Panel backs UTPB bill

Expansion, 4-year status gain support

■ Bill has support of Gov. Richards, Rep. Watkins says.

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The House Higher Education Committee endorsed four-year status for the University of Texas of the Permian Basin Wednesday night despite concerns that the expansion might hurt area junior colleges.

After hearing three hours of testimony, the committee voted 6-3 to recommend approval of House Bill 277, sponsored by the committee's chairman, Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa.

The bill would allow the Odessa university to enroll freshman and sophomore students, with 500 freshmen entering each year, but spokesmen for Midland College and other Texas junior colleges said that would set up UTPB in competition with their schools.

Although the Legislative Budget Board estimated cost of the expansion at $1.3 million a year, Watkins said he expected little actual fiscal impact because the university now has approximately 2,200 students in a building designed for 4,500 students.

He said expansion would help the university fill the building, and noted that a four-year institution would receive less money per student than the current upper-level institution under state funding formulas.

The Legislature passed a similar bill to expand UTPB in 1989, only to see Gov. Bill Clements veto it.

Watkins said that this time the bill has the support not only of Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock in the Senate but also Gov. Ann Richards, who told him she would sign it.

Watkins said there is not a four-year university within 140 miles of Midland-Odessa, which, with a population of 250,000, is the largest metropolitan area in the state where students cannot commute to a four-year institution.

"We're talking about equal access to education," he said.

Watkins played down fears that an expanded UTPB would hurt the communi-

Midlander hits home after duty in Persian Gulf

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Surrounded by teary-eyed family and friends, Sgt. Gilbert Mendoza, the first Midlander back from the Persian Gulf since the war ended, said his journey home is not yet complete.

"I'm not home 'til all of them (the troops) are home," said Mendoza, 28, who arrived at Midland International Airport Wednesday night.

Mendoza was greeted by loved ones, banners, flags, and his sister, Prissy Munoz, singing "God Bless the U.S.A." Tears streaming down her cheeks, Ms. Munoz stopped singing to give her brother a long hug.

But the first hug went to his mother, Corina Munoz, who waited anxiously in the airport lobby watching the clock until her son's arrival.

After his arrival, Mendoza said he was surprised by the reception and couldn't believe he was home.

"One minute you're there the next minute you're home," Mendoza said.

"There are so many of us coming home. They are pushing us so fast," he said. "You can't absorb that you are here."

Mendoza arrived in San Antonio Sunday evening from Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, where he was stationed as a nurse with the 217th Medical Evacuation Unit since shortly after Christmas.

Now that he is home, Mendoza said his only plan so far is "to get some rest."

His first night home, Mendoza was expected to spend time with his parents, three sisters, a brother, relatives and friends, his mother said.

"We are going to cook fish for him," Mrs. Munoz said shortly before her son's arrival. While in Saudi Arabia, Mendoza had written home for tuna and sardines, Mrs. Munoz said.

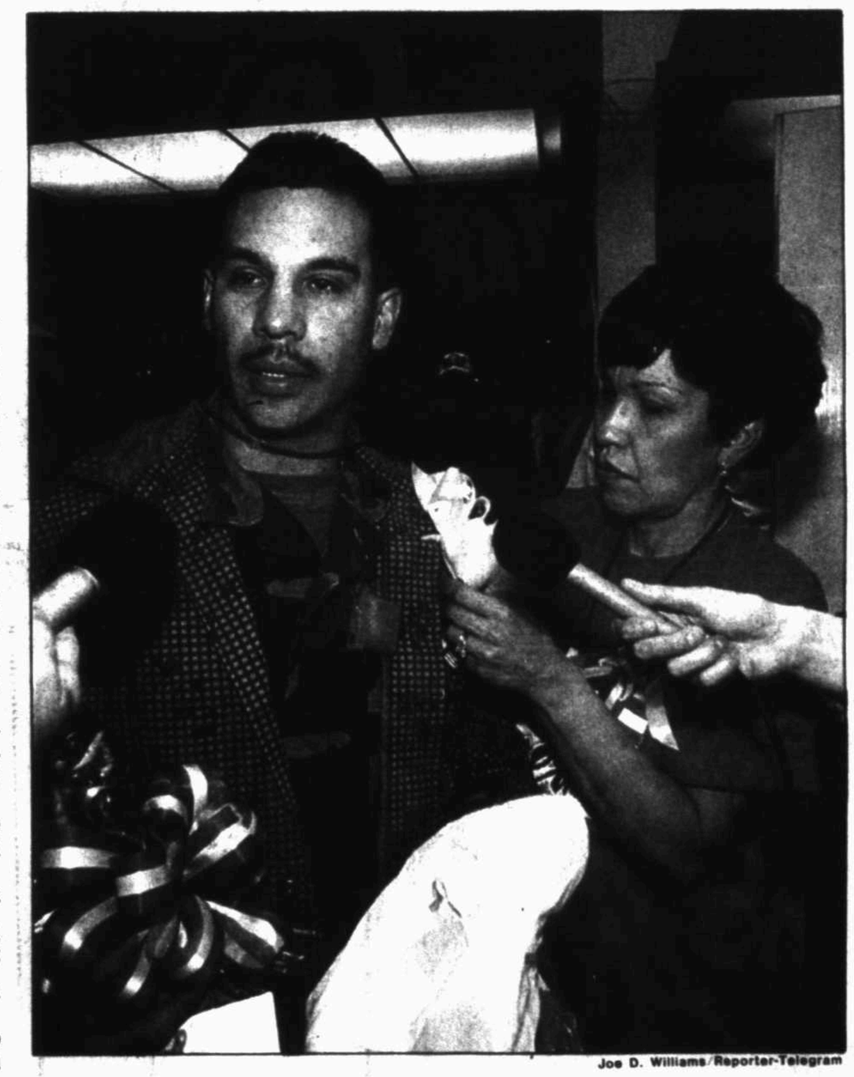

Mrs. Munoz expressed gratitude that her son made it home safely.

"You can't help but worry," she said.

To help ease the worry during their son's absence, Mrs. Munoz and her husband, Jesse Munoz, formed a support group at the San Juan Catholic Church for family of Desert Storm personnel. The Munoz's also were part of the Red Cross support group.

"Because we started the (church) support group, I feel like we are being rewarded," Jesse Munoz said. "I think our prayers were answered."

Mendoza has been in the service since he graduated from Midland High School 10 years ago, Munoz said. Mendoza, stationed at Fort Sam Houston, had concluded his service time in December, but his stint was extended by the government.

Bush warns Iraq to stop cease-fire violations

■ Iraqi helicopter attacks on rebel positions become particularly intense, administration officials say.

N.Y. Times News Service

OTTAWA — President Bush accused Iraq on Wednesday of violating conditions of the Persian Gulf cease-fire by using helicopter gunships to put down insurrections by anti-government rebels. He said there would be no permanent end to the war until the Iraqi combat operations ceased.

Bush said he was "warning them: do not do this." By raising the issue, Bush further involved himself on the side of the various anti-government factions in Iraq battling against forces loyal to Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

That also means U.S. military forces now occupying part of southern Iraq will stay until the rebellion issue and others are resolved.

In Washington, administration officials said the military had been monitor-

Expert: Election boundary shifts are inevitable

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

A redistricting expert Wednesday told local governmental officials that election boundary changes here are likely because Midland's population has grown and shifted.

Del Taebel, a Dallas-based demographer, was hired by the city, school district, county and hospital district to use 1990 census data to conduct a redistricting study.

Taebel had a hand in drawing high school boundaries in Midland and lines for city council representation.

Meeting with city councilmen Wednesday, Taebel said a westward population growth likely will mean altering all single-member district election boundaries.

"You're going to have to redistrict," he said. "You're not going to meet any of OPEC question: Is U.S. pulling strings?

By Sally Jacobson
Associated Press writer

GENEVA — The question hung over this week's OPEC meeting but was never quite answered.

Would the United States, which gave crucial military support to Saudi Arabia in the Gulf War, now wield influence over OPEC's price-setting policies?

"Good question," Sadek Boussena, president of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, said Wednesday. Boussena, the Algerian mines minister, was recently accused by Saudi Arabia of implying just such a thing.

But if it was true, there was no such suggestion from Saudi Arabia's influential oil minister, Hisham Nazer.

"We have a target price," he responded coolly when asked on Sunday evening whether Washington would help set the group's reference price of $21 a barrel.

OPEC ministers just wrapped up their first meeting since the end of the Persian Gulf conflict, during which oil prices fluctuated from as high as $40 a barrel to as low as the teens.

They decided Tuesday to make voluntary cuts of 5 percent in output in the April-June quarter, in an effort to stabilize prices. The new arrangement set a production level of 22.3 million barrels a day in the second quarter, down from

'Dead' man surrenders; wife, friend commit suicide

By Michelle Locke
Associated Press writer

SAN FRANCISCO — The questions started piling up on a May morning in 1987 when an empty kayak belonging to Marine Staff Sgt. Willie Dean Williams washed up along the coast near the town of Mendocino. No body was found.

Four years later, Williams sits in a brig, although he's legally dead.

Why did his wife and best friend, who had moved in together, commit suicide in separate incidents?

Why had Williams taken out hundreds of thousands of dollars in insurance shortly before his apparent drowning? Why did his wife hurriedly have him declared dead and collect some of the insurance?

Why did his friend regularly send him money after he disappeared?

Sgt. Phil Pintane, a Mendocino County sheriff's detective, is trying to find the answers.

"There is probably a conspiracy, but exactly who all was involved in it we don't know," Pintane said this week, a few days after Williams surrendered to the FBI in Kalamazoo, Mich., where authorities had tracked him down.

"Before, we had an open case of a missing person," Pintane said. "Now that we have found him our investigation is now leading into conspiracy and also insurance fraud."

Williams surrendered March 6, the day after a segment of the nationally syndicated TV program "A Current Affair" brought attention to his case.

His revival posed some problems for the Marines. "Until he shows up as alive and well on our computer, he's a nonentity," said Gunnery Sgt. Mary-Julia Haagenson, a spokeswoman for the Marines in San Francisco.

Williams, 36, is being held as a deserter at Treasure Island Naval Station in San Francisco Bay, but must be legally declared alive before any action can start. He refuses to see visitors, Haagenson said.

The case had been shaky from the start, with reports that a shadowy figure had been seen running from the kayak.

"And, of course, the body was never found," Pintane said. "These cases don't go away. They remain on our books."

The first break came in July.

THURSDAY NEWS WATCH

Soviet oil crisis

MOSCOW — Oil industry officials warned President Mikhail S. Gorbachev Wednesday that the Soviet Union faces a looming energy crisis, the news agency Tass reported. Lawmakers and officials from the huge Tyumen oil region in western Siberia told Gorbachev that the Soviet Union, a major exporter, will have to start importing oil soon. They said their oil and gas deliveries will fall about 17 million to 18 million metric tons short of the state order in 1991, Tass said. "Within a year or two we will have to buy oil abroad," said Yuri Vershinin, chairman of the Tyumen Oil and Gas Association.

Beating victim

LOS ANGELES — As a doctor disclosed Wednesday that police beating victim Rodney King suffered nine skull fractures, Los Angeles police officers closed ranks behind embattled Chief Daryl F. Gates, labeling those who have demanded his ouster over the assault a "lynch mob." New details about the extent of King's injuries emerged as a county grand jury concluded its third day of a closed-door inquiry into the videotaped beating of the black motorist by three white police officers, who are expected to be indicted on felony charges. At the same time, a federal grand jury reportedly began issuing subpoenas as part of a civil rights probe into the March 3 incident.

Face watch

The face of Elizabeth Dole, who recently took up her duties as director of the American Red Cross, is looking particularly line-free these days. A Washington source told the New York Post that at a recent White House party, "Every photographer was convinced she'd had a face lift. She was looking unusually taut." Dole's press representative was quick with an explanation. "Mrs. Dole purchased a big treadmill and she's on it an hour every night. She took off a couple of months between jobs and she's lost 15 pounds." Equally quick with a similar explanation was Sylvester Stallone's publicist, after the star showed up at a New York night spot recently, looking "very young and chiseled." Stallone "has had nothing done to his face whatsoever," said his representative. "He just works out every day and takes very good care of himself."

VIOLATIONS: Bush expands purpose of conditions

ing Iraqi helicopter attacks on rebel positions for days and that such attacks became particularly intense Wednesday, especially against Kurdish forces in the north.

Bush, accusing Iraq of a "violation," was referring to an unpublicized agreement won by Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf in his meeting with Iraqi commanders March 3 after a cease-fire was declared.

In that agreement, American officials said Wednesday, Iraq pledged not to use any of its combat aircraft, including helicopters, during the period before a permanent cease-fire was established, after which all allied forces would leave Iraq.

That condition originally was intended to reduce the possibility of conflicts with allied aircraft operating in southern Iraq and to protect allied forces from any air assault by the Iraqis. But Bush clearly expanded the purpose of the requirement Wednesday by applying it to Baghdad's military operations against rebels.

Bush's warning, which came during an Ottawa news conference after he met with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, seemed to toughen significantly the American position toward signing the permanent cease-fire.

It expanded conditions set by the coalition to protect allied forces and disengage the hostile armies to include the struggle for power in Iraq, potentially opening a significant new wedge into Iraqi internal affairs.

Bush's remarks could have been intended to lay a predicate for the United States to say it must have satisfaction on the internal situation in Iraq before it can agree to withdraw its army from the occupation zone in the southern part of that country.

Bush's warning also seemed to widen American efforts to restrict Saddam's freedom to combat the insurrection in his country. Last week, after intelligence agencies reported Baghdad's military was preparing to use poison gas against rebels, Washington sent Baghdad a stern warning not to do so and officials said the Pentagon prepared contingency plans for retaliatory air strikes against Iraqi military units that used chemical weapons.

In a written statement issued in Ottawa, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, "Iraq has to convince the world that its designs, both against the international community and its own population, are not military and aggressive."

Bush, who has said he is not seeking to overthrow Saddam, has made it clear he would like the Iraqi people to do so on their own. Wednesday, he said it "is impossible to have normalized relations with Iraq while Saddam Hussein is in there."

But at the same time, Bush asserted he did not want to destabilize Iraq and leave a "power vacuum" in the region. Although he prefaced his remarks by saying he had no indication Iran intended to do so, he warned Tehran not to try to seize any Iraqi territory during the current unrest.

"That would be the worst thing they could do," he said.

Asked at the news conference about progress toward a permanent end to the fighting, 10 days after Iraqi and allied commanders met in the desert to set conditions for turning the current suspension of fighting into a more formal cease-fire, Bush said "there are some details to be worked out."

He said those included the return of all prisoners taken by Iraq, apparently including Kuwaitis detained in the final days of the war, and an accounting for all allied soldiers now listed as missing.

"I must confess to some concern about the use of Iraqi helicopters in violation of what our understanding was," Bush said. "That's one that has got to be resolved before we're going to have any permanence to the cease-fire."

"There are still some very important things to be taken care of," Bush said later, "including the fact that these helicopters should not be used for combat purposes inside Iraq."

Administration officials in Washington said the Iraqi military was continuing helicopter attacks on rebels near the southern city of Najaf, but that such attacks were particularly intense Wednesday in the three main northern Kurdish cities of Kirkuk, Sulamainiya and Irbil, which are far from the allied front lines.

A few hours after Bush spoke at the news conference, Fitzwater issued his written statement to explain Bush's warning to Iraq.

"Saddam Hussein has a track record of using his military against his own population," the statement said. "We have received information over the past week that he has been using helicopters in an effort to quell civil disturbances against his regime. We are obviously very concerned about this."

At the news conference, Bush also addressed his effort to capitalize on the wartime coalition to press for solutions to the Middle East's political problems.

the requirements for district size and (racial) distribution. There's not much deciding on whether you should or should not."

Taebel, who met later in the day with county officials, gave a tentative outline of a redistricting process that will last from this month to at least October. He was expected to meet with hospital and school officials today.

Detailed census data showing the city's ethnic distribution is expected by March 31, he said. Using that data, he and local governmental officials have until May 1 to produce redistricting options, he said.

Public hearings on proposed boundary changes will be held during May, with a final plan filed with the U.S. Justice Department by July 1, Taebel said.

The department will have until Aug. 31 to review the plan, he said, but the deadline could be extended if federal officials request more information on proposed changes.

He said all redistricting plans must go through the U.S. Justice Department, regardless of whether an entity is under court-ordered single-member representation. Federal law also requires entities to review their election boundaries after each census, he said.

It is important when redistricting to avoid diluting racial voting strength and breaking up neighborhoods, Taebel said.

Another goal will be to align city, county, hospital and school voting boundaries as closely as possible, he said. However, that will be difficult because the school district, for example, has seven voting districts while the city has four, he said.

Taebel said it also is important to make sure residences of officials elected to single-member seats are not put into another district.

He said most Midland voting districts will retain their northern and southern boundaries, while western boundaries likely will be placed farther west.

"There won't be massive redrawing of lines," Taebel said. "The shift is going to be east to west, but the district would look pretty much the same when you finish the process."

Entities have the option of forming citizen committees to oversee the redrawing process. The county Monday named members of its citizens committee.

Councilmen said Wednesday that they prefer not to have a committee.

"If you form a citizens committee, you have to delegate your authority to them to decide the boundaries between the districts," Mayor Carroll Thomas said. "The councilmen feel like that's their responsibility."

Thomas said great measures will be taken to prevent alienating those elected to single-member positions.

"That's a valid consideration in drawing district lines," he said. "We don't want to draw somebody out of their district."

STRINGS: Will the U.S. now wield influence?

average production of 23.4 million barrels.

Saudi Arabia, the world's largest crude exporter, refused deeper cuts. Some producers worried that the group's high output could mean a price crash in the coming months.

But Iraq and Kuwait, their oil industries damaged by the war, are not expected to pump much, if any, oil in the next few months.

"We don't see why (prices) should collapse," Nazer said. "How can oil prices collapse when there is a restriction in supply?"

Analysts doubt there will be collusion between American and Saudi officials over crude prices, now that the war is over.

But they do think the OPEC nations and the United States share a common interest in having prices that are neither too high nor too low. Analysts see $18 to $21 a barrel as acceptable to both sides.

"Neither can accept a price that is too high and neither can accept a price that is too low — but for different reasons," said Peter Bogin, associate director for oil markets at Cambridge Energy Research Associates in Paris.

For OPEC, low prices mean smaller revenues for their financially strapped economies.

But if prices go too high, consumers look elsewhere for cheaper fuel, and other producers try to move into the cartel's territory.

For the United States, the world's largest importer of crude oil, high prices hurt consumers and the economy. Some believe surging oil prices after the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in August helped tip the economy into recession.

But prices that are too low pinch the American oil industry. Analysts note President George Bush's new energy strategy calls for expanding domestic crude production.

"We tried to convince our colleagues a lower ceiling was better," Boussena said. "We couldn't."

REAPPEARS: Case had been shaky from start

(From 1A)

Mendocino County officials received word that a body that had been found fit Williams' description. That turned out to be false, but led them to go back and check records.

That led them to two things: A change-of-address was filed on Williams' California driver's license in 1989, and JoAnne Williams had petitioned County Superior Court to declare her husband dead just three months after his disappearance.

Deputies tried to interview Mrs. Williams, then living in Williams' hometown of Willits with Chuck Phillips, whom Pintane described as Williams' best friend. But they wouldn't return calls and she got a lawyer, who asked authorities not to harass her.

Then, on Jan. 31, Phillips shot himself, leaving behind some Michigan telephone numbers that helped lead investigators to Williams.

Earlier this month, Mrs. Williams killed herself by rigging a hose from the exhaust pipe of her vehicle to its interior. She left a note to be run in the local newspaper, thanking friends "for standing behind me and believing in me. I appreciate it so much. I'm sorry to leave you like this."

Mrs. Williams' lawyer, Bernie DePaoli, says his client was innocent of any wrongdoing.

"She just kept feeling more and more unfairly accused," he said. "She was convinced (Williams) was dead right up to the very end."

But investigators are trying to figure out what happened to Williams' insurance policies, which may have totaled $500,000, Pintane said. Mrs. Williams had cashed in at least $300,000, according to Navy information, Haagenson said.

DePaoli said bank records show Phillips started sending $1,000 a month to Williams in August 1987, but he had run out of money.

Little is known about Williams' life in Michigan, where he had married a nurse and was working as a machinist using the name Jim Harris, said FBI agent John Anthony in Detroit. The agent said he did not know the status of the wife.

Mrs. Williams' two children, a 9-year-old girl and 12-year-old boy, are staying with relatives. Her will named a friend guardian.

ty colleges. "The two complement each other rather than compete with each other," he said.

"If I thought for one minute this institution was going to hurt the junior college, I'd be against it, but I think both institutions will be thriving within five years," he said.

Watkins also said that Louis Beecherl, chairman of the board of regents of the University of Texas System, supported the expansion.

Rep. Tom Uher, D-Bay City, said that Permian Basin boosters told lawmakers, including him, in 1969, when UTPB was created, that they never would ask for downward expansion, but Watkins replied that times have changed and the expansion is a recognition that the upper-level plan did not work.

Among the more than two dozen UTPB supporters were Ector County Judge Jim Jordan, Odessa Mayor Lorraine Bonner and Ray Stoker of Odessa, who Tuesday was named chairman of the state highway commission.

The group presented resolutions from 13 cities and nine counties in support of the expansion. Midland City Council and Midland County Commissioners Court were not sought, in recognition of the long-standing grudge between the two cities over the university, Ms. Bonner said. But she added that she believed the man on the street in Midland also supports the expansion.

"This is not an Odessa issue or a Midland issue, but a Permian Basin issue," she said, noting that the two cities have made major strides in the past few years, such as getting Odessa representation on the Midland Airport Board.

Texas Higher Education Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth said that the Coordinating Board staff recommended against further expansion of upper-level schools, but he agreed with Watkins that the board should not be asked to review the change after the Legislature passes the bill.

"We don't believe the Coordinating Board ought to be in the position of vetoing legislation that has been passed by the Legislature," Ashworth said.

Opponents included the Texas Junior College Teachers Association, the Texas Public Community and Junior College Association and Jess Parish, president of Midland College.

They said that the Coordinating Board staff, a special interim report of the Higher Education Committee and a Texas Research League report all concluded there should be no further expansion of upper-level institutions, particularly in view of the strained state budget.

Parish said that because he has announced his retirement in five months, he has less of a professional stake in the battle. But he still believes the UTPB expansion would duplicate efforts at junior colleges in Midland, Odessa and Big Spring.

"Nothing will be offered by UTPB that couldn't be offered by one of the three community colleges in the area," he said, adding that the expansion would erode the humanities and liberal arts programs at the community colleges.

Parish said he supports UTPB, but he disagreed that there was anything wrong with its relatively low enrollment of 2,200. "It's serving the purpose it was designed to serve," he said.

Watkins said he is hopeful he can get the House to pass the bill again, so that Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, Senate Finance Committee chairman, can get the bill through the Senate.

Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, and Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, who represents Midland, remain opposed to the expansion.

Baker holds extended talks with Syrian President Assad

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Secretary of State James A. Baker III held extended talks Wednesday night with Syrian President Hafez Assad on a U.S. formula to bring peace to the Middle East by having Israel give up territory in exchange for Arab recognition.

Nearing the end of a five-nation trip to the Middle East, Baker also discussed American hostages in Lebanon and a plan to guard the Persian Gulf oil fields with an alliance of Egyptian, Syrian and American troops.

The session in Assad's office completed Baker's consultations with the key figures in the Arab-Israeli dispute.

But he added Lebanese Foreign Minister Fares Bouez to his schedule for this morning before flying to Moscow to measure the situation in the restive Soviet Union.

The American and other Western hostages are believed to be held in Lebanon by Hezbollah, an Iranian-backed group, and Baker wants to get the latest word from the Beirut government on the situation.

He also appealed to Assad for help, but U.S. officials said Syria's intervention may not be enough to gain the hostages' freedom. Iran, they said, holds the key.

Still, the United States has no direct relations with Tehran and depends largely on intermediaries such as Assad on behalf of the hostages.

The officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said they had no evidence of a break in the situation, but President Bush and Baker have vowed to persist, hoping the postwar climate in the region might produce results.

After the Baker-Assad meeting, which ran seven hours, Assad spokesman Jibrane Kourieh said in a statement that the two sides stressed peace in the Mideast should be "just and comprehensive" and should be given "suitable impetus based on the two U.N. resolutions."

That was a reference to resolutions adopted at the end of the 1967 and 1973 Mideast wars. They call for withdrawal from occupied territories — without saying all of the territory — and the right of all states in the region to live within secure borders.

Baker has told reporters traveling with him that he made no specific demands of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir in their meeting Tuesday. But Israeli sources said early Wednesday in Jerusalem that he stressed a need for compliance with the U.N. Security Council resolutions.

As for the hostages, Kourieh said simply that Assad and Baker reviewed "efforts being displayed in their behalf."

Meanwhile, Bush said he was encouraged by reports from Baker on his separate meetings Tuesday with Israeli leaders and a group of Palestinians.

"I think that the secretary feels that the climate is now better than it has been in a long time for making progress" in the region, Bush said in Ottawa, Canada, first stop on a diplomatic journey to discuss the postwar gulf with the leaders of Canada, France and Britain.

"I haven't seen anything pessimistic coming out of the Baker reports," Bush said. "There is some kind of change," he said, following the war in which the army of one of Israel's most threatening enemies was vanquished.

In other gulf comments, Bush said it would be "impossible to have normalized relations" with Iraq as long as Saddam Hussein remained in power. Still, he said, he was concerned about instability in the region because of internal unrest in Iraq.

Bush also cautioned Iran against trying to take any Iraqi territory.

A day before Baker's arrival in Moscow, Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Vitaly Churkin said that Gorbachev had sent messages to Arab leaders outlining Soviet views on security in the Persian Gulf and soliciting their views. Churkin said the messages were sent to "a wide range of Arab states," but he would not list them nor say whether Saddam was among them.

In other gulf developments Wednesday:

■ In Iraq, demonstrators in the northern oil city of Mosul stormed two prisons and released 4,000 political prisoners, according to Kurdish leaders who claimed to control almost 75 percent of Iraqi Kurdistan. An opposition leader in London said Kurdish forces had surrounded Mosul.

■ In New York, Kuwait's ambassador to the United Nations said Iraq's occupation and plunder of Kuwait may cost the emirate up to $100 billion in damages. Ambassador Mohammad Abulhasan added that the estimate did not include the cost of oil burning at some 600 wells sabotaged by the retreating Iraqi army.

■ In Kuwait City, the Ministry of Information said the ruling emir would return home today after seven months in exile, and more than two weeks after his country was liberated from Iraqi forces.

■ In Washington, the Army presented Purple Hearts and Prisoner of War medals to five former POWs, praising them for paying "a steep price in the name of freedom."

House approves additional $30 billion S&L bailout

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Wednesday night approved a compromise worked out with the Bush administration to pour an additional $30 billion into the savings and loan bailout.

The key 213-197 vote came 24 hours after the House, rebelling against leaders of both parties, rejected four separate proposals for financing the bailout. After accepting the compromise, the House then passed the amended bill by a 192-181 margin.

Negotiators will work out minor differences between the bill and a version passed by the Senate last week.

"It's the easiest thing politically to say 'damn the S&L scandal,'" said Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D-Texas, chairman of the Banking Committee, in pleading for support of the compromise. "But we have no choice."

Failure to continue paying for the bailout, he said, would bring disaster and "invite a run on our financial institutions."

"If there has been one action that has outraged Americans from Maine to California, it has been the S&L fiasco," said Rep. Bernard Sanders, I-Vt. "I'll be damned if I will vote for a bill that will stick it to the working people" to pay for a bailout they did not cause, he said.

The major gain for liberals in the bill was permission for the agency to sell single-family homes to low-income families without regard to any minimum purchase price. Such sales would have been restricted in the bipartisan version rejected Tuesday night.

The compromise omitted other provisions backed by liberals, including a goal of having 25 percent of the contracts awarded by the bailout agency, the Resolution Trust Corp., earmarked for companies owned by women and minorities.

Instead of that provision, the compromise simply requires the agency to make public reports on its performance in hiring and contracting with minorities and women.

It also sets goals for the corporation in selling real estate and other assets inherited from thrifts, and in managing insolvent thrifts. The agency would be required to report on its progress before asking for more money.

The compromise was worked out by Gonzalez, Rep. Chalmers Wylie of Ohio, senior Republican on the Banking Committee; House Speaker Thomas Foley; Republican Leader Robert Michel and Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady.

The purpose of the money is to protect depositors in failed S&Ls, but Congress' balkiness at providing it does not immediately threaten deposits in the 192 insolvent thrifts under government control.

The trust corporation typically raises cash to meets depositors' demands by selling seized institutions' most readily marketable assets. If that fails, it has a $5 billion line of credit with the Treasury. It also has the option of asking the Federal Home Loan Bank or the Federal Reserve systems for an emergency loan.

In the long run, if Congress continued to withhold funds, it would call into question the so-far iron-clad federal pledge to protect deposits up to the $100,000 insurance limit.

The practical effect of the wrangling is to increase the cost of the bailout as insolvent institutions continue to pile up operating losses.

Jogger case trials complete

NEW YORK (NYT) — Saying that he was sorry that the law prevented him from imposing a tougher penalty, the judge in the Central Park jogger case on Wednesday sentenced the last defendant in the case to one and a half to four and a half years in prison.

The judge, Justice Thomas B. Galligan of State Supreme Court in Manhattan, said the defendant, Steven Lopez, 17, deserved a tougher sentence because he was "one of the most vicious" of the six youths charged in the 1989 rape and beating of a woman who had been jogging in the park.

Galligan said that although Lopez participated in a "brutally sadistic rampage" on several people in the park on April 19, 1989, he could only be sentenced for robbing one jogger, John Loughlin, because of a plea agreement.

He said that Lopez's sentencing was "the final chapter of a cowardly attack that will continue to live in the hearts and minds of New Yorkers."

Suspects plead innocent

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Three men charged with trying to blow up chemical storage tanks in an alleged insurance scheme pleaded innocent Wednesday.

The three were indicted Tuesday by a federal grand jury.

After the Feb. 4 discovery of six pipe bombs on two tanks, police evacuated a mile radius around the tanks while the bombs were disarmed and removed.

Charged were Charles E. Gresham Jr., 57, of Ellicott City, Md.; Joseph W. Openshaw, 36, of St. Johns, Ariz.; and Cecil H. Ross, 31, of Glendale, Ariz.

Federal investigators said Gresham, whose company treated and disposed of hazardous waste, was unable to find anyone to buy 2 millioon gallons of a sodium sulfide solution he had stored in one of the tanks he leased. Gresham was behind more than $60,000 in storage fees, an FBI affidavit said.

The FBI became involved in the case because the bombs were found just 2½ weeks after the start of the Persian Gulf War. The threat of international terrorism had this military community, home of the Norfolk Naval Base, in a heightened state of alert.

The affidavit said the three expected to net a $1 million profit by blowing up the tank.

Dennis the Menace is 40

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Dennis Mitchell, the kid with the cowlick, the slingshot in his back pocket and that mischievous smirk on his freckled face, is forever 5½. But his comic strip turns 40 Thursday.

"I think I ought to go out and buy him a beer," Dennis the Menace creator Hank Ketcham said Wednesday.

Cookies and milk would better suit Dennis, who knows just where to find such a treat, tearing up fussy neighbor Mr. Wilson's garden on his meandering way to kind Mrs. Wilson's table, with shaggy dog Ruff tagging along.

"I think he's a mirror image for many readers, who see the same things going on around them every day," Ketcham said of his strip's longevity and popularity.

Using a gasoline credit card has always been convenient. But you've almost always paid extra for it. That's because the credit price for gasoline is usually a few cents higher than the cash price. Unless, of course, you buy your gasoline from your nearby Chevron station. Because as of now there's just one price for gasoline at participating Chevron stations, whether you pay cash or use your credit card. So when you fill up next time don't worry about pulling out your credit card to pay for it, 'cause at Chevron you won't pay extra for credit.

Congress should determine status

Congress has all but sidetracked for another two years the question of whether to endorse a plebiscite among Puerto Ricans on whether they prefer statehood, independence or "enhanced" commonwealth status — most of the powers of a state but without congressional representation or the right to vote in presidential elections.

Such delay is unfair and insensitive. Without a clear signal from Capitol Hill, a plebiscite should be little more than a public opinion poll — and polls already show Puerto Ricans to be narrowly divided between statehood and continued commonwealth status, with independence trailing badly.

A major roadblock is congressional reluctance to commit in advance to accepting the Puerto Ricans' choice once they've made it. A Senate committee has watered down such a commitment under pressure from those in Congress who want to keep control over the island — on U.S. terms.

There also are partisan concerns. Many Republicans fear that Puerto Rico as a state would send nearly all Democrats — two senators and five or six representatives — to Congress, reinforcing the GOP's minority status. Some in Congress object to the idea of a Spanish-speaking 51st state with its "separate culture."

The strongest legitimate argument against statehood is economic: The special tax status that allows Puerto Ricans, and U.S. companies based there, to pay lower taxes than on the mainland, would vanish, if not immediately then over a transitional period.

If many firms pulled out, economic growth would turn to recession, an already too-high 14 percent jobless rate would increase, and the federal government might have to lay out as much as $17 billion more annually for things like Medicaid, food stamps, welfare and supplemental security payments.

However strong the economic arguments for one status or another, what's compelling is the American commitment to the right of self-determination — in Puerto Rico's case, either to opt out of the U.S. system or, more likely, to remain in it, as a state or as a commonwealth.

Puerto Ricans — like Latvians and Lithuanians, whose claims to sovereignty most Americans endorse — ought to be allowed to make that choice, then to negotiate with Congress on how to achieve that status.

To avoid entangling this issue in the 1992 presidential election campaign, Congress needs to decide before the summer recess whether to put the question to Puerto Rican voters this year.

ANOTHER VIEW

Redouble efforts to free hostages

Now that Kuwait has been liberated, the United States should redouble its diplomatic efforts to free the 14 Western hostages, including six Americans, who are still being held in Lebanon.

The potential prospects for their release are better than at any time since the hostage-taking first began eight years ago. Accordingly, President Bush has directed Secretary of State James Baker to press the issue with Syrian President Hafez Assad in Damascus.

Assad, who wants to improve his standing in the world community, has said he will do everything within his power to secure the release of all foreigners being held against their will. With 40,000 Syrian troops in Lebanon, Assad holds enormous sway with the Lebanese government and with the kidnappers as well.

Iran, however, is the most important player in the hostage crisis. The Islamic fundamentalists who hold the 12 Westerners are believed to have close ties with senior officials in Tehran. If these officials were to give the word, the hostages might be released. Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani is thought to favor their release but has reportedly been thwarted by hardliners in Iran's ruling council.

Meanwhile, the hostages and their families persevere. American journalist Terry Anderson has been in captivity the longest. The chief Middle East correspondent of the Associated Press was kidnapped by pro-Iranian zealots March 16, 1985. Thomas Sutherland, dean of agriculture at the American University of Beirut, was seized three months later. In 1986, Joseph Cicippio, acting comptroller of the university, and Edward Austin Tracey, a writer, were taken captive. American professors Alann Steen and Jesse Turner were kidnapped the following year.

Iran's desire to re-establish economic and diplomatic contacts with the United States and other Western nations was underscored by its neutral stance during the Persian Gulf war. Syria wants to capitalize on its role in helping to defeat Iraq.

Both countries now have an opportunity to do a great deal of good for themselves by getting the hostages out of Lebanon. Secretary Baker should reiterate this to Assad and make sure the message is relayed to Tehran.

INS wisely canceled meeting at resort

WASHINGTON — Sunny coastal Georgia was supposed to be the site of a conference last month for the federal government's top immigration officers. But the conference is now a casualty of the Persian Gulf War.

Anderson

Officials at the Immigration and Naturalization Service canceled the get-together fearing it would look like they were "living it up" at the beach "while half a million U.S. servicemen are eating sand in the desert."

That wording comes from an internal INS memo dated Jan. 18, two days after the allies began bombing Baghdad. The memo was written to INS Commissioner Gene McNary by his press information office. It raised several questions about how the INS would look — spending more than $100,000 on a conference at an island resort when it can't even afford adequate detention facilities for the illegal aliens it rounds up.

The memo also raised concerns about senior INS managers being away from their jobs during a national crisis, and said the INS couldn't take "any more 'hits' now" after a string of bad publicity. The conference, according to the INS, was "a ready-made Jack Anderson column."

Some apparently agreed, and shared the memo with us. So we asked the INS more about the conference that never was. INS spokesman Duke Austin told our associate Scott Sleek that the conference would have been held at the King of Prince Hotel on St. Simon's Island off the southern Georgia coast. Nearby Brunswick, Ga., is the home of a law enforcement training center for INS inspectors and other federal law enforcement officers. Austin said it didn't cost the INS anything to cancel the conference.

The decision to call off the meetings is a sign of the changing climate in Washington. Opulence in government isn't as stylish as it used to be during the Reagan years. Bureaucrats have long enjoyed traveling on the taxpayers' dime, but the war and its aftermath have put a damper on that.

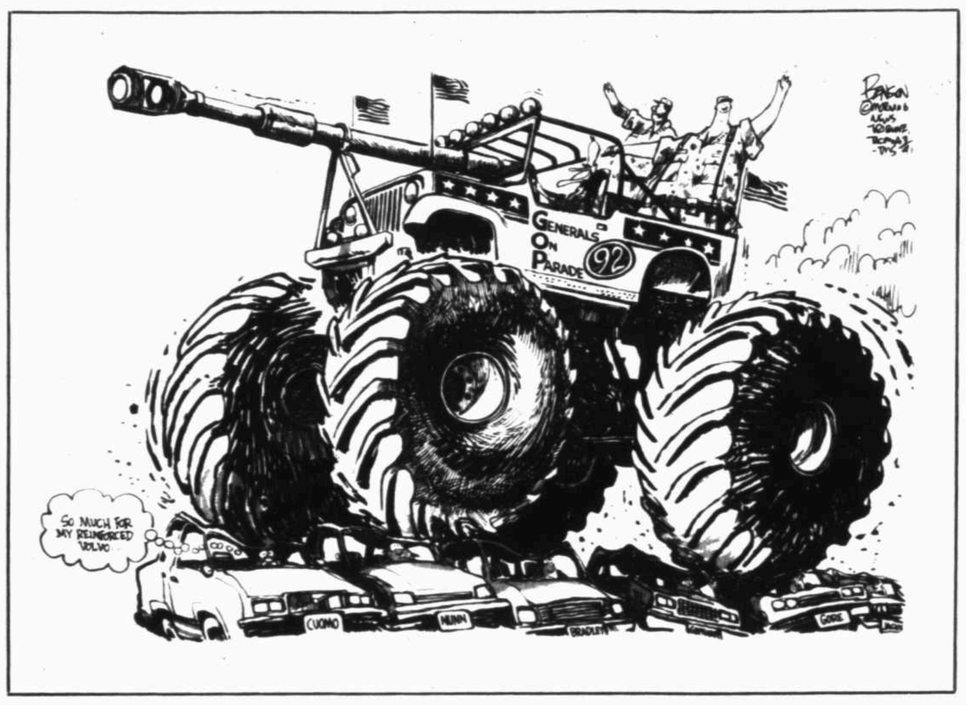

The INS has more reason than most government agencies to worry about appearances. Investigative reports from the General Accounting Office have painted an unflattering picture of the way the INS is run.

The GAO found weak and inconsistent management at the INS. Personnel procedures were found to be so lax that many INS inspectors were said to be earning up to $20,000 a year in overtime. The financial operations were projected by the GAO to lose millions of dollars in revenues. Attorney General Richard Thornburgh was so upset about the findings that he appointed a special review committee to oversee a shakeup at the INS.

The INS wisely concluded that the GAO findings aren't the sort of thing that the top INS management should be discussing poolside at the taxpayers' expense.

IMPOLITIC REMARKS — White House sources say President Bush is annoyed with Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Arens. At a White House meeting, Arens implied that the Israeli air force could have done a better job than the Americans did at destroying Scud missile launch sites in Iraq. Arens also made other remarks that Bush thought showed a lack of appreciation for the American effort to stop the Scud attacks. That makes two Israeli officials who have irked Bush. The president sees Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir as stubborn, inflexible and a barrier to peace in the Middle East.

Non-puffers win their rights even in prisons

There is good news from the West. A federal appeals court recently ruled that a convicted murderer, doing life in a Nevada prison, was correct when he claimed in a suit that a cellmate's smoking was cruel and unusual punishment.

Buchwald

The court served notice on all prisons that they had to set up separate but equal facilities for puffers and non-puffers, just as they do in the toniest restaurants.

Secondhand smoking has always been a problem for people locked up, but so far prison authorities have refused to pay any attention to the complaints.

The state of Nevada and its attorney general have argued that once you give in to prisoners like William McKinney who complain about smoking, pretty soon you'll have to deal with gripes on everything, including the quality of prison wine.

But now, like most states, Nevada may be forced to comply with the court of appeals' decision.

Unfortunately, the judges did not spell out how the ruling should be administered.

Joseph Kleinbaum, Butt Professor at the Stonewall School of Jurisprudence, said, "The worst part of the decision is that now when prisoners are sentenced, we will have to ask them whether they prefer a smoking or non-smoking institution."

"What a mess!" I told him.

"My question is, since we know that smoking shortens your life, should a judge mete out a lesser sentence to someone who uses cigarettes than to someone who doesn't?"

"If I was on the bench, I'd give secondary smokers a pardon just because they've suffered at the hands of those who don't give a damn about polluting the air. Why not solve the problem by putting all smokers into solitary confinement?" I suggested.

"That would be unconstitutional. You can't punish people for smoking – at least not yet. The state has to provide places where smokers can do time even if it costs the taxpayers a bundle."

"Do smokers tend to be more criminal than non-smokers?"

"We don't have the figures on that, but we do know that smokers (ital) look (unital) more criminal than non-smokers."

I then asked, "How are the tobacco people handling the appeals court decision?"

"They're mad as hell. Prisoners are among their best customers, and they even use cigarettes as currency. The tobacco industry says, 'If forcing non-smokers to share cells with smokers is cruel and unusual punishment, then what's wrong with cruel and unusual government?' "

"I would hate to be in a prison with nothing but smokers," I said.

"The law is the law," he replied. "Maybe if a non-smoking criminal knew that he might be sent to a smoking institution, he would think twice about committing a crime."

GEORGE WILL

Failures proliferate when penalties lacking

WASHINGTON — Try this. Slam a sofa cushion with a baseball bat. Now do it 55 more times. Is your arm weary?

Three Los Angeles officers shared the labor of administering to their victim at least 56 blows with clubs, hard enough to cause fillings to fly from his teeth, fracturing his eye socket, smashing his cheek bone, causing a skull concussion and facial nerve damage and breaking a leg. He also suffered burns from an electric stun gun and damage to internal organs. He will never fully recover and may have brain damage.

Will

Daryl Gates, Los Angeles Police Chief, says he is distressed. What distresses others is the fact that he is still chief. Apparently the principle of accountability, never strong in American government, has become attenuated to the point of disappearance.

Gates can be called The Eight Million Dollar Man. Just in the last year that sum has been awarded to victims of Los Angeles police misconduct. There will be two commas in the sum awarded to the man whose savage beating by some of Gates' men was recorded by a citizen with a video camera.

After almost committing homicide, but before they knew they had been filmed, Gates' officers compounded their criminality by filing a report filled with lies. They said the victim had been driving 115 mph in his Hyundai. The manufacturer says that car can't go that fast. The officers wrote that they used force to stop the victim from fighting. Witnesses and the camera say that the victim was passive while being clubbed and stomped for two minutes by the three officers as 12 other officers watched.

So Gates "apologized." Sort of. "In spite of the fact that (the victim) is on parole and a convicted robber, I'd be glad to apologize."

"In spite of"? Gates' ugly intimation is that a police mini-riot is at least a little bit justified if the victim has a bad enough past.

Gates once said that perhaps the reason several blacks have died after being subdued by police choke holds is that blacks are more vulnerable than "normal" people to such holds. (Twenty-seven people have died after such holds during Gates' 13-year tenure.) Gates may not be at his best when thinking and talking, but the problem is not that he is no Pericles. It is that his department is demonstrably guilty of an intolerable level of abuse, much of it resulting from racism.

Gates sees no racial aspect to the videotaped beating. But when three white men club and stomp a black man while a dozen other white men watch, well, people will talk.

They did when Jamaal Wilkes, who is black and a former star with the Lakers, was handcuffed because his auto registration was about to — yes, about to — expire. Joe Morgan, who is black and a Hall of Fame second baseman, was thrown to the ground and handcuffed when cops decided he looked like a drug dealer. (Later the cops said "oops!" and a court said: Pay Mr. Morgan $540,000.)

The latest episode was recorded in the most appalling video of a racial incident since the Alabama police riot at Selma's Edmund Pettus Bridge in 1965. How many beatings and other indignities are being suffered by Los Angeles citizens who are neither famous nor fortunate enough to have their experience of police misconduct videotaped? The burden now rests on the police department to disprove the assumption shared by 54 percent of all L.A. residents, that blacks are particularly subjected to brutality.

Gates has long been a special pin-up of the kind of conservatives who cotton to primitivism, as in his thought that casual drug users should be shot. But he is a special problem for thoughtful conservatives who are having a hard enough time convincing Congress to expand some police powers.

Every policeman present at the scene of that police crime should, at a minimum, be fired. Some, probably most, perhaps all, should go to jail. And what of Gates, who is paid ($168,793, by the way) to produce a police force better than his Los Angeles department is?

Police work is frequently dangerous and even more often unpleasant. It can be desensitizing and demoralizing — literally de-moralizing. It requires special strength of character to do this indispensable work right, day by day and night after night, without succumbing to callousness, disgust and rage.

Most police officers lead lives of heroic resistance to these weaknesses. Minimizing those weaknesses is a test of police leadership. Gates has failed that test too often. His department is illustrating, redundantly, an iron law operating throughout American government and business: When there is no penalty for failure, failures proliferate.

Study: VDTs not linked to miscarriages

N.Y. Times News Service

Computer terminals, which have been linked to various health problems over the last decade, do not cause miscarriages in women who use them, a new study has found.

Directory-assistance operators who used video display terminals had no more miscarriages than did telephone operators who did not use terminals, according to government and private researchers.

Previous studies have linked computer use to miscarriage, eye problems and tendon and nerve damage.

Fears of miscarriages from using computers have centered around the electromagnetic radiation released from video display terminals.

The new study, published in Thursday's issue of The New England Journal of Medicine, found that although directory-assistance operators were exposed to more of a certain type of radiation than other operators, their risk of miscarriage was not increased.

"I think the study is very reassuring for many women who use video display terminals in their work," said researcher Teresa M. Schnorr of the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health in Cincinnati.

Ms. Schnorr said the agency undertook the study because of numerous reports of clusters of miscarriages and birth defects among women computer users.

Nearly 55 million Americans, from grocery clerks and journalists to telephone operators and word processors, use video display terminals, according to the institute.

The new study is the first to actually measure the amount of radiation VDT users were exposed to, said Dr. Maureen Paul, director of the Reproductive Hazard Center at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

The study found that about 15 percent of all operators had miscarriages. Between 10 percent and 20 percent of all pregnancies end in miscarriages, Dr. Paul said.

Ms. Schnorr studied 5,544 operators who worked at two telephone companies in eight southeastern states. There were 882 pregnancies during the study period.

Ms. Schnorr said she is planning another study to determine if VDT use is linked to low birth weight and premature babies.

The first reported miscarriage cluster occurred at the Toronto Star newspaper in 1980, when doctors discovered an increase of birth defects among children born to some computer users, Dr. Paul said. Researchers were not able to link the birth defects to computer use.

In the mid-1980s, a San Francisco study done by Kaiser Permanente, a health maintenance organization, found that women who worked with video terminals more than 20 hours a week had twice the risk of miscarriage than did women who did not use computers, Dr. Paul said.

Eye problems, including double vision, eye strain and fatigue are thought to be linked to the incessant on-off flashing of the screen image, said a spokesperson for the VDT Eye Clinic at the University of California in Berkeley.

Another computer-related health problem, tendon and nerve damage, occurs mainly in the wrists. It is caused by repeatedly striking the keys of a computer keyboard, said Dr. Linda Morse, chief of the division of occupational medicine at Santa Clara Valley Medical Center in California.

The two most common nerve-damage conditions are called tenosynovitis and carpal tunnel syndrome.

They are caused when tendons in the narrow wrist cavity swell and press against a nerve. Treatment ranges from stopping work and wearing a wrist splint to surgery.

Mobs storm Iraqi prisons, free 4,000 political prisoners

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Demonstrators in the northern Iraq oil city of Mosul stormed two prisons and released 4,000 political prisoners Wednesday, according to Kurdish leaders who claimed to control almost 75 percent of Iraqi Kurdistan.

Kurdish forces have surrounded Mosul, according to an opposition leader in London, who said the commanding general of loyalist forces in the far-north provincial town of Aqra had already surrendered to the rebels.

The Kurds said their forces have suffered few casualties in the fighting because there is little resistance in many areas.

■ More world news/ 8B

The reports indicate the Kurdish rebels are saving their strength for a major push on Kirkuk and Dohuk, traditional hotbeds of Kurdish resistance.

Also Wednesday, Iraqi rebel leaders meeting in Beirut pledged Wednesday to set up a transitional government to lead Iraq to democracy if they can topple Saddam Hussein.

Although the Kurdish resistance has yet to engage in major battles, their gains have dwarfed those of Shiite Muslims in the south, who have been hammered by Republican Guard units intent on regaining control of Basra and the holy cities of Najaf and Karbala.

The twin rebellions broke out in the aftermath of the lightning Iraqi rout by allied forces last month.

The sounds of artillery blasting rebel positions in Basra, the nation's second-largest city, could be heard across the border in Iran on Wednesday, according to official Iranian media.

Tehran radio, monitored in Nicosia, also said many people were killed in clashes in Baghdad on Wednesday.

The radio quoted a report from an opposition radio station claiming the brother of the Iraqi information minister had been killed during a popular uprising in a Baghdad suburb. It identified him as Hamid Nussayef Latif, the Baath Party official in charge of the suburb of al-Sora.

Tehran radio, stepping up its own propaganda war against Saddam Hussein, reported again Wednesday that Iraq was using napalm against rebels in Basra. Thousands of Kurds were killed when Baghdad ordered poison gas attacks in the town of Halabja during a 1988 uprising there.

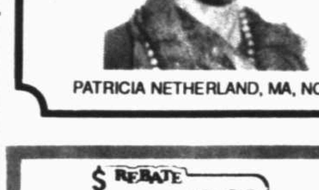

Wednesday's storming of two Mosul prisons reportedly occurred after civil unrest in the town of about 1.2 million residents in Iraq's oil heartland, about 200 miles northwest of Baghdad. The city is surrounded by rebel forces, according to Kurdistan Democratic Party spokesman Jaf Burham in London.

Mosul has a Sunni Arab majority, despite being in the heart of Kurdistan, where ethnic Kurds predominate.

"Nearly 75 percent of Iraqi Kurdistan is being cleared of Saddam's authority," said Hoshyar Zebari, of the Kurdistan Front, in a telephone call from London. "The uprising in the north is escalating."

Tehran radio said the heaviest fighting is near Kirkuk, an oil city 100 miles north of Baghdad.

MC faculty wants more involvement

■ 67 faculty members sign a petition requesting the board consider their input when a new president is hired.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Midland College is preparing to hire a new president and faculty members would like to participate in the process.

In fact, about 67 faculty members have signed a petition presented to board members which suggests ways the faculty could be involved in the selection process.

H.A. Tuck, Midland College spokesperson, said the college's policy manual "clearly states that hiring a president is one of the board's responsibilities."

The petition acknowledges this and states, "We understand that the choice is the Board's responsibility; we would just like to exchange views with board members about the kinds of candidates being considered."

Sylvia Major, an English instructor and one of the petition organizers, said, "We just believe that since it is our president, whom we will have to work with some day, we should have some say in who he or she is."

Ms. Major said faculty members are not asking to be on the hiring committee. "We just want to have input," she said.

The petition includes requests for "various faculty groups to invite individual board members to meetings this spring ... (where) board members could outline criteria for choosing a president, and faculty could ask questions and make comments."

Other requests are for "faculty members to serve on the committee that screens the applicants, have small groups of faculty from each division meet with candidates and that the credentials of

SCS urges converting land to grassland

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The optimum time for grass seeding in Midland County is from late March through early May, noted Mike Rodgers, range conservationist for the United States Soil Conservation Service (SCS) in Midland County.

"The object is to pick up on the spring rain and provide the longest possible growing season," said Rodgers.

Midland County is mostly rangeland.

Of the county's 939 sections or 600,960 acres, about 75 percent is in rangeland. Some 439,650 acres are in grass and brush. Ranchers, including John Braun, are trying to heighten their yield of grass by attacking moisture-hungry mesquite which compete with the grasses for water.

"He (Braun) does a pretty good job on grazing management," Rodgers said. "Now, he's in a program to try to eradicate the mesquite, trying to maximize" his grass yield for his livestock.

Countywide, about 85,750 acres are in cropland for growing mostly cotton, wheat and milo.

Additionally, the SCS is encouraging farmers to sign up for the Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) by returning up to 25 percent of their highly erodible marginal farmland to grassland.

The CRP is the United States Department of Agriculture's (USDA's) nationwide effort to protect the land from further erosion and depletion of nutrients and to build up the topsoil.

By limiting the conversion to 25 percent of highly erodible marginal cropland, the CRP "sort of reduces the economic impact on the community especially where you have the whole county as being qualified as highly erodible," Rodgers said. "If you take 25 percent of the farmland out of production in some of those counties, it's a major impact."

In agreeing to convert part of his highly erodible marginal cropland to rangeland for 10 years, the farmer is paid $40 per acre per year for 10 years by the USDA's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) and for up to 15 years if certain species of trees are planted on the land. Rodgers said he is not certain if pecans are included in the tree planting. "We'll have to wait and see."

Highly erodible marginal cropland acreage is land that does "not make that much contribution to the commodities that grow our food and fiber," Rodgers explained.

"These are cropland fields, and they are fragile," Rodgers said. "Let's put them into a conservation reserve and rent them for 10 years and try to rebuild that top layer of the topsoil and rebuild or replace nutrients that have been robbed out of this fragile land."

And that policy lets "the farmers farm the best land," he said.

"With the upcoming CRP sign-up," said Rodgers, "some 4,100 acres more will be put into grass," which will increase the county's percentage of rangeland from 75 to 79.

Officially, however, the CRP acreage will be carried as cropland — not rangeland.

"The economic impact will be felt by the businesses that supply goods and services to the farmers that were farming these acres," Rodgers said. "The cattle and sheep producers will not benefit because the grass cover cannot be grazed" during the 10- or 15-year contract.

For those years, farmers essentially rent their land to the USDA.

Farmers who sign up for the CRP, which came out of the USDA's 1985 Farm Bill, will be putting up to 25 percent of their marginal cropland in grass and will be splitting the

Bunton sentences smuggler to 5 years

■ New Mexico man arrested in local LSD investigation also ordered to serve five years of supervised release.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

A federal judge sentenced a convicted drug smuggler netted in a local LSD investigation to five years in prison Wednesday.

Kyle Lee Harris, of Albuquerque, N.M., also was ordered to serve five years of supervised release.

In rendering his decision, U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton departed from federal sentencing guidelines that called for a minimum sentence of 6½ years in Harris' case.

"I believe that you have in fact reached a crossroads in your life and have decided to choose the straight path as opposed to the crooked one," Bunton told Harris.

Harris' attorney, Chris McCormack, said his client had no plans to appeal the sentence.

Authorities arrested Harris, 21, last September at Midland International Airport attempting to smuggle about 400 hits of "acid" from New Mexico.

He had been held on state charges until January, when federal authorities took custody of him. On Jan. 17, a federal grand jury indicted him for

Taxpayers may find help on MRT's Cityline

Free help with the annual task of filing your federal income taxes is as close as your telephone, thanks to the newest service on the Midland Reporter-Telegram's Cityline telephone-based information system.

The free tax hotline is available 24 hours a day beginning today by dialing 560-2400, then selecting category 2930. Tips in 52 different areas are available in areas including income, deductions, credits, forms, filing and getting help.

Within those general categories, specific tips on selecting proper forms; where, when and who must file; how to properly account for various types of income and expenses; and other helps in unraveling the red tape of tax time.

The service, sponsored by Rhea, Prucka and Morrison, certified public accountants, will be on-line through the April 15 filing deadline. The line will also take advantage of the Cityline system's "direct connect" capability, giving callers the opportunity to connect directly the accountants' office during regular business hours.

Through the Cityline news, information and entertainment service, callers have access to dozens of categories of prerecorded data — everything from horoscopes and soap opera updates to local news and sports headlines and stock quotes — 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Since its inception in August 1990, the service has grown to attract more than 10,000 calls and more than 30,000 individual requests for information weekly.

Waco businessman to reopen two Midland fitness centers

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Approximately three months after The Body Shop and Fitness Connexxion were suddenly closed, a Waco company is reopening the two fitness centers.

Gary Findley, president of Fitness Emporium, said he will try to accommodate former members of the two centers. "We'll accept all old memberships, but they will have to be evaluated on a case-by-case basis." He said that for the first 30 days the centers are open, old members will not be charged the enrollment fee but will have to pay the monthly $29 dues.

The Body Shop will reopen as Ladies Emporium and the Fitness Connexxion will reopen as Fitness Emporium for Men and Women.

According to Findley, members will receive the same services offered by Body Shop — machine workouts, aerobics, swimming pool and whirlpool, nursery, tanning, a juice bar and pro shop. The member's monthly dues will vary according to services used.

Findley plans to begin selling memberships on Friday, March 22, with the clubs open for operation the following Monday. He has been in the business seven years, operating Fitness Emporium in Waco.

His partner in the Midland centers is Taylor Lee, company vice president. Lee will remain in Midland to oversee operations while Findley will divide his time between Midland and Waco.

The Waco operation has 2,200 members and Findley noted that Midland and Waco were similar in personality and size, and the clubs were also similar in size. He estimated the Ladies Emporium could accommodate 2,000 members and predicted it would be at that figure within 18 months of the reopening. He said he got interested in the Midland clubs because he knew one of the original owners.

Future plans include enlarging the Fitness Emporium to include dressing rooms for women and some new services, such as more equipment.

Findley noted he has received a great deal of positive response from former Body Shop and Fitness Connexxion employees and members.

The two Midland centers are the company's first outside of Waco, and Findley is "keeping an eye out for other opportunities," he said.

Texas pond home to rare Leon Springs pupfish

FORT STOCKTON — A hovering shadow looms overhead. And the submariners, detecting danger, head for the depths to, once again, foil the connivings of the predators — the enemy.

It's an on-going drama out in the wilds.

Todd

In this case, the submariners are fleshy creatures, Leon Springs pupfish, which are between tadpoles and minnows in size and are so rare as to be worth more than gold — by some notions.

"This is the only natural refuge for the Leon Springs pupfish," says Hoven Riley, caretaker of the fish and myriads of other critters and flowering plants in the 1,502-acre domain.

To others, the tiny fish might be good fish bait or bird food.

And if a shadow were suddenly to appear overhead, the skittish pupfish would sound the alarm, take on ballast, and dive for safety.

So, inquiring humans walk softly when they approach the pond, called Diamond Y Springs, in search of the pupfish.

"They are going to see us coming up," says Riley. "They are going to hear us. They are going to feel the vibrations. They are going to see the shadows in the water.

"And they are going to think we are all a bunch of great blue herons coming up to have dinner."

So, the pupfish, bent on surviving like all of nature's critters, "hide from us. We are going to need to be real still for them to come out."

The herons might have better luck, certainly more skill, and an appetite for raw fish.

The tour guide is Riley, the 27-year-old naturalist who carries out the stewardship program for the Diamond Y Springs. It's a 1,502-acre preserve operated by The Texas Nature Conservancy, which buys or swaps for land to protect wildlife, both fauna and flora, from extinction.

"When we bought the property," Riley says, "we heard all kinds of rumors that the springs were like 90 feet deep, or bottomless."

Riley, who is more of a mountain man and a caveman than an aqua-man, grew up on a West Texas ranch. He wasn't about to take a plunge.

Instead, a diving hydrologist who wanted to study the spring's morphology and to get better clues on "how and why" the desert spring is flowing, hit the sandy bottom at 12 feet.

"It's not quite as exciting as being 90 feet deep," suggests Riley. "We're learning fact and dispelling myths, false information."

The Nature Conservancy, which nationwide operates 1,200 preserves from bogs to a mountain range, acquired the Diamond Y Springs to research a desert spring, since so many have dried up over the years, and to protect rare wildlife.

The Nature Conservancy which, after acquiring wilderness acreage, often turns the preserves over to governmental agencies for caretaking due to the expense of maintaining preserves, plans to keep its West Texas holdings, which include the scenic Brushy Canyon Preserve near Big Bend National Park, the Gypsum Dunes in the Guadalupe Mountains, and the spectacular Mason Bat Cave.

"Diamond Y is a keeper for the Conservancy," says Riley. "All of our preserves in West Texas are keepers."

House approves oil spill bill

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A bill that would tax crude oil at Texas ports to pay for cleanup of offshore oil spills received Texas House approval Wednesday, but only after legislators amended it to help pay for inland spills and plugging abandoned oil wells.

The House on a non-record vote approved the amended Senate Bill 14 by Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, which would levy a tax of 2 cents a barrel on crude oil entering Texas ports to raise at least $25 million for the Coastal Protection Fund.

But Parker had concerns about amendments, which included a provision that interest generated by the fund would benefit the Texas Water Commission's response fund for hazardous waste and inland oil spills and the Texas Railroad Commission's well-plugging fund.

Under the amendment by Rep. Robert Earley, D-Portland, the Water Commission's spill response fund would receive the first $5 million in interest income after the fund reached $25 million, and the well-plugging fund would receive the next $5 million.

The bill as it passed the Senate would compound the fund's interest income along with fines and reimbursements until the fund reached $50 million, when further income would go to the state's general fund.

The House sponsor, Rep. Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, said diversion of income from the fund would threaten the carefully crafted coalition of industry and environmentalists that drafted the bill, but Earley, House Energy Committe chairman, was unmoved.

"I'm not here to let the lobbyists write the bill. That's what I'm here for," Earley said.

The state would be neglecting its duties if it did not allocate enough money for the Water Commission to clean up hazardous waste spills and inland oil spills, Earley said. He also noted that the state lacks the money to plug 6,000 abandoned wells.

But Rep. Frank Collazo, D-Port Arthur, said the oil industry should not be penalized for drillers who abandon their wells.

"Why aren't we letting the people who create the problem resolve the problem?" Collazo said.

The House approved the amendment on an 85-56 vote, with Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, in favor and Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, opposed. Craddick had prepared an alternate amendment that would have limited the diversion to the well-plugging fund.

The bill also would place the Texas land commissioner in charge of offshore oil spill prevention and response while the Water Commission would retain responsibility for hazardous waste spills and inland oil spills.

GRASS: Spring best time to plant rangeland seed

cost of planting grass 50-50 with the USDA's ASCS.

Under the contract, farmers agree to keep weeds and brush off the grassland as much as possible for the duration of the contract.

It will take two to three years to get the grass cover going on the former cropland, he said.

"Traditionally, most folks are pretty happy with it (the CRP)," he said.

The "proper steps" in converting marginal cropland to rangeland by grass seeding is to include a pre-emergent herbicide application to suppress weeds and to follow the herbicide by planting grass seed with a grass drill that is set for not deeper than one-fourth of an inch into the topsoil. The seedbed should be firm, Rodgers said.

"This has been most successful in the past with the best seeding period" between March 20 and May 1 to take advantage of the spring rains.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Girl killed

Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 6-month-old Midland girl was killed in a one-vehicle accident about three miles west of Odessa on Interstate 20 about 2:45 a.m. Wednesday, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Claudia Natera was pronounced dead at Odessa Medical Center Hospital about 4:15 a.m. by Justice of the Peace R.G. Hungerford and taken to Thomas Funeral Home in Midland.

Injured in the accident were the driver, Martha Natera, 20, and Eloy Natera, 22, both of Midland. Both were transported to Medical Center Hospital where they were treated and released.

According to accident reports, Ms. Natera was driving east on the interstate when the vehicle, a 1985 GMC pickup, went off the left side of the roadway and struck a guard rail. The driver reportedly overcorrected and went into a broadside skid hitting an electrical pole on the driver's side.

A downed power line caused a grass fire which ignited gasoline from the truck's ruptured fuel line, the accident report said. Natera was able to get the other two occupants out of the vehicle before the truck was demolished by the fire, the report stated.

The infant was not in a child restraint seat, police said. Both adults were wearing seat belts.

Drug case

An Odessa man pleaded guilty in federal court Wednesday to using a telephone to facilitate the distribution of more than 220 grams of cocaine.

Jesus Samaniego Ybarra, 35, entered the plea before U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

He faces up to four years in prison and up to a $250,000 fine.

Ybarra was arrested after he discussed the sale of the cocaine with an undercover narcotics officer over the telephone. The discussion took place March 9, 1989, in Odessa, Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery said.

In return for Ybarra's plea, prosecutors agreed to request dismissal of more-serious charges of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, Beery said.

Independent consultant files for council seat

Staff Report

If elected to the Midland City Council, Steve Scott said striving to diversify Midland's economic base would take top priority on his political agenda.

Scott

Scott filed Tuesday for the May 4 election for the District 1 seat, currently held by Bill Williams, who has not announced whether he is running.

Wednesday is the filing deadline. Two at-large positions and two single-member district seats are up for grabs.

Incumbents John Castro and J.D. Faircloth have filed for the at-large seats. Scott was the sole District 1 candidate as of Wednesday, while Jose Alfredo Zurtuche was the only District 2 candidate.

If elected, Scott said aggressive pursuit of economic diversification is his primary objective.

"I don't think we have any real controversial issues facing the city right now," he said. "The real issue is for Midland to expand its economy and progress without overloading the tax structure.

"The city has done a good job in these trying times. The challenge is to progress and go forth within our current means."

Scott said he also would like to build a communication base between him and his District 1 constituents.

"We have to have more dialogue on what's best for the city and what's best for everybody," he said.

Although he has never held an elected office, Scott, 56, is not a newcomer to politics. He was defeated in a bid for the Midland school board in the late 1970s.

"I've been interested in city government for many years and I feel like I can make a contribution to the council and the city government," Scott said.

Born in Sweetgrass, Mont., he moved to Mentone with his family in 1938. He graduated from Colorado City High School in 1952.

In 1956, Scott earned a bachelor's of science degree in petroleum engineering from Texas A&M University and began working for Standard Oil Co. that year.

He joined the U.S. Air Force in 1957 and served until 1960, when he came back to Standard Oil. He went back to Texas A&M in 1963 and earned a master's of science degree in petroleum engineering in 1964.

From 1964 to 1973, Scott worked for Shell Oil Co. and then moved to Midland, where he joined Murphy H. Baxter, an independent oil operator.

Scott has been an independent petroleum engineering consultant since 1985.

A member of the Downtown Lions Club and the Society of Professional Engineers, he attends the Church of Christ at Golf Course Road.

Scott has a wife, Betty, and two children, Martin, 23, and Lynn, 29.

Ms. Major said packets containing petitions have been mailed to board trustees.

The petition closes with a request that the Faculty Council be notified of the board's decision by April 1.

Man files for MCHD board

Staff Report

Citing the goal of returning control of the taxing entities back to the average citizens of Midland, David Mandell has announced his candidacy for the position of Midland County Hospital District Director, District 5.

Mandel

"It is time that we have directors who fairly balance the needs of the people versus the needs of the hospital," Mandell said. "It is time to explore progressive alternatives to hold down the ever-rising cost of indigent care, instead of just passing the expense onto the taxpayers. All departments should be audited to see if they are truly operating at peak efficiency, or if budget cuts are possible."

"It is my goal to conduct district-wide meetings to seek input of the people I will be representing," Mandell said.

Mandell also stated that the time of the directors' meetings should be changed to allow greater participation from the average working Midlander. Currently, those meetings begin at 2 p.m.

Mandell has been a resident of Midland County for almost nine years and has been a resident of District 5 for almost four years.

He is married and has one child.

The deadline to apply to run for school board trustee is less than six days away and no one has yet filed for the District 6 seat, according to a spokesperson in the business office of Midland Independent School District.

Other seats up for election are in Districts 5 and 3.

District 6 representative Larry Rusk announced his decision not to run for re-election Feb. 15.

Midland ISD Board President Ken Morrison, District 3, also declined a re-election bid. However, former Midland educator Jack Hightower filed to run in District 3.

Incumbent George Staley filed for re-election in District 5.

Filing deadline is Wednesday for the May 4 election. Interested persons may obtain applications and information from the school district's business office.

Account established

An account to help defray the medical costs associated with a bone marrow transplant has been set up for 26-year-old Renee Potts of Temple.

Granddaughter of Midlander Vada Potts and niece of Shirley (Mrs. John) Hansen of Midland, Miss Potts has been battling Wilms' tumor, a rare cancer, for more than six years. Following removal of a kidney, a portion of one lung and more than two years of chemotherapy and radiation, the only remaining treatment option is a marrow transplant.

Medical insurance will only cover a portion of the estimated $150,000 cost of the transplant at the South Texas Medical Center.

Fully tax-deductible contributions can be directed to the Renee Potts Benevolent Fund of the American Transplant Association, First National Bank South, P.O. Box 6122, Temple, Texas 76503-6122.

LSD: Smuggler to serve time possession of LSD with intent to distribute.

Harris faced a maximum of 40 years in prison and up to a $2 million fine.

"I feel that through being arrested, my life was saved," said Harris, who told Bunton he had been addicted to drugs for the past five or six years. He said he viewed his prison term as an opportunity to rid himself of his drug problems.

Harris is the first and only person indicted so far in an ongoing LSD investigation initiated by the Department of Public Safety last fall. The Drug Enforcement Administration, the Midland Police Department and the Midland County District Attorney's Office have been cooperating in the investigation.

The investigation also led to a guilty plea on LSD possession charges by Clayton Wade Williams, the son of former gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams Jr.

Bunton sentenced the younger Williams to 12 months in federal custody Feb. 25. Half that sentence is to be spent in a Pennsylvania boot-camp style prison for drug offenders. Williams has appealed the sentence.

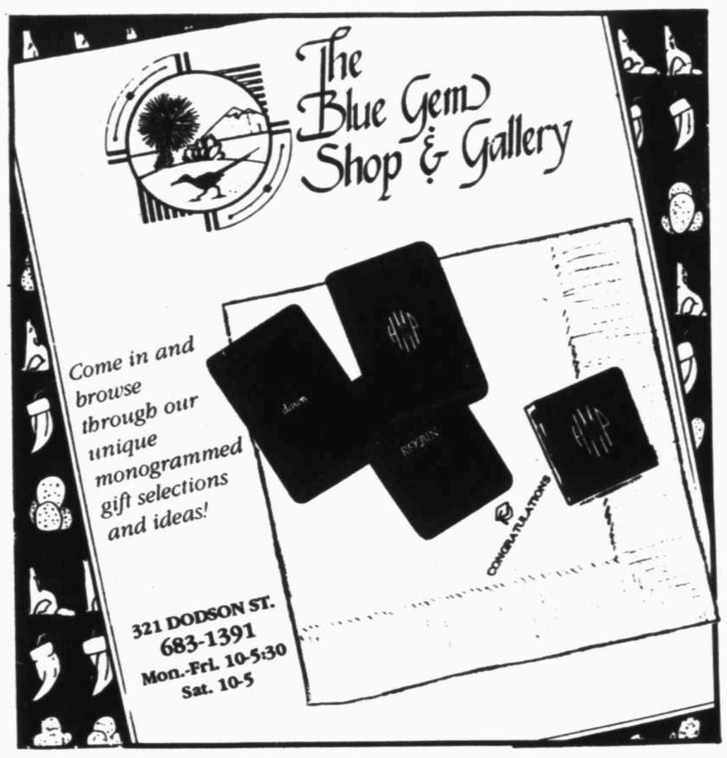

The DPS narcotics division began its LSD investigation after receiving reports of "acid" usage among Midland high school students. The probe has revealed that about 300 Lee High School students use LSD, investigators say.

Students and former students of both Midland and Lee high schools have testified before the grand jury in connection with the LSD probe.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery, who prosecuted Harris, said the grand jury is expected to hand down more LSD indictments soon.

Safety inspectors tour plant hit by explosion

PORT LAVACA (AP) — State and federal safety inspectors toured Union Carbide Wednesday to determine when the Port Lavaca plant could be reopened after an explosion that killed one worker and injured 19 others.

John Resendez, 45, of Port Lavaca, died late Tuesday of head and internal injuries he suffered in the early morning explosion, said Union Carbide spokesman Mike O'Sullivan.

Resendez, a contract worker employed by Brown & Root, died shortly after he was transferred from a Victoria hospital to Hermann Hospital in Houston late Tuesday, said spokeswoman Lisa Fuglaar. He was one of three people hospitalized after the explosion. Another 17 were treated and released for minor injuries.

"We have about 40 engineering personnel from other Union Carbide locations tour the plant, along with safety inspectors to decide when startup will occur," O'Sullivan said. "We're concentrating on returning the utilities to operation — fuel and water. Once that's done, they're going to take a look and go from there."

Inspectors from the Texas Air Control Board, the Texas Water Commission and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration toured the plant Tuesday.

About 100 people were in the plant when the explosion ripped through a unit that manufactures ethylene oxide, which is used in antifreeze and polyester fabric, said Carbide spokesman Aaron Phillips. Officials were not sure what caused the plant to explode.

O'Sullivan said state officials approved the plant to begin re-establishing utility service and disposing of wastes. No gases or toxic materials were found at the plant, he said.

The plant, about 15 miles south of Port Lavaca, primarily manufactures polyethylene, which is used in plastics.

Woman dies shortly before 118th birthday

ANSON (AP) — Six weeks short of her 118th birthday, Marquitos Dominguez died in a West Texas nursing home.

"She was a joy to everyone," said Frances Ward, administrator of Valley View Care Center in Anson.

Miss Dominguez, who was believed to be one of the oldest people in the United States, died Tuesday.

Her birthday, April 25, was marked each year with a celebration attended by other center residents, relatives and friends. She received birthday greetings from legislators and the governor.

At the last party, she said in Spanish through an interpreter, "I have lived a long and good life. I'm very happy and having fun."

But recently, Miss Dominguez told relatives and the nursing home staff she was prepared to die, Ms. Ward said.

"She told her family that she was ready to go — that she was tired," Ms. Ward said.

Ward said Miss Dominguez died of heart failure.

"She was a lovely person and we enjoyed taking care of her," Ms. Ward said. She was a quiet person, in part because she didn't speak English."

Miss Dominguez reportedly was born in Piedras Negras, Mexico, on April 25, 1873. She lived in Del Rio and San Angelo before moving to Anson in 1917.

In 1985, she told the Abilene Reporter-News her longevity was "because God has given me these years. I've worked all my life, no smoking, no drinking and no dancing."

Ward said she didn't believe Miss Dominguez ever became a U.S. citizen, a process that probably would have verified her age.

900-number phone services defraud callers, Morales says

AUSTIN (AP) — The booming pay-per-call, 900-number telephone services are becoming one of the biggest methods of defrauding consumers in recent history, Attorney General Dan Morales charged Wednesday.

Issuing a report on 900-number abuses, Morales said the phone services "have become a haven for anonymous con artists" to prey on unsuspecting consumers.

Unscrupulous 900-number operators "have taken advantage of the industry's enormous growth and the lack of any meaningful regulation to perpetrate fraud after fraud," Morales said.

The report calls for a series of recommendations to clean up 900-number fraudulent practices which include: phoney job offers, misleading credit card solicitations and supposedly free vacations with "enormous hidden costs."

It also says 900-number advertising either fails to disclose or "grossly understates" the actual cost of such calls.

"The 900-number industry currently generates $750 million per year, and by 1992 will be taking in $1.6 billion," Morales said.

"It clearly serves some useful purposes. However, the 900 industry appears to be a magnet for shady operators. This indicates that meaningful regulation is lacking and consumers are being defrauded," he said.

The study was compiled by the attorneys general of several states, including Texas, after investigations, a public hearing and meetings with telephone industry executives and government regulators.

Among its recommendations, the report concludes that long-distance phone companies such as AT&T and MCI are in the best position to police 900-numbers because those companies carry the calls on their networks and handling billing of 900-number customers.

The report suggests that the long-distance carriers require 900-number operators to disclose the actual cost of their calls in all advertising, and refuse to handle 900-numbers that are targeted toward children.

Consumers also should be told at the beginning of each 900-number call what that call will cost and be given a chance to hang up at no charge, the report says.

'The 900 industry appears to be a magnet for shady operators. This indicates that meaningful regulation is lacking and consumers are being defrauded.'

Jobless Texans may face long lines at unemployment offices

■ Budget constraints may force cutbacks at TEC.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Jobless workers in Texas may face long lines to file their unemployment claims unless the federal government antes up more money to run the program, officials said Wednesday.

Budget cuts and a surge in unemployment applications driven by the national recession are stretching thin the resources of state employment commissions around the country, said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas.

In some states, jobless workers are having to wait four to five weeks for their first unemployment checks, after waiting up to eight hours in line. In Texas, the state Employment Commission has had to cut 1,000 workers during the past five years.

Jim Kaster, chairman of the Texas Employment Commission, said the agency may be forced to close six employment offices at the end of the year if there is no increase in funding and unemployment claims continue to rise.

He said Houston, Dallas and San Antonio would each lose two employment offices, and their operations would be consolidated with other offices in those cities, resulting in lines for jobless workers.

Bentsen said Wednesday that he was seeking Senate approval for up to $200 million in additional federal funds for state employment commissions. The House voted recently in favor of a $200 million increase.

While the Bush administration is seeking $100 million, Bentsen said it's not enough to meet state needs for additional funding, especially if unemployment rates rise even higher.

"It appears that the need for additional funds may be as much as twice the amount proposed by the administration," Bentsen said in a letter to Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

"Of course, these are times of budgetary restraint. But ... budgetary restraint should not be used to justify denial of unemployment benefits for families entitled to assistance," Bentsen said.

Kaster said this year's budget for state employment commissions is based on a national unemployment rate of 5.3 percent, but that the current jobless rate is 6.1 percent.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your desire for freedom of movement becomes stronger. Review your professional relationships over the summer. Distance yourself from people who insist on having their own way in September. A bolder attitude will pay off. Extra funds come your way from an unexpected source. Go ahead and try your wings in December. Your mate will be unusually supportive as 1992 approaches.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Double-check facts and figures to prevent costly mistakes. Influential people help you make headway with a financial deal. Look for romance in unexpected places.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Steer clear of a tension-generating situation at work. You are ready to take on new projects now. Be wary of an alliance that could damage your credibility. Send someone a love note.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The financial news is more encouraging than in the recent past. Buckle down to work. Higher-ups discuss advancement opportunities. Be as tactful as possible with the people you love.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A new feeling of self-confidence is yours today. Educational affairs and banking matters deserve careful attention. Check personnel records and expense accounts. Long-awaited good news arrives.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your excellent rapport with a co-worker heightens your creativity. Learn to delegate more authority. A young person is eager to prove his worth. Extravagance could make a dent in your savings.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Welcome a golden opportunity to demonstrate your flexibility. Collect old debts. Dress comfortably but conservatively if you attend an after-hours function with your co-workers.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your associates are influenced by your commonsense approach. Show true compassion toward a friend in need. Do what you can to help without asking personal questions. A blind date looks promising.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be certain you catch the drift of what is really going on. Self-improvement projects boost both your ego and income. An unusual assignment means an opportunity to learn new skills.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Creative endeavors mean higher earnings. Listen to what your colleagues have to say; much can be gained from pooling your ideas. A promotion rests on your ability to speak up.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Steer clear of joint ventures. Both time and money are at stake, and you cannot afford to lose either right now. Your romantic partner feels that you underestimate yourself. Take a few risks.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid saying anything that smacks of envy or hard feelings today. Your associates look to you for leadership. A community campaign could introduce you to some interesting new people.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Greater teamwork will boost profits considerably. Take care of routine correspondence. Sincerity and loyalty count big with your romantic partner. Your home is your refuge, tonight.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are usually happy-go-lucky, ready to fall in with their loved ones' plans. Flexible and energetic, they feel in full command of almost any situation. The only time these Pisces will balk is when urged to do something they consider dishonest. They have a strong sense of integrity and cannot be bought. A love for precision makes them willing to do the detailed work many of their colleagues seek to avoid. They are particularly good with financial figures.

Opening lead: King of ♡

Don't abandon ship whenever it seems a contract is hopeless. As a last resort, run your long suit and see if it causes discarding problems for your opponents. Here's a hand to highlight what might happen.

Once North raised spades, South checked on aces and, finding none missing, bid six hearts as a form of the Grand Slam Force, asking partner to bid seven with two of the three top honors. North duly obliged.

West led the king of hearts, and declarer was not overly thrilled with his contract—there was a diamond loser to take care of. It seemed the only chance was to find clubs 3-3, so a diamond could be sluffed on the 13th club. However, finding such a fortunate club break was almost 2-to-1 against.

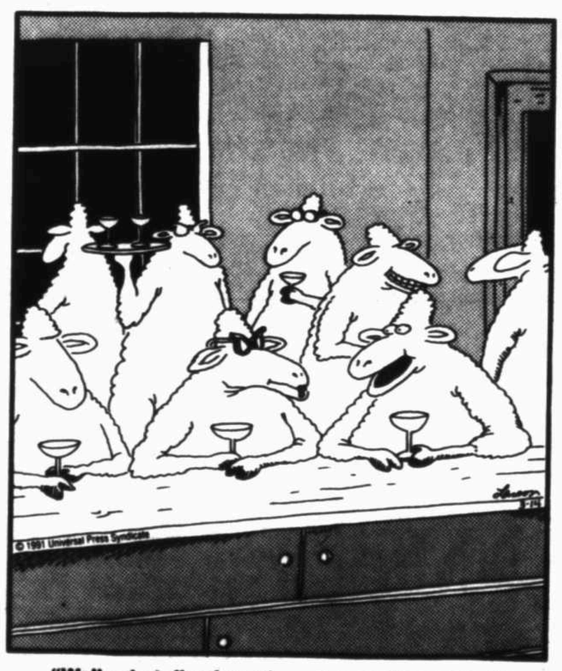

Declarer won the opening lead in hand perforce, drew trumps in three rounds, on which West discarded a heart and a diamond, and then tried the three top clubs. Unfortunately, East discarded a heart on the third round. Now it seemed that a diamond loser was inevitable.

However, declarer was not quite ready to concede. After returning to hand with a heart ruff, declarer cashed the remaining trumps. (On the penultimate round declarer took care to discard dummy's nine of diamonds.) Since West had to hold the king of hearts and jack of clubs, that defender was forced down to one diamond. The East and South hands were down to three diamonds each.

Declarer led a diamond to the ace, picking up West's queen. When East followed to the next diamond with the six, declarer, who knew that West's last two cards were a heart and a club, confidently finessed the eight to land his grand slam.

Princess Diana just says no to smoking, ashtrays at home

Princess Diana

"You will find that there is no smoking in my house and no ashtrays either," the princess said Wednesday to an anti-smoking group on Britain's seventh annual No Smoking Day.

The 29-year-old, non-smoking princess was surprised to find that her smoker's breathalyzer test registered two-parts-per-million of carbon monoxide.

That level was because she had travelled across London by car, Dr. Malcolm Green, chairman of the British Lung Foundation, told the princess.

By comparison, some smokers who took the test registered nine, 19 and 24 parts.

"That's not very good," said Diana, who is married to Prince Charles, heir to the British throne.

MOSCOW (AP) — French actress Marina Vlady says she survived a fire that killed 15 people at a Leningrad hotel last month by jumping six feet onto a fire escape ladder which was too short to reach her seventh-floor room.

Ms. Vlady told the Sovietsky Sport newspaper this week that she soaked a sheet in water and put it under her door, but it did not stop smoke from coming into her hotel room.

Ms. Vlady, 52, said she stood on her windowsill, waiting for firefighters to rescue her. When the ladder was too short, she had to jump down to it.

The actress, who has made more than 60 films, was in Leningrad to star in a Soviet movie.

The Feb. 23 fire broke out in another seventh-floor room when a television exploded, officials said. The dead included a Swedish tourist and an American foreign service officer based in Helsinki, Finland.

OXFORD, Miss. (AP) — The dormitory where James Meredith lived for 10 months in 1962 when he was the first black to enroll at the University of Mississippi recently acquired a lobby plaque that notes the historic event.

Baxter Hall, which now houses the Ole Miss telecommunications center, was a dormitory during the 1960s.

The plaque, which was unveiled several weeks ago, gives the history of the 43-year-old building, then ends with this line: "Baxter Hall was the home of some distinguished Mississippians — one of them being James Meredith, the first black student to enroll at the University of Mississippi in 1962."

The decision to mention Meredith in the plaque "just came out of the administration as part of the history of the university that should be noted," said Ole Miss spokesman Ed Meek.

The plaque is apparently the first permanent public display on campus to mention Meredith, Meek said.

Meredith, 57, served at one time as a special assistant to U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — The 7-month-old son of rocker Ted Nugent already has his first hunting bow, reflecting Dad's love of the sport.

Nugent

Nugent, 42, said hunting keeps him spiritually, emotionally and physically fit.

Nugent's son, Rocco, has "already got his first bow," said the boy's mother, Shemane Nugent, 28.

Nugent's promotional appearance at a sporting-goods store Tuesday brought out a strange mix of about 2,000 bow hunters and heavy metal-rock fans. Some brought bows, others guitars for him to autograph. A few brought pictures of animals they had killed. Others carried Nugent's old albums.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Treat Williams may be best known for his decade-old performance in the "Prince of the City," but now he's shed his super-serious screen image to star on TV as a flamboyant, crusading lawyer.

Williams says he welcomes the chance to break out of the humorless stereotype and lighten up as the star of ABC's "Eddie Dodd."

But it's been a tough image to discard.

"Let's put it this way, I didn't see Tom Hanks' fingerprints on any of the scripts I was given in the next few years after 'Prince of the City,'" Williams said in a recent interview.

Williams concedes that he's not the type of person who plays practical jokes, but he insists he has a sense of humor.

"My wife will attest to the fact that I'm a serious, intense guy who also has a sense of humor," he said. "Do I moon people? No. But on the other hand, have you ever had dinner with Steve Martin?

"Now there's an intense guy. He's the funniest man in the movies today, but you won't see any of that at dinner. I'm a lot like that, but I can be a fun guy."

Crowds demand president's resignation

The mounting furor of the last week has come after Croatia and Slovenia took the first legal steps toward seceding from Yugoslavia.

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (NYT) — Huge crowds of anti-Communist protesters intensified their pressure Wednesday on the government of the republic of Serbia by calling for the resignation of its president, Slobodan Milosevic.

With the political opposition and students drawing tens of thousands to separate rallies, it appeared increasingly possible that Milosevic, a former Communist overwhelmingly elected president last December, might be pushed from office by the same sort of popular upheaval that toppled most of Eastern Europe's Communist governments in 1989.

The crowds reassembled Wednesday after the Serbian government moved Tuesday night to meet demands for dismissing television officials, but apparently that was not enough to satisfy the protesters.

Yugoslavia's collective presidency, composed of representatives of the country's six republics and two autonomous provinces, has scheduled a meeting on Thursday to consider asking the federal army to intervene and to declare a national state of emergency.

Such a resolution was voted down Wednesday by the eight-member executive. One report contended that the vote was 5 to 2 against calling in the army and another said that the representatives were evenly divided on the issue, 4 to 4.

The conscript army, led by largely Serbian officer corps, is considered Milosevic's most powerful ally. But the army command said in a statement Wednesday that its forces would remain in barracks unless otherwise ordered by a majority of the collective presidency as required by the Constitution.

But Yugoslavia's vice president, Zivko Prego, said Wednesday in an interview: "I don't think we should expect any surprises. I don't think anyone can get five votes for such an idea."

Asked if the country had come close to martial law early Tuesday morning, Prego replied with a shrug and a smile and said, "Who knows?"

The mounting furor of the last week has come after two other republics, Croatia and Slovenia, took the first legal steps toward seceding from Yugoslavia.

Serbia, the largest republic, is the strongest advocate for retaining the federation in something like its present form and has clung more tenaciously to key aspects of the previous political and economic system.

The leaders in Slovenia and Croatia stress that they believe no change in the Yugoslav economy will be possible as long as Milosovic remains in power opposing sweeping changes like rapid privatization.

Myers pressured out

■ Long-time Texas Tech men's basketball coach Gerald Myers was essentially fired Wednesday, as he 'resigned under pressure' after 20 years at the university.

Associated Press

LUBBOCK — Gerald Myers, Texas Tech's basketball coach for 20 years, resigned under pressure Wednesday, less than a week after the end of the school's fourth straight losing season.

"I'm here to announce a change in our basketball program," Tech athletic director T. Jones said during an emotional news conference. "It's been a difficult day for a lot of people. I met with Gerald Myers this morning and asked him to relinquish his position as coach."

Myers

The 54-year-old coach did not attend the news conference, but Jones said Myers was asked to stay with the athletic department. Jones did not elaborate and there was no immediate response from Myers.

"We will immediately begin a search," Jones said. "We do not have any set timetable."

Tears welled in Jones' eyes during the announcement.

"I hope Gerald and Carol (Myers' wife) will understand what brought about this decision and have a little forgiveness," Jones said. "The past years of recruiting have caught up with coach Myers as far as talent. That is not to take away from the team he put out on the floor this year."

Myers took the Red Raiders to two Southwest Conference championships and was named SWC coach of the year five times. But his teams had losing records the last four years, including an 8-23 mark, a school record for losses.

Myers, who became the Red Raiders' coach 1971, had been the dean of SWC coaches since the firing last year of Texas A&M's Shelby Metcalf. He was the winningest coach in Texas Tech history with a 326-261 record. Only two other SWC coaches ever won more games.

Myers' record in 20½ seasons as head coach at Texas Tech was 326-261. His 23-year coaching record is 358-304, including three seasons at Houston Baptist. He posted 14 consecutive winning seasons at Tech before an 11-20 record in 1983 ended the the streak.

Since then, unhappy fans accused Myers of losing touch with the game, and home attendance dropped steadily. While many college teams chose to go to an up-tempo game, Myers stuck with a patient half-court game that stressed defense.

'I hope Gerald and Carol (Myers' wife) will understand what brought about this decision and have a little forgiveness. The past years of recruiting have caught up with coach Myers as far as talent.'

Texas Tech athletic director T. Jones

Tech was 13-15 in '89 and 5-22 in '90, when the Raiders lost all 16 SWC games.

Tech drew fewer than 1,600 fans for a home game on seven occasions last season, including an official low of 1,111 for a Feb. 2 game against SMU. Tech averaged 7,500 fans from 1956-1971. The Raiders averaged over 6,000 fans throughout the 1970s and about 5,000 fans through the 1980s.

"I don't know whether this absence of fans in basketball is because we're not winning, because of Gerald Myers or because they just don't care about basketball," Jones said Monday. "It's very obvious that we're down financially this year."

Myers' place 'significant'

Associated Press

Southwest Conference Commissioner Fred Jacoby said Wednesday that former Texas Tech basketball coach Gerald Myers "will always have a significant place in the history of the conference."

Myers, who coached the Red Raiders for 21 years, resigned under pressure Wednesday after four consecutive losing seasons.

"Gerald will be missed," Jacoby said. "He made significant contributions to Texas Tech and the conference."

Jacoby said Myers' ouster caught him by surprise.

"I had no idea," Jacoby said. "That's too bad because he is the president of the National Association of Basketball Coaches. He's been a well respected coach for over 20 years. He's had an illustrious career. I know he will be a success in the future whatever he does.

Unknowns shoot at top seeds

Associated Press

NCAA

Towson State, Montana, Northeastern and Georgia State will try to do something Friday that's never been done before — beat a top seed in the opening round of the NCAA tournament.

Since the field was expanded to 64 teams in 1985, no No. 1 or No. 2 seed has lost its opening game. Six No. 3 seeds have fallen in the first round under the current format, including Missouri's shocking loss to Northern Iowa last year.

Several top-seeded teams lost their opening games between 1979 and 1984. But that was when No. 1 seeds got first-round byes, so the losses occurred in the second round. DePaul, in fact, lost three straight years as a No. 1 seed from 1980-82.

But that doesn't provide much encouragement for Montana or the other three No. 16 seeds in this year's tourney.

Although Montana is 23-7 and champion of the Big Sky Conference, no one gives the Grizzlies much of a chance in the West Regional against defending NCAA champion UNLV, which is riding a 41-game winning streak.

"You know the story of David and Goliath?" said Montana guard Roger Fasting. "Well, we're like David's little brother and UNLV is like Goliath's big brother.

"If we lose, that's what everybody expects. But if for some strange, weird, once-in-a-lifetime shot we should win, it would be one of the greatest upsets in sports history."

It won't be the first meeting between Montana and UNLV in the NCAA tournament. The last time the Grizzlies were in the tournament, in 1975, they lost to the Runnin' Rebels in the consolation game of the West Regional.

UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian apparently hasn't followed Montana's exploits much since then.

"I don't know anything about Montana," he said. "We'll get some film of them."

Towson State (19-10) knows that Ohio State (25-3), its first-round opponent in the Midwest Regional, enters the tourney on a two-game losing streak. But even a slumping Big Ten power is expected to beat a challenger from the little-known East Coast Conference.

"I think mentally we've been prepared to play. I just don't know if we're not a little tired at this point," Ohio State coach Randy Ayers said.

North Carolina (25-5) has won 10 of its last 11 games, including a 22-point rout of Duke in the final of the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament. So North Atlantic champ Northeastern (22-10) has no chance when they meet in the East Regional, right?

"We're heavy underdogs, no question," said Northeastern coach Karl Fogel. "If we're going to beat (the Tar Heels), they have to contribute. They can't play their best game."

North Carolina has reached the final 16 nine straight years, but the Tar Heels haven't been to the Final Four since 1982, when James Worthy, Michael Jordan and Sam Perkins led the school to its second NCAA title.

■ Midland High junior Matthew Houston tries to improve his national ranking in the 100-yard butterfly at the state swim meet this week.

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

Matthew Houston had modest goals when he started learning how to swim as an 11-year-old at the Mabee Memorial Swim Center pool.

"I went into swimming because I didn't know how to swim," he said. "I wanted to know how to swim, so I could do more at Water Wonderland."

Not only can Houston, now a 17-year-old Midland High junior, do whatever he wants at Water Wonderland, but he has developed into one of the nation's best 100-yard butterfly swimmers, at least in the high school ranks.

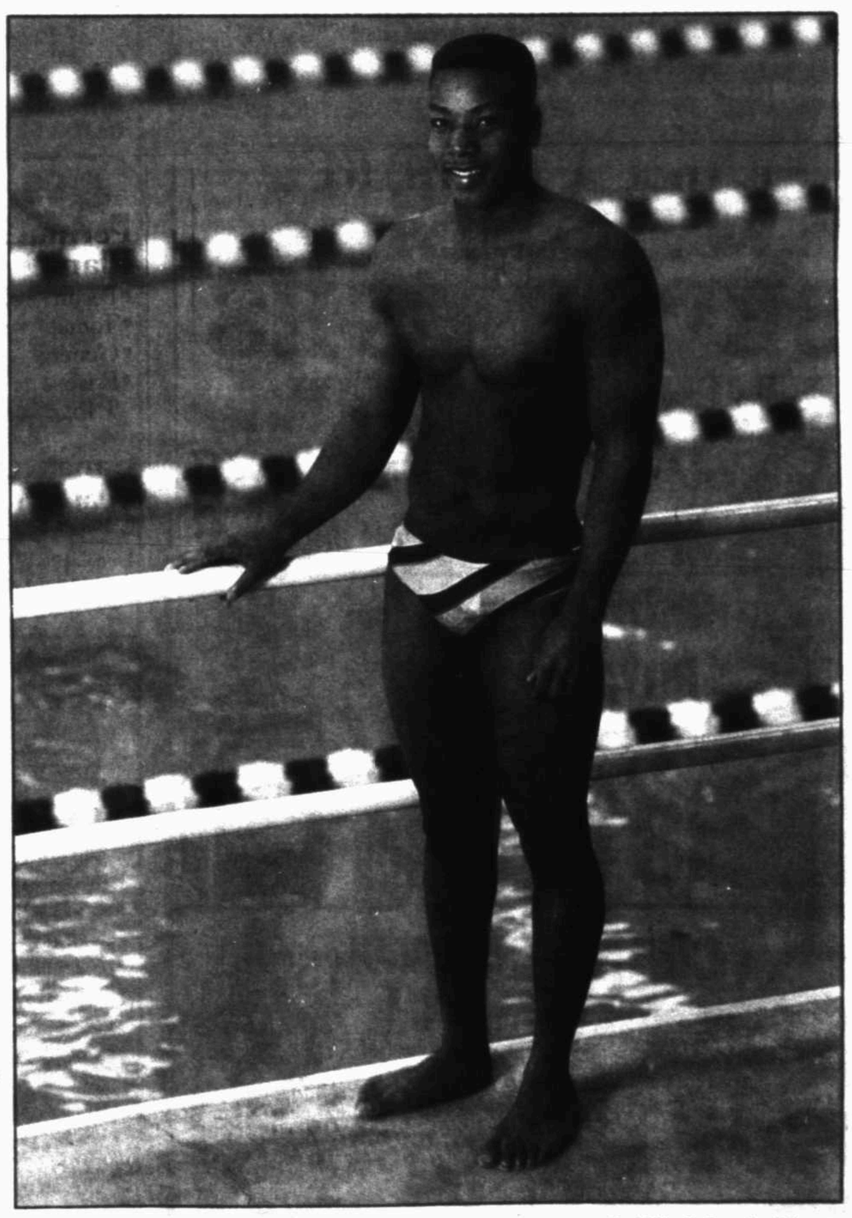

Houston will try to improve his No. 18 national prep ranking and his third-place finish in the fly at last year's state swim meet with a return trip to Austin for this year's meeting of the state's high school elite, which begins Friday.

There, Houston will challenge defending state champion Murray Easton of San Antonio Churchill and returning runnerup Jay Martin of Conroe McCullough — the only butterflyers to defeat him in high school competition.

Swimming has been an athletic salvation of sorts for the strapping 5-foot-9, 170-pounder. That's because young Matthew couldn't do much of anything as a grade schooler without igniting an asthma attack.

"I wanted to play sports, but my asthma was real bad," Houston said. "I would have played football and baseball, if I'd had the chance."

Hawks fall to Alvin, 95-91

Staff Report

WACO — Alvin College emerged as the unlikely Texas representative to the national junior college men's basketball tournament with a 95-91 win over Howard College in the bi-regional playoff here Wednesday.

Alvin now heads to the national tournament at Hutchinson, Kan., while the Hawks, ranked No. 1 in the nation entering the regional tournament, end their season with a 32-2 record.

Howard was the fourth straight team to fall victim to an Alvin upset. Alvin downed Navarro 73-72 in the tournament opener, defeated Tyler 74-67 and beat San Jacinto 75-73 before taking on the Hawks.

Howard held a 46-40 lead at half time and went up by as many as 16 points with 11 minutes to play. But then Peter McKelvey sparked an Alvin comeback with five three-pointers as Alvin coach Gary Coffman went to a smaller lineup.

"We went to a three-guard lineup and tried to up the tempo. I didn't really think we could do it successfully against Howard, but we had to try something. We just went on a run that blew my mind and Peter McKelvey had the game of his career," Coffman said.

'Every game we've won here the people in Waco have said it was an upset. But each game we got a little stronger and last night (Tuesday) we beat San Jacinto for the first time in our school's history. We were on a tremendous high, but I told the guys that we weren't finished yet and had to take our turn at Howard."

As for the national tournament, Coffman said his team will be ready for the competition.

"I've heard that only four or five teams really go up there with intentions of winning the thing. But we're going to go to Hutch with every intention of winning the tournament.

"We still have the glass slipper on. We just have to try to keep it on a little longer," he said.

No salary cap?

NEW YORK (AP) — The head of the NBA Players Association said Wednesday that the union may attempt to abandon the salary cap when the current collective bargaining agreement expires after the 1993-94 season.

Charles Grantham, the union's executive director, said that the players agreed to the salary cap when the NBA was in financial difficulty, and that the players may not agree to extend the concept when the current agreement expires.

"I'm not so sure the salary cap in the answer to our problems," Grantham said during a sports business forum. "The salary cap was necessary at the time. In four years, we'll have to take a look at it again. It's not necessarily a fait accompli. It's not necessarily part of our relationship forever."

In each season, the NBA guarantees players 53 percent of the league's defined gross revenue. In the first year of the salary cap, 1984-85, the cap was $3.6 million. It has risen to $11,871,000 this season.

"We think the salary cap has worked well for both players and teams," said Gary Bettman, the NBA's senior vice president and general counsel. "As a result of the salary cap, players have shared in the league's successes over the past severl years. But with three and a half years to go before the expiration of our current collective bargaining agreement, any further discussion seems premature."

Golf coaching clinic offered

Staff Report

A coaches clinic, as well as a short golf clinic, have been scheduled in conjunction with the Fifth Annual Midland Tall City Invitation tournament today and Friday.

The high school boys golf tourney features 30 prep teams and about 180 players, and will be conducted at Green Tree Country Club, Midland Country Club and Ranchland Hills Country Club.

The coaches clinic has been slated for 10 a.m. through 11:30 a.m. at GTCC today, and features four speakers.

Randy Kahn, the golf professional at GTCC, will offer a professional look at high school programs. Retired Midland Lee golf coach Ronnie Huckabee will speak on how to develop competitiveness, and retied Andrews coach Dub Warden will offer his views on organization and how to build a quality program that is unique. Finally, former Andrews coach Frank Bice will talk about motivation as a key to winning.

A short golf clinic will also be offered by Kahn at 4 p.m. at GTCC.

Knight, Henson reprimanded

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Indiana coach Bob Knight and Illinois coach Lou Henson were reprimanded and censured Wednesday by the Big Ten for their verbal spat after a game in Champaign.

Conference commissioner Jim Delany said in a statement that the two coaches violated a league regulation on conduct after Indiana's 70-58 victory at Assembly Hall on Sunday.

"Coach Henson's negative characterization of Coach Knight and Coach Knight's sarcastic characterization of the Illinois basketball program constitute violations of Conference policy," Delany said in the statement.

"Coaches Knight and Henson acted in ways inimical to their universities, themselves and intercollegiate basketball."

Dennis LaBissoniere, a spokesman for the Big Ten, said he could not elaborate on the statement, say what penalties might be involved, nor explain the difference between a reprimand and a censure.

Kent Brown, an assistant sports information director at Illinois, said by telephone from Champaign that Henson would have no comment beyond what he said at a news conference Monday.

"He said he expected to get a letter of reprimand from the Big Ten and hoped that Coach Knight would also," Brown said of Henson. "He said he thought both coaches deserved it."

Knight, on Wednesday was in Louisville, where his team was preparing for its Thursday NCAA tournament game against Coastal Carolina, and could not immediately be reached for comment.

Sunday's fireworks began after Knight ran off the court during the final seconds of the game, skipping the traditional postgame handshake with the opposing coach.

In the hallway leading to the locker rooms, Henson and Knight traded words in an exchange punctuated with profanity from Knight, according to witnesses.

Later, at a post-game news conference, Knight launched into a sarcastic, 10-minute monologue on Illinois' ban from postseason play for NCAA recruiting violations.

Those comments sparked a bitter rebuke from the normally low-key Henson when his turn came to talk to reporters.

The Illinois coach called Knight a "classic bully" and said he asked him to "step outside."

Lamar upsets Lady Longhorns

AUSTIN (AP) — Brenda Hatchett scored 16 points to lead five Lamar players in double figures as the No. 24 Lady Cardinals defeated No. 16 Texas 77-63 Wednesday night in a first-round playoff game of NCAA women's basketball.

Tenth-seeded Lamar (27-3) will play second-seeded Louisiana State (24-6) Sunday on Lamar's homecourt in Beaumont. The winner of that game advances to the Midwest Regional tournament in Austin, March 21 and March 23.

Lamar, playing its first ever NCAA women's tournament game, took a 7-4 lead on a 3-pointer by the 5-foot-tall Hatchett and fought off all attempts at a comeback by Texas (21-9).

Lamar led at halftime 47-30, and Hatchett had 14 of her team-high points. Although she only scored two second half points, she had a key steal and passed to Barbara Hickey for a fast-break basket after Texas had closed to 68-60.

Other Lamar scorers in double figures included Bobbie Bean, Uirannah Jackson and Ramona Jones, each with 13, and Hickey, a sub with 12.

HOUSTON: Old foes wait at state meet

(From 1C)

It took COM coach Brad Swendig a while to realize that Houston — and older brother Marc — were diamonds in the rough ... er, pool.

"Neither one of them could swim a lick when they started taking lessons," Swendig said. "They were really horrible."

But the brothers were swimming laps by the end of that first summer. Soon, they were members of the COM team.

Swendig still didn't know what he had, though both Houston brothers had shown potential.

"Going into his (Matthew's) second year of swimming, I didn't know if he was going to be that good, but it wasn't long until I realized that he could be great," the coach said.

"At the beginning, we could tell he was a great athlete."

Several other members of the Houston family have had their moments of athletic glory. Dad Melvin, now track coach at Lubbock Coronado, was a member of Texas Southern's world record 400-meter relay team in 1964, while brother Marc — despite not learning how to swim until his teens — came within an eyelash of the District 4-5A butterfly record as a senior in 1989.

Swendig said Houston could be a success in any sport he chose, asthma permitting.

"Matthew can play just about anything, but the asthma limits him," the coach said.

Houston can almost dunk a regulation-size basketball despite his short stature, and don't think that MHS football coach Davis Corley wouldn't love to have him in his Bulldog backfield.

By the time Houston was a freshman, he was already swimming faster than most seniors. So, it's easy to see why he was a welcome addition to the MHS team as a sophomore last year.

"Matthew's the best pure athlete I've ever coached," MHS coach Larry Ridge said. "He has such a good knowledge of the sport and such a competitive desire to achieve."

Houston posted a personal best 50.49 at last year's state meet, well behind Easton's 49.1 and Martin's 49.6. He admits that beating Easton this year would be a major upset ... but Martin's another story.

"Jay Martin and I have been fighting it out in the butterfly for several years," Houston said. "I've beaten him a couple of times, but never when it really counted."

Houston feels like a sub-50 is within his reach at state, despite an asthma flareup that hampered his preparation for the recent Region I meet.

Despite missing several practices earlier in the week, Houston still broke his own Region I fly record with a 51.19 in the prelims.

Houston feels it might take a national high school record to beat Easton, whose 49.1 best is one of the top 20 times in U.S. high school history. Still, he plans to give it his best shot.

Houston began scaling down his workouts last week from 8,000 yards a day to 3,000 yards daily. "Real nice and easy — nothing to get sore or tight," he said.

After his senior year, Houston hopes to attend college on a swim scholarship.

"I would like to go to a school that needs a butterflyer the most," he said.

Despite his prowess to date, Houston sees room for improvement.

"I have to become more consistent in my other events," he said.

Houston's already pretty good in those "other events." He's a two-time Region I qualifier in the 100 backstroke, and he swims legs on both the 200- and 400-yard relays for MHS' state-bound foursomes.

Swendig said Houston's versatility underscores the COM philosophy.

"I've tried to teach him to do all the strokes correctly," the coach said. "I've never tried to specialize him in anything."

A sub-50 would qualify Houston for the upcoming junior national meet, while a sub-49 would put him within shouting distance of the Olympic Trials qualifying standard of 48.89.

Houston feels like he could have a shot at the Olympics, if not in '92, then perhaps in '96.

"I can't really see myself burning out," he said. "I can see myself getting faster every year."

"Front Row Seat" is a regular feature of your morning Reporter-Telegram, appearing each Thursday.

Higuera tears rotator cuff

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Pitcher Teddy Higuera, who signed a four-year contract in December, will be unavailable indefinitely because of an injury discovered Wednesday, the Milwaukee Brewers said.

An arthrogram examination by Los Angeles physician Lewis Vocum disclosed a torn rotator cuff in the left-hander's throwing shoulder that will require rehabilitation, general manager Harry Dalton said.

Higuera complained Tuesday of soreness that was originally thought to be tendinitis. He has had injury problems for two seasons.

Henderson may get shorter deal

Baseball Roundup

Associated Press

Rickey Henderson wants more money and the Oakland A's are offering less time.

Henderson, the American League's MVP, is unhappy with his four-year, $12 million contract and wants it extended at a higher rate. The A's offered a solution Wednesday, saying they were willing to shorten the deal, which has three years to go.

"There will be no extension," Oakland general manager Sandy Alderson said. "We see no benefit to the Oakland A's in offering an extension."

There could be benefits to both sides in a shortening of the deal, though. Henderson could file for salary arbitration — he is not eligible for free agency again until after the 1994 season because of repeater rules — but would lose his no-trade clause, giving the A's the option of moving him to another team.

"We might feel we're substantially better off under those circumstances," Alderson said.

Henderson, who sat out the club's first eight full squad workouts to protest his situation, did not repeat his pay-me-or-trade-me ultimatim. "I don't want to be traded," he said. "But when your back is up against the wall, you have to do what is right. I'm going to do what is right for Rickey."

He passed on the A's exhibition game Wednesday against Seattle. "I don't want to go out there with my head messed up," he said. "Sandy and I have a difference of opinion right now. He knows my side. He knows what can happen. He knows I'm not happy."

While Alderson seemed to be drawing the line on Henderson's contract, Pittsburgh general manager Larry Doughty said if it was up to him, he'd whip out the Pirate checkbook and start signing key players like MVP Barry Bonds, Bobby Bonilla, Andy Van Slyke and Cy Young winner Doug Drabek to long term deals.

The problem is it isn't up to him.

The Pirate purse strings are controlled by chairman of the board Doug Danforth and club president Carl Barger as well as the teams board of directors. Doughty has talked with Barger about the matter.

"We discussed our approach on the matter of negotiating long-term contracts," the GM said. "He was receptive to what I had to say."

Bonilla and Van Slyke can file for free agency following the 1991 season. Drabek and Bonds are eligible the year after that.

"We'd like to keep them all if we can," Doughty said.

Bonilla and Bonds both lost at arbitration and will make $2.4 million and $2.3 million respectively this season. Drabek won his arbitration case and was awarded $3.33 million. Van Slyke is in the final year of a three-year deal worth $5.5 million.

Exxon to pay $1 billion for Valdez spill

■ Exxon and the federal government settled claims stemming from the Valdez spill, with Exxon paying a record $100 million fine and $900 million in clean-up costs.

By James Rowley

WASHINGTON (AP) — Exxon Corp. on Wednesday settled government claims arising from the nation's worst oil spill by agreeing to pay a record $100 million fine for four environmental crimes and to spend an additional $900 million to finish cleaning up Alaska's coast.

Exxon already has spent $2.5 billion on the cleanup.

The civil settlement and guilty pleas to the four misdemeanors will avert lengthy court fights over the March 24, 1989 grounding of the tanker Exxon Valdez, which spilled more than 10 million gallons of oil into Alaska's Prince William Sound.

Thornburgh

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh said the deal with the federal government and the state of Alaska "represents a clear and unmistakable signal to those engaged in environmental crime that their activities are not going to go unnoticed and unprosecuted."

The record criminal fine, involving one misdemeanor charged against Exxon and three others charged against its

Exxon says it will move on

By Evan Ramstad

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The $1 billion Exxon Corp. agreed to pay Wednesday to settle civil and criminal cases from the 1989 Alaskan oil spill allows the company to move on to business that is more productive than litigation, chairman Lawrence Rawl said.

Rawl

"It's been a burden to us," Rawl said. "The burden has been more of one of diverting my time, the management committee's time, and all the executives and employees that are working on this."

The settlement, which must be approved by a federal judge in Alaska, allows Exxon to "apply our employees' time to more productive things," he said.

But the March 24, 1989 wreck of the Exxon Valdez in Prince William Sound, Alaska, isn't behind the world's largest energy company. The incident was the largest tanker spill in U.S. history.

Stock expert sees signs of recovery

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

The nation is in a recession, but should be out of it by 1992 says the manager of one of America's premier funds.

"The post war economy is showing signs of recovery," said Harold Williamson, manager of the $1.4 billion Shearson Appreciation Fund.

He said the economy would bottom out in the second quarter then begin a slow recovery through 1992. However, the recovery will not be as strong as 1988 and 1989. Williamson said corporate profits should be strong in the next year, as firms will be slow to rehire those employees cut in the recession.

Williamson, in Midland Tuesday for a presentation to local investors, said the outlook for the stock market was good and that it should continue to rise over the next few months.

"The market has responded well since the end of the war. In fact, it may be a little ahead of itself at this point," he said.

Williamson also noted that oil stocks, which peaked following the invasion of Kuwait, were not performing all that well, even though they represent good value.

He said the oil service companies could be a little ahead of themselves at this point and that it was difficult to determine how much they would grow.

"We sold a few shares of oil service stocks, but now we are looking to buy some of them back," said Williamson.

He noted that the Shearson Appreciation Fund was 90 percent common stocks spread over 132 issues. The blue chip mix is varied according to the economy, Williamson noted.

"Right now growth stocks are balanced with energy stocks. Our strategy is to get a good mix and a good balance. That is the one thing we can do for the investor who does not have the finances to get a big spread in the market."

The Shearson fund has had the distinction of being on the Forbes Honor Roll of Mutual Funds for the past five years. It has increased 93.6 percent in the past five years and 851 percent since its inception in 1970.

Recession may be bottoming out

■ Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan tells Congress of signals the recession may be bottoming out.

By Martin Crutsinger

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve reported faint signals Wednesday that the recession may be bottoming out, while Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan assured Congress that the central bank stands ready to do more if needed to promote a recovery.

In its first nationwide survey completed since the end of the Persian Gulf War, the Fed found a U.S. economy that was still weak but with hints of a pickup in such key consumer sectors as housing and auto sales.

"Economic activity remained soft in much of the nation but there were some indications that the decline may be slowing," the Fed report, known as the Beige Book, concluded.

The survey, which is compiled by the Fed's 12 regional banks, noted that strength in U.S. manufacturing exports was partially offsetting weak domestic demand. It said that many regions of the country believed that the slide in manufacturing activity may be coming to an end.

The regional banks in Atlanta, Cleveland and San Francisco reported that while retail sales had fallen sharply once the Persian Gulf War began in January, activity has since recovered.

The Fed survey also found that real estate agents in some areas were seeing an increase in sales with home builders reporting they were cautiously optimistic that this year will see a recovery for the depressed housing industry because of the decline in mortgage rates.

Greenspan on Wednesday also indicated a belief that the worst of the recession may be over and that a rebound in economic activity may be close at hand.

Feds defend oil market monitoring

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal officials Wednesday defended their monitoring of oil markets during the Persian Gulf crisis, disputing allegations that sharp price jumps were linked to excessive and improper speculation in futures trading.

William Albrecht, a member of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, responded to allegations by three state attorneys general that the commission failed to intervene in the oil futures market to curb sharp increases.

Oil prices soared beyond $40 a barrel last fall despite the fact that there were no actual supply shortages.

"We have discovered no evidence that high energy prices (during the Persian Gulf crisis) were caused by excessive speculation in the futures market," Albrecht told the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee.

Under law, Albrecht said, the commission cannot intervene in futures trading simply because of a volatile market with sharp price changes. He said the oil price increases were legitimate reflections of the energy market.

"We believe the commission made the right decision in not entering the market," he said.

But Pennsylvania Attorney General Ernest Preate said "excessive speculation artificially drove up prices to the detriment of this nation's economy." Stronger intervention by federal regulators would have dampened the price increases, he said.

Trader Matthew Newberger, right, accompanied by attorney Charles Sklarski, was one of 12 yen futures traders cleared of fraud charges Wednesday.

Traders acquitted of fraud

CHICAGO (AP) — A federal jury Wednesday cleared 12 yen futures traders of nearly all charges that they cheated customers at the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. A judge declared a mistrial on the remaining counts.

It was the second trial in which the government failed to obtain major convictions stemming from an unprecedented FBI investigation of corruption at the Merc and the Chicago Board of Trade, the world's two biggest commodity exchanges.

The jury cleared two of the 12 traders on all charges against them. It returned acquittals or could not reach a verdict on the charges against the other 10 traders.

U.S. District Judge William T. Hart sent the panel back to reconsider some 80 undecided counts, but he declared a mistrial on those counts after the jury returned half an hour later and said again it could not reach verdicts.

"I'm very, very grateful to the jury," said one of the traders, Robert H. Bailin. "I'm thankful that they stood up to the government."

But he noted that he could face retrial on some of the charges.

"I don't see that it's really over yet," Bailin said. "Justice will be served when either the judge says or the government says it's over."

Hart set a March 27 hearing in the case. Assistant U.S. Attorney Dan Gillogly refused to say whether the government would seek to retry the 10 traders.

The trial, which began Sept. 5, accused the 12 defendants of running elaborate and illegal schemes to pass their personal trading losses on to unwitting customers, often by pre-arranging trades with each other in violation of exchange rules.

The 12 were charged with about 250 crimes, including multiple counts of mail fraud, wire fraud and various violations of the federal Commodities Exchange Act.

The defendants contended the government's main witness, undercover FBI agent Dietrich Volk, was so boggled by the frenzied nature of futures trading that he mistook their legal actions for illegal ones.

In the second trial, 10 Board of Trade soybean traders were convicted of major offenses in January.

Home equity lines of credit are debt deductible

By Scott Burns

Q. Will I do better if my car payment of $200 a month was paid automatically each month by having the credit union take the money out of my account? Right now I write a check each moth. I have liquid assets of around $4,000 and a CD for $10,000 at this credit union which pays me $53 a month. Would changing this make any difference in income tax?

Burns

A. Changing it won't make any difference in your income tax. As of this year consumer loan interest is no longer deductible. Only one tenth of all you paid in consumer interest was deductible for 1990.

You will, however, be rewarded for being a careful shopper for any consumer loans. In addition, most banks give small discounts on their interest rates for "automatic payments," usually half or one percent. The practice provides them with prompt payments and saves a major amount of labor in the servicing and posting of loan proceeds.

The most commonly used way to make your consumer debt deductible is through a "home equity loan" or "home equity line of credit." These loans have terms ranging from about five years to slightly less than forever and are offered at very competitive interest rates. In many areas, the interest rate is about the same as you might pay on a first mortgage loan.

For those who itemize their deductions, the difference in net cost is significant. Suppose, for instance, that you borrowed at 11 percent to finance a car, using a bank car loan. The interest paid is not deductible. A comparable home equity loan might cost 10 percent and would be deductible. For people in the 28 percent tax bracket, that reduces the effective cost of the debt to 7.2 percent.

Readers in 49 states can do this. But your letter is from Texas, which does not allow such loans.

Q. I bought a CD for $2,500 from Bank of New England. Do I wait and hope that it will be paid in April or do I try to recoup my money now, even at a loss?

A. You wait and take your money at maturity. Whatever the stories and worries, the FDIC has sufficient funds now to make good on the insurance it provides. What you need to prepare for is that no one is going to be paying the kind of interest Bank of New England was paying in its last year. When you get your cash, be prepared to earn less... and be happy about it.

Q. We have just been introduced to the benefits of a Charitable Remainder Trust (CRT) and wonder what the pitfalls are. Do you agree it would be a good idea to put the proceeds from the sale of our business into such a trust, having the income for our retirement and saving the capital gains tax from the sale? We are now at retirement age.

A. These trusts are VERY beneficial for people who have highly appreciated assets. By putting them into a trust you get to earn interest on what you would have paid in taxes for the remainder of your life. In addition, you also get a tax deduction for what analysts call the "present value" of the gift.

What this means, in English, is that if you put $100,000 into the CRT and your life expectancy is 15 years, you will get a tax deduction in the year the trust is created for about $25,000. (If you invested $25,000 at 10 percent for 15 years it would grow to $100,000, hence the "present value" of the gift.) Some individuals use their tax savings to buy life insurance, thereby reserving a portion of their estates for heirs.

Q. My wife and I are both retired and too old to start producing another income, so we have to be real careful. We have a CD that is maturing soon in the amount of $84,000. What is your opinion of the funds that invest in government bonds of Australia, New Zealand, Canada, Germany, etc., that are paying

MARKET ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market showed a slight gain today in an atmosphere of confusion about the outlook for the economy and interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 10.65 to 2,933.17 by 2 p.m. on Wall Street.

Gainers just barely outnumbered losers in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 734 up, 729 down and 511 unchanged.

Analysts said traders seemed unsure about what to expect from the credit markets and business activity in the unsettled aftermath of the Gulf War.

Chairman Alan Greenspan of the Federal Reserve confirmed today that the central bank took fresh action late last week to relax its credit policy.

The move surprised many Fedwatchers in the financial world, who had been expecting Greenspan to hold off on any further moves until March economic data provided some indication of the postwar state of the economy.

With a push from the Fed, short-term interest rates have been declining in recent days. But long-term rates have risen, apparently in anticipation of impending signs that the economy may be recovering from the recession.

Among actively traded blue chips, Exxon rose ⅞ to 57⅛; McDonald's ⅞ to 34¾; Philip Morris ¼ to 66⅝, and International Business Machines ⅞ to 127⅞.

Over-the-counter technology issues, which had suffered a setback in recent sessions, rebounded from that selling. Microsoft rose 2⅞ to 98⅝; Intel 1½ to 46¾; Apple Computer 2⅛ to 65, and Sun Microsystems ⅜ to 31⅝.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks climbed .61 to 203.10. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .05 at 353.38.

Volume on the Big Board came to 113.02 million shares with two hours to go.

PAY: Alaska to get half

(From 5C)

Exxon Shipping Co. subsidiary, shows that "answering for environmental spoilage cannot be done simply by paying damages," the attorney general said.

Proceeds from the fine will be split 50-50 with the state of Alaska to help finance the cleanup. By law, the federal share must go into the general treasury.

"I think its a good settlement for the state of Alaska, it's a good settlement for the federal government... it's a good settlement for the environment," said Alaska Gov. Walter Hickel, who was also governor 13 years ago when the discovery of Alaska oil was announced on this date.

Under the proposed consent decree, which must receive court approval after a 30-day public comment period, Exxon would pay $900 million over the next 10 years to a trust fund administered by federal and state officials.

The fund would be used to pay for costs of the continued cleanup by Exxon, which has already spent $2.5 billion to remove oil from the sound and its shores.

After 10 years the trustees could seek up to another $100 million for any remaining environmental damage from the oil spill, which killed countless birds, fish and mammals.

By settling now instead of going to court, the Bush administration and Alaska gets cleanup money now and avoids "spending the next decade feathering the nests of corporate and government lawyers," said Thomas L. Sansonetti, the Interior Department solicitor.

The settlement means that more cleanup funds "will be available years earlier than any recovery that could have been secured through full litigation," said William Reilly, head of the Environmental Protection Agency.

The settlement "allows us to turn our full attention, finally, to the tasks of restoration," Reilly said.

The deal settles all civil claims against Exxon by the state of Alaska and any that the federal government might have brought. But it does not end any of the numerous private lawsuits brought by property owners, fisherman and businesses.

The settlement was reached late Tuesday after a federal judge here had lifted an order halting discussions until he received assurances that claims of five native Alaskan villages would not be compromised.

Environmental groups had mixed reactions.

"They did well on the criminal side. That's a very hefty criminal figure. Our concern is with the civil fine," said Sarah Chasis, a senior attorney for the Natural Resources Defense Council.

Chassis expressed disappointment that $135 million of what Exxon will pay covers past cleanup expenses.

"You're really diminishing the pot for long-term research and restoration," she said. "We want to make sure the environment is made whole. We have serious questions as to whether this agreement would accomplish that goal."

Others said it was hard to evaluate the settlement because scientific data on the extent of the damage has not been made public.

"On the one hand it's the largest settlement of its kind ever," said Douglas Wolf, an attorney for the National Wildlife Federation. "The down side is that we don't know if that was an appropriate amount for this spill because it was the largest one ever."

Exxon and its shipping subsidiary faced an April 10 criminal trial in federal court in Anchorage on two felony and three misdemeanor counts arising from the oil spill.

BURNS: Exchange risk

10 to 11 percent a year?

A. When you invest in U.S. government securities you have only one element of risk: interest rate risk. If interest rates rise, the value of your shares in a fund that invests in medium or long term bonds will decline.

When you invest in global government bond funds — and there are many now — you have a second element of risk as well, exchange rate risk. If the dollar declines against other currencies you will earn interest AND enjoy some gain from the appreciation of other currencies against the dollar. If the dollar rises, however, the value of your shares will decline.

Some fund managers will do well in this area, others won't. Speaking for myself, I would be reluctant to bet against the dollar right now. It has already fallen considerably in the last year. Germany and Japan, the nations with the strongest alternative currencies, are encountering economic problems. And our success in the war against IRAQ is likely to bring a stronger dollar, not a weaker dollar, in the future.

My advice? Look for higher yielding domestic investments such as GNMA mutual funds and high quality corporate bond funds.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Supplement pension, if financially able

By Bill Doyle

Q. I am a police officer in my middle 20s and I am covered by the county's pension plan. Do you think it would be wise to invest in an individual retirement account at my credit union, despite already being covered by a pension plan?

Doyle

A. It most certainly would be, assuming you can afford to tuck IRA contributions away. You are allowed to put up to $2,000 annually into an IRA — $2,250 into a spousal IRA, if you are married and your spouse is not employed.

Because you are what is called "an active participant in a qualified retirement plan," you probably cannot take a federal income tax deductions for annual IRA contributions.

Since 1987, the rule has been that a working taxpayer covered by another retirement plan can deduct the full IRA contributions only if his or her adjusted gross income is less than $25,000 a year — $40,000 for a married couple filing a joint income tax return. A working taxpayer covered by another retirement plan can take no deduction for IRA contributions once his or her adjusted gross income tops $35,000 a year — $50,000 for joint filers.

Between the two sets of adjusted gross income numbers mentioned above, the deductibility of IRA contributions gradually phases out.

However, even if you get little or no immediate tax break on IRA contributions, the interest your IRA earns will be deferred from income tax until you withdraw it — most likely many years in the future, when you are retired. You must start IRA withdrawals after passing age 70 1/2.

When you eventually do make IRA withdrawals, only the portion of those withdrawals representing the deductible contributions you made and the portion representing the interest, dividends and/or growth in value on your entire IRA will be taxable. The portion of withdrawals representing your nondeductible withdrawals will not be taxed, because you already paid income tax on that money.

By putting deductible or nondeductible contributions, or both, into an IRA, you will build up a nice nest egg to supplement your police pension and have a more financially secure retirement.

Q. You mentioned that the vast majority of pension plans, deferred compensation plans, profit-sharing plans, etc., meet Internal Revenue Service requirements as "qualified retirement plans" and can be rolled over into IRAs.

Due to the gross mismanagement of the Section 457 deferred comp plan for employees of municipal government I have enrolled in, I would dearly love to roll those funds over into my self-directed (and, therefore, well-managed) IRA when I leave government service.

Among the sources available to me, there is no consensus as to whether this will be allowed. The employees of the plan's trustees are the stupidest and least cooperative people it ever has been my misfortune to deal with. And, as I am sure you are aware, getting an informed and competent answer from the infernal revenooers is as common as finding Treasury bills in Cracker Jacks.

Can you shed any light on this subject?

A. Wow! I would hate to have you as mad at me as you seem to be at the rest of the world.

The sponsor of a qualified retirement plan is required to inform participating employees of the plan's status in literature distributed to the participants or in a notice posted in the workplace.

Now for the bad news. A phone call to the revenooers' efficient public information office elicits the information that 457 plans — named after the section of the Internal Revenue Code authorizing them — are not IRS qualified plans. You won't be able to roll your share of that plan over into your IRA and keep it tax deferred.

One added thought. Let's hope your choice of investments for your self-directed IRA is better than your use of the American language. In school we all were taught never to end a sentence with a preposition. As the oloke goes: "A preposition is a bad thing to end a sentence with."

EXXON: Burden eased

(From 5C)

Exxon will create a $900 million fund in installments during the next 10 years to reimburse state and federal cleanup efforts. The company also is paying a record $100 million criminal fine after pleading guilty to violations of the Clean Water Act and Migratory Bird Act.

The company will not be able to deduct the fines from its taxes but may deduct the other expenditures, Rawl said.

Exxon remains liable, under the agreement, for another $100 million in environmental damages yet unseen from the 11 million gallon oil spill.

The agreement does not preclude future claims against Exxon, but Rawl said he thinks any new suits will be small.

"The people who really have supportable claims showed up early," he said.

The payments will have virtually no effect on the company's financial performance, Rawl said. Exxon in 1989 made an after-tax provision of $1.68 billion for future spill cleanup and liability.

But Rawl said the company won't have much, if any, surplus from the funds that were set aside. "I think it's going to work out reasonably close," he said.

The company was prepared to contest the Valdez-related charges, Rawl said. But he added, "For the past two years now, whenever anybody wanted to talk to us about any potential settlement to a claim, we were responsive to that."

He said the company has learned a lot from the spill, particularly about cleanup methods.

Underwear not strictly undercover anymore

By Nancy Miller Lewis
Copley News Service

Even designer Nicole Miller thought it was a brave thing to do.

On a first date with a new fellow, a friend of Miller's wore one of the designer's bright print robes over a basic ensemble.

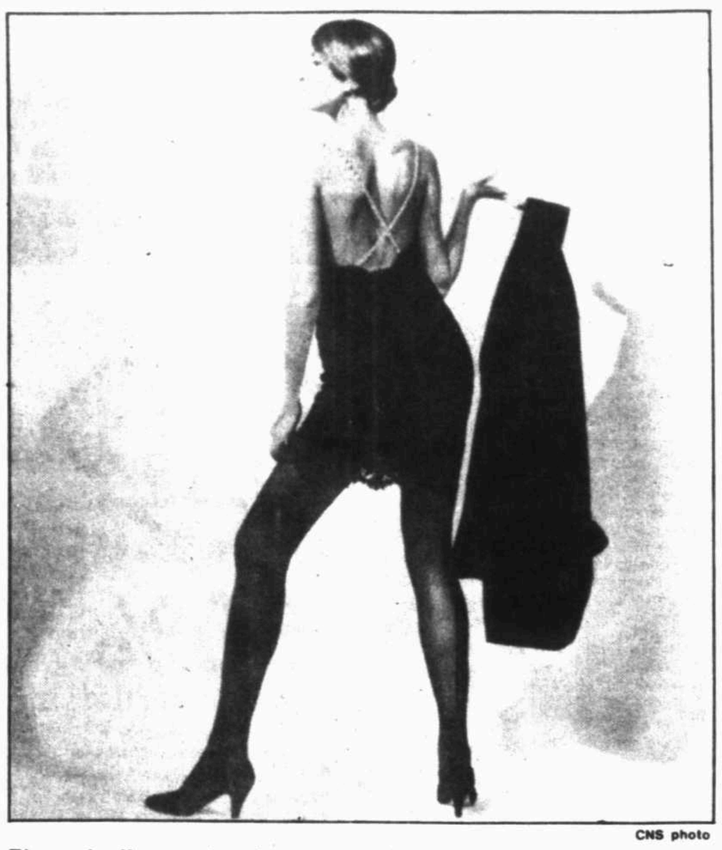

"I thought it was brave of her," said Miller, whose "Nicole Miller" label until recently has been more commonly associated with contemporary-style dresses than with lingerie.

"The short robe works really well at night," Miller said in an interview from New York. Of course, she was referring to wearing the robe to go out for the evening — over leggings and a tank top — as opposed to staying home at night and wearing it over a pair of pajamas.

Miller's robes come in the same bold-print-on-black silk of which her headline-making men's ties — remember the ones with the M&M's? — are made.

Actually, the idea of wearing lingerie as regular clothing — especially evening clothing — is nothing revolutionary. The young will point to Madonna's bustiers as proof of the trend, but those who remember the '60s will recall that back then there were a lot of caftans floating around passing as cocktail attire, if not street clothes.

Even though there is precedent for such an inside-out trend, however, the woman wearing lingerie outside her abode not only has to have a sense of appropriateness mixed with style, but she also must possess the proper attitude.

Elegant slips and pajamas can double as dazzling wear.

"It absolutely takes a feisty woman to wear (lingerie) for daywear. But I think women are feeling a little bold — look at the skirt lengths — so they're putting on lingerie," Miller observes.

Wilmer Weiss, I. Magnin's senior vice president of communications, elaborates:

"For cocktail dressing, many things work. (Evening dressing) is a different world. It's romantic. But I do think most women dress in a more reserved way during the day, unless they are very, very young."

Weiss notes that, for evening, a woman may start shopping for her ensemble in the "occasion" department, but she may wind up polishing off the outfit in the lingerie area. For instance, she may find a terrific pair of black silk shantung slim evening trousers in the place she traditionally gets dressy clothes, but then may top them off with an opulent bed jacket from the lingerie department.

That kind of shopping is not new to designer Josie Natori, who first became famous for her upscale line of Natori lingerie.

"When I started out, what I was doing was not traditional lingerie, so even from my very beginning, my designs were on the borderline. I wasn't a lingerie maniac," Natori explained during a recent visit to I. Magnin's in Beverly Hills.

"I've been doing the bustier for five years. The (store buyers) said: 'This is evening wear, not lingerie.' It made us distinct," she said.

"I always designed robes, but women always wore them for evening wear. I'd meet customers who'd tell me, 'Oh, I bought one of your bed jackets, and I wore it out for a party.' I was horrified. Then I finally realized my designs were multipurpose.

"Women need to be more practical. Women today are more confident; we are more independent. We've arrived to where we can be sexy in the bedroom and outside of it," Natori says.

She notes that customers also see value in finding lingerie items to double for regular clothes. "They can find things (in the lingerie department) for a lesser price than outerwear," Natori says.

Of course, "value" in the designer realm does not necessarily translate as "inexpensive" to the average woman.

Natori makes several lines of clothing (both streetwear and lingerie) in which her designs are "expressed in different manners from $85 to more than $600," she notes.

If that sounds pricey, remember that one of her raj jackets in an opulent metallic fabric comes with pants and the set sells for $700. The Romeo Gigli version of the outfit — which is the inspiration for much of the exotic look — is priced in the thousands of dollars.

Hints help disguise evening lingerie look

By Nancy Miller Lewis
Copley News Service

It's true. Women who incorporate lingerie into their evening wardrobes — with aplomb — do know some sartorial secrets. Here are some hints:

Watch the fabrics. Not all lingerie can incorporate itself into a cocktail look. Polished cottons, satins and silks work best. Probably best to avoid the filmy chiffons.

If you'd like to wear a robe as an evening jacket, substitute the fabric belt with a real one. Otherwise, you probably will look like you're wearing a bathrobe.

Combine one very feminine item into a tailored ensemble for a chic look. Avoid a flowing jacket with flowing pants and camisole. Better: a lacy camisole (or jeweled bustier) under a sleek double-breasted blazer and matching cigarette slacks.

DEAR ABBY

Motorists who toss their trash leave lasting mark

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I live on a well-traveled road, and you would be amazed at how much garbage people throw out of their car windows. I wonder what they think happens to all that stuff?

Van Buren

We pick up the trash from our yard, and the amount of plastic, glass, metal and paper we collect is unbelievable.

Please ask your readers to keep some kind of sturdy bag or container in their vehicles for their trash, and empty it in an appropriate receptacle when they reach their destination. It takes so little effort to keep our countryside clean. — GEORGE MILLICHAMP, ONTARIO, CANADA

DEAR MR. MILLICHAMP: Thanks for a timely reminder. Two years ago I published an item that received high marks from schoolteachers in the USA and Canada. It was suggested that I publish it at least once a year. And here it is:

DEAR ABBY: I saw this interesting bit of information in an office of one of our national parks last summer. I think it should have been handed to everyone who entered the park. Perhaps if people knew how long it takes for some of the "litter" to decompose, they would think twice before tossing any kind of litter out of their car windows.

THE TIME IT TAKES LITTER TO DECOMPOSE:

Paper	2 to 5 months
Orange peels	6 months
Milk cartons	5 years
Filter-tip cigarette butts	10 to 12 years
Plastic bags	10 to 20 years
Leather shoes	25 to 40 years
Nylon cloth	30 to 40 years
Plastic containers	50 to 80 years
Aluminum	90 to 100 years
Plastic foam	NEVER

Litter cleanup in our national parks alone costs taxpayers $15 million per year!

Abby, I hope you think this is worth space in your widely read column. -- ELAINE D. BAUM, HOUSTON

DEAR MS. BAUM: It is. And thank you for a worthwhile addition to this space.

DEAR ABBY: My son recently announced his engagement. When I told my next-door neighbor (we have lived next door for 25 years and have been friends, taking care of each other's property during vacations etc.), she said she hoped there wasn't a baby on the way! (There isn't.)

This really made me quite angry, but I was so taken aback by such a cruel and insensitive remark I replied, "I certainly hope not!"

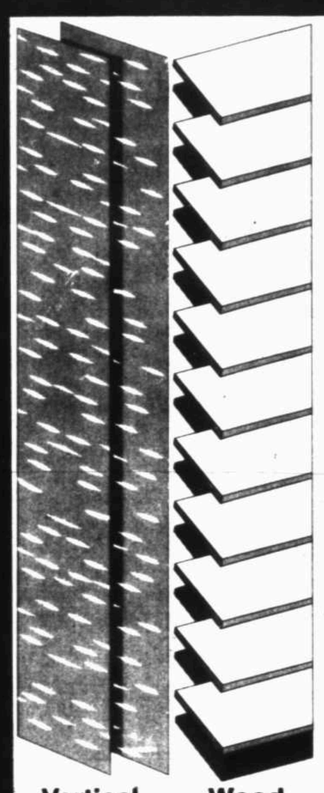

The more I thought about this, the angrier I became. Now that plans are being made, I don't feel like including her name on the guest list. What would you do? — A SAN CARLOS, CALIF., READER

DEAR READER: After a friendship of 25 years, I would forgive the neighbor for her tasteless remark and invite her to the wedding.

People are eating them up! For Abby's favorite recipes, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Cookbooklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Research suggests Vitamin C may boost smoker's sperm count

Men who smoke and want to have children may boost their chances by taking vitamin C tablets.

Carper

New research by Dr. Earl B. Dawson, a biochemist at the University of Texas Medical Branch in Galveston, shows that the sperm of heavy smokers "improves significantly" when they take either 200 milligrams or 1,000 milligrams a day of vitamin C.

After just one month, their sperm counts were higher, says Dr. Dawson, and their sperm was more active, less abnormal and less likely to stick together — all factors related to higher fertility.

It's well known that smokers have lower levels of vitamin C. Further, studies by Dr. Dawson and colleagues, have shown that many infertile males become fertile when given doses of vitamin C. In one study of infertile men, all impregnated their wives after two months of taking vitamin C. Daily doses of both 200 mg and 1,000 mg work, but "the higher dose works three times faster," says Dr. Dawson.

He notes that men after age 25 need more vitamin C for proper sperm functioning. This is especially true of men exposed to cigarette smoke, air pollution and environmental chemicals he adds.

NEW ADVICE ON INFANT DIARRHEA

Right or wrong? When a baby has diarrhea, it's best to stop regular feedings and put the infant on clear liquids for two or three days until the diarrhea goes away. That's common practice.

But it's usually unnecessary and possibly detrimental, says Dr. Peter Margolis, assistant professor of pediatrics at the University of North Carolina.

In typical mild cases of diarrhea, he found that infants fared just as well when they were kept on their regular formulas as when they were put on special liquids. In fact, his study of 176 infants showed that those who continued their regular diets recovered about three-fourths of a day earlier from diarrhea than those on special diets.

Dr. Margolis says studies from other countries also suggest that sticking to regular diets shortens the duration of the typical mild case of diarrhea that usually occurs in the first year.

He cautions, however, that in rare, severe cases where an infant is vomiting or becomes dehydrated, clear liquids may be advisable for a day or so. Also, other experts say, diarrhea can be caused by an allergy to cow's milk. If so, switching to a soy-based formula often solves the problem.

OLD FOLKS AND FAT

If you're past 60, eating fat may be more detrimental to your arteries than it is to those of someone half your age. The reason: As we age, fat is cleared more slowly from the blood, giving it more time to hang around and promote heart disease.

That's what researchers at Tufts University have found.

They tracked the levels of fats called triglycerides in the blood of older people (over 60) and younger people (under 30) after they ate a high-fat meal. According to Dr. Ernst J. Schaefer, professor of medicine at Tufts, the triglycerides stayed in the blood of the older group twice as long as in the blood of the younger group.

It's well known that high triglycerides promote heart disease, he says, especially in older women. Further, people with high levels of triglycerides usually have low levels of good-type HDL-cholesterol — the type that helps protect against heart disease. Triglycerides help break down HDL, says Dr. Schaefer, and also appear to damage artery walls.

Thus, "a high-fat American diet is more deleterious to the blood fat levels of older people than younger ones," he says.

Natural substance may trigger attacks

N.Y. Times News Service

A naturally occurring chemical may play an important role in heart attacks by constricting already damaged heart arteries.

Doctors injected the chemical, serotonin, into 14 patients, seven of whom had heart disease. They found that serotonin constricted arteries and reduced blood flow to the heart in people with a narrowing of the arteries called atherosclerosis.

By contrast, serotonin opened the arteries of seven patients without atherosclerosis, according to researcher Dr. James T. Willerson, an expert on heart disease at the Texas Heart Institute in Houston.

Another study found that serotonin may increase the crushing chest pain from angina, according to researcher Dr. Eugene P. McFadden of Hammersmith Hospital in London.

Angina is a condition in which narrowed blood vessels prevent the heart from getting enough blood.

Serotonin may contribute to or cause heart attacks in people whose arteries already are constricted, McFadden said.

"A basic understanding of the mechanism should lead to improved therapy that might someday prevent heart attacks," Willerson said.

Both studies are published in Thursday's issue of The New England Journal of Medicine.

Many people have narrow arteries as a result of the accumulation of fat in the blood, a disease called atherosclerosis.

Some people with narrowed arteries suddenly develop angina, which causes chest pain during low levels of activity or even when the person is at rest. Others with narrowed arteries may suffer heart attacks.

Heart attack victims and people with angina often are treated with aspirin to thin their blood.

All of the patients in both studies took aspirin, but it had no effect, the researchers reported.

A drug that suppresses the release of serotonin, ketanserin, prevented further constriction of blood vessels after the person was exposed to serotonin, Willerson said. Doctors refer to drugs that suppress serotonin as serotonin antagonists.

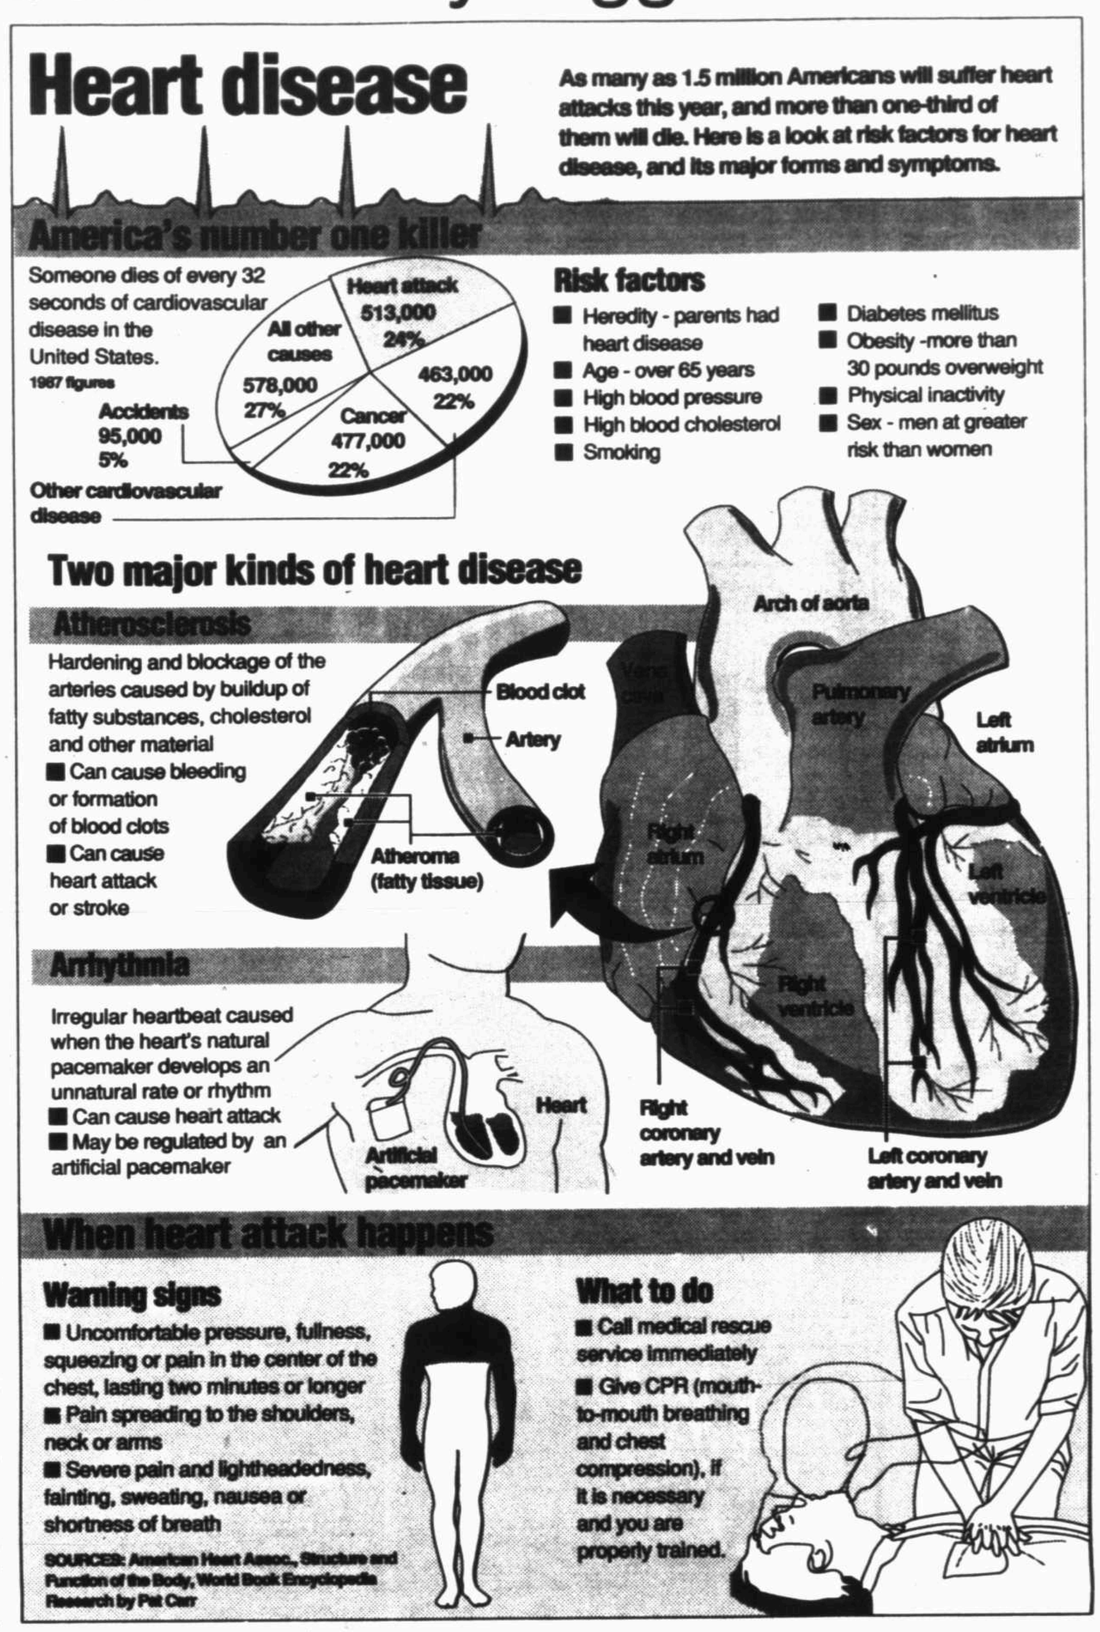

"Serotonin antagonists may be protective in patients with unstable angina and those who have had heart attacks," Willerson said. "The right antagonist might prevent heart attacks even better than aspirin."

Several serotonin antagonists besides ketanserin are being developed and studied in humans, he said.

Previous studies have found that the element of blood that helps it coagulate, called platelets, tend to group together where blood vessels are already narrow.

Platelets release serotonin, as well as other substances, which in turn cause more platelets to group together, restricting blood flow.

The cycle of serotonin release, platelet grouping and artery narrowing may explain why some people develop angina or have a heart attack, Willerson said.

Georgia to test cocaine in babies

ATLANTA (AP) — March of Dimes officials recently announced the nation's first statewide study of cocaine exposure in newborns.

A recent survey of mothers with children in the neonatal intensive care unit at Atlanta's Grady Memorial Hospital found that 16 percent had used cocaine in the days preceding delivery.

Come October, new blood-testing technology will enable researchers to look at cocaine use among all of Georgia's newborns, using blood samples already taken for other medical tests.

"How widespread is cocaine use? How do we reach these women? We don't have good answers to these questions," said Dr. Paul Fernhoff, pediatrics professor at Emory University and the study chairman.

"This will give us very accurate data on the prevalence of cocaine in the newborn population," said national March of Dimes President Jennifer Howse.

Babies born in Georgia — and most other states — already have a small blood sample taken in the first two or three days of life to test for a variety of metabolic diseases.

KEEP MIDLAND BEAUTIFUL

REDUCE, REUSE, RECYCLE

RECYCLE--

1. Save those aluminum cans -- there are several places in Midland which buy cans. There are also containers out from groups that collect them.
2. Start a recycling organization at your office, church, apartment, or school.
3. White paper (computer, typing, envelopes - without the plastic window) is a good item to recycle at the present time. There is a good market for this.
4. Recycle used motor oil and car batteries.
5. Make a compost pile for the garden using kitchen scraps and yard waste.

For more information on recycling or how to get a program started in your business or organization, call Keep Midland Beautiful at 68C-LEAN.

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals. Now is one of the best times ever to obtain a route in your area!

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?
Yes! Our current distributor force is already 75% adult and 25% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- YOUTHS who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?
Depending on the size of the route(s) from $300 to $700 monthly! Some motor routes make even more!

How long does it take?
The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributor's choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday and Sunday.

Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
