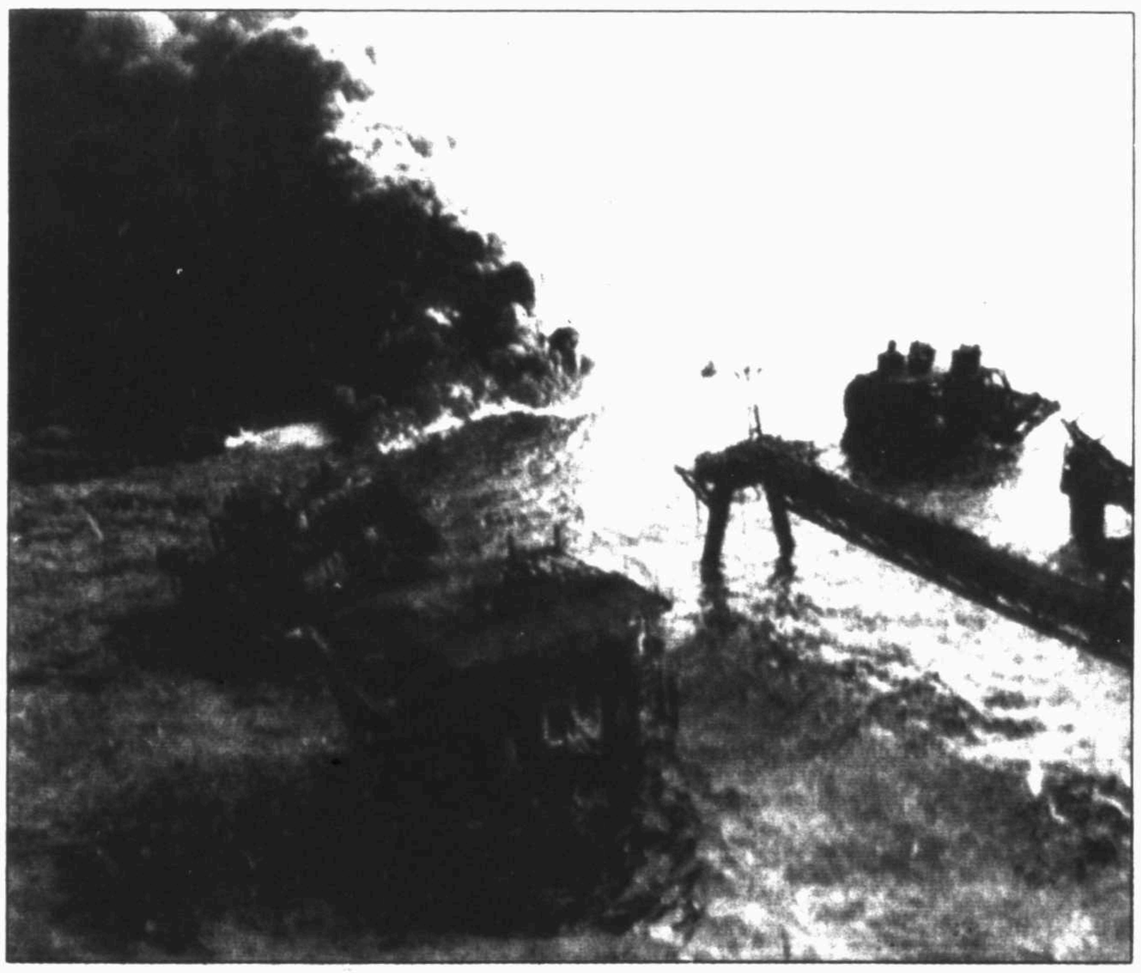
Bombs stem oil flow

U.S. planes destroy pipeline system



Kuwait's al-Ahmadi Sea Island Terminal burns on Sunday. Military sources say the United States blew up the Iraqi-controlled facility in an attempt to staunch the flow of oil into the Persian Gulf.

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — (NYT) Two laser-guided "smart" bombs apparently succeeded in stemming a massive flow of oil that Iraqi troops spilled from a Kuwaiti tank farm into the Persian Gulf, military officials said Sunday.

Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf III, the Operation Desert Storm commander, described a pinpoint night mission flown by U.S. Air Force F-111 bombers. He said the planes, which met no opposition from the ground or air, destroyed a network of pipe systems that carried the oil from Kuwaiti storage fields to the Sea Island supertanker terminal.

Schwarzkopf said videotape taken at the terminal just after the late Saturday night attack seemed to show that the oil flow had slackened. But he said aerial photos to verify that could not be taken until today because a fire at the terminal caused by an earlier U.S. attack still was producing heavy smoke.

Using charts and photographs to explain the complex operation, Schwarzkopf, the overall theatre commander, said U.S. forces had used laser-guided glider bombs on the 11th day of the war with Iraq "to solve this very, very difficult problem."

"We tried to do it," he added, "in such a way that we are not out there destroying the entire economy of Kuwait by doing it. I think that we have been successful, but only time is going to tell."

Schwarzkopf conceded that President Saddam Hussein of Iraq could order more large Kuwaiti oil facilities to be ruptured in a similar way. If that happens, the four-star general said, "it's entirely conceivable" that similar surgical bombing runs would be ordered.

Saudi oil experts said the slick — which apparently

War Update

- U.S. warplanes bomb offshore pipes to staunch oil spills
- No more U.S. planes down, leaving count of planes lost in combat at 17 - 10 American
- Iraqi pilots continue flying warplanes to Iran
- Allies destroy four Iraqi planes
- To date, about 110 Iraqis taken prisoner

IN EASTERN SAUDI ARABIA (AP) — Saddam Hussein's front line, though hammered by allied air strikes and manned by dispirited, lice-ridden soldiers, can hold out for months, senior allied officers fear.

"They will fight because they have no choice," said a Saudi officer with access to defecting Iraqis. "They know they might survive a battle, but if they run they will be shot."

Like other senior Saudi officers, he spoke frankly only when assured of anonymity, fearful of contradicting official optimism. But he reflected a view widely held among commanders close to the front.

"Nothing about this is going to be easy," said Lt. Col. Hu Blazer, a U.S. Army maintenance battalion commander who learned the hard way in Vietnam the limits of air support in a ground war.

Group Capt. Niall Irving of Britain's Royal Air Force told reporters Saturday of plans to house Iraqi prisoners of war.

"I think we are anticipating huge numbers — once (ground) operations start or maybe even before — are going to give themselves up fairly quickly."

Children need help decoding the confusing images of war

■ An open discussion about a child's concerns can help a youngster make sense of frightening events, experts say.

N.Y. Times News Service

With images of war interrupting regular television programming, and the Persian Gulf becoming a focus of discussion in recent weeks, what can parents do to help children understand disturbing world events?

Many parents question whether they should shield their children from the realities of the news to spare them unnecessary anxiety.

Others, realizing they could turn off the television and the radio, know their children still will hear about the war from their friends, either on the playground or at school.

Howard Robinson and Celeste Theis, child therapists in Westchester County, N.Y., hold evening lectures for local parent groups at schools and libraries on "Stress in Children: How Parents Can Help."

They agree that it is a mistake to avoid talking about tension-producing situations with children.

An open discussion about a child's concerns — whether it is about war, an impending hospital stay, a divorce in the family, a parent's loss of a job or even the birth of a sibling — can help a youngster make sense of frightening or confusing events,

Soviet army shoots Lithuanian at military checkpoint

■ Commander of Soviet Army garrison warns that his troops are getting 'more and more out of control.'

Associated Press

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. — A Soviet army captain shot a Lithuanian at a military checkpoint Sunday, and officials of the breakway republic said they have begun keeping a record of brutality inflicted on their citizens, a government spokesman said.

Government spokesman Audrius Azubalis said a Soviet patrol stopped the Lithuanian, who was driving a car with two hitchhikers about 1 a.m. The driver was asked to get out of the car and put his hands on the windshield.

A shot fired at the ground by the captain, apparently as a warning, ricocheted and hit the man in the leg. The Lithuanian, identified as A. Shalkingas, was taken to a Vilnius hospital for treatment.

Azubalis also said the last of six Lithuanians seized after a shooting incident involving paratroopers Thursday was released, then taken to a hospital for treatment of a concussion.

The Lithuanian Health Ministry reported a similar case Saturday in Kaunas, 60 miles west of Vilnius, where a man detained Jan. 24 by the military was released and taken to a hospital suffer-

Bush faces dilemma on summit

■ Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet murmurs of disapproval about the U.S. air assault on Iraq coupled with congressional opposition to the Kremlin's crackdown in the Baltics point up the dilemma confronting President Bush as he ponders whether to put off a February summit in Moscow.

While U.S. support may be critical to Mikhail S. Gorbachev in his struggle to overcome domestic critics of his political and economic programs, Bush relies on the Soviet leader as well — particularly in the campaign to oust Iraq from Kuwait.

And yet he is being tugged by Congress, especially, to forgo the benefits of warm relations in order to drive home to Gorbachev this nation's distaste for a military putdown of the independence movement in Lithuania and Latvia.

It's Giants, 20-19

TAMPA, Fla. — The New York Giants won their second Super Bowl when they beat the Buffalo Bills 20-19 on Sunday. Buffalo had a chance to win the game with four seconds left, but Bills placekicker Scott Norwood missed a 47-yard field goal attempt. It was the closest Super Bowl in history. The Giants went ahead for good on Matt Bahr's 21-yard field goal midway through the fourth quarter. But the game was really won by New York's ball control offense, which moved the ball 87 yards to a touchdown just before the half to cut a 12-3 deficit to 12-10.

All is confusion

AUSTIN — The State Board of Education will not meet Thursday's deadline for nominating a new education commissioner, who oversees the state's $14 billion-a-year school system, members said Sunday. After a closed-door board meeting, Vice Chairman Bob Aikin of Commerce blamed the delay in part on "turmoil" resulting from the Texas Supreme Court's recent ruling that the school finance system is unconstitutional. State leaders back a plan to replace local school property taxes with a statewide property levy, to meet the court's order that property-poor school districts must have access to equitable funding.

Fantasy leagues

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Prospering sports fantasy leagues, which offer an estimated 1 million fans the opportunity to build and run their own teams, were dealt a dose of reality by a Florida decision linking them to gambling. A mini-industry of statistics services and books giving detailed information on performances of professional baseball, football and hockey players has grown up around the leagues. Some newspapers, including USA Today and The National, tailor regular columns to fantasy league owners.

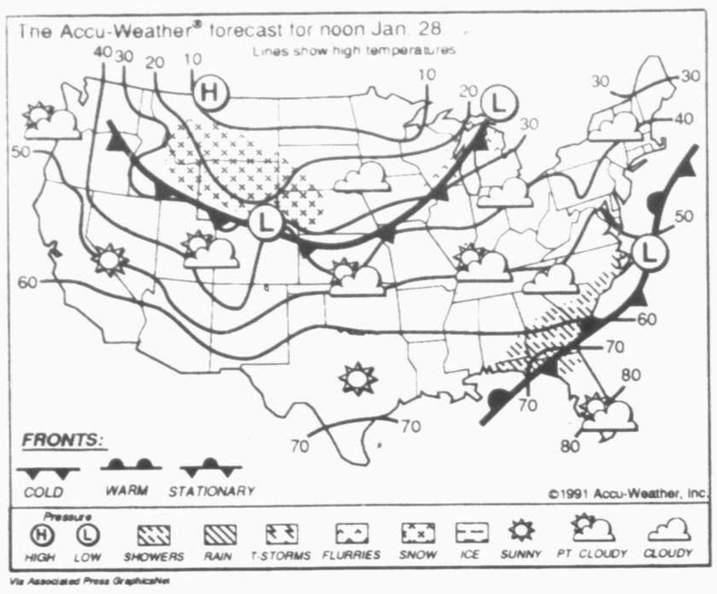
WEATHER SUMMARY



Via Associated Press GraphicsNet

Skies to be mostly sunny

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies, with a high in the upper 60s, and 10 to 20 mph southwest winds, the National Weather Service said.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a low in the mid-30s, NWS said.

Tuesday's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies with a high in the lower 60s, forecasters said.

The record high for Jan. 27 was 80 set in 1970. The record low of 10 for today's date was set in 1948. Monday's high was 67 after an overnight low of 36.

STATE

Warm winds and balmy temperatures gave Texas a hint of spring Sunday with unseasonable readings in the 70s and even 80s.

Cooler air covered most of the Panhandle, where northeast winds kept temperatures in the 40s, but warm west winds between 15 and 20 mph kept skies clear elsewhere.

Even the Edwards Plateau and Big Bend area of West Texas had readings in the 70s, and forecasters predict more of the same for the first part of the week.

A weak cold front moved into the extreme northern third of North Texas late Sunday, cooling temperatures somewhat down to Dallas-Fort Worth and Waco and west to near Abilene.

Partly cloudy skies persisted in South Texas.

Extremes at 3 p.m. were 43 degrees at Dalhart in the Panhandle and 80 degrees at Brownsville in deep South Texas.

NATION

BOMBS: 'Pinpoint' mission appears successful

began spreading when Iraqis began to pump an estimated 125 million gallons of oil out of five tankers berthed at the port of Mina al-Ahmadi— already covered 350 square miles. It was moving in a southeasterly direction at a rate of 15 to 20 miles a day.

The nation's deputy oil minister, Prince Abdul Aziz bin Salman, said the oil slick was likely to cause an ecological disaster many times worse than the one caused by the rupture of the Exxon Valdez in Alaska in 1989.

On the other hand, Saudi officials insisted that spill would have no effect on the water desalinization plants and power stations on which this desert-based society depends.

Meanwhile, Schwarzkopf reported that in the relentless bombing raids against Iraq, allied pilots had sustained no further losses in the past 48 hours. Earlier Sunday, he reported, two F-15 Eagle fighters had engaged four Iraqi Soviet-built MiG-23 fighters in aerial combat just southeast of Baghdad. All four Iraqi planes were shot down, with double kills for both of the U.S. pilots, he said.

The general said he did not know what was behind the continuing transfer of Iraqi warplanes to save havens in neighboring and neutral Iran. But he said he took the Iranians at their word when they announced that the planes — among the best in the Iraqi Air Force — and the pilots would be interned for the duration of the conflict.

All in all, 39 Iraqi planes had landed in Iraq, including 23 within the past day, Schwarzkopf said.

Iraq's "Mother of Battles Radio," meanwhile, warned in a broadcast that "the power that the Iraqis have mustered to confront the U.S. and Zionist aggressors is not a conventional one" — a seeming threat that Iraq would use its large stores of chemical and biological weapons.

Schwartzkopf, asked whether the oil spill would prompt him to alter his timetable for a ground assault to free Kuwait of Iraqi occupation, Schwarzkopf replied, "No, I don't think there's going to be any acceleration or any pressure at all. Unfortunately, war is not a clean business. Everybody has known that."

Schwarzkopf also defended his air war tactics against charges from Baghdad that holy shrines and innocent Iraqi civilians had fallen victim to the near-constant air raids. The general contended that the United States had done more than any other country in the history of warfare to minimize such attacks.

The prevention techniques, the general said, included choosing flight paths and weapons that increased the risk to pilots of the nine nations flying offensive missions in the combat zone.

"We're being very, very careful in our direction of attacks to avoid damage of any kind to civilian installations, he said. But "it's going to happen. It is absolutely going to happen."

Asked whether he sought to psychologically intimidate the Iraqi leader, Schwarzkopf replied:

"I've been trying to psychologically intimidate him from long before the beginning of this conflict. I think we have pretty well predicted for Saddam Hussein exactly what would happen if he went to war against us and he didn't choose to believe it.

"I don't know whether he knows what's going on right now. I sincerely hope he knows exactly what's going on. But I have no intention of psychologically intimidating him, as much as I have of spelling out the simple facts of what's happening and what's going to go on happening."

There were some hopeful signs Sunday that some of the worst predicted ecological effects of the spill could be moderated.

Videotapes shot by a U.S. Navy pilot from the U.S. aircraft carrier Roosevelt who flew over the slick Sunday morning showed that the slick already is breaking up.

Reporters who visited the Gulf beach near the Saudi port of Khafji, where television pictures Friday showed thick oil washing ashore and coating sea birds, found less ecological damage than they had expected.

Although the reporters had limited time and access to the beachfront, they said high winds and rough seas apparently have started to break up the spill, leaving streaks of thin oil rather than a thick layer.

They saw little evidence of damage to wildlife.

KNOCKOUT: 'Nothing is going to be easy'

structures break down, allied ground commanders say. Until then, the allies expect a withering hail of Iraqi artillery fire and rockets.

Treacherous minefields are designed not only to slow allied forces from moving north but also to stop Iraqis from fleeing south.

"Saddam has 4,000 Republican Guards assigned to every division whose job is to make sure the men fight," said a front-line Saudi officer. "Troops can take their choice, dying in front or behind."

The Republican Guards are the elite core of the Iraqi army and are considered especially loyal to Saddam.

Clearly, the air war is taking a heavy toll. Bombs from B-52s gouge gaping craters, blasting away gun emplacements and munitions stores. Strafing raids disrupt Iraqi supply lines and communications.

But many of Iraq's 530,000 troops in the Kuwait theater are secure in hardened bunkers, and their 155mm guns are capable of pinpoint accuracy with conventional or chemical shells.

While U.S. forces are equipped with old-style howitzers, loaded one shell at a time by a burly "number one man," the Iraqis have French-made automatic howitzers.

Iraq's Soviet-made T-72 tanks, with laser-guided fire and heavy armor, are a fair match for the Americans' M-1 Abrams tanks and their range is longer than the older-model, smaller U.S. M-60s.

U.S. Marine officers say the Iraqis have built concentric sand berms, 12-foot-high walls, behind moats which can be filled with flaming oil. Explosive butane tanks are buried under likely tank routes.

A half million mines in two broad belts form an outer defense, from the Saudi-Iraqi border, and many more are expected to be scattered on the way toward inner fortifications at Kuwait City.

Just after the war began on Jan. 17, an Iraqi rocket set ablaze an oil storage tank in the Saudi border town of Khafji and shelling wounded several U.S. Marines in positions to the south. Marine assault helicopters and Harrier jets rained fire on the Iraqi lines.

U.S. Air Force fighter-bombers have targeted the area in their daily raids on Saddam's front line.

But almost every night, the Iraqis lob in shells to remind advance Desert Storm forces of their presence.

"They take advantage of nighttime to roll out the big guns," a Saudi commander said. "In the morning, they hide them again."

He confirmed enthusiastic reports from the allied command in Riyadh, the Saudi capital, that many Iraqis were prepared to defect.

CHILDREN: War reports heighten a child's fears

they said.

"When children don't have logical explanations for events they can't understand, they will fill in the blanks for themselves," said Mrs. Theis, a social worker in the Ossining, N.Y., Public Schools.

"And a lot of the time, what the child will conjure up in the imagination is much worse than the reality itself," she said.

Mrs. Theis, who also has a private practice, used as an example a 9-year-old girl she counsels.

At the end of a recent therapy session, the youngster stood up, looked at the calendar on the wall and said, "You know, tomorrow's the war."

When Mrs. Theis asked the girl what war meant to her, the youngster said she thought that soldiers would be coming to her house.

While there are no absolute rules to follow, the therapists, both social workers, recently suggested some practical ways for parents to help children "decode a confusing world," as Robinson explained it.

"That's the parental function," said Robinson, assistant director of Fordham University's postgraduate training program for child and adolescent therapy.

"The parent is the mediator between the child and the world the child doesn't have the experience to understand."

"The world," he added, "can be a pretty scary place to a kid."

For instance, news reports about war heighten a child's fears of separation, Mrs. Theis said.

Even if the child is not directly affected, chances are he or she knows some other child who is. Also, children watch accounts of fathers and mothers going off to war and worry about whether that will happen in their family.

"Children," she explained, "identify with what happens to other kids. They try on everything for themselves.

"And if a child does have a parent leaving for the Gulf, how does the youngster know how long the parent will be away? It's not like saying, we're taking a vacation and we'll be back in a week," Mrs. Theis said.

"Worse yet, there's the question of whether the parent will ever come home again."

Robinson was treating a 7-year-old girl whose father, a reservist, was about to leave for the Gulf. The girl, Robinson said, played out during therapy being the mother and caring for the other children in the family.

"It's the child's way of taking charge. She is trying to reassure herself that she will be taken care of and everything will still be all right when her father has to leave," Robinson explained.

What children need most, the social workers agreed, is a sense of home base, of a secure attachment.

During World War II, studies made by Anna Freud and Dorothy Burlingham showed that children in London who remained with their parents fared better emotionally than those who were sent to the countryside, away from the bombings but separated from their immediate family, Robinson said.

"And recent studies show that even children who grow up amid crime and poverty can survive emotionally if they have a stable adult to depend on," he said.

"What those studies tell us is that when the world becomes chaotic, a child needs an oasis of continuity," he explained.

For children trying to comprehend world events in recent weeks, Mrs. Theis recommended opening a dialogue on the subject of war.

"It is important to sit down and reassure your child, to explain to them at their level, what's happening and that their life is safe, that they can still go to soccer and the war is not here," she said.

"But don't give them any blanket guarantees or promises. Level with them."

Sometimes, however, it is not major world events or family traumas that cause stress in children.

Having an argument with a friend, taking the bus to school, trying out for a team or not being invited to a birthday party can trigger stress.

"Parents forget what it's like to be a child," Mrs. Theis said. "Things that are troublesome for kids too often get brushed off by adults who don't think it's a big deal."

Robinson said, "Pre-schoolers, especially, are very passionate. They are full of jealousy, anger, sorrow and love. It's the age of the mini soap opera, kind of like J.R. in the nursery.

"It means kids of that age will respond very deeply to even little snubs and difficulties," he said. "Parents should never minimize their children's feelings."

The key to helping children deal with stress, Robinson and Mrs. Theis agreed, is beginning the open dialogue in the early years and maintaining it throughout adolescence.

"The only way children learn to articulate their fears and concerns is from their parents," Mrs. Theis said. "Kids don't just start spontaneously talking about their feelings at 15. Parents need to lay the groundwork much earlier."

In addition to urging parents to keep open the lines of communication with their children and to avoid brushing off youngsters' expressions of worry, the social workers, during their workshops, help parents "tune in to signs of stress," Robinson said.

"Any change in the general character of the child should be taken as a sign there may be trouble," he said. "Older kids act out, with alcohol, drugs or promiscuity, for example. Younger children react to stress in other ways. It's important to know what the signs are for different ages."

DILEMMA: Dependency has been two-way street

two years in the White House is that the dependency of the two superpowers' relationship has proved to be a two-way street.

Gorbachev's acquiescence permitted East Germany to merge with West Germany without incident. His unilateral withdrawal of some troops and tanks from Eastern Europe led to a treaty in November to cut NATO and Warsaw Pact arms.

And when the countries in Eastern and Central Europe chose to experiment with democracy and free-market systems Gorbachev did not stand in the way.

But now both the relationship and his own reputation as a promoter of democracy are being tested in the Baltics. Gorbachev's use of force to try to blunt the drive for independence has prompted Congress to call for U.S. sanctions and caused Bush to reconsider being seen with the Soviet leader.

The president presumably will tell new Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander A. Bessmertnykh when they meet Monday whether he wishes to go ahead with the summit, now planned for Feb. 11-13.

At the outset of his talks here, Bessmertnykh told reporters the United States and Soviet Union remain "in the same alliance" in the Persian Gulf conflict.

But with an unsmiling Secretary of State James A. Baker III looking on, the Soviet diplomat also declared Saturday that there may be a danger of the war "going more in the direction of the destruction of Iraq and in the direction of involving more casualties on both sides."

Gorbachev fears that if Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia go their separate ways, the Soviet Union could unravel with defections in Georgia, Moldavia, the Ukraine and elsewhere.

Bush understands Gorbachev's desire to keep his country together, even while his economic and political experiments are under challenge from conservatives on one side and unproved radicals on the other.

The strong U.S.-Soviet ties that prompted Bush to declare in May 1989 that the two former adversaries were moving "beyond containment" benefit Washington as well as Moscow.

A treaty to cut long-range nuclear missiles by about 30 percent overall is nearly finished. It is the projected centerpiece for the Moscow summit. The deadline drives negotiators as they try to settle the remaining technical issues.

Postponing the summit could delay the treaty, as well.

Even more urgent for Bush is maintaining Soviet support in the conflict with Iraq.

The Soviets have not sent troops to the region, and Baker stopped asking for them months ago when it became obvious Moscow could not say yes because of political opposition at home.

But the Soviets joined in all 12 U.N. Security Council resolutions that were directed at Iraq, including the authorization of force to reverse the occupation of Kuwait.

Gorbachev lent his support to Bush even though he was more inclined than the president to seek a diplomatic solution. That inclination may explain why Gorbachev said last Tuesday that he wished to do everything possible to prevent "escalation of the conflict."

And it may explain the statements Bessmertnykh made in Moscow and Washington about the potential damage of the massive U.S. assault on Iraq.

After a two-hour meeting with Baker, he called it "a source of concern" to his government even though the Soviets agreed with the United States on the goal of liberating Kuwait.

But he said everyone should be thinking of the devastating impact on civilians and the Iraqi economy "and try to avoid it."

At the same time, Bessmertnykh stressed that "we are doing the best we can, all of us. . . . We are all in the same alliance."

SHOOTING: 'Out of control'

ing from a concussion, arm fractures and chest injuries, Azubalis said.

The commander of the Soviet Army garrison had warned Saturday that his troops were getting "more and more out of control."

Troops have been patrolling major cities in Lithuania and the highways that connect them since a weekend of violence two weeks ago claimed 14 lives and injured more than 500 people.

Azubalis said the Interior Ministry and other departments of the republic's government are formally logging incidents of Soviet brutality.

He said the government of Lithuania, with about 3.7 million residents, had also agreed with representatives of the Soviet prosecutor's office to work on a joint investigation of all the incidents.

The republics of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia are seeking independence from the Soviet Union. Stalin forcibly incorporated the three Baltic countries, which were independent between the two world wars, into the Soviet Union in 1940.

The Soviet leadership in Moscow has pressed the republics to retract their demands and, backed by the Soviet army, is trying to reimpose central government control. The Baltics all have freely elected parliaments and claim that laws passed by their new democratic legislatures supercede Moscow's.

OPERATION DESERT STORM

Relatives of Aviva Grundland comfort her during the funeral of her husband, Eitan Grundland, Sunday in Tel Aviv. Grundland died Friday night when a portion of his home collapsed after being hit by an Iraqi Scud missile.

Tel Aviv mayor's charge angers some residents

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The handwritten sign outside the movie theater proclaimed Tel Aviv's "finest hour," but the crowd inside on Sunday was divided and resentful.

About 200 Tel Aviv residents had come to the movie house to confront Mayor Shlomo Lahat over remarks last week in which he branded as "deserters" those who have fled the Iraqi missile barrages on Tel Aviv.

"Who appointed you to preach morality to us?" someone shouted.

"You, Chich, have insulted us," an elderly woman exclaimed, using the mayor's nickname.

The debate, which also brought up matters of gender, class and politics, was a new one for this war-plagued country. For the first time since the Jewish state was founded in 1948, the home front is the battlefield while the troops on the border are safe.

Six missile attacks in the past 10 days have killed four people, injured more than 200, and damaged more than 3,500 homes in the greater Tel Aviv area.

Tens of thousands have left the metropolis of 1.7 million for outlying, missile-free areas in an exodus demonstrated by the sudden abundance of parking places in Tel Aviv.

On the surface, the city is presenting a brave face. People liken themselves to Londoners under the Nazi aerial blitz in World War II and borrow Winston Churchill's phrase about "their finest hour." The city was its normal bustling, congested self Sunday while the sun shone, but at nightfall people hurried home to protect themselves against another rocket attack.

Lahat, in jeans and windbreaker and carrying a gas mask, sat on the stage with a panel of intellectuals and tried to explain what he meant by "desertion."

He could understand people with small children or elderly parents fleeing, he said, but not "people who don't have small children."

"I'm frightened, too, and the question is whether we overcome our fear, because what Saddam Hussein wants is to disrupt our way of life. He didn't choose Tel Aviv by chance. This is the metropolis, this is the center, and I don't think we should let him do it."

War-weary troops watch Super Bowl free of Scuds

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia (AP) — A pretzel in one hand, a non-alcoholic beer in the other, Tech. Sgt. Lee James was ready for kickoff, wishing his Chicago Bears were playing but adopting Buffalo instead.

Staff Sgt. Joseph Morrison, a Bears fan in the Giants camp for this night, sat shoulder to shoulder with Staff Sgt. Doug Kline, a Buffalo fan for no other reason that Bills quarterback Jim Kelly grew up in his native Pennsylvania.

There was bantering and boasting, and a few small bets, too. But something was wrong.

James couldn't have the Budweiser he wanted, settling for a non-alcoholic Barbican. And comfortable dress was out; the 30 men at this Super Bowl party were ordered to wear bulky chemical protective suits and gas masks strapped to their hips.

And most of the pre-game speculation had nothing to do with the outcome.

The question? Would Saddam Hussein interrupt the Super Bowl, a brief break from the Persian Gulf war for many of the half-million Americans deployed in the region, with a Scud missile attack.

"I think he will," said James, a 22-year Air Force veteran.

He didn't.

The 30 weapons technicians for the fighter wing watched the game in a munitions bunker on a Saudi air base, standing or sitting on makeshift plywood benches not far from several stacks of missile cases.

The First Tactical Fighter Wing was here for the World Series, and many members of small group watching the game on Armed Forces Television predicted they might be here for another one too, and perhaps another Super Bowl.

"I hope not," James said. "But we're not going anywhere until the job is done."

Although they disagreed on whether the Bills or Giants would capture the National Football League crown, every member of the group boasted of being a Patriot fan — not the NFL Patriots of New England but the Patriot anti-missile system of the Army — the front line of defense against Saddam's Scuds.

The missile attacks have brought many sleepless nights to the troops, who at every launch are ordered to don their gas masks.

Few tried to hide their anxiety that a Scud might one day make it passed the Patriots, perhaps carrying a gas or chemical warhead.

Israelis stay awake for game

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Super Bowl kickoff came after 1 a.m. in Israel, but Israelis were awake and watching while they were on alert against possible Iraqi missiles attacks.

It was the first year the NFL championship was shown live by Israel television, which began all-night broadcasting after the Persian Gulf war started.

Many families have one person awake during the night to help the others if air raid sirens sound a warning of another missile barrage. Iraq has fired medium-range ballistic missiles at Israel on six nights since Jan. 18.

American football is virtually unknown here outside the community of U.S. immigrants or Israelis who have lived in the United States.

Preceding the game between the Buffalo Bills and New York Giants, the state-owned television and radio invited fans to explain everything from the rules of football and the manner of betting to why Americans are so interested in the game.

"I think a lot of people will be watching tonight," said Avi Pazner, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's spokesman who became a Washington Redskins fan when he was a diplomat.

"I'll be watching, even though I'm missing a lot of sleep from the previous nights when there was action of a kind other than football," Pazner said on Israel radio.

CBS continues to search for missing team

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS continued its efforts Sunday to find a four-member news team missing for nearly a week, and a CNN correspondent in Baghdad reported that Iraqi authorities say they have no word on the crew.

Correspondent Bob Simon, producer Peter Bluff, cameraman Roberto Alvarez and soundman Juan Caldera disappeared last Monday while covering the Persian Gulf war. They were traveling without military escort near occupied Kuwait.

"We are doing all we can to determine if indeed Bob Simon and his crew are in Iraqi hands, and if he is, that he be brought to Baghdad and shipped home," CNN's Peter Arnett reported in a live broadcast by satellite phone Sunday from that city.

But "the Iraqis are saying they do not have him (Simon), or they don't have any information about him at this point," said Arnett, who has been reporting from Baghdad since the war began on Jan. 16.

A Saudi military patrol found the crew's unoccupied car last week. Saudi officials said Friday that the crew apparently had been heading into occupied Kuwait.

"We've been urgently and aggressively contacting every official in the U.S. and overseas who might be able to help or provide information that could lead us to the crew," CBS spokesman Tom Goodman said.

Odessan mans Patriot battery in Dhahran

Hearst News Service

At a Patriot anti-missile battery, Sgt. Hector Minjarez, 32, of Odessa, Texas, reflected on his mission of blasting Iraqi-fired Scud missiles before they hit their target.

"If you want to know honestly, we are kind of scared," said Minjarez. "The problem is you really don't know if it (a Scud) is going to hit you or not. The other day, we were listening to TV and one of the shows had a police siren going off. We all jumped for the door."

Pvt. Thomas Schneider, 25, of Hillsboro, Mo., is with a unit of the First Infantry Division that is expected to be among the first wave of the U.S. assault on Iraqi trenches and bunkers once the ground war starts.

"It is considered common courtesy not to talk about how scared you are," said Schneider. "If one guy gets depressed about it, then the next guy catches it from him."

The sentiment was seconded by Spec. Anthony Brown, 26, of Richmond, Va., who said, "Fear and depression are like herpes. When one guy gets it, pretty soon everybody has it."

He added, "It is better not to think about it anyway. That may sound brainless, but if you thought about it, you couldn't do it, and somebody has to do it."

Pvt. Jeffrey Thomassen, 20, of Olathe, Kans., said, "I'm sure when we start moving out, there will be a lot of jitters."

OPERATION DESERT STORM

Crow Indian warriors again on front lines

By Tad Bartimus

CROW INDIAN RESERVATION, Mont. (AP) — Many moons before an ungrateful nation gave them the vote or admitted them into "civilized" society, Crow Indian warriors rode with Custer on the losing side.

Later, their sons voluntarily charged up San Juan Hill with Teddy Roosevelt and flew against the Red Baron in the skies above France. The ink on their citizenship papers was barely dry when Crow braves hit the beaches at Normandy, scaled the cliffs at Monte Casino, targeted Berlin in B-17 bomb sights and shipped out to Korea to retake Pork Chop Hill. Another generation of sons parachuted into Viet Cong ambushes at Chu Lai and Khe Sanh.

Now it is their great-great-grandsons' — and great-great-granddaughters' — turn. There are 64 Crow men and women fighting in Operation Desert Storm, or on their way to the Persian Gulf.

They go to war, their loved ones say, to bring tribute to the tribe, to defeat an enemy of their country, to protect Mother Earth.

And they will battle to the very end, if they must, because, as tribal elder Gilbert Scott said, "We place our honor above death."

In the winter-bound towns of Lodge Grass and Hardin and Saint Xavier, proud but worried families are holding sacred ceremonies and sewing medicine bundle necklaces for their faraway relatives to wear as talismans.

TRIBAL CHAIRWOMAN Clara Nomee displays a yellow ribbon as she prays for President Bush. At Crow headquarters on the outskirts of the main-street town named Crow Agency, a growing gallery of photographs stripped from atop TV sets and bedroom dressers fills up a glass case. They are solemn, formal portraits loaned by parents lest anyone forgets.

But everybody in this extended family knows these young patriots. Pfc. Ervin Birdinground was a star basketball player for Hardin. SC3 Wesley Old Coyote, who left his wife and children behind in Hawaii, is helping fire Tomahawk missiles at Iraq. Lance Cpl. Leon Stewart, a Marine, and Army Spc. Alvin Morrison IV were teammates on Hardin's 1985 state championship cross-country team.

The young women's lyrical names are familiar, too: Michelle Young Swallow, Tina Red Star, Carrie Chasing Hawk, Anita Old Bull, Wanda Medicine Horse.

All of them enlisted for three reasons, elders say: the chance to get an education and earn better money, to elevate their status in the tribe through bravery in battle, and genuine patriotism.

"Since the first European bunch came, we've lost so much that we fear if another country takes over we'll have to go through it all over again, so we fight hard for the country we've already got," said John Pretty-On-Top, a former Marine. Forty-one of his relatives have served in uniform since World War II. His niece, Roberta Snell, is in the Persian Gulf.

"The Crow come from a warrior tradition which says that when there is gunfire at the edge of the camp, you can always count on us to be there and fight," said Barney Old Coyote, 67, who flew 50 World War II combat missions with his brother as tail gunners in the same B-17.

AP Laserphoto

Of the more than 400 Crows who served in World War II, only two were killed. Elders say that is because those left behind on the reservation prayed and fasted during many sun dances.

Relatives now are sponsoring ceremonies on behalf of those endangered in Operation Desert Storm, offering food, tobacco and blankets to the tribe's wisest men in exchange for their prayers.

CROW COUNTRY once sprawled over 30 million acres of Wyoming and Montana, stretching all the way to Canada. Today, the reservation has been reduced to 2.3 million acres. The buffalo are gone, and so are the white bears. But it still is a magnificent landscape of undulating high plains rich with native grass and framed by snow-crested mountains.

The tribe numbers about 8,000, with roughly half its members living on the reservation. Crow tradition binds them together, links them with the past.

They fiercely preserve their sacred rites and pass their language on to their children. Story-telling and dances are skeins that keep their culture from unraveling. In a modern world where unemployment, alcoholism and illiteracy are as deadly to American Indians as poison-tipped arrows were to their ancestors, the Crow tribe has proved resilient.

Elders say that is because the Crows were never conquered. Reacting to a chief's prophetic dream that foretold the coming of white-faced men who would overwhelm their nomadic way of life, the tribe signed its first treaty with Washington in 1825. Each side pledged to assist the other in case of trouble.

Joe Medicine Crow, 77, the tribal historian and the only living member of the tribe whose wartime exploits qualify him to be a chief under the old rules, recalls the battle numbers.

Fifteen years later, an all-Crow unit, Troop L, was created at Fort Custer in Montana. Of those first Indian soldiers, their white commander, Lt. S.C. Robertson, wrote in 1892: "Self-reliant, intelligent, fierce in battle ... it is doubtful if even the Cossack or Arab can be compared with them in partisan warfare."

THREE BRAVES fought in the Spanish-American War, including Russell White Bear, who was a member of the 1st U.S. Volunteer Cavalry, Roosevelt's Rough Riders.

In World War I, 29 men volunteered, including George W. Peters, one of our first combat pilots.

Carson Walks-Over-Ice was one of 135 Crows who went to Vietnam. He has spent years compiling the Crows' military history, tracking down each soldier's unit and personal reminiscences. Walks-Over-Ice was assigned to a 95-man unit of the 101st Airborne. When he was shot twice in the leg in 1967 and shipped home, 87 of those buddies were dead or wounded.

"War is a bad deal, but freedom is precious and I know we have to sacrifice our sons to preserve it," said Walks-Over-Ice, 44. "A Crow warrior is proud of what he is, of his manhood, and he is such a good fighter because he has faith and tradition to hold on to.

"He also knows that because of our close family ties, if something happens to him, his wife and children will always be taken care of."

When he returned from the war, Walks-Over-Ice had to ride a horse into the Crow Fair and recite his deeds in battle. Like tribal elder Joe Medicine Crow, Walks-Over-Ice had performed acts of valor in keeping with the old ways.

"To become a pipe carrier you must touch an enemy without hurting him, which is called counting coup. You must also take an enemy's weapon, lead a successful war party without losing any of your men, and capture an enemy's horse," said Walks-Over-Ice. "Joe Medicine Crow captured 50 Nazi SS horses and completed all four deeds. I did everything except get the horses. I captured four enemy elephants, but that doesn't count."

War threatens 'cradle of civilization,' archaeologists say

"It's one of the more unfortunate places in the world where this could happen," said Mike Shoemaker, assistant editor of Biblical Archaeology Review, a Washington-based publication.

Baghdad, among the heaviest hit areas, is at the eastern edge of ancient Mesopotamia, a region between the Tigris and Euphrates rivers that was settled before 4000 B.C.

"It's where we have the first writing, it's where we have the first cities, it's where we have the first monumental architecture. All of these things are the base of all modern civilization," said McGuire Gibson, a professor of Mesopotamian archaeology at the University of Chicago.

One of the most endangered sites is the Iraq National Museum in downtown Baghdad, where thousands of treasures such as clay writing tablets and jewelry are housed, Shoemaker said.

"What's most horrible about it is (that) it is located right next door to the main railroad station," Gibson said. "A television and radio station are within 500 feet of the museum."

A blast near the museum likely would damage its fragile treasures, Gibson said last week.

"There's no telling what's been destroyed," he said. "The museum is not made to take that kind of pounding."

The Defense Ministry partially surrounds the Abbasid Palace, one of Baghdad's major standing monuments. The yellow brick structure, dating to about 1200 A.D., is one of Iraq's few intact historic monuments.

"It's where we have the first writing, it's where we have the first cities, it's where we have the first monumental architecture.'
— McGuire Gibson, archaeology professor

Gibson said he has been unable to contact museum workers and friends to find out the extent of bomb damage.

"I would guess there's been some damage because the Defense Ministry has been hit," he said.

A Pentagon spokesman said U.S. officials "are not discussing specific results of targeting."

"We've said we've hit military sites, we're not going after holy sites," said the spokesman, who would not allow his name to be used.

But in southern Iraq, Gibson said, an air base "which is being hammered constantly" by bombs is adjacent to the ancient city of Ur, said to have been the birthplace of the biblical patriarch Abraham.

"We're seeing on TV only the smart bombs that hit" their designated targets, Gibson said. "We don't see the ones that miss."

Another endangered site is at Samarra, reportedly the site of a chemical weapons plant targeted by the allies about 90 miles north of Baghdad, Gibson said.

The remains of an Islamic city dating to 800 A.D. "are in very grave danger" there, he said.

Before war broke out on Jan. 16, noted archaeologist Robert McCormick Adams, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, predicted that no "calamitous" damage would be done to ancient sites except those near modern cities and other potential targets.

Madeleine Jacobs, director of public affairs for the Smithsonian, said Wednesday that Adams wished to do no further interviews on the subject.

"He does wish to note, though, that he considers the entire situation tragic, but he is more concerned for the people of Iraq than he is for achaeological sites," Jacobs said.

Gibson said the war forced him to cancel his annual winter research trip to Iraq.

"What you're going to do is alter the landscape to a point where ... certain types of research that we do will not be able to be done again," he said.

Some are reluctant to discuss the situation, fearing that the Iraqis will misinterpret their words and bar them from the country.

"Even if the country's reconstructed ... I think there would still be a lot of resentment of Western archaeologists," Shoemaker said.

Iraqi claims allied aircraft bombed relative's home

TORONTO (AP) — An Iraqi told a Canadian Press reporter how his relatives moved from Baghdad to escape the bombing but their sanctuary — another relative's home — was bombed by allied aircraft.

Mohammad Al-Habboubi, an engineer, was quoted by the CP report as saying he rushed outside when he heard bombs falling Jan. 20 in An Najaf, 90 miles south of Baghdad.

When he arrived at his cousin's home, he found it had received a direct hit, he said. Iraqi officials have said 13 of the 14 people inside were killed, among 35 victims of the attack.

The CP correspondent, Leila Deeb, a Jordanian, was taken to the destroyed home and other damaged areas of An Najaf on Saturday by Iraqi officials.

The Canadian Press said it was not known whether the dispatch had been subjected to Iraqi censorship.

Correspondent Peter Arnett of the Cable News Network, one of the other remaining foreign correspondents in Baghdad, has said their movements are limited and their work overseen by Iraqi authorities, but few changes are made in their reports.

The Iraqis contend many attacks by U.S. and allied warplanes have damaged residential and other non-military locations in Iraq. The command of Operation Desert Storm, the anti-Iraq coalition, says it has targeted only military and other strategic sites.

Rebels take Somalia; ruler's whereabouts unknown

The whereabouts of Siad Barre, who had ruled the California-sized nation since 1969, remained unknown.

Rebel spokesman Mohamed Robleh said it was believed "Siad Barre was at the airport surrounded by our forces. We believe he may have been captured."

Earlier reports from Somalia's capital said Siad Barre, about 80, had fled to Kismayu, south of Mogadishu, one of the few sections of the Horn of Africa nation of 8 million believed still loyal to him.

Robleh said in London that his United Somali Congress would announce an acting committee within 48 hours to run Somalia. He said the interim government would remain until representatives from the main rebel groups could meet to form a democratic government representing the nation's various clans.

Thousands of people danced through Mogadishu's streets on Saturday night after the rebels drove Siad Barre from the presidential mansion and seized state radio, said Dr. Marc Gastello Etchejorry of the humanitarian agency Doctors Without Borders.

The guerrillas tightened their grip Sunday by capturing the airport, the last government stronghold, Etchejorry said.

"The information from Mogadishu is that the fighting has finished. There is no more shooting," said Etchejorry, who left Mogadishu on Sunday morning for Kenya and spoke later in the day by radio telephone to Western doctors still in Somalia.

"The rebels have announced that all of the city is under their control."

While there was no independent confirmation of the situation because of widespread communications problems, the rebels in their claim — broadcast over the formerly government-run Radio Mogadishu — said they seized control of Mogadishu at Saturday night.

Despite the rebels' apparent victory, Etchejorry said the situation in Mogadishu was "quite anarchic."

"There are so many people with guns, it is quite incredible," he said.

The rebels, who draw their strength from the large central Hawiye clan, have pledged to replace Siad Barre's government with a multiparty democracy, hold free elections and allow some form of regional autonomy for the arid nation's clan-based people.

WORLD

Siad Barre, a member of the tiny Marehan clan that comprises less than 1 percent of Somalia's people, seized power in a bloodless 1969 coup.

During his one-party rule, he steered the predominantly Muslim nation through shifting alliances with the Soviets and the United States.

The United States was Siad Barre's main backer from the 1970s until recent years when it cut nearly all aid because of increasing reports of human rights abuses.

French rebels win Round 1 in elections

PARIS (AP) — Two rebel right-wing politicians won the first round Sunday of special parliamentary elections they billed as a crusade to rid France of political corruption. Turnout was light.

A third finished second in her district but will also compete in runoff elections Feb. 3.

The three — Lyon Mayor Michel Noir, Jean-Michel Dubernard and former health minister Michele Barzach — quit last month to force the vote. It was seen as a challenge to Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac, a former premier and leader of the conservative Rally for the Republic Party.

Noir and Dubernard easily won their Lyon contests and will face runoff opponents from Jean-Marie Le Pen's extreme-right National Front, which posted a surprisingly strong showing ahead of the traditional mainstream parties.

Noir captured 43 percent of the vote for his seat, while his nearest challenger, Bruno Gollnisch, weighed in with 16 percent. Dubernard won 40 percent of the vote compared to 18 percent for the Front's Alain Breuil.

1,000 march to protest student leader's sentence

No violence reported; releases demanded

HONG KONG (AP) — About 1,000 people staged a march Sunday on the Xinhua News Agency office in this British colony to protest the sentencing in Beijing of Wang Dan, a student leader of the 1989 pro-democracy movement in China.

The demonstrators, some wearing white sheets and headbands as a sign of mourning, shouted slogans demanding the release of Wang and other dissidents but no violence was reported during the three-hour protest.

A few burned mock copies of the Chinese constitution in the second such protest in three days. On Friday, 2,000 held a similar march on the Xinhua office, which acts as Beijing's de facto diplomatic mission in the territory. Hong Kong reverts to Chinese rule in 1997.

The protesters also carried posters of Wang, who was sentenced Saturday by a Beijing court to four years in jail. He was one of five democracy activists who received prison terms for their role in the democracy movement that was crushed by Chinese troops, resulting in hundreds dead.

The protest was staged by the Hong Kong Alliance In Support Of The Movement In China. Beijing has accused the Alliance of using Hong Kong as a base for subversion.

China has pledged to retain Hong Kong's capitalistic and legal systems for 50 years after 1997, but its use of military force to crush the pro-demcoracy movement has raised fears here that Beijing could renege on its promises.

Violence breaks out over rumors

10 die, 14 hurt when word spreads that Lafontant would be set free

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Rumors of a plot to free the jailed leader of a Jan. 6 coup attempt provoked street violence Sunday that left at least 10 people dead and 14 wounded, according to independent radio reports.

The dead included four reputed agents of the ousted Duvalier family dictatorship lynched by a mob and six protesters shot by soldiers, the reports said.

Government and military officials denied there had been an attempt to free coup leader Roger Lafontant and said he and his 15 alleged conspirators remained under heavy guard at the National Penitentiary.

Radio reports said the disturbances began before daybreak as slumdwellers erected barricades of flaming tires and debris in many sections of Port-au-Prince, capital of this impoverished nation of 6 million.

In suburban Carrefour, soldiers opened fire on an unruly crowd, killing at least six protesters, Radio Haiti Inter said. It listed 14 as wounded.

Witnesses said a police station was burned in Carrefour and that the Army opened fire on the crowd. One of the killed was a blind musician, organist Ulrick Pierre.

In a separate incident, Radio Metropole reported a mob lynched four men reputedly linked to the 29-year Francois "Papa Doc" and son Jean-Claude "Baby Doc" Duvalier dictatorships.

By 7 a.m. EST, general calm was restored after the Army High Command and Port-au-Prince Mayor Evans Paul announced in separate broadcasts on state radio that rumors to free Lafontant were unfounded.

Paul said Paul Jean Mario of the militant National Front for Change and Democracy, which nominated him for office, was stabbed in the back when he tried to persuade the mob to go home.

Anti-Arab acts go against justice

During 1942, the heat of outrage over the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor prompted the U.S. government to relocate about 110,000 West Coast residents of Japanese ancestry to relocation camps inland. The horrors of that unjust reaction to the war hysteria linger today, 49 years later.

In recent years, we have attempted to belatedly come to grips with that injustice. It would be better, rather, to insure that such tragic events are never repeated. Yet there are signs that a wave of similar bigotry is washing across the United States today in regard to Arab-Americans. In recent days bombings, threats and other ugliness have been directed against individuals who "appear" to be of Arab origin. That's a tragic offshoot of war such as the one now being waged against Iraq.

Violent acts carried out against Arab-Americans are no less despicable than the cross-burnings and hangings of the Ku Klux Klan or the hatemongering of the Nazis that still seethes beneath the surface of legitimate America, fomenting racial strife and elitism.

This is not to imply that law enforcement officials should not follow through on actual reports of individuals of Arab origin acting suspiciously. After all, there have been reports that Arab terrorists might carry out terroristic acts in this country. But for private citizens to unleash their hostilities against Arab-Americans because of the war is akin to vigilante justice, regrettably on occasion ending with an innocent person on the receiving end of the rope.

Perhaps saddest of all are the actions of those Americans who unleash their hatred supposedly on the basis of their patriotism for this country. Patriotism is a valid and honorable expression of one's sentiment, but those who act violently against individuals who have not even been accused of a crime and call it patriotism would be advised to recall that Americans of all racial, religious and ethnic persuasions are protected by the United States Constitution and that tolerance is an outstanding concept of our law.

Carrying out hate crimes against Arab-Americans simply because this nation is at war with an Arab state goes against everything our forefathers sought to prevent in establishing this government, based on truth and justice.

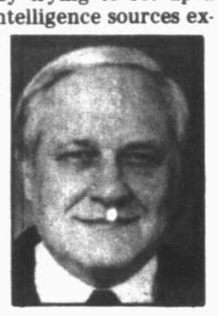
U.S. braces for influx of terrorists

WASHINGTON — At least two of the Iraqi diplomats kicked out of the United States at the start of the Persian Gulf war were busy trying to set up a terrorist network, and intelligence sources expect that more than 100 terrorists will try to infiltrate U.S. borders within the next month.



Anderson

Sources in the Justice Department and Central Intelligence Agency and other knowledgeable sources who shared that intelligence with us were quick to add that there is no reason to panic. Iraqi-sponsored terrorists are likely to target American installations in Western Europe first. The least likely strategy would be to strike within the United States, where the terrorists have only a slim network of support to hide them and supply them with weapons and explosives.

But lack of a support system has not stopped Saddam Hussein from trying. Highly classified U.S. intelligence reports say that the United States has received information that Saddam has already dispatched more than 100 terrorists, both seasoned and novice, to try to infiltrate the United States. One report, quoting sources inside Iraq, cites a specific number of terrorists — 160 — who have been sent off with missions in America.

That coincides with reports that at least two and possibly as many as four Iraqi diplomats in their embassy in Washington were monitored as they attempted to set up terrorist cells in the capital and elsewhere in the United States.

Our sources say that there is no evidence that the low-level diplomats still in the embassy are involved in terrorist-related activities or even significant espionage. If they were, they would be booted out too.

If Saddam is serious about terrorizing Americans at home, there are several allies he could call on for help. The most dangerous terrorist organization in the world, the Abu Nidal Organization now based in Baghdad, has a rudimentary infrastructure of about 50 people in the United States. All of them, according to FBI sources, are under surveillance.

Abu Nidal, a rebel Palestinian, has successfully rained terror since the early 1970s on Israelis, Western Europeans, Americans and even his old rival in the Palestine Liberation Organization, Yasir Arafat.

If Saddam's agenda fits his own, Abu Nidal will do Saddam's terrorist bidding.

What if Saddam is killed or Iraq surrenders? That will not stop the terrorists. A recent intelligence report says that Saddam has deposited money in several Swiss bank accounts, which will automatically be paid out to terrorists no matter what happens to Saddam.

Most Iraqis recruited for terrorist strikes will be rank amateurs. Iraqis living in the United States who support Saddam strongly enough to resort to violence would probably be used to provide bank accounts, safe houses and materials for the experts who sneak into the country.

Among the other terrorist celebrities who are taking, or would take orders from Saddam are Abu Ibrahim, a pioneer bomb maker who designed the barometric pressure bomb that blew up Pan Am flight 103; Ahmed Jibril, who masterminded the Pan Am bombing on a contract from Iran; and Mohammed Abul Abbas, who hijacked the Achille Lauro cruise ship in 1985 and launched a speed boat attack against Israeli beaches last year.

Abbas has displayed a thuggish incompetence, but his attacks have their effect.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The events of the past year since the "fall" of communism have shown that peace is an elusive thing. Mikhail Gorbachev, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, has sacrificed peace in the Baltics for his personal political survival. Since the Nobel committee can't take the prize away from Gorbachev, perhaps they should institute a new rule — that no one gets the prize until after they are dead. Gorbachev has reminded us that posthumous awards are the only way to guarantee the continued integrity of the recipients.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

What's that you say about peace?

It's a new kind of war, we hear. High-tech weapons, delivered from thousands of feet in the air and hundreds of miles away, are the present centerpiece. Another difference from the waning years of the last war: Polls show three quarters of Americans solidly behind their president and fighting men.

Murchison

Meanwhile anti-war protesters join hands, to all intents and purposes, with Saddam Hussein who, for his part, puts battered American POWs on Iraqi TV and forces them to mutter supportive words about the noble cause of the valiant Iraqi people. A few things don't change.

At the protest rallies, guitars strum. Inevitably, someone burbles, "All we are saying is give peace a chance." As if President Bush, over the past five months, had given peace anything else. About the only thing we didn't do, in the end, was get down on our knees to Saddam, saying, "pretty please, with sugar on it."

Most protesters are astute enough to avoid bad-mouthing the military right now. The new style in placards is: "Support our soldiers; bring them home."

A more candid slogan, more indicative of the protesters' outlook, would be: "Support our soldiers; get them honest jobs."

So far, as a country, as a people, we are behaving sensibly with respect to the war: declining to backbite and second-guess, in approved 1960s fashion. That's because things are going well. The military plans a quick, decisive war — the only feasible kind these days.

Peacenik moralizing already takes on the odor of sour milk. It's not clear what our neo-pacifists think an army is for in the first place. Peaceniks belly-ache endlessly about the cost of the "Pentagon budget" — as if the hundreds of billions appropriated annually for manpower and weaponry went to the upkeep of a five-sided building.

The implication is that a faceless military (never, never composed of dedicated individuals desirous of defending their country!) steals milk from babies. Never mind that in terms of gross national product the military gets from Congress only half what it received in the halcyon days of Jack Kennedy and Robert McNamara.

When news reports in Dallas showed war tidings reaching the raggle-taggle protesters, one of them threw down his placard with an oath. He had wished for Saddam a few days more to entrench Iraqi forces in Kuwait? A local civil rights leader suggested it was time to fill up the jails with protesters. Words of censure for Saddam, who after all struck the first blow? In vain we listened. The war, it seemed, was our fault. The poor Iraqis, how could we treat them so?

We can grind our teeth when we hear the like, or, more constructively, we can note the fruits of a policy of diligently ignoring peacenik advice.

The money we bestowed on "The Pentagon" in these years past bought us unmanned cruise missiles that destroy Iraqi targets without risking American lives. The money bought us, additionally, Stealth fighters that slip under radar to land knock-out punches. Also, technology that lets our planes destroy hardened bunkers and disrupt a whole nation's electronic communications system.

All this money gave us, in short, the best-equipped, best-trained, most lethal fighting force in history. We are supposed to tether it, instead of using it to face down a sociopathic dictator?

Had we long ago taken the advice of the peace lobby, naturally we'd now be giving peace a chance; we'd have no other choice. We'd be saying to Saddam, pretty-please with sugar on it.

CHARLEY REESE

Our government is hiding POW/MIA facts

It's rare when a book comes along that has the potential to make a significant impact on American politics. "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," by Monika Jensen-Stevenson and William Stevenson, is that rare book.

Reese

Read this book and you will never look at government again in quite the same way. This is the story of how our government — at least a core of it hidden away in the bowels of national security agencies — deliberately betrayed American POWs in Vietnam. Our government knew there were living POWs left behind and resorted to lies, intimidation, disinformation, frameups, character assassination and possibly even murder to keep that disgusting secret.

Men who would betray comrades, men who would deliberately leave behind Americans to suffer and die in captivity and who would attack those trying to tell the truth are dangerous men. Such indecency and fanaticism, or in some cases cynicism and cowardice, put at risk our liberty. They would betray anyone or anything — including the Constitution.

Monika Jensen-Stevenson was an Emmy-winning producer for the CBS show "60 Minutes." She stumbled into this government mafia when she decided to do a "60 Minutes" segment on Bobby Garfield, a Marine POW who finally came out only to be framed as a deserter. What the government feared was Garfield's knowledge of other living POWS, so they set out to discredit him.

As soon as she began to ask questions, the television producer began to get anonymous threats. She began to be shadowed by clean-cut men with the look of government written all over them. Someone even extinguished the pilot lights on the gas appliances in her Georgetown home, which could have led to an explosion.

You can get a copy of this book at your favorite bookstore or library. It's a Dutton book published by the Penguin Group. Ask for it. Demand it. I almost feel like printing bumper stickers urging Americans to read this book. It has that kind of impact.

If enough Americans read it, it has the potential to generate the political heat to excise a dangerous cancer that has developed in Washington and remains hidden by a group which uses the same tactics as the Mafia — except that this group has infinitely more resources. The ordinary Mafia can't bury the evidence against it under security classifications.

"Kiss the Boys Goodbye" reads like a spy thriller, only all the names and people are real. She tells the story just as she discovered it. It is not a textbook on the MIA issue. It is an exciting story of determined people pursuing the truth through the Washington bureaucracy and the back alleys of Southeast Asia.

Jensen-Stevenson became so absorbed as the magnitude of the coverup became evident that she left CBS to work on this book.

Read it and you'll understand what a villain Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-Brooklyn, is. In view of his role as an anti-war man in Vietnam and as one of the chief figures in discrediting and attacking anyone who came forward with information about living POWs, it is ironic that he became a war hawk for the Persian Gulf.

But you'll find more than villains, cowards and cynics. You'll also find heroes and heroines. People like Capt. Red McDaniel, a former POW who gave up a promising Navy career to pursue the truth about the MIAs. People like Ross Perot, the Texas billionaire, who stubbornly pursued the truth. People like a wonderful group of Vietnam vets with their own intelligence network who come forward to help and to protect those trying to tell the truth.

This is a new book. Some of the finest people America has ever produced need your help and some of the worst need to be rooted out and prosecuted. You can start the ball toward doing both by buying and reading this book.

It is more than the story of how the government betrayed its POWs and then covered up the crime. It is the story of how a free government can become dangerously corrupted by unaccountable men using national security as camouflage.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

The television reporter was talking to a few good kid-Marines in Saudi Arabia as The Deadline neared.

What an appropriate term I was thinking. Dead-line.

Grizzard

One young man had this to say: "I've never had a bullet fired at me, and have never fired at anyone else. I've been through training, but I've never been in the real thing.

"I just hope when it all starts I'll be able to do my job and be just as ready to die as the Iraqi soldier I'm fighting."

What the young man was saying was he hoped when the shooting starts he wouldn't be a coward.

How many times I've thought that myself. Combat must be the ultimate test of courage, the ultimate gut check.

Facing that test, would I scream and cry and run the other way? Or would I stand and fight?

A physical problem kept me out of Vietnam, and I'm too old for the Persian Gulf. I'm not complaining, but I'll never know the answer.

But still that question lingers. Bombs exploding around me. Bullets whizzing through the air.

Noise. Blood. Death. Hell. Could I have hacked it?

I know a man who is a few years older than me. I consider him to be one of the strongest individuals I've ever met.

I'm seen him handle countless adversities with amazing courage.

He remains calm in the midst of madness. His is always the voice of reason. If ever I had to follow someone into battle, I would want it to be him.

But he told me this once:

"I really wanted a career in the service. I went into the Army out of college, a few years before Korea.

"But when my father died, I had to leave and go back home to take care of the family. A million times since I've wondered if I'd stayed in and had been sent to Korea how I would have handled it.

"Until you've been in combat, you'll never know the limits of your courage. I might have just turned tail and run."

So I sit and watch that television and see and hear those kids. I think about my own father.

He was in World War II and then went back to Korea. He passed the test. In two wars. I have his Silver Star and his Purple Heart framed on my wall as proof.

But can courage be passed on genetically? I've gone into two heart surgeries without screaming and crying and kicking.

That's a big deal? Nobody was trying to kill me. They were trying to SAVE my life.

All this "support for our boys" is a nice thing. Tie your yellow ribbons and wave your flags.

But also know and appreciate and pray that deep in hundreds of thousands of minds, souls and hearts in that godforsaken desert that unsettling question is repeating itself over and over.

How will I handle it when they start shooting real bullets?

The strain must be overwhelming, the anxiety a mountain.

May God help them all. Wrestling with such a hideous unknown must be a hell all its own.

Fractured Japanese families

Work ethic produces miracle, but price high

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Japanese work ethic may have produced an economic miracle, but not without its price. Many workaholic fathers become alienated from their families, resulting in what psychiatrists call "home-avoidance syndrome." And in the absence of the father the mother becomes obsessively attached to her son, sometimes with tragic consequences.

TOKYO (AP) — A mother and son live together in unhealthy intimacy, leading to violence and sometimes incest. Together they bully father, who dreads coming home from work.

It may sound like some Oedipal stage drama, a bit overwrought at that. But it's a daily tragedy endured by a small but growing number of Japanese families who psychiatrists say are paying a price for the country's two-generation-old economic miracle.

Millions of men became "economic animals" in Japan's postwar production fever, forsaking home life for unrelenting devotion to work. The resulting alienation between them and their families has sometimes had traumatic consequences.

One of the more bizarre outcomes was portrayed earlier this year in a book called "Father Can't Come Home Anymore!" The author, psychiatrist Toru Sekiya, runs a Tokyo clinic and night shelter for "salarymen" who are terrified of returning to a home in which they no longer feel welcome.

"For many husbands, the home is just a place to sleep. It's always the company, the company ..." Sekiya said in a recent interview. "In Europe and America, families have a personal life together when the husbands get home that's unrelated to work. You don't have that as much in Japan."

Take one of Sekiya's patients, a 45-year-old section chief at a Tokyo trading company whose career was going nowhere. His wife would urge his teen-age son to follow in her own father's footsteps by entering a top national university. "You won't be able to get a good job if you enter a private university like your father did," she would say.

Soon the mother and son began to berate the man regularly. Utterly dejected, his parental authority shattered, the man began to avoid home. He ended up a resident of Sekiya's midtown shelter, leaving from there for work every morning.

On any given day, five to 10 men sleep at the shelter, said the psychiatrist, who has treated more than 30 patients this year for "home-avoidance syndrome."

"I attribute many of the cases to non-cooperative spouses, but it's also true that many men had been working too hard and lost the ability to adjust to the outside world, even in many cases to their own family," Sekiya said.

"Companies are partially responsible for this."

Companies, however, don't seem to want to recognize the problem, despite a government survey last year that found that 70 percent of working males in their 30s feel they are subject to undue stress, said another psychiatrist, Toshiaki Sakai.

The agonizing alienation that causes "home-avoidance syndrome" can twist another relationship out of shape: that between mother and son. Normally very close, it can become pathologically so without the father at home.

"The husband is married to his work. The wife is married to her son. That's the problem," says Koji Suzuki, a psychiatrist who 30 years ago started Japan's first family therapy practice.

It is almost proverbial in Japan that a man's closest relationship is with his mother, not his wife. Such single-minded devotion is what drives Japan's fabled "kyoiku mama" — education mother — who sacrifices everything to usher her son through Japan's high-pressure education system.

Nonetheless, more than 60 percent of the reported cases of family violence in Japan occur when sons hit their mothers, according to 1990 police statistics.

Suzuki says it is often a son's desperate means of freeing himself from a mother's clinging domination, which can extend well into his 20s.

"The relationship between mother and son becomes so close that when he wants to get out, he has to hit her to do it," Suzuki says. "When she gets scared of him, she's willing to let him go."

Suzuki's wife, Kazuko, also a therapist, adds that "there are a lot of cases of incest, or at least psychological (desire for) incest."

The alienation that makes the father an intruder in this relationship occasionally triggers strange controversies.

In recent months, for example, the news media have carried stories about wives who refuse to wash their husband's underwear together with the family's, claiming it is too unclean.

In rare cases, the alienation has led to murder.

Japanese police have handled several cases in which mothers have had sex with their sons, sometimes to take pressure off them during exam time, says Jim McRae, an American therapist who has worked here for eight years. When the father claimed his conjugal rights, the son grew violent. In at least one case, he beat both parents to death with a baseball bat.

Ironically, Suzuki's treatment program often uses the wife's fear of her son to help bring the alienated husband back into the family. The wife is taught to look to the husband as a protector, a more difficult task in the child-centered Japanese family than it might be in other countries.

"In the United States marriages start with the husband and wife," says Mrs. Suzuki. "But in Japan, without a child, the husband and wife do not exist as a relationship."

However distant emotionally, that relationship worked well enough during Japan's high-growth 1950s and 1960s, when rebuilding the war-torn country was a national mission and pay hikes and promotions were plentiful.

The workaholic dad was a family's pride and joy, even if he wasn't there. To a Japanese wife, a husband who came home from work promptly at 6 p.m. was as much a neighborhood embarrassment as a husband with a taste for late-night carousing might be to an American wife.

"A good husband is healthy and absent," ran one popular saying.

Since the oil shocks of the 1970s, however, the Japanese economy has grown at a slower pace. Competition for a relatively static number of managerial posts has intensified. At the same time, outlandish land prices and other high costs have made life a round of struggles for many middle-management salarymen.

The high expectations once held by their wives have fallen flat, Sekiya says. However hard such men work, the prospect of better positions and pay is just not there. Eventually, their families begin to look down on them.

Exacerbating the situation, wives who traditionally have controlled the family budget are growing more independent. In the last 10 years they have begun to establish their own separate bank accounts, Sekiya says.

"The relationship between wife and husband has become a 'cold war,' with the wife and son in alliance against the father," Suzuki says.

Ironically, the pressures on the haggard husband have grown only worse since the government has pushed Japanese to spend more leisure time on weekends, the doctors say. To many workaholic Japanese, that simply means more hours in the office on weekdays.

"People have to work to be able to use that leisure time," Suzuki says. "Consequently, people work harder than ever to be able to travel, buy golf memberships, a second house. ..."

Because authorities consider family related trouble to be a "private matter," there has been little official effort to gauge the depth of the problem.

Nonetheless, family problems such as home-avoidance syndrome have become so severe that they've made their way into several prime-time television dramas. One recently portrayed a harried father who found solace only by drinking with the homeless in a park.

Since the 1960s, the number of family therapists has jumped to 850 to deal with increasing troubles, says Suzuki, who is president of the Japan Association of Family Therapy.

But if such problems are growing worse among middle-aged parents who remember the high-growth decades, the next generation of families may be off the hook, the doctors predict.

Young couples now raising toddlers have only known a Japan that is less driven, more luxurious, more satisfied with itself. And then there is Japan's newest family phenomenon — the Western-style DINK (double-income, no kids) couple.

"The work ethic is not as sacred today. Young people are more mobile, just like Americans," says Kazuko Suzuki. "They're not as loyal to the company. They're working for their own life."

Gasoline drops 3 cents

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Motorists saw gasoline prices drop more than 3 cents during the past two weeks as crude oil prices fell after the start of the Persian Gulf war, said a nationwide survey released Sunday.

The average price Friday for all grades of gasoline at full- and self-service stations was 130.35 cents per gallon, down 3.08 cents from Jan. 11, said the biweekly Lundberg Survey.

Oil prices crashed in days following the first air strikes by U.S.-led forces on Iraq and occupied Kuwait Jan. 16. Traders, encouraged that the war will not disrupt Saudi Arabian oil production, have kept prices about $10 per barrel lower than pre-war levels.

Iraqi sabotage to oil facilities in Kuwait and the massive oil spill into the Persian Gulf haven't influenced oil or gasoline prices because Iraqi and Kuwaiti oil has been discounted from supply calculations since an economic embargo was imposed shortly after the Aug. 2 invasion.

"That oil was replaced soon after Iraq's invasion (of Kuwait) in August by other supplies to meet current demand," said oil industry analyst Trilby Lundberg.

"If there is a (gasoline) price increase it will probably be in conjunction with speculative responses" on the futures market, she said.

After Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, gasoline prices peaked at 147.09 cents on Oct. 19, compared with a pre-invasion price of 117.71 cents per gallon July 20.

Here are the Lundberg Survey average prices, based on a national survey of more than 13,000 filling stations on Jan. 25:

—Self-service stations: regular unleaded, 118.03 cents per gallon; premium unleaded, 134.15; regular leaded, 116.10.

—Full-service stations: regular unleaded, 146.61 cents per gallon; premium unleaded, 160.63; regular leaded, 146.30.

N.Y. Democrat to propose bill to ease extension restrictions

TROY, Ohio (NYT) — Swollen and weary in her ninth month of pregnancy, 28-year-old Lisa Bramlette sat chatting at her kitchen table while her 5-year-old son, Tyler, romped around the house in a Teen-Age Mutant Ninja Turtle outfit.

Mrs. Bramlette's mother, Edith Crowell, was by her side in case labor began because Mrs. Bramlette's husband, William, was more than 1,000 miles away in Florida.

"He doesn't know what's going on with me," Mrs. Bramlette said. "While he's down there working, he doesn't know if I'm in labor or if the baby's here until I call him at 9:30 each night."

Laid off a year ago from his job at Dinner Bell Foods, a local meatpacking plant, Bramlette has been taking odd jobs ever since he exhausted his unemployment insurance benefits in July.

Recently, he and a friend were hired by a local woman to help her parents pack up their home in Clearwater, Fla., and move back to Ohio.

"This really stinks," Bramlette said by telephone from Clearwater. "I really don't like it, but you have to do what you have to do, and we need the money."

The 40-year-old Bramlette is one of about 2.3 million jobless people nationwide who used up all their unemployment benefits in 1990, a 16 percent increase over the year before. The number is expected to jump again this spring when those who were laid off as the recession took hold in recent months begin to run out of benefits.

In addition, a recent study by Mathematica Policy Research, a research firm based in Princeton, N.J., determined that 75 percent of the unemployed had not found work four weeks after their benefits had expired, and 60 percent were still jobless 10 weeks after depleting their benefits.

Yet, unlike its actions in the recessions of 1975, 1980 and 1982, Congress has not acted to extend unemployment benefits beyond the maximum period allowed by individual states.

Presently, 48 states provide unemployment compensation for a maximum of 26 weeks. Massachusetts and Washington allow a maximum of 30 weeks.

4 die when copter hits mountainside

SONESTOWN, Pa. (AP) — A hospital helicopter slammed into a northern Pennsylvania mountainside, killing all four crew members, authorities said Sunday.

Snow was falling when the chopper crashed Saturday night, but it was too early to know if weather was a factor in the accident, federal officials said.

Searchers found the wreckage and the bodies on North Mountain early Sunday. Investigators searched the area throughout the day for clues to the accident's cause.

The helicopter had transferred a juvenile patient to a hospital in Danville and was returning to Robert Packer Hospital in Bradford County when it crashed in the rugged, heavily forested area, said hospital spokesman Russel Knight.

The chopper first clipped a stand of 50-foot-high trees, then crashed about 100 feet from the peak of the 2,500-foot-high mountain, said Bob Hancock, a National Transportation Safety Board investigator.

Killed were the pilot, a flight nurse, a flight paramedic and an emergency medical technician.

The helicopter was rated for flying on instruments in cloudy weather, but it was not immediately clear whether the pilot had such clearance, Hancock said.

The chopper had last communicated with the flight control tower at the Williamsport-Lycoming County Airport about 16 minutes after takeoff, said Diane Spitaliere, a Federal Aviation Administration spokeswoman. She said the pilot didn't indicate a problem at that time.

EVERY DOG HAS HIS DAY

Ector County Coliseum really went to the dogs Saturday.

Hundreds of elegantly coifured canines, ranging from the diminutive Chihuahua to the massive Great Dane, showed up there for the West Texas Kennel Club's annual show.

For a few hours, the arena that has hosted country music concerts and wrestling matches was transformed into a doggy beauty pageant and athletics meet as 921 dogs, representing 109 breeds, went through their paces.

They came from Texas, of course, but also from New Mexico, Washington, Minnesota and Massachusetts in search of the show points that will make them champions of their breeds.

In the obedience trials, Dana Rose of Midland and her black Labrador, Sugar, maintained eye contact for three grueling minutes as Sugar "stayed" on Ms. Rose's command.

When the tension broke at the conclusion of the trial, she hugged the dog, who visibly relaxed and started panting.

"We've been working on this for a year, going to obedience classes and practicing every day," Ms. Rose said.

The long hours paid off for the two, who finished their companion dog title with that trial.

"I think she likes working on this, even though her mind sometimes wanders, and she really enjoys going to shows and meeting the other dogs," Ms. Rose said.

Though the competitions were serious, the show had a festive air. Breeders and handlers exchanged the latest dog gossip and there was a great deal of tail-wagging, woofing and face-licking going on, all interspersed with the inevitable call of "clean up at ring three, please."

Three-car accident

A 1981 Oldsmobile station wagon, right, and a 1984 Chevy pickup were badly damaged in a three-car accident that occurred at 7:05 p.m. Sunday at the intersection of S. Terrell and S. Front streets, police reported. Marshall Robert Nessel, 28, of Odessa, was arrested and charged with driving while intoxicated after his pickup struck the station wagon driven by Welbourne Dale Ivie, 66, of Midland. Ivie's car, stopped at the light on S. Terrell, then struck a third vehicle, which left the scene of the accident. Ivie was in serious condition and Nessel's passenger, Alicia Ellison, 31, of Odessa, still was being evaluated at press time.

SHOW: Some dogs may be part ham

(From 1B)

Day-glo ponytail holders held their frizzy fur out of their faces.

Faison said each dog requires about six hours of bathing, trimming and brushing before a competition and then another hour or two of grooming just before the event.

The poodles sat patiently on their grooming tables as Faison teased their fur to maximum fullness.

"They love this," he said. "Almost anything that gives the dogs attention, they like. They're a lot like people that way.

When Danny, the champion poodle, is left at home and Faison takes Dylan and Circe to a show, "he sulks," Faison said.

"When he sees the other dogs being loaded up, he thinks he's being punished."

Anne Nichols of Amarillo said her Samoyed, Lillie, craves the bright lights and excitement of the ring.

"She loves sitting on her grooming table," Ms. Nichols said. "It's great attention for her and she gets all sorts of goodies. She was a little antsy when we first started, but as she gets older she's gotten used to it.

'Oscar's a ham. He'll walk into the ring as pretty as you please, then he'll act like he's choking or he'll stop dead and pull some little trick.'

— Charlee Helms, Midland, talking about her show dog, a wirehaired dachshund

"I blow it dry to get her hair to fluff out," she explained. "The coated breeds like Sammies (Samoyeds) are judged on fullness and texture."

Keeping Lillie ready for showing requires a lot of between-competition upkeep. Ms. Nichols takes her jogging daily to improve her muscle tone and ensures that she doesn't get too much sun.

"If you leave that white coat out in the sun, it'll yellow on you — it's like a dog getting a suntan," she said.

After a few hours of primping, fluffing and combing, the dogs are ready for their moment of glory in the ring.

Judges who are specialists in particular breeds oversee the competition. Dogs are judged by breed, age and level of competition maturity.

Show Chairman John Martin of Odessa explained that the judges look for the dog that "most closely matches his mental picture of the perfect dog of that breed." Breed characteristics are standardized and defined by the American Kennel Club.

Martin said the officials scrutinize each dog's physical structure (head, feet, bone structure and muscle tone), condition (weight, condition of coat and animation), gait (how the dog moves, as seen from front, side and rear) and temperament. Judges penalize heavily for shyness and viciousness in the ring.

When all breeds have been judged, only one dog in each breed remains undefeated — the best of breed dog. In the West Texas Kennel Club show, Martin said, the 109 best of breeds then compete against each other in group classifications — sporting, hound, working, terrier, toy, non-sporting and herding dogs.

The seven group winners then meet in final competition and one is chosen as best in show.

J. Branden Helms, 11, of Midland was showing his grandmother's wirehaired dachshund, Oscar, as part of a 4-H project in junior showmanship.

Since he participated in six events earlier, Helms is somewhat of an expert on showmanship. He says it's easy, "as long as you don't get nervous — the dog picks up on you being nervous and it makes him upset in the ring."

Helms' mother, Charlee Helms, a co-sponsor of the Midland County 4-H dog showmanship program, said that if her son can handle Oscar, he can handle any dog.

"Oscar's a ham," she said. "He'll walk into the ring as pretty as you please, then he'll act like he's choking or he'll stop dead and pull some little trick."

But Helms has figured out how to prompt Oscar's show behavior. "I give him a little treat — some liver — and then he's happier."

Human-rights aide to make unprecedented Mexico visit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department's top human rights official is making a ground-breaking visit to Mexico this week for consultations that U.S. officials say further demonstrate the steady improvement in cross-border ties.

One official acknowledged that such a visit would have been impossible as recently as a few months ago.

Both countries agree that the relationship has progressed markedly since President Bush and President Carlos Salinas de Gortari took office almost simultaneously two years ago.

Richard Schifter, assistant secretary of state for human rights and humanitarian affairs, will spend two days in Mexico focusing on the country's judicial system, court reform and opportunities for cooperation on human rights issues. His discussions start Monday.

Schifter isn't taking a list of cases involving alleged rights abuses in Mexico. That is part of what appears to be a studied effort to avoid stirring up controversy.

Bishop fires defiant Corpus Christi priest

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest fired by his bishop for insubordination exhorted his parishioners in a tearful farewell Sunday to love and forgive.

"My prayer is that you will remember what I taught you. You are the leaders of the new way ... There's a challenge to accept what God is offering us," the Rev. Bill Elliott told the overflowing crowd at Holy Family Church.

The approximately 950 people in the congregation at the 10:30 a.m. Mass responded with tears and a standing ovation for Elliott, who was dismissed from the diocese last week.

Diocesan officials have declined to comment publicly on the dismissal. But, Elliott has said he was asked to leave because of insubordination, disagreements concerning fund-raising and teaching heresy.

Since the announcement of his dismissal, there have been nightly prayer services at Holy Family Church. Approximately 75 church members also held protest rallies in front of Bishop Rene H. Gracida's home on Saturday and Sunday.

Heart Beat '91 has safari sound

By Linda Anderson
Staff Writer

It was a jungle in there Saturday night — complete with wild beasts, wild "natives" and even a wild drumbeat (along with other "golden oldie" sounds). Heart Beat '91, the seventh annual fund-raiser for the American Heart Association, was presented at 7 p.m. in ClayDesta Atrium. This year the event had a "Safari" theme and featured the sounds of the '50s and '60s (when wild animals roamed the beach) performed by Johnny Dee and the Rocket 88's.

Rita Nell Diffie, regional director of AHA in Midland, said about 350 party-goers were expected to attend the event.

Dinner, catered by the Plaza Club, featured a heart-healthy menu that included London Broil, sauteed chicken breasts, mixed vegetables, salads, rice, rolls and assorted desserts.

The catered dinner itself was "heart-healthy," Mrs. Diffie said. "The Plaza Club works hard (to provide foods that are good for the heart). A lot of items on the Plaza Club every-day menu are heart-healthy. They have underwritten the Food Festival each September for six years." Food Festival is one of the AHA's public education programs on heart-healthy diets.

Heart Beat is traditionally "very casual," Mrs. Diffie said. "We've never had a dressy party. We like it casual. So many other events other organizations put on you have to dress up. We decided to make it laid-back and casual."

But in spite of its casual atmosphere and its decorations of inflatable jungle animals and heart-shaped balloons, Heart Beat has a serious purpose. According to information from the AHA, about 970,000 Americans die each year from heart and blood vessel diseases — that's almost as many annual deaths from cardiovascular diseases as those from cancer (about 470,000) and all other causes (about 640,000) combined.

The AHA also said that about 67 million Americans have some form of cardiovascular disease, such as congenital heart defects, high blood pressure and hardening of the arteries, and that the cost of medical care for these illnesses was more than $94.5 billion last year.

Funds raised from Heart Beat '91 will help support "research, public education and community service activities of the Heart Association" to help combat this disease. "Our goal is to raise around $45,000 off this event," Mrs. Diffie said.

Locally, some of the AHA's educational programs include teaching children about heart-healthy living. In the schools, "there are kits (about heart disease and how to be more heart-healthy) in all the schools in grades kindergarten through junior high level," Mrs. Diffie said. "This summer we'll get kits for the high school level (students)."

Other community education programs include a wellness program designed for businesses. "Several companies in Midland use Heart at Work," said Mrs. Diffie. "It's a wellness program. There will be a seminar for Heart at Work on March 15." Companies interested in utilizing this program for their employees can call the local AHA for more information.

Underwriters for Heart Beat '91 were The Fasken Foundation; Kemp, Smith, Duncan and Hammond; Permian Cardiology Associates Michael S. Miller, M.D., and Brian D. Mohr, M.D.; Ravi Patel, M.D., Raj Patel, M.D., and P.V. Patel, M.D.; and Wagner and Brown.

Contributors were Mr. and Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr.; Bob and Janice Marshall; Midland Memorial Hospital; RK Petroleum Corporation; Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Suckarieh; Texas Commerce Bank; Dr. and Mrs. Shelton Viney; and Modesta and Clayton Williams.

Contributing merchants were Admarc Inc.; Builders and Homeowners Supply; ClayDesta Corporation; and American Airlines.

The event also was supported by about 120 other business and individual or couple sponsors.

About 350 Midlanders, dressed in "safari" style, attended Heart Beat '91 Saturday at ClayDesta Atrium. Music of the '50s and '60s, by Johnny Dee and the Rocket 88s, brought these dancers to their feet. During part of the evening, old "Tarzan" movies were shown on the screen behind the drummer.

Experts advise cure for 'posture strain'

CHICAGO (AP) — The equivalent of baseball's seventh inning stretch is helpful to "desk jockeys," workers who sit a lot on the job, says a Chicago orthopedist.

"Sitting still for long periods of time is not good for the body," says Dr. Gunnar B. Andersson, professor and co-chairman of the department of orthopedics at Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago. "Bones, joints, muscles and other tissues need movement to thrive," he says, suggesting that workers stand and stretch when they take a break.

Andersson and his colleagues are studying low back pain in research supported by a grant from Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. and its Zimmer subsidiary. "People who sit at a desk or a computer terminal all day suffer from posture strain, which can lead to back, neck and shoulder problems," Andersson says. He advises taking a 10-minute break or change of activity for every hour spent sitting still.

DEAR ABBY

First to forgive will be first to find peace

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: Did you know there is an International Forgiveness Week? Well, neither did I until three years ago when Alice Parenti of Fresno, Calif., wrote to tell me about it. And this is the week.

Van Buren

If you are a card-carrying member of the human race, there is at least one person in your life who needs your forgiveness. Or perhaps it's you who needs to be forgiven, so hop aboard the mea culpa bandwagon, let go of those grudges and give your ulcer a chance to heal.

Robert Muller, former secretary general of the United Nations, wrote this lovely piece especially for International Forgiveness Week:

DECIDE TO FORGIVE

Decide to forgive
For resentment is negative
Resentment is poisonous
Resentment diminishes and devours the self.
Be the first to forgive,
To smile and to take the first step.
And you will see happiness bloom
On the face of your human brother or sister.
Be always the first
Do not wait for others to forgive
For by forgiving
You become the master of fate
The fashioner of life
The doer of miracles.
To forgive is the highest,
Most beautiful form of love.
In return you will receive
Untold peace and happiness.

Sunday: Forgive yourself.

Monday: Forgive your family.

Tuesday: Forgive your friends and associates.

Saturday: Forgive other nations.

Only the brave know how to forgive. A coward never forgives.

It is not in his nature.

Now, Dear Readers, if you will forgive me for repeating a portion of the lovely poem titled "Forgiveness," by George Roemisch, here it is:

"Forgiveness is the fragrance of the violet that clings fast to the heel that crushed it."

So, if perchance you are the "heel" that crushed a violet, this is the week to seek forgiveness.

Breakfast may be key to weight loss

Associated Press

A high-fiber breakfast may cut a person's appetite for lunch, according to Low Calorie Recipes magazine. Allen S. Levine of the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Minneapolis asked volunteers to eat a breakfast of juice and high-fiber or low-fiber cereal. At a lunchtime buffet, those who had the high-fiber breakfast ate nearly 100 calories less, enough for a 10-pound weight loss over a year's time.

The risks of many health problems are lower for women than men — but not the risk of weight gain. People are most likely to get fat between ages 25 and 34, and women face twice the risk of men, according to a team led by David Williamson, of the nutrition division at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. Women who began the study overweight gained the most weight of all subjects. The study monitored the weights of nearly 10,000 people ages 24 to 74 over a 10-year period.

Not only does fat contain more calories per ounce than other foods, but fat calories appear to be more fattening than those from carbohydrate or protein. According to Dr. Elliot Danforth, of the University of Vermont, the fat we eat is converted into stored fat at 97 percent efficiency compared with 77 percent efficiency for carbohydrate.

Clinical studies, which recruit subjects from medical centers and weight-loss clinics, may give an over-gloomy picture of weight-loss success. In a recent survey of university employees and residents of a small town, 62 percent of those who had attempted to lose weight had succeeded and maintained their loss. In another study, 90 percent of formerly overweight persons were still within 15 percent of their goal after one year.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, JANUARY 28, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A new emotional maturity will help advance your career. Look forward to greater financial rewards, beginning in June. Foreign influences and travel will have a direct effect on your progress up the ladder of success next fall. Your love for humanity will involve you in several fine activities designed to benefit others. Romance could prove irresistible next December.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Alan Alda, author Susan Sontag, actress Barbie Benton, musician Artur Rubinstein.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A long-standing relationship could crumble unless you let bygones be bygones. Set new priorities. Positive developments will result. Children need firm guidelines; lay down the rules.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Uncertainty about your work means a decision must be made. Consult experts. A new hobby could lead to extra income. Romance looks promising. Your offspring could offer objections.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Reconsider a recent decision. Diplomacy is vital when dealing with VIPs. A real estate deal or home improvement project is in the cards. Someone you help will return the favor!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Pat yourself on the back if others steal your thunder! Tomorrow may be the right time to set things straight. A romantic interlude brightens your evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A financial windfall is possible now. Practical preparation should precede any alteration in your work schedule. A higher-up may change the rules. Discuss your plans with your mate or partner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Control your emotions and go with the flow. Spend more time with family. All forms of financial gambling should be avoided. Encourage someone who is in low spirits.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Get to work on time and accomplish as much as you can. A pat on the back will produce better results than criticism. If thinking of relocating, talk candidly with family members.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A grand time for both romance and business pursuits. Travel and legal matters are in the spotlight. Consult both a travel agent and a lawyer. A gift arrives from an unknown admirer!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do your job with a minimum of fuss. Afternoon is the best time to kick back and catch up on your studying or reading. Dress your best tonight and seek a special introduction.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An important agenda deserves prompt action today. Maintain tight security. All signals are go for launching a pet project. Avoid rocking the boat. When shopping for clothes, be prepared to pay for quality.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Make your plans simple and flexible. Keep spending and borrowing in check. A VIP makes an offer you cannot resist. A message or visitor from afar brings glad tidings. Arrange a special appointment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Ride with the tide. An attractive member of the opposite sex adds a special sparkle to your day. Stress togetherness. Your charm endears you to those close to your heart. Be affectionate.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ94 ♡Q4 ◇AK8 ♣J1054
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—An already good hand has become even more powerful because of the fitting cards in partner's suits. Since slam could be in the offing, make a waiting bid of two diamonds to see what partner does next. There is no rush to make a beeline for three no trump until other possibilities have been explored.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A7 ♡AQ8 ◇83 ♣AKJ987
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—While we are not averse to raising partner with three-card support, we do not jump-raise without four-card support. Therefore, we must suppress our hearts for the moment in favor of the jump rebid of three clubs.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Void ♡J9873 ◇AQ102 ♣K954
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	2 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You have what might be a very powerful hand in support of partner's two-level overcall. Since no club jump is quite satisfactory, we suggest a cue-bid of the enemy suit. Bid two diamonds.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQ103 ♡Q95 ◇AQ83 ♣AK
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond. What action do you take?
A.—You are far too strong for an overcall of one no trump—the upper limit for that bid should be a bad 19 points. The way to describe this balanced pwerhouse is to start with a takeout double and, unless your partner bids spades in response, rebid no trump at your next turn.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠7643 ♡6542 ◇AJ10 ♣A2
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?

A.—Neither major suit is the sort you want to introduce voluntarily, but what are the options? To suppress two four-card majors in favor of bidding one no trump risks losing game in a major, and raising partner's minor with only three-card support should be resorted to only under great duress. Bid one heart.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ ♡KJ106 ◇94 ♣AJ1076
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A.—You have superb support for partner's suit, even if one club is only a convenience bid on a three-card suit. But responder should never suppress a good four-card major if it can be shown at the one-level. Bid one heart.

Neurologist who inspired 'Awakenings' to be laid off

NEW YORK — The neurologist whose book inspired the movie "Awakenings" will be laid off next month because of budget cuts at state mental hospitals.

Dr. Oliver Sacks, 57, will lose his job at the Bronx Psychiatric Center, where he has worked since 1966, said his spokeswoman, Kate Edgar.

He is among 1,200 doctors, nurses, therapists and other employees who will lose their jobs at institutions around the state, the New York Post reported during the weekend.

"The medical care in state hospitals have been deteriorating steadily over the years, and now one fears it will be almost nonexistent," Sacks said in a statement.

"Awakenings" described Sacks' experiences with sleeping-sickness patients at Beth Abraham Hospital in the Bronx in the late 1960s.

Using a new drug, Sacks was able to arouse patients who had been in trancelike state for decades, but many suffered disturbing side effects from the drug.

He also wrote the best-selling "The Man Who Mistook His Wife for a Hat."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Country music singer Paul Overstreet says music overlooks family values.

"I know a lot of people who are serious about their family and their fatherhood and also their work, but it's not magnified in our business," he said in an interview.

Overstreet, 35, married with four children, also is a songwriter who wrote the Randy Travis hit records, "Forever and Ever, Amen" and "On the Other Hand."

Cher

MALIBU, Calif. — Two dozen technicians invaded Cher's $4 million home overlooking Santa Monica Bay to put together a two-hour video collection of songs for Operation Desert Storm troops.

A giant American flag hung inside the entryway, and smaller flags were scattered throughout the actress-singer's house and gymnasium for the taping Saturday night.

"She was very receptive to this," said Norman Schoenfeld, talent director for cable television's VH-1 music channel.

Schoenfeld approached Cher about serving as the hostess of the show, which features 22 videos by the likes of Janet Jackson, Paul Simon, Bonnie Raitt, John Fogerty and Van Halen.

In March, the show will run on VH-1.

Slain employees knew risks of working nights

IRVING (AP) — Two cousins who were among four people slain in a fast-food restaurant freezer during a robbery weren't worried about the dangers of working nights, their uncle said.

"To them, it was irrelevant. They just wanted to work and support their families," said Raymond Fraga Jr.

Theresa Fraga, 16, of Irving, and her cousin Frank Fraga, 23, of Dallas, were found dead early Saturday morning along with Taco Bell manager Michael J. Phelan, 28, of Fort Worth and Son Trong Nguyen, 35, of Irving.

Nguyen was a friend of the Fraga family who was at the restaurant to pick up Ms. Fraga.

"The motive was robbery," said Irving Police Capt. T.J. Hall. The victims were found shot to death in a walk-in freezer, Hall said.

Police stopped a car on investigation of drunken driving around 5 a.m. Saturday and found an unspecified amount of money inside a Taco Bell bag. The suspects, age 19 and 17, were arrested after a search of several Taco Bell restaurants turned up the bodies.

It was the largest number of people to be slain in a single incident in the Dallas area since a gunman killed six people at Ianni's Restaurant and Club in Dallas in 1984.

Since Dec. 4, nine people working late shifts at restaurants or food stores in Dallas County have been killed during apparent robberies, including Jennifer Soto, a 19-year-old assistant manager at a DeSoto Taco Bell who was slain during a robbery Jan. 7. Police said they don't believe the two Taco Bell cases are related.

Mike Green, 17, a part-time employee of the Taco Bell restaurant in this Dallas suburb, and Jessy Carlos San Miguel, 19, who is facing trial on three burglary charges, were taken into custody Saturday after police stopped their car and found the bag filled with cash. Both are from Irving.

Capital murder charges will be filed Monday with the Dallas County district attorney's office, Hall said.

Police refused to give details on the number or type of guns used or how much money had been stolen.

Raymond Fraga angrily criticized security at Taco Bell restaurants.

People "keep talking about getting security up for terrorists," he said. "Well, they got more terrorists killing kids here."

Taco Bell officials said they are shocked by the killings.

"The whole company is just totally shocked. It's a terrible, terrible tragedy," said Jerry Koch, Taco Bell's zone vice president for the Southwest.

Koch said the company will pay the funeral expenses of the employees.

Taco Bell: Our security system is effective

DALLAS (AP) — Executives of a national fast-food chain say security is effective, despite five deaths at its Dallas-area restaurants in the past month.

Three men and a pregnant 16-year-old girl were found shot to death in a Taco Bell restaurant in Irving early Saturday after police discovered a take-out sack stuffed with money in a car they stopped several blocks away.

Three employees, two of whom were cousins, and a fourth victim were shot "execution style" during a robbery and left in a walk-in freezer, police said.

The victims were identified as restaurant manager Michael J. Phelan, 28, of Fort Worth; Theresa Fraga, 16, of Irving; her cousin, Frank Fraga, 23, of Dallas; and Son Trong Nyugen, 35, whose address was not available.

It was the second robbery-slaying at a Dallas-area Taco Bell restaurant this month.

But Jerry Koch of Dallas, president of Taco Bell operations for the southwest zone, said Saturday that the company's security system is sophisticated and effective.

He said he didn't foresee any major changes for the security system, but declined to discuss specifics or how security may have been breached in the two armed robberies at Taco Bell restaurants this month.

On Jan. 7, Jennifer Soto, 19, night manager of a Taco Bell in suburban DeSoto, was shot and stabbed to death. A former employee of the restaurant is one of two men charged with capital murder in connection with Ms. Soto's killing.

"We have all the security you can implement here," an unidentified manager of a Dallas Taco Bell told The Dallas Morning News. "There's only so much security you can put in before you are going to get an armed fortress."

Like police, Koch said he does not think that the two incidents are related.

"I can't really go into specific details, but these are very different," he said.

Search for education chief stalls again

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Education will not meet Thursday's deadline for nominating a new education commissioner, who oversees the state's $14 billion-a-year school system, members said Sunday.

After a closed-door board meeting, Vice Chairman Bob Aikin of Commerce blamed the delay in part on "turmoil" resulting from the Texas Supreme Court's recent ruling that the school finance system is unconstitutional.

"You cannot expect the very best candidate ... to say, 'I'm willing to walk right into that shooting gallery right now, without knowing exactly what's going to happen with school finance,'" Aikin said.

'You cannot expect the very best candidate ... to say, 'I'm willing to walk right into that shooting gallery right now, without knowing exactly what's going to happen with school finance.''

— Bob Aikin, State Board of Education

State leaders back a plan to replace local school property taxes with a statewide property levy, to meet the court's order that property-poor school districts must have access to equitable funding. But the plan has its critics in the Legislature and among schools.

Board Chairwoman Carolyn Crawford of Beaumont said the school finance problem is a separate issue. She said it could have been expected that the search for a new commissioner would take some time.

"Most searches of this magnitude take six months to eight months," Ms. Crawford said. The board announced finalists for the post Jan. 16.

Current Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby is retiring after six years, and has firmly indicated his last day will be Thursday, said board spokesman Joey Lozano. An interim commissioner could be named, Lozano said.

The board will nominate a candidate for the $116,590-a-year job to Gov. Ann Richards, who will make the appointment under the education law passed last summer. Senate confirmation is required for the appointment.

The board plans to meet next weekend, and talk to finalists another time, Aikin said.

Eight final candidates initially were announced, culled from a list of 147.

But Aikin said Sunday a second candidate has withdrawn: David Hornbeck, former Maryland education commissioner.

The remaining finalists are:

Giants hang on, 20-19

Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — The New York Giants gave the NFL a super Super Bowl, and it was about time.

The Giants beat the clock and the league's highest-scoring offense to survive a last-second field goal attempt and upset the Buffalo Bills 20-19 Sunday. The 25th Super Bowl, played in the shadow of war in the Persian Gulf, turned into the closest and perhaps the best ever.

The Giants controlled the ball for a record 40 minutes and 33 seconds of the 60-minute game to win their second NFL title and seventh straight for the NFC.

"Every swing of the leg is critical and this one didn't work out," Norwood said. "You don't get a second chance on a kick like that."

Six of the last seven Super Bowls had been blowouts, but this one was decided by a toe. And for the Giants, it was much more difficult than their 39-20 rout of Denver in the 1987 Super Bowl.

"This one was a lot better," Lawrence Taylor said. "We just sort of

Fans cheer Gulf troops

■ Football players weren't the only people cheered on at Super Bowl XXV.

Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — Fans who ran an anti-terrorism security gantlet to get into Tampa Stadium on Sunday for the Super Bowl waved flags and sang patriotic songs to cheer football and American troops in the Persian Gulf.

After a halftime news report on the war, ABC returned to a star-spangled show in which more than 2,000 children, wearing yellow ribbons and carrying American flags, danced and sang as pictures of Desert Storm soldiers flashed on huge end zone screens.

The Disney-produced show, called "Small World Salute to 25 Years of Super Bowls," was dedicated to the servicemen and women of Operation Desert Storm.

President Bush and the first lady spoke to the television audience, estimated by ABC at 118 million people in the United States.

"God bless all freedom-loving people around the world," President Bush said.

The National Football League championship game between the Buffalo Bills and the New York Giants was broadcast live on radio and television to the Persian Gulf by Armed Forces Radio and Television Services. And it was the first year the game was shown live on Israel television, which began all-night broadcasting after the Persian Gulf war started.

At Tampa Stadium, up to 1,700 law officers and 1,000 security guards were in place. Police and military helicopters circled the stadium. Fans faced 6-foot fences, concrete barriers, X-ray machines, metal detectors and searches.

With the fear of terrorism resulting from the Persian Gulf war that broke out Jan. 16, officials at airports, border crossings and other spots have been particularly watchful.

"I'm real glad to see all the security," said Harold Arlen, 58, of Bridgewater, N.J. "The more the better. I was kind of worried about coming to the game in the beginning. This may be the safest place in the world today."

Fans cheered as Whitney Houston sang "America the Beautiful" and the national anthem before kickoff. Chants of "U.S.A., U.S.A." boomed back at four F-15 Air Force jets that flew over before Super Bowl XXV.

"We have absolutely no reason to expect trouble. We want to make sure there is no chance of any trouble," said Jim Heffernan, director of public relations for the NFL.

Earlier this week, FBI Director William S. Sessions said his agency had taken precautions to ensure safety at the stadium, which has a capacity of 74,300 people.

Even Bush had said the Super Bowl should go on as scheduled.

"I am not going to be held a captive in the White House by Saddam Hussein of Iraq," he said. "We're going about our business and the world goes on."

Gates opened three hours before kickoff, and fans were told to arrive early to clear security. Cars entering were delayed about an hour for searches.

People were warned not to bring cameras, televisions, radios, or even beepers. Reporters were told they would be searched and must stay with equipment they take into the stadium. Any equipment left unattended would be confiscated, officials said.

No-rest 'D' stops Bills

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — There is a way to stop the no-huddle offense after all.

It's called the no-rest defense and the New York Giants used it on both sides of the ball in defeating the Buffalo Bills 20-19 Sunday in the Super Bowl.

New York controlled the ball for 40:33 on offense and didn't give Buffalo's defense a chance to rest. Defensively, the Giants found a way to play the Bills speeded-up offense at a tempo with which they were comfortable.

"The no-huddle didn't bother us at all," safety Myron Guyton said after the defense spent less 20 minutes on the field. "We practiced at a faster pace all week than we played at tonight."

The Giants also used a defense that was out of their ordinary 3-4 front. For the most part, New York used two defensive lineman, combining them with four linebackers and five defensive backs.

Cornerback Everson Walls said the key was preparing well and the Giants did.

"In a game, the official usually grabs the ball after a play, wipes it off and then puts it down," Walls said. "We didn't do that in practice this week. As soon as the ball was dead, the offense just lined up and went."

That made the Giants' defense react faster. It also made Walls think faster, calling the plays for the secondary, which was in a nickel for most of the game.

"We needed to recognize if they were using three receivers to one side, or if they were two and two," said Walls, who at one point left an interview podium, unable to stop cry-

SUPER BOWL XXV

Giants play keepaway from no-huddle attack

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — The New York Giants became the best team in football Sunday because they're also the best at keepaway.

The Giants rallied twice in the second half with a pair of scoring drives that consumed a total of 17 minutes in their 20-19 Super Bowl victory over the Buffalo Bills.

New York's stinginess was the result of dominant line play, the running of most valuable player Ottis Anderson and the clutch passing of Jeff Hostetler.

The Bills were left with precious little time to score. The NFL's highest-scoring offense had possession for less than eight minutes in the second half and less than 20 minutes in the game.

"That's been our key all year — controlling the ball," Hostetler said. "Our defense likes it when we're out there a long time because it gives them a chance to rest, and the offense likes to see it because eventually we start overpowering people."

The Giants took the kickoff to start the second half and mounted a 14-play touchdown drive that covered 75 yards and consumed a Super bowl-record 9:29. The score, on Anderson's 1-yard run, gave New York a 17-12 lead.

"That's the drive that won the game for us," center Bart Oates said.

"Buffalo was getting a little tired in the third quarter," Giants coach Bill Parcells said. "Right then I thought we had a real chance."

"It was very disheartening," Bills coach Marv Levy said.

Hostetler completed passes to convert third-and-8, third-and-13 and third-and-4 situations into first downs. Anderson broke away for 24 yards on a third-and-1 play.

The Key

Thurman Thomas' 31-yard touchdown run on the first play of the fourth quarter gave the Bills a 19-17 lead. But New York's patient, deliberate offense responded again, moving 74 yards in 14 plays to set up Matt Bahr's 21-yard field goal with 7:20 left.

On that drive, Hostetler hit Mark Bavaro for key gains of 17 and 19 yards. The first pass came on a third-and-7 play from the Giants' 26.

"That's what Jeff's paid to do," Bavaro said. "And we're paid to catch them."

New York finished with 73 plays to just 56 for the Bills. As a result, Buffalo was outgained 386-371.

"Very frustrating," Buffalo quarterback Jim Kelly said. "We know we're going to put the ball in the end zone, but we didn't have that many opportunities."

The Giants' offense struggled for most of the first half and gave up a safety when Hostetler was sacked by Bruce Smith. But New York mounted an 87-yard drive near the end of the half to close to within 12-10.

"That was a real key," Giants tackles Jumbo Elliott said. "That gave us confidence going into the second half. ... We're not just an offense that has to be ahead all the time. There was no panic at all."

Smith said the Bills' defense was to blame for the way the Giants controlled the ball.

"It wasn't our offense's fault we were always on the field," Smith said. "Missed tackles was the main problem. Missed tackles gives them first downs. I was guilty as much as anybody."

Super Bowl MVP Ottis Anderson slashes through the Buffalo defense.

Too old? Not Anderson

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — If Ottis Anderson were the general manager of the New York Giants instead of the Super Bowl MVP, there'd be no question in his mind about the Plan B free agent list.

His name would be right at the top of the list of unprotected players that is due this week.

"I should be," he said Sunday, the beads of sweat glistening on his forehead after he rushed for 102 yards, most of them vital in the Giants' 20-19 victory over the Buffalo Bills.

Will he be?

"More than likely," he said. "It's been a tradition the last two years."

Each year, the Giants looked at their roster after the season and decided there was no place for old Ottis, now 33, a fossil age for a running back.

And each year, the rest of the league looked at Anderson's name on the Plan B list and decided the same thing.

Too old.

Too much mileage.

So he would sit out there unclaimed, unwanted. And the Giants would extend a training camp invitation to him, a courtesy for old time's sake.

In 1990, it became 10,000 yards for his career and the Super Bowl MVP.

And next season?

"I don't feel old," Anderson said. "I feel like I did at 24 or 25."

And he got the kind of workload you'd expect for a kid — 21 carries. He scored one touchdown and most importantly he did not fumble. Hand him the football and he keeps it in his hands and out of Jim Kelly's. That was the Giants' strategy from the start.

But 21 carries for those 33-year-old legs?

"I wanted to do it," he said. "I knew I could do it. I've done it in the past. I'm a player. I like to play."

Anderson was a workhorse in his early days in the league. A No. 1 draft choice by St. Louis in 1979, he was rookie of the year with 1,605 yards rushing. It was the first of five 1,000-yard seasons in six years, missing only in the strike season of 1982.

Norwood dreams shatter

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — The eyes were wet, the voice was low, the anguish was clear.

This was not the way it was supposed to come out for Scott Norwood.

"You dream about those kicks," Norwood said of the biggest kick of his life, a 47-yarder to win the Super Bowl. "You make them."

Norwood didn't make this one in the final seconds and the New York Giants escaped with a 20-19 victory on Sunday.

"I hit it solid," he said. "I planted and I hit it and it didn't draw back. After I hit it, I could see it wasn't starting to draw. I put an angle on it, but it was not getting the draw."

He stopped to compose himself, then said, softly, "You just have to go forward, not look back."

Norwood had made only one of five kicks from outside the 40 this season. He is deadly inside the 40, but the Bills couldn't get him any closer on their final, desperate drive.

"I thought I could make it and I got plenty of distance," he said. "I had the one opportunity there and didn't do the job."

While many Giants and Bills on the sidelines did not watch the kick — some even kneeled in prayer — Norwood did not have that luxury. As he saw the kick sail through the air toward fame of failure, he said his mind was "sort of blank."

Then he realized he had missed.

"I can't describe that," he said. "It was an empty feeling."

Matt Bahr, who made five field goals in the NFC Championship game, with a 42-yarder to win it as the clock ran out, had sympathy for Norwood.

"We have a fraternity of kickers," Bahr said. "I know him well enough. I feel for him. A 47-yarder under any conditions is a tough kick.

"He struck it well. That's one of the frustrating things about kicking, when it doesn't come back in."

SUPER: Giants win battle of placekickers

(From 1C)

sailed through the last one. This one we had to play as a team."

The heroes in this win were many and contrasting:

— Ottis Anderson, the 33-year-old running back who ran 21 times for 102 yards and was named the game's Most Valuable Player.

"In 1987, I was nominated for the 'Where-is-he-now' trophy," said Anderson, who, after an outstanding career in St. Louis, was obtained to back up Joe Morris on the Giants' last Super Bowl team. "No one gave me a chance in hell."

"He was supposed to be washed up before our first Super Bowl in 1986," said center Bart Oates. "He certainly wasn't washed up today."

— An offensive line that dominated Bruce Smith and the Buffalo defensive front. "It's easy to run behind these guys," Anderson said of the group of 290-pounders, all but Oates with no more than four years in the NFL.

— Jeff Hostetler, the career backup who was 20 of 32 for 222 yards. "However frustrated he was, he hung in there," general manager George Young, Hostetler's strongest advocate as he waited to take over for Phil Simms, who injured a foot Dec. 13 in a 17-13 loss to Buffalo.

— A defense that went with just two down linemen and six defensive backs for most of the game against Buffalo's no-huddle offense. It dared the Bills to run and they did — Thurman Thomas carried 15 times for 135 yards, only the second man to gain 100 yards against the New York defense this year.

But it came through when it had to, holding Buffalo to just one third down conversion in eight attempts, compared to 9 of 16 for New York. The defense also kept the Buffalo offense off the field for two-thirds of the game.

It was a game that had everything, one in which the lead changed hands four times and almost a fifth.

Buffalo, which has run a two-minute offense all season, got the ball with 2:16 left on its own 10. Kelly quickly passed and scrambled to the Giants 40, and Thomas ran 11 yards to the 29.

With time running out and Buffalo out of timeouts, Kelly purposely spiked the ball to stop the clock with 8 seconds to go. The Giants then called their last timeout to put pressure on Norwood, whose longest career field goal was 49 yards.

Norwood's kick was long enough, but was wide right from moment it left his foot. Several Giants, who were huddled in prayer on the sideline, jumped into the air and raced onto the field when the field goal missed.

But Buffalo tied it on Norwood's 23-yard field goal, then dominated the second quarter and seemed to be dominating the game, taking a 12-3 lead on a 1-yard run by Don Smith at the end of an 80-yard drive and a safety when Bruce Smith sacked Hostetler in the end zone.

The game may have turned, however, in the final 3:39 of the half, when the Giants drove 87 yards for a score on Hostetler's 14-yard pass to Stephen Baker with 25 seconds left in the half.

The Giants took the second-half kickoff, controlled the ball for 9:29 and took a 17-12 lead on Anderson's 1-yard run.

"That was very disheartening," acknowledged Buffalo coach Marv Levy.

The Bills came back, scoring on Thomas' 31-yard run, but New York ground its way to victory, using a 73-yard drive to set up Bahr's winning kick. Then the Giants stopped the Bills again and left Buffalo with just 2:09 to move from its own 10 into field-goal range.

It did, but not close enough for Norwood, who had made just one of five from outside the 40 this season.

(From 1C)

ing after his first championship in his 10-year career. "All week I just kept telling Bill (Parcells) and (Bill) Belichick to run it faster."

The other cue for the defense was to take away the Bills' short crossing patterns that wide receiver Andre Reed has broken for big plays several times this season.

"We knew we had to stop the short pass," safety Greg Jackson said. "That's what we did against San Francisco. We struggled at times and Carl Banks kept telling us not to get frustrated."

When the Giants did get frustrated, they found a way around it. They took it out on Reed, who dropped at least two wide-open passes that would have gone for first downs.

"We wanted to let him know that we'd be there the whole night, so we hit him every chance we got," Jackson said. "After those hits, Guyton got him, Banks got him and I got him, he started looking around."

The Super Bowl

Odds and Ends

SUPER STARS

— Ottis Anderson, Giants, rushed for 102 yards on 21 carries and scored a touchdown in New York's 20-19 victory. Anderson, picked up four years ago as a backup to Joe Morris, was selected the MVP.

— Jeff Hostetler, Giants, was 20-for-32 for 222 yards and one touchdown, with no interceptions.

— Thurman Thomas, Bills, led all rushers with 135 yards on 15 carries, including a 31-yard TD run on the first play of the fourth quarter. He also caught five passes for 55 yards.

SUPER SAD

Buffalo's Scott Norwood was wide to the left on a 47-yard field goal attempt in the final seconds that would have won the game. The odds were against him making the kick: He's now 1-for-6 lifetime on grass fields from 40 yards and longer.

STATS

New York kept Buffalo's no-huddle offense off the field by controlling the ball for 40:33, a Super Bowl record. ... The Giants helped themselves by converting 9 of 16 third-down opportunities while limiting the Bills to 1-for-8. ... It was the first Super Bowl without a turnover; the previous low was one in 1987, when the Giants beat Denver 39-20. ... The Giants played three postseason games without making a turnover and made only 14 in 19 games this season.

STREAKS

The NFC has won seven straight Super Bowls. Oakland's win over Washington in 1984 was the AFC's last victory. ... Hostetler, who took over as the Giants' starting quarterback when Phil Simms was injured in New York's 17-13 loss to Buffalo on Dec. 15, is 7-0 lifetime as a starter.

SUPER SAFETIES

Buffalo's Bruce Smith became the fifth player in Super Bowl history to record a safety when he sacked Jeff Hostetler in the end zone in the second quarter. However, the Bills became the first team in Super Bowl history to lose a game in which it scored on a safety.

SUPER COACH

The Giants' Bill Parcells joined Vince Lombardi, Tom Flores, Tom Landry, Don Shula and Joe Gibbs as two-time Super Bowl winners. Pittsburgh's Chuck Noll leads with four and San Francisco's Bill Walsh won three.

SWINGS

Despite holding the ball for 40:33, a 25:06 advantage over Buffalo, New York only outgained the Bills 388-371. However, the Giants had 73 plays to 56 for the Bills.

SPECIAL TEAMS

Buffalo had no return yards on Sean Landeta's four punts, on which he averaged 44 yards. One was a touchback; Al Edwards made three fair catches; two were inside the 20. The Giants' Dave Meggett returned two of Rick Tuten's six punts for 37 yards. ... The Bills gained 114 yards on six kickoff returns (19-yard average); the Giants had 48 on three returns (16-yard average).

SPEAKING

— "In 1987, I was nominated for the 'Where-is-he-now' trophy. No one gave me a chance in hell." New York's Ottis Anderson, the Super Bowl MVP.

With Mourning's return, Hoyas make Pitt grieve

Top 25

PITTSBURGH — Georgetown, coming off an uncharacteristic three losses in its previous five games, is an entirely different team when 7-foot-2 Dikembe Mutombo and 6-10 Alonzo Mourning are on the floor together. And No. 17 Pittsburgh isn't the same when Brian Shorter is out of the game.

Mutombo scored 21 of his 23 points in the second half with Pittsburgh's entire frontcourt in foul trouble, and Georgetown rallied from a 16-point deficit to upset the Panthers 83-78 Sunday.

The Hoyas (12-5, 4-3), winning their fourth straight over Pittsburgh, trailed by as many as 11 points in the second half but outscored the Panthers 17-11 after Shorter fouled out with 6:20 to play. Shorter had 24 points and 14 rebounds.

In a physical game in which the two teams were whistled for 61 fouls, Shorter and 6-7 Chris McNeal fouled out for Pitt and Georgetown lost Robert Churchwell. Ten players finished with four or more fouls as Georgetown made 33 of 38 free throws and Pitt made 31 of 45.

"We lost our running game and our momentum in the second half, and Mourning and Mutombo played well," Pitt's Ahmad Shareef said. "Georgetown won the game on the foul line. We had our shots but didn't make them."

Mourning, who missed nine games with a strained left arch, and Mutombo saw their first extensive playing time together in over a month and were dominating after Shorter and 6-10 Darren Morningstar got into early second-half foul trouble.

"The players still are adjusting to Mourning and Mutombo being in there together," Georgetown coach John Thompson said. "Moruning's still getting into game condition at a very competitive time (in the conference race). We needed something positive to happen to us. ... We needed to start getting some wins."

Mutombo made 15 of 17 free throws and Mourning was 10 of 11.

"I remember when Dikembe almost broke the backboard with his foul shots, but he's confident now and he's enthusiastic," Thompson said. "He's getting better and better."

Pitt led 67-66 when Shorter left, but the Hoyas — with Mutombo and Mourning roaming at will around the basket — later went on a 10-1 run capped by Mutombo's jam for a 76-71 lead.

Gandhi Jordan's 4-point play, a 3-pointer and free throw, cut the Hoyas' lead to 80-78 with 28 seconds left. The Hoyas' Joey Brown made 1 of 2 free throws, and Jordan missed a potential tying 3-pointer with 4 seconds left.

Georgia Tech 88
No. 7 North Carolina 86

Mackey scored 18 of his 24 points in the second half as the Yellow Jackets (12-5, 4-2 Atlantic Coast Conference) snapped a five-game losing streak in the Smith Center and won their first game at Chapel Hill since the 1984-85 season.

North Carolina took two timeouts after Mackey's points. After the second, George Lynch tossed a low pass to Rick Fox, who dribbled from the right wing along the baseline and banked in a short jumper. But referee Rick Hartzell waved off the basket, ruling it came after the final buzzer.

The Tar Heels, (14-3, 3-2) led 56-40 after two free throws by Hubert Davis with 17:35 remaining. From there, the Georgia Tech rally began with a 3-pointer by Jon Barry at 16:45. Lynch got a layup, but the Yellow Jackets responded with a 19-1 run

Shumate's 'Stangs surprise

SWC

DALLAS (AP) — If Southern Methodist coach John Shumate is looking for respect, he's made a believer out of Houston Cougars coach Pat Foster.

"SMU just lined up and whipped us," Foster said after the Mustangs won for the sixth time in seven games, upsetting Houston 81-75 Saturday night.

"They played extremely hard and deserved to win. If they aren't a good basketball team, then I must be missing something. They ran their offense well and screened us all over the floor."

In other Southwest Conference games Saturday, Arkansas became the first Division I team to post 20 victories this season by holding off Baylor 73-68; Texas whipped Texas Christian 90-49 in Austin; and Rice handled visiting Texas A&M 98-76.

Southern Methodist improved to 9-9 overall and 4-3 in league play, thanks to substitute center Greg Kinzer, who scored 7 points during a pivotal 17-6 second-half run. Tim Mason led the Mustangs with 21 points.

"There's no question that Houston is a national basketball team," Shumate said. "Anytime that you beat a national team, it gives you some credibility."

The Cougars (12-6, 4-3) hit only one of 12 shots during the fateful run that saw SMU turn a 47-46 deficit to a 63-53 lead with eight minutes left.

Byron Smith led the Cougars with 20 points. Alvaro Teheran scored 17 points, but only two in the last 15 minutes while Kinzer and Bobby Holkan were guarding him. Kinzer finished with 13 points.

The Mustangs were down 11-2 and 36-27 in the first half, but freshman Chad Allen's pair of 3-pointers tied the game at 37 at halftime.

NBA

BOSTON (AP) — On Super Bowl Sunday, Magic Johnson was super perfect.

Johnson scored 22 points, had 15 assists and grabbed 9 rebounds as the Los Angeles Lakers broke open a close game in the third quarter and routed the Celtics 104-87 for their 11th consecutive victory.

Johnson admitted that he missed his usual duel with Larry Bird, sidelined with a back injury. But he said that former Celtic Dennis Johnson "was always my most difficult opponent."

"I'd like to have had him in there," Johnson said when asked about Bird's absence. "They're a different team without him. He adds so much, just his presence on the floor. I miss him, the fans miss him, I think the whole country misses him."

The Celtics, who have lost six of their last seven, had won eight straight games on Super Bowl Sundays. Boston is 4-6 since Bird injured his lower back.

"The biggest thing for us today was our defense," Los Angeles coach Mike Dunleavy said. "Our defense is the main reason for us winning. Hopefully we'll peak by the playoffs. There isn't any team in the league we can't beat."

Los Angeles was without its leading scorer, James Worthy, who jammed his right foot Friday night. Still, the Lakers sent Boston to only its fourth loss in 21 home games.

"They were doubling down on Kevin (McHale) and Robert (Parish)," Kevin Gamble of Boston said. "The spacing wasn't good. Sometimes it looks so easy out there, but it gets all clogged up. And LA knows how to get Chief (Parish) and Kevin off the blocks because they've been playing them for so many years."

There were 10 ties and the lead changed 21 times in the first half, which ended with Los Angeles ahead 53-51.

Then the Lakers pulled away as Johnson fed Byron Scott for a medium-range jumpers. After Gamble scored on a layup, Sam Perkins and Johnson scored on drives and the rout was on.

Boston managed to remain close as Brian Shaw scored half of his 20 points in the third period.

Los Angeles led 79-72 going into the final quarter. After Boston closed within six points with 10½ minutes remaining, the Lakers went on an 11-3 run.

"The Lakers played very well," Boston coach Chris Ford said. "They're on a roll. We played well for 24 minutes and then we did whatever they wanted us to do. We settled for the shots they hoped we would take."

Chaney may be in hot water

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Rockets coach Don Chaney might have gotten himself in trouble with team owner Charlie Thomas by talking about a contract extension during a television interview.

"If he's going to the press to put pressure on the Rockets, that won't work," Thomas told The Houston Post on Saturday. "I take offense if it's Don's tactics to go to the media."

During an interview with KRIV-TV Friday, Chaney was asked his thoughts about being in the final year of a three-year contract.

"If you ask anyone, it bothers them a great deal, knowing that you may or may not be here or that the owner or whoever is in charge is not taking the initiative to give you a new contract," Chaney said.

"What it does is, it creates undue pressure not only on the coach or the person involved, but also on the team."

Thomas said nothing Chaney might say will force him to extend the coach's contract before the season ends.

"I have a policy on that," Thomas said. "The coaches and other members of the organization are evaluated at the end of the year. Secondly, I don't negotiate in the press.

"When you sign a three-year contract, you know going in the third year is the last year of that deal. What we need to concentrate on now is winning ballgames, not worrying about next year's contracts."

Asked if he had any second thoughts about elaborating on contract questions in the media instead of going directly to management, Chaney said: "I really don't care. That was the normal response. I'd like to be working under a new contract."

Fantasy leagues under fire

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Prospering sports fantasy leagues, which offer an estimated 1 million fans the opportunity to build and run their own teams, were dealt a dose of reality by a Florida decision linking them to gambling.

A mini-industry of statistics services and books giving detailed information on performances of professional baseball, football and hockey players has grown up around the leagues, which began in earnest at a New York restaurant in 1980.

Some newspapers, including USA Today and The National, tailor regular columns to fantasy league owners, who typically want to know inside dope that could affect on-the-field play.

One of the founders of the Rotisserie League Baseball Association — which takes its name from that now-closed New York eatery — said the Florida attorney general's recent ruling hit the fantasy league world like a hard brushback pitch.

Glen Waggoner, a contributing editor to Esquire magazine and a freelance writer, said the Jan. 10 opinion from Attorney General Bob Butterworth was the first in the nation he knew about that describes fantasy leagues as a form of gambling.

"I hope it doesn't deter anybody," Waggoner said. "I can't imagine that if you take the stakes we play for, that any law enforcement agency in the country is going to get exercised."

While top finishers in fantasy leagues do win money, Waggoner said that's not the point for the vast majority of players.

"The money is not even close the biggest reason to play this game," Waggoner said.

"You sit in the stands and watch a $3 million outfielder loaf after a fly ball, and you tell yourself that if you were in charge you'd throw the bums out of there," he said. "When you play Rotisserie League, you get to throw the bums out of there. It allows you as an owner to try to manage better than the others in your league."

Butterworth, in a non-binding opinion requested by the state attorney in Orlando, said that a fantasy league in which a fee is charged and prize money distributed is a misdemeanor form of gambling punishable by up to 60 days in jail and a fine of $500.

The linchpin of Butterworth's decision was his finding that a fantasy league, in this case a football league, involves more chance than skill. One of his previous opinions allowed events such as hole-in-one golf tournaments because they were based on skill.

"It might well be argued that skill is involved in the selection of a successful fantasy team by requiring knowledge of the varying abilities and skills of the professional football players who will be selected to make up the fantasy team," he wrote.

But, he added, the prizes are awarded based on player performances, which involve enough of an element of chance to violate Florida law.

Fantasy league operators disagree.

"Obviously, there's skill involved," said Phil Price, who runs Fantastic Sports Leagues out of Newport Beach, Calif. "You have to keep up with the players. The luck involved is the same kind of luck that you find in any endeavor of life."

The rules for league play vary, but the 40,000-member RLBA publishes a rulebook and guide to baseball players every year that outlines the basic idea. Waggoner, a co-editor, said the book sold some 50,000 copies in 1990.

Under those rules, a league of owners conducts an annual auction draft of players, basing value on real-life performance. A salary cap is imposed, forcing owners to be careful with their wallets and rewarding those who come up with bargains.

Australian Open

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — In their moments of triumph, champions sometimes cry or shout or hug their loved ones. Boris Becker ran away.

Introspective, sensitive, an artist in his own way, Becker fled the stadium and crowd and a defeated Ivan Lendl seconds after the final shot at the Australian Open on Sunday to be alone with his thoughts.

This was not just another victory and paycheck for Becker, even if his 1-6, 6-4, 6-4, 6-4 win gave him a fifth Grand Slam title and $250,000.

This was about becoming No. 1 in the world rankings, displacing Stefan Edberg, achieving at age 23 the most important goal of his seven-year career, and perhaps moving on with his life away from tennis.

He jogged through a tunnel in the stadium, past bewildered officials, to the grassy park outside, pumping his arms in the air and exulting among the Chinese elm trees under a canopy of fluffy white clouds.

"He was on top of the world. He was ecstatic," said Glen Sharam, head groundsman at the National Tennis Center, who was told by the tournament referee to follow that redhead.

"Keep away," Becker shouted, and Sharam, a professional sprinter when not tending the center, stayed a respectful 70 yards behind.

Becker loped up the jogging path on Batman Avenue, then picked up speed, running hard, clearing out his lungs and his mind. He ran back just as hard before slowing down in the park on the way back into the stadium. A half-dozen people in the park watched him go by and applauded him, then he disappeared again into the tunnel.

"I just couldn't sit down and relax, I had to move," Becker said. "There was so much going on inside me. I just had to get out there to be by myself. I was thinking back about the past, how many years I have been (playing), that I am finally on the top. I was thinking backwards what I had to go through."

It seemed so long ago that he startled the sports world by winning the first of his three Wimbledon titles at 17 in 1985. He reached the No. 2 ranking the next year, but then slipped to No. 4 in 1987 and 1988. He rededicated himself to his goal, working harder than ever under the guidance of manager Ion Tiriac and coach Bob Brett, and captured the U.S. Open in 1989. But still the No. 1 spot eluded him.

He had never done well here, finishing no better than the quarters in five previous appearances, but he came to Australia five weeks ago to concentrate on winning. He lost in the first rounds of two tuneup events, and almost gave up hope of winning in this country or getting to the top.

He barely survived a five-set, third-round match against No. 45 Omar Camporese — at 5 hours, 11 minutes the longest in Australian history — and found himself, along with other players and fans, worried and preoccupied about the Gulf War war and the threat of terrorism.

Ten minutes after taking off on his solitary gallop, Becker returned to center court, the crowd of 15,000, and the phalanx of photographers. He accepted his silver trophy but was too choked up to say much.

"It's unbelievable for me at this moment," he said. He couldn't express himself, so he merely thanked them, then retreated to the locker room. The fans applauded him warmly as he left.

Becker suffered back muscle spasms early in the match — a trainer massaged him, stretched his muscles and rubbed a heat cream on his back during the second set — and now he was treated with massage and ice. When he emerged, an hour after his victory, he spoke softly with a voice still filled with emotion.

"It's not that easy now to be with many, many people," he said. "I have trained and I have tried for seven years (to be No. 1), and I am at that point, and it's difficult to explain that feeling right now.

"I have been so close for many years, and to make that final step ... I can't believe it myself, to tell you the truth. It has to sink in, and I have to sleep many nights, maybe a few weeks, to realize I am it."

Someone asked whether he'd be able to avoid what happened to Mats Wilander, who held the No. 1 ranking for only four months after gaining it with his U.S. Open victory in 1988.

"It's a good question," Becker said. "I am also the sort of person like Mats who is very extreme. I have to be careful there.

Nicklaus jumps on mistake

Senior Skins

KOHALA COAST, Hawaii (AP) — A mental lapse by Gary Player helped Jack Nicklaus escape from the moonscape-like lava flow and go on to the biggest payday of his unparalleled career.

"I've always prided myself on course management," Player said Sunday after struggling through a three-hole playoff with Nicklaus in the Senior Skins Game.

"But this time I made a mistake. I blanked out. I don't know what it was. I just wasn't thinking," said Player, who had Nicklaus on the rocks but let him get away.

The big check compares, for example, with the $113,285 he collected as the PGA Tour's leading money winner in 1964. It was larger, in fact, than his season total in seven of the eight years he led the tour in winnings.

Lee Trevino won $125,000 and Arnold Palmer $15,000, both from Saturday's first nine holes. Nicklaus won all the money that was up for grabs on Sunday.

It all was pocketed on that dramatic eagle putt, but the event turned as he scrambled for par on the second extra hole, the par-5 18th.

With Palmer, Trevino and Rodriguez eliminated, it was a head-to-head struggle between Nicklaus and his old friend and golfing foe, Player.

"When he got it into the rocks," Player said, "I thought, 'I can win it with a (par) 5,'

"And I played it for a 5. That was my mistake," he said, and shook his head. "I wasn't thinking right."

Player got the 5 he was playing for, but so did Nicklaus.

After a penalty drop from the rocks, he hit a 243-yard 3-wood third shot over the lava, around a palm tree and onto the left fringe of the green, 40 feet from the hole. He two-putted for par, dropping a critical 5-foot second putt that had him shivering his shoulders in relief.

They went back to the tee on the par-5 10th for the third playoff hole. Both drove into the fairway and went for the green with their second shots. Player reached the front fringe with a fairway wood and Nicklaus hit a 2-iron to the back left fringe.

Player missed his long eagle putt to the right.

As Nicklaus hit his putt, he began yelping, "It's going! It's going!" and when it took the break and began to fall, he said, "It's in!"

The eagle concluded a round played in ideal conditions. Six of the first 11 holes were halved with birdies, and Player had a tap-in left for a birdie when Nicklaus dropped his eagle.

"It seemed either we all made the putts, or none of us made the putts," Nicklaus said.

PGA

PHOENIX (AP) — Nolan Henke rolled in an 18-foot birdie putt on the final hole Sunday, ending a back-nine collapse and giving him a one-stroke victory over Curtis Strange, Tom Watson and Gil Morgan in the Phoenix Open.

Henke, whose only previous victory in three years on the PGA Tour was in last year's B.C. Open, finished with an even-par 71 and a 16-under total of 268.

The victory was worth $180,000, more than half of what the 26-year-old Henke earned last season.

Morgan and Strange both bogeyed the 18th hole to fall to 15 under with Watson, winner of 32 tour events in 21 years but winless since the 1987 Nabisco Championship.

Watson became the early clubhouse leader with a 65 featuring birdies on five of the last six holes.

Morgan shot a 66 and Strange a 67 on the 6,992-yard TPC course.

Henke, who led from the second round and started the day with a four-stroke lead over Robert Wrenn, made the turn at 17 under and then birdied the 10th hole for a three-shot lead over Strange.

But Henke bogeyed the par-5 13th, the par-5 15th and the par-3 16th to fall to 15 under.

Strange shot a 4-under 31 on the front nine to make the turn at 15 under. He birdied Nos. 12 and 13 before finding a bunker on the 15th hole and winding up with a bogey.

Auto Racing

FORT WORTH (AP) — Two months into rehabilitation from an accident, race car driver A.J. Foyt has made agonizing progress toward his goal of starting in one last Indianapolis 500.

His original goal was to be healthy enough to attempt to qualify for a record 34th consecutive Indy 500 in May. But in true Foyt fashion, he now hopes to drive in the Phoenix Indy-car race on April 21.

The Foyt team's first 1991 Lola chassis cleared customs from England on Tuesday, and Foyt soon wedged his barrel-sized chest and fragile feet into the driver's tub.

"I'm going to set it up," Foyt joked, drawing a laugh but realizing he still wasn't fit enough to get a racing car tuned to the top line.

"They were all laughing at the shop, but I've got to be careful with my legs and feet," Foyt, 56, said. "I sat there 10 or 15 minutes kind of messing with the pedals."

Foyt's career almost ended last year when his car, its brakes suddenly inoperative, slammed into an embankment on the 26th lap of the Road America 200 at Elkhart Lake, Wis. He sustained significant injuries to his legs and feet and required three operations.

In mid-November he began his comeback under the guidance of Steve Watterson, strength and rehabilitation coach for the Houston Oilers.

"I study biomechanics, and I'm an exercise physiologist, but I didn't know anything specific to racing," Watterson said. But after visiting Foyt's shop to learn all he could about the cars and conferring with Foyt's doctor, he was confident.

"I told him, 'This time, I'm the driver. You're the car,'" Watterson said. "After that we had a good relationship."

Foyt suffered a severe dislocation of the right ankle and still has sensory deprivation in that foot. He's unable to get his feet into the size 10½-D boots which he's worn throughout his racing career.

"My kids are standing in line, seeing which one gets these alligator boots and ostrich boots," he said.

Oil prices slump

West Texas Intermediate oil for delivery in March settled at $21.35 per barrel, down 36 cents, on the New York Mercantile Exchange. In London, North Sea Brent Blend crude closed at $20 per barrel, down 37 cents, on the International Petroleum Exchange.

Dollar up

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar was lifted in cautious trading Friday after pessimism about the economy was tempered by a government report that was better than expected.

Gold was slightly higher.

Traders said the dollar staged a small early rally when the Commerce Department reported the economy declined at an annual rate of 2.1 percent in the final three months of 1990.

The government said the gross national product — the country's total output of goods and services — dropped at the sharpest rate since a 3.2 percent decline in the third quarter of 1982. Many economists took the report as verification that the nation has entered a full-blown recession.

But currency analysts said the number was better than the 3 percent to 4 percent decline that the market had been expecting.

The dollar also rose slightly against the British pound in New York, where sterling fetched $1.9564 compared to $1.9565 late Thursday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Thursday, included: 1.4910 German marks, up from 1.4868; 1.2628 Swiss francs, up from 1.2575; 5.0685 French francs, up from 5.0560; 1,120.50 Italian lire, up from 1,117.75; and 1.1643 Canadian dollars, up from 1.1600.

Gold rose in New York by $2.70 a troy ounce to $375.70 on the Commodity Exchange. Republic National Bank later quoted a bid for gold of $375.50 a troy ounce, up $2.75 from late Thursday.

Deficit seen for deposit insurance fund

■ Bank customers will feel the pinch as the White House estimates the fund that insures bank deposits will show a $4 billion deficit in 1992, possibly growing to $23 billion by 1995.

By Stephen Labaton
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Raising the specter of another huge taxpayer bailout, the White House has estimated that the program that insures bank deposits will show a deficit sometime next year, government officials said Friday.

And after that, they said, the hole will only grow deeper.

The projection by the Office of Management and Budget, made in the budget request the White House will send to Congress on Feb. 4, is the first official estimate to become public that suggests that the bank insurance fund could be insolvent as early as 1992.

The White House projection is that by the end of next year, the fund will have a deficit of $4 billion and that by 1995 the shortfall will be $23 billion.

A taxpayer rescue could be averted through increased industry contributions, but the insurance fund's troubles would still be felt by bank depositors and other customers through increased fees and lower rates paid on deposits.

The fund has posted three consecutive years of losses, and is now at its lowest ratio of insurance to deposits since its creation in 1934.

Because of the growing number of failures of large banks, the fund is expected to show record losses for both last year and this year, totaling $9 billion. That would leave it with about $4 billion by the end of this year.

Administration officials have struggled in recent months to distinguish the plight of the fund and the commercial banking industry from that of the nation's savings and loans.

The bailout of that industry could cost taxpayers as much as $500 billion over 40 years.

But the latest estimates on the bank fund and the failure of the banking industry to agree on a solution provide the strongest indication so far that a bailout to protect bank deposits may also be needed.

"The Treasury is looking at a budget that has a black hole and saying our first job is to fill that black hole," a bank lobbyist said.

"If the economy and the real estate markets do not turn around soon, then it is clear we will not be able to make up the difference."

Seidman

Industry representatives have been meeting with regulators and Treasury officials this week to try to find a way to rebuild the insurance fund through industry contributions in a way that would not cripple banks, many of which have been posting anemic profits.

"They are still far from any agreement," said L. William Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Treasury securities unsettled

■ The government's GNP report and erratic interbank lending rates that suggest banks are reluctant to lend reserves to other banks, unsettled the Treasury securities market as dealers and investors await more government moves.

By H.J. Maidenberg
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The Treasury securities market was unsettled Friday by a smaller-than-expected decline in the nation's gross national product and the erratic behavior of the interbank lending rates in recent days, which suggested that banks have become reluctant to lend reserves to other banks, or even to dealers.

At the opening, the Treasury debt market reacted negatively to the government's report of a 2.1 percent decline in the total output of goods and services in the last quarter of 1990. This was much less of a decline than most estimates had suggested.

Because the market in fixed-income debt thrives on negative economic news, the GNP report caused selling of Treasury debt issues.

Also weighing on the bond market, which always fears any development that could stimulate inflation and higher interest rates, was the persistent high level of the rate that banks charge one another for temporary loans.

Despite another move by the Federal Reserve to add reserves to the banking system, the interbank lending rate soared as high as 9 percent just before the close.

The funds rate was at 7 percent, or a quarter-point above the Fed's perceived target, when the central bank intervened at midday to reduced this bedrock cost of credit.

Philip Braverman, senior vice president and chief economist at DKB Securities Corp., the domestic arm of the Dai-Ichi Kangyo Bank of Tokyo, said some banks had become reluctant to lend reserves to other banks and even to Treasury securities dealers who normally tap the funds market to finance inventory.

What may also be causing banks to hold back their reserves, he continued, is the belief that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. may at some point limit its coverage of bank deposits to $100,000 for each individual Social Security number.

"When this happens, we can expect a massive outflow of funds from banks by individuals and all kinds of other depositors with more than one account," Braverman said.

"We can also expect a huge inflow of funds into Treasury securities, which may be one of the few safe investment places left for savings and deposits over $100,000."

Government securities dealers were loath to discuss their inventory financing practices or how they plan to finance their purchases at the coming quarterly Treasury refunding, the terms of which are to be announced on Wednesday.

The Treasury is expected to auction a record $34 billion of 3-and 10-year notes and 30-year bonds the following week.

In late trading, the Treasury's benchmark long bonds, the 8.75 percent issue maturing in August 2020, had recovered a bit to close down 28/ 32, at 105 26/32.

Hayes wins patent case

N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Hayes Microcomputer Products won a key patent infringement case against three Silicon Valley companies Friday, raising the odds that up to 300 competitors will have to pay the Atlanta-based company royalties on sales of computer telephone hook-ups called modems.

A U.S. District Court jury in San Francisco ruled that Everex Systems, Omnitel Inc. and VenTel Inc. deliberately violated a 1985 Hayes patent for technology used to control most modems.

Jurors ordered the three companies to pay combined damages of $3.5 million, which amounts to 1.75 percent of their total modem sales since 1985. Because the jury found willful infringement, U.S. District Judge Samuel Conti could decide to triple the damages the companies must pay Hayes.

The four-year court battle has attracted widespread attention because of Hayes' market dominance. Like IBM Corp. in personal computers, the company introduced a modem in the 1981 that became so popular that scores of manufacturers around the world rushed to make products they call "Hayes-compatible."

Hayes, facing competition that has driven prices down, has been pressuring modem makers for four years to pay royalties for use of its patents. The company yesterday said the jury verdict may set important precedents in helping U.S. companies fight imported clone products from abroad.

"We think this is particularly important for the modem industry because of the increasing global competition," said Jerry Blackstock, an attorney for Hayes. "U.S. companies have got to rely on the protection of intellectual property to protect our investment in research and development."

An opponent characterized the verdict differently. "This is a chance for Hayes to exact a lot of money from the industry," said Henry Bunsow, an attorney representing Everex.

Modems, short for "modulator-demodulators," allow computers to communicate with one another over telephone lines. The Hayes patent covers how a modem ends a transmission of data, called an "escape" sequence.

Seventeen companies have agreed to pay Hayes to license its technology. But others refused to pay royalties and at times acted together in a "Modem Patent Defense Group."

Chevron suit partly settled, may expand

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge Friday accepted a $25 million partial settlement Chevron USA Corp. reached last fall with Gulf pensioners involved in a class-action suit over benefits.

U.S. District Judge Sim Lake on Friday approved the settlement reached in November, but heard arguments over whether the settlement should include Gulf employees who lost their jobs between 1982 and 1983.

Lake ruled the settlement was an "all or nothing" agreement between the San Francisco-based petroleum company and the former employees.

Chevron had agreed to vest the pension benefits of all employees fired by Gulf between Jan. 1, 1984 and June 30, 1986. Chevron acquired Gulf in 1984.

Chevron agreed to pay claims for severance, early retirement benefits and post-retirement medical and life insurance made by various employees working at operations sold by Chevron.

Sims' ruling brought under the agreement employees fired by Gulf for the two years previous to that acquisition.

The suit had been filed on behalf of more than 40,000 former Gulf Oil Corp. employees, retirees and Chevron employees who previously worked for Gulf and their family members.

The plaintiffs in the case claimed surplus money in the Gulf pension plan should not have been lumped into a merged fund with money from the Chevron pension plan when Chevron merged the two pension plans in 1986.

The ruling was separate from a court decision regarding other claimants.

Reinstalling program may correct problems

By Dennis Sever

I have been using LotusWorks for several weeks with out any problems. But suddenly my Words service has quit working. When I select it, it just returns me to the opening menu. What has happened?

Sever

One of two things has probably happened. Either the portion of the LotusWorks that handles the Words service has been erased or it has been somehow corrupted to cause your problem. My suggestion is that you first perform a CHKDSK operation on the disk where the LotusWorks resides to determine if strange things are happening. If there are lots of lost chains I would consider reformatting the disk. If there are no lost chains then I would just reinstall LotusWorks. Make note that you must delete the existing copy of LotusWorks before you reinstall. For some reason the installation program will not overwrite a copy of LotusWorks that is already installed. If this doesn't cure the problem, you will need to call or write Lotus Development Corporation and tell them about it.

A friend of mine has a computer with WordStar 5.0 installed and running. She recently purchased Wordperfect 5.1. The WordStar works perfect with her printer but the Wordperfect won't, even though the printer is supposed to supported. When she prints from Wordperfect, the computer says it is printing but nothing happens at the printer. What's wrong?

I suspect that your friend may have a serial printer or a second parallel port on her computer. Apparently WordStar knows it but Wordperfect doesn't. If that is the case then your friend will need to execute a MODE command to redirect Wordperfect's output to the printer's correct port. If that is not the case then I would very carefully reinstall Wordperfect and re-execute the setup procedures.

I recently purchased a used laptop type computer and I've noticed that there is a connection on the back that is labeled 'RGB'. Can you tell me what this is for?

The RGB (Red, Green, Blue) connection is for an external monitor. Many laptops have this feature which allows a user to connect to a larger more easily viewed monitor than is the LCD (Liquid Crystal Diode) screen of the laptop. Use of the RGB port requires a color monitor. If you use this feature you will probably need to change a switch to activate the external port. Your computer's manuals should tell you how to activate this port. Most of the systems that I know of let you use either the LCD or the RGB but not both at the same time.

What is the difference in a nine pin serial connector and a twenty-five pin serial connector, other than the number of pins?

The connectors you are speaking of are RS-232-C connectors on computers and computer equipment, I assume. You will normally find the twenty-five pin variety on PC-XT class machines and printers and other serial peripherals. The nine pin connectors are usually found on PC-AT class machines, laptops and other small peripherals. As to performance there is no difference. In RS-232-C communications the pins used on the twenty-five pin connector are one through eight, pin 20 and sometimes 22. The nine pin connector eliminates a single conductor which is on pin one of the twenty-five pin connector. This conductor was a frame ground and was largely redundant. I should tell you that the pins have most been repositioned on the nine pin connector and these maps are available in several PC hardware type books.

■ Design and modification of existing facility for design and installation of a neutron radiography system — Design and installation of a new neutron radiography system and the associated building modifications to accomodate the new system at the U.S. Department of Energy's Pantex Plant near Amarillo. Sources are being sought for this project by Mason & Hanger, Silas Mason Co., Inc., under Prime Contract with the Department of Energy. The building modifications shall include the removal of one-eight MEV Linac x-ray machine, one five-to overhead bridge crane and one half ton jib crane. It is anticipated that a portion of the existing floor slab will be excavated to allow for the new underground source transfer system. The new radiography system shall use 150 milligrams of California 252 (CF 252) as its "neutron source." As a minimum, the new radiography system shall consist of the following components: 150 milligrams of CF 252, CF 252 transfer system, CF 252 storage container, long collimator, short collimator, replacement transfer system, real time imaging system, parts listing table, parts manipulator, control console, neutron monitoring system, and shielding. Engineering and construciton on this project will require access to the plant's exclusive area and will be subject to Department of Energy security controls and directives. Personnel must be U.S. citizens for access to the site. The total estimated engineering and construction cost $1 million to $2 million. Request for proposal with plans and specifications will be available approximately February 28, 1991 for $25.00 per set, nonrefundable. This is a request for an expression of interest only. Qualified firms should indicate interest in this project by providing evidence of capability to perform. Refer to 016.

■ Roof replacement — Replacement of roof to include removal of old roof to roof deck, installation of new roof, and plaster repair and painting of exterior plaster walls. Location: U.S. Post Office, 228 Earl Garrett St., Kerrville, Texas. Postal services estimates $75,000 - $85,000. Offers are due by February 8, 1991. Request for solicitation must be in writing. Refer to 014.

■ Sprinkler for Post Office — Provide all labor and materials for space alterations to relocate the Post Office operations on the first floor of the Jack Brook Federal Building, Beaumont. Work also includes extending the sprinkler system throughout the basement and the post office. Estimated cost range $250,000 to $500,000. Refer to 0016.

■ Constrution — Unscheduled construction services in GSA-owned and leased buildings in Denver County, State of Colorado, for a period of one year. Estimated cost range around $900,000. Refer to 0017.

■ Roof replacement — Contractor to provide labor, equipment, materials and supervision to replace existing roof, flashing and roof drains at the Main Post Office, 115 South Swenson Avenue, Stamford. The estimated cost of this project is $55,000 to $60,000. All responsible sources may submit a offer. Refer to 014.

■ Coin operated washer and dryer machines vending services — This solicitation calls for plans to enter into an agreement with a contractor to provide six coin operated gas dryers, 12 coin operated washers and four coin operated stackable dryers. Solicitation will be available about January 30, 1991, with an estimated award date of March 1, 1991. All requests for solicitation should be in writing on company letterhead. Refer to 017.

■ Construction — Furnish all necessary materials, machinery, equipment, supervision and labor for the renovation and construction of 600 North Loraine for the Midland Police Department. The work in this project includes approximately 50,000 square feet of interior and exterior demolition site work, new construction and repairs, security system installation, supply and installation of new furnishings, and roof repairs. Bids must be received by 3:00 p.m., February 14, 1991.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Better to hold on to zero bonds

By Bill Doyle

Q. I retired at age 63 two and a half years ago. The broker who was assigned by his firm to "take care of" me really "took" me, I'm finding out. For my account, he purchased zero-coupon U.S. Treasury bonds at a cost of $21,000. When I needed money and sold those bonds, I received $18,000.

The broker said that was the result of the drop in interest rates. But it was quite a loss for a widow lady. How wise was the purchase of those zero-coupon bonds, due to mature in the years 2010 and 2019?

Doyle

A. It was just the other way about. The appropriate antonym my dictionary lists for this use of "wise" is "senseless."

"Zeroes," as zero-coupon bonds are nicknamed, should be bought primarily by people who intend to hold those securities until maturity. The exceptions to this general rule are speculators, who hope to turn a relatively quick profit. It's obvious you are not in that category.

A zero is originally issued at a price way below its face value and is redeemed at face value on its maturity date — unless the issuer defaults. Some zeroes issued by corporations have defaulted, but there is absolutely no worry about default of U.S. Treasury zeroes.

The difference between the low price at which a zero is issued and its higher face value is interest, which builds up and is finally collected at maturity.

If you owned those bonds for two years or so, the buildup in interest should have resulted in you receiving a higher price for the zeroes you sold. More important, and contrary to what you say the broker told you, a decline in interest rates causes the market values of previously issued bonds to rise — not fall. And interest rates have come down since you bought those zeroes.

Based on your letter, it does seem you were "taken" — either by paying too much when you bought the zeroes or, more likely, receiving too little when you sold.

Q. My new broker advises me to enter into a program of buying and selling options for my $42,000 individual retirement program. I am retired, but I will not make withdrawals from the IRA for about five or six years.

From the printed material the broker sent, his proposal seems volatile. I have learned that I can have my IRA transferred to my local bank. What do you recommend?

A. That you move your IRA in what is called a "trustee-to-trustee transfer." Your bank or any other place to which you shift the IRA can handle the details.

Trading options is highly speculative — meaning very risky. It should be done only by people who are ready, willing and financially able to take a chance on losing money in hopes of garnering fat profits.

Unless you have other wealth stashed away, you shouldn't even consider option-trading.

Q. I own 200 shares of common stock in a pharmaceutical company. The stock certificate, registered in my name and in my possession, is for 200 shares. How can I sell 100 of the 200 shares?

A. Give a broker an order to sell 100 shares. Deliver the 200-share certificate to the broker. After your sell order is executed, the broker will send you a check for the sale price minus commission and you will receive a new certificate for the 100 shares you continue to own.

The broker's check should reach you a bit more than a week after the day on which the 100 shares are sold — the "trade date."

USAir cuts back on West Coast

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — USAir, abandoning its hopes to become a major force on the West Coast as it is in the East, said Friday that it was pulling out of six markets in California and two in Washington State.

The carrier also reported a loss of $221.1 million in the fourth quarter of 1990 on revenue of $1.66 billion, compared with a loss of $101.7 million on revenue of $1.5 billion in the fourth quarter of 1989.

As part of its pullback in the West, USAir said it would retire 18 BAe-146 aircraft, an 81-seat jet made by British Aerospace.

USAir also said it was reducing service by 20 daily flights at Cleveland and by 25 daily flights at the Baltimore Washington-International Airport, which is one of its larger hubs.

The carrier was already struggling with service problems before its operations were damaged by the Persian Gulf crisis, which led to higher jet fuel costs and a decline in travel.

The carrier was just making progress in solving problems stemming from its merger with Piedmont Airlines.

Among the difficulties were a disruption of flights because of a shortage of crews, long delays at airports and misrouted baggage.

Edwin I. Colodny, the chairman and president of USAir Group, the parent company, said a downturn in traffic, a huge increase in fuel costs and the competitive need to offer discount fares put great pressure on the entire airline industry in the fourth quarter.

"Most of these factors continue to be present," he added. "It is unrealistic to think the airline industry's economic environment, which is adversely impacted by the Gulf war, will change significantly in 1991."

FUND: Bailout costs will reach public

(From 6C)

He added that within the next month, the FDIC would probably be considering another increase in the premiums that banks pay to the insurance fund.

On Jan. 1, the premium paid by banks to the fund rose to 19.5 cents for every $100 in deposits, from 12 cents.

Lobbyists are predicting that it could soon be increased again, to at least 23 cents. For the first nine months of 1990, the industry earned about 60 cents for each $100 in deposits.

The White House estimate is based on the expectation that the premium will increase to 23 cents, an 18 percent jump over the current payments and a 92 percent rise over the 12 cents paid last year.

Its projections for losses are based upon an economic model that compares the capital and quality of assets of banks with the trends shown by similar institutions that failed.

A similar method has been used by the Congressional Budget Office, which will present its latest forecasts on the health of the insurance fund at a congressional hearing on Tuesday.

The budget office projection is also expected to show a deficit, even assuming an increase in industry contributions.

Seidman said the FDIC was in the process of calculating how it would fare in 1992, and he questioned the reliability of long-range forecasts.

Within the last year, the FDIC has been forced several times to increase its estimates of the amount it expected to lose.

One proposal under discussion is for banks that are more secure to set up a fund to invest in weaker institutions that failed.

TI loses $39 million for quarter

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Instruments said Friday it lost $56 million in the fourth quarter and $39 million for all of 1990 due to a slower than expected recovery of the semiconductor market.

Nonetheless, the Dallas electronics and defense manufacturer said its strategic position for products, market opportunities, capacity and capital costs is the best in years.

"We made significant progress during the year toward executing our strategies for positioning TI during the 1990s, but TI's financial performance in 1990 was a disappointment," Jerry R. Junkins, president and chief executive officer, said in a letter to shareholders.

He said the company increased capital spending on the belief that the soft semiconductor market would grow more than it did.

Texas Instruments' annual loss was 92 cents on a per-share basis and came on revenues of $6.567 billion. In 1989, the company earned $292 million, $3.04 a share, on revenues of $6.522 billion.

The loss for the fourth quarter, which ended Dec. 31, was 80 cents a share and came on revenues of $1.759 billion. That compares with a $36 million, 33 cents a share, profit on revenues of $1.724 billion in the same period of 1989.

Texas Instruments saw double-digit growth in 1990 sales of "differentiated semiconductor products," which include such things as advanced linear circuits and application-specific integrated circuits. The company is changing its product mix to include more of them.

An end to the Persian Gulf crisis and improvements in the U.S. economy would help renew growth of the semiconductor industry.

"Although there are many uncertainties in the global economic outlook, our plans for 1991 are based on some strengthening in TI's principal markets later in the year and into 1992," Junkins said.

There has been some new interest in some of the company's tactical defense products because of the Persian Gulf conflict and that may produce some revenue gains in the intermediate term, Texas Instruments said. But the company expects the defense electronics market to continue its decline.

Oil prices slump

West Texas Intermediate oil for delivery in March settled at $21.35 per barrel, down 36 cents, on the New York Mercantile Exchange. In London, North Sea Brent Blend crude closed at $20 per barrel, down 37 cents, on the International Petroleum Exchange.

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's decision to torch Kuwaiti oil wells and dump massive quantities of crude oil into the Gulf were not moving the market.

Dollar up

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar was lifted in cautious trading Friday after pessimism about the economy was tempered by a government report that was better than expected.

Gold was slightly higher.

Traders said the dollar staged a small early rally when the Commerce Department reported the economy declined at an annual rate of 2.1 percent in the final three months of 1990.

The government said the gross national product — the country's total output of goods and services — dropped at the sharpest rate since a 3.2 percent decline in the third quarter of 1982. Many economists took the report as verification that the nation has entered a full-blown recession.

But currency analysts said the number was better than the 3 percent to 4 percent decline that the market had been expecting.

The dollar also rose slightly against the British pound in New York, where sterling fetched $1.9564 compared to $1.9565 late Thursday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Thursday, included: 1.4910 German marks, up from 1.4868; 1.2628 Swiss francs, up from 1.2575; 5.0685 French francs, up from 5.0550; 1,120.50 Italian lire, up from 1,117.75; and 1.1643 Canadian dollars, up from 1.1600.

Gold rose in New York by $2.70 a troy ounce to $375.70 on the Commodity Exchange. Republic National Bank later quoted a bid for gold of $375.50 a troy ounce, up $2.75 from late Thursday.

Silver rose in New York, closing up 3.2 cents a troy ounce to $3.793 on the Commodity Exchange. In London, the metal rose to a late bid price of $3.82 a troy ounce from $3.80 bid late Thursday.

Deficit seen for deposit insurance fund

■ Bank customers will feel the pinch as the White House estimates the fund that insures bank deposits will show a $4 billion deficit in 1992, possibly growing to $23 billion by 1995.

By Stephen Labaton
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Raising the specter of another huge taxpayer bailout, the White House has estimated that the program that insures bank deposits will show a deficit sometime next year, government officials said Friday.

And after that, they said, the hole will only grow deeper.

The projection by the Office of Management and Budget, made in the budget request the White House will send to Congress on Feb. 4, is the first official estimate to become public that suggests that the bank insurance fund could be insolvent as early as 1992.

The White House projection is that by the end of next year, the fund will have a deficit of $4 billion and that by 1995 the shortfall will be $23 billion.

A taxpayer rescue could be averted through increased industry contributions, but the insurance fund's troubles would still be felt by bank depositors and other customers through increased fees and lower rates paid on deposits.

The fund has posted three consecutive years of losses, and is now at its lowest ratio of insurance to deposits since its creation in 1934.

Because of the growing number of failures of large banks, the fund is expected to show record losses for both last year and this year, totaling $9 billion. That would leave it with about $4 billion by the end of this year.

Administration officials have struggled in recent months to distinguish the plight of the fund and the commercial banking industry from that of the nation's savings and loans.

The bailout of that industry could cost taxpayers as much as $500 billion over 40 years.

But the latest estimates on the bank fund and the failure of the banking industry to agree on a solution provide the strongest indication so far that a bailout to protect bank deposits may also be needed.

"The Treasury is looking at a budget that has a black hole and saying our first job is to fill that black hole," a bank lobbyist said.

"If the economy and the real estate markets do not turn around soon, then it is clear we will not be able to make up the difference."

Seidman

Industry representatives have been meeting with regulators and Treasury officials this week to try to find a way to rebuild the insurance fund through industry contributions in a way that would not cripple banks, many of which have been posting anemic profits.

"They are still far from any agreement," said L. William Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Treasury securities unsettled

■ The government's GNP report and erratic interbank lending rates that suggest banks are reluctant to lend reserves to other banks, unsettled the Treasury securities market as dealers and investors await more government moves.

By H.J. Maidenberg
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The Treasury securities market was unsettled Friday by a smaller-than-expected decline in the nation's gross national product and the erratic behavior of the interbank lending rates in recent days, which suggested that banks have become reluctant to lend reserves to other banks, or even to dealers.

At the opening, the Treasury debt market reacted negatively to the government's report of a 2.1 percent decline in the total output of goods and services in the last quarter of 1990. This was much less of a decline than most estimates had suggested.

Because the market in fixed-income debt thrives on negative economic news, the GNP report caused selling of Treasury debt issues.

Also weighing on the bond market, which always fears any development that could stimulate inflation and higher interest rates, was the persistent high level of the rate that banks charge one another for temporary loans.

Despite another move by the Federal Reserve to add reserves to the banking system, the interbank lending rate soared as high as 9 percent just before the close.

The funds rate was at 7 percent, or a quarter-point above the Fed's perceived target, when the central bank intervened at midday to reduced this bedrock cost of credit.

Philip Braverman, senior vice president and chief economist at DKB Securities Corp., the domestic arm of the Daiichi Kangyo Bank of Tokyo, said some banks had become reluctant to lend reserves to other banks and even to Treasury securities dealers who normally tap the funds market to finance inventory.

What may also be causing banks to hold back their reserves, he continued, is the belief that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. may at some point limit its coverage of bank deposits to $100,000 for each individual Social Security number.

"When this happens, we can expect a massive outflow of funds from banks by individuals and all kinds of other depositors with more than one account," Braverman said.

"We can also expect a huge inflow of funds into Treasury securities, which may be one of the few safe investment places left for savings and deposits over $100,000."

Government securities dealers were loath to discuss their inventory financing practices or how they plan to finance their purchases at the coming quarterly Treasury refunding, the terms of which are to be announced on Wednesday.

The Treasury is expected to auction a record $34 billion of 3-and 10-year notes and 30-year bonds the following week.

In late trading, the Treasury's benchmark long bonds, the 8.75 percent issue maturing in August 2020, had recovered a bit to close down 28/ 32, at 105 26/32.

Hayes wins patent case

N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Hayes Microcomputer Products won a key patent infringement case against three Silicon Valley companies Friday, raising the odds that up to 300 competitors will have to pay the Atlanta-based company royalties on sales of computer telephone hook-ups called modems.

A U.S. District Court jury in San Francisco ruled that Everex Systems, Omnitel Inc. and VenTel Inc. deliberately violated a 1985 Hayes patent for technology used to control most modems.

Jurors ordered the three companies to pay combined damages of $3.5 million, which amounts to 1.75 percent of their total modem sales since 1985. Because the jury found willful infringement, U.S. District Judge Samuel Conti could decide to triple the damages the companies must pay Hayes.

The four-year court battle has attracted widespread attention because of Hayes' market dominance. Like IBM Corp. in personal computers, the company introduced a modem in the 1981 that became so popular that scores of manufacturers around the world rushed to make products they call "Hayes-compatible."

Hayes, facing competition that has driven prices down, has been pressuring modem makers for four years to pay royalties for use of its patents. The company yesterday said the jury verdict may set important precedents in helping U.S. companies fight imported clone products from abroad.

"We think this is particularly important for the modem industry because of the increasing global competition," said Jerry Blackstock, an attorney for Hayes. "U.S. companies have got to rely on the protection of intellectual property to protect our investment in research and development."

An opponent characterized the verdict differently. "This is a chance for Hayes to exact a lot of money from the industry," said Henry Bunsow, an attorney representing Everex.

Modems, short for "modulator-demodulators," allow computers to communicate with one another over telephone lines. The Hayes patent covers how a modem ends a transmission of data, called an "escape" sequence.

Seventeen companies have agreed to pay Hayes to license its technology. But others refused to pay royalties and at times acted together in a "Modem Patent Defense Group."

Chevron suit partly settled, may expand

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge Friday accepted a $25 million partial settlement Chevron USA Corp. reached last fall with Gulf pensioners involved in a class-action suit over benefits.

U.S. District Judge Sim Lake on Friday approved the settlement reached in November, but heard arguments over whether the settlement should include Gulf employees who lost their jobs between 1982 and 1983.

Lake ruled the settlement was an "all or nothing" agreement between the San Francisco-based petroleum company and the former employees.

Chevron had agreed to vest the pension benefits of all employees fired by Gulf between Jan. 1, 1984 and June 30, 1986. Chevron acquired Gulf in 1984.

Chevron agreed to pay claims for severance, early retirement benefits and post-retirement medical and life insurance made by various employees working at operations sold by Chevron.

Sims' ruling brought under the agreement employees fired by Gulf for the two years previous to that acquisition.

The suit had been filed on behalf of more than 40,000 former Gulf Oil Corp. employees, retirees and Chevron employees who previously worked for Gulf and their family members.

The plaintiffs in the case claimed surplus money in the Gulf pension plan should not have been lumped into a merged fund with money from the Chevron pension plan when Chevron merged the two pension plans in 1986.

The ruling was separate from a court decision regarding other claimants.

Reinstalling program may correct problems

By Dennis Sever

I have been using LotusWorks for several weeks with out any problems. But suddenly my Words service has quit working. When I select it, it just returns me to the opening menu. What has happened?

Sever

One of two things has probably happened. Either the portion of the LotusWorks that handles the Words service has been erased or it has been somehow corrupted to cause your problem. My suggestion is that you first perform a CHKDSK operation on the disk where the LotusWorks resides to determine if strange things are happening. If there are lots of lost chains I would consider reformatting the disk. If there are no lost chains then I would just reinstall LotusWorks. Make note that you must delete the existing copy of LotusWorks before you reinstall. For some reason the installation program will not overwrite a copy of LotusWorks that is already installed. If this doesn't cure the problem, you will need to call or write Lotus Development Corporation and tell them about it.

A friend of mine has a computer with WordStar 5.0 installed and running. She recently purchased Wordperfect 5.1. The WordStar works perfect with her printer but the Wordperfect won't, even though the printer is supposed to supported. When she prints from Wordperfect, the computer says it is printing but nothing happens at the printer. What's wrong?

I suspect that your friend may have a serial printer or a second parallel port on her computer. Apparently WordStar knows it but Wordperfect doesn't. If that is the case then your friend will need to execute a MODE command to redirect Wordperfect's output to the printer's correct port. If that is not the case then I would very carefully reinstall Wordperfect and re-execute the setup procedures.

I recently purchased a used laptop type computer and I've noticed that there is a connection on the back that is labeled 'RGB'. Can you tell me what this is for?

The RGB (Red, Green, Blue) connection is for an external monitor. Many laptops have this feature which allows a user to connect to a larger more easily viewed monitor than is the LCD (Liquid Crystal Diode) screen of the laptop. Use of the RGB port requires a color monitor. If you use this feature you will probably need to change a switch to activate the external port. Your computer's manuals should tell you how to activate this port. Most of the systems that I know of let you use either the LCD or the RGB but not both at the same time.

What is the difference in a nine pin serial connector and a twenty-five pin serial connector, other than the number of pins?

The connectors you are speaking of are RS-232-C connectors on computers and computer equipment, I assume. You will normally find the twenty-five pin variety on PC-XT class machines and printers and other serial peripherals. The nine pin connectors are usually found on PC-AT class machines, laptops and other small peripherals. As to performance there is no difference. In RS-232-C communications the pins used on the twenty-five pin connector are one through eight, pin 20 and sometimes 22. The nine pin connector eliminates a single conductor which is on pin one of the twenty-five pin connector. This conductor was a frame ground and was largely redundant. I should tell you that the pins have most been repositioned on the nine pin connector and these maps are available in several PC hardware type books.

OPPORTUNITIES

Export Assistance

The following bids are from Midland College, Procurement Center. For more information contact Jerry Jones at 685-4657 or Sharon Honzalik at 685-4670.

■ Design and modification of existing facility for design and installation of a neutron radiography system — Design and installation of a new neutron radiography system and the associated building modifications to accomodate the new system at the U.S. Department of Energy's Pantex Plant near Amarillo. Sources are being sought for this project by Mason & Hanger, Silas Mason Co., Inc., under Prime Contract with the Department of Energy. The building modifications shall include the removal of one-eight MEV Linac x-ray machine, one five-to overhead bridge crane and one half ton jib crane. It is anticipated that a portion of the existing floor slab will be excavated to allow for the new underground source transfer system. The new radiography system shall use 150 milligrams of California 252 (CF 252) as its "neutron source." As a minimum, the new radiography system shall consist of the following components: 150 milligrams of CF 252, CF 252 transfer system, CF 252 storage container, long collimator, short collimator, replacement transfer system, real time imaging system, parts listing table, parts manipulator, control console, neutron monitoring system, and shielding. Engineering and construciton on this project will require access to the plant's exclusive area and will be subject to Department of Energy security controls and directives. Personnel must be U.S. citizens for access to the site. The total estimated engineering and construction cost $1 million to $2 million. Request for proposal with plans and specifications will be available approximately February 28, 1991 for $25.00 per set, nonrefundable. This is a request for an expression of interest only. Qualified firms should indicate interest in this project by providing evidence of capability to perform. Refer to 016.

■ Roof replacement — Replacement of roof to include removal of old roof to roof deck, installation of new roof, and plaster repair and painting of exterior plaster walls. Location: U.S. Post Office, 228 Earl Garrett St., Kerrville, Texas. Postal services estimates $75,000 - $85,000. Offers are due by February 8, 1991. Request for solicitation must be in writing. Refer to 014.

■ Sprinkler for Post Office — Provide all labor and materials for space alterations to relocate the Post Office operations on the first floor of the Jack Brook Federal Building, Beaumont. Work also includes extending the sprinkler system throughout the basement and the post office. Estimated cost range $250,000 to $500,000. Refer to 0016.

■ Constrution — Unscheduled construction services in GSA-owned and leased buildings in Denver County, State of Colorado, for a period of one year. Estimated cost range around $900,000. Refer to 0017.

■ Roof replacement — Contractor to provide labor, equipment, materials and supervision to replace existing roof, flashing and roof drains at the Main Post Office, 115 South Swenson Avenue, Stamford. The estimated cost of this project is $55,000 to $60,000. All responsible sources may submit a offer. Refer to 014.

■ Coin operated washer and dryer machines vending services — This solicitation calls for plans to enter into an agreement with a contractor to provide six coin operated gas dryers, 12 coin operated washers and four coin operated stackable dryers. Solicitation will be available about January 30, 1991, with an estimated award date of March 1, 1991. All requests for solicitation should be in writing on company letterhead. Refer to 017.

■ Construction — Furnish all necessary materials, machinefy, equipment, supervision and labor for the renovation and construction of 600 North Loraine for the Midland Police Department. The work in this project includes approximately 50,000 square feet of interior and exterior demolition site work, new construction and repairs, security system installation, supply and installation of new furnishings, and roof repairs. Bids must be received by 3:00 p.m., February 14, 1991.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Better to hold on to zero bonds

By Bill Doyle

Q. I retired at age 63 two and a half years ago. The broker who was assigned by his firm to "take care of" me really "took" me, I'm finding out. For my account, he purchased zero-coupon U.S. Treasury bonds at a cost of $21,000. When I needed money and sold those bonds, I received $18,000.

The broker said that was the result of the drop in interest rates. But it was quite a loss for a widow lady. How wise was the purchase of those zero-coupon bonds, due to mature in the years 2010 and 2019?

Doyle

A. It was just the other way about. The appropriate antonym my dictionary lists for this use of "wise" is "senseless."

"Zeroes," as zero-coupon bonds are nicknamed, should be bought primarily by people who intend to hold those securities until maturity. The exceptions to this general rule are speculators, who hope to turn a relatively quick profit. It's obvious you are not in that category.

A zero is originally issued at a price way below its face value and is redeemed at face value on its maturity date — unless the issuer defaults. Some zeroes issued by corporations have defaulted, but there is absolutely no worry about default of U.S. Treasury zeroes.

The difference between the low price at which a zero is issued and its higher face value is interest, which builds up and is finally collected at maturity.

If you owned those bonds for two years or so, the buildup in interest should have resulted in you receiving a higher price for the zeroes you sold. More important, and contrary to what you say the broker told you, a decline in interest rates causes the market values of previously issued bonds to rise — not fall. And interest rates have come down since you bought those zeroes.

Based on your letter, it does seem you were "taken" — either by paying too much when you bought the zeroes or, more likely, receiving too little when you sold.

Q. My new broker advises me to enter into a program of buying and selling options for my $42,000 individual retirement program. I am retired, but I will not make withdrawals from the IRA for about five or six years.

From the printed material the broker sent, his proposal seems volatile. I have learned that I can have my IRA transferred to my local bank. What do you recommend?

A. That you move your IRA in what is called a "trustee-to-trustee transfer." Your bank or any other place to which you shift the IRA can handle the details.

Trading options is highly speculative — meaning very risky. It should be done only by people who are ready, willing and financially able to take a chance on losing money in hopes of garnering fat profits.

Unless you have other wealth stashed away, you shouldn't even consider option-trading.

Q. I own 200 shares of common stock in a pharmaceutical company. The stock certificate, registered in my name and in my possession, is for 200 shares. How can I sell 100 of the 200 shares?

A. Give a broker an order to sell 100 shares. Deliver the 200-share certificate to the broker. After your sell order is executed, the broker will send you a check for the sale price minus commission and you will receive a new certificate for the 100 shares you continue to own.

The broker's check should reach you a bit more than a week after the day on which the 100 shares are sold — the "trade date."

USAir cuts back on West Coast

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — USAir, abandoning its hopes to become a major force on the West Coast as it is in the East, said Friday that it was pulling out of six markets in California and two in Washington State.

The carrier also reported a loss of $221.1 million in the fourth quarter of 1990 on revenue of $1.66 billion, compared with a loss of $101.7 million on revenue of $1.5 billion in the fourth quarter of 1989.

As part of its pullback in the West, USAir said it would retire 18 BAe-146 aircraft, an 81-seat jet made by British Aerospace.

The jet became a favorite of large commuter airlines for carrying passengers to the large hubs of major airlines.

USAir also said it was reducing service by 20 daily flights at Cleveland and by 25 daily flights at the Baltimore Washington-International Airport, which is one of its larger hubs.

The carrier was already struggling with service problems before its operations were damaged by the Persian Gulf crisis, which led to higher jet fuel costs and a decline in travel.

The carrier was just making progress in solving problems stemming from its merger with Piedmont Airlines.

Among the difficulties were a disruption of flights because of a shortage of crews, long delays at airports and misrouted baggage.

Edwin I. Colodny, the chairman and president of USAir Group, the parent company, said a downturn in traffic, a huge increase in fuel costs and the competitive need to offer discount fares put great pressure on the entire airline industry in the fourth quarter.

"Most of these factors continue to be present," he added. "It is unrealistic to think the airline industry's economic environment, which is adversely impacted by the Gulf war, will change significantly in 1991."

FUND: Bailout costs will reach public

(From 6C)

He added that within the next month, the FDIC would probably be considering another increase in the premiums that banks pay to the insurance fund.

On Jan. 1, the premium paid by banks to the fund rose to 19.5 cents for every $100 in deposits, from 12 cents.

Lobbyists are predicting that it could soon be increased again, to at least 23 cents. For the first nine months of 1990, the industry earned about 60 cents for each $100 in deposits.

The White House estimate is based on the expectation that the premium will increase to 23 cents, an 18 percent jump over the current payments and a 92 percent rise over the 12 cents paid last year.

Its projections for losses are based upon an economic model that compares the capital and quality of assets of banks with the trends shown by similar institutions that failed.

A similar method has been used by the Congressional Budget Office, which will present its latest forecasts on the health of the insurance fund at a congressional hearing on Tuesday.

The budget office projection is also expected to show a deficit, even assuming an increase in industry contributions.

Seidman said the FDIC was in the process of calculating how it would fare in 1992, and he questioned the reliability of long-range forecasts.

Within the last year, the FDIC has been forced several times to increase its estimates of the amount it expected to lose.

One proposal under discussion is for banks that are more secure to set up a fund to invest in weaker institutions that failed.

TI loses $39 million for quarter

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Instruments said Friday it lost $56 million in the fourth quarter and $39 million for all of 1990 due to a slower than expected recovery of the semiconductor market.

Nonetheless, the Dallas electronics and defense manufacturer said its strategic position for products, market opportunities, capacity and capital costs is the best in years.

"We made significant progress during the year toward executing our strategies for positioning TI during the 1990s, but TI's financial performance in 1990 was a disappointment," Jerry R. Junkins, president and chief executive officer, said in a letter to shareholders.

He said the company increased capital spending on the belief that the soft semiconductor market would grow more than it did.

Texas Instruments' annual loss was 92 cents on a per-share basis and came on revenues of $6.567 billion. In 1989, the company earned $292 million, $3.04 a share, on revenues of $6.522 billion.

The loss for the fourth quarter, which ended Dec. 31, was 80 cents a share and came on revenues of $1.759 billion. That compares with a $36 million, 33 cents a share, profit on revenues of $1.724 billion in the same period of 1989.

Texas Instruments saw double-digit growth in 1990 sales of "differentiated semiconductor products," which include such things as advanced linear circuits and application-specific integrated circuits. The company is changing its product mix to include more of them.

An end to the Persian Gulf crisis and improvements in the U.S. economy would help renew growth of the semiconductor industry.

"Although there are many uncertainties in the global economic outlook, our plans for 1991 are based on some strengthening in TI's principal markets later in the year and into 1992," Junkins said.

There has been some new interest in some of the company's tactical defense products because of the Persian Gulf conflict and that may produce some revenue gains in the intermediate term, Texas Instruments said. But the company expects the defense electronics market to continue its decline.

A polished career

Veteran Neiman Marcus shoe salesman retires to national acclaim

By Dagmar Aalund
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Sam Fagin can reach down and slip off a woman's shoe without breaking stride in his conversation. His near half-century as a shoe salesman at Neiman Marcus' downtown store has polished the move to a reflex.

But Fagin retired last month at 72, leaving his hundreds of regular customers in other hands. With him went the kind of experience that can't be replaced.

His retirement was marked like the end of an era. Neiman Marcus gave him a champagne send-off attended by Neiman Marcus President and CEO Terry Lundgren. The national trade magazine Footwear News headlined the event: "Neiman's Sam Fagin hangs up shoe stool."

Men's clothing department salesman Jack Steele, a co-worker for 44 years, says Fagin has qualities that have disappeared in modern retail sales. "You had to be a lot better to work at Neiman Marcus back then," he says. "You had to have a look, a demeanor, the ability to talk and be able to hear what someone is saying."

Attention to detail

When Fagin began working six days a week as a stock boy at Neiman Marcus 54 years ago, he was still attending high school at night. Five years later, he got an opportunity to move up to shoe salesman. "Since I didn't have a formal education and I was going to have to be a shoe salesman, I decided I would be the best," he says.

He began studying Harper's Bazaar, Vogue and Women's Wear Daily to keep up with new colors and styles. To build a clientele — and his commissions — he wrote thank-you notes to each customer. "Those handwritten letters were my homework," says Fagin. "Follow-up is the most important thing you can do."

He continued the practice to the end. One of his retirement tasks was writing notes to about 300 regular customers, letting them know he was leaving. And he passed those thick, valuable volumes of names and addresses on to a trusted colleague.

His retirement has brought many replies in the mail. Customers such as Dallas Mayor Annette Strauss have sent letters saying how much he will be missed. After all, it's not easy to find a salesman who remembers customers' shoe sizes more easily than their names.

For example, the late Duchess of Windsor, who stopped by in 1968 to buy a few pairs of sandals — a perfect size 6B, says Fagin.

His attention to correspondence also gained a large group of customers he has never seen in places like Oklahoma, Louisiana, Colorado and Illinois. Many customers see a shoe in a magazine or catalog and call Neiman's flagship looking for it. If they reached Fagin, he'd make sure his name was remembered. By the time he retired, about 80 percent of his clientele was out of town, he estimates.

En route to Midland

In the late '40s, Fagin remembers, Neiman Marcus also catered to out-of-town customers in a different way. He and other Neiman Marcus salesmen would pack samples, take the train to Midland or Amarillo and set up shop temporarily in downtown hotels.

He's also one of the few Neiman's employees who remembers the days when the store, then managed by the Marcus family, was part of a thriving downtown shopping district. He reels off the names that once made downtown window-shopping weekend entertainment: Titche-Goettinger (later Joske's), E.M. Kahn, Sanger Bros. (now El Centro College), A. Harris & Co., W.A. Green and Reynolds Penland.

Fagin takes a proprietary pride in the store's reputation. When he began his career at Neiman Marcus, it was a small specialty store with the audacity to advertise in Vogue and Harper's Bazaar. As a 1939 issue of Atlantic Monthly described it: "Beginning 30 years ago when Dallas was a small town in an area where the voice of the cow was loud in the land, Neiman Marcus has taught Southwestern women to dress well without self-consciousness."

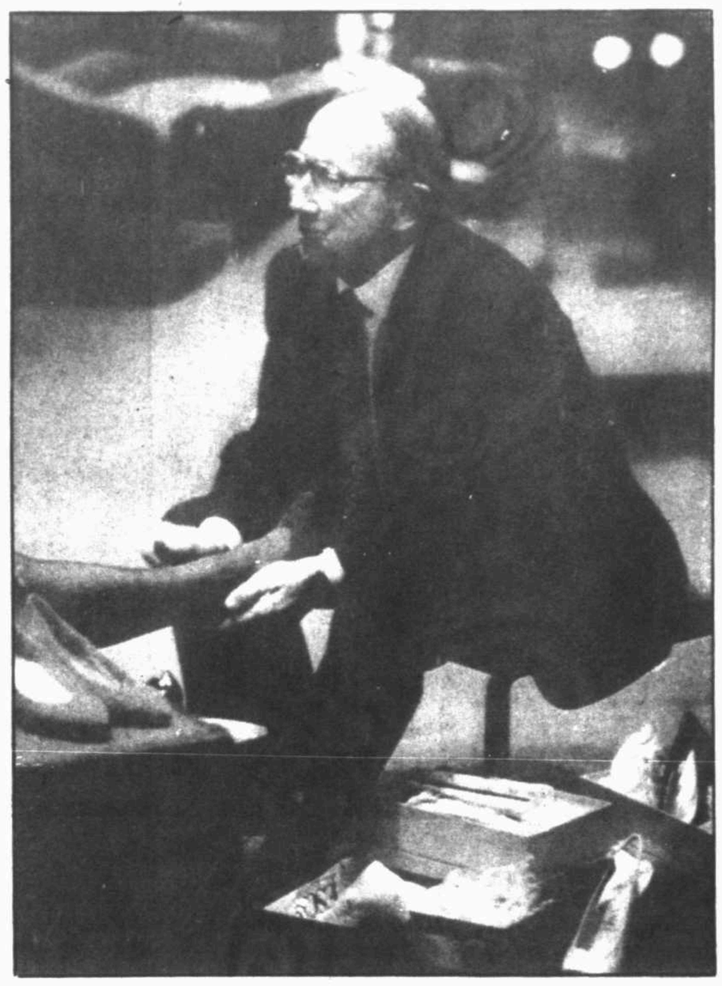
'I left with a tear in my eye, like I was losing a relative.'

— Sam Fagin, Neiman Marcus shoe salesman for 54 years

"Back then Neiman Marcus was known as the fashion authority of the Southwest," Fagin says. "Now it's the fashion authority of the world."

When he was given the chance to work at the Neiman Marcus at NorthPark Center a few years ago, much closer to his home, Fagin turned the offer down. "I'm proud to be a downtown man," he says.

And though he's looking forward to traveling with his wife, Freda, during his retirement, taking his final leave of the downtown Neiman Marcus was difficult. "I left with a tear in my eye," Fagin says, "like I was losing a relative."



Shoe salesman Sam Fagin, 74, retired last month after working in Neiman Marcus's shoe salon for 54 years. His retirement was marked like the end of an era. Neiman Marcus gave him a champagne send-off attended by Neiman Marcus President and CEO Terry Lundgren. The national trade magazine Footwear News headlined the event: "Neiman's Sam Fagin hangs up shoe stool."

Texan's find crimps fire ants' style

Associated Press

ATLANTA — A Texas scientist has taken the waxed chrysanthemum's secret defense against bees and turned it into a fog deadly to fire ants.

The defense is a natural chemical that knocks out the nervous system in social insects, bees, wasps, ants and their cousins.

Charles Wayne Evans II, who developed the fire-ant technology, Evans applies resmethrin, a man-made copy of the chrysanthemum's pyrethrum, to fire-ant mounds, leaving the ants immobilized until they suffocate.

Evans' system is called Earth Fire because a fog or smoke sometimes billows out of mounds when they are treated.

It's for use by professionals, not the average homeowner, who wear equipment similar to a flame thrower — a back pack with hose and metal wand that the operator jams into the fire ant mound.

"It is 100 percent effective in killing the imported fire ant," Evans said.

Evans treated a large ant colony — eight feet in diameter — undermining the rear of the giraffe house at the Audubon zoo in New Orleans last fall, and retreated it a week later.

"Since then we've had no problem" with ants, Stephen T. Asprodites, director of horticulture at the zoo, said in a recent telephone interview.

Asprodites said the system appears to be one of the most cost-effective and safest ways to destroy fire ants. If his budget allows, he will purchase the system for operation by a zoo employee.

The fire ant slipped into the United states through Mobile, Ala., about 1918. It has spread from middle Texas to North Carolina and could eventually spread to the entire Pacific Coast and as far north as Virginia in the East.

The ant cannot survive prolonged temperatures of 10 degrees or less, so unless it adapts, its spread will be stopped there by northern winters, according to biologists in Texas, one of the most heavily infested states.

Each worker ant is equipped with a stinger, used for paralyzing prey, small insects, worms, etc., and in defending the colony. Hundreds of ants charge up onto the body of a larger animal almost unnoticed, and then begin stinging almost simultaneously.

Farmers claim the ants, which grab hold with their jaws and sting repeatedly, can kill newborn animals up to the size of calves.

The ants build mounds up to 2½ feet high, filled with tunnels and chambers. They are built with material hauled up from several feet down where workers excavate a conical colony which is almost the mirror image of the mound.

In tears

Mother mourns loss of son killed in gulf

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — The mother of a Marine killed in a weekend collision of two armored vehicles in Saudi Arabia said her son was tired of the Persian Gulf conflict and "wished everything would finish so he could come home."

Marine Lance Cpl. Arthur O. Garza, 20, of Kingsville, who had been deployed in the Persian Gulf area since last August, died Saturday in the accident. Two other Marines were killed and seven others injured in the collision.

Military officials said the accident was related to an operation in northeastern Saudi Arabia, where Marines were firing an artillery barrage at Iraqi positions six miles inside occupied Kuwait.

Garza's mother, Mary Helen Garza, said she knew the worst news possible was coming late Saturday afternoon when a Marine drove up to her home in Kingsville. She had recently sent homemade Valentine's Day cards and recorded greetings to her son.

"It's hit us pretty hard," she said. "We were always praying for everybody over there to come home."

Garza's mother said her oldest son and other soldiers were returning to their base in an armored vehicle when it collided with another amphibious vehicle on oil-slicked gulf waters.

Garza's wife, Jennifer, and their 6-month-old daughter, Sasha Nicole, live in San Diego, Calif.

He had been stationed at Camp Pendleton just north of San Diego. Mary Helen Garza, a cook at a local restaurant, said she had last talked to her son on the telephone in November.

Army steps up combat medic training

Modern war is so lethal that advances in medical care during the past 25 years will have little effect on the odds of survival for U.S. troops who may be wounded in ground combat, experts say.

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Army combat medic training has been increased from five to seven days a week at Fort Sam Houston as war rages in the Persian Gulf, officials said.

Col. John Mullins, who runs the Joint Readiness Training Command at Fort Sam Houston, said as the possibility of a land war draws closer full classes of combat medics are being trained in San Antonio and at Marine installations on the East and West coasts.

Medics are being trained to treat every injury from chemical burns to bad skin.

Troops wounded in Operation Desert Storm would be treated first by a medic or combat lifesaver, Mullins said.

"The primary object is to resuscitate and keep the patient alive and maintain circulation with fluids," Mullins said.

If the wound is serious, the victim is moved by hand-carried litter or by truck to the next echelon, which the Army calls the battalion aid station. Or, the soldier is moved to a beachhead evacuation station in the case of the Marines.

These aid centers are highly mobile and usually are established a mile or so from combat, Mullins said.

At this level, there will be a doctor or a physician's assistant. The goal is to keep the patient alive for transport to a higher level of care — first to a division-aid station and then to a hospital, where critical lifesaving surgery could be performed.

Modern war is so lethal that advances in medical care during the past 25 years will have little effect on the odds of survival for U.S. troops who may be wounded in ground combat, experts say.

Studies of 8,000 casualties in the Vietnam War show death in ground combat generally was so quick that even if there were a hospital next to every foxhole, there was little that medical science could have done to save lives, said Col. Ron Bellamy, of the Joint Readiness Command at Walter Reed Army Hospital.

"Eighty percent of those who die in combat will die within seconds," Bellamy said. Another 10 percent of the fatalities die within minutes, and the final 10 percent will die during evacuation or treatment.

NASA shuttle astronauts do what they can in wartime

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The astronauts awaiting NASA's first wartime shuttle flight take satisfaction that their mission could eventually lead to better air defense missiles, like the Patriots being used to counter Iraq.

Yet they say part of them yearns to be serving in the Persian Gulf rather than 161 miles above it.

"You want to do something to help," explained Michael Coats, commander of Discovery's mission, set for late February or early March. "I look at it saying, 'Boy, I wish I could teach the pilots over there some of the things I saw in combat.'"

Coats, 45, a Navy captain, flew 315 combat missions in Southeast Asia during the early 1970s. Two of the six other astronauts also saw combat in Vietnam.

"If I were still a full-time military officer, I would certainly want to be in the forefront of the action," Charles Lacy Veach, 46, a former fighter pilot, said during crew interviews last week. "But I'm an astronaut now, and this is where I'm contributing to the national effort."

During Discovery's eight-day flight, the astronauts said they will collect data the Defense Department can use to build better Patriots and other air defenses to intercept missiles. Unlike the seven previous shuttle flights devoted to Defense Department work, this one is not completely classified although some of the information gathered will be kept secret.

The crew will operate two major military payloads, one of which will be released temporarily into orbit to study the shuttle's engine plumes. Scientists say study of the plumes should help the military better identify the plumes of missiles that might be fired during future wars.

The experiments were planned before the outbreak of the gulf war, but the astronauts are pleased with the timing.

"My support of the military is this mission in terms of its ability to help possibly provide data that will maybe protect us in future wars," said L. Blaine Hammond Jr., 39, an Air Force lieutenant colonel.

"If it weren't for those Patriots, there would be a lot of dead and injured folks in the Middle East," agreed Gregory Harbaugh, 34, one of two crew members without a military background. "Really, the research that we are doing is an extension of that sort of thinking."

'My support of the military is this mission in terms of its ability to help possibly provide data that will maybe protect us in future wars.'

— Air Force Lt. Col. L. Blaine Hammond

Air Force Lt. Col. Donald McMonagle believes just as strongly he is serving his country in the best possible way by flying in space. Still, guilt nags at him — his older brother, an Alabama National Guardsman, is in Saudi Arabia.

"Am I doing something for defense and the future of our country? Yeah, I'm doing that here," said McMonagle, 38. "Are the risks I'm taking here compared to the risks that my brother is taking in Saudi Arabia? Who knows?"

To reduce the risk of war-related terrorist attacks, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration has increased security at its launch site at Kennedy Space Center and its astronaut headquarters at Johnson Space Center in Houston.

Guards at center entrances scrutinize passes more carefully. Access to sensitive areas such as Mission Control is more limited than before war erupted 1½ weeks ago.

"Beyond that, suffice it to say that appropriate measures are being taken," said Jeffrey Carr, a NASA spokesman at Johnson.

Discovery will pass over the Persian Gulf region two or three times during the flight, the first time being 20 minutes after liftoff. Coats said the crew will carry no surveillance devices. As a result, they expect to see only big, hard-to-miss things like burning oil refineries and ships in the gulf.

"Unless you have special lenses and cameras, you're not going to be able to see a whole lot," Coats said. "The military satellites that are up there are much better equipped to do that sort of thing."

Civilian pilot says Aramco fired him for refusing to fly near Kuwait

HOUSTON (AP) — A U.S. civilian who flew helicopters for Saudi Arabian Oil Co. said he was fired when he refused to fly near war-torn Kuwait.

Jerry Sunley, 46, of Houston, said he was dismissed Saturday by Saudi Aramco.

"My supervisor told me I was being fired for failure to obey a legitimate order," he told the Houston Chronicle from Ras Tanura, Saudi Arabia. "At the least, I am very upset. I think they're exploiting the work force right now to continue getting oil."

Last week, Americans employed by Aramco in Saudi Arabia complained the company had not provided any airlifts since a flight in August of 1,500 dependents.

"The employees still, as always, are expected to be at their jobs unless they have vacation time or have made other arrangements," said Rob Arndt, spokesman for Houston-based Aramco Services Co., the U.S. subsidiary of Saudi Aramco.

As an Aramco pilot, Sunley said he flew people and equipment to oil rig platforms near several cities, including Tanaqib, which he described as 35 miles south of the Kuwait border.

Last Monday, he said, he was ordered to fly to the coastal city to stand by, ostensibly in case of a medical emergency on a platform. Sunley refused.

He said military authorities had grounded civilian flights.

Arndt said he was not aware of the firing. He said Sunley could apply for another job with Aramco, but that most of the company's pilots work in Saudi Arabia.

Sunley, who lived in Houston for 10 years, recently sent his wife and two sons out of Saudi Arabia to Missouri.

He said he was told Aramco would pay for his ticket out of Saudi Arabia.

Non-combat death toll stands at ten

Associated Press

SUNDAY:

— 4 Iraqi planes destroyed.

— No allied losses reported.

SINCE START OF WAR:

— 23 allied planes lost; 17 in combat, including 10 American, 5 British, 1 Kuwaiti, 1 Italian.

— 10 Americans listed as non-combat deaths. An additional 105 Americans listed as non-combat deaths in Operation Desert Shield before the war.
