Gramm staunch in fee opposition

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Sen. Phil Gramm defended his opposition to an oil import fee to a crowd of Permian Basin oil producers Thursday saying a fee would negatively affect more groups than it would help.

The Republican U.S. Senator also said a private and public coalition is needed to attract a $6 billion "super-collider" conducting project to Texas, during his Thursday speech at the Midland Center.

The cost of an oil import fee would far outweigh the benefits and hurt such diverse groups as the plastics industry in Texas and the agricultural industry, Gramm said.

Gramm said he prefers oil producing tax incentives instead of an import fee that could put "hundreds of thousands" of people out of work.

A Department of Energy study to be released in March will provide a "window of opportunity" to formulating an energy policy, he said.

"If we're going to sell the nation an energy policy, we have to sell the people in New York and California that it's in their interests too."

— Sen. Phil Gramm

The study will examine all the costs and benefits of a national energy policy.

"If we're going to sell the nation an energy policy, we have to sell the people in New York and California that it's in their interests too," Gramm said.

After the study is released a bipartisan coalition of congressmen will be formed to consider repealing the Windfalls Profit Tax, deregulating natural gas and providing tax incentives to oil producers, he said.

Gramm said he also hoped to hold public hearings around the state to get input on a national energy policy.

Gramm said a DOE timetable released Wednesday for choosing a site for the supercollider will not hamper Texas chances to locate the project within the state.

DOE said it will select a site by January 1989.

Although a state commission, appointed by former Gov. Mark White to select one site out of nine around the state, has not met yet, Gramm contended that Texas was "far ahead in many areas."

"The timetable will not hurt us. We've been thinking about this thing since it first surfaced. We've been tending to the store; we're in pretty good shape."

Halfway houses, parole changes pushed in House

By JIM WARREN

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — To keep with up with inmate releases, the House Wednesday approved a plan to speed up money for new halfway houses.

Meanwhile, a House committee approved a Senate plan that gives the Board of Pardons and Paroles more flexibility in who they can release on parole.

The legislative action came as the Texas Department of Corrections closed its doors to new inmates for the sixth time this year. State law and a federal court order — as well as the TDC board's own policy — require the prison to stop accepting new prisoners when the TDC population reaches 95 percent of its capacity.

Prison officials said Wednesday that the TDC population reached 95.38 percent, or 152 more inmates than the law allows. The prisons shut down Monday and two days last week, and TDC spokesman David Nunnelee predicted they would close again on Friday.

"We got a whole week's worth of prisoners in two days," Nunnelee said, because counties haven't been able to turn convicts over to TDC for four days.

While the House action does not give the parole board additional money, it does allow the board to accelerate spending on halfway houses to give the state 500 new beds "as soon as possible."

The Senate will work on the halfway house measure today.

Master plan action draws mixed reviews

By RICK BROWN

Assistant City Editor

Preliminary City Council action on the new city master plan drew mixed reviews Wednesday and today from neighborhood leaders who protested the plan's provisions during Tuesday's public hearing.

"We as a group are quite disappointed," Scott Davis, 911 Bedford St., leader of a faction of residents from the A Street area south of Wadley Drive, said Wednesday. "We felt very confident that the council would be more favorable to our suggestions."

The council during a work session following Tuesday's public hearing directed city staff not to alter master plan provisions calling for construction of an A Street interchange at Loop 250.

Davis predicted that traffic on the street would "substantially increase" because the proposed off ramp represents the first exit connecting to downtown for drivers traveling east on the loop.

While two council members — Kelly Fish and Oralia Corrales — spoke against construction of the interchange Tuesday night, they were overruled by the remaining five members.

Children have interesting view of Abe Lincoln

CHICAGO (AP) — Some grade-schoolers from Abraham Lincoln's home state describe him as a good president who freed the slaves and tried his hand at less serious duties — like throwing pies and making pennies.

Second- and third-graders at Newberry Academy in Chicago and second-graders at DuBois School in Springfield were asked about Lincoln as they prepared to stay home from school today in honor of his birthday 178 years ago.

Most had no trouble remembering Lincoln was a president, and some gave him even a bit more credit than he was due.

"He was the very, very first president," said Lisa C. Fischer, 7, of DuBois.

"He made the penny," said classmate Daymon Kiliman, 7. But Newberry third-grader Karrie Radloff, 8, pointed out, "Abraham Lincoln's face is on the penny."

Slavery, war and monetary issues aside, the children sometimes remembered Lincoln for less historic events, even though DuBois' Khara Geders, 7, observed, "Abraham Lincoln was a famous guy."

"One thing that he did was that he got the pig out of the mud," said Matt Maddox, also 7 and of DuBois.

"Abraham Lincoln was the first pie-thrower," said classmate Grant Johnson, 7, who insisted Lincoln also was "the fastest pie-thrower."

Yet, it was clearly the pictures of the 6-foot-4, big-boned and bearded president that 8-year-old Cynthia Alfaro of Newberry recalled. "Abe was tall and strong," she wrote.

Many youngsters wrote of the studious but personable young Lincoln as well as his opposition to slavery.

And 7-year-old Tim DaRosa of DuBois had the right idea but not quite the right spelling. Lincoln, he said, "won the silver war."

Soviets use snowplows to end protest

MOSCOW (AP) — Dozens of plainclothes agents backed up by snowplows today broke up a demonstration on behalf of a jailed Jewish activist and roughed up Western reporters covering the protest.

Seven protesters were detained, including Inna and Boris Begun, the wife and son of jailed activist Josef Begun, on whose behalf the protest was held.

All seven were later released, along with seven other people who demonstrators said were detained on their way to the protest site. At least two others were under house arrest, dissident sources said.

Boris Begun said he and five of the detained protesters were fined about $77 each.

About 20 people have been demonstrating at the Arbat shopping mall in central Moscow each day beginning Monday to demand the right to emigrate and the release of Josef Begun, who was sentenced in October

1983 to seven years' imprisonment under a law forbidding "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda."

On Tuesday, Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov said Begun had declined to apply for a government pardon that freed 140 other imprisoned dissidents. Begun's family said they have no way of confirming the report.

Gerasimov said the cases of 140 other jailed dissidents were being reviewed.

But the demonstrators said the slight liberalization under Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has not extended to Jewish emigration.

"It's a crazy and horrible situation," said Irina Brailovsky, whose husband served four years in prison and exile on a conviction of anti-Soviet slander.

Authorities did not interfere with the protests on Begun's behalf Monday and Tuesday.

Christian politician kidnapped in west Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Gunmen kidnapped a prominent Lebanese Christian politician today in Moslem-controlled west Beirut, police said.

Jean Obeid, an ally of Syria and a former political adviser to President Amin Gemayel, was abducted from his chauffeured limousine at west Beirut's seafont Raouche Boulevard, police said.

Gunmen in a white BMW intercepted Obeid's car, fired at its occupants, beat up the driver and hauled Obeid out, police said.

The assailants forced the 50-year-old leftist politician into their car and sped off, firing into the air to clear a path for their escape, police said.

Obeid's wife and chauffeur then drove to Moslem Prime Minister Rashid Karami's headquarters to report the abduction to Interior Minister Abdallah Rassi, police said.

Obeid has been a frequent visitor to west Beirut and maintains close ties with the principal Moslem militias involved in Lebanon's 11-year-old civil war.

Police declined to speculate on motives behind Obeid's abduction.

Clements' budget adviser lashes out at other draft spending plans

By STEVE LEVINE

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Reacting to stinging criticism levied against Gov. Bill Clements' budget proposal, the governor's chief legislative budget adviser Wednesday lashed out at two other draft spending plans.

Rep. Mike Toomey, R-Houston, acknowledged that Clements must "serve his penance" with the public and Democratic officials for taking nearly 12 months to unveil his "secret plan" to balance the budget. "While we're dissecting, shouldn't there also be at least almost equal focus on the other two budget frameworks that have been laid out?" Toomey, chairman of the governor's transition task force on the budget, asked.

Toomey pointed out that the $22 billion House draft for the 1988-1989 biennium cuts far more deeply into state services than does the $25.9 billion proposal Clements laid out last week. The Senate's $28 billion plan, he said, would force tax increases that Texans cannot afford.

Since the Republican governor explained his proposal Feb. 4, Democratic lawmakers, state agency officials and the press have slammed it for its implied cuts in education and highway funding, for its devastation of health and human services and for its jeopardizing university scholarships and special research programs. Clements has replied that he is most concerned about the "bottom line" and he expects "a lot of changes" in specific spending items before the budget-writing process ends.

"There's been some focus on the Clements budget being harmful to human services, but the House budget provides for 27-percent across-the-board cuts in all human services: crippled children, nursing home care, welfare, Medicaid, child protective services," Toomey said. "The entire Foundation School Program is cut 27-percent, that's a $2.8 billion local property tax increase."

Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, introduced the House plan as one that will fall within the reduced revenues Comptroller Bob Bullock has predicted the state will have.

"Mainly it's a vehicle to get us started," Speaker Gib Lewis said of Rudd's spending bill. "I don't know of anybody who can stand a 27-percent cut, but you have to try and see if they can."

Finance Committee Chairman Grant Jones, D-Temple, introduced the Senate plan, which is $6 billion short of available revenue but which maintains current services and gives a boost to prisons and higher education. Jones said his bill still doesn't meet the state's needs.

"I've spent the last three hearings dealing with the Texas Department of Health, the Texas Department of Human Services," Jones said. "It almost made me cry to look at the verifiable needs that even our proposal would leave unmet. I'm not a bleeding-heart liberal, but it almost made me cry."

To raise $6 billion, Toomey said, the state would have to expand the sales tax beyond such services as lawyers, engineers and architects, as many have proposed. "The big money is in residential utilities and commercial utilities," he said. "It's not fair to lay out a bill and not provide a method of funding for it."

Jones said Bullock has told him the Legislature can balance the budget without turning to those politically volatile taxes. "I have not seen the specific figures, but it's my understanding that we can do it," he said.

Hobby says no schedule set for budget

AUSTIN (AP) — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said Wednesday he and Speaker Gib Lewis have no timetable for getting a proposed state budget bill to Gov. Bill Clements.

"No, we have no schedule," Hobby said when asked if a timetable called for a bill by April 1.

Asked if he hoped to get a spending bill to Clements by mid-session, Hobby replied, "Let's see how it all works out."

Clements said in a legislative address Feb. 4 that he would veto any appropriation bill increasing revenues "above current levels."

Hobby was asked about the shifting of state money from one fund to another to "keep ahead of the bill collector."

"Well, yes, that's been going on for the past two years," Hobby told reporters.

He said it could go on "as long as people find funds to move around. Oh yeah, we've been looking at the bottom of the barrel for a long time. It looks very familiar," Hobby said, laughing. "I know every crack in the bottom of that barrel."

Asked again how long the Legislature could shift funds to put out a fire here and a fire there, Hobby replied.

"We need to address the state's fiscal problems in a comprehensive way and had that been done last summer, we wouldn't be doing these things now."

Otwell backers lose custody of daughter

FORT WORTH (AP) — Two followers of the Rev. W.N. Otwell have temporarily lost custody of their 9-month-old daughter, according to a judge's ruling.

Sandra and John Powers, who live at Otwell's closed home for boys, were told Tuesday by District Judge Scott Moore that their daughter, Sarah, would have to remain in the temporary custody of the Texas Department of Human Services.

"I want Sarah back," Sandra Powers said after the hearing. "I love Sarah. I wouldn't do anything to hurt her."

Officials at the department removed the girl from her parents' custody Feb. 4 at John Peter Smith Hospital, where she was admitted a week earlier with a severe leg fracture.

The family took the infant to the hospital after her mother said she heard a popping sound while playing with the child. But a doctor who examined the baby said in court that the fracture was not consistent with the parents' evaluation.

Police were called to the hospital, and the Department of Human Services later began its own investigation.

Dr. Dennis Lehman, the Powers family's doctor, testified that he had reviewed the hospital records and X-rays and found no evidence of child abuse.

"I think it is improbable but not impossible" for the injury to have occurred the way Sandra Powers described, Lehman said.

About 20 Otwell followers picketed and waited outside the Tarrant County Juvenile Detention Center during the two-hour hearing.

Otwell, who boys' home was closed last fall after he refused to be licensed by the state, said he believes the Department of Human Services mounted its investigation of the Powers family to discredit him and his home.

Under the ruling, the Powerses will be allowed to visit Sarah if they cooperate with caseworkers, said Assistant District Attorney Beverly Fisher.

Prior to the hearing, the infant's maternal grandparents filed court papers requesting that they be named temporary guardians of the child and her 2½-year-old sister.

Under Moore's ruling, the Powerses retain custody of the other daughter, Shannon.

Hightower promotes Texas-grown plants

HARLINGEN (AP) — Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower launched a promotion of Texas-grown ornamental plants Wednesday, promising the effort would sprout "a bountiful economic harvest for years to come."

Hightower said he believes Texas nursery owners can double their share of the market in the state by promoting home-grown ornamental plants.

Texas consumers spend $300 million on ornamentals, but 75 percent of the consumer dollar goes out of state, Hightower said.

Hightower wants to promote Texas-grown ornamentals within the state among consumers and retailers, and in surrounding states.

Texas could add $55 million to its revenues by capturing 10 percent of nursery plant sales in the 11 states from Georgia to Colorado, Hightower said.

Researcher says foreign disease didn't kill lambs

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Authorities at the San Angelo Research and Extension Center have been notified that a foreign disease found primarily in Australia, Japan and Israel is not to blame for mysterious lamb deaths at the center.

The Texas Animal Health quarantined the center Jan. 23 after more than 130 lambs died of some mysterious ailment that was first thought to be Akabane.

"Akabane is not what you folks have," Dr. D.W. Luchsinger, chief of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's foreign Animal Disease Diagnostic Laboratory at Plum Island, N.Y., said Wednesday.

Luchsinger said an Australian doctor analyzing blood and tissue samples from the dead lambs reported that the Akabane virus was not present in any of the samples.

The virus causing the deaths in the newborn lambs has not been diagnosed, and it may be awhile before "you folks have a clinical picture of what you do have," Luchsinger said.

"We are beginning to broaden our diagnostic criteria," he said. "There is no basis to prove it is Akabane, and we are going to have to search other avenues."

Luchsinger said the San Angelo center is collecting more samples for laboratory analysis.

"There is a whole bunch of viruses that have to be isolated and it is a matter of really getting down and looking at all these infectious diseases and sifting out the ones it is not," he said.

Dr. Charles Livingston, resident veterinarian at the San Angelo center, said he was elated by the report from Plum Island.

Officials had feared that if the virus turned out to be Akabane it could be extremely expensive for Texas ranchers because of a possible quarantine.

"We are looking in the 'arthropod borne virus' group now, commonly called 'arbo virus,'" he said. "This is a whole group of viruses, the most widely known is 'blue tongue', and we have to go through them all to match the virus with the serum," Livingston said.

Livingston said the new samples are being sent to Plum Island and to the Veterinary Diagnostic Laboratory at Texas A&M University to broaden the analysis and look into other areas.

The quarantine should be lifted in about two weeks, Livingston said.

Pantex security lapses discussed at hearing

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Oregon congressman quizzed Energy Secretary John Herrington Wednesday about security at federal military installations, citing a recently declassified report detailing security lapses at the Pantex nuclear weapons plant near Amarillo.

Security breaches included sex in guard houses and theft of weapons components, which spurred the Energy Department to close the Pantex facility for five days in 1985, according to transcripts of a secret House energy subcommittee hearing released Tuesday.

The declassified testimony detailed the simulated theft of bomb parts containing plutonium. The phony theft was planned by federal inspectors who were aided by a plant employee and a silencer-equipped pistol that was smuggled into Pantex as a security test.

"I am not convinced that adequate security precautions are being taken at the network of defense installations in this country," said Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., who is a member of the energy and power subcommittee.

"What we have heard at our hearings raises serious questions, including questions about drug use at the installations," Wyden said.

The Pantex plant, about 20 miles east of Amarillo, is a complex of bunkers surrounded by a chain-link fence and patrolled by guards with dogs and automatic weapons.

Security problems at the plant were uncovered during a surprise inspection in October 1985 and prompted a review of the entire security system, according to the testimony and comments from congressional sources who reviewed the declassified inspection report.

At a subcommittee hearing Wednesday, Wyden asked Herrington what the Energy Department was doing about security, citing a section in the DOE budget for 1987 and 1988 entitled "Human Reliability Program," which he said was responsible for drug activity.

"There was nothing being spent on that program for those years," Wyden said. "That certainly doesn't show an aggressive approach to dealing with the program, and given that these are exceptionally sensitive areas, some of the fundamentals of security are being ignored."

Herrington said he was unfamiliar with the specific case, but that the department had tightened security in all nuclear facilities in the past year.

In a 1986 letter to U.S. Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, former national security adviser John Poindexter wrote that such problems at Pantex and other facilities have been corrected.

According to the transcript, Dingell talked about Pantex guards, who were civilians working for a private security company under government contract, having sex in the guard towers.

A far more serious security breach was uncovered when a Pantex employee, cooperating with government inspectors, smuggled a pistol and silencer into the facility during the same 1985 inspection, according to testimony.

The weapon was used several days later "in a successful (simulated) attempt to steal bomb parts containing plutonium," Dingell said.

The employee was able to sneak the gun inside because metal detectors had not yet been installed at the plant entrances, testified Edward Badolato, deputy assistant energy secretary for security affairs.

The Pantex facility also did not have any radiation detectors at plant exits to stop thefts of plutonium.

U.S. FDA official says Mexican diet clinics 'restricted'

DALLAS (AP) — Mexican officials say they reopened diet clinics just south of the border after brief shutdowns because of worries about pills they dispensed.

"Now they are under severe restriction," said Donald Heaton, a U.S. Food and Drug Administration spokesman. "Each one is limited to 10 to 15 patients per week and may only issue up to 60 prescriptions per week for the so-called diet products."

"And when they do issue one, the Mexican health department has to get a copy of it," Heaton said Wednesday after the clinics reopened.

Mexican authorities advised the U.S. Food and Drug Administration Tuesday they were shutting down clinics in Nuevo Laredo and Juarez.

No deaths have been proved to result from use of the diet pills, Heaton said. But the drugs can aggravate high blood pressure, heart disease and mental problems such as schizophrenia, he said.

Anyone carrying the diet pill Redotex will be stopped by the U.S. Customs Service at border checkpoints and the drug confiscated, authorities said.

Priest says he's praying for vandals of center

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest says he is praying for the vandals who caused about $15,000 in damage when they ransacked and torched a religious instruction center.

The incident was at the Little Flower Center, a facility that serves both as a classroom for catechism classes and for Sunday Mass for parishioners unable to reach the main church, located about 1 1/2 miles away.

"I prayed that the people who set fire to the place will find God," said Father Felix Da Prato, pastor of Our Lady of Mount Carmel and St. Theresa Catholic Church.

He said the damaged items included hundreds of catechism books that "were burned or soaked during the fire. This is the first time a fire has been set."

A golden chalice valued at $500 also was stolen during the fourth break-in at the facility in the past month, Da Prato said.

"We're going to have to tighten security," the priest said. "We may have to put burglar bars on the windows so people can't get in."

Couple found shotgunned

CLARKSVILLE (AP) — A Red River County woman and an Oklahoma man were found shotgunned to death Wednesday in the woman's carport in the northern part of the county, authorities said.

Johnny D. Victory, Wright City, Okla., 31, and Sarah Raulston, about 40, of Route 6 in the Hopewell Community were found shot in the head and face shortly after 9 a.m., said chief deputy Wayne Davis.

Davis said the sheriff's office received an anonymous call about 9:05 a.m. that two people had been shot at the residence known as the Barksdale Ranch 10 miles north of Clarksville.

Deputies said three children found inside the house haven't been questioned yet.

Cisneros to help gangs

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Mayor Henry Cisneros has asked a city councilman to find a building that gangs can use to keep them off the streets.

"There is a need for a shelter for young people who have no home and nowhere to go," Cisneros said Tuesday. "There is a need to redirect them off the streets and onto athletic fields."

Cisneros met for 30 minutes Tuesday with Robert A. Chavez, 28, leader of the Reunited Rockers gang, who told the mayor that youths who roam downtown streets do not commit violent crimes, but are being blamed for them.

Cisneros asked city councilman Frank Wing to help find a building, possibly an idle city-owned facility, for the gangs to use.

License examiner injured

WESLACO (AP) — A driver's license examiner was injured when an 80-year-old applicant failed to yield the right-of-way to a wrecker, authorities said Wednesday.

Weslaco police said Gilberto Saenz, 42, of the Department of Public Safety was treated and released from a local hospital following Tuesday's accident.

Sgt. Ruben Suarez said Saenz was a passenger in the car driven by the applicant, who was cited for failure to yield the right of way. He said the wrecker was cited for driving with a suspended license.

Jury decides valuable violin belongs to Tehran rug merchant

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal court jury rejected Iran's claim to a valuable Stradivarius violin, deciding it was purchased legitimately by a wealthy Tehran rug merchant who later fled to Paris.

Deliberating nearly four hours on Wednesday, the eighth anniversary of the fall of the shah of Iran, the jury also ordered Iran to pay $15,000 for interfering with a planned sale of the instrument in 1982.

The Burmester Stradivarius, named after German violin virtuoso Willy Burmester, who owned it at the turn of the century, was expected to fetch $350,000 at auction.

The U.S. District Court jury found that N.K. Behroozian, who lives in secrecy in Paris and did not attend the week-long civil trial, had legitimately purchased the 17th century instrument at a street bazaar in Tehran after the 1979 revolution.

Behroozian said in deposition testimony read to jurors that he bought the violin on the advice of a religious adviser who wanted to prevent the instrument from being burned by Islamic fanatics, who were enforcing a countrywide ban on musical instruments.

Behroozian said he purchased the instrument at a street bazaar held by a foundation set up to sell the possessions of the deposed shah.

"At the time I did not know I had just purchased a Stradivarius violin," Behroozian said.

Behroozian said he fled Iran, crossing the border into Turkey on horseback, after his house and business were seized in 1981. He took only a few possessions and the violin.

After arriving in Paris, Behroozian arranged through a New York agent, Jerry Abitbol, to sell the violin at a 1982 auction of instruments conducted by Sotheby Parke Bernet.

But Iran obtained a court order stopping the violin's sale until the ownership dispute could be resolved. The instrument, made in 1698, has remained in a Sotheby vault in New York since then.

Abitbol, a defendant in the lawsuit, filed the counterclaim that Iran had interfered with a lawful commercial sale. A dealer of paintings and musical instruments, Abitbol testified he stood to make $15,000 from the deal.

"The truth is we never stole anything," Abitbol said after the verdict. But he said he was not sure if he would ever collect the $15,000 Iran was ordered to pay to satisfy his counterclaim.

The Iranian government claimed a receipt bearing the signature of former Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh indicated he had taken possession of the instrument.

But the defense argued the signature of Ghotbzadeh, who was executed in 1982 for plotting the overthrow of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, was forged by a former aide who was simply trying to ingratiate himself with Iran's Islamic rulers.

Christian Bourguet, a Paris lawyer who was a go-between in U.S. efforts to negotiate the release of the American hostages seized in 1979, disputed Iran's claim about the signature. Bourguet, who helped Behroozian arrange the auction, testified the signature was not that of Ghotbzadeh, whom he called "the best friend I ever had."

A handwriting expert said the signature was Ghotbzadeh's, but on cross-examination admitted he was not certain of his conclusion.

Former Iran President Abol Hasan Bani-Sadr, who helped bring Khomeini to power but was expelled three years later, was called to testify about his belief the signature was forged.

But defense lawyer Skip Short was unable to get permission from the French government to allow Bani-Sadr, who lives in exile in Paris, to travel to Washington for the trial.

Group criticizes 'Star Wars,' finds little proof of Soviet cheating

By BARRY SCHWEID

WASHINGTON (AP) — A report by a Stanford University group criticizes the Reagan administration's "Star Wars" policy and finds little evidence of cheating by the Soviet Union on arms control treaties.

The report, being released today, said U.S. statements about early deployment of a space-based defense against Soviet missiles and a "permissive interpretation" of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty threaten to undercut the accord.

The statements could prompt the Soviets to violate the agreement and spoil efforts to impose new limitations on superpower offensive nuclear arms, said the report, prepared by a group at Stanford's Center for International Security and Arms Control.

On Wednesday, Secretary of State George P. Shultz, appearing before a House Appropriations subcommittee, counseled restraint in deciding whether to deploy the first phase of a U.S. space-based defense against Soviet missiles.

"You don't want to start until you have a clear and confident idea where you are going," Shultz said.

His testimony reflected a cautious stance in the ongoing debate over how fast to proceed with a missile defense.

"The program is an essential one for our country on its merits," Shultz said. "We must try to learn, if we can, how to defend ourselves against ballistic missiles. We know very well the Soviets are trying to do it."

He urged Congress not to enact legislation to block funds for testing or deploying various components of an anti-ballistic missile program.

"I think that would be very harmful to us," Shultz said. "It is a way of tying our hands while our adversaries' hands are not tied at all."

However, he stressed the program must meet several tests before any of the exotic technology is deployed in space. "You want to find a system that inherently is a defense that cannot be overwhelmed just by adding more offense," Shultz said.

The Stanford group's report was critical of U.S. arms control policy, saying the Reagan administration had helped create the perception that the Soviets were violating a number of agreements with the United States.

Describing the perception as false, the report also accused the administration of exaggerating the military significance of the alleged violations.

"The Soviet Union may sometimes stretch the terms of agreements, as does the U.S. on occasion, but rarely directly violates an arms control agreement," the report said.

Only one clear Soviet violation was cited in the report. That is a large early warning radar in Siberia that, the report said, is sited in a way that conflicts with the 1972 ABM treaty.

By the same token, the report said the propriety of the U.S. program to replace or construct new early warning radars in Greenland and Britain was questionable under the same agreement.

The treaty, which the Senate ratified, imposed limitations on U.S. and Soviet defenses against missiles. The idea behind it was that a poor defense would discourage nuclear attack because the retaliatory blow could be devastating.

Critics of the Strategic Defense Initiative, as Star Wars is known officially, are concerned the program could imperil the treaty.

"There is considerable anxiety within the U.S. arms control community about a variety of future tests of SDI components planned for the late 1980s and early 1990s," the report said.

"In general, their concern is that the continued active pursuit of the SDI will inevitably lead the United States into a position where it will be forced either to amend, violate or withdraw from the ABM treaty."

Shultz said the State Department had begun a review of the negotiating record of the treaty. This follows an earlier study that concluded the research program was consistent with the accord.

A decision to step up consultations — with U.S. allies as well as with Congress — was made Tuesday as Reagan met with Shultz and other senior advisers, administration sources said.

The president may send Edward Rowley, his senior arms control adviser, and Paul H. Nitze, who assists Shultz, to Europe to brief Western leaders on the developing technology, two U.S. officials said.

That would indicate that major decisions on whether to deploy the first phase of an anti-missile defense may be pending.

However, Shultz told the Senate Armed Services Committee last week that Reagan was unlikely to be faced with a decision this year on whether to deploy the first phase of a missile defense.

He also sought to play down reported differences with Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, who is understood to be more eager to move ahead with the program.

Soviet television offered on U.S. cable channel

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some Americans will get a glimpse of daily Soviet television — news programs, cartoons, rock videos, game shows and more — during a week-long experiment by a U.S. cable channel that begins Sunday.

The Discovery Channel, in an effort "to present an accurate view of state-controlled Soviet TV," will provide 66 hours of Russian television to its 14 million U.S. subscribers, said TDC Chairman John Hendricks.

"The Discovery Channel will carry for one week a broad array of Soviet news, prime-time and morning programming, but we will carry no programming that is not typical of regular Soviet television fare — no 'made-for-America' specials," Hendricks told reporters Wednesday.

The Landover, Md.-based channel, launched in June 1985, provides programs about nature, history, science and technology, travel and world cultures. Channel officials said cable operators that do not carry TDC can arrange to take the service for the eight days of the experiment.

All the Russian programs except the news shows will be viewed in the United States at the same time they are broadcast in the Soviet Union, he said. The hour-long Soviet evening news programs will be tape delayed so they may be shown to American viewers after the U.S. evening news programs.

"We will be giving Americans the opportunity to watch U.S. national news and then turn to Soviet national news and make their own comparisons," TDC President Ruth Otte said.

English subtitles will provide word-for-word translations of the news programs. For other programs, English subtitles will summarize and explain what is happening in a general sense.

The Russian programming will run the same week as ABC's mini-series "Amerika."

Electing judges

Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice John Hill, who earned his political "wings" while serving as the state's Attorney General before losing a gubernatorial bid to Bill Clements, is used to handling hot potatoes. He dug up another one the other day when he raised the question of appointing judges as an alternative to continuing to select them through the voting process.

Hill's comments in the State of the Judiciary address on Monday elicited sharp comments from some of the justices on the high court who feel he has gone astray. One of the justices, Franklin Spears, commented: "I don't know why he's out of step with us."

One reason could be that the debate over electing judges or appointing them isn't one known only to Chief Justice Hill. In fact, the debate has been around about as long as this state has had judges. Hill simply chose to be the one to bring the issue to the forefront of the public's attention, and he should be recognized for having the professional integrity to do so; he simply said publicly what a lot of those in the judiciary have been saying privately for years.

Hill obviously supports an appointive system for judges, but the fact that he called attention to a potential need actually is more important than his stance on the question.

Now that the issue is out in the open, it needs to be thoroughly discussed, debated and, hopefully, resolved. The situation is this: A number of judges, lawyers and others have been saying for quite some time that the political election of judges really is not the best system either in the interest of getting the best qualified people on the bench or of providing the public the best possible justice in the courts.

Judges really are not expected to be either "liberal" or "conservative" or any of the other labels commonly attached to the judiciary. Rather, when a person goes to court he expects the man or woman on the bench to listen to the facts in the case and to rule according to the applicable law in question. That's all, no more and no less.

By asking the judges to take part in a political contest, society is asking them to toss their robes aside, declare a party affiliation, and get involved in all the backbiting and punch-throwing normally associated with political races. Of course, as soon as the contest is over the voters assume the judges will don their robes, pick up their gavels and resume their judicial demeanor as though nothing happened.

Obviously, that argument has a degree of validity, although we've found that down through the years those in the judicial races have held themselves above the less-attractive styles of campaigning.

On the other hand, there's a good argument to be made for keeping judges elected. That system ensures that the voters truly get to be the selectors of the ones who sit in judgement of them on legal matters, and that they can remove them from office in the event of need. That ability is a valued and cherished part of our political heritage and has helped to keep the Texas court system one of the best.

The question at play in the debate over elective or appointive judges is not to take away the people's right to select their judicial officials but, rather, how to make the system better. There have been a number of possibilities offered over the years such as continuing to elect judges, but doing so in off-year elections; allowing judges to run at-large rather than requiring them to declare party affiliation; using commissions comprised of well-known and highly-respected attorneys from across the state to select potential candidates, who would be subject to approval by the voters; and other systems. But, so far, no proposal has been pursued diligently enough to bring change.

There's ample indication that a change may be needed, since a number of those involved in the judiciary continue to assert that the system isn't all it should be. It's likely a proposal will be offered at some point to alter the current system.

The primary concern at this point should be to keep the public involved and represented, and to fashion a way to achieve the desired result which is making the system better, not simply making a change.

Another View:

Intruders beware

Americans are asserting the right of self-defense, which was attacked on legal and moral grounds during the 1960s and 1970s.

Seven in 10 respondents to a new public opinion poll said people should have the right to shoot an intruder even if they are not sure the intruder is armed.

A few years ago, at the height of the criminals' rights craze, a Massachusetts judge asserted that a person had no right to use force to defend his home against an intruder but was obligated, if endangered, to flee outside.

Subsequently Massachusetts and other states lacking such laws enacted legislation affirming the right of home defense. Indiana law recognizes the right of self-defense.

According to a new Media General-Associated Press nationwide telephone poll of 1,251 adult Americans, a majority of respondents, whether they own guns or not, believe people should have the right to shoot intruders.

The opinion is logical. To deny people that right would give intruders the right to invade homes with little or no risk. At the same time it would place the victims of such invasions in legal jeopardy if they used guns to protect their families or themselves.

Asked if they felt their homes were secure from crime, 70 percent of the gun owners said yes and 75 percent of those who do not have guns said yes.

Three in 10 respondents keep guns in their homes for protection, according to the poll. Forty-one percent of the gun-owners live in rural areas and about 25 percent of them live in suburbs and cities.

The poll results could bring an uproar from advocates of the principle that home intruders should be considered innocent and therefore protected by law until they actually commit a crime, such as assault, robbery, rape or murder or a combination of these crimes.

If the poll accurately reflects public opinion, most Americans do not subscribe to such nonsense but believe the risks involved in home-invasion should fall, as far as law and custom are concerned, full on the intruders, which of course they should.

High-flying solons shun free fares

WASHINGTON — If you've been wondering why Congress has such a hard time cutting costs, consider this: Twice within the past year, members of Congress used a $7,625-an-hour Air Force jet to fly to a privately sponsored conference.

Jack Anderson

even though they had been told that the sponsoring organization would be happy to pay their commercial air fares.

Out of 22 members who attended a conference on U.S.-Soviet relations in Montego Bay, Jamaica, last month, 17 spurned the offer of a free commercial flight, choosing instead to fly Air Force at a cost to the taxpayers of about $55,000. Last April, 12 out of 20 congressional participants in a similar confabulation in Bermuda flew Air Force at a cost of about $28,000.

Both conferences were part of a program arranged by the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, which plans more of the same for the same members of Congress. Next August's site is Switzerland.

The conferences were funded by a grant from the Carnegie Corporation, which included commercial air fares in the travel expenses provided to each guest.

Use of the Air Force plane was arranged by House Majority Leader Tom Foley, D-Wash., and Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind. "I thought it was appropriate," Foley told our reporter Lisa Sylvester.

When asked about the inclusion of air fares in the Carnegie grant, Foley said he was "innocent of any knowledge of the budget." He contended that the conference was worthy of an official aircraft, and added this revealing observation: "I do not regard the purpose of this trip to be of less value than other trips I have taken."

Hamilton echoed his leader's declaration of principle, declaring: "We requested (the plane) for what we thought to be a very worthy purpose. The Aspen Institute designed this program to increase our understanding of the single most important foreign policy issue."

A spokeswoman for Aspen, which set up the conference series on U.S.-Soviet relations, acknowledged that the organization could be described as a "think tank," but complained that the phrase "makes it sound inaccessible." Her preferred definition of the institute was "an organization that brings leaders of business and other sectors of society together to pause from the daily decision-making in order to reflect on underlying values of our culture."

Senators aboard the Air Force plane were Thad Cochran, R-Miss.; Dan Evans, R-Wash.; Alan Simpson, R-Wyo.; Alan Cranston, D-Calif.; Terry Sanford, D-N.C.; and William Cohen, R-Maine.

Foley's innocence of the junket's budget was not Aspen's fault, according to former Sen. Dick Clark, D-Iowa, who is now a senior fellow at the institute and oversees the U.S.-Soviet Relations program. He said the letter of invitation explicitly stated: "All expenses for your trip will be paid by the Aspen Institute."

"We didn't know there would be an Air Force plane when we made the arrangements," said Clark, who added that Aspen had no intention of reimbursing the Air Force for the cost of the flights.

Foley questioned the figure of $7,625 an hour for the Air Force C-137, a comfortable, military version of the Boeing 707. He reckoned that the only real cost would be for fuel. But an Air Force spokesman insisted that other maintenance and other items be included, and said: "The final $7,625-per-hour figure is what it costs to fly that aircraft from Point A to Point B."

Footnote: Five legislators who attended the conference got to Jamaica by other means, but not one of them cited a concern for the public's dollar as the reason. They included Sens. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and Carl Levin, D-Mich., and Reps. Doug Bereuter, R-Nebr.; Dick Cheney, R-Wyo.; and Lynn Martin, R-Ill. Cheney and Martin made only the return flight on the military craft.

GEORGE F. WILL

SDI debate hinges on matter of necessity

WASHINGTON — Granted, coffee cakes are not trampled or coffee cups overturned in the excitement generated by George Shultz when he graces Sunday morning television-interview programs. However, last Sunday, speaking in his style of a 45 rpm record played at 33 1/3 rpm, he announced a conclusion that was reasonable, predictable and puzzling to the New York Times.

George F. Will

The Times headline focused on a trivial point congenial to its editorial position against the Strategic Defense Initiative: "Shultz Rules Out 'Star Wars' Move Within Two Years." The "move" refers to a decision to deploy. However, the important issue concerns testing, and the Washington Post headlined the news: "Shultz Accepts Broad View of ABM Pact."

The controversy concerns the intersection of legal and scientific judgments. It came to a boil when Sen. Sam Nunn (D-Ga.) wrote to President Reagan prophesying a "constitutional crisis" if Reagan does not consult with Congress before adopting a broad interpretation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

A narrow interpretation would essentially impede realistic tests of all but ground-based systems of the sort the Soviet Union already has. The broad interpretation would permit tests appropriate to the range of options for strategic defense options.

On Sunday, Shultz said S.D.I. can be pursued "much more effectively — perhaps only" with a pattern of tests permitted only by the broad interpretation. Shultz said, "You can do it much more effectively if you don't have to test things all around the barn and then make gross inferences from it."

What that means is that even if the United States adhered to the narrow interpretation, the United States would not stop testing. Rather, it would continue by using sharp practices that conform only to the strict letter of the narrow interpretation.

That is, the United States would conduct tests different, perhaps, in some measurement from the tests appropriate for straightforward exploration of strategic defense components, and then would extrapolate conclusions relevant to such components. However, Shultz said that even with such scientific trickiness, there are things that are "very desirable to test" that "you probably couldn't test adequately under the narrow definition" of the ABM limits.

That scientific conclusion has a large political consequence: Tests compatible with the narrow interpretation can not be conclusive enough to generate confidence in a strategic defense system, so Congress would not sustain adequate funding for strategic defense.

That is why the Shultz conclusion was predictable. Strategic defense is the President's core concern. If the administration had adhered to the narrow interpretation, it would have enacted, by indirection, the lead item on the Soviet agenda: unilateral U.S. abandonment of strategic defense.

At first, congressional critics of S.D.I. attacked the broad interpretation as inconsistent with the record of the 1971-1972 negotiations. However, as that record has been made available, congressional critics have shifted their ground. Now they argue that in 1972 the Senate thought it was subscribing to the narrow interpretation.

Three conclusions seem warranted. First, the negotiation record, although not unambiguous (what truly is?), gives ample support for the broad interpretation. Second, the Senate's 1972 ratification had next to nothing to do with the interpretation at issue. (I was working on the Senate staff during that debate and am sure that not six senators had an opinion on the testing of new systems.) Third, the question of what member of what negotiating team said what to which counterpart 15 years ago, in a radically different technological environment, is interesting but not decisive. It can not reasonably be the controlling consideration about what limits, if any, should be put on tests to answer scientific questions that could lead to substantially enhanced deterrence.

Note that word "deterrence." It is the key to understanding why Sen. Nunn may be more effective than President Reagan as an advocate of strategic defense.

In announcing the Strategic Defense Initiative in 1983, Reagan characteristically went too far. He said his goal is an impermeable shield to make nuclear weapons obsolete by nullifying delivery vehicles. This, he said, would free the world from the immorality of deterrence — the policy of basing safety on a credible, survivable capacity to retaliate against an enemy attack by destroying the enemy's society.

Nunn argues that such a shield may not be technologically feasible or economically practicable, but that a strategic defense program might nevertheless substantially enhance deterrence. It might multiply the uncertainties of a Soviet regime contemplating a first strike. That is, strategic defenses could confront Soviet war planners with an unacceptable level of uncertainty about how much of their first strike, designed to disarm America, could get through.

Shultz and Nunn seem agreed that the argument is not whether to proceed, but how to deal with domestic and diplomatic niceties while proceeding with tests of the sort of programs on which the Soviet Union has already spent $150 billion.

French toast isn't all breakfast club offers

When I make a mistake, I make a doozy," Thus spoke Sen. Lloyd Bentsen last week. The mistake the Texas senator was talking about was involiting lobbyists to have breakfast with him once a month for $10,000 — toast and marmalade included. The donor would not only get to eat with the senator but he would be asked advice on trade, taxation and anything else the lobbyist wished to bring up. It sounded like one whale of a deal. But when it leaked out what Bentsen was charging for breakfast, the senator was forced to close down his diner.

I don't want anyone to get the impression that Sen. Bentsen is the only one selling access to the power brokers who prowl the Hill. The opportunity of getting close to your senator for a price has become Washington's biggest business.

I was having breakfast with Sen. Pogue at the Madison Hotel the other morning. Since Pogue is a junior senator it only cost me $6,000.

The senator was a gracious host. "Do you want some more corned beef hash?" he asked.

"No, this is fine," I assured him. "You can have all the grits you want," he told me. "Say what they will, Pogue never stinks on his Meals for Wheels Program. Would you like to know how I'll vote on the pork barrel bill?"

"Am I permitted?"

"Your breakfast entitles you to three questions or three English muffins, whichever comes first."

"Can I ask what you intend to do with all the money you're raising from lobbyists?"

"Lobbyists need love, too. But just because I listen to their stories doesn't mean I'm obligated to vote in their favor, though I must say, most of them make excellent arguments for their side. Have a waffle."

"I'm stuffed."

"Do columnists have any legislative problems I can help with?"

"I can't speak for George Will, but I don't have any. There is talk the Japanese and South Koreans are thinking of dumping a lot of cheap foreign columns on the United States. But I'm not worried. When it comes to cheap columns we American columnists can hold our own."

Two men passed by the table and one said, "Hello, Senator. How goes it?"

Pogue went red and mumbled, "I don't believe it. Liverheels refused to give to my political action committee and he now has the nerve to walk by and say hello to me."

"If he doesn't contribute he has no right to pretend he knows you."

"Of course, he doesn't. If he can say hello to me for free, why should other lobbyists pay for the privilege?"

"This is what I think. The guy with him is a client, and Liverheels is trying to impress him by saying 'hi.' It makes me mad when he gets a free hello."

Pogue said, "Don't worry about it. Just because someone says hello to me doesn't mean he owns me. Here, put this maple syrup on your French toast and you'll know why I run the best political breakfast club in town."

"You really care about your constituents' appetites, don't you?"

Pogue said, "I call them as I see them. But if you say I'm wrong and you want to add a few bucks to my election kitty, I'll be glad to look at it again on instant replay."

Prosecutor for 'Twilight Zone' bursts into tears

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The prosecutor in the 5½-month-old manslaughter trial of five "Twilight Zone" production crew members burst into tears after resting her case, but a defense attorney called her behavior "good theater."

Deputy District Attorney Lea Purwin D'Agostino ended her case Wednesday, a day after the jury visited the Indian Dunes site of the 1982 helicopter crash that killed actor Vic Morrow and two children during filming of "Twilight Zone: The Movie."

"I think my feelings really crystallized yesterday at Indian Dunes," Mrs. D'Agostino told reporters outside court, shortly after she calmly addressed the jury. "It was a very sobering day for me."

She bit her lip and her eyes filled with tears.

"I was really very struck by what it must have been like," she said, then began crying and rushed away. Defense lawyers ridiculed her behavior.

"It's a fraud," said Harland Braun. "This is part of Hollywood and she sees this as part of her aborted starlet career. It's all an act. It's good theater."

Lawyer Arnold Klein told reporters: "It was staged for your benefit."

Director John Landis, associate producer George Folsey Jr., production manager Dan Allingham, special effects supervisor Paul Stewart and helicopter pilot Dorcay Wingo are charged with involuntary manslaughter in the deaths.

Landis, Stewart and Wingo could face up to six years in prison if convicted, while Allingham and Folsey face up to five years upon conviction.

The prosecution testimony came from 71 witnesses in a case that has put Hollywood safety standards on trial along with the defendants.

"There's no doubt in my mind we've proved beyond a reasonable doubt these defendants acted recklessly," Mrs. D'Agostino said.

Morrow and the child actors, 6-year-old Renee Chen and 7-year-old Myca Le, were killed when the helicopter, flying through special effects explosions in a Vietnam War scene, crashed on them.

"She still hasn't proved what caused the accident," said defense lawyer Braun. "She hasn't shown anyone acted recklessly."

The accident was filmed from six different camera angles, and the film is key evidence in the trial.

Mrs. D'Agostino, who showed jurors the footage early in her case, asked for a rerun to refresh their memories.

Superior Court Judge Roger Boren agreed, saying the jury would visit the movie studio today to watch the crash film.

However, Boren refused a request by Braun to show jurors the completed segment in the movie, which was released in theaters. Boren said the defense could hold such a screening during their presentation.

Also Wednesday, defense attorneys filed motions asking that the judge immediately acquit their clients. Arguments on the motions were scheduled for Tuesday.

If the motions are denied, the defense could begin its case the next day. Defense attorneys rebuffed questions about their case, saying they were not certain they would call witnesses.

"You don't make the decision until it's time to make it," said James Sanders, Landis' lawyer.

He and other lawyers said they had proved much of the case during cross-examination of prosecution witnesses.

The defense has blamed the accident on a special effects technician who they say detonated explosives at the wrong time, knocking the helicopter out of the air. They also say an unforeseen chemical reaction involving heat on the helicopter rotor contributed to the crash.

Klein, who represents Stewart, the special effects supervisor, argued that his client was exonerated during Mrs. D'Agostino's case.

"She has proved every element of Paul Stewart's defense," Klein told reporters. "If Paul Stewart could send her a thank-you note he would."

EDITOR'S NOTE — This day-by-day account of 1787, the year that the U.S. Constitution was written, blends the significant with the small, personal details that bring history to life. The authors spent three years in research and writing, drawing on letters and personal diaries as well as the better-known historical documents. The writers are David D.C. Dutcher, David A. Kimball, Robert K. Sutton and Anna Cox Toogood, all of the Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia, where the Constitution was created 200 years ago.

PHILADELPHIA TODAY
The Committee of the Carpenters' Company today voted to pay the members half the monies owed them for repairs to their hall.

CONFEDERATION TODAY
William Samuel Johnson reported New York's weather today was fine. Congress assembled. A quorum was present for the first time since Feb. 5. James Madison of Virginia produced his credentials and was seated.

The Board of Treasury reported that due to "heavy arrearsages," it would not be possible "to make provision for Payments on the Foreign Debt which became due in the present year."

Henry Knox, secretary of war, reported on Shays' Rebellion.

"I have the honor and great satisfaction to inform your Excellency and Congress that the rebellion in Massachusetts is in a fair train of being speedily and effectually suppressed."

DELEGATES TODAY

George Washington's weather showed a sunny morning with overcast skies in the afternoon. The general inspected four plantations. Plowing was under way at two for planting turnips and potatoes. Three fields were still too wet to plow.

James Madison was seated in Congress today after an absence of over three years. The slender quorum was "an obstacle to all the important business," he reported. It was likely that he would play an active role in the coming months.

Madison's first action was to join with fellow Virginia delegate William Grayson in writing a weekly briefing letter to Gov. Edmund Randolph. They informed him, among other things, that Gen. Benjamin Lincoln was assuring Congress that Shays' Rebellion was extinguished.

LOOKING BACK
Why Shays' Rebellion?

Two hundred years ago today, the Shays' Rebellion was crushed. Debt-ridden Massachusetts farmers, many of whom were Revolutionary War veterans, faced with foreclosures, had met in Worcester on Aug. 15, 1786, to protest their legislature's lack of action. On Aug. 31 and Sept. 5, mob action disrupted court sessions at Northampton and Worcester. Shortly after, Gov. James Bowdoin ordered the militia to protect a court session in Springfield.

A mob of some 500 led by Daniel Shays, a former captain, forced the court to adjourn.

Secretary of War Henry Knox, alarmed because of the federal arsenal at Springfield, sent in federal forces. The insurgents continued to attract supporters throughout November and December.

On Jan. 26, 1787, some 1,200 rebels approached the Springfield arsenal. The Massachusetts militia opened fire with artillery. The Shays forces retreated, leaving four dead. On Feb. 4, Gen. Lincoln's forces overtook Shays' group at Petersham. N.H. Lincoln's forces captured 150 and dispersed the rest. Shays fled to Vermont.

In direct reaction to Shays' Rebellion, the Massachusetts Legislature decided against levying a direct tax and exempted household goods and tools of trade from debt collectors. Daniel Shays was pardoned in 1788.

The realization of the national government's impotence in the Shays crisis was a factor that influenced many delegates to seek a strengthened central government under the new Constitution.

NATION in brief

Poor to get free access to high blood pressure pills

WASHINGTON (AP) — G.D. Searle & Co. is giving $10 million worth of high blood pressure medicine to doctors for free distribution to poor patients, the company announced.

Rep. Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., House health subcommittee chairman, challenged other drug companies Wednesday to offer similar programs. He said half the people in America living below the poverty line are not covered by Medicaid, the government health program for the poor.

Company officials insisted the plan was not conceived as a marketing gimmick to promote its newly approved drug Calan, but acknowledged that all commercial pharmaceutical companies want to see their products do well.

Pesticide field tests OK'd

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency gave a California company permits for field tests of genetically engineered pesticide.

The company, Advanced Genetic Sciences of Oakland, plans to test two strains of bacteria designed to protect plants from frost. It still needs state and local permission for the tests which could be conducted in Contra Costa or San Benito counties, Calif.

Jeremy Rifkin, an anti-genetic engineering activist who frequently files lawsuits to stop such testing, said Wednesday he plans a lawsuit in state court against the company's plans. A similar suit by Rifkin has tied up plans for a field test of the same microbes by a University of California researcher.

States eyed for MX bases

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force is looking at eight states for possible basing of giant MX missiles on rail cars, in addition to Wyoming which was selected earlier.

Environmental and operational reviews of 10 base sites will begin in January 1988, the Pentagon announced Wednesday. The plans were disclosed although Congress has not yet approved President Reagan's plan to buy 50 more MX missiles and place them on rail cars.

The 10 bases selected for consideration are Blytheville Air Force Base, Ark.; Little Rock AFB, Ark.; Whiteman AFB, Mo.; Barksdale AFB, La.; Dyess AFB, Texas; Fairchild AFB, Wash.; Grand Forks AFB, N.D.; Minot AFB, N.D.; Malmstrom AFB, Mont.; and Wurtsmith AFB, Mich. The Pentagon had previously picked F.E. Warren AFB in Wyoming as the first site for the missiles.

Radar planes grounded

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy is grounding or restricting operations of its E-2C Hawkeye radar planes after finding fatigue cracks in the wings.

The service said Wednesday that 80 of the 91 "eye-in-the-sky" planes available will have to have their wings strengthened.

All of the Hawkeyes assigned to Navy carriers on deployment are operating normally, the service stressed. But seven of the planes have been grounded and another 10 barred from operating off carriers until they can be modified.

Police want share of goods

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Drug Enforcement Administration has confiscated $378 million worth of cars, boats, planes, real estate and other items and another $146 million in cash, and local police agencies want their share.

Under an asset forfeiture program launched more than a year ago to encourage aggressive pursuit of drug dealers, the agency is processing 9,500 claims from police departments that participated in drug raids with federal agents.

"More work is coming through the front door than we can get back out the back door," said William Snider, head of the DEA's asset forfeiture unit. He acknowledged Wednesday that the unit is running four to six months behind in processing claims. Some of the assets will be returned or go to banks to cover liens on the property.

Protesters in POW-MIA issue called 'crazies,' harmful to U.S. efforts

WASHINGTON (AP) — A White House official says some of the protesters claiming the government is dragging its feet on the POW-MIA issue are "crazies" who are harming U.S. efforts to learn more about missing servicemen in Southeast Asia.

Richard Childress of the National Security Council said Wednesday that protests directed at the administration and the Laotian government have brought complaints from the Laotians.

Childress, who directs Asian affairs, including talks on the POW-MIA issue, for the NSC, said U.S. officials agree the protests are posing difficulties.

"They (the Laotians) told us this kind of activity can inhibit cooperation," Childress said. "It's not helpful to the process. And we agree with them."

Childress also said the government has received word from the Vietnam government that it is interested in continuing technical talks with the United States on the MIA issue, despite a two-month interruption.

He said Vietnamese leadership changes during an internal party congress have not changed its willingness to talk on the issue.

About two dozen people, many of them children of U.S. servicemen shot down over Laos or captured as ground soldiers there during the Vietnam War, attempted to deliver more than 1,500 packages of food, medicine and other items last month to the Laotian Embassy in Washington.

They were blocked by police after depositing about 100 packages, which were addressed to men missing in action in that country and included letters from their families.

The activists contend the Reagan administration has not done enough to press the governments of Vietnam and Laos for information about the missing men or to release any who may still be held alive.

Childress told reporters after an American Legion speech Wednesday that Laotian officials complained about the activities of the POW-MIA protesters to U.S. officials both in Washington and in Laos. He said their message was "that this kind of activity can threaten POW-MIA cooperation."

The protests have been led by Vietnam veterans, family members and other activists operating through several organizations. Childress, in talking to reporters, referred to the embassy protesters as "Ted Sampley and his North Carolina crazies."

Sampley, is a Kinston, N.C., contractor and former Army Green Beret in Vietnam who was among the leaders of the embassy protest.

Sampley, contacted by telephone, said the U.S. government has not made an adequate effort to secure information from the Southeast Asia governments. He charged that Childress, as a member of the NSC, has "tried to disrupt our activities."

County forecasts

Midland, Ector, Glasscock, Upton, Reagan, Crane, Gaines, Andrews, Dawson, Borden, Martin and Howard counties: Tonight isolated thunderstorms. Rain chance less than 20 percent. Low up to 40s. South wind 5 to 10 mph. Friday partly cloudy with high lower 70s. South wind 5 to 15 mph.

Thunderstorms are possible

A slight possibility of isolated thunderstorms and rain are in the National Weather Service forecast for tonight. Otherwise, the weather outlook for the Permian Basin is pleasant. The high on Friday is expected to reach into the lower 70s. Skies will be partly cloudy through Friday. The low should be in the upper 40s tonight. Winds will be out of the south at five to 10 mph tonight, increasing to five to 15 mph on Friday.

Wednesday's high of 78 was seven degrees below the record high set for that date in 1962. Today's low of 42 was 28 degrees warmer than the record low set in 1936.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms are forecast tonight and Friday over a vast area of Texas, bringing to an end days of dry, pleasant weather across the state.

But the unseasonably warm temperatures will continue with highs expected to be mostly in the 60s and 70s Friday.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 40s, ranging from the upper 30s in the Panhandle to the 50s in extreme southern portions.

Patchy dense fog was reported at dawn today along middle and upper sections of the Texas coast. Visibility was reduced to about one-fourth of a mile at Port Arthur and Victoria at 5 a.m.

Scattered showers and few thunderstorms were reported early today in central portions of the Texas Panhandle.

There is a chance of isolated showers and thunderstorms over most of West Texas tonight and over the Concho Valley and Big Bend area Friday. There may also be some showers over western and southern portions of North Texas and in northwest sections of South Texas Friday.

NATION

Bone-chilling cold gripped sections of New England, and much of the nation was under fair skies today, after Denver had a winter thunderstorm for only the third time this century.

Showers ranged across northern Michigan and rain was scattered over central Colorado.

Low temperatures and strong winds caused severe wind-chills in New England. The wind-chill at Limestone, Maine, was around 60 below zero, the National Weather Service said.

Gale-force wind warnings were posted for the northern two-thirds of the Pacific Coast, the northern New England coast and lakes Superior and Huron.

Clerk says some midwives fraudulently report births

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

A problem facing midwifery in some Southwestern states such as Texas, is the number of fraudulently reported U.S. births of Mexican babies, according to Midland County Clerk Roselle Cherry.

She said that some lay midwives have been known to report to the county clerk's office that a baby was born in the United States when it actually was born in Mexico.

Ms. Cherry explained that a baby born within the U.S. border to Mexican citizens is a U.S. citizen. This then qualifies the family to receive state and federal financial aid, such as food stamps.

In 1985, 14 people registered to become midwives in Midland County. In 1986 there were nine and so far, in 1987 there have been six registrations, Ms. Cherry said.

"There's some fraud involved in this thing. A U.S. birth certificate gets them aid," she said.

"Someone comes over from Mexico and she (the midwife) claims she delivered it in Midland," the county clerk explained.

Ms. Cherry added, however, this incidence of fraud here has been less than 50 cases to her knowledge, though she said she didn't have exact figures.

A lay midwife who delivers a baby in a place other than a hospital is responsible for reporting the birth to the county, Ms. Cherry said.

Ann Bradford, Texas Department of Human Services operations manager, said her office — which administers financial aid such as food stamps — asks for a birth certificate for proof of birth in America from those requesting aid.

Also eligible for aid are legally admitted aliens, she added.

"If they don't have the proof of either, the don't get aid. They're not considered legal," Ms. Bradford.

Furthermore, Ms. Bradford said she didn't see her office having a large problem with people attempting to get aid fraudulently.

"Our staff has had training in how to recognize fraudulent documents and we require either a hospital birth certificate or one from the city-county health department."

By JANE MARLER DEES

Legislation has been introduced in Austin this week that seeks to vastly change the requirements for becoming a midwife in Texas.

Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo, proposed Monday that midwives be required to pass training courses offered by the Texas Health Department.

Another bill recently introduced by Sen. Hector Uribe, D-Brownsville, calls for widespread revamping of the current midwifery standards.

Current Texas law states a person wishing to become a "lay" midwife must fill out an application in a county clerk's office and pay $25.

No mention of prior education or hands-on training is required and an authority on the subject said a voluntary training course provided by the Texas Department of Health still doesn't prepare one for the profession.

A midwife is one who delivers a baby instead of an obstetrician. Statistics show about 10,000 babies are delivered in the U.S. each year by midwives.

Those financially strapped or wishing for a more natural birth usually choose this route, Holly Scholles, executive director of the Association of Texas Midwives (ATM) said in a telephone interview from Austin.

Ms. Scholles said a lay midwife usually charges about $500 to $800 for prenatal care, delivery and temporary follow-up care.

"Because the state doesn't set any educational requirements for becoming a midwife, I'm sure there are some with spotty training out there," Ms. Scholles acknowledged.

Jury verdict due in aggravated robbery case

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A jury was expected to decide today whether a 20-year-old Midland man is guilty of the aggravated robbery of a Midland couple last July outside an area country club.

Bufford Napoleon Lewis, 20, who did not testify at the trial, is accused of robbing Claudia and Bob Smith shortly after 10 p.m. on July 12 last year in the parking lot of Ranchland Hills Country Club on East Wadley.

The trial began Tuesday in Judge Pat Baskin's 142nd State District Court.

According to Ms. Smith's testimony, a man wearing a pair of ladies' hose over his head threatened the couple with a gun after they had left the club, then stole her purse and her husband's wallet.

On Wednesday, defense counsel Jeff Hinkley called six alibi witnesses, all of whom told the eight-man, four-woman jury that they had seen the defendant outside a delicatessen near the country club between 10 p.m. and 10:30 p.m. — the time the prosecution contends he committed the robbery.

The witnesses said they remembered the date because two black males in a car had been stopped by police and searched in the deli parking lot, near the intersection of Fairgrounds Road and Pecan Avenue, shortly after the robbery.

All six said Lewis appeared free of perspiration and calm, unlike someone who had just committed a robbery.

The two men, who were stopped and searched, Terry Atchison and Arthur Stewart, testified police searched no one else at the deli, even though they said Lewis was there.

Jessie Fennell took the stand and calmly told the jury that he and Lewis planned the robbery, and waited outside the country club with masks over their heads before he abandoned the scheme and ran home.

He said he gave Lewis a .22 caliber revolver he had bought earlier that night after he fought with another man at a nightclub, an explanation which did not satisfy Hinkley.

"You were the person that did the robbery by yourself, weren't you?" Hinkley asked. "No, sir," Fennell replied. Fennell said he ran away and did not see Lewis commit the robbery.

Hinkley bolstered testimony of the alibi witnesses by calling two other witnesses who said they heard Fennell claim he robbed the Smiths.

Thomas Stewart testified Fennell referred to the police investigation as incompetent, and he said he wouldn't be bothered because someone else, Lewis, had been arrested for the crime.

"They already had the wrong guy hooked," Fennell said in late July, according to witness Marcus Roberts.

Fennell also said "he had the cash," Roberts testified.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre asked each alibi witness how the evening of July 12 was so clear in their minds, when none could remember on what day of the week the robbery occurred.

HRC official indicted on forgery charges

From Staff Reports

The executive director of the Human Relations Council, Robert Jones, was indicted on three counts of forgery by a Midland County grand jury Wednesday.

Jones, 42, also was arrested Wednesday and charged with writing a hot check to a Midland electronics store.

He was released today in lieu of a total of $33,500 bond — $10,000 for each of the three counts of forgery and $3,500 for the hot check charge.

Jones resigned from the council Feb. 2, after an internal audit of the agency's books revealed $4,600 was missing, said the council's board President Martha Garza.

Of the indictment, Ms. Garza said, "I feel that it was a necessary action the board had to take as far as filing charges against him. But I hope this will all be over soon."

The RepublicBank First National Midland is reimbursing the council for $3,100 — the amount of two allegedly forged checks cashed by Jones, Ms. Garza said.

Ms. Garza said she called for the internal audit about two weeks ago after she found her name forged on three checks. One check was never cashed, she said.

The council's board of directors had originally agreed not to file charges against Jones, if he would pay $5,000 in restitution by last Friday — the $400 extra tacked on to cover the agency's auditing costs.

But when he missed the Friday deadline, the council filed a report with the District Attorney's office, asking them to file charges against Jones.

Activities of the council include helping volunteers find agencies that match their interests.

Candidates can still file for Region 18 Education center board

By JULIE HILLRICH
Staff Writer

Incumbent candidates, running unopposed at this time for three-year terms, will highlight the March election of the Board of Directors of Region 18 Education Service Center.

Incumbents Ted Kerr of Midland, G.E. "Tommy" Thompson of Kermit, and Monte Brooks of Fort Stockton, all have announced they will seek reelection, Executive Director J.W.

Donaldson said.

Donaldson said persons desiring to fill the vacancies on the board must file for a place on the ballot before Feb. 20.

Candidates must be U.S. citizens over the age of 21 and not a member of a local school district board. Professional educators also are ineligible, he said.

Donaldson said Region 18 Education Service Center directors are elected by members of the boards of trustees of the school districts in the region. A potential 223 votes will be cast, he said.

Board members serve three-year terms without compensation and must be residents of the area served, said Donaldson.

Directors "have the same responsibilities and duties as trustees of local school districts," he added.

Education service centers are created by the State Board of Education to provide educational services to school districts and also coordinate planning in the region.

The centers operate on federal, state and local funds, but have no local tax base, Donaldson said.

To file for Place 1, a person must live in the Midland Independent School District.

To file for Place 4, a person must reside in either the Coahoma, Crane, Forsan, Classcock County, Grady, Granfalls, Greenwood, Kermit, McCamey, Rankin, Reagan County, Stanton or Wink-Loving Independent School District.

To file for Place 6, a candidate must reside in the Pecos or Fort Stockton Independent School District.

Donaldson said candidates must submit the filing form to his office either in person or by certified mail before the Feb. 20 deadline. There is no fee for filing.

Applications for filing are available at the local school superintendents or at the Region 18 Education Service Center, located on LaForce Boulevard at Midland Regional Air Terminal. The mailing address is P.O. Box 6020, Midland, Texas, 79711.

Persons interested in filing for candidacy should contact their local school superintendent or Donaldson at 563-2380, extension 231.

Midland's first black church organized in 1920's

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second of a four-part series commemorating Black History Month.
By ANNTONETTE MOORE
Staff Writer

The church has been the crucible of America's black community. Within its walls, blacks have forged their dreams for a better future, while tempering the often harsh reality of the present with strong Christian faith and concern.

"The black church didn't start out so much as an institution, as it was a spiritual escape from the cruelties of slavery," said Rev. O. J. Archie, pastor since 1973 of Macedonia Baptist Church, which was organized in 1930.

"And this was one of the reasons it came into existence. Our black forefathers refused to accept the idea that people could be anyone else's property."

The first black Baptist church was organized between 1773 and 1775, in Aiken, S.C., continued Archie, 55, who has studied black church history.

"During slavery, black ministers had to use double talk" in their services, he said. "A song like 'I'm Bound for the Promised Land' didn't necessarily mean that he was going to heaven"; "The Promised Land" might be the northern states.

"Black people in those days did not have the education that we have today."

"The black preacher was often barely literate. He had to use illustrations to dramatize his message and he had to use a lot of imagination," Archie continued.

Olden days were noted for having a good singing voice."

Midland's first black church, Mount Rose Baptist Church, was organized at a much later date, in the early 1920s, according to Barbara Bryant, 58, the daughter of the church's first pastor, Fred Bass.

BLACKS IN MIDLAND

Celebrating Black History Month

He and her mother, Mary, came to the Midland area to work for a white rancher in 1919, when "Midland was just really cattle country," Mrs. Bryant said.

"There were only 13 blacks then, all out on ranches between here and Stanton."

"My mom and my dad were raised in a Christian family. They could not believe that there were no black churches out here."

"Both were raised in a very strict religious home. Their upbringing was the fear of God," she continued.

"As soon as they moved to town (in 1919), they just said 'Well, we'll just start a church in our own home,'" which was on Lee Street.

Her parents "would take down the bed and have Sunday School and worship services in the front room."

THIS WENT ON until 1920, when "a white rancher gave them the first 'little house' — just one 10-by-20-foot room — for a church building, according to Mrs. Bryant. Her father pastored the church, now located at 211 N. Tyler, until 1922.

During the '20s and early '30s, Mount Rose had approximately 30 members.

Before 1933 "we had no piano —

we had to sing acappella. We had such beautiful services that, when I was a girl, the whites would come down and worship with us. They loved to hear the choir sing when we had special musicals."

"The Mexican-Americans would come over and worship, too."

Greater St. Luke African Methodist Church was Midland's second black church, according to Mrs. Bryant. It was organized in 1928 and was the site of Midland's first black school.

At that time Greater St. Luke was located just around the corner from Mount Rose, at the intersection of Lee and Texas. On Sunday evenings the two churches combined their services for "a real hallelujah time," she said.

Members first met in a brush arbor at the site, said Ellen G. Smith, 49, a member of Greater St. Luke since 1950. Rev. H.Y. Tyler was the first minister.

While the congregation worshiped in the arbor, two men made adobe bricks for the original building, she continued. In 1958, the church moved to its current site, 401 S. Adams.

ALEXANDER TEMPLE Church of God in Christ was another early black church, according to Mrs. Bryant. It was started in the 1930s, at 200 N. Tyler St., so three black churches were located within one block of each other.

Please see CHURCH, Page 2B

During the '30s, the three churches met together in a Sunday evening "Midnight Rumble," she said. By then Mount Rose had grown to about 150 members.

"We had different denominations and we had different doctrines, but you couldn't tell it when we came together," she recalled.

"The church had to be a theater, a worship place, a picnic ground, a school. The church was the community at the time," Mrs. Bryant said.

The churches also provided community leadership.

"When I was a girl, there were no water, lights or anything" in the black part of town, she said. The black ministers "would go to people like Clarence Scharbauer Sr., Fred Turner Jr., and make their needs known, and they (the white leaders) would take" the requests to City Hall. After that, the area began to get city services.

The black churches had water before any of the homes — hydrants in the churchyards. Children carried water from the hydrants home in buckets, Mrs. Bryant said.

The black community might have been poor in material wealth, but it was rich in grace.

"IN THESE times blacks could not afford doctors. I've seen my mother (Mary Bass) go to people's houses and sit with them and use home remedies on their children" because families could not afford the $2 for a doctor's visit, she recalled.

"They did it the way the first New Testament churches did. They had all in common," Mrs. Bryant said.

"We had no welfare. If there was a need, the church met it. We had even less then (than today), but the little we had we shared with each other."

When Mrs. Bryant was about 9 years old, Mount Rose staged a play entitled "Heaven and Hell."

One central character was "a prostitute that the Holy Spirit had tried to woo to Christ," but who couldn't give up her sinful ways.

"When she got to the gates of heaven, the Lord looked at her with sad eyes and said 'Depart from me, I do not know you,'" Mrs. Bryant recalled.

"The woman actually fell to her knees and began to weep." The audience thought she was acting, but she was weeping uncontrollably and had to be helped off stage.

"A conviction came over her; she knew how precious her soul really was," Mrs. Bryant continued.

"THE CHURCH was packed. There were more white people than there were black. And there was not a dry eye in the house."

Mrs. Smith, of Greater St. Luke, remembered moving from McCamey to Midland in 1950 when she was 12.

"Coming from McCamey to here was like coming from Midland to

'The black church didn't start out so much as an institution, as it was a spiritual escape from the cruelties of slavery.'

— Rev. O. J. Archie

New York City," she said.

Greater St. Luke's congregation seemed very large to her, but "close-knit and family-oriented...It was one big happy family. Your teachers at school went there, that taught you every day."

"On Sunday mornings, there were not that many cars, but the streets would be full of people walking to the churches," she continued. "And the churches were filled."

Greater St. Luke was Midland's first black institution to grant an academic scholarship, Mrs. Smith claimed. In 1953 it went to Willis Gilbert, Mrs. Smith's brother.

Her father, D.W. Gilbert, also was an AME minister, although not at Greater St. Luke. He pastored churches in McCamey, Big Spring, Fort Stockton and other West Texas towns.

"When we were small, we opened Sunday School on Sunday morning and we were there when they said benediction on Sunday night," Mrs. Smith said.

"WITH THE encouragement and the social strength that the church has always been for me and my family, I'm just grateful to have been a part of the church family of greater St. Luke."

"For black people in their struggle for human dignity and personhood, the church was the one stronghold they've always had. Historically, it has always been the black church which met them at their point of need," she continued.

"I don't foresee the black church ever going under. I think there will always be the door of the black church open."

William Palmer, 43, current pastor of Mount Rose, and his wife Carolyn agreed.

During hard economic times, the black churches "stick together and try to help out," Mrs. Palmer said.

"People help and they do it a lot through the church...It's remarkable because we talk about loving each other and now we can really show it."

"I think that the black church has caught on to the biblical saying that 'God will supply all of your needs according to your riches and glory.'"

The black congregations give "all that they have," she continued.

"The church hasn't had to suffer as a result of that. We may have to work a little harder, but it (support) will come."

Hearing scheduled on 'sodbuster' provisions

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — U.S. Rep. Ed Jones, a Tennessee dairy farmer, will oversee a hearing on the "sodbuster" conservation compliance provisions of the 1985 federal Farm Bill on Friday in Big Spring.

Jones, 74, is chairman of the U.S. House Subcommittee on Conservation, Credit and Rural Development.

West Texas farmers are invited to the day-long hearing, which will be held in the East Room of the Howard College Coliseum. The hearing is to start at 9:30 a.m.

"It's a very controversial part of the Farm Bill," Herb Sorley said of the sodbuster provisions of the Farm Bill. Sorley is county executive director of the U.S. Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) for Midland County.

As designed, the sodbuster provisions would deny farmers eligibility for certain U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) programs if farmers break out a field of highly erodible grassland or woodland to plant crops without following a conservation plan approved by the USDA's Soil Conservation Service (SCS).

"Farmers take pride in their land. They are going to take care of it," Greenwood farmer Roy Graham said recently when Midland area farmers gathered in Midland to discuss the sodbuster and other conservation measures.

Graham said that there was "nothing wrong" with the intentions of the program.

"Farmers need to take care of their soil," he said. "But it needs to be done on an individual basis."

If the farmer can get "a decent price" for commodities produced on his land, Graham said, then the farmer "can afford to take care of his land. You take care of the land that feeds you."

Throughout the nation, U.S. Soil Conservation Service agents are to approve farmers' soil-conservation plans. Midland area farmers are to have their conservation plans approved by 1990 and implemented by 1995, noted Dick Hagelstein, program coordinator of the Sibley Environmental Learning Center and retired SCS district conservationist.

Hagelstein, who advocates soil-and-water conservation, said the sodbuster timing is "terrible because of the economic situation" confronting farmers.

Tomas Dominguez, SCS range conservationist for Midland County, said that the soil-conservation program is flexible.

CITY SIDEWALKS

Residents encouraged to attend City Council meeting

By LYN MILLER

See your city government in action! Attend a City Council meeting at City Hall! Find out just what procedures are used by the council when they adopt a new city ordinance or approve a resolution.

It would be to the advantage of each resident of the City of Midland to make an effort to attend at least one of these meetings during the year. This would provide an excellent opportunity to become familiar with the issues that affect the city as a whole and, perhaps, the area where you live.

Midland operates under the council-manager form of government, with the mayor and six-member council serving two-year terms.

Those serving on the present council are Carroll Thomas, mayor; Katie Heck, mayor pro tem; David F. Godfrey, District 1; Oralia Corrales, District 2; Kelly Fish, District 3; Robert Randall, District 4; and Gordon G. Marcum II, at-large.

The mayor is the chief executive officer of the city and presides over each meeting. He may participate in the discussion of all matters before the council and is entitled to vote upon such matters. All contracts, ordinances and resolutions with the city in order to be valid, require the signature of the mayor.

Included in the responsibilities of the mayor are the presentation of all proclamations and Resolutions of Commendations, as well as the role of goodwill ambassador for the City of Midland.

The mayor pro tem is selected from among the council members and performs the duties of the mayor in his absence or disability.

Among the powers enumerated in the City Charter, the council is charged with the appointment of officers and employees such as the city manager, city attorney, city secretary and any other deemed necessary; administration of the city's business; approval of the city's budget; and execution and enforcement of laws and ordinances of the city.

City Council meetings are held on the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month at 10 a.m. in the Council Chamber of City Hall.

An agenda of topics for their consideration is prepared for each meeting by the city manager's office. As prescribed by law, it is posted 72 hours prior to each meeting in such a manner that it may be viewed from outside City Hall after hours and on weekends. The agenda is posted on the City Hall bulletin board and on the window in the Council Chamber foyer. Copies of the agenda are available to the public before each council meeting.

Anyone desiring to place an item on the agenda may do so by submitting it in writing to the city manager's office.

Various items brought before the council include possible zone changes, approval of bids, annexation of land, approval of leases with the city, street repair and construction just to name a few. The vast array of work accomplished by the council is too vast to list here.

The council members have a large task to perform. They, having been elected by the residents of Midland, must strive to do what is best for the residents, as well as the city.

Lyn Miller is secretary to Midland's City Manager.

A voluntary 15-week training course — the one Sarpalius wants made mandatory — is offered by the TDH to those wishing to become midwives, but Ms. Scholles said it is informal and sketchy at best.

"It covers pregnancy and birth information, but emergency and complications are brushed on. It's basically just an overview," Ms. Scholles said.

This state-mandated training program — offered just four times since it went into effect in 1983 — was a result of legislation introduced by Uribe, Ms. Scholles said.

"It was not a funded bill and no appropriations were made for it, which made it difficult for the TDH to administer it," Ms. Scholles said. Funding finally came from the state's general revenue account, but the projected $5.8 billion state deficit now threatens its existence.

Uribe's more recent bill — supported by the ATM — calls for the authorization of midwives to be certified in cardiopulmonary resuscitation and to perform newborn screening tests.

In addition, Uribe's bill calls for local health departments to be required to provide medical and laboratory support services to midwives' patients.

If his bill passed, midwives would also have to identify themselves to the state health department yearly and could administer state-required prenatal blood tests and eye drops that prevent infections to newborns.

Uribe said Tuesday that improving midwifery is a slow process.

"We're attempting to improve the health care, the obstetrical care for that individual who cannot afford a physician or a hospital," the Brownsville senator said.

Dr. Walter Peter, spokesman for the TDH maternal and child health division, said his department's course isn't really training, but educationally oriented.

Peter said the course isn't adequate when one considers an obstetrician trains for about eight years.

"We have a manual in English and Spanish and they go to meetings and sessions for 15 weeks," Peter said.

Dr. James Humphreys, director of the Midland City-County Health Department, said he agreed — the training the state offers is not sufficient.

Lay midwives, however, are not to be confused with "certified nursing midwives (CNM)," two of which are employed by the Midland City-County Department and Midland Memorial Hospital, Humphreys said.

A CNM has a degree in nursing and has taken additional graduate training in the field, he said.

Humphreys said the two midwives at MMH were hired for the purpose of delivering indigent babies.

The two work for the Midland City-County Health Department as well, Humphreys said, and see patients during their prenatal care period and for about two weeks after the baby is born.

A pregnant woman who knows she most likely can't afford the average $3,000-$4,000 it costs to have a baby, will often seek initial care at the health department, Humphreys said.

The CNM will follow the indigent patient through her pregnancy and deliver the child at MMH provided the obstetrician on call deems it a probable safe delivery, Humphreys said.

Even a certified nursing midwife is not authorized by MMH to perform what a doctor thinks will be a high-risk vaginal or Caesarean section delivery, the director added.

MMH reports show that midwives delivered 167 babies during fiscal year 1986 which ended Sept. 30, 1986. As of Dec. 31, 1986, an additional 52 were delivered by midwives at the hospital.

Ms. Scholles said she would like to see some sort of licensing go into effect.

DEATHS

Maye Chatfield

Maye B. Chatfield, 87-year-old mother of Don Chatfield of Midland, died in Fort Stockton Wednesday morning.

Graveside services will be at 2 p.m. Friday at the Woodland Cemetery under the direction of Starr Mortuary Service in Sand Springs, Okla. Ellis Funeral Home handled local arrangements.

Mrs. Chatfield was born April 16, 1899 in Pottawatomie County, Okla. She spent her early life there. While in her late teens, she moved to Tulsa and worked for the telephone system. She met and married Fred "Tug" Beck in 1922. He died in 1924. Later that year, she moved to Hatch, N.M., where she met and married Oliver A. Chatfield. They lived in Arey and Caballo, N.M. She later lived in Eunice and Truth or Consequences, N.M., for a number of years. She moved to Fort Stockton in 1983.

Other survivors include another son, Fred Beck of Belen, N.M., two daughters, Barbara Saul of Fort Stockton and Dorothy Bates of Magdalena, N.M.; five grandchildren; and 11 great-grandchildren.

He retired from farming in 1979.

He was also a carpenter and had built several homes in Plainview.

He was a member of the Ninth & Columbia Street Church of Christ.

Survivors include his wife, three sons, Richard Green of Plainview, Dan Green of Midland, and Ronny Green of San Benito; four sisters, Eleanor Frye, Margaret Foust, Catherine Edgar, and Shirley Ann Brownlee, all of Plainview; one brother, Gerald Green of Plainview; and seven grandchildren.

Palbearers will be Gaylon Couch, Marlow Dees, Roy Daffern, Frank Barbican, Fred Howard, and Jackie Don Tyler.

Steve Kloesel

Steve Kloesel of Midland died at his home Wednesday evening.

Services are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

John E. Green

PLAINVIEW — John Ellsworth Green, 66, of Plainview, father of a Midland man, died Wednesday morning at a Plainview hospital.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Friday in the Wood-Dunning Colonial Chapel with Dean Brookshire, minister of the 9th & Columbia Street Church of Christ, officiating. Burial will be at the Plainview Cemetery under the direction of Wallace Funeral Home in Tulsa.

Green was born July 21, 1920 in Tulsa. He married the former Adell McCarty Oct. 4, 1941 in Yuma, Ariz. He lived in Plainview most of his life. From 1941 until 1945 he lived

Beulah Hall

ODESSA — Beulah Hall, 80, of Odessa died Tuesday at her home.

Services were to be at 10 a.m. today at the Hubbard-Kelly Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. Curtis Thorpe officiating. Graveside services were to be at 1 p.m. at Rankin Cemetery in Rankin.

Mrs. Hall was born July 9, 1906 in Tom Green County. She married Archie A. Hall in 1923 in Veribest. He preceded her in death in 1960. She was a homemaker and a Baptist, and had lived in Odessa since 1969.

Survivors include two sons, Elton A. Hall of Odessa and Charles A. Hall of Marble Falls; a daughter, Lorene Rowe of San Angelo; two brothers, Le Ray Bean of Costa Mesa, Calif., and A.J. Bean of Wall; 11 grandchildren; and 15 great-grandchildren.

The family requests memorials be directed to the American Heart Association.

Authorities seize weapons, drug lab equipment

From Staff Reports

A number of weapons, Police Roundup including an Israeli-made Uzi submachine gun, several rifles, communications equipment, and laboratory equipment for manufacturing methamphetamine were seized by authorities in Midland and Sterling counties following two arrests early Wednesday.

According to the Midland County Sheriff's office, 17 pounds of a compound seized was tested and found to be ingredients of, but not manufactured methamphetamine. The value of the ingredients was unknown, authorities said.

The two men, one of whom was arrested in Midland County, the other in Sterling County, just after 3 a.m., were charged with possession of a controlled substance. Kelly Kosperek, 23, is being held in Midland in lieu of $100,000 bond. Alan Rene Moore, 29, of Odessa, is being held in Tom Green County in lieu of $100,000.

Midland police are investigating two residential and one business burglary, including one in the 1600 block of North N Street. According to reports, a videocassette recorder valued at $500, a television set valued at $200, and a microwave oven valued at $139 were stolen from a residence between 8:50 a.m. and 4 p.m.

A ladies' watchband valued at $300 and assorted jewelry valued at $200 were reported stolen from a residence in the 900 block of North Baird Street, police said. According to reports, the burglary occurred Tuesday or Wednesday.

In other reports, police are investigating a burglary at the Mid-Continent Inn, 2500 Commerce Dr. A double bed valued at $150, a hanging lamp valued at $45, a telephone valued at $75, and a shower curtain valued at $15 were stolen. Reports said the items were taken today between 12:15 and 12:30 a.m.

ter the robbery, even though she took 50 minutes to make a positive identification.

Hinkley also questioned Police Sgt. John Anastasio, one of two detectives who stopped the two men, about the lineup. Anastasio testified that only five people were used in the lineup, although standard department procedure requires six. He said a sixth was dropped after the Smiths told him they had accidentally seen the man at the police station before the lineup.

Hinkley's objection to Schorror's question of one witness, Michelle Williams, was sustained by Baskin as improper.

Ms. Williams, when asked several times by Schorror, told the jury that she remembered that particular night only because she had seen police at the deli and she was planning her wedding.

"Did you go home and write down on your calendar or in your diary

'Odd incident at deli with police?'" Schorror asked.

Earlier, after being recalled by Hinkley, Ms. Smith identified the defendant as the robber, despite Hinkley's questions about how she could be so sure about an 18-second incident that happened in the dark.

"My brain took a picture of his face," she told the jurors, sobbing. "I'll never forget it, but I'd do anything to forget it."

She also told Hinkley that she was sure Lewis was the robber when she viewed a police lineup two weeks af-

Procedures listed used to aid substance-dependent persons

Surely there are relatively few people still unaware of the problem of substance abuse in the United States and in Midland. The fact that the problem exists and the substances involved are pointed out daily by the arrests of suspected drug dealers, news of political action and warnings against substance abuse from various media sources.

A lesser-known aspect of substance abuse is the management of a substance-dependent person during detoxification or withdrawal. Dr. Joe Wolpmann, the medical director at Clearview Behavioral Health Center, provided this information recently in a meeting at Midland Memorial Hospital.

The substances and the detoxification procedure for them are listed roughly in the order of frequency.

Alcohol

Alcohol is by far the most common substance abused. The effects of alcohol on the human body and the cost of alcohol abuse in human lives are known to most of us. It would be difficult to argue the fact that alcohol abuse is a serious problem in this country. Predictably, detoxification from alcohol is the most common procedure necessary at Clearview.

Detoxification from alcohol involves the giving of a sedative or tranquilizer in an amount sufficient to offset the tolerance to the alcohol which the patient has acquired. Usually, this necessitates a much larger dose of sedation than is normally used on other patients. The sedation is gradually withdrawn over a period of about one week.

There are two substances which pose some danger to the patient during detoxification and alcohol is one of the two. It also is the more dangerous of the two. The danger is the potential development of delirium tremens or "DTs." DTs involve the hallucination of animals or insects crawling on the walls or on the person. These hallucinations are bad enough by themselves, but may also be accompanied by seizures. The seizures are ominous, because they suggest toxicity sufficient to cause failure of other body organs, particularly the kidneys. The mortality for DTs is about 10 percent, so this complication of alcoholism is not a laughing matter as it sometimes is depicted.

Marijuana

Use of marijuana continues to be widespread as a recreational substance. Many believe that no dependency develops from its use. However, Clearview has had adult patients hospitalized for the purpose of withdrawing them from habits of 10 "joints" per day.

The main purpose for hospitalization is group support. The craving for marijuana during withdrawal is significant, but not physically dangerous to the patient.

Cocaine

Use of cocaine in the Midland area rivals that of marijuana. It is an extremely dangerous drug because of its effects on the circulatory system and its seductive properties which can produce psychological dependency in very short order.

The ability of cocaine to cause blood vessels to shrink (vasoconstrict) is unrivaled by any other substance known to man. It is this property which gives the cocaine "high," but at the cost of a tremendous increase in blood pressure. We now know that cocaine can also cause a lethal stoppage of the heart. Compared to these two items, damage to the lining of the nose (also from vasoconstriction) seems a relatively minor concern.

Snorting cocaine could be thought of as a test of the circulatory system. If the user has a weak blood vessel in the brain which could rupture with increased pressure, or a heart which might stop from use of cocaine, he will find it out almost immediately.

The effect of cocaine that can produce psychological dependency quickly is the depression which it produces following the "high." During the "high," it is difficult to comprehend any possible harm associated with cocaine. During the post-high depression, however, all the problems of life come rushing back. Seemingly, the only solution is more cocaine, and thus the dependence is established.

A third danger of cocaine usage is the possibility of a lethal substitute. There have been occasions when cocaine users brought another powder — Su-Fentanyl (also known as "China White") when cocaine was not

The expense of alcoholism

In the U.S., in 1985, alcoholism among workers resulted in more than $72 billion in lost production. Money unearned due to job loss by alcoholics amounted to around $6 billion. Altogether, alcoholism cost society more than $88 billion in 1985, including $10 billion spent nationwide to treat those combating the disease.

HEALTH

available Su-Fentanyl may be up to 5,000 times as potent as morphine in an uncut form. Inhalation of this substance could cause death almost instantaneously.

Fortunately, neither Su-Fentanyl nor "crack" (a lump form of cocaine which is smoked) are common in the Midland area.

Detoxification from cocaine requires little for treatment of physical symptoms. Rehabilitation directed toward breaking the psychological dependence is crucial.

Heroin

The popular characterization of heroin as a white powder to be dissolved and "shot" (injected) no longer is valid, at least in this area. Heroin refined to the form of white powder comes from the poppy fields of France, and is seen mostly in northern communities. By the time the powder is sold on the street, it may only be 15 percent pure.

The heroin seen in the Midland area comes primarily from Mexico, and arrives in the form of a tarry, brownish-black lump called "black tar" or "tootsie roll," (with apologies to the candy-maker). Heroin in this form is more difficult (but not impossible) to adulterate, and therefore comes to the consumer 80-90 percent pure.

What this means for the consumer is that the dependence develops more rapidly and is stronger than dependence on the powder form. Detoxification is more difficult, and may take up to seven days. Withdrawal symptoms are fairly well controlled with a blood pressure medicine known as Clonidine.

Pills

These are legal medications causing dependency which are obtained either by illegal street sale or legal prescription.

— Preludin is an appetite suppressant. Detoxification is managed similarly to other amphetamine abuse.

— Darvon is a prescription pain medication with a tendency to produce dependency. As Darvon is broken down in the body, one of the intermediate chemicals produced is similar in action to Methadone. Detoxification from Darvon involves sedation and gradual tapering off.

— Diazepam is commonly known by a trade name Valium. It is a member of family of tranquilizers known as benzodiazepines.

Detoxification from Diazepam is best accomplished by substituting another benzodiazepine and gradually tapering off over a period of up to two weeks. It is the other abused substance from which detoxification involves some danger to the patient.

Amphetamines

Amphetamine and methamphetamine ("speed") are strong stimulants similar to cocaine and are similarly hazardous to the circulatory system. Most are manufactured and obtained illegally.

Detoxification involves bringing the user down from the "high" over a one to two-day period.

Designer Drugs

"Designer" drugs are close relatives of amphetamines which previously have been declared illegal. They appear with street names such as "ecstasy" or "Adam." These substances have been seen rarely in the Midland area since approximately March 1986. It was at that time that manufacture of close relatives of illegal substances was made illegal as well.

Detoxification of designer drugs essentially is the same as for other amphetamines. As a group, these substances are possibly even more hazardous than their illegal ancestors, because even slight modification of the molecular structure produced unpredictable potency and side effects. There was an unfortunate consequence for two healthy users of "Adam" in California, both in their 20s. The substance produced a nervous system derangement resembling Parkinson's Disease which was both immediate and permanent.

There are numerous other drugs and substances which can produce mental or physical dependence. A few things to remember about substance abuse are these:

— Bad as it is for adults, substance abuse is even worse for adolescents because the development of coping and defense mechanisms in the personality may not occur when substance abuse is present.

— Abuse of more than one substance at a time is common, and greatly complicates both detoxification and rehabilitation.

— Anyone who uses an illegal substance essentially trusts his life to a dealer who is not a pharmacist, who may know little about what he is selling, and who is not accountable to the buyer. What else does one purchase in such an arrangement as this?

— Help is available for those unfortunate enough to have a substance abuse problem. Some of the available sources of help are private physicians, Clearview Health Center and the Palmer Drug Abuse Program. Substance abuse problems are better dealt with sooner than later.

Dr. James Humphreys is director of the Midland City-County Health Department.

Synthetic drug called penicillin for heart disease

CINCINNATI (AP) — A researcher says a synthetic drug agent which has been tested for the past year will be as successful in aiding heart attack victims as penicillin was in helping people with pneumonia.

The agent, called tissue plasminogen activator or TPA, is created synthetically through a combination of DNA research techniques. It is an artificial version of an enzyme found naturally in the body, researchers said.

It has been used for the past year at Christ Hospital in Cincinnati, Riverside Hospital in Columbus, Duke University in Durham, N.C., and the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor on heart attack victims who never have undergone bypass surgery.

"I believe a lot of lives have been saved with TPA and there will be much more when it becomes available. One of the major results is that the victims have very little heart scar damage," said Dr. Dean Kereiakes, cardiologist at Christ Hospital.

"I think it will be thought as having the same success as penicillin had against pneumonia," said Dr. Charles Abbottsmith, director of cardiology at the hospital.

Kereiakes, said results of the tests were presented last November at an American Heart Association meeting at Dallas.

TPA is made by Genentech Inc. of San Francisco.

Drug seems to prevent atrophy of hair follicles

Hearst News Service

Minoxidil appears to prevent baldness by blocking the time clock that shuts off cell regeneration in the hair follicle. The drug appears to prevent or reverse atrophy of the follicle, which may explain why it works better to prevent baldness than to completely regrow a head of hair, says dermatologist Russell Caldwell.

Minoxidil acts on the cell and causes some regeneration, but if the baldness is severe and the atrophy advanced, the hair does not return in full. That could explain why in advanced cases of baldness the drug creates only a dense fuzz about half an inch long, Caldwell says.

Minoxidil appears to have some regenerative effect on cells, he adds. Researchers studying the drug have reported that while skin cells in culture will grow for a while and then stop growing, adding minoxidil to the culture makes the growth continue for a longer period of time.

Apparently, the drug works the same way on the hair follicle — by blocking the mechanism in the follicle that causes the cells to stop growing, Caldwell says.

"If you study biology, you would see that all the cells in the body go through a period of growing and maturing, and then the body's time clock tells the cells to stop maturing," he says. "Minoxidil seems to block that time clock."

Minoxidil lowers blood pressure by dilating blood vessels, and for a time researchers believed the increased blood flow to the scalp caused by dilated blood vessels there was responsible for the regrowth of hair, Caldwell says. But other drugs that dilate blood vessels do not cause hair growth, and that theory has been discarded, he says.

Valentine's Day activities planned

and SHANNON FOX

How many of you thought that Valentine was a simple message? Actually, Valentine was a man by the name of St. Valentine. He was a young pagan priest in Rome during the reign of Claudius II.

Romans had persecuted many Christians during that time. Valentine, who was martyr, was thrown in prison for assisting the embattled believers. On Feb. 14 he was converted to Christianity and it was then that he sent his loved ones violets made to form hearts and he spelled with them, "Remember Your Valentine." This is where we obtained Valentine's Day.

In keeping with this tradition, Feb. 13, the Lee High National Honor Society will conduct its annual Valentine's Day festivities. Since Feb. 5, NHS members have been selling Valentine cards and fresh carnations during third period and at lunch. On Feb. 13, 10 groups of NHS members will dress in costumes and deliver the flowers and cards to students in their third period classes.

Happy Valentine's Day to everyone! We hope that your day is filled with lots of cards, candy and flowers.

On Feb. 19th, Lee seniors will be taking a trip to the Globe Theatre in Odessa to see "The Taming of the Shrew." Ticket sales will begin Feb. 12 and will end on Feb. 17. Seniors, if you wish to participate you must do the following:

1. Sign up with your senior English teacher and pay $5 in cash (no checks) for your ticket.

2. On Feb. 19, report to your first period class and wait to be dismissed to the buses.

3. If you are participating, you must ride the bus to and from the Globe, and you must ride the same bus each time.

This is a great experience and a lot of fun. Seniors, be sure you take this trip. You won't regret it.

The Rebel All-State Band and Choir will be attending the Texas Music Educators Association convention in San Antonio. They will be leaving on Feb. 11 and returning on Feb. 13.

There is a lot of action going on with the Rebel sports teams. The basketball season is winding down for both the guys' and girls' teams. Each team plays Permian High School Feb. 13 with a full moon in the skies.

The boys play at Permian and the girls stay home to take on the Panthers. The girls are looking to gain on district-leading Midland High School and San Angelo High School and qualify for the playoffs. Meanwhile, the spring sports of baseball and track have begun full practices after school in preparation for their upcoming season.

"The Shades," who have played at Budlow's, Dos Amigos and Joey's, played for the Youth Center last Saturday. If you have the chance to hear them, do. A pool tournament will be taking place during the week of Feb. 9 through Feb. 13 during the lunch hour. Prizes for the winners are: custom pool cue (first place), a gift certificate to Real Music (second place) and movies passes (third place). This will be held at the Youth Center.

Attention everyone — Youth Center activities are as follows:

Feb. 13 — Junior High Valentine Party — 7:30 to 10 p.m. at Lee Youth Center

— Freshman Valentine Party — 8:30 to 11 p.m. at Midland Youth Center.

— Feb. 21 — Lee Freshman Student Council Dance — 7:30

Speedwriting among MC short courses

From Staff Reports

The Midland College Continuing Education Department will offer three short courses beginning Monday.

Speedwriting I will be taught from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays through Apr. 1. A system of "ABC" shorthand based on longhand for those who want to learn to take dictation in six weeks. Books are available at Midland College Bookstore. The class is limited to 25 students and the fee is $37.

Don Luttrell will teach Wonderful

World of Travel from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesdays through April 14. Here's an in-depth course about travel... as a pastime or a career. You'll appreciate the know-how of arranging your own itinerary, booking your own airline tickets, hotel reservations, rental car, and tours if you travel for fun. If you've thought you'd like to be associated with the travel industry, this course will give you a basic understanding of how travel agencies work, how agents do what they do, how transportation companies use computers and people, the business side of the industry and a look at cruise lines. The course fee is $25.

Automotive Service Techniques II will be taught by Johnny Moore from 7 to 10 p.m. Tuesdays through March 31. This is a continuation course in automobile service principles and maintenance. Areas covered include electrical service, brakes and chassis repair, and transmission service. The course fee is $28.

For information on these and other Continuing Education courses come by the Continuing Education Department in the Administration Building or call 685-4518.

Supporters want to stop education's 'brain drain'

AUSTIN (AP) — Backers of more money for the University of Texas and other state universities appealed to legislators to stop the "brain drain" in higher education.

"Clearly Texas' commitment to higher education is questioned," Jesse Hay, chairman of UT System regents, told several hundred representatives of colleges and universities from throughout the state

Wednesday.

Hay said in the last 18 months, 388 faculty members of state colleges and universities have resigned to go to other states, and efforts to recruit 315 faculty members in other states failed because of the Texas's financial woes.

"The status of higher education in Texas is precarious," said Larry Temple, chairman of the Select Committee on Higher Education. "Future cuts in higher education or flat-level funding would leave Texas out in the cold."

MISD math competition winners announced

From Staff Reports

Top scorers in the American Mathematics Competition 1986 Annual Junior High School Mathematics Examination have been announced.

The best scorers in the Midland Independent School District were eighth graders Jeff Casbeer and David Sotelo who tied at Alamo, Brandt Jordon of Goddard, and Stephen Walker of San Jacinto and seventh graders Donovan Bushman and Jake Letkeman who tied at Alamo, David Reisinger of Goddard and Matthew Welch of San Jacinto.

This is the second year the exam was given nationwide and the first year all MISD junior high school students participated.

Rusk student winner

From Staff Reports

Josanna Akin, a first grader at Rusk Elementary School, was one of 39 second prize winners in the See-Saw Winner-A-Day Holiday Drawing Contest. She is the student of Paula Haynes.

Questions on meat safety answered

By MARIAN FARR

What should you do when the hamburger doesn't look quite right? You can take a chance on it and risk the uncomfortable symptoms of a food borne illness, or you can throw it out and wonder if you've just wasted good food — and money.

Almost everyone knows that when meat isn't refrigerated and handled properly, it can become contaminated by bacteria, but many people don't know how to tell a safe from a risky practice in preparing meat at home.

Farr

Here are answers to some questions that consumers ask about meat safety.

Q. Can I use raw ground beef that turned brown after a day or two in the refrigerator?

A. The color of ground meat is determined by the amount of oxygen with which it has come into contact. So brown hamburger may be as safe as pink hamburger. However, it is a good idea to keep raw ground beef in the refrigerator no longer than two days. Don't use the meat if it has an off odor or was left unrefrigerated for a time.

Q. Since ham has already been preserved by smoking and salting, can I thaw a frozen ham on the counter?

A. As with any type of meat, the safest way to thaw ham is in the refrigerator. The smoking and salting processes don't make the meat immune to bacteria. A number of manufacturers are lowering the salt content of cured meats which may also make them more likely to become contaminated under these circumstances.

Q. I have an unopened package of hot dogs that has been in the refrigerator for a week. Will the hot dogs be OK to eat?

A. Because hot dogs come in vacuum-sealed packages, they can be kept in the refrigerator for up to two weeks. After opening, the hot dogs should be used within seven days.

Q. I had a steak thawing in the refrigerator and then decided to go out to eat. So I put it back in the freezer. Is the steak still good?

A. The steak is safe to eat if there were still some ice crystals in the meat when you put it back in the freezer. Be sure to thaw the frozen meat in the refrigerator the second time and to cook it well. The refreezing may have caused the flavor and texture to deteriorate somewhat.

Q. If you can safely eat a steak that's pink in the middle, why not a meatloaf?

A. Because ground meat undergoes a great deal of handling, it's more likely to be exposed to bacteria than other forms of beef, so meatloaf should be cooked until it is brown or pinkish brown in the center to insure that bacteria have been destroyed. By using a meat thermometer and cooking the meatloaf to an internal temperature of 170 degrees, you also can be sure it's safe.

Bacteria grow best at room temperature but are killed by high heat and stopped by freezing. So it's best to keep meat cold, cooked or freeze it soon after buying, and thaw it in the refrigerator, not on the kitchen counter.

Microwave popcorn 'pop-ular choice'

By LINDA ANDERSON

Every junk food addict worth his salt knows that popcorn is a necessity of life. Healthier, people expound on the virtues of unsalted, unbuttered popcorn as a filling, low-calorie snack, but purists know that the only really great popcorn is the salty, yellow, greasy kind you buy in movie theaters.

Anderson

That kind of popcorn can be difficult to duplicate at home — for one thing, very few people have one of those huge movie-theater popcorn-making machines at home. (As a matter of fact, very few movie theaters have those kind of popcorn-making machines anymore, but that's another story.) What many people do have, however, is microwave ovens.

And as loyal junk-food junkies, we couldn't resist trying some of the new microwave popcorns for taste, price and advertising accuracy.

The microwave oven we have is one of the smaller ones — in the owner's manual, the manufacturer suggests not popping corn in it because of the oven's size — so when I heard Betty Crocker's Pop-Secret microwave popcorn advertised for use in all microwaves, I knew we had to try it.

Pop-Secret popcorn (we used natural flavor) comes in 10.5-ounce boxes, each containing three 3.5-ounce bags. Each of these three bags makes about four cups of popcorn — which is quite a lot of popcorn. Price for a 10.5-ounce box was $1.99, or about 67 cents per bag — a lot less than movie popcorn. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

Label advertising pushes. It's POP SECRET Betty Crocker has discovered the secret to better microwave popcorn! It's better because, unlike other leading brands, it pops in all wattage microwaves. And it pops with fewer unpopped kernels! You can count on POP SECRET to pop up delicious, light and fluffy popcorn every time. It's the pop-ular choice!

OK, I can go for that. As long as it pops in my microwave.

Popping corn in a microwave is easy and clean — just stick an already prepared bag in the oven, set it for 3.5 minutes (when there are 2.3 seconds between pops, you are supposed to turn the oven off) and punch the button.

The resulting snack turned out to be fluffy and delicious, just like the advertising said, but a little on the salty side, however, according to label information, each serving contains 440 mg sodium, which is much less than I thought. And while it didn't taste exactly like movie theater popcorn, it was good — and disappeared pretty fast.

BETTER BUSINESS

'Prize' winners really losers

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

One of the most frequently asked questions we receive at the Better Business Bureau is in response to a phone call informing the caller that he has just won a prize.

The prizes can come in the form of cars, boats, stereos and even cash.

Schmidt

Our experience has been that there is always a hook to these "prizes" because the "winner" always has to pay something.

The next time you receive one of these calls from Nevada (where a large volume of these calls originate) keep this in mind: Nevada has a revised state law (NRS 589.080) affecting telemarketing companies operating in Nevada.

The revised statute states "it is unlawful to notify any person by any means, as a part of an advertising plan or scheme, that he has won a prize and that as a condition of receiving such prize he must purchase or rent any item."

Violations of this law constitute a misdemeanor.

This may only mean that these boiler rooms will have to change the states they operate in, but at least it's a start for the beleaguered businessman.

John K. Schmidt is president of Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin Inc.

Copley News Service

A toilet paper company has come up with a way to keep campers from catching a rear-end full of buckshot.

They're selling camouflaged toilet paper to use in the woods.

to mistake a "bushy" camper for a white-tailed deer.

Campers can purchase toilet paper in such shades as "don't shoot" orange, greens and browns.

Carlberg says cautious campers should never get caught with their pants down.

Dolby labs help develop new circuit

By HANS FANTEL

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Ray Dolby, the British inventor who now maintains his laboratory in San Francisco, has been known mainly for his patented method of reducing tape hiss.

These noise-reduction circuits were the spur for the transformation of the audio cassette — originally intended merely as a dictating device — into a medium suitable for music.

And the use of this invention, now part of most cassette recorders, has been so widespread that the name of Dolby has become a household word throughout the world.

Lately, Dolby's famous name has been cropping up in a different context, one that has nothing to do with tape hiss or noise reduction.

Rather, his company's HX-Pro circuit — developed jointly with Bang and Olufsen of Denmark — enables cassette recorders to handle loudness peaks without the usual loss of high frequencies at musical climaxes. This is particularly important when copying CDs, which often contain lots of high-level treble.

AS MORE AND MORE listeners use CDs as their primary source of music and ignoring legal questions make tape copies of such disks for listening in the car or to give to friends, the audio industry seems to have developed a sudden interest in Dolby HX-Pro. To some companies, it seems the key to effective CD-to-cassette transfers.

Though complex in its technical details, the Dolby HX-Pro is simple in principle. It "listens" to the music coming into the recorder, i.e., it analyzes the wave forms in terms of frequency and amplitude.

Then it automatically makes appropriate adjustments (chiefly by varying the bias current) to allow both loud and soft passages to be imprinted on the tape with minimal distortion or treble loss.

Modern methods of miniaturization made it possible to combine all the many parts necessary for this circuit on a single chip.

The resulting ease of installation recently prompted at least two venturesome American manufacturers to incorporate HX-Pro in mid-priced cassette decks — a move all the more noteworthy since this circuit has not yet been widely adopted even in far more expensive models.

One of these firms is Harman-Kardon, whose TD392 cassette deck also boasts other clever features. For example, it functions as a three-head recorder without actually being one.

THE PURPOSE OF a three-head recorder, as most audio fans know, is to permit simultaneous recording and playback. That way, a tape being recorded can be listened to at the same time (actually a fraction of a second later) to check the quality of the recording as it is being made. If anything goes awry, it can then be instantly corrected.

Normally, separate heads for recording and playback are needed to do this. In addition to the obligatory erase head, this makes a total of three.

However, in Harman-Kardon's design (as in several others), matters are simplified by placing both the recording and playback heads in a single, unitized assembly. This eliminates the often troublesome problem of keeping recording and playback heads in precise alignment. Since, in this instance, both heads form a single physical unit, they cannot possibly slip out of alignment with each other.

The three-head option for instant monitoring of a recording works well in conjunction with a variable bias adjustment, which is also provided in this model. The listener may vary this control until the brightest sound is heard, indicating that an optimal adjustment has been reached for the kind of tape used.

IT WOULD BE idle to pretend that any cassette deck can duplicate all the tonal gloss of a CD. But, given a cassette of good quality, this one comes fairly close.

How much of this is attributable to the HX-Pro circuit is hard to say, since it cannot be switched off for purposes of comparison. But there is no doubt that this deck achieves a level of performance one would normally expect only from costlier machines.

The same is true of the even less expensive NAD 6155, one of the Grand Prix winners in the annual Audio Video International competition. Here, too, the Dolby HX-Pro is used to fortify the deck against the rigors of digital sound from a CD player.

Unlike the Harman-Kardon model, the NAD is not a three-head design equipped for monitoring during the recording process. However, it offers many carefully thought-out features in addition to the HX-Pro, making it an outstanding value for $348.

DEAR ABBY

Film on AIDS full of straight talk

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I just saw a 20-minute film at a church that I think should be required viewing for everyone between the ages of 11 and 65. It is titled "Sex, Drugs and AIDS." Afterward, a panel of medical experts answered questions from the audience.

Van Buren

This film is for males, females, straights, gays or bisexuals; also for IV drug users and especially teenagers. It stressed that everyone who is sexually active can be a victim of AIDS. This film really opened my eyes.

I understand that some civic-minded people and Houston citizens interested in public health were the sponsors of this meeting. It was open to the public and there was no charge. I went out of curiosity because everyone is talking about AIDS, and I just can't say enough about how terrific I thought it was. — SAFE AND ALIVE IN HOUSTON

DEAR SAFE AND ALIVE: The film, "Sex, Drugs and AIDS," was produced by ODN Productions, Suite 304, 74 Varick St., New York, N.Y. 10013. It is available as a videocassette to qualified civic and community organizations for $35 a print. It has been endorsed by the American Foundation for AIDS Research.

I have seen it, and agree it should be seen by everyone between the ages of 10 and 65. It's the kind of plain talk young (and older) people can relate to.

DEAR ABBY: A new club just opened up deep in the heart of Texas. It's a country-western club and is decorated inside and out western style.

The owner asked for suggestions as to what to put on the doors of the restrooms. I suggested "Cows" and "Bulls." He used my suggestion, and in three days he got four complaints from women who resented being called "cows," so he changed it to "heifers." "Heifers" has been on the door for three months, and he hasn't had one complaint.

As far as I'm concerned, "heifers" sounds worse than cows. Comments welcomed. — PROUD TEXAN

DEAR TEXAS: Since a heifer is a young cow who has never had a calf, some women may deem the term "heifers" more flattering than "cows" — which I find utterly ridiculous.

What's the matter with "His" and "Hers," "Men" and "Women," or "Ladies" and "Gentlemen"? Or, if a picture is worth 10,000 words, use a picture of a cowboy and a cowgirl on appropriate doors. Foreign tourists who can't read English might appreciate it — and that's no bull.

DEAR ABBY: I am a young, happily married woman with two children. Last year my parents divorced, and I just learned that my father is having an affair with my mother-in-law, who is still married and living with her husband. This came as a shock to me because I never suspected that my in-laws were having problems.

My husband is aware of what's going on between my father and his mother, and says it's none of his business, it doesn't bother him, and he doesn't care to discuss it.

Well, it bothers me, and I do want to discuss it. I'm afraid if my father breaks up my in-laws' marriage, it might break up our marriage. What should I do? — WORRIED

DEAR WORRIED: You can't force your husband to discuss anything he doesn't care to discuss. However, if you feel that your own marriage is threatened for any reason, it's important for you and your husband to discuss the matter with a professional counselor.

About the affair between your father and your husband's mother: If you want to let them know that you disapprove of their behavior, go ahead, but philandering parents are no more inclined to accept advice and criticism from their adult children than vice versa.

DEAR ABBY: I have had a quote for a very long time, but I have never been able to locate the source. Can you — or one of your readers — help me? This is it:

"When, wherever you live in the world, you can have children only when you wish, that will be a revolution with more far-reaching effects on the pattern of human culture than the discovery of atomic energy." — M.J.S. IN ORLANDO

DEAR M.J.S.: That statement was made by Lord Brain, a former president of the International Society of Internal Medicine, Obstetrics and Gynecology in Great Britain. He died in 1966.

Nancy talks to those who will listen

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the three months of the Iran sales storm, President Reagan and many top White House officials have shunned reporters to avoid their persistent questions.

But not Nancy Reagan.

Since the secret dealings with Iran first came to light, the first lady has not been shy about stepping before the microphones to explain her husband's views.

She has tried to fill a void created while Reagan has been out of the public eye and as numerous aides have departed from the White House.

Even the once highly visible Donald T. Reagan, the presidential chief of staff who sometimes seemed to act as Reagan's alter ego, has faded into the background, fending off calls from Capitol Hill and elsewhere for his resignation.

Reagan has not held a formal news conference since Nov. 19. Aides point to his Jan. 5 prostate surgery and six-week recuperation period as keeping him from adopting a full schedule. But no date for a news conference has been announced.

Such reticence drew charges from Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., that Reagan's White House has become "passive" in the face of its problems, while Reagan has become "dangerously disengaged" from the business of governing.

In the attempt to counter such talk, the once-reticent Mrs. Reagan has taken advantage of nearly a half-dozen media events in recent weeks to speak out on her husband's behalf.

In fact, those who know the former actress well say she savors the role of defending her husband, particularly when she perceives that his image is being damaged or when his health is at stake.

"It's very much in character," says Sheila Tate, Mrs. Reagan's former press secretary. "Whenever she feels in a good position to clarify a situation, to defend something on his behalf, she does."

Recalling the time that Reagan's age was an issue in his re-election campaign, Mrs. Tate said the first lady was quick to seek out reporters.

"She walked right up to the rope (to talk to reporters) at every airport — she'll do that when she has something to say," said Mrs. Tate, who is now a public relations executive in Washington.

One senior White House official, speaking on condition he not be identified, called "overblown" reports that Mrs. Reagan's involvement in her husband's affairs even went to the extent of taking a role in drafting his State of the Union address.

But he said it was clear Mrs. Reagan has kept a tight rein on the president's activities out of concern for his recuperation, and had particular interest in the speech because it was the president's first public appearance following his surgery.

"It's very much in character. ... Whenever she feels in a good position to clarify a situation, to defend something on his behalf, she does."

— Mrs. Reagan's former press secretary

"She is demonstrating normal wifely concerns and she understands that there are a multitude of pressures on her husband to do more than he should, so she has to be strong in resisting those," the official said.

White House officials know Mrs. Reagan has a tradition of being fiercely protective of her husband. She is even known to prompt his responses to questions. But recently she has become one of the only sources to reporters on what the president is thinking.

"Sometimes, you know, it's harder to say nothing, when you really want to say something," Mrs. Reagan told reporters last month, in an attempt to explain her husband's silence.

As she toured a local children's hospital in mid-December, the first lady described her husband as "very anxious" to have former National Security Council officials Oliver L. North and John M. Poindexter testify about the Iranian arms sales and the alleged diversion of funds to the Nicaraguan rebels.

In an interview with The Associated Press one day later, she asserted that her husband felt "deceived" by his aides, but that her husband would recover from "a valley" of his presidency.

"There's nothing more that he can do," she reasoned. "Now it is up to North and Poindexter." She termed the whole affair "frightening" to the public, and that explained Reagan's precipitous drop in the opinion polls.

Even though the president has started to add to his work load and make brief public appearances, reporters have been barred from the Oval Office since the first week of December.

Reagan spokesman Marlin Fitzwater has denied assertions that Mrs. Reagan has been the one who has ordered reporters be kept at a distance.

In her latest get-together with reporters last week, Mrs. Reagan offered her own tongue-in-cheek view.

"Oh, he's dying to talk to you," she said with a teasing tone in her voice. "Every morning he wakes up and he says, 'I'm just dying to talk.'"

Bears claw past Red Raiders in second overtime

Associated Press

LUBBOCK — Texas Tech Coach Gerald Myers says his tired Red Raiders just couldn't keep pace with Baylor, which eked out a victory to snap a second-place Southwest Conference tie.

"I was pleased with the way our guys came back in the game. They had an uphill battle and got back in it to make it a one- or two-point game," Myers said after the Bears grabbed a 65-62 double overtime basketball win Wednesday night in Lubbock.

"We missed a lot of opportunities late in the game and I think some of those missed free throws were because of fatigue. Our guys played extremely hard just to get back in the game. Baylor deserves a lot of credit for keeping their poise when it got tight," said Myers.

Baylor junior center Darryl Middleton dropped in a 6-foot jump shot with 48 seconds left in double overtime for the victory.

Baylor is now 13-9 on the season and 8-4 in the SWC, while Tech dropped to 12-11 and 7-5.

Tech's Greg Crowe missed two free throws with four seconds remaining in regulation and the score tied at 49 to send the contest to the first overtime.

A 3-point basket by Sean Gay, who scored a career-high 26 points, and a lay-in by Kent Wojciechowski gave the Raiders a 54-49 lead 2½ minutes into the extra period.

The Bears tied the score at 56 on a 3-pointer by Mark Buchanan to force the second extra period.

Michael Williams led all Baylor scorers with 18 points. The Bears turned 10 of his points and 10 Tech turnovers into a comfortable 33-17 halftime lead.

ryl McDonald sank a one-handed jump shot to give the Aggies the win.

"It was probably as good a man defense as we played this season. I thought our guys blocked out well under the boards," said A&M coach Shelby Metcalf.

Longhorn guard Wayne Thomas tied the game at 54-54 with two minutes left with a 3-point jumper, then put Texas out front with 49 seconds left when he grabbed his own rebound and muscled under the basket for a layup.

"We just couldn't get over the hump all night," said Texas coach Bob Weltlich. "It was a lot of goofy things all night. We just didn't play well enough to win."

"We practiced like dogs yesterday," said Texas coach Bob Weltlich. "If we ever learn to make a power layup, we're going to be devastating. We must have missed a dozen of them."

Forward Dennis Perryman was 2-of-7 from the floor, while forward Raynard Davis was 3-of-7.

The win broke A&M's five-game losing streak, the team's longest since 1981. It also snapped the Longhorns' three-game winning streak.

Texas' Wayne Thomas, left, sneaks up from behind to swipe the ball from Texas A&M's Keron Graves in Southwest Conference basketball play Wednesday night. The Aggies came away with a 58-56 victory in Austin.

Arkansas came back from an 11-point deficit with 17:21 left in the game, but fell to 14-11 when Philip McKellar's 3-point field goal attempt dipped in and out with three seconds left.

"I really wasn't the designated 3-point man," McKellar said. "But when I got the ball after the rebound, I pump-faked it and let it go. I thought it was in, but it came out."

Houston senior center Greg Anderson led the Cougars with 19 points. Anderson had just seven points in the first half but did severe damage inside the Razorback defense in the second half.

Houston moved to 15-7 for the season and 7-4 in the SWC. Arkansas' SWC record dropped to 5-7. The loss was Arkansas' second in 10 games at Barnhill Arena this season.

Sooners nab Bradley; Oliver, Mechler, Kendrick to WTSU

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

University of Oklahoma tight end coach Charlie North had that "canary sure tasted good" smile about him Wednesday afternoon at the Midland Lee fieldhouse as he watched Rebel John Bradley become a Sooner by signing a football national letter of intent.

"I think it's been a good day for us," said North smugly. "Unless we've lost one that I'm not aware of, and I've been keeping in touch, we will have signed 22 players from Texas before the day is out."

"We have 30 scholarships to offer and we counted 22 last night in our corner from Texas. This is the biggest year we've had in Texas since 1975. Coach (Barry) Switzer is really going to be pleased when he hears about all of them."

North ended his busy day with stops in Oklahoma, the Panhandle and finally Midland to ink Bradley. "It's been a busy day, but one worth it."

West Texas State also made a Midland stop Wednesday afternoon, plucking two Midland High players and another from Lee in a productive stop by WTSU assistant Paul Arslanian.

Midland High's Mike Mechler, a lineman, and Tyrone Oliver, a running back signed for the purpose of returning punts and kickoffs, signed with the Buffaloes as did Lee line-backer John Kendrick.

But Bradley, the 6-2, 220-pound lineman who will be tried at line-backer at OU, was the local plum of the year.

Bradley started getting calls from Nebraska and Oklahoma State last summer. The Sooners jumped into the picture before school started. No Southwest Conference teams were interested in him, a fact that doesn't seem to bother him.

"I didn't really want to go to a Texas school anyway. I always felt like the Big Eight had the best competition," said Bradley. "Nebraska and Oklahoma State were the first schools to show an interest, but I was always hoping that Oklahoma would, too."

"When they did, it was pretty well settled where I wanted to go. I visited in Norman for three days in January and it felt good to be around the coaches and players."

Since Bradley knew that teams were interested in him prior to his senior season, there added pressure on him during the season when Lee posted an 8-2 record and a fourth consecutive trip to the playoffs.

"I didn't worry too much about it. I was just going to let all that stuff take care of itself at the end of the season and keep my mind on football," said Bradley. "I didn't like the way our season ended, but it was a productive year overall. Now I have to go up there and replace Brian Bosworth at Oklahoma."

Last year Lee sent Jake Young to Nebraska, another offensive lineman who got to take a few shots at Bradley. Now they will be competitors again.

"He used to beat me around pretty good. Now, maybe, I can repay him a bit. That's a fun situation," said Bradley.

Bradley's mother, Margaret, played defensive back for her son during the recruiting campaign. "I intercepted a lot of calls for him."

"But this was all a wonderful experience because we got to know about a lot of schools and learned a lot. It really wasn't a disruptive thing."

"He likes football and wants to play, so I'm very happy for him and happy with his choice."

Kendrick, Oliver and Mechler were less recruited than the highly touted Bradley, but all three are happy to be heading for WTSU.

"It'll be kind of fun with two Bulldogs and a Rebel on the same team," said Oliver. "I know John (Kendrick) well and I'm looking forward to playing with him, and of course, I've been around Mechler a lot."

Oliver said that WTSU wants him for returning punts and kickoffs. "They said I could start next year returning punts and kickoffs because they lost everyone to graduation and I'm the only one they are recruiting in that area.

"It's an honor for me to go to West Texas because they won the Lone Star championship last season and any time you go with a team that has a winning percentage, it's an honor."

"There is one problem, however. I don't know about the weather up there. It gets awfully cold. If I can get through that, I can get through anything."

Kendrick got a couple of letters from other colleges, but "West Texas was the only school that showed any real interest."

Kendrick added, "I feel good about it though. I've been up there and I like the enthusiasm."

Aggies haul bluest chips in SWC pot

Associated Press

Texas A&M got what it wanted — and more — in the national letter-of-intent sweepstakes.

Aggies Coach Jackie Sherrill and his staff evaluated every running back in the country, he said, but Texas blue chip running backs Randy Simmons of McKinney and Darren Lewis of Dallas Carter were "the best in the country," Sherrill said Wednesday.

The Aggies, in a recruiting bonanza regarded as among the best nationwide, landed both of the backs, along with a treasure of other top athletes including Crane's Gerald Mitchell.

Four of the 14 athletes rated as "can't miss" college prospects in a poll of Southwest Conference recruiting coordinators signed with Texas A&M. Three other blue chippers signed with Oklahoma and two each with Arkansas, Texas and Baylor.

One member of the prestigious group — running back Anthony Ray of Wharton still hasn't decided whether he'll play at Arizona State, Nebraska or Baylor.

"We had a very good recruiting class. ... I'm very, very happy," Sherrill said at a Wednesday night press conference.

He called the recruiting harvest he reaped "the best, coming in" of any since his arrival at Texas A&M.

In addition to Simmons and Lewis, the Aggies also won the signature of two other high school All-Americans — offensive lineman Matt McCall of Lufkin and Greg Lakin of Cypress-Fairbanks — plus the prized Mitchell, a running back from Crane.

TEXAS TECH signed a top running back in 6-0, 200-pound Anthony Lynn of Celina, but had to withstand an 11th-hour bid by the Texas Longhorns, who went after Lynn after Simmons elected to sign with the Aggies. Lynn, who had committed verbally to the Red Raiders, remained in the Tech camp.

Southern Methodist, in shambles because of alleged violations of NCAA rules that could result in shutting down its football program entirely, has no head coach and no athletic director, and had no signees on Wednesday.

"SMU will not be issuing any initial football scholarships for 1987 until a new head coach has been appointed. We are holding our 14 scholarships for this year to be issued at the discretion of the new coach," acting Athletic Director Dudley Parker said.

Texas Christian had only 10 scholarships to dole out because of NCAA sanctions for past violations, but Coach Jim Wacker liked his group — especially linebacker Rob Phenix, a 6-8, 270-pound All-American from Apple Valley, Minn.

TCU recruiting coordinator Ray Sewall said in a couple of years Phenix "has a chance to be really something special" and said 6-3, 237-pound linebacker Jordy Reynolds from Houston Stratford "is going to be a really, really good player."

Wednesday's Answer: Jim Flynn was the only one to ever KO Jack Dempsey.

SMU won't appeal decision

DALLAS (AP) — Any ruling or finding against Southern Methodist University by the NCAA's Committee on Infractions will neither be appealed nor contested, according to the school's interim president.

SMU also will ask that it be allowed to levy its own "severe sanctions" for improprieties in its football program, William Stallcup said Wednesday in a statement before he departed for Coronado, Calif., to appear before the NCAA panel on Friday.

Stallcup, along with Lonnie Kliever, faculty representative to the NCAA, will head the delegation to California, which will report the university's findings and propose penalties evolving from its three-month investigation of its football program.

Painful truth: Yesterday a babe, today an expert

The long-time Midland High trainer mentioned that one of the speakers at this Saturday's Sports Medicine Seminar at Midland College would be Dr. Jim Montgomery. At first, it made no impression.

When he added it was the same one who played football at Midland High, "Ross' little brother," it made a big impression.

IT SEEMED there had hardly been time to graduate from college, go on to medical school and become established enough to become an authority.

As it turned out, not only had enough time passed to earn a medical degree and complete internship and residency obligations once, but enough years had elapsed to do it a couple of times.

A call to the Southwestern Medical School confirmed that Doc hadn't been putting me on. The Jim Montgomery who had been destined to play pro football like his dad (Detroit Lions) and older brother Ross (Chicago Bears) had somehow strayed from the beaten path.

Like Ross, Jim, a bearsized lineman, went to TCU and played football.

"I tore up my left knee at Midland High and played three years before tearing up my right knee at TCU," Dr. Montgomery recalls. "All my life I had competed with Ross. I finally realized I'd never be the athlete he was and decided it was time to 'compete' in another way."

MONTGOMERY kind of stumbled into a career in medicine. The first prod in that direction came in high school when "Mrs. (Ernestine) Pilcher, God Bless her, an English teacher, grabbed me in my senior year and asked me what I was going to do in life? I told her I'm a football player' in my best dumb-jock voice. She suggested with my marks, I could do more."

At TCU a biology professor exerted another shove toward medicine, so now, a father of two little girls, two and four, Dr. Montgomery is assistant professor of orthopedics and director of the residency education for Southwestern Medical School in Dallas.

He is also president of The Society of Team Physicians.

His involvement with team athletics, he attended Olympic training sessions at Colorado Springs in 1963 and Baton Rouge in 1965, where he worked with the ice hockey and soccer programs, could lead to his appointment as a physician for the U.S. in the 1988 Winter Olympics at Calgary.

THIS WEEK at MC, his area of expertise will be in knees, rehabilitation and bracing, and shoulder injuries.

"The changes since the 1960s, when I played, are amazing. I remember Bill Brown suffered a fractured leg above the knee in a 1960 game in San Angelo and was in a body cast and confinement for six months. Today, for the same injury, we'd have him up in four days."

Amazing, Jim, but what've you got for those sneaky years? Oh, never mind, you're just out of high school and wouldn't know anything about that.

Smith low-keys win No. 600

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — It was another game, another day of squeaking sneakers and bouncing basketballs — and another basketball victory — No. 600 for North Carolina Coach Dean Smith.

The victory that made Smith the 10th winningest coach in NCAA Division I history came with a minimum of fanfare.

The crowd chanted 6-0-0 briefly, and cheerleaders unfurled a banner congratulating the 55-year-old coach, who disappeared quickly after the third-ranked Tar Heels' 94-85 victory over Wake Forest Wednesday night into the tunnels at the Dean E. Smith Center.

Smith remembers his first victory, an 80-46 victory over Virginia in the 1961-1962 season. The Tar Heels finished 8-9, the only losing season Smith has had at North Carolina. He remembers the game mostly for what he forgot.

"We beat Virginia. That was a famous," Smith said. "I can say I was so organized, the team was ready to play and the referee said, 'Where's the ball?'"

"I thought of everything except the most important thing — you have to have a game ball to play with," Smith said. "That seems like 80 years ago."

In the seasons since, Smith has won 600 games and lost 173, for a winning percentage of .776. His teams have won 20 or more games for 17 straight seasons, and the Tar Heels finished first or second in the Atlantic Coast Conference from 1967 until 1985. The Tar Heels have been in the NCAA tournament field for the past 12 seasons. North Carolina won the NCAA national championship in 1982 — Smith's 20th season — with a 63-62 victory over Georgetown and Patrick Ewing.

But Smith said the statistics don't mean much. "This is not a case of counting numbers. I'm concerned with this team and bringing out the best in it. I'm taking my life one day at a time. This is not a day to reflect any more to me than last week when our staff won 599. I don't see the particular significance," Smith said.

San Antonio's Alvin Robertson must know what it was like at the Alamo as the Spurs

Home court advantage takes one on the chin

Associated Press

What's happened to the home court advantage in the NBA?

There were five games Wednesday night and the home teams, which had won only 176 of 538 games, lost each time. Among the winners were Atlanta and Detroit, which remained one-half game apart in the torrid Central Division race, thanks to outstanding performances by Dominique Wilkins of the Hawks and Bill Laimbeer of the Pistons.

Wilkins scored 35 points and grabbed 13 rebounds in Atlanta's 109-82 rout of the hapless Los Angeles Clippers. Meanwhile, Laimbeer scored nine of his 30 points in overtime as Detroit beat Philadelphia 123-113.

The top performance, however, was turned in by Indiana rookie Chuck Person, who scored a career-high 42 points, including six 3-point goals in as many attempts, as the Pacers beat the Phoenix Suns 121-105.

Although Wilkins had 21 points in the first half, Atlanta was only ahead 52-47 at the intermission. But Glenn "Doc" Rivers scored six points to spark a 15-5 run during the first 5:50 of the third quarter and Atlanta also had a 13-1 burst in the last two minutes of the period, highlighted by Wilkins' double-pump reverse slam dunk.

Pistons 123, 76ers 113

In addition to his 30 points, Laimbeer grabbed 20 rebounds. Isaiah Thomas added 29 points for the Pistons while Philadelphia's Maurice Cheeks scored 31. Philadelphia led 106-101, but Detroit tied it 107-107 with 35 seconds remaining on a tip-in by Laimbeer.

In the overtime, Laimbeer scored on an 18-footer, Thomas connected from three-point range and Laimbeer swished another 18-footer to make it 114-107 with 2:26 left.

Pacers 121, Suns 105

Person, whose previous best was 34 points, had 21 by halftime and added 12 more in a pivotal third period. John Long's jumper put the Pacers ahead to stay 61-59 in the third quarter. A short time later, Person's 3-point goal made it 67-63.

Steve Stipanovich, who finished with 22 points and 11 rebounds, made a layup and a three-point play as the Pacers extended the lead to 74-65. Person swished another 3-point plus a jumper to put the Pacers up 86-71 entering the final period.

The victory was the Pacers' eighth on the road this season, their most in the last six years. Walter Davis paced Phoenix with 23 points.

Bucks 127, Knicks 104

Jack Sikma and John Lucas established season highs with 28 and 27 points, respectively, and keyed a 22-4 third-period streak. New York's Patrick Ewing scored 11 of his 29 points during a 13-5 spurt that gave the Knicks a 79-73 lead.

But Ewing was called for his fourth personal foul 14 seconds later and sat out the rest of the third quarter while the Bucks turned the game around with a 17-0 run that gave them a 96-79 lead.

Bullets 133, Spurs 108

Moses Malone scored 32 points, including 17 in the third period, in what Washington Coach Kevin Loughery termed "probably our best game of the year." Leading 89-82 with two minutes left in the third period, the Bullets wrapped it up with a 19-7 burst.

Washington's Jeff Malone and San Antonio's Walter Berry each had 24 points as the Spurs lost for the second straight night after taking a seven-game win streak into the All Star break.

The Malones got things started early with Jeff firing away from the outside to score 18 points in the first half. Moses, meanwhile, controlled the inside and finished the half with 14 points.

From A+ to F-, the SWC report card

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

Jackie Sherrill dramatically increased his shot at a national football championship with the kind of talent the Texas A&M Aggies signed Wednesday.

The Texas A&M coach, who has two consecutive Southwest Conference championships to his credit, signed the offensive linemen and running backs he needed to fuel an awesome machine.

The Scholastic Aptitude Test could be the Aggies' biggest foe.

Randy Simmons of McKinney and Darren Lewis of Dallas Carter, the top running backs in the state, were thrown for losses in their first SAT outings but have another chance this spring.

The report card:
TEXAS A&M — GRADE A PLUS: The Aggies filled every need. Sherrill will be favored to win the SWC title with this bunch until the mid-1990s. There was such an embarrassment of riches that Sherrill foot-dragged on announcing them to the media, waiting until every other SWC school had gone public. He didn't want to scare off any of his flock with word about the competition. There may not be enough footballs to go around for the backfield talent Sherrill has assembled.

ARKANSAS — GRADE A: Ken Hatfield's best group, diverse and talented. LaPorte blue chip center Dwayne Spann, an awesome run blocker, at 6-6, 270 was the centerpiece from Texas not to mention running back Barry Foster of Duncannonville and Sulphur Springs quarterback Fred McGill. Hatfield got the best of the best in Arkansas.

TEXAS — GRADE B: David McWilliams missed out on the second coming of Earl Campbell by losing Simmons to the Aggies. Campbell was even hired as a recruiter but couldn't beat Sherrill. McWilliams rallied, however, with a solid crop that included the state's best wide receiver, Johnny Walker of San Antonio Holmes, and the best linebacker in Mical Padgett of Beaumont Central.

BAYLOR — GRADE B MINUS: Grant Teaff missed on a franchise running back but got some sweet consolation by landing tight end Steve Stusman of Daingerfield and offensive lineman Dwayne Phome of Dallas Carter, rated among the top 14 players in the state. Teaff also got a much needed quarterback in classy Ricky Vestal of Cypress Fairbanks, the best QB to STAY in Texas, not to mention excellent linebacker Santana Dotson of Houston Yates.

TCU — GRADE C PLUS: Monster Parade All-American linebacker (how's 6-8, 270-pounds sound?) Rob Phenix of Apple Valley, Minnesota (he called the Horned Frogs) capped off a short (13 scholarships) but quality list. QB Charlie Honea of McKinney could be a real sleeper. By the way, Phenix will be given a shot at linebacker, but will likely wind up in the defensive line.

TEXAS TECH — GRADE C:

Spike Dykes had a good but not great bunch. He helped himself at running back by landing Anthony Lynn of Celina, who had 5,500 career yards. Leaving no potential recruiting stone unturned, Dykes also got a transfer from Southern Methodist and another from Oklahoma.

RICE — GRADE D PLUS: A hustling Jerry Berndt got a group who can pass calculus and also play football. The Owls are still short of first division SWC players, but are making some talent inroads.

HOUSTON — GRADE D: Not an overwhelming start by new Coach Jack Pardee, but don't underestimate his ability to improve what he's got.

SMU — GRADE F MINUS: A sad situation for the Ponies. They had 15 scholarships but must sweat out an NCAA decision on the death penalty which would abolish football for two years. All the prime recruiting horses have left the barn and the new coach, if there is one, might as well wait until next year.

Kendrick was one of those players who was switched to linebacker last spring, a new position for him. Sometimes that hurts a kid in the recruiting game.

"With my size and experience, I didn't think too many schools would look at me," said Kendrick. "But I started feeling at home at linebacker after the Midland High game. Coach (Earl) Miller worked me hard and he's a great linebacker coach."

Father John Kendrick added, "I didn't really dream of John playing college ball. I felt like he was a pretty good football player, but Coach Miller gave him a chance to produce and he did. I'm proud of him."

Meckler, at 6-2, 225, said some larger schools flirted with him, but it was WTSU that finally came up the scholarship offer.

"I heard Texas looked at some film on me, but coach (Doug McCutchen) said they thought I was too small," Meckler said. "In a way, that made me feel good because I never thought I'd be too small for anything."

"Still, I'm really excited about West Texas State. I talked to some smaller schools, but I think this is best for me. Basically, they have a good football team and it's a good academic school. They said they wanted to use me as a defensive lineman, but I don't have any preference. I'll play quarterback if they want be to."

QUEBEC — Philadelphia's Dave Poulin scored with 1:15 left as the NHL All-Stars defeated the Soviet Union National Team 4-3 with a brilliant defensive performance in the opening game of Rendez-Vous 87.

The goal topped a superb performance by the NHL's penalty-killing units, which allowed only one shot to the Soviets in four power play opportunities. Edmonton goaltender Grant Fuhr played a big part in the victory with several spectacular saves while stopping 21 Soviet shots...

BASEBALL

BALTIMORE — Third baseman Ray Knight, the Most Valuable Player in the 1986 World Series with the New York Mets, came to terms with the Baltimore Orioles.

Knight, 34, hit .391 in the World Series, hitting a home run to drive in the winning run in the decisive seventh-game victory over the Boston Red Sox. He hit .298 during the regular season and drove in 76 runs.

The Mets offered a one-year deal worth $800,000, while Knight sought a two-year guaranteed contract worth some $1.6 million. He reportedly will be paid $475,000, with an extra $125,000 in incentive bonuses...

DENVER — Relief pitcher Bruce Sutter of the Atlanta Braves, known for his split-finger fastball, is recovering from surgery to repair nerve damage to his right shoulder.

Sutter, 34, will not play baseball during the 1987 season but should be ready to play in 1988 if the surgery — the third attempt to repair his arm — is successful.

BOSTON — The Boston Red Sox announced an arbitrator has ruled in its favor in a salary dispute with left-handed pitcher Bruce Hurst.

Hurst had sought $845,000 for the 1987 season while the team's counter-offer was $700,000.

SAN DIEGO — Former San Diego Padres pitcher LaMarr Hoyt was released from a Florida prison, where he served 38 days of a 45-day sentence on a misdemeanor drug conviction...

BETHESDA, Md. — Former Maryland basketball Coach Lefty Driesell says he has withdrawn his name from consideration for the East Carolina coaching job.

"I want to keep my career options open," Driesell said. "I'm not sure what I want to do. I listened to them, but I'll listen to anybody..."

SOCCER

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Kai Haaskivi scored 32 seconds into overtime to give the Eastern Division a 6-5 victory over the West in the Eighth Annual MISL All-Star Game.

The East, trailing 5-4 with 1:52 remaining, pulled goalkeeper Tino Lettieri in favor of a sixth attacker, Michael Collins, who passed to Mike Stankovic, who fired a 30-footer past West goalie Zoltan Toth with 20 seconds left to send the game into overtime...

Bobcats exposed on MTV

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Music Television will be playing the San Angelo Central Bobcats' tune Friday when the team, accustomed to cheering fans after football victories, gets a free plug on the cable network instead.

"It's definitely not a local feed; it's going nationwide," Scott Cable general manager Don Dooley said on Wednesday. "I really don't know for certain what it's going to be about. I do have a rough idea, though."

"I think Mark Goodman (video disc jockey) is going to wish good luck to the guys and congratulations on their achievements, and to have a good banquet and dance," he said.

The football team is scheduled to be mentioned on MTV by Goodman during the 2:30 p.m. Friday segment of the "Music News." The segment comes a day before Central's football banquet.

MTV officials said the salute to Central will be the first time the cable network has honored a high school for athletic accomplishments.

Central head football coach Jimmie Keeling said he had not been contacted by the network about the 60-to-90 second spot.

"The only thing I know about is when it is going to be on," said Keeling.

Keeling said he is not a regular viewer of the rock video station. "I'm not a big MTV watcher, but I know what it is for sure," said the eight-year Central head coach.

Dooley said having the Bobcats on MTV was not his goal when he contacted the cable network's offices earlier this month.

"At first, I asked them if they would cut me some spots to insert into the videos at the dance, and they asked if there wasn't something else they could do for us."

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: You would be wise to make your move soon. Someone is prepared to bend over backward to help you! Enjoy the tall stories friends tell, but do not invest in their projects. Tempers could flare this summer over the division of funds or property. Keep a cool head. Even if some of your ideas seem far out, remain true to your own style. Party invitations abound. Romantic involvement will deepen.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Golf great Patty Berg, actress Kim Novak, California Angels reliever Donnie Moore, actress Stockard Channing, country singer Tennessee Ernie Ford, actress Carol Lynley, actors George Segal and Oliver Reed, soap actress Sharon Gabet, First Lady Bess Truman, Iowa artist Grant Wood.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Expect the unexpected today, especially in the late afternoon. A move to another state or city could be part of the picture. Your property increases in value if you decorate or renovate. Show imagination.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Teamwork may be difficult to promote today. In social situations, you dazzle others with your charm and wit. A trip or visit will be successful. You enjoy letting your hair down.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You find the solution to a financial problem after talking with old friends. Creative work proves very lucrative. Age has nothing to do with learning. Go ahead and enroll in weekend classes.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Salespeople should do well today. Mail important letters and hope for a quick response. Avoid acting on impulse where career or romance is concerned. Sort out a problem that has been building at home.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your gracious acts or words benefit you in unexpected ways. Discuss a financial problem with experts, following their advice to the letter. A chance meeting boosts your spirits. Issue a special invitation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take advantage of a special opportunity to learn high-tech skills at company expense. Mate or partner is on your side. Divide your time evenly between business and home. Complement loved ones.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Taking weekend classes could increase your earning power but will require family members' cooperation. A secret relationship needs careful nurturing. Extend an invitation to someone who is alone. Offer a sympathetic ear.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You will have to meet certain people more than halfway. Offer compromise solutions whenever possible. Think about your plans for the future. Mate or partner offers practical suggestions. Weigh them carefully.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Mate or partner may have to be treated with kid gloves today. Distant affairs continue to cause confusion. Weekend travel is best postponed. Events at home require your presence.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your intuition may not be as reliable as usual. Go slow. Stick to your regular schedule and tend to your domestic obligations. An antique or secondhand shop offers fine treasures.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Domestic events could cause confusion. Pay more attention to your loved ones' needs. You can help nip gossip in the bud by not repeating it. Avoid all forms of gambling. Enjoy home entertainment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good day for bargain-hunting. Pay more attention to financial experts' advice. A budget revision helps you handle tuition payments. Perform more services for yourself. A self-reliant attitude works wonders!

The great magicians are successful because they can make you believe in the illusions they create. That holds true for the great defenders at bridge as well.

With only three-card spade support, North had to make a waiting bid at his first turn. However, it did not take long for North-South to reach their optimum contract.

Against four spades, West led the ace of clubs and continued with the four to his partner's jack. Declarer ruffed the club king with the eight and West overruffed—with the king!

To appreciate the beauty of this defense, let's pause for a moment to consider what would have happened had West made the seemingly normal play of overruffing with the jack. Declarer would win any return and would have only one play for his contract: a trump fi-ness. That would have succeeded and the contract would have coasted home.

Now we return to what actually happened. West exited with a heart, declarer won in hand and cashed the ace of trumps, both defenders following with a low trump. It seemed to declarer that East had to have the jack of trumps, so when he continued with a low trump from dummy and East followed with the five, South confidently finessed the 10. West produced the jack for the setting trick.

This form of deceptive play is quite common and, used judiciously, it can earn you many an extra trick. However, bear in mind that usually it is correct to win tricks as cheaply as possible, and a successful "swindle" works only when partner can't be fooled by the play into doing something suicidal.

Pat Nixon has cancer surgery

NEW YORK (AP) — Former first lady Pat Nixon has undergone cancer surgery, and doctors said Thursday the prognosis is excellent.

The 74-year-old wife of former President Richard M. Nixon was admitted Monday to Lenox Hill Hospital, and underwent surgery to remove a small, malignant tumor from her mouth the next day, said Deborah Cooke, acting hospital administrator.

"Her prognosis is excellent. No further treatment will be required, and she will be discharged soon," said Ms. Cooke. Her husband has been with her during the ordeal, Cooke said.

Wednesday afternoon, Nixon, his daughter Tricia Cox and her 7-year-old son, Christopher, visited Mrs. Nixon.

Nixon called his wife "remarkable." "She's a very strong woman, you know. It's a rugged operation," he said.

"She's doing very well," Mrs. Cox said. "We bought her lots of Valentine's day cards from the gift shop. They're all over her room."

The operation was performed by Dr. Stanley Blaugrund, a head and neck surgeon, and surgical dentist Dr. Melvin Blake. Blake, whom Nixon credited with discovering the tumor, said his patient was "talking, eating and is ambulatory."

Mrs. Nixon suffered a stroke in 1976 and was treated for bronchial pneumonia three years later. In 1983, she had a less severe stroke. A year later, she was treated for a lung infection.

She and her husband reside in suburban Saddle River, N.J.

UNIVERSITY CITY, Calif. (AP) — Ray Charles received the Top Hat award as a role model for youth, and his son, Ray Charles Jr., was one of those giving testimonials at the dinner.

"You've maneuvered your way through life to overcome obstacles, and you didn't let them dampen your spirits or your courage," Charles Jr. told his father, who is blind.

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Gov. Mario Cuomo says he's thinking about buying a mini-motor home, but insists it wouldn't be for the presidential campaign trail.

Questions about what Cuomo was up to began after reporters spied a recreational vehicle on the grounds of the Executive Mansion.

Cuomo, who admits he's looking into the possibility of running for president, said he's thinking of getting a van to make three-hour drives from Albany to New York City more productive. Inclement winter weather sometimes forces him to be driven rather than flown.

"I'd like something that I could sit down at a table and work at," Cuomo said on the weekly "Capitol Connection" Public Radio talk show broadcast Wednesday evenings. "I don't want a gas range. I don't want a toilet. I don't want a shower. I don't want little dogs that nod in the back window. I want a table and a chair and a light that I can work at."

Police block the mother of Moshe Tamam, a soldier murdered by Palestinian guerrillas, as she and other angry relatives of terrorists' victims try to break into the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem Wednesday.

Israel calls reports of swap 'baseless'

JERUSALEM (AP) — The government said in an affidavit presented in Supreme Court today that reports of a deal to exchange Arab prisoners for American and other foreign hostages in Lebanon were "completely baseless."

The high court is considering a suit filed by the families of terror victims to try and prevent the government from releasing prisoners convicted of terrorism or suspects on trial for terror attacks.

Earlier today, the court indefinitely postponed hearing the suit, saying police must first investigate if the plaintiffs broke the law when they blocked a justice in his chambers during an emotional demonstration Wednesday.

The affidavit presented by the state prosecutor said "the reports published in the media and on which the families base their petition are completely baseless."

He apparently was referring to the Dava newspaper which cited Israeli and U.S. sources in Washington as saying Israel and the United States were negotiating a package deal to free all foreign hostages in Lebanon.

The affidavit said Israel was making contacts in an effort to retrieve Israeli soldiers, seven of whom are listed as missing or captured in Lebanon since 1982.

"It is natural that we cannot in this statement relate to the details of the efforts being undertaken to redeem our captives," the affidavit said.

Israeli officials have indicated there are ongoing contacts with the International Red Cross about missing soldiers.

The affidavit said Israeli leaders would "act with deep recognition of the pain of the families who lost their loved ones in acts of terror."

ism," but added the government "must face its duty toward soldiers who are in the captivity of a cruel enemy."

The suit was filed by David Pollack and Herzl Amedi, both 60, who lost children in terrorist attacks.

The plaintiffs demand that government officials "explain why they will not prevent actions to release terrorists...in return for hostages and prisoners of war," said Haftali Wurzbarger, a lawyer representing Pollack and Amedi.

Wurzbarger said the families could then seek legislative action to prevent a prisoner release.

On Wednesday, about 10 relatives of terror victims burst into the chambers of Chief Justice Meir Shamgar, weeping and shouting insults as they blocked the doorway and prevented him from leaving.

Justice Aharon Barak said today the three-member court would not make a ruling until police investigated the incident. The court said the demonstration appeared designed to influence the court's decision, which would be a violation of the law.

The possibility of a prisoner deal arose when Shiite Amal militia leader Nabih Berri offered to trade a captured Israeli airman and foreign hostages in Lebanon for 400 Arab prisoners held by Israel. Israeli officials have said they would be willing to discuss such a trade.

Israeli rejects dealing with terrorists in general, but has made exceptions to gain freedom for captured servicemen.

A government official speaking on condition of anonymity said Israel was willing to pay a price to bring home its servicemen, seven of whom are missing or captured in Lebanon since 1982.

Israeli planes hit guerrilla bases

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli warplanes today dive-bombed Palestinian guerrilla bases at a refugee camp in southern Lebanon. Police said one civilian was killed and three people, including two guerrillas, were wounded.

Four fighter-bombers blasted targets at the edge of the Mieh Mieh Palestinian refugee camp and the neighboring Ein El-Dib area south-east of Sidon in two bombing runs at 8:15 a.m., police said.

Eight other jets provided a "protective umbrella," they said.

Intruder didn't seek to hurt royal family, his lawyer claims

LONDON (AP) — A man accused of attacking police with a knife and a hammer in the garden of Kensington Palace, the home of Prince Charles and Princess Diana, did not intend to harm the royal family, his lawyer said today.

The lawyer said the man wanted to protest unemployment.

Bela Mark Stifter, 27, appeared in court today on charges of being equipped for theft and causing bodily harm to two officers from the Royalty and Diplomatic Protection Group.

Charles and Diana and their two sons, Prince William and Prince Harry, were sleeping in the 17th century red-brick palace when Stifter was arrested at about 1 a.m. Wednesday.

Police said Stifter was tackled and handcuffed by two officers before he could breach the wall around the palace. Both officers suffered minor injuries and did not appear in court.

Anti-Semitism resurfaces in play

Hearst News Service

PARIS — A new twist to using anti-Zionism as a cover for anti-semitism has been given by a British play that alleges Jewish leaders conspired to kill thousands of their co-religionists in wartime Europe in order to speed the creation of Israel.

The uproar over the drama, "Perdition," led to last-minute cancellation of its production at a major London theater, but that's unlikely to be the end of the matter.

The play's defenders have condemned the decision as censorship imposed by the "Zionist lobby."

Its critics see the work as the latest incident in a disinformation campaign which began a decade ago when the United Nations General Assembly passed a resolution equating Zionism with racism and fascism.

In spite of condemnation by responsible historians, they believe the campaign has been gradually gaining political "acceptability," especially among leftwing sympathizers in Western Europe and the U.S.

The thesis of "Perdition" is simply that Zionist chiefs collaborated to send 400,000 Hungarian Jews to the extermination camps so that a few of the Zionist "elite" would be spared.

The play claims the Zionist leadership in Palestine knew what was happening but "did not publish or utter a single word of protest."

The best historical scholarship, as well as testimony of surviving witnesses, dismisses these charges as having the same level of credibility as the 19th century's bogus Protocols of Zion.

But the Protocols, which are supposed to contain plans for Jewish world domination, have survived and recently flourished as Arab propaganda, despite being proven a hoax.

The new myth attempts to pin responsibility for the fate of European Jewry during the Second World War on the Jews themselves.

However far-fetched and diabolical, it could turn out to be as hardy a perennial as the Protocols, particularly under the tender, loving care of Soviet propagandists and their helpers.

"Perdition" isn't the work of a guttural-sputtering alumnus of the SS or an embittered Arab nationalist. Its author, Jim Allen, is a British working class radical who has been pounding out "kitchen sink" dramas for many years.

That an old-time leftist like Allen should espouse such a theme tells something of the sources from which present-day anti-semitism springs.

Allen has denied any anti-semitic intent. The director of the Royal Court Theater, where the play was to be staged, backed him up.

The Royal Court is no backstreet playhouse catering to the far-out fringe. It's an important theater, famous in the past for staging such playwrights as John Osborne. The production of Allen's work was planned as a big event of the current theatrical season.

But historian Martin Gilbert, official biographer of Winston Churchill and author of several books on Nazi-occupied Europe, described the play as "replete" with inaccuracies ("on almost every page," Gilbert said) and sinister innuendoes.

Allen's reply was that the Zionists and Israeli diplomats had demanded its suppression because it "uncovered a cloud of guilt."

The play's version of events comes from a pamphlet published thirty years ago by a survivor of the death camps. In it, he accused Rudolph Kastner, a member of the Jewish committee in Budapest in 1944, of collaboration.

Kastner sued for libel and won, a circumstance ignored by Allen.

Numerous studies have since made clear that, far from conniving with the Nazi death squads or covering up the dangers faced by the Hungarian Jews (the last Jewish community intact in Hitler's Europe), Zionist organizations acted just as might have been expected.

They tried to prevent and then delay deportation of the Hungarian Jews. Repeated warnings went out in early 1944 from David Ben Gurion and others to the U.S. and British governments that the Jews faced imminent destruction.

Cease-fire begins in Palestinian camps, but residents still starve

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A cease-fire took hold at besieged Palestinian camps in Beirut on Wednesday, but warring over terms kept food from reaching tens of thousands of refugees already reported reduced to eating cats, dogs and rats.

The Syrian-brokered truce was the latest in a series of abortive efforts to end fighting between Palestinian guerrillas and Shiite Muslim militiamen. During the 12 weeks of combat, the Shiites have blockaded the camps.

The cease-fire took effect at 8 a.m., police and Palestinian spokesmen said, and was basically a food-for-territory deal.

It followed nighttime mortar and rocket clashes around Bourj el-Barajneh and nearby Chatilla camp. Police said two people were killed and seven wounded. That raised the toll in the latest round of Palestinian-Shiite fighting in Beirut and south Lebanon to at least 556 killed, 1,470 wounded.

Syrian army observers and Shiite Amal militia commanders discussed what police termed "procedural arrangements" to let food and medical supplies into Bourj el-Barajneh camp.

There were widespread accounts of camp residents eating cats, dogs and rats, but correspondents could not enter the camps to verify such reports.

A police spokesman said Shiite representatives refused to allow relief supplies into the camp until guerrillas complete a withdrawal from territory they seized outside their camps in south Lebanon.

"Contacts are under way with Palestinian representatives to work out an agreement...but I don't think this can be achieved today (Wednesday)," said the spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Palestinian commanders in south Lebanon's Sidon region said they had not received orders to withdraw from hills they captured from Amal in November and hand them over to Justice Minister Nabih Berri's Syrian-backed Amal.

Berri told reporters in Damascus: "I was promised... (Tuesday) that the Palestinians will complete their withdrawal... (Wednesday) and that Amal will regain its positions east of Sidon."

"If this happens, we shall lift the siege of the camps Thursday morning."

The deal, worked out in Damascus Tuesday, followed reports that the Palestinians, their food gone, are eating rats.

Aquino: Constitution in force, army ready

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corason Aquino declared her new constitution in "full force" Wednesday and said the army will resume operations against Communist rebels, but she did not order a full offensive.

"The truce is over," she said of the cease-fire with the rebels that expired Sunday.

"Send this message out to all our troops so that none may be misled to relax their vigilance to their peril and that of the people they are charged to protect," she told about 500 soldiers at the Camp Aguinaldo military headquarters.

Mrs. Aquino stopped short of putting the army on the offensive against the insurgents, who have made several attacks since the 60-day truce ended. At least 25 people were killed in the attacks.

The new charter extends Mrs. Aquino's term of office to June 30, 1992, but will strip her of sole law-making powers after a two-chamber Congress is elected May 11. Local and regional elections are to follow on Aug. 24.

WORLD in brief

Baghdad neighborhood hit by another Iranian missile

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran fired the 10th missile into Baghdad in a month and said its commandos blew up a key radar base Wednesday, the eighth anniversary of its fundamentalist Shiite Moslem regime.

Iraqi warplanes raided Tehran three times, apparently trying to spoil celebrations of the overthrow of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in February 1979. The war began with an Iraqi invasion in September 1980.

The official Iraqi News Agency quoted a military spokesman as saying the missile landed in a crowded residential neighborhood. He said civilians were killed or wounded, but gave no figures.

Missile attacks "will only increase our determination to strike at the enemy and destroy what has remained of its vital installations," the spokesman said.

Residents said they saw ambulances and fire trucks speeding toward the city's outskirts after the missile exploded at 8:45 p.m.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said the Tehran government had warned Baghdad's four million people before the attack to evacuate the city.

Mexico accedes to students

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A National University board has acceded to demands by striking students, suspending controversial academic reforms and agreeing to create a university congress to debate the disputed program.

The University Student Council, formed last October to demand changes in the reforms, scheduled meetings Wednesday to discuss the board's decisions. Another was set for Thursday to decide whether to lift the two-week-old strike that has halted classes at the 456-year-old National Autonomous University of Mexico.

At the end of a 13-hour meeting, the first between the two sides since the strike began, the board, headed by Rector Jorge Carpizo, approved the congress, one of the students' principal demands.

It pledged to "take on the conclusions" the congress reaches. That agreement appeared to be a compromise between the students' demand that the congress have decision-making power and Carpizo's earlier position that it could make recommendations but that final decision-making power remained with the board, called the University Council.

A 64-member commission including University Council members, students, professors, administrative employees and representatives of Carpizo's office is to be formed to create the congress.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — The government today identified 4,000 people held in detention longer than 30 days under emergency regulations, including 281 children under age 15.

Three of the detainees are 11 years old or younger, 18 are 12 years old, 91 are 13, and 199 are 14, Minister of Law and Order Adriaan Vlok said in his report to Parliament.

Vlok denied there ever were as many as 20,000 people in detention, as has been estimated by the Detainees Parents Support Committee and other monitoring groups since the state of emergency took effect last June 12.

He said more than 1,000 of the current detainees already have been charged in court with murder, arson, malicious damage to property, intimidation or assault.

Dollar stagnant

LONDON (AP) — The dollar strengthened against the Japanese yen today but was little changed against European currencies. Gold improved slightly in Europe after falling in Hong Kong.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose 0.90 yen to a closing 153.85 yen from Tuesday. Japanese markets were closed Wednesday. Later, in London, the dollar was quoted at 153.70 yen.

Dealers said the dollar was helped by U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker's remark Wednesday that the United States felt the dollar has fallen enough against the yen. It has come down from 242 yen in September 1985.

Other dollar rates at mid-morning, compared with late Wednesday:

- 1.8160 West German marks, down from 1.8180
- 1.5390 Swiss francs, up from 1.5345
- 6.0450 French francs, down from 6.0475
- 2.0495 Dutch guilders, unchanged
- 1.2925 Italian lire, up from 1.28925
- 1.3446 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3385

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.5213 dollars, compared with $1.5225 Wednesday.

GOLD

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $401.30 a troy ounce, unchanged from late Wednesday. At mid-morning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $402.

In Zurich, the bid price was $401.75, up from $401 late Wednesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $1.34 to close at a bid $402.87.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.50 a troy ounce, down from Wednesday's $5.53.

Pickens sells Shamrock stock

DALLAS (AP) — A partnership headed by Amarillo oilman T. Boone Pickens Jr. sold its stock in Diamond Shamrock Corp. two days after dropping a bid for taking over the Dallas-based energy company.

Pickens and Alabama businessman John Harbert III, principals in Lucky Partners, sold their 5 million shares of Diamond Shamrock stock Wednesday for $14.50 a share, Pickens said.

They held nearly 5 percent of the company's outstanding shares, which they originally bought for about $12.80 a share, not including expenses incurred in a costly takeover battle.

The sale made Diamond Shamrock shares the most actively traded on Wall Street, with about 10 million shares changing hands, reportedly spurred by advice from investment analysts who think the price of a restructured Diamond Shamrock could rise as high as $20 a share.

Pickens declined comment on whether he would make another attempt on the company after completion of a restructuring program that would spin the company's refining and marketing division into an independent company based in San Antonio.

"We're no longer a stockholder, and that's the answer to that," said Pickens, general partner in the Amarillo-based Mesa Limited Partnership.

Diamond Shamrock spokeswoman Ginger Shearburn said Wednesday's trading activity represents an endorsement of the company's restructuring program.

The company last week started the plan by issuing $300 million in preferred shares and class voting rights to Prudential Insurance Co. of America.

A "poison pill" provision and a $17-a-share tender offer by Diamond Shamrock to buy 20 million of its shares were seen as impediments to the Lucky Partners takeover bid.

Pickens said the Diamond Shamrock board's refusal to vote on his $15-a-share, $2.1 billion offer for all outstanding common shares led to his withdrawing the bid and his stake in the company.

Tipperary reports higher earnings

Tipperary Corp., a Midland-based oil and gas concern, reported first quarter earnings of $17.4 million for the period ended Dec. 31, 1986.

The significant earnings were due to the completion of the company's restructuring in December, which produced a one-time non-cash gain of $18.2 million on extinguishment of debt.

The earnings, on revenues of $4.7 million, compare to earnings of $679,000 on revenues of $10.3 million for the same period a year ago. Income per common share is 33 cents, up from 3 cents a year ago.

Average prices for the quarter were $13.76 per barrel of oil and $1.36 per Mcf for gas, down from $28.50 per barrel and $2.18 per Mcf for the same period in 1985.

Halliburton records net income of $5.4 million

DALLAS (AP) — Halliburton Co. says it posted net income of $5.4 million for the fourth quarter, down $11.4 million from the same quarter of 1985.

The engineering, construction and oil services company's fourth-quarter revenues were $806.3 million, 33 percent below the $1.2 billion for the comparable period the previous year. Earnings of 5 cents per share compared with 16 cents per share in 1985's fourth quarter.

The company said Tuesday a modest upturn in U.S. drilling activity enabled domestic oil field operations to report the best monthly results since January 1986. But monthly results from international operations continued to slide.

The oilfield services and industrial engineering-construction services groups showed operating losses for the fourth quarter. The marine engineering-construction group showed operating income for the quarter.

For 1986 Halliburton reported a loss of $515.2 million, or $4.85 per share, on revenues of $3.5 billion. In 1985, the company had a loss of $339.3 million, or $3.12 per share, on revenues of $4.8 billion.

The 1986 loss included write-downs of operating assets and related investments, the company said.

"Competition remains intense in all of our major markets," said Thomas Cruikshank, Halliburton president and chief executive officer. "We are still retrenching and consolidating in engineering-construction and in international operations of the oilfield services group. Domestic oilfield service operations continue to improve."

Interior secretary sees gas lines in two to five years

By Joel Connelly
Hearst Washington Bureau

Donald P. Hodel

WASHINGTON — American motorists will be "sitting in gas lines" with in two to five years, U.S. Interior Secretary Don Hodel predicted Wednesday, blasting Canada for opposing development of U.S. oil and gas reserves in the Arctic.

Hodel said exploration of potential oil reserves in Alaska and along the California coast is needed to restrain the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) from again raising prices.

In a breakfast interview with reporters, the Secretary reacted strongly to Canada's declaration last Friday that Alaska's coastal plain be "given wilderness designation" and incorporated into a U.S.-Canadian preserve that would protect the Porcupine Caribou Herd.

Hodel described the Canadian position as "astonishing" in view of Canada's Arctic oil and gas drilling, and he added, "I hope the United States would not be so naive and foolish as to fall for that kind of doublespeak."

"It is an easy 'pro-environmental' position for them to take," said Hodel. "It is no cost to them. If it is successful, it means that we will be more dependent upon imported oil. Canada is a major oil and natural gas producer. To the extent they can persuade us to blindfold ourselves to our own resources, they put us in a position where we will be more dependent on their resources at a higher price."

The Interior Secretary's statements were labeled as "intellectually dishonest" and "a lot of nonsense," by Jim Fulton, a member of Canada's House of Commons from northern British Columbia. Fulton specializes in Arctic issues.

"What clearly needs focus here is the desire of most Canadians and Americans to protect one of the last large wild herds of mammals in all of North America," said Fulton. "For the Secretary of the Interior to stoop so low as to claim Canada would want to protect these unique animals in order to sell oil is disgusting."

Hodel is currently considering a plan, fiercely opposed by the nation's environmental groups, to ask Congress to open 1.5 million acres of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska to oil and gas exploration.

The Secretary said Wednesday the coastal plain, located east of Alaska's Prudhoe Bay oil field, probably contains between 300 million and 9 billion barrels of oil. "Nobody knows until you drill," he added.

The calving ground for the Porcupine Caribou Herd is on the plain. The 180,000 animals of the herd have a range that extends into Canada's newly created North Yukon National Park.

Assistant U.S. Interior Secretary William Horn recently proposed granting leases over the entire potential oil and gas field, including 200,000 acres used by the caribou as calving areas.

"I would like to come forward with a proposal which provides protection we desire for wildlife interests and still provides the opportunity for this country to find out what those resources are," Hodel told reporters.

"Once it is clear OPEC is back in the driver's seat, it will once again exceed the appropriate economic limits for what is a competitive price," said Hodel. "If the United States doesn't toe the line to their satisfaction, they will once again impose an embargo."

The Interior Secretary rejected a variety of conservation measures currently pending in Congress.

Hodel said a proposed import fee on foreign oil "would not do what needs to be accomplished, which is increased domestic exploration." He denounced proposed efficiency standards for home appliances — which President Reagan vetoed last November — as "anti-competitive."

Tim Mahoney, a Washington, D.C., lobbyist with the Sierra Club, took issue with the secretary's remarks. "Any number of alternatives, from fuel efficiency to appliance efficiency, would save us more energy than the Arctic could ever produce," said Mahoney. "This administration likes only energy production, not things which conserve energy."

Picante claim rejected

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The makers of the nation's No. 1 hot sauce will continue to argue in court to convince a judge that a competitor tried to copy its package.

Officials at Pace Foods Inc., the makers of Pace picante sauce, said they won't drop their trademark infringement claim despite the recommendation of a federal magistrate to deny it.

Pace sued Pet Inc., makers of Old El Paso picante sauce, last October, alleging Old El Paso began bottling hot sauce in jars similar to Pace's. Pace also claimed Old El Paso used a label similar to Pace's.

U.S. Magistrate Jamie Boyd, however, rejected the claim Tuesday and urged a U.S. District Court judge to do the same. The companies have 10 days to file objections to Boyd's recommendation.

"We're going to see if we can impact that judgment. What the magistrate passed is no official ruling," Rod Sands, Pace's vice president for sales and marketing, said Wednesday. "We consider this a minor skirmish on a much larger battlefield."

Pace, based in San Antonio, is No. 1 and Old El Paso is No. 2 in the $200-million-a-year industry, according to both companies.

Pace charged that Pet was confusing customers by using a jar similar to Pace's hour-glass design, which two weeks ago was granted a trademark, Sands said.

Pace asked for an injunction and for all the profits Pet derived from the new package and label.

Boyd presided over pre-trial hearings in December. On Tuesday, he recommended to U.S. District Judge H.F. "Hippo" Garcia that Pace's request for an injunction be denied.

It is particularly significant that both products bear their well-known names. Boyd wrote, "There is virtually no opportunity for members of the public to be confused as to the source."

Pet's vice president of marketing, John Ferguson, testified during pre-trial hearings that Pet could lose $1.6 million in lost profits and other costs over a six-month period.

Boyd said, however, that Pet's losses would not be that high.

Sands said it was difficult to determine how much Pace lost due to Pet's new package, but contended customers still are bewildered.

"Since the hearing we've continued to receive letters from consumers saying they're confused," Sands said.

Administration urged to help U.S. oil industry

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan and other officials must put ideology aside to help the devastated domestic oil industry, U.S. Rep. John Bryant said.

Bryant, D-Dallas, admonished the administration Wednesday for pushing a free market policy that permits foreign governments to manipulate the price of oil.

The scene was a hearing of the House subcommittee on energy and power.

"The issue is price. Do you agree that the price of oil is unreasonably low because of manipulation by a foreign government, specifically Saudi Arabia?" Bryant asked Energy Secretary John Herrington.

Herrington agreed.

"Then I say to you, what is the administration doing to protect the domestic industry from that kind of a foreign onslaught? Your philosophy is we just can't do that," to which Herrington also said yes.

Herrington defended the administration's policies, saying that a DOE analysis of all the energy options, including an oil import fee, is being compiled and should be completed by the end of the month.

"Is this the one the president asked for right before the elections last November?" Bryant asked. "And you still have no proposals four months after the president finally addressed this issue?"

Herrington said the administration is currently pursuing a policy that encourages further domestic oil exploration offshore and in Alaska along with a series of deregulatory measures designed to aid the domestic energy producers and cut oil imports.

"I'm obviously for all these proposals," Bryant said, "but they are not going to raise oil revenue to a survivable level."

The consumption of Persian Gulf oil by Americans grew from six percent in 1985 to 15 percent last year, the highest percentage since 1981, while overall oil imports climbed from 27 percent in 1985 to 36 percent by the end of last year.

That's Entertainment — at home and the theater

The next six weeks mark the movie industry's most visible season. From Wednesday morning's announcement of Oscar nominees until the golden statuettes are dispensed at the end of March, movies and the movie business will be on other tongues and minds than at any other time of the year.

Anybody who doesn't believe movies are big business hasn't been to the picture show lately!

It takes five bucks for the opportunity to wedge yourself into a seat designed for the munchkin extras from the Wizard of Oz and several dollars more for concessions, which can be used by theater operators to shore up shrinking profit margins on film rentals.

But, despite all the pitfalls of movie-going, there's still no thrill to compare with the excitement of a well-crafted motion picture unfolding in all its wide screen Technicolor glory. Movie-making skill used to its best advantage can't be equalled by the stage or small screen.

At the same time there are movie performances which are supremely suited to videocassette format. William Hurt's Oscar-winning performance in last year's Kiss of the Spider Woman is a case in point. After a first full-length viewing, watching on videotape made it possible to go back and decipher a few difficult lines of dialogue and fully appreciate the turning points of the psychodrama at work.

Movie makers seemed to view home VCR technology and marketing with the same loathing they held for television 35 years earlier — viewing it as the end of civilized movie-making as we know it. But once again faced with a challenge, Hollywood's magic makers have responded with the quality of movies which will be diminished by living room viewing. They draw us back to the uncomfortable seats, talkative movie mates and the land of semi-precious concessions.

The home video cassette market has significantly impacted the business of making movies as well. Royalties and other income from the home video market can spell the difference between a movie getting made and never seeing the inside of a theater.

This is a particular boon to West Texas cinema buffs who, without videocassettes, have virtually no access to the critically acclaimed "art house" films which can't draw a broad enough audience to make economic sense for local theater operators.

The advance of technology, the proliferation of viewing format choices and relentlessly rising prices have even impacted my personal viewing scale. I've deserted my generic "great, very good, alright, OK, weak and horrible," gradations for a much more precise scale:

- I would (or already have) pay to see that again: Platoon, powerful moviemaking at its best and a shame that Charlie Sheen is not up for best actor honors.
- Well worth the price of admission: Blue Velvet, a visually arresting and psychologically challenging adventure in movie viewing.
- I can't wait for the video-form to watch it again at my leisure: Crimes of the Heart, an acting workshop by three great ladies, but for my money Diane Keaton's quietly intense and disillusioned Lenny was the Oscar-worthy turn, not Sissy Spacek's engagingly off-center Babe.
- Amusing, but I'm glad it was at matinee prices: Crocodile Dundee, lightweight plot, unassuming aspirations — knows its limitations but provides a pleasant surprise.

- Gee, I wish (or I'm glad) I'd waited to rent it with a bunch of friends: The Money Pit, amusing but somewhat disappointing considering its potential — side comments at the TV screen can be almost as much fun as the movie.
- Whew! and to think I almost spent money to see that (also known as TGFC — thank god for cable): Best of Times or Protocol, movies with a star I like but such disappointing reviews that I never got up enough nerve to invest in a night at the movies, thank heavens — but a perfectly suitable way to kill an off Sunday morning.
- And, if HBO picks this junk up I'll cancel my cable! Rhinestone, Sylvester Stallone sings — need I say more!

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Q. A number of large corporations recently announced plans to buy back large blocks of their stocks. What is the purpose of such a move? Does a big buy-back indicate that a company is doing well?

Let's say XYZ Corp. has 100 million shares of common stock outstanding — owned by investors — and announces it will buy back one million shares by making purchases in the open market. Market prices are determined by supply and demand. XYZ stock won't fall in price while the company is in the process of buying up those one million shares.

Each share of stock outstanding represents a share of ownership in the company. Reducing the number of shares increases the percentage of ownership each remaining share represents. It also increases the earnings per share, because the corporation's total earnings then are divided among a smaller number of shares.

When announcing a stock buy-back, a company usually says it is doing so because its stock is underpriced in the market and buying up the stock is a prudent use of corporate money.

Maybe, so. However, when a company is run successfully and produces good profits, its stock seldom trades at bargain basement levels.

Prudent use of corporate funds is to put the money to work making the company larger and more profitable. A strong argument can be made that any excess money a company has on hand should be used to either expand the company's operations or paid out as dividends to stockholders.

Q. My brother is in his late 70s and has about 350 shares of stock, listed on the New York Stock Exchange at about $20 a share. Could he write to the company whose stock he owns to sell his shares? Or, does he have to go through a broker? I hear brokers charge 40 percent?

A. Unless the company is in the middle of a stock buy-back program, the company will not buy your brother's shares. If your brother can find a buyer elsewhere, he can make a private sale.

But the normal way to sell or buy stock is through a broker. What you "hear" about brokerage charges is very wrong. Each brokerage firm sets its own commission rates, which are no

By checking various brokerages for the lowest rate, your brother should be able to unload his 350 shares at a commission cost of less than $100.

Q: I had a problem transferring my account from one brokerage firm to another. Months passed. The Securities and Exchange Commission and the New York Stock Exchange were unable to help me.

Finally, I made one more phone call to the offending brokerage house, reminding them that violation of a fiduciary trust is a crime. I said I would go to the police, advise them of the crime and notify the newspapers and television stations that the brokerage's chief executive officer would be taken out in handcuffs.

The account was transferred the next day. Do you see anything wrong with my procedure?

A. No. I'm on your side and on the side of the uncounted numbers of other brokerage customers who have suffered unnecessary delays and foul-ups getting their accounts transferred.

It must be said, however, that you outbluffed that offending brokerage firm. Surely, you didn't really expect the cops to put the cuffs on that CEO and lead him off to the slammer. Nevertheless, by throwing a good scare about adverse publicity into that brokerage firm, you got it to straighten up and fly right.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
COUNTY OF MIDLAND

In compliance with Article 2544, act, Revised Civil Statutes of Texas, NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT the County of Midland, State of Texas, is now holding a public hearing on the regular meeting of the County | | Commissioner's Court at 3:00 p.m. February 17, 1987 will receive bids and enter into a contract with a bank corporation, association or individual bank of said County for the deposit of the Public Funds of the County of Midland, the Trust Funds of the County and District Clerk of Midland County (which also includes the Registry Trust Fund of the District Clerk) and the Public School Funds of Midland County for the ensuing two years as prescribed by law.

Any banking corporation, association, or individual bank desiring to be designated as County Depository shall make and deliver to the County Judge on or before February 17, 1987 at 3:00 p.m. an application to be designated as such depository. The application shall be accompanied by a statement as to the amount of paid up capital stock and permanent surplus of said bank and a statement showing the financial condition of said bank on the date of application. The application shall also be accompanied by a certified check of not less than one-half of one percent of the County's revenue for the preceding year as a guarantee of the good faith of the bank on the part of said bank, and that if said bank is accepted as county depository, the County shall make and deliver to the County Judge on or before February 17, 1987 at 3:00 p.m. an application to be designated as such depository. The application shall be accompanied by a statement as to the amount of paid up capital stock and permanent surplus of said bank and a statement showing the financial condition of said bank on the date of application. TO ALL INTERESTED PERSONS AND PARTIES

tunity for written public comment concerning application #X 16741A by Tray Vines, Inc. to construct a concrete batch plant in Midland County, Texas.
The proposed location is the northwest corner of Hwy 158 and County Road 1248 (Section 26, Block 40115).
These facilities proposed to emit the following air contaminants: cement dust and other particulate matter. A copy of all materials submitted by the applicant is available for public inspection at the Texas Air Control Board Regional Office at 1901 East
37th St., Suite 101, Odessa, Texas
79702. Telephone (915) 367-3871 ext.
of the Texas Air Control Board 6330
Hwy 290 East, Austin, Texas 78723.
All written comments must be submitted to the Texas Air Control Board by February 28, 1987. Any person residing in a permanent residence within one quarter (1/4) mile of the plant may request a public hearing concerning the proposed construction of the plant.
All comments will be made available for public inspection at the Texas Air Control Board Regional Office. The Texas Air Control Board has scheduled a public hearing regarding this matter on March 3, 1987 at 10:00 a.m. in the Council Chamber on the 1st floor of Midland City Hall, 300 N. Laramie,
Midland, Texas at 10:00 a.m. on February 11, 12, 1987.
