Aide: Reagan not told about funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's adviser on the Iran-Contra affair says he's convinced the president never was told that Nicaraguan rebels were benefiting from the secret U.S. arms sale to Tehran.

Retired NATO Ambassador David M. Abshire denied a published account Sunday that Reagan, according to a line of defense once weighed by former National Security Adviser John M. Poindexter, was told on two occasions by Poindexter in 1986 that the Contra rebels got "an ancillary benefit" from the arms sales.

"There is one Ronald Reagan, he's deeply honest, he's deeply dedicated, and he tells the truth," Abshire said on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation." "And when he says he has no knowledge, he has no knowledge."

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., and Sen. Bob Dole, the Republican leader, said on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley" that if Reagan knew about a diversion, it could have serious consequences.

Former Sen. Gary Hart said arms deal only one scandal facing country, related stories — 2,4A

Byrd said it would be "a shattering blow," but "I prefer not to go beyond that until we do know."

Dole said "it would shake it up a bit, but I don't think we need to be paranoid about that...to try to speculate now what would happen I don't think would serve anyone's interest."

Poindexter did not tell Reagan about an illegal diversion of money, The Washington Post said Sunday, citing an unnamed legal source.

But the Post, citing "a source close to the president," said the White House anticipates that Poindexter, if granted some immunity to testify before congressional investigators, would tell lawmakers "he had direction and authority, directly or indirectly" from Reagan, to act in the president's behalf.

Reagan, returning to the White House on Sunday from a weekend at Camp David, brushed aside reporters' questions about Poindexter and any testimony the former aide might give to Congress.

"I'm not going to take any questions," Reagan said.

Richard Beckler, Poindexter's attorney, declined comment when reached by telephone late Saturday. Poindexter, in previous appearances before House and Senate investigators, has invoked his Fifth Amendment right to remain silent.

Reagan has said he was unaware of any diversion of arms sales proceeds to the Contras, and the pres

Divesting would be costly, say trust officers

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Renewed legislative efforts to require the divestment of state-owned investments in corporations doing business in South Africa could mean billions in losses for the four state trust funds, investment officers say.

The four funds owned securities worth nearly $6 billion in South Africa-connected corporations at the close of 1986, about 18 percent of the total assets for the four trusts — the Teachers Retirement System, the Permanent School Fund, the Employees Retirement System and the Permanent University Fund.

Some legislators, including Houston Reps. Al Edwards, Larry Evans and Ron Wilson, are supporting bills that would require divestment of state-held investments connected to South Africa.

They say the time has long been right for economic sanctions against a country whose white minority government is well-documented for its disregard of basic human and voting rights of South African blacks. Targeting state funds to withdraw their South Africa-connected investments will increase the pressure on the government to end its policy of racial separation, or apartheid, they argue.

"When the South African government detains children as political prisoners, it's just absurd," Wilson says. "And to support that effort is obscene."

But investment counselors for the state funds say divestment would have a severe impact on their ability to maintain strong investment portfolios, and would result in major investment setbacks costing billions of dollars. They say a policy of "social investment" is unrealistic in the business world, and that they are simply searching for the best return on their dollars.

They point to a legal doctrine known as the prudent-person rule, which requires public-fund managers to exercise "the care, skill and caution of a prudent person in choosing investments," without considering unrelated social goals.

FBI arrests fugitive 'mountain man' year after he escaped

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — A self-styled mountain man who killed two Idaho game wardens was recaptured peacefully nearly a year after a prison escape that made him the subject of a TV movie and the object of a nationwide manhunt.

Claude Dallas Jr., one of the FBI's 10 Most Wanted fugitives, was arrested by the FBI Sunday on a fugitive warrant in this community 30 miles east of downtown Los Angeles as he left a convenience store carrying groceries.

Dallas, arrested three days before his 37th birthday, used the alias Al Shrank and denied his identity until it was confirmed by fingerprints, said FBI spokesman Jim Neilson. He was in Riverside County Jail awaiting extradition.

"He had vowed he would not be taken alive, but at the time of his arrest he was unarmed," said Richard T. Bretzing, head of the FBI's Los Angeles office, adding that Dallas apparently had contacts in the area.

"This is a particularly dangerous man and we are pleased and relieved to have him in custody."

Dallas, who was called a folk hero by his supporters and a cold-blooded killer by law officers, cut his way through two Idaho State Penitentiary fences on Easter, March 30, and fled into the high desert of Idaho and Nevada.

He was serving 30 years for voluntary manslaughter in the 1981 slayings of two Idaho Fish and Game wardens who tried to arrest him for poaching.

He was put on the FBI's Most Wanted list 47 days after his escape and was the subject of last year's CBS-TV movie, "Manhunt: Search for Claude Dallas." A reward of more than $15,000 was posted, and 3,000 wanted posters were issued with a sketch of a bearded, bespectacled man in a hat with a wide brim pulled low over his face.

An unidentified clerk at the store where Dallas was caught said he heard a commotion in the parking lot, walked outside and saw Dallas surrounded by men with shotguns.

"I saw about 13 cars in the lot and I saw this man lying on his face on the ground," the clerk said.

Dallas had been living off the land in the desert, selling pelts, when he shot and killed game wardens Bill Pogue and Conley Elms in the Bull Camp area near the Nevada border in January 1981.

He eluded authorities for 16 months, vowing never to be taken alive before his 1982 capture in Paradise Hill, Nev.

"Some people we've heard convinced themselves that Dallas was some kind of superhuman," Idaho Fish and Game Director Jerry Conley said Sunday. "If we can believe

Defectors say they miss Super Bowl, reruns

HOUSTON (AP) — More than four months after he fled Houston with his family to seek political asylum in the Soviet Union, Arnold Lockshin wonders about certain things back home — such as who won the Super Bowl.

The winner of that game was one of the questions Lockshin asked a reporter in Moscow, The Houston Post reported Sunday in a copyright story.

Last October, Lockshin, his wife and their three children made international headlines with a news conference in Moscow announcing their flight from what they claimed was a U.S. government-sponsored campaign of political harassment.

Those charges have been denied by U.S. officials.

Both Lockshin and his wife, Lauren, had served as officials in the Communist Party in Southern California.

"I miss my Bob Newhart and Mary Tyler Moore (television) reruns," Mrs. Lockshin said in an interview two weeks ago.

The Lockshins told Soviet officials that the interview would be the last they would grant for another year, the newspaper said.

"It was the first time in many years I didn't see the World Series," Lockshin said.

"Or the Rose Bowl," Mrs. Lockshin said.

The couple did not want their children — Jennifer, 15, Jeffrey, 11 and Michael, 5 — to be interviewed. But Mrs. Lockshin said the children miss some things, like calling up for a pizza delivery.

"So, we make pizza," she said with a smile.

The Lockshins admit to being homesick at times. But they say they don't have regrets.

"We were born and bred in USA," Mrs. Lockshin said. "We miss it, you know."

The Lockshins remain U.S. citizens and are uncertain about whether to apply for Soviet citizenship. The final decision to move to the Soviet Union, they said, came only after the Officials advocate open container law

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Local officials hope lawmakers will pass an open container law this session, a law they say is necessary to make other drunk driving legislation work.

Last week, the State Affairs Committee sent the measure to the Senate on an 8-0 vote.

If it becomes law, Texans caught driving with an open can of beer or alcoholic drink in their hand or "immediate possession" would be given a traffic ticket and could be fined up to $200. In 46 other states, drinking and driving is already prohibited.

A similar bill has been proposed twice previously, but failed to pass both times.

County Attorney Mark Dettman, whose office handles more than a dozen misdemeanor DWI cases a week, considers it ludicrous that there is no open container law on the books.

"It doesn't make sense to tell people you can drink and drive, and expect them not do do it to excess," he said. "It just seems silly to me to tell them it's OK to do it, but not to cross that magic line."

Dettman said according to current state law, there is a type of open container provision. He said anyone arrested for DWI and found to be in possession of an open container will have the charge enhanced.

City Attorney David Reagan said an ordinance banning drinking alcohol while in a vehicle was passed several years ago, and regularly enforced. The ordinance, like the proposed bill, included a maximum fine of $200.

But, he said in January Attorney General Jim Mattox issued an opinion that only the state could pass legislation regulating alcoholic beverages.

Police Lt. Hank Norton said the legislation would be welcomed.

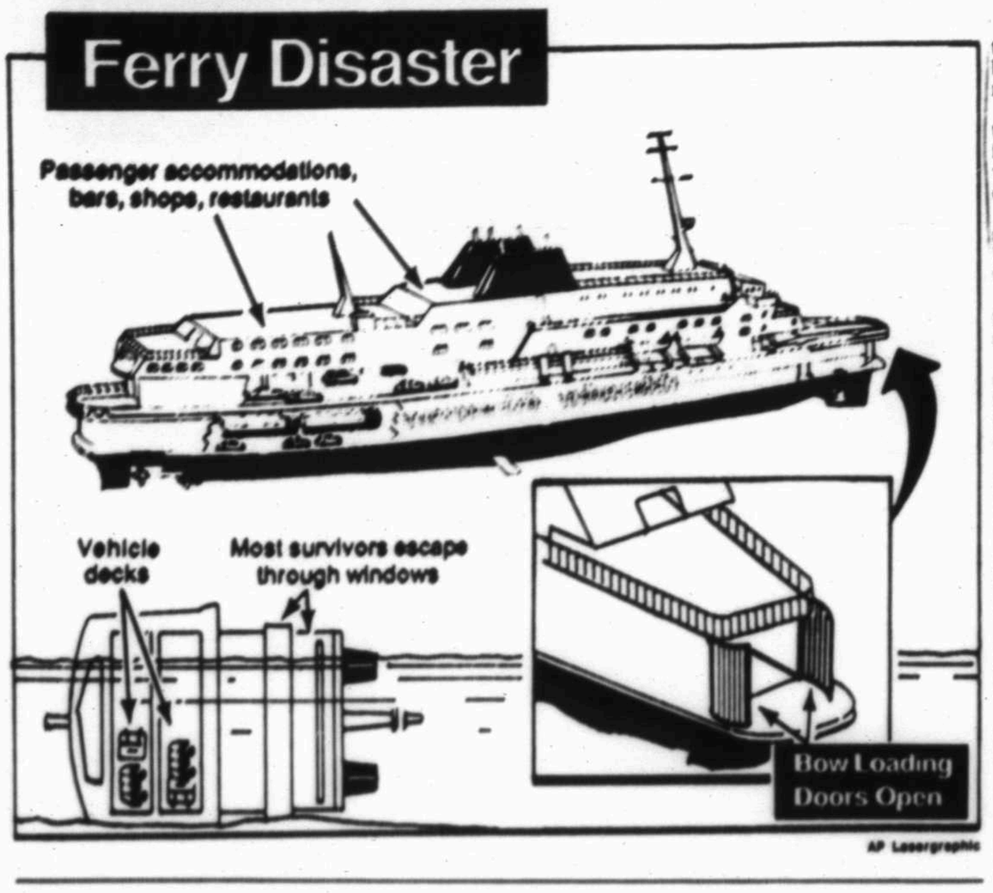

"Anything to keep drinking drivers off the road would tend to enhance safety," he said. "I don't think people should be driving and drinking." Norton said he did not know how the law would fare if challenged in court.

"We'd have to wait and see what (specific law) went through, see what the actual law was before we did anything on it," he said. "I don't think that enforcement would be a problem, it would be winning the case in court."

Salvagers will try to raise ferry to retrieve bodies

ZEEBRUGGE, Belgium (AP) — Salvage experts began efforts to raise the half-sunken ferry Herald of Free Enterprise so 82 bodies believed trapped inside can be retrieved, while weeping relatives identified 22 of 53 bodies already recovered.

The Dutch company Smit Tak of Rotterdam on Sunday sent two salvage ships with giant cranes to the British ferry lying on its side on a sandbar about 1,000 yards offshore. Crews began work in near-freezing temperatures to attach steel cables to the orange and white hull.

The task likely will take several weeks, said Raymond Nossent, a spokesman for the ferry owner Townsend Thoresen. Work was suspended at sunset Sunday and expected to resume this morning.

The 7,951-ton ferry rolled onto its left side just after leaving the small port of Zeebrugge on Friday night when water surged into the hull. The ship was headed for Dover, England.

Paul Ovington, also a spokesman for Townsend Thoresen, said Sunday the company has "accepted that it (the cause of the accident) is something to do with the (loading) doors. That is how the water rushed in because there is no other hole in the ship."

Relatives of passengers went Sunday to a makeshift morgue in a basketball court to identify the 53 bodies recovered so far. Names and nationalities of the 22 identified by Sunday evengng were not released.

Of the 543 passengers and crew aboard the Herald of Free Enterprise, 408 survived. The 82 missing are believed dead, putting the likely death toll at 135 and making it the worst ferry accident in the area in modern times.

British and Belgian investigations into the cause of the disaster have just begun, but speculation has focused on the theory that water entered through loading doors in the bow, sloshed to the port side and tilted the boat over.

A London newspaper, the News of the World, said a member of the crew, 28-year-old boatswain Marc Stanley, believed he left the doors open and was blaming himself.

A company spokesman, Paul Ellis, confirmed that Stanley was "in a state of emotional shock" and "blaming himself."

Ellis said the company has ordered its ferry captains to personally supervise the closing of doors before their voyages begin. Ellis said the directive was "a commonsense measure, since the open door is a theory we can do something about."

Belgian radio earlier had reported that ferry loading doors have been left open up to the last moment to allow ventilationof exhaust fumes.

But Robin Kember, boatswain of the Herald's sister ship, the Spirit of Free Enterprise, said he has "never recorded a time when we have ventured to sea with bow doors open."

As the salvage work began Sunday afternoon, reporters flying overhead watched crews weld steel loops to the ferry's hull. Cables are to be attached to the loops.

Once the ship is upright, it should be possible to bring out most or all of the remaining bodies, which are believed trapped under debris or in parts of the boat divers cannot reach.

"It's deep, it's dark, everything is upside down and things are moving about," Ellis said.

Lt. Stephen Wild, a British Royal Navy diver, said the task of looking for bodies had become too dangerous for divers.

"We cannot get more bodies out of the vessel without killing somebody," he said.

The British news agency Press Association quoted unidentified divers as saying the propellers of the ferry were set full astern — apparently a sign that Capt. David Lewry was trying to stop the ship.

Lewry, 46, was in intensive care with a punctured lung, his lawyer, Graham Bridge, told reporters. Bridge said the captain, who fell the width of the ship when it keeled over, was interviewed briefly by investigators at his hospital bed.

Most of the ferry passengers were British.

Relatives arrived at Zeebrugge city hall in small family groups to go through casualty lists, then were driven to the sports center where the 53 recovered bodies were placed in open coffins.

Survivor George Lamy of London said he identified his mother, wife and grandson in the morgue.

"We're still looking for my daughter and son-in-law," he said, his face pale and eyes wet. "Maybe my daughter is somewhere. She could be in coma. We're still looking."

British army chaplain Tony Rimmer, who came to comfort bereaved families, said: "There is an air of disbelief. People are stunned and bewildered."

Rimmer said that each time a body was identified, the lid was lowered on the coffin and it was carried out of the sports hall.

Hart says arms deal 'one of several' scandals

Hart

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Sen. Gary Hart, a potential candidate for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination, says the Iran-contra affair is just one of several scandals facing the country.

Hart, on a three-day tour of Texas, told about 250 black Baptist church members Sunday that funding cuts in school lunch programs, the undermining of civil rights commissions and a shortage of student loans also are "scandals."

The United States, he said, needs a "reawakening of the idea of justice" to combat its problems.

Hart received applause from the church congregation when he also blasted what he termed the nation's continued tolerance of the minority white-dominated government in South Africa.

"We have not pursued our democratic ideals and beliefs around the world," he said.

The former senator from Colorado has stops planned in San Marcos today and Dallas on Tuesday. Hart has formed a presidential exploratory committee and has said he will formally announce his campaign plans on April 13 in Colorado.

Asked why he went to a black church Sunday, Hart said he has visited black churches before and plans to do it again.

"We are certainly going to help you do what the Lord would have you to do," the Rev. E.J. Booker told Hart during the Sunday service. "We are so grateful to have you."

Hart said he believed the exchange of arms with Iranian officials for hostages in Beirut and the diversion of money from that operation to the contras involved "people in high places...who forgot they worked for the people of the United States."

"They forgot the basic notions of decency and justice," he said.

From his studies of the Old Testament, Hart said he has learned that people who have been persecuted have come to believe that "hope rests in the idea of justice — divine justice and human justice."

Hart said a committment to that same sense of justice will help this country.

"We can recapture this country," he said. "We are a people who want to be committed to a sense of justice."

After speaking for about 15 minutes, Hart signed a Bible and other autographs for congregation members. Outside the church, he told reporters he was pleased with reports of approval ratings among Texans, but said he had more ground to cover in the state and elsewhere.

In a winter Texas Poll published in several Texas newspapers Sunday, Hart was nosed out of the top spot for possible 1988 Democratic presidential contenders by Chrysler Corp. chairman Lee Iacocca.

Iacocca and Hart were the only two Democrats rated positively by the more than 500 poll respondents. Iacocca received an average positive rating of 54 percent, while Hart's was 52 percent. Iacocca has said he is not interested in running for president in 1988.

The Texas Poll is conducted by the Public Policy Resources laboratory at Texas A&M University for Harte-Hanks Communications Inc. Results may vary up to 3 percentage points for the total sample because of sampling error, pollsters said.

Hart said that despite the fallout of the Iran-contra affair on the Republicans, the Democrats cannont depend on that issue to win the presidency. He also said he believed the operation was the result of a "small band of narrow ideologues" who followed their own agenda.

Although President Reagan tried to put the subject behind him in a televised speech last week, Hart said Reagan did not address the key issue of whether it was legal to give the money to the contras.

"The other things aren't important," Lockshin said.

DIVEST

"Divestment would be disastrous in terms of our equity portfolio," says Jim Hooks, chief investment officer for the Permanent School Fund. "Major areas that have provided us with tremendous growth would no longer be available."

Hooks and other officers say investment risks would increase dramatically if the trust funds were forced to cross off major industries such as IBM, DuPont, Coca Cola and Exxon, all with substantial South African ties. Those strong industries could not be replaced, he says, and the funds would be forced to invest in smaller, less-stable companies that yield lower returns.

Dividends and interest earned by the Permanent School Fund are part of the income of the Available School Fund, which is distributed among the state's school districts on the basis of school population. In fiscal 1986, the Available School Fund received $511.7 million from the fund's investment earnings, according to a legislative report by the House Research Organization.

If forced to divest, the Permanent School Fund would have to sell about $2 billion in stocks, bonds and commercial paper, out of a total $7.7 billion market portfolio as of December, Hooks says.

Although the sale of those investments would realize short-term gains because stocks currently are up, the long-term affects would be detrimental, he says.

"We are here to put as much income into the public school system as possible," he says. "Divestment would cost the people of the state of Texas a lot of money."

Joe Perrone, deputy executive secretary for investments for the Teachers Retirement System, says divestment would mean greater risks and less earnings for the trust fund that ranks among the 10 largest in the country.

The fund had total assets of $16.6 billion as of December and owned stock worth $2.6 billion, or 16 percent of total assets, in 59 South Africa-connected corporations. The fund provides retirement, disability and death benefits for employees of public educational institutions.

"The impact of divestment that concerns us is not the short-term gain or loss, but our long-term ability to provide employee benefits," Perrone says.

The Employees Retirement System, which pays similar benefits to eligible state employees and their survivors, had assets of $3.8 billion, of which $348 million was invested in corporations doing business in South Africa.

Nancy Goerdel, director of investments for the fund, says divestment would eliminate about half of the companies the system does business with. This would "seriously impair" the fund's equity portfolio, she says.

The Permanent University Fund, administered by the University of Texas System, had investments totaling $800 million in 91 companies with operations in or loans to South Africa. Total assets amounted to $2.56 billion at the end of fiscal 1986.

Rep. Edwards, who has led many unsuccessful divestment efforts in the past, says administrators of state funds have taken a "hard-nose stand" against divestment.

"Even if they said it would take 10 or 15 years (to divest) in order not to lose money, it can be done," he says.

To that end, Edwards has filed a bill requiring the governing boards of all higher education institutions to submit by Jan. 1, 1988, a plan for total divestment of all South African-connected holdings.

Rep. Evans has filed two bills that would require the divestment of the Employees Retirement System and the Teachers Retirement System by 1991.

"These investments are bad investments," says Edwards, who takes exception to the argument that U.S. companies can promote constructive change through their continued presence in South Africa.

He and Wilson say they oppose the Sullivan Principles, a code of conduct developed by the Rev. Leon Sullivan of Philadelphia, who now is a director of General Motors Corp. The principles require participating businesses to agree to desegregation, equal pay, job training and advancement, fair employment and other practices for South African blacks, although even Sullivan concedes the principles aren't working.

"It's not worth the paper it's printed on," Wilson says.

Edwards also disagrees with the theory that a withdrawal of U.S. investments would cause a national economic setback that would hurt all South Africans.

"That's a blatant lie," he says. "If Americans stopped doing business in South Africa, the economy would not collapse."

REAGAN

dent's position on the question has been backed by the Senate Intelligence Committee, in its report of Jan. 29, and the Tower commission, in its report of Feb. 26. Both reports concluded there was no evidence Reagan knew of the money transfer.

In other developments:

— Investigators working for the special prosecutor examining the Iran arms deal expect to bring indictments and are studying criminal charges against current and former government officials, The New York Times reported in today's editions.

The newspaper cited unidentified law enforcement officials with knowledge of the investigation as saying investigators are focusing on at least three felonies: conspiring to defraud the government, obstructing justice and making false statements to the government.

The officials said special prosecutor Lawrence E. Walsh and his staff had not ruled out anyone, including senior Reagan administration officials, as suspects, according to the Times. The officials declined to provide names.

Several weeks ago, Reagan urged members of Congress to grant limited immunity to Poindexter and former aide Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, to compel their testimony on the arms-to-Iran affair and the possible diversions to the Contras.

Abshire, asked whether Reagan could have forgotten he was told about the diversion, said it was not a possibility.

"Not in my judgment, because that is too clear an area. The president is strong on aiding the Contras, but to do it through anything that was a violation of the law is totally opposite Ronald Reagan," Abshire said.

Abshire said a White House devotion to protecting the secrecy of the Iranian arms sale initiative probably accounts for its difficulty in furnishing investigators with documentation of crucial decision making.

"I don't think the president of the United States should be the note-taker in meetings," he said. "Secrecy was carried to the point that a record was not kept. That first decision on the sale of arms should have been done on paper and not handled the way that it was."

Abshire, who has been coordinating White House dealings with the various investigations, also denied a published report that Chief of Staff Howard H. Baker Jr. was "appalled" by the absence of serious legal efforts to protect Reagan.

Abshire said he had spoken with Baker and had been told Baker didn't agree with the report and did not know its origin.

Court rules in favor of asylum

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled today that the government should grant asylum to illegal aliens who have "a well-founded fear" they will be persecuted if forced to return to their homeland.

By a 6-3 vote, the justices rejected a Reagan administration appeal in the case of a Nicaraguan woman living in Nevada who says the Sandinistas would persecute her if she goes back to her native country.

Justice John Paul Stevens, writing for the court, said "a well-founded fear" of persecution is easier for illegal aliens to demonstrate than "a clear probability" that persecution will occur.

"To show a well-founded fear of persecution an alien need not prove that it is more likely than not that he or she will be persecuted in his or her home country," Stevens said. "It is clear that Congress did not intend to restrict eligibility for (asylum) to those who could prove that it is more likely than not that they will be persecuted if deported."

witnesses, he shot one officer when his hands were full with furs and another when he wasn't looking."

Dallas argued at his trial he fired in self defense after he saw Pogue going for his gun. But prosecutors said after the men were wounded, Dallas shot them both in the head to finish them off.

"Needless to say all of the family is happy that he has been captured," said Pogue's widow, Dee.

To some, Dallas was an incarnation of the Old West's rugged individual, standing up for his rights against a dangerous, meddling bureaucracy. Others saw him as a killer.

"Claude Dallas, (with) the exception of being a game hog and game officer killer, was a nice guy," said Sheriff Tim Nettleton of Owyhee County, Idaho. "A lot of people share his sentiments but they don't kill people."

"He learned to ride horses and he learned to rope. And he beat a murder rap," said Idaho Corrections Director Al Murphy.

"He's as much of a Western hero as Charles Manson," said author Jack Olsen, who researched Dallas for his book "Give A Boy A Gun." "Dallas would kill a lawman with about the same guilt and conscience as he eats his Wheaties in the morning."

Dallas' father, Claude Dallas Sr., 72, of Myrtle Beach, S.C., said he had not seen or talked to his son since the escape.

"I knew he would be (captured)," he said. "It's hard to be on the run and have a bounty on your head. I'm just glad he didn't get hurt."

CONTAINER

Dettman said he sees no problem with the enforcement.

"No more problem than with the seat belt law," he said. He said effective prosecution was probable because the courts have upheld convictions for public intoxication of people who are riding in the right front seat of a vehicle.

"I certainly think we need something to discourage (drinking and driving)," he said. "I do feel strongly that the people who drink and drive are potential murderers on our highways.

"But I think it ought to be a class B or class A misdemeanor, so maybe we can get some jail time in there."

According to the Department of Public Safety, Texas traffic deaths reached an all-time high of 4,701 in 1981, and a task force was appointed to bring that figure down.

By 1985, after tougher DWI laws were enacted, the number of traffic deaths dropped to 3,682.

According to the DPS, passage of the open container bill is the only piece of major legislation recommended by the task force that has not been passed by the Legislature.

Police to question ex-SMU running back about death

DALLAS (AP) — Investigators planned to talk to former Southern Methodist University running back Jeff Atkins today concerning the shooting death of a man who was driving a car registered to Atkins, police said.

David Simpson, 31, was shot to death Friday night when a gunman opened fire on him as he was driving Atkins' sports car into the parking lot of a northwest Dallas apartment complex, police said.

Police said they were unable to contact Atkins over the weekend, but a police spokesman said late Sunday that Atkins had "made arrangements" through a third party to talk to police, probably today.

Homicide Sgt. Pat Herring said someone calling in Atkins' behalf told police Sunday the former SMU running back would soon be available for questioning.

Ruben Mitchell, 27, who was wounded during the shooting, said Sunday he did not know either the victim or Atkins or the motive for the attack.

Mitchell said he was arriving to visit a friend when the shooting started.

"All I know is I heard a first shot and then I was hit by the second shot," he said. "I just laid down and played dead until the shooting stopped."

Mitchell said four or five shots were fired.

"Then someone came and helped me off the street," he said.

Mitchell was treated and released at Parkland Memorial Hospital for a gunshot wound to the leg.

Area residents said Sunday they saw three suspects running away from the scene.

A woman who declined to give her name and identified herself as a friend of Simpson's said she had never heard Simpson mention Atkins' name, but she said she had seen the car registered to Atkins behind the complex several times in the last few weeks.

Simpson lived at the complex and worked there as a maintenance man and security guard, police said. Simpson had two cars of his own parked at the complex, but was driving a 1984 Nissan 300ZX registered to Atkins, investigators said.

Bullets shattered the driver's side window of the car and struck Simpson in the chest shortly before 9 p.m., police said. He died 30 minutes later at Parkland Memorial Hospital.

Atkins recently revealed that he had undergone treatment at a drug treatment center after he became addicted to cocaine last fall, during his final year playing at SMU.

Scandal could cost SMU $20 million

DALLAS (AP) — A football scandal at Southern Methodist University's has resulted in withdrawals of some donations and fewer high school students applying for admission, The Dallas Morning News reported today.

In a copyright story, the newspaper reported that some donors have said they will not give any more money until the scandal is resolved. At the same time, applications from high school students are down about 10 percent from last year.

A member of the school's board of governors estimates the total cost to the school might be $10 to $20 million.

Andrew Parker, SMU's vice president of development, said that donations "across the board" have fallen significantly.

SMU's admissions office has begun a special campaign to counteract the bad publicity, said Andrew Bryant, director of admissions.

The NCAA recently suspended the Mustang football program for the 1987 season and limited the school to seven road games in 1988. The action — the most severe ever taken against a football program — came after it was revealed that SMU boosters had continued to pay players even after the school was placed on probation in August 1985.

Last week, Texas Gov. Bill Clements, a former head of the school's board of governors, said that members of the governing board were aware of the payments before the NCAA investigation.

The football scandal has "seemed to taint" the entire university, Bryant said.

University officials said the downturn in the state's economy had already caused some cutback in donations.

Parker, who heads SMU fund raising, said donations to the school could drop several millions dollars this year. He said the cutbacks in donations range from major contributors to alumni who give only modest amounts.

The downturn started in mid-November when reports of the football scandal first started to surface, Parker said.

"And then, all of a sudden, in the last two weeks, the impact, well, it has been especially bad in the past two weeks," Parker said.

Parker said donors are especially distressed because of the alleged involvement of the board of governors.

"Until there is full disclosure and the ship of state is in order, we're not going to be able to turn around the fund-raising side," Parker said. It's going to take some time. How much, I don't know."

Robert Dedman, a member of the board of governors, said the effect of the scandal will be "devastating."

"There will be a drop in enrollment and a drop in contributions," he said. "It's going to be hard keeping the students we have and get good new ones, and it'll be hard to get professors to stay and new ones to come."

Dedman said the potential drop in enrollment, a decline in contributions and the loss of football revenue could amount to a shortfall of $10 to $20 million.

Bryant said administrators and SMU alumni plan to meet during the next few weeks with high school students in the Dallas area who have applied for enrollment and their parents.

"We'll try to allay their fears," he said. "I think there are some fears not only about football but what else is happening."

Bryant said it is possible that SMU might lower its admissions standards to enroll an adequate number of freshmen for next year.

Students plan rallies to protest board's involvement in scandal

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist University students planned open air rallies on campus today to protest the participation by members of the university's board of governors in a decision to continue paying money to football players in violation of NCAA rules.

Members of the board of governors arrived early today for third meeting in six days concerning the scandal involving the school's football program.

George Underwood, a board member, said he was contacted Sunday and told about the meeting. He said he was not told what was on the agenda for the meeting.

As students prepared their protest, an SMU psychology class drew up a strongly worded statement over the weekend. Students in the class said they hoped to gather thousands of signatures and formally present the written protest in the form of an open letter to the board of governors.

"We the undersigned students of SMU wish to protest the actions of the leaders of this university regarding their handling of the recent athletic scandal," began the letter, which was dated Friday.

"We are expected to maintain the highest level of academic integrity and yet are provided with examples of behavior which fall far short of this standard," the letter said.

"We feel that those responsible should not continue to deny their active involvement or passive participation in the decisions that were made, but should come forward and accept the consequences of their action."

Lee Anna Clark, an assistant professor of psychology, said the open letter resulted from a class discussion after Gov. Bill Clements' news conference announcement last week.

The governor made headlines across the state by confirming, in response to a reporter's question, that he and other members of the SMU board of governors directed athletic department officials in 1985 to continue payments being made to athletes who were promised the money during recruitment.

It was the continuation of payments, after SMU was already under probation, that the NCAA cited as the reason it imposed the "death penalty" against SMU, shutting down its football program for the entire 1987 season.

In the storm that followed Clements' statement, other SMU board members insisted they had no knowledge of the decision. Clements stood by his comments, but refused to identify the other members of the board who joined in the decision.

"I opened up discussion in class one day, shortly after the whole Clements admission that he knew, and the board of governors denied they knew," Ms. Clark said.

"Toward the end of class, one student said, 'We can't just sit here and talk about it. What are we going to do?' The letter was all their idea, but I helped them to formulate it, helped with some of the phraseology," Ms. Clark said Sunday night.

Ex-athletic director to meet with board

DALLAS (AP) — An SMU official says former Southern Methodist University Athletic Director Bob Hitch has been asked to attend a special meeting of the school's board of directors and has indicated he will do so, the Dallas Morning News reported.

The board hopes to meet with Hitch within the next few days and said meeting with Hitch is part of the board's desire for "full disclosure" of the school's athletics scandal, the university official, who asked not to be named, said.

"We need disclosure to get all this behind us," the official said.

Hitch was athletic director at SMU until he and former football coach Bobby Collins resigned a few weeks after news reports surfaced that payments to football players continued even after the university was placed on probation by the NCAA for earlier recruiting violations.

Alamo's tenders won't right wrong

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Telling Texans to rewrite the history of the Battle of the Alamo is like stepping on a rattlesnake barefoot — especially if you insist one of its heroes is a Yankee.

That's the task Robert Billingham, head of the Blackstone Valley Tourism Council, has taken on.

Alamo hero Albert Martin, famous for riding through the desert behind enemy lines to bring reinforcements to the embattled mission, hailed from Rhode Island, said Billingham.

But a historic plaque inside the Alamo shrine at San Antonio, Texas, says Martin was a native of Tennessee.

Carl Hedberg, an amateur historian from Pawtucket, first pointed out the error three years ago. But he got short shrift from Alamo's former curator.

Contras likely to get $40 million OK'd in '86

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional opponents of military aid to Nicaragua's Contra rebels say they have virtually no chance of blocking the release of $40 million in arms aid approved last year.

In the first fight of the year over the Reagan administration's Contra policy, the House is to vote Wednesday on a Democratic bid to delay release of the $40 million final installment for six months while the administration provides a full accounting of missing Contra funds, private as well as public.

The proposal is designed to spotlight alleged corruption in the ranks of the Contras, who are battling Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government.

But Republicans denounced it as a backdoor way to bottle up aid promised when Congress approved $100 million in Contra assistance last year.

The issue may come before the Senate as early as Thursday, but in different form.

There the vote likely will be on an up-or-down disapproval resolution. While Democrats control the Senate and may be able to pass the measure by a simple majority, vote counters admit they cannot rally the two-thirds majority needed to override a certain Reagan veto.

Therefore, they say will not make a major effort, saving their energy for battles later in the year over the additional $105 million Reagan has requested for the Contras in fiscal 1988 and for legislation sponsored by Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., to end Contra aid permanently.

"There is no way we can override the president's veto of a disapproval resolution," Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said last week. "The $105 million down the road is another question."

Dodd said that as far as he can see, the $40 million installment for the Contras is "a done deal" and Reagan is "going to get the money."

"There certainly are not enough votes to override a presidential veto," Dodd said. "I wouldn't make the stand on that issue."

Many lawmakers say that blocking the $40 million would break a promise Congress made last year when it voted to provide a full $100 million.

No promises were made on aid beyond that and Dodd and others said there likely will be many more votes against further assistance, especially in light of the Iran-Contra turmoil involving the sale of arms to Iran and the purported diversion of profits to the Contras.

Walsh's staff studying charges against officials

NEW YORK (AP) — Investigators working for the special prosecutor examining the Iran arms deal expect to bring indictments and are studying criminal charges against current and former government officials, The New York Times reported in today's editions.

The newspaper cited law enforcement officials with knowledge of the investigation as saying investigators are focusing on at least three felonies: conspiring to defraud the government, obstructing justice and making false statements to the government.

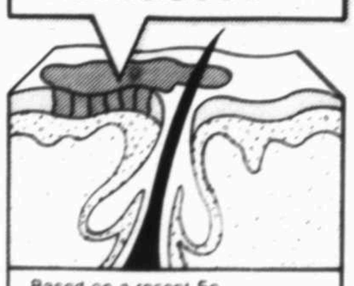

The officials said special prosecutor Lawrence Walsh and his staff had not ruled out anyone, including senior Reagan administration officials, as suspects, according to the Times.

The officials declined to provide any names or say when the indictments might be brought, and spoke on condition they not be identified, the Times said.

One official told the newspaper the investigation was focusing on a possibility of a broad criminal conspiracy involving administration officials and private individuals tied to the sale of American arms to Iran and the purported funneling of proceeds to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Skin cancer 'near epidemic,' doctor says

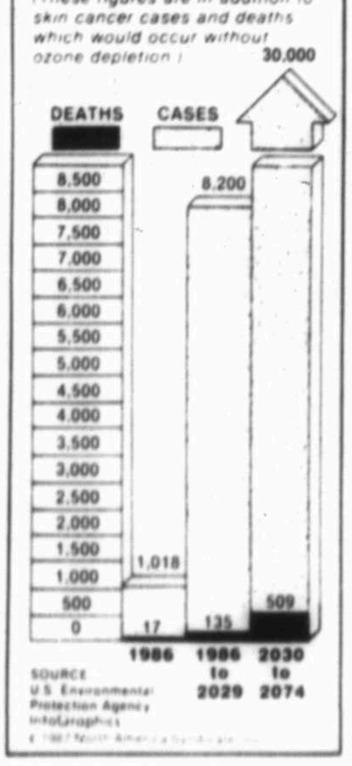

Skin cancer increases?

Based on a recent Environmental Protection Agency study, the ozone layer is projected to be depleted by 19 percent by the year 2075. This ozone depletion will result in increased harmful ultraviolet radiation, leading to increased incidence of skin cancer. The increase is expected to be equivalent to an additional 1,000,000 cases, based on the 1986 population, and will cause 16,500 additional deaths.

ADDITIONAL SKIN CANCER CASES AND DEATHS DUE TO OZONE LAYER DEPLETION

In thousands
(These figures are in addition to skin cancer cases and deaths which would occur without ozone depletion.)

WASHINGTON (AP) — The rise in skin cancer, linked by scientists to destruction of the Earth's stratospheric ozone sun screen, is reaching near-epidemic rates, a research physician told Congress today.

"Skin cancer represents a serious problem in the U.S. today," Dr. Darrell Rigel told an ozone-depletion hearing by the House Energy and Commerce health and the environment subcommittee.

The New York University Medical Center physician cited estimates that more than 500,000 skin cancers will be diagnosed this year, accounting for one-third of the new cancer cases in this country.

"At the current rate, about one in seven Americans will develop this disease during their lifetime," he said. "The rate of skin cancer in the U.S. is increasing at a near epidemic pace."

Rigel said the rate of malignant melanoma, the type of skin cancer that is often fatal, is rising faster than any other form of cancer except lung cancer in women.

"The estimated number of cases of melanoma diagnosed in the U.S. has increased 83 percent in the last seven years alone," he said.

Rigel said that although many factors have been linked to skin cancer, "the generally accepted most important factor is exposure to ultraviolet light."

The hearing centered on depletion of the ozone layer in the atmosphere that acts as a natural filter against the sun's ultraviolet rays. There is growing global concern that emissions of chemicals such as chlorofluorocarbons are destroying stratospheric ozone and allowing more ultraviolet rays to reach the Earth's surface.

"One would expect skin cancer rates to increase as the ozone thins," said Rigel, testifying that New York University researchers have been forced to update projections of skin cancer rates made only five years ago.

He said that five years ago researchers estimated that one in 250 Americans would develop malignant melanoma during their lifetimes and projected an increase to one in 150 by the year 2000.

"This year...to our chagrin we found we had not anticipateed the recent surge in this disease and (that) our estimates were too conservative," Rigel said. "We now estimate the lifetime risk for developing this deadly type of cancer has already exceeded our year-2000 projection and is now one in 135.

"Should this rate of increase continue, by the year 2000, the lifetime risk of an individual developing melanoma in the United States is now predicted to be one in 90," Rigel said.

He told the subcommittee that not only is the skin cancer rate rising, the disease is being found in people of increasingly younger age.

"Five years ago, it was unusual to see persons under the age of 40 with skin cancer," Rigel said. "Now we will often see persons in their 20s with this disease."

He said there has been a major increase in public awareness of the problem, aided by the cases of the mildest, most treatable form of skin cancer experienced by President and Mrs. Reagan and Vice President George Bush.

Rigel said that while physicians and public health authorities have alerted people to the danger of overexposure to the sun, "very little has been done to attempt to alter the environmental factors that may be contributing to this rapidly increasing rate of skin cancer."

"If our ozone layer is depleted, one could envision a future situation where despite maximal sun avoidance and screening, people in their everyday activities alone might receive enough (ultraviolet) radiation to develop skin cancer."

The problem of the ozone layer is attracting renewed attention this year from environmental and foreign affairs panels in Congress.

The Reagan administration is attempting through diplomatic negotiations to persuade the industrialized world to make deep cutbacks the production and use of chlorofluorocarbons.

A group of senators warned recently that if the negotiations are unsuccessful, they would attempt to pass legislation forcing curbs in U.S. production and barring imports of products containing chlorofluorocarbons or manufactured with them.

These chemicals, which can destroy ozone molecules decades after entering the upper atmosphere, are widely employed as aerosol spray propellants, refrigerants and industrial solvents. The United States unilaterally banned their use in spray cans a decade ago, but few other nations have followed suit.

Air Force deals taxpayers losing hand, Proxmire says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Souvenir decks of playing cards given to guests flying on the vice president's Air Force Two may have cost taxpayers $200,000 over the past 20 years, Sen. William Proxmire says.

The Wisconsin Democrat said he has discovered that the Air Force paid $50,000 over the last six years for the playing cards distributed on Vice President George Bush's plane, and called the expense "outrageous."

He gave the expenditure his monthly "Golden Fleece" award for the most "wasteful, ridiculous or ironic use of taxpayers' money."

The Air Force has been buying decks of cards for vice presidents and their guests for the last 20 years, Proxmire said, estimating that at a rate of $10,000 a year, "we may be looking at a wasteful project totaling more than $200,000 since the 1960s."

He said that includes only the possible cost of playing cards for Air Force Two, not for those distributed on President Reagan's Air Force One.

AIDS forces religions to face tough issues

By FRANK BAJAK
Associated Press Writer

AIDS has struck ministers, priests and rabbis, forcing religious denominations to look beyond ministering to the afflicted and toward confronting the uncomfortable issue of homosexuality within the clergy.

"The church is fearful that its reputation would be harmed, so they would like to keep it private," said the Rev. John McNeill, a New York priest and acknowledged homosexual who was dismissed by the Jesuit order for speaking out on homosexuality.

Roman Catholic leaders think confronting the issue publicly would damage their credibility and moral authority, McNeill asserted.

"Acceptance of homosexuality totally undermines where we come from in Judeo-Christian heritage," added the Rev. Bernard Lynch, a Catholic priest in New York who ministers to sufferers of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, transmitted most often through sex or contaminated hypodermic needles.

Clergy and physicians who counsel and treat victims of the deadly virus reported more than a dozen cases of AIDS among the nation's 57,000 Catholic priests. The church keeps no national figures, but at least nine priests have reportedly died.

The virus has struck clergy from the Baptist to the Jewish faiths, said the Rev. Ronald Sunderland, AIDS chaplain at Houston's Institute for Immunological Disorders and a co-founder of Clergy Consultation on AIDS, an interfaith group.

"In the main, this has been a problem that has been dealt with (in major religions) by simply denying the facts," said Sunderland, whose group of about 80 clergy ministers to AIDS patients in Houston.

The disease is "forcing people to deal with Christian issues that never in any historic period of the church has it dealt with," said the Episcopal Rev. Donald R. Bitticks of New York, who learned in October 1985 that he had AIDS.

Episcopal doctrine approves of sex only between men and women who are married, but church leaders this year will consider a report by a Newark, N.J., diocese panel urging the blessing of heterosexual cohabitation and homosexual relationships if they manifest "healing, reconciliation, compassion, mutuality, concern for others." The Episcopal House of Bishops defeated a similar proposal in 1979.

Catholic doctrine goes further, holding that sex outside heterosexual marriage is a sin and requiring priests to take a vow of celibacy.

In October, the Vatican issued a pastoral letter gay Catholics term the "Halloween Encyclical" that calls homosexual inclination "a more or less strong tendency ordered toward an intrinsic moral evil."

Most priests "cannot come public with their sexual identity if their identity is gay," Lynch said.

"They have to fear it," added McNeill, who contended that most Catholic religious orders will accept homosexuals who agree to be celibate. Officially, church leaders do not acknowledge such a policy.

The Rev. Michael Galvan, a consultant on priestly life to the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, said he was not asked about his sexual orientation when he was ordained. "There was no little check box," he scoffed. "What they did want to know was: Are you really committed to a life of celibacy?"

Having worked in church programs to help AIDS victims in the Oakland, Calif., diocese, Galvan added: "The church as a whole has reacted with a lot of compassion" towards AIDS victims, including clergy — balancing doctrine, interpersonal concern and, above all, "the gospel message of care."

No authoritative data exist on how many U.S. Catholic priests are gay.

Former teaching brother Kevin Gordon, who directs a New York-based think tank on homosexuality in the church, called Consultation, said at least 30 percent of priests are gay but not necessarily sexually active.

The Rev. John Harvey doubts the number is so high. He is head of a Vatican-sanctioned group called Courage that runs retreats and offers one-to-one counseling for Catholic priests who seek to change their homosexual orientation.

He said about 200 priests and brothers have attended his retreats around the country since they were first offered in 1978.

Two teens arrested in priests' deaths

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Two teenagers have been arrested in the killings of two inner-city Roman Catholic priests, slayings that had prompted police to urge priests not to let strangers into their homes, authorities announced today.

One of the young men confessed, said Police Commissioner Ralph V. Degenhart.

He said Milton E. Jones, 17, was arrested late Sunday in Buffalo and Theodore Simmons, 18, also of Buffalo, was arrested early today in San Diego, Calif.

Each was charged with two counts of second-degree murder, two counts of first-degree robbery, and third-degree criminal possession of a weapon.

"A lead was developed by the crew of the homicide bureau as to the name of Theodore Simmons," Degenhart said at a news conference. "Further interviews led to the name of Milton Jones."

After his arrest, Jones "provided the homicide bureau with a confession to both priest murders," Degenhart said. He said Simmons was located through information obtained from his family.

Chief of Detectives Angelo P. Alessandra said detectives learned that Simmons had been counseled by both priests, who were killed 12 days apart.

Richard T. Donovan, chief of the homicide bureau, said robbery was the motive in both killings, but he declined to say how much money was taken.

NATION IN BRIEF

NAACP objects to flags

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — NAACP officials say they will take legal action if necessary to see that Confederate flags flying over the state capitols in South Carolina and Alabama are removed.

At its 35th Southeast Regional Conference here, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People adopted a resolution requesting removal of the flags it considers "a symbol of divisiveness, racial animosity and an insult to black people throughout the region."

NAACP Southeast Regional Director Earl T. Shinhoster said the local branches in South Carolina and Alabama have been instructed to take legal action if necessary to remove the flags.

The resolution approved Saturday also calls for the removal of Confederate flag "stars and bar" symbols from the state flags in Georgia and Mississippi.

Georgia and Mississippi NAACP branches are to encourage their states to use flags without Confederate symbols, Shinhoster said.

Man may claim coercion

BOULDER, Mont. (AP) — One of two men charged in the shotgun slaying of "Dallas" star Patrick Duffy's parents is expected to argue at trial this week he was coerced into taking part in the crime, court papers show.

Jury selection was to begin today in Jefferson County District Court in the trial of Kenneth A. Miller, 19, of Helena.

Sean A. Wentz, 19, of Helena, Miller's alleged accomplice in the slaying of Terrence and Marie Duffy will be tried separately.

Miller and Wentz are charged with two counts each of deliberate homicide and robbery and assault.

Birch ties not disclosed

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The head of a state commission that sold a textbook in which black children were called "pickaninnies," did not disclose membership in the John Birch Society when she was appointed, a newspaper reported.

Jane Crosby, chairwoman of the state's Bicentennial Commission for the U.S. Constitution, told the San Francisco Examiner she joined the ultraconservative society in the late 1950s as a lifetime member and never removed her name.

Ms. Crosby, appointed by Gov. George Deukmejian, said she did not disclose her membership on a questionnaire that the governor's office has all potential appointees fill out "because I'm not active in it," the newspaper reported Sunday.

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

Friday, March 9, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The weather turned nasty today with 37 degrees, wind west-southwest, and an inch of snow. Later in the day it was foggy and rainy.

The Street Commissioners of Philadelphia voted to extend the Fourth Street sewer northward to Market Street and to connect an extension to Fifth and Walnut streets as well. When this work was completed Fourth Street would be paved between Chestnut and Walnut streets.

Jane Mecom, Benjamin Franklin's sister, wrote to her brother from Boston today. She reported that the winter was cold in New England — so cold that she was unable to get her exercise outdoors. She was anxious to know more about the rental houses her brother was building and how his health was holding up. She also suggested that he might write a letter to their sister's grandson who was living in New Hampshire. The man apparently was quite poor, and a letter from his famous great-uncle would be most cherished.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

William Samuel Johnson had been taking a brief sojourn from Congress at his home in Stratford, Conn. Today he intended to return to New York, but with the rain and snow the stage did not arrive. Even without Johnson, Congress had a quorum today and conducted business.

The delegates of Massachusetts introduced three pieces of evidence relating to Shays' Rebellion. In these documents the governor and the legislature blamed each other for the rebellion. Congress essentially ignored the papers by referring them to committee.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Livingston, always looking for superior vegetables for his garden, wrote the Baron von Steuben in New York today to ask for the same sugar pea seeds he had provided earlier. Livingston suggested that the baron might leave the seeds at Brockholst Livingston's house on Wall Street in New York. He would find some way to send them to his house in New Jersey.

Besides being an avid gardener, Livingston also was a great fisherman. Today, his son Brockholst sent a package of two dozen fine fish hooks as partial payment from a Mr. Tillary. The packet also included two sticks of Dutch sealing wax.

David Brearly, chief justice of the New Jersey Supreme Court, wrote to Livingston today to express his opinion on the state court system. Since any case brought before the Court of Chancery required the opinion of only one justice whose decision could not be appealed, Brearly thought the system put too much pressure on the judge. He did not suggest any specific changes in the state constitution, but simply stated his concerns about the system.

LOOKING BACK
Philadelphia Streets and Sewers

Philadelphians took pride in the city's appearance as the largest and most cosmopolitan in the United States. Yet the city was not administered by a duly constituted government. Different city functions were under the control of commissions. The Street Commission, in charge of streets and sewers, was perhaps the strongest and most important of these bodies. Legislation dating back to 1763 regulated the construction of the sidewalks, gutters and posts which bordered all paved cartways.

Each individual property owner was responsible for the sidewalk fronting the street before his property. The 10-foot-wide passage had to be made of "good well burnt bricks or square flat stones," and had to rise seven inches in 10 feet to assure drainage. The ordinance called for the gutters to be 22 inches wide and no more than four inches deep. Four-foot posts spaced every 10 feet along the street side of the gutter protected carriages and horses from accidents and pedestrians from street traffic.

Not all Philadelphia streets were paved in 1787. Most were paved from the waterfront west to Third Street, but west of Third paving varied since property owners contributed to the paving expense in front of their buildings. The street commissioners also were in charge of the city's sewers. In the summer of 1787 they supervised the construction of a large arch over the common sewer at Fourth and Market streets to alleviate flooding problems at that busy intersection. They also supervised leveling the city's hilly terrain to regulate the grade of the streets and thus improve vehicular traffic in the city. Finally, the commissioners hired street cleaners to collect garbage on the streets and sidewalks.

First Lady power

It should come as no shock that, after 35 years of marriage, Nancy Reagan is intensely protective of her husband's personal and political well-being, refusing to sit on the sidelines when he is in trouble. Nor should it surprise anyone that the first lady is taking some political heat of her own over her steps to salvage Ronald Reagan's presidency.

The complaint most commonly voiced by critics is, "Who elected her? She's accountable to no one." But, then, who elected any of the president's other advisers? In truth, the role of first lady, like that of White House chief of staff, is one defined not by the Constitution but by the man sitting in the Oval Office. As long as the president respects his spouse's opinions, she will have influence with him. Should it be any other way? Would Mrs. Reagan's critics pass a law forbidding the president to discuss affairs of state with his wife?

Nancy Reagan is hardly the first — and certainly will not be the last — first lady to be accused of being a power-hungry matron intent on running the government from the shadows of the White House family quarters.

Rosalyn Carter was branded "the Steel Magnolia" after she began attending Cabinet meetings and publicly rose to her husband's defense when his administration started to crumble. Some observers expressed shock when Harry Truman acknowledged consulting Bess on whether to use the super-secret atomic bomb against Japan. Unkind newspaper columnists dubbed Eleanor Roosevelt the "Big Mouth (La Boca Grande)" for her role as FDR's legs, traveling widely and promoting social justice and civil rights, then an unpopular cause. After Woodrow Wilson suffered a massive stroke in 1919, Edith Wilson, along with some high level White House staff members, is said to have run the administrative branch of the government on a day-to-day basis and was harshly rebuked in the press for establishing a personal "regency."

What nearly every first lady shares is an overriding interest in the president's political fortunes and personal contentment. Many have secretly wept over the criticism hurled at their husbands, stoically feeling the hurt much more sharply than the men at whom it was directed. Mrs. Reagan should not be faulted for recognizing that the ouster of Donald Regan was in the president's best interest, even though the campaign of leaks from the East Wing was at times unseemly.

As long as Ronald Reagan is in the White House, Nancy Reagan will remain a force to be reckoned with, as Mr. Regan so painfully learned. But, as far as first ladies are concerned, it has probably always been that way, more so at some times, less at others.

As Rutherford B. Hayes explained more than a century ago, "Mrs. Hayes may not have much influence on Congress, but she has great influence with me."

Another View:

Plot to kill kids?

Of all the allegations spun off by the Iran-contra scandal, none is more disturbing than reporter Seymour Hersh's assertion that the chief objective of last year's U.S. air attack on Libya was to assassinate Col. Moammar Gadhafi, his wife and his children.

The White House has denied the report, restating earlier claims that the bombs which fell on the Gadhafi family compound were intended for a military barracks 600 feet away. But Hersh, a respected investigative reporter, says his version of what prompted the National Security Council-coordinated attack is based on interviews with more than 70 current and former U. S. officials familiar with the affair.

If Hersh is right, then the Libyan raid must rank as one of the most shameful episodes in American history. It would be bad enough to have had a murder plot hatched inside the White House against Gadhafi alone. But it's numbing to think that the highest U.S. officials would even consider making infant children the specific targets of an air raid. Their alleged rationale is also mind-boggling — that attacking Gadhafi's family would diminish his reputation among Libya's Bedouin people because it would show he couldn't protect his own home.

Yes, thousands of children have been killed in other air raids in this often hellish century. And yes, Gadhafi's 15-month-old adopted daughter was already known to have died in this raid — by a misdirected bomb, according to reports at the time — while some of his other children were injured. But there is a difference between making children the incidental victims of military action and making them deliberate targets. There's also a difference between killing Gadhafi because he got too close to a legitimate military target and killing him because he was the target himself.

Revelations in the 1970s of bizarre, unsuccessful plots to kill or encourage the killing of foreign leaders should have taught the United States a lesson. That modern technology makes pinpointing a target like Gadhafi more possible does not answer the moral questions involved. Nor are the moral issues altered by Gadhafi's survival — thanks, according to Hersh, to a malfunction of a weapons system.

Hersh's version of what happened is not beyond challenge. But his research appears thorough, and his account raises questions that demand better answers than the flat denial so far offered.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's Highlight in History:

On March 9, 1954, CBS newsman Edward R. Murrow critically reviewed Wisconsin Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy's anti-Communism campaign on the television program "See It Now."

On this date:

In 1661, Cardinal Jules Mazarin, the chief minister of France, died, leaving King Louis XIV in full control.

In 1796, Napoleon Bonaparte married Josephine de Beauharnais.

In 1822, Charles M. Graham of New York was granted a patent for artificial teeth.

In 1860, the first Japanese ambassador to the United States, Niimi Buennokami, arrived in San Francisco.

In 1862, during the Civil War, the ironclads "Monitor" and "Virginia," formerly the "Merrimac," clashed for five hours at Hampton Roads, Va. Neither vessel won.

In 1916, Mexican raiders led by Pancho Villa attacked Columbus, N.M., killing more than a dozen people.

In 1933, Congress, called into special session by President Franklin D. Roosevelt, began its "100 days" of enacting New Deal legislation.

In 1945, U.S. bombers launched incendiary bomb attacks on Japan, causing widespread devastation. In Tokyo, at least 120,000 people died.

In 1964, in its New York Times vs. Sullivan decision, the Supreme Court narrowed the definition of libel, ruling that a public official, in order to collect damages, must prove "actual malice."

In 1975, work began on the Alaskan oil pipeline.

Thought for Today: "We will not be driven by fear into an age of unreason, if we dig deep in our own history and our doctrine and remember that we are not descended from fearful men, not from men who feared to write, to speak, to associate, and to defend causes which were for the moment unpopular." — Edward R. Murrow (1908-1965) during the "See It Now" broadcast of March 9, 1954.

CIA's strange devices helped agents

WASHINGTON — If the Smithsonian Institution is looking for a sure-fire exhibit to amuse boys of all ages, it couldn't do better than to borrow the CIA's historical "dirty tricks" collection now under lock and key at the agency's headquarters in Langley, Va.

Jack Anderson

The display would bear a sort of perverse resemblance to the show window of a Times Square joke shop. But instead of ribtickling whoopie cushions, joy buzzers and fake ink stains, the fiendish devices developed for the Office of Strategic Services during World War II were deadly serious. They were designed to commit murder and mayhem behind enemy lines or otherwise help OSS agents carry out their dangerous spying and sabotage missions.

Here are some examples, either from the CIA collection or as described graphically in a yellowing copy of "OSS WEAPONS," a manual produced in June 1944, just as Allied troops were invading Normandy:

— A "psychological harassing agent" with the jocular name of "Who, Me?" It was a small tube containing a "liquid chemical of violent, repulsive and lasting odor" — in plain English, a stink bomb. But it wasn't designed for pranksters in an elevator. Here's how the "Who, Me?" was to be used, according to the OSS manual:

"It is to be squirted directly upon the body or clothing of a person a few feet away. The odor is that of occidental feces, which is extremely offensive to the Orientals. Very good use of this agent can be made by native patriots in crowded markets and bazaars to create disturbances, attack morale of enemy guards and divert attention from other activities."

— The "Dog Drag" was another smelly device, which deposited a "persistent aromatic" scent when dragged behind an agent "to throw trained dogs off the scent of their quarry." The drag kit "can be particularly useful in disguising the operator's trail to a hidden storage point or other revisited spot." The device would presumably discombobulate Nazi bloodhounds without burning their sensitive sniffers as the British favored hot-pepper trick did.

— Explosives and incendiaries for use against people and inanimate objects were disguised as harmless, everyday objects. "Some were made to resemble chunks of coal and logs — with startling results when an Axis soldier placed them in a roaring fire," one description notes, adding: "Others were made to look like animal droppings and were used as land mines."

— "Capsule H" was a sort of delayed-action Molotov cocktail, consisting of a small plastic capsule filled with powdered sugar, potassium chlorate and buckshot (for weight). It was usually placed in a bottle filled with sulfuric acid and gasoline. The acid would eat through the plastic in about two hours, "igniting the powders with a brief hot flame," bursting the bottle and spreading the burning gasoline.

— The "Caccolube" was a simple but effective device to disable an enemy vehicle. It was a condom filled with abrasive powders and crushed walnuts, and was dropped into an engine crankcase. "After the engine heats up," the OSS manual explained, "the hot oil will deteriorate the rubber sac and free the compound into the lubricating system.

"When circulated through this system, the compound fuses and welds the moving metal parts of the machinery. Slipped into a truck, the Caccolube takes effect after the truck has been driven from 30 to 50 miles. It reacts so thoroughly on pistons, cylinder walls and bearing journals that the vehicle is not only thrown out of service but the engine is destroyed beyond repair."

This lethal "lube job" replaced the original effort using sugar, when it was discovered that sugar actually promoted better engine performance in the vehicles of that era.

CLEARING THE FOG: At least someone in Foggy Bottom understands how to bargain with communist negotiators. The Office of Foreign Missions, which caters to the needs of diplomats here, learned that the East German delegation to the United Nations wanted to expand by buying a house in Mamaroneck, N.Y. Fine, said OFM — but only if American diplomats get the six new houses in East Berlin they've been in desperate need of for years. The East Germans were given a deadline — this June — and were told they'd be kicked out of the Mamaroneck mansion if homes for the U.S. diplomats haven't been found. The Germans are busily showing houses to the Americans in Berlin.

EVANS & NOVAK

Criticism of her didn't change Nancy's style

WASHINGTON — Despite criticism of interfering in her husband's business, Nancy Reagan showed no intention of changing her style when she was heard describing Donald T. Regan, the ousted White House chief of staff, as a "leech" who has now been removed from the premises.

That comment contradicted the defense of Mrs. Reagan over numerous television programs by U.S. Information Agency Director Charles Z. Wick. A close family friend of the Reagans, Wick has insisted the first lady had nothing to do with getting rid of Regan. In fact, old Republican hands brought in for advice in the current crisis were surprised how deeply she was involved not only in ousting Regan but in picking his successor, former senator Howard Baker.

A footnote: Regan is bitter. He has confided to friends that he had been warned to watch out in Washington because "that's the town where they don't hit you till you're down."

PAT'S SUCCESSOR

John Koehler, the unknown bureaucrat tapped by Nancy Reagan to replace Patrick J. Buchanan as White House communications director, showed enough instinct for survival to take occupancy of his office on a Sunday to foreclose a quiet coup.

Koehler had gotten wind that the new chief of staff, Howard Baker, was being advised to get rid of him as a sign of independence from the first lady. On the first Saturday of the new regime, longtime Baker aide James Cannon was using the windowless office formerly occupied by Buchanan.

But on Sunday, with nobody else at the White House, Koehler moved in. Even so, he may not be secure. Baker is being urged to send Koehler back to the U.S. Information Agency with a bigger job and instead install the well-respected Tom Griscom, Baker's close adviser and former press secretary.

ZBIG IN MOSCOW

Zbigniew Brzezinski, the American Kremlinologist who is probably most hated in Moscow, was given treatment usually accorded only a Politburo member when the Moscow News published a full-scale interview with him.

Brzezinski, who was a tough-minded national security adviser for President Jimmy Carter, takes a hard line on the Soviet Union and its territorial and ideological depredations. Nevertheless, there was no censoring in the Moscow News. Nor did Brzezinski pull his punches.

Instead, the widely-read newspaper ran a separate critique of Brzezinski in a box, written by one of the editors. Never before in 20 years of writing about Soviet affairs, both before and after the Carter administration, has Brzezinski been given such exposure to Soviet citizens.

THE TAXING SPEAKER

House Ways and Means Committee members were nettled when Speaker Jim Wright unveiled his proposed 0.5 percent transactions tax on stock sales without alerting their chairman, Rep. Dan Rostenkowksi.

A major battle over economic and political strategy is shaping up between the two Democratic leaders. Wright, who opposed last year's Rostenkowski-led tax reform, wants to establish his speaker's credentials by pressing for an $18 billion tax increase.

Wright and Rostenkowksi fenced for 45 minutes Thursday at a luncheon attended by all Democratic members of Ways and Means. The chairman told the speaker he and his committee would follow the wishes of the party, but it is clear he was less than enthusiastic about Wright's initiative.

SHULTZ'S DELEGATION

In a major but unannounced switch, Secretary of State George Shultz has quietly turned over policy control for all Eastern Europe to Deputy Secretary John Whitehead — a concession that may have been necessary to keep Whitehead in the administration.

Former Wall Street tycoon Whitehead was inconspicuous during his first 18 months at State. He was given his first plum in January with a coveted travel assignment to Poland earlier this year.

The fact that Whitehead used that trip to visit Bulgaria, which is still on the U.S. blacklist, caused chagrin among conservatives and even within the State Department. Even so, Shultz gave him complete control of policy concerning the Soviet Union's Eastern European empire. That removes it from jurisdiction of Assistant Secretary of State Rozanne Ridgway, a Foreign Service professional.

'Amerika' was about fruit nearing ripeness

Some viewers of the TV show, "Amerika," wanted to know how the Soviet Union came to take over the United States. I'll help the writer, Donald Wrye, by giving you the real scenario.

Charley Reese

The time is 1945. The place, a briefing room in the Kremlin. The speaker is the Soviet chief strategist.

"Comrades, I will outline for you our postwar strategy to achieve our goal of global conquest. As you know, Lenin defined the broad outlines many years ago: Secure the Euro-Asian land mass, then isolate the United States, and it will fall into our hands like a ripe fruit.

"Comrades, the present situation is this: The Red Army occupies Eastern Europe. However, our industrial and population resources have been devastated by the war against the fascists. The Americans, on the other hand, are the greatest power on earth. Not one bomb fell on their military-industrial complex. They are at their all-time peak in military, industrial and economic power. Moreover, they have a nuclear monopoly. This will not last long, but clearly if they challenge us now, we must retreat.

"Comrades, we will convince the Americans to adopt a policy of containment. We will convince them that if they merely contain us, but never challenge us directly, then someday we will change and live as partners. Let them hold Western Europe. What we want is to consolidate our position in Eastern Europe, rebuild our industrial base, develop our nuclear weapons, and assist our Chinese comrades. We will convince them that any direct challenge of communist gains will mean war and because the stupid bourgeoisie do not want war, they will swallow the bait."

It is now 1964 and Kremlin officials are gathered again for a review of Soviet strategy.

"Comrades, our postwar strategy is more successful than we could have imagined. The stupid Americans did fall into the trap of adopting a policy of containment. They did not challenge us in Eastern Europe — not even when the East Germans, the Poles, and the Hungarians revolted. They stood by while we crushed the revolts. Nor did they save China. In Korea, the containment policy worked perfectly. They paid a great price to preserve South Korea but they would not liberate North Korea. We convinced the stupid Americans that they must never fight to win.

"Comrades, our policy of destroying the power of their European allies, which rested on colonialism, has also worked. By supporting wars of national liberation, we have reduced France and Great Britain to minor power status. Germany, we have kept divided.

"Comrades, I have saved the best news for last. We have, with our missile ploy, forced the Americans to abandon their Monroe Doctrine. They have now agreed that they will not challenge our position in Cuba. Moreover, the idiots even agreed to withdraw their missiles from Europe. We have secured the Euro-Asian land mass for communism and our plans to isolate the United States are proceeding on schedule."

The time is now 1986 and Kremlin officials have gathered to plan their end game.

"Comrades, when I compare the relative positions of the United States and the Soviet Union in 1945 and today, I cannot contain my joyous admiration for the genius of Lenin. Today, we hopelessly outclass the United States in conventional military power. Soon, with our ABM system in place, we shall be in a position to announce nuclear checkmate. The enemy's economy is fragile and debt-ridden. I cannot express enough praise for our propaganda, subversive comrades who have so ingeniously supported our grand strategy over the years.

"Today, the Americans are in disarray. They debate endlessly the slightest tactical move. Anti-communism has been thoroughly discredited as a concept. They endlessly attack and criticize their own CIA and Defense Departments. They have dismantled their internal security.

Demjanjuk's rights violated, lawyer says

JERUSALEM (AP) — An attorney for John Demjanjuk claimed today that the retired U.S. autoworker was improperly interrogated and his rights were violated after being extradited to Israel for trial on Nazi war crimes charges.

Demjanjuk's American attorney, Mark O'Connor, told a court his client had "no privacy, nowhere to hide in his cell...no human dignity" during his 12 months of solitary confinement in Israel's Ayalon Prison.

O'Connor said Demjanjuk was not told of his rights, was observed round-the-clock by three guards and a video camera and had no heater in his cold cell because police believed he "may try to commit suicide."

O'Connor made the claims of rights violations while cross-examining Alex Ish-Shalom, the chief investigator, as Demjanjuk's trial entered its fourth week. Ish-Shalom confirmed that these were the conditions of Demjanjuk's confinement but said he had no authority to change them.

Demjanjuk, 66, is accused of being the Nazi guard known as "Ivan the Terrible" who ran the gas chambers at the Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland. An estimated 850,000 Jews were killed at the camp in 1942 and 1943.

O'Connor claims his client, who was born in the Ukraine and settled outside Cleveland after World War II, is a victim of mistaken identity and was himself a prisoner of war in Nazi camps. Demjanjuk was extradited to Israel in February 1986 after being stripped of his U.S. citizenship.

Ish-Shalom said Demjanjuk denied he was Ivan but told policemen who guarded his cell and later repeated to his interrogators that "Eichmann was big whereas I am small."

Adolf Eichman was convicted by Israel of masterminding the Holocaust and was hanged in 1962.

"This statement to me as an investigator was significant," Ish-Shalom said. "It was repeated in other forms later...That's what led us to believe" that Demjanjuk was Ivan.

Demjanjuk followed the testimony closely, sitting on the edge of his seat and at times moving as if to stand up. Demjanjuk's son John Jr., 21, sat behind him.

Ish-Shalom said his six-member team questioned Demjanjuk about 60 times at the maximum security Ayalon Prison and that three interrogators and a Ukrainian interpreter were present during each session.

"Isn't it true that John Demjanjuk asked not to be questioned in English, especially when you double-teamed and triple-teamed him to get a confession?" attorney O'Connor asked.

Ish-Shalom confirmed that a significant part of the questioning was done in English and that Demjanjuk asked for more frequent use of Ukrainian. He also confirmed that Demjanjuk was told he "was not in Treblinka, now you are in Israel."

"Such a sentence was uttered. I don't remember the details," Ish-Shalom said.

O'Connor claimed that his client was told by Ish-Shalom and his team he "better talk because he was facing death, 25 years or longer" in prison if he did not confess.

"In the course of the interrogation, the punishment came up," Ish-Shalom replied. "He was told to respond, to answer because this has to do with serious offense."

Shamir seeks to end spy case probe

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said today that two Israeli officials accused of involvement in the Jonathan Jay Pollard spy operation already have been punished enough and he sees no need for further investigation.

The Cabinet meanwhile voted Sunday to refer ministerial debate over the spy case to a secret 10-member inner Cabinet committee, prompting criticism from several ministers who had demanded a judicial inquiry.

Israel radio said the Cabinet move ended any chance for an independent probe.

Shamir told Israel radio today, "I think that this affair, disclosed and made public 15 months ago, has been investigated enough.

"It is known to those responsible for such matters in the country and I don't see any need to investigate further, and the majority (of ministers) thinks like I do."

Israel radio said Shamir, a member of the right-wing Likud bloc told Parliament's key Foreign Affairs and Security Committee today that he has no intention of reporting to it on the Pollard affair. His refusal caused a furor among committee members belonging to the left-leaning Labor Party, the radio said.

Committee chairman Abba Eban said Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin would give a detailed report on the scandal Thursday to a subcommittee dealing with intelligence activities.

Pollard, a former U.S. Navy analyst, was sentenced in the United States last week to life in prison for selling classified military information to Israel. Israel has said Pollard was part of a renegade ring acting on its own.

Shamir said Col. Aviem Sella, who allegedly recruited and acted as a contact for Pollard, had stood an excellent chance of becoming commander of Israel's air force "in the not so far future."

But Sella lost the chance because of his alleged involvement with Pollard, Shamir said, adding, "For him this is a very painful blow, a heavy punishment."

A U.S. federal grand jury last week indicted Sella on espionage charges. Observers regarded the indictment as an expression of U.S. anger over Sella's promotion four days earlier to the command of the prestigious Tel Nof air force base.

Shamir said Rafi Eitan, the alleged leader of the spy unit, was punished by being removed from intelligence activity.

"The man who all his life was one of the virtuoses of our intelligence...was cut off from the meaning of his life. He lost the taste of his life and no public post can compensate him for this," Shamir said.

After the Pollard affair came into the open, Eitan was made head of the government-run Israeli Chemicals Co., the largest public-owned concern in the country.

Cabinet Secretary Eliakim Rubinstein said the 25-member Cabinet voted to move debate on the Pollard affair to a 10-member forum of senior ministers, or inner Cabinet, that meets behind closed doors. He said no date was set for its discussion of the matter, but that its next regular session is Wednesday.

Communications Minister Amnon Rubenstein, one of three ministers who had demanded a judicial commission of inquiry be established, said the affair required investigation because it caused "unprecedented damage" to U.S.-Israeli relations.

"I want to know...about the responsibility for this totally unjustified, totally irresponsible act that caused unprecedented damage to our relations with United States and also to American Jewry," Rubinstein told reporters.

Abba Eban, chairman of the legislature's Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, also criticized the Cabinet decision.

"This matter requires far more than just a discussion, it requires a full investigation of what happened," he said on Israel army radio.

Israeli leaders have said the decision to buy information from Pollard was made by lower echelons in the Defense Ministry. But new questions were raised following Sella's promotion last week and Pollard's sentencing on Wednesday. In a pre-sentencing document, Pollard claimed that the "highest echelons" in Israel's government were aware of his mission.

Israel radio said at least five members of the inner Cabinet — Shamir, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin, Trade Minister Ariel Sharon and Moshe Arens, a minister without portfolio — oppose further inquiry into the affair.

According to guidelines worked out by the Labor and Likud coalition partners, five votes are enough to defeat the proposal.

Political sources said the Cabinet might propose removing Sella from his new command.

Rabin issued a statement Sunday saying Israel had agreed to allow Sella to be questioned by U.S. investigators. The United States questioned three other Israelis, including Eitan, and promised in return not to put them on trial.

Rabin said the United States repeatedly turned down the offer.

Pollard moved to safer prison after inmates threatened him, paper says

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Jonathan Jay Pollard has been moved from a Virginia prison to one with special security measures after fellow inmates threatened to kill him because he spied for Israel, the Jerusalem Post reported today.

Pollard, 32, was moved for his protection from a federal prison in Petersburg, Va., to one in Springfield, Mo., according to the report by the Post's Washington correspondent, Wolf Blitzer.

The Jerusalem Post did not cite its sources. The report could not immediately be confirmed.

Pollard, a former civilian U.S. Navy analyst, was sentenced last Wednesday to life in prison for selling U.S. military secrets to Israel. His wife, Anne Henderson-Pollard, was given a five-year sentence for helping him.

Blitzer, who has interviewed Pollard and his wife several times, said Black Muslim and Aryan Brotherhood prisoners threatened to kill Pollard while he was held in Petersburg because of his links to Israel.

The Springfield prison has a special unit for prisoners who have received death threats, the newspaper said.

Pollard's wife is in a federal prison hospital in Lexington, Ky., and is in pain because she is not allowed to take some prescribed medication for severe stomach disorders, Blitzer reported.

He quoted Henderson-Pollard's father, Bernard Henderson, as saying she was permitted to take only non-narcotic medication and "that is not enough to relieve her constant pain."

Pollard and his wife are not allowed to see each other or talk on the phone and can communicate only by mail, Blitzer reported.

Pollard and his wife have said they believe their only hope of getting out of jail is if Israel intervenes with the U.S. government and obtains permission for them to be deported to Israel.

WORLD IN BRIEF

At least nine people die, 36 hurt in train derailment

DJIBOUTI, Djibouti (AP) — A three-car train traveling from this East African nation to neighboring Ethiopia derailed, killing at least nine people and injuring 36 others, the Transport Ministry said.

The derailment occurred Sunday near Holl-Holl, about 35 miles south of the capital city, Djibouti, the ministry said. The cause was not immediately known. The train was headed south for Dire-Dawa in eastern Ethiopia. Djibouti, at the southern end of the Red Sea, adjoins northeastern Ethiopia.

Numerous accidents have occurred on the Djibouti-Ethiopian line, built in 1897 by France, Djibouti's former colonial ruler. Some have been due to the poor state of the tracks and others have been caused by sabotage by groups hostile to the Ethiopian government.

Czechs leave tour group

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — Nine Czechoslovak tourists left their tour group in Munich, but police said Sunday they did not know if they would apply for asylum in West Germany.

The tourists, six men and three women, left their group of 196 people on Saturday.

Another Czechoslovak jumped off a Soviet passenger ship on the Danube river in the city of Passau, West Germany, but then changed his mind and returned to his country, said a border police official in the state of Bavaria.

The 35-year-old man jumped from the ship "Volga" to the embankment and was taken to the hospital for treatment for bruises, police said.

While in the hospital, he asked to be returned home.

Pope encourages women

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II said Sunday he encouraged women in their quest for social and civil rights.

"The church is interested in questions regarding the presence of women in society, above all for that which concerns the undisputed affirmation for their own roles in the family," the pope told thousands of people during his Sunday noon prayer blessing.

He said the church also is concerned about "the just recognition of social and civil rights in the context of the dignity and identity of every woman."

Noting that Italians were celebrating Women's Day on Sunday, the pope said he offered women his "encouragement in their commitment."

Cold paralyzes Turkey

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — A late-winter cold wave has paralyzed most of Turkey and been blamed for at least 22 deaths in the past week.

The cold air moved down from the Balkans on Tuesday evening into the western provinces and extended its grip into most of Turkey on Sunday.

Istanbul, a city of 6 million people, was buried under 30 inches of snow during the five-day period, and Mayor Bedrettin Dalan called the snowfall the worst in 100 years. City schools were ordered closed until this Thursday, Istanbul's Ataturk airport was closed until Sunday and soccer games were canceled.

Cooler weather in area forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Cooler temperatures are in the National Weather Service forecast for Tuesday. The daytime high should be only near the 50-degree mark and skies will be mostly cloudy.

The NWS, located at Midland Regional Airport, is calling for cloudy skies tonight with a low in the lower 30s. Winds will be out of the northeast at 10-15 mph tonight and will shift to the north at 10-20 mph on Tuesday.

Sunday's high of 70 was 16 degrees below the record high set for that date in 1951. Today's low was 26 degrees above the record low of 17 set for this date in 1931.

STATE

Thoughts of an early spring were just a memory across northern portions of Texas as cold Arctic air spread into the state, threatening to spread a thin coating of snow over the Panhandle and northern portions of the South Plains.

The arctic cold had pushed across the Panhandle early today into the northern sections of the South Plains. The frontal system was producing some scattered showers mixed with light snow over the Panhandle and northern sections of the South Plains by dawn. Showers and a few thunderstorms were being reported in the Permian Basin.

Forecasts called for a chance of drizzle or light rain over the Panhandle and South Plains, changing to snow in the Panhandle tonight and early tomorrow. Accumulations were expected to be about an inch.

It will be windy and colder with increasing cloudiness over the northern half of the state and mostly sunny and mild over South Texas through Tuesday.

The moisture will be spreading in North Texas tonight and Tuesday in the form of rain. It will be colder over most of the state Tuesday.

NATION

Rain fell on the mid-Atlantic and northern Pacific coasts today, while snow dusted parts of the Plains and Rockies.

Gale warnings were posted along southern Lake Superior and western and southern Lake Michigan, where winds threatened to cause high waves and beach erosion.

Light snow fell overnight from western Nebraska across southwestern South Dakota, Colorado, Wyoming and western Montana. One- to 3-inch accumulations were common early today.

Following the herd

He lives with goats, works with goats, rejoices with goats, cries with goats, walks with goats, and dines with goats — although their diets are considerably different from his.

Occasionally, he partakes of cabrito but not much anymore.

For him, goat meat is too high in cholesterol, and goat milk, like sugar, is not kind to his arthritis. His diet is mostly canned chili — Texas' Wolf Brand —, cheese, bread, weiners, peanuts, and tea.

"I've raised everything all of my life," said Knappe, a 64-year-old recluse rancher near Mentone in far West Texas where the goats far outnumber the people.

He's got a flock of 250 billy, nanny and kid goats on his 520-acre Reeves County ranch. The nearest town, the Loving County seat of Mentone, has 14 residents. About 65 folks live in the county — Texas' most sparsely populated county located about 100 miles west of Midland.

Knappe, who is somewhat of a legend and an eccentric here, has lived alone on his Pecos River spread since 1946, when he paid $9.50 an acre for the land. For the past 15 years, his companions have been goats. Before that, cattle were his company.

"I keep these little devils in the house if there's anything wrong with them," he said of five ailing kids. A cat — the ranch's mouser — climbs in and out of an window in Knappe's one-room tin house.

By day, he follows his flock here and there — from the tin home, to wherever the goats wander, to the nearby Pecos River, where the goats drink and Knappe, when the weather is warm, bathes. He drives his old white pickup truck the 25 miles to Pecos to pick up staples and other supplies, including drinking water, and his mail.

By nighttime, some — not all — goats herd into the tin house and bunk down. "These little devils, they come in here and get into everything" — from goat ration pellets to his clothes, which they gnaw on.

They hop onto his plywood bed that's covered with a tarpaulin. He has to nudge them aside to make his bedding-down place.

"They swarm up after I get my place all warmed up," he said. "They come right in bed with you. On cold nights, those dang goats will keep you warm."

His day begins about 6 o'clock each morning, when his goat alarm clock, Pal, bleats and awakens him.

"The funny thing about these darn goats," said the rancher with the sky-blue eyes, "is it takes all kinds to make a herd. These goats buck and run like an old-timey fire drill. They move around a lot and play."

They roam the prairie in search of fodder, which for goats is about anything edible or not. "It don't make a dang," he said. "They eat everything. Poison weed. It don't bother them. They eat everything that grows."

"I never try to make them go nowhere," he said. "Goats are pretty much on the go." But they stick together, and their sleeping, arousing, feeding and watering habits are predictable.

They buck and rub each other. "They've got so much walking and fighting to do." They talk incessantly. The bleat of baby kids is like that of a child's cry.

"These goats, you may not believe, but they carry on conversations all of the time."

Knappe, who obviously is a breed apart, began his earthly life in 1923 in Big Spring, where his father operated a slaughterhouse — Knappe & Sons. "He (his father) did all the buying, and I did all the work." His father was born in Marienfeld — now Stanton — and was the son of a railroad man.

"I started out raising pigs in 1930 when I was 6 years old," he said, "and raised a turkey buzzard, and the thing died. The first cold spell got him."

After he finished high school in Big Spring and World War II loomed, Knappe joined the U.S. Navy's Seabees. After the war, he started his ranching career.

Please see GOATS, Page 2B

Goats are Knappe's constant companions in sleeping and waking hours. At left, he cares for a kid in his tin shack. Above, he cares for a newborn kid, while the baby's mother, Molly, keeps abreast.

Supreme Court lets $1.4 million award against city of Borger stand

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today let stand a $1.4 million award to the family of a Texas ranch foreman killed mistakenly by police while they chased a suspected kidnapper.

The court, without comment, left intact a ruling that four Borger, Texas, police officers and the city government must pay the damage award to James C. Grandstaff's family.

Lawyers for the police officers and city officials said the award should be overturned because the killing was an isolated incident by police acting in good faith.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled last August that a jury properly determined the police violated Grandstaff's rights.

The appeals court said the "record reveals how officers and a city police force failed, at great cost, and how those officers and their supervisors thereafter denied their failures and concerned themselves only with unworthy, if not despicable, means to avoid legal liability."

The appeals court said the police "showed no inclination to avoid inflicting unnecessary harm upon innocent people. They simply saw a target and fired."

The police fired at the suspect as he left the truck.

Awakened by the gunfire, Grandstaff drove his own pickup truck toward the police cars to investigate. He then returned to his house to warn his family that police were after someone and headed back to help the police.

As he stepped from his truck, the officers opened fired and he was shot in the back with a high-powered rifle.

Secrecy surrounds adult video stores' owners

HARLINGEN (AP) — Attempts to track down the owners of a chain of adult video stores revealed a cloud of secrecy — including a corporation with owners whom store employees say they have never seen, only post office boxes for an address and no listed telephones — a newspaper reported.

The Valley Morning Star in Harlingen tried to trace the ownership after the stores were raided last week by Cameron County authorities, who seized material they described as obscene.

The corporation lists its mailing address as a post office box in Irving, near Dallas, but no telephone listing exists, the newspaper reported.

According to property tax records, Adult Video in San Benito and Dolar Video in Brownsville are operated by Hot-Val Inc., which lists its mailing address as a post office box in Irving, a Dallas suburb, but the newspaper said it was unable to find a telephone listing.

The buildings in which the two raided adult stores are located, and the land on which the buildings sit, belong to Louisiana Development Inc., which lists its headquarters in Lewisville, another Dallas suburb. Again, no telephone listing could be found, the newspaper said.

Four of eight children killed in fire

GREENVILLE (AP) — Fire officials say four of eight children left alone in a one-story frame house died in a fire that swept through the structure near downtown in this North Texas city.

A fifth child, an infant, was in critical condition today at Parkland Burn Center in Dallas.

Three children escaped the blaze and ran to a neighbor's home for help.

Greenville Fire Chief Dorsey Driggers said the cause of the fire, reported just before midnight Saturday, has not been determined.

Justice of the Peace Gloria Peters said the mothers, Teresa Anderson and Brenda Ann Jones, who are sisters, reported leaving the children alone about 30 minutes while they went to they went to a brother's house in Greenville.

A family member said both women lived in the house with their children. Authorities said the sisters returned to the house shortly after firefighters began recovering bodies at the scene.

Ms. Peters said the children died from burns and smoke inhalation. The bodies were found in the same general area of the house, she said.

The dead children were identified as Tobias Anderson, 6; Alexis Anderson, 2; LaQuinta Jones, 9; and Carmilia Jones, 5. Bonnie Jean Anderson was in critical condition at the Dallas hospital.

The children who escaped the fire ranged in age from 4 to 10 years.

Trilingual directory lists Odessa-Ector County firms

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A new trilingual directory listing Odessa-Ector County businesses will be utilized by both local and out-of-state buyers, according to the director of economic development for the Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce.

Chuck Bernhard says that, for the first time, the Manufacturers and Industrial Services Directory replicates all information on local businesses in Spanish and German, as well as English.

More than 300 companies are included in the directory, Bernhard said. They are listed alphabetically, and include the name of company executive, telephone numbers, product manufactured or service provided and area of distribution.

The directory also lists manufacturing and industrial service firms according to their Standard Industrial Classification. This is the coding system utilized by the U.S. Department of Commerce to define and classify various types of business operations and is the most widely used system in the U.S., according to the Odessa Chamber's economic development director.

The directory is at the printer now and should be ready for sale about the end of this month, he said.

Bernhard said he'll take copies of the directory with him when he goes to Hanover, West Germany, in April to attend, what he described as, "the world's largest trade fair." He plans to place copies of the directory in trade sections of every embassy library that he can, he said. He also plans to take brochures with him from every local company he can.

Bernhard said he plans to put a copy of the directory in the hands of every commercial attache in Germany. He said, as far as he knows, Odessa is the only city of its size in the country to offer a trilingual directory of this type. "I don't think there is another city of our size that has a directory translated into Spanish, as well as German," he said.

The Spanish translation was done by Lily Tercero, the Chamber's economic development technical specialist. The German translation was done by Claudia Coldwell, a part-time teacher at Odessa College.

Bernhard said he's been told businessmen are particularly interested in products and capabilities available in the area, such as machine shops, control engineering power transmission equipment, oil hydraulics and pneumatics, compressed air technology, internal combustion engines and drilling technology.

Executions in Texas likely to increase, Mattox says

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — With most of the major points of appeal on death sentence cases already decided by the Supreme Court, appeals are moving faster through state and federal courts, and executions in Texas probably will increase, Attorney General Jim Mattox says.

Texas leads the nation in executions since the U.S. Supreme Court ended a 10-year moratorium in 1976, and Mattox said it appears the state will maintain that distinction.

"The floodgates have been opened," Mattox said. "We will see more and more executions taking place. The number of executions are going to continue to rise rapidly."

Last week, Gov. Bill Clements said he was unlikely to grant clemency for most of the condemned.

"The death penalty will go forward. I'm in favor of the death penalty. I always have been. I haven't changed my opinion at all," Clements said.

Last year, more than half the executions in the United States — 10 out of 18 — were in Texas. The 22nd person to be executed since Texas reinstated the death penalty was killed by an injection of drugs last Wednesday.

An air of routine has begun to surround Texas executions. In contrast with earlier executions, there have been no television cameras awaiting the witnesses. Also absent have been the earlier chanting crowds of college students favoring capital punishment and anti-death penalty protesters.

There are 246 men on death row at the Ellis I Unit outside of Huntsville and three women in Gatesville.

GOATS

His life is austere — nothing fancy. "I never did care a dang in the world about it (television)." His basics are propane-operated refrigerator, cook stove and space heater.

"I wish I had a wood stove. Like anything, if you burn wood, you've got your smoke problems." He's got plenty of firewood — bulldozed mesquite — and old railroad ties, which form a corral.

The rancher shuns world news, wondered who won last year's governor's race, and was unaware that heavyweight boxer Cassius Clay in 1964 had changed his name to Muhammad Ali.

His life centers around his goats, such as Blue Talker, Crooked Nose, Cut Nose, Molly, Easter Bunny, Ava June, June, and Little Brown Nanny. Despite his failing eyesight, he faithfully watches over his flock.

"There are coyotes around all the time, but I seldom have trouble with them," Knappe said. "The coyote, he's native. Wherever he beds down, that's home. He'll be around when the white man is gone." Here, within sight of the Guadalupe Mountain range, he's more leery of the owl. Owls may carry away a newborn kid. "The owls keep on your blind side," Knappe said, "and the first thing you know, the kid is gone."

Except for the dearth of potable water, the land here "would be a good place to grow fruit trees," he said.

"This land has everything," he said. "You could be rich in a minute (with the right oil deal)." But the pumpjacks are "right across the fence from me."

He shuns civilization, though he's a most friendly fellow, and doesn't seem to philosophize openly. "We seldom even bother with religion."

And Knappe, who is from a long-lived family, has no plans for moving into town.

"No, sir," he said. "I'll just probably move farther out."

One dead after boat capsizes in rough surf

PORT MANSFIELD (AP) — A 21-foot pleasure boat with seven people aboard capsized in rough surf off Port Mansfield, causing the death of a McAllen woman and the disappearance of her husband when he tried to rescue her, the Coast Guard said.

Authorities said Marisala Carvajal was pronounced dead upon arrival at a Harlingen hospital. Her husband, Benjamin Carvajal, 35, remained missing at dawn today.

A coast guard spokesman who declined to be identified said the search had been suspended pending developments.

The survivors were identified as boat operator Terry Urdal and passengers Benjamin Perez, Tom Shawhan, and Debra and Thomas Guerra, all of McAllen.

A spokesman for the Coast Guard at Corpus Christi said the inboard-outboard motorboat capsized at about 10:40 a.m. Sunday in the Gulf of Mexico between the jetties at Port Mansfield, about 80 miles south of Corpus Christi.

Six of the passengers swam ashore, but Carjaval swam back to help his wife when he realized she was missing. He disappeared in the surf during his attempt to save her, the Coast Guard spokesman said.

Marisala Carvajal made it to shore alive a few minutes later and was transported by Coast Guard helicopter to an ambulance in Port Mansfield, which then took her to Valley Baptist Hospital in Harlingen for treatment, he said.

China's folk art provides new love for Boston woman

Associated Press

There is this to be said of travel to exotic places: It introduces an individual to hitherto-unknown wonders.

For Nancy Zeng Berliner, a native of Boston, a chance to travel to and live in China did that and also led to a new career: collecting and writing about Chinese folk art.

Ms. Berliner's book on the subject is being published this spring. Furthermore, the collection she made with her husband is on display in what is said to be the first major exhibition of this type of work at Yale University's Art Gallery.

The show will also be seen in 1987 at New York's China Institute, the Taft Museum in Cincinnati and the Indiana University Art Museum in Bloomington.

Like many others, even those whose field of study in college was Chinese culture and language as hers was, Ms. Berliner knew nothing of folk art when she moved to Beijing in 1982 after two and a half years in Hong Kong.

Her future husband, however, an artist and teacher in China, had already begun collecting the frequently under-valued examples of paper cuts, shadow puppets, embroidery, wood block prints and stenciled fabrics made by peasants in many regions of China.

An example of the low repute in which this work has been held is seen in the exhibition's title — "Chinese Folk Art: The Small Skills of Carving Insects." The insects were and are the humble folks who created this work mainly as home decor and personal adornment.

She notes that the work has remained something done in the home but rarely either sold or noticed. In postwar China, however, the government made some use of the popular folk art by encouraging or insisting (depending on the climate of the times) that peasants substitute revolutionary themes for the traditional symbols of prosperity and fertility.

Extensive notes displayed along with the work itself in the exhibitions are there to help Americans appreciate the place this work has in Chinese village life.

In the book, "Chinese Folk Art," she elaborates on these themes and notes how important the traditional symbols, such as pomegranates for fertility and lions as guardians of children, are in Chinese cultural life.

As interesting as the symbols are, the crafts themselves are equally so. One of the most fascinating is paper cuts. Paper cutouts are made with scissors or knife and colored or plain paper. One of the techniques employed has probably been emulated (with considerably less dexterity) by all American schoolchildren in the pastime of folding a piece of paper, cutting out patterns and unfolding it.

In China, paper cuts are pasted onto the new paper windows glued onto lattice frames for the coming of the new year. They also decorate homes at other festive times, such as during a wedding. Besides decorating homes, the paper cuts were and are used as stencils for embroidery.

The craft of paper cutting has been traced back at least as far as the Ming Dynasty (1368-1644) when paper became inexpensive enough to be used in this way. In cities and country villages, people began making and pasting paper cuts on shoes, hats and pillows as well as windows, walls, ceilings, fans, mirrors and screens.

A craft based on paper cuts is the creation of shadow puppets. The puppets are flat pieces of leather or paper carved into human and animal figures and into scenery. The puppets are manipulated in front of a lamp to project images on a screen. Every color and detail of the clothing and every expression of the puppets is seen by the audience. The puppet shows that are found all over China and remain a popular entertainment combine narration and music with the movement into spectacular performances usually of ancient legends and stories. Puppetcraft and performance have existed for centuries in China, according to Ms. Berliner.

The craft of embroidery has been raised to art in China where both rich or poor women were judged by their embroidery skills. The greater the skills, the finer the nature was the belief.

In wealthy families, women stayed enclosed in embroidery quarters where they worked on their dowry until the day of their marriage. When the matchmaker was arranging a match for them, she would often bring the prospective mate's family a sample of the girl's embroidery. Embroidery is believed to be one of China's oldest forms of decorative and artistic effort, if not the oldest.

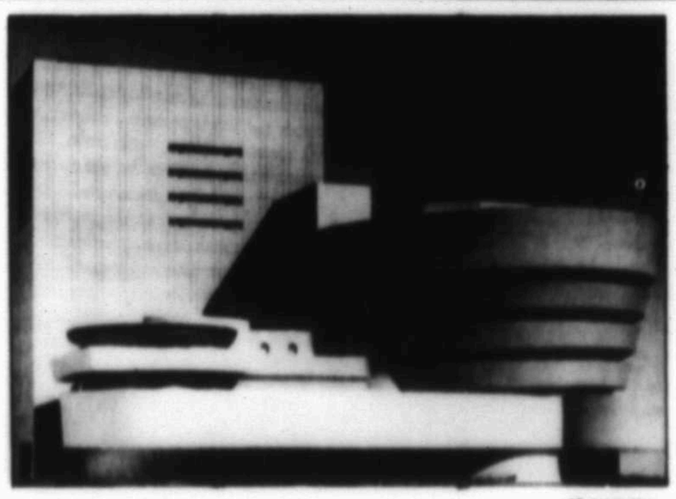

Other important folk art media that are found in humble Chinese homes include dye-resist (or batik) printed fabrics and wood-block prints. The former was made to embellish the rough cotton used for fabric home accessories such as quilt covers and door curtains and for clothing.

Woodblock prints did and still do decorate the homes of peasants. They have also been used to teach religion and political thought. Woodblock printing methods have also been used to produce paper money to be burned for ghosts, gods and other ancestral spirits.

"Chinese Folk Art," is published by Little, Brown.

A model shows the proposed shape of an addition to New York's Guggenheim Museum, a tower designed by Gwathmey Siegel & Associates. The original rounded structure was the work of Frank Lloyd Wright.

Guggenheim reveals new expansion plans

NEW YORK (AP) — The Guggenheim Museum, bowed but not beaten by criticism of its expansion plans, recently unveiled a revised design for a smaller, more discrete addition, to the building designed by Frank Lloyd Wright.

The new building, a narrow, 10-story tower similar in shape, size and location to an addition Wright himself contemplated before the museum was built in 1959, would stand directly behind the museum on Fifth Avenue in Manhattan.

The Guggenheim, Wright's last major building and his only important one in New York, is famed for its unusual corkscrew shape. In 1986 it won the American Institute of Architects' "Twenty-Five Year Award" for designs of enduring significance.

The revised addition would differ from its unpopular precedessor in three key ways. It eliminates a cantilever over the museum which some said would have made it look like a toilet bowl; it reduces the new building's height from 162 to 133 feet; it changes the material of its facade from colored tile to limestone.

Architects Charles Gwathmey and Robert Siegel said the new design recalled Wright's own plan for a building on the same site for art students' housing.

"We feel we're completing...what was intended" by Wright, Siegel said. "This is the last chance to complement and enhance (Wright's) composition."

He said the new plan makes the Wright's museum "look a lot better than the backdrop we presently have," an apartment building.

Galway, Chieftans together 'In Ireland'

Associated Press

James Galway and the Chieftains have made a record, "In Ireland." RCA Records pressed the first 15,000 of them on green vinyl.

The Chieftains, whose 15th LP this is, play traditional Irish music. Galway, whose famed golden flute tootles on more than 30 LPs, most of them classical, is making his first recording of all Irish music. There's traditional and popular, from "Give Me Your Hand," composed in 1603, to "Danny Boy."

Galway and the Chieftains have known each other for years. Paddy Moloney, chief of the Chieftains, plays uilleann pipes and arranges the music. Moloney and Galway once happened to meet getting on a plane in New York. Galway says, "When they pulled us off the plane in Dublin, we had decided we were going to make a record. It took a long time to put together.

"It's one of the most expensive records I ever made. The amount of money we spent in studios, air fares, accommodations and general organization was more than any of the others.

"Paddy is always in the middle of a tour and so am I. I remember one day Paddy and I had to get together. there are some things musically that don't work over the phone. We thought the simplest thing was for him to fly to Rochester, N.Y., from Ireland. He was going on somewhere else in America.

Last September Galway and the Chieftains played a week in Galway's native Belfast. It was taped for a St. Patrick's Day TV special. The Chieftains will actually be playing at New York's Carnegie Hall for St. Patrick's Day, while Galway will be playing in Baltimore with classical guitarist Kazuhito Yamashita. Baltimore is part of a 15-city tour of the United States for Galway and Yamashita, which follows a 12-city tour in Great Britain.

"I'm teaching him English," The cheery Galway laughs. "He is doing great with the (Irish) accent.

"I thought I would be his roadie on this tour. He's 25. It's his first time in America and he's not a very streetwise person. I think he needs somebody like me to look after him."

A friend recommended Yamashita to Galway, who got a recording. "I decided this kid is real hot," Galway invited him to his home in Lucerne, Switzerland, for two weeks. "We had a good thing going, so we recorded it." The record is "Italian Serenade" on RCA. "We did a pretty big tour of Europe. Audiences go wild for him."

Galway and his wife, who were married two and a half years ago, stay in New York in the Queens apartment of her best college friend, away from Manhattan's police, ambulance and fire sirens, and garbage truck clatter, which keeps Galway awake. Interviewed there, he places his portable computer on his lap to look up his schedule, listed through 1988. "I have to start thinking about 1989, the commissioning of flute concertos and weddings.

"I've got family members getting married in the next two years who want to know when I'm free. They want me to play the flute. If they got another flute player, I'd be really mad. They might be trying to tell me something.

"This summer I'll tour in America with the Chieftains. In October I'm back in the U.S. of A. touring with different orchestras. In November I'm in Belfast. There's a big tour of Germany, which includes Vienna and Switzerland. I finish up in London for a concert of Christmas music. I did one that was so successful we do it every year now."

Galway has four children from a previous marriage, three attending school in Lucerne, the oldest running a wine shop in London.

He has commissioned a number of flute works. "The most important I think is from an American composer, John Corigliano. I recorded it last year for RCA. It will be issued whenever they feel the time is right. It's 'Pied Piper Fantasy.'

"I'm going to make a tour in 1988 with the Baltimore Symphony and do that. When I asked John to write something for me, he said, 'You've got plenty already.' We got to know each other. He became interested. He came up with this idea. It's quite brilliant how he did it. I think composers write their best when they personally know the performer."

Galway always practices before a tour. "Before Phillip Moll and I toured last fall, he came to Lucerne with his parents. They had a vacation. We practiced every day for a week. When we give the first concert, if it's in Fort Wayne, the people will get exactly the same polished performance as the people in Carnegie Hall. We think we have a reputation to live up to and we're not going to let go of it."

Recently, Galway had two months off. He went to a health spa recommended by a friend who's an African chief, who lost weight there. Doctors told Galway his liver wasn't in good shape. "I decided life is worth living still, so from one day to the next I just stopped drinking. I get up in the morning with a list of things to do and get them done. I didn't have a drinking problem or I wouldn't have been able to just quit."

Unlike famous violinists, seeking instruments from the early 1700s, Galway says the best flutes are made today. "They're not made entirely by hand now. The engineering is much more accurate."

He recently invited to Lucerne 30 top European flute players and the best flute makers from England, Japan, Germany and America, to discuss what flutists want and to straighten out vocabulary. What one maker calls a riser another calls a chimney.

To his surprise, Galways says, "There wasn't a silver flute there. I think gold sounds better. We all had gold.

"But nobody else had 14."

Copley News Service

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — If a university promised prospective students an academic credit load 15 percent heavier than most schools, an equally heavy load of intense physical training, a lot of pressure and the loss of much of the freedom normally associated with college, would anyone apply?

As of early February, more than 15,000 of America's brightest and well-rounded high school seniors have done exactly that, eagerly competing for about 1,300 spots in next fall's freshman class at an institution that makes that offer — the U.S. Naval Academy.

That record flood of applications and similar record high interest in the U.S. Military Academy at West Point and the Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs, reflect what officials at the three institutions say is a rebounding of patriotism and respect for military service from the depths of the Vietnam era.

"In 1974 we couldn't walk on a campus in our uniforms. Now, that's not a problem at all," said Capt. Harry Seymour of the admissions office at Annapolis.

CNS Graphic

IN 1974, which marked the end of U.S. military involvement in Southeast Asia, the Naval Academy hit a modern low in applicants, about 9,500. The other service academies had even lower numbers.

"Today," said Capt. Howard Habermeyer, the Naval Academy commandant, "Americans feel good about themselves. They feel good about their country. ... They feel that service to their country is an ideal that still has merit."

Seymour, who sees most applications and talks to many of the applicants, said so many young people are applying because "they want to serve their country. They're very patriotic."

Col. Thomas Wilkinson, director of admissions at the Air Force Academy, found a similar reason for a record high 12,300 applications.

At West Point, where applications have topped 14,000 for the first time, director of admissions Col. Pierce Rushton credits "a very favorable attitude among young people and the population as a whole toward service and career, toward country and patriotism."

Seymour attributes the changes in public attitude to a number of factors, including the fact that most of today's high school students were infants in 1974 and have no direct memory of Vietnam.

ANOTHER FACTOR, Seymour said, is that "our commander-in-chief, President Reagan, sets a great example" of patriotism.

And, he said, the academy has done a good "selling job" which has been aided by the success of the movie "Top Gun," which glamorizes Navy fighter pilots, and Tom Clancy's best-selling books, "The Hunt for Red October" and "Red Storm Rising," which focus on Navy submarines and surface ships.

Seymour said Annapolis also benefits from television interviews with academy basketball star David Robinson and football star Napoleon McCallum, a 1986 graduate, because youngsters see "they're articulate, and they talk about how valuable their education is."

Officials at the three academies also acknowledge that part of the growing interest is that the service institutions are free and pay their students $460 a month while other colleges are raising their tuition and while government assistance for students is on the decline.

But the conversations disclosed a uniform sense of pride in having endured an experience Habermeyer said is intended to push them "beyond what they may have thought were their upper bounds."

FOR MIDSHIPMEN Joseph A. DeLeon, of San Diego, and Paul J. Meisch, of Aurora, Ill., the initial motivation came through their families and from a desire to fly that developed long before they saw "Top Gun."

DeLeon said he has wanted to be a Navy pilot "since second or third grade, when I first saw the Blue Angels flying," referring to the Navy's flight demonstration team.

His father, a career sailor, told him the best way to become a pilot was to attend the academy. "I didn't apply anywhere else," he said.

But because his eyesight has weakened during his four years at Annapolis, DeLeon will seek a career on the seas rather than in the air after graduation in June.

"I have no regrets," he said. "It's given me a great education."

Meisch said his father and other family members served in the Navy and they told him if he wanted to be in the military he should be an officer.

"At that point the choice was ROTC (Reserve Officer Training Corps) or the academy," he said.

Meisch said he tailored his high school academic program to qualify for both programs and had a ROTC scholarship locked up before winning a place at Annapolis.

After graduation he will go to Pensacola, Fla., for pilot training.

Meisch said he believes "the career opportunity is the biggest thing that brings people here. But there's a certain amount of patriotism involved in anyone being here."

MIDSHIPMAN JAMES M. Byrne said he had no family association with the military but his hometown, Jacksonville, Fla., is "a Navy town" and a lot of graduates from his high school went to Annapolis.

Byrnes said he chose the academy because "you need a college education to get your ticket punched for the future. But if I'm going to do something for four years I want something that completely challenges me."

Byrne met the challenges with such determination he was selected as brigade commander, the top midshipman. After graduation, he will become a Marine Corps platoon leader.

Seymour, who is responsible for getting the right kind of men and women into Annapolis, and Habermeyer, who guides their personal development once they are there, make no secret of the difficult challenges prospective midshipmen face.

"We tell them right up front, this will be the challenge of a lifetime. ... Not every youngster can handle it," Seymour said.

He said the board that screens applicants looks for "multidimensional, well-rounded youngsters ... who have been bright in school, in academics; someone who's been a leader in student government ... who's been successful on the athletic field."

The academy's mission, Seymour said, "is to prepare youngsters morally, mentally and physically. We throw all those balls at them at one time. They've got to be able to juggle them and keep them all in the air."

The academy's academic requirements are more demanding than most universities, with an average of 145 credits needed for graduation, compared to the 125 at most colleges.

ALTHOUGH ALL three service academies have broadened their academic program to provide degrees in humanities and social sciences, there still is a heavy requirement of traditional engineering and mathematics.

As a result, while the average Scholastic Aptitude Test score of entering midshipmen is above 1,200, academic failure remains the primary cause of attrition after the shock of the boot-camplike "plebe summer."

But because the academies' purpose is to produce military officers, academic skills alone are not enough, the officials said.

A student who did exceptionally well in academics but who did little else may have trouble handling the tough physical training, mandatory athletic participation and leadership requirements, Habermeyer said.

"Leadership has to be the foremost element of a young officer's makeup," he said. "Regardless of how our technology is going today, it's no different in terms of leading men in desperate struggles. You still have to respect the man who is leading you.

That is why the academy emphasizes a balance among the three components of its mission — mental, physical and moral preparation — and why the goal is to build confidence and inner strength.

THE MIDSHIPMEN interviewed said they felt their experience at the academy was far better than what friends received at civilian colleges.

"It may seem conceited, but I consider myself superior," DeLeon said.

New York Times News Service

The first woman to be admitted to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Ellen Swallow Richards, enrolled in 1889. Within seven years, there were 76 women at MIT.

Despite being coeducational for almost a century, MIT has been slow to shed its image as a male bastion. Now that image may be fading. The class of 1990, which entered this year, is 37.9 percent women — the largest percentage ever at MIT. Next year's prospects appear equally bright: 1,589 women have applied, as against 1,361 last year.

Yet the trend at MIT — one that the institution has worked for since the early 1970s — is not now reflected at engineering schools elsewhere.

"There has been a plateau or in some cases a decline in women's enrollment at engineering schools, so MIT must be doing something right," said Susan Staffin Metz, director of special programs for women at the Stevens Institute of Technology in Hoboken, N.J., and a co-author of a new report on women in engineering education. The study surveyed enrollment patterns from 1981 to 1985 at 180 schools granting engineering degrees.

"We wish we had 38 percent women," said Stirling Huntley, director of admissions at the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena. Like MIT, the school makes special efforts to attract women. Unlike MIT, which offers majors in such fields as liberal arts, it requires students to major in either engineering or science. The two schools plan to cooperate in a campaign to familiarize women with career opportunities in science and engineering.

At Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y., where women constitute about 20 percent of the freshman class, "We have seen a pretty flat record in women's applications in the last five years," said Brian Spittle, dean of admissions. "We are very concerned, and an effort to raise the proportion of women to 25 percent is part of a strategic plan for the next five years. We are planning to expand such areas as management and humanities as well as recruitment in the sciences."

At MIT, where efforts are also being made to enroll more minority students, "No one is talking in terms of absolute 50-50 parity for women," said Michael Behnke, director of admissions since May 1985.

"But," he said, "it is assumed that, in the best of all possible worlds, that is where we would like to be. When I came here I was told that 25 to 30 percent was not enough, that it didn't create a fully coeducational atmosphere."

As a result, Behnke and his staff began broadening and intensifying efforts. Strategies include expansion of the pool of women receiving recruitment literature, new audio-visual presentations, new publications, recruitment at high schools where many women are enrolled and invitations to women who have been accepted to spend three days on campus before making their decision.

Much of MIT's effort is aimed at spreading the word about the diversity of its programs, an advantage not shared by strictly technological schools. "Not only are we strong in science and engineering, but also in such fields as music and economics," Behnke said. "We have more intercollegiate athletic teams than any other college, 36, and have 13 varsity women's teams. We have a very strong faculty in the arts, and those offerings are particularly attractive to women who tend to have broader interests than men who come here."

"Women tend to distribute themselves more widely through the academic curriculum than do men," he added. Women tend to major in biology, chemistry, aeronautics and social sciences, along with the two most popular majors, electrical engineering and computer science, he said.

The women who aspire to MIT do not have an easy path, according to Marilee Jones, associate director of admissions, who coordinates the recruitment of women. "The women who apply here are generally better than the men," Jones explained. "They have had to come through so many more hoops. They have been so discouraged.

"If they are good in math, they are still told to be math teachers. They are also told that the values of technology are not human, and girls generally do not want to enter fields not seen as human. And guidance counselors still tell them, 'You don't want to go there, it's too hard, intense, nerdy.'"

Nanny course offers college credit

Researchers and professors of Pennsylvania State University would like to explain how to become a valuable and marketable "family child care specialist." Translated, that's a nanny.

In an experimental 11-week program this summer, faculty in the university's College of Human Development will pool their research, teaching expertise and field laboratories in hopes of building the perfect American nanny.

They also hope to create for nannies the venerable stature afforded their English counterparts.

"There is a slight element here of a social mission," admitted Louise Guerney, associate professor of human development and co-creator with her husband, Bernard, of Penn State's nanny training program. "Those of us who are teaching about family and child care really are distressed there is so little respect in this country for people who provide that service."

Where respect may be lacking, demand for nannies is booming.

Joy Shelton, chairperson of the Michigan-based American Council of Nanny Schools, estimates that for every trained nanny there are 100 families eager to hire. Most of the interest and placements for the approximately 675 trained nannies in the country today, she says, have come from two-career families.

"It's a unique situation in America that there are huge amounts of jobs available and nobody wants to do it," said Ms. Shelton. She is also director of home and family living at Delta College in University Center, Mich., a two-year community college that has had a nanny training program since 1983.

Bernard Guerney, a human development professor, proposed the idea of using existing Penn State programs as a base for the 18-credit nanny curriculum after reading about the demand for in-home child care and the lack of qualified help.

The Guerneys said Penn State's curriculum — which ranges from traditional child development and family relations courses to first aid, music and art education and contract negotiation — was unusual because it was one of a few, if not the only, college-credit programs for nannies at a major university.

Most of the council-certified nanny training programs in the 13 states where they are offered are run either privately or by community colleges, many of which include the option of college credit, Ms. Shelton said.

The Penn State program plans to move apprentice nannies from the classroom to day-care and then to a home the last three weeks.

Department faculty are already known for studies of infancy, parenthood, sibling relationships and work-family issues. There are existing undergraduate degree programs in individual and family studies, as well as master's and doctoral programs in human development and family studies, Anne Petersen, head of the college's Department of Individual and Family Studies, said.

So far, 30 applications, most to high school seniors, have been mailed out around Pennsylvania for the June 8 to Aug. 25 program. Coordinators have begun interviewing applicants for the 24 allotted slots.

But how many nanny hopefuls will sign up for the course, for which tuition is $1,755 and books and housing are not included, remains the big question. Guerney said the course could survive with 14 nanny trainees.

Nannies usually start at $200-$225 a week, plus health care, Social Security, a two-week paid vacation, use of a family car and room-and-board if they live in, Ms. Shelton said.

Ms. Shelton traces the recruitment problem to the women's movement.

"Anything that is an extension of the home" is viewed with disdain by many young women who "want to get dressed up in a business suit and carry a briefcase," she said.

"Caring for children ... that's always been an underpaid profession and it doesn't carry a lot of respect in the community," she added.

"Parenting is No.1 on people's list for what they want to be able to do well in life," Guerney said. "I think people are giving this high priority. They're willing to spend the money to accomplish that goal."

Fascinating Facts

by Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

The medical findings of the draft boards of World War II were not too reassuring when it came to the physical fitness of draftees. Many boys, particularly those living in cities, were found to lack arm, shoulder girdle, and upper-back muscle strength. Many also lacked endurance. These conditions let to many schools devoting more time to physical education, usually at least one hour per day. More time was also devoted to instruction in health, particularly in nutrition. It was discovered that power building can only be acquired through physical educatin exercise.

Handbook helps families of mentally ill

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR READERS: In 1982 the Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry, of which I am an honorary lifetime consultant, invited me to join its Committee on Psychiatry and the Community, whose current project was to study the problems of caring for a mentally ill family member at home. GAP's 200 members are among the nation's most eminent psychiatrists, and I felt privileged to sit among them. Eager to contribute, I ran the following in my column:

"CONFIDENTIAL TO MY READERS: If a family member has been diagnosed as 'mentally ill' and is living at home, please write and tell me what problems this has created for you. Your firsthand experiences are needed for an important study."

My readers didn't let me down. I received hundreds of letters, relating in detail what family life is like with a chronically mentally ill person to care for at home. They described their weariness, anger, grief and shame, their sacrifices and round-the-clock responsibilities, the emotional strain and the financial drain of caring for a mentally ill child or adult.

Many said they felt frustrated and disappointed in their doctors, the government agencies, and the legal red tape encountered when asking for assistance.

The message of these letters was loud and clear. The families of the chronically mentally ill cannot carry the burden alone. Nor should they be expected to. Many of their letters were 20 and 30 pages long — written, a few pages at a time, over a period of weeks. Some were tear-stained.

I read them all, then passed them along to the psychiatrists who answered each one in an effort to help these family members cope with their problems.

These psychiatrists, who had been trained to remain emotionally detached from the problems of their patients, read the letters in stunned silence. Some wept openly.

Their study took four years to complete. After reading the final report, I was so impressed with its content and clarity, that I suggested they offer it as a handbook to psychiatrists, psychologists and psychiatric social workers, as well as family members who must care for a chronically mentally ill child or adult at home.

The members of the committee agreed, and a book was born. The title: "A Family Affair: Helping Families Cope With Mental Illness." It is now in most bookstores, priced at $9.95. If your bookstore does not have it, it can be obtained by sending (check or money order) $10 plus $1 for postage and handling to: Brunner/Mazel Publishers, 19 Union Square West, New York, N.Y. 10003. (New York residents must add the appropriate taxes.)

The foreward of this book was written by Shirley Starr, a past president of the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill. She said (in part): "This is a book about how family members deal with mentally ill relatives, and what they need in order to continue in their heroic tasks. The reports of their experiences, conveyed in the stark and honest language of alternating despair and courage, bridge the distance between the two groups of care-givers: families and professionals.

"The visible effects of those letters on the committee members provided a rare moment of communion with me, and a better understanding of my experiences and those of other families. This book is an important contribution."

And finally, dear readers, I am deeply indebted to those of you who took the time to tell your painful stories in order that others might learn from them.

Don't Let Another Week Go By

I kept gaining and losing the same 20 pounds. Then I said, this time it's going to be different.

I tried every pill, every gimmick to lose weight. Only to feel miserable when I gained it all back. Finally I said no, never again—this time I'm going to Diet Center. I lost the weight, without hunger. And I'm keeping it off.

My only regret? Not going sooner!

Ex-caddy wins takes first in Honda Classic

CORAL SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — Mark Calcavecchia, a caddy in this tournament a year ago, moved past the faltering Bernhard Langer for a 3-stroke victory in the Honda Classic. Calcavecchia, a third-place finisher in the first three tournaments this season, came from two shots off the pace with a last-round 70—279.

Langer's putting game fell apart in the run down the stretch. He missed four putts of six feet or less over the last six holes. "I just putted very bad," Langer said. "It's very difficult to shoot a good score when you can't make anything."

The other two seasoned contenders — Bruce Lietzke and Payne Stewart — took themselves out of it with shots that found the water...

Miller 400

RICHMOND, Va. — Dale Earnhardt banged and battered his way to a second straight NASCAR stock car victoryin the Miller 400 at Richmond Fairgrounds. Earnhardt was in control most of the second half of the 200.8-mile race and beat Geoff Bodine by three carlengths — .57 of a second. Rusty Wallace was third, followed by Bill Elliott, Terry Labonte and Alan Kulwicki.

Earnhardt has won two of the three NASCAR events this season, including two within eight days...

LPGA to Geddes

GLENDALE, Calif. — Jane Geddes rolled in a 4-foot birdie putt on the first playoff hole to defeat Robin Walton in the Federal Classic, her second straight playoff victory. Geddes had captured the Women's Kemper last Sunday over Cathy Gerring. Geddes made her winning putt after Walton rimmed the cup on a 30-foot birdie try on the playoff hole.

Lendl upset victim

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. — Miloslav Mecir shocked top-ranked Ivan Lendl 7-5, 6-2, 7-5 to win the International Players Championships. Mecir took full advantage of an uncharacteristic number of errors by the world's No.1 player. In five of Mecir's six service breaks, Lendl double-faulted at least once. He finished with seven double faults and four aces, while hitting just 43 percent of his first serves.

"Today I played much better and had much better confidence," said Mecir, who like Lendl is Czechoslovakian but unlike Lendl lives in his home country when not on the tour. "I tried not to miss many balls and I tried to hit the right shots to come in on."

SWC lands three

DALLAS — Three SWC teams earned bids to the NCAA Basketball Tournament after concern there might just be one. TCU, regular season winner by y a runaway four-game edge, was joined by Texas A&M, SWC tourney winner, and Houston. A&M (17-13) will play Duke (22-8) on Thursday in the Midwest Regionals at Indianapolis.

TCU (23-6) will meet Marshall (25-5) on Thursday in a first-round game of the East Regional at Charlotte, N.C.

Houston (18-11) will play Kansas (23-9) in the Southeast Regional on Friday at the Omni in Atlanta.

Associated Press

Coach Jerry Tarkanian was happy with the NCAA Tournament draw awarded his top-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas basketball team, but wasn't so pleased that several teams were allowed to open tournament play on their home courts.

Denny Crum, coach of the defending national champions, was irate, both with the NCAA for overlooking his team — despite its 14 losses — and his own Metro Conference.

In short, it was the happy-we-made-it, disappointed-we-didn't show which annually accompanies the NCAA selection committee's list of candidates for the national championship. Even an expansion of the field to 64 teams couldn't satisfy those who thought they should have been invited.

"We're not in a bad bracket," said Tarkanian, whose Runnin' Rebels, 33-1, were top-seeded in the West Regional. "It's very fair. I think the selection committee did a great job. I'm happy. I've got no complaints about our bracket."

Tarkanian was upset that Syracuse, DePaul, Arizona and Alabama-Birmingham drew home-court assignments in the first round, while North Carolina will play at nearby Charlotte, N.C., and Indiana at Indianapolis.

"Can you believe that," Tarkanian complained. "Why would they put a team at home? If you're competing for a national championship, I don't think any team should be able to compete on their home court, especially in basketball. I don't see us ever getting a break like that."

Crum said he considered overlooking the Metro to be "just a personal slap from the NCAA to our conference for letting Memphis State play in the tournament. I think we paid for that decision."

Then the coach called his own league on the carpet for allowing Memphis State to take part in the tournament.

"They make our league the laughing stock of the nation based on a bad decision," Crum said. "I think our conference needs to re-evaluate the decision-making process, because we made a bad decision and now we're paying the price for it."

"The Metro Conference voted unanimously on two occasions to allow Memphis State in its tournament," Schultz said. "In effect, this means since Memphis State won the tournament (beating Louisville 75-52 on Sunday) there is no automatic bid for the Metro."

As for an at-large bid, "Louisville had 14 losses and that's too many," Schultz said.

While the Metro was upset that all of its seven teams were overlooked, the Southeastern Conference was happy that six of its teams made the field.

"I could make a strong argument that there are six teams that should go to the NCAA from the SEC," Alabama Coach Wimp Sanderson said Sunday shortly after his No. 9 team added the SEC tournament title to its regular-season crown. "I'm not only an Alabama man, but an SEC man, too."

Alabama was joined by five-time national champion Kentucky, Florida, Georgia, Auburn and Louisiana State.

"I was happy," Georgia Coach Hugh Durham said. "Six. That means that a lot of people around the country are starting to respect the basketball being played around our league."

Texas-El Paso, winner of the regular-season title in the Western Athletic Conference but beaten by tournament-champion Wyoming in the semifinals of the league's post-season playoffs, is one of the teams fated to play a home-standing opponent in the first round. UTEP opens against Arizona.

"We're extremely happy we're going," UTEP Coach Don Haskins said, "but it will be tough to play Arizona on its home court."

The WAC placed three teams — Brigham Young and Wyoming joined UTEP — but had its winningest team, New Mexico, overlooked. None of the 17 20-game winners which failed to make the NCAA field won more games than the Lobos, 25-9.

BYU's first-round opponent will be New Orleans, which earned its first invitation ever to the championship field.

"We'll either be a Cadillac or a pumpkin," said Coach Benny Dees, who directed New Orleans to a 25-3 record.

The first-round East Regional matchup of North Carolina State and Florida will send Wolfpack Coach Jim Valvano against the man he replaced at N.C. State, Norm Sloan.

"I think it's a game that most likely Norm Sloan and I would prefer not to play," Valvano said in an interview with the Capitol Radio Network Sunday. "Norm spent 14 years here at N.C. State and 14 very good years. And it's the first time that he's been in the NCAA Tournament after going to Florida.

"I wouldn't mind meeting him down the road, but to open up with them will be a very emotional game."

NIT picks the best of the rest

NEW YORK (AP) — The NIT is waiting and hoping defending NCAA champion Louisville, snubbed by the NCAA, will join its 32-team field.

"I haven't even thought about it," Louisville Coach Denny Crum said of the NIT, which filled all but two of its slots Sunday night. "I didn't think there was any way they could keep us out of the NCAA."

Louisville Athletic Director Bill Olsen said the NIT had expressed an interest in Louisville, but a decision on a bid "is up to Coach Crum and his staff. I'm not in favor of it unless they really want to go and play to be a champion."

Crum said he would discuss the matter with his coaches and players before deciding. A decision would be made today.

The final berth also remained open, but Pac-10 runner-up Washington appeared to be the probable choice.

Joe Roberts, assistant athletic director at Montana State, said Sunday night he had talked to NIT officials. "They said they were 99 percent sure our first-round opponent would be Washington and that they would get back to me if it wasn't," Roberts said. "They didn't call back."

Joining Montana State, 21-7, as a selectee, but not paired, was James Madison, 20-9.

The NIT has accomplished what the Arkansas Legislature couldn't — create athletic competition between the University of Arkansas and Arkansas State University.

The Razorbacks play ASU on Friday night in the first round.

Arkansas Athletic Director Frank Broyles has lobbied against bills in the Legislature to require athletic competition between the schools.

"You accept to play and we fully expected if Arkansas State was selected that we would be playing because that's the way the pairing had been done in the past," Broyles said.

Broyles has said such competition would divide the state.

Arkansas, 18-13, lost to Texas Tech on Friday in the first round of the Southwest Conference postseason tournament. ASU, 21-12, the winningest team in the school's history, lost to Louisiana Tech on Saturday in the finals of the Southland Conference tournament.

Red Sox fine AWOL Clemens $1,000 a day

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) — The Boston Red Sox announced today that they will fine AWOL pitcher Roger Clemens $1,000 per day starting Wednesday unless he returns to camp.

The team said the fine would be for violation of his contract by the American League Cy Young Award winner and Most Valuable Player, who walked out of camp last week when he could not come to terms.

No. 8 Aggies win SWC tourney

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) — The last became the first Sunday in the Southwest Conference Post-Season Basketball Classic.

Eighth-seeded Texas A&M, which lost eight of its last 11 SWC games, bounced Baylor 71-46 to earn an automatic NCAA bid.

"This was the Aggie version of Cinderella where you take a group of good guys and turn a pumpkin into a coach," Metcalf quipped.

"It's a just reward for a great group of guys," he said. "It was like home on the range, never a despairing word."

The Aggies were led by the playmaking of guard Darryl McDonald and Winston Crite's inside power moves.

Crite, the tournament MVP who had 72 points in three games, said "This makes up for everything that happened during the regular season. People gave up on us."

Crite led the SWC All-Tournament team for the third time in his career.

"We knew this was going to be World War III," he said. "We can go a long way in the tournament if we keep this kind of intensity."

The Aggies, 17-13, who had lost twice to Baylor during the regular season, will be in the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 1980. It will be their fourth overall trip to the NCAA playoffs.

Second-seeded Baylor, 18-12, was seeking its first NCAA playoff bid since 1950 when the Bears made the Final Four.

Baylor Coach Gene Iba said, "A&M looks like the team we thought they were at the beginning of the year when we picked them high in the SWC. There wasn't anything wrong with what our guys did. A&M just played batter. I thought their defense was very impressive."

Iba said the loss didn't diminish what the Bears had done this season.

"This team has come much further than anybody ever expected," Iba said. "I'm proud of what thas happened."

Four Aggies scored in double figures as A&M posted a tie for the worst rout in the 12-year history of the tournament with a 25-point victory.

McDonald led the Aggies with 17 points, while Crite and guard Todd Holloway added 16.

The Aggies led by as many as 16 points in the first half and built a 34-21 halftime bulge over the cold-shooting Bears who were playing in their first SWC tournament final.

Copley News Service

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — If a university promised prospective students an academic credit load 15 percent heavier than most schools, an equally heavy load of intense physical training, a lot of pressure and the loss of much of the freedom normally associated with college, would anyone apply?

As of early February, more than 15,000 of America's brightest and well-rounded high school seniors have done exactly that, eagerly competing for about 1,300 spots in next fall's freshman class at an institution that makes that offer — the U.S. Naval Academy.

That record flood of applications and similar record high interest in the U.S. Military Academy at West Point and the Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs, reflect what officials at the three institutions say is a rebounding of patriotism and respect for military service from the depths of the Vietnam era.

"In 1974 we couldn't walk on a campus in our uniforms. Now, that's not a problem at all," said Capt. Harry Seymour of the admissions office at Annapolis.

CNS Graphic

IN 1974, which marked the end of U.S. military involvement in Southeast Asia, the Naval Academy hit a modern low in applicants, about 9,500. The other service academies had even lower numbers.

"Today," said Capt. Howard Habermeyer, the Naval Academy commandant, "Americans feel good about themselves. They feel good about their country. ... They feel that service to their country is an ideal that still has merit."

Seymour, who sees most applications and talks to many of the applicants, said so many young people are applying because "they want to serve their country. They're very patriotic."

At West Point, where applications have topped 14,000 for the first time, director of admissions Col. Pierce Rushton credits "a very favorable attitude among young people and the population as a whole toward service and career, toward country and patriotism."

Seymour attributes the changes in public attitude to a number of factors, including the fact that most of today's high school students were infants in 1974 and have no direct memory of Vietnam.

ANOTHER FACTOR, Seymour said, is that "our commander-in-chief, President Reagan, sets a great example" of patriotism.

And, he said, the academy has done a good "selling job" which has been aided by the success of the movie "Top Gun," which glamorizes Navy fighter pilots, and Tom Clancy's best-selling books, "The Hunt for Red October" and "Red Storm Rising," which focus on Navy submarines and surface ships.

Seymour said Annapolis also benefits from television interviews with academy basketball star David Robinson and football star Napoleon McCallum, a 1986 graduate, because youngsters see "they're articulate, and they talk about how valuable their education is."

Officials at the three academies also acknowledge that part of the growing interest is that the service institutions are free and pay their students $400 a month while other colleges are raising their tuition and while government assistance for students is on the decline.

Interviews with three members of the class of 1987 revealed a variety of reasons for applying to Annapolis. But the conversations disclosed a uniform sense of pride in having endured an experience Habermeyer said is intended to push them "beyond what they may have thought were their upper bounds."

FOR MIDSHIPMEN Joseph A. DeLeon, of San Diego, and Paul J. Meisch, of Aurora, Ill., the initial motivation came through their families and from a desire to fly that developed long before they saw "Top Gun."

DeLeon said he has wanted to be a Navy pilot "since second or third grade, when I first saw the Blue Angels flying," referring to the Navy's flight demonstration team.

His father, a career sailor, told him the best way to become a pilot was to attend the academy. "I didn't apply anywhere else," he said.

But because his eyesight has weakened during his four years at Annapolis, DeLeon will seek a career on the seas rather than in the air after graduation in June.

"I have no regrets," he said. "It's given me a great education."

Meisch said his father and other family members served in the Navy and they told him if he wanted to be in the military he should be an officer.

"At that point the choice was ROTC (Reserve Officer Training Corps) or the academy," he said.

Meisch said he tailored his high school academic program to qualify for both programs and had a ROTC scholarship locked up before winning a place at Annapolis.

After graduation he will go to Pensacola, Fla., for pilot training.

Meisch said he believes "the career opportunity is the biggest thing that brings people here. But there's a certain amount of patriotism involved in anyone being here."

MIDSHIPMAN JAMES M. Byrne said he had no family association with the military but his hometown, Jacksonville, Fla., is "a Navy town" and a lot of graduates from his high school went to Annapolis.

Byrnes said he chose the academy because "you need a college education to get your ticket punched for the future. But if I'm going to do something for four years I want something that completely challenges me."

Byrne met the challenges with such determination he was selected as brigade commander, the top midshipman. After graduation, he will become a Marine Corps platoon leader.

Seymour, who is responsible for getting the right kind of men and women into Annapolis, and Habermeyer, who guides their personal development once they are there, make no secret of the difficult challenges prospective midshipmen face.

"We tell them right up front, this will be the challenge of a lifetime. ... Not every youngster can handle it," Seymour said.

He said the board that screens applicants looks for "multidimensional, well-rounded youngsters ... who have been bright in school, in academics, someone who's been a leader in student government ... who's been successful on the athletic field."

The academy's mission, Seymour said, "is to prepare youngsters morally, mentally and physically. We throw all those balls at them at one time. They've got to be able to juggle them and keep them all in the air."

The academy's academic requirements are more demanding than most universities, with an average of 145 credits needed for graduation, compared to the 125 at most colleges.

ALTHOUGH ALL three service academies have broadened their academic program to provide degrees in humanities and social sciences, there still is a heavy requirement of traditional engineering and mathematics.

As a result, while the average Scholastic Aptitude Test score of entering midshipmen is above 1,200, academic failure remains the primary cause of attrition after the shock of the boot-camplike "plebe summer."

But because the academies' purpose is to produce military officers, academic skills alone are not enough, the officials said.

A student who did exceptionally well in academics but who did little else may have trouble handling the tough physical training, mandatory athletic participation and leadership requirements, Habermeyer said.

"Leadership has to be the foremost element of a young officer's makeup," he said. "Regardless of how our technology is going today, it's no different in terms of leading men in desperate struggles. You still have to respect the man who is leading you."

That is why the academy emphasizes a balance among the three components of its mission — mental, physical and moral preparation — and why the goal is to build confidence and inner strength.

THE MIDSHIPMEN interviewed said they felt their experience at the academy was far better than what friends received at civilian colleges.

"It may seem conceited, but I consider myself superior," DeLeon said.

New York Times News Service

The first woman to be admitted to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Ellen Swallow Richards, enrolled in 1889. Within seven years, there were 76 women at MIT.

Despite being coeducational for almost a century, MIT has been slow to shed its image as a male bastion. Now that image may be fading. The class of 1990, which entered this year, is 37.9 percent women — the largest percentage ever at MIT. Next year's prospects appear equally bright: 1,589 women have applied, as against 1,361 last year.

Yet the trend at MIT — one that the institution has worked for since the early 1970s — is not now reflected at engineering schools elsewhere.

"There has been a plateau or in some cases a decline in women's enrollment at engineering schools, so MIT must be doing something right," said Susan Staffin Metz, director of special programs for women at the Stevens Institute of Technology in Hoboken, N.J., and a co-author of a new report on women in engineering education. The study surveyed enrollment patterns from 1981 to 1985 at 180 schools granting engineering degrees.

"We wish we had 38 percent women," said Stirling Huntley, director of admissions at the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena. Like MIT, the school makes special efforts to attract women. Unlike MIT, which offers majors in such fields as liberal arts, it requires students to major in either engineering or science. The two schools plan to cooperate in a campaign to familiarize women with career opportunities in science and engineering.

At Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y., where women constitute about 20 percent of the freshman class, "We have seen a pretty flat record in women's applications in the last five years," said Brian Spittle, dean of admissions. "We are very concerned, and an effort to raise the proportion of women to 25 percent is part of a strategic plan for the next five years. We are planning to expand such areas as management and humanities as well as recruitment in the sciences."

At MIT, where efforts are also being made to enroll more minority students, "No one is talking in terms of absolute 50-50 parity for women," said Michael Behnke, director of admissions since May 1985.

"But," he said, "it is assumed that, in the best of all possible worlds, that is where we would like to be. When I came here I was told that 25 to 30 percent was not enough, that it didn't create a fully coeducational atmosphere."

As a result, Behnke and his staff began broadening and intensifying efforts. Strategies include expansion of the pool of women receiving recruitment literature, new audio-visual presentations, new publications, recruitment at high schools where many women are enrolled and invitations to women who have been accepted to spend three days on campus before making their decision.

Much of MIT's effort is aimed at spreading the word about the diversity of its programs, an advantage not shared by strictly technological schools. "Not only are we strong in science and engineering, but also in such fields as music and economics," Behnke said. "We have more intercollegiate athletic teams than any other college, 36, and have 13 varsity women's teams. We have a very strong faculty in the arts, and those offerings are particularly attractive to women who tend to have broader interests than men who come here."

"Women tend to distribute themselves more widely through the academic curriculum than do men," he added. Women tend to major in biology, chemistry, aeronautics and social sciences, along with the two most popular majors, electrical engineering and computer science, he said.

The women who aspire to MIT do not have an easy path, according to Marilee Jones, associate director of admissions, who coordinates the recruitment of women. "The women who apply here are generally better than the men," Jones explained. "They have had to come through so many more hoops. They have been so discouraged.

"If they are good in math, they are still told to be math teachers. They are also told that the values of technology are not human, and girls generally do not want to enter fields not seen as human. And guidance counselors still tell them, 'You don't want to go there, it's too hard, intense, nerdy.'"

Nanny course offers college credit

Researchers and professors of Pennsylvania State University would like to explain how to become a valuable and marketable "family child care specialist." Translated, that's a nanny.

In an experimental 11-week program this summer, faculty in the university's College of Human Development will pool their research, teaching expertise and field laboratories in hopes of building the perfect American nanny.

They also hope to create for nannies the venerable stature afforded their English counterparts.

"There is a slight element here of a social mission," admitted Louise Guerney, associate professor of human development and co-creator with her husband, Bernard, of Penn State's nanny training program. "Those of us who are teaching about family and child care really are distressed there is so little respect in this country for people who provide that service."

Where respect may be lacking, demand for nannies is booming.

Joy Shelton, chairperson of the Michigan-based American Council of Nanny Schools, estimates that for every trained nanny there are 100 families eager to hire. Most of the interest and placements for the approximately 675 trained nannies in the country today, she says, have come from two-career families.

"It's a unique situation in America that there are huge amounts of jobs available and nobody wants to do it," said Ms. Shelton. She is also director of home and family living at Delta College in University Center, Mich., a two-year community college that has had a nanny training program since 1963.

Bernard Guerney, a human development professor, proposed the idea of using existing Penn State programs as a base for the 18-credit nanny curriculum after reading about the demand for in-home child care and the lack of qualified help.

The Guerneys said Penn State's curriculum — which ranges from traditional child development and family relations courses to first aid, music and art education and contract negotiation — was unusual because it was one of a few, if not the only, college-credit programs for nannies at a major university.

Most of the council-certified nanny training programs in the 13 states where they are offered are run either privately or by community colleges, many of which include the option of college credit, Ms. Shelton said.

The Penn State program plans to move apprentice nannies from the classroom to day-care and then to a home the last three weeks.

Department faculty are already known for studies of infancy, parenthood, sibling relationships and work-family issues. There are existing undergraduate degree programs in individual and family studies, as well as master's and doctoral programs in human development and family studies, Anne Petersen, head of the college's Department of Individual and Family Studies, said.

So far, 30 applications, most to high school seniors, have been mailed out around Pennsylvania for the June 8 to Aug. 25 program. Coordinators have begun interviewing applicants for the 24 allotted slots.

But how many nanny hopefuls will sign up for the course, for which tuition is $1,755 and books and housing are not included, remains the big question. Guerney said the course could survive with 14 nanny trainees.

Nannies usually start at $200-$225 a week, plus health care, Social Security, a two-week paid vacation, use of a family car and room-and-board if they live in, Ms. Shelton said.

Ms. Shelton traces the recruitment problem to the women's movement.

"Anything that is an extension of the home" is viewed with disdain by many young women who "want to get dressed up in a business suit and carry a briefcase," she said.

"Caring for children ... that's always been an underpaid profession and it doesn't carry a lot of respect in the community," she added.

"Parenting is No.1 on people's list for what they want to be able to do well in life," Guerney said. "I think people are giving this high priority. They're willing to spend the money to accomplish that goal."

Fascinating Facts

by Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

The medical findings of the draft boards of World War II were not too reassuring when it came to the physical fitness of draftees. Many boys, particularly those living in cities, were found to lack arm, shoulder girdle, and upper-back muscle strength. Many also lacked endurance. These conditions led to many schools devoting more time to physical education, usually at least one hour per day. More time was also devoted to instruction in health, particularly in nutrition. It was discovered that power building can only be acquired through physical education exercise.

Handbook helps families of mentally ill

Van Buren

DEAR READERS: In 1982 the Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry, of which I am an honorary lifetime consultant, invited me to join its Committee on Psychiatry and the Community, whose current project was to study the problems of caring for a mentally ill family member at home. GAP's 200 members are among the nation's most eminent psychiatrists, and I felt privileged to sit among them. Eager to contribute, I ran the following in my column:

"CONFIDENTIAL TO MY READERS: If a family member has been diagnosed as 'mentally ill' and is living at home, please write and tell me what problems this has created for you. Your firsthand experiences are needed for an important study."

My readers didn't let me down. I received hundreds of letters, relating in detail what family life is like with a chronically mentally ill person to care for at home. They described their weariness, anger, grief and shame, their sacrifices and round-the-clock responsibilities, the emotional strain and the financial drain of caring for a mentally ill child or adult.

Many said they felt frustrated and disappointed in their doctors, the government agencies, and the legal red tape encountered when asking for assistance.

The message of these letters was loud and clear. The families of the chronically mentally ill cannot carry the burden alone. Nor should they be expected to. Many of their letters were 20 and 30 pages long — written a few pages at a time, over a period of weeks. Some were tear-stained.

I read them all, then passed them along to the psychiatrists who answered each one in an effort to help these family members cope with their problems.

These psychiatrists, who had been trained to remain emotionally detached from the problems of their patients, read the letters in stunned silence. Some wept openly.

Their study took four years to complete. After reading the final report, I was so impressed with its content and clarity, that I suggested they offer it as a handbook to psychiatrists, psychologists and psychiatric social workers, as well as family members who must care for a chronically mentally ill child or adult at home.

The members of the committee agreed, and a book was born. The title: "A Family Affair: Helping Families Cope With Mental Illness." It is now in most bookstores, priced at $9.95. If your bookstore does not have it, it can be obtained by sending a check or money order: $10 plus $1 for postage and handling to: Brunner/Mazel Publishers, 19 Union Square West, New York, N.Y. 10003. (New York residents must add the appropriate taxes.)

The foreward of this book was written by Shirley Starr, a past president of the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill. She said (in part): "This is a book about how family members deal with mentally ill relatives, and what they need in order to continue in their heroic tasks. The reports of their experiences, conveyed in the stark and honest language of alternating despair and courage, bridge the distance between the two groups of care-givers: families and professionals.

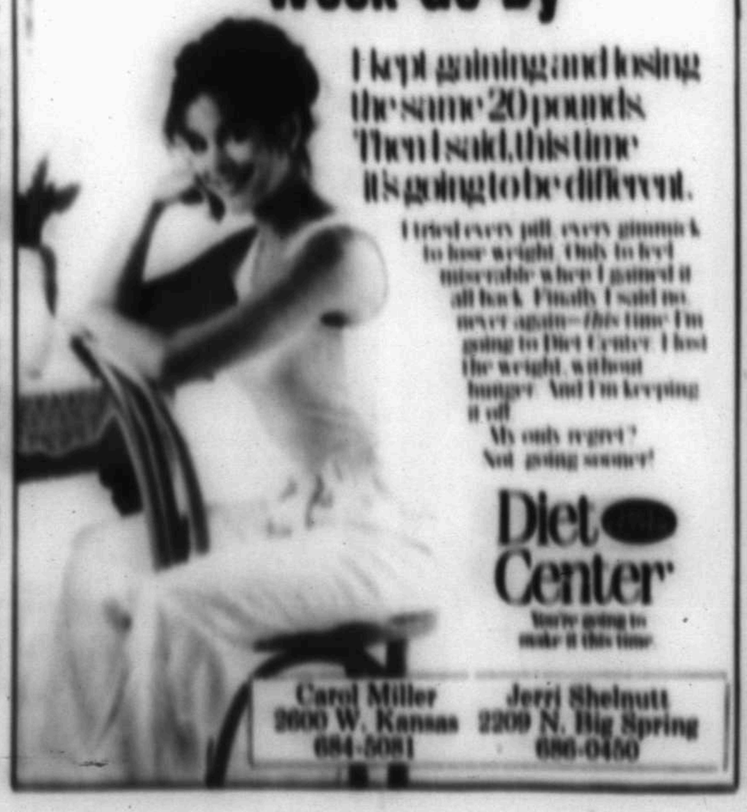

"The visible effects of these letters on the committee members provided a rare moment of communion with me, and a better understanding of my experiences and those of other families. This book is an important contribution."

And finally, dear readers, I am deeply indebted to those of you who took the time to tell your painful stories in order that others might learn from them.

Ex-caddy wins takes first in Honda Classic

CORAL SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — Mark Calcavecchia, a caddy in this tournament a year ago, moved past the faltering Bernhard Langer for a 3-stroke victory in the Honda Classic. Calcavecchia, a third-place finisher in the first three tournaments this season, came from two shots off the pace with a last-round 70—279.

Langer's putting game fell apart in the run down the stretch. He missed four putts of six feet or less over the last six holes. "I just putted very bad," Langer said. "It's very difficult to shoot a good score when you can't make anything."

The other two seasoned contenders — Bruce Lietzke and Payne Stewart — took themselves out of it with shots that found the water...

Geddes had captured the Women's Kemper last Sunday over Cathy Gerring. Geddes made her winning putt after Walton rimmed the cup on a 30-foot birdie try on the playoff hole.

Mecir took full advantage of an uncharacteristic number of errors by the world's No.1 player. In five of Mecir's six service breaks, Lendl double-faulted at least once. He finished with seven double faults and four aces, while hitting just 43 percent of his first serves.

"Today I played much better and had much better confidence," said Mecir, who like Lendl is Czechoslovakian but unlike Lendl lives in his home country when not on the tour. "I tried not to miss many balls and I tried to hit the right shots to come in on."

Tark upset by 'home court' edge

Associated Press

Coach Jerry Tarkanian was happy with the NCAA Tournament draw awarded his top-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas basketball team, but wasn't so pleased that several teams were allowed to open tournament play on their home courts.

Denny Crum, coach of the defending national champions, was irate, both with the NCAA for overlooking his team — despite its 14 losses — and his own Metro Conference.

In short, it was the happy-we-made-it, disappointed-we-didn't show which annually accompanies the NCAA selection committee's list of candidates for the national championship. Even an expansion of the field to 64 teams couldn't satisfy those who thought they should have been invited.

"We're not in a bad bracket," said Tarkanian, whose Runnin' Rebels, 33-1, were top-seeded in the West Regional. "It's very fair. I think the selection committee did a great job. I'm happy. I've got no complaints about our bracket."

Tarkanian was upset that Syracuse, DePaul, Arizona and Alabama-Birmingham drew home-court assignments in the first round, while North Carolina will play at nearby Charlotte, N.C. and Indiana at Indianapolis.

"Can you believe that?" Tarkanian complained. "Why would they put a team at home? If you're competing for a national championship, I don't think any team should be able to compete on their home court, especially in basketball. I don't see us ever getting a break like that."

Crum said he considered overlooking the Metro to be "just a personal slap from the NCAA to our conference for letting Memphis State play in the tournament. I think we paid for that decision."

Then the coach called his own league on the carpet for allowing Memphis State to take part in the tournament.

"They make our league the laughing stock of the nation based on a bad decision," Crum said. "I think our conference needs to re-evaluate the decision-making process, because we made a bad decision and now we're paying the price for it."

"The Metro Conference voted unanimously on two occasions to allow Memphis State in its tournament," Schultz said. "In effect, this means since Memphis State won the tournament (beating Louisville 75-52 on Sunday) there is no automatic bid for the Metro."

As for an at-large bid, "Louisville had 14 losses and that's too many," Schultz said.

While the Metro was upset that all of its seven teams were overlooked, the Southeastern Conference was happy that six of its teams made the field.

"I could make a strong argument that there are six teams that should go to the NCAA from the SEC," Alabama Coach Wimp Sanderson said Sunday shortly after his No. 9 team added the SEC tournament title to its regular-season crown. "I'm not only an Alabama man, but an SEC man, too."

Alabama was joined by five-time national champion Kentucky, Florida, Georgia, Auburn and Louisiana State.

"I was happy," Georgia Coach Hugh Durham said. "Six. That means that a lot of people around the country are starting to respect the basketball being played around our league."

Texas-El Paso, winner of the regular-season title in the Western Athletic Conference but beaten by tournament-champion Wyoming in the semifinals of the league's post-season playoffs, is one of the teams fated to play a home-standing opponent in the first round. UTEP opens against Arizona.

"We're extremely happy we're going," UTEP Coach Don Haskins said, "but it will be tough to play Arizona on its home court."

The WAC placed three teams — Brigham Young and Wyoming joined UTEP — but had its winningest team, New Mexico, overlooked. None of the 17 20-game winners which failed to make the NCAA field won more games than the Lobos, 25-9.

BYU's first-round opponent will be New Orleans, which earned its first invitation ever to the championship field.

"We'll either be a Cadillac or a pumpkin," said Coach Benny Dees, who directed New Orleans to a 25-3 record.

The first-round East Regional matchup of North Carolina State and Florida will send Wolfpack Coach Jim Valvano against the man he replaced at N.C. State, Norm Sloan.

"I think it's a game that most likely Norm Sloan and I would prefer not to play," Valvano said in an interview with the Capitol Radio Network Sunday. "Norm spent 14 years here at N.C. State and 14 very good years. And it's the first time that he's been in the NCAA Tournament after going to Florida.

"I wouldn't mind meeting him down the road, but to open up with them will be a very emotional game."

NIT picks the best of the rest

NEW YORK (AP) — The NIT is waiting and hoping defending NCAA champion Louisville, snubbed by the NCAA, will join its 32-team field.

"I haven't even thought about it," Louisville Coach Denny Crum said of the NIT, which filled all but two of its slots Sunday night. "I didn't think there was any way they could keep us out of the NCAA."

Louisville Athletic Director Bill Olsen said the NIT had expressed an interest in Louisville, but a decision on a bid "is up to Coach Crum and his staff. I'm not in favor of it unless they really want to go and play to be a champion."

Crum said he would discuss the matter with his coaches and players before deciding. A decision would be made today.

The final berth also remained open, but Pac-10 runner-up Washington appeared to be the probable choice.

Joe Roberts, assistant athletic director at Montana State, said Sunday night he had talked to NIT officials. "They said they were 99 percent sure our first-round opponent would be Washington and that they would get back to me if it wasn't," Roberts said. "They didn't call back."

Joining Montana State, 21-7, as a selectee, but not paired, was James Madison, 20-9.

The NIT has accomplished what the Arkansas Legislature couldn't — create athletic competition between the University of Arkansas and Arkansas State University.

Arkansas Athletic Director Frank Broyles has lobbied against bills in the Legislature to require athletic competition between the schools.

"You accept to play and we fully expected if Arkansas State was selected that we would be playing because that's the way the pairing had been done in the past," Broyles said.

Broyles has said such competition would divide the state.

Arkansas, 18-13, lost to Texas Tech on Friday in the first round of the Southwest Conference postseason tournament. ASU, 21-12, the winningest team in the school's history, lost to Louisiana Tech on Saturday in the finals of the Southland Conference tournament.

Red Sox fine AWOL Clemens $1,000 a day

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) — The Boston Red Sox announced today that they will fine AWOL pitcher Roger Clemens $1,000 per day starting Wednesday unless he returns to camp.

The team said the fine would be for violation of his contract by the American League Cy Young Award winner and Most Valuable Player, who walked out of camp last week when he could not come to terms.

No. 8 Aggies win SWC tourney

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) — The last became the first Sunday in the Southwest Conference Post-Season Basketball Classic.

Eighth-seeded Texas A&M, which lost eight of its last 11 SWC games, bounced Baylor 71-69 to earn an automatic NCAA bid.

"This was the Aggie version of Cinderella where you take a group of good guys and turn a pumpkin into a coach," Metcalf quipped.

"It's a just reward for a great group of guys," he said. "It was like home on the range, never a despairing word."

The Aggies were led by the playmaking of guard Darryl McDonald and Winston Crite's inside power moves.

Crite, the tournament MVP who had 72 points in three games, said "This makes up for everything that happened during the regular season. People gave up on us."

Crite led the SWC All-Tournament team for the third time in his career.

"We knew this was going to be World War III," he said. "We can go a long way in the tournament if we keep this kind of intensity."

The Aggies, 17-13, who had lost twice to Baylor during the regular season, will be in the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 1980. It will be their fourth overall trip to the NCAA playoffs.

Second-seeded Baylor, 18-12, was seeking its first NCAA playoff bid since 1950 when the Bears made the Final Four.

Baylor Coach Gene Iba said, "A&M looks like the team we thought they were at the beginning of the year when we picked them high in the SWC. There wasn't anything wrong with what our guys did. A&M just played batter. I thought their defense was very impressive."

Iba said the loss didn't diminish what the Bears had done this season.

"This team has come much further than anybody ever expected," Iba said. "I'm proud of what Ihas happened."

Four Aggies scored in double figures as A&M posted a tie for the worst rout in the 12-year history of the tournament with a 25-point victory.

McDonald led the Aggies with 17 points, while Crite and guard Todd Holloway added 16.

The Aggies led by as many as 16 points in the first half and built a 34-21 halftime bulge over the cold-shooting Bears who were playing in their first SWC tournament final.

Cardinals treat Mets' Dwight Gooden like Has-Been

Associated Press

In his first start of the spring, Mets pitching ace Dwight Gooden allowed nine first-inning runs to St. Louis — including Terry Pendelton's grand slam — as the Cardinals crushed New York 11-4 Sunday in exhibition play.

Gooden is coming off a subpar 1986 season, two poor performances in the World Series, and an arrest during the winter after an altercation with Tampa, Fla., police.

Four Cardinal pitchers, with Bill Dawley pitching three strong relief innings, combined for a six-hit effort in sweeping the weekend Grapefruit Series from the defending world champions. The Cardinals won Saturday 5-1.

In addition to Pendelton's homer, catcher Steve Lake, rookie Jim Lindeman and Jose Oquendo, each collected three hits in sparking St. Louis' 15-hit attack.

Tigers 12, Red Sox 6

In Lakeland, Fla., Darnell Coles had a single and a triple in Detroit's eight-run fourth inning as the Tigers beat Boston.

Mark Thurmond, the second of three Detroit pitchers, got the victory, working three perfect innings in relief of Frank Tanana, who yielded Boston's first four runs — three in the first inning.

New York Yankees 11, Orioles 8

In Miami, Don Mattingly hit a grand slam and collected two singles while driving in five runs, and Dan Pasqua added a long solo homer as the Yankees held on to defeat Baltimore.

Ron Kittle and Keith Hughes drove in two runs apiece for the Yanks, who outhit the Orioles 16-14.

Exhibitions

White Sox 7, Pirates 0

In Sarasota, Fla., Greg Walker and Ivan Calderon each hit two-run homers while four pitchers combined on a three-hit shutout as Chicago beat Pittsburgh.

Expos 5, Braves 1

In West Palm Beach, Fla., Hubie Brooks hit a two-run homer and Dave Collins had three hits and scored two runs to lead Montreal over Atlanta.

Dodgers 2, Astros 1

Blue Jays 7, Nippon 2

In Dunedin, Fla., rookie Tom Quinlan and Rance Mulliniks each hit solo home runs to power a Toronto split squad over the Nippon Ham-Fighters of the Japanese Professional Baseball league.

In nearby Clearwater, a Jays split squad beat the Philadelphia Phillies 1-0 on Manny Lee's two-out double in the fifth. Right-hander Craig McMurtry picked up that victory.

Twins 8, Reds 7

The Twins trailed 7-5 with one out in the ninth when rookie reliever Jeff Gray walked Roy Smalley and Larry Blackwell. Another rookie, first baseman Gene Larkin, then tripled into the right-field corner to score Smalley and Blackwell, tying the game. Ron Washington and Mickey Hatcher were walked intentionally to load the bases. Wilson followed with a line single to right to score pinch-runner Greg Gagne from third base with the winning run.

Brewers 7, Cubs 3

In Mesa, Ariz., Jim Adduci drove in the go-ahead run in Milwaukee's five-run seventh inning to lead Milwaukee over Chicago in front of 7,655 fans at HoHoKam Park.

Milwaukee, 2-1, ripped Cubs reliever Ron Davis, 0-1, for five runs on six hits in the seventh to break a 2-2 tie. Mark Knudson, 1-0, was credited with the victory.

In Tucson, Ariz., Eddie Milner drove in four runs on four hits to pace a 20-hit attack as San Francisco outslugged Cleveland.

Milner's bases-loaded triple in the second inning gave the Giants a 4-3 lead which they never relinquished. Jim Gott received credit for the victory, although he yielded three runs in the first 1 1-3 innings.

Cleveland had 18 hits.

Cleveland's Joe Carter, who returned to camp before the game after walking out last Monday because of a contract dispute, struck out in each of his two at bats.

Padres 4, Angels 2

In Yuma, Ariz., Tony Gwynn's RBI single in the fifth inning off California reliever Sherman Corbett provided the go-ahead as San Diego beat the Angels.

Blue Jays (ss) 1, Phillies 0

In Clearwater, Fla., Craig McMurtry and three other Toronto pitchers shut out Philadelphia. McMurtry, the second pitcher, allowed one hit and one walk in three innings while striking out three batters for the win.

Pistons sputter, but come on to beat Celts

Associated Press

NBA

It was a case of better late than never for the Detroit Pistons.

After sputtering for three periods, the Pistons caught Boston with a 30-23 fourth quarter and defeated the Celtics 122-119 in overtime Sunday to move one-half game ahead of runner-up Atlanta in the NBA's Central Division.

"We never really caught stride until the fourth quarter," said Isiah Thomas, who rebounded his own missed shot and scored with nine seconds left to give Detroit a 121-117 lead. "I don't think it was a matter of them dictating tempo as it was our own ineptitude."

"When he blocked it, he took another swipe at it," Thomas saaid. "My hands were quick enough to get to it, and I put it in."

The Celtics complained about the officiating, particularly about a lack of calls against those Pistons who covered McHale, whose 22 points were four below his season average.

Warriors 137, Spurs 111

Joe Barry Carroll scored 22 points and eight Golden State teammates also hit double figures. Chris Mullin and Rod Higgins added 16 points apiece as the Warriors shot a blistering 63.6 percent. David Greenwood led San Antonio with 16.

The Warriors had a season-high 43 assists, with Eric "Sleepy" Floyd leading the way with nine.

Bulls 115, Mavericks 105

Charles Oakley made a pair of slam dunks and two free throws in overtime and Michael Jordan scored 33 points. With the score tied 99-99 in the extra period, Oakley hit a pair of free throws and Gene Banks, who had a season-high 23 points, made a key steal and layup for a four-point edge.

The Mavericks played without leading scorer Mark Aguirre, who has a sprained knee ligament. Blackman had 28 points and Sam Perkins 21 for Dallas.

Jordan was held to three free throws in the first 18 minutes and missed his first 11 shots.

Trail Blazers 119, Rockets 93

Kiki Vandeweghe scored 19 of his 23 points in the second half as Portland pulled away from a five-point halftime lead. Clyde Drexler led Portland with 24 points and Robert Reid paced Houston with 20. Houston center Akeem Olajuwon scored only 12 points before he was ejected with 10:28 left in the game for a flagrant foul.

"We just didn't have the legs," said Houston Coach Bill Fitch, whose team played its fifth road game in seven days.

SMU used 'eyes' to investigate Aggies, Steers

FORT WORTH (AP) — Southern Methodist University boosters hired private investigators to gather information on possible recruiting violations by Texas and Texas A&M, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Sunday.

Sources told the newspaper that investigators were hired last November and December to look for possible violations of NCAA rules by the state-supported Southwest Conference rivals.

One source said William Stevens, identified as one of the nine boosters facing a lifetime ban from any association with SMU, was in charge of raising money to pay the private investigators.

Stevens would not say whether he was in charge of financing the investigation or how much money was involved, but did confirm that the purpose of hiring the investigators was to bring out possible rules violations against Texas and Texas A&M, the newspaper reported.

Stevens said he attended several meetings with the investiators.

"The PIs were told that SMU boosters are bad, but we want to get the NCAA going on Texas and A&M," a source told the newspaper.

Wolfpack devours Heels

Georgetown captures Big East

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Anxious to earn some respect and a bid to the NCAA tournament, North Carolina State did both Sunday in beating No. 2 North Carolina, 29-3, to win its first ACC title since 1983.

Vinny Del Negro, the MVP, made two free throws with 14 seconds left to give the Wolfpack a dramatic 68-67 victory over the Tar Heels. The victory was the sixth straight for N.C. State, which entered the tournament as the sixth seed and earlier this season lost twice to North Carolina by a combined total of 35 points.

"A lot of people gave up on us earlier this year," said Wolfpack forward Chucky Brown, who scored a career-high 18 points and grabbed 10 rebounds. "We were very hungry for this one."

North Carolina had an 11-game winning streak snapped.

North Carolina's senior class has compiled a 112-21 record over the past four seasons but did not win the ACC tournament in that span.

UCLA 76, Washington 64

LOS ANGELES — Jerome "Pooh" Richarson scored 21 points and Montel Hatcher added 20 as 18th-ranked UCLA qualified for the NCAA tournament for the first time in four years by defeating Washington in the Pacific-10 finals.

The Bruins, the Pac-10 regular-season champs, won for the 22nd time in their last 24 games and will enter the NCAA's 64-team tournament with a 24-6 record.

Georgetown 69, Syracuse 59

NEW YORK — Reggie Williams scored 25 points, including five 3-point goals, as No. 7 Georgetown beat No. 10 Syracuse to win the Big East tournament for the fifth time. It was 11th straight victory for the Hoyas, 26-4, and earned them an automatic NCAA berth. Syracuse, which had won four in a row, dropped to 26-6, including three losses to Georgetown.

Williams, a 6-foot-7 senior, also had eight rebounds and was named the tournament's most valuable player.

It was the Hoyas' first postseason title since Patrick Ewing graduated. They won it in 1980, 1982, 1984 and 1985.

Missouri 67, Kansas 65

Coward hit the winning shot after Mike Sandbothe missed a free throw. Lynn Hardy picked up the loose ball and passed to Coward who scored for Missouri.

Alabama 69, LSU 62

ATLANTA — Terry Coner scored five consecutive points within a 2½-minute span late in the second half as No. 9 Alabama won the SEC championship. It was the ninth victory in a row for the Crimson Tide, which won the SEC's regular season crown as well.

LSU, playing for the fourth day in a row and coming off a two-overtime semifinal victory over Georgia, made it a battle until Coner's spurt gave the Tide a 56-49 lead with 5:36 to play.

Bama never again was in trouble as the Tide lifted their record to 26-4 — a school mark for victories in one season.

Nikita Wilson's inside work kept LSU, 21-14, in contention most of the day. Wilson finished with 26 points.

Hough knuckles down again

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

PORT CHARLOTTE, Fla. (AP) — Charlie Hough will talk patiently about the intricacies of the knuckleball and his plans to help direct the Texas Rangers' youthful pitching staff through their traditional "sophomore jinx" season.

Hough's season was placed in jeopardy last spring when he broke the little finger on his pitching hand while shaking hands with a friend. He recovered to post a 17-10 record season as the Rangers challenged for the American League Western Division title.

Hough, who at 39 is older than manager Bobby Valentine and general manager Tom Grieve, remains the ace of an otherwise young Texas staff. He has won 78 games over the past five years and ranks fourth in the major leagues in victories over that span.

"This spring's no different from any other. I'm just a year older," Hough said after holding Detroit hitless over three innings in his first exhibition game Friday.

"I'm the same, the pitch is the same. You just learn more about what you can do with it."

Hough has made such an impact in six seasons with Texas that the Rangers are trying to groom minor league knuckleball pitchers to take Hough's place someday.

"You don't see it taught very often and it's learned even less," said Hough, a patient lecturer on the unpredictable nature of the knuckler. "There are a lot of guys who can throw it on the sidelines and a good one. If you can just throw the knuckleball. ou still have a lot to learn about how to pitch with it."

"You're taught all your life that when you get in a jam, you bear down and throw a little harder, just reach back for a little more," Hough said. "You do that with a knuckleball and you just get in more trouble.

"If you look back over the 100-year history of the game, knuckleball pitchers have been the most successful pitchers that ever go between the lines," House said. "We're going to try to keep four knuckleballers working in the organization.

"Our thinking is if we can get these kids developing a knuckleball before they are 25 instead of when they are 30, then we've got ourselves a pearl."

The Rangers also draw from Hough's experience with the youthful pitching staff — rookies started 102 of the 162 games last season. He's the father figure for a staff that includes Bobby Witt, 22, Jose Guzman, 23, and Edwin Correa, 20 and is also younger than Manager Bobby Valentine and general manager Tom Grieve.

"What really happens with the sophomore players who have a great first year is they sometimes think it's easy," Hough said. "You have a tendency not to be as prepared the next year and you find the other teams are ready."

"He's such a role model for the younger players," House said. "I look at him more as an assistant coach than a member of the starting rotation."

BASKETBALL— Total attendance at the SWC Post-Season Classic was the lowest since the 12-year tournament started in 1976. Only 8,312 fans were on hand in Reunion Arena for Texas A&M's victory over Baylor Sunday. The total of 38,379 fans for the three-day tournament was the lowest since 33,339 fans saw the Classic in 1976 at Moody Coliseum in Dallas. The tournament draw 44,099 fans last year at Reunion and 53,054 in 1985.

"There is concern for the dwinding interest in basketball at the Classic," said SWC President Dr. Michael Johnson, the University of Houston. "We're going to have to take a hard look at the problem."

BASEBALL— Former Midland (Texas) First baseman-outfielder Joe Carter of Cleveland returned to training camp Sunday morning, ending a six-day walkout due to a contract dispute. "My teammates and the fans, that's why I came back. I have a job to do. I don't want anything to get blown out of proportion and take away from what we have to do this season."

GOLF— Terry Gale beat Greg Twiggs with a short birdie putt on the first hole of a sudden death playoff, becoming the first player to win the Malaysian Open three times.

SOCCER— Everton squandered a first half lead and lost 2-1 at Watford, enabling Liverpool to remain atop the English League First Division standings.

Foreman returns

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — He's 39 and it's been 10 years since his last fight, but George Foreman's sparring partners say his punches will still carry a lot of power when he gets into the ring for a comeback attempt Monday night.

"George put a dent in my bicep," Terry Davis said this past week after sparring with the former world heavyweight champion. "I'm not kidding. Look. See this crease. It wasn't there before."

"Right now he's using 16-ounce gloves," Davis added. "When he fights he'll be using 10s. Jimmy Bilis (another sparring partner) and I were laughing the other day about what it would feel like if Foreman hit you with the lighter gloves. The answer is neither one of us wants to find out."

Police seek ex-SMU back

DALLAS (AP) — Police were attempting Sunday to locate former Southern Methodist University running back Jeff Atkins after a man was shot to death while driving an automobile registered to Atkins, investigators said.

A gunman opened fire on David Simpson, 31, Friday night as he was driving Atkins' sports car into the parking lot of a northwest Dallas parking complex Friday night, police said.

Simpson lived at the complex and worked there as a maintenance man and security guard, police said.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ873 ♡QJ6 ◇962 ♣K8
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	?

A.—There are those who believe you must rebid the spades to tell partner you have a five-card suit. However, any rebid of spades would show at least a six-card suit and an unbalanced hand. The correct auction is an invitational raise to two no trump.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q9832 ♡762 ◇AJ3 ♣96
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—The same principle applies as in the answer above. If you rebid three spades, you would be showing an unbalanced hand with a longer spade suit. Since partner is showing a balanced hand of 19-20 points, your correct bid is a raise to three no trump.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K76 ♡AJ95 ◇QJ1032 ♣6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
1 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A—You have found your strain—it is only a question of to what level you should raise. The modern tendency is to treat a jump to three hearts as highly encouraging but not 100 percent forcing. Since your hand in support of hearts revalues to a full opening bid, you should leap to four hearts.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ762 ♡95 ◇A107 ♣K83
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—This is a question of partnership style. If you play that you need something better than a dead minimum to rebid two no trump, then your only alternative is two spades. If not, two no trump describes both the strength and shape of your holding.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠83 ♡KQJ10762 ◇AJ ♣72
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	3 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Point count does not express the full value of your hand—after all, you have seven playing tricks. Jump to four hearts. Your partner won't play you for more strength than this since you didn't jump rebid three hearts at your first opportunity.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KJ9 ♡QJ8 ◇AQ1063 ♣74
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A.—Had your long suit been a major, it would be correct to bid it at the one-level. Since it is a minor, however, your most likely destination is no trump, especially since you have stoppers in all the unbid suits. A jump to two no trump describes your hand exactly—a balanced 13-15 points with all unbid suits stopped.

National Easter Seal Telethon raises more than $33.2 million

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The National Easter Seal Society raised more than $33.2 million during its 16th annual fund-raising telethon that was broadcast in 125 cities.

The amount was 10 percent more than last year, said John R. Garrison, the society's chief executive officer.

This was the seventh year Pat Boone was host of the show. He was joined by Donna Mills, star of Knot's Landing, in the nationwide telecast that began at 8 p.m. PST Saturday and ended at 4 p.m. PST Sunday.

Singer Ray Charles appeared during the telethon to perform a song called "There is Always One More Time," written for the society by Doc Pomus, a New York songwriter disabled by polio.

"The message of the song is inspirational, telling you to never give up," Garrison said.

Other stars who appeared included Ann Jillian, Rich Little, Carol Lawrence, Eddie Rabbit, Jose Feliciano, Robert Goulet, Barry Bostwick and rock group Air Supply, Garrison said.

Founded in 1919, the society, serves more than 1 million people with disabilities and their families by offering programs including physical therapy, transportation and summer camp, Garrison said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Entertainers Marvin Hamlisch, Liza Minnelli, Vic Damone and Bobby Short got a pat on the back from President Reagan after they taped a tribute to songwriters Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart.

"You've done great credit to a great song-writing duo," Reagan told the four Sunday after the hour-long performance, scheduled for presentation March 25 on the Public Broadcasting System.

Ms. Minelli, accompanied by the lush sound of violins in the U.S. Marine Band, sang, "Spring Is Here," and later joined Damone and Short in a medley of Rodgers and Hart songs.

Hamlisch said that at the time Rodgers and Hart were turning out hits like "Connecticut Yankee" and "Pal Joey," Broadway "was a jungle" of competition, and the two had to establish their identity in a time when the big names were Jerome Kern and Sigmund Romberg.

• • •

The couple are the parents of Andrea Albert Pierre, 2, and Charlotte Marie Pomeline, 7 months.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Jennifer O'Neill has delivered a healthy, 6 pound, 8¼-ounce son, a spokesman said.

Cooper Alan was born Sunday morning at Cedars Sinai Medical Center, said family spokesman David Kramer. The child is the first of Miss O'Neill's with husband, actor and songwriter Richard Alan. The 38-year-old actress has two other children by a previous marraige, Kramer said.

"Mother and baby are quite well," Kramer said Sunday night. There were no complications during the natural childbirth, he added.

Miss O'Neill, a former top fashion model, has appeared in such films as "Summer of '42," "Rio Lobo," and "Steel."

She also starred in the short-lived, prime-time television soap opera "Bare Essence" and the spy drama "Cover Up."

NEW YORK (AP) — Naomi Judd, the mother in the mother-daughter Grammy-winning country music duo, says she's Dolly Parton's "biggest fan in the whole universe."

"She just scatters my acorns, and that's pretty hard to do," Ms. Judd said Sunday before the Judds, Ms. Parton and the group Alabama appeared at Avery Fisher Music Hall for the Marlboro Country Music concert.

"I didn't know you felt that way," replied Ms. Parton, herself a Grammy award winner. "I'll get you some songs to record. Now I know how to get some hit records."

Sunday's concert began a 17-city tour, the proceeds of which will benefit Second Harvest, a food bank network.

"The state and national flags dropped whenever something displeased him," said Elise Leary, a Manchester resident who opened the conservative Republican's mail for three years.

"When we gave away the Panama Canal, oh boy, the flags dropped then!" Leary recalled at the dinner.

Thomson drew loyal support from ultraconservatives and outraged detractors with stands that included suggestions of nuclear weapons for the state National Guard and opposition to gun control and the Equal Rights Amendment.

Among guests Saturday night were Gov. John Sununu; Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and two possible presidential candidates, television evangelist Pat Robertson and Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jazz drummer Buddy Rich remained hospitalized at UCLA Medical Center, undergoing chemotherapy for an inoperable brain tumor, a hospital spokesman said.

The spokesman, who refused to be identified, said Rich's condition Sunday was stable.

He was transferred to UCLA for tests and released briefly, then readmitted more than a week ago after the tumor was diagnosed, friend and veteran jazz vibraphonist Terry Gibbs said.

Gibbs said doctors want to shrink the tumor to an operable size.

NEW YORK (AP) — Gene Roddenberry, creator of television's "Star Trek" series, said he wanted his wife to play the second-in-command of the Enterprise, but they had to settle for a role as a nurse.

After he wrote in his wife, Majel Barrett, as Capt. James Kirk's lieutenant, NBC nixed the idea, Roddenberry said. But, he said, "We put her aboard as Nurse Chapel, and the network never even noticed."

Miss Barrett also has appeared in two of the "Star Trek" movies.

Dollar mostly higher

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose today against all major currencies except the British pound in quiet early trading in Europe, and dealers said the currency is likely to remain stronger all week.

In Frankfurt, the dollar reached 1.85 West German marks for the first time in more than two weeks and dealers said the currency would stay above that barrier for several days.

Traders said the market has abandoned plans to push the dollar down towards 1.80 marks and to test the recent agreement by six major industrialized nations to keep currency rates stable.

—6.1625 French francs, up from 6.1200

—2.0920 Dutch guilders, up from 2.0775

—1,315.50 Italian lire, up from 1,304.50

—1.33585 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3323

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.5900, higher than the $1.5885 late Friday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $405.50 a troy ounce, compared with late Friday's $407.00. At mid-morning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $404.85.

Earlier in Hong Kong, gold dropped the equivalent of 43 cents an ounce to close at a bid price of $406.33, compared with Saturday's closing $406.76.

Piedmont agrees to USAir offer

Sweetened deal more palatable

WASHINGTON (AP) — USAir Group Inc. and Piedmont Aviation Inc. announced today that Piedmont's board of directors have accepted USAir's sweetened $1.59 billion buyout offer.

The all-cash agreement calls for USAir to pay $69 a share for Piedmont stock, according to a USAir statement.

USAIR

USAir officials had said before the purchase was agreed to late Friday that they would operate Piedmont as a wholly owned subsidiary and maintain Piedmont's name at least for a year. After that, Piedmont may be absorbed under the USAir name.

The acquisition is the second in recent weeks by USAir. The Transportation Department has already approved USAir's purchase of Pacific Southwest Airlines, which is concentrated along the West Coast, and will have to sanction the USAir-Piedmont deal.

In announcing the merger agreement, Edwin I. Colodny, the chairman of USAir Group, and William R. Howard, Piedmont's chairman, said the "combination of these two carriers will create a strong airline which will be able to compete effectively against the industry giants."

USAir and Piedmont had been on the verge of a merger Wednesday, but the agreement was delayed when Carl Icahn, chairman of Trans World Airlines, launched a hostile takeover attempt of USAir.

Icahn's attempt to buy USAir remains in limbo. The Transportation Department late Friday rejected TWA's petition for authority to buy USAir, but Icahn has said he plans to submit a new request. USAir said Icahn's offer was insufficient and rejected his bid.

Both Piedmont and USAir are considered among the most successful middle-size airlines. USAir has its corporate headquarters near Washington and concentrates its operations in the Northeast, through its Pittsburgh hub. It also has flights to the Midwest and the West Coast.

Piedmont operates mainly in the Southeast, as far north as Baltimore, where it maintains a hub, and in the Midwest. It also has hubs at Dayton, Ohio, and Charlotte, N.C. It is headquartered in Winston-Salem, N.C.

Piedmont for some time has been a target for a potential takeover as airlines have consolidated into what many analysts believe eventually will be only about a half-dozen megacarriers.

Late last month, Norfolk Southern Corp., which already owns nearly 20 percent of Piedmont, announced plans to buy the airline. Within days, USAir came in with its offer, which orginally called for buying Piedmont for $71 a share, with half the shares to be bought in cash and the rest exchanged for USAir stock.

PIEDMONT

But Piedmont's board of directors pressed for an all-cash deal and USAir later sweetened the offer.

Today's announcement said that USAir has aquired about two-thirds of Norfolk Southern's shares and plans to purchase the rest. The USAir statement said Norfolk Southern supports the USAir acquisition.

The USAir-Piedmont merger, including the already approved purchase of Pacific Southwest, would give USAir about 7 percent of the market share, ranking it 7th among major U.S. airlines.

The largest airline companies are, in order of their ranking, Texas Air Corp., a conglomerate of Eastern and Continental airlines, 19.5 percent; United Airlines, 16.2 percent; American Airlines, 13.9 percent; Delta Air Lines, 11.6 percent; Northwest Airlines, 9.9 percent; Trans World Airlines, 8.1 percent; and the combination of USAir, Piedmont and PSA. Next is Pan American World Airways, 6.1 percent and Southwest Airlines at 1.5 percent.

Mobil consolidates e&p, plans refinery expansion

DALLAS (AP) — Mobil Oil Corp. will relocate its U.S. exploration and producing operations to Dallas in a reorganization that will bring 300 upper-level management and executive-level employees to Texas.

Mobil spokesman John Lord said the relocation will begin April 1 and bring the nation's second-largest oil company's employment to about 4,000 people in the Dallas area.

With the move, Mobil joins Atlantic Richfield Corp. and Sun Co. among the major oil companies that base their exploration and production activities in Dallas. The New York-based company employs about 164,000 people worldwide.

Mobile also announced it will upgrade its super-unleaded gasoline unit in Beaumont as part of a Southeast Texas project that will employ up to 300 construction workers through mid-1989 at a cost of between $30 million and $40 million, beginning later this year.

Mobil's investment was expected to move through the South Texas economy at least five times, involving about $150 million worth of goods and services, said a Beaumont Chamber of Commerce spokesman.

Mobil's domestic exploration and production operations now are being run from units in Denver, New Orleans and Houston, where company officials said there may be some job cuts.

But Mobil Chairman Allen Murray said the new Dallas unit, part of the company's first major reorganization since 1968, will be much more effective than the present arrangement.

And in Beaumont, refinery manager Bill Blackmon said the company is willing to spend capital there because local leaders have adopted a "strong business posture" and established innovative programs to help industry.

Blackmon said modifications will increase efficiency and productivity of the unit, which now produces 46,000 barrels daily at peak. The Beaumont refinery produces about half of the oil company's super-unleaded gasoline marketed nationwide, he said.

Jim Yarbrough, chairman of the Beaumont Chamber of Commerce's economic development division, said Mobil's decision indicated the oil refiner "is here to stay. I think we can quit worrying about that."

BBB, remodelers group tackle complaint problem

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Home improvements normally rank in the top five when it comes to Better Business Bureau complaints, but a new joint effort of BBB of the Permian Basin and the Permian Basin chapter of the National Association of the Remodeling Industry are looking to change that, according to John K. Schmidt, president of the Permian Basin BBB.

At a press conference today, chartering of a local NARI chapter along with a Remodelcare Homeowner Protection Program were announced.

National leaders of both organizations have applauded the the new program, which is expected to improve the many disputes arising from home remodeling. "This program," said Bill Tankersley, president of the Council of Better Business Bureaus, "will help consumers avoid problems, as well as provide a fast, effective way to settle them should they arise."

Bob Rasmussen, president of NARI, said the professional remodeling industry is extremely concerned with seeing that customers receive professional treatment when they need home improvements or repairs and that problems are resolved promptly to the customer's satisfaction.

The new Remodelcare Program launched by the two local groups is representative of programs initiated by the 172 BBB's and 55 chapters of NARI nationwide and will focus on an arbitration program between the two organizations.

Each Remodelcare unit will designate a special contract person who will have the authority and responsibility to settle customer complaints. Consumers who contact the BBB with a complaint against a Remodelcare contractor will be referred to this individual. If the dispute is not immediately resolved, it will then be mediated by BBB staff. If the homeowner is still dissatisfied he can then choose to have the dispute heard by an impartial trained volunteer arbitrator, whose decision will be legally binding.

If technical advice regarding workmanship or materials is necessary, it will be provided by neutral experts not associated with the customer or the firm and who are not potential competitors of the contractors.

"Arbitration can work both ways," said Schmidt, "a contractor can also initiate arbitration." To participate in the program, remodeling contractors must agree to adhere to the Remodelcare code of ethical conduct and BBB standards of practice for the home improvement industry.

Home remodeling was definitely a problem area said Schmidt: "Nationally, it was number one in terms of inquiries to the BBB and number two in terms of complaints. Locally it was 16th among industries in terms of complaints." Schmidt said the most common complaints were quality of workmanship, and whether or not the job had actually been completed as agreed.

Midland firm cuts landmen's leg work

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Petroleum landmen typically have to spend a lot of time driving to distant county courthouses to get title information on land before it can be leased for oil and gas exploration, but a new title company in Midland is hoping to change that.

"Our concept could cut 80 to 90 percent of the need to travel to smaller, rural counties, which are at least 120 miles away," stated Linda Lillard of Caprock Title Co., a four-year-old company founded in Spur, Texas. The firm recently opened a Midland office at 511 W. Ohio because of the city's high concentration of oil people.

"We hope, in the long term, that our new concept will stimulate interest in exploration for oil and gas in those smaller, rural counties," she continued. She explained that Texas has no central location for information on land titles; any title information is kept in the county seats. Caprock Title hopes to centralize records in its Midland location to facilitate research and work on abstracts. Lillard noted that the office could help the Midland economy with landmen coming to Midland for research and staying over night to visit subsurface library and tend to other business.

Caprock currently has records — from sovereignty — on Dickens, Kent and King counties of Texas, and with the purchase of Lovington Abstract Co., records on Lea County, N.M. Lillard said that records on Stonewall County will be available in April, and she hopes to continue expanding coverage of the Permian Basin.

Scott Rathburn-Reporter-Telegram

Lillard, a petroleum landman for 10 years, emphasized that Caprock is not only a research company, although that may be the most visible part of the firm, but also does abstracts. She also emphasized that the company is not trying to compete with landmen. "We won't take leases, and we don't render an attorney's title opinion."

Caprock Title was founded by Lillard, Virginia Streit, and Roland Streit, who wrote the computer program that prints out all the land data. Data on Dickens, Kent and King counties is updated weekly, and Lea County is updated daily. Information is also available on microfilm.

While all the lease information is computerized, Lillard tries to de-emphasize the high-tech aspect of Caprock's methods. Noting that title companies have long been steeped in tradition, she said a number of her customers were skeptical at first.

"They're used to dealing with handwritten records. But ours are printed out on the computer so they're easier to read, they're very accurate, and quicker to get locate. I had one man come in and say 'You probably won't have my transaction yet, since it was only recorded a few days ago.' And we had it."

Caprock eventually hopes to have a host of counties in West Texas and New Mexico to save landmen miles of driving to distant court houses, eventually it may even be possible for landmen to access information in the computer data bank without ever leaving their office.

Houston home foreclosures take their toll

HOUSTON (AP) — Scattered throughout Houston, some clumped together in nearly desolate subdivisions built in boom years, stand thousands of foreclosed homes, signs of the times.

Hardly any section of the country's fourth-largest city remains immune to foreclosures, but especially hard hit are some outlying subdivisions built in the early 1980s.

"There are so many vacant houses here," said Bennie Wyatt, who lives in Westhollow Village, a development west of downtown Houston. "They start looking trashed out."

"For Sale" signs stand in front of home after home in his area and others. Weeds have taken over some lawns.

Combined totals from the two Harris County auctions held this year showed 5,406 foreclosures, compared to 3,551 for the first two monthly auctions last year.

In 1986, 26,919 properties were foreclosed, according to statistics released by Baca Publications, a Houston firm that charts monthly foreclosures in the county. That's nearly triple the 1984 figure, of 9,075 properties, according to Baca.

Of last year's foreclosures, only about 1,700 properties were commercial, said J. Reid McTaggart, market analyst for Baca Publications.

"There are some areas that could become slums," McTaggart said. "It may not be slums as we think of it, but socio-economically it is."

Lower-income families are moving into some areas initially designed and inhabited by people with more money to spend on their homes and the surrounding community, he said.

Vandalism is another problem in neighborhoods where homes are vacant. Thieves have stolen appliances from some unoccupied houses.

McTaggart estimated it may take four to five years for the housing market to recover. But in the meantime, some subdivisions risk becoming so deteriorated they may never be livable again.

"The prairie is going to reclaim some of these houses," he said.

In the early 1980s, inflated home prices, creative financing that made houses affordable and the belief that good times would prevail all contributed to the current slump in home values, said J. Fred Baca, president of the Houston company.

Now, the value of houses often exceeds the current market price, oil prices have dropped and the boomtown feeling has dissipated. The area's commercial real estate market is dogged by the same problems.

Some suburban subdivisions are plagued by "walk-aways," homeowners who simply abandon their high mortgage payments and find cheaper places to live.

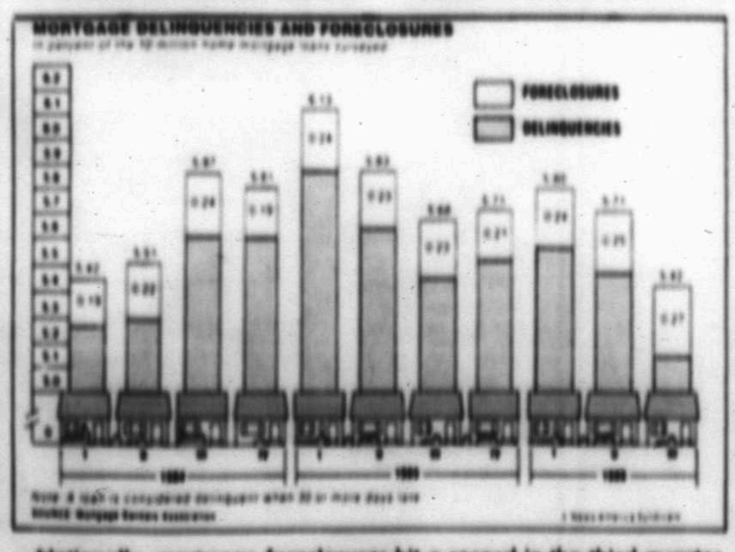

For many who bought homes in the early 1980s, the current market value of their property is less than the amount they owe, he said.

Still, the bust in homes values isn't all bad. For some it has meant lower rents or even a chance to buy a home sooner than they thought possible.

Wyatt, 27, pays $575 monthly for a three-bedroom house in the suburbs. That's about $250 less than he had to pay when he first moved in four years ago.

Many homes in his neighborhood are leased, and renters come and go, he said.

Now Wyatt says he's getting ready to leave, too. He's been shopping around for a house and hopes to get a good buy at an auction.

Nationally, mortgage foreclosures hit a record in the third quarter of last year, when .27 percent of all outstanding home loans had entered foreclosure.

Chrysler plans AMC buy

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. and France's Renault have signed a letter of intent under which the No. 3 automaker would buy ailing American Motors Corp. in a deal valued at $757 million, the companies said today.

Under the plan, Chrysler would buy all outstanding shares of AMC, the fifth-largest U.S. automaker, the companies said. Cash-rich Chrysler has been searching for an acquisition for some time.

"This is an agreement in principle. Much work remains to be done before the deal is complete," said Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca.

AMC President Joseph Cappy said AMC received a letter today detailing the purchase proposal. "We are studying the proposal," he said, adding that AMC would have no further comment until later.

French government-owned Renault holds a 46.1 percent interest in AMC, which in fourth-quarter 1986 earned its first profit in two years. In the past six years, AMC has lost a total of $638.6 million.

Chrysler reported $22.59 billion in sales in 1986, and AMC's sales totaled $3.46 billion. Together, the companies' sales last year would have totaled $26.05 billion, far short of second-ranked Ford Motor Co.'s $62.72 billion.

Chrysler's net earnings for 1986 were $1.4 billion, while AMC lost $91.3 million in 1986.

The plan will require approval by the two governments, the boards of directors of Chrysler, AMC and Renault and of AMC shareholders. If approved, holders of AMC common stock other than Renault would receive $4 worth of Chrysler common stock for each share of AMC stock they hold.

"For Chrysler, the attractions are Jeep, the best-known automotive brand name in the world; a new, world-class assembly plant at Bramalea, Canada, and a third distribution system giving us access to a larger market. For AMC, an integration with, and access to, a broader product line. For Renault, continuing presence and distribution capabilities in the United States and Canada," Iacocca said.

The proposal met with approval from the United Auto Workers union, which represents 10,000 AMC workers and 80,000 Chrysler workers.

"We believe Chrysler's purchase of AMC is a logical and sound step for all concerned. It should strengthen the product offerings and overall viability of both entities and put an end to damaging speculation about whether AMC's investment lifeline will be maintained," said UAW President Owen Bieber and Vice President Marc Stepp.

Under the plan, AMC initially would remain a distinct Chrysler subsidiary and the AMC-Jeep-Renault dealer organization would remain independent. Chrysler eventually would absorb AMC's product development and manufacturing operations, Iacocca said.

The letter of intent calls for Chrysler and Renault to examine future joint product development for both North American and world-wide sale.

"This transaction is an important step in the Renault restructuring which will permit Renault to continue its export program in the United States," said Raymond H. Levy, Renault's chief executive officer.

Chrysler would buy Renault's interest in AMC for $200 million in Chrysler notes along with a contingent payment based on AMC future profits and sales which could range from zero to $350 million, Chrysler said.

Mexico City crime rate soars

By SALLY JACOBSEN

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A soaring number of violent deaths and robberies has heightened worries about crime in this sprawling metropolitan area. Almost everyone can tell a tale of woe.

Conversation frequently passes to stories of break-ins, purse-snatchings or, what has become even more common, thefts of cars and car radios. Armed gangs burst into restaurants, robbing waiters and diners alike.

"It is a problem that is growing more each day," said Agustin Diez de Urdanivia, head of a drug abuse program in the city's center, a high crime area.

Among the reasons cited for increasing crime are Mexico's staggering economic problems in recent years, urban disruption caused by the massive earthquake of September 1985, a too small and ineffective police force and a "collective neurosis" of becoming the world's largest metropolitan area with more than 18 million people.

He was held up on a bus to Nezahualcoyotl, a low-income area on the city's eastern outskirts. The robber, in his early 20s, made off with Alvarez's watch and gold ring but failed to get his money, which, like many Mexicans, Alvarez had hidden in a jacket pocket.

Cirilo Lopez, a downtown office assistant, said he has been robbed so many times that, "Now, I am one of their clients."

New measures have been announced to strengthen the police force, increase crime prevention programs, and investigate links between drug and alcohol abuse and violence.

Figures from the Mexico City Attorney General's Office indicate that the number of violent deaths, including traffic accidents but excluding suicides, rose 14.1 percent in 1986, to 4,837.

Deaths from gunshot wounds increased 19.3 percent last year, to 1,095. Blows from blunt instruments or other objects were blamed for 1,098 deaths, up 18.4 percent from the previous year.

Deaths from knife wounds rose 9.8 percent, to 281. Other causes accounted for the remaining deaths.

The figures were collected for the Federal District, the core of the Mexico City area, with an estimated 8 million to 10 million residents.

New York City, in comparison, reported 1,457 cases of murder and non-negligent manslaughter in January through November of last year — which would appear to be proportionally far fewer than Mexico City. New York recorded a population of 7 million in the 1980 census.

In Mexico City, 88,281 robberies were reported last year, accounting for a little more than half of all crimes. A decade ago, robberies reportedly made up only about a quarter of all crimes.

Through the first nine months of 1986, robberies were up nearly 30 percent, compared to a 3 percent drop in the same period of 1985.

Auto thefts, which experts say are carried out by organized gangs, were estimated at 29,000 to 36,000 last year, a category of crime that analysts say has grown most rapidly in recent years. Repeated requests from the Attorney General's office for yearly figures on car thefts were unsuccessful.

In New York City, police figures showed 73,960 robberies and 165,315 incidents of grand larceny were committed in the first 11 months of 1986. Car thefts accounted for 77,854 incidents of crime in the same period in New York where affluence would allow more people to have cars than here.

Miguel Oscar Aguilar Ruiz, director of technical services for the Attorney General's Office, said in an interview that economic problems were an important factor in the increase in crime in Mexico City.

The economic crisis, which began in 1982, has thrown thousands out of work and sharply reduced living standards for the nation's large impoverished population.

Aguilar Ruiz also attributed the surge in crime problems to the continuing flow of rural Mexicans into the already-crowded capital in search of jobs.

Other analysts say the 1985 earthquakes, which destroyed houses and businesses, added to delinquency in the capital.

"The earthquakes forced many people from their old houses to go live in camps where there is promiscuity in some of them ...also robberies," said Diez de Urdanivia.

Julian Olmos Cruces lives in one of those camps where, he said, residents often are assaulted.

"More than anything," he said, "it is the crisis we are living in. There are no jobs."

Double take

Desmond Tutu, the Anglican Archbishop of Cape Town, meets his double today as he eyes a wax likeness of himself before it goes on display at London's Madam Tussaud's waxworks museum. The portrait, modeled from a sitting with Tutu last May, wears an exact duplicate of the archbishop's purple cassock.

Berri hopeful hostages will be freed

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Shiite Moslem militia leader Nabih Berri said today he is hopeful three American teachers and an Indian professor held hostage will be freed if Israel releases 400 Arab prisoners.

"I am optimistic," said Berri, who is also Lebanon's justice minister, after a 30-minute meeting with the wives of the four Beirut University College teachers kidnapped from their campus Jan. 24. The private meeting took place at Berri's residence in Moslem west Beirut.

The Amal militia leader also told reporters that publicity had complicated the release of Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite, who has been missing for more than six weeks.

Of the kidnapped teachers, Berri said, "It will take a little time. But I'm sure we'll arrive at a happy ending."

He said Israel could "open the door" by ordering the release of 400 Arabs believed held in south Lebanon by the South Lebanon Army, an Israeli-backed militia.

The four teachers held hostage are Robert Polhill, 53, formerly of New York City; Alann Steen, 47, a native of Boston; Jesse Turner, 39, a native of Boise, Idaho; and Mithileshwar Singh, 60, a native of India who is a legal resident alien of the United States. They are among 26 foreigners missing and presumed kidnapped in Lebanon.

The kidnappers of the four teachers entered the campus posing as police. A group calling itself Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine claimed responsibility for the abductions.

Steen's wife, Virginia Rose, 30, of Jackson, Miss., told reporters the wives of the four missing teachers "came here first to thank Mr. Berri for his insistence that our four husbands should be released.

"We will continue to work with people such as him, hoping to see our husbands very soon," said Mrs. Steen, the only American teacher left at Beirut University College.

"We went back to work at BUC today," she said. "I had a very difficult morning facing my students and Alann's students. These men are desperately needed by the families, college, desperately needed by the whole community."

Of Waite, the personal envoy of Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, Berri said, "He was supposed to have already been freed, but certain publicity delayed that." He did not elaborate.

Asked about Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt's claim that Waite, 47, was being held captive by the Iranian-backed Shiite Hezbollah, or Party of God, Berri said sarcastically: "He must have information more than I do."

The Druse militia last month clashed with Amal in a week of street battles for control of west Beirut. Three hundred people were killed and 1,300 wounded.

Syria sent 7,500 troops backed by 100 tanks into west Beirut on Feb. 22 in response to an appeal by Lebanon's Moslem leaders to quell the fighting.

Police in shoot out in front of home of deputy mayor

PARIS (AP) — Three men and a woman exchanged gunfire early today with police guarding the Left Bank home of the deputy mayor of Paris. Two of the assailants were wounded, and all four were arrested, police said.

Investigators said no terrorist group appeared implicated in the attack in front of Deputy Mayor Jean Tiberi's home in the Place Pantheon. They said none of the four, whose names were not disclosed, was on any police list of terrorists, but that one had a record of petty crime.

A radical leftist group called Direct Action has carried out political assassinations and bombings in Paris and other French cities.

The police said the four apparently left a restaurant where they had been drinking and without warning opened fire at 3 a.m. on two police guards in front of the residence.

A chase took place and there was another exchange of fire before police arrested the three men in the Place d'Italie in the 13th district. The woman fled on foot but was caught shortly afterwards.

Son asks that Hess be allowed to die at home

BERLIN (AP) — The son of jailed Nazi deputy fuehrer Rudolf Hess has appealed to the Allied powers to allow his ailing, 92-year-old father to "die in peace at home."

Wolf Ruediger Hess said in an interview published Sunday by the Bild am Sonntag newspaper that "the end could come any day" for his father, who is suffering from pneumonia.

Hess, who was Adolf Hitler's deputy and is the last imprisoned leader of Nazi Germany, was taken a week ago from West Berlin's Spandau prison to the nearby British military hospital in West Berlin.

He was suffering from bronchitis but later developed pneumonia, the younger Hess said.

He said Saturday that his father's condition had improved as a result of treatment with antibiotics. But Bild am Sonntag quoted him as saying, "This hospital stay means that the end could come any day."

Hess was captured in 1941 when he parachuted into Scotland on what he said was a peace mission. He was sentenced to life in prison at the Nuremberg war crimes trials in 1946.

For 21 years he has been the only prisoner in Spandau, a 19th century prison built to hold 600 people.

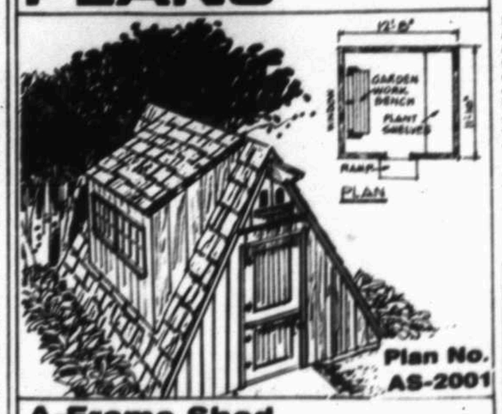

Hess' 40-year-old son made his appeal to the World War II allies that jointly administer Spandau: the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union.

"Let him die in peace at home," he said. "Be humane, grant him that he lives the last days of his life in freedom."

Hess' family has made repeated appeals for his release. West German President Richard von Weizsaecker, Chancellor Helmut Kohl and opposition officials also have pleaded for his release on humanitarian grounds.

The Western Allies have expressed willingness to release Hess on humanitarian grounds. But the Soviet Union has rejected the appeals for clemency, saying it would constitute an amnesty for fascism.

Mexico City crime rate soars

By SALLY JACOBSEN

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A soaring number of violent deaths and robberies has heightened worries about crime in this sprawling metropolitan area. Almost everyone can tell a tale of woe.

Conversation frequently passes to stories of break-ins, purse-snatchings or, what has become even more common, thefts of cars and car radios. Armed gangs burst into restaurants, robbing waiters and diners alike.

"It is a problem that is growing more each day," said Agustin Diez de Urdanivia, head of a drug abuse program in the city's center, a high crime area.

A foreign resident witnessed two teen-agers, one waving a small pistol in the air, try to wrest a large radio from a young couple strolling on a Sunday afternoon near the famed National Anthropology Museum in Chapultepec Park, a popular weekend gathering spot for families.

The young man refused to release the radio and minutes later lay on the sidewalk, clutching his bleeding side.

Among the reasons cited for increasing crime are Mexico's staggering economic problems in recent years, urban disruption caused by the massive earthquake of September 1985, a too small and ineffective police force and a "collective neurosis" of becoming the world's largest metropolitan area with more than 18 million people.

He was held up on a bus to Nezahualcoyotl, a low-income area on the city's eastern outskirts. The robber, in his early 20s, made off with Alvarez's watch and gold ring but failed to get his money, which, like many Mexicans, Alvarez had hidden in a jacket pocket.

Cirilo Lopez, a downtown office assistant, said he has been robbed so many times that, "Now, I am one of their clients."

Mayor Ramon Aguirre said last fall that President Miguel de la Madrid wanted efforts redoubled to improve public security.

New measures have been announced to strengthen the police force, increase crime prevention programs, and investigate links between drug and alcohol abuse and violence.

Measures also have been undertaken to crack down on crooked police officers.

Figures from the Mexico City Attorney General's Office indicate that the number of violent deaths, including traffic accidents but excluding suicides, rose 14.1 percent in 1986, to 4,837.

Deaths from gunshot wounds increased 19.3 percent last year, to 1,095. Blows from blunt instruments or other objects were blamed for 1,098 deaths, up 18.4 percent from the previous year.

Deaths from knife wounds rose 9.8 percent, to 281. Other causes accounted for the remaining deaths.

The figures were collected for the Federal District, the core of the Mexico City area, with an estimated 8 million to 10 million residents.

New York City, in comparison, reported 1,457 cases of murder and non-negligent manslaughter in January through November of last year — which would appear to be proportionally far fewer than Mexico City. New York recorded a population of 7 million in the 1980 census.

In Mexico City, 88,281 robberies were reported last year, accounting for a little more than half of all crimes. A decade ago, robberies reportedly made up only about a quarter of all crimes.

Through the first nine months of 1986, robberies were up nearly 30 percent, compared to a 3 percent drop in the same period of 1985.

Auto thefts, which experts say are carried out by organized gangs, were estimated at 29,000 to 36,000 last year, a category of crime that analysts say has grown most rapidly in recent years. Repeated requests from the Attorney General's office for yearly figures on car thefts were unsuccessful.

In New York City, police figures showed 73,960 robberies and 165,315 incidents of grand larceny were committed in the first 11 months of 1986. Car thefts accounted for 77,854 incidents of crime in the same period in New York where affluence would allow more people to have cars than here.

Miguel Oscar Aguilar Ruiz, director of technical services for the Attorney General's Office, said in an interview that economic problems were an important factor in the increase in crime in Mexico City.

The economic crisis, which began in 1982, has thrown thousands out of work and sharply reduced living standards for the nation's large impoverished population.

Aguilar Ruiz also attributed the surge in crime problems to the continuing flow of rural Mexicans into the already-crowded capital in search of jobs.

Other analysts say the 1985 earthquakes, which destroyed houses and businesses, added to delinquency in the capital.

"The earthquakes forced many people from their old houses to go live in camps where there is promiscuity in some of them ...also robberies," said Diez de Urdanivia.

Julian Olmos Cruces lives in one of those camps where, he said, residents often are assaulted.

"More than anything," he said, "it is the crisis we are living in. There are no jobs."

Berri hopeful hostages will be freed

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Shiite Moslem militia leader Nabih Berri said today he is hopeful three American teachers and an Indian professor held hostage will be freed if Israel releases 400 Arab prisoners.

"I am optimistic," said Berri, who is also Lebanon's justice minister, after a 30-minute meeting with the wives of the four Beirut University College teachers kidnapped from their campus Jan. 24. The private meeting took place at Berri's residence in Moslem west Beirut.

The Amal militia leader also told reporters that publicity had complicated the release of Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite, who has been missing for more than six weeks.

Of the kidnapped teachers, Berri said, "It will take a little time. But I'm sure we'll arrive at a happy ending."

He said Israel could "open the door" by ordering the release of 400 Arabs believed held in south Lebanon by the South Lebanon Army, an Israeli-backed militia.

The four teachers held hostage are Robert Polhill, 53, formerly of New York City; Alann Steen, 47, a native of Boston; Jesse Turner, 39, a native of Boise, Idaho; and Mithileshwar Singh, 60, a native of India who is a legal resident alien of the United States. They are among 26 foreigners missing and presumed kidnapped in Lebanon.

The kidnappers of the four teachers entered the campus posing as police. A group calling itself Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine claimed responsibility for the abductions.

Steen's wife, Virginia Rose, 30, of Jackson, Miss., told reporters the wives of the four missing teachers "came here first to thank Mr. Berri for his insistence that our four husbands should be released.

"We will continue to work with people such as him, hoping to see our husbands very soon," said Mrs. Steen, the only American teacher left at Beirut University College.

"We went back to work at BUC today," she said. "I had a very difficult morning facing my students and Alann's students. These men are desperately needed by the families, college, desperately needed by the whole community."

Of Waite, the personal envoy of Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, Berri said, "He was supposed to have already been freed, but certain publicity delayed that." He did not elaborate.

Asked about Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt's claim that Waite, 47, was being held captive by the Iranian-backed Shiite Hezbollah, or Party of God, Berri said sarcastically: "He must have information more than I do."

Waite, on his fifth mission to Lebanon to seek the release of foreign hostages, disappeared after he left his Riviera Hotel Jan. 20, apparently for a rendezvous with the kidnappers of two Americans abducted in 1985.

The Druse militia last month clashed with Amal in a week of street battles for control of west Beirut. Three hundred people were killed and 1,300 wounded.

Syria sent 7,500 troops backed by 100 tanks into west Beirut on Feb. 22 in response to an appeal by Lebanon's Moslem leaders to quell the fighting.

Police in shoot out in front of home of deputy mayor

PARIS (AP) — Three men and a woman exchanged gunfire early today with police guarding the Left Bank home of the deputy mayor of Paris. Two of the assailants were wounded, and all four were arrested, police said.

Investigators said no terrorist group appeared implicated in the attack in front of Deputy Mayor Jean Tiberi's home in the Place Pantheon. They said none of the four, whose names were not disclosed, was on any police list of terrorists, but that one had a record of petty crime.

A radical leftist group called Direct Action has carried out political assassinations and bombings in Paris and other French cities.

The police said the four apparently left a restaurant where they had been drinking and without warning opened fire at 3 a.m. on two police guards in front of the residence.

The guards, who were wearing bulletproof vests, fired back and the assailants fled in their nearby car.

A chase took place and there was another exchange of fire before police arrested the three men in the Place d'Italie in the 13th district. The woman fled on foot but was caught shortly afterwards.

Son asks that Hess be allowed to die at home

BERLIN (AP) — The son of jailed Nazi deputy fuehrer Rudolf Hess has appealed to the Allied powers to allow his ailing, 92-year-old father to "die in peace at home."

Wolf Ruediger Hess said in an interview published Sunday by the Bild am Sonntag newspaper that "the end could come any day" for his father, who is suffering from pneumonia.

Hess, who was Adolf Hitler's deputy and is the last imprisoned leader of Nazi Germany, was taken a week ago from West Berlin's Spandau prison to the nearby British military hospital in West Berlin.

He was suffering from bronchitis but later developed pneumonia, the younger Hess said.

He said Saturday that his father's condition had improved as a result of treatment with antibiotics. But Bild am Sonntag quoted him as saying, "This hospital stay means that the end could come any day."

Hess was captured in 1941 when he parachuted into Scotland on what he said was a peace mission. He was sentenced to life in prison at the Nuremberg war crimes trials in 1946.

For 21 years he has been the only prisoner in Spandau, a 19th century prison built to hold 600 people.

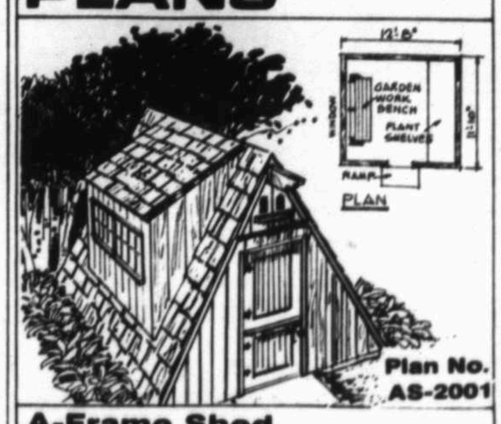

Hess' 40-year-old son made his appeal to the World War II allies that jointly administer Spandau: the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union.

"Let him die in peace at home," he said. "Be humane, grant him that he lives the last days of his life in freedom."

Hess' family has made repeated appeals for his release. West German President Richard von Weizsaecker, Chancellor Helmut Kohl and opposition officials also have pleaded for his release on humanitarian grounds.

The Western Allies have expressed willingness to release Hess on humanitarian grounds. But the Soviet Union has rejected the appeals for clemency, saying it would constitute an amnesty for fascism.
