Work to Start on Fair Building This Week

Work is expected to begin this week on the first permanent building for the Dawson County Fair Association, when the community exhibit building will be started.

This is to be a 30x100 foot building with metal roof and outside walls. The interior is to be divided into 20 exhibition booths, with wooden partitions separating the booths which are to be 10 by 10. There will be a 10-foot aisle down the center. The floor and inside walls will be of wood. Approximate cost of this building will be $2,500.

The fair grounds are located at the end of South Houston street, just west of the CCC camp. This property was donated to the Fair Association by Mr. S. L. Forrest and contains about 7 1/2 acres.

Mr. Joe Matthews, secretary of the Fair Association reports that over $3,000 worth of stock in the Association has already been sold, and that the remainder of the stock is expected to be sold within the next few days.

Catalogues and premium lists for the 1937 Fair which is to be held on October 14-15-16, will be mailed the first of next week. The premium lists total more than $600 this year, to be divided among the agricultural, livestock, farm home and community exhibits. An additional $50 will be awarded to the winners of two amateur contests.

The Fair Association Board of Directors has also set the admission charge to the fair grounds at the low price of 10c, the same as that of last year. The Directors are looking forward to the most successful fair in the history of the county, and are counting on the cooperation of the entire county to see that this occurs.

V. Z. Rogers Talks To Lions Club

The Lion's club met in its regular meeting at the Plaza hotel, Wednesday at noon, and enjoyed a splendid program. V. Z. Rogers was the principal speaker of the occasion and gave a fine talk on the schools of Lamesa. Mr. Rogers reminded the members of the club that the schools had more than doubled in enrollment in a short space of a few years, and indications were that they would continue to grow, necessitating new buildings, more teachers, and other facilities to take care of the situation. He said the school now has 40 white teachers and 1 colored teacher. Mr. Rogers also called attention to the splendid record made by the football teams of the high school. He stated that during the time Mr. McCollum had been coaching the teams of Lamesa high school, 119 games had been played, and 109 of them had been won, losing and tying only 10. This is a remarkable record, and Mr. McCollum, his assistant coaches, and the boys who have played on these teams, should be congratulated for their accomplishments.

Mr. Rogers introduced Fred Rand, who was a visitor and who travels for a publishing company and school supply house, who made a short talk.

The Delphian Club Chorus, composed of Mrs. Carl Rountree, Mrs. W. J. Beckham, Mrs. R. A. Stuart and Mrs. W. A. Lindsey, sang two numbers which were enjoyed to the greatest extent by the members of the club. Jap Baldwin and L. Donnell were introduced as new members and received the rites of initiation, presided over by A. G. Bearden. The club voted to fix up the football score board, which presented to the school 2 years ago and to have it ready for the next game.

Dawson County Cotton Crop Moving Rapidly

A visit to all the gins of Lamesa Wednesday afternoon showed that a total of 2364 bales of cotton had been ginned in Lamesa, at that time, and the ginners report that every day is seeing an increase in the number of bales being brought in.

A hurried survey of the rural gins of the county, together with those at Ackerly and Sparenberg, totalled approximately 2000 bales, which gives the county an unofficial total of around 4300 bales ginned to date.

This is quite a few more bales than was ginned at this time last year and with the large number of pickers arriving every day, the cotton crop harvest is expected to be in full swing within a few days.

Small Son of Mr. and Mrs. Hayden Barron Dies Friday

H. H. Barron, III, 8 1-2 month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Hayden Barron, died last Friday morning following the swallowing of a green pea which lodged in his throat.

The child had been playing on the floor while Mrs. Barron was attending to her housework, and in some unaccountable way had secured the pea and placed it in his mouth. Mrs. Barron noticed the baby gasping and called Mr. Barron and they started for Lamesa for medical aid. However, there being nothing in Lamesa to remove the pea from the child's throat, a start for Lubbock was made, the child died while enroute to that place.

Funeral services were held Saturday morning at 10 o'clock at the First Baptist church, with the pastor, Rev. E. F. Cole in charge. Interment was made in the Lamesa cemetery.

The baby who was born on January 2 of this year, is survived by his parents, three brothers, Richard, Hal and David Lee, his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Barron, and Mrs. Holly Woods.

Gary A. Barnes, of the State office of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, was in Lamesa Wednesday afternoon conferring with local farm leaders, and explaining to them the various features of the farm program.

Historical-Fair Edition Getting Good Response

Since the announcement last week that the Courier was to publish the most comprehensive Historical-Fair edition ever attempted in the history of Lamesa, the response accorded by Courier readers and patrons has been most gratifying. Much copy has been turned in and much more is in the process of collection and being written.

Within the pages of this Historical-Fair Edition will be a complete and detailed history of the area before the county was organized, the history of the county, of the town of Lamesa, the various other communities within the county, the churches, schools, civic organizations, clubs, the progress and development of ranching, agriculture, highways, transportation and communication, will all be given.

The task of gathering the necessary material, pictures, data, and advertising, it takes to make this edition, is great, and the cooperation of all those who are in a position to help out the Courier in this respect will be appreciated. Photographs and cuts are being made of the churches, schools, and some of the more attractive homes. A number of old time photographs have already been turned in of which cuts will be made, and the Courier is requesting that any one having, or knowing of other pictures of historical or local interest, to please let the Courier use them. All photographs and material borrowed for this edition will be carefully handled and returned to the owners in the best of condition.

The Courier is also requesting that anyone having items of historical interest to allow them to be used, and assures all donors that proper credit will be given to the contributors.

Sometime between midnight Friday night and seven o'clock Saturday morning the room of Mrs. J. H. Clark and daughter, Miss Vanabel, in the W. E. Anderson home, was entered by a prowler, who made off with several dollars in change and a wrist watch belonging to Miss Vanabel.

No other room in the house was entered and so quite was the burglary carried out that Mrs. Clark, who was sleeping on the bed within a foot of the door which was entered, was not awakened.

Tornadoes Play Olton In First Conference Game

Tornadoes Win Season's Opener Against Anson

The Tornadoes blasted the lid on the 1937 football season by taking a hard fought game from the Anson Tigers on the local gridiron last Friday night by a score of 19-0.

The Tornadoes using only power plays and of tackle dashes scored once in the opening quarter, once in the second, and again in the third. The Tigers elected to play a purely defensive game during the first half, kicking on first and second downs.

After the Tornadoes had scored their third touchdown in the last half, the Tigers came to life, however, and put on one of the greatest passing attacks to be seen on the local field in some time. The combination of Herndon to McClain kept the sidelines in an up-and-down and the Tornadoes on the run for the entire fourth quarter, as they completed pass after pass for long gains. However, when their goal line was threatened the Tornadoes buckled down and kept the last chalk line uncrossed. Herndon's passing was unerring in its accuracy, as he threw them right in the receiver's hands time after time, and only once did he make a bad pass, and that was when he was rushed.

It was the opinion of the spectators that if Anson had kept up their passing when they neared the goal line, instead of trying to go through the line the score would have been somewhat different.

The Tornadoes issued a warning to the other teams of this district that they would be no push over this year, as they threw up an almost impenetrable defense against power and line plays, and showed a set of backs that will be hard to stop by anybody's team.

Luncheon Club Asks For Cotton Classifier

The Business Men's Luncheon club met Tuesday at the Plaza hotel with twenty members and several visitors present.

The program was in charge of James Sumpter, who played a prank on several members of the club when he had them assume various positions to represent stage furniture for a non-existent troop of actors who were to perform for the club. A big laugh was created when the stage props found out they had been fooled.

J. D. Dyer made a talk on the Constitution of the United States which was greatly appreciated.

A discussion of the cotton situation was then held, with the result that the club decided to draw up plans and petition the Bureau of Agricultural Economics to send a government cotton classifier to Lamesa to class the cotton to be placed in the government loan. Sam Richardson, J. D. Dyer, and J. E. Barron were appointed on a committee to see that this work was carried out.

Funeral services were held at the Assembly Methodist church, with Rev. E. F. Cole, pastor of the First Baptist church, Lamesa officiating, interment was made in the Ackerly cemetery.

Survivors are her husband, and the following children: J. E. Dyer, Houston; M. E. Dyer, Lamesa; H. A. Dyer, Houston; W. T. Dyer, Bowie; Mrs. E. C. Recco, Houston; Mrs. H. F. St. John, Bowie; Brother, J. R. Woods, Levelland; and one sister, Mrs. Mollie Neeley, Bowie.

SEAL BROS. CIRCUS WILL POSITIVELY BE HERE SEPT. 29

We have been asked to announce by the management of the Seal Bros. Circus that they will positively be in Lamesa on Wednesday, September 29, and that rumors to the contrary are to be disregarded. The circus management states that they will be here as per schedule for the two shows on Wednesday, September 29, Circus Day in Lamesa.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Draper of Stanton spent Sunday visiting Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Craddock, who reside near Lamesa.

Mr. and Mrs. Mike Key returned Monday from a week's stay in South Bend, Ind., where Mr. Key purchased several new Studebaker cars.

The Olton Buffaloes will meet the Lamesa High School Golden Tornadoes on Friday night of this week, September 24, at McCollum Field, 7:45 p. m., for the Tornadoes first of nine conference games.

The Buffaloes, although having been defeated twice this year, are gaining strength with every game played, and are preparing to give the Tornadoes a real struggle Friday night. They have one of the heaviest teams in the district, and with the added experience gained in the past two weeks, they are going to be hard to hold back.

Coach F. T. McCollum reports that the Tornadoes came out of the Anson game in good shape, with the entire team being ready and anxious to start the conference schedule. This week has been spent mostly building up a suitable pass defense, a need for which was shown in last week's game when the inexperienced Lamesa boys allowed several completions to be made.

A hard-fought battle is being expected and school officials are urging that a large crowd be present to support the Tornadoes.

Miss Carol Cole Is Elected Football Queen

Miss Carol Cole, nominee of the junior class, was elected Golden Tornado Football Queen in a spirited contest which was concluded last week just prior to the football game between Anson and the Tornadoes.

The juniors won by selling the most season tickets to the Tornado games, a certain number of votes being allowed with each sale. Other classes worked hard, but fell just a little short of reaching the total number of votes received by Miss Cole.

Miss Cole will be crowned Tornado Queen Friday night of this week between the halves of the Tornado-Olton football game. An appropriate ceremony has been arranged in which the two teams pep squad, and band will take part. Her costume is being made this week and will not be shown of the details given out until the ceremony.

Miss Carol is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. E. F. Cole.

Questions and Answers On New Cotton Loan

(By J. Sam Lewis)

Farmers interested in the government cotton loan or in the bonus or adjustment payments, have had little accurate information as to details of the plan. So far the government has issued few notes on the plan.

Copies of a letter or rather two letters from A. B. Emmert, general manager of the Texas Cotton Cooperation Association, have been received here, giving some information as to the plan.

The letters were a series of questions and answers to answer problems of producers. As far as is known here, they are the best and most authentic copy sent out.

Questions and answers on the loan designed to answer farmers' questions about it are as follows:

Q Who is eligible to borrow?
A Any farmer who produced cotton this season, who will obligate himself to comply with the adjustment program for 1938 as may hereafter be formulated.

Q What cotton is eligible for the loan?
A Any cotton produced from the 1937 crop, be or for the applicant which classes 13-16 inch in staple length and middling or better in grade, or which classes 7-8 inch or better as to staple and low middling and better as to grade.

Q At what rate per pound will loans be made?
A Middling or better in grade 7-8 inch or better in staple, 9 cents; middling or better in grade 13-16 in staple below middling, 7-8 inch in staple, 7 3/4 cents.

Q By whom will the class of the cotton upon which loans are to be made be determined?
A The applicant for the loan will state in his loan papers that the cotton is equal to or better than the class required to justify a loan at the rate per pound shown therein. The warehouseman with whom the cotton is stored will furnish a certificate guaranteeing the class of the cotton to be represented in the loan papers.

Q What rate of interest will be charged and when will the notes mature?
A The rate of interest will be 4 percent per annum and the notes will mature July 31, 1938.

Q How are these loans made?
A The proceeds for obtaining these loans will be deposited with the warehouseman and he will make a loan against the crop of 1937.

Q How will the farmer have his cotton in the loan and therefore receive the benefit of the adjustment payment?
A A producer who places his cotton in the loan will receive a check for his cotton by having off the loan, and his share of the adjustment payment will be credited to the benefit of the producer, provided the cotton is withdrawn and actually sold prior to July 1, 1938.

Q Will the Texas Cotton Cooperation Association make these loans?
A Yes. The association representative in the interior will furnish the necessary detail class on his cotton, prepare the loan papers, and pay him the loan value at that time for which a charge of 9 cents per bale will be made.

Information on adjustment payments are as follows:

Q What is the basis for these adjustment payments?
A The basis is the difference between the 1937 crop and the 1938 crop as that basis production of each producer was determined in accordance with the regulation applicable to the 1937 soil conservation program. Those who participated in the 1937 program know just what their base acreage and normal production figures are. Those who have not cooperated under the 1937 soil conservation program may obtain their base acreage and normal production by application to the county agricultural extension agent, or to the chairman of the county committee administering the soil conservation program.

Q Within what period of time must the producer sell his cotton in order to receive entitled to the adjustment payments?
A His cotton must be sold on or before June 30, 1938. Cotton that was sold before the formulation of this program shall be eligible for adjustment payments to the same extent as that sold thereafter.

Q What will adjustment payments be made?
A The date payment actually will be made is problematical. Payments will be made only to those producers who comply with and cooperate in the application of such agricultural program as may hereafter be formulated by the United States department of agriculture under authority of legislation hereafter to be enacted by the congress. You see from this that payments will not be made on a promise to comply with a program but upon proof that the 1938 agricultural program has been complied with. Therefore it would appear that payment will not be made earlier than July or August, 1938.

The representatives of cotton cooperative association will maintain a record of the cotton handled through the association and can furnish the necessary information so that at the proper time documents may be filed with the county agricultural extension agent for the adjustment payments.

THIS IS US COMING BACK FROM OUR HONEYMOON

Mr. Frank Phillips, President, Phillips Petroleum Company, Bartlesville, Oklahoma.

Dear Sir:

It all started when I got something in my eye while we were riding with the top down.

It hurt and I cried and Harold—that's my husband—flashed up and called me a cry-baby.

Oh, he's usually a dear. But our engine was chattering and puffing steam like a pearl diver and both of us were sweating and both of us were crying.

Well, I was practically blind with my eye. I couldn't see a thing. I really tried everything. But I had no use.

Suddenly, at all the chattering and puffing and steam, we tucked in the wheel and coasted on the gas. The car had a gas gauge and I saw the needle slip and I saw the needle slip and I saw the needle slip.

As a Phillips 66 station and that's the reason I am writing to you.

Well, you never saw such a change in a car. It ran like mad. Cool as an ice-facial and as quiet as the girl who gives it to you. The motor purred and Harold grinned and says, "She sure runs over-daisy on Phillips 66. Wonder where that Poly gas has been all my life."

From that on, he was all smiles. The whole trip. Every time we needed gas, we'd wait till we saw a Phillips 66.

To make a long story short, from the time we started using Phillips 66 we had a gas gauge and we had a gas gauge and we had a gas gauge.

In fact, we had such a swell honeymoon that Phillips 66 that I felt I'd like to be a Phillips 66 station and that's the reason I am writing to you.

And who knows, maybe I'll even have saved my husband some money. He's going to be a Phillips 66 station and that's the reason I am writing to you.

Yours very truly,

P. S. The snapshot is us coming back from our honeymoon.

"THE REST OF THE RECORD"

By James V. Allred

The newspapers during the past week have quoted members of the Senate Committee as predicting that the Legislature would block my program for new taxes unless the subjects of appropriations and reorganization are submitted.

Such statements by the senators are calculated to put me in the false position of being opposed to economy in state government when just the opposite is true and my record bears it out.

At the beginning of the regular session, I submitted the subject of appropriations and recommended the reorganization of certain state departments in the interest of economy. Not a single thing was done about it. In written messages to the Legislature, I definitely stated that while the Board of Control had recommended increases, and certain bills for salary increases were pending, I did not join in these recommendations; nor could I approve salary, or other, increases until and unless the Legislature provided additional taxes to pay them. My recommendations were ignored and appropriations substantially increased, even to the point as these senators now admit, of being "top-heavy." They would not have been "top-heavy" if my recommendations had been followed.

For the purpose of keeping the record straight, I wrote a friendly letter to Senator Albert Stone, which was not intended to criticize him or to rebuke him, but merely to point out some of the facts in the controversy that has been started in the newspapers. There are no personal differences between us. In order that the record may be kept straight and the people of Texas may have the facts in this "Rest of the Record," I am quoting the following excerpts from my letter to Senator Stone:

"In the first place, I recommended no increases (in appropriations) except a little more than a million dollars for our insane. You voted for all increases, either as a member of a conference committee or a member of the Senate; one of the biggest increases was in the department appropriation bill, for which you voted on May 22nd, as shown at page 2288 of the Senate Journal. Only four senators voted against this bill, and this was the biggest vote cast against any general appropriation bill in the Senate.

"You were a member of the conference committee which recommended the passage of the educational appropriation bill—and admittedly top-heavy appropriation—and you voted for the passage of this bill on May 22nd as shown at page 2308 of the Senate Journal.

"You voted for the passage of the eleventh appropriation bill on May 19th, as shown at page 4005 of the Senate Journal.

"But that's not all: There is a further contrasting record for economy: "You voted for Senate Bill 14, which donated $350,000.00 State taxes to Harris County each year for ten years, a total of $3,500,000.00. I vetoed this bill, and you voted to override my veto and give this money to Harris County notwithstanding. Senate Journal, page 910.

"You voted for an $821,000.00 appropriation for an insane asylum in East Texas. Senate Journal, page 1592. I vetoed this and saved $821,000.00.

"You voted for House Bill 24, which appropriated and diverted approximately $1,500,000.00 each year for soil conservation work—and the Legislature did not provide other taxes to take the place of the diversion for which you voted. Senate Journal, pages 1588 and 2134. I vetoed it and saved the taxpayers $1,500,000.00 per year. "You voted for the departmental ap-

Final Preparation For South Plains Fair Made

Lubbock, Sept. 22.—Final preparations are being made for the Panhandle South Plains Fair, according to schedule the gates will swing wide Monday morning, September 24th, unfolding to the people of this section the accomplishments of over a quarter of a century on the South Plains.

With the additional exhibit space that has already been added to the huge Agricultural Building, almost every county on the South Plains will be on parade. The Livestock Building likewise will offer one of the best exhibitions of its kind ever to be shown in this section. The Industrial Building packed to overflowing with commercial exhibits, the implement and farm machinery exhibits the Women's Building and the large Boy Scout exhibit, all lend toward making the 24th annual exposition the best ever to be presented.

Fair officials announce one of the largest entertainment programs ever to be offered. With the fine six day race meet; the Million Dollar Midway featuring the T. J. Tidwell Shows; the beautiful fireworks displays each night, J. C. Michaels Big City Circus with afternoon and evening performances; band concerts morning, afternoon and evening; and the big top, three-ring circus of Russell Bros., a performance of exceptionally high merit, and recognized as one of the nation's foremost "big-top" organizations; and scores of other attractions, fair visitors should plan to spend several days at the exposition this year.

A TRIBUTE TO MRS. DYER

Our entire community was made sad when word went out that Grandma Dyer had passed away. She came to our midst several years ago and since then has found a loving place in all of our hearts, so great that her birthday became a community celebration. We knew her to be a true friend, a faithful companion, a loving mother and a devoted Christian.

Her life made brighter the lives of all with whom she came in contact, and the poet Burns might have been paying personal tribute to Grandma when he wrote:

"To see her is to love her
 And to love her for ever,
 For Nature made her what she is
 And never made such another."
 A Friend.

Pursang Often Aids in Clearing Complexion

Helps Build Red Blood Corpuscles and Tones Up Entire System

How do you know your skin can't be white and beautiful? Why take it for granted that you must look sallow and under-nourished? Perhaps you're simply run-down—as so many people are at this time of year—and need more iron in their blood. We recommend Pursang to you.

Pursang is the product of the McKesson Laboratories, famous in the manufacture of drugs and medicines for more than a century. It is a scientific preparation containing organic compounds of iron and copper. These important elements make Pursang an effective hematinic—a builder of hemoglobin—the substance which makes red blood corpuscles red. In addition, Pursang contains ingredients that stimulate appetite, make you enjoy eating more, and make your food worth more to you.

If lack of iron in your blood is dragging you down—making you feel and look below par—get a bottle of Pursang today.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

Much public confusion has arisen in regard to old age retirement benefits and unemployment insurance because each plan is financed from contributions based upon payrolls. The unemployment Compensation Commission was formed for the purpose of collection of contributions for the support of unemployment insurance and the administration of the Unemployment Compensation law and is separate from the administration of the Old Age Assistance Commission.

Old age retirement benefits are provided for under Title VIII of the Social Security law, and are financed by monthly assessments upon payrolls made by both worker and employer, in equal amounts. At age 65 the worker may retire and receive certain monthly benefits, based upon the amount of his wage and the length of time worked before retirement. The benefits cannot exceed $85.00 monthly or be less than $10.00 monthly.

Unemployment compensation is financed entirely by a tax on payrolls paid only by the employer of eight or more in occupations covered. No assessment whatever in Texas is made on the worker for unemployment insurance. The payment will be based entirely upon the work record of the individual and will be one-half the former full time weekly wage, with a maximum weekly payment of $15.00 for a period not to exceed 16 weeks. Unemployment benefits will be payable January, 1938.

Resident workers in Texas for out-of-state firms should ascertain if their employers have as many as eight employees in the nation, even though there are less than eight employed in this state.

If an out-of-state employer has as many as eight employees in the nation, he is required to pay the full Federal tax. Unless he voluntarily elects to come under the act, all payments are made to the Federal Government, and the Texas resident gets no benefits.

If the employer elects to come under the Texas act for the benefit of his employees in this State then such employees are credited with the amounts paid and have the reserve fund to draw against in case they become unemployed.

The Unemployment Fund of Texas is nearing the $15,000,000 mark and growing at the approximate rate of $1,100,000 per month.

LARGE PERCENTAGE OF SCHOOL CHILDREN HAVE DECAYED TEETH

Austin, Tex. Sept. 23—Ninety-five out of every 100 school children have decayed teeth, estimates State Health Officer Geo. W. Cox, and the average pre-school child of six years has three or four cavities.

how much time is lost in school attendance through tooth troubles and neglected teeth," Dr. Cox said. "But it is an admitted fact that if every school child could start the school year with teeth free from defects and well cared for the attendance would be materially improved. At the same time, the child would be spared the unnecessary suffering that comes from neglected teeth.

"Individual care of the teeth is of special importance in maintaining mouth health—and incidentally in keeping up the general health. Eating proper food, and a thorough cleansing of the teeth, twice a day, plus gum massage are essential for the preservation of mouth health.

"As a matter of fact, more parents should see to it that their children use their tooth brushes properly," Dr. Cox stated. "The mere fact that a child goes through the motions of brushing his teeth does not mean that his teeth will not decay. Cleanliness, and not mere brushing, is the thing to be emphasized. The proper way to brush the teeth is to brush the upper teeth downward and the lower teeth upward, sweeping across the gum in between the teeth, thereby reaching the areas most susceptible to decay.

And finally, sensible people have formed the habit of going themselves and taking their children to the dentist every six months, whether or not they notice any evidence of trouble. Periodic inspections enable the dentist to detect the beginning of tooth decay, which may be repaired before extensive damage is done. He can forestall threatening gum infections by appropriate treatment, and also, he has an opportunity to give advice about special cases which may be indicated.

SOIL MOISTURE CONSERVATION BEING RAPIDLY INCREASED

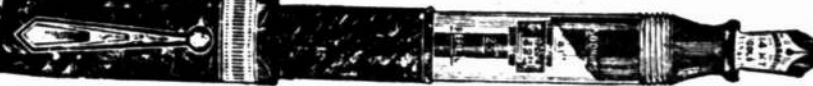

The success of one farmer in using soil and moisture conservation practices has resulted in at least four others adopting similar methods, according to F. A. Vestal superintendent of the Soil Conservation Service camp at Lamesa. When the camp was established in August, 1935, L. B. Stuart, who has a 640-acre farm ten miles southeast of Lamesa, became one of the first co-operators.
Stuart's farm was being damaged by soil blowing, so small broad base terraces were built on one field and the rest of his land was cultivated on the contour. These practices eliminated blowing in 1936, since conserved moisture enabled Stuart to get sufficient residue in the soil to prevent wind erosion.
Sudan was planted on one field after a good wheat harvest in 1936. After the Sudan had been grazed, the field was plowed in the fall, the ridges not being leveled. Due to the conserved moisture a good stand of volunteer wheat came up. This was grazed until April 1, 1937, when the livestock was taken off the field. The wheat matured and an average of ten bushels to the acre was harvested in June, 1937. Stuart was so well pleased with results on the terraced portions of his farm that he built terraces on the remainder in the winter of 1936. Since one of the fields is divided by a road, passersby had a good opportunity to observe results of soil and moisture conservation practices on Stuart's land.
During the spring rains in 1937, all the water was held on Stuart's field by the terraces, and the value of this practice was clearly visible to persons passing along the road running through the field. Stuart planted his field to cotton with Sudan on the terraces, and obtained excellent stands because the plants had the benefit of stored up moisture. He expects a yield of three-fourths of a bale of cotton to acre.
After observing Stuart's success, four other farmers have informed Superintendent Vestal of the Soil Conservation Service camp that they intend to terrace their fields this fall.

ton and are holding him a prisoner somewhere. I don't know. You are surely right in thinking that Lupe hates him because of you. Therefore I should say that the thing for you to do, if you really want to save Tarlton's life, is to convince Lupe absolutely that you've given Tarlton up."

"How can I convince him? Tell me!"

"Shall I advise you, dear?"

"Yes, yes!" Patricia begged. She knew that under cover of that word "advise" Warren was going to deliver his terms.

"I believe," he said, with a wariness that was maddening to her, "that Lupe would not be convinced by mere promises, especially now that Rosalie is dead and Tarlton is free to marry you. I believe he would demand some absolute guarantee of your sincerity. Your willingness to return to Chicago is all right, as far as it goes, but in this situation it hardly goes far enough. In my opinion—he dropped his cigarette into his tea dregs—"there is only one earthly way for you to convince Lupe. It's drastic, but then . . ."

"What is it? I'll do it!"

Warren said slowly: "Your friend Northup is a magistrate. He can issue a marriage license and perform the ceremony. If you and I should be married here at the Bay, at once, and then you should go back to Chicago announced at Patricia Lovett, I rather believe that Lupe would be entirely satisfied. Nothing short of that would do."

Patricia drew back, shocked and incredulous. She had never imagined that Warren would drive so merciless a bargain. Or so preposterous a bargain. Didn't he realize that she would never live with him? That she would divorce him the instant she could?

But then she looked deeper into his ultimatum and saw that instead of being preposterous his bargain was a shrewd far-seeing play, based on the blunt realities of the months ahead. His marriage to her, however it might be, would give him a heavy advantage in his battle against Russell Parkes. After that—when he had her in Chicago, had the firm in his grasp again, had control of the Wellington interests and her family's fortune—he could just about dictate his terms to her.

Warren saw how she recoiled from the thought of marrying him.

"You don't seem to like my advice," he snapped. Formerly he would have argued patiently, but now he was sharp and hard. "All right, don't take it!" He got up to go.

Patricia caught his arm. She was panicky with defeat. "Warren, please—I haven't refused—I will take it! I promise, here, now, if you'll only send word to Lupe. Won't you do that? Promise me you'll send word to Lupe."

"I don't promise anything," he shook Patricia's hand from his arm and started for the door. "If and when you've followed my advice, I might help you, but not before. If you haven't changed your mind by tomorrow morning about going back to Chicago with me, if you are still willing to be married as I suggested, you might come over to my cabin and let me know."

Moments afterward, Dennis Northup stepped from behind a portiere in the corner where Patricia hung her clothes.

"Damn all," he remarked glumly, "that man is a shrewd devil. He actually delivered his ultimatum to you without incriminating himself by one single word."

Patricia did not answer. She had slumped down on the cot and was sobbing at her abject failure to save Craig.

"Don't give up, partner," Northup attempted encouragement. "We'll try Lovett again. We'll get him the next time."

CHAPTER XVIII

A while later Patricia roused herself and wandered out into the cool night air. Her cheeks burned with fever; she felt sick and a little giddy. In the cabin she had cried her heart out over the wreckage of all her plans, all her happy castles; and a numb hopelessness had settled upon her.

Wandering aimlessly in the darkness she found a pine tree, leaned weakly against it and plucked at its rough bark with her fingers, oblivious to everything except the numbing anguish in her heart.

In a dazed way she realized that she and Craig had lost their long bitter fight, the men had lost their mining field, and Craig's splendid ambition for the years ahead was now only a dead dream. Out of the wreckage there was but one thing that might possibly be salvaged, and that was Craig's very life.

She doubted whether she could save even that. She was no match for Warren. Corporal Northup, for all his experience with crime, was entirely outclassed. Except for her surrender to Warren's ultimatum, she had no power left of any sort.

Even if she did give in to that unthinkable bargain, Warren would likely doublecross her. She put no faith in any promise from him. He hated Craig with a primitive jealous hatred.

Through her number thoughts ran Warren's sentence of two weeks ago. "The guilt will lie with you!" By a mere word then she could have saved all this disaster. And she had refused. The guilt did lie with her. She should have taken Warren's offer and gone back to Chicago. If Craig should be murdered, because of her refusal . . . It was a horrible thought.

Over at the community house, 39 yards away, the windows and doors had been flung open, or some reason the usual droning hum of conversation was stilled. Inside, a person was talking. His voice was raised a little, as though he was making some sort of speech to the men.

Occasionally, as he paused, Patricia heard a low rumble from the listeners, a muffled outburst of surprise, or anger, or both; but the noise always died down quickly as the man took up his speech again.

The voice sounded to her like Warren's. She stopped plucking at the bark and listened. The voice was Warren's. Unable to make out what he was saying, she left the pine and stumbled nearer the community house.

A few distinguishable words came drifting out to her then: "Tarlton—radium lake—disappearance—"

In spite of her faintness she knew that Warren was putting across some bold stroke with these prospectors. He must have gone straight from her cabin to the Den. This must be the "something important" which he had mentioned, with elation in his tones.

The tense quiet of the prospectors sounded ominous to her, but even more ominous were those rumbling outbursts whenever Warren paused. She had heard that same ugly ground-swell once before—on the March night when Phil Kessler betrayed the men and skipped their wrath.

In alarm she started around toward the main door, to find out what Warren's move was and to fight it.

In the entrance-way she stopped and looked across the main room. A strange scene confronted her. At the far side of the Den, over next the kitchen, Warren was standing on an up-ended drum of kerosene, talking to the prospectors. They had crowded up close to him and were listening intently. In his hand he held a sheaf of papers, documents of some kind.

He had evidently been talking to the group for some time, for he was bringing his speech to an end when she came in.

Over the heads of the miners Patricia could hear his sharp words distinctly. He spoke in a curt emotionless way that was more devastating than any bombast or ranting.

"For almost a year," he said, "Tarlton has kept you men here, without money or clothes or anything except empty promises. He persuaded you, if not indeed browbeat you, into not selling me your claims. Now what has he himself done? You've heard that he discovered a pitchblende lake. That is true. He did sell it. But to whom? Why, to me! He sold that radium deposit to Wellington, Parkes & Lovett, whom he supposedly has been fighting all along . . . What's that?—you want proof? I have the proof here. Here are the claim papers. Look at them for yourself. Then go up to the government land office and examine the official transfer record. He kept you men from selling your claims to me, but when his chance comes he sneaks across the river and secretly sells me his!"

The huge red-headed miner seized the claim papers and thumbed them hastily.

"My God!" he bawled out to the others. "These is Tarlton's papers to that lake! Lovett's telling us the truth. Tarlton did sell to the company, like Lovett says."

"Did Tarlton tell you," Warren asked, "that he sold the lake to me?"

No one answered. The men looked around at one another, open-mouthed, blank of face. They were stunned. Tarlton had sold to the company and had told them nothing about the deal! It was unbelievable of Tarlton. But they had to believe it. There were the incriminating papers, the proof positive.

"Now, I'm not denying that Tarlton has done you men some good turns and that he's had some big schemes in his head about welding you all together into a prospectors' syndicate or something of that sort. But when it comes to handing across a quarter of a million of his own money, his fancy ideas couldn't quite stand the strain. Let me ask you something else—where is he now?"

Again that blank open-mouthed silence.

"Well," Warren answered his own question, "I suppose I'll have to tell you where he is. Three evenings ago he came over to my cabin and we signed these papers. Fifteen minutes later he dropped out of sight. No one, not even Miss Patricia, has heard of him since. He skipped! Exactly as Kessler did. That quarter-million went to his head. He took his money and skipped and left you men here holding the bag."

Across the entrance-way a girl's voice rang out:

"Liar! Kidnaper! Doublecrosser! You kidnaped Craig. You're holding him prisoner. You framed him and now you're framing these men!"

The prospectors whirled around and stared at the girl who was screaming the lie at Lovett.

As Patricia left the entrance-way like an embodiment of passionate fury Warren called sharply:

"Men! Pay no attention to her wild charges. Tarlton has taken her in too, even worse than he took you. She actually still believes in the fellow! You mustn't blame her for anything she says or does. Poor girl, she's beside herself."

Patricia cut her way through the crowd, leaped upon a chair near where Warren stood, and faced the men, her eyes flashing fire.

"Lies! Lies! Lies! Every word he's told you is a damnable lie! I tell you he kidnaped Craig. Those Chiwaughimis have got Craig somewhere. They will kill Craig if you don't do something about it. Get that man there"—she levelled her arm at Warren—"and make him tell where Craig is."

No one moved. The men merely stared at her. The very wildness and passion of her charges made them turn deaf ears to what she said. Their belief in Craig had been shattered. Their God had fallen.

Warren shook his head sorrowfully. "Don't blame her, men," he repeated. "She has really meant to be your honest friend, all along."

RESURRECTION RIVER

"Don't let Craig down!" Patricia pleaded with them. "Don't let those half-breeds kill him!" The stony silence of the crowd maddened her. She was flinging herself, battering herself, against a rock wall. "Help me save Craig. He's helped you—you... Oh God you're letting him down—and he'll be killed—"

"Miss Pat," the huge redhead spoke up, "we ain't blaming you for a thing. You've been awful durned good to us rock-hogs. It's Tarlton that's the guilty devil. He sold out and skipped."

"You're a liar!" Patricia flashed back. But in the next breath she was pleading: "Don't let Craig be murdered. You can make Warren Lovett tell where Craig is, and we can send out a rescue party—"

Someone laughed derisively. The rest took up the laugh. They jeered at the notion of "helping" or "rescuing" a man who had sold them out and skipped with a quarter-million dollars.

Patricia suddenly hated all of them with a flaming hatred. She forgot Craig's large-voiced words to her last winter. "Don't blame the poor devils, Treeshia; they're not to blame if they give in." They were suddenly not her friends but ingrates and enemies.

"Then get out of here!" she stormed at them. "Get out of this house! It's my house. Get your packs and move out. Get back to your lousy tents and the mud and the wet and the cold that I lifted you out of!"

They paid no attention to her. A dozen or more were crowding around Warren, trying to talk sellout terms with him. Another dozen were making for the main door, to be the first across the river and in the line to sell.

One man did growl sullenly: "I'll live here as long as I blasted please! Try'n make me move out."

Patricia jumped down from the chair, blind with rage. They thought she was helpless did they? They thought they'd stay there in her house and ter they'd let her down and refused to save Craig's life? She'd show them! She'd set them out of there! Of what use, anyway, was this house now? In a few days it would be empty, tenantless—a mockery of her and Craig's unselfish battle.

Her knees wobbled as she ran over to a corner of the Den and grabbed an ax and ran back to the drum of kerosene. She smashed at the drum—fared vengeful blows. The liquid gushed out upon the pineslab flooring.

"Hey!" a man yelled. "She's crazy! She's going to set this place on fire!" Before they could stop her, Patricia whirled to the nearest table, seized a lamp, flung it at the pool of kerosene. There was a puff of blackish smoke, a scorching sheet of flame. The half-emptied barrel caught and exploded, flinging its blazing contents all over the fall and floor, and wrapping the whole north end of the building in flames. Through the panicky crowd of men, grabbing at their belongings and jamming toward the door, Warren fought his way to Patricia and seized her. She was limp and nerveless—on the point of sinking down upon the floor. He beat out a spot of flame on her dress, picked her up, ran with her to the nearest window, and got her out of the blazing building.

Over near her cabin he stopped, and set her on her feet and steadied her. Patricia turned and glanced back—at her community house, her child, the symbol of all her work and sacrifice and hope. It was already gutted, doomed. The flames had eaten through the roof, and were leaping above the surrounding pines; the whole inside was a mass of fire; the rafters and walls were tumbling to black ruin.

CHAPTER XIX

In the little shack where Craig lay prisoner, Lupe Chiwaughimi squatted down beside the low bunk. His voice was kind enough but his eyes glinted evilly in the candlelight.

"You wan' anything to eat or drink, mebbe?" he inquired.

Craig shook his head.

"You wan' me to hold a cigarette, mebbe, wile you smoke heem?"

"No."

"You aw-right comfortable for de night, den?"

"Trot along to your sleep," Craig bade curtly. He hated this insistent kindness from Lupe. It was the inhuman kindness of an executioner.

Lupe got up and went out of the shack, leaving Cesar Chiwaughimi there as a guard, during the brief night.

Staring up at the lodgepole rafters, as he had stared for so many pain-shot hours, Craig wearily listened to the macabre hootings of an owl and bared his aching thoughts away from his lost battle and Patricia and the death hanging over him.

He had little idea where the Chiwaughimis had come with him, except that they had made about a 20-hour journey from the Bay, pulling him on a light komatik; but he felt sure that they had brought him to some wild region where Indians and prospectors rarely came. From the sounds outside—the hooting of owls at night, the twittering of redpolls and buntings by day, the occasional tattoo of an Arctic woodpecker—he knew that the camp was located in a deep woods.

He reasoned also that there must be a second shack close by, where the other Chiwaughimis slept and where the cooking was done, for his food was brought in to him already prepared.

During the sled journey he had clung to the hope that Poleon might be trailing the Chiwaughimis, with a rescue party. But that hope had died in him now. Too much time had elapsed. If any party had followed, it would have closed in last night and attacked Escape by his own hand, by any physical means, was flatly impossible. His wrists were bound with the green rawhide thongs till he could not move a finger; he was securely roped to the bunk; and always, close enough to touch him, sat an alert Chiwaughimi guard with a rifle on his lap.

In his helplessness he had turned to Teeste Chiwaughimi that afternoon and reminded the half-breed of the life debt between them; but Teeste had stonily refused to help him. The breed's gratitude had distinctly waned. Full of health and strength again, he chose to forget the night when he had lain at the point of death.

Out in the woods, 400 yards away, the owl kept up its weird hooting—Whoo-cooooks Whoo-cooooks Who - whoo - cooks - for - youuu-aaallll. The bird was staying in one spot, an unusual while, Craig thought. He had seldom known a horned owl to hoot more than twice from the same place. The call brought him a poignant memory of a summer twilight at the Bay when fun-loving Poleon hid himself in some brush and sounded the ventriloquist Whoo-whoohad and had all the prospectors craning their necks around at the trees.

The hooting stopped. Ten minutes later it started up again, from a different direction, nearer and more distinct. Craig thought that he detected a false quaver in the last two notes. Listening closely, he compared the call with several others here and there in the woods. This call was not exactly like those others.

A little thrill went through his numbed body. Maybe it was Poleon out yonder in that dark drogue, signaling him, saying, "Keep your cheen op, Craig. I'm wit' you."

He drove the thought away, because it was torment. Though he was in extremity of body and mind, he refused to clutch at straws.

Some time later—he had dozed off without knowing it—he stirred out of a feverish sleep. He was clammy with sweat, his throat felt parched, his broken nose pained him intolerably.

"Bring me water," he asked the vigilant Cesar, in French. "To drink and for a cool cloth on my face."

"Go to sleep," Cesar growled. "It is night Sleep."

Craig lashed out savagely: "Beast, you! When your brother lay gasping for life breath, I saved him; and now you refuse me a tin of water. Don't then, care-a-ou-heard!"

A little ashamed Cesar got up, reached for a pan behind the stove, and went out.

Craig heard him scoop the pan full of snow and start back for the door. Then, all suddenly, he heard a surprised grunt from the breed—a grunt cut short by a hard blow, as of a man being smashed over the head.

Then came the sound of a body sprawling heavily on the snow. Bewildered, Craig twisted painfully in his ropes till he could see the door. A few moments later a dark figure appeared there, looked cautiously inside. Then the man stepped in, and the candle shone on him.

Craig started to cry out, "Sam!" but his voice choked in his throat. The shack, the door, and Sam Honeywell's figure went all blurry. He closed his eyes a moment, opened them again, stared spellbound—in the stupefaction of a man suddenly confronted with a reprieve from death.

"Shhh-sh!" Sam warned. "We socked one of 'em plenty, but they's four more right a-near sleeping with one eye open; and we ain't got no guns, Poleon and me."

In through the doorway came Poleon, carrying the limp unconscious form of Cesar Chiwaughimi. He threw the half-breed down, hurried to the bunk, bent over Craig.

Poleon drew his skinning knife and began cutting the ropes and babische. "Here, Sam,"—he tossed Honeywell the thong—"Craig don't need dese any blue bull-mink. You hogtie heem proper, so you use 'em on dat son of a pole-walk-way out upon the ice and fished for their rifles; but the water was too swift and deep, and they had come on bare-handed."

"Who's with you?" Craig whispered as Poleon cut the last rawhide from his swollen ankles.

"Where is this place? They blind-folded me on the trip."

"It's in de Wolf Lairs, 'bout three mile from Kessler hill. You 'member dat pine drogue where we cut dem claim stakes? Well, dis camp is in dat Dese two shack, dey're were Lovett's men stayed w'en he sen' dat party op here in Apreel to do de assessment work on de Kessler sold lode."

"We've got to get out of this shack and away from here," Craig said. "One of those other Chiwaughimis may step in at any moment, to see that everything's all right."

He tried to move, but he could not even rise to his elbow. He was helpless as a baby. His arms and legs were stiff as posts, and his whole body was numb.

"Easy, easy," Poleon gentled him. "I'll have to give you wan good rub and pummeling 'fore you can stan-op. Sam, you step outside and get dat Chiwaughimis' rifle. We need dat gun bad."

While he worked with Craig, Poleon told how Sam and he had got there. After discovering the abduction, they had waited till daybreak, then circled the Bay and picked up the telltale tracks of a sled and five men. In the whipping wind the trail was dim when they first found it, and before they had followed it ten miles it was blotted out altogether. But the Chiwaughimis had plainly been heading for the about Lovett's party in April and the Wolf Lairs; and Poleon, remembering shacks they had built for their tem-Chiwaughimis were taking Craig to porary stay, shrewdly guessed that the those shacks in that isolated country.

Luck had been with them on their trip at every turn except one; but there it had dealt them a cruel jolt. In crossing a small upland river that merning they had broken through the rotten "mush" ice and lost their packs, guns, and almost their lives. After struggling ashore, they had laid a pole walk-way out upon the ice and fished for their rifles; but the water was too swift and deep, and they had come on bare-handed.

METHODIST NOTES (Welch Charge)

Spent another pleasant day at Bartlett Sunday. Had been five weeks since we were there, and a long time Sunday school running nicely there.

They are to organize first Sunday in October. Everybody be present on that day and have a part. Do not know what changes will be made. We are satisfied with some officers and teachers. No better work being done in any school that I know of than at Bartlett.

We will have only one more day there in this conference year. Our annual conference meets at Quanah, on November 18.

Let us all work and pray for a successful closing of the year's work. If we close out well we are in position to start new year well.

Report that Sunday school at Welch was well attended Sunday. Around 200 present. Our second superintendent is planning some very fine work for us. Let's be ready to go when he says so. We like the way he has started out with a young man of his ability and determination if supported by the church and community we should be able to make a great record.

Next Sunday our regular day. We are anxious to have a full attendance. We should be anxious about closing out the year well. We already have some great things to report. If we pay all finances, complete the new Customers May Have Worn Out the Front Door In A Day But the Results Justified the Damage . . .

The above heading may not make sense to a lot of people, but such was the heading of a story that appeared in the September 1, issue of the South-west Hardware and Implement Journal pertaining to the 15th anniversary celebration of the E. R. Yates Hardware which occurred May 1. Following is the story in part as it appeared in the Journal.

"This is a simple story of the art of getting what you want. Success is the portion of those who know what they want. E. R. Yates Hardware Company, Lamesa, Texas, wanted to bring the largest crowd into their store in the history of the concern. The occasion was the fifteenth anniversary of their founding. Behind the whole matter was a simple powerful purpose. The Yates Company realized that no one could buy anything from a store without first coming into it.

"Mr Yates planned his day's commemoration in a big way, yet most of it can be summed up in one word 'Publicity.' Advance publicity may take on several forms; most of Mr. Yates' was newspaper publicity, with enough paid advertising on his own hook to warrant the paper's giving him considerable free space besides. For by the time he got through with his plans for the day it had become a news-worthy event, as well as a well advised advertising scheme.

"Two days before the event, the storm broke in the form of a veritable avalanche of advertising, publicity and news matter, the amount of which any metropolitan concern could have been justly proud. "Occupying the most important position on the front page of the Dawson County Courier for that day was a story announcing the anniversary celebration in superlative terms. In a similar position on page two was another story, by a most spectacular and praiseworthy of all was a special eight-page section devoted entirely to the Yates organization.

"This section was devoted to the various items handled by the Yates store with special stores pertaining to the various employees, and congratulatory advertisements from concerns whose commodities Yates handles and from other business houses in Lamesa. This was not a sale, but a birthday party, pure and simple, to which everyone was invited to come and have a good time, have coffee, and cake, on the house, and look around."

"Whether Mr. Yates is a prosperous hardware man because he conducts such well planned-in-advance occasions, or whether he conducts these celebrations because he is prosperous is not a matter to be decided here; but if we had to guess, we wouldn't hesitate. For it's a dead sure cinch that he didn't build a flourishing business by sitting patiently at his desk and waiting for Mohamed to come to the mountain. Indeed, the evidences are many that this wide-awake hardware man leaves little or nothing to guess-work in the running of his business. That is why the history of his enterprise is a story of growth and success and why he has kept a good pace ahead in the needs of his era."

Miss Lucille Matthews of Sparenberg has accepted a position at the Lamesa Sanitarium.

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Nelson of Waxahachie spent the week end here with Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Nix. They plan to move here in the near future to make their home.

Big Spring Third Annual Reunion Is Well Attended

The third annual reunion was well attended at the Big Spring City Park, with 302 registered and 3 counties being represented. This attendance was more than four times the registration of either year prior.

This, no doubt, was a great day and a much appreciated day by everyone as there were relatives, old friends, and strangers all from home. There is nothing to compare with that Franklin county dinner spread in West Texas with a slight sprinkling of sand to give it grit. As a spice to these fine victuals was an excellent barbecue, which was arranged by Mr. T. A. J. Robinson of Big Spring.

At a brief business meeting it was voted to meet again at the Big Spring Park the first Sunday in September of next year. Remember the date and place and help make it bigger and better by being present. Also a program and finance committee was elected, being composed of the following:

W. C. Holcomb, Lamesa; Emley Newton, Big Spring; T. J. A. Robinson, Big Spring; Paul Ataway, Stanton; W. H. Stocks, Ackerly; Lee Ashley, Big Spring.

The number represented from the various counties were as follows: Andrews, 1; Borden, 2; Calahan, 1; Dawson, 68; Ector, 2; Franklin, 4; Garza, 4; Hopkins, 6; Howard, 84; Hutchinson, 3; Jones, 20; Lubbock, 2; Lynn, 4; Martin, 46; Midland, 14; Mitchell, 9; Nolan, 2; Taylor, 3; Tarrant, 1; Tom Green, 1; Upton, 1; Ward, 4; Wood, 1.

Wednesday is Circus Day In Lamesa

Long before dawn, no doubt, the junior citizenry will be on hand for the unloading of the Seal Bros. Circus, who will erect their tented city on the South Side Show Grounds in preparation for afternoon and night performances, and really Seal Bros. Circus is a city within its self. There are three acres of tents, seventy-five of the world's most beautiful horses. A herd of elephants, camels, yaks and zebras. Cages and dens of trained and untamable wild ferocious beasts, in fact the mammoth zoo or menagerie is nothing less than a traveling University of Natural History. Three hundred and four people, the world's greatest and largest motor caravan, and with the rapidity of the erection of this tented city, one wonders how they do every day. Imagine yourself placed in the position of supervising of this task of feeding this little city daily moving from city to city on time. Seal Bros. Circus have their own doctor, electrician, banker, barber, butcher, carpenter, mechanics, baker, cooks, business maker, in fact every artisan of any small city. It has been several years since the Seal Bros. Circus have given a free street parade and the managers have gone to a great added expense this season and is their gorgeous gift to all. A real treat for kids as well as the gray haired folks, so be on the streets at high noon for the street parade, go to a really big show at a reasonable cost and enjoy the day as the circus still has its thrills so lets turn time back and be kids for a day.

Curtis L. Meeks Wins Honors as Rifleman

Curtis L. Meeks, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Meeks of Welch, visited in Lamesa a few days last week on his return from the National Rifle Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio.

Three thousand and five hundred marksmen gathered from August 22 through September 11, for the year's most extensive target shooting event, known as the National Rifle and Pistol Matches, and was directed by the War Department. The tournament attracts crack shots from the government service and police forces as well as many civilians.

Mr. Meeks who is a First Sergeant in the 142 Infantry of National Guard, was a member of the Texas National Guard Rifle team. He won several medals and cash prizes as a rifleman.

He was high point man from Texas over twenty-five entrants from this state.

Mr. Meeks left Saturday for Austin where he is a senior law student at the university.

J. H. Price, George Steele, Palmer Anderson and Cleve Austin went to Lubbock Monday night where they attended a banquet at the Lubbock hotel for the Scottish Rite Masons.

Lets Talk about Clothes

TEXAS STATE COLLEGE
WOMEN (CIA)

Denton, Sept. 22—Simple logic will answer your questions about accessories this fall. Here's the way it works—black rules as background favorite, black is somber and dark, lovely ladies need color to set off their charms. Conclusion: accessories supply color.

Manufacturers worked out the problem too, so now lady needs only to get an idea about her color desires and the stores will furnish all necessary materials. Among the ideas that she might dig up is the currently popular one of matching her gloves and hosiery. These two articles in beige worn with black will instantly mark her as an expert in subtle style.

New shades of green, wine, brown, rust and gray are other accessory colors that will accent black costumes. They are reflected in bags, gloves, hats and shoes, but one must be careful not to have over three articles in the same color.

Gloves are somewhat longer and more flared this season, with patent leather, do-skin, kid and suede being used as trimming for fabrics and glaze kid promising a wide appeal. Suit gloves are still wrist length, but are made more feminine by stitching and intricate patterns. Students at Texas State College for Women again choose the crocheted, square-fingered, gayly colored innovations of last year to be worn on the campus with matching scarfs.

Polished surfaces are the newest note in bags, since a new process has been invented to give that metallic finish. One will see bronze, copper and silver hues this year as well as the old standbys of suede, patent and smooth leathers. As in fall dresses, folding, dimpling and pleating will form many bag trimmings, and shapes will be softer and quartered, and fastenings must be new and original.

HOME COMING AT SPARENBERG OCT. 3

Lets all do our best to make the fair better than last year.
