Sweltering state to get federal aid

By Michael Holmes
Associated Press

AUSTIN — The blistering temperatures and parching drought baking Texas brought federal help Thursday, along with pleas from state leaders for Texans to save water and check on their neighbors.

The heat-related death toll rose to 88 with Fort Worth medical examiners saying hyperthermia killed a 64-year-old man at his home. The weather also is blamed for $1.5 billion in agricultural damage and more than 6,600 fires, prompting the Forest Service to say it will begin training prison inmates as firefighters.

"Texas heat has become a deadly furnace. Scorching temperatures and the ongoing lack of rain have cost lives, livestock and livelihoods," Gov. George W. Bush said. "The heat and drought pose an ongoing threat of fires and stress on our water supplies and utilities. "Everywhere I go, it's the main question on people's minds."

President Clinton on Thursday declared all 254 Texas counties eligible for disaster assistance, making federal aid available to farmers whose crops have been damaged by drought.

The president also included Texas among 11 Southern and Western states eligible for $100 million in emergency funds to help pay for air conditioners, fans and other means of relief.

Bush said his office will provide $1 million in emergency money to help more than 10,000 Texans pay utility bills and to purchase portable air conditioning units for the elderly and poor.

"In times of human crisis we have an obligation to act," Clinton said in Washington.

Temperatures topped 100 for the 18th consecutive day in the Dallas-Fort Worth area and the forecast calls for more of the same through Monday, although counties near the Red River could peak in the upper 90s.

"There was a cold front moving down into Oklahoma and there was some hope it would actually get south of the Red River, but it doesn't look like it will," said Doug Cain, a National Weather Service meteorologist.

In San Antonio, where the midafternoon temperature was 104 degrees, 13 Mexican immigrants were rescued Thursday from a sealed trailer-truck container on a railroad car. The men, all in their early 20s, were treated for dehydration, but none required hospitalization, the Immigration and Naturalization Service said.

McCurry leaving

President Clinton announces on Thursday in the briefing room at the White House in Washington that Deputy Press Secretary Joe Lockhart will eventually succeed White House Press Secretary Mike McCurry, right. McCurry is leaving the White House after three years of explaining his boss' policies and actions with a wry wit that President Clinton declared "has set the standard" for future press secretaries. McCurry will go back to the private sector and Lockhart, 39, will run the press office.

Dow down 196

NEW YORK — Stocks plunged nearly 200 points Thursday, extending a rapid retreat from record highs, as aircraft maker Boeing joined a sudden chorus of major companies with discouraging profit news. The Dow Jones industrial average fell 195.93 to 8,932.98, about 400 points — 4.3 percent — below last Friday's record close of 9,337.97 and its first finish below 9,000 since July 1.

Wildlife answer to drought: eat farmers' cotton

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Foraging wildlife are leaving the dry rangeland and heading for those scarce green cotton fields for food and survival during the drought.

"Deer, antelopes, rabbits, they're eating this cotton as fast as it will come up," said Mike Denny, who is manager of the Midland Farmers Cooperative. "Those old pastures are burned up, and that cotton is green."

■ Related story/1B

The rabbits, including jackrabbits and cottontails, are making inroads into irrigated cotton fields in the Midland-Midkiff-St. Lawrence areas because dryland cotton is about nil.

"Gary Koonce says that they are eating so much cotton that they've got green ears," Denny said, quoting a Midland farmer who found a bit of humor in the crisis.

Jury finds Rogers guilty of manslaughter in teacher's death

By Rick López
Staff Writer

After three hours of deliberation Thursday, jurors rendered a guilty verdict against Michael Lynn Rogers, who struck and killed a Midland teacher with his pickup and then left her body in a remote cotton field.

Rogers, 28, was convicted of manslaughter in connection with the Aug. 4, 1997 death of Glynda Sue Jones, 51. She taught at Bush Elementary School.

Though Judge George "Jody" Gillis excused a witness whose father had a heart attack that morning, an alternate juror who sat through the trial replaced her.

Jurors had the option of charging Rogers with criminally negligent homicide, a lesser offense, if they thought the man was not aware he put the victim in danger when operating his vehicle.

The jury also concluded that Rogers' pickup was a deadly weapon in this case, which affects his eligibility for parole if he is sentenced to prison. He would have to serve half his time before he's eligible for parole. Traditional cases only require defendants to serve one-third of their jail sentence before eligibility.

According to testimony, Ms. Jones was walking around her Valley View neighborhood when Rogers struck her with his older-model pickup on County Road 1140.

He put the woman in his truck and then drove her around that road. The woman died before he stopped the vehicle. Rogers panicked and then drove the woman to a cotton field about a mile from the accident site, according to testimony.

District Attorney Al Schorre said the defendant passed by seven houses where he could have pulled over and asked for help. That night, Ms. Jones' husband reported her missing when she didn't return by sunset.

Midland County sheriff's deputies found her body in a remote cotton field the next morning. A few hours later, Rogers voluntarily reported to the sheriff's office and turned himself in. He confessed to the accident, though some of the details in his statement were inconsistent with evidence, witnesses testified.

Defense attorney Tom Hirsch said in closing arguments that the accident could have happened to anyone who operates a motor vehicle — not just Rogers.

"During voir dire, all of you admitted to having a momentary lapse when you were driving," Hirsch said. "If you changed the radio dial, answered a cell phone or ran a red light just one time, you could be sitting in Mr. Rogers' chair too."

He reminded jurors that their verdict should not be influenced by the fact that Rogers tried to get rid of the victim's body.

"My client did something so stupid that it's hard to imagine, but it's not against the law," Hirsch said. "Unless you've been in that situation, you don't know what it's like. That's not for you to decide."

HUD review finds inconsistencies in MCHA documents, procedures

■ Federal inspectors say Midland County Housing Authority over-requested $435,863 from HUD. MCHA official denies any fraud or misappropriation of funds occurred.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

A review of operating procedures at the Midland County Housing Authority has left officials there facing a list of concerns from federal inspectors.

The MCHA is responsible for utilizing and distributing federal funding for low-cost housing from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). The board of directors is appointed by the Midland County Commissioner's Court.

A 24-page report was issued by HUD recently, following a May review during which inspectors identified a number of documentation and procedural inconsistencies, which could signify simple paperwork problems or could mean the improper requisitioning of funds — depending on further investigation.

HUD provides funding based on a formula for each person assisted with housing, and the federal review team was unable to balance the documentation of numbers of people assisted with funds requested.

That led them to determine that $435,863 was over-requested from HUD.

"During fiscal year 1997, MCHA grossly over-requisitioned the following funds ...," HUD Director of Public Housing Eileen Rogers states in the report.

"Our auditors say that is not correct," said Medford Owen, chairman of the volunteer board of commissioners for the MCHA.

Owen admits that significant changes in documenting procedures, official policies and procedures need to be changed at the Housing Authority, but he does not believe that any fraud or misappropriation of funds has occurred.

Postoperative radiation for lung cancer may be harmful, study finds

LONDON (AP) — The common practice of exposing lung cancer patients to radiation therapy after surgery may do more harm than good and should not be used routinely, according to a study published Friday.

Many lung cancer patients undergo radiation therapy after surgery to treat any remaining cancer cells. But the results of previous studies examining the effectiveness of the treatment have been contradictory or inconclusive.

In the largest study of its kind, an international team of researchers combined information gathered over the past 30 years in nine studies involving a total of 2,128 lung cancer patients worldwide.

Patients who had been treated with radiation therapy after surgery were 21 percent more likely to die than those who only had surgery, according to the study published in this week's issue of The Lancet, a British medical journal. Researchers are unsure why radiation therapy caused more deaths earlier.

In the largest study of its kind, a team of researchers found that patients who had been treated with radiation therapy after surgery were 21 percent more likely to die than those who only had surgery.

About 900,000 people worldwide are diagnosed with lung cancer every year, according to the World Health Organization.

Dr. Gordon McVie, director general at the Cancer Research Campaign in London and a lung cancer specialist who was not part of the study, said the research was authoritative and important.

"It should be compulsory reading for chief executives of hospitals. In many parts, this is routine treatment. It has been assumed that it was a good idea," he said. "I was unsurprised that radiotherapy didn't prolong survival, but what I'm really concerned about is that it could actually do harm. There is a very clear message here."

The patients in the study had non-small-cell lung cancer, which accounts for 80 percent of all lung cancer cases. A total of 1,056 had surgery and radiotherapy while 1,072 had surgery alone.

The detrimental effect was worst in patients in the early stages of the disease, the study said.

In those with more advanced but still operable lung cancer, the study said radiation therapy did not seem to cause harm although it also did not appear to help.

"The 21 percent relative increase in the risk of death associated with radiotherapy, equivalent to an overall reduction in survival from 55 percent (for surgery alone) to 48 percent (for surgery and radiotherapy) at two years, represents a substantial hazard to these patients," said Lesley Stewart of the Medical Research Council, which led the study.

Researchers concluded that radiation therapy should not be given routinely to patients in the early stage of non-small-cell lung cancer and that its role in the treatment of more advanced stages of the disease "is not clear and may warrant further research."

"There was some hint that it might prevent recurring tumors, but that was heavily outweighed by the ill effects — the increased deaths," Stewart said.

In an independent commentary, also published in The Lancet, Dr. Alistair Munro of Ninewells Hospital in Dundee, Scotland, said post-operative radiotherapy doses are too high and that there are "valuable lessons to be learned" from the Cambridge study.

Vatican tightens rules for conferences of bishops

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II has tightened control of national bishops' organizations, outlining new rules Thursday that may make it difficult for them to intervene on doctrinal issues without the Vatican's consent.

Through the years, national bishops' conferences, an outgrowth of the Second Vatican Council reforms of the 1960s, and their committees have issued pronouncements on a wide range of doctrinal and social issues, including divisive questions such as homosexuality and divorce. Some have drawn Vatican opposition.

From now on, bishops' conferences must unanimously support doctrinal declarations or else receive approval from the Vatican, "which will not give it if the majority requesting it is not substantial," the pope wrote.

Requiring unanimity may effectively hamstring conferences in countries with large numbers of bishops, such as the United States, Brazil and Italy. There are nearly 300 active U.S. bishops.

However, Bishop Anthony M. Pilla, president of the U.S. National Conference of Catholic Bishops, said he welcomed the pope's letter because it clarified a situation under discussion for some years.

The pope made it clear that actions by national bishops' conferences must be in line with the Vatican's position when dealing with "new questions posed by the accelerated social and cultural changes characteristic of present times."

The papal document did not cite specific issues. But Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, a powerful Vatican figure, said at a news conference that a recent letter by U.S. bishops addressed to parents of gay children likely would require unanimous approval should the bishops' conference as a whole seek to adopt it.

The "Always Our Children" letter was approved by the U.S. bishops' conference's administrative board. It advised parents of gay children to put love and support for their sons and daughters before church doctrine that condemns homosexual activity.

The Vatican later asked for several changes in the letter.

Ratzinger, the guardian of Vatican orthodoxy, said it was good the U.S. bishops were "experimenting" with the issue at a level below the full authority of the bishops' conference.

Ratzinger stressed the importance of protecting the views of the minority, saying the "truth is not determined by a majority" vote.

The Vatican was angered by a statement by German bishops calling for divorced and remarried Catholics to be allowed communion. A statement by bishops in New Zealand that referred to the pope as "first among equals" also reportedly drew Vatican ire.

"I find it heartening to reflect that, over the years, our own U.S. conference has been characterized by unanimous or widespread agreement over a range of important issues," Pilla said.

Frightened Serbs tell of capture by guerrillas

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia (AP) — Dazed and exhausted, a group of elderly Serb villagers huddled inside the local Red Cross office Thursday and recounted their experience at the hands of ethnic Albanian rebels.

"Armed Albanians came into the village, killed one villager and loaded seven of us women and eight men aboard a truck," said Darinka Misic, 70. "One man raised his head for a while and got a blow from a rifle butt."

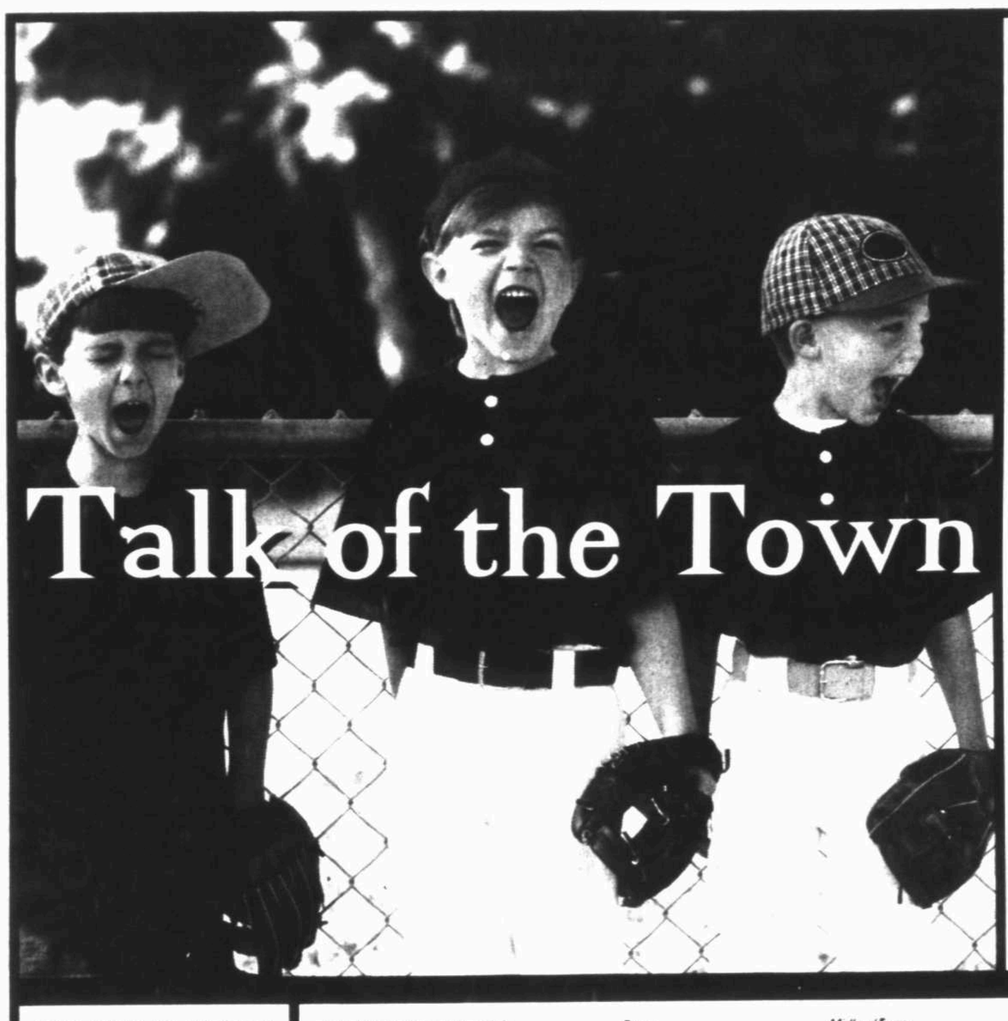

Misic, from a village near Orahovac, was among 35 Serbs including a nun and seven monks who were handed over Wednesday by the Kosovo Liberation Army, which is fighting for independence from Serb-led Yugoslavia.

Most had been captured six days earlier at the start of the rebels' biggest attack in weeks. The battle around Orahovac ended before dawn Wednesday when the KLA retreated.

Hundreds of people have been killed since late February, when Yugoslavia began cracking down on militant separatists among the ethnic Albanians who make up 90 percent of the population in Kosovo province.

The International Red Cross said Thursday that 20,000 people — roughly the town's entire population — had fled the fighting in Orahovac. They include hundreds of Serbs who also ended up in outlying villages.

But many, if not most, of the ethnic Albanian refugees fled to Malisevo, a rebel stronghold 10 miles to the northeast.

Japan's foreign minister tightens grip on lead in prime minister race

TOKYO (AP) — Political old guard favorite Keizo Obuchi bolstered his lead in the race for prime minister, wrapping up his campaign Thursday by pledging to pull Japan out of its worst recession in decades with tax cuts and banking reforms.

The ruling Liberal Democratic Party was to choose a party president Friday from among Obuchi, former Chief Cabinet Secretary Seiroku Kajiyama and Health Minister Junichiro Koizumi. The victor is almost certain to win the premiership in an upcoming Parliament vote.

Surveys of the party showed Obuchi, a former foreign minister, within striking distance of the majority needed to win on a first ballot. If no candidate wins a majority — 208 of the 414 LDP members voting — a run-off will be held immediately.

A win for Obuchi — seen as an LDP loyalist, but not a brilliant innovator — would mark a victory for the party's longtime power brokers over younger dissidents who have called for more dynamic leadership. Discontented voters have been looking for a zealous reformer.

The three candidates laid out their proposals for nursing the economy to health Thursday in nationally televised speeches. Obuchi, 61, portrayed himself as the only choice with the know-how and political backing to get the job done. He also reiterated pledges for a $42.6 billion income tax cut and $70.9 billion in new spending to jump-start economic growth and spur lagging consumption.

AP Photo

Foreign Minister Keizo Obuchi, right, one of three candidates for Friday's ruling Liberal Democratic Party presidential election, acknowledges applause from senior party members prior to a nationally-televised debate at the party headquarters in Tokyo Thursday, one day before the voting. Obuchi, 61, is considered the front-runner in the race to succeed resigning Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto.

Kajiyama, 72, the favorite of the markets for his backing of extensive economic reform, said his administration would aim for 3 percent annual growth — a turnaround for an economy that shrank for the first time in two decades in the fiscal year that ended in March.

"I may stumble along the way, but I will devote my life to economic recovery," he said.

The outspoken Koizumi, 56, a maverick backed by younger dissident lawmakers, vowed to implement drastic reforms of the political system, including cutting the number of Parliament members and government bureaucrats nearly in half.

The three are battling to take over from Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto, who announced last week he was quitting after the LDP was trounced in July 12 elections for the upper house of Parliament. His successor will finish out his term as party president, which ends in September 1999.

A win for Keizo Obuchi would mark a victory for the Liberal Democratic Party's longtime power brokers over younger dissidents.

The winner also will take over a nation in financial and political turmoil.

Japan's most glaring problems are economic. Unemployment is at a record high of 4.1 percent. Bankruptcies are mounting at their fastest rate since the end of World War II and Japanese banks are saddled with $604 billion in bad loans.

In a major blow to the country's economy and ego, U.S. credit rating agency Moody's Investors Service announced Thursday it will review its rating for Japan's government debt — possibly leading to higher borrowing costs for the government and companies.

The sour economy and general fatigue with the way the LDP is running the country were widely seen as the major factors in the party's disastrous showing in the upper house elections.

The campaign has been dominated by the economy — and fear among ruling party lawmakers that they had better change their image in a hurry. Younger lawmakers forced the party to hold a more open race for president instead of choosing a successor behind closed doors.

The candidates fell over each other to take the banner of reform and openly appealed to voters in a string of news conferences, speeches and a TV debate last weekend. The effort doesn't appear to have paid off.

The mass-circulation newspaper Yomiuri reported Thursday that the LDP's approval rating has sunk to an all-time low of 20.8 percent — down significantly from 28.7 percent in June. The poll, of 1,990 people, offered no margin of error.

Tremors jolt Papua New Guinea coast, a week after killer waves

VANIMO, Papua New Guinea (AP) — Aftershocks rattled the northern coast of Papua New Guinea on Thursday, nearly a week after waves from an undersea earthquake swept ashore and killed at least 1,200 people.

The tremors were not strong enough to create more deadly tidal surges, and relief workers on the Pacific island nation were able to continue treating hundreds of injured villagers, many suffering gangrene.

About 6,000 of the 8,000 to 10,000 people who used to live in the 18-mile stretch of coast hit by the tsunami last Friday remained missing and were feared dead.

The gruesome task of body recovery and disposal continued Thursday. At least 30 bodies were found washed up on a beach in the Indonesian province of Irian Jaya, about 25 miles west of the disaster zone, local police said, on condition of anonymity.

Surgeons operated on 13 people, amputating seven limbs, including the left leg of an 8-year-old boy, who may lose his right leg as well.

"Some of those people would have died today if they hadn't been brought here and operated on," said surgeon Maj. Paul Taylor, who with his colleagues operated on the injured throughout the night.

Most injuries happened when the tsunami flung people against trees or debris, fracturing bones and causing lacerations. Many people were killed on the scene, while others died in the jungle before medical help could reach them.

Earlier fears that disease may break out caused by people drinking water contaminated by rotting corpses have not been borne out, said Squadron Leader Tony Keeble, an Australian medical officer in charge of air evacuations from the stricken area.

"They are sensible people. They know what is clean water and what is not," he said. "Now, they are pretty much left with the medical problems that they deal with every day."

In the remote jungle region, conditions such as malaria, skin infections, diarrhea, parasitic worms and pneumonia are endemic, he said.

Chinese general calls for end to army business

BEIJING (AP) — A senior general on Thursday threw his weight behind a bold drive to force China's army out of business, telling his officers they have no choice but to go along.

The order for the military to shut down its vast commercial empire was issued earlier this week by President Jiang Zemin as part of a widening government campaign against smuggling.

One of the order's first victims appeared Thursday to be the Hong Kong stock market, just one of the multitude of areas where the People's Liberation Army has investments.

The military has bought heavily into Hong Kong firms linked to China. The market index of these so-called "red chips" plunged 4.9 percent Thursday, partly on fears that the military would have to dump its shares.

Another index of "H-shares" issued by Chinese companies in Hong Kong tumbled 7.7 percent.

The order to close down military commerce was a bold stroke for Jiang, given his lack of a military background, the political clout of the army and the breadth of its business interests — ranging from karaoke halls to cellular phone networks — that have earned it the nickname PLA Inc.

But Jiang won support Thursday from Gen. Fu Quanyou, the PLA's chief of General Staff, who ordered "every unit and every cadre" to implement Jiang's decree "without conditions."

Speaking at a meeting of the PLA General Staff's Communist Party committee, Fu also ordered the formation of a special force to investigate smuggling in army ranks, the official Xinhua News Agency reported.

"No matter what unit, what level of official or what person is involved — they all have to be investigated to the full," Fu said. "There must be absolutely no appeasement, no soft hands. The black sheep must be resolutely eliminated."

Calling the smuggling campaign an "important political task," Fu also said the army must provide communication systems, motorized transport and other equipment for use in the crackdown.

(From 1A)

Also in San Antonio, about 2,000 people lined up at a Salvation Army chapter for free electric fans, but there were only 900 to be had. Last week, the chapter gave away nearly 3,000 fans.

The latest heat victim, Burl Swan, was found dead in his living room on Tuesday. Tarranty County medical examiners said heat is suspected of being a factor in seven other recent deaths still being investigated.

The agency gave away almost 3,000 fans to needy residents on July 17 before running out.

In Austin, leaders of the state's fire-fighting, water, health, agriculture and utility agencies outlined measures being taken to cope.

■ Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry said farmers and ranchers already have lost $1.5 billion, creating a total economic impact now estimated at $4.5 billion.

The state's total agricultural receipts are about $13 billion a year, and Perry said more of that is threatened if the drought continues into the winter.

Federal funds are being sought to help pay an additional $136 million in feed costs for livestock.

"The numbers are rather staggering as of today," he said, adding that this year's losses already include 70 percent to 80 percent of forage, 50 percent of the cotton crop and $250 million of corn.

■ State Health Commissioner Reyn Archer said state and local health departments are warning people of the dangers of heatstroke and the need to move to air conditioned spaces. VISTA volunteers and others are helping spread that word.

"Fans don't help above 90 degrees and 35 percent humidity. So that pretty much gets rid of the Texas climate. We need air conditioners in Texas," Archer said.

■ The state's environmental agency said water supplies are adequate in most areas of the state, except the lower Rio Grande Valley

But Barry McBee, chairman of the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission, said distribution is a problem and urged all to save as much water as they can.

"It's the one thing everyone can do," McBee said. "Every homeowner, every business in our state needs to save water."

■ The Texas Forest Service said that since May 1, 6,600 fires have been fought on more than 286,000 acres. But only four houses, four mobile homes and 44 vehicles have been lost, and only one firefighter has been injured, said Jim Hull, executive director of the service.

"The wildfire conditions across this state equal anything that occurred in Florida," Hull said.

He said firefighters from Texas and 36 other states have worked 10 million person hours so far, saving more than $50 million in property.

Battling the heat

The current suffocating heat wave which has gripped much of the country for weeks has already been blamed for more than 130 deaths. Age is a major factor in the ability to adapt to rising temperatures but some deaths occur because people simply don't consider the danger of heat. Here's a look at some of the dangers and recommendations from the National Weather Service for getting through it.

Heat Index

AIR TEMPERATURE (°F) \ Percent relative humidity	40%	45	50	55	60	65	70	75	80	85	90	95	100

Apparent temperatures

Heat and the body
People suffer heat-related illnesses when the body's temperature control system is overloaded. In extreme heat, the body's core temperature rises, which can lead to the following:

Heat index	Possible heat disorders
130° F or higher	Heatstroke/sunstroke highly likely
105-130° F	Sunstroke, heat cramps or heat exhaustion likely; heatstroke possible
90-105° F	Sunstroke, heat cramps, heat exhaustion possible
80-90° F	Fatigue

Fighting the heat

■ Spend as much time as possible in cool surroundings. If air conditioning is unavailable, use fans or open windows to circulate the air. Keep blinds closed to prevent direct sunlight from entering.

■ Take cool baths or showers. Cool water can remove body heat 25 times faster than cool air.

■ Wear lightweight, light-colored, loose-fitting clothing.

■ Drink fruit juices or sports drinks, which can help replenish lost salts and minerals. Water and fruit juices are preferable to soft drinks, coffee or alcohol, which can further dehydrate you.

Because of the hot weather, he said firefighters are able to battle blazes for only one to two hours, rather than their normal 12-hour shifts. "I'm very concerned about firefighter fatigue," he said. "We've been going at this now for almost three months. And we're going to be at it for a lot longer."

Sixty-two prison inmates will undergo initial training to help fight the fires, Hull said, adding that the total could reach 300.

■ Public Utility Commission Chairman Pat Wood said utility companies are providing deferred billing options to keep cool air pumping regardless of customers' ability to pay their bills immediately.

FORAGE: Farmer says he had to replant about 60 acres

kiff-St. Lawrence area, farmer-rancher Billy Eggemeyer noted that deer and rabbits, driven out of rangeland by hunger and lack of forage, are feasting on the cotton plants.

"I put in 260 acres of drip irrigation this year, and it's the only green thing for about five miles," Eggemeyer said, "and they've worked me over pretty good — jackrabbits and deer."

Eggemeyer said that already he has had to replant about 60 of those acres in cotton due to the hunger of the starving animals.

"I guess in the last two months, we've probably killed 4,000 or 5,000 rabbits" on that acreage in the middle of 20 sections of rangeland, he said. "They're out there any night you want to go out there and shoot them. They just keep coming, the cottontails and jackrabbits. Now that this cotton is getting bigger, they are eating all the leaves off of it and the bark."

The rabbits eat the cotton in the relative cool of the night. In the heat of the day, "they burrow out little holes in the shade" of mesquite shrubs out in the pastures, Eggemeyer said. But even the mesquites are undergoing stress from the drought and are beginning to die.

"We can put up with the drought, I guess," Eggemeyer said, "but when you've got rabbits and deer and everything else eating what little crop we have, it's just that much worse."

The drought has forced Eggemeyer to sell off his livestock, about a hundred head of cattle. "I used to run a 100-head of momma cows, and they all left on trucks about six week ago. I have no stock; I couldn't afford to feed them. Until it rains, it (the livestock price) is going to keep going down because everybody is liquidating."

This year is the fourth or fifth year in the 1990s when the rainfall has been less than five inches in his farming area, Eggemeyer said. At mid-1998, he has gauged about 1.5 inches of rain on his land. Normal annual rainfall in the Glasscock-Midland-Reagan-Upton area ranges from 12 to 15 inches.

Though the St. Lawrence cotton-growing area normally is heavily irrigated, even irrigated cotton is suffering from the dearth of rain and the dropping watertable. "Last year, we ginned probably 110,000 bales of cotton," Eggemeyer said. "This year, we are going to be lucky to get 25,000 bales" off 120,000 to 130,000 acres of farmland.

Eggemeyer said that the wildlife are "eating our livelihood plumb up." Although the rabbits can be controlled to some degree by hunting, "We can't do anything with (the deer)" except try to shoo them away. As far as he knows, Eggemeyer said that his cotton hasn't been bothered by pronghorn antelopes. "I haven't seen any," he said.

For lack of forage, the fawns are starving to death out on the range, and many of the deer, he figured, "are not going to make it through the winter. There's going to be another massive deer die-off like there was three or four years ago.

"It's going to be a long winter," Eggemeyer said. "No grass, no hay, no nothing unless it starts raining."

Scott Davis, a Texas Parks & Wildlife Department game warden in the Midland area, said that "anywhere where we have substantial deer populations mixed in with the farming, it will pose a problem, a conflict there."

Shooting rabbits is legal year-round, day or night, "if you've got a hunting license and permission to be on that land," he said.

"The drought makes it tougher on the farmers because the deer and everything like the cotton," Davis said. "But it's not near the problem whenever there's good range conditions."

Midkiff-area rancher T.O. Midkiff noted the scarcity of green vegetation, especially rangeland grass, in his niche of West Texas. About 20 or 30 cottontails have moved in close to his ranch house because he waters the front yard there.

"Green is what they are after," he said. "We've got a few quails, thank goodness. They are finally hatching out."

Of the encroachment of rabbits on cotton fields, Midkiff figured that "You can shoot one, and 20 will come to his funeral, jackrabbits mainly. The cottontail is about as bad."

Kermit and Frances Lewis, who farm cotton in the Valley View community just southeast of Midland, haven't been plagued at all by rabbits, deer, or pronghorn antelopes in their fields.

"Being dryland farmers, we didn't get any (cotton)," Mrs. Lewis said. "Ours has already been zeroed out, and we've done got our insurance check."

MCHA: Workers asked board to fire executive director

(From 1A)

The board has not had a meeting since the report was delivered, but it will be addressing changes called for in the report, Owen said.

In a June meeting of the board of commissioners, MCHA employees cited grievances and asked the MCHA board of commissioners to terminate the executive director.

In the official report from the investigation, Ms. Rogers states "the Authority's management has a considerable need for improvement and lacks sound administrative management practices."

"The Housing Authority has terminated approximately 12 employees. The employees were terminated without pertinent supporting documentation to the employee or to the personnel file... It also appears that the terminated employees were not given an opportunity to grieve the termination," Ms. Rogers states.

"One person has a case load of 389 families. Your staff is to be commended on a job well done," she said.

MCHA Executive Director Thelma Gibbs did not immediately return telephone calls regarding this report.

Ms. Rogers pointed out that the MCHA's current financial consultant is a former employee of the firm hired to perform the MCHA's financial audit, which she called a conflict of interest.

"A major decision must be made regarding the position of the Financial Officer. Should MCHA dismiss this employee because of the conflict of interest and requisition a new report in the correct manner? Or should MCHA develop a written contract with this individual? Or should MCHA hire them as an employee and provide them with the same benefits as other MCHA employees?" she said.

Continuing with highlights from the lists of concerns, Ms. Rogers pointed out that "an application fee from $20 - $30 is being charged to applicants by Ranchland and the Lakes Apartments, owned by your non-profit (corporation) Vision 2000. The fee is an undue burden to low-income families. Processing applications is part of the day-to-day business operations."

Vision 2000 is a non-profit corporation that owns Ranchland and The Lakes apartments and, while this corporation receives HUD funding for renting to HUD clients, it is not part of MCHA, Owen explained.

"The HUD review team was informed that Housing Authority owned vehicles were sold to the non-profit corporation, Vision 2000. No conclusive documentation was presented that actually disclosed this transfer. Until valid documentation is provided that reflects the sale of these vehicles to Vision 2000, the vehicles are considered to still be owned by the Housing Authority," Ms. Rogers said.

Again, according to Owen, this is believed to be due to confusion between the HUD inspectors and MCHA staff during the review process and can be cleared up when the proper documentation is provided.

Other highlights of the report include:

■ About $500 was spent on a Christmas party for MCHA employees that apparently came from the wrong account.

■ About $52,000 in HUD funds that was intended to reimburse landlords for retroactive rents cannot be adequately documented.

■ Seven of nine housing units inspected failed, most for such things as a defective door knob, debris in the yard or an automobile on blocks beside the unit. Some units, however, had multiple problems including plumbing, electrical and structural deficiencies.

■ The board failed to comply with all regulations under the Texas Open Meetings Act, regarding the documentation of executive sessions.

■ no official policy relating to travel vouchers from MCHA staff.

■ drug testing of employees conducted without an official policy regarding this procedure, as well as random testing of employees that are not mentioned under the categories of public employees that must be randomly tested.

■ no official procurement policy.

■ failure to criminally screen clients for ineligibility criteria.

■ the private use of a vehicle owned by MCHA by the executive director without including this as a benefit under federal guidelines.

Owen said the board will see that all of these concerns are addressed in time.

"Some of these things are short term, but it's going to take us some time to digest the report and decide what to do," he said. "We certainly intend to remedy all of (these concerns)," he said.

Meeting all of the myriad federal requirements placed on the Housing Authority has always been a problem, Owen said. The former executive director had been terminated prior to Owen's appointment to serve on the board, he said.

GUILTY: Crime punishable by two to twenty years in prison

(From 1A)

However, Schorre said that Rogers hid the victim's body to protect himself from arrest and not because he was nervous.

"He cleaned the truck, washed his clothes and tried to hide from (authorities) because he knew what he did was in violation of the law," Schorre said. "If you're in that situation, you're going to call police and tell them you did something. He hid evidence, and that's not what should be done by the average person."

Schorre reminded the jury that an expert in accident reconstruction said the evidence found in the case does not support Rogers' claim that the woman darted out in front of his truck, but she was too far into his path when he braked.

"All the evidence in this case supports that Ms. Jones was walking facing the on-coming traffic," Schorre said. "He just made all this stuff up to put him in a good light."

According to the Texas Penal Code, manslaughter is punishable by two to 20 years in prison. The sentencing phase of Rogers' trial begins at 9 a.m. today in 142nd District Court.

Guatemalans surprised by arrest of priest in bishop's killing

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — When a senior Guatemalan bishop and prominent human rights crusader was killed with a concrete block in his garage three months ago, many suspected the right-wing death squads that played a chilling role in the nation's long and bloody civil war.

Instead, officials Thursday were questioning a fellow priest.

Police handcuffed Rev. Mario Orantes Najera and hauled him to court Wednesday, taking him in for questioning in the death of Bishop Juan Gerardi. Also arrested was a church cook, Margarita Lopez. The possible motive was unclear.

The stocky priest with a receding hairline looked calm as he was escorted into the building, and looked straight ahead. He arrived at court in a police pickup truck, accompanied by officers wearing bullet proof vests.

"I am very pained by the way the father was arrested," complained one woman, a number of devout Catholics who called into local radio talk shows on Thursday morning. "He shouldn't be treated like a high risk criminal."

As he entered the judge's office, Orantes told reporters that the allegations were "absurd." He noted Wednesday that officials had earlier said he was not under suspicion, though he had found the bishop's body.

Investigating judge Isaias Figueroa Medina imposed a 10-day gag order on comments about the case by all involved — leaving the evidence and possible motive murky. He also silenced the church's human rights office, once headed by Gerardi, which had been increasingly critical about the handling of the case.

AP Photo

Father Mario Leonel Orantes Najera waits to see a judge at a courthouse in Guatemala City, Guatemala, on Thursday. He is being held in connection with the murder of Bishop Juan Gerardi who was killed last April.

Until the arrest, public suspicion had fallen heavily on members of the right-wing death squads or military units accused of wide spread killings in a church human rights report Gerardi issued.

The report found the army and civilian self-defense patrols it organized were to blame for about 80 percent of the 150,000 deaths and 50,000 disappearances in Guatemala's 36-year civil war, which ended in 1996.

Two days after the report was issued in April, Gerardi was found battered to death in the garage outside his residence at the San Sebastian church. Returning home from his regular Sunday dinner with his sister and her family, Gerardi's skull was crushed with a cement block as he stepped out of his sedan.

Orantes was an assistant parish priest at San Sebastian and also lived at the residence.

Pope John Paul II called the killing "a violent act that threatens peace." London-based Amnesty International said the killing "confirms a fact: Guatemala, at present, continues in the past."

Earlier this month, Ronalth Ochaeta, who worked under Gerardi at the human rights office, said two military officers may have been involved in the killing.

On Thursday, confusion continued. Angry complaints to local radio talk denouncing the arrest seemed blunted by uncertainty about what evidence was involved.

The judge said the arrest was based on evidence produced by prosecutors, who are independent both of her own office and of the police.

The only other man held in the case was Carlos Enrique Vielman, 24. He says he is innocent and has not been formally charged.

Court finds former minister guilty in death-squad trial

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Spain's Supreme Court has found a former interior minister and 11 others guilty for their part in a botched 1983 kidnapping attributed to a death squad that targeted Basque separatists, newspapers reported Thursday.

Jose Luis Barrionuevo, interior minister from 1982 to 1988, was found guilty of kidnapping and misuse of public funds and will be sentenced to 13 years in prison, according to El Pais and other papers.

The trial, which badly damaged the long-ruling Socialist Party and contributed to its defeat in 1996 elections, dealt with the kidnapping of a French businessman as part of an alleged government "dirty war" on the Basque separatist group ETA.

The former minister was accused of organizing the abduction and of helping to finance it.

The other defendants included the minister's former deputy, Rafael Vera, security officials and police.

The abduction of businessman Segundo Marey is thought to have been the first operation of the Anti-terrorist Liberation Groups, or GAL, which killed 27 people in a campaign in southern France against ETA.

Marey was held for 10 days and then released after his kidnappers realized he was not the ETA hitman they were hunting.

Eight of the death squad's victims proved to have no ties to ETA, which has killed nearly 800 people since 1968 in its campaign for Basque independence.

The prosecution contended that the death squad was organized by former Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez's government. Gonzalez told the court that the trial was part of a plot to discredit him and his Socialist Party.

He has consistently denied that his governments, which ruled Spain from 1982 until 1996, ran the death squad.

Barrionuevo and Vera are the only defendants who denied all charges. The other defendants in the 22-day trial admitted taking part in the kidnapping and said it was authorized by Barrionuevo and Vera. Some testified that Gonzalez knew what was going on.

The Socialist Party leadership issued a statement Thursday reiterating the innocence of Barrionuevo and Vera while refusing to comment on any unofficial verdict.

Barrionuevo's wife, Esperanza Hulamo, was more forthcoming. "It is tremendously unjust," she said. "It destroys his political past, present and future."

The newspaper said the verdict would be officially released next week, even though it had not been expected until September.

Court officials refused to comment on the reports Thursday.

Castro calls hospitalization report a lie

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Cuban President Fidel Castro said Thursday he was in good health and ridiculed a newspaper report he was hospitalized last year.

"This is a lie from head to toe, absolutely false, crude and stupid," the Notimex news agency quoted Castro as saying. He spoke to a group of foreign reporters late Wednesday and early Thursday.

The Nuevo Herald of Miami reported Sunday that a woman it identified as a former surgeon at a Havana hospital said Castro was hospitalized from Oct. 22-28 for treatment of hypertensive encephalopathy, a brain disease.

> 'This is a lie from head to toe, absolutely false, crude and stupid.'
> — Cuban President Fidel Castro, as quoted in Mexican news report

Castro was quoted as saying he had never heard of the disease or the woman cited in the report, Elizabeth Trujillo.

"The woman who says she is a surgeon is not even a doctor and has never worked in any hospital," Castro was quoted as saying. "Someone fooled the Nuevo Herald, and it fooled millions of people."

The story already had been questioned by U.S. officials in Washington, as well as by reports noting that Castro had met with the Vatican's top spokesman at the time he was allegedly hospitalized.

Notimex said Castro summoned reporters to the highly unusual meeting, which followed the close of a Cuban National Assembly session, in part to denounce the Nuevo Herald report.

Notimex said Castro gave the reporters a three-page preliminary report from an official investigation into the allegations that he was hospitalized.

According to that report, Trujillo left nursing school before graduating and worked as a secretary at a research center before leaving Cuba for Colombia with her husband in 1995.

Activists protest

Arafat rejects summit offer; talks stall

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat rejected a request Thursday by Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu for a meeting and has suspended further talks, his aides said.

Negotiators "have reached a deadlock" that will not be broken unless Israel accepts a U.S. proposal for a gradual withdrawal of Israeli troops from 13 percent of the West Bank, said Arafat aide Nabil Abourdeneh.

Netanyahu sent a representative to Arafat's office in Gaza Thursday to request a summit between the two leaders. But Arafat aide Ahmed Tibi said no meeting will take place unless Israel accepts the proposal.

"A meeting between Arafat and Netanyahu could take place after the two parties reach an agreement on the American initiative, but until now the Israelis are rejecting the initiative," Tibi said.

The two leaders last met in October.

Both sides have appealed to the United States for help. But the Clinton administration says Israel and the Palestinians should try harder to reach agreement on a troop pullback without U.S. mediation.

The Palestinians have accepted the U.S. plan, but Netanyahu has balked at the scope of the pullback and has demanded better Palestinian security guarantees.

'If the Palestinians have good will ... then it's a matter of very little time before we can complete an interim agreement.'
— Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu

The Palestinians have said that in three direct negotiating sessions arranged by the United States this week, Israel did not raise any new ideas and that there was no point in resuming the talks.

The talks were widely seen as a last chance for Israel and the Palestinians to reach agreement on a troop pullback.

Netanyahu's coalition chairman, Meir Shetreet, said he delivered new proposals in his talks with Arafat on Thursday. Palestinian Planning Minister Nabil Shaath said the message would be studied over the weekend.

"If the Palestinians have good will ... then it's a matter of very little time before we can complete an interim agreement," Netanyahu said Thursday.

Israeli Public Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani planned to meet Arafat on Friday to ask the Palestinian leader to consider reopening talks.

In another attempt to bring the United States back into the picture, Israeli Trade Minister Natan Sharansky told Israel TV he spoke with U.S. National Security Adviser Sandy Berger.

Sharansky did not detail the conversation but Israel radio reported that Sharansky asked for U.S. Mideast envoy Dennis Ross to return to the region for further negotiations. Berger reportedly rejected the idea.

Mexican prostitutes protest abuse, demand legalization of profession

MEXICO CITY, Mexico (AP) — More than 350 prostitutes from across Mexico gathered Wednesday to share countless stories of client and police abuse, and to demand the full legalization for their profession, health insurance, child care and other job benefits.

Prostitution is neither strictly prohibited nor wholly legal under Mexican law. Local governments have set up what they call tolerance zones where male and female prostitutes are allowed to work, but are also subjected to extortion and abuse.

" We're terrorized. They plant drugs on us, beat us and then turn around and arrest us," said Alfonso Bautista, a 25-year-old Guadalajara transvestite who uses the name Pati. "We should be taken into account like any other human being."

During a two-day Sex Worker's Convention at a Mexico City church, prostitutes said they want safe zones with set hours, guaranteed police protection, health insurance, child care, government-supported AIDS hospices and clinics.

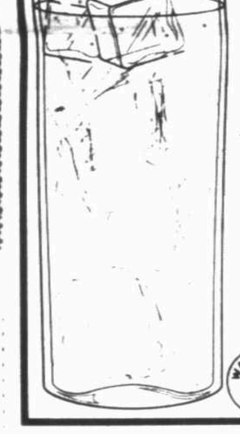

The prostitutes receive regular health exams, but the sex workers say the zones currently set aside for them do not protect them from clients and police who beat them, or government health workers who publicize their HIV test results.

In 1985, prostitutes signed an agreement with residents of one Mexico City neighborhood that stipulates prostitutes can work after 10 p.m., but must stop by sunrise when children leave for school. It also prohibits them from wearing provocative clothing.

Although the agreement does not grant insurance or child care, prostitutes say it has cut down on the incidents of abuse against them. Prostitutes in other neighborhoods and other cities said they would like similar agreements.

But so far authorities, including Mexico City Mayor Cuauhtemoc Cardenas, have not responded to those demands.

Empty Times Square fun for tourists, ominous for businesses

NEW YORK (AP) — The Crossroads of the World are closed for repairs.

Hundreds of businesses in world-famous Times Square — including theaters, hotels, restaurants and other mainstays of the tourist trade — have been shut down along with many of the streets since Tuesday, when a construction scaffold collapsed just off Broadway.

"New York is so much nicer this way," Kimilee Washburn, a teenager visiting from Little Rock, Ark., said as she ventured out into the empty traffic lanes.

Try telling that to the businesses losing money or the commuters who must walk blocks out of their way to get to their jobs in the heart of the city.

At the 627-room Millennium Hotel, 303 rooms were closed and parts of the first floor were cordoned off with crime-scene tape. General manager Michael Littler said he had lost half a million dollars and sent home 150 workers. Even rooms that were open were vacant because people were afraid.

"Rightly so, they are staying away," he said.

Mayor Rudolph Giuliani lamented the "millions and millions" in lost tourist dollars but reminded everyone that only four theaters are closed. Putting a positive spin on the situation, he described Times Square as a "pedestrian mall" and said some people have asked him to keep it traffic-free for good. ("I don't think I can do that," he said.)

Bret Wilson of Scarsdale stood in the middle of Broadway, gazing down at the huge, empty square. "It's the uniqueness of being able to stand in the middle of Times Square — when it's not New Year's Eve," he said.

He also had a good view of the 48-story Conde Nast building, under construction on 43rd Street, and the twisted scaffolding and off-kilter elevator that remained after the accident Tuesday morning. An 85-year-old woman living in the Woodstock Hotel was killed by debris that rained onto buildings and the street.

The accident forced the closing of sections of Sixth Avenue, Seventh Avenue and Broadway, as well as 41st, 42nd and 43rd streets.

The closings meant life was no "Cabaret" for theatergoers. The hit musical, which fills up every night at up to $80 a ticket, is right next to the construction site and is closed at least through Sunday.

Most of the streets and businesses will be reopened as soon as workers manage to erect a gigantic safety net around the scaffolding to reduce the risk of falling objects.

Giuliani said oxygen tanks that could explode if they fell were among the items left behind when the scaffolding peeled away.

The 700-by-100-foot reinforced-nylon curtain could be hung by Friday night if the winds cooperate, Giuliani said.

At the Millennium, Terri Moore, a nurse from Knoxville, Tenn., was checking in Thursday. She said her bus couldn't get close to the hotel and she and her 76-year-old mother-in-law had to carry their luggage three blocks.

"It's my first time in New York and I can't believe it's closed," she said. "I wanted to see everything."

Joe Franklin, the name-dropping former talk show host and show-biz chronicler, said he put up three refugees from the Woodstock Hotel in his famously cramped offices, letting them sleep on chairs. One was an old vaudevillian, one a former clown and one a former messenger for Franklin.

"I learned this from Fred Allen and George M. Cohan," Franklin said. "Help a guy when you can."

Hundreds of businesses remained closed Thursday morning and traffic was banned because officials feared that more debris, some of it potentially explosive, could fall from a skyscraper under construction on 43rd Street.

If necessary, U.S. would act alone to stop Kosovo bloodshed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is "prepared to act alone" militarily if necessary to end fighting between Serbian troops and ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, U.S. officials told lawmakers Thursday.

The Clinton administration prefers a diplomatic solution or acting in concert with NATO but has not ruled out unilateral military action, said Walter Slocombe, undersecretary of defense for policy.

"We're prepared to act alone if necessary," Slocombe said when asked at a hearing of the House International Relations Committee to clarify the U.S. position on Kosovo. "We haven't ruled it out. But ... there's a distinction between whether the United States believes it has the legal authority to act alone and whether it would in fact in a concrete situation actually do so."

Rep. Lee Hamilton of Indiana, the committee's ranking Democrat, who asked the question, suggested U.S. allies such as France and Germany believe a mandate is needed from the U.N. Security Council for military action in the Serbian province. That would be problematic, Hamilton said, because permanent members China and Russia could veto any resolution.

Robert Gelbard, the president's special representative for conflicts in the Balkans, said the administration believes it needs no approval for any military action from the United Nations because its charter and international law give the United States broad authority in cases of defense.

Hamilton noted the Bush administration's 1992 "Christmas warning" to Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic remains in effect. In that, the United States said it would use air power if Serbia, Yugoslavia's dominant power then trying to quell Bosnia's independence movement, mounted a similar campaign of ethnic cleansing in Kosovo.

"There's no question we maintain that we have the right to act unilaterally," Slocombe said.

"There's a difference between preparing — in the sense that we're getting ready to do it and it's our preferred course of action — and saying, 'If it came to that, and that is what our interests required, that's what we're going to do,'" he said.

Gelbard said the Kosovo conflict has "entered a new and potentially more dangerous phase" because Milosevic has refused to stop his forces in the province as the Kosovo Albanian resistance movement rapidly grows.

"There is no quick fix for Kosovo," Gelbard said, placing primary blame on Milosevic. "This is a difficult and complex problem, bred by years of Belgrade's intransigence and lack of democratic institutions."

So far, the administration has contributed $24 million to relief efforts. Some lawmakers said frozen Yugoslav assets should be used.

House votes to override Clinton veto on some late-term abortions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican-controlled House voted to override President Clinton's veto of a ban on certain late-term abortions, setting up a politically charged showdown in the Senate shortly before the fall elections.

The House vote was 296-132 Thursday, 10 more than the two-thirds majority needed, and ranged across party lines. There were 219 Republicans joined by 77 Democrats, including the Democrats' leader, Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, to oppose the veto.

The House had voted once before, in 1996, to override a veto of a similar bill, and the debate followed predictable lines as abortion foes criticized Clinton's action and repeatedly denounced a "barbaric" procedure they are seeking to ban.

"We can't undo the injustice done to 35 million babies who have been exterminated because seven justices, strip mining the Constitution, found a right to abortion," said Rep. Henry Hyde, in a biting reference to the Supreme Court ruling that legalized abortions more than 25 years ago.

But, the Illinois Republican added, "We can stop the barbaric butchery of partial-birth abortion. We betray our own humanity if we don't."

Critics of the bill said it was unconstitutional because it failed to provide exceptions to protect the health of the mother. They added that numerous state laws drafted along similar lines have been struck down for being drafted so broadly that they would ban numerous types of procedures.

Clinton cast his veto last October, but Republican leaders sidetracked the issue until Election Day drew within sight. The override vote is one of several abortion-related issues being put before lawmakers in what Republican officials concede is an attempt to reassure conservatives whose support will be critical to GOP candidates this fall.

"This is a political issue for the 1998 election," said Rep. Diana DeGette, D-Colo., who called the override attempt a Republican "agenda item."

"Politics pure and simple," added Rep. Ken Bentsen, D-Texas.

Voting to sustain the veto were 123 Democrats, eight Republicans and one independent.

With the exception of cases where the mother's life is in danger, the legislation would ban a procedure in which fetus is partially delivered, feet first, and then a hole made in a barely visible skull and its contents drained. Anyone found guilty of performing such a procedure could be jailed for up to two years, fined and exposed to lawsuits filed by the father.

Although the House vote was without suspense, the situation in the Senate is more complicated.

There, the ban cleared in May 1997 on a vote of 64-36, three shy of the two-thirds majority needed to override the veto. Since then, both sides have waged quiet campaigns to prevail — abortion rights advocates laboring to make sure they could hold onto their support and override backers hoping to find three converts to their cause.

"The Senate will not override the president's veto," predicted Gloria Feldt, president of Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

Said Douglas Johnson of the National Right to Life Committee, "No senator has announced a change yet. It's an uphill fight for us, but not outside the realm of possibility that there could be more conversions."

'Ally McBeal' charms Emmy voters this year

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Ally McBeal," the hit Fox series about a flighty, mini-skirted lawyer that has stirred water-cooler debate over whether it has set feminism back, received 10 Emmy nominations Thursday, including best comedy and best actress for star Calista Flockhart.

The show, still in its first season, was topped in the comedy category only by NBC's "Frasier," which got 11 nominations.

"From the Earth to the Moon," HBO's 12-part, Tom Hanks-produced story of the space program, received 17 nominations to become the most-nominated entry overall this year. Its success only confirms the big networks' fears of cable's growing competitive power.

Other top competitors included NBC's "ER" and Fox's "The X-Files," with 16 bids nominations each, and the NBC miniseries "Merlin" with 15.

"Ally McBeal" creator-producer David E. Kelley gambled that his hourlong series about oddball lawyers and their oddball love lives would fare better in the comedy category than in the drama category. The comedy category is usually limited to half-hour sitcoms, but producers can enter shows almost any way they want.

"Ally McBeal" has generated water-cooler buzz and good ratings, with some complaining that its image of a man-hungry lawyer who plays on her sexuality is a blow to modern womanhood.

Kelley also scored a coup with a best drama nomination for his other legal show, ABC's "The Practice," and with writing nominations for both series. Never before has a producer had two series nominated as best comedy and drama in one year.

Some nominations seemed to have added meaning:

■ Phil Hartman was remembered with a supporting actor nomination for NBC's sitcom "NewsRadio," two months after he was shot to death by his wife in a murder-suicide.

■ Ellen DeGeneres, who bickered with ABC over her sitcom after the actress and her character came out as lesbians, received a best actress nomination for the now-canceled "Ellen."

■ Jerry Seinfeld, whose top-rated "Seinfeld" came to a close with mega-hype after seven seasons, lost his last chance for a best actor nomination. But the show did make into the competition for best comedy series.

In the best drama category, besides "ER," "The X-Files" and "The Practice," the nominees were ABC's "NYPD Blue" and last year's winner, NBC's "Law & Order."

For the sixth time, the critically acclaimed NBC "Homicide: Life on the Street" was bypassed.

Kenneth Starr uses two grand juries for Secret Service, Ickes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Speeding up the Monica Lewinsky investigation, Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr used two grand juries simultaneously Thursday to take testimony from the president's chief bodyguard and a White House adviser.

Secret Service agent Larry Cockell testified for an hour, answering all questions put to him without attempting to invoke any legal privilege related to his nearly constant proximity to the president, said his attorney, John Kotelly.

To Cockell's relief, he was told he wouldn't have to return, Kotelly said.

But Harold Ickes, a former White House aide has been an informal Clinton adviser on the Lewinsky matter, said he expected to be back after testifying only about 20 minutes.

Ickes, who talks strategy almost daily with the White House staff, said so far he had only been asked his name, address and how long he had worked for the president.

"My sense is, what they'll want to know is what I heard and saw while at the White House," Ickes said afterwards, "but I don't know."

While Starr proceeded with his investigation, controversy swirled through the Justice Department and Congress over a career prosecutor's view that his boss — Attorney General Janet Reno — should recommend an independent counsel to investigate campaign fund raising during the 1996 presidential campaign.

At the courthouse, prosecutors asked questions before both a stand-in panel and the grand jurors who have been hearing testimony for months about allegations that Clinton and Ms. Lewinsky lied when they denied having an affair and then tried to cover it up. The main Lewinsky jury could later read transcripts of any testimony it missed.

"Obviously, the independent counsel's office is attempting to expedite this investigation and this is one means of doing it," Kotelly said.

Cockell is anxious to hear from his Secret Service bosses whether he will be allowed to return to his post as chief of Clinton's security detail, the attorney said. He temporarily stepped aside after being subpoenaed.

"His picture has been in every newspaper, he's been on TV, he's had cameras outside his home," Kotelly said. "He will not be able to have the same type of anonymity he had before and obviously he regrets losing that because in some ways that affects his ability to do his job in protecting the president."

Last week, after a federal appeals court and Chief Justice William Rehnquist refused to block the Secret Service testimony, prosecutors brought some uniformed Secret Service officers before a grand jury that has not been hearing the Lewinsky case. But that was on a day that Starr's regular grand jury was not meeting.

At least three other officers, as well as Secret Service retiree Robert Ferguson, also came to the courthouse Thursday to testify.

Meanwhile, Reno confirmed she is reviewing a new report from Charles La Bella, head of her department's campaign fund-raising task force, about the possibility of appointing another independent counsel to investigate the president — this one to look into 1996 campaign fund raising.

Without discussing the contents of the report, Reno said, "There are a range of lawyers within the department who have had long experience with the Independent Counsel Act. And what we do is hear from everybody, not just one lawyer, but everybody."

The New York Times first reported La Bella's conclusions in Thursday's editions. Reno said she continues to review all relevant information on whether another counsel is justified under the law.

Sen. Joseph Lieberman of Connecticut, a Democrat who participated in the Senate's campaign fund-raising investigation, said La Bella's views are "significant, and it gives me pause to think about my previous position." Lieberman has been skeptical of naming another independent counsel.

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said, "If she doesn't do it this time, I think there had to be some kind of backroom deal made."

Sen. Fred Thompson, R-Tenn., who chaired the hearings, called the attorney general's opposition to a counsel "unique and somewhat bizarre." He complained that Reno must consider La Bella "just another guy whose opinion is worth no more than some guy down the hall."

La Bella, who has begun new job as interim U.S. attorney in San Diego, would not comment on the substance of his report.

At a recent hearing, Thompson confronted Reno with information about a still-unreleased memo by Freeh recommending that a counsel be named.

Thompson said he was told the thrust of the memo is that "it is difficult to imagine a more compelling situation for appointing an independent counsel."

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said he's considering a lawsuit to force Reno to name a counsel — even though it's not clear that members of Congress have legal standing to sustain such a case.

Airline industry pans proposed completion goal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The airline industry gave a collective thumbs down Thursday to a proposal the Transportation Department says is aimed at ending unfair competition.

The Air Transport Association, which represents the nation's major carriers, released legal papers, economic studies and personal testimonials from an array of political and business leaders. All said the policy would stifle airline competition, not promote it.

That, in turn, would lead to higher air fares rather than lower ones, the ATA predicted.

"America's air travelers don't need government meddling in a free market that is giving them more choices at better prices than ever before," said association President Carol B. Hallett. "The proposal is particularly onerous, because the rules protect some airlines while preventing others from normal competitive behavior. It is not the job of the DOT to pick winners and losers."

The guidelines include three triggers: when a major carrier adds more flights, sells more seats or offers discount fares to more customers than a startup carrier could possibly serve. The department promised to block conduct that is not 'a reasonable alternative response" with penalties that include a cease-and-desist order or a fine of $1,100 per day.

When Alan Shepard climbed into his Freedom 7 Mercury capsule on May 5, 1961 and rocketed into the heavens above, he not only launched the United States on a drive that eventually put Americans on the moon, but his 15-minute flight literally placed America in the quest for space, an odyssey that continues today.

Shepard's death Tuesday night at the age of 74 closed a pioneering era that took America farther and faster than perhaps any other in modern times.

President Clinton called Shepard "one of the great heroes of modern America," and that he was. Every American child and many an adult who watched Shepard gallantly stride to the Mercury capsule, climb in, and then ride a fiery trail into the sky on an unreliable Redstone rocket, no doubt considered him a courageous American and a hero.

Every American child and many an adult who watched Alan Shepard ride a fiery trail into the sky no doubt considered him a courageous American and a hero.

In a very real sense, Alan Shepard was a pioneer in a day when space and the sea were the only perceived frontiers still facing mankind. He and the other six Mercury astronauts took the hopes of Americans with them on every flight.

Shepard's flight did capture the imagination of Americans and others around the globe. Suddenly, there was hope for the future and a boundless horizon beyond our terrestrial habitat.

Ten years later, Shepard flew to the moon as part of the Apollo 14 mission. He became one of only 12 humans who have walked on the moon.

Alan Shepard was truly an outstanding American who had the courage and, to quote the popular phrase and name of a movie about the space program "The Right Stuff," to show Americans the way to the stars at a time when this nation needed that new and exciting frontier.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, July 24, the 205th day of 1998. There are 160 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On this date:

In 1783, Latin American revolutionary Simon Bolivar was born in Caracas, Venezuela.

In 1847, Mormon leader Brigham Young and his followers arrived in the valley of the Great Salt Lake in present-day Utah.

In 1862, the eighth president of the United States, Martin Van Buren, died in Kinderhook, N.Y.

In 1866, Tennessee became the first state to be readmitted to the Union after the Civil War.

In 1923, the Treaty of Lausanne, which settled the boundaries of modern Turkey, was concluded in Switzerland.

In 1929, President Hoover proclaimed the Kellogg-Briand Pact, which renounced war as an instrument of foreign policy.

In 1937, the state of Alabama dropped charges against five black men accused of raping two white women in the Scottsboro Case.

In 1969, the Apollo XI astronauts, including the first two men to set foot on the moon, splashed down safely in the Pacific.

In 1974, the U.S. Supreme Court unanimously ruled that President Nixon had to turn over subpoenaed White House tape recordings to the Watergate special prosecutor.

Ten years ago: On the campaign trail, Republican George Bush heard chants of "ERA," a reference to the proposed Equal Rights Amendment, from members of a professional women's group in Albuquerque, N.M. Democratic nominee Michael Dukakis was heckled by anti-abortion protesters in St. Louis.

Dems must decide what to do with rider-ridden legislation

The strategy, if you can call it that, is now set for the remaining two months of this do-nothing Congress: Cover your base and do nothing. At least not outwardly.

Republican strategists are predicting a historically low turnout for the fall congressional elections. And that's fine with them. They're not worrying about Soccer Moms, Reagan Democrats, Angry White Males or any other demographic group that the parties have targeted in years past. As long as the true believers show up at the polls, the GOP will thwart all threats to their slim majority.

Anderson

With few defining issues to debate, many lawmakers — especially in the Senate — are doing their real work behind the scenes, away from the watchful eye of the voters or the scrutiny of public debate. Call it legislation-by-appropriation, if you will. We call it dirty pool. Here's how it works:

Every year, Congress must pass 13 different appropriations bills before adjourning. These are the bills that fund all government operations, every widget, welfare check and weapons system in Uncle Sam's domain.

Because these bills have to pass, lawmakers often attach extraneous provisions and projects that most likely wouldn't pass on a stand-alone vote. These provisions are called "riders," and when Congress nears adjournment, they multiply like rabbits.

And no bill attracts riders like the appropriations bill that funds the Department of Interior. Republicans know that their environmental positions are often unpopular with voters, and it's the last thing they want to talk about in an election year. So rather than hold an open debate on environmental policy, Senate Republicans have attached 20 separate anti-environmental riders to the Interior appropriations bill.

Some of these riders sound rather benign — like a plan to delay mining reform regulations for 18 months while the National Academy of Sciences completes a study (even though the issue has already been studied to death). Other riders have serious alarmed environmentalists — like a plan to build a $30 million gravel road through the Izembek National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska, which would set an ugly precedent by being the first road ever built in a national wildlife refuge.

At first glance, this would seem like an easy call for the Democrats. Expose the riders for what they are — anti-environmental pork slipped into a massive bill without debate — and use the issue as a campaign sledgehammer against Republicans. It's been done before to great effect, as it plays to the Democrats' strengths.

There's only one little problem: Some of these riders are being supported by Democrats, including two who are in the midst of tough re-election races. Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., is one of the supporters behind the aforementioned mining measure — a favor to the hardrock mining companies that do a lot of business in his state. And Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash., is reported to be "having heartburn" (in the words of one environmentalist) over a provision that would encourage greater logging of old-growth red cedar trees in the Pacific Northwest. Other Western Democrats, including Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., also favor one or more of the riders.

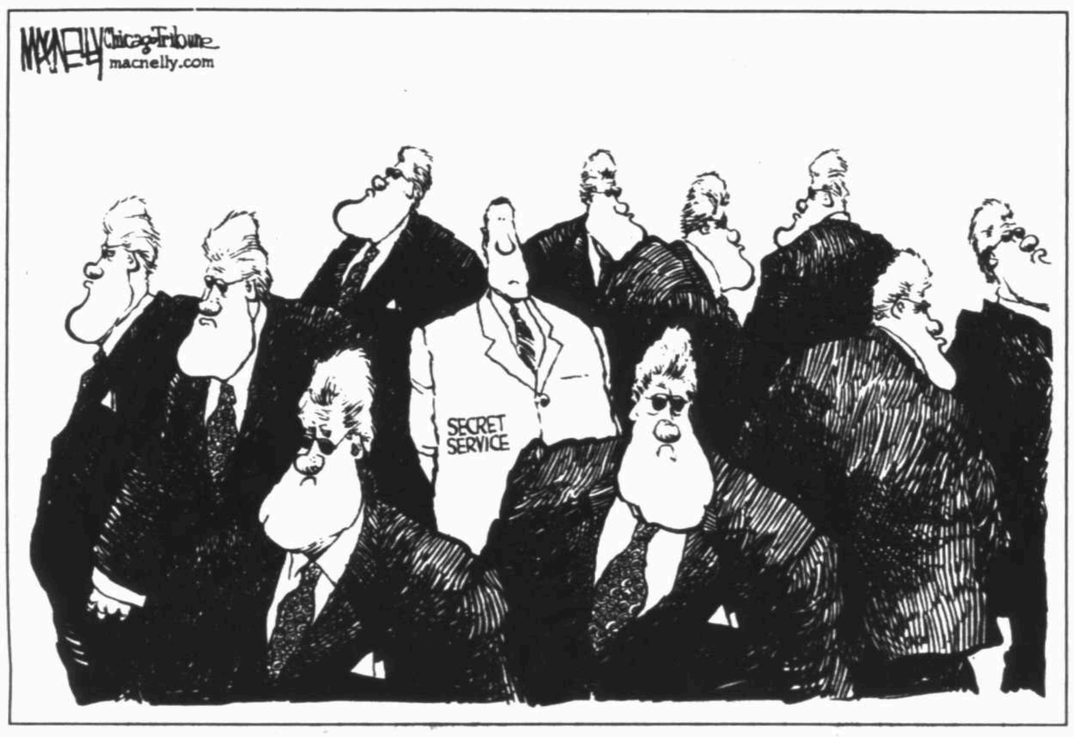

What to do? That's what Democrats must decide before next week, when the entire Interior bill is scheduled to hit the Senate floor for debate. Some Democrats are privately arguing for an all-or-nothing approach. They want to introduce an amendment to the bill that would wipe out all the riders, including the ones favored by their Democratic brethren. Even though they'd lose some Democratic votes to election-year pressures, they argue that they'd pick up support from a few moderate, East Coast Republicans like Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I.

Others argue for a more cynical, partisan approach: Oppose only those riders sponsored or supported by Republicans. That way, the Democrats could still play politics with the environmental issue and give a free pass to their endangered incumbents. As of this writing, Democrats were still undecided on a final strategy.

Of course, the wild card in this debate is the Clinton White House. Vice President Al Gore, leery of his "ozone-man" moniker and eager to convince the corporate community that he's on their side, nevertheless spoke out against such riders in a speech earlier this year. He warned that the president would veto any rider-infested bills that came across his desk. But the administration has been strangely silent on the issue in recent weeks.

It's time to break that silence. If ever there was a bill in need of a veto, it's this one. Even if it helps perpetuate the legacy of this do-nothing Congress.

Me-too Republicans of '50s, '60s return

A few gray hairs, a few wrinkles, and the proud wearer becomes a custodian of Historic Memory. He can remember Danny and the Juniors, for instance — or the Me-Too Republicans.

The Me-Toos were a phenomenon of the '50s and '60s. They got their name by perpetually chirping, "Me, too!" whenever the Democrats would propose some screwball liberal idea or other.

The Me-Toos wanted everyone to know that, big as Democratic hearts were, Republicans also loved people and wanted to modernize government and, urp, so on and so on. Except — this was important — Americans could count on the Me-Toos to do things more cheaply and responsibly than those spendthrift Democrats. That was the difference between the parties, as portrayed by the "progressive" Me-Toos — a difference not of ends but of means.

Murchison

It would be nice to say that today the Me-Toos can be viewed only in the natural history museum, stuffed and like canvasback ducks. The sad truth is that they have made a comeback. In Washington Senate and House Republicans are proudly touting their Me-Too health reform bills.

The Democrats, scenting a rare political opening, want to regulate health maintenance organizations. Needless to say, when the Democrats propose to regulate they mean regulate. Their "patients' bill of rights" would require HMOs to be more flexible in treatment policies, never mind how much the new flexibility might drive up patient costs. A denial of treatment could be appealed to a panel of "independent experts."

Most alarmingly, the Democrats would authorize lawsuits for personal injury or wrongful death caused by "improper denial" of benefits. No wonder plaintiffs' lawyers are deep-dyed Democrats!

Well, what do the congressional Republicans do? Jump up and down, clapping their hands — "Me, too; me, too!" The Senate Republicans' "bill of rights" and a companion House bill include many of the same provisions. For instance, emergency care would have to be covered whenever necessary in the judgment of "a prudent lay person." Denial of benefits could be appealed. Health plans couldn't keep doctors from advising patients of treatment options.

The Republicans would regulate and stipulate with the best of them. They would just do it more responsibly, more soberly.

Here is the irony: Tacked onto the Senate Me-Too plan, probably at Sen. Phil Gramm's adamant insistence, is a provision for broadened access to individual tax-exempt accounts for medical expenses. No other health-care proposal makes the half the sense that "health IRA's" make. With patients saving, tax free, money to be spent on doctors and hospitals, who needs HMOs?

The way to reform big, over-bureaucratized HMOs — against whom there is indeed much to be said — is to restore choice in health care. That's too clear-cut for Me-Too Republicans afraid not to be seen ball-and-chaining the dreaded enemy. A good Republican bill would feature health IRAs and — well, that would be enough. The Me-Too bill features regulation, with IRAs as padding.

Once again the Democrats decide how we're going to approach an issue. The effect is to move the center of debate leftward — away from free choice to regulation. Notice: the parties aren't fighting now over whether to regulate; they are fighting over how to regulate. The likely effect, if this stuff passes, will be to drive up costs for everyone and build pressure for a federal takeover of health care, as proposed in 1994. How Mrs. Clinton must be snickering!

What's the purpose of a Republican party that can't do any better than this? The Republican reign in Washington since 1995 has been mostly a wash-out. There is no steadiness, no sense of mission. In such an environment, no coherent policies emerge.

What the GOP needs is to unleash Dick Armey and a few others like him, letting them show how to make life freer for Americans and government less costly and suffocating. Instead there comes the same high-pitched chirping so well remembered from decades back: Me, too! Me, too!

CHARLEY REESE

Spirit is lost largely among elite who run U.S. institutions

It bears repeating what Dr. Tom Fleming, a member of the board of directors of the League of the South, said when he was asked if the analogy between the fall of Rome and the present United States is valid.

"Yes it is," Fleming said, "but with this difference — the United States today is in worse shape than Rome was in 476 A.D." Fleming's degrees are in classical studies.

I thought about this comparison when I saw the national news media getting in a fever about two exhibitionists in California who intend to lose their virginity on the World Wide Web. I suspect that even the Romans had better taste than this.

Reese

Rome still had plenty of legions, but it had rotted from within. Napoleon, who knew something about war and power, said, "There are only two forces in the world, the sword and the spirit. In the long run, the sword will always be conquered by the spirit.How do we define spirit? Well, an American historian who read all the letters written by Americans in the Revolution that he could get his hands on said that four distinct themes emerged in all those letters - love of God, love of family, love of country (note "country," not "government") and love of liberty.

These loves were so genuine that patriots of that generation were not only willing to sacrifice their material well-being but their lives. That's spirit, and people with that kind of spirit are tough to whip, as the British discovered.

Unfortunately, that spirit is lost today. Let me be more precise: It is lost largely among the elite who run American institutions, both public and private. It is still found among more humble Americans. If you are looking for people who love God, family country and liberty, you are much more likely to find them on the assembly line, on the farm, in the small town and on the police and fire departments than you are on the alumni lists of Yale, Harvard and the other elitist universities.

The American elite, it seems to me, love self, money, position and comfort. Those who love God, family, country and liberty will sacrifice themselves for what they love; those who love self, money, position and comfort will sacrifice others for their own benefit.

But these kind of people are vulnerable. They can be bought or frightened. That's why the United States is in decline.

The United States bullies Panama and the Serbs but not China. The United States wanted to keep its bases in the Philippines, but the Philippines, despite economic hardship, turned down U.S. billions and told us to get out. Iran and India didn't flinch when the United States frowned and fussed at them about nuclear weapons. Iraq, despite murderous sanctions, hasn't offered to kiss anybody's rear end in Washington. Fidel Castro still sends his contempt from across the Florida Straits. Even Muammar al-Qaddafi in Libya, a very small country, has stood fast against U.S. demands to extradite two Libyans. And a warlord in Somalia ran us out of that ratty country.

If the United States is the last superpower and the self-appointed leader of the world, why are so few willing to follow? Because they can see the weakness, the staggering public and private debts, the hypocrisy, the corruption and the vacillation.

Look at the economic crisis in Southeast Asia. U.S. strategy has been to beg Japan to cure its economic problems so Japan can save Southeast Asia. The United States can't do it and is frightened by it, even though U.S. officials continue to whistle past the TV cameras.

We need a new elite. Otherwise, as we say in the South, the United States is cruisin' for a bruisin'.

Missile test unlikely to hamper U.S. efforts to ease tensions with Iran

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iran's test of a medium-range missile will not derail U.S. efforts to ease tensions with the country, even though the missile could pose a threat to Israel, Turkey and U.S. forces in the Middle East, officials said Thursday.

Defense and intelligence officials said they are unsure whether the Iranian test was successful, noting that the rocket exploded or was detonated about 100 seconds into the flight. These officials estimated Iran will need more time and more tests to deploy the weapon, which has a range estimated at 800 miles.

Nevertheless, news of the test detected by U.S. intelligence satellites late Tuesday Washington time, was greeted as yet another sign of the spread of weapons in a region already grappling with recent nuclear tests by India and Pakistan.

At the White House, President Clinton told reporters he was "very, very concerned about it — but not surprised by it."

Pentagon spokesman Kenneth Bacon said Iran's development of missiles and pursuit of chemical, biological and nuclear capability are "are irresponsible and dangerous policies." State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said: "Clearly this kind of test is bad news."

Considering that the test came a month after Secretary of State Madeleine Albright laid out a "road map" to improved relations with Iran, U.S. officials were leery of portraying it as a major setback. They called it a long-anticipated development and said the United States would continue trying to stem the flow of missile technology to Iran from Russia, China and North Korea.

"I don't think it's an argument for closing off all opportunities," Clinton said. His government will continue a "cautious, deliberate approach" toward Iran, he said.

In her speech last month, Albright praised Iranian President Mohammad Khatami, a moderate who took office last summer and has met considerable resistance from religious and other conservatives.

"Secretary Albright went into the speech ... with her eyes wide open about the problems in our relationship with Iran, especially with respect to ballistic missiles," Rubin said.

The Iranian Shahab-3 missile blew up in the latter stages of its flight, either because of a mishap or because the Iranians, satisfied with its performance, detonated it by remote control, said a U.S. official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

In either case, the rocket traveled far enough to convince U.S. intelligence of its medium-range capability. Shahab means "meteor."

Once operational, the missile could reach all of Israel and Saudi Arabia where thousands of American troops are stationed, most of Turkey and small portions of Russia. Iran already has and has used missiles that can hit arch-rival Iraq. That, Bacon said, means the medium-range weapon obviously is being developed with other targets in mind.

Israeli Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai said he does not believe an Iranian missile could reach Israel, but the reported missile tests were "a very serious matter."

Israeli military analyst Barry Rubin dismissed speculation that Israel would launch a pre-emptive strike on Iran, saying Syria's possession of missiles capable of hitting Israel has not led to a military response.

U.S. intelligence has been warning with increasing specificity in recent months of an impending Iranian test. In January, CIA Director George Tenet told lawmakers the agency was revising its earlier estimate that Iran would gain medium-range missile capability within a decade down to a period of about a year.

Although Iran has been developing its missiles with Russian and Chinese help, intelligence and defense officials lean toward the likelihood that Iran purchased a No Dong missile from North Korea, a weapon first tested there in 1993.

The weapon appears to be a version of the Scud missile, a highly inaccurate weapon but capable of posing a major threat as Iraq showed in the Persian Gulf War and Iran in the Iran-Iraq war of the 1980s. Bacon said he was unsure if the U.S. military stationed in the Middle East had missile defense systems that could cope with the high speed of an incoming Shahab-3.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich. (AP) — A driver with The Evening News opened fire with a shotgun Thursday at the newspaper's offices, killing the circulation manager, police said.

Police hunted for the driver, Nathan Hanna, who apparently fled in his pickup truck.

Employees scrambled under desks or hid in the darkroom after the gunman, apparently aiming for circulation manager Anthony Gillespie, 47, killed him with two shotgun blasts, said Editor Ken Fazzari, who called 911 from under a desk.

Hanna didn't say anything before he started shooting, Fazzari said.

"This is just a total shock and I'm still shaking, have been all day," Fazzari said.

Police Officer John Weist said Hanna had been fired by the newspaper. But Fazzari said that to his knowledge, Hanna was still an employee.

Workers in buildings nearby were told to lock themselves in after the attack, and SWAT units surrounded the newspaper offices for four hours, until police determined no hostages were taken.

Officers escorted 14 people out of the building, while others made it out on their own soon after the shooting. Some were taken to a hospital to be evaluated physically and emotionally.

Lex Walsh, whose barber shop is about 100 feet from the building, said the paper's receptionist escaped and ran to his barber shop, extremely distraught and saying others were trapped in the building.

The newspaper is on Michigan's Upper Peninsula, about 350 miles north of Detroit on the Canadian border. It has a circulation of about 7,300.

Microsoft criticized as saboteur, back-stabbing bully in hearings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rivals portrayed Microsoft as a software saboteur and a back-stabbing bully of the high-tech industry Thursday in testimony that got a sympathetic hearing before a Senate committee.

Leaders of some of the industry's top companies accused Microsoft of deliberately writing software that disables a rival's product and using the dominance of its popular Windows operating system to pressure computer makers to snub software competitors. Microsoft officials declined an offer to testify at the hearing.

One executive, Michael Jeffress of Television Host Inc., also accused Microsoft of negotiating to buy his company in 1996, but reneging after he shared his technology and business plans. Microsoft later introduced a similar product on its own.

"Windows is the only operating system to run essential software that (people) use. You have no choice. You have to buy Windows," said Larry Ellison, the multi-billionaire chairman of Oracle Corp. "... If Bill (Gates) is allowed to continue ... innovation in my industry will be stifled, and we'll never live in an information age until that's resolved."

"When you own the bridge and the toll gate, you can pretty soon decide what kind of cars get across," agreed Jeff Papows, chairman of Lotus Corp. Papows accused Microsoft of using its influence to dissuade at least two computer makers, Compaq and Acer, from selling Lotus software over Microsoft's own programs.

Microsoft officials later described the accusations as "a series of wild and unwarranted allegations."

"Anybody who saw that witness list or attended that hearing clearly sees that this was not an objective effort to review issues in the software industry," Microsoft spokesman Mark Murray said.

The company had said previously it was inappropriate to debate competition in the industry while it's being sued in a landmark antitrust case by the Justice Department and 20 states. The trial is set for September.

Its deliberate decision not to send Gates, who already testified before the committee in March, robbed the hearing of any serious star power and gave the executives the opportunity to criticize Microsoft unrefuted.

Committee Chairman Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said he asked Gates to attend, and offered to let Microsoft suggest witnesses who might testify favorably.

"The fact is that our doors have not exactly been knocked down with companies asking to defend Microsoft's business practices," Hatch said.

But Microsoft was well represented by supporters: Both senators from its home state in Washington, Republican Slade Gorton and Democrat Patty Murray, and two of its House members organized a news conference in the hallway outside minutes before the hearing started.

Among the most sensational complaints came from Rob Glaser, the chairman of Seattle-based RealNetworks, whose software allows people to listen to audio and watch video across the Internet.

Glaser, who is in the midst of negotiating a contract with Microsoft potentially worth millions, testified that Microsoft deliberately designed its new Media Player software to "break" RealNetworks' popular software, which the company said is downloaded free by people 100,000 times each day.

In a demonstration, Glaser showed his Real Player software working perfectly on a computer, but failing with an error message after he installed Microsoft's Media Player.

"The code would have had to be written deliberately to that effect," Glaser said.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., called Glaser's demonstration "a matter of some concern." A Republican committee member, Mike DeWine of Ohio, said, "It's clear this raises some antitrust issues."

Microsoft later pointed out that Glaser conducted his demonstration using a test version of his Real Player software. The company said its Media Player will peacefully coexist with current versions of RealNetworks software. A reporter who loaded the new Media Player did not find any conflicts with a copy of Real Player that was previously installed.

Clinton to visit N. Carolina for river protection

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton will travel to North Carolina next week to mark the designation of the New River as an "American Heritage River" deserving extra protection.

The designation of several protected waterways under the federal American Heritage Rivers Program will be announced on Monday, White House spokesman Mike McCurry said Thursday. He did not say which would be designated, other than the New River.

Earlier this year a presidential advisory committee recommended 10 waterways from Connecticut to Oregon for designation as American Heritage Rivers. They included the New River, which runs through parts of North Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia.

The designations will allow communities, through a liaison called a "river navigator," to tap existing federal resources and expertise in protecting and restoring the waterway.

Launched by Clinton last the fall, the effort drew nominations for river restoration from communities across the nation. The nominees were then reviewed by the advisory committee and forwarded to Clinton.

After the New River event, Clinton will travel to Raleigh to participate in political events for North Carolina Democrats, including John Edwards, a Senate candidate, McCurry said.

The 10 rivers nominated by the American Heritage advisory committee were: the Connecticut River in Connecticut, Vermont, New Hampshire and Massachusetts; the Detroit River in Michigan, the Hanalei River in Hawaii, the New River; the Hudson River in New York, the Rio Grande in Texas, the Potomac River in Maryland Pennsylvania, Virginia and West Virginia; the St. Johns River in Florida; the Upper Mississippi River in Iowa, Illinois, Minnesota and Wisconsin, and the Willamette River in Oregon.

Census publication profiles communities by the numbers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Massachusetts leads the nation with one doctor for every 258 people. In Idaho, it's one for every 730.

The number of private businesses in Flagstaff, Ariz., jumped 47 percent between 1990 and 1995. In the same period Jamestown, N.Y., suffered a 5.9 percent decline.

One in three residents of Punta Gorda, Fla., is 65 or oveo advr, the nation's biggest percentage of elderly. Merced, Calif., has the largest share of preschoolers with one resident in nine under 5.

The Census Bureau studies America by the numbers, and it has collected thousands of those in the latest edition of the "State and Metropolitan Area Data Book 1997-98."

Fire ravages abandoned complex

By Alice Ashmore and Rick López
Staff Writers

A Thursday afternoon fire that destroyed an abandoned apartment complex also forced businesses along Andrews Highway to close early and spare their employees from asphyxiating smoking seeping into the buildings.

The evening-time blaze destroyed about 20 units at the Summer Place apartments at 3000 W. Kansas Ave., Midland Assistant Fire Marshal Lon Dominguez said.

It appeared to be intentionally set in the central part of the apartment complex — possibly by vandals or vagrants who have turned the dilapidated building into a hangout, he said.

Seven units from the Midland Fire Department and 35 emergency personnel responded to the late afternoon blaze. A brigade of firefighters battled the fire for about two hours before it was contained.

"It was a Herculean effort," Assistant Fire Chief Eddie Klatt said.

Exhausted firefighters doused themselves with water during brief respites from the blaze. The heat from the fire and the broiling sun offered little relief; however, they cooled down with chilled bottles of drinking water and Gatorade.

"With the intense weather we've been having lately, we remind them to take breaks often," Dominguez said. "They get exhausted a little faster than usual."

Firefighters called to the scene said they expected to stay there until midnight so they can extinguish small embers within the debris and begin an investigation, Klatt said.

Fire department officials said they've been called to those apartments at least four times during the last five years that they've been vacant. Last Friday, firefighters put out a small fire that damaged a few sheets of paneling.

"This is the third major fire at this complex," Dominguez said. "We've had numerous fires set here — they burn whatever trash they find lying around. I think this one's the worst I've seen."

Gang graffiti, broken furniture and rusting vehicles litter the complex. Dominguez is also disturbed with a swimming pool that's now filled with filthy, stagnant water, old refrigerators and couch seats.

"I'm concerned that one of these days a rookie could be called out here — and the smoke could be so bad that he might fall into that

BASIN BRIEFING

Task force

Area law enforcement met in Monahans to discuss the future of a drug task force in West Texas. But it appears they have differing plans from the Governor's Criminal Justice Division, who disbanded the West Texas Drug Task Force in May.

"What we decided to do is what we have done in the past — to help each other out," said Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter. "This is a very serious thing, and we don't need the DPS babysitting us."

Another meeting in Monahans has been called for next week by the Governor's Criminal Justice Division. That meeting is to discuss the formation of the West Texas Narcotics Enforcement Task Force to be operated by the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Linda Edwards, of the Governor's office, said she was unaware of yesterday's meeting. "Apparently they must have organized that meeting without us — it did not come from our office."

Painter said the nine sheriffs and three police chiefs at yesterday's meeting were against participating in a DPS operated task force. "Everybody that we visited with today does not have the money and the manpower to participate in the DPS program."

He said that each participating agency would be required to provide one officer to the task force and to pay 25 percent of that person's salary. "We just don't have the money or the manpower right now," Painter said. "We would be foolish if we contributed something."

Regarding the Governor's plan for a new task force, Painter said, "I am very disappointed with the turn of events — we've got Big Brother telling us what to do."

Painter said he is still "baffled" as to why the Permian Basin Task Force was dismantled. "I am very disappointed that they (the Governor's office) would punish 30 people without letting them defend themselves."

"I am hopeful that Governor Bush will step in personally, and do what is right," Painter said. "It is total chaos right now."

Painter said task force or not, West Texas law enforcement agencies will "continue to do the same thing we have been doing for years — we are going to take care of our citizens."

Gramm sends representative to assess drought damage to local cattle ranchers

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

ODESSA — While politicians are clamoring for monetary ways to help farmers and ranchers through the drought, Odessa rancher Jack Crider tendered a cure for the drought.

"Pray for rain. That's the only solution I see," said Crider, who ranches in the Crane and Pyote areas where it is "just dry as a bone. When you run out of grass, you are out of business in this country."

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

"I've got 21 head of cows on eight sections," he said. "And I'm overstocked."

Crider was among ranchers who on Thursday met with Sondra Ziegler, the Lubbock-based West Texas regional director for Sen. Phil Gramm.

"It's a double-whammy," Ms. Ziegler said of the 1996 and 1998 Texas droughts.

There was some respite in rain-blessed 1997.

"It's not just the economic impact," she said. "There's great emotional impact, psychological impact, on our producers."

Ms. Ziegler was among Gramm's senior staff members on a tour of drought-ravaged Texas.

"I think we've got shades of the 1950s (seven-year drought)," said Bob Steakley, who ranches south of Goldsmith and east of Notrees in Ector County.

"It's every bit as bad as it was in the 1950s," agreed Jim Word, agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) for Ector County.

In prepared press releases, Gramm, who said that the 1998

Jury acquits man on sexual assault charges

By Rick López
Staff Writer

A Midland County jury acquitted a man Thursday who was tried on charges of indecency with a child, court officials said.

Robinson Rivera Godoy, 35, was cleared from charges filed against him in connection with an investigation involving the 1996 molestation of a 10-year-old girl. The jury rendered their verdict within a couple of hours.

Godoy's trial has been held this week in the courtroom of 238th District Court Judge John Hyde. Prosecutors alleged that Godoy had molested the girl at his apartment.

However, his attorney Glen Aaron said that witnesses who were at his house the day of the alleged incident said they were around the defendant the whole time and said the girl had a reputation for being mean and vindictive.

Assistant District Attorney Scott Stephenson said that the defendant's family — including some who testified —had joined together to protect him and at the same time disassociated themselves with the girl and her mother.

"They'd fight tooth and nail to protect him," he said in closing arguments.

He also said that letting the man go unpunished would "send out the wrong message to the community."

Aaron told the jury that the conflict in the girl's testimony and other evidence showed his client was not guilty.

"I feel sorry for that little girl, but it's not reasonable to break up this family and send them back to Guatemala and this man to prison when he's innocent," Aaron said.

Aaron said the verdict was not only a relief to his client but to his family.

"When the verdict was read, there was about 30 people in the courtroom hugging each other," Aaron said. "I'm grateful for this jury and the jury system. In this case, they did the absolute thing."

Cadet trial

Attorney Michele Hartmann holds David Graham's confession and the gun used to kill Adrianne Jones as she goes through closing arguments in a New Braunfels courtroom Thursday. Graham, 20, is accused in the shooting of 16-year-old Mansfield resident Adrianne Jones in December 1995.

Blender purchase helps stave off unwanted marriage

Dad saved me from making an unwanted trip to the altar. He didn't change my mind by starting a man-to-man talk or by saying he'd disown me if I made such a hasty decision.

López

Instead, he just bought me a blender.

Not one of those cheap ones that won't even cut through a ripe banana, but the ones with a set of blades so sharp it can shred a lead pipe. An expensive blender. One I've always wanted, but could not spend megabucks on.

Several weeks ago, I was telling a friend that my kitchen is unequipped for normal living. Right now, my whole cutlery set consists of plastic forks and spoons I've kept from fast food restaurants. My favorite is a long-handled sundae spoon from Baskin-Robbins.

To make things worse, my dishes are odds and ends my sister and mom donated from their china collections. Most of them can't be used for microwaving — the only form of cooking I know — but they hold sloppy fajita tacos just fine.

My friend told me she had the kitchen blues, too. One time, she tried making spaghetti, but didn't have a colander. She has one frying pan too small for an omelette, but too big to melt a tablespoon of butter for her bowl of popcorn.

"I don't know what it is, but I just can't see myself actually springing cash for that stuff," she said.

I know that feeling. I still haven't gotten around to buying an crock pot or coffee maker. But even the mediocre collection I have is hard to maintain.

I've kept some leftovers in the fridge for such a long time that I can't even tell what the heck it is. In fear that I might have created the new anthrax, I trash the moldy food and its contaminated dish instead of washing and reusing it.

Then we thought of a quick way to get some cool cooking stuff without having to buy it.

We could have a fake wedding just so we can get all those neat electric kitchen gifts, like can openers, bread makers, high-speed mixers and even (gasp) a barrel-size barbecue grill.

We planned it all out and even had a friend who'd pose as a justice of the peace and let us use his backyard for the mock ceremony.

Luckily, Dad felt generous during his recent visit to Midland. He was craving a cold smoothie to help him cope with the Texas heat wave, so he went out and bought enough fruits, milk and ice to feed an army.

He had all the ingredients on the counter, but nothing to mix them in.

"You've had a year to buy a blender, but you still don't have one?" he asked. I explained that I had better things to spend money on, like movie rentals and the bookstore's best-sellers.

So off we went in search of a blender that slices, dices, pulverizes and vaporizes. A hundred bucks later, we came back to my apartment with a blender that does all that — and has a warranty until the year 3000.

Twenty milkshakes later, I called my friend and held the mouthpiece of the phone as it whipped a frothy margarita.

"Hear that?" I asked. "It's the sound of a wedding cancellation."

Time management expert speaks at chamber lunch

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

Properly managing time and customer contact information with computer software can pay dividends for small and medium-sized companies.

"For any small or medium business that has difficulty keeping up with customer information and contacts, contact management software is a fabulous tool," said Carl Zapora, executive director of the United Way of Midland.

Before coming to Midland, Zapora worked in the software industry and demonstrated several contact management programs at the quarterly Midland Chamber of Commerce Small Business Luncheon Thursday.

"Small and medium-sized businesses have a huge challenge just keeping up with the day-to-day office tasks like sending out letters, tracking telephone calls and tracking what information a customer requested and whether or not it was sent. This tool lets the computer do that and frees you to make more calls," he said.

He demonstrated one program, ARC, which is used at the United Way office and keeps information on United Way member agencies, volunteers, executives, meeting schedules and reports, what letters and faxes were written and when they were sent.

Bruce Partain, communications and membership director with the Midland chamber, said the program is heavily used by the Economic Development department, particularly in retaining existing businesses and helping them expand.

"One of our goals at the chamber is to visit 95 percent of the manufacturing employers in town," Partain said, saying that the contact management program keeps a record of what happened at each visit, what requests the manufacturer made and makes those reports available to chamber officials and volunteers.

Zapora said that the program saves him two hours a day. "On those rare occasions when my computer is not working, well, just looking up phone numbers takes a half hour. And on a slow day, I send out 10 letters that would take me 15 minutes but now takes about three minutes."

Zapora

He added that "Once you get customer information and interaction entered in the computer's contact management software, it's like your own administrative assistant. Half the things an administrative assistant did for me is now done by the computer."

At $150, he said such programs are extremely reasonable and a good investment for small and medium-sized businesses because they are also easily learned. The programs, he said, will give a business more information available faster to better serve his clients. Zapora called it working smarter and more efficiently. And the time saved, he added, can be used to attract more businesses or spent in other, more personal, ways.

Partain noted that the contact management programs are "the sort of thing that when we found out about desk top computers, we thought they would do."

The luncheon drew between 90 and 100 attendees, Partain said.

pool," Dominguez said.

At the height of the battle, dozens of motorists parked west of Taco Bell to catch a glimpse of the rescue team in action. Employees from nearby businesses also gathered and watched the flames until it was safe to go back to work.

Paul Graves, owner of All-Seasons Dry Cleaners, said smoke wafted into his business through the air-conditioning units. He shut them off and placed several industrial fans throughout the building to thin out the clouds.

"There's no way we could handle being in there without air-conditioning," he said. "I don't even want to get near there. Luckily the wind's not blowing, otherwise it'd be too close for comfort."

Graves said he could see the plumes from his apartment complex at Midland Drive and Wadley Ave.

"The contents of my building stinks to high heaven," said Gregory Bay, owner of Flowerama. The floral business is located just north of the complex.

"There's a lot of gang stuff that goes on here," said Sharron Williams, one of his employees. "There are always kids going up and down this alley."

She said the loiterers who vandalize the apartments have been a nuisance for years.

"I wish they would have just let it burn," said the owner of another nearby business. "It always causes problems when you have something like this."

Critically burned husband, wife die

DALLAS (AP) — An elderly Fort Worth couple who suffered critical burns when their house exploded died Thursday.

Leo and Marjorie Sellers died before dawn at Parkland Hospital, according to hospital spokeswoman April Foran.

A natural gas leak behind a stove was suspected in the accident, fire department officials said.

Sellers, 77, heard the hissing from the leak and turned off the gas. Then he turned on the air conditioner to help clear the gas from the house.

DAMAGE: One rancher dead-set against government handouts

drought's economic impact on Texas is approaching $5 billion, said that "Texas agricultural producers are in dire need of immediate assistance from the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA), and haying on CRP (Conservation Resource Program) acreage will provide relief to livestock producers as well as help minimize fire hazard conditions."

Gramm is urging the USDA to "streamline the drought declaration process" to make sure that USDA Farm Service Agencies have adequate personnel to process low-interest loans.

Additionally, Gramm is backing legislation via the Emergency Farm Financial Relief Act to make $5.5 billion available to farmers "to help them cope with the effects of the drought, including low prices and lack of crops." The measure will allow farmers the option of getting their Agricultural Market Transition Act (AMTA) contract payments for Fiscal Year 1999 earlier than usual.

"Texas is in the throes of one of its worst droughts in recent memory," the senator said, "and our farmers are unable to harvest much more than dirt and dust."

Ms. Ziegler, who noted that West Texas is in a "severe" drought as opposed to the more critical "extreme" drought, said that drought-afflicted farmers and ranchers are eligible for low-interests loans, which, in the case of ranchers, would provide money to buy feed, such as hay and cake, and other essentials.

Steakley, who said that he is dead-set against governmental handouts, suggested that the low-interest loans ought to be a more affordable 1.5 percent to 2 percent rather than the 5.5 to 6 percent and that taxing entities ought to offer producers reasonable relief during the drought when the land is not productive.

Rainfall in West Texas has been "spotted," noted Linda Alexander, representative of the USDA's Farm Service Agency for Ector County. "It just depends on who's lucky and gets a few drops."

An 11-county TAEX review of rainfall and the drought's impact reflected severity of the drought.

Midland County, for example, reported rainfall at 80 percent below normal; range forage at 10 percent of normal; stocking rate at 35 percent of normal; crop losses at 80 percent.

The impact on other counties, including county seats, includes:

Martin County — Rainfall about 88 percent below normal; forage at 5 percent of normal; stocking at 50 percent; losses at 90 percent.

Pecos County — Rainfall at 95 percent below normal; forage at 90 percent below normal; stocking at 50 to 60 percent below normal; losses at 65 to 70 percent of normal yields on cantaloupes and watermelons. Cotton is irrigated.

Crockett County — Rainfall at 42 percent below normal; forage at 40 percent below normal; stocking at 50 percent; losses on lambs are $30 to $35 per head.

Terrell County — Rainfall at 51 percent below normal (90 percent below normal Jan. 1 through June 10); forage at 20 percent of normal; stocking at 30 percent of normal; losses at 80 percent.

Ector County — Rainfall at 70 percent below normal; forage at 20 percent of normal; stocking at 50 percent; losses at 80 percent.

Reeves County and Loving County — Rainfall is 10 inches short; forage at 5 percent of normal; stocking down by 95 percent; losses are affecting vegetable farmers more than cotton farmers due to the extreme heat.

Presidio County — Rainfall at 80 to 90 percent below normal; forage at 30 percent of normal; stocking at 45 percent or less of normal; losses, substantial.

Winkler County — Rainfall at 70 to 80 percent below normal; forage at 20 to 30 percent of normal and dried out; stocking at 50 percent; losses, substantial.

Val Verde County — Rainfall at 65 percent below normal; forage at 40 percent of normal; stocking at 85 percent of normal; losses, not available.

TAEX range specialist Dr. Charles Hart and TAEX livestock specialist Dr. Bruce Carpenter this week said that West Texas livestock numbers are down by 50 percent to 100 percent.

"Many ranches are completely de-stocked," they said in a joint letter. The livestock industry is "intimately tied to our most precious commodity, water," and "adequate rains have not been received since early in 1997."

Hart and Carpenter said that the number of ranchers going out of business "will likely grow significantly unless adequate rainfall or financial assistance is received."

President Clinton on Thursday declared all 254 Texas counties eligible for disaster assistance, making federal aid available to farmers whose crops have been damaged by drought. Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry said farmers and ranchers already have lost $1.5 billion, creating a total economic impact now estimated at $4.5 billion.

The state's total agricultural receipts are about $13 billion a year, and Perry said more of that is threatened if the drought continues into the winter.

Federal funds are being sought to help pay an additional $136 million in feed costs for livestock.

"The numbers are rather staggering as of today," he said, adding that this year's losses already include 70 percent to 80 percent of forage, 50 percent of the cotton crop and $250 million of corn.

Three children die in apartment fire

DALLAS (AP) — An apartment fire Thursday claimed the lives of three siblings whose bodies were discovered in a bathroom.

No adults were in the unit when firefighters arrived, Fire Department spokeswoman Barbara Block said.

It appeared a smoldering mattress may have started the blaze, she said.

Names of the victims, two girls and a boy, were not immediately released.

Officials at Children's Medical Center confirm the youngsters did not survive.

"If The Ship Sinks...Am I Ready?"

Don't you know such thoughts must have been racing in the minds of several folks when fire broke out on that luxury cruise liner bound for Cozumel, Mexico! Reports indicated it was caused by a welder's torch being used for repairs in the laundry room. Some 2,575 passengers and 868 crew members spent anxious hours waiting for action to be taken. 54 were treated for smoke inhalation, and 20 were taken to hospitals. No lives were lost, and damage to the ship was minimal.

But what goes through your mind if you are a passenger? Thoughts like...Is this my last day?...Is this old earthly life all over?...But I don't want to go!...And, what about my family?!?...Wait a minute, am I ready to go?? Some will say, "Sure, I believe In God and Jesus...I know I'm saved!" But believers can be lost, and James 2:19 says, "Even the demons believe and tremble...but do you want to know, O foolish man, that faith without works is dead?" So you ask, "do works save us?" Not alone. His grace does, but our response to His grace and gospel causes us to "walk in the Light." I John 1:7. God's sinful children are lost when they go back to the world. 2 Peter 2:20-22. Are we ready?

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press

NEW BRAUNFELS — Adrianne Jones was "the sacrifice on the altar of David Graham's ego" when the one-time Air Force Academy cadet killed the teen-ager to satisfy his vengeful fiancee, prosecutors said in his capital murder trial Thursday.

But Graham's lawyer argued the state put on a "Wal-Mart prosecution" filled with shoddy police work, second-string witnesses and an ever-changing theory of how the 16-year-old girl was slain.

"We've seen a prosecution conducted like you or I might go to Wal-Mart," defense attorney Dan Cogdell said in closing arguments. "Every day they wanted you to buy something else."

Jurors began deliberating immediately after closing remarks.

Prosecutors contend Graham shot Miss Jones on Dec. 4, 1995, at a remote lake because his then-fiancee Diane Zamora wrongly believe Graham and Miss Jones had sex and demanded the killing of her romantic rival.

The crime occurred while they were all in high school in the Fort Worth area and before Graham attended the Air Force Academy and Miss Zamora attended the Naval Academy the following year.

Defense lawyers claimed Graham was not present during the killing but that he helped cover up the crime afterward and vowed to Miss Zamora he would confess along with her if she were caught.

As the slain girl's parents and brothers watched in the courtroom, prosecutor Michele Hartmann held a picture of Miss Jones before the jury and reminded the panel she was a daughter, a sister and a friend.

"You know that she was the sacrifice on the altar of David Graham's ego, his cowardice, his utter lack of humanity," Ms. Hartmann said.

Prosecutor Mike Parrish pointed out Graham made a written confession in which "he tells you he did it."

The state called nearly 30 witnesses in six days of testimony, including a roommate of Miss Zamora's at the Naval Academy who said Miss Zamora confessed in a late-night chat that she and Graham committed the crime.

In his confession, Graham said he and Miss Zamora planned to break Miss Jones' "young neck and sink her to the bottom of the lake" but that when the scheme didn't work as intended he shot an injured Miss Jones twice.

"He plays God," Parrish said. "He decides to make the call, and he makes damn sure ... Bang! That's what he did," Parrish said, holding a black pistol and pointing it on the floor at a picture of Miss Jones.

The 9mm Makarov handgun used to fire two shots into Miss Jones' head was found in Graham's father's attic, according to testimony.

Miss Zamora was convicted in February and is serving a life sentence.

If convicted of capital murder, Graham, 20, would face an automatic life sentence. Prosecutors did not seek the death penalty.

Prosecutors wanted only the possibility of a capital murder conviction included in the jury's instructions, but Judge Don Leonard included the possibility of finding Graham guilty of a lesser charge of murder or aggravated kidnapping.

Each of the lesser charges carries a possible sentence of five to 99 years or life in prison and includes the possibility of probation.

In a surprising move Wednesday, Cogdell rested the defense case without calling a single witness, saying prosecutors failed to prove their case beyond a reasonable doubt.

That was his theme again Thursday.

Graham's confession, Cogdell said, was vague about details of the killing and contained the false statement that Graham had sex with Miss Jones on Nov. 4, 1995. A girlfriend of Miss Jones testified she drove her home the night of the alleged tryst with Graham.

As he has before, Cogdell called the confession a work of fiction.

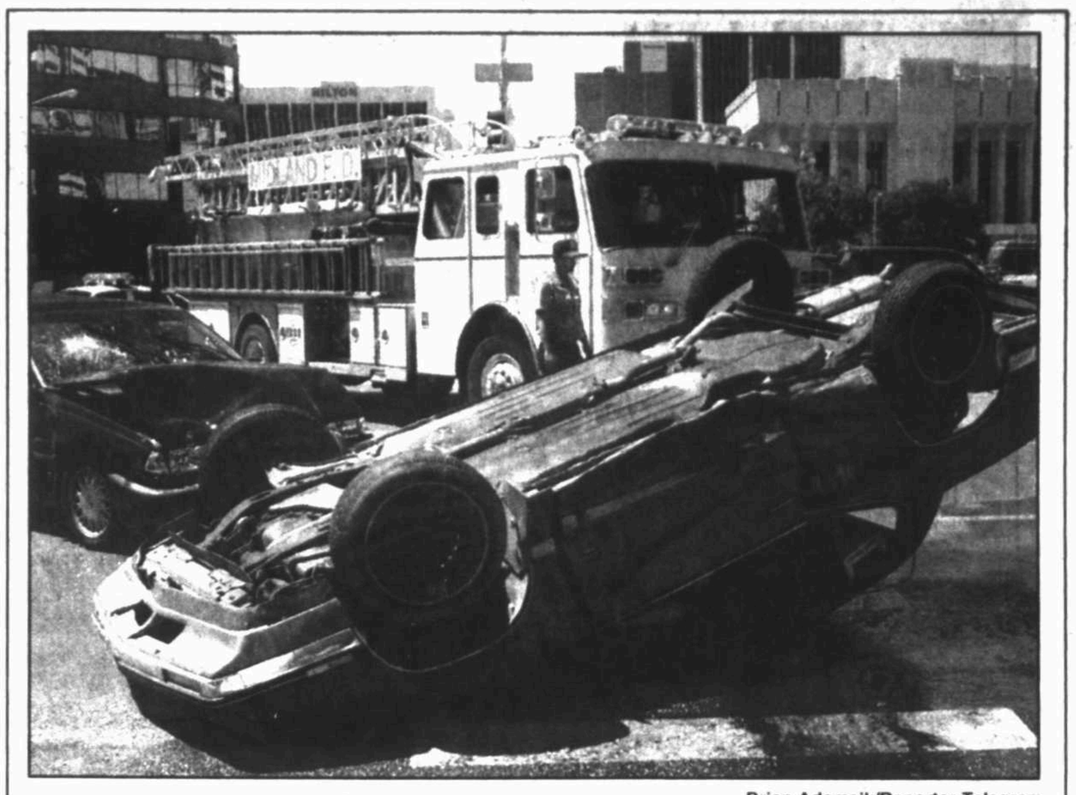

"It sounds like a Danielle Steele novel. It's full of prose, it's full of pretty language, it's full of heart-tugging memories. But what does it say about the crime?" the attorney said.

A "confederacy of dunces" investigated the crime for the Grand Prairie Police Department, preventing proper analysis of evidence, he said.

Cogdell argued that crime-scene evidence leaves questions about whether two people were with Miss Jones in a Mazda Protege when she was attacked at the isolated lake.

Marks on Miss Jones' neck — that prosecutors contend were made with Graham's wide left-hand fingers — couldn't have been made with a right or left hand, Cogdell said, citing testimony from a doctor.

"Bottom line, it doesn't add up," he said. "That doesn't stop the state. They're walking you down that Wal-Mart aisle and trying to sell you something else."

Traffic accident

Emergency personnel clean up at the scene of an accident at Loraine and Illinois before noon Thursday. Only very minor injuries were suffered in the accident. According to police reports, a 1986 gray Oldsmobile was traveling north on Loraine, ran a red light and was struck by a black 1994 Volvo traveling west on Illinois. The Oldsmobile swerved to avoid the collision and flipped onto its roof, spewing gasoline and oil into the street. Police cited the driver of the Oldsmobile for running a red light.

Mother reunited with children after botched smuggling, ransom attempt

BAYVIEW (AP) — A Houston woman was reunited Thursday with her son and daughter, who had been held for ransom by smugglers she had paid to bring them into the country.

Esmeralda Ordonez, 24, the children's mother, said although she's in the country illegally from Honduras and could face legal action for the smuggling scheme, none of that mattered Thursday.

"Now that I am with my children, I don't care what happens," she said.

Ms. Ordonez found the smuggler through her brother-in-law, she said. Her brother-in-law said the man was known to smuggle children into the United States.

Ms. Ordonez, who has been in the country 16 months, said she wanted the smuggler to get her children to Houston because their father was threatening to take the children, who were staying with Ms. Ordonez' sister in Honduras, to live with him in California.

With help from her fiancee, Luis Enrique Sandoval, Ms. Ordonez initially sent the smuggler about $2,000 and the children left for the United States June 18 for what was supposed to be an eight-day trip.

The smuggler kept threatening the children and asking for money, Ms. Ordonez said.

"He was blackmailing me, that if I didn't send the money, he would abandon them, that I would never hear from them again," Ms. Ordonez said.

Another smuggler the children were handed to called Ms. Ordonez earlier this week saying the children were in Brownsville and demanding $3,000 for the children's safety. Having sent the smugglers about $7,000 total, the couple refused to send any more.

Finally, on Tuesday, Sandoval contacted friends in the Houston police department and FBI, who got the word to authorities. The FBI, Border Patrol and Brownsville police department raided the Cameron Motor Hotel in Brownsville Tuesday evening and found about 30 illegal immigrants who were taken into custody, the Border Patrol said.

While processing the immigrants, Vanelisa was discovered among them. Early Thursday morning, Juan Angel was found wandering around a Brownsville apartment complex with a note pinned to his shirt with his mother's phone number on it.

It is believed the second smuggler arranged to have the child dropped off and called police to come get him.

Neither alleged smuggler nor any accomplices had been arrested as of Thursday afternoon, FBI spokesman Jorge Cisneros said. The FBI was looking for a woman using the names Maria de la Cruz, Ruth Sierra and Nidia Ruiz, who is believed to be the smuggler who made the threats from Brownsville.

After a tearful reunion with Vanelisa and Juan Angel, Ms. Ordonez, her fiancee and the children were taken away for processing with border agents.

After processing, Ms. Ordonez would be served with documents asking her to appear in immigration court, said Francisco Lopez, acting patrol agent in charge of Port Isabel.

Ms. Ordonez and Sandoval, a U.S. citizen, said they planned to get married when Sandoval's divorce was final, which might be enough to keep her in the country temporarily.

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Vincent Matthews has officially assumed the duties of director of the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

"Dr. Matthews comes to the Permian Basin with broad industrial experience combined with academic acumen," said James Olson, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and chair of the director search committee. "He's an excellent communicator and very knowledgeable about energy resources and potential."

As CEED director, Matthews will supervise the activities of the center and conduct oil and gas industry research and technology transfer projects. He also will teach appropriate university-level science courses.

"The Permian Basin is one of the premier oil and gas producing basins in the country," Matthews said. "I look forward to working with the community to determine how CEED can effectively assist with solving problems pertaining to the petroleum industry and to the region as a whole."

Before joining the UTPB staff, Matthews was a visiting professor at Arizona State University in Tempe where he taught geotectonics. He also taught geology and environmental studies at the University of Northern Colorado and geology at the University of California-Santa Cruz.

His experience in the oil and gas industry include stints as president of Penn Virginia Oil and Gas Corporation and senior vice president of oil and gas for Penn Virginia Corporation. He also held administrative positions with Union Pacific Resources Company in Houston, Lear Petroleum Exploration in Denver, and Amoco Production Company in Denver.

Matthews earned a Ph.D. in earth sciences from the University of California, Santa Cruz (1973), and both a master's and a bachelor's degree in geology from the University of Georgia. He also is a graduate of the Stanford University Executive Program.

Perry leads in travel reimbursements, uses state planes less

AUSTIN (AP) — With destinations including Paris, Texas and Paris, France, lieutenant governor candidate Rick Perry has racked up the largest total of state-reimbursed travel expenses among officeholders seeking the state's top two jobs.

A Republican, Perry has received $84,355 for travel expenditures since taking office as agriculture commissioner in January 1991.

That's according to records from the Texas comptroller's office reviewed by The Associated Press for gubernatorial and lieutenant governor candidates.

Perry has made less use of state-owned airplanes, however, than the two other candidates who have been in office at least as long, according to state Aircraft Pooling Board records.

Officeholders, who generally defend their travel as beneficial to Texas, receive reimbursements for such things as commercial or private planes, hotels and meals. Reimbursements are accounted for separately from trips on state-owned planes.

Second in travel reimbursements, with $71,068 since January 1991, is Democratic gubernatorial candidate Garry Mauro.

His travel vouchers, unlike others examined, included many charges for cellular telephone calls. Spokesman Billy Rogers said Mauro doesn't have much "down time" when traveling and must keep in contact with the General Land Office.

Democratic lieutenant governor candidate John Sharp has been reimbursed $61,194 for traveling since becoming state comptroller in 1991. Many reimbursements were for twin-engine aircraft trips around Texas, although vouchers also show a trip to Mexico City to meet with Mexico lottery officials in 1993, when Sharp oversaw the Texas lottery.

Predictably collecting the least in travel reimbursements was Republican Gov. George W. Bush, who just took office in January 1995. Still, his total for the four-year period was a relatively low $10,229, with much of that for trips to Washington for National Governors Association and other meetings.

In using state-owned planes, Mauro has the largest tally — 366 trips from January 1991 through last month, including 188 since fiscal year 1995 began in September 1994.

Bush also was a frequent flier, with 162 trips on state-owned planes since taking office.

Sharp's trips state-owned planes since January 1991 total 264, and Perry's add up to 252.

Among Perry's state-reimbursed trips were a 1995 agricultural trade mission to France and Germany; 1994 visits to Puerto Vallarta for a 1994 border trade alliance meeting and Mexico City to meet with Mexico's agriculture secretary; and West Palm Beach, Fla. for the 1995 meeting of the Southern Association of State Departments of Agriculture.

Perry also has traveled around Texas via twin-engine plane, with stops including such rural towns as Paris.

"Rick Perry has been an effective agriculture commissioner in part because he's willing to travel to rural Texas to visit with those impacted by floods and droughts and to find new export opportunities for Texas products," said Perry spokesman Ray Sullivan.

"His travel has dropped dramatically since 1994, with very few trips so far in 1998," Sullivan added. Since fiscal year 1998 began last September, eight trips on state-owned planes are listed for Perry, and he received $4,255 in travel reimbursements for fiscal year 1997.

Sharp took aim at Perry's record.

"Rick's been flying high on the taxpayer tab since the day he took office," said Sharp spokesman Kelly Fero. "It seems in gay Par-ee the only agricultural issue raised is when Rick told the maitre d' he wanted his Chateaubriand served medium rare.

"Texans would be better served if he went to Waller County than Weisbaden, Germany."

In the governor's race, Mauro spokesman Rogers said, "As we get closer to the 1998 election, Mauro's use of the state plane has gone down and Gov. Bush's use of the state plan has gone up."

In fiscal year 1998 so far, Bush has logged 34 state plane trips and Mauro, 24.

"Gov. Bush has put at least one national reporter on the state plane who flew around the state with him and then wrote a story about Bush running for president in the year 2000," Rogers said.

"When you're simply out to promote your non-candidacy in the year 2000, I think it does raise some questions that need to be answered by the governor's office," Rogers said.

Bush spokeswoman Karen Hughes said the governor's campaign reimbursed the state for that trip after the reporter asked political questions, and he hasn't allowed reporters to travel since on state planes.

She said if Bush has even one political stop on a particular day, he uses a politically-financed plane the entire day "out of an abundance of caution."

Officials say 368 people sickened by tainted oysters

HOUSTON (AP) — Bacteria-tainted oysters from Galveston Bay have sickened 368 people, a state health official says.

Of the 368 people made ill by the Vibrio parahaemolyticus bacteria, 66 cases have been confirmed by laboratories, Doug McBride, a Texas Health Department spokesman, said Thursday.

The rest are clinical cases that meet the definition for the illness, he said. The latest victim began suffering symptoms on July 2.

The Pacific Northwest last summer recorded 209 lab-confirmed cases of illness caused by the same bacteria in oysters harvested in that region.

Galveston Bay was closed to oyster harvesting on June 26th because of the diarrheal illnesses. Officials say most of the illnesses in the current outbreak were in Texas, but health officials also have confirmed victims in Florida, Oklahoma, Georgia, Tennessee, Colorado and California.

The illness can be fatal for someone with an immune deficiency. A few have required hospitalization, officials said. Most who became ill suffered flulike symptoms such as diarrhea, cramps, nausea, vomiting, fever and headache.

Health experts and people in the shellfish industry are meeting this week at the Interstate Shellfish Sanitation Conference in San Diego. Among other activities, they will review lab test results and determine how to prevent a recurrence and when to reopen harvesting in Galveston Bay.

A truck traveling westbound on Louisiana highway 82 in Grand Chenier, La., June 11, passes underneath an oak tree with an "L" spray painted on the tree's trunk. The "L" means the tree is designated for trimming. A series of trees there is either marked L" or "X" for removal.

Oak trees saved along scenic Louisiana highway could be hazardous to drivers

By Elizabeth Wright
Associated Press

GRAND CHENIER, La. — Orange X's emblazoned on live oaks along the national scenic byway here are testament to disaster narrowly averted, preservationists say. Others say those X's denote disaster waiting to happen.

The state Department of Transportation and Development had declared the trees along Louisiana highway 82 a hazard to motorists and marked them to be chopped down. News of the decision mobilized licensed arborist Bob Thibodeaux, Lafayette-based Tree Society of Acadiana and others to save the oaks, which give the "chenier," a Cajun French term for oak grove, its name.

Their pleas reached the top: Gov. Mike Foster said the trees would not be touched.

Fearing lawsuits, highway department officials said they wanted to remove the trees, which hug the shoulderless, two-lane highway in some places.

But Thibodeaux and others said felling the oaks, many of which were only saplings more than a century ago, is akin to sacrilege.

Before the chainsaws could be fired up, Foster, who said he was disturbed when he heard of the planned removal of the trees, intervened.

He visited the site and declared that trees growing on the edge of Rockefeller Wildlife Refuge would remain.

Limbs will be pruned, and signs alerting motorists to be aware of the trees will be posted.

"This is all about liability," he said, referring to DOTD's reasoning behind the plan.

In one recent case, for example, the state Supreme Court upheld a ruling that the highway department was partially responsible for a wreck in which a Baton Rouge woman and her child were injured. The courts ordered the department to pay more than $500,000 because the highway shoulder width and side slope angle created "unreasonable risk of harm."

"We're not going to start cutting the chenier to satisfy some lawyers," Foster said.

If necessary, he said, he'll push a law that would protect the state from liability if someone hits the trees.

DOTD decided six to eight months ago to launch the project. Seventy-three trees were targeted for removal, and 130 were designated for pruning. Of those singled out for removal, about 30 are live oaks.

The highway department's objective was to clear five feet of the road grade and clip limbs to create a 15-foot-high clearance, LeBlanc said.

One of only a few of the country's back roads designated by the Federal Highway Administration as a national scenic byway, the trail, of which Louisiana 82 in Cameron Parish is a part, won the distinction specifically because it exhibits a "natural" quality. According to an official description of the term, it means "an outstanding example of natural processes, landforms, physical features."

In addition, the trees' deep roots anchor the sand ridge against erosion and hurricane winds.

The thick-trunked +oaks+ and knobby roots at places stand little more than three to four feet away from the road, originally a winding cattle or wagon trail paved about 50 years ago when the state claimed it.

Scarred trees and damaged trucks bear witness to the difficulties of negotiating the only highway to and from the ridge. Complaints from truckers steadily have mounted, LeBlanc said.

State Agriculture Department urban forester Paul Orr said the highway department appeared to have designated for removal the "minimum" of trees possible.

Lowering the speed limit on the long stretch of open road in a sparsely populated rural area is impractical, he said. Driving at night or in rain also can disorient a driver, and there is no shoulder between the trees and the road, he said.

Crashing into one of the oaks, Orr said, could "blow you away."

Cameron Parish Coroner Richard Sanders said, however, that drunken driving or people's failure to pay attention is more to blame than the trees for any wrecks. There are no more accidents in that area than in any other area of the parish, he said.

Software, kitchen jobs help teachers prepare kids

By Monica Mendoza
Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. Erica Olsen's job at Flowing Wells High School is to prepare students for the working world.

Problem is, outside of a career in education, Olsen wasn't exactly sure what that world was.

This summer, the culinary arts teacher donned a chef's hat and crisp white jacket to work in one of Tucson's largest kitchens.

She had to report to the head chef at The Westin La Paloma resort on time every day. She worked banquets, food lines and the bake shop. She completed tasks under deadline, and with a smile.

What she learned during her two-week internship is that work habits are as important as academics.

"It's all about attitude," Olsen said. "The No. 1 reason why people are fired is for being late."

Come next fall, Olsen will still dole out the research projects, lengthy exams and rigorous daily assignments. But she'll add grades on promptness and meeting deadlines.

Olsen is one of 34 teachers in Pima County who took part in work internships this summer to find out what employers really want from high school graduates. It's the second year that local teachers have hit the work force for a dose of reality.

"They want to find out how what they teach relates to the workplace," said Mari Helen High, special-project coordinator for Tech Prep Consortium, a co-sponsor of the teacher internship program.

"When kids say, 'What am I going to do with this?' — teachers want the answer," High said.

Teachers from the Tucson, Sunnyside, Flowing Wells, Marana, Rio Rico, Amphitheater and Indian Oasis school districts worked two-week internships at locations including IBM, Tucson Electric Power Co., Mindplay and the Pima County Department of Environmental Quality. The internship program is sponsored by Tech Prep and Pima and Santa Cruz counties' School to Work Program, using federal funds and grants.

Both programs emphasize teaching job skills to youths, but teachers can't teach what they don't know, said Jodi Horton, executive director of the School to Work Program.

"We began to realize that many teachers were having no information about the world of work," Horton said.

It's true, said Jim Madden, University High School computer programming instructor.

"Teachers tend to get in their classrooms and do their thing — that is where we feel safe," said Madden, who has taught for 25 years. "There is a world out there that needs some things from us."

Madden went to work for Tucson software company Mindplay, where he helped write the script for software that teaches youths how to use the C++ program. He worked with a team of designers — a concept he plans to incorporate into his classroom.

"One of the things I will do is more group work and actually base grades on it," he said.

Sometimes students and parents scoff at that idea, saying children should be graded for individual work, he said. But employees are evaluated on teamwork, he said.

Teachers in the program receive a $250 weekly stipend through the Arizona Department of Education Carl Perkins Fund, which is dedicated to vocational education.

Statewide, about 150 teachers do summer school-to-work internships.

Last year, the Department of Education adopted Workplace Skills Standards for kindergarten through 12th grade.

Among other standards, students must have effective oral, written and listening skills to make decisions and solve workplace problems. They must be able to apply critical and creative thinking skills to make decisions. And they must demonstrate technological literacy for productivity in the workplace.

A survey of Tucson's business community last year yielded the same requirements, Horton said. She meets regularly with local employers who want input on school curriculum.

"Communicating with clarity" is what Mindplay owner Judith Bliss looks for among all levels of employees — whether it's a high school graduate working production or a college graduate designing programs, she said.

"Communication is the No. 1 problem," she said. "You have them take responsibility to find out information."

The teacher internships give employers a chance to shape curriculum, said Laura Barnett, associate relations manager of The Westin La Paloma.

"The things we do not see are being to work on time and showing initiative," she said.

Part of the internship program includes writing a lesson plan based on the work experience. Teachers meet in small groups once a week to discuss how they will use what they learned on the job in the classroom.

Sierra Middle School teacher Mike Barr, who did a two-week internship last summer with Kalinowski Design, said he incorporated a lesson plan that addressed the key concerns employers expressed.

"It had nothing to do with academics," he said. "It had everything to do with behavior."

Employers want drug-free employees who come to work on time and whose appearance is neat, Barr said. And they want employees to have respect for each other. Barr made a daily checklist for his students. Under his supervision, they recorded when they were late to class, if they horsed around or if they had a conflict with a fellow student. Barr then discussed why these traits are harmful.

The checklist improved classroom production, he said. "It was my most successful year."

The internship forced Barr, a 20-year teaching veteran, to evaluate what he was teaching, he said.

"Is it working and are the entry-level people prepared?" he said. "If we don't like what we are getting — dropouts and teen pregnancy — then we need a new way."

Man finds beauty in beasts

By Leah Simmons

ARDMORE, Okla. — Someday, John Rohloff will have that cabin high in the Arbuckle Mountains. But he has a job to do first.

He's promised Timba and Sheena a cave to bed down in, and a waterfall to keep them cool. Rico needs a roost high on an outcropping of Arbuckle rock, and Tosh and Sabrina are waiting for the pool he promised them so they can take a dip when the temperature heats up.

So, for now, Rohloff is content to sleep in his trailer or the tent he pitched outside the cages he built for his cats in a secluded area behind the Paradise Waterside Village near Turner Falls.

"I promised the animals they will have a home before I will," Rohloff said, as he caressed the head of Timba, a 1 1/2-year-old male lion with a deep-throated growl and nicks across the wide bridge of his nose. Timba occupies a pen next to Sheena, a 3-year-old lioness who came from Kentucky. Not far away, a blinking South American couger rises from his nap in the shade to acknowledge Rohloff and possibly elicit a pat on the head.

Rico has a condition similar to muscular dystrophy which impairs his physical function. Rohloff rescued Rico, whose previous handlers wanted to have him put to sleep, and has helped rehabilitate the animal by letting him swim in the Arbuckle Mountain streams. Rico shows his appreciation by nuzzling Rohloff's face and wrapping his long, thick tail around the man's legs.

Romping around in a low cage next to Rico's is 7 1/2-month-old Tess, a cougar who was born at Arbuckle Wilderness and now lives with Rohloff and company.

Towering almost 5 feet on all fours is Tosh, a Siberian and Bengal tiger cross who was one of three cubs rejected by their mother at birth. Rohloff chose Tosh and bottle-raised him. The two have been inseparable the past five years. They were joined a little more than a year ago by Sabrina, a young female Siberian tiger who loves to swim and play pouncing games with unsuspecting visitors.

It's an unusual gathering of friends, but the animals are Rohloff's life, and his love and dedication dance in his twinkling eyes as he talks sweetly to his big cats as they nuzzle and chew on his hands.

"I sit out here and talk to them most of the night and get up early in the morning and come out here," Rohloff said. "Each one has its own personality and attitude."

Rohloff, who previously worked for Arbuckle Wilderness and has spent a lifetime working with animals, doesn't plan to hold private sanctuary with his precious animals. He has a much grander scheme in mind.

Endorsed by Boyd Matson, host of National Geographic programs, Rohloff is carving out a natural setting in the Arbuckles in the hopes of educating the public and raising awareness about the endangered animals, while giving them a comfortable place to live. He calls the project "Creatures Great and Small."

"My hope and my goal is to make this a flagship so they can come out here and be proud of it," he said. "I want the animals to have the best and most natural habitat they can."

Rohloff said he was looking at Texas and Arizona as possible locations when he was approached by Richard Carter, who recently reopened the waterslide and cabins across from Turner Falls.

"These people here who had bought the park asked me to do this and they donated the land for me, so we decided to stay here," Rohloff said. "I'm going to be building compounds for the animals with waterfalls and pools. I'm just putting it together day by day. I'm going to have a tiger splash area. It's not a circus show. It's all about the environment and endangered species. I have a lion habitat that I'm building now where it has a cave that they can go into and bed down and I'll build a waterfall over that."

Rohloff's menagerie is as full of vibrant personality as he is.

"They came from all over," Rohloff said. "Some are from the Department of Wildlife in Kentucky, and a lot of people that maybe aren't supposed to have them, that have been abused or orphaned. I'm getting calls every day. The problem with these animals is there are not that many places for them.

"I've always had a love for animals," he said. "I started probably 20 some years ago working with animals. I lived in Hawaii and taught scuba diving and I swam with sharks. I had wolf dogs. I was one of the first to have wolf dogs and bring them over to the islands. When I was a kid, instead of having car posters, I had tigers and lions. I guess I never had a fear of them and they sense that."

The ruler of the roost, however, is not Rohloff. It's Annie, a half-husky, half-timber wolf with shaggy white fur, kind eyes and the most gentle of demeanors. Annie loves everyone and will roll around a guest's feet hoping to be loved back.

But when it comes time to do her job, Annie transforms into another amazing creature. Annie is responsible for keeping the peace among the big cats, most of which are much larger than she is.

"She's a cat dog," Rohloff said. "I've trained her to work with me and she'll go right into the (cats') cages with me."

As he works diligently to secure funding for his nonprofit venture, — "My funding is basically by donations and sponsorships. I've got some good sponsors on board with me," he said — Rohloff also spends time doing education programs at schools and various organizations. His target is mainly children.

"What I want is really respect. It's going to be this generation that is going to be able to do something about it or not," he said. "My purpose in all this is to let them know it's not going to be long before there's not going to be any tigers out in the wild. It's going to be this generation to do it and there's not much time left."

State unveils plan to recognize historic cemeteries

By Chris Newton
Associated Press

LUBBOCK — In 1892, Cochran County cowboy Henry Jenkins died shaking and shivering with pneumonia in a hotel just outside the tiny town of Lubbock: population 50.

There was no preacher in town to perform a funeral and none of his relatives could be reached, so 15 residents buried him on a small plot of dusty land on the outskirts of the city.

While not many folks take the time to visit Jenkins small grave, he has the distinction of being registered as the first person to be buried at the Lubbock City Cemetery, which is now the third largest in the state.

And though his grave sits not too far from that of music legend Buddy Holly, state historians say it was the resting places of nearly anonymous Texans like Jenkins that caused them to develop a new initiative aimed at designating some cemeteries as historical sites.

That designation of Texas Historic Cemetery might soon mean eligibility for state dollars for the repair and upkeep of tombstones.

"It really isn't about someone's fame or how many famous people a cemetery may have," said Ned Coleman, cemetery preservation assistant with the Texas Historical Commission.

"The older cemeteries are part of a family's history, part of the community's history. That is worth preserving and recognizing."

To receive the designation, a cemetery must be at least 50 years old and be deemed worthy of preservation for its historic value, Coleman said.

Each cemetery must apply for the designation by sending in maps showing the borders of the cemetery, photographs and a $25 fee covering the cost of sending letters to the bordering addresses.

Coleman said that the designation now is just a way for the state to recognize historic properties. Soon, though, the Texas Historic Commission will apply for a grant that would be used to help small cemeteries keep their tombstones intact.

"We look forward to being able to help small cemeteries that may be falling apart and (being recognized as a historic site) will probably be a requirement," Coleman said.

Rusty Black, director of Parks and Recreation in Lubbock, said the city's cemetery is considering applying for the special status.

"We are certainly looking at it due to the history here," Black said. "We have three Medal of Honor winners here, about 50 Confederate soldiers and two Union soldiers. There is a lot of history here that we protect."

Fairmount Cemetery, a small cemetery in San Angelo, is among the first group of cemeteries to complete the application process and receive the Historic Texas Cemetery designation, the San Angelo Standard-Times reported.

Fairmount, built in 1893, is the burial site of veterans of numerous wars; one of the criteria.

"There are two from the Battle of San Jacinto, 18 confederate veterans from the Civil War and veterans from World War I, World War II, Vietnam and Korea," said Katherine Waring, a member of the Fairmount board of directors.

Changing way of life creates culture clash

By Alfredo Corchado
Associated Press

MATAMOROS, Mexico — Change along the border is squeezing out more than just an age-old, anything-goes way of life.

It's also undermining a culture that thrives on adventure, pushes life to the cutting edge and rewards those with a flare for ingenuity. These days, institutions are replacing informality.

It hasn't been easy for people like Cecilia Ruiz, a businesswoman who sells Asian trinkets on the streets in this gritty border town across from Brownsville. Recently, she came away stunned after an encounter with a Mexican customs agent. Turns out, to her amazement, that the guy was honest.

"Everything has changed," she said indignantly. "There's too much order on the border."

Added Chad Richardson, a scholar on the border at the University of Texas-Pan American in Edinburg in the Rio Grande Valley: "The border area has always operated on its own quasi-rules and regulations. That's part of the border allure."

To be sure, scams aren't necessarily a thing of the past. They're just more risky to pull off.

Sure, some U.S. agents and plenty of Mexican customs agents may still be on the take, especially when expatriates head south during the Christmas season. But with all the new regulations that have legalized some old scams, surveillance and anti-corruption campaigns, scrappy people like Ms. Ruiz are finding it more difficult to get around the rules.

For instance, instead of illegally importing the Asian goods from Brownsville, Ms. Ruiz now flies to Guadalajara monthly. She legally buys the same goods already taxed but at a much higher price. It's a nightmare, she said.

"People forget this is the border," she said. "What happened to our own rules?"

Moreover, the sheer number of people flocking to the border from all walks of life — the U.S. Midwestern businessman, the desperate Oaxacan peasant and the unemployed Mexican professional — are creating a culture clash that's brewing underneath so much transformation.

"It's a whole new group of people you don't find anywhere else in the world," Richardson said.

It's also a dangerous mix, producing a dicey debate and a question that has been asked for much of the past 150 years: Whose border is it, anyway? Whatever the answer, many old-timers are clearly having a hard time adapting to change.

For now, the newcomers, especially the entrepreneurs, appear to have the upper hand in this debate. Foreign businessmen have created jobs for nearly one million assembly plant workers along the mostly impoverished U.S.-Mexico border. And foreigners need the assurance that life on the border will be businesslike, transparent and not "business as usual."

In sprawling Tijuana, just across the border from San Ysidro, Calif., complaints by foreign assembly plant owners has led to a crackdown on corrupt inspectors demanding weekly kickbacks, said one U.S. executive who operates a plant.

"It makes life easier," said the plant owner. "This is just another reason for doing business on the border."

The squeeze along the border has been coming for a long time. But as the last vestiges of traditional border life begin to disappear, people are wondering whether all the new development and new levels of craziness are worth it.

"The border is booming. Americans almost run this town," said Gloria Gutierrez, who works at an assembly manufacturing plant in Reynosa, Mexico, across from Hidalgo, Texas. "But what are we getting in return? Another Mexico City, a chaotic life?"

Perhaps the greatest tragedy, say border residents, is the loss of something more intangible.

In the Texas border hamlet of Los Ebanos, the remnants of the old border charm is best illustrated by a hand-pulled ferry along the Rio Grande, floating lazily between the U.S.-Mexico border as its carries about 300 passengers and 150 cars per day at 50 cents a pop.

For three generations, the Mendiola clan has hand-pulled the 30-foot barge alongside half a dozen other men for about $5 per day.

Last year, 80-year-old Baltazar Mendiola witnessed the marriage of his youngest son, Jose Eloy, 28, who out of respect for his father tied the knot on the ferry as it floated down the river. U.S. customs agents witnessed the event and clapped.

It was a touching moment for Baltazar Mendiola, who in 1954 followed in the footsteps of his own father, Antonio Mendiola, who in 1949 helped start the ferry tradition. And it was especially moving amid so much talk that a new international bridge may soon replace the ferry, a promise he's heard for decades.

Looking at his other son, Nieves, 54, who's now carrying on the ferry tradition, Mendiola responded in a way that reflects the less-than-cut-and-dried situation at stake.

"I wish the rumors were true," he said, as he pulled yet another pair of passengers across the Rio Grande. "I wouldn't want my grandchildren doing the same job. I'd trade this charmed life for better jobs for my sons and my community. Even if we have to sacrifice our own way of life."

Traffic chokes the Cordova Bridge that stretches from Ciudad Juarez to El Paso. The fast-growing transportation industry has brought jobs to the struggling economy of the border region, but many people believe they've lost control of their communities and lifestyles.

Many farm workers lose jobs, turn to Valley food bank

McALLEN (AP) — With the drought drying up job opportunities in agriculture, the Rio Grande Valley's largest food bank is seeing an all-time high in demand for its services.

In the last three months, the Food Bank of the Rio Grande Valley has served many more people than usual. In the first half of 1998, the organization distributed food to 318,781 people, compared to 524,566 people in all of 1997, a report showed.

From January through June, the organization distributed 4.1 million pounds of food, compared with 6.5 million pounds in all of 1997.

The food bank, headquartered in McAllen, serves people in Cameron, Hidalgo, Willacy, Starr, Jim Hogg and Zapata counties through pantries in those areas.

Carol Morton, fundraising coordinator for the food bank, attributes increased demand to the drought, which has displaced farm workers, the high unemployment rate in the Valley, the cutback in food stamps because of welfare reform, and children who are not in school and therefore not receiving free lunch.

"It's overwhelming for the folks who are in need; first they get their food stamps taken away; then, if they worked in the fields, the work isn't there," she said.

The Lower Rio Grande Valley has seen an increase in unemployment from May to June, according to figures from the Texas Workforce Commission.

Cameron County's unemployment rate rose from 11.1 percent in May to 14.2 percent in June. Hidalgo County saw a jump from 14.2 percent in May to 18.1 percent in June. Willacy went from 19.4 percent in May to 24.6 percent in June and Starr County went from 21.2 percent in May to 24.6 percent in June.

That's actually a seasonal change caused by more people looking for jobs in the summer, and may not be necessarily caused by the drought, said John Kruse, labor market analyst with the Texas Workforce Commission.

"I'm not saying the drought is not having an impact, because undoubtedly it is, but it might be masked by other things," Kruse said Wednesday.

Figures for some of the counties were actually higher last June: Cameron had a 14.4 percent unemployment rate, Hidalgo had 18.8 percent, Willacy had 25 percent and Starr County had 24.4 percent.

With the drought forcing layoffs, about 30 percent to 40 percent of the approximately 80,000 migrant farm workers in South Texas are looking for work outside of traditional farm jobs, Juanita Valdez-Cox, coordinator of the United Farm Workers in San Juan, told the (Harlingen) Valley Morning Star.

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll have: 5-Dymanic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Friday, July 24, 1998:
You are in control of yourself. But you will soon discover that controlling others is close to impossible. Let go of the need to dominate; learn to go with the flow. New beginnings are likely. You express yourself dramatically. Explore new attitudes, and be open to different perspectives. If you are single, don't count on a romance being long-term until it is. Your love life is exciting. Still, it feels a bit precarious. If attached, your partner seems whimsical and can at times be difficult. Try walking in his shoes, and seek to improve the understanding between you. LEO can be competitive.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ Lighten up when faced with a surprise that could throw you off kilter. Don't get annoyed; see the humor. A friend indirectly comes through for you. Plans swiftly change. Emphasize your creativity. Keep the fun in your life. Tonight: Bring on the weekend!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ You are unprepared for the newest jolt from a superior. By now, you should expect the unexpected and accept that it is becoming commonplace in your life. Don't get stuck on the way things should be; deal with them as they are. Tonight: Your home is your castle.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Return messages, and giggle at news. Be willing to readjust your day accordingly. Your ability to be flexible and see possibilities marks your decisions. Express your interest when talking to associates. Others could be shaky. Tonight: Where the action is.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ What occurs is another indication that you must take control of your budget. No one will run it as carefully as you. Make decisions for yourself. You are unaware of how much you offer others. Take stock of your positive qualities. Tonight: It's your call.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ You are centered and full of energy, but the same cannot be said of those around you. You can either get annoyed or pull back and watch with amusement. Charge through work, and concentrate on what you must do. Tonight: Dance your way into the weekend.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★ Pressure frazzles even efficient you. Study ways of simplifying your life rather than complicating it. Reorganize your day, and change some unproductive patterns. Take time to yourself, and stay away from office politics. Make your needs primary. Tonight: A night off.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ Your sense of humor is piqued by a new friend. You'll share belly laughs. Attend an important meeting, return calls and clear your desk. You accomplish a lot, as long as you concentrate, but distractions abound. A friend supports you. Tonight: Enjoy yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ Upset marks home life. It's close to impossible to put consistency where there is none. The unpredictable in your life has now become normal. Focus on what you can handle, namely, your work. Others need your sense of direction. Tonight: Out with co-workers.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Work with the uncertainty of the moment. You feel like you are out of control. Actually, what you are learning is that you can't count on what you used to. Move with the moment, detach from little worries and eye the big picture. Tonight: Escape for the weekend.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ What you thought was high priority suddenly changes. Personal matters dominate, and you have little control. Do not take any financial risks, if you want your life to be secure. A partner does his share in stabilizing the current situation. Tonight: Let someone ask.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Others find you less than stable. Be in touch with what you want and willing to go for it, yet recognize the long-term impact of your behavior. A partner needs extra nurturing because he feels that you are getting far too independent. Tonight: A smile wins the day.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★ A sudden insight creates chaos. For your own sake, charge into work, stay centered and take care of business. Given time, the situation could look a lot different. Others support you and prove nurturing. Pay attention to details. Tonight: Soak away stress in a hot tub.

Opening lead: King of ♠

The best time to double the opponents is when you have a surprise in store for them, such as a trump stack. But, once in a while, even that might not be enough.

With a partial misfit, it seemed for a while that North-South were never going to locate their best strain. When South introduced spades at the three-level, North thought it was likely to be a four-card suit, hence the three-no-trump bid, but South inferred that partner probably held three spades since the North hand was obviously very short in hearts. With no source of tricks for a no-trump contract, South boldly corrected to spades. West's double was a bid after our own hearts. It looked as if a telephone number was in the offing.

West found the best opening lead of the king of spades, but it did not make a bit of difference to declarer. The first trick was won in dummy with the ace, and the ace of clubs was cashed for a heart discard. A club ruff followed by the ace and king of diamonds and diamond ruff brought South's trick total to six. The top hearts were cashed, a heart was ruffed on the table and declarer took the safe diamond ruff in hand. Now declarer was up to 10 tricks — six in aces and kings, three ruffs in hand and one ruff in dummy. At the end West sat looking at three trumps tricks, wondering what hit him!

Stone Temple Pilots singer arrested

LOS ANGELES — A no-show in court two weeks ago, Stone Temple Pilots singer Scott Weiland has been arrested on a felony warrant.

Weiland, 30, posted $250,000 bail and was released Wednesday, the day after his arrest. He is due in court on Aug. 12, police Officer Don Cox said.

An arrest warrant was issued July 9 after Weiland failed to appear in court. He also missed a court date a month earlier, apparently because he was undergoing drug detoxification near Los Angeles, said his lawyer, Michael Nasitir.

Weiland was charged in February with felony possession of heroin and misdemeanor possession of a hypodermic needle stemming from a September 1997 arrest. He faces up to three years in state prison if convicted.

Weiland also has a July 31 hearing on drug charges in New York.

The Stone Temple Pilots won a Grammy in 1994 in the hard rock performance with vocal category for the song "Plush." Other hits include "Interstate Love Song" and "Big Empty."

VERSAILLES, France — Gerard Depardieu, whose blood-alcohol content was five times the legal limit when he crashed his motorcycle last May, was given a three-month suspended sentence and fined $1,600 for drunken driving.

Gerard Depardieu was given a suspended sentence and fined for drunken driving.

The star of "Cyrano de Bergerac" and "Green Card" suffered leg and facial injuries in the accident in nearby Clairefontaine and was unable to work for a month.

The court on Thursday also suspended Depardieu's driver's license for 15 months.

Depardieu told the court that he had been drinking heavily the night before the crash after clinching a contract to distribute three French films in the United States.

LOS ANGELES — The estate of the late Roy Rogers and his widow owe more than $700,000 in back taxes and penalties for shares in real estate partnerships given to their children, the Internal Revenue Service says.

Rogers, who died earlier this month of heart failure, and his wife, Dale Evans, listed the value of the partnerships at around $600,000. But the IRS said they were worth more than $1.4 million, the Los Angeles Times reported Thursday.

The partnerships' main asset is a 50-acre Victorville property that houses the Roy Rogers-Dale Evans Museum.

LOS ANGELES — Before signing on with Ark 21, a record label founded by the former manager of the Police, Waylon Jennings said he had a few firm rules.

"I said, 'I just want to cut an album, and I don't want anybody to look at it and say that's rock or that's country or that's what,'" Jennings said of his 72nd album, "Closing in on the Fire."

"They won't play anyone over 45," he said. "I don't know what age has to do with it."

STATELINE, Nev. — A man accused of punching former San Francisco 49ers coach Bill Walsh in the mouth at a casino has pleaded innocent.

Kurt Allen Lewis, 30, of Bakersfield, Calif., is charged with misdemeanor battery for hitting Walsh, 66, while he played blackjack July 1 at Harrah's Lake Tahoe casino. Walsh suffered a swolen lip.

According to a sheriff's report, Lewis said he saw Walsh peek at a face-down card and jokingly told him he shouldn't.

Lewis said Walsh got irritated, brushed his shirt, and said, "Do you know who I am? Get ... away from me." Lewis then hit him, the report said.

Walsh told deputies Lewis was crowding him and he was punched when he tried to create space between the two.

The case is set for trial Sept. 24.

SAVANNAH, Ga. — John Travolta danced like an angel to please a crowd that had gathered to watch the shooting of a scene for his latest movie, "The General's Daughter."

Travolta was in Madison Square on Wednesday when a bystander yelled: "Do the Michael dance!"

The actor accommodated with a brief reprise of his shuffle in "Michael," a film in which he played an earthy angel.

FAMILY MATTERS

Meal times don't have to be battleground

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: My husband and I agree on almost everything that has to do with our children. The only thing that we have a problem with is our son's eating habits. He is 10 years old and will only eat a few things. He really only likes meat and chicken. He doesn't like many vegetables, no salad, no breads.

May

About the only thing normal about him is that he does like sweets, but then not ice cream! Our daughters will eat any and everything..

My husband thinks that we should make him eat whatever I fix for everyone else. Then if he doesn't eat it, I should do what Dr. Dobson says and give it to him in the morning for breakfast. That sounds mean and cruel to me, so I've refused to do it.

What does it hurt to just fix him something that he likes? I know exactly what he will eat, so why not just give him that and avoid a big fight at meal time?

I do agree with my husband that he should at least take a taste of everything that I make. I want him to enjoy different foods, and besides, it's not healthy to only eat meat. What do you think about what we should do? PICKY EATER'S MOM

DEAR PICKY: Because of the major problem with eating disorders in this country, I approach any eating-related problem very cautiously. I strongly disagree with Dr. Dobson's suggested approach, and I believe, as you do, that forcing a child to eat anything is cruel and inappropriate. Your son does have an unusual palate, but then taste buds develop as one ages.

I agree that he does need more of a balanced diet, so try to find some vegetables that he will eat. Does he like fruits? I assume that he is drinking his milk. You may want to talk to his doctor and consider supplementing his diet with vitamins.

In normal development, most people increase the variety of foods they enjoy. Tastes are constantly changing and peer pressure becomes a powerful force in this process. Like your son, I only ate a few things most of my life. It was not until I had the good fortune to marry into a family of great cooks that I realized how much I had missed all of my life.

Your son's tastes will change and expand. I do not believe making meal time a battle is necessary if you can easily prepare his meal the way he wants it at the same time. Consider allowing him to fix himself something — maybe a sandwich or cereal — if he does not want to eat what the rest of the family is eating. However, the rule should be no dessert or evening snack unless he eats a healthy meal.

DEAR FAMILY: Our whole household is stressed out again because of the oil business. We own a small business and had almost completely recovered from the last bust, and now it's happening again. My husband is depressed, stressed and not sleeping over the prospect of having to start laying off people. It is easier to let the new hires go, but when it comes to laying off employees who have been with you through thick and thin, it gets really painful.

Do you know of anything we can do to help us and our employees with this? We both hate this worse than anything. My husband knows it's not his fault, but he still feels like he's let everyone down. BUSTED AGAIN

DEAR BUSTED: Being caught in a situation outside your control is very depressing and frustrating. You can make your best efforts and still "fail" through no fault of our own. Significant human tolls occur whenever the capitalistic system shifts. These naturally-occurring events in a free market system emphasize once again the importance of being "God grounded," not other grounded.

Your husband may want to call Hospice of Midland and discuss his situation with them. They now have someone to help people going through such a crisis.

THE FOLLOWING ADDITIONAL TIPS ON IDENTIFYING HIDDEN ANGER ARE OFFERED BY THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES:

- Boredom, apathy, loss of interest in things you are usually enthusiastic about.
- Slowing down of movements.
- Getting tired more easily than usual.
- Excessive irritability over trifles.
- Getting drowsy at inappropriate times.
- Sleeping more than usual.
- Waking up tired rather than rested and refreshed.
- Clenched jaws, especially while sleeping.
- Chronically stiff or sore neck or shoulder muscles.

DEAR ABBY

Restaurant help, eager to close, sweeps diners toward door

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Last night my boyfriend and I ate at a very good Chinese restaurant. The sign says it closes at 9 p.m. We arrived at 8:45, were seated and ordered a small meal.

Van Buren

While we were starting the soup, the server brought the main course.

As we began the main course, he brought the fortune cookies and the bill and placed them on the table. He said they were closing the cash register and asked us to pay immediately.

At the same time, another employee began vacuuming around us and the other couple who were still eating.

Abby, it's a large restaurant, and they could have started cleaning at the other end of the room. The woman of the other couple asked them if they'd please turn off the vacuum, and was told they were closing.

Meanwhile, my boyfriend and I paid for a meal we couldn't enjoy. Had we known they would rush us, we could have ordered the meal to go.

We are late eaters, so we usually ask when we enter a restaurant if they're still serving.

Are restaurant closing times generally considered the same as store closings when customers should be out the door at a designated time?

What do you think, Abby? — DISAPPOINTED DINER IN SAN CARLOS, CALIF.

DEAR DISAPPOINTED: Don't fault the employees at the Chinese restaurant. The posted closing time is just that, a closing time that should be honored just as customers should abide by the closing time of a department store.

Next time you must eat late, in consideration for the restaurant owner and employees, select a restaurant with a later closing time — or order take-out.

DEAR ABBY: In response to the letters in your column about domestic abuse — one from a divorce lawyer in Florida and another from Attorney General Tom Udall of New Mexico — I am sure they both mean well, but domestic abuse is not cut-and-dried.

Yes, we need to protect women from batterers and free them from arrest when they defend themselves. But one-sided laws that protect only women (battered by men) are just quick-fix schemes — "sound bite" laws.

Blanket protection for women doesn't address gay and lesbian relationships (like it or not, they do exist — and they, too, have batterers).

Women are also batterers and abusers, not just in lesbian relationships, but also in straight relationships. Men, too, can be victims.

Laws against domestic violence should focus on the abuser, whoever the abuser is — male or female, straight or gay, rich or poor.

Law enforcement and politicians should be trained to understand all the possibilities, and then take educated action to end abuse.

We already have too many laws and too many police. What we really need now is more respect for both — and for one another. — STEPHEN RANDOLPH, SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR STEPHEN: You make a good point. However, I believe the laws are written the way they are because the vast majority of spousal battery cases involve men abusing women. After reading your letter, I would concur that the laws should be amended so that all batterers, regardless of gender, should be liable for their actions.

DEAR ABBY: It was heartwarming to see the letter shortly before Memorial Day from a 13-year-old student who wrote you about a veteran who spoke at her school. He helped all of the students to better understand the significance of the Pledge of Allegiance to our flag. It shows that our young people are concerned about liberty and justice.

I wonder how many Americans pause to consider that the pledge of the flag is really a pledge to the ideals of our forefathers. These men fought and many died to build our great nation.

The Pledge of Allegiance is a pledge to fulfill our duties and obligations as citizens of the United States and to uphold the principles of our Constitution.

As Franklin Delano Roosevelt explained, "It is a pledge to maintain the four great freedoms cherished by all Americans: freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom from want and freedom from fear.

Thank you, Abby, for the many years I have enjoyed your column. You may sign me ... KEN NELSON, SOMIS, CALIF.

DEAR KEN: Thank you for your thought-provoking letter. It is meaningful to reflect upon the fact that our founding fathers wrote our Constitution after having lived in a monarchy that guaranteed none of these blessed freedoms.

Drug takes bite out of arthritis in dogs

By Norma Martin
N.Y. Times News Service

AUSTIN — A drug that failed in humans is the key to relieving the aches and pains of doggie arthritis. Rimadyl (carprofen) is being heralded as the biggest thing in animal health news in years, said Dr. Mark Hartwell, a veterinarian at Arbor Animal Clinic in North Austin.

The medicine originally was created as a nonsteroidal pain reliever for people, but it turned their skin yellow when used in drug trials by its manufacturer, Pfizer, said Hartwell. The drug was shipped off to the pharmaceutical company's animal health division, where it was studied and tested for several years.

"Since vets can prescribe human drugs, it's not often we get a new veterinary drug," he said. "In veterinary medicine, this is a big breakthrough."

Pfizer estimates that one in five dogs eventually will develop canine arthritis. Before Rimadyl, veterinarians usually first tried aspirin, which can cause stomach upsets and sometimes impair kidney function, Hartwell said. The next choice was phenylbutazone (Butazolidin), a nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drug that also is harsh to stomachs and can lead to bone marrow problems. Rimadyl doesn't produce such adverse side effects, he said.

But Rimadyl is not cheap, said Hartwell. The drug is prescribed based on a dog's weight, and it is given twice a day. A bottle of 100 caplets for a large dog can cost nearly $100.

However, Hartwell said, the drug's cost is offset by the results it creates. He said he has been using Rimadyl on dogs for two years and the change in his four-legged patients is amazing. (The drug is for dogs only.)

■ Information desk helpers needed at Midland County Public Library to help patrons by giving directions to various departments and helping on the computer. Shifts are Saturday afternoons and evenings 5-9 p.m.

Keeping busy is key to satisfying life

By Lana Cunningham

"To serve, not to be served."

For two years, she followed the AARP (American Association of Retired Persons) motto, coordinating the cutting and sewing of more than 1,000 articles that could help patients in hospitals and nursing homes. Edwina Selman never gave a thought to how much time it took or how many requests for special articles she received. And recognition was something she never sought.

Recently, however, the national AARP honored Mrs. Selman with a special award for Distinguished Community Service for her work to bring some happiness into lives of others who are suffering.

"I was shocked when I got this award," said the 82-year-old Mrs. Selman, who admitted she is the kind of person who would rather be in the kitchen cooking and serving others. "This was a job I couldn't do by myself."

But she inspired others to help. Mrs. Selman joined Midland chapter #256 of AARP about nine years ago when a friend invited her to a meeting. When Art Shaw, a family friend, was elected president for 1994-96, he asked Mrs. Selman to take the job of Community Service Chairman. She couldn't say "no."

The idea to make large bibs and turbans for hospital patients originated with an earlier community services chairman, but not much had been done. Mrs. Selman talked to the woman and was told where the patterns and fabric were stored. "I made some more patterns. I would cut these out," and members and friends at Kingsway Mall Senior Center helped with the sewing and stuffing.

The idea for walker pockets came from a beauty shop appointment. She saw a woman in the shop who had a walker with a special pocket attached to it where the woman could keep personal items. "I studied it, then came home and made one." They were a hit at nursing homes and Memorial Rehabilitation Hospital.

First she started with turbans for cancer patients at Allison Cancer Center. When the holidays rolled around, Mrs. Selman made the turbans out of donated gold and silver metallic fabric so patients could feel more festive. Others were made of soft stretch knit and trimmed in lace to serve as sleep caps to keep the head warm on cool nights. Then came the idea for wheelchair lap robes to keep the elderly warm and brighten their winter days. The large bibs also were welcomed items at nursing homes.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Edwina Selman, 82, active volunteer, shows one of the walker pockets made during her term as Community Service Chairman for the Midland chapter of American Association of Retired Persons (AARP). She was recently honored for her work with AARP, receiving a special award for Distinguished Community Service.

A cancer patient asked for satin pillowcases, and these were added to Mrs. Selman's list. "Satin is very soft," she sid. "When the hair is gone or when it's coming back in, it's stubby. Satin feels good on the head."

Another person wanted a neck pillow and Mrs. Selman obtained her pattern from one that a friend had. She took the pillow, traced around it, and cut the pattern smaller to fit more people's necks.

An employee at Memorial Rehab called Mrs. Selman about a teenage patient who had broken his back and had a missing eye. He had asked for a bib and eye patch in hot pink fabric. She found white terry cloth, dyed it hot pink and made the matching bib, eye patch and lap robe. "They told me he was so happy about getting it."

Over the two years, Mrs. Selman and her team stitched 78 neck pillows, 90 pillowcases, 181 turbans, 10 night caps, 180 lap robes, 346 long bibs, 37 short bibs, 125 walker pockets, 36 half-pockets and 53 arm pillows, for a total of 1,126 items.

Much of the fabric was donated — friends would pick up pieces at garage or store sales.

Ironically, during the end of Mrs. Selman's turn, one of her sons was diagnosed with cancer. While she was with him in Amarillo during his last few months, friends carried on the work in Midland.

"I have always liked to do things for others. I guess I got it from my mother, and she got it from her mother. We were always helping people who needed help," said the woman who was born in Fort Worth, the eldest of six children. She married John Dee Selman, who worked for Gulf Oil 44 years before his retirement. They lived in Fort Worth for several years before being sent to Wichita Falls for 18 months. Then came the move to Midland in 1960.

Tackling obstacles wasn't something new for Mrs. Selman. During the family's years in Fort Worth, she was active in her children's PTA organizations. And that's where she learned to overcome her fear of the water. At the age of 40, she took a swim class for parents offered by the PTA.

One lesson lead to the next, and before long she not only knew how to swim, but had earned her lifesaving badge.

Then she began to teach swimming. By the time she left Fort Worth, the Tarrant County Red Cross gave Mrs. Selman a certificate for teaching 1,000 hours of swim lessons.

She laughed at the memory. Today she's still busy volunteering. No longer Community Service Chairman for AARP, she spends time with friends who need rides to a doctor's office or supermarket. "We have to turn in our hours with AARP, and in the last two months I had 100 hours of service to others," she said.

Mrs. Selman still finds time for the AARP twice-a-month luncheon meetings at Kingsway Mall Senior Center. "Membership is only $3 a year, and I enjoy the companionship and camaraderie.

And she enjoys her time as a volunteer where she can do the serving and not be served. "If you stay busy and help others, you don't get lonesome and you don't feel sorry for yourself," she said.

COMMUNITY CONNECTIONS

AARP Legacy Awards honor productive seniors

By Alexandria L. Rose

That we are all human and have common needs is not a new idea. To be productive, no matter what our age, we need to have work we enjoy and — through experience, training or aptitude — are qualified to do. But even more, we need to feel that our efforts are appreciated and our contributions are valued.

Rose

Some people need only informal recognition, which consists of appreciation expressed during everyday working relationships. Some need more formal recognition, such as awards and other tangible expressions of appreciation, usually presented in a public ceremony.

No matter the kind of recognition, it must be:

■ Timely: Doesn't it feel good when someone says, "That's exactly what we wanted! Keep going!"

■ Specific: "Thank you" is appreciated, but statements such as "You presented the project in a way that we could all understand. We could tell you spent a lot of time on your preparations," are so much more meaningful.

■ Honest: Be truthful. Avoid giving undeserved or insincere compliments.

■ Generous: Recognition cannot be given too often. It is our emotional daily bread and the driving force which empowers each of us to accomplish more for the benefit of all.

■ Personalized: We need to become aware of how those around us like to be recognized and learn to express our appreciation in ways that are meaningful to them.

We're all alike and we're all different. One of the greatest gifts we can give each other is to pay attention to individual needs and put some of our own time and effort into fulfilling them.

The American Association of Retired Persons (AARP) sponsors the Legacy Awards to recognize and reward Americans over age 50 who are providing extraordinary service to improve the quality of life within their communities. AARP honors those unsung older Americans who are using their energy and talents today to better their communities so that more older people will be encouraged to lead community action tomorrow.

The goals of the Legacy Award are:

■ To bring to public awareness individuals who exemplify a positive and productive image of aging;

■ To demonstrate new horizons for what is thought possible for older people; and

■ To inspire other older people to become involved in their communities.

Each award has a significant cash grant for a program, agency or organization that has benefited from the work of the award recipient.

Here in Midland are many people who should be nominated for this award. For more information and an application call 687-2588. Deadline for nominations is Sept. 15.

76-year-old helps police track bandit

The woman's misgivings arose when the man knocked on her door and asked for a fictitious person, said Trooper Joe Caloia.

She watched him ride off on his bicycle and then followed him in her car to a neighbor's house. He disappeared inside and reappeared with two bundles. She followed him again until he entered a nearby apartment building. She then went to the police.

"Without her, we would have had nothing," Caloia said. "And she thinks she did nothing out of the ordinary." State police did not identify the woman.

Troopers investigated and arrested a 32-year-old man they said was a suspect in four other burglaries.

Gymnast battles

NEW YORK — It was a simple vault she had done dozens of times before, but one she likely will never do again.

On Thursday, 17-year-old Chinese gymnast Sang Lan remained in a Long Island hospital bed, unable to move her legs, learning about the severity of her condition from doctors who required interpreters to deliver their somber news.

"She has begun to realize the seriousness of her injuries," the chief doctor in the case said.

Sang's parents remained half a world away, trying to get the appropriate visas to see their injured child — a trip that was likely their first outside China, officials said. And an experimental treatment of Sang, the 1997 Chinese national vault champion, could begin Thursday night only after a frustrating language barrier was cleared.

"We showed Sang Lan her X-rays and explained in more detail the extent of what has happened to her," said Dr. Brock Schnebel, the Goodwill Games' chief medical officer.

Sang, injured in a botched landing during a Tuesday warm-up for the games, was still in critical but stable condition at the Nassau County Medical Center. She began receiving treatment with a new synthetic protein designed to combat nerve damage Thursday night.

The experimental nerve re-generating drug GM-1, also known as Sygen, is administered through an intravenous drip and will continue daily for 57 days, Nassau County Executive Thomas S. Gulotta said in a statement.

But before that could start, hospital officials needed consent forms signed by a representative of China's delegation. The complicated forms were painstakingly read by interpreters to members of the Chinese delegation during the course of the day.

"Because of liability concerns, everything must be explained, and nobody speaks English," hospital spokeswoman Shelley Lotenberg said. "We want to make sure they understand everything."

Sang's parents were due in Saturday night, hours after planned fusion surgery to stabilize their daughter's spine. The family lives in the fairly remote town of Ningbo, in Shanghai.

Sang's father, a government housing worker, and her mother, a leather-factory employee, speak a different Chinese dialect and will need different translators to communicate with doctors, Lotenberg said. Hospital officials were already arranging that.

The hospital staff, moved by the gymnast's courage, signed an enormous get-well card and put a stuffed white teddy bear in her room. China's ambassador to the United Nations, Qin Huasun, was among those who had sent flowers to the injured teen.

Paralyzed Dolphin

MIAMI — Miami Dolphins guard Randy Wheeler underwent surgery Thursday to stabilize spinal injuries suffered in a car crash as he was driving to Florida to begin training camp.

Jackson Memorial Hospital spokeswoman Vicki Zambrano said Wheeler was in critical condition Thursday night, but provided no other information, including whether the operation had ended. An earlier news release said surgery was scheduled to last six hours.

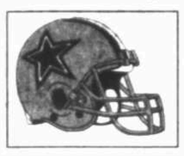

A news conference was scheduled for Friday morning with surgeons Barth Green and Nathan Lebwohl. Members of Wheeler's family also were to attend.

Dallas' new 'Hotel' Flozell makes impression with hit

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

WICHITA FALLS — It was a hit that quickly became the talk of training camp.

"It was nasty," said eyewitness Nate Newton, who saw the block that rookie Flozell (The Hotel) Adams had thrown.

"He slammed this dude down and the ground trembled," Newton said in awe. "It was a nasty incident. It reminded me of a truck hitting a fly. This dude's whole day passed away right in front of him."

The 6-foot-7, 335-pound Adams brushed off the incident as a mere "skirmish. That was just football."

Adams, the Cowboys' second-round draft choice, isn't hard to find on the practice field. He's the big guy blocking out part of the sun and any defensive lineman or linebacker who moves near him.

"He has a tremendous amount of talent," said Dallas coach Chan Gailey. "We won't push him to be a starter, but we like what we see so far. He's having an excellent training camp."

Adams, a second team All-America, is backing up Erik Williams at right tackle, but is so versatile he can play most of the positions on the offensive line.

For now, training camp is just a blur for the rookie.

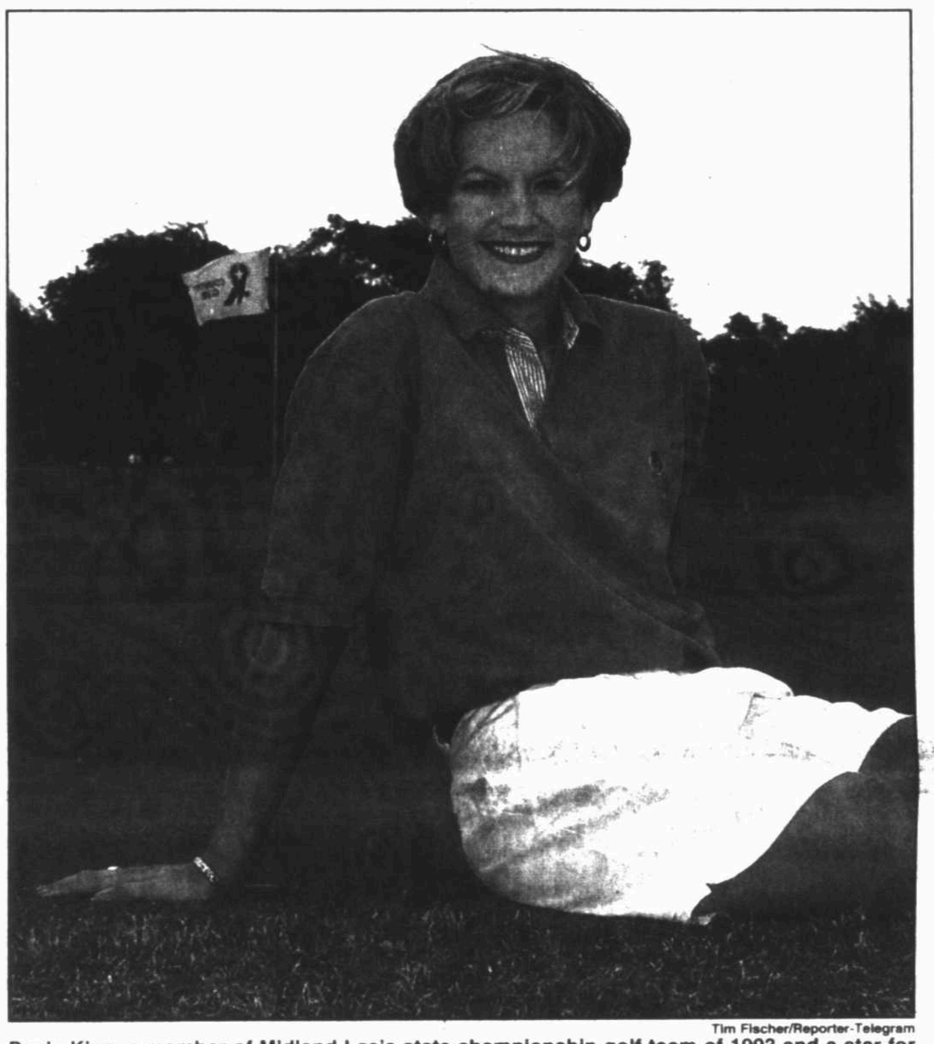

"There are a lot of things for me to work on, that's for sure," said Adams. "Everything seems to be going

Midland golfer Paula King is taking steps to make a dream come true. She's turning pro.

King, a 1993 graduate of Midland Lee who helped guide the Lady Rebels to a state golf championship in her senior season, is a May graduate of Oklahoma University where she had a stellar golf career.

The broadcast journalism major decided this week to try to earn her card for the Ladies Professional Golf Association Tour.

"Once I graduated (from OU) and played in the Big 12 tournament, I took a month off from golf to decide what I wanted to do," King said. "This is the time to do it if I'm going to play professional golf. I'm young, single and not tied down to a job. I knew I would regret it 10 years from now if I didn't take the chance. I'm going to give it a shot and see what happens."

The plan is in place. Now, action is required.

There are two LPGA sectional qualifying tournaments, one in Venice, Fla., beginning Aug. 25. The second comes in September in Rancho Mirage, Calif. King must place in the top 30 at one of those tournaments to take the next step.

"In October, there is a final qualifier in Daytona Beach, Fla.," King said. "That's where you can get your (LPGA) card. It depends on the number of exemptions they decide to give out and how many will earn their card. I don't know what it will take, but I think if you shoot anywhere around even par, that will make it. That's my goal."

Should King earn LPGA card-carrying status in the final qualifier it would be a one-year exemption. She can maintain that exemption by winning an LPGA tournament or staying in the top 150 on the LPGA money list.

During her qualifying quest, King plans to use her brother, J.J., as her caddy. J.J. King also had an impressive golf career at both Lee and Abilene Christian University.

"J.J. is going to caddy for me," King said. "I can't think of anyone who knows my game any better than he does. I just told him not to say bad things about my game."

"I estimate that it will take around $8,000 to play in both sectionals and the finals," King said. "I'd like to raise $10,000 just to make sure I have enough. It's an expensive undertaking and I'm not the type of person to go asking for money, but there are a lot of nice people in Midland who have supported me over the years."

Ranchland Hills Country Club, where King has worked in the golf pro shop during several summers over the years, is helping in her quest. RHCC is hosting a golf tournament for King on Monday, Aug. 10, for a $50 entry fee.

"Basically, the entry fee is for me and the tournament is open to anyone who wants to play. They don't have to be a member of Ranchland Hills," King said. "This is a really nice thing for the club to do for me. I can't express my appreciation."

King says that she doesn't really know what the next step will be

Bulls hire Floyd as next coach, give Jackson chance to return

By Nancy Armour
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO — Tim Floyd is just a "no thanks" away from being the Chicago Bulls' next coach. One last "no" from Phil Jackson and the deal is done.

Owner Jerry Reinsdorf introduced Floyd as "the next head coach of the Chicago Bulls" on Thursday. But before Floyd officially takes over, Reinsdorf said he would try one last time to coax Jackson — Michael Jordan's coach of choice — to return.

For the time being the former Iowa State coach is the Bulls' director of basketball operations — a coach-in-waiting.

But Jackson's agent Todd Musburger said the Bulls might as well give Floyd the job now because Jackson isn't coming back; if this arrangement is supposed to placate Jordan it won't work, he said.

"Is there, within the realm of reasonable possibilities, a scenario that would force Phil to change his mind? The answer is no," Todd Musburger said. " 'Any' is a big word. But reasonable possibility? Absolutely not."

Reinsdorf sounded a bit more hopeful earlier when he said: "If Phil Jackson changes his mind and decides to return, Michael can have the coach that he and we have always wanted. ... We're going to try one more time. And maybe Michael can talk him into it."

No, he can't, Musburger said. Jordan wouldn't even try.

"The hypothetical isn't going to stand the test," Musburger said. "Are they very close? Yes. Do they talk often? Yes. Will they share a great laugh over this latest episode in an unending string of ludicrous pronouncements? Yes, they will.

"No amount of spin-doctoring at a public press conference is going to cause him to change his mind," he added. "He's very happy in his temporary state of retirement."

Jackson, who returned almost two weeks ago from a vacation in Turkey with his wife and former Sen. Bill Bradley and his wife, wasn't available for comment.

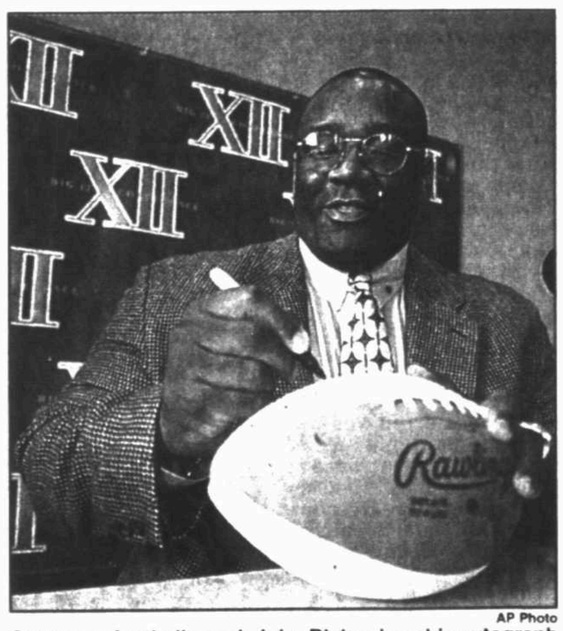

A message on his answering machine in Montana said he was "... uh, occupied right now. That could be a variety of things from riding a bike, rocking on the porch, fishing off the dock."

By leaving the door open for Jack-

Colorado, Texas Tech coaches focus on forgetting last season

By Mike Drago
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — In a profession where pressure and scrutiny are as much facts of life as gravity, Colorado coach Rick Neuheisel and Iowa State's Dan McCarney face more than their share of both in 1998.

But neither would say so Thursday as Big 12 Conference coaches and players gathered to talk about their teams' chances this season.

There also was plenty of talk about forgetting last season from Neuheisel, McCarney, Oklahoma's John Blake and Texas Tech coach Spike Dykes, whose team remains under the dark cloud of a pending NCAA decision on sanctions for rules violations.

"We went through a whole year of turmoil," Dykes said. "Nobody ever asked about our players. Everybody wanted to know about the NCAA. ... It was just a nightmare season. You're glad when it's over with."

Neuheisel, whose team went 5-6 last season after going 20-4 his first two years, knows the feeling. The Buffs were technically reduced to winless after they reported having used an ineligible player.

"When you have a season like we had it takes awhile to get that taste out of your mouth," he said.

Despite Colorado's 1997 flop, Neuheisel said he doesn't feel any additional pressure to win.

"It seems to me that every year has been a pivotal year in my career," he said. "I went from two years of 'please stay' to one year of 'please go.' So I'm somewhere in the middle of that, and hopefully I've learned to gain perspective. I'm never going to be as good as everybody thought I was and I'm never going to be as bad as everybody thought I was. I'm just going to do the very best I can, and I can live with that."

Blake, 7-16 in his third year with the Sooners, is hoping for his first winning season.

"There was pressure the first day I took the job, but I also understand the situation," he said. "Oklahoma has tradition. We want to win."

Blake insisted he has the complete backing of Okla-

Stars coaches Charles and Sherry Johnson were nationally recognized for having the largets competitive team in the United States.

Rangers' Greer stays hot vs. Royals, leads way in 8-4 win

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — If Rusty Greer hit every pitching staff the way he hits Kansas City's, he'd have the AL's highest batting average.

Greer went 3-for-5 and drove in three runs Thursday night, boosting his career average against the Royals to .366, as the Texas Rangers beat Kansas City 8-4.

That's his best average against any single opponent, but Greer said there's nothing special about Royals pitching that makes it easier to hit.

"You approach every game with the same attitude, and that's to have good at-bats and try and put the ball in play hard. My job is to get on base for Juan Gonzalez, and that's the approach I take to every game."

Greer wasn't the only Texas batter to have a big night Thursday — or the only one who's doing better against the Royals than against anyone else.

Gonzalez drove in a run for his major league-leading 114th RBI. He has 26 this season against the Royals, more than against any other team, and is one RBI away from breaking the single-season record for RBIs against one opponent.

Darryl Strawberry, then with the Dodgers, had 27 against Houston in 1991.

Bill Haselman homered and drove in two runs for the Rangers on Thursday. Ivan Rodriguez, who had been in an 0-for-12 slump, and Mark McLemore each had three hits for Texas.

Texas manager Johnny Oates gave Rodriguez a night off from catching, using him as a designated hitter.

"I was possibly going to give him (Friday) night off if he struggled offensively, but now with three hits, I know he'll be ready to play tomorrow," Oates said. "He was struggling more mentally than physically."

Jose Offerman went 4-for-4 for Kansas City. Jermaine Allensworth had three hits for the Royals.

Greer, Gonzalez and Roberto Kelly each hit RBI singles in the third. Greer added a two-out, two-run single in the fourth for a 5-0 lead.

Reliever Xavier Hernandez (5-1) defused two Kansas City rallies in the middle innings. He took over for starter Darren Oliver with two outs and three runs across in the Royals' four-run fifth, giving up an RBI single to Terry Pendleton but then retiring Sal Fasano on a fly ball.

■ AL Roundup

"Sometimes (starters) come up one out short of a win," Oates said. "As a manager, you hate making that move. But you also want to make sure ... that they don't get a loss in a well-pitched ball game. It's a gut feeling. I went as far as I could tonight."

Kansas City loaded the bases with two outs in the sixth, but Hernandez got Jeff King to ground into a force play.

The Royals stranded 12 runners, six of those in scoring position. They also had another runner doubled off third base.

The Rangers tagged Royals starter Glendon Rusch (6-12) for a career-high 13 hits in four-plus innings.

"He hasn't been real sharp with his command, and his breaking ball hasn't been as good as in the past," Royals manager Tony Muser said. "I think Glendon's trying too hard right now. Offenses like that against a young pitcher intimidate you a little bit."

Texas opened the fifth with three consecutive hits, including an RBI single through the box by Haselman that made it 6-0.

Angels 5, Twins 5

MINNEAPOLIS — Craig Shipley hit an RBI single in the 10th inning and the Anaheim Angels, after rallying for three runs in the ninth, beat the Minnesota Twins.

The Angels trailed 5-2 in the ninth before coming back against Rick Aguilera, who has blown eight of 30 save chances. Tim Salmon hit an RBI single and Jim Edmonds tied it with a two-out, two-run single.

Anaheim loaded the bases with one out in the 10th against Hector Carrasco (3-2) on a single by Cecil Fielder, a double by Salmon and an intentional walk to Garret Anderson. Shipley followed with a bloop single to center.

Pep Harris (2-0) got one out for the win and Troy Percival pitched the 10th for his 29th save. The Angels had been 0-40 when trailing after eight innings.

Tigers 3, Indians 2

CLEVELAND — Damion Easley extended his hitting streak to 19 games with a single in the sixth inning and scored the go-ahead run on Bobby Higginson's single.

Easley, who also had a 19-game hitting streak earlier this season, became the first Tigers player to have two streaks that long in the same season since 1953, when the team began keeping such records.

Frank Castillo (3-6) shut down Cleveland for 5 2-3 innings despite entering the game with an 8.07 ERA. Outdueling Jaret Wright (9-6), Castillo allowed two runs and seven hits in 5 2-3 innings.

Sean Runyan, in his major league-leading 57th appearance, got Kenny Lofton to ground out with the bases loaded to end the sixth. Doug Brocail pitched 1 1-3 innings, striking out Lofton with runners at first and third and two outs in the eighth.

Red Sox 8, Blue Jays 7, 10 innings

BOSTON — Jason Varitek's pinch-hit single in the 10th inning capped Boston's comeback from a five-run deficit.

Trailing 6-1, Damon Buford's grand slam in the eighth cut it to 6-5. Mike Stanley's RBI single in the ninth put Toronto up 7-5, but Randy Myers, who had converted 59 of his previous 62 save opportunities, couldn't get one this time as the Red Sox tied it in the ninth on John Valentin's RBI double and Troy O'Leary's run-scoring single.

Tom Gordon (5-3) held Toronto scoreless in the 10th. Myers (3-3) retired the first two batters in the bottom of the inning. But Darren Lewis singled and stole second. Valentin then was walked intentionally.

Orioles 9, Athletics 7

BALTIMORE — Lenny Webster's two-run homer in the bottom of the ninth inning lifted surging Baltimore to its 13th win in 14 games.

Webster went 4-for-5 and drove in six runs. His drive to left off Mike Fetters (1-5) followed a lead-off walk to Joe Carter. One night earlier, Fetters yielded a game-winning homer to Rafael Palmeiro in the ninth.

Webster is 17-for-30 (.567) with four homers and 15 RBIs in his last seven games.

The victory lifted Baltimore to .500 (51-51) for the first time since May 15. Armando Benitez (4-2) worked the ninth inning as the Orioles extended their home winning streak to 10.

Cardinals' Bottenfield stymies Giants, drives in run himself

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Kent Bottenfield allowed one run and three hits in seven innings and drove in a run for the first time since 1993 as the St. Louis Cardinals defeated the San Francisco Giants 8-1 Thursday.

Mark McGwire, who leads the majors with 43 homers, went 0-for-2 with three walks, an RBI and two runs scored. He was hitless in six at-bats as the Cardinals swept the two-game series in San Francisco.

McGwire flied to left in the first, grounded meekly to first in the third, drew a walk in the sixth, was intentionally walked in the seventh and walked with the bases loaded in the eighth to drive in his NL-leading 97th run.

He leads the majors with 107 walks this season.

The Giants doubled their normal attendance in the two-game series. Averaging 21,961 per game coming into the series, they drew 40,147 on Wednesday night and 46,393 Thursday — their fourth-largest crowd of 1998.

Bottenfield (3-5), who had not won since June 18, walked five and struck out three. His run-scoring groundout in the fifth was his first RBI since he had three in 1993 for the Colorado Rockies.

The Cards took a 3-1 lead in the sixth on a run-scoring groundout by Gary Gaetti and an RBI single by Eli Marrero and added two more runs in the seventh on an RBI single by Ray Lankford and John Mabry's sacrifice fly.

Marrero hit his second homer of the season leading off the eighth. The Cardinals added two more in the inning on McGwire's third walk and Lankford's sacrifice fly.

Danny Darwin (6-8) lost his fifth straight decision, allowing three runs on seven hits and three walks in 5 1-3 innings. The Giants have lost 11 of 13 games since the All-Star break.

Brent Mayne had an RBI single in the second for the Giants.

Cubs 2, Expos 1

CHICAGO — Mark Clark and Rod Beck combined on a six-hitter and the Chicago Cubs won their fifth straight game, beating the Montreal Expos.

■ NL Roundup

Clark (6-9) allowed four hits in eight strong innings. Beck pitched the ninth for his 29th save.

Jeremy Powell (0-1) lost in his major league debut. He gave up two runs and three hits in six innings.

Mets 6, Brewers 5

MILWAUKEE — Mike Piazza singled for his third hit and scored on pinch-hitter Matt Franco's single in the ninth inning as the New York Mets beat the Milwaukee Brewers for their fourth straight win.

Piazza singled off Mike Myers (2-2) with one out in the ninth. After Bernard Gilkey was hit by a pitch, Chad Fox relieved and gave up Franco's single down the third-base line.

Rockies 6, Reds 4, 1st game

DENVER — Rookie Todd Helton homered and Larry Walker had his seventh three-hit game of the season as the Colorado Rockies beat the Cincinnati Reds in the first game of a day-night doubleheader.

The Reds lost their sixth in a row following a 10-game winning streak.

Pedro Astacio (8-10) extended Colorado's scoreless innings streak to a team-record 16 innings before surrendering a three-run homer to Paul Konerko in the eighth.

Mike Remlinger (6-11) gave up two runs on 10 hits in 4 1-3 innings.

Padres 3, Diamondbacks 0

SAN DIEGO — The San Diego Padres increased their NL West lead to a team-record 13 games, defeating the Arizona Diamondbacks behind eight sharp innings by Joey Hamilton.

Hamilton (9-9) gave up four hits, struck out 10 and walked none. He won four straight decisions despite recent rumors that he was on the trading block.

The Padres won for the 10th time in 12 games to extend their lead over San Francisco, which lost 8-1 to St. Louis. Before this season, the Padres' previous biggest lead was 12 on the final two days of the 1984 season.

Trevor Hoffman pitched the ninth for his 32nd save, striking out two. He has converted 40 straight saves since last season, tying Dennis Eckersley (1991-92) for the second longest streak ever and moving him within one of the mark set by San Francisco's Rod Beck (1993-95).

Brian Anderson (7-9) allowed three runs in seven innings for the expansion Diamondbacks, who went to 1-8 against the Padres overall.

Pirates 9, Marlins 1

PITTSBURGH — Jose Guillen and Lou Collier drove in three runs apiece and Jon Lieber won his third consecutive start for Pittsburgh.

The Pirates have won six of their last seven games with Lieber (8-10) getting two victories in the span.

Gregg Zaun went 4-for-4 as Florida lost for the eighth time in nine games.

Lieber allowed 10 hits with two walks and five strikeouts in 6 1-3 innings. In nine of his last 10 starts, he has been charged with three earned runs or less and has worked at least six innings in each of his last 15 starts.

Turner Ward, Kevin Young and Jose Guillen, Pittsburgh's 3-4-5 hitters, each had three hits and went a combined 9-for-11 with five RBIs.

The Pirates scored three runs in the fourth against Brian Meadows (9-7), who had been 5-0 in his last six starts.

Braves 3, Phillies 2

PHILADELPHIA — Javy Lopez and Curtis Pride hit back-to-back homers to snap a sixth-inning tie for Atlanta.

Kevin Millwood (11-5) gave up eight hits and two runs in seven innings, and Kerry Ligtenberg struck out the side in the ninth for his 12th save.

Lopez hit his 21st homer and Pride followed with his third in the sixth off Tyler Green (6-7) to give the Braves a 3-1 lead.

Green gave up nine hits and three runs in seven innings.

Giants deal for Carter, Mesa

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Joe Carter, the hero of the 1993 World Series but a bust in Baltimore, was traded by the Orioles to the San Francisco Giants on Thursday night for minor league pitcher Darin Blood.

Carter, 38, was hitting .247 with 11 homers and 34 RBIs while splitting time between designated hitter and the outfield.

The move was announced after he scored the winning run ahead of Lenny Webster in the Orioles' 9-7 victory over Oakland. Carter walked and came in when Webster's homer gave Baltimore its 13th win in 14 games.

Carter goes from one wild-card contender to another. He joins his sixth major league team in a career that began in 1983 with the Chicago Cubs.

Carter's greatest moment came when he homered in the bottom of the ninth inning of Game 6 of the 1993 World Series to give the Toronto Blue Jays the championship over Philadelphia.

The move came two days after the Orioles said they would stand pat to mount a push for the playoffs.

"Our situation is that we've got a long ways to go to get back in the race, and we feel we're headed that way," Orioles general manager Pat Gillick said.

"But at the same time, if we feel we can pick up somebody along the way who can help us in the future, then we're going to do that. We feel that Darin Blood is that guy."

Blood, 23, was 4-5 with a 4.66 ERA at Triple-A Fresno.

Carter signed as a free agent with Baltimore before this season. He has repeatedly said he will retire after this year.

The Giants rank among the bottom in the NL with only 80 home runs this year. Earlier in the day, San Francisco made a five-player trade with Cleveland, getting reliever Jose Mesa and giving up reliever Steve Reed.

Indians trade Jose Mesa to Giants in five-player deal

CLEVELAND — Jose Mesa, the troubled Cleveland reliever who could not close out Game 7 of last year's World Series, was traded by the Indians to the San Francisco Giants for pitcher Steve Reed in a five-player deal Thursday night.

The AL Central-leading Indians also sent infielder Shawon Dunston and pitcher Al Morman to the Giants, contending for the NL wild-card spot. Cleveland got outfielder Jacob Cruz along with Reed.

Earlier in the day, the Indians acquired reliever Doug Jones — their career saves leader — from Milwaukee for pitcher Eric Plunk.

"Jose did some great things in the turnaround of this franchise," general manager John Hart said. "He saved some big games for us in some magical seasons. As much good as he did, Game 7 of the World Series just stuck with people. We just didn't see it happening for Jose here."

Mesa set a major league record with 46 saves in 48 chances in 1995 and was fourth in the AL MVP voting and second in the Cy Young race. His reliability was perhaps even more important to the Indians than Albert Belle's 50 homers and 52 doubles as they won their first pennant in 41 years.

But after a tumultuous year in which he was acquitted of rape charges, Mesa was handed a one-run lead in Game 7 against Florida last year — Cleveland's best shot at its first Series title since 1948 — and let the Marlins tie it. Florida won 4-3 in the 11th.

"I love Jose Mesa. I really do," said manager Mike Hargrove, loyal to the reliever all through his rape trial and momentous struggles on the mound. "It's unfair that Jose will be remembered as the guy that didn't get the save in the seventh game of the World Series."

Crowded by reporters at his locker, Mesa wagged his finger like Dikembe Mutombo after blocking a basketball and said, "No comment," before walking out of the clubhouse.

"I hope it's going to work out for Jose," said his agent, Alan Nero. "He really needed a change of scenery. He didn't want to get his hopes up, but he hoped there might be a trade."

Mesa, 32, was 3-4 with one save and a 5.17 ERA in 44 games. He was pitching as a setup man to Mike Jackson, the Indians' current closer, but even lost that diminished role with awful struggles at home in recent weeks.

Mesa's ERA was 7.02 at Jacobs Field this season, and 2.18 on the road. The man who was cheered as soon as he stepped on the field only three years ago was being booed relentlessly.

Top pick Etherton, two Angel relievers combine on 2-hit shutout of Captains

Staff Report

SHREVEPORT, La. — It doesn't happen very often in the Texas League but the Midland Angels got a 1-0 victory over the Shreveport Captains Thursday night.

Seth Etherton, Danny Greene and Joe Jacobsen combined for the two-hitter against the Captains. Etherton (1-1) was making his first start for the Angels since joining the team earlier in the month as a bullpen hurler. The former No. 1 draft pick out of USC went five innings, allowed just one hit and struck out 10. Angel picthers combined for 15 strikeouts on the night — a season high.

Greene went three innings, struck out four and allowed the only other Captain hit. Jacobsen recorded his first save of the season by pitching a scoreless ninth inning.

The only score in the game came in the third inning when Trent Durrington scored Jed Dalton on an RBI groundout off Shreveport starter Jason Grote (1-3). Dalton and Greg Morris combined for six of the seven Angel hits on the night.

This is the third shutout the Angels have posted this year.

Midland's Matt Beaumont (5-9, 4.70 ERA) goes on the mound against Shreveport's Joe Nathan (0-1, 9.00) at 7:35 p.m. today.

Which country is the most biodiverse?

Brazil takes the lead, according to a recent report released by Conservation International, in a list of 17 countries which rank highest in biodiversity.

In fact, more than two-thirds of the planet's plant and animal species are found in these nations. All of the countries have coastlines; only one of the countries — South Africa — has no rain forests, and only two of them — the United States and Australia — are developed nations.

The study assessed the biota of more than 200 countries worldwide and ranked them according to their biodiversity. In order, the countries are Brazil, Colombia, Indonesia, China, Mexico, South Africa, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, the United States, Papua New Guinea, India, Australia, Malaysia, Madagascar, the Democratic Republic of Congo and the Philippines.

The report also showed that four-fifths of the world's endangered species reside within these 17 nations. Officials worry that since many of these nations are developing countries, the pressures standing in the way of conservation efforts are much greater, as governments are asked to trade natural resources for increased trade and industry. They suggest that more of the limited conservation funding available be spent in such countries.

Nicklaus hobbles to 74 on first day of Senior Open

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The Golden Bear was slowed to a hobble by a sore left hip in the first round of the U.S. Senior Open.

■ Golf Roundup

Jack Nicklaus, trying to win the Senior Open for the third time, limped noticeably while carding a 74 on Thursday, and then said he had no plans to play in any more tournaments this year.

Meanwhile, only one of Nicklaus' peers — Raymond Floyd — managed to break par over the rugged Riviera Country Club course, shooting a 1-under 70 thanks to consecutive birdies at the 15th, 16th and 17th holes.

"I had a problem with it," he said. "It generally doesn't bother my swing, but it did today. It'll be better tomorrow, I hope. I never know from day to day what's going to happen."

When did the pain start?

"Thirty-five years ago in San Francisco," he said with a smile. "Today, probably about 8 or 9. That hip has been a problem for 35 years. My hardest part was just playing well.

"I purposely am going to have it be my last event of the year so I can figure out what to do."

Later, Nicklaus backed off that statement a little bit, saying, "I don't have any other tournaments scheduled right now. I'm not going to play again until I can do what I need to do with the leg. I'll figure out what I need to do (next week)."

Hip replacement surgery seems likely in the near future for arguably the greatest golfer of all time.

Nicklaus, who opted not to play in the British Open last week, snapping his streak of competing in 146 straight PGA Tour majors, was four shots off the pace entering Friday's second round on the 6,906-yard, par-71 Riviera course.

Floyd, in search of his first Senior Open victory, pointed to patience and the mental side of the game as key factors in the fast finish that gave him a one-shot lead over Jay Sigel, Bruce Summerhays, Hugh Baiocchi, Bob Murphy and club pro Roy Vucinich.

"I hit some good shots that weren't rewarded," said the 55-year-old Floyd, whose last tournament victory was the Ford Senior Players Championship in 1996. "I kept plugging along. I really played well coming in.

"I made about a 12-footer at 16, a 12-footer at 15, and put it within a foot at 17."

Floyd, who ranks 16th on the senior tour earnings list at $471,692, said he was prepared for this tournament.

"I'd like to win the U.S. Senior Open. I think it is the most important championship on the senior tour," he said. "When you get to a major, if you can't get keyed up for that, then probably you should be doing something else."

All five golfers who equaled par seemed pleased with their efforts.

"Par will be a wonderful score at the end of the week," Murphy said after a round that included an eagle-3 on the first hole, a double bogey-6 on the third hole, four bogeys and four birdies.

"I think par is going to be a heck of a score," Baiocchi said.

AP Photo

Isao Aoki grimaces after hitting a bad shot on the 10th hole during Thursday's first round of the U.S. Senior Open at Riviera Country Club in Los Angeles.

Larry Nelson, considered one of the pre-tournament favorites along with Irwin and Gil Morgan, withdrew after his tee shot on the ninth hole due to soreness in his right arm and the right side of his neck. He was 6-over through eight holes.

Wood, Horgan take lead in Charity Classic

SUTTON, Mass. — Willie Wood and P.H. Horgan III were each 7-under-par when darkness suspended play of rain-delayed first round of the final CVS Charity Classic.

Mike Springer was the leader in the clubhouse after one round, shooting a 6-under 65 on the 7,110-yard, par-71 Pleasant Valley Country Club course. Steve Flesch was minus-5, and eight golfers were at minus-4.

Sixty players in the field of 158 did not finish because of a 3-hour, 42-minute delay for rain, wind and lightning. But those who started late had the advantage of playing most of their round with soft greens and light wind.

Horgan played just one hole before the break, then came out and birdied his first three holes after that to reach 3-under after four. He also birdied Nos. 10, 11 and 13 before dropping a 15-foot putt at the horn to tie Wood at minus-7.

Rose flounders in Dutch Open; Westwood shoots course-record 63

HILVERSUM, Netherlands — Lee Westwood had two eagles and six birdies in the first round of the Dutch Open for a course record-tying 8-under-par 63.

But at the other end of the leaderboard, English teenage prodigy Justin Rose's first round as a professional on the European Tour turned sour as he shot a 6-over-par 77.

Rose, 17, who tied for fourth in the British Open last Sunday playing as an amateur, turned pro Wednesday and won a pro-am tournament here.

But barring a sensational turnaround, he has almost no chance of celebrating his first pro tournament with a victory and will be hard-pressed to make Friday's second-round cut. The top 65 players qualify for the weekend's third and fourth rounds, with even par or 1 under likely to be the cutoff mark.

Englishman Westwood held a two-shot lead over Norwegian Per Haugsrud, German Sven Struever and Englishman Jonathan Lomas.

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

NEW YORK — The NBA players union filed an unfair labor practice charge with the National Labor Relations Board on Thursday, seeking to end the three-week-old lockout because it was imposed improperly.

The union alleges the NBA imposed the lockout without having bargained to an impasse as required under the National Labor Relations Act.

"The NBA can't call a lockout until games are scheduled to begin," union director Billy Hunter said. "At this point, any unilateral change, including a ban on free agent signings, is premature and impermissible under the labor laws."

The NLRB played a major role in bringing the baseball strike to an end in 1995, finding that owners had not bargained in good faith up until the point when the players went on strike. The NLRB asked a federal judge to grant an injunction restoring baseball's old work rules, and the strike ended March 31, 1995, when Judge Sonia Sotomayor granted the injunction.

"The board will determine, on as prompt a basis as possible, whether the rights of the basketball players, as employees, have been violated," said Daniel Silverman, regional director of the NLRB's New York office. "We fully recognize the needs of the parties and the public for a decision without delay, and we will do our best to meet that objective."

Silverman said his office will conduct an investigation over the next few weeks, then make a determination what to do next.

If the board agrees with the union, it can ask a federal judge to issue an injunction restoring terms of the old collective bargaining agreement that expired June 30.

"NBA players want to play ball," Hunter said. "The players have instructed us to do everything in our power to prevent NBA owners from delaying the start of the 1998-99 season."

In its one-page filing, the union said the lockout is not really a lockout, but rather a unilateral imposition of changes to work rules. The union asked that an injunction be granted so players can be allowed to negotiate and sign contracts under terms of the old agreement.

The labor battle is being fought on several fronts.

Commissioner David Stern and Hunter met Tuesday for breakfast and agreed to resume formal talks. They were to confer again Friday to set a date.

The union has filed a grievance with arbitrator John Feerick on behalf of some 200 players with guaranteed contracts who are not being paid during the lockout. The league has sued the union in federal court, seeking a ruling saying it should not have to pay players during a lockout and that Feerick should be prevented from holding an arbitration hearing on the complaint.

The union has yet to respond to the owners' suit.

BULLS: Floyd is coach-in-waiting

son's return — regardless of how remote a possibility it is — Reinsdorf was clearly playing to Jordan, who said again last week he wouldn't play for anyone but Jackson.

Reinsdorf asked Jackson to return for one more year after the Bulls won their sixth NBA title in eight years last month, but Jackson declined, saying he needed to step away from the game.

Besides his deep loyalty to Jackson, Jordan doesn't want to be part of a rebuilding effort. At 44, Floyd has a solid track record as a college coach, but he doesn't have any NBA experience.

And while he wants to be Chicago's head coach, he doesn't want to be the person who drives Jordan out of basketball.

"What I've tried to do is make sure that he will feel comfortable with this. This is all about Michael's wishes. And if Phil Jackson wants to return, I will step away," Floyd said.

"If Phil doesn't return, I hope Michael will come back and play with me."

Jordan has said he won't make any official decision on his future until the NBA lockout ends.

"Certainly the coaching situation is one piece of the puzzle, but it's not the only piece of the puzzle," said David Falk, Jordan's agent. "It would be unfair to Tim Floyd for people to think Michael would make a career decision based on an individual he's never met."

A fishing buddy of general manager Jerry Krause's, Floyd has long been considered Jackson's replacement. The Bulls also interviewed current NBA assistants Rick Carlisle, Ron Rothstein, Scott Skiles and Paul Silas.

With his wife, daughter and mentor Don Haskins looking on, Floyd looked a little uneasy as he sat next to Reinsdorf and Krause at the news conference. He cracked a few jokes and smiled often, doing his best to win people over.

Call him anything, he said, but "Jerry Krause's boy."

Floyd was 243-130 during his college coaching career and his only losing season (12-18) was his last one. He was 81-47 in his four years at Iowa State and was runner-up for the AP's national coach of the year in 1995-96, when the Cyclones finished 24-9 despite losing four starters.

Jordan said he doesn't want to learn a new coach's style, and Floyd said that's fine with him. He doesn't plan on doing too many things differently than Jackson did.

He wants to keep veteran assistant Tex Winter, the creator of the Bulls' vaunted triangle offense, as well as assistants Frank Hamblen and Bill Cartwright. He'll spend the summer picking Winter's brain, learning the offense and defense that's worked so well for Chicago.

"There's not a whole lot broken around here. And I don't think that there's a whole lot that I'm going to need to try to have to fix," Floyd said. "My hope is for it to look exactly the same way. That's how much respect I have for what's gone on around here and what Phil Jackson did."

Floyd knows he's got a tough job ahead of him, especially if Jordan doesn't come back. Fairly or unfairly, he'll be seen as the one who drove perhaps the greatest player ever into retirement.

All Floyd asked of Jordan — and Chicago fans — was a chance to show what he can do.

"I don't know if anybody can fill Phil Jackson's shoes," he said. "All I can do is try to achieve to the best of Tim Floyd's abilities."

Watts finds way home after building his career overseas

By Brad Townsend
The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — After the performance of his career, a week that no doubt will forever change their lives, Brian Watts and wife Debbye took a fittingly long and circuitous route home Monday.

They left Southport, England, where Brian finished second to Mark O'Meara on Sunday in the British Open. Then it was on to Manchester, England; to Chicago; to Harrison, Ark., to pick up year-old son Jason; and home to Edmond, Okla.

Compared to Brian's career path, Monday's was a short commute.

"It's been a long road," said Watts, 32. "Sometimes it's been hard. But I also feel very fortunate to have the opportunities I've had."

Now, thanks to the $329,000 he earned Sunday at Royal Birkdale, the Carrollton Newman Smith (High School) product can say "sayonara" to the Japanese PGA Tour.

He can say goodbye to five years of 14-hour flights between Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport and Tokyo's Narita Airport; to cramped, $200-a-night hotel rooms; to 22 weeks a year of playing on the opposite side of the globe from Debbye and Jason.

Though Watts said he has not made a firm decision, all signs point to him playing on the PGA Tour next year. His second-place check Sunday virtually guarantees he will finish among the tour's top 125 money winners, good for a one-year exemption.

"I'm happy for him," said Scott Verplank, Watts' close friend and former Oklahoma State teammate. "I know he wants to play over here, to be closer to his son.

"He's got some obligations in Japan, sponsorship stuff. But I would be pretty surprised if next year he didn't play a full PGA Tour schedule."

It isn't, however, as though Watts were dying to get off the Japanese tour. In fact, he said he hopes his British Open performance proves what he has been saying about the tour since he joined it in 1993.

"Hopefully, I moved up a little notch, gained some respect for the Japanese tour," Watts said. "A lot of people have been writing bad things about Jumbo Ozaki (the 51-year-old Japanese star). I can tell you, he's a much better player than I am.

"For people to say, 'The guys over there aren't good,' those people don't come over and watch them play."

Watts won the Class 5A state championship in 1984 and the NCAA Championship in 1987, but he considers himself a product of the Japanese tour.

He turned pro after his final year at Oklahoma State, 1988, but missed earning his PGA Tour card for the 1989 and '90 seasons. He qualified for the 1991 PGA Tour season, but in 29 events he missed 18 cuts, earned only $40,000 and lost his card.

In the midst of an unsuccessful 1992 season on the Hogan Tour (now the Nike Tour), Watts admitted he "was contemplating doing something else." But in April of that year, he turned to his New Orleans-based teacher, Rob Noel.

"We pretty much overhauled everything," Watts said. "I took about three steps backward to get six or seven steps forward."

Watts attempted PGA Tour qualifying school in the fall of 1992, and when he came up short, decided to play the Asian Tour. That's where he earned his first big break, winning the 1993 Hong Kong Open. The victory earned him a playing card on the more prestigious Japanese tour.

There are professional tours in Australia, South Africa and India, among others, but Watts said he believes the Japanese tour is the third-strongest in the world, behind the PGA Tour and European PGA Tour.

Still, Watts conceded, the PGA Tour and Japanese tour are vastly different.

"First of all, the competition (on the Japanese) tour is a lot less," he said. "That's nothing against the Japanese tour. It's just the fact the American tour is so strong, from No. 1 to 156 players each week.

"And Japan doesn't have the land it needs to build really fine golf courses, so we (in Japan) tend to play on a lot of courses that are on sides of mountains, those kinds of things."

Watts said Japanese tour courses average about 7,000 yards, or about 150 yards less than most PGA Tour tracts.

Even after five years, Watts struggles with the language barrier. Watts admitted he has "very little" communication with playing partners during rounds, unless he's paired with one of the other Americans on tour (Brandt Jobe or David Ishii) or one of about a dozen Australians.

"In press conferences, I have to have interpreters answer the questions," he said. "I can go through my round shot-by-shot in Japanese, but that's about it when it comes to press conferences."

Food isn't a problem because, as Watts says, "I eat anything but sushi." Although he has made more than 475 million yen (roughly $4.5 million) on the Japanese tour, he lives far from luxuriously.

"I can't afford a house there," he said. "I can't afford an apartment that I'd like. The hotels are $150 to $200 a day, for something very marginal. I wouldn't say it's a great lifestyle over there, but I get by."

He has been a celebrity in Japan ever since 1994, when he won the money title. Along with seeing his picture on the side of buses and on billboards, Watts often has fans see him on the streets and say, "Oh, Brian Watts."

"Most of the people who play golf over there are over 40," he said. "I'd say I'm very well known to over 40-year-olds."

No wonder the decision to play on the PGA Tour isn't cut and dried. All of Watts' sponsorships are with Japanese companies. He will walk away from more than $1 million a year in on- and off-course earnings by returning to America.

But Watts will be closer to Debbye and Jason, even during weeks he's playing PGA Tour events. Brian missed it when Jason took his first steps last week. Debbye videotaped the moment, but Brian doesn't want to miss many more of his son's milestones.

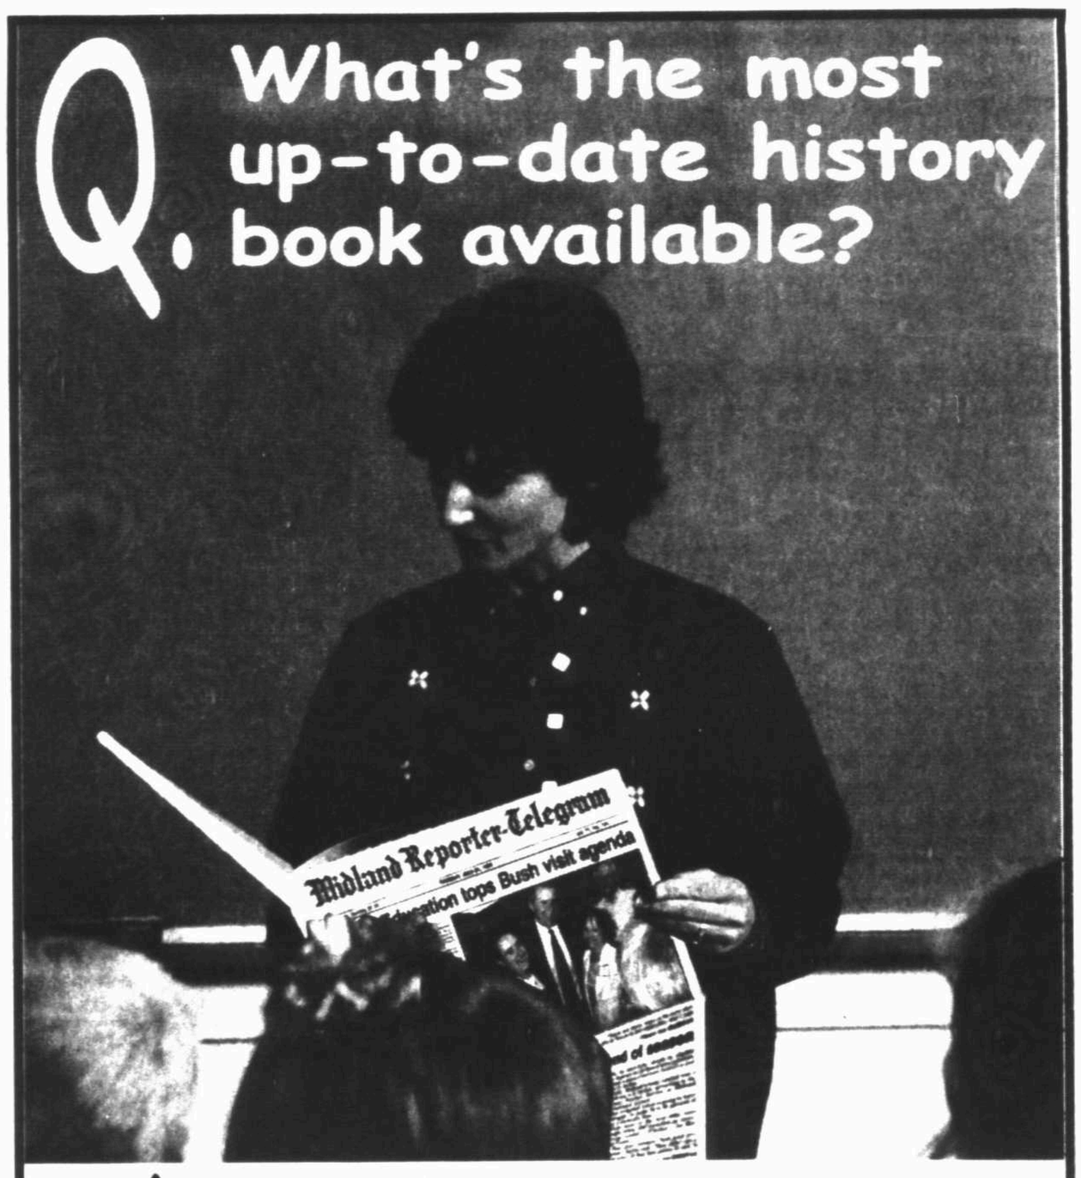

"I feel worse for her (Debbye) than for me," Watts said. "She's the one who's always there, knowing when I'm missing things."

Verplank said he looks forward to having Watts, the friend, on tour. And he believes Watts will fare much better than he did in '91.

"The British Open should help his confidence immensely," Verplank said. "I remember the last couple of years, that was the thing that kind of held him back a little bit. He was obviously confident in Japan, not quite as confident here.

"The British Open is the world's stage. That ought to prove to him that he can get it done."

United States' Julich challenging for lead

By Salvatore Zanca
Associated Press Writer

■ Tour de France

TARASCON-SUR-ARIEGE, France — An American is in contention for the title in the Tour de France. And he isn't named Greg LeMond.

Bobby Julich of Glenwood Springs, Col., is within 71 seconds of defending champion Jan Ullrich with the Tour taking a rest day before heading to the Alps.

The Tour starts again with a 137-mile leg from Tarascon-sur-Ariege to Cap d'Agde on Friday. The riders slowly are making their way across southern France before hitting the Alps on Monday.

To be challenging for the top spot in the Tour was unexpected for the 26-year-old Julich, who rides for the French Cofidis team. He was recruited for the team last year along with three other Americans: Lance Armstrong, Frankie Andreu and Kevin Livingston.

Armstrong never rode for Cofidis, recovering from testicular cancer last year and signing with the U.S. Postal team along with Andreu. Livingston is still with Cofidis.

Julich rewarded Cofidis for its confidence with a 17th in the Tour last year.

"Since last year I knew I could have a good result this year," Julich said. "When I started this year's Tour I hoped to be in the top 10."

"After the first week, I thought 'OK. Maybe the top 15.' Now I see myself in Paris in the top three," he said.

What caused him to change his mind was a series of performances that kept him close to Ullrich.

Last Saturday, Ullrich won the first time trial, but Julich was third.

Julich stayed with Ullrich in the two stages in the Pyrenees. He was fourth Tuesday and third Wednesday, with Ullrich coming in eighth both times. Ullrich relaxed a little, giving up seven seconds to Julich as the American moved within 71 seconds of the overall lead.

That has been the closest an American has come to the lead of the Tour since the glory days of LeMond, who won in 1986, 1989 and 1990 before retiring in 1994.

"I realize now how much Greg influenced me in participating in the Tour and being American," Julich said. "Perhaps some day I can do the same thing for kids in my country."

During the early 1990s, Julich was a rising star in the junior ranks, coming in fifth in the Tour DuPont in 1991 as a 19-year-old.

Yet he never really blossomed. He even had to work without a team one year before joining the U.S. Motorola team, the successor of the 7-Eleven team. He came to Cofidis with Armstrong after Motorola dropped out of cycling.

Bernard Quilfen, director of the Cofidis team, is confident his team can help Julich.

"The riders are ready to protect and defend the second place of Bobby," Quilfen said. "He showed he is a good rider after his fourth place in the Disneyland time trial last year. Now he is a year older and has really matured this year."

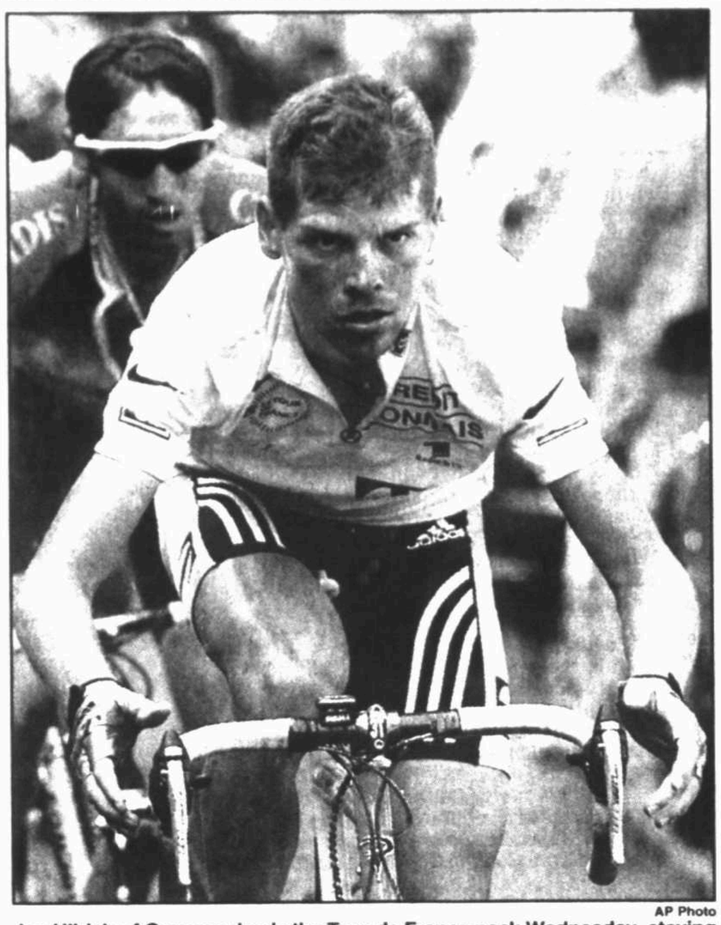

There are three stages before three days in the Alps could decide things.

Julich knows it will be tough to overcome the advantage Ullrich has. Ullrich won the Tour last year by more than nine minutes.

"Ullrich is very, very strong. He has a lot of experience and I respect him a lot," said Julich. "But I hope there will be a big battle in the Alps."

The three days in the Alps will have 12 climbs, with two of the climbs on Monday being rated "out of category" on a scale of steepness, length and difficulty.

If there is a narrow gap between the riders coming out of the mountains, it may come down to the 32-mile time trial to Le Creusot on Saturday, Aug. 1, the day before the Tour finishes in Paris.

Shoot fighting comes to Ector Co. Coliseum

Staff Report

For the first-time, shoot fighting, a form of competition which combines the grappling rules of submission wrestling with the striking rules of kickboxing, comes to the Permian Basin this weekend.

At 7:30 p.m. Saturday night, the USWF Shoot Fighting Spectacular takes place at the Ector County Coliseum.

On the card will be a heavyweight tournament, middleweight tournament and a World Light-Heavyweight title fight, which will feature world champion Paul Jones of Iowa and David Davis of Myrtle Beach.

The USWF will also bring three-time Ultimate Fighting Champion and former World Shoot Champion Frank Shamrock to the Ector County Coliseum for a special appearance.

USWF, Inc. is currently the No. 1 drawing company in martial arts entertainment, even drawing more fans to arenas than Ultimate Fighting, according to organizers.

Local Permian Basin fighters include Heath Bridges, Johnny Gomez, Nathan Moore, Tommy Moore, Joe Morales, Jr., Bobby Pierce, Jimmy Lara, Chris NaJara and Jason Heineman.

Shoot fighting has weight divisions. Fighters are allowed to strike with the hands, feet, or knees. Hand strikes are allowed to any part of the body or head, with the exception of groin, but must be openhanded. All throws and submission techniques are permitted. Bouts are fought in one 15-minute round, and won by knockout or submission.

Advanced tickets can be purchased at Luskey's Western Stores in Midland or Odessa or purchased at the gates. Tickets are $40 (first row), $30 (second row), $25 (third-ninth rows), $20 (10th-17th rows) and $15 (general admission). Children's general admission is $5.

American college kids playing well

■ United States team reaches gold medal game in Goodwill Games basketball competition.

By Bill Barnard
AP Basketball Writer

NEW YORK — A group of college kids is proving the critics wrong in the Goodwill Games.

Seemingly too inexperienced to match up against veteran international opponents, the U.S. basketball team dominated its third straight game after a disheartening opener, and now finds itself in the gold-medal game.

"The best basketball talent obviously has gone on to the NBA," coach Clem Haskins said after the United States defeated Lithuania 89-76 Thursday night in the semifinals. "We could have guys like Kevin Garnett on this team, but these guys are very coachable and I wouldn't trade them for anyone else. But we have a tough task ahead against a team with three NBA-quality players."

The Americans will play Friday night against Australia, which beat defending champion Puerto Rico 86-74. Shane Heal, on the Minnesota Timberwolves roster two seasons ago; Chris Antsey of the Dallas Mavericks; and Andrew Gaze, a Seton Hall star in 1989 who had short NBA tryouts, are three of Australia's top players.

NBA stars from the United States never were scheduled to play in this tournament, even before the current labor dispute. So this U.S. team is a young college squad.

It started the Goodwill tournament by taking a 19-point lead over Puerto Rico, then losing by eight. Undaunted, the Americans came back to defeat Brazil and China to reach the medal round.

"I was down a little bit on Monday after we lost Sunday night, but the guys bounced back and have played extremely well," Haskins said. Referring to the team's 10-for-17 3-point shooting Thursday night, he added, "We're starting to shoot the ball extremely well."

■ Goodwill Games Roundup

A 3-pointer by Wally Szczerbiak of Miami-Ohio, who led a balanced U.S. offense with 20 points, gave the Americans a 19-point lead over Lithuania with 14 1/2 minutes left.

That was about the time the U.S. folded against Puerto Rico. But this time, the Americans held steady, and seven points in a 2 1/2-minute span by Keith Carter of Mississippi made it 76-51 with 9:09 to go.

"At that point, we knew what we had to do to bury this team," Carter said. "On Sunday, we didn't do that."

Duke's Elton Brand scored 15 points, Carter had 12, Andre Miller of Utah 11 and Jumaine Jones of Georgia 10 for the United States.

Danius Adomaitis led Lithuania with 21 points.

Szczerbiak had three 3-pointers and 13 points in the first half for the United States, carrying it to a 51-35 lead. Lithuania, which will play Puerto Rico in the bronze-medal game Friday night, got no closer than the final margin in the second half.

Asked how the team recovered mentally from losing a big lead against Puerto Rico, Szczerbiak credited Haskins.

"He took the positives from the game," Szczerbiak said. "Obviously, we did something right to lead by 19, so we took that and built on it."

Lithuania assistant Donnie Nelson said the Americans jelled quickly after the Puerto Rico loss.

"I think the key for them is athleticism," Nelson said. "Now that they've had some time to play together, they're going to be hard to beat."

Heal led Australia with 21 points, and Tony Ronaldson had 20, including two 3-pointers during a 14-0 burst at the start of the second half that extended a three-point lead to 58-41.

Gaze, who led Seton Hall to the NCAA championship game in 1989, scored 15 points and Antsey had 14.

"The Goodwill Games are no longer a tune-up," Gaze said. "We were out there to win a medal. The Goodwill Games are earning a fair amount of prestige, and to come away with a medal is important.

"It's not the Olympics or the World Championships, but it means a lot to us and the Australian public. No matter where we play, we represent Australia because we wear the green and gold."

Jose Ortiz, formerly of the Utah Stars, led Puerto Rico with 23 points.

Trent Wells of Keizer, Ore., thought he had a silver medal in the men's parallel bars but wound up with no medal at all. Judges twice changed scores after reviewing routines and dropped Wells from a tie for second to fourth, behind Xu Huang of China, Ivan Ivankov of Belarus and Aleksei Bondarenko of Russia.

Ivankov then won the high bar, holding off Russia's Alexei Nemov. It was the fourth medal for Ivankov, including the all-around gold. Bondarenko finished with three silvers and two bronze.

In rhythmic gymnastics, Alina Kabayeva of Russia won the all-around gold, leading each of the four disciplines.

Diving began, with world champion Irina Lashko of Russia winning the 1-meter springboard over China's Guo Jingjing. The Chinese pair of Tian Liang and Sun Shuwei won the men's synchronized platform gold, posting the day's only perfect scores.

Beach volleyball's grand old man, 41-year-old Sinjin Smith, injured his left calf as he and U.S. teammate Ricci Luyties lost 15-5 to Canada's John Child and Mark Heese. Smith returned to the match after a 5-minute timeout and said he would play Friday against the top U.S. team, Karch Kiraly and Adam Johnson, which lost to Brazil's Guilherme Marques and Para Ferreira 15-3. Brazil scored the first three points and then ran off seven in a row for a 10-1 lead.

In other matches on the Central Park sand, Martin Conde and Esteban Martinez of Argentina took 1 hour, 19 minutes and 135 serves to defeat defending champions Jan Kvalheim and Bjorn Maaseide of Norway 16-14, and Julien Prosser and Leo Zahner of Australia beat Martin and Paul Laciga of Switzerland 15-13.

USA Basketball selects final roster of 12 players

Associated Press

The NBA lockout prompted USA Basketball to replace all-stars such as Gary Payton and Grant Hill with a hodgepodge of college, CBA and professionals playing in Europe. Those 12 players were identified Thursday.

"Players from every cut of basketball life," said Houston Rockets coach Rudy Tomjanovich, who will coach the Americans when play begins Wednesday in Athens.

They've been together only three weeks and among the dozen who survived the final cut were Big Ten player of the year Mateen Cleaves of Michigan State, and Jimmy King, who played for Michigan teams that reached two NCAA championship games.

"For us to be successful, the defense has to be our foundation," Tomjanovich said after the team arrived Thursday in Rome from its Monte Carlo training camp.

"We're also not very big, so we'll have to do a lot of good work to get bodies in good positions on the boards."

"This is a group I'm growing closer and closer to. It's a dream for them," Tomjanovich added. "And I know they're feeling honored to have the opportunity."

The 12-member roster also includes Brad Miller, who graduated from Purdue this year; Wendell Alexis, a 1986 Syracuse graduate who plays for Alba Berlin in Germany; Ashraf Amaya (Southern Illinois 1993) who plays for the CBA's Idaho Stampede; Bill Edwards (Wright State 1993), who plays for Virtus Rome; Kiwane Garris (Illinois 1997), who plays for Grand Rapids of the CBA; and Michael Hawkins, a 1995 Xavier grad who plays for Olympiakos, Greece.

Also selected were Gerard King, a 1996 Nicholls State grad who plays in Siena, Italy; Jimmy Oliver (Purdue 1991) who plays for Ciudad De Huelva, Spain; Jason Sasser (Texas Tech 1996), who plays for the CBA's Sioux Falls Skyforce and for Caja San Fernando, Spain; and David Wood, (Nevada Reno 1987), who plays for the CBA's Rockford Lightning and for Unicaja Malaga, Spain.

The Americans, who face Italy on Saturday in their final tuneup, beat France 93-63 and Spain 95-78 in their first two exhibitions.

Without the Dream Team, the world championship will be wide open, with half of the 16 teams holding realistic hopes to win it.

Only one NBA player is listed on the rosters, Chris Anstey of the Dallas Mavericks with Australia. Teams can change their rosters 24 hours before the first games Wednesday, though few are expected to do so.

Officials of FIBA, the world governing body of basketball, said Thursday that neither Yugoslavia nor Lithuania, two traditional powers, would be fielding NBA players.

KING: Lee grad goes pro

should she fail to earn her LPGA card through the qualifying process.

"There are other options," King says. "There are two mini-tours, the Players West and the Futures Tour. They are a lot like the Nike Tour which comes here every year.

"However, I would much rather play good in Florida and then get the card in the final qualifier. I really haven't decided what I will do beyond that. The mini-tours are an option and I'm looking at that, but the first thing is to try to make it through the qualifiers."

King's dream of playing professional golf began early.

"I've been around the golf course since I was two years old," King said. "I didn't really start playing until I was 10, but years before that I would go to tournaments and watch my dad and brother play. Dad would let me drive the golf cart around the course and I liked that more than the golf.

"In fact, I thought golf was a stupid game until I started playing. Since I was 10, I've always had the dream of playing on the LPGA Tour."

King quickly became a good player. She qualified for a individual state berth as a junior in 1992 while at Lee. The next year she qualified with her team and that team brought home the state championship.

That gave her the chance to earn a golf scholarship at OU where she became a first team All-Big Eight selection in her freshman year. She got to play in two national college tournaments as a freshman and sophomore.

"I was really disappointed that we didn't make the region or national tournaments the last two years because I got to do that the first two years I was at Oklahoma," King said. "But I really enjoyed playing golf there. We traveled all over the country and played coast to coast. We also played in Hawaii."

Chang breezing through Legg Mason

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Not even a rainstorm could cool Michael Chang on Thursday in the Legg Mason Tennis Classic.

The top-seeded Chang cruised to his 14th straight victory at the FitzGerald Tennis Center with a 6-4, 6-1 third-round victory over Martin Damm of the Czech Republic.

Second-seed Andre Agassi, a three-time Legg Mason champion, also advanced with a 6-3, 6-4 victory over Christophe Van Garsse of Belgium.

It was the second victory for Agassi over Van Garsse in less than a week. The two met last weekend in Indianapolis in Davis Cup action.

A two-time Legg Mason defending champion, Chang also won two singles matches here last September in a Davis Cup semifinal against Australia.

"D.C.'s been a good place for me. I feel comfortable with the courts, the setting and the crowd support," Chang said.

Chang was serving for the first set at 5-3 when a flash of lightning caught the players attention. Damm broke Chang as play continued to the sound of not-so-distant thunder.

"It took my mind off the situation a little bit. You hear thunder and you start looking up to the sky. Nobody wants to get hurt," Chang said.

During the changeover at 5-4 the storm hit and play was delayed for almost 90 minutes. Chang broke Damm's service after the delay to win the first set and then cruised to victory in the second set.

■ Tennis Roundup

Playing in much cooler conditions after the storm, unseeded Sebastian Lareau of Canada, sixth-seed Vincent Spadea and seventh-seed Jim Courier advanced with third-round victories.

Courier took care of Davis Cup teammate Justin Gimelstob 6-3, 6-4 and will face Chang in a quarterfinal Friday.

Advancing earlier Thursday were third-seed Wayne Ferreira of South Africa, fifth-seed Filip DeWulf of Belgium and 14th-seed Scott Draper of Australia.

Draper beat fourth-seed Byron Black of Zimbabwe 6-2, 6-4. The left-hander from Brisbane had bounced Byron's brother, Wayne, out of the tournament in the second round.

Ferreira took care of his second straight crowd-pleaser. On Tuesday Ferreira stopped the comeback of Jimmy Arias and on Wednesday he ended the run of qualifier David Caldwell, who grew up in Richmond, Va.

Caldwell couldn't handle Ferreira's serve, which clocked 123 mph. Caldwell, 0-5 on the tour before his two victories this week, fell 7-5, 6-3.

Becker and Rios advance to quarterfinals

STUTTGART, Germany (AP) — Chile's Marcelo Rios made it look easy, Boris Becker struggled, and both won their second-round matches in 104-degree heat at the Mercedes Cup on Thursday.

Rios beat Hendrik Dreekman of Germany 6-3, 6-4. Becker needed two hours, 8 minutes and several outbursts of temper to finally oust Spain's Felix Mantilla 7-6 (7-2), 7-5.

Rios and Becker, both of whom have been No. 1 in the world rankings, will meet in the quarterfinals on Friday.

Each will have something special at stake.

Rios would vault past Pete Sampras back to the top spot in the rankings if he reaches the final.

Becker, who is in semiretirement, still is looking for elusive first clay-court title.

French Open champion Carlos Moya also breezed into the quarterfinals with a 6-2, 6-2 win against Dominik Hrabty of Slovakia.

Gustavo Kuerten, seeded 13th, advanced with a 7-6 (7-5), 6-4 victory over fellow Brazilian Fernando Meligini, while No. 5 Karol Kucera of Slovakia downed Sweden's Magnus Gustafsson, 6-1, 6-3.

Becker complained bitterly to the umpire about being disturbed by Mantilla's loud grunts, which came long after the Spaniard had hit the ball.

He also complained directly to the Spaniard with the dyed-blonde hair.

"We exchanged a couple of words out there — but they came from both sides," said Becker.

New Nebraska football coach Frank Solich signs another football during the Big 12 Conference media day luncheon Thursday in Dallas. Solich takes over for Tom Osbourne after 19 years as an assistant at Nebraska.

Solich recalls moment when he inherited top job in 'Husker dynasty

By Mike Drago
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — New Nebraska coach Frank Solich says was sitting in his office one day last summer when Tom Osborne popped in to mention that Solich would soon inherit one of the nation's storied football programs.

"Coach is not one for a lot of flair," Solich said. "This was very casually done. ... He said he just felt that was going to be it. He was going to retire. The only question he had was when to announce it."

"I bet the whole thing didn't take more than 10 minutes."

Solich wasn't completely surprised by the decision. Osborne had previously expressed his intention to recommend Solich when he retired. But Solich was nonetheless taken by the moment.

"I just said to myself, 'Well, this is it,' Solich said. "The thought of running the program hit me immediately ... It was a very exciting moment for me but I didn't have anyone to celebrate it with, so I just sat there."

His next challenge was keeping the decision secret until Osborne's Dec. 10 announcement. Even the other assistant coaches didn't known until a few days beforehand.

"Coach had asked me not to mention this to anyone," Solich said. "I mentioned it to my wife — crossed my fingers there."

DYKES ON THE HEREAFTER: Always-entertaining Texas Tech coach Spike Dykes says he'd like to be reincarnated as either a backup quarterback, "and/or a weatherman."

"How do you lose a deal like that?" Dykes said, cracking up the reporters assembled to hear him. "You say, 'Oh, the jet stream just dipped a little bit. There's a 90 percent chance it's gonna rain, a 10-percent it didn't. You can't miss."

CARRY THAT WEIGHT: Neuheisel said he doesn't want his team worried about making up for for last season.

"I don't want the spectre of last year to be like an albatross hanging around this year's team," he said. "I don't want them to feel like they have to atone for 1997. What they have to do is establish themselves as the team of 1998 ... We're going to use last year as a springboard."

NATIVE SON: Dan McCarney, who has won only six games in three years as Iowa State's head coach, said turning around the Cyclones isn't any tougher than he thought it would be. It helps that he's an Iowa native.

"There was never going to be anything easy about it," he said. "I didn't go into it thinking it was going to happen quick. I knew the sitaution. I think spending 36 years in the state of Iowa, you know the situation."

BEAT THE CLOCK: Neuheisel said the Buffaloes will try to establish a running game to go with their wide-open passing attack. He got the feeling teams were playing the time-of-possession game with Colorado last year, running the ball and using the entire 25-second clock to do so.

■ Big 12 Notes

"It became apparent that teams were trying to play keep-away from us," Neuheisel said.

He brought in a new offensive line coach, Tom Cable, from the University of California. Cable has been stressing fundamentals with the linemen. In the backfield, Neuheisel expects senior Marlon Barnes, who has 792 career rushing yards, to emerge as one of the nation's top backs.

All that doesn't mean Colorado will reinvent itself as a running team.

"I fully expect to lead the conference in throwing again," Neuheisel said.

BIG GAME: Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum, reminded of the Aggies' 41-37 loss at BYU to open the 1996 season, said there were plenty of reasons to bypass another big game to open 1998. Texas A&M plays Florida State in the Kickoff Classic on Aug. 31.

"There are clearly reasons for not doing it," Slocum said. "I just thought philosophically it would have been hard for me to tell the kids we had a chance to go play Florida State in the Kickoff Classic and coach turned it down."

CLOCK-CLEANING: Texas Tech coach Spike Dykes did his best to play down the Red Raiders' schedule, which is noticably less painful this season. The Raiders opened with Tennessee last year and had Nebraska, Kansas State and Kansas in Big 12 play.

This year, Texas Tech opens with Texas-El Paso and its Big 12 North games are Iowa State, Missouri and Colorado. Tech also plays Fresno State and North Texas.

"The worst thing you can do is sit around in the summer is pick out your victories," Dykes said. "There's not anybody on our schedule that can't clean our clock if we're not careful."

He finally conceded: "We're cautiously optimistic about the difference in our schedule."

CONFIDENCE: Oklahoma tight end Jason Freeman is setting some lofty goals for the Sooners this year.

"I know people are going to think I'm crazy," Freeman said. "But we have a chance or can win every game on our schedule."

WISHBONE: Oklahoma coach John Blake said he's eager to have players this year that allow him to shift more toward an offense he's most comfortable with — the wishbone.

"We're not the wishbone of the past," he said. "We won't be the triple-option wishbone. ... We're going to do some things where we don't make our quarterback make a lot of read decisions."

DYKES ON CHEMISTRY: Dykes broached the subject of science while discussing the broken leg suffered by Tech kicker Jaret Greaser on a 52-yard field-goal attempt during the first half of last year's loss to Nebraska.

"They said nobody touched him," Dykes said. "I guess the air's heavy in Lincoln."

Ex-Steeler Lloyd lands in Carolina

Associated Press

■ NFL Camps

Lloyd, coming off two serious injuries in as many seasons, took a pay cut to sign with Carolina. The contract reportedly includes a base salary of $500,000 and incentives that could push the total to $1.5 million. The Steelers saved $2.8 million under the salary cap by releasing Lloyd.

The 33-year-old Lloyd will be reunited with Panthers coach Dom Capers, who was defensive coordinator for the Steelers in 1992-94.

Broncos

While quarterback John Elway is the Big Dog for Super Bowl champion Denver, it appears backup Jeff Lewis is a PUP.

Coach Mike Shanahan announced Thursday that Lewis, injured in an offseason workout, will start the season on the PUP (physically-unable-to-perform) list.

"That allows him to go to meetings said Shanahan, who added that the training camp depth chart will list Elway No. 1 and Bubby Brister No. 2.

Colts

One of the first players to report was 6-foot-3, 209-pound wide receiver Torrance Small, the former Alcorn State star who played under Colts coach Jim Mora at New Orleans for five years.

Small averaged 12.8 yards per catch in six seasons, recording 208 receptions for 2,668 yards and 17 touchdowns.

Ravens

Center Wally Williams confirmed that he will not report to camp at Westminster, Md., with the rest of Baltimore's veterans Friday. The designated franchise player is guaranteed $3.062 million this season, but is looking for a long-term deal rather than the one-year contract offered by the club.

AP Photo

More Sports/10C

Turner did not play last year after catching 38 passes for 461 yards for Baltimore in 1996.

Patriots

New England has scheduled an intrasquad scrimmage at its Bryant College camp in Smithfield, R.I. Offensive coordinator Ernie Zampese and defensive coordinator Steve Sidwell will be the coaches.

Seahawks

Ahman Green is a fast rookie — and a smart one, too.

Seattle's third-round draft pick out of Nebraska is seeking and getting help from veteran running backs Steve Broussard and Ricky Watters in camp at Cheney, Wash.

"They help me out with every little bit I need," Green said.

Steelers

Mike Tomczak, starting quarterback for Pittsburgh two years ago, showed up at camp at Latrobe, Pa., ready to battle a buddy for the No. 2 spot behind Kordell Stewart, a position he held last season.

Also in the fight for the No. 2 job is Mike Quinn, who played well in the NFL Europe League last spring.

"I'm extremely excited how Mike Quinn developed in Europe," Tomczak said. "I'm a big fan of his, and he's a dear friend."

Dolphins

Anthony Redmon, an offensive lineman, reported to Miami's camp at Davie, Fla. The 27-year-old Redmon, who played the last four seasons with Arizona, has a one-year contract worth nearly $600,000, and can play guard or tackle.

The Dolphins also claimed tackle Jay Hagood off waivers from the New York Jets and re-signed four veterans — kicker Olindo Mare, safety Shawn Wooden, linebacker Anthony Harris and receiver Kirby Dar Dar.

Policy joins group seeking new Browns

By John Affleck
Associated Press Writer

CLEVELAND — A day after Carmen Policy left the San Francisco 49ers, he was trying to get right back into the NFL.

He was doing it with a man some blame for helping the Browns leave Cleveland.

Policy and billionaire banker Alfred Lerner, a minority owner in the old Browns franchise that moved to Baltimore after the 1995 season, said Thursday they're applying to purchase the Browns expansion franchise that will start play next year.

Former Browns quarterback and local fan favorite Bernie Kosar joined the pair at a news conference to endorse the bid. However, Kosar has no formal role in the group and said he hasn't asked for one — at least not yet.

Cleveland Mayor Michael R. White also showed up to back Policy and Lerner. He said he would lobby NFL owners to pick the two men as the new leaders of the Browns when they choose an owner between now and mid-September.

"I would have to think we're certainly in the 50-50 category," said Policy, the ex-49ers president, when asked to assess his and Lerner's chances of getting the team.

Policy and Lerner are entering a field that has at least five other entries, including groups with members such as coaching great Don Shula; former star wide receiver Paul Warfield; Jim Brown, one of the best running backs ever; and Bill Cosby, who is involved with Shula's group.

But no group may be able to match Policy's ability as a football executive.

Policy served as San Francisco president for seven years and is an expert at manipulating the salary cap and recruiting free agents, key elements in San Francisco's 1994 Super Bowl championship. He left San Francisco to resolve a feud with co-owner Eddie DeBartolo.

There also may be no other group with the financial muscle of Lerner, owner of the MBNA Corp., whose wealth has been estimated at as much as $2.5 billion. Estimates of the cost of the new Browns have generally run between $300 million and $350 million.

But Lerner also has a drawback — his history. He held a small piece of the Browns, less than 5 percent, when Art Modell was the majority owner and moved the team to Baltimore. The final deal was struck on Lerner's jet.

Lerner said Thursday he can't change the past, but also said Modell made the call to leave Cleveland.

"I had as much to do with the decision to move the Cleveland Browns as you did," Lerner told a reporter. "If I have friend tomorrow that's going to do something unpopular I may stand with him, too."

Lerner said he and Modell have drifted apart and have no contact now, although the two never had an argument.

"What I'm interested in is the success of this Cleveland Browns team going forward in this city," he said. "The city's entitled to it."

Policy, who would own 10 percent of the team to Lerner's 90 percent, called Lerner two weeks ago and told him he would be available to run the new Browns if the banker would put up most of the money.

Lerner had soured on the idea of NFL ownership after being criticized for the old Browns move. But the lure of bringing Policy to Cleveland was too strong to resist, he said.

"My role is I have to be here in order for Carmen to be here," Lerner said. "In order for the team to have it's best shot at success, Carmen has to be here."

The other groups bidding for the Browns include:

— Cleveland developer Bart Wolstein, who has the backing of Hall of fame running back Brown;

— Cablevision chairman Charles Dolan and his brother, Larry Dolan, Cleveland natives who are backed by Cosby and Shula;

— New York developer Howard Milstein, who is working with Warfield and ex-running back Calvin Hill;

— Cleveland Indians owner Dick Jacobs.

All the groups except Jacobs and Murdough have held news conferences in Cleveland to promote their bids to own the team.

By Dennis Georgatos
AP Sports Writer

STOCKTON, Calif. — Nobody resigned. No sudden departures. The San Francisco 49ers even got in a lively training camp practice.

Tumult took a day off Thursday from the 49ers, and the team began to chart a course and delegate responsibilities in the aftermath of Carmen Policy's resignation as club president.

"(Wednesday) was really just a chaotic day. Nothing really got done," 49ers executive vice president Dwight Clark said. "We're trying to get back to business and by (Friday) I think we'll be back in the swing of things."

"While all the papers had the resignation information in it, I thought our team in a lot of ways put it behind us," Mariucci said. "They know all about it now, so on we go."

Guard Ray Brown said club officials made it easier on players by making sure they were kept informed, going so far as to knock on their doors and call a midnight team meeting Tuesday to tell them about Policy's resignation.

"There was some initial concern, but we just have to stick to football," Brown said. "I think it's really cleared up. The lines of communications are clear and open. If there are any questions anybody has to ask as a player, we feel a comfort level in going to somebody."

Policy's departure was sudden but not totally surprising because it was well-known that his relationship with team co-owner Eddie DeBartolo had soured in recent months.

Within hours of his appointment as Policy's interim replacement, Larry Thrailkill had traveled to Stockton to meet Wednesday night with Mariucci, Clark and team vice president Bill Duffy, who oversees the team's non-football business operations.

"It went well. We really just tried to get to know each other a bit better," Clark said. "We discussed where we would go from here. Larry will generally oversee everything. He said he wants us to keep running things as we have but he's the president and we'll inform him of what we're doing. Certain things need to be addressed by the president and have his blessing. The smaller things, we won't bother him with."

An NFL novice, Thrailkill also serves as CEO of the Edward J. DeBartolo Corp., the Youngstown, Ohio-based real estate development firm held jointly by Denise DeBartolo York and her brother, Eddie DeBartolo, who each own 45 percent shares of the 49ers.

Thrailkill will represent the 49ers in league matters and was scheduled to attend next week's owners meetings in Dallas, but he has no plans to move to the San Francisco Bay area to run the team. He told Clark and Mariucci that he would oversee but not meddle in football operations.

"He's got other things besides the presidency of the 49ers going on in his life," Mariucci said. "He's not going to be exactly a full-time person here. It certainly will be different than having Carmen here on a day-to-day basis."

Emmitt sits out workout after knee swells

Associated Press

WICHITA FALLS — Running back Emmitt Smith gave the coaches a scare on Thursday when he turned up with slight swelling on his right knee.

An MRI did not show any major problems but Smith missed both practices as a precautionary measure.

"Emmitt developed a little fluid on the knee," said Dallas coach Chan Gailey. "We decided to play it smart and hold him out of practice. It's nothing major. The MRI showed everything was clean."

■ Cowboys Notes

BEAU BACK FOR MORE: Beau Morgan has a dream of being an NFL running back some day.

For right now the Air Force second lieutenant is content to spend some of his vacation in the Dallas training camp for the second consecutive year.

Morgan, who played for the Air Force Academy, is staioned at Peterson Air Force Base in Colorado Springs. He is on leave until Aug. 12.

Morgan was a quarterback in college but shows nice moves as a running back.

"I'm lucky to have this chance and I plan to make the most of it," Morgan said. "The Air Force is my job right now but playing in the NFL is my dream."

Sanders had his left ankle scoped in May and is close to 100 per cent.

"We don't want him to aggravate something," said coach Chan Gailey. "There is no need to rush it. We hope to get him in there sometime this week."

He has a $30,000 customized golf cart and a $300,000 air-conditioned bus on the Midwestern State University campus.

Defensive end Ellis went through two practices without problems in the 106-degree heat.

"Ellis seems OK now," Gailey said.

BIG: Blake knows it's time

(From 1C)

homa officials but acknowledged it's time for his regime to show some results.

"It is time for us to start improving," Blake said. "I said when I took the job you'll see tremendous improvement in this football team in three or four years because we'll have talent here."

McCarney enters this season with a 6-27 record at Iowa State, including 1-10 last year, also denied any fear that his job is on the line.

"I honestly don't feel any more pressure than I have in any of the years I've been there," said McCarney, who thinks he'll field his best team this year, with some 15 junior college transfers expected to contribute.

"We took over a program that had bottomed out and played through the toughest schedule that school has had in the history of the school. We continue to build on our foundation that we have built. It's built on rock, not sand."

Talk about pressure. Nebraska Frank Solich is taking the helm of the defending co-national champions and trying to fill the shoes of retired coach Tom Osborne, merely one of the best coaches in college football history.

The folks in Lincoln aren't letting him forget it.

"I know what the expectations are," Solich said. "Some people might have 8-3 expectations. I haven't run into many of them. They don't seem to ask me how we're going to do. They tell me how we're going to do."

"I know how this business works. I believe I'll be able to handle what comes my way."

Said Blake: "The pressure will always be there. It's just part of it."

HOTEL: Enormous lineman draws praise

(From 1C)

a little faster than college. I guess that's to be expected."

However, it was a television crew doing a Michigan State game that gave Adams his "Hotel" nickname.

"I don't mind it," Adams said. "Maybe I can get some commercials some day for hotels."

Michigan linebacker Sam Sword said Adams "reminds me of Orlando Pace. He just knocks people everywhere. He's a man child."

Against Notre Dame in a 23-7 win, Adams was shown on film with 14 knockdown blocks as the Spartans rushed for 222 yards. He had six pancake blocks in a win over Penn State.

Adams was the 38th overall pick in the draft. It was the highest Dallas had taken an offensive lineman since it got Howard Richards at 28th in the 1981 draft.

Adams has a slight hearing disorder in his right ear, but nothing to keep him from hearing the quarterback.

"Everything about that got blown out of proportion and I'm not sure if that's why I slid in the draft," Adams said.

Dallas defensive linemen in training camp will testify that Adams is hearing signals real well.

Prices retreat

NEW YORK — Heating oil fell to a 12-year low and gasoline to a 4 1/2-year low, pulling crude lower, as high inventories overwhelmed demand from homeowners and motorists.

August heating oil fell 0.89 cent, or 2.5 percent, to 35.43 cents a gallon, the lowest since July 1986 on the New York Mercantile Exchange. August gasoline fell 1.21 cents, or 2.8 percent, to 42.19 cents a gallon, the lowest since February 1994.

September crude oil fell 28 cents, or 2 percent, to $13.88 a barrel.

Crude prices are down 21 percent so far this year and 29 percent in the past 12 months, as slowing economies in Asia and a mild winter in the Northern Hemisphere kept demand in check. As a result, oil producers banded together earlier this year to reduce output, hoping to push prices higher. Iraq, whose production is controlled by the United Nations, is not part of the producers' pact. Its production has expanded in the past year, negating much of the producers' cuts.

Last month, Iraq produced 1.95 million barrels of oil a day, or about 2.6 percent of world supplies, according to Bloomberg estimates.

Dollar rises

NEW YORK — The dollar rose against the Japanese yen Thursday, boosted by news that Japan's credit rating was in peril.

The dollar fell against the German mark and most other major currencies as investors focused more on the yen's volatile trading.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 141.38 Japanese yen, up from 141.24 yen late Wednesday. The dollar was also changing hands at 1.7868 German marks, down from 1.7895 marks.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Wednesday: 1.5069 Swiss francs, down from 1.5114; 5.9910 French francs, down from 5.9955; 1,762.00 Italian lire, down from 1,763.30; and 1.4940 Canadian dollars, down from 1.4955.

The British pound was quoted at $1.6499, up from $1.6426.

AT&T profits

NEW YORK — AT&T Corp. released a mixed batch of financial results that underscored its reasons for trying so hard to buy Tele-Communications Inc. for $31.7 billion.

AT&T reported a 20 percent profit gain in the second quarter Thursday, slightly beating Wall Street forecasts. But revenues grew by only 1 percent — dragged down by a 3.7 percent drop in the company's sales of long-distance phone calls to consumers.

The report was hardly the first time AT&T showed erosion in its core business, as rivals such as MCI and Sprint relentlessly try to lure away the 70 million AT&T residential phone customers with competing offers.

Boeing problems

SEATTLE — Boeing Co.'s production troubles continue to weigh on its profits, sending its results down 46 percent in the second quarter and prompting the company to warn of more disappointing numbers this year and next.

Boeing's stock fell 13 percent Thursday, leading the Dow Jones industrial average to a nearly 200-point drop.

Problems with the new generation of 737 jetliners led to additional late delivery costs for Boeing and competition to cut prices hurt second-quarter profits. The company reported profits for this year would amount to only $1 billion and approximately double that in 1999 — about two-thirds of the results Wall Street has been expecting.

Stocks plunge on rash of profit woes

■ Dow retreats 196 points as Boeing joins sudden chorus of profit warnings.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stocks plunged nearly 200 points Thursday, extending a rapid retreat from record highs, as aircraft maker Boeing joined a sudden chorus of major companies with discouraging profit news.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 195.93 to 8,932.98, about 400 points — 4.3 percent — below last Friday's record close of 9,337.97 and its first finish below 9,000 since July 1.

Broad-market indicators also suffered heavy losses, with declining issues outnumbering advancers by nearly a 4-to-1 margin in heavy trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

The selling intensified after midday as speculation spread that White House press secretary Mike McCurry's resignation signaled deeper political problems for President Clinton. Investors may also have used the news as an excuse to protect some of their hefty profits from the past month.

But the main factor behind this week's downturn, analysts said, has been the sudden revelation of earnings troubles at very prominent companies — including Dow components Merck, Hewlett-Packard and DuPont — after a month-long market rally predicated on hopes for stronger profits later in the year.

Boeing joined that group Thursday when the Seattle-based company, struggling to overcome production bottlenecks and pricing pressure from European arch-rival Airbus, failed to satisfy Wall Street's deflated expectations for second-quarter profits and issued disappointing forecasts for the full year and 1999.

And echoing concerns expressed earlier this week by Hewlett-Packard and software giant Computer Associates, Boeing also cited the continuing impact of the economic crisis in Asia. Traders fled Boeing's stock, which tumbled $6.56 1/4 a share — or the equivalent of 26 Dow points — to $41.18 3/4 as the most active issue on the NYSE.

"The basic problem is that (stock) prices are not cheap and the earnings reports have noise in them. That's causing people to shoot first and ask questions later," said Buzz Hussey, a market analyst at Dain Rauscher in Dallas. "The last three days have taken a lot of momentum out of the market. I don't think it will keep going down sharply, but I think (the summer rally) will cool off."

Sears Roebuck's stock also fell sharply Thursday, plunging $5.37 1/2 a share to $51.31 1/4 as the Dow's second biggest loser, as a better-than-expected second-quarter report was overshadowed by an article in The Wall Street Journal focusing on obstacles to the retailer's growth.

The Standard & Poor's 500-company index, a model against which many stock mutual funds are patterned or compared, fell 24.33 to 1,139.75, down about 4 percent from last Friday's closing record of 1,186.75.

The Nasdaq composite index, dominated by technology leaders like Microsoft, fell 34.53 to 1,935.22. It was the third straight losing session after a streak of nine straight closing records for the Nasdaq.

In other trading, the NYSE composite index fell 12.13 to 576.68, the American Stock Exchange composite index fell 13.31 to 719.72, and the Russell 2000 index of smaller companies lost 8.60 to 442.37.

NYSE composite volume totaled 884.37 million shares, on par with Wednesday's busy pace of 888.53 million.

Overseas, Tokyo's Nikkei stock average fell 0.6 percent, Frankfurt's DAX index fell 1.0 percent and London's FT-SE 100 fell 0.4 percent.

FCC sees hurdles for SBC-Ameritech

■ Southwestern Bell parent faces heavy burden of proof merger is in public interest.

N.Y. Times News service

BRUSSELS — U.S. Federal Communications Commission Chairman William Kennard warned that SBC Communications Inc.'s $71 billion purchase of fellow U.S. local phone company Ameritech Corp. faces a "heavy burden" of proof that the transaction is in the public interest.

The "proposed combination involves a pretty massive consolidation in the U.S. market and we're going to have to look at it very carefully," said Kennard at a press briefing in Brussels.

A combined SBC-Ameritech raises competition questions because the transaction would reunite three of the seven original Baby Bells, which were created as part of the break-up of AT&T Corp. in 1984, and create the largest U.S. local carrier. Chicago-based Ameritech serves five mid-western states. SBC, which previously acquired Baby Bell Pacific Telesis Group, is based in San Antonio, Texas, and serves California, Nevada and five southwestern states.

Kennard's comments came as SBC announced that European antitrust authorities signaled they won't oppose the transaction. The company said in a statement that officials at the European Commission, the executive agency of the European Union, and the national regulatory authorities of Germany, Denmark and Belgium "confirmed" that the transaction wouldn't conflict with antitrust guidelines.

"This is an important initial step," said SBC Chairman Edward E. Whitacre Jr. "We are very pleased that key European regulatory officials acted quickly to take a positive view of our proposed merger."

The EC hasn't taken any official stand on the planned merger so far. It often reviews mergers or takeovers involving companies that aren't based in the EU, looking at the likely impact of the transaction within the EU and whether the combined companies could stifle competition in the region.

Nobody was available at the EC to comment on the SBC statement. Analysts have expected that the transaction would have little trouble winning European approval. The real hurdle is getting U.S. regulatory approval from the Justice Department, which reviews the antitrust implications of the transaction, and the FCC.

Southwest profits jump 42 percent

N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — Southwest Airlines Co.'s second-quarter earnings rose 42 percent as the carrier benefited from the strong travel demand and plummeting fuel prices that have boosted earnings at other airlines as well.

The low-fare carrier's net income climbed to $133.4 million, or 57 cents a diluted share, from $93.8 million, or 42 cents, in the year-ago period. Revenue rose 12.7 percent to $1.08 billion from $956.9 million. Earnings exceeded the average analyst estimate of 54 cents a share in a First Call Corp. survey.

Dallas-based Southwest's traffic — measured as the number of miles flown by paying passengers — rose 17 percent over the second-quarter last year while its average fuel price dropped 25 percent. The positive results prompted it to raise its dividend, increase a share buyback, and split its stock 3-for-2.

"It's just a continuation of outstanding results from a great company," said Joe Kercheville, a shareholder and the president of Kercheville & Co. brokerage in San Antonio, Texas.

US Airways Group Inc. and UAL Corp.'s United Airlines reported better than expected earnings Wednesday, citing particularly strong domestic travel demand. Even so, many major airline stocks fell Thursday on worries that international demand is weakening.

Arbitration may change GM-UAW relations

Associated Press

DETROIT — General Motors Corp. is asking an independent arbitrator to fundamentally change the way the world's biggest automaker and the United Auto Workers have conducted their labor relations for more than a decade.

A ruling favorable to GM likely would make the UAW less willing to use its most powerful tool of persuasion — the strike — against any of the Big Three automakers.

Arbitrator Thomas L. Roberts presided over the second day of the unusual hearing Thursday, taking testimony on GM's complaint in a Detroit hotel. The closed hearing is scheduled to move to a Flint, Mich., hotel on Friday.

Since the last national strike against GM in 1970, walkouts against individual plants have became more common — especially in the past decade as automakers downsized and adopted just-in-time production systems.

By shipping parts to plants as they were needed, the automakers reduced the need for costly warehousing but also made their assembly operations more vulnerable to strikes at single parts plants.

Last month in Flint, the UAW struck a stamping plant that makes body panels for GM's big cars and high-profit pickups and sport utility vehicles. Six days later, it hit a plant that makes spark plugs, filters and other parts for nearly every car and truck GM produces in North America.

The result is GM's production on the continent quickly came to a virtual halt. Twenty-seven of 29 major assembly plants are idle; 193,500 GM workers at those plants and more than 100 parts plants are out of work.

Late last month, GM filed a rare grievance against the union, alleging the strikes violate their national contract. The case went to an arbitrator this week. If successful, the company has said it will ask a federal court for a back-to-work order and financial damages from the union.

The potentially precedent-setting grievance is being closely watched by the nation's arbitrators, mediators and labor lawyers.

Roberts' decision likely will rest on how specific the national contract is about issues that can prompt a strike, and what importance he gives to precedents set in past negotiations and strikes, legal experts say.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Reducing income tax top priority in saving for retirement

By Eric Tyson

Tyson

Q: I would like to begin building a retirement nest egg, and I'm starting at the late age of 44. I have about $1,000 to start with and can go from there. What would you suggest as the best course of action?

A: When putting away money for retirement, you should give high preference to saving and investing so as to reduce income taxes. The best way to do that is by investing through a retirement account.

Check to see if your employer offers a retirement savings plan such as a 401(k) or 403(b).

If you're self-employed, you could establish your own plan such as simplified employee pension or Keogh plan.

If you have access to none of those, you could contribute to an individual retirement account.

I recommend investing your money in mutual funds within such a plan, with a mix of at least half in stocks. A third or so of the stock market money could go into overseas funds.

Before you start putting money into retirement accounts, however, be sure that you have a sufficient emergency reserve. I recommend that you have quick access to at least three months' worth of living expenses.

If you have an unstable income or employment situation and no family to fall back on, you might want to have at least six months' worth of living expenses.

Q: I have 53 U.S. savings bonds that were purchased in the early 1970s, with a total value of about $10 880 of which $8,690 is interest.

I'm celebrating my 84th birthday this month, and I live on a limited income. I cashed some of my bonds in the past two years, but they bring my income up, so I have to pay more income tax. What should I do?

A: Most bonds simply pay you interest annually, and you then owe tax in the year the interest income is paid to you.

With the savings bonds you have, you can defer paying tax on the interest until you cash in the bonds — which is what you apparently elected to do.

Since you say you have a limited income, don't make yourself miserable. Each year, cash in some of the bonds and pay your tax.

If your tax bracket changes from year to year, you might cash in more of the bonds during years in which you expect to have a lower rate.

Q: How did you get started in your line of work? Why did you become a writer?

A: For a number of years, I witnessed various family members and friends make financial mistakes that caused a variety of problems.

After having worked as a management consultant in the financial services industry, I wanted to take that inside industry experience and help educate individuals as to how best to manage one's personal finances. Initially, I provided financial counseling assistance.

Subsequently, I was attracted to writing, which has grown in importance for me over time. I enjoy writing and the teaching I've done, as it helps me to codify ways of explaining and thinking through various financial issues.

I continue to counsel and teach, as well as answer reader questions through this column, as it helps keep me in touch with the real financial problems people encounter.

Writing, unfortunately, is time-consuming, and prevents me from doing as much counseling work and teaching as I sometimes would like. However, I really enjoy the mix of activities.

HOW TO READ THE MARKET IN REVIEW

Here are the 1,675 most active stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, 925 most active on the Nasdaq National Market and 405 most active on the American Stock Exchange. Stocks in bold are worth at least $5 and changed 5 percent or more in price. Underlining for 50 most active on NYSE and Nasdaq and 25 most active on Amex. Tables show name, price and net change, and one to two additional fields rotated through the week, as follows:

Last: Price stock was trading at when exchange closed for the day.
YTD: Percent change in price since December 31.
How to use: The year-to-date percent change compares the most recent price with the company's price as of Dec. 31. The number is a good way to compare and track the performance of different companies in the same industry or the same town.

Benchmarks are important in investing and the year-to-date percent change can be a useful field of information when used as a benchmark. If you were considering investing in the automotive industry, for example, you could watch to see which auto stock was enjoying the best performance so far this year by looking at this field.

These numbers can be helpful in following stocks but as with all financial data are only one of many factors to use in determining how to invest. Consult your financial advisor before making any investment decision.

Jarrett always has good time at Pocono race

By Dick Brinster
AP Sports Writer

LONG POND, Pa. — There is no mistaking the sparkle that comes to Dale Jarrett's steely blue eyes when the words Pocono International Raceway are mentioned.

Three years ago, a victory on the mountaintop resurrected his career. Another last July jump-started a mediocre season he was to close with five wins in the last 15 races — a run that carried him within 14 points of the Winston Cup championship.

On Sunday, he will defend his Pennsylvania 500 title, hoping to win for the third time this year and first in nearly two months.

"This was a race that I feel like really helped turn things around at Robert Yates Racing when we won here in '95, and it's kind of been a good place for us to get things started off," he said.

When he arrived at the 2 1/2-mile track in July 1995 as a substitute for injured Ernie Irvan, Jarrett was considered little more than a journeyman. Although he was driving the vaunted Yates Ford, Jarrett was winless and seemed certain to be gone the following season.

But a stunning victory that warm Sunday afternoon — only the fourth of his career — was a turning point for a driver noted only for being one of a number of longshots to have won the prestigious Daytona 500.

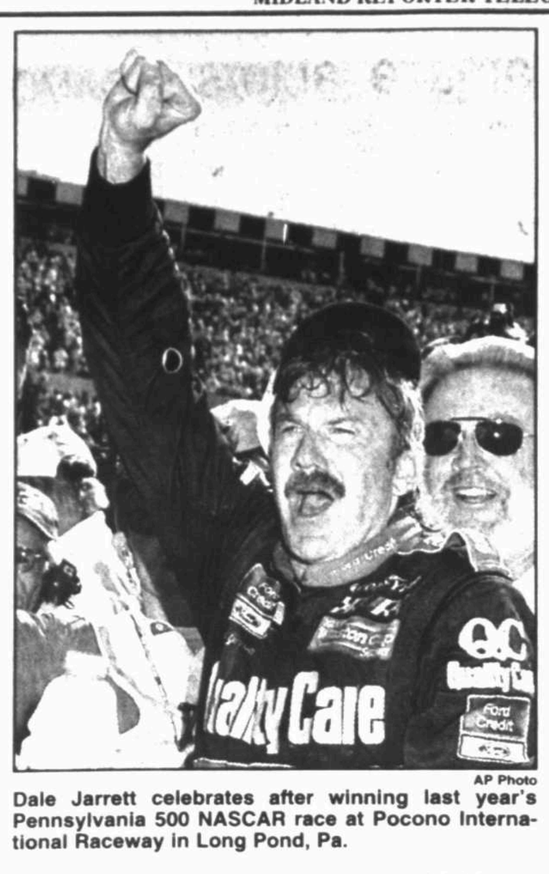

"I hadn't lost any confidence in my ability before the Pocono win," he said earlier this year. "I always said I could drive. A lot of people just didn't believe me."

And that Pocono victory did little to immediately convince his detractors. Thirteen checkered flags later, he is a megastar, one of three drivers to be reckoned with at every stop on the circuit.

Although he has not won since May 31 at Dover, Del., Jarrett is in far better shape than he was a year ago. At this point in 1997, he was coming off a 38th-place disaster at Loudon, N.H., and stood fourth in the standings, 165 points behind leader Terry Labonte.

Two weeks ago, Jarrett wound up seventh at Loudon, and enters this weekend third in the title chase. He trails Mark Martin by 46 points and reigning champion Jeff Gordon by 98.

This is a blessing to Jarrett, and he's hoping another Pocono victory will start another second-half rally.

Dale Jarrett celebrates after winning last year's Pennsylvania 500 NASCAR race at Pocono International Raceway in Long Pond, Pa.

"With the problems we've encountered, to be still less than 100 points out of the lead ... I would have thought we would be a little further behind, but they've left us in the game," Jarrett said. "It's kind of like a baseball team that has played the first half of the season without their star pitcher in the rotation and now he's coming back for the second half.

"I think that they've left an opening there and we're very confident that we can take advantage of that."

But the 41-year-old Jarrett realizes he has less margin for error than those he is pursuing.

"Mark and Jeff just don't make a lot of mistakes and their teams are very good, championship caliber teams," he said.

Gordon, himself a two-time Pocono winner, also is taking nothing for granted.

"Every year, even every week, the competition seems to get tougher and tougher," he said. "Your team has to be real good in all areas to stay on top."

Slower speeds could provide tougher race in CART U.S. 500

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

BROOKLYN, Mich. — Race drivers would rather not crash into concrete walls at any speed. However, that possibility always exists on an oval, and it's certainly preferable to have it happen at 220 mph, rather than 235.

Danger will be imminent beginning Friday at Michigan Speedway, where the CART FedEx Championship Series will stage the U.S. 500 on the 2-mile, high-banked oval.

A year ago, Scott Pruett won the pole for the 500-mile race with a lap of 233.857 mph, just a few ticks below the Michigan qualifying record of 234.665, set the previous year by Jimmy Vasser.

Eight of the 28 starters last July qualified with speeds above 230. Two months later, in the inaugural Champ car race at California Speedway — the sister track to Michigan with an almost identical oval — 19 of 27 starters qualified above 230, led by Mauricio Gugelmin with an all-time auto racing record of 240.942.

Race speeds at both tracks were in the high 220s.

The warning flag that had been out at Michigan began to flutter in earnest after the eye-popping numbers in California. Something obviously had to be done.

"The scary thing is something can always go wrong," explained Michael Andretti, a two-time Michigan winner.

Gil de Ferran noted, "Any reduction of speed is welcome, however small. It does make a big difference in the event of an accident at those speeds."

Some of the best engineering minds in the series got together with the rules committee and batted around ideas. The result of those meetings is the Handford Device, a box-like rear wing designed by Swift Engineering's Mark Handford.

The device increases drag on straightaways and reduces downforce in corners. That puts more responsibility into the hands of the drivers, and it very likely means closer racing.

Sunday will be the first race trial for the new wing, which has been tested only briefly at the two big tracks in recent weeks.

"It's a great way to slow the cars down," said Andretti, who took part in a three-day test last month at Michigan. "That sounds like an easy thing to do, but it's not. Right now, I think this is probably the best solution."

Gugelmin, who was turning laps in the low 220s when he tested here, said, "It's very draggy, like you've got a parachute on the back of the car. It doesn't take long to go flat out, but you don't feel the stability you did in the past."

"I think once we get out there and get used to the turbulence, it's going to be business as usual," Andretti said. "Some of these guys don't remember, but I remember back in '84 and '85 when the cars were big old tanks and all they did was push a lot of air around and make a ton of turbulence. That's sort of what it's getting back to a little bit, and we did OK then."

Vasser said, "The testing we've done at Michigan with the package is not bad. It's still flat out. It might be more exciting."

"You may see more drafting," he added. "The way it was, you had to be pretty far from the exit of the corner to get a good run on a guy to pick up the draft to get by. Now, you don't have to be so close at the exit of the corner. I think if there's a three or four-car lineup going into the last lap, I certainly wouldn't want to be the guy in front."

Stewart sets Charlotte speed mark

By David Droschak
AP Sports Writer

CONCORD, N.C. — Tony Stewart turned in the fastest qualifying lap in the 38-history of Charlotte Motor Speedway on Thursday night, breaking the 220 mph barrier to take the pole for this weekend's VisionAire 500.

Stewart, first of the 22 cars out of the pits to qualify, turned in a lap of 220.498 mph, more than 3 mph faster than his pole lap in last season's inaugural Indy Racing League event on the 1.5-mile banked track usually reserved for NASCAR racing.

"Technology," Stewart said when asked about his improvement over last year's qualifying run. "Everybody's cars are just that much better. Our lack of testing here may have hurt us in the beginning of the day but our guys know when it's time to put the cards down."

The record, the best speed of two laps, was witnessed by an estimated 5,000 fans under the lights in a facility that routinely accommodates 175,000 for NASCAR races.

It was Stewart's fourth pole in seven attempts this season and ninth of his career, including last week's top starting position at Dover, Del. He finished eighth in that race.

Stewart's best practice lap earlier in the day at Charlotte was 219.459 mph.

"We came a long way," said Stewart, who holds most of the records in the 3-year-old league. "We weren't comfortable the way the car was. We kept getting a little more speed each time we worked on it. We showed our hand all day long."

Qualifying was delayed halfway through for about 15 minutes because of rain.

Greg Ray, subbing for Indianapolis 500 pole-sitter Billy Boat in an A.J. Foyt-owned car, was the second fastest qualifier with a speed of 219.995 as six drivers bested the previous track record of 217.164, set by Stewart last year.

Boat is still recovering from multiple fractures suffered in the New Hampshire race June 28.

"We've been in this No. 2 spot a couple of times. I was hoping deep, down inside we could get the pole," Ray said. "When you haven't tasted a pole it makes you real hungry. The pole is just a small deal. Two hundred laps will show who really has the best car."

Kenny Brack was third at 219.521 mph. He also drives for Foyt. Both he and Ray qualified after the rain.

"When you have the car working good it's not too hard to get around here. The track was good," Brack said. "We were a little worried when the rain came down. Perhaps it got a little quicker when it cooled off at night, but it got quicker for everyone."

The fastest lap turned in by a NASCAR driver at Charlotte Motor Speedway was Ward Burton's 185.759 mph in 1994. NASCAR vehicles weigh more than twice as much as Indy cars.

Series points leader Scott Sharp qualified sixth with a speed of 217.926 mph, while former two-time Indy 500 winner Arie Luyendyk was 15th at 213.380 mph.

Villeneuve to leave Williams

Bloomberg News

ZELTWIG, Austria — Jacques Villeneuve will drive for the newly formed British American Racing team next season, ending a three-year association with the Williams team he captured the Formula One world driver's title with last season.

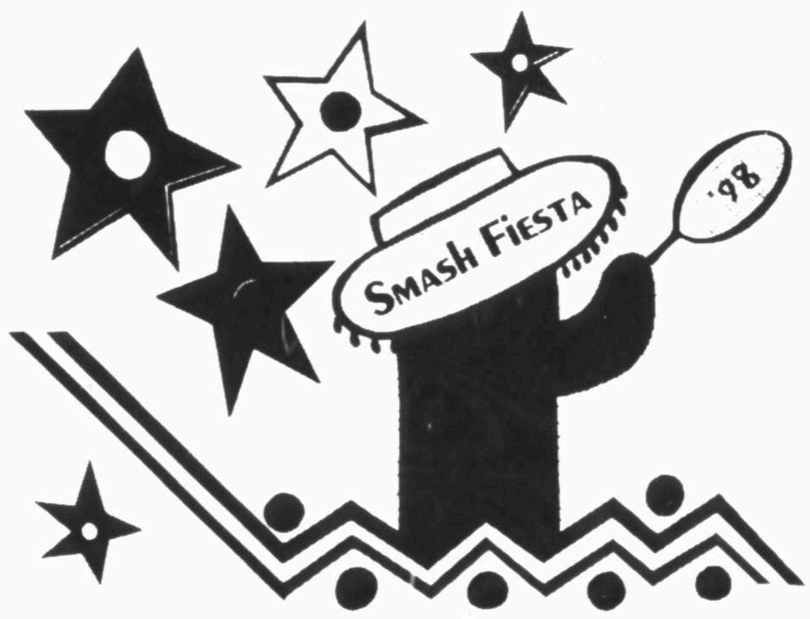

The 27-year-old Canadian was second in his F-1 debut season with Williams in 1996 after becoming the youngest winner of the IndyCar title in 1995, when he also won the Indianapolis 500. He captured the world title in the final race of 1997 after surviving Michael Schumacher's attempt to force him off the track at the European Grand Prix at Jerez.

SPIELBERG: Director's openness, patience amaze actors

a war that took place before the filmmaker was born. But there's a lot at stake for the 50-year-old Spielberg. Although his films have grossed billions, and he's recognized as the pop-culture master of the movies' last quarter-century, he has only grudgingly been respected as a serious film artist. Not until "Schindler's List" was the power of his storytelling recognized as art. "Amistad," in some ways superior to "Schindler's List," was sandbagged.

So Spielberg hit the beaches last year on a self-imposed mission to reinvigorate the war film, silence the doubters, and come through as the heavy hitter for his new studio, DreamWorks, which he runs with Jeffrey Katzenberg and David Geffen. At a deeper level, his passion was engaged because this was the film he was making for his combat-veteran father, 81, who fought in Burma and complained — as many of the war veterans his son interviewed did — that Hollywood never depicted the war they fought, even in its relatively good films.

"My dad even gave me a couple of scenes for the movie," Spielberg says, leaning forward on a hotel armchair, trim, animated behind wire spectacles, in a summer suit and tieless blue shirt. "I've made a lot of films from that period. My mom and dad were products of the 1940s and somehow I just have kind of a strange connection to that period. I can relate to it actually more than to the 1990s. Also, the heart of the story drew me. Just the moral issue of why you send eight men to save one, possibly orphaning eight parents just to return one to a single mom. The minute I couldn't find an easy answer, then I began to explore the fact that I'd always wanted to do a story about World War II.

"When my dad told me, as a kid growing up, that it was a just war and a necessary war, I thought that was a Dad-ism, something a dad must tell his son to gain his respect. Lo and behold, decades later, I'm like, 'Dad is right.' I did research, especially in books by Stephen Ambrose and S.L.A. Marshall. But then I knew I needed to discover what this film needed to become. I knew I couldn't do it sitting at home with a pencil. I didn't do any storyboards." Spielberg cast the film and plunged into filming on a stretch of Irish coast that resembled Omaha Beach in Normandy. The filming, fast and furious, paralleled the invasion — intentionally.

Spielberg hurtled through the filming — 50 shots a day instead of his usual 20 or 22 — partly to parallel the chaotic, unrelenting conditions of battle. The GIs, charging fortified machine-gun emplacements, carried the day on raw courage — that, and a lot of improvisation. Spielberg adopted the same wing-it style. "Essentially, it was a matter of throwing myself back 55 years," he says. "I was inspired by the photographs of Robert Capa and the documentaries by John Huston and William Wellman. I said to myself, it's going to be realistic, it's going to be the veterans' side of the story, not Hollywood's side of the story.

"I wanted to be more of a Signal Corps cameraman in trying to capture that war the way it was fought, as if I had a Bell & Howell windup and old Ektachrome film. I didn't want there to be an overlord point of view. I didn't want an Eisenhower or a Montgomery angsting and suffering at the outcome of the Omaha Beach landing. My dad's been after me for many many years to tell his story, not as a war bond drive, but as something that really happened to him. ... My approach was improvisational. I wanted to take that beach a few feet at a time, just as the Rangers did. It took me four weeks to move 24 feet up that beach."

Tom Hanks, who plays the squad's reluctant father figure, says his misgivings about making his first film with longtime friend Spielberg dissolved in the rapidity and confidence with which the director worked. Says Hanks, interviewed separately, "I thought Steven the auteur would be the guy who dictated every tiny little aspect. But he was incredibly improvisational when it came to where he put the camera. One day, the set literally was pointed the wrong way. Now, he had told me the way he was going to shoot this scene with a machine-gun emplacement a year ago. So he took a walk and came back and said, 'OK, we're going to shoot the scene this way.' And so an action set piece became this thing about how hellacious it is for these guys to run up the hill and you don't know what's going on. It looked very clumsy, but it also looked very real and chaotic. It's much less flashy and much more interesting."

Co-star Damon was struck by Spielberg's openness to input from others, and by his patience. "Many of the younger cast members were either filmmakers or writers," Damon says, "and it was like going to the best film school in the world. ... You can say something like, 'I saw you raise the camera 2 feet there. Why did you do that?' And he would say, 'Well, I'm trying to get perspective,' and he would just start to lecture on how and why he did this — and that's worth 10 years of school, especially on this movie."

The give-and-take worked both ways, Spielberg insists. The first meeting between Hanks and Damon played stiffly as it was written. So Damon improvised a better scene and it was written into the script.

Enhancing the emotional bonding among the cast was the fact that when a cast member was killed, that was the end of him for that shoot. "The guys were sent back home after we staged their death scenes," Spielberg says, "which of course heightened the sense of loss. It was the most nervous and anxious time I've ever spent as a filmmaker. At the end of filming, I would go drinking with these guys. I never do that. I always go home to my family after shooting. But here the bonding was that intense because of the harrowing experience we had together. And we shot so fast that there was no time for them to go back to their trailers between setups and be civilians. They would just stretch out with full packs on the grass and take catnaps."

There are no blue skies in "Saving Private Ryan," only gray ones. Spielberg had his cinematographer, Janusz Kaminski, who also did "Schindler's List," extract color from the film to convey its bleakness. But the blood — and a lot of it is spilled — is vivid red. "I know some will object to the horrific nature of what happened, but I felt an obligation to make it as hard and as tough as it was. I felt it would have been a dishonor to do it any less tough," Spielberg says. "I had a line I was not willing to cross. Believe it or not, no matter how intense you feel the film is, I could have gone much, much farther, but I chose not to."

The closest Spielberg himself has ever come to battle, he candidly admits, was when he drove to the Los Angeles airport to claim the body of a friend killed in Vietnam and drive it to Forest Lawn Cemetery for burial. "That was a terrible, terrible experience," he says, "and my only real experience with loss in any war. That war compelled everyone to be a little more honest and truthful about war. Consciously, I couldn't make a serious war movie without having learned about what war is like from television. I was I-A. The only reason I got out of Vietnam was the lottery. I watched other kids my age fighting. I was just waiting for my induction letter. Then came this miracle, the lottery. I drew number 295. Otherwise, I would have gone and served. I didn't want to go. I didn't believe in the war. But I didn't have the courage of my convictions to protest. I just sat there every day in Jewish dread."

Spielberg's favorite war movie is Lewis Milestone's "All Quiet on the Western Front." He greatly admires William Wellman's "Battleground," John Ford's "They Were Expendable," and Samuel Fuller's "The Steel Helmet." But, he says, they were compromised by propagandistic imperatives. "I met Wellman. He said the studios were censoring him left and right," Spielberg says. "Fuller said censorship drove him to Europe, to Paris, to live. He called them sons of bitches." But wait. As head of film production at DreamWorks, where he calls the shots, doesn't that make Spielberg one of the bad guys?

"I am, I am," he says, grinning ruefully, befitting his status as a man who produces, develops, and greenlights films and TV shows — or not. He's an artist. But he's also management, and very good at it, diversifying into video games, restaurants, and other enterprises, which lately include philanthropy. Since "Schindler's List," he has subsidized the recording of oral histories of Holocaust survivors.

REVIEW: 'Ryan' should be required viewing for generals, politicians

sion.

■ Sergeant Horvath (Tom Sizemore), who collects a canister of dirt from every country he fights through.

■ Private Jackson (Barry Pepper), the sniper who takes a spiritual approach to battle.

■ Corporal Upham (Jeremy Davies), an interpreter who is so new to battle that he thinks there are rules of right and wrong under combat.

As they gripe their way across the killing fields of France to find Ryan, director Spielberg paints a grimly realistic picture of how land wars are fought minute by minute, how a small group of men with a limited view of the mission and the cause for which they will die, cling only to the slim hopes of survival and loyalty to the men on either side of them.

Aside from Hanks and Damon, who represent the goodness and hope of the men nations send off to die, most of the actors are unfamiliar or rarely seen faces.

This casting adds to the film's sense of authenticity, depicting ordinary men caught up in extraordinary circumstances from which they cannot extricate themselves and so must push forward against their better judgment.

Hanks and the entire cast capture the sensibilities of GIs from any era, portraying their reluctant heroism in the face of constant fear.

Dramatically, Spielberg has set himself an interesting dilemma: The opening battle is so intense that the rest of the film cannot rise in intensity from that level. The battle for Omaha Beach could have been a movie unto itself.

Spielberg deals with this dramatic quandary by taking the story back down to a more intimate portrait of eight men who have no way out but to march into doom.

That shift in focus will work for some people, but it may leave others wondering if they're watching the movie backward.

What should catch everyone is Spielberg's attention to detail and his ability to capture the frenzied panic of ground battles.

Does he go too far in his efforts to shock with graphic violence? Yes, he goes as far as a movie can go to re-create the sights and sounds of actual battle.

"The Big Red One," "Platoon" and "Hamburger Hill" took a similar approach in their grim depictions of the way heavy weapons fire can tear apart the human body with indiscriminate dis patch.

But "Saving Private Ryan" is even more intense than those excellent war films because of advances in special effects and Spielberg's greater command of the emotional uses to which those effects can be put.

Spielberg stays right on the ground with his squad, on one narrow strip of beach, in one shell-shattered town, with eight soldiers fighting through the only war they have: the one surrounding them on all sides.

It's a fascinating way to create an epic, not going wide like "Patton," "The Longest Day" or "A Bridge Too Far," but going much deeper. In so doing, he honors ordinary soldiers, survivors and fallen.

"Saving Private Ryan" takes up a position with a short list of other films that showed a realistic view of soldiers sent out to die on impossible missions: "All Quiet on the Western Front," "Paths of Glory," "The Sands of Iwo Jima, "Pork Chop Hill," "The Steel Helmet," "A Walk in the Sun," "Hamburger Hill."

These movies are not about the adventure of soldiering, but about the price paid by the people trapped in war.

Spielberg has brilliantly posed the questions of why men die to save other men, of why they follow orders, of how bravery is attained and how a sense of purpose can emerge from the chaos of war.

Is "Saving Private Ryan" too in tense for kids? Obviously. It should, however, be required viewing for generals and politicians. Give them something to think about before they start the next war.

"Saving Private Ryan" is rated R for its graphic violence and heavy profanity. 5 stars.

DAMON: Actor sees much change since role in 'Saving Private Ryan' attitude. You know, they have a kind of quasi-slacker mentality that doesn't have anything to do necessarily with preparation.

(From 1D)

"Matt is smart enough and has had enough experience to know that ... you must come in with a prepared brand of characterization that he's obviously very facile with."

On this mid-July afternoon, Damon is pacing a suite in San Francisco's Ritz-Carlton Hotel, smoking a cigarette. "I picked up smoking again," the casually dressed Damon says sheepishly. "I was losing weight for a movie and can't stay on a diet, so I smoke. Want one?"

He looks much different from the thick, tough Private Ryan up there on the screen. He's deep into — what else? — preparation for his next role, which has meant losing 15 pounds. He'll play a sociopath in Anthony ("English Patient") Minghella's upcoming film, "The Talented Mr. Ripley," a role for which he is also taking Italian, piano and etiquette lessons.

Is this the living-the-role intensity of a practicing "method" actor? "I don't have the natural talent to do it the way some other people can do it," says Damon, who got much of his enthusiasm for method acting from his hero, Robert Duvall, while playing a bit part in Walter Hill's "Geronimo."

"I'm always looking for every advantage I can get ... you want every possible angle covered. So I do a lot of research."

Past research has included losing so much weight (40 pounds) to play a drug-addicted Gulf War veteran in "Courage Under Fire" that he developed internal problems that required medication, and hanging out in Knoxville, Tenn., tending bar and going to high school football games in order to play a Southern lawyer for Francis Ford Coppola's "The Rainmaker."

So much has changed for Damon since filming "Saving Private Ryan" last year. He and his boyhood best friend, Ben Affleck, won the Oscar for best screenplay for "Good Will Hunting," an independent movie set in their hometown of Boston, which they wrote because they weren't getting enough work. During the filming, co-star Robin Williams introduced him to Spielberg, who was in town one day to shoot courthouse scenes for "Amistad."

Since then, "Good Will Hunting" and "The Rainmaker" have become hits, and with the Oscar plus his public breakup with Minnie Driver (his co-star in "Good Will Hunting") and subsequent liaison with Winona Ryder, he has become a celebrity. And that has changed things in a way Damon says is uncomfortable for him.

"There's a huge personal shift for me," he begins. "In my family, being guarded was always a bad thing. If you're weren't sharing what you were feeling, then something's wrong, and you had to kind of get through that.

"Now I find myself being guarded because it's an occupational necessity, I guess. And that's a bigger shift than it sounds like, personally. I want to be open, and I want to live my life that way, sharing things with people, but I can't."

Controversy looms in several new fall television programs

By John Levesque
N.Y. Times News Service

PASADENA, Calif. — Some shows court controversy like a juvenile delinquent. Others have it thrust on them by reporters looking for an angle.

One fall series on Fox that seems to fit the latter description is "That '70s Show," a smart-looking throwback to an era of bad fashion and bad hair, as experienced by six teenagers.

A few TV critics recently questioned scenes in the pilot episode that have some of the kids smoking pot and drinking beer. Co-creator Bonnie Turner, however, said it was simply an attempt to deal honestly with things that happened in the '70s, and that the show doesn't dwell on such behavior.

Turner added: "I think we'd also be criticized if we ignored it."

Touche.

■ Another show with a target painted on its chest is NBC's "Will & Grace," a comedy about a man and a woman who would make the perfect couple, except that he's gay. So, instead, they're best friends.

With a post-"Ellen" fervor bordering on hysteria, critics wanted to know if Will (played by Eric McCormack) will get to kiss another man, assuming that Grace (Debra Messing) certainly will get that chance.

James Burrows, best known as a co-creator of "Cheers," replied: "We will try to make the most entertaining show possible and deal with the issues that way. We're not here to proselytize at all."

Burrows, one of the most sought-after directors in TV, signed to direct the first 13 episodes of "Will & Grace" because he said it had the best new script he'd seen. He told critics, "We will do a show that makes us laugh and is entertaining, and ... if we find an entertaining way to do a kiss, ... we will do that."

■ It was at the invitation of Prince Charles that actor/filmmaker Lord Richard Attenborough met Diana, the Princess of Wales.

"Prince Charles wrote to me and asked me if I would teach his very naive and shy and embarrassed young wife how to speak in public, how to use a microphone, how to find techniques of dealing with public speaking," Attenborough said. "My real job," he continued, "was to give her confidence, to persuade her that she really had something to say and something to offer."

Attenborough chatted with critics via satellite Monday to promote "Diana," a two-hour documentary tribute that will air Aug. 31.

Though admitting the program is a celebration of Diana's life, Attenborough said it is not completely sycophantic.

"Her faults and her consciousness of the way she dealt with the media — that is in the program," he said. "She manipulated the media to a certain extent, but she used the burden of her fame to achieve things which no other person, in my memory, has ever done."

■ Viewers may not agree, but "ER" executive producer John Wells actually thinks networks are showing much more patience with new shows, particularly dramatic series, than they did a few years ago.

Wells said that five years ago, a show like "Nothing Sacred" never would have lasted as long as it did last season on ABC.

"The problem was that going up against NBC's Thursday night was a kamikaze mission," said Wells, an admirer of the show. "You're just diving into the deck of the carrier, and there are many, many time slots like that."

Still, Wells congratulates networks for trying to broaden the scope of what's on television.

"Only in times when you really take chances do you have success," he said. At the same time, he admitted, when a network takes chances it often has a tough time attracting an audience.

Wells, who had a hit in "ER" right from the start, expects his latest effort for NBC, "Trinity," to build slowly.

The Friday night ensemble drama, about a family of Irish-American siblings, is not unlike "Nothing Sacred" in that it focuses on human frailty and courage. (And one of the characters, played by Tate Donovan, is a Catholic priest.)

But Wells sees differences, too.

"What we're really trying to focus on is the relationship between the family members," he said, "rather than the specific issues."

(From 1D)

"I'm tired of everybody dwelling on this — she started over and recorded it over," she says. "You know, so what? It just got 4 1/2 stars in Rolling Stone, so what can you say?"

In an odd way, it may have helped Williams' career. Most artists would disappear from the public's mind if they were gone for so long. Williams' stature seemed only to increase.

She became a patron saint of Americana, a new radio station format that wore out the records she released in 1988 and 1992. She'd play the new songs in concert, and fans would buzz about them on the Internet. Anticipation can be a powerful thing, particularly when there's a payoff at the end.

Born in Lake Charles, La., Williams grew up with a suitcase always nearby. Her father, a college professor and poet, moved the family to Atlanta, Baton Rouge, La., Fayetteville, Ark., and Mexico City. And that's only a partial list.

The sense of shallow roots suffuses her music. "Child in the back seat, about 4 or 5 years old," she sings in the title cut. "Lookin' out the window. Little bit of dirt mixed with tears, car wheels on a gravel road."

She didn't realize the song was about her own childhood until her father jokingly apologized upon hearing it, she says.

The album's song titles read as a travelogue of a youth growing up in the South: "Lake Charles," "Greenville," "Jackson."

Williams immersed herself in the guitar as a teen-ager, filling her room with songbooks to teach her the folk music she heard on records.

"My whole world was just music," she says. "Listening to records, playing guitar, listening to other people play. And, as soon as I was old enough, going out and playing for other people."

She progressed from artists like Bob Dylan, Judy Collins and Gordon Lightfoot to country singers like Hank Williams and Loretta Lynn and finally to the Delta blues. The grounding in timeless musicians is blended in her own work and gives it the same quality.

Peers have long admired her songwriting: Mary Chapin Carpenter turned Williams' song about a woman who can't understand why she can't have it all, "Passionate Kisses," into a hit. Tom Petty recorded her embittered "Change the Locks."

As a writer, she's a pack rat, holding on to ideas and lyrics for years before waiting for the right moment. "I don't throw anything out until I've used it in a song," she says.

"Car Wheels on a Gravel Road" was a title she had for a long time before writing a song to go with it. Her new song, "Concrete and Barbed Wire," was inspired by watching the Berlin Wall tumble down. A decade later it became a song about a couple divided by prison walls.

The song "Drunken Angel" is about Blaze Foley, a gifted fellow musician from Texas who essentially killed himself with drink. Williams tries to cut through the romanticism of a tortured artist to see the wasted life.

Williams laughs nervously when it's suggested that opening her album with the song, "Right in Time," was a gutsy move. She thinks she's being ratted out for an ironic reference to how long the album took to complete.

No, actually, it's about the sultry lyrics and performance on the ode to an absent friend: "I take off my watch and my earrings," she sings. "My bracelets and everything. Lie on my back and moan at the ceiling. Oh, my baby."

Her new music has a lived-in quality, perhaps because she's been living with it for so long. Williams will admittedly labor over words and phrases, using her dad as an editor. The blues song "Joy," however, works because she followed her instincts to stop.

The rant against an old lover features the central refrain — "you took my joy" — repeated over and over. She started working on the song with her band with only a verse written, always intending to go back and write more lyrics.

"But it took on a life of its own and I just wound up leaving it right where it was," she says. "In a way, it's sort of true to the tradition of the old blues songs that would have one or two verses and kind of stay on the same thing. It's funny how it became the strong point of the song."

A record becomes folklore for Lucinda Williams

AP Laserphoto
Lucinda Williams is touting "Car Wheels on a Gravel Road."

By David Bauder
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Lucinda Williams calls it "a little bump in the road." Seldom has an album of music taken such a tortured trail to the public as her "Car Wheels on a Gravel Road."

Seldom has it seemed to matter so little when the destination was reached.

The appealing blend of rock, blues, folk and country that Williams tops with her Louisiana twang is both passionate and well-crafted. With no weak links, it will be hard to find a better collection of music released this year.

She recorded one version and scrapped it. Worked with Steve Earle but didn't finish. Worked with another producer, former E Street Band member Roy Bittan. Had Rick Rubin tweak it. Finally, the music sat in limbo for a year due to a business dispute that didn't involve her.

Six years ... six long years for her fans.

"I happened to go through a little bump in the road with this thing," she says. "Thank God I did, because it wouldn't be the album it is now. I'd like to get some credit for once."

She warmed — no, make that steamed — to the topic.

Tom Hanks, foreground right, and others prepare to storm Normandy Beach, June 6, 1944, in a scene from "Saving Private Ryan."

Decency within the savage hell of war

Graphic realism of 'Private Ryan' hard to watch; film realistic, heartbreaking

By Bob Fenster
N.Y. Times News Service

War movies fracture along the fault lines of combat: bravery and cowardice, the quick and the dead, mission and madness, the officers who give tough orders and the men on the ground who die carrying them out.

"Saving Private Ryan" leaves us shaken along all those fault lines with men who had no choice but to endure what military historian Stephen Ambrose calls "the inevitability of combat."

In his attempt to create the intense reality of battle under heavy weapons fire, director

■ Review

Steven Spielberg makes "Saving Private Ryan" one of the most realistic and heartbreaking war stories ever filmed.

You would not want it more intense. You may not want it this intense.

The story begins on D-Day, June 6, 1944, off-shore of Omaha Beach, with a company of Rangers landing into the mouths of German machine guns.

The Rangers' attempts to reach shore, to move up the beach, to survive the day form the most graphically intense battle sequence yet filmed of modern warfare. It is a scene that would be the climax of most war movies.

It is only the beginning of "Saving Private Ryan."

The movie then follows one squad of survivors, led by Captain Miller (Tom Hanks), as they are given a FUBAR mission. Veterans will recognize that military slang; others will learn its meaning as the movie progresses.

Why Ryan? His four brothers have been killed in action. Since he is the sole surviving son, the brass want him sent home, as a symbol of their efforts to save the American family from being wiped out by the ferocious onslaught of World War II.

Miller's men realize they are being asked to risk their lives on a PR mission, and they don't like it.

That squad includes:

■ Private Reiben (Ed Burns), a veteran of too many battles who is smart enough to realize how stupid they are for taking the mis-

Matt Damon, right, with Tom Hanks

By G. Allen Johnson
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — It's fitting that Matt Damon's latest role is as a grunt in the new Steven Spielberg movie, "Saving Private Ryan," because tearing into the basics is what this young actor does best.

Unlike many of the 20-something stars crowding Web sites and the cover of Tiger Beat, Damon, at 27, has already been in the business 10 years. His first movie was a one-line cameo in 1988's "Mystic Pizza."

Clearly Spielberg chose him for the title role in his intense World War II drama because of that seriousness. In the film, co-star Tom Hanks leads a mission to bring back Private Ryan after his three brothers are killed in action. The U.S. government doesn't want Ryan's mother to lose all her sons.

Hanks saw the professionalism in Damon before the shooting even started: "A lot of young actors try to get by on some sort of

World War II movie a gift from Spielberg to his father

By Jay Carr
N.Y.Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — People look for the Steven Spielberg story in the dollar signs that dance through their heads when his name is mentioned. But that's not where it's to be found. Family history, family trauma, family dynamics are the source of the energies propelling Spielberg's best films. "Close Encounters" stemmed from youthful stargazing with his computer-programmer father. "E.T." is rooted in his youthful longing for solidity in the aftermath of his parents' divorce. "Schindler's List," over which he procrastinated for nine years, got made when he reconnected with his Judaism, feeling impelled to pass its traditions on to his family.

Like most other successful artists, Spielberg instinctively knows enough to leave things at the intuitive level, that stories work best when they bubble up from the psychic depths. "Saving Private Ryan," his new film about a behind-the-lines military rescue on the heels of D-Day, starring Tom Hanks as the captain of a commando unit and Matt Damon as the GI they're trying to save because his three brothers have been killed, is set during
