Did Reagan know?

WASHINGTON — Special Iran-Contra prosecutors have concluded that President Reagan knew about the arms-for-hostages swap from the beginning and was repeatedly warned that the plan was illegal. That conclusion is in the indictment returned this week against former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger. The indictment says the picture of Reagan's role was drawn from Weinberger's extensive notes from the period. The indictment, obtained by independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, charges Weinberger with five felony counts of lying and covering up the Iran-Contra affair. Weinberger vigorously denies the charges.

$1 million drawing

DALLAS — Texas Lottery officials plan a glitzy downtown party today to crown the game's first million-dollar winner in what the master of ceremonies calls "the ultimate game show." The Lottery's first weekly 'Millionaire a Week' drawing will feature ice skaters, 10-gallon hats a $40,000 neon-lighted stage and seven Texans who hope to walk away wealthy. The grand-prize drawings will be held each Thursday through Sept. 3 in different cities around the state./8B

Cease-fire ends

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Heavy shelling shook Sarajevo and its suburbs on Wednesday, ending a cease-fire that had briefly brought peace to the ravaged city. Serb forces reportedly captured a strategic hill just south of the Bosnian capital. "This is all-out war," said Adnen Abdul Rezek, the U.N. official in charge of civilian affairs in Sarajevo./5A

Glenn Ford's out

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Actor Glenn Ford returned home Wednesday to recover from a bout of pneumonia that kept him in the hospital for more than a month. Ford, 76, was hospitalized May 14 with an irregular heartbeat and blood clots in his lungs. His condition worsened and he developed pneumonia May 28. "He's recovered and he's going home," said Patricia Kirk, spokeswoman for St. John's Hospital and Health Center. Before he fell ill, Ford had been scheduled to begin filming a new cable TV series, "Africa Skies," in July, publicist Dick Guttman said.

House blocks spending on $8.3 billion collider

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted Wednesday night to block continued construction of a futuristic $8.3 billion atom smasher in Texas that critics called too expensive for a government trying to hold down spending.

The research project, known as the superconducting super collider, had been included in a $21.8 billion spending bill that provides money for the Energy Department and for an assortment of waterway protection projects.

An amendment that called for shutting down the project, leaving only $34 million to phase out ongoing activities, was approved 232-181.

It was a stunning defeat for supporters of the project, who had expected that the $483.7 million contained in the bill for

Clinton launches blistering broadside at Bush, Quayle

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Bill Clinton launched a blistering new broadside against the Bush administration on Wednesday for sending Vice President Dan Quayle out as a "spearbearer ... to terrorize the American political landscape."

The Democratic presidential candidate also turned on President Bush, too, for breaking campaign promises.

"Tough-on-crime has turned into wimp-out in the face of other pressures," Clinton said of Bush's refusal to back a gun control bill.

Clinton said Bush was "still in the grip of a dumb idea" for thinking anything good for the environment hurts corporate America.

Yeltsin wows Congress

Russian president implores lawmakers for aid

Russian President Boris Yeltsin accepts a bracelet from a member of Congress after giving a speech before Congress on Capitol Hill Wednesday. Behind Yeltsin is Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell.

■ Leader appears to win converts with his stirring speech and dramatic personal confrontation, lawmakers say.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — On a day that the United States gave Russia a set of trade incentives to boost its struggling economy, President Boris N. Yeltsin swept through official Washington like a conquering hero on Wednesday and announced that he was deactivating the most potent nuclear missiles aimed at America.

Amid chants of "Boris, Boris, Boris!" reverberating through the House of Representatives chamber, Yeltsin stirred Congress to 13 standing ovations as he vowed that the "idol of Communism" has "collapsed, never to rise again." Having caused a furor on Monday by asserting that some Americans taken prisoner in Vietnam or other wars may still be alive in Russia, Yeltsin pledged to do whatever was needed to find them. He leaped ahead of the agreement to cut long-range nuclear weapons that he and President Bush announced on Tuesday by telling the joint meeting of Congress that he had ordered the 10-warhead SS-18 missiles that are to be destroyed under the accord removed immediately from active status.

Then he said it was time for the United States to repay Russia's good will by passing a stalled package of aid that includes $12 billion that the International Monetary Fund says it needs to begin lending to Russia and the other former Soviet republics. "There will be no second try," he cautioned.

Bush, who will have to expend considerable political capital to insure passage of aid for Russia, later joined Yeltsin's appeal for action, asking Congress to put aside election-year pressures to spend money at home, not in Russia, and pass

POW revelations inflame embers of search

By Mike Christensen
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Russian President Boris Yeltsin said flatly Wednesday that North Vietnam had transferred some American prisoners of war to the Soviet Union, and he promised to track down the details.

He earlier had said "it is possible" that American POWs are still alive in Russia.

Congressional investigators, however, remain skeptical because of the continuing confusion evident in comments by Yeltsin and his chief military adviser, Gen. Dmitri Volkogonov.

Yeltsin's revelations, beginning with a letter to a Senate committee last week, have inflamed the embers of a decades-old search for those missing from three wars, particularly Vietnam.

Dogged by POW questions throughout his Washington visit, Yeltsin told a joint meeting of Congress on Wednesday that he would comb the Soviet archives and "even if one American has been detained in my country and can still be found, I will find him. I will get him back

Producers: Film's accounting is batty

By John Horn
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Warner Bros., which releases "Batman Returns" on Friday, is making the startling claim that the original "Batman" film has lost more than $20 million.

The disclosure, coming to light just before Friday's "Batman Returns" premiere, magnifies the arcane — and some say dishonest — methods Hollywood accountants routinely employ.

Despite worldwide receipts approaching $300 million and additional millions in merchandise profits, "Batman," the fifth highest-grossing film of all time, may never show a net profit, according to a Warner Bros. financial statement obtained by The Associated Press.

Warner Bros. may have made more than $100 million on the film, according to a lawsuit involving the bookkeeping. Two executive producers of both "Batman" and "Batman Returns" claim the studio's accounting is fraudulent and unconscionable, and their attorney says the two are owed as much as $30 million.

"We don't know why they're making 'Batman Returns' when they claim to have taken it in the ear so bad on 'Batman,'" said Thomas Girardi, lawyer for producers Benjamin Melniker and Michael Uslan. "They should get someone over there to stop the bleeding."

Minorities question school board's selection process

By Darren J. Waggoner

The dismissal of a minority woman's application for a secondary- and an elementary-school level principal position has left several community members calling for a revamping of the Midland Independent School board's interviewing process.

About 50 people jammed board chambers Thursday night following a closed executive session to ask why a black woman with a doctorate degree, Dr. Delilah Diggs, was omitted during the board's initial "paper" screening process.

The "paper" screening process was implemented to exclude applicants before spending the time to interview unqualified individuals, according to Ricardo Torres, executive director of secondary

Twenty years later, Liddy returns to The Watergate

WASHINGTON — G. Gordon Liddy returned to The Watergate on Wednesday — exactly 20 years after the botched burglary he masterminded. Only this time, he got the red-carpet treatment.

"It was sort of like old-home week here," said the convicted Watergate conspirator who now hosts a popular radio talk show here. "They welcomed me with open arms and said, 'We'll give you a key. Please don't break any locks.'"

It wasn't his first return, but certainly the most public — accompanied by more than 100 reporters, photographers and fans seeking autographs. They

COLLIDER: House blocks $8.3 billion atom smasher

the collider would be approved.

Energy Secretary James Watkins said in a statement he was "deeply disappointed by the House action. It does not demonstrate good stewardship of our nation's scientific and technology research base that the public has entrusted to the government."

The overall legislation, which also provides a sharp increase in spending for environmental cleanup at the government's nuclear weapons plants, later was approved by a vote of 365-51.

The Senate has yet to consider the measure and could restore spending for the super collider. The issue would then have to be resolved between the House and Senate. President Bush has wanted the collider project to continue at levels higher than even considered by the House.

But too many House members considered it a unnecessary drain on the federal budget.

Just under $1 billion in federal money already has been spent on the project, and Texas has pumped in $200 million in state funds. Construction began in 1989.

Critics of the super collider, which is under construction near Waxahachie, argued that funding should be cut off because of uncertainty over its scientific value.

But supporters said the research facility, which the Bush administration wants built, is essential if the country is to remain a world leader in basic scientific research.

After several hours of debate on the project, most of the $483.7 million for the collider was taken out of the bill, leaving $34 million for the Energy Department to use shutting down the project.

"It's an enormous pig in a poke," argued Rep. Howard Wolpe, D-Mich., who maintained that the project already is over cost and its long-term scientific benefits have been exaggerated.

"We can't continue spending money we don't have on projects we don't need," agreed Rep. Dennis Eckart, D-Ohio.

The research facility has been designed to consist of a 54-mile oval tunnel in which subatomic particles will be accelerated to nearly the speed of light and smashed together.

Plans envision more than 2,500 of the world's scientists eventually using the facility in the search of basic clues about the fundamental structure of matter. Supporters argue untold scientific benefits could spin off from the basic research.

"It is vital that we have it. It is vital that we operate it," said Rep. Joe Barton, R-Texas, arguing the collider represents the next generation of federal scientific laboratories.

Rep. George Brown, D-Calif., chairman of the House Science, Space and Technology Committee, said the collider was needed to "restore America's pre-eminent role in high-energy physics.".

The Bush administration had argued for continuation of the super collider program and had asked Congress for $650 million for the 1993 fiscal year, $166 million more than is being spent this year.

The House Appropriations Committee would go along with only $483.7 million, an amount the collider's supporters had felt was almost surely to be approved by the full House.

Even if the Senate eventually restores the collider funding, the House action might make it harder for foreign contributors to commit money to the project. The Energy Department has anticipated that other nations, including Japan would commit as much as $1.7 billion to the program.

CLINTON: Candidate's comments are laced with feisty new rhetoric

(From 1A)

In a rousing speech to the American Federation of State County and Municipal Employees, one of the first unions to back the Arkansas governor, Clinton chided Quayle for his crusade against the "cultural elite."

"Who is he to call me part of an elite?" Clinton said, noting Quayle grew up wealthy while he once lived in a house with outdoor plumbing.

"I've read a book or two in my life and maybe that qualifies me to be in the cultural elite," Clinton said.

"This administration's idea of family values is to lecture the rest of us on how to behave. If only 'Murphy Brown' were taken off television, what a wonderful world this would be," Clinton said sarcastically.

Clinton's complained like this about the Bush administration before, but Wednesday's comments were laced with feisty new rhetoric and came just before Clinton flew to Washington for a morning meeting with Russian President Boris Yeltsin today.

Clinton is meeting with Yeltsin to boost his appeal in the foreign policy arena, Clinton's weak point and Bush's strong suit.

In his union speech, Clinton said Bush promised 15 million new jobs in his first term and is still 14.5 million short.

"The president said sometimes unemployment goes up when you come out of recession. I do believe if he became unemployed we'd be coming out of the recession," Clinton said.

Then he knocked Bush for not fully funding the Head Start educational program for young children. At the rate the program is being funded, it will take until 2035 to fund the program, Clinton said.

"Under the Constitution, we can't give him 43 more years. Why give him four more years?" said Clinton, in a new version of his stump speech in which he pledged universal health care and college access and a new economic strategy to invest in American business.

Clinton offered a mild version of his strategy of telling special interest groups what they don't want to hear as a way to prove his independence.

Clinton told the 1.3 million-member union of state and local workers that he would cut the federal government's administrative budget by 3 percent every year for four years to help bring down spending.

But did not blame public employees for government gridlock, instead pinning it on political leaders and special interests that had "plundered" the system for their own benefit.

"I promise you I will never bash public employees, I will challenge us all to change," Clinton said.

He said he needed the union's help to change Americans' belief that "government would mess up a one-car parade, that we're incapable of doing anything right."

"We have to prove as Democrats that we can make it work again," he said.

Clinton, as a public employee of Arkansas, has been a dues-paying member of AFSCME since 1984.

YELTSIN: Russian president sweeps through D.C.

the aid program quickly.

"Let me just say to the American people, our support for Russia is unshakable because it is in our interest," Bush said at a joint news conference that following a signing ceremony in the White House East Room.

"Success for Russian democracy will enhance the security of every American. Think for just a minute about what that means — not for presidents, nor for heads of state, or historians, but for parents and their children. It means a future free from fear."

Lawmakers said Yeltsin appeared to have won some converts with his stirring speech and dramatic personal confrontation of lawmakers who had been opposing passage of the aid program. But the measure's prospects in Congress remained uncertain and much certainly depended on how much private arm-twisting Bush was prepared to do to back the public appeals for passage he has made at every opportunity in the last two days.

On the final day of the first Russian-American summit meeting, Bush and Mr. Yeltsin signed an agreement to produce a treaty that would slash the two countries' strategic nuclear weapons to one-third of their current size.

Yeltsin also obtained the favorable tariff treatment he has long sought from Washington. The two presidents also signed a packet of agreements intended to open the door to private American investment in Russia, including documents that prohibit double taxation of profits, provide risk insurance for American investors and expand the availability of export credits for American companies.

Other agreements expand the official relationship between the two countries, including cooperation in space and the formation of a joint early-warning system for missile launches.

Similar accords are likely to be signed in time with Ukraine and other former republics, but it seemed evident that Russia, by far the largest of the 15 countries that have emerged from the wreckage of the old Soviet Union, is at the center of Washington's attention.

As important as the documents were, the most dramatic moment of the day came when Yeltsin strode into the packed chamber of the House of Representatives to a standing ovation that was more enthusiastic than the reception Yeltsin gets in the Russian Parliament and rivaled Bush's own reception in Congress after the American victory in the Persian Gulf.

The enthusiasm came as something of a surprise since before Yeltsin's arrival there were few lawmakers who thought that he would outdo his political rival, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, in popularity in Washington. But Yeltsin put his political deftness on display and appeared to win over even those lawmakers who had been demanding that the aid package be held up until Russia accounts for all American prisoners of war who might have been taken to the former Soviet Union.

He stood before the House's enormous American flag, with his broad shoulders and swept-back silver hair towering over the rostrum. His broad face creasing frequently into his easy grin, Yeltsin alternately flattered, cajoled, pleaded, blustered and sternly lectured the assembled senators and representatives about their responsibility to promote political and economic reform in the former Soviet Union.

But he seemed bent primarily on assuring the lawmakers that they can now trust the Russian government, and in doing so he seemed to overshadow even the powerful appearances in Washington by Gorbachev.

POWs: 'This was a bombshell,' one staffer says to his family."

The White House, scrambling to stay on top of the latest developments, dispatched former Ambassador Malcom Toon to Moscow to follow up on Yeltsin's assertions. "It's one of the president's highest priorities," a senior official said.

The administration also canceled an appearance by two Defense Department officials at a Wednesday afternoon House subcommittee hearing on the POW-/MIA issue, on the grounds that the witnesses could not shed any light on Yeltsin's statements.

Describing Yeltsin's statements, a congressional staffer close to the issue said: "This was a bombshell."

Meeting briefly with reporters during a congressional luncheon Wednesday, Yeltsin said, "Amongst the 22,554 names that the (POW) commission has so far investigated, there were names of the American prisoners of war in Vietnam which the Vietnamese at that time transferred to the former Soviet Union."

Pressed on the question later during a news conference with President Bush, Yeltsin said, "What we have on the POWs, I have written everything and given it to the Senate, what we know today."

Yeltsin's letter last week to the Senate Select Committee on POW-/MIA affairs makes no mention of Vietnam prisoners, only to a handful of American deserters in Japan who were smuggled into the Soviet Union. He also turned over a number of documents to the committee.

Also, the 22,554 figure, according to information Yeltsin supplied the committee, is the number of Americans freed from German POW camps at the end of World War II and detained for some period in the Soviet Union. Most were quickly repatriated.

The Senate committee, chaired by Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., along with Russian authorities, has been trying to track down rumors that two American pilots from the Korean War still may be living in Russia, one of them in the Ural Mountains region.

The U.S. and Russian commissions investigating the POW question have examined only a relative handful of the tons of documents accumulated by the KGB secret police and the Communist Party. Red Army records yet remain undisturbed.

"The unknown portions of history in relation to the attitudes of the Soviet state toward other countries," Gen. Volkogonov told a National Archives audience this week, "is like an iceberg that is primarily under water."

Following are the revelations about American prisoners by the new Russian government as they have emerged over the past six days:

■ In a letter hand-delivered to Kerry on Friday, Yeltsin wrote that no documents were yet available on Vietnam POWs, except for the deserters in Japan.

Most of the nearly 23,000 U.S. servicemen liberated from German camps were quickly repatriated, Yeltsin wrote, but 114 captured while fighting for Germany were imprisoned. Also, 716 men from bomber crews were interned, some for more than a year. The Soviets interrogated 59 Korean War pilots, but there was no indication any had been sent to the Soviet Union. The Soviets also shot down nine U.S. planes during the 1950s, and 12 crewmen were in prison in the summer of 1953.

■ On a flight to Washington on Monday, Yeltsin told reporters that some American POWs from the Vietnam War had been held in the Soviet Union. He gave no details.

■ Also on Monday, Gen. Volkogonov told a National Archives audience that among the Americans liberated from German camps in 1945, many of those with Russian or Jewish family names were imprisoned, and some remained there as late as 1954. He said the Soviet archives had not "established factually" that any Korean War pilots were sent to the Soviet Union.

■ On his arrival at the White House on Tuesday, Yeltsin was asked if there were any American POWS in the former Soviet Union. "It is possible," he said.

■ Asked during a Tuesday news conference if there were any Vietnam-era POWS in Soviet labor camps, Yeltsin said, "We cannot rule out the possibility of American POWs still living in the territory of the Soviet Union, which was something that we always denied in the past." He said he had discussed the matter with President Bush and Secretary of States James A. Baker III.

■ After a lunch with Baker on Tuesday, Yeltsin said Russian researchers "have a very clear picture as to how many POWs we had in our territory. ... We know where they were, how many of them died, how many went back to the States, how many are buried, where they are buried. And still we have questions — and still there are possibly some of them who may be still alive on the territory of Russia. We do not have clarity on this yet." He did not speak specifically about Vietnam.

■ During a news conference Tuesday, President Bush said he had "no evidence" that any American POWs were still alive in Russia. Yeltsin promised to cooperate in opening the Soviet archives to a full accounting of all prisoners.

■ At a Tuesday afternoon briefing for reporters, a senior White House official said Yeltsin had told President Bush "he is willing to exhaust every avenue that he can to find out what Americans were in Russia, what their fate was, to give us all that evidence."

"This new Russian government is doing everything it can to respond to our need for information, in part because it wants to cleanse itself of the Soviet legacy," the official said. "I think it would be extremely unfortunate if we asked for immediate results in what is a very difficult problem."

■ In a speech to Congress on Wednesday, Yeltsin promised "that each and every document in each and every archive will be examined in order to investigate the fate of every American unaccounted for."

■ Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., a former POW himself, met privately with Yeltsin Wednesday said afterward that the Russian leader told him "it's a possibility" that Vietnam POWs had been held in the Soviet Union. "He repeated that, it's a possibility."

LIDDY: Convicted Watergate conspirator returns

jammed a small conference room to watch Liddy broadcast his live talk show from the building that lent its name to the nation's biggest political scandal.

It was an anniversary reunion of sorts, with phone calls from numerous Watergate players, including convicted Nixon White House aide Charles Colson.

Even the three Washington policemen who first responded to the break-in at the Democratic National Committee headquarters on June 17, 1972, showed up to celebrate.

They brought Liddy a T-shirt marking the anniversary, with the words "Silence of the Liddy" emblazoned on the back, a p'ay on the movie title, "Silence of the Lambs."

Throughout his trials and more than four years in prison, Liddy stuck to his unbending code of loyalty and silence. He once even offered to stand on a street corner and be shot if it would help President Nixon's cause.

Eventually, he was convicted of organizing the burglary and wiretapping the DNC headquarters at The Watergate, and later refusing to testify about it.

Since his release in 1977, Liddy has never stopped promoting his Watergate connection; he's made a mint lecturing about it and tools around town in a car with "H2O-GATE" vanity plates.

But behind his bold jokes and attention-getting stunts, one thing remains clear: He still has a score to settle with John Dean.

Liddy, 61, now blames Watergate almost entirely on the former White House counsel. He subscribes to a conspiracy theory expounded by Len Colodny and Robert Gettlin in their controversial book, "Silent Coup."

In fact, Colodny joined Liddy on the dais throughout his 4½-hour broadcast. Colodny repeated the book's claims that Dean organized the break-in to steal information about a Capitol Hill call-girl ring run by a friend of his future wife, Maureen.

The book received little critical attention, but it infuriated Dean.

Dean has emphatically denied the book's theory and in January, he filed a $50 million libel and slander lawsuit against Colodny, Gettlin and Liddy.

Despite the lawsuit, Liddy continues to bait Dean. His show features a weekly segment titled "Pop Goes the Weasel" reserved for undiluted Dean-bashing.

And on Wednesday, he described Dean as "a little stool pigeon singing away."

Wednesday's focus on Dean was a departure from Liddy's usual show, which is a bit of a free-for-all: He speaks his mind on everything from gun control to AIDS to burning the flag.

Since Watergate, Liddy has tried a number of careers — from running a Miami-based anti-terrorist academy to acting on TV shows like "Miami Vice."

But he seems most at home on the air. Or in front of a camera.

"Some of you photographers have asked if I'd pose outside the hotel," Liddy said at the end of his show, grinning beneath his thick trademark moustache.

"I'm ready now if you want me."

QUESTION: Several call for revamping of process

school operations.

There are four school principal openings in Midland: three elementary slots at Milam, DeZavala and Bowie, and another at Alamo Junior High.

On the secondary level, applicants must have at least five years of administrative experience.

On the elementary level, applicants must have at least three years of elementary teaching experience.

"Given her training and background, my question is: Why was she (Dr. Diggs) not included in the interview process?" said board member James Fuller to board superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi. "By not allowing minorities to go through this process, we are setting a double standard. By doing so, we will turn away others who get word of the Midland School District's hiring policy.

"These people here tonight want some answers. I want some answers. Why aren't we interviewing these people? And I'm not just talking about minorities, I'm talking about all qualified applicants," Fuller said.

According to Baressi, the answer is written in the board's policy.

"Basically, she didn't meet the requirements for either position. It's that simple," he said.

But Alma Marshall, the former chairman of the Federation of Citizens United to Serve, believes the school board's criteria are stacked against minority applicants.

"To require five years of successful administrative experience is unfair to minorities because tradition says blacks and Hispanics are not given the chance to meet those requirements," Ms. Marshall said.

"We're recruiting minorities but then we're setting up barriers so they can't move ahead. I have a problem with that, and I don't have a problem with saying I have a problem with that," she said.

Robbyne Fuller, the newly appointed chairman of FOCUS, is more concerned with the lack of role models for minority students.

"There are so few minority teachers, these kids have no one to look up at and admire," she said.

Ms. Marshall was more adamant about the importance of role models.

"Successful role models for blacks and Hispanics are essential. These little kids can look up and it gives them the opportunity to say 'I think I can, I think I can.' And if you're not a minority, that's hard to understand," she said.

BATTY: Film's accounting a Joker, producers say

(From 1A)

"We don't have a cape. We don't have a mask. But we believe we were the good guys," Uslan said. "The end of the story is that the jokers got away with the money. But the end of the story hasn't been written yet."

Robert Friedman, president of worldwide publicity and advertising for Warner Bros., did not dispute the accuracy of the statement supplied to the producers. He noted, however, that its accounting reflects contract terms agreed to by Melniker and Uslan.

Top actors, directors and producers negotiate to receive a share of every dollar, or "gross profits," that a movie generates. But like many others, Melniker and Uslan are to receive their share from "net profits," what's left after a variety of expenses and fees are deducted.

The studio says "Batman" hasn't paid off all those costs yet. "Their position has not reached a profit point," Friedman said of Uslan and Melniker, declining to comment further because of the pending litigation.

Net profit deductions frequently make box-office blockbusters such as "Coming to America" appear to be money-losers.

In 1990, a Superior Court judge ruled in a lawsuit by humor columnist Art Buchwald against "Coming to America" producer Paramount Pictures that the studio's formula for figuring net profit was "unconscionable."

Based on the Warner Bros. statement, 1989's "Batman" has brought in $286.8 million directly to the studio. That doesn't include tens of millions of dollars in video-cassette proceeds and merchandise income, Melniker and Uslan say. They say they're owed a share of that revenue as well.

Much of the film's income has been eviscerated by distribution fees, publicity costs and huge "gross profit" payments to Jack Nicholson, who starred as The Joker.

According to published reports, Nicholson's slice of the "Batman" pie exceeds $50 million. That and other "gross profit" payments have raised the film's production cost from $46 million to $121.3 million, the statement shows.

From gross receipts of $286.8 million, Warner Bros. subtracted $89.7 million to itself as a distribution fee, leaving $197.1 million. Advertising, printing, freights, tax and miscellaneous fees totaled $81.5 million, leaving $115.6 million.

The $121.3 million production cost plus $14.5 million in interest left a negative balance of about $20.2 million as of March 1992.

Melniker and Usian are suing Warner Bros. and "Batman" producers Jon Peters and Peter Guber over the accounting and a breach of their contract.

They claim they were barred from the productions, even though they were awarded movie rights to the Batman character 13 years ago for $50,000. As part of that contract with DC Comics, Melniker and Uslan are guaranteed producer credits on any "Batman" film, whether they work on the project or not.

The two say they did have an influence on the movie, suggesting the character be treated more seriously than the campy television series. And Uslan says he suggested Nicholson as the Joker.

Their lawyer said he hopes to have a jury trial next year.

Uslan, an authority on comic books and former legal affairs executive at United Artists, produced with Melniker the miniseries "Three Sovereigns for Sarah," the movie "The Return of Swamp Thing" and the television series "Fish Police." Melniker is a former executive vice president of MGM.

Heavy shelling of Sarajevo ends brief cease-fire

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Heavy shelling shook Sarajevo and its suburbs on Wednesday, ending a cease-fire that had briefly brought peace to the ravaged city. Serb forces reportedly captured a strategic hill just south of the Bosnian capital.

"This is all-out war," said Adnen Abdul Rezek, the U.N. official in charge of civilian affairs in Sarajevo.

He said fighting raged across the western part of the city, which has been besieged for 2½ months by Serb militants who oppose Bosnia's secession from Yugoslavia.

Croatian radio said at least six people had been killed and 44 were wounded since the fighting began Tuesday evening. But the casualty figure was likely to climb as shooting and heavy shelling continued into the night.

U.N. peacekeepers had placed many hopes on the cease-fire declared Monday, in part because it was the first time Serb fighters had agreed to a truce. It was not clear who fired first, though Bosnian forces blamed the Serbs.

Machine-gun fire erupted in Sarajevo late Tuesday around the burned-out shell of Bosnia's parliament building. The capital awoke at dawn to the thunder of fire from tanks, large-caliber artillery, mortars and multibarrel rocket launchers.

Fuad Berberovic, a resident of Dobrinja, said he watched Serb tanks drive through his house. Corpses were scattered on the ground, he said in a telephone interview.

Sarajevo TV journalist Rasim Borcak quoted Gen. Lewis MacKenzie, chief of the U.N. contingent in Sarajevo, as saying U.N. forces might have to abandon efforts to reopen Sarajevo's airport for humanitarian flights to feed the 300,000 Serb, Croat and Muslim residents who remain in the city.

"If both sides don't stop shooting, we cannot help them," MacKenzie was quoted as saying.

In a statement faxed to The Associated Press, Bosnia's government protested what it said was a "massive" Serb assault on Sarajevo aimed at keeping the city's airport closed to humanitarian flights.

The United Nations signed an agreement with the Serbs almost two weeks ago to reopen the airport, but continuous fighting has prevented the peacekeepers from securing the airfield.

Serb forces said they took Zlatiste, a strategic hill between Sarajevo and their headquarters at Pale, to the east. The hill provides a clear link between the Serb military leadership and the Bosnian capital.

Earlier, Maj. Dervo Harbinja, deputy commander of the Bosnian territorial forces in Sarajevo, reported that Serb tanks and infantry were advancing on Zlatiste."Our forces were not prepared for this because of the cease-fire," he said.

Muslim fighters had been making advances outside Sarajevo recently, but on Wednesday they appeared to be losing ground. Bistrik to the southeast, Mount Zuc in the north and Dobrinja, a Sarajevo suburb near the airport, took the brunt of the fighting.

Serb fighters may have been stung into attack by the news of an alliance between Croatia and Bosnia, which was formalized on Tuesday.

Maj. Dervo Harbinja, deputy commander of the Bosnian defense forces in Sarajevo, claimed the Serbs proposed the cease-fire only to buy time so they could bring in reinforcements from their stronghold at Pale.

Bosnia's foreign minister, Haris Silajdzic, urged the U.N. Security Council to authorize military intervention to stop Serbian aggression against Bosnia "since all other means have failed." He spoke at a meeting of the Islamic Conference of Ministers in Istanbul, Turkey.

At least 5,700 people have died since Muslims and Croats, a majority of Bosnia's 4.3 million people, voted on Feb. 29 for independence from the Serb-dominated remnants of Yugoslavia.

Bosnian Serbs boycotted the vote and are trying to carve out their own state to unite with Serbia. Serb irregulars supported by the Serb-dominated Yugoslav army have seized about two-thirds of Bosnia.

Fisherman repels shark with a stick

TOKYO (AP) — A 16-foot shark left two teeth and more than 30 gashes in a small boat Wednesday, but a 71-year-old fisherman drove off the attacker by whacking it on the nose with a stick.

"When I suddenly noticed a shark opening its mouth, I thought I was going to die and tried all means to repel it," Yoshiaki Ueda said in a televised interview.

Yoshiki Iefuji, an official in the Ehime state government in western Japan, said a fishing cooperative reported that two shark's teeth, each 2 inches long, were found on the bottom of Ueda's 16-foot boat.

The shark rammed the boat several times, and Ueda hit the shark's nose several times with a long stick before it finally dived into the sea, Iefuji said.

High prices force Russians to change eating habits

MOSCOW (AP) — Six months into Russia's free-market reforms, salaries have failed to keep pace with the soaring cost of basic food and consumer items, forcing many Russians to change their eating and shopping habits.

At the same time, the availability of scarce goods — such as milk and sugar — has improved, primarily due to their soaring cost, according to an Associated Press survey.

Russian President Boris Yeltsin launched his reforms Jan. 2, lifting price controls on all but the most basic foods and goods in order to end decades of state subsidies and bring prices in line with their real value.

When Yeltsin raised prices, The Associated Press began tracking the cost of 15 everyday items in Moscow stores. Six months later, the cost of filling the "Moscow Marketbasket" had shot up 787 percent. The average Russian salary rose 103 percent — from 960 to 1,950 rubles per month.

"Of course there are more things available, but I cannot afford to buy them anymore," said a 38-year-old shopper who would identify herself only as Tatyana.

"We have definitely been eating much worse than before the prices went up, eating more bread and cereals, no vegetables, some eggs, but meat maybe once or twice a week," she said, standing in line this week in Milk Store No. 26.

In addition to changing their habits, many Russians also hoarded food to see them through the winter. Pensioners, veterans and others on fixed incomes relied heavily on traditional networks of friends and family for help.

Shoplifting also increased, forcing many stores to end self-service.

Russians are being forced to spend more and more of their salary on food. A survey of 1,631 Russians in May by the Russian Center for Public Opinion and Market Research found that 66 percent of respondents said they were spending almost all of their salary on food, compared with 55 percent in February.

The AP surveyed seven state-run stores in central Moscow and a private farmer's market for the prices of sausage, chicken, butter, macaroni, white bread, sugar, milk, fresh fish, women's, men's and children's shoes, pantyhose, skirts and cigarettes. The price of gasoline was checked at various filling stations around town.

While not designed as a comprehensive study, the AP weekly surveys have provided a snapshot of the availability of goods, their prices, and Muscovites' attitudes toward the reforms.

The food item that rose the most in price was sugar, which began appearing regularly on shelves only this month and was scarce even before the reforms began.

A kilogram of sugar cost 2.40 rubles before Yeltsin's reforms. This week, it cost 68 rubles — an increase of 2,733 percent.

A loaf of white bread before Jan. 2 cost 60 kopecks, so cheap that Mikhail Gorbachev once complained loaves were being used by children as soccer balls. Few parents would allow such a practice now, with a loaf selling for 12 rubles.

Milk and butter also rose dramatically in price since January. The cost of milk went up 1,136 percent and butter 1,880 percent.

During the winter, many Muscovites used milk to make "tvorog," a kind of cottage cheese, instead of eating meat. Thus, milk frequently was sold out by midday in many stores.

Prices did not reach their current levels all at once, but rose steadily over weeks, and generally leveled off in February.

Goods such as bread, milk, yogurt, cottage cheese, sugar, salt, cooking oil and matches had price controls lifted in March, although Moscow officials did not decontrol bread and milk until June.

The item that rose the most in the AP marketbasket was children's shoes, which went up 4,233 percent from the subsidized price of 15 rubles. Quality children's clothing is rare in Russia, with huge crowds of shoppers vying for second-rate goods.

Gasoline rose 1,850 percent from January, but is still a bargain at 7.80 rubles a liter — about 30 cents a gallon — for 92-octane fuel. However, Yeltsin has not fully lifted price controls on energy, something the International Monetary Fund is pressing him to do before releasing Western aid packages.

Holocaust survivor gives speech on balcony where Hitler once stood

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — In a moment capturing Austria's determination to confront its Nazi past, tens of thousands cheered Holocaust survivor Elie Wiesel on Wednesday as he spoke from the balcony where Adolf Hitler addressed adoring masses in 1938.

Gazing out over Heroes' Square, where hundreds of thousands greeted Hitler after he had annexed his native Austria to Nazi Germany, Wiesel admitted to feeling a little strange, but "profoundly moved" at the reception.

Loudly cheered and applauded, Wiesel told the mostly young crowd at a rally and rock concert against racism that they could win new acceptance for Austria by facing their Nazi past.

Among the listeners was Hedy Zidek, 67, who said she was also in the audience 54 years ago. As a 13-year-old she cheered Hitler, Zidek said, but she later vowed to "do everything to prevent children from becoming enthusiastic about something like that again."

Austria has been isolated since 1986, when it elected President Kurt Waldheim despite revelations he had concealed service in a German army unit that committed atrocities in the Balkans. On July 8, Thomas Klestil takes over the largely ceremonial presidency.

"Open yourself up to the past and its lessons and you will see that in confronting the truth of that past, it is possible to shape a course of redemption," Wiesel said. He was silhouetted by floodlight high above a crowd organizers estimated at 60,000.

"I am marveling at your willingness to start again ... to open a new chapter pure of the poison that your forebears have either accepted or even propagated," he said.

"Do not forget! ... Do not be indifferent! Start working, start talking, start acting on history. I can tell you that when you do so, people will start looking at Austria differently."

Wiesel's address was the high point of a five-hour event that Jewish leaders and others saw as evidence Austrians have learned the painful lessons of the Waldheim era.

Germans return home after three years in captivity

COLOGNE, Germany (AP) — Two German relief workers returned home Wednesday after three years as captives of radical Shiite Muslims, closing the eight-year drama in which nearly 100 foreigners were taken hostage in Lebanon.

A government jet carrying Heinrich Struebig and Thomas Kemptner and their families landed in Cologne at 7 p.m., and the men were immediately flown to a military hospital at Koblenz, 80 miles to the south.

They were the last Westerners held by the Shiite extremists, and Lebanese leaders hoped the development would open the way to foreign help for rebuilding Lebanon after its crippling 1975-90 civil war.

The captors apparently failed in attempts to trade the Germans for two Lebanese brothers imprisoned in Germany for terrorism. German officials denied a RTL television nnews report they paid a $12 million ransom and agreed to free the brothers.

The hostage saga ended with few flourishes. Struebig and Kemptner were hustled off for medical tests and made no comment to reporters.

Unlike in the United States, their drama hadn't gripped the German imagination. The government handled its efforts to free the hostages in secrecy, and there was little mention of them in the German news media — perhaps because their captivity coincided with the collapse of East Germany and its incorporation into the West.

Newspapers have speculated that Struebig may have sympathized with his kidnappers, and that his relief organization was involved in weapons smuggling.

Bernd Schmidbauer, Chancellor Helmut Kohl's envoy, told journalists in Cologne he had no indication "there was something negative" about Struebig's work.

He said the German government never had direct contact with Abdul-Hadi Hamadi, who allegedly had the Germans kidnapped to win the release of two brothers imprisoned for terrorism in Germany.

Schmidbauer said Germany did all its negotiating with the governments of Iran, Syria and Lebanon.

"I think the Hamadi family, with a certain amount of pressure, was convinced in the end it is in their own interests to release the hostages," said Rudolf Dolzer, another envoy.

He conceded that justice authorities in the two German states where the Hamadi brothers are being held could improve conditions for the two prisoners.

"The German criminal law allows a certain flexibility with regard to visits by the family, with regard to the place of detainment, and we will examine this in due course," Dolzer said.

Struebig, 51, and Kemptner, 30, were released to Schmidbauer in Beirut at midday and made a four-hour stopover at the Greek island of Crete for a reunion with their families and preliminary medical tests.

A doctor present at the examination, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the two showed signs of fatigue and malnutrition.

But Dolzer said the two men were in better condition than expected.

"Sometimes they had less food, and sometimes more. They did not complain as much as we thought they might," he said.

Both men, dressed in dark suits, looked fit as they arrived in Cologne accompanied by Schmidbauer.

They waved to a crowd of reporters kept at the edge of the tarmac and then boarded a military helicopter to fly to Koblenz.

Like other hostages, Kempter and Struebig were kept chained during their ordeal and moved to various locations in southern Lebanon, Schmidbauer said.

But there was no sign the two had been tortured, he said, as were some American and British hostages. Kempter, looking extremely thin, walked stiffly from being chained for so long, he said.

Struebig and Kemptner were abducted on May 16, 1989, in southern Lebanon, where they were working for a private German humanitarian group.

They were seized by the Holy Warriors for Freedom, believed to be a name adopted for the purpose by Abdul-Hadi Hamadi.

His brother Mohammad Ali Hamadi is serving a life sentence for involvement in the 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner in which a U.S. Navy diver was murdered. Abbas Hamadi is serving 13 years for abducting two Germans who were freed in Lebanon in 1989.

In Beirut, Lebanese Prime Minister Rashid Solh expressed hope that Lebanon would now be able "to open a new era of cooperation with Germany, the European Community and the rest of the world."

Chicago rioting stresses need

The Chicago Bulls defeated the Portland Trail Blazers 97-93 Sunday to clinch their second straight National Basketball Association title, which was a cause for revelry by the team's fans.

What some Bulls fans did following the victory, however, was not a celebration; it was outright lawless violence. Literally thousands of fans poured into the streets from nightclubs to unleash a wave of burglary, looting, vandalism and destruction not seen since the violence in Los Angeles following the verdict in the Rodney King beating trial.

The two incidents, while not comparable, are symptoms of the same sickness affecting American society: lawless behavior by mobs that endanger public safety.

There is no way to rationalize what occurs when a mob turns violent. Those caught up in the frenzy are not compelled by a particular motive or bound by morality; they become wild animals unleashed on society to loot, steal, burn and destroy. That was the case in Los Angeles and now in Chicago.

In Los Angeles innocent people became victims of the violent crowd, while in Chicago two people were seriously burned after looters set fire to a store in which the two were attempting to hide.

Two police officers also were shot, although not seriously injured, and another 90 officers in Chicago suffered minor injuries in the melee.

A celebration is supposed to be about fun and gaeity, not violence, destruction and death. What happened in Chicago is another result of what appears to be a major breakdown of the moral code that dictates proper public behavior.

It is not acceptable behavior after any event to loot and burn the property of others or to endanger the lives of police officers who are attempting to maintain the peace. Either the individuals at such functions will learn to control themselves, or there will be no choice other than for police authorities to use the force necessary to bring crowds under control.

OTHER VIEWS

'Boot camp' option may lose support

As society seeks ways to deal with a steadily rising prison population, one of the most popular options has proven to be that of the "boot camp" — a facility, usually for first-time offenders, featuring tough military-style discipline.

It's significantly cheaper than conventional lockups — and it also appeals to the side of human nature that takes a little not-so-guilty pleasure in the discomfiture of lawbreakers.

Trouble is, the returns on this particular experiment in penology aren't uniformly encouraging. Thus far, those who go through boot camps don't seem to be significantly more resistant to recidivism than others — and, just as serious, some of the "drill sergeants" who put the inmates through their paces have in some instances overstepped their bounds.

In the most recent such case, five Harris County sheriff's deputies have been indicted on civil rights charges stemming from their having allegedly forced inmates to fight each other, beaten inmates, and staged "bull in the ring" games in which whole platoons of inmates were pitted against one another. The validity of the charges of course remains to be proven — but if borne out they raise serious questions as to whether this experiment deserves continued support.

Molecular medicine OK boost for San Antonio

Approval by the University of Texas System board of regents for master's and doctoral programs in molecular medicine is wonderful news for San Antonio.

The OK by the board of regents is not the final step — it still faces a long road to approval by the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board — but this is one step in the bureaucratic process.

Molecular medicine holds the possibility of altering genes to prevent diseases such as cancer, aging and kidney failure — any disorder with hereditary links.

Approval of these degrees is the latest step in the steady growth of the (University of Texas) health science center in quality and reputation.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, June 18, the 170th day of 1992. There are 196 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 18, 1815, Napoleon Bonaparte met his Waterloo as British and Prussian troops defeated the French in Belgium.

On this date:

In 1778, American forces entered Philadelphia as the British withdrew during the Revolutionary War.

In 1812, the United States declared war against Britain.

In 1873, suffragist Susan B. Anthony was fined 100 dollars for attempting to vote in the 1872 presidential election.

In 1928, aviator Amelia Earhart became the first woman to fly across the Atlantic Ocean as she completed a flight from Newfoundland to Wales in about 21 hours.

Amendment won't haunt Congress

WASHINGTON — The specter of a constitutional amendment requiring balanced budgets no longer haunts Washington. The amendment has been defeated; the status quo is safe.

And it is altogether appropriate that more than the nine-vote margin of defeat (the vote was 280 to 153 in favor of it, but short of the two-thirds required) was provided by 12 Democrats who co-sponsored the amendment and then opposed it. They gave their written words, which were worthless.

Will

If you do not mind being fed fibs and dissimulations by people whose deceits presuppose you are dim-witted, the arguments of the opponents of the amendment were entertaining. The opponents in Congress, and their allies in the public employees unions, The American Association of Retired Persons, the Conference of Mayors and many other factions interested in increasing government spending, said they were worried that the amendment wouldn't work. Yes, they were up in arms against the amendment because they thought it would be impotent.

The opponents also said the amendment was an evasion of duty, an excuse for not making "tough choices" to reduce the deficit right now. You see, the public employees unions, mayors, AARP and the rest just can't wait to get started.

Congressional opponents of the amendment said: We so love the Constitution, we cannot bear to injure it with an amendment that Congress — we — would ignore or evade. They said that if Congress lacks the "courage" for those "tough choices," no amendment will create courage. So much for the oath they take, swearing to uphold the Constitution.

Why would obeying the amended Constitution require stupendous, superhuman, not-to-be-asked courage? Because balancing the budget would require decisions (raising taxes, cutting spending) inconvenient for the primary business of today's Congress: incumbency protection.

There are just two things that three-fourths of the American people want that Congress will not permit. One is a balanced budget amendment, the other is term limits for legislators. These are anathema to Congress because careerism is the shared creed of Democrans and Republicrats, and deficit spending — burdening future voters to buy today's voters — is the key to careerism.

A balanced budget amendment would be much less necessary if Congress' culture of spending were changed by term limits, which would change the motives and behavior of legislators. A term limitation amendment is currently bottled up in the hostile House Judiciary Committee, chaired by 20-term Jack Brooks, a Texas Democrat. Opponents of term limits say they oppose limits because they are "undemocratic." Opponents so love democracy they will not allow a vote on limits.

There are sensible people who think government revenues should be a larger portion of GNP; and sensible people who say they should be less; and sensible people who think the current portion is about right. But no sensible person defends the pattern of current spending, which is a result of re-election rationales. Hitherto I have said government needs more revenues. Now my position is: No tax increase of any sort, or any size, for any purpose — not one nickel —until term limitation has ended the careerism that depends on deficit spending.

Rep. Vin Weber, the Minnesota Republican who is leaving Congress at age 39, says he has read a lot of the campaign literature of Republican candidates who may be coming to Congress in January, and he is depressed. The candidates are running on promises not to cash checks at a bank that no longer exists, not to use the House gym or barbershop, and to give their parking places to homeless families.

But of course. Such candidates, like many of the current members of Congress, do not want to do something, they just want to be something: incumbents, forever.

LESLIE GELB

The tail has gotten used to wagging the dog

JERUSALEM — Leaders here have always had an eye out for doings between the Israeli tail and the American dog. The tail had gotten used to wagging the dog. But Israelis know those golden days are waning with the cold war's end. And many worry about what will happen when the dog starts wagging the tail.

Gelb

So Israelis now keep especially close watch on the U.S. elections even as their own June 23 day of reckoning approaches. Bill Clinton will be pleased, sort of, with the Israeli preference. But President Bush can console himself, sort of, with the fact that deteriorating Israeli-American ties have not become a campaign issue in the Holy Land. Thankfully, some Israelis are even beginning to think beyond elections to the question of new connections between tail and dog, and of how Israel might help itself and still perform a vital role for America in the Mideast.

Israel may be the only country in the world where leaders of all parties would like to see George Bush retired. Neither Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir nor the Labor Party leader, Yitzhak Rabin, nor other politicians I talked to this week will say that outright. But their feelings are unmistakable: They think that at best Bush does not place high value on Israel, and that at worst, he would nail the old tail to the wall if re-elected.

Ross Perot scares them too because they have no idea what or how he thinks, particularly about the Middle East. Word is just beginning to filter back here about Perot's staff rebuffing contacts by American Jewish leaders. Israelis know little about Marilyn Berger, the former reporter who is now the Perot Mideast adviser. But they are uneasy about Don Hewitt, her husband, whose CBS news program, "60 Minutes," has done some hard-hitting features on Israel.

Bill Clinton, with good ties to the Jewish community and with his positive rhetoric about Israel, is the beneficiary of all these considerations. But mainly, Israeli pols have been quite careful in talking about America.

Shamir's Likud bloc does not wish to call attention to worsening relations with Washington. The United States is too popular and important to Israelis. And for his own reasons, Bush had helped Likud to sidestep the issue by recently making friendly noises about Israel. He does not want to alienate U.S. Jewish voters entirely, nor give Shamir a useful anti-American campaign club. To show continuing cooperation, the U.S. ambassador here went so far last week as to disclose hitherto secret Israeli-American military exercises in the Negev Desert.

Likud's strategy has been to entice Rabin into the role of America's cat's-paw. But the old general continues to dodge the trap. He proclaims that ties with the United States are at "their lowest ebb," but stresses that he won't accept Washington's diktats either.

Shamir understands he will have to address the future of the tail and dog. But he never enjoyed discussing grand strategy, and his responses to me were typically brief and delphic.

Islamic fundamentalism is the common threat, he said, and "no fundamentalist power can impose itself on the Middle East without defeating Israel. Whatever happens in this area, Israel will always be on the same front as the U.S." His implication throughout was that the common interest would be a military-security one.

Rabin, relishing talk of grand strategy, also began with the common threat from anti-Western fundamentalism, but brushed aside thoughts of the United States employing Israeli arms against such threats. To him the lesson of the Persian Gulf War was simple: "For obvious reasons, the U.S. does not want Israel's help" in Arab wars.

But, he went on, Washington does want Israel to be strong militarily so that "Arabs do not believe they can achieve their goals by force and so Israel can negotiate from strength."

Israel's future value to the United States, in Rabin's view, should be as a peacemaker. "The more the peace process will move ahead, the less Islamic fundamentalism will gain."

"The more the U.S. can say it is bringing peace to the area — assisted by Israel acting in its own interests — the more Israel will serve the mutual interest in creating stability and leaving less room for extremists," he offered. Amen to such a tail.

ART BUCHWALD

Who exactly does Quayle consider cultural elite?

Logan Deterding was drinking coffee, eating his doughnut and reading his paper as he usually does in the drugstore down the street, when he said, "I see where Vice President Quayle is attacking the cultural elite."

"Is he doing it as a National Guardsman or a civilian?" I asked.

"It doesn't say," Logan replied. "Who the heck are the cultural elite?"

"It must be those who have culture. I would guess he means most of the people who go to the Kennedy Center. What's he attacking them for?"

Buchwald

"He says they have no family values," Logan said.

"How does he know?"

"I don't think he does. Quayle reads whatever his handlers stick in front of him. But he may be onto something. If we don't know who the cultural elite is — that means most Americans don't know, and he's got them all whipped up. I knew when Communism fell, something had to replace red-baiting. But I didn't think it would be culture."

"Maybe he's appealing to conservatives," I suggested. "The White House is scared to death of Ross Perot, whose family values put Quayles' to shame."

"He's taking more potshots at Murphy Brown, and the liberals in Hollywood who he says are different from the rest of us."

"How can a guy who spends all his time on the golf course and was born with a silver putter in his mouth be like the rest of us. Did he say anything in the speech about the family holding down jobs?"

"No, he doesn't mention jobs. I imagine families who have two parents and go to church, and have a dog named 'Spot' don't have to worry about losing their jobs."

Logan had another cup of coffee. "Quayle's on to something. He's picking up where Spiro Agnew left off. All you have to do is kick the hell out of the press and the creative people and you have 90 percent of the American people in your camp."

"Does he say what we should do about Murphy Brown?"

"In his heart he isn't mad at her. After all, Murphy gave him the only issue he's had since he was Vice President. When Danny pushed that button his whole pinball machine lit up. He's going to beat up on Murphy Brown for the entire campaign so he won't have to say a word about the economy."

"The sad part of it is the more he attacks the media the more space and time they will give him."

"George Bush could wind up playing second fiddle to Quayle if he doesn't watch out."

I said, "I may be part of the cultural elite, but I don't feel it."

Logan said, "It takes time. It's not something you acquire overnight. Elite means there are only a few of us, so we must live up to our reputation."

"Which is?"

"According to Quayle we're the kind of people who want to give out condoms in schools."

"I never said I wanted to hand out condoms."

"But you never said you didn't."

"I can see why he's getting standing ovations. Do you think Quayle will pass the test with the conservatives by calling all of us names?"

"He will if his handlers give him multiple-choice questions."

Study links breast implants with lower risk of cancer

BOSTON (AP) — A major study found that women who have their breasts enlarged with implants face no unusual risk of breast cancer, providing new support for those who oppose a federal ban on the procedure.

In fact, the study found that women getting implants actually appeared to have only about half the cases of breast cancer as would have been expected in the following decade. However, researchers cautioned there is no reason to think implants might somehow reduce the risk of this common cancer.

The study, the largest ever conducted on the subject, is the second to challenge the assertion that breast implants might increase the risk of cancer. That fear was cited among other concerns before the recent federal decision to ban most breast implants.

That action was sharply criticized in two separate reports published with the latest study in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine. Also in the issue, the head of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration defended the decision, calling it one of the most controversial in the agency's history.

In April, a study conducted at the University of Southern California found that women getting implants to increase their breast size had about one-third less breast cancer than expected during 10 years of follow up.

The latest study, conducted and funded by the Alberta Cancer Board in Edmonton, found women with enlarged breasts had just under half as much instances of breast cancer during the ensuing decade.

"Both of these studies are reassuring to women," said Dr. Hans Berkel, who directed the study. "We don't find an increased risk."

Until recently, about 150,000 women in the United States got breast implants annually. About 80 percent were to increase the size of their breasts, and most of the rest were to rebuild their breasts after cancer surgery.

After a furor about individual reports of possible health hazards, the FDA decided in April to virtually ban breast implants for cosmetic purposes.

In a report in the journal, FDA Commissioner David Kessler rejected what he called the "fashionable" argument that women should be free to decide whether or not to take whatever small risks are involved in breast implants.

"To argue that people ought to be able to choose their own risks, that government should not intervene, even in the face of inadequate information, is to impose an unrealistic burden on people when they are most vulnerable to manufacturers' assertions," Kessler wrote.

Negotiators hammer out urban aid package

WASHINGTON (NYT) — After a month of hard-nosed bargaining and political posturing, White House and congressional negotiators agreed Wednesday on a $1.3 billion urban aid package including loans and grants for summer jobs for youths and disaster relief for people whose homes and businesses were destroyed in the Los Angeles riots.

The compromise fell far short of what the nation's big-city mayors and some Democratic lawmakers were seeking, and it excluded law-enforcement and investment programs that President Bush wanted passed quickly in the aftermath of the riots.

"It's not sufficient from our viewpoint," said Rep. Richard A. Gephardt of Missouri, the Democratic House leader. "But its something we need to get done now. We need to move forward.

"I think we'll get it passed in both houses, hopefully tomorrow."

Congressional leaders said they hoped that the agreement would mark the beginning of further negotiations to come up with a plan to establish a program that would grant tax relief and other benefits to businesses seeking to locate in the inner cities.

"This action means that the log-jam is finally breaking," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, who has led the struggle in the Senate for more urban aid.

Putting a positive interpretation on a package that excluded more than $800 million in money for Head Start and other summer youth programs he had sought, Kennedy added, "It is gratifying that Congress and the administration are also making progress on a further aid package with substantial additional funds for communities with the greatest need."

The compromise package roughly split the difference between a House aid bill providing $822 million in grants and loans to Los Angeles and Chicago, which Bush supported, and a Senate bill that would have provided an additional $1.5 billion more in aid to 75 cities that the president said was too costly.

A House-Senate conference committee agreed on a version that came close to the Senate language, but the administration said it was too costly and threatened a veto.

The agreement also served as a compromise between two wings of the administration: one led by Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady, which did not want to give an inch to congressional Democrats, and the other led by Housing Secretary Jack F. Kemp, which wanted to grant substantially more aid.

Attorney general voices confidence in Nazi hunters

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General William P. Barr delivered a strong vote of confidence Wednesday in the Justice Department's Nazi hunters, just days after they admitted misplacing evidence that might have helped John Demjanjuk avoid conviction as concentration camp guard "Ivan the Terrible."

Barr deliberately separated himself from a rising tide of criticism and questions directed at the 38 lawyers, historians, investigators and support workers who man the Office of Special Investigations (OSI), which tracks down Nazi war criminals in this country.

"They have an important task to do and it has to be continued," Barr told The Associated Press in an interview. "I have confidence in that office."

In a 90-minute, off-the-record exchange covering a dozen topics, that was the only point at which Barr asked to be quoted by name.

He was aware not only of the turmoil surrounding the office but also of a report Friday in the Los Angeles Times in which an unnamed department source was quoted as saying Barr was concerned the Nazi hunters may have used "cowboy" tactics in pursuing suspects.

Despite his general remarks, Barr declined to discuss the Demjanjuk case.

Weinberger's secret diaries lie at heart of perjury case

By David Johnston
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — At the heart of the perjury case against Caspar W. Weinberger lies a mysterious stack of small note pads — thousands of pages covered with the former defense secretary's nearly indecipherable handwritten scrawl.

They are Weinberger's private diaries. Few people apart from prosecutors and defense lawyers have read them, and already they are the subject of starkly contradictory interpretations.

To prosecutors, the diaries offer a mother lode of incriminating evidence against the highest official to be charged with a crime in the Iran-Contra affair, but to the defense they are meaninglessly ambiguous and wholly consistent with Weinberger's sworn statements.

A great deal depends on the diaries, which lay undisturbed for more than two years among Weinberger's personal papers in the Library of Congress before prosecutors somehow learned of them: Weinberger's carefully burnished reputation for personal rectitude cultivated through a quarter century in public office; history's judgment on the long and tangled prosecution led by an increasingly isolated independent counsel, Lawrence E. Walsh; perhaps even the answer to whether President Ronald Reagan helped direct a cover-up of his administration's arms sales to Iran.

The diaries are the most inflammatory and crucial piece of evidence in the indictment against Weinberger, which was returned on Tuesday by a federal grand jury in Washington.

He was accused of five felony charges, including lying repeatedly about his knowledge of the affair and concealing the existence of extensive diary notes that revealed what the indictment said were his lies about the secret arms sales to Iran.

Weinberger, who was one of staunchest opponents of the arms sales, reacted bitterly to the charges, condemning Walsh's decision to indict him as a "grotesque distortion of the prosecutorial power."

From these scraps of paper, some of which are so hard to read that Weinberger's former aides had to be enlisted to help decipher them, a jury may have to determine whether Weinberger lied to Congress when he said he was kept in the dark about the Iran-Contra affair in general and about the main event at issue in his indictment: his knowledge of the shipment of U.S.-made Hawk missiles from Israel to Iran in November 1985.

The weapons were sold in an effort to win the release of Americans who were then being held hostage in Lebanon.

The puzzling history of the Weinberger diaries seems like an improbable political potboiler with unexplained twists and gaps in the plot. But this much is known:

Weinberger kept a diary throughout most of his tenure at the Defense Department, from 1981 to 1987, filling scores of five-inch by seven-inch note pads with his private jottings of meetings and telephone calls.

When Weinberger left the Pentagon, he stacked the diaries on his desk and packed them into a cardboard box. He gave the diaries to the Library of Congress in 1988 as a record of his stewardship, a voluntary gesture regarded by some in government circles as both a gift to future historians and an act of vanity.

There were strings attached: no one could read the diaries without Weinberger's personal consent. Officials at the library have declined to say whether anyone has ever been granted permission to read them.

Why he turned over notes that later formed the basis for criminal charges against him is another of the many mysteries surrounding the diaries, along with the question of why he took them in the first place.

Perhaps the man who frequently proclaimed himself an enemy of the Iran-Contra initiative never imagined himself a possible suspect in the affair.

The answer is a matter of speculation, because except for a brief statement on Tuesday that he was not guilty, Weinberger has refused to discuss the case.

Another mystery is why Weinberger told congressional investigators in 1987 that he did not customarily take notes on meetings with other officials. And he said the same thing when he was questioned three years later in October 1990 by Iran-Contra prosecutors and investigators.

To prosecutors, these were lies — and they are the basis for two of the counts in Tuesday's indictment.

Destructive weather hits Midwest for the third day

Associated Press

Tornadoes and other severe weather pummeled the Midwest for a third straight day Wednesday. Two people died, more than 30 were injured, at least 75 homes were destroyed and more than 622,000 customers lost electricity.

A third death Wednesday was linked to thunderstorms the night before from the same weather system.

Destruction was reported Wednesday in Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois and Indiana.

"It's just devastating," said Rosalind Gausman, clerk of the rural township of Dunn, Wis., near Madison. "It missed us, but we could see the funnel going about half a mile away, and it was just a real loud roar."

Sixty-eight homes in the township were blown away or damaged beyond repair, 32 were moderately damaged and 132 were lightly damaged, said township chairman Edmond Minihan.

About 30 people in the area suffered minor injuries, said Capt. David Listug of the Dane County Sheriff's Department. He said it was a miracle nobody was killed.

The same tornado also caused damage in Oregon, Wis., where 10 to 15 houses were destroyed and about 30 more were damaged, said firefighter Gary Wackett.

Roofs were ripped off two housing units at the Oregon Correctional Center, slightly injuring three inmates, said deputy warden Sandy Sweney. Nearly every building on the property was damaged, several extensively, and inmates were transferred to another prison, Sweney said.

In Michigan, the National Weather Service reported many tornado sightings across the central and northern Lower Peninsula. One minor injury was reported in Ionia County.

Large hail and high winds lashed metropolitan Detroit at nightfall.

The storms, with wind up to 70 mph, cut off power to about 311,000 customers in Michigan, said Ernie Sakraska, an area manager for Consumers Power Co. About 70,000 Detroit Edison Co. customers also lost power, spokeswoman Lorie Kessler said.

A pilot was killed when high winds flipped over his plane while he tried to land at Troy-Oakland Airport north of Detroit, the Federal Aviation Administration said.

In Chicago, a 12-year-old girl was electrocuted when she touched a downed power line, police officer Jim Steele said.

Elsewhere in Illinois, high winds, possibly a tornado, destroyed one home and tore off several roofs in the rural town of Gilman but caused no injuries, said Officer Nita Dubble of the Iroquois County sheriff's office.

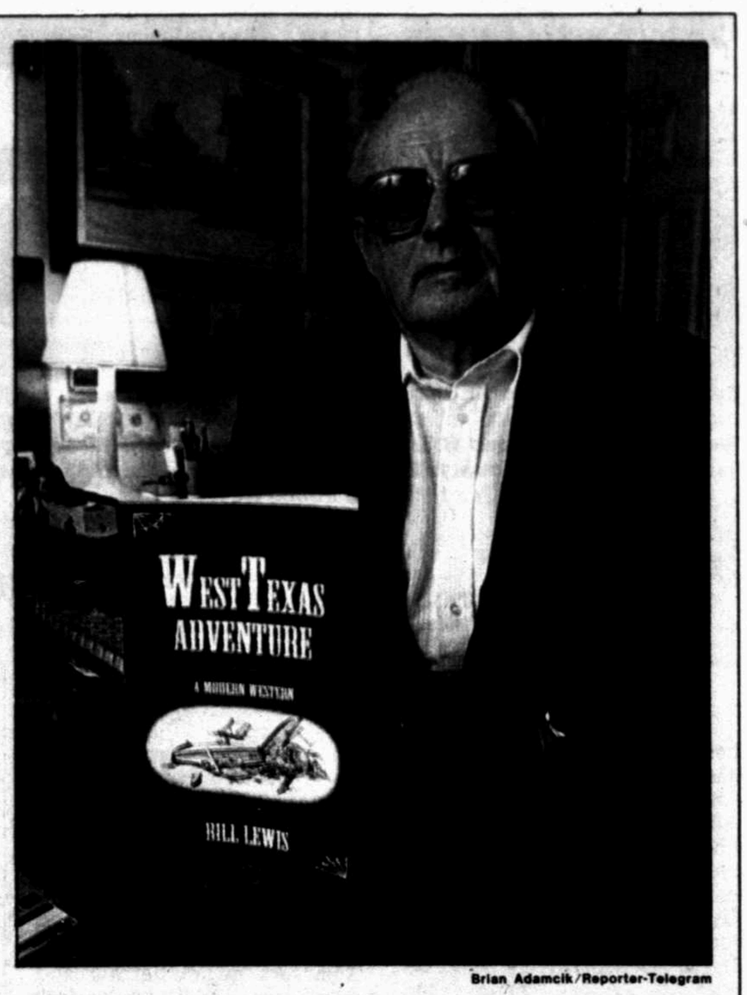
Retiree fulfills writing ambition



Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Odessan Bill Lewis is the author of "West Texas Adventure," a modern western novel set in the Permian Basin.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

ODESSA — With the money from his last paycheck before retirement, Bill Lewis purchased a word processor.

"My primary concern was writing a book back in 1990 when I retired," Lewis, 64, said. "I got the idea for it the year before."

And so the former police chief for the University of Texas of the Permian Basin spent the next eight months penning what he calls a "modern western."

"This was my first attempt to write a book. It's been interesting and educational," said Lewis, who added that he has always enjoyed writing.

"West Texas Adventure" tells the story of a veteran Vietnam fighter pilot, Paul Richfield, after he returns to his hometown of Odessa. The story spans from 1973 to 1986, and incorporates the oil industry and drug smuggling.

"This book is about adventure, success and failure in life and how to pick up the pieces," Lewis said. "This book is basically about the boom and bust cycle of the Permian Basin."

The need to tell his story outweighed any discouragement about finding a publisher.

"It's almost impossible for an unknown author to get published. I'm not getting any younger, so I paid for it," Lewis said.

"I knew what I was getting into and I might get stuck with a bunch of books ... but my primary concern was to fulfill my retirement ambition," he said.

"I have no regrets," Lewis

GED exam harder, local educators say

■ Students must demonstrate better academic skills to pass test for General Educational Development diploma.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

Raising standards for Texas students has not excluded those going back to school to obtain a high school equivalency diploma.

The General Educational Development (GED) diploma has become more rigorous along with state standardized testing for high school students, according to local counselors.

"Students are preparing more for the GED. It has been made more difficult to be in line with raising expectations of public schools," said Cindy Turland, adult basic education director at Midland College.

"The test has become harder to pass. It's more challenging and people have to demonstrate better academic skills to pass — which is the way it should be," she said.

Ms. Turland said students taking the GED must now write an essay, in line with the increased emphasis on writing, reading and critical thinking skills of the TASS.

In Texas, the average student earning his GED completed the ninth grade. The average student who takes the GED exam at Midland College has completed the 10th grade.

Potential dropouts usually quit school once they reach the age beyond that the state mandates they must attend school, according to Ricardo Torres, executive director of secondary education for Midland Independent School District.

"The state says they must finish the school year in which they turn 17," he said. "More than likely, students who do quit when they are 17, have failed at least one year of school."

Torres said students drop out of school for various reasons, some economic.

"One of the most common predictors of a youngster dropping out is if that youngster has ever been retained (repeated a grade). In most cases, they have been retained once, and in a lot of instances at least twice, plus they will have a history of poor attendance — whether by design or economic reasons."

While staying in school may be a hardship for some students, Ms. Turland said eventually they will find themselves in need of a high school diploma.

"The work world has become

GED issued to students of all ages

The average age of students taking the GED (General Educational Development) exam in 1991 was 25.5 years old. The exam gives students the equivalent of a high school diploma. Most had finished the 9th grade.

Juneteenth celebration events begin tonight

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

The annual Juneteenth celebration — with this year's theme: "Blacks in America, Then and Now" — will be highlighted on Saturday with a parade followed by a party at Washington Park.

Activities for the celebration, which commemorates the emancipation of black slaves in Texas on June 19, 1863, will begin tonight and conclude with a combined community church service Sunday evening.

At 10 a.m. Saturday, the parade will leave Nobles Avenue and move south on Lamesa Road, then east on Indiana Avenue to Washington Park.

"We usually have 100 (cars and floats) or more. It's usually a very good parade," said Roosevelt Campbell, a member of the Tall City Lions Club, hosts of the celebration.

The parade will be followed by a speech on black history by the Rev. Bill Ashley of the Bethel Missionary Baptist Church. That will be followed by a necrology by the Tall City Lions Club.

"Then the party begins, what we call the freedom birthday party," Campbell said.

A variety of entertainment, and food, drink and game booths will be included.

"We'll have food and beverages all day. So if you like sweet potato pie, you ought to get down there," Campbell advises.

Awards for the parade's best floats and automobiles will be announced at 6 p.m., followed by a talent show at 7 p.m.

The party will continue into the evening, probably ending about 11 p.m.

"Juneteenth is a high festive time for those of us who celebrate it in Midland," Campbell said.

And everyone is invited, he said.

"I would like to see a lot of people not from this neighborhood down here helping us celebrate. We all want to celebrate. This is something that freed us all — black and white," Campbell said.

In addition to Saturday's festivities, a get-acquainted gathering with food and beverages will be held at 7 p.m. tonight at Washington Park.

Mayor J.D. Faircloth will pre-

Twelve Midland employees opt for early retirement

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff writer

A plan to trim the city work force and cut costs yielded a dozen employees who were ready to retire.

City officials proclaimed their early retirement program a success after employees from a variety of departments took advantage of an early leave with four months' pay for turning in their resignations.

"We got our quota," said City Manager Fred Poe. "There were even one or two surprises, people we didn't even think about wanting to retire."

Poe had earlier said he was not sure if even five workers would take advantage of the program, but hoped for 10 or 12. The retiring dozen left their jobs May 30.

They will be honored Tuesday at the City Council meeting.

Employees had to have at least 10 years on the city staff to qualify, but the invitation drew three sanitation workers with more than 30 years on the job.

Sanitation had the most retirees, in fact, with a total of four workers calling it quits. The fourth employee had 25 years on the job.

Normally, a city worker should have 25 years of service or be at least 60 years old with 10 years of service to retire.

"This offers an opportunity to someone who wants to start a second career or go back to school," said Rick Menchaca, assistant to the city manager. "It also offers others — who may have been almost ready to retire — a way to

ED TODD

Once upon a time you could buy a lot for a nickel

Like a lot of folks, maybe I was born poor and grew up poor but never knew it.

I never felt poor.

Today I do.

Todd

And I'll tell you why. It's the same reason America's Nickel Generation feels poor. The honorable nickel, for whatever deplorable reasons, has been slighted.

The five-cent piece, be it the rare V-nickel, the disappearing buffalo-Indian nickel or the Thomas Jefferson nickel, is a most honorable coin. It demands respect and begs to be wisely spent and not to be tossed around like a worthless token.

It has value and worth and, as long as members of the Nickel Generation are alive, it will continue to be revered.

Once upon a time, even in the age of fast automobiles, record-breaking airplanes and posh ocean-going vessels, you could spend a nickel and get change back.

You could buy a cigar or two for a nickel, an ice-cream cone, a candy bar, a soft drink, a bag of popped corn, and hundreds of store-bought things.

At one time, a dime, particularly for a small town-country boy, was a lot of money. I'm not kidding. For that, you could get a double-dipped ice-cream cone. I don't recall ever buying one at either drug store in Cooper, at the one in Roxton, or at any drug store in Paris or, let alone, in Dallas whenever Daddy drove the family in the 1936 Chevrolet to Big D to visit city relatives who, by the way, got their beginnings in the East Texas blacklands.

The nickel represented solidarity. It was the standard. It was the gauge by which America's strong buying power was measured.

Still respected by the Nickel Generation, the five-cent piece is diluted. At the store nowadays, it takes up to 10 nickels — 50 cents — to buy a piece of chocolate or a soft drink.

Fifty cents for a snack!

Appalling.

The dollar is outrageous inflation.

Members of the Nickel Generation will recall those days when 10 nickels had the worth of a Walking Liberty half-dollar, one of America's most striking coins. Even the double nickel, the old Mercury dime, was a work of art.

Not too many years ago, by the reckoning of this old fogey, you could buy a pack of cigarettes for a quarter or a gallon of gasoline for a quarter — five nickels — and get change back, maybe a nickel and a penny.

And, at one time, 20 nickels could buy a Morgan or a Peace silver dollar.

Of all of America's coins, the common nickel is the most durable. In terms of today's buying power, it is a pittance. But to America's Nickel Generation, it still has worth.

Back in my boyhood days when Daddy did a little bit a preaching, a lot of teaching and some tap-dancing and Mother minded the home place, the nickel had the value of silver and gold.

It had worth.

It seems to me that the three sons in the Todd household wanted for nothing. Most of our clothes and childhood toys, I suspect, came mail order from Sears, Roebuck & Co. in Dallas. There always was plenty of food, country as it was, at home. And don't ever recall begging for a nickel.

On Saturdays, before things started changing in the 1950s, Daddy and Mother would give the sons a quarter each — five nickels. That would get us into the moving-picture show and into the drug store. The nickel was a splendid workhorse.

Thank you, dear nickel.

Lawmen, M-Squad 'holds up' travelers for a good time

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

Flashing lights, sirens and hospitality are in store for out-of-state travelers passing by Midland in July and August.

Eight families will be recipients of the "Midland Holdup" — an hospitality affair.

Each Tuesday afternoon for eight weeks, a Midland peace officer will round up a family traveling just south of town on Interstate Highway 20, pull the family over with lights and sirens, and invite the family members to spend the night in town.

If they accept, members of Midland Chamber of Commerce's M-Squad will greet the family members at the pullover site, take them into town for an honorary Midland citizenship celebration, food, entertainment and lodging.

"They are bewildered" at first when they are pulled over by an uniformed officer, said W.E. "Bill" Moler, co-chairman of the M-Squad's Holdup gang. "They first wonder what they did for a cop to stop them."

Afterward, when they are apprised of the forthcoming hospitality, "they are greatly relieved that they are not going to get a ticket and have been invited to spend the night in Midland."

'They first wonder what they did for a cop to stop them.'
— M-Squad's W.E. Moler

Midland businesses, including hotels and motels, restaurants, entertainment places and service stations, donate their services and/or products in helping the chamber and the community to treat out-of-state travelers to a night in Midland.

Some travelers, in plight, were particularly grateful to be singled out for a night in Midland.

Moler recalled a young mother who was stranded near Midland en route to her home in Phoenix from Dallas, where she had purchased a new automobile. She had her baby with her.

"She was stranded there, wondering what she should do," Moler said. "She was just sitting there, pondering what to do."

Moments earlier, the new car had broken down along the roadside when a Midland law-enforcement officer and the M-Squad gang came along, rescued her from her plight and arranged for the automobile to be repaired by a Midland automobile dealership. She and the child were fed, entertained, and bedded down for the night.

Occasionally, Moler said, a family may decline a night in Midland because of a family emergency or business.

The 1992 Midland Holdup is the seventh annual M-Squad's weekly treat to travelers. Working with the M-Squad in seeking out overnight highway guests are the Midland County Sheriff's Department and the Midland Police Department.

"We are having a lot of fun doing it," Moler said. "And it creates activities for our community."

The family travelers are given an "opportunity to see Midland" close up and not just gaze at the skyline from afar.

"They are amazed about the size of downtown and the offices," Moler said. Many out-of-staters say that they "never dreamt" Midland, out on the West Texas plains, was so large and diverse. "They get to travel around the area. They are impressed when they go downtown and when they go across town."

EARLY: Retirees to be honored

retire earlier than they had planned."

Jack Burns, assistant director of utilities, said he will reorganize the sanitation department but plans to hire two new employees.

That department operates as a fund separate from the city's general fund.

Of those retiring from sanitation, two were supervisors and two were drivers.

"I'll probably promote from within for one supervisor position but get along with one less supervisor," Burns said. "Then we'll probably hire two (workers)."

For sanitation, the timing of the early retirement program was good, Burns said.

"After some of the innovations on the last four years, I was looking to try to consolidate some routes anyway," he said. New tandem-axle trucks hold more trash, allowing the department to cut its current 21 routes to 18. Burns said he expects a net savings.

Assistant City Manager Susan Thorpe said the City Council will make a final determination about replacing workers in its upcoming budget workshops. Workers could be replaced by less experienced people, with a salary savings, or not replaced at all.

"Of course you can't make up for the years of service lost," Menchaca said. "We'll have to look carefully at the position for possible reorganizing of the area. Or we could leave some vacant for a while before replacing them."

Replacements could be transferred from other city jobs, allowing a cut in other departments, as well.

After 10 years, a worker is vested in the city's retirement program, the Texas Municipal Retirement System. That means the employee's regular retirement contributions are matched about 2-to-1 by the city.

Firefighters operate under a system separate from TMRS.

Workers retiring early will get paid their monthly salary through Sept. 30, then draw retirement on the city system. As all retired employees, they will be eligible to get health insurance for 70 percent of cost.

Among those retiring early were one worker each from the water pollution plant and the water purification plant.

One legal secretary took retirement after 11 years, as did an airport maintenance worker. A health inspector, police lieutenant and two Fire Department drivers round out the list of early retirees.

BOOK: Novel set in West Texas

said. "I would do it again."

Nevertheless, Lewis said he would like to see it easier for authors to be published without using their own money.

"I wish it was. We had to adjust our budget to publish this book. I wish more consideration were given to unknown writers," he said.

Lewis had 500 copies printed and currently has the paperbound book on sale for $7.95 by consignment in Odessa at the UTPB bookstore and the Permian Basin News Stand, which reported that several of the books have been sold.

In addition, Lewis said he has made a similar arrangement with Hastings Bookstore in Midland.

"I hope to just get my investment back as much as I can," he said.

But, Lewis emphasized, the book was written as an ambition — spurred by life in West Texas.

"I love West Texas. I love the Permian Basin and I wanted to make this my setting," he said.

Although Lewis has had a lifelong interest in writing, things changed when he moved to the Permian Basin.

"I actually seriously started writing after I moved to Texas. I was just too busy before then," he said.

Lewis said he moved to Odessa — because of the weather and vastness — from southern Indiana about 12 years ago.

"Moving to West Texas was the greatest thing that ever happened to me," he said.

Bits of his life and those around him are reflected in "West Texas Adventure." That includes inspiration from a varied background as a family man, security guard, recreational pilot, businessman, truck driver, and U.S. Army veteran.

GED: Tests get more difficult

more technical," she said.

Aside from meeting academic muster, adults who return to school have to get back into the habit of studying.

"They have to get over insecurities and get back into the academic environment again," Ms. Turland said. "Many are parents and have jobs. They have a lot more going on in life and more responsibilities as adults than when they were teen-agers in school."

Most Texas adults who drop out of school decide to get their diploma by age 25½, according to statistics recently released by the Texas Education Agency and Texas Comptroller John Sharp.

Ms. Turland said the average age of MC students graduating with GEDs is 25.

Some 201 MC students took the high school equivalency exam since January 1992. Of those students, 96 passed. Statewide 71,484 students took the GED exam in 1991 with 39,944 earning the degree.

Ms. Turland said enrollment in GED classes fluctuates with the job market.

"It's also no longer easy to go into the oil field with just a high school degree. The world is much more technical and requires more refined skills," she noted.

She said earning a GED serves as a bridge between retraining and higher education.

"It can provide a strong bridge for someone who has not been in school for awhile. They can get a lot of help because of diagnostic work while working on a GED. We do a lot of diagnostic work to search out strengths and weaknesses."

Whether earning a high school degree while still in school or many years down the road, Torres said education is moving "in the direction of world-class standards."

"We are not on standard with industrialized nations," he said. "We all have to become more stringent. A lot depends on a student's propensity toward success in an academic setting.

"Environmental factors can promote and nurture ability. In one household they may read to a kid four or five times a week, while another household doesn't even have a book in the house. By the time those with poor reading skills get to senior high school, they see the writing on the wall that they're are not going to pass the TAAS test, and just drop out."

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Jail sentence

Staff report

A 31-year-old Midland man, who escaped from jail in September when his cell door opened after a malfunction, was found guilty of felony escape and sentenced to 30 years, a jury determined Wednesday.

Manuel Granado Martinez contested the charge in Judge John Hyde's 238th District Court.

Martinez, who began serving a 60-year sentence for burglary in August, left the Midland County Central Detention Facility on the afternoon of Sept. 24 after an apparent door-lock failure, reports said.

Two days later, Martinez, accompanied by Odessa attorney Thomas Hirsch, turned himself in to the Ector County Sheriff's Office.

Attempted murder

ODESSA — A 17-year-old man was charged with attempted murder Wednesday after he fired a shot at another man following a short chase, officials said.

Israel Bacca allegedly fired one round at Chris Subia, 19, at the Spanish Oaks Apartments after Subia heard him making noise near Subia's home and went to investigate.

Subia was treated and released from Medical Center Hospital, officials said.

Overfilled salt dome causes gas explosion, NTSB says

HOUSTON (AP) — A fiery gas explosion that killed three people and injured 18 others near Brenham April 7 may have been caused by an overflow in an underground storage facility, a National Transportation Safety Board investigator has told a Houston newspaper.

George Mocharko, the investigator in charge for the NTSB, told the Houston Chronicle in Wednesday editions that the final report on the investigation is not expected to be completed until late this year.

But he said investigators are fairly certain that overfilling a salt dome storage cavern with liquefied gas led to the explosion that shook people from their sleep as far away as 100 miles from the scene.

State investigators, however, cautioned that it was premature to pinpoint a the definite cause.

Railroad Commissioners Lena Guerrero and Jim Nugent plan to discuss their agency's preliminary findings this afternoon in Austin, but agency officials refused to discuss those findings in advance of the planned news conference.

Early news reports had indicated that the dome may have been overfilled.

The explosion ripped through the rural community about seven miles south of Brenham, ravaging 4½ square miles of land in Washington and Austin counties, causing some $6.6 million in property damages.

A 5-year-old child was killed instantly, while two women burned in a car died within days of the explosion. Of the others injured, 3-year-old Travis Medve, son and grandson of the two women, was released from the hospital last month, while Jane Meinen, mother of the 5-year-old victim, remains in a rehabilitation hospital.

Meanwhile, the NTSB still is trying to determine whether the overfill was caused by human error or because gauges monitoring the level in the salt dome failed to give accurate readings, Mocharko said.

He also said the NTSB is continuing to test and inspect equipment and safety devices mounted on the wellhead of the storage cavern and associated pipelines to find out whether they were working properly at the time.

Tulsa-based Mapco Inc., which operates the storage cavern and owns 90 percent of Seminole Pipeline Co., declined to comment on Mocharko's initial findings.

Mapco has been running tests to try to determine the exact size of the cavern but has been unable to get an accurate reading with liquid gas still in the cavern, Mocharko said. Mapco plans to empty it in July, fill it completely with brine and try testing again.

Mocharko said the NTSB plans to hold a hearing later this month or in early July, on underground storage facilities.

Man kills two young daughters, commits suicide

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — An Oklahoma City man who shot his two young daughters to death before killing himself at a rest stop early Wednesday left behind a suicide note for his wife, authorities said.

Wichita County sheriff's Lt. Stan Horton identified the father as Jan Robert Smith, 38, of Oklahoma City.

The girls were identified as Kathleen Marie Smith, 2, and Sereena Ann Smith, 4.

The girls had been shot in the torso with a .357-caliber Magnum handgun, authorities said. Smith had a gunshot wound to the head, said Oklahoma City police Lt. Bill King.

The bodies were found shortly after 1 a.m. in a white truck at a rest stop on Interstate 44, about 4 miles north of Wichita Falls.

Authorities got a call from a man who had stopped briefly at the rest stop and noticed the truck's lights on and a driver slumped over the steering wheel. The man also noticed blood on the ground outside the driver's door, police said.

King said the children's mother, Judith Ann Smith, returned home from work early Wednesday and found a suicide note outlining the father's intentions.

King declined to discuss specifics of the note.

The bodies were found shortly after 1 a.m. as the woman was giving an Oklahoma City police officer a missing persons report at her home, Horton said.

Horton said the bodies were transported to Dallas Wednesday for autopsies.

Sunglasses add dose of cool fashion

Protecting those peepers makes sunshades more than stylish accessories

Associated Press

Of all accessories, sunglasses are perhaps the most functional — when they're not supremely superfluous.

"Sunglasses are killer important," says Los Angeles fashion consultant Rommie Davis. "They can create a whole attitude, a whole sense of style. True cognoscenti will have one pair to go with each mood. It really amounts to an entire wardrobe of sunglasses."

But there's a serious concern — glaring sun can be dangerous to the eyes. Sun damage ranges from temporary problems, such as snow blindness, to the possibility of retina damage and increased likelihood of cataracts.

The main cause of damage is the invisible ultraviolet radiation from the sun, the same type that causes sunburns and can lead to premature wrinkling, skin drying and even skin cancer.

When picking a pair of sunglasses, lens color can be an important choice. Gray is recommended by the American Optometric Association since it is the least likely to distort color perception. Green and brown are also popular, but the eye doctors urge avoiding blue lenses, which can seriously interfere with the ability to distinguish the color of traffic signals.

But even the darkest glasses are not sufficient protection from artificial sources of ultraviolet radiation, such as tanning lamps, the Food and Drug Administration warns. Special goggles are required in those cases.

When it comes to style, however, many of the best this season lend a nostalgic nod to decades past.

Among Ray-Ban's newest offerings are "Bewitching," an oval style that pays tribute to a young Audrey Hepburn, and "Lisbon," cat's eyes that salute the '50s. They're about $97 each and come in black or tortoise.

Sunglasses not only make a fashion statement, they create an attitude and, if chosen correctly, can protect your eyes from the sun's harmful rays.

For the celebrity-suited, JC Penney's round sunglasses with white, black or tortoise shell-look frames serve up a healthy dose of Hollywood in its heyday. They're $22 through the JC Penney catalog.

Other glamour girl gimmicks signing up as part of the '40s frolic: platform shoes, charm bracelets, wide-brimmed fedoras, gloves, large brooches and clutch handbags.

Eye of tiger, other animals sign of style in eyewear

By Carrie Donovan
N.Y. Times News Service

The shape is not important. They can be square, round, oval, oblong, cat-eyed, large or small. But what eyeglasses should be right now is patterned like a beast from the jungle.

This season, the animal-print mania has left its tracks on every kind of fashion. And glasses have not escaped.

Norma Kamali has several versions of leopard-spotted frames, all shaped like cat eyes. An Alain Mikli design looks like a leopard-spotted mask. Matte-finish frames by Morgenthal-Frederics with sheltering sides resemble scaled-down divers' goggles.

Lots of designers, including Christian Lacroix, have used cat patterns for big sunglasses, often adding touches of gold metal here and there. Probably the most dramatic are Claude Montana's flashy white superscale sunglasses with black zebra stripes.

Whatever your coloring or style, there seems to be an animal eyeglass for you. Christian Dior's pale owl-round frames with cheetah spots would be quite something on a woman with white hair. The most discreet are Lafont of Paris's modestly scaled clear frames with leopard spots. They would not be out of place on even the most conservative woman.

These jungle-inspired frames are $90 (for Ms. Kamali's) to close to $300 at optical boutiques.

Some things in marriage are not meant to be shared

By Erma Bombeck

All the experts tell you that marriage is sharing. My husband and I have never been able to do that.

Bombeck

We can't share the same tube of toothpaste, checkbook or friends. We don't eat the same pizza, drive each other's car or watch TV together. I don't eat lite, bran, oat or silo-ripened cereal, and he doesn't drink my decadent, artery-blocking fat milk.

There are two things we have shared over the year: the love of our three children and the newspaper. If things continue, we will be down to the love of our three children.

To me, there is nothing in this world that compares to the luxury of that first cup of coffee in the morning and the newspaper. Life just doesn't get any better than that.

Enter my husband, who grabs a section and feels compelled to read every story out loud as if I am a 3-year-old sitting on Barbara Bush's lap in a literacy program.

The man stops at nothing. I can say, "I'll read it later," "I read it already," "I don't care" or "I wrote it." It doesn't matter. I am going to get the entire story read to me with his editorial comments on the side.

The other morning, I was absorbed in reading letters to the editor when he laughed and said, "Listen to this, Erma. 'Lady, a 4-year-old collie, was breathless after a long journey home in Minnesota.'"

"I'll read it later," I said.

" 'Fleeing a forest fire near Tower, she walked all the way to Duluth. Some would say it's instinct; some would say it's the power of love. The long journey began ...' "

"Give me a break. I've read this paragraph three times."

" 'On Mother's Day, the day fire raged near the Riesgrafs' vacation cabin ...' "

"Look," I shouted, "I don't care if the dog came home in a cab! Don't read to me!"

On the rare occasions when there is a moment of silence, it is interrupted by the riiiiip of paper being torn. Jack the Clipper is at work cutting out stories that he wants to save or perhaps read aloud to some poor unsuspecting victim. I have no idea what he does with all those clippings.

For 43 years, we've occupied the same house, filed joint income tax returns, gone to parties together and passed colds back and forth. But I told him the other day, "If this relationship is to continue, you're going to have to get your own newspaper."

Erma Bombeck's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY

Waitress finds Canadians are bad tippers for good reason

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am still steamed about the letter signed "Slinging Hash in Florida." I just retired after 31 years of waitressing, and I loved my job more than you can imagine.

Van Buren

Let me tell you why that waitress said, "A canoe tips easier than a Canadian." Canadians do not realize that in the United States, servers are paid $2.01 an hour — plus the computer takes 8 percent out of each total for our taxes.

One night, I had a party of eight. Each had a cocktail, appetizer, soup, salad, main course, dessert, plus three or four refills of coffee or tea. They were a great group and everyone raved over my service. The total bill was $131.

The man who paid the bill left $1.30 on the table. (Can you imagine?) I was so mad, I ran after him, chased him to his car and tried to give him the $1.30, telling him that he needed it more than I did.

He looked shocked and asked, "Doesn't the management pay you a decent salary?" When I told him how much servers are paid, he was flabbergasted. He tried to give me some money, but I wouldn't take it.

Later, he mailed me a $20 bill with a note saying that I was the best waitress he had ever had, and it was signed by everyone who was in that party. — FORMER FLORIDA WAITRESS

DEAR WAITRESS: Your letter explains why some (not all) Canadians are conservative tippers. I personally prefer the European method: The restaurant adds 15 percent to the bill, thereby eliminating discretionary tipping altogether.

DEAR ABBY: "Slinging Hash in Florida" was much too kind when she wrote, "A canoe tips easier than a Canadian."

Given all the best attention such as one might get on a fancy cruise ship, the sad truth of the matter is that the Queen Mary tips easier than a Canadian. — SYMPATHETIC IN FLORIDA

DEAR SYMPATHETIC: My mail from traveling salespeople suggests that Canadians are not necessarily "cheap" — they are conservative. Perhaps this letter will explain it:

DEAR ABBY: I haven't slung any hash in Canada, but I have slung my share in the Sunshine State.

Canadians are not cheap when it comes to tipping. In Canada, servers are paid a decent hourly wage, which is more than you can say for waiters and waitresses in the United States. At least that's what I was told when I criticized my dinner partner for leaving a $10 tip on a $150 check last month at a restaurant in Toronto.

In this country, if the service is acceptable, a 15 percent to 20 percent gratuity is customary. — MRS. M.M. IN CAPE CANAVERAL, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: After hearing about one more case of a married woman in my town having an affair, I have two questions:

No. 1: How can any woman handle two men? No. 2: Why in the world would she even want to try? Sign me ... ONE IS MORE THAN PLENTY, ALTOONA, PA.

CONFIDENTIAL TO G.K. IN HOLDENVILLE, OKLA.: Wisdom does not automatically come with old age. Nothing does — except wrinkles. It's true, some wines improve with age — but only if the grapes were good in the first place.

Abby's family recipes are included in her Cookbooklet! Send a long (business-size), self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Cookbooklet No. 1, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Mexico officials seek changes in extradition treaty with U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mexico is seeking changes in its extradition treaty with the United States that would forbid American agents from kidnapping Mexican citizens wanted by U.S. authorities for criminal offenses, officials said Wednesday.

Mexican officials raised the issue on Tuesday in a meeting with U.S. Ambassador John Negroponte following a U.S. Supreme Court decision upholding the legality of the 1990 abduction in Guadalajara of a Mexican doctor by American anti-narcotics agents.

Mexico reacted angrily to Monday's court decision, announcing a suspension of anti-drug cooperation with the United States. But Mexico backed off from that position on Tuesday after receiving assurances from the United States that no additional cross-border abductions were planned.

Mexico said it had agreed "temporarily" to continue anti-drug cooperation while the two countries hold discussions.

The court ruling has been criticized by the Canadian and Argentine governments. Some legal scholars have warned that the ruling could open the way for other countries to attempt to seize criminal suspects in the United States.

An agreement two years ago allowed up to 60 U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agents to work in Mexico and 60 of their Mexican counterparts to work in the United States.

Most of the work involves exchange of information. About 35 DEA agents are thought to be working in Mexico now.

U.S. officials said Wednesday that Mexico had sought a change in the extradition treaty in 1990 after the kidnapping of Dr. Humberto Alvarez Machain, who was wanted by U.S. authorities in the torture slaying of U.S. drug agent Enrique Camarena in 1985.

At the time of the 1990 request, the Bush administration responded by pledging that DEA would respect Mexican law, said the U.S. officials, speaking on condition of anonymity. Asked whether that meant the DEA was forbidden from snatching Mexican suspects, one official said, "That depends on your interpretation."

Mexico's concerns over the scope of DEA activities in Mexico had remained largely dormant after the 1990 discussions but were resurrected in Tuesday's talks with Negroponte, the officials said.

Mexico places high priority on guarding national sovereignty. When the Organization of American States seeks to take unilateral action against a hemispheric government for any reason, Mexico is almost always the most reluctant participant, the officials said.

One Texan to be $1 million richer today

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Lottery officials plan a glitzy downtown party Thursday to crown the game's first million-dollar winner in what has been called "the ultimate game show."

The Lottery's first weekly "Millionaire a Week" drawing will feature ice skaters, 10-gallon hats a $40,000 neon-lighted stage and seven Texans who hope to walk away wealthy.

The grand-prize drawings will be held each Thursday through Sept. 3 in different cities around the state.

Officials said they have been planning the initial hour-long show for more than two months.

"We never really intended for these to be big, grandiose activities, but we certainly anticipate that this one will the biggest because it is the first," said Steve Dalbey, a member of the committee planning the jackpot presentations.

Dalbey said the 30-foot, custom-built stage has a 5-foot reproduction of the Texas Lottery logo, a hand tossing a cowboy hat into the air, adorning its front.

The program begins shortly before noon with two ice skating numbers, including one to the lottery jingle.

Dallas skaters Kevin Day, 28, and Elisa Curtis, 22, will escort seven jackpot finalists down a red carpet and onto the stage after their performances.

Once on stage, the finalists will pick one of seven 10-gallon cowboy hats from a giant hatrack. The hats will contain numbers corresponding to seven pingpong balls that will be drawn by a security representative.

The contestant whose hat number matches that of the first ball wins $10,000. The procedure is then repeated for prizes of $10,000, $15,000, $15,000 and $25,000.

The sixth and seventh balls assign the two remaining finalists to one of two wall safes at the rear of the stage. The finalists will simultaneously open their safes to find out who wins $1 million. The second-place finisher wins $50,000.

"Inside each of the safes is a money bag and there's a plaque that either says $50,000 or $1 million," Dalbey said. "There will be dry ice on the inside of the safes to create a smoky effect. We wanted to do anything we could do to increase the suspense."

Barkley acquitted then traded

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Charles Barkley's stormy and stellar career with the 76ers ended Wednesday with a trade that will send the Phoenix Suns' Jeff Hornacek, Tim Perry and Andrew Lang to Philadelphia.

Barkley

The announcement in Philadelphia and Phoenix came within hours of Barkley's acquittal on battery and disorderly conduct charges in Milwaukee. As he left for home, the forward said he had not heard the trade reports, but learned of the transaction while at the airport.

"I just want this trade stuff to be over one way or the other so I can concentrate on basketball," he said. "Phoenix is not a bad place. I could play golf every day."

"I'm a little nervous. I'm not sure, I've got to sit back and see how it goes," Barkley said. "In shock? I just don't know how I feel. I don't know if I'm happy or sad. I have to pick up my family and move them across the country. It's been a great eight years in Philadelphia and now I play for Phoenix. Whatever happens I will deal with it."

Spurs for sale

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Spurs owner Red McCombs says majority interest in the NBA team is for sale, but he wants to remain in control of management.

McCombs also says the Spurs have a contract and intend to play in the Alamodome.

"I would happily embrace selling two-thirds or three-fourths interest in the Spurs if we find someone who wants to address that and leave us in management operations," McCombs told reporters Tuesday.

McCombs is seeking a loan to build the Alamodome's 28 concession stands, estimated to cost $5 million. He has also offered to assign his ten-year Alamodome concessions contract to a financial institution to secure the loan.

Holyfield gets no respect

■ The heavyweight champion of the world feels he hasn't gotten his due, and probably still won't even if he beats 42-year-old Larry Holmes Friday.

By Ed Schuyler Jr.
AP Boxing Writer

LAS VEGAS — Evander Holyfield is the undefeated, undisputed and, it seems, the unappreciated heavyweight champion of the world.

"Everybody has a time in their lifetime to shine," he says.

Yet the 29-year-old Holyfield is a champion in the shadows — part of the story but not The Story.

On Friday night at Caesars Palace, he'll be the betting favorite. The sentimental choice will be Larry Holmes, a 42-year-old former champion who knows all about fighting in someone else's shadow. He toiled in the giant shadow cast by Muhammad Ali.

"Holyfield cannot recognize himself as champion until he beats Mike Tyson," Don King once bellowed. "Even though he has the title, he knows he is the challenger."

The comparison to Tyson may always be a monkey on Holyfield's back even though it's possible they'll never fight. Tyson is serving from three to six years in prison on a rape conviction.

While Holyfield proudly wears the crown once worn by Tyson, he has not caught the public imagination as Iron Mike did, even if it often was for the wrong reasons.

"Certain people's lifestyle might make them think Tyson is a big hero," Holyfield said. "I'm the type of person who can be a writer's nightmare because there's not much to write about."

In the battle of personalities that are part of any big fight, Holyfield often is the loser.

James "Buster" Douglas' upset of Tyson dominated pre-fight coverage of his defense against Holyfield. Then Douglas' expanding waistline became big news.

When Holyfield knocked out Douglas in the third round on Oct. 25, 1990, he wasn't praised. Instead, Douglas was ridiculed for being out of condition.

George Foreman didn't come close to

Nicklaus, Watson say experienced likely to triumph at Pebble Beach

Associated Press

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson, who share so much of the history of the U.S. Open and the demanding Pebble Beach Golf Links, are looking to add another chapter to their story of their careers.

Nicklaus and Watson, U.S. Open winners here in 1972 and 1982 agreed on one point:

Experience counts and, quite possibly more here and at this time than at any other Open in recent memory.

The reason?

The golf course, meandering in picturesque splendor along the cliffs and crags of Carmel Bay, will severly penalize poor play.

The fairways have been narrowed to 30 yard strips snaking through intimidating, penal rough. The greens are small and hard, and are surrounded by rough.

■ Television coverage 2-5 p.m. and 6:30-10 p.m. on ESPN (Cable channel 12).

"It's about the same, as far as difficulty is concerned, as '72," said Nicklaus, who won his third U.S. Open that year, shooting a final round 74 for a 2-over-par 290 total.

It is, he said, "much more difficult than '82," when Watson snatched from his grasp a fifth U.S. Open.

By going into the past to find a winner in the present, however, both Watson and Nicklaus kept encountering themselves and memories of confrontations in years gone by, at Turnberry in '77 and Augusta in '81.

And at Pebble Beach in '82, when Watson worked his magic from behind the 17th green on the final day, chipping in from ankle-deep rough for the birdie that beat Nicklaus and won the Open.

"I was near the 18th green and all but being congratulated by Jack Whitaker for winning my fifth Open," Nicklaus recalled.

"On a TV in the scorers tent, I saw where he had hit it on 17 and I thought 'there's no way he can get it closer than 15 feet'," Nicklaus recalled.

Watson, of course, holed the little chip — it since has come to be called "The Shot" — and went on to a two-stroke victory.

"I was pleased for Tom," Nicklaus said. "I wasn't pleased for myself, but he hadn't won an Open before, and I was pleased for him. You're pleased to see an Open won by that kind of shot."

And it could be that kind of shot that will determine the winner of the tournament that begins Thursday.

"I think the golf course this week will produce a winner who is someone with a

San Antonio's James holds up Angels, 9-2

■ Mission starting pitcher Mike James takes another step up the hill to the big leagues and Dodger Stadium.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant sports editor

No offense to Albuquerque, but Mike James doesn't lay awake nights dreaming of returning to play Class AAA ball for the New Mexico city's Dukes.

It's the bright lights of Los Angeles, Chavez Ravine and Dodger Stadium for which James longs.

And if Wednesday night is any indication, it might not be too long before James finds his way to the big leagues.

The San Antonio pitcher, making his sixth start since being shipped to the Class AA level last month, pitched seven innings of one hit ball as the Missions ripped the Angels, 9-2.

The official game time was 3:10, but this thing was over way before then.

While at Albuquerque earlier this season, James struggled with an 0-0 record, one save and an earned run average of "about nine" before his demotion. Against the Angels, James had complete control before reaching his pitch count of 115.

J.R. Phillips' fourth-inning home run was the only run or hit allowed by the Florida native.

"Actually, I've had six or seven good starts in a row now," James said. "I came here (San Antonio) to work on things. L.A. is the goal. The goal is not getting back to Albuquerque."

It's not as if James has mastered Midland all season. In his two previous starts against the Angels, James' ERA was at 5.09 with 12 hits and four earned runs allowed in 14 innings.

But the big picture since his call-down has been favorable.

"In six starts he's been magnificent," San Antonio manager Jerry Royster said. "We've been in every game he's pitched. I think the most runs he's given up in those starts is three."

Royster said that James "wasn't picthing well (in Albuquerque). Sometimes (coming to Class AA) is like a wake up call. You have to say to yourself, 'Hey, I'm a 40-man roster guy, I've got a 90 mph fastball. I've got to pitch.' "

San Antonio wasn't too shabby offensively, either. The Missions, who had a 12-game losing streak before winning three in a row since the opening of the six-game series in Midland last Sunday, had two-run innings in

Glavine first to win 10

Associated Press

ATLANTA — Tom Glavine survived a shaky start to pitch a five-hitter and become baseball's first 10-game winner as the surging Atlanta Braves defeated the hapless Los Angeles Dodgers 4-3 Wednesday night.

NL

It was Atlanta's season-high seventh win in a row and 16th in 18 games. The Dodgers have lost seven straight games and 12 of 15.

Glavine (10-3) walked three and struck out two in his fifth complete game. The left-hander gave up three hits and two walks in the first two innings when the Dodgers scored their runs.

Padres 5, Astros 0

HOUSTON — Andy Benes pitched a four-hitter and extended his scoreless streak against Houston to 18 innings as the San Diego Padres beat the error-plagued Astros.

The Padres scored five unearned runs on three Astros errors.

Benes (6-5) struck out eight and walked two to finally gain his sixth victory. He had two losses and two no-decisions in his previous four starts.

The Padres took a 2-0 lead in the second inning on a throwing error by shortstop Rafael Ramirez and a sacrifice fly by Benes.

Kevin Ward singled with one out and Kurt Stillwell followed with a single to left. The runners advanced on a fielding error by left fielder Luis Gonzalez and Ward scored on Ramirez's error. Benes then drove in Stillwell with a sacrifice fly to center.

In the sixth, Fred McGriff reached on third baseman Ken Caminiti's fielding error, stole second and scored on Oscar Azocar's single. Azocar came home on Ward's double.

Reds 6, Giants 4

CINCINNATI — Pitcher Chris Hammond hit his first major-league homer as the Cincinnati Reds rallied to beat San Francisco for their sixth straight victory.

Hammond hit a two-run homer in the fourth off John Burkett (5-3) to put the Reds ahead 4-3 and on track for their 18th victory in 22 games. They've been atop the NL West every day this month.

San Francisco has lost four straight and 11 of 15 to slip below .500 for the first time since April 25. The Giants are 5-14 since May 27, when they led the division by 1½ games.

Hammond (5-3) scattered five hits over 6 2-3 innings, giving up all three runs in the second.

Pirates 8, Phillies 2

PITTSBURGH — Rampaging Pittsburgh hit three homers off former Pirate Don Robinson, and Randy Tomlin won his career-high fifth straight decision in a victory over Philadelphia.

Tomlin (9-3) has followed a miserable May with a miserly June, allowing only four runs in 32 1-3 innings while going 4-0 with a 1.11 ERA. Tomlin was 1-3 last month, but hasn't lost since May 17.

Tomlin, who was only 11 when Robinson broke in with the Pirates in 1978, allowed 11 hits in 7 1-3 innings, but worked out of a bases-loaded, none-out jam in the second and was working on a shutout until leaving during the Phillies' two-run eighth.

Mike LaValliere hit a two-run homer and drove in three runs and Gary Varsho and Jeff King led off each of the first two innings with homers as the Pirates won for the seventh time in eight games and 12th in their last 15.

Expos 5, Mets 2

NEW YORK — Dennis Martinez pitched a strong game, and Moises Alou hit a two-run homer as the Montreal Expos defeated the slumping New York Mets for their fifth victory in six games at Shea Stadium this year.

Martinez (7-5), winning for the second time in three decisions against the Mets this season, allowed seven hits, struck out three and walked two in 7 1-3 innings. Mel Rojas came on to get the final four outs — three on strikeouts — for his second save, sending the Mets to their 10th loss in 13 games.

Sid Fernandez (5-7), losing his second straight game, yielded all five runs on seven hits through 5 1-3 innings.

Puckett still proving worth to Twins in 4-2 win

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Kirby Puckett singled to snap an eighth-inning tie and made a game-ending, running catch with the bases loaded Wednesday night, giving the Minnesota Twins to a 4-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

AL

Puckett raced into right-center field to grab Jim Eisenreich's liner for the final out. The Royals had loaded the bases with two outs against Rick Aguilera.

In the seventh, Puckett singled to extend his hitting streak to 14 games and start a two-run rally. The AL's leading hitter at .347, he is batting .393 with 36 RBIs, including seven game-winners, in his last 35 games.

Blue Jays 6, Tigers 2

TORONTO — Jack Morris won his fourth straight decision and slumping Kelly Gruber got three hits and drove in two runs, leading Toronto past Detroit. The victory gave the AL East-leading Blue Jays a 1½-game lead over second-place Baltimore, which lost to Cleveland. Toronto and the Orioles had been within one game of each other every day since May 1.

Jack Morris (8-3) allowed two runs on seven hits in 6 1-3 innings. He struck out five and walked two.

Reliever Duane Ward pitched the last 2 2-3 innings, striking out five, for his eighth save.

Kevin Ritz (1-2) lasted just three innings, giving up three runs on six hits. He struck out two and walked four, two of them intentionally.

Gruber, in a 5-for-43 slump, singled to start the third inning and later scored on Pat Borders' single for a 3-2 lead.

Indians 3, Orioles 2

CLEVELAND — Charles Nagy won his fifth straight game and Carlos Baerga scored the go-ahead run on Mike Mussina's wild pitch as Cleveland beat Baltimore.

The Indians scored three runs on only five hits, while Baltimore scored two on 13 hits.

Brewers 10, Athletics 2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Greg Vaughn and Dave Nilsson homered in a six-run first inning as the Milwaukee Brewers beat Oakland for their second lopsided win over the Athletics in as many days.

Paul Molitor also homered and doubled to drive in three runs for the Brewers, who scored 45 runs during their 4-2 road trip, an average of 7½ per game.

Angels 3, Rangers 0

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Mark Langston upstaged Nolan Ryan, pitching a two-hitter for his second straight shutout as California kept Ryan winless in 11 starts.

Ryan (0-3) pitched well after the first inning, when the Angels struck for two runs with two outs. He then retired the next 15 in a row, including six strikeouts.

Ryan finished the evening with eight strikeouts, giving up seven hits and walking one. It was his first complete game since June 11 of last season, when he beat the Chicago White Sox 2-0 on six hits at Arlington Stadium.

Red Sox 4, Yankees 3

BOSTON — Boston's batting revival continued as Ellis Burks hit a two-run homer and Tom Brunansky had three doubles in a victory over the New York Yankees.

The Red Sox began the game with the American League's lowest batting average, .242, and the majors' fewest homers, 29. But five of their eight hits went for extra bases Wednesday night.

Mariners 2, White Sox 1

SEATTLE — Edgar Martinez hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning and Erik Hanson beat Charlie Hough in a pitching duel as the Seattle Mariners defeated the Chicago White Sox.

The Mariners beat the White Sox for the third straight night and the second game in a row in their last at bat. They won Tuesday night's game 9-6 with a six-run eighth.

Hanson (4-9) combined with Russ Swan and Mike Schooler for a five-hitter.

Associated Press

ATLANTA — Tom Glavine survived a shaky start to pitch a five-hitter and become baseball's first 10-game winner as the surging Atlanta Braves defeated the hapless Los Angeles Dodgers 4-3 Wednesday night.

NL

It was Atlanta's season-high seventh win in a row and 16th in 18 games. The Dodgers have lost seven straight games and 12 of 15.

Glavine (10-3) walked three and struck out two in his fifth complete game. The left-hander gave up three hits and two walks in the first two innings when the Dodgers scored their runs.

Padres 5, Astros 0

HOUSTON — Andy Benes pitched a four-hitter and extended his scoreless streak against Houston to 18 innings as the San Diego Padres beat the error-plagued Astros.

The Padres scored five unearned runs on three Astros errors.

Benes (6-5) struck out eight and walked two to finally gain his sixth victory. He had two losses and two no-decisions in his previous four starts.

The Padres took a 2-0 lead in the second inning on a throwing error by shortstop Rafael Ramirez and a sacrifice fly by Benes.

Kevin Ward singled with one out and Kurt Stillwell followed with a single to left. The runners advanced on a fielding error by left fielder Luis Gonzalez and Ward scored on Ramirez's error. Benes then drove in Stillwell with a sacrifice fly to center.

In the sixth, Fred McGriff reached on third baseman Ken Caminiti's fielding error, stole second and scored on Oscar Azocar's single. Azocar came home on Ward's double.

Reds 6, Giants 4

CINCINNATI — Pitcher Chris Hammond hit his first major-league homer as the Cincinnati Reds rallied to beat San Francisco for their sixth straight victory.

Hammond hit a two-run homer in the fourth off John Burkett (5-3) to put the Reds ahead 4-3 and on track for their 18th victory in 22 games. They've been atop the NL West every day this month.

San Francisco has lost four straight and 11 of 15 to slip below .500 for the first time since April 25. The Giants are 5-14 since May 27, when they led the division by 1½ games.

Hammond (5-3) scattered five hits over 6 2-3 innings, giving up all three runs in the second.

Pirates 8, Phillies 2

PITTSBURGH — Rampaging Pittsburgh hit three homers off former Pirate Don Robinson, and Randy Tomlin won his career-high fifth straight decision in a victory over Philadelphia.

Tomlin (9-3) has followed a miserable May with a miserly June, allowing only four runs in 32 1-3 innings while going 4-0 with a 1.11 ERA. Tomlin was 1-3 last month, but hasn't lost since May 17.

Tomlin, who was only 11 when Robinson broke in with the Pirates in 1978, allowed 11 hits in 7 1-3 innings, but worked out of a bases-loaded, none-out jam in the second and was working on a shutout until leaving during the Phillies' two-run eighth.

Mike LaValliere hit a two-run homer and drove in three runs and Gary Varsho and Jeff King led off each of the first two innings with homers as the Pirates won for the seventh time in eight games and 12th in their last 15.

Expos 5, Mets 2

NEW YORK — Dennis Martinez pitched a strong game, and Moises Alou hit a two-run homer as the Montreal Expos defeated the slumping New York Mets for their fifth victory in six games at Shea Stadium this year.

Martinez (7-5), winning for the second time in three decisions against the Mets this season, allowed seven hits, struck out three and walked two in 7 1-3 innings. Mel Rojas came on to get the final four outs — three on strikeouts — for his second save, sending the Mets to their 10th loss in 13 games.

Sid Fernandez (5-7), losing his second straight game, yielded all five runs on seven hits through 5 1-3 innings.

Puckett still proving worth to Twins in 4-2 win

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Kirby Puckett singled to snap an eighth-inning tie and made a game-ending, running catch with the bases loaded Wednesday night, giving the Minnesota Twins to a 4-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

AL

Puckett raced into right-center field to grab Jim Eisenreich's liner for the final out. The Royals had loaded the bases with two outs against Rick Aguilera.

In the seventh, Puckett singled to extend his hitting streak to 14 games and start a two-run rally. The AL's leading hitter at .347, he is batting .393 with 36 RBIs, including seven game-winners, in his last 35 games.

Blue Jays 6, Tigers 2

TORONTO — Jack Morris won his fourth straight decision and slumping Kelly Gruber got three hits and drove in two runs, leading Toronto past Detroit. The victory gave the AL East-leading Blue Jays a 1½-game lead over second-place Baltimore, which lost to Cleveland. Toronto and the Orioles had been within one game of each other every day since May 1.

Jack Morris (8-3) allowed two runs on seven hits in 6 1-3 innings. He struck out five and walked two.

Reliever Duane Ward pitched the last 2 2-3 innings, striking out five, for his eighth save.

Kevin Ritz (1-2) lasted just three innings, giving up three runs on six hits. He struck out two and walked four, two of them intentionally.

Gruber, in a 5-for-43 slump, singled to start the third inning and later scored on Pat Borders' single for a 3-2 lead.

Indians 3, Orioles 2

CLEVELAND — Charles Nagy won his fifth straight game and Carlos Baerga scored the go-ahead run on Mike Mussina's wild pitch as Cleveland beat Baltimore.

The Indians scored three runs on only five hits, while Baltimore scored two on 13 hits.

Brewers 10, Athletics 2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Greg Vaughn and Dave Nilsson homered in a six-run first inning as the Milwaukee Brewers beat Oakland for their second lopsided win over the Athletics in as many days.

Paul Molitor also homered and doubled to drive in three runs for the Brewers, who scored 45 runs during their 4-2 road trip, an average of 7½ per game.

Angels 3, Rangers 0

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Mark Langston upstaged Nolan Ryan, pitching a two-hitter for his second straight shutout as California kept Ryan winless in 11 starts.

Ryan (0-3) pitched well after the first inning, when the Angels struck for two runs with two outs. He then retired the next 15 in a row, including six strikeouts.

Ryan finished the evening with eight strikeouts, giving up seven hits and walking one. It was his first complete game since June 11 of last season, when he beat the Chicago White Sox 2-0 on six hits at Arlington Stadium.

Red Sox 4, Yankees 3

BOSTON — Boston's batting revival continued as Ellis Burks hit a two-run homer and Tom Brunansky had three doubles in a victory over the New York Yankees.

The Red Sox began the game with the American League's lowest batting average, .242, and the majors' fewest homers, 29. But five of their eight hits went for extra bases Wednesday night.

Mariners 2, White Sox 1

SEATTLE — Edgar Martinez hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning and Erik Hanson beat Charlie Hough in a pitching duel as the Seattle Mariners defeated the Chicago White Sox.

The Mariners beat the White Sox for the third straight night and the second game in a row in their last at bat. They won Tuesday night's game 9-6 with a six-run eighth.

Hanson (4-9) combined with Russ Swan and Mike Schooler for a five-hitter.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

THURSDAY, JUNE 18, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Build a new partnership for the long haul. Your resources and assets begin to grow in September. Forging permanent alliances is a top priority in late fall. Holiday travel in December will add to your festive mood. Early 1993 brings a boost in income and new career opportunities. A psychic experience next spring could trigger a dramatic change in your goals and lifestyle. Romance will intensify in May.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: film critic Roger Ebert, actresses Carol Kane and Isabella Rossellini, rock star Paul McCartney.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your receptivity to new ideas and natural inquisitiveness helps you uncover a new route to prosperity. Convey your desires to interested parties — their response will delight you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Those who expect the worst often fall victim to it. Think positive! You must be sure of yourself before holding others to account. A loved one's conduct at social affairs could cause tension.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A dream could come true today. A special person or event makes it happen. Use your financial insights carefully and you will boost your earning power. Bury the hatchet with an estranged relative.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are in control today and instinctively sure of the right thing to do. Working behind the scenes proves highly profitable. In social gatherings, clown around and tell a few jokes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Inside information may fall into your hands today. You are able to advance or finalize an important project. A heart-to-heart talk with a partner can put old hurts to rest.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Any difficulties you encounter early in the day could be as costly as they are worrisome. Avoid acting on impulse or burning a hole in your bankbook. A telephone call increases your options.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If you feel an urge to attempt something new; follow up! A private talk with an influential person could boost your career or finances. You will shine in meetings of a serious nature.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An ideal day to get out of the house and cultivate new friendships. Joining a special group or club is recommended. An older person's wise advice gets you out of a jam.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Joint financial arrangements require some discussion before they can be firmed up. Diligent research will yield vital information. Set priorities before revising a budget.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A loved one's declaration sends your spirits soaring. A career or business decision needs to be made without further delay. Consult experts to answer any niggling doubts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Stubborn resistance to progress could boomerang, leading others to issue an ultimatum. Do not allow your romantic dreams to become an obsession.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Refuse to allow outside distractions to interfere with the normal rhythm of your workday. Reconnect with people who have been out of touch. A platonic relationship could turn romantic.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are bright, curious and eager to be popular. A strong desire to be accepted makes these youngsters particularly vulnerable to peer pressure. They need firm parental guidance to steer a steady course. Although shortcuts appeal to these Geminis, they should be avoided in the classroom. Doing a superficial job on homework or research assignments could become a bad habit. Praise these children when they take the time to do a job really well.

Opening lead: Jack of ♠

When this hand was played in a recent team match, declarer tried to guess the location of a few key cards. Unfortunately, it was not South's lucky day, and the contract was defeated. It could have been made without resorting to a single guess.

North's two diamonds was a transfer to hearts. As a result, a contract of four hearts was reached in quick time.

Declarer won the opening spade lead in dummy, drew trumps and took the king of spades, planning to concede the third round in the hope that West would have to win. When West showed out, South tried a different tack. The king and ace of diamonds were cashed, followed by a third diamond in an attempt to endplay West should that defender hold the queen.

East scored the lady, cashed a spade trick and exited with a low club. Naturally, declarer chose to go in with the king, and the defenders collected two club tricks for a one-trick set. Verily, it was a day to try men's souls.

It ought not to have been. Declarer came within a step of guaranteeing the contract no matter how the cards were divided. South should have followed through by surrendering the spade anyway! When East wins, best defense is to shift to a diamond. Declarer follows low from hand and wins in dummy, then leads a club and plays any honor from hand.

Suppose declarer inserts the king and loses to the ace. A diamond return from West is into declarer's major tenace and a club sets up South's jack for a diamond discard from the table. Either way, declarer loses only three tricks.

Channing changes costumes behind screens on the stage

Channing

"I have screens set up so I can keep talking to the audience while I'm changing," says Channing, whose act runs through Sunday at Montclair State College.

The revue consists of songs from her many musicals, including "Hello Dolly," for which she won a Tony, and "Diamonds Are A Girl's Best Friend." She also recreates scenes from her life, including pivotal Broadway auditions.

"I do everything in this," Channing said. "I sing, dance, act and talk to the audience. It's my favorite show, but whatever I'm in at the moment is my favorite show."

LOS ANGELES — Michael Jackson is shipping 2 tons of clothes — including costumes featuring fiber optics, lasers and explosives — to Europe for his "Dangerous" tour, one of his designers said.

Two of the outfits, lined with optical fibers, are 9 feet tall, 7 feet wide and weigh 40 pounds each. A computerized laser rig controls the lighting, said Michael Bush, who created the costumes with Dennis Tompkins.

Jackson "describes what he envisions, and, because he's so visually creative, our main goal is to bring his ideas to life," Bush said. "Everything you'll see on stage — every special effect — is inspired by him." One coat takes 3,000 volts from a concealed battery belt to power its 36 strobe lights. Others have hidden flaps concealing explosives to simulate "all kinds of special effects," Bush said.

Costume material includes reflecting tape, gold and 1,000 yards of fabric from Europe.

"Michael wanted a different look for even the most basic outfits, so we went with a lot of black and gold — 18 karat, of course," he said.

The tour begins June 27 in Germany.

PORTLAND, Maine — Mel Gibson, who consistently makes the "best looking" lists in fan magazines, is to make his debut as a director and star as a disfigured man in a movie that may be filmed in Maine this summer.

The film's producer, Garthorpe Productions, is considering several sites,including Maine and Canada, said D. Lea Girardin, director of the Maine State Film Commission.

"Man Without a Face" is about a man who was disfigured in a car accident and seeks solitude in a coastal town. Location specialists have been scouring Maine's mid-coast area and Deer Isle, Girardin said.

"They were looking for just the right kind of place and just the right kind of house," she said.

Gibson, 36, co-stars with Danny Glover in "Lethal Weapon 3," which has grossed more than $114.2 million since its release five weeks ago.

RALEIGH, N.C. — Sen. Jesse Helms raised his fist and said he felt great as he was wheeled out of a hospital Wednesday, two weeks after quadruple bypass surgery.

"Do you want to know the truth?" asked the North Carolina Repblican, clutching a stuffed red heart. "I feel pretty good considering the shape I'm in."

Helms, 70, also had his heart valve replaced during the June 3 surgery at Rex Hospital.

Dr. Bertram Coffer, head anesthesiologist at the hospital, said the senator would start cardiac rehabilitation in about a week or two.

The average hospital stay for such surgery is 10 days to two weeks followed by recuperation at home for up to six weeks, Coffer said.

A former television editorialist and newspaper editor, Helms was elected to the Senate in 1972 and re-elected three times.

He received more than 10,000 cards and letters during his hospital stay and also got get-well calls from President and Mrs. Bush.

HARTFORD, Conn. — Irreverent New York City radio announcer Don Imus traded places Wednesday with Connecticut Gov. Lowell P. Weicker Jr.

Taking his oath of office on satirist P.J. O'Rourke's book "Parliament of Whores," Imus pledged to raise and spend every dollar — "and more," show no respect for the legislative and judicial branches of government and "take no bribe before its time."

Imus said the priorities of his administration would be to "get some babes," make money and "affect people's lives — adversely."

The real governor seized the reins of Imus' WFAN-AM show around 7 a.m. The station set up broadcast equipment at the Connecticut Capitol.

Weicker — the man state residents have loved to hate for his decision to push through its first income tax — warned that if people think he's been dangerous as governor, wait until Imus arrives on the scene.

DALLAS — Midland Blast's '80 Girls soccer team ended its 1992 season by finishing in the semifinals of the Dr. Pepper Texas Open Tournament here last weekend.

Forward Ritha Belizaire topped Blast scorers with four goals in the two-day event, while Catherine Weir and Kristen Underwood each recorded assists. The Midlanders advanced to the semis with 1-0 wins over D'Feeters '80, Texas Star and N.E.T. Challenge '80.

Blast was beaten in the semifinals by Austin's Lady Longhorns, 2-1. In its first season of competition, Blast advanced to the quarterfinals of two tournaments, placed second in another and sent six girls to the Under-14 Olympic Development Program District Team.

Devine returns to Mizzou as athletic director

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Dan Devine, one of the most successful University of Missouri football coaches, will return amid hopes he can revive the school's athletic department.

Devine, 67, signed a one-year, $90,000 contract as athletic director, effective Aug. 1, interim Chancellor Gerald Brouder said Wednesday. Devine replaces Dick Tamburo, 62, who retires at the end of the month.

More Sports, 10C

"We fully expect that he will take the athletic department, in this year, to new heights," Brouder said.

The announcement comes at a time when the Missouri athletic department is embroiled in turmoil.

The basketball program has been rocked by an NCAA probation, and basketball coach Norm Stewart had been rumored to be looking elsewhere after 25 years at Missouri, although he said Wednesday he intends to stay and is negotiating a new contract.

In addition, former basketball standout Anthony Peeler was sentenced to five years probation Tuesday after pleading guilty to a felony weapons charge and two related misdemeanors.

But Brouder said Devine's main responsibility will be establishing a five-year plan for athletics. He also will start a fund-raising effort to increase gifts to the athletic department by $2 million. It now has about $1.6 million in gifts.

"I'm going to concentrate on making some real progress in external and internal morale, not only in the athletic department, but in fans, supporters and gift-givers," Devine said in an interview from his home in Phoenix.

"I'm not going to spend a lot of time on negative things. There's too much that needs to be done to constantly be fighting little internal battles. I don't have much patience for that," he added.

Raul Mondesi struck out three times, but managed to fit in a two-run homer and a sacrifice fly to finish with a game-high three RBI. Garey Ingram was 2-for-4 with two runs scored and a pair of stolen bases, while Tony Barron continued his rampage at Angels Stadium with a 2-for-3 night, a double, RBI and run scored.

How does Royster explain the team's sudden resurgence.

"I explain it with Raul Mondesi, Garey Ingram and Tony Barron."

Midland starter Paul Swingle, who felt the biggest brunt of the Missions' wrath, gave up 11 hits and six runs — all earned — in 5⅓ innings pitched. Steve Peck, who came on in relief in the sixth, gave up three earned runs and four hits in 2⅔ innings.

The Angels' final run came in the eighth when Dan Rumsey walked and scored on a single by Tony Brown.

U.S. OPEN: Vets top Bear's list

lot of experience," the 52-year-old Nicklaus said.

"It will be someone who has won a lot of golf tournaments, someone who has played well and has had success in the U.S. and British Opens before.

"I think it will be someone you have heard of."

He provided a short list of possibilities, a list loaded with veterans: Ray Floyd, Seve Ballesteros, current British Open champ Ian Baker-Finch, Nick Faldo, defending champion Payne Stewart and Mark O'Meara.

He later named Fred Couples, who capped a 10-month success string with a victory in the Masters.

And, near the top of his list, Nicklaus had old friend and golfing foe —Watson.

"Tom could win here," Nicklaus said. "He could do it.

"I think you have to have been there before to be successful in playing this type of golf on this type of golf course.

"If you haven't been there before, you're going to find youself looking at the course and saying, 'Gosh, am I going to be able to break 90?' And you might not be able to."

While Watson, 42, has not won in five years, he agreed he could have a chance in the 156-man field chasing a $1.5 million purse with $275,000 to the winner.

"I still feel capable of winning the golf tournament. I honestly feel this could be a good week for me. I'm not predicting anything, but I have a good feeling about the week," he said.

He agreed that the competition will be from the more experienced players, but his list of those most likely to succeed was remarkably different from that of Nicklaus.

"There are certain shots that if you haven't had the experience playing them here, you're going to guess wrong and you're going to pay the penalty for guessing wrong.

"If we start getting any wind at all, the experienced player will prevail."

He listed two dark-horse candidates, Mark Brooks and Jay Haas, a winner last week at Memphis.

Other Watson nominees were Paul Azinger, Davis Love III, Faldo and Couples.

And then Watson put the past behind him and looked to the immediate future, Sunday and the final 18 holes.

"It's nice to be nostalgic," he said. "It's a good feeling to think back about '82. But it's history. It's gone.

"It was a magic moment that I hope I can have again sometime.

"But I won't be thinking about that on the first tee Thursday. I'll be thinking about hitting the tee shot into the fairway."

And maybe, just maybe, making magic again.

FIGHT: Champ brings out best in opponents beating Holyfield, but the former champion became the People's Choice.

"Just because he lasted 12 rounds, people thought he was the greatest thing at 42," Holyfield said.

Substitute Bert Cooper was stopped in the seventh round by Holyfield. By the fight's end, however, many in the crowd in the champion's hometown of Atlanta were cheering for Cooper, who had knocked Holyfield down in the third round.

"If I can bring out the best in someone, it shows a lot about me," Holfyield said. "Maybe I brought too much out in Cooper."

Holyfield said before his scheduled defense against Tyson, which was called off when Tyson suffered a rib injury last October, that playing second fiddle to an opponent doesn't bother him.

Being the undisputed champion is enough. Being himself is just fine.

"I'm happy with who I am, and when it's over I'll go on in my life without missing a beat," he said.

Ironically, Holyfield's highly successful and lucrative career was launched on a wave of public sympathy following a controversial disqualification in a light heavyweight semifinal bout at the 1984 Olympics.

It made Holyfield an "uncrowned champion," always a popular role for a fighter to play.

"If I had my way, I'd have won a gold medal," he said.

If he had his way, Holyfield would not be fighting Holmes, although he's getting $18.5 million to do so. That will push his purse total to more than $50 million for winning the heavyweight title and defending it three times.

While he says he's not bothered with not having the public stature enjoyed by some previous champions, he does seem rankled by being put into another no-win situation.

"It wasn't my intention to fight Larry Holmes," Holyfield said.

He did agree, however, to fight the winner of the Holmes-Ray Mercer fight Feb. 7.

"I did think Ray Mercer was going to win because of the youth factor," Holyfield said. "When Larry Holmes won, I was kind of upset, but my hat's off to him.

"I didn't get anything out of the Foreman fight," he continued. "I didn't want to go into another fight against an old boxer where I come out of it with only a win.

"If I put him out in the first round, 'He's an old man,' they say. If it goes 12, 'Holyfield doesn't have enough to take him out.'

"People will say this isn't a fight or Foreman wasn't a fight, but I'll fight them all."

Holyfield wants to fight the winner of match between unbeaten Riddick Bowe and Pierre Coetzer.

Prices hold

NEW YORK — Oil prices finished mixed with little change Wednesday, as a late buying spree erased losses from an early sell-off.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in July settled at $22.29 per barrel, down 1 cent as it bounced back from the day's low price of $22.05, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Oil prices fell early in the session in response to an American Petroleum Institute report issued Tuesday evening that showed U.S. supplies of oil and petroleum products rose last week.

But traders began buying oil in the afternoon, although analysts found no catalyst to the market's reversal.

Natural gas prices were mixed, with contracts for delivery in July settling at $1.605 per 1,000 cubic feet, up .2 cent.

At the New York Mercantile Exchange, lower-grade sour crude for delivery in July settled at $20.59 per barrel, down 1 cent.

Anthony creditors

OKLAHOMA CITY — A federal judge has rejected a creditor's request that he review his approval of an important document in the bankruptcy reorganization case filed by the C.R. Anthony Co. department store chain.

The next step is a confirmation hearing beginning July 13.

Trade creditors had filed an objection Friday to Anthony's disclosure statement following the collapse of an offer to buy their $35 million in claims.

Federal Judge Paul Lindsey approved the statement last month. He rejected the request for a review Tuesday.

Dollar gains

NEW YORK — The dollar settled higher across the board Wednesday, but trading largely centered on the European currencies.

The yen also weakened on the heels of a decline in the Japanese stock market. The 225-share Nikkei Stock Average, the main barometer for equities on the Tokyo exchange, fell to its lowest level in more than 5½ years amid pessimism about the economy.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 126.60 yen, down 0.40 yen from Tuesday's close.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.8535 from $1.8605 late Tuesday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Tuesday's rates included: 1.5750 German marks, up from 1.5635; 1.4175 Swiss francs, up from 1.4045; 5.3050 French francs, up from 5.2650; 1,193.00 Italian lire, up from 1,183.25, and 1.1969 Canadian dollars, up from 1.1963.

Fed: Manufacturing outlook brightens

■ Central bank's mildly upbeat assessment means it probably is in no hurry to lower rates, analysts say.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The economy continued to improve early this month with an upturn in manufacturing evident nationwide, the Federal Reserve said Wednesday in a report dimming the prospect for reduced interest rates.

"Economic activity continues to improve. The manufacturing sector appears to be strengthening in all" regions, it said.

The central bank's mildly upbeat assessment of regional business conditions means, according to analysts, that it probably is in no hurry to speed growth with lower rates.

That puts it in conflict with Bush administration officials who are looking for lower rates to ensure that the recovery from the 1990-'91 recession does not fizzle out before the November election.

"I think pretty clearly the Fed's going to be reluctant to ease" monetary policy, said economist Mark Zandi of Regional Financial Associates in West Chester, Pa. "There's a predilection at the Fed to hold the status quo unless conditions deteriorate substantially."

Monetary policymakers are expected to use the report, known as the "beige book," when they meet June 30 to plan their strategy for managing the money supply and interest rates through midsummer.

Over three years of economic stagnation and recession, the Fed has pushed interest rates down substantially. Since April 9, however, it has paused, leaving the federal funds rate, the interest banks charge each other for overnight loans, at 3.75 percent.

The survey's finding, based on interviews of business contacts conducted before June 9 by the Fed's 12 district banks, are consistent with other economic statistics showing a slow but sustained recovery, including a big gain in productivity reported Wednesday by the Labor Department.

Productivity of non-farm workers — defined as output per hour of work — jumped 2.7 percent from January through March, the best showing since the second quarter of 1990, just before the recession began.

Economists believe improved productivity is the key to sustained, non-inflationary growth.

However, the improvement detected by the Federal Reserve and evident in many statistical measures has yet to show up in what most Americans consider the most important economic indicator — the unemployment rate, which in May hit an eight-year high of 7.5 percent.

But at least in manufacturing the central bank found some signs of an upswing.

Losses mount; airlines balk at higher fares

NEW YORK (AP) — While the nation's airlines are tallying big losses from their recent fare war, most have balked at an attempt to raise prices.

Northwest Airlines found itself almost alone Wednesday in a bid to increase domestic tickets by 10 percent across the board and "return some rationality to pricing levels."

America West Airlines said it would match Northwest's price increase. But other rival carriers said they were studying the proposal, unveiled late Tuesday as Northwest took the unusual step of publicly announcing its intention to raise fares, while making it clear it does not want to get into another pricing battle with American Airlines.

Northwest will have to abandon the plan if more airlines do not match it.

Airlines generally make public announcements on fares only when they lower them, but Northwest issued a statement saying, "The 10 percent increase will affect all fare categories equally — excursion, full fare and first class. No fare rules or restrictions will be affected by the increase."

Last month, Northwest set off the fare war with a sale that let an adult and child fly for the price of one ticket. American, the industry's pricing leader, previously said it would offer no such deals targeted to special classes of travelers.

General Dynamics plans 450 layoffs

FORT WORTH (NYT) — Having struggled with quality control problems on its F-16 production line, General Dynamics Corp. plans to temporarily dismiss 450 employees who are now engaged in the jet's final assembly, company and union officials said Wednesday.

The workers will be handed pink slips Friday and next Tuesday. They will be out of work for two to six months, depending on GD's ability to correct its quality control problems.

The employees will not be entitled to 60 days' notice or 60 days pay — as called for under the federal plant closing law — unless their layoff extends beyond six months.

Joe Stout, a GD spokesman, said the layoffs result from declining F-16 production at the plant, which has been criticized by the Air Force and Defense Department over the quality of its work.

The plant delivered just three F-16s in the last two months.

End of thrift cleanup in sight, regulator says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's top savings and loan regulator says after five consecutive quarters of profits the cleanup of the industry is in its eighth inning.

But analysts outside the Bush administration warned on Wednesday that the ball game may go into extra innings.

The Office of Thrift Supervision, filling out the details of statistics offered on Tuesday, told the Senate Banking Committee that the 2,064 S&Ls that have so far escaped government seizure earned $1.59 billion during the first three months of the year.

That's nearly triple the $610 million earned by private-sector thrifts a year earlier. Ninety-three percent of S&Ls were profitable during the January-March period, compared with 85 percent the year before.

The first quarter earnings, following $1.83 billion in profits for all of 1991 "are the clearest signs yet that the industry is becoming capable of sustained profitability and stability," thrift office director Timothy Ryan said.

"The end of the cleanup . . . is in sight," he said.

The thrift office is projecting around 150 S&L insolvencies over the next two years, which would bring the number of thrifts to around 1,900.

The two key reasons for the recent improvement, the thrift office said, are the government seizures of insolvent S&Ls since 1989 and the most favorable interest rate conditions for financial institutions since the 1970s.

However, the Congressional Budget Office and private analysts offered a less rosy outlook.

Budget office director Robert D. Reischauer said he has not changed his view that as few as 1,400 thrifts will survive.

"The cleanup of the thrift crisis is not over. ... Thrifts are still not as profitable as they once were," he told the committee. "We should expect a ball game with extra innings."

Congressional Democrats, including Sen. Donald W. Riegle Jr. of Michigan, the chairman of the Senate panel, questioned whether the Bush administration was trying to keep a lid on bad banking and S&L news until after the election.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Maturity dates vary for Series EE bonds

By Bill Doyle

Q. On Oct. 31, 1986, I purchased a Series EE, U.S. Savings Bond for $250. I did this after reading that the bond would be worth its $500 face value, if I held it for five years.

I'm glad I didn't invest any more than $250. This past March 2, I was told at my bank that the bond is only worth $344. Do you have any suggestions?

Doyle

A. Just one. Hang onto that EE bond until at least October 1, 1996. That's when it is guaranteed to be worth $500. So far, you have received two pieces of very wrong information.

EE bonds, successors to the old reliable E bonds, were nicknamed "double E" because each EE is guaranteed to double in value between its issue date and its original maturity date.

EEs have been issued since January 1980. Depending on the exact date on which each was issued, their original maturity periods were set at from eight to 12 years.

EEs issued from Nov. 1, 1982, through Oct. 31; 1986, have a 10-year original maturity period, during which they are guaranteed to accrue annual interest at 7.5 percent, if held for at least five years. All other EEs currently are accruing interest at a guaranteed 6 percent annual rate.

A 7.5 percent interest rate on a bond backed by the full faith and credit of our federal government is a mighty good deal. Be happy, not sad.

It's hard to imagine where you read an EE bond doubles in value in five years. That would indicate a 14.8 percent interest rate. Uncle Sam has never had to pay interest anywhere near that high to attract U.S. Savings Bond buyers.

Your bond became worth $375 on May 1, 1992. It will stay at that until next November 1, when its value will rise again. This number is from the booklet "Tables of Redemption Values for U.S. Savings Bonds," which is distributed to all banks.

Q: I bought a $1,000 face value EE bond for $500 on May 5. 1983. In November 1991, my bank told me this bond was worth $954.40. In December, 1991, as well as January, February and March, 1992, the bank informed me the bond was still worth $954.40. Its value didn't change in all that time.

Also, I was told interest is set for the next six months every May and November.

My conclusion is not to buy EE bonds in any month except May or November. By doing otherwise,I would lose interest for the previous months. Am I right?

A: No. The redemption value number the bank gave you for those months was correct, but your conclusion is not.

Interest is added to the redemption value of an EE every six months, no matter what month in which you buy it. For example, if you purchase an EE in January, its value increases every July and January.

Because you bought your bond in May, it goes up in value on November 1 and May 1 year-in and year-out until it reaches its final maturity date. For an EE, that's 30 years after the month in which the bond was issued.

Your particular EE became worth $991.60 this past May 1. Its value will stay there until next November 1, when it will increase again.

Q: Are there any specific dates on which it is wise to redeem an EE bond, in order to get full interest?

A: Yes, indeed! The first day of a month in which interest is credited, as outlined in this column's previous answer. If you cash it later – and before the next semiannual interest accrual date – you don't get any additional interest.

Also, it's smart to buy an EE late in a month. That's because interest is earned from the first of the month, even if you purchase the bond on the 31st.

Johnson decides to run just the 200

Associated Press

DALLAS — World track officials have won a seven-month battle to change the Olympic schedule, yet the victory came a few days too late for the man it was designed to help.

Olympic organizers agreed Wednesday to a last-minute change that would have allowed American sprinter Michael Johnson, the world's fastest man at 200 and 400 meters, to seek two gold medals at the Summer Games.

But Johnson said he's standing by his decision to compete only in the 200 meters at the U.S. Olympic trials that begin this weekend in New Orleans.

"They are four or five days too late with their decision," Johnson said from his home in Waco. "Here we are a week before the trials. I couldn't put off my decision any longer."

The International Amateur Athletic Federation, which had sought the change since last November, was stunned by Johnson's decision.

"We're a bit surprised and also disappointed, because we have fought for months with the organizing committee to make this change. This makes us look pretty foolish," said an IAAF spokesman who requested that his name not be used.

Eating fish could inhibit development of diabetes

By Jean Carper

It's well known that eating fish may save you from heart disease. Fascinating new evidence now suggests fish may also keep you from developing diabetes. So say Dutch researchers at the National Institute of Public Health and Environmental Protection.

Carper

They tested 175 normal healthy elderly men and women to be sure they were free of both diabetes and impaired glucose intolerance that often foreshadows diabetes. Four years later, they tested the group again. About 45 percent of the non-fish eaters had developed impaired glucose tolerance compared with only 25 percent of the fish eaters.

Thus, the researchers concluded that fish eaters were only about half as likely to develop diabetes as non-fish eaters. Further, the amount of fish needed for protection was extremely small — a mere ounce a day of either lean, fatty or canned fish.

This jibes with other evidence noting, for example, that Eskimos who eat a lot of marine foods have low rates of diabetes. However, fish and fish oil may act as a preventive, but not as a treatment for diabetes, say researchers. Some studies, in fact, find fish-oil supplements detrimental to diabetic patients.

Anti-arthritis diet

If you are an overweight woman of middle age or older, here's some good news about preventing osteoarthritis, a breakdown of cartilage in the joints that affects about 16 million Americans, mostly elderly.

For the first time, researchers have discovered that losing weight may prevent a form of the crippling, painful disease in women a decade or so later.

Indeed, the analysis by Boston University School of Medicine researchers found that overweight women of average height who shed a mere 11 pounds cut their risk of later osteoarthritis of the knee by more than half. The more weight they lost, the lower the odds.

Interestingly, the study showed that women who had gained weight in middle age or later were more likely to develop knee osteoarthritis than those who had been obese their entire lives. One half had been overweight for only three to 10 years before osteoarthritis symptoms appeared. Why is unknown, say the researchers.

Their bottom-line advice: Overweight women should lose weight to help prevent later osteoarthritis.

Chocoholic mysteries

If you are a woman who craves chocolate at the time of your menstrual period, you are hardly alone. Such cravings are common, according to a new study by Paul Rozin, Ph.D., a psychologist at the University of Pennsylvania.

In a study of more than 500 men and women, he and colleagues discovered that about a quarter of all females crave chocolate just prior to and in the first few days of menstruation.

Exactly why this happens is unknown, says Rozin, but it seems clear such cravings are partly controlled by hormone levels. At this time in the menstrual cycle, he says, levels of the female hormones progesterone and estrogen are low.

Part of the craving may also stem from a desire for sweets, which some women also have at the time of their menstrual period. Eating sweets and/or chocolate may help relieve premenstrual depression, some research shows.

Unquestionably, says Rozin, chocolate contains many biologically active substances which may explain the cravings. For one thing, chocolate is very high in the mineral magnesium. Thus, the cravings might come from a magnesium deficiency. Doses of magnesium have relieved chocolate cravings in a few cases.

Cholesterol expectations

How much fat do you have to shave from your diet to make a big dent in your blood cholesterol? More than you may think, according to new research.

Some experts say cutting fat to 30 percent of calories, and especially shunning saturated animal fat and cholesterol, can lower cholesterol by 10 to 25 percent. But doctors at the Royal Hallamshire Hospital in Sheffield, England, who recently analyzed eight large-scale studies dispute that, calling it "totally unrealistic." Such "modest" low-fat diets generally lowered cholesterol about 2 percent, and at most 4 percent, they found.

However, more severe low-fat diets can reduce cholesterol by 6 to 15 percent, they concluded after looking at eight studies where fat intake was much less than 30 percent of calories.

Another recent Canadian study found that eating 21 percent of calories in fat reduced total cholesterol 7 percent and bad-type LDL cholesterol 11 percent in women with moderately high cholesterol.

The British doctors say the higher your cholesterol, the more likely it is to drop after cutting back on fat.

Anti-cancer surprise

Lots of fluids, olives, olive oil, pepper and the spice cumin. All of these may help discourage cancers of the urinary tract, including bladder cancer, prostate cancer, kidney cancer and testicular cancer.

At least that's what Israeli scientists discovered when they compared the eating habits of about 1,000 people with urinary cancers and a similar group without the cancers.

Outstanding was the fact that urinary-tract cancer victims drank low amounts of fluids. Sixty-one percent without cancer drank 10 cups or more of fluid a day. Only 43 percent with cancer did.

Cancer patients were more likely to use soy and cotton oil. Olive oil was the favorite of the cancer-free. They were two and a half times more apt to use olive oil and eat olives than cancer patients.

Interestingly, those who escaped cancer also ate much more pepper as well as about three and a half times more of the pungent spice cumin. Both cumin and olive oil are known to affect metabolism and hormone-like substances in ways that might help ward off cancer, the researchers noted.

Vitamin C protects sperm

Planning to father a child? Be sure to eat enough vitamin C. It could mean the difference between a totally healthy child and one with birth defects. That is the astonishing conclusion from a new study by Bruce N. Ames, Ph.D., and colleagues at the University of California at Berkeley. The team found that even a slight lack of vitamin C can lead to damaged sperm, boosting the chances of birth defects in offspring.

In one test, a group of men with low semen and levels of vitamin C showed the most damage to the DNA (genetic blueprint) of their sperm. When 10 healthy men were deliberately switched from diets high in vitamin C (250 mg a day) to very low in vitamin C (5 mg a day), the level of genetic damage in sperm jumped 91 percent. Restoring vitamin C in the diet reversed the sperm damage.

Such damaged sperm, the researchers explain, could produce children with birth defects and genetic diseases, including cancer. Vitamin C acts as an antioxidant to protect sperm.

How much vitamin C do you need? For most men, at least the RDA (recommended dietary allowance) of 60 mg a day. (An orange contains 70 mg.) However, smokers need twice as much vitamin C to protect sperm, says Ames.

French eat less bread, drink less wine, study shows

PARIS (AP) — The French, a nation of gastronomes, are spending less time at the table, but may be eating better than their parents did.

They linger less at lunch, over fewer courses and less bread, drink less wine and have discovered frozen food, take-outs and home delivery, just like Americans.

A study by the National Statistics Institute says these habits reflect a changing lifestyle laced with stress, lengthy work days and longer commutes as high city rents force people to the suburbs.

As more women take jobs, they are less willing to spend hours cooking.

Twenty years ago, any self-respecting French cook could whip up a white sauce, pastry crust or salad dressing from scratch. Today, there is no shame in buying it from the grocery.

"My mother used to make her own vinaigrette fresh every night," said Corinne Gurfinkiel, 35, who has three children. "But I buy it in bottles."

Supermarkets are the beneficiaries. In 1962, there were only 224 supermarkets in France. In 1991, the number was 7,043.

Over 20 years, with prices 10 to 40 percent below those in smaller grocers, their market share jumped from 10 percent to 59 percent. The Leclerc chain, one of France's biggest success stories, has increased frozen food sales by 10 percent each year since 1988.

Statistics published in the weekly news magazine L'Express indicate one reason the French are eating better is that their meals are more balanced.

For instance, French people eat half as much sugar as they did in 1962, three times as much fresh fish and 30 percent more fresh fruit and vegetables.

Average annual consumption of potatoes was 225 pounds 30 years ago, compared with 150 pounds in 1989, and bread consumption was 200 pounds in 1962, compared to less than 145 in 1989.

Baguettes, made from refined white flour, now compete with breads made of whole wheat, rye or bran flour.

The current generation drinks far less wine, washing meals down with mineral water or fruit juice instead, and more of the wine consumed is of better quality. Wineshop chains say demand is stronger than ever for wines costing more than $3.50 a bottle.

Wine is "no longer consumed for its energy value," said Patrick Marandon, a wine expert.

The statistics institute study notes that people eat out more often, about three times a week on average. Eleven percent of the family food budget went to restaurants in 1969, compared to nearly 20 percent in 1989.

Restaurateurs say there is a new attitude.

"Customers look very closely at prices," said Patrick Bramone, who manages the fashionable bistro Batifol. "At lunchtime, they're in a hurry, and so they usually order just a main course, never dessert."

A decade ago, he said, they lingered over three courses and ended with coffee and brandy.

The business lunch endures, but with major changes.

Yves Le Gougec, 46, a computer salesman, recalls striking deals over foie gras, canard a l'orange and mousse au chocolat.

"We used to have these big meals designed to impress the customer," he said. "Today, we sign the deal in the office and seal it over lunch. Lunches are less formal, more friendly, and we stay away from the heavier dishes in rich sauces."

Produce from Spain, Israel, Morocco, South Africa and South America is available year-round. Avocados and kiwis, once rare, are as common and cheap as tomatoes and oranges.

Diet sodas arrived only last year, but low-fat dairy products abound. The "all natural" label, translated as "bio," was once an advertizing gimmick, but today most neighborhoods have a health food store. The Left Bank has an open-air organic food market.

"We're eating lighter, but more and more people have weight problems," said Arnaud Basdevant, a nutritionist. "The key to the paradox is the breakdown of traditional eating patterns. People no longer eat when they're hungry. They eat when they have time."

Fast food has not spared the French. McDonald's opened its first outlet in 1973 and now has 2,000 in France. The study says one in nine meals outside the home is eaten in a fast-food restaurant.

Tex-Mex, American-style pizza and North African, Lebanese and Vietnamese cuisine are available in fast-food shops that often stay open late.

However, many French still prefer fast food a la Francaise: "croque monsieur" (toasted ham and cheese), broiled chicken, cold cuts, cheese and salads.

Iran's Crown Jewels are source of national pride

TEHRAN, Iran (NYT) — The egret-plumed crown of 3,755 jewels that Mohammed Riza Pahlevi placed on his head when he crowned himself shah in 1967 is there.

So is the Peacock Throne that he ascended afterward — an elevated, gem-encrusted, enameled bed that sat in the Golestan Palace but was damaged during the 1979 revolution, many of its most important gems looted.

And the flawless 180-carat pink Sea of Light diamond, drapery tassels made of thousands of miniature seed pearls, watch fobs of diamonds the size of lima beans, trays piled high with emeralds and rubies. And jeweled fruit knives, fly swatters, opera glasses, opium pipes, horse bridles and kebab warmers.

Harking back to the country's ancient greatness, Iran's leaders have put the ultimate symbols of Persia's imperial past, the Crown Jewels, on public display again.

After the Islamic revolution swept away the Iranian monarchy, the jewels were removed from view, and the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's fiercest followers even proposed selling the collection and dispersing the profits to the poor.

The makers of the revolution expunged the trappings of royalty and eliminated the glorification of kings. They removed the silverware and the china decorated with the symbol of the Pahlevi dynasty.

They sold carpets, artwork, automobiles and other items of value from the former royal palaces.

Some clerics even called for the razing of the ancient ruins of Persepolis, the ceremonial capital of the great Persian emperors Darius I and Xerxes.

But as revolutionary fervor cooled and Iran's per capita income declined to half of what it had been, the country's leaders began to focus on finding ways to rekindle national pride and rebuild the Iranian state.

Last April, President Hashemi Rafsanjani became the first revolutionary leader to make an official visit to Persepolis, where he declared: "Standing in the middle of these centuries-old ruins, I felt the nation's dignity was all-important and must be strengthened. Our people must know that they are not without a history."

Now the Crown Jewels have also re-emerged as an acceptable source of national pride. About a year ago, Rafsanjani took a private tour of the museum where the collection is housed, and last February it discreetly reopened its doors to the public.

The jewels are kept in the basement of the Central Bank, down a Persian-carpeted staircase, past security checks and a pair of electronically controlled steel doors, in a cool, dimly lit, marble-floored vault protected by armed guards.

The collection is complete, unscathed by the missile that exploded just outside the Central Bank building during the Iran-Iraq war, and untouched by those who would have put it on the auction block.

Some of the collection dates from the 16th century, when Spaniards discovered emeralds in what is now Colombia and began marketing them in India and Iran. But the bulk of the collection came into Iranian hands by the same sort of imperialism that the revolution condemned.

In 1739, the Persian conqueror Nadir Shah sacked Delhi and returned home with chests filled with gold, silver, emeralds, diamonds and pearls from the Great Mogul's treasury. From the loose stones, 19th-century jewelers employed by the Qajar dynasty crafted most of the objects.

One of the most spectacular objects is the "Globe of Jewels," a three-and-a-half-foot globe and stand of 75 pounds of solid gold that shows the world in more than 51,000 stones — the oceans in emeralds, the Americas in rubies and Iran, Britain, France and part of Southeast Asia in diamonds.

Other objects in the vast collection include the royal crown of the Qajar dynasty, made with diamonds, pearls, emeralds, rubies and red spinels; a seven-foot throne made for Nadir Shah with 26,000 gems and decorated with parrots, reclining lions and imaginary beasts; a tiara for Farah Diba on the occasion of her marriage to Shah Mohammed Riza Pahlevi in 1958, and her coronation crown, set with a 150-carat emerald and 1,500 diamonds, emeralds, rubies and pearls.

Tempo pleases with competitive prices and power

Since its debut eight years ago, Tempo has been Ford's domestic alternative to all those look-alike compact Asian coupes and sedans.

Until this year, though, Tempo's strongest suit was its bottom line — the sticker figure contains multiple thousands of digits less than Japanese competitors.

For 1992 editions, Tempo adds another buyer incentive — more power in the form of an optional V6.

Earlier Tempos seemed woefully under-equipped to handle the stress of an automatic shifter. It was, at best, a struggle to maintain adequate highway speed — moving into the passing lane required both guts and patience.

Now, however, the Ford V6 brings an entirely new feel — as well as a sense of relief — to Tempo.

With its relatively light weight (around 2,500 pounds), the new edition leaps to action, particularly when rigged with the manual five-speed shifter.

The Tempo version, with multiport fuel injection, nets 135-horsepower.

While not the fastest in its class, there's plenty of pep for passing. The base in-line-4 plant, still displacing 2.3 liters, remains essentially the same, although the 1992 version adds sequential port injection.This revision kicks horsepower down two points to 96, but boosts torque by 4-pounds-per-foot to 128 so you end up with more thrust for lower gears.

It works most effectively with manual stick, although even with three-speed automatic it seems adequate.

With these power improvements Tempo brings a few cosmetic changes for 1992 models, beginning with a revised nose that includes aerodynamically sculpted headlamps that fit flush and wrap with the sweep of front bumpers.

Hard edges have been softened in an effort to further smooth out Tempo's lines and the overall image seems a step or two closer to the styling of Ford's popular Taurus.

Also for 1992, the previous all-wheel-drive option has been dropped, leaving both coupe and sedan structures strictly in front-wheel-drive format.

All editions feature quick-response power rack and pinion steering plus power assistance for brakes, which consist of front discs and rear drums.

Like Asian rivals, Tempo feels tight and solid.

Tempo for 1992 offers new V-6 performance and fresh exterior styling for the sporty GLS. Standard on 1992 GLS models and optional on the GL and LX series, the 140-horsepower, 3.0-liter V-6 adds a new performance dimension to the Tempo line. Inside, there are twin bucket seats up front and a bench in back that will hold up to three adults. Cloth upholstery covers the seats and front bucket seats recline. If you're a driver who's strapped for cash but enjoys the taste of sporty action, take a long look at this Ford.

Doors shut soundly, mechanical elements function smoothly, and the total effect seems to be one of getting on down the road efficiently.

Inside, there are twin bucket seats up front and a bench in back that will hold up to three adults. Cloth upholstery covers the seats and front bucket seats recline.

Tempo's dashboard presents an impressive design in ergonomic efficiency for ideal positioning of all dials and knobs and controls.

Instruments include a coolant temperature gauge and when you step up past base Tempo GL you'll earn a tachometer and trip odometer, too.

The base Tempo GL coupe and sedan provide a fair amount of standard features, like intermittent wipers, tinted glass and an AM-FM radio system.

The next level for the sedan leads to Tempo LX, the luxury option.

Features range from power door locks to a tilt steering wheel, illuminated entry, remote releases for fuel door and decklid, power mirrors, seatback pockets, a cargo tiedown net in the trunk and floormats.

Also included in the upgrade to LX is a touring suspension and performance-rated tires.

The ultimate Tempo goes by the letters, GLS.

If you're a driver who's strapped for cash but enjoys the taste of sporty action, take a long look at this Ford.

First, that V6 is included in the GLS package, along with the manual gear box.

Then comes some sporty performance gear, such as a sport-rigged front suspension, rear stabilizer bar and wider R-rated 15-inch tires mounted on alloy wheels.

Driver's front bucket seats also receive the sport treatment, with firmer bolsters and lumbar adjustment.

A rear spoiler and fog lights boost the exterior appearance to further that sport image.

Then, inside, Tempo GLS adds air conditioning and a cassette tape deck to the sound system. A leather-wrapped steering wheel is also provided.

While a driver's-side airbag does not appear on the list of standard safety features for GLS or other versions of Tempo, at least it is available optionally.

Other Tempos use those motorized shoulder belts for front-seat riders.

One item that does not appear on Tempo's list of options is an anti-lock brake system, but adding this safety feature would probably push the price beyond reach for Tempo's primary market targets.

Drive Tempo, particularly the new version rigged with V6 power, and you'll see why its price-effective performance keeps this Ford in best-seller ranks year after year.

Buick redesign produces sleeker Skylark Gran Sport coupe

By Ann M. Job
Associated Press

Formality is out. Fun is in.

That's the message in Buick's redesigned 1992 Skylark Gran Sport coupe.

Sleeker and less boxy than the previous Skylark model, the 1992 Gran Sport coupe is a decided improvement over its bland predecessor.

You won't find a single flat body panel on this car, company officials boast. You will find a stylish dashboard and a lengthy list of standard features including antilock brakes, power door-locks and rear-seat headrests.

"We tried to design Skylark as if it were one continuous form," said Wayne Kady, chief of the Buick exterior design studio for Skylark.

"There is some family resemblance to other Buick models — but Skylark mostly goes its own way."

Even teen-agers stopped to gawk at the new top-of-the-line Gran Sport offered for testing; they seemed dumbstruck by both the bright aquamarine metallic color and the fact the car carried a Buick Skylark badge.

The 3.3-liter, multiport fuel-injected V-6 worked smoothly with the three-speed automatic even on up-and-down mountain highways. There was no jerking or distracting shift noises during a two-hour highway drive, much of it on cruise control.

The Gran Sport coupe's V-6 produces a maximum 160 horsepower at 5,200 revolutions per minute; torque is a maximum 185 pound-feet at 2,000 rpm. In both categories, the car outperforms competitors such as the Honda Accord, which has a four-cylinder engine, and Dodge Spirit, with its optional V-6.

The V-6 is standard on the Gran Sport coupe. On lesser Skylark models, it's an option that's worth every penny.

Fuel economy doesn't suffer too much from the bigger engine, with ratings of 19 miles a gallon in the city and 29 mpg on the highway.

The car comes with standard adjustable suspension. In some autos, this feature — where the driver selects suspension settings that electronically adjust the shock absorbers or damping rates at the four wheels — doesn't seem to change the ride of the car much.

But you can notice the difference in the Skylark when switching from the "soft" cushioned ride to "sport" for a firmer ride. The car handled well in most typical maneuvers, especially in the "sport" mode where body roll was limited.

Other interior highlights include the most standard features ever put on a compact Buick. They include antilock brakes, full trunk trim and manual remote trunk and fuel-door releases.

The Gran Sport has even more standard equipment, including the changeable suspension, 16-inch Eagle GA touring blackwall tires on aluminum wheels, leather-wrapped steering wheel and shift lever, and unique, newly patented bucket seats covered in both cloth and leather that are eminently comfortable, even on long, fatiguing trips.

Disneyland offers jobs to hundreds of LA youth

By Sara Rimer
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — When Disneyland came two weeks ago to the First AME Church in South-Central Los Angeles to hold interviews for 200 summer jobs, it was a goodwill gesture born of the riots.

When more than 600 young men and women, many in coats and ties or dresses, showed up, the Disney officials were taken aback.

America has been bombarded with television images of the youth of South Central Los Angeles: throwing bricks, looting stores, beating up innocent motorists. The Disneyland staff who interviewed the job applicants, ages 17 to 22, found a different neighborhood.

"They were wonderful kids, outstanding kids," said Greg Albrecht, a spokesman for Disneyland. "We didn't know they were there." Nor, Albrecht added, had they known that the young people of South-Central Los Angeles would be so eager to work at Disneyland.

Joe Fox, a spokesman for the First AME Church, said that had there been time to better publicize the Disneyland jobs, thousands would have applied. "People just want to work, period," he said. With hundreds of small businesses destroyed during the riots, jobs are harder to find than ever.

One of the 600 who wanted to work at Disneyland was Olivia Miles, at 18 the youngest of seven children of a nurse's aide and a disabled roofer. "My friend Lakesha's mother told us Disneyland was hiring," said Miss Miles, who has worked at McDonald's and Popeye's since she was 15. "I said: 'Disneyland! C'mon, let's go!' "

MISS MILES WILL graduate on June 30 from one of South-Central Los Angeles's public high schools, where she has earned mostly As and Bs and was the co-captain of the drill team. Next fall, she will attend Grambling University in Louisiana.

Her high school, Washington, has 2,600 students; 70 percent are black, 30 per cent are Hispanic. The principal, Marguerite LaMotte, says that as impressive as Olivia Miles is, she is not exceptional. "I have a lot of Olivia's," she said. Indeed, 118 seniors plan to attend four-year colleges and 131 will go to two-year colleges.

The world knows about the gang members; estimates put the number at 100,000 across Los Angeles County, and last year there were 771 gang-related homicides. No one has tried to count the young people like Olivia Miles. They are among the invisible people of South-Central Los Angeles.

In some ways, Miss Miles is just another high school senior. She admires Bill Cosby and Oprah Winfrey. She enjoys reading books by Maya Angelou. And shopping. She loves soft-spoken, 17-year-old Damon Sewell, the defensive football captain at South-Central Los Angeles's Hawthorne High School, who will go on to Grambling with her.

MISS MILES AND Sewell and their friends who live in the neighborhood pay a terrible price because of geography. They have to worry about simply staying alive. They can't even get dressed in the morning without thinking: red and blue are gang colors; wearing them is dangerous.

"The neighborhood is famous now," Miss Miles said on Saturday as she and Sewell gave a tour of the devastation. "Why did it have to be famous for a riot?"

Getting ahead despite enormous obstacles is the story of the Miles family. Her parents, Aubrey and Willie Mae Miles, grew up in the South and migrated to Los Angeles. They started their lives together in an apartment in Watts and eventually bought a two-bedroom house on 65th Street, in the heart of South-Central Los Angeles.

Shirley has a job in a school cafeteria. Cynthia is a mail carrier. Jacqueline is a cashier at Dodger Stadium. William is a custodian at police headquarters. Masad drives a school bus. Olivia visited Disneyland once, when she was 8.

Olivia Miles is tall and slim and walks with her head held high. "My mama tells me: 'Be the best of everything; be proud, be black, be beautiful,' " she said.

MISS MILES KNEW some white people when her family lived briefly in Long Beach, but that was years ago. She says she wishes there were white students at her high school. "I want to learn about different cultures," she said. She believes a job at Disneyland will give her that chance.

Aubrey Miles, who is 45, says he has taken pains to tell his daughter that there are good white people. They saved his life, he told her. He was putting a roof on an office building seven years ago, when a vat of hot tar exploded. He was severely burned.

"The guys on the job, who were white, helped me," he said. "I was on the ground, on fire. They put the fire out."

Miles was speaking by telephone from Gautier, Miss. He and his wife moved there last year to care for Mrs. Miles's mother. Olivia remained in Los Angeles with her sister Shirley so she could graduate with her friends.

By last September, she and Sewell were already talking about the prom. It was set for May 1 in Long Beach. To save money for the big night, Sewell, whose father was recently laid off from his machinist's job at McDonnell-Douglas, worked as many hours at McDonald's as he could get.

Two days before the prom, Miss Miles still needed shoes. After school, she caught the bus to the Payless store at Crenshaw Plaza. It was April 29, the day the four policemen who beat Rodney G. King were acquitted.

"THIS LADY ON the bus told me, 'Baby, you better hurry up and get in the house,' " she said. "I said, 'Why, what's going on?' She said, 'The verdict was not guilty.' "

Miss Miles bought her shoes — "two pairs for $24.99" — and went home. The prom was postponed because of the riots. Watching the

Voters take issue with Bush's, Clinton's cookies

NEW YORK (AP) — Finally. An issue voters can really chew over.

This is big. This is a true measure of a family's value in a year when family values have taken over the presidential campaign:

Family Circle magazine requested recipes from Hillary Clinton and Barbara Bush to publish in the July issue so readers could vote their favorite.

"Obviously, we were responding to some extent to the great furor over whether Hillary Clinton bakes cookies at all and whatever that is supposed to represent," said Jacqueline Leo, editor in chief.

Mrs. Clinton — lawyer, wife of Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton and mother — was chastised and then apologized for remarking a few months back that she wasn't about to stay home and "bake cookies and serve tea."

She does bake, she said. And now America can judge her recipe.

So where does the Perot ingredient get mixed in?

Family Circle didn't ask for Margot Perot's recipe. Leo explained, "We just decided she orders in."

Even without equal time, there is a serious intention behind the "National Bipartisan Bake-Off" — to show "how silly we could all be if we focus on the wrong things," Leo said.

But since you asked, perhaps there is something to be gleaned from two little lists of ingredients and some simple directions.

First off, neither recipe is likely to give Mrs. Fields a run for her money. Both lack nuts, ginger, cinnamon or other innovation.

Mrs. Clinton's recipe, however, might be considered more democratic: It calls for vegetable shortening — cheaper than butter — and rolled oats, which stretches the dough to serve more people.

The first lady — whose cookies closely resemble the traditional Toll House variety — uses butter, which, depending on your outlook, makes her recipe homier or more upscale.

As for the Perot cookie, the public has been forced to wait for word about Ross Perot's official entrance in the race. Must it also must wait for his wife's recipe?

Perot Petition Committee spokeswoman Tracy French said she's eaten Mrs. Perot's cookies. "They're very good."

OK. So where's the recipe? French said it might be a family secret, and a spokeswoman for Mrs. Perot said she "probably is not interested" in responding to a request for her recipe.

Family Circle will publish readers' preferences in November. But while the bake-off is a bit of a prank, the magazine takes the debate about American family values seriously, Leo said.

"We are in many ways the arbitrators of family values, and we've been watching this whole thing with great interest," she said. "The idea of family values being attributed to a political party is an oxymoron, in my opinion."
