Oilman ends land swap controversy

DALLAS (AP) — Oilman Robert O. Anderson says he called off a land swap with the state of Texas because controversy generated by the proposed trade has clouded the merits of the transaction with insinuations of ulterior motives.

Anderson, chairman of Atlantic Richfield Co., said in a short statement Tuesday that he was withdrawing from the negotiations although he still believed the exchange would benefit the state.

Gov. Bill Clements had engineered the proposed trade that would have exchanged Anderson's sprawling ranch near Big Bend — which would have been converted to a wilderness park — for an equal amount of state land in Hudspeth County near El Paso.

Under terms of the exchange, the state would have kept the mineral rights to both tracts.

The proposed trade drew sharp opposition in Presidio County, El Paso and in the Legislature.

Clements said he knew Anderson was disturbed by "some innuendoes by the press and some legislators."

"He felt this amounted to allegations of ulterior motives," Clements said in Fort Worth, where he addressed the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association.

"Unfortunately, the controversy that has been stirred up not only clouds the true merits of the transaction, but clearly makes it inadvisable for us to continue discussions," Anderson said in Dallas Tuesday.

However, one West Texas official says he thinks Anderson now may work a deal with federal authorities on his 190,000-acre Big Bend ranch.

Presidio County Judge Charles Henderson, a vocal opponent of the land swap proposal, said he expected future negotiations between Anderson and federal officials concerning the land in Brewster and Presidio counties.

"The federal boys have been interested in that land," he said. "If the state boys can't get all their eggs in their basket, then maybe the federal boys can. I feel that he may take up negotiations with federal officials."

"It is unfortunate," said Clements. "He (Anderson) is a strong believer in wilderness areas and this has upset him and his family."

Clements said he had not decided whether to talk to Anderson about changing his mind.

"My guess is he (Anderson) would still have stayed with the trade if there had not been just a bunch of basic controversy," said Land Commissioner Bob Armstong, who has tried for years to get the state to buy Anderson's land.

Armstrong said he and Clements would "look at what — if any — possible alternatives there might be and then make a decision. If this is his decision, that's his decision, and there's nothing we can do about it."

"It's Mr. Anderson's ranch, and I think he's entitled to do anything he wants to with it," Armstrong added.

"It's sad for me that...you literally have, I guess it's fair to say, hundreds of thousands of people that have been interested in this and have wanted this to be a park that would be available to them and you have very few people who don't want it to happen."

Armstrong said that by a "few people" he was not referring to Sen. Peyton McKnight, D-Tyler, who spoke out against the deal in the legislative session.

"There are real estate people in the El Paso area who are incensed about the possibility the land would be at a fairly low value in that area, because they were trying to sell land for a much higher value," said Armstrong. "A lot of this case is being tried in the El Paso newspapers — letters to the editor, that sort of thing. It's very easy to make demagogic judgments about land values."

For example, said Armstrong, land 10 miles closer to El Paso is "vastly" more expensive, and land 20 miles closer is selling for $10,000 an acre. Land farther away than the university land is being sold for $25-$50 an acre, he said.

Anderson said in the statement, however, that "the mineral values to be conveyed to the University of Texas exceeded the value of the surface land involved in the exchange."

The Senate resolution urging UT regents to consider the land swap was approved by the House. The resolution was viewed as giving the regents legislative authorization to go ahead if they thought the trade was a wise move.

"The university was going about it in a very rational way," said Armstrong. "They were going to get an appraisal, and if the appraisal looked good, then they were thinking about completing the trade. But I guess that's not going to be of importance at this stage if he has made up his mind and is firm about going through with it."

Tax-cut consensus close

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats, pressured by the Reagan administration and conservatives in their own party, are moving reluctantly toward a two-year tax-cut plan but still insisting on extra relief for lower- and middle-income Americans.

"I hope we can fashion a program that can be enjoyed by all Democrats," Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, told reporters Tuesday after a two-hour meeting of panel Democrats. "We're talking about the possibility of a multiyear tax bill."

However, Rostenkowski said, "There were no votes, no conclusions."

He added that Democrats "still are very concerned with working Americans and how we can target dollars" from a tax cut on those earning between $20,000 and $50,000 a year.

But apparently Democrats on the committee were close enough to a consensus that they scheduled another meeting this afternoon. That would follow a morning caucus of all House Democrats to discuss tax-cut legislation.

Rostenkowski and most other House Democrats have been cool to President Reagan's plans for a 10 percent reduction in tax rates for individuals in each of three consecutive years, with the cuts going to rich and poor alike regardless of income. Democrats have viewed a one-year tax reduction as holding less risk of worsening inflation and have urged proportionately more relief for those with incomes under $50,000 a year.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes declined comment today on the Democratic search for a compromise.

"The president still thinks it should be a three-year proposal," Speakes said, but would be "willing to listen" to anything the Democrats might suggest.

Apparently not enough Democrats are committed to any plan to assure its passage in the House. There are at least three factions:

—Rostenkowski, the key figure in the House on tax matters, is trying to hammer out a compromise but not the three-year, 25 percent version endorsed by the White House. He met privately for lunch Tuesday with a varied group of Democrats and proposed — with no apparent success — a two-year, 15 percent cut.

"He came in here talking about a compromise for two years and he just got battered," said one liberal Democratic congressman.

But Rostenkowski apparently was more successful in the meeting with fellow Democrats on the Ways and Means Committee. Liberal Rep. Tom Downey, D-N.Y., conceded something more than a one-year cut and less than Reagan's full three years is likely.

—Most House liberals oppose any multiyear tax cut. Many talk privately against any compromise, hoping that would force a direct vote on Reagan's original proposal. Such a vote, by most counts, would go against the president.

—A group of 47 conservatives, mainly Southerners, who gave Reagan the margin of victory in a crucial budget vote earlier this year, tried unsuccessfully Tuesday to reach a consensus on a tax-cut plan.

"We were divided very, very closely between a two-year and a three-year tax cut," said Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, who heads the group, known as the Conservative Democratic Forum. As a result, Stenholm said, "There is no consensus yet, no statement, no position. Negotiations are still going on."

Spock, others face arraignment today

WASHINGTON (AP) — Five women and seven men, including pediatrician and author Dr. Benjamin Spock, arrested in a White House protest Tuesday faced arraignment today in District of Columbia Superior Court.

Richard Hartwig, a Secret Service spokesman, said the demonstrators would be charged with "unlawful entry, failure to quit."

They were arrested after stepping out of the tourist line at the White House and kneeling for five minutes on the rain-covered front drive to protest President Reagan's proposed reductions in spending for domestic programs.

A handbill distributed by the Community for Creative Non-Violence said those participating in the demonstrations had united "to resist the sacrifice of the poor on the altar of military spending."

Hartwig said the demonstrators refused to give their names to authorities, but John Shiel of the Community for Creative Non-Violence said they included Spock and his wife, Mary Morgan of the Physicians for Social Responsibility.

Four protesters were released on their own recognizance Tuesday night, but the Spocks and six others chose to spend the night in jail, according to Shiel, who said the White House demonstrations will continue daily until July 3.

Shiel said others arrested Tuesday included Dr. Barbette Blackington, director of the International Institute of Childrens Nature and Their Rights in Washington; Harold Maus, a biochemist and former National Institutes of Health cancer researcher; John McAvinue, a public affairs officer for the Maryland health department; and Dr. Walter Lear, president of the Pennsylvania Institute of Social Medicine.

Local veterans applaud action on Agent Orange

By SUE FAHLGREN
Staff Writer

The passage Tuesday of a federal House bill for Agent Orange victims brought a round of applause from local Vietnam veterans who have faced medical problems from the chemical for more than 10 years.

"How 'bout that? How 'bout that?" a thrilled Roger Stinson of Midland said when told the news this morning.

Stinson, a Vietnam veteran exposed to the chemical defoliant in the late 1960s and early 1970, was excited about the government's step toward aiding Agent Orange victims.

"That is fantastic! I'm very excited about this. That's real good news," Stinson said. "That's going to mean so much (to the veterans). Now if they'll (Veterans' Administration) just get on the ball and accept that legislation."

STINSON'S PLIGHT became known to Midlanders in February through a Reporter-Telegram article which focused on his problems obtaining medical records from the Veterans' Administration regarding his exposure to the chemical and its complications.

Since February, bills in the Texas and federal legislatures have passed to ease the problems of the veterans exposed to Agent Orange.

"This shows that the Texas and federal legislatures are willing to really start helping these guys a lot," Stinson said. "It shows the problem does exist."

Fellow Texans Dan and Donna Jordan, founders of the Brotherhood of Vietnam Veterans in Austin, also were happily surprised by the news.

"That sounds very encouraging to us," Mrs. Jordan said. "We're on the right track. We hope it'll have good luck in the Senate," she said, referring to the unanimous 388-0 vote in the House Tuesday.

Related story, Page 5A

FEDERAL LEGISLATION was prompted by recent Agent Orange bills in the Texas legislature, Stinson said.

"This passed only because Texas passed their two bills. Nobody wants to take Texas as being first," he said. "It had a strong influence on this one."

Mrs. Jordan agreed. "It was looking as if the state is having to do what the national government is supposed to be doing," she said.

Jordan said he felt Texas exerted other influence as well. "I think it's great. But, I think probably Texas had some influence on it. They say that Texas (representatives in the U.S. House) had some resolutions that were very similar to that (bill)." Those resolutions, Jordan said, were a result of pressure from throughout the state.

In addition, Stinson credits media coverage in speeding the legislative acts. "You (Reporter-Telegram) have had more of an influence than you think," he said this morning. "In talking to our representatives, a lot of the things brought out in your articles changed their minds and opened some eyes (about Agent Orange)."

Stinson called the Reporter-Telegram "one of the major carriers of this state," along with Austin and Houston, and as having "been strongly in favor of this legislation."

The Jordans agreed. "I think your stories have supplied that information in getting so many people to look at this problem," Mrs. Jordan said.

STILL, STINSON WAS hesitant. "We'll have to keep pushing to get the full picture. If they can get them (VA) to admit to (using) chemical warfare...that's what still has to come before we can get some help."

Mrs. Jordan was hesitant as well. "I'm glad to see this trend, but we just have to be sure that they're (government) not throwing the dog a bone with no meat on it."

A part of the bill passed Tuesday stipulates the maintenance of 91 storefront counseling centers across the country originally slated for closing in October.

"That's really what we've needed," Stinson said. "That's as important as hospitalization. They've got to have some place to go to talk."

Since initial publicity of his problem last winter, Stinson has become more involved with other veterans exposed to Agent Orange. So many, in

Toxic waste facility permit sought

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A Dallas firm has applied for a state permit to operate a hazardous waste disposal "staging area" south of Odessa on the Cowden Ranch, the Reporter-Telegram has learned.

Sandhills Industries, Inc., applied for a permit from the Texas Water Resources Board in Austin and public hearings are tentatively set for next fall, according to the company's owner, Dick Kirkham.

"It's not a dump," said Kirkham. "It's a staging area for the temporary storage of toxic wastes. No nuclear wastes are involved. In the past, hazardous material has simply been dumped on the ground. That's what's wrong with the water out there (Midland-Odessa)."

The company has an option on five acres of Cowden Ranch land on the Crane Highway about five miles south of Odessa. The waste will be stored in drums and fiberglass containers until enough accumulates that transfer becomes economically worthwhile, according to Kirkham. It will then be disposed of at licensed dump sites on the Gulf Coast.

"It's EPA-classified material from chemical plants, radiator shops, chemical plants and industrial plants in the Midland-Odessa area," said Kirkham.

An initial jurisdictional dispute between state and federal agencies delayed progress on the operation about 90 days, according to Kirkham, who said plans for the project had been on the drawing board for a year.

The dispute has been resolved, he added, and the state will monitor the company on a monthly basis. The list of wastes includes acids, organic chemicals, alkalies, oil sludges, ammonia and solvents.

Headquartered in Dallas, the neophyte waste disposal firm will move to the Odessa area and expects to hire five new employees from the local labor market.

"This is a first for Sandhills," said Kirkham, who also owns Mechanical Components, a Dallas-based warehousing firm. If the application is approved, Kirkham said Sandhills, Inc., would be the only such waste disposal firm from Del Rio to Canada, and from Dallas to Los Angeles.

Although the Browning-Ferris Co. has a disposal site near Odessa, it's an injection well process that puts the wastes into the ground. State officials could not be reached for comment on the Sandhills disposal operations by press time.

Haig acknowledges time limit on Syrian missiles

WASHINGTON (AP) — After consistent denials, the Reagan administration has acknowledged that the United States faces a deadline for achieving progress toward a settlement of the Lebanon missile dispute between Syria and Israel.

"There is a time limit to achieving some progress, and I'm hopeful we will," Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. said Tuesday at a State Department conference for editors and broadcasters.

Although he did not say what the time limit is, his statement was the first public acknowledgement by the administration of any deadline.

It came a day after Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin that a time limit had been set but declined to say what it was.

Philip Habib, President Reagan's special Mideast envoy who is scheduled to return to the Mideast later this week to resume his peace efforts, said at the White House Friday that no one had set a time limit.

Habib began his shuttle diplomacy shortly after Syria installed Soviet-built SAM-6 anti-aircraft missiles in central Lebanon on April 29.

Israel has demanded their removal. Reagan and Haig have claimed the Habib mission has been successful in helping avert an armed conflict over the missiles.

While he declined to comment specifically on Begin's remarks, Haig said there is "some sense of urgency.

"There is a time limit because there has been a change in the status quo, and from that point of view, one might say there is some urgency, although I don't call it an immediate sense of urgency, but there is a time limit to achieving some progress, and I'm hopeful we will," Haig said.

He repeated that the United States' immediate aim is to help achieve a return to the situation that has prevailed in central Lebanon since 1976, which means before the Syrians moved in missiles.

Air Force 'screwed up' probe

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Furious that the Air Force granted some kind of immunity, top Justice Department officials say it may take a judge to sort out whether they can prosecute a missile crewman accused of unauthorized contacts with the Soviet Embassy.

Justice Department sources said it would take a careful analysis of the Air Force's promises and might ultimately be up to a federal judge to decide whether the government can try 2nd Lt. Christopher M. Cooke in a civilian court.

Asked about the Air Force's unilateral decision to grant immunity, one Justice Department source said, "It was extremely ill-advised. Basically, they screwed up the case."

Capt. Virginia Pribyla, a spokeswoman for the Air Force, said military officials had no immediate comment on the Justice Department's criticism.

The Justice Department has said it is investigating to see whether any civilian criminal charges, including espionage, should be brought against Cooke. If charged and convicted of espionage, Cooke could face up to life in prison.

Justice Department sources, who discussed the case on the condition they not be identified, gave this account:

AP Laserphoto

The original evidence about Cooke's visits was developed by the FBI, which is known to maintain constant surveillance of the Soviet Embassy. The FBI referred the matter to the Air Force after it determined in March that it had evidence of an Air Force officer visiting the embassy.

From that point forward, the case was handled by the Air Force, including an interivew with Cooke in May. Concerned about the security of its Titan intercontinental ballistic missiles, the Air Force at some point offered Cooke immunity in return for a full account of what he had done.

Department officials explained that federal law authorizes the attorney general to make grants of immunity. The attorney general can and has delegated that authority to the assistant attorney general in charge of the criminal division.

However, the law provides that immunity can extend only to preventing the government from using any statements by a defendant against him or to develop a case against him. The defendant can be prosecuted on the basis of evidence obtained independently.

The department officials explained, however, that a prosecutor can make a promise of immunity without authorization and that such a promise may be enforceable in court. How a judge would view such a promise depends on the scope of the authority, the extent of the immunity promised, the cooperation of the defendant and other factors, they said.

One source said the Justice Department would have followed a procedure of soliciting the defendant's cooperation, testing his information against other sources and possibly with lie detectors, and promising only to let a judge know he had been cooperative.

One Justice Department source said, "The Air Force now wants to prosecute him because they claim he didn't tell the whole truth, but how can you tell that if you grant him immunity first?"

One Justice source said that the Air Force made its immunity decision without consulting anyone at the Justice Department. "If they've got a question about tanks, they ask the Army. If they've got a question about ships, they ask the Navy. Why, when they a have a question about immunity, didn't they ask the Justice Department?"

MILAN, Italy (AP) — Terrorists ambushed and kidnapped an executive of Italy's state-controlled Alfa Romeo automaker today in the streets of this northern city, police reported.

Canadian prison smolders after riots

An armed soldier stands outside the gate at Matsqui medium security prison Tuesday night while prisoners inside riot. Seven prisoners were taken to the hospital.

MATSQUI, British Columbia (AP) — More than 300 inmates rioted at a medium-security prison in an apparent protest over kitchen work, setting fires and forcing a group of guards to flee to a rooftop where they were whisked to safety by a helicopter, officials said.

Nearly half the federal prison was burned out or still ablaze early this morning as guards, Royal Canadian Mounted Police and some 100 soldiers from the Canadian armed forces surrounded Matsqui Prison, about 30 miles east of Vancouver, British Columbia.

The rioting began at 5:20 p.m. PDT, and the prisoners, many of them camped in tents on the prison grounds, still were in control of the jail 13 hours later.

Officials refused to divulge any plans to end the takeover.

No hostages had been taken. Canadian Penitentiary Service spokesman Jack Stewart said seven prisoners suffered minor injuries in the rampage, including one with superficial shotgun-pellet wounds to the face and shoulder, and were being treated at local hospitals.

The riot began with the prisoners taking over the facility, apparently to protest working conditions in the prison kitchen, officials said. There had been a meeting earlier about kitchen work, but their exact complaints were unknown.

Eight guards trapped inside escaped to a roof and were picked up by a helicopter, Stewart said.

"They (the inmates) aren't asking for anything," Stewart said. "We haven't had any formal contact with them at all."

After the inmates began the riot and set fires, they pelted firemen with stones, and Mounties fired warning shots to protect the firefighters, Stewart added.

The fires were burning in the kitchen, auditorium, storage area, Protestant chapel, administration building and two residential wings of the prison, which houses 312 prisoners, Stewart said. All of the inmates were believed to have taken part in the disturbance.

Stewart estimated that about 40 percent of the prison was ablaze at 1 a.m. PDT, but firefighters could only pour water on unaffected areas.

"The only indication we have is a meeting that took place this afternoon with the inmate committee," Stewart said Tuesday. "There were concerns expressed at that time about working conditions in the kitchen but I can't be more specific than that.

The riot started about 5:20 p.m. PDT Tuesday when inmates armed with bats and pipes took over the kitchen, forcing the staff to evacuate, Stewart said. The prisoners then took over the facility's hospital, with guards fleeing the residential wings of the building, he added.

A spokesman for Matsqui police said extra off-duty staffers were called in and sent to the prison. He said the police were told prisoners had apparently taken control of the facility and were setting fires.

The riot was the most serious disturbance in the history of the institution, which opened in 1966 as a center for criminal drug addicts, Stewart said.

Trouble broke out at the facility last June when three prisoners were injured in a series of disturbances that prison officials said involved alcohol brewed in the prison.

In July, a four-hour hostage-taking incident erupted when two prisoners, one disguised as a woman and the other dressed in civilian clothing, attempted to walk out of the prison during open house on a Sunday afternoon.

They took a guard hostage inside the front gate after they were discovered, but officials were able to talk the inmates into surrendering.

Riot police turn dogs on students

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Riot police used tear gas, clubs and attack dogs on mixed-race high school students mobilizing for a demonstration today, and authorities said 60 youngsters were arrested.

Witnesses reported widescale beatings by the riot squad. They said at least two pupils were hospitalized, while others were treated for minor injuries and released.

Police also fired tear gas into a crowd at a funeral, thinking some of the fleeing students were among them. The gas caused young children at the funeral to scream and vomit from the fumes, witnesses said.

They also said they saw women and bystanders beaten and chased into homes.

The violence followed this week's the white-separatist regime's celebration of its 20th anniversary as a republic independent of the British Commonwealth — festivities which themselves were marked by protests from militants among South Africa's 23 million non-white majority.

There are about 2.5 million people in South Africa the government categorizes as mixed-race, or "colored," meaning their parents are of different racial backgrounds. Their schools receive less government money than those of the 5 million white minority, and the education in the mixed-race schools is inferior to that in the white schools.

The police action today was triggered by a high school student demonstration against the arrest of the president of one of the student representative councils.

"Protest is the only weapon we have to show solidarity with Aziz Jardine, our student leader who was detained by security police last week," a pupil from a Bosmont township school explained. The charges were not known.

Golfer Patrick Browne Jr. says blindness no handicap

DALLAS (AP) — Patrick Browne Jr., must be six feet, three inches tall, a youngish 48, strikingly handsome, engagingly articulate — and blind.

He was at a golf tournament here last week. He scored 83 at Dallas Country Club. Of course, it was strange ground for him and he verbally lashed himself for "stupidly" three-putting five greens.

nd whenfather swung on to hisshoulder for the pat and burb and kept talking golf and faith and love for life and the plight of others, you knew you had met something more than the four-time national champion of the U.S. Blind Golf Association. Or the man who had incredible rounds of 75-74-79-75 on the demanding Mission Hills course out of Palm Springs, Calif.

Once captain of the Tulane University basketball and golf teams, Browne lost total eyesight when thrown through the windshield of his automobile in a 1966 accident. But he didn't lose sight of his mission.

"I never had a doubt during those months of hospitalization that I would make it," he said. "I had no feeling of trauma when they told me I'd never see again. I had my faith in God. He doesn't give you more than you can handle..."

An accomplished young trial lawyer, Browne pursued his career in the courtrooms after the accident. "You don't really have to look people in the eye to know and feel whether they are telling the truth," he said.

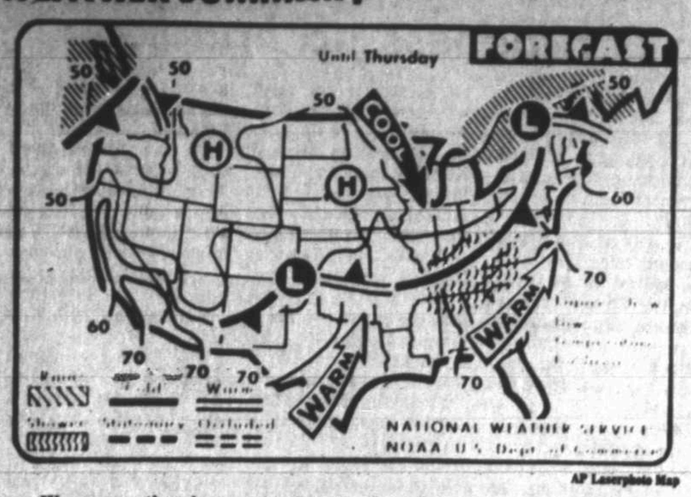

The father of three daughters and infant Patrick, Browne doesn't know Braille or use a guide dog. Devoted family, a limitless supply of friends, and faith and confidence are his only props.

Democrats seek tax cut compromise

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats, pressured by the Reagan administration and conservatives in their own party, are continuing their reluctant search for a compromise on income tax reductions.

"I hope we can fashion a program that can be enjoyed by all Democrats," the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., said Tuesday after Democrats on the tax-writing panel met for two hours without reaching any conclusions.

"We're talking about the possibility of a multiyear tax bill," he said, adding that another meeting was scheduled for this afternoon following a morning caucus of all House Democrats to discuss the issue.

Rostenkowski said that Democrats "still are very concerned with working Americans and how we can target" money generated by a tax cut to persons earning between $20,000 and $50,000 a year.

President Reagan is seeking an across-the-board reduction. After first proposing a three-year decrease totalling 30 percent, he offered a compromise of 25 percent over three years.

Most liberals in the House want no compromise, instead favoring bringing Reagan's plan to a vote which, by most counts, the president would lose. A group of 47 conservative Democrats is divided over whether the cut should be for two years or three.

Republican congressional leaders met with the president Tuesday and said afterwards that disunity among Democrats is responsible for the lack of a compromise.

"At this point, the Democrats haven't settled down enough so that we can be sure what they actually would support," said Rep. Barber Conable, R-N.Y., senior GOP member on the Ways and Means Committee.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said he thought Rostenkowski still may be able to negotiate an agreement.

In other congressional business Tuesday:

—The strictest limits ever on federal financing of abortions for the poor were virtually assured of enactment after Senate and House negotiators left untouched an amendment to the supplemental spending bill for fiscal 1981, which ends Sept. 30.

The amendment would prohibit use of Medicaid funds for an abortion unless continued pregnancy threatened a woman's life. It dropped the current language permitting abortions for pregnancies resulting from rape and incest.

The tougher language, expected to get pro forma floor approval, would expire with the end of the fiscal year and would have to be renewed in order to apply to future years.

—Senate and House conferees agreed to spend $1.74 billion more than originally budgeted for food stamps to keep the program from running out of money this summer.

The House members of the conference approved a Senate version that was $538 million more than the House proposed. Without the money, the Agriculture Department said it would have to cut back food coupons for 23 million recipients by 17 percent this summer.

—The House Ways and Means Committee chopped $560 million out of next year's Social Security budget — $200 million of it by eliminating the $255 lump sum death benefit now paid survivors of recipients.

The committee also voted to leave at 72 the age at which recipients are exempt from the retirement test, saving an estimated $170 million next year. The age was to have dropped to 70 beginning next January. Under the retirement test, people over 65 lose $1 in Social Security benefits for every $2 they earn over $5,500 a year.

—The House unanimously passed a bill ordering the Veterans Administration to provide medical care to Vietnam veterans whose health problems may have arisen from exposure to the herbicide Agent Orange. The VA says there is no scientific evidence showing that contact with the defoliant damaged the health of GIs.

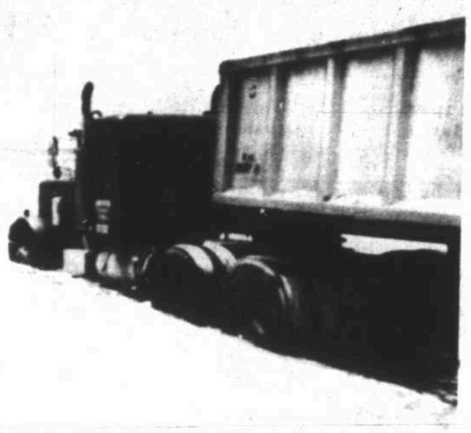

More than 40,000 veterans have asked for VA medical examinations to see if their health was affected. Veterans have attributed a variety of ailments, from cancer to birth defects in their offspring, to Agent Orange.

—Roscoe L. Egger Jr., commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service, told a Senate Finance subcommittee that a presidentially appointed taxpayer's advocate could lead to political abuse of the tax system.

Oft-repeated "horror stories" about IRS harassment of taxpayers are rarely accurate, Egger said.

A bill by Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., would require the president to appoint an independent IRS ombudsman. It also would require a court order in many cases before IRS could seize a person's property for non-payment of taxes.

Caught by tide

No, his brakes didn't fail. Truck driver Tom Skinner parked his 18-wheeler there on purpose. But the waves were 40 feet away when he did so, hoping to spend the night on Surfside Beach in Freeport, Texas, to enjoy the sea breeze. When he awoke to the sound of waves slapping against his cab, he realized the tide had come in during the night. A bulldozer was summoned to tow the truck out of the water.

The time has come to fill in blanks

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's called reconciliation, but it's likely to be as rancorous as divorce court as President Reagan and his allies press Congress to deliver the $36 billion in federal spending cuts it already has promised.

The time has come to fill in the blanks, in a hurry.

There are Democrats who argue that the process — cutting specific programs to stay under spending ceilings already set — is an opportunity for liberals to regroup and regain funds for domestic spending programs slashed under the Reagan budget. House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. is among them.

Not so, counters the Republican administration, with an ample corps of Democratic supporters.

"Policy has already been decided," said budget director David A. Stockman, arguing that what should happen now is almost routine. He knows it won't be handled that way — not with a Republican administration bent on changing the way Congress does budget business, and not with assorted pet projects at stake.

"As we start this grand legislative experiment...it's likely to unfold less like a family reunion and more like a divorce court," Stockman said the other morning, launching a White House drive to make sure the cuts are enforced.

AP Analysis

He spoke as congressional committees began work on the details of budget cutting, with a deadline of June 12.

That's not much time, and it is no small task. For example, programs under the supervision of the House Education and Labor Committee will have to be pruned by $10 billion to fit the budget. And Democrats, many of whom do not want such cuts in social programs, are still the majority there.

Besides, even if they can't win, O'Neill and Democratic liberals may decide to make a stand and fight for more money for their preferred programs — college student loans and school lunch funds are two of them — in order to make a political case they can talk about later.

In the opening phase of budget action, the issue was the broad one: austerity in government spending. For all the debate, it was clear that was what the voters wanted, and Congress got the message.

Now the question is where to be austere, which specific program is cut — and who loses what as a result. That's tougher.

"This covers every sensitive program politically that you can possibly imagine," Stockman said.

He said the administration is willing to bend on the allocation of funds within the guidelines already set.

"Our approach will be one of flexibility on the details but insistence on honest scorekeeping and the bottom line," the budget chief said.

That flexibility apparently will be limited. Stockman said it isn't going to be feasible to restore large programs or undo large cuts because there isn't any place left to make offsetting reductions.

O'Neill, who virtually conceded in advance that Reagan would win on the initial budget resolution, now suggests Democrats fight to get some of the cuts restored — even if it means busting the $695 billion budget.

Permian Basin may be in for some severe weather

Partly cloudy skies will continue through Thursday with possible severe thunderstorms this afternoon and tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Severe weather conditions may exist this evening as the Weather Service has forecast a 30 percent chance of rain for both this afternoon and tonight.

The low tonight should be in the mid-60s. This morning's low was close to that forecast, rating a 63 on the thermometer. The record low for today is 47 degrees set on June 3, 1947.

Warm days will continue with the gray skies, however, as high temperatures loom near 90 on Thursday. Tuesday's high was 91 degrees, coming close to the all-time record high for June 2 of 100 degrees set in 1977.

Winds through Thursday will be southeasterly at 10-15 mph.

Violent thunderstorms were reported across wide areas of Texas Tuesday night and the National Weather Service has issued flash flood watches today for far north and east Texas and parts of South Texas.

Winds were mostly south to southwesterly at five to 15 m.p.h. The 5 a.m. temperatures readings across the state included 64 degrees at Wichita Falls and 73 degrees at Waco. Dallas-Fort Worth reported 72 degrees; San Angelo had a reading of 70.

The forecasts calls for widely scattered rainshowers and occasional thunderstorms in the north, east and south. Elsewhere, skies will be partly cloudy through Thursday.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms spread along the Atlantic Coast, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, and from Oklahoma and Texas to western Montana and Utah early today.

Tornadoes were reported in Texas Monday night, and locally heavy rain caused flooding in parts of Arkansas, Colorado and Missouri.

Scattered showers and thundershowers are predicted to reach from the Gulf Coast to the Great Lakes and the north Atlantic Coast states. Rain is also forecast for the northern and central Rockies, as well as the northern Pacific Coast.

fact, that he and his wife, Marcia, plan to open the third Brotherhood of Vietnam Veterans chapter in Texas in July.

"WE HAVE SIX very serious cases right now that need help," Stinson said. "They need a place to come in if they want to talk. They need to talk to someone who knows what it's like to stumble through a lot of the steps (arising from Agent Orange complications). Just having somebody who understands helps," he said.

Stinson, a former pastor in the Assembly of God Church, found the Jordans the understanding veteran family for him.

Although six veterans may not sound like many, Stinson said there would be no "recruiting" blitz as members feel large, diversified groups are similar to government agencies set up for the veteran. The Brotherhood is more personal.

"This is only the third chapter permitted in Texas," Stinson said, adding the other two are located in Austin and Houston. "There may be more later, but right now we're cautious."

The Midland chapter would have the largest region for membership, Stinson said. "It will include the entire West Texas area from San Angelo to Abilene and up in the Panhandle and El Paso," he said. "There seems to be an interest and a need here and this could be one of the busier centers. There seems to be a high concentration of Vietnam GIs in West Texas and we're kind of excited about it. Midland deserves to have one."

Economists still expect lower interest rates

NEW YORK (AP) — Although interest rates in the nation's money markets have risen this week, many economists are holding to their predictions of lower rates this summer.

"The trend ought to be downward," said Belinda Pearson, chief economist at Seattle First National Bank. She believes the economy is weakening, leading to less demand for credit and a lower rate of inflation.

"I still think rates are going to go down," said Rachel Balbach, an economist at First National Bank in St. Louis. "But that doesn't mean they won't bounce around. Heaven knows they will."

More banks joined the move to a lower prime lending rate Tuesday, cutting their rates by one-half percentage point to 20 percent. Some banks had lowered their rates earlier in the week.

Interest rates in the money markets, however, rose for the second day in a row. Changes in those rates are significant because many banks acquire funds in the money markets. When money-market rates go up, banks' cost of funds go up, too.

Some economists believe the Federal Reserve will not allow money-market rates to fall very much in the weeks ahead. As a result, say those economists, most interest rates are not likely to fall from their current high range.

Among the banks lowering their prime rates from 20.5 percent were Bank of America, which is the nation's largest, and Citibank, which is second-largest. Others included No. 4 Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., No. 11 Wells Fargo Bank and No. 16 Mellon Bank.

Some smaller, regional banks also joined the move to a lower prime, including Mercantile Trust in St. Louis, First Wisconsin National Bank in Milwaukee and First National Bank of Atlanta.

The prime rate is what banks quote as the lowest rate charged on loans, usually of between 90 days and one year, to their best-risk corporate customers. Often banks will charge a lower rate, however, on very short-term loans to top customers.

The banks that cut their prime rates to 20 percent said they did so because their cost of funds had declined in recent days and because the demand for business loans had slackened.

Midland policeman suffers injuries in two-car accident

A Midland police officer was injured and his patrol car demolished in a two-car accident shortly before 2 a.m. today.

Lt. David Wilks, 35, was released following treatment at Midland Memorial Hospital for head and shoulder lacerations suffered when his 1978 Pontiac was struck on the passenger side by a 1976 Buick driven by 20-year-old John Espinoza Jr., 4713 Thomason Drive.

According to police, Wilks was westbound on Texas Street and Espinoza was southbound on M Street and failed to heed a stop sign at the intersection.

Espinoza refused medical treatment and was later booked on a charge of driving while intoxicated and unlawfully carrying a weapon, after officers said they found a pistol in his car.

A 19-year-old male passenger in the Espinoza vehicle also escaped injury and was booked on a public intoxication charge. Police said the patrol car was a total loss.

In burglary complaints during the past 24 hours, Robert Morin of 1202 W. Kentucky Ave. told officers $2,350 worth of stereo equipment was stolen from his home, and $400 in change was reported taken from the Club Moderno, 2409 Garden City Highway. Entry was gained by prying a lock off the front door.

City firemen reported a 1969 Oldsmobile owned by Danny Hernandez of 1116 E. Hamby Ave. was destroyed in a blaze that broke out about 12:30 a.m. today. The fire, which is under investigation by the fire marshal's office, occurred in the 1100 block of East Hamby.

House approves Agent Orange bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — By approving a bill that would direct the Veterans Administration to provide medical care for Vietnam veterans exposed to the herbicide Agent Orange, the House is telling the former GIs "we're listening," says a congressman who served in Southeast Asia.

By its 388-0 vote Tuesday, the House sided with the argument that veterans' health may have been impaired by contact with the herbicide, which contains dioxin, considered one of the world's most dangerous chemical substances.

The bill would require the VA to provide hospital care and medical attention for Vietnam veterans who think their health problems may have arisen from exposure to Agent Orange.

The VA has argued that scientific evidence has failed to show that contact with Agent Orange did any such damage. Besides, the agency says, it provides medical care to any veterans needing it, regardless of the cause of their problems.

But in a report accompanying its bill, the House Veterans Affairs Committee said "until the scientific community has been able to make a determination as to the possible cause-and-effect relationship" of Agent Orange exposure and later illness, the VA should do everything possible for Vietnam veterans whose health may have been affected by the spray.

And Rep. Thomas A. Daschle, D-S.D., one of a handful of House members who served in the Southeast Asian war, told colleagues that passage "will tell the Vietnam veteran, 'Yes, we're listening.'"

During the war, the United States sprayed 12 million gallons of the herbicide on jungle and farming areas to deny food and hiding places to communist forces. More than 40,000 veterans have sought VA medical examinations to see if their health was affected by the herbicide.

Supply problems force Shuttle cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tight budgets and supply problems have forced the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to cut from 48 to 34 the number of space shuttle flights planned through 1985.

Dr. Stanley Weiss, associate administrator of NASA, said Tuesday that the "substantial decrease" in the shuttle program means that only 30 operational missions — plus three more test flights — will occur in the next four years.

Weiss said the rescheduling is necessary primarily for two reasons: budgets that keep the space agency from flying some of its scientific missions and delays in constructing and delivering a new, lightweight external fuel tank for the shuttle.

NASA officials said they had planned to use the new external fuel tank, which is 6,000 pounds lighter than the one flown on the Columbia, on 28 operational missions.

But these tanks, which contribute to better performance and payload, proved harder to make and assemble than anticipated, and eight will not be delivered on schedule, they said.

NASA officials met last week with private contractors and government agencies who have scheduled payloads on the shuttles and informed them of their revised flight times.

Weiss said some users are disturbed by the delays, but most were understanding and "pretty upbeat" about the shuttle program.

Users who have bought cargo space on the shuttle have been frustrated because of previous delays. Some have opted to contract for old, expendable rockets as a backup to launch satellites in case the shuttle wasn't ready to fly on time.

Weiss said users whose payloads are "bumped" into 1986 or later will be guaranteed the original price they were quoted.

Midland man suing Exxon

A Midland man who claims a major oil company refuses to hire him because he is black and previously had lodged a complaint against the company has filed a racial discrimination suit in federal court in Midland against the company, Exxon Company USA.

The petitioner, James Ellis, is claiming in his petition that an Exxon district superintendent "told me that because I had filed a previous charge against Exxon, I couldn't ever be hired."

Ellis is alleging that his civil rights were denied him.

"I believe that I was denied employment in retaliation for having filed a previous charge," said Ellis, who stated he was the subject of a U.S. Department of Labor investigation. He said that the DOL was investigating Exxon's "custom and practice of discriminating against blacks in its employment at all levels of management within the company."

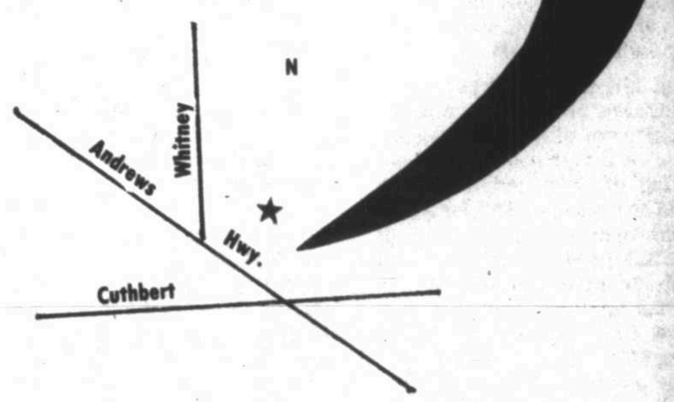

Ellis said he had applied for "maintenance specialist," a job which "didn't require experience" but that he had 3½ years of experience in related work.

"Plaintiff alleges that his denied employment is directly related to the company's custom and practice of discriminating against blacks."

Ellis is petitioning Federal Judge Lucius D. Bunton to appoint him counsel, since he "is unable to hire an attorney" and "has no money."

He said that the Texas Employment Commission had sent him to Exxon to apply for a job and that he had taken tests for employment.

A better plan

Texas' legislators are to be commended for approving Rep. Gene Green's bill for a mandatory auto insurance law. But the questions of the bill's enforceability and its potential impact still remain to be answered.

Green's bill, approved in Sunday's legislative session, mandates that after Jan. 1 most automobiles and trucks be covered by liability insurance that would pay medical expenses of $10,000 per person, up to $20,000 for all victims of an accident, and auto repair costs up to $5,000.

The bill also requires that a motorist be able to show a police officer proof of insurance on demand. A driver convicted of not having the required insurance could be fined up to $200 for a first offense with a minimum fine of $75. A second conviction could send the driver to jail for six months and force payment of a $1,000 fine, with the minimum being $200.

The provisions contained in the bill have been needed for some time. Enforceability undoubtedly will present a problem, however.

It almost goes without saying that virtually any program to check motorists for the required insurance will be unwieldy, some of the proposals virtually impossible because of time and manpower requirements.

And anyone who's anticipating saving on his or her insurance premium as a result of the bill's passage probably will be disappointed, too. Many insurance agents say insurance premiums either will stay at the current level or rise as a result of the bill's passage.

That's understandable because, if the provisions of the bill can be properly enforced, more Texas drivers will be insured in future years which means more insurance claims.

We still believe the bill to be a good one despite the uncertainties. Having liability insurance carried by only some Texas drivers was unfair to the majority of motorists in the state. Under the new system maybe there'll be more incentive for motorists to watch their driving and, thus, keep their individual insurance costs down.

Share the burden

Japan's Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki has been hit by an unjustified political storm at home as a result of his recent U.S. visit. The joint communique from Washington talked of a U.S.-Japan "alliance." His critics claim Suzuki is forsaking Japanese independence for a role in the Reagan administration's security and military strategy in East Asia.

Adding to the prime minister's political troubles now is an observation by Edwin Reischauer, highly respected former U.S. ambassador to Japan, that U.S. warships visiting Japan have had nuclear weapons on board. Suzuki's critics unreasonably see that as contrary to Japan's anti-nuclear "principles," which prohibit the "introduction" of such arms into the country.

While understanding the deep sensitivity in Japan against things nuclear and military, we suggest that Suzuki's detractors want to have their cake and eat it too. Perhaps the Japanese-American security agreement at one time could be viewed as strictly a one-way affair with a weak Japan living safely under America's military umbrella. But Japan is a world economic giant today, an integral part of the West. Japan must meet the responsibilities commensurate with its world stature.

An alliance does exist between the United States and Japan, with links ranging from common political values to the security pact. To ask Japan to shoulder more of the burdens of that alliance, given the benefits Japan is reaping, is not asking a lot.

ART BUCHWALD

Art Buchwald

Among the words that are an anathema to the present administration are human rights. They cause all sorts of unnecessary problems when we're dealing with the majority of our allies.

Ernest Lefever, who as of this writing, is still President Reagan's nominee for assistant secretary of State for human rights, has testified that the best way to approach the subject is through quiet diplomacy. In other words, you don't want to make a big deal of political repression, torture, and government murders or you will embarrass a friendly power, and it will give its tear-gas business to somebody else.

"Your Excellency, can I speak to you in private?"

"Of course, Mr. Secretary. What can I do for you?"

"There is a nasty rumor going around your capital that your troops wiped out an entire village, including men, women, and children."

"Not so loud, Mr. Secretary. Someone will hear you."

"Good. Off the record, and not for attribution?"

"Of course. That's what quiet diplomacy is."

"The village was infested with Communist guerrillas, and we had to teach the people a lesson."

"Can I say something to you, that will not leave this room?"

"Of course, Mr. Secretary."

"The United States thinks you may have overreacted, particularly since the news of the destruction of the village has gotten into the American newspapers."

"That is because you don't have press censorship in your country as we do here. We know how the story got out and we have taken measures against the exiles in the United States who released it."

"Are you speaking about the assassination of the former editor of 'Corrida' in Washington last week?"

"Hush, Mr. Secretary, we may be bugged. I will whisper the answer into your ear . . . Yes, that's the one."

"Your Excellency, I'll say this as softly as I can, but the United States does not approve of foreign foul play on American oil. It violates our sovereignty and brings in the Justice Department. We were hoping you would not blow up any more of your opposition leaders in the U.S."

"We had no choice. The editor was giving our country a bad name."

"Please don't raise your voice, your Excellency. I would not want anyone to know we had this discussion. The only reason I brought up the assassination was that we want to modernize your army, and Congress might balk at military aid if your government was implicated in the killing. It's one thing to destroy a village in your own country, but it's another to carry your authoritarian policies to the United States."

"I don't understand you people. We are trying to fight communism and terrorism, and you make a big thing about blowing up one rotten editor in America. I thought your government's attitude towards human rights had changed."

"It has, your Excellency. We don't care what you do as long as it's done quietly. All we ask is that you keep your atrocities under wraps, at least until we get your military aid approved by Congress."

"I suppose the next thing you'll be asking us to do is stop torturing nuns."

"We're not going to ask for the impossible. We don't want you to change your way of life. But we would prefer if you don't do it on television. There are still people in the United States who are trying to discredit our new human rights policy."

"I can see your point. Can I tell my minister of interior about our conversation?"

"I suppose he has to be informed. But please don't tell anyone else. When it comes to human rights, the fewer people who know where the United States stands, the better it will be for all of us."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Bribery indictment could damage Williams

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Leaders of the Teamsters Union are meeting in Las Vegas this week to decide on a successor to their late president, Frank Fitzsimmons. There seems little doubt that they'll settle on the interim president, Roy Lee Williams.

Two weeks ago, Williams' fitness for union office of any kind — much less head of the nation's largest labor union — was challenged by a Senate subcommittee report. The next week Williams was indicted by a federal grand jury on charges that he attempted to bribe Sen. Howard Cannon, D-Nev.

Historically, Teamsters presidents have been notorious for their brushes with the law. Dave Beck and Jimmy Hoffa wound up in prison; investigations of Fitzsimmons, however, never got past the guilt-by-association stage. In the rough-and-tumble world of union truckers, disapproval by government authorities has never been a handicap for election to high office.

That's been the situation with Williams, whose involvement with the scandal-ridden Central States Pension Fund has done him no damage within the union. But the indictment for bribery may prove to be a truck of a different color.

For years there have been allegations that Williams has ties to Kansas City mobster Nick Civella. Much of the evidence to support these allegations was circumstantial.

But with Williams' indictment for bribery along with the Teamsters Union's financial wizard, Allen Dorfman, the evidence of Mob links could go beyond the circumstantial.

There's one piece of evidence that connects Williams with casino skimming operations conducted by Civella's gang. Among documents seized in a raid on a crime family member, FBI agents found some handwritten sheets listing the distribution of skimming proceeds according to first names, initials and code names.

The list noted the amounts to be paid to various individuals, and the names of the recipients included several Civella "family" members — Nick, Cork, Carl and Pete. One notation designated $1,500 for "Rancher."

Williams is known as a rancher, and according to a still-secret report prepared by the Senate's permanent subcommittee on investigations, law enforcement officials have identified "Rancher" as the Mob's code name for Roy Williams.

The skim-split sheet also lists $1,000 for "S.A." Sources told my associate Tony Capaccio that these initials identify Sam Ancona, a Teamsters organizer who is close to both Williams and Nick Civella. FBI affidavits say it was Ancona whom Civella called after allegedly setting up a meeting between attorney Morris Shenker and Williams on Oct. 12, 1978.

The meeting was held in La Costa, Calif., and its purpose, according to the FBI, was to have Shenker and Williams discuss ways to get around a court order forbidding a casino loan by the Central States Pension Fund.

The day after the meeting, Ancona and Williams flew back to Kansas City together. And according to a General Accounting Office document, the pension fund's trustees did indeed try to funnel $91 million to Shenker after the meeting.

There is also a wealth of still unreleased wiretap evidence involving "Rancher" in a series of meetings with Civella, Dorfman and other organized crime figures. The meetings were held in 1979 and 1980 to discuss ways of tapping into the Central States Pension Fund.

Footnote: In fairness to Williams, one misconception should be cleared up. Last year, federal investigators implied, in testimony before Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., that Williams was pivotal in the pension fund trustees' approval of a loan for the Tropicana Hotel in Las Vegas. The loan supposedly gave Civella a foothold in the hotel. But according to confidential minutes of the Central States Pension Fund, the trustees, including Williams, on Sept. 11, 1975, in fact vetoed the loan to the Tropicana.

UNDER THE DOME — Rep. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, after being rebuffed by the White House in an attempt to draw up a voluntary marketing code on sale of infant formula, was given a phone number for his constituents to call with complaints on the administration's stand: 202-456-2852. He dialed the number and got no answer; a staff member likewise drew a blank. One of my reporters called, and after waiting through a 15-minute busy signal, finally got through — only to be put on hold. When the connection was eventually made, the person on the other end promptly hung up.

— Sen. Harrison Schmitt, R-N.M., often has his name misspelled in out-of-state newspapers. In despair, his press secretary, Julian Barber, prepared a facetious memo suggesting that the former astronaut offer editors optional spellings. "I discussed the multiple spelling approach with your mother, and she suggested that I need a vacation," Barber wrote. "My vacation date request follows."

— Vice President George Bush has the same Senate liaison office as his predecessor, Walter Mondale. But Bush has replaced Mondale's modest plastic office sign with a large metal replica of the vice-presidential seal.

NICK THIMMESCH

Nick Thimmesch

PHILADELPHIA NAVY YARD — There she rests, massive and gray, 45,000 tons, displacing enough water to flood 46 acres of Iowa cornfields. The U.S.S. Iowa seems frozen in time, apparently free of rust and noticeable atrophy, willing to steam and fight again. The Reagan administration pushes the Navy's dream of reactivating this sea-going monster in armor just to show the Soviets how determined we are to match their naval force.

When I walked about her weathered teak decks and burrowed through her catacombs deep inside, thoughts of World War II easily came to mind. Remember Pearl Harbor, Bing Crosby singing "White Christmas," Don Ameche and pinups of Betty Grable. The Iowa cost $110 million to build then. To redo her for the missile age will cost upwards of $500 million.

I was born and reared in Iowa, and naturally feel nostalgic pride for this battleship. The Movietone newsreels showed her 16-inch guns bombarding Japanese-held islands in World War II. She blasted away for 20 months during the Korean war. The Iowa is said to be the only U.S. naval vessel equipped with a bathtub. That amenity was installed for President Franklin D. Roosevelt whom the Iowa carried en route to his Tehran conference with Winston Churchill and Joseph Stalin.

Indeed, the mothballed Iowa has a living link to World War II on board, in the person of Carlos Halili, the Philippino-American civilian foreman who looks after the Iowa and other inactive ships. Halili, who retired from the Navy in 1964 after 20 years' duty, was aboard the U.S.S. Missouri when the Japanese surrender ceremony was held.

As a sailor, Halili slept on the same flat canvas bunks still on the Iowa, and used the crowded heads (bathrooms). The Iowa is loaded with obsolete equipment — communications, radar, navigation — and its engines are set to burn old heavy bunker oil, not modern light distillates. Her interiors have been protected from rust and rot by an efficient dehumidification system, in operation since 1958. She looks fairly clean.

Correspondents learned long ago that, in war, it's best to talk to the troops, not generals, to find out what's really going on. A month ago, Halili told a reporter that it would take considerable time to ready the Iowa for sea. Navy officers say otherwise. I believe Halili, who isn't answering reporters' probing questions any more.

The Iowa's 12-to-17-inch armor is formidable, even in the missile age. But it must be recalled that many behemoth battleships went to the bottom in World War II after suffering round-the-clock air attacks. Battleship advocates like to avoid such talk about the record.

Indeed, to read the Navy's official current defenses of battleships is to rediscover the thesis, set forth by Rear Adm. Alfred Mahan in the 19th century, that ships were needed to extend a great nation's influence. It was "air-minded propagandists," one Navy account argues, which falsely predicted the end of battleships and surface navies in 1921.

Nowadays, the Navy argues that since the U.S. is behind the Soviets in numbers of naval ships, we must go full steam ahead, put the Iowa and other battleships back in service, and actually save money. The Iowa's big guns can still devastate shore positions 22 miles away. And if cruise missiles are mounted where the aft guns are now, a rejuvenated battleship could unleash long-range awesome force.

"A battleship is an impressive sight," says Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr., "but it is impressive because it can do so much damage to the enemy." He argues that battleships are as fast as any ships on the oceans today, and can be activated for one-sixth the cost of a new battle cruiser. Lehman claims opponents of the battleship reactivation plan are either "traditional anti-defense" voices or "bad-mouthing" defense contractors.

On this score, it seems the Navy and the Reagan administration are in a big hurry to spend money. The national mood is Hawkish, so strike while the iron's hot. Make that sale. Close the deal. Admiral and Marine Corps generals chortle over what four Iowa-class battleships, with those giant guns and missiles, would do off Cuba or some sandy shore on the Persian Gulf.

It looks great from the armchair. In fact, many World War II Navy veterans have written or called, telling how they would like to sign aboard the Iowa or another battlewagon, when reactivated. That old urge. Movietone News showing those guns firing away.

In Congress, only a few voices are raised against the refurbishment plan. Sen. Mark Hatfield, always skeptical of the Pentagon, claims the battleship project is being rammed through. Sen. Ted Stevens, no Dove, objects because he sees costs skyrocketing. Sen. Barry Goldwater, no Dove either, says, "Reviving old battleships" is like "trying to revitalize the Army by digging up old General Custer."

For my part, I would rather see those hundreds of millions put into creating a different sort of steel — the steely toughness which our present military force doesn't have. Manpower is the military's biggest problem today. There is a shortage. The Navy alone needs 22,000 more people and doesn't have 1,500 to spare to manwoman the Iowa. The Marine Corp excepted, manpower in the services is pretty mediocre. What this democratic republic really needs is restoration of the draft — not the Iowa. A citizens' army is always a better army. It would take guts for the Reagan administration and Congress to begin drafting young people again. The Soviets would respect us for it.

Say, it is marvelous that those sailors who served on battleships in World War II or during the Korean war want to pull their uniforms out of mothballs and go back to sea. I am afraid, however, that most will discover those uniforms don't fit after 30 or 35 years. I would dearly love to pitch a game of baseball again, but I know the line drives would whistle by my ears.

On this date:

In 1621, the Dutch West India company received a charter for New Netherlands — now known as New York.

In 1808, Confederate President Jefferson Davis was born in what is now Todd County, Ky.

In 1935, the French liner "Normandie" broke speed records on its maiden voyage when it crossed the Atlantic Ocean in 4 days and 11 hours.

Today's birthdays: Former Budget Director Bert Lance is 50 years old.

Thought for today: From the sublime to the ridiculous there is only one step. — Napoleon Bonaparte (1769-1821).

TESCO offering free analysis

Texas Electric Service Co. this week will begin offering residential customers a free home energy analysis to help them determine effective ways to reduce energy use and hold down their bills.

"This program will be an extension of the conservation services we presently offer to customers," said Winston Barclay, TESCO manager in Midland. "It's a highly individualized service, and we think customers who take part will gain some valuable information on how to make their homes more energy efficient."

The new residential energy analysis program will be offered throughout the 48-county Texas Electric service area.

Customers will be notified through a message in their bills when the service is available to them. Notices will be sent to a certain number of customers per month. The length of time necessary to analyze the homes of all customers who request the service will be determined by the response to the offer.

It is expected to be about two years before the service can be made available to all of TESCO's residential customers.

When customers receive the notification message, they may request a visit to their homes by TESCO energy consultants, who will:

—Make an inspection of the home, measuring rooms and checking insulation efficiency of heating and cooling equipment, caulking and weatherstripping and other features.

—Recommend specific measures that can be taken to conserve energy.

—Estimate approximately how much money each measure may save annually on energy bills.

Texas Electric will not do the necessary work, but the energy consultant will estimate the approximate cost of having a contractor do the recommended work or the approximate cost of materials if the customer does it.

"Our consultants also will recommend a number of conservation practices that can be done for little or no money — things such as simply changing thermostat settings for furnaces and air conditioners and changing their filters," Barclay said.

The home energy analysis program was developed along the general guidelines of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act of 1978, which calls for establishment of Residential Conservation Service programs. After details of the RCS program are made final, TESCO's home energy analysis service will be modified as may be necessary to comply with program requirements.

By helping customers learn how to cut down on the use of electricity, the service also will help reduce growth in demand for electricity. This, in turn, will help reduce the number of expensive new power plants TESCO will have to build in the future.

"We hope our customers, as they receive notices, will consider taking advantage of this program," Barclay said. "There is no charge for the home energy analysis, and it should result in savings to homeowners who act on the recommendations of our consultants."

Nancy agrees: Michael erred

NEW YORK (AP) — The president's elder son was wrong to have used his father's name in a letter he sent last March to solicit business from U.S. military bases, according to Nancy Reagan.

In an interview in Washington published in today's Daily News, the first lady said Michael Reagan, the president's son by a previous marriage, "made a mistake in writing the letter.

"I don't think he should have written it," she said. "I think he realizes that."

Amarillo cattle buyer asks judge to reconsider plea

An Amarillo cattle buyer who is serving a five-year federal prison term for possession of the narcotic stimulant methamphetamine with intent to distribute the drug is petitioning Federal Judge Lucius D. Bunton to reconsider his guilty plea and sentence, since, he claims, his confession was "unlawfully induced."

The petitioner, Ronny Mack Deas, 31, is claiming that his "plea of guilty...was unlawfully induced and...was made unintelligently and involuntarily and that the court did not explain the elements of the charges."

Furthermore, Deas claims that he was denied "effective and competent assistance of counsel" who failed to provide him with "an understanding of the law applicable to the facts of the case." He said that his counsel, Amarillo attorney Gene Storrs, acted "in bad faith," and failed to inform him of a "meritorious defense."

Both Deas and his brother, Jerry Wayne Deas, 36, were arrested in Odessa on Jan. 24, 1980, for possession of a quart of mathamphetamine, pleaded guilty on the following May 23 and were sentenced June 17. The case against the Deas brothers was filed by the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration in Midland.

Both were meted five-year prison terms and fined $10,000 by Bunton, who said the brothers were motivitated by "economic reasons" to deal in drug trafficking.

The judge, at time of sentencing, also noted that the brothers previously had served prison time, had mustered "undesirable records" and apparently hadn't learned their lessons in abiding by the laws.

Drilco accident injures local man

Soo Dong Lee, 51, of 4620 Anetta Drive, was in undertermined condition at Midland Memorial Hospital late this morning after being injured in an accident at Drilco Industries, 3100 Garden City Highway about 9 a.m.

Details of the mishap were not available by press time.

Japanese urged to welcome carrier

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's ruling political party is calling on supporters to join in welcoming the USS Midway to its home port, hoping the gesture will counter protests from opposition groups who contend the aircraft carrier may be carrying nuclear weapons, officials said today.

A spokesman for Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki's Liberal Democratic Party said local government and civic leaders had been asked to send messages or be present at the U.S.-run Yokosuka Naval Base, 35 miles south of Tokyo, when the 51,000-ton fattop arrves home Friday from a 103-day patrol cruise in Southeast Asia and the Indian Ocean.

The carrier has become the focus of an angry dispute unleashed last month when former U.S. Ambassador Edwin O. Reischauer asserted that U.S. warships often carry nuclear weapons into Japanese waters and ports.

Fare increase proposed for rail, bus lines

CHICAGO (AP) — Officials of the broke Regional Transportation Authority are proposing fare hikes and service cutbacks for rail and bus lines that haven't already shut down, while a city cab drivers union is threatening to go on strike.

An estimated 60,000 commuters continued today their struggle to find alternate transportation to work in the wake of a shutdown by four suburban bus lines who were left without RTA subsidies. A fifth bus line has cut back service by 25 percent and several commuter railroads have threatened to shut down this weekend.

Gov. James Thompson, sharply criticized Tuesday for failing to take a larger role in the transit crisis, said he would meet today with leaders of Illinois' sharply divided Legislature.

In a move a union official said was unrelated to the transit problems, drivers for the Yellow and Checker cab companies said they would go on strike next week if their contract demands aren't met.

Al Polk Jr., vice president of Production Workers Union Local 777, said although the local represents 850 drivers he expects 3,400 drivers to join the strike. Company spokesmen have said they do not fear a strike because most cab drivers employed by the two companies do not belong to the union.

The Chicago Transit Authority, the largest link in the RTA network, has enough money to operate until mid-June. Mrs. Byrne has vowed to keep the CTA running, with a special city tax if necessary, regardless of legislative action.

Thompson, who in recent days not taken a leading role in talks on the RTA crisis, says a solution lies with the General Assembly. RTA Board Chairman Lewis W. Hill was critical of the governor's role in the transit crisis.

During a Tuesday appearance on the WLS-TV program, "AM-Chicago," Hill accused Thompson of shirking "a leadership role," and asked, "Where's the governor been?

"The solution is going to be when the state Legislature and the governor get together and work out a fair and equitable funding situation, so we get our equal and fair share in this region," Hill said.

The plan proposed Tuesday by the suburban board members would allow the railroads and suburban bus lines still operating to impose temporary fare increases and service reductions.

At an RTA board meeting Monday, Jerry Boose, a suburban member, requested the emergency measure be placed on the agenda for a meeting Thursday.

The RTA board last week ruled out a fare increase and elimination of weekend service, angering downstate legislators who oppose bailing out Chicago transit with new taxes on the rest of the state.

The RTA spent its last funds on overdue subsidies to the CTA and suburban carriers last week, retaining only $2.5 million for insurance and security in the event of a total transit collapse. It is saddled with debts amounting to $85 million.

The RTA, created in 1974 to oversee, subsidize and plan mass transit in the six-county Chicago metropolitan area, ran out of money last week and is awaiting emergency funding from the Legislature.

The agency will have no more money until it receives $20 million in state sales tax receipts later this month.

With head in hand, a man awaits the arrival of a bus recently in the Chicago suburb of Waukegan. Suburban bus companies surrounding Chicago have been forced to shut down for want of funds to pay for payrolls and fuel. Officials warn that these problems could just be foreshadowing something even more serious — a complete shutdown of the mass transit system serving the Chicago area.

Murder case may go to jury today

NEW YORK (AP) — Craig Crimmins' alleged confession to killing a violinist at the Metropolitan Opera House is "very compelling evidence," a prosecutor told the jury on the last day of arguments in Crimmins' murder trial.

But the defense has called the confession "phony."

Acting state Supreme Court Justice Richard Denzer was scheduled to charge the seven-woman, five-man jury on the law today, with deliberations to follow.

The jury will consider two counts: intentional murder and felony murder.

The 22-year-old stagehand is charged with the murder last July 23 of Helen Hagnes Mintiks, 31, a freelance musician performing with the Berlin Ballet at the plush Lincoln Center opera house.

Mrs. Mintiks last was seen during an intermission that night. Her nude, bound and gagged body was found the next day. She was said to have been kicked, alive, down a three-story airshaft from the roof, dying from the fall.

Crimmins, a high-school dropout employed as a stagehand at the opera house, was arrested last Aug. 30 after he had been questioned by detectives several times during an intensive police investigation.

Before his arrest, he was said to have confessed to forcing Mrs. Mintiks off a backstage elevator and later killing her.

Throughout the trial, those admissions and police behavior in obtaining them, have been in dispute.

Defense attorney Lawrence Hochheiser contends Crimmins is a slow-witted, suggestible individual whose confession was coerced by detectives who "put words in his mouth."

The six-page confession document, which was recorded in longhand by a detective during a private conference, has been denounced by the defense as "phony."

Assistant District Attorney Roger Hayes, in his three-hour summation on Tuesday, called the confession "very strong, very powerful and very compelling evidence."

The prosecutor asserted that the admissions were voluntarily made by Crimmins, who wanted to purge himself of "guilt."

Hayes challenged the jurors to "throw the case out" if they believed the defense contention that police lied when they said Crimmins' confession was voluntary.

"Why would they do it? There are no promotions in this case," Hayes said of the investigators.

Other evidence cited by the prosecution includes a partial palmprint, identified as Crimmins' and found near the crime scene, and the fact that he told conflicting stories to a supervisor and police about his whereabouts the night of the murder.

Hochheiser, in his five-hour summation Monday, contended Crimmins was "dead drunk" that night, and physically incapable of committing the crime. Hayes said the stagehand would have been "six feet under" if he had consumed as much beer as several witnesses said he had.

Crimmins faces a maximum of 25 years to life in prison if convicted.

Dispute stalls talks in Seattle hotel, motel, restaurant strike

SEATTLE (AP) — Contract talks for union workers on strike against Seattle-area hotels, motels and restaurants have stalled in a dispute which eventually could affect 45 establishments and 5,000 employees.

Picket lines went up at major city restaurants and hotels Tuesday, and more picketing was set to begin today at establishments near Seattle-Tacoma International Airport.

It will be about a week before all the workers involved in the dispute are off the job, said Rhonda Allgaier, secretary-treasurer of Local 8 of the Hotel, Motel, Restaurant Employees and Bartenders Union.

Carey Donworth, the employers' negotiator, said the only remaining issues were wages and a proposed additional holiday for workers with five years on the job. The old contract expired at midnight Sunday.

Federal mediator Doug Hammond called the two sides together Monday, but talks ended after six hours when each side rejected proposals made by the other. No further meetings were scheduled.

A spot check of about a dozen large hotels and restaurants first affected by the strike indicated that most were staying open with reduced staffs of non-union personnel and temporary workers.

About 180 college students, housewives and others had been hired as temporary employees, and a few cooks were flown in from hotels in other cities, Treadway said.

The annual Municipal League Civic Awards lunch at the hotel went on despite the strike, but the main speaker, Gov. John Spellman, and many other elected officials stayed away.

"I feel strongly about this strike," said Queen Hopper, a banquet waitress at the Washington Plaza. "We should strike, but our problem also is that there are 10 people ready to take every one job we leave. I hope the public will be understanding."

Among those joining the walkout are cooks, maids, waiters and waitresses, bellhops, cashiers and desk clerks.

Union local business manager Mario Vaccarino said the employers have offered 7 percent to 9 percent wage increases for kitchen workers while the union is seeking 10 percent. He said the average wage in the industry is $4.31 an hour.

Red Lion Inn officials said 200 of 600 workers walked off the job Tuesday, but operations "are going as usual."

At the Edgewater Inn, officials said operations were being maintained by 50 people, compared with a normal payroll of 250.

President Ronald Reagan waves as he leaves George Washington University Medical Center in Washington Tuesday, where he visted press secretary James Brady. Brady is recovering from a gunshot wound to the brain.

Reagan, Brady quip through emotional reunion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wounded White House press secretary James S. Brady, trading quips with President Reagan in an emotional hospital reunion, says his boss has been doing pretty well without him. But Reagan insists Brady is missed.

"We are waiting for you to get back," Reagan told Brady during an impromptu hospital visit Tuesday. "We need you."

"Right now, the medical profession is standing in the way," Brady replied. "I have been watching you on the tube and reading about you. You have been doing pretty well on your own."

Brady, recuperating from a bullet wound to the brain, saw Reagan for the first time Tuesday since both were shot in an attempt on the president's life March 30.

The 16-minute visit at George Washington University Hospital, was at times an emotional reunion, said deputy press secretary Larry Speakes.

Speakes quoted Brady's wife, Sarah, as saying that after the meeting the press secretary was satisfied "because he thought he'd done well in the meeting with the president and enjoyed it."

Asked whether Brady had been concerned about how such a meeting might go, Speakes replied softly, "I think so."

Reagan, asked by reporters how Brady was feeling, replied, "Just fine. Coming along. Very happy."

The president, accompanied by White House chief of staff James A. Baker III, gave Brady a puzzle and a gift-wrapped jar of presidential jellybeans, Speakes said.

A crowd of onlookers cheered the president as he walked through the hospital lobby. He stopped to sign a leg cast of Chris Horne of Mobile, Ala.

Mother afraid to ask questions

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A grieving mother says she is afraid to ask why her teen-age daughter lapsed into a coma and died after routine dental surgery — frightened she will discover it could have been avoided.

"It was just routine surgery, nothing to get alarmed about. It's done every day, said Mattie Crumpton, a registered nurse whose 17-year-old daughter died late Tuesday afternoon.

Shonia Crumpton had planned to begin a college prepatory program for gifted minority students this week. She wanted to have her wisdom teeth removed first. But she never regained consciousness after last Wednesday's operation.

Mrs. Crumpton said she was told her daughter's brain was deprived of oxygen after a tube inserted to keep her breathing became dislodged or was inserted improperly.

She said her daughter had no reflex signs and a Harris Hospital test indicated no brain activity after the girl slipped into a coma.

An autopsy is scheduled today, a spokesman for the Tarrant County Medical Examiners office said.

"There have been no questions answered, and I'm not brave enough to ask," Mrs. Crumpton said while her daughter was still in a coma.

"I can't ask the questions because I'd have to assume some of the guilt. I brought her here. I had faith in the system. I had the utmost confidence that it would take care of her," said Mrs. Crumpton, who works in the hospital's surgical recovery room.

"The questions — Why? What happened? Could it have been avoided? — will have to be asked," said Mrs. Crumpton. "I can't deal with it, but the community is going to have to ask those questions."

The surgery could have been completed in two visits to an oral surgeon's office, but Mrs. Crumpton said her daughter — anxious to begin the summer school program at Texas Christin University — wanted it done all at once.

"Shonia said, 'Momma, can't the doctor just put me asleep and do it?'" her mother recalled. "She wanted to hurry and get it over so she wouldn't be late starting the Upward Bound program. She had her clothes all laid out and ready to wear for the first day."

A doctor told Mrs. Crumpton the first stage of surgery was successful but that in the second stage, a problem developed with her daughter's breathing.

"The Lord is the only one who knows exactly what happened," said Viola Cook, the girl's maternal grandmother. "She loved everybody and never met a stranger. It would have been better if it had been me or my daughter."

Preventive medicine urged

HOUSTON (AP) — The next great breakthrough in medicine will be made when most Americans practice routine disease prevention, the secretary of Health and Human Services said Tuesday night.

Richard Schweiker predicted the Reagan administration will turn the tide on health care costs through unprecedented focusing on programs in preventive medicine and health promotion.

The secretary addressed an afternoon news conference and a dinner program attended by almost 1,200 people celebrating the opening of the Sid W. Richardson Institute for Preventive Medicine at The Methodist Hospital.

"One of the highest priorities of my department is preventive medicine," said Schweiker, who emphasized the government cannot mandate good health or guarantee it with massive fundiing.

He called news reports biased in their concentration on the administration's requested budget cuts affecting social welfare. Schweiker said his department is getting a $21.5 billion increase in fiscal 1982.

Schweiker said in Dallas earlier Tuesday that financing in one area — biomedical research — will increase from $3.77 billion in the current fiscal year to $3.989 billion in fiscal 1982.

Some of that money, he said, will be spent to study interferon, a naturally occuring substance in the human body that some believe can be used to treat cancer.

Another area of research will be diabetes treatment, Schweiker said. Already, scientists have developed artificial devices that automatically deliver insulin to the body.

"Our continued support of biomedical research must not stand alone," he added. "Our research should go hand-in-hand with a determined effort toward health promotion and health protection."

Accordingly, the administration has proposed a block grant of $242 million for 10 programs, including drives to prevent high blood pressure and adolescent pregnancy, Schweiker said.

The budget also would allocate $3 million to start a prevention training program for students in medical school, he said.

"We believe any attempt to change direction from sick care to true 'health care' must include training physicians in methods of prevention," he said.

A&M to graduate its first physicians

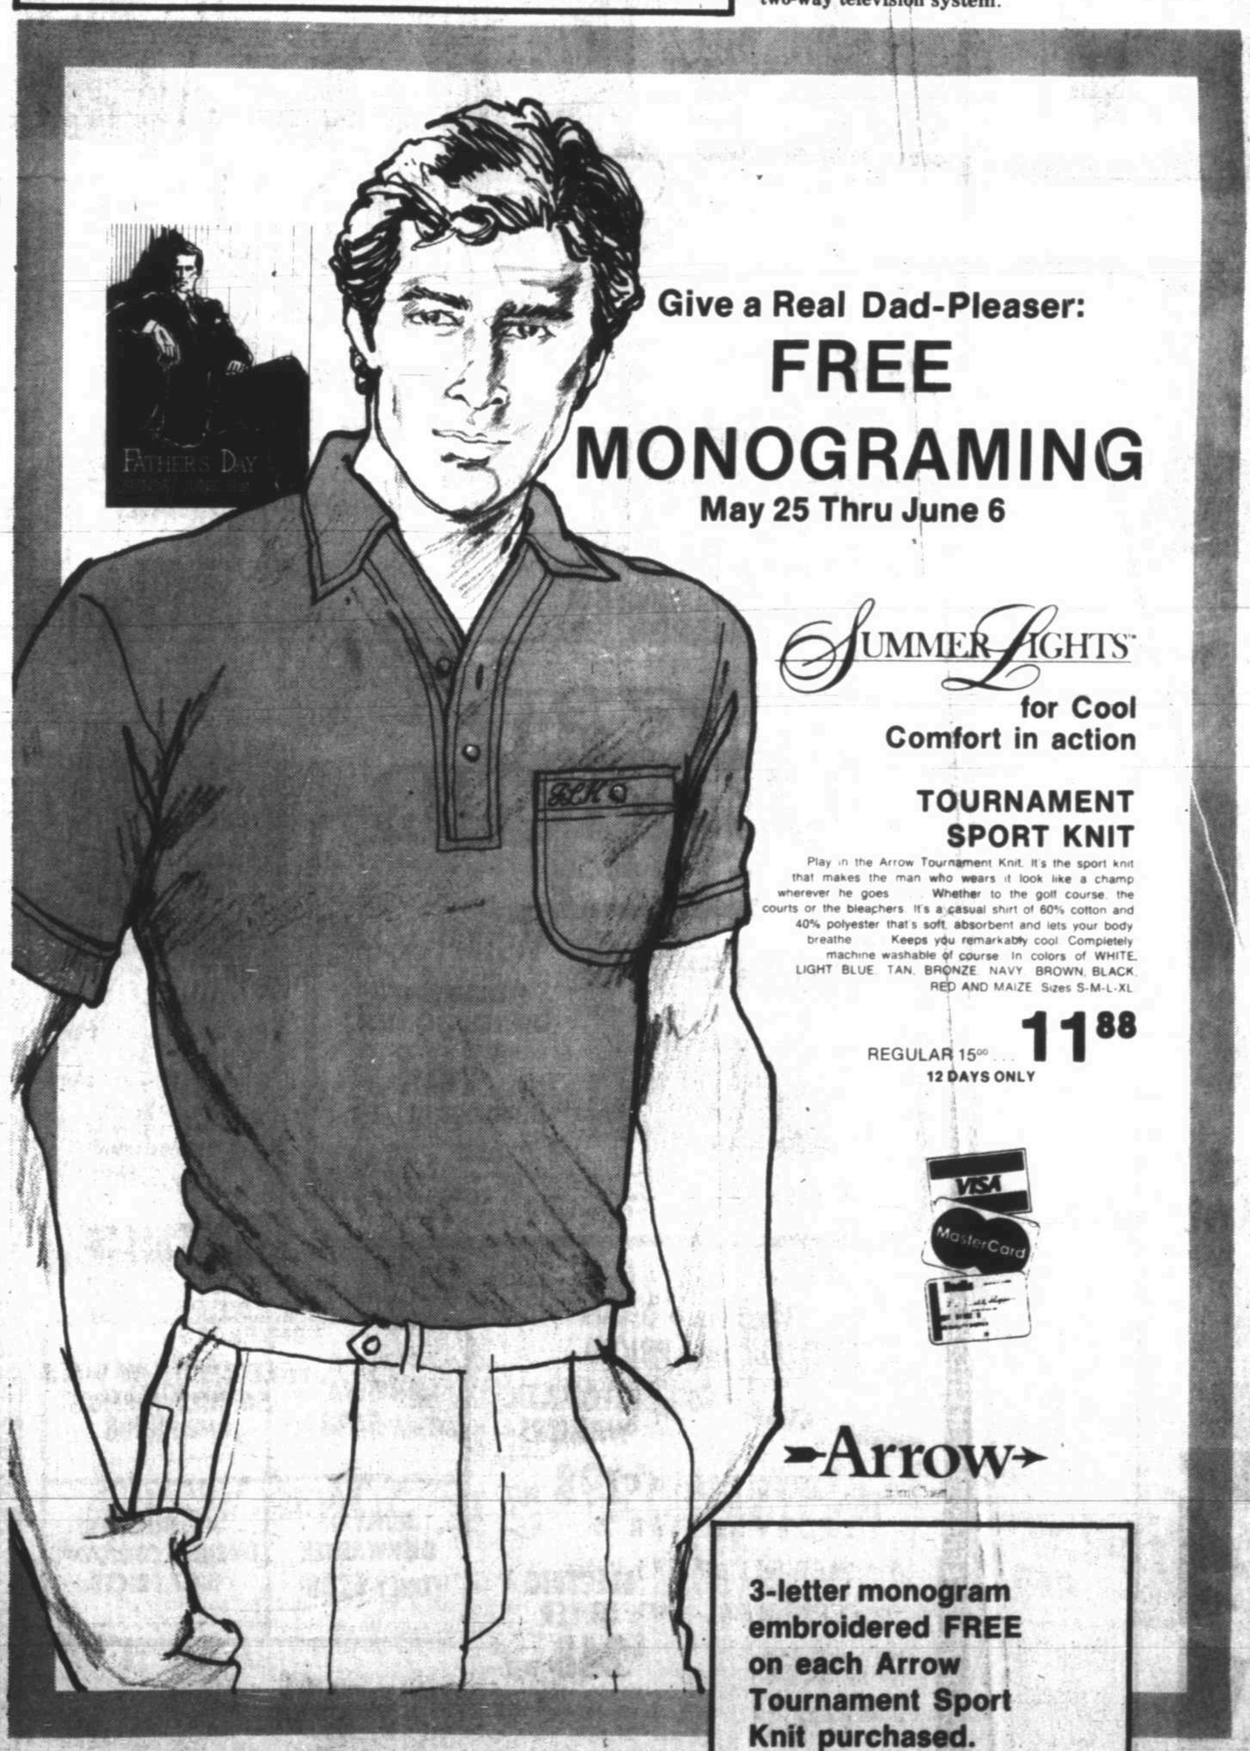

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas' newest medical school graduates its first physicians here Saturday when the charter class of 32 new doctors receive their diplomas from the Texas A&M University College of Medicine.

Dr. Steven Beering, dean of Medicine at the University of Indiana, will deliver the commencement address at the new college of medicine which just received five years' full accreditation by the national Liaison Committee on Medical Education.

The LCME, composed of members from both the Association of American Medical Colleges and the American Medical Association, had originally considered four years' full accreditation for the Texas A&M program, but later extended the approval period another year.

Texas A&M's medical school operates on an unusual twin-campus basis, conducting two years of classroom instruction at College Station followed by two years of upper-level clinical training in Temple at Teague Veterans Center hospital and at Scott & White Hospital and Clinic.

The physical distance between the two campuses — about 80 miles — is now being bridged by a two-way television system.

Refugees running into red tape in U.S.

DALLAS (AP) — Nelson Parrada Escamilla is a victim — of a war-torn homeland where he was once shot in the back for no apparent reason, and of the political realities of the nation to which he fled.

"To return is to die," Escamilla said of his homeland, El Salvador. "If they send me back, I will try again and again. I want only a chance to be with my family and to live. Is that too much to ask?"

Escamilla says he doesn't care about politicians in Washington who see him as a possible political embarrassment — he knows only that he faces death if he returns to the violence and terror of El Salvador's civil war.

The 22-year-old refugee said he already has been shot once — in the back by a Salvadoran National Guardsman as Escamilla walked down a street in San Salvador last year.

"I don't know why he shot me, maybe because I was a young man and a student," Escamilla said.

In February, Escamilla began a three-month trip that he hoped would free him from the violence of the civil war that has engulfed his country and give him a new life in the United States. The trek ended in a Brownsville Immigration and Naturalization detention center where Escamilla is one of 150 Salvadorans awaiting deportation to their homeland.

Escamilla plans to seek asylum here. But his chances of staying are not good.

"It has to be proven that an individual would be persecuted upon his return," a State Department official said, "and most of these people aren't fleeing the government, as near as we can tell."

Jose Cristin Escobar, a 17-year-old farm worker, also is awaiting deportation back to El Salvador.

"I left to avoid the killing," he said. "If the army or the rebels think you are not on the right side, they shoot you. It doesn't matter what side you are on."

Illegal Salvadoran aliens apprehended in Texas can expect a two- to three-week wait in a detention center or jail. Then they are taken to Houston and put on a plane for El Salvador.

Escamilla said he is afraid for his life if he is forced to go back. "The police will ask for our papers, see we are students and teachers and call us pigs and smash our faces with their rifle butts. I have seen this happen," he said.

Jose Medina, a Houston immigration lawyer who is helping organize an effort to gain political asylum for Salvadorans, said the refugees are creating a conflict of interest problem for the Reagan administration.

The Newspaper BIBLE

NOT EVEN A BILLION COULD BUY IT!

When the apostles back in Jerusalem heard that the people of Samaria had accepted God's message, they sent down Peter and John.

As soon as they arrived, they began praying for these new Christians to receive the Holy Spirit, for as yet He had not come upon any of them. For they had only been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Then Peter and John laid their hands upon these believers, and they received the Holy Spirit.

When Simon saw this--that the Holy Spirit was given when the apostles placed their hands upon peoples' heads--he offered money to buy this power. "Let me have this power too," he exclaimed, "so that when I lay my hands on people, they will receive the Holy Spirit!"

But Peter replied, "Your money perish with you for thinking God's gift can be bought! You can have no part in this, for your heart is not right before God. Turn from this great wickedness and pray. Perhaps God will yet forgive your evil thoughts-for I can see that there is jealousy and sin in your heart."

"Pray for me," Simon exclaimed, "that these terrible things won't happen to me."

After testifying and preaching in Samaria, Peter and John returned to Jerusalem, stopping at several Samaritan villages along the way to preach the Good News to them too.

Reagan may be up a creek when it comes to yachting

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's hopes of spending muggy summer evenings floating down the Potomac in a new yacht are fading.

The government doesn't seem to have a spare, and so far none of Reagan's 226 million constituents has volunteered to donate a yacht to the presidential cause.

And Reagan won't buy one.

"What we are getting is a lot of people wanting to sell us one," Edward V. Hickey, head of the White House military office, said in a recent interview.

"We've had hundreds of offers by people to sell. But we are not going to buy." On that point, Hickey was adamant. "He doesn't want to buy a yacht. None of us do."

Since the Reagans sought private donations to redecorate the White House, Hickey was asked whether they might try to finance a yacht the same way.

"That suggestion hasn't been made at all," he replied. "This is different. Our view is that to paint and refurbish the White House is one thing, because it's something that people see every day. But it's an entirely different thing to go out and buy a yacht."

The last presidential yacht, named Sequoia, was sold by Jimmy Calter in May 1977 for $286,000. It has since been sold several more times, most recently for almost $1 million.

Hickey said the current owner was willing to sell the Sequoia back to the president, but the asking price is about $1.2 million and Reagan isn't interested.

"We have no interest in paying a million some odd thousand dollars to buy it back," he said. "That's where she stays."

The U.S. Navy has been asked to "see if there exists within their inventory a suitable vessel for use as a presidential yacht. To date we haven't found anything," Hickey said.

"The Navy's really not in the yacht business as such. Sure, they could come up with a huge minesweeper, I suppose, but you couldn't use it. It's a good possibility they don't have anything for short cruises."

The U.S. Customs Service is looking over the boats it has seized but nothing's turned up there, either.

"We've got a whole mishmash of things, everything from freighters to little power boats, but nothing you could describe as a yacht," Hickey said.

A Rhode Island entrepreneur, Thomas Aquinas Malloy, bought the 104-foot Sequoia in 1977 with the intention of turning it into a floating tourist attraction based in Newport.

But he quickly sold it, on Sept. 21, 1977, to Norman F. Pulliam, a South Carolina businessman, who wanted to display it on Myrtle Beach.

"We got all our money back and made some," Malloy said after the sale, but the price was not disclosed.

On April 1, 1980, the Sequoia was sold again, this time to the Ocean Learning Institute of Palm Beach, Fla. A spokesman said the price was "substantially above" an earlier $500,000 bid that had been rejected at auction. The yacht had been appraised at between $800,000 and $1 million.

The non-profit scientific and technical group planned to use the yacht to entertain potential donors.

Alleged rapist pleads guilty

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A 23-year-old apartment maintenance manager who allegedly raped a tenant while his wife was away switched his plea from "not guilty" to "guilty" at noon Tuesday after the five-man, seven-woman jury in 238th State District Court had been selected and just before testimony was to begin.

"The defendant during the noon hour elected to plead guilty," Judge Vann Culp told the jurors. They had returned from lunch to hear testimony from the victim, a 28-year-old secretary who had leased a unit in the Riviera Apartments where her assailant was maintenance manager and his wife was manager.

Justice was quick. During that noon hour, the defendant, David Robin Pickle, was sentenced to 30 years in prison in a plea-bargaining agreement between the prosecutors and the defense attorneys.

HAD PICKLE MAINTAINED his innocence, which was refuted by a confession he gave Midland police seven days after he allegedly raped the woman on March 24 and committed oral sodomy, and had he been convicted by the jury, he could have been assessed up to a 99-year term or life in prison.

The confession, which the judge had ruled was admissible evidence, said that Pickle had broken into the woman's apartment in the pre-dawn hours of March 24.

Earlier that night, Pickle said, he had drank beer at a motel's bar, returned to his apartment, drank a six-pack of beer, got a loaded .22-caliber automatic rifle from the apartment's closet, climbed in his pickup truck and drove off to go "hunting." His wife, he said in the statement, was in Las Vegas, Nev., where she was "tending to some court settlement over her children."

As he was driving off for the hunt, Pickle said in the statement, "I first thought about going to bed with this lady at the apartments."

Pickle said he carried keys "to all the apartments" to gain access to them for maintenance purposes.

IN THIS INSTANCE, he said that he had used a key to open the door but that the night chain kept the door slightly ajar until the framing gave way even while the woman was grabbing his groping hand to prevent his entrance.

Once inside, Pickle said he grabbed the woman by the throat, laid her down for awhile and then released her.

He suggested that the woman, robed in a full-length nightgown, was puzzled by his armed intrusion but did not get hysterical.

"She said something like 'David, what is wrong with you?'" Pickle said in the type-written statement.

In his version, Pickle said that they sat on the couch and "talked a minute," but that the woman "was getting sick," went to the bathroom and returned.

"And she was trying to calm me down," Pickle said.

All along, his rifle was laying on kitchen counter, he said. "I always keep it loaded," he told Midland police detectives.

Pickle said he then "told her to go to the bedroom." He picked up the rifle, followed her, pointed the firearm at her and ordered her to "Take your clothes off."

"I TOLD HER to get in bed," Pickle said. "I then sat on the bedside and said something to the effect that I might kill myself. I then sat the gun up against the wall. I stood up and took my clothes off."

Pickle said he compelled her to engage in sodomy and then raped her.

Afterward, Pickle said he "laid down and passed out."

Pickle said he awoke at daybreak, found that the woman was no longer in her apartment, and he got dressed, returned the rifle to his apartment, and left town in his pickup truck, which, he said, broke down near Abilene. He abandoned the truck and the keys to the apartment.

Later, he was arrested in Amarillo, and was held in jail in lieu of posting $50,000 in bond.

Since the incident, the management at the apartment complex reportedly has replaced locks on all the apartment units. Pickle and his wife were both fired.

IN A PSYCHIATRIC examination on May 6, Pickle told the psychiatrist, Dr. B.J. "Bill" Youngblood, that prior to the March 24 incident he had a problem sleeping, he had received two tickets for drunken-driving, he had shot up his apartment in an argument with his wife and subsequently was hospitalized overnight.

In a report submitted by Dr. Youngblood, Pickle said that he had not sought help afterward. "I couldn't afford it."

"...Busy trying to keep my cars running and my marriage together and keeping my job," Pickle had explained.

In considering the three charges — aggravated rape and two counts of sexual abuse — against him, Pickle said he had thought of using "insanity" as a defense against his crime.

"Yeah," the psychiatrist quoted him, "my lawyer told me to (plead insanity)."

In his report, Youngblood said Pickle admitted to having "a problem."

"I admit I've got a problem, and I feel like that is probably because of the pressure...(of) trying to keep my marriage together, keeping my job, people destroying my cars. Everytime I wake up, someone's stealing from my cars (four cars and a pickup truck)."

Pickle said he thought people were stealing from his cars and damaging them due to "rent increases to the tenants."

While Culp had ruled that Pickle's confession was admissible in the trial, he upheld a defense motion to suppress from evidence the rifle, a western shirt and a ring of keys. The defense held that the rifle, shirt and keys were unlawfully seized by police in "a warrantless search" of Pickle's apartment.

The defendant's court-appointed attorneys were Gayle Newman and R. "Sandy" Torres. Prosecutors on the case were District Attorney Vern Martin, chief assistant David Joers and assistant Jim Rex.

Defense lawyers to view evidence against Christopher

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Defense lawyers will get a chance to view part of the "staggering" volume of prosecution evidence against Joseph Christopher, the white Army private charged with three of the ".22-caliber slayings" of black males.

State Supreme Court Justice William J. Flynn also said he will keep a seal on psychiatric studies done on the 25-year-old Buffalo man. Defense layer Mark Mahoney later confirmed published reports that the studies found Christopher competent to stand trial.

Flynn presided at a 90-minute hearing Tuesday, where he gave prosecutors 10 days to organize evidence that they are willing to give in advance to Mahoney and Kevin Dillon, another defense laywer.

Christopher is charged with second-degree murder in the slayings of three of four black males who were killed in the Buffalo area during a 30-hour period in September 1980. All four were killed with the same .22-caliber weapon.

Christopher also has been indicted in New York City in the stabbing death of a dark-skinned Hispanic man and the wounding of a black man on Dec. 22. The victims were among four dark-skinned men slain and two wounded in Manhattan that day.

In addition, Christopher has been indicted on charges of attacking two black men with knives in Buffalo on Dec. 31 and Jan. 1. One was wounded in the heart but survived, the other evaded the attack.

Duane M. Stamp, an assistant district attorney, told Flynn that his office is willing to open it files to Christopher's lawyers except for material the defense isn't entitled t— see and evidence that resulted in investigations of other cases.

"The volume of material here is staggering," said Stamp.

McConn may be released

HOUSTON (AP) — Mayor Jim McConn, hospitalized more than a week ago with a pinched nerve in his back, may be allowed to go home this weekend, doctors say.

Henry de la Garza, the mayor's communications director, said McConn is responding well to therapy.

Robbers sought

NEW YORK (AP) — Police and FBI agents were searching today for four men who robbed a Brink's truck of up to $300,000, killed one guard and wounded another.

The robbery occurred Tuesday in The Bronx when the truck, carrying three guards, drove up to a shopping mall and parked near a Chase Manhattan Bank branch where the guards were to make a delivery of cash.

A rented yellow station wagon apparently had trailed the armored car into the parking lot, and as the guards went to the rear of the truck, three men jumped out and began firing, authorities said.

One witness, Frank Franchi, said the guards "didn't have a chance."

After grabbing several bags of money, the three gunmen ran back to the station wagon, where a fourth man was at the wheel, and fled. The car was found abandoned three blocks away.

Killed in the shootout was William Moroney, 59, of New Milford, N.J.

His partner, J.M. Schlacter, 47, of Queens, was in guarded condition late Tuesday after four hours of surgery.

Gigi not being a good mother

STONEHAM, Mass. (AP) — Mother and child are eating like gorillas, but they're doing their feeding in separate places. Science has failed in an attempt to teach the art of motherhood to Gigi, a 220-pound gorilla raised in captivity.

"It's sad. She didn't quite know how to be a gorilla," said Dr. Deborah Schildkraut, a behavorial psychologist who spent five months trying to teach the 8-year-old gorilla the art of child rearing.

Gigi gave birth to a 6¾-pound male late Monday at the Stone Zoo. But after seven hours of unassisted labor, Gigi ignored her newborn.

Ms. Schildkraut had tried to teach Gigi the art of motherhood by rewarding her with grapes for cuddling a fur-covered coffee can or responding to a talking doll dressed in a monkey suit that emitted baby gorilla noises.

But when baby came, Gigi kept her distance. After 45 minutes of inattention, the baby's temperature dipped a dozen degrees and officials placed the infant in an incubator.

The baby, which will be raised by a human surrogate, is now doing fine. "Eating up everything," Ms. Schildkraut said Tuesday.

Sam, the 11-year-old father, was separated from Gigi a few months ago when his play became too rough for her delicate condition. The pair will be reunited soon.

Ms. Schildkraut said Gigi shouldn't be faulted as a poor parent. Born at the Cincinnati Zoo, Gigi was one of six babies rejected by her mother. Gorillas, like humans, learn by example, said Ms. Schildkraut, and Gigi had no example to follow.

Ms. Schildkraut, the mother of two children, said she shared "every single groan" with Gigi during labor.

Teamsters delegates refuse to form ethics committee

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — In an emotional response to the government indictment of interim Teamsters President Roy Lee Williams, convention delegates have rejected overwhelmingly a proposal that the union police itself with an ethics committee.

Resentment over the bribery-conspiracy charge and an earlier Senate investigative report accusing Williams of being a tool of organized crime burst onto the convention floor Tuesday when union dissidents pushed for creation of an ethics committee.

In the tense and bitter debate that ensued among the 2,200 delegates, a member of the Teamsters for a Democratic Union suggested top officers have something to hide by opposing such a panel. And a delegate attending his first convention apologized to Williams for believing he was "a bad man."

The union's fighting mood — epitomized by Williams' refusal to cooperate with Senate investigators — fsurfaced on the floor the day before, when union members cheerfully approved a resolution denouncing the news media.

On Tuesday, Diana Kilmuray, a dissident Teamster from the union's Vancouver, British Columbia affiliate, sought approval of the ethics panel on behalf of the TDU faction.

"Are all these people working for your government agencies liars?" she asked as other delegates booed and told her to sit down.

But Williams urged the convention to let Ms. Kilmuray have her say.

"I didn't say you all were a bunch of crooks," she continued. "I don't think that. But what I do think is that we've had rotten apples before and if you're too scared to have an ethical practices committee ... then you must be up to something."

International Vice President Edward Lawson of Vancouver said he had a better idea for an ethical practices board — one that would stop the TDU and its Convoy magazine "from printing all the lies and distortions about the officials of this union."

He promised that "if the TDU will stop telling lies about us, we'll stop telling the truth about the TDU."

Roy Munson, representing a union local from Baltimore, told Williams: "I have to apologize to you. I judged you before I came here. I judged you as being a bad guy in so many words."

Williams accepted the apology and thanked Munson "for having the guts to stand up here and admit you made a mistake."

Williams, 66, was indicted earlier this year on federal charges of conspiring to bribe Sen. Howard Cannon, D-Nev., in connection with a Las Vegas land transaction when the union was fighting a trucking deregulation bill. Williams says he is innocent; Cannon was not indicted.

In other action, delegates voted substantial pay raises for the top union officers.

The convention was to continue work on the constiution today.

Williams, expected to be named to a full five-year term during the convention, got a salary increase from $156,250 to $225,000 a year. Williams became head of the union after the death of President Frank Fitzsimmons earlier this year.

The convention also voted to increase Secretary-Treasured Ray Schoessling's salary from $125,000 to $200,000 and gave the 18 international vice presidents a hefty pay raise.

Delegates speaking in favor of the issue maintained that union leaders are underpaid compared with top corporate executives.

At a news conference following the session, Jackie Peresser, an international vice president from Cleveland who served on Ronald Reagan's presidential transition team, suggested the Williams' indictment can be attributed to hold-over Democrats from the Carter years.

"I would think that anybody with an ounce of intelligence would figure out that ... our endorsement of the Reagan administration was a factor," he said.

Among other things, the convention on Tuesday changed the union constitution to free delegates to vote their own consciences on questions that arise during constitutional conventions, rather than being bound by the wishes of rank-and-file members back home. It also voted to impose a loyalty oath on members, which would prohibit them from doing anything "that brings reproach" to the union.

UMW leaders predict miners will like contract

MADISON, W.Va. (AP) — Thousands of striking coal miners will get their first look at the text of a proposed new contract today and United Mine Workers leaders predict they'll like what they see.

UMW President Sam Church has sampled the reaction of striking miners in West Virginia, Kentucky, Virginia and Alabama this week. He's predicting the 160,000 UMW members, who have been on strike for 10 weeks, will ratify the contract with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association this weekend and return to work Monday.

"I think they'll approve it," Church told reporters Tuesday night at the Huntington airport after he had spent the day promoting the contract in Virginia and Kentucky. "I've haven't hardly heard anybody who doesn't like it."

Church has been met with applause on his trip, a marked contrast to the jeers of "Sellout Sam" that greeted him when he tried to sell miners on a tentative agreement two months ago at the start of the strike. That proposal was defeated by a 2-1 margin.

Church's lobbying tour continued today with stops scheduled in Ohio and northern West Virginia.

Jack Perry, president of UMW District 17 in southwestern West Virginia — the union's largest district — also says he thinks the contract will be approved. However, Perry — who was on the union's bargaining team — said he did hear some scattered criticism Tuesday when he outlined the proposal to some 500 union officials at Madison.

The district voted 9-1 against the first proposal. Many of the local officials at Tuesday's meeting said they think voting on the new one will be close but that the contract will pass.

Some complained about a section dealing with non-union subcontractors, and others said they believe the 40-month contract is a mistake because it would expire during the fall, when miners' living expenses are rising.

Many miners objected to the first tentative settlement because itldropped a requirement that companies covered by the pact pay a royalty to the union's benefit funds on non-union coal they processed. Miners felt elimination of the payments would weaken the UMW by encouraging the purchase of non-union coal.

The new proposal restores the payments.

Jasper Bennett, one of the miners at the Madison meeting, said miners are running short of money and that might generate pressure for ratification.

"I think it'll probably pass because a lot of the boys are beginning to get a little hungry by now," he said. "I think it's probably the best we're going to get, considering how long we've been out."

Raid nets drugs worth $200,000

HOUSTON (AP) — Narcotics agents confiscated $200,000 of controlled drugs in a Tuesday night raid, including hashish worth $160,000 and 5,791 doses of LSD.

Police said charges were pending against two men arrested in connection with the incident.

Officials search for identity of young woman

DALLAS (AP) — Officers are trying to piece together sketchy descriptions provided by a dark-haired young woman in an attempt to identify the apparent amnesia victim, found wandering around a motel pool in the suburb of Hutchins.

She says she thinks her name is Connie Russell and she descibes scenery resembling Long Beach, Calif., and New Orleans.

Most of the information the woman has provided about herself came in a 15-page series of notes she wrote officers, said Dallas County Sheriff's Department spokesman James Ewell.

She has spoken very little since she was found dabbling her feet in the pool at the Gold Inn.

Officials estimate she is in her late teens or early 20s, although she said she thinks she was born July 3, 1964.

"That would make her a juvenile, so the FBI wouldn't have prints or anything on her," Ewell said.

The hazel-eyed, brown-haired white woman is 5-6 and weighs about 160 pounds, Ewell said. She believes she is pregnant, and says she remembers taking a pregnancy test.

She was wearing a blue skirt and blue terry cloth blouse and was carrying a clutch purse resembling a folded Italian edition of Glamour magazine. Inside were a hand calculator, owl-shaped glasses, a cigarette lighter, wrist watch, hunting knife and bubble gum.

In her notes, Ewell said, she described docks and longshoremen, as well as a large church with "monsters" — perhaps gargoyles — on it. She also drew a map of a highway with a blue road sign reading "10" — possibly an interstate highway in California.

Ewell said she also described a man named Lupe driving a blue car and a woman she called the "drug lady."

Hutchins officers brought the woman to Dallas County Jail Friday night, where she was booked on a charge of failure to provide identification, a holding charge. She was transferred Tuesday to a county mental diagnostic center, Ewell said.

Abandoned baby is still abandoned

QUINCY, Mass. (AP) — The identity of an abandoned baby's mother remains a mystery after someone who tantalized police by claiming to be the mother failed to show up at a scheduled rendezvous.

A crowd of about 100 local residents and reporters waited in vain Tuesday night at a school where the woman promised to meet a Salvation Army officer who discovered the baby on his doorstep.

The author of the note, who said she was 17, wrote: "I want my baby....Please contact the papers that I am still living." She asked for the meeting and signed the note: "Lorie, a sorry mother."

The Salvation Army officer, Charles Waddington, waited with police for an hour before giving up. Quincy police admitted that the note was a long shot, but said they had no choice but to follow it up.

Police plan to return to the school Thursday evening because of a discrepancy in the note, which asked for a meeting Tuesday but gave the date as June 4.

Waddington found the 2-hour-old infant boy in a paper bag on his doorstep on the morning of May 28. He received the note in the mail Monday.

Since then, the police department has received hundreds of telephone calls about the baby. Almost all of the callers have offered to care for the infant, which has been placed in a foster home somewhere in Massachusetts.

Jack Hauck, director of the state Department of Social Services office in the Quincy area, would not say where the baby was, but said he is doing "very well" in his new home.

Authorities said they don't plan to prosecute the mother and are concerned about her well-being.

"It's been five days since delivery," Hauck said. "We would expect some medical problems. We just hope she calls and we can get her to come to Quincy City Hospital."

Mishap kills DPS officer

ATLANTA, Texas (AP) — A 34-year-old Texas Department of Public Safety officer was killed Tuesday night when he was struck by a passing vehicle while conducting a roadside check of a truck, a DPS spokesman said.

Officer Howard W. Jordan of Texarkana was killed instantly about 11 p.m. when he was struck from behind by a van on U.S. highway 59 north of Atlanta, spokesman Larry Todd said. Jordan and a second DPS officer had stopped a truck on the shoulder of the highway and were examining the driver's credentials when Jordan was struck, he said.

The driver of the vehicle was being held in the Cass County jail Tuesday night but had not been formally charged, Todd said.

The pleasure of your company

Choose wine carefully

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

The traditional rule of serving red wine with beef and white wine with chicken and fish still stands today, according to Sam Day, owner of Imperial Liquors in Midland.

Day was speaker at a seminar last week at the Permian Basin Graduate Center on how to plan a party. It was titled 'The Pleasure of Your Company.'"

Day discussed certain types of wine, choosing wines for various events and how to prepare for serving.

He first advised the class to select and sample their wines ahead of time, "at least a week before the party," he said. "Most wines, particularly Bordeaux and Burgundy wines, need to rest from the store trip."

He gave several tips on particular wines to choose for specific meals and dishes:

- Red wine is usually dry (unless it is an Italian wine) and will go with lighter meats. With meats which have more spice and flavor, choose a drier wine.
- At a dinner party for eight, start out with a light, fairly dry white wine with a soup and salad. A good example is German Cabernet, which is light, white and dry, or a Chenin Blanc, which is a little sweeter.
- For a main course of prime rib, etc., choose a dry red wine "to have enough stamina to go with the meat," said Day.
- For dessert, choose a medium cream sherry in the summer to serve on its own. A wine in the port family is excellent for winter. With a sweet dessert, such as cheesecake, select a light, sweet wine such as Chenin Blanc.

"A general rule to remember is match the body of wine with flavor of the particular food served," said Day. "For example, a light wine just will not work with a bowl of spicy, red chili. You might as well be drinking water."

He recommends a rose wine, a light-bodied wine that leans to the sweet side, for salad luncheons or poolside meals.

"For an event in which you are serving cheese, crackers, peanuts, etc., select wines in an economy size, such as a Chablis (dry and crisp), Colony, Franzia Brothers, Inglenook, Paul Maison, Gallo, Carlo Rossi, Parducci and Summit.

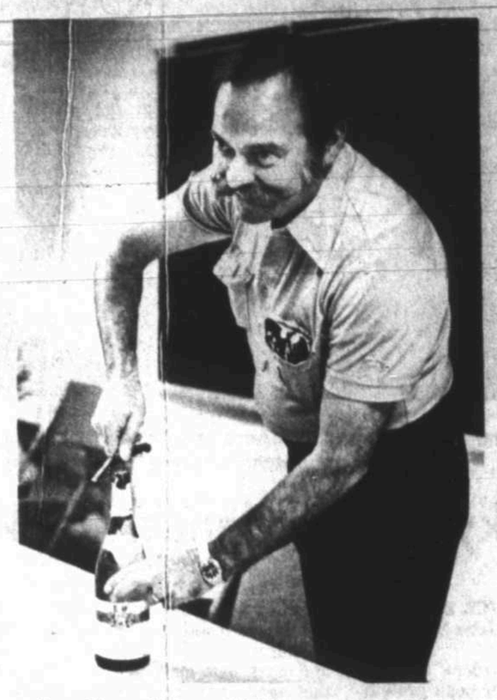

He said that the longer the cork in a bottle, the better quality the wine will be. "A cheap wine will have a one inch cork, standard size is one and a half inches and the better wines, such as Chateau Lafite and Chateau Mouton, will have a two inch cork," he said.

"Wine is a living thing and its life wears out after a certain amount of time," he said. "However, for the top-quality wines, you can buy them and serve years later to your grandchildren and they'll still be excellent, if properly stored."

He said that vintages are not that important for wines from California or New York because the weather there is fairly constant.

He said that countries which are producing excellent wines are Africa, Australia and Chile. "California wine is good, as is New York wine, which has a unique taste." Arkansas wine is also good."

He added that Texas does not yet produce wine of top quality, but predicted that it would one day be a prominant wine state.

LIVING TODAY

Warm weather watch

By SHARON A. HILLIS
County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Sun 'n fun! With school out, most of us will be moving to the oudoors for both work and play activities. Caring for the home landscape grounds means we will be using numerous pesticides. A word to the wise means: exercise caution and reap benefits. A few tips are offered below.

USE PESTICIDES SAFELY

Pesticides—insecticides, herbicides, fungicides, rodenticides, animal repellants, disinfectants—are effective and useful products. They help plants grow, eliminate unwanted insect and animal pests, disinfect and sanitize thehome. But, as with medicines and household cleaning products, safe application, safe storage and safe disposal are imperative.

Specific instructions are carefully detailed on the label of each particular product. Be sure to read labels thoroughly and follow instructions to the letter.

Start in the store. Reading the product label will answer the following questions. Was thi product designed for where you want to use it—in the home, in the garden, or elsewhere? Will it do the job you want done? Are there special precautions to be taken in particular circumstances? What equipment, if any, is needed for safe use and application of the product? What are the manufacturer's recommendations for storage and disposal of the product as well as the container?

Continue by rereading the label carefully just before using the product. This will refresh your memory and remind you of any special handling required. Always check the label when using a product that has been stored for any length of time.

Some general rules for safe application, storage and disposal of pesticides include the following:

- Select and buy the product best suited for your intended use.
- Read product label and follow instructions with care.
- Store pesticides out of reach of children and pets—a locked cabinet in a well-ventilated place is the safest home storage arrangement for pesticides.
- Never, never transfer these products to other containers. Store in original containers with labels intact.
- When applying pesticides, wear clothing that covers your arms and legs. Avoid breathing dust or vapors. After use, carefully clean any equipment used, launder clothing promptly and bathe or shower thoroughly. Do not eat or smoke while applying pesticides. If you do take a break, be sure to wash hands, arms and face before eating or drinking.
- Dispose of containers by following manufacturer's instructions found on the product label or package.

SUMMER HOUSEKEEPING

Warming temperatures bring an increase in outdoor activities—gardening and lawn care for some, ouside household repairs for others, and outdoor leisure activities, including spots, games and picnics for everyone. All this outdoor activity can mean extra housekeeping work when dirt and debris are tracked inside.

The following tips are offered to minimize the amount of outdoor soil tracked indoors:

- Keep a rough-textured or brush-textured doormat just outside the door and encourage its use.
- Keep a small, washable mat or rug inside the door; wash it frequently.
- Take special care to sweep and vacuum floors and rugs often—tracked-in sand and grit can, quite literally, bring their good appearance and wear-life to a grinding halt!
- After Fido has enjoyed a romp in the yard and before he comes back inside, take a minute to brush off any dust or debris he's collected on his coat and wipe his paws.
- Train children to shake dirt, sand, dust and other materials out of their pockets, cuffs and shoes before coming in.
- If you don't have a mud room, provide an area just inside the door for wet or muddy coats, boots and shoes.

Summer is a wonderful time to enjoy your family. With a little cooperation and consideration from your family members they will enjoy you, too. Start the summer off right by asking all family members to form safe and time-saving habits for a most enjoyable summer for everyone just right for...living today.

Pinch yourself

If you haven't done so before, give blood. It feels good to save a life, she adds.

An increase

Female-headed families increased by more than 50 percent during the 1970's—from 5.6 million to 8.5 million, says Nancy Granovsky, a family resouce management specialist.

Backyard gardener: Peak growth period chores

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service

Our gardens are entering their peak growth period and many are the small and mostly pleasant chores that require the backyard gardener's attention during this peak period.

Let's first have a look at the rose garden. The roses are ready for a second feeding about now, and don't forget to maintain a spray program every couple of weeks for your roses, using a systemic insecticide-fungicide.

Both of these elements are needed in your spray because roses are vulnerable to insect attack as well as to mildew, rust and black spot, for which they need a fungicide deterrent.

Remove any suckers appearing around your rose bushes. Keep the new blooms cut, not only to encourage further blooms, but to fill your home with beauty and fragrance. Tie in any new growth on your rambler roses.

With the rose garden tended to, we might apply some effort toward other flowers in the garden, particularly with respect to keeping old flower heads of any flowering plant cut off to encourage further flowers instead of seed.

The pretties of our garden having been dealt with, let's move on to the vegetable patch. Do try to keep on top of the side shoots on vine tomatoes. Nip off the tops of the plant after the fifth or sixth fruiting truss.

Blanch the celery and leeks by earthing up with soil about four inches every couple of weeks.

It's often difficult to keep up with them, but you really shouldn't allow the rhubarb to form flowering stems. Some varieties of rhubarb are more prone to setting seed heads than others. As soon as you see one developing, pull it out for if it's left on the plant, the flower head will inhibit the development of edible stalks.

Keep any strawberry runners cut off until the plants finish producing fruit. Then, layer any runners you wish to keep in between the rows.

When every place else in the garden is looking gorgeous, this is the time when any shaded spots for which you haven't found a suitable planting begin to look rather forlorn.

If nothing, not even grass, will grow under the shade of certain trees in your yard, try planting lily of the valley. These are usually readily available in most nurseries.

Lily of the valley is attractive and provides beautifully fragrant and dainty blooms for the house. Another possibility for these difficult shaded spots is the use of ground ivy (Nepeta hederace).

A great little plant for a hanging basket or planter in a doorway on the north side of the house or a north-facing apartment balcony is a grape ivy. It tolerates poor light but must be kept moist.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Don't get 'housework-itis'

DEAR HEARTS:

Several years ago, a medical doctor wrote us praising the "Heloise Philosophy" of housekeeping: Doing what you can when you can; not letting housecleaning rule your life; enjoying your family; saving some time for yourself, and so on.

This doctor said he had treated many women patients over the years who suffered from "housework-itis." He suggested that all homemakers read the Bible's Book of Luke, Chapter 10, verses 38 through 42.

It's the story of two sisters, Mary and Martha. Martha was so encumbered by her domestic chores (and filled with self-pity because she had no help), that she missed the true pleasure of Christ's visit that day.

Meanwhile Mary, being open, simple and loving, chose to sit at her Master's feet and enjoy a visit that could never be taken away from her.

Well, even today some are guilty of worrying over chores and working themselves into a frenzy. Next time you let the housework overpower you, remember Martha, and then be like Mary.

Hugs to you all. — Heloise

LEMON SHAMPOO

Dear Heloise: My children are at the swimming pool nearly every day, and we all know what chlorine does to hair.

Consequently, they shampoo immediately after swimming. Rather than having them take a full bottle of shampoo, I save those plastic lemon juice containers that are shaped like lemons.

I put shampoo into one of these containers for each child. The "lemons" are small and easy to stick into a pocket or purse. No chance of breaks or spill, either. — E.R.

CAMPING HINT

Dear Heloise: An age-old camping problem is stubbed toes caused by those tent stakes poking out everywhere.

To help insure a safe camping trip with all the children running around the campsite, I saved plastic mustard and catsup bottles.

I slip a bottle over each tent stake, drawing attention to its presence. — Betty

CORN-Y IDEA

Dear Heloise: Ever stick your hand into the silverware drawer and get poked by one of those little corn-on-the-cob holders?

I have, so I poked them into a little square of plastic foam and placed the foam in a corner of the drawer.

All the holders are together and easily located when needed, but never ready to stick me when I least expect it. — Mrs. B.

DOCTOR'S ORDERS

Dear Heloise: What child doesn't enjoy playing "doctor" with doll patients.

I've kept my young children busy for hours by making them a little doctor kit. I saved empty plastic containers and a bandage tin.

Talcum powder was put into one container, cake-decorator candies for "pills" in another, water for antiseptic, etc.

I put strips of cloth into the bandage can, along with a few cotton balls and swabs.

A popsicle stick is used as a splint and I put in a pair of safety scissors and inexpensive tape too.

The cost is nominal, but the possibilities are abundant.

Give them an old doll to "practice" on and they'll have it "well" in no time at all.

Housewife does bank's computer work from home 150 miles away

By BILL JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

KINGSTON, Okla. (AP) — Norma Posey realizes she is riding the crest of what some see as the wave of the future, but adds quickly that "if there had to be a guinea pig, I'm glad it was me."

Mrs. Posey is a computer programmer and analyst for a major Oklahoma bank. Her office, with an earth-tone carpet on the floor, is complete with easy chair and sofa, a portrait of her married daughter, a console television set and a washer and dryer.

Next door her husband Gene operates his welding business.

Mrs. Posey is a 40-hour-per week, fulltime employee of Liberty National Bank and Trust Co. of Oklahoma City. Her office is in the den of her home just east of this southern Oklahoma town about 150 miles away near the shores of Lake Texoma.

"I can just get out of bed and walk to the den and I'm at work," said Mrs. Posey, who has been employed by the bank for the past 18 years.

That's a lot easier than it was when she lived in Moore, an Oklahoma City suburb, and battled the traffic to and from the office every day.

And then there were the night calls.

"If there was some sort of problem, I'd have to get out of bed, get dressed, drive 15 miles to the office, clear up the problem, drive home, get back in bed and try to get a little sleep," she said.

Now, if there is a problem at night, she just pulls on a robe, sits down at her computer console (it looks like a TV with a typewriter keyboard) and works the problem out.

"I try to work a normal 9-to-5 job," Mrs. Posey said. "But the other night, for instance, I got called about 11:30 p.m. I worked for over a half-hour to clear up the problem, so I'll just take 30 minutes off some day when I want to go shopping or something."

Her computer console sits in the corner of the den just inside the outer door. A telephone connects her with the IBM computer at the bank in Oklahoma City.

"There are three computers at the bank, and my terminal is hooked up to one," she complained. "I can communicate with that computer, or with the other people who work in that department."

The Poseys decided to change their lifestyle after spending at least two weekends a month, summer after summer, camping at Lake Texoma "and meeting the friendly people around here," Mrs. Posey said. They had grown to love the area so much, they decided to move here.

"We knew that we would have to find a place on the highway for Gene to have his welding business," Mrs. Posey said. "Then we came down here one day and here was this house, just like it was waiting for us."

They bought the house and her husband, who was maintenance superintendent at the Oklahoma City Zoo for 10 years, bought a building and moved it here for his shop.

At that time, Mrs. Posey intended to look for computer work in Ardmore, about 35 miles to the west, or Durant, 18 miles to the east. Then came her going-away party at the bank.

"Someone — I'm not sure who it was, one of the auditors, I think — spoke up and said, 'Why don't you take a computer with you?'"

There were some giggles at first, she said, but the idea soon caught on with the bank's officials.

Among the first visitors after the Poseys moved in were a computer serviceman from the bank, who installed her terminal, and Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. workers from the local office, who wired it to the telephone line.

"The telephone people said they had never done anything like that before, but they did it real quick and without any problems," she said.

With that, Mrs. Posey was ready to go to work.

Her job is to maintain and change programs in the bank's computer.

"If a change has to be made in the program, my bosses at the bank will call me or send a written request," Mrs. Posey said. "I can write a new program or make changes in current programs right here at this terminal."

Liberty National does the data processing for about 80 Oklahoma banks, including some in this area. "The computers work 24 hours a day, seven days a week, all year long," she said. She said a courier service goes to the member banks after the close of business to pick up the data processing information and take it to Liberty, where the work is done overnight so the other banks can have it at the opening of business the next day.

Occasionally, she said, when the bank has something particularly large to send her, or when she wants to look at a printed copy of one of her computer programs, it is brought by the courier service to a nearby bank and she picks it up there.

Mrs. Posey admits she sometimes misses seeing her co-workers in person, "but I wouldn't trade places with them for anything.

"My family likes having me at home with them. We get to spend time together that we would otherwise spend going in separate directions.

"And if I have a particularly long program to run, I can dump a load of clothes in the washer while it's running."

Stichery witchery

Alterations come under the heading of 'things we'd rather not do, but must.' Alterations are time-consuming, aggravating, frustrating ... you get the picture, I'm sure.

But, for the sake of the garment, we often must make sacrifices and do that which we would rather not.

If the alterations you are planning (or trying to get out of) are on ready-to-wear, it would be wise to check that garment carefully before you begin ripping things apart. Things may not go back the way you planned.

Replacing zippers in slacks or jeans, for example, can be a game of 'now where does this go' and 'I wonder how they did that.' If necessary, make notes on just how things are put together. Manufacturers have ways and means of doing things that are not available to us, so we have to try to outfox them.

Re-lining a jacket can get you in trouble, too. But the trouble is less if you leave half the garment intact and use the other half for a pattern. That way, you have a reference.

If the elastic in your skirt or slacks has lost its 'oomph,' it is better to replace the old elastic with new, bouncy stuff than try to 'take up' what is there. I know, I know — it is a lot more trouble, but you will be happier in the end.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I want to thank you for something I read in your column a long time ago that came in very handy when I needed it. It was the perfect answer to a rude and prying question.

Yesterday I ran into an acquaintance I had not seen in a long time. I am now in my eighth month of pregnancy, which is certainly obvious. When this acquaintance noticed my condition, she said, "Oh, I see you're expecting again." (I have three children who are all in school now.) I smiled sweetly and said, "If anybody asks you, just tell 'em you don't know."

At first she was speechless. When she found her tongue, she chuckled and said, "I'm sorry. I suppose I shouldn't have asked that question." — READS YOU IN FT. LAUDERDALE

DEAR ABBY: You recently received a letter from a man who was troubled by being called "Reverend" (which also makes me cringe), and you indicated that his last name should be used with the title. That implied the addition of the last name would make everything fine. Ten lashes with an English grammar book!

Though it is the style among some Protestants to use the title as you say, the word is an ADJECTIVE, not a NOUN. To say "Reverend Jones" is the equivalent of addressing a judge as "Honorable Smith." Either "Father" — if the man is a priest — or "Mister" — if a minister — is all that ought to be expected. I do not know what one could call the new Protestant Episcopal priestesses. How about "Mother"? — THE REV. FATHER ANDREW L. JAMES, ATHENS, OHIO

DEAR FATHER: I don't think it would play in Peoria.

Crabs make appearance on most wanted pets list

By JO TUBB
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — What has 10 legs, eats vanilla wafers and carries its own house on its back? Hint: It just made Fortune magazine's five most wanted pets list.

If you answered land crab, chances are you've visited a pet store lately or there's a youngster in the house clamoring for one of the curious creatures. For it's land crabs, not box turtles or even boa constrictors, that are the stuff of Show and Tell these days.

And why not? Land crabs can't sing like canaries, but you don't have to clean their cages. They don't cuddle like puppies, but they don't have to be housebroken either. They don't purr like kittens, but they don't have to be kenneled when you go on vacation. They just may be the most trouble-free pet ever to hit pet-loving America.

"You don't have to do much for them," says Bobbi Decker of nearby Palos Verdes Bird Farm, which has handled land crabs for about five years now. "Just give them a little food and plenty of water and they'll take care of themselves.

"They're like Pet Rocks, only they're alive."

Alive indeed. They might not look it much of the time, especially when a sudden movement has startled them and sent them inside their shells. Then they look simply like, well, shells. But let things settle down a minute or drop some warm water on their shells, and they'll show you they're alive, all right.

Prompted by insatiable curiosity, they'll peer out of their shell openings, cautiously at first, then extend most of their bodies outside the shell to explore, dragging their portable homes behind them.

The shells themselves are not their own. Land crabs occupy snail shells that have been discarded by their original tenants, and pet stores that sell crabs also sell extra shells for them.

"They like to change shells once in a while," says Decker, "so it's a good idea to have more than one in a terrarium."

She says a crab may switch to a new shell because he's outgrown the old one or because it's full of excretia or merely because the new one is more to his liking.

The switch is virtually the only time land crabs leave the protection of their shells completely, since they are so vulnerable without them. Often the switch is made under cover of darkness or when human eyes are not watching.

Otherwise, the crab's activities can be viewed openly, particularly if the animal is kept in a glass container. Decker recommends a spacious terrarium, an aquarium or a large fish bowl.

The base of the container should be covered with sand or gravel. Aside from that stipulation, it can be decorated to suit the pet owner's taste. Because land crabs seem to be partial to decaying wood, Decker suggests a piece of it be placed inside the container so the crab can use it for climbing.

"They're great climbers," she says as she points to a creature carefully making his way up a sea fan. "Just make sure nothing reaches the top of the bowl or they'll climb out."

Crabs can go for long periods of time without eating. And when they do eat, they're not choosy. They should be given a staple diet of commercially prepared crab food, but they'll eat anything from apples to pizza.

"When I want to give them a treat," Decker says with a grin, "I give them vanilla wafers. They really seem to love them."

She says sales of land crabs have taken off in the past year, noting the Bird Farm now sells about a dozen a week at $1.99 each. Who buys them? Everyone from kids to grandmothers, she says.

"They're great for people who are allergic to animal hair," says Decker. "A goldfish is great for that, too, but you can't hold a goldfish. You can hold a land crab."

She says land crabs also are a favorite among people who aren't allowed to have dogs or cats in their apartments. She mentions one woman who began her crab colony with two crabs and adds another every week or so.

That is the only way to increase a collection, since land crabs have never been bred in captivity. Eggs are laid in the sea, and after about a month in the water, the crabs crawl ashore.

Five factory workers continue their hunger strike in Warsaw Tuesday. Thirteen persons have been on humger strikes in three Polish cities aimed at freeing prisoners in jail for their political beliefs. Four joined the hunger stikers Tuesday.

Polish hunger strike spreads

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland — A hunger strike demanding the release of political prisoners is spreading in Poland, with at least 23 people reported fasting today, but spokesmen indicate the protesters won't starve themselves to death like the IRA prisoners in Belfast.

The Polish hunger strike, which began May 20 in the southern city of Sosnowiec, is not modeled after the protest in Northern Ireland in which four imprisoned members of the Irish Republican Army have died so far, spokesmen for the Polish protesters said.

PAP, the official news agency, reported the government freed one of the prisoners whose release the fasters demanded, Krzysztof Bzdyl, 30. He had been in jail since last December because of his membership in the dissident Confederation of Independent Poland, or KPN.

No reason was given for his release, and it was unclear whether charges were still pending against him. He also had been refusing food.

Six people joined the hunger strike Tuesday, the independent labor federation Solidarity reported. Three were in Tarnowskie Gory, near Sosnowiec, and three in Gdansk, the Baltic port that was the center of the strike wave last summer that resulted in legalization of the independent labor movement.

Maria Moczulska, wife of the head of KPN, and three men began fasting Monday in Katowice. Three others in Sosnowiec have been at it for eight days and six in Gdansk have been fasting for a week.

The condition of four of the five original hunger strikers is "worsening," said Solidarity spokeswoman Teresa Baranowska in Sosnowiec. She said the fifth abandoned the fast Monday because of a circulatory problem and was hospitalized.

The hunger strikers are demanding the release of Mrs. Moczulska's husband, Leszek Moczulski, and three other KPN members charged with anti-state activities, and clemency for two brothers, Jerzy and Ryszard Kowalczyk, who were convicted of blowing up a school building in southern Poland in 1971.

Last week, after thousands marched in several Polish cities to demand freedom for the prisoners, a parliamentary commission agreed to review the cases of the KPN members. It said it would forward the cases of the Kowalczyk brothers to the State Council, which has the power to pardon.

Solidarity leaders say release of political prisoners was among the points contained in the landmark agreements that ended last summer's strikes in Gdansk. Miss Baranowska said if the government does not act by next Wednesday, a strike alert may be called.

Meanwhile, the ruling Politburo condemned allegations of weakness and vacillation leveled at it by a hadline Comunist Party discussion group in Katowice last week.

Tass, the Soviet news agency, gave the Katowice group extensive coverage Monday, indicating official Soviet approval. The Polish Politburo said conceded some of the group's assessment "might be right" but said it was "unacceptable" and "harmful."

"It does not serve the unification of the party, and this today is the elementary criterion of assessment," the statement said.

Sun Yat-sen's widow honored in lavish Chinese state funeral

PEKING (AP) — Chinese officials paid a last tribute today to Soong Ching-ling, widow of modern China's founding father Sun Yat-sen, in a lavish state funeral attended by 10,000 people. The nation's current leader eulogized her as a great patriot who "kept pace with history."

"Starting as a great revolutionary democrat, she became a great communist," said Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping.

Before him was a box containing Madame Sun's ashes, draped with a Communist Party flag. A huge funeral portrait hung over the stage in the auditorium of the Great Hall of the People, which was decorated for the occasion with evergreens and funeral wreaths.

The man expected to be named Communist Party Chairman later this month, party general secretary Hu Yaobang, presided at the ceremonies for Madame Sun, who died Friday of leukemia at age 88.

Standing by Hu's side in a show of unity was current party chairman Hua Guofeng, the late Mao Tse-tung's chosen successor, now reported on his way out of what is nominally the top office in China.

Absent, however, were Madame Sun's relatives now living on Taiwan — including Nationalist President Ching Ching-kuo, her step nephew. Chinese officials had invited them to the mainland to attend the funeral, but the Nationalists denounced the gesture as a propaganda ploy and refused.

Madame Sun's husband led the 1911 revolution that overthrew China's last emperor. But after his death in 1925, she split with Nationalist leader Chiang Kai-shek, her brother-in-law, and sided with the communists, who seized power in 1949 and drove Chiang and the Nationalists to Taiwan.

Tensions heightening between Reagan, Nicaraguan leaders

WASHINGTON (AP) — A military manpower buildup in Nicaragua combined with delivery of sophisticated Soviet weaponry to that country is raising the possibility of heightened tensions between the Reagan administration and Nicaragua's leftist government.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. told a news conference Tuesday night that sophisticated Soviet weapons already have been delivered to Nicaragua and that additional armaments are believed to be on order.

He also expressed concern about a projected buildup of Nicaragua's armed forces which, according to informants, now is in excess of 20,000 and could reach 50,000.

"We do not see any threats in the local area that would justify that level of manpower nor do we visualize their requirement for the sophisticated level of armaments that we see have already arrived and which we understand are programmed to arrive," Haig said.

He did not specify the types of equipment Nicaragua has received, but State Department spokesman Dean Fischer said earlier that intelligence reports indicate Soviet tanks may have been sent and that additional tanks are in Cuba awaiting delivery.

Fischer stressed that the reports have not been confirmed but said the presence of heavy Soviet armor in Nicaragua would pose "serious problems" for its neighbors.

He suggested that the Soviets may be ready to provide aircraft to Nicaragua.

Fischer also said that Soviet-bloc arms shipments to El Salvadoran rebels have increased in recent weeks after having been sharply reduced during the early weeks of the Reagan administration.

U.S. economic aid to Nicaragua was suspended April 1 because of Nicaragua's alleged role in serving as a trans-shipment point for Soviet-bloc arms shipments to rebels in El Salvador. The State Department held out the possbility of resuming aid if Nicaragua's support for the rebels were halted for an extended period.

But officials say there is evidence that arms flows through Nicaragua have continued. Haig said Soviet-bloc arms also are being sent to rebel groups in Honduras, Guatemala and Colombia.

Hai said som of the more than 50 U.S. military trainers in El Salvador have been withdrawn. Pentagon sources contacted Tuesday night said they were not aware of any personnel reduction.

Cause of ship fire probed

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — The Navy has begun an investigation into the cause of a fuel-oil fire that spawned a fireball and injured six sailors aboard the ammunition ship Nitro in the Mediterranean.

Cmdr. Mike Cherry, spokesman for the Atlantic Surface Force, said Tuesday the fire broke out Monday as the Nitro was operating 60 miles east of Souda Bay, Crete.

Bones found in cave

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — For more than two years, a group of amateur cave explorers from San Antonio have been exploring the Sorcerer's Cave in West Teas, the deepest known cave in the state.

Recently, the Grotto Cavers made a big find: human bones that may be thousands of years old.

The bones — part of the jawbone, left shin bone, right upper arm and left forearm — are now being studied at Texas A&M University, said Dr. Gentry Steele, a physical anthropologist at the university.

Steele said the bones may have belonged to more than one person. He said the remains could be several thousand years old or only a few hundred years; it's impossible to accurately date the bones with radiocarbon techniques because they were found near water.

Enough bones are missing and broken to suggest a large predator such as a mountain lion might have dragged the body to the bottom of the cave — more than 500 feet underground — after killing the person, Steele said. Or, he said, the explorer may have entered the cave and not been able to escape. Once he died, then the lion may have disturbed the body, Steele said.

U.S. battleship may be revived for third time

BREMERTON, Wash. (AP) — They'll have to remove the moss, pigeons' nests and clamshells from the teak decks of the battleship USS New Jersey before they reactivate it.

And the Navy may even have to bring in a mystic of sorts, as some sailors say the ship may be haunted. They could be right — it's certainly had several lives.

And if Congress approves, the 888-foot vessel — the largest U.S. battleship — soon will be revived for a third time since it was launched a year to the day after the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor.

"She's a good ship," says Lt. j.g. Barbara Miller, standing on the foredeck of the New Jersey as a steady drizzle fell from leaden Puget Sound skies. "We've maintained her the best we can."

The Puget Sound Naval shipyard, where the New Jersey sits tied to the same dock as the USS Missouri, is one of four West Coast sites where work could be done. The New Jersey would be armed with cruise missiles in an overhaul the Navy said would take about 21 months.

Both the Senate and House have approved $89 million as part of a supplemental budget bill to reactivate the ship, but the legislation must still go to a conference committee for disputes that do not involve the New Jersey, said John Wilson, press aide to Rep. Al Swift, D-Wash.

Nothing afloat has bigger guns or thicker armor plating than the New Jersey. The hull is made with up to 12 inches of steel and the box that surrounds navigational equipment is lined with 22 inches of steel.

"They could blow off the entire superstructure and it would still be there," said Mrs. Miller of the vessel.

The New Jersey can send five-foot long, 2,700 pound shells up to 23 miles from its 16-inch guns, and it takes 660 pounds of powder to fire one shell.

Battleships like the New Jersey — which Mrs. Miller said was made 108 feet wide to fit through the 110-foot-wide Panama Canal — just aren't built anymore. It would cost too much.

"It's just a big empty ship now," she said.

But almost 40 years ago, when admirals like Raymond Spruance and William Halsey walked its decks, the New Jersey was the pride of the fleet.

During World War II, the New Jersey was involved in many of the key battles for the Pacific, pounding the beaches before an invasion, dueling with Japanese dreadnaughts and fending off attacks from suicide planes.

Decommissioned after the war, the New Jersey was recommissioned in 1950 for service in the Korean War and then decommissioned once again. The vessel was refitted and recommissioned a second time in April 1968 for service in the Vietnam War, and decommissioned most recently in December 1969.

The mission this time:

"It could provide a presence where carriers are not available," said Lt. Kenneth Satterfield, a Navy spokesman in Washington, D.C. In a fleet where there are not enough ships to go around, Satterfield said that's an important role.

"Seven levels down, 10 up," said Mrs. Miller, standing on the ship's bow and gazing around her.

These days, gray paint flakes off and there is an occasional patch of rust. Portholes have been painted over and hatches sealed. Every three months the decks must be demossed. There is even a patch of grass.

Dangling over the side are two lightbulbs which illuminate the draft markers, a visual backstop in case internal flooding alarms fail.

"It's real quiet inside," said Mrs. Miller. "Every other lightbulb has been removed. The air isn't musty, just dry."

The air is kept at about 30 percent humidity, to guard against deterioration. There is only one access, used for quarterly inspections.

The ship's fuel lines — it is powered by steam-turbine engines — have been drained and most fuses removed. Some equipment has been dismantled, with some parts placed in plastic bags, labled and taped to the bulkhead.

Desk, chairs and all the other "consumables" as the Navy calls them, have been removed. Bare metal has been covered with preservative.

"I don't hold much credence in ghost stories," said Mrs. Miller of the sailors' tales. "Every ship has stories. Sailors are superstitious."

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston police say they are pleased with the actions of two young women who successfully grappled with a car thief until help arrived.

The women, who spotted the thief hot-wiring a Ford Bronco, crawled into the vehicle through the back window and tried to choke him. He took then for a wild ride around a pizza restaurant's parking lot before the women managed to stop the truck as their boyfriends came out of the restaurant to help.

"I'd say it was a good fight," said Officer L.E. Kelley, who jailed a 20-year-old suspect in the case. Kelley said he was considering nominating the two women, Glenda Brownson, 26, and Kathy Harrison, also in her mid-20's, for citizen's awards.

The vehicle belongs to Miss Brownson's fiance.

Police spokesman Larry Trout added, "It's a risky situation. We would recommend to anyone finding himself in a predicament like that to call police and let police make the arrest, but there are always exceptions, and in this case the exception worked out."

The women encountered the thief when they went to the restaurant to retrieve their boyfriends Sunday night.

"We saw this guy in the Bronco. He was bent down, and we thought he was stealing the radio or something," said Miss Brownson.

The women banged on the window and shouted, she said. "He had both doors locked, but the window in the back was open, so I climbed in an yelled for Kathey to get Pat," her fiance, who was inside the restaurant unaware of the adventure unfolding on the parking lot.

Instead, the other woman climbed into the vehicle, too.

"While we were climbing in he gets it started," Miss Brownson said. "He rams into a U-haul trailer and the wall of the pizza parlor. Then he rams into this car.

Calm returns to prison in Hawaii

HONOLULU (AP) — Prisoners who used "sheer force of numbers" to take over an aging, overcrowded prison cellblock after an inmate threw coffee on a guard were brought under control.

"There has been a very, very high level of tension for months and we knew it could go at any time," said Chapman Lam, a spokesman for the Oahu Community Correctional Facility.

About 250 of the 300 prisoners had the run of the cellblock, but another 50 — including 20 in maximum-security lockups — remained locked in the building, officials said.

Six hours after the disturbance erupted, the inmates agreed to vacate the cellblock and wait in a recreation yard while guards searched for homemade weapons and contraband. A number of makeshift wooden clubs and pipe-like weapons were found along with a few homemade knives, Lam said.

After the search was completed, inmates returned to the cellblock.

Inmates took over the two-story, X-shaped cellblock when unarmed guards attempted to remove the inmate who tossed coffee from his dormitory and hit a guard, Lam said.

"That small incident resulted in a spontaneous disturbance," he said, adding that "sheer force of numbers" led to the takeover.

The staff withdrew immediately and sealed off the thick-walled building from the recently completed modular units holding another 250 inmates, Lam said. Dozens of Honolulu police, armed with rifles and shotguns, immediately surrounded the prison as a police helicopter circled overhead.

The problem was "more than just the overcrowding," Lam said. "That results in a tremendous lack of staffing for work, education and recreation programs. That's aggravating the situation because there's nothing for these men to do."

To escape the gas, the inmates broke their way out of their separate dormitories and through a large gate to reach an enclosed recreation yard, he said.

Mild quake shakes California counties

FONTANA, Calif. (AP) — A mild earthquake jolted residents of western San Bernardino and northern Riverside counties late Tuesday, prompting "thousands of calls" to authorities but reportedly causing no damages or injuries.

The quake, measuring 3.1 on the Richter scale of ground motion, was centered five miles north of Cucamonga and struck at 10:29 p.m. PDT, said Dennis Meredith of the California Institute of Technology Seismology Lab in Pasadena.

"We have had thousands of calls but no reports of injuries," said a San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department deputy who asked not to be identified.

Police in Fontana, located about 50 miles east of Los Angeles, were a bit busier.

Dispatcher Paul McDavitt also reported many calls and said there were no reports of damages or injuries.

The Richter scale measures ground motions as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of a full number indicates a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus, a 4.5 quake would be 10 times weaker than a 5.5 quake.

Masonic kingpin most wanted fugitive

ROME (AP) — A former mattress salesman with a fascist past is Italy's most wanted fugitive, the central figure in the Masonic lodge scandal that brought down the government last week.

Few Italians had ever heard of Licio Gelli before police opened a suitcase in his home while investigating his relationship with convicted financier Michele Sindona.

In the suitcase were lists of 935 prominent Italians, including politicians, generals, publishers and industrialists. They were listed as members of Propaganda Due, or P-2, a Masonic lodge so secret that only Gelli, its 61-year-old grand master, knew the identities of all the members.

Leader fading into history

By TOM FENTON
Associated Press Writer

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — Gen. Luis Garcia Meza, Bolivia's military president, appears to be on his way into the history books. His government is unpopular at home and getting a cold shoulder from the United States and most Western nations 10 months after seizing power from Interim President Lydia Gueiler, the country's first woman chief executive.

International lines of credit have been severed, resulting in near bankruptcy for the government. Meanwhile, it has made a reputation as a violator of human rights, and numerous officials are reported profiting from the huge illegal trade in cocaine, the country's biggest export.

Under strong pressure from businessmen, district military commanders and three coup attempts, the 52-year-old president has said he will step down on Aug. 6 after a year in office. That would be a long run by Bolivian standards, the country having had 190 governments in the past 156 years. But there is widespread belief that his associates may kick him out before then in an effort to save themselves.

An Analysis

Military power has passed to Gen. Humberto Cayoja, who replaced Garcia Meza last week as commander of the army and as the army member of the three-man governing junta.

The junta will name the new president, and Cayoja is considered the major contender, and one likely to find favor with the United States. He is a graduate of the U.S. Army's command and staff school at Ft. Leavenworth, Kan., and served four years as military attache at the Bolivian Embassy in Washington.

Cayoja already is calling for a massive overhaul of the political, economic and educational system. He also says he favors turning the government over the civilians once the reform is complete.

He told the La Paz newspaper Presencia recently that the political system must be changed to provide for parties that are "serious and responsible."

Fifty-seven parties were represented by 13 candidates in Bolivia's last presidential election, on June 29, 1980. No candidate received a majority and the decision was left to Congress, with leftist former President Hernan Siles Zuazo considered the front runner. To prevent his election, Garcia Meza ousted Mrs. Gueiler's government last July 17 before Congress could act.

Point Roberts — A geographic fluke

By CHARLES HILLINGER
The Los Angeles Times

POINT ROBERTS, Wash. — They call Point Roberts "America's misplaced fragment": It's a 2-mile-long, 3-mile-wide strip of the United States dangling from the end of a Canadian peninsula.

By road, Point Roberts is 24 miles through Canada "to the rest of America" — the international border at Blaine, Wash.

It is a geographic fluke that came about in 1846 when the 49th parallel became the boundary between the two nations, leaving Point Roberts hanging out there all by itself.

In Point Roberts, a suburb of Vancouver, B.C., 95 percent of the land is Canadian-owned. The local telephone, gas, water and electric companies are all British Columbia utilities.

"What's the purpose of your visit to the United States?" asks U.S. immigration officer Bob Nunamaker, 58, at the border.

The most common replies are:

"To see a dirty movie.'

"To gamble."

Three of the largest beer bars in North America are at Point Roberts — the Reef, the Breakers and the Cannery, each accommodating more than 1,000 guzzlers at a time.

Beverly Byrd, 50, of nearby Ladner, B.C., says she has been coming to "The Point," as Canadians call it, by cab for 30 years to "play bingo and drink beer" a couple of nights a week.

"You can't drink beer and play bingo at the same time on the Canadian side," she explained.

"The Point goes bonkers every Sunday," said Dave Langlands, 21, a Canadian customs inspector. "Traffic is stacked up every Sunday for hours, with Canadian cars waiting to clear the American border station.

"Bars are not open Sundays in B.C. At The Point bars are going full blast Sundays with live rock bands," Langlands said.

"Drunks are our biggest problem," reported Glen Conway, 28, the Whatcom County deputy sheriff. He and his partner, Stew Smith, 29, provide local law enforcement.

"The drunks are a pain in the neck. Our jail can hold only eight people. We collect the most obnoxious drunks and push them across the border and let the Canadian cops worry about them."

So many intoxicated people run off the narrow road leading to the border station that an enterprising resident is selling "See You in the Ditch at Point Roberts" T-shirts.

"I come to THE Point to gamble," said Dorothy O'Toole, who lives in Vancouver. "We're so straitlaced in Canada. We can't play gambling machines at home like we can at The Point."

Pornographic movies also are banned in British Columbia, which explains the popularity of the Point Roberts Theater, the only movie house in America's misplaced fragment.

OC's new vocational-evaluation center tests job skills

ODESSA — Through Odessa College's new vocational-evaluation center, Odessans who previously would have faced unemployment or misery in the wrong job field are able to match their skills with the "right" job.

The center began as a result of a meeting last year among representatives of the Texas Rehabilitation Center (TRC), CETA Manpower, Mental Health/Mental Retardation Center, Ector County Schools and the college, according to Mike Raley, OC director of vocational-evaluation.

A need for a center to test and evaluate the job skills of disadvantaged persons was voiced at the meeting, and OC officials determined that a vocational-evaluation center was a community service the college could provide.

"Until this year, we've never had a local evaluation center," noted TRC supervisor Roger Ward. "We had to send people to North Texas State or Texas Tech, which was costly and inconvenient for most."

Groundwork for the center was laid last fall, Raley explained, through meetings with the various agencies, location of the proposed center in the east wing of the Fine Arts Building and initial purchase of several test models.

Free testing of referrals from CETA and TRC began in January, and some 40 persons have been tested and evaluated this spring, Raley said.

The center now is averaging about 12 referrals a month from CETA and four referrals a month from TRC.

Persons recommended by CETA for evaluation usually spend a full week at the center, while TRC referrals stay at least two weeks. Testing is not limited, however, and some clients may stay as long as six weeks to get a full evaluation, Raley noted.

Although the testing conducted by the vocational-evaluation center does include some academic assessment, most of the evaluation comes from test results which indicate physical abilities, including motor skills, full body coordination and dexterity.

Other test models judge a person's aptitude in following instructions, Raley added.

Raley and assistant Jesse Speed not only use ready-made testing units, but custom-build test projects as individual needs arise.

"We try to tailor the testing at the center to the local job market," Raley explained. "We've already designed tests and built work samples for two local firms to use as in-house tests for prospective employees."

Raley said persons who are referred to them for testing want to know what job fields will best fit their skills.

"Many of the people who come from CETA are women who've raised families and never have entered the job market. They're not sure what they are qualified to do," Raley commented, noting that many change their career plans after testing.

"TRC referrals often include people who have had productive lives, but were injured in their line of work or in an auto accident, for example," he continued. "They can't do what they used to do, and the center offers them a starting over point."

The new center has developed a cross-contact system with several departments on the college campus.

"We've utilized the welding, machine shop, cosmetology and several other programs as trials for some clients who exhibit the skills needed in these fields," the director remarked.

TRC officials recently expressed their approval of the OC program by giving the center a Level I rating, the highest credential a service agency can receive.

Future plans for the evaluation center include testing of handicapped students from the Ector County Schools who are interested in vocational fields, Raley said.

Methodist vote to aid Indians

HOUSTON (AP) — United Methodists in East and Southeast Texas voted Tuesday to try to raise $100,000 from their 57-county area to help Methodist Indians in Oklahoma.

The Texas Annual Conference proposes to help the Indians build churches and parsonages, said the Rev. Eernest Phifer, the church's area provost. Phifer said about 8,000 Methodist Indians live in Oklahoma.

Jersey voters pick candidates

By BRIAN FRIEDMAN
Associated Press Writer

New Jersey voters waded through puddles and a sea of campaign ads to pick two names from a 21-candidate field in a gubernatorial primary, while in Jackson, Miss., a state senator was defeated in an attempt to become the first black mayor of a large Mississippi city.

In Ohio, two state legislators won their parties' nominations Tuesday to face off in an election to fill the 4th Congressional District seat left vacant by the death of Rep. Tennyson Guyer, a Republican.

In New Jersey, former Assembly Speaker Thomas Kean won the Republican nomination and Rep. James Florio got the Democratic nod.

They competed in the largest gubernatorial primary field in the state's history. Gov. Brendan Byrne was forbidden by law to seek a third four-year term, leaving the race wide open.

The election also marked the first time in the state that public matching money was available in a primary. Using the extra dollars, many candidates spent heavily on advertising.

Most attention in the campaign was focused on the candidates' qualifications for office rather than their stands on the issues.

With 98 percent of the votes counted, unofficial totals gave Kean 119,528 votes, or 31 percent, to finish atop the field of eight Republican candiates. Paterson Mayor Lawrence Kramer received 81,337 or 21 percent to finish second.

Florio, a southeastern New Jersey congressman for six years, received 157,127 votes, or 26 percent, to defeat the 12 other Democrats. Rep. Robert Roe was second with 95,187 or 16 percent.

Although the field has been sharply reduced, another 11 independents are expected to be on the gubernatorial ballot in November.

A voter turnout of 28 percent of the eligible voters was reported as intermittent rain fell over the state.

Byrne had endorsed former Attorney General John Degnan, who trailed badly in the Democratic race, but Byrne said the size of Florio's victory was a "good omen" for the party.

Mayor Dale Danks was returned to office in Jackson in a sweeping victory over Republican Doug Shanks, a former city commissioner, and independent Henry Kirksey, a black Mississippi state senator.

Shanks and Kirksey had sought to break up the century-old grip that white Democrats have held on the mayor's job. A jubilant Danks said he was "looking forward to the next four years with more enthusiasm than I've ever felt."

With unofficial returns from all 97 precincts reported, Danks had 20,565 votes to 14,706 for Shanks and 12,309 for Kirksey.

Civil rights forces had asked the Justice Department to seek a court order delaying the election on grounds the city planned to count votes from a mainly white area annexed in 1976 without federal approval, as required by under the Voting Rights Act. The government rejected the request.

In Ohio, two veteran state legislators will square off in a special congressional election June 25 after getting their parties' nods.

State Rep. Michael Oxley of Findlay, edged Robert Huffman, a former Miami County prosecutor, in the GOP primary and swept past four other Republican candidates.

With all 606 precincts in the 12-county district reporting, unofficial results gave Locker 12,278 votes or 72 percent to Mrs. Foster's 4,834 or 28 percent. Oxley, backed by Guyer's widow, Mae, got 20,955 votes or 51 percent to Huffman's 18,512 or 45 percent. Four other candidates shared the rest of the vote.

Guyer died in his sleep April 12 of heart problems.

Strict abortion fund limits likely

WASHINGTON (AP) — The strictest limits ever on federal financing of abortions for the poor are virtually assured of approval in Congress.

House and Senate negotiators left untouched on Tuesday an amendment to a supplemental 1981 spending bill that would bar federal Medicaid funds for abortions unless the life of the mother is threatened.

Incest and rape also are grounds for qualifying for Medicaid payments now, and opponents said the amendment could deny federal funds for abortions to 10,000 women whose pregnancies result from rape.

The ban would only apply to the spending measure approved by the conference committee Tuesday for the rest of the current fiscal year ending Sept. 30. The restrictions on abortion financing would have to be renewed to apply to future spending.

Tuesday's action by the conference committee is tantamount to final congressional passage since both houses are expected to routinely approve the final version of the spending bill.

The conferees shelved for now a proposal to extend strict new limits on abortion financing to health plans for federal workers. Opponents contended that move was unwise because a money bill should not be used to legislate new restrictions on abortion that could interfere with labor-management relations.

Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., said, "I'm anti-abortion. But I don't think this is the place to legislate" restrictions in "the labor-management field."

The conference committee decision therefore leaves it up to federal employee labor unions and management negotiators to decide what coverage for abortions should be included in their contracts.

The proposal was sponsored by Rep. John M. Ashbrook, R-Ohio. and passed the House, 242-155. But it was eliminated by the conference committee at the insistence of Senate members.

Conferees from both houses agreed to delete all funds for proposed land-based MX missiles pending a review of the controversial weapons system by the Reagan administration. The Air Force had requested $92 million to plan and design the weapon.

Earlier, the conferees agreed to spend $1.74 billion more than was originally budgeted for food stamps this year to keep the program from running out of money this summer.

The House members of the conference approved the Senate version of the spending proposal, which added $538 million to the $1.2 billion figure passed by the House.

The Agriculture Department said that without the added $538 million there would have to be a 17 percent cutback in food coupons for the 23 million recipients this summer.

Udall says violation 'won't happen again'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Morris K. Udall, vowing "it won't happen again," concedes he broke a House ethics rule which he helped write when he solicited support for a new liberal political organization.

The Arizona Democrat agreed that his recent letter promoting the group, called Independent Action, should not have gone out under a House of Representatives letterhead.

The American Conservative Union asked the House ethics committee on Tuesday to investigate the mailing, charging Udall with "misusing his office and the name of the House of Representatives for a private political purpose."

The group was started by Udall last winter to help progressive congressional candidates in 1982 and to counter opposing efforts by conservative poltical action groups.

Udall said that while the letterhead wasn't official House stationery and no public funds were used, clearly the words "House of Representatives" shouldn't have appeared at the top of the letter.

He called it "a modest breach of the ethics rules of the House that I helped write."

"It's kind of ironic that I'm caught up in this," Udall said when asked to respond to the allegations. "It's wrong. It shouldn't have been done."

House rules adopted in the mid-1970s, which Udall helped shape, prohibit members from using either House stationery or even the words "House of Representatives" on any letterhead or envelope for non-congressional business.

"It happened and I'm willing to accept responsibility for it," Udall said in an interview. "I regret this had slipped by."

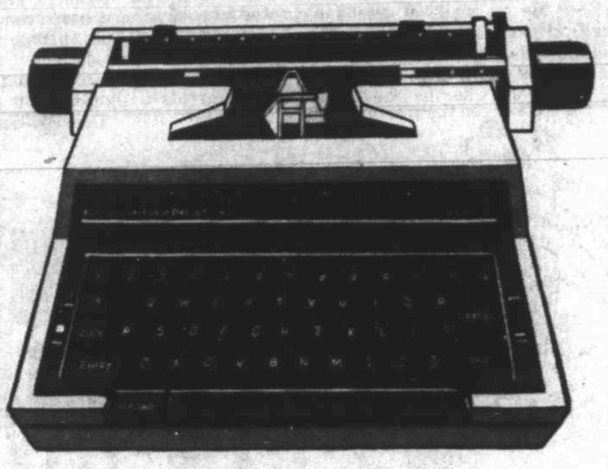

Udall stressed that the letter iteself contained a statement that it was paid for and mailed with private funds.

He said that while he had written the letter, others took care of mailing and distribution — and that he wasn't aware until it was too late that the letter went out on a facsimile of a congressional letterhead.

"Mr. Udall, in his haste to establish a liberal organization to be known as Independent Action, violated both the spirit and letter of (the) House rule," Don Todd, director of the American Conservative Union, wrote the ethics panel.

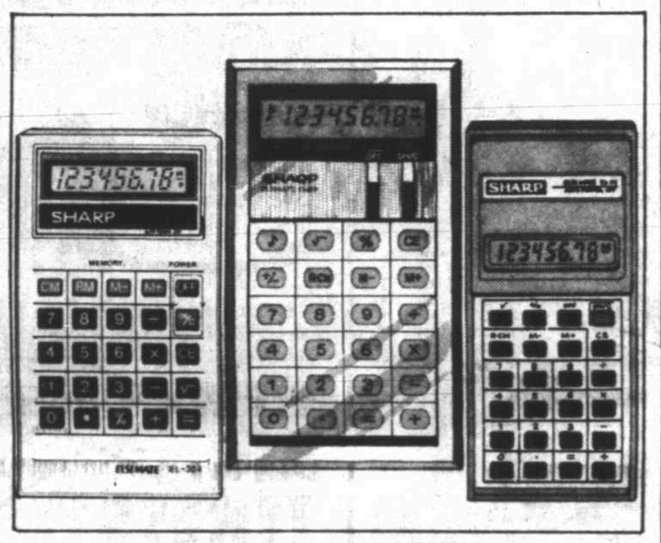

Udall said he would submit his own statement to the ethics panel owning up to the allegation. But he said he thinks it's all "much ado about nothing" and his violation "on a scale of one to 10...is about a two."

New Angels boss same guy who lost 107 in Philly

Los Angeles Times

It was the season of 1963. The Philadelphia Phillies of the era were not so much a baseball team as a sitcom. They had a pitcher whose real name was Boozer and a lot of guys whose nicknames were, too. Around the league, they were called the "Dalton Gang" because they were always taking shots after dark.

They were in Houston this September and they had done nothing more serious than lose their 74th game of the season, hardly a record -- the team had lost 107 two seasons before -- when the manager came in, looked around the crowded locker room where guys were playing tape recorders, drying their hair, humming to themselves, reading their mail and eating from a big tableful of fried chicken, spareribs, cold cuts and barbecued beans.

GENE MAUCH lifted the smorgasbord in the air, turned it on its side, and flung the contents on his baseball team. Some of them were picking potato salad out of their eyes for hours.

The team had six games left in the season. They won five of them. The next year, they had the pennant locked up with one week to go. The magic number was, like, three, when they suddenly went into the deepest dive since the Titanic. They had a 6 1/2-game lead with 12 to play. They lost 10 in a row. They almost finished third -- in fact, were tied for second.

IN 1961, they had done something even more spectacular. They had lost 23 baseball games in a row. That's the modern-day record. Only one National League team in this century has come close -- the 1969 Montreal Expos who dropped 20 in a row.

Gene William Mauch managed all of the above teams. I don't have to tell you, he's prematurely white.

How can a guy whose teams have managed to lose 43 games in a row, who blew a 6 1/2 game-lead with a little more than a week to go, who lost 107 games in a single season in Philadelphia and 110 in a single season at Montreal, who never won a pennant, a World Series, or a playoff game, be considered one of the greatest managers the game has ever seen? Isn't anybody counting? Would John McGraw lose 23 games in a row? Would Connie Mack?

FUNNY YOU should ask. Connie Mack lost 20 in a row in 1916, 20 in a row in 1943, 18 in a row in 1920, 15 in a row in 1937, 14 in a row in 1945, and 13 in a row in 1935. That's 100 consecutive games lost at one time or another by the Grand Old Man of Baseball. The Wizard. The winningest manager of all time.

But, would he lose 107 games a year? 110? Well, he lost 105 in 1946, and 102 in 1950. Casey Stengel, no less, lost 120 games in 1962. The next year, he only lost 111. The one after that, 109, then he went back up to 112 again.

There's an axiom in baseball that you have to be a very good pitcher to lose 20 games a season. Thus you have to be a very good manager to lose 1,705 games a career.

Still, how does Gene Mauch belong with the game's managers who have long since gone to Cooperstown? What does he do now -- empty a bucket of bouillabaisse on the heads of the California Angels? Pelt his infield with salami sandwiches? Does this team really need a manager -- or a priest? Or just a Red Cross nurse?

GENE MAUCH is a very good manager because he has lasted 21 years in the big leagues with teams that didn't

Devils' Dukes burns Bulldogs

Stretches no hit string to 9 2/3 innings

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Arizona State Coach Jim Brock admitted Tuesday night that star reliever Kevin Dukes was "pumped up" but he didn't realize just how much.

The senior left-hander was blazing a 92 mph fastball to put out the Mississippi State offensive fireworks and help No. 1 ranked Arizona State into the Friday winner's bracket finals with a 4-3 victory. In a Tuesday afternoon game, South Carolina ousted Maine 12-7 in the elimination round.

"I think Jim made the right move at the right time," said Polk. "I think to do what he (Dukes) did was just an awesome display of pitching. We've got a good hitting club and he shut us down."

DUKES, who threw 3 1-3 innings of hitless relief in Saturday night's 11-2 victory over Texas, came on with the Sun Devils down 3-1 in the third. He allowed only two base runners, both on walks, in the next 6 1-3 innings.

"I felt real good. The first couple of innings I didn't feel real loose but after that I felt I was getting stronger every inning," said Dukes, now 7-2 on the season.

MISSISSIPPI STATE scored all of its runs in the third as Steve D'Ercole singled, went to second on a single by Pete White and scored on a Mark Gillaspie single. The Bulldogs then loaded the bases when Arizona State catcher Ric Wilson interferred with the swing of MSU's cleanup hitter Bruce Castoria. White and Gillaspie then scored on a two-out, two-strike single by Terry Loe.

Castoria, who is one home run away from tying the NCAA single season record of 29, threatened to turn the game around in the eighth. Gillaspie walked and the Bulldog slugger caught a Dukes curve ball.

"When that home run went foul, that was the turning point of the game, no doubt about it," said Dukes. "That's the only pressure I felt all night."

In the afternoon game, Rob Lowery hit a pair of two-run homers to lift South Carolina over Maine. The Gamecock catcher became only the sixth player in the 35-year CWS history and the first player in 25 years to hit two home runs in a single game.

Bruins face San Antonio

Midland opens a six-game home stand tonight against the Texas League West Division San Antonio Dodgers at Cubs Stadium and while it's too late for the Cubs to make a run at the first half title, they could make life uncomfortable for Ducky LeJohn, the Dodgers' manager.

The Dodgers lead El Paso by one game as the first half heads down the stretch and San Antonio has a five-game winning streak going against Midland, sweeping the Cubs in the recent series at San Antonio.

While Midland is 4-20 on the road, the Cubs are 12-12 at home and will present the faithful with a new look after a two-day layoff.

Gone is veteran manager Roy Hartsfield, to Iowa of the American Association, and he took outfielder Tom Grant (.366) and pitcher Joe McClain (3-3) with him in hopes in reviving the sagging Oaks.

George Enright, the new Cubs manager, played here last year, but spent much of the season filling in as a pinch manager in the Chicago Cubs organization. So this year they gave the 27-year-old native of Lake Worth, Fla., a team of his own, Sarasota, Fla., in the Rookie League, a team George never got a chance to manage. Sarasota hasn't opened its season yet.

ENRIGHT SPENT most of his pro career in the Chicago White Sox organization, playing three seasons in the American Association, two with Iowa and one with the Kansas City Royals farm at Omaha. In December 1979, Enright came to Chicago in a trade for another ex-Midland Cub catcher, Duane Gustafson.

In a 2-8 road trip to the TL East, first baseman Mike Upton was about the only Cub to escape an average-sapping slump. Mike returns homes with a nine-game hitting streak, 14-36 for .389, and is one of two .300 hitters on the Cubs, now that Grant has departed with his 10 homers and 37 runs batted in.

California Frosts Blue Jays, 3-0

By Associated Press

If California and Toronto are scheduled to play each other on June 2 next season, don't be surprised if the forecast calls for Frost.

Dave Frost is a sore-armed California Angels right-hander whose last two major-league victories have come on that date against the Blue Jays and pitcher Luis Leal, including a 3-0 decision Tuesday night.

Yankees 5, Orioles 3

The blast by Revering, who hit two homers for Oakland before the Yankees acquired him two weeks ago, made a winner of Rich Gossage, 2-1, who pitched the final 3 1-3 innings and worked out of a bases-loaded, no-out jam in the top of the 11th.

A's 6, White Sox 2

Shooty Babitt hit a two-run triple to highlight Oakland's five-run first inning that saw Chicago commit three errors.

Red Sox 4, Indians 0

Dwight Evans hit his 13th homer and added a run-scoring double to back Dennis Eckersley's four-hit pitching for Boston.

Rangers 5, Twins 3

Minnesota Manager Billy Gardner decided to intentionally walk hot-hitting Bill Stein, who had his 18-game hitting streak broken, to face Oliver after Mark Wagner opened the eighth with a triple. The strategy backfired, however, as Oliver and Bell delivered.

Wave of future: golf course strictly for biz

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Someday soon, business decisions affecting worldwide markets and millions of people may be made by golfers on the greens and fairways of the Firestone Country Club.

Dallas-based Club Corp. of America, new owner of the 500-acre, 36-hole golf course in suburban Coventry Township, has begun transforming the facilty from a rubber company-operated country club into an exclusive, business-oriented golf club with a membership directory of corporate leaders worldwide.

"We want to mix golf and business," said Donald E. Padgett II, director of golf at the facility. "We will be structured as a corporate golf club."

The goal is to have 400 to 600 corporate members four years from now, Padgett said. he said he also plans to visit Japan soon to further promote the golf club.

Padgett and Anderson would not reveal the price of a membership or if members would have to pay an initiation fee or greens fees.

"Our fees will be representative of the clientele," Anderson said.

Padgett said under the new ownership, the courses will be less crowded than when the facility was owned by the Akron-based Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

A low-volume, uncrowded approach is designed to create an atmosphere that corporate clients will appreciate, Padgett said.

Purchase price of the club has not been revealed, but Firestone did say that before the club was sold in February, it was apparaised at $5 million.

"Club Corp. could have gone out and built the finest facility in the coutry and it wouldn't have had the impact that Firestone has," Padgett said.

MEET THE CUBS

Mike Diaz

Mike Diaz once pitched a no-hit no run game and went beserk at the plate in the same high school game back in 1977, but that wasn't his greatest baseball thrill. It couldn't match the kick he got out of a three homer, a grand slam and a couple of two-run homers, in an amateur game later.

So it's little wonder that Mike, sometimes known as Rocky, became a catcher instead of a pitcher after signing with the Chicago Cubs in June 1978 as a 30th selection in the baseball draft.

His progress up the baseball ladder since then has followed a rigid timetable, Rookie League in 1978 when he hit .279 for Bradenton in the Gulf Coast, A-Rookie in the New York-Penn League at Geneva where he hit .312 and Class A Midwest League last year at Quad Cities, where he hit .293.

And, now, in his fourth season, Mike is in AA ball, batting a respectable .280 for the Midland Cubs, despite a slump in which he has collected only four hits in the last seven games.

The 21-year-old from Pacifica, Calif., attended St. Ignacious Prep in San Francisco and graduated Terra Nova High in Pacifica where he played baseball, football and basketball.

In fact, the 6-2, 195-pounder was so good on the gridiron that he faced with a crossroads decision during after being drafted in June '78.

As a senior he led Terra Nova to the North Peninsula co-championship, led the county in passing and total offense and wound up on the All-League, All-County, All-Bay Area and High School All-America at quarterback. As an after thought the conference named in back of the year. Little wonder he was in a quandry.

Fortunately, for baseball, the following spring, he hit .431 and was a 4-3 pitcher and in addition to the usual list of "All" teams, was named the North Peninsula League's MVP.

That followed a junior season in which he hit .389, was 4-1 on the mount and was an All-Peninsula League infielder. That was also the year he pitched a no-hit, no-run game against Jefferson High, hitting a three-run homer, triple and single to drive in five runs, not to mention selling popcorn between innings and sweeping out the stands after the game.

In his last two pro seasons, his defensive statistics have been impressive and when it comes to catchers, that's where it all starts. In the NY-Penn League he led in doubles, 19, putouts, and total chances. Last year he was fifth in batting in the Midwest League, but led the catchers with 627 putouts, which offset a league-leading 16 errors, and played in the all-star game.

Pete nears NL hit record, Perry eyes 300 wins

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Pete Rose and Gaylord Perry are really getting up there — and not only in age, by the way

Two of baseball's geriatric giants in their forties, Rose and Perry are both zeroing in on euphoric landmarks in their fine careers.

On the verge of erasing Stan Musial's National League mark of 3,630 career hits, Rose moved within nine of that figure by collecting three safeties Tuesday night in the Philadelphia Phillies' 9-7 victory over the New York Mets.

Reaching for the golden 300-victory level, Perry recorded his 294th in Atlanta's 3-1, 10-inning triumph over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"It's fun going after the record," said Rose, "I don't feel any pressure whatsoever. I'd like to do it tomorrow if I could, but it would be a long game."

ROSE HAD two triples and a single, and drove in three runs as the Phillies battered five Mets pitchers for 12 hits and drew eight walks. Rose's fielder's-choice grounder in the fifth inning proved to be the game-winning RBI.

"I want to be contributing in all offensive ways," Rose said, "scoring runs, moving runners, and getting on base — period. That's were I am right now. I'm right were I want to be."

Perry, 5-3, gave up one run and five hits over nine innings, extending his winning streak over Los Angeles to four games. He has not lost to the Dohgers in three years. Rick Camp pitched the bottom of the 10th to preserve the victory with his sixth save.

"They expect me to keep them in the game for seven or eight innings," said Perry. "Any starting pitcher should be able to do that."

With Rose raising his career hit total to 3,621, the Phillies won their fourth straight game. They broke away from a 6-6 tie with a run in the fifth on Rose's RBI grounder and never were headed.

Mike Proly, 2-0, gained the victory in relief of starter Nino Espinosa, while Ron Reed gained his third save of the season. Ed Lynch, 1-2, the second of five Met pitchers, was the loser.

Pinch-hitter Bill Nahorodny's run-scoring double in the top of the 10th inning broke a 1-1 tie and sent Atlanta past Los Angeles. Bruce Benedict started the Braves' winning rally with an infield single off loser Dave Stewart, 3-1. Rafael Ramirez sacrificed and Steve Howe replaced Stewart to pitch to Nahorodny.

Giants 15, Reds 7

Jerry Martin hit a grand slam homer in a nine-run fourth inning which gave San Francisco an 11-0 lead and triggered the Giants to a runaway victory over Cincinnati.

Expos 8, Cardinals 1

Tim Raines' bases-loaded triple keyed a six-run Montreal third inning as the Expos rolled past St. Louis behind a four-hitter by former Midland Cub Ray Burris.

Cardinal starter Bob Shirley, 4-2, and reliever Mark Littell gave up four walks in the decisive third inning as the Expos scored all their runs after two were out. Burris, 3-4, walked one and struck out three.

Astros 2, Padres 1

Craig Reynolds lined a two-out, run-scoring triple to cap a two-run ninth inning, leading Houston over San Diego.

Loser Chris Welsh, 2-4, was working on a 1-0, one-hit shutout going into the ninth when he gave up a leadoff infield single to Luis Pujols. Pinch-runner Rafael Landestoy took second on Joe Pittman's sacrifice, and, after pinch-hitter Dave Roberts flied out, Terry Puhl lined a run-scoring single to tie the game. Puhl stole second and came home with the game-winner on Reynolds' triple. Reliever Frank LaCorte, 3-1, was the winner.

Pirates 16, Cubs 3

Steve Nicosia drove in a career-high four runs and Dave Para 19-hit assault that paced Pittsburgh over Chicago.

While six Chicago pitchers were taking a pounding, Eddie Solomon, 4-3, earned the victory with a six-hitter in a contest played despite a strike by ushers, ticket takers and maintenance workers at Three Rivers Stadium.

(Compiled from R-T wire services)

Bobby Unser says ABC-TV played a major role in USAC's decision to strip him of his Indy 500 victory. "What really caused the problem was the TV people — Chris Economaki and Jackie Stewart. They assumed Bobby's guilt of something before millions of people. They became judge and jury ... All over a rule that never existed." It was ABC tapes which showed Unser passing several cars after exiting from the pits under a yellow light, that prompted the one-lap penalty and awarding of first to Mario Andretti. "They (ABC) were manufacturing something. It's like a little fire and they're just pouring fuel on it to make a story better. They did it at my cost and I think it's terrible," said Unser who added he thought it was an attempt to boost ratings...

The NBA adopted a rule Tuesday prohibiting its teams from contacting undergraduates before they declare their intention to turn pro..The move is aimed at preventing future repeats of the courtship of Virginia center Ralph Sampson by Boston a year ago and by Detroit and Dallas this spring. In other matters, the Board ratified the sale of the San Diego Clippers to Donald T. Sterling, a Los Angeles attorney, and approved a number of rules changes as recommended by the Rules and Competition Committee last week. These include new guidelines against the use of zone defense and elimination of the 3-for-2 and 2-for-1 penalty free throw situations. "These changes are designed to speed up our game, clean up our game and reduce the number of free throws that will be attempted during the course of a game," said Jerry Colangelo, general manager of the Phoenix Suns and chairman of the rules committee...

Bjorn Borg defeated Balasz Taroczy 6-3, 6-3, 6-2 and will meet Victor Pecci, 3-6, 6-4, 6-4, 6-4 winner over Yannick Noah, in the French Open semifinals. In other matches Tuesday, Hana Mandlikova beat 14-year-old Kathy Rinaldi 6-1, 6-3 while Chris Evert Lloyd defeated Virginia Ruzici 6-4, 6-4; Andrea Jaeger beat Mima Jausovec 4-6, 6-2, 6-0...

Hobbled Houston center fielder Cesar Cedeno, who said last year he'd seek a trade if forced to play first base, now says he's lost about two steps in speed and might help the team more in the infield. "The one thing I don't want to do is hurt my teammates. I don't want to let them down and I think I am when I'm playing center field less than 100 percent. I want what's best for this team, not for me." A move to first could give the Astros some added punch, since seven Astro first baseman have combined to bat .197 average with 11 RBI...

Herb Brooks, coach of the 1980 U.S. Olympic hockey champions, will coach the New York Rangers. Brooks led Minnesota to three NCAA titles in seven years as Gophers' coach...

In regard to a feeler from Davidson College, Lefty Driesell says "I'm flattered, and I'll listen, But it's the furtherest thing in my mind to leave Maryland." Driesell coached Davidson 10 years, compiling a 176-65 record as the Wildcats finished three times among the Top Ten teams...

Ton Solaita hit two homers as Nippon Ham Fighters beat Nankai Hawks, 4-3 Tuesday. Solaita has hit 17 homers...Fullerton State named football Coach Gene Murphy interim athletic director pending a search by a 10-member committee for a permanent replacement for Mike Mulally, who resited to become Boise State AD...

Cotton Bowl game ticket prices were hiked to $15 and the SWC rule on academic credits for athletes was switched from 26 hours to 24 per school year while the distribution of nationally televised games will allow the competing team to keep 30 percent instead of 20...

Four major league umpires, led by crew chief John Kibler, crossed a picket line set up by striking ushers, ticket handlers and maintenance workers at Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Stadium. But there were some side affects for the 6,437 baseball fans who paid to see the Pirates and Cubs Tuesday night, including the absence of hot dogs, pizza, french fries and other hot snacks. Pirate management had been prepared to use sandlot umpires if necessary, but the regulars reported.

Liut, Gretzky head NHL stars

MONTREAL (AP) — Goalie Mike Liut of the St.Louis Blues and center Wayne Gretzky of the Edmonton Oilers were the top vote-getters on the 1980-81 National Hockey League All-Star Team, announced by the league today.

Liut, who sparked the Blues' to the NHL's second-best regular-season record, edged Gretzky, the league's top scorer with a record 164 points, 306-305 in balloting by members of the professional Hockey Writers Association in the NHL's 21 cities.

Simmer was the only first-team repeater from last year, while Carlyle was the Penguins' first member of the first-team All-Star squad. Liut, Lessard and Taylor also were first-time selections.

The eight teams represented on the two squads equalled a league record set in 1935-36, when there were eight teams in the NHL, and matched in 1974-75, when there were 18 teams in the league.

The selection of Simmer, Dionne and Taylor marked the first time since 1978-79 that a line unit had been so honored.

Mansion offered Davis?

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Was part of the enticement for the Oakland Raiders to move to Los Angeles a Beverly Hills mansion for Al Davis, the National Football League team's managing general partner ?

That subject was discussed in U.S. District Court as the trial involving the Raiders, the Los Angeles Coliseum Commission and the NFL continued Tuesday.

The NFL attempted to prove such a charge in U.S. District Court, but the former president of the Coliseum Commission denied the accusation from the witness stand, saying it was "a mischievous myth" perpetuated by the league.

On cross-examination, which was to continue today in the antitrust trial involving the NFL's refusal to allow the Raidegs to move their franchise to the Coliseum, NFL attorney Patrick Lynch showed jurors a report written by the Coliseum's architect in 1979 listing the costs of bringing the Raiders to Los Angeles.

The costs he assessed included about $1.5 million to buy a house for Davis.

"He expressed the desire to have a place in Beverly Hills ... a house comparable to the one he had in Piedmont," said Robertson, adding that he rejected the request outright.

LCC suffers loss in NAIA Series opener

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Designated hitter Lee Guetterman's three-run seventh-inning homerun propelledd Liberty Baptist College of Virginia to an 8-5 win over host Lubbock Christian of Texas in the final game Tuesday of the opening round of the 25th NAIA World Series baseball tournament.

Defending champion Grand Canyon of Arizona roared to a 10-0 lead and held on to down David Lipscomb of Tennessee, 11-7, while William Jewell of Missouri spotted John Brown of Arkansas four first-inning runs before comng back to take a 10-6 win.

Earlier Tuesday, Brian Brangi hit a three-run homer and Chris Williams added a solo blast to lift Winthrop to a 4-3 win over Spring Arbor.

Brangi unloaded his 5th homer of the year in the third inning to erase a 1-0 deficit and Williams hit his sixth shot of the year in the fifth. Dave Wright hit his 4th homer of the year for the losers in the sixth.

In the Tuesday's second game, Jim Robinson put William Jewell ahead 5-4 with a two-run single in the fourth and then added a two-run homer in the eighth to clinch the victory.

Record may never be equalled

By EARL GUSTKEY
(c) 1981, The Los Angeles Times

Forty years ago this week, an American legend died.

Never mind the facts Lou Gehrig hit 493 home runs, drove in 184 runs in 1931, hit .350 from 1927 to 1937 or had 200 or more hits in eight seasons.

The man played in 2,130 consecutive games. Two thousand one hundred and thirty! Today, more than 42 years after he took himself out of the lineup, it remains one of American sports' most treasured records.

Between 1891 and 1900, 500,000 German immigrants arrived on America's shores. Two of them, Heinrich and Christina Gehrig, settled in New York City's upper Manhattan. Gehrig was a leaf hammerer for metal sculptors. His wife was a domestic.

In 1903 they produced a son. They began to dream an American dream for their squarish, stocky boy. He would go to Columbia University and become an engineer, they decided.

PAPA GEHRIG, partly because he developed a fondness for pinochle and beer at neighborhood taverns, was often out of work. Mama Gehrig, partly because she wanted to keep an eye on her son's study habits, became a cook at Lou's Columbia fraternity house, Phi Delta Theta. Later, Papa Gehrig became the janitor at the fraternity house.

By this time, an activity Mama Gehrig viewed as an evil had crept into their lives — baseball. Even at 15, Lou Gehrig could hit a baseball 400 feet.

Two years later, on June 2, 1925, he began at age 21 the playing streak that would endure until May 2, 1939. For 2,130 games, nothing kept him out of the lineup...not broken fingers, broken ribs, colds, flu, lumbago, headaches, pulled hamstrings, sprained ankles...

LATE IN his career, Gehrig was X-rayed. The Yankees' doctor counted 17 bone fractures in his hands that had healed by themselves.

In 1933, Gehrig broke Everett Scott's major league record of 1,307 straight games. He would keep going for six more years.

By the late 1930s, Lou Gehrig was America's iron man. The Iron Horse, they called him. Indestructible. Invulnerable. He'd be straightening horseshoes at 80, they said.

He was powerfully built — 6-1 and a well-muscled 210 pounds. He was quiet and shy. His teammates teased him for penurious habits. A light tipper, they said.

In 1938, he held out for a salary of $40,000. He didn't get it. He settled for $39,000, his highest salary as a Yankee.

Then the decline. The disease that would kill him was at first unseen. His batting average tumbled from .351 in 1937 to .295 in 1938. But he was now 34, and blamed the slump on age.

BUT LATE in 1938, he began tripping over curbs, and dropping spoons and catsup bottles. In 1939, at spring training, people began to look the other way when he dropped throws at first base. He was hitting .143 on May 2 when he asked Manager Joe McCarthy to take him out of the lineup.

At his wife Eleanor's insistance, he went straight to the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn. The verdict: amyotropic lateral sclerosis, later to be known also as Lou Gehrig's Disease. No cure. A rare man had a rare disease.

Tributes followed. On July 4, 1939, he told 60,000 at Yankee Stadium: "They say I've had a bad break. But today I consider myself the luckiest man on the face of the earth."

He spent his final days in a chair in his upstairs bedroom, looking down upon roses growing beside his driveway at his home in the Riverdale section of the Bronx. He'd lost the ability to speak.

On the night of June 2, 1941, he died. He was 37 years old.

belong there. The Philadelphia Phillies team he inherited in 1960 had finished last three years in a row. Mauch had them in a "magic number" situation within three years. The Montreal team he inherited in 1969 was an expansion team. It had a team batting average of about 13 and made 184 errors. At Minnesota, he periodically lost his entire infield and outfield to free agentry. He played winning baseball with teams that didn't know each other's first names.

With the Ruth-Gehrig Yankees, you could be a pushbutton manager. With the Griffith family Minnesota Twins, you had to be an eeny-meeny-miney-moe manager. You picked your lineup with one hand over your eyes. It was a good idea to watch the game the same way.

MAUCH WAS a journeyman ballplayer who had to perfect the small skills to stay in the big leagues in the first place. He had to have that edge. He managed the same way. Once, in Philadelphia, in the old ballpark, his baserunners were being decoyed into staying on base on outfield drives by outfielders who pretended to have a ball hit to the rightfield fence. Mauch watched a few games, then changed bullpens. He put the visitor's bullpen in left field. Thereafter, his bullpen, in right field, could signal Philadelphia runners when the ball was uncatchable. It was estimated it won 20 games for the home team that year.

But, will the Angels need more than a simple bullpen change to win? Anaheim has long been the elephants' graveyard of baseball. Managers and general managers go there to die. Does the team then need a new manager -- or the last rites?

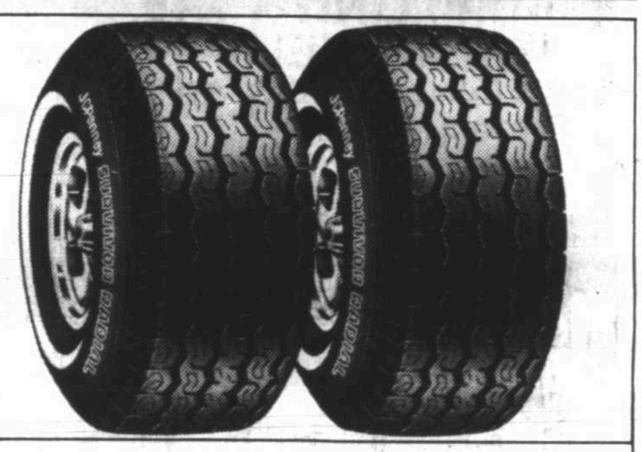

Casey Stengel lost in Boston -- 92 games a year -- before he became a "genius" in Yankee Stadium. Gene Mauch was saluted as a genius when he had tail-end teams to paste together. He may have to do more than tip over a buffet table. But, if he can show that he can not only lose like Connie Mack, he can win like Connie Mack, too, he will finally have the insiders saying, "I told you so -- all along."

Today's a 'red letter day' for nation's leading spellers

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some 120 hopeful youngsters, including last year's runner-up, are struggling to be letter perfect in the 54th National Spelling Bee.

Winners cannot defend their titles, but last year's runner-up, Paige Pipkin, 13, of El Paso, Texas, is back hoping for first place this year. He is among 13 repeaters from prior national bees.

German is spoken in the home of Claudia Mueller, 10, one of the youngest contestants. A West German native, she started learning English at age 3 and now lives with her parents at LaPorte, Ind.

And from San Antonio, Texas, comes Huan Nguyen, a 13-year-old Vietnamese youth who spoke no English before arriving in the United States in 1975.

The record number of finalists are the survivors of an estimated 8 million youngsters who partcipated i local contests sponsored by 118 newspapers across the country and in Mexico, Puerto Rico and Guam.

Of the 56 previous national winners — there have been co-champions three times — 31 were girls and 25 were boys.

To participate, the youngsters must be under 16 and not have completed the eighth grade. The oldest contestants this year are 14, and there are 46 of them.

The youngest this year, of which there are two, are 10 years old.

It took 610 words to choose the 1980 winner, Jacques Bailly of Denver. It was the second straight year the winner came from the Mile-High City.

Alex J. Cameron of the University of Dayton is the pronouncer for the contest this year, and chief judge is Robert E. Baker of the George Washington University.

Vietnamese student among nine Texans

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 13-year-old Vietnamese boy who spoke no English when he came to the United States six years ago is one of nine Texas students entered in the national spelling bee, which begins Wednesday in the Capital Hilton.

Huan Nguyen is a student at Hobbs Middle School in San Antonio, and his success has been promoted by backers of immersion in English, instead of bilingual education. He won the regional bee sponsored by the San Antonio Express-News.

Among the other Texans hoping to win the championship is Paige Pipkin, 13, of El Paso Eastwood Junior High, who finished second a year ago. He is sponsored by the El Paso Herald-Post.

Only Pennsylvania, with 12 spellers, has more participants in this year's national bee.

The other Texas entrants are D'Lyn Ford, Slaton Junior High, sponsored by the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal; Andrew Hammel, 12, Houston Memorial Junior High, Houston Chronicle; Ruby Mangus, 14, Odessa Bowie Jr. High, the Odessa American; Eddie Butler, 14, Euless Junior High, Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Also, Edna Iris Maceda, 14, Corpus Christi Incarnate Word Junior High, Corpus Christi Caller Times; Alice Ann Moore, 13, Sherman Dillingham Middle School, Dallas Morning News; and Jason Trobaugh, 12, Clovis, N.M., Zia Elementary School, Amarillo Globe-News.

CBS top network; NBC leads show list

NEW YORK (AP) — "Bob Hope's Birthday Party" on NBC won the week's ratings race, but CBS listed seven of the 10 highest-rated programs to win the networks' competition, figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. show.

CBS' average rating was 15.1, compared to 14.3 for ABC and 13.8 for NBC. The networks say that means in an average prime-time minute during the week, 15.1 percent of the TV-equipped homes in the country were watching CBS.

CBS, No. 1 in the recently completed 1980-81 TV season, now has won the three-way race two weeks running.

The rating for "Bob Hope's Birthday Party" was 21.3. Nielsen says that means of all the homes in the nation with television, 21.3 percent saw at least part of the program.

The first-place finish for Hope's special was no real surprise; the comedian regularly scores ratings points for the network. NBC may have been cheered more by the No. 19 finish in the week ending May 31 for "Hill Street Blues."

The series was introduced last season to critical acclaim but low ratings. NBC has renewed the series for next season, and is making a determined effort to build an audience.

Most programs broadcast during the week were repeats. The few original movies and specials broadcast in the period week were only moderately successful. "Don't Look Back," a made-for-TV film on ABC on the lif of baseball egend Leroy "Satchel" Paige, tied for 24th place, with the "National Cheerleading Championship" on CBS No. 31. An NBC movie, "Almost Summer," finished 44th.

NBC had five of the week's six lowest-rated programs, starting with "Sanford" in 57th place and followed by "NBC Reports," "Robert Klein Special," "B.J. and the Bear" and "Steve Allen Comedy Hour." The first episode in a repeat of ABC's "Roots: The Next Generations" was No. 62.

"Bob Hope's Birthday Party," with a rating of 21.3 representing 17 million homes, NBC; "The Jeffersons," 20.1 or 16.1 million, "Dukes of Hazzard," 19.7 or 15.7 million, and "60 Minutes," 19.3 or 15.4 million, all CBS; "20-20," 18.7 or 14.9 million, and "Love Boat," 18.5 or 14.8 million, both ABC, and "Alice," 18.4 or 14.7 million, "Dallas," 18.2 or 14.5 million, "M-A-S-H," 17.9 or 14.3 million, and "Trapper John, M.D.," 17.6 or 14.1 million, all CBS.

The next 11 programs:

"Women Who Rate a 10," NBC, and "Barney Miller" and "Hart to Hart," both ABC, three-way tie; "Love Boat" and "Taxi," both ABC, tie; "Fantasy Island," ABC; "CHiPs" and "Facts of Life," both NBC, tie; "Hill Street Blues," NBC, and "Magnum, P.I." and "House Calls," both CBS, tie.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Screen siren Rita Hayworth, the popular World War II pin-up girl whose marriages scandalized Hollywood, is suffering from a fast-developing form of senility, according to her lawyer.

Attorney Leonard Monroe, who also is Miss Hayworth's business manager, said in a court petition filed Monday that the 62-year-old actress is suffering from Alzheimer's disease and cannot care for herself. The petition asks that Monroe be named conservator over her medical and personal care as well as her property.

The petition says Miss Hayworth does not wish to appear in court but doesn't oppose Monroe's appointment.

The sultry star was married five times. All the marriages ended in divorce. Among her former husbands were actor and director Orson Welles, singer Dick Haymes and Aly Khan, a Moslem prince.

Miss Hayworth's most famous films included "Gilda," "Only Angels Have Wings," "Separate Tables," "The Lady In Question," "Pal Joey," and "You'll Never Get Rich."

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — A warrant has been issued for the arrest of actor Timothy Bottoms, who portrayed a law student in the film "The Paper Chase," on charges he failed to appear at a court hearing in his divorce case.

Superior Court Judge Charles Stevens issued the bench warrant Tuesday after finding Bottoms in contempt of court for failing to obey a previous order to return a 1973 Mercedes-Benz to his estranged wife, Alicia.

Mrs. Bottoms, 34, told the judge that when she and two sheriff's deputies went to Bottoms' Monterey County ranch recently, she saw the car but couldn't get it because the actor's father, James Bottoms, was armed with a rifle and refused to give it up.

The younger Bottoms, 29, was found in contempt last year for harassing his estranged wife, but the citation was dismissed after he promised to stop bothering her.

The couple were married in 1975 and had a son in 1977. A date for the divorce trial is expected to be set at a July 7 hearing.

ROME (AP) — Although Ann Odre's doctor says she could be released from the hospital this weekend, her daughter says her mother is still "very weak" from injuries suffered in the assassination attempt on Pope John Paul II.

Vatican Radio quoted Mrs. Odre's doctor, Federico Meneghini, as saying she appeared slightly pallid but was slowly regaining her strength. The 58-year-old, Buffalo, N.Y. woman was struck in the chest in the May 13 shooting attack on the pontiff, and she underwent surgery to remove her spleen.

"My mother is very weak," said her daughter, Joanna Kenjarski.

Vatican Radio also said Mrs. Odre has expressed a desire to meet the pope before she leaves for home, as did Rose Hall, the other American woman who suffered an elbow wound in the shooting.

NEW YORK (AP) — Barry Rosen, one of the Americans held hostage in Iran, and his wife, Barbara, have signed a contract with Doubleday to publish a joint account of Rosen's 444 days in captivity in Iran.

Rosen, press attache at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran at the time of the takeover Nov. 4, 1979, will write a first-person account of the assault and his life in captivity, alternating with the story of his wife's life in the meantime.

The book, due out in the spring of 1982, will be written with George Feifer, a Connecticut author.

Rosen, who lives with his wife and two children in New York, is fluent in Farsi and is working toward his doctorate in Iranian studies at Columbia University. He went to Iran during the late 1960s as a member of the Peace Corps and will include details about Iran's history, culture and religion in the book.

Gilley's picnic moved

PASADENA, Texas (AP) — Yielding to protests from local residents and hospital officials, the owner of Gilley's Club agreed Tuesday to hold his Fourth of July picnic at the Pasadena Rodeo Grounds.

New Mayor Johnny Isbell, presiding over his first council meeting, called Sherwood Cryer's decision not to host the country and western affair on the grounds of his club "an open effort to get along with the community."

"I was very pleased that Mr. Cryer was open for discussion on the issue, especially since we both knew that legally, he could have the concert right where he was," Isbell said.

Treasure hunter to begin work on north Padre Island beach

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — A beachfront prospector armed with a state contract and a newly granted county excavation permit says he will start digging in about two weeks for lost Spanish gold he believes is hidden beneath the sands of north Padre Island.

One Nueces County Commissioner, J.P. Lucy, had expressed concern that the treasure hunt could disrupt treasures from another source — weekend crowds at the beach.

But Luby was outvoted 4-1 Tuesday when commissioners agreed to give J.C. Gautreaux of Freeport permission to comb the sands of Padre Balli Park for gold and silver bullion lost when treasure-laden Spanish galleons sank off the Texas coast during runs between the New World and Spain.

The state had already given Gautreaux a salvage contract, but the Dune Protection Act required him to get a digging permit from the Nueces County commissioners.

Luby argued against granting the permit before September, saying if the treasure had remained hidden for 400 years another 90 days wouldn't cause it to spoil.

"We are now just getting the beaches back to normal — after the oil spill and last year's hurricane — and I can't see causing the beach crowds any more inconvenience," said Luby.

Gautreaux's contract with the General Land Office in Austin says he would receive half of any gold or silver bullion uncovered. The state of Texas would retain the option to buy his half of any artifacts found.

The land must be returned to its original condition after the excavation.

Dentists filling in for barbers in the joke department

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Sometime between Thanksgiving and Christmas, or midway through my last root canal, my dentist told me a joke.

"What do you get when you pour scalding water down a rabbit hole?"

"Hot cross bunnies."

About a month later I saw the same joke in Reader's Digest. Then just recently the joke was reprised several times on "The Muppets Go to the Movies." And now you hear it everywhere.

I don't know why it is but dentists seem to have a pipeline to all the latest jokes. Maybe it's a special service they subscribe to like a telephone answering service or that canned music they play to drown out the sound of the drill. It's probably one of the hidden costs that pump up the bill.

Certainly the jokes can't come from their patients. With all that cotton and wax and thumbs they stuff in your mouth, you'd never get to the punch line.

It used to be that you heard all the best jokes first down at the barbershop. When's the last time you heard a good joke from your barber? Since they began razor cuts, hair stylings and reshaping your head, the barbers prefer to talk about politics and nuclear proliferation. They don't even carry the Police Gazette or Playboy anymore. Now the magazine rack offers things like Baron's Weekly, Ecological Quarterly and Interior Decorators Journal.

Comedians, who are notorious kleptomanics in the joke market, used to claim that the prevailing ill wind of humor was westerly. Jokes originated with comics in Hollywood and Las Vegas and worked their way across the country. This, of course, was after the era of the traveling salesman.

When's the last time you heard a good (read bad) traveling salesman joke?

With the rise of television, the slip stream of slapstick was completely reversed. Manhattan became the bof capital of the world, and the wagonloads of witticism went west again, carefully harvested from the seedlings in the seedy basement nightclubs and shamelessly hijacked by the Madison Avenue script writers and late night talk show maestros who soon had to have their own writers.

Mulligan's Stew

Then television rediscovered the good weather and empty studios in California, and Johnny Carson and many of the big shows migrated westward, reversing the yuck flow once more.

The geography of jokes has long baffled experts in linguistics.

Who was the very first man or woman ever to contemplate the passage of a chicken across the road? Where did that shtick about hot cross bunnies originate?

Tracing the source of a joke has proved more difficult than tracing the source of the White Nile.

Jokes are as old as written language. Probably older. The Greeks had their comic writers, although I must say in four years of studying the ancient bof-meisters in the original I never fell in the classroom aisle at any of their togaed witticisms. In classical times, jokes were a valued weapon for orators and philosophers. Aristotle in his "Rhetoric" endorses Gorgias' strategy that in debate you should destroy your opponent's seriousness with jests and his jests with seriousness.

The first joke book in English literature was "A Hundred Merry Tales," published in 1526. Shakespeare certainly had it in his library. In "Much Ado About Nothing" Benedict accuses Beatrice of stealing her wit from it.

When Oscar Wilde cried, "Oh, I wish I'd said that" in admiration of a one liner by James McNeill Whistler, the artist replied, "you will, Oscar, you will." And he did.

Getting back to my dentist, as I did yesterday for a checkup, he told me one about a famous magician who was asked what was the most difficult trick he had to learn in his entire repertoire.

"Without a doubt," the magician replied, "Sawing a woman in half. It took me months. Of course, I had a great deal of support from my family during this trying time."

"Ah then," he was asked, "You came from a large family?"

"Yes. I had eight half sisters."

I am going to Anchorage, Alaska next week, where I shall ask my friends to keep a log on how long it takes that joke to get up there. They might even start a pool, like the one they have each spring on the exact minute when the ice breaks up on the Tanana River near Nenana.

The prognosis is not good. Jokes don't seem to travel well anymore. I told the magician story to a priest friend who used it in one of his sermons. For the punchline, he said the magician had four step brothers and sisters.

Hungary quietly making economic changes

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — The communist government here is quietly making changes in its traditional economic system, despite major Soviet-bloc worries over the unpredictable changes being made in Poland.

Budapest is in the midst of a hotel-building effort intended to bring in still more Western currency through a strongly promoted tourist industry.

The government is overseeing a new program that is attempting to get private operators to take over shops and restaurants operated by the state.

At the same time, the government appears to be maintaining its usual level of authoritarian social controls rather than cracking down to new and tighter levels, according to Western diplomats who asked anonymity because of the sensitivity of their posts.

Officials concede that Hungary, a country of 11 million people, had 65 sedition trials last year and a writers' group in Budapest was disbanded in March after failing in its efforts to achieve more freedom from censorship.

In 1979, Hungary reported 136 sedition cases. The disbanded Jozsef Attila Writers Circle included officially sanctioned young writers, not dissident writers outside the Hungarian establishment.

The private-shop program was launched in January amid some of the bitterest East-bloc debate over Poland.

In one move which does appear related to Poland, Hungary announced plans to introduce a 5-day, 42-hour work week in some factories next January, although it had not been expected until 1983.

Hungary's program of economic reform was launched in 1968 and was set back that same year by the political unrest — which became known as the "Prague Spring" — and the eventual Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia to stop it.

In the years since then, the country has quietly adjusted parts of its economy to world market prices, improved an already productive farm sector and almost made the Hungarian currency, the forint, the first convertible currency in the Soviet bloc.

Hungarian leaders are widely considered to have done the Soviet bloc's best job of passing on to consumers the effects of rising world prices — and avoiding skyrocketing price subsidies.

In a country where the average industrial wage is the equivalent of about $125 a month, beef in downtown Budapest markets costs about $7.25 a pound, cauliflower about $3.30 a pound, and bacon nearly $4 a pound.

In contrast to Poland, saddled with Western debts of up to $27 billion, Hungary's gross debt is estimated by Western officials at $7.5 billion to $8 billion.

Far from being the best paid workers in Eastern Europe, Hungarians have been officially and repeatedly told they will have to work harder just to maintain their current living standards.

New targets for the economic reform program include profit-sharing plans, ways to allow state enterprises to cooperate on projects, and sending more salesmen abroad to push Hungarian products.

Living standards, the country's economic planners say, may change in way not reflected in official statistics.

"It is not enough to say someone has 80 kilograms (176 pounds) of meat a year," says Jozsef Bognar, head of the Hungarian Academy of Science's Institute of World Economics. "How much meat? What kind? And how quickly can you get it?"

"If we can accelerate technical developments," he said in an interview with The Associated Press, "then the time lag between our standards and those of the West decreases.

"If Hungarian consumers can have it within a year," he said of products developed in the West, "then Hungarian consumers will have the feeling there is progress.

No cause for concern of peanut butter 'n jelly

Dear Dr. Solomon: Peanut butter and jelly sandwiches have been a staple at our house for many years, and I don't only mean for the children. My husband also likes to snack on them, and I prefer seeing my family eating something nutritious than indulging in pastries or potato chips.

Now one of my neighbors tells me that peanut butter is subject to a form of contamination that can cause cancer, and that she no longer serves it. If I thought she were some kind of a kook, I wouldn't pay any attention to her; but she's always impressed me as being a very down-to-earth person. Are there any grounds for her concern about peanut butter? — Mrs. V.O.

Dear Mrs. O.: I believe your neighbor is jumping to an unwarranted conclusion based on insufficient knowledge. The fact is that no plant is invulnerable to disease or contamination, and peanuts are no exception.

One group of toxins (or poisons) that are carcinogenic is aflatoxins, and it is true that these often occur in grains and food products that have not been stored properly. It is also true that peanuts are particularly susceptible to aflatoxin contamination but, according to Dr. George A. Bean, a plant pathologist at the University of Maryland, this is not much of a problem in the United States.

Dr. Bean points out that we have excellent storage facilities in this country, and that peanuts are continually monitored and checked to determine whether they are contaminated with aflatoxins. Those found to be contaminated while stored or when brought in for processing are not used for food. In the developing countries of the world, however, where suitable storage facilities often are lacking, aflatoxins are found with some frequency. The continuous ingestion of aflatoxin-contaminated compounds appears to be associated with the development of liver cancer, but the experience in these other countries is not relevant to the United States.

If your family's biggest vice is indulging in peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, there's really no cause for concern. Whether your taste tends towards white or rye, toasted or plain, just lean back and enjoy, enjoy.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been breast-feeding my daughter since she was born eight months ago. Is there any reason I should not switch to cow's milk at this time? — Nancy

Dear Nancy: Cow's milk should not be included in an infant's diet before the first birthday. While it is appropriate for older children, cow's milk has a much higher level of protein than babies need, and it may be too much for an infant's system to handle. In addition, the protein and fat in cow's milk are more difficult for a baby to digest than those in human milk. Finally, cow's milk contains more salt than is recommended for young infants, and is a poor source of vitamins C and E, copper and iron.

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

By KENNETH H. WOLF, MSSW, SP

Question: What is available in this area to help someone with a very serious drinking problem?

Answer: The Mental Health and Mental Retardation Center (MHMR) provides treatment for alcoholism. For the person who is acutely intoxicated, treatment will usually begin with a five- to seven-day stay in the Center's detoxification unit, which is Johnson Center. During this stay the person is observed 24 hours per day and given supportive care during the period of withdrawal from alcohol. A close watch is kept for any physical problems which may arise during the withdrawal period. If physical problems occur, the person is provided more specialized medical help.

The detoxification center is a 14-bed facility, with 12 beds for males and two for females. The client stays in the unit 24 hours per day during detoxification.

The second step in treatment is to design a counseling and rehabilitation program for the person. Counseling cannot begin, however, until the person has completed the detoxification stage. The counseling and rehabilitation program will usually involve the individual, his family and other agencies offering job placement services or vocational training.

Counseling is oriented toward the philosophy of Alcoholics Anonymous (AA). In fact, recovering alcoholics are strongly urged to incorporate an active AA involvement in their future lives. The outpatient alcoholism counselors of the MHMR Center provide the individual, family and group counseling to recovering alcoholics. The counselors also will attempt to maintain regular contact with those who drop out of treatment prematurely and with those who have achieved a degree of success in treatment.

Occasionally, when the alcoholic has physical problems, treatment is begun by a period of care in the hospital in order to treat the medical problems as well as closely monitor the detoxification process. This may be done in local hospitals or perhaps by referral to the alcoholism unit of the Big Spring State Hospital. On other occasions, when a longer period of inpatient care (30-45 days) is required to begin the treatment process, the person will be admitted to Big Spring State Hospital. All admissions to the state hospital after first screened and certified as being in need of such care by the local MHMR Center.

The stage of detoxification is only a beginning in the treatment of alcoholism. The withdrawal from alcohol begins after the person is withdrawn from the drug. The alcoholic needs to want to remain sober; he needs to learn better ways of coping with stress and problems; and he needs to realize his own inability to control his drinking once he has started.

The difficulty in treating alcoholism is testified to by the many people who constantly "fall off the wagon" and return to alcohol as a means of coping with problems. In spite of the difficulty, an early beginning to treatment is always preferable to ignoring the problem in the hope that it will go away.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, June 4, 1981

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actor Dennis Weaver shares this birthday with you, a birthday which marks the start of "America the Beautiful" week. It is very important that you be realistic about both your professional and personal goals this year. Extra money is likely to come your way, but you will have to work hard to hang on to it. Business associates will have provocative ideas, but it may be difficult to find financial backing for partnerships. Guard against pushing yourself too hard physically. Travel is an excellent outlet for your restless energy. A love relationship takes on new meaning. Married life is usually quite happy.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be on the lookout for danger signals and proceed with caution. Patience and diligence are necessary to improve your financial position. Avoid gambling.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You should be in a lighthearted and optimistic mood today. Give your artistic talents a chance. Romance may lie ahead. Someone who is single could have a problem that requires expert advice.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do what you can to lift the spirits of a loved one who has become something of a recluse lately. Late evening will be fine for romance. Let mate know where you really stand.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your work environment is conducive to dealing with figures today. Pool ideas with associates. Those who are retired should keep active. Community projects, civic affairs hold special appeal.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Hearing from an old friend or former associate will add spice to your day. Finances, travel and your social life enjoy favorable influences. Ask for a special favor!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your career is destined to undergo an important change. A promotion or relocation is a strong possibility —domestic upheaval could be involved. Seek a quiet discussion with mate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Work is more demanding than in the recent past, but you will reap rich rewards. Stay out of the limelight if negotiating important contracts. Limit your purchases to necessities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Temper criticism with praise, whenever possible. Financial affairs look better, thanks to friend's intervention, aid. Be sure to return favors! Spend the evening with good friends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Compromise is helpful when dealing with difficult people. Postpone travel, attend to routine tasks. Fulfill your family obligations cheerfully. Avoid becoming involved in friend's personal affairs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A business associate may not agree with your methods. Try to reach a compromise. Meet all deadlines to protect your reputation for dependability. Social events are apt to be rewarding now.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your contacts in faraway places can be useful now. Write letters. A romantic indiscretion could hurt your standing with conservative individuals. Protect your reputation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Family members' cooperation could be the key to success now. Meetings with influential people should go well. Spend more time with those who mean the most to you.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
Pass	Pass	Pass	1 ◇
Pass	1 NT	Pass	3 NT
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♠.

Waste not, want not—but don't hold onto high cards unnecessarily. Consider this hand from the 1981 Israel Bridge Festival, reported by Britain's Martin Hoffman.

North's raise to three no trump was well reasoned, though somewhat aggressive with only 17 HCP. Since South could not bid a major suit over the one diamond opening, he surely held some length and strength in clubs.

At most tables the jack of clubs was led and allowed to win the first trick. When West continued with the ten of clubs, declarer sluffed a diamond from the table, and won the king as East again played low. Next came four rounds of spades. East could afford to pitch a diamond on the third spade, but he was in trouble on the last round of the suit.

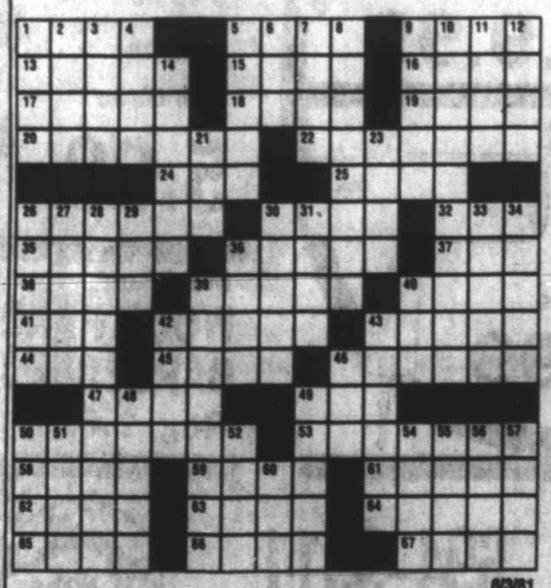

If East discarded a heart, declarer would win four heart tricks with the help of a finesse. But a club discard was no better. Declarer cashed the king of hearts, finessed the jack and took the ace. Now East was thrown on lead with the last heart. He could cash his remaining high club, but he was then forced to concede a trick to dummy's king of diamonds. That was the ninth trick for declarer.

When Israeli internationalist, Yeshayahu Levit, held the East cards, three no trump went down. On the second round of clubs Levit played the queen. Here, too, declarer won the king and reeled off four rounds of spades, but Levit had no discarding problems. He sluffed a low diamond and the ace of clubs! Now when he was thrown in with a heart he could exit with his low club to allow his partner to score two club tricks. The defenders still had a diamond trick to come for a one-trick set.

Tosco Corp. filing suit against Good

By JEFF BAILEY
(c) 1981, The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — In a letter to Colorado Gov. Richard Lamm, Tosco Corp. Tuesday requested a broad range of state documents as part of the company's widening battle with Kenneth M. Good, a Denver-based

ENERGY
OIL & GAS

developer who has been buying Tosco stock.

"We just got it and our attorney is just beginning to evaluate it," Sue O'Brien, press secretary to Lamm, said of the seven-page letter. O'Brien said it itemizes 30 categories of papers and asks for them "to be available on June 4th at 10:00 a.m."

Meanwhile, Tosco filed affidavits in U.S. District Court here Tuesday, which claim that Good had conversations with Patricia Annison, a Tosco employee, and her husband Michael in which the developer allegedly said he planned to take over Tosco and remove its management.

In Good's SEC filing, made after the alleged conversation took place, he had said he had not yet determined whether he would try to take over the company or replace its management. Good was unavailable for comment on the affidavits.

Tosco filed suit against Good and a group of his affiliates in federal court here last week accusing them of securities law violations and seeking an injunction against their further trading in Tosco shares. Good's group had revealed in a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission that they had purchased 5.8 percent of Tosco's outstanding common shares. The filing also said the group may seek control of Tosco through more stock purchases.

Tosco's law suit alleged that Good received confidential information about the company through Paula Herzmark, director of the Colorado Department of Local Affairs. Both denied the allegations. Good and Herzmark have been dating since last November.

Among the documents requested y Tosco through its Denver law firm, Holmes & Starr, weo9 all communications — including press releases, notes, verbal statements and drafts — from O'Brien's office to the press since March 1, 1981.

Also requested were all memos and documents to and from Herzmark, Lamm and Monte Pascoe, Colorado director of natural resources, concerning Tosco, Good or any affiliated entity or person, and several other subjects relating to Tosco's oil shale interests in the state.

Mexico cuts price, Times says

NEW YORK (AP) — Mexico has reduced its oil prices by $4 a barrel in response to reduced demand and high stores, the New York Times reported today.

The decision by Mexico, which is not a member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, came a week after the oil cartel agreed to freeze prices.

The Times said the price cutback was reported by major oil companies, which were not identified. Analysts said the price reduction was sparked by a weakening worldwide demand for oil and an oversupply estimated at 2 million to 3 million barrels daily.

"It's the first signal of what's ahead among the high-priced producers," said Marshall Thomas, markets editor of Petroleum Intelligence Weekly, a trade publication.

Analysts said the oil industry is watching several other oil-producing nations for price breaks caused by the pressure of the OPEC move. Mexico's pricing closely follows that of OPEC.

Solar energy boom in soggy Oregon

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — Soggy Oregon is hardly a place where Ole Sol could be expected to warm houses, heat water and fry potatoes.

"This is more like the rainbelt," says Dan Merkle, owner of the Sunworks company in Portland and founder of the Oregon Solar Energy Industries Association.

Yet, solar energy in recent years has become a multi-million dollar industry here in the Pacific Northwest, where it rains 200 inches a year in some places.

There are solar housing projects in Portland, a solar-heated goat milking barn in Bend, and on the coast, where rainfall is the heaviest, motels are using the sun's rays to heat their tapwater.

The solar boom has been encouraged by federal and state tax credits, the popularity of environmentally safe energy and the push to replace dwindling gas and oil supplies with renewable energy sources.

Also, the Legislature and several cities are working on "right to light" proposals. Officials want to assure Oregonians that once they invest in solar energy their access to the sun will be protected from new buildings and tall trees.

"The thing that is unique about Oregon is it is not a place where the solar industry grew up, like Florida, New Mexico and California," says Rich Gallagher of the Oregon Department of Energy. "You'd expect them to be in the forefront."

But Gallagher said solar energy works here because the state has a mild climate and about 70 percent of the sun's infrared rays penetrate even on cloudy days.

Additionally, Oregon offers tax incentives to those who take advantage of solar energy. Residents who install a solar system that supplies at least 10 percent of a home's energy requirement are eligible for a state income-tax credit of up to $1,000.

The Department of Energy has received about 3,500 applications for the credit since the program started in 1979. Applications now arrive at the rate of 100 a week, Gallagher says.

The state has a similar program for business and commercial buildings, which has attracted about 130 applicants so far.

State energy officials say commercial solar projects include nursing homes, motel chains and taverns with solar water systems.

A potato processing company in eastern Oregon is switching to solar power to produce 2,000 pounds of steam per hour to heat the cooking oil used to fry more than 4 million pounds of french fries per day.

Merkle started his business in 1979. Working alone, he did about $230 worth of business the first month, building solar water heaters and systems for greenhouses.

He now employs nine people and does about $250,000 in business a year. He says the state solar industries association has about 150 members and is the second largest in the nation, next to California.

"Oregonians are very receptive to solar because they are aware of the energy and environmental implications," says Merkle, a chemical engineer. "Solar power can reduce our dependence on foreign oil."

Merkle says owners of solar equipment need to be assured that sunlight will fall on that equipment.

"We've gone from 30 solar houses in 1974 to 3,000 in 1980 and people don't know if they have solar protection," says Republican state Sen. George Wingard, a Eugene builder. "I believe that people who have built solar homes ought to be protected from the problems of somebody growing trees in their way in the future."

The state Senate this month passed a bill that states that all applications for building permits must certify that passive solar energy was considered as a source of heating.

The small towns of Woodburn in the Willamette Valley and Ashland in southern Oregon already have adopted "right to light" ordinances. City planners say the measures don't mean someone can be ordered to cut down their trees or knock down a building to give their neighbors access to sunlight. However, existing trees and buildings must be kept at the present height if growth or additions would block the sun.

"Most people who are installing systems are careful about what is on the south-facing lot," says Margie Harris who helped draft a solar access proposal recently presented to Portland officials. "The city is preoccupied with encouraging people to install solar systems. It also needs to concentrate on maintaining solar rights."

HL&P officials failed to investigate firing

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Lighting & Power officials have acknowledged they did not check a contractor's statement that a nuclear project quality control inspector was fired during an investigation of charges that he took a bribe.

But HL&P Executive Vice President George Oprea Jr. told a Nuclear Regulatory Commission hearing Tuesday that he agreed with chief contractor Brown & Root's decision to fire Dan Swayze in 1978.

Swayze later appeared on national television to charge that the project's reactor walls were riddled with flaws because of poor concrete pours. He also said he was fired to intimidate other inspectors.

A three-member NRC board is hearing claims from opponents of the $2.7 billion South Texas Nuclear Project that HL&P is not competent to operate a nuclear power plant. The utility is building the plant along with three partners.

Oprea and Richard A. Frazar, project quality assurance manager for the utility, said they were told Swayze was fired because he refused to sign a statement during a Brown & Root investigation.

They said they were told the company was checking a construction superintendent's charge that Swayze had solicited a bribe.

Swayze said he was fired because he had done his job too well. He said he was being made an example for other quality control inspectors.

He said he and other inspectors were threatened and, in some cases, assualted by employees who felt the inspectors were requiring unnecessary work.

Frazar and Ed. A. Turner, then HL&P vice president in charge of the project's construction, acknowledged they did not try to contact Swayze about his firing.

The NRC board has agreed to subpeona Swayze later in the hearing. An NRC study published shortly after Swayze's firing said that the bribe offer could neither be proved nor disporved.

Drilling will be monitored

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interior Secretary James Watt said Tuesday a biological task force will monitor oil and gas exploration on Georges Bank to protect the rich fisheries after drilling starts this year.

Watt did not say how long the monitoring will continue or how much will be spent on the program.

"We are dedicated to obtaining quality scientific information and having it interpreted by knowledgable scientists to identify possible impacts of drilling in the Georges Bank area," Watt said.

The monitoring program will involve collecting sea bottm organims and sediments for metal and hydrocarbon analysis to determine if discharged materials are accumulating.

A statement released by Watt's office said "high levels of accumulation might indicate the need for more stingent controls on operators than were originally established."

The plan for monitoring the exploration and development of oil and gas resources off the New England coast was prepared by the biological task force which is independent of the Interior Department.

The task force includes representatives of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, Environmental Protection Agency, Fish and Wildlife Service, Bureau of Land Management and U.S. Geological Survey.
