City to begin marking hike and bike trails

By Joseph Basco
jbasco@mrt.com

Midlanders who have moved into the city recently may not be aware of the hike and bike trails in town, so the city is working to raise awareness by installing signs around and at each trail.

The 33 yellow and diamond-shape signs tell the hiker or biker the approximate distance of the trail. These will be placed alongside the roads next to the trails. Another sign, with a map of the trail and a QR (quick response) code that links to the city's Parks and Recreation webpage, will be placed within the trail.

Laurie Williams, the city's Parks and Recreation manager, said signs will be installed to show people that these amenities do exist in Midland, with the hope that residents will take advantage of them. The QR code is another feature Williams said is "awesome" because it allows communication between the residents and the Parks and Recreation department.

There will be three different QR codes that lead to different sites. One will lead to the list of parks, another will link to recreation, and the last will go to hike and bike information.

Williams said demand for hike and bike trails is up. At various times of the day, cyclists can be seen on State Highway 191, where speed limits reach 75 miles per hour.

Williams said people have been calling about when a hike and bike trail will be installed at parks that currently lack them, or calling and not even knowing that a trail already exists near their home.

"People want to get out and walk," Williams said. "We have great weather here and great opportunities to do that so people want to see that more. On the other hand, we have a lot of bicyclists that want to be able to have a safe place to ride their bikes or school-age kids that want to ride their bikes but not necessarily on the streets."

Other Parks and Recreation news

At the June 25 meeting, the City Council authorized request for qualifications for the development of the Hike and Bike master plan.

An engineering firm, if awarded the bid, will study current hike and bike facilities and look at potential new sites to create the master plan. This plan will also look at ways to connect the hike and bike trails throughout the city together.

The study is expected to be complete by Spring 2014.

In urban revival, beer creates business

By Tali Arbel
Associated Press

NEW YORK — To see how a small business can transform a neighborhood, just follow the barrels.

About 30 years ago, beer lovers wanting to create their own drinks started taking over abandoned old buildings in rundown city districts, refitted them with tanks, kettles and casks, and started churning out beer. The byproduct was a boom in craft beer drinkers: Barrels shipped have more than doubled in the past decade, according to trade publication Beer Marketer's Insights. Craft beer now makes up nearly 7 percent of the slow-growing U.S. beer market.

But beer drinkers weren't the only beneficiaries. The arrival of a craft brewery was also often one of the first signs that a neighborhood was changing. From New England to the West Coast, new businesses bubbled up around breweries, drawing young people and creating a vibrant community where families could plant roots and small businesses could thrive.

It happened in Cleveland. Once an industrial powerhouse, the Rust Belt city has been losing residents since the 1950s. Manufacturing jobs disappeared. The city nearly went bankrupt in 1978.

Marred by abandoned buildings and boarded-up stores after several hard decades, the downtown Ohio City neighborhood, just west of the Cuyahoga River, which divides Cleveland, was "perceived as dangerous and blighted" into the 1980s, says Eric Wobser. He works for Ohio City Inc., a nonprofit that promotes residential and commercial development while trying to preserve the neighborhood's older buildings.

Coastal areas in Texas also affected by drought

By Eric Berger
Houston Chronicle

When Texans conjure up mental images of drought, what often springs to mind are massive dust storms sweeping through the Panhandle, widespread burn bans and wilting brown lawns.

The state's coastline typically does not.

But perhaps it should, according to scientists who study the Texas coast.

A growing body of research into the effects of the state's ongoing drought, which began in late 2010 and peaked in 2011, reveal a coast deeply affected by the prolonged dry spell.

"Coastal areas don't get much attention during a drought," said Anna Armitage, a marine biologist at Texas A&M University at Galveston. "But we have found a significant effect on the coastal ecosystem."

Since 2009, Armitage has been studying an estuary — an area where the current from rivers and streams mixes with seawater — in the Sabine Neches area along the upper Texas coast.

As the drought peaked and freshwater flows slowed to a trickle, the salinity of the estuary spiked from 3 to 5 parts per thousand to around 30 parts per thousand, making it nearly as salty as water in the Gulf of Mexico.

This wiped out much of the plant and marine life living in these brackish waters, Armitage said.

"The reason I'm so interested in all of these tiny plants, tiny fish and shrimp is that they provide food for other more important fishery species," she said. "This is the base of the Galveston Bay food web, and I'm worried about the stability of the food web."

'Reset' for ecosystem

The drought may have a silver lining, however.

Before the drought, a non-native plant species that people grow for aquariums, Eurasian watermilfoil, had become dominant in the estuary. But this plant doesn't tolerate high salinity, and what has grown back since the peak of the drought in 2011 is native sea grasses.

Different marine life has colonized the estuaries, too, Armitage said.

"After the big die-off event, it's almost like the ecosystem was reset," she said. "We're only beginning to understand the effects of the drought."

In larger coastal bodies of water, such as Galveston Bay, the drought is also taking a toll.

Texas A&M marine biologist Sammy Ray, who since 1954 has studied oyster populations in the bay, said the oysters need the right mix of salt and fresh water to thrive.

Although oysters could do well enough in salty water, parasites and diseases thrive as salinity increases, Ray said, leaving oysters vulnerable to a deadly "dermo" parasite and toxic red tide algae.

"When we have a buildup of disease like this we really need a good storm to clear the system out," he said.

The good news, Ray said, is that with

Fort Worth neighborhood remembers dog

Associated Press

FORT WORTH — A memorial service has been held for Beau Blue, a dog with no owner who became a fixture in a Fort Worth neighborhood.

Residents, police officers and the veterinarian who cared for Beau Blue gathered Wednesday at an outdoor chapel to remember the pointer-mix who died June 26 of heart and kidney failure, The Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported. No one knows when he was born.

Blue was a fixture in the neighborhood of vacant lots, renovated buildings and small businesses off South Main Street.

"This whole little area was his kingdom," said Marcus Newton, who moved into the neighborhood about a year ago. "He ruled the place."

Newton quickly struck up a friendship with Blue, who would stay in his garage on cold nights and come by most days. But Blue, who got that part of his name for his bond with the police officers who patrolled the area, wasn't tied to one resident.

Fort Worth police officer G.G. Hempstead, who helped care for the dog, quickly learned that Blue knew the whole neighborhood.

"This dog brought joy to everybody," Hempstead said. "He guarded everybody. He would walk you down the street. When I first met him, I thought he needed me; then later I realized I needed him."

After difficult calls, Hempstead would visit Blue to relieve the stress.

Blue also reached out to the neighborhood's homeless population.

"When they're in need — if they need some love, if they need company — he hangs out with them," Hempstead said.

Jim Hardin, who owns Jane's Secret Place Antiques and Home Decor Store with his wife, Jane, said when he would show up late at night to work at the store or in the warehouse, Blue would always appear.

Crowley veterinarian Dehna Shaffer cared for Blue over the last 11 days of his life.

"A lot of times we go, 'He's just a dog,'" Shaffer said. "But this 'Just a dog' carried the heart of a community on his brave little shoulders. He was really special to all of y'all."

3 dead, 1 hurt in West Texas trailer fire

Three people are dead after a fire consumed a trailer home in West Texas.

A fire was reported after 6 a.m. Friday in Odessa. Six people were inside the trailer when it caught on fire. One person was hospitalized, and two people escaped unhurt.

Sgt. Gary Duesler, of the Ector County Sheriff's Office, said authorities don't know yet how the fire started, but are investigating.

The names and ages of the dead were not immediately released.

Officer shoots dog in pet store

Austin police say an off-duty officer had no choice but to shoot a pit bull to death that was attacking a smaller dog at a pet store.

Police said off-duty officer Leslie Lyons was working security at a Petco store Wednesday when a 90-pound pit bull ran through the store dragging its leash after escaping its owner and attacked a Maltese, which was still on its leash.

Assistant Chief Steve Deaton told the Austin American-Statesman that the pit bull picked up the Maltese in its mouth and began to maul it.

He said Lyons cleared the area and fired one shot at the pit bull, which dropped the Maltese before going after it again. He said Lyons then fired a second shot that killed the pit bull.

Suspect shot when confronted by burglary victims

Police say a 24-year-old man has been hospitalized in serious condition after being confronted by people whose vehicles he's suspected of burglarizing.

Authorities said Cristian Lince and another man burglarized several vehicles in a Houston neighborhood early Wednesday morning. They said a resident was awakened and later followed the two. The resident's neighbors were notified and approached the suspects when they stopped at a gas station.

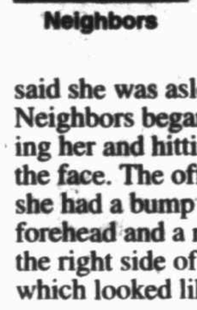
Grand jury no-bills former DPS official

A Travis County grand jury has found no basis to charge a former Texas Department of Public Safety official who was under investigation for her role running the agency that handles federal Homeland Security grants to the state.

Janice Bruno, former head of the State Administrative Agency, was dismissed by the DPS director in 2011 after the State Auditor's Office received a tip alleging "criminal misconduct" in connection with a contract awarded to an Austin consulting firm.

MPD: Man arrested for assault at motel

From staff reports



Neighbors

A Midland man was arrested early Thursday for assaulting a female household member, according to court documents.

Tevin Darrell Neighbors, 22, is being held on a $50,000 bond for a third-degree felony charge of assault on a family or household member. The charge was increased to a felony charge because Neighbors has previous criminal convictions.

A Midland police officer responded to the disturbance at about 1:35 a.m. in the 3700 block of West Wall Street at Metro Inn. The alleged victim said she was asleep when Neighbors began choking her and hitting her in the face. The officer said she had a bump on her forehead and a red mark on the right side of her neck, which looked like a hickey, but based on her mark, it was unclear if Neighbors choked her.

Neighbors told the officer that he was getting out of the shower when he saw the alleged victim loading his clothes into her car. He followed her holding a wallet and knife, which he said she slapped out of his hands.

He then pushed her hard to the ground, which caused the head injury, according to the arrest report.

If convicted, Neighbors could face up to 10 years in prison.

NEW MEXICO

Former Gov. David Cargo dies at age 84

ALBUQUERQUE — David F. Cargo, a maverick Republican who became the youngest governor of New Mexico and served two terms in the turbulent 1960s, died Friday at the age of 84.

Cargo had been in an Albuquerque nursing home for about two years following a stroke, but he had remained active. He suddenly fell ill following a day of Fourth of July activities and died after being taken to an Albuquerque hospital, his son Patrick Cargo of Dallas told The Associated Press.

Cargo's son remembered his father's bigger-than-life personality, his humor and love for helping people.

"He was really one of a kind," the younger Cargo said. "We actually saw him last week. He was doing great, he had good energy and he looked really good. We were very thankful that we got to spend time with him."

Known as "Lonesome Dave," Cargo championed the film industry as economic development and established the first state film commission. He also was an early advocate of a policy for apportioning legislative seats that has altered the political landscape in New Mexico over several decades.

Cargo earned his nickname during his first bid for governor in 1966 when he had little support from the GOP and traveled the state alone in a 1959 Chevrolet to campaign in rural areas and small towns typically bypassed by his better-funded Democratic opponent, a longtime state Senate leader.

RHODE ISLAND

Yachtsman, sailmaker Ted Hood dies at 86

PROVIDENCE — Ted Hood, a yachtsman, yacht designer and builder, and sailmaker from Rhode Island who captained the winner of the 1974 America's Cup, has died at the age of 86.

Hood died June 28 at a nursing home in Middletown, near his home in Portsmouth, his son Richard Hood said. He had had pneumonia and heart troubles.

Considered an innovator in the industry, the elder Hood was a member of both the America's Cup Hall of Fame and the National Sailing Hall of Fame, which called him the dominant force in sailing for nearly 20 years.

"When I was young, I thought if I can be a sailmaker, make $12,000 a year, sail and work on boats, I'll be happy," Hood is quoted as saying in his biography on the National Sailing Hall of Fame's website.

Frederwick Emmart Hood was born in Beverly, Mass., and grew up in Danvers and Marblehead. He inherited his love of sailing from his father and built his first boat at the age of 7, Richard Hood said.

He served in the Navy during World War II. Early in his career, he worked repairing sails in Marblehead but found shortcomings in the strength and durability of the cloth. So he set out with his father to improve it.

"He started repairing other people's sails and realized he could do it better," Richard Hood said.

In 1955, the elder Hood founded Hood Sailmakers, which was for a time the world's largest sailmaker. Its sails were used on all the winning America's Cup yachts from 1958 to 1977, including the Courageous, which Hood skippered to victory in 1974. He also founded Little Harbor Yachts.

In the mid-1980s, Hood sold his sailmaking business to concentrate on boatbuilding and design. One of his best known boats, according to the National Sailing Hall of Fame, was the 60-foot American Promise, which the late Dodge Morgan used on his historic solo 150-day, 27,000-mile circumnavigation in 1985 and 1986. About 6,000 of his boats are still sailing.

Patrons sample a variety of beers at the Beer Hall at the Harpoon Brewery in the Seaport District of Boston on Monday. The neighborhood around the brewery is transforming from a waterfront industrial area to one that hosts upscale restaurants, luxury hotels and an art museum.

BEER

a brewery and a brewpub from structures that once housed a feed store, a saloon and a livery stable.

"We resurrected all of them," says Pat Conway, who founded Great Lakes with his brother, Daniel. "We've beautified the neighborhood, provided a stunning restoration."

Other breweries and businesses — a pasta maker, a bike shop, a tortilla factory, as well as restaurants and bars — followed. Newcomers are flocking to the neighborhood, even though Cleveland's overall population is still declining. The city repaved the quiet street next to the brewery, Market Ave., with cobblestones, and poured millions into renovating the West Side Market, whose origins date back to the 19th century. Today, more than 100 vendors sell produce, meat, cheese and other foods there.

What's going on in Cleveland is happening across the country. Trendy small businesses like breweries and younger residents have been returning to downtown neighborhoods in many cities across the U.S. The biggest cities are growing faster than the suburbs around them, according to Census data.

Another benefit of the brewery boom: Manufacturers like brewers typically pay workers more than service businesses like restaurants or shops do. That's good for local economies.

But for some, the bubbles are bursting. In Brooklyn, N.Y., breweries are feeling the heat from rising real estate costs.

When Brooklyn Brewery opened in the Williamsburg section of the borough in 1996, its neighbors were mostly deserted warehouses and factories. Today, Brooklyn Brewery is surrounded by modern apartment buildings, trendy bars, shops and restaurants. There's still some graffiti, but that hasn't deterred the influx of new residents willing to spend a lot of money to live there. In the past decade, home values in the Brewery's neighborhood have more than doubled — up 145 percent, according to real estate appraiser Miller Samuel.

Rising prices might force Brooklyn Brewery to exit the trendy scene it jump-started. It has two buildings in Williamsburg, the brewery and a building across the street where it stores and ages its beer. Leases are up in 2025, and Brooklyn Brewery's co-founder and president, Steve Hindy, is already worried that the company will get kicked out of its warehouse. Once an iron foundry, the building, built in 1896, has been bought by developers who Hindy says won't renew the lease. He suspects that they want to convert the space into apartments.

The landlord, Solomon Jacobs, says he doesn't yet know what's going to happen with the lease.

But Hindy is already scouting other, cheaper neighborhoods in Brooklyn.

"We sowed the seeds of our own demise here," Hindy says.

Gentrification is pressuring at least one other nearby brewer. Kelly Taylor, who owns Kelso, is looking for new space in Brooklyn or the Bronx because he thinks his landlord won't renew the lease in 2017. In Kelso's neighborhood, the Clinton Hill section of Brooklyn, home prices have almost doubled over the past 10 years, according to Miller Samuel data.

"He'll tear down and build something more lucrative," Taylor says speculatively of his landlord.

However, the building's manager, Fred Sanders, says the lease was just renewed last year for five more years, and he hasn't had any conversations with Kelso about the future.

Even if the brewery owners don't have confirmation that they'll be forced to move, history shows they have reason to be concerned. Winifred Curran, a geography professor at DePaul University in Chicago, studies how gentrification changes cities. She wrote her graduate-school dissertation on how gentrification in Brooklyn's Williamsburg neighborhood affected small manufacturers. Small businesses struggled to stay put while developers converted factories and warehouses into lucrative lofts and swarms of wealthy new residents drove up prices, she says. She warns that the appeal of revitalized neighborhoods can decimate small businesses, both old and new.

"You can try to use the establishment of manufacturing businesses to be the wedge that allows gentrification to happen, but then you need to protect those businesses," Curran says. Otherwise "the market creates this demand for industrial space and then kills the goose that laid the golden egg."

Outside of New York, costs are lower, and many brewery owners in other cities say they haven't felt similar pressures from developers. But New York flashes a warning sign for what can happen when neighborhoods become popular.

One brewery, in Boston, is relatively protected. Harpoon Brewery opened on the South Boston waterfront in 1986, when it was surrounded by auto body shops and little else. Now the brewery draws more than 85,000 people a year from tours and tastings. These days, the city is focused on redeveloping the area. New apartment and office buildings, restaurants and a convention center sit nearby. Harpoon recently negotiated a 50-year lease with the city. The rent will rise over time, but generally, long leases provide protection from spikes that can happen when an area becomes so popular that property values skyrocket.

On the country's other coast, the tech boom has made one brewpub's growth plans more complicated. The 21st Amendment brewery, in San Francisco, is two blocks from the Giants' baseball stadium, which opened in 2000 and, along with the bustling technology sector, transformed the city's SoMa neighborhood from abandoned warehouses to hot spot. Now the company wants to build an 80,000-square-foot brewery — but that's not possible in SoMa.

"The manufacturing element of the business has been priced out," says 21st Amendment's founder, Nico Freccia. The company has opened offices in the East Bay, and he's scouting space there for the brewery, hoping to "help anchor the revitalization" of an Oakland neighborhood.

Similar dreams are fueling a new beer company in New York. Bronx Brewery is setting up shop in the Mott Haven section, next to a lumberyard, a manufacturer and the plant that prints the New York Post.

"We really want to be in the Bronx, be a part of a south Bronx community that's growing like crazy," says Chris Gallant, co-founder of the brewery, which will have a space for visitors. "We hope to get as many people there as possible — it'll definitely serve as marketing," he says.

About 29 percent of Bronx residents live in poverty, compared with 15 percent for all of New York state, according to Census data.

"I think that entire area is going to increase in value," Gallant says. "That's great for the south Bronx. But it could put us in a tough spot 10 years from now."

Places transformed by breweries

In once rundown urban districts across the country, craft breweries have helped to transform the neighborhoods around them.

Small business owners tackled the hard work of transforming industrial buildings, many of which had sat empty as demographic changes pulled manufacturers and residents to the suburbs.

Small-time, independent brewers have been one of the beer market's growth drivers. The number of breweries in the U.S. catapulted from 92 in 1980 to 2,514 as of May 2013, according to craft beer trade group Brewers Association. Barrels shipped have more than doubled in the past decade, and craft beer now makes up nearly 7 percent of a U.S. beer market that is growing slowly overall, according to trade publication Beer Marketer's Insights.

As the breweries churned out beer, they drew visitors and eventually new, young residents — and more small businesses.

Here's a look at six breweries whose presence helped to change their surroundings:

Kansas City, Mo.

Boulevard Brewing opened in 1989 in its Kansas City, Mo., Westside neighborhood, creating a brewery out of a building that had been a railroad's laundry. While it probably would have been cheaper for the company to be in the suburbs, the brewery's managers are "committed urbanists" who like the idea of contributing to the vitality of the central city as opposed to building on undeveloped land in the suburbs, says Boulevard's CFO, Jeff Crum.

The building's renovation ranged from replacing pipes to cutting out a skylight to make room for tanks. And in order to grow, Boulevard had to buy the land around it from different owners, get approvals from neighbors and get the city to rezone the land around it.

The brewery, at first, struggled to attract visitors, but now draws about 50,000 people annually as the area around it picked up alongside a broader renewal in nearby downtown Kansas City.

Boston

Harpoon Brewery opened on the South Boston waterfront in 1986, when it was surrounded by auto body shops and little else. Now the brewery draws more than 85,000 people a year from tours and tastings, and thousands more from festivals. These days, the city is focused on redeveloping the area. New apartment and office buildings, restaurants and a convention center sit nearby.

Harpoon recently negotiated a 50-year lease with the city. The rent will rise over time, but generally, long leases provide protection from spikes that can happen when an area becomes so popular that property values skyrocket.

Cleveland

Great Lakes opened in Cleveland's Ohio City neighborhood in 1988. The downtown neighborhood was "perceived as dangerous and blighted" into the 1980s, says Eric Wobser. He works for Ohio City Inc., a nonprofit that promotes residential and commercial development while trying to preserve the area's older buildings.

Great Lakes built a brewery and a brewpub. Other breweries and businesses — a pasta maker, a bike shop, a tortilla factory, as well as restaurants and bars — followed. Newcomers flock to the neighborhood, even though Cleveland's overall population is still declining. The city repaved the quiet street next to the brewery, Market Ave., with cobblestones, and poured millions into renovating a nearby 19th-century market.

Seattle

In the waterfront Ballard section of Seattle, home to fishing shops, shipyards and boat fueling facilities for decades, six breweries have sprung up in the past two years. They joined Hale's Ales and Maritime Pacific Brewing, which both opened in Ballard in the 1990s.

Hale's Ales in 1995 took over a facility that had housed an industrial hose manufacturer and before that a maker of engines.

The neighborhood has become "softer," says Hale's Ales manager Phil O'Brien. "What used to be fishing shops are little restaurants — what used to be hardware stores are now coffee shops."

Brooklyn

When Brooklyn Brewery opened in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn in 1996, its neighbors were mostly deserted warehouses and factories. Today, Brooklyn Brewery is surrounded by modern apartment buildings, trendy bars, shops and restaurants. There's still some graffiti, but that hasn't deterred the influx of new residents willing to spend a lot of money to live there. In the past decade, home values in the Brewery's neighborhood have more than doubled — up 145 percent, according to real estate appraiser Miller Samuel. Brooklyn Brewery and another local craft brewer, Kelso, worry that rising property values will eventually force them out of their current neighborhoods.

San Francisco

The tech boom has made one brewpub's growth plans more complicated. In San Francisco, 21st Amendment brewery is two blocks from AT&T Park where baseball's Giants play. Along with the bustling technology sector, 21st Amendment helped to transform the city's SoMa neighborhood.

"People refer to use as the granddaddy of the neighborhood," says 21st Amendment founder Nico Freccia.

Now the company wants to build an 80,000-square-foot brewery — but property values are too high. The company has opened offices in the East Bay and is scouting space there for the brewery, hoping to help revitalize an Oakland neighborhood.

Today in history

In 1483, England's King Richard III was crowned in Westminster Abbey.

In 1535, Sir Thomas More was executed in England for high treason.

In 1777, during the American Revolution, British forces captured Fort Ticonderoga.

In 1885, French scientist Louis Pasteur tested an anti-rabies vaccine on 9-year-old Joseph Meister, who had been bitten by an infected dog; the boy did not develop rabies.

In 1917, during World War I, Arab forces led by T.E. Lawrence and Auda Abu Tayi captured the port of Aqaba from the Turks.

In 1933, the first All-Star baseball game was played at Chicago's Comiskey Park; the American League defeated the National League, 4-2.

In 1944, an estimated 168 people died in a fire that broke out during a performance in the main tent of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus in Hartford, Conn.

In 1945, President Harry S. Truman signed an executive order establishing the Medal of Freedom.

In 1957, Althea Gibson became the first black tennis player to win a Wimbledon singles title as she defeated fellow American Darlene Hard 6-3, 6-2.

In 1983, Fred Lynn of the California Angels hit the first (and, to date, only) grand slam in an All-Star game as the American League zoomed to a 13-3 victory over the National League in Chicago's Comiskey Park.

High temperatures pose risk of vehicle fires

By Tyler White
twhite@mrt.com

Summertime's frequent triple-digit temperatures can pose a dangerous fire hazard in vehicles, but the Midland Fire Department's interim fire marshal said those hazards can be prevented.

The higher temperatures do not allow for the engine to properly cool off, according to David Hickman.

"The ambient heat is higher so the engine heat doesn't dissipate," he said.

Temperatures that exceed 100 degrees can cause vehicle elements to ignite, causing fires that may damage or destroy the vehicle, Hickman said. Vehicles that sustain fire damage typically are considered totaled because of the near-irreparable damage fires can cause to a vehicle's structure, he said.

Self-propelled motor home or recreational vehicle fire	1	0	0

Source: Midland Fire Department

The fire department has seen a gradual increase in vehicle fires over the past three years. Midland firefighters responded to 27 vehicle fires between April 1 and July 4, a 17.39 percent increase over last year during the same period, according to data released by MFD. Of those 27 fires, 21 originated in passenger vehicles, which is a 16.67 percent increase from 2012.

Vehicles contain several sources that can be ignited through the heat — residual oils on the engine block, fuel leaks, cracked injector hoses, electrical wiring, tires, brake fluid, plastic vehicle parts, stereo systems and even the air conditioning system's air compressor, Hickman said.

Hickman said drivers often can identify potential hazards if they smell gasoline, smoke or other fumes.

MFD Chief Robert Isbell said the key to preventing these fires is to keep vehicles clean and stay up-to-date on maintenance and vehicle inspections.

Hickman said people who drive their vehicles for long periods of time before taking them in for maintenance, are more at risk for fires.

In addition, drivers who disregard recall notices from vehicle manufacturers can set themselves up for dangerous malfunctions down the road, said Hickman, who has encountered these preventable situations.

Hickman said drivers should refer to the Consumer Product Safety Commission's website to identify possible recalls for their vehicles.

Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega

Nicaragua, Venezuela offer asylum to Edward Snowden

Associated Press

Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — The presidents of Nicaragua and Venezuela offered Friday to grant asylum to NSA leaker Edward Snowden, one day after leftist South American leaders gathered to denounce the rerouting of Bolivian President Evo Morales' plane over Europe amid reports that the American was aboard.

Daniel Ortega, of Nicaragua, and Nicolas Maduro, of Venezuela, made their offers during separate speeches in their home countries Friday afternoon. Snowden has asked for asylum in numerous countries, including Nicaragua and Venezuela.

"As head of state, the government of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela decided to offer humanitarian asylum to the young American Edward Snowden so that he can live in the homeland" of independence leader Simon Bolivar and the late President Hugo Chavez without "persecution from the empire," Maduro said, referring to the United States.

He made the offer during a speech marking the anniversary of Venezuela's independence. It was not immediately clear if there were any conditions to Venezuela's offer.

Maduro added that several other Latin American governments have also expressed their intention of taking a similar stance by offering asylum for the cause of "dignity."

In Nicaragua, Ortega said he was willing to make the same offer "if circumstances allow it." Ortega didn't say what the right circumstances would be when he spoke during a speech in Managua.

He said the Nicaraguan embassy in Moscow received Snowden's application for asylum and that it is studying the request.

"We have the sovereign right to help a person who felt remorse after finding out how the United States was using technology to spy on the whole world, and especially its European allies," Ortega said.

The offers came following a flap about the rerouting of Bolivian President Evo Morales' plane in Europe earlier this week amid reports that Snowden might have been aboard.

Spain on Friday said it had been warned along with other European countries that Snowden, a former U.S. intelligence worker, was aboard the Bolivian presidential plane, an acknowledgement that the manhunt for the fugitive leaker had something to do with the plane's unexpected diversion to Austria.

It is unclear whether the United States, which has told its European allies that it wants Snowden back, warned Madrid about the Bolivian president's plane. U.S. officials will not detail their conversations with European countries, except to say that they have stated the U.S.'s general position that it wants Snowden back.

Maduro joined other leftist South American presidents Thursday in Cochabamba, Bolivia, to rally behind Morales and denounce the rerouting incident.

President Barack Obama has publicly displayed a relaxed attitude toward Snowden's movements, saying last month that he wouldn't be "scrambling jets to get a 29-year-old hacker."

But the drama surrounding the flight of Morales, whose plane was abruptly rerouted to Vienna after apparently being denied permission to fly over France, suggests that pressure is being applied behind the scenes.

Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Manuel Garcia-Margallo told Spanish National Television that "they told us that the information was clear, that he was inside."

He did not identify who "they" were and declined to say whether he had been in contact with the U.S. But he said that European countries' decisions were based on the tip. France has since sent a letter of apology to the Bolivian government.

Bail set at $2M for armed man arrested in Seattle

Associated Press

SEATTLE — A judge set bail at $2 million Friday for a Las Vegas man arrested near the University of Washington in a truck that authorities say contained multiple weapons, maps to three Seattle campuses and a recording in which he said he planned to do something in the West to support protesters demanding reform in Brazil.

King County Judge Arthur R. Chapman said he set such a high bail for Justin Jasper because he considered the 22-year-old a flight risk and a threat to the community.

Montana authorities said Jasper stole a pickup and guns from a truck driver in Butte, Mont., who had let Jasper stay at his home.

At the bail hearing in Seattle, a prosecutor said authorities found six firebombs in the vehicle, along with a bolt-action rifle, a double-barrel shotgun, a machete and several knives. They also found a recording of a podcast that appears to have Jasper expressing support for protesters in Brazil.

More than 1 million demonstrators have taken to the streets in Brazil over the past month to denounce poor public services and the billions of dollars spent preparing for next year's World Cup soccer tournament and the 2016 Olympics in Brazil.

Calif. fireworks accident injures more than 30

Associated Press

SIMI VALLEY, Calif. — When a July Fourth fireworks display exploded and sent red and white bursts into spectators at a Southern California park, Paulina Mulkern saw shrapnel headed straight for her 4-year-old cousin.

Mulkern pushed the girl under a lawn chair, and then shielded her 7-year-old cousin with her body as scorching debris flew overhead.

"You feel the big old heat come right over your back," she said Friday, still shaking as she recounted the explosion the night before that left her hospitalized with bruises and red marks on her back.

At least 36 people were injured as many in the crowd of thousands fled for safety. The victims, from 17 months to 78 years old, had burns and shrapnel wounds, and some were trampled, authorities and hospital officials said. The injured included 12 children.

Mulkern said she went into shock after being hit by a flying piece of debris, trembling badly as she was carried to a road where rescuers stripped off most of her clothes and wrapped her in a blanket.

"I was really terrified. Every time someone launched a firework it got me into panic mode and they just told me, ignore the sounds around you and concentrate on your breathing," she recalled.

Police in Simi Valley, northwest of Los Angeles, said it appeared a firework exploded prematurely in its mortar, knocking over others and aiming them across the field. Fire investigators, however, said later they had not yet determined a cause.

Police based their initial statement on the accounts of witnesses, who said a rack of fireworks fell over, said Ventura County Fire Capt. Mike Lindberry.

Among other key questions investigators were trying to answer was whether the pyrotechnics display was set far enough away from spectators, and even if all the rules were followed, whether those guidelines needed to be revised so that the public is kept farther back from launch sites.

Regulations require crowds be kept 70 feet away for every inch of diameter of the largest shell.

By those standards, spectators should have been at least 350 feet away from the show put on by Bethpage, N.Y.-based Bay Fireworks, said Ventura County Fire Department Deputy Chief Mike LaPlant. The distance of spectators from the show will be one of many factors considered by investigators.

"The distances were either at or beyond the normal distances, the prescribed distances, for that sized shell," he said.

The company said it regretted that spectators were injured and that it planned to publicly release the results of a thorough investigation.

DPS: Man injured in rollover on FM 1788

From staff reports

A man was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital with minor injuries Friday evening after a one-vehicle rollover crash on South Farm-to-Market Road 1788.

Midland County deputies and Department of Public Safety troopers responded to the crash at 5:45 p.m. in the 8700 block of South FM 1788.

The the driver of the pickups was traveling northbound when he lost control and flipped the vehicle, according to a DPS trooper at the scene.

The trooper said the driver likely was turning at an accelerated speed, which contributed to the crash.

The investigation is ongoing.

DROUGHT

From 1A

a freshwater flood the oysters historically recover.

He noted that oyster populations were down in the late 1970s during a dry period before Tropical Storm Claudette dumped a record 42 inches of rain in Alvin in a single day.

"Prior to that time, West Galveston Bay was practically an oyster desert ...," Ray said. "Two years later, 40 percent of the oysters produced in Texas came out of West Galveston Bay."

Harking back to 1960s

It's not clear when the drought will improve to the point of restoring the Texas coast to more normal conditions.

John Nielsen-Gammon, the state climatologist, noted that Texas' reservoirs are only about 65 percent full, the lowest they have been in a long time.

"The reservoirs are a good indicator of streamflow into Texas bays and estuaries," he said, noting that the flows from the Brazos to the Guadalupe "are already at record or near-record low levels for this time of year."

Absent substantial rain, this summer will bring the most severe drought conditions to Texas bays and estuaries since at least the 1960s and probably the 1950s, he said.

Wildfire cut off Hotshots' access to safety zone

Associated Press

PRESCOTT, Ariz. — An erratic wildfire driven by ferocious and shifting winds curled around the location of a team of Arizona Hotshot firefighters, cutting off their access to a safety zone and creating a death trap that quickly consumed them, two fire officials confirmed Friday based on a map of how the tragedy unfolded compiled by The Associated Press.

The map shows that the 19 highly trained Hotshots were just over a quarter of a mile northwest of the safety zone using chain saws, axes and other gear to build a line between the wildfire and the small town of Yarnell on Sunday. But the fire, which was northeast of the team, suddenly changed directions after the winds shifted nearly 180 degrees and cut off their access to the safety zone, a large ranch property.

The AP confirmed the location of the fire crew, their safety zone and the fire's advance based on interviews with people who knew what happened. After building the map, its accuracy was confirmed by Dan Ware, a spokesman for the crews battling the blaze, and Prescott Fire spokesman Wade Ward.

The circumstances of the firefighters' deaths have been known for days but Friday's confirmation offers the most detailed picture about their location and how close to safety they appeared to be.

Officials said the 20th member of the Prescott-based Granite Mountain Hotshots, who served as a lookout for the Hotshot crew and whose exact location during the fire is unclear, was on a hilltop and warned the team that erratic winds had shifted the fire's direction and they were in danger.

The Hotshot crew was working to build a line to keep the fire from getting into Yarnell, working on the southeast end of the fire with the wind blowing generally to the northeast. But a thunderstorm that developed north of the fire caused the winds to shift so they were coming from the north, blowing the fire right toward the Hotshots.

The crew had designated a ranch house and its surrounding cleared area as their safety zone, a spot they should be able to reach if things went bad. But the fire moved too fast for them to reach the ranch house, killing the 19 firefighters; the lookout, 21-year-old Brendan McDonough, was able to make it to safety.

A national team of investigators is working to understand more about the firefighters' deaths, visiting the site where they were killed, interviewing McDonough, and examining radio logs and weather conditions. They are expected to release some findings soon, but it will take much longer for a full report.

"Apparently their escape route was inadequate," said Carl Seielstad, an associate research professor and fire and fuels program manager at the University of Montana's National Center for Landscape Fire Analysis.

Seielstad, also a former longtime smokejumper and hotshot who has lost colleagues in previous fires, said it's still too early to say whether the Hotshots made any mistakes but that the investigation certainly will identify violations in protocol by virtue of the deaths themselves.

"All of these fatalities associated with fire shelter deployments have commonalities that relate to sudden and unexpected changes in fire behavior, that firefighters were in a compromising position and failed to recognize the danger they were in until it was too late. And after the fact when we look back, we always think, 'They should have expected this,'" he said. "These investigations are always awkward for other firefighters because they sort of imply that mistakes weren't made, although maybe mistakes were made."

Eric Lawton, a local school board member in Prescott, knows the area where the wildfire is and said its giant boulders, thick stands of scrub oak and manzanita would have posed high difficulty for the firefighters. The terrain would have impeded how fast they could move in the face of danger, he said.

"Knowing the area, you couldn't scramble out of there if you had to," Lawton said. "I don't care about special meterologist on site or any of that, they had no chance."

Associated Press

Ten-year-old Lyam Davis, left, watches as his mother, Rachel Davis, both of Phoenix, Ariz., sign a banner during the Fourth of July celebration at Pioneer Park on Thursday in Prescott, Ariz. in honor of the 19 fallen firefighters who died fighting a blaze near Yarnell, Ariz., on Sunday.

New Mexico wildfires slow as crews eye flood controls

PECOS, N.M. — Crews moved ahead Friday against two wildfires in New Mexico and began outlining needed flood prevention measures after recent favorable weather helped slow the blazes' growth.

The 17-square-mile Jaroso Fire in the steep canyons of the Pecos Wilderness in the Santa Fe National Forest remained at zero percent containment. But officials still fear that heavy rains, while helping control the blaze, could impact several communities, homes, roads and other infrastructures adjacent to and downstream from the burned area. That's because the inferno's charred damage has left potential for flash flooding, mud and debris flows as monsoon season looms.

That blaze is burning in rugged territory that has prevented crews from directly attacking the flames.

HOUSTON

US rig count up nine this week to 1,757

The number of rigs exploring for oil and natural gas in the U.S. increased by nine this week to 1,757, according to Houston-based oilfield services company Baker Hughes.

There were 1,395 rigs listed as searching for oil, up five; 355 for gas, up two; and seven as miscellaneous, up two. A year ago this week, there were 1,419 oil rigs, a difference of 25, and 542 gas rigs, a difference of 187.

The number of directional drilling rigs increased by 15 to 255. There was one more horizontal drilling rig for a total of 1,068. Vertical drilling declined by seven rigs to end the week at 434.

At this time last year there were 1,965 rigs in the U.S.

The number of rigs exploring for oil and natural gas in Texas increased by three this week for a total of 835. There were 927 rigs in Texas at this time last year.

Rounding out the top five states by rig count were North Dakota with 177, up two; Oklahoma with 174, up one; Louisiana with 103, unchanged; and New Mexico with 78, up two.

Among the other major oil- and gas-producing states, Colorado added three rigs, and California added one.

Pennslvania decreased by one rig. Alaska, Arkansas, West Virginia and Wyoming were unchanged.

In the U.S., 1,676 rigs were listed as on land, up six; 22 as in inland waters, unchanged; and 59 as offshore, up three. There were 57 rigs in the Gulf of Mexico, up three.

The number of rigs exploring for oil and natural gas in Canada increased by eight this week to 214. Sixty-two were listed as searching for gas, up four; 152 as searching for oil, up four; and zero as miscellaneous, unchanged. There were 264 rigs in Canada a year ago this week.

BLM approves natural gas pipeline project

ALBUQUERQUE — The federal government has given the green light to a proposal to build 234 miles of pipeline to transport natural gas liquids from one corner of New Mexico to the other and ultimately to markets in South Texas.

The Bureau of Land Management's approval of the Western Expansion Pipeline III project comes just a week after President Barack Obama unveiled his plan for combating climate change, part of which included boosting the role of natural gas in energy production.

News of the pipeline's approval encouraged oil and gas developers in New Mexico, which is home to portions of both the Permian and San Juan basins.

"These projects aren't just built for the conditions at the moment. They're long-term investments," said Wally Drangmeister, a spokesman for the New Mexico Oil and Gas Association. "I think it's a good sign that some investment is going in that will support the state."

The $320 million project will transport natural gas liquid products from northwestern New Mexico to a hub in Hobbs in the southeastern corner of the state and ultimately to Texas to help meet existing and future demand.

With production increasing in the San Juan Basin and in the Rocky Mountains, Mid-America Pipeline Co.'s existing system is nearing capacity. Currently, the system can transport about 275,000 barrels per day, but more wells are going into production in New Mexico, Wyoming, Utah and Colorado.

With the new pipeline through New Mexico, Mid-America said its capacity would be boosted to about 350,000 barrels per day.

The Bureau of Land Management said this week's decision to approve the Western Expansion Pipeline project comes after a review of public comments and potential environment effects.

NEW YORK

Oil prices end the week higher

The price of oil marched higher Friday with a positive report on U.S. hiring and ongoing concerns about the crisis in Egypt.

Benchmark crude for August delivery rose $1.98, or 2 percent, to finish at $103.22 per barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. That's the highest closing price since May 2, 2012.

'Evil spirit' scam plagues Asian immigrants in New York City

Associated Press

NEW YORK — One woman was told by a fortune teller that her son was possessed by demons. Another was approached on a Chinatown street by a stranger who eerily claimed her daughter would die in two days. A third was informed that her dead husband was communicating from the grave, telling her to hand over thousands in cash.

"Your son will die in a car accident — he is cursed," a 65-year-old was told.

In each instance, the women bundled up cash and jewelry in a bag and gave it to strangers they'd just met — self-proclaimed spiritual healers. They were told the contents would be blessed in an effort to ward off evil spirits, bring good luck to the family or heal a sick child — they just have to wait a period of time to re-open it.

When they do, they find water bottles, cough drops and beans. But no valuables.

Detectives say there has been a rash in New York of what's known as an evil spirit or blessing scam, where older immigrant women, mostly Chinese, are swindled out of their valuables by clever scammers arriving from China who prey on superstition and fear. In the past six months, two dozen victims have reported valuables stolen — in some cases more than $10,000 in cash and $13,000 in jewelry, according to police reports. A total of more than $1.8 million has been stolen.

"They know the culture; they know how to talk to these victims to get them to listen," chief New York Police Department spokesman Paul Browne said of the grifts. "One person's spirituality is another's superstition, and they prey on that distinction."

The scam itself has many permutations, but the basic principle is the same: A woman, usually in her 50s or older, is approached by a stranger, usually a younger woman, who asks the woman if she knows where to find a particular healer or fortune teller. Another seeming stranger joins the conversation, says she knows where the healer is located, and convinces the older woman to come along. The healer convinces the victim that in order to ward off some evil, she must hand over valuables in a bag to be blessed. And then they switch the bag.

Associated Press

This undated image provided by the New York City Police Department shows a poster that has been displayed in Chinatown in Manhattan and in Asian neighborhoods in Brooklyn and Queens warning of blessing scams.

Similar scams occur in other places in the U.S. with large Asian communities, such as Boston, Seattle, Chicago and in Hawaii. In San Francisco late last year, thieves stole about $2 million in nearly 60 cases. Police there called the scams an organized crime ring. The district attorney's office, police and politicians waged a public safety awareness campaign, including community meetings and a video depicting a reenactment of a scam and tips on how to spot one.

The grift may be prevalent right now in Asian neighborhoods, but it's also rampant in Haitian and Latino communities where there is also distrust of Western culture and banks, and plenty of cash and valuables kept at home, said Dr. Alan Hilfer, director of psychology at Maimonides Medical Center in New York.

"It has to do with the idea of not necessarily adopting Western belief systems about magic and incantation systems, but staying with some of their traditional spiritual beliefs," he said. "And, in many cases, they're so lost and desperate in a foreign culture they will turn to anyone who offers them something in a language they can understand."

A similar public awareness campaign has been underway in New York. Detectives in Chinatowns in Brooklyn and Manhattan have canvassed the streets warning of the scams and put up posters in Mandarin and English warning women.

"The power of belief is serious," Hilfer said. "And faced with an idea of a very expensive, absolutely incomprehensible, say, MRI machine versus someone putting grains or coins into a bag with incantations, it's just less frightening and unfamiliar to them."

New York City detectives say there is no larger criminal organization at work here, most scammers operate in groups of three or five and then disappear after, mostly fleeing back to China. Some arrests have been made, but recovery of the valuables is difficult.

The awareness campaign helped one 67-year-old woman, who turned the tables on the scammers, police and prosecutors said. She was approached June 3 in Manhattan's Chinatown. A younger Chinese girl on the street asked where to find a particular doctor. The accomplice joined and said she knew the doctor, and a third woman turned up saying she was a relative. They persuaded the woman that she was cursed. But rather than go home and bundle up her valuables, she called the cops, who set up a sting and nabbed five suspects after they'd stolen the 67-year-old's bag of fake jewelry.

Manhattan prosecutors charged the five with grand larceny. They are all from China.

Furloughs begin for Defense Department civilians

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — More than 650,000 civilian Defense Department workers will take the first of their 11 unpaid days off next week, but the cut in salary they will see in the three months may pale compared to what officials worry could be larger scale layoffs next year.

About 85 percent of the department's nearly 900,000 civilians around the world will be furloughed, according to the latest statistics provided by the Pentagon. But while defense officials were able to shift money around to limit the furloughs this year, there are widespread worries that if automatic budget cuts go forward for 2014, thousands of civilian, military and contract jobs could be on the chopping block.

Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel is expected to provide senators with more details early next week on how the next wave of across-the-board budget cuts will affect the department, said Pentagon press secretary George Little. But while defense officials have not yet released details on the impact of the cuts, Gen. Ray Odierno, the Army's chief of staff, has warned that as many as 100,000 more active-duty, National Guard and Reserve soldiers could lose their jobs if Congress allows billions of dollars in automatic budget cuts to continue next year.

Initial hopes that the number of furlough days could be reduced have largely been dashed. Instead, talk is focused more on how to slash spending in 2014. The department can only force workers to take 22 furlough days per year, thus the need for worker layoffs has been getting more traction to achieve savings.

In the coming weeks, however, a wide range of civilian employees that includes top-level policy advisers, school teachers and depot workers will not answer their phones or respond to emails for one day a week through the end of the fiscal year on Sept. 30. The department estimates the savings will be between $1.9 billion and $2.1 billion.

Managers across the department have been given some flexibility in how they schedule the days off during each two-week pay period. But they also are dealing with complex legal requirements that in many cases prevent them from using military personnel to fill in for the absent civilians.

"There's going to be perhaps some degradation of mission across the department, and because of reduced work schedules for 650,000 employees," Little said. "We knew that going in, and we knew that would be a problem, and we've tried to take steps to ensure that top-priority missions across the department aren't disproportionately affected.

In some cases, supervisors will try to accommodate workers who manage to find some other part-time, temporary job to help ease the fiscal pain, although they are limited in the types of employment they can take.

Civilians have been getting their furlough letters sporadically over the past few weeks. The letters tell them that during their furlough time, "you will not be permitted to serve as an unpaid volunteer, must remain away from your workplace, and are prohibited from performing any work-related duties."

Civilians can appeal the furloughs once they have actually taken one of the unpaid days off.

The monetary impact for individuals varies widely, depending on salaries. But workers will effectively receive a 20 percent salary cut each pay period for the rest of the fiscal year. For a civilian making about $100,000 a year, that will mean about $1,600 in lost pay each month. Someone making $40,000 a year would get $600 less a month. Health care and other paycheck deductions would not decrease.

Israel's envoy to the US stepping down

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Michael Oren, Israel's ambassador to the U.S., is stepping down after more than four years on the job, Israel's Embassy in Washington announced Friday.

Oren, 58, said he'll finish his term this fall. He said he'd continuing serving the people of Israel but didn't specify in what capacity.

"Israel and the United States have always enjoyed a special relationship, and, throughout these years of challenge, I was privileged to take part in forging even firmer bonds," Oren said in a statement.

An American-born academic who taught at several universities, Oren moved to Israel in 1979 and enlisted in the paratroopers brigade. Before he was tapped in 2009 by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and then-Foreign Minister Avigdor Lieberman to be Israel's envoy to the U.S., Oren had volunteered as a military liaison officer, briefing reporters during Israel's offensive that year against Palestinian militants in the Gaza Strip.

A frequent face on Sunday morning news shows and at Washington-area synagogues, Oren may have had a diminished role as a direct messenger between the two countries due to the perception that he was outside of Netanyahu's inner circle, said Aaron David Miller, the Woodrow Wilson Center scholar who was a Mideast negotiator under six U.S. secretaries of state.

"Oren was last in a series of Israel-U.S. ambassadors that neither the president nor the secretary of state nor the prime minister really utilized," Miller said. "They all had their own channels."

Secretary of State John Kerry, who has spent much of his first months in office attempting to revive Israeli-Palestinian peace talks, called Oren "unfailingly candid" and a passionate advocate for Israel.

Maine moves to capture lobster-processing market

Associated Press

ST. GEORGE, Maine — For years, Maine's lobster processing industry was on simmer. But with the help of a glut of the state's signature seafood and a few savvy entrepreneurs who spotted a hole in the market, it's on its way to a rolling boil.

Take 24-year-old Kyle Murdock, who decided to stop his studies in physics and math at Worcester Polytechnic Institute in Massachusetts to open Sea Hag Seafood, named after his father's lobster boat.

Fishermen began talking about the need for more in-state processors, which turn whole live lobsters into frozen tails, picked meat and other products, after the global economy tanked in 2008, driving down demand and prices, Murdock said.

"But that's always where the conversation ended," he said. "Nobody ever continued the conversation with, 'Why don't we have more processing capacity, or how do we get more processing capacity?'"

His plant processed 600,000 pounds last year after opening in August in the seaside town of St. George, and he's planning to handle 2.5 million pounds this year.

When Maine's lobster catch averaged about 20 million pounds a year from the 1950s through the 1980s, there was no need to have processors in Maine. Much of the catch was sold live, with the rest shipped to Canada, which has more than two dozen processors. Maine didn't have any processors to speak of before the 1990s, and has had only three or four of any size in recent years.

Associated Press

Kyle Murdock, owner of Sea Hag Lobster Processing, holds a tray of lobster tails in a refrigerator at his plant in Tenants Harbor, Maine, on June 28. New lobster processors are opening in Maine following last year's turbulent lobster season when Canadian fishermen were blocking truckloads of Maine-caught lobster from delivery at processors there.

But the catch has risen fast over the past 20 years — from 30 million pounds to last year's record 126 million pounds — and only a small portion is sold live. The rest, about 80 percent or more, is processed and sold to restaurants, retailers, theme parks, cruise ship lines and other buyers around the world.

The call to increase Maine's processing capacity grew louder and drew national attention last summer after a huge early haul of lobsters caused a market glut and a crash in wholesale prices. Fearing for their livelihood, Canadian fishermen angrily blocked truckloads of Maine lobsters from being delivered to processing plants in Canada.

Less than 10 percent of Maine's lobster catch is now processed in Maine, with an estimated 60 to 70 percent shipped to Canada for processing, Murdock said.

Maine's plants currently handle an estimated 10 to 12 million pounds annually. Murdock doesn't see any reason why Maine can't process more than half the harvest that isn't sold live. Adding processing capacity gives the Maine industry more control over its product while boosting employment and the value of the catch, he said.

"If we could process 40 million pounds, I think that's where we need to be," he said on a recent day at his plant.

Although Murdock comes from a fishing family and ate lobster four to five times a week while growing up on Monhegan island, he didn't know much about processing until he set to get into the business. So he hired a consultant to help with the startup and spent a couple of weeks at a Canadian plant to learn the ropes.

He now has nearly 50 employees at work and said the workforce will grow to 60 or 70 later in the summer.

Besides creating jobs, the increased lobster processing will help Maine brand its lobster products, said Marine Resources Commissioner Patrick Keliher. The Maine catch that's now processed in Canada is sold as a Canadian product even though it was caught in Maine.

There are obstacles to growth — most notably a shortage of workers and high energy costs — but Keliher expects processing capacity to grow fast in the years ahead.

"While live markets exist all over the world, a big part of the future of Maine lobster lies in processed, easy-to-use products," he said.

Murdock concurred, noting that the future of the industry depends on processing because most people don't want to cook a live lobster in their kitchen.

"The American consumer wants a convenient product," he said.

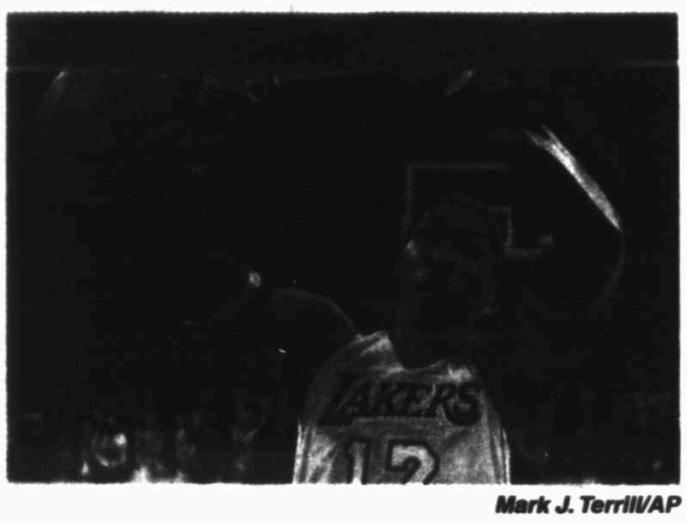
Dwight Howard tweets he'll sign with Rockets



Mark J. Terrill/AP

Los Angeles Lakers center Dwight Howard dunks during Jan. 25 game against the Utah Jazz, in Los Angeles. The free agent tweeted that he is going to Houston.

By Brian Mahoney
Associated Press

Dwight Howard, the NBA's most dominant and indecisive big man, who tired of Orlando and never loved Los Angeles, has made up his mind.

"I've decided to become a member of the Houston Rockets. I feel (it's) the best place for me and I am excited about joining the Rockets and I'm looking forward to a great season," Howard wrote on Twitter on Friday night.

He leaves behind an extra $30 million and an offense under Lakers coach Mike D'Antoni that he was never fully comfortable with, joining a Rockets team that could become an immediate contender in the Western Conference with the All-Star center in the middle.

"Years of work by Dwight & Rockets went into this. This team is going to be special," general manager Daryl Morey tweeted.

USA Today first reported earlier Friday that Howard would join the Rockets, where he will team with All-Star James Harden to give the Rockets a potentially potent inside-outside combination.

That didn't quite end the Howard saga, which has dragged on a couple of years. He spoke again with the Lakers amid reports he was changing his mind.

Turns out, he was just saying goodbye.

"We have been informed of Dwight's decision to not return to the Lakers," Lakers general manager Mitch Kupchak said in a statement.

"Naturally we're disappointed. However, we will now move forward in a different direction with the future of the franchise and, as always, will do our best to build the best team possible, one our great Lakers fans will be proud to support.

"To Dwight, we thank him for his time and consideration, and for his efforts with us last season. We wish him the best of luck on the remainder of his NBA career."

Dallas, Golden State and Atlanta were the other suitors interested in Howard.

But it was the Rockets, who brought Hall of Fame center Hakeem Olajuwon with them when they made their pitch to Howard on Monday, who beat out

Midland's David Freitas rounds second base after hitting a home run against Northwest Arkansas on Friday at Citibank Ballpark.

Methodical Freitas shines in RockHounds win

David Freitas takes a step then stops again, the tunnel leading to the Midland RockHounds' clubhouse seeming farther and farther away.

But Freitas, as cerebral a mind as you'll find behind the plate, has a good memory and the one of Barry Bonds turning down his autograph request is never far from him.

So, the 24-year-old Wilton, Calif., native stopped at every outstretched hand, granting every autograph wish after he showed off what countless hours of practice and his methodical approach behind the plate looks like in an 8-2 victory against the Northwest Arkansas Naturals on Friday.

Not surprisingly, it wasn't his two hits, one of which was a solo shot that cleared the left field bullpen, or his two RBI that Freitas reflected fondly on after the game.

"I was most happy with them only scoring two runs," Freitas said. "They got 11 hits, and with only two runs that means when we gave hits — I say we as a pitching staff and I — we made pitches after that to make sure we get double plays, get out of it."

Freitas even recalled a sequence in the fifth, in which Midland starter Drew Granier induced an inning-ending double play against Chestor Cuthbert, who doubled off Granier the inning before, with the bases loaded to keep the Naturals off the board.

The cerebral approach is simply what makes Freitas special behind the dish.

"He has it in him to be a good throwing catcher," Midland manager Aaron Nieckula said, "it's just a matter of being able to do it on a consistent basis."

Freitas came to the Oakland Athletics from the Washington Nationals in a trade for Kurt Suzuki that landed him with his

Cruz hits slam as Tepesch, Rangers top Astros

ARLINGTON — Nelson Cruz's case for a spot in the All-Star game just got a little stronger.

Cruz hit a grand slam, Nick Tepesch took a shutout into the sixth inning and the Texas Rangers beat the Houston Astros 10-5 on Friday night.

With the All-Star rosters set to be announced Saturday, and likely no Texas players among the starters for the first time since 2007, Cruz sent his 21st homer into the bullpen in left-center field to make it 6-0 in the second.

Cruz's fate is in the hands of Detroit manager Jim Leyland, with a combination of player and fan voting making the final choice. He is hitting .268 and leads the team in homers and RBIs (65).

"He certainly deserves it," said manager Ron Washington, who had Leyland's job the previous two years after the Rangers went to the World Series. "I do believe Jim will make the right decision and the players will make the right decision."

David Murphy and Adrian Beltre also homered for the Rangers, who won the first American League game in Arlington between the in-state rivals and beat Houston for the 10th time in 11 games overall.

Tepesch (4-6) had five strikeouts the first time through the Astros' lineup and had a career high of nine by the fourth inning. The rookie right-hander's previous best of eight strikeouts came in his last win — nine starts ago against the Astros on May 12.

Novak Djokovic reacts after defeating Juan Martin Del Potro in their semifinal match at Wimbledon, London, on Friday. Djokovic advanced to the Wimbledon championship.

Djokovic tops del Potro in 5-set beauty

By Eddie Pells
Associated Press

LONDON — Novak Djokovic might win Wimbledon this year. Juan Martin del Potro will not.

No matter how it ends, both men will always have their spot in one of the most memorable matches in the storied history of the All England Club.

Slugging back and forth over 4 hours, 43 minutes of backbreaking tennis Friday, top-seeded Djokovic emerged with a 7-5, 4-6, 7-6 (2), 6-7 (6), 6-3 victory to move one win away from his seventh major title.

"One of the best matches I've been a part of," Djokovic said. "One of the most exciting, definitely. It was so close. You couldn't separate us."

It was the longest semifinal in Wimbledon history and was only five minutes short of the 2008 five-set final between Roger Federer and Rafael Nadal that's generally considered the greatest match played on Centre Court — and perhaps anywhere.

Djokovic moved into his 11th Grand Slam final, where he'll play the winner of the late semifinal between No. 24 Jerzy Janowicz and No. 2 Andy Murray.

And, yes, that one did begin late — around 6:15 p.m., London time, after Djokovic and del Potro spent the entire, sundrenched afternoon exchanging huge groundstrokes, long rallies and even a few laughs during their marathon, which covered five sets, 55 games, two tiebreakers and 368 points.

"I think this match is going to be memory for a few years," del Potro said. "We play for four hours and a half on a very high level. We didn't make too many errors. I don't know if the rest of the players can play like favorite team growing up.

"I've always talked to the A's when I was in high school about playing pro ball for them," said Freitas, who had an A's decal on his truck even with Washington. "Now getting to play for the team that I love, I was an A's fan at heart, and I'm always an A's fan."

On Friday, RockHound fans got to see what the Athletics saw in the 6-foot-3, 225-pound catcher as he showed power in his swing and his improved instincts behind the plate.

After Conner Crumbliss scored on a wild pitch and Dusty Coleman ripped an RBI double for a 2-0 lead after one, Freitas blasted the first pitch he saw for a leadoff home run to put his team up 3-0 in the second.

One inning later, Jake Goebbert kept it going with an RBI triple to right before Freitas stepped to the plate and smoked an RBI single to left for a 5-0 lead.

The RockHounds ended up scoring in each of the first five innings as Naturals' starter Jason Adam walked in a run in the fourth — in which Midland scored without getting a hit — and Darwin Perez and Conner Crumbliss drove in runs in the fifth.

"The last few games I thought we've come on pretty aggressively, took advantage and were selected and put some good wood on the ball," Nieckula said.

But the RockHounds also got a nice effort from Granier — to the delight of Freitas, who has been working on how he calls games — and a nice defensive effort, including Freitas gunning down a stealing Matt Fields in the seventh.

After stealing 10 bags in the first two games of the series, Northwest Arkansas stole just one Friday after Freitas and Nieckula addressed it in batting practice before the game.

"We worked on blocking and retrieving it because a lot of time they were stealing off the block," Freitas said. "And we actually came out early, and we went at it about 20-30 minutes, we went after it, and it paid off tonight."

Granier improved to 2-0 at Citibank Ballpark in his brief RockHounds' career, allowing one run on eight hits while striking out four and walking three in six innings.

Midland, meanwhile, took the series from Northwest Arkansas after dropping four straight to the Naturals in a week span.

And even with his mind constantly focused on tweaking every aspect of his game, winning — more than any of his personal goals — is what Freitas looks for the most on a daily basis.

"It's always a lot more fun when you're winning," Freitas said.

'HOUND BITES: In a play that is fast becoming the norm for Darwin Perez, the Midland shortstop made a tough play on a short hopper hit by Brian Fletcher in the top of the third. Perez bare handed the ball on one hop and threw a laser to first to get Fletcher out by a step. ... A night after playing left field, Tyler Ladendorf made a great play at second, getting the final out of the top of the sixth with a diving catch on a soft liner by Brett Eibner with two on.

TODAY'S PROBABLES: The RockHounds and Arkansas Travelers open up a three-game series today at 7 p.m. at Citibank Ballpark. Texas League All Star Murphy Smith (6-7, 3.20) is expected to start for Midland while RHP Manny Correa (3-8, 5.44) is expected to get the nod for Arkansas.

Puig a hot All-Star topic, but not the only one

By Mike Fitzpatrick
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Lost in all the commotion about Yasiel Puig are the trickiest predicaments when it comes to the All-Star game.

Look at that logjam at third base in the American League!

The National League is overloaded with pitchers.

And who in the name of old Jack Murphy Stadium is going to represent the San Diego Padres?

So while the polarizing debate over whether Puig should be selected Saturday is certainly a juicy one, when all is said and done he'll either have a backup role in the NL outfield or he won't. The most difficult decisions involve other positions.

Buster Posey or Yadier Molina behind the plate for the NL? Robinson Cano or Dustin Pedroia at second base in the AL?

At the hot corner, Triple Crown winner Miguel Cabrera is having another monster season. OK, he's the starter for the junior circuit.

But then there's an overabundance of deserving backups: Tampa Bay's Evan Longoria, Oakland's Josh Donaldson, Texas' Adrian Beltre and Baltimore's Manny Machado.

"I'm not going to take five third basemen to the All-Star game," said Detroit's Jim Leyland, who will manage the American League team July 16 at Citi Field in New York.

So somebody gets left out. Let's just say it's Longoria. Then who makes it from the Rays?

Every club must have an All-Star, and rosters are limited to 34 spots — with at least 13 going to pitchers.

So maybe it's left-hander Matt Moore from Tampa Bay. Pretty good choice. But then a more worthy arm from some other squad gets snubbed.

And on and on.

That's the maddening part of putting together the puzzle — and the beauty of it all, too. Sizzling baseball arguments in the heat of summer.

"This hardest part is leaving guys off. That's by far the hardest thing. It goes with the territory when you pick a team. There is more written about the snubs than the guys that make it," said San Francisco's Bruce Bochy, the NL manager.

"The toughest positions to pick are on the pitching side. That's a tough position because there are a lot of guys who've had a really good half, both starters and relievers. Maybe outfield is tough, too."

Several big names were on their way to this All-Star game before injuries derailed them: Troy Tulowitzki, Ryan Braun, Clay Buchholz.

Bryce Harper could fall into that category, though he wasn't far behind in fan balloting for a starting outfield spot.

For the first time in eight years, Derek Jeter won't be an All-Star. He's been sidelined all season following ankle surgery. Yankees teammate Alex Rodriguez (hip) is out, too, but Mariano Rivera figures to make one last appearance.

Other stars are likely to be absent due to disappointing seasons: David Price, Albert Pujols and Matt Kemp, to name a few. But that makes room for impressive newcomers like Chris Davis, Domonic Brown and Paul Goldschmidt.

As for Puig, the Los Angeles Dodgers' rookie sensation, the uproar over whether he should be included after only one spectacular month in the majors is nothing new.

The same thing happened with Stephen Strasburg three years ago and then Harper last season — although the Washington Nationals' outfielder had at least two months under his belt after getting called up in late April.

Harper got in, Strasburg was left out. And both times, the sun came up the next day.

Strasburg pitched his way onto the 2012 team, and that's how it should happen. Puig is extremely exciting to watch and has all the makings of a perennial All-Star, but let him earn his trip with a legitimate body of work.

Otherwise, he's taking someone else's place.

For what it's worth, here's a prediction: Puig winds up on the Internet ballot for the final NL roster spot and gets voted in by fans.

And you know what? That'd be just fine.

MLB ROUNDUP

FROM WIRE REPORTS

American League

YANKEES 3
ORIOLES 2

NEW YORK — Vernon Wells singled in the winning run with one out in the ninth inning, helping a marvelous Ivan Nova and the New York Yankees beat the Baltimore Orioles 3-2 Friday night for their season high-tying fifth straight win.

Nova (3-2) gave up a two-run homer to Matt Wieters in the second inning then stifled the Orioles the rest of the way in a spot start for Hiroki Kuroda. He allowed three hits in his first career complete game and struck out 11 and walked one.

Baltimore closer Jim Johnson (2-7) took over the ninth with a 2-1 lead and gave up a leadoff single to David Adams. Brett Gardner reached when Johnson failed to field his bunt for an error in front of the mound. Robinson Cano was walked intentionally to load the bases for the second time Friday — to vociferous boos. Manager Buck Showalter made a mound visit and Johnson promptly walked Travis Hafner to tie it.

The struggling Wells then grounded a single past a diving third baseman Manny Machado and ran toward first with his arm raised in the air. He was mobbed by his teammates and then doused with a sports drink during an interview on the field.

TIGERS 7
INDIANS 0

CLEVELAND — Rick Porcello pitched seven sharp innings, Jhonny Peralta drove in two runs and Detroit beat Cleveland for the sixth consecutive time, extending their lead in the AL Central over the second-place Indians.

Porcello (5-6) allowed five hits and was never really threatened until Carlos Santana flied out to the warning track in center field to end the sixth. The right-hander set the tone for the Tigers, who dominated the opener of the four-game wraparound series.

With their fourth straight win, Detroit moved 2 1/2 games ahead of Cleveland, which returned from an 11-game road trip to just its second sellout crowd at Progressive Field this season.

TORONTO — Jose Bautista hit his 20th home run, Mark Buehrle pitched seven shutout innings to win for the first time in three starts and Toronto snapped a three-game skid with the victory over Minnesota.

Jose Reyes had three hits, two RBIs and a stolen base as the Blue Jays won for just the fourth time in 12 games since matching a franchise record with an 11-game winning streak.

RAYS 8
WHITE SOX 3

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Jeremy Hellickson won his fourth consecutive start, Jose Molina had a two-run homer during a five-run second inning, and Tampa Bay beat Chicago to win for the sixth time in seven games.

Hellickson (8-3) gave up one run, six hits and struck out nine in seven innings. The right-hander was coming off a strong June when he went 5-1.

ATHLETICS 6
ROYALS 3

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Tommy Milone carried a shutout into the ninth inning and Grant Balfour held on for the save, securing Oakland's victory over Kansas City.

Milone (8-7) was in complete control before Alcides Escobar and Eric Hosmer drove in runs with one out in the ninth. Balfour came on and gave up a run-scoring single to Billy Butler, but he managed to retire Lorenzo Cain and Mike Moustakas to end the game.

National League

PHILLIES 5
BRAVES 4

PHILADELPHIA — Humberto Quintero and Ryan Howard hit home runs to give Cliff Lee a five-run cushion, and the Philadelphia Phillies held on for a 5-4 victory over the Atlanta Braves on Friday night.

Dan Uggla hit a three-run shot, and the Braves snapped Lee's streak of 11 straight games pitching at least seven innings and allowing three earned runs or less.

PIRATES 6
CUBS 2

CHICAGO — Francisco Liriano pitched a four-hitter for his first complete game in more than two years, and Pittsburgh beat Chicago for its 11th win in 13 games.

Liriano (8-3) went the distance for the first time since he tossed a no-hitter for Minnesota against the White Sox on May 3, 2011. He struck out seven and walked four to improve 5-1 in his last six starts. He also had an RBI single.

NATIONALS 8
PADRES 5

WASHINGTON — Wilson Ramos drove in three runs, Gio Gonzalez won his third straight start and Washington defeated San Diego for its second straight win.

Jayson Werth had three hits and Denard Span added a two-run double for Washington.

CARDINALS 4
MARLINS 1

ST. LOUIS — Jake Westbrook worked seven strong innings and Allen Craig had two RBIs for a lineup that spoiled Jacob Turner's homecoming early on in St. Louis' victory over Miami.

Matt Holliday doubled twice with an RBI and Edward Mujica rebounded with the save for the Cardinals, who had lost eight of 11 and plummeted from the majors' best record to second place in the NL Central entering a five-game homestand.

METS 12
BREWERS 5

MILWAUKEE — Kirk Nieuwenhuis drove in a career-best five runs and Zack Wheeler allowed one earned run over five shaky innings to pace New York to its victory over Milwaukee.

Nieuwenhuis entered the game hitting .179 in 56 at-bats after being recalled from Triple-A Las Vegas on June 9, but raised his average to .233 with his first four-hit game, getting two singles, a triple, a double and two walks.

Interleague

MARINERS 4
REDS 2

CINCINNATI — Aaron Harang pitched six innings in the ballpark where he still holds the strikeout record, and Nick Franklin and Michael Saunders homered to lead Seattle over Cincinnati in the Mariners' first to Great American Ball Park.

Harang (4-7) limited his former team to a pair of runs and six hits, including Joey Votto's 15th homer. Oliver Perez struck out the side in the ninth for his second save.

RANGERS

From 1B

Lucas Harrell (5-9) walked four in the first two innings and three of them scored. Cruz's homer came after consecutive walks to Ian Kinsler and Murphy. Elvis Andrus also was aboard on a one-out single.

New Astros president Reid Ryan had a front-row view of just how far his last-place team has to go to become a contender. He was sitting next to his dad, Hall of Fame pitcher and Rangers CEO Nolan Ryan.

The younger Ryan couldn't have been pleased by what he saw in the fourth inning. With two outs, Brett Wallace barely had to move before dropping a popup by Cruz near first base. Beltre followed with a shot off the foul pole in left for his third homer in six at-bats and No. 17 on the season.

"The effort and focus is definitely there," Astros manager Bo Porter said. "That goes without question with these guys. It's one of those things we've played good teams that have played well and we have not played our best baseball. We just need to clean it up, play solid baseball."

Tepesch, who had a 12-1 lead before the bullpen struggled in a 12-7 win in Houston in May, was up 10-0 when he once again had trouble getting outs the third time through the order.

Four straight Astros reached to start the sixth, capped by a two-run double from Chris Carter that knocked out Tepesch. Carlos Pena and J.D. Martinez singled before Ross Wolf got a flyout and turned a double play on a soft liner back to him from Matt Dominguez.

Tepesch was charged with four runs and seven hits in five innings to go along with his nine strikeouts. Opposing batters are hitting .158 the first time they see Tepesch in a game, but .465 the third or fourth time.

"All in all, he threw the ball well," Cruz said.

The Rangers had scored one run in the first inning over their previous 25 games when Murphy hit a drive into the Texas bullpen in right-center after Kinsler's leadoff walk. It was Murphy's 10th homer and sent the Rangers to their highest scoring game since they beat Detroit 11-8 on May 19.

"We know what we're capable of as an offense," said Murphy, who was moved up to No. 2 in the order despite hitting just .221 because of a recent slump by Andrus. "It's been up and down a little this year. We're trying to finish strong (before the All-Star break) and tonight was a great way to do that."

Mavs, Calderon agree after Howard

By Schuyler Dixon
Associated Press

DALLAS — The Mavericks moved quickly once they were out of the running for Dwight Howard.

Dallas and free agent point guard Jose Calderon have an agreement on a four-year, $28 million contract, a person with knowledge of the deal told The Associated Press on Friday night. The person spoke on condition of anonymity because free agent contracts can't be discussed publicly before Wednesday, when they can first be signed.

The agreement with Calderon came hours after Mavericks owner Mark Cuban said Howard had told Dallas he planned to sign elsewhere. Howard later wrote on Twitter that he has decided to join the Houston Rockets.

"We gave it a shot and it didn't work out," Cuban wrote about Howard in an email. "It was truly an experience. So it's on to Plan B."

The first step in that plan is Calderon, who spent his first seven seasons with Toronto before the Raptors traded him to Detroit in January. The 6-foot-3 Spaniard has career averages of 10.1 points and 7.2 assists per game.

Howard's decision meant the Mavericks missed out on pairing aging star Dirk Nowitzki with a big name in free agency for the second straight summer since declining to bring back key pieces from their first championship team in 2011. Deron Williams, who grew up in the Dallas area, chose to stay with the Brooklyn Nets last summer.

The difference this year is Dallas planned to move forward with something more permanent after consecutive seasons of rosters filled with expiring or one-year contracts.

One of those players last season was point guard Darren Collison, who was given a chance to take over the offense but instead was twice benched in favor of aging veterans. He ended up being a change-of-pace replacement late in the season, which ended with Dallas out of the playoffs for the first time since 2000.

Dallas still lacks a shooting guard and a center for its starting lineup. O.J. Mayo and Chris Kaman were planned for those roles last season, and neither is expected back.

Calderon's best season was 2008-09 when he averaged career highs of 12.8 points and 8.9 assists. But that was a year after consecutive seasons of first-round playoff exits, when Calderon was primarily a backup.

NBA FREE AGENT ROUNDUP

FROM WIRE REPORTS

MCROBERTS AGREES TO STAY WITH BOBCATS: At charlotte, N.C., a person familiar with the situation said free agent forward Josh McRoberts has agreed to a two-year, $5.5 million deal to remain with the Charlotte Bobcats.

The person spoke to The Associated Press Friday on condition of anonymity because the deal has not yet been made official. Free agent signings cannot be announced until July 10, according to NBA rules.

76ERS ACQUIRE ROYCE WHITE FROM ROCKETS: At Philadelphia, a person familiar with the deal tells The Associated Press the Philadelphia 76ers have acquired the rights to Houston Rockets forward Royce White.

The person spoke Friday night on condition of anonymity because the deal has not been officially announced. The 76ers also acquired the rights to 2012 draft pick Furkan Aldemir. The Sixers will send Houston future considerations.

WARRIORS CLEAR SPACE, ACQUIRE IGUODALA: At Oakland, Calif., two people with knowledge of the situation said the Golden State Warriors and free agent Andre Iguodala have reached an agreement on a $48 million, four-year deal.

The people spoke on condition of anonymity to The Associated Press on Friday because NBA rules prevent confirmation of moves until July 10. One said the Warriors cleared more than $24 million in salary-cap space by sending Richard Jefferson, Andris Biedrins and Brandon Rush to the Utah Jazz along with unspecified draft picks.

CAVS, EARL CLARK AGREE TO 2-YEAR DEAL: At Cleveland, the Cavaliers have landed one of the Lakers' front-line free agents. No, not that guy.

Cleveland has agreed to terms on a two-year contract with forward Earl Clark, who played alongside Dwight Howard last season in Los Angeles.

PELICANS, BLAZERS, KINGS MAKE DEAL: At New Orleans, New Orleans, Portland and Sacramento have agreed to a three-team trade sending guard Tyreke Evans to the Pelicans, center Robin Lopez to the Trail Blazers and guard Greivis Vasquez to the Kings, people familiar with the deal said.

The people, who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity Thursday because NBA rules prevent confirmation of trades until July 10, said Portland is sending second-round draft pick Jeff Withey to New Orleans and a future draft pick to Sacramento as part of the deal, which was first reported by ESPN. The trade also sends guard Terrel Harris to Portland.

HOWARD

the other teams.

And now Howard will follow the likes of Olajuwon and Yao Ming in Houston's middle.

The deal can't become official until July 10, after next season's salary cap has been set. The Rockets can give him a four-year deal worth about $88 million, a year less and far below the $118 million the Lakers could have offered.

The Lakers acquired Howard last August from Orlando as part of a four-way trade that also included Philadelphia and Denver.

He averaged 17.1 points and 12.4 rebounds in 76 games, good numbers but far from his usual dominant play in eight seasons with the Magic as he played his way back into shape following back surgery.

He wasn't a natural fit in D'Antoni's offense, had what appeared at times to be a strained relationship with Kobe Bryant and acknowledged not having fun at times.

Bryant apparently won't miss him. Though he took part in the Lakers' meeting with Howard on Tuesday, the five-time champion posted a photo on Instagram shortly after Howard's decision of himself and Pau Gasol, the Lakers' remaining big man.

Howard's awkward departure is right in line with the confusion that's followed him over the last few years.

The No. 1 pick in the 2004 draft was one of the NBA's most popular and likable players, a wide-smiling, fun-loving big guy who led the Magic to the 2009 NBA Finals — where they lost to Bryant and the Lakers.

But he decided a couple of years later that he wanted out of Orlando, and the Magic eventually gave his agent permission to negotiate with the Nets, Mavericks and Lakers about arranging a trade.

Yet Howard would later agree to not opt for free agency, remaining with the Magic for the 2011-12 season. Howard's season ended prematurely when he needed back surgery, and Orlando finally dealt him to Los Angeles.

The Lakers' season was a disappointment, with Bryant, Gasol and Steve Nash all missing time with injuries. They never developed any chemistry, getting swept in the first round of the playoffs by San Antonio.

The Rockets believe he'll find that chemistry in Houston.

"We have good teammates. They're young. They're guys who are great not only on the floor but off. He's going to get along great with our team," Morey said in an interview with Comcast SportsNet Houston.

Busch and Kenseth sweep Daytona front row for JGR

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Kyle Busch and Matt Kenseth had two of the strongest cars in the season-opening Daytona 500 but had nothing to show for it after a pair of engine failures.

The Joe Gibbs Racing duo is determined not to let that happen Saturday night in their return to Daytona International Speedway.

Busch and Kenseth swept the front row in Friday qualifying, with Busch turning a lap at 193.723 mph to win the pole. Kenseth was second at 193.299.

It's Busch's third pole of the season, 13th of his career, but first ever for a restrictor plate race.

"I've not had many opportunities for me to win poles at restrictor plate races, so I've got to thank the team, all the guys at Joe Gibbs Racing that did such a good job building a slick race car," Busch said. "It's a team effort coming to these places and having great race cars. I'm really excited to be starting up front, especially with my teammate Matt Kenseth on the front row with us."

Busch

Kenseth

Kenseth led 86 laps at Daytona in February and was out front with teammates Busch and Denny Hamlin right behind him when his engine failed. Two laps later, Busch was headed to the garage with his own race-ending failure.

"We were lined up 1-2-3 when I broke and Kyle broke shortly after that," said Kenseth. "Our plate stuff has been really fast this year. Qualifying doesn't always mean a lot at a superspeedway, but it's nice to start up front. Hopefully we can keep it up and stay in front of any potential trouble."

Clint Bowyer qualified second and Michael Waltrip Racing teammate Martin Truex Jr. was fifth as Toyota drivers took four of the first five spots. MWR team co-owner Michael Waltrip was seventh.

It was a strong showing for the Toyota drivers, who have battled various engine woes all season as manufacturer Toyota Racing Development has struggled to find the right balance of speed and durability.

Kenseth was pleased with the showing.

"They are always looking to get more power and you are always trying to get better reliability," Kenseth said. "A huge part of our success all year has obviously been our engines and TRD. They are a very important piece not only to our success at Joe Gibbs Racing but also Michael Waltrip Racing."

Bowyer then interrupted Kenseth.

"It's not really fair. Yours was better than mine," Bowyer said of being outqualified by the JGR duo.

Kasey Kahne prevented a Toyota sweep by wedging his Chevrolet in at fourth. He's had terrible results at plate tracks this year because he was wrecked in the Daytona 500 and at Talladega by Busch.

On Saturday, Kahne will start in the row behind Busch. But Busch wasn't expecting intentional payback.

"That's a real legitimate question?" Busch said when asked if he was concerned about Kahne. "I think we know that Kasey is a lot better than that. No, it doesn't have any worry or concern on me."

Paul Menard was sixth in a Chevrolet, and MWR co-owner Michael Waltrip was seventh in another Toyota.

Daytona 500 winner Jimmie Johnson was eighth, followed by rookie Ricky Stenhouse Jr. and his Roush-Fenway Racing teammate Greg Biffle as the highest-qualifying Fords.

Danica Patrick wound up 11th in in her return to Daytona, where she became the first woman to start from the pole in the season-opening Daytona 500.

"Wind definitely plays a factor even from qualifying here at the beginning of the year for the 500 when we were on the pole there was certain spots that I gained and lost on that lap," Patrick said. "We kind of figured it was probably a wind thing."

Matt Kenseth wins Nationwide race at Daytona

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Matt Kenseth pulled away from traffic on the final restart of Friday night's Nationwide Series race, cruising to a comfortable win at Daytona International Speedway.

The race was on pace to be one of the fastest in Daytona history until a late accident brought out a red-flag stoppage that lasted nearly 10 minutes.

There were only two laps remaining when the race resumed and Kenseth paired up with defending Truck Series champion James Buescher on the restart. The two easily broke away from the pack, leaving everyone else racing for third place.

Kenseth and Buescher weren't challenged to the finish, with Kenseth taking the win and Buescher finishing second.

It was a turn of events after the tandem of Sam Hornish Jr. and Joey Logano had dominated to lead 64 of the 101 laps.

"It didn't matter who I was pushing or who was pushing me, we couldn't run with those two," Kenseth said of Logano and Hornish. "But with (Buescher) pushing me, we could. We had speed. So it was important to keep him with me. He did a really good job up getting us up to the lead and putting us in a position to try to win, so I wanted to make sure I stuck with him.

"He did a really, really good job pushing there."

Buescher stayed put once on Kenseth's bumper.

"We got together and went right to the front. I knew then I had to stay committed to him until the end of the race or as long as we could with the restarts," Buescher said. "He was the first car all weekend we've been able to push for a long period of time."

Third went to Elliott Sadler, who picked up a $100,000 bonus from series sponsor Nationwide as the highest finishing driver in the "Dash 4 Cash" program. The cooling box in Sadler's car broke right before the race, forcing him to finish on a steamy summer night with no air conditioning.

"It's hot, but that's what we train for. That's what we get ready for," said Sadler, who admitted to feeling nauseous while sitting in the car during the red flag.

Kurt Busch finished fourth in a car designed with the beloved City Chevrolet paint scheme from the "Days of Thunder" movie. He and the Phoenix Racing crew spent much of the race in character with Busch as Cole Trickle reciting Tom Cruise's movie lines.

"It was a great race, a lot of fun focusing on strategy, drafting partners and then switching over to the movie quotes and having fun," Busch said. "It was a shame we didn't get into Victory Lane. I wanted to have a foot race ... all the way down pit road to Victory Lane."

Every takes lead, Lefty misses cut at Greenbrier

By John Raby
Associated Press

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va. — The first page of the Greenbrier Classic leaderboard is filled with golfers who'll get to do something they're unaccustomed to lately: Playing on the weekend.

Matt Every shot an 8-under 62 on Friday for a one-stroke lead over five other players midway through the Greenbrier Classic.

Every needed just 26 putts during his best round of the year and is at 9 under for the tournament on the Old White TPC course. He missed four putts inside 12 feet that could have made his bogey-free second round even more special.

"I played really well tee to green, finally made some putts," Every said. "I haven't made anything all year and it just finally happened today. Been waiting for it."

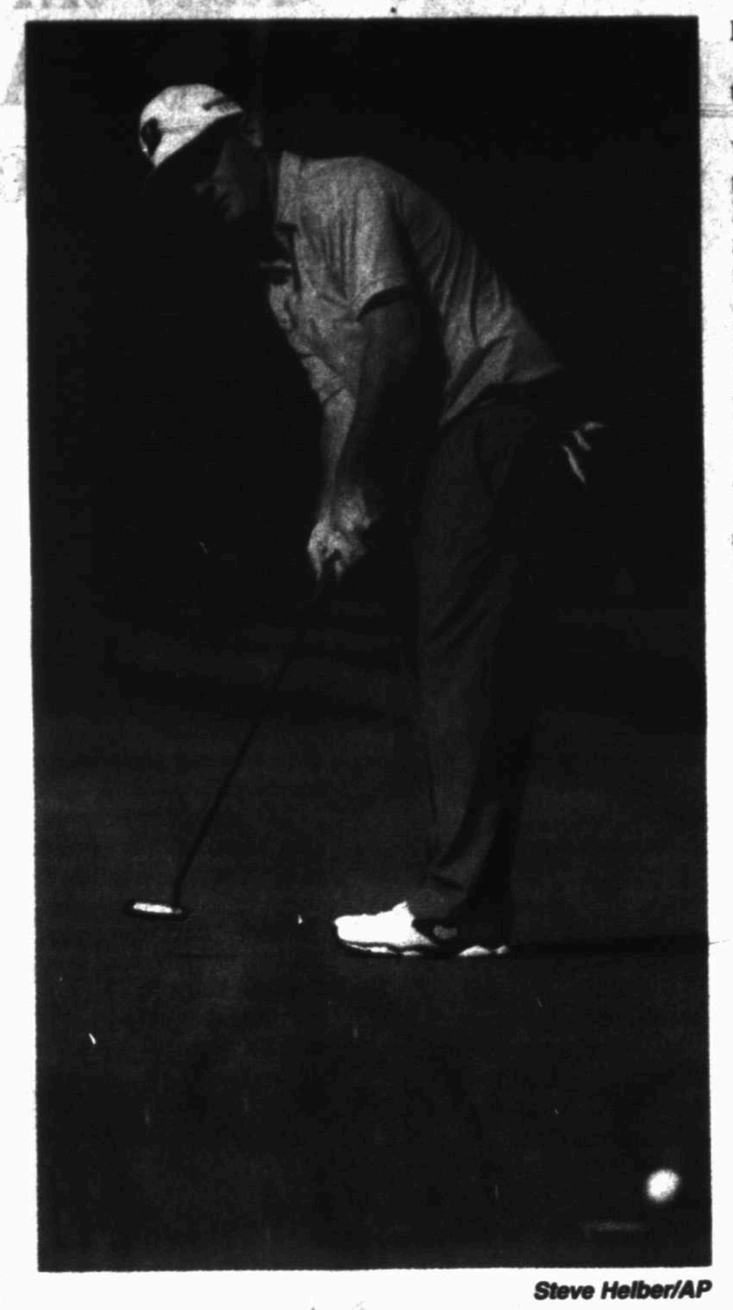
Every has been in this position before, leading after the first round of the 2012 Texas Open and tying for the third-round lead at the 2012 Sony Open, yet the 29-year-old is still looking for his first PGA Tour victory.

"I know I can win out here," he said.

One stroke behind him at 8 under are Russell Henley (65), Bill Lunde (66), Daniel Summerhays (67), Steven Bowditch (67) and first-round co-leader Johnson Wagner (70).

Four others are two shots behind at 7 under. Ben Curtis and Greg Owen each shot 66, Jonas Blixt had a 67 and first-round co-leader Tommy Gainey a 71.

The posh Greenbrier resort is in a small town named for its hot spring waters that the locals have touted for centuries for their healing qualities. It seems as though the Greenbrier Classic is doing wonders for some golfers, too.



Steve Helber/AP

Matt Every watches his birdie putt roll past the hole on the eighth green during the second round of the Greenbrier Classic at the Greenbrier in White Sulphur Springs, W.Va. on Friday.

Prior to this week, Wagner went seven straight tournaments without advancing to the third round. Other streaks that were broken this week were five straight for Lunde, four for Bowditch and three for Summerhays.

Every had missed cuts in four of his last five tournaments, and Owen and Curtis had in three in their last four. Gainey made the cut for only the 10th time in 23 tries.

"It's coming down to the end of the year," Every said. "It's a big week for a lot of people. If you play good it can change your life."

Henley is an exception with one missed cut in his last four tournaments, which includes a sixth-place finish at the Memorial.

He's 16th in the FedEx Cup points standings. Every (104th) and Summerhays (123) are the only other players within two shots of the lead who are in the top 125 in the FedEx Cup standings.

The playoffs are less than two months away.

"It's crunch time," Wagner said. "We've got to make these playoffs. It's a short year. Fortunately I'm exempt for next year due to my win at the (2012) Sony Open, but I still want to finish in that top 125 and have a chance to win the FedEx Cup. I'm sure a bunch of guys up there are kind of in the same position I am — really needing to have some good weeks to extend our years."

The tournament could be shaping up for another close finish. It has been decided by playoffs the last two years, and Stuart Appleby won by a stroke in the inaugural tournament in 2010 after shooting a 59.

Among a group of six golfers at 6 under includes Jordan Spieth, the 19-year-old Texan in search of an elusive win that would give him his PGA Tour membership and make him eligible for the FedEx Cup playoffs. He's won more than $1.1 million this year and is assured of a tour card when the new season starts in October.

Others advancing to the weekend include Kenny Perry at 5 under and Tom Watson at 3 under.

Because 81 players made the cut Friday at 1 under, there will be a 54-hole cut to get to the top 70 scores, plus ties.

Phil Mickelson is already assured of getting the weekend off. He shot 68 on Friday and finished at 2 over.

It marked the first time in his career that Mickelson missed three consecutive cuts at one tournament. Mickelson blamed his lackluster showings at the Greenbrier Classic on estimating distances with his iron shots.

"They end up not just a yard or two off from where I figure, but they're 10 or 12 yards off from where I figure," he said.

Hernandez grand jury to hear from shooting victim

By Michael Melia
Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. — A Connecticut man who says he lost an eye after being shot by Aaron Hernandez in February was ordered Friday to appear before a grand jury in Massachusetts that is considering the murder case against the former New England Patriots tight end.

Superior Court Judge Joan Alexander in Hartford ordered Alexander Bradley to appear July 17 in Fall River, Mass., where a grand jury is looking into allegations Hernandez orchestrated the shooting of Odin Lloyd, according to a clerk for the court.

Lloyd, a 27-year-old semi-pro football player for the Boston Bandits, was found slain June 17 near Hernandez's home in North Attleborough, Mass. Prosecutors say Hernandez arranged Lloyd's shooting because he was upset at him for talking to certain people at a nightclub.

Hernandez has been charged with murder in district court in Massachusetts but a grand jury indictment or probable cause hearing would be necessary for him to face trial on felony charges. Hernandez, 23, has pleaded not guilty.

The Bristol County district attorney's office in Massachusetts said it could not comment on any grand jury investigation.

Bradley, 33, has filed a civil lawsuit against Hernandez, asserting he was shot in the face by the former player in February as they were driving in Florida after arguing in a Miami strip club.

At the time, he told police he did not know who had shot him.

Bradley had been fighting an interstate grand jury subpoena, asserting he needed to return to Florida for medical treatment on July 10.

Attorney Robert Pickering argued Friday that Bradley's civil case has nothing to do with the Massachusetts investigation.

"The Commonwealth of Massachusetts is relying on a statement of a lawyer of Mr. Bradley that these crimes are strikingly similar to the crime in the Hernandez matter," he said. "Clearly this petition states that my client has never stated that."

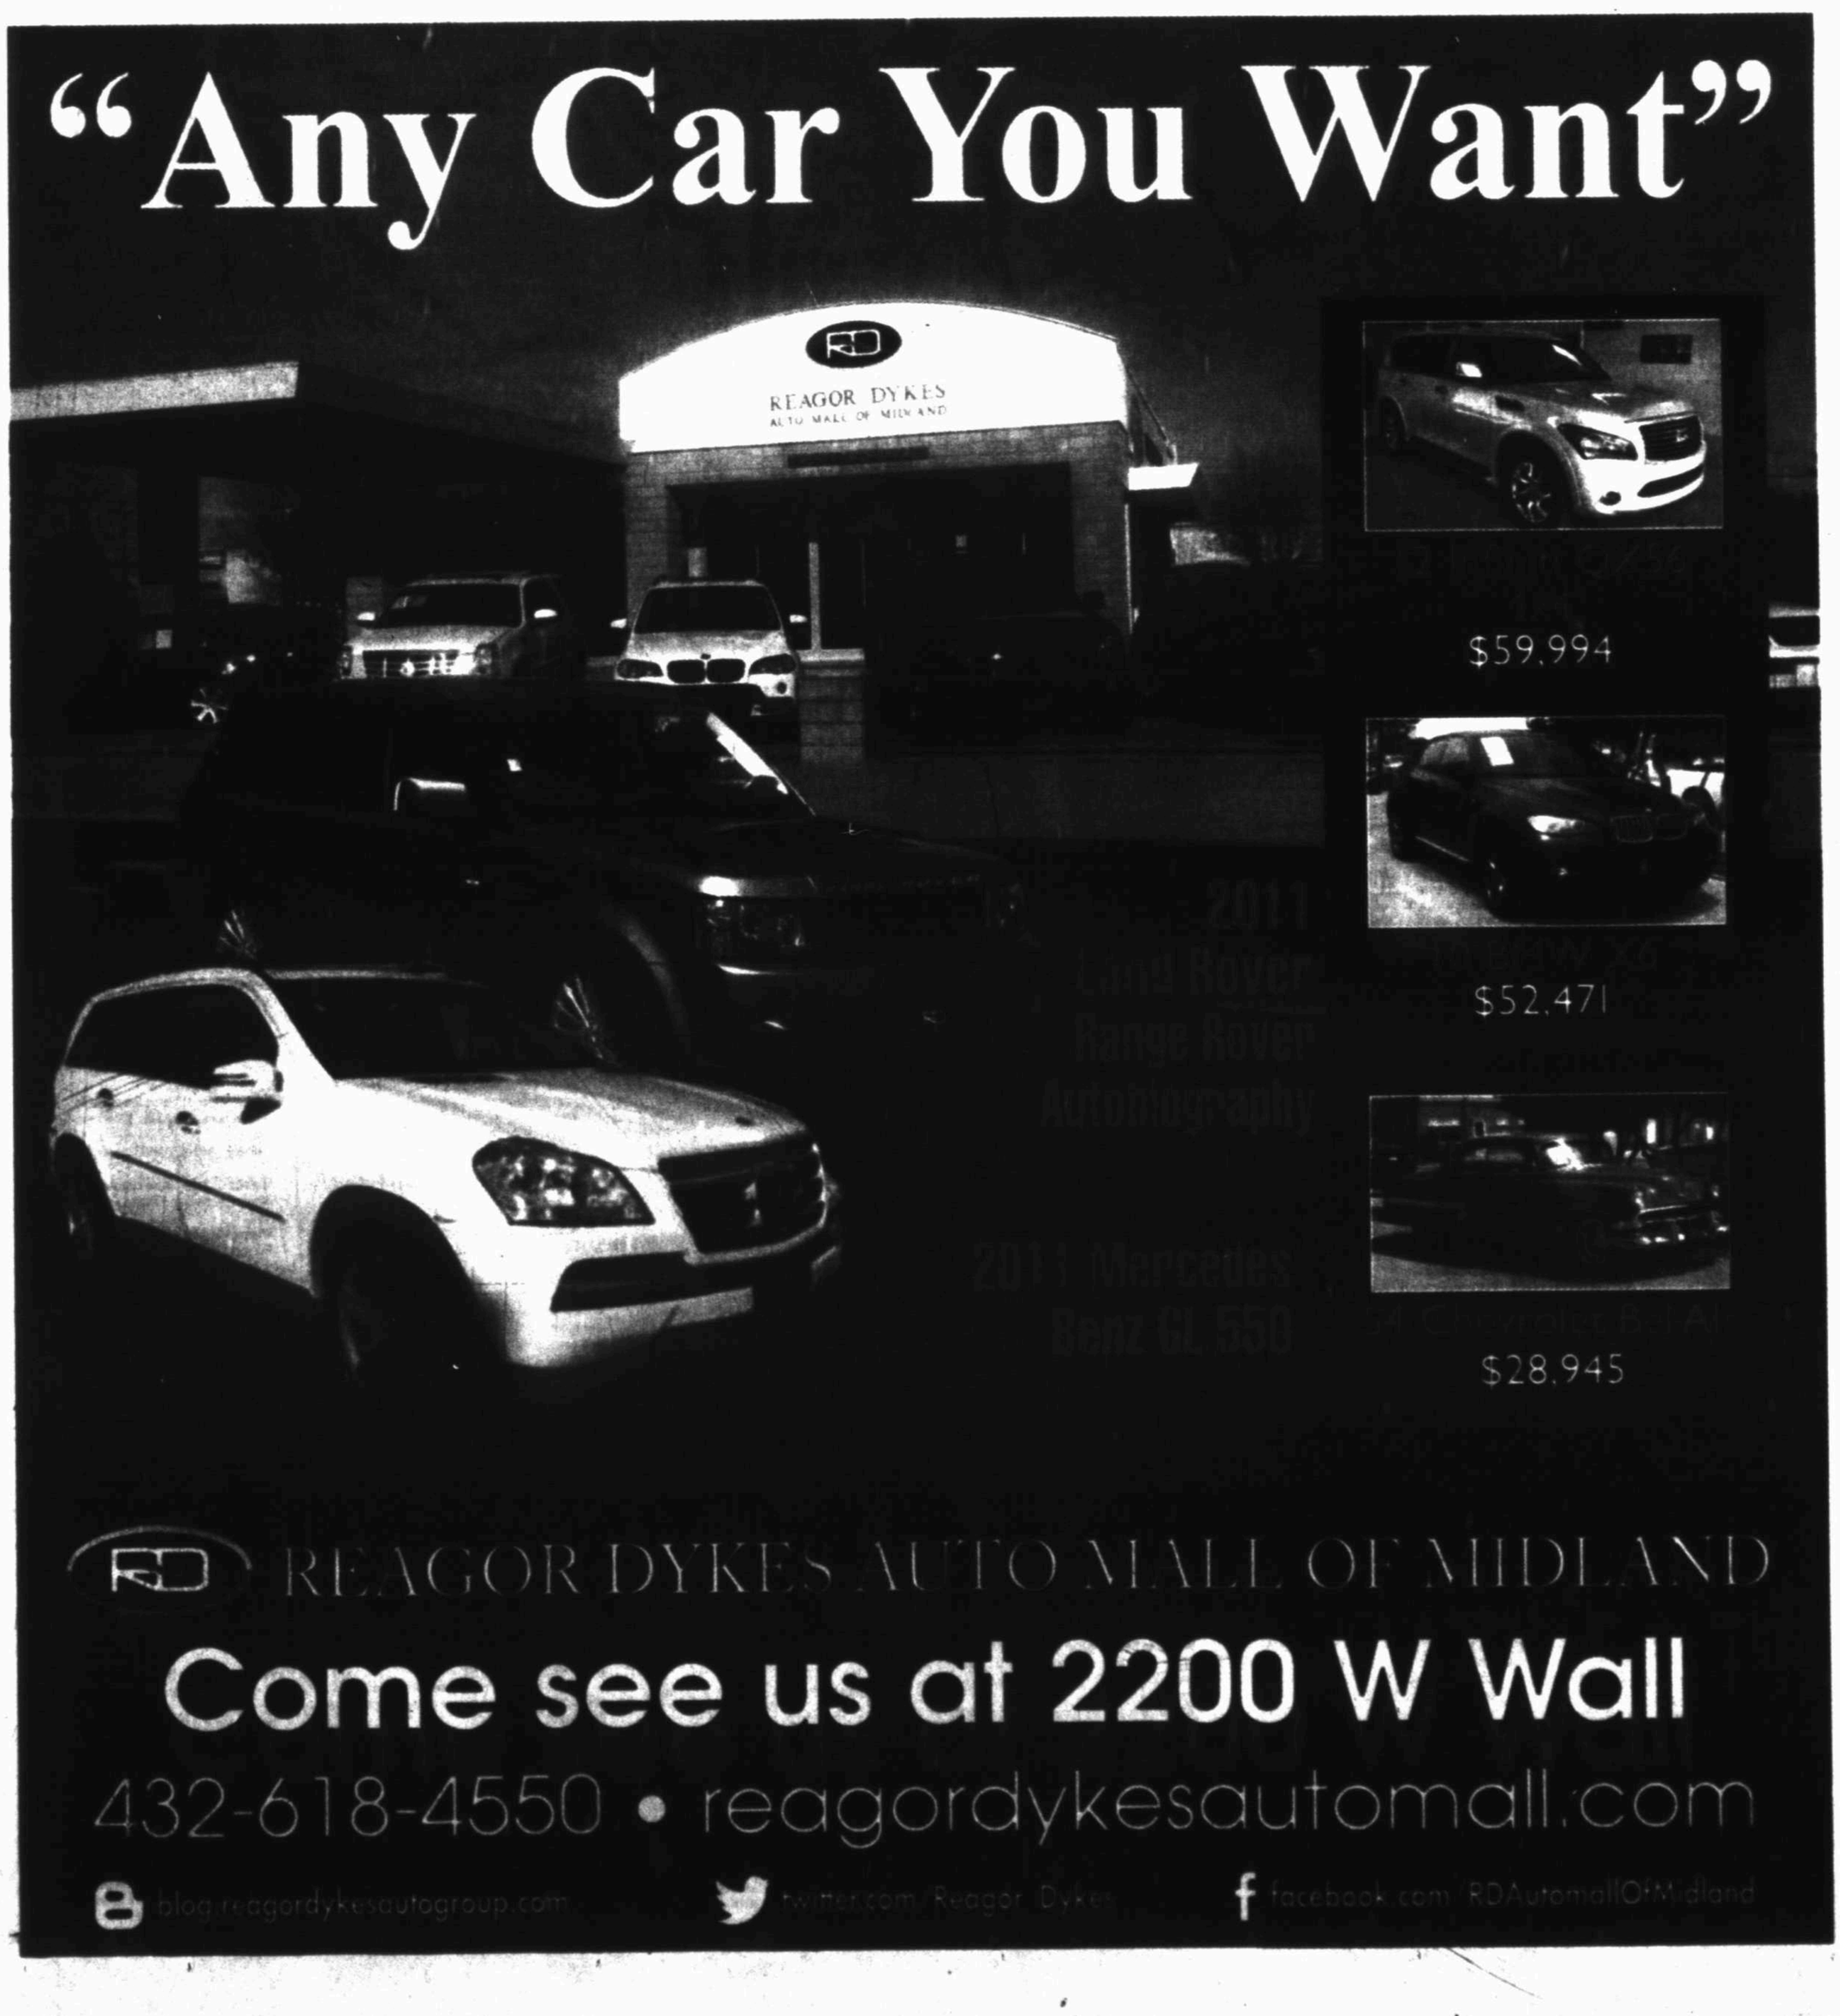
Alexander found that Bradley's medical treatment should not prevent him from being in Massachusetts a week later.

Also Friday, a man wanted as an accessory after the fact in the Lloyd killing was turned over in Florida to Massachusetts authorities.

Ernest Wallace, 41, had been held in the Broward County, Fla., jail since surrendering to police in Miramar, Fla., last week. A Broward sheriff's office spokesman said Wallace was released to Massachusetts officers Friday afternoon.

Wallace's arraignment has not been scheduled, said Greg Miliote, a spokesman for the Bristol district attorney's office. He said no specifics of Wallace's travel would be announced for security reasons.

Prosecutors say Wallace and another man, Carlos Ortiz, were with Hernandez when they drove with Lloyd to an industrial park where Lloyd was shot. Police haven't said who shot Lloyd. Ortiz, who lives in Hernandez's hometown of Bristol, Conn., has been charged with carrying a firearm the day of the shooting.



Now things get serious at Tour de France

By Jerome Pugmire
Associated Press

Christophe Ena/AP

Daryl Impey, left, wearing the overall leader's jersey, and Peter Sagan, right, wearing the best sprinter's jersey, ride in the pack during the seventh stage of the Tour de France over 128.5 miles with start in Montpellier and finish in Albi, southern France on Friday.

ALBI, France — When they sit down late today for the ritual they call the "apero" — meaning nibbles and alcoholic drinks — the French still won't know who is going to win their beloved Tour de France this year.

They, however, might have a much clearer idea of who won't win it.

Riders who don't have the legs to carry them to victory in Paris, who have been bluffing and pretending to be strong in the first third of the 2,115-mile Tour, could be cruelly exposed today when the race sharply gains altitude in the Pyrenees mountains where France and Spain meet.

Although the two climbs on the menu aren't the most brutal of this 100th Tour, they're still tough enough to make all but the strongest riders struggle. Just how decisive the ascents prove will depend on how aggressive, ambitious and confident the strongest climbers are feeling. If they want to test overall race favorites Chris Froome and Alberto Contador, or if those two want to test each other, then Stage 8 offers the first real opportunity for them to do so.

"It depends if people want to hold their cards close to their chests or if they want to come out swinging," said American rider Tejay van Garderen. "I expect for them to come out swinging, so there should probably be some big gaps."

Almost certainly, Daryl Impey's second day in the race leader's yellow jersey on Saturday will be his last, at least this year. The first South African to wear that prized shirt doesn't have the uphill bursts of speed to stay with Froome, Contador and other contenders for overall victory should they go at each other like hammer and tongs up to the Col de Pailheres, immediately followed by a slightly less arduous ascent to the Ax 3 Domaines ski station.

Impey is convinced Froome will be wearing yellow in Paris on July 21.

"The climbing ability he's shown, he's definitely nearly in a league of his own. He's obviously a different climber to Contador, but I think Chris is going to be hard to beat."

On a stage that, with the mountains looming, felt like the calm before a storm, Peter Sagan from Slovakia won the finishing sprint Friday in Albi, an enchanting medieval city on the banks of the Tarn river, dominated by its 13th century fortified brick-built Sainte-Cecile Cathedral and listed as a World Heritage site by the United Nations' cultural agency, UNESCO. Impey rode strongly to stay in Sagan's bunch and keep the race lead he inherited from teammate Simon Gerrans on Thursday.

Sagan is running away with the Tour's chase for the green jersey, awarded to the rider who collects most points from sprints at the end of stages and during them. He won that jersey last year, too. Sagan is known both for his speed and versatility as a rider.

He has been all business since the Tour set off from Corsica on June 29. Since he was bloodied in a crash on the first day, Sagan has never finished lower than third in a stage (not including the team time trial on Stage 4) — with three second places, one third place and now a win on Stage 7. It took the pack up four moderate climbs on a 127.7-mile slog in intense heat from Montpellier.

Assuming Impey surrenders the race lead on Saturday, the 2012 Tour will get its fifth different wearer of the yellow jersey. The record at a single Tour is eight, which happened in both 1958 and 1987.

The 9.5-mile long climb to Pailheres, topping out at an altitude of 6,500 feet is tougher than the shorter ascent to Ax. But that last climb might be more decisive because it comes at the very end of the stage, meaning it could turn into an uphill sprint finish.

"We'll know who has already lost the Tour and the contenders for victory," said Alain Gallopin, a director on the RadioShack-Leopard team. "There'll be no more secrets, no bluff."

RadioShack-Leopard's main contender for overall victory, 2010 winner Andy Schleck, on Friday lamented the team's decision to cut ties with his brother Frank — the third-place finisher in 2011 who is absent from this Tour because he is completing a one-year ban for testing positive for a diuretic at last year's race.

"I'm sad and disappointed, and if I tell you what I honestly think they might use it against me and fire me as well," Andy Schleck said.

Italy threatens to sit out America's Cup opener

By Bernie Wilson
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — An already troubled America's Cup took a wacky tack Friday when Luna Rossa threatened to sit out the opening race of the challenger series, prompting the boss of the American defender to call the Italians "a bunch of spoiled rich kids dressed in Prada gear."

It just wouldn't be an America's Cup without a controversy and some smack talk.

The only difference this time is the tiff has its roots in changes made following the death of British sailor Andrew "Bart" Simpson on May 9 in the capsize of Artemis Racing's 72-foot catamaran.

That accident led regatta director Iain Murray to make 37 safety recommendations, including changes to the rudders that he says will make the high-performance, 72-foot catamarans more stable, particularly as they speed downwind riding only on hydrofoils.

Luna Rossa and Team New Zealand have protested, saying Murray doesn't have the authority to unilaterally change the rules. They say their boats were designed and built under the old rules and they don't have time to build new rudders and, perhaps more importantly, test them. They've also said they feel the change gives an advantage to defending champion Oracle Team USA, which doesn't have to race until the start of the 34th America's Cup on Sept. 7.

The opening race of the Louis Vuitton Cup for challengers is set for Sunday, between Luna Rossa and Team New Zealand.

The protest is scheduled to be heard Monday. Murray said the jury is from the International Sailing Federation and sets its own schedule. He said the jury members have been in town since Wednesday and there's a chance the issue could be mediated before Sunday.

America's Cup officials have said all the boats are "street legal" regardless of what rudders they have.

"We may decide to not take part in the race on Sunday," Italian skipper Max Sirena said at a news conference Friday. "The main reason for that is just because, I mean, we want to wait for the hearing of the jury and then we'll make our plan on top of that."

Later, Sirena interrupted a questioner and said: "We just feel it's unfair and against our principal what is going on. ... We are here to race but we will not race without a fair rule. We don't have to accept change of the rules one week before the race."

Sirena didn't get any sympathy from fellow competitors.

Russell Coutts, a four-time America's Cup winner who's the CEO of Oracle Team USA, later called the Italians "a bunch of spoiled rich kids dressed in Prada gear."

Luna Rossa, which has competed in the America's Cup since 2000, is backed by the Prada fashion house.

Juan Martin Del Potro reacts after missing a return to Novak Djokovic during their semifinal match at Wimbledon, London on Friday.

WIMBLEDON

us today."

Eighth-seeded Del Potro, back in a Grand Slam semifinal for the first time since winning the 2009 U.S. Open, saved two match points in the fourth-set tiebreaker, then won the final four points to take it 8-6.

Shortly after, the match hit the 4-hour mark, guaranteeing it would surpass the 1989 match between Boris Becker and Ivan Lendl — a 4-hour, 1-minute affair — as the longest semifinal in Wimbledon's long history.

It's not the first time Djokovic has been involved in one of these. His 2012 Australian Open victory over Nadal lasted 5 hours, 53-minutes. Only a month ago, Nadal outlasted Djokovic at Roland Garros in a semifinal that went 4 hours, 37 minutes.

"When you feel good physically, when you know you're fit and you don't feel a huge fatigue, that gives you mental confidence, obviously," Djokovic said.

Sliding on the grass-turned-dirt behind the baseline, doing the occasional splits and, at one point, diving for a shot, then laying on the ground, face-down in despair, Djokovic put on a stellar show, filled with 80 winners but also lots of counterpunching, always making his 6-foot-6 opponent hit one more shot.

Despite the pressure of the match, both players took it for what it was: sports entertainment at its finest. Del Potro played to the crowd and also exchanged a few fun back-and-forths with his opponent. In the sixth game of the fourth set, the Argentine chased down a drop volley and flicked a forehand down the line. His momentum carried him to the other side of the court and the shot was called out.

Should he challenge?

"He asked me, What's going on?' I said, 'Listen, if I was you, I would challenge,'" Djokovic recounted. "He said, 'No, but you know it's out and don't waste my challenge.' I said, 'OK, you decide whatever you want. But truly, I'm not lying to you.'"

All this was done with smiles on their faces. Del Potro opted against the challenge but won the fourth set anyway, putting his 4-6 lifetime record in five-setters against Djokovic's mark of 18-7.

Djokovic's fitness played a big role in landing him the decisive break in the fifth set.

It came with del Potro serving behind 4-3. With the score 15-all, Djokovic hit a drop shot-lob combo to close out a breathtaking 22-shot rally. Del Potro dropped his hands onto his knees and clearly hadn't regained his wind on the next point, when he sliced an easy backhand into the net. Two points later, Djokovic had the break, and the 5-3 lead.

He saved a break point in the final game by hitting an off-balance drop shot winner off a del Potro serve return that clipped the net cord. Two points later, Djokovic had his 53rd career win on grass — 24 more than del Potro.

"You can see I played my best tennis ever on grass court," del Potro said, "but was not enough to beat the No. 1 in the world. I was so close."

It was quite a taxing stay at Wimbledon for del Potro, who came into the semifinal with his left knee heavily taped, a victim of two nasty slips that sent him tumbling earlier in the tournament. The second fall came two days earlier, on the fifth point of his quarterfinal against David Ferrer. Del Potro said the trainer gave him a couple of "magic pills" — anti-inflammatories — and that kept him going in his straight-sets win over the No. 4 seed.

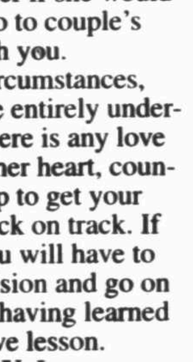
DEAR ABBY



Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Her column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 14 and for as long as I can remember, my family has never really been "together." We exist with each other physically, but have never connected in a loving way. I can't remember my father ever smiling at my mom or being happy. There seems to be an undercurrent of hostility or resentment in our relationships with each other. The lack of love in our house is palpable.

I wonder sometimes what it's like to eat dinner together at night, and what it's like to see parents kiss because they love each other — not a stressed, distant, obligated contact.

I finally asked my mother, "Why don't you ever hug me?" Her answer was, "Because I can't remember the last time you tried to hug me."

I'm crying as I write this. Why doesn't my mother understand that kindness is necessary and should not be conditional? — TROUBLED GIRL IN FLORIDA

DEAR TROUBLED: Your mother may have been raised in a loveless home and not know how to easily demonstrate affection. Or her marriage to your father could be so unhappy that she has shut down.

You are a perceptive girl, and it is understandable that you are "troubled." But the only person who can answer the question you have asked me is your mother, who appears to need to receive kindness and affection before she will be able to give it. Make an effort to hug her more and the situation may improve.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 33-year-old man who has screwed up his marriage. I stupidly had a fling with my wife's 16-year-old cousin and got in trouble for it. I never lied about it because I knew it was wrong, and I am deeply sorry for it. It happened more than a year ago. I ended up serving time in jail.

I love my wife. She is my best friend. We have no kids, just some great dogs and horses. We were very close until I went to jail, and the last day I was in there I got served with divorce papers.

I can't blame her for how she feels. She says she loves me but she's too hurt to continue. I love her, and I'm devastated that I can't fix this.

I have known her for 20 years, and she means so much to me. I want to save our marriage, and for the last year I have expressed repeatedly how sorry I am. Any advice? — SORRY IN TENNESSEE

DEAR SORRY: Tell your wife (if the divorce isn't final) that you are willing to do anything to save your marriage and ask her if she would be willing to go to couple's counseling with you.

Under the circumstances, her feelings are entirely understandable. If there is any love for you left in her heart, counseling may help to get your relationship back on track. If she refuses, you will have to accept her decision and go on with your life, having learned a very expensive lesson.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 23-year-old gay male who is interested in doing drag. Due to being unable to find work, I am hoping I can turn performing in drag into a source of income. I am not afraid to perform in front of crowds of people, so this could be a good idea. Do you think it is? — POTENTIAL SUPERSTAR IN PHILADELPHIA

DEAR SUPERSTAR: It's not a bad idea. Your next step is to audition to see if you have the ability and the looks to succeed.

While drag is a narrow niche of show business, some performers have had successful careers in that area — and you might, too. You'll never know if you don't give it a try.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The stars show the kind of day you'll have: 5-dynamic; 4-positive; 3-average; 2-so-so; 1-difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, July 6, 2013:

This year you deal with your anger rather than suppress it. Whether this transformation happens by choice or because of a ramification of bottling up your feelings, it makes no difference. The end result will be excellent. If you are single, you could attract quite a few suitors. The person who makes your heart flutter will be important to your life history. If you are attached, the two of you will enjoy each other's company more, once you are willing to be more vulnerable. A fellow CANCER might be as moody as you are.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★★ You have an abundance of energy. If you can get involved in some kind of sport, you will feel great. Try to schedule more physical activities in your daily life. A partner would like you to invest some of your energy into your shared ventures. Tonight: Happy to be close to home.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★ In the morning, you might greet a major expense or wish to make a purchase. By the afternoon, you could be totally distracted. You even might be heard saying: "What purchase?" Catch up on a neighbor's news. Tonight: A spontaneous happening is occurring where you are.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★ Tap into your high energy. You could wonder what is enough, as someone keeps asking you to do this or that. You might want to say "no" before you explode. There is no reason to take on all of the requests and responsibilities that are being dumped on you. Tonight: Your treat.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★ Nothing happens unless you start acting on a decision. If you want to pave a new path, know that others will follow. You also will discover that this choice seems to bring more luck into your life. You can dream all you want, but remember to follow through! Tonight: All smiles.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★ Plans with friends evolve into a spontaneous, fun activity. One person in particular still might be out of sorts. Opt to pull back a bit and become an observer once again. How you deal with various situations more often than not is through detachment. Tonight: Not to be found.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★ You could feel overwhelmed by a pushy adult or some older family members. Words will be exchanged, and the rest will be history. Be kind when dealing with a friend whom you really care about. Make sure that you handle one interaction at a time. Tonight: A must appearance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★ Acknowledge someone at a distance. What is happening with this person could be more of a problem than you would like to handle right now. The consequences of ignoring the situation might be harsh. Check in with a parent or an older relative. Tonight: In the limelight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★ A loved one puts you in your place. Listen carefully to this person, as his or her comments probably have some validity. You can launch a disagreement or detach. If you detach, you might understand where this person is coming from. Tonight: Join a friend for a jam session.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★ You can do whatever you want, as long as you make it a point to appease someone who is on the warpath. Let this person go through his or her tirade. Keep in mind that he or she is likely to make the first gesture anyway. Stay levelheaded and calm. Tonight: The only answer is "yes."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★★ You might understand where someone is coming from, but you could feel too irritable to deal with the situation right now. Make plans with loved ones or a friend for later in the afternoon. Camaraderie and laughter will abound. Tonight: Let the party go on and on.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★ Observe how someone handles what is happening. A lot might go down with a child or new friend. Understand that if this person did not care, he or she would not be so upset. Once the dust settles, make a caring gesture. Think before you speak. Tonight: Know when to call it a night.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★ You could be more irritable than you realize. You might wonder what is happening with a family member who also might be grumpy. Go off and participate in an activity you love. As a result, you will feel prepared to deal with your issues. Tonight: Do something spontaneous.

THIS IS Emmy & Olivia. They were dumped out in the country to fend for themselves. Now they have been rescued and have both been spayed and had all of their shots. The vet thinks Olivia is 3 and Emmy is one. Both are very affectionate and love to play. They are great with my kids and have never met a stranger. They love to swim and snuggle. I would like to keep them together if at all possible because they seem so bonded but would separate if I could find them both the perfect home. They must be allowed indoors and you must have a fenced in yard. They are such special girls and we have grown to love them. They deserve the perfect forever home. Relax and unwind.

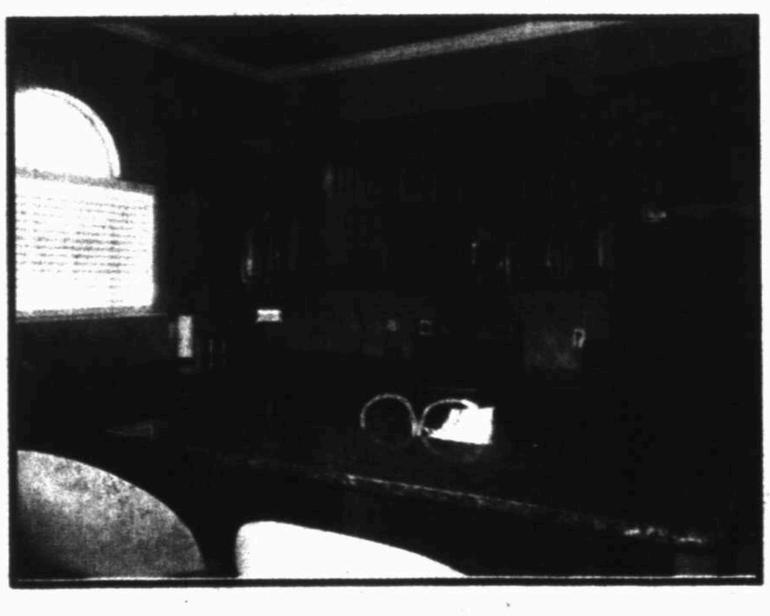
If you're looking for a piece of the quiet countryside, you've found it in this lovely brick-and-stone home. Located in Las Colinas, this 2,510 square foot home of four bedrooms and two baths was built in 2009 and is situated on 1-acre of land in Greenwood.

Walking into this open concept living space, you can immediately see yourself putting your own special touches to this house. With neutral colors throughout, the décor is ready to harmonize with your favorite shades. The living room features hardwood floors, recessed lighting and crown molding. The large open area lends a perfect space for visiting with friends, having a family game night or curling up with a favorite movie. With a unique architectural arch and columns leading from the living room to the kitchen, this home clearly states that it is one-of-a-kind. The kitchen is both functional and inviting with a U-shape layout, center island with breakfast bar, granite countertops, oak cabinets, and spacious pantry. The large window over the kitchen sink lends lots of light for cooking and creating memories.

The utility room just off the garage entry is thoughtfully designed with multiple storage cabinets and a location central to the living room and master bedroom.

The master bedroom and bath are located on the north side of the house, creating a sequestered suite perfect for rest and relaxation. The same neutral color palette highlights crown molding and a tray ceiling in the bedroom. The tiled master bathroom features double sinks, granite countertops, a separate tub and shower and a generous walk-in closet.



The front bedroom of the house boasts vaulted ceilings and a large bay window with plenty of natural light. The two other bedrooms of the home are outfitted with walk-in closets and plush carpet. The second bathroom is enhanced with granite countertops and a tiled tub/shower combination.

You'll be seeing green as soon as you step out of doors on this property. Moving to the front of the home, you'll continually be enticed into the space with plenty of green grass and drought-resistant flowers and shrubs for pops of color and eye-catching curb appeal. A large fenced backyard and covered patio provide impressive space for everyone to grab sunshine and shade. An insulated 24 ft. by 30 ft. shop has two electric plugs for recreational vehicle use and is a great place to store one's toys, restore a vehicle or even throw a party. The wide concrete driveway provides adequate parking for guests and leads into both the shop and double car garage attached to the house.

This gently lived in home is listed at $333,000. For more information, please call Sandy J. Hanson at her office (432) 618-0613, or her cell (432) 638-3819 or email her at sandy@sandyjhason.com. MLS#

Ask the Guys

Dear Classified Guys,

It's been a few years since my wife and I have traveled. That's because we've been busy raising four kids through high school and college. The last one just left for a job across country. With four kids all around the U.S., my wife and I want to travel to visit them and see the country. We figured the best way to do it is in a motorhome. That way we can have the comforts of home, like a bed and kitchen, at an economical price. Best of all, we don't have to impose on our children when we get there. I think they'll appreciate that. The question is, how do we narrow down the search? I'm smart enough to buy a good used vehicle, but everything I read from RV'ers say that no matter which RV we purchase, the first one is never the right one! Is there any way you guys can help us buy the right one the first time?

Cash: After raising four kids, you guys deserve a vacation! And what better way to celebrate than traveling the country?

Carry: Even with high gas prices, driving a recreational vehicle, or RV, is more economical than other means if you want to cover a lot of territory. And, like you said, it does allow you to travel with many of the comforts of home.

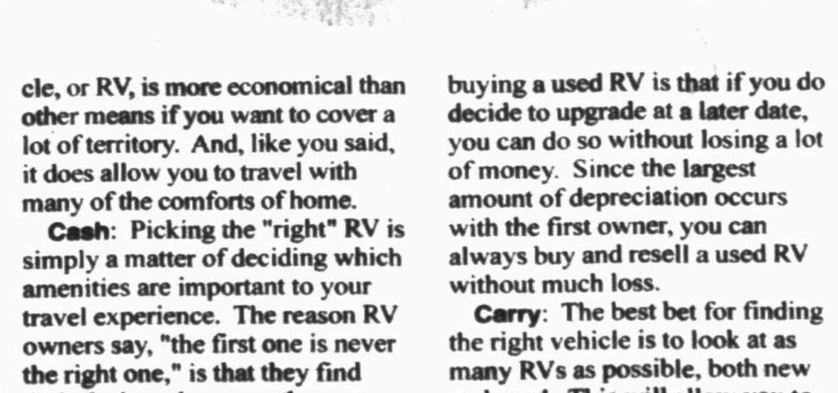
Cash: Picking the "right" RV is simply a matter of deciding which amenities are important to your travel experience. The reason RV owners say, "the first one is never the right one," is that they find their desires change as they use the vehicle.

Carry: While some travelers like to keep it simple with a small bed and kitchen, others want a large refrigerator or big screen television.

Cash: The fortunate part of buying a used RV is that if you do decide to upgrade at a later date, you can do so without losing a lot of money. Since the largest amount of depreciation occurs with the first owner, you can always buy and resell a used RV without much loss.

Carry: The best bet for finding the right vehicle is to look at as many RVs as possible, both new and used. This will allow you to find out the features that are available, and which ones may be important to your trip.

Cash: However, be careful of buying a RV that's too nice. When you visit your kids, they may just opt to move in with you!



Fast Facts

Travel Lodge

From small pop-up campers to luxurious bus type vehicles, today's RV'ers travel in style. With options like plasma TVs or full-working kitchens and bathrooms, some vehicles are more luxurious than their owner's homes. It's no wonder that nearly eight million households now own at least one RV. That's a 15% increase over the past several years, putting at least one RV in every twelve households. Estimates expect the number of owners to increase another half million.

Get Lost?

It used to be that you were assured of two things on a trip: Your husband would hot stop to ask for directions and there's no way that map folds back into place! Fortunately, technology has found a solution to both of those problems. Consumer GPS navigational systems have taken the guesswork out of finding our destinations. The GPS unit works by communicating with some of the 24 GPS satellites in orbit around the earth. The software on your GPS uses the signal to give you a visual depiction of where you're located.

Toot Your Own Horn

When my wife and I started RV shopping, everyone had advice for us. However, it was one man we met that had ideas I'll always remember.

As we toured the inside of his RV, he told us to always lock the kitchen cabinets before traveling. "Otherwise, things will fly," he laughed. "And keep a roll of duct tape handy. It's used for everything."

Then from the closet he pulled out a trumpet and held it in his hands.

"What is that for?" I asked.

"Try playing it at every campsite," he grinned. "And no one will park on either side of you!"
