Sheriff's candidates trade final barbs

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

Barbs were shot from the two Democratic sheriff candidates in the remaining days before Tuesday's primary election.

Challenger Jimmy Wallace, a deputy on forced administrative leave, charged incumbent A.N. Standard with office mismanagement.

Standard, in office 28 years, refutes Wallace's allegations and further claims Wallace was a problem deputy during his eight years of employ at the office. He said Wallace was reprimanded at least three times and demoted once. Wallace denies the reprimands and said he was wrongfully demoted.

Both called each other liars.

The issues:

- Wallace said there are "hundreds" of felony warrants not served and not entered into a national computer that other law enforcement agencies check when motorists are stopped.

Standard said 85-to-90 percent of 1,200 to 1,500 criminal warrants are served annually and that felony and "serious" misdemeanor warrants are entered into the national computer after "diligent" but failed attempts to serve them.

A check by the Big Spring Herald with officials in Hale and Brown counties, which have similar populations as Howard County, shows that a similar procedures are used.

- The combining of mileage reports by Standard for two unmarked sheriff vehicles — for at least a year — is bad bookeeping, Wallace says, and may be the "tip of the iceberg." Wallace said he will call for a full audit of the office if elected.

"I think it's only appropriate," Standard said of any audit by a newly elected official. He also said, "Whenever he finds the bottom of the iceberg, let me know and I'll be glad to address it."

The combining of mileage reports, which was stopped in January when one vehicle was sold, did not cause any problems, said County Auditor Jackie Olson. "It doesn't change anything we're doing."

- Wallace received at least three reprimands since 1989 and was demoted from night supervisor last fall for sending a reserve deputy out alone to bring in a man making threats against a woman and man, Standard said. While bringing the prisoner in, the prisoner was allowed to buy cigarettes and assaulted a store clerk.

Wallace said the reserve deputy personally knows the suspect and had asked to bring him in. "He has the same arrest powers as anybody," Wallace said.

Wallace denied being placed on probation in 1991 for problems with another deputy and reprimanded for a voiced disagreement with a highway patrol officer who was issuing Wallace a speeding ticket. No written documents exist in Wallace's personnel file on those two incidents but another deputy was interim night supervisor for the first four months of 1991.

Begin dead at 78

TEL AVIV (AP) — Menachem Begin, the fiery former prime minister who was wanted as a terrorist during Israel's fight for independence but years later won a Nobel prize for making peace with Egypt, died today. He was 78.

A giant in the Jewish nation's history, the emotional Polish Jew brought his country its only peace treaty with an Arab country.

Yet he also kept up the attack on Arab enemies, ordering the bombing of Iraq's nuclear reactor in 1981 and sending the army into Lebanon the following year to wipe out the PLO.

In 1983, six years after leading the right-wing Likud bloc to power, Begin resigned. He never explained why.

Some speculated he was depressed about the Lebanon war, Israel's least popular. Others theorized he felt guilt since he was abroad when his wife died a year earlier. Begin never gave the public an answer.

He went into virtual seclusion and appeared in public only for family occasions and for rare radio interviews.

Begin died of heart failure at 3:30 a.m. at Tel Aviv's Ichilov Hospital. He had suffered a heart attack on Tuesday, was placed on a respirator and then given a pacemaker. On Friday, he took a turn for the worse.

He had had a history of heart trouble.

A special Cabinet session was scheduled today to decide funeral arrangements. Education Minister Zuvulun Hammer ordered all schools to hold special programs on Begin's contribution to the Jewish state.

For making peace with Egypt, Begin shared the 1978 Nobel Peace Prize with that nation's former President Anwar Sadat, who was assassinated three years later by Islamic radicals.

"His great contribution would be that it took a Menachem Begin to bring the Arabs to the peace table," said Rabbi Marvin Hier, dean and founder of the The Simon Wiesenthal Center and a longtime associate of Begin.

"Anwar Sadat started it all, but only Begin had the power in Israel to make peace. That was probably his greatest single achievement," he said.

In making peace, Begin sacrificed the Sinai Desert, the largest territory seized in the 1967 Mideast War. But he kept a tenacious hold on other captured territories, annexing Syria's Golan Heights and populating the West Bank with Jewish settlers.

Begin's road to the peace treaty surprised observers, who had expected the bespectacled prime minister's militant past to lead him in more hawkish directions.

Harkin drops out; Super Tuesday set

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

Paul Tsongas and Bill Clinton fanned out across Florida today making last-minute appeals for Super Tuesday support and hoping to capitalize on the departure of Tom Harkin from the Democratic field.

RELATED STORIES — 2,3A

President Bush shrugged off questions about the staying power of his GOP rival, Patrick Buchanan, calling attention to what he called a "fantastic" weekend victory in South Carolina and predicting he'd have another good day on Tuesday.

Harkin, an Iowa senator who portrayed himself as the heir apparent to Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal social policy, scheduled news conferences in Washington and in Des Moines today where he planned to announce the end of his campaign.

Harkin endured a series of disappointing finishes, including a 6 percent showing in Saturday's South Carolina primary.

He becomes the third Democrat to drop out, following Virginia Gov. L. Douglas Wilder, who quit before any votes were cast, and Nebraska Sen. Bob Kerrey, whose poor showings compelled him to leave the race last week.

That leaves Clinton, the Arkansas governor; Tsongas, a former Massachusetts senator, and former California Gov. Jerry Brown as the Democrats heading into Super Tuesday.

Brown won a strong victory in Nevada's Democratic caucuses Sunday night.

Democrats compete in 11 states and Republicans in eight on Tuesday. In all, 783 Democratic delegates and 421 Republican delegates are up for grabs.

On Saturday, Clinton dominated the Democratic field in South Carolina with 63 percent of the vote.

Clinton also won in Wyoming on Saturday and placed a strong second to Tsongas in Arizona. Clinton picked up more delegates in Arizona than Tsongas despite the second-place showing.

Bush, meanwhile, scored a 67 percent victory in South Carolina, extending his string of shutouts but still encountering the roughly one-third protest vote he has seen in each primary this season.

GOP challenger Patrick Buchanan trailed in South Carolina with 26 percent and former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke was a distant third with 7 percent.

Bush, returning to the White House this morning from Camp David, shrugged off questions about why Buchanan was staying in the race.

"I thought Saturday was fantastic and I think we'll have a good day tomorrow," the president said.

"We're waging a pretty good campaign. It's high level. It's keeping my sights on the major issues. A lot of them, such as world peace, seem to be obscured by the hue and cry of the campaign trail," complained Bush.

Buchanan on Sunday vowed to fight on to the GOP convention in Houston in August despite his weakest showing to date, saying "This campaign ... is about more than piling up delegates."

Still, his aides were disappointed that the conservative commentator has yet to better his 37 percent second-place finish in New Hampshire. He won 36 percent of the vote in Georgia last Tuesday.

Life cheaper than death in pen

DALLAS (AP) — It's cheaper in Texas to imprison death row inmates for life rather than to execute them, according to a newspaper report.

A study published by The Dallas Morning News on Sunday found that trials and appeals for the average condemned inmate take 7½ years and cost $2.3 million.

To keep that inmate locked up in a single cell at the highest security level for 40 years costs about $750,000, the report said.

With 351 condemned men and four women, Texas leads the nation in both death row population and the number of executions — 46 since 1977, which includes five in 1991 and four already this year.

Robert Excell White's case represents the death penalty system at its most costly and inefficient. White has been convicted twice for a crime committed almost 18 years ago, but his case was extended again in 1988 when he won a new trial because statements he unknowingly made to a psychiatrist were used against him.

It will take the combined efforts of county, state and federal governments, plus about $4 million in taxpayer dollars, to execute White, the newspaper reported.

"There's some things that a modern American city and state have got to have," said Dallas lawyer Vincent Perini, chairman of the Texas Bar Association's committee on representation for death row inmates. "You have to have police and fire and public safety protection. You have to have a criminal justice system. You do not have to have a death penalty."

Although life without parole might save millions of dollars, it would create a nightmare in the prison system, said House Corrections Committee chairman Allen Hightower, D-Huntsville.

"From a correctional practice standpoint, if someone needs to go to prison for life, I'm for gassing them," Hightower said.

"The end result is that with no chance or hope of getting out no matter how you behave ... there's no reason not to stab a guard and no reason not to kill or rape another inmate."

Hightower said he favors limiting appeals.

"Will we ever convict a person in this state that's not guilty? Sure. We've done it before, and we'll do it again," he said. "But our criminal justice system is the fairest system in the world."

Assistant Attorney General Bob Walt, one of six state lawyers who work to see that the death penalty is carried out, said the problem is the delay tactics defense attorneys use on appeal.

But even with the expense, the death penalty is worth the effort, Walt said.

"We have no shortage of violent characters in this state," he said. "The death penalty is something Texans want. They think the death penalty is an appropriate punishment."

However, human rights activists disagree.

"It's not a coincidence that this state ranks dead last in the amount of money it allots to social services," said Rick Halperin, a board director of Amnesty International USA and a Southern Methodist University professor.

"Yet Texas has got 400 people either dead or on death row. Millions, millions just wasted trying to get rid of 400 people. It's just sick," Halperin said.

Lottery pact signed

AUSTIN (AP) — The state has signed a contract with a Rhode Island company to operate Texas' new lottery, the comptroller's office announced today.

The contract won by GTECH Corp. of West Greenwich, R.I., has been estimated to be worth $200 million over five years.

There have been several unconfirmed reports that a federal grand jury in California is looking into the activities of GTECH, the world's largest lottery contractor.

But criminal investigators for the Texas Department of Public Safety notified the comptroller's office that they found nothing that would preclude GTECH from getting the contract.

Greg Hartman, executive assistant to Sharp, said he expects a court challenge to the selection of GTECH and allegations to be made about the winner, because that has been the experience in other states when such contracts are awarded.

"It's going to be real nasty this week. ... We're just battening down the hatches," he said.

A former California state senator has testified that he was bribed by a GTECH lobbyist to oppose a bill the company wanted killed.

GTECH has repeatedly denied the allegation.

Texas voters overwhelmingly approved a lottery last November. Instant winner, scratch-off lottery tickets will be on sale by July 1, and the lotto games will be in operation by Jan. 1.

The lottery operator will run the on-line computerized lottery games, along with the instant-win, scratch-card ticket games. The scratch-card tickets will be printed by another company, Hartman said.

Texas is the nation's largest state without a lottery. The games are expected to bring in some $1 billion a year when fully operational.

Redistricting creates woes

BAYTOWN (AP) — Congressman Jack Fields has represented Baytown since his district was created. But on Tuesday, residents of this ship channel community of 63,800 will choose three congressional representatives — and Fields is not among them.

"I'm not very happy. I really enjoyed representing Baytown," said Fields, a Republican. "But I think Baytown is one of the best examples in the state of the gerrymandering that's taken place in this redistricting."

Now instead of voting for a District 8 representative to the U.S. House, Baytown residents, depending on where they live, will cast ballots in District 9, District 25 or the newly created District 29.

"The people in Baytown are confused about who their congressman will be," said Fields, who has operated offices in Houston and Baytown for years.

The recent congressional redistricting has divided numerous Texas cities, previously represented by a single congressman, among which are Arlington, Denton, Irving, Lubbock, Midland, Odessa, Pasadena, San Angelo and Waxahachie.

"It happened in a number of places all over the state," said Karen Hughes, spokeswoman for the Texas Republican Party. "The Democrats butchered Texas in order to protect their own Democratic incumbents."

But Democrats argue that the changes were made to protect minority voting strength and fulfill U.S. Justice Department orders.

In Baytown, a city that grew up as a Humble Oil town that merged with two adjoining towns, voters could easily elect three Democrats where there was once a single Republican.

Rep. Jack Brooks, a Democrat from Beaumont, who has represented District 9 for years, is unopposed in his re-election bid for a district that now includes nearly half of Baytown.

'... I think Baytown is one of the best examples in the state of the gerrymandering that's taken place in this redistricting.'

Jack Fields
U.S. Rep.

Rep. Mike Andrews, a Democrat from Houston, who has represented District 25 since 1983, is running against Mary Robb Whipple in the primary, while Republicans Esther Lee Yao and Dolly Madison McKenna are running in the GOP primary for the seat. District 25 now snakes through Baytown from the south, between District 9 on the east and District 29 on the west and curves back to the north.

District 29, created specifically to yield a Hispanic representative, has attracted seven candidates — five of them are Democrats. Freddy Rios and Clark Kent Ervin are in the Republican Primary, while the Democratic ticket features Andrew C. Burks Jr., Gene Green, Albert Luna III, Ben T. Reyes and Sylvia Garcia. That district stretches up through the west side of Houston, more than 35 miles away, and beyond.

"Obviously, their representation will get three times better than it's been," Ed Martin, spokesman for the Texas Democratic Party, said of Baytown residents.

"What happened with Baytown happened because of a combination of the Voting Rights Act and geography," Martin said. "It's not unusual in these kinds of cases that you see districts divided. They say the (Houston-area) maps look like spaghetti."

The 1990 Census showed Texas needed three more congressional districts: one for blacks in Dallas County, one for Hispanics in Harris County and one for Hispanics in the Rio Grande Valley.

"The main concern is to maximize the minority district and adhere to the Voting Rights Act," said Bill Dalrymple, committee clerk for the Texas House Redistricting Committee.

But because minorities may not be living in a concentrated area, developing a district that would virtually ensure a minority is elected leads to some odd-shaped zones.

"In an effort to draw a district with a higher minority population, you draw into other areas," Martin said. "I think it's unfortunate when cities get split between districts, but there are arguments that the citizens get better representation."

Dalrymple, who worked with colleagues in the Texas Senate staff to develop the congressional districts, admits the districts often don't break out into neat packages.

"District 29 should favor the Hispanic candidates and it does," he said. "It looks terrible. It looks horrible! It's an election official's nightmare down there! But it was done to maximize representation for the Hispanic voters for that area."

Jim Manley, a Democratic precinct judge in Baytown, said reactions in the longtime Texas refinery town are mixed to the new jurisdictions.

"Baytown has been represented by one congressman and the city has thought of itself as being represented by one congress person. That person had a longtime staff person who was a Baytown resident," Manley said.

"Fields, himself, has been often present in the district. And even people who would not agree with Congressman Fields on some political issues or who might not have voted for him, gave him high marks for the responsiveness of his office."

Now, Manley said, some Baytown residents "fear that they might be a partial part of what to them is a new congress person and there is the understandable fear that a person who already has an established constituency might not be at all inclined to listen to more."

John Schachter, press secretary for Andrews, said the District 25 candidate is willing to change his habits to include Baytown.

"The geographical change of the district is not that great," Schachter said. "We currently have an office in Pasadena and in Houston. After the election, we will reassess how we can best serve the people of the new 25th District."

Brooks already has represented a sliver of the Baytown area.

But the Republicans are not so convinced. A lawsuit challenging the new district lines is pending.

"We win more than half, or half of the vote in most major areas," Ms. Hughes said. "The way the Democrats have drawn the districts, we will have eight of 30 (congressional) districts, when we get half of the vote in the state.... That was done deliberately by the Democrats to disenfranchise the voters."

Fields said his own new district has eliminated most black voters in Waller, Brazos and Montgomery counties, besides many of his Harris County constituents to allow Democrats to take advantage of minorities, whom they perceive to be traditionally Democratic voters.

And what is he telling longtime constituents?

"I'm telling them that I think the State Legislature put partisanship above state interests and were extremely self-serving," Fields said.

Martin similarly charges that Republicans divvied up state Senate districts to their own benefit.

"They run District 13 right up and rip up Pasadena and they do it while undermining the Voting Rights Act — there's not even a 'greater cause' to do it," Martin said.

But for Baytown, Manley thinks the working-class citizens will come to accept the new configuration.

"I think this has a lot of possibilities for Baytown," Manley said. "There's the chance to have different interests represented: Andrews has always had space and economic development on his agenda; Brooks has experience in representing refinery towns. Baytown can be in a better position than it is now."

Class project upsets candidate

WINNIE (AP) — As a civics project, seniors at a Southeast Texas high school got involved in the political process last week by handing out literature for a candidate for Chambers County sheriff, and the incumbent is upset.

Sheriff C.E. "Chuck" Morris says the 41 students at East Chambers High School should have been in school instead of "out running the roads" Friday for his opponent, constable John Wesley King.

King gave the students a $300 donation to be used for a year-end, alcohol-free party.

The students were dismissed from class at 9 a.m. Friday to distribute literature for King's campaign, principal Mickey Riggs said. Their absence was excused.

Morris said his office received several complaints from county residents.

"Students should be in school learning," Morris said. "But here they are tearing up and down the road, at their parents' expense, doing political work."

Students who distributed the campaign literature were volunteers and had their parents' permission to participate in the civics lesson.

"We felt like it was a government field trip; we wanted to get them involved in the political process. All the candidates in the sheriff's race were extended the opportunity to have the students distribute their fliers," Riggs said.

Morris confirmed he had a chance to hire the students.

Morris, in office 12 years, said he didn't take up the offer because he wasn't sure whether it was legal, and he didn't believe it was ethical.

"I questioned the properness of taking this kind of action," Morris said. "A sum or how much the donation would be wasn't mentioned to me, but I didn't think it was right. Smells like vote-buying to me."

King disputed that claim. Ninety percent of the students involved aren't old enough to vote, he said.

Attorneys in the elections and ethics divisions of the Texas Secretary of State Office said paying money for students to distribute campaign literature is not a violation of the state's election code.

Winnie is 60 miles east of Houston.

Names in the news

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary by renewing their vows.

"From the start, our marriage was like an adolescent's dream of what a marriage should be. And for 40 years it has gotten more so with each passing day," Reagan, 81, said in a statement before Sunday's ceremony.

Mrs. Reagan, 70, recalled how she met the future president on a blind date while they were actors for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

"I'm a very lucky woman," she said.

The Reagans marked their March 4 anniversary on Wednesday by dining with friends. Children and grandchildren attended Sunday's ceremony, which was held at an undisclosed location.

FREMONT, Calif. (AP) — Olympic figure skater Kristi Yamaguchi was presented with a key to the city and a marriage proposal when she returned to her hometown for the first time since winning a gold medal in Albertville, France.

Yamaguchi didn't appear interested in the marriage proposal offered by a man who has among the hundreds who greeted her at the airport.

The 20-year-old said she was a little overwhelmed by all the attention.

"I was thinking, gosh, I felt so much more comfortable on skates," she said.

Across the continent, figure skating bronze medalist Nancy Kerrigan received a similar welcome in Stoneham, Mass., from about 20,000 people, a crowd roughly equal to the population of the Boston suburb.

Both skaters were honored with parades Sunday, and Fremont Mayor Bill Ball presented Yamaguchi with a key to the city.

"I really don't think she needs a key," Ball said. "She owns this city."

After her daylong stay in Fremont, a city of about 173,000 near San José, Yamaguchi planned to return to Edmonton, Alberta, where she lives and trains.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., (AP) — Teen-ager Jenny Lewis, who plays Katie Monahan on television's "Brooklyn Bridge," says she has been investing in real estate since she was 5.

"Most of my friends can't believe I actually own the house I live in," said the 16-year-old actress, who has played opposite such stars as Lucille Ball, Ed Asner and Carroll O'Connor.

Lewis lives in the Sherman Oaks section of the San Fernando Valley. She also owns a townhouse in nearby North Hollywood.

Her mother, Linda, said she had her daughter invest in real estate for the tax benefits.

---

GREENWICH, Conn. (AP) — Shari Belafonte, the daughter of singer Harry Belafonte, is working on a "We Are the Children" fund-raising campaign that parallels the "We Are the World" album her father helped make.

The project, to raise research dollars for children's cancer and pediatric AIDS, will have a different twist: The performers must be second-generation celebrities.

Ms. Belafonte is executive producer, and Natalie Cole, the pop group Wilson Phillips and Bonnie Raitt are among those invited to participate, said Barbara Donahue, who volunteered her Greenwich production company for the project.

David Foster, the Grammy-winning producer of Miss Cole's "Unforgettable" album, is writing the "We Are the Children" song, Donahue said.

"We Are the World" raised more than $60 million for African famine relief in 1985 and won Grammy awards for song and record of the year.

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Buffalo Bills quarterback Jim Kelly will make a pass at acting on "General Hospital."

He and teammate Chris Mohr will play themselves as they challenge the soap opera's medics to a charity bastkeball game, TV Guide said in its March 14 issue.

"You never know, someday I might pursue a full-time acting career," said Kelly, whose team lost the Super Bowl to Washington. "I've always wanted to do a Western like 'Young Guns.'"

The "General Hospital" episodes will air on ABC next week.

---

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sylvester Stallone is quitting his suburban digs for more rugged property in the Rockies.

Stallone, 45, heads a partnership that bought 160 acres in Telluride, Colo., for about $8.5 million.

He also purchased 11 lots in the ski area at an average price of $334,000, the Los Angeles Times reported Sunday.

Iraq reportedly has $5 billion in assets

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq's known financial assets abroad, whose confiscation the United States is urging to pressure Baghdad into complying with U.N. resolutions, amount to about $5 billion, it was reported today.

The respected Middle East Economic Survey newsletter said it understood the U.S. suggestion to seize the assets was made after much departmental infighting in Washington.

Washington has suggested that the assets be seized and used to pay for humanitarian supplies to Iraq, elimination of its weapons of mass destruction and compensation to Kuwait and other victims of the Persian Gulf war.

The Middle East Economic Survey, which has good sources in financial institutions, said the U.S. Treasury Department believes seizure of the Iraqi assets would lead to numerous lawsuits and be opposed by some major allies.

But the State Department advocated the measure as a way to tighten sanctions imposed on Iraq and destablize the government of Saddam Hussein, the newsletter reported.

A major debate is expected in the Security Council this week during a visit by Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz, Baghdad's most eloquent apologist.

Aziz must defend his nation against accusations it is systematically impeding U.N. efforts to destroy its weapons of mass destruction, which Iraq agreed to as part of the cease-fire that ended the Persian Gulf war.

Aziz was expected to fly from Amman, Jordan to New York today.

The Middle East Economic Survey noted out that a U.N. Security Council resolution allowing Iraq to sell $1.6 billion worth of oil to pay for humanitarian supplies expires on March 19.

Iraq, objecting to requirements that part of the money be used to compensate Kuwait, refused to sell the oil.

Winter sets record for being warm

WASHINGTON (AP) — Uncle Sam has been tracking weather 97 years and never has a winter been so warm as this December, January and February, the National Climatic Data Center says.

In many parts of Georgia, daffodils and Bradford pears are blooming "two to three weeks ahead of schedule," said Randy Drinkard of the Fulton County Extension Service in Atlanta.

"The winter's been very kind to us," said William M. Denihan, who's in charge of Cleveland's fleet of 85 snowplows.

Theodore MacLeod, director of public works in Manchester, N.H., says the city has saved $165,000 on snow and ice control compared with last year.

Oregon's nursery business is coming to life a month early with fruit and shade trees already being shipped across the country, said Bob Obermire of the Oregon Department of Agriculture.

"Just about everything we grow here is on the move," he said.

Perhaps not so delighted are Pittsburgh's youngsters, who'll put in two extra days of school this year. The two "snow day" closings planned into the school schedule weren't needed, said Janet Lochner of the board of education staff.

And the warmer weather may mean farmers will have more bugs to deal with.

Preliminary figures for the 48 contiguous states showed the average winter temperature at 36.87 degrees Fahrenheit, said meteorologist Richard Heim of the Climatic Center in Asheville, N.C. That topped the previous record holder, 1953-54, when the nation averaged 36. At third was the winter of 1933-34 at 35.97.

It's not a sign of global warming — just the usual cycle of nature.

Native Americans leaving program

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of Indians have dropped out of a federal free-food program, some because gambling casinos have improved the economy of their reservations and some because they're unhappy with the kind of food provided.

The program, the main source of food on many reservations, fed 118,808 people in December, down from an average of 138,313 a month in 1990, according to Agriculture Department records.

A third of the Indian recipients in Minnesota have dropped out, as have 29 percent of those on the huge Navajo reservation in Arizona. Participation also has declined in the Dakotas, Oklahoma, Montana and Washington.

Tribes traditionally have preferred the free-food program to food stamps because reservations are frequently isolated and grocery prices high, but some Indians switched because they don't like the food provided in the packages, according to a USDA survey.

The monthly packages include such commodities as cheese, dried and evaporated milk, canned meats and vegetables, and staples such as flour and sugar.

USDA added more fruits and vegetables and cut back on oil, butter and shortening after congressional criticism that the food was unappealing and too high in fat and sodium.

Participation on the Red Lake reservation in Minnesota fell from 2,267 to 972 after the tribe started allowing members to choose food stamps rather than commodities, said Darrell Seki, who runs the food program there.

Clinton, Bush have most delegates

Democratic presidential hopeful Jerry Brown, center, is introduced to civil rights figure Rosa Parks by Rev. Jesse Jackson. At left is Sen. Bob Kerry, D-Neb. They were all in Selma to celebrate the 27th anniversary of Bloody Sunday.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, with a decisive South Carolina primary win behind him, had a solid lead in delegates heading into this week's "Super Tuesday" presidential primaries and caucuses.

South Carolina gave Clinton 36 delegates to the Democratic National Convention. He won a total of 24 delegates in weekend caucuses in Wyoming, Arizona and Nevada to move ahead of the pool of uncommitted delegates in the race for the Democratic nomination.

Clinton had 259 delegates, while delegates with 236.75 votes said they were uncommitted. On Friday, the uncommitted pool led with 231.75 to 199 for Clinton.

Former Sen. Paul Tsongas finished the weekend with 136.25 delegate votes, gaining 24 over his Friday total. Former California Gov. Jerry Brown gained 21 to finish the weekend at 56.25 delegate votes.

Among Republicans, President Bush led with 184 delegates, compared to 20 for rival Patrick Buchanan and none for ex Ku Klux Klansman and former Louisiana legislator David Duke. Five were uncommitted.

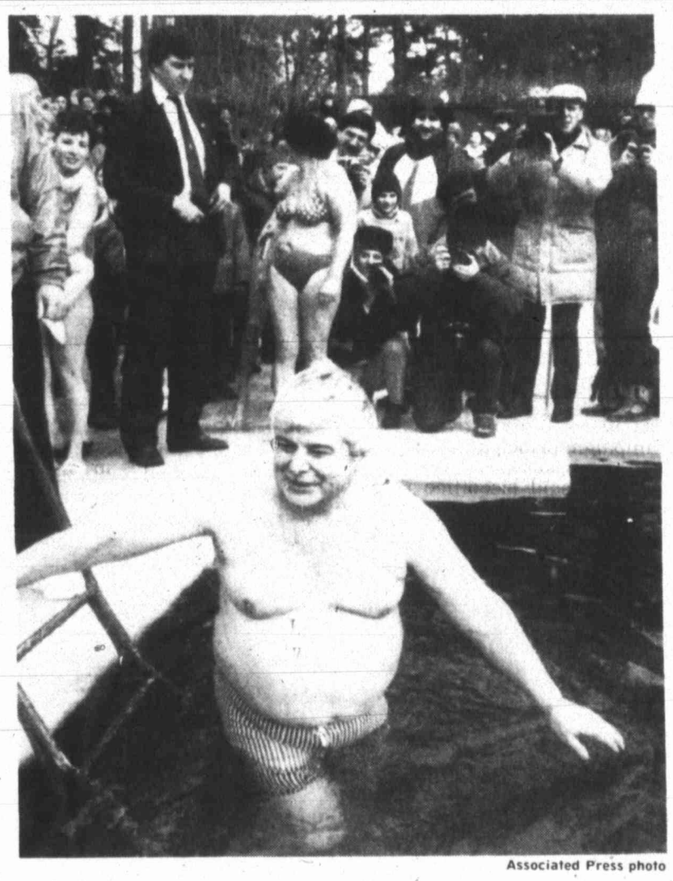

Both Democrats and Republicans are holding Super Tuesday primaries in eight states, while Democrats are holding caucuses in three additional states. Up for grabs are 783 Democratic delegates and 421 Republican delegates.

Iowa Sen. Tom Harkin's poor showing in South Carolina led him to tell Democratic Party officials in his home state that he was abandoning his quest for the Democratic presidential nomination. Harkin had 81.25 delegate votes.

Sen. Bob Kerrey of Nebraska dropped out of the race last week but still had nine delegate votes.

Other candidates had five delegates.

The Associated Press delegate count includes members of the Democratic National Committee who have expressed a preference.

Chilly dipping

Witness: Guard fled to Yugoslavia

JERUSALEM (AP) — A gas chamber operator has testified that the Nazi death camp guard "Ivan the Terrible" fled to Yugoslavia near the end of World War II, according to the defense for John Demjanjuk.

Defense attorney Yoram Sheftel also quoted the operator's testimony as saying that the Treblinka camp guard had black hair, brown eyes, a square face and a scar on the cheek.

Demjanjuk, a retired Cleveland auto worker convicted in 1988 of being the sadistic "Ivan the Terrible," was blond in his youth, has a round face and no scar on the cheek.

Demjanjuk, 72, has appealed his conviction and death sentence to the Supreme Court.

The Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk insists he is a victim of mistaken identity and spent most of World War II in German prisoner-of-war camps after being captured as a Red Army soldier in May 1942.

Prosecution evidence places him in Germany from October 1943 to late 1944.

Sheftel argues that the real "Ivan" was named Ivan Marchenko. He has cited testimony by 31 Ukrainian guards at Treblinka who said Marchenko was Ivan and looked different from Demjanjuk.

The guards testified in Nazi war crimes trials in the Soviet Union in the 1940s through 1960s, and their testimony was brought from the Soviet Union by prosecutor Michael Shaked.

AIDS project may be forced to close

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — Political and social instability is putting more Zairians at risk of getting AIDS and could force the closing of Africa's largest research project on the disease, medical workers say.

Dr. Manzila Tarande, the deputy director, said the project's clinic has no more test kits for AIDS and only about 5,000 condoms to distribute to the growing number of women who have turned to prostitution to feed their families.

He said it also had run out of the material needed to do diagnostic tests for sexually transmitted diseases, which facilitate the spread of the HIV virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"In reality, Project SIDA is going to close," by July at the latest, Tarande said. "It will be a very big loss for Zaire and the world, too."

Other countries have followed Project SIDA's (SIDA is French for AIDS) progress and compared their own studies to its results, Tarande said.

Officials of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control told him the U.S.-financed project probably would close because Zaire could not guarantee the safety of foreign nationals who supervise the studies, Tarande said.

Mock grand jury indicts Columbus

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — We know the world turns. It has turned on Christopher Columbus.

The explorer who sailed West to go East came full-circle Sunday when he was indicted by a mock grand jury for crimes committed under his guard as conqueror of the Americas.

At a hearing sponsored by the University of Minnesota's Human Rights Center, Columbus was charged with murder, theft, slavery, kidnapping, torture, violence, genocide and crimes against humanity, rape and terrorism.

He goes on (mock) trial Sept. 16, the 500th anniversary of his landing. An actor portraying the sailor did not attend the grand jury hearing Sunday.

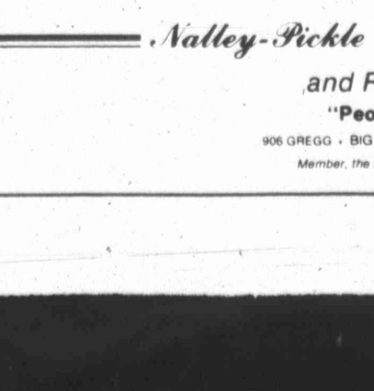

"You can't indict him for everything bad that's ever happened," said Fredilyn Sison, a lawyer with the Ramsey County Public Defender's office who is defending Columbus. "Part of his legacy's not negative and we can't forget that."

The historical evidence introduced Sunday said that after coming ashore, Columbus began capturing natives and selling them as slaves, demanding golden tribute or maiming or killing them outright.

"They've charged the wrong person," Sison said. "We're not saying that some of the things did not happen, but he was directed by the crown of Spain to do what he did."

Sison said she will argue Columbus' actions were common practice at the time. "They discover a country and they were expected to take whatever spoils they could."

Efforts were made by the panel to measure Columbus by the standards of his day — a 13th-century Spanish code is one basis for the indictment

Opinions from across the U.S.

Senate has half a good idea

There's half of a good idea on education floating around in Washington — which is 50 percent better than most ideas originating in the nation's capital.

Under the Self-Reliance Loan program being sponsored in the U.S. Senate by Bill Bradley, college students could borrow up to $30,000 to finance their educations. . . .

Repayments of the loans — not to exceed 7 percent of annual income — would be deducted by the Internal Revenue Service from the recipients' earnings after they graduate. If a loan isn't paid off in 25 years, the remainder would be forgiven.

A college education is so important today — and becoming ever more important — that government should be involved in trying to see that as many students as possible have a shot at college if they want it. . . .

The problem traditionally has been the high number of recipients who don't pay back the loans. Collecting the repayments from recipients' paychecks (at jobs made possible by the loan-financed education) can take care of that non-repayment problem.

The flaw in the proposal is that the loans would be made available to anyone, regardless of family income. What's the point of not setting some income guidelines? There will be a limited pool of money. Why use it to finance the education of people whose families can afford to pay the cost?

In the end, that just means less money in the pool for those who actually need it.

Take a stand at local level

Only one thing can do more harm to a charitable organization's credibility than reports of lavish spending and extraordinary administrative expenses: looking the other way when those excesses are uncovered.

As a result of negative reports concerning the United Way's national leadership, local United Way operations are withholding or may consider withholding their annual dues to the national organization.

These are drastic steps which, unfortunately draw more attention to the organization's problems. But they are necessary steps toward the United Way's retaining credibility where it counts — among people in communities where the contributions are made and 99 percent of them are spent.

It's important for the local organizations to take a stand and challenge the national organization.

They must put their long-term interests and credibility first.

Donors will be more inclined to retain their faith in the local United Way organizations if they take every step needed to make it clear they won't tolerate unnecessary spending at any level.

Abatement request is ploy to rip off county

To the editor:

The Fina Oil & Chemical Co.'s request to rip off the people of Howard County and the towns within is another one of corporate America's ploys to get the taxpayers to pay for their poor management and should be paid for by their stockholders. Mr. Jeff Morris has lied to us in the past with the corporate line: increased jobs, more stability for the community, etc.

The $2.7 million in taxes would more than pay for our much needed new county/city prison now being considered. I hope our politicians don't fall the third time for the Fina scam and this time we will be giving half the money to foreign owners.

The Fina bottom line is greed just like it is when our gasoline goes up and you can buy theirs and other name brands within 100 miles from 5-15 cents cheaper. And again Mr. Jeff Morris gives us he company line but still it's greed.

There are also some other members of the community that I would like to thank for their contributions of services and time to the people of Howard County Mental Health Center:

- Kent Newsom of Don's IGA for his prompt response over the holidays in responding to the needs of various clients who without his help would not have had a Christmas dinner. Your generosity is greatly appreciated and your commitment to the Big Spring community is quite obvious.
- I would also like to thank Mr. John Gustin and Mrs. Beverly Sturdivant of the Hillcrest Baptist Church for their commitment in serving the community as well as assisting without complaint in rendering help with a smile when asked.
- Lastly, I would like to thank Bob Davenport of Stanton. Mr. Davenport's willingness to go the extra mile for Community Services is common knowledge within our department and your efforts are greatly appreciated.

Thanks again to all of you for your unselfish generosity and support of the Howard County Mental Health Center.

Wishing NEA could follow Frohnmayer

James J. Kilpatrick

With the departure of John Frohnmayer as chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, a splendid opportunity is at hand to review this embattled agency and to make needed changes. The opportunity must not be lost.

Frohnmayer had two problems: He took on an impossible job and he performed it ineptly. He managed equally to outrage the "art community," whatever that is, and to insult the taxpaying public.

In an ideal world, Congress would vote to abolish the NEA altogether. Absent the General Welfare Clause, there is not a scintilla of constitutional justification for the agency's existence.

To ask for abolition is unrealistic. The NEA contributes substantially to symphony orchestras across the nation. It supports well-established theater companies and museums. These organizations have boards of directors and the directors have political clout. Constitutional principles be damned; the directors need the money.

Less drastic reforms are attainable. It is time to turn off the faucet for individual grants. These have created the greatest controversy; they serve the fewest people; they are constitutionally indefensible.

Suspend the constitutional objections for a moment. The NEA and its companion agency, the National Endowment for the Humanities, operate under a system that is grossly unfair. No fixed, definable standards govern the awards. The system is entirely subjective.

This is not true of other federal programs. Commodity loans are based upon bushels of corn. Food stamps, Pell grants and student loans depend upon measurable income. Veterans get hospital benefits as a matter of right. The children of families under a certain income get subsidized school lunches. In each instance the criteria are objectively measurable. All eligible applicants are treated alike.

Not at the NEA. Consider the grants that are given annually in the form of "fellowships for museum professionals." A woman in Richmond, Va., got $7,000 to complete a manuscript on Tuscan painting. A woman in Hartford, Conn., got $15,000 to support travel in Italy for a book on Domenico Ghirlandaio. A woman in St. Paul got $8,000 to travel to Stockholm to study textile conservation. Only 11 such grants were given. We may fairly assume that a hundred museum professionals applied, and we may further assume that every one of them would have dearly loved to spend a year in Italy.

In the same fashion, a favored few writers, dancers, photographers, folk artists and musicians get funds. All others are turned away. If the NEA were a private foundation, no one reasonably could object, but when millions of dollars in tax funds are given away on whim, or caprice, or "professional aesthetic judgment," I for one object loudly.

The so-called "performance artists" have caused the greatest trouble. In a courteous letter accepting Frohnmayer's resignation, even George Bush was prompted to say that "some of the art funded by the NEA does not have my enthusiastic approval." Bush abhors unpleasantness. If he had wanted to score points, he could have cited specific grants for "art" that patently merits not one cent of the taxpayers' money.

Those of us in the media never have been able adequately to describe some of this stuff. No TV station will put "homoerotic art" on the screen; no family newspaper will quote some of the scripts and stories. The New York Times, reporting Frohnmayer's farewell, spoke of a grant for poetry that "makes a sexual reference to Jesus." This "reference" was to oral sex.

In addition to abolishing the individual grants, Congress should revive the standard of "patent indecency" that both House and Senate separately have approved. Some artists, but not all artists, will howl at the idea, but let them howl. If they ask, What is indecent? the answer is to ask, What is art? Let the complainants spurn the taxpayers' aid and compete for support in the private sector.

As a third step, the whole process of "peer review" must be revised. In theory the system operates without cronyism or special interest. In the real world, it is a different matter.

I wish devoutly that the government would get entirely out of the business of approving art and artists. This has been the Soviet way. Anyone who has attended an exhibition of Soviet painting must groan at the weight of the state's heavy hand. Bush was right to get rid of Frohnmayer, but the dismissal scarcely matters. It is the program itself that is wrong.

Someone who's presidential material

Lewis Grizzard

Every day, there's a story on the television news or in the papers about what Democrat not currently running for president might jump into the race.

Mario Cuomo and Richard Gephardt are the most frequently mentioned although Mario Cuomo (it is politically incorrect and insensitive to Italian Americans not to use both Mario Cuomo's names, as to referring to him over and over as just "Mario") got an interesting message from New Hampshire write-in voters.

The message was 3 percent.

And Gephardt is sort of old hat. He ran for president last time and wasted a lot of other people's money.

So, are we left with the Fiddlin' Four? I hope not. What the Democrats need, to have any chance of recapturing the White House, is a star.

Let's look at the current four candidates.

Paul Tsongas: The only other two words I can think of that begin with TS are Tsar and Tsetse, the fly, both of which are bad.

Tom Harkin: Who?

Bill Clinton: He acts like he's 11 years old.

Jerry Brown: I'm trying to write a serious column here.

If the Democrats can't flush something better out of the bushes, presidential elections are going to begin to resemble Super Bowls, which usually are routs.

When's the last time we've really had a cliff hanger presidential election when the networks' computers couldn't project a winner two days before the polls opened?

I want another good race simply because it makes watching the election night returns on television a lot more exciting.

I gave a party at my house on election night 1980 when Ronald Reagan and incumbent Jimmy Carter were running. The networks declared Reagan the winner before we had time to light the fire in the grill to cook the hamburgers. All my guests went home early and I had to eat hamburgers for a month.

So, do I have a Democratic candidate in mind to bring out of the bullpen? Of course, or I'd never have started all this.

I would like to see James Earl Carter shock the world and announce he is running for president again. Looking back in 1992, he really didn't do that bad a job when he was president before. He just got some lousy press and a sandstorm aborted the daring rescue of the hostages in Iran.

And he perhaps has been our best former president ever. Gerald Ford has played golf since leaving office. Jimmy Carter has been trying his darndest to straighten out the world.

You put Jimmy Carter alongside the current five Democratic candidates and see how impressive he looks and sounds. I've come up with a great idea here.

My personal choice for president in 1992 is Pat Buchanan, because if I can't be president I'd like to see another columnist make it.

But I'd still enjoy another Carter run. Billy's not around to liven things up anymore, but this time Jimmy wouldn't have to bring a malaise with him. We've already got a doozie and he had nothing to do with it.

I'm relatively certain President Carter sometimes reads my columns. He's even called me before to correct me on something I had wrong.

So if you're reading this: Run Jimmy, run. All is forgiven.

Suspended pitcher cries foul play

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Pascual Perez says he was set up by the New York Yankees and commissioner Fay Vincent to fail the recent drug test that resulted in his one-year suspension.

Perez questioned the tests taken Feb. 26 and Feb. 28 because he didn't learn he tested positive until March 5, the day before his suspension. He also questioned why it was administered by the commissioner's office and not the Yankees.

"They have ways of manipulating things. I have no way to manipulate anything. You tell me why it took so long. It never has before. Something was wrong, I tell you, and it wasn't me," Perez was quoted as saying in today's editions of the Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel.

'New Kids' take care of Indiana

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

The new kids tied the Big Ten block with a week to go.

Michigan, again starting its five-man freshman class, beat No. 2 Indiana 68-60 Sunday to drop the Hoosiers into a first-place tie in the conference with Ohio State with 13-3 records.

The 18th-ranked Wolverines (18-8, 9-7) were as inconsistent against Indiana as they have been all season. They opened a 20-6 lead on the way to a 37-29 halftime advantage, only to see Indiana score the first 11 points of the second half. They righted themselves and took advantage of poor free throw shooting by the Hoosiers to lead by eight with three minutes to play.

"We have a very young team, and they are just starting to scratch the potential they think they have," Michigan coach Steve Fisher said. "We are starting to mature."

The win probably seals an NCAA tournament at-large berth for Michigan, while Indiana (22-5) and Ohio State have two games left — one home and one road — to settle the matter of the league championship and the automatic berth which accompanies that.

"This is only one victory, but it is a huge one," Fisher said. "It gives us a quality win over a top opponent. Now, I think we are in the tournament. Before, I wasn't too sure."

In other games involving ranked teams on Sunday it was: No. 1 Duke 89, No. 16 North Carolina 77; No. 3 Kansas 97, No. 11 Missouri 89; Washington State 82, No. 8 Southern Cal 68; No. 9 UCLA 80, Washington 79; Villanova 76, No. 24 Syracuse 56; and No. 25 Massachusetts 106, Rutgers 94.

In games involving ranked teams on Saturday it was: No. 4 Arizona 89, Stanford 83; No. 5 Ohio State 93, Northwestern 78; No. 7 Arkansas 100, Mississippi 83; No. 10 Kentucky 99, Tennessee 88; No. 12 Oklahoma State 77, Kansas State 69; Illinois 80, No. 13 Michigan State 71; No. 14 Cincinnati 69, Memphis State 59; No. 15 DePaul 66, Notre Dame 65; No. 17 Georgetown 67, Pittsburgh 57; No. 20 Alabama 82, Auburn 80; No 21 Tulane 80, Southern Mississippi 70; No. 22 Seton Hall 78, St. John's 71; and No. 23 Louisiana State 89, Mississippi State 80.

Four teams earned automatic berths to the NCAA field of 64 on Sunday — Murray State of the Ohio Valley Conference, East Tennessee State of the Southern Conference, Northeast Louisiana of the Southland and Southwestern Louisiana of the Sun Belt. Two were earned on Saturday — Campbell in the Big South and Howard in the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference.

Jimmy King had 18 points for Michigan, while Jalen Rose added 15 and Chris Webber had 11 points and a career-high 18 rebounds. They are three-fifths of the rookie starters.

"It wasn't just the 'Fab Five' today," said Webber, referring to the group's media nickname. "Everybody contributed today."

Indiana shot just 36 percent and made one of eight free throws over the final seven minutes.

"We are very dependent of our shooting and we didn't shoot well," Hoosiers coach Bob Knight said. "Without Alan Henderson, we were 13 of 44, and you won't beat anyone shooting like that."

Henderson, a freshman, led the Hoosiers with 19 points.

Indiana, which swept the season series with Ohio State, has games left with Wisconsin and at Purdue, while the Buckeyes face Illinois and go to Minnesota.

Sunday's Games

Christian Laettner closed his home career with 26 points as the Blue Devils (25-2, 14-2 ACC) beat one of the teams to beat them this season. Laettner didn't score for the game's first 14 minutes, but he later went on a run which included five consecutive 3-pointers. Hubert Davis had a career-high 35 points for the Tar Heels (19-8, 9-7), who have lost five of six.

No. 3 Kansas 97, No. 11 Missouri 89

The Jayhawks (23-4, 11-3), who had already clinched the Big Eight regular-season title, had a season-best 31-for-36 effort from the free throw line to offset an outstanding performance by Anthony Peeler, who had 43 points. His fifth 3-pointer of the game cur Kansas' lead to 91-89 with 45 seconds to play, but the Jayhawks, the conference's worst free throw shooting team, made four of four and added a layup to send the Tigers (20-7, 8-6) to their third straight loss.

Bennie Seltzer scored all but three of his 18 points on 3-pointers as he went 5-for-7 from beyond 19 feet, 9 inches. The Trojans (21-5, 13-3) had started the day tied for the conference lead but were outscored 21-7 over the game's final 6:45.

No. 9 UCLA 80, Washington 79

The Bruins (23-4, 14-2) took over first place in the Pac-10 with the road victory. Tracy Murray, who had 25 points for UCLA, made two free throws with 1:41 to play for the game's final points. Washington (12-16, 5-12) had two chances for the win, but they turned the ball over both times, the second with six seconds left. Don MacLean had 26 points for UCLA, which was tied with Southern Cal to start the day, while Rich Manning led the Huskies with 17 points.

Villanova 76, No. 24 Syracuse 56

The Wildcats (14-13, 11-7) won their sixth straight in a meeting of teams which will play in the Big East quarterfinals on Friday. Villanova used a 17-0 run to take a 44-18 lead on the way to the road victory. The Orangemen (18-9, 10-8) shot 22 percent in the first half and went scoreless for more than eight minutes. They have lost six of eight.

No. 25 Massachusetts 106, Rutgers 94

Coach fired for racial slur

MARION (AP) — A racial slur uttered in the heat of a basketball game about six weeks ago will likely prevent Debbie Robledo from returning next season to try to coach the Marion High School girls to a fifth straight state tournament.

On Jan. 29, Robledo, who is white, told Nater Dunn, her star player, who is black, to "quit acting like a nigger."

Robledo had perceived Dunn, the only black on the team, as playing recklessly. Only the player and an assistant coach, Greg McWilliams, who also is black, heard the remark, and neither said anything about it then.

But later, Dunn mentioned the remark to her brother, who told someone else and set off a chain reaction in Marion, a farming community 16 miles east of San Antonio, that led to Robledo's removal.

Dunn says she wishes she had kept quiet.

"I would do anything to change what has happened," said Dunn, who refers to the coach as "a second mother to me."

Marion lost to Panhandle, 52-49, in the Class 2A state championship game Saturday in Austin. Dunn scored 13 points, leading the Lady Bulldogs to a 3-point lead before fouling out with four minutes to play.

After Dunn's uncle complained to the school board, trustees decided by a 6-1 vote that Robledo would no longer be allowed to coach Marion's girls basketball team but could remain at the school and continue to teach history.

Her husband, John Robledo, the school's athletic director and boys' basketball coach, was placed in charge of the girls' team.

Unhappy her team was taken from her, Mrs. Robledo filed a complaint with the Texas Education Agency and filed a civil suit against the school board.

In late February, after her team had played six games without her, the trustees agreed to a compromise. Mrs. Robledo would be allowed to rejoin the team in the state playoffs as an adviser if she would drop her suit and agree to leave at the end of the school year.

The agreement was specific. She could no longer be called coach. She could not talk to players during games. She could only advise her husband and McWilliams.

"She built the program," said Dunn, who came out for the pregame warmup Saturday wearing a T-shirt proclaiming her a member of "Roblebo's Team. We'll give you something to talk about."

After the game, coach and star player separately expressed their love and admiration for each other in the wake of a disappointing ending of their final season together.

Dunn, a junior, will be back next season, but the coach won't.

The coach's supporters in Marion contend that her dismissal has little to do with her racial slur, but rather with her driven personality.

Debbie Robledo ignored small-town politics and played her best players, sometimes leaving the less-talented daughters of influential residents on the bench, a school official told The Dallas Morning News.

Floyd wins Doral Open

MIAMI (AP) — Ray Floyd is one big step closer to a goal that has not been achieved in American professional golf.

"My goal this year is to win on both tours, this tour and the senior tour," Floyd said.

He announced that target early last week, and repeated it Sunday after a two-stroke victory in the Doral Open.

Floyd has the hard part behind him. He will join the over-50 set later this year and, according to no less authority than Jack Nicklaus, should be a dominating force.

"Ray will do what (Lee) Trevino did," Nicklaus said. "He'll blitz the seniors."

Floyd's victory, secured when Couples hit his 18th hole tee shot under a ficus tree and in a trash heap, was his first since 1986, the 22nd of his career and enabled him to join Sam Snead as the only men to win PGA Tour titles in four decades.

Floyd, at 49 the oldest regular-tour winner since Art Wall in the 1975 Milwaukee Open, now has won in the 1960s, '70s, '80s and '90s. Snead won from the 1930s through the 1960s.

Floyd, the 1989 Ryder Cup captain and the winner of two PGA titles, the 1986 U.S. Open and the 1976 Masters, took this one with a closing 70 and a 271 total, 17 under par on Doral's Blue Monster course.

Floyd's third victory in this event, his hometown tournament, was worth $252,000 from the total purse of $1.4 million.

Buchanan strategists are looking beyond Super Tuesday toward a showdown on March 17 in Michigan, hoping an upset there could energize his flagging campaign as Ronald Reagan's victory in North Carolina did for him in 1976.

Although Republican officials say it is only a matter of time before Bush mathematically eliminates Buchanan, his weekly challenge to Bush continues to underscore the president's general election vulnerability.

Bush loyalists said his South Carolina victory strengthens Bush's hand and predicted he would sweep all eight GOP Super Tuesday states.

"The president comes on stronger and stronger, and the important thing is he's winning them all," campaign chairman Robert Mosbacher told CNN.

In the South Carolina contest, which previews the Southern races on Tuesday, Tsongas finished a distant second to Clinton's 63 percent, with 19 percent.

Florida's diverse populace and its large segment of Northeasterners gives Tsongas his most realistic hope on Super Tuesday. He and Clinton both were to swing through the state today.

Over the weekend, they sniped at each other over economic policy and their own campaign styles and courted the black vote, where Tsongas acknowledges he's far behind.

Clinton got 75 percent of the black vote in South Carolina on Sunday, according to exit polls; Tsongas received only 3 percent. "We are far behind on this curve," Tsongas said Sunday.

Clinton, meanwhile, defended his involvement in a real estate deal with the owner of a failed savings and loan. "There was nothing inappropriate," he said in Austin.

At issue was Clinton's half-interest in a real estate corporation with a longtime friend.

Defense Department is blocking purchase

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Defense Department is blocking the purchase of millions of dollars of highly advanced space-related technology from Russia, including a nuclear reactor designed to power spacecraft.

The technology is being sought by administrators of the Strategic Defense Initiative, the Defense Department's space-based anti-missile defense system known as Star Wars. The deal's most prominent opponent is Deputy Secretary of Defense Donald Atwood, second in command at the Pentagon.

Atwood recently admitted holding up the deal for the reactor, saying in congressional testimony that he and many others in the administration share "a great concern" about importing such technology.

At best, critics say, the dispute reflects confusion within the administration about how to treat its former rival.

Less generous critics say the administration is deliberately trying to snuff out what's left of the Soviet defense and aerospace industry so that it never poses a threat to the United States again.

"There's a reluctance on the part of the administration to support, in any way, the remnants of the military complex the administration wants to see vaporized," said Steve Aftergood, a nuclear expert with the Federation of American Scientists.

Atwood recently visited Moscow and told reporters upon his return that he was skeptical the Russians really meant to scale down their military production.

He also said Pentagon officials would not be allowed to travel to Russia without permission from him or Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

Elderly find healing in volunteer work

WACO (AP) — Lee Ann Goeke, 79, sacks beans and rice all day, two days a week.

It's her doctor's orders.

"He didn't like me to stay at home alone," said the Caritas Food for People volunteer. "He said women are the worst ones to turn on the TV."

Before she became a food bank volunteer, Goeke said she'd suffered a stroke and three heart attacks. Since starting her volunteer job of dividing bulk quantities of food into smaller, family-sized packages eight years ago, she's the picture of health.

It's not easy work, she admits. But, she says, she always feels better on the days she volunteers.

Goeke is on to something.

The premise of the new book "The Healing Power of Doing Good" is that volunteering to help others is good for your own health.

The book's author, Allan Luks, a former Peace Corps member who now directs the Big Brothers-Big Sisters agency in New York, said he has noticed a phenomenon he calls "helper's high" among volunteers.

Luks tested his theory by administering a survey to more than 3,000 volunteers from all over the U.S. Almost all — 95 percent — indicated they had a "feel good" reaction after volunteering.

Ninety percent of these surveyed rated their health as better than the health of other people their own age. Many said they began feeling better about the same time they began their volunteer efforts.

Luks is not the only researcher who has found volunteering to be therapeutic. A 10-year University of Michigan study that followed 2,700 people in Tecumseh, Mich., found that doing regular volunteer work dramatically increased life expectancy.

Epidemiologists found that men who did not volunteer were more than twice as likely to die as men who gave of their time at least once a week. The difference was less noticeable among women. Researchers say that may be because women in our society commonly help other people.

The Michigan epidemiologists concluded that helping others can bring physical and psychological benefits. Their study showed that volunteering added to men's lifespans more than any other activity. Local volunteers and agency directors have noticed much the same things.

"I do not know all the little details that goes into making a person happy," said Caritas executive director Eugene Jud. "But I would say doing good is one of them."

Jud said when people help others, they get a feeling of tremendous satisfaction.

Luks writes that many volunteers experience a feeling of euphoria immediately after their good works. Later on, this mellows into a feeling of calmness. He says this calm sensation may counteract such negative emotions as loneliness, helplessness, hostility or even depression.

United Way Volunteer Center director Dottie Wienecke agrees. "Volunteers live longer," she said. "It's a known fact. When you're not self-centered and serve others, you get better satisfaction out of life."

Lee Ann Goeke, 79, maneuvers a shopping cart filled with cartons of eggs she has repackaged for storage at a local Waco food bank recently. Goeke volunteers two times a week under her doctor's orders to improve her health.

One's self-esteem may also benefit from volunteering. When the volunteer is well-matched with his volunteer work in terms of skills, Luks says, he also may feel increased confidence and a sense of usefulness.

Luks' book says that although people may feel better helping friends and relatives, the greatest "helper's high" stems from assisting strangers. His survey covered volunteers within 20 agencies, working in all sorts of settings.

"The idea is that your emotions influence your physical health," said Mary Cantrell, whose work as executive director at the Mental Health Association is on a volunteer basis. "When you do things for other people, you get a lot of strokes. Positive strokes are important in the way you feel about your self. People can't live without them."

"When you're doing something that doesn't always involve yourself, I think that's really healthy," said Family Abuse Center volunteer counselor Helga Smith. "I've got friends who volunteer at different places and they all say they feel really terrific."

At Hillcrest Baptist Medical Center, long-time rehabilitation patient Rick Henderson is an outpatient who now volunteers to help others.

"I was in here, in this unit, for awhile — two months," he said. "I got along with everybody so well here that I decided to start volunteering."

Henderson had been paralyzed as the result of surgery to remove a tumor from his spine when he was

Researchers identify ways of slowing aging process

BOSTON (AP) — Researchers say they have found ways of breathing new life into old bones: The aging process can be slowed by controlling "biomarkers," the physiological factors associated with aging.

In "Biomarkers: The Ten Determinants of Aging You Can Control" (Simon and Schuster, $21.95), William Evans and Dr. Irwin H. Rosenberg of Tufts University's research center on aging, contend the passage of time is not completely to blame for the decline of the body.

They have built a program of exercise and diet to help the elderly get stronger. Overall, the researchers say, "losing weight is the wrong goal. You should forget about your weight and instead concentrate on shedding fat and gaining muscle."

"The central message of the book is that it is our behavior in response to physical activity and diet which influences significantly those biological markers that we associate with the aging process," Rosenberg said of the work that is based on nearly 10 years of work at the center.

The biomarkers central to their program include muscle mass and strength; metabolic rate; body fat percentage; aerobic capacity; blood-sugar tolerance; cholesterol; high-density lipoproteins, a combination of fat and protein which helps to cleanse the arteries and prevent heart disease; blood pressure; bone density; and body temperature regulation.

The program involves a 16-week regimen of weight lifting and aerobics. Participants also eat a low-fat diet. The researchers provide participants with tables telling them how far to walk, cycle or lift weights.

The weight training regimen begins at the end of the second week of training and includes hip and knee extensions and bicep curls.

By this point, say the researchers, the participants should be stronger, damaged muscle should be replaced with rebuilt protein tissue and the capillaries around the muscle cells should have increased their supply of blood and oxygen.

"Some of your Biomarkers have already started to change," the authors point out on the sixth day. "For example, there are already measurable changes in your glucose tolerance; and your muscles have more carbohydrate stores than they did before Day 1."

By the third week the duration of aerobic activity should increase to 40 minutes.

When the participants reach the final week of the study they should be able to engage in 45 to 50 minutes of aerobic activity combined with weight training.

Among other things, the regimen should result in larger muscles, more muscle tone, and greater aerobic capacity.

Along with other researchers, the Tufts experts say a regular program of aerobic exercise and a diet high in carbohydrates and low in saturated fats can prolong youthfulness in the elderly.

But the Tufts researchers say that even the frail elderly can benefit from building strength through exercise.

"We live in an ageist society. People expect that as people grow older we should do less," Evans said. "There is no single segment in our society that could benefit more from exercise than older people. We can make a 90-year-old person as strong as a 60-year-old person."

Palos Park police officer James Cervi is shown behind the wheel of his squad car recently in this south Chicago suburb where he has served for 19 years. The 77-year-old officer has sparked a debate by the suburb's officials calling for mandatory retirement age.

Chicago suburb debates retirement of officer

PALOS PARK, Ill. (AP) — Nearly 19 years on a police force isn't that unusual, but it's become an issue for an officer who joined the force at age 59.

Some officials in this southwest Chicago suburb believe 77-year-old Sgt. James Cervi is too old to be behind the wheel of a patrol car; others, including Cervi, say he should stay.

"He should retire before something happens to him or a resident," said Commissioner Donald Jeanes, one of the five members of the Village Board. "I think it is highly unusual for a man that age to be in a squad car."

Commissioner Jean Moran says the town should adopt a mandatory retirement age for officers working the street. She has urged that Cervi be reassigned to desk duty, but thinks his actual retirement age should be up to him.

But Commissioner Tom Creech thinks Cervi should stay where he is.

"I certainly don't think that age is the only criteria to determine how well someone is doing his or her duty," he said Thursday.

State law allows each community to determine the retirement age of its police officers, and so does federal law, said Albert Apa, former director of the Illinois Law Enforcement Officers Training Board.

Cervi, a former part-time officer who worked for a plumbing and heating company before joining the force at 59, has no doubts about his ability.

"I can do my job as well as the young fellows out there these days, maybe even better because I am experienced and in great shape," Cervi said. "I'll go head-to-head with any criminal out there and do fine."

Mayor Rosemary Kaptur said she didn't think age should be an issue.

"I thought Cervi was capable, responsive and responsible. He's in better physical shape than most of our police officers," she said.

Widowed Men's breakfast club meets to talk, share regularly

DENVER (AP) — Every Saturday morning a group of widowed men sits down over eggs and pancakes to talk about the days of their lives.

One man talks about his children; another offers news about his garden, producing a ripe tomato. Others tell of their progress in the kitchen, new recipes. Many are learning to cook for the first time.

The 20 or so men, members of the Widowed Men's Breakfast Club, have been meeting over breakfast every week for five years.

They discuss events for widowed people, retirement functions. Sports talk, especially about the Denver Broncos, also passes the time.

Behind the muted discussions at the banquet-size table, faces are etched with pain and sadness.

Occasionally, it surfaces.

"Those people who need to talk about grief will talk about that," said the club's co-founder, Bob Bennet, 56. "Occasionally we will talk about what's going on, helpful things."

"We talk about our wives occasionally," said Dale Hill, 38, the youngest member of the group. "Not very many like talking about it. I enjoy talking about it. It makes me closer to her."

The club, founded in 1986 by Bennet and another widower, offers a social setting that does not depend on the friendships built during marriage, which often disappear following a wife's death. And the club does not depend on the organized activities of mixed-gender groups, where widowed women dramatically outnumber men.

It gives men a chance to be with other men, to talk shop, eat a simple meal and gain strength from one another.

tional group, Widowed Persons Service. Bennet and Smith built membership by contacting recent widowers through newspapers, using lists provided by the Widowed Persons Service, and by word of mouth.

"A lot of times you don't get a response right away, a lot of times it takes more than one call," Bennet said. "Men are more retiring after they're widowed than women are."

"It's a hopeless feeling," said Smith. "You're just lost."

"I'd walk the streets. I'd walk the malls. I was just like a caged animal. It's just natural."

"I miss my wife quite a bit," said Rudy Steiner, a retired shipping clerk and professional boxer, and at 85 the oldest member. "But we're all in the same boat, you understand. And it makes a guy feel better."

Club members say widowed men quickly recognize how dependent they were on their wives, something that often was unrecognized until the loss. A widower, Smith said, loses not only his mate but his social center.

"You feel like you're alone in a couple's world. You're the fifth wheel," Smith said.

Retired retail grocer Duane Wheeler, 73, said he discovered the breakfast club at a grieving session for his wife, who died of cancer.

"Most of our friends were my wife's friends," he said. "They were friends for 25 years. They accepted me. But now they don't know where to put me."

'We talk about our wives occasionally. Not very many like talking about it. I enjoy talking about it. It makes me closer to her.'

"The trouble with our society is that men are taught to be strong, but they're really not that strong," said Bennet, a retired teacher.

"With couples, the wife usually handles the social stuff," he said. "When she's gone, it's difficult for a guy to get started again."

Despite the paralysis that sometimes accompanies what one member called "the gaping hole," Bennet said membership in the Breakfast Club has grown steadily in the five years since he met for breakfast with Eldon Smith, 65, a retired Highway Department employee, after their wives died of cancer.

The following week, three men showed up for breakfast, five after that, and a total of about 35 show up today — from 14 to 22 each weekend, Bennet said.

The club grew out of meetings with the Denver branch of the na-

17. Now 24, he is learning to walk again.

Between his daily outpatient therapy sessions, Henderson volunteers.

"I push chairs around for people when they're walking," he said. "I run and get stuff for the physical therapists."

Like many volunteers, Henderson hopes to turn his volunteer work into a job. He's wants to eventually become a physical therapy assistant.

Smith is volunteering to fulfill a graduate course requirement toward her licensed professional counselor certification. However, she formerly volunteered at other agencies. She's worked as a crisis line volunteer counselor and as a worker in Social Action Offices overseas.

"Whether it's volunteering or whether you're doing it to help someone, some family or a situation, you're giving of yourself," she said. "That's healthy."

Luks' book says that despite often coming into close contact with unhappy or tragic situations, volunteers still feel a sense of happiness from their doing good.

Smith's work is one case in point. Counseling family violence victims may be a tense situation, but she said she still gets a good feeling from it.

"I feel good hearing that somebody's been helped, even if it's just an encouraging word," she said. "What feels good is to know that they have done something different, something better in their lives."

Jud's volunteer efforts include one he's had for four decades — teaching a Sunday school class. His students are now senior citizens, and he encourages them all to volunteer.

"Elderly people who are 70, 75 and even 80 years old and beyond can be very functional in society," Jud said. "I encourage them to be active and busy, and not sit back and think about their wounds. They can add a great deal of wisdom to society."

He said several Caritas volunteers are senior citizens who have been volunteering five or six years. Jud said he's noticed many appear younger and more full of zest after they become regular volunteers.

"It's kind of a bright spot in their lives," he said. "It's really good for them. Usually, they look better a year after they've started."

One of the best benefits of volunteering, Goeke said, is the fellowship with other volunteers and employees.

Gifts to daughter-in-law remains hers

Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: You said, "Once a gift is given, it belongs to the recipient." I disagree.

Eighteen years ago, our oldest son married a girl we liked very much — and I still do. I'll call her Sue. Six years ago, I gave Sue an 18-karat wristwatch. It was appraised at $3,000. The following Christmas, I bought a fine antique necklace at an auction. It came from the estate of one of our finest families. I gave it to Sue for her 40th birthday.

Two weeks later, my son informed me that he and Sue were getting a divorce, and that he had already moved out! This came as a blow, as I had no idea they had a troubled marriage. Abby, Sue must have known when I gave her that necklace that she was getting a divorce — yet she accepted the necklace and said nothing.

The divorce was "messy." I defended Sue and incurred the wrath of our son. I tried in the ensuing years to visit her (an hour's drive), but she found excuses and continued to avoid me. I should mention that Sue and our son had children — my only grandchildren — whom I adore, and we all get together at family affairs and are most cordial. However, I have never seen Sue wear the watch or necklace I gave her.

A few months ago, I asked Sue to please return the watch and necklace because I wanted them to remain in the family as heirlooms. She flatly refused. I know that I would have returned them had I been in her circumstances. Please tell me, was I wrong to ask Sue to return those items? And was she right to refuse? — NO NAME, PLEASE

DEAR NO NAME: I think you were wrong to have asked Sue to return the gifts you had given her. Whether she chose to return them or keep them was entirely her prerogative. She had no obligation to do so.

DEAR ABBY: I enjoyed your column on "going home again" and doubt if you can beat this.

My friend Carol and I decided to visit our old neighborhood (we are senior citizens now). She very much wanted to see the lovely, large old home she grew up in.

We drove by slowly, surveying the house, and a very nice-looking lady came out of the front door and noticed us. Carol then explained that she once lived in that house. The woman graciously asked if we cared to see the inside, and of course Carol was delighted.

Upon entering the house, we noticed the shocking pink carpet and pink satin drapes. Several girls were sitting around in negligees. Need I say more?

Carol started crying to think that her childhood home had become a house of ill repute. The "lady" of the house patted her on the shoulder as if to comfort her. I'm surprised she let us in, but she seemed so proud.

I doubt if this story can be printed, but I thought it was very amusing and a little sad. Please don't use my name. — PARK FOREST, ILL.
