In memory

Dorothy Rylander, a longtime supporter of Texas Tech, died last week.

One of Rylander's most recent contributions to the Southwest Collection at Tech was the establishment of an endowment to support the collection of Lubbock history.

David Murrah, director of the Southwest Collection, said the endowment will make the history of Lubbock available to all.

Happy Birthday

If you think the "Happy Birthday to You" song is a classic and you have $12 million, you can buy the rights to the song. The ditty is for sale, according to the company that owns it.

Translated into dozens of languages, the composition began as a classroom greeting in 1893. Two kindergarten and Sunday school teachers wrote the song.

Since then it has become one of the three most popular songs in the English language.

Arkansas' Steve Artwater fielded the onside kick with 31 seconds left but fumbled the ball and Houston recovered. After signaling the first down for Houston, the officials reversed the ruling.

Dukakis accuses Bush of resorting to lies

By The Associated Press

Michael Dukakis, an underdog running short of time, accused George Bush Monday of resorting to "outright lies" to avoid important campaign issues.

Bush replied that Democrats are desperate and said Dukakis is soft on crime and defense, "and that's the inescapable truth."

There was no letup in a White House campaign that never has been noted for civility.

"Hitler would have loved these people," Democratic Rep. Richard Gephardt said of the Republicans as he campaigned for Dukakis.

With 15 days until Election Day, Bush and running mate Dan Quayle were doing their best to protect a lead in the national public opinion polls. Dukakis purchased time for the second in a series of five-minute network television commercials as he and ticketmate Lloyd Bentsen looked for a way to catch fire.

Dukakis stuck to his late-campaign populist theme and said Bush would personally receive a $22,000-a-year tax break from his proposal to cut the capital gains tax.

"George Bush wants to give people like George Bush a tax break that's more than the average California worker makes in a year," Dukakis said in Los Angeles. "Look in the mirror and ask yourself: Is George Bush on your side?"

The vice president defended his tax proposal as good for creating new jobs. He said Dukakis is likely to raise taxes if he gets the chance and that the nation could face an "economic disaster if the liberals take over the White House."

Campaigning through New England, Bush made an unusual departure from his prepared speech to reject Dukakis' charges of campaign distortions and deceptions. He said he could document every one of the allegations made in television advertisements criticizing a Massachusetts prison furlough program and his rival's record on defense.

"He is upset, not because it's false, but because he is weak on crime and defense. And that's the inescapable truth," Bush said.

The vice presidential candidates also were busy Monday.

Bentsen renewed his weekend claim that Republicans are guilty of racist advertising, particularly in their attempts to depict Dukakis as soft on crime.

"They are obviously dealing with a black man who, in that instance, had raped a white woman, and that certainly came through in the ad," he said of the case of Willie Horton, the Massachusetts prisoner who escaped while on furlough and brutalized a Maryland couple.

Quayle rebutted that charge as "totally absurd" as he campaigned in Missouri. "I think it shows just how desperate they really are to start fanning the fires of racism," he said.

There was no disagreement about which side was ahead in the race.

A fresh poll in Wisconsin showed the two men in a virtual tie, a big gain for Bush from an earlier survey. Reliably Republican Nebraska was running true to form in another survey that showed Bush in the lead.

Haley receives award for accomplishments

By LAURA MERRILL
The University Daily

Interim Texas Tech President Elizabeth Haley was presented with the Woman of Achievement Award Saturday in recognition of her professional accomplishments.

The Business and Professional Women's (BPW) Club of Lubbock honored Haley for contributions to higher education and research programs that focus on social issues. The purpose of the event was to salute all women in the work force and to observe National Business Women's Week.

The criteria for choosing an award recipient includes professional accomplishments, community involvement and supportive participation in the betterment of society.

In 1985, Haley was selected as one of 10 national leaders by the American Home Economics Association. She has been named to Who's Who of Women, Personalities of the South, Outstanding Young Women of America and Outstanding Educators of America.

The theme for the national observance, "Women Helping Women," aims at publicizing the achievements of professional women on the national, state and local level.

Louise Luchsinger, director of the undergraduate program for business administration, saluted Haley at the breakfast as a leader of Tech, a nationally known scholar and a warm and caring person.

Luchsinger said Haley brings national recognition to Tech through leadership in higher education and as an academic dean who has excelled in the areas of strategic planning, fund development and public relations.

Under Haley's administrative guidance, the College of Home Economics advanced to the third largest program in the nation and the largest in the Southwest, Luchsinger said. She said Haley has obtained more than $1 million in new endowments.

"Bess Haley is a futurist. She looks in the past to make her decisions concerning the future," Luchsinger said. "She is creative and innovative. Leadership involvement has spanned numerous elected and appointed state and national professional associations."

Haley said the award is special and that she was deeply honored to be a recipient. She praised the BPW for the outstanding contributions made to women in Lubbock.

Legislator tours area hospitals

By CINDY PANDOLFO
News Editor

U.S. Rep. Larry Combest, D-Lubbock, accepted a longstanding invitation Monday to tour area hospitals and to take a firsthand look at projects he has supported at the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center.

Rich Adams, Combest's press assistant, said that as the 19th Congressional District representative, Combest has a long history of involvement with the TTUHSC.

"He has been involved with rural health and the health sciences center telenetwork system since day one,"

Adams said.

Dixon Platt, director of HSC relations, agreed with Adams, adding that much of the 19th District is located in rural Texas.

Platt said the telenetwork system consists of three projects: CareNet, InterNet and MedNet.

CareNet, the oldest networking project, links Morton with the health sciences center and Lubbock General Hospital, the medical school to LGH and a barrio clinic with the El Paso regional health facility.

InterNet links Texas communities with the four regional health sciences centers and the Tech campus.

The newest networking project, recently funded with $2.2 million in federal funds, will have linkages between the health sciences center and rural clinics. The advanced program will provide rural communities with EKG strips and X-rays as well as visual exam of patients.

Combest's tour began at Methodist Hospital. He traveled from Lubbock to Methodist Hospital in Levelland via a Carelink helicopter.

Combest's interest in Carelink began when he assisted Methodist Hospital and LGH by implementing changes in FAA guidelines to allow the aircraft to operate not only in Lubbock, but also in other cities, Adams said.

Consul general of Japan visits Tech

By JEFF PARKER
The University Daily

The Honorable Yasuo Hori, the Houston-based consul general of Japan, visited Texas Tech Monday to discuss the shifting socio-economic impact in the world.

Hori was invited to speak by Phi Beta Kappa and the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce.

Hori compared life in Japan to life in the United States, noting current shifts in socio-economic emphasis from Europe and the United States to the Pacific region of the globe.

Since the 1950s and 1960s superpower era, Japan has changed and solved an attention gap problem, he said. Japan now is focused as a world leader in technology, he said, and the Japanese now receive the same attention and loyalty previously shown to the United States during the earlier superpower era.

Since World War II, Japan has been committed to economic power rather than military power, Hori said.

He said another problem for Japan is the "perception gap." Many people in the business world perceive the Japanese as shrewd, machine-like businessmen out to use crafty techniques to their advantage, he said, but he thinks the true intentions of the Japanese are misunderstood.

An important cultural difference is the Japanese understanding of their place as citizens in the international community, Hori said. As a nation, the Japanese visualize the world as a place where everyone must work together, he said.

Many traditional, respected values cause misconceptions of the Japanese, Hori said. He said moving forward with ideals passed down through the years is the Japan of today.

Hori

Texas institutes of higher education have 6 percent increase in enrollment

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Texas college and university enrollments are up by almost 6 percent this fall, far more than expected, state higher education officials said Monday.

Preliminary figures for the fall 1988 semester showed a combined enrollment at all institutions of higher education that totaled 834,444, a jump of 5.8 percent or 45,916 students over 1987, the Higher Education Coordinating Board reported.

Enrollment at public junior and senior colleges and universities in Texas totaled 731,783, a 6.5 percent increase.

"This level of growth is far above what was expected. If we add to this year's growth the increase for last fall, our public colleges and universities have grown by almost 70,000 students in two years," said Kenneth Ashworth, state higher education commissioner.

Ashworth said growth has come since the Legislature last was in session, and he said the expanding student body will have to be recognized in the money appropriated for colleges and universities when lawmakers convene again in 1989.

Thirty-three public senior universities reported combined increases of 19,533 students, while two reported a combined loss of 72 students, the coordinating board reported. Total enrollment at the 35 schools was 385,343, up 5.3 percent from last year.

Texas A&M University at Galveston reported the largest percentage gain, 34.9 percent, while

Freshman arrested for stealing signs

By BETH GEORGE
The University Daily

A Texas Tech freshman was arrested early Sunday morning for the theft of several signs, the Lubbock Police Department reported.

The 19-year-old arts and sciences major was stopped by police at 2:16 a.m. in the 1600 block of 48th Street after police said they observed the freshman prying a metal sign off the wall of the Carwasher car wash on Avenue P, police said.

The man was accompanied by four other suspects when the car was stopped, police said. The sign and a hammer were found on the back floorboard of the car, police reports said.

A second sign also was found in the back seat of the car, police said.

Another man, identified as the owner of the car, gave police verbal consent to search the trunk of the car, police said. Reports indicated officers found additional stolen property, including the "Spook the Longhorns" sign from the corner of 50th Street and University Avenue.

Police reported that the suspect told officers he was responsible for stealing the "Spook the Longhorns" sign. When questioned about a third sign reading "Quik Print," however, he refused to answer any more questions without an attorney present.

The suspect was taken to the Lubbock County Jail, where he was booked and later released.

Furlogh plan fracas; GOP distortions near 'criminal' proportions

Anne Potts
Guest
Columnist

The Republicans want to make it your worst nightmare. Rapists walking the streets, first-degree murderers frequenting your hometown's places of businesses, inmates taking weekend vacations that never end.

Getting the picture? The only picture that emerges here is a picture distorted by the Bush-Quayle campaign. Distorted to the point of being ludicrous. Dukakis's record on crime must be set straight.

The Republicans aren't lying when they say that Massachusetts has a furlough program. The program was adopted in 1972 under a Republican governor. Gov. Frank Sargent adopted the program, as did 22 other Republican administrations nationally.

But the crime issue does not end there as the Republicans would have us believe. There is much more to this nation's crime problem than simply the prison furlough program.

Recent campaign material illustrates Gov. Michael Dukakis's strengths as an effective crime fighter. In his home state, he has attacked the problem of drugs from the demand side by addressing the root of the problem: education.

He created the Governor's Alliance Against Drugs in 1984 to act as a statewide, school-based campaign designed to educate and prevent drug abuse among young people. Dukakis's program was so well respected as a successful drug prevention strategy that the program was used by Congress as a model for drafting the Drug Free School Act of 1986.

The Dukakis administration also enacted tough legislation to combat the supply side of the drug problem. In 1983, Dukakis formed the Statewide Drug Task Force, implementing an all-out assault on drug dealers that resulted in the arrest and sentencing of five times as many drug offenders than in the previous year.

Dukakis's tough stand has earned him the support of the Massachusetts Chiefs of Police, the Massachusetts District Attorneys' Association and the Police Association of Massachusetts.

Despite the focus on combatting crime, Dukakis and his administration fought for one of the nation's first victims' bill of rights. The governor implemented victim compensation programs, and he was recognized for his support by the National Organization for Victims.

Mike Dukakis was not sympathetic toward violent criminals, however. He created the Violent Fugitive Arrest Squad in 1985 to apprehend serious offenders. The squad has tracked down and arrested at least 600 felons in the past three years.

Maybe that is why Massachusetts prisons are overcrowded. For example, a Concord, Mass., medium security prison facility built to house 283 prisoners housed 817 men. Other facilities faced similar overcrowding problems. Massachusetts was forced to look to alternate programs, such as the controversial furlough program, in order to ease the burden.

More important than the facts stated here, however, is the overall picture. Nationwide, crime increased 1.8 percent in the period between 1982 and 1986. Under the capable leadership of the Dukakis administration, crime in Massachusetts declined 13.4 percent during that same period.

Despite the political rhetoric, especially during an election year, facts are facts. The Dukakis record on crime remains one of the strongest in the nation. The realities of crime may be a nightmare, but under the leadership of Michael Dukakis, Americans can sleep safe and sound.

Bush to face politically tangled thicket if successful in '88 race

James Reston
Columnist

WASHINGTON — The outlook in the last month of the election is that the Republicans will retain the presidency, the Democrats will control both houses of Congress and the country will face four more years of divided government.

Nothing original in that, but the personalities will be different, the relations between the president and the Democratic leaders will be different and the problems of getting them together on the neglected economic and embittered social issues will be much more complicated.

Speaker Jim Wright of Texas still will preside over the House, but not as the same Jim Wright. In the past year, the Republicans have savaged him with charges of meddling in foreign policy and using his authority for personal financial gain. The charges have not amused the speaker, whose teeth show through that deceptive grin.

The Democratic leader of the Senate, Robert Byrd of West Virginia, will probably be giving over that powerful job to Daniel Inouye of Hawaii or George Mitchell of Maine, two of the administration's most vocal critics in the Iran-Contra hearings. Bob Dole of Kansas will be the Republican leader in the Senate, having been passed over by George Bush for the vice presidency. Dole has a temper and a long memory.

Meanwhile, assuming Bush wins, Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, the Democratic vice presidential nominee, will be chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, which deals with most of the major bills on Bush's agenda. Bentsen is not a hater, but he hated the Republican tactics in this campaign, and if you think these personality questions are not important, you don't know Washington.

They are particularly significant in the case of George Bush. Ronald Reagan was able to survive a divided government by the force of his personality and popularity, but those are not George Bush's most prominent qualifications.

There is something about George that drives the Democratic leaders up the Washington monument. At first they thought he was too fancy, then that he was too nasty. They have never regarded elections as an exercise in moral philosophy, but when the vice president appears on television lecturing on "values," they send the children to bed.

They don't mind his policies so much, for they're sure they can outvote him, but when he glorifies the Constitution while denouncing the ACLU and attacks Governor Dukakis's patriotism while saying he's doing no such thing, not only the Democrats but many others around here think he goes a bit beyond the loose bounds of political decency.

Nobody blamed him for wanting to hog the cameras when the astronauts came back from outer space, but when he said, as he did, that he hadn't invited Dukakis because that would "politicize" the event, not everybody laughed.

What bothers the Democrats, who invented hypocrisy under Roosevelt and perfected it under Truman and Johnson, is that the vice president is so clumsy at it.

They used to put him in a class with Lev Saltonstall, John Sherman Cooper, Mac Mathias and other noblesse oblige Republicans, but his calculated misrepresentations of Dukakis have not sustained this reputation.

He sees no contradiction in demanding that the government stop interfering with private life and then calling for a constitutional amendment against a woman's right to have an abortion.

He promises to appoint the best people available for high office and then picks Dan Quayle of Indiana as the person most qualified for the vice presidency.

Apparently these examples of judgment and character don't bother the voters, or maybe they're not thinking about the thunder at the end of this long and disappointing campaign, but there still are a couple of weeks to go and it's possible, but not likely, that they'll begin to reflect on the future when Bush, if he wins, undoubtedly will have the power to nominate three or four new judges to the Supreme Court.

Reply to Republicans

To the editor:

As I have recently been the center of Republican attack. I would like to have the opportunity to voice a rebuttal.

It is so typically Republican that most of the replies have contained rude, disparaging remarks to me rather than on the issues. George Bush seems to have perfected this tactic of negative campaigning himself. His dreamt-up labels of Dukakis have been blown out of proportion, and most people can't even see the issues beyond Bush's waving flags and balloons.

A key issue of this campaign has been that of Dukakis's "outrageous furlough program" when it was actually signed into law by a Republican, not Dukakis. Furthermore, the "knowledgeable Republican writers" have failed to mention that after Dukakis became governor, he changed the original furlough program so that it is no longer true that convicts are given weekend passes without being on parole. It is also a fact that Dukakis has lowered the crime rate in Massachusetts and Massachusetts has the lowest crime rate of any industrial state in the nation. I wonder how confident (Gov. Bill) Clements would be in attempting to make that claim for Texas, seeing that his administration has bumbled on its own furlough program, and he is still recovering from the "shock." (According to the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal.)

The figures show that Michael Dukakis has fought crime with tough enforcement, since five times as many drug offenders were sent to prison in 1987 as in 1983 in Massachusetts. He has helped Massachusetts teen-agers cut illegal drug use by twice the national average, and cocaine and crack usage have dropped by five times the national average. What can Bush say about his accomplishments against drug use, when the Republicans have cut funding and personnel for the Customs Service and the Coast Guard?

Bush has ignorantly stood by and watched our nation's inflow of drugs reach record highs while being best buddies to Noriega at the same time.

About the minimum wage bill, experts agree that by raising the minimum wage, more money would be put into the economy as there would be increased spending by the working class. This would increase the standard of living for the working class while more than offsetting any loss of jobs. Republicans fail to see this avenue since they are only concerned with maximizing profits of big businesses at the worker's expense.

It is true that Michael Dukakis inherited a $500 million Republican deficit in Massachusetts and turned it into a surplus. He cut taxes five times in five years, balanced 10 budgets, cut Massachusetts' unemployment from 12 percent to 3 percent by creating 400,000 new jobs and built a public-private partnership that has created 54,000 new businesses since 1983. What has Bush done to curb the monstrous deficit, which has increased more under this Republican administration than all other administrations combined?

Bush has never balanced a budget; can he step out from behind a flag long enough to figure out how?

Michael Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen know what it takes to build a strong economy without writing $200 billion of hot checks to create an illusion of national prosperity. Clearly, Michael Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen are the obvious choice on Nov. 8.

Liberals serve as targets

To the editor:

During this election year, the word liberal has become a near four-letter word. Just what is the difference between a conservative person and a liberal person?

According to the dictionary, conservatism is defined as the preservation of existing views, conditions or institutions. Liberalism is the political philosophy based on the belief in progress, the essential goodness of man and the autonomy of the individual and standing for the protection of political and civil liberties. Why is it so wrong to be liberal.

It would be nice if conservative Americans would stop worrying about Boston Harbor and open their eyes to the real issues that face our country!

Bush airs bilingual ads; Mattox says Republicans stealing signs

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Vice President George Bush's campaign launched a new advertising drive aimed at Hispanic voters Monday with bilingual ads featuring his daughter-in-law, Columba, and three Bush grandchildren.

Democratic Attorney General Jim Mattox, meanwhile, accused Republicans of stealing Democratic campaign signs from yards across the state.

In the new Bush ad, Columba Bush, who was born in Mexico and is the wife of Bush's son Jeb, appears with the couple's three children and Bush.

"For Hispanics like me, this presidential election will be the most important in our history," Mrs. Bush begins.

The vice president winds up the commercial saying, "As president, I'll have a lot of reasons to help Hispanics everywhere, because I'll not only be answering to my grandchildren, I'll be answering to history."

Bush campaign officials said the new advertisement, which is being aired in both Spanish and English, is designed to take advantage of what they called Spanish-speaking Michael Dukakis' failure to appeal to the substantial Hispanic vote in Texas.

"We think, from our internal surveys, that there is a tremendous opportunity in the (Rio Grande) Valley and within the Hispanic community overall in the state," said Reggie Bashur, deputy campaign manager.

"Dukakis has not gotten his message through in Texas, and clearly he has not gotten a message through to Hispanics."

Mark Sanders, a Bush campaign spokesman, said the commercial began airing Monday on stations in Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, the Rio Grande Valley and El Paso. They will run until the Nov. 8 election, he said. He declined to say how much money is being spent on them.

Mattox, standing on the front lawn of an Austin home where a Dukakis-Lloyd Bentsen sign was stolen during the weekend, blamed Republicans for taking hundreds of signs around the state.

"The Republicans have been systematically tearing down our signs," Mattox said after pounding into the yard a new sign that read: "You can take down my sign but you can't take my vote."

Mattox said he believes organized efforts are being conducted in a number of cities to steal the Democratic campaign signs.

"The obvious thing is that they're being taken down by people that are supportive of the Republican Party," he said. "Kids just come along and tear them down, throw them in the yard and tear them up. But they've been very astute about taking them so we can't put them back up."

Asked how he was certain Republicans were taking the signs, Mattox replied: "You know it's the Republicans because if you go through the neighborhoods, you see the Republican signs are still standing, sometimes right next door."

Stealing signs is a misdemeanor, Mattox said, unless enough are taken to make their value more than $750. That could be a felony, he said.

★ The Final Days ★

Mattox predicted that a judge will punish anyone caught. "It's a form of free speech."

Texas marijuana seizures double, total $2.2 million

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Lawmen said they have seized 2.2 million marijuana plants across the state this year — more than double the number confiscated a year ago.

"We've got marijuana all over the state," said Robert Murphy, a special agent at the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) who coordinates the DEA's Domestic Marijuana Eradication Program.

The plants, seized with lawmen using helicopters and ground surveillance during an organized operation between Jan. 1 and Aug. 23, have a street value of $11.2 million, said David Wells, spokesman for the Texas Department of Public Safety.

After receiving calls in July from curious residents, investigators converged on Gray County in the Panhandle and discovered more than 2 million marijuana plants growing wild on the plains, said Sgt. Hershel Irwin of the DPS narcotics division.

A subsequent search in adjacent Wheeler County uncovered another 75,000 plants growing in a sparsely populated area, Irwin added.

Lawmen focused their anti-harvesting effort last year on East Texas, where growers had been plying their trade in relative comfort in wooded, rural areas and portions of national forests.

This year, officers concentrated on northern and coastal Texas counties to determine how widespread the state's marijuana industry has become, Murphy said.

As lawmen have focused efforts on stemming the flow of marijuana and other drugs into the state, more Texans have turned to growing their own varieties of the illicit weed, authorities said.

"Domestic growth was really launched in the mid-'80s," said Capt. Rick Smith, who heads the Harris County Sheriff's Department's narcotics division. "As exports went down, local growing increased."

U.S. Customs employees say instincts better than computers

By The Associated Press

EL PASO — Members of a union representing U.S. Customs employees say agents who inspect vehicles at international bridges are hampered by having to use computers instead of their instincts in the battle against drug smugglers.

But the Customs service, pointing out that drug seizures are increasing, counters that computers are making it easier to catch drug smugglers by allowing inspectors to handle more work.

The El Paso chapter of the National Treasury Employees Union, which represents about 350 Customs employees, is asking the federal agency to allow inspectors to leave their computer terminals and rely more on experience and instincts while checking cargo.

"Automation is great, but not when it is done wrong, and when it hurts the inspectors," said Charles Giunta, president of the union local. "More drugs are coming across now because inspectors are having to sit behind a computer and do their work."

Customs spokesman Ed Kittredge in Washington disputed Giunta's assertion, saying: "I don't know where the union gets the information that more drugs are coming in because our drug seizures have gone up."

Statistics do show that drug seizures by Customs have gone up at the border over the past five years. But drug seizures also have increased at highway checkpoints roughly 90 miles inside the border, most notably at Falfurrias in the Rio Grande Valley and at Sierra Blanca in West Texas. Those drug shipments are slipping past the first line of defense.

Giunta said Customs inspectors are being rushed into using computers with insufficient training. Kittredge denied that, adding that inspectors were never told to quit using their instincts.

Giunta said inspectors are told not to override their computers, "but some do when they suspect something, and that's when we get the big bust."

Tech School of Nursing offers master's program

By MICHELLE STRICKER
The University Daily

More career options, improved pay rates and status will draw many students into nursing programs in the future, a nursing administrator says.

Advances in education and the workplace have enhanced nursing as a profession, said Kathryn Quilliam, manager of student-related services in the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center School of Nursing, making students more interested in a health-related career.

Quilliam said a shortage is plaguing all areas of the nursing profession and that several factors contribute to the shortage.

Nursing traditionally is an occupation consisting primarily of women, she said, but many professions are available to women today that were not available in the past.

"Women now have career options they didn't have several years ago," Quilliam said.

Hospital services covered by federal Medicare and Medicaid plans also are being limited. Consequently, patients are sicker while in the hospital and leave the hospital sicker, she said. More nurses are needed to provide care for these people.

Fortunately, Quilliam said, the nursing program at TTUHSC is not experiencing a shortage of applicants.

"We are just the opposite," she said. "We are unable to admit everyone that applies."

She said she believes the TTUHSC nursing program has advantages over programs offered elsewhere.

Nursing students are actively recruited into the program, she said. Career fairs also are attended to inform interested individuals on nursing.

Recruiters visit area high schools and hospitals to recruit nursing students. They also send letters to college-age people, licensed vocational nursing graduates and associate degree and registered nursing programs.

Quilliam said most nursing programs offer a baccalaureate degree program in which the first two years consist of basic academic courses while the next two years include nursing courses. In the TTUHSC nursing program, beginning courses include clinical experiences in the first year.

Because nursing is practiced immediately, the student will know for sure whether nursing is the correct career choice instead of waiting two years before finding out, Quilliam said.

An important feature of the TTUHSC nursing program that attracts many students is the recent development of the master's program.

The 36-credit hour program was implemented by Teddy Langford, dean of the TTUHSC nursing school, at the beginning of this semester.

The first semester will be devoted to the completion of non-nursing graduate courses as well as preparing for nursing courses required in the spring semester.

Students may pursue several tracks offered in the program. The clinical track includes geriatrics, community health and primary care. The functional track, which requires six additional credit hours, includes administration and practitioner.

Quilliam said nurses with a master's degree are better prepared to take leadership roles and research responsibilities.

Benefactor of Southwest Collection dies

By GUY LAWRENCE
The University Daily

Dorothy Rylander's longtime association and support of Texas Tech University and the Southwest Collection ended last week.

Rylander died at 2:13 a.m. Oct. 18 at Methodist Hospital following a brief illness.

One of Rylander's most recent contributions to the Southwest Collection and Lubbock was the establishment of an endowment to support the collection of Lubbock's history.

David Murrah, director of the Southwest Collection, said Rylander was a tireless worker and one of the Southwest Collection's most articulate and enthusiastic spokespersons.

Rylander earned a master's degree from Tech in 1931. Her master's thesis was on the Spur Ranch papers that Tech had just acquired, he said.

"Dorothy was the first person to use records which the Southwest Collection now holds," Murrah said. "She loved history and was an ardent genealogist."

In August, Rylander contributed funds for a permanent endowment to support the collection and preservation of Lubbock history, Murrah said.

Murrah said the endowment will make the history of Lubbock available to all for years to come.

Rylander graduated in 1918 from Lubbock High School before she went on to Tech to study history.

She received her bachelor's degree in history from Tech in 1930 and a master's degree in 1931.

Rylander was hired by engineering dean O.V. Adams to be the secretary to the engineering faculty as well as the librarian in 1932.

John Bradford, a professor of chemical engineering, said he remembers Rylander's kindness and courtesy while he was an undergraduate in Tech's College of Engineering.

"When I finished my undergraduate degree resional District, asked Rylander to serve as an assistant to the congressman, which she did for seven years.

Rylander returned to Lubbock in 1953 and began working for the West Texas Museum as an administrative assistant to Director William Holden.

Although Rylander retired from her post at the museum in 1971, she continued to participate in the West Texas Museum Association and the Ranching Heritage Association.

"She was the very first person to make use of the old Spur Ranch records Texas Tech acquired in 1929 — the first records ever acquired for the Southwest Collection," Murrah said.

Rylander was designated as "The First Lady of the Southwest Collection," by the members of the group in 1980.

Murrah presided over Rylander's memorial services on Thursday. Contributions in Rylander's name can be made to the Southwest Collection.

United Way encourages students to be volunteers

By DAWNA COWAN
The University Daily

Students who volunteer for organizations sponsored by the United Way offer practical human relations skills to potential employers, said Denise Jackson, co-chairman of the Texas Tech United Way campus campaign.

"It would help students put into practice much of what they learn in their classes," Jackson said. "They would bring not just technical skills to the organization, but also human relations skills."

Jackson said individuals who demonstrate the ability to juggle numerous activities in life — school, work and volunteering — are well-balanced individuals.

Volunteers learn to apply communication skills learned in speech, psychology and human relations classes. Those skills, Jackson said, are vital to landing a job in the future.

"Communication is the number one thing recruiters look for," she said.

The United Way offers many services and opportunities for students to get involved in the community, she said.

Jackson said students often live in an isolated world and fail to realize how the Lubbock community supports Texas Tech.

"Texas Tech wouldn't be the institution it is without the people of Lubbock," she said.

Giving time or money to the United Way are ways Tech students can return community support, Jackson said.

The United Way is a volunteer, not-for-profit organization that strives to meet local needs, she said.

"The organization acts as an hourglass. On one end is the agencies and people who use the services of the United Way," she said. "On the other end are the people of Lubbock."

The purpose of the United Way is to funnel resources provided by the community to respective organizations, she said.

'Happy Birthday to You' not selling for a song

By The Associated Press

NEWARK, N.J. — Blowing out the candles and making a wish may get you a rendition of "Happy Birthday to You," but you can't buy it for a song. The ditty is for sale for at least $12 million, says the company that owns it.

Cooed by Marilyn Monroe to President John F. Kennedy, sung recently by 90,000 fans to Michael Jackson, and a staple of children's birthday parties for almost a century, the song that seems ageless while reminding us we aren't on the block with the other musical holdings of Birchtree Ltd. of Princeton.

"The first six notes of 'Happy Birthday' are as recognizable as the first four notes in Beethoven's 'Fifth Symphony,'" said Gary Hanson of the Cleveland Orchestra. "Of course, 'Happy Birthday' is played a lot more than Beethoven."

David Sengstack, chairman of Birchtree, said he can only guess what made the song so popular.

"I think it was the movies that did it," he told The New York Times.

Translated into dozens of languages, the composition began as a classroom greeting in 1893 with Louisville, Ky., teachers Patty Smith Lang Syne" and "For He's a Jolly Hill and her sister, Mildred Hill. The two kindergarten and Sunday school teachers wrote the song, with the lyrics "Good morning to you," as part of a book "Song Stories for the Sunday School."

Since then, it has become one of the three most popular songs in the English language along with "Auld Lang Syne" and "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," according to the Guinness Book of World Records.

Birchtree, which owns the copyright to about 50,000 titles, says royalties will still be coming in until the year 2010, when the copyright expires. It brings it about $1 million a year, according to the Times.

Jacoby sees no wrong in delay

SWC commissioner backs refs

By The Associated Press

DALLAS — Southwest Conference commissioner Fred Jacoby said Monday that a slow motion, frame-by-frame film showed that officials made the correct call on a controversial onside kick at the end of Arkansas' 26-21 victory over Houston.

"The film backs 'em up," Jacoby said. "Their interpretation that a knee touched was proper."

Arkansas' Steve Atwater fielded the onside kick with 31 seconds left but fumbled the ball and Houston recovered. After signaling a first down for Houston, the officials reversed the ruling and gave the ball to Arkansas.

Houston coach Jack Pardee charged that Arkansas coach Ken Hatfield, who was standing near the play, intimidated the officials.

It took the officials about five minutes to make their final ruling, which included picking up an inadvertent flag. Arkansas had been flagged for illegally touching the ball.

However, Atwater's action was perfectly legal.

"The officials were correct in picking up the flag for illegal touching," Jacoby said. "It took time to discuss this. Then they went over what each official saw on the fumble."

"I'd rather they take their time and get it right. That doesn't bother me at all."

Dykes keeps light demeanor in wake of McWilliams' return to Lubbock

By CURTIS MATTHEWS

The University Daily

Billy Joe Tolliver at safety?

No, it's not a reality, but it is something Tech coach Spike Dykes joked about in Monday's news conference.

The reason for Dykes' guffaw-gathering comment was his answer for why the Raiders conducted closed practices last week.

"It's not really that big a deal," Dykes said. "We've looked at a few things."

"You know Rice closed up practice (prior to the Owls' Oct. 1 game with Texas), and they moved (Donald) Hollas from quarterback to safety," Dykes said. "Billy Joe doesn't look too good at safety."

Dykes' quip was met with laughter from the assorted media representatives. Dykes probably was interested in keeping the atmosphere light, taking away the tension that generates in Lubbock when Longhorn football or the Texas coach, David McWilliams, are mentioned.

So what did Dykes say after the laughter died down?

"We'll open it (practice) back up and put him (Tolliver) at fullback and get on down the road."

That second comment was met with more laughter.

Dykes did say that Saturday's game with Texas is important, pointing out that both teams have 500 records in Southwest Conference play. Tech is 2-2 in the SWC and Texas is 1-1.

One thing Dykes said his team will need to be wary of is the famed tradition of Texas Longhorn football.

"You can't concede anything because of tradition," he said. "But still, a tradition, if you're not careful, is worth a lot.

Dykes noted that fans and media may make a big deal out of former head coach McWilliams returning for his first game in Jones Stadium in Longhorn colors since he was Tech's coach in 1986.

"There are some games that are a little more important than other ones," Dykes said, alluding that this might be one of the important ones. "But it's not really that big a deal."

Dykes said the more than 45,000 fans in Jones Stadium for the Raiders' 36-6 victory over Baylor made a difference in the game's outcome.

Dykes said he hopes Saturday's game will be the same.

"Our students are excited about the ballgame," he said. "I hope it's a big, loud crowd and we give them a dose of their own medicine."

Wyoming continues climb in making Top 10, extending streak to 17 games

By The Associated Press

CHEYENNE, Wyo. — Wyoming's meteoric rise in The Associated Press college football poll is a tribute to the turnaround that has the Cowboys riding the nation's longest regular-season winning streak.

A 500 team two years ago, Wyoming cracked the Top Ten Monday for the first time in 21 years following Saturday's 61-18 rout of Utah. UCLA, Notre Dame and Southern California held onto the top three spots.

"We're certainly happy about it," Wyoming coach Paul Roach said. "It's good for our state, our program, the university. And it's good for the WAC (Western Athletic Conference) to receive some recognition."

"However, for our players and our coaches, it's a peripheral thing. We still focus in on our No. 1 goal, and that's to defend our (WAC) championship."

Wyoming is 8-0 overall, 5-0 in conference play and has won its last 17 regular season games.

The No. 10 ranking marked Wyoming's fifth consecutive week in the poll and was the highest since the Cowboys were No. 6 in the final 1967 listings with a 10-0 record.

"We don't use it as incentive,"

Roach said of the rankings. "I'm sure that pleases our players to receive that recognition. But we're not defending a ranking. We're defending a championship, and therein lies the difference."

Roach couldn't single out anything that has transformed the Cowboys from a 6-6 team in 1986 to an undefeated powerhouse other than to point to his players' and coaches' dedication and ambition.

"We just happen to have enough of the right things and the right chemistry, at least up to this point," he said. "All those things (rankings, winning streaks) at some point in time come to an end. Cinderella takes her wand and goes home."

UCLA, which became No. 1 last week after Miami lost to Notre Dame, defeated Arizona 24-3 Saturday and received 35 of 60 first-place votes and 1,171 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Notre Dame, a 41-13 winner over Air Force, was second for the second week in a row with 19 first-place votes and 1,144 points. UCLA and Notre Dame are 7-0-0.

Southern Cal, 6-0-0, was idle last weekend. The Trojans received five first-place votes.

CBS to televise UTEP-Cowboys nationally Nov. 5

NEW YORK (AP) — Texas-El Paso's football team will appear on network television for the first time ever Nov. 5 when CBS-TV shows the Miners' Western Athletic Conference game at Wyoming.

UTEP's 7-4 record in 1987 was its first winning season since 1970 and the Miners were 7-1 this year. From 1975-85, they won only 15 games while losing 112.

Wyoming is 8-0 and ranked No. 10 in this week's Associated Press poll, the Cowboys' highest ranking in 21 years.

UTEP-Wyoming will be part of a split national doubleheader from 1:30-5 p.m. The other game, to be announced Sunday, will be either LSU-Alabama, Georgia-Florida or Florida State-South Carolina.

This Saturday, CBS will televise Penn State-West Virginia at 1:30 p.m.

Houston AD expresses concern

Houston athletic director Rudy Davalos called Monday to talk to Jacoby.

"He just wanted to express his concern over the amount of time it took for a decision to be made," Jacoby said. "They really can't file a protest anyway over an official's judgment call."

He said "it was a legitimate concern on the part of the University of Houston. But this was an unusual situation with the inadvertent flag delaying things."

Davalos had said "what stirred the emotion was the indecision on the call. It was just very unfortunate. You can't question a judgment call."

Pardee said, "If we had NFL instant replay from what I saw, it would not have been enough to overrule. It was too close to call."

Tech readying for hoop season

By JOEL WEST
The University Daily

The Texas Tech basketball team is less than two weeks into its training schedule but already is much further ahead of last year's team.

But coach Gerald Myers is quick not to jump the gun on anything, especially considering that the Red Raiders jump into the fire early against UCLA on Nov. 26 at Pauley Pavilion.

"We have a long way to go, and I don't want to sound satisfied, but I am pleased with the progress we've made in 10 days," Myers said Monday following practice in the Athletic Training Center.

"Overall, we're about six weeks ahead of last year's team," he said.

"We're about where we wanted to be. They've made more progress than I thought they would in a week," said Myers, who is entering his 18th year as head coach of the Raiders.

Tech returns all but one starter, forward Greg Crowe, from last year's 9-19 team. The record was the worst a Myers-guided team had posted in his 17 years at the Tech helm.

However, 10 of the losses were decided by five points or fewer.

But the loss of only one starter meant as many as eight of last year's freshmen and sophomores saw considerable playing time last season.

Myers said the absence of new players is a reason why the Raiders' training has progressed smoothly.

"I think our team is well ahead of our team last year at this time, because we have everybody back. We were able to start out at a higher level this year than a year ago because we had so many new ones last year," Myers said. "They all know what we're doing."

Back for the Raiders are senior guards Sean Gay, who led Tech with his 15 points per game in '87-88, and Todd Duncan, who was second on the team with 11 points and led the SWC in three-point goals.

Junior guard Jerry Mason (10.4 points), junior swingman Scott Whillock and sophomore walk-on Jonny Grusing round out the backcourt.

Up front, forwards Steve Miles, who played in 19 games as a redshirt freshman, and James Johnson, a sophomore that saw action in 25 contests will be counted on heavily.

Centers Wes Lowe (10 points and 5.2 rebounds) and Maurice Artis, a 7-0 sophomore, will help maintain the inside game. Add to them J.D. Sanders, the only current Raider who did not suit up last year. The 6-9 transfer from Nebraska Western Junior College sat out last year due to NCAA junior college graduation rules.

Tech has no roster additions because it lost all three recruits from last spring due NCAA entrance requirements.

Myers said the Raiders have been mainly concentrating on offense, particularly beating zone and press defenses.

"I think we should be a better offensive team. I think we should be better in every phase — defensively, rebounding, ballhandling — because all of these boys are a year older," he said.

Sharp finds point guard during first week of practice; Lynch faces basket

By JOEL BROWN
The University Daily

As the Texas Tech women's basketball team gets the ball rolling in the early going of fall drills, coach Marsha Sharp has nothing but good things to say about her players.

"We've been real pleased. We feel like we're seeing some real positive things," Sharp said.

Sharp said the Raiders are further along at this time than last year's 17-13 team that finished third in the Southwest Conference and second in the postseason conference tournament. Tech won 10 of its last 14 games.

A big question mark for Tech this year already has been answered as the team enters two-a-day practices this week. Sharp started fall practice in need of a leader at the point guard position, and junior Alexis Ware has wasted no time in filling that position.

Sharp said juniors Stacey Siebert and Reena Lynch also have played well in the beginning weeks and have secured starting positions at post and power forward.

That leaves the other post and guard starting positions yet to be decided, Sharp said. The freshman players' advancement has been a pleasant surprise for her.

"We've been really pleased with what our young players have done so far," Sharp said. "I think they are proving to us that they are earning some playing time throughout the year."

The Raiders will get their first competition on Nov. 18 when they host the Hungarian national team in an exhibition game. The fall season will begin Nov. 26 in the Western Kentucky Tournament, which will feature host Western Kentucky, LSU and Clemson. All three teams were participants in the 40-team NCAA tournament last year.

Then after a slew of non-conference contests throughout December, Tech will make its SWC debut Jan. 3 at the University of Arkansas.

Four starters return for the Raiders this season. Lynch, who was a second-team All-SWC selection last year, averaged 15.6 points and 8.2 rebounds per outing.

The 5-11 Lynch will be playing outside more for the Raiders offensively this year, and Sharp said she is adjusting to making decisions "facing the basket" instead of having her back to the goal as in the past.

In just two years, Lynch ranks 11th on the Tech all-time scoring list with 814 points.

Siebert, senior Tammy Spangler Davis and sophomore Tammy Walker make up the other returning starters.
