MCVEIGH GETS DEATH

Victims' relatives cry, cheer, hold hands upon hearing verdict

■ Jury deliberated more than 11 hours over two days before unanimously deciding punishment.

Associated Press

DENVER — Timothy McVeigh was condemned to death Friday for the Oklahoma City bombing, accepting the ultimate punishment without so much as a blink. "It's OK," he mouthed to his parents.

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch's usually firm voice wavered slightly as he read the jury's unanimous decision two years and 55 days after the blast that killed 168 people — the deadliest terrorist attack on U.S. soil. Bombing survivors and victims' relatives gasped, cried onto each other's shoulders and held hands.

The same jury that convicted McVeigh of murder and conspiracy on June 2 deliberated for more than 11 hours over two days before deciding the 29-year-old decorated Gulf War veteran should die by injection rather than spend the rest of his life in prison.

McVeigh's father's shoulders slumped, his sister cried and his mother sat silently, saving her tears until after the court session.

McVeigh sat in the same position as when he was convicted: narrowed eyes on the judge, hands clasped and pressed against his cheek, no movement whatsoever in his expressionless face.

When the judge asked the jurors if they were sure of their verdict, four of them stared straight at McVeigh as they answered "Yes." McVeigh leaned back in his chair with his hand up to his mouth and watched.

As he was led out of the courtroom, he made a small, two-fingered wave to his parents, mouthed "It's OK" and then made the same wave to the jury that condemned him, nodding his head up and down. The jurors stared back blankly.

More than half of Midlanders polled agree with verdict

By Rick Lopez
Staff Writer

Marcia Moreno agrees with jury's verdict.

The jury's decision to return a death sentence for Timothy McVeigh was undoubtedly justified, eight of 14 Midlanders said when responding to an unscientific poll conducted after the suspect's fate was announced Friday afternoon.

"I think it was a good sentence because of the fact that he killed so many kids and made a whole lot of people suffer," Marcia Moreno, 24, said. "That was the only way to deal with it."

Ms. Moreno, like the majority of the poll participants, said she is a supporter of the death penalty — especially if the crime one is accused of involves murder.

Linda Jackson disagrees with punishment.

"I'm not one to judge someone else, but I think what he did was so sickening. He has no heart," she said.

Roberta Garcia feels prison would be better.

Some have argued that taking the life of McVeigh would cause his family the same anguish the bombing victims' survivors are going through.

However, this is a consequence the suspect should have considered before taking the lives of others, Christina Moore, 18, said.

Main lanes over Garfield, A Street open for those headed to, from downtown on loop

By Alice Ashmore
Staff Writer

Commuters headed to and from downtown on Loop 250 have something to smile about. The main lanes over Garfield and A streets were opened to drivers Friday afternoon.

"We feel like it will continue to take traffic off of the frontage roads," said Mike Chetty, TxDOT area engineer in charge of the Loop 250 project.

Midland Mayor Bobby Burns had previously characterized the intersection at Loop 250 and Garfield Street as a "mad mingling of traffic."

Burns is pleased with the opening of the main lanes. "I think traffic will flow smoothly and more safely."

He added that the new additions should "alleviate 90 percent of the problems."

The new lanes also will make commuting easier for residents of the Polo Park, a subdivision just north of Loop 250.

"Access from A Street has always been a problem for these people," Chetty said.

The next phase of Loop 250 construction includes the completion of the overpasses at Big Spring Street and at Lamesa Road.

"It goes up for bid in August" and construction is slated to begin in November and should be completed 18 months from that time, Chetty said.

Flag Day

Country to fly Stars and Stripes, recite Pledge in honor of flag's 220th birthday

By Dana Bartholomew
Staff Writer

Today's the day to unfurl Old Glory, utter the Pledge and in a surge of patriotism, hit "o'er the land of the free" on key.

But for compatriots like LaFonda White, forget mere Flag Day observances.

Ms. White flies her Stars and Stripes year round.

"I adore my flag," said the 38-year-old manicurist, whose flag waves gallantly, if fadedly, off her front porch. "(I'm) very patriotic; I mean, I cry when the Fourth of July fireworks go off."

Ms. White, a dark brunette with tattoos and a penchant for rock 'n' roll, has displayed her flag ever since she discovered its existence in a storage closet of her rented home.

"And it was broke, and I fixed it and made it fly," she said excitedly. "I take great pains to see it's flying big, 'cause even if it's there all year round, I don't want to let anyone forget what it symbolizes."

Today, the U.S. flag celebrates its 220th birthday.

On June 14, 1777, the Continental Congress decreed "that the flag of the thirteen United States be thirteen alternating red and white stripes; that the union be thirteen stars on a blue field, representing a new constellation."

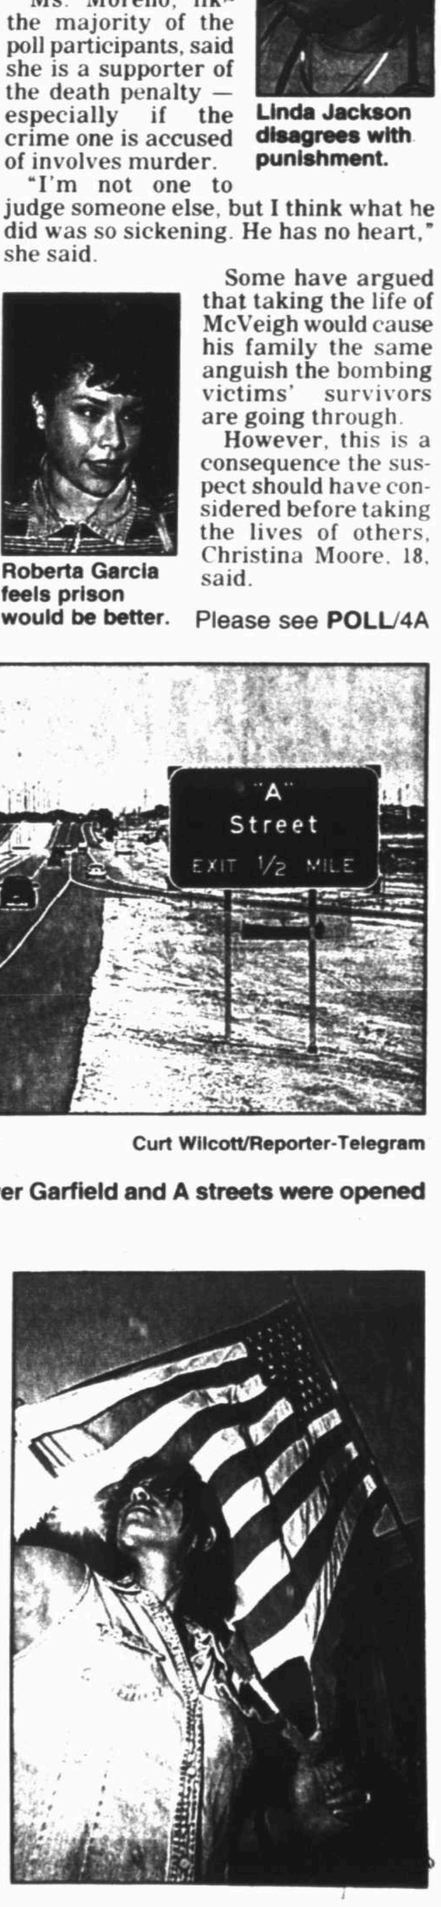

With this grand declaration, the Stars and Stripes was born. But it wasn't until the Cold War, in 1949, that President Harry Truman declared it a day of national observance.

"Flag Day is very important because it is the day to honor the flag as the symbol for the country, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights," said Lou Koerber, president of the National Flag Day Foundation in Baltimore.

And on this day Koerber encourages all to participate in a national "Pause for the Pledge of Allegiance" at 6 p.m. CDT today.

"It would be a stimulating patriotic experience at home, and a sign of unity abroad, that all Americans can come together and show that unity with 31 special words," he said.

Africa needs to step up world trade, Asians say

Associated Press

BANGKOK, Thailand — Africa risks sliding further into poverty unless the world's industrialized countries move to integrate the continent into the world economy, Asian officials warned Friday.

Asia and Africa both were mired in poverty at the end of the colonial era 40 years ago. While East Asia has blossomed on a mix of aggressive exporting and free-market reforms, Africa has stagnated — or even regressed — under socialism, nationalization and swelling foreign debt.

Representatives from 44 African and 11 Asian countries closed a three-day meeting here Friday by calling on the world's richest industrialized countries, the Group of Seven, to increase aid and trade to Africa.

"Africa has to be part of the global trading system," said Kobsak Chutikul, director general of the Thai Foreign Ministry's economic affairs department. "It must not be marginalized. There are opportunities in Africa."

G-7 leaders from the United States, Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy and Japan meet in Denver next week, along with Russian delegates. They will follow up on resolutions passed at last year's G-7 summit in Lyon, France, calling for global involvement in Africa.

Senior planning officials who met at the Second Asia-Africa Forum here discussed how the Asian economic miracle of the past 15 years can be applied to Africa, which has been unable to lift itself out of poverty.

The group decided that the best way forward would be for the G-7 to support three-way cooperation between rich, developing and poor countries. It urged the world to increase development aid to Africa, encourage private investment and expand trade.

The message to the G-7 "boils down like this: Just do what you have said you will do," Kobsak said.

Asia's wealthy countries, looking for new markets to invest in, are increasingly turning to Africa, said Yasushi Kurokochi, the Japanese co-chairman of the forum.

"Africa offers potential partnership for the Asian continent as a whole," Kurokochi said. "Asia presents itself not only as a partner for Africa but for the developed countries when they go into Africa."

Asian delegates welcomed reforms taken by many African nations to make their markets more business-friendly over the past few years and urged them to intensify the pace of reforms and sub-regional cooperation.

Conditions worsen in Sierra Leone

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone (AP) — Aid agencies said Friday they planned to begin distribution of food this weekend in Sierra Leone to stave off hunger and prevent a new refugee exodus after last month's coup.

Thousands of people have poured into Freetown, the capital, since the May 25 coup raised fears of clashes in the countryside between troops loyal to the ousted government and the renegades.

Most markets have been closed since the coup, prices for basic foods have doubled, and many essential items such as fuel and rice will run out within two weeks, the U.N. World Food Program warned Friday.

Outside the capital, there are concerns that the fighting will send tens of thousands of refugees pouring into the neighboring countries of Guinea and Liberia.

There are already about 10,000 refugees in Liberia — new arrivals as well as people who have been living there for months after fleeing previous fighting during Sierra Leone's civil war.

The rebels from that conflict have now aligned themselves with the coup leaders.

"The worst-hit are children, the elderly and the sick, who are unable to venture into nearby bushes for wild fruits for food.

U.S. works on payment plan for U.N. debt

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — After reaching agreement with key senators on a plan to pay $819 million in back dues, the United States has started trying to sell the package to a skeptical United Nations.

Ambassador Bill Richardson and Sen. Rod Grams, R-Minn., met Friday with Secretary-General Kofi Annan and key ambassadors to explain the plan, approved Thursday by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Their message was that despite conditions many U.N. members find objectionable, the agreement is the best deal possible and represents a major step in overcoming opposition to the United Nations in the Republican-dominated Congress.

"We have ... made a major step forward, a positive step forward in that there is now on record a major committee of the Congress ... in favor of U.N. arrears payment with some benchmarks for reform," Richardson said.

Among the most controversial parts of the deal is a requirement that the United Nations reduce the U.S. share of expenses from 25 percent to 20 percent. The agreement also provides less money than the United Nations says Washington owes.

Reducing the U.S. assessment requires approval by a majority of the 185-member General Assembly. Countries such as Britain, France, Japan and Germany oppose a reduction until Washington first pays its arrears and promises to deliver payments in full and on time in the future.

Under the plan, the United States would pay $819 million over three years conditional on major U.N. reforms, including personnel reductions and a lowering of U.S. assessments.

In addition to the 20 percent cap on operating expenses, Washington refuses to pay more than 25 percent of expenses for U.N. peacekeeping operations, which are funded separately.

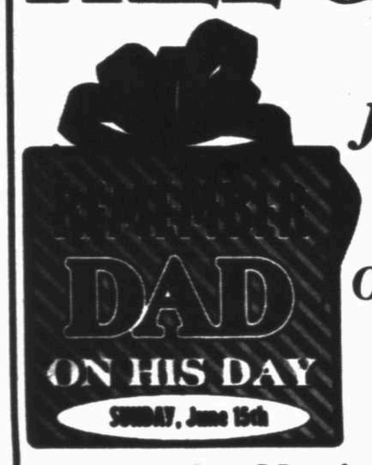

The United Nations insists the U.S. share should be 31 percent. The United Nations also puts the figure on U.S. arrears at $1.3 billion, most of it in back payment of peacekeeping bills.

Richardson sought to overcome perceptions that the agreement amounts to a dictate from Washington.

"We're not here to 'take it or leave it' with the United Nations," he said at a news conference. "I will be now engaged between now and the end of the summer in consulting with member states, going to capitals about the package as it moves forward."

MCVEIGH: Bomber's fate now rests with appellate court

blamed the media and government for her son's fate.

"Since my son — the day he was arrested — I feel that it was done, that he was convicted and sentenced to death by the media and the government," Mildred Frazer said on ABC's "20/20."

"I'm not saying he didn't have a fair trial," she said. "I'm just saying that I don't think that it was done right from the beginning."

The jury's death decision is binding. Matsch said he will impose the actual sentence later this summer, after a July 7 deadline for motions and appeals.

In Oklahoma City, along the fence where the bombed-out federal building once stood, cheers erupted. Church bells tolled on the half-hour as the verdict came in.

"I think Timothy McVeigh needs to prepare himself to meet God. That's his judge," said Lyle Cousins, whose wife, Kim, was killed in the blast.

Kathleen Treanor, who lost her 4-year-old daughter and her in-laws, said: "When Timothy McVeigh made the decision to murder, maim and destroy all these people, he gave up the right to be called a human being. Death is obviously what he should have."

McVeigh's lawyers had argued that he was a well-meaning but misguided patriot bent on avenging the 1993 government siege at Waco. But, in its verdict, the jury unanimously rejected the assertion that he "believed deeply in the ideals upon which the United States was founded."

Outside the courthouse, defense attorney Stephen Jones said: "The jury has spoken."

"Their verdict is entitled to respect and all Americans should accord it that respect until such time if ever it is overturned by a court of competent jurisdiction," Jones said. "We ask that the barriers and intolerance that have divided us may crumble, that suspicions disappear and that hatreds cease and that our divisions and intolerance being healed, we may live together in justice and peace."

He ended with the words: "God save the United States of America. God save this honorable court."

Prosecutor Joseph Hartzler, who had urged jurors to have the courage to sentence McVeigh to death and to ignore the defense's dark hints of more violence, said the sentencing decision brought no joy to the prosecution.

"We're pleased that the system worked and that justice prevailed," he said. "The verdict doesn't diminish the great sadness that occurred in Oklahoma City two years ago."

At the White House, President Clinton said: "This investigation and trial have confirmed our country's faith in its justice system. To the victims and their families, I know that your healing can be measured only one day at a time. The prayers and support of your fellow Americans will be with you every one of those days."

Most jurors, reached at their homes, refused to discuss the deliberations.

"I'm glad it's complete," said juror David Gilger. "I think there's a sense of closure for everyone."

Said Tonya Steadman: "I'm really proud of myself and I'm proud of every other juror."

McVeigh's fate now rests with the appellate court, while co-defendant Terry Nichols is expected to go on trial later this year on the same charges.

Appeals could take three years or more. Also, the U.S. Supreme Court has never ruled on the constitutionality of the 1994 death penalty statute under which McVeigh was tried. He also faces state murder charges in Oklahoma that carry the death penalty.

In weighing McVeigh's fate jurors were confronted with two different pictures of him: well-meaning, though tragically wrong-minded patriot, or cruel and cowardly traitor.

McVeigh himself never spoke to the jury, although his parents pleaded with jurors to spare his life, describing their son as a friendly, intelligent boy who cared about others.

In the prosecution's death-penalty case, jurors were brought to tears by the horrifying stories of survivors and victims' relatives, who described how their lives were torn apart by the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building.

Mothers and fathers spoke of children violently ripped from their lives. Rescuers told of having nightmares about the victims they couldn't save. A doctor told of how he amputated a woman's leg with a dirty pocket knife.

The prosecution called 38 witnesses to make the case, as prosecutor Beth Wilkinson said, that the slaughter was "the crime that the death penalty was designed for."

She urged jurors to "look into the eyes of a coward" and muster the courage to sentence him to die for a crime that killed more people than the total number of Americans who died in combat in the Persian Gulf.

The defense called 27 witnesses, many McVeigh's Army comrades, to show that McVeigh was a Bronze Star-winning soldier, a good friend and happy teen-ager until his life changed after the war.

Defense lawyers conceded McVeigh's involvement in the bombing but said letting him live might provide answers to "the rest of the story" about the blast.

McVeigh's lawyers said he developed a deep concern about the abuse of U.S. government power. The seed that grew into the blast, they said, was planted at Waco.

They also hinted that executing McVeigh could cause more bloodshed, with Jones asking jurors "to make the first step to restore domestic tranquility."

Outside court, prosecutor Pat Ryan confronted that issue, directing a message to people in what he called the right-wing "patriot community."

"I hope that what was said about them in this courtroom was wrong," he said. "I don't think there are people out there who believe the way this defendant believes."

POLL: Majority feels punishment fits McVeigh's crime

(From 1A)

"If he had family and relatives he cared about, then why did he go out and hurt other people's loved ones?" said Ms. Moore, the mother of a 14-month-old child.

Ms. Moore was one of several people left dissatisfied with the prosecutors in the McVeigh case.

"They could have done better. The prosecutors could have showed pictures of the children who were killed. They could have showed the jury that these were real lives that were lost, not just a number," Ms. Moore said. "I think the crime he committed was (being ignorant). If he had a problem with government, he should have done something about it in a civilized way, not by causing destruction. He didn't even know who was in that building. There were children in there, not just federal employees."

Daniel Trent, 30, also said he thinks there is unsettled business that needs to be looked at.

"I've been keeping tabs on the case. I think there's more people involved in the bombing," Trent said. "But I think they gave him what he needs."

Felix Leyva, 62, also thought McVeigh's sentence was justified.

"The crime he is accused of committing is something really wrong," Leyva said in Spanish. "He made so many people suffer for his beliefs. I think the penalty merits the crime he committed."

Vanessa Snyder, 22, said there was no other punishment that would be as appropriate as the death penalty.

"I think (the death penalty) is fair if you take someone else's life," Ms. Snyder said. The prosecutors "had enough evidence. I think it was horrible. Many people were heartbroken. We need to support (the death penalty) for what has happened and for the survivors' grief."

Others polled were pleased with the jury's verdict, but said giving McVeigh the death penalty was letting him off the hook too easily.

"I think he should have gone to jail instead, so he could suffer the way that the victims did," Roberta Garcia, 26, said. "When he dies, it's over with. But if he went to jail, then he'd suffer more. I'm not opposed to the death penalty, but I'd rather see him suffer. He'll never be sorry for what he did. He still denied doing it until the end, but he's going to die now."

Tracy Marshall, 29, said that criminals — regardless of the crime they are accused of — should not be given the death penalty.

"It was a horrible crime. It couldn't be worse, but I never think the death penalty is right," Ms. Marshall said. "I just don't think it's administered fairly in the United States. It's better to be left in the hands of God. I'd suggest life in prison."

Linda Jackson, 46, also disagreed with letting a jury decide the fate of another human being.

"I am a Christian, and I think no one has the right to take someone else's life. Of course, what he did is horrible, but I don't agree with him dying," Ms. Jackson said. "We all make mistakes, but there must be some kind of rehabilitation or something to help him ... think differently. You can be a criminal, but if you don't turn around and have a different frame of mind, then you can very possibly commit that same crime again."

Ms. Jackson, like Ms. Moore, also thought the prosecutors were a disappointment in using evidence against McVeigh.

"I don't think that the prosecutors proved their case beyond the shadow of a reasonable doubt," Ms. Jackson said.

"I think the media made (McVeigh) guilty before he ever took the stand," Yvonne Hammer, 40, said. "I am not convinced he is alone. I believe our government played a big part in it."

Mary Hien, 16, who believes that McVeigh is not guilty, said she thinks the suspect's chance for a fair trial was botched by prosecutors who were eager to close the case.

"They tore down the (Oklahoma federal building) immediately after their investigation. It doesn't make any sense. The funny thing is that no federal agents died, just the innocent workers and a lot of children," Ms. Hien said. "The media portrayed McVeigh to be a really bad person who was into guns at a young age, which I thought was not enough evidence (and) does not support the jury's verdict. I think they had their mind set before they went in."

Ms. Hien, however, said she is a supporter of the death penalty.

"If someone is a serial killer and does something over and over again, then I support the death penalty," she said.

One poll participant who usually opposes the death penalty said the McVeigh case was the first exception to her views.

"It's hard. I don't believe in the death penalty, but this is an unusual circumstance. I think it was just. The crime was just horrible," Brandy Gantt, 24, said. "I think the trial was done really well, not like the O.J. Simpson case. The evidence was great. For 168 victims, yes, I think he got what he deserves."

Verdict brings satisfaction to some, but no end to grief

By Rick Bragg
N.Y. Times News Service

OKLAHOMA CITY — Once again, with the rap of a gavel, many of the people touched by Timothy McVeigh's bomb got exactly what they demanded from a jury, and once again it was somehow less than what they had hungered for.

The federal jury in Denver brought back the only verdict that a clear majority of McVeigh's victims say they can live with, and while there seemed to be no loud celebration of his death sentence here, it did bring relief and a sense of revenge in a heartland city that, before him, had seemed safe and ordered.

"If this didn't fit the death penalty, then we didn't need one," said Martin Cash, who lost an eye and was badly scarred in the bombing, which killed 168 people and wounded 850.

Cash went to the site of Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, now a vacant lot, when he heard of that verdict. The verdict will not change the fact that he has, as he called it, "a plastic eye," or the fact that so many families have gaps. But it is "satisfaction," he said, and "it'll help some."

As the verdict was broadcast over television and radio, people here started to cry, to laugh. Some just said, "Thank God." People hugged on sidewalks, and in hotel lobbies.

But even while some of McVeigh's victims quietly rejoiced at the prospect of his death, others were struck anew by how little real joy it caused. Some family members of people killed here on April 19, 1995, reacted angrily to reporters' questions of whether the death sentence would bring "closure" — since it is only punishment, not peace.

And to the few, mostly silent ones who believe that the execution will bring nothing good, the verdict brought only sadness that the bombing may yet cost one more life.

"It was just punishment, and it fit the crime" said Jim Denny, whose two toddlers, Brandon and Rebecca, were wounded in the blast. His son, Brandon, 5, has endured several surgeries from a hole blown in his skull, just one of so many others who struggle each day to regain the life that was mangled by the bombing. Brandon runs and plays, but with a limp.

"There will always be this deep, deep hurt," said Denny, who also went to the site of the bombing, where reporters outnumbered the people they interviewed.

He has said he and his wife, Claudia, could have lived with a sentence of life in prison for McVeigh — "As long as a terrorist is off the street."

Bud Welch, whose grown daughter died in the bombing, had prayed that McVeigh would not be sentenced to death.

For about six months after the death of his daughter, Julie Marie, Welch said he wanted capital punishment exacted, but that anger faded with time and was replaced by the teachings of his Roman Catholic faith and with his daughter's words.

He remembered a conversation they had a few years ago as he drove her to school at Marquette University in Wisconsin, where she studied languages on a full scholarship. They were talking about the death penalty.

Welch, who also went to the bomb site after the verdict, recalled: "She said, 'Dad, it has no redeeming social value. It's no deterrent to crime. It just teaches our children to hate.'"

With his daughter's words ringing in his head, he said, how could he demand McVeigh's death?

"Hate and vengeance is where the bombing came from," Welch said. "Hate is exactly what it is. His death will not solve anything. It's not going to bring my daughter back. It's not going to bring any peace."

His daughter had worked in the Social Security Administration office as a interpreter. She had left her desk to go get a client from a waiting room, toward the front of the building, and was walking back to the inner part of the building, the safer part, when the bomb exploded.

Rescue workers said that if the explosion had happened just a few seconds later, she might have lived, as others did.

Welch said he had to live the rest of his life knowing that.

"This train has to stop somewhere," he said, "if we're ever going to get our lives back."

But the very notion of a Timothy McVeigh behind bars, still possibly spreading his message of hate by pamphlet or computer, was just too much for many people here.

They contended that it was better to risk turning McVeigh into a dead martyr than risk his becoming a Charles Manson-like figure who could gather even larger numbers of disturbed people to him.

"It stops, it stops here," said Mike Lenz, whose wife, Carrie, who was pregnant at the time, was killed in the attack.

UNFURL: America to celebrate 220th birthday of U.S. flag

(From 1A)

Not all Americans may come together, however. Though Star-Spangled fashion still flies in West Texas, Flag Day may not.

At least one flag seller reported disappointing sales this year, with interest focused primarily on Independence Day.

"When I first came aboard (four months ago), I thought there was big potential to sell flags and all that, but there hasn't been a big response," said John Shields, sales manager for Imperial Flag and Banner.

"Nobody seems to have an interest in it."

And those who are, like Ms. White, often display bedraggled colors, Shields said.

"I see people flying flags that are ripped and torn and worn out."

But Ms. White doesn't mind her tattered flag, which she says possesses "character."

"It symbolizes what I've been through, what our country's been through," said Ms. White, who votes Republican and claims half-Irish and half-Navajo ancestry.

"There's nothing wrong with being a little tattered: It stands for freedom and independence."

Fire kills more than 60 at New Delhi movie theater

Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India — The fire started during a battle scene. Many of those watching the war movie assumed the black smoke billowing out from around the screen was a special effect — until they began having trouble breathing.

By then it was too late for many.

Sixty people were killed and more than 200 injured in a fire Friday at the Uphaar theater in a southern suburb of New Delhi, police said. At least 12 of the dead were children.

Most of the victims suffocated on the dense smoke from the burning ceiling insulation, said Maxwell Periera, a senior police officer. The filling in the air-conditioning ducts generated more noxious fumes.

The 1,000-seat movie theater was nearly full when the fire started soon after the intermission of "Border," a new Hindi-language movie about the 1971 war between India and Pakistan.

Investigators said the fire broke out in an electric generator in the stage area. There was no immediate indication of sabotage or criminal activity.

At first people in the audience thought the smoke was a special effect, said Balram Sharma, who was on the theater's lower floor.

At that point in the movie, the screen was filled with fiery images from a huge tank battle — at Longewala on the western front — that was an important victory for India.

Most of the dead were trapped in the balcony, when the false ceilings in the hall caught fire and billowed noxious smoke into the upper level. Movie-goers on the lower floor fled in panic, but most escaped.

Groping through the darkened theater, panicking people broke windows and doors to get out.

"Many people ran into the bathroom of the second floor because that was the only lit area," said Karan Kumar, 35, whose father, sister and an uncle died in the blaze.

> 'I personally carried six people, including children, out of the hall. Some of them may have been dead.'
> — Mamman Ram, audience member

"I don't know how I escaped. I had caught hold of my aunt's hand and rushed outside," he said.

He said many people went back inside the theater to look for friends and relatives because it took fire trucks at least 30 minutes to arrive.

At two nearby hospitals, hundreds of sobbing people waited for the bodies of relatives to be released. In one hospital, bodies wrapped in white sheets were lined up on the floor of the reception area, and slabs of ice were being brought so they would not decompose so quickly in the summer heat.

At least three people jumped to the street from a second floor stairwell to escape the flames, said Pinikan Dinesh, who was inside when the fire broke out.

"I personally carried six people, including children, out of the hall. Some of them may have been dead," said audience member Mamman Ram, who had left an earlier matinee show and was outside when the fire broke out during the next performance.

Forty-eight fire engines were called to the battle the flames and black smoke.

This was the second major fire in India this month. Thirty-nine worshipers were killed June 7 in a blaze inside a Hindu temple in the southern city of Thanjavur.

India's deadliest fire struck a tent set up for a school party in a town near New Delhi, killing more than 500 people in 1995.

Khmer Rouge turns on its own as group quickly disintegrates

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Cambodia's ruthless Khmer Rouge, responsible for the deaths of as many as 2 million people, is falling apart with the same savagery it once applied to others.

Ailing leader Pol Pot, running for his life from government forces and Khmer Rouge defectors, ordered the killing of one of his top commanders, Son Sen, the man known as the movement's chief executioner during its genocidal heyday.

In addition to Son Sen, his wife and eight other family members were killed, including several grandchildren who reportedly had their skulls run over by a truck, said Cambodian government officials who had been holding peace talks with some of the rebels.

It was, some might argue, a fitting end for Son Sen, a sinister figure who oversaw the gruesome purges of the ultra-radical movement he and Pol Pot helped found in their student days in France in the 1950s.

During the Khmer Rouge's hideous reign from 1975-79, Son Sen ran Tuol Sleng, a one-time secondary school converted into a prison, where an estimated 20,000 "enemies of the state" were tortured before being killed in a nearby field.

After Tuesday's slaying of Son Sen, Pol Pot's other top commander, Ta Mok, was reported to have turned against him, fearing a similar fate.

Pol Pot fled the group's last major stronghold, Anlong Veng, in northern Cambodia, officials said. Khmer Rouge guerrillas who have been negotiating with the government were reportedly trying to block his escape, and had set up checkpoints in the jungle.

The rebel group's latest fracturing was apparently triggered by progress in peace talks with members of the rebel group, negotiations in which Pol Pot has not taken part. The government last week announced headway in efforts to end 20 years of civil war and drive Pol Pot into exile.

Cambodia's co-prime ministers, rivals in the coalition government, have been vying for the loyalties of defecting guerrillas before national elections next year.

One of the two, First Premier Norodom Ranariddh, told reporters Friday that Pol Pot fled Anlong Veng with 200 loyalist guerrillas and some hostages. The hostages reportedly included Khieu Samphan, the nominal president of the Khmer Rouge, believed to be among the leaders who had been negotiating with the government.

Aristide stirs up islanders, frustrates Washington

Associated Press

In two striking public performances, the Aristide of old has emerged, ranting against imperialism and "the occupation" — a reference to the U.N. peacekeeping force.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — He's back, and he's rallying his militants by blaming U.S. imperialism for the woes of Haiti's poor.

With the same anti-American rhetoric that won him the loyalty of Haitians during dictatorships of the past, former President Jean-Bertrand Aristide is preparing for a comeback — and frustrating U.S. aid plans.

The Americans who reluctantly restored the left-leaning Aristide to power in 1994 are among those trying to check his movement's rise in power. President Clinton sent 20,000 troops to Haiti to eject a murderous military regime and reinstate Aristide, despite concern about his populist bent.

Since then, Washington has tried to keep Haiti's fragile democracy on course and persuade its government to adopt austerity measures in exchange for foreign aid.

That intervention has fueled growing anti-American sentiment, providing a vehicle for the political ambitions of Aristide, who was barred by Haiti's constitution from seeking a consecutive term as president in 1995 elections. He hand-picked his successor, Rene Preval.

For years, the U.S. State Department "couldn't eliminate (Aristide) physically. Now, it is trying to eliminate him politically," said Dany Toussaint, a former police chief appointed by Aristide.

Aristide had softened his anti-Washington rhetoric after the 1994 invasion, calling the captains of U.S. industry he once accused of turning Haitians into slaves "my dear friends."

But in two striking public performances, the Aristide of old has emerged, ranting against imperialism and "the occupation" — a reference to the U.N. peacekeeping force that succeeded U.S. troops here, as well as the 1915-34 American occupation of Haiti.

Aristide told students a week ago that the internationally backed economic plan — with the promise of a quarter billion dollars in aid — "is a form of schizophrenia. ...It has lost touch with reality."

He warned that Haiti must not be "indebted to imperialism."

"If they believe they can discharge the battery of our morale by programming hunger and the high cost of living, they have miscalculated," he told hundreds of supporters Thursday.

Economists agree that the austerity program, demanding the layoffs of thousands of government workers and increasing food prices through taxes, will cause more hardship before investment and new jobs are created.

Aristide's rallies could mark the start of a new campaign for the 44-year-old former slu priest. In January, he formed his own Lavalas Family party as a vehicle for a presidential bid in 2000.

Now, politicians are speculating that he even could become Preval's prime minister, replacing Rosny Smarth, who resigned Monday to protest electoral fraud.

Smarth had tried unsuccessfully to enact the austerity program, and his resignation prompted the State Department to complain this week that opposition forces — led by Aristide — were using unfair tactics to block the program.

Aristide had appeared poised to deal a final blow to the plan through runoff elections on Sunday that would have given his supporters control of the Senate.

But Haiti's electoral council, accused of tampering with the results of the first round of voting April 6, postponed the runoff indefinitely.

According to a diplomatic source, the decision was made after U.S. Ambassador William Swing told Preval that unless the council held a new vote in areas affected by fraud, the United States would not recognize the results.

Japanese researchers create luminescent mice

OSAKA, Japan (AP) — Nevermind the mousetrap, Japanese scientists have built a better mouse. Touted as the world's first fluorescent mammal, the glow-in-the-dark rodents are the result of a technique that could be a boon to medical researchers.

The first generation of glowing mice — which shine a gleaming green under ultraviolet light — entered the world this week in a western Japan laboratory, where Osaka University geneticists injected mouse embryos with the DNA of a bioluminescent North American jellyfish.

Professor Masaru Okabe and his team started the project four years ago in an effort to develop new methods to observe the internal development of fetuses.

Okabe says medical researchers will be able to use the technique in a variety of ways, including tracing white blood cells in cancer research.

The team also believes the technology could even open the door to a "more humane approach" to medical research.

"We have also developed the technology to make specific cells glow as markers, so the effects of research can be observed without killing the animals and opening them up," team member Dr. Shuichi Yamada said.

The vibrant hues of the experimental mice disappear when hair grows over their bodies, but uncovered parts such as their feet and mouths will continue to glow well into adulthood.

Yamada said the green mice will be able to pass on their unique characteristic to the next five generations.

Fluorescent rabbits and monkeys may be just around the corner, he said.

State Department threatens Croatia over refugees, crimes

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a sign that the United States may block further international aid to Croatia, the State Department delivered a strong warning Friday over that country's continuing failure to extradite war criminals or ensure the return of refugees.

"Our basic position ... on how Croatia should be treated by the West is going to be a direct function of what Croatia does on issues concerning the Dayton" peace accords, said State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns.

He was referring to the 1995 peace agreement concluded in Dayton, Ohio, that ended the Bosnian war. Under the accord, neighboring Croatia and Serbia were to hand over to the international war crimes tribunal all suspects and to repatriate refugees.

"Croatia is failing on war criminals. Failing. Croatia is not doing very well on refugee return," Burns said.

Two weeks ago, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright visited the region and lambasted Croatian leaders over their failure to ensure the safety of returning Serbs. She said Croatia would be barred from joining Western economic and military alliances as long as it pursued its nationalist policies.

After Albright's visit, Croatian President Franjo Tudjman attempted to mend fences by reopening a bridge between Croatia and Bosnia and opening an investigation into attacks on Serb refugees. In a campaign speech, Tudjman also committed Croatia to ethnic reconciliation.

In return, the United States approved a small, $13 million loan by the International Finance Corp., an arm of the World Bank.

"That does not take away the lever that Secretary Albright is clearly exercising here," Burns explained. "When you ask someone to take a positive step and they do it, if you don't respond to that, then you're confusing them."

Lawyers push for perks in tobacco settlement

Associated Press

Tobacco talks resume Monday in Washington, when negotiators are expected to begin bargaining.

WASHINGTON — Up to $600 in smoking cessation aids, some free medical tests for tobacco-caused diseases and cheaper medicines could be benefits for U.S. smokers under one ambitious plan for a multibillion-dollar tobacco settlement.

Under the plan being pushed by private attorneys, smoker-benefit programs altogether would get as much money as the industry would be forced to pay out in legal damages — estimated at up to $4 billion a year — says a draft obtained by The Associated Press.

Tobacco talks resume Monday in Washington, when negotiators are expected to begin bargaining over money and hash out more serious sticking points.

On the agenda is the financial plan by private attorneys called the Castano group, which represents smokers in class-action lawsuits that would be settled by the proposed deal, as would 37 state lawsuits against cigarette-makers.

"These benefits are the only things that go to the smokers" in the proposed settlement, said Minneapolis attorney Charles Zimmerman, a Castano member. "This is the first time anybody's ever settled a lawsuit by having a program administered that gets people off their products."

"There is going to be money set aside specifically for smoking cessation," said Trey Bobinger, spokesman for a lead negotiator, Mississippi Attorney General Michael Moore. But he couldn't say how much.

The Castano lawyers are pushing for funds to go beyond smoking cessation and also offer:

- Medical monitoring for smokers and ex-smokers over 40 to catch tobacco-related diseases early.
- Up to $3,000 a year in drugs for tobacco-related lung diseases for people over 50.
- Partial coverage of Medicare copayments for any tobacco-related medical care for people over 65.

Any settlement is still iffy. Cigarette-makers balked last week at letting the Food and Drug Administration strictly control nicotine, and they still demand freedom from having to pay punitive damages.

Top executives of Philip Morris, R.J. Reynolds, Brown & Williamson and its parent, British-American Tobacco, met in New York Thursday and Friday to privately consider those sticking points.

A tobacco spokesman declined comment, but anti-tobacco negotiators said Friday that while the industry's FDA position was not complete, its talks were "positive enough" to continue negotiating.

Tobacco stocks rose a second day in anticipation of a deal. "There isn't a natural opponent to taking a lot of money from the industry and more highly regulating it," explained Roy Burry, a securities analyst with Kidder Peabody & Co.

But negotiators must hammer out just how much money. The current estimate is $10 billion paid up front, followed by up to $15 billion annually.

About 10 percent would be expected to go to federal health officials for anti-smoking education and enforcement of the settlement.

The Castano group wants 22.5 percent for a legal compensation fund that would pay out any jury verdicts to sick smokers.

Senate, House block base closings

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration's prospects for additional military base closures have gone from bleak to bleaker as a Senate panel rejected a proposal that would have revived an independent base closing commission.

Earlier, a House committee took a different but nonetheless anti-base-closing stance by approving a measure that would block funds for more closures.

Taken together, the congressional actions this week show that the administration faces tough odds in gaining approval for more closures.

But on Friday Pentagon officials were unwilling to concede defeat. "We're at the beginning of the (congressional) process and we're encouraged that people have remained open to hearing from us on the subject," said Susan Hansen, a Pentagon spokeswoman.

The administration wants additional base closures so it can apply the savings toward a new generation of weapons systems such as the F-22 Air Force fighter and the Navy's F/A-18 E/F fighter-bomber.

But late Thursday, the Senate Armed Services Committee, in a closed-door 9-9 vote, rejected an amendment to the military's annual authorization bill that would have reinstated the commission for more rounds of base closures in 1999 and in 2001, as the Pentagon has requested. The measure needed a majority vote to pass.

It had bipartisan support and was sponsored by Republican Sens. Dan Coats of Indiana and John McCain of Arizona and Democratic Sens. Carl Levin of Michigan and Charles Robb of Virginia. Committee sources said two senators — a Republican and a Democrat — who had previously indicated their willingness to support the proposal voted against it. But the sources did not disclose their names.

McCain and Levin vowed Friday to press for the commission's reinstatement when the bill is brought to the Senate floor, possibly next week.

"This is going to be one of the major issues on the floor," said Levin, the panel's ranking Democrat.

Nancy Ives, a McCain spokeswoman. said, "Sen. McCain is extremely disappointed that politics prevailed and prevented the committee from approving additional base closure rounds."

An official familiar with the proceedings said the staff of Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., strongly opposed the amendment. Lott has spoken out against reviving the independent commission.

Many lawmakers are stinging from the 1995 round of base closures when President Clinton interceded in what had been a fairly non-political process by preventing the shutdowns of Air Force depots in electoral-rich Texas and California.

Since 1988, when the Base Realignment and Closure Commission was first set up, it has ordered the closure of 97 major U.S. bases in four installments. After the 1995 round, the commission was disbanded.

Mexico agrees to phase out some pesticides

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Mexico has agreed to phase out the use of two pesticides believed to cause cancer — chlordane and DDT — over the next 10 years, government representatives said Friday.

Mexico allows the use of DDT to kill mosquitoes, which carry malaria. Chlordane kills termites and is used mainly in Mexico's southern states.

DDT was banned in the United States in 1973, and chlordane has been unavailable for residential use in this country since 1987.

Critics of pesticide use say that the two chemicals still find their way into the United States from Mexico on fruits and vegetables or are blown across the border and into the water supply.

"We are now looking at a number of substitutes. Some are quite expensive," said Jose Luis Samaniego, an official of Mexico's Ministry for Environment, Natural Resources and Fisheries.

The nonbinding agreement was reached by the Council of the Commission for Environmental Cooperation, created by the North American Free Trade Agreement, at a three-day session that ended Friday.

The commission was formed to ensure that Mexico would not gain a trade advantage on the two other NAFTA nations by ignoring environmental concerns.

Samaniego said Mexico will need help from the other two nations, which agreed to help develop alternatives, teach workers how to use them and monitor results.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency believes DDT and chlordane can cause cancer. DDT- and chlordane-related chemicals have been found in tree bark the world over, thousands of miles from where they were sprayed.

First Reformed Presbyterian Church of Midland
Have you ever really wondered what it means to call Jesus, Lord? The word Lord is the official title of Jesus. It is given because He is the Lord of Lords and King of Kings.
There are many in the church today who are waiting for the day when He will become King. But the Scriptures tell us that He is the King now. He rules all the nations by virtue of His position as the risen Lord. Psalm 2 tells us that all the kings and judges of the earth should bow before Him and recognize Him as their King. It doesn't say for them to wait until sometime in the future to do this, but to do it now lest they perish in the way.
Our nation is called upon to bow humbly before King Jesus, and to be obedient to His Law as seen in His Word. Come join us in defending the crown rights of the King.

Army shifts sex abuse hotline to advice line

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Army is shutting down the sex abuse hot line it set up after the Aberdeen, Md., scandal, declaring the line has done its job and criminal investigators are probing more than 300 misconduct complaints.

Army leaders took the step Friday, citing a declining number of calls. Also, they were known to be unhappy the line had become the source of anonymous complaints, including the tip that led to the resignation of the commander of the Army Ordnance Center at Aberdeen, Maj. Gen. John Longhouser.

The married two-star general admitted he'd committed adultery while separated from his wife five years ago, details relayed to investigators through a hot line tip. The base is the site of some of the Army's most serious allegations of sex abuse involving trainees and drill instructors, incidents that touched off the service's worldwide investigation into sexual misconduct.

Since the hot line's establishment in November, 8,305 calls had poured in. Some 1,354 of those were referred to criminal investigators for study and 342 are still being looked at, Army officials said.

The remainder of the calls were to register opinions, ask questions or were judged to be crank calls, officials said.

"The hot line, which was established to provide an additional way for victims to seek assistance, has done its job. ... There are indications that the hot line may have been used by some callers for purposes not consistent with its original mission," said an Army statement announcing the decision.

Susan Barnes, president of WANDA's Fund, an advocacy group for women in the military, called the decision to shut the hot line down "a mistake at this juncture, a stupid, stupid decision."

"It will discourage women from making calls. Hot lines are well known by women as avenues for complaints that are taken seriously. ... It's clear the generals still just don't get it," said Barnes, who is also an attorney representing retired Sgt. Maj. Brenda Hoster.

Hoster has accused the now-suspended Sergeant Major of the Army, Gene C. McKinney, with sexual harassment. McKinney faces an Army Article 32 hearing on June 23, the equivalent of a civilian grand jury proceeding on sexual misconduct charges. The officer in charge will decide whether there is enough evidence to have McKinney face a court martial. McKinney has said he is innocent and that he wants to retire with an honorable discharge.

Col. Vickie Longenecker, the director of human resources for the Army, said in an interview that the number of calls in recent weeks had "really begun dropping off." Her office will be in charge of a new telephone line, known as an "assistance line."

The line will not take anonymous complaints. However, it will give those reluctant to identify themselves information about what to do and how to proceed, Longenecker said.

Chaplains and advisers familiar with dealing with harassment complaints will be available to those who call in, but the line will not be used in counseling callers psychologically.

Firefighters injured through negligence get $19.5 million

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Ten firefighters who were badly hurt in a 1993 explosion at a chemical plant have settled with the owner for $19.5 million.

The disaster at H.C. Starck Inc. disabled nearly a third of Newton's active-duty firefighters in a flash. Seven in all were permanently disfigured; two of them had their ears burned. One man was blinded.

"None of them can ever be firefighters again," Neil Sugarman, a lawyer for the firefighters, said Friday. "Physically and mentally, they will carry the scars that they suffered the night of that explosion for the rest of their lives."

Last year, the company, a subsidiary of Bayer AG of Germany, pleaded guilty to criminal negligence and paid a $1.4 million fine in connection with the explosion, which occurred while firefighters were trying to smother a fire in a sodium drum.

There was water in the room with the sodium — an explosive combination.

The drum blew up after a firefighter put a shovelful of salt on the fire to put it out. The fire marshal ruled that water on the shovel touched off the explosion.

The plant was making tantalum powder, used in the manufacture of electrical capacitors.

The city accepted $2.85 million from Starck earlier this week. An 11th injured firefighter is close to a settlement as well.

Disney forks over big money for film parade

NEW YORK (AP) — Talk about your Herculean tasks.

Disney has persuaded Fifth Avenue businesses and residents to turn out their lights after dark for a parade celebrating the release of "Hercules."

The glowing "electrical parade" will make its way through a darkened stretch of midtown Manhattan on Saturday night.

The Walt Disney Co. is paying New York City $500,000 to help cover the costs of the parade, part of the hype surrounding the new animated film.

While thousands apparently have agreed to turn out their lights so Disney's 29 floats — illuminated with 566,000 hand-dyed bulbs — will shine more brightly, some New Yorkers fret that the spectacle is the latest in what local columnists have called the "Orlandofication" of New York.

Disney recently held a splashy opening for its renovated New Amsterdam Theater in Times Square, and two years ago drew 100,000 people to a mockup village in Central Park for the premiere of the movie "Pocahontas."

But while critics complained about police-ordered street closings Saturday, Fifth Avenue merchants were getting into the lights-out spirit.

"Everybody's doing it," said Bob Johnson, assistant manager of a Doubleday bookstore.

"We think it's a great family event," said Beverly Butler, spokeswoman for the Gap chain, which also will participate.

Disney has been working since February to recruit Fifth Avenue merchants to go along with the blackout, Disney executive Richard Cook said.

Street lights, too, will be turned off as the parade approaches and turned on as the parade goes by. The $56-an-hour overtime tab for a pair of city electricians is being picked up by Disney, which has annual revenue of more than $5 billion.

About 2,000 police officers will be posted.

Irvin denies assault

SAN FRANCISCO — Dallas Cowboys wide receiver Michael Irvin denied Friday that he assaulted a man in a San Francisco club and said he is willing to discuss the case with police.

San Francisco police spokesman Jim Leach confirmed Irvin was named in a complaint filed Thursday by a man who said the All-Pro receiver punched him and held him captive in a club basement.

"There was a complaint filed," Leach said. "The person said they were assaulted and sustained minor injuries. Investigators are in the process of contacting witnesses."

Irvin, 31, on probation for cocaine possession in Texas, allegedly forced Aaron Waller, 30, into the basement of the 1015 Folsom club, hit him on the chest and refused to release him until security guards arrived, according to a police report.

In a brief news conference in Dallas, Irvin and his attorney, Royce West, denied that account.

"No, there was no exchange. I did ask an individual if he took my phone," Irvin said. "Kill me today God if I'm lying."

"There was no licks exchanged, no anything," West added.

Waller said the incident occurred June 1, but he waited until Thursday to report it because he wanted to discuss the case with his attorney.

Waller said he was accompanied by two strippers, identified only as Angela and Joanne, when he met Irvin and another man at a supper club early on the morning of June 1, said the report written by officer Daniel Murphy.

"Is that your girl, dog?" Waller quoted Irvin as saying to him while looking at Angela.

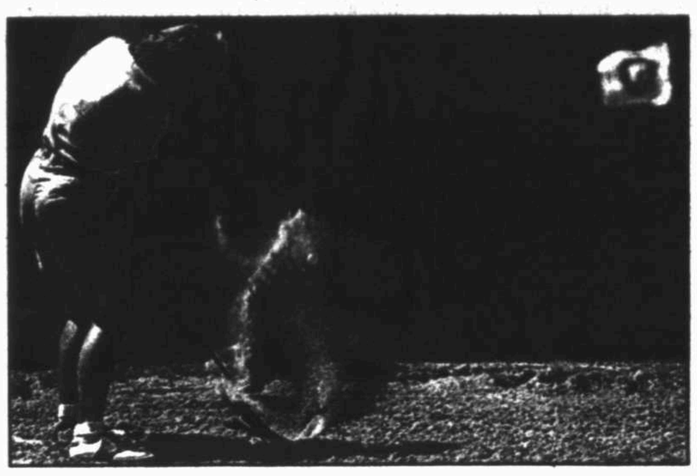

The football player later allowed Waller to use his limousine to take his companions to the 1015 Folsom club. Irvin did not accompany them.

When the limousine returned, Irvin discovered his cell phone was missing, and came to the club to confront Waller, police said.

Waller's account indicates that when he arrived at the club, Irvin was accompanied by a man described as 6 feet 5 inches tall and weighing 265 pounds. Waller denied taking the phone and an argument ensued "where Irvin and the other subject dragged Waller to the basement."

The police report continues: "There, the unidentified subject took off his rings, watch and chains, and started to push Waller around. Irvin took off his jacket, unbuttoned his vest and got into Waller's face and started screaming at him.

Marian Barker blasts out of the sand trap on No. 7 at Green Tree Country Club. Barker claimed her third Women's West Texas Golf Association championship.

Barker's experience wins out

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

Battling is something Lubbock's Miriam Barker has done before. Her history this week and before will tell you that.

Friday's championship flight final of the Women's West Texas Golf Association's 63rd Annual Championship wasn't much of a battle for Barker. She wouldn't allow a battle to happen.

Barker won the first six holes en route to a 6 and 5 match play victory at Green Tree Country Club over Odessa's Lisa Sheets to win her third West Texas title.

"(Winning the first six holes) was wonderful," Barker said. "I was nervous about today's match and didn't want to give anything away."

The win marked her first win since back-to-back titles in 1993-94. It was also her first since being diagnosed with breast cancer in 1995.

Barker had an incredible streak going in Women's West Texas play. She made the West Texas Finals five straight times from 1990-94, claiming two titles. Then in May of 1995, she was diagnosed with breast cancer, which affected

Unlikely hero helps Bulls clinch 5th title in 7 years

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

CHICAGO — The Chicago Bulls got rings for the thumb and another championship for the ages, this time on a thrilling last-second shot — not by Michael Jordan but by Steve Kerr.

In a clinching sixth game that was as good as they get, the Bulls did enough down the stretch to beat the Utah Jazz 90-86 on Friday night and win their fifth title in seven years.

The game hung in the balance until the final seconds against the Jazz, a dogged opponent who nonetheless couldn't avoid making crucial mistakes that cost them a chance to become the first team to take the Bulls to a seventh game in a championship series.

They didn't get the chance, even though they didn't allow Jordan to beat them as he did in Games 1, 2 and 5. This time, when the Bulls needed a tiebreaking shot in the final few seconds, Jordan passed to Kerr.

The pass came with the clock ticking inside seven seconds and the shot clock down to :02. Kerr, left alone as the Jazz double-teamed Jordan, sank an 18-footer to break an 86-all tie, the ball snapping the net as the shot clock hit zero.

It wasn't the game-breaking shot everyone always envisions when it comes to the Bulls, but that didn't matter to anyone in Chicago.

"At the last timeout, I was sitting down my Mike, watching him," Kerr said. "He sat there for about 30 seconds, then he turned to me and said, 'Be ready, Stockton's coming off me. I said OK, I'll make it.'"

The winning shot was reminiscent of John Paxson's 3-pointer with 3.9 seconds left that gave Chicago a 99-98 victory in the '93 title-clinching sixth game against the Phoenix Suns. But in that game, it was Horace Grant, not Jordan, who made the pass for the winning shot.

"It's tough to live up to John Paxson and what he did," said Kerr, who blew kisses to the crowd after the game. "I'm just glad I made one of those big shots."

But the Bulls still needed one more stop.

After another timeout, the Jazz had to inbound at midcourt with five seconds left. Bryon Russell tried to throw a long pass, but Toni Kukoc tipped it and Utah never regained possession.

Scottie Pippen dived for the loose ball, tipping it ahead to Kukoc, who streaked downcourt for a dunk just before the buzzer sounded.

Just like that, the Bulls had done it again, just like 1991, 1992, 1993 and 1996: They were champions, Jordan was the Finals MVP, the Bulls avoiding a seventh game and a Western Conference opponent had come up short in the face of dynastic greatness.

When the buzzer sounded, an avalanche of metallic streamers and confetti fell to the court. Pippen jumped into Jordan's arms, the two hugged and spun around and coach Phil Jackson ran to join them.

"The fifth one was great," Pippen said. "They gave us a hell of a series, but we stepped up like champions do."

The three of them, the only members of the Bulls to be around for all five championship years, had survived con-

Colin Montgomerie tosses his putter in frustration after missing a birdie putt during Friday's second round of the U.S. Open at Congressional Country Club in Bethesda, Md.

Lehman grabs lead as Woods rallies, Montgomerie collapses

By Ron Sirak
AP Golf Writer

BETHESDA, Md. — Numbers are merely lines on paper, keystrokes on a computer that measure the shell but not the soul. Nowhere was that more true than Friday at the U.S. Open.

Tiger Woods and Colin Montgomerie were both four strokes behind leader Tom Lehman going into Saturday's third round. Yet one was a man on the move and the other was moving like a man groping in the dark for the doorknob and the way out.

Woods, who seemed more likely to miss the cut than win the tournament after an opening round 74, was locked in on his iron game and shot a 67 to finish 36 holes at 1-over-par 141.

"Today I shot myself back into it," Woods said. "I'm back in the tournament."

Montgomerie, meanwhile, hit only five fairways at Congressional Country Club after landing in the short grass 13 of 14 times in the first round and followed his 65 with a 76 in which he made no birdies.

As frustrated as Woods appeared on Friday, Montgomerie was even more exasperated as he gave back all of the nine-stroke lead he had over Woods after the first round.

Montgomerie, who had said the U.S. Open was his favorite tournament, blamed Friday's round on his health, the weather and the fans.

"I haven't felt well since I've been here and I don't feel well now," he said. "I tend to suffer more than most with the heat and the humidity."

Montgomerie was heckled by a fan after missing a putt on No. 9 and yelled: "Save it for the Ryder Cup." After the round he said he feared for his wife's safety because of the rowdy fans.

He clearly had lost the poise needed on a tedious U.S. Open course.

Unlike Montgomerie, Lehman, Woods and Ernie Els did what they had to do to position themselves perfectly.

Now they have to do it again — and again — only this time with the intense pressure, devilish pin placements and feelings of panic that come with the weekend at the U.S. Open.

Lehman didn't give any strokes back, recovering from two bogeys in the first three holes to shoot an even-par 70 for the 36-hole lead at 3-under-par 137.

Els played with the same calm confidence and magnificent touch he had at Oakmont when he won the 1994 U.S. Open and rallied with a 67 to move within one stroke of Lehman, along with

Angels get past San Antonio, 7-5

By Terry Williamson

The Midland Angels defeated the Texas League first half champion San Antonio Missions 7-5 Friday night, but you can't place too much stock on what is taking place at Christensen Stadium these days.

After all, the Missions had seen to it that the first half race was long over before even coming to town. Now the two teams are posturing for the beginning of the second half that starts Sunday when Midland hosts El Paso while the Missions take on Wichita.

What it all means is that the baseball the fans are seeing now is a little below par. It's not that the two teams aren't trying to win, it's just that the games through today's scheduled double-

Daly walks away from U.S. Open

By David Ginsburg
AP Sports Writer

Daly, in his third tournament since his return from alcohol rehabilitation, walked off the course after playing nine holes in the second round of the Open.

He didn't tell Payne Stewart or Ernie Els, his playing partners. He didn't even tell his caddie, who was waiting on the 10th tee box as Daly cleared out his locker and hopped into his car.

"His caddie was on the 10th tee in a state of panic," said Stuart Reid, the USGA rules official walking with the group.

Daly was 10-over par after 27 holes and was almost certainly going to miss the cut. He later issued a statement through his sponsor, Callaway Golf, citing physical and mental fatigue for his early exit.

"Even though I thought I was going to be strong enough to come right back and play three straight weeks on the tour, I found out I was wrong," he said. "I just started feeling real weak after a few holes today, and by the time I got to No. 9 I was physically exhausted."

Daly, 31, plans to take time off during which he will begin an intensive fitness program and work with a nutritional specialist.

It was the second time this year Daly withdrew in the middle of a tournament — in March, an alcohol-related blowup at the Players Championship resulted in a two-month sabbatical from the tour during which he received treatment at the Betty Ford Center.

Daly, who regularly attends Alcoholics Anonymous meetings, returned to the tour in late May but has yet to come close to displaying the form he showed in winning the 1991 PGA Championship and 1995 British Open.

In his latest comeback — he also visited the Betty Ford Clinic in September 1994 — he finished 74th at the Memorial Tournament after closing with an 80. A week later at the Kemper Open, he shot 77-80 on the weekend to finish 70.

Last year, Daly ranked 189th in fourth-round scoring, continuing a trend of playing poorly when out of contention.

Daly missed the fairway on half his drives Thursday and played the front nine a whopping seven strokes over par before finishing with a 7-over 77.

Calloway spokesman Larry Dorman said Daly simply bowed to the mental and physical pressure associated with his ongoing effort to remain sober.

"For anybody to infer that this has anything whatsoever to do with John drinking, falling off wagon or however you want to phrase it, would be totally incorrect," Dorman said. "He continues to attend AA meetings daily, taking everything one day at a time with regards to alcoholism.

"It was a pure and simple case of exhaustion."

Daly moved 10-over for the tournament after bogeying the ninth hole. As his group headed toward No. 10, Daly walked to his left while his caddie, Els and Stewart headed in the opposite direction toward the tee box.

Els and Stewart waited at the 10th tee for Daly before realizing he wasn't going to show up.

"He never said anything to me. I thought it might have been a back ailment," Els said. "I don't know what he's going through, but to beat the disease he has must take a lot of strength from his mind."

Asked if Daly appeared tired, Els replied, "Quite honestly, no. I didn't see anything wrong with the guy."

Els finally hit his tee shot after learning that Daly had left the course. Daly offered no explanation to the USGA, according to USGA spokesman Craig Smith.

"I'm sure in hindsight, if he had a do-over he would tell them what was happening," Dorman said. "I think he was kind of scared and just embarrassed. He had the shakes during the Kemper and it's happened to him previously at night.

"When it happened to him on the golf course (at the Kemper) it really scared him."

OPEN: Lehman holds 1-shot lead

(From 1B)

Stewart Cink, who also had a 67.

Cink, a 24-year-old pro who has missed the cut eight times in his first full year on the PGA Tour, started with a birdie on the first hole and erased two back nine bogeys with three birdies in getting to 138 along with Els.

Playing with patience and poise — and hitting just enough spectacular shots — Lehman, Els and Woods maintained their composure on a day in which many of those around them were self-destructing.

"I think the history of the U.S. Open is that if you cannot beat yourself, if you're in the lead and don't beat yourself, you have a great chance of winning," Lehman said.

Jeff Maggert also fought his way back into the tournament with a 66, the low round of the day, and finished two rounds at 139.

Because of a nearly three-hour lightning delay, 45 players didn't finish before dark. Among those was Hal Sutton, who started the day at four under par but fell to one under through 15 holes. Mark McNulty was two under through 14 holes.

Steve Stricker, who also began play at four under par, followed his opening-round 66 with a 76. John Daly withdrew abruptly after nine holes and was 10 over par at the time.

Woods, who is trying to become only the second person to win the U.S. Open after trailing by nine strokes, started the day behind 79 golfers and likely would be in the top-10 when the round was completed Saturday morning.

"The key is to keep getting better each day," said Woods. "And right now at one over, if I keep hitting the ball better and better, I'll be right there hopefully on the back nine on Sunday."

Woods appeared much more relaxed Friday than he was a day earlier when he banged clubs and stomped off after the round, refusing to talk to reporters.

His iron play was simply sensational. His three fewer putts on Friday was simply because he put the ball closer to the hole than he did in the first round. He started his round with four birdies in the first seven holes, all on putts of eight feet or less.

"Today I hit the ball much more solid," he said. "Look at my front nine. I stuffed it a lot of times with perfectly pin-high shots."

Woods continued, however, to have problems with the back nine, where he shot a 40 on Thursday.

He made birdies on Nos. 14 and 15 — hitting the ball close both times — but had three bogeys, twice because he hit into the 5-inch deep rough and once after a three-putt from 35 feet following the suspension of play.

Lehman, who played in the same group with Woods, also hit some great iron shots, and he needed them to erase bogeys he made on the second and third holes.

"After that, I played very well the rest of the day," Lehman said.

He hit a 9-iron to eight inches on No. 5, a wedge to eight feet on No. 8 and another 9-iron to two feet to end the front nine.

His lone birdie on the back nine was after yet another perfect 9-iron, this one to six inches on No. 14.

Like Woods, Lehman made a bogey after the lightning delay, missing the green on the final hole.

"I think I've learned some lessons over the last two years," Lehman said, referring to a second-place finish last year and third-place the year before, both times playing in the final group of the day on Sunday.

"As long as I don't go out and beat myself the next two days, I'm going to be a factor on Sunday," Lehman said. "My concentration has definitely gone up a level."

Hurst shares lead at Edina Realty Classic

Asscociated Press

■ Golf Roundup

MAPLE GROVE, Minn. — Pat Hurst opened the Edina Realty Classic the way she ended last week's Oldsmobile Classic — at the top of the leaderboard.

Hurst, who edged Juli Inkster by a stroke last week in Michigan for her first career title, shot a 5-under-par 67 on Friday for a share of the first-round lead with Brandie Burton and Michelle McGann.

"I'm playing well and my confidence is high," said Hurst, 28, the 1989 NCAA champion for San Jose State and 1990 U.S. Amateur winner. "Usually on wide courses, my focus isn't that great, but today it was."

Hurst had six birdies and a bogey on the windspwept Rush Creek course.

"I hit the ball long so this suits my game," Hurst said. "Anytime you can have a wedge in your hand you have an opportunity for a lot of birdies."

Burton, looking for her first victory since winning three times in 1993, had an eagle, four birdies and two bogeys.

"It's nice to be able to bomb your driver. You can rip it and that suits my game a bit," said Burton, who lost to Liselotte Neumann in a four-way playoff last year at Edinburgh USA. "I'm playing well here and have a good feeling in Minnesota. It feels good to be on top of the leaderboard."

McGann was 6-under through 17 holes, but dropped a stroke on her closing hole — No. 9 — after driving into a water hazard.

"I had a few opportunities and hit a few putts that just didn't go in," said McGann, who won the Health-South Inaugural in January. "I just need to keep working on my swing and I'm confident in it."

Kris Tschetter, a former South Dakota high school star who won the 1992 event for her lone LPGA title, was a stroke back along with Leta Lindley, Tracy Hanson and rookie Erika Wicoff.

Michelle Mackall, Donna Wilkins, Mayumi Hirase, Hiromi Kobayashi, Jenny Lidback, Catriona Matthew, Sally Little and Moira Dunn shot 69s.

Kelli Kuehne, the two-time U.S. Women's Amateur champion, opened with a 73 in her first LPGA event as a professional. Kuehne, 20, who is using the first of four allowed sponsor's exemptions, had two birdies and three bogeys.

The former University of Texas star struggled throughout the round with her putter on the hard greens, and also was undone by several poor short-iron shots on her second nine. Still, she was encouraged, especially after finishing the round by rolling in an 18-foot birdie putt on No. 9.

"I hit the ball awesome," she said. "To come out and struggle like I did with the putter and be 1-over, I'm in great shape."

Colbert takes second-round lead

ETOBICOKE, Ontario — Jim Colbert, trying to end the longest winless streak of his senior career, shot his second straight 6-under-par 65 on Friday to take a one-stroke lead in the du Maurier Champions.

Colbert, an 18-time senior winner and the tour's money leader the last two seasons, holed a difficult 10-foot birdie putt on the final hole for the circuit's lowest 36-hole total of the year.

"It looked like it was going to stop three times," said Colbert, winless since the Raley's Gold Rush Classic in October. "I had time to watch it and think 'You made it,' then I had time to think, 'It's not going to stop, it can't stop going the direction it's going.'

"I got to think all of that in 10 feet."

Colbert's round was interrupted by a rain delay of 2 hours, 15 minutes.

"When we started playing, the greens were pretty firm, but now you can kind of throw it in there and it's stopping," Colbert said. "I think that's what is going to determine what everybody shoots."

Australia's Graham Marsh was a stroke back after a 66, missing a 3-foot birdie attempt on St. George's closing hole.

"I left it short, I left a few short today," said Marsh, who teamed with South Africa's John Bland to win the Legends of Golf in March. "I just didn't hit them hard enough."

Jack Kiefer was two back after a 67.

Clinton heads to U.S. Open

WASHINGTON (AP) — What does a golf-starved President Clinton want for Father's Day?

To spend Sunday watching the nation's best golfers at the U.S. Open at the Congressional Country Club in Bethesda, Md.

"It's going to be my Father's Day gift from Chelsea," Clinton said.

Clinton has been unable to play golf since March 14 when he tripped at the Florida home of golfer Greg Norman and tore a knee tendon. Doctors say it will be several months before he can play again.

WWTGA: Barker claims her third title

(From 1B)

184,300 women in 1996. What was ahead of her was not golf, but chemotherapy and the recovery process.

"Golf helped me get through it all," Barker said. "Getting back was the plan."

Golf just became a long-term goal. That meant overcoming some of the side effects of her treatment. The mixture of drugs affected her strength, and the absence from the game took its toll on her conditioning.

"I was so emotional," Barker said. "It wears you out and makes you tired."

And after missing the 1995 tournament, Barker returned to the Women's West Texas Championships in 1996, reaching the quarterfinals. In the 63rd edition, the form that won her two titles and the desire to get her back to this point combined to help her reach the finals. She defeated Amarillo's Kristin Clarke in the quarterfinals after being 2-down with four holes to go. On Thursday, Barker defeated Midland's Paula King 2-up after seeing a 4-up lead dissolve to even with two holes to go.

Friday's round really wasn't about having to battle. It was about the experience factor that Barker had over Sheets. Barker was teeing off in her sixth final. Sheets, the fourth flight title winner in 1996, has played golf for less than two years.

"That made a difference in the match," Barker said. "I was comfortable and maybe she wasn't."

Sheets came out and bogeyed the first three holes to allow Barker to go 3-up after three pars. Barker then chipped in from 18 yards for eagle on the par 5, 4th hole. She followed with a birdie on No. 5 and par on No. 6 to build an insurmountable lead.

"She has been in this so many times, and she was on today," said Sheets, who defeated defending champion Robin Madison 3 and 2 Thursday to claim a spot in the finals. "I was also nervous. I told a friend that my arms weren't long enough because I got so tense. I couldn't hit the ball. When you do it a lot, it snow balls."

Barker, who along with her husband Larry coaches golf at Lubbock Coronado, Lubbock Monterey and Lubbock High School, knew from there it was a matter of hanging on.

"I kept trying to think that we were even," Barker said. "I was most nervous when I was six ahead because you don't want to lose it. I didn't believe she could win six holes from me, but I thought I could go spasmo."

Sheets did have some chances. Barker bogeyed Nos. 7, 8 and 10, and double-bogeyed No. 9. Sheets could only get one hole back with a bogey on the par 5, 9th. It was like the Odessa Country Club member was out of her element.

"This is a whole different experience playing in the championship flight," Sheets said. "The biggest difference is the opponents don't make many mistakes. When she did, I didn't take advantage of them. Last year, I was in awe of these people. I know I can play with them. My brain has to get there."

Both golfers will be in the field next year at Abilene Country Club. Barker will be going for her fourth title, which would place in her in select company. Fort Worth's Mrs. R.E. Winger (1936-39), Fort Worth's Sandra Palmer (1960-63), and Amarillo's Mrs. Ralph Thompson (1974-77) have won it four times. Midland's Pat Garner Stapler won the title five times (1951-52, 1954-55 and 1959).

WWTGA NOTES: Amarillo golfers won four championship bracket titles of the nine flights and three of the consolation titles... Midland golfers to come away with titles are Jo Dickson (first flight), Dede Plank (second flight consolation) and Hazel Pierce (eighth flight consolation).

Friday's match play results from the 63rd Annual Women's West Texas Golf Association Championship held at Green Tree Country Club.

Greer's homers put Rangers past Giants

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON — Rusty Greer kept the Texas Rangers from becoming the first victim of an interleague sweep.

Greer hit a two-run homer in the fifth inning, then hit a game-winning homer in the ninth as the Texas Rangers rallied to beat the San Francisco Giants 6-5 Friday night.

Bill Ripken brought Texas back from a 5-4 deficit in the eighth with an RBI double off Doug Henry, giving him six hits and a sacrifice fly in his last seven at-bats with runners in scoring position.

John Wetteland (4-0), who saved all of the New York Yankees' wins against Atlanta in the World Series last October, pitched a scoreless ninth.

Greer then connected off Rich Rodriguez (2-3), the second time this season he hit a game-winning homer in the Rangers' last at-bat.

Texas, which lost to the Giants 4-3 Thursday in baseball's first interleague game, wasted a chance to go ahead in the eighth. After Ripken's double, Damon Buford walked bit Ivan Rodriguez hit an inning-ending groundout.

Juan Gonzalez' 13th homer put Texas ahead 2-0 in the second, but San Francisco tied it on solo homers by J.T. Snow in the second and Barry Bonds in the fifth. Snow hit an RBI double later in the inning for a 3-2 lead.

Greer's fifth homer put Texas ahead 4-3, but the Giants tied it in the sixth when Ken Hill threw a wild pitch and Rodriguez made a throwing error from behind the plate that allowed the run to score.

Bonds led off the seventh with a double, moved to third on a groundout and scored on another Hill wild pitch, which bounced off Rodriguez's leg and rolled to the backstop.

The night wasn't all bad for Rodriguez. He ended the fifth and seventh innings by tagging out Snow in home-plate collisions, the first coming on a throw from right by Gonzalez, playing the outfield for the first time this year.

Key sacrifice propels Orioles by Braves

Associated Press

■ Interleague Games

ATLANTA — Jimmy Key put down a perfect sacrifice bunt. Cal Ripken drove in a run with a hit-and-run single. The Baltimore Orioles would probably do all right in the National League, too.

The American League's top team gained the upper hand in the battle for interleague supremacy, beating the Atlanta Braves 4-3 Friday night in a game that showed all the finer points of baseball's landmark experiment.

"If someone was trying to sell the concept of interleague play, all they have to do is look at this series," said Ripken, who received a standing ovation in his first regular-season appearance in an NL park. "You could not pick two better teams to start off with."

The Orioles scored four runs in the sixth to break a scoreless tie, then held on when the Braves showed off some AL-type power.

"They were hitting home runs and we were bunting runners up," said Key (11-1), who outdueled Greg Maddux (7-3) in a game reminiscent of their matchup in the deciding game of last year's World Series. "We got the National League runs."

Baltimore put together five singles, including Ripken's run-scoring blooper to right on a perfect hit-and-run play. Key, whose had never batted in a regular-season game, contributed a sacrifice bunt during the rally.

"That's what we've been practicing," said Key, whose only previous at-bat came during the 1992 World Series. "We knew (the pitchers) weren't going to get any hits, but a bunt might make the difference, especially against Greg."

Trailing 4-1, the Braves hit two solo homers in the eighth. Chipper Jones homered in his third straight game and Eddie Perez hit a drive into the left-field stands.

But Jesse Orosco came on to strike out Ryan Klesko before turning it over to Randy Myers, who picked up his 21st save by retiring the Braves in order in the ninth.

The Orioles have the majors' best record at 43-19, while Atlanta leads the NL at 42-23.

Brewers 4, Cubs 2

CHICAGO — Jose Valentin drove in three runs as the Milwaukee Brewers beat the Chicago Cubs, the first time an AL team visited Wrigley Field in a real game since the 1945 World Series.

Jeff D'Amico (3-3) gave up five hits in eight innings, struck out five and walked one. Doug Jones finished with a perfect ninth for his 15th save, sending the Cubs to their seventh loss in eight games.

White Sox 3, Reds 1

CINCINNATI — An interleague throwback to the 1919 "Black Sox" scandal wound up as just another typical night for Albert Belle.

The Chicago White Sox outfielder sneered at Cincinnati owner Marge Schott when she tried to introduce herself during batting practice Friday, then hit a two-run homer in a victory over the Reds.

The Reds sold 31,682 tickets for the game, their biggest crowd since opening day.

Expos 4, Tigers 3

MONTREAL — Some interleague matchups don't generate excitement.

Omar Olivares got the first triple by an AL pitcher in 24 years, but Henry Rodriguez hit a two-run homer as the Montreal Expos beat the Detroit Tigers in their interleague opener.

The game drew 20,333, slightly above the Expos' average of 19,281 after 36 games.

Pirates 5, Royals 3

PITTSBURGH — For two teams that had never played a real game against each other, Kansas City and Pittsburgh needed only a dozen pitches to develop a rivalry.

Jeff King, a former Pirate, hit a two-run homer on the first pitch he saw back at Three Rivers Stadium. But ex-Royals player Joe Randa answered with a tying homer, triple and three RBIs as the Pirates rallied to beat Kansas City.

Red Sox 8, Mets 4

NEW YORK — Eleven years later, Boston stopped every groundball and the Mets could muster little magic.

In a rematch of their memorable 1986 World Series, the Red Sox defeated the Mets before 44,443 in the first interleague game for both teams.

John Valentin and Troy O'Leary hit consecutive home runs in the fifth inning for Boston, playing at Shea Stadium for just the second time since October 1986, when it lost Games 6 and 7 to the Mets. Mo Vaughn added a two-run homer in the ninth as the Red Sox won their third in a row.

Carl Everett homered twice and Todd Hundley and Alex Ochoa also homered for New York, which drew its largest crowd since April 29, 1995.

Phillies 4, Blue Jays 3

PHILADELPHIA — In a rematch of the 1993 World Series, Gregg Jefferies drove in three runs and reliever Wayne Gomes (1-0), called up from Triple-A earlier in the day, was the winning pitcher in his major league debut.

Jefferies' bases-loaded single drove in Mickey Morandini and Darren Daulton in the seventh inning, giving the loss to Paul Spoljaric (0-3).

Marlins 2, Yankees 1

MIAMI — Jim Mecir (0-4) walked Charles Johnson on a 3-2 pitch with the bases loaded and no outs in the 12th as Florida won the first extra-inning interleague game.

The Marlins tied the game on Moises Alou's RBI single with two outs in the ninth off David Cone

Twins bomb Astros in interleague debut

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — Chuck Knoblauch couldn't quite believe he was playing a game that counted.

"It was strange," he said after getting four hits and driving in three runs to lead the Minnesota Twins over the Houston Astros 8-1 Friday night. "You had to fight through telling yourself it was a real game."

It was the first interleague game for both teams, and it marked a triumphant return to Houston for Knoblauch.

The former Bellaire High School star will be honored with a special day Saturday, and had many friends and family members at the ballpark.

"Maybe they brought me some luck," he said. "For some reason, I was really relaxed and I felt comfortable at the plate."

Knoblauch's father Ray, who coached his son at Bellaire, will throw out the first pitch at Saturday night's game.

"This is a building I came to and watched as a kid," Knoblauch said. "I used to say to myself, 'Can I play at that level?' It was nice to finally play here and the way it worked out it couldn't have been better."

Knoblauch hit a two-run triple over right fielder Derek Bell's head in the fourth inning and had an RBI double in the eighth.

Once again, the Twins were unbeatable against the NL in a dome — only this time it was on the road. In 1987 and 1991, Minnesota won the World Series in seven games by sweeping all its Metrodome games against the Cardinals and Braves.

"You had to keep reminding yourself that this was a real game," said Paul Molitor, who hit a two-run homer. "You have to say, 'We're playing in Houston.' But as hard as it was to realize, you have to understand it's going to show up in the standings."

Molitor, usually the Twins' designated hitter, played first base for the second time this season. He was 0-for-3 before his seventh-inning homer in the seventh off Jose Lima.

The crowd of 30,956 was well above the Astros' average of 20,673 and was the fifth-highest of the season.

Brad Radke (6-5) became the first Twins pitcher to hit in a regular-season game since Bert Blyleven on Oct. 1, 1972, at California and flied out in the second. Radke allowed six hits in eight innings.

"Not knowing any of the hitters, I knew I needed to throw strikes," Radke said. "This gave me a weird feeling. It seemed I was more nervous about hitting than pitching. Maybe that took an edge off my pitching. It was just weird to stand up there and see Astros on their jerseys. You wonder, 'What's going on?'"

Donne Wall (2-3) gave up four runs and seven hits in five innings.

"If you go back and catalog all our mistakes, it would be a long list," Astros manager Larry Dierker said. "I thought it was our worst game of the year."

Silver Bullets show they're willing to brawl like men

ATLANTA (AP) — Kim Braatz-Voisard held her temper in check. Even after she was hit by a pitch, the Colorado Silver Bullets outfielder stayed calm. Then the pitcher laughed at her, and she lost it — prompting an all-out brawl.

"If they were playing with guys, the same thing would have happened," said teammate Tamara Ivie. "We just didn't want to say, 'Well, we're girls ...'"

It was inevitable.

After four years of trying to show that they can play baseball just like the men, the Silver Bullets women's team showed they can brawl like them, too.

The bench-clearing melee came Wednesday night in Albany as Colorado trailed 10-6 with two outs and nobody on in the ninth inning against the Americus Travelers, the state champions in the Georgia Recreation and Parks 18-and-under league.

"Their catcher was mouthing off the whole game," Braatz-Voisard said Friday during an interview at Hartsfield Atlanta International Airport before the club left for a game Saturday night in Tulsa, Okla. "After the second pitch in the last inning, I turned to him and told him to be quiet and play the game.

"The very next pitch hit me. I thought it was pretty obvious what had happened," she said. "I was angry and frustrated and stepped to walk toward first base. I looked at the pitcher (Greg Dominy) and he started laughing at me. That's when I lost it."

As she headed for the mound, players from both team weren't too far behind.

ANGELS: Midland edges Missions

(From 1B)

header don't mean nuthin'. It's hard to put together a meaningful outing without either team having much to gain.

For instance, there were seven errors in this one, albeit most were of the sun-plagued variety. Too, the teams are resting players for the second half start Sunday while they have the chance.

The Angels have now won three of the first four games against the Missions in this series. If they had done this two weeks ago in San Antonio, these games might have a huge bearing in the first half standings. Instead, Midland lost six of seven to the Missions when they really needed to put on the pressure.

The Angels scored three runs in the fifth and four more in the sixth to take the win. They scored the three runs in the fifth with just one hit as San Antonio walked two batters and made three errors. Not pretty. In the sixth, the Angels got four runs on four hits and another Missions' error. Freddie Diaz drove in two runs with a single. Cale Carter, who had two hits brought in another and Randy Betten also drove in a run, his second of the night.

The Missions held a 3-0 lead going into the bottom of the fifth and tried to climb back into the game with two runs in the seventh on a homer by Eddie Davis and Chris Durkin scoring from third on a wild pitch by Anthony Chavez.

To the credit of the Missions, San Antonio stayed in the game despite having on the bench the Texas League's leading hitter and stolen base artist Kevin Gibbs, the TL RBI leader in J.P. Roberge and catcher Paul LoDuca, who has hit in 20 straight games.

The Angels, too, also rested some players with Kevin Young, Jamie Burke, Jason Herrick and Bret Hemphill all on the bench.

The bright spot for Midland, however, was the starting outing by Rafel Quirico, who allowed only five hits in six innings. He was charged with five runs, but only two were earned. Chavez recorded his third save with three shutout innings of relief. The Angels also dealt the loss to Mission starter Eric Weaver, who suffered only his second loss in nine decisions this year.

ANGEL DUST: Today's doubleheader starts at 6 p.m., and thankfully, brings the first half to a close. All teams will start over with a clean slate on Sunday as the Diablos come to town. One wonders just how much importance the Texas League teams place on the league races. The doubleheader is to make up a rainout this week. It was scheduled for Saturday when both teams must start the second half of play on Sunday, putting both at a disadvantage for facing new teams. Also, Midland has 7-1 Mike Bovee scheduled for one of the games today. Although Bovee had a rough outing in his last hill performance, this isn't exactly setting up your best pitching for the start of a new race.

BULLS: Chicago dynasty rolls along

siderable internal discord and major questions of uncertainty surrounding their futures for next year.

But at this moment, they had accomplished the one thing they had set out to do — win.

"No, I didn't enjoy this journey — it's been filled with injuries and suspensions, but we had a great run," Jackson said.

And aside from Kerr's shot and Kukoc's clinching dunk, Jordan and Pippen practically did it all in Game 6.

Jordan was brilliant again, having his highest scoring game of the series with 39 points. Pippen, with 23 points, was the only other Chicago player in double figures.

"The guys played hard, they did a lot of things out there," Karl Malone, the league MVP who had 21 points but missed eight of 15 free throws. "You've got to give them a lot of credit. We had a great year. We had opportunities, but just didn't do it. ... I don't feel I let anybody down. If they do, to hell with them."

Jordan and Pippen combined for 15 points in the fourth quarter when Chicago overcame a Utah team that managed to maintain an advantage most of the game.

Russell hit his fourth 3-pointer and Howard Eisley hit a tough hanging jumper toward the end of the period to put the Jazz up 70-61. Jud Buechler pulled the Bulls within six, 70-64 at the end of the quarter, by making a 3-pointer off a scramble for an offensive rebound with 27 seconds left.

The Bulls quickly made up almost all of their deficit by starting the fourth quarter with a flurry. A pair of foul shots by Pippen, a jumper by Kerr and a pull-up 3-pointer by Pippen left Chicago trailing 73-71 just over 1 1/2 minutes in.

Utah failed to score on its next to possessions, and the United Center erupted with 8:55 left when Kerr buried a 3-pointer from the corner to give the Bulls a 74-73 lead, their first since early in the first quarter.

The Jazz took the lead back when Jeff Hornacek pulled up for a 3-pointer with 6:42 left, but they then started exhibiting signs of a team not used to the pressure that comes in the fourth quarter of games with the championship on the line.

First, Shandon Anderson was wide open for a dunk that would have put Utah ahead by three. Instead, he inexplicably tried a reverse layup and missed.

Jordan came down and drilled a pull-up jumper, giving Chicago an 82-81 lead. Jordan and Malone then traded baskets, Jordan hit a wide open jumper with 2:01 left and Russell drilled his fifth 3-pointer of the night to tie it at 86-86 with 1:44 left.

What followed were a series of misses, each one more excruciating than the next. Pippen missed twice from in close, Dennis Rodman missed a tip, Malone missed a turnaround, Jordan missed a drive and Anderson — a rookie who drew the defensive assignment on Jordan for most of the fourth quarter — blew a left-handed layup attempt with 28 seconds left to set up Kerr's game-winner.

The Jazz were the fifth Western Conference opponent to face Chicago in the final round. They ended up the same as the Lakers, Portland, Phoenix and Seattle — going home second-best.

Utah gave basketball fans everywhere a taste of unselfish team play and a glimpse of the greatness of future Hall of Famers Malone and Stockton.

But the world also got to see the latest chapter in the Bulls run of supremacy, and the argument can be made that this dynasty has become the second-greatest in the history of the league, second only to the Boston Celtics of the late '50s and '60s — a team that won 10 championships in 11 years.

This season's accomplishments were greeted with an almost ho-hum expectedness. They won 69 regular-season games, an accomplishment achieved only once before, yet went into the postseason being called vulnerable by a league searching for hope in the fact that the Bulls didn't always look perfect.

Yet they won. They always won. Whether it was close games, blowouts or playoff games, the Bulls always managed to come out ahead in the end.

This series was a perfect example.

The Jazz could have — maybe should have — won Games 1 and 5, but instead went down to heartbreaking defeats as Jordan won the opener with a buzzer-beating 3-pointer and took over the fifth game with one of the more memorable performances in NBA Finals history, scoring 38 points.

In the end, Jordan did it with a pass to Kerr.

Someone else got to make the championship shot, and somehow that had to make this one seem all the better to the Bulls — a team that became a dynasty Friday night. Notes: Malone led Utah with 21 points, Jeff Hornacek had 18, Russell 17 and Stockton 13. ... The Bulls arena operating crew played music at earsplitting levels, but Todd Martin, the NBA official monitoring a noise meter, said it was at or below the allowable standard of 95 decibels. During Games 3, 4 and 5 in Salt Lake City, the league ordered the Jazz to turn down the volume on the arena rock and the public address announcer. ... Rodman drew Stockton's third foul in the third quarter by flopping and drawing a charge. The refs seemed to make up for it by not calling fouls when Jordan was hacked on his next two shots.

Kerr comes through in clutch

By Mike Nadel
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO — Steve Kerr, who struggled with his shooting during the NBA Finals, made the biggest basket of his career to give the Chicago Bulls their fifth championship in seven years.

Kerr, who shot only 30 percent in the first five games, sank an 18-footer with five seconds left that lifted the Bulls over the Utah Jazz 90-86 Friday night in Game 6.

The shot brought back memories of John Paxson's title-clinching shot for the Bulls against the Phoenix Suns in 1993.

"I'll tell you what, it's been pretty tough to live up to John Paxson and what he did," Kerr said. "I'm just glad I finally made one of those shots."

Kerr made two other fourth-quarter jumpers before sinking the shot that put the Bulls up 88-86 in the closing seconds.

He was wide open for the winner because Jordan split the double-team of John Stockton and Bryon Russell and saw Kerr standing unguarded just outside the free-throw line. Jordan, chosen NBA Finals MVP for the fifth time, had made the winning shots in Games 1 and 5.

"Michael said, 'Stockton's going to double me, so be ready,'" Kerr said. "Stockton's been leaving me all series and I haven't made shots. It's about time I made one."

Kerr also made a 20-foot jumper and a 3-pointer as the Bulls used a 10-0 un early in the fourth quarter to erase a 73-64 deficit. Jordan was on the bench at the time.

Kerr, signed as a free agent in 1994, was supposed to succeed Paxson as Jordan's designated bailout-pass target. But Kerr has struggled in the role.

The NBA's all-time leader in 3-point percentage, Kerr had missed an open 3-pointer after taking a pass from Jordan in the final minute of Game 4. Had he made it, the Bulls would have had a 76-73 lead. Instead, they went on to lose 78-73.

"Steve's been fighting with himself because Game 4 he missed a 3-pointer," Jordan said. "His wife told me he was very frustrated ... that he let the team down. He was very disappointed.

"When (coach Phil Jackson) set the play at the end, everyone in the gym knew it was coming to me. I said, 'Steve, this is your chance.' He said, 'Give me the ball.' John Paxson used to say the same thing.

"Tonight, Steve Kerr earned his wings."

Chicago celebrates another championship

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago Bulls fans didn't even wait for the final seconds of Friday night's deciding game of the NBA Finals before flowing into the city's streets to celebrate the team's fifth NBA championship.

The shouting, hugging and dancing began as Steve Kerr hit the game-winning shot with five seconds remaining, and the celebration gained momentum as the Bulls finished off the Utah Jazz 90-86.

"They won because they're the best team in the NBA. They have experience, talent and Michael Jordan," said George Weymar, 31, of Chicago.

Weymar was among hundreds of fans who poured out of bars on the city's near north side to celebrate in the streets, which were heavily guarded by police in riot gear and on horseback due to past violence.

"We're not allowing anyone to drink on the street. One warning and we lock them up. ... It's OK if people legitimately celebrate, but others just want to act foolish," Deputy Police Commander Jim Mauer said as he supervised officers in the area.

A spokesman for the Chicago Police Department said the police had received more than 100 reports of shots being fired shortly after game, but some of those could have been fireworks. No injuries were immediately reported.

Camby caught with marijuana

SOUTH WINDSOR, Conn. (AP) — Former University of Massachusetts basketball star Marcus Camby was arrested on a marijuana charge near his home early Friday after police spotted his car drifting across a road.

Police said they suspected a drunk driver when they pulled Camby over about 2 a.m. near South Windsor High School, about 10 miles from where he played his high school ball in Hartford. Camby told police he had not been drinking, but the officer smelled burned marijuana in the car, said Sgt. Matthew D. Reed.

A search of Camby's rented car turned up one marijuana cigarette and burned stubs of two others in an ashtray, police said.

Camby, 23, of South Windsor, was taken into custody on charges of possession of marijuana and failure to drive in the proper lane. He was released after posting $1,000 bond and scheduled to appear in Manchester Superior Court on June 25.

Camby left UMass after his junior year and signed an $8.4 million, three-year contract with the Toronto Raptors after he was picked second in the 1996 NBA draft.

Camby has an unlisted phone number and could not be reached for comment. Phone calls from The Associated Press to his representatives were not immediately returned.

The NBA's drug policy includes only cocaine and heroin as banned substances.

Judge: Michigan must reveal coach's reprimand to paper

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — A judge ruled that the University of Michigan must release a letter that reprimanded men's basketball coach Steve Fisher for his handling of several incidents involving a booster.

In a written opinion released Friday, Washtenaw County Circuit Court Judge David S. Swartz rejected the university's argument that releasing the document would be an invasion of Fisher's privacy.

The Ann Arbor News had asked for the letter.

Michigan reprimanded Fisher for not immediately telling athletic director Joe Roberson about an incident that could have become an NCAA violation.

According to Michigan's report to the NCAA in March, Detroit booster Ed Martin attempted to secure an apartment for two players last summer. In addition, he also offered a player's family airline tickets.

Fisher halted the effort to obtain an apartment, and the player's family did not accept the tickets, the report said.

An NCAA investigation into the program began more than a year ago, but so far has revealed only two minor violations involving Martin. The university has hired a Kansas law firm to conduct an investigation, the results of which will be turned over to the NCAA.

Michigan came under scrutiny after a 1996 crash of an expensive sport-utility vehicle driven by Wolverines player Maurice Taylor.

Earlier, the judge ruled the university had to turn over all documents from the university's investigation of the program.

CARR: Tech star will come back next year the June 25 draft along with Battie, a 6-11 center projected as high as the second pick overall. However, Carr emphasized at the time he could return.

(From 1B)

Coach James Dickey, already faced with rebuilding his frontcourt minus Battie and departing senior forward Gionet Cooper, was jubilant that the Big 12 Conference's leading scorer was back.

"There's no question in my mind he will be an NBA player," said Dickey, who bowed his head in shock moments earlier when Carr jokingly announced he was going pro. "Our common goal was that he would be a lottery pick, whether it was this year or next year."

Carr, who averaged 23 points per game last season, estimated that he could have gone as high as 13th in the draft with the Cleveland Cavaliers. Some told him he could go even higher, while others projected him barely making the first round.

Carr and junior Stanley Bonewitz give the Red Raiders two proven shooting guards. Point guard Rayford Young was impressive in his freshman season, and transfer Archie Myers heated up late.

"We're going to be an outstanding perimeter team," Dickey said. "Obviously without Tony, we're going to have to change some of the things we do next year."

Carr's 6-5 stature might make him more valuable with point guard skills, and he said he intends to improve his ballhandling and mid-range jumpshot.

"Another year will do me well," said Carr, who discussed his future with dozens of NBA teams. "A lot of people thought there were a lot of things I needed to work on."

The most experienced returning frontcourt player will be senior Da'Mon Roberts, who was lost last season to injury after playing 22 games as a reserve in 1995-96.

Vying for time at center will be sophomores Ross Carmichael and Cliff Owens, each of whom played sparingly behind Battie. Freshman James Johnson, a 6-8 recruit from Fort Worth, also could contribute.

Dickey said it's too early to speculate on a starting lineup.

"I can tell you this," he said. "Cory will start."

De La Hoya hopes to find knockout punch

By Tim Dahlberg
AP Sports Writer

SAN ANTONIO — It's a look as fearsome as any in boxing, one Oscar De La Hoya usually follows with an attack that can be just as frightening.

Julio Cesar Chavez saw it just before he was demolished in four rounds by De La Hoya. It was the last thing Rafael Ruelas saw before De La Hoya took him out with a savage attack in the second round.

If De La Hoya has his way, it will return Saturday night when he defends his newly won WBC welterweight title in the Alamodome against David Kamau.

"It's the eye of the tiger," De La Hoya said. "I just get that focus and that concentration. It's tunnel vision and I just go out there and do my job."

It's also a look that has been missing in action recently for De La Hoya, who needed 12 rounds to beat Pernell Whitaker two months ago to win the 147-pound title and also went the distance in his previous fight against Miguel Angel Gonzalez.

Now, recommitted to becoming more of an offensive fighter again under new trainer Emanuel Steward, De La Hoya hopes to become once again the kind of puncher who knocked out 20 of his first 22 opponents.

"People pay their money to see good fights," De La Hoya said. "I want to get back to getting the knockouts in the early rounds. I want to be more aggressive, like the way I was before."

De La Hoya turned to Steward following the Whitaker fight after becoming disillusioned with the defensive training tactics of former trainer Jesus Rivero.

Steward had worked in the opposite corner when De La Hoya fought Gonzalez, and was impressed with what he saw.

"I never saw such fierce, competitive eyes, almost like an animal," Steward said. "You see him transform into almost a cold-blooded killer in the ring."

The 24-year-old De La Hoya (24-0, 20 knockouts), on a pace to fight five times this year, figures to have an easier target against the stand-up Kamau than he did against the wily and slippery Whitaker.

That could mean a return of his knockout power, though Kamau (28-1, 21 knockouts) has never been stopped. De La Hoya weighed the class limit at Friday's weigh-in, while Kamau was 146 3/4.

"I'll be happy with a knockout," De La Hoya said. "My last couple of opponents thought I had no power because I wasn't getting any knockouts. I was losing respect from my opponents, and that gets them more confident."

De La Hoya is a heavy favorite to retain his 147-pound title on a fight card that includes a WBC super featherweight title defense by Genaro Hernandez against Russian Anatoly Alexandrov. The fights will be televised by HBO beginning at 9:30 p.m. EDT.

De La Hoya stopped Hernandez in the sixth round of their Sept. 9, 1995, fight for the WBO lightweight title. He went on to move up in weight and win the junior welterweight title a year ago against Chavez, defending it once before taking on Whitaker.

Kamau, a native of Kenya, is best known for his only loss, by majority decision to Chavez Sept. 16, 1995, for the WBC 140-pound title. In that fight, Kamau was ahead on the scorecards before being knocked down in the eighth round.

Dale Jarrett drives his Ford Thunderbird during practice on the two-mile oval at Michigan Speedway Friday in Brooklyn, Mich. Jarrett qualified for the pole postion for Sunday's Miller 400.

USAC denies protests by Foyt, Team Menard

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The U.S. Auto Club on Friday denied protests filed by A.J. Foyt Enterprises and Team Menard, reaffirming its decision to declare Arie Luyendyk the winner of last week's True Value 500.

In the decision, USAC referred to its rule that a race is considered complete when the checkered flag is displayed.

Officials decided Luyendyk had completed the required 208 laps when Foyt drivers Billy Boat and Davey Hamilton crossed the finish line one-two under the checkered flag.

Faulty equipment miscalculated Luyendyk's lap total, and he finished 210 laps before the checkered flag was dropped.

Luyendyk appealed the finish in what turned into a well-publicized scuffle with Foyt in Victory Circle at the Texas Motor Speedway. Luyendyk stormed the Foyt team celebration to demand he be named the victor after pointing out his problems with the electronic scoring equipment.

Foyt took issue with Luyendyk's protest, struck the driver across the back of his head, grabbed him around the throat and threw the Dutchman to the ground.

After an all-night review, USAC, which sanctions the Indy Racing League event, gave the win to Luyendyk and placed Boat and Hamilton in second and third place, respectively.

Foyt could not be reached for comment Friday.

Team Menard also protested the next-day ruling that shuffled several top 10 finishes, saying driver Tony Stewart should have placed second instead of fifth. He crashed after his engine blew on the next-to-last lap. USAC ruled a lap audit showed four drivers completed more laps than Stewart and reaffirmed its decision.

Both teams have until 1 p.m. Wednesday to appeal the ruling.

Jarrett wins pole for Michigan 400

By Ken Berger
AP Sports Writer

BROOKLYN, Mich. — Dale Jarrett, who went from steady to suspect in recent weeks, proved things were back to normal Friday by winning the pole for the Miller 400 at Michigan Speedway.

A week after a third-place finish at Pocono atoned for three straight poor finishes, Jarrett secured his second pole of the season and fifth of his career with a speed of 183.669 mph. He joined fellow Ford driver Mark Martin as the only multiple pole-sitters this season, delighting an estimated crowd of 40,000 that filled the entire front grandstand on a warm, sunny day.

Jarrett was even happier than his fans.

"Everybody's been asking the question, 'Whats wrong?' " said Jarrett, whose third-place at Pocono broke a string of three successive finishes out of the top 25. "We knew we didn't have a problem. We were leading races and running up front, but things weren't going our way."

Jarrett had various engine troubles in finishing 35th at Talladega, 27th at Charlotte and 32nd at Dover — a rare dry spell for Robert Yates' steady Ford driver. For one lap on this sunny afternoon, there was nothing wrong with Jarrett or his car.

In a qualifying coincidence, Jarrett's speed was identical to the one he posted at this track last August. Back then, it was only good for 11th, but Jarrett won the race.

The top five spots were dominated by Chevys. Joe Nemechek, fastest in practice, qualified second at 183.379 mph. Ricky Craven, the last driver to attempt to qualify, was third. Sterling Marlin was fourth, and Ted Musgrave rounded out the top five in a Ford.

After running 10th-fastest in practice, Jarrett and his crew decided not to tinker with the car. Jarrett, one of the last drivers to make a qualifying run, decided cooler temperatures late in the afternoon would work in his favor.

"We seriously were never even contemplating the pole," said Jarrett, who is fourth in the Winston Cup point standings. "We were trying to get our car good enough for the top 10."

Dale Earnhardt, looking to end a career-worst-tying 40-race winless streak, will start 22nd at the track where he has two of his 70 career victories.

"We've been off a little bit the entire practice, and I'm not sure exactly why," said Earnhardt, the seven-time Winston Cup champion. "We need some more motor."

Michalczewski upsets Hill to gain three titles

DUESSELDORF, Germany — Dariusz Michalczewski, a Polish-born German, pounded out a unanimous decision over Virgil Hill on Friday night to become the first man in history to hold three light heavyweight titles.

Michalczewski, the undefeated WBO champion, used his power to take control of the fight in the fifth round as he stripped the American of his WBA and IBF belts in a punishing fight.

The three judges scored the 12-round bout 117-112, 116-113, 118-110, ending Hill's string of successful title defenses at 21.

"The fight was unbelievably hard," Hill said. "It's a tough loss for me, a surprising loss — it's going to take time for me to get used to it."

Michalczewski, 34-0 with 28 knockouts, pressured Hill throughout the fight and rocked the North Dakota boxer with a hard right and two left hooks in the fifth round.

Hill (43-2) won the first two rounds, but the fight began slipping away in the fourth round when Michalczewski rediscovered his right hook to the delight of the 15,000 fans in attendance.

Michalczewski surprised the American and snapped back his head three times with the new weapon.

Jones, Greene win sizzling 100-meter dashes

By Bert Rosenthal
AP Track Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — The new breed of American sprinters asserted themselves Friday night at the USA Championships, with Marion Jones and Maurice Greene streaking to victories in the 100-meter dashes.

Jones, 21, the women's sensation at the championships, ran her third straight strong race, winning in 10.97 seconds, after two-time Olympic gold medalist Gail Devers withdrew.

Jones, who electrified the spectators at Indiana University Track and Field Stadium with the year's two fastest times in Thursday night's prelims and semifinals, clocking 10.98 and 10.92, won her first national title in a race run into a headwind.

The men's 100 final also was a dazzler, as Greene, 22, won in 9.90, making him the third-fastest American ever, behind only Leroy Burrell and Carl Lewis. Greene's time was the second-fastest in the world this year, just behind the 9.89 by Ato Boldon of Trinidad & Tobago.

Jones was a two-time scholastic athlete of the year while competing in track and field in high school at Thousand Oaks, Calif., and the point guard of North Carolina's 1995 NCAA basketball champions.

While her sudden emergence was somewhat of a surprise because she had not devoted much time to track and field in the past two years due to basketball and injuries, she did not consider her victory unexpected.

"I've been training hard for 13 weeks," she said. "In my mind, I'm the world's fastest woman."

Still, she was not satisfied.

"This was perhaps the worst race of the week for me," Jones said. "It was not a great start."

Jones had shown her potential in high school, when as a 16-year-old junior, she finished fifth in the 100 and fourth in the 200 at the 1992 Olympic trials.

But she declined a place on the Olympic as a 400-meter relay alternate, saying, "I don't want to rush things."

More mature last year, Jones had hoped to take another shot at the Olympics, but she broke a bone in her left foot for a second time and her chance disintegrated.

Now she is healthy and ready for a shot at a title in the World Championships in Greece in August.

Devers, the 1993 world champion, withdrew from the final, claiming a sore right calf muscle.

Greene, who never previously had won a major title, had shown his strong sprinting form Thursday night by running 9.96 — one of five to break the 10-second barrier during the prelims.

In the final, he edged 22-year-old Tim Montgomery, second at 9.92. Mike Marsh nipped Jon Drummond for third. Both were timed in 10.03.

Kenny Harrison, 1996 Olympic gold medalist in the triple jump, won his fourth national title and second in a row, soaring 55 feet, 8 1/4 inches into a headwind on his final attempt. Allen Johnson, the Olympic champion in the 110 hurdles, also repeated as national champion, clocking 13.25.

Mike Mykytok took the men's 10,000 in a photo finish at 28: 43.93, edging Rueben Reina, who had the same time. Lynn Jennings won her ninth outdoor title, taking the 10,000 at 32: 26.41.

American record-holder Dawn Ellerbe set a meet record of 206-7 in winning the women's hammer throw. Niambi Dennis was a surprise winner of the women's triple jump, leaping 44-8 3/4.

Farmer-Patrick speaks out about steroid investigation

By John Maher
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN — Sandra Farmer-Patrick won't be running this weekend at the USA Track and Field Championships, but she won't be hiding, either.

"I'll have my VIP pass; I'll make sure people see me," she said. "At first I didn't want to go because it would be too stressful, but my attorneys and agent said I need to go, that I didn't do anything wrong. But this really has put my life on hold. It's like there's a dark cloud hanging over it."

Farmer-Patrick has been at the eye of a storm since a May 18 article in the Sunday Times of London reported that she was facing a four-year ban for failing a drug test.

Almost a month after that report, Farmer-Patrick and her attorney, Mimi Dane, said she has yet to receive written notification from USA Track and Field officials. Farmer-Patrick also is upset about the way her case has been handled compared to that of Mary Slaney, also under suspicion of using performance-enhancing drugs.

Farmer-Patrick said, "I've heard that USA Track and Field is in such a shambles. They have all these accusations of drug coverups and that at this point they feel like they have to make a statement to the IAAF (International Amateur Athletic Federation), the media and everyone else. I feel like a victim. I feel like I'm caught up in the process of this, the politics. There's no reason for me not to be competing at the national championship."

Wednesday, Farmer-Patrick was at her suburban home in Wells Branch rather than readying for competition in Indianapolis. Her 2-year-old daughter, Sierra Channel, was playing nearby and husband, David, was home on a lunch break from Home Depot.

The 400-meter hurdler, an Olympic silver medalist in 1992, said, "I was in shape to run a 54 (seconds), and when you get to the national championships anything can happen. I know I would have been in the final and in contention for making the team for the world championships. I've been training really well until about two weeks ago when I started getting really distracted by the media and the emotional ups and downs. One minute things are good and the next minute it looks bad."

Farmer-Patrick's troubles began last summer when she tested above the legal ratio of testosterone to epitestosterone. Both substances are found naturally in the body, but testosterone is a performance-enhancing steroid.

"Last summer we received a letter saying I had an elevated T.E. ratio," Farmer-Patrick said. "They (IAAF) needed an explanation why the ratio was higher than 6 to 1. When I got the letter, I was frantic. I thought I was sick or had some kind of cyst, tumor or cancer. I was thinking about my health at that point. The biggest relief to me was that I was OK. This epitestosterone, I had no idea of what it was."

Farmer-Patrick said doctors "ran every possible test on me. It showed I had normal levels of testosterone. Finally, they told me to get my epitestosterone tested because that could have your testosterone levels look higher than they really are. The first sample they ran on me my epitestosterone wasn't even detectable. We sent that over to the IAAF as our explanation and said our doctor would be doing a study, which would take about 2 1/2 months, to make sure my epitestosterone was consistently low. We did that and sent it over to the IAAF. It cost almost $30,000 for all the tests."

David Black, director of Aegis Analytical Laboratories in Nashville, said, "There is nothing in their data to support their charge that Sandra is a drug user. I have no doubts about Sandra. She does not have elevated testosterone. She has a low level of epitestosterone."

In February of this year the IAAF passed Farmer-Patrick's matter to USATF, the national governing body, and waited for a ruling.

The Patricks had a two-day hearing with the USTAF. They thought it would be a fact-finding affair. Instead, they found that the process was adversarial, and Farmer-Patrick was on the defensive.

"It's a very flawed process," Black said. "The fact-gatherers also serve as the prosecution and the judge. Too often there's an agenda and the burden of proof is on the athlete to prove his or her innocence."

Black said he set up the NFL's steroid-testing program and that he has testified both for athletes and against their defenses.

"I get calls from athletes and lawyers and I look at the results to see whether my testimony would hurt or help them," Black said. "I have a lot where I don't testify because the explanation is that they are guilty."

Black said he had no problem with testifying at Farmer-Patrick's hearing. The results of such hearings are supposed to be confidential, as is the entire process all the way through an appeal.

"One day after we got back from the meeting in San Francisco I started getting calls from the media," Farmer-Patrick said. "We knew it had to leak from USA Track and Field because not even the IAAF had any idea of the outcome. It started spreading all around the world. It was like she's lost, it's done, it's over. She's suspended."

Dane maintained that Farmer-Patrick will eventually be exonerated. Dane represented Butch Reynolds, the 400-meter world record-holder who was suspended in 1990 for alleged steroid use. His case went all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court. At one point Reynolds was awarded a $27 million settlement against the IAAF but never collected.

"The test discriminates against women," Dane said. She said that testosterone is found in greater quantities in men, which makes the test more reliable for them. She said that for women such things as birth-control pills, alcohol and the menstrual cycle can play havoc with the results. Dane said the International Olympic Committee's lab did studies in 1994, 1995 and 1996 that pointed up such problems.

"Our doctor told the panel this and their expert witness refuted everything our doctor said," Patrick said. "To the panel it must have looked like we were grasping at straws."

Farmer-Patrick planned to fight the charge as something of a crusade with Slaney, another athlete who was said to have run afoul of the T.E. ratio test. On Thursday, however, The Associated Press reported that U.S. track authorities told Slaney her allegedly positive drug test was not for excessive testosterone and they are now trying to figure out what she took.

Still, both the Patricks were aware of the difference in the way the two cases had been handled. While Farmer-Patrick had been advised not to compete, Slaney continued competing and until the last few days looked like she would be running in Indianapolis.

"They've deferred her case since February," Farmer-Patrick said. "My case came forth in April, and yet they'd passed mine on for a suspension. That's just inconsistent, no matter how you look at it."

Farmer-Patrick remains optimistic that her name will eventually be cleared and that she'll be able to reach her final goal.

"I will be at the 2000 Games unless I'm physically not able to go," she said. "That will be my last year. I want to take it into the 21st century."

Bjorkman ousts Sampras in Queen's Club quarters

Associated Press

LONDON — Pete Sampras' struggles continued Friday when he was ousted by Sweden's Jonas Bjorkman 3-6, 6-3, 6-4 in the quarterfinals of the Queen's Club tournament.

■ Tennis Roundup

The top-seeded Sampras appeared in firm control after winning the first set with ease, but his game fell apart near the end of the second and Bjorkman rallied in this key warmup for Wimbledon.

It was the latest in a string of surprising defeats for Sampras, who has had difficulties most of the year since winning the Australian Open in January. He lost to another Swede, Magnus Norman, in the third round of the French Open.

In Friday's final set, Sampras took advantage of two double faults by Bjorkman to break back for 4-4. But in the next game, Sampras double faulted three times, blew an easy forehand volley on game point and dropped serve. Bjorkman then served out the match.

"It was a great finish, perfect," Bjorkman said. "It was a great relief when I got match point. It took me awhile to get used to the speed of the court. I tried to be patient and wait for my chances."

Bjorkman's return of serve was his big weapon against world No. 1 Sampras.

"The returning of serve is my best shot, and that gives problems to big servers," said the Swede, who now has won 34 matches this year compared with 23 for Sampras.

The eighth-seeded Bjorkman advanced to a semifinal matchup against No. 16 Greg Rusedski, who overcame Australian Patrick Rafter 4-6, 7-5, 6-3 to become the first British player ever to reach the semifinals at Queen's.

The Canadian-born Rusedski, who began playing for Britain two years ago, rallied from a break down in the second set to beat the ninth-seeded Rafter.

In the other semifinal, third-seeded Goran Ivanisevic, who downed Jerome Golmard of France 6-3, 7-6 (11-9), meets sixth-seeded Mark Philippoussis of Australia, who served 16 aces in a 6-2, 6-7 (7-4), 6-4 win over Germany's Jens Knippschild.

Rusedski, whose left-handed serve is one of the fastest in the game, credited his service return as the key to the match.

"I was blocking the returns in the first set, but then I started going for them," he said. "I changed my strategy and stood further back. I'm thrilled with the way I played the second part of the match."

Kunce upsets Raymond in rain-shortened quarterfinals of DFS Classic

BIRMINGHAM, England — Australian Kristine Kunce served three aces in the final game to upset third-seeded Lisa Raymond 6-4, 6-7 (9-7), 6-3 Friday and advance to the semifinals of the DFS Classic.

In a day which saw quarterfinal play interrupted several times by rain, fourth-seeded Yayuk Basuki of Indonesia downed seventh-seeded Magdalena Maleeva of Bulgaria 7-6 (7-4), 6-2, while second-seeded Nathalie Tauziat of France outlasted No. 8 Natasha Zvereva of Belarus 6-1, 2-6, 6-1.

The fourth quarterfinal between top-seeded Irina Spirlea of Romania and Belgium's Dominique Van Roost was postponed to Saturday because of the rain.

Kunce, ranked 191, broke Raymond's serve in the first game of the match and took the set when the American missed a return of serve.

In the second set Raymond, ranked 21, took a 5-2 lead but allowed the qualifier to recover at 6-6. Kunce blew a match point in the tiebreaker and allowed Raymond to win the set when she netted a simple backhand.

But Kunce broke Raymond's serve in the second game of the third set and held on for the win.

Despite the loss, Raymond was pleased to have had a week of play and practice on grass before Wimbledon.

"Any time you put me on a grass court and I'm feeling good I can be dangerous," Raymond said.

"Kunce served a lot better than the girls I've been playing and she put a lot more pressure on me. She didn't let me get into a rhythm and I was just a little bit outplayed."

Basuki completed her match with Maleeva just before rain suspended play, delaying the other quarterfinals.

"The last time I played singles here, four years ago, the weather was bad so I decided just to play doubles," Basuki said. "This time I thought I wouldn't worry too much and just play."

Basuki broke Maleeva's serve twice to go up 3-0 in the first set and was ahead 4-2 when, with drizzle falling, the court was deemed too dangerous for play. After a short delay, Maleeva evened it 6-6, only to lose the tiebreaker.

Tauziat played Kunce at this tournament three years ago when she took a 6-1, 4-1 lead only to lose the match.

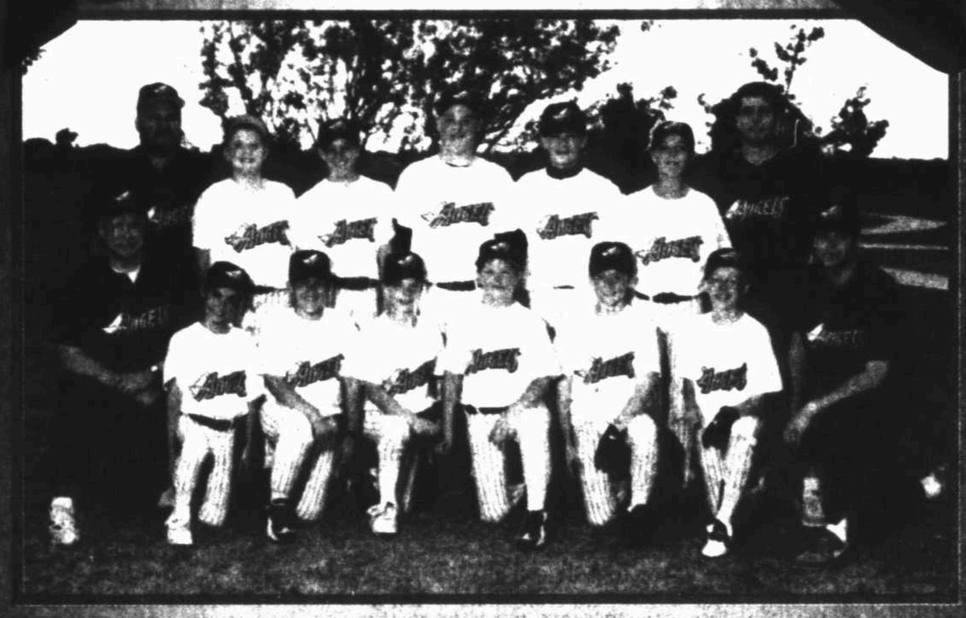

Kuerten advances in Carisbo International

BOLOGNA, Italy — Brazil's Gustavo Kuerten, in his first event since winning the French Open, beat top-seeded Alberto Berasategui of Spain 6-3, 6-7 (1-7), 7-5 on Friday in the quarterfinals of the Carisbo International.

Kuerten, seeded eighth in the clay-court tournament, will face Italy's Marzio Martelli, a 2-6, 6-3, 6-4 winner over No. 5 Hicham Arazi of Morocco.

Second-seeded Felix Mantilla of Spain beat Ecuador's Nicolas Lapentti 4-6, 6-4, 6-3, and will face the winner of a match between Morocco's Karim Alami and Spain's Quino Munoz.

Disaster legislation exposes Republican split

By David Espo
Associated Press

■ News analysis

WASHINGTON — Determined to stress their opposition to government shutdowns, Republicans instead wound up in a veto struggle with President Clinton over disaster-relief legislation. They lost in a rout made worse for the internal divisions it exposed.

"We needed to be ready to go to the American people and explain what's at stake," GOP Rep. David McIntosh, an Indiana conservative, said of the battle Republicans waged over anti-shutdown and census provisions. "For 10 days nobody was here doing that."

Instead, they watched while Clinton and Democrats constantly criticized them for delaying disaster aid, evoking memories of the shutdowns that caused Republican so much political damage 18 months ago. "The president, of course, has completely misrepresented the situation," charged House Majority Leader Dick Armey of Texas.

Still, when 20 Republicans, most of them moderates, issued a letter to House Speaker Newt Gingrich on Wednesday urging that the contested provisions be dropped, it signaled the leadership couldn't prevail in a House where it has a majority of only 11 seats.

At the same time, McIntosh and other conservatives were scathing in their criticism of the leadership's handling of the issue. "Isn't there one issue that we ... care enough about to confront this president?" Rep. John Doolittle, R-Calif., wrote in a letter to fellow GOP lawmakers Thursday.

At the core of the dispute was disaster legislation, a must-pass bill that Republicans believed was a perfect vehicle on which to wage their fight on key legislative goals. It was a tactic that Democrats used for years, as Rep. Roger Wicker, R-Miss., noted in a floor speech.

Battered by the effect of the shutdowns two winters ago, the GOP crafted a provision to avert a repetition this year, Clinton countered, though, that the proposal would have cut $18 billion off the balanced-budget accord recently negotiated.

At the insistence of the House leadership, Republicans also inserted a provision to ban the use of sampling in the nation's 2000 census, an issue that has enormous significance for elections beginning in 2002. Clinton and the Democrats said it was an issue to be settled on another bill.

Inexplicably, after holding the veto-threatened legislation at the Capitol over a long weekend, Republicans sent it to the White House Monday, when the entire top echelon of the House leadership was out of town and unavailable to counter Clinton's criticisms in person.

It was one of many missteps, compounded by differences between House and Senate leaders that persisted to the end.

At a closed-door meeting on Thursday, according to sources who spoke on condition of anonymity, Gingrich told his rank and file that the Senate leadership under Majority Leader Trent Lott had wavered in the fight.

Senate Republicans, for their part, said Lott had seen a public relations debacle in the making two weeks ago, and had wanted to enact a stripped-down disaster aid bill before lawmakers left the Capitol for a Memorial Day vacation, only to be blocked by the House leadership.

And in fact, Gingrich himself had wavered two weeks ago, giving assent to a plan from Rep. Bob Livingston, R-La., chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, for a stripped-down bill, despite an earlier leadership decision not to do so. Perhaps inevitably, Livingston and Armey clashed during the struggle. And in the end, nearly the entire top GOP leadership of the House and Senate voted against the legislation that cleared Thursday and was signed by the president. As is customary, as speaker, Gingrich did not vote.

Democrats are looking for long-term political gains.

"I have no doubt on election day next year, at least a handful of Republicans ... will find out that voters believe in helping out their fellow Americans in their time of need," wrote Rep. Martin Frost of Texas, chairman of the House Democratic campaign arm.

Most American children won't qualify for new $500 tax credit

By Andrew Mollison
N.Y. Times Service

WASHINGTON — Despite the high-flown rhetoric floating out of Capitol Hill, most American families won't qualify for the full tax credit of $500 per child that is at the heart of the rival plans announced by House Republicans and Democrats last week.

"I guess it just doesn't sound sexy to say, 'We're offering a credit for a minority of the children in America,' " said Robert Greenstein, director of the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities. "But that's true."

Still, both plans are better than nothing, "unless you think there is a better way to use the money," Bob McIntyre, director of Citizens for Tax Justice, said.

"We'd like to see tax relief for the parents of as many children as possible as soon as possible," said Amy Myers, legislative director of the Family Research Council. But she said the bipartisan budget agreement negotiated last month has left the tax-writing committees of Congress "in a box."

Details of the tax plans will change constantly in negotiations within the House and the Senate, between those two bodies, and between Congress and the White House in the weeks ahead.

But an inability to stuff $500-per-child credits for all parents into the limits of the budget agreement is already clear in the rival House plans.

The arithmetic is brutally simple:

Giving parents or guardians a $500 credit for each of the 71 million children under the age of 18 would cost $35.5 billion a year. That would come to $177.5 billion over the five-year life of the budget agreement.

But the five-year plan allows for only $135 billion in tax cuts, an average of $27 billion a year. Moreover, both parties wanted to use some of that $135 billion to offer relief to other taxpayers, such as farmers, small business owners, parents of college students, heirs or investors.

In the House Ways and Means Committee debates that ended Thursday, neither party sought anything close to $177.5 billion in child care credits. Their rival packages instead offered credits that would lower revenues through 2002 by roughly $71 billion.

Both used the same three methods:

— Eliminate all coverage for some of the 71 million children under the age of 18.

The Republicans say their plan covers 41 million children. They disqualified 30 million kids by denying credits to about 28 million poor children and 2 million rich children. Few families with incomes under $30,000 or over $110,000 will qualify for credits under the GOP plan.

The same congressional statisticians who came up with those numbers say the Democratic plan covers just over 53 million children. They disqualified about 9 million poor children and 8 million rich children in their plan. Few families without wage-earners or with incomes above $75,000 will qualify for credits under the Democratic approach.

— Phase in the child credit, so it won't cost as much over five years.

The House Republicans start with a maximum of $400 per child in 1998 and move up to $500 per child after that.

The House Democrats set the maximum at $300 per child in 1998, 1999 and 2000, and $500 after that.

— Spread the money further by offering less than the full credit to many who otherwise qualify.

The two parties use quite different methods to do this.

At the top of the income scale, the Republicans phase out the credits for parents who already claim the dependent-care credit, by lowering the new child credit 50 cents for every dollar the family claims in dependent care credits — which can go as high as $480 per child per year.

At the top, the Democrats shrink the size of the credit in steps as family incomes rise from $60,000 to $75,000.

At the bottom of the income scale, the Democrats phase out the credits for parents who don't pay much in payroll taxes for Social Security and Medicare. The Republicans save even more money by phasing out the credit for parents who don't pay much in income taxes or who qualify for the "earned income credit," a bonus the government pays to low-wage working parents.

"We're not giving child credits to people who don't at least work and pay payroll taxes," said Ellen Dadisman, spokeswoman on the House Ways and Means Committee.

Senate may ease off on House welfare measure

Associated Press

Plan prepared by Sen. William Roth, R-Del., is one of many aimed at balancing the budget.

WASHINGTON — In a gesture to President Clinton, Senate Republicans would temporarily drop a House GOP plan to bar welfare benefits to thousands of legal immigrants who become disabled in the future. But an administration official says the White House opposes the Senate proposal.

The idea is part of a package of changes in welfare, Medicare, Medicaid and other benefits prepared by the Senate Finance Committee chairman, Sen. William Roth, R-Del. The panel plans to vote next week on the measure, one of several moving through Congress aimed at carrying out the pact between Clinton and lawmakers for balancing the budget by 2002.

Roth shared his plans for benefit programs and taxes with members of the Finance Committee this week, at times making some changes in hopes of garnering bipartisan support.

"I have ... come up with a balanced and bipartisan package of reforms," Roth said in a written statement Friday as his aides released details.

But Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, the committee's top Democrat, stopped short of saying Democrats would support Roth's plans.

"We are certainly addressing the matter in a bipartisan mode," he said.

Participants speaking on condition of anonymity said major disagreements remained over how to structure a $16 billion program aimed at expanding health-care coverage for up to 5 million low-income children. It appeared likely that the dispute would not be settled until the committee votes next week on competing approaches.

Roth and Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, prefer distributing most of the money in block grants that give states wide leeway in spending it, an approach opposed by the White House and by many Democrats and moderate Republicans. Sens. John Chafee, R-R.I., and John D. Rockefeller IV, D-W.Va., want to disburse most of it through Medicaid, which they say would help ensure states use the money for children's health.

Roth's overall welfare proposal would have a price tag of $12.7 billion. That is about what the budget pact called for and would largely reinstate benefits killed by last year's law.

The budget deal called for restored eligibility for legal immigrants who entered the United States before the welfare measure became law — last Aug. 22 — and who were or become disabled.

But when the House Ways and Means Committee approved its welfare measure this week, it forbade coverage for legal immigrants who entered the United States by Aug. 22 but become disabled afterward. The White House has said that would affect 75,000 people.

Roth would set aside about $700 million to cover those immigrants for the next six to 12 months. Roth spokeswoman Virginia Koops said the chairman hopes that during that period lawmakers and the White House can work out a permanent solution.

But Lawrence Haas, spokesman for the White House Office of Management and Budget, said Roth's proposal fell short.

"We oppose it," he said. "We don't support any temporary moves to reflect the budget agreement. We believe it should reflect what the budget agreement specifically says."

Roth would also allow up to 10 states to use private companies to determine the eligibility of welfare clients and to enroll them. That function has been performed by state governments. His plan would specifically include Texas among those states.

As reported previously, Roth's plans for Medicare, Medicaid and taxes broadly resemble proposals that have already been approved by House committees. Like the House, he would carve savings from projected growth of Medicare and Medicaid largely by trimming payments to hospitals, health care plans and other providers. He would also increase Medicare recipients' monthly premiums from the current $43.80 by more than $20 by 2002.

Also opposed by the Clinton administration, he would charge $5 per visit when health-care workers go to beneficiaries' homes.

Senate committee reviews nomination of Eric Holder

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Attorney Eric Holder, the nominee for the No. 2 post at the Justice Department, on Friday defended his office's role in the prosecution of an income tax preparer who falsified returns.

A federal judge recently declared a mistrial in the case, saying prosecutors disregarded his instructions in preparing a witness from the Internal Revenue Service for trial.

The judge also said he was concerned about a request from Holder's office for the IRS to postpone new audits of District of Columbia police officers who were clients of the defendant, Mohinder Singh.

Both agencies have said the request was intended to preserve the option of pursuing criminal charges against the officers later on.

Holder, at a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on his nomination, which had been delayed because of the tax matter, said the request was meant to keep his options open and was "not an attempt to protect police officers."

He described his involvement in the case as rather limited and said he played no role in preparing the witness for trial.

Holder also was questioned about his initial decision to not seek the death penalty for the killer of a district police officer in 1993. He later reversed himself after consulting with Attorney General Janet Reno. The suspect eventually pleaded guilty to avoid the death penalty.

Holder said his office had concluded it would have problems meeting what then were the legal requirements for pursuing capital punishment in the case, but decided to proceed after consulting with Reno. He said the initial decision was unrelated to his opposition to the death penalty and vowed to enforce such laws if confirmed as deputy attorney general at the Justice Department.

"I am not a proponent of the death penalty but would not hesitate to enforce any law ... that has a death penalty provision," he said.

If confirmed by the Senate, Holder would be responsible for day-to-day operations at the Justice Department. He also would become the highest-ranking black person ever to serve at the law enforcement agency.

It was unclear when the Judiciary Committee and the Senate would vote on his nomination.

On other issues during the two-hour hearing, to which Holder was accompanied by his wife, two young daughters and parents, he said:

—That as a prosecutor, he understood all too well the criticisms being lobbed at Whitewater prosecutor Kenneth Starr, whose investigation of President Clinton and the first lady has been called a witch hunt. He said such comments are unfair, but they come with the job. "You have to learn to endure those criticisms and go about doing your job," he said.

—Reno's refusal to name an independent counsel to investigate campaign fund raising by Democrats is "consistent with the statute." He said he has "great faith" in Reno's judgment and legal ability.

—He couldn't discuss Justice Department action stemming from an investigation of an intercepted telephone conversation between House Speaker Newt Gingrich and other Republican leaders because the matter is pending.

Lott wants FEC seats filled

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott said Friday he will block Senate action on all presidential nominations, except for the military, until President Clinton fills four seats on the Federal Election Commission.

The commis: n's six members are evenly vided between Democrats and Republicans. The terms of two holders of GOP seats expired two years ago.

In a letter to Clinton, Lott said he has tried to resolve the issue with White House staff for more than six months. He added that the commission's integrity and the security of the electoral process were at stake.

"You have your responsibilities and I have mine," wrote Lott. "Today, my responsibility is to inform you that, from this day forward, no nomination other than military appointments will be considered in the Senate until the four expired seats on the FEC are filled to our mutual satisfaction."

Lott has nominated M.D.B. "Margo" Carlisle and Darryl R. Wold for the two expired Republican slots.

The White House said Lott's warning came as a surprise because one of his nominees has already been approved and is going through background checks. Spokesman Barry Toiv said the White House was getting mixed signals from the senator with regard to the second nominee.

McVeigh to begin appeals; Nichols gets ready for trial

By Sandy Shore
Associated Press

DENVER — Timothy McVeigh's legal battles now move across the street and a state away, while his alleged accomplice Terry Nichols prepares for his own trial.

The federal death penalty statute does not contain an automatic appeal, so McVeigh is expected to file a notice of intent to appeal within a month at the 10th U.S. Circuit of Appeals, across the street from the courthouse where a jury sentenced him to death on Friday for the Oklahoma City bombing.

The appeals could challenge a wide range of issues, from the constitutionality of the federal death penalty law to various rulings from the judge restricting the sort of evidence McVeigh's lawyers could introduce.

Those appeals could drag on for years.

As he left court Friday, defense attorney Stephen Jones said: "The jury has spoken and their verdict is entitled to respect and all Americans should accord it that respect until such time, if ever, it is overturned."

McVeigh also is a planning to ask for a new trial in U.S. District Court — the request is due July 7 — and, within two years, is expected to stand trial on 160 murder counts in the state of Oklahoma, where the district attorney in Oklahoma City wants to make doubly sure that McVeigh is executed.

Meanwhile, co-defendant Nichols is preparing for trial on murder and conspiracy charges in the bombing, with the date likely to be set after Labor Day.

Among McVeigh's possible grounds for appeal are U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch's refusal to allow the defense to expound its theory that foreign terrorists may have been behind the bombing; his refusal to let the defense introduce all of a scathing Justice Department report on the FBI crime lab; and his refusal to allow testimony from Carol Howe, a former government informant who said she overheard a white supremacist and a German discuss blowing up federal buildings in the months before the attack.

Harvard law professor Alan Dershowitz said that McVeigh may have another avenue for appeal: His lawyers did not adequately represent him.

"This was an awful, awful defense," Dershowitz said.

The evidence against Nichols, 41, differs from that used in McVeigh's trial.

Prosecutors will build their case around statements that Nichols made to authorities two days after the bombing.

He told them he was in Oklahoma City with McVeigh three days before the bombing; that he lent McVeigh his pickup the day before the attack; and that he cleaned out a storage locker at McVeigh's request the day after.

Authorities also have evidence seized from Nichols' home in Herington, Kan., including two key bombing components — detonator cord and ammonium nitrate fertilizer. They also confiscated a phone card allegedly used to make dozens of calls as part of the bombing plot.

In addition, they have a note that Nichols wrote to McVeigh when Nichols went to the Philippines in 1994. Nichols told McVeigh that in the event he did not return, McVeigh should "Go for it."

However, prosecutors will not be able to rely on the testimony of Lori and Michael Fortier as much as they did in McVeigh's trial. At McVeigh's trial, the Fortiers testified that McVeigh detailed his plans to blow up the federal building in Oklahoma City.

Fortier also testified that McVeigh said he and Nichols had a falling out early in 1995 and that Nichols would not help McVeigh with the bombing. However, his testimony about McVeigh's comments may not be admissible at Nichols' trial because it is hearsay.

Anti-government activist convicted of fraud

SIOUX CITY, Iowa (AP) — A member of the anti-tax group We the People was convicted Friday of fraud, conspiracy and money laundering and ordered to forfeit more than $1.3 million.

Scott E. Hildebrand was one of several defendants who told their victims that they could win large claims against the government if they paid a $300 processing fee. The others were convicted earlier.

The claims were to be based on a class-action lawsuit that alleged the Internal Revenue Service and other agencies were invalid. Victims were not told the lawsuit was dismissed.

Prosecutors said We The People induced at least 6,832 people from all 50 states and two Canadian provinces to file "claims." About two thirds of the victims paid the $300 fee.

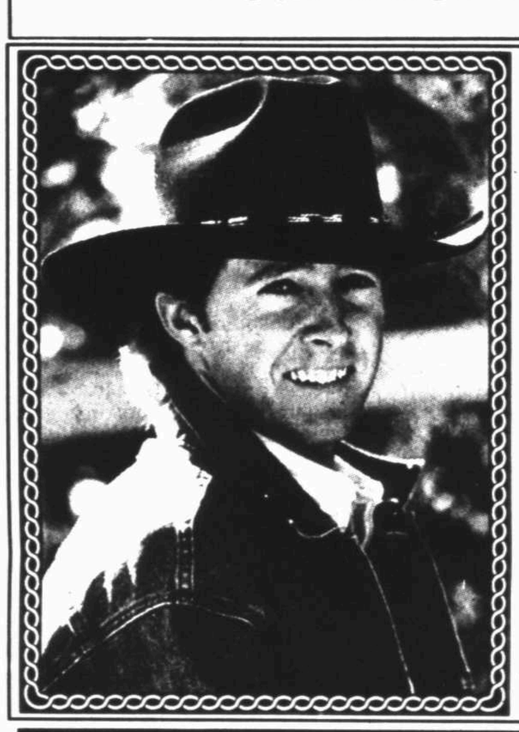

Hildebrand faces a sentence next month of up to five years in prison on each of 41 mail fraud counts and the conspiracy count, and 20 years in prison for the money laundering count.

The jury ordered Hildebrand to forfeit $1.35 million in money or property traceable to the money laundering count. A spokeswoman for U.S. Attorney Steven Rapp said she did not know if Hildebrand had the money.

Hildebrand is currently serving prison terms for a similar conviction in Colorado. An appeals court there upheld the conviction earlier this week.

He also was convicted of conspiracy and fraud last month in Michigan and sentenced to a maximum of 10 years in prison.

NATION IN BRIEF

■ Girl X set to leave hospital

CHICAGO — Girl X, the 10-year-old who was sexually assaulted, beaten and poisoned with roach killer six months ago, has fully emerged from a coma and can go home but is unable to walk, speak or see, one of her doctors says.

The girl has made remarkable progress but still has far to go, Dr. Gayle Spill of Schwab Rehabilitation Hospital said Friday.

Spill would not estimate her chances of seeing and talking again.

"She is communicative and is able to express her needs," Spill said. "She hates vegetables and loves pizza. She has an excellent sense of humor and often teases family and staff."

The girl communicates by using her cheek to touch buttons that indicate "yes" or "no."

The 4-foot-8 girl was found Jan. 9, dumped in a stairwell in the blighted Cabrini-Green public housing project. Roach killer had been sprayed down her throat. She became known as Girl X to protect her privacy.

■ Second 'triggerman' sentenced

TORRANCE, Calif. — A judge Friday refused to grant a new trial for one of two men convicted of murdering a man who was shot only once.

Stephen Edmond Davis, 20, was sentenced to life in prison without possibility of parole.

Judge Francis J. Hourigan said he was convinced Davis deserved the harsh sentence. He would not explain the legal basis for his ruling, saying many people might fail to understand how two men could be convicted of first-degree murder when the victim was only shot once.

Last week, John Patrick Winkelman was also denied a new trial in the killing and sentenced to life without parole.

Defense attorney Robert Courtney argued it was impossible for two men to be convicted when the victim was hit by a single bullet.

"It's just impossible by the laws of physics, by the reason that even a small child can understand," he said.

Willie Yen was killed in a drug deal gone awry in 1995. Davis and Hourigan were convicted of first-degree murder by separate juries.

■ Disclosure sets focus on Gingrich

WASHINGTON — Congress on Friday released the financial disclosure statements of its members, and it drew new attention to House Speaker Newt Gingrich, whose book royalties more than doubled his income last year.

In the last two decades, members of Congress have been compelled to file broad financial disclosure statements to show that they do not have financial holdings that pose a conflict of interest with their jobs.

But it is an exercise that allows members to stop well short of laying bare many details of their private fiscal affairs because it requires them to identify only a range of their assets (starting at $1,001 and ending at over $50 million) and of their income ($201 to over $5 million.)

The financial disclosure statement filed by the speaker — under Newton L. Gingrich — showed that he probably had the wherewithal to abide by a major provision of the ethics judgment against him this year: that he use his own money to pay at least half of a $300,000 penalty for violating House rules.

Gingrich's earned income in 1996 was $356,609: his congressional salary of $171,500 and $185,109 in other income, most of it from his best-selling book, "To Renew America." He was also paid $1,078 for a walk-on role on the television comedy "Murphy Brown," plus $104, presumably from the rerun of that episode.

Clinton to kick off yearlong campaign on race

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton, launching a yearlong campaign to narrow the nation's racial divide, said Friday, "If there is any issue I ought to have credibility on, it is this one."

Asked by a black reporter about his credibility in light of past actions, including his signing of a law revamping welfare, Clinton said he had devoted his public life to three things: economics, education and race.

"It is a part of who I am and what I have done," he said. "I don't feel the need to defend myself."

Assessing the state of race relations as he met in the Oval Office with his newly named advisory commission on race in America, Clinton said, "I think that there are problems. I think things are better than they used to be. But I think that we have a lot of work to do in order to be one America."

"I think this is the right time to do this because there is not a major crisis engulfing the nation that dominates the headlines every day," the president said. "The economy is strong. Crime is down. Our position in the world is good."

Even as Clinton prepared to launch his initiative with a speech today, House Speaker Newt Gingrich sharply questioned the goals of the president's new panel on race relations.

"Unless the commission has a dramatically different agenda and a dramatically different approach than the same tired, old, big-government liberalism, it'll be like the commissions we've had for 30 years," Gingrich told reporters on Capitol Hill.

"My fear is the composition of this commission, which is very, very traditional in its assumptions about government in America and the direction of the president's efforts to maintain quotas and setasides while claiming he's against them, that that in fact will divert us and make it harder to solve problems," the speaker said.

In other comments Friday, Gingrich derided a proposal for Congress to apologize to black Americans whose ancestors were slaves.

"Any American, I hope, feels badly about slavery. I also feel badly about genocide in Rwanda," Gingrich told reporters. "We can go back and have all sorts of apologies. But will one more child read because of it? The emotional symbolism as an avoidance of problem-solving strikes me as a dead end."

Gingrich also said, however, that he had not yet seen the resolution and would "have to look at it."

A dozen white lawmakers called for the apology, similar to one nearly a decade ago when Congress apologized for interning Japanese-Americans during World War II.

Clinton's advisory panel, named Thursday, is headed by historian John Hope Franklin. After meeting with the president in the Oval Office, panel members were accompanying Clinton on Air Force One to the West Coast where he will deliver the commencement speech at the University of California, San Diego.

The White House says Clinton's initiative will be a yearlong process that will include town hall discussions and monthly events on the topic of race and divisions.

Some critics have questioned why it took Clinton more than four years to turn full force to racial problems. Others have questioned whether the effort will produce meaningful solutions.

Promising concrete results, presidential spokesman Mike McCurry said, "There will be things small and things consequential, large and policy-driven, that will be reflected in this initiative."

Pastor named

St. Paul United Methodist Church has announced the appointment of the Rev. Robert M. Kirk as pastor for the coming year. This marks Kirk's fifth year at the church.

The announcement of this appointment was read by Bishop Alfred L. Norris at the 88th session of the Northwest Texas Annual Conference in Abilene earlier this month.

In his 16 years as a pastor, Kirk also has served churches in Brownfield, Lockney, Dumas and Farmington, N.M. He completed his undergraduate work at Asbury College and seminary work at Asbury Theological Seminary.

Ceremony set

First Presbyterian Church, 800 W. Texas Ave., will hold ground breaking ceremonies for a family life center at 11:45 a.m. Sunday at the parking lot on the west side of the church.

With a bagpiper leading the way, the congregation will go from the sanctuary, across B Street, to the parking lot. In the event of rain, the ceremony will be held in the sanctuary.

Following comments by Mayor Bobby Burns, members of the Vision 2000 steering committee and the general contractor, all will assist in breaking ground for the construction project.

"This ground breaking is symbolic of the efforts of the members of our Vision 200 committee and our congregation to dig into their hearts and to make this dream happen," said the Rev. Jerry Hilton, pastor of the church.

Construction is projected to be complete in August 1998.

Worship team to lead

The Rev. Leonard Cotten and the Country Chapel of Midland-Odessa Worship Team will lead the Midland Ranch Rodeo Cowboy Church services at the Midland County Exhibit Building, East Highway 80, starting at 10:30 a.m. Sunday.

Cotten works on the C Ranch between Midland and Andrews. He has cowboyed on several West Texas ranches and in other Western states.

He received his church training at Costa Mesa, Calif., and Fort Worth and pastored churches at Valentine and Manhattan, Kan., before returning to the C Ranch and starting Country Chapel of Midland-Odessa.

Earlier this month, Cotten, his wife, Jan, and sons, Juston and Tell, taught and led worship services at an Austrian castle that had been turned into a chapel conference center.

The public is invited to attend the Sunday service.

Affordable Collectibles on the Five/Five Plan

It has been said that one sure way to part with large portions of your net worth is to speculate in any investor market. As true as that may be, investing in collector cars can be a better place to put money than many "conventional" investments. First of all, automobiles have material value, unlike a stock certificates which is useless if the company to which it is attached goes belly up. It would be easy to buy a 1966 Mustang and enjoy a fairly consistent increase in value. But appreciation will be slow, as the Mustang (and many other high - profile collector cars) are "mature" commodities, with relatively stable prices. It's possible to make a few bucks while owning something you enjoy, but you have to be willing to hold your investment for a few years, waiting for the market to come to you. There are a few things to consider when shopping for an investment car. Generally, the car should conjure up strong images of the era in which it was built, and the people who desired the car when new should be entering their high disposable income years — allowing them to indulge their adolescent desires. This gives you a large and ready market when it comes time to peddle your prized possession. Here's my fearless prediction for good investment vehicles, using the 5/5 plan: a purchase price under $5,000 that will yield real investment growth within five years.

Pre-'68 Volkswagen Bus

It's hard to believe, but the last of the classic "Hippie" Buses is thirty years old. Look for: "Twenty three Window" models with the sliding sunroof. They are by far the most desirable, but all versions, from campers to panel vans are sought after, including pickup truck variations. Nearly all parts are readily available. Beware: Rust, rust, rust. It is said that if you drive an early VW Bus into the garage and sit real quiet, you can actually hear it disintegrating. Slow and frugal, the counter-culture icon appeal of the Bus makes it a very strong investment as Hippies reach their 50's.

Mid-'60's to Late '70's Wood Paneled/Full Size Station Wagons

Nothing short of a whiff of Mom's meatloaf will bring forth more vivid childhood memories for aging baby boomers than a great, wallowing wagon, wrapped in faux wood. These cars were generally used hard, and nice ones are becoming quite rare, though prices are usually low. Most parts are interchangeable with sedans, and are generally easily available. Look for: The most well equipped models, with period accessories like spotlights and 8-track stereos. Early 70's GM models with the electric, disappearing tailgate are really neat. I've even seen a few show up at car shows, lowered and featuring custom wheels. Beware: Rusty 1/4 panels and floors. Also, it's very difficult to find matching wood trim to repair damaged areas, and the vinyl decals can trap water and cause rust.

Late '60's to Late '70's Full Size Luxury Coupes and Sedans

The plusher, the better. Casket -quality velour seats and garish trim make these cars as much an expression of their era as the 1959 Cadillac was during its time. Never before, never again will cars be this blatantly big. Look for: Special editions and top-of-the line trim packages. Don't overlook the GM four-door hardtops of 1971-1977. They were the last of their kind. Beware: Worn, cracked interior panels can be tough to match. Primitive smog controls make many of these cars run awful. Take an extended test drive if possible.

Other vehicles to look for:

Early Nissan Z-cars, VW Beetle and Karmann Ghia, Triumph TR-6, 1977-'78 Pontiac Trans Am Special Editions, 1988 Pontiac Fiero GTs, Any full-size 70's convertible , Garish special-edition pickup trucks, Early Chevy Blazers and Ford Broncos.

Is this list complete?

No way. I tried to avoid cars that are known to be reliability challenged, and concentrated on vehicles that the beginning enthusiast can maintain without a mechanical engineering degree. A lot of cars don't make the $5,000 cut. (A few of these do, barely). The great thing is that there are pristine examples coming on the market, and you can buy a beautiful original and never have to worry about restoration costs. While new enough to be used as daily transportation, these cars are old enough to have been butchered and put back together, so shop carefully. You may have to look at 200 cars to find one excellent buy.

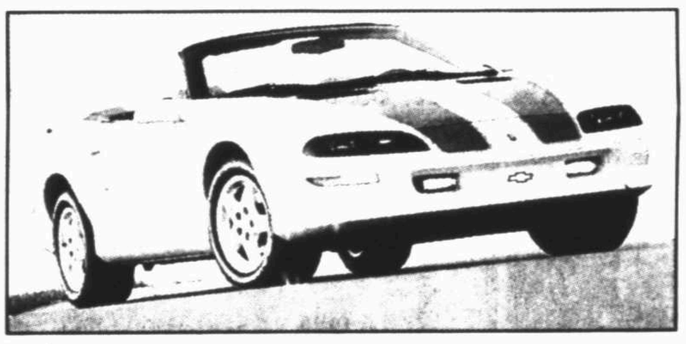

Two Fun All Americans:

Chevrolet Camaro/Pontiac Firebird

Wheelin'&Dealin'

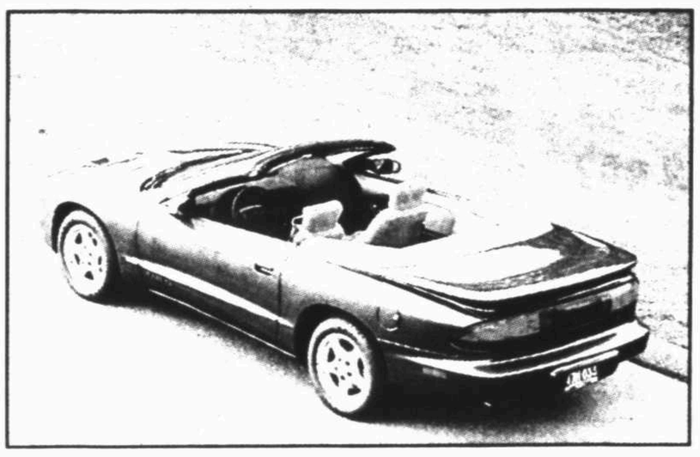

By Kenneth Chester, Jr.

The GM "F" body coupe. A brawny, fun loving two door that was long on attitude, short on manners possessing questionable reliability. A car that every red-blooded American boy and girl grew up wanting to have as their own. A car that was not practical, affordable or sensible to own—-until now. A complete redesign in 1993 introduced America to a very different coupe. A two door coupe that for the first time was as sophisticated as it was fast, performance oriented as it was comfortable to drive, and sexy as it was utterly reliable in the daily dispatch. A lot more than just my feelings toward these cars were changed! Curious? Read on....

Chevrolet Camaro

The rear drive Camaro is available as: a hardtop, optional T-Top, and the drop dead gorgeous convertible. Trim packages include: base, RS and Z28. Camaro buffs have an additional choice of the 30th Anniversary trim package or the ultra hot SS equipment package for the Z28. Its exterior sheet metal grabs your attention whether the car is in motion or parked. Settling into the driver's seat is much like climbing into the cockpit of a fighter jet. Displays are easy to read, while controls for just about everything fall easy to the hand almost by instinct. The 3.8L Series II V-6 engine bolted to the equally competent optional 4L60-E four speed automatic transmission is no wimpy compromise. This powertrain combination is the very definition of power, performance, and fuel economy. It had gobs of power like a V-8, with the fuel economy of a four cylinder engine. Driving this car fast was no problem! The suspension did not disappoint, delivering a smooth ride over great expanses of midwestern Interstate while still exhibiting "the right stuff" in the twisties. The truly amazing part of this car is its bank vault like construction. No moans, groans, rattles or squeaks. Just the right amount of balance and poise. Standard safety features include: dual air bags, four wheel anti-lock brakes, side-door beams, daytime running lights, and GM's PASS-Key II personal security system. A limited slip differential is available as part of the $400 Performance Handling Package option for base and RS models. EPA fuel mileage ranges from 19 city/30 highway for the 3.8L six cylinder/five speed manual to 17 city/25 highway for the 5.7L V-8 automatic. Sticker prices range from $16,215 for the base hardtop with the five speed manual transmission to $25,520 for the Z28 convertible equipped with a 5.7L V-8 joined to a six speed manual transmission! Choosing the SS model option will add $3,999 to the Z28 sticker price. Destination charge is $525 additional. Supplies of the Camaro are plentiful and there are no rebates.

Pontiac Firebird Convertible

This car has never been for the faint-of-heart or weak-of-spirit. The current Firebird convertible is no exception. The rear-drive Firebird convertible is built off the same basic chassis as the Camaro and is offered in three trim levels: base, Formula, and Trans Am. While the engine in the base model is the 3.8L V-6, the Formula and Trans Am weigh in with a 5.7L V-8. Improvements during the current production run has led to better management of the powertrain, which now allows the driver to enjoy the rumble of the exhaust and availability of the power instead of just holding on for dear life. Open-air motoring in the Firebird is a completely different experience compared with the hardtop. Its masculinity draws gawkers and the heft of the car reassures the driver that almost anything is possible. GM's new-found commitment to body integrity makes these convertibles the best ever. The electric drop-top mechanism switch is next to the driver's right knee. The top retracts easily, and securing it back only requires two convenient latches. One complaint is that in such a large vehicle, cargo room for luggage — let alone a set of golf clubs — is at a premium. Standard safety equipment includes dual airbags, four-wheel airlock brakes, side-impact door beams, daytime running lights, and PASS-Key II theft deterrent system. Traction control is a $450 option on Formula and Trans Am models. Gas mileage ranges from 19 city/30 highway for the 3.8L V-6/five speed manual to 17 city/25 highway for the 5.7L V-8/four speed automatic. Sticker prices begin at $23,084 for the base convertible to $28,444 for the upscale Trans Am. Destination charge adds $525. Consumers should have no trouble finding a Firebird convertible as supplies are good. There are no rebates.

"1935 CHRYSLER AIRFLOW C-1"

AUTO ALBUM
BY TAD BURNESS

For its 10th anniversary, the Chrysler Corporation introduced its totally new Airflow models in the Chrysler and De Soto lines. With new ultrastreamlined, unitized bodyframe construction, new balance chassis with scientific weight redistribution, a supercomfortable and quiet ride, and shatterproof safety glass throughout—plus numerous engineering features that had already made Chrysler famous (highcompression engines, F loating Power flexible engine mounting, hydraulic brakes, etc.) — these were truly supercars.

In daring tests, Chrysler Airflows were pushed off cliffs or somersaulted off ramps to show the brute strength of their tough new bodies. These original tests are shown ir the video described in the text of the accompanying illustration.

Chrysler Airflows were available from 1934 to 1937, and De Soto Airflows from 1934 to 1936 only. From 1935 to the early 1940s, a limited number of Dodge Airflow tanker trucks were also on the market.

The Airflows were too advanced in design for many buyers, however.

Sales figures were a disappointment. It seemed that not many people wanted to drive around in a unique new automobile that nearly everyone would be staring at. Chrysler's nonAirflow models (entitled Airstream in 1935) were more conventional and more popular.

In 1934, De Soto had offered only a six-cylinder Airflow model, and De Soto's sales dropped to less than 14,000 cars for the entire 1934 season. De Soto followed Chrysler's lead in 1935 and offered a conventional series as well.

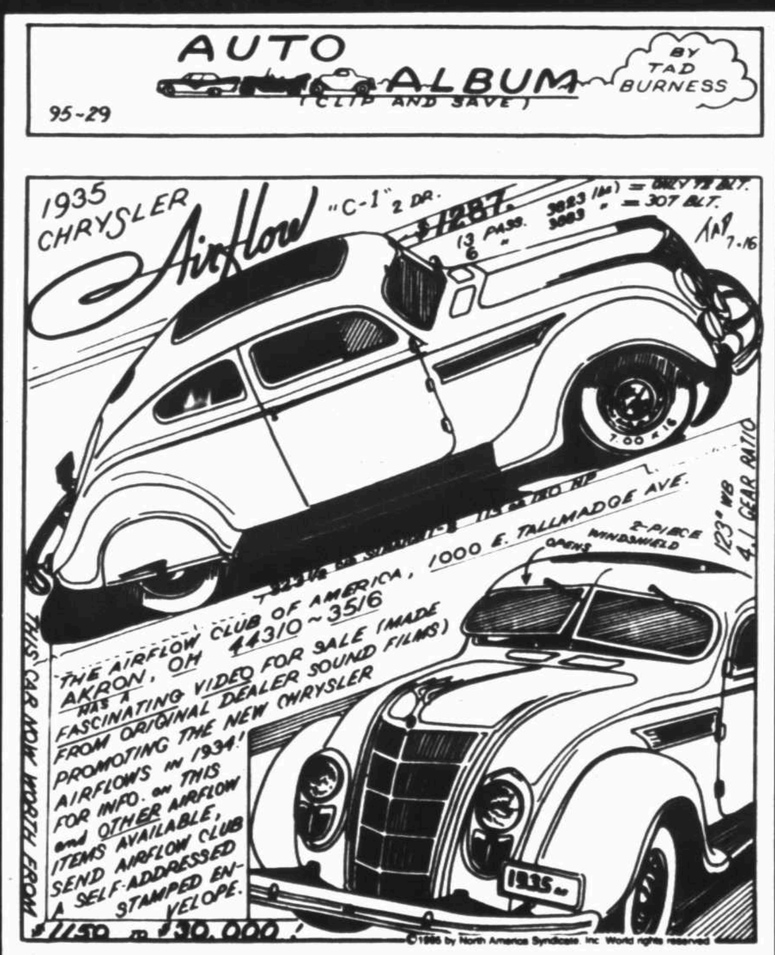

De Soto Airflows were sixes, and Chrysler Airflows were straighteights. However, a Canadian Chrysler Airflow six has been discovered, which is a rarity among rarities.

In the perspective of time, the Airflows are at last appreciated as the great cars they truly are.

SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1997

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, June 14, 1997:
Creative energy is high this year. Charge this extra vitality into your career and other areas that are pertinent to your life. You are on a roll, as you make many of your desires a reality. You exhibit a tendency to go overboard and indulge. You will need to maintain a tight budget. If you are single, Cupid's arrow strikes; you might fall very much in love. If attached, this is an unusually romantic year. The two of you decide on a next step or new addition, which will make both of you extremely happy. LIBRA loves to flirt with you.

BORN TODAY

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ Accept a surprise invitation that could have you taking off suddenly. Partners want to share. You discover that, in a different atmosphere, it is a lot easier to open up. Let another feel naughty; he might lure you into mischief. Tonight: Keep saying yes!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ You need downtime to center yourself and create more of what you want. Much is going on at work. You need to work overtime. Pace yourself, and take care of your needs first. You are tempted to go overboard. Tonight: Push the limit.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Why not play more often and let anxiety go? Reach out for another, and be more open-minded. You have information that could be important to another. Make calls. Be careful with spending; you are likely to be excessive. Tonight: Be naughty and nice!

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ Family members need your attention. You are stunned by a partner's news. There could be surprising financial implications, which you will want to deal with. You have a tendency to spend too much, and you overindulge in other ways! Tonight: Stay home.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ Get together with friends. There is sure to be fun gossip you'll want to hear. Expect the unexpected, and you won't be disappointed. Heed instincts about a loved one, and demonstrate your love with a caring gesture. Don't worry; simply let go. Tonight: Celebrate life.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ A friendship could build into more. There is more going on than you are aware. Listen to instincts about finances. You suddenly take on a new hobby or project. Make a point of dropping in on a older relative, who might be a bit down. Tonight: Indulge yourself.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ You like surprises, right? Now, you will have an opportunity to demonstrate that. The unexpected occurs with loved ones. It should all tumble in your favor. Calls are important. Be direct; others are certain to respond favorably. Tonight: Have a ball.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ Take a back seat when events take an unusual twist; it might be a disguised opportunity. Detach, and see what is really going on. Active talks take you in a new direction with a partner. Finances improve, and a major purchase is possible. Tonight: Keep it a mystery!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Grab an intriguing opportunity. Remain sure of yourself, and go for what you want. Fun and mirth mix; you feel great. Make time for a get-together. Friendship plays a big role in creating a convivial atmosphere. Share laughter. Tonight: A party could get wild.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ You feel that everyone is looking to you to make plans. You are in control, even if you pull a financial wild card. You might need to complete a project. An older friend sets a fun tone for the day. Remember, this is the weekend. Tonight: A ball is had by all!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Reach out for others. You are delighted by what goes on. Recognize the role of the unexpected. Indulgence is a major factor. Be more accepting of another's opinions. Not everyone hears the same drummer as you. Accent your creativity and openness. Tonight: Be adventurous!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ One-to-one relating allows for many insights and happiness. You are opinionated, especially with a family member. Be willing to share your vulnerabilities. A partner or friend is in the mood for overindulgence. Tonight: Some things must be kept under wraps.

Police arrest 2 in Naughty by Nature, charge them with weapons possession

NEW YORK — Police say two members of the rap trio Naughty by Nature were living up to their name.

Lead rapper Anthony Criss, known as Treach, and Vincent Brown, known as Vinnie, were arrested in Harlem along with four other men Thursday night and charged with weapons possession and reckless driving.

Anthony Criss was arrested on charges of weapons possession, reckless driving.

The six men were pulled over in two cars, and police found a gun in each vehicle, police spokesman Joe Cavitolo said.

The two rappers awaited arraignment Friday.

Criss and Brown, both 26, make up Naughty by Nature with rapper Kay Gee. The group's first big hit was the 1991 song "O.P.P.," and the trio won the best rap album Grammy in 1996 for "Poverty's Paradise."

Naughty by Nature's agent, Cara Lewis, had no immediate comment.

Arnold Schwarzenegger, Maria Shriver were accosted by paparazzi as they drove their son to school.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Even the Terminator needs help now and then, and UPS driver Randall Sialana was glad to give it.

Sialana was on the job for United Parcel Service last month when he saw Arnold Schwarzenegger and Maria Shriver accosted by paparazzi as they drove their son to school.

"Their little boy looked freaked out, and she was pregnant — those guys had no right to do what they were doing," Sialana told the Outlook newspaper on Wednesday. Schwarzenegger and wife are "really famous, they make millions of dollars, but they were just taking their son to school."

Two photographers are out on bail, accused of false imprisonment, reckless driving and battery for allegedly ambushing the couple after a road pursuit that led to a car crash.

Sialana, who was named as a battery victim, tried to block a photographer from taking Shriver's picture.

"I know that women, when they're pregnant, are real fragile. Stress like that could have a detrimental effect — and these guys didn't care," said Sialana, who has a 2 1/2-year-old daughter.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Patsy Cline has been dead for more than 30 years, yet she's still got a new live album coming out.

"Patsy Cline: Live at the Cimarron Ballroom," due out July 29 from MCA Records, is made from tapes found in a house where Cline once lived. The singer was killed in a plane crash in 1963.

The 1961 concert in Tulsa, Okla., was her first show following a near-fatal car accident that left her with a broken wrist, dislocated hip and cuts on her face. The album includes her joking with the audience about women drivers and her recovery.

"In three months, I go back for more plastic surgery and they say they're going to give me a face-liftin' — that's going to make me look like new," the 28-year-old singer said.

The new disc contains 17 tracks, including hits "Walking After Midnight" and "Lovesick Blues," and three songs she never recorded in a studio — "Shake, Rattle and Roll," "Stupid Cupid" and "When My Dreamboat Comes Home."

LA PORTE, Texas — Evander Holyfield says he nearly quit boxing when he discovered the other guy was allowed to hit back.

The World Boxing Association champ was stunned when, at 11 years old, he was punched for the first time during a match with a boy named Cecil Collins, he told a church group Wednesday.

"I hit him in the face and he hit me back," Holyfield said. "That was the first time that anyone hit me back. The coach asked me what was wrong and I said, 'He hit me back.' He said, 'Welcome to boxing.'"

Up until that point, Holyfield, who started boxing when he was 8, had won every fight by using his coach's strategy of striking first, he said.

The fight ended up being Holyfield's first loss — the first of two losses that year to Cecil. Each time, Holyfield told his mother he wanted to quit and she wouldn't let him.

He faced Cecil once more, at a state tournament in Atlanta a year later. Holyfield said he prayed for a victory and got it.

"I learned you have setbacks," Holyfield told the church group. "But from then on, when I lost, I never wanted to quit."

COMPUTERS & NEW TECHNOLOGY

Netscape updates its Web browser

By Art Kramer
N.Y. Times News Service

The Netscape icon that will appear on four popular search engines Wednesday is a shortcut to the newest products from the company that has become almost synonymous with World Wide Web browsing software.

Communicator is Netscape's strongest attempt yet to evolve its popular Navigator Web browser into an all-purpose Internet package.

And in a reversal of last summer's browser wars, Netscape will beat Microsoft, its only serious rival, in the race to introduce next-generation software. A new Microsoft package is expected before midsummer.

Why trade old reliable for a flashy new model? Communicator has lots of components and options not found in previous versions of Netscape software. There's an improved Navigator Web browser with lots of new features, a retooled e-mail package called Messenger, an advanced newsgroup reader called Collabra and a Web page creation and editing tool named Composer. A "push" technology module called Netcaster is still several weeks away.

Messenger has built-in filtering, which is the ability to automatically sort incoming e-mail into separate folders or to the trash according to date, sender or subject.

Move a mouse over the subject line in an e-mail message, and it automatically expands to display the entire title of the message, even on a laptop screen. Messenger has built-in spell-checking and lets users attach document and graphic files to e-mail messages more easily than in older Netscape software. A Web page address included in an e-mail message automatically becomes a clickable link. Click, and the browser launches and opens that page.

The browser has new conveniences, too. Bookmarks, the saved locations of favorite Web pages, are much easier to create and manage. As they are created, users are given the opportunity to name them and sort them into folders.

And users can set up an on-screen toolbar for one-click access to their favorite Web sites.

Communicator will be available Wednesday from Excite, Infoseek, Lycos, Yahoo and about 35,000 other sites in an event the company is calling The Great Internet Tune Up. But eager users may find some copies sneaking onto the Net a few days early.

Use of Communicator is free for 60 days, after which the package will sell for $59. It won't appear in stores until late summer.

Also improved is automatic installation of some plug-ins, the small helper programs provided by other companies that extend the software's ability to

Most Internet users will look but won't buy

By Alan M. Wolf
N.Y. Times News Service

While some Internet users search for product information online, most don't use it to buy products, according to a survey released today.

The survey polled more than 1,000 people and found 29 percent said they call up the Internet at work, home or school. Just 10 percent of Internet users, though, said they've bought something online. Items that buyers mentioned included clothing, computer software, books and CDs.

Of those who use the Internet, 36 percent said getting product information online is important. Another 58 percent cited sending and receiving E-mail and 43 percent said reading news about current events was important.

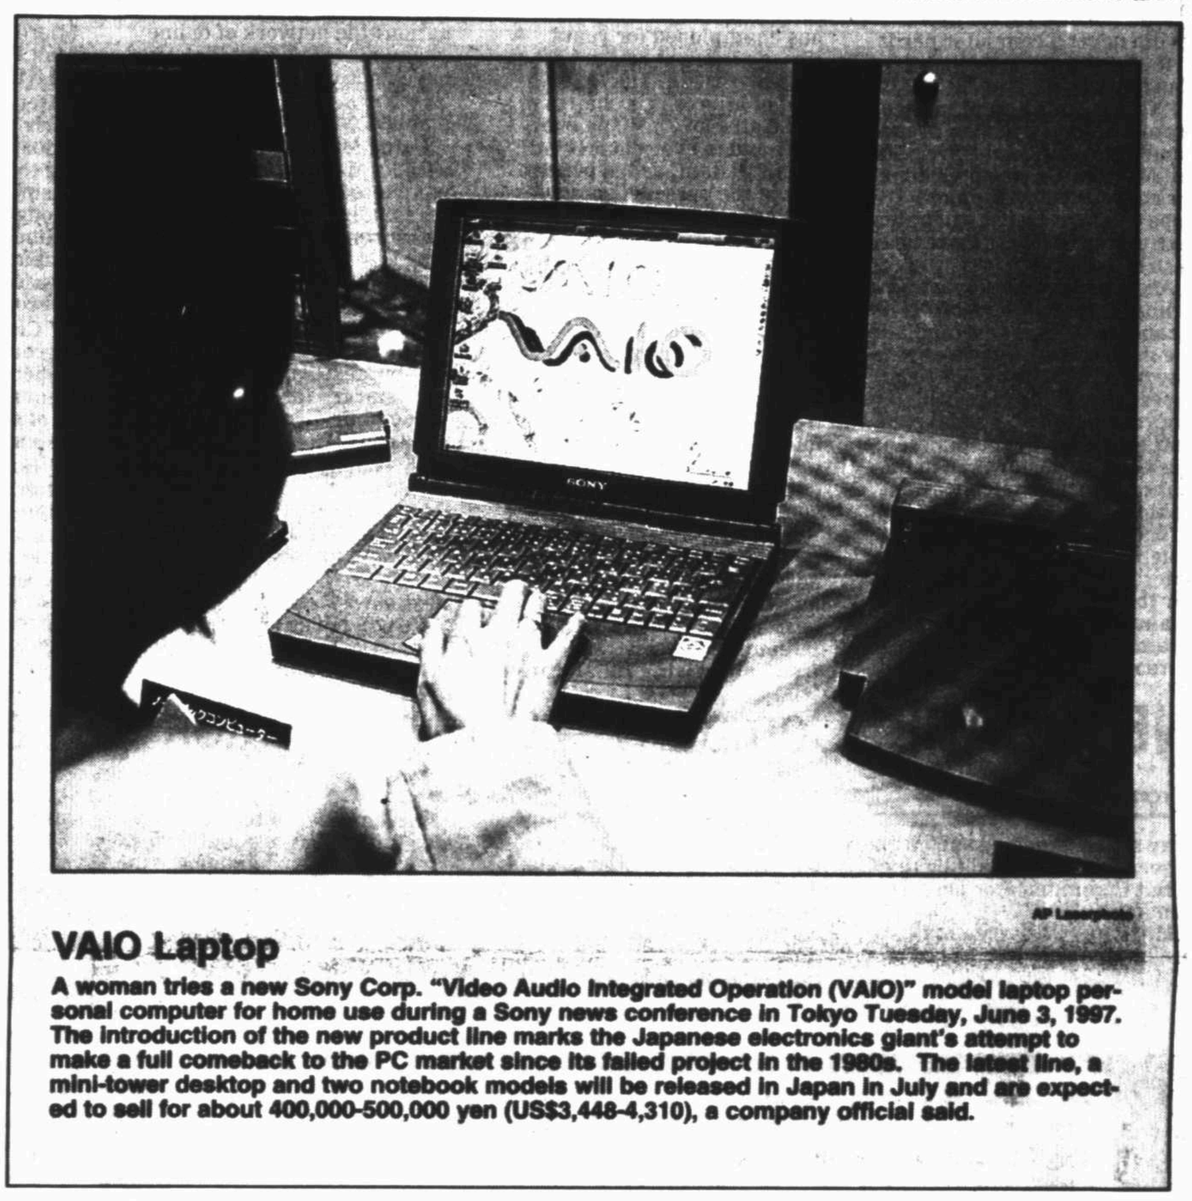

The survey comes as the U.S. Federal Trade Commission today launched a four-day hearing into online privacy issues, including marketing of sensitive information. The agency plans to make recommendations to Congress, which is considering legislation on online privacy safeguards.

America Online Inc. was the most popular commercial service, the survey found, used by 76 percent of those polled who access the Internet through a commercial online provider.

"From where we sit, online commerce is growing," said Wendy Goldberg, an AOL spokeswoman. "If AOL was a mall, we have the foot traffic. We're the No. 1 consumer shopping area on the Internet."

AOL, which today announced a three-year, $50 million marketing deal with CUC International Inc., hopes to use its 8 million customers as a captive audience for online services. AOL will market CUC's shopping, travel and auto services.

The survey was conducted in April by Chilton Research Services, a Radnor, Penn.-based firm.

The introduction of the new product line marks the Japanese electronics giant's attempt to make a full comeback to the PC market since its failed project in the 1980s. The latest line, a mini-tower desktop and two notebook models will be released in Japan in July and are expected to sell for about 400,000-500,000 yen (US$3,448-4,310), a company official said.

Microsoft looks beyond computer nerds

By Steve Lohr
N.Y. Times News Service

For Microsoft Corp., money is not a problem, but finding a way to continue its remarkable trajectory of growth certainly is.

Buying a $1 billion stake in Comcast Corp. is part of Microsoft's solution to that problem — moving beyond personal computer software to become a media company for the 21st century, combining programming, technology and distribution.

It is a reasoned, if risky, bet for Microsoft. The investment in Comcast, announced Monday, is only one of the many moves Microsoft has made — ranging from the online topical magazine Slate to MSNBC, a Web site and cable news network, to its recent $425 million purchase of Web TV Networks Inc., a maker of set-top boxes that deliver the Internet to television sets. And with $9 billion in cash nestled in the corporate treasury, Microsoft can afford its media strategy.

"Microsoft is building a very large, powerful media company," said Richard Shaffer, a principal of Technologic Partners, a research firm. "What has motivated this push into media is the search for future growth. And what has attracted Microsoft is that the media business is going through a transition toward the digital technology of computers."

The stake in Comcast is an investment in the distribution side of Microsoft's ambitious media plans. Comcast says it will use the money it receives mainly to upgrade its network to prepare for the integration, through digital technology, of the worlds of the personal computer and of television.

Television itself will be changing, with the introduction of HDTV — a high-resolution picture standard that both broadcasters and Microsoft have worked to develop.

A high-speed digital transmission system is needed to bring Microsoft's multimedia offerings — online news, entertainment and shopping — into homes with television-quality sound and video. The higher-speed network, known

Investors cautious

NEW YORK — For sheer action, there's nothing like technology stocks. But it appears that mutual fund investors may be growing less enamored of the excitement.

For the week ended last Wednesday, funds that specialize in technology stocks saw investors take out $82.5 million, according to an estimate by AMG Data Services. That made it the worst week for those funds since October.

That movement was no surprise, given that over the same period the Morgan Stanley high-technology index, a reasonable proxy for the portfolios of many of those funds, fell 7 percent — in part because Intel Corp. stunned investors by saying revenue for the current quarter would be down.

But in some ways, the cash flow figures are more interesting for the four weeks before the bad news hit. Then, technology stocks were leaping, with the Morgan Stanley index rising 17.6 percent and setting records.

Yet over those four weeks, the funds managed to take in only $212 million. Not bad, certainly, but not what it used to be. Consider the four weeks ended Jan. 22. Over that period, the Morgan Stanley index rose 7.3 percent, a full 10 percentage points less than the recent four-week run-up. And yet $478 million flowed into technology stock funds during that period.

The week following that run saw technology stocks give up most of the gain — falling 5.6 percent. And yet, $21 million came into technology stock funds during that week.

Movie Trivia

So, you think you know movie trivia?

Could be, to use the title of Berkeley Software program, "You Don't Know Jack" about movies. The movie-trivia program is the lastest in the Jack series (Windows, Macintosh; about $30); this one combines a television game-show environment with movie facts.

The program lets human contestants play against each other or against computer-controlled players. There are more than 800 questions about movies, ranging from facts about movie stars, quotes from movies and movie sequels.

If you don't understand what's going on when someone talks about "six degrees from Kevin Bacon," or don't appreciate twisted humor and sarcasm, this program probably isn't going to be impressive.

The game is for adult audiences, and as the outside warning label notes, the kids probably "won't get it anyway."

Capture your screen

Need a printout of the computer screen? It's possible to use Windows 95's clipboard feature to capture the screen, then "paste" it into a word processing program.

A more versatile way, however, is to use a screen capture program. SnapShot, reviewed here previously, is one of them. But it has since changed its name to HyperSnap-DX and added several new features.

It can now be used with programs that use Microsoft's DirectX technology (used mainly for games). The program also captures scrolling windows on World Wide Web sites.

The new release is included in the price for previous purchasers of HyperSnap or SnapShot/32 Version 2 licenses.

Precision captures of windows and desktop areas are made easy by a series of tools that allow the user to define areas or outline the subject matter with freeform rectangles which can be adjusted by as little as one pixel.

Dear Amy: How can we convince our parents to let us surf the Web anytime we want? If you could tell us what there is to do on the Internet, that would help us. — Taryn, Thousand Oaks, CA

Dear Taryn: There are tons of good things to do on the Web. Just check out Weekly Reader's Galaxy at http://www.weeklyreader.com/ Your parents should make the rules about when, where and how much you can surf. If your parents are like mine, they want to know the kind of Web sites you are visiting for your safety. And, since my Internet Service Provider charges for how long I'm online, my folks set the amount of time. I have our Internet rules for safety pinned on the wall above my computer.

Panasonic brings digital camera to the masses

By Michael E. Kennell
N.Y. Times News Service

About a dozen years ago, a magazine ran a cover photo of some very real-looking flying saucers lazily floating past the Golden Gate Bridge.

Superimposed upon the picture was an ominous warning, something like: "The end of photographs as proof of absolutely anything."

Of course, what the authors were calling our attention to — albeit in a somewhat sensationalized way — was the development of digital photography. The ability to turn images into a string of zeros and ones permitted computers to store pictures.

Or manipulate them. Hence, ET's friends visit San Francisco.

But digitization has been the playground of professionals, especially Hollywood types. You know, the folks who had Forrest Gump shake hands with President John Kennedy and made the alien attack so darned convincing in "Independence Day."

But now, the digital camera is slowly wending its way into consumer hands.

Those who want a camera merely for daily use — recording weddings, kids' birthdays, sports and life in general — might check out Panasonic's PV-DC1000, the PalmCam, which the company touts as its first digital camera for consumers.

For details, call Panasonic (800-222-4213). But here is a quick rundown:

The camera, which runs on two AA batteries, has a 5.7 mm lens, which the company says is the "functional equivalent" of a 55 mm lens on a single-lens reflex camera. The PalmCam's aperture is fixed at f3.8, but its shutter speed can be adjusted from one-eighth of a second to +0,000 of a second.

On one set of batteries, the camera can record up to 100 images — the company doesn't call the process "taking pictures."

Photos can be viewed on a built-in color monitor, a 1.8-inch active matrix liquid crystal display. The camera comes with a "docking station" that can connect it to either a Windows-based PC or a Macintosh, so the user's computer can store or send images.

The number of photos the camera can store depends on how fine the user wants the resolution of the images to be. For example, the camera can store up to 94 images with a resolution of 320 by 240 pixels. The capacity translates to only 16 pictures with "a superfine" image of 640 by 480 pixels.

Panasonic suggests a retail price of $500 for the camera.

The camera comes with Adobe Systems software for both Macintosh and Windows, software that allows users to enhance and modify photos. For example, Panasonic suggests that you can improve color and contrast, remove "unwanted items" or add some items you want in your pictures.

Like, for instance, flying saucers.

Traffic report

If you owned a restaurant, you'd want to know how many folks order the pecan pie.

In fact, you'd really like to know how many wanted a burger or salad or soda. And while you're at it, you'd be curious about how many people wandered in, took a gander at the menu and walked out without spending a dime.

Any business wants to know how much "traffic" it is getting, what is working, what isn't. The same applies to a Web site on the Internet. And unlike a restaurant, the Internet offers technology that can automatically count visitors and — if you are willing to pay for it — provide a precise picture of what each one does while on the site.

Internet World magazine's June edition has reviews of a number of "log-file analyzers" that offer a range of features.

Author David D. Busch says the average individual with a Web site "probably doesn't need anything more complex than a Web counter that feeds their vanity with a tally of how many thousand souls have accidentally or intentionally stumbled across their site to date."

But for companies — even small ones — something a bit more sophisticated would be warranted.

Busch says a decent log-file analyzer can provide clues for how to increase the number of visits to your site, tell you which pages are read the most, even give you a glimpse at the demographics of the visitors.

MICROSOFT: Strategy is to supply software for new media, programming as broadband, is essential to extend the market for new media beyond computer nerds to the far larger audience of couch potatoes.

"This is our attempt to accelerate the deployment of broadband networks," said Greg Maffei, Microsoft's vice president for corporate development. "We hope our investment will galvanize others to invest more heavily in broadband."

Accelerating that investment is important to Microsoft. If its sizable outlays in new media for the information highway are to pay off, the highway has to be there. So far, the pace of improvement in personal computers, driven by the microchip, has been far faster than in the improvement in telephone or cable television networks.

The network bottleneck is a potential business headache for Microsoft. The growth outlook for the company's financial mainstay — productivity programs like word processing, spreadsheet and data base software — must inevitably slow.

The market for CD-ROM entertainment and education software, a business Microsoft has championed for years, shows respectable if not spectacular growth. The longtime goal of Microsoft's chairman, Bill Gates, of "a PC on every desk and in every home" still seems distant, as the penetration of the personal computer into households is stalled around 35 percent.

As television increasingly moves to embrace the digital technology of the personal computer, Microsoft has viewed that transition as an opportunity to broaden its business into the mass market of consumer electronics. It does not want to get into the low-profit business of making television sets, just as it never wanted to make personal computers.

Instead, the Microsoft strategy is to supply the software for new media and programming, as well. It views the media business as a source of steady streams of revenue, not only from advertising but also from sales and distribution fees.

The linkage of media with other fees is illustrated by Microsoft's Sidewalk, a planned nationwide network of online city guides. The first Web sites have gone online in Seattle and New York, with eight more planned later in the year.

Using Microsoft's software with local information, the company intends to offer consumers personalized advice on movies, restaurants, travel and shopping.

The approach is intended to enable Microsoft to not only grab a slice of the $66 billion-a-year market for local advertising, but also sales and distribution charges for airline tickets, automobile sales and retail goods.

In a conference call Monday, Gates played down Microsoft's expansion into the media business. The Comcast move, he said, was mainly an investment.

"We are not in the cable business ourselves," Gates said. "We will never be in the cable business. This is not an expansion of the businesses we are in."

He seemed to be defining the cable business narrowly to exclude programming, since Microsoft already has a sizable joint venture with NBC in MSNBC.

Definitions aside, Microsoft's early media efforts strike some industry executives as borrowing too much from the computer business and perhaps not enough from television. Its online services, they say, tend to emphasize e-mail, computer discussions and frequent remakes of programming.

"Clearly, Microsoft has done a great job in its business," said Robert Rast, a vice president of General Instrument Inc., a maker of set-top boxes for cable television.

"But that wider audience of Americans accustomed to entertainment television are different consumers from personal computer people," Rast added. "To succeed in the media business, Microsoft has to satisfy that broader audience of less technologically sophisticated Americans."

NETSCAPE: Company's 'Communicator' isn't an antidote play sound, video, graphics and other types of special functions.

(From 1F)

But Communicator isn't a panacea.

Marietta, Ga., voice-mail dealer Ken Leebow, author of "300 Incredible Things to Do on the Internet," told 31,000 subscribers to his weekly electronic newsletter in May that he had ditched an experimental version of Communicator and skipped backward two generations to Netscape Navigator 2.0, which the company retired in the fall of 1996.

Leebow, who often keeps hundreds of pieces of e-mail in his electronic in-box, didn't like the way Messenger displayed new messages.

"At some point I'll upgrade," Leebow said. "But for now I'm sticking with my old software."

Netscape shares fall after report of bug in browser

N.Y. Times News Service

Netscape Communications Corp. shares fell as much as 6.6 percent after a report that a flaw in its Internet browsing software allows Web site operators to access the personal computers of users.

Netscape said its engineers found the bug, which has existed since January 1996, and will post a "software patch" on the Internet early next week that users can download to fix the problem. The company said exploiting the bug requires a specially designed Web site and sophisticated software.

The report by CNNfn yesterday comes as federal regulators debate whether to impose guidelines for protecting consumer privacy on the Internet. Currently, most browser software warns users that the information they provide can be seen by others.

"The security in all of these products is hardly perfect," said Mary McCaffrey, an analyst at Alex. Brown Inc. "The industry has made a lot of progress but to say the security in all this is bulletproof is extreme."

Netscape shares fell 3/16 to 33 1/8 in late trading.

Introduction to the Internet

Tuesday, June 17th
8:30 am - 5:00 pm

This class will introduce you to the ins and outs of the Internet, and will focus specifically on the often vague answer to a very straight-forward question:

"How do I get on the Internet, and what do I do once I am there?"

This class will show you how to get on the Internet.

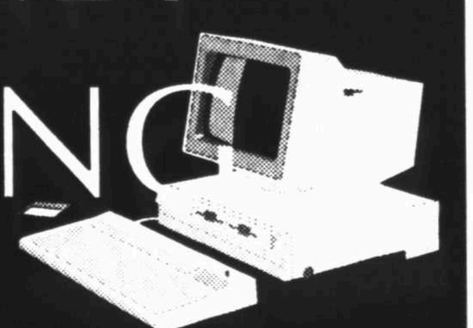

And, it covers the topics: What you need to connect; hardware and software considerations; SLIP and PPP connections; what is TCP/IP; finding a service provider; using software tools to locate information on the 'Net; using FTP, Archie, Gopher, Telnet; accessing Newsgroups; e-mail and mailing lists; how to access the World Wide Web; using Netscape, the most popular WWW browser; understanding URL's and Hypertext; and anti-virus protection.

Prerequisite: Basic computer and Windows skills

Well Beings.

Your baby is beautiful. And may be the picture of health. But there's also a one in four chance he or she isn't up-to-date with immunizations. One in four.

Your child needs more than 12 shots over the course of five visits, before the age of two.

So never assume your baby is on schedule. Ask your doctor at every visit.

That way, you'll be certain you're giving your child a fair shot. And that's the most beautiful thing of all.

For more information, please call the National Immunization Information Hotline at 1-800-232-2522.
