Business Men Endorse Work of Hospital Committee

In a meeting of the business men of Lamesa held last Friday morning in the county court room at the court house, the stamp of approval was placed on the work of the committee appointed for the purpose of securing the new West Texas State Hospital for Insane, and the committee given full power to continue the fight.

With Mr. J. E. Barron acting as chairman of the meeting, members of the hospital committee, M. C. Lindsey, A. G. Bearden, V. Z. Rogers and Sam Richardson, explained the various phases of the committee's work.

It was stated that members of the State Board of Control, who were in Lamesa last week, had suggested that Lamesa secure a new site to submit for the proposed hospital, that the one selected was a little far from town, and across the highway from the railroad. It was proposed by them that the new site be closer to town and on the east side of the railroad so that a spur line might be built into the hospital grounds.

It was also explained that the hospital would have an opening capacity of 520 patients, but that in a period of a few years, the inmate capacity would be increased to 2600. The normal monthly payroll for the hospital attendants would be around $18,000 a month at the beginning this to increase in proportion to the number of patients, as it is necessary that there be an average of one attendant for each seven patients.

After a discussion of the matter by a number of business men, the matter was put to a vote as to whether Lamesa would continue with her efforts to secure the hospital, or to let the matter drop. The meeting unanimously voted that the committee keep on with their work, and that they would cooperate to the fullest degree when called upon.

Senator Connally Urges Senate To Aid Farmers

Washington, D. C. July 5.—In a successful effort to aid farmers who have Federal Land Bank loans, Senator Tom Connally on the floor of the Senate Tuesday pleaded for the lowering of the interest rate on commissioners' loans from 5 to 4 per cent, and the continuation of the present 3½ percent interest rate on regular loans.

Upon the insistence of the junior Senator from Texas, the Senate rejected the amendment of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, which would have stricken out the reduction of interest rates on commissioners' loans.

"We have been through a very critical period in the United States in the way of holding on to land during this depression," Senator Connally told the Senate. "Commissioners' loans are instrumentalities that were devised to help out the man who had a farm and was trying to pay for it by giving him a further increase of loan. Many of these farmers will pay out. They are on the land, they are working, they are digging, they are trying to get out, and they are not on a relief roll in town. If we can give a billion and a quarter dollars to people to do nothing, I do not see how the Government will suffer much by giving $40,000,000 in the form of reduced interest rates to people who are at work establishing homes and increasing the value of those homes."

"The land banks will have to absorb some of the reduction for this period of extension; but it is justified aid, it is sound aid, given to people who are trying to build homesteads and trying to pay for them, and who are out in the hot sun at work."

The Senate passed the bill extending and reducing the interests rate to borrowers from the Federal Land Bank; the House had previously passed the bill.

American Cyanide Company To Build Plant In Vicinity

It has been learned here that the American Cyanide Company of New York has recently signed a contract with C. H. Doak of O'Donnell for the land at Frost Lake in North Dawson county and will start construction of a $200,000 plant by September 1. The plant to turn out a sodium sulphate product.

Company officials have been in this vicinity for a number of months, checking the area and determining the probable amount ready for converting into the finished product.

Several men have already been employed, and from all indications the company payroll will be more than $150,000 a year, with 150 employees working in three shifts a day.

Preliminary work is now going on at the lake, with construction of buildings for the plant expected to begin by September 1. Operation is scheduled to start January 1, 1938. Contract calls for a minimum production of 80 tons per day, or 25,000 tons per year.

Acresage at the site includes about 92 acres in Lynn county and 480 in Dawson county. The location of the plant, as far as can be learned, has not been decided upon, but as most of the land is in this county, it is hoped that the company will build the plant on the Dawson county side.

E. L. Sturgess, chemist for the Cyanide company, has established offices at O'Donnell, and other officials are expected in the very near future.

Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n Report Increasing Business

The Lamesa Federal Savings and Loan Association was chartered on November 24, 1934, and commenced operations on January 1, 1935, with $35,270.01 in assets and at the close of business on June 30, 1937, had assets totaling $84,136.41.

The above figures show that the people of Lamesa have confidence in this local institution and are availing themselves of the investment feature offered them and they have received 5 per cent dividend annually on their investment, with their investment insured up to $5,000.00.

This Association has made over 70 loans on property in Lamesa since organization and has had sufficient money for loans at all times and invites those who contemplate building, buying or improving homes to see them for full explanation of their plan before going elsewhere.

71,500 Trees and Shrubs Planted by Local SCS Camp

"Good trees and shrub plantings do not just happen," warns George D. Keathley, of the Lamesa Soil Conservation Service camp.

This spring the Service has assisted cooperating farmers in planting 71,500 trees and shrubs in this area as part of the wind erosion control program.

"Many assume that trees do not require additional assistance to attain their establishment after planting," Keathley says. "Such is not the case. Trees, like any other crop, require assistance in their fight against limited moisture, hot sun and high temperature, in their competition with weeds."

Mr. Keathley explains that the Service cooperators' experience has shown that if Nature is left to herself, she will clothe the soil with grass and weeds in this locality. On the other hand, with a little assistance, Nature will adorn herself with trees and shrubs.

For best results, it has been found that permanent cultivation is necessary to eliminate grass and weeds from an area planted to trees and shrubs. It is not enough to cut the weeds after they have made their growth because then they already have used the moisture that is vital to the tree or shrub.

Cultivation must be at sufficiently frequent intervals, Mr. Keathley says, to prevent rank weed growth, and must be continued for a long period of years. After the trees are well developed, cultivation may be less frequent, but the soil around the trees and shrubs must be kept clean and free from weeds at all times to get the best results.

Sunday school off in attendance at Welch Sunday. Interest was very good. Two new scholars and one visitor. League Sunday night not largely attended but a nice little crowd and a fine service. Report from Bartlett was that two new scholars were in attendance. I think that very fine. Seems Bartlett folks had rather attend Sunday school at home than attend picnics elsewhere on the Fourth. Hurray for Bartlett. Revival meeting begins at Bartlett the second Sunday in August. Will run only one week. Pastor will do the preaching. Home talent expected to furnish the music. Work, watch, and pray for the meeting.

Next Sunday our regular day at Welch. Come and help. Revival begins here the third Sunday in August with Rev. W. M. Pearce doing the preaching. Pastor leading the singing. Come and help us furnish the music.

NO VACATION FOR BLOW-OUTS!

HOT WEATHER BLOW-OUT WARNING

Equip your car with Silvertowns, the only tires with Golden Ply Blow-out Protection

The next few months are going to be the hardest in the year on your tires. Because this is the time of year for long trips to the seashore and country—trips that pile up miles—take more out of tires than many months of driving in other seasons.

When you're speeding along at 30, 40 and 50, you can't be too sure of your tires. Unless your tires can stand the terrific heat generated inside all tires at these high speeds—unless they can "take it," this internal heat sooner or later may lead to a dangerous blow-out.

Play safe this summer. Come in and let us equip your car with Goodrich Safety Silvertowns. Silvertowns are the only tires in the world with the famous Golden Ply. This life-saving invention is a layer of special rubber and full-floating cords, scientifically treated to resist internal tire heat.

GOODRICH ENTERS LOW-PRICED TIRE FIELD!
FULL-DIMENSION, LONG-MILEAGE
No "scrimping". Made of wear-resisting rubber, this big, husky Goodrich Commander Tire is a great buy. Come in today.

Everything TO BUILD Anything

STORY OF WARDROBE WORK

By Mrs. R. L. Miller, Fairview Community, as told over the radio, June 21

I was elected demonstrator by my club last September. At the time, I would like to have refused, but my interest in the work and thinking of the club pledge, which is—"I pledge my head to clearer thinking, my hands to greater service, my heart to truer loyalty and finer sympathy, my health to efficient living in service to my home, my community, my country and my God"—I accepted this place in my club.

The provision of adequate storage space for clothing for the entire family was one of my hardest problems, and it was not until early in the spring that we solved this problem.

I made plans for a portable type wardrobe to be built as we do not own our home. The plan called for a cabinet 7 feet high, 5 feet wide and 30 inches deep. The plan was discussed with my husband who seemed very interested and then with the home demonstration agent who said it was all right, then took it to the lumber dealer and had the cost estimated. All materials were estimated at a cost of $11.86. My husband had agreed to build it, even though he had never had any experience in carpentering until he built shelves for my pantry last fall.

Fence staves were used for the foundation, regular flooring for the floor and panel board for the walls and top. The door extends to within six inches of the top of the wardrobe. The frame for it is made of flooring with the tongue planed off, and panel board for the center. It is well braced at the corners thus making it a sturdy door. My sister gave me some scrap pieces of lumber which we used to brace the cabinet at the corners and of course this helped to reduce the cost.

There is a shelf 24 inches deep, five feet long in the top of the wardrobe. On this shelf I have new quilts stored and in the center there is room for 4 to 6 hats, depending upon the size of them. The hat racks were made from apple boxes, sanded and then enameled ivory. The clothes rod is placed under the top shelf and is 3 1/2 feet long. There are four shelves 30 inches long, 16 inches wide and 12 inches apart at the left as one opens the door. On these shelves I have folded garments such as bed linens, bedspreads, and dresser scarfs. One shelf is used for out of season clothes, such as sweaters, coats, and suits, at present.

On the door there was placed a rod for ties and belts. And since five of us must share this storage space, I made a bag with five compartments for the storage of hose, and the flash light.

Five hooks on the inside of the wardrobe are placed low enough that our five year old son can easily store his clothing. He and my husband think it a great pleasure now to hang up their own clothes.

The inside of this storage space, is enameled ivory to provide a smooth, light surface. As you know, moths dislike anything that is smooth or light. The outside is finished with clear varnish. After each application I sanded it well which gave it a clear smooth finish.

When the last bit of work had been done, the oldest son, very quickly gathered all the best shoes for the entire family, polished them and placed them on the shoe rack. I was as enthusiastic as he for I could hardly wait until I could wash and iron all the clothes and put them away for the first time in a clean place, and knowing that when a shirt was taken out it would not be streaked with sand. When all of the cotton clothing was laundered I began making plans to put away the worn clothes. The cost of sending all that we had to the cleaners, seemed more than I could afford, so I bought 5 gallons of gasoline and washed them. Then as I pressed and mended them, I wrapped them in paper and placed them on a shelf in the wardrobe. I cleaned and pressed 12 woolen garments at a cost of 35 cents which is about a $6 saving.

The old closet that was shared by three of us, is now our daughters. It was remodelled by adding shelves and racks. The work clothes for my husband and boys are kept on shelves in a back room. Words cannot express the joys that are ours since we have this additional storage space for clothing.

Since September of last year, I have made a woolen suit, a silk dress, a silk blouse, a slip, underwear, and two cotton dresses at a cost of $21.25. These garments are valued at $43.98 which is a saving of $22.73, for myself.

I have made 20 garments for my husband and boys at a saving of $10.00. Four our daughter, I made 13 dresses and undergarments at a cost of $11.12 which are valued at $26.25 and at a saving of $15.13. The total saved is $47.86.

I have clothed my family of six for the past year, for an average of $43.30 each.

Social Security Board Now Assigning Account Numbers

El Paso, July 6.—Effective July 1, all social security numbers will be issued to workers from field offices of the Social Security Board. It was announced here by F. J. McCarthy, Jr., acting manager of the El Paso field office of the Board.

Workers in the El Paso territory who have not yet applied for account numbers may obtain application blanks (Form SS-5) at their local post offices, but the executed forms should be forwarded with required postage prepaid, to the Social Security Board, 335 First National Bank Building, El Paso, where the account number cards will be prepared and returned to applicants.

"Since the account numbers of all workers in employment covered by the Social Security Act must be reported by employers to the Bureau of Internal Revenue during July, it is likely that receipts of SS-5 forms by our office will be heavier during that month; however, every effort will be made to return account number cards promptly to each worker whose application form has been completed satisfactorily," McCarthy said.

Postmasters will continue to give the applicant any information and assistance he may require in filling out the form.

Employers who have not applied for identification numbers may obtain the necessary form (SS-4) from post offices. This completed form should be forwarded to the Social Security Board, 335 First National Bank Building, El Paso, Texas.

Rocky Mountain Fever Shows Up In Texas

Austin, July 6.—Appearance of the dread Rocky Mountain Fever in Texas was evident this week when two cases of the disease reported in Southeast Texas were officially diagnosed as such by Dr. R. R. Spencer, spotted fever expert of the United States Public Health Service. Dr. Spencer, vacationing in San Antonio was pressed into service by State Health Officer Dr. George W. Cox, to diagnose the two cases, one of which proved fatal.

Dr. Spencer's diagnosis is the first official recognition of the presence in Texas of spotted fever, a disease transmittable to men by the bite of infected ticks. Although many wood and dog ticks are not infected with the fever, the disease in man is serious enough to warrant the practice of precautionary measures. A person with spotted fever will develop the disease within 2 to 12 days after receiving the infection.

When the ticks appear, they are unfed and are seeking some animal to attach themselves to and suck blood. When the tick drops on an animal, including man, it does not start feeding at once, but usually spends some time searching for a suitable place. Experiments have shown that a previously unfed tick will attach itself to the body and feed for a few hours before transmitting the infection, but it then becomes highly infectious.

Three measures may be used to prevent spotted fever: avoid ticks, remove ticks from body as soon as possible, or be vaccinated. Vaccine to prevent spotted fever is not readily available so precaution should be used to avoid or eliminate ticks from the person immediately.

Reviews Progress of Agricultural Program

College Station, July 6.—The state AAA office has received 188,370 worksheets under the Agricultural Conservation Program from 213 counties, according to George Slaughter, chairman of the Texas Agricultural Conservation Committee. Of the 213 counties, 173, with 153,065 worksheets in 1937 as compared with 153,105 in 1936, are complete.

Heavy participation in the range conservation feature of the program was indicated as Slaughter announced that applications covering 18,306 ranches, totaling 62,744,827 acres, had been received. Range inspectors, who are checking the grazing capacity of these ranches, are expected to complete their work during July.

The work sheets from 20 of the 173 complete counties have been analyzed and the quotas for these counties have been determined. Tabulations on five additional counties have been carried through and figures from these counties are ready for analysis by the statistical unit, Slaughter said.

Compliance under the 1937 program is already under way in South Texas, according to Slaughter, and 12 instructional meetings are scheduled on this phase of the program. Eight recheck engineers are supervising the compliance work in the field and will visit all counties in which farms are affected by the Agricultural Conservation Program.

MUSIC AND COLOR ENHANCE GLAMOR OF SEA STORY FILM

Music that suggests the tang of the salt sea, natural color photography which reproduces with fidelity the brilliant emerald and opalescent tints of the ocean views and the lush lights and shadows of the glamorous South Sea Islands, and a fast moving adventure story that thrills throughout, combine to make "Captain Calamity" Grand National's all-color feature offering, starring George Houston and Marion Nixon, which opens at the Cole Theatre on Wednesday night of next week, a picture that should please the most exacting movie-goer.

Photographed throughout in Hirliman, the new process developed by George A. Hirliman, the producer, "Captain Calamity" has scenic effects which would be quite impossible to obtain in ordinary black and white film. The music and lyrics, especially written for the picture by Jack Stern and Harry Tobias, give a swing and a movement to the filmed action that adds much to the realistic effect.

George Houston, who won fame in the musical comedy stage, as well as on the athletic field at college, make an ideal "Captain Calamity," the roistering, hard-fighting adventurer, around whose personality the plot pivots. Marion Nixon plays the part of the girl "Madge," who accompanies "Captain Calamity" on all his exploits. Others in the cast are Vince Barnett, Juan Torenza, George Wilbur, George Lewis, Roy D'Arcy, Margaret Irving, Barry Norton, Louis Natheaux, Lloyd Ingraham, and Movita, the girl who won such wide acclaim for her acting in "Mutiny on the Bounty."

Motoring Tips

Editor's Note: From the standpoint of benefits to the public at large, no other engineering achievement of the past 30 years can compare with the development of the automobile. Constant progress, in which engineering and production forces have joined hands, has transformed the motor car from a luxury, available to only a few, into a moderate priced necessity of every day life. Here a leading automotive engineer, associated with a company which has pioneered many notable advances, discusses one of the ways in which motorists may take advantage of the qualities which the designer and builder are incorporating into today's motor cars.

By J. M. CRAWFORD

Chief Engineer

Chevrolet Division

General Motors Corporation.

Not long ago, a party of tourists narrowly escaped mishap when a battered old car coming toward them on the highway suddenly cut across their path into a farm drive. Good brakes on their car, and a wide apron on the road, enabled them to miss it by a hair, and as they backed onto the road again, they remonstrated with its driver, who was just beginning to realize how close to trouble he had been.

"Why in the world didn't you signal that you were going to turn?" one of the party asked.

"Why, Mister," the other driver answered, "I thought everybody knew I live here."

Whoever remarked that the average car was better than the average driver probably meant that operating technique, as observable on our streets and highways, has not kept pace with the evolution of the motor car itself. Certainly a little heavier stress on the niceties of driving would enable the motoring public to secure a greater measure of the comfort, safety, and general satisfaction that are built into every car today.

In my opinion, that motorist is the most competent who keeps in mind, at all times, the fact that there are others besides himself on the road, and drives in a manner consistent with that realization. The good driver never assumes that others know what he intends to do. He signals every move—not only his stops and turns, but also his intention to pull away from a curb. He is equally careful to give notice, with his horn, when about to pass. Observance of proper signal procedure will automatically do away with one of the most dangerous driving hazards—the sudden, unexpected move. And if he hopes to qualify among the really top-notch drivers, he will go one step further, and keep his eyes open for the other fellows signals, so that his own starts, stops and turns may be based on information more reliable than a guess or a "hunch" of what others are about to do.

CLUB MEMBER IS CANNING FOR COUNTY EXHIBIT

Mrs. R. S. Stanfield believes that one must start early if she is to have good exhibit products for the county exhibit in the fall. She has canned string beans on the shelf waiting for the time to come. First class beans should be about 1-4 inch in diameter, of a deep green color, crisp, tender and fleshy, and seeds not larger than pin heads. To prepare them for canning, one should wash them, snap the ends and cut into even lengths 1 1/2 to 2 inches in length. Cover with boiling water and simmer uncovered for about 5 minutes or until the beans will bend without breaking. Then they should be packed hot into containers and cover with hot water and add 1 teaspoon of salt to each quart. Then process them at 240 degrees Fahrenheit or 10 pounds of pressure, quart jars, 35 minutes, No. 2 plain tin cans, 25 minutes, and pint jars and No. 3 plain tin cans, 30 minutes.

DEMONSTRATOR PROVIDES STORAGE FOR CLOTHING

"I built it myself," said Mrs. L. Thomas, demonstrator in the Bartlett home demonstration club, as she talked of her closet as a part of her work as a demonstrator. The closet is built of panel board, measures five feet in breadth, 27 inches in depth, and extends to the ceiling. It is so constructed that it can be moved in case the family moves to a new location.

Mrs. Thomas has made a sleeve board which is invaluable in ironing puff sleeves of the season and has also made a tailor's cushion which she uses in pressing the shoulders of coats and the hips of trousers.

DEMONSTRATION AGENT FURNISHES RECIPES

Miss Mattie Phenix, county home demonstration agent gives the following recipes for the benefit of those interested in canning:

Sweet Pickled Peaches
6 lbs. fruit 4 oz. stick cinnamon
3 lbs. sugar 2 oz. whole cloves
1 pt. water 1 oz. ginger

Select firm clingstone peaches. Peel by sit or method given under canning peaches and drop at once into a syrup which is made by boiling together one half the amount of sugar and water; boil, covered, for ten to fifteen minutes. Cool quickly and allow to stand for two to three hours. Drain off the syrup, put vinegar, spices and balance of the sugar into it and heat until sugar is dissolved. Boil for fifteen minutes then add the peaches and cook together for half an hour. Let stand over night. Next morning drain off the syrup, boil for 20 minutes, add the peaches, and continue cooking for 15 minutes longer. Cool again and let stand for two hours or over night, then boil all together until the peaches are clear and tender. Pack peaches cold into jars, garnish with snips of stick cinnamon, cover with strained syrup, heat (simmering). Only hard or firm slightly under-ripe peaches should be used.

Preserved Peaches
5 lbs. peeled sliced firm peaches (clingstone peaches preferred)
3 pints of cider vinegar
1 ounce of cloves
3½ pounds of brown sugar
½ ounce of nutmeg
1 ounce of cinnamon
Peel the peaches and put them in a stone jar. Break up spices, scald, and then strew through the peaches. Boil sugar and vinegar together for ten minutes and pour over the peaches while very hot. Repeat this for three consecutive days, then boil all together for ten to fifteen minutes until peaches are clear and tender; cool, pack, and process twenty minutes at 190 degrees Fahrenheit (simmering).

Lets Talk About Clothes

Denton, June 29.—Plain laziness keeps the majority of women from having the rich glossy hair for which they envy others. For, unfortunately, one can "get by" without taking care of the texture of one's hair, and few people realize that a weekly trip to the beauty parlor is not enough to guarantee lovely locks.

Everyone knows that brushing is good for the hair, but few people know why. First of all, it removes the dust and grime that collects on each separate hair of one's head. Second, it stimulates and keeps a steady flow of blood at the roots where the oil glands are located.

Sun devotees who defy its strong summer rays should become brush devotees as well, since this treatment distributes the oil down the length of each hair, and those parched spots remain a threat rather than a reality. Much artificial hair oil is wasted by women who refuse to take advantage of the scalp's natural supply.

Some beauticians call for one hundred strokes a day; others say brush for five minutes, but they all say "Brush!" Brushes must be kept clean (soap and water do it, wonderfully) and the bristles should be long and firm enough to reach through the hair to the scalp.

To get the most benefit from the least output of energy, one should brush upward on all sides, then forward from the nape of the neck all through the length of the hair, finishing up with several strokes back from the forehead to calm down the curls and waves again.

Loan Association Shows Good Business

The Lamesa Federal Savings & Loan Association, Lamesa, Texas, reported to the Federal Home Loan Bank of Little Rock a prosperous six-month period closing June 30, 1937.

It has made 15 loans since January 1st, amounting to $19,595.92, 8 of the loans being for new home construction.

It paid dividends on the basis of 5 per cent per annum for the six-months period, total dividends paid amounting to $1,842.32.

That it is being received favorably by investors is evidenced by the $13,806.31 which came into the association during the period through the sale of its shares.

All mortgage loans of the association are first liens upon real estate and its shares, up to $5,000 per investor, are fully insured against loss by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

The association, one of 286 members on the Little Rock Bank, fills an economic need in the community in that it provides a place for safe and profitable investment of local money and a source of funds to aid in the purchase and construction of homes.

COOPERATOR WELL PLEASED WITH PROGRAM

"I have been a cooperator with the Soil Conservation Service Camp since it was established," says L. B. Stuart, who resides 10 miles southeast of Lamesa, "and I am very well pleased with their program. I have had less blowing this year on land that is terraced and land that is contoured than I ever had. I have one field that was contoured this year and this is the first year it has failed to blow. This is the first year that I have not had to sand furrow this particular field."

Mr. Stuart had one field that had sudan on it in 1936 after he had taken out wheat. The sudan was grazed and then in the fall was plowed up, but ridges were not leveled. Volunteer wheat came up on this field and was grazed until the first of April 1937. The first of April the stock was taken off to allow the wheat to mature. This wheat produced ten bushels per acre on an average in June 1937. This field was terraced in 1935 with small broad base terraces.

Miss Olive Meadors spent the week end with her parents at Dickens.

Farm Ownership by Tenant Farmers Is Urged by Mahon

Washington, D. C. July 6.—Farm home ownership for a greater number of tenant farmers was the argument for amendments proposed by Congressman George Mahon to the Farm Tenancy Bill passed by the House of Representatives last week.

His amendments would have made available $50,000,000 for the first year and $100,000,000 for the two years following to be loaned to farm home purchasers by the Farm Credit Administration under liberalized credit regulations. The bill as passed by the House provides $10,000,000 for the first year, $25,000,000 for the second year, and $50,000,000 for the third year to be lent to farm purchasers under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mahon pointed out that the House Bill was so limited that only a very small beginning could be made in the great problem of assisting the estimated 2,865,000 farm tenants in financing farm homes but stated that he voted for the Bill after defeat of his amendments because he was anxious that some start be made.

The Senate passed a Farm Tenancy Bill last week providing appropriations similar to those of the House Bill but the Senate Bill provides that the Government shall buy land and sell it to tenants whereas the House Bill provides only for loans to tenants to purchase farm lands, the Government not making an outright purchase of the land. The two bills are now pending with a Conference Committee of the House and Senate.

KLONDIKE HOME DEMONSTRATION CLUB

The old fashioned kitchen that offered opportunity for sociability and inefficiency is being replaced by the small modern kitchen with no space for utensils which do not meet the needs of the family.

"Every utensil should justify the space it takes up," said Miss Phenix, "and should have several uses, be easy to clean, have durability, and save fuel."

Aluminum is the most popular of all utensils, the heavier grade being a good fuel saver, and enamel is next. Stainless steel is another good utensil but owing to the high price is used very little. Miss Phenix also told us several things that will be helpful when selecting knives.

The next meeting will be at the school house, July 13.—Reporter.

Resettlement Administration To Exhibit Work

An exhibit to better acquaint the public with the work of the Home Supervisor of the Resettlement Administration in Dawson and Gaines counties will be on display in the show window at Collins Dry Goods in Lamesa during the week of July 15-17.

The exhibit will consist mainly of articles of food and clothing and other household necessities that have been made by the clients.

During the early part of the year general plans for the purpose of rehabilitation are made with each family. This is an educational type of program. One of its main purposes is to build a more satisfactory home life, a richer, fuller existence and experience through securing by its own efforts healthier bodies, more comfortable and attractive homes, more adequate clothing, equipment, furnishings and education. Some of the phases of the work that are found in the exhibit are home beautification, clothing, child care, first aid, home crafts, gardens, food preservation, family and community relationship, nutrition, poultry improvement and the farm family record book.

Since very little spending money is available it is necessary to utilize all materials on hand to improve the home conditions. This may be done by construction this as a whole or by reconditioning furniture, clothes, etc., that are now in use. Better methods of food preservation are encouraged to more adequately meet the needs of the particular family. Home production of goods forms a large part of the home development program until the family is financially able to buy those goods which modern industry can best provide.

This is the first display of its type to be presented to the public in these counties. Various other means are being planned to further acquaint the people here with the work of the Resettlement Administration.

WILSON HOME DEMONSTRATION CLUB

The Wilson home demonstration club met at 2 p. m. Thursday, July 1, with Mrs. C. Jobe. Miss Phenix gave a demonstration on meal service and Mrs. Jobe, wardrobe demonstrator for the Wilson club, gave a demonstration on making a well edge button hole.

Miss Phenix stated that a hostess' first consideration in planning for a meal should be for her guest. She also said that no matter what kind of knives, forks and spoons one had they should be used properly, and that children who are taught how to eat properly while young will be saved from embarrassment when they grow older.

In the demonstration on making a pocket the members were told that when they cut the opening for a pocket or a bound button hole, if they would cut the opening all the way to the corner the button hole or pocket would be flat instead of being drawn out of shape or puckering.

The committee appointed to select a stunt for the encampment reported that they had selected one entitled, "The Shanty Town Scandal"—Reporter.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Haynes left this week for a vacation in Lake City, Colorado.

CHAPTER I—Warren Lovett, thirty-three, junior partner in the powerful Wellington, Parkes & Lovett, Incorporated Mines of Chicago, which engages in questionable transactions, plans to make a secret coup in the Canadian Arctic, where a few years before a rich but inaccessible mining field has been discovered on Resurrection river, which flows into Dynamite Bay. Patricia, high spirited and beautiful daughter of crusty old Jasper Wellington, who is engaged to Warren, decides to accompany him. Over her father's objections, he agrees to take her. They go by plane. Pat meets "Poleon", a French-Canadian prospector, who tells her there are only 300 prospectors in the field and that they are hanging on by a thread.

CHAPTER II—Pat is disturbed when Warren will not disclose what his secret mission is. She visits the prospectors camp and is depressed to see how discouraged they are. She meets Sam Honeywell, a friend of Poleon's. Moved by the plight of Bill Fornier, a prospector, who though fatally ill, struggles to hold his claim, Pat decides to help him.

CHAPTER III—Informed by Lupe Chiwaughini, head of a family of half-breed retainers of the company, about Pat's befriending the prospectors, Warren tries to dissuade her. He tells her that Craig Tarlton, with whom she had once been in love, is now deputy mining inspector for the Resurrection river area. A brilliant geologist, he had returned in disgust from her father's company because of its devious methods. Later she meets Craig, but he is cold, inferring that he is merely feigning interest in the prospectors.

CHAPTER IV—Her compassion for the hapless prospectors growing, Pat decides to build a huge community house or Den. When the job nears completion, Warren tells her to abandon it. She refuses after a stormy scene. Craig leaves on a three-month inspection trip.

CHAPTER V—Pat learns that her father has withdrawn her allowance. Warren tells her now she will have to go home. When he refuses to advance her a loan to help the prospectors, she accuses him of hedging and continually keeping her in the dark. She moves her tent across the river near the Den. When Warren, aided by the Chiwaughinis, attempts to force her to board a plane for Chicago, the prospectors rally and beat them off.

The Story

"Why, yes. Of course. Why?"
"You'll go back to your home, to your family, won't you? You're not planning to sever yourself from them and from all that they mean to you?"
"Of course not! But why are you asking this?"

"Dear, have you ever paused to re-

"You'll Go Back to Your Home, to Your Family, Won't You?"

fect that my business here at Dynamite Bay is to make money for the firm, for the Wellington and Parkes families, and so ultimately, for you, since you intend to go back home?

What I'm doing here is done in part for you. Yet you've fought me every step of the way, and now—now you've broken your engagement to me. Don't you think that you're a little unjust and inconsistent?"

Patricia did not answer him. There was no answer to his charge. In the past few months she herself had been torn by the inconsistency which he was pointing out now. If Warren's business here at the Bay was dishonest, then she had been living all her life on dishonest money.

Warren went on: "I think the time may come, Patricia, when you will wish to resume our engagement. You feel now that such an event is a remote possibility, but maybe you don't. The whole situation is clearly as I do. He moved around, changed the desk, moved a little drawer and laid the ring in a small plush box. He put the ring in here, dear. It will always be here, waiting for you. Will you remember that it's waiting for you and that I'm always asking you to wear it again?"

"Yes," Patricia promised, to assuage his hurt. "But, Warren, please don't hold up hope. It'll only be the harder to lose."
"I won't hope, dear. I'll only wait."
The word jarred on Patricia. It was not the word she wanted, as the prospectors were confident that she would ultimately come back to him, under the pressure of inexorable forces.
Moving around the desk, he confronted her again.

"Tell me, Patricia—how much did Tarlton's return to the Bay have to do with your decision to break our engagement?"

"Nothing!" she denied.
"Tarlton likes you, doesn't he?"
"He does not! He brought me these clothes because—well, as an atonement for some unjust things that he said to me last fall."
"I'm glad to hear this. I'd be even gladder if I could feel sure that he is not going to show you any attentions at all."
His mysterious tone alarmed Patricia. "Why shouldn't he show me attentions?" she demanded. "What're you driving at?"

"Did it ever occur to you, dear, that there's a dark place in the two years that Tarlton spent on the West coast? I mean, in his private life out there?"
Patricia drew back in sudden fright. "What is it you know?" she cried.
"You've been probing around in his past! You're afraid of him; you've been trying to dig up something against him. What did you dig up? What'd he do there at Vancouver?"
"If I probed into his past, it was only to protect you. I don't like the duty of telling you this, but I'm compelled to. Tarlton is married."

Patricia went white of face. "Married?" she gasped brokenly. "Craig—married?"

CHAPTER VII

On his lone vigil with Bill Fornier Craig wearily stirred the fire in the stove, put in fresh wood, and came back to the bunk where Bill was lying. Moving restlessly, Fornier was on the point of waking out of his drugged dose. As Craig anxiously watched, he thought it would be merciful if Bill did not come back to consciousness at all. Consciousness only meant a feverish worry about his claims, and a hopeless longing to see his wife and little girl before he died.

Bill moved, and his eyes opened, heavy and slow.

"What place—is this?" he asked, gropingly.

"You're in my cabin, Bill; my cabin at the Bay."

Bill did not seem to realize who was beside him. He struggled with the blankets and tried to sit up.

"Where's Lea? Why ain't she around?" he demanded. He shook his head, as though to clear the fog out of it. "Uh, I keep forgetting; this is the Bay, ain't it?—and she's over on the McKenzie, at home." He pushed away Craig's restraining hand. "I got to get back there. Got to!"

Craig held a candle so that Bill could see him distinctly. "Bill, look at me. Everything's all right, old man. But you must lie quiet, mustn't struggle like that."

Bill recognized him then. "Craig!" he said. After a moment he lay back. Presently, more rational, he begged: "Can't you send for 'em somehow, Craig? Can't Miss Pat get one of them big red ships to go? It's been two whole years since I saw 'em. I promised Lea I'd come home. That was the last thing I told her." He grew excited, gripped Craig's wrist. "I'm gonna go back—"

Craig reached for the hypo which he kept ready on a chair. In a few minutes Fornier was lying quiet again, oblivious to his silver claims and his home over west on the Mackenzie.

As he sat there beside the bunk, hour upon hour, Craig was thinking of this Dynamite Bay situation and debating the righteous course for himself to take. Except for the quiet word which he had passed around to the prospectors last fall, "Hang on to your claims; don't sell out to Lovett," he had kept aloof from the struggle. Four years of disillusioned thinking had made him dubious about espousing causes. Where Patricia had plunged headlong into the fight, he had maintained a scientific detachment, from which he could study and judge without partisan bias. Broader of outlook than Patricia, he thought in terms of social forces where she thought in terms of individual people. This battle was her whole horizon; but he saw it as just one isolated instance—there were many Lovetts, many Dynamite Bays.

The injustice of the situation had aroused a slow deep anger in him. He had begun to ask himself whether it was right of him to sit back, take no hand, see these men get ironed out flat by the steamroller of Wellington, Parkes & Lovett. He went further and asked whether his four years of detachment should be brought to an end. Those years of thoughtful study had been an invaluable phase, but it seemed to him that this phase was drawing to its inevitable close and that he would have to chart a new path for himself. There was a time for thought, and a time for action.

On one of his trips to the stove, to thrust in fresh wood and pour himself a cup of coffee, he scraped the rime from a window pane and looked out into the storm. It had reached its worst at last; had settled to the steady full-lunged roar that marked its peak. In the blind seething swirl he could see nothing except the nearest pines—a drove of huge black animals tossing, pawing and rearing. One tall pine that stood near his cabin was so doubled over by the screaming gale that its top was beating upon the roof.

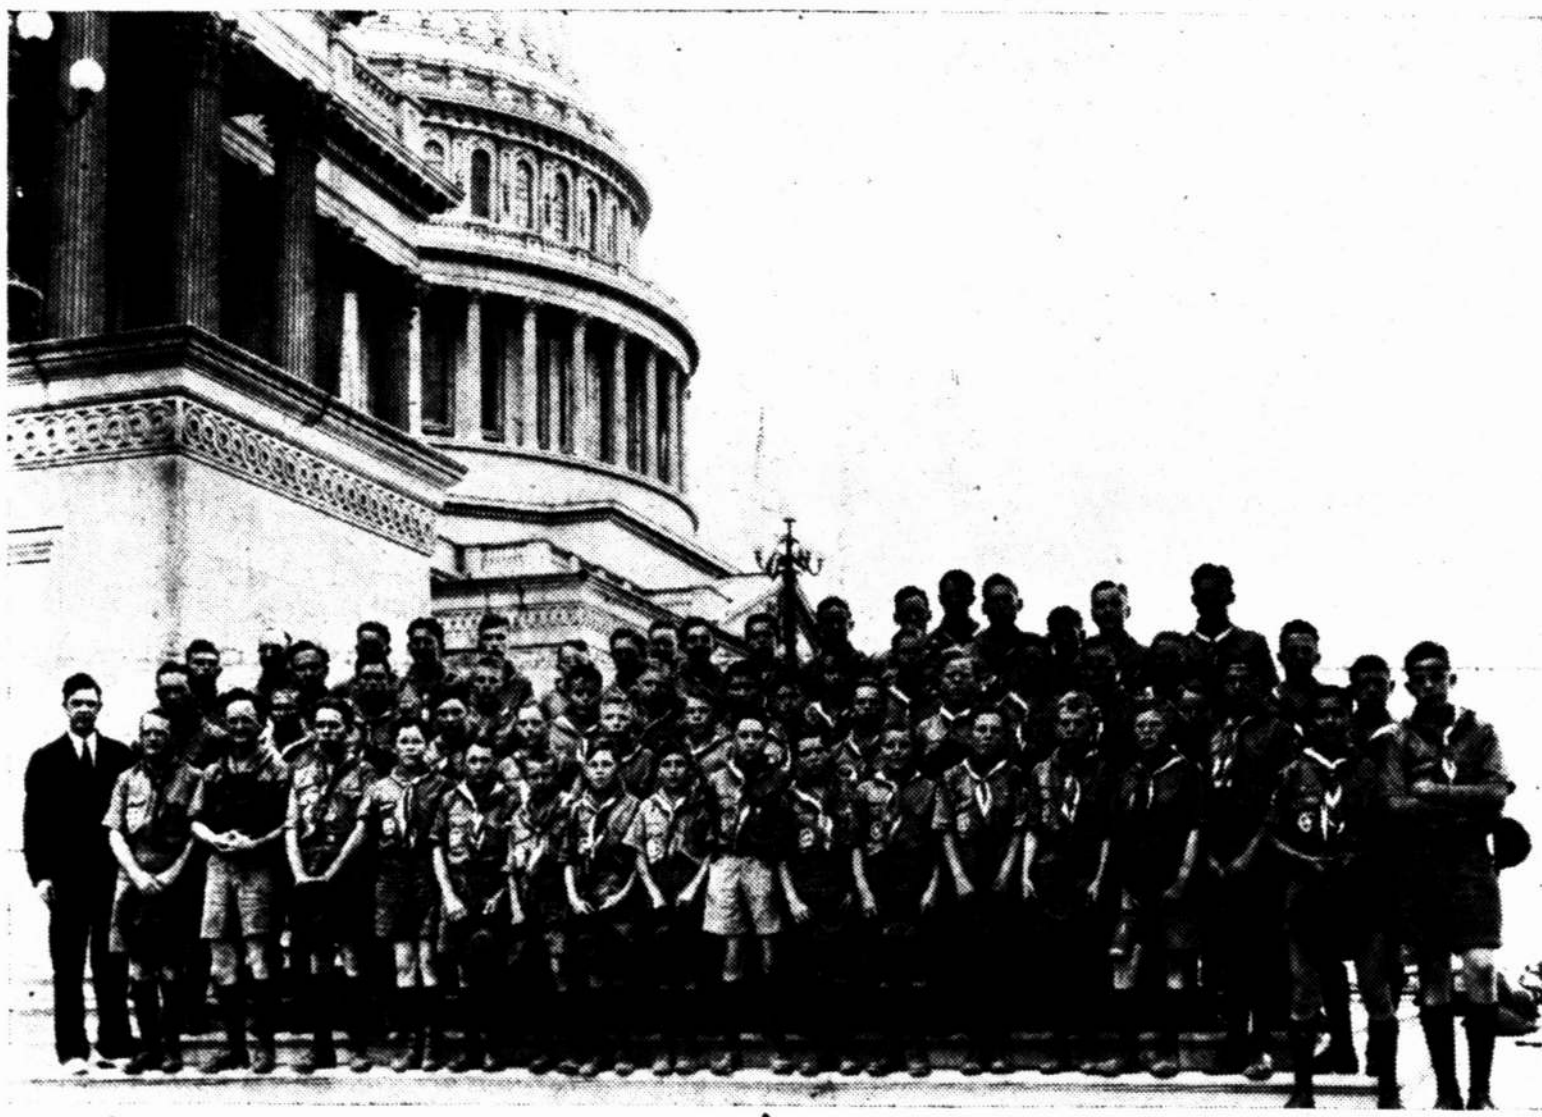

He thought it fitting that Bill Fornier, Artie born and bred, should be passing in this storm—riding away in the fury of the worst that the Arctic could unleash.

When he went back to the bunk, Bill was awake. More clear-headed than at any previous time, he was also weaker, so weak that his voice was gone and he had to whisper.

"Those claims of mine, Craig—I didn't get the work done on 'em. Lea will be left without—"
"Bill, now listen to me. I'm taking care of those claims. I spotted 'em for you in the first place, and I'll see that you—that Lea gets 'em in the end. That's a promise."

RESURRECTION RIVER

Bill's lips moved. "If you promise, then everything's all right." His eyes closed and he lay still. The expression that came over his face, the unwonted peace and quietude startled Craig. He leaned down, felt for a pulse beat, found none. "Bill!" He shook Forner's shoulder. "Bill!" After several minutes he gently straightened out Bill's arms and drew a blanket up over the bunk.

On New Year's day, Craig started across the river to see Warren. For an entire week—since Christmas—he had kept to his cabin, secluded from everybody, thinking, mapping a new course for himself. The slowly gathering forces which had been at work in him for many months had at last won out. The death of Bill Forner merely marked the end of the old epoch and the beginning of a radically different one.

Warren received him courteously, drew a chair near the desk, held a match for his cigarette. "Warren—Craig went straight to the point. 'I've been thinking about this deadlocked fight between your company and these men. I'm wondering why you and I can't work out some agreement whereby they'll get substantial justice and the company will make a good profit on its undertaking in this field.'"

Warren tapped the ashes from his cigarette. "You have some specific agreement in mind?" he inquired. "Yes. Instead of buying these claims outright, your company would buy a part interest. Two-thirds, let's say. That way the men wouldn't be left out entirely, later on, when the actual mining begins, and still your company would be getting the big cut."

"Your suggestion," Warren said dryly, "is a fine one—for these men. But from the company's viewpoint it isn't so fetching. Let me correct you about one thing: this fight is not deadlocked. In the last week I've bought 60 claims. The stampede that I've been waiting for has begun. Within a month I'll own this entire field. Why, then, should I stop short of my complete program?"

"You mean, why should you be content with two thirds when you can get it all?"

"If you wish to put it that way. Yes."

"Why, damn it, Warren, because of the human justice involved! Doesn't the welfare of 300 men count for something? Most of them are married, have families—"

"The company," Warren cut him short, "has no responsibility toward them or their families."

Craig was little disappointed by Warren's cold refusal to arbitrate, for he had expected it. He had come across the river merely because he did not wish to throw away any hope, however faint, of settling this struggle peacefully.

"So you don't recognize any responsibility," he mused. "Well that's hardly a surprise. The house of Wellington, Parkos & Lovett wasn't founded on consideration for others, as well I know. The history of their deals with prospectors and operating mine companies would read like a slaughter-house story."

Warren drummed impatiently on his desk. "I've heard that same line before, Tarlton—from people who haven't got any money themselves."

"If you're aiming that remark at me, why, I made and threw away two fortunes, friend, while you were grubbing around after your first one." He then he went on: "Old Jasper Wellington belonged to a generation whose paucity, to let that fact sink in; and ideal was to capture the timber and land and mines and oil and finances of a nation, and wield a power as tyrannical as any old feudal baron ever wielded. But met like him won't be tolerated in the best any longer, to scuttle the welfare of whole large groups and play havoc with honest business companies. It's your good luck and mine, Warren, that we belong to a generation which has thrown out that old plunder-lust philosophy and is groping toward something nobler—"

Warren shoved back his chair. "Listen, Tarlton—I don't care to hear a lecture on political economy of the in your proposition about these claims, prophetic sort. And I'm not interested. Did you have anything else to say?"

Craig got up. "Only this: I offered you a deal, Warren, and you wouldn't take it. We could settle this fight peacefully, but you refuse. Now we'll have to settle it on the basis of might. We'll battle it out."

"That suits me very well," Warren returned. He came around from behind the desk. "By the way, Tarlton, there's a private matter I'd like to mention to you before you go. Now that you too have declared war, you'll likely be joining with Patricia. I can't stop that, but... Under the circumstances I must ask you not to associate with her personally in any way whatsoever."

"What circumstances are you referring to?"

"The fact that you have a wife."

"Hmmp! So you dug that up. You have told Patricia, I suppose?"

"Don't you think she ought to know?"

"I don't consider it of much importance."

"Good heavens!"

"Yes, good heavens. It's a sheer technicality. Besides, if the occasion ever arises, I myself will tell her about that misadventure."

"The whole story?"

"Quite. Far more, in fact, than you have uncovered."

Warren followed him to the door. "I think you're treating this Rosalie matter too lightly, Tarlton. It may turn out to be more important than you think you're treating this Rosalie matter—you'll take the consequences."

"Don't be so mysterious, Warren. What's up your sleeve?"

Warren started to say something, but checked himself and nodded a curt good-by.

As Craig went back across Resurrection, he wondered whether that ugly word "consequences" was a poker-faced bluff or a genuine warning. He did not know, didn't much care. For he was looking ahead to his battle against Warren and his company; and an exultation was pulsing in his veins. It felt good to be on the warpath again, gunning for powerful enemies; good to be back in action, in the thick of a fight once more. A surge of unlocked energy ran strong in him, like a river at break-up.

At Patricia's cabin no one answered his knock; and he went over to the community house.

It was the first time that he had entered the Den. With curious eyes he looked around at Patricia's handiwork as he passed through the gear-cluttered entrance-way and stepped inside the main room.

Although the Den was comfortable and cheery, it was a rough and rowdy place, truly the den of 75 rock-hogs. As Craig looked around the big room, he thought of the Wellington North-Shore mansion, where he had first met Patricia; and he wondered how on earth she, a girl and a blue blood besides, could endure the uncouth manners and the ways of these heavy footed miners. It took something more than sympathy. It took courage, took a fighting heart and a deep conviction of righteousness.

Not glimpsing her anywhere in the room, he asked a prospector, "Where is Miss Wellington, Dave?"

"Over in the office," the man replied, pointing at a niche beside the huge fireplace on the west side.

Craig stepped over. The "office" proved to be a little six by eight cubbyhole, fitted into the fireplace angle and boarded off so as to shut out the bedlam of the main room.

At his knock a girl's voice demanded, "Who is it? I'm busy. What do you want?"

"It's Tarlton. I'm sorry to've disturbed you. I'll come back some other time."

"Craig! Wait!" He heard her chair creak back hastily. The door flung open and she stood before him. "Please don't go. I'm not busy, really; it's just that these men come trooping to me all day long with all sorts of troubles. I'm getting to growl and bark like a sergeant-major."

In her belted corduroy suit she looked so winsome and girlish that Craig smiled at the idea of her growling and barking.

He stepped into the office. "I'd like to have a talk with you, Treeshia."

Her cheeks colored. He wondered why.

"I was just glancing about at the house that Pat built," he remarked. "It's really fine, Treeshia. You can be proud of it."

Patricia's face clouded over at his mention of the Den. "The men like it a lot, I guess," she said listlessly turning toward him. "But—"

Craig noticed, then, that her eyes had a suspicious redness about them, as though she had been crying.

"Something's gone wrong, Treeshia. What is it?"

"Nothing, except that—I—I'm sunk!" she quavered. Two big tears gathered in her dark eyes. "Everything has—has gone to pot in the last few days. I'm broke. I haven't a penny left. I can't keep the Den running any longer; and these men are cracking wide open. Warren is buying claims right and left, and—and I don't see any way to turn—or anything to do."

She slumped down into her desk chair and buried her face in her arms. "Gracious heavens, girl! Why didn't you tell me about all this?"

"I didn't suppose—you cared much—what was happening," Patricia sobbed, without looking up.

"But I do care!" Craig asserted bending down, patting her shoulder. Sorry for the black days that she had gone through, he reproached himself savagely for not helping her sooner.

As he bent over her, with his lips so near her hair, a disquietude struck him, and Lovett's warning about his associating with Patricia in a personal way went jiggling across his mind. Until that instant he simply had not imagined the possibility of such an association. But now he did imagine it, with something of a shock.

It came home to him that he once had loved Patricia Wellington passionately; that in the God's lake days she had been to him a living pagan poem; that in his thirty-one years he had never loved any other girl. All the bitter things which he had later thought about her and which had made him try to forget God's lake; all his harsh judgment of her as a worldly creature without ideals or courage—she had given the complete lie to them by her valiant battle for these men.

"Treeshia," he said gently, "this is as much my fight now as yours. I'm not returning to the barrens. You've been all alone so far, but now I'm going to take part of the burden off your shoulders."

CHAPTER VIII

Craig's first step, that same afternoon, was to give Patricia his entire worldly fortune—$900 of accrued salary—to keep the community house afloat.

That evening and all the next day he talked and pleaded with the disheartened prospectors, till he finally checked their rising wave of despair and swung them back into line.

He also wrote to the bureau at Ottawa and resigned. He hated to sacrifice his job, but this move would give the men three months of grace, for it would take his successor that long to reach the Bay and begin inspecting the claims.

With these preliminary steps out of the road, he tackled the big crucial problem, the necessity of raising a lot of money quickly. The men had to have clothes, outfits, equipment; and to feel the power of money behind them. They had lived on hope till hope was burned out.

He estimated that he had to raise at least a hundred thousand dollars.

Under ordinary circumstances he would have formed a corporation among the owners of the richest claims and sold a portion of the stock to a financial house or operating company. But this field was so remote that investment houses were not interested; and mining companies every where were reeling their sails instead of putting on more canvas.

A good gold deposit would turn the trick. Gold was at a high premium among the metals; and down in the city country, low-grade mines which had been closed for years were running full blast. A silver deposit, or copper, or even platinum, would not do it took gold, or possibly radium. But so far—or at least so the special government geologists had reported—no gold at all had been discovered in the resurrection field.

From a little cardboard box on a shelf Craig picked out seven carefully labeled hunks of gray-rock, one evening, and laid them on his work table, and sat looking at them while he smoked a thoughtful pipe.

"Hmmp!" he muttered, once or twice. "No gold on Resurrection. Hmmp!"

These seven hunks of rock came from a range of hills, the Wolf Lairs, about 50 miles northeast of the Bay. Last spring a city rusher, called Phil Kessler had gone prospecting through those hills and had brought mack a sackful of ore specimens. In that collection—mostly ores of yellowish mica or fool's gold—Craig had spotted seven odd-looking fragments of a gray gneiss. Sticking one carelessly under the microscope, he was surprised to find that it contained wire silver. Interested then, he ran an assay.

The test brought out not only cobalt and silver in paying quantities but a heavy gold content—$200 to the ton.

Kessler had no idea where he had picked up those seven hunks of gray-rock. A greenhorn at prospecting, he had wandered hither and thither all over that range, knocking off samples from any formation that took his eye and dumping them helter-skelter into keeping any records whatsoever.

his bag, without numbering them or With a host of duties on his hands, Craig had thought no more about the lost strike—till now.

He looked thoughtfully at the seven hunks, looked at his original assay sheet and at his careful recheck on it. Gold ore, $200 a ton, with enough cobalt and silver to pay all mining and milling costs—that was a prize deposit, a sure money-maker. If he could locate it and if the deposit was not a mere pocket, any operating company would jump at the chance to buy an option or part interest.

Sitting up all that night, he made a thorough study of the chemical and crystalline structure of those gray gneiss fragments.

This structure, he found, was rather distinctive. He did not remember encountering it anywhere else in the Resurrection field.

Somewhat encouraged by this possible clue, he went up to the Land Office storage building; got out a bulky packet of notes and charts which he had made on a survey of the Wolf Lairs two summers previously.
