Legislature reconvenes

Workers' compensation key issue

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislators returned to the Capitol today for a 30-day special session on workers' compensation reform, a problem so knotty that the full overtime period likely will be needed to unravel it, a key lawmaker says.

"I would be amazed if it takes less than 30 days," said Rep. Richard Smith, R-Bryan, author of the House's workers' comp bill.

The session was to begin at 2 p.m. today, having been called by Gov. Bill Clements even before the 1989 Legislature's regular session ended May 29.

The highly controversial system for paying benefits for workers who suffer injuries or death on the job is under attack from all quarters.

Labor says it pays too little in benefits. Business says it costs too much. Clements says those high costs are driving new industry — and new jobs — away from Texas. Trial lawyers accuse business of trying to strip Texans of their right to trial by jury.

Clements sets the agenda for any special session by limiting the subjects that can be considered. But for this gathering, he says workers' comp is the first order of business.

"We're going to focus on that, first," Clements said in an interview. "I think they can move expeditiously."

Typically, however, special session wheeling and dealing finds the agenda opened to a wide range of topics — and this one appears no different.

Lawmakers have been bombarding the governor with requests for agenda items. And Clements himself has suggested some possible topics.

When he vetoed the Texas Aeronautics Commission budget on Friday night, the governor renewed his call for a unified state Department of Transportation to take over that commission's duties and others.

Lawmakers will get another chance to create that department, he said in his budget proclamation, "after workers' compensation issues are addressed, (and) provided sufficient time is available."

A couple of other major topics look like good bets for inclusion on the special session agenda, sooner or later.

One of those is legislation to tighten campaign finance laws.

Mauro commends signing of two bills

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro says two bills signed into law by Gov. Bill Clements represent the "biggest environmental steps Texas has ever taken."

"This legislation gives Texas the strongest alternative fuels program in the United States," Mauro said Monday.

On Sunday, Clements signed bills requiring the use of alternative fuels in state vehicles and school and mass transit buses and encouraging the use of natural gas in utility and industrial boilers in 21 counties that fail to meet federal air quality standards.

Mauro said the increased use of compressed natural gas will reduce emissions of carbon monoxide, nitrogen oxide, and hydrocarbons.

"These laws give Texas a fighting chance against air pollution. Eight million Texans are at risk from the air they breathe and, by signing these two bills, Gov. Bill Clements has struck a blow in favor of all Texans," he said.

One law requires use of natural gas or other alternative fuels in state-owned or operated fleets with more than 15 vehicles, school districts with more than 50 buses, and local transit authorities. A phased-in conversion begins in 1991 and would run through 1998.

The second law levies a surcharge for burning fuel oil in industrial and utility boilers between April 15 and Oct. 15 in counties that fail to meet federal air quality standards.

Both laws anticipate private financing for the conversions and provide waivers if reasonable financing is unavailable, Mauro said.

Mauro said increased sales of natural gas will be a boon to the economy. Texas has 26 percent of the known natural gas reserves in the lower 48 states. Studies by Southern Methodist University and the state comptroller's office show that increased use of 1 trillion cubic feet of natural gas over a 5-year period will create 50,000 to 100,000 jobs in Texas, Mauro said.

Sponsors of the alternative fuels bill were state Rep. David Cain, D-Dallas, and state Sen. Don Henderson, R-Houston. The surcharge bill was sponsored by state Rep. Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, and state Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan.

"You hope (political donations give) you a fair shake in Austin. But the money cannot compare to what I've given the Republicans."

Williams defends questioned donations

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams has a two-word response for anyone who questions his Republican loyalty.

Eddie Chiles.

The Fort Worth oilman, GOP activist and former owner of the Texas Rangers baseball team — whose wife is a former Texas Republican National Committeewoman — will support Williams in the 1990 governor's race, Williams said Monday.

And, if that doesn't extinguish the political brush fire set aflame Sunday with a Houston newspaper report that Williams is a heavy donor to Democratic campaigns, he has a second, three-word response.

Caroline Rose Hunt.

This Dallas heiress to the Texas Hunt family oil fortune, also has elected to support Williams' governor's race, Williams added.

In an exclusive interview Monday, Williams expounded on his reasoning for donating to Democratic campaigns that have scaled the political ladder as high as U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

The 57-year-old Midland oilman said he never donated to the campaigns of Democrats that had Republican opposition. The Bentsen donation came prior to the day Amarillo Rep. Beau Boulter entered the race.

The Houston Post reported last weekend that Williams had given to the campaigns of State Treasurer Ann Richards, Attorney General Jim Mattox and U.S. Senate hopeful Hugh Parmer as late as 1988.

"They probably didn't help anything. They probably hurt," he conceded of his contributions which were originally reported in a Dallas Morning News political column early this year.

State Republican Party Secretary Diane Rath of San Antonio issued a memo Monday to some 70 party leaders urging them to delve further into Williams' contribution history.

Mrs. Rath, Texas Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance's 1988 state campaign chairwoman, dispatched the memo on Republican party stationery which raised the eyebrow of the party's chief executive.

"That is not the Republican party saying that. That is an individual saying that," said Fred Meyer, State Republican Chairman.

"The Republican Party of Texas is neutral in primary races and doesn't get involved," he added Monday.

Mrs. Rath, who said she was entitled to write the Williams memo on official party stationery because she also is a state committeewoman, believes "the voters should know the facts.

"A contested primary is very healthy. It's not my intention to cause him to resign."

Richard Harvey, an unsuccessful 1988 Republican senatorial candidate from Tyler, doesn't want Williams to resign either, he said Monday.

But that didn't stop Harvey from sending a press release to Austin-based news organizations Monday proclaiming he is "ticked off" at Williams' donations.

Harvey lost his senatorial bid to Ted Lyon Jr., a Rockwall Democrat. Lyon had received a contribution from the Texas Senate Democratic Campaign Committee, Harvey claimed, which is an entity to which Williams contributed $1,000 last December.

China still rounding up protesters

BEIJING (AP) — China's official media announced more arrests of demonstrators today and Premier Li Peng said many more people must be rounded up and punished to prevent dissidents "from making a comeback."

New regulations went into effect today that appear designed to prevent people wanted by the government from fleeing the country. Officials in the Philippines today announced that 18 Chinese refugees had arrived there by boat and asked for asylum because of the turmoil.

The Supreme Court today issued orders to all lower courts to "severely punish counterrevolutionary elements who have been charged."

The People's Broadcasting radio station quoted the court as saying it was important that those who incited social unrest or participated in riots be dealt with swiftly.

More than 1,360 people have been reported arrested since demonstrations broke out in cities across China to protest the army's killing of hundreds of unarmed civilians in Beijing on June 4 in crushing the pro-democracy movement.

The Supreme Court advised that people who surrender or report the crimes of others be given lenient treatment.

Li, in remarks Monday, said "counterrevolutionary unrest" had been put down, but "quite a lot of rioters are yet to be apprehended," the official Xinhua News Agency reported. "We can in no way leave them unpunished and let them stage a comeback."

Beijing radio reported today that Liu Gang one of 21 student activists on a nationwide wanted list, was arrested Monday in Baoding, about 90 miles south of Beijing. Gang, 28, a physics student at Beijing University and one of the leaders of a now-banned independent student union, is the sixth to be arrested or surrender since the list was announced June 13.

The Communist Party's People's Daily reported today that a student from the Zhejiang Academy of Fine Arts in Hangzhou had been arrested for spreading rumors to the U.S. government-funded Voice of America.

The newspaper said Zhang Weiping told VOA that the provincial government flew the Chinese flag at half-staff to mourn students killed in Beijing when troops drove them from Tiananmen Square, the country's symbolic seat of power.

The VOA office in Beijing confirmed that Zhang had called from the city near Shanghai, but said it did not know whether its Chinese-language service out of Washington ran the item.

VOA, which enjoys a huge audience in China, has been accused by the government of "rumor-mongering" in its reports on the military crackdown. The VOA Beijing bureau chief was expelled from China last week.

The government on Monday said it was expelling another foreign journalist for violating martial law regulations.

Joseph Kahn, an American working part-time for the Dallas Morning News, was stopped by police last week after interviewing people in the countryside outside Beijing, an area not under martial law. He was given 72 hours to leave.

In addition to Kahn and the VOA bureau chief, an Associated Press correspondent and three British reporters have been ordered out in the past 10 days.

Passengers safe after ship hits iceberg

AP

OSLO, Norway (AP) — A Soviet ocean liner with more than 950 people aboard rammed an iceberg in arctic seas and took on water today, but all passengers were evacuated. Some crew members stayed aboard to try to keep the ship afloat.

A Norwegian coast guard vessel and helicopters rescued passengers from the 630-foot Maxim Gorky and others who already had fled to lifeboats and ice floes. Most of the passengers are Western European vacationers.

The cruise ship radioed northern Norway's Rescue Central at 12:27 a.m. that it was listing after hitting an iceberg about 300 miles east of northern Greenland, a coast guard spokesman said.

The Soviet news agency Tass said the accident occurred in fog.

Norwegian and Soviet officials reported no injuries, and passengers said the evacuation was orderly.

"There was no panic at all," said West Germany passenger Winfried Prince. "The Russian crew has worked perfectly in disembarking passengers into lifeboats, and also the Norwegians who picked us up ... have done a wonderful job, so nobody has been hurt or even worse," Prince told NBC's "Today" show in a radio-telephone interview from a rescue ship.

Norwegian officials said a pump keeping the Soviet vessel afloat failed at noon, but four or five Norwegian military experts went aboard with new pumps.

The commander of a coast guard boat Senja, Sigurd Kleiven, said 253 crewmen were being kept on board, and the ship could go down if the pump was not repaired or replaced. About 120 crewmen were rescued.

The Senja reached the stricken ship early today and picked up hundreds of passengers who had jumped into lifeboats or scrambled onto ice floes.

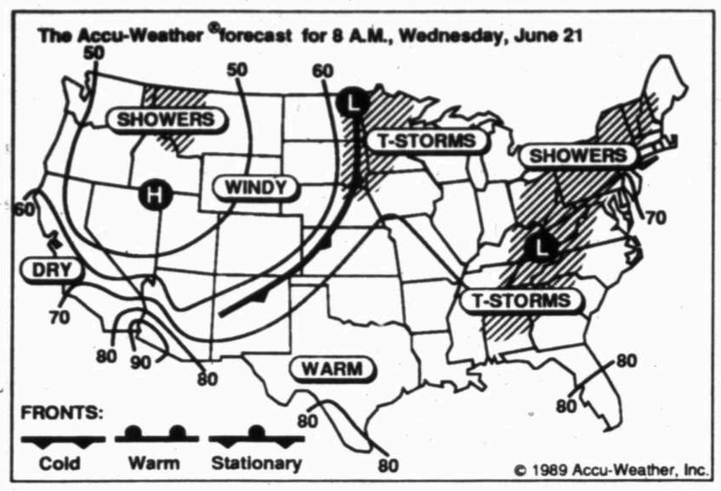
WEATHER SUMMARY



Low near 70, high near 100 likely

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies and a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be near 70 and winds will be from the south at 10-20 mph.

Wednesday is expected to be much the same with partly cloudy skies and a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The high will be near 100 and winds will continue from the south at 10-20 mph.

Monday's high of 100 was seven degrees cooler than the record high of 107 set June 19, 1951. The overnight low of 69 was 17 degrees warmer than the record low temperature of 52 set for this date in 1973.

STATE

Summer was still a day away, but you had to look at the calendar to know it. The weather around Texas wouldn't provide a clue.

Forecasts called for sunny skies, hot temperatures and a few scattered to isolated thunderstorms across West Texas through Wednesday.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 60s and 70s.

Highs Wednesday will be in the 90s over most of the state, ranging upward to near 100 in North Texas and to as high as 105 in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas.

There were a few high clouds over the Panhandle and South Plains during the pre-dawn hours today, but the rest of the state had clear skies. Strong thunderstorms were reported in the Gulf of Mexico south of Beaumont and scattered showers were reported near the western edge of the Panhandle.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 70s, ranging from the 60s in the mountains of Southwest Texas to near 80 along the coast in South Texas. Extremes ranged from 62 at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 77 at San Antonio.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 72 at Amarillo, 70 at Wichita Falls, 72 at Fort Worth, 76 at Waco, 73 at Austin, 76 at Houston, 73 at Corpus Christi and Brownsville, 70 at San Angelo, 72 at Lubbock and Midland and 74 at El Paso.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms produced more heavy rain in sections of the Southeast, and flash flood watches remained in effect today for parts of Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

About 1½ inches of rain fell in 45 minutes at Mount Sterling, Ky., flooding streets and basements and backing up sewers, and more than three-quarters of an inch fell in an hour at Louisville, Ky.

On Monday, Alabama farmers moved livestock to higher ground and riverfront homeowners set out sandbags as weather officials warned of more rainfall and the expected cresting of the Alabama and Tallapoosa rivers.

A storm that dumped more than an inch of rain an hour in east Alabama flushed creeks across rural roads Monday and forced officials to open rarely used flood gates on Lake Martin.

In Kentucky, Gov. Wallace Wilkinson toured flood-damaged eastern sections of the state and predicted federal officials would declare the area a disaster. State officials said damage from torrential rains that fell last week was in the millions of dollars.

Showers and thunderstorms also were scattered across western portions of the northern Plains. Winds gusted to 60 mph in Miles City, Mont. Thunderstorms erupted Monday night across the eastern slopes of the Rockies, where winds gusted to 60 mph at Vedauwoo, Wyo.

New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — In 32 years as a truck driver, Jasper Coker could never ignore anyone in distress on the highway. The last time he helped someone, he paid dearly — with his legs.

Eight operations and three months later, the Atlanta suburbanite faces hundreds of thousands of dollars of debt, his insurance won't pay for the operations on his smashed leg and hip and doctors say he won't be able to work for another two years.

"It looks like trying to be a good Samaritan I get left holding the bag," said Coker, 54, of Riverdale, Ga. He expects his medical bills to be more than $300,000. "I won't live long enough to pay them off."

Health insurance benefits from his job as a truck driver for a grocery store chain have been exhausted, and both the auto insurers for Coker's car and the one that struck him say they won't pay any more.

A little over a week ago, he took his first tentative step since the accident with the help of a walker.

Coker's plight began March 9 when he became involved in a three-vehicle, chain-reaction accident. Around 2 a.m., a 15-foot speedboat came unhitched from the vehicle pulling it and stopped in the middle of Interstate 75 near the I-285 intersection in Clayton County, Ga.

Carol Armstrong, 26, of Atlanta slammed into it and crashed into the center wall.

Seconds later the boat spun into the path of Coker, and he hit it.

He guided his car onto the median and ran to assist Ms. Armstrong. He helped her from her car and the two stood in the median assessing the damage.

"He was over there trying to calm me down and see if anybody else was in the car with me," said Ms. Armstrong.

A moment later, a third vehicle driven by David Phillip Kirby, 36, of Riverdale struck the boat's trailer and careened into Coker and Ms. Armstrong. Kirby was not injured.

She spent only one night in the hospital, but Coker was crushed against the dividing wall by the 1985 Ford Tempo. The impact broke his right leg in three places, mangled the skin and muscles on it and broke his left hip. He spent 69 days in the hospital. In successive operations, doctors placed a steel plate in the hip and a rod in his shattered leg.

Both times, the steel became badly infected, Coker said, and surgeons have had to reopen the wounds more than once to perform skin and bone grafts to stop the infection.

Police have never identified the owner of the boat which caused the sequence of accidents. The trailer carrying the boat had no license plate.

After $150,000, Coker's health insurance stopped paying the bills. Kirby's insurer, Allstate, paid $4,900, according to Coker's wife, Jeanette. Safeco Insurance, which covered Coker's car, argues that since All-State paid, the company is not obligated to pay anything more.

Even if the courts decide the vanished boat owner was responsible for the accident, Coker's maximum uninsured motorist benefits from Safeco would amount to only $21,000, according to spokeswoman Mary Lou Trammell.

"He only purchased 'X' amount of insurance and that's all we have to pay," said Ms. Trammell.

Frank Shuster, Coker's attorney, said the case will eventually go to court, where a resolution may be years away.

"It's a sad set of circumstances," said Shuster. "Ultimately we intend to sue somebody."

Ms. Armstrong says she still thinks about Coker often, but on the advice of her attorney, she no longer talks with him.

"We don't talk any more," she said in an interview. "I feel guilty, and he is on my mind a lot. I'm sorry that he got the most of it."

As for Coker, he says he just wants to be able to get behind a wheel soon. "I'm hoping by some miracle I can get this thing to working again and go back a whole lot sooner," he said, referring to his leg.

And if he comes upon an accident, Coker says he'll probably stop again.

"Any time I've ever seen an accident that looked serious or no one is there to help I'll stop," he said. "That's just sort of standard policy for most truck drivers."

"I guess I always will. I never could pass people up in trouble. I guess that's human nature."

Teddy bear can take solace in its standing

NEW YORK (AP) — Linus to the contrary, the American child's favorite security blanket is the teddy bear.

That's the contention of Dr. Paul Horton, a Meriden, Conn., psychiatrist who studied what he calls "extra-parental solacers" or "transitional objects," and what the rest of us refer to as "loveys" or "blankies."

One of four babies will choose a teddy bear as a transitional object, Horton told Parents magazine.

In a study of 890 children between ages 5 and 13, Horton and his colleagues found that 40 percent developed a close attachment to a stuffed animal — twice as many as those who got their security from a blanket. And of those who chose stuffed animals, about six in 10 chose teddy bears.

Charles Schulz, creator of the cartoon strip "Peanuts," told Parents that he never had a security blanket, but got the idea for Linus' famed blanket from his children.

In a telephone interview Monday, Horton was asked why bears had their claws into the nation's youth.

"It's been called a cultural fad, but that doesn't explain it," he said. "Over the past 100 years children have been offered a lot of solaces — stuffed lions, giraffes and so forth — but for some reason children prefer the teddy bear.

"Part of it may be that the bear is enough like a human for the child to relate to, but different enough to distinguish it. It's ideally situated in psychological space."

A transitional object is part of the child's transition from total dependence on its mother to relative independence, and is defined as the first thing a child turns to consistently for solace and comfort besides its parents or itself.

The chosen bear or blanket is usually soft and cuddly, so much so that it soon becomes dirty and ragged, often with a whiff of milk or some foul-smelling substance. "Mothers tend to spend a lot of time cleaning or repairing transitional objects," Horton noted.

But as far as kids are concerned, the lovey's grunginess adds to its appeal. "It's the child's own to do with as it wishes: take it, leave it, keep it, throw it away," Horton said.

Although "lovey" is probably the most common lay term for the transitional object, children themselves have come up with a wide range of alternatives. Jason Azocar, 5, of Salem, N.H., calls his blanket his "gigi" (GEE-gee), while Peter Miller, 5, of Stratham, N.H., prefers "gaga" (GAH-gah). Peter's older sister Emily uses "baba" (BAH-bah.)

Kids also fasten on a wide variety of transitional objects. Those that have been recorded by behavioral science include a scrub brush, a potholder and a silk negligee. In an extreme case, an apparently domestically inclined child became attached to a vacuum cleaner and insisted it spend the night near his bed.

We never overcome our need for transitional objects: they merely change from bears to gloves to Jaguars. Sometimes they don't change at all. Horton said a study of 1,200 students at the University of Nebraska and Cornell University found that of students who had stuffed animals, 80 percent of girls and 40 percent of boys took their loveys with them to college.

"My own son went to the University of Minnesota, and he took his old stuffed dog with him," Horton said. "It made him feel better."

Indian burial ground may establish California history

New York Times News Service

RICHMOND, Calif. — In an important archeological discovery, scientists have located an 1,800-year-old Indian burial ground here that sheds new light on the early history of California.

A team of archeologists has been quietly working on the site for the past eight weeks, and the richness of the find has stunned the diggers. As of Thursday, the team had unearthed the remains of 42 bodies, along with fishing tools, jewelry, ornaments and many other artifacts.

"It's fantastic," said James Bennyhoff, an expert in Native American culture and the leader of the dig.

Working with a small backhoe, dental picks and tiny trowels, the dig team is unearthing remains and objects which experts believe will tell much about the lives of the people who once inhabited the bayshore plains and inland valleys of the San Francisco Bay Area.

"From what we've found, we will try to reconstruct the history and lifestyles of the people who lived here and put it all in a time sequence," said archeologist Jack Miller.

The burial site was discovered in April when contractors working on a flood control project for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers found the nearly-intact remains of the first body. They halted their work and notified authorities.

Most of the human remains belong to Proto-Utians, whose settlements once ringed the shores of the San Francisco Bay. These people were the ancestors of the Ohlone nation, whose 10,000 people settled along the edge of the bay until they were overpowered by the Spaniards in the 18th century.

To their surprise, however, scientists have also found remains of larger-framed, more muscular people believed to be from the Yokut tribe of California's San Joaquin Valley.

The condition of the remains leads archeologists to suspect the Yokuts, also known as Delta People, came to the Richmond area around 100 A.D., said Bennyhoff, an expert in Bay Area Native American culture leading the archeological team. That is about 300 years earlier than previously believed.

In addition, the site provides the first evidence that the Delta People made contact with Proto-Utian settlements in Richmond, although remains of Delta People had been previously been found in Proto-Utian areas in Berkeley and San Pablo, Bennyhoff said.

A rescue helicopter hovers over lifeboats from the Soviet cruise liner "Maxim Gorky" this morning, prepared to pull passengers from ice floes. The ship took on water after hitting an iceberg.

SHIP

Others were rescued by helicopter from the ship or ice floes.

Norwegian officials and the Lloyds insurance company of London said none of the passengers were missing or injured.

The German travel agency Phoenix Flugreisen of Bonn, which managed the cruise, said said 551 Germans and 16 other west Europeans were aboard and that a plane will be sent to pick them up.

The Norwegian news agency said the passengers were from West Germany, the Netherlands, Austria, Britain, Italy, Switzerland and Sweden.

Tass quoted Vladimir Nekhoroshev, chief inspector for the Ministry of the Sea Fleet, as saying 575 tourists and 377 crew members were on board.

The rescue center said it had received conflicting figures, but said there were 379 crew members.

The liner was 185 miles west of the Norway's Spitsbergen archipelago.

Rescue efforts were aided by the 24-hour summer daylight of the Arctic.

Several other Soviet and Norwegian boats were within 300 miles of the distressed ship, which was at 77 degrees 33 minutes northern latitude, 19 minutes eastern longitude.

Norwegian helicopters ferried rescued passengers from the Senja's deck to Longyearbyen, the administrative center on Svalbard island, the largest in the Spitsbergen archipelago. Airplanes were picking them up and taking them on to the Norwegian mainland.

The cruise had originated in Bremerhaven, West Germany.

SESSION

Imposing limits on how much money Texans can give political candidates, strengthening reporting requirements and other changes were a top priority of the outgoing secretary of state, Jack Rains, who resigned last week.

His replacement, former Clements chief-of-staff George Bayoud, indicated he may ask for reconsideration during the special session.

A second item being sought is a bill to lower the state tax on parimutuel wagering.

Of the three Kentucky Derby-style, Class 1 horse racing tracks that will be allowed in Texas, only one license was sought, for the Houston-area track. The Dallas-Fort Worth and San Antonio permits went begging.

Horsemen say that's because the state's 5-cent take of each dollar wagered is too high.

Other possible agenda additions before the session ends on July 20 include:

- Limiting the ability of injured consumers to sue product manufacturers to damages.
- Clarifying the state Open Meetings Act.
- Imposing indoor "clean air" requirements on public buildings.
- Cracking down on Medicaid insurance fraud by allowing the State Board of Insurance to impose new regulations on so-called "Medigap" policies sold to the elderly.
- Expanding the University of Texas-Dallas to a four-year school. Clements has promised Dallas financier Peter O'Donnell he would add this issue.

WILLIAMS

"I used to vote a split-ticket," Harvey said. "When I got active in Republican politics, I voted a straight Republican ticket. I just don't think Mr. Williams is being a straight party-man, but he may be a fine fellow."

Williams said he donated money to Democratic campaigns because he was a businessman trying to "represent his employees as best I thought.

"You hope that it gives you a fair shake in Austin. But the money cannot compare to what I've given the Republicans.

"We're controlled by the Democrats ... the Democrats control the state of Texas. That's why we're in the shape we're in and that's one of the reasons I hope to win."

Williams said he's not angered about having to defend his Republican roots, which he says sprouted April 11, 1951, the day former President Harry Truman fired Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

"My first political contribution was $1,000 to Barry Goldwater back when $1,000 was really $1,000."

Pre-filed workers' comp bill stirs up opposition

AUSTIN (AP) — Opposing sides of the Texas workers' compensation controversy have reached an agreement — they are far apart and will probably take 30 days, if not longer, to hammer out a compromise.

The latest controversy erupted Monday over a pre-filed workers' comp bill by state Rep. Richard Smith, R-Bryan, who has been the House's point man on the issue since the beginning of the year.

State lawmakers failed to reach a consensus during the 140-day regular session that ended May 29 and begin today a 30-day overtime session to overhaul the method of compensating workers who are injured or killed in on-the-job accidents.

During the regular session, the House approved a bill supported by business, while the Senate adopted a proposal backed by trial lawyers and labor.

Under Smith's new bill, comp benefits, which were criticized as too low in an interim legislative study, would remain about the same. The bill also would eliminate jury trials in disputed workers' comp claims and set up a detailed guideline for calculating permanent injuries.

Trial lawyers, who represent injured workers in jury trials, blasted the proposal.

Mike Perrin, president-elect of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association, said Smith's bill was a "leap backwards" from the one he filed during the regular session.

And, he said, the bill ignores tentative agreements on workers' comp reached by House and Senate conference committee members during the regular session.

But, Smith said he reintroduced a bill maintaining the current level of benefits because labor seemed more interested in beefing up workplace safety provisions than increased benefits.

"We're trying to get a bill that labor will support," Smith said.

Emmett Sheppard, of the Texas AFL-CIO, said after a preliminary review of Smith's new bill, "From what I've seen so far, I see a lot of danger holes."

Smith said he included more job safety regulations in his new bill, but Sheppard said they were inadequate.

Van Cliburn's return marked by triumph

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A standing ovation at the end of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, 13 curtain calls and four encore numbers marked Van Cliburn's triumphant return to the concert stage.

The Tchaikovsky was Cliburn's signature number after he won, at age 23, the first Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow in 1958. He was an instant celebrity around the world and the first classical musician ever given a ticker-tape parade in New York.

Twenty years later, he took an 11-year vacation saying his schedule of up to 100 concerts a year was too grueling.

He has given two private performances in the last 11 years — in December 1987 and January 1988 for Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and the Bob Hope Cultural Center in Palm Springs.

On Monday night, a crowd estimated at between 10,000 and 12,000 welcomed him back at the Mann Music Center open-air amphitheater.

"It's so good to be back with the Philadelphia Orchestra," Cliburn said following Monday morning's rehearsal. "It seems like I never left."

The crowd felt the same way.

"It was great. Fantastic," said Roland Condon, a photographer from Princess Anne, Md. "You'd never know he hasn't given a concert in all these years."

Condon and his wife vowed to make the concert after they heard from friends in Philadelphia that Cliburn was to play. They had seats in the first row behind the orchestra pit, filled with chairs Monday night because the musicians were on stage.

Condon's comments on Cliburn's keyboard ability came from the photographer's own recollections of six months spent with the pianist 20 years ago. Two decades ago, Condon was a producer in New York, working on such things as the Bell Telephone Hour. Cliburn was one of assignments.

The critics also agreed and classified his absence as "restorative."

When he quit playing 11 years ago, "his playing was full of hesitations and technical problems," wrote Philadelphia Inquirer Daniel Webster in today's editions. "Last night, the big, resounding octaves, the flashing runs and deftly articulated passages were reminders of his playing at the height of his career."

"Now we know for certain: Van Cliburn has been practicing," wrote Tom Di Nardo of the Daily News.

Cliburn performed two numbers. The first was Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 1 before the intermission. The second was the Tchaikovsky, which was among his very first recordings and was the first classical album to sell a million copies.

Guest conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, who was on the podium for three other Mann Center performances by Cliburn before he stopped playing publicly, opened the evening's program with Strauss' tone poem "Don Juan."

Workers' compensation thorny issue

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawmakers began studying the workers' compensation system in 1987, and two years later they have failed to agree on the problem, let alone the solution.

Today, they return to Austin for a special legislative session on the issue.

Here are some questions and answers about the issue that has forced legislative overtime:

Q: What is workers' compensation?

A: It is insurance purchased by employers to cover medical and other expenses, including some lost wages, of employees who are hurt or killed in on-the-job accidents.

In return for these benefits, the employer is immune from being sued by the employee, regardless of who is at fault for the injury. This is what is termed a no-fault system, and constitutes the overriding incentive for employers to purchase workers' comp insurance.

In 1988, the Industrial Accident Board handled approximately 177,000 individual cases for workers who were injured seriously enough to qualify for workers' comp benefits.

Q: Is workers' comp insurance mandatory for employers?

A: No. Texas is one of only three states that doesn't require employers to purchase workers' comp insurance. According to the Industrial Accident Board, some 360,000 Texas employers buy workers' comp insurance, while about 100,000 do not. In 1988, Texas employers paid approximately $2.9 billion in workers' comp insurance.

Q: What are the major disputes over workers' comp?

A: Businesses have been hit with increases of 148 percent over the past four years in workers' comp premiums. They blame the present system, which allows disputed workers' comp claims to be appealed to a state district court in a jury trial. In the jury trial, the previous ruling of the Industrial Accident Board is not admissible. Only three states have this kind of system.

But trial lawyers, who represent injured workers in court, and labor organizations blame the increases on greedy insurance companies and stingy employers who fail to provide a safe workplace. Since Texas ranks among the leaders in job-related injuries and deaths, they argue that reducing the number of injuries will in turn reduce workers' comp premiums.

Of the 177,000 cases handled last year, about 500 went to a jury trial.

Businesses also argue that a new system of figuring benefits is needed to provide stability to the system. Employers want an "impairment system" where compensation is based on what part of the body was injured and how badly.

Atwater's partisan remarks spur criticism

NATION

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Republican National Chairman Lee Atwater's highly partisan remarks to the nation's mayors have touched off criticism and dismay from elected city leaders of both parties.

"I was embarrassed and disappointed," said Republican Mayor Bill Hudnut of Indianapolis, following Atwater's remarks to the U.S. Conference of Mayors on Monday.

"It was insulting to me and I think it was the most insensitive speech I've ever heard," said Democratic Mayor Wilson Goode of Philadelphia.

Atwater used his appearance to declare the national Republican Party would work actively for Republican mayoral candidates in New York and elsewhere, and would seek to recruit "a half dozen to a dozen black mayoral candidates around this country to support actively."

He drew a ripple of reaction from the more than 200 mayors when he said mayors would be an "effective farm team" for the Republicans who could later run for governor, House and Senate seats.

And attempting to show his commitment to recruiting blacks, Atwater singled out for introduction a black Republican mayor, James A. Garner of Hempstead, N.Y., but mistakenly called him the mayor of Schenectady, N.Y.

Garner later called the slip insignificant and said, "Chairman Atwater knows my name and who I am."

But his partisan tone made Atwater a major subject of talk at the annual meeting. His Democratic counterpart, Chairman Ron Brown, was addressing the mayors today.

"It was too patronizing," Hudnut said of Atwater.

"I didn't think it was appropriate to refer to us as a farm team for the major leagues," he added. "I think a lot of mayors deal with tougher issues than Congress does."

Atwater has been under fire for an innuendo-filled memo attacking House Speaker Tom Foley, and Brown has called on Atwater to resign.

The president of the conference, Democratic Mayor Arthur Holland of Trenton, N.J., referred to Atwater with a quip at a later session.

"I think Lee Atwater assumed that we had arranged a recruitment opportunity for him," he said.

Even Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp made reference to Atwater's appearance and triggered applause when he told the mayors he was there representing President Bush, "not the Republican National Committee."

Goode said he disliked the partisanship and Atwater's singling out of the New York race, where Republicans hope to unseat Democrat Edward I. Koch.

"We need to hear what the Republican party intends to do about the issues facing the cities," Goode said. "We don't want to know that he wants to defeat Koch."

Koch had not yet arrived for the conference when Atwater spoke.

"I didn't think it was appropriate to refer to us as a farm team for the major leagues."
— Bill Hudnut, Indianapolis mayor

In his remarks, Atwater said he was "very excited" about prospects in New York and planned to put "a substantial effort" into that race.

"If we can establish a political beachhead in a city like New York, that's going to be a political shot heard across this country," he said.

New Orleans Mayor Sidney Barthelemy, a Democrat, pointed to Atwater's remarks that the Republican Party was interested in cities but would only put money in "projects that work." Barthelemy noted that the convention center where the meeting was held was financed in part with federal Urban Development Action Grants, a program the Reagan administration succeeded in killing.

"The very programs that help cities, they eliminated," Barthelemy said.

HUD secretary promises agency open to everyone, to be cleaned up

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp assured the nation's mayors he has taken partisanship out of his scandal-ridden agency and the awarding of federal grants to cities.

"Democrats and Republicans need to read my lips — it's open to everybody on the basis of need as opposed to greed, as it existed in the past," Kemp told the U.S. Conference of Mayors on Monday.

"I will clean it up. I will clean it out."

The more than 200 mayors from both parties were continuing their five-day meeting today, with appearances by more Bush administration officials and Democratic National Chairman Ron Brown. The conference concludes Wednesday.

Administration officials scheduled to appear today were Environmental Protection Agency chief William K. Reilly and Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner.

In prepared remarks, Reilly urged support for President Bush's clean air act proposal and said merely offering it was "an act of great political courage."

"The president is walking head-on into one of our thorniest political briar patches," Reilly said.

Bush's proposal is aimed at breaking a decade-long congressional stalemate that has blocked enactment of tougher federal clean air laws. It calls for a 50 percent, 10 million ton reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions, a chief cause of acid rain, from coal burning power plants. Other measures are aimed at smog and ozone problems, including a phase-in of cars powered by methanol.

The proposal marks a break from the Reagan administration, which did not acknowledge acid rain as an environmental concern and opposed tougher laws to curb smog.

Kemp was greeted warmly, in contrast to an earlier appearance by Republican National Chairman Lee Atwater. Atwater's sharply partisan remarks, including his pledge to work actively for GOP mayoral candidates and reference to the mayors as the "farm team" of the party, drew complaints from mayors in both parties.

Kemp repeated his recent promise to crack down on mismanagement and fraud in the department and eliminate political influence from decision-making on federal grants. HUD has been beset by a series of scandals, including the embezzlement of millions of dollars and charges that well-connected Republicans used influence peddling to steer the awarding of HUD grants.

He said reforms would not interfere with his goals, including establishing urban enterprise zones that are aimed at luring jobs to the ghettos, allowing public housing tenants to manage and purchase their residences, and fighting drugs.

Kemp declined, however, to say whether former HUD Secretary Samuel Pierce, who served throughout the Reagan administration, must shoulder blame for the problems being uncovered.

Foley recommends raises for judges

NEW YORK (AP) — House Speaker Tom Foley, reopening a can of worms that plagued his predecessor, said Monday that federal judges and senior executive branch employees should get pay raises.

Foley said that before any action is taken on the pay boosts for judges and executive branch employees he would wait for a report expected to recommend a pay increase for Congress.

The report is expected to suggest a ban on speaking fees and other honorariums in exchange for the pay raise.

"It may well be that they'll recommend that we phase out honorariums over a period of years with perhaps an increase over a period of years starting in the next Congress for members of Congress," Foley said at a political fund-raiser in New York.

"But in any event, whatever happens, I want to see this Congress propose and send to the president an increase for judges and for senior civil servants in the executive branch," he said.

Foley's comments are the first indication that Congress is willing to reopen the politically volatile issue.

The House in February, mindful of a public outcry, killed a 51 percent pay increase for judges, senior executives and legislators, in what was seen as a major defeat for ousted House Speaker Jim Wright.

Since that vote, Congress has been pressured to increase the salary of senior executive branch employees and federal judges, whose salaries traditionally are tied to those of Congress.

With the renewed interest in ethics in Washington, Congress has been considering a ban on speaking fees and other outside sources of income.

Judicial and executive branch employees already are forbidden from accepting most speaking fees and other outside income.

Court OKs firms to test for drugs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's private employers now have expanded authority to require drug tests of job applicants, while railroads and airlines have greater power to test those already on the job.

The National Labor Relations Board says private employers may decide unilaterally to require drug testing of job applicants, although they still must negotiate with unions if they want to test their employees.

The board's decision came Monday, the same day the Supreme Court ruled in a more narrowly defined case that railroads may require tests for workers without first bargaining with unions.

The decisions regarding existing workers appeared at odds, but they involved two separate labor laws, the Railway Labor Act that applies only to rail and airline workers, and the National Labor Relations Act which governs other labor contracts.

The court case, a victory for Conrail, followed earlier rulings in which railroads and airlines won the right to test workers for drug and alcohol use, principally on grounds of concern for public safety.

The NLRB case covers far more industries. One attorney involved with the NLRB decision said he expected it to lead to a proliferation of job applicant testing requirements.

"People who had been taking a sit-back-and-wait approach may now go ahead" with pre-employment screening, said John Dennison, vice president for labor relations for the Star Tribune newspaper of Minneapolis. "There's been a lot of interest. We've had a lot of inquiries."

Labor Department figures show that about 11.05 million union members worked in the private sector last year, along with 1.1 million workers who are not members of unions but whose jobs are covered by union contracts.

A department study released in anuary said that just 3 percent of the nation's private-sector employers h. 1 drug-testing programs, although 43 percent of businesses with 1,000 or more workers had testing programs.

The Newspaper Guild had chall nged the Star Tribune's policy of testing job applicants for drug and alcohol use without first seeking to negotiate such a policy with the union.

An administrative law judge sided with the Guild in 1987, but the NLRB overturned the part of the judge's decision relating to pre-employment testing.

Since applicants for union-represented jobs at the newspaper were not yet members of the union, "We find that drug and alcohol testing of applicants for employment is not a mandatory subject of bargaining," the board said.

It did, however, uphold a portion of the judge's decision requiring the newspaper to provide the union with the names and addresses of applicants who were offered jobs but did not take them, including those who refused to submit to testing.

The board said the Guild was entitled to the information to monitor Star Tribune hiring practices for any signs of discrimination.

The union, as part of its challenge of the policy, said male applicants were allowed to provide urine samples without being observed, while female applicants were required to give the samples partially unclothed and in the presence of a nurse.

The Supreme Court case involved Conrail's 1987 decision to check for drugs as part of a urinalysis administered to workers periodically and when they return to work after absences. The tests were adopted in 1976 but prior to 1987 were used only to check for health problems such as diabetes.

Railway unions said adding the drug test was a "major" labor-management dispute under the federal Railway Labor Act, and therefore was a bargaining issue. Minor disputes may be settled by the railroad without negotiations with the union, although any decision is subject to arbitration.

"Conrail's well-established recognition of the relevance of drug use to medical fitness substantially weakens the union's claim that Conrail now, for the first time, is engaging in medical testing that reveals facts about employees' private off-duty conduct," Justice Harry A. Blackmun said in writing for the court.

Lawrence Mann, a lawyer who represented the railroad unions, said he hopes Congress will act to protect workers' rights by assuring drug tests are reliable and accurate.

Some traffic controllers granted pay hikes

DES PLAINES, Ill. (AP) — Federal officials say they hope an offer of higher pay will attract and keep air traffic controllers at the nation's busiest towers and control centers.

Skinner

Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner announced that 2,100 Federal Aviation Administration controllers, technicians and safety inspectors at 11 facilities in the New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Oakland areas will get pay raises of up to 20 percent.

"The air traffic controllers in the busiest centers of this country will be some of the highest paid people in the federal government," Skinner said Monday at FAA offices near O'Hare International Airport, the nation's busiest. "I've been to those centers and frankly I think those jobs deserve that kind of compensation."

Many FAA control rooms have been chronically understaffed since former President Reagan fired some 11,400 air traffic controllers during an illegal strike in August 1981.

The new plan was criticized as "a Band-Aid on a hemorrhage" by Ray L. Spickler, executive vice president of the National Air Traffic Controller Association. He said the raises would cover only a fraction of a nationwide work force of 16,000.

The union was certified to represent the nation's 7,000 air traffic controllers in 1987, replacing the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, which was decertified after the 1981 strike.

"It will address short-term problems," union spokesman Tony Dresden said of the wage plan. "We would hope that the FAA would look at fair compensation for all controllers."

FAA officials say the agency has difficulty staffing the 11 facilities with qualified workers because of high living costs, complex operations and other unattractive features.

In addition, many workers in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles are close to retirement age, Skinner said.

United Airlines, which has been urging higher salaries at O'Hare, applauded the program.

"We believe this action is an encouraging step toward improving O'Hare's ability to efficiently handle commercial air traffic at the nation's busiest airport," the carrier said.

Transportation Department officials said the program will cost an extra $5 million a year from department funds, requiring minor cutbacks in other programs. The 5-year demonstration project will be made permanent if it is successful, Skinner said.

Top-level air traffic controllers now make $60,000 to $65,000 a year, including overtime, before the raises.

Skinner said union representatives indicate the program is already working at targeted facilities. The FAA has received a lot of applications for the positions since the program was announced in March, and those applying are highly skilled.

The program earlier this year survived attempts by Congress to restrict it workers at O'Hare and limit raises to 10 percent of base pay, department officials said.

The FAA facilities affected by the incentive plans include air traffic control centers in Aurora, Ill., and Ronkonkoma, N.Y.; and the O'Hare and Los Angeles international airport towers and terminal radar approach control facilities.

The program also covers approach-control facilities at Westbury, N.Y., Santa Ana and Oakland, Calif.; and flight standards district offices in Los Angeles; Farmingdale and Valley Stream, N.Y.; and Teterboro, N.J.

Teenspeak offers Orwellian discourse

An attractive woman strolls past a young man. He feels compelled to acknowledge her beauty. "Hey," he says, "you're a really gooey nectar."

A smooth line, yes. But he'll never get the lady's affection if he's a bifftad. In that case, she will publicly condemn him as a dweeb and likely wink at the nearest clydesdale.

Huh???

Ah, if you're lost, you ain't no dudical. Huh? Lost again? Then, man, you are totally out of it. Or maybe you're just not a teenager anymore. Yes, bubby, the vocabulary, at least its hip side, has passed you by.

But not to worry. Where there's a need — and money to be made — capitalism fills the vacuum. Enter, Youth Research, a Brookfield, Conn., firm that says it can teach us to understand teen jargon. As reported in The Wall Street Journal, the firm has a ready clientele, offering seminars to such firms as Campbell Soup Co.

Campbell, of course, wants to sell everything from soup to pickles (which kids have voted their second-favorite vegetable) to the youngsters. So, speaking their language can't hurt. But for the rest of us. Well, we're talkin' major adjustment.

So, as a public service, we offer a primer on teenspeak. "Gooey nectars" are pretty girls. "Clydesdales" are attractive young men. "Dweebs" are nerds or geeks. "Bifftads" are rich preppy teens, as in "Biff and Tad." "Dudicals" is a hybrid of a phrase that is apparently aging fast — "radical dudes."

OK, so go home and impress the kids. Or make a fool of yourself — or do whatever adults do when armed with dangerous knowledge.

WARNING: Teenspeak evolves rapidly. The above definitions may be history by the time you make it home. But don't worry, old-timer. Your days as a gooey nectar or clydesdale probably are long gone.

Celebrity sweepstakes

In America, the first million is the hardest. After that, as many a celebrity could tell you, it gets easier and easier. Once you've achieved a certain notoriety, people will throw money at you and expect very little in return — just show up and share your charm and wit, or maybe your signature.

It's easy enough for those in demand to ride the after-dinner gravy grain, where a joke and a few pearls of wisdom from Capitol Hill or Wall Street — or Allenwood Federal Prison — can bring in a quick $10,000 plus expenses.

Even less mental effort is required if you're a baseball star with an agile wrist: Jose Canseco is said to be able to sign his name 500 times an hour at those memorabilia shows, which earns him, if that's the correct verb, an extra $150,000 a year.

And it's not just today's pampered prodigies who work the circuit: the names Mantle, Mays, Feller, DiMaggio and Williams appear on the roster of those who, for a fee, will sign their names. Gaylord Perry wore a different cap during each inning of his 300th pitching victory, and then ... And we thought he just sweated a lot.

Adults show up at autograph and trading-card shows along with the kids; even the 10-year-olds, it seems, are as interested in the future market value of autographs as in the thrill that an earlier generation found just being in a hero's presence. Can it be mere coincidence that Sports Collectors Digest has seen its weekly circulation jump from 3,000 in 1982 to 50,000 today?

None of this is illegal, of course, and if it's true, as they say, that sports merely reflects the larger society, why single out athletes for turning greed into a career?

The Wall Street Journal reported the other day on the growing rent-a-celebrity phenomenon, wherein someone famous will drop by for an evening to help you launch a new restaurant, or just a budding social life. George Plimpton, the urbane author-raconteur-socialite, who, one presumes, doesn't need the money, cheerily admits hiring himself out, and confesses: "If someone offered me $5,000 to have breakfast with them in a store window, I would — especially if I were hungry."

Very amusing. But it's also one more reflection of a society that increasingly puts price tags on things once thought to have more intrinsic than commercial value, and then wonders why so many young people seem to lack a moral compass. That's not very amusing.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 20, the 171st day of 1989. There are 194 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 20, 1963, the United States and Soviet Union signed an agreement to set up a hot line between the two superpowers.

On this date:

In 1632, the English Crown granted the second Lord Baltimore settlement rights to an area surrounding Chesapeake Bay, most of which would later become Maryland.

In 1756, in India, a group of British soldiers was captured and imprisoned in a suffocating cell that became known as the Black Hole of Calcutta. Most of the men died.

In 1782, Congress approved the Great Seal of the United States.

In 1791, King Louis XVI of France attempted to flee the country, but was caught.

In 1837, Queen Victoria ascended the British throne following the death of her uncle, King William IV.

In 1863, West Virginia became the 35th state.

In 1893, children's rhymes notwithstanding, a jury in New Bedford, Mass., found Lizzie Borden innocent of the ax murders of her father and stepmother.

In 1947, President Harry S. Truman vetoed the Taft-Hartley Act, but was immediately overriden by the House of Representatives. (The Senate voted to override June 23.)

In 1947, reputed gangster Benjamin "Buggsy" Siegel was shot dead at a mansion in Beverly Hills, Calif.

In 1948, the variety series "Toast of the Town," hosted by Ed Sullivan, premiered on CBS-TV.

In 1967, boxer Muhammad Ali was convicted in Houston of violating Selective Service laws by refusing to be drafted. (Ali's conviction was ultimately overturned by the U.S. Supreme Court.)

In 1977, oil began flowing through the recently completed trans-Alaskan pipeline from Prudhoe Bay. (The first crude arrived in Valdez, some 800 miles to the south, 38 days later.)

Ten years ago: In a scene captured on videotape and shown worldwide, ABC News correspondent Bill Stewart was shot to death in Managua, Nicaragua, by a member of President Anastasio Somoza's national guard.

Five years ago: A sharply divided House of Representatives adopted an immigration bill designed to discourage foreigners from breaching U.S. borders while granting amnesty to millions of illegal aliens who met certain conditions.

One year ago: The U.S. Supreme Court unanimously upheld a New York City law making it illegal for private clubs to generally exclude women and minorities.

Today's birthdays: Guitarist Chet Atkins is 65. Singer-songwriter Brian Wilson is 47. Singer Anne Murray is 44. Actress Candy Clark is 42. Singer Cyndi Lauper is 36. Rock musician John Taylor is 29.

U.S. Customs agents stalled in budget crunch

WASHINGTON — It may be the darkest hour of America's war on drugs, at least on the front lines in Florida, where a malaise has gripped hundreds of U.S. Customs Service officials.

Jack Anderson

The plague of apathy has little to do with drug smugglers, who swarm like mosquitoes over the coasts of Florida. It is borne by bureaucratic infighting and ineptitude.

A mid-year budget crunch in the region pulled patrol boats out of the water and forced investigators to ride three to a car. Customs' long-standing and losing turf battle with the Drug Enforcement Administration also deflated agency pride. On top of that comes the news that Customs will spend thousands of dollars to entertain foreign guests in Williamsburg, Va., and Washington, D.C., later this month when rank and file agents can't afford the basic tools to do their jobs.

Customs is expected to spend $924,700 to host the meeting of the Customs Cooperation Council, an organization of agents from 104 countries.

During all the party planning in Washington, Customs officials in Florida are trying to put a happy face on the budget crunch. A memo from Regional Commissioner George Heavey in Miami sent many Customs agents off the deep end.

Heavey's memo of April 18 told his lieutenants that when it comes to expenses, "JUST SAY NO." It's witty, but no one is laughing.

Among other things, Heavey planned to make up a $2.3 million projected budget shortfall by allocating only one car for every three criminal investigators. Cellular car phone contracts were to be cut in half. Promotions, new hiring and overtime were discouraged.

That unpopular edict may be rescinded soon, a budget expert in the region told our associate Stewart Harris. Customs recently received money from Congress for pay raises and the region is running only a $400,000 projected deficit with an annual budget of more than $100 million.

But Customs employees still are not smiling. Heavey's memo underscored years of money problems that have stripped Customs naked in the face of a wealthy and tenacious enemy — drug traffickers.

The deepest cut of all was made by the Justice Department which, in February, told Customs it no longer had the authority to investigate drug cases. The agency can catch drug dealers, but the prosecution, and the credit for nailing a dealer, will go to the Drug Enforcement Administration.

"It's flat bull," the chief of one Customs enforcement district in Florida said of the cumbersome process. Another enforcement officer told us he is simply ignoring the new rule.

The jurisdictional battle between Customs and the Justice Department's DEA has been simmering for years, but former Attorney General Edwin Meese never pressed the issue. His replacement, Richard Thornburgh, did, and outgoing Customs Commissioner William Von Raab did not have the political clout to resist.

It is a point of pride for an investigator to see a case through from start to finish. The humiliation of doing the grunt work and then turning the case over to someone else has led many Customs agents to desert the war on drugs for other tasks. "We are getting out of the drug business," said one disgusted investigator in northern Florida.

Another told us, "Morale has hit ground zero."

MYSTERY MEAT — The Agriculture Department spends millions of dollars every year to identify pesticides and other chemicals in meat and poultry. Unfortunately, the USDA cannot figure out where the tainted meat came from three times out of four. And, when USDA labs find something they can't identify, they sometimes let it slide by. The USDA allows companies with stringent testing procedures to make that claim on the labels. But an investigation by the USDA inspector general revealed that eight of 11 plants using the preferred label weren't really testing their meats any more carefully.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The new Veterans Affairs Secretary Edward Derwinski announced last month that the VA would take a second look at the damage done by Agent Orange. Evidently Derwinski made that landmark decision without asking the permission of a few mid-level paper pushers who now have their noses out of joint. That's just not the way things are done at the VA. Well, good for Derwinski. We weren't enthused about making the VA a Cabinet department because we thought it would turn a routine nightmarish bureaucracy into a Cabinet-level nightmarish bureaucracy. But if Derwinski continues to show this kind of spunk, we'll have to change our minds.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Baker center of suspicion-building measures

WASHINGTON — Why is Secretary of State James Baker trying to undermine the political center in Israel?

Consider the political landscape there:

William Safire

On the dovish left is Labor's Shimon Peres, ready to turn most of the disputed territories over to a front for the PLO tomorrow.

On the hawkish right is the Likud's Ariel Sharon, insistent on an end to violence by the Palestinian intifada before any peace talks begin, determined to hold all the territories for Israel's defense.

Astride the center of the coalition government, reading from near left to near right, is Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin of Labor, charged with containing the uprising; the Likud's Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, who has put forward his initiative calling for free elections in the West Bank and Gaza to choose local Arab leaders for long-term negotiations; and Foreign Minister Moshe Arens, the Israeli most likely to sign the hoped-for agreements of the '90s.

That's the landscape; now let's see how our secretary of state has been helping the extremes at the expense of the middle.

First, he humiliated his counterpart, Arens, on two of the Israeli Foreign Minister's trips to the U.S.

On the eve of their first meeting, Baker arranged for stories to appear showing himself as refreshingly tough; on the eve of dropping his "no Greater Israel" blast, Baker gave his counterpart no hint of his intent, thereby showing the Israeli government it would not be forewarned of major Bush administration pronouncements on Middle East policy.

These deliberate insults were what diplomats call "suspicion-building measures."

Next came the Baker speech to the American Israel Political Action Committee, in which he evenhandedly treated Israel as the moral equivalent of those dictatorships and terrorist groups that have been warring on it for four decades. It was a rehash of the speech John Connally of Texas made just before the end of his political career.

The Baker paean to evenhandedness, hailed by Arabists, has been criticized by Israel's supporters as harsh, devoid of the longstanding principled American tilt toward democratic allies.

But such insensitivity is not the only problem; the pragmatic effect of the Baker speech was to undermine Israel's center and give the charismatic Arik Sharon a big political boost.

Sharon, who has many hard-line supporters, chafes at having been bypassed in the Likud leadership; his biopolitical clock is ticking. Shrewdly, he has seized on the autocratic way Baker has imposed his territorial decision on Israel, combining that resentment with the frustration many Israelis feel at the inability of the government to end the smouldering revolt in the territories.

As a result, Shamir and Arens go into the big Likud central committee meeting in two weeks facing a growing challenge on their right.

Sharon will scornfully cite the inflammatory Baker phrase, "no Greater Israel," and charge that the government's offer of elections to permit Arab autonomy guarantees American pressure for Arab sovereignty.

This argument could reshuffle the political deck and bring a demand for "all quiet" before elections.

Such a roadblock cannot be Baker's desire. And if he thought that dumping on Israel would win PLO support for free elections, he was promptly let down: aging Tunis terrorists do not want power to pass to young local Palestinians, and their answer to the Shamir election plan has been to kill Arabs who "collaborate."

Does Baker harbor some hope for a split in the Likud that would bring about a malleable Peres Labor government?

His lieutenants at the Greater State Department (which has annexed some White House staff and has settlements at the Pentagon) huddled at great length last week with Vladimir Tarasov, Gorbachev's Middle East expert; Tarasov has long been tight with Nimrod Novick, Peres's closest political aide.

Pettiness runs both ways: because Peres wants Novick to be ambassador to the U.N., he has OK'd Shamir's choice of Ehud Olmert to be envoy to Washington, but Olmert — citing the long-ago example of Britain's Lord Halifax — won't come unless he gets to keep his Cabinet post. So Israel undercuts its own ambassador in Washington just as the State Department undercuts the Government in Jerusalem.

The stakes are too big for this kind of stuff. We should not wearily assume that the center cannot hold; in Israel it can.

James Baker should stop undermining the Shamir-Rabin-Arens team and start supporting it.

ART BUCHWALD

We could call it 'Mr. Smith goes to the dogs'

A lot has been written about power golf in Washington. Here is the darker side of the game which no one dares talk about:

Art Buchwald

What's going on in the U.S. Congress right now is nothing more than intense soul-searching and remedial handwringing. Up the Hill and down, the same question is being asked, "How did some of our legislators go astray and lose their moral compass?"

Before he became an encyclopedia salesman inside the Washington Beltway, Greg Peay was a door-to-door salesman for Jim Wright's book in Houston. Greg thinks that he may have the answer.

"It all begins and ends with golf," he told me. "Assume that a newly elected congressman, like Jimmy Stewart in 'Mr. Smith Goes to Washington,' arrives in the capital. The first invitation he receives is to play golf with a lobbyist high in government circles."

"Golf doesn't corrupt people," I protested.

"It does if you cheat," Greg said. "Jimmy Stewart wouldn't cheat at golf!"

"He would if it was the only way he could lower his score. Here's what happens: Suppose his ball drops directly behind a large oak tree. Jimmy can't play it from there, so he kicks it to the side when no one is looking, and then he has a clear shot at the fairway."

I told Greg, "I imagine you would interpret that as cheating. What happens if someone sees him?"

"That's just the point," he said. "Someone does see Stewart, but the fix is in and the lobbyist pretends that he didn't. When 'Mr. Smith' realizes that no one will say anything if he kicks his ball, it opens up a whole new world to him. It isn't long before Jimmy forgets where he came from. He even picks up the ball and starts throwing it toward the pin on the green."

"If he does all these things, Smith is not the man he was when he came to Washington," I added.

"The lobbyists are devious. They'll let Jimmy Stewart give himself a three on a hole when he should have put himself down for a six. In Washington that's known as improving your game by lowering the score, with the help of people who need your vote. Once Stewart writes the wrong number on his card, the lobbyist has him in his pocket, not only for this game but for all future ones as well."

"Is there no end to the rot?" I asked.

Greg sighed, "Not really. Some lobbyists will even let 'Smith' use an illegal golf ball."

"Do you think this is how all the legislators run into ethical trouble?"

He said, "It seems that the majority of congressmen who have gotten into the most difficulty took the first wrong turn when they sold their souls for a birdie on the 14th hole at Burning Tree."

"They should give the 'Mr. Smiths' of this world a big raise so that they don't have to cheat at golf," I suggested to Greg.

"I agree. There's no end to what influence peddlers will do to help a lawmaker with his golf game. I've seen them plunge naked into muddy water holes to retrieve a congressman's ball and throw it onto the green."

"I imagine that golf is an easier way of going into the tank than having a friend put you into an oil deal."

"The worst part of all this is that when 'Mr. Smith' discovers lobbyists do not insist on playing by the rules, he refuses to play with anyone else."

"Is improving his golf score the only payola 'Mr. Smith' gets out of golf game in Washington?"

"No," Greg said, "there's lots more. I was recently in a foursome and heard a lobbyist remark to a legislator, 'I'll buy 20 tickets to your political fund-raiser if you sink that one-foot putt' — and damned if the man didn't make it."

Company looking for ways of cleaning, recycling diapers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's largest maker of disposable diapers said today it will begin searching for ways to transform billions of dirty didies from an ecological problem into recycled flower pots, building insulation and lush highway medians.

Procter & Gamble Co. announced it is backing research to see if dirty disposable diapers can be cleaned and their components recycled. The cost of the program was not immediately available.

In a statement issued prior to today's scheduled news conference at Washington's National Press Club, Bob Greene, P&G's associate director of research, said the company hoped to find ways of handling "disposable diapers and other materials in municipal solid waste in ways that can bypass landfill disposal and recover valuable resources."

The research, to be done in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Washington, Florida and other states, comes as public concern is growing over the 16 billion disposable diapers dumped annually in the nation's overflowing landfills.

While not the biggest component in the U.S. garbage pile — waste paper, bottles and cans are bigger contributors — diapers cannot be recycled like other trash.

Environmentalists have warned that the plastic-coated disposable diapers do not decompose, making their contents potential breeding grounds for dangerous viruses and bacteria that cause polio, hepatitis, meningitis and other diseases.

As a result, lawmakers in Nebraska have banned the sale of non-biodegradable diapers by 1993 and legislators in Iowa, Washington and Oregon have considered similar action.

The P&G announcement detailed three separate projects. The first, in cooperation with Seattle's Solid Waste Utility and Rabanco Co. of Seattle, will collect used diapers from 1,000 households, wash and sanitize them, then separate them into plastic and pulp.

The plastic will be recycled into flower pots, garbage bags and ersatz lumber used for landscaping. The pulp will be made into cardboard boxes, building insulation and wallboard liner.

"Our aim is not to get into the diaper recycling business," project director Nancy Eddy said. "Rather, we want to demonstrate that the technology is feasible and encourage entrepreneurs to get involved in this business."

In another project with the recycling firm Recomp Inc. of St. Cloud, Minn., diapers will be put through a process that churns garbage into a soil used to reclaim salt-tainted lands along highways.

The diaper giant also will finance research at the University of Wisconsin that, over the next five years, will bury and exhume regular and biodegradable disposable diapers at landfill sites in Wisconsin, Florida and the Northeast.

This landfill archeology will see if products touted as biodegradable actually decompose any faster than the regular disposable diapers made by P&G.

North deserves prison term, prosecutors say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver L. North should go to prison because he broke the law during the Iran-Contra scandal, lied about it during his trial and still doesn't show "one iota of remorse," prosecutors say.

In a sentencing memo likening the fired White House aide to the corrupt politicians of Tammany Hall, prosecutors say North "viewed and continues to view himself as being above the law and beyond reproach."

The former National Security Council aide faces a possible 10-year term when sentenced Friday by U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell for destroying evidence, aiding and abetting the obstruction of Congress and accepting an illegal gratuity.

Letting North go without a prison term "would be a statement that 15 years after Watergate, government officials can participate in a brazen cover-up, lie to Congress and collect a substantial gratuity and still receive only a slap on the wrist," prosecutors told Gesell in their memo Monday.

"North's view that anything goes in a political controversy would be sustained" by letting him off without a prison sentence, said the memo signed by independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh. "Instead, since his acts are a serious breach of the public trust, they warrant serious punishment."

Walsh did not make a specific recommendation of how much time North should serve in prison. North's lawyers are likely to file a response to the prosecutor's harsh statement.

Walsh charged that North concocted a false story to help win acquittal on a charge that he pocketed $4,300 in travelers checks entrusted to him by Adolfo Calero, a Nicaraguan Contra leader.

North's testimony that he purchased a car with $15,000 in cash he accumulated in a box nailed to his closet floor "echoed the flimsy lies offered by corrupt municipal officials in the days of Tammany Hall," Walsh said, in a reference to the New York political machine which ran the city from the mid-19th century into the 1930s and became synonymous with graft and fraud.

Walsh called the steel box story "preposterous" and said "North's perjury represents another indication of his continuing callous attitude toward the judicial process and our democratic institutions."

Throughout the 12-page memo, Walsh repeated the theme that "North has not indicated one iota of remorse for having committed crimes which, because of his position of public trust, jeopardized the constitutional processes of government."

"He apparently sees nothing wrong with alteration and destruction of official national security records," Walsh said.

"His participation in the preparation of a false and misleading chronology (of U.S.-Iran arms sales) has not led to any acknowledgement of wrongdoing," the prosecutor added.

Neptune's giant spot believed to be storm

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The Voyager 2 spacecraft has discovered a 6,200-mile-wide dark spot on Neptune, and scientists believe it's a giant storm similar to Earth's hurricanes and Jupiter's Great Red Spot.

The width is about one-fifth of Neptune's 30,700-mile diameter, just as the 16,000-mile-wide Great Red Spot is about one-fifth the size of Jupiter, said Andrew Ingersoll, a planetary scientist at the California Institute of Technology.

Voyager 2 was launched from Cape Canaveral in 1977, visited Jupiter in 1979, Saturn in 1981 and Uranus in 1986. Its twin, Voyager 1, explored Jupiter in 1979 and Saturn in 1980, and is now heading toward interplanetary space.

"I had gotten sort of discouraged from the Uranus encounter because Uranus was such a bland place," Ingersoll said Monday. "So I'm happy to see such action on Neptune."

The top Voyager scientist was similarly excited.

"It's huge!" Caltech physicist and vice president Edward Stone said of the dark spot.

While the robot probe is too far from Neptune to detect winds within the spot, the spot seems to be a hurricane-like storm system similar to the Great Red Spot, which has 250 mph winds, said Stone, chief scientist of the Voyager project for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Hurricanes on Earth are much smaller, measuring several hundred miles across. Unlike Earth's hurricanes, which break up after a week or two, Jupiter's Great Red Spot has remained intact at least since its discovery more than 350 years ago — a mystery scientists have yet to explain.

Stone said Neptune's dark spot became apparent in photographs taken by Voyager's television cameras in April, and faint hints of it can be seen in pictures made as early as January.

The absence of continents on giant gas planets such as Jupiter and Neptune may explain the persistence of the spots, Ingersoll said, adding that continents may help dissipate hurricanes on Earth.

Voyager 2 is due to make its closest approach to Neptune, the solar system's fourth-largest planet, at 9 p.m. PDT Aug. 24.

It will swoop 3,000 miles from the planet's north pole, by far the closest approach of any of the flybys during the spacecraft's "grand tour" of the giant, gaseous outer planets. Five hours later, it will pass 25,000 miles from Triton, one of two known Neptunian moons.

Voyager 2 today was 2.66 billion miles from Earth and 58.98 million miles from Neptune, speeding toward that planet at 42,216 mph, said Mary Beth Murrill, spokeswoman for NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

Neptune's dark spot is about 25 to 30 degrees latitude in the planet's southern hemisphere, Ingersoll said.

Voyager 2 also discovered a much smaller, rapidly changing white spot — about half the size of the dark spot — at about 70 degrees south latitude, he said.

The dark spot's color isn't yet known because scientists haven't processed a complete set of pictures through different color filters, Ingersoll said. But Stone said it is darker than Neptune's surrounding skies, which are blue-green because of methane in its mostly hydrogen-helium atmosphere.

Jupiter's Great Red Spot is believed to get its color from organic chemicals or possibly sulfur or phosphorus trapped within it, said Ingersoll.

Besides the Great Red Spot, Jupiter contains dozens of smaller storm systems, which appear as white spots. Saturn has similar storms, although they are less visible, Stone said.

Owner of 'house made of love' sees rebirth for inner city

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Cheryl Hayes says she won't forget the hundreds of volunteers who in one week made her dream of a new home a reality in the heart of Milwaukee's inner city.

"They'll never leave; their spirits will always be here," she said. "It's a house made of love."

Ms. Hayes, 40, a social worker and divorced mother of three, owns one of six homes built last week by the Georgia-based Habitat for Humanity International.

The site is near where 12 people died two years ago in the city's deadliest house fire. Less than three weeks after the blaze, a house fire several blocks away killed six people. The death toll focused attention on housing ills for the largely minority population of the inner city.

Now, Ms. Hayes sees the efforts of Habitat as part of a rebirth of the neighborhood where she has lived nearly a decade.

"This is a beautiful neighborhood," she said. "This is going to be THE neighborhood someday."

Former President Carter and Millard Fuller, executive director of the organization, also think so.

Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, spent last week working on one of the homes. For the former president, it was the sixth year he has spent a week pounding nails and putting up walls in a Habitat home.

"I just know what's happened in other places where we've worked; it kind of rejuvenates the people," he said. "The whole neighborhood tries to stay up with them. They kind of set a pattern."

The crews in Milwaukee also renovated eight other homes last week.

Habitat officials said similar work has occurred in about 150 communities around the world as part of efforts to build more than 3,000 homes for low-income people this year.

Habitat, founded by Fuller in 1976 and based in Americus, Ga., is an ecumenical Christian organization that uses volunteer labor and donated material to produce housing for needy people.

The homes are sold for no profit with no-interest loans. The Milwaukee homes cost from $24,000 to $26,000, with principal payments on the 10-20 year mortgages to range from $100 to $250 a month.

Each buyer must put in 500 hours of labor that's called "sweat equity." The buyers work on several homes.

"It has a very positive impact for the families involved," said Walter Farrell, a professor at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee and a board member of the First Wisconsin Bank's Community Involvement Corp.

"Beyond that, it's only going to have a neighborhood impact if there are other projects in the area,...if the houses do not become oases in an area of dilapidated houses."

He said census data show that vacant or substandard housing in the central city is as high as 25 to 30 percent. Officials estimate 800 dwellings are abandoned.

Taking a break from installing siding on a house, Fuller said the whole community should work toward eliminating substandard housing and homelessness by the year 2000.

"This is only one week, but what if we did it every week? What if everybody was concerned every week about everybody having a house? The problem would be solved in a very few years."

Ms. Hayes and Diana Wilson, another of the six new homeowners, said the project stirred interest in the black community. It also stirred their emotions.

Ms. Wilson, 36, a school bus driver and nurse's aide who will live in the house with her two sons, said she arrived at her new home at 6:10 a.m. one day. No one was there.

"I was walking around, looking at the rooms, and I didn't even realize I was crying. The tears were just running down my face," she said.

Cholesterol labels considered by AMA

CHICAGO (AP) — Food labels would be required to include the product's cholesterol content, caloric value and the specific source of all vegetable oils used under a proposal presented to the American Medical Association.

The plan, offered by California delegates to the AMA's annual policymaking convention, also would mandate saturated fat content listings on labels. Cholesterol and such fats have been linked to cardiovascular problems.

A related resolution presented Monday asked the association to seek truthful labeling of food products, along with warnings regarding sodium, cholesterol and the additive content of packaged food products.

The AMA would call upon the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the advertising practices of food manufacturers who present their products as low in sodium or cholesterol under the second plan, submitted by Dr. Louis F. Alfano, a delegate from the American Society of Abdominal Surgeons.

Both resolutions were referred to an AMA committee that was to vote on whether to recommend that the association's House of Delegates adopt them as policy.

A critic said the measures were vague and would provide useless and misleading information to millions of people over age 60 whose cholesterol levels cannot be altered by what they eat.

But supporters say many other consumers would be well-served by such labeling.

"Health conscious consumers are often misled by the advertising and labeling of common food products such as canned soups labeled as 'low sodium' which contain a substantial sodium content but are only lower in sodium than the manfacturer's regular line of soups," Alfano said.

The AMA can clear up the confusion by asking the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to assist the consumer by requiring more specific food labeling, he told committee members.

Dr. Arnold Briet, an alternate delegate, presented the California plan and said he supported Alfano's resolution.

Cholesterol is a waxy substance that can contribute to clogged arteries and heart disease, depending on what type of fatty proteins carry it through the blood.

It is produced naturally in the body and develops from eating food with saturated fats or pure cholesterol, such as eggs, butter and animal fat.

The FDA has implemented labeling standards that allow foods to be billed as cholesterol-reduced even though they still have large amounts of cholesterol, Briet said.

"Nowhere do they require the source of the oils to be labeled," he said.

Some plant fats, such as coconut and palm oils, contain high amounts of saturated fatty acids that can help cholesterol form, and food manufacturers like Nabisco Brands Inc. and Quaker Oats Co. have taken steps to remove such oils from their products.

Dr. Henry Mineur, an internist and delegate from New Jersey, noted that there is an ongoing debate over so-called "good" and "bad" cholesterol. He said the proposals would be useless unless they called for labels to differentiate between the two.

NATION IN BRIEF

Florida Senate passes child-gun legislation

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — The Florida Senate approved a bill that would jail gun owners who don't secure their loaded weapons. The action came in response to accidental shootings that killed three children and wounded four this month.

"The nation is watching to see what Florida does," Sen. Jeanne Malchon, a co-sponsor of the legislation, said before Monday's 32-4 vote sent the bill to the House.

"It's probably at this point one of the first bills in the nation aimed at safety of children in access to guns," Senate President Bob Crawford said.

"It didn't do everything that I wanted it to, but it's a bill that will significantly encourage safety, so I'm very pleased that we passed it."

A House committee was scheduled to consider the bill this morning as the Legislature began the second day of a three-day special session called by Gov. Bob Martinez.

Accidental gunshots are the fifth-leading cause of death of U.S. children under age 14, and Florida has one of the three highest rates of accidental shootings in the country, according to Malchon, who proposed similar legislation two years ago.

Under the bill, adults who fail to secure a loaded weapon that is used by a minor in an accidental shooting could be charged with a felony and sentenced to five years in prison and fined $5,000. It would be a misdemeanor if a minor displayed the gun or threatened someone with it.

Skimmer sinks in bay

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — An oil skimmer sank while helping clean up the Exxon Valdez spill, releasing an unknown amount of oil into Prince William Sound, the Coast Guard said today.

No injuries were reported.

The Retriever sank early Sunday in Northwest Bay in the sound in about 100 feet of water, a Coast Guard official said.

The vessel was under contract to Exxon as part of efforts to clean up the nation's largest oil spill.

The Coast Guard said in a statement that an unknown amount of oil was re-released into the bay because of the sinking.

Prom lawsuit settled

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A high school sophomore who sued a boy for breaking their prom date wanted an apology but is settling for $81.28.

Marlon Shadd, 17, agreed to reimburse Tomontra Mangrum, 15, for her prom expenses, including shoes and a hairdo, and the costs of her lawsuit.

"It's just stupid," Shadd said Monday. "She's just freaking out. I don't know what's wrong with her."

"We said we'll pay, just to get rid of it," said Shadd's attorney, Joel Daves III.

Shadd, who plans to attend Kansas State University on a basketball scholarship, maintains he called Ms. Mangrum a week before the prom to say he had hurt his ankle and would not be able to escort her.

Guard shot during mishap

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A man who said he wanted to hijack a plane to Cuba shot an airport security guard in the leg Monday night before being arrested, according to authorities.

Gary Thompson, 39, of Cornelius, was arrested on attempted murder charges, said Doug Roberts, a spokesman for Portland International Airport. The shooting occurred at an airport security checkpoint.

Thompson said he wanted to hijack an airplane to Cuba, according to Roberts.

Donald Hudson, 70, was listed in satisfactory condition at Providence Hospital with a leg wound.

Nobody else was hurt.

Study examines heart rates

WASHINGTON (AP) — Black men experience a faster heartbeat at moderate exercise than do their white counterparts, a finding that may account for the greater incidence of high blood pressure and heart disease among blacks, according to a North Carolina researcher.

Dr. Lars G. Ekelund, an associate professor of medicine at the University of North Carolina, said an analysis of treadmill stress tests conducted as part of a national study showed black men tended to have about eight more heartbeats a minute than white men at the same levels of exercise.

Texas manufacturers cited in NRDC report

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas manufacturers from El Paso to Port Arthur released thousands of pounds of suspected cancer-causing chemicals into the air, according to government figures released by a private group.

The National Resources Defense Council, using 1987 data from the Environmental Protection Agency, said several companies in Texas are among the top industrial sources of toxic air emissions in the country for various chemicals.

While concentrated along the Texas Gulf Coast, the NRDC's study also found plants releasing potential carcinogens in the Dallas-Fort Worth metroplex, in and around San Antonio, and across West Texas in such cities as San Angelo, Amarillo and Abilene. Ector County ranked 11th in the nation in toxic air emissions.

NRDC's study said the U.S. Air Force's plant No. 4 in Fort Worth released 970,000 pounds of the chemical trichloroethylene, making it the greatest emission of a single chemical from one source in the state.

Texaco Chemical Co.'s Port Neches plant was second, with 960,000 pounds of 1,3-butadiene released into the air.

The plant also ranked first in the NDRC's list of the nation's top industrial sources of butadiene, followed by Polysar Gulf Coast Inc. in Orange, ranked second with releases totaling 722,570 pounds.

Eight other Texas plants were on the list of the top 20 sources of butadiene, the NRDC said.

The NRDC also included those plants on its list of the top 125 largest emitters of individual carcinogenic air pollutants in 1987, based on EPA data.

Nine Texas plants made the list — U.S. Air Force Plant No. 4 in Fort Worth for trichloroethylene, the Texaco Chemical Co. in Port Neches for 1,3-butadiene; Goodyear Bayport Chemical Plant, Harris, benzene, 793,968 pounds; Polysar Gulf Coast Inc. in Orange for 1,3-butadiene; Texas Fibers, Brenham, methylene chloride, 579,173 pounds; Celanese Engineering Resins, Nueces, formaldehyde, 500,000 pounds; Du Pont Laporte Plant, Laporte, methylene chloride, 472,700 pounds; BASF Corp., Brazoria, benzene, 471,000 pounds; and Shell Oil Company, Harris, benzene, 432,000 pounds.

Charles Elkins, director of the EPA's toxics programs, said the raw figures do not measure individuals' health risks because they do not take into account exposure levels.

The NRDC released its study Monday, as the EPA came out with an inventory of toxic chemical releases by industry into the air, ground and water.

The EPA said Texas ranked first in toxic air emissions and on-site land disposal of toxic chemicals, third in both chemical discharges into surface water and public sewage systems, and second in underground injections of toxic chemicals.

Utah county tops in toxic polluters; Ector in top 25

From Staff and Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — More toxic chemicals are released into the air in Tooele County, Utah, than any other county in the United States, while Ector County also was among the top 25 worst, the Environmental Protection Agency says.

In fact, the 68 million pounds of toxic chemicals released in Tooele County each year account for all the toxic chemical releases into the air in Utah reported to the EPA, the federal agency said Monday.

Other county hot spots for toxic industrial air pollution with more than 45 million tons of hazardous chemical released were: Warren County in Virginia, Mobile County in Alabama and Ascension County in Louisiana.

The county breakdown was included in a report that showed 2.7 billion pounds of toxic chemicals are released by industry into the air annually. The overall figure had been reported before, but the detailed breakdown by counties had not previously been available.

The EPA provided no industrial plants in its summary, referring only to the individual counties.

But the Natural Resources Defense Council, citing the EPA report and other agency documents, said that Amax Corp. in Rowley, Utah, accounted for all of the reported toxic pollutants in Tooele County.

The NRDC also cited these companies:

- Avtex Fibers of Front Royal, Va., 50.1 million pounds, in Warren County.
- Courtaulds North America Inc. of LeMoyne, Ala., 42 million pounds, in Mobile County.
- Triad Chemical, Donaldsonville, La., 19.8 million pounds, and C.F. Industries, also of Donaldsonville, 16.2 million pounds, in Ascension County.

Meanwhile, the EPA said that 25 counties accounted for two-thirds of the discharges of toxic chemicals into surface water.

San Bernardino County in California had by far the largest volume, nearly 3.7 billion pounds, about two-thirds of which came from a single company. The chemical involved was usually sodium sulfate, which the EPA said it is planning soon to take off the toxic chemical list on the grounds that it poses no serious health threat.

Harrison County in Mississippi had the next largest volume of discharges into surface water with 369 million pounds, followed by Harris County in Texas with 296 million pounds, according to EPA.

Here are the 25 counties listed by EPA as having the highest releases of toxic chemicals in the air and surface water:

Summer school enrollment at MISD down from last year

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

He would rather be out of town or chasing girls this summer, but Floyd Spraglin has more serious matters to address.

The 16-year-old Lee High School junior must resolve a little problem he had in one of his classes during the past year.

"I messed up in history," said Floyd, who with 768 other students hit the first day of summer school Monday, also the final registration day.

While some students, like Floyd, enrolled to correct academic mistakes made during regular school in Midland Independent School District, others simply wanted to get ahead or needed special instruction to perform better on the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills. MISD also offers driver's education and special education classes.

LHS junior Dona McCombs said she wants to get American history out of the way to have more schedule flexibility during her senior year, when she plans to attend school half the day and work part time.

"It can be fun, I guess," Miss McCombs said of summer school, adding that she would be working if she wasn't hitting the books. "I'd rather not go."

Apparently others who have little affection toward summer school feel the same way — and didn't go — or simply shied away from a 12-month school year for other reasons.

Summer school principal Don Mason said hard economic times may have kept more students from enrolling this year than last summer, when about 900 took part in primary and secondary courses. It costs $210 for a full-credit course.

"The economic situation is a little worse this year," Mason said, adding that payment plans have been set up for some families.

While overall summer school enrollment overall from last year, the number of junior high schoolers in the classes has increased, going from 74 last year to 90.

Mason said that although students must learn material in a shorter time span than in regular school, summer school tends to be a better learning environment.

"I think it's real successful," Mason said. "Some of those kids come with a better attitude. For one thing, they have to pay. For another, they figure that if they have to spend their summer here, they might as well work hard."

At the elementary level, 169 pupils have enrolled in classes held at De Zavala Elementary School, which last summer had 165 children.

"Some of the children need remediation," Principal Dolores Medrano said. "Others are just a little bit behind. Others just failed."

Students have until Monday to register for the TEAMS-improvement courses, offered from 8:30 a.m. to 10 a.m., 10 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. and 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. The classes, geared only for ninth- through 12th-graders, are free.

Texans want secure border, poll says

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — A new public opinion poll released Monday shows that nine out of 10 Texans, including most Hispanics, see legal and illegal immigration as a problem and most of them are willing to pay more money for tighter border security.

According to the survey made in mid-May for the Washington-based Federation for American Immigration Reform (FAIR), a clear majority of Texas voters (59 percent) indicates that "too many" legal immigrants are admitted to the United States each year.

The survey also showed about one-quarter (27 percent) feel present immigration rates are "about right," and smaller percentages are undecided or feel "too few" immigrants are admitted.

Overall, the same percentage of Hispanic Americans and Anglo Americans (61 percent) covered by the survey said they are concerned about "too much" legal immigration.

The poll of 1,000 Texans was conducted by Tarrance and Associates of Houston. The polling sample corresponds to the makeup of Texas' population and includes the following ethnic distribution: white, 75 percent; Hispanic, 13 percent, black 10 percent, and Asian and other groups, 2 percent.

Voters in San Antonio, rural West Texas and rural East Texas show the highest levels of concern over "too much" immigration, with respondents in the Rio Grande Valley expressing relatively less concern.

Extremely high levels of concern about legal immigration came from conservative, older, blue-collar and rural voters — those most likely to feel the economic impact of competition for jobs from foreign workers, according to the pollsters.

Dan Stein, executive director of FAIR, a 10-year-old group that advocates tighter immigration control, said the poll results signal the ticking of "a political time bomb for elected officials with effectiveness in fighting the problem becoming a potential campaign issue." The poll results "are powerful evidence that Congress can no longer ignore," he added.

Asked to evaluate the job elected officials were doing in fighting illegal immigration, the survey showed 81 percent of the respondents saying they are doing "only a fair job" or " a poor job."

Texans are extremely concerned with border security, especially when the issue of drug smuggling across the border is discussed. In San Antonio, 87 percent of the voters polled said they want to increase border security to fight drug smuggling. In West Texas, 90 percent agreed.

According to Tarrance, the poll's findings suggest that "drug smuggling and border security are explosive issues."

FAIR earlier this year recommended steps to slow illegal immigration, and Stein said the poll indicated "Texans like our recommendations."

For example, 78 percent of those surveyed support a proposed $1 to $2 border toll to increase personnel and manpower to improve border enforcement. Seventy-seven percent endorse major increases in federal spending to secure the border and 65 percent support building or replacing existing fencing with secure fencing made of alloys that resist tampering by fence cutters.

"In many cases Hispanics were more supportive of border crossing fees and border security measures than most other ethnic groups," Stein said.

A strong majority of Texans polled want Congress to set an absolute yearly limit on legal immigration. The 1986 overhaul of immigration law limited immigrants by category only.

A majority of all Texas voters want employer sanctions "strictly" enforced.

Local unemployment rates show improvement

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Unemployment rates in Midland shows some improvement from April to May, according to figures released this morning by the Texas Employment Commission.

The TEC shows Midland's unemployment rate fell from 6.2 percent in April to 5.8 percent in May. In May 1988, the rate was 6.1 percent.

Odessa's unemployment rate fell from 8.5 to 7.6 percent and was 7.5 percent in May 1988.

Total employment in the Tall City also showed some improvement, rising slightly from 45,700 to 45,800. Total unemployment also slipped, from 3,000 to 2,800. However, the civilian labor force continues to contract, dropping from 48,700 in April to 48,600 in May. The civilian labor force stood at 49,500 in May a year ago.

In Odessa, the labor force stood at 51,300, down from 51,600 in April. Total employment grew from 47,200 to 47,400, and total unemployment went from 4,400 to 3,900.

"I don't think this is an indication the economy is getting better," says Lorna Biar, labor market analyst with the TEC's regional office here in Midland. Instead, it was a seasonal improvement as the labor market absorbed high school and college students seeking summer work, she suggested.

Probe centers on possible Customs fraud

BEAUMONT (AP) — An investigation by federal authorities is centering on allegations of fraud and waste within a U.S. Customs program in which seized property is auctioned, a prosecutor said.

U.S. Attorney Bob Wortham is presenting his findings to a federal grand jury in Beaumont, the Beaumont Enterprise reported.

The investigation focuses on Northrop Worldwide Aircraft Services Inc., which, through a contract with Customs, recovers, maintains and sells seized or forfeited personal property, NBC News reported Monday.

Wortham began his investigation after an area banker complained of fees charged by Northrop to sell a vehicle seized in a drug-related arrest in Lumberton, Texas.

Hardin County officials arrested a man on Oct. 12, 1987, and confiscated a small amount of hashish. Customs agents seized the man's Chevrolet Suburban.

George Talbert, who was working at First State Bank of Lumberton and now heads operations at First Texas Bank of Vidor, said the Lumberton bank had a lien of between $4,700 and $5,000 on the vehicle. He said Customs offered to buy the vehicle for $4,500 but later told him it would be sold at an auction and any money after expenses would be returned to the bank.

At the time, Customs estimated the vehicle's value at about $8,500. Talbert said Northrop sold the vehicle at a Houston auction for $4,300. After tacking on fees — $700 to tow the vehicle 90 miles to the auction and $1,400 in commission among them — the bank was left with about $1,900.

"I was mad," Talbert said. "I wrote to the company, asking for a detailed statement of their expenses. I anticipated that it should cost about $500. But since it was the government, I figured it would probably cost about $1,000. When I found out it was over $2,000, I was livid."

Talbert also wrote Wortham. After Wortham's office investigated the sale, the company sent the bank an additional $1,000, he said.

"I was startled to see it set off something big like this," Talbert said.

The investigation widened in January when Wortham served a search warrant at Northrop's Lawton, Okla., offices to obtain transcripts on all Customs auctions for the past three years.

Tony Canpafio, a spokesman for Crescent City, Calif.-based Northrop Corp., said the company is well aware of the investigation.

"We're working with the government on their investigation," Canpafio said. "We've been subpoenaed and we've provided documents."

Oil slick cleanup to take 3 months

Hearst News Service

LIBERTY — A three-mile-long oil slick threatening an ecologically sensitive area just south of here will take about three months to remove, according to a spokesman for the Sun Pipeline Co.

"We will have more than a month of active cleanup and then monitor it for two months, every time it rains, to see what washes off the shore," said Forrest Brooks. "It will be expensive to clean up due to the rugged terrain."

Officials estimated that 3,500 barrels of crude oil leaked from a four-inch elevated line crossing Gum Slough, in the South Liberty Oil Field, about one week ago.

Brooks said company officials suspect the line was ruptured after being hit by a tree loosened in the recent flooding. The break has been repaired, he said.

Employees shut off the line after noting a sudden pressure drop about 9 a.m. June 11, officials said.

Brooks said the pipeline company has hired 62 contract workers who are using boats and vacuum trucks in a round-the-clock clean-up effort. An 8,200-foot boom has contained the crude mostly in Gum Slough with only a small amount leaking into Clayton Bayou, which empties into the Trinity River. The contaminated area is a mile wide.

Parmer renews commitment to run for Senate, urges Wright to stay

FORT WORTH (AP) — Although he said seeking former House Speaker Jim Wright's congressional seat would be an easier challenge, state Sen. Hugh Parmer renewed his commitment to run for U.S. Senate and urged Wright to stay in Congress.

"Nobody has a right to tell the people of Fort Worth and this community who their congressman ought to be," Parmer said at a Monday news conference.

"The people of this community ought to make that choice. And I am persuaded, having talked to them, that if they have that option they will overwhelmingly re-elect Jim Wright as the congressman from the 12th District," he said.

Parmer, a longtime friend of Wright's, urged his fellow Fort Worth Democrat either to remain in Congress or resign, as he had said he would, and then run again for his seat in a special election.

Wright told a group of about 30 supporters at a recent breakfast that he "would think about" running in the special election in the 12th Congressional District, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported today.

The newspaper said Wright, who met with supporters Saturday, neither encouraged nor discouraged the effort to draft him, according to some in attendance.

Wright spokesman Mark Johnson said Monday the congressman was gratified by supporters' suggestions that he keep the seat or run for it again, but "he is not encouraging this and his plans have not changed."

"He is proceeding with the transition" into private life by the end of June, Johnson said, though no resignation date has been set.

Having announced March 20 that he would run against U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm in 1990, Parmer reaffirmed his candidacy in that race.

After Wright gave up the speakership May 31 and said he would resign his House seat by the end of June to end a furor over House ethics allegations, Parmer was mentioned as the Democrat most likely to run for the post Wright has held since 1954.

But Parmer said, "What's right for me is to continue the commitment I made to the families of Texas to see that we have a senator who does care."

He also vowed to continue his U.S. Senate race during a news conference in Austin earlier Monday. Parmer waited for his afternoon appearance in the lobby of Fort Worth's Meacham Field airport to throw his support behind Wright.

"We want a man with the experience, with context, with the knowledge of how to be the most effective congressman we can have," Parmer said. "And that man's name is no mystery. That man's name is Jim Wright."

Parmer rejected the notion that ethics allegations would continue to dog Wright if he were to remain in Congress.

"The vast majority of people in Fort Worth believe that while Jim may have made some mistakes of judgment, as Jim has admitted ... it did not warrant the kind of penalty or price that he is talking about paying," Parmer said.

Parmer said he told Wright of his decision last week.

Asked whether Wright still planned to leave office, Parmer said, "I would say that he said neither yes, nor no. He simply listened to what I had to say."

"He is by far the dominant figure of the Democratic party in this county," Parmer said, citing recent polls that found district voters still view Wright favorably.

Texas Gov. Bill Clements has two options for filling a congressional vacancy. If he deems the situation an emergency, he could order a special election between 36 and 50 days after receipt of the resignation letter. If not an emergency, the election would be set on the next uniform election day, Aug. 12.

In reaffirming his candidacy for the U.S. Senate, Parmer took a shot at Gramm, saying the conservative Republican consistently votes against programs that would help the poor and elderly.

"Phil Gramm is still saying one thing in Texas and voting the opposite way in Washington. He's still Grammstanding," Parmer said.

Larry Neal, a spokesman for Gramm, fired back, saying Parmer "has been trotted out as a political stalking horse, a kind of disposable candidate who will linger on until they (the Democratic Party) can find someone better."

Others mentioned as possible 12th District candidates include Republicans Dr. Bob Lanier, star of the Fort Worth television show "60 Second Housecall;" Dr. Bruce Jacobson and state Rep. Bill Carter of Haltom City; and Democrat Pete Geren of Fort Worth.

TOXIC

EPA said the state also ranks second in the amount of waste transferred from an industrial site to another location, including across state lines.

Roger Meacham, EPA spokesman in Dallas, said the state's heavy concentration of petrochemical companies and refineries was largely responsible for the toxic air emissions.

Meacham said people "should be concerned but not alarmed" by the findings of the Toxic Release Inventory (TRI), and that EPA and its state counterparts "need to move expeditiously to better control these releases."

Of the 25 counties that account for the largest releases and transfers to other sites of toxic chemicals, Texas has six — Harris, ranked second; Calhoun, third; Brazoria, sixth; Milam, eighth; Jefferson, ninth; and Galveston, 25th.

Daniel Weiss, Washington director of the Sierra Club's pollution program, said the EPA's inventory "reinforces the crying need for dramatic reductions in airborne toxic emissions to protect Texans' health."

EPA's inventory found Texas industries released 239 million pounds of toxins into the air in 1987. Of the 25 counties with the greatest air emissions nationally, Texas had five: Harris ranked sixth; Ector, 11th; Jefferson, 13th; Brazoria, 14th; and Calhoun, 21st.

"The Texas sky is used as a giant garbage dump by Texas industries," Weiss said.

When it comes to water pollution, the EPA inventory said Texas industry released nearly 660 million pounds of toxic chemicals, with three counties among the worst sources nationally — Harris ranked third place; Brazoria, fifth; and Jefferson, 25th.

Texas also released 154 million pounds of toxins into public sewage systems, with Harris County ranked third nationally and Galveston County ranked 18th.

Texas also accounted for one-third of the total toxic discharges onto the land, with 835 million pounds. Calhoun County ranked first nationally, accounting for 54 percent of the state's total, followed by Milam County in second place and Harris County in 22nd.

Plants in Texas also released 630 million pounds of toxins into underground injection wells, the EPA said, with seven counties among the largest for underground releases — Jefferson ranked fourth; Brazoria, fifth; Calhoun, sixth; Galveston, eighth; Harris, 14th; Victoria, 20th; and Harrison, 23rd.

Texas also accounted for the second largest amount of toxic wastes transferred off-site, with nearly 282 million pounds moved to another site, EPA said.

Harris County accounted for 5 percent of all off-site transfers, to rank second nationally with 135 million pounds. Jefferson County ranked fifth nationally, and Nueces ranked 19th.

The city of Deer Park ranked second among cities receiving toxic chemicals from another site, for a total of 112 million pounds.

SCHOOL

Of the 87 enrolled in TEAMS-improvement classes this summer, nine are high school seniors who are out of school but didn't master one or both sections of the test, given two times during their junior and senior years. Last summer saw 93 take TEAMS remediation courses.

"They would have graduated," said Argelia Herrera, TEAMS coordinator. "They've passed all their coursework but didn't pass the TEAMS."

Also enrolled are 45 students who just finished their junior year and 33 incoming sophomores.

"These kids are more successful than the ones who don't take the class and need it," Ms. Herrera said of those who take the summer TEAMS course. "The classroom is more open to ask questions. We're only trying to help the kids pass the TEAMS, so we have more one-on-one teaching."

For more information about summer TEAMS classes, call 694-2551, extension 324, or 699-1170.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

Summer plans may take away some volunteers but not volunteer needs. If you have some free time this summer, consider filling in for others. Below are a few of the opportunities currently available at the Volunteer Center:

■ Combine your love of young children and summer fun assisting an agency with a wide range of activities. Help is needed during daytime hours with arts and crafts, water play, field activities, puppetry, storytelling or just rocking babies. With just a few hours a week, you can fill a child's summer with new and fun experiences.

■ Se habla Espanol? If so, become an interpreter or speaker for an agency that services abused women and their children. Training is provided with the agency's Speaker's Bureau director. Here's an opportunity to sharpen your skills while addressing a need in the community.

■ Free on Monday or Wednesday evening? Students studying for the high school equivalency exam are in need of tutors. As a tutorial volunteer, working with these students at the agency for a three hour evening session, you can make a difference.

■ Volunteers interested in utilizing or developing great writing skills are needed by a literacy agency. You will assist in research, organizing materials, and proposal writing. Hours are flexible and some of the work may be done at home. On-the-job training will be provided.

■ Foster a child's interest in reading by helping children to select books and reading with them. This is a Monday afternoon one- or two-hour volunteer opportunity at a local agency.

For more information, call the Volunteer Center at 697-8781.

Stein said "this stands in stark contrast to the almost lackadaisical attitude of the federal government in allocating resources settling the occasional violations that are detected and the almost hostile attitude toward sanctions expressed recently by key members" of Congress.

A New York Times story published last Sunday suggested the new immigration law, which became effective in May 1987, was failing to stem the tide of illegal immigrants. The new law gave amnesty to aliens who had lived in the U.S. continuously since Jan. 1, 1982 and penalized employers who hired undocumented workers.

Responding, Stein declared that FAIR has evidence the law is working well in many respects, but that it is not being sufficiently enforced.

Rep. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio, the vice chairman of the House Judiciary Committee's panel on immigration, said the FAIR poll is "a real service that underscores public support for congressional action on immigration reform and control."

"I am disturbed by a tendency in Congress to focus more on opening our borders rather than protecting American jobs and security," Smith said.

RATES

She characterized the local job market as steady, and cautioned that "it would be premature to take the unemployment figures as a sign that the economy is getting better — or getting worse."

Despite the improvement in the local unemployment rate, Midland fell from 11th to 13th in the TEC's ranking of metropolitan statistical areas, and was tied with Abilene. Odessa was 19th. McAllen-Edinburgh-Mission had the highest rate, 13.2 percent.

Bryan-College Station continues to have the lowest unemployment rate in the state, falling from 4.5 percent in April to 4.1 percent. Lubbock was second with 4.2 percent, followed by Dallas with 4.8 percent and Amarillo and Fort Worth-Arlington with 4.9 percent each.

The state unemployment rate fell from 7 percent in April to 5.9 percent.

"It was a big drop, but we're thinking now that probably the April rate wasn't quite as high as the figures show," says Ruth Goebler, a TEC labor market analyst in Austin.

There is an error rate of plus or minus one-half percent in the sampling, she said, adding that it is possible the April figures erred on the high side.

Astronaut's fatal aerobatics didn't violate NASA rules

HOUSTON (AP) — Astronaut David Griggs, who was killed this weekend in a plane crash while practicing aerobatic maneuvers for an upcoming air show, did not violate the space agency policies by performing high-risk flying, an official says.

Griggs, 49, died Saturday when his single-engine World War II-era trainer crashed at a private airfield near Earle, Ark. Witnesses said Griggs, who was to pilot a space shuttle mission in November, appeared to be performing a low-level aerobatic maneuver when the plane crashed.

"We do have a policy for people to avoid high-risk recreational activities. However, aerobatic flying is not something we consider high risk," said Dan Brandenstein, chief of the astronaut corps at the Johnson Space Center. "It's something we encourage our pilots to do in their T-38 trainers."

Former Italian POW hopes chapel helps unite onetime enemies

HEREFORD (AP) — A former Italian prisoner of World War II says he hopes the restoration of a cemetery chapel built by fellow captives will serve as testament to the brotherhood our nations now share.

Aurelio Manzoni described the restoration as a symbol of rebirth.

"There was a terrible war in which Italians and Americans were enemies," Manzoni said through an interpreter. "A war which I have always called our civil war. We hope this achievement will remain for many years to represent the newfound friendship between our nations."

About 250 people attended Sunday's ceremony for the refurbished monument built by prisoners in 1945 as a tribute to five captives who died while incarcerated.

The chapel near the city of Hereford eroded through 40 years of severe Panhandle weather.

Two flagpoles — one flying the American flag and the other flying the Italian flag — guard the front of the restored building.

School districts now look to court for relief from unequal funding

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court is the only hope for achieving equity in funding among poor and rich school districts, following enactment of a school finance law that failed to correct the problem, says the president of Equity Center.

Sid Pruitt, also superintendent of the Alvarado school district, near Fort Worth, noted that the finance bill recently signed into law provides "equity funds" of $200 million in 1989-90 and $250 million in 1990-91.

Those sums, Pruitt told a news conference Monday, "are only two small drops in a $14 billion bucket. In fact ... those drops are not even enough to keep up with the rate of evaporation."

The Equity Center, which was formed to represent students in property-poor school districts, claims a pivotal role in the Edgewood vs. Kirby lawsuit, which led to a ruling that Texas' school finance system is unconstitutional. That ruling was later overturned by the 3rd Court of Appeals in Austin, and is now on appeal to the state Supreme Court.

Pruitt said 56 "friend of the court briefs" have been filed for a change in school financing, including some by students, and that number is expected to grow.

"There is an increasingly competitive world after high school and if we are not prepared for it, it will eat us up and spit us out before we even have a chance," said Clay Bockhart of Friendswood, which was among examples of comments released by the center.

Pruitt said, "The school finance system in place in 1985-86 was found to be underfunded and highly inequitable by both the trial court and the 3rd Court of Appeals. They only differed on the question of whether the inadequate, inequitable system was also unconstitutional."

Since 1985-86, he said, inflation and the expense of meeting changes required by the Legislature have increased educational costs by at least 13 percent, while the state's contribution has increased by less than 1 percent.

Pruitt said by 1990-91 the cost of an adequate public education system will have grown to $13 billion to $14 billion, or 22 percent over 1985-86 financing, with the state's share increasing by less than 6 percent.

He said "it now seems clearer than ever before that our only hope for the foreseeable future lies in the Supreme Court."

Richard Kirkpatrick of Copperas Cove, chairman of a group of 55 districts that intervened in the lawsuit, said, "The legislation just passed does not represent but a very small step toward equity, if you can term it that. Actually, it can best be termed as a down payment on inflation that's occurred since the last school finance bill passed in June 1984."

Kirkpatrick said a proposed 7-cent per package cigarette tax increase would have made available an additional $450 million for public education, but Gov. Bill Clements' threatened veto of any new tax "hamstrung the Legislature in attempting to deal with this problem."

He said a $1.2 billion appropriation for the biennium "would have been a good down payment" on public education but the Legislature chose $450 million.

In the future, after 1989-90 school financing is studied, figures will show that the gap between rich and poor districts "will not have closed ... not one iota."

Jimmy Vasquez of the Edgewood school district, the San Antonio system that is the lead plaintiff in the lawsuit, said, "The time is now to move swiftly to remedy the situation through our Supreme Court."

"Patience wears thin," Vasquez said.

Arrests of 12 in money-laundering probe signals get tough policy

DALLAS (AP) — The arrests of 12 people accused of laundering money signals a crackdown on those who handle the money side of drug trafficking, a federal prosecutor said.

"Increasingly, those in illegal drug trade resort to international money launderers to secrete drug profits," U.S. Attorney Marvin Collins said Monday.

"This case serves as notice that those who are willing to launder drug money will be prosecuted just as vigorously as the drug dealers themselves."

A federal grand jury Friday returned three indictments charging the 12 individuals with 73 counts of violations of federal laws, culminating a major international money laundering investigation.

The arrests culminated a two-year investigation conducted by the U.S. Customs Service and the Criminal Investigation Division of the Internal Revenue Service, with assistance from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in Britain and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Charged in one 27-count indictment were Nizamudin Alibhai, Sadrudin Abdulkarim Jessa and Abdulaziz M. Shivji, all listed as residents of the Dallas-Fort Worth area, and Amirali Mawji and Parin Mawji, residents of Scarsdale, N.Y.

Charged in a second 27-count indictment were Sultan Allibhai, Yasmin Allibhai, Medhi Kassam and Shiraz Hajee, all listed as residents of the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

A third, 19-count, indictment charged Sadrudin Alani, Dolly Alani and Sadrudin Virji, also listed as residents of the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

One indictment alleges that four of the defendants conspired to break U.S. law by secretly exporting more than $10 million in U.S. currency between 1985 and 1987. The indictment charges that the defendants concealed the existence, source, origin and transfer of the U.S. currency by willfully avoiding the filing of government forms required by law.

During a second phase of the investigation that began in early 1988, all three indictments allege, defendants aided by their alleged co-conspirators agreed to undercover agents' proposals that they launder money to facilitate the continued operations of a drug ring.

That indictment contends the defendants accepted numerous deliveries of U.S. currency in amounts between $50,000 and $250,000 with intent to promote the carrying on of drug trafficking.

The currency was then taken out of the United States to Britain, Canada, Belgium and the Bahamas without the filing of any government forms.

'DART Vader' rails against planned rapid transit line

DALLAS (AP) — He has emerged as DART's most visible nemesis, and he's out to save the neighborhood.

Clad in an imposing black mask and costume, the 44-year-old East Dallas resident approached the microphone in the near standing-room-only crowd at a public hearing.

"I'm DART Vader," he said. "I'm your worst nightmare."

Though he looks more like a character out of the movie "Star Wars," Don Heit is protesting a proposed transit line by the Dallas Area Rapid Transit authority. And while hundreds of area residents have joined the mass transit debate the past several years, Heit has emerged in just two months as one of DART's most vocal critics.

In the past, Heit has steered away from civic involvement, aside from his work with the Boy Scouts and the Forest Hills Homeowners Association.

"I worked for 25 years to build a home and a life for my family," Heit said. "I shut my mouth and got along with my life. And here these bunch of yo-yos want to take it away on a whim. I got upset."

In early April, DART announced it was considering using the Santa Fe railway corridor, which runs behind Heit's house, as a light-rail link from downtown Dallas to nearby Garland. From Heit's perspective, DART might as well have declared war.

A former Vietnam combat photographer and now a freelance photographer, Heit and his wife, Dee, chose their East Dallas neighborhood 18 years ago when they moved from Los Angeles "because it reminded us of Santa Barbara, with all the pecan trees," he said.

With the birth of their daughter five years later, Heit said he wanted her to grow up in that neighborhood.

DART was voted into creation in 1983 with a plan that excluded the Santa Fe. The Heits later decided to spend more than $100,000 to improve their $80,000 redwood house.

"I'm not just trying to save my house, but the whole neighborhood — and the quality of life, too," Heit said.

He and many of his neighbors say commuter trains will reduce their property values, cause traffic jams around rail stations and create potential hazards for children playing near the tracks.

Heit has invested in anti-DART bumper stickers and T-shirts, paid for an anti-DART advertisement on the back of a DART bus and flew to San Francisco to film that city's rapid transit to rebut DART arguments.

An editorial cartoon in an East Dallas publication, the White Rocker News, gave Heit the idea for DART Vader.

Some friends and members of his church tease him about his character, but Heit perseveres.

As he slips into his DART Vader voice, Heit takes a parting shot at the beleaguered transit agency: "May the farce be with you."

Stylish swimsuits minimize flaws

Designs focus attention away from problem areas

By ELAINE LOUIE
New York Times News Service

Buying a swimsuit is a lesson in self-knowledge, especially for the woman whose body is imperfect. "The truth is, no swimsuit can hide flaws," said Norma Kamali, the fashion designer. "You're exposed."

But this year's designs — dramatic necklines, lavish shirring, lower-cut legs and even skirts — can focus attention away from problem areas.

To minimize bulges, designers like Ms. Kamali and Oscar de la Renta recommend a discreet one-piece suit. "The one-piece is better for the figure," de la Renta said.

Ms. Kamali is offering what she calls long-line styles, with necklines similar to those worn by movie stars in the 1930s through the 50s.

The "Tara-Bill" suit, inspired by "Gone With the Wind," has an off-the-shoulder neckline. "With the wide V at the shoulder, the eye goes to the shoulders and the deep plunge at the neck and not to the hips," Ms. Kamali said. It comes in black, white, navy, red and cocoa and sells for $118.

The "Bill," with its halter neck reminiscent of the style Betty Grable made famous, focuses on the face and the breasts. It comes in black, white, navy, cocoa and red, and sells for $86.

In both suits, the body is covered by shirred fabric that makes the stomach less prominent. These suits, of matte Lycra and synthetic jersey, are available at OMO Kamali, 11 West 56th Street.

Capucine Puerari has taken the teddy from the boudoir to the pool. Her green swimsuit has a wired demicup, and the bottom has a flutter of fabric at the thighs. Made of polyamide and elastic, the suit sells for $90 at Barneys New York.

Randolph Duke's suit with two straps that meet at the back in a little bow is discreet but flirtatious. It is $62 at Barneys.

The maillot, or tank suit, is reinvented this year in Day-Glo colors, polka dots, stripes and the classic black and white. It is Adrienne Vittadini's favorite silhouette for most women.

"It creates a long, lean line," the designer said. A cotton-and-spandex model, vertically striped in black and white, sells for $58 at Bloomingdale's. A black maillot by Donna Karan is $140 at Bergdorf Goodman.

For the truly demure woman, there are swim dresses. Liza Bruce, a London designer, created a swimsuit that can double as a disco dress on a hot summer night. Made of tie-dyed nylon and Lycra lace, it is a tank suit with an attached tube skirt. "If your legs aren't good, you can wear the skirt pulled straight down," Ms. Bruce said.

If a woman wants to sunbathe, she can pull down the straps but pull up the tube, so that the suit doesn't slip off. The suit is tie-dyed in turquoise, green, orange and purple.

A suit by Giorgio Sant'Angelo looks like a miniskirted toga. "I always work around Greek lines, because I think it's a good example of a design that women of any size are able to wear," the designer said.

The underpinning is a nylon spandex maillot. Attached to the bustline is a loose, bias-cut circle of silk stretch gauze. Two strings, attached to the side of the suit, can wrap the fabric tight or loose.

"You can design the suit in an empire style," Sant'Angelo said, "so you can hide as much of the breast and stomach as you want." Untied and free-floating, the suit could be worn by pregnant women. It comes in black or coral and sells for $500 at Charivari, Manhattan.

Many women choose black for camouflage, but this will not necessarily do the trick. "When you are exposing as much flesh as you are in a swimsuit, black won't make any difference," de la Renta said. The trick to coping with a flaw, he said, "is to make the best of it."

Mystique of surfin' safaris lives

By BARBARA DeWITT and MARJ HOLBROOK
Copley News Service

Surf Nebraska?

Twenty years after movies such as "Gidget" and "Beach Blanket Bingo," the mystique of surfin' safaris and suntans lives on. And even in non-surf cities such as the college town of Kearney, Neb., teens are wearing T-shirts with a "Surf Nebraska" logo over an illustration of a pig surfing down a corn field.

Surfing and the beach scene equate with the good life, and for those who don't live near the ocean or can't get away from the office to catch a few waves, the lifestyle lives on in beach-inspired sportswear.

So, with the attitude that if you can't live it you can at least wear it, dozens of designers have made colorful baggy jams and skin-tight rubberized shorts into a big fashion statement.

Riding the crest of surfer fashions is Body Glove, a California company that began with basic black wet suits for the serious surfer and now carries complete lines of men's and women's active sportswear — including bikinis, tennis togs, sunglasses, watches and even beach chairs and umbrellas.

Sideout sportswear appeals to the volleyball set with its conservative, upscale line that includes walking pants, sweats, swimwear, trousers and button-down shirts. While it's basically a menswear line, the T-shirts and shorts often are worn by women.

Appealing to surfers-turned-yuppies is the Newport Blue line of active wear, which features clean blue-and-white designs on natty shirts and shorts with a crisp logo utilizing patterns from sailing flags.

The East Coast also has gone beachy, and the Massachusetts-based Reebok company offers beachy sportswear, including shorts, shirts and bright-colored swimsuit cover-ups with its line of tennis shoes.

Palefaces aren't part of the surf look — but neither is skin that looks like leather or is speckled with skin cancer. So while the surfer crowd still considers sun-bleached hair and a toasty tan chic and healthy-looking, most sun worshipers are using moderation.

And there are plenty of cosmetic and pharmaceutical products to help them do it right. New statistics indicate that sun-blockers outsell suntanning products. Sensible sunning has become the byword.

Applying mascara needs magic wand

New York Times News Service

There is more to mascara application than just gliding it on with the wand. Keep the following guidelines in mind when applying mascara:

- Prep your lashes with a conditioner or apply a bit of gentle daytime moisturizer on your lashes and then press them lightly between thumb and index finger. Allow to dry completely before proceeding.
- Apply mascara after shadow and eyeliner. If your lashes are very sparse or straight, curl them. Place the eyelash curler as close as possible to the roots, resting your elbow on a table for support. Squeeze for 10 seconds. Slowly open a bit before releasing all the way. To prevent lash tears and pinched lids, replace the rubber gripper before it cracks.
- Before applying, wipe excess mascara off the wand, especially at the tip, with a tissue. Look directly into a mirror and move the wand over lashes from roots to tips.
- Don't forget to separate lashes with a special lash comb. When lashes are still slightly damp, apply a second coat. If you wear glasses, do the ends only. Lenses tend to exaggerate any eye makeup.

"Bare" bottom lashes look most contemporary, but if yours are very fine, apply mascara lightly just near roots and comb through.

DEAR ABBY

Jimmy Stewart's dog lives on in his poem

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Several years ago, on the Johnny Carson show, Jimmy Stewart read a beautiful poem that he had written about his dog named Beau.

I loved that poem, not only because it expressed my own feelings about the dog I once had, but because his name was also Beau.

I have tried to find that poem, but no library has it, and I have no idea where to look. Can you help me? Or am I barking up the wrong tree? (Smile.) — STILL MISSING MY BEAU

DEAR STILL MISSING: You're in luck. I have it, and here it is:

"BEAU" by Jimmy Stewart
He never came to me when I would call — unless I had a tennis ball
But mostly he didn't come at all.
When he was young, he never learned to heel or sit or stay,
He did things his own way.
Discipline was not his bag
But when you were with him, things sure didn't drag.
He'd dig up a rosebush to spite me
And when I'd grab him, he'd bite me.
He bit lots of folks from day to day
The delivery boy was his favorite prey.
The gas man wouldn't read our meter
He said we owned a real man-eater.
He set the house on fire, but the story is long to tell Suffice to say, he survived, and the house survived as well.
On evening walks, and Gloria took him, he was always first out the door.
The old one and I brought up the rear because our bones were sore.
He'd charge up the street with Mom hanging on —
What a beautiful pair they were!
And if it was still light and the tourists were out,
They created a bit of a stir.
But every once in a while he'd stop in his tracks
With a frown on his face, and look around
It was just to make sure the old one was there to follow him
Where he was bound.
We're early bedders at our house, I guess I'm the first to retire,
And as I would leave the room he'd look at me from his place by the fire.
He knew where the tennis balls were, upstairs,
I'd give him one for a while He'd push it under the bed with his nose and I'd push it out with a smile.
Before very long, he'd tire of the ball and
He would be asleep in his corner in no time at all.
And there were nights when I'd feel him climb upon our bed
And lie between us and I'd pat his head.
There were nights when I'd feel his stare, and
I'd wake up and he'd be sitting there.
I'd reach out to stroke his hair, and sometimes I'd feel him sigh
I think I know the reason why He'd wake up at night and he would have this fear
Of the dark, of life, of lots of things
And he'd be glad to have me near.
And now he's dead, and there are nights when I think I feel him climb upon our bed, and be between us and I'd pat his head.
And there are nights when I think I feel that stare and I reach out my hand to stroke his hair
And he's not there.
Oh, how I wish that wasn't so —
I'll always love a dog named Beau.

DEAR ABBY: A while back you had a letter in your column from someone who wanted to know if it was OK to ask "who else will be there" before accepting or declining an invitation. There could be a good reason.

I am a 56-year-old successful professional woman with a rather unusual handicap I've never been comfortable disclosing to others: I am unable to remember the names of casual friends and acquaintances. Once a person has been identified for me, my memory of that person returns, and from then on, I'm fine. I have a good memory and function well in other areas. I have been psychoanalyzed up one side and down the other, so I know this condition isn't caused by emotional problems.

When I attend a social event, if I know in advance who will be there, I can recognize them. Otherwise, I must wait until someone uses their name, which doesn't always happen. This has caused me endless embarrassment. I cannot very well say, "Who are you? I've only seen you 100 times."

So, please, Abby, don't condemn those who ask, "Who else will be there?" — DRAWS A BLANK

DEAR DRAWS: Obviously, knowing in advance who else will be there has its advantages. I had in mind those who inquired before accepting an invitation in order to decide whether to accept or not.

Is your social life in a slump? Lonely? Get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular" — for people of all ages. Send a check or money order for $2.98 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054 (postage and handling are included).

AT WIT'S END

Best gift for dad is a present mom wants

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

For Father's Day, my husband received a motorized closet valet. It's a little carousel for ties and belts that runs on two batteries.

My husband has about as much use for a merry-go-round for his ties as he does for polo score cards.

He tried to get worked up over it.

Once it was installed over the rod in his closet, we all stood around as he pushed the button. The lights went on and the carousel hesitated, then slowly turned as his two ties paraded before our eyes. It was pathetic.

"That's great," he said weakly. "It'll really save time."

A few years ago, he became one of a growing army of men in this country who are "hard to buy for."

These men are hard to buy for because they never buy anything they don't need, and they don't need anything they don't already have.

I have more gift ideas for a Trappist monk than I have for my husband.

Throughout the year, we all watch him like a hawk, waiting for some careless mention of an interest, a hobby, a hook to hang a gift on. When he said he liked chocolate chip cookies, he received five boxes on Christmas. When he went on a health kick, he got every health book and cassette known to man.

Running-wise, he has shorts made from a Japanese flag, headphones, shoestrings that glow in the dark, watches so complex that no one in North America can set them, running caps with moose antlers, sweatbands, ankle weights, and designer safety pins to hold his car keys.

When the kids had nothing to go on, they went silly. Sitting around his office are a 6-foot inflatable dinosaur, a giraffe head over the door, a life preserver with "Titanic" printed on the side, and six Opus dolls.

Don't even think of buying him something to wear. I can tell you only that if 1953 comes back, he has the wardrobe for it. According to him, you do not buy another sweater when you already have one that doesn't have a hole in it.

A couple of years ago, I bypassed clothes, hobbies and silly, and went straight to the "what is it" gift. This includes a luggage tag that is disguised as a piece of mending tape to make the luggage look old and patched so no one will want to steal it, and a pair of gloves to read the newspaper without getting your hands dirty. (I didn't expect them to bring tears to his eyes.)

Since anything I buy seems to underwhelm him, I have gone on to gifts for me that I want to convince him he wants too.

The kids thought the tie express was a stroke of genius. Now they can sit back and buy ties to put on it.

Me? I can hardly wait for Christmas to get him new seat covers for my car he doesn't even know he needs yet.

Men pairing purple power ties with stylish green suits

By KAROL STONGER
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Hey men, how about a green sack suit and purple tie for your fall wardrobe? Then take it a step further and button the top two buttons on the jacket.

Shades of Pee Wee Herman? Nerd city?

Not at all, according to the Men's Fashion Association, a consortium of clothiers formed to promote their designs.

"The fashion color for the season is some shade of green," says Chip Tolbert, MFA fashion director. "Green as a ground color or as an accent color. And it can be anything between moss and sage."

Today's sack suit is broad at the chest, has a ventless back and three variations of the button: traditional top closure, contemporary middle closure and the forward-looking version with the three buttons lower on the jacket and the top two buttoned.

Another corporate look for fall, conservative yet stylish, is the double-breasted suit in the traditional grays and navys.

Look for a fuschia or jade stripe and rich fabrics such as cashmere, wool and wool blends.

One version of a three-piece suit is a brown Lanvin with a camel vest.

Tolbert says sweater vests and V-necks, particularly pullovers, will be strong. He says patterned V-necks look particularly good with polo shirts and crew necks.

Look for all-cotton as well as angora, cashmere and mohair. Pair them with corduroy, leather or denim pants.

"Anything denim," says Tolbert, goes for activewear. Pair it with the Navajo or southwestern look. Comstock put Navajo rug panels on the front of its jeans jacket.

Other denims were fringed, leather trimmed or fleece lined.

Canvas, waxed cotton and oiled leather are good bets for rugged outerwear. For the corporate look in outerwear, the Chesterfield coat is back.

Formal wear is fun. Try a satin shawl collar on a one-button double-breasted tuxedo. Or a tux dressed up with a white cotton pique vest, a white fly-front shirt and no tie.

Paul Samuel, a young designer from Seattle, put a braided collar and waistband on his wool crepe tuxedo. Wear it with a black wing-collar shirt, and again no tie.

Now about that purple power tie. Tie widths for fall are 3½ to 4 inches. Fabrics are silks and jacquards. Patterns are bold. And the color range is wide.

"Purple takes on a fresh look," says Tolbert, "when combined with any number of colorations."

Boat shoes sport drains

LOS ANGELES — Boats have drains, so why shouldn't boat shoes?

Now they do. Timberland, a company based in Hampton, N.H., recently introduced a boat shoe that comes with its own drainage system.

At first,the Hydro-Tech looks like a running shoe. Its leather, mesh and rubber exterior disguises six interior vents that funnel water into two drain cups embedded in the plastic midsole. The shoe comes with an upper foot liner made of Hydrofil, a nylon wicking material that the company claims will draw water away from the foot. At that point, the moisture evaporates, or falls through pin-sized holes to a mesh surface. The mesh is stretched across the midsole with its two water-collection pockets.

The cups are lined with small ridges that tilt backward. The company claims that because of the design, water is guided out through the shoe's vents.

The Hydro-Tech is available in selected marine and department stores. It currently comes only in men's sizes (6 to 14). Costs vary, depending on the desired model - a pair in regular ankle height is $90, and those in three-quarter heights are $100.

Executioner prefers beheading criminals to cutting off hands

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Saudi Arabia's official executioner, a skilled swordsman who has dispatched more than 600 convicted criminals, says beheading is less difficult than chopping off the hands of thieves.

"Frankly, it's easier to chop off a head since this act means the end of the story for the criminal," Saeed Al-Sayyaf, 60, said in an interview with the Saudi newspaper Al-Medina.

"Chopping off a hand needs more courage, since you are cutting off a part of the body of an individual who is to survive," he said.

The act requires "very skilled attention to ensure that the sword does not slip or cut in the wrong place," Saeed said in the interview, which was republished by a Dubai-based English-language newspaper, the Khaleej Times.

WORLD

His name has an odd ring in Arabic: Saeed means "happy" and Al-Sayyaf "swordsman executioner." He changed his second name when he was appointed to the job more than 35 years ago.

The executioner says he doesn't suffer remorse for his victims since he is carrying out Islamic justice as required by the Koran, the holy book of Islam. The Koran decrees that convicted murderers be beheaded and thieves lose a hand. Saudi authorities last year ruled that drug smugglers also should be executed.

Al-Sayyaf started out as a farmer, but joined the Saudi army at the age of 20. He said that "watching executioners" as they beheaded criminals publicly after Friday prayer sessions became his favorite hobby.

He later applied for the job of "sayyaf" which carried a salary of $36 a month, plus an additional $133 "for each head."

Al-Sayyaf said he carried out his first execution at age 23, beheading three criminals and "earning 1,500 riyals" ($399).

"I always look forward to the opportunity to chop off more heads so that I can earn more money," he said.

"Over a period of time it became a very easy sort of job...In fact I felt it was easy to do an execution," he added. "I have chopped off the heads of more than 600 criminals and cut off 60 hands of thieves."

Al-Sayyaf said he first slices off the upper part of a convict's shirt with his sword to expose the kneeling victim's neck. Then he uses a single swift stroke that sends blood gushing and the head rolling on the sand.

But he uses a pistol for executing women in order to avoid having to cut off their clothing and reveal naked flesh.

Al-Sayyaf admits that he often has sleepless nights before executions "worrying that I might fail."

But once the beheading is over, he feels "delighted and satisfied" for having put an end to "what's against the law of God."

"I was very happy when I executed a drug trafficker," Al-Medina quoted him as saying.

These days, those awaiting execution have their eyes covered by a black blindfold.

That was introduced after "I chopped off the head of one convict and it fell directly in front of the second, who suddenly collapsed and fell to the ground and died of a heart attack."

His most memorable executions took place in 1979, when he beheaded 12 convicts in one session. They were all members of a group of Moslem fundamentalists who seized the Grand Mosque in Mecca, Islam's holiest shrine, in an attempt to topple the government.

Al-Sayyaf has married 24 times and fathered 25 sons and daughters. Under Islam, a man is permitted four wives.

He says his grim job doesn't affect his social life.

Al-Sayyaf has been training one of his sons, Mohammed, to be his successor.

"I have not yet given Mohammed the opportunity to carry out an execution but I do feel that he knows the job,'" he said. "A number of my relatives are reluctant at the thought of my training them."

3 Soviets killed in brawling

MOSCOW (AP) — At least three people were killed and more than 50 injured in the Soviet republic of Kazakhstan in brawling, arson and rioting spawned by ethnic and economic problems, a government spokesman said today.

Hundreds of Interior Ministry soldiers and extra police were sent to Novy Uzen, a city of 55,000 people near the Caspian Sea, and a curfew was imposed to restore order, Interior Ministry spokesman Boris Mikhailov told a news briefing.

It was the third instance in six weeks in the vast central Asian region in which ethnic tension and economic frustration have spilled over into violence.

In the worst violence, about 100 people were killed in neighboring republic of Uzbekistan this month.

The region is being buffeted by a rapidly increasing population, pollution, a lack of jobs, an increase in ethnic divisions and a resurgence of Islam.

A man who answered the telephone at an emergency headquarters set up in Novy Uzen said a 9 p.m.-6 a.m. curfew had been imposed. The man, who identified himself only as Murzagalev, said there had been a demonstration today but refused to elaborate.

Mikhailov said since the violence began Friday night, three people had died and 53 were hurt. He did not identify the dead or injured, or say how they died.

Fifty-seven people were arrested, he said.

The spokesman said much of the violence appeared to be aimed at traders from the Caucasus Mountain region, located on the opposite side of the Caspian Sea.

Armenians, Georgians and Azerbaijanis are the main ethnic groups in the Caucasus, but Mikhailov said he did not know what group was targeted.

More than 700 of them, mostly women and children, were evacuated from Novy Uzen, he said.

"They're now under heavy guard at a bus station 14 kilometers (8.5 miles) from the city, and the roads to the station are blocked," he said.

Mikhailov said about 7,000 people gathered Monday in the town's main square demanding that cooperative businesses be closed and people from the Caucasus republics be sent home.

"Two battalions of Interior soldiers were brought in to stop the unrest," Mikhailov said. "The crowd was dispersed, but it broke into several large groups of youths armed with pipes and stones, and other objects. They went along the streets, organizing brawls, pogroms and arson."

Reports on Monday said youths had tried unsuccessfully to seize a police station.

Constantine Mitsotakis, leader of the Conservative New Democracy party in Athens, Greece, speaks to reporters on Tuesday outside the Presidential Palace. He has three days to form a new government.

Mitsotakis given three days to form government

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Conservative leader Constantine Mitsotakis today was given three days to form a new government, and a leftist alliance rejected his offer to join a coalition.

Mitsotakis' center-right New Democracy Party finished first in Sunday's elections, defeating Premier Andreas Papandreou's Panhellenic Socialist Movement. But New Democracy failed to win a majority needed to govern.

President Christos Sartzetakison, as outlined by the constitution, today gave Mitsotakis three days to form a governing coalition. If he is unable to form a government, Papandreou's party will be given the same opportunity.

The Coalition of Left and Progress, a leftist-communist coalition that finished third, said it would consider a governing coalition with Papandreou's party if the premier resigned as party leader. But the leftists rejected an offer from Mitsotakis to form a new government.

Mitsotakis refused to say what he planned to do following the rejection of his coalition offer.

If neither of the top two finishers in the election can form a government, the president will ask the third place Coalition of Left and Progress to form a government.

If all three fail, the president appoints a caretaker government to prepare for new elections.

The Panhellenic Socialist Movement has hinted it would seek to lead a leftist coalition if it was offered the exploratory mandate.

New Democracy gained 44.37 percent of Sunday's vote and 144 seats, seven short of a majority in the 300-member Parliament. Papandreou's party took 39 percent and 125 seats. The Coalition of Left and Progress, an alliance of Communist and Greek Left parties, received 13 percent and 29 seats.

On Monday, Mitstotakis asked the leftist alliance to join him in an interim government with a limited mandate.

3 Palestinians arrested after meeting settler

JERUSALEM (AP) — Three Palestinians said they met a Jewish settler who was hiking in the occupied West Bank, chatted with him, posed for a picture and then stabbed him to death, Israeli officials said today.

The men were arrested during the night by agents of the Shin Bet security service in the death Saturday of Frederick Steven Rosenfeld, 48, of the West Bank settlement of Ariel, the officials said. They insisted on anonymity.

Shortly after Rosenfeld's funeral service in Ariel, a settler opened fire with an Uzi submachine gun on a group of Arabs waiting at major intersection near Tel Aviv, said police spokeswoman Dalia Gilad.

Two Palestinians were wounded, one of them seriously, she said. The assailant was apprehended after being chased by police and residents. Police had no motive for the attack.

The army blew up the homes of the suspects in Rosenfeld's slaying, who are from the nearby village of Burkin, Israel radio said. Their names were not released.

Also today, Fahad Fawzi Madi, a 27-year-old Palestinian suspected of collaborating with Israel, was found beaten and stabbed to death in the town of Khan Yunis in the occupied Gaza Strip, Arab and Israeli news reports said.

Another Palestinian, Samir Mohammed Antiz, 19, was found dead in his tent at the Ketziot detention center in the Negev desert, where he had been held without charge since February, an army spokesman said.

Israel radio said Antiz apparently was killed by fellow prisoners who accused him of collaborating with the authorities.

The army said police were investigating Madi's death and checking reports on Antiz's death.

Also, a 34-year-old Palestinian postal worker from the West Bank town of Jenin was hospitalized with two broken legs and a broken arm after he was beaten by masked Arabs who suspected him of collaborating with Israel, Arab reports said.

More than 50 Palestinians suspected of cooperating with Israeli authorities have been killed since the start of the 18-month Palestinian uprising against Israeli rule of the occupied lands.

The deaths raised to at least 526 the number of Palestinians killed since the revolt began. Twenty-three Israelis also have died.

The three Palestinians accused of slaying Rosenfeld came upon the settler Saturday while he was hiking on a barren hillside near the Arab village of Burkin, about three miles from Ariel, the security officials said.

They said the Arabs, who are from Burkin, told agents during interrogation that Rosenfeld chatted with them, took their pictures with his camera, and asked them to take a photograph of him.

One of them then grabbed Rosenfeld's knife and stabbed him in the back, said the official.

They said the three Arabs were taken to the scene today to re-enact the slaying.

Other Palestinian shepherds found Rosenfeld's body Sunday morning. An empty pistol holster, two spent cartridges, a map and binoculars were found near the body.

There was no explanation of how the settler's gun might have been fired.

According to Ariel settlers, Rosenfeld was a nature lover and apparently was mapping a hiking route for residents when he was killed. Rosenfeld, who was raised in Washington, D.C., came to Israel in 1968 and had lived in Ariel for 18 months. He was not married.

American journalist seized

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Afghan government forces have seized an American free-lance photographer who was traveling with Moslem guerrillas on assignment for Life magazine, resistance sources say.

He is the first American believed captured by Afghans during the civil war.

Guerrillas sources identified him Monday as Tony O'Brien, 42, a photographer from Santa Fe, N.M. He had been covering the Afghan war based in the Pakistan frontier city of Peshawar.

The Afghan government did not confirm the arrest immediately.

U.S. Embassy officials in Pakistan cited the U.S. Privacy Act and said they could not comment on such a capture.

O'Brien was seized last Wednesday in Kabul, the Afghan capital, guerrilla sources in Pakistan said on condition of anonymity. He is being held in Kabul and is reported in good condition, they said.

At least three Western correspondents and two foreign aid workers have been captured in the past while traveling with the guerrillas. All were later released unharmed.

O'Brien had made several forays into Afghanistan with the guerrillas. His photographs have appeared in major U.S. publications, including The New York Times and Time magazine.

Iranian, Soviet leaders meet to strengthen ties

MOSCOW (AP) — Iranian Parliament speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani arrived in Moscow today on an official visit designed to strengthen economic ties between the nations.

Rafsanjani, also acting commander-in-chief or the armed forces, is the highest-ranking official of the Islamic Republic to visit its northern neighbor since the 1979 Islamic revolution. He also is expected to seek military aid.

He was greeted at the Moscow airport by Vice President Anatoly Lukyanov and Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze. Rafsanjani was invited by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The official Tass news agency said the Soviet Union was intent on developing strong relations with Iran "despite essential ideological differences between the two countries."

Relations "have grown especially strong lately," it said, crediting the late Ayatollah Khomeini for the improvement. Khomeini, the fundamentalist leader of Iran's Islamic revolution, died on June 3.

Before leaving Tehran, Rafsanjani expressed hope that the visit, delayed since last fall, would open "a new chapter in Iranian-Soviet relations and in the history of the region," said the official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia.

On his return Rafsanjani is to stop in Hungary and Bulgaria to complete 10-year cooperation agreements that include aid to Iran's growing arms industry.

Moslems win right to challenge blasphemy laws

LONDON (AP) — A Moslem group seeking to prosecute writer Salman Rushdie won the right on Monday to challenge a court ruling that Britain's blasphemy laws apply only to Christianity.

The Moslem Action Group, which represents Moslems throughout Britain, wants to bring Rushdie and Viking Penguin Publishers to trial under blasphemy laws for his novel, "The Satanic Verses."

"We will now seek to show that any religion, including Islam, can be included in the offense of blasphemy," said Ali Azhar, a lawyer for Moslem Action.

Many Moslems believe the book blasphemes Islam, but Rushdie maintains it does not. The British author, born of Moslem parents in India, has been in hiding since Feb. 14, when the late Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini decreed he should die because of his book.

High Court Justice Michael Nolan granted Abdal Choudhury, a spokesman for Moslem Action, permission to challenge the Bow Street Magistrates Court's refusal to issue summonses on the grounds that the laws of blasphemy applied only to Christians.

Nolan decided a full hearing should be by three High Court judges. No date was set.

David [illegible]nnick, lawyer for Viking Penguin, opposed the application for High Court review of the magistrate's decision. Rushdie was not personally represented in court.

Azhar said Moslem Action now will be seeking the whereabouts of Rushdie to serve him with legal documents. Lawyers might request the court's help in locating Rushdie, he said.

Nolan said an application for assistance could be made, but he did not indicate what form of aid could be granted or whether Rushdie's whereabouts would have to be revealed.

Anti-Rushdie demonstrators cheered at a prayer meeting outside London's Law Courts after the justice's ruling.

Supporters waved photographs of Khomeini and banners proclaiming "Criminal Must Be Brought to Justice" and "Satan Rushdie Must be Punished."

Violent demonstrations have been held in several countries, including Britain, and 19 people died in anti-Rushdie rioting in India and Pakistan in February.

U.S. arms chief says Soviets willing to verify

GENEVA (AP) — Chief U.S. arms negotiator Richard Burt said today that President Bush plans to take advantage of the Soviet Union's increased willingness to allow verification of nuclear weapons reductions.

The Strategic Arms Reduction Talks resumed Monday in Geneva after a seven-month recess.

Bush proposed in Washington on Monday that the United States and Soviet Union begin testing verification procedures during negotiations on reducing long-range nuclear forces, rather than waiting until a pact is completed.

Such steps could involve trial inspections at each other's missile sites and discussions about equipment needed for verification, which Bush said could be the most complex issue facing negotiators.

"We have noticed that the Soviets have taken a much more open and constructive approach on verification in recent years," Burt said at a news conference.

He said that another aim of Bush's plan is to build support for Senate ratification of a future arms treaty.

"We have noticed that the Soviets have taken a much more open and constructive approach on verification in recent years. We are not proposing these measures as a take-it-or-leave-it package."

— Richard Burt, arms negotiator

Several superpower arms control treaties, including the 1979 SALT II pact on limiting long-range nuclear arsenals, remained unratified because the Senate decided the verification provisions were lax.

Reiterating the White House position, Burt said progress on verification would not become a condition in the START talks.

"We will continue to move on all fronts," he said. "We are not proposing these measures as a take-it-or-leave-it package."

The talks, aimed at reducing U.S. and Soviet long-range bombers, missiles and nuclear submarines by 30 percent to 50 percent, are the latest round in negotiations that began four years ago.

While declining to give details of Bush's new proposals, Burt said at the news conference that their aim is to "speed resolution of outstanding issues and give added momentum" toward completing a treaty.

Under Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's philosophy of more openness, Moscow has allowed Western experts to tour a Soviet chemical weapons site for the first time as part of efforts to negotiate a global ban.

U.S. and Soviet scientists also have exchanged visits to each other's nuclear testing sites to examine ways of monitoring two 1970s treaties limiting atomic blasts that the Senate never approved.

Burt confirmed that the Bush administration' review of arms policy did not result in a change in the Strategic Defense Initiative, which calls for space-based missile defenses, a divisive issue since arms talks began.

He rejected Soviet attempts to link a START treaty to agreement on what Washington says would be crippling curbs on SDI.

"We will preserve our options to deploy advanced defenses when they are ready," Burt said.

On Monday, Yuri Nazarkin, head of the Soviet delegation to the talks, met with Burt for an hour and 20 minutes at the U.S. Mission.

Nazarkin spoke of "a good start" and held out the prospect of unspecified Soviet initiatives.

Socialists, Greens winners in elections

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Socialist and environmentalist candidates in several nations and extreme rightists in West Germany were the major winners in elections for the 12-nation European Parliament, vote results showed Monday.

The Socialists took 182 seats in the elections, remaining the largest group in the 518-member assembly that meets in Strasbourg, France. They picked up 16 seats, 13 from Britain, where Laborites trounced Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservatives.

Greens, who focus on environmental issues and often vote along the same lines as the Socialists, won 17 more seats to take their total to 37. And although Communists lost seven seats, their total of 41 was still enough to take the three left-wing parties to a majority of 260.

Contrasting the left's performance was a rise in extreme rightists, who won 23 seats in the consultative body, up seven.

West Germany's Republican Party, led by Franz Schoenhuber, a 66-year-old former Waffen-SS soldier, entered the assembly with at least six seats.

He called the showing of his party, which campaigned for cuts in the number of foreign workers and a stop to the influx of asylum seekers, as "the biggest sensation of the postwar era."

In the European Parliament, his party will join France's like-minded National Front Party of Jean-Marie Le Pen, which held on to its 10 seats, and four extreme right-wingers from Italy.

The biggest loser was Mrs. Thatcher's Conservatives, who lost 13 of their 45 seats to Labor. Labor surged from 32 to 45 seats, giving Mrs. Thatcher her first defeat in a national ballot since taking power a decade ago and fueling charges that her free-market revolution is no longer working.

"The results were disappointing, but we shall renew our efforts for next time," she said.

In West Germany, the ARD-TV network called the victory by the extreme-right "a warning signal for our democracy."

The leader of the West German Jewish community, Heinz Galinski, called the vote a "sad confirmation of a alarming trend of right-wing extremism" in the nation.

"I am not satisfied with the vote result," said Chancellor Helmut Kohl, whose Christian Democrats and the Bavarian sister party, the Social Christians, fell from 34 to 32 seats.

West German Greens looked set to win eight seats, an increase of one.

While the makeup of the Parliament, especially the allocation of seats for small parties, must still be completed, near-final results gave this picture of election results in other EEC nations:

In Greece, the Conservative New Democracy party, which beat Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou's governing Socialist PASOK party in national balloting, won 10 seats, up one. PASOK dropped from 10 seats to eight.

In France, President Francois Mitterrand's Socialists won two seats, going to 22. The center-right coalition of former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing outdistanced the Socialists, capturing 26 seats. The National Front was third with 10 seats, and the French Green Party entered the assembly for the first time with nine seats.

In Italy, the Socialists went from 12 to 14 seats and the Christian Democrats held steady at 27 seats. The Communists dropped five of their 27 seats but remained the country's second largest party.

Italy's two Green parties won seven seats, a gain of two.

In Spain, Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez's Socialists lost a seat, dropping to 27. The opposition Conservatives fell from 17 to 15 and the Communists picked up one seat for a total of four. Green candidates won two seats.

Danish Prime Minister Poul Schlueter's Conservatives lost two of their four seats while the opposition Socialists won two, giving them five seats.

The governing Christian Democrats in Belgium and the Netherlands won seven and 10 seats, gains of one and two seats respectively.

In Brussels, Christian Democrat Leo Tindemans resigned as Belgium's foreign affairs minister Monday. He said last week he would seek the job of European Parliament president.

Voting in the European elections took place in Spain, Britain, Denmark, the Netherlands and Ireland on Thursday. On Sunday, people voted in the other EEC nations — Belgium, West Germany, Greece, France, Luxembourg, Italy and Portugal.

The European Parliament is elected every five years. This year, 142 million Europeans cast a ballot.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Vietnamese to return 28 sets of remains

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam will on Wednesday turn over the remains of what it believes are 28 American servicemen missing from the Vietnam War, a U.S. military spokesman said.

Maj. Dan Trout said today that a U.S. military team is to fly to Hanoi, the Vietnamese capital, for a turnover ceremony before the remains are flown to the United States.

The repatriation is to be the 10th since August 1987, when the United States made a special effort to get Vietnamese help in resolving the missing in action, or MIA, issue. Since then, 184 remains have been returned and 56 to date identified as those of American servicemen, Trout said.

A C-141 transport aircraft will fly a team from the U.S. Joint Casualty Resolution Center to Hanoi airport. It will be headed by Lieut. Col. James D. Spurgeon, who is the JCRC representative in Bangkok.

Trout said the remains would be flown via Guam to Hawaii, where the U.S. military maintains a laboratory for the identification of MIA remains.

Ortega, Bush to meet

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega is seeking talks with the Bush administration to cool Nicaragua's mounting friction with the United States and help pull the economy out of its nosedive.

Ortega announced the offer Monday after a 1½-hour meeting with Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo. He asked the Roman Catholic archbishop of Managua to carry the request for opening negotiations to Washington.

Obando y Bravo, a sharp critic of Ortega's leftist Sandinista government, said he was "going to think about this and will give an answer" but refused to go into details.

There was no immediate reaction from Washington.

Pact may bolster Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government is hoping early renewal of an inflation-fighting pact will ease anxiety over prolonged foreign debt negotiations and bolster its position in the talks.

The latest extension of the year-and-a-half-old pact, announced late Sunday, makes no major changes in the one that expires July 31. It says prices will be held steady and the one-peso-a-day devaluation of the country's currency against the U.S. dollar will be maintained and mentions no new minimum wage increase.

An agreement between the government and foreign commercial banks on their share of the country's $107.4 billion foreign debt had been expected before the renewal was announced. Analysts say investors were becoming nervous over what both might contain, forcing the government to keep domestic interest rates high to keep capital in the country.

Helicopter hits fisherman

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A South Korean fisherman was apparently hit by gunfire from a U.S. Marine helicopter taking part in gunnery practice, the U.S. military said in a statement today.

The fisherman, Sohn Dal-gun, was hit by a bullet Monday while fishing with two other men in the Yellow Sea off the west coast, the statement said. The bullet apparently came from a Marine helicopter practicing at the Koon-ni military target range on the nearby shore, it said.

Bentsen backs bill adding prenatal care for poor preganant women

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen is sponsoring legislation that would expand government health-care coverage to an additional 300,000 low-income pregnant women and 1.6 million children under the age of six.

Co-sponsored by Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., the legislation would cost an estimated $1 billion a year, Bentsen's office said.

The Texas Democrat is attempting to provide Medicaid coverage to pregnant women and children under age six in families whose income is at 185 percent of the poverty level — $22,385 for a family of four.

Under legislation enacted last year and being phased in this year and next, Medicaid coverage is guaranteed to pregnant women and infants under age 1 in families whose income is at the poverty level — $12,100 for a family of four.

The estimated cost of phasing in Medicaid coverage under Bentsen's bill would be $790 million in fiscal 1990, and $1.2 billion in 1991, when the legislation is fully in place.

Bentsen said the bill is aimed at assuring that the most vulnerable of the 37 million Americans who have no health insurance will have a chance to get basic health care.

Forty percent of children under 4 don't even get their basic set of immunizations, Bentsen said.

"We cannot permit that situation to continue. It extracts too high a price, financially and socially, and we must come to grips with it," Bentsen said.

"America is facing what one health group recently called a 'child health crisis' and we must respond to it," said Bentsen, the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

The Finance Committee has approved another Bentsen bill that would provide a child health care tax credit to help pay the cost of health insurance for children. The bill is pending in the full Senate.

HUD funding pulled for conflict of interest

HOUSTON (AP) — Federal funding for the troubled Memorial Plaza Housing Project was pulled partly because federal officials learned of "questionable practices" involving conflict of interest, a source says.

The source in the Department of Housing and Urban Development told the Houston Chronicle Monday that they could not be more specific.

Local authorities said an investigation into City Councilman Ben Reyes' votes on city contracts benefiting his brother was triggered by reports that a $150,000 Memorial Plaza contract went to a business associate of the councilman's.

The local investigation centers around Reyes' failure to disclose as required his potential conflict of interest in voting on city contracts that benefited his brother, Tony, whose company has received at least $8.6 million in city subcontracting work over the past 18 months.

State law requires public officials to disclose financial interests that could pose potential conflicts of interest and to abstain from voting on contracts involving such financial interests. Violations can lead to criminal charges.

District Attorney John B. Holmes Jr. said Monday that his office began looking into Councilman Reyes after reports surfaced that the owner of South Coast Drywall Inc., a subcontractor on the Memorial Plaza project, is part owner of Jones Lumber Co., which is Councilman Reyes' principal business. Drywall owner David Milam Sr. owns about 30 percent of Jones Lumber.

The councilman said he does not have an interest in South Coast Drywall, but he did include it on a list of companies he filed Monday with the city secretary in which he said he "may have a substantial interest."

The source at HUD said the funding was canceled partly because of a conflict-of-interest question that did not name Reyes or any other local official.

The investigation is continuing, Holmes said.

"Some specific inquiries have been made concerning Mr. Reyes' relationships and some of the contractors involved in that operation (Memorial Plaza)," Holmes said. He declined to say whether his office has evidence of conflicts of interest.

Earlier this month HUD officials announced they would not provide federal rent subsidies for the Memorial Plaza Housing Project, a plan to buy and refurbish an old Holiday Inn for low-income housing.

The subsidies were to provide the revenue stream to pay for indebtedness on about $5 million in bonds committed for the project.

HUD's decision means the city will probably lose almost $2 million spent on renovating the property.

Texan fiddles to third

WEISER, Idaho (AP) — A Nampa, Idaho, 18-year-old has won the ladies division of Weiser's Oldtime Fiddlers' Contest during the first night of competition.

Taking first place Monday was Danita Raft. Fiddling to second place was Amy Stukenholtz, 18, of Twin Falls; third place, Tonya Raft Hopkins, 20, of Humble, Texas; fourth place, Tobi Deatherage, 18, of Pocatello; fifth place, Kendra Ruwe, 21, of Meridian.

The event, now in its 27th year, is held at Weiser High School each third full week in June.

The competition got its start in 1953, when a fiddle contest was held during the intermissions of a Weiser square dance festival.

It went national in 1963 in conjunction with Idaho's territorial centennial observances. The contest doubles as an annual reunion for the fiddlers, who get to know each other over the years.

Girl found dead in trunk

EL PASO (AP) — A 5-year-old girl died of heat stroke when she somehow became locked in a car trunk in her home's driveway as the temperature climbed to 104 degrees, police say.

Danielle Chronister's body was discovered about 3:30 p.m. Sunday after relatives became worried and began searching for her, police Lt. Paul Saucedo said. The girl had last been seen around 1 p.m.

The death appears to be an accident, but police will continue investigating, Saucedo said. Danielle's mother, Judy Chronister, was home at the time, as were several relatives.

Saucedo said the girl had been playing with some cousins, brothers and sisters outside her mother's house in northeast El Paso. About 1 p.m., all the children went inside except for Danielle, he said.

A couple of hours later, relatives began their search.

"About 3:30 p.m., an uncle noticed keys on the bumper of a car, opened the trunk and found her there," Saucedo said.

Bullock: Outlook 'bright'

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' economy "continues to expand and the revenue outlook remains bright," but no significant additional revenue will be available for the special legislative session starting today, says State Comptroller Bob Bullock.

Bullock, who already has certified the $47.4 billion state budget for 1990-91, said the only additional money available in the 30-day special session would be general funding vetoed by Gov. Bill Clements.

Clements trimmed about $11 million from the budget.

Bullock said major fund revenues in 1990-91 will total $28 billion, an increase of $3.9 billion, or 16.2 percent, from available revenues of $24.1 billion in 1988-89.

The comptroller is required by the Texas Constitution to issue a revenue estimate each time the Legislature meets.

Clements called the special session to deal with workers' compensation bills.

Switzer: It's just no fun anymore

New coach to be named today

By RON JENKINS

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Just when it appeared he had survived months of turmoil, Barry Switzer resigned as football coach at Oklahoma.

Saying there was "too much water under the bridge," Switzer announced Monday he was walking away from the football program he guided to three national championships.

"I finally decided the time has come for new leadership," Switzer said.

"I received a great football program 16 years ago. I'm passing on a great football program."

In leaving after 16 years as Sooners coach, Switzer said he was frustrated by NCAA rules that do not "recognize the financial needs of young athletes."

Officials scheduled a news conference today to name a successor. A source close to the football program told The Associated Press that a leading candidate to replace Switzer was Gary Gibbs, who has been with the Sooners since 1975 and has been defensive coordinator since 1981.

Switzer said Monday he had asked that his successor come from the staff.

"I wanted that consideration, that we retain a winning staff and proven staff, that one of those lead and direct this program at the energy levels that I do not have today," he said.

Switzer had been under pressure since the school's football program was placed on three years' probation by the NCAA in December and after several players were charged early this year with crimes involving drugs, guns and sexual assault.

But Switzer had served notice he planned to remain as coach and talk of his leaving ebbed by the end of spring practice. His resignation caught some former and current players, as well as others in the coaching ranks, off guard.

"It came as a complete surprise," said Eddie Foster, an offensive lineman during Switzer's first year as head coach. "After the things that happened in the spring had cooled down, I thought Coach Switzer had put them behind him and would be here this fall."

"I will never coach at another institution. I will never coach at another college level. I promise you that," Switzer said.

He noted his record at Oklahoma and said "anything depletes and detracts from that anywhere I go."

"It's no fun anymore. I'm drained. I don't have the energy level to compete in this arena today," the 52-year-old Switzer said.

Shock expressed by fellow coaches

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

Shock waves rumbled through college football Monday when Barry Switzer stepped down as the University of Oklahoma coach.

"This comes as quite a shock, quite a surprise," Nebraska athletic director Bob Devaney said when told of Switzer's resignation after 16 years as head coach.

"I'm very surprised, but every individual has to make decisions based on what he feels is the best interest of himself and the school," said Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz. "I was caught by surprise, but I respect his decision."

Oklahoma State athletic director Myron Roderick, who has publicly feuded with Switzer on more than one occasion, said the resignation "has caught all of us by surprise."

During Switzer's tenure at Oklahoma, a total of 26 other coaches served at other Big Eight schools. But his reign is tied most closely with Tom Osborne, who succeeded Devaney as head coach of the Cornhuskers the same year that Switzer replaced Chuck Fairbanks at Oklahoma. With Switzer's resignation, Osborne becomes the winningest active coach in the NCAA with a percentage of .811 to Switzer's .837.

Osborne and former Missouri coach Warren Powers were the only Big Eight coaches to beat Switzer more than once.

"I was sorry to hear that Barry has decided to resign," Osborne, who was on a fishing trip, said in a statement issued through the Nebraska sports information office. "We have been friends and competitors for a long time and we have shared some great moments in college football."

Eddie Foster, who played for Oklahoma in Switzer's first year as head coach, said he was shocked.

"It came as a complete surprise. After the things that happened in the spring had cooled down, I thought Coach Switzer had put them behind him and would be here this fall."

Foster referred to the incidents that left criminal charges against five players, including starting quarterback Charles Thompson. Three other players were charged with rape and another was charged with shooting and wounding a fellow player. And in December, the football program was placed on three years' probation by the NCAA.

Angels cooled

From Staff Reports

After scoring 38 runs in the first two games to open the second half, the Midland Angels finally cooled down Monday. Cooled down to the point of losing, 10-8, to the El Paso Diablos.

Midland couldn't hold down a five run lead opened in the first and second inning as the Diablos came across with four unearned runs in the fifth to hold the lead for good.

John Orton smashed his eighth home run in the second, a two-run shot which also scored Bob Rose.

Newcomer Steve DeAngelis continues to be hot at the plate going 2-for-5 and scoring two runs. In the second half's first three games, DeAngelis, just called up from Palm Springs, is 7-for-10, with five RBIs and five runs scored.

Johnny Molina holds up placards protesting the name change which rids El Paso of its "Sun Bowl."

No more 'Sun Bowl'

By HOLDEN LEWIS

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — All college football bowl games eventually will go the way of the Sun Bowl and rename themselves after their corporate sponsors, the sports marketing consultant for John Hancock Financial Services says.

That's John Hancock as in the John Hancock Bowl, the new moniker for the 55-year-old football classic played in Sun Bowl Stadium.

The renaming is the Boston-based company's way of making sure its name gets in the newspapers, John Hancock sports marketing consultant Jack Mahoney said Monday at a news conference called to announce the switch.

For the past three years, John Hancock has paid about $1.5 million a game in purses, incentives and advertisements in sponsoring the Sun Bowl. In return, the game officially was called the John Hancock Sun Bowl, but most news outlets took the sponsor's name out as a matter of policy.

Rose files suit against Giamatti

By WES HILLS
Cox News Service

CINCINNATI — Cincinnati Reds Manager Pete Rose wants the court to take his case out of the hands of Major League Baseball Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti, whom Rose says has already found him guilty.

Charging that Giamatti has already decided that Rose bet on his own team, Rose's attorneys filed a lawsuit Monday seeking to block Giamatti's hearing next week into Rose's gambling activities.

The lawsuit, filed in Hamilton County Common Pleas Court against Giamatti, Major League Baseball and the Cincinnati Reds, asks that Giamatti be declared ineligible to take part in any further proceedings against Rose. It also asks the "court determine whether or not Pete Rose has bet on Major League Baseball, and in particular the Cincinnati Reds ... "

But, beyond that, the lawsuit seeks punitive damages against Giamatti "in a sum sufficient to punish him for his unfair and outrageous conduct in the way he has handled from the outset the proceedings against Pete Rose."

The suit also seeks unspecified compensatory damages of an undetermined amount for Rose that "will fairly compensate him for the destruction of his reputation as one of Baseball's foremost living participants."

A jury trial is also sought.

The lawsuit claims that Giamatti and his investigators have taken the word of convicted drug dealers and other unreliable witnesses while ignoring witnesses and evidence repudiating the allegations against Rose.

And unless the court acts immediately to block Giamatti's hearing set for Monday in New York City, "Rose will be forced to rebut false accusations that he bet on baseball that are contained in an error-ridden report prepared by agents of the Commissioner of Baseball, in proceedings before a biased and prejudiced Commissioner," the lawsuit contends.

According to the Associated Press, Reuven J. Katz, one of Rose's lawyers, said a court hearing was scheduled for Tuesday morning on the request for a temporary restraining order. However, Norbert N. Nadel, the judge assigned to the case, said "nothing's been done yet" and that he would probably decide Tuesday on how to proceed.

Chicago judge: No heroes here

By CHRIS MORTENSEN
Cox News Service

CHICAGO — Blasting the hypocrisy and corruption in college athletics, the federal judge who sentenced sports agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom here Monday sent a warning to "boosters, coaches and administrators" who break NCAA rules.

"If Walters and Bloom are guilty of mail fraud, racketeering and conspiracy, so too may be alumni and other boosters who pass money or cars under the table and conspire with the athlete to lie about it ... so too may be the coach or administrator who acts in like fashion," U.S. District Judge George M. Marovich told a packed courtroom in a statement he later released to the media.

"I want to give fair warning to those who may violate (NCAA) rules, whatever they are: You may now be playing a different ballgame, and it might be called hardball. There is a previously unrecognized player on the field — the rule of law."

Marovich made his statements prior to passing sentence on Walters and Bloom, former sports agents who received respective jail terms of five and three years based on their racketeering, conspiracy and mail fraud conviction on April 13.

Echoing sentiments expressed by the jury that convicted the sports agents after a five-week trial, Marovich said, "There were no heroes here. Sports agents simply might be the easiest target.

"A startling aspect of this trial was the absence of any easily identifiable good guys," the judge continued. "The universities are not simon-pure, and I do not see the athletes in a favorable light.

"This trial must have seemed like vindication to those who decry the hypocrisy of big-time college athletics, to those who feel that the student-athlete is a myth, and to those who argue that the mega-millions of dollars involved in college sports have corrupted everything the money touches."

No more stooges to kick around

Poor Barry Switzer. He's been through so much.

Football watchers all over the country are crying real tears today after hearing of Switzer's resignation Monday.

Patterson

But for most football watchers, those will be tears of joy, for Barry Switzer not only led the University of Oklahoma to a bad name .... he also helped tarnish the entire state through the years.

No, college football is better today because he's gone.

And now that Jimmy Johnson is with the Cowboys, we're talking a spit-polished NCAA in '89.

No Barry. No Jimmy Johnson. No Jackie Sherrill. The Three Stooges have finally been cancelled.

Nope, can't think of anyone.

The three main sore spots in college football are history. There is hope for the future ...

Of course, the people of Dallas have to contend with Johnson. But you can't violate college rules while coaching in pro ball. And there's Jackie Sherrill. No telling where he will resurface.

There will be a few — especially his fellow collegiate coaches — who will look at Monday's resignation as a sad day for college sports. Pffft!

Barry Switzer can moan all day long about how he was tired of fighting with the NCAA and how the institution didn't recognize the "financial needs of young athletes."

Break my heart, Barry.

Anyone who entices prospective college athletes with money or other incentives does it because they feel the recruit will help the team win. There's no other reason, believe it.

I don't think Barry will find himself a lot of sympathizers, although those in the college coaching fraternity will outwardly admit that his was a great loss.

Concerning the resignation, Sherrill actually had the nerve to say that college football "lost a great friend." Sherrill, meanwhile, was probably waiting by the telephone hoping for a phone call from an OU official about the opening.

Only last February, Switzer said he felt he had what it takes to rebuild his program after all that had happened. Rape, a shooting incident, the Sooners' quarterback arrested for trying to sell dope to an FBI agent ...

A sociologist doesn't have what it takes to figure that campus. Switzer thinks he could turn it around?

Oklahoma is a better place now that Barry's history. OU should have completely cut its relationship with Switzer. Instead, he will stay on as some sort of special assistant to the athletic director. One of those glorified sit-behind-a-desk-and-offer-an-opinion jobs.

Through it all, somewhere, Brian Bosworth has a big grin on his face.

Today's Question: He was a teammate of both Bill Nicholson and Henry Aaron. Sound strange? It shouldn't. This National League outfielder played a long time.

Monday's Answer: Bill Nicholson, whose deliberate and menacing preparatory swing brought him the nickname of Swish, twice led the National League in home runs while playing for the 1940's Chicago Cubs.

He is also one of the few players intentionally walked with the bases loaded to avoid the possible alternative.

Tigers hand A's fourth straight loss

AL Roundup

Associated Press

Scott Lusader drove in his first three runs of the season and the Detroit Tigers beat Dave Stewart and Oakland, 6-4, giving the Athletics their first four-game losing streak of the season.

Oakland, which lost its previous three games in Baltimore, has dropped four in a row for the first time since July 1988. The Tigers ended their three-game losing streak.

Stewart, 11-3, failed in his bid to become the first 12-game winner in the major leagues this season. He lost for the first time in eight starts at home, allowing six runs on nine hits and four walks in 3 2-3 innings.

Frank Tanana, 7-6, won for the seventh time in his last 10 decisions and is 20-20 lifetime against Oakland. He gave up four runs on seven hits in five innings and Mike Henneman got his first save. Henneman is only the second pitcher other than Guillermo Hernandez to save a game for Detroit this season.

Keith Moreland hit an RBI double in the Detroit first and Oakland tied it in its half on Mark McGwire's sacrifice fly.

Lusader, recalled from the minors Friday to replace the injured Fred Lynn, and Dave Bergman each hit two-run singles with the bases loaded in the second inning for a 5-1 lead. Lusader added a sacrifice fly in the fourth.

Carney Lansford hit an RBI single in the Oakland third and the Athletics made it 6-4 in the fifth on run-scoring doubles by Tony Phillips and Dave Henderson.

White Sox 8, Red Sox 2

Carlton Fisk went 4-for-4 and Fred Manrique drove in three runs as the Chicago White Sox beat the Boston Red Sox and averated a four-game sweep.

Fisk's first four-hit game since Sept. 6, 1985, raised his average to .324 against his former team. He got his 12th career four-hit game.

Shawn Hillegas pitched 5 2-3 shutout innings in relief, allowing just three hits, for the victory. Don Pall finished with three scoreless innings for his third save.

Ivan Calderon hit a two-run triple during a six-run third inning against John Dopson, 6-5. Dopson lost for the fourth time in six decisions.

Calderon's triple made it 2-all, Greg Walker got an infield single and Fisk's single put Chicago ahead. Dan Pasqua followed with a ground-rule double that drove in Walker and Manrique greeted reliever Wes Gardner with a two-run single.

Chicago's six hits and six runs in the third inning were each season highs. Calderon has 37 RBI this season, two more than he had last year.

The White Sox added two runs agianst Gardner and Dennis Lamp in the seventh on RBI singles by Manrique and Ozzie Guillen.

Boston knocked out Adam Peterson with two runs in the first. Wade Boggs walked, advanced on Peterson's wild pickoff throw and Luis Rivera singled. Danny Heep and Dwight Evans got RBI singles that finished Peterson.

Brewers 11, Twins 8

Rob Deer hit his 16th homer and drove in four runs as Milwaukee matched its season high with 17 hits and beat the Minnesota Twins.

Deer, who also doubled, tied Bo Jackson and Mickey Tettleton for the American League lead in home runs. Greg Brock hit a two-run homer as every Milwaukee starter got at least one hit, and eight had two apiece.

Carmen Castillo hit two solo home runs and Gary Gaetti and Greg Gagne each homered for the Twins. Gagne had four of Minnesota's 12 hits.

Bill Krueger, 3-1, won despite allowing five runs on seven hits in 5 1-3 innings. Dan Plesac relieved after Gaetti's leadoff home run in the ninth inning and got his 17th save.

Francisco Oliveras, 3-3, continued to struggle at the Metrodome, giving up five runs in two innings. He is 0-2 with a 6.21 earned run average at home and 3-1 with a 3.60 ERA on the road.

Deer hit a three-run homer in the first inning. Brock's fourth home run of the season came in the third against Steve Shields and made it 5-1. Deer had an RBI double during a three-run sixth as the Brewers took a 10-3 lead.

Orioles 9, Mariners 5

Cal Ripken put Baltimore ahead with a three-run homer and Mickey Tettleton followed with his American League-leading 17th home run as the Orioles scored seven times in the seventh inning and beat the Seattle Mariners.

Baltimore won its fourth straight game. The AL East-leading Orioles began the day 1-5 against Seattle this season, their worst record against any team.

Trailing 3-2, Steve Finley led off the Baltimore seventh with a single, Phil Bradley walked and Ripken hit his seventh home run of the season. Tettleton then connected against Mike Jackson, 2-2.

Craig Worthington hit a run-scoring single off reliever Tom Niedenfuer and Bill Ripken's two-run double made it 9-3.

Bob Milacki, 4-6, gave up five runs on 11 hits in 7 2-3 innings. The Mariners got two runs in the eighth when Edgar Martinez hit an RBI double and scored on Scott Bradley's single, and Mark Thurmond finished for his second save.

Blue Jays 8, Angels 1

Junior Felix drove in three runs, two with his sixth homer, and Dave Stieb hurled five-hit ball for six innings for his fourth straight victory as Toronto beat California.

Stieb, 7-3, and Chuck Finley, 7-6, were locked in a 1-1 duel until Tony Fernandez led off the sixth with a smash off Finley's right ankle, triggering a three-run rally. Finley surrendered successive RBI doubles to Kelly Gruber and George Bell and a run-scoring single to Manny Lee.

Felix, whose third-inning sacrifice fly had given the Blue Jays a 1-0 lead, followed Nelson Liriano's single off reliever Dan Petry in the seventh with a homer to make it 6-1 and launch a four-run rally.

Dwight Gooden, on his way to win No. 100 for the Mets.

Gooden wins 100th

NL Roundup

Associated Press

Dwight Gooden became the third youngest pitcher in modern major league history to win 100 games and Howard Johnson hit a pair of two-run homers as the New York Mets beat the Montreal Expos.

Gooden, 9-2, improved his lifetime mark to 100-37 at 24 years and seven months. Bob Feller reached 100 victories at 22 in 1941 and Frank "Noodles" Hahn won his 100th game in 1903 at 24 years, two months.

Gooden, who has a .730 winning percentage, allowed five hits and struck out nine in seven innings and Rick Aguilera finished for his sixth save. Gooden was the youngest modern pitcher ever to win 20 games when he did it on Aug. 25, 1985, at 20 years, nine months, nine days.

Juan Samuel made his debut as the Mets' center fielder and went 0-for-3 with a run scored. Samuel was acquired from Philadelphia on Sunday for reliever Roger McDowell, outfielder Len Dykstra and a player to be named later.

Johnson homered in the first and second innings off Kevin Gross, 6-6, following walks to Dave Magadan to give the Mets a 4-1 lead.

In games Gross has lost, he has allowed 34 earned runs. In his six victories, he has allowed nine earned runs. The right-hander went six innings and allowed five runs on six hits.

Johnson, who has 18 homers and 42 RBIs, has hit in 18 of his last 22 games with 10 homers and 17 RBIs. It was the third time in Johnson's career he has hit two homers in a game, including twice against Montreal.

Samuel walked with two outs in the fourth, stole second and scored on Magadan's single.

In the fifth, Montreal's Dave Martinez had an RBI double, stole third and scored on a wild pitch to make it 5-3.

Padres 5, Dodgers 1

Shawn Abner hit a three-run homer and Jack Clark a two-run shot off Orel Hershiser as the San Diego Padres, behind the six-hit pitching of Eric Show, beat the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Abner's homer off Hershiser, 8-6, snapped a scoreless tie with two out in the fifth inning. It was Abner's first homer of the year, third of his major league career and first since May 16, 1988 against the New York Mets' Dwight Gooden.

Clark's ninth homer, his second two-run shot in three games, came in the sixth, Heshiser's final inning.

Giants 3, Astros 2

Kevin Mitchell increased his major-league-leading RBI total and reliever Steve Bedrosian got his first save for San Francisco as the Giants beat the Houston Astros.

Don Robinson, 6-4, gave up nine hits, struck out four and walked none in eight innings. Bedrosian, making his first appearance since being acquired Sunday from Philadelphia, pitched a scoreless ninth for his seventh save.

Solo home runs by losing pitcher Bob Knepper and Glenn Davis, his 16th, accounted for the Houston scoring.

Handicapper shows fans how it's done

From Staff Reports

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. — Eddie Donnally, a former jockey and Eclipse Award-winning horse racing writer and handicapper for the Dallas Morning News, will hold a handicapping seminar and contest at the Country Villa Holiday Inn in Midland at 7:30 p.m. today.

The free seminar and contest is part of a tour promoting Ruidoso Downs Race Track which began in Albuquerque two weeks ago. It includes 15 stops in New Mexico, Texas and Arizona.

Donnally will bankroll each contestant with $1,200 in hypothetical money and take hypothetical bets on Ruidoso Downs races which will be shown on television monitors. The person with the most hypothetical money at the end of the three races and a guest of their choice will receive an all expense paid two day trip to Ruidoso Downs in the South Central New Mexico mountains.

The trip includes two days accommodations in the plush Inn Of The Mountain Gods resort hotel, food and two days in the track's Turf Club. A race will be named in their honor, their names will appear on the infield message board, and they will take part in a winner's circle presentation. They will also receive a winner's circle photograph to commemorate the event.

The trip is part of a new marketing effort by the track, purchased last August by R.D. Hubbard and Ed Allred. The pair spent $2.4 million on improvements before the 1989 season began May 13.

Donnally, a jockey for 18 years and an Eclipse Award winning television producer, has a lifetime handicapping win percentage of over 30 percent. In 1986 he set a national record when he correctly selected 10 winners on an 11-race card at Louisiana Downs.

HANCOCK

Mahoney said the company wasn't mentioned enough in national media to justify the expense. Calling the game the John Hancock Bowl will result in 10,000 to 15,000 mentions in news stories worth millions of dollars of advertising, company research showed.

"Economic reasons forced us into this," Mahoney said. "I honestly believe that within the year, every bowl game will be named after a sponsor. I think the next will be the Gator, and then down the line."

On Friday, the group that picks the teams and coordinates events surrounding the game changed its name from the Sun Bowl Association to the El Paso Sun Carnival Association.

The association had final say in changing the game's name, said Jimmy Rogers Jr., the association's liaison with John Hancock and CBS. Rogers said he believed John Hancock would not have continued sponsoring the game if the name had remained the Sun Bowl.

The association, John Hancock and CBS announced they have agreed on a five-year sponsorship and broadcast contract for the bowl, which CBS has broadcast every year since 1968.

El Paso sports columnists and a few letter-writers have grumbled about the name change, which had been expected for months. Len DeLuca of CBS Sports said Monday that opposition is of only local concern, and that viewers won't care what the game is called.

"The important thing is the matchup," he said. "That and the scheduling."

The bowl game has suffered the last couple of years because of competition with Santa Claus and with other football games. The 1987 game was played on Christmas and earned a 6 rating. Last year's game, a thriller played on Christmas Eve, fell at the same time as an NFL playoff game and earned a dismal 4.8 rating. John Hancock was expecting a double-digit rating, DeLuca said.

This year's game will be played Dec. 30, and DeLuca appeared confident the ratings picture will improve.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 21, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: New job opportunities arise. Be more supportive of partner and your life together will take off. All that glitters is not gold when it comes to romance. Look for someone who shares your values. Owning property brings peace of mind. Reconciling with a former employer could work to your advantage if those who opposed you have moved on.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: "Family Ties" stars Meredith Baxter Birney and Michael Gross, pitcher Rick Sutcliffe, Miss America 1989 Gretchen Carlson, actress Maureen Stapleton, artist Rockwell Kent, author Mary McCarthy, actress Jane Russell, writer Jean-Paul Sartre, first lady Martha Washington.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be aware of any discrepancies involving joint investments and act immediately. Your leadership could be challenged. Have your facts and figures ready. Keeping your cool is essential when tempers flare.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A position of authority is within your reach. Showcase your managerial talents. Creative projects will prosper if you allow enough time for overcoming obstacles. Family members are supportive. Share the limelight and applause.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You find it easier to verbalize your feelings today. Friends and family members will be in a lively mood. Group activities have special appeal. Be receptive to loved ones' suggestions for recreation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your finances should be under better control now. Tensions fade. You feel much more confident. Strong family ties provide a solid foundation for career success, social prestige. Count your blessings!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Speculative projects can succeed if you can handle all the work involved. Put impulsive financial plans on hold. Romance is on your mind. Go for the gold ring! Dine somewhere special tonight.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Improve your home to the limit of your means. Hesitating could cost you a valuable opportunity. Be decisive when asked your opinion. Higher-ups want to know where you stand and why.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Postpone signing or sending letters you are not sure about. Discretion pays big dividends. Play a waiting game. Taking the evening off to relax and unwind will make you more productive tomorrow.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Relationship conditions take on added importance. You receive good news about love or money. An educational project pays rich dividends. Follow your conscience. You feel good about yourself when you help others.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Someone enters your life who can help you deal with a difficult experience. You could find taking a daily walk very relaxing. Invite loved one to come along now and then.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Use key contacts to help you achieve an important goal. Closely supervise the work being done by subordinates. The outcome of a project is your responsibility. Join forces with like-minded individuals.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It is time to think about settling down. You have an opportunity to put your financial house in order. Do so. Although you deserve a rest, you may not get it now.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Vacation in October or December, rather than now. You need to put your ideas into motion before someone beats you to the punch. Choose your confidants with care. Protect secrets.

The bidding:

Opening lead: Jack of ♣

There's a world of difference between the play of the hand at duplicate and rubber bridge. Here's another example of how divergent the forms of competition can be.

Four spades is an eminently reasonable contract. North is close to a raise to four spades, but since he can't be sure whether his queen of clubs is working, the more conservative three spades gets our vote. South has ample to go on to game.

There is no problem at duplicate. Win the club lead and cash the high trumps. If the suit splits evenly, you discard your hearts on the diamonds and make 12 tricks. As the cards lie, you go down a trick for an average board.

At rubber bridge you have an almost sure-trick line. Cover the jack of clubs with the queen and allow East's king to hold the trick—you want to keep West off play to guard against a lead through the king of hearts.

Suppose East returns a club. Take the ace and lead the ten of trumps. If West follows low, let it ride! You can afford to lose a trick in trumps, one heart and a club. If West produces an honor, win in dummy, return to hand with the ace of diamonds and lead another trump, inserting the eight if West plays a low spade.

Your safety play rewards you handsomely. As the cards lie, you are the one who ends up making two overtricks. In rubber bridge, you should pull out all the stops to secure your contract. At duplicate, you cannot afford to give up possible overtricks in a contract where you are a heavy favorite anyway.

'Batman' flies high on opening night

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Thousands of fans, including many who staked out viewing spots 24 hours in advance, screamed wildly for Hollywood stars at the full-moon premiere of "Batman."

Sylvester Stallone, Eddie Murphy, Billy Crystal, Don Johnson, Melanie Griffith and the film's stars Michael Keaton and Kim Basinger showed up as "Batman" unfurled his cape Monday night during an old-fashioned premiere.

The Warner Bros. movie opens nationwide Friday. Walking out of the premiere, "Wheel of Fortune" star Vanna White pronounced the Caped Crusader's debut "terrific ... pure fun."

Actor Burgess Meredith, who played the Penguin on the campy "Batman" television series of the 1960s, also showed up for the two-theater Westwood gala.

About 100 of the 15,000 fans crowded on the sidewalk and in the street wore green hair and white face makeup in honor of their favorite character the Joker, the villain played by Jack Nicholson.

DALLAS (AP) — Actor Omar Sharif is among 36 of the world's best bridge players who have gathered to match wits in a four-day tournament.

Sharif

The tournament, which was beginning today, showcases some of the greats of the game, said Bobby Wolff, the event's co-chairman whose syndicated bridge column appears in 140 newspapers nationwide.

"We have invited only players with a high level of competence," Wolff said. "Many of these players have won national tournaments or have placed high in world competitions over the last 30 years."

Wolff said tournament participants are among the "top half of 1 percent" of the world's 15 million bridge players.

Sharif, who appeared in "Lawrence of Arabia" and "Funny Girl," is an avid bridge player.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor William Hurt said he never told his former lover he considered her his wife, but he acknowledged failing to get the mother of his child to agree in writing not to make claims on his money.

Hurt

Jennings

But former ballerina Sandra Jennings, who is pursuing a multimillion-dollar divorce claim against the Oscar-winning actor, said Hurt told her they had "a spiritual marriage" that was more sacrosanct than a legal union.

"He told me we were married in the eyes of God," she said during a break in the state trial's opening session Monday.

Jennings is seeking half the money Hurt has made since Dec. 9, 1982, when he learned his divorce from his first wife, actress Mary Beth Hurt, was final. A. Richard Golub, Jennings' lawyer, put Hurt's worth at about $10 million.

Jennings claims a common-law marriage exists because she and Hurt lived together from 1981 to 1984. She is pursuing her claim under common-law statutes in South Carolina, where they lived from Dec. 9, 1982, to Jan. 10, 1983, while Hurt filmed "The Big Chill." New York, where they lived most of the time, does not recognize common-law marriage.

Kim Basinger and Jack Nicholson

Hurt, 39, said he told Jennings after they started living together that he was put off marriage by "the pain of it not working out with Mary Beth."

Golub questioned Hurt about his efforts to get Jennings to sign a contract renouncing claims to his money in February 1983, one month after she gave birth to their son, Alexander Devon Hurt.

Hurt said he was ready to sign the agreement when he and his lawyers met with Jennings, but she left the meeting without signing.

"Some attempt was made to pin her down about what her objection was. Nobody could figure it out," he said.

Hurt denied referring to Jennings as his wife, as she has claimed. He admitted, however, that on his 1983 New York State income tax return, he checked off the box for married, filing separately.

Jennings said she gave birth to Alexander, now 6, because she thought her relationship with Hurt was permanent. In court papers, she has said she left Hurt in 1984 because he was physically and verbally abusive, and once slapped her while she was holding their then-5-day-old son.

Hurt has been paying $65,000 a year in child support, his publicist says.

Golub asked Hurt if he loved Jennings during the time they spent in South Carolina.

"I can't say that," Hurt said.

"How did you feel about her?" Golub asked.

"Very mixed," he said. "The relationship was in trouble."

Hurt said he had dreamt Jennings had given birth to a girl but refused to feed the child. He testified that he was so disturbed by the dream that he woke Jennings up, but she rolled over and went back to sleep.

"I was concerned, scared, about having a child with a person I didn't have a good relationship with," he said.

In March, Hurt married Heidi Henderson, daughter of bandleader Skitch Henderson.

Hurt, who won a best actor Oscar for "Kiss of the Spider Woman," also has starred in "Broadcast News," "Gorky Park," "The Accidental Tourist" and "Children of a Lesser God."

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — Olympic gold medalist Mary Lou Retton says she wants to open a gymnastics school and try to become the inspiration to her students that coach Bela Karolyi was to her.

Karolyi's gym in Houston, Texas, was Retton's springboard to Olympic glory in 1984. She became the first American female to win the all-around gold medal.

"It's a natural for me. I know the sport and enjoy talking about it," she said during a weekend visit to her native West Virginia.

Hope seen for end to coal strike

ROANOKE, Va. (AP) — Three union leaders accused of encouraging strikers to block mine entrances have been released from jail, raising hopes for an end to a wildcat walkout by 27,000 miners i nine states.

"It sounds like a cause for celebration," said Chuck Donnelly, an attorney for the United Mine Workers in West Virginia. "I would hope that would be a sign that the rash of wildcatters will soon be at an end."

Marty Hudson, field commander in the UMW's strike against Pittston Coal Group Inc., was released Monday from Roanoke City Jail along with two colleages.

U.S. District Judge Glen Williams ordered the three to appear before him today in Abingdon, 100 miles southwest of Roanoke.

Cecil Roberts, UMW vice president, said union officials would agree to obey the judge's strike restrictions.

Also released were Jackie Stump, president of UMW's southwest Virginia district, and C.A. Phillips, a UMW international representative.

The judge's June 8 decision to jail the three without bond until they promised to end civil disobedience against Pittston has been a rallying point for the wildcat strikes.

But Roger Caldwell, a field representative in the UMW's District 17 in West Virginia, said the unauthorized strikes probably will continue as miners turn their attention to the $3 million in fines levied against the UMW by another Virginia judge.

"What good is it to have them out of jail if they're going break the union anyway?" Caldwell asked.

Union lawyers had been negotiating with federal officials in Virginia to release the three so they can work in other areas of the Pittston strike, Roberts said. The three would be kept away from picket sites and instead be used at meetings in other communities, he said.

"We are interested in satisfying him (the judge) that these people will obey his order. We would still use their help in the strike, but not at the picket line," Roberts said.

Williams held the three on contempt of court for violating his order restricting strike activity. The sit-down demonstrations, in which more than 2,000 striking miners and supporters have been arrested, have since ended.

Northwest sold for $3.6 billion

By ERIC N. BERG
New York Times News Service

CHICAGO — In a deal that epitomized the lowering of geographic boundaries among large investors, the parent of Northwest Airlines said Monday that it had agreed to sell the airline company to an investor group that includes a Los Angeles business executive, a Dutch airline, an Australian brewer and a New York bank.

The announcement by NWA Inc. appeared to end the long, behind-the-scenes auction of the nation's fourth-largest carrier.

The group's proposed purchase price is $121 a share in cash, or $3.64 billion, much of it to be borrowed. Northwest's shares had been trading at around $40 a share not even a year ago.

To that extent, the deal provides another example of how, in the view of many corporate acquirers, the stock market often fails to value fully a company's assets.

The proposed purchase price is one-third more than the other public bid for NWA: a $90-a-share tender offer made about five weeks ago by Marvin Davis, the Los Angeles billionaire.

It is also "substantially above" a secret bid submitted late last week by the Pan Am Corp., the parent of Pan American World Airways, according to an investment banker close to the deal.

Northwest's stock price rose $6.50 a share, to $114.125, Monday as investors tried to determine whether any obstacles remained.

The leader of the investor group, Wings Holdings Inc., is Alfred Checchi, a former Marriott Corp. executive from Beverly Hills, Calif.

His group consists of KLM Royal Dutch Airlines; Elders IXL Ltd., an Australian investment holding company and brewer; the Bankers Trust New York Corp., and associates of Checchi.

Federal regulators, who are concerned that an acquisition in which much of the money is borrowed could burden an airline with so much debt that it would be unable to make investments that are critical to flying safely, are expected to study the proposal carefully.

Checchi (pronounced Check-ee) offered assurances that Northwest's management and headquarters in St. Paul would not be changed and that the group would hold onto its investment for at least 10 years, not selling off any major assets.

Checchi also said his business plan was to "strengthen Northwest and build on its recent successful operating performance."

The Checchi group hopes to capitalize on Northwest's dominant position in air travel to the Far East.

Among other things, Northwest is the leading air carrier to East Asia, and it has sizable property holdings in the inflated Tokyo real estate market.

"With the possible exception of the Japanese land, reputed to be non-essential to airline operations, we're not selling anything," Checchi said in an interview.

The group's willingness to pay $121 a share recognizes "increased value in the Pacific routes and in having a substantial cargo network to the Far East, and that airlines have a lot of other undervalued assets — equipment, positions in line for order delivery, and real estate," said Thomas Longman, an analyst at Bear, Stearns & Co.

Checchi has said he views NWA's prospects as so bright as to justify the lofty price being paid.

MGF status explained

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

MGF Oil Corp. today issued a statement clarifying its position in the recent sale of Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. by Southmark Corp.

"When Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. was purchased by a management group from Southmark earlier this year, MGF was not included in the sale," said Michael L. Pollard, president and director of MGF.

Pollard said that when MGF was acquired in 1988 under terms of a plan of reorganization Southmark and not Parker & Parsley became the major stockholder. Southmark acquired 65 percent of MGF's common stock in February of 1988 and increased its share to 94 percent during the fourth quarter of 1988 by converting $15 million of MGF debt into equity.

Since Southmark is the major stockholder, MGF is no longer affiliated with Parker & Parsley Petroleum or its affiliates. However, Parker & Parsley does have a management contract to provide management, advisory and administrative services to MGF, and to manage MGF's oil and gas properties.

As a condition to the management agreement, all officers and directors of MGF who were also employees of Parker & Parsley Petroleum, resigned their MGF positions. Current officers and directors of MGF are: Donald W. Hair, chairman; Michael L. Pollard, president; Robert M. Galecke, vice president and treasurer; Robert Van Horn, vice president and Sonja Ryberg, secretary.

Despite some confusion on the part of stockholders, Pollard said MGF was still a viable, operating company. " MGF is still a public company with about 500 shareholders and still must make reports to the SEC," said Pollard.

The company recently improved its financial position with the sale of four deep rigs (rated to 25,000 feet) to an Italian company with drilling contracts in India. The four National 1320 rigs built in 1979 and 1980, were sold for an undisclosed sum.

MGF still retains 11 working rigs in its inventory. Four are rated to 25,000 feet and the remainder are

Oil prices give up Monday gains

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices are giving back some of Monday's gains.

July contracts for West Texas Intermediate had fallen 41 cents to $20.45 at midmorning on the New York Mercantile Exchange. The contract, which expires at the end of trading today, reached a low of $19.67 a barrel before surging 91 cents to $20.86 Monday.

Analysts said investors were concerned about the direction of crude prices before the last day of trading in July crude oil.

"The expiration of the July contract produces some nervousness; that brings in short-covering," said Richard Redoglio, energy broker with Merrill Lynch Energy Futures.

Crude contracts for delivery after July showed more modest gains. The August crude oil contract rose 38 cents to $18.96 a barrel and September gained 18 cents to $17.99.

Among refined products, unleaded gasoline for July delivery rose 0.86 cent to settle at 59 cents a gallon. Other unleaded gasoline contracts were mixed.

Heating oil for delivery in July rose 0.35 cent to 46.06 cents a gallon on low volume. Contracts for delivery later in the year also rose.

An attack on a major Colombian oil pipeline helped boost prices slightly early in the day, but the effect was short-lived, observers said.

"It had some psychological impact but since it's a sour crude, it's hard to say how much of an impact it really had," said Randall Rothenberg, a trader with Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

Analysts said that Colombia's state oil company, Ecopetrol, was informing U.S. customers that deliveries would be disrupted for several days while damage to the pipeline is repaired.

Subdued market drops 6.5 points

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market settled for a mixed showing Monday in a subdued atmosphere following Friday's "triple witching hour."

Trading set its slowest pace in more than two months.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 6.49 to 2,479.89, while some other prominent market indicators eked out small gains.

Declining issues slightly outnumbered advances in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 686 up, 733 down and 542 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 130.72 million shares, down from 244.51 million Friday and the lightest total since a 128.54 million-share day on April 17.

Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 155.13 million shares.

Dollar turns lower overseas

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against most major foreign currencies in early European trading today, but had stabilized by late morning. Gold prices were little changed.

Currency dealers said the dollar's short-term trend is downward as a result of confusion created by last week's selloff. But they said the outlook for the longer term remains bullish as there's still underlying demand for dollars.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 1.70 yen to a closing 143.80 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 143.63 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning compared with late Monday:

—1.9708 West German marks, down from 1.9735
—1.7047 Swiss francs, up from 1.7045
—6.6810 French francs, down from 6.6940
—2.2205 Dutch guilders, down from 2.2351
—1,427.00 Italian lire, down from 1,439.75
—1.1985 Canadian dollars, down from 1.1991

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound. It cost $1.5575 to buy one pound, compared with $1.5485 late Monday.

London's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price for gold of $366.50 an ounce at midmorning, unchanged from late Monday.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.35 a troy ounce, down from Monday's $5.37.

Texas' first nuke plant operational

BAY CITY, Texas (AP) — Houston Lighting & Power Co. on Monday declared its South Texas Project in full swing as the state's first fully operational nuclear plant.

"This declaration brings the South Texas Project to full completion precisely on the schedule and within the budget ... projected by the management team in early 1982," said Jerry Goldberg, nuclear group vice president for Houston Lighting & Power.

He called the feat "unparalleled in the industry in this day and age."

The declaration by an HL&P committee followed a required 100-hour continuous run at full power.

The company announced a $300 million increase in the projected 1982 cost of $5.5 billion in September 1987, but contended this was more than offset by a $750 million settlement from Brown & Root, the fired original designer-builder of the project.

The plant's cost, however, was more than six times the original estimate.

Since receiving a full power license from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in March, Unit 2 has generated more than 500 million kilowatt hours of electricity while undergoing a series of tests at escalating power levels.

Unit 1 went into full commercial operation in August 1988.

"We now have two very reliable units generating at full power for consumers throughout South Texas," said Gerald Vaughn, vice president of Houston Lighting & Power's nuclear operations.

Software giants will merge

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Continuing an aggressive growth spree, Computer Associates International Inc., said Monday that it had agreed to merge with Cullinet Software Inc. in a deal valued at approximately $320 million.

The agreement calls for Cullinet shareholders to receive half a share of Computer Associates common stock for each of the approximately 33 million Cullinet shares outstanding. The transaction will be considered a pooling of interests and treated as a tax-free exchange to Cullinet shareholders, the companies said.

Cullinet shares closed Monday on the New York Stock Exchange at $9, down 75 cents. Computer Associates stock closed on the Big Board at $19.50, off 62.5 cents.

Cullinet Software, based in Westwood, Mass., was once an industry leader, supplying software for midrange and mainframe computers.

It has struggled in recent years but recovered somewhat last year after company founder John J. Cullinane returned as chairman and chief executive officer to take an active role in managing the software concern.

The company, which had revenue of $203 million in 1988, has lost market share, beginning in 1985, when the International Business Machines Corp. became more aggressive in the software business and introduced a product that took business from Cullinet.

The merger is part of a continuing trend toward consolidation in the software industry.

Analysts said that deal was good for Computer Associates, based in Garden City, N.Y., which gains access to a large base of Cullinet customers.

Computer Associates, which had revenue of $1.03 billion for the most recent fiscal year, was founded in 1976 with a single product, a software filing program.

The company has made acquisitions since 1982, including the Uccel Corp., its closest competitor.

The company offers more than 200 products ranging from database managers to spreadsheets but is focused on the mainframe computer market.

"Computer Associates got a great deal," said Scott Smith, a software analyst at Donaldson Lufkin & Jenrette. "They basically didn't have to pay a nickel."

He estimated that Cullinet would make a positive contribution to Computer Associates' earnings within 12 to 18 months.

Cullinane said Monday that he had returned to Cullinet in April last year with the goal of turning around the company, which had suffered a string unprofitable quarters, to permit it to survive independently or be successfully merged.

Cullinane said that he had would not stay with the company past the planned merger.

Sematech, friends fight Japanese

DALLAS (AP) — A consortium formed to help boost U.S. competitiveness in the $45 billion semiconductor business has opened discussions with European companies about combining forces to fight the Japanese.

Representatives of three companies leading the effort to form Joint European Submicron Silicon, or JESSI, met Friday in Austin with officials from Sematech, a consortium of 14 companies and the U.S. government, to discuss future cooperation.

"It was agreed that any potential cooperation must be based on reciprocity. It was also agreed that such cooperation is highly desirable," Sematech said Monday in a prepared statement.

"A study group was set up to further define the areas where common activities can substantially help in reaching mutual goals."

The meeting between representatives of NV Philips, a Dutch company; Siemens AG, West Germany; and SGS-Thomson Microelectronics BV, a joint French-Italian venture, grew out of earlier questions by the Europeans about how Sematech was created.

Sources said Sematech agreed to discuss coordination with the embryonic JESSI at the urging of IBM, one of the key Sematech members.

An IBM spokesman acknowledged the company favors discussions with the Europeans, but would not say what role, if any, Big Blue had played in bringing the parties together.

Business Week magazine said IBM encouraged the discussions because it wants to participate in JESSI, but the Europeans are reluctant to let the company in because they are excluded from Sematech.

Sematech spokesman Miller Bonner disputed the magazine's conclusion that the talks would lead to joint membership in both consortia for the 14 U.S. companies and their European counterparts.

"That's a giant leap from what we talked about here on Friday," Bonner said. "We're a long way from talking about joint membership. There's one thing to discuss standards. It's quite another to talk about joint membership."

Sematech, an acronym for Semiconductor Manufacturing Technology, was created last year with a goal of U.S. global leadership in the semiconductor manufacturing technology by 1993.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Chinese crackdown chills tourism industry

MUTIANYU, China (AP) — The tourist season is here, but there are few people climbing China's most famous sight — the "Chang Cheng," or Great Wall.

The crackdown on pro-democracy demonstrators and the worldwide condemnation it has generated have chilled China's burgeoning tourism industry.

In Washington on Monday, the Bush administration said Americans should continue avoiding China even if the turmoil there appears to have temporarily subsided.

U.S. approach to foreign trade defended

WASHINGTON (AP) — Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher defended the administration's get-tough approach to opening foreign markets to U.S. products, saying the effort must be made to correct huge trade imbalances.

In an address Monday, Mosbacher called last year's U.S. trade deficit of $120 billion unacceptable and said more has to be done to reduce the imbalance.

Mosbacher defended the administration's decision last month to target Japan, Brazil and India for erecting barriers to sales of U.S. goods.

Hours before the three were released from jail, the wildcat strike ended in Virginia when 790 UMW employees returned to their jobs at Island Creek Corp. But 5,000 more miners in Alabama, Illinois, Missouri and Ohio joined the walkout.

That brought to more than 27,000 the number of miners on strike against coal operators in nine states, not including the 1,800 picketing Pittston in a contract dispute. The UMW has about 80,000 active members nationwide.

Several hundred union members from other states began converging on the southwestern Virginia coalfields Monday and were camping out in Russell County.

intermediate rigs, according to Pollard.

Latest financial reports show MGF losses to have slowed dramatically. In 1987 the company showed a net loss of over $10 million on revenues of $20.4 million, or a loss of .32 cents per share. In 1988, net losses on almost $20 million had dropped to $1.3 million or one cent a share. So far this year for the first quarter the company has showed a loss of $261,000 on revenues of about $5 million.

In another development relating to MGF's parent, Southmark, the former chairman and vice chairman of the Southmark Corp. have lowered their stake in the troubled Dallas-based real estate and financial services concern to 13.4 percent from 15.36 percent.

In a Securities and Exchange Commission filing Monday, Gene E. Phillips, the former chairman of Southmark, and William S. Friedman, the former vice chairman, gave no reason for the sale of the shares.

The two investors have said previously in SEC filings that the were considering selling all or a substantial portion of their holdings, depending upon market conditions.

Between May 19 and June 8, Phillips and Friedman sold 859,000 Southmark shares on the open market for prices ranging from 56 cents to 68 cents a share.

Bush draws lesson from events in China

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, drawing a lesson for America's youth from the struggles of China's students in Tiananmen Square, is urging young people to devote their lives to democratic ideals and community service.

Bush was honoring 121 of the nation's top high school seniors, the 1989 Presidential Scholars, at the White House today, after making a quick journey by helicopter Monday evening to deliver a commencement address at Cheltenham High School in Wyncote, Pa.

There, in a steamy gymnasium packed with 2,500 people, he delivered a message intended for all 2.5 million seniors graduating from high school this June, not just Cheltenham's 331.

"We do not have to stand in front of tanks in America, thank God. But we do have to summon the same courage to confront the evil that exists in the world," said Bush.

He told the Cheltenham graduates they were the heirs to a legacy of American sacrifice, from Bunker Hill to Bastogne, "where we upheld the tenets of democracy," and from the Red Cross to the Peace Corps.

"Today I ask you to take a risk for a cause larger than ourselves," he said. "It is the cause of helping others and thereby America. It is the cause of democratic ideals."

He said brave people are struggling in the Soviet Union, Poland and China for basic human rights and freedoms that "our ancestors secured for us — and that we too often take for granted."

Recalling the solitary young man who briefly stopped a column of tanks in Beijing on June 5, Bush said, "That vivid, unforgettable image illustrates how precious is the freedom that is America's secret weapon and her shield."

He called volunteerism and community service "central to our fabric as a nation, and as a people. No, they aren't as dramatic as the profiles in courage of Warsaw, the gulags and Tiananmen Square.

"But they reflect the same sense of sacrifice and of concern ... for country, decency, our fellow man," he said.

Bush plans to keep the spotlight on youth and altruism on Wednesday at the White House when he announces details of the "YES to America Initiative." The acronym stands for Youth Entering Service.

"We will refute those who speak of a 'me' generation. Instead this program can build a cathedral of the spirit, and help yours become a global 'we' generation," he told the seniors.

Bush has previously announced plans to ask Congress to invest $100 million over four years into a YES Foundation to encourage young people to perform community service. He will head the foundation.

Bush was introduced at Cheltenham by Hang Nguyen, a senior graduating with top honors who came to this country as a refugee from her native Vietnam in 1975. Her mother still lives there.

"Each of us has come to this moment in a different way," she said. "Our commencement is both a common achievement and a unique one. In some ways these ceremonies are like thousands of others being held across the nation."

But, she added, they were also "unique because of this class ... this school ... this community" — and the commencement speaker.

The 330 Cheltenham seniors had to yield some graduation tickets and curtail their own speeches to make room for the president and his entourage.

"Half of us were excited," said Jason Gorman. "But there were those who thought it is more important for more of the relatives to come than the president."

But another senior, Adam Cherry, said, "It's the greatest thing that could happen to a senior class."

Each graduate got a handshake from Bush, and many of the girls stole a kiss as well. The graduates wore blue and gold robes, and Bush was in academic garb himself.

Cheltenham's alumni include baseball star Reggie Jackson; Robert Meyers, an architect of the Social Security system, and Dr. Michael Brown, a Nobel Prize winner for medicine.

Bush resists Congress' call for condemnation

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration is sidestepping congressional demands that it intensify U.S. condemnation of Chinese repression and consider further sanctions against the Beijing government.

However, American workers are being strongly advised not to return to their jobs in the troubled country.

"We're not going to lift our travel advisory," Margaret D. Tutwiler, the State Department spokeswoman, said Monday. "That remains in effect."

The advisory — which is a suggestion and not an order — was posted after Chinese Army troops attacked students demonstrating for a more liberal regime June 3-4 in Tiananmen Square.

Thousands of Americans subsequently left China, some with U.S. assistance, thereby stripping U.S. companies of many of their key personnel.

About 175 American companies have offices in China. Many of them have received word from their Chinese partners in joint ventures reporting that the turmoil has subsided.

Although the administration is trying to keep Americans from returning to China, only military transactions with Beijing have been suspended by President Bush.

Calls by House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., and other lawmakers that Bush consider other punitive measures and also step up U.S. condemnation of the Chinese government were sidestepped.

"The United States has been speaking out," Secretary of State James A. Baker III said Monday. "We've been speaking out quite vigorously."

But Baker and senior U.S. officials did not repeat their criticism of China's suppression of pro-democracy elements. Also, Baker has not acted on a list of possible sanctions compiled for him by his aides.

"The president is quite anxious we not do anything that would hurt the Chinese people," Baker told reporters after a meeting with President Hugh Desmond Hoyte of Guyana.

Baker is bound to be questioned about U.S. policy when he testifies late today to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Baker also will report on the summit meeting Bush held last month with the leaders of the 15 other North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries.

He will return to Capitol Hill on Thursday for a similar session with the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Overall, the Bush administration maintained its reserve about developments in China.

"I think we've said everything we have to say on China," deputy press secretary Roman Popadiuk said at a White House briefing.

The spokesman disputed a report that Bush was appalled by faulty U.S. intelligence reports on China, including an erroneous dispatch that Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping had lapsed into a coma.

The report, in the current issue of U.S. News & World Report, said Bush — who headed the CIA in the Ford administration — intended to replace CIA director William Webster by year's end.

"The CIA is doing a superb job," Popadiuk said. "There is no truth to the article and the president supports Director Webster."

At the State Department, spokeswoman Tutwiler said that despite "a pause in anti-U.S. propaganda over the weekend," the situation in China remains "far from normal."

She said criticism of the Voice of America resumed on Saturday, and that articles had appeared attacking expelled VOA Bureau Chief Alan Pessin and Associated Press correspondent John Pomfret.

Also, on Sunday, the official New China News Agency criticized Marlin Fitzwater, the White House spokesman, calling his criticism of death sentences imposed on three Chinese for burning a train "ridiculous."

Cattleman's Restaurant offers diners friendly service, generous portions

Cattleman's Restaurant, located at 3300 N. Big Spring, boasts the "best steaks in town," and once you've tried them you're sure to agree. Owners and long time Midlanders Pat and Bill Henkel will personally greet each customers as they enter the restaurant.

"Cattleman's is the kind of place you can bring a business associate for lunch," said Bill. "Or the family for dinner."

This popular, eight year old restaurant has a tradition of personable service and generous portions which keep you coming back for more.

Along with steaks, chicken and seafood, Cattleman's clientele can enjoy homemade soup, which the staff prepares fresh twice a day.

Blueberry muffins (evenings only), dinner rolls and cornbread are made from scratch every day.

And don't forget Cattleman's famous salad bar, well known about town for its variety and size. Here you will find fresh items awaiting your selection. "We feel that every meal should start off with a fresh green salad," explained Bill.

And don't forget to try Bill's cornbread and beans, found at the salad bar. Bill purchases only Colorado pintos, grown on the western slope of the Rockies. They are cooked for a minimum of eight hours, for the best pot of beans you'll find in Texas.

Bread pudding is available at the salad bar evenings.

Cattleman's will be adding new items to the salad bar as summer continues, so be sure and stop in frequently.

While you enjoy your salad and await your meal, you won't want to miss sampling a delicious appetizer or two. Try the delicious onion rings or fried zucchini and set your appetite for the main course.

A full-service bar serves wine, cocktails and beer.

Table margarine is made from 100% Fleischman's corn oil. Table salt is iodized sea salt.

The Cattleman's kitchen prepares its fried foods in a premium all vegetable deep frying oil which is cholesterol free.

Although Cattleman's may boast of a fine selection of beef, chicken and seafood, Bill says the most popular choice is the six ounce filet. "The cut has no fat," he continued. All beef is top quality, U.S.D.A. Texas grown.

The chicken fried steak is also a very popular choice.

Heartier appetites will be satisfied with Cattleman's T-bone, sirloin, ribeye, club steaks, spaghetti and hamburgers.

Children are very special guests of Cattleman's, also. "We love children here," Bill said. They will love the "Kiddie Corner" selections which are sized just for them. Cattleman's always includes red gelatin among their salad bar selections, especially for their younger customers.

If you have room for dessert, your meal will be complete with a tasty Cattleman's treat. Try some fresh apple pie, cherry cheesecake, ice cream or pecan pie.

Birthdays for folks of all ages will be celebrated at Cattleman's and a free cake will be served.

Cattleman's hours are lunch 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. Monday through Friday, and evenings Monday through Saturday, 5 p.m. to 9:30 p.m.

Cattleman's Restaurant employees offer friendly service. From left are Marie Kinsey, Nancy McKinney, Shirley Dry, Toni Gollick, Sweetie Loveday, Phyllis Hodges, Maybelle Fleming and J.R. Silva.

This home is enhanced with durable "wood-look" Cedarwood steel siding by Revere. Lewellen Construction Company is the factory authorized dealer for Revere. Call 686-8007 or 563-4520 for more information.

Save now on low maintenance soffit, fascia by Lewellen Construction Co.

Homeowners, if you have been considering adding low maintenance aluminum soffit with steel fascia, now is the time to call Lewellen Construction Company. While the inventory lasts, a typical, medium sized brick home (based on an overhang two feet wide by 200 feet long with eight inch fascia) can be fitted for only $1500.

This is not a minimum or a maximum price, but an example of what a home with these dimensions would cost. The price of steel siding is rapidly escalating, and before prices get out of control, Lewellen Construction Company had the foresight to order a large supply in three often used colors.

Low maintenance aluminum soffit and "lifetime" fascia by Lewellen Construction Company eliminates painting, makes your life easier and your home more valuable. The special purchase includes the colors beaver brown, rafia beige and white, with seamless gutters available to match. Other colors are available at regular pricing.

Call Lewellen Construction Company today at 686-8007 or 563-4520 for more information on this valuable home improvement.

In addition to the soffit and fascia special, Lewellen Construction Company announces it is a factory dealer for Revere Cedarwood Steel Siding. This is an exciting "wood-look" siding product that stands out from the rest with a random woodgrain pattern as natural and different as a forest full of trees. A unique two-toned coating process gives Cedarwood steel the deep, hardy color and appearance of real wood.

The woodgrain accent tone is not a superficial surface coat. Cedarwood's dramatic multi-toned look is achieved through a patented process called color fusion. Varying color graduation are applied in a non-repeating woodgrain pattern to capture the natural tones and texture of real wood.

The specially formulated flourocarbon coating of Revere Cedarwood steel siding not only provides superior resistance to the elements, staining, mildew and dirt but is also warranted against excessive chalking or color change.

Best of all, you get a lifetime warranty on the finish, as well as a 20-year non-fade warranty.

Revere steel siding is tough as nails. The high grade raw materials used to produce Cedarwood steel siding combine to shield your home from the outside world. Frigid weather, hailstorms, driving rain and searing sun are no match for Revere Cedarwood steel siding.

Give your home a distinctive new look with eight-inch clapboard style or colonial Double four-inch Cedarwood siding. The clean crisp lines will give your home a fresh look that will make you proud for years to come.

You can see samples of this exciting siding up close at Lewellen Construction Company. Just give them a call at 686-8007 or 563-4520 and arrange for a first-hand look.

Purchase offers not accompanied by the required employment/income verification WILL RESULT IN REJECTION OF THE PURCHASE OFFER.

Prior approval will be required by VA for the transfer of a property secured by a vendee loan if the loan is not paid in full as part of the transfer. Public Law 100-689 also permits VA to charge a one-half of 1 percent funding fee for the transfer as well as a fee for processing the approval of the transfer.

VA has properties for sale statewide. If you desire to purchase properties in other areas, please contact any sales broker located in the area in which you are interested.

Once a purchase offer has been accepted for processing by VA and subsequently cancelled at the request of the purchaser, the earnest money deposit WILL NOT be refunded and the purchaser will be required to forfeit the earnest money to the VA as liquidation expenses. There will be no exception to this policy. Therefore, the VA suggests that all brokers interview their buyers to assure they want the property prior to submission of an offer to purchase.
