Freed French hostages back on home soil

PARIS (AP) — Two newly released French hostages who were held for 104 days by Moslem extremists in Lebanon arrived home Saturday to an emotional welcome from their families and Premier Jacques Chirac.

Philippe Rochot and Georges Hansen climbed off the plane at Orly Airport and stood on the tarmac for several minutes, embracing their kin.

Rochot, 39, a correspondent, said in a live interview with French television station Antenne-2 that he and Hansen could not say much because they had "pledged not to talk." He did not elaborate.

He thanked the French government and "the nations which have intervened in our favor...all the personalities who intervened."

In a separate development, two Greek Cypriot students who had been kidnapped in Beirut April 28 were released Saturday by their captors, Cyprus announced. No group ever claimed responsibility for their abduction.

In Damascus, Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa pledged to spare no effort to try to free 17 other foreigners still held captive in Lebanon.

Rochot and Hansen, 45, a cameraman, were kidnapped March 8 in west Beirut with two colleagues from Antenne-2. Their captors freed them late Friday in west Beirut, and Syrian intelligence officials drove them to Damascus, Syria.

They were flown home on an executive jet provided by their government.

Rochot said he remained most concerned about his two other crewmen. "We're free, but there are two guys still trapped there, and that's terrible."

"I don't know why I was chosen to be freed," he said.

He said he was "very tired," and looking up at the clear evening sky, said: "It's been three months since I saw the light and the sky."

Hansen told journalists that despite being "completely isolated, in a closed room, we didn't know where we were, but I was always quite optimistic" and repeated they were "very well treated."

The two men and their families met privately with Chirac, who left the airport without making any official statement.

Rochot, wearing a clean blue shirt and trousers, told reporters in al-Sharaa's office in Damascus, "We're very grateful to (Syrian) President (Hafez) Assad and our friends here because they did not abandon us-...We're optimistic about the release of our compatriots."

The two other Antenne-2 crew members still are held by the Revolutionary Justice Movement, believed to be a Shiite Moslem group loyal to Iran. The group said early in the abduction that it seized the four crewmen to protest French military intervention in Lebanon. It said Friday it was freeing two of them because of a change in France's Middle East policy.

Although the group was not specific, France recently has taken steps to improve relations with Iran.

Rochot told reporters in Beirut the two crewmen still being held, Aurel Cornea, 54, and Jean-Louis Normandin, 34, were in good condition.

Five other Frenchmen also are missing in Lebanon. Another Shiite group, Islamic Jihad, has said it abducted four of them as well as five missing Americans.

Two Britons, an Irishman, an Italian and a South Korean also are missing in Lebanon.

Chirac thanked Syria, Algeria and Iran for helping gain the release of Rochot and Hansen.

In Damascus, Al-Sharaa told reporters, "We're very happy that our efforts have succeeded in obtaining the release of our friends, Rochot and Hansen. We shall not spare our efforts to obtain the release of all other hostages."

Syria is Iran's main ally in the Persian Gulf country's six-year-old war with Iraq. Syria also controls the Bekaa Valley in east Lebanon, where Shiite factions have their stronghold.

Dr. Duke can't believe folk hero status

By JANE DEES

Perhaps what makes Texas unique is its ability to maintain the extremes. One can find in Houston or Dallas buildings that seem to touch the sky, a world-renowned medical center, "America's football team" and freeways desperately trying to find their cities.

Further west, the red and dusty horizons become visible with only an oil rig, herd of cattle or mountain range coming into view for as far as the eye can see.

Dr. James Henry "Red" Duke Jr., traveled that spectrum this weekend in order to be a judge at the Midland Alumni of Texas A&M University Fajita Cook-Off and Dance held Saturday at the Midland County Exhibit Hall.

His wardrobe may illustrate best these contrasting facets of personality that have led him, as well as the state, to legendary status: the blue, starched and discreetly monogrammed oxford shirt casually tucked into the faded blue-jeans; the well-worn cowboy boots and hat, was covered with a layer of dust and a dash of dried mud; the spectacles call to mind a country doctor; the omnipresent class ring with that diamond on the crown.

Red Duke: native Texan, gifted surgeon, professor and researcher, Texas Aggie, wildlife conservationist, television personality.

"I'm just a country doctor who happens to be a professor of surgery, as well. I find this status as a folk hero a bit hard to believe." The boy from Ennis, Texas, "too skinny and poor" to play football in college, had better get used to it though, because it looks like he's stuck in that "rut" for good.

Midland boy dies in accident

From Staff Reports

A 2-year-old Midland boy was killed and a 19-year-old Odessa man was critically injured in unrelated traffic accidents Saturday.

Two-year-old Paul Cardenas Jr., Rt. 13, Box 396 No. 45, was killed in a freak accident when he was struck and run over by a truck that had just pulled out of the youth's driveway, according to Department of Public Safety reports.

Trooper Mike Glenn of the DPS said the boy was helping push a 1981 Mazda pickup truck out of his driveway when the driver, who apparently could not see or hear the child in front of the vehicle, put the truck in gear and ran over the child.

The accident occurred about 5:50 p.m. off Cotton Flat Rd. south of Midland. The boy was pronounced dead at 6:35 p.m. by Justice of the Peace Judy Massingill. Glenn said he was uncertain if any charges would be filed in the case.

Midland gets more than two inches of rain

From Staff and Wire Reports

See related photo — 2A

Sporadic but heavy thunderstorms formed in the Midland area beginning early Saturday morning and continuing until late afternoon, pouring more than two inches of rain on portions of the city before the system moved to the east.

The National Weather Service recorded 2.07 inches officially during the past 24 hours at the Midland Regional Airport.

A meteorologist at the NWS office said the storms, which formed quickly and caused some street flooding in the area, were due to the moisture in the already unstable air combined with the heating effect of the afternoon, which helped to intensify the storms.

The Midland area remained under a flash flood watch throughout Saturday night, with forecasters calling for a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms overnight on the already rain-soaked ground.

A flash flood warning for Howard, southern Borden and eastern Martin counties expired at 9 p.m. Saturday.

Dozens of homes in northwest Midland were without power for about 40 minutes Saturday afternoon after a car traveling westbound in 3400 block of Andrews Highway hit a high water spot near the intersection at Alpine Street and struck a telephone pole about 3:30 p.m., causing an outage at a nearby Texas Electric Service Company substation. A spokeswoman at Midland Memorial Hospital reported no injuries in the accident.

Traffic lights in that area were also affected by the outage, but there were no other major accidents or outages reported, according to police.

Tonight and Monday will be partly cloudy with a 40 percent chance of more thunderstorms. The low tonight is expected to be in the upper 60s. Monday's high should be near 90.

Bullock: State may be $7 billion in hole for 1988-89

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a four-part series on the current state budget crunch and what effect it could have on Texas' future.

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — In better times, state Comptroller Bob Bullock was a popular speaker on the banquet circuit. Bankers, businessmen and builders enjoyed hearing the entertaining Bullock tell of Texas' booming economy.

No longer.

"It looks awful bad," the state's chief financial officer says of the current state of fiscal affairs. "I feel like Scrooge...I've really cut down my spanking because of it."

On Feb. 13, Bullock made one memorable speech, the consequences of which have taken him off the rubber-chicken cycle.

In a conference room crowded with cameras, microphones and note pads, Bullock told state leaders what many of them already suspected: The free-falling price of oil had tumbled too low, throwing a budget balanced almost to the penny way out of kilter — $1.3 billion out of kilter.

Without a major rebound in oil prices, Bullock said, the state Treasury would be $1.3 billion in the red by the Aug. 31, 1987 end of the current fiscal period. When lawmakers return in January to draw up the 1988-1989 budget, he warned, they would face the task of cutting spending or increasing taxes by as much as $6.2 billion to meet the constitutional requirement for a balanced state budget.

In the few speeches he has made since then, Bullock's bad news has gotten worse.

Although he has not issued another official change in the revenue estimate, the comptroller has implied that the shortfall for this biennium could reach $2 billion or $2.3 billion. That pushes the 1988-1989 hole to as deep as $7 billion.

Those familiar with state government's budget might ask how a decline in the price of oil to $14.05 per barrel, the official posted price this week, could wreak such havoc.

After all, Bullock had based his original forecast on the expectation that oil would sell at $25 per barrel for fiscal 1986 and $24.15 for fiscal 1987. Even at those prices, total oil production and regulation taxes would have brought in just slightly less than $1.7 billion.

In fact, the Feb. 13 report estimated that the treasury would lose just $377.1 million in direct oil revenues. To understand how that becomes a $1.3 billion decline, one must look at the "ripple effect."

Lawmaker: Dedicated funds make budget inflexible

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram

THE TEXAS BUDGET CRISIS

AUSTIN — Senate Bill 291 slid through the 1985 state Legislature without much fanfare.

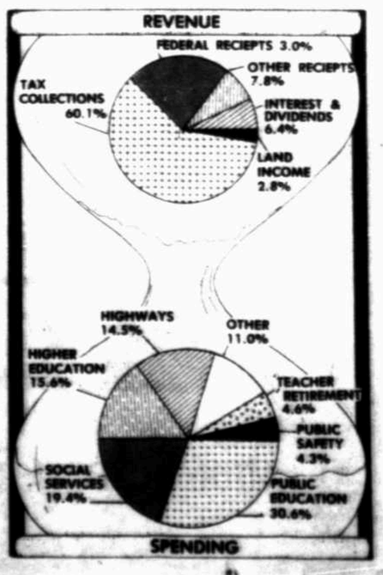

Both the House and Senate passed the bill on voice votes and went on to stickier topics. But when lawmakers return to Austin next January, they will find that SB 291, main intent of which was to give the state bee inspector's office a new 12-year lease on life, has added one more loop to the ever-tightening knot that ties their budgetary hands.

The bill created the "Bee Disease Control Fund No. 560" to collect apiary inspection fees, bee exportation permit fees and intrastate shipment permit fees and to distribute that $120,000 per year to the Texas A&M Agricultural Experiment Station to help control hive diseases.

The Bee Disease Control Fund is one of more than 400 dedicated funds that combine with special formulas, federal court orders and federal rules to control roughly 85 percent of Texas' $37.2 billion biennial budget. The funds range in size from the $50 Texas A&I University Special Mineral Fund to the $2 billion Permanent School Fund.

in, the state's direct oil income declines proportionately.

— Natural gas production is closely linked to oil production. As the dropping price of oil slows production, the state loses a portion of its 7.5 percent gas tax.

— Oil field equipment sales drop along with production, and so does state sales tax on that equipment. Because the state's economy is so closely tied to the petroleum industry, overall retail sales slump and take away additional sales tax revenue.

— Corporate franchise taxes, based on the assets of firms doing business in Texas, also decline with the sluggish economy.

Those four items together — oil and gas taxes, sales tax and franchise taxes — account for almost $1.2 billion. The remainder of the $1.3 billion comes from lost interest on declining state deposits and from federal budget cuts brought about by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings federal deficit reduction plan.

In his Feb. 13 report, Bullock included the $26.6 million in federal funds lost after the first wave of Gramm-Rudman cuts. Saying the situation is "so clouded that no accurate estimate can be made at this time," he made no provision for fiscal 1987 cuts.

Charles Gandy, Austin coordinator for the Office of State-Federal Relations, says the legal and economic climate in Washington has become no clearer over the past four months.

Even if the Supreme Court rules that automatic Gramm-Rudman cuts are unconstitutional, Congress still must comply with the law's requirement that the federal budget deficit drop to $144 billion next year.

If current congressional figures predicting necessary cuts of $37 billion hold true, Gandy says, Texas could lose between 2.5 percent and 15 percent of its federal funds next year. That will cost the treasury between $105 million and $632 million.

"Ten- to 15-percent budget cuts is a likely scenario," Gandy says.

Despite all that bad budget news, Gov. Mark White has steadfastly refused to call the Legislature into special session to raise taxes, cut spending or both. Facing a stiff re-election challenge from former Gov. Bill Clements, White has asked state agencies and universities to voluntarily hold down spending.

Just one week after Bullock officially reduced the revenue estimate, White announced his austerity plan.

It called for agencies and universities to reduce expenditures through a hiring freeze and cutbacks on travel, utilities, professional contracts and capital purchases. The governor asked the agency heads to cut spending by 13 percent without laying off workers or reducing key state services.

Bill Hamilton, White's budget director, says the agencies have submitted plans to his office that indicate they could save $625 million by the end of the biennium.

Some of those proposals, such as the Department of Human Services' decision to limit health care services to the poor, violate White's directive that no essential services be cut.

Still, recent reports indicate that the governor's austerity plan has yet to make a dent in state spending.

Bullock reported Monday that spending from general revenue, the state's main checking account towards which White had aimed his proposal, continues to increase.

For the first three months since White asked agencies to cut back, Bullock has processed spending vouchers averaging $415.2 million per month from general revenue. That's 5.5 percent ahead of the $393.8 million monthly average during the preceeding six months.

While spending for some of the items White had targeted — salaries, travel and utilities — declined in May, expenditures for state services such as education and Medicare ate up the savings.

Even if the governor's program can reduce spending by $625 million, that would still leave the treasury $675 million to $1.7 billion short by the end of the biennium.

In anticipation of that shortfall, House Speaker Gib Lewis has ordered his Appropriations Committee to begin work next month on a bill that would bring spending down to within available revenues.

The alternative, a tax increase, is a "last resort," Lewis says. Because all tax bills must originate in the House, the speaker has the power to enforce that restriction.

With no program sacred, including public education and highways, Lewis expects the budget writers will have a spending-reduction bill ready for introduction when the lawmakers reconvene in January.

He believes the bill can sail through the Legislature and become law. That would leave seven months for the cuts to take effect and balance the budget by Aug. 31, 1987.

"If we don't do that, we're not playing fair with the taxpayers," Lewis said in a private interview earlier this month. "I'm not dead set against a tax bill, but we have to make a full effort on making sure that there is no agency that exists in state government that is performing a service where the reception of that service is not getting the dollar invested."

"You're talking about, in some cases, nickle and dime items, but those nickle and dime items add up."

Across the rotunda, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, presiding officer in the Senate, has another idea. Hobby commends Lewis for focusing attention on the budget problems, but he believes Texans don't want the kind of budget cuts Lewis is proposing.

"State employees are, except for the bureaucrats here in the Capitol, taking care of people in state mental hospitals, they're highway patrolmen, prison guards, they're maintaining highways," Hobby said. "All of those are services that, by comparison with other states in the union, are at a very bare-bones level right now."

Hobby proposes broadening the state sales tax base to include services and items now exempt or excluded.

In a report to the Legislature last year, Bullock said that taxing those items — with the exception of food and medical services — could raise more than $6.9 billion a year. The biggest chunk, about $3 billion, would come by imposing the sales tax on materials used in manufacturing.

Bullock says he is working on a new report that will show how the Legislature can combine broadening the sales tax with a tax rate reduction to bring in whatever amount of new moneys it needs to balance the budget.

"Next session, the appropriations bill will be as big as the House and Senate members want it or permit it, and the tax bill will be as much as it takes to fund it," Bullock says.

"That's a broad answer, but it's the truth."

House leaders say Texans cannot stand a tax increase. Just visit the courthouse and take a look at the number of bankruptcies and foreclosures, says House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Stan Schlueter of Salado.

"When you have an economy like we have now,...you don't just walk out the door and say, 'We're going to raise taxes,'" Schlueter said.

Bernard Weinstein, a conservative economist at Southern Methodist University, and Norman Glickman, a liberal economist at the University of Texas at Austin, both say the state can raise taxes without hurting economic growth. In fact, they say, reducing taxes could actually damage the state's vaunted business climate.

"This is not the time to cut back," Weinstein said. Asked what effect a moderate tax increase would have on the state's economic development, he said, "none at all."

"We need better schools, training, telecommunications systems and highways which potential employers find attractive," Glickman told the Texas Lyceum Association last month.

"Many studies show clearly that decent levels of public expenditures increase economic growth and that a strategy of low spending and low taxes may backfire because it is offset by low levels of public services."

John Noble Hayles, 19, of Odessa was critically injured at 12:35 a.m. Saturday when his vehicle failed to stop at the intersection of County Road 1270 and the service road of Interstate 20, about four miles west of Midland.

According to DPS reports, the 1978 Datsun driven by Hayles was northbound on CR 1270 approaching the intersection. The vehicle ran through the intersection, struck a guardrail, was thrown into the eastbound lane of I-20 and landed on the center median, reports stated. Hayles suffered massive head injuries and was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital.

FUNDS

A group of House conservatives hopes to bust some of the funds next year to give lawmakers the flexibility to cut spending and balance the budget. Many believe the only alternative is a massive tax increase.

"Because of policies inherited from previous Legislatures, today's Legislature is not in control of most of its budget," Houston Rep. Mike Toomey, who chairs a special House subcommittee on dedicated funds, wrote in the spring issue of The Lyceum Journal. "This heritage has left the Legislature unprepared and unable to meet the state's present needs."

In a telephone interview, Toomey said the convoluted fund structure prohibits lawmakers from getting at about three-fourths of the budget and thus they cannot cut enough to overcome predicted huge deficits.

"It's impossible to cut $4 billion out of 25 percent of the budget," he said. "You'd decimate general government."

Opponents say past lawmakers created the special funds in the Constitution or state law to protect the programs they finance.

"I'm a great believer in user fees," said Senate Finance Committee Chairman Grant Jones.

"I don't think you're going to get a whole lot of general revenue appropriated for bee diseases. But if you can do it through a fee, and it's a worthwhile program, you can get the money you need."

Looking at the 1986-1987 state budget, the Constitution and state law control the expenditure of $15.3 million, or 58.4 percent of the $26.2 billion appropriated through major funds.

The largest funds involve the $9.9 billion Foundation School Program and the $3.3 billion Highways and Public Transportation Department appropriation.

The Constitution and laws control all of the spending and much of the revenue raising for state aid to public schools.

State law sets allocations to each of the 1,063 public school districts based on enrollment, student-teacher ratios and special economic characteristics of each district. Article VII, Section 5 of the Constitution says the Available School Fund collects one-fourth of the revenue from motor fuels taxes and interest earned from investing oil and grazing fees on Permanent School Fund lands.

Similar constitutional and statutory provisions govern the revenues the highway department receives each year.

Federal laws, rules and court decisions determine another 10.7 percent of the current budget. Much of that comes through the $2.3 billion spent on the combined budgets of the prison system, juvenile corrections system and mental health and mental retardation institutions. Two federal district judges have ordered the state to meet strict standards at its prisons, state schools and state hospitals.

The Legislature relies on special formulas, devised to make spending patterns fairer, for appropriations to junior colleges, universities, Medicaid and child welfare.

Lawmakers have the flexibility to change those formulas or discard them as they wish.

Some, however, stick to the argument that the formulas maintain some degree of equity in the 18 percent of the budget they control.

The two candidates for governor have taken opposite views on how to deal with the dedicated funds. Republican challenger Bill Clements said "some of our dedicated funds need to be undedicated."

"We have to loosen that up," he said.

Incumbent Democratic Gov. Mark White said such a move would be "a tragic mistake" for Texas. "I think it would be counterproductive," White said.

"It would be a violation of our commitment to the people of Texas, and I am going to keep the funds that we have — particularly in highways and education — dedicated."

Toomey, a Republican, said he will lay out his proposal to "break all of the statutory funds" at a House Appropriations Committee meeting July 11.

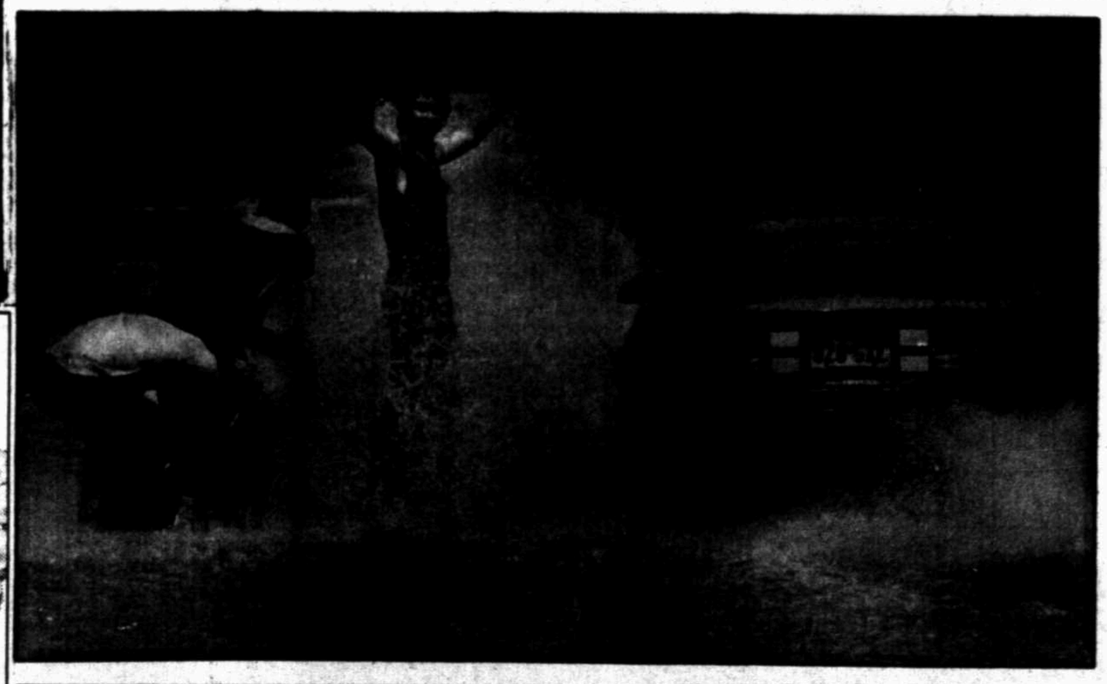

He said a consensus on what to do with the dedicated funds won't come until after the November elections.

"I don't think any side wants to start naming programs now," he said.

Toomey added that he believes senators and representatives must determine whether their constituents want to open the funds and cut or pay for a $4 billion tax bill.

Even those that opt for the open-and-cut plan will have to face stiff lobbying from groups that benefit from the fund structure: the highway contractors, school districts and a host of other special interests.

"It's going to be a bloodbath," Toomey predicted.

DUKE

His modesty remains intact even when listing credentials that can hardly seem to fit into his 57 years of life.

He earned his undergraduate degree while an Aggie "Yell Leader" in 1950 from Texas A&M University. From there, he received a medical degree from Southwestern Medical School, an arm of The University of Texas Health Science Center in Dallas and then interned in surgery at Dallas' Parkland Hospital.

He's researched bio-chemistry and human response to injury at Columbia University in New York and spenty two years in Afghanistan as a profesor at a medical college.

More recent accomplishments include assisting in the formation of the University of Texas School of Health Science Center in Houston.

Ten years ago he also started Houston's Hermann Hospital-based "Life Flight" helicopter ambulance force that covers a large area around Houston including Galveston and Beaumont.

It is, however, the televison spots that have brought him to national attention that he finds so hard to believe.

"They started as a fluke. I orginally agreed to do them because I'll try anything and I was hired because I work cheap!" Duke mused. (He does not receive a salary for doing the spots.)

Does the life as a television personality interfere with the life of the gifted surgeon?

"I'm like the quarterback who never calls the huddle and has to just keep changing the plays. I go from one to the other and back again. If I had to pick just one or the other though, I be would the doctor. But if I can communicate to a large number of people through the television and affect a change, well...that's good, too."

Time not accounted for by the above endeavors is most likely spent at home in Houston with his wife, four children and his grandchildren.

An active wildlife conservationist, Duke serves as president of three conservationist groups including the Texas Big Horn Society, the North American Wild Sheep Foundation and the Boone-Crockett Conservation Group started by Teddy Roosevelt 99 years ago.

He was the main draw at the cook-off Saturday which was held to raise funds for a permanent scholarship fund available to a Permian Basin student planning to attend Texas A&M University.

Fans crowded around Duke constantly and spoke nothing but praise for the man who tries to guide people to better health.

He admits that he's had to learn to say no to certain requests for his time, but the country-boy-turned-legend lets out the secret, "When it comes to my daughters or the Texas Aggies, I'm as weak as a kitten."

Study: Taxpayers fund federal employee's personal calls

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — About a third of all long-distance telephone calls made by federal employees at five agencies were for personal, rather than business reasons, preliminary government studies show.

The President's Council on Integrity and Efficiency ordered the inspectors general of all federal agencies to conduct the studies to determine the extent of phone system abuse.

The Office of Personnel Management found 36.5 percent of the long-distance calls were unofficial; Department of Housing and Urban Development, 29 percent; Department of Energy, 30 percent; Agency for International Development, 50 percent; and National Aeronautics and Space Administration, 43.1 percent.

"The taxpayers are paying a lot for federal phone service, and the phone bill should be cut," said Andrew Feinstein, staff director of the House subcommittee on civil service. "Hundreds of millions of dollars could be saved."

Feinstein said the agencies, using a method of monitoring calls developed by the inspector general of the General Services Administration, "did not listen in on people's phone calls." Instead, he said, the agencies took scientific samples of the calls made from their offics and then called the number. If the phone was in a private residence, the call was classified as personal.

But Feinstein said the method has some problems.

"What if the call was to the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco?" he asked. "That could be either business or personal, but it was probably counted as personal. On the other hand, a call to a federal agency in another city might be for personal reasons, but was counted as a business call."

Feinstein said the civil service subcommittee became involved in the issue when it was first proposed a year ago because "we were concerned about employee rights."

The council could force federal employees to stop making personal calls by listening in on random calls and taking disciplinary action against abusers, a tactic Feinstein described as "terrorizing" the workers.

Officials find Excedrin capsules still in stores

AUBURN, Wash. (AP) — Health officials appealed to the public Saturday to prod merchants who had not pulled Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules from shelves after finding more than a dozen stores that had not complied with the recall.

Cyanide-tainted capsules of the painkiller were blamed last week for killing two Auburn-area residents, but word that the manufacturer had recalled the capsules apparently hadn't reached some small retailers, said Chuck Kleeberg, director of the environmental health division of the Seattle-King County Health Department.

"We visited about 200 stores Friday and found about 15 places that had Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules on the shelves, which surprised me. It was pretty high," Kleeberg said.

"There was some confusion on their part," he said. "We heard things like, 'I thought some official was going to come and get them.'"

The stores with capsules still on their shelves all were in the northern part of King County, he said. No bottles remained on display in the south-county area, including Auburn, where the two victims lived.

Sue Snow, a 40-year-old bank manager, and Bruce Nickell, a 52-year-old state worker, died after taking capsules from bottles which contained cyanide-tainted capsules.

Nickell's death originally had been attributed to natural causes, but tests for cyanide were performed after his wife heard of Ms. Snow's death.

A second bottle from the Nickell home and one from a Kent store were turned over to the FBI after preliminary investigation showed they contained suspicious capsules.

Those bottles were sent to an FBI lab in Washington, D.C., for analysis. FBI spokesman Joe Smith in Seattle said results of those tests would be withheld during the investigation.

The two original bottles came from lot number 5-H102, expiration date August 1988. But FDA spokeswoman Ellen Miller noted the second bottle found in Nickell's home was from a different lot number, and urged consumers not to take Excedrin capsules from any lot.

"We don't want people using those capsules, period. I don't know how much more emphatic we can be," she said.

Auburn residents, meanwhile, were stunned by the poisonings. "I was shocked that it could happen here," said Earl Betts, 42, a Pacific Northwest Bell supervisor.

"What are you safe doing anymore?" said Pat Pettygrove, 39, a beauty salon operator. "You can't even take aspirin for a headache. We've dumped all the capsules in our house."

EL PASO MARRIOTT BECOMES A RESORT

The management and staff of the El Paso Marriott announced that the hotel will become a full fledged resort every weekend between Memorial Day and Labor Day.

"Now people can afford to go on vacation without the hassle of a lengthy trip," said Mike Shoffit, General Manager. "Our hotel is ideal for an El Paso weekend get-a-way, as we have everything necessary for fun, relaxation and recreation all under one roof."

The El Paso Marriott Hotel features an indoor/outdoor swimming pool, exercise room, whirlpool and dry sauna, in addition to a putting green, aerobic exercise sessions and volleyball games. Golf and tennis are available nearby at Vista Hills Country Club. Shopping is another option with convenience to the Cielo Vista and Bassett Center Shopping Malls.

Two fine restaurants and lounge are available to serve even the most discriminating tastes. The La Cascada restaurant serves breakfast, lunch and dinner with modest prices. Chatfield's restaurant provides fine cuisine with a truly divine flair, serving dinner only. McGinty's lounge is considered "the " place in town for dancing and cocktails after a rough day of sunning and relaxing.

A Friday and Saturday night check-in will set the stage for a resort like weekend with rates starting at just $39 per room. Whether it is high up on the sixth floor overlooking the city, a deluxe king poolside or a luxurious suite, the El Paso Marriott has the perfect way for you to spend your summer weekend.

Call 779-3300 or toll free 1-800-228-9290 to make your reservation at El Paso's newest weekend resort!

Fight looms in Congress over who will chair tax conferees

By CLIFF HAAS

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the Senate about to complete action on landmark tax-overhaul legislation, Congress' two top tax writers already are arguing about who will chair the House-Senate negotiations leading to a final bill.

After the Senate gives what is certain to be overwhelming approval on Tuesday, it will be up to bargainers from the tax committees of the House and Senate to draft a compromise version of the bill. The House passed its version late last year.

There are hundreds of differences between the two measures and the decisions made by the conferees will determine who will be the winners and losers in the most radical revision of the federal tax code in a generation.

The stakes are high and the bargaining will be especially tough. In recognition of the trench warfare that is expected, a private tax group presented World War I helmets last week to Sen. Bob Packwood, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, and Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Publicly, there is good cheer about the upcoming talks.

"I hope we can go to the conference on the basis we are not going to have any institutional pride of authorship," Packwood said.

Rostenkowski good-naturedly quipped, "I have a proposition to make to my pal, Bob Packwood. If he'll cover me while I take on oil and gas, I'll cover him while he takes real estate. There's no reason why we shouldn't give each other cover."

The House bill restricts tax breaks for the oil and gas industry that the Senate bill leaves intact. Meanwhile, the Senate bill contains tighter restrictions on tax breaks for real estate investment than those in the House measure.

Despite the smiles, there is a test of wills over which of the chairmen will head the negotiations.

"I understand there may be some difference of opinion on that," Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said in understating the situation.

The chairman of the conference controls the agenda and pace of the talks and can exert subtle influence on how the delicate process proceeds.

Traditionally, the chairmen of the two tax panels alternate as the leader of the congressional bargaining sessions on tax matters.

Packwood's turn would come next unless there were another measure in conference first.

Rostenkowski says there is.

The House and Senate each have passed separate versions of water resources development legislations. The broad bills contain provisions under the jurisdiction of the tax committees, such as port and harbor user fees and barge fuel taxes.

Earlier this month, Rostenkowski said Packwood should take his turn as conference chairman for the tax issues in the water projects bill. Packwood said he would rather not.

Regardless, Rostenkowski said the House parliamentarian has determined it would be his turn to chair the tax-overhaul conference.

"I don't know that that's going to be a point of contention," Rostenkowski said, indicating that he does not plan to give any ground on the issue.

Considering the complexity of the issues on the table, deciding who will sit at the head of it is the easiest decision the bargainers will make.

HOW THEY VOTED

House hard on South Africa, endorses SALT II

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON – Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending June 20, 1986.

KEY HOUSE VOTES

HOUSE VOTES FOR HARD LINE ON SOUTH AFRICA SANCTIONS.

The House defeated an amendment that would have weakened proposed economic sanctions on the nation of South Africa by 150-268 Wednesday, setting the stage for later approval by voice vote of the Anti-Apartheid Act, which would require almost complete U.S. disinvestment in that embattled country because of its policies of institutionalized racism, called apartheid.

The defeated amendment would have allowed both foreign and U.S. companies located in South Africa that would have embraced the Sullivan principles – a code of fair employment practices for the treatment of black South Africans – to continue to utilize U.S. investments. The act requires U.S. disinvestment in South Africa and imposes a trade embargo on that nation, with special exceptions for strategic materials needed by the U.S. defense industry.

Last year, the House passed a more moderate version of the act, but the bill died in the Senate when President Reagan, in a bid to take the impetus away from the issue, signed an executive order imposing mild sanctions on South Africa. While the Senate is unlikely to approve anything as sweeping as the legislation coming out of the House, backers of the act hope to pressure the Senate into voting for some type of significant economic sanctions.

Supporters of the amendment to weaken the Anti-Apartheid Act argued that simply destroying the economy of South Africa was not the way to end apartheid. They also said that many blacks in South Africa oppose economic sanctions, believing that the black community would be the first to suffer in an economic crisis.

Opponents said that the issue was not how well some companies treat their employees, but how best to pressure the government of South Africa to put apartheid aside.

Voting for the amendment to weaken the Anti-Apartheid Act:

Reps. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt; Larry Combest, R-Lubbock; Richard Armey, R-Denton; Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo

HOUSE ENDORSES SALT II TREATY.

In a move designed to undercut President Reagan's plan to scrap the Strategic Asrms Limitation Talks (SALT) II treaty between the United States and the Soviet Union, the House approved a non-binding resolution Thursday calling for the president to adhere to the weapons restrictions set forth in the treaty as long as the Soviets do likewise. The measure passed on A 256-145 vote.

While the resolution is non-binding, and thus does not carry the force of law, it is significant because it demonstrates widespread support for the treaty in Congress. The Senate passed a similar measure 90-5 on June 5, 1985, as an amendment of the fiscal 1986 Department of Defense Authorization bill, but that compromise measure also endorsed selective U.S. departures from the existing limits in response to alleged Soviet violations, prompting both supporters and detractors of the treaty to claim victory.

The SALT I treaty expired in 1977. The United States never ratified the SALT II treaty, but both the Soviet Union and the United States have observed most of the provisions of the agreement since it was developed in 1979. President Reagan has called the SALT II treaty "fatally flawed."

Supporters said that the treaty protects important U.S. national security interests, and while it is admittedly imperfect, it at least puts a lid on a runaway arms race. "In this threatening age of possible nuclear annihilation, an arms control agreement that constrains nuclear arms is better than no agreement at all," declared Dante Fascell, D-Fla.

Opponents said the Soviet Union had repeatedly and deliberately violated the SALT II agreement, and that the United States was falling behind the Soviet Union in strategic defenses.

Voting for the non-binding resolution endorsing the SALT II limitations:

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio.

Reps. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt; Larry Combest, R-Lubbock; Richard Armey, R-Denton; Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo

KEY SENATE VOTES

SENATE SQUELCHES ATTEMPT TO ADD HIGHER BRACKET TO TAX BILL.

The Republican-controlled Senate, struggling to block a threatening flood of amendments to its tax overhaul bill, squashed an attempt to add a 35 percent tax bracket to the bill while making a one percentage point reduction in the lowest tax bracket. The amendment proposing a third bracket was tabled (killed) on a 71-29 vote Wednesday.

Currently, there are 14 tax brackets, ranging from 11 percent to 50 percent. The Senate tax bill contains only a 15 percent bracket and a 27 percent bracket. The tax bill that has already been passed by the House contains four brackets: 15, 25, 35 and 38 percent.

Those who supported the motion to kill the amendment said that the tax package was a delicately balanced instrument. Any major alteration of the bill, they argued, would destroy that balance and open the floodgates for hundreds of amendments to the package. This would destroy any chance of real tax reform, they said. Others said that the amendment was just a smokescreen to raise all tax rates to fund what they called social welfare schemes. The wealthy don't have enough money to do that, they argued, so taxes would have to go up for everyone.

"The only way you can justiy raising taxes on the middle class is to raise the rates on the rich so that you can pretend you are taxing the rich more," said Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bob Packwood, R-Ore.

Opponents of the motion to table argued that the biggest beneficiaries of the tax bill would be the upper-income taxpayers. It was simply unfair to charge people making over $17,600 a year the same rate as those making $100,000 a year or $1 million, they said. The third bracket, they said, would ease the burden on lower-and middle-income taxpayers at the expense of the wealthy. "The conclusion is inescapable that this amendment favors middle income earners," declared Jim Sasser, D-Tenn.

Voting to table the amendment adding a 35 percent bracket to the tax bill:

Sens. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

Two new intestinal polyps benign in president's colon, tests show

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly a year after President Reagan underwent surgery for intestinal cancer, two new polyps removed from his colon were found by tests to be benign, his doctor said Saturday.

"The final laboratory evaluation of the two intestinal polyps removed during the president's routine follow-up examination yesterday has been completed, and both are benign," said the statement by Dr. T Burton Smith, Reagan's doctor.

The president and his wife, Nancy were informed of the laboratory report at Camp David, the presidential retreat in the Catoctin Mountains of Maryland, where they were spending the weekend, Smith said.

The polyps, or fleshy growths, were removed during a colonoscopy, a procedure for inspecting the large intestine, which was conducted Friday as part of a five-hour examination at Bethesda Naval Hospital, just outside Washington.

Smith said the polyps were 1 to 1 1/2 millimeters in size, or roughly .04 to .06 inches.

Such polyps are generally benign but doctors advise removing them because some of them develop into malignancies. A large malignant tumor was removed from the president's colon at the Bethesda hospital last July.

The presidential physician said blood tests, X-rays and other procedures were carried out during the examination.

"The results of all the other tests were normal, and the president is in good health," he said.

Panel hears claim of POWs in Laos

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, delving into a mystery that dates to the end of the Vietnam War, is trying to untangle reports that a videotape exists showing American prisoners of war still held in Laos.

The tape is being offered to the U.S. government for $4.2 million.

Involved in the episode are a retired Army major and a retired sergeant who are suing President Reagan and other top government officials in an effort to force them to pursue the matter; a man recently released from a Singapore prison who claims to have the tape; and a North Carolina congressman who is championing their cause.

The suit is pending in U.S. District Court in Fayetteville, N.C.

Maj. Mark A. Smith and Sgt. Melvin C. McIntire told the Senate committee at a hearing last January that for two years they collected information on American POWs from a network of agents in Southeast Asia and turned it over to Army Intelligence which passed it on to the Defense Intelligence Agency.

Smith said that this winter he saw "evidence" which, he said, "proves beyond any doubt that in excess of 30 Americans and other nationalities are being held as prisoners of war in Southeast Asia. This evidence cannot be described in detail but can generally be described as current and specific ..."

Smith didn't discuss in open session what he had. But sources, who insisted on anonymity, said he was referring to a videotape which was described in some detail in an affidavit filed in connection with the suit against Reagan.

The committee, chaired by Sen. Frank H. Murkowski, R-Alaska, has asked Smith and McIntire to return for a hearing on Wednesday to question them in more detail.

Since the end of the Vietnam war and the release of prisoners held in North Vietnam, the U.S. government has received hundreds of reports that Americans were still being held prisoner. Many of these reports included alleged sightings of Americans in Laos.

Government officials, while saying they do not rule out the possibility, have testified that they have never received proof that Americans still are held in Southeast Asia.

So far, even government officials who express skepticism about Smith's report, refuse to rule out the possibility that it is accurate. The committee appears to be reserving judgment.

Lt. Gen. Leonard H. Perroots, director of the Defense Intelligence Agency, told the panel on Feb. 27 that he was aware of Smith's contention that there was a videotape.

"Now, I'm not suggesting, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that there is no film," said Perroots, "and I hope, as I think he is attempting to do now, Mr. Smith is pursuing this, trying to find that film."

Rep. Bill Hendon, R-N.C., delivered to Vice President George Bush a letter dated Feb. 28, addressed to Reagan and signed by Mark L. Waple, Smith's lawyer.

The letter said "those who are in control of the Americans in capitivity" had agreed to allow three members of Congress to view the film.

"After these three representatives have had the opportunity to view the film and are satisfied with the validity of the contents, they will be required to pay the sum of 4.2 million dollars in cash and take receipt of the original of the film and other evidence of live Americans and other allied POWs still being held in Southeast Asia," Waple wrote.

The letter also stated that "those in control of this evidence also require that Major Smith and the three congressional representatives mentioned above be provided a U.S. commercial airliner with the authorization and capability to depart from Los Angeles International Airport and to fly to a destination in Southeast Asia to be determined at a later date by those in control of the film.

"One of the pilots of the airliner must be selected by Major Mark Smith and the remainder of the crew may be selected by the United States government as long as they are under deep civilian cover."

Steve Hart, a Bush spokesman, said the letter was referred to the Defense Intelligence Agency.

Educators say freshmen not college ready

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — Entering college freshmen are becoming increasingly ill-prepared to handle college level work, partly because minimum standards across the country vary greatly, Southern educators and government leaders said Saturday at the opening of their annual conference here.

In the future, higher education must maintain both access and standards, said Robert Hardesty, president of Southwest Texas State University. He noted that Texas colleges currently have no systematic way of testing college students for basic skills.

As a result, educators in Texas are recommending students take a statewide entry-level skills examination that would to be used determine where entering students need more training and what level courses they would be placed in.

About half the students seeking post-secondary education don't know what is expected of them and lack basic skills needed to succeed in college, said David Spence, vice president of the Southern Regional Education Board, an interstate policy-making group dedicated to advancing education.

"A large number of students are without the signals on how to prepare for college," he said, adding that states realize the extent of problem and are seeking ways to improve the situation.

All of the panelists recommended college-level work be defined and used as the starting point for further reform in higher education.

About 125 educators and government leaders from 15 Southeastern states attended the opening session of a two-day conference at the Boca Raton Hotel and Club in which the panel addressed campus and state responsibilities for improving undergraduate education.

Part of the problem is that there are "tremendous variations" from high school to colleges around the United States in what is considered college level work, according to Spence, who moderated a panel that included the presidents of Miami-Dade Community College, the University of Tennessee and Southwest Texas State.

Spence said a kind of complacency has set in among students since a number of institutions have adopted an open-door policy, which allows practically anyone wanting post-secondary education access to college.

FDA's actions take shine off Upjohn Co.'s baldness drug

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hope springs eternal, but often hair does not.

So millions of balding men — and thousands of Wall Street speculators — are anxiously awaiting word from the government on whether a safe and effective treatment for baldness finally has been found.

The drug they are watching is minoxidil, produced by the Upjohn Co. Under the brand name Loniten, it has been used for 20 years to treat severe high blood pressure because it opens small blood vessels.

But it had a curious side effect. About 80 percent of people taking minoxidil tablets grew hair — on the forehead, temples or upper cheeks initially, later for some on the back, arms, legs or scalp.

Because of the weird locations, the hair growth was considered an annoyance at the least, tolerated because the powerful, potentially dangerous drug was used only on patients who did not respond to safer blood pressure drugs.

But Upjohn scientists began to wonder what would happen if a solution of minoxidil was rubbed on a bald scalp. They tried and found scalp hair.

Upjohn began full-scale clinical testing of Regaine, its brand name for the topical solution, in 1983. Last year, the Michigan company filed an application asking the Food and Drug Administration to approve minoxidil as a treatment for male-pattern baldness.

That application now is pending. But the course of the review process, usually a staid and analytical procedure, has been a circus since word of the drug spread.

Based on early research, thousands of bald men besieged their doctors for help, and physicians responded with prescriptions for Loniten and directions for a pharmacist to crush the small white pills to powder and dissolve them in solution.

That kind of bootleg medicine is legal, though both the FDA and the company say they frown on the practice because of the potential risk of the untested procedure.

And on Wall Street, speculators eyeing a potential market some estimate at 55 million Americans sent Upjohn stock soaring. It went from $33 a share in early 1985 to $174 a share on May 2, when it split 2-for-1, then to $103.75 on June 13.

The market's concern about possible FDA action was dramatically demonstrated last week when the FDA released a letter to Upjohn accusing the company of issuing a misleading press release about the drug.

The FDA said the release overstated the effectiveness of minoxidil and understated its risks. Upjohn stock dropped sharply after the FDA's announcement, closing Friday at $92.50.

And Upjohn has expressed confidence the drug will be approved, investing $25.7 million in a Kalamazoo, Mich., manufacturing plant. The drug also will be produced in Belgium and Puerto Rico, the company said.

But the FDA's letter sharply rebuked the company and opened the question of whether minoxidil really does grow hair without undue risk.

The company, in the disputed press release, said clinical trials at 27 medical centers overall showed significant hair growth in a substantial proportion of balding men treated.

Of those applying a 2 percent solution of minoxidil, apparently the optimal dose, 40 percent reported moderate hair growth while 8 percent described their hair growth as dense, the company said.

In 65 percent of those receiving the 2 percent solution, the company said, the size of the patient's bald spot decreased. There was no change in 20 percent of the patients, and the diameter increased for 15 percent, Upjohn said.

"No major side effects attributable to the drug were detected in the 27-center study," the company said. The only apparent side effects were common skin problems.

There have been 10 deaths among people who used either authorized or bootleg solutions of minoxidil, the company said, but none appeared linked to the drug.

But William Purvis of the FDA's drug advertising and labeling division said in the May 15 letter that the press release "falsely portrays minoxidil as an innocuous drug. It is our position that minoxidil is a potent drug for which the full safety and toxicity issues for chronic topical use have not yet been fully evaluated or elucidated."

Open questions include the possible side effects from using the drug over long periods, Purvis said. Even when it grows hair, minoxidil must be used permanently or baldness returns.

Juneteenth celebration warrants tear gas use

DENVER (AP) — Police used tear gas to disperse about 700 people during a melee at the Juneteenth Celebration that left 20 people injured, officials said Saturday, adding that three men were arrested.

Twelve officers and a police dog were among those hurt Friday night, suffering minor injuries after being struck by rocks and bottles, said Sgt. Ed Connors.

Most of the injuries to the crowd were minor, police said, with the only person still hospitalized a stabbing victim. Michael Hargers, 21, of Denver was listed in serious condition Saturday at Denver General Hospital with a stab wound to the back.

A 22-year-old man was shot in the head Friday night in the same vicinity but police said they do not know if that was related to the street brawl. The unidentified man was reported in critical condition Saturday.

Police did not identify the three men arrested, but Connors said they were jailed for disturbing the peace or other misdemeanor offenses.

Marcos to be questioned

HONOLULU (AP) — A federal judge has affirmed a ruling that allows former Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos to be questioned in connection with the murder of two political opponents in Seattle in 1981.

U.S. District Judge Harold M. Fong on Wednesday affirmed Magistrate Daral Conklin's order denying a motion to quash a subpoena.

Fong said Marcos cannot claim a blanket privilege against testifying. However, he said Marcos can claim privileges against incriminating himself or jeopardizing national security in the Philippines.

Marcos' attorney, Richard Hibey, had claimed that Marcos is still president of the Philippines and entitled to immunity.

The families of Silme Domingo and Gene Viernes claim that Marcos and Gen. Fabian Ver, former head of the Philippine armed forces, ordered and paid for the murders.

Airliner aborts takeoff

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — An American Airlines Boeing 727 aborted its takeoff Saturday after smoke was seen coming from the landing gear, and several passengers suffered scrapes and bruises when they slid down emergency chutes, an airline spokesman said.

Flight 232 to Phoenix, with 60 passengers and seven crew members aboard, was on the San Francisco International Airport runway and moving toward takeoff at 7:30 a.m. when the control tower told the crew that smoke was coming from the left main landing gear, said American Airlines spokesman Steve McGregor.

The captain steered the plane to a taxiway and deployed the emergency evacuation slides for the passengers, he said.

The cause of the smoke "may have been a brake dragging," McGregor said.

Steelworkers want reform

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United Steelworkers union staged a 55-city town meeting Saturday, using high technology to broaden its call for import restrictions, aid to the unemployed and programs to revive dying communities.

"We're here to help save America's industry and jobs, and to bring the issues to the people and to Congress," USW President Lynn Williams told a roomful of labor leaders, steel industry officials and union members at a hotel near Capitol Hill.

His words were carried by satellite to high schools, civic centers and union halls across the country as part of a "Save American Industry and Jobs" program that also included live segments from rallies in Aliquippa, Pa.; a Hagerstown, Md. ribbon factory; and the Minnesota capitol in St. Paul.

Williams said more than 200,000 steel jobs have been lost in the past four years. But he and other speakers said more is at stake than the steel industry.

Teen's second heart fails

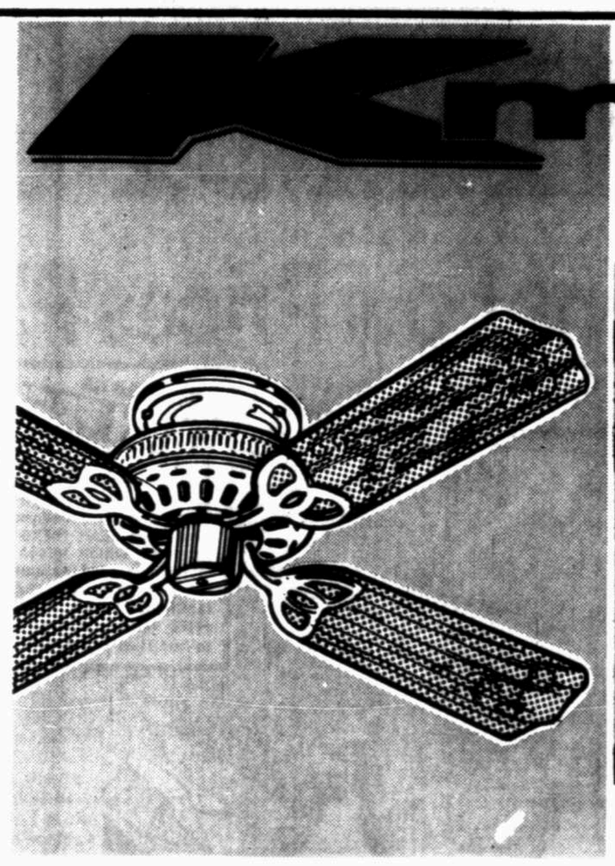

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A 17-year-old Cleveland boy who received two heart transplants died of organ failure Saturday, three days after his second operation, hospital officials said.

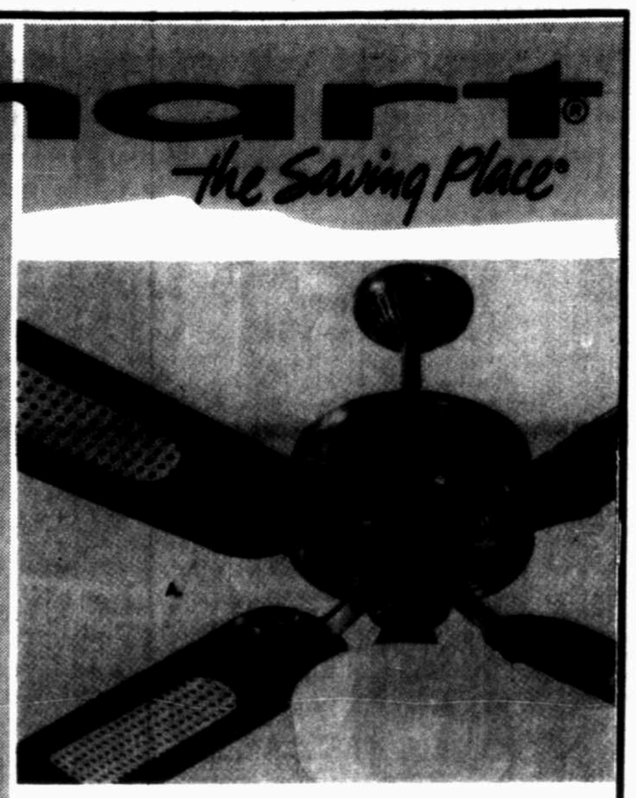

Tony Steele, whose kidneys had begun to fail Friday, died around 4:10 a.m. in the intensive care unit of Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh, the hospital said.

The teen-ager had been in critical condition since undergoing his second transplant Wednesday.

Police impose gag on anti-apartheid

WORLD

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police commanders eased a state-of-emergency ban on reporting from black townships Saturday, but imposed a gag order in the Cape Town area on 118 anti-apartheid organizations.

Under new regulations issued by Police Commissioner Johannes Coetzee, news coverage from black areas will be allowed if not connected to unrest or security operations, although senior police officers can at any time order journalists to leave a township.

Coetzee had imposed a blanket ban on reporting from townships early Monday as blacks across South Africa prepared for a nationwide general strike to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the Soweto riots.

The gag order prohibits the 118 organizations, including major national anti-apartheid groups, from producing pamphlets or posters in six magisterial districts in and around Cape Town and makes it illegal to publish comments from them in the districts.

The organizations affected include the United Democratic Front, the country's largest anti-apartheid coalition, and the Congress of South African Trade Unions, the largest labor federation.

Officials of gagged organizations were among the more than 1,000 activists detained without charge since the June 12 declaration of a nationwide state of emergency.

The declaration was accompanied by severe restrictions on the news media which, except for Saturday's modification, remain in force. Journalists cannot describe security force action without permission, identify people detained under the emergency, or report a range of "subversive" statements.

Peter Gastrow of the white opposition Progressive Federal Party denounced the gag order in Parliament.

Gastrow, using parliamentary immunity to circumvent the ban on identifying detainees, named three labor leaders he said were detained — Jerry Ntombela of the Congress of South Africa Trade Unions; Peter Dantjie of the Metal and Allied Workers Union, and Musa Kheowa of the National Union of Textile Workers.

The government's Bureau for Information reported a bomb exploded late Saturday in the port city of Durban. It said the device, placed in a garbage can outside a downtown movie theater, shattered some windows but caused no casualties. There were no claims of responsibility.

On the previous Saturday night, a car bomb exploded beside a restaurant on Durban's seafront boulevard, killing three women — two whites and an Indian — and wounding 69 people. There was no assertion of responsibility for that attack, either, but the government said it suspected guerrillas of the outlawed African National Congress.

Meanwhile, the government denied a report Saturday in the Times of London that said South African forces fired teargas into a church in a town near Johannesburg, fatally wounding several babies and one child.

The Times said the attack occurred Thursday in Kwa Thema, 21 miles southeast of Johannesburg. But the Bureau for Information said the article was a "deliberate attempt to disseminate an inaccurate report."

Black Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu said in Cape Town he held peace talks at a secret venue with leaders of the two warring factions at Crossroads, a nearby black squatter area.

Tutu said both delegations wanted to report to their followers before meeting again July 5.

On June 12, Tutu arranged an interim cease-fire between the two sides, one dominated by anti-apartheid militants and the other by conservative vigilantes trying to drive them from the area. More than 60 people have been killed and about 70,000 burned out of their shacks during battles since last month.

Tutu suggested that homeless squatters be allowed to rebuild their shacks at Crossroads, and he condemned a government attempt to evict about 1,000 of the refugees from shelters at churches in nearby white neighborhoods.

"I hope the churches know which to obey when it comes to a choice between carrying out God's law and man's law," Tutu said.

In Soweto, Johannesburg's main black township, the bodies of four young men were buried Saturday in the first funerals of unrest victims there since the emergency declaration.

A local reporter said participants observed tight new restrictions on funerals imposed under the emergency — a maximum of 200 mourners, no political speeches, and no chanting or singing of freedom songs and slogans.

The Bureau for Information, the main source of official information about the emergency, said no unrest-related deaths were recorded between daybreak Friday and daybreak Saturday.

The Citizen, a pro-government Johannesburg daily, said in an editorial Saturday that if Americans don't like South Africa's political policies, "they can go jump in Lake Michigan for all we care."

The editorial said, "Sure, South Africa has institutionalized racism, whereas many other countries, including America, are racist by custom instead of by law."

Government says blank spaces risky

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Even blank spaces in South Africa's newspapers these days run the risk of being deemed criminally subversive statements.

Since the government imposed sweeping restrictions on journalists 10 days ago, newspaper editors have often left pages blank to protest the decrees.

Asked at a press briefing Friday whether blank spaces could be subversive, David Steward, spokesman of the Bureau of Information, said: "That would be a matter that your legal advisers would have to address."

The Sowetan, a white-owned daily for black readers, noted on its front page Friday: "We have been advised that the police interpret the blank spaces in the newspaper over the past few days as being 'subversive.' We will now fill the spaces with the most innocuous of writings."

Under the restrictions, journalists are barred from describing actions by security forces without permission, identifying people detained under the emergency decree or reporting a range of statements reckoned to be "subversive." Television crews cannot transmit live reports.

The South Africa government has long controlled the press, but has argued the country has the freest press on the continent.

The foreign press was long exempt, at least in practice, from rules covering local media. The Foreign Correspondents Association called the new curbs the toughest on foreign reporters anywhere in the world.

Lebanese release two hostages

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Two Cypriot students kidnapped in Beirut almost two months ago were released early Saturday and flew home for joyous family reunions.

They were freed hours after two members of a French television crew were released by their Moslem kidnappers in Beirut and returned to France following a stopover in Damascus, Syria.

An official government statement said the two students were released through the "personal mediation" of Yasser Arafat, the leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, following an appeal by Cypriot President Spyros Kyprianou.

Stavros Yannaki, 23, and Panayiotis Tirkas, 24, were flown from Beirut, the Lebanese capital, to Larnaca airport in southern Cyprus aboard a Lebanese helicopter.

The young men, both engineering students at the American University of Beirut, were seized outside the university by armed men April 28.

No group in west Beirut, where the university is located, claimed responsibility for their abductions.

PLO officials in Cyprus, who spoke with the condition they not be identified, said they did not know who Arafat contacted to arrange for the students' release.

Yannaki, after arriving at his home in Nicosia, said, "We do not know why we were seized and have no idea who our kidnappers are." He looked pale and tired but smiled relatives and friends arrived to embrace him.

Tirkas was driven from the airport to his home at Kato Polemidhia, 50 miles from Nicosia, for a family renion.

Yannaki said one of their captors informed them Saturday morning they would be released. "We were put in the back of a closed van and driven to a destination where we were handed over to our ambassador," he said.

He added he had no idea where they had been kept during their captivity. They were held in a small room with its windows closed and never saw their guards, who told them to face the wall whenever food was delivered, he said.

"We tried to talk to our guards in English and Arabic, asking them 'Why, what is the matter?' and the guards invariably replied with one word, saying 'mafish,' the Arabic word for 'there is nothing'," Yannaki said.

Rumor of Aquino coup denied

By CHARLES J. HANLEY

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The military chief of staff waved off persistent speculation Saturday about a possible coup attempt against President Corazon Aquino, saying such political intervention is not in the tradition of the Philippine armed forces.

"We do not have that kind of background," said Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, who four months ago helped lead a soldiers' revolt against the Marcos regime.

In an hour-long Associated Press interview at his Camp Aguinaldo headquarters, Ramos also dismissed a key condition set by communist guerrillas for a cease-fire in this country's lingering insurgency, and said communist "termites" were trying to "bore" into the new Philippine government.

But, under questioning, the armed forces commander meticulously stayed out of Manila's simmering political disputes, such as the question of whether to extend the presence of U.S. military bases on Philippine soil.

The cigar-smoking, West Point-educated general was a key player in February's ouster of Ferdinand E. Marcos, this country's longtime authoritarian president.

After Marcos was widely regarded to have resorted to vote fraud in the Philippine presidential election, Ramos and Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile turned against him. They rallied thousands of soldiers and hundreds of thousands of civilians around them in a near-bloodless mass uprising that drove Marcos from the country after 20 years as the nation's leader and installed Mrs. Aquino as president. Ramos was promoted from deputy chief to chief of staff.

Now a series of recent developments in this teeming tropical capital has stirred rumors of a new coup, and provided sensational headlines for Manila's 21 highly competitive newspapers.

Enrile is at the center of the flurry of reports.

In contrast with Mrs. Aquino's non-committal stance on the bases issue, the defense minister publicly called for a long-term commitment to the American military installations. An unconfirmed press report, meanwhile, said Enrile was about to be ousted from the Cabinet.

In addition, reports continued that the military was unhappy with what it sees as a soft government policy toward the communist guerrillas, who have been offered government amnesty at the same time soldiers may face investigations of past human rights abuses in the anti-insurgent campaign.

Despite the coup speculation, Manila remained outwardly relaxed, and both Enrile and Mrs. Aquino discounted the rumors. Ramos was asked about the coup scare in Saturday's interview.

"You are right here in our headquarters," he said, gesturing around his spacious, wood-paneled office, "and you don't see anyone struggling around with firearms or in battle gear. ... We don't have that kind of background."

Ramos continued, "If it happened once, in February 1986, it was a nonviolent solution by the military, and the military ... declared that the powers of government should be retained by the civil authorities."

Ramos would not step into the looming dispute over Subic Naval Base and Clark Air Base — the major U.S. military installations in the Philippines.

"We are leaving this to the political leadership to decide, and the president has made it clear she is keeping her options open," he said.

The current 25-year agreement on the U.S. bases expires in 1991, and Mrs. Aquino says she will hold a national plebiscite on whether to retain the facilities beyond then.

The tough-talking Ramos, who commanded Philippine military engineer units in the U.S. war effort in Vietnam in the 1960s, said he wished the Aquino government well in its attempt to negotiate a cease-fire with the New People's Army insurgents, military arm of the Philippine Communists.

"But we must be aware of the track record of the Communist Party of the Philippines," the general said, referring to what he called its sole goal of "seizing government power by any means."

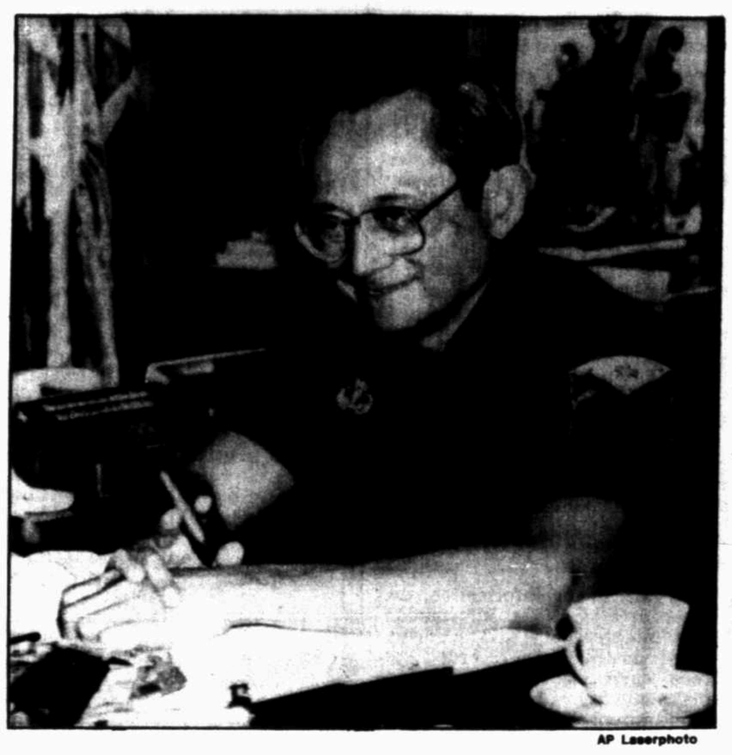

Some conservative Filipinos claim that high-ranking Aquino aides are either communist sympathizers or closet communists, although Mrs. Aquino has made her own pro-capitalist leanings clear.

Speaking of this, and choosing his words carefully, Ramos said the Philippine Communists have always tried to infiltrate government. But he would not be more specific.

"We compare it with the termite. ... I am not saying where they are. I am just saying these people bore in."

Asked about a list of cease-fire conditions relayed from rebels on embattled Negros Island, the general was dismissive. The guerrillas demand withdrawal of government troops from Negros, 300 miles south of Manila.

"This is just like us demanding that the NPA withdraw from the island of Negros," Ramos said, "and do you think they will do that?"

Peru officials vow punishment for military 'excesses' at prison riots

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Vice President Luis Alberto Sanchez said Saturday the government will punish any excesses by the military in putting down riots last week at three prisons in which at least 250 inmates were killed.

The political opposition on Saturday called the killings a massacre.

On Saturday night, the official news agency Andina said Sanchez, who is also president of congress, had decided to conduct a congressional inquiry, as the opposition had demanded.

Opposition Sen. Diez Canseco said surviving prisoners claimed that soldiers killed 60 inmates after they had surrendered. "This has been an operation of extermination, not one to re-establish order," he said.

Most of the inmates killed Thursday at the three prisons in or near Lima were believed to be members of the Shining Path, a Maoist guerrilla group.

"If there have been excesses in the suppression, they will be punished," Sanchez said. "This is not an empty promise."

A car bomb rigged with 130 pounds of dynamite exploded Saturday along a street of high-rise office buildings and elegant shops in the San Isidro district. The 6:20 a.m. blast ripped through a ground floor bank office and broke windows in a two-block radius. No casualties were reported.

A police official blamed Shining Path guerrillas, but no individual or group asserted responsibility.

On Friday, three bombs exploded near the building where the Socialist International was starting its four-day annual meeting, and a guerrilla who was attempting to shell the building was killed when a mortar exploded as she was setting it up on the roof of a nearby high-rise building. No other casualties were reported in the attacks.

Police said two more bombs were defused about half an hour later behind the Crillon Hotel, which was filled with reporters and many of the 400 delegates to the Socialist International conference.

Shining Path, Sendero Luminoso in Spanish, has been battling the government since 1980, and has been blamed for more than 5,000 deaths.

During the prison uprisings that began Wednesday, inmates seized hostages, demanded to be treated as political prisoners and vowed to oppose government plans to move them to a high-security prison in the desert outside Lima.

In an editorial Saturday, The New York Times denounced the killings as "an apparently premeditated massacre of Sendero prisoners, an act of butchery that weakened the struggling young democracy."

Sanchez reacted angrily to the editorial at a news conference Saturday.

Contadora pact linked with U.S. talks

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto said Saturday the Sandinista government is ready to sign a Contadora peace treaty, but restated its stand that the pact be coupled to talks with the United States.

In a letter to the eight Latin American nations sponsoring the peace efforts, d'Escoto said his left-wing government "has always been disposed to sign the peace act."

The letter, Nicaragua's first public statement on the latest proposed accord drafted June 7, said that to "create adequate conditions for a signing of a peace act," talks between Nicaragua and the United States must be sought and efforts started to establish commissions to settle border disputes.

President Reagan is opposed to a resumption of negotiations with the Sandinistas, saying they must first open talks with the internal opposition, including U.S.-backed rebels.

D'Escoto's letter, copies of which were distributed to the press, also said "it is imperative ... to advance the Contadora process and reach the final objective of peace" that Central American countries be prohibited from using their territory as bases of aggression against other countries.

The letter did not state whether Nicaragua was making that a condition for signing of the agreement.

It is estimated that up 20,000 Nicaraguan rebels are operating from bases in Honduras, which borders Nicaragua on the north. Reagan is seeking congressional approval of $100 million in aid to the rebels.

His administration accuses the Sandinistas of supporting leftist rebels battling the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador.

The Contadora group, formed by Mexico, Panama, Colombia and Venezuela, has been trying for 3½ years to negotiate a peace treaty acceptable to El Salvador, Nicaragua, Honduras, Guatemala and Costa Rica. Last year, Brazil, Uruguay, Argentina and Peru joined the Contadora negotiations as a support group.

Major items in the proposed treaty including arms limitations, the withdrawal of foreign military advisers and democratic pluralism in the Central American countries.

In a press release issued with copies of d'Escoto's letter, the Foreign Ministry said Nicaragua "deeply regrets the negative attitude adopted by some Central American countries and by the United States with regard to the proposals by the Contadora group."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Police defuse grenades aimed at Iraqi embassy

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Police on Saturday defused two rocket-propelled grenades aimed at the Iraqi Embassy 29 minutes before their scheduled ignition by an alarm-clock timer, police reported.

They said the grenades, 1½ feet long, were found on a wall separating a subway station from Vienna's central Stadtpark.

"The target was the Iraqi Embassy" 200 yards away, said a police official who, in keeping with Austrian custom, did not give his name.

No one claimed responsibility for setting up the grenades that were positioned on a sand-filled white plastic bag. The grenades bore inscriptions in English, but police declined further comment on their origin.

Ship security tightened

GENOA, Italy (AP) — Police, concerned about threats linked to the Achille Lauro hijacking trial, on Saturday stopped foreigners to check documents, and custom officials screened passengers arriving by ship from North Africa.

A bomb threat delayed a chartered Alitalia jetliner that will take opera star Luciano Pavarotti and the Genoa Opera Company to China, the Italian news agency ANSA reported.

It said no explosives were found on the plane and it left Genoa's Christopher Columbus Airport two hours behind schedule.

Police checked foreigners at Genoa's airport, the port area and in city neighborhoods where many North Africans live. Officials said 53 people were detained for not having valid documents permitting them to stay in Italy.

Stonehenge lures Druids

AMESBURY, England (AP) — About 50 sun-worshiping Druids gathered for a summer solstice ceremony early Saturday on a road beside Stonehenge, but police kept them from the 4,000-year-old archaeological site.

Looking on were about 150 vagabonds, who were banned from holding music festivals at the site.

The Druid ceremony was held without incident, but the sunrise was hidden by clouds and many of the white-robed participants shivered in the cold wind.

The Druids traditionally gather at the stone monument on June 21, the longest day of the year.

China's done 32 tests

PEKING (AP) — The official Xinhua News Agency reported Saturday that China has conducted 32 nuclear tests since the 1960s, more than foreign observers had estimated.

China exploded its first atom bomb in the Gobi Desert in 1964.

Celebrants didn't let weather rain on their parade

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Thundershowers crept across Midland most of the week, but celebrants of the 1986 Juneteenth festivities Saturday at Washington Park didn't let the nasty weather rain on their parade.

It was a day of rejoicing for Midlanders as they gathered in fellowship to reflect on the underlying sense of freedom, mingle with friends, listen to gospel music and rhythm & blues and remember.

There was barbecue, fried catfish, games, live entertainment and song and dance.

"Ten years ago we didn't have this kind of celebration," said Texas National Guardsman Alfred Niblett. "There's a sense of freedom and tradition here."

Juneteenth — first celebrated 30 months after President Abraham Lincoln signed the Emanicipation Proclamation — was founded June 19, 1865 when Union Major General Gordon Granger issued an order that freed Texas blacks from slavery. It has since grown to symbolize the end of slavery and the beginning roots of black freedom across Texas and America.

"The seriousness of the Emancipation is sometimes overshadowed by our celebrating," said Tall City Lions Club member Roosevelt Campbell, a co-sponsor of the local festivities along with the Black Advisory Council.

The primary hope for citizens observing Juneteenth is that they may become "better informed and better educated to build progressive attitudes in the community," he said. "We're all beneficiaries of that happening and we're out to enjoy it."

In years past, the holiday in Midland has always included a picnic and other activities to entertain the hundreds of celebrants. This year was no exception as the city's southside was busy with activities since June 12.

The highlight for some spectators was the parade. Following a route south on Lamesa Road to Front Street, on to Lee Street, then to Indiana Avenue and ending near Booker T. Washington Park, the parade featured a procession of cars and floats.

A color guard led the caravan of cars topped with beauty queens, debutantes, college students and social and civic club members. Neighborhood businesses participated, splashing their names across their vehicles.

Many churches also participated entering floats that ranged from Antioch Baptist's "The Children are the Heritage of the Lord and the Fruit of the Womb is His Reward" to the Goodwill Baptist Church bus.

The Sam's Barbecue float was dedicated to black pioneers and their presence in Texas history. The Sesquicentennial float, as it was called, portrayed pioneer days when women wore straw hats and kerchiefs on their heads and men donned denim overalls and carried large bags of cotton on their backs.

As it passed, the float reminded spectators that blacks were there too.

By noon, celebrants were gathering at Washington Park where music blared and children danced in the rain. Others pondered about lunch choosing from selections of barbecue beef and sausage, catfish, burritos, hotdogs and hamburgers sold in various booths that flanked the park.

Tall City Lion Carl Jones said he was pleased with turnout despite the nasty weather.

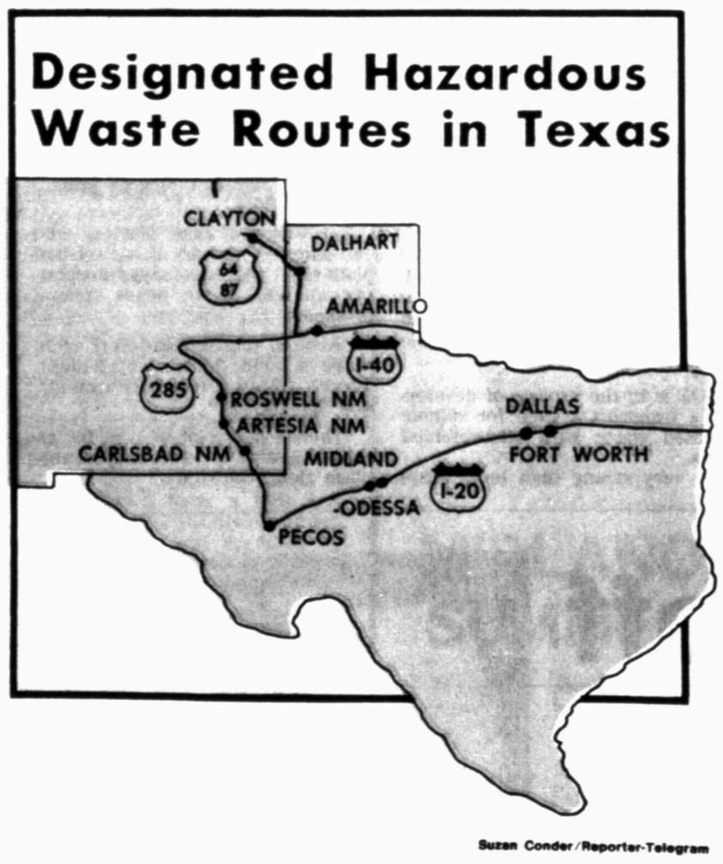

"People are still buying food and having a good time," he said. "It takes me back to my childhood."

Ten-year-old Isaac Woodard, a fifth grade student at Lamar Elementary School, said the best part of Juneteenth is "having fun and celebrating."

Later in the day, persons were to listen to performances by the Zachary Brothers and Destiny, followed by a ceremony recognizing Midland Juneteenth Celebration founders. They include Edward Carter, Gene Carter, Opal Wheelock, Nay Drean Mays, Marjorie Lombard, Dr. Viola Coleman, Devempa Earl, Marjorie Titus, Barbara Yarborough, Carolyn Lott and Fannie Davis.

Basin targeted as waste transport route

Suzan Conder/Reporter-Telegram

The Department of Transportation has designated Interstate 20 and Interstate 40 as routes used to transport radioactive material to the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant near Carlsbad, N.M. The state of Texas must approve of the use of U.S. Highway 87 for transport of radioactive materials to the Carlsbad plant.

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

The Permian Basin is targeted as one of three Texas hazardous waste routes to the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant near Carlsbad, N.M., a Department of Energy official said.

The first shipments of waste are expected at the Carlsbad plant by 1989, but waste will not be hauled through Midland-Odessa until the early 1990s, officials said.

Although most of the waste transported through the Midland-Odessa area will have a "medium" danger level, some of it may be classified as "high" level waste, said David Jackson, Department of Energy spokesman in Albuquerque.

Other designated Texas routes are through Amarillo on Interstate-40 and through Dalhart on U.S. Highway 87.

Texas state officals said they would prefer no nuclear waste travel through the state, but federal law requires them to allow transportation of radioactive materials along interstate highways.

Midland City Manager James Brown said he doesn't "see a big problem."

"I just don't believe that as thorough and as strict as the nuclear commission has been that there will be any danger," Brown said.

"I know very well it's got to be transported somewhere, someway. I really don't see a big problem with it," he said.

Odessa city officials were unavailable for comment.

The routes were selected because interstate highways are first choice for transporting radioactive waste, said Dennis Martini, a Department of Transportation regional hazardous specialist in Fort Worth. Waste may also be transported along the interstates by rail.

I-20 also is the most direct route to Carlsbad from the Savannah River Plant, a nuclear weapons lab in Aiken, S.C.

Some 1,450 shipments will be delivered annually to the plant, and about 82 will pass by Midland, said Jack Mobley, scientific liaison officer with New Mexico's environmental evaluation group.

About 116 shipments are expected to pass through Amarillo on I-40, said Mobley, citing a Department of Energy report.

An additional 79 shipments may be hauled on U.S. Highway 87 through Dalhart from Clayton and onto I-40 to New Mexico.

The waste will buried at a site 26 miles east of Carlsbad, Jackson said.

Also, more than 17 million curies of high level waste will be stored temporarily at the pilot plant, he said. Named after French physicist Marie Curie, a curie is a unit of radioactivity.

There is a 50-50 chance that high level waste will pass through Midland as Savannah is one of two plants handling high level waste, Mobley said.

Danny Smith, deputy director with Gov. Mark White's Texas Nuclear Waste Programs office, said he would prefer not to transport such waste in the state.

"If we had a choice, we'd prefer that it not go through Texas, but we really don't have a choice."

He added, "The state does not have a whole lot of latitude in what we can do."

Family can only wait while victim of accident in coma

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The fund established at a local bank to help pay the expenses of a Midland man left comatose following a traffic accident is dwarfed by his hospital bill, estimated at between $75,000 and $100,000.

The Help Ronnie Hardy Fund, set up by a family friend at RepublicBank First National Midland, contains $960.

Midlander Ronald John Hardy, 24, is still in a coma at Midland Memorial Hospital following the May 17 crash of his pickup truck in Martin County.

The accident killed 25-year-old Franklin Smith, also a Midland resident, who was Hardy's friend and co-worker.

According to Department of Public Safety reports, Hardy's 1983 GMC truck was southbound some 30 miles north of Midland on State Highway 349 at 2:55 a.m. when it ran off the road, struck a culvert and overturned three times.

Both men were thrown through the windshield.

Smith was pronounced dead at the scene less than an hour later.

Hardy suffered multiple injuries, including a pelvis broken in several places, but the most severe was to his head. After Hardy's arrival at the hosptial, doctors removed two blood clots from his brain.

Still comatose, he was moved last Monday from post-critical to a general care and orthopedic area. He had no severe internal injuries, and his vital signs had been stable for some time.

Hardy's wife, Darla, 23, said she was a hairdresser until two years ago when their son Cory was born. They also have a daughter, 10-month-old Cami.

The family appears in a portrait taken before the accident.

"He's never seen it," Mrs. Hardy said, holding a print up beside a smaller framed print. She said she has an enlargement of it on the wall of his room "so he can see them when he wakes up."

Mrs. Hardy said doctors are unsure of her husband's prognosis due to the coma.

"It is a deep coma," she explained. "Everything really is guesswork until he's out of it."

She said one of the doctors told her the situation was "grim" but she added no one was negative about the ending of the coma.

Mrs. Hardy said her husband reacts to stimulus, but cannot respond.

GARY OTT

If many Yuppies buying houses, then it's time to sell

There was a brief article in the newspaper the other day that reported the latest trend for Yuppies is owning their own house. More times than not, the purchase is being made in the suburbs.

This, according to the article, represents a major change in lifestyle for the upwardly, mobile professionals, who in the past have primarily resided in large apartments and condos located in the fashionable parts of the inner city.

The article quoted a few new Yuppie homeowners. Their reasons for making the change were predictable, but interesting. They included:

— "There's more privacy. When you get home at night you don't have to worry about your neighbors making a bunch of noise. Even in a large condo, you don't get the same sense of privacy you do in your own home."

— "It's all yours. If you want to change the look, you can without getting permission from the landlord."

— "Being in the suburbs has certain advantages. It's safer and, if you are going to raise a family, the schools are generally better. There are more opportunities for your children."

— "Simply put, it shows other people you have arrived. Owning your home is a way of telling people you can afford a certain lifestyle. That sounds arrogant and, maybe it is, but there is something in all of us that wants to prove we have reached a certain financial level in life. Historically, owning a home is a way of making that statement. It's good for the ego."

I read the article with interest, not because I consider myself a Yuppie, God forbid, but, rather, in response to a natural interest I have in the subject.

I have often debated the pros and cons of owning my own home. In fact, I am the proud owner of a house, but it is in another town and is being rented out to help offset the monthly payment.

But, before moving here three years ago, I lived in it. Now I rent an apartment.

In other words, within the past few years I have experienced both lifestyles. I'm still not sure which I prefer.

To be certain, the Yuppies quoted earlier made some good points. There is a feeling of pride associated with owning a home. It is yours and you are more inclined to take care of it.

And, the privacy factor is certainly legitimate, too. Hosting a group of friends and cooking steaks on the backyard grill is one of the simple pleasures that transcends all socio-economic barriers. It is as American as apple pie, Hank Williams, Jr., and tossing horse shoes.

Still, renting an apartment has its good points, too.

Foremost, there are fewer hassles. If something breaks down, you call the landlord. If he is not prompt enough, you get tacky.

"Look, I paid my rent on time," you say, curling your lip slightly. "Now fix it."

If you own your home and something breaks down, you call the repairman yourself. If he is not prompt enough, you can try the tacky routine, but, chances are, it won't work.

Instead, the repairman will curl his lip slightly and charge you time-and-a-half.

The more I think about it the better renting is looking. Throw in a swimming pool and the decision is final. The house goes.

Besides, if Yuppies are buying, I'm selling.

DEATHS

Carl Jacobs

Carl F. Jacobs of Midland died Friday night at a local hospital following an extended illness.

Services will be at 11 a.m. Monday in the Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with Donald V. Hafeman of the Lutheran Home officiating. Burial will be in Memorial Park Cemetery in Bartlesville, Okla., following services in the Keely-Nekamp Funeral Chapel there at 2 p.m. Wednesday. Dr. Cook of the First Baptist Church of Bartlesville will officiate those services.

Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of the local services and Keely-Nekamp Funeral Home is handling the services in Bartlesville.

Jacobs was born June 24, 1934 in Coke, Kan., the son of Kenneth and Leona Jacobs. The family soon moved to Denver, Colo., where Jacobs was raised and graduated from high school.

In 1952, he enlisted in the U.S. Navy and served until 1955. At that time he returned to Denver and went to work for Reda Pump. Two years later, the company moved him to Trenton, N.J., where he lived for about 10 years before being transferred to Bartlesville.

On Nov. 24, 1976, he married Phyllis Rolens in Tulsa, Okla. The family moved to Midland in 1981, where he continued to work for Reda Pump.

Survivors include his wife, Phyllis Jacobs of Midland; one son, Brian M. Jacobs of Tulsa, Okla.; three stepsons, Curtis Johnson of Fredricktown, Mo., Eddie Don Johnson of Grand Prairie and Patrick Rolens Johnson of Midland; two daughters, Carla Plunkett of Paris, Texas and Cindy Lindesmith of Bartlesville, Okla.; his father, Kenneth Y. Jacobs of Denver, Colo.; a grandmother, "Grandmother" Jacobs of Denver, Colo.; one brother, Herbert Jacobs of Colorado; and five sisters, Marlis Vaughn of Scotts Bluff, Neb., Georgia Pelot of Martinez, Calif., Nola Jacobs and Barbara Welchinger, both of Denver, Colo., and Roberta Carlson of Idaho.

Honorary pallbearers will be Jim Carter, Tom Berlin, Pete Schroeder, Toney Franks, Ed Bryan, John Logi, Richard Anderson, Don Ballard, Ray Johnson and Lee Miner.

The family requests memorials be directed to the American Heart Association.

Robert Brotherton

Funeral services for Robert A. Brotherton of Midland will be at 3:30 p.m. Monday at the Ellis Chapel with Dr. F. Ray Riddle, chaplain of Hospice of Midland, Inc., officiating. Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park.

Brotherton died at his home Friday morning. He had been in ill health for the past nine months.

He was born Sept. 7, 1926 in Dallas. He lived there until he was 6 years old. The family then moved to Olton. He later lived in Littlefield until he joined the Navy, serving during World War II. Following his discharge, he joined the Army Air Force.

He married Lorene Stripe on July 20, 1946 in Littlefield. They lived there following his discharge from the Army Air Force until May of 1951 when they moved to Midland. He worked for Electric Motor Service until his retirement in 1984.

Brotherton was a member of the Methodist church and a member of the American Legion Post No 19.

Survivors include his wife, Lorene Brotherton of Midland; one son, Mark Wayne Brotherton of Midland; one daughter, Candace A. Brotherton of Midland; three brothers, Jack G. Brotherton and Pat Brotherton, both of Rock Springs, Wyo., and Jim T. Brotherton of Fort Collins, Colo.; and two sisters, Mrs. Ralph (Betty) Thomas of Montesano, Wash., and Mrs. David (Margaret) Patton of Dodge City, Kan.

Howard Abernathy

Funeral services for Howard E. Abernathy of Midland are slated for 1:30 p.m. Monday at the Ellis Chapel with Rev. Bob Porterfield, pastor of West Kentucky Baptist Church, officiating. Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Abernathy died at a local hospital Friday morning.

He was born Sept. 3, 1909 in Sharon Springs, Kan. He was reared in Kansas and lived in a number of places there while he worked as a horse trainer and jockey. In 1931, he began working in the oil fields.

He married the former Cora Niebaum of Caldwell, Kan., in 1938. They followed the oil booms in Illinois, Oklahoma, Wyoming and Colorado before moving to Midland in 1957 from Andrews. Prior to his retirement in 1967, Abernathy was a toolpusher with Empire Drilling Co.

He was a charter member of the Pigeon Racing Club of Midland.

Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Corky Abernathy of Midland; two sons, Grady Abernathy and Curtis Abernathy, both of Midland; two sisters, Mrs. Edna Chisum of Sharon Springs, Kan., and Mrs. Maude White of Yakima, Wash.; and five grandchildren.

Pallbearers will be Tom Beard, Ron Brown, Russell Hall, Randy Huddleston, Calvin Sanders and Barron Wheeless.

Honorary pallbearers will be Lee Foster and members of the Permian Basin Combine Racing Pigeon Clubs.

Hill defends child support guidelines

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice John Hill Saturday defended the court's recently released child support guidelines that many attorneys and divorced fathers have criticized.

"We have heard many complaints already, and we expect to hear more," Hill told a group of family practice attorneys in the annual State Bar of Texas convention held in Houston this weekend.

But he said, "I have yet to receive one from a divorced mother trying to make ends meet on a small salary with nominal, irregularly paid support payments."

The Texas Legislature assigned the Supreme Court last year to develop a statewide uniform rate of child support after legislators voted in 1983 that child support guidelines could be adopted locally, Hill said.

With the help of a commission, Hill said the Texas Supreme Court decided that parents should pay child support based on a percentage of their gross income.

For example, parents will pay 17 percent of gross income to support one child and 25 percent for two children, according to the guidelines that went into effect June 1. Parents paying child support are also required to provide health insurance for their children.

Hill said many fathers, who may most of the child support, and their attorneys have complained the uniform percentage is too high and ignores the uniqueness of individual cases.

"I have already heard that some trial judges have reputedly said they will not adhere to them (guidelines)," the judge added.

But Hill said judges can depart from the guidelines in specific instances only, such as when total child support payments from previous marriages add up to more than 50 percent of the parent's gross income.

He welcomed suggestions for improving the guidelines and said the Supreme Court will decide next year whether to revise them.

After the meeting, attorney Bette Pesikoff praised the guidelines, but said she would recommend some improvements.

"We're going to have kids write to you. That's no joke," she said.

Wendy S. Burgower, head of a group of women attorneys, told Hill they want to meet with him to suggest ways to carry out the law.

Lawyer assumes head of group

HOUSTON (AP) — The next year will be the most critical in the history of the Texas civil justice system, the Texas Trial Lawyers Association's new president said Friday.

Beaumont attorney Gilbert T. Adams stepped into his new post at a ceremony during the association's annual meeting, held in conjunction with the State Bar of Texas' convention.

"At a time when Texas is leading the nation in on-the-job deaths, it is no wonder that the insurance industry and major employers are waging an all-out campaign to destroy victims' rights," Adams told the groups.

"The civil justice system is under a multi-million-dollar lobbying attack by these special interest groups who want to purge the rights of the injured victims in Texas," he added.

Adams, a Beaumont native who has served as a TTLA director since 1971, succeeds David H. Burrow of Houston as president. A graduate of Lamar University and the South Texas College of Law, Adams also serves on the Supreme Court Advisory committee for the Texas Supreme Court.

Bobby Kuykendall has been elected president of the local chapter of the Fraternal Order of Eagles while Mae Murdock was elected president of the auxiliary chapter of the group.

"You can touch him above the eye and he will blink," she said, "but he does not respond."

Mrs. Hardy, who said her family has no hospitalization insurance, has not received a hospital bill. She estimated the bill between $75,000 and $100,000.

"Everything that can be done at the hospital has been done, no matter what the cost," she said. "They've just been great about the whole thing. I did see a computer print-out of the bill for the first 10 or 12 days, and it was $25,000."

Hardy, a construction foreman, had finished a week of work in Plainview, 50 miles north of Lubbock, and was on his way home when the accident occurred.

He had been hired by an Abilene firm to work on the construction of a Wal-Mart distribution center, she said.

"Ronnie was out of a job for two months until he started working in Plainview," his wife said. "He got to be desperate. Since there just wasn't anything here he had to go to where the work is.

"That's the nature of the construction business."

Mrs. Hardy and her two children have stayed with her parents, Wilburn and Sue Hendry, of Midland, since before the accident as her husband moved from job to job.

For the past five months before returning here, they had lived in Stephenville.

Hardy's parents, Jay and Edith Hardy of Midland, have three other children, another son stationed at Reese Air Force Base in Lubbock and two daughters home from college for the summer.

The families have constantly watched over Ronnie, usually working in shifts.

"There are certain things to be thankful for, and which we do thank the Lord for," his mother said. "We do have the families both here, which has been a blessing.

"Darla and the children are being taken care of, obviously. But there is no telling where it may have happened. It could have happened near his job, and it would have been so hard on the families."

Wilma Porter, a family friend, said she was frustrated about the small amount of the fund, but said she was sure people would help.

"I know how big that hospital bill is, and I just know people in this comunity will come forth to help," Ms. Porter said. "They are fine Christian people."

Hardy's mother said although neither family can afford to pay the hospital bill, the primary concern is evident.

"You do feel like you don't want doctors and nurses and others to work without being paid. But right now we are concerned about Ronnie."

Edith Hardy said she and her daughter-in-law have received calls and letters echoing the same message.

"Miracles do happen, so you just don't give up hope. So we say this boy needs to wake up for his babies," his mother said.

"Ronnie would hate this because his bills are nobody's business," his wife said, corralling her two children in front of her, the family portrait visible on the table behind. "But he's got a lot to live for."

El Paso Products damage estimated at $1 million

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Damage to the El Paso Products plant in Odessa following a major gas fire there late Friday has been estimated to be at least $1 million, a plant official said Saturday, who also said a cause for the blaze had not been determined.

Bill Gruer, personnel director for the company, said the fire, which broke out at 4:30 p.m. Friday in a pressurized vessel containing highly flammable propylene, burned out less than eight hours later. There were no injuries.

"The burning has stopped. It stopped about midnight," Gruer said. "We made a tour through the plant this morning, and it does appear that the damage was fairly extensive.

"As far as the cause, we don't have a cause pinned down yet," he said. "There are a couple of things we are looking at, but I really don't want to speculate."

Gruer said the damaged part of the plant, which produces propylene resin used to make plastics, will be out of production for at least 90 days, but is not expected to cause any employee cutbacks.

"That unit represents about 55 percent of our Odessa production of polypropylene. We will have a full complement of workers at the plant. Those assigned to that particular unit will start the clean-up."

Four units and 17 firefighters from the Odessa Fire Department were dispatched to the scene, just southeast of Interstate 20 at Grandview Ave., at 4:51 p.m., to assist the El Paso Products firefighting unit and the Shell Oil Co. Fire Brigade.

The fire was under control by 5:30 p.m. About 8 p.m., workers at the scene injected nitrogen into the damaged vessel to force out the remaining propylene, and set up a flare to discharge the flame until it burned out, officials said.

Police seeking assault suspect

From Staff Reports

Midland Police late Saturday were looking for a suspect involved in an attempted aggravated assault Saturday morning. There were no injuries reported in the incident, which occurred at 8:30 a.m. at the intersection of Carver and Cuthbert.

L.B. Johnson of 1706 N. Terrell in Midland told police a Hispanic male believed to be in his early 30's produced a buck knife and threatened to "cut his throat," according to reports. The suspect was described as five feet, eight inches tall, 175 pounds with black hair. He was dressed in a tan shirt and blue jeans, and was seen driving a 1985 Mazda 626 sedan.

The Midland County Sheriff's Office reported an attempted arson of a residence which occurred sometime between 3:30 p.m. Thursday and 11 a.m. Friday. Dewey Keith told authorities someone broke into the front door of his residence on County Road 1133 and tried to set fire to it. He reported $800 damage to the carpet and $200 damage to the front door.

In other reports, an automobile was stolen from a residence in the 300 block of Jackson St. The vehicle, a 1972 Oldsmobile Delta 88 valued at $400, was apparently stolen sometime between 11:30 p.m. Friday and 8:30 a.m. Saturday.

WASTE

Smith said the state must approve secondary highways along the route, such as U.S. Highway 285 north from Pecos to Carlsbad or U.S. Highway 87 from New Mexico into Dalhart.

No such approval on that route has been made. State officials are still reviewing the situation, Smith said.

"Texas will take a great deal of interest in reviewing the New Mexico proposal and agreeing that those routes will be acceptable," he said.

Dangerous turns and curves and the capacity of bridges along the routes to hold the trucks will be reviewed along the secondary highways, Smith said.

Federal officials are still negotiating with the state of New Mexico for approval of the U.S. 87 route, Mobley said.

Jackson said many safety precautions will be taken.

He said the DOE is designing a container for transporting high level waste and has already designed a special container called "TRUEPACT," or the Transuranic Package Transporter, that can contain 55-gallon drums full of gloves, uniforms and other items that have come into contact with radiation.

"We anticipate there will be accidents. Statistically we're going to run into a drunk driver. We know this. So we are preparing a transport system that will withstand any severe accident," Jackson said.

Remote handle waste is a byproducts of nuclear weapons production and must be removed and handled by remote control equipment, Jackson said.

DOE is in the process of developing a transport system for remote handled waste with lead-shielded casks.

"A very strong high level waste cask has already been developed. Some casks are already being used. This is not unique or special thing," Jackson said.

But Odessa's June Naylor, who campaigned against the Carlsbad plant eight years ago, says transporting nuclear waste poses special problems.

"Some of that nuclear stuff could make a good political statement. There's always a few nuts around," said Ms. Naylor.

"There's just a lot of area for error," she said. "It could happen anyplace along the route."

Heater causes apartment fire

From Staff Reports

An apartment was heavily damaged early Saturday when a fire broke out in the attic space, apparently caused by a malfunction in a heater. There were no injuries.

Four units of the Midland Fire Department were dispatched at 4:14 a.m. Saturday to the La Casita Apartments, 2900 W. Illinois. According to reports, the attic area of one of the apartments was engulfed in flames when the units arrived. After the fire was extinguished several minutes later, firefighters found a heater in the attic glowing red. The report said a smoke detector was mounted in the apartment but had no battery.

Juneteenth Chairman Ralph Hanson said he anticipated a large turnout for the afternoon and evening ceremonies provided the rain stopped and city workers could pump the water that flooded the park earlier this week and again Saturday morning.

"We have fewer people here this year than last," said Hanson. "The weather has something to do with it, but Juneteenth will go on."

Agents seek escapee

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Federal agents were searching today for a man who spent two years hiding in Honduras from drug smuggling charges before surrendering to authorities.

Daryl Loverde, 38, has not been seen since he was put on bus in Texas on May 6 with instructions to report to a federal facility in Oakdale.

Loverde spent two years in Honduras hiding from federal agents on a 1983 marijuana smuggling charge.

El Paso Times names sports editor

EL PASO (AP) — New Mexico journalism professor Burt Wittrup has been named El Paso Times sports editor, succeeding John Laird who moves to the newsfeatures department.

Laird served as sports editor eight years.

Co-managing editor Paula Moore said the changes are effective Sunday.

Wittrup, a former chief of bureau for The Associated Press in New Mexico, has been on the University of New Mexico journalism department faculty the past five years. Before going to the university, he was city editor and managing editor of the Albuquerque Tribune.

Laird said he made the move to the newsfeatures department because he has "wanted for some time to concentrate on writing, and to discover if there is life after sports."

Texas arrest leads officials to chemicals

ARDMORE, Okla. (AP) — The arrest of a man in Texas has led to the discovery of deadly chemicals in an Ardmore residence, and law enforcement officials are searching for more materials in two southern Oklahoma counties.

Deputies from Carter and Marshall counties and Oklahoma Highway Patrol troopers walked Friday along U.S. 70 in far south-central Oklahoma searching for chemicals, authorities said.

Authorities said they are searching for sodium cyanide and potassium perchlorate. Officials said potassium perchlorate, when mixed with water, will explode. Breathing the fumes of sodium cyanide can kill a person, authorities said.

The search was sparked by the arrest last week in Austin, Texas, of Derek Stanford Nalls, a 1980 Ardmore High School graduate, authorities said. Nalls was arrested by agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms on an illegal firearms violation.

ATF officials in Texas said they were first notified about Nalls from a gun shop owner who alleged the man had been in his business with an illegal weapon that had been converted to an automatic.

Nalls was charged in federal court with the illegal firearm violation. He was taken to federal prison in Bastrop, Texas.

Authorities said a search of Nalls' apartment in Texas uncovered chemicals, which are believed to be used in building bombs, and writings, which are being analyzed because they possibly could be a threat to top government officials.

Federal investigators also said evidence indicated Nalls has ordered bomb kits.

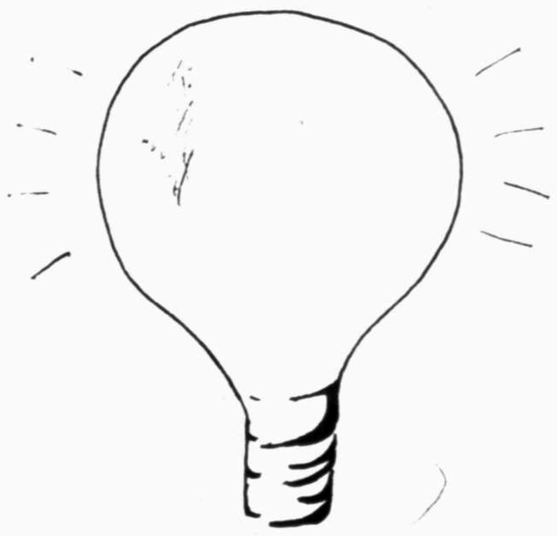

The arrest led ATF and Secret Service agents to Ardmore, where they searched Nalls' car and a trailer parked at his home.

Bob White, ATF agent-in-charge in Tulsa, said Nalls agreed to allow authorities to search his Ardmore property.

A two-inch pipe, which officials say could be used in building bombs, was found in an initial search. Another pipe was found in a second search, officials said.

If you or someone you know can hear, but has a hard time understanding what others say, don't miss this special opportunity.

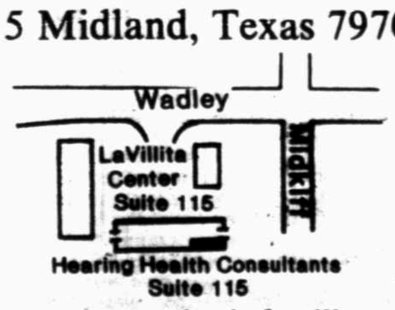

Millions of people just like you suffer from the same common form of hearing loss called Nerve Deafness. But now, Thanks to amazing new technology, you can be helped.

Already hundreds of people, are enjoying the benefits of better hearing thanks to the new INTRA II canal aid. A hearing aid so tiny, others will probably never know it's there. In fact, you may even forget you're wearing it! Never has a hearing aid been so small and worked so well for so many people. Just ask President Reagan - he's been successfully wearing his INTRA for more than two years.

Why wait any longer? If you think you have a hearing problem, you owe it to yourself to take the first step! CALL TODAY FOR AN APPOINTMENT for your free hearing test, and enjoy the benefits of better hearing!

Full speed ahead

The National Labor Relations Board has removed a potential obstacle to the innovative agreement between General Motors Corp. and the United Auto Workers. In dismissing two unfair labor practice charges brought against the company and the union, the NLRB cleared the way for a bold business venture that could revolutionize the domestic automobile industry and stem the rising tide of foreign-car imports.

The topic is GM's ambitious Saturn project that is scheduled to begin production in 1989. The $5 billion facility, to be located in Spring Hill, Tenn., will combine the latest automotive technology with an uncommon degree of cooperation between labor and management.

An estimated 500,000 small cars will be assembled in the sprawling plant each year with the aid of sophisticated computers and robots. The 6,000 salaried workers will be trained to accomplish more tasks in less time. Although their base salary will be only 80 percent of the prevailing industry rate, Saturn employees can exceed the average wage though numerous productivity incentives. Additionally, at least 80 percent of the Saturn work force will receive permanent job security.

In exchange for these benefits, the union agreed to reduce the number of rigidly defined job classifications, which should eliminate production delays that increase costs. Nevertheless, the union will have more say in many decisions previously left to management.

GM's bold gamble is designed to beat foreign competitors at their own game. By paring production costs and enhancing employee morale, the Saturn project could help the company regain the competitive edge in the small-car market and inspire other domestic automakers to follow suit with similar labor agreements.

That prospect has prompted protests from opposite poles of labor's ideological spectrum. The National Right to Work Legal Defense Fund asked the NLRB to void the Saturn pact, charging that it gives preferential treatment to the union. UAW dissidents, on the other hand, condemn the agreement as a craven capitulation by the union.

Both contentions are dead wrong. The Saturn pact provides GM with an immediate source of skilled employees who in turn will be amply compensated for their labors. The agreement also specifies that GM will recognize the UAW as the sole bargaining agent in the future if, and when, a majority of the workers at the facility choose to be represented by the union.

The NLRB recognized as much when it rejected the unfair labor practice charges. Now all that remains is for the Saturn project to show that small-car production can be retained in the United States if American automakers and union members alike can accommodate changing market conditions.

Another View:

Troubling nominations

President Reagan's Supreme Court nominations promise important change in this country's reading of its law, and in the balancing of its people's rights and duties.

The number of justices conventionally counted as conservatives will not increase, but the nature of their conservatism may develop quite differently.

Under a Chief Justice William Rehnquist, with the addition of Judge Antonin Scalia to the court, the new majority seems likely to be more aggressive in its views.

These appointments give a sense that a new definition of constitutional conservatism may be emerging, one with a sharper edge than its predecessor's.

Chief Justice Warren Burger, in his long tenure on the court, has been counted as a conservative, but he was very conscious of a series of legal and social issues — of which racial desegregation was the most important — that are now fading into the past.

He wrote the unanimous opinion in the Nixon-tapes case. He was the author of landmark opinions in school-busing and employment-discrimination cases and voted with six colleagues to legalize abortion. A modest presence in the law, he gave over much time and effort to administrative problems that needed correcting.

Both Rehnquist and Scalia, a member of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, are well known as sitting judges and as serious conservatives. Opponents of some of President Reagan's judicial appointments often cite them as the kind of appointment they would probably vote to confirm. Both share the president's political point of view.

We think they are wrong on many things. Rehnquist, during his tenure on the court, has favored tuition tax credits for parochial schools and residency requirements for welfare beneficiaries.

In the Bob Jones case, he alone dissented, writing that the Internal Revenue Service could not, without statutory authority, deny tax exemptions on the basis of discrimination.

He has been a firm opponent of Roe v. Wade and its successor cases on abortion and a strong defender of the death penalty.

Scalia's views of the First Amendment, as expressed in his opinions, are extremely troubling. (We should note that he joined in an opinion adverse to this newspaper in a pending libel case.)

Both men, in our opinion, have demonstrated an alarming insensitivity to civil liberties and the Bill of Rights.

The rough balance of votes on most issues is not likely to shift. But the content of contemporary conservatism is not a quiet or settled thing.

New issues arise and, along with them, new ways of looking at the law. The currents associated with the rise to political power of Ronald Reagan are not entirely new to the law, but they are now going to be given powerful reinforcement at the peak of the country's legal and constitutional structure.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, June 22, the 173rd day of 1986. There are 192 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 22, 1940, Adolf Hitler gained a stunning victory as France was forced to sign an armistice eight days after German forces overran Paris.

On this date:

In 1611, English explorer Henry Hudson, his son and several other people were set adrift in present-day Hudson Bay by mutineers.

In 1815, Napoleon Bonaparte abdicated a second time.

In 1870, Congress created the Department of Justice.

In 1937, Joe Louis began his reign as world heavyweight boxing champion by knocking out Jim Braddock in Chicago. Exactly one year later, Louis knocked out Max Schmeling in one round in New York.

In 1944, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the GI Bill of Rights.

In 1969, singer-actress Judy Garland died at the age of 47.

In 1970, President Richard M. Nixon signed a measure lowering the voting age to 18.

Ten years ago: Final returns in Italy's national elections showed the Communists gaining 49 seats in Parliament.

Five years ago: Mark David Chapman pleaded guilty to killing John Lennon the previous December outside Lennon's New York City apartment building.

Plunge into tax reform carries risks

WASHINGTON — For years, we have raised a hue and cry against a tax code that has become incomprehensible. We have called for the overhaul and simplification of the whole tax system. But now that tax reforms are likely, we have had second thoughts.

Jack Anderson

The tax system has grown such a tangle of roots that a sudden uprooting could shake up the economic base. We have sought in vain to learn what the consequences of the proposed tax reforms will be. Advocates and opponents offer conflicting scenarios. Experts who are willing to speak honestly confess they don't know.

We put the question to Rep. Jim Wright, D-Texas, the savvy House Democratic leader who watches the Washington scene with a weathered eye. What effect, we asked, will the tax reforms have on the economy? "No one knows," he said. The short-term promises, he admitted, may have long-term consequences that no one clearly foresees.

Year after year, citizens at work on their income tax returns have fumed with frustration over the complexity of the tax laws. As seasonally as April showers, they would bombard Washington with angry mail demanding tax reforms. The letters would cause scattered explosions, but the politicians would simply wait in their bomb shelters for the barrage to die down.

They were more impressed by the fat cats who would fly to Washington, debouch from their corporate jets and trudge up to Capitol Hill to defend their tax benefits. Theoretically, billions were at stake for them, but they would be inflated with the exhilaration of participants in a fixed fight.

Every so many years, they would gather for these ritualistic exercises, and their arguments before high banks of deferential faces would always win admiring approval. True, citizens' groups would register protests, and the press would carry tales of "tax revolt." But the passage of tax legislation, with the special-interest loopholes intact, became routine.

Now the special interests are paying for their past steamrolling. They face an overkill that has been building up for decades, a visceral animosity that has been intensified by the frustration of taxpayers.

So this year, when the executives took their turn at the witness table, they detected an unbecoming note of distanced objectivity from their old supporters. Committee members who had never before thrown fastballs felt constrained to ask real questions. And congressmen who had sympathized with the plaints of business interests and the discomforts of wealthy taxpayers assumed the mantle of statesmen.

But some concerned economists are examining the tax reforms down to their roots. And they are finding the mathematics of tax reform not only uncertain but disturbing.

Some tax loopholes were created to advance a public cause; others were crafted to benefit a special interest. In either case, the tax benefit has become an integral part of the economics of the affected industry. Knocking the tax base out from under the industry could cause widespread repercussions.

Take the real-estate industry, for example. Tax shelters were provided to encourage investors to finance rental housing. The investors were allowed to take deductions that benefited them, but also provided shelter for the poor. Under the proposed tax reforms, real-estate syndicators stand to lose billions in tax benefits. This could have dire consequences, in the opinion of many housing experts.

Certainly, the number of new rental units will drop. Some experts estimate the decline will be 350,000 units during the first year that the tax change takes effect. Without their tax benefits, landlords will be forced to raise rents. Experts foresee an annual increase of 20 percent. This will drive many tenants into public housing or onto the streets.

New boys on the block: Rehnquist, Scalia

WASHINGTON — Zeke Bonura was a large and remarkably immobile first baseman whose slowness did not grieve him because he understood a vital principle of baseball: You are rarely charged with an error when you do not touch the ball.

George F. Will

Conservatives have hoped the Supreme Court would adhere to the Bonura Insight, sometimes known as judicial restraint. The Burger Court has not. Indeed, its judicial activism has been as marked as, and arguably more destructive than, the Warren Court's.

None of the Warren Court's most important rulings has been overturned or even significantly circumscribed in the 17 Burger years. The sweep of the Miranda ruling on the rights of suspects has been only slightly circumscribed. The Burger Court is responsible for the ruinous spread of forced busing as a "remedy" for segregation. The Burger Court misconstrued the 1964 Civil Rights Act to permit reverse racial discrimination on behalf of government-approved minorities.

Burger Court activism extended procedural due process guarantees to public-school students accused of behaving badly. The Burger Court has done nothing significant to reassert reason in the interpretation of the ban on "establishment of religion" — nothing, that is, to re-establish the principle that government must be neutral between sects, not between religion and secularism.

And nothing the Warren Court did was as raw and radical an exercise of judicial power as the 1973 decision that swept away the laws regulating abortions in 50 states.

Supreme Court appointments are the premier spoils of presidential politics. Each appointee is 20 percent of a majority at the apex of one of the three branches of government, the branch that has assumed custody of the issues (race, abortion, etc.) the political branches have been pleased to relinquish. The Court is where American public philosophy is published as an unending serial. The departure of Burger, the elevation of William Rehnquist and the nomination of Antonin Scalia are important episodes in the process of lengthening the shadow today's President will cast into tomorrow.

The Court is a small, face-to-face society where politics has subtle dynamics. The players are strong-willed professionals reasoning about hot issues in the cool climate of a written Constitution, changing statutes and a vast body of case law. The building of coalitions is influenced by intellectual nuance and the power of personality. On both counts, Scalia and Rehnquist will augment the power of conservative jurisprudence.

Scalia is an intellectual in a way that Burger is not: by training and inclination. Scalia has taught at several of the finest law schools. He has the theoretical turn of mind that deepens analytic powers and does not dispose a judge to try to split all differences. That disposition can make intellectuals ineffective politicians but forceful judges. With Scalia leavening the Court, it may be less inclined to torture itself, and all who love logic, with ever-more-baroque criteria for distinguishing permissible from impermissible "race-conscious" state action.

No one ever looked more like a chief justice than Burger, who if he ever as an infant played in a sandbox must have done so in striped trousers and a swallowtail coat. Rehnquist's clothes come from the factory pre-rumpled. The New York Times locates Rehnquist on "the Court's extreme right wing." (The Times style book probably says the phrase "the Court's extreme left wing" is an oxymoron.) Actually, Rehnquist has neither the abrasive philosophy nor, as important, the jagged temperament of an extremist.

What he has is the keenest mind on the Court, which is why critics complain that he writes too well. When person A can not cope with person B's arguments, A says B is not wise, only articulate. In the administration of the Court, Rehnquist's affability and intellectual effervescence will enhance his effectiveness.

The rise of Rehnquist to the pinnacle of his profession, with the last ascent achieved from the hand of Ronald Reagan, illustrates the geology of our politics. Rehnquist, an Arizonan, was pulled toward public life by the conservative movement energized by another Arizonan, Barry Goldwater, whose 1964 campaign brought political prominence to Ronald Reagan.

Rehnquist serves now with another Arizonan, a law-school classmate who was active in state politics, Sandra Day O'Connor. As Barry Goldwater takes his leave of Washington, he sees around him abundant evidence that the significance of 1964 is not that he lost 45 states, but that he won the Republican Party and, doing so, seeded the future.

RUSSELL BAKER

Caesar knew best part of life is the gravy!

NEW YORK — Julius Caesar got things done. He thought he'd like to try to conquer Gaul, so he tried, and he conquered it.

Everyone was amazed. "How in the world did you do it?" was the universal question.

Russell Baker

"By refusing to be distracted by minor problems," he said. And he told a story to illustrate.

One day after conquering the Helvetii, he was having a solitary lunch in his tent while planning a campaign against the Belgae when the conquered Helvetian chieftain Vercingetorix was brought in in chains.

Noticing that Caesar was eating a cold chicken sandwich covered with gravy, that he planned to chase it with a stack of graham crackers covered with peanut butter, then wash everything down with a pot of caffeinated coffee, Vercingetorix was appalled.

"That gravy is loaded with cholesterol, that caffeinated coffee is terrible for your heart and people eating peanut butter in that quantity could choke to death unless they have somebody standing by who is trained to do the Heimlich maneuver," said Vercingetorix.

"Astonishing," said Caesar. "How do you know such things?"

"I spend a lot of time studying dietary science and watching what goes down the old gullet," said Vercingetorix, "and you'd better do the same if you want to live to be 135."

Caesar immediately ordered Vercingetorix released and sent into the land of the Belgae to preach dietary science. The next month, when Caesar's legions fell upon them, the Belgae were so demoralized by having to pass up the gravy for organically grown watercress that they had little heart for battle.

"If I've got to spend my life thinking about fodder instead of getting things done," Caesar said to his friend Brutus, "I'd just as soon not live to be 135. Et tu, Brute?"

"You said it," Brutus replied.

Once, Julius Caesar decided to go to England despite hordes of terrorists who would have expressed their dislike of tourists by blowing them up if dynamite had been available.

Mrs. Caesar and Caesar's nephews and nieces pleaded with him not to risk it without returning to Rome, applying for insurance that paid double indemnity to heirs of terrorists' victims, and borrowing enough money from his Uncle Fabian to make the first premium payment. After all, they argued, the English would throw spears first and ask questions later since they would surely think Caesar had come to kill them.

"Idling around insurance offices is all very well for a man's next of kin, but it's no way to get things done," Caesar said to his friend Antony. "Anyhow, I go to tour England, not to bury it."

Caesar went. Many of his men grumbled because of the inferior sightseeing, there being as yet no Westminster Abbey, no Tower of London and, for that matter, very little London.

Caesar raised their spirits by pointing out that the lack of sights was a blessing since it meant they would not waste time buying souvenirs and addressing postcards, which in turn meant they would have time to get things done.

Caesar, remembering his family's paralyzing but nonetheless potentially profitable fear of terrorists, decided he would try to found Lloyd's of London, and would have, too, except for a sudden urge to try crossing the Rubicon.

Caesar tried it, and he crossed it. On the south bank, he was accosted by Cassius, bosom buddy of Brutus.

"Julius, Julius, is that any way to cross the Rubicon?" asked Cassius.

Caesar was alarmed by Cassius's physical appearance. He looked lean and hungry. Caesar spoke to Cassius:

"Cassius, my boy, has that quack Vercingetorix filled you with Helvetian cockamamie about living to be 135 if you give up good eating? And what's this about crossing the Rubicon the wrong way?"

Cassius explained that the Senate forbade generals to cross the Rubicon with their armies.

"I don't blame them," said Caesar. "If I were one of those overstuffed plutocrats who write the tax laws to enrich themselves while middle Rome and the little man pay through the nose, I wouldn't want a can-do general like me arriving with an army, either."

Cassius said that if Caesar thought more, he would be able to cross the Rubicon legally. Suppose he created a political action committee composed of Rome's richest men. These men would give money to the senators and, after years of being corrupted, the senators would vote to let Caesar and his army cross the Rubicon legally.

"You think too much, Cassius, but not very clearly," said Caesar. "The senators and the richest men in Rome are the same people. I think I'll try to go to Rome and make them swallow tax reform."

Caesar tried, and he got to Rome, but nobody can make a rich man give up his tax breaks, and Caesar was murdered. Fortunately, his being such a brief life, he had never suffered abstention from gravy.

Humans always want to take 'wild' out of wilderness

Bill Modisett

I'm convinced there are still places in Texas where a person can spend a week without seeing another human being. In my current frame of mind that could be heaven, but more than likely it's downtown Lajitas.

People, bless their souls, are so detestably human! They're prone to do things like take pristine wilderness and transform it into a sea of asphalt and concrete. Heck, they probably surmise, at least it makes the wilderness livable!

That's precisely the point. If all wilderness were to become livable, there soon would be no more wilderness. And when that point is reached, my friend, there would be no reason to head into the unknown in search of something totally new, fresh and invigorating. It wouldn't exist. Rather, the great outdoors would be sterilized, homogenized, plasticized and otherwise — civilized! Yuch!

My "problem" is this: For the better part of four decades I have watched as man has ventured into wilderness areas and forever transformed them for the worse. We tend to say, "Oh, sure. We'll protect the wilderness — for posterity. So that our kids can grow up and experience the joys of the great outdoors that we enjoyed." But we don't follow through. We say it, but we don't mean it. Rather, what we're inclined to do is reshape the great outdoors to fit our image of civilization.

A report on television news a few weeks back noted that the national parks are suffering because of cutbacks in the budget mandated by Gramm-Rudman and because of the heavy tourist traffic from inside the United States and from foreign visitors. Well, the Supreme Court resolved Gramm-Rudman, but the national parks still are encountering a "crisis" threatening their very future existence largely because Americans don't "take care of their own" where the wilderness is concerned.

That bothers me because it won't take too much neglect to completely destroy for centuries the natural treasures of this land. Don't fret, though, I have a solution. You probably won't like it.

The national parks need more money — and not from Uncle Sam who is in more than one regard, us. The parks need to be open and available to all people. Already the Park Service has increased fees, cut staff and taken other steps to make ends meet. Why not add a new twist?

Sell memberships. The parks would still be available to everyone, but those who purchased memberships would get special treatment, for a price — the best and most secluded campsites, access to free firewood (already cut and stacked, of course) and the best fishing spots, etc. They would have, as the saying goes, the pick of the litter and could reserve their times for camping in advance. Everyone else would be served on a first-come, first-served basis and charged less, but would get none of the "extras."

Granted, for a lot of people it might not be worthwhile. For those Americans who love to camp, it would be heaven and would help provide for the maintenance of America's scenic treasures. And as I said earlier, heaven is getting rarer all the time.

Midland budget cuts don't make sense

Does it strike you as strange that the City of Midland would do away with its recreation program and the whole department in one fell swoop due to the downturn in the economy and then turn around and spend $75,000 for a study of the police department which, so far, has resulted only in the resignation of one man and $20,000 for the beginnings of a search for his replacement?

Of all times when the city should be providing recreation programs for its citizens is when the economy is bad and people can't afford to travel as much or pay for other programs. Perhaps a study should be done on this.

Speaking of studies, I am publicly requesting that a study be done on our alley, which lies between Shell and Humble in Ma Mar. Yes, folks, this is the very same alley that I reported to you about a year or so ago. It is the same quagmire when it rains that is was then. Since I last reported on it we have talked to several more council members with no results. Any solutions?

Higher education committee infuriating

As a lifelong West Texan, I'm infuriated and appalled at the Select Committee on Higher Education.

Since difficult times hit our state two years ago, we have been forced to send an entourage to Austin each year to defend and plead for our upper-level educational institution, UTPB.

The fact that Midland-Odessa is 130 miles from the nearest upper-level institution (should UTPB close) is obviously of no concern to this committee. I have not researched it, but I would be very surprised if another metropolitan area of over 200,000 people existed anywhere in the nation that is 130 miles from an upper-level facility.

This committee obviously views West Texans' education as a luxury. Otherwise why not suggest closing UT-Austin (absurd, of course) or Texas A&M (equally absurd) or UT-Arlington, -Dallas or -San Antonio.

Since western Texas is sparsely populated as compared to eastern, central and southern Texas, I suppose we don't possess the political clout to keep our necessities off the budget chopping block.

It's reminiscent of a story I heard about the depression days and an Oklahoma share cropper.

He and his wife had 12 children. When times were good, he enjoyed the labors of his 12 offspring. But then came the drought and the Dust Bowl. Times became difficult. Money and food became scarce and those 12 mouths became a liability instead of an asset. Finally, at wits end, he asked his wife, "Maw, which one of the younguns do you want me to drown first?"

And now, instead of sharing the hard times by making drastic cuts in all the state-supported colleges, we have the Select Committee asking, "Who do we drown first?"

Politicians won't act on illegal alien problem

Regarding the editorial by John Paul Pitts of May 26, "Wide open border could bring down U.S." Pitts expresses the concern of most citizens with the exception of politicians who just don't seem to do anything about the problem.

Perhaps we as citizens should be asking our elected officials how they plan to deal with the situation should the United States become involved in a declared or undeclared war — Who will not serve in that war? While our young men fight and die for this country, who is left sitting safely at home in the good ol' USA?

FLORA LEWIS

French 'cohabitation' turns sour

Flora Lewis

PARIS — French "cohabitation" is working in the sense that there is no crisis of government. But the atmosphere is turning sour and politicians on all sides are chafing at unaccustomed restraints.

The voters and the Constitution combined three months ago to impose a regime of a conservative coalition cabinet, headed by Premier Jacques Chirac, and the socialist President Francois Mitterrand, whose term has two years to run.

Sharing power (they can't be said to be working together) goes against the grain. The politicians hate it, and their preoccupation is to maneuver for position as soon as it seems advantageous to force new elections.

Meanwhile, they are manacled to each other, facing a probably severe electoral penalty if they buck the popular will for balance and at least the appearance of harmony. This is a new mood for France. It may be a sea change from the old habit of die-hard political confrontation. The gap between political assumptions and public attitudes has never seemed wider.

When he saw Chirac sweeping maximum power into his large mobile hands and reducing the president's role to a minimum, Mitterrand adopted a cannily passive strategy.

In the Fifth Republic founded by Charles de Gaulle, the president had almost complete power so long as he commanded a parliamentary majority. Lacking that, Mitterrand intervenes only on matters of basic principle and protocol. Whatever happens, he can say, is entirely Chirac's doing against his own better judgment. As a result, his polls are improving and Chirac's are sagging.

There are some complaints that the new government isn't going fast enough in dumping socialist reforms. But, surprisingly, there is more complaint that it is going too far.

"The liberals (conservatives in the French vocabulary) are just like the socialists, they want to turn everything upside down to suit themselves," resumes what many are saying. People seem to be just as irritated that Chirac's team is implementing its program as they were when the socialists practised what they preached.

There is an intriguing parallel in the politicians' disconcerted reaction. Pierre Mauroy, who was Mitterrand's first premier, issued a plaintive rebuke to intellectuals after some months in office for not providing the enthusiastic support he thought he had earned by simply winning. In the same way, Chirac recently ticked off employers for not investing and creating jobs that he had promised in their name, thus letting him down.

Chirac backed off after a huffy response, instead seeking to cajole businessmen by claiming he had nine years to go so they needn't fear uncertainty. That was nervy. It implied he took for granted that he would remain premier for two years and then become president for seven.

Either way, the politicians have acted as though their constituents were obliged to applaud. And the public is making clear that it isn't much interested in ideology, polemics, or flashy political footwork. It wants the governors to get down to running the country efficiently, tackling unemployment, which is still going up, and avoiding enervating crisis and tension. The French no longer seem to crave circus politics, just results.

Some commentators surmise that the country may be signaling a wish for a more or less permanent cohabitation that would reduce the concentration of power and set limits on swings between governments. That would be a whole new game for what the French call "the political class." It fogs all prediction.

So far, the Chirac administration has taken some strong measures on money, cutting out the wealth tax, lowering company taxes, restoring the right to own gold anonymously and to pay big bills in cash. Most prices have been decontrolled, and it will be easier for employers to fire workers. Landlords are favored, and exchange controls have been relaxed though not removed. Election by proportional representation has been revoked. The police have been given stern, arbitrary powers to make identity checks and expel foreigners.

But there hasn't been a Reagan revolution. Denationalization is yet to come and deregulation is limited. France is evolving rather differently than the U.S. It apparently doesn't want to be roused, flattered or frightened, just put to productive, rewarding work. That makes it hard on combative, image-making politicians.

Reagan's Supreme Court appointments can shape future

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST Jr.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — President Reagan's new Supreme Court appointments this week were of major importance to the future determination of social and legal issues in this country.

By naming the strongly conservative Associate Justice William H. Rehnquist as Chief Justice to replace retiring Warren E. Burger and appointing another conservative activist, Appellate Judge Antonin Scalia, to the Supreme Court, the president was moving toward one of the most ambitious goals of his presidency.

That goal is to have a conservative majority on the Supreme Court to safeguard the continuation of his policies after he leaves the White House.

This was made clear by Attorney General Edwin Meese on the eve of the president's announcement. Addressing a conservative meeting which was attended by Kingsbury Smith, our national editor, the attorney general said the policies the president has pursued and the changes he has made must be "institutionalized" so that they cannot easily be reversed by future liberal Democratic administrations.

He stressed the importance of appointing conservative judges not only to the Supreme Court but to all federal courts — judges who would be committed to "judicial restraint" and who shared the president's federalist view that the states should have more control over their own affairs.

Meese also said there must be some "institutional mechanism" on the lower levels of the federal government to preserve President Reagan's restoration of traditional American values and principles, including free enterprise, a balanced federal budget, deregulation and a strong defense to deter aggression.

The attorney general has been the spearhead of the president's plan to achieve judicial restraint by appointing to the federal courts conservative-oriented judges who would not usurp legislative authority to make, in effect, more liberal law with their decisions.

If, as seems likely, the Senate later this year confirms the nominations of Justice Rehnquist and Judge Scalia, it will mean a significant shifting of the Supreme Court's ideological balance to the right.

However, not all of those considered conservative justices always vote conservatively. For example, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, President Reagan's first appointment to the Supreme Court, stunned conservatives last month by abandoning the court's conservative wing to cast the deciding vote that created a liberal majority favoring the press in a libel ruling.

To assure a conservative majority that could last into the next century, the president must be able to appoint one or two more conservatives to the Supreme Court during the next two-and-a-half years of his term. This could happen since one of the liberal Justices, William Brennan Jr., is 80, and the other, Justice Thurgood Marshall is nearing 78. Three of the centrist judges are also aging, and two have discussed retiring with friends.

Therefore, President Reagan may be able to leave a lasting mark of his philosophy on the Supreme Court.

It has been my privilege to know three out of the last five Chief Justices. The first was Fred Vinson, President Truman's selection in 1946. Next was Earl Warren, whom Ike appointed in 1953. The third is Warren Burger, appointed Chief Justice by President Nixon in 1969 and who is retiring at the age of 78 to devote his time to organizing ceremonies for the 200th anniversary of the Constitution in 1987.

A charming man who in his youth worked during the day and studied law at night school to graduate summa cum laude, Chief Justice Burger was selected by President Nixon to practice judicial restraint. He proved, however, to be one of the most active justices in history.

Although considered a conservative, he presided for 17 years over what most of the time was a centrist court. Under his leadership, the Supreme Court approved the constitutional right to abortion; affirmative action for minority groups in hiring; busing for school segregation; the public's right of access to information, and the Miranda decison requiring that criminal suspects be informed of their rights before police interrogation.

More of a broadminded moderate than an ideologue, he served his country well.

MISD board to consider employee salary schedules

From Staff Reports

Midland school board members will implement the second phase of the annual budget process Tuesday when they consider 1986-87 salary schedules for teachers and other district employees during a regular meeting at 1:30 p.m. in the Midland Independent School District board room, 702 N. N St.

In other business, trustees are expected to:

— Extend administrative contracts.

— Hear an update of the district's chemical abuse/awareness program.

— Review the district's compensatory programs.

— Hear survey results of a sample of the 1984 and 1985 graduating classes.

— Evaluate the Excel Math Pilot program.

— Give final approval to the Local Merit Pay program.

— Revise contract provisions.

— Revise board policy for canvassing elections and organizing the board.

— Consider recommendations to delete board policy for educational grants to teachers and revise policy pertaining to annual sick leave rebates and retirement sick leave rebates for district employees.

— Consider the youth center lunch/cafeteria proposal.

— Accept gifs from the Rusk Elementary School Parent-Teacher Association.

— Award bids to install light fixtures at Midland High School and Lee Freshman High School, purchase gas heaters at Lee High School, paving and concrete patio and landing at Midland Freshman High School.

— Approve changes in pledged securities.

— Approve tax collections through May 31.

— Approve financial statements through May 31.

— Approve bills payable and investments.

City Council

The spokesman for a group of Midlanders which wants no tax hikes and belt-tightening by government agencies said he wants volunteers to hawk public officials during budget hearings.

The request is just a part of a campaign by Charles "Bro" Seltzer and his colleagues to get more citizen involvement in local government.

The group will present a petition of some 700 names Tuesday to the City Council, Seltzer said.

City Council members also will consider providing a left turn only designation on the corner of Golf Course Road and Garfield Street.

Consideration of an ordinance prohibiting nuisance water in public streets is also slated.

"We want the government to understand our problems," Seltzer said, noting the group has talked to Midland county and school officials.

"We would like them to share in the hard times."

The group, which Seltzer said is gaining in popularity, contended it is unfair for tax rates to go up while Midland's economy suffers.

He said plunging oil prices have made times "tough" for the private sector.

"We are going to ask for volunteers to montior each government entity's budget hearings," he said. "They may be able to help convince elected officials they need some cuts."

The city's budget hearings begin June 30.

Seltzer said his group does not have specific goals for the local government officials.

"That (identifying where cuts need to be made) is not our decision. That is why we elect these folks — to make the hard decisions."

County Commissioners

Midland County commissioners will delve into their budget study for the county's 1987 fiscal year in their 9 a.m. Monday meeting in the Commissioners' Courtroom in the Midland County Courthouse.

Prior to opening the budget study, the commissioners are to:

— Consider a request from Nancy Vickery to help the Eastside Economic Development Task Force clean-up campaign of the eastside area on July 19;

— Discuss the long-range study of Midland County courthouse and jail needs into the 21st Century;

— Discuss with Sheriff Gary Painter the purchase of vehicles and air conditioning;

— Consider a resolution on emergency management, and — Open bids for a truck for the county's Maintenance Department.

MC Board of Trustees

The Midland Junior College District Board of Trustees will begin its annual budget hearing process Tuesday when it meets in regular session at 4 p.m. in the board room, 3600 N. Garfield St.

In other business, trustees are expected to:

— Approve personnel appointments and/or resignations.

— Select and auditing firm.

— Hear the president's report.

— Approve unfinished business.

— Approve new business.

— Approve vouchers and financial statements for May.

Seminar on fire ants to be held

From Staff Reports

A seminar on "The Proper Control of Fire Ants in the Home Landscape and on Agricultural Land" will be held at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the Allison Fine Arts Center Auditorium at Midland College, said Earnest Kiker, Midland County agricultural agent.

Discussing fire ants will be Kiker, who will give a briefing on the insect; Richard "Rick" Minzenmayer, Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) entomologist, who will talk on the life cycle and control of fire ants, and David Davis, Texas Department of Agriculture (TDA) district supervisor, who will talk on the TDA's chemical in the control of the ant, which has invaded West Texas.

The TDA said fire ants "have been a pest in the country for over 40 years" and are "well-entrenched in nine Southern states and 113 Texas counties."

The ants move about five to 12 miles a year, said TDA Commissioner Jim Hightower.

"Left uncontained, the fire ants have spread westwardly and southwardly across the state at a rate of five to 12 miles a year, so that now roughly 50 million acres of Texas are infested with fire ants."

Hightower said that it's unlikely that the ant will ever be eradicated but that control measures are underway.

Astronomy club to host viewing session Saturday

From Staff Reports

West Texas Astronomers will host a viewing session for the public Saturday at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium.

Activities will begin at 9 p.m. with a brief orientation in the planetarium followed by outdoor viewing through club members' telescopes. Mars, Saturn and Venus are among the celestial objects in good position for viewing.

"To Worlds Unknown," the current planetarium program, will be presented at 2 p.m. and 3:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

The next regular club meeting of the West Texas Astronomers will be at the planetarium on July 9 at 7:30 p.m.

The planetarium, located in Haley Park, is open to the public without charge.

Local club did 'great' at recent 4-H Roundup

From Staff Reports

Midland County 4-H Club members did "a great job" in the 1986 4-H Roundup at Texas A&M University earlier this month, according to Marian Farr, Midland County Texas Agricultural Extension Service agent for home economics.

Michelle Driver received the $1,000 Floyd Lynch Scholarship.

Jennifer Dryden won first place in the farm-and-ranch management method demonstration contest.

Kelie Jones and Jolie Ratcliff placed fourth in the health-method demonstration contest.

The Midland County 4-H Horse judging team placed sixth. Team members are Richard Triplitt, Shannon Bray, Donna Gatlin, and Amber Riggs. Triplitt placed sixth in individual scoring.

UMC enrolling children for summer program

From Staff Reports

First United Methodist Church Children's Day Out Program is enrolling children for its summer program.

The program will be held every Tuesday and Thursday during the five weeks of July from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Children from the age of 3 months through those who have completed the first grade are welcome. Many summer activites and learning experiences are planned, and children are grouped in small classes with other children their age.

For information or cost of enrollment, call the church office at 682-3701. Enrollments will be taken through June 30 and classes begin July 1.

Houston men charged

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Two Houston men are charged with murder following a shootout two weeks ago that left three victims dead, a spokeswoman for the Maricopa County Attorney's Office said.

Spokeswoman Sylvia Lopez said Stephen P. Scarborough, 30, and Jimmy Lucas, 38, were indicted by a grand jury on three counts each of murder and burglary.

The men were being held in lieu of $137,000 bond and were to be arraigned Monday, Ms. Lopez said.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Stone preparing for basketball camp for youths

By H. A. TUCK

MC basketball coach Jerry Stone is working hard preparing for his Midland College Champions Basketball Camp. The camp is scheduled for July 7-11 and is for boys from the fifth grade through high school junior varsity. A girls camp, slated to start this week, was cancelled due to lack of interest.

Assistant coach Reggie Franklin will be working with Stone at the session. Former MC All-American Spud Webb, who made quite a name for himself with the NBA's Atlanta Hawks as a rookie this season, also will be involved in part of the boys' camp.

Pre-registration for the second summer session continues all this week and through July 7. Hours for pre-registration are 7 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Thursday in the Student Services Office, Administration Building.

All persons planning to take credit courses during the second summer term are urged to pre-register and receive time permits. Those who don't pre-register will have a longer wait on registration day...and might not get in the classes they want.

Registration for the second term is July 9, classes start July 10 and end August 14.

My advanced photography class this summer is scheduled Aug. 3, 10, and 17 for those who have taken the basic course or permission of the instructor. It's a seminar concentrating on outdoor photography, especially nature subjects. The first two classes are late afternoon photo sessions in and around Midland, while the third meeting will be an all-day trip to the Davis Mountains. "All-day" in this case means from about 4 a.m.-9 p.m.

The class is limited to 15 persons and the $70 fee includes transportation. Course outline is available from the Continuing Education Department office.

Persons who plan on attending MC this fall and need financial assistance should make application as soon as possible. Financial aid director Bill Burns reports that requests for financial assistance seem to be higher than in the past.

"Due to the demand, financial aid requests should be made not later than July 1 for the 1986 fall semester," Burns said.

Those who plan to seek such assistance should phone 685-4501 to arrange an appointment.

Some brief notes about campus personnel:

Campus craftsman William Daly has resigned to return to Tennessee; personnel director Sharon McCrary has just returned from a vacation in Africa, where her husband was doing some work for a safari company; retiring Allison journalism professor Ralph Sellmeyer just made a trip to Branson, Missouri, to see about progress on their retirement house.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

Texas town defeats first liquor issue

OLTON (AP) — In their first such election ever, nearly all the area's voters turned out Saturday to defeat a bid to legalize the sale of beer and packaged liquor within the city limits, officials said.

The issue lost in a 531-288 vote, and turnout was more than 95 percent with 819 votes cast, include 321 absentee ballots, Lamb County Clerk Bill Johnson said.

"We're a small rural town with God-fearing people who believe in the work ethic," said Rosalyn Sorley, secretary of a group that fought the issue. "We just didn't want it (liquor) for our community."

The election was a first for Olton and a came after a petition calling for the election was certified by Lamb County Commissioners May 27. A similar petition failed to gain enough signatures for certification earlier in May.

An earlier drive to put the issue on the ballot nine years ago was thwarted by the Citizens for a Clean Community, who again led the bid to defeat legalized liquor sales.

When informed of the results Saturday night, CCC secretary Sorley exclaimed, "Praise the Lord."

Mrs. Sorley said she felt the vote would be close, but the anti-liquor tide seemed to rise just before the election.

"We were hoping for a 70 percent (margin) against the petition," she said. The measure actually lost by a 65 percent margin.

Local 4-H clubs will be hosting '4-H in the Park'

From Staff Reports

Midland County 4-H Clubs will be hosting "4-H in the Park" this summer for boys and girls from the third-grade to 19 years old, according to Jill Pronger, Midland County agent for home economics.

The first session was held last week in Hidalgo Park. The second session will be held July 8, 9 and 10 in Washington Park, and the third session will be held Aug. 20 and 21 in Ulmer Park.

"4-H in the Park" activities include bicycling, dog training, cooking, game playing, crafts, child care, fashions and gardening.

Judges, lawyers bring their legal expertise to Dallas area needy

Hartman

DALLAS (AP) — A judge says he is following spiritual motivation by spearheading a program that brings legal services to the poor, using volunteer attorneys and church offices to hold court and provide a law clinic.

State District Judge Merrill Hartman holds court on Thursday nights at Grace United Methodist Church in east Dallas to bring legal services closer to the community that needs them.

"The decision to share my gifts as a lawyer and judge with the poor was a spiritual one," Hartman said. "The churches need to be in missions if they call themselves the body of Christ. He spent his time helping the needy."

Legal clinics at the church and at a southside community center are both staffed by volunteer attorneys, court reporters, paralegals and secretaries.

"They are the first free volunteer legal clinics" in the city, said Hartman, 47. "There has been government-funded legal aid and legal services, but these were the first free volunteer legal clinics manned by private lawyers at no fee."

Hartman, 303rd Family District Court judge, said the clinics are supported administratively by the North Central Texas Legal Services Foundation. Two other state district judges also volunteer their time for the clinics.

For the past year, 85 percent of the clinics' cases have been family matters, such as uncontested divorces, child custody cases and paternity suits, Hartman said.

Holding court in the church makes it easier for residents who otherwise could not afford legal services to receive them.

"The idea was that if I was going to give legal services free to the poor, I wanted it to be effective. — not in name only — but to take it where they were and where they could find me," he said. "Some of them don't even have automobiles. That was the reason for the location."

Hartman said a clinic at the Martin Luther King Jr. Community Center was established in May 1983 and the church's clinic opened a few months later.

"I was just looking for a place in south Dallas that would be central to the need,' he said. "I happened to be on the board of a community day-care center, Dallas Bethelem Center, Inc., and in 1983, I asked their executive director for the use of some space."

Hartman, a member of Lake Highlands United Methodist Church, said the center is one of the church's charities.

He said that the Dallas County Bar Association was approached about the clinics and 15 large law firms volunteered the services of lawyers, paralegals and legal secretaries.

"We started with two lawyers and a legal services person doing intake and now we have about 250 people working in the two clinics," he said.

Lawyers will refer cases they cannot handle to a representative of North Central Texas Legal Services, he said.

Other district judges involved with the clinic are Dee Miller and Will Pryor, who helped establish the clinic at the Bethlehem Center, Hartman said.

"We have had cases where a person was married in 1965, separated in 1967 and had not gotten a divorce because he could not afford to hire a lawyer," said Hartman.

Dettman's assistant taking her legal expertise to Wichita Falls

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Janet Copeland is hitting the road. She's moving on.

And just who is Janet Copeland?

She's a public prosecutor who probably has more interest in you than you in her simply because she represents the people — people of the state of Texas — when she goes after criminal types in the courtroom.

Her intent is to reap justice.

Ms. Copeland, 28, has left the Midland County Attorney's Office, where she was first assistant attorney, to work in the office of Wichita County Criminal District Attorney Barry Macha in Wichita Falls.

She resigned her post because her husband, lawyer David Copeland, is going into partnership with attorney Jay Cantrell in a two-man office in Wichita Falls — his home town.

"Now," she said, "he'll have his name on the stationery."

Her husband worked for Midland's largest law firm, Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin & Browder Inc. but hadn't made it up to partnership status by the time he left the fold. The firm has 40 lawyers in Midland and 60 statewide.

"We're just going home (to Wichita Falls)," said Copeland, 29. "That's where our families are. We certainly have enjoyed Midland and our jobs, but families come first. We're excited."

No doubt, Ms. Copeland has found reward in her work here.

"I've enjoyed this work, and it fits my disposition real well. It allowed me more time than private practice would to be a mother."

A son, Weston, was born to the Copelands on May 9, 1985.

And, she will miss County Attorney Mark Dettman.

"I'm going to miss Mark," she said. "He has been easy to work for. The office has a relaxed atmosphere. Because of him, that makes it fun to work here."

Dettman said his office has benefited from Ms. Copeland's expertise.

"She's been virtually in charge of the criminal end of this office, so I haven't had to worry about the criminal aspect so much."

Dettman said he had hoped to talk Ms. Copeland into running for county attorney when he leaves the office.

And, he added if Ms. Copeland ever were to decide to return to Midland, "there would be a job waiting for her. That's how much I think of her. That's probably the nicest thing you can say about somebody."

Prior to joining the County Attorney's Office in late 1984, Ms. Copeland prosecuted felony cases as an assistant district attorney in the 142nd and 238th Texas State District Courts. She was chief prosecutor in the latter court.

She said she enjoyed working for both Judge Pat Baskin of the 142nd and Judge Vann Culp of the 238th.

"Judge Baskin led me by the hand for the first six months, and I will always feel like he was the one who helped me through the most difficult part of my career."

Culp described Ms. Copeland as "always prepared, very courteous, knowledgeable, and a very effective prosecutor."

Of her colleague, Assistant County Attorney Patricia (Patty) Sessa said she would miss Ms. Copeland.

"She has been one of the most competant attorneys I've worked with," Ms. Sessa said.

"She's been totally committed to her work here. She falls into a class of attorneys who are very good people and who are committed to work (in the judicial system)."

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Janet Copeland, former first assistant to Midland County Attorney Mark H. Dettman, is moving her legal expertise to Wichita Falls.

Priest's eulogy praises Kate Smith's 'life of service to others'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The priest who baptized Kate Smith 22 years ago officiated at a funeral mass Saturday for the singer, praising her "life of service" and leading the congregation in singing "God Bless America."

"A great voice has not been stilled. It has simply gone on to join the heavenly choir," said the Rev. Albert Salmon of Ticonderoga, N.Y.

Miss Smith, a radio personality and patriotic symbol famed for her powerful rendition of "God Bless America," died Tuesday at 79.

A funeral mass for Miss Smith was conducted Thursday in Raleigh, N.C., where she had moved seven years ago to be near her sister. She will be buried this week in Lake Placid, N.Y., at Camp Sunshine, which she once owned.

Bishop Eugene Lyons, auxiliary bishop of the archdiocese of Washington, said Miss Smith had suffered from many diseases. But he said that suffering is behind her and she can "ask God face-to-face to bless us and bless our country."

Miss Smith grew up two blocks from the Capitol and attended elementary school, business school and nursing school in Washington. Old friends and some relatives crowded into the gilded, ornate St. Matthew's Cathedral Saturday to honor the memory of the woman once described as a living Statue of Liberty.

In a brief eulogy, Salmon said Miss Smith was "Kate to the world" but liked to be called Kathryn by close friends. He said she had a good sense of humor and never complained despite her health problems, which included severe diabetes and cancer.

"Her life was a life of service to others. I never saw her unhappy," he said. The eulogy concluded with the mourners, many of them crying, singing "God Bless America." The song was also played as Miss Smith's casket was carried out of the cathedral.

TOKYO (AP) — Pianist Vladimir Horowitz gave Japan a memorable encore Saturday as he returned three years after performances here that disappointed critics and himself.

Following the 70-minute performance, the first of three in Tokyo, the 81-year-old virtuoso took more than a dozen curtain calls. He played three encore pieces and shook hands with many of the fans who rushed to the stage at the concert's end.

The performance began the finale of a two-month world tour highlighted by his return to the Soviet Union 58 years after he emigrated to the United States.

"This was a very important event to him," said Horowitz's manager, Peter Gelb, after the sold-out afternoon performance at Tokyo's 2,200-seat Hitomi Memorial Hall. The 1983 concerts here "left him extremely dissatisfied. He was not feeling well, and was unhappy with his playing and with the concert hall."

Prince Edward

CAMBRIDGE, England (AP) — Prince Edward, youngest child of Queen Elizabeth II, has graduated from Cambridge University with a second-class honors degree in history.

The 22-year-old prince's final examination results were posted Saturday at the university's Senate House.

His score of 2:2, called an average pass but still qualifying him for an honors degree, matched the score earned by his older brother, Prince Charles, 16 years ago.

For the first part of his three-year education at Cambridge's Jesus College, Edward studied anthropology and archaeology, but later switched to history.

Ed Asner

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Ed Asner will be joined by actress Susan Anspach in a delegation making a five-day tour of Nicaragua.

Asner, who has never visited Nicaragua, has been an outspoken critic of President Reagan's policy of supporting the Contra insurgency against the Sandinista government.

"I've been talking about Central America, arguing politics about Central America so long that I felt a trip was in order," he said in an interview with The Kansas City Star before Saturday's departure.

The visit "will mostly add greater objectivity to whatever I have to say on Nicaragua," Asner said. "Or, if it's totally bleak and a reversal of everything I've been led to expect, maybe I'll just shut up."

Lech Walesa

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa, leader of the outlawed trade union Solidarity, has applied for a passport so he can attend an international peace conference in Rome next month, a spokeswoman said.

The Italian government invited Walesa, the 1983 winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, to attend the conference July 2-4. It is being organized by the Italian government and city of Rome to mark the International Year of Peace proclaimed by the United Nations.

Barbara Mostek, Walesa's assistant, said in a telephone interview that he filed the passport application Friday with local authorities in Gdansk and was told he should expect a response by mail.

In accepting the invitation earlier this month, Walesa said he hoped the Polish government would guarantee he would be allowed to return. Walesa has not traveled outside Poland since 1981, when Solidarity was crushed by martial law, out of fear that the Communist authorities would not let him return.

LONDON (AP) — The Prince and Princess of Wales joined some of the world's top rock stars at a concert celebrating the 10th anniversary of the prince's own charity, the Prince of Wales Trust.

Diana, in a black dinner jacket and trousers with a frilly white blouse, and Charles, in a dark gray pin-striped suit, were among an audience of 10,000 at the 2½-hour concert Friday in London's Wembley Arena.

Paul McCartney, Elton John, Phil Collins, Rod Stewart, Eric Clapton and Tina Turner were among the stars performing free in the 10th anniversary event.

Organizers hoped to raise about 1 million pounds ($1.5 million) for the trust, which helps disadvantaged youngsters.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Apollo moonwalker James Irwin has left Penrose Hospital, two weeks after suffering a nearly fatal heart arrhythmia.

Irwin, 56, who walked on the moon during the 1971 Apollo 15 mission, told reporters Friday he planned to fly to Turkey in two months to resume his search for the remains of Noah's Ark.

Irwin was found unconscious in jogging togs near his home on June 6. Paramedics said he had no heartbeat when they arrived but electric shock returned a normal heartbeat.

"The first week was rough and hectic on me and the nurses, but I feel wonderful now and it's always nice to go home," Irwin said.

PEKING (AP) — Top Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping joked Saturday about his age, saying that in five more years he'll be too old to function.

Deng, who will be 82 in August, made the comment during a meeting with visiting Mali President Moussa Traore. Traore recalled that it had been five years since they last met.

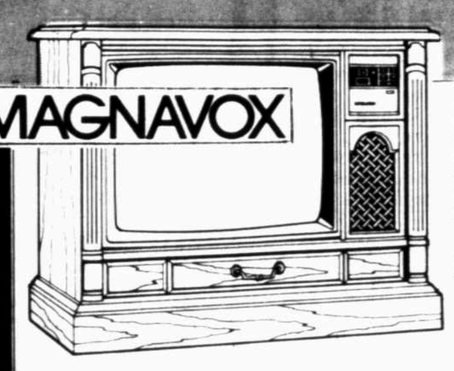

In another five years, Deng responded: "I will be 87. By that time, I will not be able to function."

Traore told him, "Experience is a very important factor."

Deng laughed and replied, "Although experience is an advantage, when people get to a certain age, their energy declines.

"The arrangement I made over the past few years is for me to withdraw from the political arena step by step," he said.

Six women join Hall of Fame ranks

STATE

HEREFORD (AP) — Six women, including Pulitzer Prize-winning novelist Willa Cather and rodeo glamor girl Jerry Ann Portwood, were inducted Saturday into the National Cowgirl Hall of Fame.

Three of the inductees were brought into the Hall of Fame for their cowgirl abilities and three for their contributions to western heritage.

Festivities began Friday night with a reunion supper for past honorees. Following Saturday's 11:30 a.m. induction ceremonies, there was an afternoon open house at the National Cowgirl Hall of Fame and the Western Heritage Center in Hereford.

Inducted were:

— Bernice Dean, deceased, who was acclaimed for her acrobatic abilities on and off of horses. She died in 1980 of a heart attack at the age of 65 just before she was to have performed at an Indian fair in California. Born in Milwaukee, she lived in California most of her life and excelled at riding, shooting, knife-throwing, juggling, balancing acts, and acts featuring bullwhips.

She was a lifetime member of the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association and had performed in every state. She married Frank Dean on horseback while on tour of Japan in 1935.

— Juanita Hackett Howell, 84, who at the age of 28 began following in the footsteps of her mother, Prairie Fawn, as an exhibition rider. She now lives in Phoenix, Ariz. Five years ago, she entered and won a beauty pageant in Phoenix for women over 60. For her talent, she performed a rope spinning act. Her marriage to Chet Howell in 1936 while both were on horseback was the feature attraction of a rodeo at Centralia, Wash. She retired from rodeoing in 1952.

— Jerry Ann Portwood, 55, who made a career of promoting western movies, judging rodeo competitions, showing champion cutting horses, rodeoing and performing as a Hollywood stunt rider. When she was 15, she became the youngest person ever to work as an official ranch girl for Gene Autry and Evert Colborn at the Madison Square Garden rodeo in New York City in 1945.

Her white Cadillac convertible with a plaid top and a matching trailer with the same plaid top contributed to her glamor girl image. She is no longer active, but has remained active in committee work and other activities. She now owns and operates a 2,000-acre ranch at Elbert, Texas.

— Willa Sibert Cather, deceased, who won the Pulitzer Prize for the best novel of 1922 for "One of Ours" and was the first woman to receive an honorary degree from Princeton, and received other honors from the University of Nebraska, Michigan, Columbia, Creighton, California, Yale and Smith. In 1944, she got a gold medal from the National Institute of Arts and Letters. She died in 1947 in New York City.

Little is known about her private life because she destroyed most of her private papers and left a will forbidding publication of her letters. She hated phone calls and photographers, she said, because they interfered with her writing.

Born in Virginia, where her father raised sheep, she moved with her family to Nebraska, near the Kansas border, in 1883.

— Gretchen Sammis, now living on a ranch at Cimarron, N.M., who became the first woman to ride in the men's cow pony race at the Cimarron Rodeo. She exercised race horses during World War II, then taught elementary school and taught physical education at the University of Wisconsin after getting a master of science degree from the University of Colorado.

She returned to Cimarron to take over operations on her family's ranch in northeastern New Mexico. She remains on numerous boards and associations, mostly of national cattle growers and ranch management groups.

— Eleanor Williams, deceased, Born in 1906 in Pittsburgh, she spent summers as a teen on a Montana ranch with a friend of her mother's. At the age of 17, she studied art at Carnegie Tech and was an illustrator for Carnegie Museum in Pittsburgh. She was involved in the Art Students League in New York City but in 1928 attended a rodeo at Madison Square Garden. Two weeks later, she eloped with a man she had met backstage and left with him for a wild west show in Chile. On the boat en route to Chile, she learned trick riding from her husband.

Later, she went back to Montana, where she wrote wild west stories under a pseudonym, and at the age of 25 bought a ranch in Quemado, N.M., where she worked side by side with men on the ranch. After six years, her marriage broke up, and two years later she joined Tim McCoy's Wild West Show as a trick rider and high wire performer with Barnum & Bailey. Eventually, she returned to her New Mexico ranch.

Afghans seek treatment in Dallas

GRAPEVINE (AP) — Twenty-nine Afghans, some of them blinded or burned in the past six years in their fight against the Soviets, arrived Saturday in the Dallas-Fort Worth area to receive the medical treatment they couldn't get at home.

Greeted by placards and shouts from about 50 Afghan expatriates who live in the area, the group arrived at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport on a U.S. Air Force medical jet.

Some Afghans, speaking through interpreters, were forceful in their desire to return to their country to continue the fight against the Soviets.

One patient, who wore an eye-patch and had the name Mohammad Afzal written on a card taped to his chest, said of the Soviet soldiers, "The only thing they do is kill and destroy, even women and children.

"They aren't even animals.... They are like beasts, all they do is kill and destroy," he said.

A man only identified as Afride, 27, suffered blast injuries when he stepped on a mine and was blinded in one eye.

"He wants to get treatment and go back to war," said an interpreter, who identified herself only as a student at the University of Texas at Arlington.

Most of the patients walked into the airport, but four or five arrived on gurneys. The group's arrival was an emotional one, bringing tears from several who were there for the arrival.

The patients were dressed in robes and turbans, making it difficult to spot the exact nature of their injuries.

Dr. John Gavras, president of the Dallas-Fort Worth Hospital Council Coordinating Committee, which represents 80 North Texas hospitals, said most of them will need reconstructive surgery, because the operations they had received in Afghanistan were not done properly.

Twenty-three adults and one child were referred to Dallas-Fort Worth area hospitals, while five children were to be transported to Victoria for treatment, authorities coordinating the effort said.

UTA's health center diagnosed the patients and determined which hospitals they would go to.

A 10-year-old boy whose hip was grazed by a bullet, said that when he grows up he wants to return to his country and fight the Russians, an interpreter told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Lufkin, who helped organize the treatment, had said earlier, "I've been over to that country a few times, and it's a recognizable problem that they have injuries that can't be treated there in Red Cross hospitals."

Wilson was on hand for the Afghan group's arrival Saturday afternoon.

He noted the hospitals providing treatment had "graciously" agreed to do so at no expense.

Nine Afghan children began treatment in Houston under the program Wilson said his staff developed with the donated aid of the U.S. Air Force, various airlines and Texas hospitals. Almost all of those nine are ready to go home.

"Most of the children's injuries are from booby-trapped toys the Russians brought in," he said. "Most of the adults need orthopedic surgery before they can be fitted with artificial limbs."

Wilson said he hopes the free medical treatment program can be expanded to other states "because they were wounded by Russian invaders and are worthy of anything we can do for them."

Airlines he said didn't want to be identified have agreed to fly the victims from Islamabad, Pakistan, to Washington's Andrews Air Force Base. The Air Force then transports them to their U.S. destinations in Dallas and Houston.

Sick Texas girl to return from Soviet Union

DALLAS (AP) — A 17-year-old Texas girl, who collapsed and "quit breathing" last weekend after suffering an asthma attack in Moscow, has improved enough to sit in a wheelchair and will fly back to Dallas on Sunday, her mother says.

Lisa Riggs and several other students from suburban Irving were on a tour of several eastern European countries. She collapsed Sunday while attending a circus in Moscow, said her mother, Cheryl Riggs of Irving.

The girl spent several days in the intensive care unit of a Moscow hospital.

Lisa's father, Gordon Riggs of Dallas, flew to the Soviet Union earlier in the week to be with his daughter at the hospital. But the trip came only after a couple of anxious days in which the girls' parents were unable to learn anything about her condition.

Kerrville nursery grows up around city's landfill site

By GARRY CHANDLER

KERRVILLE (AP) — For most people, the thought of a used-up landfill or wastewater treatment plant doesn't conjure up visions of beauty.

Landfills and sewage plants are final destinations for materials people usually don't want to think about.

But in Kerrville, city officials say a nursery operation that combines public facilities and private enterprise is bringing new life to the city farm in a way that should ultimately have a positive impact on the local environment.

A 1985 contract between the city of Kerrville and Kerrville HRH, Inc., a local nursery company, eventually will open about 160 acres of the city farm off Loop 534 for nursery planting, said Calvin Neely, the city's public works director.

The 160 acres, to be planted in four stages, includes all of the city's former landfill site and the irrigation area for the city's wastewater treatment plant, he said.

"The idea was they would come in, take off the old vegetation, level the land and start planting St. Augustine grass for commercial sale," Neely said.

"They also have an agreement to use water from our wastewater treatment plant. Really, we're not reclaiming our landfill so much as using it for our wastewater effluent," he said.

HRH is planting in the area around the wastewater treatment plant's tailwater pond, Neely said. Planting should begin at the 40-acre former landfill site sometime next year, he said.

Although the city will continue to discharge treated wastewater into Third Creek even after a planned $7 million wastewater plant expansion is completed in 1988, 440,000 gallons of effluent will be held in reserve for HRH daily, Neely said.

In addition to improving the landscape, the HRH operation will help lower phosphate levels at the treatment plant site — an unexpected benefit, he added.

High phosphate levels in the city's wastewater discharge is being studied as a possible source of increased algae growth in the Guadalupe River.

"We inject the (sewage) sludge into the grass fields and then, every time they take the sod off, they take some of that phosphate with them," Neely said.

HRH owner Dale Hardin said the company has planted about 60 acres at the city farm since it began operations in January 1985. In addition to commercial St. Augustine Raleigh grass, about 10,000 baby oaks and 10,000 other assorted shade trees are planted at the site, he said.

Although it will be several years before HRH profits from its city farm operation, Hardin said the arrangement with the city makes excellent sense from both a business and an ecological standpoint.

"The city had this land available and to properly leach the water from the sewers of Kerrville, it needs to be sprayed over vegetation and leached through the soil to be purified," Hardin said.

"The missing link in our minds was that we might provide a use for the water once it was sprayed over the land," he said.

Peace Links honor Rice professors for pledge to boycott SDI work

HOUSTON (AP) — Only one professor in Rice University's Space Physics and Astronomy Departments thinks Star Wars can work, a faculty member said at a gathering Saturday that honored researchers for not working on the project.

And 12 of Rice's 20 space physicists and astronomers have signed a pledge not to work on President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative because it is "technically dubious and politically unwise," said Donald Clayton, a Rice space physics professor and former department head.

"The rest, except for one, think it is a lousy idea but didn't want to sign it (the pledge)," said Clayton, who did not name that one professor.

Clayton and Rice space physicist Hannes Voigt were the featured speakers Saturday at a breakfast honoring 23 scientists from Rice and the University of Houston for vowing not to work on the project.

The Houston branch of Peace Links, a women's group, honored the professors for having the integrity and courage to protest SDI, member Joanne Edmundson said.

"They have found the voices to speak out...to say 'No,'" she said.

Clayton said SDI supporters have touted the project for increasing jobs without showing how the defense project would benefit the country's current defense system.

Researcher Patricia Reiff, who signed the pact not to work on SDI projects, said she is afraid SDI will turn out to be an expensive boondoggle that will embarrass researchers in the years ahead.

Some Houston scientists, totally dependent on research grants, are caught in the middle of the controversy as they don't want to work on SDI projects but have families and large staffs of graduate students to support, Voigt said.

Clayton and Andrew McCammon, a UH professor, protested Friday that Lt. Gen. James Abrahamson, SDI chief, met in a closed session to arrange for area universities to do SDI work.

Abrahamson also appeared at Texas A&M University, the University of Texas at Austin and Texas Tech in Lubbock over the weekend.

In Austin Saturday, U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm said Texas can help the nation's defense and boost its own economy by helping develop the Star Wars defense system against nuclear attack.

"I'm interested in Texas becoming involved in it because it is important to Americans," Gramm said after a tour of UT's off-campus research facilities. "We have always believed in a strong defense but beyond that I have never seen a project that has more obvious technical spinoffs than this."

Gramm said he wanted Abrahamson to see what researchers in Texas could do in developing the proposed satellite defense system designed to protect the nation in event of mass attack by nuclear weapons.

About 12 picketers, carrying anti-nuclear war placards, marched on an Austin street outside the Balcone Center for Electromechanics during Gramm's and Abrahamson's tour.

Star War research flap overshadowing progress

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — The increasingly vocal flap over President Reagan's Star Wars program is overshadowing progress researchers have already made, Strategic Defense Initiative Director Lt. Gen. James Abrahamson said Friday.

On a visit to Texas A&M University hosted by U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, Abrahamson said Texans already have made contributions to the program and can contribute even more in the future.

Abrahamson said his visit was aimed at a better understanding of the research needs and capabilities of university and industry researchers in Texas.

"SDI is the broadest and deepest research program this country has ever embarked on," he said. "At this point, SDI is a research program and a national decision will be made at a later date on whether we will build the system."

Spin-off technologies, such as a more powerful electrical component developed under SDI contract by Auburn University, already are benefitting the country, Abrahamson said.

Gramm said SDI research and spin-off commercial applications can also help boost the state's economy.

"Texans believe in a strong defense and have always played an important role in that defense," Gramm said. "I believe in SDI's ability to protect the American people and keep the peace. But also, it is important to the economic future of Texas. Texans will deliver on their part of the research."

Gramm said he wanted to assure faculty members who are opposed to SDI research that they won't be forced to participate.

Texas A&M President Dr. Frank E. Vandiver said he finds disagreement over SDI research healthy. But he cricitized those who seek to cut off research before it is conducted.

"How can you say it is immoral when we don't know what the results of research will be until we've performed it?" Vandiver asked. "I find that way of thinking irritating and an infringement on my academic freedom."

STATE in brief

Suicide try, gruesome tapes mark slavery trial

KERRVILLE (AP) — The suicide attempt of a witness, graphic tape recordings of alleged torture sessions and gruesome testimony about the treatment of workers at a Hill Country Ranch have marked the trial of three men accused of organized crime.

Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., 55; his son Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., 33; and former ranch worker Carlton Robert Caldwell, 21, are charged with conspiring to commit aggravated kidnapping and murder.

The three are being tried in connection with the March 1984 slaying of Anthony Bates, who prosecutors claim was tortured to death with an electric cattle prod.

The state also alleges the 27-year-old Bates, a one-eyed drifter from Huntsville, Ala., was doused with gasoline and burned.

Prices, rain stunt wheat

SHERMAN (AP) — Depressed prices and drenching rains may combine for a knockout punch at North Texas wheat farmers already facing scraggly crop yields this year, officials say.

This year's wheat crop in Texas is forecast at 119.6 million bushels, down 36 percent from last year's record high crop. Yield is expected to average 26 bushels per acre, the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service says.

"Mother Nature in general has really been dealing us a bad hand," said Tommy Kezar, Grayson County agriculture extension agent. "The rain has created a lot of havoc with the wheat."

Steel town workers rally

LONE STAR (AP) — In what was dubbed a giant town meeting, thousands of steel workers and others hard hit by steel-plant closings rallied here and across the nation Saturday to demand new trade laws and demonstrate unity.

"This administration has been totally insensitive to the loss of American jobs ever since they got there," said U.S. Rep. Jim Chapman, D-Sulphur Springs, referring to President Reagan's staunch support of free trade.

Chapman was a key speaker at the Save American Industry and Jobs rally in this East Texas town, part of a 55-city event staged by the United Steelworkers Union.

Houston debates pay cut

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston's elected officials and its appointed municipal judges will have a choice if the City Council votes to impose 3 percent across-the-board pay cuts on the city's 22,000 workers, a city attorney said.

State laws protect Houston's council members, mayor, city controller and municipal court judges from receiving involuntary pay cuts during their terms, City Attorney Jerry Smith told the Houston Chronicle Friday.

Already City Controller Lance Lalor said he will not accept the wage cut if he can avoid it.

But City Councilman George Greanias, who suggested the rollback, and Mayor Kathy Whitmire, who opposes the cuts, said the 16 elected officials should take the cutback if forced on other city employees.

Austin house fire kills one

AUSTIN (AP) — Fire officials said a "suspicious" fire in an abandoned East Austin house killed an unidentified man.

Fire Department battalion chief David Johnson said the blaze Friday night was considered of suspicious origin.

Patrolman Mel Villanueva said witnesses told officers that three children ran from the house moments before the fire broke out.

He said the house "was engulfed so quickly that I would think it was some kind of chemical that fueled the fire."

Firefighters found the body of the dead man on the first floor of the two-story building. They said he apparently died of smoke inhalation.

Boy's artery expanded

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — Doctors using a balloon catheter expanded the constricted artery of a 3-year-old Texas boy who has a second transplanted heart beating in his chest, a hospital spokeswoman said Saturday.

"Baby Nicky will not require further reconstructive surgery in the immediate future," said Anita Rockwell, spokeswoman for Loma Linda University Medical Center. Surgery had earlier been considered by doctors.

Nicky Carrizales of San Antonio, Texas, who received the heart of a 6-year-old boy Thursday, was in critical condition Saturday afternoon, "extremely ill and on maximal supportive therapy," Ms. Rockwell said.

Insertion of the balloon device into the aorta, the main artery carrying blood from the heart, brought an improvement to the mild residual constriction at a point in his aorta where repair surgery had been done more than a year ago, she said. Doctors performed the procedure, called aortaplasty, on Friday, she said.

The child, also being treated for acute kidney failure, had a rough morning, she said.

"Baby Nicky remains critically ill and was somewhat unstable during the night. He has tended to be more stable this morning," Ms. Rockwell said, adding, "Everyone involved with Nicky is taking events one hour at a time."

Doctors discovered that surgery performed on Nicky as an infant failed to completely repair a narrowing of his aorta.

Surprise! Clements won't produce plan

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Does he or doesn't he? Sure Bill Clements has a new hairstyle, but I doubt if even his hair dresser knows for sure.

We're talking the ex-gov's secret budget-balancing plan here. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and 14 Democratic senators and senatorial hopefuls called Biff's bluff last week. They went out on a limb with a public promise to support a special legislative session if Clements would produce his plan.

And — surprise, surprise — he didn't. Looking back on my notes since Clements first claimed he had such a plan, I've come to the conclusion that it really doesn't exist.

The first mention of it comes Feb. 3, when Clements formally filed to seek the GOP nomination for governor. Standing in the lobby of the Lorenzo De Zavala Library and Archives Building here near the Capitol, Clements calls for increased spending for prisons and the Department of Public Safety.

Asked what areas of the state budget he would cut to make room for those increases, Clements says he won't say. "That'd be a bad mistake this early in the campaign."

My next entry, on March 31, shows Clements again calling for a special session to scrub the budget. He vows to present the Legislature with "a detailed roadmap" for cutting before January. Again he says prisons and DPS need increases along with public education and the Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

"There's plenty of room in those existing 200 agencies to scrub the budget," he tells reporters. "Take a little here, take a little there."

Now let's jump on ahead to June 2. Clements starts getting general. "There are many things that can be done in this regard," he says in answer to a now-familiar question. He proposes operational budgets and management-by-objective for state agencies and says business volunteers can come in and help bureaucrats better manage their organizations.

Clements suggests "we would look for sure at...the entitlement funds." Now, in Washington, "entitlement funds" mean things like social security, pensions and welfare benefits. When I asked Clements what he meant by that term, he answered, "Just any kind of loose context you want to put to it."

This brings us up to June 12, when Hobby and the Democratic senators — fresh from a campaign strategy session with Mark White — appeal to Clements as a statesman. "In the best interest of the state, you should share any such secret plan immediately," they write.

Reggie Bashur, Clements' press secretary, hems and haws a little bit, saying how wonderful it is that Hobby et. al. have finally seen the light on the need for a special session. Bashur tells me Clements' people have no line-item budget plan nor do they have an agency-by-agency budget.

"Bill Clements' plan is the same blueprint and the same series of procedures that he used in his first term," Bashur says.

And that, folks, is about as substantive as it ever gets. It doesn't sound like the sort of sound organizational thinking necessary to get Texas out of a $2 billion budget crunch.

But just to give Biff the benefit of the doubt, let's take a look at that "blueprint" of state spending during Clements' 1979-1983 term in office. The figures come from a marvelous Legislative Budget Board study showing changes in various categories of state expenditures, adjusted for inflation and population growth.

Only two of the nine categories show a real increase: employee benefits and, as one would suspect, public safety and corrections. A 30.3 percent increase in spending on public safety and corrections.

Where would Clements cut? Let's look at the record again.

Spending for human services declined 15.8 percent when Bill was in office. Transportation was off 9.9 percent, health down 6.4 percent and education down 5 percent. I think that's what Clements meant by "entitlement funds."

Also, general government — which includes most elected offices plus economic development and intergovernmental relations agencies — saw a 12.5-percent real spending decline under Clements. Natural resources and recreation dropped 8.1 percent.

Now if that's the real secret Clements budget line, I can understand why he wants to keep it under wraps. He's right when he says he shouldn't spell it out before Election Day.

With an agenda like that, I wouldn't either.

Bo opts for Bigs' bucks

NFL loses fourth straight Heisman winner

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Heisman Trophy winner Bo Jackson, the Auburn running back who was the No. 1 pick in the NFL draft, signed with baseball's Kansas City Royals, shunning a reported $7 million deal with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

"I went with what is in my heart," Jackson said Saturday as he announced his decision and became the first top pick the NFL has lost since 1979.

"Once I signed on the dotted line, I knew I would never play football again."

Jackson, who played only one full season as an outfielder at Auburn, will work out with the Royals "until he is in competitive playing shape," said John Schuerholz, the American League team's general manager.

Schuerholz said a decision will then be made where the 23-year-old Jackson will be assigned.

Speculation has been that he will be sent either to Memphis, of the Class AA Southern League, or Omaha of the Class AAA American Association, if he is not ready for the majors.

"I'm disappointed for our team and our fans," said Buccaneers Coach Leeman Bennett.

"I don't believe the decision is motivated by money," said Hugh Culverhouse, owner of the NFL club. "We made the lucrative offer we promised."

JACKSON WAS picked by the Royals in the fourth round of baseball's college and high school draft earlier this month, with many teams passing him up on the supposition he would sign a pro football contract.

"My strengths are my speed and arm," Jackson said at a news conference. "I need to work on hitting the curve ball. That's all I need to work on."

Neither he, his attorneys nor Ewing Kauffman, Royals' co-owner, would give details of the contract, signed on Friday, or whether it contains a buy-out clause for Jackson to return to football if he decides baseball is not for him.

However, it has been reported that Jackson was offered five-year packages both by Tampa Bay and the Royals, with the football offer worth an estimated $2 million more than the baseball package.

But the Royals insisted that Jackson's contract is not nearly that large.

"It's not any different from any contract that a first-round draft choice would get," Schuerholz said.

The Royals' general manager angrily rebuked the press for speculating about the deal.

"Whoever the jerk is who dreamed up that figure and got it in circulation ought to have his press card yanked out of his hands and burned in public," Schuerholz said. "It's absolutely not true. It's not even one-fifth right."

"I did what Bo wanted to do," said Jackson, who earlier insisted that his decision would be based neither on money nor the likelihood he would have a longer career in baseball.

HE HAD delayed a decision between the sports for several weeks while he was courted by the Buccaneers and the Royals.

However, he said he did not play one club against the other during the negotiations.

"I'm always going to do opposite of what the public thinks, just to make them sit up and swallow their Adam's apples," he said.

One consideration, he conceded, was the possibility of injury in football.

"My knees are my bread and butter," said Jackson. "They have never been injured and I don't feel like going under anybody's scalpel."

Asked whether Tampa Bay's suspect offensive line caused him to worry about his knees, he said, "It's not good or poor line blocking. You never know what will happen. You never know which play will be your last. I couldn't put up with that."

Avron Fogelman, the Royals' vice chairman of the board, called Jackson's signing "a great day for sports, for baseball, for the Kansas City Royals and for Bo Jackson." He gave Jackson a Royals' cap and said, "We welcome you as the newest member of the Kansas City Royals."

Midland's Sheila Wood gave herself an unexpected thrill two months ago when she took the lead in the national singles bowling tournament.

Wood second in national singles

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

"I didn't know I was even close to the lead. I had no idea. If I'd known I had a shot, I probably would have choked."

That was the reaction Midlander Sheila Wood had when a tournament director came up to her after her singles series and asked her if she'd mind going to the media room at the 1986 Women's International Bowling Congress Tournament.

Wood, 48 and a lifetime resident of the Permian Basin, started off slowly with a 193 and picked up a strong head of steam. Her second game was a 213 and her third a sizzling 253 for a 659 series and the tournament's Division I (151-170 average) lead.

In her 253, Wood started off with a four-in-a-row, spared the fifth, added three more fills and closed with a double in the tenth.

"I was thrilled to death, I was speechless," said Wood. I started with a 196 in doubles and went down hill from there until we moved over a pair and I rolled singles."

And, after it was in the books, "they take you back into this room for interviews and I didn't even know how to fill out the papers. There were questions about how long you've been bowling, like that?"

It's easy to see where any question could be difficult for the WIBC national tournament leader. After all, in Wood's words, "it's something you only dream of."

WOOD'S SERIES was rolled nearly two months ago and, unfortunately, it only held the lead for one month. On May 27, Diane Smith of British Columbia, Canada bumped Wood's 659 with a 688. Both scores surpass last year's winning total of 656.

However, with only 10 days remaining in the WIBC tournament, Wood stands an excellent chance of cashing the $1,300 second place check. That's second out of 22,431 Division I singles entries.

Wood, who heard her score had been bested but wasn't sure, said, "If it was, second's not like being in first but it was a thrill for awhile."

WOOD HAS been a bowler for 17 years and her possible second place finish is her highest in three previous WIBC tries. Her 659 was only five pins under her previous high series of 664 and her 253 was 14 under her highest singles game, 267.

In her doubles and team events, Wood didn't even manage to hit her 168 series average of 504, rolling 489 in doubles and 449 in team.

According to Wood, she was hooked on bowling by "a neighbor of mine years ago and I've been bowling with the same doubles partner ever since, Jerrie Harvey.

"Jerrie invited me to my first tournament 17 years ago in Monahans and we won it."

In all, 51,261 women entered the tournament and most of them have already made the trip to California. For some, like Wood, it's the first time in the state.

"We had a good time," said Wood. "It was a fun trip, my first to California. Probably the only reason I got to go to California at all was because I was bowling."

And, what about next year?

"I'm looking forward to next year all ready," said Wood. "I think I might have to find a new partner thought. Jerrie doesn't want to go to Hartford."

Though there is litte room for improvement in singles, Wood is hoping to do just a touch better next year and bring home the championship medal.

Grosso, Robichaud pull away, again

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Play it again Doug Grosso and Chris Robichaud.

That was the final tune Saturday in the Midland Memorial Hospital Run and Bike for Your Health at Green Tree Country Club, as Grosso won the overall men's title and Robichaud earned the women's crown — just as they had at the Tall City Triathlon two weeks ago.

Grosso blew away the field in the 20K bicycling event with a 31:40 time for the 12.4 mile ride after arriving at the bike station in second place individually. Grosso finished the course, a 5K run (3.1 miles) and the 20K bike, in 49:26, nipping runner-up Randy Kissling by 1:37.

Robichaud outdistanced her nearest competitor by four minutes and 40 seconds, covering the course in 57:40.

Grosso's effort duly impressed the rider from the top team duo, Odessa's Paul Kasardas who teamed with Arthur Garcia for the overall team championship.

"It was truly a superior effort on Doug's part in that he competed as an individual," said Kasardas, who jockeyed with Grosso for the lead during the entire bicycle. "He never gives up. He's tenacious. He puts his head down and grinds the whole way."

GRINDING THE whole way has become Grosso's trademark since bursting on the Tall City triathlon-/biathlon scene. He has won two straight TC Triathlon titles and now has a biathlon victory to match it. And with his performance in the bicycling segment of Saturday's, you might think bicycling is his strong suit.

"I used to think swimming was my strongest (of the three triathlon events), now I just don't know," said Grosso. "Then I went for a time thinking the running was. My strongest event changes with time, I guess."

Maybe that's what has made Grosso nearly untouchable in the multiple-event races in the Permian Basin.

Topping the list of performances by teams was that of Kasardas and Garcia, both students and employees of UT-Permian Basin in Odessa. Garcia, 33, got the tag team started by coming in with a 5K time of about 18:07. Kasardas, 32, then hopped on the bike and set about the unenviable task of catching up with Grosso.

WHICH HE did, at least for a while.

"I caught Doug about the two mile mark then we went back and forth most of the way," Kasardas said.

"He's a real strong rider," Grosso said. "I've raced against him three times, though, and every time, his seat has fallen off his bicycle. He had to stand up almost the whole way."

Kasardas admitted his "seat" trouble, but said it didn't quite fall off this time, it was only left hanging there.

"It was wobbling back and forth, it didn't come off, it was just loose. I had to stay off the middle of it. It's this cheap French equipment," Kasardas joked.

Host Mexico, favored Brazil bow out

MEXICO CITY (AP) — It was a day of soccer fans will talk about forever.

France edged Brazil, the World Cup favorite, 4-3 on penalty kicks Saturday in a scintillating quarterfinal game which had everything.

Hours later, in yet another shootout at Monterrey, West Germany beat Mexico 4-1, shattering the championship dreams of the host country.

France meets West Germany on Wednesday in Guadalajara in the semifinals. Ironically, the Germans eliminated the French from the 1982 semifinals on penalty kicks.

Luis Fernandez ended 2½ hours of drama in the first game by beating Brazilian goalkeeper Carlos on the final penalty kick of the shootout. The score was 1-1 after regulation and two 15-minute overtimes. The final score is determined by the results of the shootout, in which France scored four times and Brazil three.

In the nightcap, after a scoreless 120 minutes, German goalie Harald Schumacher stopped penalty kicks by Fernando Quirarte and Raul Servin in the shootout.

West Germany's Klaus Allofs began the shootout with a goal, which was matched by Manuel Negrete. Andreas Brehme scored, but Schumacher got his leg on Quirarte's weak kick. Lothar Matthaeus beat goalie Pablo Larios to the lower left, and Schumacher easily dived to stop Raul Servin's low shot.

When Pierre Littbarski put his shot in the net, it was over.

"Penalties are not the ideal solution, but we were fortunate today," German Coach Franz Beckenbauer said.

"There was a great deal of drama in this game. We knew we would have difficulties against the Mexican team, but we played very well and we put the Mexicans to a severe test."

Bora Milutinovich, the Yugoslav coach of the Mexican team, was teary-eyed as he praised his players.

"It is only natural that you see me crying," he said. "It should also be natural for you to understand that these tears are for the loss we just suffered.

"Mexico deserved to win and go on to the semifinals. We made an effort better than ever before seen in the history of Mexican soccer. We did not disappoint the Monterrey fans and the fans of all of Mexico. It is sad that we were so close to victory and did not win."

Clemens improves to 13-0

Boston pitcher Roger Clemens releases a seventh inning pitch against Baltimore at Fenway Park Saturday on his way to a 13-0 record.

Associated Press

BOSTON — Roger Clemens became the seventh pitcher in major-league history to start a season with 13 straight victories, giving up six hits over eight innings Saturday as the Boston Red Sox beat the Baltimore Orioles 7-2.

Clemens, who leads the American League with a 2.18 earned run average, struck out six and raised his league-leading total to 114. He walked three before Bob Stanley worked the final inning.

Rube Marquard's 19-0 start for the 1912 New York Giants was the best ever. The best start in the AL was 15-0 by Cleveland's Johnny Allen in 1937 and Baltimore's Dave McNally in 1969.

Dwight Evans hit a three-run homer in the first inning and had an RBI single in the eighth as Boston won for the fourth time in five games. Baltimore has lost eight of its last 10.

The Red Sox captalized on two wild pitches by Ken Dixon, 6-5.

Singles by Ed Romero and Bill Buckner gave Boston runners at first and third with two outs in the first. Don Baylor swung and missed for a third strike, but the pitch was wild, allowing Baylor to reach first and Romero to score.

Evans followed with his eighth homer of the year for a 4-0 lead.

American League

White Sox 7, Mariners 6

CHICAGO — Carlton Fisk's two-run double keyed a four-run fourth inning and reliever Bill Dawley closed with four perfect innings, leading the Chicago White Sox to a triumph over Seattle.

The victory was the first in two games since Doug Rader was named interim manager, replacing Tony LaRussa who was fired Friday.

Neil Allen, 4-0, was the winner and Bill Swift, 1-4, took the loss. Both were warned by umpire Ted Hendry about throwing at batters.

Dawley got his first save in his 22nd relief appearance of the year.

De La Garza picked All State

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — Midland High's Kenny De La Garza can add another piece of hardware to his collection after reaping All State baseball honors by the Texas High School Baseball Coaches Association.

De La Garza, a senior pitcher/infielder for the bi-district champion Bulldogs, was named to the Class 5A All-State sqaud with 31 other standouts, including Abilene Cooper's Bill Dehlinger.

De La Garza hit .351 with five home runs, 24 rbi and 13 stolen bases for the District 4-5A runner-up Bulldogs. As a pitcher, he was 11-7 with a 3.13 earned run average.

De La Garza was also named to the first team 4-5A squad the past two seasons, and was an All-District flanker for the MHS football team as a senior.

Snyder's Brad Holcomb, infielder, and Jimmy Velasquez, pitcher, were named to the All State Class 4A team.

Puckett one reason homer numbers on increase

Associated Press

Kirby Puckett hit four home runs in his first 161 games in the major leagues. He had 15 in the first 65 games this season.

His team, the fourth-place Minnesota Twins, is challenging the 1961 New York Yankees' record home run pace.

Baltimore's Juan Beniquez and Lee Lacy, never known for their power, each hit three homers in separate games against the New York Yankees.

And none of that is unusual this year, when home runs are up 30 percent in the National League and nine percent in the American League.

All these home runs have made their impact in St. Louis. Not at Busch Stadium — where the Cardinals had a measly 18 homers a third into the season — but at the offices of Rawlings Sporting Goods, the makers of the major leagues' baseballs.

"You and everyone else," said the secretary to Rawlings' president when told The Associated Press was interested in charges the ball has been livened this year. She said president Bob Burrows "should hold a press conference and deal all at once with everyone who's calling."

Some theorize that the the people in Haiti, who handstitch the balls, might be wrapping them tighter, accounting for the increased frequency of the homer.

Suggest that to Burrows, though, and he becomes irate.

Burrows takes it as a professional insult. He said this year's balls meet the same tight specifications as in the past and may, in fact, not even be as lively as usual.

Burrows said that more than players, broadcasters for some reason always complain about the ball the most — notably Tony Kubek and Jack Buck. To them, "every year, the ball's souped up," Burrows said.

"If we had 10 big-league pitchers calling us, I'd doublecheck our numbers. But we don't," he said.

Various players, managers and broadcasters have claimed that major league baseballs have been "juiced up" this season and are carrying farther. Other players and two top statisticians are skeptical.

The Elias Sports Bureau recently released figures showing that the first 40 games this season featured 30 percent more homers than 1985's first games — 396 to 301. In the AL, the increase was slighter — 505 to 544 — but yielded the highest 40-game total since 1977's expansion.

The combined total, 940, was the highest for the 40-game mark since baseball expanded to 26 teams.

"I think the ball is livelier. The balls are very hard. They're wrapped very tight," said Minnesota Manager Ray Miller. His Twins hit 98 homers in their first 64 games, a pace that would give them 248 homers this year. The 1961 Yankees' record is 240.

"I think the ball's a little bit livelier this year," said Twins batting coach, Tony Oliva. "I say that because in some parks where in the past it didn't do nothing, it's flying out of them."

Detroit Manager Sparky Anderson has called this year's model "a rocket ball."

"You're going to see more home runs hit than ever before," he predicted.

Broadcasters Tim McCarver and Kubek have both gone public with rabbit-ball claims as well.

Major League baseball's front office says it isn't so.

"There's absolutely no truth to those reports," said spokesman Rich Levin of the Commissioner's Office.

Mike Schmidt, whose expertise derives from being the NL's active home-run leader, is emphatic. "I find the question almost ridiculous," he said. "The good pitchers don't give up many homers. The bad ones do. It has nothing to do with the liveliness of the ball."

The numbers fall short of convincing two statisticians, Bill James and Pete Palmer, of any change in the ball.

"Home run models jump around all the time," said James, author of the annual "Baseball Abstract."

Though the homers hit in April and May — normally two low-homer months — were at a per-game rate surpassing all of 1985's, James said, "There have been years when April and May were the best home run months. In 1976, home runs were very high early in the season, but in the end it turned out to be a poor home run year."

Palmer, co-author of "The Hidden Game of Baseball" and a contributor to the Macmillan "Baseball Encyclopedia," said the 1986 numbers sounded statistically significant, meaning probably not produced by chance fluctuations.

But he said any number of factors could cause the boost. "Maybe it's just that more hitters are trying for homers," was an example he gave.

Use of Puckett's fast start as rabbit-ball evidence was dismissed by James. "Just go back to last year. You could say the ball must be livelier because Phil Bradley is hitting homers," he said. Bradley, who hit 26 homers in 1985, had three entering the week.

Blaming Puckett's outburst on the ball also does not account for his rise in relative standing. The AL leaders in 1985 hit 10 times as many homers as Puckett. This year, he's a few off the lead.

Both statisticians questioned the use of 1985 as a base of comparison. It was the NL's weakest homer year since divisional play started, excepting 1975, a year when Spalding manufactured a poorly-received major league ball.

If the homer average for the first 40 games from 1969-1985 is used, 1986's figure is only 15 percent above the mean.

The rabbit-ball theory runs into trouble explaining the smaller increase this year in the AL. No homer leader from 1985 has retired; Wally Joyner, Jose Canseco and Pete Incaviglia have entered the league; and the AL's increase is still notably lower than the NL's.

What's the difference between the official AL and NL balls? "The color of the ink on the stamp," said Burrows.

Within the NL, the increase is not evenly distributed, either. San Diego, Montreal and Pittsburgh have provided the bulk of the surge.

The Elias bureau promises a second year-by-year comparison after 80 games — sometime near the All-Star break.

James said it will be mid-August before a reliable data base is compiled. Until then, he gives the issue of an upward homer trend a statistician's cautious dismissal.

"It's very possible that something is happening," he said, "but there probably isn't."

Meanwhile, the balls autographed by league presidents Bobby Brown and Chub Feeney keep flying out of the park.

Rangers 3, A's 2

ARLINGTON — Knuckleballer Charlie Hough pitched a three-hitter and Steve Buechele and Ruben Sierra homered as the Texas Rangers set a club record 10th consecutive home victory.

Two of the hits off Hough, 6-3, were solo home runs by Jose Canseco, his 18th, and Bruce Bochte, his fifth. The loser was Rick Langford, 1-7, as Oakland suffered its 13th straight loss on the road.

Canseco's home run leading off the second inning gave Oakland a 1-0 lead. The Rangers scored twice in their half of the second on consecutive-pitch home runs by Sierra, his fourth, and Buechele, whose 10 homers have all come with the bases empty.

The complete game was the third of the season for Hough, who pitched 8 1-3 hitless innings against California in his previous outing only to suffer a 2-1 one-hit setback. He walked two and struck out nine.

Angels 4, Royals 3

KANSAS CITY — Brian Downing and George Hendrick drove in two runs apiece as California won its fifth consecutive victory.

Kirk McCaskill, 7-4, scattered 12 hits through 6 1-3 innings as the Royals suffered their sixth loss in 10 games. Doug Corbett closed out the seventh and Terry Forster pitched the last two innings for his fourth save as California remained one game behind Texas in the American League West. The world champion Royals dropped four games back.

With the score tied 3-3 in the fourth inning, Gary Pettis doubled and scored on one of Downing's three singles to give the Angels the lead. Pettis also had a triple and a single.

Tigers 4, Brewers 3

MILWAUKEE — Lou Whitaker's ninth-inning sacrifice fly drove in the winning run after three walks had loaded the bases and the Detroit Tigers defeated Milwaukee.

After one out in the ninth, reliever Mark Clear, 2-3, walked pinch-hitters Johnny Grubb and Darrell Evans. Dan Plesac relieved Clear and walked Dave Collins. Pinch-runner Pat Sheridan scored on Whitaker's fly.

Yankees 4, Blue Jays 2

TORONTO — Ken Griffey singled home the tiebreaking run in the 10th inning and Mike Easler added a two-run double to lead the New York Yankees over Toronto.

The Blue Jays had tied the game 1-1 on Willie Upshaw's RBI single in the ninth off Dave Righetti. On Friday night, Righetti failed to protect a six-run lead in the ninth against Toronto in a game New York eventually won 10-8 in 10 innings.

Indians 7, Twins 5

MINNEAPOLIS — Tony Bernazard and Brett Butler drove in three runs apiece and broke open a close game in the sixth inning with two-run hits off former Cleveland teammate Neal Heaton.

Little League, MUGS open week-long stand Monday

From Staff Reports

The 1986 Joe Mowles Memorial American Little League baseball tournament begins Monday at the North Central Little League fields across the street from Midland Lee High School as will the city championship in four divisions of the Midland United Girls Softball Association at Ulmer Park.

The tournament features the champions of the five Midland leagues and the city champion will emerge from this tournament. Eastern will play the role of defending champions.

The double elimination tournament begins Monday with Western facing Eastern and Mid City taking on Tower. Host North Central draws the first round bye.

All tournament games begin at 6 p.m. each day through Friday when a champion could be named. If the team that comes through the winner's bracket loses on Friday, an "if needed" game will be held at 10 a.m. Saturday to decide the championship.

Monday's game between Western and Eastern is a big contest Monday since the winner will draw a bye Tuesday in the winner's bracket. The winner of Monday's Mid-City-Tower contest will face North Central on Tuesday. Losers fall into the tough loser's bracket, knowing that any loss means elimination.

In other city tournament action, the Midland United Girls Softball Association begins its run toward naming city champions in four divisions at the MUGS field located in Ulmer Park.

That tournament is also a double elimination affair that will conclude Saturday. The MUGS tournament was to begin Saturday with Division I play, but rain forced postponement of that tournament until Monday. All of those games have a 6:30 p.m. starting time until Saturday's finals when play will begin in the morning.

Rain gives Angels, Diablos day off

From Staff Reports

The Midland Angels and El Paso Diablos had their Texas League encounter rained out Saturday night, so the two teams will try again at 6 p.m. tonight with Game 3 of the series that is opening the second half race.

Saturday's rainout will be made up as part of a doubleheader on Wednesday, Aug. 13, when El Paso comes back to Midland.

In some ways, the rainout was good news for the Angels, who are playing a bit shorthanded these days.

Third baseman Billie Merrifield and outfielder Glen Walker got the call from AAA Edmonton and those two played their last game for Midland Friday night.

Midland second baseman Mark McLemore got the Edmonton call last Sunday and none of those players had been replaced as of Saturday.

Outfielder Al Romero, who is coming to Midland from Edmonton, is scheduled to play against the Diablos tonight and will fill one hole. Edmonton third baseman Pat Keedy is scheduled to report to the Angels Monday.

That will still leave the Midland squad a player short at second base, but Bill Davidson, Angel general manager, said that a second baseman will come to Midland from the California minor league system, but didn't know when that decision would be made.

SOCCER—

The results meant three of the four finalists will be European teams. No European team has won the World Cup when it has been played in the Western Hemisphere.

On Sunday, Argentina plays England at Aztec Stadium here, and Belgium takes on Spain in Puebla.

For France, the European champion, the win over Brazil was an especially significant victory.

"This is formidable moment for French soccer," Coach Henri Michel said. "The value of our soccer has been proved as we have reached our second successive World Cup semifinal.

"Brazil is a super team and to beat it here is a five-star performance. It is a super achievement.

"We had a lot of difficulty at the beginning. Our teamwork was off and Brazil was brilliant. It was a great achievement to come back from a goal down."

Both France and Brazil claimed before the game that these were the two best teams in the field, and they played a game worthy of any World Cup final.

All of the players on both sides were at their best, but the hero's role fell squarely on Fernandez and goalie Joel Bats. Fernandez put his penalty kick high into the goal and the French fans at Jalisco Stadium in Guadalajara went wild. His teammates mobbed him, then turned their attention to the acrobatic Bats.

Bats stopped a penalty kick by Zico in the second half, made a dozen superb saves throughout the game, then blocked Socrates' shot to open the shootout.

"I believe France is one of the new forces in world soccer. It is playing beautiful soccer," Zico said. "In those penalties, somebody had to be crucified. It was a brilliant game, with both teams trying to win, and unhappily, one of the two had to be eliminated."

After Bats foiled Socrates, Yannick Stopyra scored down the middle as Carlos dived left on France's first penalty kick. Brazil's Alemao, Zico and Branco all scored, while Manuel Amoros and Bruno Bellone connected for France. Bellone's shot hit the goal post, ricocheted off Carlos and bounded into the net.

Michel Platini, France's star midfielder celebrating his 31st birthday, was the fourth kicker and he badly missed his shot over the net. That gave Brazil an opening, but Julio Cesar hit the left post.

America's Cup deserves a captain's captain

A man about to embark on a perilous international mission for his country should look the part.

Especially if he's a sea captain. There's an old joke about the guy who came home decked out in Corinthian garb to announce to his mother that he was now the owner of a motorboat and a captain. She said: "To you, you're a captain; to me, you're a captain; but to a captain, are you a captain?"

I don't know about you, but to me, a man who challenges the sea for God and country should look like a captain to a captain. Like, he should have one eye and a patch for the other, and one leg and a stump for the other, a parrot on the shoulder and a sword in his belt.

He should look like a guy whose nickname would be Capt. Blood, or Blackbeard, and he should be bellowing curses at his crew of cutthroats as he sails his hell ship on the barbarous Spanish main shouting things like:

"Get a man aloft in the top gallants, ye yellow-livered scum. And get a glass on that sail on the horizon. See if she be a man o' war or a French prize full of gold and perfume. Break out the six-pounder and send a shot across her bow, or I'll have every man jack of you swinging from the highest yardarm of the Queen's navy!"

SOMEHOW, Roderick Hopkins Davis doesn't fit this purple image. He has all his eyes and legs and he doesn't have any wildlife perched on his shoulder. In his white ducks, canvas shoes, zippered jacket and baseball cap, he doesn't at all bring to mind Sir Francis Drake or Lord Nelson, or even Bull Halsey or John Paul Jones. He doesn't look as if he's about to flog anyone, or storm a galleon for plunder or Maureen O'Hara.

And yet, Skipper Davis is, in a sense, a first lord of our admiralty about to embark on a high-seas adventure as important in its way as any of Sir Walter Raleigh's.

In terms of money spent, the America's Cup is a naval engagement fully of the magnitude of the Battle of Trafalgar — or the discovery of America. It cost Drake less to turn back the Spanish Armada than it will cost Davis to win back a battered old silver mug good only for pouring tea.

It is not likely that Columbus' caravel cost what any one of the 60-foot boats racing off the coast of Perth this fall will cost.

Supremacy on the high seas used to depend on the number and muzzle velocity of shipboard cannon and the men who fired them. Now it comes down to a 24-mile course in an unarmed boat little bigger than a canoe and manned by 11 men, none of whom have earrings in their ears, scars on their cheeks, rags wound round their heads or knives in their teeth.

THEY ARE not the refuse of British gaols, they are stockbrokers, lawyers and real estate salesmen. They don't carry cutlasses, they carry American Express cards.

Rod Davis is the skipper of this not-so-motley crew that a Long John Silver would reject out of hand but who may be America's best hope to regain rule of the sea, which we lost suddenly and shockingly to a bunch of audacious Aussies in our home waters three years ago.

Britannia no longer rules the waves, and neither do we. No matter how many nuclear subs we have, we were bested on all points of sailing and seamanship by an upstart ship's company from Down Under in 1983, and to restore our pride in our seamanship is going to cost money in amounts Lord Nelson never dreamed of.

Columbus was after the gold and jewels and a route to the Orient. Capt. Bligh was after breadfruit, and Drake was after empire. But Skipper Davis is asked to recapture national esteem.

His flagship, Eagle, is one of a half-dozen 12-meter yachts vying for the honor of representing the United States in the ambitious effort to reclaim the "auld mug" in the winds off Fremantle next January.

IT WILL cost $8.5 million to outfit and ready Eagle for the Cup challenge – sails alone cost $750,000 – and the syndicate has already raised $5 million. Eagle, a sleek 12-meter racer with a huge, flag-bedecked American eagle painted along its hull, can be seen plying the waters off Long Beach these days, its crew endlessly hoisting spinnaker or tacking to weather in the constant search for the perfect sail or rig to make it the fastest thing in the sea without fins.

Skipper Davis is a sailmaker by trade and if he doesn't look like a latter-day Bligh, he does have his crew in a weight room near the marina at the crack of dawn each day, trying to get as fit as his boat.

The boat, a computer-studded, mast-shrouded hunk of aluminum that barely has room for her 11-man crew, is constructed for one purpose: to go fast, turn quickly and win in short bursts. The ancient Phoenicians probably had more boat under them than these modern ocean racers.

They would probably be landlocked flower pots were it not for the America's Cup frenzy, but the stakes are actually higher than just the silver mug.

When the Aussies wrested the Cup from the 132-year clutch of the New York Yacht Club, they put the old pitcher back in circulation, and they did ocean racing everywhere a favor.

SO LONG as the NYYC kept the Cup, its defense was locked into the choppy seas off Rhode Island. Even if, as happened, a West Coast boat or crew successfully defended it, it remained where it had been since we won it from England in 1851.

Now, the defense goes where the Cup goes. This year, Perth. Next time, to the home port of the winner there.

Davis, crew and syndicate hope it will be the Eagle's nest, Newport Beach, on the West Coast.

The Cup challenge has been estimated to be worth hundreds of millions to Australia in the projected hotel and tourist boom around Perth. The projection is, it could be worth even more to an American victor.

There's buried treasure for this crew, too. And of the half-dozen American syndicates, plus the French, Italian and English hunting for it, none is considered more formidable than the screaming Eagle and its Captain Davis, holder of the Olympic gold medal in the Soling class and America's seaman first class.

But he'll have to get a powdered wig, a three-cornered hat and buckle shoes if he wants to take his place in history alongside the earlier illustrious heroes of naval warfare.

John Paul Jones would begin to fight, arrayed alongside a captain in a frayed polo shirt with his shoes untied. Captain Bligh would clap him in irons, and Errol Flynn would decline the part.

Spartan whiz tops 'Americanized' draft

MONTREAL (AP) - Starting with Michigan State whiz kid Joe Murphy, the accent was on youth and offense in the National Hockey League entry draft Saturday.

Murphy, the No. 1 overall selection by the Detroit Red Wings, led a parade of centers and wings that dominated the first round and the early part of the second.

In all, seven centers and 10 wings were among the selections by the 21 teams in the first round. Thirteen 18-year-olds were among the first-round picks that included a record seven American-born players, including No. 2 pick Jimmy Carson from the Detroit area by the Los Angeles Kings.

Murphy, Carson and Neil Brady, who played for Medicine Hat in the Western Hockey League and was selected No. 3 by New Jersey, all play center. Carson spent the last two seasons with Verdun of the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League.

It was a slow day for goaltenders. None were drafted until Shawn Simpson was picked by Washington late in the third round, the 60th choice overall. Simpson played for Sault Ste. Marie in the Ontario Hockey League this past season.

Teppo Numminen, a defenseman from Tappara, Finland, was the first European selected when he was chosen by Winnipeg in the second round, the 29th pick overall.

MURPHY, WHO helped the Spartans win this year's NCAA championship, was the first college player ever selected No. 1 overall in the NHL draft, which dates back to 1963.

While 12 defensemen were taken in the second round, five of the first seven were either centers or wings.

Of the 252 players picked in Saturday's draft, 147 were centers and wings and 87 defensemen. In addition, 18 goaltenders were taken.

A record 64 players from the United States were drafted, four more than the previous high, set last year.

Murphy, who still has three years of eligibility left at Michigan State and a chance to play Olympic hockey as well, said he wasn't sure whether he would turn pro right away.

"I'm going to sit down after the draft and talk to them (the Red Wings)," Murphy said. "I have several options, but right now I'm with Detroit.

"Detroit's a great hockey team and Michigan is a great hockey state. We have a great, new coach (in Jacques Demers) and that's good for the organization. Things will be on the upswing in Detroit."

THE RED Wings had the No. 1 pick in the draft as the result of the worst record in the NHL this past season during which they won only 17 games.

Asked about being the No. 1 overall pick, Murphy reflected: "I'm just happy being drafted."

Unlike Murphy, Carson seemed intent on making the pros right away.

"I think I have a very good chance to make the club," Carson said of the Kings. "They need help at center. It's up to me to come to camp in good shape and prove that I can make it."

General Manager Emile Francis of the Hartford Whalers liked Carson, but he also liked the rest of the players that were taken among the high draft picks.

"There's a lot of size and speed in there," Francis said. "There's not much to choose from between any of them."

Max McNab, the New Jersey general manager, was "delighted" to get Brady.

"He was the best center in Canada skating without the puck," McNab said.

Brady said he was happy that New Jersey drafted him "because I'll probably have a quicker shot (at playing) than if Edmonton drafted me. Actually, I was surprised to go that high. It was kind of a shock. I had come here expecting to be drafted, but not No. 3."

Asked to describe his style, Brady said: "I'm kind of hard-nosed. I like to work in the corners. Mucking is my game."

Aggressive style pays birdies

Sutton charges way to two-shot advantage

Atlanta Classic

ATLANTA (AP) — Hal Sutton, vowing to play with an aggressive style in the final round, moved into a two-shot lead in the $500,000 Georgia-Pacific Atlanta Golf Classic Saturday with a 5-under-par 67.

"I'm going to be thinking birdie from the time I tee off tomorrow," Sutton said after posting his 15-under-par 201 total to wrest the lead from second round leader Doug Tewell, who fell into a tie for second with Scott Hoch.

"I'm trying to think aggressively," Sutton said. "I think that's the way winners think. If I play conservative, I'll get beat."

Sutton, the 1983 PGA champion, has won two tournaments this year and four in the last 12 months. He had shared the first round lead on the hilly, 7,007-yard, par-72 Atlanta Country Club course.

Tewell, the second-round leader who was two shots ahead of Sutton at the start of the round, never got anything going, settling for a 1-under-par 71.

Hoch birdied the final hole after the live television coverage had ended for the day and moved into a second-place tie with Tewell at 203. Hoch shot 70 on Saturday.

SUTTON, RECOGNIZED as one of the game's top young players after only 4½ years on the PGA Tour, was in position to build a bigger lead before he three-putted for a bogey on the 14th and then failed to get down from a trap on the par-3 16th, where he took his third bogey of the day.

Playing in the final threesome with Tewell and Hoch, Sutton also birdied the finishing hole.

Sutton, who said he should have had a 64, birdied three times from the 6-12-foot range on the front side before three-putting from 50 feet for his first bogey on No. 9.

He birdied the 10th from 25 feet and chipped from just off the green to a foot to get another birdie on 11.

Sutton's other birdies came from 14 feet on the 13th, 20 feet on the 15th and a two-putt birdie from 40 feet on the final hole.

"I have been playing well," Sutton said. "It's very fun to play this way."

"Hal can play good tomorrow and still lose, but that's very unlikely," Hoch said. "We're going to have to play awfully well tomorrow to catch him."

TOM PURTZEWR made one of the strongest moves of the day, firing a 66 that left him two shots off the lead at 204 and tied with Mark O'Meara, 70.

"They shoot so many birdies here you're never out of it, but you also are never safe," Purtzer said.

O'Meara shared the lead earlier in the round, before putting the ball in a creek on the 15th that cost him a double bogey 6. He also bogeyed the 17th, but birdied the 18th for a round of 70.

Ballesteros well on his way to defending Irish Open title

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) - Defending champion Severiano Ballesteros of Spain mastered the windy weather Saturday and took a five-stroke lead after three rounds of the Irish Open Golf championship.

The Spaniard fashioned the only sub-70 score in two days, an 68 for a 5-under-par 211 that kept him right on course for his third Irish title in four years.

Both his earlier victories were gained on the Royal Dublin links. A victory at Portmarnock, one of the toughest courses in Europe, would give him added satisfaction.

Australian Wayne Riley is second at 216 after a 71 Saturday. South African Mark McNulty, Briton Robert Lee and Roger Davis of Australia are tied for third at 218. McNulty and Davis had 71s Saturday and Lee had a 73.

Ballesteros said, "If it stays windy, 72 will be good enough. But five shots is not all that much on this course, because it can get up and really bite you."

He added, "I played the course just right this time, apart from one little mistake on 14. My caddie said the wedge was not enough. I tried to force the ball and pulled it. That cost me a bogey. I think the club was plenty."

Ballesteros also bogeyed the 17th, after driving into the rough, but shot six birdies in the round, the last in grandstand fashion on the 18th when he holed from seven feet.

Riley also birdied that hole, to take over second place, while McNulty made a bogey on the hole, after getting a flier out of the rough. He still came home in 34 and said, "I really got it going on the back nine."

Lee posed a big threat when he eagled the 13th but the 15th and 16th holes both cost him shots.

Ballesteros was critical, earlier this week, of the inclusion of U.S. PGA Tour Commissioner Dean Beman in the field. But the American, although refusing to comment on the issue, did say, after his 77-230, "I am a professional golfer."

Skinner, Dickinson tied at five-under

PITTSFORD, N.Y. (AP) — Val Skinner and Judy Dickinson moved into the lead after three rounds of the $255,000 Rochester International ladies golf tournament Saturday at 5-under-par 211, one shot ahead of Jan Stephenson.

Skinner, who started the day at 1-over-par, birdied the last two holes and ended with a 66 to go with a 71 on Thursday and a 74 Friday. Dickinson, the wife of veteran golfer Gardiner Dickinson, shot a 68, as did Stephenson.

The fifth-leading money winner on the tour, Skinner said she was tired of thinking about her golf swing and "instead of worrying about hitting a pretty shot, I just tried to be effective."

She said this was the first round in about four weeks that her concentration was good.

"I'm still kind of struggling with my swing — that probably sounds kind of silly," she said.

Hollis Stacy, who led the tournament with Patti Rizzo after two rounds, shot a 1-under-par 71 Saturday for a three-day total of 213, two shots behind the leaders.

Rizzo shot a 77 Saturday to fall back in the pack at 219.

Defending champion Pat Bradley, the leading money winner on the LPGA tour, and Jane Blalock were three shots behind at 2-under-par 214.

The final round of the tournament on the 6,162-yard, par-72 Locust Hill Country Club course will be played Sunday.

Dickinson said a 20-foot birdie putt on the 149-yard, par-3 9th hole turned her round around. She went on to post four more birdies on the back nine.

"You could tell the scores would be low," she said. "I figured I better do something."

Stephenson, who started the day at even-par, had six birdies on the first 12 holes and moved to 6 under par, two shots ahead, before consecutive bogeys on the par-4, 376-yard 13th and the par-4, 381-yard 14th dropped her out of the lead.

"No way I would have bogeyed 14 if I didn't bogey 13," she said. "I thought, 'Oh God, now here it goes again.'"

Stacy started her second-straight round with a bogey on the first hole, before rallying with three birdies to remain in contention.

First-round leader Laurie Rinker was four shots behind at 215, as were Marta Figueras-Dotti and Alice Ritzman, who shot a course record 64.

Ritzman, who started the day at 7 over par, said she was joking with her caddy about shooting a 69.

"And he said, 'Why stop there, how about anything with a six in front of it,'" she said.

Like fine wine, Rodriguez getting better with time

CLEVELAND (AP) — Chi Chi Rodriguez said he is playing better now than he ever has in his professional golf career.

"The older I get, the better I used to be," joked Rodriguez after shooting a 5-under-par 67 Saturday for a three-stroke lead heading into the final round of the Senior Tournament Players Championship.

Rodriguez stands at 8-under-par 136 through 36 holes in the rain-shortened tournament, a record for the three years of the TPC.

"I haven't hit the ball like that since '64," said Rodriguez after his second consecutive round without a bogey at Canterbury Golf Club. "I think I'm a better player now than I ever have been in my whole life."

Rodriguez's scoring left the rest of the pack trying to catch him. But Rodriguez's closest pursuer vowed he was conceding nothing.

"Chi Chi is catchable. There's a two-shot swing on every hole out there," said Gay Brewer, in second at 139 after a 71 Saturday, three shots back. "Chi Chi will have a battle on his hands tomorrow."

Brewer followed his opening-round 68 with a 71.

Peter Thomson, Lee Elder and Don January are all at 4-under 140. January got back into contention with a 5-under-par 67 after a first-round 73.

Bruce Crampton is next at 141.

At 142 are Bob Brue, Dale Douglass, Howie Johnson, Charles Owens, Cleveland native Charles Sifford, Bob Toski and Gary Player, who had a 74 after entering the day tied for the lead with Brewer.

Two-time defending TPC champion Arnold Palmer finished at 1-under 71 for a 36-hole total of 143, seven shots back.

Rodriguez, in his first full year on the Seniors Tour, is seeking his initial victory on the over-50 circuit. The 50-year-old native of Puerto Rico has eight PGA tour titles to his credit.

He currently ranks fifth on the Senior Tour money-earnings list with $123,563, having finished in the top 10 in all 10 events he has entered this year.

The $300,000 tournament concludes with 18 holes Sunday over Canterbury's 6,615-yard layout.

Breland, the 1984 Olympic gold medalist, upped his record as a pro to 13-0 with eight knockouts, including four in a row. The 22-year-old New York City fighter swept the first five rounds on all scorecards with an assortment of solid jabs and chopping right hands that wobbled Munduga throughout.

Munduga enered the fight at the Sands Hotel and Casino as the sixth-rated junior middleweight and ninth-ranked welterweight in the WBA. But Breland outpunched Munduga — a reputed slugger who entered at 25-0 with 18 KOs — early in the fight.

"His plan was to come forward, hit, and get hit," Breland said. "I knew he was a good puncher, but I punch pretty good too. His game plan was taken away and you can't adjust in the ring unless you are real smart."

Munduga, of Tampa, Fla., launched his best offensive in the sixth, bulliing Breland back and delivering body shots, but he walked into an uppercut, a left hook and a right-left combination.

With Munduga staggering, Breland took a step back and delivered the fight-ending right to the head.

Referee Paul Venti stopped the count moments after Munduga hit the floor.

Giants' Davis drives in both runs to nip Astros, 2-1

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Chili Davis singled home a run in the first and doubled home another in the fourth Saturday, raising his National League-leading RBI total to 50 and powering the San Francisco Giants to a 2-1 victory over the Houston Astros.

Davis has 35 RBI in his last 35 games.

San Francisco starter Scott Garrelts, 6-6, came back from a physical collapse of five days earlier and limited the Astros to seven hits over 7⅓ innings.

Garrelts struck out five batters and walked two. His scoreless inning streak ended at 18 in the eighth, when Houston pinch-hitter Jim Pankovits homered.

Last Monday night at San Diego, Garrelts went five shutout innings before leaving because of hyperventilation, which drained his strength.

Chuck Hensley and Juan Berenguer finished. Berenguer retired five batters, allowing only a walk, for his third save of the season, all in the last four days. Berenguer has given up just one run in 25 relief innings this season.

The Astros protested the game, saying Giants coaches made two trips to the mound with Glenn Davis at bat in the eighth inning. Rules allow two trips per pitcher, but only one trip per batter.

San Francisco moved to within a half-game of Houston for the lead in the National League West.

National League

Cubs 8, Mets 6

NEW YORK — Keith Moreland led off the ninth with a home run and Chris Speier's RBI grounder capped a two-run inning that gave the Chicago Cubs a victory.

The homer was Moreland's third hit of the game and his seventh homer of the year. It came off Jesse Orosco, 3-3, the Mets' third pitcher.

After Moreland's homer, Jody Davis and Leon Durham singled, then Jerry Mumphrey walked. Speier's grounder scored pinch-runner Dave Martinez.

Davey Lopes and Ryne Sandberg also homered for Chicago. Lopes was 3-for-4, including his fourth homer and a triple. Sandberg hit his eighth homer.

Reliever Ray Fontenot, 3-2, pitched two scoreless innings. Lee Smith pitched the ninth for his 10th save.

Lopes opened the game with a single, stole second and scored on Shawon Dunston's double. Dunston scored an out later on Moreland's single and Durham gave the Cubs a 3-0 lead with a two-out triple.

New York answered back with two runs in the bottom of the first. Wally Backman singled and stole second. After Keith Hernandez walked, Darryl Strawberry doubled, scoring Backman and sending Hernandez to third. Gary Carter's sacrifice fly scored Hernandez.

Pirates 14, Expos 1

MONTREAL — Sid Bream had three hits, including a two-run homer, and Bill Almon and Johnny Ray each drove in three runs as the Pittsburgh Pirates rapped out 17 hits.

Rick Rhoden, 7-4, allowed just three hits as he pitched his third complete game of the year, walking none and striking out 10. Rhoden helped himself with a pair of singles, including a third-inning single that accounted for the game-winning RBI.

Rhoden lost his shutout bid when Montreal scored an unearned run in seventh. Second baseman Vance Law, who pitched the last two innings for Montreal and allowed one run, doubled, went to third on center fielder Barry Bonds' error and scored on George Wright's sacrifice fly.

Pittsbugh took a 4-0 lead in the third inning. Loser Jay Tibbs, 4-3, struck out Almon, who reached first when the third strike was a wild pitch. Singles by Rafael Belliard and Rhoden made it 1-0, Joe Orsulak singled a run across and Ray capped the uprising with a two-run double.

Bream's 10th homer triggered a six-run fifth as Pittsburgh sent 12 batters to the plate against Dennis Martinez, who made his first appearance for Montreal since he was acquired from Baltimore last Monday. Almon and Belliard had run-scoring singles, Ray hit a sacrifice fly and Bonds walked with the bases loaded.

Pittsburgh made it 13-0 in the sixth when Bream singled, Mazzilli walked and Almon scored them with a double, continuing home when right fielder Mitch Webster bobbled the ball in the corner.

The setback cost the Expos a chance to gain ground on the first-place New York Mets in the National League East and kept them 10 games behind.

Braves 7, Reds 6

CINCINNATI — Ozzie Virgil's tie-breaking bases-loaded single in the eighth inning keyed a four-run uprising and the Atlanta Braves snapped a four-game losing streak.

With the score tied 3-3, Cincinnati starter Chris Welsh, 2-2, began the eighth by walking Billy Sample. Following a sacrifice and an intentional walk to Dale Murphy, Power came on and walked Bob Horner to load the bases.

Virgil's single up the middle, his third hit of the game, broke the tie. Chris Chambliss' pinch-hit single drove in a run and Glenn Hubbard's sacrifice fly accounted for what proved to be the winning run.

Rick Mahler, 8-5, raised his lifetime record against Cincinnati to 8-1 but needed help from two relievers when the Reds scored three times in the bottom of the eighth.

Dave Concepcion doubled and scored on Ron Oester's one-out single. Max Venable's single chased Mahler and pinch hitter Tracy Jones greeted Paul Assenmacher with an RBI single. Gene Garber took over and the third run of the inning scored on pinch hitter Tony Perez's grounder.

After walking Dave Parker intentionally, Garber struck out pinch hitter Kurt Stillwell and went on to record his sixth save.

Horne's second-inning homer, his 13th, gave the Braves a 1-0 lead. The Reds scored twice in the third when Eddie Milner singled, stole second and scored on Parker's double, with Parker scoring when Eric Davis' liner went through second baseman Glenn Hubbard's legs for an error.

Ken Oberkfell led off the Braves' fifth with his fifth homer to tie the score 2-2. Parker's sacrifice fly in the bottom of the fifth gave the Reds a 3-2 lead after singles by Milner and Pete Rose.

Atlanta tied it 3-3 in the sixth when Dale Murphy singled, stole second and scored when second baseman Oester committed a throwing error on Virgil's infield single.

Cardinals 8, Phillies 6

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Heath, who entered the game batting only .179 and without an RBI this month, drove in four runs, including a tie-breaking two-run, two-out double in the top of the ninth.

Tom Herr opened the ninth with a single off loser Don Carman, 3-1. After Jack Clark grounded into a forceout, Willie McGee singled Clark to second. Carman struck out pinch hitter Jose Oquendo but Heath, who had a two-run single in the fifth inning, then lined his game-winning hit down the left-field line.

Winner Todd Worrell, 4-7, allowed one hit in 1⅓ innings, struck out four and walked one. Ken Dayley pitched the ninth for his third save.

The Phillies took a 1-0 lead against Danny Cox in the first inning when Juan Samuel singled to deep short, continued to second on Ozzie Smith's throwing error and scored on a single by Ron Roenicke.

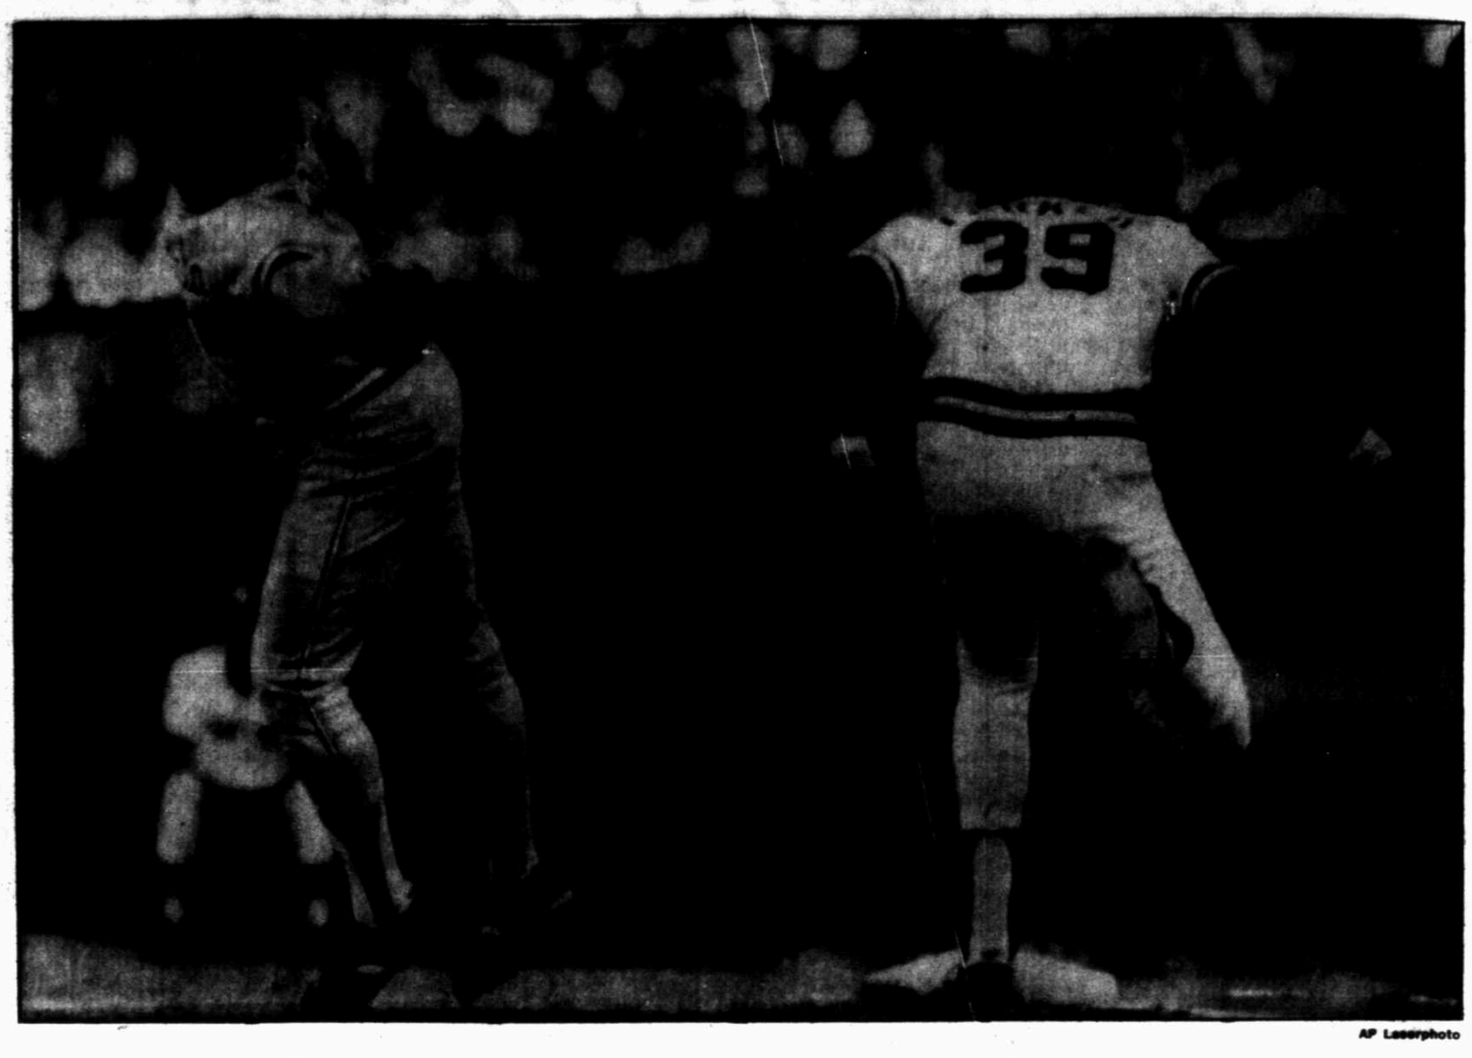

They made it 4-0 in the second. Darren Daulton walked, went to second on Steve Jeltz's single and scored on pitcher Steve Carlton's double. Jeff Stone singled home two more runs.

But Carlton was unable to hold the lead. In the St. Louis third, he walked the bases loaded with one out. One run scored on McGee's sacrifice fly and Tito Landrum's RBI single cut the Phillies' lead to 4-2.

The Cardinals scored four runs in the fifth for a 6-4 lead. Singles by Smith and Tommy Herr and a walk to Landrum loaded the bases with two out. Heath singled home two runs to tie the score and two more scored on Tom Lawless' double.

The Phillies tied it 6-6 in the bottom of the fifth. Mike Schmidt stretched his hitting streak to 10 games with an RBI single and the tying run scored as Von Hayes grounded into a double play.

Carlton gave up six runs on six hits in five innings. He also struck out six and walked six. In his last five starts, the 300-game winner has allowed 25 earned runs and 37 hits in 20⅓ innings while walking 16 and striking out 16.

Fregosi leaves minors, heading for Chicago?

CHICAGO (AP) — Jim Fregosi, after publicly saying farewell to fans at a minor-league game in Louisville, Ky., Saturday night, was expected to be named manager of the Chicago White Sox Sunday.

The White Sox, who have played two games under interim manager Doug Rader since Manager Tony LaRussa was fired Friday, called a press conference for 11:30 a.m. EDT Sunday. However, General Manager Ken Harrelson would not confirm Saturday that Fregosi, manager of the Louisville Redbirds, would be the new White Sox manager.

But on Saturday night, during Louisville's game with Buffalo, Redbirds' public address announcer Larry Colton read a statement from team owner A. Ray Smith after the second inning congratulating Fregosi on being named manager of the White Sox. Fregosi received an ovation and told the crowd, "This has been a great four years. This is my home city, and I'll miss all of you."

Sunday editions of the Louisville Courier-Journal reported that Fregosi would be in the dugout for Chicago's afternoon game against Seattle on Sunday. Fregosi cleaned out his locker after the game Saturday, the newspaper said.

At the time of LaRussa's firing, Harrelson said he had two people in mind as the new manager, but would not reveal their names.

However, the Associated Press learned that Fregosi was the only man being considered and that if Harrelson could not reach an agreement, he would be willing to conclude the season with Rader as the interim manager.

"I can live with the Rooster," Harrelson said of Rader, who previously managed the Texas Rangers from 1963 until he was fired in May 1965.

Before the Buffalo-Louisville game, Fregosi would not confirm or deny he would be the new Chicago manager.

"I've talked to the White Sox and really at this time we have not reached an agreement," Fregosi said prior to Saturday night's game against Buffalo at Louisville. "I am interested in the job, I talked to Kenny and we're just going to see what happens, we should know something by tomorrow (Sunday).

"We're going to sit down and talk. Right now it's a tough thing. We have a ballgame to play," Fregosi said. "Right now I'd like to concentrate on this one game and see what happens from there."

Fregosi is the man Harrelson wants. Last month, when Harrelson came close to firing LaRussa, he had talked to both Fregosi and Billy Martin, former New York Yankee manager, about the job. Martin, reportedly, priced himself out of the running.

Fregosi, a former All-Star shortstop with the California Angels, managed the Angels from 1978-1981 and won the American League West title in 1979.

He has been at Louisville since 1983 and has won two American Association titles.

Harrelson has said all along, "Jim is a good manager, he is one of the diamonds in the rough in the big leagues."

Fregosi, 44, reportedly wants a multiyear contract while Harrelson believes in one-year contracts.

Prior to Saturday's game, Jerry Reinsdorf, co-owner and chairman of the board of the White Sox, said, "If Hawk wants to hire Fregosi he can go right ahead. We don't even need an interview with Fregosi. Such a move would not be irrational."

It was believed that when Harrelson came out of the broadcasting booth to take the White Sox job, Reinsdorf had insisted that LaRussa remain as the manager.

"I did not," Reinsdorf said. "It was Hawk's decision but I was happy with it. I was also happy when Hawk changed his mind and kept LaRussa last month.

LaRussa says goodbye with pride, dignity

CHICAGO (AP) — Tony LaRussa bid farewell Saturday with the same pride and dignity he displayed in managing the Chicago White Sox for more than seven years.

LaRussa was fired Friday by Ken "Hawk" Harrelson, director of baseball operations, who named coach Doug Rader as interim manager.

Jim Fregosi, former California Angels' manager who is now managing Louisville in the minor leagues, is Harrelson's choice for the job if an agreement can be reached. If not, Rader could manage through the rest of the season.

LaRussa, who was given his first and only managerial job in the major leagues by the late Bill Veeck in 1979, held an emotional news conference Saturday.

"I've never done this before, so I don't know how to go about it," said LaRussa.

LaRussa explained that there were some things that bothered him and other things that he understood concerning his dismissal.

"It bothers me when someone says you have failed," said LaRussa. "It bothers me that there will be people in uniform out there today who I will not be working with.

"But, I understand. You live and die with wins and losses. No time this year were the wins and losses acceptable. I could have been fired at any time. I was vulnerable."

LaRussa said he also understood that an organization had to work together to be successful.

"There has been a problem, a situation where you didn't have teamwork, confidence and trust," said LaRussa. "It was not a good situation and the organization suffered as a result."

Despite losing his job after managing the White Sox to a divisional title in 1983 and an overall record of 523-510 including a 26-38 mark this season, LaRussa said, "I have no regrets. I'm very lucky. I've been here a long time.

Is Dr. K human after all?

NEW YORK (AP) — What's wrong with Dwight Gooden?

The New York Mets' extraordinary Dr. K was beaten up by the Montreal Expos in a 7-4 loss Wednesday night, continuing a month-long stretch in which the Cy Young Award winner has been a rather ordinary pitcher.

Since winning five of his first six starts, capped by a complete game two-hitter against Houston on May 6, Gooden has been a distinctly ordinary 3-3 with two no-decisions. After the shutout against the Astros, Gooden's earned run average was a microscopic 1.04. Since then, it has been an inflated 3.99.

The problem seems centered on his control. In each of his last two starts, he has issued a bases-loaded walk, forcing in a run. Against the Expos, he walked six batters in 6 1-3 innings, his highest total since he walked seven in a start against the Chicago Cubs July 27, 1984, when he was a rookie.

The six walks against the Expos continued a troubling upward spiral for Gooden. He had walked five in his last start against Pittsburgh and four in the start before that, also against the Pirates.

In his first eight starts covering 65 innings, Gooden had walked only 10 batters. In the last six starts covering 43 1-3, he has walked 22. Last year, when he went 24-4, he walked 69 batters in 276 2-3 innings. This year, in 108 1-3 innings, he has walked 32.

Montreal's victory was constructed around two home runs by Tim Wallach, the first batter ever to hit two in one game against Gooden. Until Wednesday night, Wallach was a career 1-for-19 with 11 strikeouts against the Met ace.

"He was just a little wilder than I had ever seen him," Wallach said. "He was getting behind more hitters than in the past. It seemed like in the past, I was always hitting 0-2, 1-2 against him.

"The velocity's still there. He was throwing hard. When he's at his worst, he's still one of the best. When he's at his best, you're not going to beat him. You're lucky to score a run off him."

Gooden, who earned the Dr. K nickname whe he struck out 544 batters in his first two seasons, has not been concentrating on that phase of his game this year. In 14 starts, he has twice fanned 10 batters and once struck out 13. The 13-strikeout game came against the Pirates two starts ago, the same game in which he walked five, including four in one inning to force home a run.

So what's the problem, doc?

"I think I was just feeling too fine out there," Gooden said after the Montreal loss. "I was overthrowing a bit. I had trouble with my breaking ball and I think they were sitting on my fastball."

1925 — The Pittsburgh Pirates beat the St. Louis Cards 24-6 with Kiki Cuyler and Pie Traynor each hitting grand slam homers and Max Carey collecting two hits in both the first and eighth innings.

1947 — Ewell Blackwell of Cincinnati almost duplicated Johnny Vander Meer's feat of consecutive no-hit games by following his June 18 gem over Boston with 8 1-3 hitless innings against the Dodgers before Brooklyn broke up the no-hitter in the ninth.

1962 — Boog Powell of the Baltimore Orioles became the first batter to hit a home run over the centerfield hedge at Memorial Stadium. The 460-foot shot came off Don Schwall of the Boston Red Sox.

A&M's Heard stops Lewis from taking second triple

USA Track

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Texas A&M freshman Floyd Heard ruined Carl Lewis' bid for his second "triple" in the USA-Mobil Outdoor Track and Field Championships Saturday, winning the 200-meter dash, while Charlie Simpkins took the triple jump with the second-best leap in history.

Heard, the NCAA champion, got out of the blocks swiftly, while Lewis, winner of the 100-meter dash and long jump Friday, never seriously threatened and wound up a badly beaten fourth.

Heard was timed in a wind-aided 20.03, with 1985 winner Dwayne Evans second in 20.12, 1985 national champion Kirk Baptiste third in 20.14, and Lewis next in 20.30.

Lewis had shown his vulnerability in Saturday's semifinals, placing only third in his heat, behind Dwayne Evans and Heard.

The victory earned Heard, a 19-year-old from Milwaukee, a trip to Moscow for next month's Goodwill Games as a member of the United States team.

"Right after I went across the finish line, chills went through me," Heard said. "It felt great.

Heard said he though Lewis was tired.

"He won the 100, he won the long jump, and when I beat him in the semis, I thought he might be tired."

Afterward, Lewis congratulated Heard.

"He said, 'Good race.' " Heard said. "It gave me a lot of pleasure to hear him say that to me."

Lewis was not disappointed.

"I didn't prepare enough for it and they were ready," he said. "I didn't have a good race. If I had run a good race (and lost), I'd be disappointed.

"It just tells me that I have to prepare mpore. Next time I'm going to tear it up."

The triple jump, meanwhile, produced a series of remarkable jumps, just as it had last year, when Willie Banks set the world record of 58 feet, 11⅛ inches at Indianapolis.

This time, however, all the big jumps were hindered by windy conditions, and cannot be considered for record purposes.

Simpkins, the 1985 World University Games champion and collegiate record holder, soared 58-9¼, the second-longest jump under any conditions. He also went 58-1, No. 11 on the all-time list.

"I felt like that (the 58-9¼) was the one that put it out of there. I knew 58-1 wasn't going to win."

Olympic silver medalist Mike Conley settled for second with a 58-6½, the fifth-best jump ever and the longest ever for a non-winner.

It was the second consecutive day that Conley finished second with the best losing effort. He had been the runner-up in Friday's long jump at 28-3¾, behind Lewis' winning 28-5½, with both jumps also wind-aided.

Banks wound up third Saturday at 57-5¾, also wind-aided.

Earlier, Darrell Robinson smashed the meet record in edging Roddie Haley and winning the men's 400-meter race.

For the 22-year-old Robinson, timed in 44.47 seconds, it was his first major victory. He had finished second in the 1982 and 1985 national championships.

Haley, the 1985 NCAA champion and 1986 runner-up from the University of Arkansas, fell over the finish line and was timed in 44.50.

Both were under the old meet record of 44.70, set by Cliff Wiley in 1981.

Pam Marshall completed a sweep of the women's dashes, capturing the 200 in a wind-aided 22.24, well ahead of runner-up Randy Givens.

Marshall, upset winner in the 100 Friday, is the fourth straight woman to capture the 100 and 200 in the same year in the national championships.

Evelyn Ashford did it in 1983 and Merlene Ottey-Page accomplished the feat in 1984 and 1985.

Diane Dixon shattered the University of Oregon's Hayward Field record in the women's 400-meter for the third consecutive day, clocking 50.41 in the final. Dixon also had broken the stadium record during Thursday's qualifying and Friday's semifinals.

American record holder Johnny Gray ran the faster time in the world this year in the men's 800, clocking 1:44.73.

Earl Jones, the Olympic bronze medalist, went out very fast in the 800 and held the lead until about 250 meters remained. Then, Gray, whose father was among the crowd of 8,488, zipped past him and pulled clear of the field, winning handily, as Jones faded to fifth and Stanley Redwine came up to take second in 1:45.86.

Steve Scott, the former American record holder in the men's 1,500, rallied to capture his sixth national title in 3:42.41.

The veteran Scott swept past front-running Dub Myers, the NCAA champion from the University of Oregon, with about 100 meters remaining, then held off hard-charging Jim Spivey at the finish.

Spivey took second in 3:42.99 and Myers wound up third in 3:43.20.

Doug Nordquist, a late entry, captured the men's high jump with a meet record 7-7¾, beating American rebord holder Jimmy Howard on fewer misses.

Nordquist had not declared by Wednesday's entry deadline, and had to pay a $25 late entry fee.

He and Howard both broke the national championship record of 7-7¼ set by Howard in 1984.

Mike Tully, the former American record holder, equalled the meet record in the pole vault, clearing 19-0¼ for his third national title. Earl Bell, who finished second Saturday at 18-8¼, had set the record two years ago.

American record holder Joe Dial also vaulted 18-8¼, but wound up third on misses.

"I'm still the best American vaulter — I don't care what anyone says," said Tully, who frequently has verbally blasted Dial for his inability to perform exceptionally well in major meets and for setting his records in minor competitions.

John Powell, who will be 39 Wednesday, became the oldest winner of the men's discus in meet history. He threw 216-4, edging Rick Meyer, the runner-up with a personal best of 216-1, for his sixth national title and fourth in a row.

Afterward, Powell said he was quitting competition.

"This is where it all started for me, and it should end here," said Powell, a four-time Olympian and two-time bronze medalist. "I'm done; I quit.

"I had a crummy year and had a real hard time getting motivated. This (victory) is basically a gift from the Gods."

Al Oerter, the four-time Olympic discus gold medalist and 49-year-old grandfather, was seventh at 202-10, his best throw of the year.

Carol Lewis, the former American record holder in the women's long jump, captured her fourth national title in five years, winning with a wind-aided 22-9 on her final attempt.

Danny Harris, the three-time NCAA champion from Iowa State, narowly won the men's 400-meter intermediate hurdles, over Dave Patrick.

Both were timed in 48.90, but Harris got the victory on his lean at the tape.

Henry Marsh, the American record holder, won his sixth straight national title in the men's 3,000-meter steeplechase and his eighth in nine years. Marsh, running his usual come-from-behind race, was timed in 8:19.16, the fastest by an American in 1986.

Judi Brown-King, the American record holder in the women's 400 hurdles, won her third straight national title — but she needed help.

Brown-King was a distant second, behind Sharrieffa Barksdale, going over the last hurdle. But Barksdale, the former national record holder, caught her trail leg over the hurdle and fell, giving Brown-King the break she needed.

Linda Detlefsen, formerly of the University of Georgia, posted the fastest time of the season by an American in the women's 1,500, clocking 4:08.00, as she nipped Chris Gregorek (4:08.02).

Other winners included American record holder Tom Petranoff in the men's javelin at 250-5; Doug Padilla in the men's 5,000 in 13:46.69; 1985 NCAA champion Claudette Groenendaal of the University of Oregon in the women's 800 in 1:59.79; Mary Knisely in the women's 3,000 at 8:46.18; Bill Green in the hammer throw with a field record of 250-0.

Investigation looks into white powder

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — A criminal investigation into the death of Len Bias centered Saturday on the analysis of a white powdery substance found in the car of the former University of Maryland star who was the No. 2 pick in the NBA draft.

Police from several jurisdictions would not say where the analysis would be made, or when it would be conducted, but Lt. Col. Frank Mazzone of the Maryland State Police said when a death is involved, tests are routinely given top priority by his agency.

Dick Dull, the athletic director at Maryland, expressed hope that results of both an autopsy and the drug analysis would be speeded up.

"Right now," he said, "speculation and rumors are running rampant. It's not fair to the Bias family, or to the memory of Leonard Bias."

"Results have to be made as soon as possible," Dull said. "If drugs were involved, we'll go from there. If they weren't, we'll all relax a little bit more."

While authorities await the results of the autopsy, which could take another week, the mystery substance could provide a more immediate clue into the circumstances surrounding the sudden death on Thursday of the apparently healthy 22-year-old.

Police also were investigating reports that only hours before Bias died, he and a friend visited an area in Washington, D.C., a police official there said was known for its on-the-street drug sales.

A Washington television station, WDVM, quoted an unnamed police source as saying that Bias and a friend made a purchase of "crack," a highly potent form of cocaine.

Bias, who earlier had returned elated from Boston after meeting with Celtics officials, also participated in an all-night celebration at various places on the campus with some teammates and friends, including the man said to have accompanied him to Washington.

Speedy Jones, a teammate, said that at about 6:15 a.m., Bias awoke Terry Long, another player, in the dormitory and talked for several minutes.

"Terry said Lenny laid back and closed his eyes and started shaking," Jones said. "Lenny started throwing up. Terry could not revive him. Then Terry called the ambulance."

Madelyn Woods, a friend of Bias, said that peer pressure could have been a factor if drugs were involved.

"Len Bias would have never done this by himself, not once, ever," she said, adding that if he had used cocaine, "the reaction was so severe because he had no tolerance for it. He had never had it in his system before and that's why this happened."

Celtics President Red Auerbach, who selected Bias as the No. 2 pick in the NBA draft, speculated that when Bias "came back (from Boston) he was so high that he had to celebrate. ... He didn't know what to do to celebrate. Somebody might have caught him on a weak moment."

Auerbach told The Associated Press Saturday that he has not heard anything on the investigation into Bias' death and didn't expect to hear anything this weekend. Auberbach was in Washington Saturday where he plans to stay until Bias' funeral on Monday.

Police have interviewed some of the people who were with Bias during the night and early morning, and hoped to talk with others.

The Washington Post on Saturday said among those investigators hoped to interview were Long, David Gregg, who is another teammate, and Brian Tribble, described as a longtime friend of Bias'.

While the substance could have been submitted to the FBI or the Drug Enforcement Agency, both in Washington, Mazzone noted that the state police lab does almost all of the drug analysis for Prince George's County, the juridication investigating the death of Bias.

But he refused to say if county authorities had submitted the powder, adding: "Even if I knew, I wouldn't tell you."

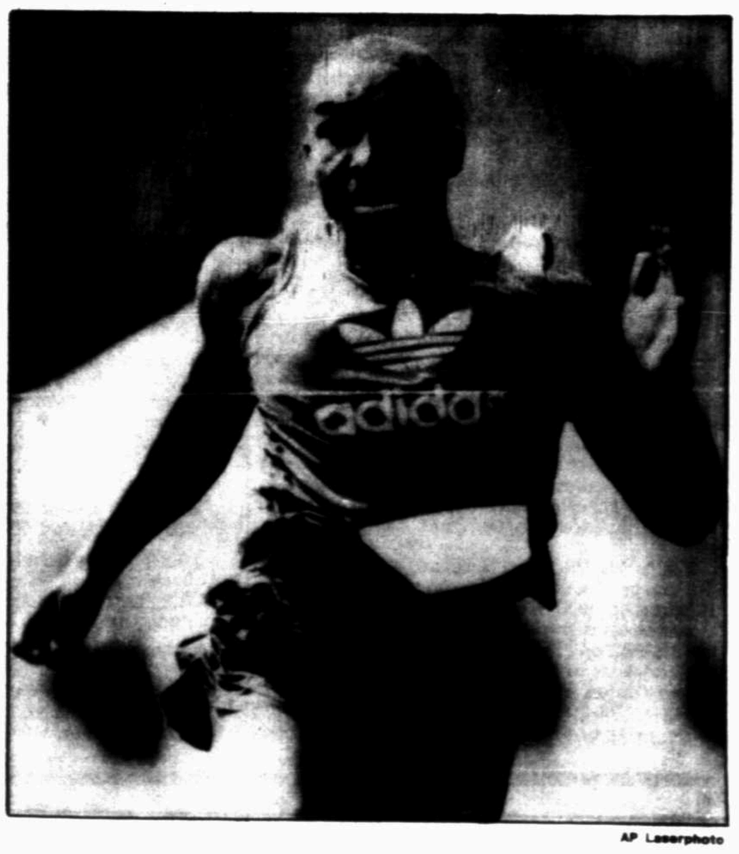

Mazzone said the tests, which involve paperwork, and might require verfication by a second chemist, could be done in a day or two, depending on what time of day it was brought to the lab.

Dr. John Rogers, deputy medical examiner for Prince George's and Montgomery counties said Thursday that a urine test at Leland Memorial Hospital, where Bias died, showed "a trace" of a byproduct that could have been cocaine.

Then, on Friday, when police impounded Bias' car, television broadcasts showed them finding a packet of a white, powdery substance.

Maj. James Ross, head of Prince George's County's police Criminal Investigations Division, said Bias' death "is being treated as a suspicious death and a criminal investigation is being conducted."

A private funeral service has been set for 10:30 a.m. Monday the the university chapel, with a public tribute to follow at 7 p.m., in Cole Field House.

Derrick Florence of Galveston hits the finish line to win the 100-meter dash in 10.36 in the Keebler International track meet in Elmhurst, Ill.

Galveston's Florence claims double gold

Keebler Track

ELMHURST, Ill. (AP) — Derrick Florence of Galveston, Texas, and Ed Manderson of St. Petersburg, Fla., were both double winners Saturday in the Keebler International Prep Track and Field Invitational.

Florence won the 100-meter and 200-meter dashes while Manderson recorded victories in the triple and high jump.

More than 150 of the nation's top high school athletes competed in the 15th Keebler International, billed as the world premier prep track meet. Past performers in the meet included Carl Lewis, Renaldo Nehemiah, and Dwight Stones.

Ninety-degree temperatures and high humidity had little effect on Florence and Manderson.

Florence, the country's top prep sprinter, ran away from the field, recording times of 10.36 seconds in the 100 and 20.89 in the 200.

Manderson easily won his events, jumping 25-¼ in the long jump and 50-11 in the triple.

One meet record was broken.

Pat Manson of Aurora, Colo. set a new pole vault mark of 17-4, besting the old mark of 17-3¾ set at last year's meet.

Eric Mastilir of Carmichael, Calif. won the mile, beating a strong field that included his twin brother Mark. Mastilir was timed in 4:06.87, narrowly failing in his attempt to break the old meet mark of 4:06.2 set by former Olympian Jim Spivey in 1978.

Brenham claims 4A baseball crown, 6-1

AUSTIN (AP) — Brenham's Carl Sullivan drove in three runs to lead his Cubs to a 6-1 win over Mercedes Saturday night for the Class 4A state high school baseball title.

Sullivan's single and double supplied all the offense needed by pitcher David Crowson, who held Mercedes to four hits in raising his record to 13-0.

Brenham, 36-3, got the go-ahead run in the fifth inning when Sullivan bounced a double off the center field wall to score Michael Watts.

State titles in the other four classes were decided last weekend. The 4A tournament was postponed because of courtroom battles sparked by Waco Richfield, which lost a rain-shortened series to Austin Westlake.

Richfield lost the court fight, which went to the Texas Supreme Court.

Mercedes beat Westlake 2-1 in a Friday semifinal. Brenham moved to the title game by crushing Snyder 10-0 Friday.

Brenham opened the scoring in the third after Watts and Crowson grounded singles to right. Sullivan followed with a grounder to second that was booted by Rene Guajardo, scoring Watts from third.

The Cubs stranded runners at second and third when reliever Carlos Pimentel came in to quash the rally.

Dallenbach outraces Halsmer to win third straight

DETROIT (AP) — Streaking Wally Dallenbach Jr. outdistanced Pete Halsmer Saturday to win the crash-filled Merkur Motor City 100 Trans-Am race through the streets of downtown Detroit.

It was the third straight victory for Dallenbach, the defending champion in the Bendix Trans-Am Series.

The last seven laps of the 40-lap race were run under a caution flag after defending champion Elliott Forbes-Robinson, who was running third at the time, crashed into one of the concrete barriers lining the city.

Once again, Bucs lose out

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — After learning that Heisman Trophy winner Bo Jackson will pursue a career in baseball instead of football, Tampa Bay Buccaneers owner Hugh Culverhouse said he pulled out a cassette tape and listened to the words of one of pop singer Dionne Warwick's current hits.

"Keep smiling, keep shining, that's what friends are for," he said Saturday after Jackson announced in Birmingham, Ala., that he will play for baseball's Kansas City Royals instead of the National Football League's Bucs.

It was yet another setback for a franchise that has won only 10 of its last 48 games and which has a history of drafting poorly. Nevertheless, Culverhouse said if he had to do it over, he'd gamble again on Jackson with the No. 1 pick in the NFL draft.

Scouting services not only rated the Auburn running back as the best player available, but as the finest prospect at his position since O.J. Simpson entered the NFL in 1969.

Baseball experts also told Tampa Bay that Jackson was not as good a prospect in that sport as he was once considered, primarily because he had limited college playing experience and didn't want to spend time sharpening his skills in the minor leagues.

"If you passed up on taking Bo Jackson in this draft, then you have compromised what you're going after," the Bucs owner said. "I say you go after the best athlete available. You're going to win some and you're going to lose some.

"I don't think we're bums in this case," Culverhouse added, alluding to a newspaper column that suggested the Bucs had struck out once again by failing to sign Jackson. "I think we held our heads up high. We went into the draft knowing there was a risk.

"We went in with the commitment to sign players if at all possible," he continued. "I structured an unusual deal. I wish I could have signed it myself, but I couldn't."

The Bucs reportedly offered Jackson, who rushed for 4,303 career yards at Auburn, a five-year, $7 million contract that would have made him the richest rookie in NFL history. The Royals' proposal was said to be worth $5 million over five years.

"I said all along if money was a factor, we'd win," the owner said. "But I always couched that with if."

Heisman Trophy winner Bo Jackson gets a hug and kiss from his mother Florence Bond after picking baseball and the Kansas City Royals.

Culverhouse said negotiations with the Mobile, Ala., law firm representing Jackson were always "straight forward," and that at no time did he feel misled.

From the start, Jackson insisted he had not decided whether he would to play baseball or football. He also said money would not be the decisive factor.

"I think Bo made his own decision, based on what he wanted to do," Culverhouse said. "I don't think his representatives had an influence on him. Bo did exactly what he said he was going to do."

BO

The Royals drafted Jackson in the fourth round but Fogelman said, "we consider him a first-round choice because we thought there was a chance he might play football."

He said that Jackson's salary would be no more than any other first-round choice.

"My first love is baseball and it has always been a dream of mine to be a major league player. My goal now is to become the best baseball player that Bo Jackson can be," said Jackson.

HE WAS the first Heisman winner to turn down a pro football career since the Army's Pete Dawkins in 1958. He also is the fourth straight Heisman winner not to sign with the NFL. The last three, Doug Flutie, Mike Rozier and Herschel Walker went to the USFL, though Rozier is now with Houston of the NFL.

IN JACKSON'S lone full season playing baseball for Auburn, his junior year, he hit .401 with 17 home runs and 43 runs batted in.

He played in only 26 games as a freshman and ran track as a sophomore. He hit .246 and played only 20 baseball games for Auburn this year before being declared ineligible by the Southeastern Conference for accepting a plane ticket to Tampa, Fla., paid for by the Buccaneers, to receive a physical.

His career baseball statistics at Auburn include a .335 average and 70 runs driven in.

Jackson rushed for more than 1,700 yards for Auburn's football team last season. As a four-year starter, he rushed for 4,303 yards and scored 43 touchdowns.

Jackson was drafted by the New York Yankees out of high school, but rejected a multimillion dollar contract. He was also selected by the California Angels, the 22nd choice overall, following his junior season.

3702 Casady: Cool, classy comfort

By GIGI MCKINNEY
Advertising Feature Writer

During these hot summer days, it is a relief to enter a home exuding cool comfort in an elegant environment. Nestled within the elite Trinity Addition, at 3702 Casady, a residence such as this exists – with all the convenient amenities today's busy family requires.

This ultra-contemporary domain encompasses approximately 3,275 square feet of operable living space; with approximately 3,019 feet on the ground floor and about 256 square feet accounted for in a second story semi-open loft area. Since it is designed in this contemporary mode, it caters magnificently to the present owner's desires; however, its unique design gives it a versatile appeal enhancing the surrounding homes in its private cul-de-sac.

Lush foliage about the square planters and along the winding walkway projects a relaxing feeling for newcomers. Entering through an attractive recessed entry, the extensive use of glass areas in the living and adjoining dining areas (bottom right and top left photos on the cover) accentuate the openness concept, but simultaneously, take into account the growing concern for energy conservation. During the rapidly approaching dog-day afternoons, these areas will not be in direct exposure to the sun through the thoughtful design of high vaulted ceilings and glazed windows with chic solar bronze tinting. To lessen the heating requirement in the voluminous living area, a "Heatilator" zero clearance wood burning fireplace adds character as well as functionability to the space.

An extensive use of rheostat controlled ceiling fans in the dining room's atrium, living room and master bath also helps to circulate the dead air and allow for a more conservative use of the conditioning unit.

Convenient for serving guests in the dining room, all electric appliances, ample storage and fluorescent lighting in the kitchen prove helpful for today's homemaker.

Basically a two bedroom, two bath residence, the semi-private loft with a wet bar (center photo on the cover) offers the characteristic of conversion to a third bedroom or study.

A shed roof area over the double garage is framed to allow the future finishing of a second story garage apartment, complete with bath. In the adjacent fenced backyard, complete utilization of this odd-shaped lot allows for the future addition of a pool; completing the main concentration of the convenient activity spaces.

In the master bedroom suite, luxury is the order of the day. Immense walk-in closets and separate vanity areas in the master bath (bottom left photo on the cover) with a glass shower, a tub inlaid in stained redwood planking and several windows along the deeply vaulted ceiling provide convenience as well as versatility.

From beginning to end, this home offers its users lasting enjoyment and is currently listed by Coldwell Banker-Adobe Realtors for $152,500.

Financing: a subject of great interest

By MAY ADELAIDE BARBER

When you are ready to purchase a new home, have found the one you want and have worked out an acceptable contract with the owners, the primary question which comes to mind is "How am I going to pay for it?" Very few buyers in the present economic climate have either the funds available or the desire to pay cash for their home. Other financing options which may be considered include the assumption for the owner's loan, financing by the owner and a new loan. Each option has its good and bad features.

If the present loan on the property is assumable, the assumption of the owner's position can be a quick and easy way to move into your new home. Of course, if you assume the owner's loan, you will accept the established interest rate, unless the loan has an adjustable or escalating rate; and you will probably be required to pay a certain amount of cash to the owner for his or her equity (the cash difference between the loan balance and the agreed upon price of the house).

If the loan was initiated within the past four or five years, the interest rate will very likely be somewhat higher than the present going rate. On the other hand, if the interest rate is lower than the prevailing rate, the loan probably has been in effect for six years or more and the equity which the owner will require may be significantly higher that the amount of cash needed to take out a new loan.

Sometimes the present owner will agree to provide financing in order to get the house sold quickly. The owner may be wiling to make you a loan for slightly less than the agreed upon price. Or he or she may carry a note for part of the equity, if you assume the exiting loan on the property. Owner financing also is a quick and easy way to purchase property.

One problem which you will need to make arrangements to handle can occur if the present owner is financing your purchase of the house and at the same time continuing to make payments on the existing loan. This is referred to as a wrap-around loan. If the owner is financing your purchase of the property on a wrap-around note, you need to make certain that the payments on the first lien note are being made every month. Otherwise the first lien holder could foreclose the property even though you had made every payment on time.

With the present interest rates lower than they have been for several years, many homebuyers are electing to initiate a new loan on the property they wish to purchase. Some of the new loans such as FHA insured or VA guaranteed loans, have a fixed rate and are assumable with no qualifying on the part of a future buyer. Most conventional loans are not assumable unless they have an adjustable interest rate. The different types of conventional loans, however, are mind boggeling. When shopping the lending institutions for a new loan, the prospective home buyer has a regular smorgasbord of loans available with varying interest rates, lengths of term, loan costs and numerous other features. It definitely pays to call the lending institutions for information regarding their mortgage loans.

With so many choices open, how do you know where to go and what type of loan will best fit your needs? One of the most important services your Realtor can perform for you is to acquaint you with the available financing and the primary features of the different loans. Keeping up to date with this information is part of your Realtor's job; so don't wonder; ask!

Bath remodeling need not be expensive nor extensive

It wasn't too long ago that most bathrooms were as clinical and sterile as hospitals. Not any more. Nowadays, they are loaded with style and glamor. That's one reason why bath remodeling remains such a popular home improvement project year after year.

Updating an outmoded bath needn't be all that expensive either. One of the easiest and least expensive ways to modernize a bath is to use American made ceramic tile. Here are some ideas courtesy of the Tile Council of America:

*Outdated tile is a common disorder of many baths. Thanks to new designs, colors, styles and techniques, new ceramic tile can be installed over the old surface. This saves time, expense and mess and works on floors as well as walls.

*Tile that ends half or three-quarters of the way up the wall is common in older baths. To make the entire wall flush, install gypsum wallboard, then tile the wall from floor to ceiling in an elegant design and an attractive color.

*Consider a one-of-a-kind wall consisting of a wide sash of red on a field of gleaming white or a graphic arrangement simulating a stained glass window. Geometric designs are the easiest to adapt to tile installations.

*Remember that it's simple to tile over linoleum. A tile floor is a good place for that special design.

*Another way to perk up a bath is to install tile on the countertop on a built-in vanity around the sink.

*Bothered by odd architectural features such as ducts or a dormer? Tile in a striking design and color can camouflage these flaws.

*Like the looks of the old bathtub? Consider giving it added stature by setting it on a tiled platform. Or, think about a burgundy red or chocolate brown wall as a sophisticated backdrop for a white tub. To put the tub setting in a country mood, consider a decorative tile wall with a folk-art motif.

To discover the other decorative possibilities of ceramic tile, visit the showrooms of dealers, distributors, contractors or manufacturers.

For a free copy of "Better Baths With Ceramic Tile," write to the Tile Council of America, Inc., P.O. Box 2222, Princeton, N.J. 08540.

Here's an elegant example of how to use ceramic tile to give any bath a more elegant appearance, thanks to new designs, colors, styles and techniques. Today's ceramic tile is easy to install, easy to care for and lasts for years.

Texas fire report system widens

By H. RAY KING

After just a couple of years of intense fire department training, the Texas Fire Incident Reporting System (TEXFIRS) seems headed in the right direction as the state's primary tool for reporting, recording and analyzing fire data from across Texas.

The system, put into action in 1982 as part of the National Fire Incident Reporting System, was developed by the U.S. Fire Administration. Texas is one of 38 states participating in the nation-wide system, and currently has over 300 departments reporting to the State Board of Insurance and the State Fire Marshal's office in Austin. With Dallas a recent addition to the voluntary system, over 50 percent of the state's population is now protected by TEXFIRS.

Each fire department in TEXFIRS sends information concerning fires in its city or town to the State Fire Marshal's Office, and the data is analyzed to determine both the number of fires in the state and their causes. Once the data has been processed, reports for individual departments are distributed quarterly. This information can assist the departments in learning more about their community's fire problems and the need for fire protection.

The State Fire Marshal's Office is hoping to institute changes in the near future that will make reporting each fire easier for the departments. They are also in the planning stages of adding Houston, Wichita Falls, Odessa and many community fire departments to the system to realize an even wider range of coverage.

Jamb session really swings

Planning, patience and the proper tools are the key ingredients of any successful do-it-yourself project.

Take the installation or replacement of interior doors, for instance. The first step is to consider the door size and the direction in which the door will swing. Ordinarily, the door opening should be two and three quarter-inches wider and two inches higher than the door itself. Don't worry about exact measurements because adjustments can be made. Most doors are 80 inches high. Widths vary to accommodate standard door sizes.

To make the job even easier, says the Wood Moulding and Millwork Producers Association, consider buying pre-hung doors. They can be purchased at local home centers or guilding supply stores in standard sizes. Pre-hung units simplify installation because the doors are already hinged and mounted on the jambs.

Expert says there's no right or wrong in decorating

By The Associated Press

Blending the old and the new, stressing individuality, mixing different styles, experimenting. That's the trend in furniture styles today, according to many interior designers.

"People are more open to experimentation than they were years ago and they're mixing different styles and periods," says Lee Mills, director of design for Naugahyde brand fabrics.

Interior designers Betram Laundenslager and Arthur L'Esperance agree. "There's no reason to conform to any one style or fashion," they say. "There's no right or wrong way of decorating; there's only your way."

Fascinating Facts

by Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

In decorative art, the trm "diaper" is applied to an ornamental pattern consisting of a leafy device repeated over a flat surface. Diaper patterns are common on wall papers, carpets, mosaic decorations and textile fabrics. In architecture, the "diaper" is a small repeated pattern, either carved or painted, on a surface or flowers, leaves or other devices. When the flower or leaf is enclosed by slender moldings, the modlings are called geometric diapering. In heraldry the "diaper" is a design of arabesques and geometrical patterns.

When your toddler tries to flush a diaper down the commode, you might wish it was the ornamental type. For fast service, call SANITARY PLUMBING, HEATING & AIR CONDITIONING any time, day or night. Days, call 694-8871. After hours, call 682-0891. We install Coleman heating and air conditioning.

People are moving to the area - and we've word of still more to come.
That trade-up and first time home buyer's are still very active in the market because of reasonable interest rates and moderate home prices.
Some statistics you may be interested in:

	June 2, 1986	June 3, 1985	June, 4 1984
Homes on market	1608	1666	1697
Homes new on market	151*	97	79

ANYONE CAN PAY RENT
Put your money to work and stop giving it to someone who is using it as a tax shelter. Now is the time to buy; and you can now own your own home and deduct the interest on your income tax. There are many ways to get into a home of your own and I can help find the right way for you. Out of more than 1600 homes on the market, I'm sure we can find the right home for you: like this lovely westside 3 br, 2½ ba with a cheery sunroom and shady yard. Please call now

ATTENTION HOME BUYERS AND REAL ESTATE BROKERS

The Veterans Administration has approximately 44 homes for sale in the Midland/Odessa area. These homes are available for purchase by both veterans and non-veterans. Occupancy is not a requirement. The majority of the acquired properties are offered with financing available. Low cost - 30 year fixed rate mortgages. 10% (10.25 APR). 9.5% (9.75 APR) available to veterans who will occupy. The homes are to anyone who makes a 5% down payment. Discount for cash varies.

The following list of properties have been drastically reduced. The "Initial Price" reflected below was the sales price placed on this property when first offered for sale by the VA. VA will now accept an offer from a qualified applicant at the price offered as "Today's Purchase Price". If you wish to make an offer below today's price, it will be considered.

Heard and overheard around Midland recently:

"You know how we used to tell rich Arab jokes? Now the Arabs are telling poor Midlander jokes."

"Did you hear about the promotion Midland banks are having? With each new account opened, they give you a free oil well. It hasn't gone over too big, though. Investors are all holding out for a free toaster instead."

"Do you know how Midland and Odessa are different from the Titanic? The Titanic had a band."

"What's the difference between an oilman and a pigeon? A pigeon can still make a deposit on a Mercedes."

"I heard McDonald's just had a layoff yesterday. They had to lay off two engineers who operated the deep fryer and a seismologist who was running the McShake machine."

"Two girls were walking along the street. Suddenly a frog jumped out of the bushes in front of them. 'Hi!' said the frog. 'I've been put under a magic spell. Kiss me and I'll turn back into a Midland oilman and marry you!' One of the girls picked the frog up, but instead of giving it a kiss, she put the amphibian in her purse.

"'What are you doing?' her friend asked.

"'Well,' the girl replied, 'a talking frog is bound to be worth some money.'"

Although hard economic times are no laughing matter, Midlanders are facing the slump in their oil-based economy with a slightly grim grin.

This humor amid hardships is healthy, according to a number of local psychologists and therapists.

Sam Guyton, a licensed professional counselor, found people clinging to their sense of humor when she conducted some self-esteem seminars during Midland College's "Career Reassessment" workshop series last week.

"I noticed during the classes that people are trying real hard to keep their spirits up," she said. "One man in my class said, 'I think it's good that we're able to get together like we have tonight and even laugh a little together."

"Sometimes humor is a tension release," Midland psychotherapist Linda H. George said. "It's a good way of coping with anxiety."

"People often make jokes about things they are anxious about. That's why they're making jokes about things like the FDIC."

Ms. George conducts stress management workshops and one method she recommends for reducing stress "is to have some humor."

Relieving tension through humor is very healthy, she said, unless "it gets out of hand."

"There are degrees, of course," said Harvey Durbin, a local psychologist. "Extremism in anything is almost always bad." If an individual just constantly made negative jokes, he said, it might indicate that the person has a problem of some sort.

Normally, though, Durbin believes humor is healthy. "Anything that's going to relieve stress — anything that's not illegal or immoral — is probably going to be healthy."

Making jokes about stressful situations helps because it "reframes the stress," explained Olga M. Campbell, a Midland psychologist. "They look at it in a way that makes it tolerable, particularly with something, like the economy, which you can't do much about.

"It might seem kind of callous at times," she said, but "it's often a way of handling stress."

Deliberate exaggeration, Durbin noted, is one way the current crop of economic jokes helps individuals deal with their worries.

"By making things worse than they really are" in a joke, he said, "It consoles them, 'Well, it's bad, but at least it's not that bad.'

"Humor serves many purposes," said Durbin. It can be a way of dealing with anxiety, anger, frustration or, in the case of some "dirty" jokes, with feelings of sexual aggression.

Besides relieving anxiety, many of the recent Midland jokes were probably told "to express frustration and anger," he said.

Asked if this was psychologically healthy, Durbin replied, "That beats planting bombs. It doesn't hurt anyone" and helps a person get those feelings out.

Tragedy and Comedy

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

An Apollo astronaut responded to a reporter's question about how he felt soaring beyond the heavens: "How would you feel sitting atop 50,000 parts, all of which were built by the lowest bidder?"

It was a joke, of course. At the time, everyone laughed. But the 50,000 parts brought the crew back safely.

Fifty-seven manned American space flights later, people are making jokes again. This time, however, the jokes are in response to the explosion of the Challenger that took seven lives and sent a nation into mourning.

It was only a matter of days before children and adults alike began sharing grotesque one-liners — shuttle jokes — that elicit embarrassed laughter from listeners.

The jokes have been called "crude," "tasteless," and "insensitive," yet sociologists and psychologists say they may serve an important purpose: They take the edge off the grim reality of life at its worst.

Within the last two years, jokes have poked fun at the Union Carbide disaster, Baby Fae, the Achille Lauro and the late Leon Klinghoffer, Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) and, more recently, the space shuttle and Tylenol.

Why do some people respond to these tragedies with humor and laughter? According to Herbert Lefcourt, a psychologist at the University of Waterloo in Ontario, Canada, laughter makes people feel better — physically and psychologically. Humor, even sick humor, becomes an antidote for feelings of confusion and isolation.

"After any national tragedy or major public event, there have always been offensive jokes," said Gary Fine, professor of sociology at the University of Minnesota. He said that while new tragedies invariably bring about a series of new "sick" jokes, the themes of death and dying and the darker side of life will remain the same.

Laughter: Best Medicine

Associated Press

You have just lost your job, your spouse wants a divorce and the washing machine has flooded the laundry room. What should you do?

"Laugh," says Dr. Robert Leone, assistant professor of psychology at the United States International University and leader of self-realization seminars in San Diego, who believes laughter can be the best way to relieve stress and put you in a fresh frame of mind.

While a lost job, divorce or a flooded laundry room aren't humorous in themselves, laughter can give you a little distance from the situation and help you feel better, Leone says.

"When you're laughing, your attention is focused," he explains. "You can't do anything else. Everything else, whether it's depression or stress, stops."

Leone admits that many people laugh in order to keep themselves from crying, and some people who joke use laughter as a way to avoid intimacy with others. But a good laugh can cleanse your emotional state and make you feel better about going on, he adds.

"Laughter is a reaffirmation," Leone says. "When you hear yourself laugh, you think, 'I must be feeling pretty good.' Many times people walk through life and don't know how they really feel. Laughing is feedback about your emotional state."

Leone says that people who don't laugh very much tend to block off their emotions.

"The deeper you feel something, the lower it will take you and the higher you'll rebound," he says. "Some people tend to settle for the middle of the road. They won't laugh, but they won't cry, either; in reality, their emotions are blunted. It's a very boring way to live."

He says the interpretation of life's events is what makes the difference, not the events themselves.

"Some people commit suicide over things which to others may appear trivial," he says. "Others have a tremendous number of negative things happen, and they go on."

Funny Business

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

When constant complaining about a few unbearable customers was dragging down morale at a Pennsylvania bank, the president called in a management humor consultant who recommended he initiate a "Worst Customer of the Week Award," to be presented — along with a bottle of champagne — to the employee with the best Friday afternoon tale of woe.

"Humor changed their perception of the situation," says David Baum, the Philadelphia consultant who turned dread into drollery at the Doylestown bank. "Tellers were soon calling the worst customers over to their windows in hopes of winning the champagne. The customers felt some positive attention and stopped being such pains."

Balancing gravity and levity in the workplace is hardly funny business.

While lip service has long been paid to a sense of humor at work, traditionally the closer you got to the bottom line — money — the fewer laughs you heard.

Today, however, personnel officers and executive headhunters may mark "sense of humor" as a major plus on job applications. Ads in business magazines promote products such as executive joke newsletters and the "Instant Card File of Humor — 1,400 sparkling laughmakers filed on 4x6 cards in 97 subjects" for $19.95. And social scientists who 15 years ago would have jeopardized their academic credibility by investigating humor are now making careers of researching wit and whimsy.

"Appropriate use of humor in the workplace enhances communication, motivation, creativity and ultimately productivity," says Baum, 30, who, besides consulting businesses and organizations on humor, doubles as coordinator of training and development at Philadelphia's Thomas Jefferson University.

Baum conducted a five-month study of humorous interaction at Shared Medical Systems, a 1,200-employee computer firm on the outskirts of Philadelphia.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Mark your calendars now, ladies, for Sept. 18. That's the date the Children's Service League has set for its biennial style show and luncheon to benefit the Cerebral Palsy Center.

According to Robbie (Mrs. Roy H.) Davidson, publicity chairman, this year's show will be presented by Swartz, featuring the fashions of top name designers. The Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center has been selected as the setting for the benefit.

The style show-luncheon and the Beefeaters Ball alternate each year as the only two fund-raising events of the league.

LAURA THOMPSON'S ARRIVAL in Midland for a visit with her sisters, Patsy Yeager and Georgia Goss Harston, inspired a number of social courtesies.

Among them were a party hosted by Gertrude Alstrin and Helen Giffert, luncheons given by Mable Henderson and by Marge Wood, and a cocktail party with Mabel Shaw and Inez Hazlip as the hostesses.

Laura and her husband, the late Don Thompson, were residents of Midland before moving to Casper, Wyo., a number of years ago.

PAUL BYROM and his fiancee, Sheri Miller of Austin, were honored at parties here last weekend.

The home of Sarah (Mrs. Russell) Neisig was the setting for a Saturday morning display shower and coffee. Co-hostesses were Sarilyn (Mrs. Bill) Black, Janet (Mrs. Lee) Foster, Pat (Mrs. Jim) Ingram, Nancy (Mrs. Al) Langford, Glenda Pearce, Sandra (Mrs. George) Staley and Barbara (Mrs. Jake) Young.

Special guests were the couple's mothers, Susie (Mrs. Bill) Miller of Austin and Mary Margaret (Mrs. Fred) Byrom.

A Mexican Fiesta couples' party was given that evening at the home of Sue and Bert Conly. Co-hosting were Gwen and Jack James and Dolores and John Davis.

A Mexican food buffet was served, and pinatas, brightly colored flowers and candles set a festive mood. A special cake was served at the stroke of midnight in honor of Fred Byrom's birthday, which coincided this year with Father's Day.

IN HONOR OF NINE recent high school graduates, a fun party was held here last weekend. The evening's events began with a scavenger hunt, followed by a seven o'clock dinner in the Patio Room of LaBodega Restaurant.

The honorees were John Redfern IV, son of Doris and John Redfern III; Blake Davenport, son of Eloise and Bob Davenport; Nancy Sumner, daughter of Betty and Bill Sumner; Amy Hubbard, daughter of Bonnie and Orman Hubbard; Kaye Knox, daughter of Mary Alice and Gordon Knox; Elizabeth Beal, daughter of Nancy and Barry Beal; Sabrina Haley, daughter of Frances and Evetts Haley Jr.; Laura Steele, daughter of Carol and Jack Steele, and Kristi Way, daughter of Barbara and Ralph Way.

Host couples were Barbara and Bill Jowell, Rosalind and Arden Grover, Myna and Jack Young, Karen and Tim Thompson, Norma Jean and Bud Boles, Sharon and Gene Floyd, Nancy and Paul Rea and Carol and Pete Crain.

FIRST TIME VISITORS to West Texas, New Englanders Mr. and Mrs. Craig Munson Sr. were honored at a recent cocktail party in the home of Marge (Mrs. John W.) Wood.

Marge met the Munsons during a European jaunt a couple of years ago. Upon returning home, she made it a point to meet their son and daughter-in-law, Craig and Marie Munson, who reside in Odessa, and she has since enjoyed a friendship with both couples.

Marge was assisted in giving the party for the Cheshire, Conn., visitors by Mabel (Mrs. Henry) Shaw.

CECELIA AND BOB DAVIS recently returned from a two-week trip to Great Britain and France. Accompanied by Bob's sister, Jean (Mrs. Jerry) Jenkins of Rockport, they joined a group in London for a tour through England, Wales and Scotland.

Their journey into the English countryside was highlighted by visits to the prehistoric monument of Stonehenge, the Roman Baths, Stratford-on-Avon, the Lake District, the walled-in city of Chester and the medieval town of York. They also visited the Welsh resort of Llangollen before traveling on to Edinburgh.

While in London, they enjoyed sightseeing tours, the Tony award-winning musical, "La Cage aux Folles," at the Palladium, the marvelous shopping and a bus trip to Windsor Castle.

At tour's end, the threesome departed London for Paris, traveling by train so they could enjoy the English and French countryside. Bob had an interesting visit with a Member of Parliament (Labor Party) on the train ride. Their hotel, the Elysees Ponthieu, was conveniently located only a block from the Champs Elysees. They saw all of Paris' "must-see" places on a city tour and enjoyed a day trip to Versailles.

LAUGHS

Leone uses a story about a young boy and his father to illustrate how people begin to limit their activities in order to save themselves emotionally.

"A little boy paints a picture for his father on his birthday, and he's all excited," Leone relates. "His father comes home and says, 'What's that supposed to be?' and the child is crushed. The child may grow up to believe that he can never be an artist, or can never make his dad happy.

"The next year on his father's birthday, rather than risk his feelings again, he'll look for safety. He may ask his mother to pick out something like a tie for dad. The present won't necessarily be something dad will remember or cherish, but it will be safe. If dad doesn't like the tie, well, mom picked it out.

"No risk, no gain," Leone says. "People start to not risk and narrow down their emotional range. Pretty soon they're afraid to be let down. Maybe a better interpretation for this child would have been, 'My dad is not an art critic,' 'You can't please everyone,' or 'My dad isn't as smart as I thought he was.' Unfortunately, the interpretation was, 'I don't want to feel that rejection any more,' and the child opted to play it safe with his emotions."

Putting a little more laughter in your life involves risk, Leone admits, but it beats boredom. He offers some suggestions on how to be happier:

■ Find a favorite comic, listen to a humorous record or tape or go see a comedy movie. It may be a temporary lift, but the release of laughter will make you feel better.

■ Be outrageous once in awhile. People who try to live their lives and not be judged negatively end up blending into boredom and conformity. Put more joy and spontaneity in your life. You'll have a good time and be happier.

■ Expand your range of activities. You probably don't sing in the car because you don't want people driving by to think you're weird. It can make you feel good to sing, so sing.

■ Stop lying to yourself. You may be able to fool other people when you're not happy, but if you're ever not sure of something, say it to yourself in the mirror. You can't look yourself in the eye if you're lying.

Most people have many reasons why they can't be happy, but the reasons are just excuses, Leone says.

"You can lay the blame for your problems on anything you want," he says, "from a belief that the doctor who delivered you whacked you too hard, to being poor, uneducated, unattractive or adopted. Most people use these kinds of excuses for not having good relationships, not getting the jobs they want or not owning their own businesses.

"At some point, you have to take responsibility for your own happiness. People use these reasons to stop them from having everything they want. They settle for 60 or 70 percent happiness, but they could be a lot happier."

HUMOR

Humor also "helps people make contact with each other," said Ms. Guyton. When someone is faced with unemployment, they often tend to withdraw from others, she said, and "people often don't know what to say to them."

Humor can sometimes break through this awkward silence. When someone tells a joke, Ms. Guyton said, "usually other people will join in."

Not everyone may be amused, however.

"One danger is that you can hit a real nerve" and offend someone, she said. "People are real jittery right now."

A person who takes offense at these types of jokes could actually be a little less psychologically healthy than the person telling them.

"People who take offense might be using some kind of denial," Durbin said. He pointed out that denying the reality of a bad situation is another mechanism — although not a very good one — some people use to deal with stress.

Hearing such humor "might activate some fears they already have," he said. "It just gets through their denial system. They have to confront the reality."

In the course of her career, Ms. George has often encountered hospital workers making "sick jokes" about some of the difficult aspects of cases they had to deal with.

"It used to offend me," said Ms. George, but now she realizes "it's not malicious."

As Ms. Guyton noted, humor "lets off a little steam."

'Texas Monthly' gags over Midland gag

From Staff Reports

Midland-Odessa jokes have attracted some statewide publicity.

For example, "Texas Monthly's" July "Low Talk" column edited by Mimi Swartz, one of the magazine's associate editors, presented a "Foot-in-Mouth Award" to Texas Speaker of the House Gib Lewis, for a Midland joke he made while being honored earlier this month by the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association.

"Things are so bad in the oil business," the magazine quoted Lewis as saying, "that Ethiopians are beginning to tell Midland-Odessa jokes."

"Texas Monthly" apparently gagged over this gag. The column concluded by saying, "Our speaker, a sensitive kind of guy."

TRAGEDY

According to psychologists who study humor, sick jokes can alleviate tension. But these researchers also argue that the telling of — and listening to — sick jokes can bring about such negative feelings as shame, guilt and embarrassment. It may, some psychologists say, be a defective way of coping with sad or angry feelings.

Researchers agree that sick jokes have a serious message. "If the listener genuinely laughs and then tries to remember the joke, that person is acknowledging that he is bothered by whatever it is the joke is poking fun at," said Fine.

Others, however, feel that comedy and tragedy are two sides of the same coin and that laughing can release negative emotions — even replace them with more positive feelings.

Did you ever watch someone tell a sick joke? First, they will ask if you want to hear it, making sure they tell you it's a sick joke. Most people don't want to listen, and sick joke-tellers learn quickly who will be most responsive to this kind of humor. The twisted nature of the one-liner may actually be funny, but Lefcourt says most people don't put this demand on a sick joke. "People," he said, "listen for other reasons."

Once the joke is told, and laughed at, there is a shared sense of relief, added Lefcourt, co-author with Rod Martin of "Humor and Life Stress: Antidote to Adversity" (Springer-Verlag, $24.95). He wrote that it is the laugh itself — "the strange facial grimaces and contortions, the baring of teeth, the guttural vocalizations, the changes in respiration, heart rate and endocrine flow, the throwing back of the head, flailing of arms and spastic body movements" — that allows people to actively release pent-up emotions.

TELLING OR repeating the joke seems to have the same cathartic effect, according to Paul McGhee, a professor of human development at Texas Tech University. "Jokes are a way of mentally rearranging the situation to make it less horrible. It's a way of relieving tension."

Most researchers agree that once the tragic incident is put into a humorous context, emotional tension is released and both the joke-teller and listener feel better. But why?

Apparently, laughing has a positive effect on many body systems, including the respiratory, cardiovascular, muscular and endrocrine systems and the central nervous system.

Dr. William Fry, an associate clinical professor of psychiatry at Stanford University, has found significant increases in catecholamines, the so-called alertness hormones that include adrenaline. Other studies have shown that prolonged laughter — three to five minutes — can result in a doubling of heart rate in some people.

Many of the theories on humor can help to explain the phenomenon of the sick joke, according to Lefcourt. One of the earliest theories of humor — put forth in the late 1800s — was that laughter is a discharge of excess energy. At the turn of the century, Freud used this interpretation and went further to explain how people turned energy into laughter — and why.

Freud proposed that humor is a means of obtaining pleasure despite the distressing feelings that interfere with it.

ACCORDING TO Roger Abrahams, a folklorist at the University of Pennsylvania, telling sick jokes — and laughing at them — may be initiated by fear. To prove his point, he begins a class in his normal speaking voice and without warning lets out an angry yell. Silence and shock are soon replaced by spurts of laughter. The laugh, Abrahams added, is in response to fear.

Howard Pollio, a professor of psychology at the University of Tennessee, says that humor is a way of reasserting the ordinary boundaries of life. "Laughter is a gesture of radical freedom from the normal rules of life," said Pollio. "Every now and then events occur that break the boundaries of worldly events."

While sick jokes are a tasteless way of coping with a bad situation, Pollio said that, "even in its crude form, these jokes help to emphasize the boundaries."

Fine, a sociologist, sees the joke-telling as a social phenomenon that "allows people to blame someone for an unimaginable situation; it is an attempt to right the balance of nature. People want to know that life is fair — even when it is not."

For some people, the worst imaginable situation will provoke a joke, according to Alan Dundes, professor of anthropology and folklore at the University of California, Berkeley. Sick jokes, he said, are part of the folklore tradition; they are stories spread by oral transmission.

Dundes said that the nearly instantaneous spread of jokes is "the strength of weak ties; jokes spread through a network of acquaintances." Not surprisingly, the same jokes are told at the same time — almost anywhere in the country.

According to Julius Kassovic, a folklorist who collected jokes during the Three Mile Island accident in 1979, when news began to spread about a possible breakdown in the cooling system, jokes about being "nuked" spread quickly throughout the community. At the peak of the crisis, however, the joking stopped. Apparently, said Kassovic, the reality of the situation made any joke an unpopular one.

Melvin Welitzer, associate professor of journalism at Ohio University, said that "gallows" humor is entre nous (between us) and is almost never performed in public places.

He tells sick jokes — privately — because it "alleviates my frustrations," and said his students were talking about shuttle joke humor the day after the incident.

WELITZER SAID the classic humorist's motto is: "We can only be young once but with humor we can be immature forever."

Joan Rivers dropped her monologue on the "Tonight" show the day of the accident. David Letterman was celebrating an anniversary by airing the show from an airplane. Any mentions of potential disaster — like the engines failing — were left on the cutting-room floor.

When will shuttle jokes disappear? According to McGhee, they will probably end when there is a rational explanation for the seemingly irrational act. Or, unfortunately, when another national tragedy occurs.

COONCE-HORSBURGH

Barbara Ann Coonce and Jon Douglas Horsburgh, both of Midland, plan to wed 7 p.m. July 19 in the home of the bride-elect's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Coonce of Midland. The future bridegroom is the son of Scott Horsburgh of Pecos and Gail Horsburgh of Midland.

Miss Coonce is a graduate of Lee High School and is a bookkeeper with Comet Cleaners. Her fiance graduated from Midland High School and is employed with Plants by Evergreen.

FUNNY

Based on this study, Baum stresses that humor is a powerful tool that can provide a competitive edge in climbing the corporate ladder.

According to a recent survey sponsored by Robert Half International, corporate America thinks business is best when it isn't strictly business. The executive recruitment franchise firm headquartered in New York asked executive vice presidents and personnel directors of 100 of the nation's largest corporations: "Do people with a sense of humor do better, the same, or worse at their job than those people who have little or no sense of humor?"

Eighty-four percent of the execs replied employees with a sense of humor did a better job.

"People with a sense of humor tend to be more creative, less rigid and more willing to consider and embrace new ideas and methods," says Robert Half, warning that in the long run, the joke will be on companies that frown on badinage.

While Henny Youngman has yet to leave his mark on most boardrooms, changes in the American workplace, say social scientists, are gradually changing the profile of the prize employee of the '80s — independent, autonomous and creative, someone who tends to work hard, play hard and laugh hard. CEOs increasingly ask the manager with a sense of humor, "Take the initiative ... please." But experts warn not to turn in your pin-stripes for a clown costume. As always, a good punch line depends on good timing.

"Humor is one of the prime social adaptive mechanisms that we have," says John Parrish Sprowl, a University of Connecticut professor of communications science who has been conducting research into what is funny.

WORK, SAYS Sprowl, provides common ground for congeniality. "In the workplace," he says, "there is a special need to gain cohesiveness with people you maybe wouldn't have chosen to be with in other situations.

"For people to be colleagues, they need to converse in certain ways and find some of the same things funny. We develop in-group humor at work. Funny spontaneous situations and do-you-remember-the-time-when stories make up a lot of humor at work and bind people together. Jokes and humor are a sign of a well-formed group, and a lack of them is a problem."

Sprowl adds that while many of us know intuitively the best uses for humor in social interaction, its effective application in workplace alliances is a new science to management: "We make people less nervous with humor, we make situations more 'cope-able' with humor, we make people feel included with humor — most effective managers know how to do that."

Besides a rapport builder, humor is a valuable device in defusing workplace tension.

"It's a key way of working out a conflict that couldn't otherwise be worked out," says Howard R. Pollio, professor of psychology at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, who has observed the interplay of horseplay in work groups from longshoremen to college professors. "It lets you, for a moment, transcend the constraints and boundaries of a situation."

BAUM RECALLS the time the government of Northern Ireland hired him to try to find a humorous common ground during the height of Catholic-Protestant tensions. On his first night in Belfast, he was taken to a pub where talk usually avoided the topic of religious strife. But a drunk who overheard Baum's American accent staggered over to him.

"Tell me, now, what d'ya think of our troubles here?"

The pub crowd immediately was hushed and edgy. Baum was scared. The Irishman repeated his challenge.

"I said, Yank, tell me what d'ya think?"

Baum slowly climbed off the stool and unbuttoned his coat, and the drunk began to roll up his sleeves. Suddenly the crowd exploded in laughter.

The front of Baum's T-shirt read: Don't Shoot — I'm Jewish.

"A lot of humor in the workplace is of a negative nature," says Baum.

THE FRIENDLY workplace zing, however, carries with it a hidden agenda. If a manager or upper-status person wants to "reduce the hierarchy" — in effect, impose momentary equity, says Pollio — the humor will be self-deprecating.

In other words, say researchers, the sound of one man's laughter — that of the corporate leader or top executive — often establishes the humor parameters of a workplace.

Knowing how and when to use humor is a calculated risk in the workplace, and it can backfire, says Sprowl.

TOPICS AND timing prove critical. A ribald joke at the expense of your boss, for instance, could prove disastrous if your boss is within earshot, but unifying among your colleagues if the top dog is out to lunch. "Most people would find humor at a funeral inappropriate," says Sprowl, "and at a board meeting when important policy issues are being discussed, people aren't anxious to hear a joke either."

Richard A. Cosier, chairman of the department of management at Indiana University School of Business, says, "Too little humor and your contributions would be much less than they could be. Too much of it and you've got problems with the career and organization. Where that middle range lies depends on a lot of things — the nature of the organization, the kind of job it is, what the boss is like.

"The organizational culture is the key to what level of humor is appropriate. Some organizations we've looked at are so tight, mechanistic, formal and conservative that if you were humorous you'd be looked at as off-the-wall and superficial."

Sprowl cautions, "That harms a person's career development. If people use humor inappropriately, it damages professional credibility" — and that's no laughing matter.

Jokes differ by gender

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

"There's not enough of it (humor) — especially for women," declares Jean Lipman-Blumen, professor of public policy and organizational behavior at the Claremont (Calif.) Graduate School.

"There is a difference," she adds, "in the kinds of humor that women and men can use in the workplace. Men can tell off-color jokes, and they're seen as kind of good guys if they do. If women tell the same kind of joke, there's a gasp. Joan Rivers-type humor is totally off limits for most women in the workplace — but not for men."

University of Connecticut communications Professor John Parrish Sprowl says his recent survey of 270 men and women confirms that males and females not only find different things funny, but they use humor in different ways.

"Males almost always find sex funny. Not that females don't, but they find more humor in everyday events ... Men find that sort of thing silly and stupid. ... To the extent that we use humor for group cohesion, as long as you have males in the executive suite ... it's going to be difficult for the women to tap into that male boardroom humor."

What works best for both men and women, according to Lipman-Blumen, is humor that's a little self-deprecating. "You're conveying to the other person that you don't think that you are all so superior. That sets other people and colleagues at ease."

Bridal registeries ease gift giving

Copley News Service

An important part af any wedding celebration is the giving — and receiving — of gifts. This can pose difficulties for both the person giving the present and for the bridal couple — the gift giver may not know what to buy and may be uncomfortable asking for advice.

Bridal registeries are one of the best ways to avoid this problem.

Couples sail into sea of matrimony

By SID MOODY
Associated Press

AP Laserphoto

A couple stands aboard a 36-foot sailboat off the coast of Maine to exchange wedding vows.

The advantages of getting married on a 36-foot sailboat may not spring immediately to mind. They do, however, exist.

Not suprisingly, I had never considered them. I do own a 36-foot sailboat but had long since been married. On shore.

But when some friends in Maine announced they were going to marry while we were cruising those waters and were going to do it on my boat, it was a clear and present challenge to vessel and crew.

At least it was not one of those Fort Benning Basic sorts of ceremonies where the couple exchanges vows while sky diving out of a plane.

Boats, at least those still floating, are exemplars of survival. This one had survived the Atlantic, the Caribbean and innumerable sounds, bays and rivers. It surely could navigate an entirely unforeseen body of water, the Sea of Matrimony. A little contemplation, a little rum, a little more contemplation established that she was admirably suited for the voyage.

For one thing, a sailboat is an ideal structure from which to fly flags. It has a mast. We hoisted a whole set of code flags, a Maryland state flag that once flew over Spiro Agnew's Capitol and, in honor of the groom's Dutch father, the flag of the Netherlands Antilles. You can't have enough flags for a wedding.

A boat wedding obviates the need for a rehearsal. Nothing that happens on a boat can be predicted in advance, anyway.

There need be no concern that the respective friends of bride and groom won't mingle. On a 36-foot boat there is no room to do anything else but mingle.

This means, also, that the bride and groom can pare the guest list down to the ultimate hard core of friends and relatives. Those who may feel snubbed can be mollified by explaining there weren't enough life vests to go around. They'll understand and may even thank you for leaving them on shore.

There is no need for worrying about getting to the church on time. Rather, the captain must get the church to the wedding on time. That's his problem.

The possibilities of floral decoration are limitless. This being high summer in Maine, the ladies of the crew went ashore and gleaned the fields for black-eyed Susans, Queen Anne's lace and other wildflowers. They were tied with twine, which boats have an inexhaustible supply of, to stanchions, lifelines and rigging, which boats also have an inexhaustible supply of.

Most boats do not have organs or even room for the bride's flute-playing niece. Music, therefore, can be as orchestral as the couple desires, played over the ship's tape recorder. No charge, no hurt feelings by the church organist about your selected favorites over his.

This particular ceremony took place in the cockpit. The minister, a notary, stood in the companionway. This arrangement allows for any number of allusions to "mates for life," "the seas of life," "safe havens" and other matrimonial-maritime metaphors of which there are millions.

Once the ceremony is concluded, the customary inventory of a boat is ideal to fuel a celebration. Ice in the icebox where champagne has been cooling. Fog bells, whistles, horns, flares, bos'n pipes. And, should the yacht be a racer, a starting cannon.

The wedding was such a success I have since bought a huge Episcopalean flag for repeat performances. The same supply house also stocks Vatican and Israeli flags should those faiths be involved.

Have boat, will marry.

Weddings stretched over three days

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Here comes the bride all dressed in white. Here comes the bride again dressed in Nikes. And again in a bathing suit, in jeans, a cocktail dress, a life preserver for white-water rafting. This is the age of the weekend wedding, the wedding that lasts longer than some marriages.

Besides the traditional ceremony and reception, these three-day celebrations typically include a series of dinners, brunches, barbecues and sports events. When they aren't throwing rice, wedding guests may be swinging tennis racquets, waterskiing or running bases in a Brides vs. Grooms softball game.

Golf was the game when a New York couple — Deborah Ambrose, a free-lance art director, and David Wismer, a vice president of the Doyle Dane Bernbach advertising agency — were married in Pinehurst, N.C.

The bride's parents live on the grounds of the Pinehurst Country Club, which has six golf courses. This allowed the bride and her attendants to tee off on the wedding morning without being glimpsed by the groom and his attendants as they played on another course.

"It's bad luck to see the groom before the ceremony," said the bride, who later changed from shorts and a T-shirt to a wedding dress of white moire taffeta with a 9-foot train.

Like the bridal dress itself, the current weekend wedding vogue reflects "something old" — as old as 16th-century Europe, historians say — as well as "something new."

ONE NEW thing is that hotels and resorts are offering low weekend rates and other inducements to the bridal couple and their far-flung guests.

"The weekend wedding is a definite trend," said Sean Handerhan, a spokesman for Marriott Hotels and Resorts. "As hotels get smarter and lower their weekend rates, people are saying, 'Why not?' It's the same thing that's happening with the airlines."

Another new thing is that brides are no longer so young and blushing. A quarter of a century ago the average bride was 19.8 years old. Today she is 23.2, and her groom is 25.5.

"We know they're sleeping together and probably living together, so the wedding night is not the focal point of these weddings," said Barbara Tober, editor in chief of Bride's magazine. "The focal point is the joining together of two families, an intensive experience that may be teamed up with an anniversary, a birthday party or other family celebration."

For divorced parents, the weekend wedding gives everyone a chance to entertain. "The bride's father and his new wife can give the reception, and the bride's mother and her new husband can do the brunch the next day," Tober said. "If the groom's parents are divorced that may mean two more parties."

Some traditionalists frown on all these parties and on bridal couples who do not disappear after the cake is cut, but hang around and even show up the next day for an encore. One who cannot bear to look upon their faces, however happy, is Judith Martin, author of "Miss Manners' Guide to Excruciatingly Correct Behavior."

"This must be discouraged," she said, "no matter how long they have lived together and how short a time they have off from work."

YET HISTORIANS say this is hardly a new wrinkle in weddings. "This sounds very much like what we call the 'big wedding,' which was prevalent in 16th-, 17th- and 18th-century England and in Colonial America," said John R. Gillis, a Rutgers University professor and an authority on European social change.

Gillis, who describes such weddings in his scholarly book "For Better, for Worse: British Marriages, 1600 to the Present," said there were days and days of dancing, feasting and sporting events such as wrestling, but no honeymoons. Honeymoons were not invented until the Victorians came along.

"These weddings," he said, "served lots of purposes — exchanging gossip, mending fences and starting new fights. Weddings were famous for fights. People drank too much."

Fights were not mentioned in talks with young couples around the country whose weddings went on all weekend. But other parallels emerged between weddings old and new on such matters as who plans the wedding and who pays.

Parents played no part in the so-called "big weddings" of old, which were planned by the couple and paid for by the guests. As Gillis tells it, "The bride would sit at the feast with a bowl on her lap, and people would drop in pennies or gifts before taking a place at the table."

Parents have it harder now, of course, especially the bride's parents, who traditionally pay the wedding bills. The average cost of a formal wedding is $6,000, and a big-city affair may range from $10,000 to $15,000.

With weekend weddings, however, the groom's parents typically pay for other parties along with family members and friends.

THE COUPLE also chips in. Two graphic designers, Karen Trittipo and David Freedman, played luncheon hosts at a New Yorkrestaurant last fall after playing softball in Central Park with some of their 85 wedding guests.

It was Brides vs. Grooms, with both fathers pitching and both mothers cheering from the bench. The bride, who attached white flowers and a veil to her red baseball cap, headed a lineup that included a sister, an aunt, an uncle, cousins, coworkers and friends. Batting for the groom, whose T-shirt bore a white boutonniere, were his family and friends. The Grooms won, 15-11.

The couple was presented with a trophy. A yellow softball was passed around and solemnly signed. And then the guests, who had traveled from such places as Dayton, Ohio, and Alamo, Calif., set off for lunch and a sightseeing tour.

Bachelor parties — his and hers — are part of the weekend wedding, although the activities are likely to be more rigorous than merely raising a beer mug.

"Barb's taking her group golfing while my group and I go biking," said Kevin Owen, whose marriage to Barbara Bostick is to be held in Aspen, Colo., over the Fourth of July weekend.

Owen, the sales manager of a resort association, said he did not know precisely how many of the 100 guests would be horseback riding in the Rockies or white-water rafting.

HE ADDED, however, that most guests are signing up for both exotic events as well as more mundane ones, such as a trip to town for disco dancing after the fireworks display.

"People are flying in from California, North Carolina, Atlanta, Ohio, Michigan — all over," he said. "If they're spending all that time and money, we want them to have some neat things to do."

As for the bridal couple, Owen echoed the view of many: "You want a chance to visit with people you're meeting for the first time and people you haven't seen for years. You don't want to stand in a reception line, shake hands and then blow town."

Not all weekend weddings start out that way. Gunnar Knapp, a University of Alaska economics professor, and Alice Tower, a schoolteacher, were thinking smaller when they sent out invitations to their wedding last July in Anchorage. They were expecting only a handful of acceptances from "outside," which is how Alaskans refer to the rest of the world.

"We're coming!" cried 50 people from outside, many of them college friends of the groom, a Harvard University alumnus, or of the bride, a graduate of Middlebury College.

Thus, like many other grooms, Knapp became a wedding travel agent. He met incoming planes, rented cars and set up a "wedding village" in a mountainside condominium complex.

He created a "Great Wedding Handbook," complete with maps, local lore and salmon fishing tips. He and his mother-in-law wrote an operetta with some help from Gilbert and Sullivan. It was based on the couple's courtship and performed at the one of a profusion of parties.

There was no honeymoon. There was, in fact, no moon — only the midnight sun of mid-July as guests danced and sang and rarely slept.

Nobody hurried home because there was an even longer wedding the next week when Mrs. Knapp's brother, Steve Tower, married Janice Tanaka.

"For a week before and a week after the wedding they and 15 friends from Dartmouth drove around in a van, fishing, canoeing and river rafting," Knapp said. "But that's another story — the two-week wedding on wheels."

Lifestyle policies

The policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to run. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing on forms available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with bridal announcements, but are not required. Portraits of the either the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

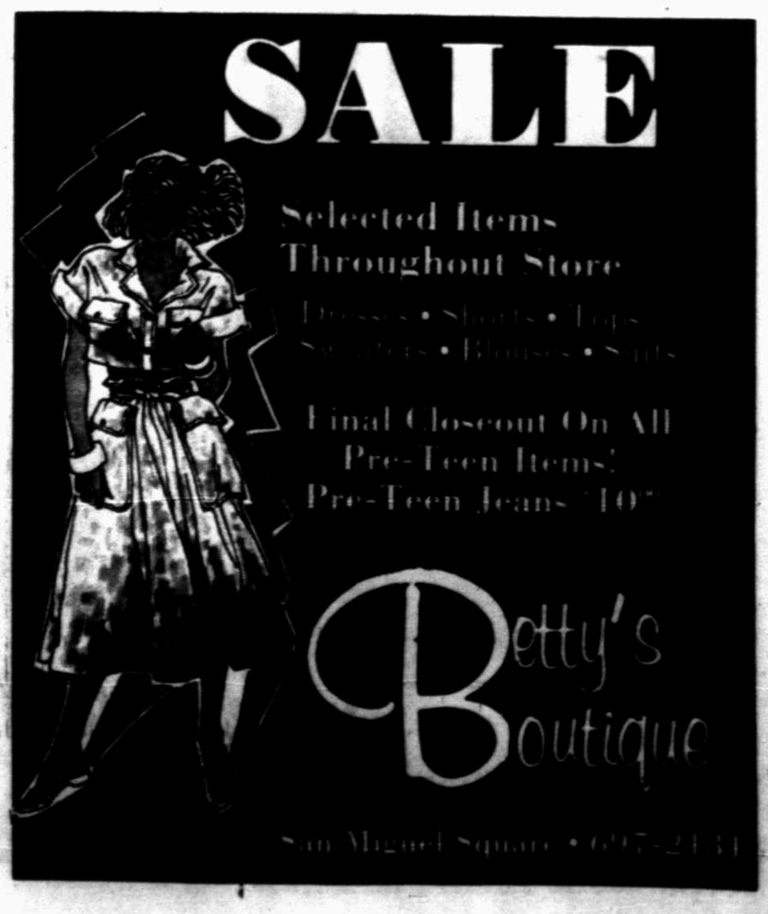

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Quality reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

DEAR ABBY

Widow's fantasy risky

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a woman of 62, widowed a year, after a long and happy marriage. Fortunately I have many supportive friends who have made my loss more bearable by their concern and attention.

My problem concerns two longtime friends of my husband. Both have come on to me with pompous offers to alleviate my "sexual frustrations." Can you imagine such unmitigated gall?

One I was able to deal with in short order. But the other is more persistent. I am unable to avoid him because his wife is a very good friend of mine and we see each other often, so I have been indulging in the following fantasy:

I set the time for our rendezvous, leaving the door to my house unlocked. He enters my house and gropes his way to my dimly lit bedroom, which I have generously sprayed with Chanel No. 5. As he approaches my bed, I reach up and turn on the bright overhead light. I am lying draped in my late husband's old government-issue bathrobe. My face is devoid of makeup, my hair is in rollers and my partial plate is on the bedside table. I smile widely, revealing the large hole left when I lost a front tooth in a skiing accident years ago. As I open my arms, my bathrobe falls open, revealing the orthopedic corset I wear to relieve the chronic pain of a bad back. "Come to me," I whisper huskily ...

How's that for a seductive scene? Of course, I doubt if I'd ever carry it out — or should I? — PAT IN PORTLAND

DEAR PAT: I don't recommend it. But as I read your fantasy, I fantasized the following: The egomaniac in your fantasy was not discouraged and proceeded to have his way with you, and then I saw you explaining to his widow why her beloved husband suffered a coronary in your heavily scented boudoir.

DEAR ABBY: For many years it has been my custom to attend early church service followed by breakfast at a nice restaurant.

Recently a new waitress has been hired who must literally shower herself in perfume. Abby, don't food handlers realize that we taste only sweet, sour, bitter and salt, and most of our enjoyment comes from the aroma? Bacon and eggs that taste like "essence of rose petals," or whatever, is neither what we expect nor find pleasant.

This woman does not look like the type who would take kindly to criticism, so I am quietly taking my business elsewhere.

Perhaps I am one in a million who finds this offensive, but I still find moderation in all things a good practice. — SNIFFED OUT

DEAR SNIFFED: It's unfair to the establishment to take your business elsewhere without explanation. The manager would welcome your complaint. So, in the spirit of helpfulness for the establishment and the waitress, speak up. (It's her livelihood, so she might appreciate your candor.)

DEAR ABBY: I was recently married and received as gifts a number of checks. One of these checks bounced. Ms. "L" who gave us this check was suddenly laid off from her job shortly after she sent the check. Nothing has been said by either her or us, and now I'm wondering what to do.

The bank has probably notified Ms. L of her charges for insufficient funds, so should I thank her for the gift or ignore it? And should I mention the fact that it bounced? — MINUS ONE

DEAR MINUS: Thank her for having remembered you. To ignore her good intentions would be rude. By now she knows her check bounced. To mention it would be unkind.

(Is your social life in a slump? Lonely? Get Abby's updated, revised and expanded booklet, "How to Be Popular" — for people of all ages. Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

IMPROVE YOUR IMAGE

Text and Graphic by Elizabeth Edwin

"Have I said anything today that you didn't already know?" asked Lee Milteer, career development strategist, following the first half of a National Image Workshop for Women on Image and Self-Projection.

"No. I've just said it in my own style, and I hope each one of you will be able to apply some of these strategies to your own lives and professions."

Ms. Milteer was in Midland recently presenting a day-long workshop for women on some of the career strategies she learned during her climb up the ladder of success. Ms. Milteer is president of her own company, Lee Milteer Associates — Career Development Strategists, and is a contract speaker for Career-Tracks, producers of the workshop.

Her Midland appearance was part of an 85-city tour of the United States and Canada. She has counseled and trained professionals for corporations such as AT&T, Xerox and General Electric, as well as for numerous small businesses and individual groups.

Ms. Milteer, who calls herself a "PWD" (Person Without Degree), advised the approximately 35 women attending that to be successful they must set their goals, work to achieve them and learn to "sell themselves."

"Dust off your dreams and realize you can be anything you want to be," Ms. Milteer said, "if you are willing to pay the price and take some calculated risks."

According to Ms. Milteer, success is 80 percent attitude and 20 percent knowledge and most people are using only 5 to 15 percent of their potential, leaving at least 85 percent of a person's potential untapped.

"We must dig into our untouched resources and use them to our benefit. Decide what you want. If what you desire is to be the best mother, then that is success for you. If you desire to be in real estate, then be the best real estate agent you can be and that is success for you. But whatever you do, desire to be the best at it," Ms. Milteer said.

OFTEN, SHE pointed out, being the best in a chosen field requires extra work beyond what is required of you.

"Your bosses' job is to get you to do as much work as possible for the least amount of money," Ms. Milteer said. "You need to let you boss know what you are doing to improve your upward mobility. Let them know if you take extra courses, such as this, to improve yourself. If you put in overtime on a project, try to find a way to let him or her know; if you make a presentation on your own time about your business or attend a function to represent your firm, send him or her a memo about the event.

"Keep an edge over the others in your office because it can make the difference," she said. "You have to get out of the pack."

In today's competitive business world, being successful requires more than working for the right company, having the right degree or knowing the right people, Ms. Milteer said. It takes promoting yourself, whether you are self-employed or a member of an established firm.

"If you work hard and do a great job, then sit back and wait for someone to notice, you are going to be waiting a long time," she said. "You have to learn to make yourself visible and make your accomplishments outweigh your screw-ups."

ONE WAY to stack the odds in your favor, according to Ms. Milteer, is to ask those who compliment you on a job well-done to write a letter to your boss telling what the job was and their opinion of your performance.

"When it is time for your boss to review your performance, he pulls out your personnel file and goes through it. If all he sees are the negative notations that he has put in of when you screwed up, it's not very likely you will get the raise or promotion you may deserve," Ms. Milteer said. "People have a tendency to note the negative performances, but not to take time to do the same for a job well-done. That is where you have to help the boss out.

"It may be hard at first to ask people to brag about you, but you must follow up on this and see that the letters or notations of your achievements are recorded," she said. "Most of us are brought up to feel shy about our accomplishments, that it is unacceptable to do anything but wait for someone else to notice our achievements.

"It seems we think our accomplishments are like a hidden gold mine and must be discovered. Wrong! No one is gold mining for your career," she said.

Another way Ms. Milteer recommended to help "sell yourself" was to hire a personal public relations consultant to work for you. However, since most individuals can't afford this avenue early in their careers, she offered some tips on how to do the basic ground work of self-promotion on their own.

In "selling yourself," visibility is a top priority. To become more visible, Ms. Milteer suggests getting to know as many people as possible by joining organizations and clubs and becoming involved, not just another name on the membership list.

OTHER WAYS she suggested of increasing visibility included attending trade shows and public events attended by the leaders of your profession, being seen and associated with successful people, taking on extra duties above your job description (but keep a log of these) and instigating an event.

Creating a positive image of yourself, to yourself and to your co-workers, is also important, she said.

"When you get up in the morning, look in the mirror and say to yourself, 'I am beautiful. I am intelligent. I am good at my job. Today is going to be a great day and nobody is going to get me down.' — Now, after you get up off the floor from laughing, say it to yourself two more times and spend the day believing it," Ms. Milteer said.

"You have to realize that you will talk to yourself worse than you would allow anyone else to — and when you have nothing to do you think back on that blunder you made 10 years ago and here we go again, 'Let's beat myself some more,' " she said. "You have to learn to cancel the negative thoughts and reprogram yourself to be positive.

"We are all talented. We are all unique. Yet we take our very worst traits and compare them with the very best traits of others. You're not being fair to yourself," she said.

To begin a reprogramming process, a person should start by identifying their weaknesses and then begin to reprogram with positive reinforcement statements.

For example, public speaking is the number-one fear (ranked above snakes and death) among professionals in the United States. To overcome this fear, a person should visualize him- or herself making a presentation to a group of 10 people and slowly work their way up to a group of 100. After each presentation, they should add the positive reinforcement of imagining themselves receiving applause and congratulations.

"This process won't work over night, but after 21 to 30 days it will begin to happen," Ms. Milteer said. "But be reasonable and don't visualize the impossible. I can be 5-foot-6 and visualize myself 5-foot-9 all I want to, but it's never going to come true. On the other hand, if I weigh 20 pounds more than I desire, I can visualize myself at my desired weight and work toward it and know that it can happen."

"Dare to be different. You can't follow the norm, you must shine," she announced. "You must look at what you want to do, set a goal and then go after that goal believing you can achieve it. When someone asks you 'What's new?' tell them what you have been doing and always be positive. Show interest in what they are doing as well," Ms. Milteer said. "And another thing, don't assume your boss knows what you are doing, tell him or her and show enthusiasm in your job."

To help keep yourself on a positive note, she recommends associating with positive people.

"Have you ever been in a terrific mood and run into ones of those people that can automatically bring you down?" Ms. Milteer asked her audience. "Those are the people you need to slowly weed out of your life. You also have to learn that not everything you do will succeed and realize that it is okay to fail.

"We will learn more from our failures than from many of our successes and we can use these failures to make situations work out for the best. You must have desire, commitment and a lot of persistence to be successful," Ms. Milteer said.

Citing her own past, she said, "When I first started my business, I made $3,000 the first year and spent $37,000. I sold my house, my stock, my jewelry and borrowed money. It took me three years, but I stuck it out. There were times when I wanted to quit trying and get a real job, but I had friends that continued to encourage me. They would tell me 'Lee, you can do it,' and I have."

"The motto I live by is 'Fake it 'til you make it,' " Ms. Milteer said. "So I didn't hold back. You have to look and act the position you want before people will believe you can handle it. I updated my look, because if your fashion is dated people perceive you as having dated ideas, and I told myself every day that I could make it. You have to take charge or you will suffer from society's stereotypes."

One of the best pieces of advice Ms. Milteer said she had ever received came from one of her mentors: "Opportunity will never wait for you. You must prepare for it or it will go to someone else," she said.

Ms. Milteer advised, "You must develop your own style to fit your personality and profession. Your life is made of options. Mold it and make it work for you."

Survey: Few workers plan job change

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (UPI) — Fewer people are changing jobs this year, according to a recent poll conducted at Walt Disney World's Epcot Center. When more than 6,000 visitors there were asked, "How likely is it that you will change jobs in the next 12 months?" only 23 percent responded favorably.

An overwhelming 69 percent said they intended to stay put for the next year, while 8 percent did not respond.

The survey also showed that high school graduates are more likely to stick with their jobs than college graduates. Among the high school graduates, 71 percent said they expected to stay put and 19 percent said they probably would change jobs. Among the college graduates, 67 percent said they weren't likely to change jobs and 28 percent said they thought they would move on.

Poll shows men still have work advantage

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman's place is outside the home, according to people who responded to a Media General-Associated Press poll.

The increasing number of working women was seen as a positive trend by nearly half of the 1,473 adult Americans in the poll, while only one-quarter thought it was harmful.

However, when it comes to hiring and promotions, many of the respondents said they thought men still had an advantage over women.

All other things being equal, a man has a better chance of winning promotion than a woman, according to 55 percent of the respondents. Only one-third thought men and women had equal chances of being promoted.

Forty-four percent of the respondents said a man had a better chance of being hired than a woman, while 37 percent thought men and women had equal opportunities. Twelve percent said the woman would have an advantage, and the rest were unsure.

The poll also found:

■ Only 22 percent said they would prefer to work for a man; nearly three-quarters of the respondents said the sex of their boss was unimportant to them.

■ More than 9 in 10 respondents said spouses should share household cleaning equally when both work full-time outside the home. Yet in 57 percent of the households where both partners worked, women did most of the cleaning.

■ Younger people were more likely than older people to accept women in the workplace. While 60 percent of 18- to 34-year-olds said the increasing number of working women was a good trend, only 36 percent of 55- to 64-year-olds felt that way. Only 28 percent of those over 65 years old thought it was a good trend.

■ Fifty-eight percent of the respondents said women should have an equal chance to do any job men could do, while 39 percent said there were certain jobs women shouldn't do. Cited most often by those who didn't want women in certain jobs were heavy labor and construction, police and fire services, and other dangerous jobs like mining, combat or working with chemicals and explosives.

The number of women in the U.S. work force has more than doubled since the late 1950s, from 20.6 million in 1958 to 47 million at the end of 1985, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. In 1958, women comprised one-third of the work force; last year, they accounted for 44 percent of all workers.

An equal percentage of men and women said it was good that more women were working outside the home, but women were far more likely than men to say that men held an advantage in hiring and promotions.

Nearly two-thirds of the women said that a man had a better chance than a woman of being promoted when all else was equal. Less than half the men felt the same way.

In hiring, 51 percent of women and only 37 percent of men said a man had an advantage over a woman of equal skill.

Men and women also differed somewhat on who they would prefer to work for. Seventeen percent of men and 27 percent of women would rather work for a man. Seventy-seven percent of men and 67 percent of women said they had no preference. And 3 percent of men and 4 percent of women would rather work for a woman.

Respondents in the Media General-Associated Press poll included a random, scientific sampling of 1,473 adults across the country April 3-11. As with all sample surveys, the results of Media General-AP telephone polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variation in the sample.

For a poll based on about 1,400 interviews, the results are subject to an error margin of 3 percentage points either way because of chance variations in the sample. That is, if one could have questioned all Americans with telephones, there is only 1 chance in 20 that the findings would vary from the results of polls such as this one by more than 3 percentage points.

Of course, the results could differ from other polls for several reasons. Differences in exact wording of questions, in the timing of interviews and in the interview methods could also cause variations.

Media General Inc., a communications company based in Richmond, Va., publishes the Richmond Times-Dispatch and the Richmond News Leader; the Tampa (Fla.) Program launched to attract students to teaching careers

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — A pilot project to attract top students to careers as high school math and science teachers will be launched this fall at Cornell University.

A $500,000 grant from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation will support from 10 to 12 students a year in response to the fact that "fewer and fewer of the so-called 'best and brightest' are choosing careers as secondary school teachers," according to Joe B. Bail, chairman of the Department of Education at Cornell.

One of the program features is financial support, including loan forgiveness of up to $2,500 a year for needy students, provided they teach for two years after graduating.

GAME RULES:

The Midland Reporter-Telegram, A.M. 1510 KMND Memory Music T.V. Game is based on skill in identifying (6) T.V. show theme songs each week. There will be 12 weekly games beginning Monday, April 7th and ending Friday, June 27th. There will be weekly 1st, 2nd, and 3rd place winners.

Two excerpts from each of the (6) T.V. show theme songs will be broadcast over A.M. 1510 KMND each week. Excerpts will be broadcast at least six, times daily between 6:00 AM and 6:00 PM Monday through Friday. Each show's two excerpts will be broadcast at least twice during the week, with both excerpts from each theme (12 total) being broadcast at least once by 6:00 PM Thursday of each week.

Excerpts will be numbered one through six. The answer (the title of the show) must be printed or typed on the correspondingly numbered line on the official Midland Reporter-Telegram A.M. 1510 KMND. Memory Music TV Game Entry Form. Each week's official entry form will be published Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Hand drawn facsimilies of the entire entry form will be acceptable, BUT MACHINE DUPLICATED COPIES ARE PROHIBITED.

CONTESTANTS MAY ENTER ONLY ONCE PER WEEK. The weekly game number must be marked on the lower left of the envelope on the address side. Envelopes must be postmarked by midnight Friday of each week. NO POSTAGE MACHINE CANCELLED ENVELOPES WILL BE ACCEPTED. ONLY ENVELOPES BEARING THE CORRECT POSTAGE AND CANCELLED BY THE U.S. POSTAL SERVICE OR ENTRIES HAND DELIVERED TO THE CONTEST ADDRESS BY 6:00 AM SATURDAY WILL BE ACCEPTED.

The weekly first prize will be awarded to the entrant with the most or all (6) TV shows correctly identified. In the case that more than one entrant has all the shows correctly identified a drawing will be held. 2nd and 3rd will be awarded to the two entrants with the most correct answers respectively. Again in the case more than one entrant having identified all (6) TV shows, a drawing will be held to determine 2nd and 3rd place winners.

The correct answer and the theme song itself along with the two excerpts will be played back twice on A.M. 1510 KMND Saturday morning between 6:00 A.M. and noon. Answers will also be published in Sunday's Midland Reporter Telegram. Weekly winners will be announced each Wednesday afternoon by A.M. 1510 KMND and in the Midland Reporter-Telegram

It is not necessary to purchase the Midland Reporter-Telegram to play the game. Copies of the MRT are available for free examination at the Midland Reporter-Telegram, 201 East Illinois and the Midland County Public Library.

All winners must sign a release form acknowledging that both the Midland Reporter-Telegram and A.M. 1510 KMND shall have the right to publish, publicize and broadcast his/her name, picture, voice and the fact that he/she won a prize. If the winner is a minor, a parent or guardian must sign a minor's release form prior to the prize being awarded. Winners are responsible for all taxes incurred on prizes.

Judge's decisions will be final in any interpretation of the rules of this game. Employees of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Bakcor Broadcasting, Inc. and members of their immediate families are ineligible. The Grand Prize, a cruise on The Mississippi or Delta Queen Steamboat is worth up to $4,000. Does not include bar tab, shore tours or gift shop purchases. It may be used at your convenience based on a 30 day space available basis. It includes round trip airfare to New Orleans.

The winner of the cruise will be determined by a drawing at the end of all 12 weekly games. All weekly 1st, 2nd, and 3rd prize winners will be entered in the drawing.

MISTER ROGERS

Facing disasters

By FRED ROGERS with BARRY HEAD

Fire flood, wind, earthquake. When communities are burned out, washed away, knocked down, what becomes of the children who survive? Out of the love that comes with being a parent also comes, for most of us, a lurking fear that something terrible will happen to our children.

And tragic things do happen to us all: A house catches fire, there's a car accident, sudden illness occurs, there are deaths, divorces. How can we try to keep these traumatic events from becoming lasting emotional disasters for our children?

Even though that seems like avery large question, there are some interesting clues. After World War II, a group of British psychiatrists and psychologists studied the lingering effects of the London bombings on young children.

The findings of the study were complex and reflected the individuality of human nature, but one strong theme emerged again and again: The children who were best able to resolve their feelings of terror about that time in their lives were the children who were not separated from their parents. That was true even for those children who were not evacuated to safety within the city and who weathered the fall force of the London "blitz."

To me, thats a dramatic statement about the importance of separation in young children's lives. It suggests that by far the most immediate and urgent concerns of early childhood have more to do with the consistency of close relationships than with events — no matter how "traumatizing" adults may believe those events to be.

An incident of a differant kind seemed to carry out the same message. In a Midwestern town in the tornado belt, a kindergarten teacher was aware of her children's mounting anxieties as television carried tornado warnings and pictures of tornado destruction in nearby areas. This teacher felt it might be helpful to talk openly about tornadoes.

The more she told them about tornadoes, the more they seemed to want to know, until one day she mentioned that if ever a tornado happened while they were at school, she would be right there with them to help keep them safe until they could get to their parents.

After hearing what they really wanted to know, they seemed to lose interest in the whole question.

I was spared from any great disasters when I was little, but there was plenty of news of them, in newspapers and on the radio, and there were graphic images of them in newsreels.

For me, as for all children, the world could have come to seem a scary place to live. But I felt secure with my parents, and they let me know that we were safely together whenever I showed concern about accounts of alarming events in the world.

There was something else my mother did that I've always remembered: "Always look for the helpers," she'd tell me. "There's always someone who is trying to help." I did, and I came to see that the world is full of doctors and nurses, police and firemen, volunteers, neighbors and friends who are ready to jump in to help when things go wrong.

In every generation, some of our children will always encounter the truly fearful aspects of life. Unfortunately, almost all children nowadays will encounter them vividly and repeatedly on television. These encounters leave their marks, as all encounters do, but marks are not necessarily scars.

I believe that one of the surest ways to keep the scars to a minimum is for caregivers to understand that what's most important to young children is to be with the people they love — at least to know that they're available and to help them see that the world is peopled with many concerned and caring adults.

Senior Center hosts bridge tournament

Thirty-two local bridge players competed in a tournament that began at 1 p.m. June 14 in the Midland Senior Citizens Center.

Winners were J.W. Cook Jr., first; Margaret Ratcliffe, second; Mary Nelson, third; Mary Johnson, fourth; and Marie Jennings, fifth.

Trophies were awarded to first-, second- and third-place winners; fourth- and fifth-place winners received ribbons.

Refreshments were served during the event, which was sponsored by the Senior Center.

More companies granting maternity leave

NEW YORK (UPI) — Many top corporations are embracing the idea of giving new mothers — and fathers — lengthy, unpaid parental leaves with job guarantees, a report on 384 companies said Wednesday.

Other firms have expressed interest in the program, according to the report from Catalyst, an independent New York research group that studies workplace and family issues.

The 384 corporations studied for the report range from those with sales of $500 million or less to those with sales over $2 billion.

The unpaid leave is beyond the paid disability time off that an estimated 95 percent of the companies provide for maternity, the report said.

The report said 63 percent of the companies give 5-to-8 weeks disability leave; 32.2 percent give 9-to-12 weeks and 4.7 percent give 1-to-4 weeks, according to the report.

"The Corporate Guide to Parental Leaves" also said that 37 percent of companies studied offer unpaid leave with a job guarantee to new fathers and adoptive parents. But the practice is not usually called paternity or parental leave. Instead, it is covered under the company's general personal leave or leave-of-absence policy.

The unpaid leaves offered to men were similar in length to those offered to women.

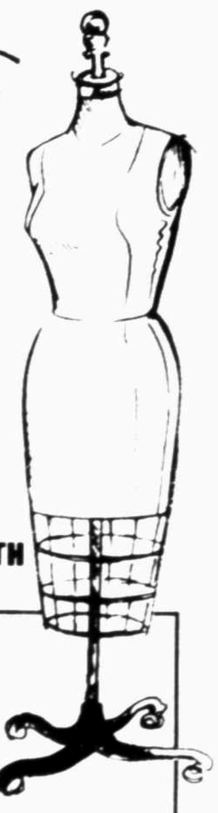

Dr. Phyllis Silverman, senior program advisor at Catalyst, who conducted study upon which the guide is based, said: "Human resources policy planners are beginning to recognize the huge recruiting and training investment made in female employees.

"Policy planners are now grappling with how to protect that investment and continue to recruit and retain top talent and still run a business."

The guide contains information from firms across the nation and strategies for designing, modifying and evaluating a parental leave policy, Silverman said.

The Catalyst study also included information gathered in discussions with women and some men who had taken parental leaves within the past five years. The meetings with the women were in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Chicago, Atlanta, New York. In addition, there were phone interviews with similar women in Dallas.

ASK DR. RUTH

Woman's expectations may be too demanding for boyfriend

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Westheimer

Q. My last lover was great in bed, good for several times every night. Now I'm with a really much nicer guy but he makes love once with real enthusiasm, and then he either seems to be working at it or he gives up. After that one great time, he isn't enjoying. Should he see a doctor?

A. Maybe he'll need a doctor if he goes on trying to live up to your expectations.

There are two good ways to ruin a good man. One is to get him down by always comparing him to some hero you gave up for some silly reason. The other is to push him to perform like some sexual athlete who used to come around but not any more.

Forget that other lover! No two men are alike. You can't order a standard model from Sears.

Learn a new way of love that grows naturally between you and this really much nicer guy, as you call him. Try for a while just making love once on any given night, maybe skipping a night now and then.

And try enjoying that one encounter more, with more touching, kissing, tenderness, foreplay, and a nice long holding and murmuring afterwards. Sometimes let him pleasure you without being aroused himself. Going round after round every night is not the only way, and plenty of couples say it isn't the best way.

Q. I'm a guy who likes his lovemaking in the morning after a night's sleep. I definitely prefer it then and I would like to beg off late at night. Do a lot of other people feel the same?

A. I see that you didn't find out about morning lovemaking from a sex therapist, because then you would know that this is the best time for many men because they are rested and because the testosterone level in their bodies is at its highest level.

Many couples are advised to get a good six to eight hours of sleep, wake up, freshen up a little, have a snack to quiet the stomach, and go back to bed. Then nobody is too tired to be interested, nobody loses interest halfway through, nobody falls asleep abruptly, leaving the other alone and feeling abandoned.

Since you seem to have found out by your own observation that morning lovemaking is for you, you may have a female bedmate to whom the whole idea is uninviting. She wants to sleep as late as she can, she thinks mornings are the pits, she doesn't feel lovely before noon, and so on. She hasn't heard that mornings have remade the sex lives of many couples. Give her time to let the idea sink in.

Q. My husband never initiates sex. That is always up to me, and I have to work at keeping him erect or forget it. Every other aspect of our marriage is perfect, but this gets me down. I am thinking of walking out when the kids have all flown the nest.

A. If you have decided to do that, no advice of mine is going to be of use.

If you have some interest in keeping this otherwise perfect marriage, why don't you explain that you feel a real need to be wooed, to be wanted, to be the object of the kind of attention you have been lavishing on him.

What you want is neither selfish nor unreasonable. You have been doing without an important part of the foreplay that nearly all women need in order to be aroused.

There is a chance, since men are not entirely dumb, that your husband suspects you of intending to leave him in the future. If he has reason to think that, he may see no reason to go all out to please you.

Q. Ever since my abortion, which was months ago, sex has been painful. Could this be caused by the abortion?

A. You must go to a gynecologist for a new examination to be sure that there is nothing wrong physically. While you are there, discuss your problem and explore the subject of another method of contraception for you.

If you are using hope for a contraceptive, you can become too worried and tense for lovemaking to be anything but painful. You may need a new method that you can put your trust in, so that you can overcome your fear of another unwanted pregnancy.

Women often perceive own bodies larger

Hearst News Service

The mind's eye often lies, especially when women rely on it to size up their waist, hips, cheeks or thighs, says Kevin Thompson, an assistant professor of psychology at the University of South Florida.

Of the 100 women Thompson interviewed on their self-perceptions concerning their weight, more than 95 percent perceived their bodies as one-fourth larger, on average, than they really were. The women overestimated their cheeks the most, followed by their waist, thighs and hips. Two females in five miscalculated their size by a big margin, considering at least one body part to be at least 50 percent heftier than it was.

Women with such distorted body images usually feel worse than others about their figures and about themselves, Thompson says. Self-esteem in males, however, doesn't seem to be determined by the way they judge their physiques, he says. Only 13 percent of the 30 men Thompson interviewed overestimated their body size.

None of the men and women men Thompson interviewed suffers from eating disorders such as anorexia and bulimia. Thompson plans to conduct followup research to determine whether distorted body perceptions lead to such maladies.

Thompson — whose work was highlighted in the April edition of "Psychology Today" — says two prevailing theories explain why people, especially women, overestimate their body sizes.

The first theory is that they have visual-spatial defects in the brain. Their perceptions are akin to looking through a car rear-view mirror that makes objects appear closer than they actually are. The second theory suggests that emotional insecurity motivates people to consider their body parts to be too large, and therefore unacceptable.

"I think that's probably related to culture and societal standards — putting almost anorexic females as models," Thompson says. "Though not overweight by comparison to someone very thin, the insecure woman is larger."

Dr. Lois Mueller, a psychologist, also blames society, particularly the media for promoting a "cultural neurosis" about never being thin enough. TV sex symbols who are unnaturally slender are held up as an ideal most women never can attain, she says.

"You take somebody like Joan Collins. Come on, you don't look like that in your 50s without some sort of starvation diet," Mueller says. "Women focus on their bodies because that's their primary way of gaining recognition and acceptance in this society. For women, being able to look 20 when they're 40 is a big accomplishment. For men, they may say, 'I have a paunch, but I'm going to be rich by the time I'm 40.' Men focus on achievements."

Independent, career-minded females tend to intimidate men, whose heads usually are turned by young girls with centerfold looks, Mueller says. That attitude has contributed "a great deal" to women's preoccupation with their beauty, or lack of it, she says. Generally, males aren't as insecure because females aren't sending a similar message — that looks make the man, the psychologist says.

While lack of self-confidence is both common and normal, it can be unhealthy if taken to the extreme, both Mueller and Thompson say.

"Most adolescents will say they have something wrong with their face or body," Mueller says. "It's a time when peer acceptance is important to them. They may stay home from the prom if they get a pimple. But the woman who can't go to the grocery store without full makeup has a problem with low self-esteem. If all your self-esteem is based on how you look, that's going to go downhill as you age."

Mueller encourages women to "get involved in life" and spend time developing attributes other than physical attractiveness.

"I think that has to be taught from early on," the psychologist says. "Mothers can do that job with their young children." Instead of always complimenting children on their looks, ask them, "What have you learned today.' Enter your daughter in a science fair instead of a beauty pageant."

Negative self-concepts born in childhood can continue to plague adults, even though they may have outgrown their objectionable features, Thompson says.

"I had some friends who were joggers and were thin, but they were worried about their weight. I found out they were overweight when they were younger and had kept that image of themselves."

Also installed were 14 other officers. Music was provided by A.D. Jackson of Fort Stockton, Sue Ellison, Doylene Rainey and Penny Stacy, junior past matron.

Assisting in the installation was Elaine Compton and Scott Compton, the officers' children, and Kelli Anne Keegan, their granddaughter. Registration was conducted by Miss Compton, Trudie Richburg and Margaret Yeager.

Sally Compton, Jean Fruge and the Rainbow Girls of Assembly No. 299 served refreshments afterward. The installation 115 members, family and friends attended.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF RETIRED PERSONS

Midland Chapter of American Association of Retired Persons met with John Atchison presiding. The invocation was given by Pappy Rasure. Atchison led in a salute to the flag.

A.C. Reeves introduced guest Barry Barter. There were 66 members present.

Leona Stump introduced singers from the Bellview Baptist Church. They were Lisa Stelle, Jan Stevenson, Janette Davis, Glenda Rhea, Loretta Lancaster, Gerry Adams, Debbie Horne, Anette Tallent, Amy Phoebe, Paula Shipp and Jaine Aldrin.

The minutes were read by Bertha Toon and Jessie Loch reported on the benefit garage sale to be July 8.

Oleta Mansell asked for kitchen help for three months. Lora Duke and Charlene Leishe volunteered.

Illnesses were reported and birthdays were announced. Marie Knight led in singing Happy Birthday.

Maurine Hickman named kitchen helpers Clarie Jessie, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Letchwar. The next meeting will be fun night June 30.

The Groovy Grannies

'Groovy Grannies' featured at luncheon

The Groovy Grannies from Bingham Dance Studio will be the special attraction at Midland Christian Women's Club's meeting scheduled for 11:15 a.m. July 1 at Green Tree Country Club. James and Debbie Nance will provide music for the luncheon, themed "The Show Must Go On."

Guest speaker Marsha Kothmann of San Angelo will discuss "Life Must Go On."

Cost of the luncheon will be $10. Nursery for pre-school children will be provided at Northwestern Baptist Church. Mothers are asked to bring sack lunches for their children. Drinks will be provided.

For luncheon and nursery reservations call 686-9277, 686-7453 or 682-5851 before noon Friday.

Midland Christian Women's Club has no dues and no formal membership. The club is non-denominational and open to all interested women.

Answering machine 'thoughtful'

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

About three years ago, my son, who lives in another state, got an answering machine. At first I resented it. I knew as sure as God made little green apples, that kid was lying in bed with the machine turned on, listening to me having an anxiety attack and loving it.

But after a while, the machine began to take on a human quality. It had such fine manners. It would say softly, "Hi, I'm not here right now, but if you would leave your name and your phone number, I'll get back to you as soon as I can. At the sound of the beep, you have 10 seconds. Have a good day now." My son never would have said that!

Somehow I couldn't bring myself to say what I had called for. ("You bum! Is your arm broken? I have stretch marks around my knees and you don't have five minutes to talk to your mother!") So, I ended up saying, "I know you're busy. I was just checking to see if you're alive. I hardly hurt at all today. You have a good day too."

Throughout the years, the machine and I continued to communicate on a regular basis. As I told my husband, "I've never had a relationship that was so satisfying. That little monkey was always there for me when I needed it. You know how you call some people and the phone rings and rings and rings ... not this one. Why, even our son used to brush me off. Someone was always honking a horn or a buzzer was going off or his car was being stolen as we spoke. But not the machine."

On Christmas in '84 it actually played "Silent Night" for me and before the beep wished me a Merry Christmas. It meant the world to me. It was such a sweet, simple thing to do. No whining around about how the gift was in the mail or how the airlines were booked and he couldn't get home ... just a sincere little electronic Christmas card.

Then one day, I think it was the spring of '85, I dialed the machine and heard it say, "You have reached 555-4455. I promise I'll return your call (God, I love integrity!). Got a little problem. The beep is broken, but if you'll just count to five and leave your name and number, I'll call you right back."

You'd have thought my son would have the decency to tell me the recorder was sick. I know him. He had probably abused it in some way, like dropping it from the stove or cutting off its current with its own cord. You know how kids are.

I called the recorder yesterday ... just to chat ... when a voice said, "Yeah?" I said, "Who is this?" The voice said, "It's your son. (It had been three years since I had heard his voice.) How's it goin'? Are you there, Mom?"

I told him I was waiting for the beep. He said I just caught him on his way out.

I called the recorder a little later and we had a nice chat.

Volunteers vital

BROCKTON, Mass. (AP) — Children need the help of retired citizens who — through volunteer work — can find an exciting new lease on life, says a board member of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

"It's an odd fact that both ends of the age spectrum suffer the most rejection," said Paula Young, cofounder of a direct marketing wig company.

"When the two are brought together there is often a mutual healing and bonding that takes place to improve the quality of life for both."

But Mrs. Young cautions the newcomer to volunteer work to ease in slowly, a few hours a week.

Public schools frequently need teacher assistants, career counselors and chaperones for student outings, she says, while both the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts need volunteers.

"If you have hobby skills like photography or sewing, woodworking or rug hooking," Mrs. Young advises, "you'll find an eager and appreciative audience in scouting.

"If you've spent a lifetime in boating, the Sea Scouts can use your help, and the Explorer Scout program covers just about every conceivable interest from Emergency Medical Services to local television production.

"The blend of children with a senior adult is always exciting. It is particularly rewarding for the retiree who is feeling rejected and suddenly find him or herself embroiled in the excitement and laughter of youth."

Study rates low-income women's outlook on age

Associated Press

A cross-cultural study of low-income women at mid-life indicates most of them believe 32 is the ideal age for a woman to be.

But the study, by a University of Michigan researcher, shows that black women tend to have more positive feelings about growing older than white women.

"They value their present age for the collective wisdom and maturity it brings — but the pleasure is accompanied by greater health problems and mental exhaustion," says Evelyn Barbee, assistant professor of nursing and anthropology at the university.

"The white women in the survey were more likely to mention the advantages of freedom and time for themselves after the children were grown. On the negative side, they worried more about their husband's health."

Preliminary findings show both black and white women who report being under stress feel older than their chronological age and express a desire to be much younger.

All women in the study lived in the Detroit area, with blacks averaging an income of $10,000 a year and whites a median of $15,000.

"This is a big discrepancy, considering that the two groups had similar education levels, and 35 percent of both groups had attended or graduated from college," notes the researcher, adding:

"One of the most disturbing findings was the isolation of these women. Two-thirds reported no club memberships."

Feed grains important

Copley News Service

Feed grains are among the most important agricultural commodities, comprising nearly 50 percent of total grain production and consumption. These grains — corn, barley, sorghum oats and millet — are planted on close to half of all land planted to grain. Global production in 1985/86 was about 816 million metric tons.

POOLING RESEARCH

Consortium personnel gathered this week to review data processed thus far in the Permian Basin Seismic Technology Development Project.

geophysical methods to create a possibly more precise surface predictor of subsurface changes in formational, rock type and reservoir characteristics — and hypothetically, as a direct surface indicator of hydrocarbon reservoirs.

Combining computerized and about seismic methods offers the potential of increased vertical resolution, enabling interpreters to identify more subtle changes in lithology and porosity.

By pooling economic and manpower resources, each company in the consortium is natural study area for the project.

The initial wellsite being studied by the group is Midland-based Davis & Carr Energy Co.'s No. 1 C C Nichols well in southern Dawson County, near Patricia in the northern Midland Basin.

Cooperating companies Teledyne Exploration Co. and Schlumberger Well Services shot and recorded multiple vertical seismic profiles (VSPs) using both compressional and shear wave energy sources and some digital sonic logs last December.

transfer this knowledge to surface data at non-control sites to improve the odds of exploratory success," notes G.W. (Bill) Conrad, West Texas regional manager for Teledyne.

THIS WEEK, the PBSTDP held its first organizational meeting in Midland to update the group on progress in processing the Davis & Carr well data and explain the short-term plans for the research team to representatives of the 30 companies which have contributed $5,000 for the first phase of the project.

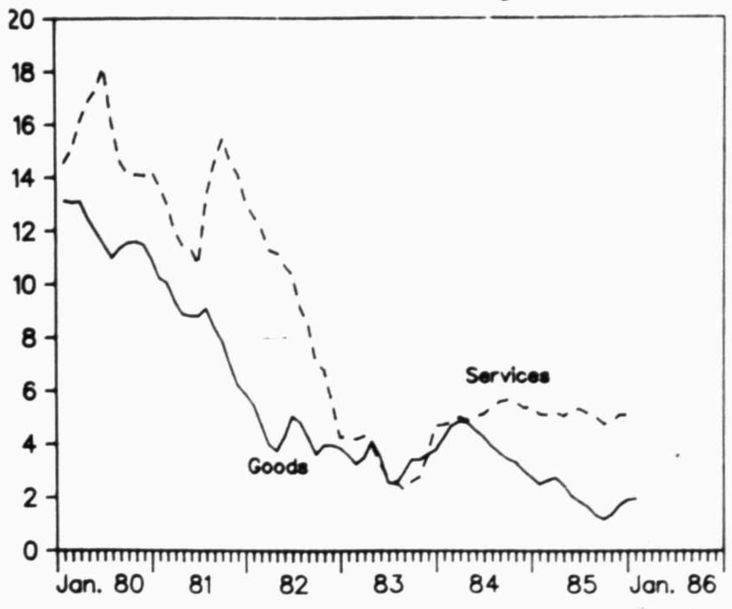

The group expects to meet again in three to six months to evaluate advances in processing the data and discuss future directions for the research effort.

Low oil prices distort U.S. inflation outlook

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

ECONOMY

Misleading signals from the traditional measures and indexes for monitoring inflation will challenge economic management in 1986.

RepublicBank Corp. economist William E. Gibson explains that the challenge for 1986 centers on the fact that inflation is coming down, while the longer-term forces determining inflation will basically not have changed.

"The fall in oil prices gives consumers leftover dollars to buy other goods and services, but these extra dollars in time can also be used to bid up the prices of other things," said Gibson

The Dallas economist indicates that if the economy picks up steam and investment in new facilities remains weak, the hidden underlying rate of inflation will begin to accelerate.

Said Gibson: "The economy's risk comes from the fact that inflation measurement procedures insure that inflation will be measured as slowing down even though the fundamental forces determining inflation may be speeding up. In a sense, policy makers will be flying blind on inflation in 1986."

A sharp dichotomy in the components of inflation was seen in 1985. Manufactured goods, which have faced severe price competition from imports as a result of the appreciating dollar in recent years, increased prices only 2 percent last year. Services, which do not face such competition, had price advances of 6 percent.

RepublicBank economists predict that 1986 will see a similar dichotomy between energy-intensive goods prices and other prices. "Just as services prices gave a tell-tale sign in 1985, if prices of goods and services far removed from energy begin advancing in 1986, the inflation outlook for 1987 will not be encouraging."

Gibson added: "A similar oil price drop in 1987 is arithmetically impossible. By the end of this year most of the ripple effect of lower oil prices will have worked its way through the indexes, so that 1987 inflation will be the result of more fundamental forces."

If underlying trends are advancing this year, 1987 could see a startling reacceleration of inflation. Gibson contends that as 1986 proceeds, economists need to pay close attention to non-energy price and cost trends, particularly patterns in wages.

Tandy eyes business computers

New image, new look planned

RETAIL

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Tandy Corp. Chairman John Roach makes no apologies for the sudden dress code that forbids its business computer salesmen from having beards.

Beards are out. White shirts and dark suits are in.

That sounds more like the corporate conformity of an IBM than the parent company of Radio Shack, best known over the years for its CB radios and stereo speakers.

"You gotta admit they're awful good at what they do," Roach says grudgingly of IBM.

In a bid to cash in on some of the business computer action, the largest domestic retailer of consumer electronics has created 432 stand-alone computer centers separate from the computer departments in its Radio Shack stores.

It is the computer centers where the sales representatives must adhere to the dress code.

"We have a training and marketing program designed to present a more professional image in the Fortune 500 type of camp," Roach said.

"An integral part of that program includes a dress code, and the dress code calls for clean-shaven people. And it's caused a little interest among a few of our employees...," the slow-talking executive says with a smile.

Still, Tandy's bread and butter in the slumping personal computer business has been its small business customers.

"Certainly, Tandy's strength has been with the true small businessman. We can actually make money and are glad and proud to go out and sell computers one at a time, two at a time, to the 'unfortunate 1 million,'" he said, referring to Tandy customers who aren't among the Fortune 500.

"On the other side of the coin, the performance and quality of our (IBM) compatible products is making them more and more viable in the Fortune 500 type market place."

That, he said, prompted the company to train its employees to try to get a piece of the Fortune 500 pie. Thus, the IBM-style dress code.

And as the company has added to its computer repertoire, it has replaced the Radio Shack logo with the Tandy name. Tandy now sells three microcomputers that are IBM-compatible — able to use IBM software.

Launched as a shoe leather company in 1918, Tandy acquired the bankrupt Boston-based Radio Shack chain in 1963 and today has annual revenues of about $3 billion from its 9,500 retail outlets worldwide.

Tandy is giving its 5,000 U.S. company-owned stores an $80 million facelift. The result will be a less cluttered, high-tech look.

Roach says 75 stores have been upgraded with 50 more under construction. He said the whole project should be completed within four years.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Say a little prayer for gasoline, next time

In Midland oil is king. We know oil, talk oil, think oil — even tend to idolize it a bit. But lest we forget, it is the demand for gasoline that creates the demand for oil.

To be truthful, there would be little demand for West Texas Intermediate were it not for gasoline. Naphthas, diesel, kerosene, lubricating oils and asphalt, and other refined products help create a demand for crude oil, but by and large it is the demand for gasoline, which accounts for about 50 percent of a barrel of crude, that determines how many work or don't work in the Permian Basin.

But, as important as this petroleum product is, it has never been assigned the status or romance of crude oil, even though it has a colorful history in its own right.

In fact, had it not been for gasoline the petroleum industry as we know it today would not exist, but it did not start that way. In the beginning kerosene or coal oil was king. Refined from coal and used in lamps, it had replaced whale oil and tallow candles as an illuminant. When it was discovered that the "crude" oil found by Colonel Alfred Drake could be refined into kerosene, the first oil boom was ushered in. Oil from Drake's wells sold for $20 a barrel. It's ironic that 125 years later the oil industry would be happy to go back to Drake's 1859 price.

IT'S IRONIC, too, that in the refining of kerosene one of the waste products was a highly flammable and hard-to-dispose of product called gasoline — a mere nuisance to Standard of New Jersey (the biggest sister) that had gone into business to sell kerosene all over the world.

Refining was simple then: 500 gallons of crude oil were simply poured into a large vat and boiled until the lighter and heavier naphthas were evaporated down to the kerosene cut. While some of these naphthas (the word gasoline was not around yet) found their way into varnishes and paints as solvents, and some were used to enrich coal gas piped to homes for heat and light, for the most part they were still considered a nuisance.

Had it not been for the advent of the automobile in 1885 and the use of gasoline to power these weird, horseless contraptions, crude oil might have gone the way of whale oil because of the lack of capacity to handle the waste product gasoline.

Charles and Frank Duryea built the first gasoline car in America in 1895, won $2,000 in the first automobile race in America and used the funds to build 12 more cars. In the intervening years America would waver on the automobile issue considering gasoline, steam and electric. Few, even Henry Ford, had much appreciation for the noisy, unreliable gasoline engine. Electric cars were portrayed as dependable, steam cars a quiet and clean, but in the end it was the gasoline engine that won.

SAYS LEONARD M. FANNING in The Rise of American Oil: "The victory of the gasoline engine was due in part to the genius of the American oil industry in finding abundant supplies of oil and making available in quantity a suitable fuel — gasoline."

According to Dallas writer Joy Hart, there were only 800 automobiles in the U.S. in 1898, but 10 years later — thanks to Henry Ford and his Model T — there were 250,000 gasoline automobiles on the road, and in 1911 Standard Oil Co. sold more gasoline than kerosene for the first time.

But it was a poor quality, low octane fuel, producing loud knocking in low compression engines. Immediately, men of science began to research to find the answer to problem caused by poor combustion. One of them was Dr. Thomas Midgley who, in 1913, used a small one-cylinder engine in which the compression ratio could be varied at will, to experiment and hopefully find an additive that would prevent knocking. Midgley also found a petroleum compound, isooctane, which had excellent anti-knock characteristics and could be used as a reference fuel. This led to octane ratings for blends of gasoline. Finally, in 1923, after testing 33,000 compounds, Midgley finally found an inexpensive substance that could control knocking in gasoline engines. Just a mere teaspoon of it added to a gallon of gasoline would do the trick. It was tetraethyl, and it would revolutionize the automobile industry, making possible bigger, faster and more powerful, high-compression automobiles loaded with accessories. These gas-guzzlers created even more demand for oil, and kept Midland humming for many decades.

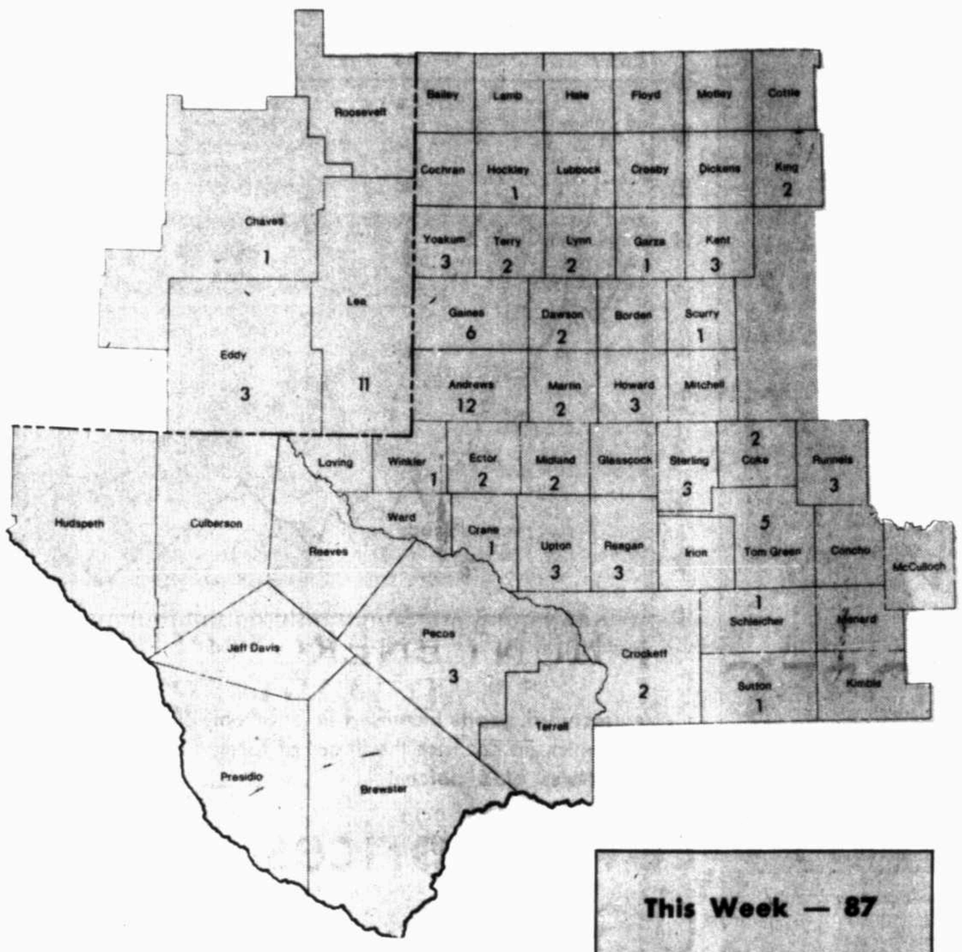

So, continue to pray for oil prices, but the next time you sit down to a table of groceries, don't forget to say a few kind words about gasoline demand.

Basin, state pace rig count rebound

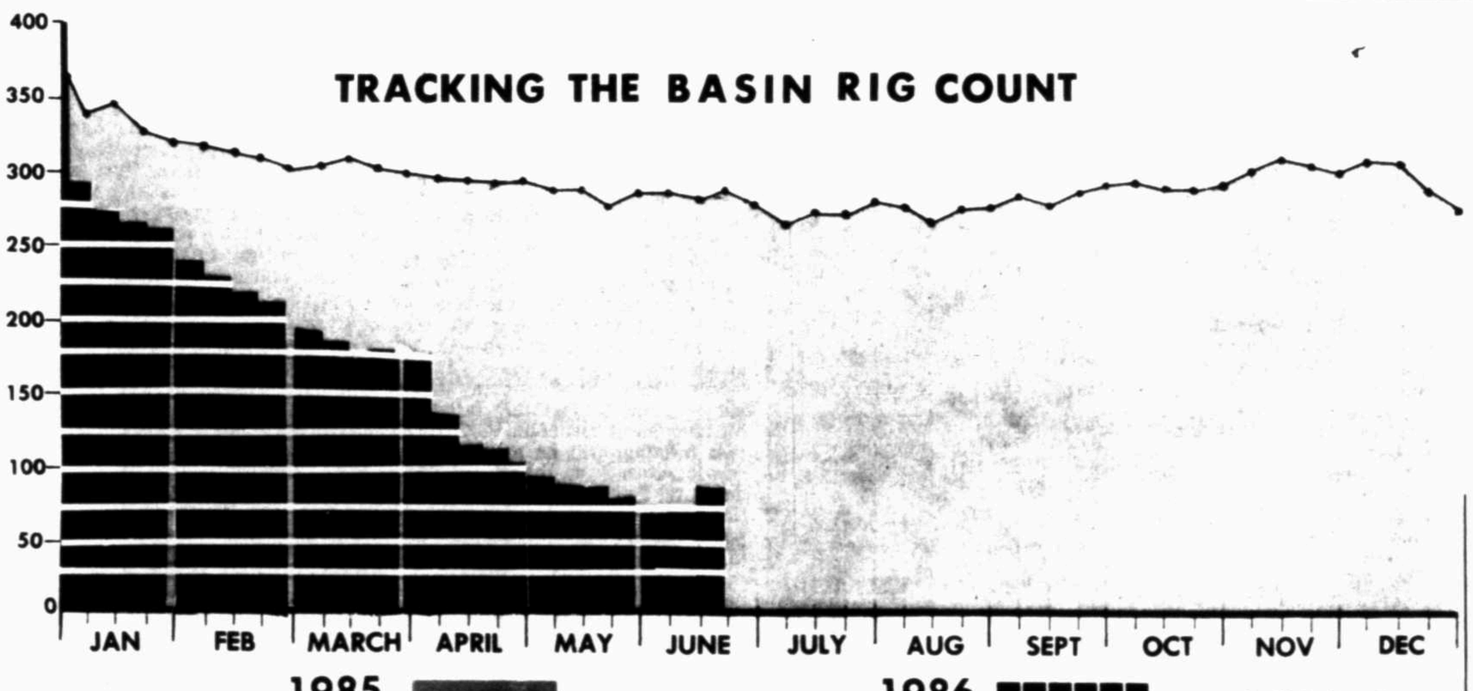

For the second straight week more rigs are being put to work locally, according the Hughes Tool Co.'s Permian Basin count. This week 87 rigs are making hole, compared to 78 last week and 75 the preceding week.

The Hughes tally shows 29 rigs at work in TRC District 8, 23 in District 8A, 20 in District 7C and 15 in the Permian Basin sector of New Mexico.

Increased Permian Basin activity led Texas to an 11-rig gain statewide this week, as the national rig count showed improvement for the first time since last December. Statewide a total of 212 rigs were working this week, up from 201 a week ago.

Nationally, the total rig gain was 12. Other states picking up rigs during the week were Lousiana at 109, up 8; Pennsylvania, 17, up 6; Colorado, 15, up 3; and California, 41, two more than last week.

RRC hands out pollution and plugging fines

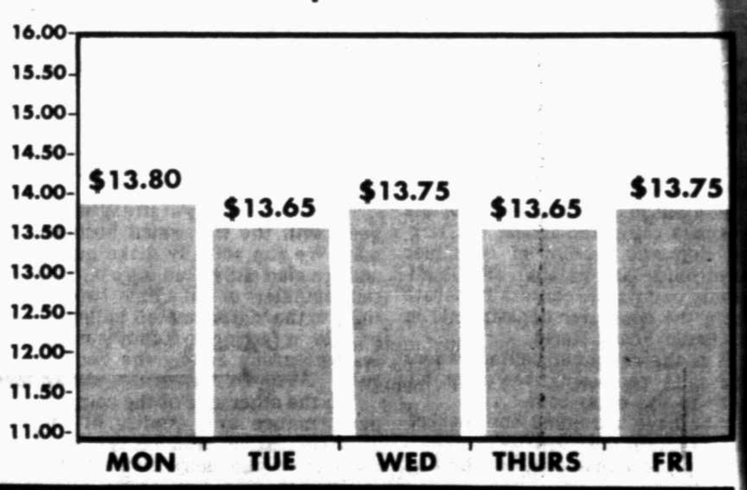

The Railroad Commission handed out $24,500 in administrative penalties last week for violations of pollution and well plugging rules.

Topping the penalty list was Developers Management Corp., Dallas, fined $10,000 for five inactive, unplugged wells and five open pits on its Loftin lease in Young County. Reports indicate the wells have been inactive since August, 1984.

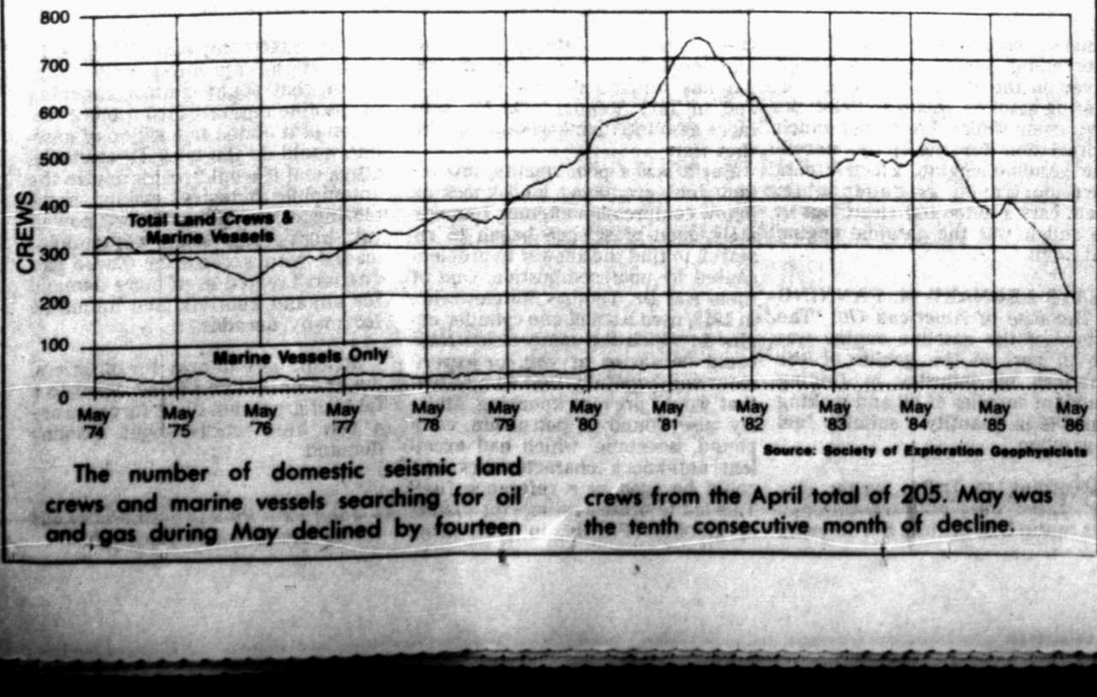

In other penalty action, Deral Knight Operating of Jourdanton was penalized $3,000 for disposing of hydrocarbons in a pit on the Ralph De La Morniere property in Atascosa County. The company's operating permit for the pit allows disposal of only fresh water drilling muds. In addition to the fine, the Commission revoked the company's permit to operate the disposal pit.

Auction attracts record crowd

DUNCAN, Okla. (AP) — Halliburton Services' 30th surplus equipment auction since 1961 drew a record number of bidders, but most of them were from outside the oil service industry, say officials of the company.

"We had by far the largest number of registered bidders that we've ever had for a Halliburton sale. There were 1,851 bidders from 31 states, as well as visitors from two foreign countries," purchasing manager Roy Ford said.

The countries represented were Italy and Peru, said Ford.

Everything that crossed the auction block found a buyer, he said.

"We sold approximately, during the two-day sale, 1,800 lots, including 225 cars and pickups, 353 trucks and 160-some trailers. The rest of the items were tanks and miscellaneous truck component parts and accessories."

Most of the buyers were from outside the oil service industry, Ford said. "They were from other industries, such as truck operators, construction people, contractors. ... We had a broad cross-section of industries represented by bidders."

Norwegian official promises to aid OPEC

CARACAS, Venezuela (UPI) — Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland warned that if the current instability in oil prices continues, it will cause repercussions into the next century.

She said Norway would contribute to efforts to stabilize the oil market and said if other independent producers would make similar overtures, it might help OPEC members come up with a stonger pact among themselves to prop up prices.

Brundtland's visit to Caracas to meet with OPEC President Arturo Hernandez Grisanti and Venezuelan President Jaime Lusinchi was seen as a major breakthrough in OPEC efforts to consult with non-OPEC producers on strategies to bolster prices.

Norway is a key North Sea oil producer and Venezuela is a founding member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Brundtland, however, stopped short of promising direct cooperation with OPEC.

She said Norway is a relatively small oil producer with output of 900,000 barrels a day and cannot have a big impact on the market directly. But she said her country's efforts could be important "politically and psychologically."

She said if other independent oil producers, including Britain, showed a willingness to help stabilize the market, it might influence internal OPEC talks and help the cartel firm up its own policies to strengthen the market.

Brundtland said her nation could not lower its output but would consider limiting production increases.

She said Norway must get around $20 for each barrel of oil if it is to continue supplying oil at projected levels. Oil is currently selling for around $13 a barrel.

But she emphasized that low prices were not just a problem of oil-exporting countries but of all nations.

"The dramatic fall in oil prices is dangerous because it can be detrimental to environmental concerns into the next century," she said. "Nations lose interest (in energy development) and halt research because they believe oil is something you can buy at any price."

RESEARCH

The target formation being examined in the Davis & Carr well is the Fusselman, but advances in interpretation methods by consortium member companies have shown that similar dual interpretation methods may be suited to other Basin formations, including the Atoka, Morrow and Devonian, according to Eric von Lunen, West Texas division geophysicist with Schlumberger Well Services in Midland.

Velocity and transit time ratios can be used to predict rock type and porosity, von Lunen theorizes.

Historically, there have been technological problems in the development of data acquisition equipment required for shear wave studies. Most of these difficulties have been overcome through the recent introduction of high-output shear vibrators, three-component borehole seismometers and digital sonic tools, explains Tom Wood, a coordinator for the project at the University of Wyoming.

Systematic and comprehensive investigation of direct and converted compressional and shear waves data processing will be directed toward reprocessing conventional seismic lines, recognizing patterns and generating models and computer analogs of reservoir targets, Smithson says.

THE UNIVERSITY group has experience in working with the VSP technology and processing as well as in organizing a research consortium such as the PBSTDP. Smithson directed the University of Wyoming Volcanics Reflection Research Project (UWVRRP), which is in its final phase after four years.

That project focused on underlying sedimentary basins in areas of the Western U.S. overlain with volcanic debris such as the Pedregosa Basin in southwestern New Mexico.

The experience has taught the U. of W. team the practical side of coordinating a large number of participating companies and has generated a number of valuable contacts with production and service companies which are being used in the Permian Basin project, Woods says.

Among the projects undertaken as a part of the UWVRRP was one of the most ambitious VSP programs run in the last several years, Woods says. Phillips Petroleum Co. allowed the research group eight days of open-hole time to run multi-level vertical profiles in its 18,000-ft. Sunland Park Unit well in southern New Mexico late last year.

THE NEXT STEP for the PBSTDP will be shooting additional conventional common depth point (CDP) seismic lines at the Dawson County site this fall. Teledyne will shoot and do preliminary processing of the data, Conrad says.

Optimum source and receiver array combinations as determined from previous wave test and VSP data will be used to generate the CDP information, which will be calibrated using VSP and digital log data.

Participating companies will be asked to contribute approximately another $2,500 each for the CDP shoot, Smithson says.

Despite any such additional costs, the potential return on companies' investments in a problem-solving, applied research project are great, says Bill Iverson, professor of petroleum engineering at Wyoming and a key participant in both university projects.

Reducing the cost of finding oil is just as important and has the same effect on profit margins from production as does an increase in price, Conrad notes.

By concentrating on the controllable cost factors in the oil economics equation, PBSTDP participants are committed to the business of finding oil and making a profit despite current soft prices.

TANDY

Harry Rosenthal, an analyst with Bear Stearns investment bankers in New York, said the upgrading tactic was predictable and he expects no surprises from Tandy in the near future.

Tandy is approaching the end of an improved fiscal year with third quarter earnings of $42 million, or 47 cents a share.

That's almost double the profit for the same period a year ago, but the 1985 quarter was affected by a write-down of computer inventory.

Roach says some analysts' projections of fiscal yearend earnings of $2.65 a share are optimistic.

"Our sales gain has slowed a little in the final quarter and that will have an impact," he said, adding earnings will not be as strong as the third quarter, which ended March 31.

As for 1987, he says, there are "a lot of positive factors," including a stronger Japanese yen, which he said will work to Tandy's benefit, plus an improving computer market.

That will be offset somewhat by expansion in the company's name-brand outlets. There currently are 250 stores, mostly under the name of the McDuff chain, which Tandy earlier acquired. He declined to predict how many of the name brand stores Tandy eventually will own.

While some have wondered whether Tandy was too slow to begin selling other name brands and to develop IBM-compatible computers, Rosenthal says it's typical of Tandy "to wait until there's a real market."

Other analysts note that the company was successful with that approach when citizens band radios swept the country.

While Tandy had only 5 percent of the CB radio market share during the boom years, Tandy grabbed 25 percent of the market in the years of decline in the CB market, according to a report from Alex Brown & Sons, a Baltimore research firm.

Eugene Glazer, an analyst with Dean Witter Reynolds in New York, says Tandy could have a repeat of that kind of success again in the cellular mobile phone market.

Cellular mobile phones seem to be the favored toy of Roach these days.

"My wife and I both have Tandy cellular telephones in our cars," he boasts. "That is absolutely something you have got to have."

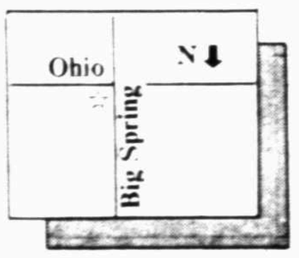

But then, that's only one of 2,700 products that can be bought at Radio Shack.

Two leaders in contract drilling have made a new name for themselves.

TMBR Drilling Company's recent purchase of Sharp Drilling has brought together two pioneer Permian Basin drilling contractors.

In becoming a single company, TMBR/SHARP combines the resources of two outstanding contractors and displays its commitment to, and faith in, the future of the oil and gas business.

With 53 rigs capable of drilling from 3,000 to 30,000 ft., TMBR/SHARP is now the largest contract drilling firm in West Texas.

Sharp Drilling was started in Kermit in 1937. TMBR's predecessor, Tom Brown Drilling, began operations in Midland in 1954. With the successful history of these two companies as our benchmark, we pledge to continue providing safe, efficient, and cost-effective drilling under our new name . . . TMBR/SHARP DRILLING, INC.

Gary Stapp

RE/MAX of Midland has announced the addition of three associates to their staff.

JOYCE BRICKEY is a veteran of 17 years experience in real estate in Midland. She attained her brokers license early in her career. Brickey has consistently received awards for million and multi-million dollar sales and listings.

A member of the Million Dollar Club, she was named Co-op Champion of the Year in 1973 and 1985 by the Midland Multiple Listing Service. She is a graduate of the Realtors Institute and in 1979 received her CRS designation.

Brickey is a member of the Texas Association of Realtors, the National Association of Realtors and is a member of the Texas Federation of Republican Women and International Training in Communication.

BILLIE PERRY has been in real estate since 1972 and received her brokers license in 1977. She is a member of the Midland Board of Realtors, Texas Association of Realtors, National Association of Realtors and National Million Dollar Club.

Perry has received honors and awards from the Midland Multiple Listing Service.

MARY PAGETT has been in the real estate business for several years. She is currently second vice president and director of the Midland Board of Realtors.

A member of the Texas Association of Realtors, the National Association of Realtors and the Midland Multiple Listing Service.

Pagett has won many awards including: Top Sales; Co-Op Champion; Million Dollar Sales in 1982; and Million Dollar Listing in 1982.

GARY STAPP has recently joined Don Harvey, Realtors as general manager.

A graduate of the University of Houston, Stapp acquired his broker's license and began working in Houston commercial and residential real estate in the early 1970s. He then formed his own company — buying, selling and renovating property — before he joined the Ticor Relocation Management Co. in 1975. At Ticor, Stapp was a relocation specialist involved in transferring large numbers of a client's employees. Stapp was transferred to Shreveport, La. with Ticor to manage two group moves before the company was bought by Merrill Lynch Relocation Management, Inc.

In 1980 Stapp joined Merrill Lynch Realty in Dallas as director of relocation and business development. He also became vice president of Referral Associates of Texas, a subsidiary of Merrill Lynch and Co.

PAULETTE RAY has been promoted to District Manager of the Midland District for Town & Country Food Stores, Inc.

She has most recently been employed at the Town & Country Food Stores home office in San Angelo, in the accounting department. In the late 1970s and early 1980s, she was a district manager in the Kermit area. She previously managed Seven-Eleven stores for five years.

SID CLARK, owner/operator of Catfish Station restaurant in Odessa, has been named 1985-86 Outstanding Restaurateur by the Permian Basin chapter of the Texas Restaurant Association.

He has been an active member of the chapter for four years, serving on its board for the last three years. He has been elected 1986-87 chapter president.

Before opening his own restaurant, Clark worked in a number of food service establishments, including Steak & Ale. He is active in a variety of civic organizations.

MAURA SANDERS of FirstCity National Bank successfully completed a one week program at Texas Tech School of Banking.

This program comprises over 25 seminars on issues facing the banking industry today. The school is co-sponsored by the Texas Bankers Association and the Independent Bankers Association of Texas.

FELIPE MORALES, Midland, a representative of American Security Life Insurance Co. has been designated as recipient of the Screaming Eagle Award.

The award is given to agents who have achieved outstanding production in life insurance sales. Morales will have his name entered in the Screaming Eagle Honor Roll at American Security Life's home office in San Antonio.

Steelworkers union marks 50th anniversary

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The United Steelworkers of America, born in conflict and baptized in blood, marks its 50th year tempered by the challenges of declining industry, membership and clout.

"They're in a drastic period of transition from what they were to whatever they're going to become," said Ben Fischer, director of labor studies at Carnegie-Mellon University and former assistant to four USW presidents.

A dozen pioneers met June 17, 1936, in Pittsburgh to form the Steelworkers Organizing Committee, which became the United Steelworkers in 1942. A plaque will be dedicated Tuesday to commemorate its founding.

In 1936, workers made $4.32 a day and had few safety rules or gear, no time-and-a-half for overtime, no hospitalization, no vacations, no holidays and no pensions.

Boom times for the industry and aggressive bargaining by the union changed the picture. The USW peaked at 1.4 million members in 1976 to become the third-largest U.S. union. It bragged that its members were the highest paid industrial workers in the world, making an average hourly wage of $13.10 in 1982.

Lately, the USW has heard a statistical tom-tom of bleak news. Rising steel imports and sluggish demand for steel undermined the USW's muscle. In 1983, the USW agreed to its first concessionary contract.

More losses have come this year. Three new contracts call for more givebacks in exchange for future profits, and talks with U.S. Steel Corp. began June 12. Neither side has ruled out the possibility of a strike.

In 1985, the union ranks had dropped to 750,000, less than one-third of them steelworkers, with another 200,000 on layoff. The USW has slipped to seventh among domestic unions, according to the AFL-CIO, and its membership is the lowest since its first audit of 725,626 in 1943.

"There could have been some cyclical downturns, but nothing of this nature has ever occurred before. The steel industry has never been in this situation before," said USW spokesman Dick Fontana.

To combat the decline, the union is retooling. It has evolved from a steelworkers union, to a metal workers union embracing aluminum and can industries, to a general workers union whose ranks include Boston city employees and welfare workers in Ohio.

"The future lies in attracting people from the services, health care and high-tech industries that offer some growth," said Ron Filipelli, chairman of labor studies at Penn State University.

Modern-day gloom obscures the union's hard-won accomplishments.

In 1892, Carnegie Steel Co. barged 300 armed Pinkerton guards to break a strike at its Homestead plant. Seven strikers and three Pinkertons were killed in a gunfight.

Namedropping policy

Business Namedropping is intended to inform our readers of promotions, achievements, and changes among the professional business personnel and leaders of Midland.

New presidents, chairmen of the board, directors of major coporations or new officers of organizations are normally treated separately as free-standing stories.

Namedropping generally appears in the Sunday edition but may be published during the week if necessary.

Information for Sunday pages must be in the Business-Oil Department by the preceding Thursday at noon. Items published during the week should be in the department two days in advance.

All information must be submitted in writing and include the name and telephone number of the person submitting it.

If a photograph is included, the person in the picture must be dressed professionally.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Information for Namedropping may be sent to the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Business-Oil Department, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702.

ClayDesta Communications elects two new directors

Clayton Williams Jr. announces the appointment of two prominent businessmen to the ClayDesta Communications board of directors; Dr. Ray E. Santos, a Lubbock orthopedic surgeon, and Floyd E. Riley, a Moberly Mo. entrepreneur with extensive holdings in real estate, ranching and mining.

In addition to his extensive medical practice, Dr. Santos is a member of the Development Board and serves on the Executive Committee for the University of Texas Medical Branch. In addition, he serves as a Commissioner for the Texas Parks and Wildlife, appointed by Gov. Mark White in 1983.

A native of Frio County, Santos is a graduate of Texas Western College and received his M.D. degree from the University of Texas Medical Branch in Galveston. He took his orthopedic training at Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn.

He is involved in commercial real estate, investments, and ranching. He has been on numerous civic boards for the city of Lubbock, and is a member of the board of directors of Plains National Bank, Lubbock.

"I am very pleased and honored to have been asked to join the ClayDesta board, and I am excited about contributing to the company's continued growth and success," Santos commented.

A classic entrepreneur, Riley is the sole or majority shareholder in nine active corporations, along with numerous other investments. These include ownership of agricultural real estate in excess of 20,000 acres, a shopping mall, and other commercial real estate projects, fiberglass manufacturing, commercial cattle breeding operations, an aircraft holding company, construction, environmental waste management company, and home entertainment electronics.

His past business accomplishments include, among others, a wholesale and retail tire business with operations in 48 states, the largest independent mining company in Missouri, a farming community bank, and a large fuel jobbership.

A tireless promoter of his city, state, and country, the 38-year-old native Missourian's public service projects include board memberships on the Moberly Regional Medical Center, the Missouri Coal Council, the Moberly Area Chamber of Commerce, and the Missouri Hawthorne Foundation, which is a select group of Missouri businessmen chosen by the governor to address problems and opportunities for Missouri businesses.

"In less than two years, ClayDesta Communications has accomplished things that virtually no other long distance company in the country has, and I am looking forward to being part of such an aggressive and dynamic team," said Riley.

Said Williams: "We are extremely pleased to have these two fine men on our board of directors. Their input and ideas will be important as we continue to expand our digital microwave and fiber optic network, and services, in Texas."

Graduate Center sets class on effective communication

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer "How to Communicate Under Pressure - Dealing Effectively with Difficult People" on July 1,8 and 15 from 7 to 9 p.m. When we find ourselves in high-pressure situations, or when we have to deal with certain types of difficult people, some of us revert to old habits that do not get us the wanted outcome. This course will help people communicate effectively under pressure by concentrating on recognizing six common types of difficult people, communication strategies aimed at these people, turning conflict into cooperation, effective listening when upset, and reducing communication-related fears. Marion Kimberly, counselor, will instruct. Fee is $85; $10 for those unemployed since January.

Gimbels department stores sold to Allied Stores

NEW YORK (AP) — Allied Stores Corp. announced Tuesday that it had reached agreement with Batus Inc. to acquire 10 of its Gimbels department stores on the East Coast.

Under the agreement, Allied also would acquire a lease on a Gimbels distribution center in Jersey City, the company said in a prepared statement.

Two of the 10 stores are located in New York, two in New Jersey and six in Pennsylvania.

Allied, which already owns the Stern's department store chain, said it planned to convert nine of the 10 locations to Stern's stores, and one to a Pomeroy's. The moves would bring to 26 the number of Stern's, a Paramus, N.J.-based outlet, it said.

Thomas M. Macioce, Allied's chairman of the board and chief executive officer, said, "We look at this acquisition as an opportunity to generate significant incremental profits. It is particularly important for our Stern's division."

The sale to Allied is subject to federal review and approval.

The company did not say if it planned to purchase the two Gimbel's stores in Manhattan. Last week, published reports said the stores would be sold to a real estate developer and converted into multi-use buildings instead of remaining as retail operations.

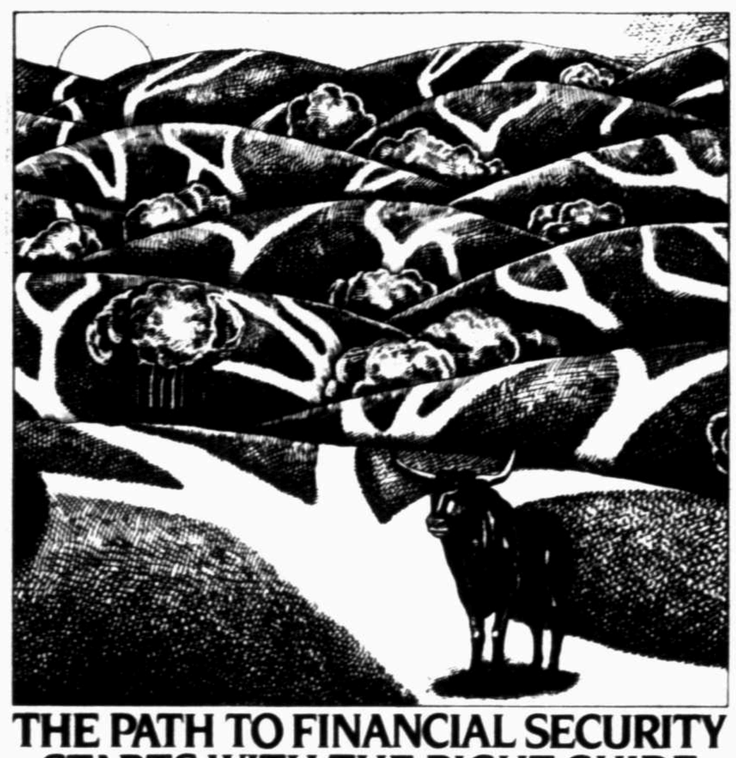

But Batus denied reports that a deal had been signed with one company and said it was still negotiating with a number of parties. Calls to Batus and Allied Tuesday evening were not answered.

In January, Batus, which has owned 36 Gimbel's stores since 1973, announced it planned to sell the chain. Batus is the American subsidiary of London-based British American Tobacco Industries.

Several other Gimbel's stores have already been sold.

The locations which would operate as Stern's were identified as those in Roosevelt Field in Garden City, N.Y.; Cross County Shopping Center in Yonkers, N.Y.; Moorestown Shopping Center in Moorestown, N.J.; Echelon Shopping Center in Voorhees, N.J.; Market East and Great Northeast in Philadelphia; King of Prussia in King of Prussia, Pa.; Granite Run in Media, Pa.; and Oxford Valley Mall in Langhorne, Pa.

The Gimbel's location in Lancaster, Pa., would be converted to a Pomeroy's store.

Free Retirement Planning Seminar

How to make your retirement money work once you've stopped.

Dean Witter explains "Alternatives for Your Lump Sum Distribution."

Tuesday, June 24th
5:00-6:00 PM
Independence Plaza
Suite 900
400 W. Illinois
Midland, Tx.

At this informative meeting, you'll discover the answers to several very important questions regarding your retirement benefits. For example:

- Should you elect to receive a lump sum payment of your benefits or take a monthly payment option?
- Is it better to pay taxes on the money using the 10 year averaging method, or establish an IRA Rollover?
- If you decide on an IRA Rollover, how do you select the plan best suited to your needs?

Admission is free but limited, so reserve now.

Sun, China open joint venture plant

SHEKOU, China, (UPI) — Sun Co. President Robert McClements joined prominent Chinese officials for the opening of a joint venture lubricant packaging plant, the largest of its kind in Southeast Asia.

The $6.5 million plant in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone in southern China is 55 percent owned by Sinopec International, a subsidiary of the state-licenced China Petro-Chemical Corp., with the balance held by a division of Sun Co. Sun, based in Radnor, Pa., is the 9th largest U.S. oil company.

Chinese notables at the ceremony, which featured a traditional lion dance to frighten away evil spirits, included Vice Governor Kuang Ji of Guangdong province, where Shenzhen is located, and Vice-Mayor Zhou Ci Wu of the city of Shenzhen, the site of the plant.

Kuang, who wore a blue baseball cap with the Sun logo, hailed the project as a confirmation of China's policy of opening itself to the outside world and offered encouragement to potential investors in his province.

McClements referred to the "atmosphere of friendly cooperation" during four months of negotiations leading to the joint venture agreement in 1984 and the subsequent plant construction.

The plant, operated by a new company known as China Sun Oil Co., purchases high-quality oil mainly from the Dalian refinery near Peking and ships it to Shekou near the mouth of the Pearl River, where it is mixed with additives to form a variety of lubricants and then packaged for sale.

The finished goods are shipped to distributers in nearby Hong Kong, Malaysia, Singapore and Thailand. A small amount also is sold in China.

Task force fighting nuclear dump

DIMMITT, Texas (UPI) — The Nuclear Waste Task Force is attacking on several fronts, including strongly worded newspaper advertisements, in an effort to stop a proposed nuclear waste dump from being located in Deaf Smith County.

Delbert Devin of Dimmitt, head of the task force, said Wednesday that the first advertisement 10 days ago in an Amarillo paper generated a lot of response from its clip-and-mail coupon. The second ad, in the Lubbock paper, ran Wednesday.

"We are trying to raise the public awareness of this problem," said Devin. "We have gotten a lot of response back from the first ad."

Last month, the Department of Energy targeted a nine-square mile site in Deaf Smith County, along with two others near Yucca Mountain, Nev., and Hanford, Wash., as the three sites to be studied for the nation's first nuclear waste repository.

The dump would store underground wastes from nuclear power plants for 20-25 years and then would be sealed. Testing at the three sites is slated to begin soon, with the final site selection to come in 1994.

Besides the newspaper advertisements, Devin said that his group, an umbrella organization which boasts over 125,000 members, is lobbying members of Congress.

"A lot of people, including some Western senators, believe the Department of Energy has violated the Nuclear Waste Policy Act in selecting these sites," Devin said.

Along with the states of Texas, Washington and Nevada, the task force also has filed suit to stop the site selection process.

In addition, the task force has lined up the support of the Texas Farmers Union and the Texas Sportsman's Board and is wooing other organizations.

"It's under active consideration by a lot of others right now and there is a great deal of interest. While they cannot endorse our cause, the National Association of Conservation Districts has given us strong support," Devin said. The task force, in its advertisement, said it is not opposed to nuclear energy, just to the dumping of wastes in the Panhandle over the Ogallala Aquifer, a freshwater source for seven other states besides Texas.

The ad's theme, "Do we dare risk a Chernobyl-type disaster — or worse — in the Texas Panhandle," points outs questions of safety and the risk of destroying agricultural land and contaminating the aquifer, Devin said. Deaf Smith County is the No. 1 agricultural producing county in the state.

Mexico lays off oilfield workers

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — The state-run oil company Petroleos Mexicanos will lay off as many as 25,000 workers in an attempt to balance a budget squeezed by a sharp drop in world oil prices, officials said.

The announcement drew sharp criticism from workers' union leader Salvador Barragan Camacho, who urged Pemex officials to begin talks with the union on other soultions to the company's problems.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q.Could you please tell me about Eric Roberts?

C.G.
Modesto, Calif.

A. He's 30 (born April 18, 1956)and was born in Biloxi Miss. He was raised, along with his two younger sistars, Lisa and Julie, in Atlanta by his father, Walter Grady Roberts, a blacklisted Hollywood writer.

The senior Roberts established the Actors and Writers Workshop in Atlanta and Eric began to appear in productions at the age of 4. (He had a stutter which his father found would disappear when he memorized lines.) He became such an accomplished actor in his father's workshop that he was admitted to London's prestigious Royal Academy ofDramatic Arts when he was 16.

At 18, he returned to New York, studied at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, did some off-Broadway and spent eight months as Ted Bancroft on the soap "Another World" in 1977. The following year, he got his big break, the lead in the film "King of the Gypsies," but despite the buildup, the movie didn't go anywhere and neither did has career. The film's studio offered him a three-picture deal, which he turned down, fearing that they would market him as a teen-age idol.

Instead he chose a couple of low-budget, but quality projects: "Paul's Case" and"Miss Lonely hearts" on PBS and the film "Raggedy Man" with Sissy Spacek.

He also did a play, "Mass Appeal," off-Broadway and was waiting for it to transfer to Broadway whan he had a near-fatal car accident in 1981. He cracked his Jeep into a tree, went into a coma, and when he woke from it, found he had substantial leg and face injuries. He then recovered completely.

A few months later, director Bob Fosse called and asked him to audition for a film he was casting, "Star 80.' Roberts ultimately beat out dozens of other actors for the part of Paul Snider, the husband and murderer of Playboy Playmate Dorothy Stratten and won raves for his performance.

He followed that with "The Pope of Greenwach Village' "The Coca Cola Kid"and the recent "Runaway Train' for which he was nominated for an Oscar as best supporting actor. Currently, he has a special due on Showtime next week called "The Slow Burn' costarring Beverly D'Angelo, and a movie with Rosanna Arquette, "Nobody's Fool," due out in the fall. There are also plans for him to star in "Blood Red," a drama set in the California wine country.

He's been engaged to actress Dana Wheeler Nicholson for a while after a long relationship with actress Sandy Dennis. He lives in New York and has a farm in Connecticut.

Q. Could you tell me a little bit about magician David Copperfield?
Cheri Holmes
Ontario, Ore.

Copperfield

A. His real name is David Kotkin, he's 29, from Metuchen, N.J., and has been a magician (under the name, originally, of Davino the Magician) since the age of 12. He attended Fordham University for three weeks, but left to star in a musical in Chicago called "The Magic Man," in which he sang, danced acted and performed a lot of magic.

After that show closed he returned to New York, did industrial shows, and generally made the rounds until a producer directed him to then-ABC President Fred Calverman, who cast him in "The Magic of ABC," a special highlighting the network's 1977 fall season.

CBS noticed him, gave him his first special, "The Magic of David Copperfield," in 1978. He's done seven annual specials on the network since, including the recent "The Magic of David Copperfield in China" in which he walked through the Great Wall.

Currently, he's touring, doing personal appearances, some in conjunction with "Project Magic," a program he started in 1982 to teach magic to disabled hospital patients to help them with their therapy. He's also looking into the possibility of directing movies; he made his movie debut in "Terror Drain" in 1979 and liked the medium.

Q. I recently saw the movie "The Terminator and was really impressed with actor Michael Biehn. Could you give me some information about him and what he'll be doing next?

C.T.
New Brunswick, Canada
A.C.
Lockport, Ill.

A. He's 29, the son of an attorney and a nurse,was born in Anniston, Ala., and raised in Lincoln, Neb., and Lake Havasu, Ariz. He became interested in acting while in high school, attended the University of Arizona on a drama scholarship but dropped out after two years to try and make it as an actor in Los Angeles.

For the first year and a half he didn't, but then he became typecast as an "18-year-old football type" and appeared in series and TV movie ssuch as "James at 15," "Family,' "Operation Runaway,' "Five in the Sky" and "Zuma Beach."

His featured-role debut occurred in the low-budget movie "The Coach," followed by a Canadian film, "Hogwild." His presumed breakthrough, though, came an 1980 with the film "The Fan" opposite Lauren Bacall.

"The Terminator" was a hit, but Arnold Schwarzenegger got all of the attention. Now, he's getting the buildup agaian, courtesy of "Aliens," the sequel to the horror hit "Alien." In it, he and Sigourney Weaver take on a tribe of those horrible blobs. It's due out in July.

Q. Can you tell mewhat movies Lana Turner has starred in and how many times shes been married?

F. Clayton
Clovis, Calif.

Turner

A. Shes starred in approximately 50 movies, among them "The Postman Always Rings Twice," "Imitation of Lafe," "Madame X," "Peyton Place" and "The Bad and the Beautiful." Her personal life has also been busy — her husbands were band leader Artie Shaw, Stephen Crane (twice), Bob Toppang, Lex Barker, Fred May, Robert Eaton and a hypnotist who called himself Ronald Dante.

She had two famous affairs: one with Tyrone Power and the other with alleged mobster Johnny Stompanato, whom her then-teen-aged daughter, Cheryl, stabbed when she heard the two arguing. Cheryl Crane's account of the incident is expected to be the centerpiece of her forthcoming book.

Q.I'm a fan of Soleil Moon-Frye from "Punky Brewster." Will you tell me how old she is and whether the show will continue next year?

Mrs. Nicolette Castellano
Mays Landing, N.J.

A. She's 9 years old. As we go to press, NBC hasn't given its official word on the show, but the cast is apparently anticipating some changes. According to one of Soleil's reps, the show will continue in production, starting again in July, and if NBC doesn't renew it, it will air in syndication next season.

Q. Not long ago, I saw Sheena Easton on "The Tonight Show" and she seemed tiny alongside Joan Rivers. Is she? Also,will she be doing any movies?

Easton

A.F.
Patterson, N.J.

A. She is pretty short, "under 5'2," according to a friend. Regarding movies: "She's very interested; she's always reading scripts" explains the friend. In the meantime, she's recording her next album and should start a U.S. concert tour in the fall.

Alan Alda has written, directed and starred in the film "Sweet Liberty." He plays the role of a history professor whose book about the American Revolution is being made into a film.

Alan Alda likes to make people laugh

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features

He is far handsomer off screen — a tall gentleman, with just a hint of gray in his thick hair. If you were casting, he would probably fit the "easy intellectual" perhaps, or "professor type." Indeed, he plays a professor in "Sweet Liberty," a professor who is the author of an earthy history book about the American Revolution; the book becomes a bestseller, is made into a movie and turns his quiet life on a quiet campus into midsummer madness.

But Alan Alda is too dynamic for any type casting. He is a three-ring circus of creativity, not only starring in the movie but writing the script and directing it."My aim was to make a movie where the audience would chuckle, smile and laugh out loud all the way through.

"I like a picture to add up to something," he says. "If all the audience does is laugh, I'm happy. I'm having a wonderful time just sitting in the dark, listening to their laughter. We desperately need to laugh, all of us, feel good for a couple of hours. Laughter is possibly the most important thing in the world."

He continues, "I have a tendency when I write to see the dark side of things as well as the light. Life's not a bowl of cherries and it interests me to explore the painful moments of peoples' lives.

"But this time, even recognizing the difficulties and pain, I tried constantly to view it with humor, never stopping the pace, which is a really difficult and terrible challenge. Like the actor in the agony of dying. His friend says, 'Is it hard?' and he says, 'Comedy is harder!

"Well, it is harder. Something I should have been born knowing. As an infant, I usad to watch my dad from the wings in burlesque. He brought me on stage as a joke when I was 6 months old. But I am a lucky fella. I have two people in my life who read what I write and give me good, honest tough reactions: my wife, Arlene, a remarkable lady, and producer Martin Bregman, who is my friend."

Bregman produced Alda's first script, "The Seduction of Joe Tynan," and his other hit film, "The Four Seasons." "We've been together for 20 years and haven't managed to kill each other yet, and when I have a project in mind, I can usually 'sell' it to him. He understands."

Alda explains, "Sometimes I have to defend an idea and that's good. He challenges just about everything I say, as does Arlene. And we've been together 28 years. Very valuable. You don't want someone to spare your feelings and tell you later what they really thought. In fact, Im inclined to attack the thing so ferociously at the rewrite stage that eventually these two have to pull me off of it."

He worked on"Sweet Liberty" for a 1½ years and then started on preproduction. "It takes a long time," he admits. "All of it has to grow by itself in the back of your head." Alda has always been interested in the Revolutionary period and years ago wanted to write a screenplay but realized he wasn't sufficiently prepared to write, direct and act in such a film.

"So I found the perfect solution, which was to play a guy who wrote a book about that period and have it all take place when this film company is making a movie of it. He sees his book as a collection of real facts.

"I wrote this movie there. It's a wonderful place to write. It's supposed to be a summer place, but we stayed months at a time. I had thought my kids would have a chance to come down, but they were busy with their own work. Beatrice (she played Lisa in "The Four Seasons") is in New York, playing the lead in a showcase stage play I feel terrific about that. Elizabeth (she played Beth in "The Four Seasons') is in Los Angeles studying her craft, and Eve is a social worker in Boston. She knows what she wants to do and does it well."

They have stayed a close family. During the "M*A*S*H" years, this man, in order not to disrupt the life of his family, did the incredible — he worked in Hollywood and commuted weekends to Leonia N.J.

The girls were busy with school during the week, but when they woke up on Saturday morning, their dad was home and they were a family. He had always given them each a turn at choosing what they most wanted to do on weekends with him. As they graduated from college, he gave each daughter the trip of her choice, just the two of them. When Eve graduated from Connecticut College, they visited the Greek Islands. When Liz finished Kenyon College, she chose a tour of Italy.

When Bea took her degree at Wesleyan, work was due to start on "The Four Seasons" TV series in which she and Liz played the roles their dad had written for them in the screenplay. But she hasn't forgotten her trip. She has thought of a ballooning expedation across France, "which always makes my eyes roll heavenward," laughs Alda, "but more recently she has thought of China and I hope she picks China because I would like to go back there and I don't believe Arlene wants to.

"We took 'TheFour Seasons' there. I was also thinking of making a sequel to that film and thought it might be fun to see those people on vacation in China. But it is difficult to travel in China, and some of those characters would really get on each others' nerves if they had to do what you have to do to travel there.

"Also, at that time, they were very interested in censoring anything filmed there and since in my own country I do not have to appeal to a higher authority aboit what I wish to write...

"But it was interesting to take 'The Four Seasons' around. People in each country have such different points of view. The film is about people taking a vacation together. It was a big hit in Australia, Scandinavia and England; in France they didn't know what we were talking about. 'We don't go on vacation with other couples," they said. In Japan they said, 'We don't go on vacations with our wives.' And in China, they said, 'What's a vacation?' They don't go anywhere.

"Now, I think, there's more traveling among the Chinese; they're more trustingt of each other. But they have a problem too. People were moved into the country during the cultural revolution and they want to come back to the cities. If they are allowed to travel, they all migrate to the cities. The farmers are poor, they want to get off the farms. An interesting country, I love it."

He also loves taking a picture of his around. At the moment, he's doing it with "Sweet Liberty," a tour of 22 cities. "I don't want people coming to see this picture who wouldn't like it and then tell other people they wouldn't like it either. Word of mouth is so important for a movie.

"Lillian Gish is wonderful, playing my mother. I wrote the part for her. Her only hesitation was, 'Oh, you made a mistake. You want my sister, Dorothy. She's the funny one.' She really doesn't think she's funny. She's hilarious. Wonderful. Totally straight and believable.

"So is Michelle Pfeiffer who plays the actress who plays the heroine of the movie. Bregman had worked with her in 'Scarface.' She plays every part so real you think she's just being herself. An this picture, where she actually is playing two parts, the actress and the character who is nothing like herself.

"My character first meets her in costume, the woman who lived 200 years ago. And since I've written the book about her, have studied her diaries and letters and am in love with her, the history professor I'm playing promptly falls in love with her."

Which puts a slight crimp in his relationship with the lady (Lisa Hilboldt) with whom he's having an affair, although when it comes to marriage, he craves amnesia.

Alda's favorite scene is one on a roller coaster. "Understand, I enjoy seeing it; it was absolute murder to shoot. We spent two days on the roller coaster, which is enough to make you sick for the rest of your life. Every time we took a dive, you could hear me in the rushes say, in a very rational voice, 'I don't like this and the next thing you hear is the scream.' "

As an actor he enjoyed it, but as a director he was in heaven. An organizer at heart, he had some battle scenes (in the movie within the movie) where he was literally working with an army of more than 300 people.

He says, "I have to tell you about the Brigade of the American Revolution. I read about them. Every year you see pictures of these colonial soldiers shooting at each other, re-enacting the battles. 'Boy,' I thought, 'If I ever do a movie about the Revolution, I've got to use those people.' We got in touch with their high commander, and wait until you see them in this movie! They used their own muskets, brought their own gun powder, they have these wonderful faces and they act up a storm. They look like the real thing because they are the real thing.

"I never had more fun than directing the big battle scene where these hundreds of people run at each other, smash into each other, wrestling, tussling. We shot it in two hours, nobody got hurt and it turns out to be a very funny scene."

Texas' first lady of aviation still flying high at age 83

By HERM NATHAN
King Features

Texas's first lady of aviation is still flying high...as she has since 1926. At 83, Edna Gardner Whyte can look back on a career that spans 59 years and includes air shows, aerobatic contests and air races of the 1930s and the training of military pilots during World War II.

And when she was nearly 70, instead of retiring, she sold her home, two planes and a car to build Aero Valley Airport near Roanoke, Texas, where she continues to fly and instruct student pilots seven days a week.

Retirement's not for Edna Gardner Whyte.

"I can't find an old ladies' home with a runway beside it," she says. "I'd like to keep flying for another 20 years."

So far, she has logged more than 35,000 hours of flight time and trained more than 5,000 students. She lives at the airport she built, only a short distance from the runway, in a home with an attached hangar for several of her planes.

In 1902, one year before the Wright brothers' flight at Kitty Hawk, N.C., Edna Gardner was born in Garden City, Minn. She began a career in aviation at a time when her instructors were more interested in talking her into marriage than in teaching her how to fly.

The air was a male domain; women who dared to enter it were looked upon by both sexes as misguided souls who had forsaken their rightful places in the kitchen and in the nursery.

Please see EDNA, Page 2H

EDNA

Even though she went into nurse's training and became a registered nurse in 1924, she had wanted to fly ever since reading about Katherine and Marjorie Stinson, two sisters who ran a flying school in San Antonio.

In 1926, while working as a nurse at Virginia Mason Hospital in Seattle, she got her first ride in an airplane. "It was exhilarating to be up there," she says.

She found someone willing to instruct a woman, but only if she dressed like a man, with a hood wrapped around her head to conceal her long hair. After 12 hours of training, she felt ready to solo, and her instructor finally agreed. After soloing in a Jenny airplane, she was given a student license by a disgruntled Commerce Department official who didn't believe in giving licenses to women.

Almost six decades have gone by since she first climbed into a canvas-covered biplane and entered her natural element. There have been years of triumph — more than 125 trophies lining a wall of shelves attest to that — and also unfulfilled desires. She was a trailblazer who helped open the doors of airplanes and the military to women pilots. But when the doors finally creaked open, it was too late for her to go through them.

"Ever since I won my first race in 1927 at Madison, Wis., I have been competing with stock planes, seaplanes, gliders and copters," Mrs. Whyte says. She is a member of the Women's National Aeronautical Association (winning their Skylady Derby in 1967) and of National Women's Plylon Racing Association, was named Aviation Woman of the Year in 1967 by the Woman's National Aeronautical Association, served on the air safety committee of the Air Lines Pilots Association and is active in Silver Wings, Pioneer Pilots and OX-5 Pilots Association.

In her long career of competition flying, she has won not only all the women's contests — Powder Puff, Skylady, Angel, Doll Derbies — but a lot of others in which the competitors were men, flying heavier and faster planes.

She started her own flight school in New Orleans in 1935. Six years later, she moved to Fort Worth, where in 1946 she married George Whyte and where they established another school at Meacham Field, to train Army and Navy pilots during World War II. They ran the school together for more than 20 years until his death in 1970.

She spent the last years of World War II as an Army nurse in the Philippines, but returned to Fort Worth after the war.

"To this day, one of my biggest regrets," says the aviator, "is wanting to be a pilot for a commercial airline, but they wouldn't accept me because I was a woman.

"It hurts to see retired pilots getting the $40,000 a year in pension that I could be getting. Today, there are about 45,000 male pilots in the world and about 86 women (pilots). They call that equal rights."

Edna Gardner Whyte

And in 1969, when she needed $5,000 to start building her airport, the Small Business Administration rejected her loan request because she was "too old, at 66, and a female in a man's field." Mrs. Whyte built her airport anyway — without federal funds.

She was heartened when in 1933 another pioneer woman flyer, Helen Ritchie, was hired as co-pilot by Central Airlines in Washington. Mrs. Whyte and another woman immediately put in their applications.

"When the men pilots found out that we had put applications in and that the airline had already hired a woman pilot, they formed a 'men's pilot union.' They told the airline that if it hired somebody who didn't belong to the union, 'we'll all go on strike.' They wouldn't let Helen join the union and they wouldn't let me join the union. So she was laid off, and I never got hired."

Mrs. Whyte tried again in 1935, when Chicago Southern Airlines was hiring men she had taught how to fly. That time, she was told she was too short, although she was either the same height or taller than two men who were hired.

Her final attempt to land an airline job was in 1938, this time with Braniff Airlines. Repeated phone queries received the same response: "No, we're not hiring." Eventually, Mrs. Whyte paid an unannounced visit to the Braniff offices and found that plenty of pilots were being hired. After being ignored for several hours, she announced that it appeared she would have to wait all night. She was the next one in for an interview.

"I was asked how many hours I had flown and what type of ships I had flown. I knew I had more hours in the air than any of the boys who were there." The Braniff official who had been questioning her then abruptly stood up, signaling the interview was over. "Miss Gardner," he asked, "do you really think passengers would get on our airline if they saw a woman up front?"

"She's a pioneer in aviation," said Clarence Page, director of the Air Space Museum in Oklahoma City, which inducted Edna Gardner Whyte into its hall of fame. "She's won races all over the United States. She's determined to make the public understand that women can fly just as well as men.

"She and Amelia Earhart were great pilots, but Amelia's husband was a writer who did beautiful articles about his wife, so she got more publicity."

In the den of Mrs. Whyte's home are trophies, pictures and articles that span her career. One photograph shows her with Mrs. Earhart, both women wearing their flight overalls, both smiling broadly, both buoyed, apparently, by a love for their field.

"See," she says, chuckling, "I can show people that picture and prove that I knew Amelia Earhart."

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Lace collection displayed

"Lace from the Collection of Carol Sayles" is on display through Aug. 29 at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

This exhibition features exquisite examples of antique European lace fating from the late 16th through 19th centuries. the major pieces of lace which will be on exhibit are ladies' shawls, altar cloths, cuffs, collars, handkerchiefs, borders, trims and other decorative pieces.

"The exhibition is the most comprehensive overview of the history of lace and lacemaking I have seen in many years," said Sue Devine, acting director.

Ms. Sayles is accomplished in the art of needlework and has been an avid collector of textiles most of her life. She began collecting lace during her career as a fight attendant with Pan American World Airways.

"During layovers in Europe, I was able to see examples of lace that are not easily found in the United States, and I became fascinated with the history and beauty of this intricate from of needlework," Ms. Sayles says.

In connection with this exhibition, Ms. Sayles will conduct a lace and lacemaking workshop July 21 from 9 a.m. to noon. Charge is $10. The workshop will include a gallery walk and a talk accompanied by a slide demonstration. There will also be a demonstration of lacemaking and a lace identification period.

For more information on the workshop call Dianna Koeninger at 683-2882.

Scholarships available

Docents at the Museum of the Southwest, Midland, and the Art Institute of the Permian Basin, Odessa, will have the opportunity to receive scholarships to the University of Texas of the Permian Basin for the fall 1986 semester.

The museum and art institute will receive five scholarships each in the amount of $175 per-semester to help defray the cost of tuition, fees and books. Applicants must be recommended by the governing board where they will be serving.

The two-courses eligible for scholarship assistance are Art-403-Art History since 1945 and Art 402-Concepts of Modern Art. Art 403 covers the period from abstract expressionism to systems art and photo-realism. Art 402 is an in-depth study of the underlying ideas on which today's art is based.

Persons interested in applying meed to contact the museum, 683-2882, or the art institute, 1-367-7222, or 563-2400, ext. 2354.

Application deadline for fall is Aug. 1 and the deadline for the spring semester is Dec. 1.

Film festival offered

The Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., is offering an adults-only Summer Film Festival at 7:30 p.m. Wednesdays.

June is mystery month and the films are Hitchcock gold and, in July, classic comedies will be featured. The films will be shown on Wednesdays at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium.

Remaining films in the series include:

—"39 Steps," Wednesday, the best known of Hitchcock's British films;

—"City Lights," July 2, silent film, Charlie Chaplin;

—"Bringing Up Baby," July 9, Katherine Hepburn, Cary Grant and a leopard;

—"The Odd Couple," July 16, by Neil Simon, starring Walter Matthau and Jack Lemmon;

—"Room Service," July 23, Marx Brothers.

Museum members are admitted free and non-members are encouraged to make a $2 donation. For more information call the museum, 683-2882.

Art festival planned

SAN ANGELO — The deadline has been extended until July 31 for entering the San Angelo Cultural affairs Council's Art's F'All Festival.

The event is open to all individual artists and craftsmen presenting original work. No galleries or studios are eligible.

Nine categories are available. Three slides, 2 inch by 2 inch 35 mm color, need to be submitted for whatever category is being entered. A personal resume needs to be enclosed.

Those entering work in the festival are asked to bring their work to Fort Concho Oct. 3-5. To receive an application form call 1-653-6793 or write to SACAC, P.O. Box 2477, San Angelo, Texas 76902.

Globe to do 'Bluebonnet'

ODESSA — "Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour," a new musical celebrating the birth of Texas, opens Friday at Odessa's Globe Theatre.

Book is by Rick and June Smith and music by Cynthia Cole.

The production runs at 8 p.m. Friday, Saturday, July 4, 5, 11 and 12 and at 2:30 p.m. July 6 and 13. Tickets, priced at $7 for adults and $4 for students and senior citizens, may be purchased at the Globe. Globe season tickets are valid for the production. For reservations or more information call 1-332-1586.

This project is supported, in part, by a grant from the Odessa Cultural Council.

David Letterman picketed

NEW YORK (AP) — It was the silliest bits of press agentry to come down the pike since — well, since an hour earlier, when the Carnegie Deli unveiled a three-foot copy of the Statue of Liberty made from chopped liver.

Six young women — described in a press release as "komely King Kong kuties" — carried picket signs in front of the RCA building last week, demanding that NBC talk show host David Letterman put a couple of chimpanzees on the air.

They wore little and less. They chanted, "David Letterman unfair to chimps." They called themselves "The Association for Primate Equality."

Then the chimps arrived — two of them, both named Zippy, though publicist Sheldon Roskin insisted one was King and the other Kong. They carried picket signs, and unlike the high-heeled women, wore roller skates.

Letterman's producer, Barry Sand, said he was surprised that the Zippys and their friends did not picket "Nightline" or "Meet the Press."

"They haven't had a chimp on in weeks," he said.

Roskin was working for Universal Studios to promote a new "King Kong" feature of its studio tour.

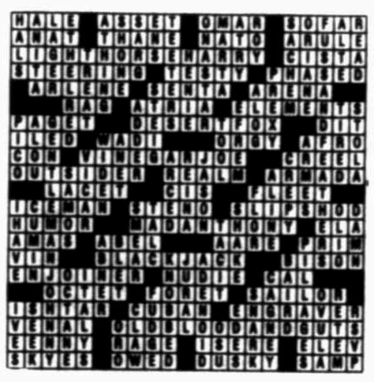

Studio unveils new King Kong

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. (AP) — Surprise, movie fans: King Kong didn't die when he fell off the Empire State Building in the 1933 RKO film. He moved to California.

The latest version of the monster ape was unveiled last week in ceremonies at Universal City, where it will growl and glower at tourists. Studio tour officials say the 30-foot-tall, $6.5 million Kong is the world's largest animated creature.

"The sound stage he is in is the biggest of its kind," said Sheryl Feuerstein, a spokeswoman for the Southern California attraction. "He is fabulous."

'Ferris' perfects act of skipping class

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

Our suave, sophisticated film hero enters. He adjusts his cufflinks and coolly introduces himself. "Bueller," he says, "Ferris Bueller."

That little homage to James Bond is one of many, many funny moments in "Ferris Bueller's Day Off," the cleverly self-conscious new comedy by the current master of teen movies, John Hughes.

Ferris, played by Matthew Broderick, is a high school senior who has perfected skipping school to a precise science.

Clammy hands, we learn early in the movie from Ferris, are the secret. Parents always fall for the clammy hands bit.

After convincing his parents, who (like almost all adults in Hughes films) are none-too-bright, of his pseudo-sickness he stares out his window at beautiful blue skies and comments, "How can I be expected to handle school on a day like this?"

Like so many of Ferris' witty comments, Broderick directs this statement straight at the camera. "Day Off" must have more soliloquies than any of Shakespeare's plays.

It's an audacious technique that Broderick, with Hughes' smooth direction and slick editing, pulls off beautifully. This self-aware gimmick is especially effectively echoes the enormous self-consciousness the average adolescent has.

Super self-confident Ferris is hardly the average teen-ager, though. Running a thermometer under hot water in the bathroom sink is as ingenious as the average kid's school-skipping scheme gets. Ferris' bizarre plot to evade a day of 12th grade includes taped snores (in stereo, no less), his home computer, electronically synthesized groans, a marionette in his bed, an elaborately rigged doorbell and an intricate network of telephone answering machine recordings.

He certainly brings a new level of high-tech sophistication to cutting classes.

Ferris convinces his hypochondriac best friend, Cameron (played by Alan Ruck), to help him spring his girlfriend, Sloane (Mia Sara), from classes as well, using a variation on the classic absentee excuse "my grandmother died."

This trio roars off downtown into a series of adventures and misadventures, all while being stalked by Ferris' archenemy, the school principal (played by Jeffrey Jones), who wants to catch the truant to make an example of him.

The cast is uniformly good, all the way from Broderick's lovable leisure-seeker to Ruck's catatonic neurotic. One special stand-out is Jennifer Grey as Ferris' sister. With her too-annoyed-for-this-world facial expressions, she is the quintessential teen sister and has a terrific little scene opposite Charlie Sheen in a police station.

Hughes' direction almost seamlessly blends outrageous teen fantasies with some absolutely accurate outtakes from high school.

The only time the movie falters is when it briefly tries to be serious. One scene, revolving around the rift between Cameron and his parents, jolts the otherwise smooth-running film like a deep pothole.

While "Ferris Bueller's Day Off" is definitely not as good as Hughes' best film, "The Breakfast Club," it does edge out "Sixteen Candles" as his second-best work.

Like all his movies, "Day Off" is aimed specifically at teens, but even those adults who are occasionally tempted to skip work on a fine summer day should enjoy this good-natured comedy.

A final "Ferris Bueller's Day Off" filmgoers' hint: Don't spring up from your seat and leave the theater as soon as the closing credits start rolling. The movie still has a few clever moments left.

"Ferris Bueller's Day Off," rated PG-13 for strong language, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

'Back to School' exceptionally clever

Which of the following seems more unlikely:

A. Chubby Rodney Dangerfield onstage with Oingo Boingo singing a hard rockin' rendition of "Twist and Shout?"

B. Bug-eyed Rodney Dangerfield delivering a stirring recitation of the Dylan Thomas poem, "Do Not Go Gentle Into the Night?"

C. Crass Rodney Dangerfield doing both of the above in the same movie, while simultaneously giving the most restrained performance of his film career?

The correct answer is C, yet, unlikely though it certainly is, Dangerfield manages all this in his new comedy "Back to School."

Dangerfield plays a self-made millionaire who has built a financial empire with his "Tall and Fat" clothing stores, which feature his special "Hindenburg Line" of apparel for the gentleman with the build of a blimp.

After dumping his adulterous and obnoxious second wife, played by Adrienne Barbeau, Dangerfield decides to get out of town for a little while and see how his son is doing at college.

He soon discovers the kid, played by Keith Gordon, isn't doing too well. He's making poor grades, can't get a date with the girl of his dreams and his only friend is his weird roommate, who, he explains, "has no friends." Gordon just wants to drop out.

Dangerfield is appalled. Sure, he's a uncouth, uncultured and poorly educated slob himself, but he doesn't want his boy to turn out the same way.

With an unbelievably sudden flash of inspiration, Dangerfield decides to set a good example for his only child by entering college and taking classes alongside him.

Of course, one would be hard-pressed to imagine anything more likely to drive a kid out of school than having to take classes with his dad, especially if Dad wore green plaid slacks and had all the cool of Edsel.

Nevertheless, they become roomies after Dangerfield bribes his way into the college by donating all the money needed to build its new business school.

Dangerfield then proceeds to get the best education money can buy.

As he explains to his son, "A good executive learns to delegate authority."

So, Dangerfield delegates an astronomy class project to NASA and hires novelist Kurt Vonnegut Jr. to do an English term paper on — what else? — the novels of Kurt Vonnegut Jr.

Of course, his English professor, played by Sally Kellerman, realizes that Dangerfield couldn't have written the paper Vonnegut did for him (in the film's funniest line, she adds that the person who wrote it obviously "didn't know the first thing about Vonnegut.")

The F she gives him, along with the machinations of the haughty business professor, played by Paxton Whitehead, put a serious dent in Dangerfield's academic career, but, fear not, the lowbrow gets the upper hand in the end.

While "Back to School" is not great cinema, it is an exceptionally clever bit of packaging, since its campus comedy attracts kids while Dangerfield attracts many older loyal fans.

You almost had to be a real Dangerfield fan to love his earlier, cartoonishly crude performances in "Caddyshack" and "Easy Money."

Director Alan Metter, who made the terrible movie "Girls Just Want to Have Fun" (not to be confused with the Cyndi Lauper video) was well as Dangerfield's own genuinely funny music video "Rapping Rodney," does a good job of reining in his star's boorish antics in this film.

Even a restrained Dangerfield can fire off one-liners faster than most other comedians and his gags in "Back to School" are fast and furious.

Several other cast members hold their own, too. Gordon, whose best role to date was as the owner of an evil Plymouth in "Christine," is good as Dangerfield's long-suffering son. Robert Downey Jr. is outstanding as Gordon's wacky roommate, a would-be radical who thinks Karl Marx is a guy who wrote "Proletariat Chicks in Bondage."

Stand-up comic Sam Kinison is hilarious in a tiny part as an excitable American history professor. Veteran character actors Ned Beatty as "Dean Martin" and M. Emmet Walsh as a diving coach also enliven the funny — if dumb — trip "Back to School."

"Back to School," rated PG-13 for strong language, sexual innuendo and some very brief partial nudity, is now showing at the Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Manhattan Project' almost complete bomb

"The Manhattan Project" could have just as easily been titled "A Boy and His Bomb."

This rehash of John Badham's 1983 "WarGames" is about a brilliant high school student named Paul Stephens, played by Christopher Collet, who builds his own nuclear weapon.

Why, one might reasonably ask, does he do such a crazy thing?

Paul claims he wants to expose a secret government weapons lab built in his neighborhood without zoning hearings, but it seems much more likely that he just thinks it'd be a great prank.

Paul steals the fissionable material for his bargain basement bomb from the secret lab where scientist John Mathewson, played by John Lithgow, is working on a project using ~~lasers~~ to purify plutonium.

The theft is implausibly simple — Paul breaks in using a couple of frisbees, a radio-controlled toy truck and some Alberto V05 shampoo.

With plutonium firmly in hand (Paul isn't too concerned about radiation risks), he explains to his girlfriend Jenny, played by Cynthia Nixon, that a nuclear weapon is "just a piece of equipment, like a toaster or a clock."

Sure enough, it doesn't seem all that much harder for Paul to build a bomb than to fix a toaster. Soon he has "the first privately produced nuclear device in the history of the world," which he takes to a high school science fair in New York City.

The movie then turns into a chase picture, with Paul pursued by the military, who, understandably, want their plutonium back.

The fatal flaw with "The Manhattan Project" is that there's a fair chance the audience will end up rooting for the Army instead of Paul. After all, who wants a teen-aged burglar running around with his own atomic bomb?

The movie tries to make some serious socio-political statements — at one point, Paul compares his stunt to the United States' Mutual Assured Destruction policy — but has much too flimsy a screenplay to support such heavy notions.

Collet's Paul is also just too glib for his own good. His acting seems like a weak imitation of Matthew Broderick's similar performance in "WarGames."

Lithgow, whose roles have ranged from a transsexual football player in "The World According To Garp" to a crazed space alien in "Buckaroo Banzai," is, as always, marvelous.

He is almost the only thing that prevents "The Manhattan Project" from becoming a complete bomb itself.

"The Manhattan Project," rated PG-13 for strong language, is now showing at the North Park Cinemas.

'Loonies' forum for cartoonists, humorists

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — They could pass for businessmen on a networking safari as they stride into the restaurant clutching portfolios in one hand and business cards in the other.

But the restaurant is a pizza and beer joint, the portfolios are as big as suitcases, the business cards are postcard-sized and each person is a certifiable Loonie.

"Loonies" is a group of about 350 cartoonists, humorists, performers and other artists who have been meeting regularly for the past eight years in San Francisco.

"We're not quite bankers, but not we're not weirdos either," said Loonie Trina Robbins, a San Francisco cartoonist, explaining the group's conservative appearance.

Loonies' founder Barry Gantt said he modeled the meetings after the salons of author Gertrude Stein, whose Paris apartment became a gathering place for artists, writers and musicians eager to exchange ideas in the early 1900s.

"I've always billed it as a salon for funny folks," said Gantt, who also calls himself "Bull Goose Loonie" after the Jack Nicholson character in the film, "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest."

"There's no real formal agenda," he said. "There's no drunken shriners, no people dancing with lampshades or anything. People just show up and it's human contact. That's the way people like it. It's very informal."

The meetings are held about once every couple of months. Admission and pizza are free and anyone who wants to share portfolios and meet other artists is welcome.

Although there are other organizations for cartoonists, such as the Comic Art Professional Society in Southern California, and the Northern California Cartoon and Humor Association, Gantt said the Loonies is the first informal group of its kind in the United States.

In addition to acting as a support group for artists, Loonies is keeping alive the spirit that made San Francisco the nation's center for underground cartoonists with such counterculture heroes as Zippy the Pinhead, Mr. Natural and the Fabulous Furry Freak Brothers.

Gantt, 40, came to San Francisco from Rochester, N.Y., in 1969 and was a high school English teacher before trying stand-up comedy and cartooning. His work has appeared in the New Yorker, Playboy, Cosmopolitan and other magazines.

He now supplements his income by teaching a cartooning class at Oakland's College of Arts and Crafts and by sponsoring cartoon marketing seminars.

He came up with the idea for the Loonies in 1978.

"At the time I had a number of friends who were both writers and cartoonists and I found there was no forum for people to get together and exchange ideas," Gantt said. "So I just got the notion of throwing a salon."

The first gathering had about 20 people, but meetings now average about 100 Loonies, with three times that many on the mailing list.

"It's a true salon where people make both social and business contacts. In our society, we really don't have that anymore. We're so fragmented," he said.

"Also, because of the nature of our particular labors — writers and artists — we're isolated. We all work in our own little spaces. There's no chance to really cross-pollinate or exchange ideas. This provides that forum," Gantt said.

Most meetings are quiet affairs, with Loonies sitting around tables either talking or studying each other's work.

A Loonie from Cotati, Calif., named "Phred," for example, is a gray-haired, bespectacled soft-spoken man. However, his cartoons include such offbeat characters as a slam-dancing Buddha and Jesus.

Phred said he joined the Loonies a year ago to keep up with what other area cartoonists were doing.

"There really aren't many of us in Cotati," he said. "People in the group tend to operate without much ego. Most of the people seem genuinely interested in helping out those who are just beginning."

Ms. Robbins is one of the most successful cartoonists working today. She is the first woman to draw "Wonder Woman" and she helped found Wimmin's comix in the early 1970s, which focused on political issues.

"The Loonies really are a bunch of the nicest cartoonists I've ever met," she said.

Midland Community Theatre staging 'The Elephant Man'

Midland Community Theatre's production of Bernard Pomerance's "The Elephant Man" is onstage at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

"Based upon an actual case history, Bernard Pomerance stuns his audience with a memorable piece of theater," says a spokesman for MCT. "The life of John Merrick, the Elephant Man, epitomizes both dignity and respect. the audience will grow to love him and to disregard his deformities."

Heading the cast of this powerful and moving story is Dr. Michael Stannard as Dr. Frederick Treves of The London Hospital and Brian Swartz as the deformed Merrick. Carr Gomm, the hospital administrator, is played by Michael Trost; actress, Mrs. Kendall, is portrayed by Carol Ray; Steve Gandy is Bishop How; Nurse Sandwich is Frances Heltzel. Others in the cast include Ray Tolson, Jay Laengrich, David Le Master and Patsy Springer.

"The Elephant Man" is directed by Sharyllynn Shaw, sets and lights are designed by David Layman; costumes by Mae Dawson; and stage manager is Karlis Gruzins.

Crew heads are Jo Stroker, talent; Jed Barker, construction; Mary Elmers and Liz Pauley, paint; Steve Porterfield, costumes; J. Robert Williamson, lights; Don Higgins, sound; Cindy Bohanan, props gathering; Robin Hodges, props running; Sharon Perkins, dressers; D.A. Plumlee, Dorothy Perkins and Jim Heck, casting.

A pictorial exhibition, depicting the real life story of John Merrick and Sir Frederick Treves, the doctor who discovered him, is currently on display at Theatre Midland. The exhibit was assembled by Stannard, who once worked at The London Hospital.

The production plays in the Davis Theatre One, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., Thursday through Saturday through June 28. Reservations may be made by calling 682-4111.

'Disasters of War' by Goya on display

The complete first edition of Francisco Goya's (1746-1828) etchings "The Disasters of War" from the collection of the Sarah Campbell Blaffer Foundation are on exhibition at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 E. University, Odessa.

Consisting of 80 historically important aquatint etchings, "The Disasters" reflects the Spanish master's reactions to the plight of his country's devastation during the Napoleonic Peninsular wars of 1808-1814.

Created during the years when Goya had aged considerably and had gone deaf, "The Disasters" series is divided into three distinct sections.

First portrayed are what Goya described in his notes as the "fatal consequences of Spain's bloody war with Bonaparte:" horrors of massacres, stabbings, burials, rape, and a few futile acts of courage (plates 1-47). Next Goya documents from personal experience the grim famine of 1811-1812 which caused the deaths of 20,000 fellow Spaniards in Madrid (plates 48-64). Finally, the artist moves away from macabre reality and enters a world of fantasy to present a series of vicious religious and political satires (plates 65-80). The series concludes by stating, "Truth has Died" and ponders the pessimistic question, "Will She Live Again?"

The "Disasters of Wars" series is now considered to be among the finest of Goya's graphic creations.

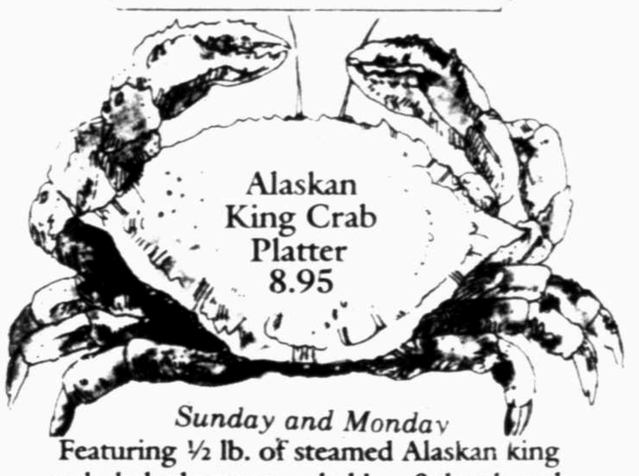

Those who influenced Goya the painter were Velazquez, Tiepolo, "nature," and Rembrandt. As a printmaker, however, Goya's indebtedness was to Rembrandt. Although the Spanish artist's themes differed vastly, Goya studied Rembrandt's prints and drawings, those in his personal collections and elswhere, knew his work well, and was highly influenced by the Dutch master's genius.

Sponsored by the Sarah Campbell Blaffer Foundation of Houston, "The Disasters of War" series is scheduled to make a three-year, state-wide exhibition tour. To emphasize the educational aspects of its art collections, the Blaffer Foundation will direct its exhibitions toward university art galleries and smaller museums in Texas.

"Goya: The Disasters of War Exhibit" will be on display through July 31. The Art Institute, located at 4909 E. University, Odessa, is open Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m.-5 p.m., and Sundays 2-5 p.m. There is no admission charge.

Collection chronicles pair's rise to stardom

CHAMBERSBURG, Pa. (AP) — The worn, black traveling trunk tells of her rise to stardom. The 33-year-old framed letter to friend and actress Sada Thompson tells of his dream of creating a top-notch summer stock theater.

Together they form a new collection of letters, pictures, posters and other souvenirs that chronicle the lives and intertwined careers of actress Jean Stapleton and her late producer-director husband Bill Putch.

The actress has donated the two collections — hers a continuing one — to Wilson College in Chambersburg. The women's college awarded Putch, a Pittsburgh native, an honorary degree in 1983 for his 30-year tenure as director of the Totem Pole Playhouse in nearby Caledonia State Park.

The couple and their two children lived in the area for nearly 20 years. Miss Stapleton performed in 81 productions at the playhouse, including "Hello Dolly," "The King and I" and "Come Back, Little Sheba."

"There were many people who never went to the theater and this summer theater was their well of culture," she said in a telephone interview from Cleveland, where she was performing in the play, "Arsenic and Old Lace."

She valued her husband's collection over her own as a living testament to the place in theater history that he deserved..

"I think it occupies an important place in the history of the theater and in our country," she said, "and I think it is one of the best in quality in summer theaters in our country."

Others who have performed at Totem Pole include Sandy Dennis, Sada Thompson, Bruce Dern and John Ritter.

Putch's collection traces the history of the summer theater from his takeover in 1954 until his death in November 1983.

"Anyone interested in the history of American theater will be interested in this," said Susan Matusak, the college librarian in charge of organizing the collections. "It's probably as complete a record as you'll find of a 30-year span of an American summer theater."

The collection is filled with pictures and slides of every production and sets, press clippings, reviews and old programs and business correspondence to other theater directors and actors, in which Putch discussed the plays he was considering and who was available for the roles.

In one of his first letters on the Totem Pole in 1953, Putch wrote to Sada Thompson, telling of his plans for the playhouse and wooing her to the southern Pennsylvania stage with a $75-a-week job. Miss Stapleton said she particularly liked a line from that letter which said, "I am hoping to get Jean Stapleton."

He didn't succeed in getting her for the opening season. However, they were married in New York in 1957. A wedding picture, with actress Judy Holliday at Miss Stapleton's side, is included in the collection.

"If you look through the material you are immediately struck by the fantastic energy this one man had," Ms. Matusak said. Putch had a hand in everything from selecting plays to determining set backdrop color.

The Stapleton collection is filled with scrapbooks, framed photos, old theater posters of her stage and television career. It also includes T-shirts, feminist buttons — stored in a blue Tiffany box "that gives them the grandeur they deserve" — and other remnants of her involvement in the women's movement.

Miss Stapleton is president of the Advisory Board of the Women's Research and Education Institute, the research arm of the Congressional Caucus on Women's Issues in Washington. She also was a member of the International Women's Year Commission in 1977.

The actress, who played the dingbat Edith in the long-running TV series, "All in the Family," plans to send her three Emmy awards to Wilson.

"I have sentiment, but not sentimentality," she said.

Miss Stapleton probably would have thrown away her part of the collection had she not been urged by Wilson officials to include it with her husband's memorabilia."You can just hold on to paper so long. I live in the present. However, what one does and one's career is important," she said.

Both collections are still packed away, wrapped and taped carefully as the actress sent them, in a small room of Wilson's library.

Art institute will feature classical guitarist

ODESSA — Kent Smith, classical guitarist, will perform a free concert at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin at 2:30 p.m. today.

Smith, a resident of Andrews, has studied classical guitar since he was 19. His teachers include Pat Corelli of Santa Fe, Bob Guthrie of Southern Methodist University and Yale University and dr. James Bogle of Texas Tech University. Smith has played numerous concerts in Texas and New Mexico. He teaches at Odessa College and privately in Andrews.

The concert will take place in the midst of aquatint etchings by the Spanish master Francisco Goya: "The Disasters of War." The complete first edition of etchings comes to the Permian Basin from the collection of the Sarah Campbell Blaffer Foundation of Houston. The series of etchings reflect Goya's reactions to the plight of his country's devastation during the Napoleonic Penisular wars of 1808-1814.

University presses success in popular market

by BARRY SHLACHTER

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The 200-year-old Harvard University Press, the nation's oldest collegiate publisher, spent 46 weeks on The New York Times best-seller list with Eudora Welty's much praised "One Writer's Beginnings."

"The Hunt for Red October," a novel about a mutiny aboard a Soviet submarine, sold 336,000 hardbound copies for the Naval Institute Press, publisher of the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md. The press, which had never touched fiction before, also shared in royalties for movie rights and the 2.5 million paperbacks sold in the United States and 1 million in Japan.

University publishing houses, long the outlet for scholarly and often dodgy tomes on such topics as Saudi Arabian foreign policy from 1902-18 or the mating habits of the Tungara frog, are now dabbling in the popular market and finding greater commercial success.

Many are reacting to cutbacks in subsidies which universities give to their presses. To survive or to cover the cost of money-losing works, the college presses are exploiting gaps left in recent years by the big commercial publishers.

"When a press like ours can publish a roaring best seller like Eudora Welty's 'One Writer's Beginnings,' this helps all university presses, and increases the bookstores' recognition that we are not only handing out dead mackerel," said Arthur J. Rosenthal, director of Harvard University Press. "I think we are all trying very hard to widen the market of our books."

Harvard's fall list includes books on AIDS, Agent Orange, chimpanzee expert Jane Goodall and the pirate Capt. Kidd.

University presses average 15 general interest titles a year, and at the larger ones, such books can now make up 33 percent of new releases, according to BP Report, a publishing industry newsletter.

"Some still don't see this as part of their mission, which is to publish scholarly books, but others see it as a way to make a profit or to make ends meet," BP Managing Editor Marilyn McGeehon said in a telephone interview.

More university presses are publishing fiction or exploiting niches they have carved out for themselves. The University of Washington Press has earned a reputation for art books while the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has pioneered videotapes about robots and artificial intelligence and has published computer books complete with software.

The University of Texas, Austin, is planning an illustrated, $125 edition of James Michener's epic novel, "Texas."

Books probing the history and writing of the American South is what Louisiana State University Press takes pride in.

However, the Baton Rouge-based house made literary history by posthumously publishing John Kennedy Toole's wacky "A Confederacy of Dunces" after nine commercial firms had turned it down. It won the 1981 Pulitzer Prize for fiction, sold 50,000 in hardback and 750,000 in paper.

"We are looking for a book of literary merit that perhaps doesn't fit a particular profile or genre that many of the trade (commercial) houses are seeking to be identified with," said Leslie Phillabaum, director of LSU Press. Its latest discovery was New Zealand writer Keri Hulme's "The Bone People," which won Britain's prestigious Booker Prize.

Striving to stay current, The University of Massachusetts Press at Amherst asked an author of an upcoming study on Soviet environmental problems to quickly add a chapter on the Chernobyl nuclear accident in order to broaden its appeal.

Bruce Wilcox, director of the University of Massachusetts press, said the aggressive efforts to reach a larger audience stemmed from a financial crisis in the 1970s which had been triggered by declining student populations, library budgets and subsidies which hurt all but the best endowed university presses such as Harvard and Princeton. Several closed, and some, including Brigham Young University's publishing arm, scaled down its list.

"The rest of us had to wrestle with higher unit costs," said Wilcox. "And we responded with lower royalties, books of a more general interest, more simultaneous cloth and paperback releases of a title and collaboration with others in warehousing, sales and distribution — a general belt-tightening which has become a way of life."

Some have moved deftly to fill the breach left by the large commercial or trade publishers, fewer of whom are willing to gamble on serious nonfiction, he said.

"A number of us are publishing books that some of the trade houses would have done 20 years ago," agreed James H. Clark, director of the University of California Press in Berkeley. "If we can sell 5,000 copies ...that's a very attractive book for a university press and a very marginal one for a commercial house."

Clark, who is also president of the Association of American University Presses, is not proud of all the recent changes in marketing. He was uneasy when reminded of the manifestly unacademic hoopla surrounding the launch of one of his press' books at a California winery.

However, the book about the state's wines sold well, he said. And it was the sort that brings in the money needed to underwrite learned but money-losing monographs, he added.

The Naval Institute Press, tickled by its success with the thriller by Maryland insurance agent Tom Clancy, hopes to repeat it with a second novel this fall, this one written by Stephen Coonts, a Denver policeman turned oil and gas attorney who based the book on his bombing missions over Vietnam.

With uncharacteristic hype from the usually staid academic press, known previously for its encyclopedic reference books on war fleets, it announced the release of Coonts' "Flight of the Intruder" by declaring: "From the publisher who surprised the world with 'The Hunt for Red October' comes another block-busting best seller!" Promotion will include TV talk show appearances.

Clark insists that the top priority for collegiate publishers is still good scholarship. Most academics seem to agree that the university presses must continue to publish studies such as the recent MIT offering of "Word and Sentence Prosody in Serbocroatian." The book about verse structure was based on two decades of research.

Manuscripts must still be approved by outside experts and then by the presses' boards, usually made up of high-ranking professors.

"If you stray too far to the commercial side you are damned," Clark said. "But you have to be realistic about budgets and find a balance that does not compromise our scholarly purpose. Each book must have a scholarly component — only some are more open to more readers than others."

Pitcher likes hard nails

CLEVELAND (AP) — What happens when a knuckleball pitcher splits a fingernail while warming up for a ball game?

"I cut my workout short, ran in here, cut the nail off and put some hardener on it," Tom Candiotti of the Cleveland Indians said. Candiotti treated the nail with a solution known as "Hard As Nails."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon
Monday, June 23, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: You will enjoy new financial security Compatibility is the secret to a romance's longevity. Friendships made this summer will bring many rewards. Travel proves educational. Your intuition is right on target; do not ignore it. An enthusiastic attitude wins you support from your employer and family. Consolidate recent business gains. You could get a second crack at an opportunity you thought lost forever!

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: country singer June Carter (Mrs. Johnny) Cash, author Anna Chennault, dancer-director-choreographer Bob Fosse, Boston Red Sox infielder Marty Barrett.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You could be offered the job you have always wanted! Be alert to any gossip so that the ground cannot be cut out from under you or a friend. Romance takes on a rosy glow.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A financial deal begins to work in your favor. Your self-confidence returns. There is no mountain too high for you to climb! Romance takes a peculiar but fascinating turn. Go slow.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Stay calm and you can meet any challenge. A change of residence or employment could be part of the picture. Curb a tendency to make snap judgments.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An important business development is featured this week. You have the ambition and ability you need to get to the top. Career choices will be difficult. Keep good financial records. Double-check bookkeeping entries.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your suspicions about someone may be unfounded, but you should check them out. A friendship could turn romantic. Know your own heart. New employment opportunities may not be everything they seem.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Love shows up in an adorable package. Hang onto your current job. Making a drastic change now could produce unsatisfactory results in the long run. You will have plenty of time to make a decision.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Fight off those negative feelings. A confrontation with a co-worker or romantic partner will accomplish nothing. Adopt a wait-and-see attitude. Help a child become more independent and responsible.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Refuse to let others push you into a decision but do listen to advice from caring, more experienced friends. A parent-child problem fades. Do nothing to arouse loved one's jealousy.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Take advantage of a windfall or unexpected offer; it will not be available for long. Travel heightens your sensitivity to a community problem. Do everything you can to keep love alive.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An event engineered by a caring associate gives you a new lease on life. Getting more rest will make you more productive. Make a special effort to delegate work to others. Profits soar.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The financial picture should soon look brighter provided you do not do anything foolish. People gravitate toward you today. Listen carefully but avoid giving advice. Love becomes a stronger force in your life.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Turn your back on a job that offers you no scope for your imagination. The money could not compensate for the frustration you would feel. Children add joy to a family dinner.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF
©1986 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—A takeout double by an opponent always throws me out of kilter. I am never sure how to respond to partner's opening bid. Can you give me some basic advice? — L.A., Raleigh, Va.

A.—What you want me to tell you in a column could easily fill a book. As a matter of fact, there are several volumnes devoted largely to this facet of bidding.

First and foremost, you must have some way of telling partner the hand belongs to you and you might want to double the opponents. The bid reserved for that is redouble, and you make it on all good hands, i.e., 11 points or better.

You might or might not have a fit for partner's suit. In any event, the redouble asks partner to let you have the next shot in the auction unless he can make a penalty double. If you do not have support for partner's suit, you will either double the opponents in their run-out or else bid no trump or your own suit. If you do have support for partner and a hand equivalent to an opening bid, you will support his suit.

What do you do with weaker hands? The modern tendency is to ignore the double and make the bid you would have made had there been no enemy interference. Thus, any one-level response by you, except for one no trump, would be forcing for one round on opener. A single raise of partner's suit shows at least three-card support and 6-10 points.

Bids at the two-level, whether the cheapest bid available or a jump, are preemptive. So is a jump raise of partner's suit. A response of one no trump could be made on a hand which contains a four-card major, since it is likely that your side does not have a 4-4 major-suit fit in an unbid suit.

What's the difference between a single raise and a jump raise of opener's suit? The single raise is a better hand defensively. The jump raise is made on more distributional hands that do not have much in the way of defense. Consider these two hands:

A. ♠J7 ♡K95 ◇KJ63 ♣10982
B. ♠9 ♡QJ76 ◇J103 ♣Q9842

If partner opens the bidding with one heart and the next hand doubles, bid two hearts with hand A and three hearts with hand B.

That leaves one type of hand with which we have not dealt: hands with four-card support for opener's suit worth 10-12 points; in other words, hands on which you would have made a limit raise had there been no butt-in. These are covered by a conventional bid—a jump to two no trump. You don't need that bid in the natural sense because you can show those hands by first redoubling and then bidding no trump.
