Funeral services were pending at Ellis Funeral Home at presstime for Josephine Wenner, 96.

Informational reports on student health program update and review of the contracted services proposed for the 1986-87 school year.

Under financial reports will be bank balances, fund balances and consider approval of payment of current bills. Under business is to consider approval of payment of current bills. Under business is to consider approval of policy update 26 as recommended by the Texas Association of School Boards.

Personnel considerations will consider resignations and employment contracts.

Superintendent H. John Fuller will report on correspondence, school and community events and information on the National School Board Association.

It was reported to the Journal that funeral services were pending at presstime in Arizona for Randy Noble, oldest son of Jim and Betty Noble, and brother of Danny and Sandy Noble, all of Muleshoe.

He was killed in a one-vehicle accident early Thursday morning in or near Wilcox, AZ. His survivors also include a wife, and two sons. He was a farmer.

the Administration by voting "YES" in the USDA Wheat Poll. Texas Farmers Union President Joe Rankin declared.

Rankin said, "A 'yes' vote will indicate that farmers are ready and willing to assume the responsibility of reducing production in return for an adequate and fair price in the market place. A 'yes' vote says to Washington, this new farm program is headed in the wrong direction.

"The 1985 Farm Bill has 'legislated poverty for farmers by driving down the price of American exports. It is unbelievable that we sell our grain on the world market at less than the cost of production. Despite lower and lower prices, for the first time in 20 years, the United States actually imported more farm goods than it exported in May," he continued.

With the announced loan level being reduced from $2.40 per bushel in 1986 to $2.28 per bushel in 1987 the direction and results are apparent - more bankrupt farmers.

Rankin urges Texas farmers and spouses to answer all questions on the ballots and mail their ballots to the County ASCS office no later than tomorrow, Monday, July 14, 1986.

"An overwhelming 'YES' vote by wheat producers is the only hope, and perhaps the last chance, we have of changing the present legislated poverty for farmers into a cost effective supply management program in return for a fair price," Rankin concluded.

150 Enroll For School This Summer

H. John Fuller, superintendent of Muleshoe ISD, reports that the enrollment for the first week of the summer school for grades kindergarten through eighth grade is over 140 students.

These students registered to attend this six-week session before school closed in May. Teachers and parents recommended that students attend the mended that students attend then their skills in math and language arts.

Teachers in the summer program are Tammy Price, Jody Lyle, Diane Skipworth, Helen Bryant, Peggy Burnett, Denise Keeling, Beth Skipworth, Jane Foster, Sue Espinoza, Evelyn Northcutt, and Doris Scoggin. Mrs. Elizabeth Watson is the supervisor of the program.

Muleshoe ISD is also offering an eight-week summer program for children of limited English proficiency. Mrs. Charlotte Donaldson is the teacher and Mrs. Anna Gutierrez the aide for this group of 15 students.

Fuller said the total enrollment was over 150 students for both summer programs.

Efficient water management is a necessity in the operation of a profitable irrigated farm in today's agricultural economy. Researchers and the irrigation industry have developed new equipment and new techniques to assist irrigators in improving their water management efficiency.

AAU Girls Participating In Virginia

They originated in Texas, from Muleshoe and the surrounding area, and now they're going to Roanoke, VA to participate in national finals. Who are 'they'? The South Plains Dusters, that's who.

The South Plains Dusters are a group of 12-and under girls who are very proficient at the game of basketball. They are also members of the Amateur Athletic Union, the USA Junior Olympics, and Texas does not have a tournament for them to participate in, so the Texas group is attached to the Clovis AAU.

Recently, the South Plains Dusters swept the Clovis Tournament, winning the right to participate in the national finals this month.

Larry Gregory, of Farwell, who is coach of the South Plains Dusters, has been working with his team, preparing them for the major competition in Virginia.

On July 17, they will fly to Virginia for their first game on Saturday, July 19. They will be competing against teams from all across the United States for the National Championship.

Tory Matthews and Nicole Maxfield, were both picked up by the South Plains Dusters following the June 7-9 tournament, and will also be participating in the national finals.

Other team members are Misty Stewart, Farwell; Trudi Tye, Kress; Denise Gonzales, Texico, NM; Janay Johnson, Nazareth; Janale Stockett, Happy; Carrie Kindle, Three Way; Becky Barnes, Farwell; Amy Murray, Farwell; and Amy Chadwick, Texico, N.M., along with Nicole Maxfield, Sudan and Cindy Feagley, Kress.

Mia Jennings of Lazbuddie and Marla Shields of Morton will also be going to Roanoke, as they were picked up by the Clovis Blue Diamonds following the Clovis tournament. They will be participating in the 14-under age group.

Another AAU activity is getting underway at this time. On Saturday, a group of 35 youngsters traveled to Lubbock to participate in the track program. Sandy Noble and Butch Cox are coaches of the local tracksters which includes youngsters from Clovis, Bovina, Muleshoe and Lazbuddie.

On July 19, the regional qualification meet will be conducted in Lubbock, and first and second place winners will advance to the state meet in San Antonio on August 1 and 2.

Much of this new equipment will be demonstrated and the new techniques will be discussed at an "Irrigation Demonstration Field Day," conducted on the Glen Lust Farm on Tuesday, July 15, from 9:30 a.m.-3 p.m. The Lust farm is located three miles east of the Clay's Corner community on Highway 145, 10 miles north of Muleshoe on Highway 214; or three miles west of Lazbuddie on Highway 145.

Soil Conservation Service District Conservationist Bill Donham invites area producers to "Come as you are, at your convenience, any time during the field day to see the equipment in use and for a one-on-one discussion of any of the new techniques."

Featured attractions during this field day include a demonstration of soil moisture monitoring equipment and a discussion of its use by Soil Scientist Mike Risinger with the USDA-Soil Conservation Service. Equipment used to evaluate pump plant energy-use efficiency will be demonstrated, and the benefits that can be obtained from upgrading pump efficiency will be discussed by Jerry Funck, Agricultural Engineer with the High Plains Water District. Additionally, the equipment used to evaluate irrigation application efficiency will be exhibited by Mike Maynard, Soil Conservation Service Technician, who can explain the benefits that irrigators can expect through improved irrigation application efficiencies.

Surge irrigation, including the valves and time control mechanisms, will be demonstrated, and the benefits of using surge irrigation will be discussed by Bill Donham, SCS District Conservationist. Also, Gary Patterson, County Extension Agent, will discuss chemigation; and Leon New, Area Irrigation Engineer with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, will demonstrate the various nozzles designed for low Energy Precision Application (LEPA) or drip-line center pivot sprinkler systems. New will discuss the benefits of the various nozzles in placing water directly in the furrow and limiting evaporation losses. Another featured attraction will be a discussion and demonstration by Water District Agriculturalist David Swearingen of a new rainfall simulator. The simulator is used to show the effects of various land treatments on the infiltration of rainfall or irrigation water into the soil profile.

County Extension Agent Gary Patterson would like to invite all area producers to see the innovations in efficiency and water management technology.

Soil Conservation Service, Texas Agricultural Extension Service and Water District personnel will be on hand throughout the day to provide information and answer questions. Water District Assistant Manager Ken Carver encourages local producers to drop by at their convenience. "This is not a formal field tour. We will be there all day long, so producers

Letter To The Editor

Route 2
Hale Center, Texas
June 23, 1986

Dear Editor:

Seldom do farmers have the opportunity to express their opinion in a nationwide poll to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, but this week, wheat producers will be able to do just that.

It is imperative that farmers vote a resounding "YES" in favor of mandatory limits on wheat production to achieve prices not lower than 125 percent of the cost of production.

Quantities of wheat sold should not be a high priority but profitability should, not only to farmers but to every American. If farmers produce at full capacity below the cost of production, they will continue to be economically depressed and will have no money to spend on "Main Street, USA." The entire economy will never experience profitability until the farmer has money to spend. As long as he cannot service his current debt and cost of production, he will not be buying anything he can do without regardless of the amount he produces.

Studies from USDA show that less than 35 percent reduction is all that will be required to bring supply and demand to an equitable basis.

Some people would have us believe export markets are more important than profitability. If we export a billion tons of wheat and lose money, what have we gained? Others say a "yes" vote will deprive farmers of the right to make marketing decisions. It doesn't take long to decide if you would like to grow 70 acres for a profit or 100 acres for a loss. With every bushel of grain we export, we are exporting our irreplaceable soil and water and ignoring the conservation of our land for future generations.

Will you be able to face your children and grandchildren and explain that their heritage was depleted for the sake of non-profit exports?

Sincerely,
Mildred Brown

Sandhills Philosopher

Editor's note: The Sandhills Philosopher on his Johnson grass farm on Sandy Acres has been struggling with the tax reform bill, his letter this week indicates.

Dear editor: I've been having trouble trying to figure out what the tax reform bill in Congress will do for me or to me.

Newspapers have been publishing charts showing how the Senate bill will affect a family of four with I suppose wellbehaved kids earning $30,000 a year and how it differs from the House bill, which has its family of four earning $20,000, as best as I can figure out. Maybe it's the other way around.

In addition to reforming the tax system, the bill is also supposed to simplify it. This has been accomplished by reducing the tax code from 3,000 pages to 1,500, which is like going a year and a half without rain instead of three, or as simplifying as having two flat tires instead of all four, plus the spare too.

Trying to understand a 1,500-page tax bill requires superhuman effort and I don't recommend asking a Congressman to try it.

As a matter of fact, a full understanding of the bill won't be available until a year or so after it's passed, which is how long it'll take the tax lawyers to figure out where their clients can safely dodge. Any tax lawyer who can't take 1,500 pages of Congressional language and squeeze out something beneficial for the few ought to give up and try ambulance chasing.

Understand, I'm in favor of tax reform. This time I hope it works. I only hope it's not like the bank robber who reformed in prison and was let out in time to rob another bank.

Yours faithfully,
J.A.

Slower speeds save lives, say Texas A&M highway researchers

COLLEGE STATION--The number of highway traffic accidents can be reduced if everyone drives the same speed, but traffic deaths are definitely reduced by lowered speed limits, says a veteran transportation researcher at Texas A&M University.

The 55 mph speed limit has received unjustified criticism in recent reports of a California study on the cause of traffic accidents, said Dr. Quinn Brackett, a Texas Transportation Institute researcher who specializes in speed-related studies.

Reports of the California study concluded that fewer accidents would occur when most vehicles are traveling at the same speed even if the speed exceeds the legal limit.

"While it is true that cars traveling at different speeds increase accident frequency, the severity of accidents is related to the magnitude of speed," Brackett said.

Reducing the speed may not reduce the frequency of accidents, but it does reduce the number of fatalities, he said.

"One thing is certain," Brackett said. "If you drive 55 and wear a seat belt, you are less likely to die in a traffic accident."

Thank You

Thank you for all your prayers, food, calls, visits, flowers and support while I was in the hospital.

We appreciate your kindness.

May God Bless Each Of You!

Baby Shower Honors

Mrs. Stan Treider

Mrs. Stanton Ray (Dawn) Treider of Benton, Kentucky was honored with a baby shower and pool party Friday afternoon, June 20 in the back yard of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Treider of Lazbuddie.

Punch and cookies were served by Criss Cleavinger, Celie Parham and Joyce Johnson, the hostesses for the afternoon.

Mrs. Stan Treider was home visiting her mother and father-in-law for the week.

Family and friends gathered to honor the expected first grandchild of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Treider. Dawn was surprised by the many gifts, among them was a white wicker cradle that was made by blind people, given by Aunt Debbie, Uncle Brad and grandmother and grandfather. A red and white striped knit suit and saddle oxfords were given to the baby by his grandmother. They had been worn by Stan 28 years ago.

Mrs. Aubrey Duncan of Benton, Kentucky, Dawn's sister, was also here for the shower.

Stan is a native of the Lazbuddie community.

Now Is The Time

To Reduce Credit Charges

If you have large unpaid balances on your credit card accounts, now may be a good time to analyze your credit spending habits.

Why now? Family economics specialist Nancy Granovsky says that the tax reform proposals now in Congress call for eliminating the deduction for interest paid on credit cards, so it may be advisable to begin reducing interest expenses this year.

Another good reason for reducing credit expenses is the difference in interest rates for credit cards and for other forms of borrowing.

"Depending on the kind of charge card and where it was issued, consumers are paying annual percentage rates ranging from 12-13 percent to over 20 percent," she says. "Since home mortgage rates are in the 10 percent range, auto loans are somewhat less, and your savings dollars are earning no more than 6-8 percent, interest rates for credit cards seem high."

The Texas A&M University Agricultural Extension Service home economist says the quickest way to reduce finance charges is to simply stop using credit cards until you've paid off the balances fully. Or you may decide to continue using credit cards, but only if you pay the balance in full each month.

"Families often wind up overextending themselves--and paying excessive finance charges--because they don't pay enough attention to how they're using credit cards," observes Granovsky.

She suggests entering each credit purchase in a small notebook, similar to what you would do if writing a check. For example, if you use three credit cards regularly, keep a list with three columns. Each time you use a credit card, write down the amount and what is was for.

When the credit card bill comes, you'll be able to monitor your spending and make sure all the charges were legitimate ones.

You'll also be able to keep track of how much you're buying on credit, manage your cash flow more easily and therefore reduce your finance charges.

"Citizenship will be the focal point of the 1986 Texas 4-H Congress. Some 500 4-H members aged 15 to 19 from across Texas will be attending this year's congress in Austin, July 13-15, which will focus on learning about the legislative process and how to become involved in local citizenship activities. Congress headquarters will be the Marriott at the Capitol Hotel."

Theme of the 13th annual congress is "Citizenship-Past, Present, and Future". 4-H'ers attending from Bailey County include Jodie Wheeler of Goodland, and Scotty Spies of Muleshoe, points out Deanna Finck, county Extension agent in home economics. Deana will also be attending Texas congress as a chaperone.

Highlighting this year's congress will be tours of the State Capitol, LBJ Library, actual participation in the Texas legislature, and special "Public Policy" seminars.

Each congress delegate will actually be sworn in as a state senator or representative and will take part in developing and passing legislation. A special Texas Sesquicentennial Celebration the last evening will conclude the congress program.

Texas 4-H Congress is the highlight of the 4-H careers of many older youth. It is held in a different Texas city each year to allow the use of various unique educational aspects.

BONELESS: MAKING THE MOST OF IT

Advances in fresh pork merchandising will see more and more supermarkets increasingly offering the product boneless. Butterfly chops, sirloin cutlets, and wafer-thin steaks to name just three, as among the items not customarily found in meat departments that now are becoming commonplace. Bone-in cuts remain ever-popular, but the aim of many retailers is pork without bones.

LEMON PORK WALNUT

Stir-fried Lemon Pork Walnut uses one of the leanest of all pork cuts--the tenderloin. But there are few pork cuts, really, that won't work for stir-frying. Some supermarkets offer ready-cut pork strips, making dishes like this a real time saver.

1 lb. pork tenderloin, 2 tablespoons soy sauce, 1 teaspoon sugar, 1/4 tsp. five-spice powder, 1 lemon, 2 tablespoons honey, 1 tablespoon cornstarch, 3 tablespoons cooking oil, 1 cup walnut halves, 1 tsp. grated gingerroot and hot cooked rice.

Partially freeze pork; slice thinly into bite-size pieces. For marinade, combine soy sauce, sugar, and five-spice powder; pour over pork. Stir lightly to coat. Marinate in refrigerator 30 minutes.

Remove peel from lemon; cut into very thin strips. Measure 1/4 cup; set aside. Squeeze the lemon to measure 1/4 cup juice. Combine lemon peel, juice, honey, and cornstarch; set aside. Preheat wok or large skillet over high heat; add 1 tablespoon of the oil. Stir-fry walnuts 1 minute of til lightly toasted. Remove. Add remaining oil; stir-fry gingerroot 30 seconds. Add half of the pork; stir-fry remaining pork; return all pork to wok. Stir lemon juice mixture; add to pork mixture.

Mammography: Is it worthwhile?

Breast cancer remains one of the most significant health problems among American women, claiming more than 33,000 lives each year. It afflicts seven percent of the nation's female population and causes one out of every 10 cancer deaths. Stated another way, one out of every 11 women will at some point in their lives develop breast cancer. The good news is that detected early, breast cancer is highly curable.

Mammography is a low dose X-ray technique that was developed several years ago to aid in the early detection of breast cancer. Recent reports show that not only do mammograms detect 45 percent of the breast cancers, but many of these cancers were significantly smaller than when discovered by other methods - 77 percent had not yet spread to the lymph nodes.

Mammography has proven especially effective in detecting cancers in persons under the age of 50. The American Cancer Society recommends that women between the ages of 35 and 40 have a baseline mammogram, and a recheck every one to three years thereafter, based on the test results, changes, and family history. After the age of 50, many doctors advise women to have a yearly mammogram.

Not all breast lumps are cancerous, but they should be promptly investigated, especially if a woman has a family history of breast cancer. Fortunately, three out of every eight people who developed cancer today can be cured if the cancer is found early enough. Consult your physician today.

Calcium-Fortified Foods

Can't Replace Dairy Products

The food industry is now marketing a number of calcium-fortified foods to nutrition-conscious women who believe they may be at risk for developing osteoporosis.

Osteoporosis is a disease of brittle and porous bones that affects millions of middle-aged to elderly women, making them more prone to fractures.

Calcium-fortified foods currently on the market include some brands of diet carbonated soft drinks, a non-carbonated soft drink mixes, bread and flour. Most are prominently labeled and advertised as having added calcium.

"Eating calcium fortified products in a balanced diet that still includes dairy products, may be helpful," says nutritionist Dr. Alice Hunt, "especially since the Recommended Daily Allowance of 800 milligrams of calcium per day is thought by many medical expert to be too low."

However, she cautions that when dairy products are replaced with calcium fortified foods, other important nutrients from dairy products such as protein, vitamin D, riboflavin, B-6 and B-12 are lost.

It's especially important that teenagers and children eat dairy products both for the calcium and the other nutrients they provide, stresses the Texas A&M University Agricultural Extension Service specialist.

Some of the powdered drink mixes supply 100 percent of the RDA for calcium, but other fortified foods provide a smaller percentage. For example, 2 slices of bread made with calcium fortified flour supplies only 10 percent of the RDA for calcium.

Adults can be sure of getting sufficient calcium by drinking the equivalent of 2½ cups of milk each day. Children under 9 need 2-3 cups, 9-12 year olds should have 3 cups, and teenagers need 4 cups of milk a day.

A cup of yogurt, 1½ ounces of cheese, 1½ cups of ice cream or 2 cups of cottage cheese all supply the same amount of calcium as a cup of milk, notes Hunt.

"Consumers should also realize that eating calcium-fortified foods will not necessarily prevent osteoporosis, since general nutrition, hormone balance and exercise--in addition to calcium intake--have all been found to affect the condition," says the nutritionist.

While calcium rich dairy products are a necessary part of a balanced diet at any age, when it comes to preventing osteoporosis, Hunt says they may have their most critical effect early in life.

A study conducted recently at the University of Pittsburgh measured the density of certain

A study conducted recently at the University of Pittsburgh measured the density of certain bones in middle-aged women and found that those who drank milk with every meal up until the age of 35 had significantly more minerals in their bones than those who rarely drank it, reports Hunt.

The study emphasizes the fact that bones reach their lifetime peak for mineral density during early adulthood and then start to deteriorate. The peak mineral density is determined part by genetics. But the nutritionist says the amount of milk a person drinks during the first 20-30 years is believed to determine whether a person's bones attain optimum density.

"Whether or not a woman chooses to buy special calcium-fortified foods, probably the best thing she can do for herself and her children is to make sure they get plenty of milk and other dairy products," advises the specialist.

Former Resident Overcomes Tragedy To Win State Title

By Kirk Bohls
Austin American Statesman Staff

The eyes of Carol Horne and her 13-year-old son, Cory, were fixed on the every move of the long-limbed athlete grunting and stretching below them on the Penick-Allison Tennis Court last week.

Mother and son traded the hand-held tennis scorekeeper back and forth as they watched an exasperated Monte Horne fall victim to his own service breakdowns and the solid ground strokes of James Bond of Katy. His second loss in the Texas Junior Sectionals eliminated Horne from the week-long tournament.

Afterward, as he sat in the shade and guzzled a soft drink, a puddle of sweat stained the asphalt beneath his drenched shirt and shorts. But the dejection quickly dissipated.

"I wish I hadn't played so horribly," he said, having lost in straight sets in the boys 18 singles division. "But when you think about it, a little tennis match doesn't mean anything. A state tennis match, big deal. Salutatorian, big deal."

In the last year, perspective has been forced upon the 6-foot, 145-pound teenager with freckles, glasses, an almost spindly frame and a positive spirit that would shame Leo Buscaglia.

Oh, he took pleasure in having won the Class 3A state high school singles championship and in having been named salutatorian of the Marble Falls senior class within two days last month. But he doesn't attach the same significance to the 80-plus trophies at his home as he does to the memories he cherishes. No, the reward was in the trying. And the continuing to try.

It's been almost seven months since Monte Horne, 18, suffered a loss no tennis victory could replace. Last Nov. 23, as his and another family were returning from the Baylor-Texas football game in Austin, Monte lost his father, a 48-year-old Marble Falls school superintendent, in a tragic accident that also claimed the life of two persons in the other vehicle.

A pickup truck that was towing another truck on Texas 71 swerved out of control and into the lane of the van driven by Woody McCasland that was carrying the Horne family. Carol and Monte were asleep at the time.

Carol Horne had no idea what had happened until nearly two days later. No one wanted to tell Monte, but he finally figured it out when friends detailed the injuries of the van's passengers. "They left one out," Monte says somberly.

The impact of the head-on collision killed Harold Horne instantly and left both Monte and his mother near death. Monte broke both bones in his left arm, suffered a skull fracture and had to undergo brain surgery because a blood clot the size of a grapefruit formed after one of the arteries covering the brain tore.

"Unquestionably, this would have been fatal if he had not been operated on," recalls Dr. Michael Dorsen, the neurosurgeon who performed the two-hour operation on Monte. "When I saw him in the emergency room, he was dwindling. Without surgery, he would have been dead in 12 hours."

Monte's mother wasn't injured quite as badly, but she suffered severe internal injuries and underwent abdominal surgery. Both spent two days in intensive care at Brackenridge Hospital before being taken off the critical list. Young Cory suffered a broken leg and a smashed wrist.

Today, the Horne family shows few effects of the trauma, mainly because they consoled themselves in the death of Harold Horne by living.

"I think it's incredible the way they've handled it," says Bobby Etheredge, Marble Falls head football coach and athletic director. "I've never heard a word like they were looking for sympathy. A lot of people wipe themselves away in self-pity. They have never done that. And Monte took it with more inner strength than you could ask of a kid that age."

Although Cory and his mother could have been released from the hospital much sooner than Monte, the Hornes decided to leave together as a family. They returned to their home after a nine-day stay, their bodies having begun the long healing process. Their psyches had a head start.

Upon their return, Carol noticed first the kitchen spotlight that remained trained on the bar area where Harold Horne had, the night before the accident, read a passage from the Bible, as he did every day. It was those same, solid, religious underpinnings that bolstered the family during that time of crisis.

Carol and her two sons attended services at the Church of Christ the first Sunday after their dismissal from the hospital. That hardly was a surprise to minister Willis Jernigan. After all, he had spent the better part of an hour in discussions with Harold Horne before the superintendent had decided to make the move from Muleshoe to the Central Texas town just west of Austin.

Jernigan first got word of the tragedy when a parishioner called just after 6 p.m., minutes after 600 people had packed the church to capacity to hear five singing groups. Jernigan and his wife left immediately for Austin and stayed at Brackenridge until 2 a.m.

After the accident, Jernigan, his wife and other church members kept vigil on the Horne family in eight-hour shifts at the hospital. When the funeral was held for Harold Horne the day before Thanksgiving, more than 700 went to the pinkish-red brick building to pay their respects. The line stretched in the foyer and along the walls and even in the glassed-in nursery.

Grief held no grip on the Hornes, however. They quickly set about putting their lives back together. One day after his release from the hospital, Monte went back to school, his head almost totally shaved and revealing an ugly scar from ear to ear as a reminder of the tragedy. "I got sick of game shows," he says.

The next Monday, Monte has his first checkup with the neurosurgeon. Unaware that Monte had already been in school four days, Dorsen said Monte could slowly return to his studies.

Dorsen, mindful of the dangers of brain damage, had warned Carol Horne that she should prepare herself for some slippage in Monte's scholastic aptitude.

"Dr. Dorsen told us if Monte had been an A student," Carol Horne says, "he'd more than likely be a B student now."

Monte also heard the diagnosis and set his mind to proving medical statistics wrong. His lowest grade was a 92 in a calculus honors course. He also pulled a 97 in advanced English and a 93 in advanced biology II, another honors class.

"I heard every word," Monte says, still seething a bit. "That really chapped me. I felt like mailing him my report card."

Half a year after the accident, Monte had maintained a 95 average and ranked second in his class. He missed becoming valedictorian by less than 3/100ths of a point and won three scholarships—and a $1,250 grant from the Capital Area Tennis Association—to help pay his way to Baylor, where both his parents graduated. He plans to enter medicine someday.

Last fall Monte penned an English essay titled Philosophy of Life. The paper drew heavily from the life of Monte's father and so impressed Harold Horne that he made copies of it and distributed them to his friends. Monte incorporated parts of that into his speech at commencement May 31 in the Marble Falls gymnasium, an address that was not of the gee-it's-been-fun, now-for-the-cold-cruel-world genre.

"In all my years, that's the first time I ever saw a salutatorian receive a standing ovation," Jernigan says. "He challenged us to put the most into every day of our lives because we don't know when our lives may come to an end. It was a difficult speech to give, but he did so courageously."

Straight blond hair, though short, now covers his head. Although Monte was extremely conscious of his hair, or lack thereof, he was more concerned about its effect on others. Friends told him they considered buying him a T-shirt labeled "Bald is Beautiful" but worried that it might offend him.

They needn't have worried. About a month after the accident, he served as a groomsman in a cousin's wedding and can joke today, "I was the only bald groomsman there."

To satisfy their son's request on his 10th birthday, Harold and Carol Horne bought Monte a green Slazenger beginner's racket.

"He thanked us for it," Carol says, "and went and put it in the closet."

Later that summer, Monte enrolled in a tennis seminar, and Carol says, "It was like taking a duck to water." The game became his passion. The gangly, awkward boy practiced for hours at a time, ignoring his mother's request to stop for supper until she finally halted play if only long enough for nourishment.

As a fifth-grader, Monte signed up for a tennis tournament in Waco and won the division for seventh-graders. Back then, his game was all dinks and slices, but it drove his taller, more powerful opponents to distraction.

His game improved to the point that he qualified for the state meet in singles all four years of his high school career. As a 5-foot-1 freshman—the only freshman who reached state—he upset a senior in the first round. "I dinked everything back," he says. "I drove him insane."

But not until his final year did he win it all. Each of the three previous years, he lost to the eventual state champion.

When the Hornes moved to Marble Falls before Monte's freshman year, news traveled fast that the school was importing a state-ranked tennis player.

"We had heard rumors, and we were looking for something out of Sports Illustrated," says Don Barber, the high school principal. "Here comes a kid with legs the size of toothpicks, big glasses, long and lanky, and we thought, 'This is not the one that was state-ranked.' But when you see him on the court, you say, 'Yes, he is.' He's one of the few who has the proverbial heart of a champion."

Cory seems destined to follow in his older brother's footsteps. Built along similar lines even though he is only 13, Cory won singles at the seventh-grade district meet and took trophies at the other two tournaments at which he competed this spring. He already has more than 40 trophies of his own.

His mother, a slim, personable 47-year-old with salt-and-pepper hair, was an outstanding athlete herself, having played on Waco Midway's state championship basketball team in 1955. Now, she takes pride in the tennis abilities of her two sons and follows them intensely in between her work as a junior high counselor.

"They have helped me," she says softly. "When it happened, I thought, 'Why? Why before they're educated? I've since had my answer. If I didn't have this (her sons' tennis), I'd be sitting at home moaning.'"

Monte took lessons for five years from Billy Freer, the former pro who is the director of World of Tennis at the Hills of Lakeway. Freer, who helped refine Monte's booming serve, still can recall walking down the hall of Brackenridge Hospital when Monte yelled at him from his bed.

"I had an apple in my throat when I looked at the kid," Freer says. "I told him it may not seem likely, but we're going to win state this year. And he came back like a person possessed to succeed."

The year before, Freer sat with Monte's father during the state meet when Monte lost. Harold Horne had vowed his oldest son would become a champion next year. Harold, a large, heavyset but athletic man who had taken three Lorena basketball teams to the regional playoffs when he was coaching, had been Monte's biggest tennis fan and rarely missed a match.

"Pop wanted me to win it four times," Monte says. "He'd always get the best seat to watch. If he could have, he'd have sat in the middle of the court to watch. Dad fed me millions of buckets of ball. Millions."

Carol was troubled when doctors informed her Monte shouldn't begin much physical exercise for six months. Within two weeks of the accident, Monte was back on the courts working on his game.

The two foot-long metal rods implanted in his left arm prevented him from tossing the ball on his serve. So Monte took to bouncing the ball in the air with his racket to start the serve until the rods were removed at the end of January. That created a distraction for opponents almost as troublesome as the rest of Monte's game.

In his first tournament action after a three-month layoff, he won only one match of four at San Antonio but was encouraged. He gradually regained his strength and drank a gallon of milk a day to aid the calcification of his bones.

Finally, in mid-May, with his hair still not grown out completely, Monte crushed his opposition, sweeping to the 3A singles championship without losing a set in three matches. He dropped just six games and beat Kyle Walzel of Cameron 6-2, 6-2 in the final.

"You wonder why it happened," Monte says of the tragedy. "Here we are, a happy family driving down the road, and the next thing you know...Pop's in a better place now, so how can I be mad? I just hope he was tuning in while I was winning state."

Carol says her oldest son always has been a deep thinker, one who reflects on life beyond the baseline. And he always maintains his composure on the court, occasionally lapsing into a tantrum on the order of an "Oh, gosh." She is prouder of that than his considerable ability to hit an ace or a volley.

But she particularly was struck not long ago when Monte told her he was the same person he was before he lost his father. That, no one could take away from him.

Sudan Students Study Farm Electrification

Three Future Farmers of America from Sudan were among the 59 boys and five girls who recently completed a three-day workshop in farm electrification, sponsored by Southwestern Public Service Company (SPS).

Eddy Boyles, Michael Bartley and John Taylor completed the course and competed for an expense-paid trip to the 1986 FFA National Convention.

The workshop, in Amarillo June 9-11, attracted FFA members from Texas and New Mexico. This is the 24th year SPS has sponsored the event.

The students learned applications of electricity for farm use, such as wiring buildings, assembling and using electric controls, and construction of electric motors.

The featured instructor was Ken Pollard, executive vice president of the Texas Agri Business Electric Council. Area vocational agriculture instructors and SPS representatives also conducted educational sessions.

SLEEPWALKING AND NIGHT TERROR: FRIGHTENING FOR CHILD AND PARENT

During the past several months my four-year-old child has occasionally woken from his sleep screaming at the top of his lungs. Strangely, he doesn't remember anything about it in the morning. Is there anything I can do for him?

Your son is probably having what neurologists refer to as night terrors, one of a number of so-called parasomnias, that also include sleepwalking and nightmares but not insomnia or daytime sleepiness.

Night terror and sleepwalking tend to more a problem for the parents or family than for the person experiencing them. Frequently, as in the case of your son, he or she does not even know there is something wrong.

Night terror or sleep terror are different from nightmares in a number of important ways. Nightmares, or dream anxiety attacks, occur during REM (Rapid Eye Movement) sleep, waking the child or adult. The person can often recall the frightening, anxiety-filled dream, and remembers waking.

Night terror, on the other hand, is seen primarily in children and occurs during deeper stage 4, or slow-wave, sleep. There is absolutely no memory of the event even though the child appears to be extremely frightened and agitated. However, there is usually no evidence that night terror in children is associated with any psychological problems.

Sleepwalking is similar to night terrors in that it occurs during the deepest part of sleep, and is an abnormal type of arousal. Neurologists who specialize in sleep dysfunction report that during sleepwalking, only part of a person's brain is awake, while the rest—including the memory areas—is still asleep. The person has no recollection of having gotten out of bed.

As many as 15 percent of the population recalls having walked in their sleep at sometime in their lives, and some 4 million people regularly sleepwalk.

Parasomnias usually resolve themselves during childhood. However, in cases where they either persist or begin in adulthood, especially night terrors, there may be reason to suspect a psychological component. Night terrors and sleepwalking can be side effects of certain over-the-counter and prescription medications, especially sedatives. Your doctor will ask about the use of these medications and for other details to establish a diagnosis.

Because sleepwalking and night terrors most commonly afflict children, doctors are reluctant to treat them with medications. Instead, parents should take precautions to make the home and bedroom as safe as possible. For example, putting up gates at the top of staircases are important if your child is a sleepwalker. Doctors recommend that a sleepwalking child should be led back to bed without an attempt at communication. The same goes for dealing with night terrors; you should comfort the child, but there seems to be little need to wake him up.

Doctors in poorer areas may have higher incomes than those in wealthy areas

COLLEGE STATION—Doctors who set up practice in upper middle-class and wealthy communities may end up making less money than their counterparts in poorer areas, says a Texas A&M University medical sociologist who conducted a national survey of physicians and health care.

Associate Professor Fredric D. Wolinsky said higher financial rewards are enjoyed by physicians practicing in communities where residents are less educated and less likely to take advantage of preventive health care. While they tend to visit a doctor less frequently, their problems are usually more severe—and therefore more expensive to treat, Wolinsky said.

Better educated patients are usually healthier, on the other hand, resulting in more routine visits to doctors' offices for basic health maintenance, which isn't as costly.

The New Mexico Association of the Amateur Athletic Union held their girls' state basketball tournament recently in Clovis. This tournament is held annually for girls from 10 to 18 years of age and are divided into four divisions. The winning team of each division is sent to the national tournament. This year's state tournament was held in Clovis and the national tournaments will be held in Virginia and Connecticut.

Sudan had several girls participating in Clovis. They joined forces with other area girls from Muleshoe, Morton, Lazbuddie, Farwell, Texico, and Nazareth to play basketball. Those from Sudan were Krista Kirkland, Teena Newman, Misty Bartley, Tanya Fisher, Suzanne Reid and Nichole Maxfield. Kirkland and Newman participated in the 16 and under division and their team, the Wes-Tex Sandies, made it to the finals. They were eliminated in the final game by three points by a team from the Four Corners, N.M. area. This team was then invited to the national tournament in Connecticut to represent Texas, but due to the high financial cost, they had to decline.

Kirkland was named to the All-Star team.

Bartley, Fisher and Reid played in the 14 and under division age group on the Muleshoe Blazers. They were eliminated from the tournament in the second round of play after their second class. Bartley and Fisher were nominated for the All-Star Team, but failed to make the team.

Maxfield played in the 12 and under division age group on a basketball team called the Muleshoe Red Rage. After losing the first game, they came back to win the next game before being eliminated in a third game loss. She was nominated and named to the All-Star team. Also, Maxfield has been given an opportunity to play with the team that won this N.M. State AAU Tournament at the national tournament. The Wes-Tex Dusties took advantage of the rules that allows a team to add three new members and invited Nichole to play with them. This team will leave July 14 to travel to Virginia.

Each of the above girls participated through the Muleshoe Association.

We worked hard to keep electricity costs down . . . and, WE DID IT!

In the last three years, while national electric costs went up 12.7%, we held the line. Most SPS residential customers pay about the same for electricity as they did in 1983 . . . some even less.

At SPS, we will continue to do everything we can to keep the cost of electricity as low as possible.
