Mexican government halts peso exchanges

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government froze dollar accounts in Mexican banks Friday and suspended trading in foreign currency in a move to save its dwindling dollar reserves. It later allowed banks to resume dollar buying.

Bank sales of dollars and other foreign currencies are banned until further notice.

The freeze created confusion and fear in the Mexican business community, still reeling from the impact of an increase this month in gasoline and basic food prices and a devaluation of the peso last week.

"It cannot be denied that historically, this is the most difficult moment since the (1911-1917) Mexican Revolution. The situation is very grave," said a prominent banker here who asked not to be identified.

The Bank of Mexico, the country's federal reserve, suspended foreign currency trading all morning long. But it allowed banks to buy dollars and foreign currencies around noon after the peso hit 150 to the dollar in private trading on the streets.

A midday announcement said the banks could only buy dollars at 69.50 to the dollar, Thursday's closing free market rate, and must turn them over to the Bank of Mexico. It said the measure was aimed at helping tourists and Mexicans needing cash in pesos.

Banking sources said the Bank of Mexico will probably allow dollars to be sold again on Monday with additional regulations and restrictions. But Bank of Mexico spokesmen refused to confirm or deny this.

Noonan, Astley and Pearce, a major foreign exchange brokerage in New York City, was quoting 75 pesos to $1 for buyers and 85 for sellers of the Mexican currency.

The surprise Treasury Department announcement late Thursday said Mexican banks would honor dollar accounts only in terms of the nation's weakened peso. This, in effect, froze those accounts.

Hardest hit by the measure are foreign and national businesses, as well as private citizens who have been changing their pesos into dollars in recent months, afraid the currency would continue losing value.

Tourists entering Mexico have not been affected much. They sold their dollars privately in the morning, and at bank counters after the ban was lifted.

In border areas, Americans were flocking all week to Mexico to buy suddenly inexpensive food and consumer goods in such volume that some merchants complained to the Mexican Commerce Department they are running out of stock.

"You can't imagine the difference in prices now," said Eduardo Lever Garcia, director of the Tijuana Chamber of Commerce. Americans are "sacking the counters," he said.

The dollar closed at 69.50 pesos in trading Thursday, after touching 92 after the devaluation on Aug. 5. Many financial sources expected the peso to weaken further when trading resumes.

But a majority of businesses and private citizens inside the country kept their extra cash in dollar savings and checking accounts in Mexican banks. The announcement said these will be paid in pesos at the current free market rate. In other words, a person who wants to take dollars out of his account will be given the equivalent in pesos instead.

Such dollar accounts in Mexican banks totaled $12 billion at the end of July, about one-third more than at the beginning of the year.

Polish riot police quash country-wide protests

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Riot police battled 10,000 Solidarity protesters Friday at Communist Party offices in Gdansk, and dispersed thousands more at rallies in three other cities marking the ninth month of martial law.

The clashes in Gdansk, Warsaw, Krakow and Wroclaw shattered a two-month lull in anti-martial law fighting and showed that authorities plan to use force to quell "anti-state" activity and protests.

The Warsaw crowd was chased from the Victory Square Parade Plaza where plainclothes police snatched a wreath emblazoned with the words "To Workers Murdered by People's Power" as a group prayed nearby.

"Go back to Moscow," one Warsaw demonstrator yelled at pursuing police.

Witnesses said police fired water cannon, tear gas and flares to disperse crowds in Gdansk. Authorities also used water cannon on about 1,500 people in Warsaw and 2,000 in Krakow.

Western sources in Krakow said workers left the Nowa Huta steel mill and were joined by onlookers. Police began spraying water after workers entered the Nowa Huta church.

THFC again denies Parkview bid

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

An emergency meeting Friday at the state health agency in Austin closed the door on an application by Parkview Hospital to convert to a psychiatric facility.

After the Texas Health Facilities Commission approved a motion for a rehearing Aug. 6 on Parkview's certificate of need application, the decision "created a confusing legal situation," John Neel, THFC general counsel, said Friday.

"Parkview's attorneys asked the commission for this special meeting to reconsider all the applications for rehearing," he added.

But the three-member commission denied the request and went back to its original decision rendered July 2.

The previous decision, which the commission upheld Friday, gave approval to Midland Memorial Hospital's application for a $3.4 million, 50-bed chemical dependency facility and West Plains Hospital's application for a $4.1 million, 60-bed pyschiatric hospital, both to be built in Midland.

In addition, the THFC denied Parkview's motion for a rehearing on its application for a $500,000 conversion from a 60-bed acute care facility to a 60-bed psychiatric hospital.

"The present situation is intolerable," Dick Liley, Parkview Administrator, said. "We will get with our attorneys and evaluate the situation."

"The whole ordeal is a confusing situation," Neel said. "But final action has been taken. It is entirely over. Orders have been issued and further action, if any, would have to be in district court."

Apartment fire cause unknown

A fire tore through an apartment being vacated by two Midland men early Friday evening, heavily damaging the dwelling and causing heavy smoke damage in two adjoining apartments within the Trinity Place Apartments complex at 3600 N. Midland Dr. Cause of the blaze remains under investigation.

Midland firefighters responded to a 6:33 p.m. alarm to find the apartment, located on the second floor of a two-story, eight unit building, ablaze. Fire officials speculated that a thick, sheet rock fire wall that bisects the wood and brick structure from roof to ground apparently stopped the blaze from spreading to other apartments within the building.

Roommates Frank Trimm and Steve Wright, who were leaving apartment 8F for a larger apartment in another section of the complex, returned from hauling a load of furniture to find firemen battling the blaze. Trimm said nearly all the furniture, except for a television and stereo system, had been removed from the apartment living room. Fire damage was heavy to the living room and an adjoining patio.

Furniture, clothing and plants evacuated from adjoining apartments littered the freshly laid sod between buildings eight and nine of the complex.

Assistant Apartment Superintendent John White said flames were lapping at the apartment door when he kicked it in about 6:30 p.m. White said construction at the apartment complex is approximately 80 percent complete.

Committee approves what could be costly cut in deductions

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate-House committee agreed Friday to a hefty cut in the deduction for medical expenses and to elimination of the flat $150 write-off for health insurance premiums.

The action will mean higher taxes for many of the 18 million couples and individuals who claim deductions for insurance and other medical and dental expenses. The changes will cost those taxpayers $3.8 billion over the next three years.

The changes were approved as the panel settled in for a long night of work in an effort to complete a bill that would raise taxes and revenue collections by about $99 billion over the next three years.

Still awaiting final action were two other politically sensitive consumer tax increases — on cigarettes and telephone service. The Senate version of the bill would double cigarette taxes to 16 cents a pack for three years and set the 1 percent tax on telephone service at 2 percent next year, 3 percent in 1984 and 2 percent thereafter.

Earlier in the day, the committee approved higher taxes on upper-income investors, the oil industry and most corporations.

On medical expenses, the committee agreed to:

—Allow a deduction for medical expenses only in excess of 5 percent of adjusted gross income. Present law has a 3-percent threshhold; the Senate version had incorporated a 7 percent threshold.

—Wipe out the special deduction taken by 16 million couples and individuals for one half, up to $150, the cost of medical insurance. Present law permits that deduction even if no other medical expenses are claimed, the other half is lumped in with other medical charges and deducted if the total exceeds 3 percent of income. Starting in 1983, the full cost of medical insurance would be lumped with other expenses, which would be deducted only after they exceed 5 percent of income.

—Eliminate the requirement that drug costs exceed 1 percent of gross income before they can be counted as part of the 3-percent threshhold, starting in 1984. Thus, all prescription drugs and insulin could be deducted as part of the 5-percent threshhold. Deduction of non-prescription drugs would no longer be allowed.

Approval of the bill by the 15-member conference committee would send it to the House and Senate for final action next week. While it is rare for Congress to reject any compromise bill worked out by such a panel, all sides agree this one is in trouble.

President Reagan says the bill is necessary to cut the federal deficit and thereby reduce the federal government's demand for credit to lessen upward pressure on interest rates. He has spent a good part of the last two weeks trying to convince conservative allies in the House to go along with the bill.

The president insisted Friday that the bill is "80 percent tax reform" and ridiculed as "plain hogwash" characterizations of it as the biggest tax increase in history.

In an informal question and answer session at the White House, Reagan said he was trying to get the facts to the American people on the tax bill to cut through the "sound and fury" of the congressional debate.

The White House said later Friday that Reagan will appeal directly to Americans for their support in the tax fight with a televised address from the Oval Office at 8 p.m. next Monday.

"This tax bill is not, as it has so often been mislabeled, the biggest tax bill in history," Reagan told reporters. "New personal taxes are only 17 percent of that $99 billion figure. About 80 percent of the money raised by the tax bill will come from plugging loopholes and from better compliance."

Conservatives view Reagan's support for the tax increase as a rejection of his own philosophy of less government. They are demanding far bigger cuts in federal spending as the way to revitalize the economy.

As further evidence of that conservative discontent, Sen. Harry F. Byrd, I-Va., a member of the conference committee who voted for the bill when it passed the Senate in its original form, announced he will oppose the compromise because the spending cuts are not large enough.

Veteran auctioneer Rene' Bates will exercise his vocal cords while trying to move a variety of automobiles, bicycles, and assorted odds and ends during the city auction at Midland's municipal garage today.

Boats, cars, firetrucks — he's sold them to someone

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Rene' Bates has seen plenty during his 16 years behind the microphone, conducting municipal auctions across the United States.

He's worked in air conditioned comfort inside a Fort Lauderdale, Fla., civic center, where millionaires try to outbid drug smugglers for yachts valued at hundreds of thousands of dollars. He's sold more than $10 million worth of "drug boats" in two years there. When he returns, he'll get the opportunity to sell one particular boat for the third time.

Bates has watched the modern-day pirates purposely allow their cargo planes to be captured once their booty is unloaded, getting the authorities to foot the bill for a year's storage expenses before returning to repurchase the craft at the next sheriff's auction. He said bidders register before nearly every auction, except for the Fort Lauderdale affair. There, he said, few questions are asked of the many bidders named "Jones" or "Smith."

He's pushed fire trucks, adding machines, typewriters and automobiles in Michigan, Oklahoma and Louisiana.

And he's labored in stifling West Texas temperatures, struggling to up the ante on a set of automobile hub caps.

Today, Bates holds court at Midland's municipal garage on Carver and South streets, where the annual city auction commences at 10 a.m., following bidder registration and merchandise inspection from 8 to 10 a.m.

Bates, who's been running Midland city auctions for the last 10 to 12 years,

Connie Boyd, assistant manager of Trinity Place Apartments, talks with Ken Kirby, another resident at the complex, while her furniture is spread across a yard at the complex, 3600 N. Midland Drive. The fire broke out about 6:33 p.m. Friday and gutted the apartment next to Ms. Boyd's. Fire officials speculated that a fire wall had kept the blaze from spreading to other apartments on the second floor.

You name it — auctioneer's sold it to someone

predicted this year "is probably going to be one of the bumper years."

He said the large number of big-ticket items, including cars, vans, pickups and fire and garbage trucks, should garner a quick and tidy sum for the city's General Fund coffers. Bates predicted that this year's conglomeration of automobiles, air compressors, parts, adding machines, barrels, stereos, bicycles and televisions sets may disappear within four hours.

Last year's auction, which drew about 300 bidders, netted about $55,000 for the city.

A 16-year veteran of auctioneering, Bates and his four full-time auctioneers, who together constitute Rene' Bates Auctioneers, handle more than 100 city and county auctions annually, averaging two or three per week.

Monday in Fort Lauderdale, he helped the Broward County sheriff's department sell more than $300,000 worth of merchandise in less than an hour. He aided the city of Dallas in peddling approximately 160 vehicles Tuesday. Bates and his wife, Susan, who records the transactions at each auction, will travel to an Aug. 19 auction in New Orleans, La., following their stop in Midland.

By building a reputation for honesty and impartiality and by advertising upcoming auctions extensively, Bates said he has cultivated a legion of buyers that follows him on his rounds of the country.

Buyers from Oklahoma, Florida and Dallas may descend on Midland today, Bates said. He predicted, for example, that someone other than a Midlander will snatch up a 1958 Mack Pumper fire truck, "put a cutting torch to it," and sell it for parts. "It's worth a whole lot more in parts than it is as a whole," he said.

Midland Fire Chief Raymond Lewis drove the truck during its early years. It served Midland's Golf Course Road and Garfield Street substation since October 1958, before an accident forced the damaged vehicle out of service this year.

Bates said a friend suggested he try his voice at auctioneering after he found his "hands were tied" and his wallet virtually empty while teaching several years ago.

The friend told him auctioneering only required two things: "a smart aleck and a lot of nerve," of which he said Bates already had the former.

For the past 16 years, Bates has been developing the latter. "I'm still learning," he admitted. But, "it's been real good to me and hopefully I've been good to it."

Today's transactions will be conducted by cash or check, and city officials warn that all purchases are on an "as is, where is," basis. Bates said he feels a deep sense of responsiblity to be honest and impartial while working for the city, auctioning merchandise to taxpayers.

"I am proud to be able to have an honest reputation behind the microphone," he said. Gesturing to a 1978 Pontiac, brown and slightly rusted, Bates said: "I want to get all that car will bring, but I don't want to cheat the public."

"We've just got to make sure that the public understands that it's not buying a car with a 50,000 mile, 'Lee Iacocca' guarantee on it."

Bates chuckled, saying that should the car happen to crack in half a few blocks down the road, he and the city could do nothing other than congratulate the owner on a new pair of automobile "twins."

Area in store for sunny, hot weekend

Midlanders can gear up for a sunny, hot weekend before the summer winds down, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Today should be sunny with the mercury soaring to the upper 90s. Southerly winds should come breezing through at 10 to 15 mph.

The weatherman said it should be fair and warm tonight with the mercury stopping its downward slide in the lower 70s. Sunday should be sunny with a high near 100.

Friday's high of 100 was five degrees short of the record 105 set in 1946. The overnight low of 70 was easily warmer than the record low 60 set in 1967.

Precipitation for the month amounts to 0.66 of an inch and for the year to date it is 10.18 inches.

Midwest inundated with thunderstorms; Four die

By The Associated Press

Thunderstorms swamped the Midwest with more than 15 inches of rain in places, routing hundreds of people Friday in floodwater deep enough to cover house trailers. Four deaths were blamed on the storm.

The deluge in northwest Missouri, southeast Nebraska and northeast Kansas inundated mobile homes and stalled countless cars in cities such as Kansas City, Mo., where up to 15.5 inches of rain fell on the suburb of Raytown in the 24 hours ending at 7 a.m.

Three motorists drowned in Missouri, two when they were trapped in their cars and one who tried to swim away from her stalled car. A 60-year-old Missouri man died of a heart attack while working to clear a flooded basement.

"IT WAS LIKE a bathtub overflowing," said Lynn Deterimann, who fled with her husband from their home in the fashionable Country Club Plaza area of Kansas City about 3 a.m. as water poured through the windows and air conditioners of their apartment.

Missouri Gov. Christopher Bond declared Jackson, Platte, Cass and Clay counties, all around Kansas City, disaster areas Friday afternoon and toured flood-ravaged Independence on a bus.

Rain fell at the rate of 3 inches an hour in many areas, sending streams pouring out of their banks in the lower Missouri Valley.

In addition to the Raytown deluge, the weather service reported these Missouri rainfall amounts: Smithville, 9 inches; Independence, 8.81 inches; downtown Kansas City, 6.38 inches; St. Joseph, 6.61 inches, and Clinton, 4.15 inches.

In most areas Friday night, cleanup work began and the water was receding, but the weather service predicted a chance of more rain during the night.

In the West, heavy rains in the mountains west of Las Vegas on Thursday night sent floodwaters 3 feet deep through streets on the south side of the gambling mecca.

THE NATIONAL WEATHER Service in Nebraska anticipated the worst flooding since 1973 on the Big Nemaha River at Falls City, a community of 5,200 about 100 miles south of Omaha where 7.3 inches of rain was recorded.

"We're pretty well cut off," said Bill Shock, publisher of the Falls City Journal. "I don't know if anything can get in or out."

Hundreds of people were evacuated and several homes were swept from their foundations in Kansas City and surrounding towns where water was 8 to 12 feet deep over some roads.

More than 150 people took refuge in emergency shelters set up by the Salavation Army, the Red Cross and government agencies in the Kansas City area.

Steve Wurtz, a spokesman for the Red Cross in Kansas City, said preliminary estimates indicated about 200 homes had been damaged by the flood, but added, "My guess is that it will go much higher."

In Independence, Mo., about 40 families living in a trailer court along the Little Blue River fled as the rising water completly covered some of the mobile homes. Residents of another mobile home park on Rock Creek also were evacuated.

Rescue workers in boats helped evacuate dozens of residents of Smithville, about 20 miles north of Kansas City, where 12.6 inches of rain was measured. Among the flood refugees were residents of a housing complex for the elderly and poor.

In the suburb of Raytown, Mo., where the 15.5 inches of rain was recorded, a police spokesman said, "It's anybody's guess how many streets and homes are flooded."

In Lee's Summit, east of Kansas City, churches were opened as emergency shelters. Police said some basement units in an apartment complex were flooded to their ceilings.

POLICE SAID BARBARA Boutwell, 32, of Kansas City was drowned when she tried to drive through water up to 6 feet deep under a bridge on the northeast side of the city.

Independence police found the body of Carrie J. Williams, 23, in her car which had been swept into a gully about 3 a.m. Police Maj. Shannon Craven said the water had been as deep as 8 feet.

Patricia J. Cook, 21, of Independence, drowned after her car stalled in high water and she tried to swim to safety, said Independence police Detective Cecil Omstead. Her body was found Friday afternoon, he said.

Howard S. Harrison, 60, of Raytown died of a heart attack as he tried to clear the flooded basement of a neighbor, authorities said.

Numerous motorists were stranded throughout the Kansas City area, and several minor injuries were reported.

"People are drowning their cars out," said Jan Morgan, assistant police communications supervisor in Kansas City. "They're trying to go through deep intersections and are not making it."

Turner White, a spokesman for the Kansas City Power and Light Co., said the downpour triggered a rash of power outages in Kansas City and surrounding towns.

Mattox answers charges from opponent Meier

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

"I hope to take a high-road approach in this campaign," said Jim Mattox, Democratic candidate for state attorney general, and he then launched into a counter-attack of his opponent during a news conference Friday afternoon at Midland Regional Airport.

Mattox's opponent is Bill Meier of Euless, a former state representative who held a news conference a week ago in Midland. At that time, he claimed Mattox was soft on crime, carried a misconception of the attorney general's relationship with the Public Utilities Commission and supported legalization of marijuana and organized labor.

"I've always had support of the people in the working community," replied Mattox, 38, to the charge of falling in line with organized labor groups. "On my voting record, I'm basically middle of the road. My record shows 60 percent for organized labor and 55 percent for the chamber of commerce.

And a bill concerning easing restrictions on marijuana which Mattox voted for while a state legislator was sponsored by Meier, claimed the Democrat. "He criticized me for voting for a bill he happened to introduce. I'm going to try and keep him honest in this campaign," said Mattox, a U.S. representative who decided not to try for that seat again after redistricting put him into another district.

Before tackling the PUC question, Mattox said that Meier had been opposed to the creation of the utility agency because he "has been the candidate of big utility companies. He opposed the PUC's inception, and that was one reason we couldn't establish an office of consumer representation. When we established the PUC, we thought it would be kind of a tribunal, a forum. And we thought someone would be up there to represent the consumer."

Mattox mentioned briefly about setting up a program in the attorney general's office that would assist small communities in making their presentation before the PUC.

"Meier has been the water boy for big utility companies all these years," and Mattox indicated he wasn't excited over his opponent's idea to eliminate the PUC and take disputes over rate hike cases directly to the court. "The battle should be fought before it gets to the courthouse."

Jim Mattox

Meier had cited results of a poll among the bar association in Dallas which showed they preferred the Republican over Mattox. The Democrat charged that "most lawyers happen to be Republicans. The major downtown law firms (in Dallas) control the poll and most downtown law firms are controlled by large corporations. Those people don't have much impact on the voters," Mattox said.

And to Meier's charge that Mattox didn't have much trial experience, the candidate said, "Ask Meier how many trials he's had. I've over 200 jury trials to my credit."

Taking some more swings at his opponent, Mattox contended that Meier had obtained a charter for a savings and loan association which had been refused earlier and that he had tried to do away with money market funds in Texas.

Reading from newspaper clippings, Meier was described as "to the consumers what the wolf is in sheep's clothing," Mattox said. Continuing, Mattox said that he and Meier had entered the State Legislature the same year and both were selected by Texas Monthly magazine as among the 10 best legislators that year. But Meier, said Mattox, last year was picked by Texas Monthly as being among the 10 worst legislators with the reason being that "his cause was himself."

Looking at the overall campaign, Mattox described it as "rather shrill. Our polls show us to be very far ahead. Meier realizes he's very far behind."

Israel increases evacuation demands

By The Associated Press

Israel now wants 13,000 guerrillas — almost twice the number previously mentioned — to evacuate west Beirut and the Lebanese army to go in first, sources close to the talks said Friday. A new cease-fire held, meanwhile, and Israeli officials said they hoped the withdrawal will begin next week.

U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib refused to talk with reporters after resuming negotiations with Lebanese President Elias Sarkis and Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan, who suspended talks Thursday to protest Israeli air strikes that left at least 156 dead by police count.

Wazzan said Habib had gotten PLO and Lebanese responses to Israeli demands and that the answers would enable him to "conclude the negotiations and begin the implementation process."

Wazzan did not elaborate, but Palestine Liberation Organization spokesman Jamil Hilal said Israel now wants the Lebanese army to deploy in west Beirut at the first stage of the evacuation, rather than an advance contingent from a proposed force of U.S., French and Italian troops.

Israel objects to U.N. observers and French troops on grounds they are anti-Israeli and pro-PLO.

Several days ago Hilal listed 7,100 guerrillas for evacuation, but Saeb Salam, a key intermediary between Habib and PLO chief Yasser Arafat, said Israel now wants 13,000 guerrillas evacuated and has demanded their names.

There was no immediate comment from Israel, where military sources have said as many as 9,000 guerrillas and between 3,500 and 4,000 Syrians could be in west Beirut.

Previous estimates of guerrilla strength in west Beirut ranged from 6,000 to 8,000, but sources close to the PLO gave revised estimates Friday that put the figure at 13,000: 7,600 from PLO factions, 4,400 from the Palestine Liberation Army, and 1,000 foreign volunteers. In addition there are said to be 1,000 Syrian troops in west Beirut along with an undetermined number of leftist Lebanese militiamen.

Israeli Cabinet spokesman Dan Meridor said in Jerusalem that first a detailed list of PLO guerrillas must be handed to Habib and then the evacuation can start, "hopefully next week."

Another Israeli official, who asked not to be identified, added: "We have reason to believe the PLO will be leaving, maybe next week."

Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, architect of the invasion that began June 6, was asked in a CBS Morning News interview whether the withdrawal would begin early next week. He replied: "I'm not sure it's early, but I hope during the — maybe during the second part of next week."

As the cease-fire held, guerrillas on motorcycles roared through west Beirut, blaring orders through bullhorns for all fighters who left their positions to report to their superiors within 48 hours or face court martial.

Israeli forces in Beirut briefly opened the Galerie Semaan crossing point on the Green line dividing the city into Moslem west and Christian east, and hundreds of people waited to return to their homes in the west.

Others, however, cross to the east.

"I saw an old woman carrying one kilo (2.2 pounds) of cucumbers, some bread and water. They let her through but they threw away the food," a woman who identified herself only as Nadia told Associated Press correspondent Kate Dorian.

Roof damaged in fire

Fire heavily damaged the roof of a house at 1110 Ainslee St. Friday morning.

Midland firefighters found the roof and attic blazing when they arrived at the home of Frank Sauze around 10:19 a.m. In addition to heavy roof damage, the structure sustained light smoke damage throughout. A fire department report lists an electical short in a vent-a-hood as the probable cause of the blaze.

Warhol's 'female twin': Woman with problems

By MARLENE AIG

NEW YORK (AP) — When Jean Stein began her long research into the life of Edie Sedgwick she was "shocked" to discover what she hadn't known about the young woman she had considered "a younger sister."

"I was horrified when she died," Ms. Stein recalls. "I never realized her problems."

It is the magnitude of those problems and what caused them that Jean Stein has uncovered in her extraordinary book, "Edie: An American Biography."

"Someone said Edie was to the '60s what Zelda Fitzgerald was to the '20s," says Ms. Stein.

Born of New England aristocratic stock, Edie grew up on ranches in California, the seventh of eight children, to a couple advised to have none. Her parents were godlike and her father strong, sensual and maddeningly domineering.

EDIE ESCAPED first to Cambridge, then to New York, where she became Andy Warhol's "female twin," starring in his movies and whirling through the world, wearing freaky clothes, dancing through endless neon-lit nights and always being "poked" with uppers and downers to keep the world away.

Ms. Stein grew up in Beverly Hills, the daughter of Dr. Jules Stein, the eye doctor who abandoned medicine to found the Music Corporation of America. She came to know the Sedgwicks through Edie's oldest sister, Saucie, with whom she went to the Katharine Branson School in Marin County, Calif. She ultimately befriended Edie in New York.

After schooling in Switzerland, Ms. Stein went to Wellesley for two years, then "became a dropout before it was fashionable."

It was on to Paris, where Ms. Stein found her career.

It was on a skiing trip that Ms. Stein was introduced to the author William Faulkner and managed to do an exclusive interview with the elusive writer. It appeared in the "Paris Review." From then on, Jean Stein made interviewing her life, talking to people like Saul Steinberg, Alice Roosevelt Longworth and Charlie Parker's mother. Her first book, "American Journey: The Times of Robert Kennedy," was done in interview style, a style she used again to make her subjects — rather than herself — tell the story in "Edie."

Edie escaped first to Cambridge, then to New York, where she became Andy Warhol's "female twin," starring in his movies and whirling through the world, wearing freaky clothes, dancing through endless neon-lit nights and always being "poked" with uppers and downers to keep the world away.

"What I love doing is interviewing, getting to know a person, getting close. It's not easy for people to get close to each other."

SHE HAD felt close to Edie, even to the point of taking the young woman into her West Side Manhattan apartment after Edie had set fire to her own. It was then she became aware of — but didn't really know — what kind of "dangerous life" Edie was living.

"I'd come home and Edie would still be emaciated, but the refrigerator would be empty. I didn't know what was happening. My children adored her. And I never knew she had a drug problem."

Edie would eat ravenously, then throw up, and take drugs to keep ghastly thin. Ms. Stein says she was "so innocent" that she was incapable of figuring it out. "Today, I could've helped her," she says, almost wistfully. "I would have found her a psychiatrist who understood."

In doing the book with George Plimpton, Jean Stein embarked on a "strange journey" into the 1960s which was often personally painful.

"I never thought of her as representing the alienated world of the '60s. Edie was so successful at keeping all her friends in compartments. I had no idea what I was walking into. Had I known..."

Herself the mother of two "glorious" daughters, she says young people who have read the book have "been disturbed by what happened to Edie. They say they'll be more careful with their lives."

BUT FOR Ms. Stein, the book's success is double-edged.

"I felt maybe I had deserted her. So many people vanished when the going got rough," she says, remembering how many times Edie was in and out of mental institutions, drugged out, unable to cope. "I felt awful when she died. I never thought she would do something so horrible."

She says she spoke to Edie just a short while before the 28-year-old woman died, apparently from an overdose of drugs. "She was married. She had so many people behind her. She sounded like the Edie I had known. I just thought everything was finally going to be all right."

Heap of goo-goos don't amount to a hill of beans

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

LONDON (AP) — In going to and fro, up and down like Job on this terrestial ball, the suffering pilgrim sometimes encounters a foreign currency so worthless that even the country of origin will not accept it in payment for drinks on its national airline.

"Green dollars or British sterling," the hostess will insist, enunciating a government policy that also requires her to give you change in her otherwise unacceptable national currency.

In most such cases, of course, the airline has only one jet plane in its entire fleet, and there is a duty-free shop on arrival in the nation's capital to gobble up more hard cash from abroad.

Veteran globetrotters have a nickname for this species of useless specie and paper money. They are known as "goo-goos."

The term is believed to have originated with British travelers to Germany in the days of the Weimar Republic just before World War II when the mark was so battered by inflation it literally wasn't worth the paper it was printed on. As John Toland relates in his biography of Hitler, people needed bushel baskets of marks to pay their rent, and someone hurrying to a bank would find his paycheck was worth half as much if the trolley car was delayed as much as 15 minutes.

IN THE MONTHS before Saigon fell, the Vietnamese piaster sank to the level of a goo-goo. One could join the Saigon yacht club, initiation fees and annual dues payable at the official piaster exchange rate, for the price of a carton of American cigarettes on the black market. A drink at the bar, however, might be the price of last year's yacht.

The extinct Biafran pound probably was a goo-goo in the final hours of that tragic breakaway republic, although among collectors it probably now is as valuable as a genuine Confederate dollar.

Genuine goo-goos rarely make that sort of a comeback. Upon leaving the country, it is usually impossible to change them at the airport into any other currency, even the equally worthless goo-goo of a neighboring country.

One country (which shall be nameless in case, God forbid, I should ever have to return there) even had a cardboard box in the airport departure lounge for passengers to deposit their leftover goo-goos. It was located just below the No Smoking sign to discourage departing visitors from lighting up cigarettes with excess million goo-goo notes, in case the Diamond Jim Brady urge should overtake them in a fit of pique.

As a guide to travelers in far-off lands with fragile monetary systems I have over the years collated the "Immutable Laws of Goo-Goonomics" and offer them here, free of charge, as a public service.

— A GOO-GOO saved is a mistake.

— If you can keep your goo-goos when all about you are shedding theirs, you've obviously never been here before.

— Bad goo-goos do not drive out good goo-goos, since there is no such thing as a good goo-goo. Gresham was ripped off here too.

— Since division by zero is not allowed, there is no international exchange rate for the goo-goo.

— There is no black market in goo-goos. Nor any legal rate either.

— BEING WORTHLESS, the goo-goo is safe from government devaluation.

— A torn goo-goo is less than the sum of its parts.

— If at first you don't succeed, try more goo-goos.

— It takes a heap of goo-goos to do just about anything.

— Show me your goo-goos and I'll tell you what you owe.

— A goo-goo in time is worthless.

— Goo-goos must be declared upon leaving the country if the paper shredder is not working.

— GOO-GOOS tossed in the Trevi Fountain add up to water pollution.

— Counterfeit goo-goos carry a picture of the president two coups ago.

— A loaf of bread, a jug of wine and a fistful of goo-goos sounds about right, not counting the tip.

Oh yes, if a stranger on the street beckons you up a dark alley and offers to change your goo-goos back into dollars, take the French postcards. He's either a cop or crazy. Remember the goo-goo motto: Don't leave for home with them.

Houston citizens to vote on city charter changes

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston voters cast ballots Saturday on proposed city charter amendments and on propositions that would legalize bingo for charity groups in some precincts.

Six proposed changes in the city charter are included on the ballot, but most of the attention has focused on a plan by Mayor Kathy Whitmire that would revamp the city's civil service laws.

The civil service law change would enable the city to have up to two percent of the city work force exempt from civil service protection.

Government denies rumors

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government on Friday denied rumors of disturbances, unusual troop movements and attacks on political leaders following the imposition of tough economic measures.

Spokesmen for the presidential palace and the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party said they were aware of rumors circulating in Texas and elsewhere about disturbances and purported attacks against president-elect Miguel de La Madrid Hurtado and the Los Pinos presidential residence.

"We have heard the rumors and they are false," said Sergio Gonzalez, a press spokesman for the ruling party.

Presidential press spokesman Francisco Galindo Ochoa also denied the rumors, although he confirmed that defense officials were moving troops around the country in preparation for the nation's Sept. 16 celebration of independence.

There were reports from the border city of Nuevo Laredo, 740 miles north of Mexico City near Laredo, Texas, that troops had been sent to an unknown location by the Aztec Eagle express train Thursday.

A newspaper in Monterrey, 596 miles north of the capital, reported that regular seats on the Nuevo Laredo-Mexico City train had been canceled and many soldiers were in the area.

Railroad officials in Mexico City said they had no information on the report.

A leftist political party organized a peaceful march of 8,000 to 10,000 people Thursday.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

YOU ARE ENCOURAGED TO ATTEND MIDLAND'S COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM PUBLIC HEARING NO. 2

All citizens and interested persons are urged to attend the public hearing in the Council Chamber, City Hall, beginning at 5:00 p.m. on August 24, 1982. The hearing will discuss Midland's projected uses of $949,000 the City will receive from the 1982-83 Community Development Block Grant. The proposed statement of community development objectives and projected use of funds follows.

Proposed Statement of Community Development Objectives

General Strategy

The general direction in which the City of Midland is headed has been outlined in Objectives for Midland - The Eighties. These goals are designed on a community-wide basis with special emphasis on the targeted areas of south and east Midland. The objectives include improvement of services, upgrading of parks and recreational facilities, and aiding and encouraging decent housing all in an effort to revitalize faltering neighborhoods.

These neighborhoods can be upgraded through rigid code enforcement, rehabilitation of substandard homes, paving, drainage, demolition, and clearance activities. Efforts will be used by the City to support other projects by volunteer groups in the community that will help eliminate the deteriorating conditions. Some neighborhoods in Census Tracts 8 and 15 need extensive revitalization efforts, some neighborhoods in Tracts 1, 7, and 14 need assistance on a moderate scale, while the neighborhoods in Tracts 11, 12, and 13 need help only on a house-by-house basis.

Housing Needs

The housing needs of Midland have increased as the population of the City has increased. New construction has occured in the City, but the average cost has risen beyond $65,000 for a single family dwelling. This has in turn pushed many low-to-moderate income families out of the housing market. Public assistance for the elderly is available but the facility, Hillcrest Manor, has only 100 residential units and a waiting list of 200. The need for public financing of lower-priced housing in Midland is significant. Through improvements to streets and drainage facilities, possible development of community centers and the other needs already expressed, the neighborhoods in south and east Midland can once again become viable neighborhoods.

Projected Use of Funds

|---|---|
| Public Facilities and Improvements | |
| 1. Parks, Playgrounds and Other Recreational Facilities | $150,000 |
| 2. Neighborhood Facilities | 47,000 |
| 3. Street Improvements | 146,000 |
| 4. Flood and Drainage Facilities | 146,000 |
| Clearance Activities | 50,000 |
| Interim Assistance (Beautify Midland) | 10,000 |
| Rehabilitation Activities | |
| 1. Rehabilitation of Private Properties | 250,000 |
| 2. Code Enforcement | 100,000 |
| General Administration | 50,000 |
| TOTAL | $949,000 |

The above is a summary version of the City of Midland's proposed statement of Community Development Objectives. A complete statement may be obtained from City Hall, 300 N. Loraine, Room 305, or by calling 683-4781, ext. 447.

Border-area bankers trying to deal with peso move

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Mexico's announcement that it was pulling the peso off the foreign exchange market created a stir Friday among border area bankers, who altered some normal banking practices to protect themselves.

"We have begun to operate just as though we knew what we were doing," quipped Don Shuffstall, an international banking officer at El Paso's State National Bank. "We've set rates based on speculation, gesticulation and pure guesswork."

The temporary suspension of trading of the peso left bankers without a rate of exchange, normally set by speculation on international exchange markets.

The Mexican Finance Ministry and central bank also announced Thursday night that withdrawals from dollar accounts in banks south of the border would be paid only in pesos, at a rate of 69.5 pesos for each dollar.

That means a person withdrawing pesos and then converting the money back into American currency would lose because pesos are selling on the U.S. side for more than 80 per dollar, if at all.

Shuffstall said his bank set a rate for buying pesos at 82 for one dollar and selling for 62 per dollar. Other banks along the border suspended trading in pesos and set no exchange rates.

"This just kind of freezes everything," said Conrad Hein, vice president of the International Bank of Commerce in Laredo. "This is all caused by the temporary suspension of trading, but the Mexicans are doing what they think they have to do to keep their currency alive."

A spokesman for Brownsville National Bank said simply, "There is no exchange rate for pesos today."

Shuffstall said he did not think there were many Americans who had money tied up in high-interest Mexican savings accounts "because people have been so frightened lately."

But he said Americans who do have dollars in Mexican banks probably would just wait and hope that their U.S. currency becomes available to them again.

"This puts depositors of dollars in Mexican banks in a hell of a bind whether they're Mexicans or Americans," he said.

Wayne McClintock, marketing director of Las Americas Industrial Park in Chihuahua City, Mexico, said exchange rates for pesos are likely to soar once they are reinstated because "people have lost a lot of money."

He predicted the rate could reach 124 pesos per dollar. The rate has been hovering between 70 and 100 pesos per dollar since the Mexican government allowed its currency to float on the market last week. Before that devaluation, the average exchange rate was 45 or 47 to one dollar.

Shuffstall said the people who would be hurt worst by the freeze are Mexicans who need to buy goods with dollars and businessmen who trade across the border.

"For the Mexican businessman who has to buy goods over here, it's a real problem," he said. "He's probably going to need twice as many pesos to do it."

Shuffstall and Hein said banks were being cautious with checks drawn on dollar accounts in Mexican banks because they could lose money in changing the pesos to dollars.

"We've told our customers that we will take checks drawn on Mexican accounts, but we cannot give you credit until it is collected in Mexico," Shuffstall said.

He said Americans looking for bargains in Mexico probably could find them because U.S. currency will be in demand.

"People are going to need dollars and if the banks won't sell them, somebody will," he said. "It's almost certain there's going to be a black market because the dollar is good and the peso is terrible."

Bargain-hunting Americans heading for Tijuana

TIJUANA, Mexico (AP) — Bargain-seeking Americans, rushing to take advantage of Mexico's latest peso devaluation, are causing temporary food shortages in Tijuana.

Meat supplies have been dramatically depleted as bargain hunters have poured across the border from nearby San Diego.

"I'm a bargain hunter and you just can't believe the bargains here," said Julie Ross, a San Diego housewife, as she and her husband unloaded two pushcarts into their car Friday at a Calimax food market.

"We got $160 worth for $80, including 10 pounds of New York-cut steaks for $12. My husband took the day off just to help me shop," she said.

Other Americans queued up with carts laden with tequila, gallon jugs of pure vanilla, 8-cent-a-pound sugar and 22-pound sacks of flour that sold for $2.50.

"They're buying everything," said store manager Gilberto Fimbres. "We went crazy at first. We didn't have enough cashiers or butchers to keep up."

Before February's initial devaluation, the peso was worth just under 4 cents. After last week's latest devaluation, the peso skidded to 1.4 cents, or a drop of 62 percent for the year.

Conversely, Mexicans who shop in the U.S. have been hit with a 157 percent price hike as a result of the devaluation, which plunged the peso from 27 to the dollar to as low as 80 to 90 to the dollar. The dollar closed at 69.50 pesos Thursday, before trading was suspended by the Mexican government.

Tijuana, with a population estimated at 1 million, is the largest Mexican city on the U.S.-Mexican border.

"Last weekend was like the Fourth of July when all the tourists come to Mexico," said Timbres.

Concerned with the run on meat, Tijuana's chamber of commerce has begun a survey of Baja California ranchers to see how long the meat supply can last, said Eduardo Lever, chamber director.

In addition, Lever said local authorities are reporting to Mexico's secretary of commerce on which products are running low. Merchants have been assured that deliveries will be expedited, he said.

"American shoppers have changed their habits," said Timbres. "They used to buy only a couple items — liquor, vanilla and coffee. Now they buy everything that's produced in Mexico — sugar, milk, produce, cookies, anything."

"It's well worth the extra gasoline to come," said Mrs. Ross, who purchased 30 pounds of meat, three bottles each of tequila and Kahlua (a coffee liqueur), three gallons of milk, two gallons of orange juice and 44 pounds of flour.

Border inspectors have detected a "significant increase" in foodstuffs crossing into the U.S.

Currency devaluation often move of last resort

By The Associated Press

Currency devaluation is usually a last resort for a nation in economic trouble. By making the national currency cheaper in relation to other currencies, devaluation often helps exporters but usually hurts consumers by raising prices on imports.

A nation might devalue its currency to try to improve its trade balance, by making its exports cheaper and imports more expensive, and thus less attractive to domestic consumers.

Drastic inflation can also force devaluation, as one currency loses value faster than the currency of nations with lower rates of inflation.

If a nation is suffering from a high rate of inflation, citizens may try to protect their savings by converting them into more stable currencies, such as U.S. dollars or Swiss francs. This can create a glut of the local currency offered for sale and a shortage of desirable currencies — a supply and demand situation which also drives down the value of the local money.

A central bank can defend the national currency by manipulating the supply and demand — selling foreign currencies in its reserves and buying its own currency — but central banks cannot keep that up indefinitely.

So a government may decide to devalue the currency by a certain amount at once, even though "it's a difficult political step to take," says James T. McGroarty, assistant vice president of Credit Suisse's foreign exchange operations in New York.

The political damage comes from the effect on some prices at home, which go up. Many merchants in Mexico, for example, price their goods on a dollar-related basis. So when Mexico devalued its peso, the merchants immediately raised their prices in pesos.

Texas auto insurance industry wants higher rates

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A Texas automobile insurance industry spokesman says the $278 million difference between the rate hike it wants and the increase proposed by the State Board of Insurance staff is a result of "an honest difference of opinion."

The two proposals were laid out earlier this week as the three-member board began its review of auto insurance rates. The staff says a 17.3 percent increase is justified. That increase would mean $306 million more in premiums from Texas motorists.

Any new rates approved by the board would be effective Nov. 1.

The Texas Automobile Insurance Service Office says a 33.2 percent increase is needed. The TAISO proposal would add $584 million to the $1.75 billion in premiums paid by Texans this year.

David Irons, TAISO lawyer, told reporters that insurance companies now must cover the increasing costs of car repairs and medical care.

"The simple fact is we have far more accidents and more cost per accident," he said, adding that there is "an honest difference of opinion" on how to calculate the increase needed.

No action was taken by the board on Thursday. Chairman Bill Daves recessed the hearing until Aug. 31.

Later, Daves told reporters that the staff recommendation might be reduced by an unspecified amount because of new data expected in two weeks.

Industry officials said the number of accidents in Texas rose by 6.2 percent during 1981. The number of injuries rose by 10.8 percent, according to TAISO.

Vintners try to rebuild wine's image

MARSALA, Sicily (AP) — Makers of the celebrated Marsala wine are trying to clean up the golden grape's image, diminished by mass production of lesser grades, cheap imitations and chemical additives.

The producers of the original Marsala have banded together and launched a publicity campaign billing "His Majesty, the Marsala" as the ideal companion for Gorgonzola and other cheeses.

They also are pressing Parliament in Rome to enact a bill introduced last year that would restrict bottling of Marsala to the Marsala area and forbid chemical additives.

But it has been uphill battle because it is cheaper and more profitable to produce a lesser grade of Marsala in bulk for blending with weaker wines or to add flavorings to Marsala.

Genuine Marsala takes six or seven years to produce and costs about $8 a bottle, while bulk wine is ready for shipment after only a few years and costs as little as $1.20 a gallon.

Problems for Marsala began early this century when industries producing what they labeled as "special Marsala" sprouted throughout northern Italy and abroad, using additives, chemicals and coloring.

In the 1930s and 1940s local producers started selling egg, cream, coffee, banana, strawberry and chocolate Marsala, syrupy drinks often sold at one sixth the price of genuine Marsala.

As a result of competition from the cheaper versions, and having suffered heavy bombing damage during World War II, Marsala producers on Sicily have gradually dwindled from the original 130 wineries to 65 today.

"There were just fewer and fewer of us who had the patience to put together a wine for brandy or aperitif in the traditional way," lamented Tony Rallo, whose family has been making wine for 122 years.

"The key to real Marsala are the 'lieviti' or yeasts, obtained through barrel aging and evaporation, which are added in various degrees of strength, color density and flavor to the new grape harvest," he said.

Few vinters have that much patience and now very little of the wine that leaves this port that has proclaimed itself "wine export capital of the world" is really Marsala.

Thanks to a postwar planting spree spurred by government subsidies and favorable weather, Sicily exports 286 million gallons yearly — more than half of Italy's wine. More than half of that is channeled by 106 companies through Marsala, which got its name from the Arabic "Mars-al-Allah," meaning port of God.

Only 5.2 million to 7.8 million gallons of genuine Marsala are exported.

Teaching is all in the family

PORTSMOUTH, Va. (AP) — When James G. Norcom Jr. walked out of his industrial-arts classroom at the end of the school term, he shut the door on not only a 33-year teaching career but also a 98-year-old family tradition that has spanned three generations.

For nearly a century, descendants of Portsmouth's premier black educator, Israel Charles Norcom, have taught public school here, logging a total of 163 years with the system.

Since 1884, there has been a Norcom on the school personnel roster every year.

But things will be different this fall.

The retirement of Israel's grandson, James Jr., 60, marks the end of a continuous succession of Portsmouth educators that includes not only the grandfather but also James Jr.'s step-grandmother, father, mother, two sisters and a nephew.

ALTHOUGH THERE are 10 great-grandchildren in Israel Charles Norcom's extended family, none plans to teach in Portsmouth. That knowledge weighed heavily on James Jr. as he contemplated retirement.

"One time I thought I might try to hold out and make it 100 years," he said. "But I don't know how much longer I would stand up physically. I would rather come out while I'm ahead."

The school, a stately 30-year-old structure on Turnpike Road, is well known around Tidewater. The formerly all-black facility was the scene of numerous student boycotts in the late 1960s and early 1970s when integration plans were unveiled.

Norcom is now a special four-year, career-oriented school offering both vocational and academic courses.

Little is known about the school's namesake, Israel Charles Norcom. He died in 1916, two years before his son, James was married. So James Jr. and his brothers and sisters never knew their grandfather personally.

They heard about him, though.

"PEOPLE ALWAYS kept us up," James Jr. said. "I heard about him once or twice a week outside the family."

And there was plenty said about him within the home. His picture hung in a prominent spot in the old family residence on North Green Street, the home Israel lived in until his death.

"We felt like we knew him," said Rachel Norcom Smith, a granddaughter who taught in the Portsmouth public schools for 24 years. "But they say you really missed something if you didn't know him personally."

One of the few Portsmouth residents who did know him personally is 86-year-old Ora C. Churchill, a 50-year veteran of the teaching profession who got her start at Portsmouth's Chestnut Street School, which was headed by I.C. Norcom.

"You couldn't forget a person who had influenced your life," Miss Churchill said. "He tried to make black girls and boys self-respecting. He really inspired us. He wanted us to have everything we could get. He made scholars out of us."

By all counts, I.C. Norcom was himself a scholar. Born in Edenton, N.C., he attended Yale prepratory school in Hopkins, Conn. He then studied at Yale and Harvard before accepting a teaching post in Bedford County, Va.

AFTER TWO years, he came to Portsmouth, where he served as a teacher and principal at the Chestnut Street School, forerunner of Norcom High School, from 1883 until his death in 1916.

The three children of James Sr. who became teachers began their careers at Norcom High School. At one point, they were there at the same time. The older daughter, Eloise, even taught the younger son, Henry, the only child who did not enter the teaching profession.

Program attempts to identify potential child abusers

EDITOR'S NOTE: An innovative program in Hawaii is aimed at preventing child abuse. The aim is to identify potential abusers in the pre-natal stage and treat the mother-to-be — with compassion and emotional support.

By RON STATON

HONOLULU (AP) — Shirley, who had been beaten by her husband, often yelled at and occasionally hit her 3-year-old daughter. She was three months pregnant with her boyfriend's baby. She was frustrated, depressed and angry.

At the Kapiolani-Children's Medical Center pre-natal clinic here, Shirley (not her real name) was identified as a high risk or potential child abuser, and assigned to the hospital's Family Stress Center.

There, she was assisted by Outreach workers in the center's child abuse prevention program.

The idea of the program is to link women like Shirley with a compassionate stranger — such as an Outreach worker — before delivery, or at least before the baby is taken home.

THE MOTHER who falls into the high-risk category may be a single parent whose husband or boyfriend abandoned her and has no one to provide emotional support. She may have drug or alcohol problems, financial problems, suffer from severe depression, or have been abused as a child herself, says Gail Breakey, director of the center.

About 15-20 percent of Hawaii's expectant mothers fall into the high-risk group, she says.

They can be identified by expressions of guilt and anger, signs of depression, and, in mothers who have delivered, by the way they relate to their baby.

Occasionally, a new mother will show only perfunctory interest in the child. She will avoid prolonged eye contact and quickly hand the baby back to a nurse.

It is this mother that child abuse experts want to identify, Ms. Breakey says.

"This lack of mother-child interaction at birth, what we call bonding, is the single most important indicator of potential child abuse," Ms. Breakey says.

"WE WANT to work with these mothers and help them care for their child and see the baby in a more positive light.

"With early intervention we can provide support up front before there is a crisis," she says of the Family Support Service Program, the first federal demonstration program of its kind.

Three cities — Dayton, Ohio; Phoenix, Ariz., and Tulsa, Okla. — have similar programs. Hawaii has the only statewide program, Ms. Breakey says.

"We try to build a support system by providing emotional support as well as directing the mothers to agencies which can provide material support if needed," she says.

"The Outreach worker becomes a friend, someone the mother can talk to, rather than serving as a therapist or heavy-duty counselor," she says.

"Once abuse has occurred, there is physical and emotional damage to the child. There also is damage to the parents, feelings of guilt and inadequacy and fear they will do it again.

"THAT'S WHY we want to focus on prevention," she says.

At the stress center, Shirley met Jim Alley, an Outreach worker who was studying for a master's degree in psychology.

"She was having a lot of problems and was very depressed, but together we built a feeling of trust so that she could talk about her problems and her feelings," Alley says.

Her feeling of guilt when the unwanted baby died at birth aggravated the problem.

Shirley and Alley worked together to set up goals aimed at improving her situation. Seven months later, Shirley called Alley and reported that she had left her abusive husband, gotten a good-paying job and established a good relationship with her daughter, enrolling her in a pre-school.

"There were times when I felt I couldn't make it, that I couldn't go on, and I even thought of suicide," Shirley says.

"BUT JIM kept giving me encouragement. He believed in me. He stayed with me through the whole thing. He never let me down."

In many cases, Outreach workers also go into the homes and work with abusive or potentially-abusive fathers, Ms. Breakey says. But the emphasis is on the mother as the prime caretaker of the child.

Ms. Breakey formerly worked with problem youngsters in an economically depressed area of Oahu.

"I was impressed that the problems with these kids didn't materialize overnight," she says. "Many had been neglected or abused at an early age."

There is a close relationship between child abuse and crime, she says, citing a recent study that showed 97 percent of Hawaii State Prison inmates had been abused or neglected as children.

"The state is spending $23 million to run its corrections system, but no one is doing anything to deal with the cause of the problem," she says.

"IN THE LONG run, we can save money that is being spent on the criminal justice system, foster care and similar programs," she says.

Possible Watts victim identified

HOUSTON (AP) — A body found west of Houston by police who were following directions from Coral Eugene Watts, who has admitted killing several women, has been identified as a 14-year-old girl who died of strangulation.

Using dental records, medical pathologists identified the badly decomposed body as that of Emily Elizabeth LaQua, a Seattle, Wash., resident who was visiting her father in Brookshire.

Experts said they could not determine the date of Miss LaQua's death, but she has been reported missing since March 20.

Her purse, containing money and some jewelry, including a locket with pictures, was found near the body, officials said.

THE METHOD OF death, according to an official who asked not to be named, was "consistent" with that used to kill other young women whom Watts has admitted killing.

Police found the body stuffed up a culvert in Brookshire, a Waller County town about 50 miles west of Houston. Officers recovered the body Wednesday after receiving directions from Watts, 28, a Houston bus mechanic who has admitted killing at least 11 women and is suspected in the deaths of at least twice that many.

Officers began driving Watts around Houston about 11 a.m. Friday, hoping to gain information about other slayings, homicide Lt. Guy Mason said.

"It's possible that being in a certain area could jog his memory," Mason said. But detectives said in a brief news conference Friday afternoon that they had gained little new information during the drive.

Mason said police also wanted to give Watts a break from news media attention.

"He doesn't like the cameras," Mason said. "We got him away to give him some rest."

Earlier questioning by detectives, assistant district attorneys and his own lawyers Friday did not produce additional evidence, Mason said. Watts is also a suspect in assaults on women or slayings in other Texas cities and in Michigan and Canada.

WATTS IS TALKING about the Houston-area killings under a plea bargain in which he agreed to help police solve the crimes in exchange for a sentence of 60 years on a burglary charge. Watts was arrested May 23 after forcing his way into an apartment, tying up two women and attempting to drown one of them in a bathtub. He has pleaded guilty to a burglary charge in that incident and will be sentenced next week.

Police detective Ken Williamson said law enforcement agencies from many states have called the Houston homicide bureau to inquire if Watts is linked with unsolved murders elsewhere.

"We've received about 40 calls from all over the country," said Williamson. "They (the callers) are investigating homicide cases with similar MOs (methods of operation) and are calling to ask us to check for them."

However, he said, there has been "no indication that he's involved in anything" except in Texas, Michigan and Canada.

Officers from Michigan, investigating murders in that state, came to Houston to talk to Watts, but left when he refused to meet with them. Watts' lawyers have said he will talk with police only if he is granted immunity from prosecution. Prosecutor William Delhey of Washtenaw County, Mich. said he is not ready to make such an agreement.

However, assistant prosecuting attorney Patrick Foley in Detroit, Mich. said he might grant immunity if Watts "convinces us" he is responsible for the 1979 stabbing death of Detroit News reporter Jeanne Clynes.

The Michigan authorities are investigating killings in that state by the so-called "Sunday morning slasher," and Watts was identified as a suspect before he left Michigan for Houston early last year.

Watts on Thursday admitted he killed Edith Ann Ledet, 34, a medical student who was stabbed to death while jogging before dawn on March 27. He also told authorities he attempted to kill another woman 10 minutes later, but the woman escaped.

GALVESTON COUNTY DISTRICT Attorney James Hury said Watts also claimed he attacked a woman on Jan. 30, a crime for which another man has been tried and convicted.

The victim, Patty Johnson, now of Wisconsin Rapids, Wis., survived. Howard Mosley was convicted of the assault last month and given a life sentence as a habitual criminal because of previous felony convictions.

Judge reprimands gun-wielding boys

ORANGE, Texas (AP) — Eleven-year-old twin boys who broke into a neighbor's house and pointed unloaded BB gun pistols at two younger children have been lectured by a judge and told to stay in their home or yard until September.

The twins, called the "BB Gun Bandits" because of their choice of weapons, may be tried later, however, on a charge of burglarizing a car.

Orange County juvenile probation officer Frank McCoy described the twins as "cute little kids who don't look like criminals" and said they were "very scared" in a closed appearance Thursday before Orange County Judge Michael Shuff.

Shuff, said McCoy, gave the twins a "stern talking-to" and ordered them to stay in their yard after school and in their house after 6 p.m.

Mary Tims, 28, who filed a complaint against the twins, said they went into her home while she was at a neighbor's house and held BB pistols on two of her children, John, 2, and Joshua, 6.

Man may have been jailed for crime committed by Watts

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — District Attorney James Hury says there's a chance he helped send a man to prison for an assault that may have been committed by Coral Eugene Watts, who has admitted killing 11 women in Houston and Galveston and is suspected in twice that many deaths.

Watts, 28, confessed to attacking a woman in Galveston in a crime that bears striking similarities to one for which Howard Ware Mosley is serving a life prison sentence, Hury said.

Mosley, 25, was convicted of a Jan. 30 knife attack on Patty Johnson of Wisconsin Rapids, Wis., who was working as a cocktail waitress in this island city at the time.

She was grabbed from behind and her throat was slashed, but her husband heard her screams in time to chase away the attacker, and she survived and testified against Mosley at his trial last month.

Mosley, who is 10 inches taller than Watts but bears a facial resemblance, had two prior felony convictions and received a life sentence under the state's habitual criminal act.

Hury said Watts seemed familiar with the attack on Mrs. Johnson, but was vague and ambiguous regarding some important details.

"He gave us a scenario which causes us to be most concerned," Hury said. Although he conceded he may have tried the wrong man, he said he was not ready yet to set Mosley free.

"I am not now in a position to release the man who was convicted by a jury beyond a reasonable doubt," Hury said. "But it does cause me to do some further research. I expect we'll have some more information early next week."

He said if he concludes he has convicted the wrong man, "I'll release him immediately."

Mosley was given a lie detector test Thursday, but his defense attorney, Robert Hoskins, said the results were inconclusive.

"He was nervous. We will not take another polygraph, but we will submit to truth serum or hypnosis," Hoskins said. He predicted his client would be free by Tuesday.

Three facing murder charges in deputy's death

UVALDE, Texas (AP) — Three men were returned here Friday to face charges of capital murder in the beating death of a sheriff's deputy after their arrest by Border Patrol agents near Eagle Pass, about 60 miles to the southwest.

Justice of the Peace George Dawson ordered Jose Luis Rodriguez, 32, Alberto Rodriguez, 26, and Gerardo Rodriguez, 18, all of Eagle Pass, held without bond in the Uvalde County Jail.

They joined Armando Espinosa, 30, who was arrested Monday night, shortly after deputy Clyde Hobbs, 34, was found with severe head injuries next to his patrol car three miles south of Uvalde on U.S. 83.

When Hobbs died Tuesday morning in a San Antonio hospital, County Judge Jerry White said he upgraded the charge against Espinosa from attempted capital murder to capital murder.

Border Patrol agents Rodolfo Muniz and Lee Barderhuff arrested the trio about 7:30 a.m. as they walked along railroad tracks about five miles north of Eagle Pass on Thompson Road.

"They live in the south part of Eagle Pass, but this was north of town. It looked like they might have been on their way to Eagle Pass. It looked like they just came out of the brush," said Maverick County chief deputy Tom Herrera.

News of the arrest was relayed to Uvalde County officers, and deputy Aubrey Smith left Uvalde at once. He was back in Uvalde with the prisoners by 10 a.m.

The capture ended a three-day search throughout Southwest Texas by law enforcement officers.

Man deep in debt tries bank robbery, kills self

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — A former Rotary Club president who shot himself in the head after trying to rob the bank he once managed was deeply in debt for a $100,000 home, according to a business partner who unwittingly foiled the holdup attempt.

"I feel like he couldn't face the embarrassment," said Wayne Temples, who walked into the bank Thursday while his friend and business partner, Davis Nelson Stevens, was trying to rob it.

"He didn't want to put his wife and children through that," Temple said.

Stevens, 39, who left his bank job to launch a new business, let himself in the Northside branch of the Conway National Bank early Thursday morning, using his own key. Stevens, who wore a mask, herded five tellers at gunpoint into a vault, police said.

Apparently startled when Temples arrived, Stevens hid in a closet, authorities said. Several minutes later, with police at the closet door, Stevens fired his .38-caliber pistol aimed at his head.

At first, no one recognized the bandit as he lay bleeding on the bank floor, although some of his former golf partners and business associates were among those who looked on.

Then police pulled Stevens' driver's license from his pocket.

"I told the police 'It doesn't look like Davis,'" Temples said. "Some of the women in the office became hysterical and said 'No, it isn't him.'"

Temples said it was coincidence that he was in the bank.

Stevens was taken to New Hanover County Memorial Hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

Stevens' death shocked this beach community where he had worked in the bank business for the last five years and had been president of the North Myrtle Beach Rotary Club. He worked on the Cancer Crusade and helped organize foreign student exchange programs, associates said. He supported charity efforts, played golf, hunted and fished.

Friends and family described the bespectacled businessman as gregarious, good-hearted and generous. He was married and the father of two girls.

Stevens' twin sister, Doris Hedgepath, said her brother spent his whole life helping people, but no one was there to help him when he needed it.

"We don't feel this is as important as all the good and wonderful things he did during his life. One of the great sadnesses is that no one was able to talk to him about his troubles.

"We don't understand and will never understand," she said.

Stevens was born and raised in the area. He attended St. Andrews College in North Carolina but quit to enter the banking business. He moved to Conway National Bank in 1977, serving as manager at the Northside branch and later security chief for the bank.

Two months ago, he resigned from the bank and without explanation quit attending meetings of the Rotary Club.

Mrs. Hedgepath said her brother felt he needed a change in his life, another challenge. He was attempting to move into the booming condominium industry in the resort area by setting up a maintenance and repair service.

"He was very excited about his new business," she said.

Temples, 33, was Stevens' business partner in the venture.

He said Stevens was despondent after quitting the bank job.

"Up until the last 30 days or so, he was steady as a rock," said Temples. "But when he first left the bank he didn't have a clear focus on where he was going, on what he was going to do."

Temples said the maintenance business was off to a good start but was not yet very profitable, and Stevens had built a $100,000 home in an exclusive neighborhood. A mortgage on the house fell through just as the house was being completed, he said.

"He had to borrow from one person to pay another," he said. "I loaned him some money and there were times when he was unable to pay me. I know he had other financial problems.

"I just want to let the public know he had a lot of friends and a lot of pride. He didn't want this to embarrass them."

CRMWD revenues right on target

BIG SPRING — Revenues are right on target and expenses are substantially under budget estimates for the first seven months of the year, according to the Colorado River Municipal Water District's operational report.

Receipts of $6,265,001 were $127,000 over the seven-month estimates, but operational costs of $3,699,197 were $329,000 under the budgeted amount. One reason is that this does not reflect the peak summer months of pumping. Nevertheless, the district had a half-million dollar power bill for July. The $499,935 for electric energy brought to $2,511,426 the total for this service in 1982. The latter figure is about $200,000 more than for the same period last year when 400 million gallons less water was pumped.

July revenues included $869,004 from cities, $37,641 from rural users, $132,036 from oil companies, $13,521 from recreational facilities and $2,021 from miscellaneous sources. Administrative and general expense was $29,208 and recreational expense was $14,452. The $3,699,197 difference between revenue and expense goes to debt service.

Resources were based on sale of 10,526,873,715 gallons of water through July. Of this, 75.77 percent came from Lakes J.B. Thomas and E.V. Spence, and another 14.75 percent from the Ward County well field. In July, the Ward field supplied 23.58 percent due to summer peak demands.

Boy finally gets to eat solid food

DETROIT (AP) — Surgery has restored the ability to eat for an 11-year-old boy whose esophagus was scarred by lye, leaving him unable to consume solid foods for nearly nine years.

George Austria of the Philippine Islands was released Thursday from Detroit Children's Hospital following surgery to fashion a new esophagus from a portion of his stomach. The series of operations began in the spring and ended several weeks ago.

"I like all foods, even vegetables," Austria said as he tackled a bowl of vanilla ice cream on the eve of his departure from the hospital.

Austria has been unable to eat solid foods or drink liquids since his father mistakenly gave him the lye, thinking it was cough medicine.

NEW YORK (AP) — She may be a member of a presidential advisory board, but Clare Boothe Luce still says what she thinks about her boss, President Reagan.

Clare Luce

In a wide-ranging interview to be published in September's GEO Magazine, the 79-year-old former journalist and politician, who now serves on the president's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, says Reagan lacks a "solvent foreign policy."

"I believe a president's first commitment at all times is to a solvent defense and foreign policy. On the other hand, no defense can be solvent unless the economy of the nation is itself solvent," the widow of Time Magazine publisher Henry R. Luce said.

Asked if Reagan has the necessary vision for his job, she said: "I think he is beginning to understand the hard way. You know, the trouble is that just by the time he knows, he'll be up for re-election. That's the trouble. There is no school for presidents."

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Herpes may have a positive side to it, says evangelist Billy Graham. He thinks it may make people fear God.

"We've been reading a great deal about a new plague sweeping America," Graham told an overflow crowd Thursday at the Boise State University Pavilion. "In less than two years, half of the American population will be affected. Is it the judgment of God on our country because of our sex sins? Or, is it a warning?" he asked.

"Herpes simplex may be used as a judgment, but it may also be used to bring us to God," he said.

Graham said sex is not a sin according to the Bible.

"It is given so married men and women can express their unity," he said. "Used properly, it is a marvelous thing."

Herpes simplex is an infectious condition of the mouth, lips and face that is caused by a virus. A similar virus produces venereal herpes and can be transmitted through sexual contact.

Miss McClendon, 72, said she is getting a lot of response to Reagan's July 28 televised news conference when she pressed him for comment on a Justice Department report concerning discrimination against women in federal jobs.

Reagan said he had not seen it. Miss McClendon argued that he had.

Reprinted social security cards to be on high quality paper

WASHINGTON (AP) — To guard against forgeries, the Reagan administration is planning to issue new Social Security cards on high quality paper, it was disclosed Friday.

The plans were revealed during a Senate debate on a proposed overhaul of the nation's immigration laws. Fraudulent Social Security cards are used commonly by illegal aliens as a means of identification and to obtain other legal documents.

Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., had proposed an amendment to require the government to use high-grade paper for the cards to make them more difficult to counterfeit.

Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., said the Social Security Administration told him it will adopt the idea next year and Moynihan withdrew the amendment.

Social Security officials were not immediately available for comment.

"The cost of the change will be more than offset by thwarting those who would defraud their own government," he said.

Chinese intellectuals suffer discrimination

By VICTORIA GRAHAM

PEKING (AP) — China, which once paid highest tribute to scholars but savagely persecuted them during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, still reports teachers are being beaten and intellectuals suffer widespread job and wage discrimination.

The Chinese government now says the nation's intellectuals are a precious, indispensable resource for modernization of society and has launched a campaign to improve their housing and job placement, raise their wages and treat them with respect.

"If the problems of intellectuals are not solved," the Communist Party newspaper People's Daily said recently, "we could be making a historic mistake."

After years of anti-intellectual rampages, however, diehard leftists still consider it political heresy to pay an intellectual more than a ditch digger, give him a job promotion or admit him to the Communist Party.

China has about 5.7 million middle-aged intellectuals — those between 36 and 55 with at least a secondary technical school education. Although they are considered the backbone of modernization, press reports say they have an abnormally high death rate because of poor housing, working conditions and medical care.

LAST MONTH three women teachers at a primary school near Peking were harassed, insulted and severely beaten by a man and his grown daughter. Both were sentenced to prison and ordered to pay the teachers' hospitalization costs.

The women were attacked on their way to a movie and their houses were showered with rocks at night.

The exact reason for the attack was not disclosed. Such cases, however, are said to stem from disciplining pupils, property disputes between schools and communes and pervasive anti-intellectualism.

"These incidents," said the Guangming daily newspaper for intellectuals, "have not only affected teachers' work in schools and dampened their enthusiasm, but also have trampled the Chinese people's traditional virtue of respecting teachers."

In ancient China, men studied for years to take the imperial civil service examinations and scholarship was considered a path to success.

In Communist China, however, intellectuals have suffered for years at the hands of ultra-leftists and ordered what to think, write and paint.

DURING THE anti-rightist campaign of 1957 they were persecuted and banished to the countryside and their children were shunned.

It happened again on a greater scale during Chairman Mao Tse-tung's Cultural Revolution when only workers, peasants and soldiers were considered ideologically pure. Many intellectuals were tortured to death or driven to commit suicide.

Intellectuals long have been championed, however, by China's current top leader, Deng Xiaoping, who was denounced during the Cultural Revolution for supporting them. He opposed sending scientists to the countryside, saying at one time: "The Academy of Sciences is an academy of sciences and not an academy of cabbage cultivation."

Today the situation has improved greatly and intellectuals now are officially considered part of the working class. The party has been ordered to recruit more intellectuals and they have been honored as "labor heroes" — a title once reserved exclusively for manual laborers.

The draft of a new Chinese constitution for the first time would protect the rights of intellectuals, stipulating: "The state in a planned way trains intellectuals to serve socialism, increasing their numbers and giving full play to their role in socialist modernization."

Intellectuals complain, however, that many people still shun them and don't want to make friends. Some report their own children don't want to take advanced studies beause they vividly see the pain it brought their parents.

FURTHERMORE, intellectuals are poorly paid and rarely receive bonuses given to workers because it is more difficult to measure the fruits of mental labor than with the production of cabbages.

Housing for many intellectuals is so cramped that they must wait until their children go to sleep before they can do their own studies at the lone table in their apartment.

Press reports say that intellectuals have been criticized for seeking advanced degrees or shunted to jobs where they cannot use their education.

Qualified intellectuals frequently and deliberately are not promoted to leading jobs in factories, where many top officials don't even have a high school education.

Wang Daming, vice chairman of the Peking Economic Commission, said recently: "The low cultural, technical and vocational levels of leading cadres is the chief cause of mismanagement and inefficiency of many enterprises."

Rome officials raise traffic fines

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON

ROME (AP) — Rome's government is trying to rein in the notoriously undisciplined drivers who often make the Eternal City the Infernal City.

Acting under a court ruling, the Communist-led municipal government hiked fines as much as sixfold for such traffic offenses as speeding, excessive horn-blowing, running red lights and driving without a license.

Milan, Naples and Florence also put into effect the "maximulte," as the press calls the large fines, after the Council of State, an administrative court, gave municipalities the authority to go ahead with the new traffic discipline.

The new penalties, which took effect in Rome Sunday, resulted in at least one attack on a policeman and touched off charges that the debt-plagued government was trying to raise money from easy targets.

The commander of traffic police felt compelled to appeal for cooperation and respect for traffic rules.

"Only a sense of responsibility and self-discipline by everyone can help those whose job it is to limit accidents and preserve human life," said Luciano Massarotti.

The city cracked down during the August vacation season when hundreds of thousands of Romans were at the seashore or in the mountains. But on the first day, fines collected totaled 30 million lire, or about $21,000, a 9 percent increase in the previous daily average.

Police said most drivers paid up on the spot rather than go to court. But one beat up the officer who called in a tow truck because his car was blocking a street. A tow now sets the driver back 77,000 lire ($55).

Rome's 2,900 traffic policemen are concentrating on the historic center of the city, where frightened tourists frequently huddle against buildings as modern-day charioteers speed down the narrow streets ignoring no-entry or one-way signs.

Under the new law, drivers can be fined up to 50,000 lire ($35) for running a red light, 200,000 lire ($140) for failing to wear eyeglasses if they are required and 3 million lire ($2,100) for driving without insurance.

Il Tempo, a conservative newspaper that often criticizes the traffic laws, said the new fines appeared to be an effort to raise money. Charging that the city has refused to build any new parking lots as part of a campaign to limit traffic, it said the new fine for illegal parking is nothing more than a parking tax. The fine ranges from 12,000 to 50,000 lire ($8 to $35).

Studies consider resumption of draft

By L. EDGAR PRINA
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — It may seem strange to talk about resumption of the draft when the armed services are attracting all the volunteers they need.

And it may seem stranger still when one considers that nearly 675,000 American youths are currently flouting or ignoring the law by failing even to register their names with Selective Service.

But talk there is and serious talk, at that. Two prestigious organizations — the Brookings Institution and the Atlantic Council of the United States — have published new studies on the military manpower/service issue.

While the titles, "Blacks and the Military" and "Toward a Consensus on Military Service," give no clues in this regard, each may be considered an indictment of the All Volunteer Force so stoutly defended by the last four presidents of the United States.

The Reagan administration continues to give strong support to the AVF and it cites recruitment statistics to show that the military services have more than met their accession quotas over the last two years while also improving quality.

THUS, IN fiscal years 1980 and 1981, each of the four services achieved at least 100 percent of its quota. And for the first six months of fiscal 1982, they are at a combined 103 percent, with the Army at 106. (Military accessions totaled 389,900 in fiscal 1980 and 367,300 in fiscal 1981. For the first half of fiscal 1982, the total was 163,400.)

Lawrence J. Korb, assistant secretary of defense for manpower, who says President Reagan shares his "philosophical disposition against the governmental intrusion into private lives that conscription would involve," also points to the higher percentages of recruits in the top three mental categories (average and above) and of those with high school diplomas.

Although the Reagan administration is opposed to the draft, it is serious about registration for it. Reagan, of course, was against registration as a presidential candidate, but after he moved into the White House he was persuaded to change his mind.

In explaining the switch last Jan. 7, he strongly emphasized his opposition to the draft.

"Make no mistake: The continuation of peacetime registration does not foreshadow a return to the draft," he asserted.

Clearly, it was not a popular thing for the president to reverse himself on registration. But to halt the process, which was ordered by President Carter in reaction to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, might have sent signals of weakness to America's friends and potential enemies.

REAGAN'S DECISION came after the Soviet-backed crackdown against the workers movement in Poland by Communist authorities in Warsaw and in the wake of West European suggestions the United States was good at anti-Soviet rhetoric, but was not concerned enough to draft its young men.

According to the Selective Service System headquarters, 674,000 youths who reached their 18th birthday after Carter's decision in February, 1980, have failed to register.

A spokesman pointed out that 93 percent of all those required to register have registered — a total of 8,365,000, as of July 18 — and that the trend has been positive.

Selective Service has undertaken a variety of public awareness programs to get more persons signed up: postal card reminders, posters in high schools, information handouts to newspapers, radio and television spot announcements, some in Spanish, and just this past Friday (the 13th, as it turned out), it mailed warning letters to 33,000 backsliders about their non-registration.

Meanwhile, the names of more than 160 registration-resisters have been turned over to the Department of Justice for action. Indictments have been returned against five of them; 159 cases remain in the pipeline. The maximum penalty under the law for failure to register is five years in jail and a $10,000 fine.

THE FIRST trial of a resister will begin Tuesday (Aug. 17) in the U.S. District Court in Roanoke, Va. One resister under indictment in Connecticut has been jailed by a judge for failure to sign a bond.

The indictments are believed likely to persuade many young men reluctant to register or simply forgetful or ignorant of the requirement that Uncle Sam means business. But possible jail terms and fines are not the only weapons being brought into play by the government.

Sen. Sam I. Hayakawa, R-Calif., and Rep. Gerald B. Solomon, R-N.Y., offered amendments to the fiscal 1983 defense authorization bill that would bar any federal educational aid (loans, grants, fellowships and the like) to any person who fails to register under the law. The Senate and House accepted the amendments and are expected to approve them in a final action next week, when the conference compromise bill comes up for votes.

There is another move in Congress to make guilty non-registrants ineligible for Federal job training programs.

The Atlantic Council study, incidentally, recommended that Congress and the president "enact legislation to reduce the severity of the penalties for noncompliance in order to make them more commensurate with the gravity of the offense and more enforceable".

But the study, which was directed by Lloyd H. Elliott, president of George Washington University, and Gen. Andrew J. Goodpaster, former superintendent at West Point and supreme allied commander in Europe, drew most attention for these two recommendations:

— IF ALL reasonable programs fail to satisfy minimum standards for either quantity or quality of personnel within a reasonable period of time for the Army's active and reserve forces, "peacetime conscription should be resumed."

— To deal with a situation in which there is a crisis short of general war, "the president should be given limited authority now to induct a limited number of men and women (say 100,000) into the armed forces" for up to six months, unless Congress approves an extension.

In making these recommendations, the study took into account what it called "the dramatic comeback in the quality" of Army recruits in 1981 and 1982. But it made clear it was skeptical that this improvement could be sustained. After noting that American military active duty strength entering the 1980s was at its lowest ebb since the 1950s, it said:

"Some increase in force size may become necessary (and some has been programmed) in coming years, and it will have to be obtained from a diminishing pool (as indicated by demographic studies).

"Economic recovery and a consequent drop in unemployment (now at 9.8 percent overall and more than 45 percent for black youth) could further reduce the numbers of qualified young persons who enlist. There is thus a significant probability that the requirements of peace and security will compel this country to resume the draft, perhaps by the mid-1980s."

The Atlantic Council study pointed out "specific deficiencies in the All Volunteer Force" that need to be corrected.

IT SAID THE Army relies heavily on the strength and readiness of the organized units in the Selected Reserve and on the pre-trained personnel in the Individual Ready Reserve (IRR).

"But in the IRR and both components of the Selected Reserve — the National Guard and the Army Rserve — manning levels have been substantially short of their wartime requirements and equipment and training have been neglected," it asserted.

"A significant number of the (council's) working group members believe that the only adequate remedy would be to increase the authorized strength of the active Army force by some 200,000 — and several of them believe that this would require an immediate return to peacetime conscription."

The council study also found that the ground elements of the AVF "have not drawn anywhere near proportionally from white middle class America." It said this was particularly true in the Army, where minorities make up 41 percent of the enlisted force, including 33 percent black (as compared to something over 11 percent black in the population).

"Perfect representativeness is neither necessary nor possible, but gross unrepresentativeness has both philosophical and practical objections," the study said. "Under present conditions, blacks would take disproportionally high casualties in the early days of hostilities. This is a matter of legitimate concern."

The Brookings study struck a similar note, albeit a louder and longer one.

IT POINTED out that the 410,000 blacks under arms today represent about 20 percent of all American military personnel and are heavily concentrated in the ground combat forces, with one of every three Army GIs and one of every five enlisted Marines being black.

According to Pentagon records, 51.8 percent of the Army's 197th Infantry Brigade enlisted personnel are blacks and 33.8 percent of its 101st Airborne Division. The First Marine Division, headquartered at Camp Pendleton, Calif., is 25 percent black while the Third Division on Okinawa is approximately 30 percent black.

In a foreword to the study by Martin Binkin and Mark J. Eitelberg, the president of Brookings, Bruce K. Maclaury, said many Americans approve the growth of black participation in military service, since it oftens affords young blacks educational, social and financial opportunities that constitute a bridge to a better life not otherwise available to them.

This is, in fact, why many black leaders oppose a return to the draft — because it would limit the number of blacks to their approximate percentage of the population.

Other Americans, Maclaury pointed out, see these opportunities for the blacks outweighed by the disproportionate burden they would bear for defense.

"From this perspective, the likelihood that blacks would suffer a third — and perhaps half — of the combat fatalities in the initial stages of conflict is considered immoral, unethical, or otherwise contrary to the precepts of democratic institutions," he said.

SOME BLACK leaders, indeed, virtually accused the government of genocide during the Vietnam War because black casualties exceeded their percentage of the population.

The study's authors also raised the question of military effectiveness.

"The deployment of troops that share a racial or ethnic bond with an adversary poses difficulties," they said. "Suspicion that black troops might be unwilling to carry out their assignments in certain domestic situations — a suggestion that is reprehensible to many members of the black community — cannot be dismissed out of hand."

The authors leave the reader to draw the inference that the only way the armed forces are likely to represent a cross-section of American society and get the quality needed for the advanced technology weapons is through conscription.

"Blacks will constitute an increasing proportion of the smaller supply pool and, by our economic reckoning, will find military service even more inviting than in the past," they wrote.

"At the same time, the services will be under pressure from Congress and from the demands imposed by advancing technology to seek more youths with higher technical and mechanical aptitudes, who by present measuring sticks are more likely to be white."

They added that as long as the AVF exists, it will be difficult to attract white middle-class youths, even with large pay increasess and more liberal benefits.

Peacetime conscription would make the task easier, they concluded, but only if qualitative standards were raised enough to restrict the number of volunteers or if the size of the armed forces were increased.

But no matter how persuasive on the matter of conscription either study may be, there is little doubt that, politically, the draft's time has not yet come again and, barring a war, may not for a number of years.

Signs of the equal rights philosophy pop up everywhere these days, but it can be a two-edged sword. Ladies may now find themselves being aced out of a spot at the hairdresser's by a mere male, but Robert Rocchi of San Jose, Calif., isn't all that mere. From his seat under a dryer at the Beauty Bank in Campbell, Calif., Rocchi, 45, a printer, said he likes to get a permanent during hot weather so he doesn't have to fool with his hair.

Handy work saves finger

HAGERSTOWN, Md. (AP) — Some handy work by a local rescue service unstuck Paul Pottorf Jr.'s finger from his car's gas tank, but the rescuers first had to resort to a box containing "Hand Tools."

Pottorf said he was at a gas station Wednesday, trying to free a spring mechanism protecting his gas tank from leaded fuel when the device popped shut on his right index finger.

"Nobody's probably ever had that done before," Pottorf said. "It has to be a little bit embarrassing."

He sent a woman for help.

"Someone came in here saying that a man's got his finger caught in his gas tank," an employee at the service station said. "I didn't think it was possible."

It took five rescuers from the Community Rescue Service 40 minutes and two hacksaw blades to free Pottorf's finger.

A can of grease didn't help. Neither did a wire hanger. Even removing the entire gas pipe from Pottorf's car didn't free the finger.

Women find a place in 'new' Ku Klux Klan

EDITOR'S NOTE: The burning cross. The white sheets. Guns and masks, intimidation and intolerance. All symbols of the Ku Klux Klan. Now, it seems, there is a new element — a growing number of women in the Klan. "Without the women," says one grand dragon, "we wouldn't have a Klan." Here, the Klansladies tell why they've joined.

By NANCY SHULINS

GREEN BRIER, Tenn. (AP) — In a muddy cow pasture in Green Brier, Tenn., a small woman in a long broadcloth robe and white hood is trying hard to keep from crying as she watches a flaming cross light the night sky.

In the 2½ years since her first cross burning ceremony, the spectacle has never failed to move her. To others, it's a symbol of intimidating intolerance; to Joyce Richardson — a woman of the Ku Klux Klan — it's a welcome constant in a world of inequities.

Klansladies like Joyce Richardson now make up 30 to 40 percent of the Invisible Empire, according to Wizard Bill Wilkinson. They account for 30 percent of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, according to Wizard Don Black.

SAYS EDWARD Richards, West Virginia grand dragon of the National Knights: "Without the women, we wouldn't have a Klan."

That would suit many other Americans just fine. To them, the Klan means terror and violence. They point to its long history of intimidation and coercion, its trappings of guns and masks.

In conversations with a visitor, Klansladies with various backgrounds struck a similar theme; they wouldn't have much of a life without the Klan. They also say many blacks aren't really human and Judaism is not a religion. They want to exclude immigrants and favor sterilizing welfare mothers. They believe in segregation, no matter what the law of the land may say.

When their high schools were forced to admit blacks, they dropped out. When their neighborhoods became racially mixed, they moved on. When their churches began preaching integration, they stayed home.

The women of the Klan who talked about their lives to an outsider wear Lacoste golf shirts and cook Chinese food. They read Gothic romances and subscribe to Time magazine, and they worry about the economy.

Ask them why they don robes and burn crosses; why they so eagerly step into so angry an Empire, ruled by a Kalendar in which May is called Furious and June is Alarming, and most say it's for their children's sake.

PHOEBE WAIR, 32, of Antioch, Tenn., has two children. She's a former PTA mother, who feels horror at society's decaying morals and fear at the prospect of facing an angry God come Judgment Day.

"The morals, you know, it's ridiculous how morals have decayed in this country. And that's in the past 10 years. It's a pity. It is a shame. I can see, I mean, maybe some people can't, but it's so obvious to me how things are changing," says Mrs. Wair, the wife of a policeman-turned-trucker.

"Down through the ages we have mixed and mingled, and that's totally against God's law. We don't have much time. You know, it said in the Bible that He will return and He will."

For Mrs. Richardson, 37, the Klan is a religion: "The only church I go to now is the Klan."

In the Klan, she adds, "you feel like you're doing right, you feel close to God. You believe some day we can take this place and make it like it used to be — a good place to live."

The women give reasons for joining: "A sense of accomplishment," says Nancy Roberts, 31, a dark-haired divorcee who works as a legal secretary in Metairie, La.; "positive feedback," says Donna Smalley, 24, a divorced mother of two living outside New Orleans.

IN RETURN for that positive feedback, women sometimes pay more than their $15 application and $30 membership fees. Becoming a Klanslady cost Mrs. Richardson her neighbors' respect and her sister's friendship, she says.

"About two weeks after I joined, I got this white jacket with the Klan emblem on it, and I had it on over at the market," Mrs. Richardson recalls. "And there was this woman at the market who knew me — she and I used to be Brownie leaders together, we went to the same church and we taught Sunday school.

"I went home and I got this phone call. The person said 'Get out of the neighborhood.

"When I joined, my daddy said 'I don't want you to get hurt.' One of my sisters, though, she was dead set against it. We were real close. Now I don't go to her house and she don't come to mine."

And strangers, she says, have persecuted her. "I've been spit on and I've been hit with a flyswatter," she says. "But I'll never give it up. The Klan needs me and I need the Klan."

For women who call themselves Klansladies, the simplest pleasures are so easily ruined, like the restaurants that serve good, affordable food then hire black waitresses to serve it; like the little houses they scrimp and sacrifice for, houses that turn into islands adrift in neighborhoods turning black.

EVEN MODEST dreams succumb to realities: To be an operating room technician, one must be ready to help the sick, black or white, and so Joyce Richardson will never become one.

"I couldn't touch a colored person. I never have in my life," she says.

The list of the unacceptable, by the Klan's light, is long. Racially mixed couples walking the street. Blacks who don't say "yes, sir." The notion of social equality for all.

• • •

It was David Duke who opened the Klan to women. Duke, a clean-cut college graduate, became Grand Wizard of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in 1974.

It was Duke who picked up the phone the day Donna Smalley called to see about joining the Klan. "I just looked it up in the White Pages," she explains, "under 'K.' "

Once, in the name of chivalry, women like Donna Smalley were relegated to Klan auxiliaries made up of wives and girlfriends who remained safely behind the scenes. Duke looked at the auxiliaries and saw resources going to waste. So he bestowed the ceremonial title of Grand Genii on his wife, Chloe, and started ushering women nearer the front lines at Klan rallies and roadblocks.

"WE HAD a lot of women who wanted to take a more active role, we had young people who wanted to become involved, people from colleges, high schools, that type of thing," recalls Duke, who has since left the Klan to form another white supremacy organization.

"Many of the men and women wanted to meet together, so it seemed like a logical step. It really worked very well. Because a lot of women were housewives, they had a lot of time. They could go to school board meetings and things like that. It was a more effective effort."

Part of that effort includes combing the stacks of public libraries for books with ideas congenial to the Klan and spiking them with calling cards, which are Item A-14 in the Klan's mail-order business.

"Racial purity is America's security," say the cards, a recruiting pitch.

The cards are advertised at $16 per thousand in Klan newspapers, tabloids bristling with misprints and names like "The White Patriot" and "Crusader."

Also for sale are cloisonne tie tacks and pendants in Klan colors of red, white and black; T-shirts and jackets that say "White Power," and pamphlets and books titled "The Inequality of the Races" and "The Jews & Their Lies."

WHEN KLANSLADIES talk of typing up correspondence, distributing leaflets, and raffling off quilts, they make their duties sound like those of a garden club arranging a flower show.

Indeed, Klan leaders talk of a "new" Klan. They say they've turned it into a powerful yet law-abiding organization that simply safeguards whites' rights as the NAACP safeguards the rights of blacks.

But people connected with the groups the Klan calls its enemies — the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Klanwatch and the National Anti-Klan Network, say violence still follows the Klan as surely as night follows day.

They say the Klan's foundation is still hatred, paranoia and ignorance, its weapons, violence and intimidation. They point to recent bloodshed in Decatur, Ala., Greensboro, N.C., and Chattanooga, Tenn., and they say the old Klan, the one that killed 3,500 blacks in the South between 1866 and 1875, is simply hiding behind freshly laundered sheets.

This makes Klan members — and Klansladies in particular — very angry.

They claim they are the real victims, of hiring policies that discriminate against whites, of welfare programs that working people must pay for, of crimes perpetrated by blacks against whites, of a world that is changing too fast.

IT SEEMS partly because of the influence of the women's movement that Klansladies are enjoying full-member status, but it is a movement most Klansladies scorn.

"Women are not only wanting to be equal anymore, they want to be above. And that's not their place," says Mrs. Wair, her blue eyes indignant, her round face flushed with anger.

"Their place is where God intended for them to be. And I think you know that. If He hadn't intended for us to be a mother, He would not have made it necessary for us to be a mother.

"The children of the world now, and of the United States, are lost. Mother is having to work now and support them, and they have to sit on the doorstep a couple of hours before their mother ever gets home, and when kids are left alone they're going to be kids regardless, and they're going to wander and get into things that maybe they wouldn't have got into if they had a mother at home.

"An idle mind is the devil's workshop."

The subject of violence is greeted with vigorous head-shaking. Klansladies publicly disavow it. They say they don't hate anyone.

BLACKS?

"I don't hate 'em. I don't feel like they're human, because I don't feel like they have a conscience," says Mrs. Wair. "I don't think they have a soul."

"They're just not as evolved as we are," says Mary, 31 and single, long blonde hair framing ice-blue eyes, an ex-Philadelphian who calls herself "preppie." She would not allow her real name to be used.

"It's not their fault. But they should be separated instead of trying to make it in a white man's world. That's unfair to both sides.

"I'm not into cruelty," Mary adds as an afterthought. "If a black kid were hit by a car, chances are I'll stop and help. If a dog gets hit, chances are I'll stop."

"I don't hate anyone," Joyce Richardson was saying back in Tennessee over a breakfast of fried eggs, ham, bacon, biscuits and jam, in her brick ranch house in Kingston Springs. "My mama would whip my behind if she thought I hated anyone."

MRS. RICHARDSON'S house is small but cozy, bordered by a thriving flower garden and set on a manicured lawn. On the living room paneling is a large red wall banner that depicts a horse and rider in matching Klan robes. Wall plaques proclaim the various Klan offices the Richardsons have assumed. A gun rack holds six rifles. There is also the semi-automatic her husband, Charlie, a factory worker, has loaded into the trunk of his black Thunderbird. Welded into the trunk is the Klan's trademark "blood drop" — a medallion the size of a half dollar, a red tear-shape in the center of a stylized white cross.

En route to a rally in Green Brier, Mrs. Richardson says blacks and whites are "like dogs and cats. You just can't mix the two."

Mrs. Richardson parks the Thunderbird in a pasture that's lined with cars and pickups and dotted with masked Klansmen holding semi-automatic weapons. There, she slips her Klan robe over her jeans and awaits the start of the rally with a can of bug repellent in one hand and a camera in the other.

Finally, Grand Dragon Tex Moore greets the Klansmen — "the last of the red-blooded, God-fearing patriots," he calls them.

His speech and that of Bill Wilkinson are liberally sprinkled with dire warnings against integration and immigration — and with racial slurs.

Mrs. Richardson listens and from time to time nods agreement, her blonde hair bobbing under the hood. She has a tape recorder going to capture Wilkinson's oratory.

THEN THE speeches are over and Mrs. Richardson steps up to the big hooded circle surrounding a 20-foot wooden cross.

She takes her burning torch from Tex Moore and follows the others, who walk slowly around the cross, stopping three times to raise and lower their torches. Then they come forward and place them at the base of the cross, which erupts into flames.

Mrs. Richardson's eyes glisten with tears in the firelight as she watches the cross, which Klansmen do not "burn" but "light," she says, "lighting the night as Christ lights the world," which is the way the Klan likes to explain the ceremony.

For a few minutes, Joyce Richardson, Klanslady, stands watching it. Then she takes Charlie's arm and they head toward the Thunderbird, back to the garden and home.

It is Saturday, the first day of May by the world's calendar.

It is Desperate, the first day of Furious by the Klan's.

Texaco contract signed

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — Striking oil refiners have ratified a new contract with Texaco, ending an eight-month walkout at the company's plant here.

After Texaco and the union representing the 3,000 strikers agreed to the pact, it was ratified Thursday night by rank and file members of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Local 4-23.

Texaco and union representatives planned to meet Saturday to iron out details of the new 3½-year contract, which includes a 9 percent wage hike in 1982 and an across-the-board 90-cent per hour wage increase, effective June 15, 1983.

Studies consider resumption of draft

By L. EDGAR PRINA
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — It may seem strange to talk about resumption of the draft when the armed services are attracting all the volunteers they need.

And it may seem stranger still when one considers that nearly 675,000 American youths are currently flouting or ignoring the law by failing even to register their names with Selective Service.

But talk there is and serious talk, at that. Two prestigious organizations — the Brookings Institution and the Atlantic Council of the United States — have published new studies on the military manpower/service issue.

While the titles, "Blacks and the Military" and "Toward a Consensus on Military Service," give no clues in this regard, each may be considered an indictment of the All Volunteer Force so stoutly defended by the last four presidents of the United States.

The Reagan administration continues to give strong support to the AVF and it cites recruitment statistics to show that the military services have more than met their accession quotas over the last two years while also improving quality.

THUS, IN fiscal years 1980 and 1981, each of the four services achieved at least 100 percent of its quota. And for the first six months of fiscal 1982, they are at a combined 103 percent, with the Army at 106. (Military accessions totaled 389,900 in fiscal 1980 and 367,300 in fiscal 1981. For the first half of fiscal 1982, the total was 163,400.)

Lawrence J. Korb, assistant secretary of defense for manpower, who says President Reagan shares his "philosophical disposition against the governmental intrusion into private lives that conscription would involve," also points to the higher percentages of recruits in the top three mental categories (average and above) and of those with high school diplomas.

Although the Reagan administration is opposed to the draft, it is serious about registration for it. Reagan, of course, was against registration as a presidential candidate, but after he moved into the White House he was persuaded to change his mind.

In explaining the switch last Jan. 7, he strongly emphasized his opposition to the draft.

"Make no mistake: The continuation of peacetime registration does not foreshadow a return to the draft," he asserted.

Clearly, it was not a popular thing for the president to reverse himself on registration. But to halt the process, which was ordered by President Carter in reaction to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, might have sent signals of weakness to America's friends and potential enemies.

REAGAN'S DECISION came after the Soviet-backed crackdown against the workers movement in Poland by Communist authorities in Warsaw and in the wake of West European suggestions the United States was good at anti-Soviet rhetoric, but was not concerned enough to draft its young men.

According to the Selective Service System headquarters, 674,000 youths who reached their 18th birthday after Carter's decision in February, 1980, have failed to register.

A spokesman pointed out that 93 percent of all those required to register have registered — a total of 8,365,000, as of July 18 — and that the trend has been positive.

Selective Service has undertaken a variety of public awareness programs to get more persons signed up: postal card reminders, posters in high schools, information handouts to newspapers, radio and television spot announcements, some in Spanish, and just this past Friday (the 13th, as it turned out), it mailed warning letters to 33,000 backsliders about their non-registration.

Meanwhile, the names of more than 160 registration-resisters have been turned over to the Department of Justice for action. Indictments have been returned against five of them; 159 cases remain in the pipeline. The maximum penalty under the law for failure to register is five years in jail and a $10,000 fine.

THE FIRST trial of a resister will begin Tuesday (Aug. 17) in the U.S. District Court in Roanoke, Va. One resister under indictment in Connecticut has been jailed by a judge for failure to sign a bond.

The indictments are believed likely to persuade many young men reluctant to register or simply forgetful or ignorant of the requirement that Uncle Sam means business. But possible jail terms and fines are not the only weapons being brought into play by the government.

Sen. Sam I. Hayakawa, R-Calif., and Rep. Gerald B. Solomon, R-N.Y., offered amendments to the fiscal 1983 defense authorization bill that would bar any federal educational aid (loans, grants, fellowships and the like) to any person who fails to register under the law. The Senate and House accepted the amendments and are expected to approve them in a final action next week, when the conference compromise bill comes up for votes.

There is another move in Congress to make guilty non-registrants ineligible for Federal job training programs.

The Atlantic Council study, incidentally, recommended that Congress and the president "enact legislation to reduce the severity of the penalties for noncompliance in order to make them more commensurate with the gravity of the offense and more enforceable".

But the study, which was directed by Lloyd H. Elliott, president of George Washington University, and Gen. Andrew J. Goodpaster, former superintendent at West Point and supreme allied commander in Europe, drew most attention for these two recommendations:

— IF ALL reasonable programs fail to satisfy minimum standards for either quantity or quality of personnel within a reasonable period of time for the Army's active and reserve forces, "peacetime conscription should be resumed."

— To deal with a situation in which there is a crisis short of general war, "the president should be given limited authority now to induct a limited number of men and women (say 100,000) into the armed forces" for up to six months, unless Congress approves an extension.

In making these recommendations, the study took into account what it called "the dramatic comeback in the quality" of Army recruits in 1981 and 1982. But it made clear it was skeptical that this improvement could be sustained. After noting that American military active duty strength entering the 1980s was at its lowest ebb since the 1950s, it said:

"Some increase in force size may become necessary (and some has been programmed) in coming years, and it will have to be obtained from a diminishing pool (as indicated by demographic studies).

"Economic recovery and a consequent drop in unemployment (now at 9.8 percent overall and more than 45 percent for black youth) could further reduce the numbers of qualified young persons who enlist. There is thus a significant probability that the requirements of peace and security will compel this country to resume the draft, perhaps by the mid-1980s."

The Atlantic Council study pointed out "specific deficiencies in the All Volunteer Force" that need to be corrected.

IT SAID THE Army relies heavily on the strength and readiness of the organized units in the Selected Reserve and on the pre-trained personnel in the Individual Ready Reserve (IRR).

"But in the IRR and both components of the Selected Reserve — the National Guard and the Army Rserve — manning levels have been substantially short of their wartime requirements and equipment and training have been neglected," it asserted.

"A significant number of the (council's) working group members believe that the only adequate remedy would be to increase the authorized strength of the active Army force by some 200,000 — and several of them believe that this would require an immediate return to peacetime conscription."

The council study also found that the ground elements of the AVF "have not drawn anywhere near proportionally from white middle class America." It said this was particularly true in the Army, where minorities make up 41 percent of the enlisted force, including 33 percent black (as compared to something over 11 percent black in the population).

"Perfect representativeness is neither necessary nor possible, but gross unrepresentativeness has both philosophical and practical objections," the study said. "Under present conditions, blacks would take disproportionally high casualties in the early days of hostilities. This is a matter of legitimate concern."

The Brookings study struck a similar note, albeit a louder and longer one.

IT POINTED out that the 410,000 blacks under arms today represent about 20 percent of all American military personnel and are heavily concentrated in the ground combat forces, with one of every three Army GIs and one of every five enlisted Marines being black.

According to Pentagon records, 51.8 percent of the Army's 197th Infantry Brigade enlisted personnel are blacks and 33.8 percent of its 101st Airborne Division. The First Marine Division, headquartered at Camp Pendleton, Calif., is 25 percent black while the Third Division on Okinawa is approximately 30 percent black.

In a foreword to the study by Martin Binkin and Mark J. Eitelberg, the president of Brookings, Bruce K. Maclaury, said many Americans approve the growth of black participation in military service, since it oftens affords young blacks educational, social and financial opportunities that constitute a bridge to a better life not otherwise available to them.

This is, in fact, why many black leaders oppose a return to the draft — because it would limit the number of blacks to their approximate percentage of the population.

Other Americans, Maclaury pointed out, see these opportunities for the blacks outweighed by the disproportionate burden they would bear for defense.

"From this perspective, the likelihood that blacks would suffer a third — and perhaps half — of the combat fatalities in the initial stages of conflict is considered immoral, unethical, or otherwise contrary to the precepts of democratic institutions," he said.

SOME BLACK leaders, indeed, virtually accused the government of genocide during the Vietnam War because black casualties exceeded their percentage of the population.

The study's authors also raised the question of military effectiveness.

"The deployment of troops that share a racial or ethnic bond with an adversary poses difficulties," they said. "Suspicion that black troops might be unwilling to carry out their assignments in certain domestic situations — a suggestion that is reprehensible to many members of the black community — cannot be dismissed out of hand."

The authors leave the reader to draw the inference that the only way the armed forces are likely to represent a cross-section of American society and get the quality needed for the advanced technology weapons is through conscription.

"Blacks will constitute an increasing proportion of the smaller supply pool and, by our economic reckoning, will find military service even more inviting than in the past," they wrote.

"At the same time, the services will be under pressure from Congress and from the demands imposed by advancing technology to seek more youths with higher technical and mechanical aptitudes, who by present measuring sticks are more likely to be white."

They added that as long as the AVF exists, it will be difficult to attract white middle-class youths, even with large pay increasess and more liberal benefits.

Peacetime conscription would make the task easier, they concluded, but only if qualitative standards were raised enough to restrict the number of volunteers or if the size of the armed forces were increased.

But no matter how persuasive on the matter of conscription either study may be, there is little doubt that, politically, the draft's time has not yet come again and, barring a war, may not for a number of years.

Signs of the equal rights philosophy pop up everywhere these days, but it can be a two-edged sword. Ladies may now find themselves being aced out of a spot at the hairdresser's by a mere male, but Robert Rocchi of San Jose, Calif., isn't all that mere. From his seat under a dryer at the Beauty Bank in Campbell, Calif., Rocchi, 45, a printer, said he likes to get a permanent during hot weather so he doesn't have to fool with his hair.

Handy work saves finger

HAGERSTOWN, Md. (AP) — Some handy work by a local rescue service unstuck Paul Pottorf Jr.'s finger from his car's gas tank, but the rescuers first had to resort to a box containing "Hand Tools."

Pottorf said he was at a gas station Wednesday, trying to free a spring mechanism protecting his gas tank from leaded fuel when the device popped shut on his right index finger.

"Nobody's probably ever had that done before," Pottorf said. "It has to be a little bit embarrassing."

He sent a woman for help.

"Someone came in here saying that a man's got his finger caught in his gas tank," an employee at the service station said. "I didn't think it was possible."

It took five rescuers from the Community Rescue Service 40 minutes and two hacksaw blades to free Pottorf's finger.

A can of grease didn't help. Neither did a wire hanger. Even removing the entire gas pipe from Pottorf's car didn't free the finger.

Women find a place in 'new' Ku Klux Klan

EDITOR'S NOTE: The burning cross. The white sheets. Guns and masks, intimidation and intolerance. All symbols of the Ku Klux Klan. Now, it seems, there is a new element — a growing number of women in the Klan. "Without the women," says one grand dragon, "we wouldn't have a Klan." Here, the Klansladies tell why they've joined.

By NANCY SHULINS

GREEN BRIER, Tenn. (AP) — In a muddy cow pasture in Green Brier, Tenn., a small woman in a long broadcloth robe and white hood is trying hard to keep from crying as she watches a flaming cross light the night sky.

In the 2½ years since her first cross burning ceremony, the spectacle has never failed to move her. To others, it's a symbol of intimidating intolerance; to Joyce Richardson — a woman of the Ku Klux Klan — it's a welcome constant in a world of inequities.

Klansladies like Joyce Richardson now make up 30 to 40 percent of the Invisible Empire, according to Wizard Bill Wilkinson. They account for 30 percent of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, according to Wizard Don Black.

SAYS EDWARD Richards, West Virginia grand dragon of the National Knights: "Without the women, we wouldn't have a Klan."

That would suit many other Americans just fine. To them, the Klan means terror and violence. They point to its long history of intimidation and coercion, its trappings of guns and masks.

In conversations with a visitor, Klansladies with various backgrounds struck a similar theme; they wouldn't have much of a life without the Klan. They also say many blacks aren't really human and Judaism is not a religion. They want to exclude immigrants and favor sterilizing welfare mothers. They believe in segregation, no matter what the law of the land may say.

When their high schools were forced to admit blacks, they dropped out. When their neighborhoods became racially mixed, they moved on. When their churches began preaching integration, they stayed home.

The women of the Klan who talked about their lives to an outsider wear Lacoste golf shirts and cook Chinese food. They read Gothic romances and subscribe to Time magazine, and they worry about the economy.

Ask them why they don robes and burn crosses; why they so eagerly step into so angry an Empire, ruled by a Kalendar in which May is called Furious and June is Alarming, and most say it's for their children's sake.

PHOEBE WAIR, 32, of Antioch, Tenn., has two children. She's a former PTA mother, who feels horror at society's decaying morals and fear at the prospect of facing an angry God come Judgment Day.

"The morals, you know, it's ridiculous how morals have decayed in this country. And that's in the past 10 years. It's a pity. It is a shame. I can see, I mean, maybe some people can't, but it's so obvious to me how things are changing," says Mrs. Wair, the wife of a policeman-turned-trucker.

"Down through the ages we have mixed and mingled, and that's totally against God's law. We don't have much time. You know, it said in the Bible that He will return and He will."

For Mrs. Richardson, 37, the Klan is a religion: "The only church I go to now is the Klan."

In the Klan, she adds, "you feel like you're doing right, you feel close to God. You believe some day we can take this place and make it like it used to be — a good place to live."

The women give reasons for joining: "A sense of accomplishment," says Nancy Roberts, 31, a dark-haired divorcee who works as a legal secretary in Metairie, La.; "positive feedback," says Donna Smalley, 24, a divorced mother of two living outside New Orleans.

IN RETURN for that positive feedback, women sometimes pay more than their $15 application and $30 membership fees. Becoming a Klanslady cost Mrs. Richardson her neighbors' respect and her sister's friendship, she says.

"About two weeks after I joined, I got this white jacket with the Klan emblem on it, and I had it on over at the market," Mrs. Richardson recalls. "And there was this woman at the market who knew me — she and I used to be Brownie leaders together, we went to the same church and we taught Sunday school.

"I went home and I got this phone call. The person said 'Get out of the neighborhood.

"When I joined, my daddy said 'I don't want you to get hurt.' One of my sisters, though, she was dead set against it. We were real close. Now I don't go to her house and she don't come to mine."

And strangers, she says, have persecuted her. "I've been spit on and I've been hit with a flyswatter," she says. "But I'll never give it up. The Klan needs me and I need the Klan."

For women who call themselves Klansladies, the simplest pleasures are so easily ruined, like the restaurants that serve good, affordable food then hire black waitresses to serve it; like the little houses they scrimp and sacrifice for, houses that turn into islands adrift in neighborhoods turning black.

EVEN MODEST dreams succumb to realities: To be an operating room technician, one must be ready to help the sick, black or white, and so Joyce Richardson will never become one.

"I couldn't touch a colored person. I never have in my life," she says.

The list of the unacceptable, by the Klan's light, is long. Racially mixed couples walking the street. Blacks who don't say "yes, sir." The notion of social equality for all.

• • •

It was David Duke who opened the Klan to women. Duke, a clean-cut college graduate, became Grand Wizard of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in 1974.

It was Duke who picked up the phone the day Donna Smalley called to see about joining the Klan. "I just looked it up in the White Pages," she explains, "under 'K.'"

Once, in the name of chivalry, women like Donna Smalley were relegated to Klan auxiliaries made up of wives and girlfriends who remained safely behind the scenes. Duke looked at the auxiliaries and saw resources going to waste. So he bestowed the ceremonial title of Grand Genii on his wife, Chloe, and started ushering women nearer the front lines at Klan rallies and roadblocks.

"WE HAD a lot of women who wanted to take a more active role, we had young people who wanted to become involved, people from colleges, high schools, that type of thing," recalls Duke, who has since left the Klan to form another white supremacy organization.

"Many of the men and women wanted to meet together, so it seemed like a logical step. It really worked very well. Because a lot of women were housewives, they had a lot of time. They could go to school board meetings and things like that. It was a more effective effort."

Part of that effort includes combing the stacks of public libraries for books with ideas congenial to the Klan and spiking them with calling cards, which are Item A-14 in the Klan's mail-order business.

"Racial purity is America's security," say the cards, a recruiting pitch.

The cards are advertised at $16 per thousand in Klan newspapers, tabloids bristling with misprints and names like "The White Patriot" and "Crusader."

Also for sale are cloisonne tie tacks and pendants in Klan colors of red, white and black; T-shirts and jackets that say "White Power," and pamphlets and books titled "The Inequality of the Races" and "The Jews & Their Lies."

WHEN KLANSLADIES talk of typing up correspondence, distributing leaflets, and raffling off quilts, they make their duties sound like those of a garden club arranging a flower show.

Indeed, Klan leaders talk of a "new" Klan. They say they've turned it into a powerful yet law-abiding organization that simply safeguards whites' rights as the NAACP safeguards the rights of blacks.

But people connected with the groups the Klan calls its enemies — the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Klanwatch and the National Anti-Klan Network, say violence still follows the Klan as surely as night follows day.

They say the Klan's foundation is still hatred, paranoia and ignorance, its weapons, violence and intimidation. They point to recent bloodshed in Decatur, Ala., Greensboro, N.C., and Chattanooga, Tenn., and they say the old Klan, the one that killed 3,500 blacks in the South between 1866 and 1875, is simply hiding behind freshly laundered sheets.

This makes Klan members — and Klansladies in particular — very angry.

They claim they are the real victims, of hiring policies that discriminate against whites, of welfare programs that working people must pay for, of crimes perpetrated by blacks against whites, of a world that is changing too fast.

IT SEEMS partly because of the influence of the women's movement that Klansladies are enjoying full-member status, but it is a movement most Klansladies scorn.

"Women are not only wanting to be equal anymore, they want to be above. And that's not their place," says Mrs. Wair, her blue eyes indignant, her round face flushed with anger.

"Their place is where God intended for them to be. And I think you know that. If He hadn't intended for us to be a mother, He would not have made it necessary for us to be a mother.

"The children of the world now, and of the United States, are lost. Mother is having to work now and support them, and they have to sit on the doorstep a couple of hours before their mother ever gets home, and when kids are left alone they're going to be kids regardless, and they're going to wander and get into things that maybe they wouldn't have got into if they had a mother at home.

"An idle mind is the devil's workshop."

The subject of violence is greeted with vigorous head-shaking. Klansladies publicly disavow it. They say they don't hate anyone.

BLACKS?

"I don't hate 'em. I don't feel like they're human, because I don't feel like they have a conscience," says Mrs. Wair. "I don't think they have a soul."

"They're just not as evolved as we are," says Mary, 31 and single, long blonde hair framing ice-blue eyes, an ex-Philadelphian who calls herself "preppie." She would not allow her real name to be used.

"It's not their fault. But they should be separated instead of trying to make it in a white man's world. That's unfair to both sides.

"I'm not into cruelty," Mary adds as an afterthought. "If a black kid were hit by a car, chances are I'll stop and help. If a dog gets hit, chances are I'll stop."

"I don't hate anyone," Joyce Richardson was saying back in Tennessee over a breakfast of fried eggs, ham, bacon, biscuits and jam, in her brick ranch house in Kingston Springs. "My mama would whip my behind if she thought I hated anyone."

MRS. RICHARDSON'S house is small but cozy, bordered by a thriving flower garden and set on a manicured lawn. On the living room paneling is a large red wall banner that depicts a horse and rider in matching Klan robes. Wall plaques proclaim the various Klan offices the Richardsons have assumed. A gun rack holds six rifles. There is also the semi-automatic her husband, Charlie, a factory worker, has loaded into the trunk of his black Thunderbird. Welded into the trunk is the Klan's trademark "blood drop" — a medallion the size of a half dollar, a red tear-shape in the center of a stylized white cross.

En route to a rally in Green Brier, Mrs. Richardson says blacks and whites are "like dogs and cats. You just can't mix the two."

Mrs. Richardson parks the Thunderbird in a pasture that's lined with cars and pickups and dotted with masked Klansmen holding semi-automatic weapons. There, she slips her Klan robe over her jeans and awaits the start of the rally with a can of bug repellent in one hand and a camera in the other.

Finally, Grand Dragon Tex Moore greets the Klansmen — "the last of the red-blooded, God-fearing patriots," he calls them.

His speech and that of Bill Wilkinson are liberally sprinkled with dire warnings against integration and immigration — and with racial slurs.

Mrs. Richardson listens and from time to time nods agreement, her blonde hair bobbing under the hood. She has a tape recorder going to capture Wilkinson's oratory.

THEN THE speeches are over and Mrs. Richardson steps up to the big hooded circle surrounding a 20-foot wooden cross.

She takes her burning torch from Tex Moore and follows the others, who walk slowly around the cross, stopping three times to raise and lower their torches. Then they come forward and place them at the base of the cross, which erupts into flames.

Mrs. Richardson's eyes glisten with tears in the firelight as she watches the cross, which Klansmen do not "burn" but "light," she says, "lighting the night as Christ lights the world," which is the way the Klan likes to explain the ceremony.

For a few minutes, Joyce Richardson, Klanslady, stands watching it. Then she takes Charlie's arm and they head toward the Thunderbird, back to the garden and home.

It is Saturday, the first day of May by the world's calendar.

It is Desperate, the first day of Furious by the Klan's.

Baker Hans Kaltenbach of Voehrenbach, West Germany, stands beside his home-made giant Gugelhupf as he holds a version of the famous cake fit for less gargantuan appetites. The cake, weighing 2,145 pounds and standing 5 1/2 feet in height, required 900 eggs and 924 pounds of flour. Kaltenbach cooked up the scheme in hopes of getting into the Guiness Book of World Records.

Texaco contract signed

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — Striking oil refiners have ratified a new contract with Texaco, ending an eight-month walkout at the company's plant here.

After Texaco and the union representing the 3,000 strikers agreed to the pact, it was ratified Thursday night by rank and file members of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Local 4-23.

Texaco and union representatives planned to meet Saturday to iron out details of the new 3½-year contract, which includes a 9 percent wage hike in 1982 and an across-the-board 90-cent per hour wage increase, effective June 15, 1983.

Fourteen protesters face felony charges

SEATTLE (AP) — Fourteen sea-going protesters arrested as the nation's first Trident nuclear submarine sailed into its home port face felony charges that could land them in jail for several years.

The 14 were arrested Thursday as Coast Guardsmen squirting fire hoses cleared away a flotilla of small boats in the path of the USS Ohio on its way to a submarine base at Bangor, 40 miles west of Seattle.

All 14 said Friday they will plead innocent.

"We will consider a number of defenses," John Kirk, one of the demonstrators, said at a news conference.

Another, Jon Nelson of Seattle, said he and his 78-year-old mother, Ruth, might contend that the Trident is a violation of international treaties and that "Trident broke the law, not us."

Tom Hillier, a federal public defender, said his office will be advising most of the demonstrators.

"We're still a little unsure after all the confusion — those arrested say the Coast Guard's charges are not accurate," he said.

The Coast Guard decided the day before the protest that the approximately two dozen rowboats, motor boats and sailboats of the "peace blockade" fleet would qualify as a hazard or potential hazard at sea under terms of the federal Ports and Waterways Safety Act.

A regulation in the waterways act gives a Coast Guard commander broad authority to act against any vessel he perceives as such a hazard.

An Aug. 31 preliminary hearing is set on the felony charges. Five protesters face maximum penalties of 10 years in jail and $10,000 in fines while nine face a maximum five years and $50,000 in fines.

The Coast Guard subdued one of the protest flagships, a 38-foot trimaran, by dousing it with fire hoses after the Coast Guard claimed it tried to ram a Coast Guard boat. Ted Phillips of Quadra Island, British Columbia, shipper of the Lizard of Woz, denies that.

Republican party fires its chief fund-raiser Devos

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chief fund-raiser who made the Republican Party the richest political organization in history was fired Friday, months after he described the recession as "a beneficial thing and a cleansing thing."

The abrupt dismissal of millionaire businessman Richard M. DeVos as GOP finance chairman was attributed by sources to his outspoken views on the economy and organized labor and to a tendency to "talk down" to contributors.

"It's simply a case where I think we could do better with somebody else," party chairman Richard Richards said in a telephone interview from Salt Lake City. "A little different approach, a little different style."

Richards named California Lt. Gov. Mike Curb to replace DeVos in the fundraising job until the next meeting of the Republican National Committee in January 1983.

"Chairman Richards has asked for my resignation because he wanted to put someone else in the job," DeVos said in a statement issued from his Washington office. "Apparently, he did not like my style. That is his privilege.

"I have been honored to serve President Reagan and the Republican Party and my support will not diminish."

DeVos was a co-founder of Amway Corp., a direct-selling home products firm based in Ada, Mich., with sales of more than $1 billion.

His dismissal as chief GOP fund-raiser occurred less than three months before the November elections but after the RNC and affiliated committees built a war chest of more than $100 million in hopes of turning back a Democratic effort to reverse Republican gains in 1980.

Democrats are optimistic about their chances in 1982 because of the economy and continuing high unemployment, and the party's revived alliance with organized labor.

Richards, with only limited success, has been making a special effort to attract labor support for the GOP. He has invited labor leaders to participate in Republican affairs and made it clear he is eager to speak to union conventions.

DeVos said at a Republican National Committee meeting in June that the party should address itself to the "80 percent (of working people) who don't belong to labor unions."

He made his comment about the cleansing effect of the recession at the same meeting. DeVos said he meant that economic conditions were forcing labor and management to reach agreements that were not possible in better times.

Richards later said he disagreed with his finance chairman's view of the recession.

DeVos was pressing to expand the GOP fund-raising efforts directed toward small donors which led to speculation he had incurred the displeasure of the party "Eagles," individuals who contribute $10,000 a year. The average contribution to the GOP so far this year was $30.50.

"That isn't true at all," Richards said of reports that a big donor-small donor conflict led to the firing.

"Rich is just not sensitive to a hell of a lot of political problems," a party source said of DeVos. The source, who spoke only on the condition that he not be identified, said DeVos tended to "talk down to our givers and they resented him."

Judge schedules Saturday session in Wood hearing

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Testimony ended in a two-week pretrial hearing in the Judge John Wood murder case late Friday and the presiding judge scheduled an unusual Saturday court session to hear final arguments on motions to suppress FBI tape recordings.

U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions, who had hoped to wind up the proceedings Friday, recessed court at 6:40 p.m. and announced final arguments would begin at 9 a.m. Saturday, the 11th day of the hearing.

Proceedings were delayed Friday by a late government motion seeking to prevent Las Vegas, Nev., attorney Oscar Goodman from representing Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra on grounds of a conflict of interest. Prosecutors did not say in open court what the alleged conflict was.

Jimmy Chagra is charged with paying Charles V. Harrelson $250,000 to shoot Wood on May 29, 1979, in San Antonio to prevent Wood from presiding at Chagra's 1979 narcotics trial.

Sessions cited a convicted narcotics trafficker, Bradley Bryant, for contempt of court late Friday in connection with the prosecution attempt to disqualify Goodman.

Bryant, the last witness called in the pretrial hearing, answered, "I respectfully decline to answer any questions" when asked whether he knew defendants Jimmy and Joseph Chagra and whether with Joseph Chagra present he had "ever had any discussions with Jimmy Chagra concerning Judge Wood's murder."

In response to an inquiry by Sessions, Bryant said "I would continue to refuse to answer them" if further questions were asked by prosecutor Ray Jahn.

Goodman represented Bryant in a narcotics trial in which Bryant was convicted at Philadelphia, sources said.

Sessions scheduled a hearing for Sept. 7 at 1:30 p.m. to determine whether to hold the convict in contempt, although Philadelphia attorney Fred Morelli, representing Bryant, said he did not intend to present a defense.

If he is held in contempt, Bryant's good time would be stayed in federal prison until after the end of the scheduled Sept. 28 trial of six defendants in the Wood case, Jahn said.

Dallas attorney Billy Ravkind, representing Joseph Chagra, and Brownsville lawyer Tom Sharpe Jr., representing Harrelson, told Sessions they would waive any final arguments.

Scheduled to deliver final arguments Saturday were Goodman; court-appointed attorney Charles Campion, on behalf of Jo Ann Harrelson, Harrelson's wife; and Galveston lawyer Warren Burnett, representing Elizabeth Chagra, Jimmy Chagra's wife.

Burnett Friday introduced some last-minute evidence to discredit a government claim that Jimmy and Elizabeth Chagra were not legally married and not entitled to marital privilege.

China fires official in new crackdown

PEKING (AP) — In signs of a new crackdown, China announced Friday it had fired a Cabinet vice minister and sent a former Communist Party official back to prison.

The official Xinhua news agency said Vice Minister Yang Yibang was removed by the state council — China's Cabinet — for violations of party discipline and government regulations.

It said Yang allowed a Hong Kong businessman to "lead him by the nose" into deals that cost China heavily in money and prestige, but stopped short of accusing him of corruption.

Last month, Yang lost all his party posts and was put on two years' party probation.

The Communist Party newspaper Peking Daily said meanwhile that former party official Jin Dechun had been sent back to jail for the same crimes for which he already had completed a five-year prison term.

The paper said Jin's original sentence was too light and he would be tried again from prison.

Peasant farmers struggle to survive African drought

By JAMES F. SMITH

KEZI, Zimbabwe (AP) — Drought scene in southern Africa:

A child no more than 6 or 7 years old crawls down a narrow six-foot-deep bore hole near a dry riverbed and hands up pans of brackish water. Her mother slowly fills two five-gallon buckets.

Then mother and daughter place the buckets on their heads and trudge home across the barren earth of southwest Zimbabwe.

The water they have will help them cope a while longer in a drought afflicting five nations and one territory in southern Africa.

From Mozambique in the east to South-West Africa (Namibia) in the west, peasant farmers among the area's 55 million people face a ravaging drought that in some places is the worst in a generation.

Corn crops are withering and hundreds of thousands of cattle are being slaughtered.

The mass human deaths of other major African droughts have been avoided so far, but malnutrition and starvation threaten the poorest villagers.

The damage is most severe in western Zimbabwe and eastern Botswana, a region always prone to dry spells, and has come at a critical time for both countries.

BOTSWANA'S ECONOMY, one of the success stories of developing Africa, is staggering because of plunging mineral prices.

In Zimbabwe (formerly Rhodesia), the government is struggling to recover from a bitter, seven-year guerrilla war that ended white-minority rule in 1980. The government says 3 million of its 7.6 million people are affected by drought, and 120,000 could die if they do not get food and water relief soon.

"It's terribly frustrating because we just came out of a bumper year and, bang, everything went dry. The crops didn't even take," said Mike Mataure, district agricultural officer for the Kezi region. He said half of the 70,000 head of cattle in his district alone could die by the end of the year.

"People in some areas are walking great distances to get drinking water — I wouldn't be exaggerating to say up to 10 kilometers (6.2 miles)," Mataure added.

Few cattle are left in the tribal villages south of Kezi, where the rock-hard ground around thatched-roof huts has been stripped of every blade of grazing grass. Farmers were seen recently driving their herds along the road many miles to the north in search of water. Others have sold their cattle in an emergency government program called "Operation Cattle Rescue."

THE GOVERNMENT HAS spent $10 million buying up 43,000 head of drought-weakened cattle rather than let them die. The program is part of a $28 million drought relief program, including food aid.

The cattle program is far short of its target of 200,000 head. To peasants, a cow traditionally means wealth and they are reluctant to sell. Further, the drought-stricken region also is suffering from increasing banditry, some of it apparently politically motivated, which has held up purchases, bore-hole drilling and other measures.

The Zimbabwe government estimates the corn crop at 950,000 tons, 45 percent of last year's record crop. Corn losses alone are expected to cost farmers $160 million and cattle losses will handcuff the effort in rebuilding the national herd that dwindled during the war.

"It's definitely going to set this country back some years," a Western diplomat said.

A peasant farmer who was selling his four cows in the village of White Waters north of Kezi said through an interpreter, "It hasn't been so bad since 1947. We're afraid our cattle will die. Most of the people are in very bad condition."

NEIGHBORING BOTSWANA is suffering its worst drought since 1965, said Ambrose Masalila, head of that country's drought relief effort. He said the 3.5-million cattle herd, a crucial export income source for Botswana, was being reduced by 1,200 head a day, mostly through purchases from peasant farmers.

"I think we can roughly estimate that we may lose half a million head," Masalila said in a telephone interview. "These head we are losing will take a long time to replace. The government has encouraged these people to sell, but we cannot take all the cattle available for slaughter. We are working at full capacity."

He said the government had charted a $22-million relief program after declaring a drought emergency May 1, and that foreign donors had pledged about half that amount. Food aid is being given first to children under 10, the aged and nursing and pregnant mothers.

U.S.S.R. silent on extension of grain accord, Block says

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Secretary John R. Block said Friday the Soviet Union has not indicated whether it would go along with a one-year grain agreement extension proposed by President Reagan two weeks ago.

"I have absolutely no indication of when we might hear — good, bad, indifferent, or any timing on it at all," Block told reporters at a luncheon meeting.

Reagan on July 30 approved negotiations with the Soviets to extend the agreement for one year beyond its Sept. 30 expiration. But he ruled out talks on a new long-term agreement with Moscow, which had been urged by many farm groups and members of Congress.

Block was asked whether it might have been better to sound out the Soviet Union on extending the agreement before Reagan made his announcement so that the deal could have been tied up neatly all at one time.

"It could have been done that way, but I don't think there's anything wrong in doing it the way we did," he said Friday. "It certainly was not an ultimatum, we just offered."

The agreement, which went into effect on Oct. 1, 1976 for five years, was extended for an additional year in 1981. The extra year now being sought would be the second extension, making it span a total of seven years.

Block was asked if he thought there was any chance the Soviet Union would spurn Reagan's offer and let the agreement die on Sept. 30.

"I wouldn't expect them to, but there's no reason to think that they have to accept it...because they can buy grain without it," he said. "We all know it, and they know it, too."

The agreement specifies that the Soviet Union must buy at least 6 million metric tons of wheat and corn, combined, each year. It can buy an additional 2 million tons — making a total of 8 million — without further consultation.

But if more than 8 million metric tons is wanted in a single year, the Soviets must get U.S. approval. For the 1981-82 year, Moscow was told it could buy up to 23 million tons.

A metric ton, the standard in international grain trade, is about 2,205 pounds and is equal to 39.4 bushels of corn or 36.7 bushels of wheat.

The Soviet Union so far in 1981-82 has bought about 13.9 million metric tons for delivery by Sept. 30, although no significant purchases have been disclosed since March. That includes about 7.8 million tons of corn and 6.1 million tons of wheat.

"I still feel there's a good chance that we'll sell a record volume to them this year," Block said. "I have no guarantee that will happen, but we're close to that level already."

Block said the Soviet Union has "enormous needs" for grain to help make up for short harvests.

The record of wheat and corn shipped to the Soviet Union was 15.3 million metric tons in 1978-79. When Reagan announced the move to extend the agreement on July 30, the White House projected exports to the Soviets this year at 17.8 million tons.

Icelanders take pride in speaking language of their Viking ancestors

By ROLF SODERLIND

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — While most other people steal or borrow words from international languages, Icelanders take pride in speaking the ancient tongue of their Viking ancestors.

But modern communications and rock music reaching the shores of this isolated north Atlantic island are having a noticeable impact on the old Norse, virtually unchanged for 1,000 years.

"Foreign influence has never before been so strong," admitted Associate Professor Baldur Jonsson, head of an official Language Committee working to devise Icelandic names for modern inventions.

His committee's biggest current headache is to find a proper Icelandic word for "video." He said the committee had tried several that did not seem to catch on, while watching to its dismay as the international expression spreads.

"Young people say what they want regardless if it is good Icelandic or not," he said. "We have been dormant, too liberal for a period of time."

ALTHOUGH THE COMMITTEE, formed in 1964, has been getting more government money than ever in the past two years, Jonsson said there had always been grass-roots efforts to preserve the old language among the strongly nationalistic Icelanders.

For example, when the telephone was introduced on Iceland, people quickly began calling it "simi," an ancient Norse word for a wire connecting two points.

A popular radio program, "Today's Language," warns against foreign linguistic intrusions. Icelanders try to avoid picking up Latin or Greek words automatically. The rule is that a foreign word is accepted only if it is comfortable to pronounce for Icelanders and if there is no better Icelandic word.

"It makes me very proud that we did not adopt English words like people have done in many other countries," said Gudrun Steindorsdottir, a 32-year-old housewife.

Her last name illustrates another ancient feature of the Icelandic language, creation of the last name by adding to the father's name "son" for a boy and "dottir" for a girl. A man and his wife never take the same last name, and phone books list every person under the first name, the proper method of address between Icelanders high and low.

ALSO, ICELANDIC law requires that immigrants adopt Icelandic personal names as a condition for naturalization. The law has been relaxed in recent years, but its existence shows what people think about foreign linguistic influence.

Culture blossoms on this rugged island where literacy is universal. Statistics show that Reykjavik, the capital, has more bookstores per resident than any other city in the world.

Five daily newspapers with a national circulation of 100,000 serve a nation of 230,000, and 240,000 tickets are sold each year to theaters around the island.

Several factors have combined to preserve Icelandic since medieval times. Iceland is a remote island, with virtually the same social structure through the centuries. There were no urban areas until the 19th century, and the economic lifeblood has remained the same: fishing, sheep-raising and agricuture.

But perhaps the main factor for retaining the language of the fierce Scandinavian seafarers who settled here in the 9th century is the Sagas.

THE CLASSICAL literature tells of heroes' struggles with their fate or gods' epic battles with giants and provides pithy accounts of the island's ancient history. The Sagas were written by Christian scholars in 1100-1200 and are still read by their descendants.

The national treasure, brownish vellum manuscripts tinted and decorated with colored ink, is kept at the Arni Magnusson Institute of Reykjavik University and until this fall never has left Scandinavia.

Starting Sept. 15, however, 15 of them will go on an unprecedented two-month exhibition at Pierpont Morgan Library in New York City as part of Scandinavia Today, a cultural presentation of the American-Scandinavian Foundation.

Among the works on display will be medieval manuscripts such as Landnamabok, the Book of Settlements, which lists all principal pioneers from the Scandinavian mainland starting with Ingolfur Arnarsson in 874.

Venezuela tilts toward Third World

By HAROLD OLMOS

CARACAS, Venezuela, (AP) — Venezuela's moves for closer ties with Cuba and the Third World are seen by political analysts here as most likely a strategy to win support for its claim to 50,000 square miles of mineral-rich territory in neighboring Guyana.

The analysts say they do not consider the leftward shift in the foreign policy of this oil-rich nation as necessarily anti-American.

An Analysis

Venezuela is demanding the "return" of Guyanese territory known as the Essequibo region, which the country claims it was cheated out of by the British in 1899. Guyana, now an independent nation headed by the pro-socialist government of Prime Minister Forbes Burnham, was a British colony until 1970.

Venezuela's efforts to restore full diplomatic relations with Cuba and to join the non-aligned Third World movement also express a new feeling of independence in the country, one of the few civilian-governed nations in Latin America.

"Our foreign policy is developing with absolute autonomy. We are not afraid of either agreeing or disagreeing with anybody," Vice Chancellor Oswaldo Paez Pumar of the Foreign Ministry, said in a recent interview.

"As long as the United States understands that our interests are different, our relations will mature. If it fails to understand, much harm will be done."

However, diplomats based in Caracas doubt that the recent changes signal a headlong plunge down a leftist path for Venezuela.

Most political analysts interpret Venezuela's new orientation mainly as a strategy to get Guyana to the bargaining table on the Essequibo, which comprises nearly two-thirds of Guyana's territory.

Venezuelan officials have been stressing that they seek a "peaceful solution" to the dispute, but at the same time they have been using some of its abundant oil revenue to buy ultramodern weaponry. Among its latest military expenditures is a recent $650-million order for 24 sophisticated F-16 fighter planes from the United States, its major oil customer.

The commander of the navy, Vice Adm. Rafael Bertorelli, recently told a news conference that Venezuela has not "excluded" its military option should peaceful negotiations fail.

Most analysts agree that Venezuela's sudden policy shift has been helped along by the shakeup of relations between the United State and its Latin American neighbors over the Falkland Islands war between Britain and Argentina.

"It was a golden oportunity for Venezuela to show its independence from Reagan's politics in Central America," a diplomatic source said.

Conservatives lack alternative to Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Lyn Nofziger left his job as head of the White House political office six months ago, he said he wasn't worried about the complaints from conservatives that Ronald Reagan was deserting many of his campaign positions. Now, Nofziger is one of the complainers.

"When you give us the Democratic candidate in 1984 against Ronald Reagan," Nofziger said last January, "I'm positive that they (the conservatives) will be wholeheartedly supportive."

It was Nofziger's way of saying the conservatives have no place to go politically, a view that still prevails among most White House aides.

Last week, private citizen Nofziger was among the signers of a statement urging Reagan to return to his anti-tax position of the 1980 campaign and abandon the $98.9 billion tax bill moving through Congress with White House support.

Calling themselves "friends and supporters" of Reagan, the conservatives called on the president to "follow a course against high taxes and high federal spending."

The lobbying effort against the record tax increase was organized by Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., who has hitched his formidable political ambitions to the supply-side economic advocacy of tax cuts.

Kemp was a winner last year when he succeeded in convincing Reagan to reject recommendations that he ask Congress to increase federal excise taxes in order to reduce projected budget deficits.

This year there was no sign the White House was moved by the appeal.

The president called Nofziger and another of the signers, former domestic affairs adviser Martin Anderson, to the White House for a chat. After the meeting, there was no indication either the president or his former aides had changed their views.

The words were the customary ones but the scene was a little different when Stanley Zilinski, 28, of Easton, Pa., and Meleky Linda Ajhar, 23, of Phillipsburg, N.J., exchanged wedding vows in a local park recently. They are sitting astride Zilinski's motorcycle overlooking the city of Easton.

Debate over Marcos' heir grows

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Speculation is growing in political and diplomatic quarters here on who eventually will succeed President Ferdinand E. Marcos, who has been in office for 17 years and has five more to go in his present term.

His wife, Imelda, 52, is mentioned often, but she denies repeatedly she has any such intention.

Mrs. Marcos remains second only to Marcos in power and influence in the Philippines. She governs this capital city and its suburbs, oversees all social services as a Cabinet minister and sits in the National Assembly. She also directs much of the Philippines' foreign affairs in frequent trips abroad.

The Philippines, a U.S. territory from 1898 to 1946, has strong personal, business and military bonds with the United States, but U.S. diplomats have not expressed publicly any feelings one way or the other towards Mrs. Marcos as a possible successor. She has taken a pro-American stand even stronger than her husband's.

Marcos' opponents, critical of the U.S. ties, have repeatedly called for his resignation. But no opposition leader has emerged as a viable successor given the grassroots political organization across the Philippines' more than 7,000 islands of Marcos' political party, the New Society Movement.

The only oppositionist with a potentially large following, former Sen. Benigno Aquino, lives in American exile and faces a death sentence on murder and subversion charges if he returns. His U.S. residency could also make him ineligible for the presidency for 10 years unless the constitution is changed.

Marcos periodically debunks rumors that he is dying of an incurable disease or is so sick he may have to resign. He has been shown water skiing, jogging, playing golf and working out in the palace gymnasium and last month said his doctors found him "clear of any malady."

A constitutional change last year set up a 15-member Executive Committee to run the day-to-day affairs of government and take over temporarily in the event of the president's death, disability, removal from office or resignation.

Marcos has so far appointed only seven members and the provision itself has brought predictions of chaos from his opponents.

"A split in the armed forces because conflicting loyalties to presidential contenders invites the danger of a bloody civil war," claimed opposition Assemblyman Ruben Canoy.

He urged Marcos to either call an election for a vice president or designate a member of the Executive Committee as his successor if he leaves office before the next election in 1987.

Canoy did not name any possible contenders, but at least two others have emerged as possible alternatives to Mrs. Marcos:

— Prime Minister Cesar Virata, 51, a loyal technocrat who has withstood considerable abuse for often unpopular economic policies. He stands in Mrs. Marcos' shadow at official functions.

— Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile, 58, a longtime Marcos loyalist who has a strong legal and business background in addition to his position of influence over the armed forces.

Trouble in Netherlands Antilles no longer 'blowin' in the wind'

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

PHILIPSBURG, St. Maarten — There is an old saying in the Netherlands Antilles, that all troubles eventually are carried away by the tradewinds.

That is no longer the case.

Indeed, the Netherlands Antilles, which many Americans know only as a group of idyllic Dutch Caribbean vacation isles, are facing a political crisis that could disrupt the U.S. oil lifeline, affect billions of dollars in business done by U.S. banking subsidiaries and contribute to further instability in a volatile part of the world.

"Rarely has the country been faced with such a barrage of fundamental problems," the Curacao-based Antillen Review editorialized recently. "The country is indeed in troubled waters."

The crisis centers on Aruba, an island of about 70,000 inhabitants off the coast of Venezuela that is expected to gain autonomy soon from the Antilles and is moving toward independence from the Netherlands.

Some knowledgeable observers are worried that leftists may gain dominance in Aruba under the leadership of the island's most popular politician, Betico Croes. Officials in Washington and the Antilles are even discussing the possibility that Venezuela might seize Aruba, to which it ships much of its crude for refining.

THE ARUBAN ISSUE has so polarized the islands that the Antilles government in Willemstad, Curacao, has virtually ceased to function since January, when it fell because of defections in Prime Minister Domenico F. Martina's ruling coalition. The crisis was spurred largely by disagreements over the future of the Antilles in general and Aruba's movement toward independence in particular.

Elections June 25 did little to alter the balance of power in the 22-seat Staten, or parliament, and the governmental impasse continues.

Aruba is oil-rich, site of a huge Exxon-run oil-refining complex and oil-transshipment facility. And it may become richer, a lot richer, if, as seems likely, oil is found offshore.

"Everything points to the fact that Aruba may have oil," says Paul G.M. Loewenthal, economic commissioner of the Antilles. "That's one of the main reasons Aruba wants independence from the Antilles. It doesn't want to share that wealth."

In addition, Arubans charge that their affairs, and their tax dollars, are being mishandled by the government in Willemstad. Aruba has an unemployment rate of only 4 percent, while the rate on Curacao, the chain's most populous island, is 15 percent.

THE OTHER FIVE Antillean islands, which are not as anxious to become independent, are worried about how an Aruban breakaway would affect their political and economic futures.

The other islands are Bonaire and Curacao — which with Aruba are known as the "ABC" islands off the coast of Venezuela — and the three Dutch Windward Islands: St. Maarten (the Dutch part of a part-Dutch, part-French island), St. Eustatius and Saba, all about 100 miles east of Puerto Rico.

For years, Arubans have been agitating for independence from the Antilles, the last overseas territory in what once was a sprawling kingdom of the Netherlands.

Then late last year, Holland, which wants to decolonize all of its Antillean islands, reached provisional agreement with the Antilles on a separate independence for Aruba.

Later this year, a Dutch-appointed panel of three Dutch and four Antillean representatives — dubbed the Committee of Seven — is expected to agree on Aruban separation from the Antilles — or "status aparte" — within the next two years. Independence from the Netherlands would come gradually over the next 10 years.

AUTONOMY WOULD COME to the chagrin of the Reagan administration, which sees any political fragmentation in the Caribbean as increasing the possibility of leftist subversion and shifting to the United States more responsibility for the region's welfare.

The decolonization stakes are higher for the Antilles than for other Caribbean territories because as much as 10 percent of the oil imported by the United States passes through the islands. The total includes both Persian Gulf oil, which on Aruba and Curacao is transshipped from huge tankers to smaller ones that can dock in U.S. ports, and the mostly Venezuelan oil from those islands' refineries.

"We would rather see the six of them remain together and we would rather see the islands remain under the wing of the Netherlands," said Mary Kosheleff of the State Department's Office of Caribbean Affairs.

Georges Fauriol, a Caribbean expert at the Washington-based Center for Strategic and International Studies, says that Croes — the leader of Aruba's independence party, MEP, and the island's most powerful politician — "appears to be leading Aruba, not only down the road to independence, but also down the road to a left-wing regime with strong ties to Grenada and Fidel Castro's Cuba." Grenada, which gained independence from Britain in 1974, has had a Marxist leadership since 1979.

HOWEVER, LAURENCE R. BIRNS, director of the Council on Hemispheric Affairs, another Washington think tank, discounts the possibility of radical change.

"The islands themselves are so commercially oriented — most of their wealth is from oil and banking — that there's no possibility there's going to be a Grenada-type explosion there or a radicalization of politics," he said.

Aruba's uncertain political destiny has prompted concern about nearby Venezuela, which supported Argentina's unsuccessful seizure of the Falkland Islands from Britain earlier this year.

Indonesia develops captured territory of Timor

By KENNETH L. WHITING

DILI, Indonesia (AP) — Indonesian officials claim this former Portuguese colony is making progress under their flag.

They produce statistics on what has been done since Indonesia took over East Timor six years ago:

Four-hundred-twelve new primary schools with 1,226 classrooms, in contrast to 77 elementary schools with 230 classrooms during the Portuguese colonial era. Indonesia plans to build 50 junior high schools and one high school this year. There were no high schools under the Portuguese and illiteracy was 90 percent.

The Indonesian language is used in these new schools and in compulsory adult education classes. It should become the standard in a few years, enabling more East Timorese to communicate with each other than ever before. More than 30 dialects are now spoken, with Tetum the most common, although in some villages neighbors cannot understand each other.

All 13 district towns in the New Jersey-sized territory, now a province of Indonesia, are being electrified. Only Dili, Baucau and Lospalos had electricity in colonial times.

More than 124 miles of paved roads have been added to the 12 miles that existed when Indonesia formally took over in July 1976.

"I AGREE THAT THERE still is much to be done," said A.P. Kalangie, the provincial secretary and the top Indonesian administator in Dili. "We are still in the first phase of development. But you can see much already has been done."

For years East Timorese faced starvation because they could not grow enough food and were too poor to import what they needed. But international relief agencies and better crops have improved the food situation, although the problem is still far from a solution.

July 17 was observed as "Integration Day," marking the day in 1976 when Indonesia formally absorbed, as its 27th province, the territory that it had captured militarily after Portugal granted East Timor independence.

In resolutions every year since then, the United Nations General Assembly has rejected Indonesia's takeover. The vote in November favored independence 54-42 with 46 abstentions.

The latest resolution "calls upon all interested parties, namely Portugal as the administering power, and the representatives of the East Timorese people as well as Indonesia to cooperate fully with the U.N. with a view to guaranteeing" the people's full exercise of self-determination.

INDONESIA OFFICIALLY rejects the U.N. demand as interference in its domestic affairs.

A non-classified analysis of the situation provided by the U.S. Embassy in Jakarta, the Indonesian capital, says the United States "accepted the incorporation of Portuguese Timor into Indonesia in 1976."

"The U.S. government does not claim that there has been a valid exercise of the right of self-determination of the people of East Timor, but this is not inconsistent with U.S. recognition of the status quo," the analysis said. "The U.S. supports whatever will realistically best serve the well-being of the inhabitants of East Timor under existing circumtances."

A coup attempt by a pro-Indonesian group Aug. 10, 1975 led to civil war between rival factions including the Front for the Liberation of East Timor — Fretilin — which demanded immediate independence. Portuguese administrators fled Dili to nearby Atauro island when fighting broke out.

Using weapons from the Portuguese arsenal, Fretilin routed its two main opposition parties within two months despite covert aid for them from Jakarta. Indonesia intervened openly with "volunteers" after Fretilin declared East Timor independent.

THE FRETILIN GUERRILLAS retreated into rugged mountains where they were ground down over the years by Indonesian troops and malnutrition.

East Timor was off-limits to most outsiders until recently when some independent observers were been invited on special visits.

But it is by no means fully open to casual visitors.

There was a time when rivers slowed man's journey. Now we speed across them going to and from our work . . . with hardly a thought for the engineering genius which has enabled man to span every river with his bridges.

In our journey through life there are times when we face hazards or frustrations. For millions, religious faith has been the bridge to new horizons or opportunity and realization.

You need, your family needs, the spiritual stimulation and enrichment your place of worship can provide. The resources gained can span the week.

The Gospel Way

'Gospel Way' to perform at Tall City Baptist Church

The Gospel Way will perform at the Tall City Baptist Church, 3500 Anetta Drive, at 7 p.m. today.

This group first formed as a group in early 1978. Since that time, they have appeared in numerous churches and auditoriums throughout California, Nevada and Arizona, often playing for fund raising events.

Group members are Clark Youngquist, lead singer and pianist; Jim Kruger, tenor; John Thiem, baritone; and Scott Breckley, bass. All are members of the First Baptist Church of Redlands, Calif.

The public is invited to attend.

New Church of Christ minister London-born Canadian citizen

Les Hopper, the new educational minister at the North A and Tennessee Church of Christ, is a Canadian citizen who was born near London.

"I was born in England, near London, and have traveled widely," Hopper said.

"From 1976 to 1977, my wife and I did a year of mission work in Northern Canada in the Yellowknife Northwest Territories. Prior to coming to Midland, my wife and I were both on the staff of Abilene Christian University.

"Also, I have been preaching in various Churches of Christ since 1974," he said, adding, "My first sermon was in Mexico City."

Hopper's Canadian educational background includes a bachelor of arts from M'Master University at Hamilton, Ontario, and a teaching certificate from the University of Toronto, Toronto, Ontario. His U.S. educational background includes graduate degrees in ministry and evangelism, missions and religious education. All three are from ACU.

Hopper's wife, Rhonda, is a U.S. citizen, while Hopper has permanent residency status in the United States. They have two daughters, September Rae, 3½ years old; and Laurel Brittany, 17 months old.

The family's Midand reception has been a warm one.

"My family has only been in Midland since June 1, but already we feel at home. There are some great people here with big hearts," he said.

Les Hopper

The only problem Hopper forsees in living in West Texas centers around the climate.

"So far, there is only one problem that I can forsee. They tell me Midland does not get much snow in the winter.

"As a Canadian, I suppose I'll have to hang up my snow shoes for a long time."

Ottawa Indian evangelist to serve at Bellview Baptist

Ottawa Indian Bill Sky-Eagle will be the music evangelist for Bellview Baptist Church, 1710 N. Big Spring St., Aug. 22-26.

He and his wife, Ivy Jean, have been actively involved in the ministry of music evangelism since 1966. For six years of that time, Sky-Eagle served as minister of music, education and youth in Southern Baptist churches, his last being the Clay Road Baptist Church in Houston.

The Sky-Eagles' music ministry includes a worldwide crusade ministry, an expanding recording ministry and a sacred and gospel concert ministry. They have served over 450 churches throughout the United States as well as performing overseas in Spain, West Germany, Great Britain, Italy and Australia.

Born in Temple in 1946, Sky-Eagle received his formal education at Paris High School, Baylor University and Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary. Listed in "Who's Who in Religion," Sky-Eagle currently serves as music director for the national Conference of Southern Baptist Evangelists.

Mrs. Sky-Eagle was born in Port Arthur. An honor graduate of Stephen F. Austin High School, she attended Baylor University on a full academic scholarship, where she received a degree in sociology. While at Baylor, she was elected to sing in the chapel and acappella choirs which toured Holland, Greece and Israel. Mrs. Sky-Eagle sings with her husband and acts as sound technician.

Bill Sky-Eagle

Revival services will be at 10:50 a.m. and 6:40 p.m. Aug. 22 and at 10 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. Aug. 23-26.

A nursery will be provided for each service. The public is invited to attend.

Roman Catholic bishops delay issuing paper on use of nuclear weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Plans for the nation's Roman Catholic bishops to issue a major paper in November on war and the use of nuclear weapons have been put off to allow more time for consideration.

Chicago's Archbishop-designate Joseph Bernardin, chairman of a committee preparing the document, says the new timetable calls for developing a second draft before the bishops' November meeting, soliciting wide responses to it, discussing it in November and afterward developing a third draft based on reactions.

It then would become subject to a vote either at a special 1983 meeting or the regular November meeting in 1983.

The "magnitude of the response" already received, he says, made more extended discussion and consultation necessary.

The proposed pastoral letter's preliminary draft condemns any first use of nuclear arms or their deployment against civilian centers, and calls for steps toward disarmament.

Church to host youth rally today

Tall City Missionary Baptist Church, 3500 Anetta Drive, will host the West Texas-New Mexico Youth Rally today beginning at 5 p.m.

Churches fellowshiping with the American Baptist Association in this area will bring the youth of their churches to take part in the rally. After the program and fellowship, The Gospel Way quartet will perform.

Other youth related activities planned at Tall City include its Vacation Bible School which begins Monday.

School hours are 6:30 to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday. Children ages three and over are invited to attend.

The school's theme will be "Winning with Daniel." For more information call 694-2832 or 694-7515.

Church to offer Bible study class

Trinity Bible Studies, a disciplined Bible study for laymen, will be offered at First Christian Church, 1301 W. Louisiana Ave., beginning Aug. 26 and continuing for 10 weeks. A day session Thursdays from 10 to 11:30 a.m. and an evening session Sundays from 7 to 8:30 p.m. will be provided.

This fall's study is the second in the series. Last spring the course covered the Old Testament. This fall it will cover the New Testament.

Registration for those who have taken the Old Testament Survey is $6. Registration for new students is $10. This fee covers the cost of the supplies.

For more information call the Rev. Steve Church at 682-2541.

Women certified as secretaries

After completing the seminar "Toward Excellence through Growth," Helen Farmer and Deloris Madison have finished the requirements for the Southern Baptist Church Secretary Certification.

Both are secretaries at Fannin Terrace Baptist Church. Mrs. Farmer has been church secretary for 12½ years, while Mrs. Madison has worked as part-time secretary for 9 years. Both had been working toward certification since 1979.

Lucy R. Hoskins was the instructor for both the Basic and Advanced Seminars, with the testing being done in Glorieta, N.M.

'Sounds of Joy' fill Kelview Heights

Curtis Elkins and "The Sounds of Joy" will be singing at Kelview Heights Baptist Church, 407 W. Alta Ave., Sunday at 10 a.m.

Elkins, who has sung on several gospel television programs, has been nominated for the Gospel Music Association's Dove Awards as the best male vocalist. Elkins and "The Sounds of Joy" also have been named official goodwill ambassadors for Texas by Gov. Bill Clements.

The public is invited to attend.

Prayer in classroom enjoys wide support

By The Associated Press

The recurring battle over classroom prayer is rumbling anew in Congress, but this time with new clout — that of the president — behind the move to permit such devotions.

There also was overwhelming public support for it, as indicated in various opinion surveys.

Over the past 20 years, in the face of court decisions prohibiting group prayer in public schools, perennial congressional efforts have been made to overturn the ban, but previously without presidential support.

President Reagan, however, instigated the proposed new measure. "No one will convince me," he says, "that a moment of voluntary prayer will harm a child or threaten a school or state."

At current hearings of the Senate Judiciary Committee on the matter, some top Protestant and Jewish spokesmen have strongly condemned the move, saying it would violate the nation's historic separation of church and state.

If so, that was done regularly until 20 years ago. Classroom prayers were a widespread American custom until the Supreme Court in 1962-63 ruled that government-prescribed prayers in public schools were unconstitutional.

Seeking to overcome this ruling, which has been widely interpreted by lower courts to ban any sort of group prayers in public schools, the newly proposed constitutional amendment says:

"Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to prohibit individual or group prayers in public schools or other public institutions. No person shall be required by the United States or by any state to participate in prayer."

U.S. religious bodies are divided about the proposal, but it has gained widening support this time. While Jewish and many mainline Protestant bodies oppose it, the move for the first time has the backing of the nation's largest religious bodies.

The St. Ignatius Mission Church is framed by the majestic backdrop of the mountains on the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana. Tourists flock to the church every year to view murals painted by a mission handyman at the turn of the century.

Jesus depicted as Indian chief

By CHARLES HILLINGER
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

ST. IGNATIUS, Mont. — More than 50 murals replete with angels, clouds and haloed biblical figures adorn the walls and ceilings of the Indian mission church here. The murals are the work of a handyman, who painted them after the turn of the century.

In two paintings by another artist, more striking for the symbolism than the artwork, "Mary and child" are depicted as squaw and papoose and the adult Jesus is shown as an Indian chief with full feather headdress.

Official Montana state highway maps in a list of points of interest note the Indian mission church here, which "is said to be the third most beautiful church in the world."

"That's one of those statements that has to be taken with a grain of salt," readily admitted Father Joseph Obersinner, 53, co-pastor of the Flathead Indian church the past 11 years.

"Obviously this church cannot be compared to the magnificent European cathedrals, to the likes of St. Peter's or Notre Dame. But no one can deny that this is a very special place."

Thousands of Montanans and out-of-state visitors annually come to the Catholic mission church in the tiny village of St. Ignatius 40 miles north of Missoula on the Flathead Reservation.

The setting is superb — spectacular snow-shrouded mountains embracing the red brick church in the town named in honor of St. Ignatius Loyola, the 16th century founder of the Jesuits.

Jesuits established the mission here in 1854 and serve Catholics among the 4,000 Flathead Indians living on the reservation.

It was one of the Jesuit brothers, Joseph Carignano, whose labor sets this church apart.

Carignano was the mission cook and handyman. But one day in the year 1900 he began painting Old and New Testament scenes.

He continued painting in his free time for the next eight years behind the altar, on the walls, on the ceiling until he finished 58 murals in rich, brilliant colors.

Visitors who come here are also attracted by the singing of Indian spirituals.

And to see the paintings of Christ and the Virgin Mary by Flathead artist Sam Wiprud. Christ and Mary and her papoose on her back, the infant Jesus, are depicted as Flathead Indians.

Vatican embroiled in bank failure

By JOHN WINN MILLER

ROME (AP) — The collapse of Banco Ambrosiano, Italy's largest private bank, has brought new pressure on the Vatican to clarify its role in one of Italy's worst postwar financial scandals.

The controversy centers on the relationship between Banco Ambrosiano's late President Roberto Calvi and the Vatican bank, headed by American Archbishop Paul C. Marcinkus.

It also involves Calvi's rise from ambitious banking clerk to president of the company, his suicide and an international trail of murky business deals.

The Treasury Ministry liquidated Banco Ambrosiano Aug. 6 and named a group of seven banks to take over the finanically troubled operation.

BANCO AMBROSIANO'S problems stem from $1.4 billion in loans that Calvi engineered — allegedly on the strength of a letter of patronage from Marcinkus — for several obscure Panamanian companies that apparently were unable or unwilling to repay the debt. Marcinkus has denied any wrongdoing.

Apparently because of that letter and reports that the Vatican owns part of the Panamanian companies, Treasury Minister Beniamino Andreatta called on the Vatican bank to assume its share of responsibility for the debt.

Andreatta said he made clear that the government expected cooperation from the Vatican and had taken steps to determine "if we're talking only about giving trust to a friendly banker or involvement in a de facto partnership."

AS PRESIDENT, Marcinkus has virtual autonomy in running the bank, known formally as the Institute for Religious Works. It provides normal banking services for its estimated 7,000 customers, mostly religious organizations and members of the clergy.

The Italian government and the Vatican have been at odds since the scandal first broke in June. That struggle escalated last month when a Milan prosecutor investigating the Calvi scandal sent Marcinkus and two lay officers of the bank official notification that they were being investigated.

The Vatican refused to accept the notices, saying they had not been sent by proper diplomatic channels to the independent city-state.

IT WAS NOT known what the notices said, but Italy's leading daily, Corriere della Sera, quoted unidentified sources as saying the three men were suspected of fraud.

How the Vatian got involved in the scandal is a complicated story involving the wheeling and dealing of Calvi, who rose from a bank clerk to president of Banco Ambrosiano.

Because of his success — the bank's profits tripled in 1981 — Calvi was allowed a tremendous amount of leeway by the bank's board of directors in making financial deals.

According to financial sources and press accounts, Calvi used that power to arrange $1.4 billion in loans from a bank holding company to three other subsidiaries of Banco Ambrosiano in Latin America and the Caribbean.

THE SUBSIDIARIES then loaned the money to Panamanian front companies, the sources said.

Calvi reportedly raised the money for the high-risk loans using a letter of patronage signed by Marcinkus.

Italian banking sources say they do not know whether the letter of patronage legally binds the Vatican to back the loans.

There is also some question whether Marcinkus knew what Calvi was doing, or if he was just helping out a friend and trusted banker.

It has not been determined where the money ended up or what it was used for, although there were reports that Calvi used it to buy shares in his own bank.

CALVI'S EMPIRE began falling apart last year when he was convicted of illegally exporting $26.4 million, sentenced to four years in prison and fined $13 million.

He was appealing that conviction when Italy's central bank asked him to explain the $1.4 billion in loans which were coming due at the same time.

According to press accounts, the banker approached the Vatican bank to help him out, but Marcinkus apparently refused.

Facing a jail term and unable to come up with funds for the loans, Calvi vanished June 10.

His disappearance upset Italian financial circles, and the government moved in, replacing Banco Ambrosiano's board of directors with a three-man commission.

Majority of Episcopalians see religion as important

NEW YORK (AP) — Most Episcopalians are relatively well-off, well-educated, go to church often and pray much, says a study which also finds that a lot of them are leaving the big cities.

The "Profile of Episcopalians," prepared by a state-of-the-church committee for the denomination's triennial general convention Sept. 5-15 in New Orleans, says 94 percent regard religion as important in their lives.

That is 8 points higher than the percentage attributed to the average American.

The 2.8-million-member denomination, considered a "bridge" church between Protestantism and Roman Catholicism, faces several major decisions at the coming meeting, including proposed closer ties with Lutherans.

Also up for adoption is a proposed new hymnbook, the first revision of the church's hymnal since 1940. A commission of hymnologists has been working on it for several years.

Among numerous other matters, there's also a proposal to change the title of the church's presiding bishop to archbishop.

The denomination is one of 26 national churches stemming from the Church of England, all part of the worldwide Anglican Communion of about 70 million. Ever since colonial days, Episcopalians, for their numbers, have had a disproportionately large place in American leadership.

The study of the present crop was based on a sampling of 2,000 members of the faith, 964 of whom returned filled-in questionaires.

More than half, 58 percent, have been members of some other denomination, the largest proportions coming from Methodist, Roman Catholic or Baptist churches — a clue to the ecumenical criss-crossing common throughout American churches.

Nearly all Episcopalians, 99 percent, pray regularly, usually "about once a day," and more than half at meal time.

Seventy-eight percent attend worship at least twice monthly, 47 per cent each week and only 3 percent never attend. The never-attend figure has shrunk to less than half since three years ago when it was 8 percent.

Ninety-six percent of members are white, 3 percent black, 1 percent Oriental, compared with the general U.S. population, which is 83 percent white. But 68 percent of Episcopalians say they would welcome a non-white pastor.

A majority, 58 percent, competed college and 31 percent have post-graduate training, compared with 30 percent of the U.S. popuulation who have finished college.

Nearly half the members are in the professions or business and 25 percent are retired. Only 3 percent are manual workers. Seven percent are in clerical or sales work.

Seventy-one percent of Episcopal households had income in 1981 of more than $20,000, compared with only 32 percent of U.S. households.

As for religious views, 96 percent of Episcopalians believe Jesus is both God and man or divinely inspired. Those who think the Bible should be taken "literally, word for word," has dropped from 15 to 11 percent.

Eighty percent believe the Bible is the "inspired word of God," but not everything in it is to be read literally. Both Bible literalists and those consider the Bible "a book of legends are in a distinct minority in our church," the report says.

CHOICES

We are called upon to make a series of choices each day. We are also making eternal choices daily, whether we realize it or not. Are you choosing eternal life or eternal damnation? If you try to ignore God you choose the latter. I will be speaking on this subject tomorrow.

...OVER THE BRIDGE ...AND HOME

There was a time when rivers slowed man's journey. Now we speed across them going to and from our work . . . with hardly a thought for the engineering genius which has enabled man to span every river with his bridges.

In our journey through life there are times when we face hazards or frustrations. For millions, religious faith has been the bridge to new horizons or opportunity and realization.

You need, your family needs, the spiritual stimulation and enrichment your place of worship can provide. The resources gained can span the week.

'Gospel Way' to perform at Tall City Baptist Church

The Gospel Way will perform at the Tall City Baptist Church, 3500 Anetta Drive, at 7 p.m. today.

This group first formed as a group in early 1978. Since that time, they have appeared in numerous churches and auditoriums throughout California, Nevada and Arizona, often playing for fund raising events.

Group members are Clark Youngquist, lead singer and pianist; Jim Kruger, tenor; John Thiem, baritone; and Scott Breckley, bass. All are members of the First Baptist Church of Redlands, Calif.

The public is invited to attend.

New Church of Christ minister London-born Canadian citizen

Les Hopper, the new educational minister at the North A and Tennessee Church of Christ, is a Canadian citizen who was born near London.

"I was born in England, near London, and have traveled widely," Hopper said.

"From 1976 to 1977, my wife and I did a year of mission work in Northern Canada in the Yellowknife Northwest Territories. Prior to coming to Midland, my wife and I were both on the staff of Abilene Christian University.

"Also, I have been preaching in various Churches of Christ since 1974," he said, adding, "My first sermon was in Mexico City."

Hopper's Canadian educational background includes a bachelor of arts from M'Master University at Hamilton, Ontario, and a teaching certificate from the University of Toronto, Toronto, Ontario. His U.S. educational background includes graduate degrees in ministry and evangelism, missions and religious education. All three are from ACU.

Hopper's wife, Rhonda, is a U.S. citizen, while Hopper has permanent residency status in the United States. They have two daughters, September Rae, 3½ years old; and Laurel Brittany, 17 months old.

The family's Midand reception has been a warm one.

"My family has only been in Midland since June 1, but already we feel at home. There are some great people here with big hearts," he said.

Les Hopper

The only problem Hopper forsees in living in West Texas centers around the climate.

"So far, there is only one problem that I can forsee. They tell me Midland does not get much snow in the winter.

"As a Canadian, I suppose I'll have to hang up my snow shoes for a long time."

Ottawa Indian evangelist to serve at Bellview Baptist

Ottawa Indian Bill Sky-Eagle will be the music evangelist for Bellview Baptist Church, 1710 N. Big Spring St., Aug. 22-26.

He and his wife, Ivy Jean, have been actively involved in the ministry of music evangelism since 1966. For six years of that time, Sky-Eagle served as minister of music, education and youth in Southern Baptist churches, his last being the Clay Road Baptist Church in Houston.

The Sky-Eagles' music ministry includes a worldwide crusade ministry, an expanding recording ministry and a sacred and gospel concert ministry. They have served over 450 churches throughout the United States as well as performing overseas in Spain, West Germany, Great Britain, Italy and Australia.

Born in Temple in 1946, Sky-Eagle received his formal education at Paris High School, Baylor University and Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary. Listed in "Who's Who in Religion," Sky-Eagle currently serves as music director for the national Conference of Southern Baptist Evangelists.

Mrs. Sky-Eagle was born in Port Arthur. An honor graduate of Stephen F. Austin High School, she attended Baylor University on a full academic scholarship, where she received a degree in sociology. While at Baylor, she was elected to sing in the chapel and acappella choirs which toured Holland, Greece and Israel. Mrs. Sky-Eagle sings with her husband and acts as sound technician.

Bill Sky-Eagle

Revival services will be at 10:50 a.m. and 6:40 p.m. Aug. 22 and at 10 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. Aug. 23-26.

A nursery will be provided for each service. The public is invited to attend.

Roman Catholic bishops delay issuing paper on use of nuclear weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Plans for the nation's Roman Catholic bishops to issue a major paper in November on war and the use of nuclear weapons have been put off to allow more time for consideration.

Chicago's Archbishop-designate Joseph Bernardin, chairman of a committee preparing the document, says the new timetable calls for developing a second draft before the bishops' November meeting, soliciting wide responses to it, discussing it in November and afterward developing a third draft based on reactions.

It then would become subject to a vote either at a special 1983 meeting or the regular November meeting in 1983.

The "magnitude of the response" already received, he says, made more extended discussion and consultation necessary.

The proposed pastoral letter's preliminary draft condemns any first use of nuclear arms or their deployment against civilian centers, and calls for steps toward disarmament.

Church to host youth rally today

Tall City Missionary Baptist Church, 3500 Anetta Drive, will host the West Texas-New Mexico Youth Rally today beginning at 5 p.m.

Churches fellowshiping with the American Baptist Association in this area will bring the youth of their churches to take part in the rally. After the program and fellowship, The Gospel Way quartet will perform.

Other youth related activities planned at Tall City include its Vacation Bible School which begins Monday.

School hours are 6:30 to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday. Children ages three and over are invited to attend.

The school's theme will be "Winning with Daniel." For more information call 694-2832 or 694-7515.

Church to offer Bible study class

Trinity Bible Studies, a disciplined Bible study for laymen, will be offered at First Christian Church, 1301 W. Louisiana Ave., beginning Aug. 26 and continuing for 10 weeks. A day session Thursdays from 10 to 11:30 a.m. and an evening session Sundays from 7 to 8:30 p.m. will be provided.

This fall's study is the second in the series. Last spring the course covered the Old Testament. This fall it will cover the New Testament.

Registration for those who have taken the Old Testament Survey is $6. Registration for new students is $10. This fee covers the cost of the supplies.

For more information call the Rev. Steve Church at 682-2541.

Women certified as secretaries

After completing the seminar "Toward Excellence through Growth," Helen Farmer and Deloris Madison have finished the requirements for the Southern Baptist Church Secretary Certification.

Both are secretaries at Fannin Terrace Baptist Church. Mrs. Farmer has been church secretary for 12½ years, while Mrs. Madison has worked as part-time secretary for 9 years. Both had been working toward certification since 1979.

Lucy R. Hoskins was the instructor for both the Basic and Advanced Seminars, with the testing being done in Glorieta, N.M.

'Sounds of Joy' fill Kelview Heights

Curtis Elkins and "The Sounds of Joy" will be singing at Kelview Heights Baptist Church, 407 W. Alta Ave., Sunday at 10 a.m.

Elkins, who has sung on several gospel television programs, has been nominated for the Gospel Music Association's Dove Awards as the best male vocalist. Elkins and "The Sounds of Joy" also have been named official goodwill ambassadors for Texas by Gov. Bill Clements.

The public is invited to attend.

Prayer in classroom enjoys wide support

By The Associated Press

The recurring battle over classroom prayer is rumbling anew in Congress, but this time with new clout — that of the president — behind the move to permit such devotions.

There also was overwhelming public support for it, as indicated in various opinion surveys.

Over the past 20 years, in the face of court decisions prohibiting group prayer in public schools, perennial congressional efforts have been made to overturn the ban, but previously without presidential support.

President Reagan, however, instigated the proposed new measure. "No one will convince me," he says, "that a moment of voluntary prayer will harm a child or threaten a school or state."

At current hearings of the Senate Judiciary Committee on the matter, some top Protestant and Jewish spokesmen have strongly condemned the move, saying it would violate the nation's historic separation of church and state.

If so, that was done regularly until 20 years ago. Classroom prayers were a widespread American custom until the Supreme Court in 1962-63 ruled that government-prescribed prayers in public schools were unconstitutional.

Seeking to overcome this ruling, which has been widely interpreted by lower courts to ban any sort of group prayers in public schools, the newly proposed constitutional amendment says:

"Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to prohibit individual or group prayers in public schools or other public institutions. No person shall be required by the United States or by any state to participate in prayer."

U.S. religious bodies are divided about the proposal, but it has gained widening support this time. While Jewish and many mainline Protestant bodies oppose it, the move for the first time has the backing of the nation's largest religious bodies.

The St. Ignatius Mission Church is framed by the majestic backdrop of the mountains on the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana. Tourists flock to the church every year to view murals painted by a mission handyman at the turn of the century.

Jesus depicted as Indian chief

By CHARLES HILLINGER
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

ST. IGNATIUS, Mont. — More than 50 murals replete with angels, clouds and haloed biblical figures adorn the walls and ceilings of the Indian mission church here. The murals are the work of a handyman, who painted them after the turn of the century.

In two paintings by another artist, more striking for the symbolism than the artwork, "Mary and child" are depicted as squaw and papoose and the adult Jesus is shown as an Indian chief with full feather headdress.

Official Montana state highway maps in a list of points of interest note the Indian mission church here, which "is said to be the third most beautiful church in the world."

"That's one of those statements that has to be taken with a grain of salt," readily admitted Father Joseph Obersinner, 53, co-pastor of the Flathead Indian church the past 11 years.

"Obviously this church cannot be compared to the magnificent European cathedrals, to the likes of St. Peter's or Notre Dame. But no one can deny that this is a very special place."

Thousands of Montanans and out-of-state visitors annually come to the Catholic mission church in the tiny village of St. Ignatius 40 miles north of Missoula on the Flathead Reservation.

The setting is superb — spectacular snow-shrouded mountains embracing the red brick church in the town named in honor of St. Ignatius Loyola, the 16th century founder of the Jesuits.

Jesuits established the mission here in 1854 and serve Catholics among the 4,000 Flathead Indians living on the reservation.

It was one of the Jesuit brothers, Joseph Carignano, whose labor sets this church apart.

Carignano was the mission cook and handyman. But one day in the year 1900 he began painting Old and New Testament scenes.

He continued painting in his free time for the next eight years behind the altar, on the walls, on the ceiling until he finished 58 murals in rich, brilliant colors.

Visitors who come here are also attracted by the singing of Indian spirituals.

And to see the paintings of Christ and the Virgin Mary by Flathead artist Sam Wiprud. Christ and Mary and her papoose on her back, the infant Jesus, are depicted as Flathead Indians.

Vatican embroiled in bank failure

By JOHN WINN MILLER

ROME (AP) — The collapse of Banco Ambrosiano, Italy's largest private bank, has brought new pressure on the Vatican to clarify its role in one of Italy's worst postwar financial scandals.

The controversy centers on the relationship between Banco Ambrosiano's late President Roberto Calvi and the Vatican bank, headed by American Archbishop Paul C. Marcinkus.

It also involves Calvi's rise from ambitious banking clerk to president of the company, his suicide and an international trail of murky business deals.

The Treasury Ministry liquidated Banco Ambrosiano Aug. 6 and named a group of seven banks to take over the finanically troubled operation.

BANCO AMBROSIANO'S problems stem from $1.4 billion in loans that Calvi engineered — allegedly on the strength of a letter of patronage from Marcinkus — for several obscure Panamanian companies that apparently were unable or unwilling to repay the debt. Marcinkus has denied any wrongdoing.

Apparently because of that letter and reports that the Vatican owns part of the Panamanian companies, Treasury Minister Beniamino Andreatta called on the Vatican bank to assume its share of responsibility for the debt.

Andreatta said he made clear that the government expected cooperation from the Vatican and had taken steps to determine "if we're talking only about giving trust to a friendly banker or involvement in a de facto partnership."

AS PRESIDENT, Marcinkus has virtual autonomy in running the bank, known formally as the Institute for Religious Works. It provides normal banking services for its estimated 7,000 customers, mostly religious organizations and members of the clergy.

The Italian government and the Vatican have been at odds since the scandal first broke in June. That struggle escalated last month when a Milan prosecutor investigating the Calvi scandal sent Marcinkus and two lay officers of the bank official notification that they were being investigated.

The Vatican refused to accept the notices, saying they had not been sent by proper diplomatic channels to the independent city-state.

IT WAS NOT known what the notices said, but Italy's leading daily, Corriere della Sera, quoted unidentified sources as saying the three men were suspected of fraud.

How the Vatian got involved in the scandal is a complicated story involving the wheeling and dealing of Calvi, who rose from a bank clerk to president of Banco Ambrosiano.

Because of his success — the bank's profits tripled in 1981 — Calvi was allowed a tremendous amount of leeway by the bank's board of directors in making financial deals.

According to financial sources and press accounts, Calvi used that power to arrange $1.4 billion in loans from a bank holding company to three other subsidiaries of Banco Ambrosiano in Latin America and the Caribbean.

THE SUBSIDIARIES then loaned the money to Panamanian front companies, the sources said.

Calvi reportedly raised the money for the high-risk loans using a letter of patronage signed by Marcinkus.

Italian banking sources say they do not know whether the letter of patronage legally binds the Vatican to back the loans.

There is also some question whether Marcinkus knew what Calvi was doing, or if he was just helping out a friend and trusted banker.

It has not been determined where the money ended up or what it was used for, although there were reports that Calvi used it to buy shares in his own bank.

CALVI'S EMPIRE began falling apart last year when he was convicted of illegally exporting $26.4 million, sentenced to four years in prison and fined $13 million.

He was appealing that conviction when Italy's central bank asked him to explain the $1.4 billion in loans which were coming due at the same time.

According to press accounts, the banker approached the Vatican bank to help him out, but Marcinkus apparently refused.

Facing a jail term and unable to come up with funds for the loans, Calvi vanished June 10.

His disappearance upset Italian financial circles, and the government moved in, replacing Banco Ambrosiano's board of directors with a three-man commission.

Majority of Episcopalians see religion as important

NEW YORK (AP) — Most Episcopalians are relatively well-off, well-educated, go to church often and pray much, says a study which also finds that a lot of them are leaving the big cities.

The "Profile of Episcopalians," prepared by a state-of-the-church committee for the denomination's triennial general convention Sept. 5-15 in New Orleans, says 94 percent regard religion as important in their lives.

That is 8 points higher than the percentage attributed to the average American.

The 2.8-million-member denomination, considered a "bridge" church between Protestantism and Roman Catholicism, faces several major decisions at the coming meeting, including proposed closer ties with Lutherans.

Also up for adoption is a proposed new hymnbook, the first revision of the church's hymnal since 1940. A commission of hymnologists has been working on it for several years.

Among numerous other matters, there's also a proposal to change the title of the church's presiding bishop to archbishop.

The denomination is one of 26 national churches stemming from the Church of England, all part of the worldwide Anglican Communion of about 70 million. Ever since colonial days, Episcopalians, for their numbers, have had a disproportionately large place in American leadership.

The study of the present crop was based on a sampling of 2,000 members of the faith, 964 of whom returned filled-in questionaires.

More than half, 58 percent, have been members of some other denomination, the largest proportions coming from Methodist, Roman Catholic or Baptist churches — a clue to the ecumenical criss-crossing common throughout American churches.

Nearly all Episcopalians, 99 percent, pray regularly, usually "about once a day," and more than half at meal time.

Seventy-eight percent attend worship at least twice monthly, 47 per cent each week and only 3 percent never attend. The never-attend figure has shrunk to less than half since three years ago when it was 8 percent.

Ninety-six percent of members are white, 3 percent black, 1 percent Oriental, compared with the general U.S. population, which is 83 percent white. But 68 percent of Episcopalians say they would welcome a non-white pastor.

A majority, 58 percent, competed college and 31 percent have post-graduate training, compared with 30 percent of the U.S. popuulation who have finished college.

Nearly half the members are in the professions or business and 25 percent are retired. Only 3 percent are manual workers. Seven percent are in clerical or sales work.

Seventy-one percent of Episcopal households had income in 1981 of more than $20,000, compared with only 32 percent of U.S. households.

As for religious views, 96 percent of Episcopalians believe Jesus is both God and man or divinely inspired. Those who think the Bible should be taken "literally, word for word," has dropped from 15 to 11 percent.

Eighty percent believe the Bible is the "inspired word of God," but not everything in it is to be read literally. Both Bible literalists and those consider the Bible "a book of legends are in a distinct minority in our church," the report says.

Former outcasts build new city

By ANDREW TORCHIA

UNANGO, Mozambique (AP) — A struggling, economically distressed Mozambique is pinning its hopes for the future on what's happening here — a building site for a city, set apart from the scrubland by the unfinished shells of three workshops, the foundations of 15 bungalows and some trenches for a 20-bed hospital.

Nearby stand the thatched-roof huts of 800 rehabilitated drunks, addicts, prostitutes, thieves and Portuguese colonial agents. These one-time outlaws run their own community through a council that controls housing, law and order, and other local functions.

Such achievements take on major significance in a young, Marxist-led country struggling to feed and shelter its 12 million people.

Newspapers carry stories about how Unango embodies national hopes for social and material gain. Government escorts proudly take foreign visitors to see it.

HOWEVER INCOMPLETE, this settlement is seen as one of the success stories of seven troubled years of independence in Mozambique — a country short of food, machinery and skills.

In Maputo, the tattered capital far to the south, long lines of shopping bags stretch unattended outside food and clothing stores. Supplies are so limited that thousands rise at dawn to leave the bags, and return later when shops open to claim their places in the lines. Disputes over precedence seem rare.

Residents say the lines were longer a year ago, before the government introduced rationing of 11 basic commodities.

Those who belonged to a consumer cooperative — about one-fifth of the national population — and had a ration card were able to buy 12 pounds of grain in June. Meat and fish are still so scarce that ration quotas cannot be established.

Nearly 200 people a day moved to Maputo during the past 18 months, by official figures, swelling the population by 13 percent to 850,000 and straining the city's ability to provide jobs and food. Western observers say the migration reflects deteriorating conditions in the countryside, where about 1.5 million are afflicted by drought.

MOZAMBICAN EXPORTS — sugar, cashews and prawns — have fallen in output or value since 1975, the year of independence from Portugal. Foreign business observers say a state farm expected to provide half of the country's 120,000-ton rice consumption last year was plagued by equipment breakdowns and produced only 25,000 tons. They say 40 percent of the 1981 production of a match factory near Maputo was unmarketable because of defects.

Anti-Marxist guerrillas appear increasingly able to roam over large rural areas and carry out sabotage raids near cities.

Nearly one Mozambican in five can read and write, following a government literacy campaign. But hundreds of thousands are being governed and millions of dollars are being allocated by untrained officials thrust into their jobs when the Portuguese departed. Many managers are still going to night classes to get high school diplomas.

A Western diplomat said, "In three years, I've never seen it worse."

THE MAPUTO newspaper, Noticias, described Unango recently as "a dream of human change...for all those who call for a new social structure free of exploitation, bandits and crime."

This former Roman Catholic mission site is one of five compulsory, rural rehabilitation settlements for several thousand petty criminals and people considered politically misguided. Samora Machel, the president and former anti-Portuguese guerrilla leader, visited Unango in the remote northwest near Lake Nyasa in 1979, and declared an amnesty.

Socialist re-education classes and police supervision stopped. Residents were free to leave but, according to Francisco Cuinica, head of Unango's Executive Council, most of them stayed.

"The crime rate didn't go up when the police left," said Cuinica, a 32-year-old former veterinary laborer.

To a visitor, Unango is indistinguishable from other villages. More than 170 students attend a two-room school. Their school bell is a length of railroad track hung from a tree and struck with a stone, and their seats are logs, but the building has blackboards and windows.

ONE HUT CONTAINS a clinic, where a medical technician treats the two prevalent diseases — malaria and dysentery. Another houses a cottage industry — three treadle-operated sewing machines.

Music and messages from the government's information service pour from a loudspeaker atop a pole in a field, starting every day at 5 a.m.

A small library includes the Meditations of Marcus Aurelius and Boccaccio's Decameron, as well as standard Marxist works.

Residents are starting a cooperative farm this year to grow their own vegetables, and a nearby state farm provides maize (corn). Men from Unango are stringing the first telephone line — to a province capital 40 miles away.

"Enthusiasm is growing as people begin to see results," Cuinica said.

He said Unango is scheduled to become self-supporting this year, after receiving government subsidies as high as $285,000 a year.

Brazilians prepare for autumn elections

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Brazilians are getting ready for their most wide-ranging elections in more than 20 years, under a promise by the military government to move toward civilian rule. But economic troubles and recent political backtracking cloud the picture.

On Nov. 15 more than 52 million registered voters will have the opportunity to pick mayors, city councilmen, state legislators, governors, federal congressmen and one-third of the Senate. The government-backed party and four opposition groups — which include leftists but not Communists — are competing.

President Joao Figueiredo, a retired general who currently heads the military regime that seized power in 1964, has promised a "political opening" and affirms that the elections "will be held."

But many Brazilians are asking whether he can keep the promise, with the economy in recession, inflation approaching 100 percent and a foreign debt of over $60 billion.

Opposition groups are calling for the resignation of Planning Minister Antonio Delfim Netto, who is responsible for overall financial policies. Figueiredo says he will keep him on.

Figueiredo sent several bills to Congress in Brasilia, currently controlled by the government's Social Democratic Party, to change election rules. Opposition politicians say the changes — which all passed — are to keep the the Social Democrats from losing control of Congress, statehouses and state legislatures. Opposition leaders claim the people, pressed by economic hardship, would normally vote against the government.

Janio Quadros, the last civilian to be directly elected as president only to resign in August 1961, eight months after taking office, now is a candidate for governor of Sao Paulo, the nation's richest and most populous state.

Arafat kisses babies in attempt to sway American opinion

By NICOLAS B. TATRO

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, still has a scruffy beard and carries a pistol on his hip, but the PLO has been carefully grooming its image for a broader appeal.

Photographs of the guerrilla leader distributed to local newspapers and international agencies show Arafat kissing babies, playing chess, touring hospitals and playing soccer.

Before Israel's invasion of Lebanon, Arafat was seen in public almost exclusively in a military setting surrounded by uniformed guerrillas and Soviet-made weaponry. At news conferences or in interviews, he would often launch into angry, fist-pounding tirades against the United States and Israel.

The 53-year-old Arafat is no less critical in his remarks now but his image has softened, his words are less biting and he is more prone to smile at television cameras than at any time since becoming PLO chairman in 1969.

Told that Arafat appeared to be acting like an American congressional candidate, a PLO official said, "Yes, exactly. The baby-kissing pictures are to appeal to public opinion, especially U.S. public opinion."

A key weapon in Arafat's arsenal as he tries to preserve the PLO, fighting for its life in Israeli-encircled west Beirut, has been public opinion, say PLO officials. They believe the destruction caused by Israel's June 6 invasion has given them the edge in the propaganda war.

The PLO's image-consciousness was demonstrated in a recent editorial on the Voice of Palestine radio station:

"What is happening today in the Middle East is shattering old stereotypes," the commentary said. "The traditional image of the Arab in the West was of a war-like, bloodthirsty Bedouin. The Israeli, in contrast, was a peace-loving David forced to defend himself from time to time against this loathsome Goliath."

In pursuit of U.S. recognition, Arafat met recently with an American man and his son who carried crosses into the enclave of the surrounded guerrillas in a gesture of peace and then with a five-member U.S. congressional delegation.

French view 'le changement' with jaundiced eye

EDITOR'S NOTE — On May 10, 1981, Parisians again stormed the Bastille — but with roses instead of pitchforks. Francois Mitterrand, just elected president by a Socialist-Communist majority, promised "Le Changement" — sweeping change. France has changed, but not exactly as planned.

By MORT ROSENBLUM

PARIS (AP) - Ask any Frenchman what has changed in a little more than a year. The answer, most likely, will involve a Gallic shrug and a noise suggesting an air bubble escaping from under a lilypad: "Bofff."

Translated, that says a Socialist-Communist government has not altered visibly the course of the French mainstream. But, under the surface, swirling eddies reveal troubled waters.

President Francois Mitterrand, who had pledged to act with "calm force," has kept some promises. He nationalized major industries and private banks, raised the minimum wage and trimmed the work week.

The guillotine, cutting edge of the 1789 revolution, is in a museum storeroom, the first casualty of a Socialist plan to rewrite the repressive Napoleonic legal code.

New radio stations have been freed from state monopoly. Women, immigrants and gays face less discrimination.

But leftist programs, diluted by compromise and applied by a creaking bureaucracy, have neither spurred the economy nor eliminated privilege.

THE GOVERNMENT, for example, abolished first class on the Paris metro — but only partially. The distinction remains from 9 to 5 to hold on to extra revenue.

Some significant change has gone almost unnoticed. And some, clearly evident, has not been applauded.

Higher taxes squeeze ordinary Frenchmen who tipped the balance against Valery Giscard d'Estaing's aristocratic style. The poor find new benefits canceled by inflation and rising unemployment.

Among the powerful, rich and classy, reaction to "le changement" runs to the apoplectic.

"High finance does not like us," Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy acknowledged in a recent radio interview.

New levies, a chilly business climate and aggressive egalitarianism have scared billions of dollars across the border. Few companies, French or foreign, risk major investment.

Baron Guy de Rothschild, his bank nationalized, moved to New York. He left behind an outraged cheese lady on Paris' Ile Saint Louis. "It is scandalous," she said, taking care to preserve anonymity. "No more big dinners, parties. It's the same all over now."

PEOPLE NOW HIDE WEALTH with the passion once devoted to flaunting it. Country homes, prime targets of the taxman, are for sale at half their earlier values, and nobody is buying. Historic castles crumble away, unmaintained and unmarketable.

Some top chefs have rented themselves out to Disneyworld, and others are franchising their creations in Japan.

Bruno the florist, whose pampered petals were de rigeur on the smartest tables, has switched to selling antiques on the flea market.

For some, this is tragic.

"All we have is a certain style. Once the gloss is gone, we're lost," says Hebe Dorsey, grande dame of Parisian society writers. "We are not a first class power, so we can't afford to be sloppy."

Dorsey, of the International Herald Tribune and Vogue, notes the rich foreigners who funded French grandeur have gone to New York, miffed at the fraying welcome mat.

"It's like there's been a social earthquake here," she says. "Let's face it, the world moves with the very rich. Art and fashion follow the money. The world has passed France by."

IN THE WIDER, less heady circles, a malaise is evident.

Voting in March for local representatives — the leftists' first nationwide test at the polls — showed a shift to the right.

Leftist parties totaled just under half of the vote, 5 percent less than their National Assembly victory last June. Centrist and right-wing parties won two-thirds of the contested seats.

"We are neither deaf nor blind," reads a Socialist Party statement, after the voting, promising to examine its failings.

Some factors are evident. In the past year, unemployment topped two million, more than 8 percent of the work force. Inflation hovers near 14 percent, twice West Germany's rate. The budget deficit has soared beyond early estimates. The franc dropped against the dollar, from 5.35 to 6.30.

Mitterrand decreed a deficit limit of 3 percent of total economic output, ordering a "pause" to key parts of the Socialist program.

The opposition, sniffing uncertainty, seized the advantage.

"They are pedaling through sauerkraut," offered neo-Gaullist leader Jacques Chirac, employing a classic French image of somebody trying to bicycle his way across a tub of pickled cabbage.

LE FIGARO, a conservative daily, said: "The Socialists have finally discovered realities of power and limits of possibility. This pause...in applying ruinous and reformist fantasies is perhaps only the beginning."

Some analysts blame the French penchant for complaining against government, any government. Mauroy's repeated pleas for more time — and help from all sectors — elicit mixed reactions.

During March, 60,000 farmers drove tractors through Paris to protest European Economic Community arrangements. One shouted: "I spend 365 days a year behind a cow for a miserable pittance."

The much-vaunted 39-hour work week brought as much grief as gratitude. At Val d'Isere, operators who didn't qualify took an extra hour by shutting down the chairlifts, leaving skiers to shiver in the cold.

Ironically, the Communist Party has lost considerable power since last May. Its four cabinet ministers make few waves, and leaders appear uncertain at how to score points against the Socialists without damaging the government coalition.

In the March local elections, the Communists polled less than 16 percent, their worst showing since World War II.

MITTERRAND'S FOREIGN POLICY, though different from Giscard d'Estaing's, confounds those who predicted France would shift eastward away from its Western allies.

Already tough on Afghanistan, Mitterrand took the hardest stand in Europe on Soviet moves in Poland. After a trip to Israel in February, he hopped a Concorde to spend a few hours with President Reagan.

He agreed to buy huge quantities of Soviet gas, rankling U.S. strategists who were already upset at French arms sales to Nicaragua and overtures to Libyan leader Moammer Khadafy.

But Mitterrand maintains his independent approach reflects a different view of Western — and French — interests. France has traditionally avoided superpower blocs, and a recent poll showed 55 percent of Frenchmen want it that way.

Britain used Brazilian bases

LONDON (AP) — The Defense Ministry confirmed a London Times report that Britain had used a Brazilian base this week to refuel Hercules transport planes ferrying supplied to its Falkland Island garrison.

But a ministry spokesman denied the use of the Brazilian facility was anything more than a temporary arrangement. He said no continuing agreement had been reached with the Brazilians on the use of the base.

One of the formal rooms at Blair House, the government's official residence for foreign dignitaries, in Washington, D.C. This particular room has been closed to the public because of the structure's deteriorating conditfon.

Blair House in need of extensive repairs

By BARBARA HAND
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — A passer-by would never guess by its elegant exterior that Blair House, the nation's guest house for foreign dignitaries, has been deteriorating for the past 150 years and is in need of major repair.

Visiting foreign dignitaries won't see the Blair House blemishes because it was closed to them June 24. The State Department is waiting for Congress to appropriate $1.5 million for repairs to a leaky roof, faulty plumbing and a frequently failing boiler in the four-story beige townhouse.

What's actually needed is "total restoration, not just renovation," said John A. Murtha, the State Department's assistant chief of protocol, who estimated it would take at least 18 months to do the job properly. Carolyn Johnson, a State Department spokeswoman, said the cost for a thorough job would be $7 million.

However, the Office of Management and Budget has informed the State Department that because of budget restraints it would not even consider funding restorations. The State Department, heeding OMB's advice, asked Congress for a $1.5 million supplemental appropriation for "the more immediate problems," Murtha said.

"WERE RENOVATIONS not undertaken now, the building might soon deteriorate to so poor a condition that saving it would be very difficult and even more costly," said Johnson, who is hoping for final action on the $1.5 million request before Congress adjourns for the August recess.

"Restoring the house will happen sooner or later," said Blair House manager Judy McLennan. "Postponing it makes it worse and (the damage) more extensive. Restoration will keep the historical integrity of the house." She guessed that repair, whether major or minor, won't start until next year. She said that the State Deprtment is working on another proposal to ask Congress for the rest of the $7 million needed for major repairs. The home is still being used for dinners and receptions by Cabinet level officials until construction begins.

The State Department commissioned the Washington architectural and engineering firm Cooper-Lecky to evaluate Blair House. Based on Cooper-Lecky's report, the State Department estimated $7 million would cover the structural and physical plant repairs. However, that doesn't include redecorating costs, and until OMB's purse strings are loosened, the faulty boiler takes precedence over replacing decorative moldings. Murtha said redecorating — replacing wall paper and furnishings — may be done through private donations.

FACED WITH IMPENDING visits by foreign dignitaries, the State Department is using various Washington hotels and may choose one in particular during the repair period. But the first choice would be to rent a private residence and set up a temporary guest house using Blair House staff.

Before the official June 24 closing, State Department officials rerouted two foreign delegations to hotels. Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin stayed at the Washington Sheraton and President Luis Alberton Monge of Costa Rica was put up at the Watergate Hotel.

The expense of putting up foreign dignitaries at Blair House is covered by the U.S. government. While Blair House is closed, the State Deprtment will pay hotel fees for foreign delegations of up to 12 members. Foreign nations will be expected to pay for any others. During repairs, foreign dignitaries may miss some of the attention that is part of the Blair House treatment. Much detailed work goes into each official visit.

"I generally meet with the (foreign) ambassador or someone from the embassy," said house manager McLennan. "Before some visits, countries will send advance teams."

"YOU HAVE TO FIND OUT the dietary restrictions, the things people like and don't like. That goes beyond food. It goes into flowers, the temperature of the room. There are certain countries where a certain flower has a certain meaning. We go into every detail."

During a visit, McLennan, her assistant manager, the head butler, the chef and the housekeeper all sleep at Blair House and are on 24-hour call. If the prime minister of, say, Tunisia has a request at 2 a.m., he would only have to pick up the telephone in his room and tell the operator what he wants.

"If it's just for milk and cookies, the butler can take care of it," McLennan said. "If necessary, the chef can be called. I am always notified of what is going on."

There's also a 24-hour refreshment table for guests. "If someone wants to wander downstairs in the middle of the night, there are always finger sandwiches and cookies, tea and coffee, candies and soft drinks," McLennan said.

Blair House has 15 guest rooms, each with a private bath. McLennan said every room is usualy full during a state visit. "If they decide to bring more people, the embassy (of the visitor's country) will take care of them."

IN 1981, THERE were 23 state or "official working visits," with dignitaries staying at Blair House. So far this year there have been 14, with the last two placed at hotels.

McLennan said that during a visit she is usually working from 6:30 a.m. to 1 the next morning. Between visits, Cabinet members are allowed to use the house for functions that help promote U.S. foreign policy. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldridge, former chairman of Scoville Industries of Waterbury, Conn., recently entertained the Japanese trade minister with a Blair House luncheon.

When state visitors arrive, they are usually escorted by the secretary of state and greeted by McLennan at the front door.

"We'll see them in and have a cup of tea or offer them something appropriate to drink, given the time of day, and then show them up to their rooms.

"On some visits they will only eat dinner in the house on the night they arrive. It varies," McLennan said. Working breakfasts and lunches are often held with U.S. officials.

Capitol losses include East Front

By LESLIE BERGER
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The Capitol's West Front basks in celebrity, its restoration the subject of perennial debate. But the original East Front has fallen into obscurity — taken apart and scattered around Washington, apparently destined to become an architectural footnote.

The East Front portico, built between 1815 and 1829, was dismantled when that side of the Capitol was restored from 1958 to 1962. It was catalogued for possible reassembly, but no decision has ever been made about what to do with it.

As a result, its pieces lie about the city, battered by the elements, and in some cases, being carved up into souvenirs.

Twenty-four stone columns, 23 Corinthian capitals that once sat atop the columns (one capital is on display at the Capitol), at least one wrought-iron lamppost and countless dentils (small blocks that protrude like teeth from beneath a cornice) are planted in Poplar Point Nursery in the U.S. Botanic Gardens on the banks of the Anacostia River.

They lie exposed to sun, wind and rain amid thriving weeds. The columns are encased in wood that is wrapped and has begun to rot.

Behind Rock Creek Park's administrative headquarters, sandstone, granite and marble blocks that once formed a grandiose East Front wall now cover nearly 15,000 square feet of ground. The playwood fence built to enclose the storage area is nearly gone, and shapely balustrades are overgrown by poison ivy.

James Goode, curator for the Smithsonian castle and author of "Capitol Losses," a study of noteworthy Washington buildings slated for destruction, said the most valuable remains of the East Front were two pre-Civil War statues and the pediment (a gable above the doorway), that now belong to the Museum of American Art. He said they were "falling to pieces" when he stumbled on them in the Capitol power plant in 1972 while working on a book about Washington sculpture.

Of the 24 columns, which date from 1815, Goode said that if they "could be re-erected elsewhere, it would be very nice."

At least, said Goode, "they knew enough not to throw the remains away. But what do you do with 200 tons of stone?"

Souvenirs are one use. For the past seven years, with the permission of the House Speaker's Office, the Capitol Historical Society of the U.S. has been converting the sandstone blocks at Rock Creek Park into paperweights and bookends, which are sold for $4 and $20 in the Capitol shop.

Fred Schwengel, the Capitol Historical Society president, said the society has netted about $20,000 from the sale of the mementos, with profits going toward the society's continuing art program, which commissions works of art for congressional buyildings.

"Oh, jiminy!" said Schwengel. "We've had all sorts of ideas" about what to do with the East Front remains, including selling cornerstones for private homes.

The House-and Senate Office Building commissions, which determine how the Capitol itself is used, have jurisdiction over the remains. Congress has proposed several uses for the columns over the years. One of the more popular proposals has been to give them to the Department of Agriculture for a monument at the National Arboretum.

According to Elliott Carroll, administrative assistant to the architect of the Capitol, the East Front has been saved all these years so its stone would be available when Congress decides how to restore the West Front. But at least one House Building Commission staff member indicated that she was not aware the remains were in storage.

"Oh, the East Front," said Rita Hankins, who heads the House Building Commission, when asked about the stones and columns. "I do handle this but I haven't heard anything about them."

Sculptor only resident of historic Colorado town

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

AROYA, Colo. — Owen T. "Aroya Red" Moreland is a mayor, police chief and judge in this historic town on the eastern plans of Colorado.

"You name it, I'm it," Moreland said with a laugh.

He is the only one in town.

"Times got so rough in the late 1930s, everybody left but me," explained the 68-year-old lifelong resident of Aroya.

"This was a bustling burg in the old days. My folks ran the store, a filling station, a garage and the 20-room Aroya Hotel.

All that is left today is half a dozen abandoned, weather-beaten frame homes, the one-room Aroya School, the old store and garage and the basement of the old hotel.

The basement is Aroya Red's home.

"Everybody should live in a basement. It's more comfortable," insists Moreland, a lifelong bachelor. "It cuts down on fuel bills."

'Couch Potatoes' strive to live up to their motto

By BETH ANN KRIER
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

DIXON, Calif. — Here at the "country retreat" of the Couch Potatoes, the society for prolonged television viewing, four of the group's nine "elders" and one of the members have gathered to recline.

They are settled on a couch, circa 1952, in front of five television sets (two color and three black and white) stacked upon each other and tuned to: "Green Acres," an Elvis Presley movie, "CHiPs," "Gomer Pyle" and a vintage Red Skelton film. That's all the stations you can get this afternoon in Dixon, population 8,243, a city that sits between Sacramento and San Francisco and just west of the University of California, Davis. That is of some significance to the informed Couch Potato. Davis is where the TV dinner was invented.

The sound on each of the five televisions is turned down. "None of us ever watches fewer than three sets at once so we get very good at lip reading," explains elder Jack Mingo, who teaches grades 7 through 12 at a private school in Berkeley, Calif. He urges his students to watch TV as much as possible because "television is the vocation of the future."

THOUGH THE TV'S are silent, the stereo is playing an audio cassette of a 1965 TV show featuring the late talk show host Joe Pyne interviewing a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

On an end table, there is a toaster oven, since Couch Potatoes like to cook and view simultaneously. An open bottle of beer (not the Potatoes' private-label home brew, Viewmeister) rests on another table, next to a tray bearing the pictures of Lawrence Welk and the Lennon Sisters.

Part put-on artists, part pranksters, part missionaries "attempting to assuage the guilt of fellow addicts," the Potatoes have all dressed in official Couch Potato T-shirts bearing the group's insignia and motto, "Sic Semper Potatum Reclinus." Elder Robert Armstrong, who designed the emblem and permanently resides at the retreat, is also wearing a satin bathrobe and a fez.

There are no women here today and no women members in the Couch Potatoes. Women must join the ladies auxiliary, the Couch Tomatoes.

THE POTATOES have a request. They ask that any news story about them appear on the page opposite the television listings — otherwise, they fear, their members will miss it.

"A lot of people think we're a punk (rock) group," offers Mingo, the Potatoes' etiquette and advice expert. "We're not. Punk is much too active for Couch Potatoes."

The Potatoes claim they don't remember when they got started but the group may go back as far as 1976, at least conceptually. A Couch Potato insignia appearing in an underground comic book bears a 1976 copyright.

Choice of the name Couch Potatoes was actually quite logical, says Armstrong, an illustrator, underground cartoonist and musician with the Cheap Suit Serenaders. "It's perfect. Potatoes are tubers. They have many eyes. It came to us in a cosmic revelation."

Today, all it takes to join is to purchase a $1.25 Couch Potato button and send the names of our five all-time favorite TV shows to Armstrong at Rural Route 1, Dixon, Calif.

EVEN THOUGH, as Armstrong points out, it goes against the grain of a true Couch Potato to pick up a pen and write, about 180 people around the country have become Potatoes or Tomatoes. For another $1 initiates receive a copy of the Tuber's Voice, the illustrated Couch Potato newsletter, the first issue of which was published in late March.

British merchant seamen threaten to strike over pay

LONDON (AP) — Some 600 British merchant seamen manning requisitioned vessels off the Falklands Islands are threatening to strike because the government has withdrawn their war-zone bonuses now that the conflict with Argentina is over, the National Union of Seamen said.

"While the armed forces are returning to a hero's welcome, merchant seamen are being kept out in the battle zone indefinitely without the special bonus," said NUS General Secretary Jim Slater said earlier this week.

During the 74-day conflict, the seamen received a war bonus of 150 percent over normal pay rates. Slater claimed the government stopped the bonuses July 28.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Sunday, August 15, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Britain's Princess Anne, Miss Lillian Carter and Julia Child were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: actor Mike Connors ("Mannix" and "Today's FBI") and actress Abby Dalton ("Falcon Crest"). Applause, recognition and more clout should all be yours in the months ahead. A promotion is better than a new job. Stick to what you are doing and you will end up in the executive suite. Expand your involvement in community activities. Romance moves you in new directions and is filled with excitement. Joint financial ventures prove especially lucky. Share the limelight with loved ones. Family members draw closer together.

AIRES (March 21-April 19): Worry gets tossed aside in favor of creative effort. Expand your horizons through reading and research. A newspaper can provide a wealth of ideas.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A phone call brings great news regarding the folks at home. Avoid making hasty decisions. Long walks are favored over strenuous exercise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Greater independence is the key to happiness. Old friends give you new insights regarding a lingering problem. Discuss plans with mate or romantic partner.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You get along best with your romantic partner today. See old friends and make some new ones. Creative hobbies can become a source of additional income.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Earn yourself new financial freedom by building up your savings. Loved one may call you with good news in the later afternoon. Group activities are favored.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Getting away from your work today will revitalize you. Preserve existing partnerships and friendships. Make allowances for a loved one with a problem.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Help neighbors with difficult chores. Trust your intuition when trying to mend some broken fences. You hold your own in serious discussions and athletic contests.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You can now cash in on special family advantages. Postpone travel. Romance may have some sharp edges. Discussions with a spiritual adviser prove stimulating.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An older person could misconstrue what you say at a family reunion. To avoid embarrassment, watch your step. Set aside more time to play with small fry.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your intuition tells you a fascinating new way to make money. Look your best. Loved one makes a bid for your attention. Make certain you respond to it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Seek spiritual help and your problems will gradually fade into oblivion. Travel and visits are featured. Be sure to share expenses if driving long distance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do not let annoying pressures make you change your mind. Your intuition is right on target. Be sure you have the right directions before starting out on a day trip.

Governors dream of being president

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

AFTON, Okla. (AP) — The ranks of unemployed governors produced the last two presidents, a bit of political trivia tantalizing to the politicians who recently spent three days at a lakeside resort near here.

Rare is the governor who does not think that being president would be no more difficult than running a great big state.

Remember Jimmy Carter?

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. complained during a particularly frustrating moment in the Carter years that the president seemed to think dealing with Congress was no different than dealing with the Georgia Legislature.

During his campaign for the presidency, Ronald Reagan repeatedly cited his experience as governor of California as proof that he could handle the job of governing the United States.

After all, Reagan would tell audiences, if California were an independent nation, it would be economically, the seventh-largest in the world.

Gerald Ford got some mileage when he defeated Reagan in the race for the 1976 GOP presidential nomination with an ad that pointed out that as governor of California Reagan did not have access to nuclear weapons.

Now comes a new crop of governors harboring those same national ambitions that traditionally infect participants at governors' conferences.

This year, the meeting attracted former Gov. Reubin Askew of Florida, who is trying to take the Carter route to the White House. Askew has been unobtrusively criss-crossing the country in search of support for a 1984 presidential bid.

Tell Askew that no one seems to give him much of a chance and he'll point out that at this stage no one took Carter's presidential ambitions seriously.

But the real veteran of presidential campaigning to attend this conference was Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California.

At age 43, Brown has already made two unsuccessful runs for the Democratic presidential nomination.

He claims he has temporarily shelved his White House ambitions to concentrate on moving to the Senate, a prospect that so disturbs Reagan that he has given top priority to helping Brown's Republican opponent, Mayor Pete Wilson of San Diego.

Brown was uncharacteristically subdued at his final governors' conference. He sat quietly through a hearing at which Interior Secretary James Watt defended policies Brown bitterly opposes.

The chairman of the session, Democratic Gov. Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia, looked directly at Brown

An Analysis

when he told participants there was time for one more question. But Brown ignored the apparent invitation.

Another Brown with White House dreams is Gov. John Y. Brown of Kentucky, the fried chicken millionaire who is married to former Miss America, Phyllis George.

Brown devotes a lot of time and energy to helping fellow Democrats raise money, an activity sure to attract political allies.

And when it comes to money, Jay Rockefeller, quickly comes to mind. The West Virginia Democrat has shown the same willingness as his late Reublican uncle, Nelson, to spend whatever it takes to win. That prompted supporters of his GOP opponent in the last West Virginia governor's race, Arch Moore, to distribute bumper stickers that read: "Make Him Spend It All, Arch."

And the list goes on. Bruce Babbitt of Arizona and Richard Lamm of Colorado are two Democrats who get that gleam in their eyes when they talk about how neither presidents nor Congresses seem to understand how to deal with the problems of states and of the West in particular.

Governors of New York traditionally are presidential contenders from the day they take office.

But Hugh Carey passed up this, his final governor's conference, and will leave office without realistic hope that he will become one of those former governors who is called to greater things.

Sailplane enthusiasts soaring on cloud nine

EDITOR'S NOTE: Up, up and away. No traffic; no pollution. Floating like a butterfly. The sensations are heavenly, according to those who have taken up sailplanes for the sport of it.

By EARL BOHN

JULIAN, Pa. (AP) — Geography and German history endowed this hamlet with a rare prize, and it gives Doris Grove the time of her life.

About 310 million years ago, the forces that arrange the Earth's crust created a chain of mountain ridges that straddle the prevailing northwesterly winds for 450 miles from central Pennsylvania to eastern Tennessee.

Then the Germans lost World War I and in 1919 signed the Versailles Treaty, which prohibited them from maintaining their air force. So the network of engineers that gave the Red Baron his Fokker triplane turned to motorless aircraft, giving the world the sport of soaring and Germany an edge it still holds in designing sailplanes.

Today, Ms. Grove is one of the most proficient women in a sport that combines German ingenuity and the geographic oddity of Bald Eagle Ridge, which in unequalled for its length and favorable winds.

SHE IS A sailplane pilot, more precisely a ridge runner, who has soared a world record 700.7 miles from nearby Lock Haven to Tazewell, Tenn., and back without stopping.

She is a smiling, brown-eyed blonde who for as much of her time as she can manage sits sheathed in smooth fiberglass, bracketed in long, thin, white wings, borne on air.

"When you're soaring, you're up there in a cloud of your own. You're by yourself. No one can get to you. You don't have to get anything for anybody," said Ms. Grove, a mother of six.

"It's more relaxing than you'd believe. I'll tell you, it's nice," she says at the gliderport she and Tom Knauff operate here beside the ridge.

Ms. Grove is a champion in an arena where few women compete.

"Men dominate the sport. Doris is the first woman to fly over 1,000 kilometers. She's just the most famous woman soaring pilot in the world," says her admittedly biased partner in Ridge Soaring Inc.

"THERE'S NO reason why women can't excel," he says. "It has nothing to do with strength. It's intelligence."

"A lot of women just don't have the money or the time, I guess. If I can do it, anybody can do it," says Ms. Grove.

She dreamed of flying after taking her first plane ride at age 13, but her training got off to a slow start in 1972.

"The first two instructors wouldn't teach me because I was a woman. Then I took a glider ride, and nobody gave me a hassle," she says.

Today, Knauff and Ms. Grove make their livings teaching soaring and giving rides. For fun they break records. She has three world marks to her name. Knauff, a former car salesman, has 14 nationals and two worlds.

They are among an estimated 6,000 active sailplane pilots in the United States, according to Doug Lamont, editor of Soaring, a publication of the Soaring Society of America.

ONCE TOWED or winched aloft, sailplanes stay up because their wings, 40 to 70 feet long, generate abundant lift for aircraft that usually weigh between 250 pounds and 1,500 pounds. Without fuel, electric or hydraulic systems, there is little that can malfunction.

"You could take our whole training course in a couple weeks, and you could solo in a few days if you really wanted to push it, although we don't recommend that," says Knauff.

Most courses cover three months or more and cost about $1,000, a third the price of power flight lessons, he says.

Soaring typically suggests thermals, rising columns of air warmed by the sun. They do the work provided for powered planes by engines and propellers. Freshly plowed fields, asphalt parking lots, rocky areas, open country and deserts are their most common sources.

"Moist air rising is good thermals. Even snow on the ground can make good thermals," Ms. Grove says.

Thermals have lifted sailplanes to 25,000 feet. But inside a cumulus cloud, air currents are powerful enough to have torn apart a few sailplanes and hurled the pieces and the daring pilots out the bottom.

WAVE SOARING pushes sailplanes even higher. Waves occur when strong winds cross a mountain ridge perpendicularly, rising on the windward side and descending on the leeward only to rebound off a stable mass of low-lying air.

Paul Bikle rode a wave to a world record 46,267 feet near Lancaster, Calif., in 1961, the SSA says.

Ridge runners, meanwhile, get their lift on the windward side of a ridge where the air rises on its way over the top.

Slope soaring, as it's also known, dates to the beginning of powered flight in the sea breezes above the big sand dunes at Kitty Hawk, N.C., says Lamont.

"In 1911, ostensibly to test a system of controls, Orville Wright went to Kitty Hawk and flew for almost 11 minutes, actually soared, above his launching point. This was slope soaring," Lamont says.

There's no place for ridge soaring like the eastern edge of the Allegheny Mountains, says Knauff. The ancient ridge doesn't top 4,500 feet, but its face is worn smooth and the lift is reliable.

"OTHER PLACES have ridges, but they're only a few miles long. They're not connected for 450 miles. Actually, these aren't all connected. We do have our obstacles to cross," he says.

Ridge runners zip along at 100 mph and sometimes faster several hundred feet above the tree tops. When the ridge lift gives out at gaps in the mountain, the pilots have to feel for thermals, climb and glide across to the next ridge.

GE brings good things to life.

MICRO-TIP... LOW CALORIE COOKING
DID YOU KNOW... that calorie-conscious cooks have a real friend in the microwave oven. Dieters can enjoy the true flavor of microwaved fish, fresh vegetables, chicken and other foods by microwaving them without fats or oils. Low calorie dishes can also be prepared in quantity, frozen, and then microwaved quickly in controlled portions. And a microwave oven will reheat single portions more energy efficiently than a large, conventional oven. As you can see, microwaving and low calorie cooking are natural partners.

MICRO-TIP... HOT HORS d' OEUVRES
DID YOU KNOW... that your microwave oven can be the hit of your next party? Set out all the fixing's for hors d' oeuvres or sandwiches and let your guests build their own snacks. Then a few seconds in the microwave and they have a hot, taste-tempting treat. If you use paper plates and wooden or plastic skewers, you can cook with them in the microwave and throw them away later for little or no clean-up!

MICRO-TIP... HISTORY OF THE MICROWAVE OVEN
DID YOU KNOW... that microwave cooking appliances have been on the market for over 35 years? The early microwave ovens were large, expensive, water-cooled units used mainly by restaurants and institutional kitchens. The development of air-cooled units in the 1950's meant that smaller less expensive microwave ovens could be made, resulting in the countertop models for home use that were introduced in the 1960's. Microwave oven sales exploded in the 1970's, growing from sales of 90 thousand in 1971 to over 3.3 million in 1980. Clearly, the microwave oven is an appliance whose time has come.

MICRO-TIP... GENERAL INFORMATION
DID YOU KNOW... that some foods microwave so well that you may never want to cook them any other way? Vegetables retain their attractive color, fresh taste and natural texture when cooked in a microwave oven. Fish steam tender and moist in their own natural juices, without additional water, for delicate flavor and pleasing texture. Bacon microwaves crisp, brown and flat on paper towels. You don't have to turn it over, drain it or scour a crusty pan. And leftovers stay moist and taste freshly cooked. In these and many other ways, the microwave is truly an exceptional cooking appliance.

MICRO-TIP... SOFTEN FOODS
DID YOU KNOW... that you can use your microwave oven to rapidly soften foods which tend to harden and lose some of their flavor when chilled? Butter, cream cheese and leftover icings and frostings are more "spreadable" when microwaved for a few seconds. Hard ice cream is more easily scooped, and blocks of cheese more easily sliced when warmed in the microwave. And cheese makers say cheese tastes best when served at room temperature. With a microwave oven, it only takes a few seconds to serve these foods the way your family likes them.

MICRO-TIP... ENERGY SAVINGS
DID YOU KNOW... that many foods can be prepared in a microwave oven at a greater energy savings? For example, hamburgers microwave with only 10% of the energy required to prepare them in a conventional oven. Chicken pieces and meatloaf require only 2/3 of the conventionally used energy when microwaved, and brownies microwave with only 1/4 of the energy needed in a conventional oven. Not only does a microwave oven save energy, but the results are delicious.

'Netsuke:' Ancient art of carving

By KAY TATEISHI

TOKYO (AP) — Were it not for Raymond Bushell, an American lawyer in Tokyo, "I probably would have been just another craftsman, struggling with a dying art," says the man known as Masatoshi, Japan's pre-eminent carver of "netsuke," or tiny sculptures.

Thus, as with the Japanese art of woodblock printing, it was left to a foreigner to rediscover the highly detailed creations, mostly of ivory and wood, that are small enough to fit in the palm of a hand and have become latter-day collectors' items.

Recently, at the first one-man exhibit ever by a netsuke carver, crowds examined 373 miniature carvings in glass cases arranged on walls of a pearl store gallery. It was the finest hour for Masatoshi, 66, real name Tokisada Nakamura, who is widely recognized by both Japanese and foreign experts as the finest netsuke carver in Japan.

The art itself is an ancient one. The tiny carvings were used in medieval Japan as toggles to hold a tobacco pouch, purse or laquered machine box to the obi, or sash, of a man's kimono. The custom faded when Japan adopted Western ways during the Meiji Restoration of the late 19th century, and turned away from such things as old-style clothing, the samurai topknot hairdo and sword.

Masatoshi, small, shy, somewhat nervous, but with a sense of humor, began learning netsuke carving at 16 from his father, Kuya, a noted carver of Buddhist images.

"One day," Masatoshi said, "my father decided my carvings had some commercial value." With his father's help, he set up his own workshop.

Then came World War II. Conscripted twice but discharged both times for health reasons, he worked as a lathe operator until Japan's surrender in 1945.

After the war, he and his father returned to netsuke. With no ivory available, they scrounged for other materials, even worked with billiard balls and plectrums of the samisen, a three-stringed, banjo-like instrument.

Postwar Japan was struggling, and the only market was among members of the Allied Occupation Forces, who found Japanese works of art plentiful and cheap.

At that time, a netsuke could be bought in Tokyo for a few dollars. Today a miniature signed by Masatoshi may go for $10,000 or more.

Bushell, who arrived in Japan as captain of a U.S. Navy air-sea rescue ship in September 1945, and later served as a U.S. Forces legal officer in Kyoto before settling down in Japan, said his interest in netsuke began when he read a book by M. A. Jonas, an Englishman.

In an interview, Masatoshi described his meeting in 1952 with the man who would eventually become his patron. Bushell had bought a netsuke titled "demon" for less than $10 in an antique shop and went looking for the artist who signed his name "Mitsumasa."

"Mitsumasa was my first artist signature," Masatoshi said. "There are very few carvings with that signature." Their meeting was the start of a long friendship.

Bushell persuaded Masatoshi to keep records of his carvings. According to these, he made about 672 from 1938 through 1981, based on what Bushell has collected and those he knows to be in other collections.

As a solitary craftsman, Masatoshi prefers working at night. He works five to seven hours at a stretch and averages about 15 to 16 netsuke a year.

His works include goblins, owls, Kabuki heroes and Edo period (18th and 19th century) entertainers. But he prefers the grotesque and the humorous, often browsing through old Japanese books or drawings or studying other netsuke for ideas. He also attends traditional Kabuki, Noh or Bunraku (doll) plays, and scouts museums, exhibitions, the zoo and aquarium for ideas, carrying a camera.

Masatoshi uses 224 individual tools — saws, files, chisels, drills, and knives — but no power tools. "All the power and energy," he says, "should emanate from the craftsman."

Materials include elephant tusks, stag antler, whale tooth, rhinoceros horn, boxwood and teak. After a year's work Masatoshi has just completed a set of 16 "Rakan" (Buddha's Disciples) carved out of Burmese elephant tusk. He feels the set is a highlight of his career.

Bushell has written six books on netsuke and has just published one on Masatoshi, which discloses secrets as told by the craftsman.

But Masatoshi has never taught netsuke carving, nor does he intend to pass on the methods handed down from feudal times. His son is an office worker with no interest in netsuke.

Agriculturist's pet is a real ham

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — When Leland Orfield showed up at dog-obedience school this spring there were some surprised stares from the other pet owners.

Orfield was there to train his pet pig, Laura.

"There were 20 dogs, Laura and myself," Orfield said. "Guess who ranked at the top of the class? Laura, of course."

Orfield, 74, has become a familiar sight to the dog walkers, joggers, hikers and bikers who regularly promenade around Lake Harriet in a residential area of southwest Minneapolis.

Most everyone who has lived on the west side of the lake in the past 10 years or so is used to seeing Orfield with his "pig of the year" walking on a leash by his side.

"I usually get a new pig every spring, train and keep it eight weeks until it weighs 60 pounds or so and then take it back to the University of Minnesota where I got it," he explained.

Laura, however, recently went into retirement at the new Minnesota Zoological Garden in Apple Valley.

Before Laura, there were Heidi, Paul, Ronald, Amy and others. The pigs have lived in a specially built shed attached to Orfield's garage.

"I usually pick the name of some neighbor," Orfield said with a chuckle. This year's pig was named by Orfield's 5-year-old granddaughter, Laura.

A pig may seem an unusual choice for a pet, especially in the city, but Orfield points out that the pig is the 10th most intelligent of the warm-blooded animals — "One notch smarter than a dog, and cats aren't even in the show."

Orfield takes his pig to area schools and libraries where he puts on a show to acquaint children with farm animals, the real reason he trains his annual pig.

Orfield has been involved in agriculture all his life, teaching in small towns in Minnesota and then owning farms in North Dakota and real estate in Minneapolis.

About 10 years ago, Orfield became a community resource volunteer. When he was asked what his specialty was, he said farm animals. Which one? Pigs.

So he is booked into schools and libraries to put on his pig show.

"I guess about 6,000 children will have seen Laura," he said as he watched the pig untie the laces on a child's shoes. "Better tell her to let go or she'll eat them up," he told the child.

Laura did let go, with a regretful "oink."

Orfield always reassures his audience that his pigs will not be used for pork chops, but will contribute to the pleasure and education of people and live long lives doing it.

The children pet Laura, feed her, get their shoe laces untied, get her to roll over and walk her on a leash.

"She loves it," said Orfield, as he watched Laura show off.

"Pigs are real hams."

READING, Pa. (AP) — Friday the 13th is just another 13 in the life of Charles Ludwig.

"I don't look for the number 13, it just pops up all the time," said Ludwig, whose string of coincidences with the usually unlucky number began with his birth on the 13th day of a month and year he wouldn't disclose.

About two decades later, on Jan. 13, 1958, Ludwig says, he was assigned by the U.S. Army to Fort Jackson, S.C., for basic training, and he was married a month later on Feb. 13.

After the service, Ludwig became fire dispatcher 13 at Wells Fargo Alarm Services in this southeastern Pennslylvania community.

"I certainly couldn't help being born on the 13th, and when I was hired at Wells Fargo, 13 was the only dispatcher number open," said Ludwig, whose first and last names add up to 13 letters — of course.

Ludwig moved to 1013 Cherry Street and opened an advertising business whose telephone number ends in 13.

The chances of such a string of coincidences is about one in 65.7 billion, according to Robert W. Poole, an accountant at Reading Area Community College.

"I haven't paid much attention to it," Ludwig said. "Most people don't like the number, but it doesn't bother me. If it did, I'd be in bad shape."

Shaking hands for solidarity

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

National Football League players met at midfield for union solidarity handshakes at two preseason games Friday night despite management warnings of fines.

The Cincinnati Bengals and Kansas City Chiefs, playing at Arrowhead Stadium, and the St. Louis Cardinals and Seattle Seahawks, at the Kingdome, followed the lead set by the New Orleans Saints and Houston Oilers Thursday night.

Players at the Bengals-Chiefs and Cardinals-Seahawks games crossed the field after the National Anthem and shook hands. Booing at Kansas City was reported to be scattered, but in Seattle the crowd reaction was more negative.

At Seattle, some of the players raised their arms and clenched fists. They were joined on the field by several injured players in street clothes.

Seattle quarterback Jim Zorn and wide receiver Steve Largent, who have said they won't join in any players' strike, also were among the handshakers.

Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Council, called the action "precedent-setting. There is a provision against fraternization before a game. It's in the constitution and bylaws of the league and it's been there a long time."

Donlan, who attended the Seattle game, added, "It comes under the heading of 'no big deal.' But my feeling is that this all belongs on the bargaining table."

The NFL Players Association said Friday that if players are fined by the teams for skaking hands with opponents, it could lead to a job action.

Ed Garvey, NFLPA executive director, also said the union would file an unfair labor practices complaint against the league's Management Council with the National Labor Relations Board because the council advised all NFL clubs to fine any players who participated in pregame handshakes with opponents.

Jim Miller, spokesman for the Management Council, said the players face a minimum fine of $100 for participating in any formal union demonstration at exhibition games.

As for the possibility of a job action, Miller said, "We've been hearing for months they're planning on missing practices and delaying games."

Seattle Seahawks Coach Jack Patera has told his players they faced fines if they shook hands with the Cardinals.

PLAYERS WITH the Miami Dolphins and Washington Redskins have said they, too, will display their solidarity by shaking hands before their preseason contest Saturday night.

"Before virtually every game, there will be a handshake," said Garvey, who added that the threat of fines is "unlawful. Players have right to this activiity.

"We will file charges of unfair labor practices with the NLRB against the Management Council. If they actually do carry out fines, we may consider a job action, which could be a walkout or missing practice.

"At this point, it's just speculative. We have to see whether they carry out the fines."

Garvey emphasized that the players have not backed down from the "threatening" by the Management Council.

"I think this will put to rest discussion about the lack of unity among the players," he said. "Each team threatened and the players decided to go forward (with the handshakes).

Meanwhile, the Atlanta Falcons boycotted an annual security meeting with NFL officials Friday in a solidarity stance and Coach Leeman Bennett said the players would be fined. Jeff Van Note, a vice president of the union, and Falcons player representative Mike Kenn informed Bennett of their intentions earlier in the week.

"The meeting had nothing to do with football," said Van Note. "And it has nothing to do with the Atlanta Falcons. This is an NFL meeting and right now it is the subject of collective bargaining agreement and there is no bargaining agreement."

Miami Dolphins vice president-coach Don Shula said he was opposed to the planned display of solidarity by his players, who agreed to shake hands with Washington Redskin players before the kickoff in their Saturday night exhibition.

"I'll take whatever action I deem appropriate, if and when," said Shula.

The NFLPA claimed players on "nearly all other" teams have now agreed to the handshake before the remaining exhibition games.

NFLPA President Gene Upshaw, a guard with the Raiders, responded to the Managment Council's warning about fines for causing disturbances that delay start of exhibition games.

"Obviously directed at the pregame handshake ceremony that the players have started, the action by management is in marked contrast to almost every professional sport in America," said Upshaw. "The handshake between opponents has become an important part of the opening tip in basketball, the meeting of boxers in the center of the ring, and in all other sports where sportsmanship and respect for your opponent is important to the game.

"We intend to continue this gesture of respect for other players in the NFL and to show solidarity for our union."

The union also quoted an unnamed Oiler as saying, "It feels like we've been let out of jail. We were able to show respect for our fellow players and demonstrate leadership."

On Monday night, Chicago visits San Diego.

On Thursday, after the players shook hands, Houston nipped New Orleans 22-20.

The Jets will be without their two All-Pro defensive linemen, sack specialists Joe Klecko and Mark Gastineau, against the Packers. Each has tendinitis of the knee.

The Raiders, who appear to be headed to Los Angeles from Oakland this season — though the NFL still refuses to acknowledge that — open their preseason schedule, ironically, in the Bay Area. They take on the Super Bowl champion 49ers in a nationally televised game. The Raiders can expect little support from the crowd at Candlestick Park.

Several highly touted rookies will make their NFL debuts Saturday, including top pick Kenneth Sims of New England and Heisman Trophy winner Marcus Allen of the Raiders. Also debuting in the NFL will be Cleveland linebacker Tom Cousineau, the first pick in the 1979 draft who spurned Buffalo and played the last three seasons with Montreal of the Canadian Football League.

Chiefs defeat Bengals 26-20 in exhibition

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Nick Lowery kicked four field goals and Carlos Carson caught two touchdown passes from Bill Kenney Friday night, lifting Kansas City to a 26-20 National Football League exhibition victory over the defending American Conference champion Cincinnati Bengals.

The Bengals and Chiefs ran to each other following the national anthem and shook hands at midfield in a show of support for the players' union. The crowd of 39,815 booed briefly.

Lowery was perfect in four attempts as the two AFC rivals opened their exhibition season, connecting on kicks of 24, 27, 46 and 36 yards.

The Chiefs, who are coming off a 9-7 finish, their best since 1973, took a 23-10 lead at intermission and added Lowery's fourth field goal late in the fourth quarter.

Kenney, who was expected to battle Steve Fuller for the quarterback job, connected with Carson on scoring tosses of 5 and 21 yards.

Jim Breech kicked field goals of 50 and 36 yards for Cincinnati. Turk Schonert threw a 13-yard scoring pass to Isaac Curtis in the second quarter and Jack Thompson fired a 2-yard scoring strike to Dan Ross in the fourth.

Cowboys host Bills tonight

Landry calls this a 'rebuilding season'

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys, who have dominated the Buffalo Bills when it counted, host the American Conference club tonight in the first preseason matchup between the two National Football League teams.

The Cowboys are 3-0 against Buffalo in regular season encounters.

The Bills lost to Dallas 27-14 last November on a Monday night as Tony Dorsett rushed 28 times for 117 yards and scored on a 73-yard touchdown pass from Danny White.

"It's always difficult to begin the preseason with a playoff-tested team like the Cowboys," said Buffalo Coach Chuck Knox. "They are so versatile and do such a variety of things on offense and defense that preparing for them is a tremendous challenge."

Knox has a 7-10 career regular-season record against the Cowboys.

BUFFALO WAS 10-6 last year and earned a wild card berth in the AFC playoffs where they were eliminated by Cincinnati.

The Cowboys were 12-4 and defeated by San Francisco in the NFC title game.

"This is a rebuilding season," says Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "We're rebuilding the defense in that we need replacements for two our key starters, (linebacker) D.D. Lewis and (strong safety) Charlie Waters. We'll suffer from inexperience."

Landry has been pleased with the progress of the Cowboys in their Thousand Oaks, Calif., training camp.

"Camp has progressed very well," he said. "I'm not displeased with any facet.

"Our passing game has been extremely good. (Quarterback) Danny White is throwing as well deep as he has in a long time."

Some 5,000 fans were expected for the 8 p.m. CDT kickoff in 65,101-seat Texas Stadium.

Buffalo acquired Arthur Whittington, the former Southern Methodist star, from Oakland on waivers because starting running back Joe Cribbs has not reported.

Three quarterbacks battling for backup positions behind Joe Ferguson will get long looks. They are Matt Robinson, Gene Bradley and Matt Kofler.

White was expected to play a quarter for the Cowboys followed by Gary Hogeboom.

Hogeboom created quite a stir in Dallas' training camp when his contract was renegotiated for $185,000 a year although he has yet to throw a pass in the NFL.

Diablos step on Cubs with boss watching

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

When the boss is in town, you like to put your best foot forward, but when the Midland Cubs tried to stick out that foot for the visiting Dallas Green, general manager of the Chicago Cubs, at Cubs Stadium Friday night, the El Paso Diablos stepped on it.

The big boss from Chicago is in Midland for a couple of games to see some of his farm goods first hand. What he saw Friday was two eighth inning homers by the Diablos that was good for five runs and an eventual 12-8 victory over Midland.

The victory solidified the hold on first place the Diablos enjoy in the Texas League West and the Cubs dug a deeper hole for themselves, now fighting from four games out instead of the two had they won this one.

The Cubs blew leads of 6-3 and 8-6 in the game as the bullpen gave up six runs to the Diablos, who waited patiently to take the lead in the eighth when Kurt Kingsolver connected off the Taco Bell clock in left off Tom Smith for his 12th homer of the year and Mark Corey, who knocked in four runs, later hit a three-run blast off Mike Thompson, making Smith (3-5) the loser. It was only Corey's third homer of the year for El Paso, but it was the one that stung.

El Paso added an unneeded run in the ninth when Dan Davidsmier scored from third on a wild pitch by Thompson.

El Paso has an awesome 143 homers for the year and three of them came in this game. Davidsmier walloped his 10th of the year off Cub starter Randy Clark in the sixth inning. Clark had pitched well up to that point, but the two-out blast finished Clark.

El Paso got three runs, two unearned in the third off Clark when the Diablos took advantage of three hits, an error and a couple of wild pitches by Clark.

It was Midland who dominated early. They got an unearned run in the first when Joe Carter scored from third on a wild pitch off starter Jamie Cocanower and got another in the third without a base hit as Henry Cotto walked, stole second, moved to third on a grounder and scored on a sacrifice fly by Carter.

Mike Kelley highlighted a four-run fourth for the Cubs with a three-run double. Owen and Carter later drove in runs in the fifth and sixth. Carter had three hits and three RBI, including his 22nd homer in the sixth.

Dave Grier (9-8) got the win in relief while Bob Gibson earned his 14th save, tying the El Paso record set by Billy Wilson in 1977.

The 1,518 fans on hand gave Midland a record total of 55,150 in-park fans this year with nine dates left. The Cubs set a record last year with 53,911. The Cubs also had eight rainouts this year compared to two last season.

The two teams meet again today in a 7:30 p.m. game.

Norris sets Hartford 36-hole record

By PETER S.HAWES
Associated Press Writer

WETHERSFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Tim Norris fired a 7-under-par 64 Friday to increase his lead to three strokes after two rounds of play in the $300,000 Sammy Davis Jr.-Greater Hartford Open.

Norris, who held a one-stroke lead after the opening round, had a 36-hole total of 127, 15 under par. That score set a two-round record for the 6,534-yard Wethersfield Country Club course and tied the low 36-hole total on this year's PGA tour.

Despite Norris' record-setting pace, PGA champion Ray Floyd and Gavin Levenson managed to stay close to the leader as both finished the second round tied at 130.

Levenson, 28, of South Africa, shot a hole-in-one on the par-3 fifth and birdied seven other holes Friday to shoot a 7-under-par 64. He was 13 under with one hole to play, but bogeyed the 18th after a drive into the trees.

Floyd, meanwhile, shot his second 65 of the tournament. He missed several birdie putts Friday and said, "I guess we always dream of the round you make all those putts. If I'd made them, I could have been in the 50s."

Eighty-one golfers advanced to final two rounds on Saturday and Sunday as the cut was made at 3-undeg-par 139.

Among those making the cut were Mark McNulty and D.A. Weibring, who each shot 65s on Friday to stay within four strokes of Norris.

Eight players were at 10-under par, including Mark Calcavecchia and Bill Britton, who had shared second place after the first round, and defending champ Hubert Green.

Calcavecchia shot an erratic 3-under-par 68 to give him a two-day total of 132. Britton shot 68 on Friday, while Green bogeyed two holes on his way to his second consecutive 66.

"I'm hitting stupid shots and I bogeyed two holes I shouldn't have. A few years ago, I wouldn't have bogeyed those holes. That's what happens when you're mentally tired," Green said.

Norris, whose first two rounds were his best ever on the Professional Golfers' Association tour, eagled one hole and birdied five others Friday. His 127 was one stroke lower than the course record for 36 holes that was shot by Phil Hancock in the 1978 GHO.

"The fun is just starting now," Norris said.

The 24-year-old El Paso, Texas, golfer began at the 10th tee Friday and birdied four of the first nine holes he played. After sinking a 15-foot putt for an eagle on the par-5 second hole, Norris played steady golf the rest of the way with six pars and one birdie.

"All those pars felt like bogeys after yesterday," said Norris, who shot a 63 Thursday.

Norris missed 14 PGA events early in the season because of a sprained right hand. He has won $3,550 this year, having finished only four tournaments.

Levenson, whose hole-in-one was the second of his career and first on the tour, didn't even know his seven-iron drive had landed in the cup on the straight, 175-yard fifth hole.

"When it hit, I said, 'Go in.' It pitched about an inch. I didn't see it come past the hole and the people went mad around the green," he said.

Weaver, Cobb fight on again

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — The World Boxing Association heavyweight title fight between champion Mike Weaver and Randy Cobb, twice postponed by injuries, will take place Oct.23 in Las Vegas, Nev., the fight's promoter said Friday.

Ron Weathers, a spokesman for Tapco Promotions Inc. of El Paso, said the afternoon fight will take place in the Caesars Palace outdoor stadium and will be shown live on CBS-TV.

Weaver will receive $1 million for the fight, while Cobb will get $500,000, Weathers said.

The Weaver-Cobb bout was originally scheduled for June 2 in Atlantic City, N.J., but was delayed when Weaver injured his hand. The fight was rescheduled for July 25 at Caesars, but was again delayed when Cobb — ranked eighth by the WBA — suffered a split lip.

The WBA championship committee then changed its mind several times before deciding to grant a second extension to permit the Weaver-Cobb fight. The committee had refused at first to allow a 90-day extension.

Rival promoter Don King has gone to court in an attempt to block the Weaver-Cobb fight. King contends that he has signed the WBA's top-ranked contender, Michael Dokes, to fight Weaver.

King is suing in federal court to force the WBA to impose a rule that would require Weaver to defend his title against Dokes.

King's request for an injunction against the Weaver-Cobb fight will be heard Sept.7 by U.S. District Court Judge William Conner in New York.

"King has done everything he can to sabotage the Weaver-Cobb fight," Weathers said. "But this fight is going to occur on Oct.23."

Dynago Victory wins Futurity trial race

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (AP) — Dynago Victory stayed in the running for the upcoming All-American Futurity at Ruidoso Downs racetrack Friday by racing to a victory in a trial race.

All races Friday were run at 440 yards, and each was part of the first-round elimination trials for the All-American.

In order to advance into the final round on Aug. 26, a hopeful had to finish in the top three in the first round. The All-American comes up on Labor Day, offering a gross purse of $1,530,000 and handling the winner a $1 million.

Dynago Victory raced in Friday's ninth race and jumped into a half-length lead under Jerry Nicodemus. His lead dwindled steadily at the end, but he was a head in front when he hit the wire in a no-wind clocking of 22.57 seconds.

The colt, owned by Clarence Scharbauer Jr. of Midland, Texas, returned mutuel payoffs of $2.60, $2.40, $2.20.

Shaken Not Stirred, the beaten favorite in the recent $728,085 Rainbow Futurity, also gained a berth in the Aug. 26 runoff.

Evert Lloyd has to work harder to beat Vermaak

ATLANTA (AP) — Chris Evert Lloyd defeated Yvonne Vermaak of Australia 6-3, 6-1 Friday in the third round of the $100,000 Atlanta Women's Tennis Classic.

Lloyd's decision over Vermaak forced her to extend herself for the first time in the tournament, played at the Peachtree World of Tennis in suburban Norcross.

Before running into Vermaak, Lloyd easily handled first and second round opponents Kim Jones and Peanut Louie, who managed to win only two games between them.

But Vermaak threw a first set scare into the tournament's top seed before Lloyd's baseline precision proved too much to overcome.

The hard-hitting Vermaak, the tournament's sixth seed, traded a pair of service breaks with her opponent before being broken in the seventh game of the first set. Lloyd, who will play Mary Lou Piatek in Saturday's semifinals, proceeded to run out the set with three straight games.

After Vermaak held service in the second game of the second set, Lloyd's consistency quickly began to wear the South African down.

Piatek, the No.4 seed, defeated local favorite Wendy White 6-2, 6-4 in another third round match Friday. Susan Mascarin, who defeated Dianne Fromholtz 6-3, 4-6, 6-2, will play qualifier Dana Gilbert in Saturday's other semifinal match. Gilbert beat No.5 seed Ann Kiyomura Thursday.

The finals are scheduled for Sunday.

Davis upsets Amaya to gain Westen Tennis Classic semis

CLEVELAND (AP) — Unseeded Scott Davis upset sixth-seeded Victor Amaya 6-4, 6-4 Friday in quarterfinal singles play in the Western Tennis Classic.

In another singles upset, eighth-seeded Robert Van't Hof topped third-seeded Hank Pfister 7-6, 6-4.

Top-seeded Sandy Mayer downed David Siegler 6-1, 6-7, 6-3. Mayer injured his shoulder in the third set, but it did not seem to affect his play. He took a three-minute injury timeout and was treated by the tour physician.

In the only other singles match of the day, seventh-seeded Tim Wilkison bested Andy Kohlberg 7-5, 6-1.

In quarterfinal doubles action, the top-seeded team of Amaya and Pfister defeated unseeded Brad Guan and Warren Maher, both of Australia, 6-4, 6-1.

Larry Stefanki and Van't Hof downed Siegler and Vince Van Patten 6-1, 6-2.

In semifinals doubles play, Matt Mitchell and Craig Wittus defeated second-seeded Mayer and Terry Moor 7-6, 3-6, 6-1.

Additional semifinals are scheduled Saturday in both singles and doubles play. Finals will be played Sunday.

Sonics release scout, assistant coach

SEATTLE (AP) — Dave Harshman, head scout and assistant coach of the Seattle SuperSonics, has been releaased, the National Basketball Association club announced Friday.

"It was a financial decision," Sonics' principal owner Sam Schulman said Thursday. "We lost a considerable amount of money last year.

"If we are going to put our money into players, we are going to find it necessary to cut wherever else we can.

"In years past, we've been able to operate without a scout or an assistant assistant coach. There are ways to do it that are considerably cheaper than we did it last year."

Harshman, 35, son of University of Washington head Coach Marv Harshman, worked for the Sonics for one season.

When reached in Los Angeles, where he still is coaching the Los Angeles Summer Professional team, that the Sonics jointly operate with Golden State, Harshman refused comment.

Although the Sonics have led the NBA in attendance for four straight years, they announced previously they are raising ticket prices by 33 percent next season.

Pironi improving after accident in German GP

HEIDELBERG, West Germany (AP) — French Grand Prix racing driver Didier Pironi, severely injured in a crash during practice for the German Grand Prix last weekend, is improving and will probably be moved to a Paris hospital next Monday, the West German sports agency SID said Friday.

The agency report, quoting unidentified sources, said no further complications were expected on Pironi's path to recovery, although it is unlikely the French star, who currently heads the Grand Prix standings, will ever race again.

Pironi's car somersaulted off the track during a training run held in driving rain Saturday.

There's now a race for American League rookie honors

Rangers' Hostetler, Mariners' Vande Berg giving Twins' Hrbek run for money

An AP Sports Analysis
By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Every March, they come to major league training camps, unknown, untried and inexperienced. Enthusiasm and malleability are their assets. And each September, several emerge as the bright, young stars of tomorrow.

There might be a Carl Yastrzemski or Nolan Ryan among them. There could be a Pete Rose or Jim Palmer in the crop.

Last season, Fernando Valenzuela of the Los Angeles Dodgers and Dave Righetti of the New York Yankees, both pitchers, won their league's Rookie of the Year honors. This year, the battle for recognition among baseball's rookies seems to be among the hitters.

Back in June, the American League rookie award was all but conceded to Kent Hrbek, a 22-year-old first baseman for the Minnesota Twins who was named to the league's All-Star squad. Hrbek is hitting .317, seventh in the league, with 18 homers and 68 RBI through games of Wednesday.

That was in June. Now, there's a race in the American League.

Dave Hostetler, 27-year-old first baseman for the Texas Rangers, is swinging one of the hottest home-run bats in the major leagues. Since coming up to the parent club late in May, Hostetler has hit 20 homers and driven in 52 runs, playing in 27 fewer games than Hrbek. If he maintained his current rate, Hostetler would come close to the major league rookie record of 38 homers.

HOSTETLER CAME to the Rangers as the throw-in in the deal that sent first-baseman Al Oliver to Montreal for third baseman Larry Parrish, whom the Rangers converted into a right fielder.

"I thought I had a shot to make it in Montreal, but it's worked out perfect," Hostetler says. "I've gotten the opportunity to play every day, and hopefully I'll be with Texas for a long time."

Rangers Manager Darrell Johnson says Hostetler has made his greatest strides in adjusting to major league pitching.

"He always had the power, but he has doubled his knowledge of hitting," Johnson says. "He's made a lot of adjustments. He'll make a lot more, but he's already made a lot since he's been with us."

THERE'S STILL one more name to consider in the American League — Ed Vande Berg of the Seattle Mariners. Vande Berg, a 24-year-old southpaw, leads the league in appearances with 54, teaming with Bill Caudill to form one of the league's most effective bullpens.

Vande Berg has an earned run average of 2.31 and a record of 6-4 with two saves. Watch him.

The National League's is a more wide-open race.

Names commonly mentioned are Johnny Ray of Pittsburgh and Steve Sax of Los Angeles. Both are second basemen and both have chances to become the first men since 1962 to get 200 hits in their rookie National League seasons. Dick Allen had 201 in his rookie season for Philadelphia. Ray currently has 137, Sax 136.

Ray and Sax each had large shoes to fill. Ray, hitting .300 with 50 RBI, replaced Phil Garner, whom the Pirates traded to Houston for him. Sax, hitting .283 with 37 RBI and 39 stolen bases, broke up the Dodgers' decade-old infield by replacing Davey Lopes, who was traded to Oakland.

One other NL rookie, San Francisco outfielder Chili Davis, also is on target for a 200-hit season. Davis has 123 hits, 57 RBI and 11 homers for Frank Robinson's rookie-laden squad, although his batting average has dipped to .268.

Another Giant with an outside shot at rookie honors is Bill Laskey, a right-handed pitcher with a record of 11-8, an ERA of 2.52 and a walks-to-strikeouts ratio of 32-to-72. Laskey came to the Giants as a throw-in from Kansas City for Vida Blue.

And we're not done yet. The St. Louis Cardinals and Philadelphia Phillies also would like to make nominations.

OUTFIELDERS WILLIE McGee of St. Louis and Bob Dernier of Philadelphia each have distinguished themselves. McGee is hitting .322 with 36 RBI in 76 games, while Dernier has set the rookie base-stealing pace with 40.

So, who remembers 1981? Valenzuela? That pudgy kid from Mexico? He's 15-8 with a 2.83 ERA and a chance to win his second straight Cy Young Award. And Righetti? The fastballer from San Jose? He's 6-5 with a 3.83 ERA, once relegated to the bullpen and once to the minors this season.

Oh, well. Not all these rookies will become Carl Yastrzemskis or Nolan Ryans, Pete Roses or Jim Palmers — that's for sure. One other thing's for sure, too. Some of them will.

Pair of 68s gives Daniel five-stroke Classic lead

JERICHO, N.Y. (AP) — Beth Daniel, shooting a second straight 68 on Friday, assumed a 5-stroke lead after two rounds of the $125,000 WUI Classic at the Meadowbrook Club.

The 25-year-old Daniel, already the winner of four titles on the LPGA tour, started the day in second place, but her 136 put her five shots ahead of Lynn Adams, who had a par-72 on the 6,347-yard course. Adams was at 141.

Martha Hansen and Dianne Dailey, who shared third place with Adams on Thursday at 69, had identical 73s and were tied for third at 142.

Carole Jo Callison, the opening-day leader with a 67, shot 76 to fall into a three-way deadlock for fifth place at 143. Marty Dickerson and veteran Dot Germain, each of whom had a 72, tied Callison, who scored a 3-over 39 on the back nine.

Defending champion Donna Caponi, winless in 19 tournaments this year, rebounded with a 72 after shooting a 78 on Thursday and was at 150.

An inner ear infection caused Sally Little to withdraw prior to the start of Friday's play. Little, this year's leading money-winner with $213,010, and also a four-time winner this year, shot an opening-round 76.

The field of 98 was trimmed to 70 (with ties) for the final 36 holes. A two-day total of 153 was good enough to continue.

Daniel, who has earned more than $200,000 in each of the last two years, had six birdies. Her two bogeys both caame on three putts from 20 feet, on the 13th and 18th holes.

The 1978 graduate of Furman has missed only three greens through the first two rounds, one of them being the 16th Friday.

"This is definitely still a golf tournament," explained Daniel, 1980 Player of the Year, when she captured four events en route to setting a single-year earnings record of $231,000.

"Five strokes is not that much of a lead with two days to go. It's not even that much of a lead on the final day. I won't have a problem of being overconfident."

Is Daniel surprised by the size of her advantage?

"I expect to be this far under par when I'm playing this well," she said. "Actually, I'd like to be a few more under par.

"And I could be because I'm playing very steady. That's evident when you only miss three greens."

On the 16th, Daniel recovered for a par-4 and immediately followed with a birdie-4 before missing a two-foot putt to close out the round with a bogey.

T.T. Ford to host tournament

ODESSA — Tommy Thompson Ford will host a open class, three-homer limit slowpitch tournament here Aug. 21-26.

The field will be limited to 32 teams and entry fee is $100 per team. Games will be played at North and South Slater and at Sherwood Park.

To enter, call Freddie Rios at 332-0421, ext. 135 in Odessa. Entry deadline is Thursday.

McEnroe defeats Leconte

TORONTO (AP) — Top-seeded John McEnroe, amid a series of runins with the umpire, linesmen and his opponent, defeated No.15 Henri Leconte of France, 7-6, 6-2 Friday night in the quarterfinals of the Player's International tennis championship.

In the night's other match, Vitas Gerulaitis benefitted from some untimely double faults from hard-serving Steve Denton to win 7-6, 6-3.

In afternoon play, Jimmy Connors swept Lloyd Bourne, 6-4, 6-2, to earn a spot in Saturday's semifinals against Gerulaitis; while two-time defending champion Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia defeated Shlomo Glickstein of Israel, 6-4, 6-2. Lendl will meet McEnroe Saturday.

The doubles semifinals also were decided as the No.1 team of McEnroe and Peter Fleming will meet Lendl and Josef Brabenec Jr. of Vancouver, while the No.2 duo of Sherwood Stewart and Ferdi Taygan will face the No.3 team of Denton and Australia's Mark Edmondson.

Lendl and Brabenec edged Americans Mark Cahill and Jay Lapidus, 7-6, 4-6, 7-5; Stewart and Taygan beat Tim Gullikson and Andrew Pattison, 4-6, 6-1, 7-5 and Denton and Edmondson dumped Martin Davis and Chris Dunk, 6-3, 6-4. McEnroe and Fleming advanced Thursday.

Playing confidently, Leconte, 19, pressed McEnroe in the first set, holding his serve throughout.

In the 11th game, he came close to a service break as he held break point at 30-40 when McEnroe double faulted. At this point, McEnroe yelled at the service linesman and umpire George Rustscheff that the second serve was good. Rustscheff charged McEnroe with a code violation for verbal abuse and gave him a warning.

"I have had problems with that guy on the chair before, and I would prefer that he not handle any more of my matches," said McEnroe. "Just knowing that he'll be doing a match causes a negative attitude and I don't want to go into a match that way."

In the tie-breaker, McEnroe opened up a 5-0 advantage he maintained, winning 7-2.

McEnroe broke in the first game of the second set and had a 4-2 advantage going into the seventh game.

Holding double break point, McEnroe again exploded on the next point when Leconte laid a low drop he couldn't reach. Picking up the ball, McEnroe slammed it across the court and was assessed another violation for ball abuse, costing him a point and leaving the score at deuce.

UMPIRE NICK Wolfe charged Connors with a code violation for obscene language and gave him a warning. Connors rushed to the umpire's chair and screamed at Wolfe until he was slapped with a time violation and penalized a point. Wolfe then confused the situation when he mistakenly gave the game to Bourne, thinking it was Bourne's advantage instead of Connors'.

Connors called for the tournament referee Len Allard and after he and Grand Prix supervisor Keith Johnson talked with Wolfe, the score was corrected and Connors managed to hold serve.

"After that fourth bad call in a row, enough was enough," said Connors, who purposedly double-faulted on an earlier point to make up for what he thought was a bad call against Bourne. "Even Lloyd was talking to the umpire and he usually doesn't say anything.

"My being affected by the dispute depended on whether I spit it all out at once or just spit at 10-minute intervals. In a match earlier this year, I was leading 6-0, 2-0 when something happened and instead of getting it all out and I just blew up every second game for the rest of the match and I lost in the third set."

Lendl continued his strong play, having lost just 24 games in his four matches.

Rangers defeat Indians, 8-7

Hostetler's sac-fly caps rally in ninth

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Dave Hostetler's sacrifice fly in the bottom of the ninth inning capped a three-run rally and gave the Texas Rangers an 8-7 victory over the Cleveland Indians Friday night.

Mike Richardt led off the ninth with a single off loser Dan Spillner, 8-7. Bucky Dent walked and George Wright beat out a bunt to load the bases.

Ed Glynn came in to pitch for Cleveland and Bill Stein, pinch hitting for John Grubb, lined a two-run double to tie the score 7-7. Glynn walked Buddy Bell intentionally to reload the bases before Hostetler lofted his game-winning fly ball to right field, sending the Indians to their fifth consecutive defeat.

Danny Darwin, 8-6, was the winner in relief of Texas starter Frank Tanana, who gave up two home runs and three doubles among eight hits before leaving in the seventh.

Cleveland took a 4-1 lead on Andre Thornton's three-run homer in the first inning, his 26th of the season, and Rick Manning's solo shot in the sixth.

Indians starter Rick Sutcliffe allowed eight hits and four runs in 62-3 innings before giving way to Spillner.

Tanana left in the seventh after Toby Harrah walked and was sacrificed to second. Thornton greeted Darwin with a run-scoring double and pinch hitter Von Hayes was walked intentionally, setting the stage for Ron Hassey's two-run pinch double that gave Cleveland a 7-2 lead.

Texas got a run in the third on singles by Wright and Grubb, plus Bell's double play grounder. Grubb doubled and scored on Larry Parrish's double in the sixth to make it 4-2.

In the Texas seventh, Jim Sundberg walked and Wright singled. Spillner came on and gave up a two-run double to Grubb. Parrish hit his ninth homer in the eighth for the Rangers' fifth

Twins 3, Mariners 1

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Gary Ward and Gary Gaetti rapped consecutive run-scoring singles in the sixth inning Friday night to back the three-hit pitching of Bobby Castillo and give the Minnesota Twins a 3-1 victory over the Seattle Mariners.

After giving up two hits and a run in the first inning, Castillo, 6-9, yielded only a fourth-inning single to Bruce Bochte the rest of the way in outdueling Gaylord Perry, 7-10, who was trying for his 305th career triumph.

Castillo struck out three and walked one in pitching his first complete game of the year.

With one out in the Minnesota sixth, Tom Brunansky singled and went to second on Kent Hrbek's single. Ward followed with a hit to score Brunansky and tie the game 1-1, but was thrown out trying for second as Hrbek went to third. Gaetti's single up the middle scored Hrbek with the go-ahead run.

Yankees 4, White Sox 3

CHICAGO (AP) — Rick Cerone's seventh-inning home run snapped a tie and gave the New York Yankees a 4-3 victory over Chicago Friday night, snapping the White Sox' four-game winning streak.

Cerone's homer, only his third of the season, came off Chicago starter Steve Trout, 6-8, and handed the White Sox only their third loss in the last 15 games while ending the Yankees' three-game losing streak.

Lee Mazzilli, who had three hits, staked winner Tommy John, 8-9, to a 1-0 lead with a towering first-inning homer, his fifth of the season and first in two games with the Yankees, off the upper deck facade in left field.

John yielded five hits in seven innings before Rich Gossage came on to record his 23rd save.

Brewers 3, Blue Jays 1

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Jim Gantner singled home Milwaukee's go-ahead run in the fourth inning and Pete Vuckovich scattered seven hits, leading the Brewers to a 3-1 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays Friday night.

Vuckovich, 13-4, walked eight, including three in the first inning, but was tough in the clutch and struck out five as the Blue Jays left 12 runners on base.

The Brewers stayed 5½ games ahead of second-place Boston in the American League East with their third victory in a row and ninth in 11 games.

Red Sox 5, Orioles 2

BOSTON (AP) — John Tudor fired a five-hitter and Boston's first five batters hit safely, producing three runs as the Red Sox snapped a three-game losing streak with a 5-2 victory over the Baltimore Orioles Friday night.

Tudor, 8-9, struck out six and walked one in his fourth complete game of the season. Loser Mike Flanagan, 8-10, couldn't retire any of the five Boston batters he faced, starting the Orioles to their fourth consecutive loss.

Jerry Remy opened the bottom of the first with a single and scored on a triple by Dwight Evans. Jim Rice then doubled Evans across and Tony Perez singled home the third run. Aftzr Carney Lansford singled Perez to third, Sammy Stewart replaced Flanagan and got Dave Stapleton to pop up and Glenn Hoffman to ground into a double play.

Boston made it 4-0 in the third when Evans doubled, went to third on Rice's single and scored on Perez's grounder.

Tigers 10, Royals 1

DETROIT (AP) — Lou Whitaker belted two homers for the third time this season to back the seven-hit pitching of Milt Wilcox and Pat Underwood and power the Detroit Tigers to a 10-1 victory over the Kansas City Royals Friday night.

Whitaker lined a solo homer, his 10th of the season, leading off the bottom of the first and slammed a two-run shot in the middle of a five-run fourth inning that featured two other Detroit homers.

Wilcox, who recently came off the disabled list and was making his first appearance since July 19, surrendered just two hits and struck out seven in five shutout innings before giving way to Underwood, who earned his first save. Wilcox, 7-6, yielded one hit and two walks following a one-out bunt single by U.L. Washington in the opening inning.

Loser Dave Frost, 6-5, retired the next two batters in the first after Whitaker's homer, but Lance Parrish singled for the first of his three hits, moved to second on a walk to Jerry Turner and scored on Chet Lemon's single.

Reds shut out Houston, 3-0

Loss snaps Astro winning streak

CINCINNATI (AP) — Ron Oester and Alex Trevino drove in second-inning runs and Frank Pastore fired five-hitter Friday night, lifting the Cincinnati Reds to a 3-0 victory over the Houston Astros.

Pastore, 6-9, gave up a lead-off single to Dickie Thon in the first inning and then retired the next 14 batters. Only one Astro runner reached second base as the right-hander struck out eight and did not walk a batter in tossing his second shutout this season.

The Reds scored a pair of runs in the second off Joe Niekro, 11-9. Johnny Bench reached on a one-out infield hit and took second on Paul Householder's uacrifice. Oester looped a soft double to left for a 1-0 lead, and Trevino lined an RBI single to center.

The Reds loaded the bases in the sixth on a pair of singles and a walk, and Bench hit a sacrifice fly deep to right field.

The loss snapped Houston's three-game winning streak and was the Astros' first setback since Bob Lillis replaced Bill Virdon as manager of the club Tuesday.

Thon had two of Houston's hits, extending his hitting streak to 21 games and tying Philadelphia's Pete Rose for the National League's longest hitting streak of the season.

Thon's streak ties Lee May's mark for third longest in Houston's history, two behind Art Howe's club record of 23 set last season.

Expos 3, Phillies 2

MONTREAL (AP) — Doug Flynn tripled home two runs in the second inning Friday night as the Montreal Expos edged Philadelphia 3-2 for their third victory over the Phillies in two nights.

Philadelphia's Pete Rose tied the all time major record for at-bats in the game, singling in the eighth inning in his 12,364th at-bat, tying him with home run king Henry Aaron.

Jeff Reardon earned his 19th save with 3⅔ innings relief, giving up the Phillies' second run in the eighth when Pete Rose singled, Manny Trillo doubled and Gary Matthews hit a sacrifice fly.

Pirates 7, Cardinals 4

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Don Robinson pitched an nine-hitter and Tony Pena and Bill Madlock homered to lead the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 7-4 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Friday night, tightening up the National League East pennant race.

The win snapped the Pirates' three-game losing streak and ended the first-place Cardinals' three-game winning streak. Coupled with the Montreal Expos victory over Philadelphia, St.Louis now leads the Phillies by a half game with the Expos three out and the Pirates four behind.

Robinson, 13-6, struck out eight as he posted his fifth complete game of the season. In his last 45 at-bats prior to Friday night, Robinson was hitting .333.

Mets 6, Cubs 4

NEW YORK (AP) — George Foster and Ellis Valentine singled in the tying and go-ahead runs during a three-run seventh inning as the New York Mets snapped a four-game losing streak with a 6-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs Friday night.

Mookie Wilson started the winning rally with a leadoff single off Cubs' starter Doug Bird and took second on a balk by reliever Mike Proly. He scored one out later on Foster's single, tying the score 4-4.

Rusty Staub then singled Foster to third and Valentine put the Mets ahead 5-4 with his single. Mike Jorgensen, who pinch-ran for Staub, then scored an insurance run when Ron Hodges greeted reliever Willie Hernandez with New York's fifth single of the inning.

Jones to debut in Ram uniform against Broncos

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Bert Jones, whom Rams' officials hope can solve the team's quarterback woes, debuts tonight when Los Angeles meets the Denver Broncos in a National Football League exhibition opener for both teams.

The 7 p.m. PDT contest was expected to draw a crowd of some 60,000 to Anaheim Stadium.

Jones, acquired from the Baltimore Colts, will start for the Rams, who went 6-10 last season and missed the playoffs for the first time in nine years. He will share the quarterback duties with Jeff Rutledge.

Vince Ferragamo, the quarterback who led the Rams to a Super Bowl appearance in 1980, was not expected to play. He has missed some practices with a groin injury and a sore shoulder, and, although he said he feels ready to play, Los Angeles Coach Ray Malavasi has said he does not plan to use him against Denver.

Second-year Denver Coach Dan Reeves, whose Broncos surged to a 10-6 record in 1981 and tied for first in the AFC West, said regular quarterback Craig Morton will sit out the preseason opener. Morton, at 39 the oldest player in the NFL, also did not play in last year's first exhibition game.

Reeves will open with Steve DeBerg at quarterback. Mark Herrmann will spell him, and Reeves also plans to use either Davy Sellers, a rookie from Southern Mississippi, or Tim Koegel, a rookie from Notre Dame, some at quarterback.

As is common for preseason contests, both Reeves and Malavasi intend to take a look at many newcomers under game conditions.

Among the Denver rookies who'll probably see action are running back Gerald Willhite of San Jose State, the Broncos' top draft pick, and second-round selection Orlando McDaniel, a wide receiver from LSU.

The Rams' top draft pick, running back Barry Redden of Richmond, won't be on display, however. Redden has not recovered from a knee injury suffered on the opening day of practice.

Ram rookies expected to make their first NFL appearance include Bill Bechtold, a center out of Oklahoma who was the club's second draft pick, linebacker Jeff Gaylord of Missouri, and offensive tackle Wally Kersten of Minnesota.

Los Angeles holds a 2-1 regular-season edge in previous games with Denver, and also won the only previous exhibition meeting between the clubs.

Hamilton beats Toronto, 37-27

HAMILTON (AP) — Quarterback Tom Clements tossed three touchdown passes Friday night as the Hamilton Tiger-Cats scored a 37-27 Canadian Football League victory over the Toronto Argonauts.

The victory halted Toronto's winning streak at three games and moved the second-place Ti-Cats within one point of the East Division-leading Argonauts.

Visiting American team loses to Chinese, 17-9

Compiled from R-T Wires

BASEBALL — A New York City team of 11 and 12-year-olds, the first American baseball team to play in China, lost 17-9 to their Chinese hosts Friday. The Chinese were slightly older — 13 to 15 — and have been playing ball for one or two years, practicing two hours a day, five days a week, their coaches said.

They have been learning in visits by coaches and players between China and the United States and Japan, the coaches added. There were a few mix-ups over rule interpretations in the seven-inning game, and the Americans needed interpreters to talk to the Chinese umpires. The strike zone also appeared to be different than the customary American zone.

China's Peking "A" team took advantage of American errors in the early innings. American coaches spoke of the "tremendous potential of the Chinese players, who hit and fielded well," and of the enthusiasm of the players and the several hundred Chinese spectators. The Chinese coaches said they were "concerned with the exchange of friendship and not with the score," and were "happy to play baseball with our American friends." The New York team was selected in special try-outs to play against New York's sister cities, Tokyo and Peking. It played 10 games in Japan, winning seven, before coming to China...

TRACK — Runner Sebastian Coe, who set a world record for the mile at the 1981 Ivo van Damme Memorial track meet, plans to compete in the event's 1982 edition on Aug. 29, it was announced Friday. "Coe has accepted the invitation to run in the mile again this year," Wilfried Meert, one of the organizers said. He added no reply has been received yet from Coe's fellow British running rival and world record holder on the 1,500 meters, Steve Ovett. Running under ideal weather conditions at the Heizel Stadium here last summer, Coe clocked 3:47.3 minutes for the mile. Ovett's world record over 1,500 meters is 3:31.36...

World 5,000 meters record holder David Moorcroft of Britain will make an assault on the world two-mile mark during the Talbot Games meet at the Crystal Palace on Aug. 20. Moorcroft, who is recovering from a virus infection, said: "It would be great to break a world record in front of a big (British) crowd."...

Two-time world cross country champion John Treacy has decided not to compete in the European track and field championships in Athens, Greece, next month. Treacy, who has been troubled by leg injuries in recent months, ran a disappointing 5,000 metevs Thursday night and said: "I am just not in proper shape for top international competition."...

New Zealand distance runner Allison Roe will participate in Saturday's 10-kilometer Run The Rockies through Summit County, race organizers announced today. Roe, 24, of Auckland, was the women's winner in the 1981 Boston Marathon, finishing in 2:26 and set a new world's record last fall in New York, covering the 26-plus miles in 2:25.29. Runners Magazine named her 1981 Female Runner of the Year...

BULL FIGHTING — Veteran bullfighter Paco Camino was free under threat of a fine Friday after brandishing his matador's sword at a fan who booed him at a bullfight. Police said the bullfighter was freed after a charge filed against him threatening the fan was given to the civil governor's office for a decision. The governor's office said no decision on a fine had been made...

ARCHERY — Four-time defending national men's archery champion Rick McKinney, 28, of Glendale, Ariz., heads the 20-member U.S. National Archery Association team announced Friday. Jessee King, the association's executive secretary, said the team was chosen on a point system determined by results in three designated tournaments. Other team members include 1982 women's champion Luann Ryon, 29, Parker Dam, Calif.; 1976 Olympic gold medalist Darrell Pace, 25, Hamilton, Ohio; Ruth Rowe, 35, Gaithersburg, Md.; Larry Smith, 27, Shrewsbury, Pa.; Nancy Myrick, 43, Huntington Beach, Calif.; Ed Eliason, 44, Seattle; Becky Liggett, 17, Muncie, Ind.; Jerry Pylypchuk, 33, and Eileen Pylypchuk, 28, Brooklyn, N.Y.; Laura Cale, 23, Orlando, Fla.; Tom Stevenson, 21, Norriston, Pa.; Trena King, 24, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Glenn Meyer, 21, Fremont, Mich.; Val Rosas, 23, Los Angeles; Lisabeth Grindler, 28, Detroit; Phil Hoelle, 27, Smithtown, N.Y.; Cincy Vezzetti, 21, Phoenix; Doug Brothers, 28, Sharonville; and Janet McCullough, 22, Sharpesville, Pa...

SWIMMING — Eleven-year-old Jason Pipoly of Denver, Colo., is ready to try to become the youngest person to swim the English Channel on Saturday, his coach said late Friday, but the Channel's notoriously fickle weather will have the last say. A gale blowing up the waterway between England and France made the bid problematical. However, Tom Hetzel, Jason's coach, told The Associated Press, "there is a slight chance that he may leave from Dover's Shakespeare Beach at 7:30 a.m. (11:30 p.m., EDT, Friday) Saturday. A decision will be made a half hour earlier." If the weather bars the attempt then, he will either try again at 8 p.m. or cross over to France to make the attempt in the opposite direction, leaving Cape Gris Nez at 8 p.m., Hetzel said.

He said a decision on the evening swim from Britain or France will be made at noon Saturday.

In either case, Hetzel said he will join Jason in the water for the first five hours of the estimated 15 hours it will take the youngster to make the 21-mile crossing.

The current record for the youngest swimmer to make the crossing is held by Marcus Hooper of England who was 12 at the time on Aug. 5-6, 1979. He took 14 hours, 37 minutes.

Mears shatters Pocono qualifying mark

Penske PC-10 takes nearly 10 seconds off old record

MIKE HARRIS
AP Motorsports Writer

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Rick Mears outdid even his own expectations Friday, soaring over 200 mph and shattering the Pocono International Raceway qualifying record by nearly 10 mph in winning the pole position for Sunday's Domino's Pizza Pocono 500.

Mears, driving a Ford-powered Penske PC-10 to his fifth track record of the season, wheeled around the 2½-mile trioval in just 44.780 seconds, which translates to 200.983 mph.

The defending CART-PPG Indy-Car World Series champion, who was a solid favorite for the pole position after running practice laps over 197 earlier in the week, buried the official track qualifying record of 191.367, set by the late Peter Revson in 1973.

"I didn't think it (200) was possible until this morning when I did 198 (in practice)," said Mears, who previously broke track qualifying records at Phoenix, Atlanta, Indianapolis and Milwaukee this season. "Then I just figured I'd puff up (hold his breath) and see if I could do it.

"I went out there on that first lap and scared myself so much that the second lap was a lot slower (45.254 seconds and 198.877). I guess I almost lost it about three times.

"The difference on that lap was probably that I just held my breath a little more and at the places where I just touched the brake a little before, I didn't touch it at all."

GORDON JOHNCOCK, the first driver with a shot at winning the Indy-car Triple Crown since Al Unser won it in 1978, qualified eighth fastest but crashed on the second of his two laps. He was not injured.

"The car felt real loose and all of a sudden it just let go," Johncock explained. "I straightened it out once, then it got away again and hit the wall rear end first."

Mears and Johncock were among eight drivers to break the long-standing track record Friday.

Penske teammate Kevin Cogan, who sat by Mears' side in the front row for this year's Indianapolis 500, after both broke the old qualifying record at Indy with speeds well over 200 mph, took the second spot for Sunday's race with a lap of 196.541.

The other front-row position went to three-time Indy winner Johnny Rutherford, who got his new Cosworth-powered March up to 194.843.

Mario Andretti, who had been over 195 in practice Thursday, lost some ground in qualifying, but still grabbed the inside spot on the second row at 194.460 in a Wildcat-Cosworth.

OTHERS QUALIFYING better than the old record were Mike Mosley at 193.553 in a March-Cosworth; Bobby Rahal at 192.090 in a March-Cosworth; Unser at 191.861 in a Longhorn-Cosworth, and Johncock at 193.619 in a Wildcat-Cosworth.

Johncock beat Mears by .16 seconds at Indianapolis and won the Michigan 500 in a walkaway. His Patrick Team crew chief, Jim McGee, said the cockpit of the car was not damaged and that

YMCA offers flag football

The Midland YMCAs are offering Flag Football for boys and girls in first through third grades. Registrations are being taken until Sept. 11 at all YMCA branches.

Program fee is $10 for YMCA members and $20 for limited members. However, no child will be kept from playing because of a lack of funds. Scholarships are available for those who can not pay. A T-shirt of the team color is included in the program fee. The flag program is designed so that everyone participates in every game.

There will be a coaches meeting Tuesday, Sept. 14, at 7 p.m. at the Alamo YMCA. The YMCA is also in need of volunteers to coach and officiate in the flag program. If you would like to volunteer your time, call 682-2551, 682-0533, 682-6294 or 694-2528.

Cable Viewers Can Add Extra Movies With Just One Step

If you're already a cable subscriber, you know about getting great movies in your own home. You know that top-quality channels like Spotlight are a great way to get the most out of your entertainment dollar. But now you can add something extra, because now we're introducing HBO. HBO gives you more of the choice and channel selection you've been looking for.

You get more movies, different movies, movies exclusive to our HBO subscribers. And now HBO has a twenty-four hour service so you're never at a loss for extra entertainment.

HBO brings you the best of Hollywood's hit movies. "The Elephant Man," "9 to 5," "All That Jazz." If you missed them before or if you just have to see them again, you get them all on HBO. And HBO also gives you a chance to see exclusive presentations of movies you won't find anywhere else. You get exclusive showings of "Tribute," "On Golden Pond," and more. That's only on HBO! Plus you get film classics, like "Doctor Zhivago," and family features like Walt Disney films. You get foreign films, sci-fi films, thrillers, comedies, romances, ... and you get them all on HBO.

What's more, with HBO, great movies are just the beginning. You also get sporting events, like championship boxing, and great entertainment specials, like the Simon and Garfunkel Concert in the Park. It all adds up to a dynamic programming mix, the extra choice and selection our viewers demand.

Cable with HBO! It's the best in home entertainment. Cable viewers can get HBO with one easy step. Of course, if you don't have cable at all, you'll have to take that step first.

Devane to star as tough private eye

By TOM JORY

NEW YORK (AP) — Jake Rubidoux is a character for those who may have found Bill Devane tough to swallow as JFK in "The Missiles of October" and a bit overbearing as Sgt. Milt Warden in "From Here to Eternity."

Jake Rubidoux is a tough-talking private eye, and Devane has the part — with sneer — down pat.

The show is called "The Big Easy" — it's on ABC Sunday night — and the resemblance in name to "The Big Sleep" may be more than coincidental. It's an entertaining hour of television nonetheless, even more appealing for the Dixieland ambiance of New Orleans.

Rubidoux is hired off of a French Quarter stage — he plays the clarinet in his spare time — by Nunally Hayes to find the Texan's missing "daughter."

ENTERTAINMENT

He gets a tip from Walker Garrett, the inevitable gossip columnist, and in no time tracks the elusive Cynthia through New Orleans' Garden District to a lodge on Lake Pontchartrain.

That's when the fun starts.

Nunnally, it seems, is a hired killer after Cynthia. And Jake has a new client — himself. He's got to protect the young woman and find out who is paying for Nunnally's seedy hotel room.

"I like to see the good guys win at least every other day," Jake assures the audience off-camera — the sneer is assumed — "and $200 a day helps if you like eatin'."

Mary Crosby plays Cynthia and Nicholas Pryor, who looks something like a fleshed-out Don Knotts, is Walker Garrett. Real-life heavy Hugh Gillin is the hired gunslinger, Lane Smith plays Jake's buddy, police Lt. Frank Medley, and Ja'Net Dubois is Gloria, who runs The Big Easy, the nightclub where Jake spends his free time.

The lush, humid-green setting is swell, and the story is not a bad one. "The Big Easy" is a cut above "Bourbon Street Beat," the old ABC series set in New Orleans and, presumably, shot on a backlot in Hollywood.

"Hardcase" on NBC an hour later that night is a gritty, unpleasant cop show set in the selfsame Crescent City. But for a riverfront chase, they might as well have done the program in a studio. Carting all of that equipment to New Orleans to catch the characters speaking in overdone drawl was hardly necessary.

Lt. Grover Harding Case is suspended by Muehlberger, the chief, for roughing up a small-time perpetrator. He calls himself back to work — unofficially — when Perk Dawson starts killing policemen and their wives, part of a plan to spring his brother Mingo, who is about to be executed.

Case — "Hardcase" to the bad guys, "Casey" to his friends — enlists the help of "Stretch," a vice-squad colleague anxious to make a name for herself. "You'd actually order me into a joint like the 500 Club to strip?" she protests, then suggests a routine in which she peels off a nurse's outfit.

"Hardcase" says it's necessary to get information from the "sex-sational" Laura Tinkerbell, a French Quarter stripper who's also Perk's girl.

What motivates "Hardcase"? "Every police force needs a bone-crusher, one trooper who can punch tickets and sleep that night," the rogue cop tells "Stretch."

But does the guy have feelings? "Hope I never fall in love with you," "Stretch" says. "You won't," "Hardcase" answers back.

Beau Kayser plays "Hardcase," Deborah Feuer is "Stretch," and Mickey Rourke is featured as Perk.

Venice Biennial exhibition lacks vitality

By WILLIAM WILSON
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

VENICE, Italy — There is always the possibility that the venerable and rickety Venice Biennial will not open on time, will not open at all, or — once unveiled — will not stay open. This granddaddy of international contemporary compendiums (started in the 1880s) has in recent years been plagued with postponements, strikes and political protests.

Thus the critic on a busman's tour approaches the event with a gingerly sidestep, repeatedly checking its status. Well, reliable and official sources in Los Angeles, then New York and Frankfurt, confirmed that all systems were go at Venice, so the critic went.

"This year there is no boat to the Biennial park. You have to walk. It's just a pleasant 15-minute stroll from St. Mark's along the water, but it won't do any good as the exhibition is closed by a strike."

Thus spake the hotel concierge, one of Venice's most magisterial and normally well-informed authorities.

The critic felt a little sick. Not knowing quite what else to do, he wandered to the Biennial park thinking vaguely there might be someone to bribe.

As it turned out the oracle of the desk was, for once, just plain wrong. Venetian waterbuses putted along with cargoes of tourists. The exhibition, although plastered with "strike" placards, was open. Maybe he'd meant some of the satellite shows around town were struck. Never mind. No time to see them anyway. Praise be, the traditional core of the compendium was functioning. The critic plunged merrily into the suffocatingly muggy pavilions. Everything was fine.

Except, of course, the exhibition.

I don't know quite how to break this to you but the 40th rehearsal of this once-prestigious event felt exhausted and moribund at its core.

In the central international pavilion three "Hommage" exhibitions to early modern masters set the theme and tone of the whole. A section devoted to sculpture by Constantin Brancusi represents everything that still works in the show, such as conventional but sound abstract sculpture by Venezuela's Alejandro Oterio.

Then Matisse is praised with two (yes, just two) pathetic pictures that huddle together in a corner, embarrassed. They represent everything gone wrong here, the muddled plans, false starts and incomplete installations.

Finally, there is a small but trenchant selection of drawings by the Austrian expressionist Egon Scheile. It is vintage work, tense with neurotic sexuality. It is also immature and self-pitying. In Scheile's case there is sufficient reason for this because the poor chap died at age 28 in 1918.

No such excuse is available to a culture now more than 60 years older and full of artists old enough to know better. All the same, Scheile's spirit reigns in the pavilion's theme exhibition, "Avant-Garde Realism."

"Ah," the nimble-witted reader is thinking, "It's going to be another international extravaganza dominated by those neo-expressionist people like the 'Documenta' up in Kassel we read about a couple of weeks ago."

Would it were true. This is worse.

The Biennial's idea of realism after the avant-garde is neither the ironic stylishness of neo-expressionism nor the populist polish of the photo realists. It is a termite-chewed terrain occupied since the end of World War II by that exisistential figurative humanist tradition that makes us believe every bad thing we ever thought about tired old European individualism.

It is the art of the sensitive intellectual in his one-room apartment watching history turn to varicose veins in the mirror. Its talents are as thin as Mexico's Jose Luis Cuevas or as substantial as England's Frank Auerbach but all fatally enmeshed in narcissism and self-loathing.

The sensibility spills over into the national pavilions in the fetish craftsmanship of Austria's Walter Pichler, sentimenalized classical Greek figure paintings by Diamantis Diamantopolous, and artists from Poland, East Germany and Hungary where such pained expression sadly makes sense. (Hungarian sculptor Erzsebet Schaar brings a real sense of desperation to the style of Marisol.)

Disappointment of a more detached kind registers in national pavilions that surrendered either to young, highly deriative talents or slightly passe' veterans. Three artists from Spain look like something out of a local "newcomers" exercise. Italy's tacky building is crammed with works by 27 worthies from Andrea Cascella to Lucio Fontana. Very likely they are even more outraged than we are about an insulting installation.

Well, there are always pavilions that seemingly have succumbed to art politics or, rather endearingly just missing, the point. (The Soviet Union participated this year. Virtually all their 35 Russian artists employ academic or cautiously expressionstic styles to depict an artist at work, looking soulful. If this "safe" uniformity were not so ominous it would be amusing.)

Finally the good news and even that is not great. The art from countries that made a serious effort looks sophisticated, professional and slick, if hardly startling. (The U.S. contribution rather typifies the whole. It is a retrospective survey of minimalist and land-art pioneer Robert Smithson. It proves him a talent of considerable originality and breadth, but it is very hard to break new ground by choosing an artist who has been dead 10 years. Never mind, the U.S. pavilion is always well attended. It's air-conditioned.)

Among art from the major powers, the inspired eccentricity of Britain's Barry Flanagan is most beguiling. Flanagan's recent nubbly bronzes of acrobatic hares border on antic cuteness but when put in co,texo with other works f4om primitive incisions to "soft" aculputure in stone a classic British "original" emerges.

One fears for the future of NATO when France offers the summer-frock-fabric abstractions of Simon Hantai and academic plastic-tube sculpture by Toni Grand.

Germany's Wolfgang Laib uses real substances like pollen to suggest hysterically sweet nature poetry but he is the best of their lot.

A Tokyo department store is attracting customers with this eye-catching "robot" of Marilyn Monroe which sings and strums a guitar in a sultry manner. Adjacent to the high-fashion Marilyn is another robot disrobed. Robot designer Shuichi Mizuno says motors allow movement of limbs and a range of facial expressions. Each costs $60,000 and Mizuno says he is now working on a new model that can hold a conversation.

'Ag Day' starts Monday

By MARK BERNS

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Neal Nussbaum started his broadcasting career at the age of 9, owned a radio station at 21 and now, at 26, is executive director of "Ag Day" — which he calls "a 'Today' show for farmers."

"Ag Day," scheduled to premiere Monday, is the brainchild of Nussbaum and Indianapolis accountant James Wilson. It will provide 30 minutes of agricultural news by satellite, five days a week, to an initial market of 40 stations mainly in the nation's farm belt.

"In a year, we'll have in the neighborhood of 70 stations carrying the show," Nussbaum says. "We're basically saturating the farm areas."

Coincidentally, the Public Broadcasting Service launched early this month a year-long pilot program to deliver agricultural marketing information to farmers.

PBS' Farm Market Infodata Service provides farmers and ranchers with price information from markets across the country. Five public TV stations, in Tampa, Fla., Springfield, Mo., Fargo, N.D., Denver and Fresno, Calif., are participating in the program, which uses a television captioning system to deliver the data.

Mel Browning, network services director for Creative Farm Media, the year-old partnership developed to produce "Ag Day," predicts the show will reach farmers controlling 125 million acres — 43 percent of the country's cropland — and 48 percent of the country's farmers grossing $100,000 annually.

And Browning says the syndicated program will allow agriculture-oriented advertisers to target their audience better.

"Too often they're having to buy 100 percent of the market to reach 2 percent of the audience," he says. "Our prime farm market is what everyone else considers the bottom of the barrel. The top agricultural market in the country is Fargo, N.D. The worst is New York."

Nussbaum says the show will be "a fast-paced format that delivers a lot of information in 30 minutes. It will be relevant information that the decision-maker on the farm needs. We're not going to talk about baking a cherry pie.

"The farm economy is in the worst shape since even during the Depression," he says. "What we're doing is supplying the information to all the farmers to make the right decisions."

That information will be supplied initially from the studios of WTHI-TV in Terre Haute, Ind., and remote locations around the country via the satellite uplink at WFYI-TV in Indianapolis. By spring, CFM plans to have its own studio and satellite link on Indianapolis' northeast side in addition to offices in Terre Haute and Kansas City, Kan.

"Radio has long been the farmer's source of immediate grain markets, and the print media has always provided information," says Nussbaum, whose family has farmed near Remington, Ind., for four generations. "It's time we entered the television age."

Nussbaum's experience in broadcast production goes back to the time he built a radio station in his parents' home and beamed programs to any receiver within a one-mile radius. At 13, he went to work for a Rensselaer, Ind., radio station.

That was followed by stints at several radio and television stations and by four years in radio and television production at Indiana State University at Terre Haute. He bought a radio station in Freeport, Ill., on graduation from ISU in 1977, and sold it shortly before starting work on "Ag Day."

The program will present agricultural information in a nightly news format. Its slick, animated opener resembles those of the networks' and many local news shows.

"You can't do some guy bailing hay anymore," says national sales manager Phil Hanna. "It just won't work."

WTHI farm broadcaster Wayne Jenkins will anchor "Ag Day," tying together reports from three roving production crews and from subscribers' news departments. Daily spots feature Wilson, the Helming Report by Livestock Business Advisory Service of Kansas City, and the weather team of Terry Kelly and Mike Nelson from Madison, Wis.

Photographer prefers wild animals as his subjects

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — He's a man called Wolf, a wilderness wanderer who roams the world with a camera to chronicle God's creatures.

Wolfgang Bayer is an Austrian immigrant who's helped design hydroelectric generators for Indians and Chryslers for Americans, and now is one of the world's premier wildlife cinematographers.

At 46, Bayer runs his film production company from a glass-and-stone house in Jackson, Wyo., but he's seldom there. In one year, he'll make films in Borneo, Alaska, the Amazon, Africa, and Santa Catalina Island.

Physical hazards accompany the adventure and glamour of his professional life. Bayer's been stranded on an arctic island with only bird's eggs to eat. He's been marooned on Mt. McKinley with only dog food for dinner. He pronounces both entrees "not bad, but they could use salt."

He's been bitten by a baboon, and had to exercise extreme caution when making a movie about black widow spiders. Once, while filming a jaguar in a studio setting, he accidentally got trapped in a men's restroom with the wild cat. An assistant had put the movie's star in the bathroom during a break in the shooting, and forgot to tell Bayer. The cinematographer managed to escape, but needed several stitches.

The photographer has worked for more than three decades to perfect techniques eagerly sought by top producers with big budgets at Walt Disney and National Geographic.

Even as a child growing up in Austria, he was fascinated by pictures of wild animals. In high school, he became a scuba diver in order to make his first foray into unknown worlds.

"I decided to do underwater photography but there wasn't much equipment available, and it was all very high priced, so I made my own underwater camera," says Bayer. "That was pretty unusual, and suddenly it seemed that every time we turned around we were making headlines."

While studying engineering in college, he went job hunting and in 1953 the Austrian Department of Education hired him to give slide presentations in schools. But he soon was bored with filming flowers and took off for Germany, where he spent three years helping to design huge hydroelectric generators.

In 1959, at the urgings of a sister who'd already emigrated, Bayer went to the United States and got a job in Detroit where he worked for Chrysler in its engineering department until he was laid off a year later. He headed west, to Hollywood.

"'My first stops were at the major studios, where I announced 'Here I am.' The resounding reply was 'So what?'" he ruefully recalls. "My big dream had always been to work for Walt Disney, but it suddenly dawned on me that all those guys who were graduating from the University of Southern California film school were already working there — carrying mail bags."

Bayer took odd jobs and decided that if he was going to be a success in the film business, he'd have to do it on his

This superior model home will be open for inspection daily for your convenience. 2 bedrooms, 2½ baths, spacious living area with vaulted and beamed ceiling and wood burning fireplace, "soaring" atrium and much more. "No maintenance" landscaping and built in sprinkler system included in this unbelievable price of only $84,100!

FREE Coffee and Doughnuts

Total move in costs of $5700 is based on 5% down or $4250 plus $1450 limited closing costs based on 15 days prepaid interest. The first year's payment of $752.91 (principal and interest only) is based on a loan amount of $79,850. The first year's payment buyer qualification will be calculated equates lent to a rate of 10 7/8% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 15 7/8% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be changed at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance of the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. Annual percentage rate approximately 16.575%.

$5,250 Total Move-In Cost

$1450 Limited Closing Costs in Northgate only

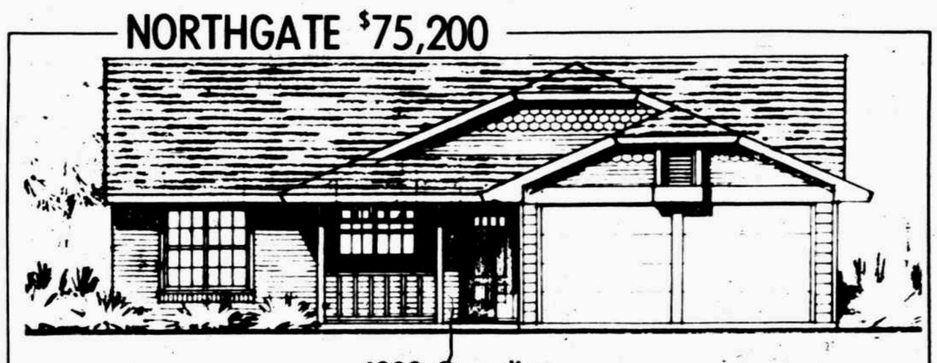
NORTHGATE $75,200



4909 Canadian

$673.30 Per Month

You can't afford NOT to buy any longer!

Total move in costs of $5250 is based on 5% down or $3800 plus $1450 limited closing costs based on 15 days prepaid interest. The first year's payment of $673.30 (principal and interest only) is based on a loan amount of $71,400. The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivas tent to a rate of 10 7/8% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 15 7/8% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be changed at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. Annual percentage rate approximately 16.575%.
