage USA complex in Fort Mill would be sold and a separate, nonprofit corporation would lease the property required to operate the church and network television programs.

After the hearing, Paul Wood, a spokesman for a group of PTL's big-money contributors, said the donors represents had pledged $81 million to the ministry if Bakker is allowed on the PTL network "to ask for forgiveness."

Security prepares to prevent terrorism at Olympic games

WASHINGTON (AP) — North Korean terrorism poses an "extraordinary potential threat" to the 1988 Summer Olympics, but security forces are prepared to prevent outbreaks of violence that might mar the games, a high-ranking State Department official said.

Even if the Olympics weren't being held in Seoul, South Korea, there would still be worries about Sikh terrorism, Armenian terrorists, the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Irish Republican Army, the Japanese Red Army and the Italian Red Brigades, Undersecretary of State Edward J. Derwinski said in an interview Tuesday.

Derwinski, who has been representing the United States in international Olympic discussions, also said Fidel Castro's decision to keep Cuba out of the games reflects the Cuban leader's "screwed up" sense of priorities.

In the past few months — since accusations of North Korean complicity in the Nov. 29, 1987, bombing of a South Korean jetliner with 115 people aboard — security officials have expressed concern about North Korean efforts to disrupt the Olympics.

Asked about the threats of such North Korean terrorism, Derwinski said, "we're taking them with total seriousness, logically so."

There has been tight security at the Olympics since 1972 when PLO gunmen killed members of the Israeli team at the Munich games, but this time there is added worry because of "the extraordinary potential threat posed by the North Koreans," Derwinski said.

North Korea's realization that South Korean organizers are planning the games "in a very excellent fashion" has "increased the frustration and bitterness of the North Koreans," Derwinski added.

As for other possible terrorist threats, he said, "you have this increase in Sikh terrorism, the lashing out at almost any Indian; the Armenian terrorists periodically try attacks on Turks; the IRA and their activities; the PLO — going back to Munich — all of these are inherently out there: the Japanese Red Army, the Italian Red Brigades."

He said South Korea has been working on security since 1984 and should be able to handle the job when the games are held Sept. 17-Oct. 2.

"I see no probolem that I would attribute to indifference or complacency," he said. "The problem would be just how efficient the overall operation is, pitted against whatever actions a couple of terrorist groups might take."

Despite the concern about North Korean disruption efforts, Olympic organizers are keeping the door open to that country's participation in the games, even though the official deadline for signing up passed in January.

"Quite frankly, I think if the North Koreans announced the day before the games that they were sending down 500 athletes, they would come across the border unmolested," he said. "There's no real deadline."

Cuba, Vietnam, Nicaragua, Seychelles and Ethiopia have also failed to sign up for the games, although Derwinski said some Cuban participation cannot be ruled out.

Five arrested on smuggling pot charges

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Five relatives, including a man once accused of helping convicted spy Christopher Boyce rob banks, were arrested for trying to smuggle 45 tons of marijuana and hashish into the country, authorities said.

"The war on drugs is being fought on many fronts. This is one of the skirmishes. This is a battle we happen to have won," said Agent Tom Sheehan of the Drug Enforcement Administration.

At least 30 tons of hashish and 15 tons of marijuana were seized from welded compartments of a barge after it was boarded Monday night as it entered San Francisco Bay. The tug Intrepid Venture, which had the barge in tow, also was seized.

Authorities believe the Asian-grown drugs, with a wholesale value of $162 million, had been loaded off a "mother ship" 1,000 miles offshore. It took eight hours for agents to cut metal covers off the compartments to remove the contraband.

"This was a very sophisticated operation," said Rollin B. Klink, agent in charge for the Customs Service in San Francisco, who characterized the organization behind the operation as "huge."

He said "a piece of minor" information led to the bust, but would not elaborate.

"We knew about this boat before it was ever loaded," added Steve Giorgi, head of the Internal Revenue Service.

The tug's skipper, Calvin Robinson, 47, of Napa, and four relatives were charged Tuesday in federal court with large-scale drug smuggling and conspiracy, punishable by at least 10 years in prison without the possibility of parole and fines of up to $4 million.

According to court documents, Robinson was a prison compatriot of Boyce, who was convicted in 1977 of espionage for the Soviet Union. Robinson reportedly went on the lam with Boyce after his sensational Jan. 19, 1980, escape from the federal prison at Lompoc. Boyce, whose exploits were portrayed in the book and movie "The Falcon and the Snowman," was serving a 40-year sentence.

Savings stolen while woman kept drugged

ATLANTA (AP) — For almost four months, an elderly widow was kept "doped up" and barred from contact with the outside world by a couple authorities say bilked her out of more than $100,000 in savings.

One day, however, Lucille Knight managed to slip a note to relatives 500 miles away in Hammond, La., and a sheriff's deputy eventually rescued her from the Ringgold, Ga., house that was her prison.

Mrs. Knight went back to the Hammond trailer where she was kidnapped and waited for word that her tormenters had been caught. Now, almost two years later, a Georgia couple has been charged with federal fraud, kidnapping and conspiracy.

Terry Lee Barrett, 29, and Alice Virginia Barrett, 31, were indicted May 10 by a federal grand jury in Atlanta, U.S. Attorney Robert Barr said Tuesday. They were arrested Saturday in New Orleans, and are being held on $100,000 bond.

"They destroyed everything I had," the 83-year-old Mrs. Knight said Tuesday in a telephone interview from her Hammond home. "They kept me doped up most all the time I was there. I couldn't stand up; I couldn't walk; I couldn't do anything."

The widow's ordeal began Feb. 3, 1986, when a couple she barely knew came to her trailer park home in Hammond. She says she woke up three days later in Ringgold.

Mrs. Knight said she had met Mrs. Barrett only once, on a visit the previous Christmas to Ringgold, where Mrs. Barrett had cared for Mrs. Knight's brother, Everett Joiner, for several years.

Larry Black, then captain of detectives for the Catoosa County Sheriff's Department, said Tuesday that Mrs. Knight's neighbors remembered seeing her carried from her mobile home, but friends or relatives who would call to check on her were told she was sick, or at the doctor's.

Louisiana authorities apparently were reluctant to pursue the case, believing it was a domestic dispute rather than a kidnapping, Black said.

Mrs. Knight said that one day she finally managed to get her brother to mail a letter to her niece, Barbara Wittie, in Louisiana.

"He took it out to the end of the driveway, waited for the mailman, bought a stamp from him and got him to mail it," Mrs. Knight said.

The letter brought her niece to Black, who said he went to the house on June 5, found Mrs. Knight and "told her that her relatives were here and asked her if she was OK."

Eventually, he said, he took her to his patrol car because she was obviously in ill health and frightened. He later notified the FBI.

Black said he returned to the house a week later and the Barretts had left. He believes they traveled to St. Louis, Virginia and back to Louisiana.

The indictment claims the Barretts stole $101,875.72 in all, depositing the money in a Chattanooga, Tenn., bank in the name of Barrett Bakery and Barrett's Cajun Bakery and Deli.

It alleges they forged Mrs. Knight's signature on Social Security and retirement checks from California, and gained access to her savings accounts.

Trade bill backers expect uphill fight in Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate backers of a major trade bill are expecting an uphill battle to find enough votes to override President Reagan's veto, in striking contrast to the quick and overwhelming House vote to reverse the president's action.

"We have to have another three votes at this point and I don't know where they are going to come from," said Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, a chief sponsor of the 1,000-page trade measure.

The Senate is expected to take up the legislation after it returns from the Memorial Day recess.

Reagan's veto of the legislation on Tuesday came as no surprise. He has been critical in numerous speeches of a provision that would require companies to give employees 60 days notice of plant closings and large-scale layoffs. He has said that businesses need flexibility to survive hard times.

In his veto message to Congress, Reagan repeated that argument.

"I support voluntarily giving workers and communities as much advance warning as possible when a layoff or closing becomes necessary...It is the humane thing to do.

"But I object to the idea that the federal government would arbitrarily mandate, for all conditions and under all circumstances, exactly when and in what form that notification should take place."

The president urged lawmakers to submit a revised version trade bill that he could sign in good conscience.

Within hours of Reagan's veto, the House voted, 308-113, to override it. That was far more than needed to be successful.

Sixty Republicans broke with Reagan to vote for the override, while only one Democrat, Robert J. Mrazek of New York, supported the president.

The plant-closings measure is among scores of provisions contained in the bill. The main ones would overhaul the U.S. system of import restrictions. Others range from repealing the windfall profits tax to adding billions of dollars in agricultural subsidies.

Democratic leaders have argued that patching together a stripped down trade bill might be tough before Congress leaves town for the campaign trail.

Uncertain of override prospects in the Senate, many Democrats focused on making the debate a campaign issue.

"I happen to think it's a better issue for Democrats than for Republicans," House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said.

Michael Dukakis, the front-runner in the battle for the Democratic presidential nomination, called the president's action "unconscionable."

He said that Reagan and Vice President George Bush "don't understand that for working families who struggle to pay the mortgage, save for their children's education and care for their elders, there is nothing more painful than losing a job."

He contrasted the veto to a tentative deal under which drug charges against Antonio Manuel Noriega, the Panamanian leader, would be dropped if he agreed to relinquish power and leave Panama by August.

"Any administration that is willing to give General Noriega 120 days notice and a plea bargain ought to be willing to give the American worker 60 days notice before they are thrown out on the street," Dukakis said.

Reagan said that he vetoed the measure "with sincere regret," but said in his message that returning the measure to Congress was necessary.

"I am convinced this bill will cost jobs and damage our economic growth," the president said.

He said that the American economy has created 16 million jobs during his administration and that the unemployment rate is at its lowest point in 14 years.

He also said that the measure would "push us in the direction of protectionism. Closing our borders is not the solution to opening foreign markets," Reagan said.

Administration supporters rallied to Reagan's support following the veto.

Rep. William Frenzel, R-Minn., scoffed at the image of "unfeeling and mean-spirited owners of large and small American businesses putting upon weak and defenseless workers who are about to be thrown out on the street...unless big government puts its firm and fatherly hand" on the situation.

"As usual, this House believes that big government knows more than we in private life," Frenzel said. "This debate paints a depressing view of America and it is inaccurate."

But the veto also unleashed a torrent of criticism on the House floor.

"The Japanese are laughing now that you have vetoed this trade bill," said Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y.

"For seven years, the Reagan administration has just said no to American workers," Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., said.

Juror questioning in Mecham trial may end today

Mecham

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — With Evan Mecham looking on as a "stoic observer," lawyers picked some potential jurors who showed sympathy for the embattled former governor, as jury selection for his criminal trial neared completion.

Sixteen prospective members were chosen Tuesday for the eventual panel of eight jurors and four alternates for Mecham's trial on charges of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan.

The questioning could be completed today. Maricopa County Superior Court Judge Michael Ryan said Tuesday he probably would stop when 24 acceptable panelists are found. Peremptory eliminations by the prosecution and defense then would be the last step in choosing the jury.

Mecham and his co-defendant and brother, Willard, watched intently as the judge, prosecution and defense asked individual potential jurors whether they could be fair. The former governor occasionally took notes, and told reporters he was "just a stoic observer."

Nineteen possible jurors were questioned Tuesday, and two were excused — one for saying he was biased, and another for saying he was uncertain whether he could vote to convict the defendants even if he believed they were guilty.

Another panelist's status was taken under advisement because she said she may have signed a Mecham recall petition and because of a conflict with travel plans.

One prospective juror who was accepted said she felt "sympathy" for Mecham, while others said they did not believe he should have faced recall from the governorship so soon after he took office in January 1987.

Another prospective panelist said Mecham "has had a very big mouth through this whole thing...(and) got himself into a lot of trouble because of the way he was so hard-headed." Prosecutors unsuccessfully sought to exclude her.

One man said Mecham seemed to make "goofs, mistakes, errors, bad judgment, that has nothing to do with his integrity."

Another panelist said, "I know that what he did wasn't right," but added that Mecham may have a reasonable explanation.

All the prospective jurors, however, said believed they could be fair in the trial.

Mecham faces six felony counts of perjury, willful concealment and filing false documents, and faces up to 22 years in prison if convicted on all counts. His brother faces three similar counts and up to 9½ years if convicted of all three.

The former Republican governor and his brother have denied all wrongdoing in failing to report the loan from a Tempe developer.

Opening statements are scheduled for June 2, the day after the Arizona Supreme Court is to hear arguments on the defense's request that the charges be returned to the state grand jury for a new determination of probable cause.

The original pool of 99 possible jurors was narrowed to 51 on Monday after lawyers and Ryan examined questionnaires filled out last week.

Mecham was removed from office April 4 when the state Senate convicted him on two impeachment counts of misusing a protocol fund and of obstructing justice. He was impeached in connection with the $350,000 loan, but the Senate decided not to hear the charge for fear of prejudicing the criminal trial.

Meese finally fills two long-vacant justice department posts

Meese

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. attorney picked by Attorney General Edwin Meese III for a top Justice Department post said today he accepted the position without hesitation despite ongoing criminal investigations of the attorney general.

Edward S.G. Dennis Jr., the U.S. attorney in Philadelphia, said he did not talk to Meese about an independent counsel's investigation of the attorney general when he was tapped for the job.

"No, we did not discuss that at all," Dennis said on CBS-TV's "This Morning" program. "I feel that the process with regard to the independent counsel is going forward and that will resolve itself. And in any case, the criminal division still has a mission which, hopefully, I can help fill."

Dennis said he accepted the post as assistant attorney general in charge of the criminal division "without any hesitation." Asked if he could complete his agenda despite Meese's legal problems, Dennis said, "I'm certainly going to do the best that I can."

Before Dennis was picked, aides to the attorney general approached a former U.S. attorney and three current U.S. attorneys in an attempt to find a nominee. All four men rejected the overtures.

Dennis, if confirmed by the Senate, would be the only ranking black official at the Justice Department.

President Reagan announced Tuesday his intention to nominate Dennis, and to nominate Harold G. Christensen, a Salt Lake City, Utah, attorney, to become deputy attorney general.

Meese said that the two will fill the jobs on an acting basis until the Senate confirmation process is complete.

They would replace Deputy Attorney General Arnold Burns and criminal division chief William Weld, who both quit out of concern that Meese's continued tenure was hurting the Justice Department's operations, morale and public image.

A year-old criminal investigation of Meese's financial affairs by independent counsel James McKay has focused on Meese's involvement with scandal-plagued Wedtech Corp. and an Iraqi oil pipeline project. McKay's office is preparing a report that is expected to raise questions about the attorney general's ethical behavior.

Christensen was Meese's third choice for the job after one candidate rejected an offer and another withdrew his name from consideration.

Dennis said he had not spoken with his predecessor, Weld, about his reasons for leaving. He said "if there's a morale problem" in the criminal division, he plans to "try to do my part" to overcome it.

Dennis said Tuesday he had no reason to suspect the attorney general's ethics and added that in his dealings with Meese "he's always been above board."

Angels' Corbett gets call to bigs

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Ah, Max. What a kidder.

Such were the thoughts running through Sherm Corbett's mind when Midland Angels manager Max Oliveras told the left-handed relief pitcher that he was being promoted to the major leagues.

"Max had been kidding around with me the whole game," Corbett said. "He was saying he was setting me up with some date tonight and I couldn't get out of it.

"Then before the game, the Arkansas manager (Jim Riggleman) said something to me about going up to the big leagues and I didn't know what he meant."

He knows now what they were all talking about.

Sherm Corbett

WHILE OLIVERAS may be known for his tongue-in-cheek comments, the Angel skipper was dead serious in this case. Corbett left Midland early this morning to join the California Angels for tonight's game with the New York Yankees. Midland had not received word about a possible replacement for Corbett on the roster at press time.

Corbett compiled a 3-2 record and 3.40 earned run average in 18 games for Midland. The former Texas A&M standout had walked only 11 and struck out 40 in 47⅔ innings for Midland. Oddly enough, Corbett led the team in strikeouts and was third in innings pitched despite pitching exclusively in relief this season.

Corbett was a member of the Midland starting rotation in 1986, but was swtiched to the bullpen at Edmonton and struggled through a 6-6, 5.37 season for the Trappers.

He started spring training this year on the Edmonton roster, but was demoted to Midland late this spring. Then, he struggled early for the M-Angels, giving up five home runs in his first eight appearances.

CORBETT HAD a 5.13 ERA going into May, but after several strong outings early this month, he was noted in a recent issue of The Sporting News as a possible addition to the California roster because of his success as a left-handed reliever, something the big Angels had been doing without this season. He was cognizant of his mention in the national publication, but wasn't sure if anything would come of it.

"I was kind of glad to see it," he said. "I thought that meant they (the Angels' brass) were happy with what I was doing."

The big club only had one lefty pitcher on its roster — starter Chuck Finley — before promoting Corbett.

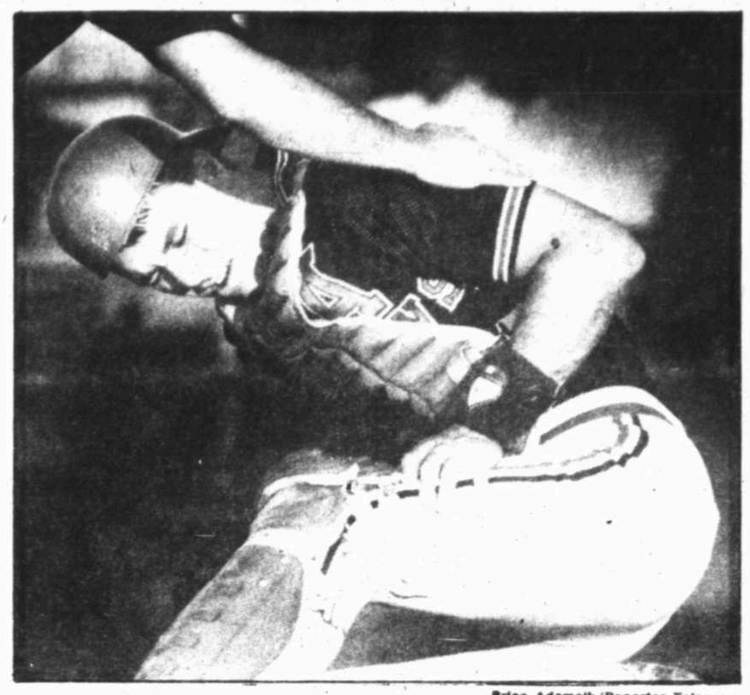

Corbett allowed only three earned runs in his last 21 innings for Midland.

While Oliveras will understandably miss Corbett on his relief corps, the Midland skipper realizes the facts of life in the high minor leagues.

"I think (Corbett's promotion) is my reward," Oliveras said. "I was asked in spring training if I wanted to bring him here and I said heck yes.

"He had the home run syndrome early, but we had a lot of faith in him."

Corbett signed out of A&M in 1984 and posted a 25-28 record as a starter in his first three pro years before moving to the bullpen last season. he is expecting to be used in relief by California.

Midland black belt to officiate in Seoul

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Most people remember hearing about Johnny Appleseed, the 19th century folk hero who spread the growth of apple trees throughout the Midwest.

Midland has its own version of Johnny Appleseed in Tae Kwon Do grand master Yoo Sun Lee. Only thing is, Lee doesn't drop apple seeds on the ground — he spreads the relatively new martial arts sport of Tae Kwon Do.

Lee, who has introduced Tae Kwon Do to both Europe and the United States, is in line to officiate at the Tae Kwon Do demonstration in the Summer Olympics from Sept. 17 to Sept. 20 in his home country of South Korea. If the International Olympic Committee is sufficiently impressed, Tae Kwon Do may become a medal sport in the 1992 Games in Barcelona, Spain.

Lee attended a seminar at the World Tae Kwon Do Federation headquarters in Seoul last month and emerged as one of the leading candidates for an Olympic officiating position — just what one would expect from one of the sport's true pioneers.

THE NATIVE Korean first learned about Chung Do Kwan — an ancestor of Tae Kwon Do — in 1958. He rose quickly through the ranks to become a first-degree black belt in 1960 before serving as a martial arts instructor in the Korean Army from 1961 to 1963.

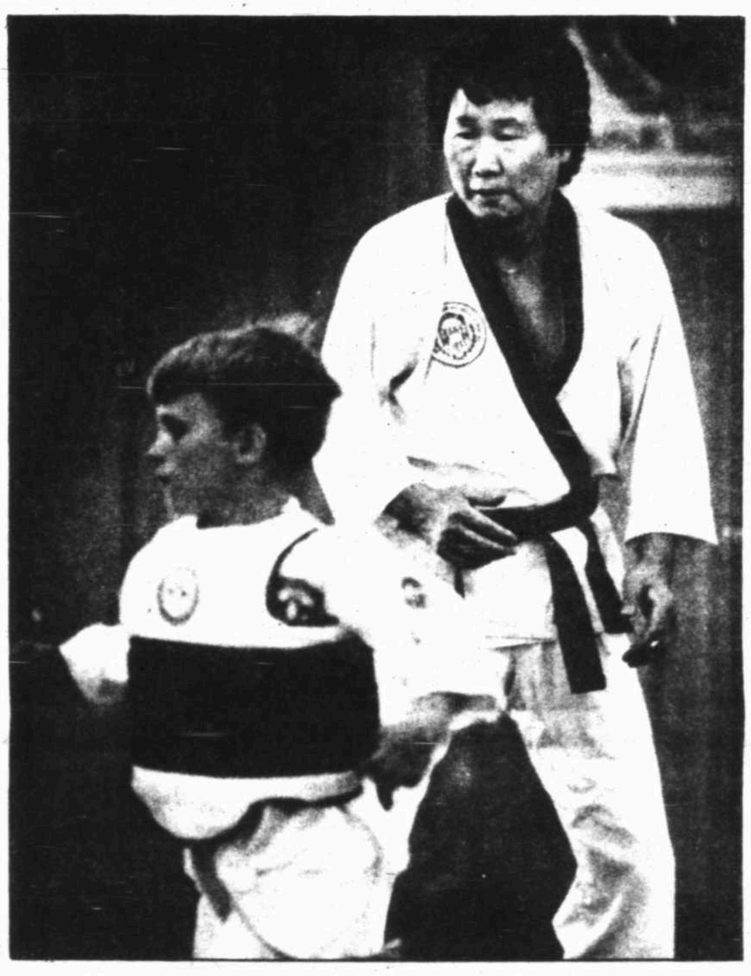

Then came his years as a figuratively-speaking Johnny Appleseed of Tae Kwon Do — a sport conceived by a South Korean general in the mid 1950's as an amalgamation of several ancient martial arts.

Tae Kwon Do differs from the Japanese art of karate in that the Koreans stressed greater use of the feet in both sparring (one-on-one) and forms (individual) exercises. It began as a self-defense exercise used by South Korean military troops, but soon evolved into a sport by the 1970s.

Lee introduced Tae Kwon Do to Hong Kong in 1964, to the Netherlands in 1966, to Paris in 1970, and to Chicago in 1975. He moved to Midland in 1976 and opened the Lee Tae Kwon Do Association that serves the Permian Basin area. He oversees about 125 students in Midland, Big Spring and Stanton.

LEE IS one of 78 people in the world who hold an eighth-degree black belt. Sam Manning, an Tae Kwon Do instructor at both Lee High School and Master Lee's school, said his mentor's stature in the martial arts world ensures the prestige of their successful students.

Ward, McCollom key Halo's 6-4 win

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

While the Midland Angels aren't making much headway in the Texas League's Western Division race, a couple of individual Angels are tearing up the league.

Midland reliever Colby Ward picked up his league-leading eighth win with 4⅓ innings of three-hit relief in the Angels' 6-4 win over the Arkansas Travelers at Angel Stadium Tuesday, while league-leading hitter Jim McCollom collected the game-winning hit with a first-inning single.

Ward broke a tie with El Paso's Jeff Peterek with another in a series of outstanding relief performances, while McCollom went two-for-four Tuesday to pull ahead of El Paso's Mario Monico, .369 to .365, in the league batting race.

The Angels won only two of five games from Arkansas, but hope for a respite by facing the Eastern Division doormat Jackson Mets for five games beginning tonight.

Midland batters teed off on Arkansas starter Alan Sontag for most of the first four innings, scoring one run each in the first and third innings before coming together for three in the fourth.

THOSE FOURTH-INNING runs proved to be crucial, because Arkansas rallied for four tallies in the top of the fifth.

The Angels got off on the right foot in the bottom of the first when Jim Thomas walked, stole second, reached third on a balk, and scored on McCollom's single.

McCollom struck again in the third when he tripled to right-center field and scored on a passed ball. The former Clemson University star hammered Trav pitching at a 10-for-14 clip in four games to raise his average 30 points since sitting out more than a week with a groin injury. He said the time off may have been a blessing in disguise.

"Sometimes it's good to get away for a week," he said. "I was fortunate enough to be able to come back and have a good series."

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Midland Cub Billy Hatcher, now with the Houston Astros, hit .536 and scored six times last week to be named the National League's Player of the Week and shortstop Kurt Stilwell of Kansas City won American League honors.

Hatcher's spree included going 11-for-15, a .733 average, in the weekend series with St. Louis. Two of his three runs batted in during the week were game-winners as the Astros won five of six to take over first place in the National League West.

MC golfers receive national invitation

From Staff Reports

Midland College has received an at-large invitation to participate in the 1988 National Junior College Athletic Association men's golf tournament, which will be held June 7-10 at Scottsdale, Arizona. The Chaps finished third by a single stroke in the Region V men's golf tournament, hosted at Midland's Greentree Country Club. Only the top two teams from each regional tourney get automatic berths in the NJCAA tournament. Midland College, however, was invited to fill an at-large spot in the 72-hole event on the basis of their final tenth place ranking among the nation's junior college teams.

The tournament will be played on two courses: McCormick Ranch and Pam Golf Course and provides the Western Junior College Athletic Conference with three teams in this year's event. Odessa College won the Region V title and New Mexico Junior College finished one stroke ahead of the Chaps. NMJC had been ranked third and Odessa seventh going into the Region V tourney, but OC upset the Thunderbirds for the regional title after finishing second to NMJC in the conference standings. Midland was third in the conference standings.

"I'm delighted for our players, who worked so hard this year," said Delnor Poss, MC athletic director and golf coach. "They came within a single stroke of qualifying for the tournament and their record for the year justified their selection for one of the at-large spots. Now we just want to go out to Arizona next month and prove we belong there with the rest of the teams."

The Chaps won't be practicing together until they get to Scottsdale, two days prior to the tournament, since they scattered two weeks ago when classes ended. However, they had been hoping to hear from Poss that they'd still get a shot at the national title. Three All-Region selections will be playing for the Chaps. Marty Scoles, a freshman from Burnaby, British Columbia, Canada, was conference medalist and All-Region. Also named All-Region were Steve Alexander, a sophomore from San Angelo, and Rob Anderson, a sophomore from Kelowna, BC, Canada. Also on the team will be sophomore Arnie Burttschell of Stephenville, sophomore Gordon McGarva of Kelowna, and Joey Allen, a freshman from San Angelo. Allen will be an alternate on the team.

TYLER — Straight set victories moved the Midland College men's tennis team into the second round of the National Junior College Athletic Association's national tournament here Tuesday. The wins kept the Chaparrals in position to challenge for the national title, which will be awarded Saturday.

Midland is tied with six other teams after the first day of action. Other teams without a loss include North Greenville, S.C.; Anderson, S.C.; host Tyler; Alvin, Tex.; Palm Beach, Fla.; and Abraham Baldwin Agricultural College, Ga.

The Chaps are seeking their second national title and would like to match last week's national championship by the MC women's team.

"THIS WILL be a tough day for some of the teams, but our matches don't appear to be big problems unless we fail to concentrate," said MC coach Joe Williams.

There is, however, a physical problem for the Chaps' number one player, Johan Dysholm, who severely cut his big toe Monday night. Despite the injury, he won his first round match easily, but the soreness and pain may be a factor today and through the rest of the tourney.

Dysholm whipped Brian Blednick of Hudson Valley, N.Y., 6-0, 6-1, after an initial bye. Dysholm next faces Ian McKinley of Vincennes University, (Ind.), today.

No. 2 player Gilles Ameline also had a bye followed with a 6-2, 6-2 win over Larry Paley of Hudson Valley. He faces Carl Whitehouse of Brunswick, Ga., today.

AMINE BOUSTANI, No. 3, had a 6-1, 6-0 victory over Bill Adams of W. R. Harper College, (Ill.), and faces Bill Yuro of Brookdale, N.Y., today.

BOSTON — This has been the year of the playoff jinx for the National Hockey League, and the league's image grew still darker Tuesday night.

A power failure in Boston Garden caused a blackout late in the second period that forced officials to suspend the fourth game of the Stanley Cup championship series between the Boston Bruins and the Edmonton Oilers.

The suspension occurred just after the Oilers had tied the game at 3-3 in their quest to sweep the series in four games.

After a flurry of negotiations between league officials and the owners and general managers from both clubs, it was agreed that the game would not be resumed and would be replayed from the beginning only if the series becomes deadlocked at 3-3 to force a seventh and deciding game.

The series, with Edmonton in front by the same three games to none margin it carried into tonight's game, resumes Thursday night in Edmonton.

LA looks to avoid cliffhanger against Dallas

By JOHN FREEMAN
Copley News Service

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Beauty being in the eye of the beholder, Derek Harper had to squint some to see anything positive in Monday night's (May 23) 113-98 loss by his Dallas Mavericks to the Los Angeles Lakers.

But he did find something, however slight, to inspire him after the opener of the NBA Western Conference finals.

"They didn't exactly terrorize us out there," said Harper, whose Mavs succumbed easily to the Lakers, the same fate suffered by the Utah Jazz in its opener against L.A.

And you know what happened in that one; the Lakers had to fight for their lives in the remaining six games. Based on Monday night's Lakers breeze, this series could be over much more quickly.

But, according to Harper's logic, losing by 15 is a mark of progress. Four years ago, when the Lakers and Mavericks met in a second-round series, the Lakers "beat us by 40-something," said Harper.

This time, the difference between the two teams wasn't even 20-something. That's supposed to be progress? Yes.

"I remember I was thinking sweep then," said Harper, "but they didn't do it (winning four games to two). I'm not thinking sweep now, either."

LAKERS COACH Pat Riley, whose daring "guarantee" of a repeat NBA championship was threatened by the Jazz, now regards complacency as the enemy within.

"Our objective the next couple of days is to be disciplined, not get full of ourselves," said Riley. "That happened to us against Utah. It's important that we make sure we take care of business out there."

The series resumes Wednesday night at The Forum before moving to Dallas for two games, Friday night and Sunday afternoon. If necessary, the series will resume at Inglewood a week from Tuesday.

Third time not a charm for Padres

Associated Press

Three times San Diego led the Montreal Expos in extra innings. And three times the Padres couldn't get the final three outs.

Finally, three consecutive singles in the 13th inning gave Montreal a 7-6 victory in a four-hour, 16-minute marathon that saw San Diego use seven of its 10 pitchers. Three of them blew leads in extra innings and a fourth, Lance McCullers, blew a lead in the ninth.

"This is the way we played last year, coming back no matter how close our backs were to the wall," Tim Raines said. "That's the way we have to play. I think we got more clutch hits after the ninth inning than we've gotten all year."

The Expos, losers of nine of their previous 13 games and 11½ games behind the New York Mets at the start of the night, trailed by a run when they came up in the ninth. And the 11th. And the 12th.

"A win like this is a real character builder," Expos manager Buck Rodgers said.

"What can I say? We had our chances to nail it down and we didn't," Padres manager Larry Bowa said.

In the 13th, Marvell Wynne hit a two-run homer to give San Diego a 6-4 lead.

Nelson Santovenia doubled off Mark Grant with one out in the bottom of the 13th to start the final rally and Luis Rivera singled him to third.

Candy Sierra, 0-1, the seventh Padres pitcher, relieved and struck out Jeff Reed before allowing singles to Raines, Mitch Webster and Hubie Brooks.

"Their big mistake was not coming up with their usual one-run lead," joked Webster. "They came up with two and that messed them right up."

"I was just trying to find a hole," Brooks said of his game-winning hit. "I just wanted to get it over with."

Andy McGaffigan, 2-0, the fifth Montreal pitcher, pitched two innings and gained the victory. The Expos had 20 hits, matching the National League's season high.

Pirates 5, Astros 4

Sid Bream hit a sacrifice fly in the bottom of the ninth inning after Bobby Bonilla tied the game with an RBI single as Pittsburgh overcame two Alan Ashby homers.

Ashby's solo homer in the top of the ninth off reliever Jim Gott, 2-1, gave Houston a 4-3 lead.

"This is a big win for us because we haven't had much success against this team," Bonilla said after the Pirates beat Houston for the first time in five games.

Giants 4, Mets 2

Mike Krukow, 4-2, improved his career record against New York to 19-7 and Will Clark homered, tripled and made a key defensive play as San Francisco ended the Mets' seven-game winning streak.

Atlee Hammaker finished for his fifth save as the Giants won their fourth straight this season against the Mets.

Braves 3, Cubs 0
Cubs 2, Braves 1

Atlanta won in Russ Nixon's first game as the Braves manager, but reverted to its losing ways in the second game.

"That's the roughest day I've put in here in all the years I've come to this park," Nixon said. "It was a great day. Winning the first game was a confidence builder for everybody."

Ken Oberkfell's RBI double off starter Jamie Moyer, 2-5, broke a scoreless tie in the 10th inning. Bruce Benedict followed with a run-scoring double and and Albert Hall singled off reliever Mike Capel to score Benedict.

Pete Smith pitched seven shutout innings and allowed seven hits. Paul Assenmacher, Jose Alvarez and Bruce Sutter combined to complete the shutout.

Chicago won the second game 2-1 on Damon Berryhill's sixth-inning single off Charlie Puleo, 0-1.

The games were played with 31 mph winds blowing in from left and center fields, making it easy for the pitchers.

Dodgers 2, Phillies 1

Mike Davis singled off Greg Harris, 0-1, to score Rick Dempsey in the 12th inning as the Dodgers broke a three-game losing streak.

Philadelphia almost retied it in the bottom of the 12th. Milt Thompson doubled off Alejandro Pena, 2-1, Jesse Orosco relieved and Steve Jeltz sacrificed.

Cardinals 3, Reds 2

John Franco walked Jose Oquendo with the bases loaded in the 11th inning to force home the winning run.

Brewers stop Tigers win streak

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Put Tom Filer in an American League uniform, even after a long absence, and opposing hitters are in trouble.

The 31-year-old right-hander, making his first major-league appearance in three years, checked Detroit on five hits as the Milwaukee Brewers snapped the Tigers' five-game winning streak with a 7-0 victory Tuesday night.

"This is the most gratifying win of my career," said Filer, whose last major-league victory was Aug. 23, 1985, for Toronto against the Chicago White Sox. "The first win of your career is always big, but I think this win means more to me."

Tuesday night's victory raised Filer's American League record to 8-0. He was 7-0 with Toronto in '85 and 1-2 with the Chicago Cubs in 1982.

Other noteworthy pitching performances were turned in by Cleveland's Greg Swindell, New York's Al Leiter, Oakland's Steve Ontiveros and Minnesota's Charlie Lea.

Filer, recalled from Denver of the Class AAA American Association on Monday, walked three and struck out three. Filer last pitched in the majors on Sept. 25, 1985, before elbow trouble caused him to miss the entire 1986 season.

Blue Jays 13, Rangers 2

John Cerutti allowed four hits over six innings and Kelly Gruber and Pat Borders had two hits each in a nine-run ninth inning. The only run off Cerutti was Steve Buechele's solo homer in the fifth.

Gruber and Borders had RBI singles in the first and fourth innings off Ray Hayward, who lasted until the ninth when Gruber's single and Fred McGriff's RBI double gave the Blue Jays a 5-2 lead.

They continued their assault against Jose Cecena, Mitch Williams and Tony Fossas. The inning included Borders' RBI double, RBI singles by Nelson Liriano and Tony Fernandez, Gruber's three-run double and an RBI single by Borders.

AL Roundup

Indians 4, White Sox 3

Swindell, 9-1, struck out eight and did not yield an earned run until Fred Manrique's two-run triple in the eighth inning. Doug Jones came on for his ninth save after pinch hitter Harold Baines singled with one out in the ninth. It was the Indians' 11th victory in their last 14 games while the White Sox lost for the eighth time in nine games.

Yankees 5, Angels 3

Rookie Leiter, who failed to reach the third inning in his previous two starts, walked six, struck out eight and got home run support from Don Mattingly and Jack Clark, who hit consecutive homers off Kirk McCaskill in the fifth.

Leiter held the Angels hitless until a single by Wally Joyner with two out in the sixth inning. Ironically, Joyner entered the game in the top of the sixth as a replacement for Johnny Ray, who was hit on the elbow by a pitch.

Athletics 6, Orioles 0

Carney Lansford raised his average to .400 with three hits, including a two-run single, and Ontiveros and Greg Cadaret combined on a four-hitter. Lansford, the leading hitter in the majors, went 3-for-4 as the A's snapped a three-game losing streak. Baltimore had won three straight.

Twins 6, Royals 5

Steve Lombardozzi singled home the go-ahead run in the fifth inning and Minnesota achieved its first four-game road winning streak since July 1985. Lea allowed four runs and eight hits in five innings and needed help from three relievers, including Jeff Reardon, who pitched the final 1 1-3 innings for his ninth save.

Mariners 14, Red Sox 1

Mickey Brantley, Harold Reynolds, Glenn Wilson and Ken Phelps homered and Seattle scored six runs in an inning for the second consecutive game.

ANGELS

McCollom wasn't totally incapacitated during the Angels' recent eastern trip and he said the work he was able to get in helped.

"I couldn't run, but I was able to take batting practice on the road," he said. "That kept my swing intact."

The Angels really got to Sontag in the fourth on doubles by Dan Grunhard and Mike Knapp and singles by Craig Gerber and Jim Thomas, but all they could manage off three Trav relievers was a single run in the seventh.

That was enough for Ward, though. The righthanded relief ace lowered his earned run average to 2.25 by retiring 14 of 18 batters faced after getting out of a sticky situation in the fourth.

Midland third baseman Jeff Manto made it tough for Angel starter Shane Young by misplaying two consecutive bouncers with one out in the fourth. Arkansas' Todd Zeile then blasted a two-run single to force Young's departure in favor of Ward.

So much for the rally.

Ward struck out Mike Robertson and induced Mauricio Nunez to ground out to end the threat.

The only time Ward was threatened thereafter was when Jesue Mendez doubled and Bien Figueroa singled him to third in the eighth. Pinch-hitter Mike Hocutt flied to center to end the inning, however.

Ward was surprised Manager Max Oliveras left him in to pitch to the lefthanded hitting Hocutt.

"I thought they'd bring in Sherm (Corbett)," Ward said. "It was the longest I'd thrown this year and the lefthander came up.

"But Max asked if I thought I could get them and left me in."

Despite his propensity for winning this season, Ward said he's not shooting for number goals.

"My goal is to get to the big leagues."

Oliveras said Ward normally would been yanked in favor of Corbett. But Corbett was held out because he had just been promoted to the major leagues, and anyway, Oliveras has plenty of confidence in Ward's ability to face all batters.

"His forkball was really working for him tonight," the skipper said.

Steve McGuire, 1-5, starts on the mound for Midland tonight. Mickey Weston, 0-2, will go for Jackson in the 7 p.m. game.

West Germany's Boris Becker has some problems with a nasty backhand during Tuesday play at the French Open.

Mandlikova eliminated

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press

PARIS — Bettina Fulco of Argentina knocked out eighth-seeded Hana Mandlikova and Maria Strandlund of Sweden upset No. 12 Raffaela Reggi today as second-round play began in the French Open.

The upset wave did not reach top-seeded Steffi Graf of West Germany and men's No. 3 seed Mats Wilander of Sweden, who were among favorites who romped to easy victories.

Graf cruised past Ronnie Reis of the United States 6-1, 6-0;, Wilander beat Francisco Yunis of Argentina 6-2, 6-3, 6-1; women's fourth seed Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina defeated Karen Schimper of South Africa 6-3, 6-0; No. 5 Manuela Maleeva of Bulgaria whipped Linda Ferrando of Italy 6-0, 6-2; and No. 7 Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany beat Federica Bonsignori of Italy 6-4, 6-0.

On a day when eight seeded men's players and all 14 surviving wom en's seeds were in action in second-round matches, the 19-year-old Fulco took advantage of ragged play by Mandlikova to win 6-3, 6-4.

Mandlikova, a Czechoslovakian-born Australian, said she was having trouble regaining her form and concentration after being sidelined for 2½ months with a hamstring injury.

She was up 4-2 in the first set, and leading 40-15 on serve when a backhand passing shot by Fulco that she thought was over the end line was ruled good.

"After that, she played very well. She played to win the match,' ' said Mandlikova, winner of the 1981 French Open and three other Grand Slam titles.

"I think that was the main point of the match," Fulco agreed. "I played well and my passing shots were very good. But she missed too many easy points and the top 10 players usually don't."

Reggi, who made it to the French Open quarterfinals last year, won the first set against the 18-year-old Strandlund, ranked 216th in the world, before the match turned. Strandlund finished off her Italian opponent 3-6, 6-1, 6-3.

In other matches, women's 13th seed Natalia Zvereva of the Soviet Union defeated Louise Field of Australia 6-2, 6-0; 14th seed Sandra Cecchini of Italy crushed Jana Popsilova of Czechoslovakia 6-1, 6-0; and Guillermo Perez-Roldan, the men's No. 14 seed, downed Tore Meinecke of West Germany 6-2, 6-2, 6-0.

Third-ranked Chris Evert faced Barbara Romano of Italy in a second-round match today, while No. 2 Martina Navratilova was matched against Hellas Ter Riet of the Netherlands.

MAVS

Only once Monday night did the Mavs threaten to pull an upset. With five minutes left in the second quarter, Dallas took a five-point lead, 47-42, forcing the Lakers into calling timeout.

Then, within the snap of a finger, or so it seemed to Harper, L.A. was back on top again, this time to stay.

What happened? The Mavs were whistled twice within a minute for illegal defense, and a couple of free throws and two Lakers fast breaks later, the Mavericks' heads were spinning.

"By the time we got the ball back, we were down by one," said Harper, who finished with 17 points. "That changed the face of things right there."

MARK AGUIRRE — who lately has been in coach John MacLeod's doghouse, a place very similar to that of former coach Dick Motta, who feuded constantly with Aguirre — played 38 minutes and scored 18 points. Rolando Blackman also added 18.

The Maverick who inflicted the most damage was 7-foot Roy Tarpley, who had a game-high 20 rebounds to go with his 18 points.

Tarpley, who won the league's Sixth Man Award this season, has battled back from drug problems a year ago as a rookie to displace Aguirre as the Mavs' main man.

But Tarpley's strong showing wasn't enough for Dallas, which got past Denver four games to two, and is making its first appearance in the conference finals.

Harper hopes tomorrow night's effort will not be as lackluster for the Mavs, who sat idle after last Thursday's wrap-up over Denver.

"We know we didn't play very well," said Harper. "I think this loss will wake us up, maybe get us over our jitters."

Harper promised a different Mavericks team would show up tomorrow night, that adjustments had to be made.

"We've got to play better to win," he said. "If we come out here Wednesday, play better and (still) lose, so be it.

"IT'S LIKE getting punched in the face. Now you know the guy's got a good left hook; do you leave your face in there and see about his right hand? No, you have to make adjustments, make some moves, do some changing."

As for MacLeod, he wouldn't reveal what moves were planned, but look for Aguirre's shooting — a known, if streaky, quantity — to be unleashed as a complement to Tarpley.

"It's not the end of the world to lose this one," said MacLeod, "but I'd like to see us play better. We have good people and good character; we won't quit."

BLACKOUT

Should the Bruins fail to win there, a feat they failed to manage in the first two games of the series, they will be eliminated and the planned replay here June 2 would become moot.

League bylaws, according to the league president, John Ziegler, mandate that any playoff game that cannot be completed will be played in its entirety at the end of the series.

"I don't think anything's unfair when you have rules," said Ziegler, who said he had not faced a problem like this in his 10-year tenure. "I'm sure that the Bruins, because of the way they were playing, would have preferred to finish the game, but an act of God changed all that."

Harry Sinden, general manager of the Bruins, said there was no alternative available to either club. "I'm not confident that we're happy with this," said Sinden of the ruling that cancels out everything about tonight's game except the statistics amassed by the players who participated, "but as a member, we live up to it."

This latest disruption to the league's playoff schedule came on the heels of a brief blackout at the Montreal Forum during Boston's quarterfinal series and the wildcat walkout staged by league referees and linesmen during Boston's turbulent seven-game series with the New Jersey Devils to decide that semifinal series.

Tuesday night's outage occurred at 9:33 p.m., when an overloaded 4,000 volt switch on a transfer unit on a street beside the 60-year-old arena burned out and shut off power to the building. Unsure of the extent of the damage, Garden officials decided to remove the fans and call off the game.

"This only seems to go along with the whole sequel of events that's gone on in these playoffs," said Tom McCarthy of the Bruins.

"First you have the power failure in Montreal, then the mess with the referees, and now there's another chapter."

McCarthy said Sinden had told his players "the game wasn't going to happen" once the confused players from the two teams filed through the dimly lit hallways to their respective locker rooms. There, they showered and waited while Ziegler negotiated with officials from both clubs.

Shortly after 9:30 p.m., the arena was plunged into darkness as the Oilers celebrated a goal that came on a deflection into the Boston net by Craig Simpson.

CHAPS

No. 4 Tommy Heiting beat Tim Stahlschmidt of Jefferson, Mo., 6-1, 6-3, and will play John Stewart of Lakeland, Fla., in one of today's crucial matches.

Scott Randolph, No. 5 on the team, beat Ola Nilsson of Brunswick, 6-1, 6-1. His opponent today is Mark Theisen of Bismark, N.D.

Robert Antoun, the final Chap blanked Daniel Pierson of Hudson Valley, N.Y., 6-0, 6-0. His next opponent is Marty Radman of DuPage, Ill.

In doubles, Dysholm and Luke O'Loughlin beat Graves-Stahlschmidt of Jefferson, Mo., 6-1, 6-1, after a first round bye in No. 1 doubles.

Boustani and Randolph beat McAbee-Allen of Johnson County, Kan., 6-1, 6-1, after a bye in the No. 2 bracket.

Ameline and Boustani took out Nilsson-Perez, of Brunswick, 6-1, 6-1.

LEE

"A first degree black belt under Mr. Lee is worth something," Manning said. "He has the clout to register his students with the national and international associations, and that's very important because of the politics of martial arts.

"We're pretty honored to have him here."

While adults and children alike can learn Tae Kwon Do, Lee said children particularly benefit from Tae Kwon Do training.

"It teaches independence and self-defense," he said. "Each child can then defend himself, his grades usually go up, and he respects his parents more."

Lee expects this year's Olympic exposure to herald an explosion in Tae Kwon Do interest worldwide, even in Texas high schools.

"After the sport gets into the Olympics, we may see many colleges and high schools field teams," he said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Jury finds vet incompetent

KERRVILLE (AP) — A World War II veteran was found mentally incompetent to stand trial on charges he fatally shot a veterans benefit counselor he believed was responsible for delaying his medical claims.

Jurors in Judge V. Murray Jordan's 198th District Court said Tuesday Rufus William Smith, 63, of Stonewall, is incompetent to stand trial now for the Jan. 20 slaying and "there is no substantial probability that he will attain competency in the foreseeable future."

Jordan committed Smith to Vernon State Hospital for observation and treatment.

Smith, who served in the Marine Corps in the South Pacific, was charged with shooting John Walker Pettit, 54, in a Veterans Administration hospital in Kerrville last January.

Smith was arrested at the shooting scene without incident and has been held since in the Kerr County Jail in lieu of a $250,000 bond.

District Attorney Ron Sutton said Smith believed VA officials had been keeping duplicate medical files on him and were denying him full disability compensation by concealing the fact that he had killed enemy soldiers in the war.

DA finds snake in mailbox

HOUSTON (AP) — A Harris County assistant district attorney found more than magazines and bills in her mailbox when she tried to get her mail.

Shirley Cornelius found a snake in the mailbox Tuesday.

"I heard something moving around in there and my first thought was, 'It's a snake,'" Ms. Cornelius said. "I can't think of anyone who would do this. I've been on maternity leave for three months, and today was only my second day back at work."

Police are investigating the possibility that someone, angered over her work as a prosecutor, placed the non-poisonous rat snake in the mailbox of her home.

But her husband, Richard Hipp, thinks the reptile might have crawled in on its own.

"We've been feeding the squirrels on the front porch, and he may have crawled up there to wait for one," Hipp said.

Austin bishop's house burns

AUSTIN (AP) — A two-alarm fire that firefighters said burned unnoticed for up to two hours destroyed the unoccupied home of Bishop John McCarthy, burning his extensive book collection and other belongings.

The 35-year-old house was owned by the Catholic Diocese of Austin. McCarthy had been living in an apartment while the home was being remodeled.

Firefighters took an hour to control the blaze.

Senate panel to review new SWTSU regent

AUSTIN (AP) — A regent who voted to fire Robert Hardesty as president of Southwest Texas State University shortly after assuming his regent's position may find that job in jeopardy when the Senate convenes in January.

Chairman Chet Edwards of the Senate Nominations Committee said, however, his committee would give the new appointee "a much more careful review than he gave Robert Hardesty."

Edwards, D-Duncanville, never named the regent in a statement Tuesday but it was clear he was referring to San Antonio businessman George Worth, who was appointed to the Texas State University System Board of Regents just two days before Hardesty was ousted.

Hardesty, SWTSU president since 1981, was fired Thursday on a 5-4 vote with all three appointees of Gov. Bill Clements, including Worth, voting against him.

Hardesty is a friend of former Gov. Mark White, who defeated Clements in 1982 but was himself defeated by Clements two years ago.

Edwards said he intends to seriously challenge Hardesty's firing by asking the Senate to carefully review the regents' action when the newly appointed member to the board seeks Senate confirmation.

"When a board member makes a decision as important as termination of a university president only 1½ hours after being sworn in, I have to wonder just how carefully the decision was made," Edwards said.

"Under the circumstances, I believe this action smacks of petty partisan politics which should have no place in the hiring and firing of a university president," Edwards said.

Worth said he had not talked to Clements or anyone in the political arena. "I'm going to do what is right, and that's what I did," he said.

According to the San Antonio Light, campaign disclosure reports showed that Worth, who heads the Redland Worth Corp., had contributed more than $80,000 to White in 1986 and also gave at least $10,000 to Clements.

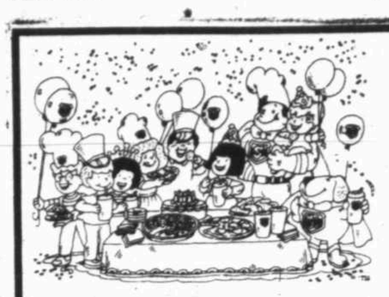

In a separate statement, Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, said, "Higher education is not the place for this governor or his appointees to extract petty political revenge, and it appears that is exactly what has happened in this case."

Barrientos, whose district includes San Marcos — where SWTSU is located — said Hardesty had been responsible for raising academic standards and improving facilities and to fire someone with Hardesty's record "for purely political reasons is truly a display of arrogance."

Proxmire: Market progress 'pitiful'

Vows reform legislation within month

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. William Proxmire says he will try to push stock market reform legislation to the Senate floor next month, even though Reagan administration officials say that the need for such a measure is dubious.

Proxmire, chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, chided four federal officials who appeared before the panel on Tuesday for producing a report on last fall's stock market crash that suggested there is scant need for legislation.

"I can tell you, we're going to go ahead" with a bill, said Proxmire, D-Wis.

Proxmire told the authors of the study that they had made "pitiful" progress in formulating suggestions for calming the nation's jittery financial exchanges and nervous investors. The four officials were Treasury Undersecretary George D. Gould, Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman David S. Ruder, Commodity Futures Trading Commission Chairwoman Wendy Gramm and Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan.

"You have let down the American people at a critical time," Proxmire told the officials.

Gould, who headed the White House team that wrote the report, sidestepped several questions about when the group would suggest needed legislation, saying, "We're not legislatively driven, we're decision driven."

The working group's report, released May 16, suggested several mild steps for dealing with the markets' ills.

They included a call for an hourlong trading halt in the nation's stock, futures and options markets if the Dow Jones Industrial Average plunges by 250 points in a single day. Such a decline has occurred only once: last Oct. 19's 508-point drop, which has triggered on ongoing look at the markets' volatility by the government and Congress.

Proxmire introduced legislation on March 31 that would establish a committee consisting of the chairmen of the Federal Reserve Board, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. The committee would oversee issues that affect all of the nation's markets, such as coordinating margins — or downpayments — exchanged in transactions, and setting up "circuit breakers" to halt trading during emergencies.

"My aim ... is to make sure that there is an accountable entity with both the responsibility and the expertise to make the decisions on intermarket issues," Proxmire said.

Currently, the CFTC oversees the futures markets, while the SEC and the Fed share responsibility for the stock and options exchanges.

After the hearing, Proxmire told reporters he expected his committee to send the legislation to the full Senate in June.

With Congress' schedule abbreviated this year because of the elections — and with some lawmakers joining the administration in opposing strong legislative action on the problem — it seems unlikely that any bill will become law in 1988.

"It makes it much harder to have the administration opposed," Proxmire conceded. "The president has the veto, and the administration has influence with many members of Congress."

Sentiment on the banking committee on the need for legislation seems split, and not along party lines.

While Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., said, "We'd be darned fools to say that all is well" with the financial markets, Sen. John Shelby, D-Ala., said, "A lot of us here ... don't believe you can legislate investors' confidence."

Ruder has dissented from his colleagues on several points, arguing that futures margins should be raised and that the SEC should oversee futures trading. The SEC meets Thursday to fashion legislative proposals that will be submitted to Congress by next week.

Senators told over 2,300 U.S. banks losing money

WASHINGTON (AP) — Five months after the U.S. commercial banks ended their worst year since the Depression, the prospect for a modest rebound this year seems good despite trouble spots.

By any measure, 1987 was a disaster for the nation's 13,650 commercial banks. The industry as a whole recorded only a $3.7 billion profit on $3 trillion in assets, the worst performance since 1933.

The nation's largest banks set aside reserves in anticipation of losses on loans to Third World countries. Nine of the 10 largest banks in the nation and 17 of the 25 largest recorded a loss for the year.

Many smaller banks fared no better. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which insures deposits up to $100,000, said 2,366 banks in all lost money. And it was a record year for bank failures.

Regulators closed the doors of 184 institutions, just over half of them in Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma, areas hard hit by foundering oil prices and depresssed real estate prices.

The Senate Banking Committee, in a hearing today, is evaluating the industry's prospects for a turnaround. Lawmakers are hearing from FDIC Chairman L. William Seidman, Comptroller of the Currency Robert Clarke and Federal Reserve Board Governor H. Robert Heller.

Seidman, in a trip to San Antonio, Texas, last week said that Texas banks would hit bottom in 1988 and improve next year. He has been predicting that bank failures in Texas should climb from 50 in 1987 to 70 this year, but that improvements elsewhere should hold bank failures nationally to about the same level as last year.

One substantial, but known, cloud on the horizon is First Republicbank Corp. of Dallas. In March, the FDIC infused $1 billion into banks owned by the huge holding company with the idea of coming up with a permanent rescue package within six months.

The eventual price tag to resolve First Republicbank's problems could rival or even surpass the $1.7 billion that the agency says the 1984 bailout of Continental Illinois will end up costing. First Republicbank showed a net loss of $1.5 billion in the first quarter of this year.

Flag-Redfern income jumps

From Staff Reports

Flag-Redfern Oil Co. has reported improvement in 1987 net income and aggregate oil and gas sales.

In addition, Glenn Brant, president and chief executive officer, reported that the company has engaged The First Boston Corp. and Prescott Ball & Turben, Inc. as financial advisors in connection with the planned sale of the company.

Flag-Redfern's net income rose to $3.5 million, or $175 per share, from $213,000 or $11 per share reported in 1986.

Aggregate oil and gas sales last year were $26.2 million, compared to $23.7 million in 1986. Oil and natural gas sales averaged 2,674 barrels daily and 16,910 Mcfd, as compared to 2,680 bopd and 13,655 Mcfgd the previous year. Net proved reserves on Jan. 1, 1988 were 6,976,212 barrels of oil and natural gas liquids and 39,051,642 Mcf of natural gas, representing a combined 21 percent increase over 1986 estimates.

The company also distributed its annual report to shareholders, and scheduled the annual general meeting for June 14.

Trade deficit shrinks 12.7%

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. trade deficit shrank by 12.7 percent from January through March, the biggest improvement in five years, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department reported that the difference between what the United States imports and what it exports totaled $35.9 billion for the first three months of 1988, down from a deficit of $41.2 billion in the last three months of 1987.

The 12.7 percent decline represented a dramatic turnaround in a deficit that has steadily worsened over the last five years. It was the biggest quarterly improvement since an 18.9 percent decline in the fourth quarter of 1982.

The new figures confirmed an improvement that had already shown up in the department's monthly merchandise trade reports. The earlier figures showed a 16.4 percent drop in the deficit to $36 billion in the first quarter, compared to $43.1 billion in the fourth quarter.

Oil futures prices turned downward after closing higher Tuesday, losing 9 cents to stand at $17.31 at midmornng.

After drifting aimlessly in light trading Tuesday, contracts for July delivery of West Texas Intermediate settled at at $17.40 per 42-gallon barrel, up 5 cents from Monday's close on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Among refined products for June delivery, wholesale unleaded gasoline settled at 51.80 cents a gallon, up 0.36 cent, while wholesale heating oil closed at 47.31 cents a gallon, up 0.40 cent.

Chris McCormack, an analyst at the investment firm Drexel Burham Lambert Inc., said trading consisted of small moves throughout the session.

But despite Monday's gains, he said the market's underlying fundamentals remained clearly bearish.

"Domestic stocks are high and the worldwide market is also stocked with plenty of inventories," McCormack said.

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar edged upward today in slow European trading which exchange dealers said lacked both direction and volume. Gold prices also rose.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed little changed at 124.30 yen, up 0.05 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 124.40 ven.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Tuesday:

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell 42 cents to close at a bid $460.27.

Silver was quoted at a bid price of $6.71 a troy ounce in London, unchanged from late Tuesday.

Stocks rebound in light trading

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices rebounded Tuesday, but the volume of trading remained light as wary investors refused to commit their money.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 21.05 to 1,962.53, or slightly more than 1 percent. Other market measures showed smaller gains.

Pessimism about interest rates continued to weigh on the market, sapping investors' willingness to jump in.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 5 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 905 issues up, 549 down and 498 unchanged.

The volume of trading on the floor of the NYSE came to 139.93 million shares. That was up from 102.64 million shares in the previous session, the lightest since the day after Thanksgiving last year.

Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trading at regional exchanges and on the over-the-counter market, totaled 163.13 million shares.

The market value of all U.S. stocks rose $21.2 billion, or 0.85 percent from Monday, according to the Wilshire Associates 5,000 Equity Index.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Mid-May auto sales above 1987 levels

DETROIT (AP) — Combined mid-May sales of domestically made cars and light trucks rose 2.6 percent from a year ago despite trimming of buyer incentive lures, the auto companies reported.

Analysts on Tuesday blamed the lower car sales on leaner incentive offerings and on a rush in early May by buyers hurrying to beat the May 11 expiration of most major-maker incentives.

Northeast home prices still skyrocketing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Home prices continued to skyrocket in several Northeastern cities during the first three months of 1988, but the hot New York City market cooled somewhat after the October stock market crash, a real estate trade group said.

"While trouble in the financial markets has affected certain pocket areas, like the area around New York City, the (Northeast) region as a whole is still exceptionally vigorous," John A. Tuccillo of the National Association of Realtors said Tuesday.

Texas Air accused of draining Eastern

MIAMI (AP) — Steady "downsizing" of Eastern Airlines and the draining of its assets and funds by parent Texas Air Corp. leaves the Miami carrier with a precarious future, a union-commissioned study concludes.

The report released Tuesday was commissioned by the Air Line Pilots Association.

In Washington, federally mediated hearings opened to settle a bitter dispute between airline unions and Texas Air over whether Eastern and sister Continental Airlines should be considered a single unit for bargaining purposes.

Texaco, Icahn agree to extend negotiations

NEW YORK (AP) — Texaco Inc. and its largest shareholder have given themselves the option of three extra days to negotiate as part of an effort to reach a truce in their feud over the troubled oil giant's future.

Takeover strategist Carl C. Icahn, who owns 14.8 percent of Texaco's stock, has threatened a shareholder fight to elect his associates to the board at the company's annual meeting next month.

Texaco said Tuesday that the parties had agreed to a mechanism under which the annual meeting could be postponed from June 7 to June 17. Both sides had previously agreed to postpone the meeting to June 14 if necessary, so the new arrangement gave them three additional days.

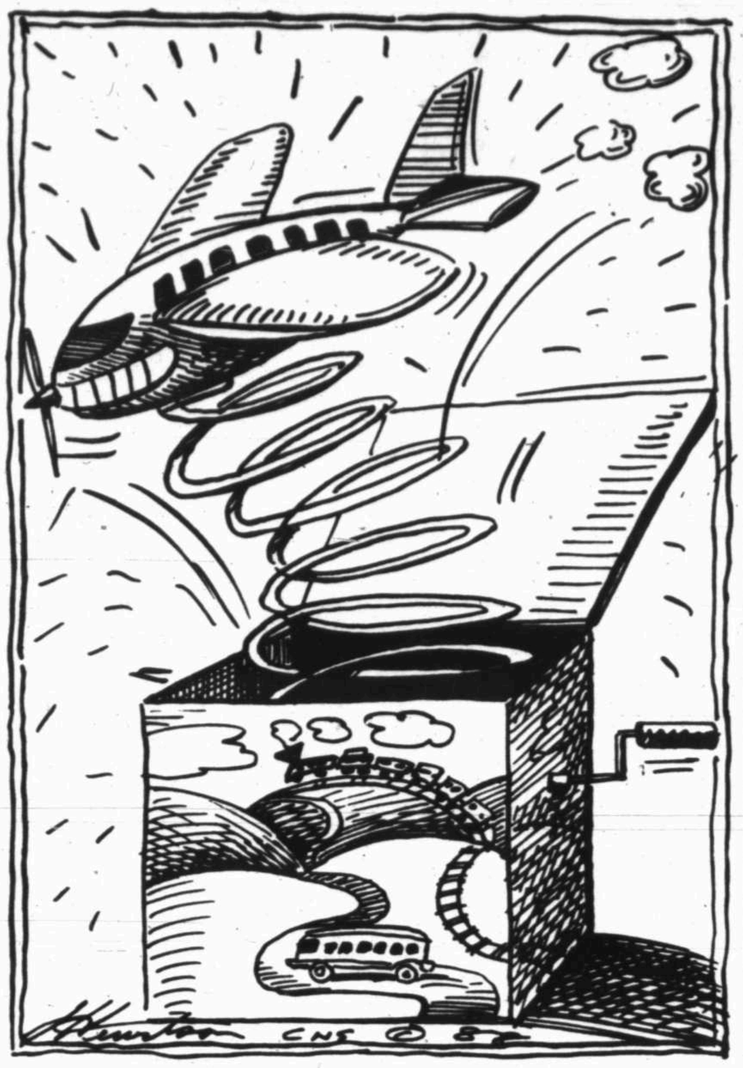

Safety board investigating GM cars

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal safety authorities have opened a new investigation of 1.4 million Oldsmobile, Buick and Cadillac cars, tripling the number of General Motors Corp. autos being investigated to determine if a mechanical defect causes them to speed up unexpectedly.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration said Tuesday that 110 complaints involving 1985-88 GM C-body cars alleged the cars showed unintended acceleration because of a "significant increase in engine speed and power output."

Air travel: Up, up and OK?

By SHARON BENOIT
Copley News Service

The future of flying is soaring higher than ever before, and within the next decade, the number of planes flying the already-crowded friendly skies is expected to increase substantially. At least, that's what airline officials are predicting. The latest trends in minivacation trips could cause this pretty picture to change dramatically in the not too distant future.

Air traffic controllers will be forced to handle one-third more planes in 1999 than they do now, according to the Federal Aviation Administration.

The FAA is also forecasting that the number of people flying commercial jetliners will grow from 445 million passengers in 1987 to nearly 765 million in 1999. Commuter aircraft are expected to have even sharper passenger growth: from 27 million last year to 58 million by the turn of the century.

What does this mean for air travelers? More long waits, greater chance of air mishaps and, perhaps the most noteworthy, a trend toward shorter vacations — by car, train, boat and bus.

Airport officials would rather fight than admit there's even the slightest chance that air travel is taking a nosedive. All of the figures being provided by the Department of Airports show everything is either up or getting higher.

Take the FAA's forecast, for instance. It assumes an average annual economic growth rate of three percent and the absence of intense fare wars among the airlines, which tend to attract even more travelers. Passenger growth would be dampened by anything slower, reports FutureScan, a futurist study on the future of flying.

Yet in the United States last year, more than three-quarters of all air tickets were discounted in one way or another (the experts say 90 percent were!). Business travel still accounts for nearly half (48 percent) of all air travel in the United States, so there's ample room for growth in the American market.

Virginia Black, director of community relations for the Los Angeles Department of Airports, says most national forecasts (including the FAA's) are predicting a 5 to 5½ percent increase per year in air travel. "Although we're a little slow right now, due to the economy," she admitted. "A drop in airline travel is one of the first indicators of a bad economy."

Since the stock market crash in October 1987, the market has been down. As a result, Black speculates that businesses have cut down on travel and private citizens are trimming their vacation budgets or even postponing trips. "I don't see this changing in the near future, either," she stated.

The Department of Airports recently conducted its own study at LAX on why people fly. "In 1986, 26 percent of the air travelers flew for business purposes. Of this figure, 4.6 percent traveled to conventions, 8.8 percent combined business and pleasure and 53.1 percent went only for pleasure," says Black, who points out this is a far cry from 1987's fourth quarter numbers.

Bill Horn, a spokesman for the Air Transport Association, can't agree with Black's doomsday assessment. "There have been record levels of air traffic for five consecutive years," says Horn. "This has been the case in both domestic and international operations of U.S. scheduled airlines."

The ATA conducted its study of U.S. operations and says it is anticipating another record year. "Why would the FAA be predicting greater numbers of passengers by the year 1999 if the business is in trouble?"

Horn believes international business travel is on the rise and pointed out that international flight operations are up 23 percent for the first quarter of this year over the same period in 1987.

"I don't see any other modes of travel hurting air travel," stated Horn. "Airlines have been cutting into other modes for years. This fact has remained true for the past 10 years."

Still, 10 years ago incidents such as the Aloha Airlines jet that opened up like a can of sardines weren't shaking up the world with outrageous and strange emergency landings. People are not happy about the industry's lackadaisical attitude toward airplane cleanliness, baggage lost, maintenance and crew laziness.

"On a recent trip to Hawaii, I was surprised to find our stewardess in the back of the plane playing cards with a gentleman passenger ... she really wasn't even checking to see if anyone needed anything," said Maria Olivas, a longtime resident of Santa Barbara, who was visiting the islands for the first time. "It just wasn't right."

The ATA conducted a study in 1977 which showed that airplanes had a 10.9 percent share of the airplane, bus, train and auto for every two million flights. In the nine years prior to that, the rate was double (one fatal accident for every one million flights).

FutureScan reported in its March 21, 1988, issue that fatalities and hazardous incidents per hundred million passenger-miles are both down more than 50 percent, and only four percent of near-misses involved commercial aircraft. Most of the accidents, says the insider's report, "involved military or small private aircraft."

Air traffic has also become less expensive. Accounting for inflation and other necessary cost increases, overall fares are down by 25 percent, long-distance flights are down by 35 percent. Consumers have gained more than $10.3 billion a year as a result, so more are flying.

Contrary to what one might think, flight delays are also down compared to four of the last five years. Seventy percent of all delays are now caused by bad weather, not human error.

The increased number of aircraft expected to appear in our crowded skies will face major problems in the area of airport shortages and air traffic control limitations. A different kind of future is being predicted by industry observers.

"The capacity of present airports and the present air traffic control system will have to be expanded through new technologies — on the ground and in the sky," stated Black. Among her predictions for the next decade are better airport management and planning, quieter airplanes and 24-hour traffic dispersion.

The future doesn't hold too much hope for aircraft with sleepers, either. Philippine Airlines has been trying the concept but isn't expected to keep it, according to an airline sales representative.

"We are the only airline in the world to have beds in our 747s. But we plan to take them out in the near future," she said. "We need space on the upper deck of the planes to provide more seats for business-class passengers."

The beds, essentially used for the first-class passengers, took up two seats. The beds by the windows were single twin beds, and the beds in the center of the cabin were full-size bunk beds.

The airline industry is likely to be hurt more than just a little bit by the surging trend of shorter, less expensive vacation packages. A survey of 1,500 U.S. households by Audits & Surveys in New York suggests that the traditional two-week domestic holiday is giving way to shorter, more frequent and less expensive trips.

This is true for travelers of all income groups. The cause has really nothing to do with fear of flying. Rather, it's America's shift in career demands of two-income families. Two-thirds of all families have taken pleasure trips in the last year, but 73 percent of these trips lasted less than three days and these people traveled by land, not air.

Smith Travel Research in Lancaster, Pa., a consulting firm in the travel industry, expects weekend spending at local hotel chains to grow over the next year by at least 8 percent.

Like it or not, this trend will have some ill effect on air travel, but not on RVs, boats, trains, automobiles or buses.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

IRA program established in 1982

By BILL DOYLE

Q. In what year did individual retirement accounts start? I ask because my husband is self-employed and puts $2,000 per year into his IRA. We are not sure how many years he missed, if any.

Doyle

A. IRAs were authorized in 1974, when Congress passed the Employee Retirement Income Security Act. Back then, IRAs were available only to workers who were not covered by any other retirement plan and the annual tax-deferred contribution was limited to $750. That amount was gradually raised to $1,500 — $1,750 in a "spousal" IRA for a married couple only one of whom was employed.

The rules were changed drastically in 1982. Beginning that year, every working person was allowed to open an IRA and tuck away tax-deferred $2,000 — $2,250 in a spousal IRA.

Then came 1987 and the rules were changed again. Since last year, anyone who is not covered by another retirement plan can make an annual tax-deferred IRA contribution of $2,000 — $2,250, for a spousal IRA.

People who are participants in other retirement plans now have limits on the amount of their tax-deferred IRA contributions, based on their income. A working taxpayer covered by another pension plan may take a tax deduction for an IRA contribution if his or her adjusted gross income is less than $25,000 a year — $40,000 for a married couple. No deduction is allowed for a taxpayer covered by another retirement plan whose annual adjusted gross income tops $35,000 — $50,000 for a married couple.

Working people covered by other retirement plans and whose adjusted gross incomes fall between the numbers in the above paragraph are allowed partial deductions for IRA contributions.

We've come pretty much full circle in IRA eligibility requirements. If your husband didn't make deductible IRA contributions for every year in which he was entitled to do so, your family missed a good tax deal.

Moreover, since he is self-employed, he could have a Keogh plan. Those plans have been around since 1962 and also have been liberalized over the years. He can open a Keogh plan, put 20 percent of his net self-employed income into it each year and defer income tax on that money.

Under the new rules, he won't be able to make tax-deferred contributions to his IRA the years he puts money into his Keogh plan. But Keogh is the better of the two deals.

Q. I am fully retired. My total income is from a military service pension, mutual fund dividends, Social Security and VA disability. May I make a tax-deductible IRA contribution based on my military retirement pay?

A. No. You must have what the Internal Revenue Service calls "earned income," such as salary, wages, commissions, fees and tips, in order to be eligible for an annual tax-deductible IRA contribution.

Q. You wrote that adjusted gross income for purposes of determining if a tax deduction can be taken for an IRA contribution "includes employment income, pensions and all other taxable income, such as dividends and interest. For retired and semiretired folks, it also includes that part of Social Security benefits subject to federal income tax."

The instruction booklet for 1987 Form 1040 states that only "earned income" can be used to calculate eligibility for an IRA deduction. Doesn't this mean a person who has a large pension, SS benefits and investment income in excess of $50,000 and who also has at least $2,000 of earned income can use the IRA deduction?

A. Nope! To use a timeworn expression, you're mixing apples and oranges. You must have earned income in order to make an IRA contribution. But, when your adjusted gross income tops the guidelines set in the Tax Reform Act of 1986, you can't take a tax deduction for that contribution.

DEFICIT

Today's figures are smaller because they subtracted factors such as the cost of shipping and insurance and military sales from the monthly numbers. The balance-of-payments deficit is also adjusted for seasonal variations; the monthly figures are not.

The improvement in the first quarter reflected the fact that exports climbed faster than imports, although both hit all-time highs.

Exports jumped 9.8 percent to a record $74.7 billion while imports rose 1.3 percent to a record $110.6 billion.

The administration is counting on strong export sales to provide close to half of total economic growth in the United States this year. The figures for the first quarter show that this estimate is on track.

President Reagan has also pointed to the improvement in the trade deficit as an argument against passing protectionist trade legislation. Reagan on Tuesday vetoed the omnibus trade bill and Republicans in the Senate are expected to cite the big drop in the trade deficit as a strong argument that this would be the wrong time to threaten trade retaliation against other countries who are purchasing record levels of U.S. products.

BANKS

The ailing giant likely will cause the insurance fund, which stood at $18.3 billion at the end of 1987, to register its first loss in its 55-year history.

Views are mixed on whether the worst is over for the big money center banks with Third World loans.

John S. Reed, chairman of Citicorp, the nation's largest banking concern, has noted a general trend toward improvement in the economies of the biggest debtors: Mexico, Brazil and the Philippines.

At a meeting earlier this month of the Business Council, a group of 62 chief executives from the nation's largest companies, Reed said that "we're beginning to see improvement ... in the ability of the industry to deal with the problem."

However, some analysts are pointing out that the big banks have reserved only 25 percent of their outstanding loans to developing countries, while such loans are trading on average for around 50 cents on the dollar.

But, according to an audit of the FDIC released last month by the General Accounting Office, an investigating arm of Congress, bank profits probably will improve despite a continued high level of bank failures and "continuing and long-term" problems presented by Third World debt.

Report: Health bill threatens drug firms

DALLAS (SWN) — A Congressional proposal for catastrophic health insurance under Medicare would lead to fewer new medicines and drugs, according to a report issued by the National Center for Policy Analysis in Dallas.

The report says that the United States is one of the few countries in the world that does not regulate the pharmaceutical industry like a public utility. "When governments become major purchasers of drugs they pay rock-bottom prices and hope that other countries, such as the U.S., will spend the money to develop new drugs," said NCPA President John C. Goodman.

The report cites Britain as a country where lifesaving medical treatment is denied to the few who need it in order to subsidize pharmaceuticals purchased by the vast majority of people.

■ In Britain each year as many as 9,000 kidney patients are denied renal dialysis and as many as 15,000 cancer patients are denied chemotherapy.

■ Yet Britain's 54 million population buys drugs at subsidized prices, and the amount of the subsidy is one of the most sensitive issues in British politics.

Under legislation now before Congress, Medicare would pay for a percentage of drug purchases by the elderly in excess of $600 per year:

— The first year, Medicare would pay 50 percent.

— The second year, Medicare would pay 60 percent.

— The third year and in succeeding years, Medicare would pay 80 percent.

"Eventually government will become a partner in the vast majority of prescription drugs purchased by the elderly. Prices and deductibles will become major political issues, as they have in countries with national health insurance," said Goodman.

"Catastrophic health care legislation is 'catastrophic' in name only. Medicare would pay for a great many items the elderly can afford to purchase themselves," according to Goodman.

Easy Weekend Cooking

After a long and hectic week, the weekend holds promise of fun with friends. And, what would weekend entertaining be without the outdoor grill? Food cooked over hot coals has a flavor like none other, and outdoor cooking sets a mood that makes any meal a party.

Next time you're all fired up for a cookout, add sizzle to the menu with versatile poultry. It's always a hands-down favorite, and its ease of preparation makes it ideal al fresco fare.

Please those who like to graze and nosh with Marinated Teriyaki Chicken Wings and Thai Chicken Kabobs. Both feature Oriental flavors made easy with an unexpected ingredient – pancake syrup. The light maple flavor imparts just the right touch of sweetness for the ginger-spiked, teriyaki-glazed wings and the spicy peanut kabob-dipping sauce.

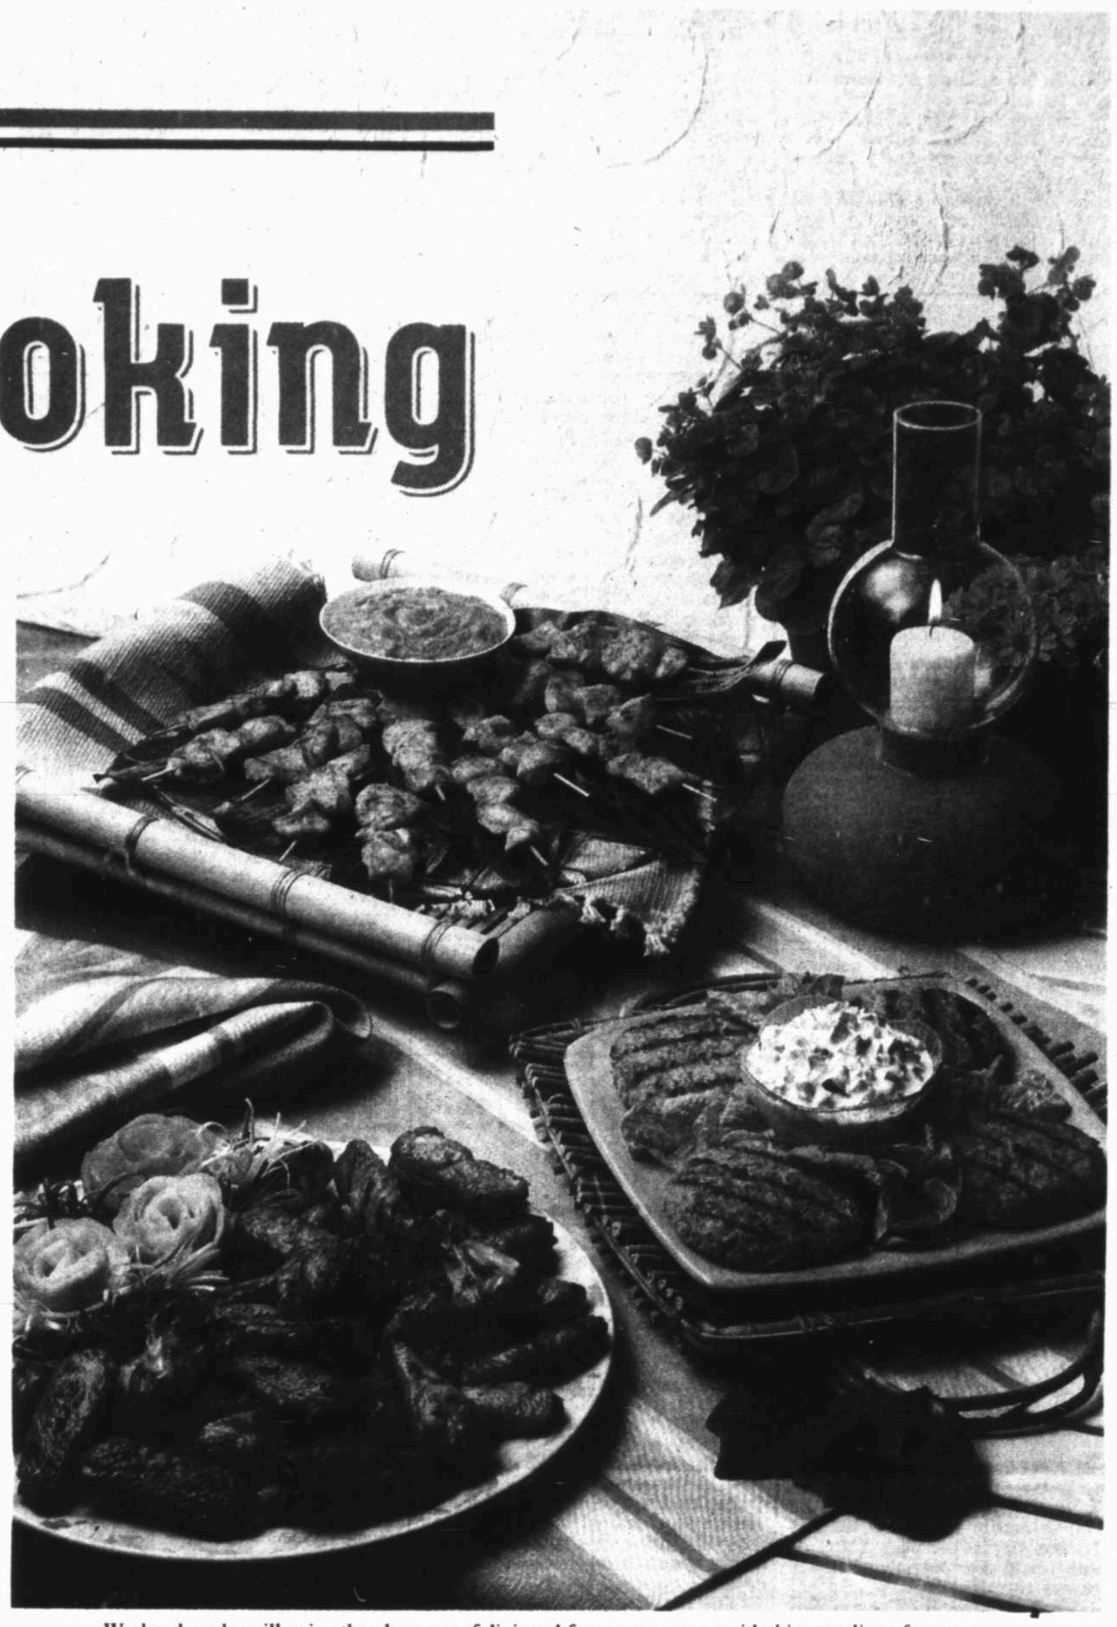

For an innovative, easy entree, serve Garden Turkey Burgers, a light alternative to traditional hamburgers. Begin with cooked turkey which can be conveniently purchased from the deli or poultry section of the supermarket. Oats are added for hearty, whole grain flavor and texture, while dill adds a summer-fresh flavor boost. Instead of ho-hum burger toppings, serve with a cool and tangy sour cream-vegetable sauce.

If the weather threatens to spoil your party, simply move indoors to the broiler for the same delicious results.

Whether the party is indoors or out, salad aficionados will find a new favorite in zesty Chicken Taco Salad. Made with lightmeat chicken and high protein kidney beans, it will star on any weekend menu. Serve it with homemade salsa when there's time to prepare it, or top the warm chicken mixture with your favorite purchased salsa when time is short.

When the weekend cook needs a main dish in a hurry, Chicken Scaloppine with Lemon and Herbs fills the bill. Light and savory, the chicken is coated with herb-seasoned corn meal and sautéed in less than 10 minutes. Team it with a melange of steamed or stir-fried summer-fresh vegetables and a favorite tall, cool beverage.

With recipes so simple, why wait for the weekend? They're easy enough to become midweek mainstays. For additional ideas for weekdays, weekends or elegant entertaining, you'll want to savor the offerings in "Hurry, Let's Eat!". This lively booklet offers great recipes, tips, nutrition information and more. To receive your free copy, send your name and address on a postcard to: "Hurry, Let's Eat!", 231 S. Green St., Box RP, Chicago, IL 60607.

Weekend cooks will enjoy the pleasures of dining al fresco even more with this sampling of savory grilled specials. Thai Chicken Kabobs with a spicy peanut dipping sauce, Garden Turkey Burgers and Marinated Teriyaki Chicken Wings are easy to prepare, yet far from standard grill-top fare.

Old-fashioned ice cream made with modern methods

By MAUREEN CLANCY
Copley News Service

Nearly every American child has at least one hazy memory of a summer afternoon when the family fought dripping ice cubes, rock salt and a heavy wood-and-metal contraption to turn out homemade ice cream.

The choice of machines for homemade ice cream is no longer as simple as vanilla, chocolate or strawberry. More than a dozen different, easy-to-operate types, ranging in price from $10 to $600, lure an increasingly sophisticated consumer to experience the pleasure of just-churned ice cream.

There are three basic styles of ice cream makers. The old-fashioned machine, both hand-cranked and electric, is chilled by crushed ice and salt. Larger, refrigerated units take up a lot of kitchen counter space but make the adventure as easy as pouring cream and flavorings into a tub and flipping a switch.

The newest technology is a compact, manual unit that requires no ice, no salt, no electricity and can be cranked by a 5-year-old.

We tested all four types, using a basic cooked-custard ice cream recipe.

Donvier. This brightly colored, easy-to-handle plastic machine has revolutionized home ice cream making. The compact aluminum cylinder is filled with Chillfast refrigerant and needs only to be chilled overnight in the home freezer to be ready.

The desired ice cream mixture is chilled, then poured into the tub. The plastic lid is put in place, and the easy crank is turned a couple of times every three minutes for about 20 minutes.

The finished product is as smooth, creamy and delicious as that produced by the most expensive refrigerated units.

Two minor drawbacks: Lining up the tub and fitted lid requires some concentration; and the first twist of the crank may require an adult's hand (the rest of the work can be done by kids).

The Donvier comes in half-pint, pint and quart sizes and costs about $10, $30 and $40 respectively.

Gaggia Gelatiera. One of the fanciest, easiest and most expensive (about $325) ice cream makers, the Gelatiera turns out luxuriously creamy ice cream in just under an hour. The operator need only add a few drops of alcohol and water to the motor base, pour the prepared custard into the stainless steel bowl and flip the switch.

A clear top allows the cook to watch as the consistency of the ice cream changes. It also allows last-minute additions, such as chocolate chips and crushed cookies, without turning off the machine.

The Gelatiera's disadvantages include the price tag, the size (the machine takes up significant counter space) and the short cord that generally requires an extension cord. Capacity is one quart.

White Mountain Freezer. With its rugged good looks and excellent workmanship (this machine gets handed down through generations), the hand-crank White Mountain is the machine of choice for old-fashioned, fun-filled ice cream parties.

The traditional pine bucket (manufactured for more than a century) requires plenty of elbow grease, but churns ice cream that is smooth, creamy and with just the right amount of air (too much air makes a wishy-washy ice cream; too little makes it dense and soggy).

Of course, the product tastes even better when your own efforts have gone into cranking it.

The electric version produces equally impressive ice cream in a record-breaking 20 minutes or so.

Both machines are outfitted with cast-iron gear-frames and gears, and they come in four- or six-quart capacities. A large volume of chipped ice and rock salt is needed.

Two disadvantages of the electric version: The noise is outrageous; and the entire motor apparatus has to be removed for last-minute ingredients.

The hand-cranked freezer is $85, the electric version is $150.

Oster Designer Ice Cream Maker. Both this and the similar Waring Ice Cream Parlor model are easy-to-handle, inexpensive and widely available in department stores and discount appliance houses.

They are contemporary versions of the old-fashioned ice-bucket freezer, with plastic buckets and motors housed in the base.

Both use ice cubes and table salt instead of crushed ice and rock salt.

We tested the Oster, which was easy enough to assemble, but it produced a mess of salt and melting ice cubes and started to overflow when most of the original ice cubes had melted.

Despite a non-stop diet of ice and salt, the machine had trouble getting the mixture cold enough. The resulting ice cream was smooth and creamy but not firm enough to hold its own in a cone. Most recipes take about an hour to make.

The clear, partially open top allows the cook to check the consistency and to add small or pureed ingredients (however, chopped candy bars and cookies are too large).

The unit is very quiet and easy to store. For cleaning, the bucket is removable but cannot be immersed in water. The Oster makes two quarts of ice cream and costs about $40.

Now that you have the mechanics situated, here's a recipe to get you started. Remember, although Messieurs Baskin and Robbins really started something when they came up with 31 outrageous flavors of ice cream, they certainly didn't write the final chapter.

Today's trend-setting home chefs create new flavors each summer by adding a few mashed cookies, candy bars or fruit into the basic vanilla dessert.

VANILLA ICE CREAM
2 cups milk
1 cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
4 cups light or table cream
4 tablespoons vanilla

Scald milk. Add sugar and salt to milk and stir until both are dissolved. Add cream. Stir in vanilla. Cool. Turn into ice cream freezer. Process according to manufacturer's directions.

Yields approximately 2 quarts.

Ice cream soda drink hailed as an American institution

By LORNA J. SASS
Copley News Service

The creation of the ice cream soda is surely one of the most delightful examples of necessity acting as the mother of invention.

Most ice cream historians agree that the moment of creation occurred one day in 1874 when soft drink concessionaire Robert M. Green ran out of sweet cream at Philadelphia's Franklin Institute Exposition. This was a crisis point since Green's featured specialty was the "iced cream soda" made by pouring carbonated water, syrup and sweet cream over shaved ice.

Acting upon a spark of genius, Green began to substitute melted ice cream for sweet cream.

"The result was satisfactory," the inventor humbly wrote in his diary, "but people were slow to try the new novelty."

THE FIRST DAY day Green sold only $8 worth of ice cream sodas, but by the time the exposition closed, he was raking in $400 a day on the new-fangled drink — a good example of the power of word of mouth.

As it became increasingly stylish to gather around ornate soda fountains during the last quarter of the 19th century, the ice cream soda became firmly established as an American institution. But the old standard fountain-style drinks that had become popular decades earlier at the corner drugstore were still much in demand.

It is no accident that the earliest soda water drinks were sold at drugstores, for they were originally recommended for their medicinal value.

When an Englishman named Dr. Joseph Priestly figured out a way to produce carbonic gas in 1767, little did he imagine that 100 years later carbonated waters with added mineral salts would be prescribed as a cure for obesity.

AS TIME WENT ON, dispensers began adding artificially flavored syrups or eggs to make the medicinal drinks more palatable and healthful. And before long, Americans had a range of drinks with colorful names like phosphates, rickeys, fizzes, flipps, toddies, punches, egg creams, frappes, shakes, malteds and ades. And that infamous character, the soda jerk — so named for the jerking action of pumping out soda water and syrup — had become something of a folk hero with a growing vocabulary entirely his own.

The skill of the soda jerk must not be underestimated, for it took considerable practice to gain familiarity with the hundreds of drink recipes listed in such volumes as the "Modern Guide for Soda Dispensers" (1896), or "The Soda Water Formulary" (1902).

Furthermore, the "jerk" was expected to be something of a performer who could "shake, strain and throw." In the days before the blender, he had to aerate certain drinks by agitating them between a shaker and a glass. He was then expected to "throw" the liquid in an arc through the air from the shaker to the serving glass before it was set before the patron.

Unfortunately, by the mid-1930s, America's enthusiasm for the soda fountain began to wane. Many of the younger, talented "jerks" were drafted into the Army, and by the time they returned, the ice cream soda and lime rickey had begun to play second string to the B.L.T. and the tuna fish sandwich. Slowly but surely, the magnificently ornate wood-and-marble soda fountains gave way to the simpler, more streamlined Formica luncheonette counters that dominated during the '50s.

THE DEMISE OF the soda fountain in America is more than a little sad since many of the wonderful drinks on soda fountain menus are difficult to reproduce at home. For one thing, the range of syrups commonly available to the soda fountain dispenser was vast and included such esoteric candidates as crabapple, currant vinegar and wild strawberry. Secondly, the highly carbonated water and the pressure of the pump made it possible to aerate drinks in varying proportions, as required.

Nevertheless, some very tasty and refreshing soda fountain drinks can be prepared in a blender.

For best results in preparing the following drinks, be sure that all of the ingredients are very cold.

BROWN COW
(Root Beer- Chocolate Float)
½ cup cold half-and-half
3 tablespoons chocolate syrup
½ cup chilled root beer, approximately
1-2 scoops vanilla ice cream

Pour half-and-half into tall glass and stir in chocolate sryup. Add just enough root beer to reach about 2 inches below rim. Stir vigorously to blend. Add ice cream and serve immediately with a straw.

BURN ONE ALL THE WAY
(Chocolate Malted With Chocolate Ice Cream)
½ cup cold half-and-half
2 tablespoons chocolate syrup
1½ tablespoons malted milk powder (see note)
3 scoops (¾ cup) chocolate ice cream
Optional garnish: Freshly grated nutmeg
%In blender, combine ingredients and process for about 30 seconds, or until well mixed and frothy. Pour into tall glass and serve immediately with straw, garnished with nutmeg, if desired.

Note: If you prefer to omit malted milk powder, you may combine other ingredients for a thick chocolate shake.

SQUARE MEAL
1 egg
½ cup cold half-and-half
3 tablespoons chocolate syrup
2 scoops (½ cup) chocolate ice cream

In blender, combine ingredients and process for about 30 seconds, or until well-mixed and frothy. Pour into tall glass and serve immediately with straw.

BLACK AND WHITE
(Chocolate Ice Cream Soda)
One-third cup cold half-and-half
2 tablespoons chocolate syrup (see recipe below)
¾ cup no-salt soda water, approximately
2 scoops vanilla ice cream

Pour half-and-half into tall glass and stir in chocolate syrup. Add just enough sdoa water to reach about 2 inches below rim. Stir to blend. Add ice cream and serve immediately.

You may of course, purchase chocolate sryup, but the following recipe is simple to make and produces a syrup with a slightly more intense flavor than most commercial brands.

CHOCOLATE SYRUP
¾ cup sweetened cocoa powder, preferably Dutch-process
¾ cup sugar
2 teaspoons instant coffee powder
Pinch salt

Yields about 1¼ cups.

In small bowl, combine cocoa powder and sugar. In heavy saucepan, bring ¾ cup water to boil, then reduce to simmer and gradually whisk in cocoa-sugar mixture. Add coffee powder and salt, and continue whisking until mixture is smooth. Cool slightly, then put into wide-mouth jar and cool completely. Store in refrigerator until needed.

Aggie mom began support system

Loretta Franke

Four years ago, the Tall City did not have a Texas A&M University Mothers' Club, so Loretta Franke started one.

"Our minister had a friend who was the state president (of the Federation of Texas A&M University Mothers' Clubs). He told us about it and we got the ball rolling in the fall of '84," Mrs. Franke said.

She served as president the first year and was vice president the second year.

"After that, I backed off to allow room for others to participate," Mrs. Franke said. "If the same people keep doing everything, then others can't get involved."

To get the club started, Mrs. Franke contacted A&M for a list of Midland students attending at Aggieland. There were about 200 students attending from Midland County, so Mrs. Franke and Margie Lee, another Aggie mom, got together and mailed out letters to invite each Aggie mother to attend the first meeting.

"We had about 20 or 30 moms show up for the first meeting," Mrs. Franke said. "We started out with a good number and the group has grown since."

The Midland Mother's Club now has approximately 90 members who function as a support system: parent-to-parent or student-to-parent.

Lee Franke, Mrs. Franke's son, is the reason she became interested in starting a mothers' club. Lee is a December graduate with a bachelors degree in philosophy from A&M University and is planning to return to school to earn a bachelors degree in economics.

"The first year Lee was in school was just terrible. That first year is a hard one in the core," Mrs. Franke said. "My parents live in San Antonio and they made several trips over there (to A&M University in College Station) that first year."

In addition to being a support system, the group raises funds for the university. Each year the group makes and sells chances on an A&M quilt. The funds raised go to various university programs such as the band, the core and the mentor program.

Mrs. Franke's husband, Leland, is a graduate of the University of Texas at Austin. "We have a friendly rivalry at the house," Mrs. Franke said. "I sit on the fence, but I tend to fall off on the A&M side."

Since her son left home for college, Mrs. Franke said her schedule has slowed down just a little.

"I retired from taxi driving," Mrs. Franke said, adding that her son was involved in so many activities at Lee High School that he would sometimes have to change in the car.

Mrs. Franke now spends her time with various other activities. In addition to the Mothers' Club, she is a member of the Downtown Lioness Club and Midland Lutheran Church where she serves on the Alter Guild. She also volunteers in fund-raising at the Recording Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped.

Her cooking habits have changed quite a bit since Lee went to college as well.

"We eat out a lot now," Mrs. Franke said. "Spaghetti was the biggy for Lee. He also liked hamburger sandwiches — not hamburgers, but hamburger sandwiches — hamburger meat on plain white bread. That child had weird tastes though. He liked pretty plain food.

"But his tastes have changed since the girls at school have been cooking for him," Mrs. Franke said. "He even eats some vegetables now."

Although Mrs. Franke doesn't cook as much anymore, she did submit some of her recipes for inclusion in "Aggies, Moms and Apple Pie," a cookbook put together by the Federation of Texas A&M University Mothers' Clubs. In fact, she still has six copies of the book left for sale. Anyone interested in purchasing an Aggie cookbook can contact Mrs. Franke at 697-3448. The hardbound books sell for $15 each.

The following are some of Mrs. Franke's recipes that are included in "Aggies, Moms and Apple Pie" and some other family favorites.

Upset shopper assuaged with cinnamon toast

By NATHALIE DUPREE
New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — No one ever calls me and tells me they had a wonderful day at the supermarket, although people do call and tell me about the fun they had going to the Dekalb Farmers Market in Decatur, Ga.

I'm convinced that the reason many people aren't cooking anymore is the chore of grocery shopping. If there is food in the house, you will be inclined to make a quick meal when you've had a long hard day. If not, you'll go out.

As a child, before the days of the credit card, there were three important men in my life — the bread man, the egg man and the milkman. They delivered their wares weekly or daily.

WHEN MONEY was tight, they would advance the goods to my mother, helping us get through until that magical day — payday — when we would have a major grocery shop to hold us until more money came in. We learned if you have milk, bread, sugar, flour and eggs in the house, you can always get by.

If you wanted a treat or anything to tide you over to the next meal, you would make cinnamon toast or sugared milk bread, great comforts on coming home tired from school, or late at night, or when the day was a bit rough.

The worst grocery shopping disaster of my life occurred when we moved to London. I had no apprehensions of turmoil when I went to the Safeway to do my major setting-up-housekeeping shopping. The store had just opened, with much trumpeting and fanfare, including the message they would now have brown grocery bags.

This may not sound like much to you, but at that time, the English were still shopping every day at small shops, and they carried little net bags that could hold the average family's daily needs. Free brown bags had not been provided previously.

AFTER SHOPPING, my cart was loaded with pound bags of flour and sugar, gallons of milk, plenty of juices, as well as all the necessary staples — soaps, toilet paper, paper towels and detergents. I was hardly prepared for the huffing that went on as I stood in line. Everyone behind me only had a few items each. I was already an ugly American without even trying.

After checking out, I asked for the advertised brown paper bags so my groceries could be bagged. The clerk, casting her eye derisively at my mound of groceries, told me that they had run out. She began putting my groceries into thin little white paper bags, the kind you used to get in the dime store. They wouldn't hold the flour and sugar, so those were left unbagged. At the end of this laborious process, I had dozens of little white bags crammed full of oddments. Here some toothpaste, there a can of cat food. Nothing was packed in the kind of order we are used to in our indulgent, opulent American supermarkets.

I PURCHASED as many of the rope bags as the store had for sale to contain some of the little bags, but they still didn't meet my needs. With my new broom and mop under one arm, I gathered together my bags as best I could and staggered to the street. No one helped me because they not only didn't understand how I could get myself into this predicament caused by conspicuous consumption, they also were late for whatever they had to do, because the process of getting me out of the store had taken such an inordinate amount of time.

The story's end remains as clear to me today as if it were yesterday: It started to rain the moment I went outside the door, I couldn't find a taxi and the bags dissolved; I cried, but somehow I got home. Once there, I made cinnamon toast and felt a lot better, and then I got on the phone.

For the rest of the time we lived in London, we took advantage of a 24-hour telephone answering service at Harrod's, the posh department store that has a fabulous food hall. We would call at midnight when there was no trouble getting through to order our groceries. Mainly, I ordered cat food and sodas, toilet paper and other things that were bulky to carry.

The neighbor butcher and the poulterer delivered, as did the green grocer near my home, and other things were easily picked up at the little shops scattered around the neighborhood. Like other Londoners, I found myself shopping a bit every day — and I did find an egg man, milkman and bread man who delivered, just like they did when I was growing up.

CINNAMON TOAST

2 slices white loaf bread
2-4 tablespoons butter at room temperature
Sugar
Cinnamon

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Place toast on cookie sheet and place in oven until brown on one side. Turn. Spread with butter on untoasted side. Mix sugar with cinnamon to taste. Place back in oven until bubbly and soft in center, brown around edges. Cut on diagonal into 2 or 3 pieces. Accompany with hot chocolate made from milk and chocolate.

New chocolate melts slower

By BARNABY J. FEDER
New York Times News Service

Long years of monkeying with mousses at its Geneva laboratory has produced a sweet spinoff for the Battelle Memorial Institute, a research company in Columbus, Ohio. It is a chocolate that won't melt in hot weather.

Claude Giddey, Battelle Europe's manager for food technology, has been studying foaming and aeration techniques for food, which has led to aerified concoctions of mustard, honey, jam and mayonnaise. Recently, he combined the skills of avant-garde mousse design with the knowledge that adding water to chocolate raises its melting point.

Voila! A chocolate that stays firm at temperatures as high as 105 degrees Fahrenheit, around 25 degrees higher than normal chocolates. The trick is to distribute traces of water throughout the chocolate in a matrix that keeps the chocolate's fats from blending together as they warm up.

"It should cut down on refrigeration costs, make it handier for sportsmen to carry chocolate, and keep children's pockets a lot cleaner," said Bernard L. Vollegin, marketing manager for Battelle Europe.

THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Keep expenses in line and you will be able to get back on top again. Pay attention to any danger signals where your health is concerned. Walking may be better than running for you. There is lots of work to do, but you feel energized. Forge ahead! Make sure you are paid fairly for your work but try not to rock the boat. Travel furthers your education and spurs sales, too.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actors Jim Arness, Al Jolson, Philip Michael Thomas and John Wayne, actress Genie Francis, singer Peggy Lee, conservationist Laurence Rockefeller, actor Robert Morley, sportscaster Brent Musburger, astronaut Sally Ride.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Discuss a serious problem at once. You will lose ground if you postpone things. Mate will be supportive no matter what. Money dominates your thoughts. Other considerations may be more important.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): With very little effort on your part, the tide now turns in your favor. Do not take a passive stance with a sibling or child. A new relationship helps you open up.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A more realistic attitude leads to swifter progress. Bear down on detail work. Use the phone instead of travel to drum up new business. Retirement should not be viewed as a dead end.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your self-confidence grows, especially around members of the opposite sex. Your directness works wonders in money matters. A sibling will be there if needed. Give as good as you get.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Travel and good luck go hand-in-hand now. Common sense helps you develop a happy romantic relationship. You may be ready to make a commitment. Look after your health. Eat wisely.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A new partnership could prove highly profitable. Stick to your budget and guard against extravagance. Romance may be especially glamorous. A newcomer expresses an opinion that startles you. Think it over.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Creative ventures hold great promise. Your patience will be royally rewarded. A financial situation is on the way to a full recovery. Keep in touch with old friends.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You continue to shoulder too much of what should be a shared load. Creative and artistic efforts could lead to a second income. Consider your loved one's desires — and your own needs.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Secret transactions can boomerang, causing embarrassment. Be careful. People or events at a distance continue to affect your finances in an astounding way. Romance becomes more serious.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Watch out for a jealous associate who covets your job or contacts. A new partnership will prove highly profitable. Get to know a newcomer better before making demands. Avoid issuing ultimatums.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Careful budgeting will help you stretch your dollars. Do your homework thoroughly so you can proceed with confidence. You are strongly favored in law or politics. Romance is a source of delight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A problem that seemed insurmountable can be solved to your advantage. See each project to its proper conclusion. Spending more time alone with mate or partner will help you reach a better understanding.

Opening lead: ?

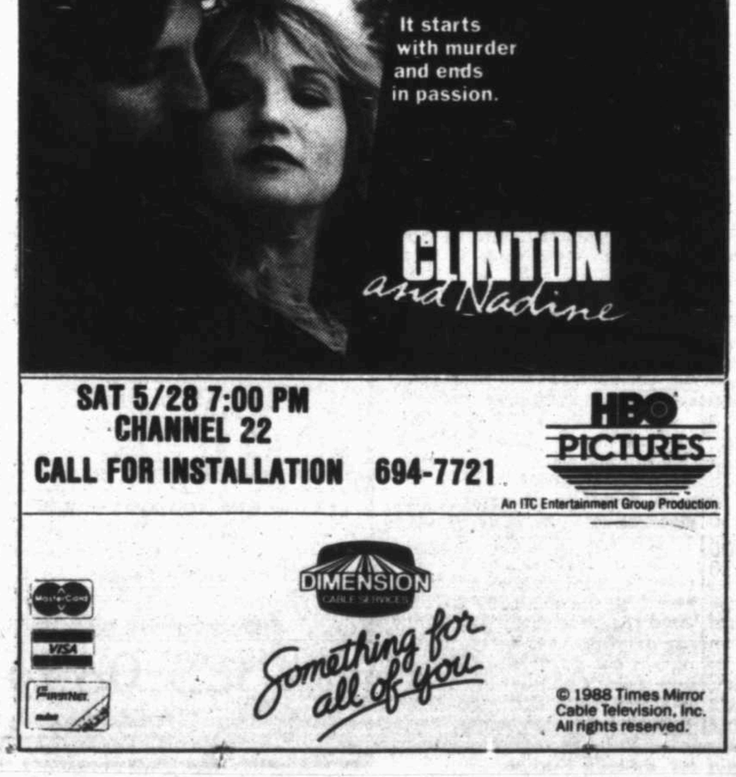

Every now and then, we get a letter from a young Turk asking why we do not write about a certain convention, or describe a particular artificial system. We have nothing against those who are searching for new frontiers in bridge. It's just that many of these hyper-modern methods too often paint a picture of the hand that makes life easy for the defenders.

To give you an idea of what can happen, here's a hand from the recent Spring North American Championships in Buffalo. Sitting North-South were a pair of superscientists, and their bidding, shown above, needs some explanation. North's opening bid of two diamonds showed a hand of 11-17 points and a six-card suit. His rebid of two spades confirmed heart support with a spade control (ace, king, void or singleton), and South's three clubs was an asking bid. The three-heart response promised second-round control, and Blackwood got North-South to six hearts.

Unfortunately for declarer, the defenders had been listening to all this exchange of information. Sitting West was Steve Robinson of Washington, D.C., one of the country's leading players. He knew that he was going to find either the king of clubs or a singleton in dummy, and that declarer had shown two club losers with his asking bid. So he selected the devilish opening lead of the three of clubs.

Not surprisingly, declarer never credited his opponent with leading away from an ace against a slam. He played low from dummy, East won the queen and returned a club. Down one.

Two musicians claim Richie, Jackson pirated their songs

Jackson

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two musicians who knew Michael Jackson during his boyhood in Gary, Ind., claim in a $400 million federal lawsuit that Jackson and Lionel Richie pirated such songs as "Thriller" and "We Are The World."

Reynaud Jones and Robert Smith, both of Gary, and a third man, Clifford Rubin of Chicago, are seeking the money from the two singer-songwriters, producer Quincy Jones, and others.

"We deny the allegations vehemently in both suits. Both are frivolous," Jackson's attorney, Robert Rotstein, said Tuesday.

"There are numerous such suits (against pop stars)," said Rotstein, who specializes in copyright cases. "This happens all the time...People are trying to trade in on the success of a talented person."

Jones, Smith and Rubin claim their music can be heard on Jackson's hit "Thriller'" and "We Are the World," the Jackson-Richie anthem that raised money for starvation victims in Africa.

The defendants also say "The Girl Is Mine" and "Another Part of Me," from Jackson's latest album "Bad," contain lyrics from songs they wrote. The lawsuit was filed in November.

Jones and Smith claim they grew up with the Jackson family in Gary, and Jones claims to have helped the brothers launch their career as the "Jackson 5."

Rotstein said Michael Jackson may have known Jones and Smith during his boyhood, but "I don't think they had a close relationship with Michael Jackson. They may have known a couple of the other brothers," Rotstein said.

The lawsuit is the second one pending against Jackson in Los Angeles federal court that claims the pop superstar pirated "We Are The World."

NEW YORK (AP) — Q: Where are you if you see a bowl of M&Ms and find that someone has removed all the brown ones?

A: Chances are, you're backstage at a concert by Van Halen; members of the rock band specifically demand that all brown M&Ms be deleted.

That's according to Leonard "Cy" Kocis, 41, the Mahwah, N.J.-based caterer who services rockers and other entertainers on the road. Sometimes, he said recently, his clients make peculiar demands.

For example:

The rock group Rush wants Coca-Cola, but only in the old-fashioned glass bottles. U2 wants shepherd's pie and Dom Perignon champagne. Tiffany has a hankering for Evian water and "a variety of kosher meats." Bon Jovi requires Jolt cola, the caffeine-laden drink. Frank Sinatra, by contrast, wanted only Campbell's chicken and rice soup — in a can.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Eddie Murphy has a lot of devoted fans, but the comedian really got his boat rocked during an outing in the Bahamas, where he's working on his second music album.

Murphy, 27, was taking a break and boating with friends when "a boat operated by overzealous fans collided with Mr. Murphy's boat, slightly injuring him and his three companions," his publicist, Terrie Williams, said Tuesday.

All four were treated at a hospital in Nassau and released, said Williams. Murphy is expected back in the United States later this week.

LIVERPOOL, England (AP) — Prince Charles helped dedicate a new gallery of modern art that will give a boost to this ailing industrial city once best known as the birthplace of the Beatles.

Charles on Tuesday reopened a renovated complex of Victorian warehouses in a development he hailed as of "immense importance." One of the the buildings contains an extension of London's Tate Gallery.

"This project will help enormously to restore the confidence of people in areas which once knew great success and prosperity and which will, I know, in due course return to that prosperity," the prince said.

The Tate Gallery is the national museum of British art and international modern art. in Liverpool, it will show paintings and sculpture that it doesn't always have space for in London.

"As Liverpool was already rich in museums and galleries, the Tate extension makes it the second art city in England after London," said the museum's curator, Richard Francis.

BERLIN (AP) — Britain's Princess Anne was in West Berlin for a British military parade today celebrating the 62nd birthday of her mother, Queen Elizabeth II.

Princess Anne, who is representing her mother, was greeted after her arrival Tuesday by West Berlin Mayor Eberhard Diepgen.

Officials say the procession includes 730 soldiers from the British garrison in West Berlin.

Elizabeth turned 62 on April 21.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Former "Dynasty" star Geoffrey Scott, hospitalized for two weeks after his legs were crushed between two cars, is recovering at home and expects to be walking soon.

Scott, who played Krystal's tennis-pro ex-husband and Alexis' former lover from 1982 to 1984 on "Dynasty," was on a bicycle when he was struck by a car, his agent said Tuesday.

The actor had stopped between two cars when one of the vehicles lurched forward and pinned him between the bumper of another auto, said agent Erin Connor.

"He's at home and he's doing fine," she said. "He expects to fully recover."

The 41-year-old actor, who also starred in the movie "The Morning After" with Jane Fonda, was released from St. John's Hospital last week, Ms. Connor said.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Associated Press and Time magazine have been cited for their coverage of the October stock market crash among the awards for excellence in business journalism from John Hancock Financial Services.

Awards announced Tuesday also went to Mark Hornung of Crain's Chicago Business, Daniel Akst of The Wall Street Journal, Guillermo X. Garcia and James Pinkerton of the Austin (Texas) American-Statesman, Andi Esposito of the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram and James Flanigan of the Los Angeles Times.

The Boston-based financial services company has presented the awards annually for 21 years to recognize "lucid reporting, interpretation and writing of business and financial news," said Hancock Chairman E. James Morton.

Savvy shoppers create exotic fare with American foods

By MAUREEN CLANCY
Copley News Service

Tonight's dinner promises to be a sophisticated, jet-setty affair.

For starters, we'll have foie gras entier — a whole goose liver sauteed with French shallots.

Then we'll move on to shimmering caviar on ice and escargot swimming in garlic-spiked melted butter. After that there is saucisson de canard, a smooth, savory duck sausage scented with thyme.

For an entree we will dig into exotic poultry — pheasant, Peking duck, Muscovy duck and quail — garnished with Japanese shiitake and French chanterelle mushrooms and basmati rice.

Then, after a cheese course of luxurious triple cremes and tangy chevres, accompanied by the finest claret wines, we will indulge in Italian biscotti and a glass of honeyed Sauternes-style dessert wine.

And the best thing about our feast is the healthy effect it will have on our nation's ailing balance of payments.

All of the ingredients are American-made.

NO LONGER DO we need to rely on Italian fields and fast airplanes for radicchio and sun-dried tomatoes. Both products are produced here.

We have French-style escargot, Belgian endive, Greek olives, Italian biscotti — all home-grown in the U.S.A. Even Gummi Baeren, the bear-shaped jelly candies from Germany, are now manufactured here in such distinctively American shapes as Garfield and running shoes.

The following profiles prove that eating American is a delicious strategy for dealing with the trade deficit.

■ ESCARGOT: During the '60s and '70s, when the budding yuppie generation was whirling through "the Continent," eating escargot in garlic butter was an important rite of passage.

Those who liked the experience had to pay dearly for cans of French imported snails once they got back home. Now, those fans can enjoy the gutsy, garlic-spiked dish made with a home-grown product.

At Enfant Riant California Escargot Co. in Petaluma, about a million snails each month are grown, fed, cleaned and canned for distribution to about 400 restaurants, gourmet shops and department stores.

Originally, owner Tracy Brash had an agreement with local kiwi and citrus farmers to collect the unwanted creatures that congregate by the thousands around the fruit trees. Now Enfant Riant (which means laughing child) raises snails on its 10 acres of grapefruit trees.

BRASH SAID his company's technique for processing the snails is superior to that of the French. "Ours are the only escargot in the world that are packed in just water," he said. "They are not flavored by preservatives or brine."

The company sells to both restaurants and gourmet shops.

At present, export is to Singapore only, but Brash said he anticipates orders from Japan soon. "We've also started marketing efforts in France," he said. "The French have had an attitude problem, but we think we can get around that."

Escargot is one of France's most traditional foods. It is said that vats of live snails were carried into battle by Napoleon's army.

Americans have generally snubbed the pesky slug. However, latest trade figures put escargot imports from France and Taiwan at more than $200 million.

Exotic foods like this roasted chicken can be prepared with a little imagination and shopping savvy.

■ BELGIAN ENDIVE: Tucked away in a darkened, refrigerated room, thousands of homely, dirty brown chicory roots get treated to a computer-controlled diet of water and nutrients. After a monthlong incubation period, each flat of 500 roots blossoms into beautiful, cream-colored endive — iceberg lettuce's cosmopolitan and costly cousin.

Endive has long been considered a salad staple in European countries and is known as the national vegetable of Belgium. Its ivory-colored leaves are crunchy, with a faintly bitter taste.

Last year, Belgian endive was successfully grown on Long Island, N.Y. — the result of nearly a decade of experimentation by S. Raymond Robins, a Wall Street broker and professional farmer. According to industry sources, Robins' product was superb.

However, he has not planted a new crop this year. "We got hurt in the marketplace by imports; it was nothing short of dumping," said Robins. "But we plan to be back in the market by next year for sure."

Other commercial efforts at growing endive have been reported in Arizona, California, Connecticut and Massachusetts.

■ CHEESES: American cheeses include an aged, elegant chevre from Northern California, a refined Camembert from Massachusetts, a creamy blue from Wisconsin, a well-aged Cheddar from Vermont or even an American brie from Illinois.

Until recently, such fine, pricey cheeses were predominantly imported from Europe. But the nation's growing interest in food encouraged many small businessmen to invest in food-related cottage industries. Cheese has been one of the most popular adventures.

Laura Chenel made her first cheese, a soft, fresh, mild goat cheese, in 1981 in a ramshackle facility on a dirt road in Santa Rosa, Calif. Today her name is synonymous with chevre and she ships throughout this country and to France.

One of Chenel's French-born teachers, Marie-Claude Chaleix, now works for Coach Farm Cheeses in the Hudson Valley of New York. Coach Farms chevre has been widely acclaimed for its intense yet refined flavor, and is currently being exported to Paris.

Sadie Kendall Co. of Atascadero, Calif., though best known for its impressive chevre, also makes a good American version of creme fraiche, a tangy, sour-creamlike milk product. Though purists may complain that no American creme fraiche can challenge the real unpasteurized, French thing, Kendall's is a close second. Kendall distributes about 200 gallons of creme fraiche weekly throughout the United States.

Production of cow's milk cheeses is concentrated in the Midwest and Vermont. Nauvoo Blue Cheese Co. in Nauvoo, Ill., and Maytag Dairy Farm in Newton, Iowa, both turn out impressive blue-veined cheeses that add sparkle to a simple green salad. Shelburne Farms and Guilford Cheese Co., both of Vermont, specialize in Cheddars and soft-ripened cow's milk cheeses respectively.

And in Texas, cheese maker Paula Lambert's cheeses are so well-known that many Houston and Dallas restaurants simply list them on menus as "Paula's Cheeses." One of Lambert's specialties is mascarpone, a light, creamy, fragile Italian cheese.

Other American-made cheeses that are gaining in popularity include a very good Gouda from Yakima Valley Cheese Co. in Sunnyside, Wash., and Emmenthaler and Gruyere made from raw milk (permitted under federal law if the cheese is aged at least 60 days) from Hawthorne Valley Farm, Ghent, N.Y.

■ ITALIAN SPECIALTIES: Timber Crest Farms in Healdsburg, Calif. harvests its tomatoes from the fertile ground of Sonoma County and dries them the old-fashioned way — washed with cold water only, cut in half and dried in dehydrating tunnels.

The product is savory without a trace of bitterness and is packaged without preservatives or salt. The sun-dried tomatoes are available in 3-ounce plastic bags or in jars with olive oil.

Most of the olive oils on gourmet shop shelves are still imported from Italy. However, a couple of American concerns offer reputable alternatives.

Since 1982, when they produced 2,500 gallons of extra virgin olive oil from their own olives, the folks at Santa Barbara Olive Co. have been winning tastings and impressing home cooks.

The company, owned and operated by Craig Makela, now produces 30,000 gallons of olive oil. The product is sold in all 50 states and is exported to Italy, France, Spain, Japan and British Columbia.

Makela, who was a wine maker before starting this business, uses old winery equipment and a wine maker's highly developed nose and palate to turn out his product.

A recent blind tasting, held by the International Olive Oil Council in Los Angeles, awarded Santa Barbara Olive Co. top honors. More than 35 companies representing 20 countries were involved in the tasting.

The DiCamillo Bakery in Niagara Falls, N.Y. started out in 1920 as a mom 'n' pop bread bakery. Today, the family-owned and operated business includes the original bakery, two other retail outlets and a large, highly respected line of packaged goods that are shipped to gourmet shops and supermarkets throughout the United States.

DiCamillo's Biscotti di Vino are buttery, wine-flavored biscuits; Biscotti di Formaggio are savory, cheese biscuits. Focaccia, breadsticks and Pizzelle, rich, hazelnut cookies done in a waffle iron, are other impressive products.

"This year is our first experience with exporting," said Michael DiCamillo, who together with his three brothers, father, uncle and two aunts, runs the company. "We sent our product to Hong Kong and Tokyo.

■ MUSHROOMS: It is impossible to overplay the contribution that fresh wild mushrooms have made to modern American cooking.

These intensely flavorful, subtly scented fungi have always been available to bold folks willing to forage in the woods. But the rest of us have had to settle for simple, cultivated white button mushrooms, also known as champignons de Paris.

Now there is a successful domestic mushroom industry involved in cultivating many types of mushrooms as well as collecting and distributing wild mushrooms.

Oregon is one of the states in the forefront of the industry.

The Cascade Mushroom Co., located near Mount Hood in Oregon's Cascade mountain range, is a broker for the mushrooms cultivated by some 200 growers throughout the country. According to Matt Briggs, owner with his wife Eileen, the company is also "direct collector of wild mushrooms all year round."

"We sell every mushroom there is, as long as there's a profit in it," said Briggs. "The most popular cultivated mushrooms include oyster, shiitake, enoki, woodear, and white trumpet."

Briggs operates his own crews for collecting wild mushrooms and buys directly from collectors in other parts of the country. What gourmet cooks had to buy in dried form (imported from Europe) just five or 10 years ago can now be obtained fresh from United States forests.

Briggs cited chanterelles and matsutake in the autumn; morels in April; porcini in May and September; and hedgehog and black trumpets in winter as the most popular wild mushrooms.

Cascade Mushroom Co. sells wholesale to restaurants, gourmet shops and supermarkets throughout the country. In 1987, the company marketed about 100,000 pounds of mushrooms in the United States, Europe and Japan.

Epicurean Specialty in San Francisco is another company bringing wild mushrooms to the home cook.

"We have pickers throughout the Pacific Northwest who work with my partner Craig Kodros, a mycologist," said Sandra VanVoorhis, co-owner of the company.

The pickers collect such mushrooms as chanterelles, porcini and morels, which are then dried in the fields, then packed in 1-ounce retail packs. Prices range from $5 to $15 per ounce of the dried product.

OTHER FRUITS AND VEGETABLES: Until recently, all shallots were imported from France. Today, growers in 14 states are competing successfully with European imports.

Gwenyth and Theo Caldwell of Goldendale, Wash., preside over an acre and a half of shallots that they started growing from bulbs they carried back from France. They now ship throughout the country.

This upscale member of the onion family looks like a tiny cluster of two or three "cloves" clinging to each other. The bulbs have a distinctive flavor that is subtler and milder than that of a regular onion. They are most valuable in the preparation of delicate butter sauces and such egg-based sauces as bearnaise and hollandaise.

Kiwi fruit, the fuzzy little darling of New Zealand, is now grown in large quantities in southern California. Beth Petlak, a spokesperson for Frieda's Finest, a marketer of specialty produce based in Los Angeles, said efforts also are being made to grow the trendy, lime-green fruit in several southern states.

"We're also trying to grow jicama on experimental farms in Florida," said Petlak. "At present the only place we can get a commercial quality of the product is Mexico."

EXOTIC POULTRY: Perhaps nothing says luxury quite like pheasant under glass. But this wild bird is no longer just the province of European royalty and America's "rich and famous." Several concerns in northern California raise pheasants for sale to restaurants and select markets.

Krout's Pheasant Farm in Petaluma has been raising pheasant, wild turkey and a few other exotic birds for 28 years. Most of their pheasants are sold to hunting preserves. However, about 1,500 each year are sold to restaurants and individuals who pick them up at the farm.

Reichardt's Duck Farm, also in Petaluma, markets 18,000 Peking ducks each week to restaurants and small butcher shops in northern California. The duck is smaller and less meaty than the Muscovy duck that is showing up on many nouvelle cuisine restaurants. Muscovy ducks are also being raised in northern California.

Bruce Aidells in Kensington, Calif., is known in food circles as the man to see for superb sausage. The best known of his products, made in a small San Francisco factory, are the duck sausage with green peppercorns and the smoked duck sausage. He also produces Louisiana-style andouille and tasso, creole hot sausage, mild and hot Italian sausage, beef chorizo, turkey kielbasa and a beer sausage spiced with cayenne.

OTHER GOOD FOODS: No longer must American cooks rely on dried herbs. Fresh bouquets of cilantro, tarragon, sorrel, thyme, flat Italian parsley and dill are routinely available in most supermarkets.

Kent Taylor's Herb Farm in Vista, Calif. has received national recognition for its extraordinary variety of plants.

In the past, the fancy jams and marmalades exhibited at the national fancy food shows have been imported from France, Belgium and England. Today, there are hundreds of American-made products, some made with exotic fruits, others boasting Grandma's secret recipe.

And while most purists will still insist on the preeminence of fresh chocolate bonbons from Belgium, many American companies are doing their best to satisfy the nation's sweet tooths.

Dom DeLuise offers array of Southern Italian dishes

By CHARLES BRITTON
Copley News Service

I approached "Eat This, It'll Make You Feel Better" by Dom DeLuise warily. It bore all the earmarks of a vanity production, including raves from the comedian's friends such as Burt Reynolds ("Dom is Julia Child in drag") and Phyllis Diller ("This book is so delicious, I use my tongue for a bookmark").

Paging through it provided little reassurance. Here was picture after picture of Dom, mostly with his mouth open. At least one shot was printed twice. And here was Dom with Mel Brooks, with Mel Brooks and Anne Bancroft, with the Reagans, with Dean Martin, with look-alikes tenor Luciano Pavarotti and chef Paul Prudhomme.

But wait a minute.

What's this he says about cheese for grating over pasta? Parmagiano Reggiano is usually best, but you should taste samples to find the one you like. Well, that's certainly right.

He prefers a mixture of Parmagiano and Romano. So do I.

I came across a recipe for a fried sweet pastry, just like the kind that appeared at every gathering of the Italian side of my family. We called them spingi; these are zeppoli. But then my family came from Sicily, whereas Mama and Papa DeLuise arrived in the Bensonhurst section of Brooklyn from Potenza, located in the instep of the Italian boot.

The recipes — many from his mother, who, he says, is the kind of mom who will cook for you if you wake up at 3 a.m. — turn out to form a sound collection of home-style Southern Italian dishes, simple but elemental in their appeal.

On matters of food, I found only one point where I would disagree with DeLuise. He accepts store-grated cheese. Heresay! Buy it in chunks and grate it yourself as you need it. That way you get the best flavor.

Few of the recipes are elaborate. They depend on fresh ingredients, a sprinkling of herbs and quite a bit of garlic. Eat dishes like those we sample here and you probably will feel better.

BROCCOLI WITH RIGATONI

8 tablespoons olive oil
2 tablespoons butter
4 garlic cloves, minced
Flowerets from 1 bunch of broccoli
1 cup chicken broth
1 cup fresh basil, coarsely chopped
1 pound rigatoni (or other thick stubby pasta)
Chopped parsley, pepper, grated cheese

In large skillet, heat oil and butter; gently brown garlic. Add broccoli flowerets (you can use stems for something else) and stir gently, raising heat to high. Add chicken broth, cover and simmer just until broccoli is al dente, about 5 minutes.

Meanwhile, cook rigatoni in plenty of boiling water until it, too, is al dente. Drain and combine with broccoli and half the chopped basil. Serve sprinkled with parsley, pepper, cheese and the remaining basil.

Yields four servings.

This is another dish out of DeLuise's childhood — and mine too. I well remember my aunts making it.

MAMA'S CHICKEN

2 chickens, cut into serving pieces
1 cup lemon juice
2 cups seasoned bread crumbs
2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese
1 onion, sliced
Olive oil

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Dip chicken into lemon juice and then roll in seasoned bread crumbs mixed with Parmesan. Place in baking dish with onion in and around it. Sprinkle with olive oil and bake for 1 hour, uncovered. Serve with lemon wedges, if desired.

(For the bread crumbs, I strongly recommend making your own, by whirling leftover French or Italian bread in blender or food processor until finely milled. Add salt and pepper and mix well. Store-bought crumbs too often have a stale taste.)

Designer creates restaurants with surrealistic, trendy atmospheres

Associated Press

Sam Lopata designs restaurants — and the holes in the tile floor, the unpainted plumbing pipes and the high noise level all are strictly intentional.

The result, according to an article in the current issue of Connoisseur, has been a series of "in" eating places to which trendy New Yorkers flock. And they don't go for the food.

Lopata came to New York from his native France in 1971 and has been designing restaurants since 1976 — Chez Pascal, Joanna, the Ice Palace, The Red Parrot, Batons, Prunelle, Pig Heaven, Extra! Extra!

In a Lopata restaurant you can't help but pay attention. Walk into Home On The Range, a barn of a place that serves simple Texas food. A bundle of old clothes might be hanging from a clothesline on the front porch.

Inside, Lopata has slapped cliched pieces of Texas style all over — old shed doors, tin pails dripping water into tin washbasins, crumbling adobe walls, a worn wooden table and benches.

The facade of the bar is corrugated brushed tin, the chairs are bruised tin and the lights stand on unpainted plumbing pipes.

"I am tending more and more to the surreal," Lopata said.

Lopata restaurants became great, if sometimes short-lived, successes, because of the design. When he started in 1976, he said, there were not enough good chefs to go around.

"Also, the taste level of the American public was not there yet," he said. "They didn't know what good food was. So we attracted people by the design. Nobody cared what it tasted like."

He said that is changing as Americans discover cuisine.

"The taste level of the public has really risen tremendously and now you cannot lure them into a restaurant only by the design," he said.

"It doesn't work. Or maybe it works once. We are at the stage where you are going to see much less design in restaurants. Now the emphasis is going to be on food and not on design."

"We have mixed the food business and the entertainment business," he said. "It is one business in this country. In Europe, we still have two businesses and you are not expecting to be entertained in a restaurant. Here, everything is show business."

Lopata's restaurants tend to be noisy.

"Noisy is good," he said. "It creates energy. I always believe that if you want to talk philosophy with people you don't go to a restaurant."

Trash haulers 'fill up' at diner near landfill

By MARY ELLEN ALU

TAYLOR, Pa. (AP) — Daylight was just beginning to break when the men from Bridgewater, N.J., made their regular breakfast stop at the diner.

They ordered eggs and bacon and pancakes, downed cups of coffee or tea and raved about Vinny the Cook — Vinny Burney, 29.

The place looks like any other diner — a few booths, counter space, grills, menus and waitresses.

Consider, too, the diner's name, which is pronounced with a French accent: Le Garba'ge.

Landfill manager Alan W. Stephens dreamed up that one. Even though he took a little ribbing, the name seemed appropriate considering that garbage is dumped just 200 feet away, beyond some trees.

"People ask, 'Why a diner?' Our answer is, 'Why not?' " said Stephens.

Restaurant manager Joseph Fumanti, 40, says business has been good since the diner opened in late January.

"They laughed about it at first — a diner at a landfill? — but it's been working wonders for us," Fumanti said.

Reginald Hayes, a Philadelphia trash hauler, was one of the skeptics.

"I couldn't imagine myself sitting on top of garbage, eating," said Hayes, as he finished his breakfast on a recent morning. "I was a little leery at first. The food is good, though."

As far as Stephens and other landfill employees know, the diner is the only one in the state, and possibly the country, that's located at a landfill.

"We're just more advanced than other landfills," said Rickie Consenza, 23, an assistant cook at the diner. "We have more ideas, better ideas."

The diner, which seats about 36 people, is open Monday through Saturday. It isn't making a profit yet, but Stephens says profits aren't the landfill owners' driving motivation in operating the restaurant.

Instead, said Stephens and other landfill employees, the owners primarily wanted the landfill, which opened last November on about 512 acres, to be a good neighbor.

He said the owners, a group of men from Plymouth Meeting, decided long ago that they didn't want a lot of tractor-trailers on Taylor's streets, clogging and dirtying the roads.

The owners also worried about safety problems if haulers stopped at area restaurants and parked their rigs on the streets, since adequate parking wasn't available, he said.

Stephens, however, says he's hoping the diner also will help build the area's confidence in the Empire Sanitary Landfill, especially among those whose fears have been fueled by other landfills that broke state rules in the past, had operational problems or illegally accepted hazardous wastes.

"(We) thought it would show we intend to run a good landfill," Stephens said. "We feel confident enough that there's not going to be a problem at this landfill that we're willing to put a restaurant within 200 feet of where we're putting waste."

Although the diner is open to the public, anyone headed there must first pass through the landfill's front gate and obtain a pass. Most of the diner's customers, however, are landfill employees and haulers.

"It's a good setup; it really is," said hauler Jim Stangle, finishing a breakfast of eggs and bacon.

The diner, Fumanti said, seems to be catching on.

American pizza king becoming famous British entrepreneur

By COTTEN TIMBERLAKE

STAPLEFORD PARK, England (AP) — Strapping, exuberant Bob Payton, Britain's most famous American entrepreneur, has one very prominent British characteristic: eccentricity.

It's evident all over Stapleford Park, the 500-year-old country house the man who became London's pizza king is turning into a hotel-like-no-other in his latest venture.

For example, he'll have a fire in the fireplace every day of the year, not for the heat but for the smell.

Then there's the trompe l'oeil in the grand tea room. Peering over the painted banister is a likeness of Gunther, Mrs. Payton's giant schnauzer, wearing a red-white-and-blue bandanna. The dog was added to the decor to celebrate his release from the six-month quarantine required of every immigrating pet.

"I wanted things to be 5 degrees off," Payton said, explaining his desire to have things a bit off-kilter.

Gunther now trots happily around the 55-acre estate in Leicestershire hunt country, where Payton and his wife, Wendy, are striving to create the American dream of an English country house. More specifically, it's a Victorian gentleman's hunting lodge, which opened its doors to guests in April.

"It's sort of Disney World for real," said Payton, who is 6 feet 4 inches tall and weighs 250 pounds and on this misty day was wearing a bold argyle sweater with matching socks.

PAYTON BOUGHT the home, 110 miles north of London, from Lord John Gretton of the Bass brewing family more than two years ago. He used $1.4 million of his own money and since has spent millions more of investors' money renovating it.

Payton, who became famous and wealthy by bringing Chicago-style, deep-dish pizza to London, is deliberate in his details and panders to American notions of what is English.

The 23 rooms and suites, which cost $160 to $611 a night, have been decorated not only by the usual interior designers but also by well-known English companies, chosen for their recognizeable brand names.

For the Wedgwood Room, the chinaware makers chose handprinted wallpaper in its blue-with-white-cameos Jasper design.

Shirtmakers Turnbull and Asser hung framed bow ties and curtains made of forest green velvet, of the smoking-jacket variety, lined with silk paisley.

The Liberty Room is cheered with the fabric designer's renowned small-flower prints.

The 125-room house, with a grand, sweeping staircase, is long on marble, mahogany paneling, 16-foot ceilings, leather sofas and framed pictures of British royalty.

Peek into the "loo," the men's room, and heads of wildebeests stare down at you from high on the walls.

Not wanting the hotel to look too new, he ordered reproductions of Victorian spigots.

From the stone mullion windows are stunning views of gently undulating, green countryside featuring sheep, frolicking horses in a grazing paddock and a still lake.

Payton has worked under the close scrutiny of British preservation officials who have allowed him some distinctly American flourishes, too, like the miniature golf course and a basketball net and backboard. Homemade chocolate-chip cookies are left on bedside tables in the rooms.

Payton, who went to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and still gulps diet soda from an oversized school mug, is treating the hotel like an informal house party.

THE LAND ROVER that picks up guests at the train station, half an hour away in Grantham, arrives with a cooler stocked with Chicago beer.

"It's not going to be a health farm," said Payton.

He has lived in Britain for 15 years and first saw the house in 1980 while he was "riding to hounds," or fox hunting.

"I walked through the front door of the place and I knew it had to be preserved for what it was," Payton said. "This is quite a staggering edifice."

At the time, he added, "I was looking for something new to invent. I thought, 'What am I going to do with my life once I've created my business?'"

Payton launched that business with a pizza restaurant in 1977, when he quit the J. Walter Thompson advertising agency, which had hired him in Chicago and transferred him to London.

Payton had worked his way through college playing drums in a rock band, and went on to Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill., to earn a master's degree in advertising.

The son of a traveling salesman, Payton was born in Troy, N.Y., and reared in Miami.

Although he had trouble raising the initial $66,000 for his first pizza restaurant, his company became hugely successful and will be operating 14 restaurants with names like Chicago Pizza Pie Factory and Chicago Rib Shack in London and on the European continent by the end of the year.

The company is called My Kinda Town Ltd. — Payton says that refers both to Chicago and London — and had an after-tax profit of $1.88 million on revenue of $21 million in 1987.

PAYTON MANAGED to raise $8.5 million for Stapleford Park by privately selling stock in My Kinda Town, in which he retains a majority interest.

What makes this hotel a bold experiment is that it's in a part of the country that has traditionally attracted few tourists.

It is a two-hour drive from Heathrow Airport in London, or a 90-minute train ride from London's King's Cross station, before you get into the Rover and take a beer from the cooler.

Payton, who lives in a private wing of Stapleford Park, is relying on word of mouth instead of advertising and says not only Americans will come to his hotel.

"Americans don't want to come here and meet other Americans," he said. "The worst thing is people coming here and it's all Americans."

DEAR ABBY

Pretty face won't get daughter a date

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My 20-year-old daughter is a beautiful young lady with a great personality, a terrific figure and everything going for her — so it would seem. Her problem: She does not get asked out. Many men admire her, but nobody asks her out. She's joined groups at her college and church hoping to meet eligible men, but still no dates.

Some of her friends have told her that men are intimidated by beautiful women, and they hesitate to ask her out because they are afraid of being turned down. Believe me, she would jump at the chance to go to a movie or dinner.

Abby, don't men ask women out anymore? Or is it up to the women to do the asking these days? She's getting very discouraged because she hasn't had a date in six months. Any suggestions? — INDIANA MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Yes. Tell your daughter there is nothing wrong with inviting a man out. Most would be flattered, and if she's as terrific as you say she is, he will ask for a return engagement. Also, a woman should never give the impression that she's desperate — even if she is. A self-confident attitude will do more for a woman than a pretty face.

DEAR ABBY: You once said there is no such thing as a dumb question. Well, I hope you won't think this is one — especially when you find out it's coming from a 52-year-old married woman. Here goes: I just purchased a pair of identical lamps to put on a pair of identical tables on either side of my sofa. These lamps have cellophane wrappers on the shades. Should I remove the cellophane, or leave it on? If I left it on, the shades would be protected from dust.

My husband says to take off the cellophane, as it looks tacky.

Please answer in the paper, and don't mention my name or I would never live it down. Thank you. — EMBARRASSED IN ST. PETERSBURG

DEAR EMBARRASSED: With a husband as smart as yours, you don't need to write to Dear Abby.

DEAR ABBY: I share an apartment with a girl who has two cats. I am not particularly crazy about cats, but I can live with them. The problem is the litter boxes. She has one in the bathroom and one in the kitchen, and you can smell them before you see them.

I am now buying a two-bedroom house. I would like this girl to share the house with me, but I don't want the odor of cats permeating the place. I know if I tell her that the litter boxes should be cleaned more often she'll clean them once, then forget about it until I remind her again. We've been through this several times.

My question: Would it be acceptable if she were to move into my house with me to ask her to keep the litter box in her bedroom? — NO CAT LOVER

DEAR NO: Acceptable, yes. Workable, unlikely. You have already learned that your roommate is able to tolerate the odor of cats permeating the place. If you can't, either be prepared to change the litter box yourself or learn to live with the odor, because it would only be a matter of time before your entire house would smell.

New MISD board gets down to work

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Members of the new school board barely had said, "I will," Tuesday when the time came to make decisions the seven had merely hypothesized about in their springtime campaigns.

Dealing with the $11.8 million bond issue, spending $1.2 million on merit teacher stipends, drawing boundaries, reassigning bus routes, renewing property insurance, ingesting student test scores, authorizing the training of more "high risk" counselors and meeting in executive session were chores accomplished unanimously at the first gathering of the new Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees.

After State District Judge Pat Baskin swore in the new members, District 7 trustee Bob Rich was elected board president; District 1 trustee James Fuller was elected vice president and District 6 trustee Ken Marks was elected secretary.

Other new trustees sworn in Tuesday were Adela Marmolejo, District 2; Ken Morrison, District 3; and George Staley, District 5.

Fuller and District 4 trustee Jim Builta took their oaths two weeks ago.

Trustees called a special meeting — tentatively scheduled for Tuesday, May 31, at 4 p.m. — to consider concepts of the $11.8 million bond issue which will pay for new elementary school classrooms.

At that meeting, trustees also will discuss how many years the bonds are to be financed and how that move will affect the tax rate.

"This is a very sophisticated decision we have to make," Superintendent Joe Baressi explained to the new board.

Trustees approved state-mandated "career ladder" merit pay stipends for 499 MISD teachers.

The $1.2 million authorized Tuesday comes from a House Bill 72 requirement calling for teachers to be paid end-of-year bonuses if they have met certain requirements over the past year pertaining to experience and performance.

Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

State District Judge Pat Baskin, foreground, swears in new Midland Independent School Board trustees who won runoff races last Saturday. From left are Bob Rich, Ken Morrison, Adela Marmolejo, George Staley and Ken Marks. The remaining two new members were sworn in two weeks ago.

Trustees on first reading decided that Big Spring Street would be the north-south boundary for West and Bunche Early Childhood Centers.

Students have the option of attending the two centers designed for pre-kindergarteners who are from low-income families or who have limited English proficiency.

West Elementary was closed last fall but — keeping the old board's promise — will reopen next fall as an early childhood center.

At West there also will be special education and bilingual classes for primary-age children, and Bunche will continue to hold Headstart classes and kindergarteners on their way to first grade at Travis Elementary as well.

Students whose parents might face transportation problems because of the Big Spring boundary may apply for a waiver to the new rule, trustees voted.

Rural bus students who attended Parker Elementary last year will attend Scharbauer Elementary next fall, trustees decided.

The need to balance enrollments between the two elementaries caused the switch for the 92 bused K-5 students, Baressi explained.

Trustees agreed with Baressi's recommendation that an option for those rural students in grades 4 and 5 to remain in the Parker Elementary cluster be granted.

The new board also voted Tuesday to maintain the district's current property and general liability insurance carrier, Texas School Services Foundation.

The TSSF is a subsidiary of the Texas Association of School Boards.

A yearly premium of $178,016 will be paid by the district to provide $3.2 million in general and school board liability and coverage for musical instruments and MISD computers.

Bids from Midland and Odessa insurance agents were passed over as they would have resulted in premiums $80,000 and $45,000 higher for the same amount of coverage.

The results of the third-, fifth-, seventh- and ninth-grade TEAMS (Texas Assessment of Minimum Skills) tests were announced Tuesday.

The percentage of third graders mastering the minimum reading, writing and math tests increased across the board as did the percentage of the fifth and seventh graders.

Ninth-graders dropped in their proficiency levels in math and reading, but increased one percent in the writing levels.

Pease Elementary was recognized by the Texas Education Agency for an "exceptional gain" in test scores, according to a TEA press release.

MISD counselor Pat Cobb spoke to trustees about the need to train more counselors to help with "at-risk" students.

Trustees authorized a three-day training session for the "insight" counselors who will oversee on-campus support groups to provide aid to students who have had problems with attendance, grades, chemical abuse or are at risk of dropping out.

The Junior League of Midland is providing the funding for the training courses, Cobb explained. MISD will pay for the expenses of the five counselor trainers while in Midland.

Trustees met in executive session to discuss a property purchase.

Midlander uses sweater lure to reel in Bush vote

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

On a recent fishing trip to Northern Arkansas, Midlander Martin Allday netted a prized catch — a vote for his long-time friend and likely Republican presidential nominee George Bush.

But Allday had to pay a price. The vote cost him his red, V-neck Bush '88 sweater to Eileen Snyder, owner of The Ozarks Restaurant, which is next to Jimmy Driftwood Barn on Highways 9, 5, and 14.

"We were driving up in the Ozarks and we came upon a town called, Mountain View, which is not a very big place," Allday said. "There were 14 of us and we pulled into this catfish place called The Ozarks Restaurant.

"They were closed, so we beat on the door and a woman came to the window. She asked how many were in our party and opened the door."

She opened and heated up the stove.

About halfway through the meal, Allday — who was wearing the sweater — said he covered the Bush '88 applique with his napkin. "I don't know know what possessed me to do it, but I covered it with a napkin and sat her down.

"I asked her who she was going to vote for in the presidential race and whether she would consider voting for George Bush?

"She said, 'I don't think so.' "

On the group's return from their White River fishing trip, Allday said they stopped at Mrs. Snyder's restaurant for a second time.

"About halfway through the meal, she sat down and said, 'You know I've been thinking about what you said about George Bush the other day. I think I will vote for him, but I sure would like that red sweater,' " Allday recalled.

> "About halfway through the meal, she sat down and said, 'You know I've been thinking about what you said about George Bush the other day. I think I will vote for him, but I sure would like that red sweater.' "
>
> —Midlander Martin Allday

Allday pointed out, "Those words were music to my ears" and he wrote Bush and passed on the story.

Allday's association with the vice president began in 1954, while Bush was living in Midland.

"I met him over at my wife's house when I was courting her. He and his wife (Barbara) would come across the street with their three children. And our paths crossed in civic work."

In 1964, Allday agreed to run Bush's Midland County campaign against Ralph Yarborough for the United States Senate. He later became state campaign chairman.

"I had the easiest job in the state because he had lived here and he was very popular. It was easy to raise money for him because a lot of folks knew what a wonderful guy he was," he said.

Midway through the 1964 campaign, Bush asked Allday to oversee his statewide race.

A young lawyer at the time, Allday initially declined the offer and opted to stay in Midland with his wife and three children. But he agreed to take the job if Bush won the Republican primary, which he did.

"I took about five months off and moved to Austin, left my wife and kids here and shut down my law practice within three days.

"We thought we had a shot at winning, but as it turned out, we didn't," he explained.

What Allday didn't expect from his fishing trip for votes was a vice presidential reply to Mrs. Snyder.

On a small white card, Bush wrote, "My close friend Martin Allday told me about meeting you and giving you the red sweater. He loved being in your restaurant.

"Martin says you might just vote for me. I promise I'll work hard to keep our country on the move."

Mrs. Snyder said she never dreamed she'd get a personal handwritten letter from George Bush, which she has since shown to nearly everyone in the town, whose official population is about 2,100.

"In fact, I almost threw it away. It was stamped by the vice president's office, but this time of year, you get all kinds of political mail," she said. "I turned it over and I could see writing through the envelope. And when I opened it, I was actually dumbfounded."

Culver issues explanation of vote overturning cap on damages

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Supreme Court Justice Barbara Culver, whose vote in a controversial May 11 court ruling surprised the state's business and medical communities, issued a rare after-the-fact opinion this morning explaining her reasoning.

The top lobbyist for the Texas Medical Association called Culver's decision to issue the opinion "a wise move on her part."

Culver's two-page opinion does not change the 7-2 decision overturning a state law that had placed a $1 million cap on how much a doctor or hospital could be required to pay for non-medical damages in a malpractice suit.

The Midland Republican said she joined with the majority "with caution" because she believes caps on malpractice awards "could be consistent with the Texas Constitution under certain circumstances."

But Texas' failure to followed other states' leads in establishing some alternative remedy for catastrophic injuries, she wrote, "renders these caps unreasonable and arbitrary when balanced against the purpose and basis of the statute."

Culver became the first female Republican to serve on the high court in February, when Gov. Bill Clements appointed her to replace Justice Robert Campbell, who resigned. She faces Democratic former Congressman Jack Hightower of Vernon in the November election in a race to fill the four years remaining in Campbell's term.

The Austin American-Statesman reported Sunday that Culver's vote in the medical malpractice case shocked conservatives, who expected her to side with doctors and business interests in important decisions. The newspaper quoted one source as saying her vote would be "absolutely totally devastating" to her political fund raising.

Culver disagreed, pointing out in an interview Monday that Hightower had enjoyed the doctors' heavy financial support long before Clements appointed her to the court. Both Culver and Hightower maintain that they are "strict constructionists" — judges who believe in a limited power for courts.

"I have chosen to express my views separately because I do not wish to be understood as saying that all damage caps are fundamentally unconstitutional," Culver wrote in this morning's opinion. "I do not interpret the majority opinion to stand for such a proposition, but to the extent the majority may be interpreted to so hold, I would disagree."

TMA lobbyist Kim Ross said he told Culver that she had taken a stance on "a politically and emotionally very charged issue" for doctors. Ross attributed the judge's possible lack of understanding of the doctors' concern to her relative inexperience on the court.

"That was a wise move on her part," Ross said of Culver's opinion this morning, adding that he did not know whether it would help her pick up the doctors' political support.

Odessa recreational vehicle dealers win a reprieve from City Council

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Protest from recreational vehicle and boat dealers Monday prompted City Council members to table action on a proposed ordinance that would strictly limit the parking of such vehicles, as well as commercial vehicles, in residential areas and on sidewalks in residential neighborhoods.

Butch Webb of Webb Camper Sales and Service told council members limiting the parking of such vehicles, particularly those of visiting relatives, senior citizens, and visitors attending the Oil Show and various other events, would interfere with business the city badly needs "because visitors spend money."

Saying the ordinance was overly restrictive, Webb suggested council members withhold approval pending further study.

The council agreed, unanimously approving a motion to table the proposal.

Councilman Jaime Rodriguez later said he had no problem with the parking of recreational vehicles and boats in Odessa neighborhoods.

Arguments favoring the ordinance, however, cited the dangers posed to children by motorists unable to see them playing because of obstructed vision resulting from parked vehicles.

The ordinance proposes banning the parking of all vehicles described as commercial, defined as any vehicle with a gross weight of more than 17,000 pounds, a single self-propelled unit with tandem axles, any part of, or all of, a truck-tractor-semi-trailer combination.

"Mobile recreation equipment" is defined as any boat, trailer intended for boat transportation, or self-propelled vehicle designed, constructed or equipped for human habitation permanently or temporarily.

The ban would apply to all public streets within the city limits of Odessa. The definition of "public streets" includes alleys.

Exceptions to the ordinance would include the loading or unloading of commercial vehicles, commercial or recreational vehicles parked due to mechanical problems. These exceptions would apply for 24 hours only.

Similarly, such vehicles bearing out-of-state license plates would be warned of the parking ban one time, without penalty, but a second offense would subject the owner to a fine not to exceed $200.

The city also would be empowered to impound vehicles found in violation of the law when owners refuse to comply with the ordinance.

In other action Tuesday, council members elected Councilman Craig Heap as mayor pro tem. The vote came following a closed door session.

Two escape serious hurt in Customs plane crash

From Staff and Wire Reports

SAN ANGELO — Two men aboard a U.S. Customs Service plane suffered facial cuts but escaped serious injury after the craft apparently lost power and crashed into Lake Nasworthy Tuesday afternoon, officials said.

The two pilots aboard, Don Carter and Michael Knezevich of San Angelo, were taken to Angelo Community Hospital. Carter was admitted for observation, and Knezevich was treated and released, Customs spokesman Charles Conroy said from his Houston office early today.

"Apparently there were no serious injuries. That's the word we got," Conroy said.

A nursing supervisor at the hospital said early today hospital employees had been directed not to release any information about Carter.

The twin-engine Cessna crashed at 2:20 p.m. into the lake on San Angelo's southwest side, Chief Lake Ranger Tom Steckbeck said.

Carter and Knezevich were rescued by three San Angelo men who were in two boats on the lake, Steckbeck said.

The plane lost power in one engine, then the other, and the pilot decided to ditch the plane in the lake, said Conroy.

He said the two men — a pilot and the student pilot — were practicing "touch-and-go" landings from Mathis Field in San Angelo, where the plane is based.

Authorities at the scene said the aircraft crashed into shallow water approximately 60 feet offshore from a children's camp, but there were no youngsters present at the time.

El Paso child welfare caseworkers severely criticized before state panel

EL PASO (AP) — The city's child welfare officials, who once were told by a judge that they were doing a "lousy job," endured even more criticism by witnesses testifying before a state Senate committee.

Department of Human Services caseworkers could have prevented the deaths of at least three children, witnesses told the committee Tuesday, and several added they feared for the lives of other children because of DHS inaction.

But child welfare officials defended their agency, and told the Senate Health and Human Services Committee that they are hampered by high turnover and heavy caseloads.

County Attorney Joe Lucas, who has asked Attorney General Jim Mattox to investigate El Paso's DHS office, cited several cases that demonstrated what he called the agency's callousness and ineptitude.

In one case Lucas cited, a 16-year-old girl testified before District Judge Enrique Pena last January that DHS caseworkers knew she was a prostitute and that her mother was giving her heroin, but the agency did not intervene.

In a tongue-lashing to the DHS, Pena at the time said he had opened the usually closed courtroom proceedings to reporters "so that they can report to the people that pay your salaries what a lousy job you are doing in this community."

Lucas also mentioned the case of a 10-year-old boy who, with the knowledge of DHS caseworkers, slept in ditches to escape his father's beatings at home. In another incident, a 15-month-old boy died of massive head injuries just two months after he had been hospitalized for an earlier skull fracture.

'State of the ARC' message delivered

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The Midland Association for Retarded Citizens is in great shape with cash in the bank and virtually no debt, said Guy McCrary, elected to another term as the organization's president Tuesday night.

At MARC's annual membership meeting Tuesday, McCrary gave a "state of the ARC" talk and awards were given to special volunteers.

During the past year, MARC built three homes that can accommodate 18 people with varying forms of mental retardation or physical handicaps at a cost of about $426,000, McCrary said.

The Marcwood I and II homes continue to house 28 people with mild retardation and an additional 18 people with mental retardation are living in "regular" apartments in Midland, the president said.

Five persons with retardation are working at jobs picking up litter in Howard County and 46 more have gotten jobs with the help of MARC, McCrary said.

McCrary attributed the group's success over the past year to volunteers, but maintained MARC is still challenged.

Getting people with mental retardation into the "mainstream" of society — whether it be educational- or work-oriented — is a task MARC will continue to pursue this year.

A "Self-Advocates" award was given to Jean Jones, a MARC employee for her help with assisting people with retardation to give back to the community.

Ms. Jones also won an award for her MARC newsletter.

An award was given to Mamie Williams for her pilot program "PALS," a tutoring program which matches regular education children with those in special education classes.

Cindy Gill, a teacher of children with severe and profound retardation at the Cerebral Palsy Center in Midland, was awarded the Educator of the Year award.

The "Volunteer of the Year" award was given to Novella Rowe, a 78-year-old woman who excelled at raising funds for MARC and providing transportation for people with retardation.

Ms. Rowe cares for her grandson who is mentally retarded and physically handicapped. Each year during MARC's "Hike and Bike" fund-raiser, Ms. Rowe pushes her grandson in his wheelchair the full 20-mile distance and has raised more than $10,000 in pledges each year.

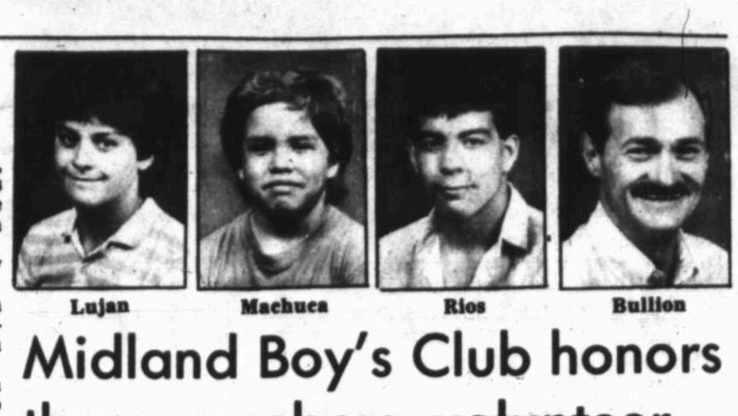

A special honor was given Tuesday night to Chris and Ray Green.

The Green's award was created in remembrance of the late Wade Whiteley, a Midlander who helped form MARC more than 30 years ago.

Former state Sen. Pete Snelson said that Whiteley's contributions to the state in the areas of mental retardation were "widespread and profound".

"No one is more richly deserving" of the honor, Snelson said of Whiteley.

The Greens are long-time members of MARC and have a daughter, Paula, who has mental retardation.

MISD string students play

From Staff Reports

Featuring music as varied as Bach and rock, 550 Midland Independent School District strings students delighted an audience of more than 2,000 Midlanders Tuesday night.

The concert culminated in a grand finale arrangement of Kander's "New York, New York" under the direction of guest conductor Dr. Thomas Hohstadt. Midland College's Chaparral Center literally resounded with the sound of more than 500 instrumentalists joining in this piece de resistance.

Beginning with Mozart's first movement from "Serenade in Four Movements" performed by the Midland Freshman and Midland High School Orchestra, a fast paced 90 minute program highlighted every facet of the district's strings and orchestral program.

First year fifth-grade students played five short numbers. Likewise, sixth-grade students performed five selections.

Midland's three junior highs, Alamo, Goddard and San Jacinto, presented an entertaining trio of melodies of diverse settings — "Arkansas Traveler," Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 2," and Mancinis' crowd pleasing "Pink Panther."

The grand finale was interpretations of Rossini's "Concerto in D Minor for Two Solo Violins" and Bach's "Concerto in D Minor for Two Solo Violins and Strings."

Elementary and junior high strings students are taught by Diane Neil, Marian Stone, Amanda Villaret, Orlando Moss and Judy Green. Freshman and high school students are directed by Karen Walker and Randy Storie.

Group challenges Amarillo paper's decision not to run ad

AMARILLO (AP) — An advisory board has challenged the Amarillo Globe-News' advertising policy, citing the rejection of an ad critical of a reporter's alleged involvement with a controversial underground newspaper at West Texas State University.

The incident has refueled a smoldering controversy involving the Canyon university, which is embroiled in a power struggle between President Ed Roach and the faculty, and the Globe-News.

The rejected ad, which WTSU's Ex-Students Association offered to several Panhandle-area newspapers, included a story and editorial from the school's student newspaper, The Prairie, linking Globe-News reporter Jason Akst with the underground newspaper, The Rest of the Prairie.

The story, published May 4, said that Akst approached a local resident for the use of her post-office box and that Akst accepted mail addressed to the underground newspaper. An accompanying editorial charged the Globe-News with biased coverage of WTSU.

Globe-News Assistant General Manager Garet von Netzer said Tuesday that the paper initially accepted the ad, but later chose not to run it because it contained information that conflicted with the Globe-News' investigation of the matter.

"We had some serious concerns about the veracity of that material as a result of our investigation because it focused on one of our reporters, and anytime we have serious doubts about the veracity of material...we reserve the right not to run it," von Netzer said.

Akst, a recent WTSU graduate who had begun covering the Canyon university two weeks before, said his involvement with the underground newspaper amounted to temporarily holding a post-office box key used by the publication for a friend who had moved out of town.

"I did not carry mail for the underground newspaper nor did I write or edit or help distribute the newspaper," Akst said.

Nevertheless, the Globe-News ran a story recently saying Akst would no longer be given any assignments connected with WTSU.

"We felt that the perception of involvement with the underground newspaper had been established and we felt like at that point it would be best not to have him cover any more West Texas State stories," von Netzer said.

Barbara Sherrod, the Prairie's editor for the fall semester, said the paper stands by its story.

"We had the information that we had and we ran it," she said. "We tried to talk to Jason and he refused."

"The Prairie editorial staff felt that that was a conflict of interest, and we had informed von Netzer about it and he did nothing. Only after we printed the story did he take Jason off the beat," she said.

Meanwhile, the paper's advisory board wrote a letter in Sunday's Globe-News that said the decision not to run the ad was inconsistent with earlier publication of controversial advertising.

The advisory board was created to help defuse a campaign mounted against the newspaper by Panhandle Citizens for a Better Amarillo Newspaper. With the support of oilman T. Boone Pickens Jr., PCBAN had called for subscription and advertising cancellations.

Sunday, the group cited the decision in February to run a strongly worded ad bought by a group called SAFE — Students, Alumni and Faculty for Education at West Texas State University.

That ad harshly criticized Roach's administration, and SAFE, along with the anonymous publishers of the underground newspaper, was later named in a libel lawsuit filed, and later dropped, by Roach.

"In studying the facts involved in both cases, the forum perceives that there is not only inconsistency involved in these instances, but there is also bias by the newspaper," the letter said.

Man tearfully testifies to burning corpse of Odessan

LUBBOCK (AP) — A man accused of illegally using a dead man's credit card tearfully testified that he burned the corpse of an elderly Odessa man.

Eddie Wayne Roberson, 32, of Panhandle, is charged with making more than $6,000 worth of fraudulent credit card purchases using the card of Jack Doherty, whose burned body was found in a trash bin Jan. 19.

Police believe Doherty, 84, died of pneumonia on Dec. 12, 1987, at his residence in Odessa.

Testimony resumed in the trial today.

Roberson testified Tuesday afternoon that Doherty gave him permission to use his car and credit cards as long as he paid for his own charges.

The defendant, who said he was paroled for the state penitentiary on Nov. 9, told Odessa police detectives in a statement that he met Doherty in early December at the Lubbock bus terminal.

According to his statement, read Tuesday morning by Det. Cpl. Terry Henkell of the Odessa police department, Roberson said the elderly man needed someone to look after him, so Roberson cooked, cleaned and ran errands for him.

On the night Doherty died, Roberson said he went to the victim's house and while Roberson was in another room, he heard Doherty choking and coughing. However, he often did that when he was drinking, Roberson said.

The defendant told jurors he heard a crash and ran into Doherty's room, where the man had collapsed on the floor, apparently hitting his head on a table as he fell, Roberson said.

He wrapped the body in blankets, put it in the trunk of Doherty's car and drove to Lubbock to meet his parole officer.

Roberson sobbed while testifying that he did not know what to do with the body. He bought a can of diesel fuel and drove to an isolated Dumpster.

"I put that diesel on Jack, and I lit it and I drove off," he said. Roberson said he was expecting more that $5,000 in an inheritance from his mother's death. He intended to pay for the credit card charges with that money, he said.

Roberson allegedly made purchases with Doherty's card in Lubbock, Amarillo, Brownfield, Plainview and Odessa.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Roger McRoberts submitted into evidence on Monday cash register receipts from several businesses and MasterCard charge receipts from a card belonging to Doherty.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

"To say I volunteer for lack of something better to do, is to say my time has no value.
To say I volunteer therefore I work for you for nothing, is to say the work is worthless
But to say I choose to give my time to your work, is to say we both have value."

This thought is dedicated to a volunteer that has given so much of her time and expertise to the Volunteer Center since its inception. We appreciate very much her friendship, her unselfishness, and her personal value. Thank you, Leann Matthews, for being there for us.

Lucas and two other people talked of one of the most notorious cases, in which two young boys were killed on Christmas 1986 when their father set fire to the family's house with the boys inside. The father then killed himself.

The boys, 18-month-old Aaron Perry and his 4-year-old brother, Ian, had been in and out of foster homes, sometimes at the request of their father, Dale.

"It is my opinion that the kids died at the hands of the people responsible for their welfare," said Sandra Barraza, a day-care center operator who took care of the boys for a few weeks.

One of the foster parents who briefly took care of the boys, Melinda Dowdle, testified that DHS officials lied when they said Dale Perry never threatened the boys' lives.

"There's nothing I can do to bring back those boys," she told the panel tearfully. "But I hope that by coming here today, I can prevent it from happening again."

DHS officials said they didn't want such incidents to recur either, but blamed heavy caseloads. Child protective services caseworker Raymond Sweisford said the backlog of cases forces employees to "put out brushfires" instead of paying equal attention to each case.

Lawmakers seek report on Noriega talks

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega has been summoned before the legislature to report on negotiations with U.S. officials over the nation's lengthy political crisis.

The move on Tuesday by the pro-Noriega Legislative Assembly would allow Panama's military leader to present his position without appearing to take the initiative in divulging details of the talks.

By a 39-7 vote with five abstentions, the 67-member body summoned Noriega to appear before it within 48 hours. The chief of Panama's 15,000-strong Defense Forces and the nation's de facto leader, did not immediately respond.

A similar move failed in the assembly on Monday when 27 of 47 legislators present voted for it. Passage required a two-thirds majority of those present.

The United States has imposed a wide array of economic sanctions on Panama in an effort to force the ouster of Noriega, who was indicted in February on federal drug smuggling charges in Florida.

Reagan administration officials want Noriega to resign his post and leave the country at least temporarily.

If Noriega appears before the legislature, he will be asked what American negotiators have proposed, what Panamanian negotiators are trying to achieve, and why the United States is taking part in the talks if it does not recognize the Noriega-controlled government of President Manuel Solis Palma.

The White House's chief negotiator, Michael G. Kozak, has been meeting with Noriega representatives for nearly a month to try to resolve the crisis. He returned to Panama on Monday after a brief trip to Washington.

While a deal has been reported near on several occasions by Reagan administration sources, Noriega has said in several recent appearances that he will not leave unless American economic sanctions are lifted and U.S. "aggression" ends.

About 2,000 American troops have been sent to Panama in recent weeks to back up the 10,000 soldiers already here assigned to protect the Panama Canal.

Noriega also has said the United States must "respect" the presidency of Solis Palma, who took over the presidency Feb. 26 after President Eric Arturo Delvalle tried to fire Noriega and was deposed by the general's supporters.

Delvalle, recognized by the United States as the legitimate president of Panama, is in hiding in Panama. There is a warrant out for his arrest.

Romulo Escobar Betancourt, president of the pro-military Revolutionary Democratic Party, told local television stations on Tuesday that the crisis would be resolved if the United States lifts the sanctions.

"In five minutes," he said, "the problem would be settled."

Betancourt, who has represented Noriega in the talks with the United States, also said: "We have totally rejected the fact that Noriega has to leave the country."

Noriega has denied the U.S. drug smuggling charges, which he contends are a political ploy to replace him with a less nationalistic leader who might tolerate a prolonged American military presence.

President Reagan reportedly is considering dropping the indictments if it would lead to Noriega's departure from power, a position that has sharply divided his administration.

Negotiators reach tentative agreement on ouster

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. and Panamanian negotiators held marathon talks on a proposal to get Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega out of Panama amid reports that a tentative agreement had been reached.

The Cable News Network said that Panamanian Ambassador Juan B. Sosa reported that a deal had been worked out. State Department officials said they were unable to confirm that account.

Sosa, recognized by the United States as Panama's envoy here despite being fired by Noriega, said the military ruler would make a formal announcement of the agreement this afternoon.

The officials said that U.S. envoy Michael G. Kozak had worked with Panamanian officials until the early morning hours in Panama, hoping to complete an agreement before President Reagan left at mid-morning for Helsinki, Finland, and, eventually, Moscow for the summit meeting with Mikhail S. Gorbachev that begins Sunday.

"We are waiting to hear the state of play," a State Department official said, declining to confirm Sosa's account of the talks.

Initially, the State Department had received word that Noriega was to make an announcement this morning, said the official, who asked not to be identified.

The administration apparently was intent on reaching an agreement before Reagan's departure because it did not want the Panama issue to overshadow his visits to Finland and the Soviet Union.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz indicated on Tuesday the administration was prepared to suspend the talks for the duration of Reagan's absence from Washington if no agreement was reached.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said today, "I'm for no deal."

He said, "It sounds to me like a deal that will get the president out of town, give prestige to Noriega, and dump the problem in the next president's lap."

Israel polishing its image as area tourism declines

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel is launching a $5 million advertising campaign to counter a tarnished image and a steep decline in tourism caused by the nearly six-month-old Arab uprising in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Tourism is Israel's largest source of foreign capital, earning $1.6 billion last year. But officials expect income to drop this year by about $300 million, making tourism the industry worst hit by the unrest that began Dec. 8.

"It's a disaster. The cancellations are coming in a murderous rythmn. I'm losing hundreds of thousands of dollars," said Shimon Shtern, chairman of the Hotel Association in Netanya, a popular Mediterranean resort.

"This is a big crisis, Israel has a big problem. I've never seen anything like it," said Shtern, whose own hotel, the 150-room Netanya Hanesicha, is operating at just 10 percent of capacity. Shtern said he fired two-thirds of the hotel's 63 employees this month.

But the decline in tourism has not only hit Israel in the pocketbook.

The country's image has been hurt by the army's attempts to halt the Arab protests. More than 190 Palestinians and two Israelis have been killed since the uprising started.

Many Americans, especially U.S. Jews, have canceled plans to visit Israel, raising questions of whether they are expressing fear for their own safety or condemnation of Israel's policies in the territories.

"What we have today is as much an image problem as a security problem," said Yaacov Katz, marketing manager of the Israel Hotel Association, which represents the country's 320 hotels.

"People are not just worrying about rocks or terrorist acts. The problem is that in the United States Israel's image has been sullied. It's a political problem, something we've never tackled before," he said in an interview.

Twenty percent fewer Americans came to Israel in April compared with the same month last year, and the biggest decline was among American Jews, according to Tourism Ministry Spokeswoman Dvora Ganani-Elad.

In 1987, 330,000 Americans visited Israel, two-thirds of them Jewish.

"The heart hurts. The Jews were the first to turn their backs to us and not come," Tourism Minister Avraham Sharir told Israel's parliament earlier this month in his annual report.

Tourism in March and April slid 23 percent compared to the first two months of the year, and advance bookings have plummeted. In Europe alone, about 60,000 holidaymakers have called off plans to travel to Israel on 407 charter flights canceled because of the unrest.

Israeli officials had hoped to reap a tourist bonanza on Israel's 40th anniversary. Israel had expected a 25 percent increase over last year's record 1.52 million visitors.

To try to turn things around, the Tourism Ministry plans to spend $5 million on an advertising campaign in Europe and the United States under the slogan: "Israel: See for Yourself."

The ads targeted for the U.S. market feature television endorsements from American tourists saying how safe and trouble-free Israel's popular vacation destinations are.

"The idea we're selling is Israel isn't just the West Bank. It's Masada, Eilat, Jaffa oranges, all these wonderful things," said Al Lieberman, president of New York-based Grey Advertising.

"When there's a crisis on, we can't compete with the front page. But after people read the headlines, these ads say: 'Forget what's going on in Gaza, it's beautiful here in Israel,'" Lieberman said in an interview.

The Tourism Ministry is also treating European and American travel agents to all-expenses paid tours of Israel to promote the country as a holiday destination.

General strike in occupied zones honors slain PLO leader

JERUSALEM (AP) — A general strike to commemorate the death of PLO military chief Khalil Wazir virtually shut down the occupied lands today, but most students attended recently reopened primary schools in the West Bank.

Stores were closed in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, transportation was shut down, and most Palestinian workers did not go to jobs in Israel.

In the walled, old city of Jerusalem, a firebomb was thrown at the car of hardliner and Trade and Commerce Minister Ariel Sharon, as his wife, Lily, was about to drive off from their home, the daily Maariv reported.

No one was hurt in the incident on Tuesday, and the paper quoted Mrs. Sharon as saying she did not know a firebomb was thrown.

"Maybe they should try again," she was quoted as saying.

Ahmed Wazir, a cousin of the slain Palestine Liberation Organization official, said Israeli soldiers showed up at his Gaza City house today to prevent a reception marking 40 days since the assassination.

By Moslem tradition, the 40th day is the final day of mourning.

"The army is outside our house," Wazir said in a telephone interview. "They turned back anyone who came here." He said he saw two army jeeps and two other military vehicles posted outside.

Wazir was slain April 16 in Tunisia. Israeli sources say Israeli commandos carried out the attack. The government has declined comment.

The army today imposed curfews on the Shati and Bureij refugee camps, two neighborhoods of Gaza City and parts of Rafah, the southernmost town in Gaza.

Witnesses said the general strike, ordered in memory of Wazir by underground leaders of the six-month-old Palestinian uprising, was observed throughout the occupied land and Israeli-annexed Arab east Jerusalem.

"The Intefadah (Arab for uprising) is still going on and will continue until victory and the creation of our independent state," said an underground leaflet signed by the PLO/Unified Command of the Uprising in the Occupied Territories.

Since Dec. 8, at least 195 Palestinians and two Israelis have been killed in the Arab revolt against Israeli occupation of the territories.

WORLD in brief

20,000 flee fire at kerosene tank farm

CHIHUAHUA, Mexico (AP) — At least 20,000 people fled in panic when a 40-foot-tall kerosene tank caught fire at an oil tank farm in this northern city, threatening adjacent tanks. It was 10 hours before residents could return home.

No serious injuries were reported in Tuesday's blaze at the storage facility operated by the government oil monopoly Pemex in a residential area.

Authorities said some firefighters suffered minor burns in the eight hours it took for them to bring the inferno under control.

About 900,000 gallons of kerosene were in the steel tank when it ignited in an explosion at about 10:10 a.m. (12:10 p.m. EDT).

The government news agency Notimex said area residents had been protesting the tank farm's presence and the tanks were to have been relocated months ago, but new facilities have not been completed.

The conflagration threatened 14 other tanks on the farm that were filled with millions of gallons of gasoline. Fire and smoke spiraled more than 150 feet above the plant.

Fearing the worst, authorities evacuated people living around the plant.

One estimate said as many as 200,000 people fled their homes.

Israelis fire on village

NABATIYEH, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli gunners today attacked a stronghold of pro-Iranian guerrillas in southern Lebanon with heavy artillery and Israeli helicopter gunships rocketed the village.

Diplomatic sources in Lebanon said that over the last two days the Israelis have moved extra personnel carriers, tanks and troops into southern Lebanon. The Israeli military command had no immediate comment.

A Lebanese police spokesman said at least two Israeli helicopter gunships took turns firing rockets at Soujud, a stronghold of Hezbollah, or Party of God, five miles northeast of this central market town just north of Israel's self-proclaimed security zone.

A casualty report was not immediately available.

Iraq launches new attack

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq said it launched a major ground offensive today to retake Iraqi territory east of the southern town of Basra that was captured by Iran 16 months ago. Iran claimed it repulsed the attack.

State-run Baghdad radio broke into its regular programming to broadcast a military communique announcing Iraqi forces had launched the attack.

It said Iraqi troops made "considerable gains" in the offensive codenamed "On God We Depend," but gave no casualty figures, saying more details would be released later.

Black evictions to begin

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government said it will begin evicting 1,800 blacks next month from a settlement designated for people of mixed race. Civil rights workers called the plan a revival of forced removals.

In another development, state radio reported that a black had spoken for the first time in an official proceeding at South Africa's Parliament building.

Blacks make up 75 percent of South Africa's 35 million people but have no representation in Parliament and no vote in national affairs.

In announcing the planned evictions at Lawaiicamp, white officials said on Tuesday that the 40-year-old black community is an illegal, unsanitary squatter camp. They deny the actions will constitute forced removal.

13,310 killed in war

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet army spokesman today said 13,310 Soviet troops have been killed in Afghanistan and 35,478 wounded since the Soviet Union entered the Afghan war in December 1979.

Gen. Alexei D. Lizichev, head of the army's political department, also told a news conference in Moscow that 311 Soviets "disappeared" during the war. They are believed to have been captured by rebels or to have deserted.

The Soviet Union began withdrawing its forces from the war on May 15, and the army spokesman said 9,500 of the more than 100,000 officers and men stationed there have left their bases since the pullout began.

Hungary seeks changes

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Karoly Grosz, Hungary's new Communist Party leader, said he will speed up economic reforms planned for late in the year, but cautioned Hungarians not to expect a swift economic turnaround.

He also conceded that since he became prime minister in June 1987, his government has failed to revitalize Hungary's sluggish economy.

'Hair' carefully groomed for its role in U.N.'s AIDS fund-raiser

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The 20th anniversary production of "Hair," the rock musical that shocked the world with frontal nudity, will be shown in a demure version at a United Nations benefit for children suffering from AIDS.

Some say a show that celebrates carefree love and drug use is not the best choice to raise money to fight AIDS, a fatal disease transmitted by sexual contact and sharing of intravenous needles.

The one-night presentation Thursday at the General Assembly Hall has been watered down to avoid eliciting blushes from diplomats. Four-letter words are edited out, free spirits will have to cover themselves with fig leaves and there will be no burning of U.S. draft cards.

"This is a modified version for the United Nations," one of the creators, James Rado, said. "The street language had to go in a United Nations format. I guess they couldn't take the four-letter words. There aren't that many of them."

"But the U.N. just said 'No,'" added co-author Gerome Ragni.

At the end of the first act, the cast will not stand singing in the nude before the audience. That was in 1968. This is a swishy, black-tie affair for the Establishment where the best seats cost $5,000.

"The first lady would say no to drug songs," production manager David Bosboom said in an interview, referring to Nancy Reagan's anti-drug campaign whose slogan is, "Just say no to drugs."

Mrs. Reagan, an honorary chairman of the benefit, will not be present to hear the 1968 rendition of the songs "Starshine" and the "Age of Aquarius," although she consults astrologers. President Reagan and his wife leave for the Moscow summit this morning.

Publicist Rebecca Robbins said that when "Hair" opened 20 years ago at New York's Public Theater the stars were in almost the same positions as they will be Thursday.

Wanda Moore, the original "Hair" astrologer who now calls herself Vanessa Talma-Lord, has worked out the astrological chart for the show.

"The moon again is in the seventh house and Jupiter is aligned with Mars," said the astrologer.

Bosboom quipped that "There will be no naked truths here at the U.N.," but that the soul of the show has remained intact.

"Yes, we had to change the content to suit the United Nations," he said. "The themes are there but some lyrics have changed."

He said the numerous changes were made both out of self-censorship by the creators and at the request of nervous U.N. bureaucrats.

One U.N. official muttered privately that the show was "ill-considered, inappropriate and an embarrassment.

"How do you have a show celebrating free love and sex at the United Nations, of all places, when you are trying to warn against AIDS?" said the official who demanded anonymity.

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, also is transmitted through contaminated blood or blood products and from infected mothers to their unborn babies. The AIDS virus attacks the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to infections and cancers.

Ragni and Rado have written 14 new songs and the first half of the new prodution is an update "for the next generation." The second half is a nostalgic selection of oldies.

"Sodomy," a song from the original, won't be sung at Thursday's production. It is now an instrumental by Chuck Mangione.

"Some of the songs we had to delete, because out of context from the original show, they don't work," Ragni said in a recent interview.

Of "Sodomy," he said: "It's quite beautiful and effective and I never had heard it as an instrumental."

The changes have been made to address current issues, such as the depletion of the ozone layer and banning nuclear bombs.

Deletions do away with the Vietnam War hippie protest song about LBJ taking the IRT to find people on LSD.

But there still is crooning over "Donna" and the search for the "16-year-old virgin."

"I'm surprised they left that one in," said Bosboom.

The production involves more than 100 people and includes some members of the original cast. A few of the original players decided not to take part when they learned that conservative William F. Buckley was a member of the sponsoring Creo Society. It is a non-profit organization working with the United Nations Children's Fund to help young AIDS victims.

The Creo Society Fund For Children With AIDS is trying to raise more than $2 million from the benefit.
