Officials Try To Avert Postal Strike Tonight

WASHINGTON (AP) — With a mail strike possible at midnight tonight, negotiators for the Postal Service and its unions today continued separate meetings with federal mediators rather than talking face-to-face.

The mediators have kept the two sides apart since Monday, when direct negotiations were halted. The mediators have talked to representatives of each side in separate rooms of a Washington hotel for the last three days and carried proposals back and forth. Wednesday's session lasted until about midnight.

A source close to the negotiations said privately: "They obviously will be together later in the day if there is anything that can be accomplished that way."

Postmaster General William F. Bolger, speaking to reporters after testifying at a congressional hearing today, said negotiators were "making progress" and he thought a strike will be averted.

"I still have confidence we are going to come out with a labor agreement tonight," Bolger said.

He said the Postal Service was prepared with standby plans in the event of a strike. These could include asking the president to consider declaring a national emergency and using other federal employees to carry the mail.

Bolger testified before the subcommittee on federal services of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee on two bills to reorganize the Postal Service. He said wants to avoid a general postal increase in the next 2½ years and that a major factor in whether that goal is met will be "whether we get a responsible labor contract tonight."

The current three-year contract expires at midnight tonight.

The major issue dividing the two sides is whether the Postal Service can fire employees to reduce its workforce.

The unions won a no-layoff clause in 1970 and say it must be included in any new contract. Postal Service negotiators want to eliminate the 25-word phrase in an effort to trim the workforce and hold down future increases in postal rates.

National union officials refuse publicly to discuss whether they would call a strike — illegal under federal law — if the midnight deadline passes. But sentiment at several locals Wednesday indicated members would follow a national strike call.

"We're prepared to go out," said the president of one Boston local.

Stephen Albanese of an American Postal Workers Union local said 100 signs had been printed and permits secured to picket several post offices.

In Cincinnati, three locals representing 4,000 workers voted Wednesday night to follow a national strike call.

And Tucson, Ariz., Postmaster Arnold Elias said 90 percent of that city's 1,000 postal workers would walk out if a national strike is called.

If walkouts occur, Postal Service contingency plans call for Bolger to ask President Carter to declare an emergency and order out federal troops to handle the mail.

Chief Federal Mediator Wayne L. Horvitz said Wednesday that differences over grievance procedures, arbitration and union recognition had been ironed out, but that "both sides ... are still far apart on several other issues."

He was not specific, but sticking points besides the no-layoff clause reportedly included wages and changes in work rules.

Negotiators for the postal workers, the Laborers International's mail handlers division and the letter carriers union want a $1,965 increase over two years in the $15,877 average postal worker's annual salary.

But the no-layoff clause was clearly the paramount dispute.

BUSINESS AS USUAL — Postal workers in parts of the nation may go out on strike at midnight, but it was business as usual in Lubbock today as mailman Rick Barrington delivers the morning mail to Babe Eakin of 3602 Orlando Ave. The strike, if it materializes, is expected to have little effect here. ## American Agriculture Loses Unity, Support

SPRINGFIELD, Colo. (AP) — The hand-painted sign says "100 percent of parity or ..."

It stands in a wheat field in the flat, high prairie where the American Agriculture movement began last fall. The wheat now stands too tall to read the sign's impotent threat: "... strike."

The tractorcades were spectacular, the marches on Washington made news. Wheat production in the United States will be down 16 percent this year, say government and private forecasters, but they add that American Agriculture had little to do with it.

The federal government required wheat farmers to reduce their acreage by 20 percent this year to qualify for federal farm-assistance programs, and 90 percent of wheat farmers in Colorado signed up, as did most farmers across the country.

And now there is dissension in the ranks. The movement has lost popular appeal, and some of the original leaders have been driven away by a new, conservative bent in the organization.

Instead of focusing on 100 percent of parity, the goal that galvanized hundreds of thousands of farmers across the country, talk and literature at American Agriculture's headquarters here focuses on the contention that an international corporate conspiracy is trying to bury the family farm in America.

Among the influential leaders in American Agriculture now, and one of the strongest supporters of the new conservatism, is Gene Schroder, a third-generation farmer and veterinarian.

"Farmers want to know why we have this cheap-food policy and who is behind it," said Schroder. "Farmers are getting a better education, and they will be back in Washington and wherever else they have to be. You'll see tractorcades and the whole works again."

Bud Bitner, one of the founders of American Agriculture, has his doubts. "I don't believe we'll see what we did last fall for a long, long time."

Bitner is at arm's length from the movement now: "I'm putting my time into farming instead of the movement." In an interview in a recent copyright story in the Denver Post, Bitner said the emerging political conservatism is disturbing.

The public, he said, perceives a once-vital, grass-roots farm movement "moving off into areas where we have no

Budget Stirs Hassle Here

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Lubbock school trustees today received written recommendations from their administrative staff on the coming year's budget. But don't bother asking about those proposals — or how they may affect your taxes.

Your elected school board members aren't talking.

"We ought to have some kind of advance study of the budget. When we begin public deliberations, that's when you come into the issue," board President Charles Waters told reporters.

Lubbock Independent School District trustees started their regular monthly meeting with a 20-minute open session on mostly routine items. The only major action was approval of a nickel increase in school lunch prices.

The board then went into what Superintendent Ed Irons said would be a "brief executive session on personnel matters." When they reconvened 40 minutes later to formally adjourn, trustees had in hand blue-covered documents titled a proposed budget for the 1978-79 school year.

School officials said that although the documents were distributed, they were not discussed during the closed session. Any such discussion would have violated the Texas Open Meetings Act.

As it stands, the district nevertheless may have run afoul of the Texas Open Records Act. However, any appeal on that point likely would be moot. By the time disclosure could be forced under the law, the school district will have already released its recommended budget.

That will happen Monday at 3 p.m. when the school board starts public work sessions on its new year's budget. The board will begin with Irons' proposed personnel plan — which trustees received last month and have since refused to release or discuss publicly.

Waters said he has researched the law and is convinced the board is not in violation.

"I don't think the public is damaged by the board studying the budget before we deliberate. For us to study the administration's recommendations about the budget serves the public interest. It certainly is not detrimental to the public interest," Waters said.

He said the administration "mentioned nothing about taxes" in its proposed budget.

Unlike the school district, the City of Lubbock administration released its proposed budget to the public and the city council simultaneously.

Waters said he hopes school taxes will be lowered this year. "The possibility is always there. I think the board is aiming in that direction."

He said he has received "eloquent, forceful letters — too numerous to keep track of," requesting a school tax cut. Most of the letters have come from the city's southwest quadrant, where homes were revalued this year for tax purposes.

The homeowners are complaining about the "dramatic rise in their evaluations as compared to four years ago," when their property was last appraised, Waters said.

Although the assessments are in line

NEWS CONFERENCE — President Carter will hold his first prime-time televised news conference at 7 p.m. (CDT) today. He will answer questions on the economic summit and other issues.

Briscoe Adds Work For Special Session

AUSTIN (UPI) — Gov. Dolph Briscoe today expanded the agenda of the special legislative session for the second time in two days, asking legislators to consider bills dealing with transfer of state property from one agency to another and dealing with contributions to the Social Security Trust Fund.

Briscoe's expansion of the agenda and a lack of progress on tax relief and limitation items proposed earlier killed senators' hopes for ending the special session by Friday. The Senate met only 15 minutes, then adjourned for the weekend.

The governor's message to legislators asked for consideration of a bill transferring certain units of the Texas Youth Council to the Department of Corrections and concerning state contributions on behalf of employees to the Social Security Trust Fund.

The House had little business on its agenda today, but committees continued hearings on a series of bills and proposed constitutional amendments dealing with tax relief and limits.

Rep. Wayne Peveto, D-Orange, is attempting for a third time to win approval of his property tax reform bill, but one House member says the program Peveto supports is too costly.

Peveto tried to pass the property reform bill during the last two regular sessions of the Legislature. His proposal also would establish uniform appraisal standards throughout the state and provide for uniform reappraisal of all taxable property in Texas.

However, Rep. Joe Wyatt, D-Bloomington, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, was skeptical about Peveto's bill and other proposals Peveto is supporting. The Ways and Means Committee began public testimony on the Peveto bill about four hours after Briscoe announced he wanted the Legislature to consider property tax reform.

Peveto said he also favored passage of a proposal giving all homeowners a $10,000 exemption on property taxes and an additional $10,000 exemption for persons over 65.

Peveto's bill also includes a provision by which family farms and ranches would be taxed according to productive value rather than market value.

The taxation of agricultural land according to productive value would save farmers and ranchers about $250 million while legislative projection costs of the homestead exemption proporal have been calculated at between $650 million and $850 million.

"I think the Legislature ought to think about this for a long time before it goes in that direction," Wyatt said. "You're committing yourself to a lot of expense for a long time if you go in that direction and I think you would be committing to a tax bill."

Peveto also said his bill and the other proposals he favors could not be enacted if the Legislature passed legislation repealing the utility sales tax and raising the inheritance tax exemptions.

"We can't passed both. There isn't enough money in the state treasury," Peveto said.

Both the House and the Senate have passed bills repealing the utility sales tax and raising the inheritance tax exemption. Wyatt authored the House version of those bills.

Heat Wave Eases Grip On Plains

A-J News Services

The heat has eased from excruciating to merely uncomfortable.

The forecast calls for temperatures in the mid-90s today, near 70 tonight and low 90s Friday, after a week of 100-degree-plus readings in Lubbock and the South Plains.

Although rain is not forecast for the Lubbock vicinity, widely scattered thunderstorms are expected to roam across parts of the Panhandle and the South Plains today.

No relief was in sight for the heat-scorched Dallas-Fort Worth area, though. Weathermen predicted that temperatures there would be 100 or over for the 19th straight day.

Lubbock had its string of four 100-degree days broken with a 95-degree reading Wednesday.

Reports from around the state included 3.08 at Palacios, .25 at Galveston, .04 at Victoria, .19 at Beaumont-Port Arthur and .01 at Houston.

Lubbock had its last rain, .13, on June 30. The National Weather Service has recorded 7.55 here to date this year, considerably below the 9.28 recorded to this point last year.

James Brown Out Of Jail

BALTIMORE (AP) — Singer James Brown has been released from the City Jail after one of his lawyers paid a $5,000 bond for the soul singer who was jailed on a contempt of court charge.

"I feel that I've given my life to my country and when they could have helped me, they weren't there," Brown said Wednesday when he was freed. He added a "God bless you" and thanks to his supporters.

Lawyers for Brown tried throughout Tuesday and Wednesday to resolve the singer's legal problems, which stem from a civil suit over the $175,000 he owes the former owners of radio station WEBB here.

A U.S. marshal arrested Brown in New York Monday after Judge C. Stanley Blair issued a contempt of court order for the singer's failure to show up for a May 24 court hearing and failure to produce financial records demanded by WEBB's former owners.

Brown agreed Wednesday night that WEBB would be placed in receivership.

Book Says Actress Had Cancer

NEW YORK (AP) — Joan Crawford did not kill herself in 1977 but "most likely ... had cancer of the liver or pancreas," a new biography of the actress reveals.

MISS CRAWFORD

According to excerpts published in the August issue of Ladies' Home Journal, Miss Crawford's possible illness was not diagnosed because "she had returned to the faith she had discovered in the 1930s, Christian Science. She would not see a doctor or take any medicine."

In fact, insists author Bob Thomas, the Academy Award-winning actress died while watching televised soap operas as her housekeeper and an unnamed fan, in a nearby room, ate a breakfast the star had prepared for them.

The biography by Thomas, a Los Angeles reporter for The Associated Press, is scheduled for publication in September by Simon & Schuster. It is entitled "Joan Crawford."

The published article also alleged that Miss Crawford beat her four adopted children, two of whom she left out of her will, and had an affair with the late Clark Gable. The affair might have ended in marriage, the book indicates, had it not been for interference from MGM studio head Louis B. Mayer.

O'Brien Ready To Take Stage

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Actor Pat O'Brien is scheduled to be back on stage Saturday evening after surgery to replace a battery in a run-down pacemaker, a spokesman for the Country Dinner Playhouse says.

Don Mutnick, vice president and director of operations at the theater, said Wednesday the role is being filled by A.D. Cover, who just closed in another production of "The Second Time Around." The 78-year-old O'Brien missed a week of performances.

Doctors said the depleted battery in the device that regulates his heartbeat caused O'Brien to become overly tired.

Taylor Caldwell Marries Again

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Novelist Taylor Caldwell has married for a fourth time, the Buffalo Evening News says.

The newspaper, in its Wednesday editions, said the 77-year-old Miss Caldwell married her manager, Robert Prestie of Palm Springs, Calif., earlier this month.

A housekeeper at Miss Caldwell's Buffalo home said she knew nothing about the reported marriage and that the author was out of town.

Miss Caldwell and Prestie, 60, were married July 6 in Erie, Pa., by Sophie Hogan, a justice of the peace, the Evening News said.

According to the newspaper, the couple met in Hollywood about two years ago when Prestie was assigned as her escort during the filming of a television series based on her novel, "Captains and the Kings." The paper said he subsequently became her manager.

Shcharansky Goes To Prison

MOSCOW (AP) — Convicted Jewish dissident Anatoly Shcharansky has been sent to Vladimir Prison, a penal institution about 100 miles east of Moscow, members of his family say.

Leonid Shcharansky, Anatoly's brother, said Wednesday his 70-year-old mother and his ailing 74-year-old father went to Lefortovo Prison in Moscow and were told they could not see their son because he had been moved to Vladimir Prison.

He said they were "very upset." They were carrying a parcel of goods for Shcharansky, including clothes and books.

Shcharansky was sentenced last Friday to 13 years at hard labor for treasonous espionage and anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda.

NY-Style Hot Dogs Unlawful

Now, after mortgaging his home to buy four carts to dispense "Mad Dogs" on downtown's Capitol Square, Elson knows.

State health officials say "Mad Dogs" don't cut the mustard and are threatening to close down his business. But rather than folding up his brightly colored umbrellas, Elson relishes the controversy.

The problem is the state code under which Elson was granted a license to run mobile restaurants.

Roy Clary of the Department of Health and Social Services says Elson was granted the license on the assumption that the young vendors he has hired would be selling pre-wrapped sandwiches.

His carts are adequate for that, but Clary says the hotdogs constitute "food preparation," and that is another matter.

Clary says Elson's pushcarts, on the streets here since June, don't have enough sinks and water tanks to prepare and then sell food.

Clary has asked Dane County District Attorney James Doyle Jr. to act. Doyle says he is waiting for an opinion from Attorney General Bronson La Follette on whether putting a frankfurter, sauerkraut and chili on a bun is food preparation.

"Boy, that's food preparation if I've ever seen it," Clary says.

Elson says it would be impossible to re-equip each $3,500 pushcart — he would have to have four sinks instead of one and carry 40 gallons of water instead of 10.

Elson, a practicing lawyer, says he is sure that selling "Mad Dogs" is not food preparation. But he's less certain about staying in business.

"I'd bet everything that I own that I am right in terms of the interpretation of the law," says Elson, "but down the road what good would that do me?"

Pending La Follette's decision, Elson is sticking by the stance he took when officials first moved in: "I said, drop dead, I'm selling hot dogs; try to get the license away from me."

Clary says Elson's pushcarts would be legal in New York City, under the U.S. Public Health Service code. But Wisconsin has stricter requirements for mobile restaurants.

Elson says his future plans are to improve "Mad Dogs" by using the same frankfurters sold from New York's pushcarts. But Clary says he's not interested in sampling Elson's wares — not since he saw Elson try to prove his hot dogs were pre-cooked by tearing open a package with his teeth and eating a couple.

"That," Clary said, "is certainly not a food handling practice we would condone."

Pacific Container Ships Collide

KODIAK, Alaska (AP) — Two container ships were ripped open following a head-on collision in dense fog and one of the crippled vessels was in danger of sinking, the Coast Guard said.

The two ships, the Star-K based in Greece and the Taiwan Phoenix out of Singapore, collided early Wednesday, said Coast Guard spokesman Dan Dewell. The accident occurred about 600 miles south of Kodiak.

None of the approximately 75 men aboard the two vessels was injured.

Deweld said the forward 60 feet of the 560-boot Star-K is "missing or peeled back underwater," from the main deck to below the waterline. That left one bulkhead between cargo holds "exposed directly to the sea."

Crewmen aboard the Coast Guard cutter Jarvis said the Star-K requires heavy chains, shored-up bulkheads and a trim of loose underwater plating before it can be taken in tow, Dewell said.

Aboard the 592-foot Taiwan Phoenix, all machinery on the forward deck disappeared in the crash, Dewell said. The vessel had a 75-foot gash on the starboard side and a 90-foot gash on the port side, he said.

Major damage was underwater but a collision bulkhead was intact, Dewell said. Containers stacked three high on the main deck were damaged and "may jettison themselves if the ship takes a heavy roll."

He said the master of the Taiwan Phoenix planned to wait for a Coast Guard escort or commercial tug before leaving the area, because of fear that hull plates might tear off.

Dewell said the Jarvis, based in Honolulu but in the area on a fishing patrol, was pumping water out of a hold aboard the Star-K so adjacent bulkheads could be inspected.

Local Suit Unaffected By Ruling

A lawsuit challenging Lubbock's at-large city council election will be affected little by a Supreme Court decision on a similar case involving Dallas, attorneys on the Lubbock case said Wednesday.

Dan Benson, one of the lawyers, said the Supreme Court "apparently said we have to decide each case on its merits and facts."

The Supreme Court refused to declare the Dallas system of electing city council members from both single-member districts and at-large unconstitutional. The court remanded the case to a lower court for re-examination.

Attorney Gene Gaines filed a class action suit against Lubbock in 1976 seeking to have the city's at-large election method declared unconstitutional.

Gaines, who is moving to Dallas, has been replaced as one of the plaintiffs in the case by Rev. Roy Jones, local NAACP president.

Benson estimated the case would go to trial in October or November, but said any decision would probably be appealed to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals and possibly to the Supreme Court.

COMMUNITY CANNERY — Johnny Goforth and his mother, Audrey Wilson, were among the first to take advantage of the Startown Cannery when it reopened this week. # Community Cannery Reopens With Bang

STARTOWN, N.C. (AP) — The line formed early. Folks with bushel baskets of home-grown beans, tomatoes and corn waited for the reopening of the Startown Cannery, where they pack their vegetables in open-topped cans then sit back while the cannery does the messy work.

The cannery, which had been closed a year for repairs and improvements, opened its doors at 7:30 a.m. Tuesday. By 9:30, about 600 cans of vegetables had been canned, and Catawba County do-it-yourself canners were still pouring into the small clapboard building.

Inside the cannery, above the clanging of cans and hissing of steam, Randy Sigmon, cannery operator, calmly directed things.

"Anyone can bring food in to be canned, even if they don't know how," he said "There's not that much to it. You pack your beans in cans, and then we take over."

All customers have to do is clean the food, wash out the cans and add seasoning or water.

Betty Huss of Valdese, in neighboring Burke County, said she has been coming to the cannery for years.

"If you've ever canned 96 jars of beans in one day, you'd drive down here," she said. "It would take two days of steady work at home to can what I've canned this morning, and we like beans."

Mrs. Joe Wright of Lawndale in Cleveland County agreed. "I'm just not going to can at home. It's just too easy to come over here."

She said she stopped canning when the cannery closed last year. "I froze some things, but it's just too messy to can at home. It's too hard," she said.

Sigmon said it costs only 22 cents a can to put away food at the Startown facility.

He said that after the customers fill cans with food, the cans are put through a steam tunnel which pushes air out and raises the temperature to 150 degrees Fahrenheit as required by the Department of Agriculture.

Inventories Up At U.S. Feedlots

WASHINGTON (AP) — New figures by the Agriculture Department show that farmers and ranchers still have not begun an all-out move to rebuild the nation's cattle herd, the reserve that produces most of the consumer red meat supply.

The signal was included Wednesday in a quarterly 23-state inventory of cattle being fattened for slaughter in feedlots as of July 1. Those states produce about 95 percent of the nation's beef.

About 10.9 million head were in feedlots as of July 1, a 12 percent increase from a year ago. Of those, about 4.68 million were heifers and heifer calves, a 20 percent increase from July 1 of last year.

Eldon Ball, a USDA livestock economist, said that the "dramatic" increase in feedlot heifers was "indicative that farmers and ranchers are not yet rebuilding the cowherd" by holding the females back for breeding.

Cattle producers severely reduced their herds the last three years because of depressed market prices. Much of this was accomplished by sending cows and heifers to market instead of keeping them for breeding.

Although relatively high cattle prices have revived the feedlot business, many producers apparently still are not convinced enough to begin a general rebuilding of cowherds, the foundation of the beef supply.

Choice-grade steer prices soared to around $62 per 100 pounds in early June but then tumbled sharply after President Carter opened the door to more beef imports the remainder of this year. However, after dropping to around $52, prices recently have recovered somewhat and earlier this week were about $54.50 per 100 pounds on the Omaha market, Ball said.

Despite the sharp drop last month, preliminary figures show that choice steers averaged about $55.70 per 100 pounds in the second quarter of this year, up almost $10 from the first three months.

Ball said that steer prices may average in a range of $54 to $55 in the third quarter and then may strengthen in the fall.

If this develops, retail beef prices probably will remain near their current levels. Those have set new records this summer, according to USDA statistics.

The cattle report said that 6.53 million head were placed in feedlots during April-June, up 9 percent from the same quarter of last year. Sales totaled 6.59 million head, up 7 percent.

Looking ahead, the report said that cattle feelers expect to market 6.6 million head during July-September, a 7 percent increase from the third quarter of last year.

Although there are more feedlot cattle, fewer "non-fed" animals used mainly to make hamburger and other processed beef are going to market.

Bitter Bill To Swallow

"A GOOD DRUG," says FDA commissioner Donald Kennedy, "is one that does what you want, without doing much damage elsewhere." But judging the safety and medical effectiveness of drugs never has been an easy matter—as recent efforts to write a definitive federal drug law have shown.

The administration has proposed sweeping changes in current regulations. If it is enacted, the bill would be the first major revision in the nation's drug laws since 1962.

NOW AT THE subcommittee stage in the House and the Senate, passage will depend on the kind of alchemy Congress can devise to appease consumer groups and the drug companies, both of whom find fault with major elements in the legislation.

Under legislation as it is offered, consumers could buy new drugs much sooner after their development than is now the case; consumers would also have access to far more information about the health risks of all drugs. In addition, the FDA, which monitors the drug trade, would be given broader power to pull hazardous compounds off the market.

Its most controversial aspect could be a provision to make public data relating to the safety testing of new drugs. As part of the requirement, a generic (or non-brand name) standard would be issued as the final step before marketing. Proponents say such information is vital to lowering the cost of medicine and protecting buyers from the modern equivalent of snake oil.

On the other hand, most drug manufacturers oppose full disclosure on the ground that it would reveal trade secrets. "If we had to say the administration bill or none at all," said Joseph Stetler of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Assn., "we would say none."

The Health Research Group charges that the FDA has yet to come up with a foolproof way to guard the public against false data summaries submitted by drug companies. HEW officials disagree.

"There's so much in this bill for both the drug houses and for the (consumerists) of this world," said HEW staffer Eileen Shanahan. "But we're getting shot at from both sides."

IT'S ARGUABLE whether drug company officials should be held criminally liable, as consumer advocates suggest, for "the improper manufacture" of medicine. As it is now written, the bill would make such officials subject to civil proceedings.

There is also a growing apprehension that Congress may give in to industry pressure and weaken the testing information requirement, considered by many to be the backbone of the legislation.

Ironically, drugs strong enough to work wonders for us are also strong enough to do us great harm. Here. Try one of these...

Why Not The Less?

"OUT OF EVERY dollar anybody makes or gets, 40 cents is being spent for him by the bureaucrats whom he has, through his voting behavior, put into office."

So says Dr. Milton Friedman, nobel laureate in economics, writing in the summer issue of Policy Review, the Heritage Foundation's public policy quarterly.

Right now, Friedman explains, total government spending—state, federal and local—amounts to 40 percent of the national income.

He adds:

"There is upward pressure on that percentage. The screws will be put on. The real problem for the future is to stop that growth in government spending."

Friedman, encouraged by the approval of Proposition 13 in California and by Tax Revolt reverberations in states and cities across the land, warns that the problem at the national level goes beyond merely "balancing" the budget.

"ALMOST ALL states have a balanced budget provision," he points out, "but that hasn't kept spending and taxes from going up.

"What we need on the federal level, as we need it on the state and local level, is not a budget-balancing amendment but an amendment to limit government spending as a fraction of income."

Friedman continues:

"As long as high government spending remains, we shall have the hidden tax of inflation. The only true tax cutting proposal would be a proposal to cut government spending.

"To my knowledge, no one in Washington has yet proposed a genuine tax cutting bill, not President Carter, not the Democrats in Congress, not the Republicans.

"Every single so-called 'tax-cut plan' still envisions a higher level of government spending next year and consequently a higher level of taxes, both overt and covert."

FRIEDMAN BELIEVES that fiscal conservatives have made a mistake by concentrating on the federal deficit rather than on total federal spending.

"I would far rather have total federal spending at $200 billion with a deficit of $100 billion than a balanced budget at $500 billion," the famed economist says.

Whether the $500 billion is obtained through taxes or by "creating or borrowing" money, in Friedman's view the effect is the same.

That's why he looks upon tax limitation laws such as that created by California's Proposition 13 as "temporary stop-gaps."

"They are a way of trying to hold back the tide," he writes, "until public opinion moves in the direction that those of us who believe in limited government hold to be desirable."

GOVERNMENT spending began to get out of hand in the 1930s, Friedman recalls.

Before then, he points out, "there was a widespread belief on the part of the public that government should be limited and that danger arose from the growth of government. President Grover Cleveland maintained, for instance, that while the people should support their government, the government should not support the people."

Even President Woodrow Wilson "remarked that the history of liberalism was the history of restraints on government power," Friedman says. "Almost everyone then agreed that the role of government was to act as a referee and umpire and not as a Big Brother."

Once this fundamental attitude changed, he says, constitutional restrictions became very much less effective against the growth of government."

AFTER FOUR DECADES of passively accepting a growth in spending by government at all levels, taxpayers are beginning to realize that it can only get worse if they do not rise up and bring it under control themselves, Friedman says.

"The vested interests (which have caused spending to rise) are not some big bad people sitting on money bags," he asserts. "The vested interests are you and me.

"Each of us is strongly in favor of small measures that will benefit us and each of us is not too strongly opposed to any one small measure that will benefit someone else...

"The purpose of tax limitation is to remedy that defect. It will enable us to say to the legislature, 'We assign you a budget. Now it's your job to spend that in the most effective way.'"

Why Didn't We Fight To Win?

WASHINGTON—Yes, we should keep on thinking about the Vietnam war; but no, Harpers Magazine is not right in the premise of its two-part article, "After Vietnam." The premise is that that nation is still drenched with war-guilt, and should be.

The first article of this double-header is by a Family Research professor at George Washington University, Jeffrey Jay, and he starts off with lamenting that Vietnam brought out the worst in its Americans combatants—a will to kill.

He begins with the confessions of a disturbed veteran who declared in a V.A. hospital, "I got to say it. I loved killing. At the same time I know it was terrible."

EXCEPT THAT IT was a much more personal war, Vietnam was no different from trench warfare anywhere else.

The only mistake we made in Vietnam was not to make the all-out push to win. President Nixon brought this out toward the end when he sent the B-52s over Hanoi and mined the Haiphon harbor to choke off reinforcements.

Had we had this sort of leadership all the way, there would not now be these repeated and belated attempts to make us ashamed of ourselves. Prof. Jay offers this list of self-punishments:

(1) MASS CONFESSIONALS by political leaders and policymakers who are to acknowledge that they wrongly supported the war and tell how they learned better since;

(2) Sit-ins and teach-ins to review and analyze America's entrance and participation in the Vietnam war;

(3) Churches to examine the morality of war;

(4) Renewed investigaions of war crimes on the battlefield;

(5) Reparations to the "people" of Vietnam, though not to their government;

(6) Liberalized immigration laws to take in Orientals made homeless by the war and by the commnist actions taken since the war.

The second part of the article is titled "The Myth of Public Innocence," and its theme is the same—national guilt. The author, Harrison Rainie, takes the line that the American people, somewhat like the German people during Hitler's slaughter of the Jews, knew about it all the time, but pretended otherwise.

His premise is that it was wicked of us to bomb North Vietnam, thereby carrying the fight to an attacking enemy and abandoning the pretense that we were merely defending the home government at Saigon.

But the fault in such an assumption is that it supposes wars are fought to obtain a draw. It is the no-win policy, the one that began our decline as a great and moral power.

There is only one reason for a nation of our strength and ideals to fight a war, and it is our enlightened self-interest.

The most obvious self-interest is to repel invasion, and that can be extended to protecting strategic points, of which Cuba is the plainest example.

American self-interest may also encompass the chopping down of a rival which is clearly an enemy and clearly planning our destruction in the foreseeable future. The plainest example, of course, is the Soviet Union.

These are the lessons we should take from the Vietnam experience. The war was immoral if it had the selfish or frivolous purpose of lining John Kennedy's re-election, for there is no national interest there.

The war was right and just if it was fought to put a crimp in the Communist world conquest. If that was the reason, there is no sense in denying that we should have fought it to win.

Love's Not Measured By Price Of Funeral

(Second In A Series)

NEVER BEFORE IN modern history has the whole subject of dying and death itself been so openly accepted and debated.

Never before has the Process of dying been such "popular entertainment." On Broadway, some of '78's most successful shows deal with death and are playing to standing-only audiences.

On the booksellers' lists, some of the biggest bestsellers are devoted to death and dying.

Now comes the powerful Federal Trade Commission with the toughest regulations ever proposed to curb the outrageous abuse among the unscrupulous fringe in the $6.4 billion a year funeral industry.

IT SEEMS A virtual certainty that some controls will be slapped on before summer ends—no matter what threats of court fights are made by the infuriated National Funeral Directors Assn.

But what about the guides to help you, the emotionally distraught survivor, help yourself?

No rules can protect you from your own errors if you are utterly ignorant of the traps that lie before you, and if you have had no "death education" whatsover. You are and always will be an easy target.

Thus, here are your fundamental guides.

* BE SKEPTICAL even of the advice given you by your closest friends and relatives. They may have the best intentions, but when you are in this deep trouble, you need help from experts who have the full information and background.

* If no prior arrangements have been made and if you are in a state of befuddlement, ask a sensible, levelheaded friend or relative, who knows what the family can affor to help you with the arrangements.

* Give this person the authority to help you find a licensed, reasonable funeral director who will cooperate in arranging for the type of funeral you want.

* IF A MEMBER of the family dies in a distant place and the body is to be shipped home, investigate both railroad and plane fares for such transportation.

Railroads require the purchase of two tickets, whether or not the body is accompanied. Airlines do not.

* If the body is cremated near the place of death, the small container of ashes can be mailed by parcel post or carried on a suitcase.

* Get advice—from your lawyer, minister, friends—on the arrangements you will make before you authorize any given mortician to remove the body from home or hospital.

Obviously, once a mortician takes custody of a body, his bargaining power is multiplied. Note: most large hospitals will keep a body for at least a day, and often longer, while you make arrangements.

* IF A BANK OR law firm is the executor of the deceased's estate, ask the appropriate officials to help arrange economical sevices. Don't permit a mortician to make you feel guilty if you try to economize.

* If the funeral costs must be financed out of borrowed funds until the estate is settled, find out what interest rates will be charged by the lending source.

* Steer clear of expensive frills, such as costly "burial" vaults to enclose the casket, costing up to $150 or even more. Unless the cemetery requires these vaults, you can omit this expense entirely.

* If your family is in a serious financial squeeze, tell the facts to your funeral director. If he's reputable, he will make allowances for your circumstances.

* IF YOU PLAN TO buy a cemetery plot, find out if the cemetery participates in a nationwide lot exchange plan under which, if you move to another area, you can trade one plot for another.

* If you want to donate your body (or part of it) for medical teaching PurPoses, transplants, etc., write to the medical or dental school of your choice and ask for details on how to go about it in your area.

* Wait a few months or even years, until the shock is dulled and you've regained your balance, before you buy expensive markers or memorials.

Traditions Are Scots-Guarded

LINVILLE, N.C.—From far away you can see the flags rippling in the winds off Grandfather Mountain—flags of the United States, flags of Scotland, flags of the different clans—and drawing a little closer, you hear the bagpipes thrumming.

These are the Highland Games. They warm the heart.

The same excitement, I am certain, imbues any gathering as colorful as this one.

This week we have Indians camping in Washington.

In other times and other places, we delight in gatherings of Poles, Germans, Greeks, Italians and Irish.

When Mrs. Agnes MacRae Morton started these Highland Games 23 years ago, only a handful of clans showed up.

Gradually, with every passing year, the number of pavilions has grown.

LAST WEEKEND, representatives of nearly 90 Scottish clans were on hand.

The Parade of Tartans began with the Andersons, Bairds, Bruces and Buchanans; it continued gloriously through the MacArthurs, MacDonalds, MacGregors and MacNeils; and it wound up as the Stewarts, Sutherlands and Wallaces marched by.

There were twelve to fifteen thousand Americans of Scottish descent.

They had come to compete in Scottish games, to delight in Scottish dances, and to sing the Scottish songs.

And some of them had come to enjoy other products of Scotland as well.

BUT WHY, TRULY, had they come to Grandfather Mountain? They came for the same reason that so many millions of Americans found themselves enthralled last year by "Roots."

In our own restless, uneasy, fast-moving society, men hunger for stability, for order, for the long breath of time.

We understand, if only dimly, that our generation is but a tick of the clock in the continuum of human history, but we long to identify with the ticks of the clock that have gone before.

The flags speak of the past—lions rampant, daggers red-tipped, swords and shields.

The flags speak of heads crowned and heads mitred, of thrones lost and won, of standards carried into some desperate clash of arms.

This is how Camelot must have been when Guinevere went to the fair—with the flags flying, the blue and gold pavilions shining in the sun, the booths and tents and strolling players.

HONOR THY FATHER and thy mother. It is an ancient admonition. People will not look forward to posterity, said Burke, who do not look backward to their ancestors.

The same emotion that motivated Alex Haley in his pilgrimage to a Gambian village, the same desires that impelled the Indians' long march to Washington—these brought the Scots to these green meadows.

We are tied, all of us, by an umbilical cord that links us to the wombs of family, tribe or clan.

The Scots, like others, have their sacramentals. The bagpipes may not be to everyone's taste—to some ears a piping band sounds merely like a convention of tomcats—but the Scottish games and dances have a universal appeal.

THIS YEAR'S STAR was a burly Scotsman, William Anderson, a gentleman built along the lines of a kettledrum, whose art was to turn the cabar.

The cabar, for the record, is a 20-foot telephone pole weighing from 80 to 120 pounds. The Scots throw the clachnaert, a 16-pound stone; they toss a heavy sheaf of straw over a 20-foot wire. They dance till they drop.

These are not the rituals that men daily live by; they are the rituals we survive by.

I have kept a crested balmoral upon my bald and sunburned head, and I have communed with the spirit of our tenth Chief. He was slain at Loch Lomond a thousand years ago by a duplicitous Chief of the Clan Maclean.

Foreign Pilots Dislike Landings In Leningrad

LENINGRAD, U.S.S.R. (UPI) — "Ladies and gentlemen, we may encounter some turbulence during our approach to Leningrad. Would you kindly fasten your seat belts."

That is the pilot of a foreign airliner alerting his passengers that it may be bumpy coming down to land at Leningrad's Pulkova International Airport. Nine times in ten the bumps are not caused by nature, but by Leningrad Air Traffic Control.

"I have never seen such an operation as this," a foreign pilot confided as I sat in the cockpit of a DC-9 airliner approaching the Soviet Union's second largest city.

"Leningrad control might as well be guiding in old piston-engine DC-3s," the pilot said. "That is what they are gaared for — not the jet age."

This airline has an official policy under which pilots may refuse to fly to Leningrad without disciplinary action ensuing.

So what about that fake turbulence?

"While most international airports in the world give you clearance to descend from 9,000 meters (27,000 feet) to 1,000 meters (3,000 feet) gradually so the passengers don't feel it, this airport works quite the opposite," the pilot said.

"It is almost as if the Russians want you to know you are flying.

"Here we have to go through five separate descent altitudes before we touch down, and when Leningrad Air Traffic Control tells you to go down from 9,000 to 6,000 meters, you better do it fast unless you want MiGs on your tail.

"That's why many of us announce that there may be some turbulence. It is like jumping down from one step to the next.

"Then there is that gray area between 200 meters (600 feet) and touchdown. That's when you switch from appgoach control to ground control, and if there is any emergency then, God help you."

The pilot explained that if nothing extraordinary happens, there is really no problem in landing at Leningrad except for some passengers' queasy stomachs.

"But let's say I had an engine failure coming in. I tell you I'd rather return home on one engine than advise the controller of an emergency situation.

"Today we have it pretty good. At least they don't use an interpreter, as they did a couple years ago, but if you exceed their 200-word English vocabulary in guiding you down they are lost, and I mean really lost."

Another pilot for another Western airline said:

"Once Leningrad Control told me to be on the lookout for a plane flying, would you believe it, 'across my flight path from my right side.'

"I asked for the altitude of this aircraft. Leningrad control did not know, or did not understand. There was silence. So I just went in on regular approach and we missed the other plane. By how far I don't know and I don't want to know."

Our conversation with Leningrad control was in English, but all during the descent voices broke into Russian from pilots and navigators of domestic aircraft.

"I don't understand Russian," said the pilot. "If it is an international airport then all conversation should take place in English according to international air navigation rules.

"There could be a Russian plane 100 meters below or above us and there is no way for us to know. We have to put our complete trust into air traffic control."

In the Russian radio traffic we could hear there was much swearing and simple chatter associated with grass landing fields, like: "Hi, Valodia, this is Alexei, okay if I land? What do you mean, no? I've got some goodies from Odessa." We recorded that exchange coming from an Aeroflot airliner.

Foreign pilots say that as soon as they pass Helsinki air traffic control and go over to Leningrad they have to ask Soviet authorities to turn on a guidance beacon which directs planes to Leningrad.

"It's not in constant operation," one pilot said. "The reason is simple. The Russians are very suspicious of foreigners. This beacon homes in on Leningrad airport, and any attacker following the beacon would know exactly where the airport is, even with cloud cover."

But surely any enemy wishing to attack the airport would know where it is in this day and age without depanding on a Russian beacon. "I know, I now. But tell that to the Russians," the pilot said.

Once on an outbound flight we were given permission to taxi to the head of the runway. At the same time an Aeroflot plane was told to land on the same runway.

"There's nothing we can do," my plane's captain said rather matter-of-factly. "If we move now it could cause more complications."

Suddenly the tower yelled "Nyet, nyet, nyet!" (no, no, no!) as an IL18 turboprop zoomed up no more than 200 feet over our heads to circle for another approach.

We took off without problems, but had to go up steps of 1,200 feet, 6,000 feet, 12,000 feet and so forth.

Foreign pilots approaching Leningrad usually ask for a simple straight-in approach, without circling.

"Most of the time this is denied," said one experienced pilot. "I don't know why. It has even been denied when we don't hear any Russian radio chatter that would indicate other planes also are trying to land or take off."

How do pilots classify Leningrad International Airport?

"Safe as long as nothing goes wrong," said one. Another said, "It is kind of fun for the pilots, but I wish there were no passengers aboard." A third said Leningrad was "typical haphazard Russian — I would say it is risky if you are carrying passengers."

"On a safety factor of 1 to 10, with 10 the highest, I would rate Leningrad 2," said still another. "Coming into Leningrad I'm just a drop in the bucket — a bucket with a lid on, at that."

One foreign airline has capitalized on the airport's shortcomings. "We use Leningrad for checkout flights," said a senior pilot, referring to those checks supervised by senior captains to see how well working pilots can handle situations.

"Flying checkout to Leningrad is the next best thing to an all-engine-stop situation on a flight simulator," a senior captain said.

New Japan Military Not Fierce

By ROBERT CRABBE

TOKYO (UPI) — As the first Japanese bombs exploded in Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941, Imperial Navy Cmdr. Mitsuo Fuchida radioed the words "Tora! Tora! Tora!" to his aircraft carriers in the rear.

"Tora" is Japanese for tiger. It was the code word to tell the fleet America had been cuught by surprise.

Almost 33 years after its shattering defeat in World War II, Japan again has an army, navy and air force. But today's Self-Defense Force, as it is called, is a cub, not a full grown tiger.

With the end of the war in 1945, the United States set out to make its defeated enemy an Asian Dwitzerland under American military protection. That was easy as long as the U.S. dollar was strong, and the Soviet Union didn't have nuclear weapons and a big navy.

The United States today remains the big wheel in a mechanism of military alliances set up to defend the non-communist world. Japan is one of the gears in the machine, with a role comparable to those of Britain and West Germany in Europe.

Increasingly, being the hub has become a financial strain for America. In May Sen. Russel D. Long, D-La., was the latest in a series of congressmen to complain that Japan wasn't paying a fair share of defense costs.

Long, who is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, made the complaint to Japanese Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda, who was visiting in Washington.

Fukuda told Long and other U.S. legislators that Japan's $8 billion military budget for 1978 is about one percent of the gross national product. That was enough, Fukuda added. The United States and West Germany spend about 5 percent of their GNP on defense.

Japan's army, navy and air force currently have a combined authorized strength of 267,700 men and women, the smallest of any country in North Asia. They include an army of 180,000 men, most of them posted on the northern island of Hokkaido, the part of Japan lying closest to the Soviet Union. All are volunteers. There is no conscription.

The once mighty fleet that challenged the U.S. Navy for supremacy in the Pacific in 1941-45 today has no ships larger than destroyers.

The Japanese air force consists mostly of American fighters, and will be updated when Japan brings in its first McDonnell Douglas F15 fighterbombers this year. There are no long range bombers, no aircraft carriers, and no bases outside Japan.

The United States has had troops in Japan since the end of World War II. As the costs of keeping troops in Japan has risen, the numbers have shrunk.

The American base stucture is largely aimed at the defense of South Korea rather than Japan itself. The Pentagon counts on Japan as a safe rear area if it ever has to conduct another defense of South Korea like the 1950-53 Korean War.

Japan's armed forces are dwarfed by those of her neighbors. China's peoples Liberation Army is about 3 million strong. The Soviet Union is believed to have about 1 million men under arms in north Asia. Both have nuclear weapons.

North Korea has about 450,000 men under arms, according to a recent study by the Brookings Institution, and South Korea about 650,000.

Actually, the Japanese "free ride" has never been entirely free, a fact not well understood in the United States. Japan pays the price of building facilities on the American bases on its soil, and some of the costs of the Japanese personnel who work there.

In Japan's 1978 fiscal year, these items will cost the Japanese taxpayer about $535 million and the Japanese contribution goes up every year. In addition, the United States hopes to realize $3 billion to $5 billion over the next 10 years in sales of F15 fighter planes and PC3 submarine patrol planes to Japan.

Japan's surface-to-air and other missiles also are bought from America. To the disappointment of U.S. defense planners, Japan opted to build its own navy vessels.

FASCISTS OVERTHROWN

After fascism was overthrown in 1943, Italy declared war on Germany and Japan and contributed to the Allied victory. Italy surrendered conquered lands and lost its colonies. Mussolini was killed by partisans on April 28, 1945.

Professors Sell Sample Books

By MALCOLM N. CARTER

NEW YORK (AP) — More and more college professors are climbing aboard a gravy train that could return as much as $10 million a year through the sale of free sample textbooks they receive, sources in the publishing industry complain.

"They're free to sell if they want to," says David Amerman, chairman of the college division of the Association of American Publishers. "But the question of ethics — a lot of professors think this is pretty cheap stuff."

He adds that it's a spreading nationwide problem that has grown in the past two years, especially in the Northeast and the Midwest.

"I don't think it's the right thing to do," says Jordan Kurland, associate general secretary of the American Association of University Professors, which has not formulated policy on the practice.

However, Wilbert McKeachie, a University of Michigan psychologist who is president of the American Association of Higher Education, draws a distinction between selling solicited or unsolicited samples.

"If the copy is unsolicited, I don't think it's wrong to sell it," McKeachie observes, "but I don't do it myself."

It is "quite common" for professors attending professional meetings to go from one publisher's booth to the next indiscriminately requesting free books for the purpose of selling them later, the psychologist continues.

Providing sample books, sometimes as many as 7,000 for a promising new title, underpins the marketing strategy of the textbook industry. The calculated gamble, a marketing expense, is that a professor will like the book enough to assign it to his classes.

Although college bookstores have long dealt in used books to accommodate students, publishers say that itinerant dealers of second-hand books have begun an agressive effort to buy the samples by actually knocking on faculty doors and offering cash.

The professors receive roughly a quarter of the retail price for the samples, which are sold to stores as new books. The publishers say these middlemen can get a nearly 200 percent profit this way by slightly undercutting the publishers, which allow a 20 percent to 25 percent margin for the stores.

Even if a professor decides to adopt the new book as his course text, the store may have obtained so many samples that it's unnecessary to order any from the publisher, according to Amerman, who is an executive of Prentice-Hall.

"It's unethical," he maintains, "but it's not illegal."

The other side of this coin is that professors in big fields such as freshman English or sociology are inundated with books they neither request nor desire. Some professors literally throw them away. Others give them away. And still others profit from them.

"Eventually they come back to us and say, 'What are we going to do with these things?'" concedes John Harney of D.C. Heath in Lexington, Mass. "What is the answer? We don't know."

The trade magazine Publisher's Weekly estimates that publishers distributed 11.7 million sample copies in 1976 and that a third of these, 3.9 million books, found their way back to the stores.

If the average book sells for $10 and if professors were paid an average 25 percent of the price, then they collected $10 million. In production costs alone, the publishers lost roughly $3 million, Harney relates.

They also lost the profits on the books, but it's the author who suffers most from unpaid royalties.

Corporate Mergers Called Similar To Marriage

By LeROY POPE

NEW YORK (UPI) — Like human marriages, corporate mergers often prove unsuccessful because of the incompatibility and even the jealousy or infidelity of people says Wsace F. Forbes, president of Standard Research Consultants of New York.

Convinced of this, Fobes spent a bundle on a study to find out if companies use psychologists and other behavioral scientists to pre-determine whether a particular corporate marriage would work.

He and Dr. Abraham K. Korman, professor of psychology at New York City University's Baruch College, got a good response to their questionnaire sent to firms ranging from $1 billion a year down to modest sales.

But the results were conclusive on only a few points:

— Executive incompatibility is a major reason why mergers fail to produce the desired results, but not the most important cause. Straight market and financial factors are more important.

— Very few companies have used the services of behavioral scientists to determine if two sets of executives can be combined happily and most of the executives responding to the questionnaire looked on the idea with skepticism.

Forbes was not greatly discouraged by this. He says the question of whether behavioral scientists can be used to evaluate executive team marriages remains open.

Only nine respondents said better foreknowledge of the personalities of executives of acquired companies would have caused them to back out of the merger. And a surprising number said the only likely effect of an attempt to use behavioral scientists would be to delay or even abort the merger.

The study brought some other interesting answers.

Several companies admitted they hired private detective agencies to investigate the personal lives of executives of companies they were considering merging with as well as activities of the company itself.

Many said the best sources of information about a company and its management were its customers and competitors and that the executives and officials of the acquiring company were more competent than behavioral scientists to get information from such sources.

A substantial number of respondents were dead against combining management teams. They said the acquired firm either should be operated as an autonomous subsidiary retaining its management or the entire management should be tossed out and replaced by people from the buying company. One said, "We always assume we'll have to replace the management. If we find otherwise, it's a pleasant surprise."

If management integration is necessary, the biggest peril comes from rushing things. Lots of time should be allowed for executives to get used to each other between the merger decision and actual consummation. This answer cropped up over and over. Some even said the transition period should be several years.

After examining all the replies, Forbes said he still asks himself if "this attitude of reserve or outright hostility" to using the services of behavioral scientists may be leading to headaches and bottom line losses.

LTV Doubts SEC Probe To Hurt Merger

By United Press International

LTV Corp. says it does not believe its planned merger with Lykes Corp. will be affected by a Securities and Exchange Commission investigation into the accounting practices of LTV and its Jones and Laughlin Steel subsidiary.

The SEC Monday supended securities trading in LTV and its subsidiaries through July 26 because of what the agency said were "questions concerning the adequacy, accuracy and reliability of certain prior financial statements of LTV."

Because of the merger plans between Lykes and LTV that were recently approved by the Justice Department, trading in the securities of Lykes and its Youngstown Sheet and Tube subsidiary also were suspended.

Dallas-based LTV previously announced the SEC was investigating its recent financial statements but the company Monday said that "as a result of developments," it had requested the trading suspension on the New York Stock Exchange. LTV did not disclose the nature of the "developments."

Despite the action, LTV said it had been advised by Chester H. Ferguson, vice chairman of the New Orleans-based Lykes, that Lykes did not believe the investigation would prevent continued preparation for the merger of Lykes and LTV that would produce the nation's third largest steel company.

Ferguson added, however, that the merger still was subject to review by the Lykes board as facts developed in the SEC probe became available.

The SEC investigation, begun last November, centers on the inventory accounting of Jones and Laughlin in 1975 and 1976 that affected earnings of both the steel subsidiary and LTV. J&L used the LIFO — last in, first out — accounting method.

"It now appears that adjustments may be required in the LIFO value of J&L inventories at year-end 1976 and probably in earlier years which would have a material adverse impact on the reported results of J&L Steel and of LTV," the company said.

LTV also said that any restatement could have a ripple affet for earnings after 1976 since retained earnings might be reduced and some deferred tax credits used in 1977 may be shifted back to prior years, widening the company's 1977 loss reported at $38.7 million.

The company said it did not know the precise impact of any of the possible financial restatements. LTV said it would continue to cooperate with the SEC investigation and would make further reports later.

Earnings Hit Record

WASHINGTON (AP) — Allegheny Airlines this week reported record after-tax earnings for the second quarter and the first half of 1978.

Second quarter earnings were $20.2 million, or $3.24 per share, up from $6.3 million, or 99 cents per share, in 1977.

During the first six months of 1978, the airline recorded earnigs of $13.2 million, compared with $3.5 million last year after restatement to include retroactive mail revenue of $7.4 million for the years 1973-1976. Gains on disposition of flight equipment in the perod totaled $8.6 million.

The carrier reported primary earnings per share of commo stock outstanding amounted to $2.13 for the first six months compared with 54 cets last year.

Edwin I. Colodny, chairman and president of Allegheny, said the "record traffic and earnings through the first half of 1978 can be attributed, in large part, to the continuing strngth of consumer spending and popularity of our variety of low fare travel plans"

Lawyer Files Suit For Name Changes

BALTIMORE (AP) — Two class-action suits have asked a city court to allow members of the Muslim faith to adopt religious names without obtaining a court order to change their names.

The suits were filed in Baltimore City Court by a lawyer for Philip Qahir Al-Mateen, who changed his name from Philip Carroll Stafford after converting to the Muslim faith in 1976. Authorities had denied his requests to have his name changes on his birth certificate and driver's license.

Calgary Reaps Many Benefits From Energy Boom

By MARTIN MERZER

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — The first things you notice are the construction cranes — beside empty lots, atop skeltons of skyscrapers, being transported by truck.

Calgary — located in the middle of North America's richest deposits of energy — is booming, bringing opportunity, development and profits to the Canadian prairie.

"You can't talk about Calgary and Alberta (the province in which Calgary lies) without smiling," said Cliff Black, director of the local Chamber of Commerce.

"There's no gloom on the horizon."

Aha, you think. The Chamber of Commerce. What would you expect it to say? But when unemployment runs at a slim 3 percent, when inflation is no higher than the national average of about 11 percent, when income taxes are below average, when there is no sales tax, and when almost everybody is making money hand over fist, it isn't easy to find malcontent.

Consider a few statistics:

— Each month, more than 1,200 people move into Calgary, and the overwhelming majority find work.

— There now are 19 major construction projects underway in the downtown area alone, in a city of 500,000 poeple.

— In 1966, building permits were issued for a total of $440 million worth of construction. In 1977, that almost doubled to $820 million. This year, the figure is expected to top $1 billion.

— More than 83,600 companies are based in the province of Alberta, with over 14,000 of them set up in the last year.

— More than 500 petroleum-related companies have head offices in Calgary.

And to top it off, Calgary is a lovely city. Called by many, the "Houston of the north," it actually has more in common with Denver. Located on the western edge of the prairie, Calgary is but 40 miles from the Rocky Mountains, portions of which stay snow-covered throughout the summer.

The city is clean, quiet and liberally garnished with trees and shrubs. Although winter temperatures can dip to 40 degrees fahrenheit below zero, in the summer daylight lasts from 6 a.m. until nearly 10 p.m., allowing plenty of time for development.

"This city's busting out all over," said Mayor Ross Alger. "And you could attribute that to the growth in the oil business and the residential development it has caused."

Calgary began booming about 11 years ago, as energy drillers found pool after pool of oil nearby. Soon, natural gas and coal were discovered, and as the price of oil increased, Alberta's staggering reserves of oil locked in sand — called oil sands or tar sands — are beginning to approach economic feasibility.

"This is the petroleum province of Canada, associated with so much of the wealth of Canada," said Alastair Gillespie, the country's energy minister. "The city and province are of immense importance to Canada and to its wealth and independence."

Alberta contains 87 percent of Canada's conventional oil reserves, 90 percent of its natural gas and 45 percent of its coal. In addition, the oil sands hold an estimated 1 trillion barrels of oil — more oil than is known to exist under Saudi Arabia.

"If only 25 percent of the oil sands is economically developed, we would have enough oil to supply all of Canada into the next century," said Peter Lockheed, Alberta's premier.

This past week, Lockheed met with Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, Saudi Arabia's oil minister, and one of the topics was believed to be the possibility of Saudi help in developing the oil sands.

All of this is important to the United States as well, since Alberta's southern border touches Montana. Albertan gas already is sold in the U.S., and more is on the way.

Revenues from gas sales have allowed the province and city to reduce taxes. The provincial income tax runs about 10 percent lower than the Canadian average and all sales taxes recently were eliminated.

Despite that, provincial revenues are so high that a "Heritage Fund" has been set up to hold money for future generations that might live in Alberta after the energy development runs its course. The fund, still growing, now contains about $4 billion.

As for Calgary, city officials are trying to solve a few growth-related problems. Public transportation is strained, housing prices are higher than average and automobile pollution occasionally becomes troublesome. Officials also are eager to attract businesses such as petrochemical firms that can take advantage of the energy supply, and they would like to see more non-energy-related business.

But on the whole, nearly everyone is pleased with the city's development.

"This is a pretty young city," said Black. "The pioneer spirit is still here. It's just impossible to look down the road and see where it will all end."

Herring Ban Displeases Europeans

BREMERHAVEN, West Germany (AP) — Germans, Dutch and Norwegians are being forced to break with one of their oldest culinary traditions as a fishing ban on North Sea herring removes the delicacy from their menus.

A sea food staple in northern Europe since the Middle Ages, herring have been so badly depleted by overfishing in recent years that North Sea catches were banned this year to give the fish a chance to replenish themselves.

Governments agreed to the ban after the North Sea herring catch plummeted from 482,000 tons in 1973 to 169,000 tons in 1976.

The herring ban and strict quotas on herring and other fish in the Baltic Sea, North Atlantic and elsewhere have been met with angry protests from fishermen, who say the conservation measures are exaggerated.

"Fish resources have to be protected, but unfair quotas are ruining our livelihood," declared Karl-Heinz Burde, manager of the Bremerhaven coastal trawlers' cooperative, one of West Germany's biggest.

In Holland, the ban is regarded as a "particular blow because herring is a national feature of the Netherlands," said Henk Kranenburg of the Dutch Trawlers' Association. "It is unprecedented in peace time and a real blow to the industry."

Dutch trawlers normally net 30,000 to 40,000 tons of herring in the North Sea in June and July, but now they will have to fish for other varieties alloted as substitutes by the Common Market.

Norway, not a Common Market member, permits fishermen to net some herring in the country's southern fjords, but not enough to meet consumer demands in Oslo, retail shops report. The Norwegian fisheries directorate is considering possible quotas for high seas herring.

Cod, sea salmon, sole and mackerel also come under quotas set by the Common Market, Iceland, Baltic countries and the United States and Canada — all claiming exclusive 200-mile fishing zones.

But only herring have been reported to be in such alarming shortage under the quota system.

"Last year, we had big barrels of herring for sale. Now we only get a few pails of imported herring from Iceland and Holland, and none from German waters," said a saleswoman in a fish shop in Bonn.

The shop, part of a national chain, sells the salted fish for 75 cents each, and charges up to $1.30 a pound for the even rarer fresh herring, once the cheapest fish in the shop.

Because of the North Sea ban and quotas elsewhere, herring consumption could drop up to 30 percent in West Germany this year, industry officials say.

Herring has annually accounted for two-thirds of the 600,000 tons of fish consumed by West Germans.

To fill the herring gap, the Germans and Dutch fishing industries are promoting other types of lesser known fish alloted to the fleets by the Common Market — blue whiting, mackerel, halibut and other types.

Rudolf Preisler, manager of the West German fish marketing institute, has urged government support for a $12-million advertising campaign to encourage notoriously conservative housewives to buy the new varieties of fish.

"It's a lot of money but an important regional industry — with nearly 40,000 jobs — is at stake," he said.

The Dutch fisheries ministry said the industry was trying to fill the herring gap with mackerel and blue whiting but it will take some years before the trawlermen accept the idea.

Yacht Rental Hurt By Drug Smuggling

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — South Florida's flourishing drug smuggling business may soon claim a new victim — the region's yacht rental industry. Brokers say they are afraid to rent out boats because too many wind up impounded by the federal Drug Enforcement Administration.

"You can't tell any more who it is that's chartering a boat," said broker Pat Moss. "I've had several boats confiscated by Customs or the DEA for hauling pot." Brokers in the Fort Lauderdale ares say about 12 boats from Broward County have been confiscated this year.

Mass production as we now know it will be replaced by a computerized system of smaller-run manufacturing, predicts the American Machinist magazine.

Miller May Be Losing Support

By PHILIP GREER
And MYRON KANDEL

There's a report due out of Washington July 21 that's going to be must reading in government and private financial circles all over the world. It's the minutes of the meeting of the Federal Open Market Committee that was held on June 20 and, while the ending won't have any surprises, the unwinding of the plot could be a thriller.

The FOMC is an arm of the Federal Reserve System that sets policy on things like interest rates, bank reserves and other factors that control the country's supply of money. Made up of all the members of the Fed's Board of Governors, the president of the New York Federal Reserve Bank and a rotating four-member panel of presidents of the other reginal banks, it is the chief policy forum for the central bank. Minutes of its meetings are made public a month after the session.

As far as results go, the decisions of the June meeting were pretty well known the next morning, when the interest rate on federal funds — the money banks lend each other overnight — started moving up to 7¾ percent from 7½ percent. That's one way the Fed tightens up on credit. Given the explosive growth of the money supply this year — an annual rate of about 10 percent so far, but well over 11 percent the last three months — a pullback on the reins was expected. Most analysts expect more of the same over the near term.

The reason for all the interest in the minutes is what they might reveal about the position of the members at the FOMC meeting. On June 30, the Fed governors approved an increase in the discount rate — the interest charged to member banks that borrow from the central bank — to 7¼ percent from 7 percent. Chairman G. William Miller voted against the hike, but lost out by 3 to 2 (the Fed board has seven members, but one seat is vacant and vice chairman Stephen Gardner has been ill and did not attend).

It's very unusual, to say the least, for a Fed chairman to lose out on an issue such as a discount rate hike. Credit markets in the U.S. were upset by the news, economists and government securities traders started fretting about Miller's losing control of the board, and there has been a lot of questioning about the Fed's effectiveness if the chairman doesn't have solid support from the members.

That's where the report comes in. As far as is known, the June 30 vote is the only time the board has gone against Miller. Economists we've spoken to say that if it turns out to be only a one-time difference of opinion, it won't mean very much. But if the minutes give any indication that Miller and the board are heading off in different monetary directions — for instance, if Miller wasn't in full accord with the decision to tighten up in June — analysts will start worrying abut splits in the board and uncertainties of future policy.

As far as financial circles are concerned, the Federal Reserve holds a special status. It's the place where money people look for stability when they think administration economic policies are out of line. Arthur Burns and, before him, William McChesney Martin were seen as the anchors in the wind, the saviors of the dollar, although, within limits, all the recent chairman of the Fed have been inclined to give the administration in power the monetary tools to carry out its policies. Both Martin and Burns, though, were careful to maintain the image of independence and solidity that meant so much to the financial world here and aboard.

Miller himself recognizes the significance of his defeat on June 30. Last week, he went up to New York to meet with a group of government securities dealers (the meeting had been arranged before the discount rate vote). He told them his dissent on the rate issue was only a question of timing — that he wanted to wait a little longer before taking up another notch in the credit belt. Miller said that, in view of the steps the Fed has taken to slow the growth of the money supply, he thought it was time to sit back, give the situation a little time and be careful not to go too far.

The dealers apparently were encouraged by what they heard, because the government markets rallied the next morning. But some of them said later that Miller might just have been trying to repair the damage and that they'd wait to see if the board is really in step.

The first sign will come in the minutes. If they don't show anything, the credit markets should be a little more comfortable, but they'll wait for some more signs. Unless there's some surprise — such as another discount rate vote within the next few weeks — that will come on August 18, when the minutes of the FOMC meeting held July 18 are made public. If both reports show a unified performance, then the Miller matter should be laid to rest. But the financial world is waiting to see.

Liquor Proponents Gain Voting Win

ABILENE (AP) — At last count, Abilene was "wet."

Since the election on whether to allow liquor-by-the-drink in this West Central Texas town, proponents of the plan have won twice and lost once.

The "wets" narrowly won the election, if all votes are counted. However, the commissioners earlier refused to officially canvass, or count, one precinct box. Without that Box 19, the "drys" won the balloting.

The wet forces appealed the commissioner's action to State District Court Judge Don Lane, who last Friday ordered the Taylor County commissioners to count all the votes.

Tuesday, the commissioners voted not to appeal the order. That decision means on Thursday they will tabulate all the votes, which will retain the victory for the "wets."

Coast Guard Crew Stops Pot Cargoes

HOUSTON (AP) — When Terry Post and his Coast Guard colleagues take off over the Gulf of Mexico in their helicopter, they're usually checking to see that fishing boats aren't picking up any prohibited species.

But, from the results of their latest expedition, Lt. Cmdr. Post is beginning to wonder whether anyone fishes in the Gulf anymore.

The five-man surveillance crew from Ellington Air Force Base has just completed a three-week tour of the Gulf which netted them five ships, 17 smugglers and 60 tons of marijuana — the largest seizure yet in the area.

It was the second time this year Post and his crew have been on surveillance duty over the Yucatan Channel, which is fast becoming the main route from South America to U.S. ports for marijuana and cocaine.

Operating off a Coast Guard cutter, Post and his crew checked out a ship that wasn't carrying the cargo it had indicated but a load of marijuana instead.

"About 60 miles off the coast of Florida we began spotting all kinds of vessels," the 36-year-old Clear Lake City resident said. "We had coastal freighters, shrimp boats and, in one instance, a 45-foot yacht. Four of them were filled with pot."

By the end of the three weeks, the cutter sailed into Key West, Fla., with four confiscated boats in tow and 17 prisoners in the laundry room.

"We were so short-handed that everyone was pulling 24-hour shifts," he said.

Post said there is seldom any trouble boarding a smuggler's craft — especially with a helicopter hovering overhead and a 210-foot cutter running alongside.

It is generally thought, Post said, that a large freighter or mother ship cruises along the Gulf Coast, offloading bales of marijuana onto smaller vessels.

"We're pretty sure the last three boats we picked up had just loaded up from the mother ship the night before and were waiting until nightfall to make their run into the Florida coastline," he said.

The Coast Guard maintains constant surveillance of the Gulf from several stations along the coast to service ships in trouble and enforce fishing regulations in addition to intercepting illicit cargos.

But Post said only a fraction of the smugglers are caught — perhaps as few as 15 percent.

"Everyone from freighters to small sport fishermen are out there smuggling," he said, "and there is a heck of a lot of water."

No Longer Isolated, Japan Becomes World Power

By ROBERT CRABBE

TOKYO (UPI) — The late cowboy humorist Will Rogers could be funny in his gentle way about very alarming things, like the big Japanese navy buildup before World War II.

"Well folks, America knocked on the door of Asia, but she didn't go in," Rogers told readers of his newspaper column. "Japan came out."

Uncle Sam was the unwitting midwife at one of the biggest surprises in 19th and 20th century history — the birth of Japan as a world power.

U.S. Navy Commodore Matthew G. Perry had nothing of the sort in mind when he sailed his squadron of black warships into the port of Shomoda, 100 miles west of Tokyo in 1854. He saw the Japanese only as a quaint, backward people, who had lived in self-imposed isolation for 251 years.

In the best traditions of 19th century gunboat diplomacy, Perry's objective was to force Japan to become a coaling station for American steamships, and a stopover port for New England whaling ships. He threatened the Japanese with bombardment and disruption of Tokyo's food supply if they didn't go along.

The Japanese agreed reluctantly and also established diplomatic relations with the United States.

What happened upset everybody.

Fired with fear and ambition, the Japanese burst onto the world stage — a troupe of talented artists, ruthless soldiers, tireless workers and cunning businessmen.

They proved far more adaptable than their great Asian neighbors, the Chinese. With the goal of carving out an empire, they fought four wars and conquered most of East Asia. They lost it all in World War II.

Once again, Japan adapted. Abandoning the dreams of conquest, it channeled its energies into becoming an economic and industrial power, this time in cooperation with other countries. And again Japan succeeded.

Bereft of ecomomic resources, Japan made itself the world's greatest "value adding muchine." Buying raw materials from all over the world, she shaped them into cars, ships and industrial machines that found their way to every market on Earth.

In the 1970s, her reserves of gold and foreign currency crossed the $20 billion mark. Living standards rose beyond the wildest dreams, approaching those of Europe and leaving most of Asia far behind.

"Japan today is part of an inter-related world," says Mike Mansfield, the present U.S. ambassador in Tokyo. "It is no longer isolated and couldn't be if it wanted to."

There is no sign Japan wants to. Shimoda holds a "black ships festival" every year to celebrate one of the most profitable diplomatic defeats in history.

Besides growth of its economic power, there have been two other themes in Japanese history since World War II. One was that Japan became a democracy. The other was that she forged a special relationship with the United States in both trade and military defense.

The switch to European-style parliamentary democracy was made in a new constitution, adopted in 1948 while Japan still was under post-war occupation by the United States. Doubters at the time pointed out the Japanese had little experience with self government. They predicted an early return to fascist rule.

Again Japan surprised.

"I'd say the democratic system now looks stronger than ever," Edwin O. Reischauer, the Harvard University Japanese scholar who was ambassador to Tokyo from 1961-67, commented recently.

In one way it differs from Western countries. Japan does not produce glamorous politicians. Statesmen like John F. Kennedy or India's Pandit Nehru have often gripped the imaginations of the Japanese people more than their own leaders.

No Japanese prime minister has power comparable to an American president. Decisions are worked out by a careful concensus of politicians, bureaucrats and business leaders.

"If you look at the record of Japanese decision making since 1945, it's brilliant," says former U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. "We (Americans) make decisions through an individual personality. Japan avoids giving the impression that one man makes them."

Except for a few months in 1947-48, post-war Japan's governments have been controlled by the conservative Liberal Democratic Party — LDP for short. Big business, shopkeepers and farmers are the sectors from where it draws most of its votes.

For years it won elections partly because the alternative was coalition rule by the Communist and Socialist parties, who traditionally got about 30 percent of the vote. Fearful of both the Soviet Union and communism, the majority of Japanese have never been willing to buy that package.

Soviet Union Georgians Known For Their Independence, Pride

By SETH MYDANS

TBILISI, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Here at the ancient crossroads of East and West live the lively mavericks of the Soviet Union, the Georgians, known for their independence, their national pride, their gaiety and their hustle.

Russians in more dour and conservative Moscow look on them with a measure of envy and discomfort. In Tbilisi, the Georgian capital that was once called Tiflis, the gradual Russification that has affected much of the Soviet Union has produced little outward effect.

The little city with its hills, its river and its poplar trees, its red-tile roofs and its easy ambience, has the breath of a Mediterranean town, not of a Soviet metropolis.

It has kept itself free of the anonymous gray apartment blocks that have grown up in other cities, and only a few perfunctory propaganda slogans — obligatory throughout the U.S.S.R. — are seen.

In Tbilisi, Georgian pride is evident as they treat a visitor to their fine shashlik, chicken tabak and assortment of wines, or point to the portraits of the late Soviet dictator, Josef Stalin, a native Georgian, that still hang in many shops.

Georgian pride boiled to the surface in April when a new local constitution was being prepared in conformity with a new constitution that governs the entire U.S.S.R.

When Georgians, particularly students, learned that the new document was to drop the designation of Georgian as the national language of the republic, there was a huge demonstration in the narrow streets around government house.

The government backed down, and Georgian, with its alphabet of strange and beautiful curlicues, remains the official language.

Nationalist feelings have also shown themselves in recent years in reports of bombings throughout the city, one of which seriously damaged the yellow moorish opera house in the center of Tbilisi.

One of the Soviet Union's 15 republics, Georgia joined the Soviet Union shortly after the 1917 Russian revolution, although it had long been under Russian domination.

Its 5 million people live well, with more cars, television sets and refrigerators per person than in any other Soviet republic — and a high rate of unofficial private enterprise and reports of black marketeering.

A five-year cleanup campaign since the installation of a tougher local government in 1973 is estimated unofficially to have brought about the arrests of more than 30,000 people and the firings of 40,000 others.

The Georgians attitude of cocky independence developed despite centuries of subjugation by Mongols, Persians, Greeks, Romans and Turks, who made this region their crossroads.

To Homer's Greeks, the Caucasus region — now divided into the Soviet republics of Georgia, Armenia and Azerbaidjan — marked the end of the known world.

Jason is said to have traveled to what is now Georgia in his quest for the golden fleece — possibly one of the first in a long line of Georgian commercial enterprises.

Xenophon passed through Georgia in 400 B.C. Later, the region was ruled by Alexander the Great.

Christianity came to Georgia in the fourth century, and a church was built at Mtzkheta, near Tbilisi, a lovely ancient town that still exists almost unchanged.

Georgians claim their ancestors were the world's first winemakers, and there is a linguistic theory that the Georgian word for wine, Ghvino, is the root for the Latin word for wine, vino.

Although Stalin, whose Georgian name was Iosif Dzhugashvili, has been expunged from official histories since the "de-Stalinization" of the 1950s, his birthplace in Gori, 50 miles west of Tbilisi, remains a public memorial.

In Tbilisi, four statues of Stalin remain, and the city's central park, atop a downtown peak reached by a funicular railway and a cable car, still bears his name.

In a possible indication that a slow revival is under way, Georgians say there are plans to replace this statue within a year.

All this appears to bewilder visiting Russians, who are used to life at home that is much more tightly controlled by the Kremlin and where Georgian-style independence is avoided.

"Are they going to resurrect him?" one Russian visitor was heard to ask another on a recent visit to the park.

Sex Unaffected By Aspirin

By LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — For a rheumatoid arthritis condition I am taking 60 to 80 grains of aspirin daily. Could this saturation dose adversely affect my sex life? The arthritis is in the left hip, left knee and both hands. Could pressure at these points as in the missionary position retard my performance or completely wipe it out?

My doctor says the problem lies between my ears. Is he right? Do I need a head shrink? You probably have a policy of not answering letters on this subject and I don't blame you. I am very much afraid my recent marriage is headed for the rocks because of this problem. I haven't mentioned that I am 71.

DEAR READER — There is no reason why large amounts of aspirin should affect your sex life although there are some reports that aspirin will decrease fertility. I assume that you are not interested in fathering more children and are more interested in performance than reproduction.

Whether the pain from your arthritis affects your performance or not depends entirely on whether you have pain at the time. Pain of any sort for either men or women puts a pretty good damper on sex. Fear of pain may also have an inhibitory effect.

About half of American men at age 75 are impotent which means that half of them remain potent. More older men retain their capacity in societies where the complications of fatty-cholesterol deposits in arteries are less frequent.

Apparently fatty-cholesterol deposits in the arteries affect sexual performance. This ought to be a very good reason for men to make an extra effort to stay lean and avoid bad habits that increase fatty-cholesterol blockage of arteries.

One should remember it is an arterial disease and it can affect all the arteries in the body. That is why the program to prevent heart attacks and strokes is also a good program to preserve your sexual capacity.

Ask your doctor to refer you to a urologist to see if there is any medical problems in that department which can be improved for you. Impotence usually involves four general categories. It can be "between your ears" as you have suggested.

It can also be caused by damage or disease of the complex nerves associated with erection. This is why diabetics with nerve damage to the lower body and the little valve-like sphincters essential to normal performance are affected. It can be caused by poor circulation.

Finally, there is a very small percentage of men whose potency or capacity decreases because of a gradual decline in the level of sex hormones. Decreased male hormone is seldom the real cause for impotence. And that is why giving testosterone to men is often useless.

So impotence is a symptom and requires careful evaluation before one concludes what causes it. To give you more information on the general topic of impotence I am sending you The Health Letter number 3-12. Others who want this information can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y., 10019.

Psychiatrist At Johns Hopkins Remodels Screening Device

By MARY ELLEN HASKETT

BALTIMORE (UPI) — A Johns Hopkins Hospital psychiatrist has resurrected an old medical instrument and remodeled it for use in screening psychiatric patients for preliminary indications of the causes of their psychological problems.

Dr. Marshal Folstein, with the help of Dr. Neil Pauker, took a 60-year-old old medical tool, called the hand-held tachistoscope, and refashioned it with a modern camera shutter.

Folstein's device is a simple-looking tool with a wooden handle that supports the large camera shutter. The shutter opens and closes quickly while patients are asked to determine in what direction the letter E pasted in the back of the lens is facing.

Folstein, director of general hospital psychiatry at Hopkins, has used his new tool to help distinguish between psychological symptoms of psychiatric disorders, drug-related delirium and brain damage resulting from strokes, tumors or other diseases.

"We don't know why it works, but this test of perception can tell you whether people are, or are not, thinking with normal speed and clarity, or that emotional problems may be related to brain disorder," he said.

Folstein has crafted four of the devices and tested its validity in clinical tests on 170 psychiatric and neurological patients.

The tests confirmed the remodeled tachistoscope's ability to distinguish patients according to symptoms of depression or schizophrenia and delirium, and between two types of brain disorders — cortical and subcortical neuropathology.

"The thing that we're interested in is methods of psychological screening," Folstein said. "Blood tests and pap smears are used in medicine to screen patients for further testing, but in psychiatry we don't have many tools."

He said his instrument indicates early signs of various psychological disorders because visual perception is slowed in patients with such diseases as delirium, strokes, hallucinations, and memory lapses.

"If perception is slow, the problem is probably related to some structural brain disease or intoxication," Folstein said. "For instance, you can feel fairly certain it is hallucinations and not schizophrenia."

He said the device also is economically important to hospitals because it can be used by people who have never seen patients.

For instance, a first-year medical student at Hopkins has been testing emergency room patients with the device.

Folstein said a number of physicians and psychiatrists in the United States and Australia have expressed interest in the device. But he expects a wait of about five years before it is widely used while doctors decide whether they find it as useful as he does.

Various models of the tachistoscope have been used in psychological research concerning perception for 60 years.

However, its use as a clinical tool has been limited due to the expense and large size of earlier models and the needs for a controlled laboratory setting.

Folstein found a reference to a hand-held tachistoscope in literature from 1938 and reconstructed it to meet modern demands, resurrecting it from the obscurity into which it had fallen.

"It's not patented, anyone can make one," he said. "We're using it now in research and the emergency room while we collect more data."

Head Of Household Law Almost Out In Louisiana

BATON ROUGE, La. (UPI) — Louisiana's 300-year-old "head and master" law, a law that has given men sole control over household property, isn't quite dead yet, but it's definitely on its way.

Handing out souvenirs to women who lobbied against the law that made men the head and master of a household, Gov. Edwin Edwards signed a bill giving women equal rights in managing family property.

The governor actually signed the legislation earlier, but held a ceremony to present pens to 11 women who helped push the law through the Legislature.

The Equal Management Law won't take effect until Jan. 1, 1980, giving the Legislature another session to work out legal and procedural problems in the new law.

Once it becomes effective the law will give husbands and wives the authority to rewrite their marital contracts.

The measure ends the nearly 300-year-old community property law that stems from the Napoleonic Code. The head and master provision gave husbands the sole authority to mortgage family homes or cutoff their wives' credit.

"On behalf of the lawyers of Louisiana, I thank you," Edwards said. "This will keep them in business another 10 years."

He praised the legislation as a landmark for equal rights for women, but said he still opposed a bill extending the deadline for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment, which Louisiana has not passed.

"You would have another three years of argument and probably reach the same end," he said.

The governor said he stayed away from the ERA battle in Louisiana because he did not consider it a legislative matter that a governor should concern himself with.

Suspect Denies Part In Heist

By FRANK PATRICK
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Defendant Tommy Earl Davis today took the witness stand to say he was at home at the time the state alleges he was present at the holdup of a drive-in restaurant.

Davis, 27, who lived at 2217 Quirt Ave. at the time of the incident, is accused of participating in the April 5, 1977, aggravated robbery of the restaurant at 1710 Southeast Drive.

A nine-man, three-woman jury in Judge William R. Shaver's 140th District Court was expected to begin deliberations on the case later today.

Earlier, state witnesses had indicated two men — one sporting pink curlers in his hair — walked up to a service window at George's Burger Barn, ordered some food and paid for it before one of the duo produced a pistol.

Davis today testified he was in the company of former co-defendant Sylvester Menefee sometime after the robbery, but said Menefee did not come by to pick him up until about 12:10 a.m. April 6.

The holdup reportedly occurred at approximately 11:30 p.m. April 5.

Davis said Menefee was wearing pink hair curlers when he came by Davis' residence.

Defense attorney Bill Wischkaemper asked Davis whether, if he had known a robbery had been committed and that one of the suspects wore hair curlers, he would have gone riding with a man wearing curlers approximately two hours after the holdup.

Davis indicated he would not have done so. "I hadn't heard anything about any robbery," Davis said.

Also today, defense witness Mary Walker corroborated portions of Davis' account.

She said Davis, in Menefee's company, came by to pick her up after midnight.

Wednesday, Davis' wife Dorothy also said her husband was at home until after midnight April 6.

George Georgopoulos, operator of the restaurant, had testified earlier one of the two bandits was wearing pink rollers. He said he believed the other robber was the one who carried the pistol.

Another witness, a customer, indicated she was not aware of anything unusual until she saw two men running from the establishment. She also mentioned that one of the men wore curlers.

Georgopoulos indicated there was around $45 to $50 in the cash register.

Employee Roy Ochoa testified the gun was first leveled at him. Ochoa said he saw no one in the courtroom who resembled either of the two men.

Georgopoulos and the female customer both indicated that, before the holdup, they noticed the two men in an auto with two females.

Officer Max Wilkinson testified that he stopped an auto in the 1900 block of 19th Street about 1:15 or 1:20 a.m. after noticing it was occupied by two males, one wearing pink hair curlers, and two females.

He identified Davis as the driver of the vehicle and Menefee as a passenger. Menefee, he said, had on pink curlers.

Officer Pat Hastings said a pistol was found in the auto.

Ochoa had earlier testified that the pistol in question was not the gun used in the holdup. Ochoa said the gun which was used seemed silver in color.

Wilkinson and Hastings both testified that the pistol did not seem as shiny as it did when they first saw it. Hastings opined that, if the blue-steel weapon were in the same condition as when he first saw it and it were exhibited under flourescent lighting at night, it would in his opinion have a silverish tinge.

Banowsky Eyed For OU Post

OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI) — University of Oklahoma regents are considering seven finalists, including a former minister at Broadway Church of Christ in Lubbock, for the school's presidency, the Oklahoma Journal reported today.

Heads of universities in Maine, California and Texas and educators from Oklahoma and California are included in the list of candidates, capitol sources told the Journal.

OU Regents President Bob Mitchell said the new chief administrator will be chosen by Sept. 1.

The candidates include Dr. Bryce Jordan, 53, president of the University of Texas at Dallas; Dr. John D. Baldeschwielder, 44, professor of chemistry at California Insitute of Technology, Pasadena;

Dr. Howard Ralph Neville, 52, president of the University of Maine at Orono; Dr. Steven Sample, 38, vice president for academic affairs, University of Nebraska at Lincoln;

Also, Dr. William Banowsky, 42, president of Pepperdine University in Los Angeles; Dr. William Thurman, OU Health Sciences Center provost, and Dr. J.R. Morris, interim provost for OU's Norman campus.

There has been speculation that Banowsky is Gov. David Boren's favorite candidate for the position.

Banowsky was minister at Broadway Church of Christ in Lubbock from 1963 until 1968.

The Oklahoma Journal, in a copyrighted story Wednesday, said Banowsky's name is being considered at the urging of Regent Dee A. Replogle Jr. of Oklahoma City. Replogle, a political associate of Boren's, was appointed trustee by Boren.

Other candidates considered front-runners are Thurman and Morris.

Thurman said Wednesday he didn't know if he would accept the job if it were offered to him. He said the OU president makes less money than he does.

Starting salary for the position is expected to be less than $50,000. Thurman makes more than $70,000.

Interviews of the seven candidates, who survived a screening of more than 200 applicants, concludes today.

Weather May Have Caused Infant Death

Scorching temperatures, which have killed repeatedly in the Dallas-Fort Worth area, apparently claimed their first life here Wednesday.

Justice of the Peace L.J. Blalack said severe dehydration resulting in a cardiac arrest killed Cecelia Sainz, one-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lupe Sainz of 5007 36th St.

The infant arrived at Health Sciences Center Hospital about 12:30 p.m. and she was pronounced dead at 3 p.m., according to Dave Butler, director of the hospital's community relations.

"Attending physicians say that at this time the death cannot be attributed to heat, but heat had aggravated the child's condition," Butler said this morning.

Butler said an autopsy was to be performed on the baby, who was born June 13, at Health Sciences Center Hospital.

The infant had been dehydrating for about a day, Blalack said. The justice of the peace said he had ordered a police investigation into the death, but later ruled the death of natural causes.

Temperatures in Lubbock reached 95 degrees Wednesday, the first time in five days the city's high was under 100 degrees.

Services for the baby girl were pending this morning with Smith Funeral Home in Levelland.

FATAL FIRE — A fireman hauls a hose to the attic during efforts to quell a house fire that claimed the life of a 2-year-old Lubbock child Wednesday afternoon. # 2-Year-Old Boy Dies In City House Fire

A 2-year-old Lubbock boy died Wednesday afternoon when he was trapped inside the flaming kitchen area of a relative's home at 2422 23rd St.

Michael Lee Haynie of 1809 Main St., son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Haynie, was pronounced dead at the scene about 2:45 p.m. by Justice of the Peace Wayne LeCroy.

Flames leaping nearly 20 feet into the air, heavy smoke and the intense heat thwarted rescue attempts of neighbors, passersby and firemen.

After working for more than an hour to douse the smoldering blaze, fire officials found the charred and melted residue of a plastic gas container near the kitchen stove.

Fire Marshal A.C. Black said the fire probably began when the pilot light of the range ignited the gasoline vapors.

The youngster, who was at the home of his aunt, Mrs. Peggy Elliott, with her children while his mother had gone to look for a babysitter, was the only one in the house when the fire broke out about 2:30 p.m. Mrs. Elliott was at work at the time of the blaze.

The other children were in the backyard preparing to mow the lawn when 16-year-old Janie Elliott said she heard a scream and turned to see flames engulfing the kitchen.

Shortly before the fire began Max Minter, who lives across the alley from the Elliott residence at 2421-B 22nd St., said he had seen the youngsters in the backyard working with the mower.

"My roommate and I were watching television and we heard the dog barking," Minter said. "I stepped out back and saw the kids trying to start the lawn mower.

"Then about two minutes later we smelled smoke coming through our air conditioning vent and thought we were on fire until we ran out of the house and saw (the Elliott home) on fire."

About that same time Craig Leach of 2504 94th St. said he was driving down 23rd Street and saw the smoke and a man running from the residence.

"I slammed on my brakes and the man said there was a child inside the house," Leach said. "We broke out the (bedroom) windows and tried to get in but the heat was so intense it was impossible. And smoke was coming from everyhere."

The flames destroyed the kitchen and living room of the residence and also quickly spread through the wooden ceiling to an attic area. The rest of the home suffered heavy smoke damage.

While the blaze was controlled about 40 minutes after the eight fire units arrived on the scene, firemen remained until almost 4 p.m., working in the 92-degree afternoon temperature to extinguish a smoldering mattress in the attic which at one point re-ignited the roof.

Neighbors report the family lost all its possessions, including the children's clothing, in the blaze and were able to retrieve little or nothing of value. Those interested in helping the family may contact Elizabeth Fleeman of 2417 24th St. and may call her at 744-3098.

Services for the Haynie youngster, the fifth Lubbock fire fatality this year, will be at 10:30 a.m. Friday in Sanders Memorial Chapel with the Rev. Roger Garrett, Baptist minister, officiating.

Burial will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Sanders Funeral Home.

Survivors, other than his parents, include two sisters, Shana and Jodie, both of the home; a brother, Scott, of the home; and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Pete Lang and Mr. and Mrs. D.L. McArthur, all of Lubbock.

Judge Signs Jail Pacts

Lubbock County Judge Rodrick Shaw Wednesday signed construction, mechanical and electrical work contracts for the new county jail, and preliminary site work east of the existing jail downtown is expected to begin next week.

Contracts for laundry and kitchen equipment are being returned in the mail and have yet to be signed.

Project engineer Arnold Maeker said Furr's Construction Co. of Lubbock, the construction contractor, plans to start some barricade work and construction shack work at the site around midweek.

Streets around the site probably will not be encroached upon next week, Maeker said.

The contractor is expected to take up to a third of Avenue F from Main Street to Broadway, Main from the front of the present jail to Avenue F and Broadway from Avenue F to the southeast corner of the county office buidling at Broadway and Avenue G.

Avenue G will be closed permanently from Broadway to Main as that area is taken up by the new jail.

"I expect it will be about the first of the month before anything of significance is up," Maeker said.

ZBA Approves Steak Ranch's Request

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Despite strong neighborhood opposition, the Zoning Board of Adjustment approved a request today to allow an expanded dance floor at the Big Texan Steak Ranch in Monterey Center.

About 15 neighborhood residents appeared at the meeting to voice disapproval of the expansion of the restaurant's dance floor by 900 additional square feet.

Sam Lane, who represented the opponents, said the expanded dance floor would make the Big Texan "more a nightclub than a family restaurant" and said it would "open the door for similar establishments."

O.B. Ratliff of 3217 53rd St. complained that his neighborhood already was the scene of "vice and corruption," as well as numerous break-ins.

Bob Lee, the restaurant manager, objected to the description of the restaurant as a "dance floor" and said "we feel dancing is part of a modern restaurant."

Complaints of beer cans thrown in the surrounding neighborhood couldn't be blamed on the restaurant operation, Lee said, because patrons of eating establishments are not permitted to leave with alcoholic beverages.

Board members approved the dance floor request with the condition that the floor be closed at midnight, that the special exception be reviewed in a public hearing in two years and that the parking lot around the restaurant be properly maintained.

Neighbors opposing a request to use a mobile home as a dwelling in the back yard at 2808 30th St. were more successful.

Although three board members voted in favor of the request of Reeta B. Self, four positive votes were required for approval. Board member David Nail cast the sole negative vote.

Mrs. Self had asked for a special exception to place a mobile home in her daughter's back yard because her doctor said she should not live alone.

However, representatives of the UNIT Neighborhood Association opposed the special exception as a "bad precedent for the neighborhood."

They also questioned why Mrs. Self couldn't live in her daughter's house, since the daughter lives alone.

The request of Edward Haug to build a church for the Saint Germain Foundation, Inc., at 4402 Chicago Ave. was denied after five neighbors voiced their opposition to the construction.

Neighbors complained the traffic already is bad on Chicago and would only be aggravated by a church on the two lots.

Bobbie Whitney of 5611 42nd St. said the church would be located "smack in the middle of a single-family residential neighborhood which doesn't seem to be the appropriate site for a church."

The request for a special exception to allow the church was unanimously denied.

In other action today the board:

—Approved the request of Arnold Maeker for First Federal Savings for a variance to permit a free-standing sign at the corner of 13th Street and Avenue L.

—Approved the request of Hovey D. Musick for a variance in setback requirements for an existing carport at 1310 46th St.

—Approved the request of Charles F. Lemons for a variance in setback requirements for an existing carport at 1312 46th St.

—Approved the request of Dan Coe for Southland Corp. for a special exception permitting a convenience store with self-service gas pumps at 2102 50th St.

—Approved a request of Reed Loflin for the Urban Renewal Agency for a special exception to permit property at 1520 E. 24th St. to be used as a parking lot for the Lyons Baptist Church.

Roberts Named Vice President

Larry Roberts, minister for the South Main Church of Christ in Greenville, Miss., has been named Lubbock Christian College's vice president of development.

Roberts began his duties in June, replacing Dr. Willis Starnes who resigned to enter medical school.

He is a native of San Angelo and El Paso and received his bachelor's degree from Hardin College in Searcy, Ark. He has also done further graduate work at the Hardin School of Religion, the University of Houston and Delta State University.

Roberts has served as minister for churches in New York, Sherman and Houston. In 1964 he helped coordinate the Exodus New Jersey Program. This program gained national media recognition because of 88 families (211 people) that moved to the Somerset County, New Jersey to establish a church.

OSHA To Require Toxic Information

WASHINGTON (AP) — Under a proposed government rule, employers will have to make available to workers any records showing the employees' exposure to toxic substances.

The rule, announced Wednesday by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, will not become final until after several months of review.

Airplane Used To Spot Fires

FRESNO, Calif. (UPI) — The sleek, twin-engine turbo-prop plane glides over the central Calfironia forest at 18,000 feet, unnoticed from the ground by the backpacker breaking camp.

If he was an expert woods man, he thoroughly doused his campfire before leaving the area. But if he wasn't, that plane more than three miles above will spot it and send in a ranger to make sure it doesn't become a major forest fire.

Equipped with sensitive equipment designed to detect heat, the plane patrols the Sierra from Bakersfield to Reno, Nev., looking for any threat of a potential forest fire.

"If the equipment detects heat, even from something as small as a partially extinguished half-foot square campfire, it can pinpoint the location within seconds," said Bill Rice, one of the technicians who operate the equipment. "We've even found the equipment can detect the heat from a pickup truck's exhaust from 18,000 feet."

The plane, one of three attached to the Inter-Agency Fire Center in Boise, Idaho, uses elaborate, infra-red equipment developed during the Vietnam war to spot the potential forest fires.

It has been based in Fresno for several months and is used daily to survey the Sierra forests.

The plane was first used in California last year and rice said it has saved untold amounts of forest land by spotting small fires and guiding ground crews to them before they became unmanagable forest fires.

"It is an extremely valuable tool," said Richard L. Nichols, fire management officer for the Sierra National Forest. "It would be hard to calculate how much money has been saved by the use of the plane and its equipment."

Rice said at the height of the fire season last year the plane detected more than 30 illegal or abandoned campfires in a section of the sierra between Bakersfield and Reno.

"It has saved billions in fire suppression costs by catching the fires when they're small," he said.

Pilot Cliff Westbrook said the plane can cover large sections of land by flying at 250 miles an hour at between 15,000 and 18,000 feet.

"At this height the detection equipment records a five-mile swath and superimposes its impressions on recording film so a hot spot can be readily identified while we're still in the air," he said.

Westbrook said once a hot spot is found, word is radioed to ground crews who move into the area and check it out.

"They usually find an abandoned campfire or small blaze that is just ready to break into something big," he said. "Sometimes the ground crews find a fire about the size of a car tire and they're amazed that we spotted it so quickly."

The plane also has become an valuable tool in battling already raging forest fires.

"By being able to 'see' through dense smoke, it can actually help determine the perimeters of a large fire," Rice said. "and it can let us know if a fire begins to move in a new direction almost as fast as the movement begins."

Media Group Cites Gains

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Harte-Hanks Communications, Inc., this week reported earnings of 96 cents per share for the quarter ended June 30, 1978, a 22 percent increase over earnings for the same period of last year.

Net income for the latest 1978 quarter was $4,358,000, an increase of 24 percent over the $3,521,000 reported for the same quarter of 1977. Revenues were $44,907,000, compared with $36,454,000 the previous year.

Net income for the six months ended June 30, 1978, was $7,100,000, up 22 percent over the comparable 1977 period. Earnings per share for the six months period of 1978 were $1.56, a 20 percent improvement over the $1.30 in 1977. Revenues for the six months months reached $83,341,000, compared with $68,488,000 last year.

The announcement of earnings was made by Robert G. Marbut, president and chief executive officer of the San Antonio-based communications group.

Harte-Hanks Communications, Inc., owns and operates 26 daily newspapers and 61 non-daily publications in 34 markets. The New York Stock Exchange-affiliated company also owns VHF network-affiliated television stations in San Antonio, Jacksonville, Fla., and Greensboro, N.C. The pending acquisition of Southern Broadcasting Co. will add nine radio stations in six states to the Harte-Hanks holdings.

Big Tax Cut Debated By Committee

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Ways and Means Committee went to work today on a $15-billion tax reduction bill containing capital gains provisions opposed by President Carter.

While the committee agreed that amendments might be offered freely, Chairman Al Ullman, D-Ore., pleaded for the measure to be kept essentially intact.

He described it as "obviously well designed, not only to serve the economy, but to weather the political storms in Congress."

Ullman said the important consideration in the waning months of the present Congress is to steer a bill promptly through House passage and prepare for a compromise conference with the Senate, which usually makes drastic revisions.

The committee had suspended consideration of tax legislation for three months while the Carter administration sought to line up support for its position.

Some members, however, served notice they will try to modify the bill.

Rep. James C. Corman, D-Calif., said some aspects of it "give weight to President Carter's statement that the tax code is a disgrace." He indicated he will offer amendments on tax shelters through use of capital gains.

Rep. J. J. Pickle, D-Texas, said he will renew his effort to merely continue the tax reductions now in effect without new cuts.

While the administration has signaled that it may not continue to oppose any easing whatever of the capital gains tax, the bill the committee is discussing goes much farther in this direction than any changes administration spokesmen are known to have discussed.

Carter had made a campaign issue of taxing capital gains as ordinary income and had threatened to withhold approval of any tax bill with provisions to relax the tax.

But an 11th-hour round of discussions with Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal left House tax writers with the impression Carter might accept capital gains changes that would:

— Ease the burden on homeowners selling properties whose value are swollen by inflation.

— Encourage investors to buy into new, risky enterprises.

— Ease the tax path of businessmen wishing to dispose of one enterprise so as to invest in another, and perhaps even some modification of capital gains rates.

The White House insisted Carter has authorized no compromise committing him to a certain position, but that he had simply directed Blumenthal to check where sympathies lay on the tax issue.

The administration move came so late that some members of Ways and Means, which had suspended action for weeks because of the capital gains dispute, said there might not be time to act on any proposals until the bill reaches the House floor, after committee action.

With Congress aiming for an early October adjournment, pressures are building against bills that have not cleared at least one chamber. The Senate is expected to modify extensively whatever bill the House passes in response to Carter's call for tax reductions to stimulate the economy and changes he says would make the revenue code fairer. Reconciling the versions could require long negotiations.

The committee had as its starting point one of the bills Carter specifically criticized. It would set a maximum 35 percent tax on capital gains, which now may be taxed in special cases at more than 49 percent. Sponsors claimed support of a clear majority of the House committee.

Mideast Outlook Clouded

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Anwar Sadat said today the U.S.-mediated Egyptian-Israeli talks in Britain were "neither a success nor a failure," and he reiterated that future negotiations depend on "new elements" from Israel.

In London, however, Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan said his government would not change its positions as a "precondition" for continuation of the talks.

But Dayan said Israel is willing to consider Palestinian sovereignty over the West Bank of the Jordan River after a five-year period of civil self-rule under continued Israel military control.

The Israeli foreign minister spoke at an airport news conference before departing for home following two days of talks with Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohammed Ibrahim Kamel at Leeds Castle in England.

Sadat, talking with reporters after returning from an African summit meeting in Sudan, said he still plans to meet with Israeli Defense Minister Ezer Weizman in Alexandria, Egypt.

"For new meetings there should be some new elements (from Israel)," Sadat told reporters at Cairo International Airport. "But the visit of Weizman to Alexandria we have agreed upon in Salzburg (Austria)."

The meeting with Weizman was arranged during talks between the Egyptian president and Israeli defense chief in Austria earlier this month. Sadat also met there with Israeli opposition leader Shimon Peres. Both Weizman and Peres are considered "doves" on the issue of Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab land.

Sadat said the new Weizman meeting would take place, but added with a smile, "I don't know if the Israeli Cabinet will permit him to go or not."

Sadat apparently was alluding to reports that Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin shouted during a parliamentary debate that opponents of his policy "won't get any more visas. There won't be any more meetings."

Egypt's official Middle East News Agency reported from London that Kamel said Israel's "philosophy of security based on territorial expansion sows the seeds of a new war" in the Middle East.

Kamel said Egyptian and Israeli philosophies and aims are entirely different, but his country would be willing to hold another round of talks.

TRASH PILES UP — A Philadelphia fireman kicks at a smoldering mound of trash on a city street Wednesday afternoon, after a strike of sanitation workers halted garbage collection. Residents were allowed to dump their trash in designated areas. A tentative agreement to end the walkout was announced by officials early today, but the bags of garbage will pile up for at least another day before normal operations can be resumed. # Philadelphia Workers Vote On Pact Friday

By The Associated Press

Negotiators for 19,600 striking Philadelphia employees reached tentative agreement today that could end a week-long walkout. But wildcat strikes by some New Orleans garbagemen and some of Washington's 4,500 bus and subway workers continued to disrupt life in those cities.

And the threat of a nationwide postal strike starting at midnight today hung over residents of cities and towns coast to coast.

In New York City, meanwhile, a union representing 18,500 policemen reached tentative agreement with the city, after six days of disruptive protests by off-duty officers.

NEW ORLEANS — With the odor of uncollected trash beginning to spread through some neighborhoods, a few three-man crews took trucks out to make pickups today. But other wildcatters refused return-to-work orders from the mayor, a judge and their own union leaders.

Mayor Ernest Morial, who had threatened disciplinary action against anyone who defied his orders, arrived at his office visibly upset today, and said: "A handful of troublemakers are preventing the others from working. That's what it boils down to."

The strike started Tuesday over complaints about broken down trucks. But on Wednesday, some garbagemen said they would not return to work unless the city began negotiations for higher pay.

Garbagemen here are paid an average of $30 per route, and many work only one route a day. If no truck is available, workers must wait for a truck or go home without pay.

PHILADELPHIA — Protesters were to vote Friday on a proposal to end their strike against the nation's fourth-largest city, which has been growing filthier by the day because of uncollected trash and unswept streets.

The strikers — who include garbagemen, recreation department personnel and health department workers — were not expected to return to work before the vote. The agreement was reached after a 14½-hour negotiating session.

Issues in the strike by members of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees had been demands for a guarantee of no layoffs and the same 9 percent wage hike given policemen.

On Wednesday, hundreds of prison guards and sheriff's deputies returned to work after a threat of firing by Mayor Frank Rizzo.

WASHINGTON — Massive traffic jams at bridges leading into the nation's capital from Virginia followed a wildcat strike today that completely shut down Washington's subway and much of its bus service.

A Metro spokesman said the walkout had idled more than 60 percent of the system's 1,600 buses. The system has about 500,000 riders, many of whom use a combination of bus and rail service.

The subway system had to be closed down because motormen were honoring the mechanics' picket lines.

The mechanics, whose pay averages $8.16 an hour, were protesting the failure to receive a 20-cent-an-hour quarterly cost-of-living increase in their last paychecks.

Local 689 of the Amalgamated Transit Union denounced the strike and called it illegal. The union represents the 4,500 Metro bus drivers, subway motormen, machinists, mechanics, station attendants and clerks.

NEW YORK — The city and the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association have reached tentative agreement on a new contract.

Wednesday's tentative pact, which came on the heels of Mayor Edward Koch's withdrawal of two of his major contract demands — for flexible work shifts and a curb on sick-leave abise — sparked the PBA to call off all demonstrations by oli-duty officers.

The mayor denied that earlier raucous police demonstrations, which he termed "lawlessness," had influenced his decision to soften his position with the union.

Trustees To Delay Budget Disclosure

with market value, homeowners are looking for a tax cut to help offset the inflation-driven increase in values, he said.

"I anticipate the whole budget will be a problem," Waters said. He said quality education will be the top priority, but that the board aims to cut "the fat, to have a school system without frills and without fluff."

Board vice president Monte Hasie noted that the district cut its tax rate 15 cents — from $1.73 to $1.58 per $100 assessed value — last year. "We had a cut last year, and if there's any way, we'll have a cut this year," Hasie said.

"We're a very conservative board."

Even with the 1977 tax cut, the school district took in more revenue from local taxes than during the previous year.

Waters hopes that the legislature, now convened in special session, will pass a bill giving school districts a share of the state's sales-tax revenues. Under the bill, districts would be required to use most of the money to relieve local property taxes, which Waters said is "only fair...

"When I first came on the school board, I was shocked and amazed to find that the sales tax had been passed without schools getting a share of the sales tax," he said.

"If the sales tax is appropriated for schools, we will be able to lower taxes," Waters said.

According to legislative estimates, Lubbock would be required to cut its school taxes by more than one-third under the bill, which is co-sponsored by Sen. Kent Hance of Lubbock.

The school district's budget for the 1978-79 year will have to include expenditures to implement a court-ordered integration plan. However, school administrators do not expect that plan to have a tremendous effect on spending.

For one thing, purchase of 35-40 school buses is expected to be financed out of the "carryover" surplus in the current year's budget. The buses are projected to cost around $800,000, reducing the carryover from an estimated $1.3 million to about $500,000.

The district hopes to minimize the cost of operating the buses by combining the job of bus drivers with that of half-time "monitor aides," previously used for supervising cafeterias.

Overall, the administration's proposed budget increase this year is expected to be around seven percent, about the increase of past years. The district's current year budget is $43.5 million.

Lunch prices for the 1978-79 school year were raised five cents, which Irons said still keeps them as low as or lower than prices in neighboring school systems.

Elementary lunches in Lubbock school cafeterias are being raised from 50 cents to 55 cents; and secondary lunches from 60 cents to 65 cents.

City Man Charged With Manslaughter

Robert Jiminez, 19, of 4303 19th St. has been charged with voluntary manslaughter in connection with a Saturday shooting incident which left Joe Hernandez, 18, dead on a city street.

The criminal district attorney's office recommended a $2,500 bond for the suspect, but Justice of the Peace L.J. Blalack set it to $25,000.

U.S. Envoy Attacked

MOSCOW (AP) — A U.S. diplomat who was official American observer at the trial of Anatoly Shcharansky was chased and grabbed by a Soviet policeman today on the grounds of the U.S. Embassy here, diplomatic sources reported.

An embassy spokesman said that "a strong protest is being lodged with the Soviet foreign ministry" over the incident.

The diplomat, Second Secretary Raymond F. Smith, was grabbed from behind by the Soviet policeman after he had walked through an outdoor gateway leading to an entrance to the embassy's north wing. Smith, a political officer at the embassy, served as official U.S. observer at last week's trial of Jewish activist Shcharansky, sentenced to 13 years' imprisonment for allegedly spying for the United States.

Smith's jacket was ripped by the policemen who briefly accosted him before allowing him to continue on his way into the embassy.

Ag Group's Area Office Now Empty

The American Agriculture movement's state headquarters in Hereford — once a fountain of information for reporters — was empty this morning.

"Mike McCathern with the Texas state headquarters of the American Agriculture movement. Wednesday, 5 p.m., July 19, 1978," a recording plays when someone calls the headquarters.

McCathern, son of Gerald McCathern, a Hereford farmer instrumental in starting the nationwide farm strike, announces in the recording that there will be a national convention of movement members this weekend at St. Louis.

Still-striking farmers, McCathern says, will discuss "political situations, sending people to (Washington) D.C., immediate action, summer affairs, export facilities and systems, crop reporting and financing."

McCathern said American Agriculture wants a bill written by Sen. Kent Hance — with help from movement leaders — to be included in the state legislature's special session.

The bill, he explains in the recording, prohibits foreign investors from buying Texas farmland unless they become citizens of the state within five years. If they do not, they must sell their land.

The bill would also prohibit a corporate purchase of farmland if the majority of the company's stockholders are foreign.

Gerald McCathern, who became a familiar face on national television when strike activities reached a peak, could not be reached and a legal adviser for the strikers, Lubbock attorney Bill Wischkaemper, was in court this morning.

expertise, as an untraconservative, right-wing group."

American Agriculture's original goal was to force the government to guarantee farmers 100 percent of parity. Parity is a ratio relating the cost of producing a crop to market value. At 100 percent of parity, a productive farmer would be assured a modest profit.

On Dec. 14, American Agriculture supporters struck. Their vow was to neither plant nor sell corps until they got 100 percent parity.

The movement was strongest in the wheat country from Texas to Montana, where depressed prices were driving farmers off the land.

The combines are moving north across Colorado and Kansas now. Production is down, but not by the 100 percent American Agriculture originally vowed, nor by the 50 percent they called for in January in an amended strike call.

And prices are up. Wheat that sold for $1.76 a bushel at this time last year is bringing $2.49 a bushel now at the grain elevators near Springfield. "Optimism is back in the farmer's heart now," said one American Agriculture leader.

Bob Bullock Pleads Guilty To Charge

AUSTIN (AP) — Comptroller Bob Bullock voluntarily appeared in County Court at Law No. 3 today and pleaded guilty to a first offense charge of driving while intoxicated.

A spokesman for Bullock said the comptroller was assessed a $500 fine and given a 10-day probated sentence. The judge also probated $225 of the fine for one year.

Bullock was stopped in the early morning hours of July 11 in North Austin by two patrolmen who said he drove over a curb several times.

Bullock said he had "a few beers" at a party celebrating his 49th birthday.

ERA Approval Move Defeated

WASHINGTON (AP) — Exactly 110 ars ago today, Secretary of State Wil- m H. Seward was telling Congress it s "a matter of doubt and uncertainty" ether states could withdraw their ap- oval of a constitutional amendment.

t still is, and Congress will continue to apple with that question and the relat- issue of how long is a "reasonable ne" to allow for three-fourths of the tes to put the Equal Rights Amend- ent into the Constitution.

The two questions are at the heart of uch of the debate over whether the sev- -year period for ratification of the RA, which expires next March 22, ould be extended.

The Supreme Court has said both ques- ons are for Congress, not the courts, to cide.

The House Judiciary Committee ap- oved Tuesday an ERA extension of a tle over 39 months. It is expected to be approved in the House but run into heavy opposition in the Senate.

The committee rejected a move to permit the states that already have ratified the amendment to rescind their approval during the extension. Rep. Tom Railsback, R-Ill., sponsor of the move, says he will try again on the House floor.

The ERA, which would outlaw discrimination based on sex, has been ratified by 35 states, although four legislatures later rescinded their actions. Unless the extension is approved by Congress, the amendment must have the approval of three more states by next March 22 to become part of the Constitution.

The states that rescinded earlier approval are Kentucky, Tennessee, Idaho and Nebraska. The Kentucky vote was vetoed.

The question of whether states can withdraw ratification first arose with the 14th amendment, adopted after the Civil War and designed to prevent discrimination against former slaves.

The Ohio and New Jersey legislatures voted to ratify it before changing their minds. The two states were needed for the three-fourths majority required by the Constitution.

On July 20, 1868, Seward sent Congress a message saying it was "a matter of doubt and uncertainty whether such resolutions are not irregular, invalid and therefore ineffectual."

The courts did not get involved in the question at the time. In 1939, however, the Supreme Court ruled 6-2 that such questions were "political" and therefore were the business of the legislative branch of government.

That decision grew out of a change of mind by the Kansas legislature, which first rejected and then voted to ratify an amendment aimed at outlawing child labor. The amendment failed to win ratification by enough states, so the question was never presented to Congress.

The high court has also been cautious about getting involved in the question of how long a time the states may be allowed to use to ratify.

In a 1921 case, involving the Prohibition Amendment, the justices said ratification must occur "within some reasonable time." In the 1939 Kansas case, however, they said only that Congress could weigh "the great variety of relevant conditions, political, social and economic," that would determine what was reasonable.

Before its submission of the Prohibition Amendment in 1917, Congress imposed no time limit on ratifications. In ruling in the prohibition case, the high court said the Constitution gives Congress the power to do so. On most amendments since, the lawmakers have set a limit of seven years. Until the ERA, no constitutional amendment had ever taken more than four years for ratification.

Campaign Financing Rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — Backers of ublic financing for congressional races re conceding that their proposal is dead or the year, but claim they've laid the roundwork for a strong comeback in 979.

The concept of public financing lost hat is likely to be its final test of the ear on Wednesday when the House vot- d 213-196 against considering it.

The negative reception for public fi- ancing preceded another vote to author- ze $8.6 million for the Federal Election ommission in fiscal year 1979. The com- nission, which already monitors the pub- icly financed presidential campaigns as a art of its duties, probably would be giv- n oversight responsibility if a system for ongress was enacted.

Fred Wertheimer, a vice president of ommon Cause, said that even in defeat, roponents of the public financing con- ept had come closer than they ever had before to winning House support.

The vote showed that "this issue is via- le. It's going to come back next year," he said.

"We've added the capacity to win this ight."

Another factor in their favor is the fact hat dozens of members aren't returning nd many of them are opponents of the idea, Wertheimer said. Common Cause, which calls itself a citizens lobby, has been the chief group pushing for the legislation.

Some members who stated their opposition in debate on the House floor cited the cost of the proposal as a burden that taxpayers won't want to assume in any form.

"Let's don't kid ourselves," said Rep. B.F. Sisk, D-Calif. "Whether its checkoff or whatever it is, every dime is going to come from taxpayers pockets."

But Rep. John B. Anderson, R-Ill., a sponsor of the amendment, argued that the projected $25 million cost would be "the best bargain we could give them."

Anderson also argued that public financing would be a boon to challengers rather than to incumbents and appealed to Republicans to support the idea on that basis since they are a political minority.

Candidates who accepted public financing would have had to observe a $150,000 spending ceiling.

WARREN D. RIEBE

Mystery Man Warren Riebe Finally Found

CLEVELAND (AP) — Warren D. Riebe always knew where he was, even if a certain "Mrs. D" from Seattle and a robot letter-writing machine at the White House never could straighten out his whereabouts.

He's been here all the time.

Mrs. D didn't know that 10 months ago when she received a response to a letter she had written to the White House objecting to the appointment of Jack Tanner as a federal judge. Tanner has since become U.S. District Judge in Tacoma, Wash.

The response from the White House letter-writing machine thanked Mrs. D for recommending "Warren D. Riebe for a position in this administration."

Mrs. D, who doesn't want her real name used, wrote another letter reiterating her opposition to Tanner and asking, "Who is Warren D. Riebe?"

This time, she got a letter from the automatic letter-writer apologizing for the mistake and thanking her for her "recommendation of Jack Tanner ..."

Mrs. D then tried bypassing the machines, known as "Robos" at the White House, and wrote directly to the president.

"Is it too much to expect someone in your office to really read the letters?" she demanded. That ended the correspondence but still left Mrs. D — and White House officials who were questioned by reporters — wondering who Warren D. Riebe was.

All this was reported in newspapers across the country and Riebe, former mayor of suburban Solon, Ohio, and former finance director of Cleveland, started getting clippings in the mail from friends.

Riebe said Wednesday that he's written a letter to Mrs. D through the Seattle Times, admitting to her that he is "as confused as you" about why his name would be coughed up by a Robo.

Krueger Lashes Out At Texas Senator

AUSTIN (UPI) — Rep. Bob Krueger, D-Texas, has criticized Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, for implying he supported the appointment of Leonal Castillo to head the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Castillo last week sent Tower a letter telling the state's senior senator to quit using a photograph of Castillo and Tower together in campaign literature.

Panel Passes Civil Service Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's plan to streamline the federal personnel system has won House committee approval but, it picked up some anti-administration riders that ultimately could endanger its passage by Congress.

Wednesday's 18-7 vote to approve the civil service revision bill was deceivingly lopsided.

The Post Office and Civil Service Committee actually is bitterly and narrowly divided and these sentiments and the political risks they carry are sure to spill over onto the House floor.

Until last week, there had been broad bipartisan support for the bill, with a significant handful of Democrats rebelling but with most Republicans backing the Carter plan as a vehicle to better manage the 2.8 million federal workforce.

But the addition to the bill of a controversial proposal the Republicans oppose, to greatly broaden the political rights of most federal workers by amending the Hatch Act, changed the political climate of the committee overnight.

Most Republicans demonstrated their anger Wednesday by casting two key anti-administration votes. In each case, their votes provided the margin to thwart the administration.

In one case, they backed Rep. Herbert Harris, D-Va., in adding to the civil service bill a separate measure vetoed by Carter last month that would expand federal firefighters' benefits. Then they sided with Rep. Gladys Spellman, D-Md., in refusing to strip from the bill her amendment that would gut Carter's plan for a systemwide corps of top federal executives.

The administration had thought it had the votes to block the firefighters amendment and to remove the Spellman move. Now it will have to take those fights, as well as the major one on the Hatch Act changes, to the full House.

But chief sponsor Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., called the committee bill "a positive step forward."

"I think it is a solid victory for the president. And I think it enhances the already good chances that we're going to get a civil service (bill) passed and in law this year," Udall said.

The Hatch Act controversy is a complicated one.

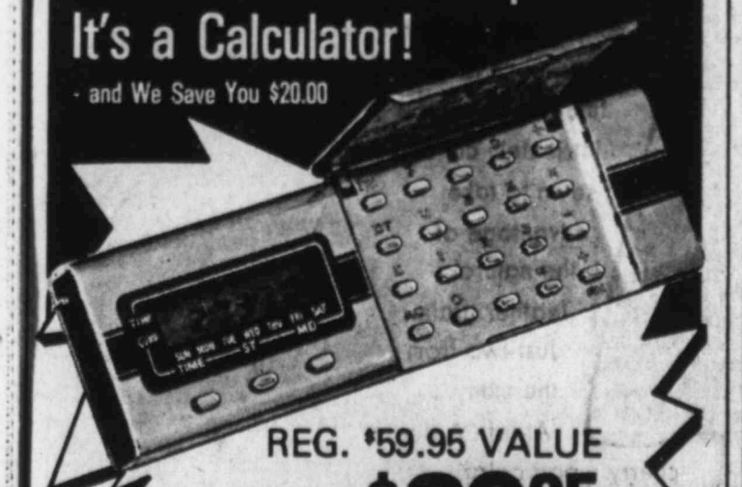

Currently, federal employees are banned from most political participation — on or off duty — by the Hatch Act.

Armstrong's Mom Proudly Recalls Moon Walk

By RICK VAN SANT

WAPAKONETA, Ohio (UPI) — Nine years later in Wapakoneta, the "man in the moon" still resembles a hometown boy.

"For me, the moon is more meaningful today than it ever was," says Viola Armstrong. "Before, I was guilty of taking the moon for granted. But now, and so many people have told me the same thing, it's taken on a different meaning."

It's different now for Mrs. Armstrong — and for most residents of this quiet, northwestern Ohio farmland community — because the first earthling to walk on the moon was her son, Neil.

To Mrs. Armstrong, one of the most gentle and polite people ever to walk the earth, the July 20th ninth anniversary of her son's moonwalk brings back the fondest of memories.

In soft, measured tones she says, "It was something beautiful and rich. It was truly a rich, rich experience."

Although moonwalker Armstrong is only 48 years old and teaching just downstate at the University of Cincinnati, an ironic tableau is played out each day by out-of-town children visiting Wapakoneta's new and swanky Neil Armstrong Museum.

"The kids think Neil's dead," says museum director Kathy Minkin. "If someone is historical and there's a museum in his honor, they figure he's got to be gone.

"The first question the kids ask is, 'When did he die?' They're fascinated by the fact that he's not gone and by the fact that he isn't even 50 years old yet."

Although Armstrong routinely refuses press requests for moonwalk-oriented interviews, he talks freely to friends about space issues in general, they say.

"He's willing to talk about anything as long as you don't ask the typical questions about what it was like to walk on the moon," says Miss Minkin, who has calls Armstrong "very nice and unassuming."

"I've asked him some really dumb questions and he's been more than willing to give me answers I can understand. And it depends on who is asking the questions. Once, when he found out that a question I was asking was for a third-grader, he went into total detail on the answer.

"I think his reluctance to news interviews comes from all the years of being badgered by the press. It turned him off, and you really can't blame him."

The most recent "badgering" has come in the wake of a new movie with the theme that a space venture was a hoax, with the government covering up its space failings by acting out a landing in front of studio television cameras.

Sitting in her pink rock, ranch home at 912 Neil Armstrong Drive, Mrs. Armstrong says in disturbed tones, "I've heard of that movie."

Her husband, Stephen, just grins.

"We're often 'reminded' that Neil didn't land on the moon," he chuckles. "People call us up and remind us we should tell the 'truth.'"

Asked what he tells such callers, Armstrong says, "You don't argue with them. I think it's wonderful that we had TV. If we'd only had radio then, I'm sure we'd have a lot more disbelievers."

Over at the Armstrong Museum, Miss Minkin figures Neil's reaction to hoax talk would be "just one disgusted look."

"I don't think he's the type of man who would have gone along with something like that," she says. "My theory has always been — had we not gone to the moon, the public relations that went into getting the majority of people to believe it would have been almost as great a feat as really getting to the moon."

Miss Minkin bases her belief that Armstrong would never succumb to a hoax on her extensive research into his life, which he as always lived "seriously" since childhood.

"He had his airplane pilot's license before his automobile license," she says, pointing out the museum display of the bicycle that Armstrong rode to the local airport to learn to fly as a teenager.

And there was his boyhood membership in the American Rocketry Society, later his study at Purdue University's tough engineering school and a brilliant career as a test pilot before becoming an astonaut.

Mrs. Armstrong, asked to describe her son today, merely says, "I think he's just the same old Neil."

Despite his lack of pizazz, Armstrong surprised a lot of people with his history-making first words on the moon at 9:56 p.m. (CDT) July 20, 1969: "That's one small step for man, one giant leap for mankind."

How did he choose the phrase?

"The one thing he told me was that he wanted to be sure that what he said included everybody in the whole world," said his mother.

However, contrary to what a lot of people guessed, the phrase was not carefully crafted several weeks before the trip.

"He told us it was only shortly before he stepped down on the moon that the words came to him," said Mrs. Armstrong.

Mrs. Armstrong also isn't sure her son yet realizes the magnitude of his feat.

"He's been so busy I don't know if he can fully comprehend all this yet," she said. "I think time will help him."

City Considers Demands For Tax Cut

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Nearly 250 city employees would be laid off if all the demands by the Lubbock Property Owners Association are met, city council members were told Wednesday.

City Manager Larry Cunningham told the council that budget cuts of $5.5 million would be necessary to reduce the present tax rate by 25 percent, raise the homestead exemption for the elderly to $10,000 and remove the ad valorem tax on automobiles.

Because a fixed amount of the tax rate is allocated for paying off city bonds and for the Board of City Development, the 25 percent reduction in the tax rate means a 42.5 percent cut in the city's general fund.

That fund, which pays for most city operations, would be cut from $13 million to $7.5 million if such tax reductions are approved.

And that is a big if, Mayor Dirk West emphasized. He said the potential budget cuts Cunningham prepared were "for information only."

Those departments with the largest budgets would be hit the hardest if the entire $5.5 million is cut from the budget.

The police department proposed budget of $5.9 million for next year would be cut by nearly $800,000 and the fire department's proposed budget of $5.2 million would be cut about $450,000.

The elimination of brush collection would save $566,000 and the parks department budget would be slashed by nearly $450,000. The health department budget would be reduced by $320,000, sanitation by $114,300, zoning by $130,000, Municipal Court by $102,000 and the animal shelter by $80,000.

Cunningham assigned priorities to the reductions so the council could approve either a part of or all of the cuts.

At the top of the list is not allowing Lubbock Power and Light to transfer revenues to the city's general fund. If the item were cut, LP&L would lose $146,000 which would have been retained for capital improvements.

A reduction in brush collection is second on the priority list for a savings of $276,000. At this level of funding, brush would be collected about two times a year rather than the current four times per year.

Cuts in the parks and recreation area are high on the list of priorities.

Those cuts would include eliminating the Golden Gloves supervisor, the track program, gymnastics, the Show Wagon and Municipal Band, cutting off the softball field lights, reducing playground programs, eliminating a new pottery program, eliminating ball diamond attendants at all little league and soccer fields, reducing season and operating hours at four city pools and eliminating Mae Simmons Pool, reducing the hours of operation of community centers and the Garden and Arts Center, reducing the water in the Yellowhouse Canyon Lakes and reducing park maintenance.

Also high on the list of 79 priority items are closing the Godeke Branch Library, curtailing library service and decreasing materials acquisitions at the Mahon Library.

Midway down the list is the elimination of the Citibus system for a savings of $288,856. If the bus system were eliminated, the city would probably have to repay a federal grant of $705,000 used to purchase the buses and would have to pay $26,000 for the remaining time in a management contract. Part of those costs could be defrayed with the sale of the buses.

Among the possible Municipal Court budget cuts is the elimination of one of the two judges which probably would increase the court's backlog.

Despite a city attorney's opinion that it would be unconstitutional for the city to remove the ad valorem tax from automobiles, West said he favored that action.

West also appeared certain the council would approve an increase of the homestead exemption for the elderly from $3,000 to $10,000.

"It should be done and done immediately," he said. Earlier the council had tentatively approved an increase in the exemption to $5,000.

Cunningham's suggestions of where the budget could be cut to achieve the taxpayers' association demands will be presented to association members at 7:30 p.m. Friday in council chambers.

West said he hoped group members would have specific suggestions on where to cut the budget at a preliminary public hearing on the budget set for July 31.

But the mayor said the tax revolt has "no precedent" and said it was up to the council to "look at where we can reduce the budget without damaging the city."

H.C. Lewis Wins Bid At Airport

The airport board Wednesday accepted the low bid by the H. C. Lewis Construction Co. and Kerr Construction Co. for the construction of a two-level parking facility at Lubbock International Airport.

The board accepted the low bid of $1,538,623 by H. C. Lewis Construction Co. for the two-level parking structure and the low bid of $683,177.24 by Kerr Construction Co. for the paving of the roadway, which would be built adjacent to the two-level facility.

Eight companies had submitted bids for the parking structure and two companies had bid for the paving of the parking lot and roadway.

City council members will take up the board's suggestion at their next meeting.

In other business, the board agreed to put up $3,000 for the expansion of the Southwest Airlines ticket counter at the airport. Southwest has agreed to take up the rest of the expenses towards the expansion.

Thomas Hoff of Southwest told airport board members Wednesday night that the airline had recorded 19,000 boardings last month and that they desperately needed more counter space.

The board also okayed Lonnie Hollingsworth's request for concession rights that would allow him to install a blood pressure testing device in the airport.

The tests would cost 50 cents per person.

Lawyers In Texas Urge Code Change

AUSTIN (UPI) — Texas lawyers participating in a State Bar referendum voted by a ratio of more than 5-to-1 to permit attorneys to advertise, but the vote will not be binding because participation was too low.

State Bar officials said Wednesday 12,470 members returned ballots in the referendum to amend the Code of Professional Responsibility to permit attorneys to advertise under limited conditions.

Of those, 10,252 favored allowing the advertising and 1,960 oppsed. But State Bar rules require that 51 percent of the attorneys must return their ballots before a rules change can be implemented.

Two County Residents Advised Of Possible Sign Violations

Two Lubbock County individuals who allegedly have illegal roadside advertising signs on their properties may be facing charges in the near future by the Deparment of Highways and Public Transportation.

They are in violation of the Texas High Highway Beautification Act of 1972.

The Act prohibits outdoor advertising signs altogether along state-maintained roadways in some areas, but in areas where signs are permitted, no signs may be erected unless the owner has a license and a permit authorizing each sign.

According to Gary Bernethy, right of way administrative assistant in the Department of Highways and Public Transportation Lubbock office, the law states that the names of violators and exact locations of signs may not be released to the public until the charges are officially filed.

He stated, however, that the signs in question are located near Shallowater and Slaton.

Advertising signs are legal if they are erected in commercial or industrial zones or erected within 800 feet of a business in the rural areas.

They are illegal if erected any place else or if the owner does not have a license or permit.

Bernethy said the two individuals, according to the law, were given first notification of their violations. The notifications were accompanied by a booklet explaining the Beautification Act.

After they failed to respond to the notices, they were sent a second and final warning to remove the signs within 30 days or be prepared to face charges.

Bernethy said neither has adhered to the law.

"One has refused to talk about his violation," said Bernethy, "and the other feels that since he owns the farm property where the sign is erected, he is not in violation."

His sign advertises a business that he owns in town.

The highway department and district attorney are waiting on approval from Austin to file misdemeanor charges.

If permission is granted, these will be the first such charges filed in Lubbock County as well as in the 17-county district that the Lubbock office serves.

In other cases prosecuted across the state, penalties generally have been fines on the lower side of the $25 to $200 range.

In a Smith County case, however, an illegal roadside advertising sign has cost its owner a $1,000 fine and drawn court orders to get the sign down by Aug. 1.

Five signs that are illegally erected on the Tahoka Highway will be removed within six weeks.

"The owners were notified and are being very cooperative in removing them," said Bernethy.

Bernethy said approximately 5,000 signs lined Lubbock's district of Texas highways when the Beautification Act was initiated.

All sign owners, both companies and individuals, were mailed information of the Act.

Approximately 2,500 of that total remain erected, but only about 100 of these are illegal. The owners of the illegally erected signs have been notified.

"Our office intends to enforce the Beautification Act because it is the law and upon the governor's strong insistence," said Bernethy.

He explained that the beautification program costs millions of dollars, of which 75 per cent comes from the federal government and 25 per cent from the state..

"If we do not enforce this law, the federal government has threatened to restrict its flow of funds into our state's highway program," said Bernethy.

To get a license the sign owner must file an application and bond form and $25 fee with the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation right of way division in Austin.

After receiving the license, the owner must get a permit for each sign from the department district office where the sign is to be erected. This, too, costs $25.

The owner then will receive a tin license, which must be displayed on the sign. A sign that is not accompanied by this plate is illegal.

Tech Expecting 23,000 Students

By CANDY SAGON
Avalanche-Journal Staff

A record 23,000 students are expected to enroll in Texas Tech this fall, and dormitory space is in such demand that the university has leased a wing of a private apartment complex to accomodate more students.

In addition, admissions officials say everything is coming up roses in almost all facets of enrollment: summer, fall, graduate student and first-time freshman enrollment all have shown marked increases over last year.

Bill Haynes, assistant director of housing, said 7,200 dorm applications were accepted by April 10, with 500 applicants assigned to waiting lists.

An extra 300 women will be housed in a wing of the College Inn, a privately operated apartment high-rise at 10th Street and University Avenue, across from campus.

Haynes said extra security measures will be taken at the complex to insure the women "will be as safe as they would be at an on-campus dorm."

A 24-hour guard will be added to the first floor of the building, a security alarm will be installed at the entrance, doors will be secured at night and resident advisors will be hired for the group, Haynes said.

Although he feels the university's housing staff has done much to make the dorms attractive places in which to live, he adds that the major factor in students' decision to live on campus has to do with economy and convenience.

Even with the rule change last year allowing sophomores to live off-campus, an increasing number of sophomores, juniors and seniors are applying to live in the dorms.

"More and more students discover that it is less expensive and more convenient to live on campus, so they decide to stay in the dorms even after their freshman year," Haynes said.

Earlier this year, the university's Board of Regents hiked dorm rates by almost 5 percent, citing the rising cost of utilities, food and wages as reasons for the increase.

Airconditioned rooms were upped by $60 per year and non-airconditioned rooms went up $50 a year. Rates for Tech's 18 residence halls now range from $1,045 to $1,335 annually, which includes 20 meals a week.

For dorm residents, this works out to $116 to $148 in monthly "rent" for room and board — a bargain when compared to Lubbock rental rates which can range from $165 to $215 for a one-bedroom apartment, or $200 to $300 for a two-bedroom, not to mention the added cost of utilities and food.

D.N. Peterson, director of admissions at Tech, said a record 5,961 freshmen have been accepted for the fall semester — 420 more than last year.

He also said graduate student enrollment is up about three percent and 300 more students than last year have enrolled in the second summer session which began Tuesday.

The increase in freshman enrollment, Peterson says, is due to more diligent high school recruiting.

"We've been working for it (an enrollment increase). I think we did a better job of presenting Tech's programs to high school students this year," Peterson said.

Texas Tech is ranked 10th nationally in first-time freshman enrollment, according to a recent survey of 402 campuses of state universities and land-grant colleges.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: Could you please tell me how to fight blackmail? Once I went on vacation with a friend. He took some pictures of me that I wish I'd never posed for. At the time I was in love with him, so I didn't mind.

Since then, our love has faded, and I've discovered that he isn't the wonderful man I thought he was. Now he is threatening to show the pictures around and ruin my reputation if I don't give him money when his finances are low.

I have given him quite a lot of money already, but he keeps coming around asking for more. Don't tell me I was foolish to have let such a thing happen. I know that. The question is, what can I do about it now?

FOOLISH IN PHILLY

Dear Foolish: See a lawyer. Better to pay a lawyer once to protect you from a blackmailer, than to pay a blackmailer indefinitely to protect your reputation.

• • •

DEAR ABBY: Why can't mothers take the time to call the home of a "strange" playmate who comes to visit?

My daughter was only 3 years old when some youngsters helped her over the fence that surrounds our yard.

When I discovered she was gone, I became hysterical, and soon had the whole neighborhood driving up and down the streets looking for her. Thank God we found her safe, two blocks away — in the home of a child only slightly older than she was. At 3, our daughter knew her name and telephone number, but her playmate's mother never bothered to ask her name, or find out if her mother knew where she was.

If a strange playmate comes to my house, I always ask, "What is your name? Where do you live? Does your mother know where you are? When do you have to be home?" Then I phone the mother to double-check.

Please put this into your own words, Abby, and print it. It could spare many a mother the terrifying nightmare of having to hunt for her child after dark.

POCATELLO, IDAHO

Dear Poc.: Your words are fine. Thank you for writing.

The bidding:

| West | North | East | South |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♠ | 2 ♠ | Pass | 3 NT |
| Pass | Pass | Pass | |

Opening lead: Six of ♠.

As declarer, you should always try to play your cards so that you conceal your actual holding from the defenders, especially the one who represents a threat to your contract. Sometimes this can be accomplished by quite a simple maneuver.

Once North could show the values for a two-level overcall, South decided that he had a shot at making three no trump. He got there by the shortest route possible.

West led his fourth-best spade, and dummy was a great disappointment. The opening lead had removed the only possible entry to dummy's club suit. If declarer knocked out the ace of diamonds, he would have only eight tricks. Therefore, he would have to score a club trick to make his contract.

Declarer had one big advantage—neither defender knew he had only a singleton club. If he could con the defender who held the ace of clubs (surely West, in view of his opening bid) into holding up the ace of clubs one round, he would be home.

To the first trick, declarer played the nine of spades from dummy. East followed low, and a careless declarer would win in dummy and lead the king of clubs. However, that would be a fatal error against competent defenders.

On the first club, East would start an echo by playing a high club, signaling an even number of cards in the suit. West would realize that whether East held two or four clubs, it could not gain to hold up the ace. If East held four clubs, declarer had a singleton; if he held only two clubs, then declarer had three and would always be able to use dummy's clubs.

Fortunately, South was more astute. He realized that West would be faced with a very difficult problem if he had to commit himself in the club suit before seeing what card partner would play.

So South overtook the nine of spades with the jack and led a club. West decided that declarer was more likely to hold a doubleton club than a singleton, so he played low. With a club trick in the bank, declarer shifted his attention to diamonds, and came home with two spades tricks, two hearts, four diamonds and a club.

'House-Museum' Reveals American History

There is one clear thing about Cliveden, the stately pre-Revolutionary Chew family house in Philadelphia's Germantown area: Cliveden is a noble survivor. More than two centuries ago, the house withstood a bloody Revolutionary War battle on the grounds. Today it is an oasis of serenity in a changing neighborhood, and in the face of urban encroachment.

But in spite of adversity during its history — or perhaps because of it — a visit to this house museum reveals a great deal about American life over a course of more than two centuries. For since Cliveden's completion in 1767 — except for an 18-year period — the house has been occupied by the same family, and more than 100,000 manuscript pages document every aspect of life there.

Cliveden, Philadelphia, Pa.
Sketch by William Wagner, FAIA

The house was built while America was still a British colony by Benjamin Chew, one of Pennsylvania's most prominent lawyers and jurists and eventually a Chief Justice. In 1763, when he was about 41, Chew began building a countryseat in the English tradition appropriate to his social position. He chose as a site land not far from the Schuylkill River, near where other prominent contemporaries were building estates such as Mount Pleasant, Woodford, and Stenton. The building process took about four years.

But by the summer of 1777, the American Revolution was well underway, and the British were moving toward Philadelphia. Chew, as an official of the Crown, had been jailed, and while he was confined the Battle of Germantown took place on the grounds of his magnificent country estate. To this day cannonball holes can be seen in Cliveden's rooms and exterior walls.

When Chew returned to Cliveden and surveyed the damage done by the battle, he declared the place "an absolute wreck, and materials not to be had to keep out the weather." He sold it to a young Irish merchant who owned the house for the next 18 years.

In 1897, however, Benjamin Chew regained ownership of the house and it was never to leave Chew family hands again until 1972, when it was acquired by the National Turst for Historic Preservation, a nonprofit organization that operates it for the public today.

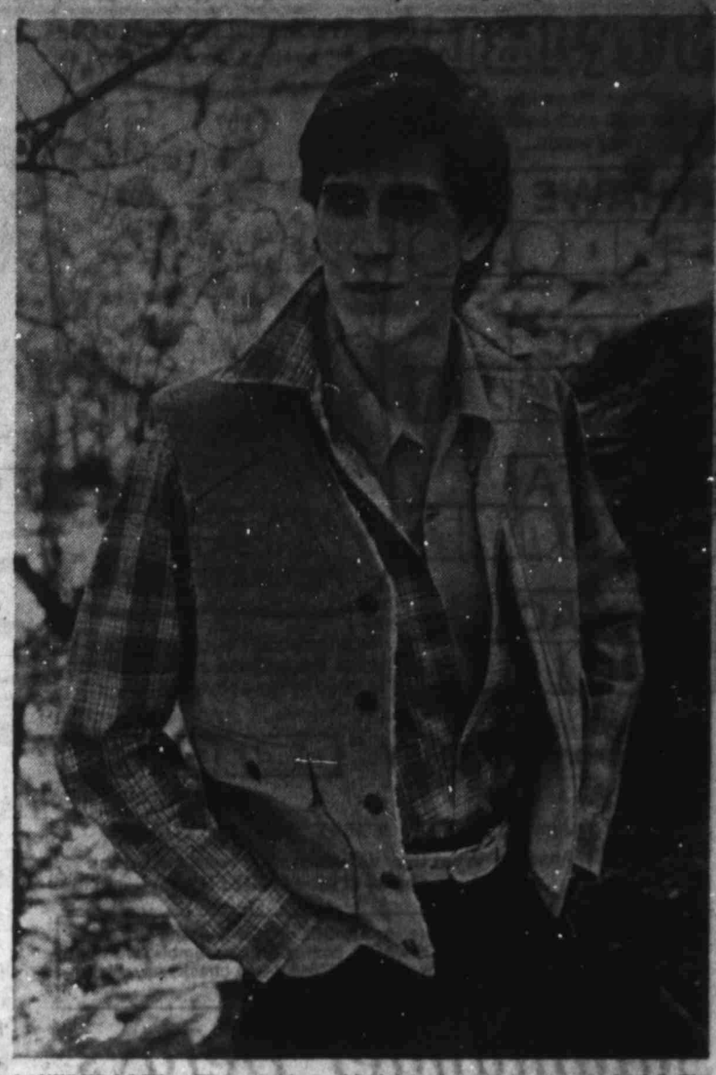

Current visitors to the house today reminders of six generations of the Chew family. Built in the Georgian style, it displays many of the Palladian elements incorporated in fashionable English houses of the 1760's. It is built of local center pavillion with a pedimented door frame and fluted columns supports a full classical entablature.

The house is furnished with fine high style Philadelphia mahogany furniture, some of which was acquired from Governor William Penn and is attributed to the workshop of noted Philadelphia cabinetmake Thomas Affleck.

Period fabrics, original clothing and Benjamin Chew's law library have also survived in their original setting.

Upon request, visitors can cample tea and sweets similar to those served in the 18th century in the magnificent dining room. Surrounded by fine furnishings and decorative objects, china closets filled with 18th and 19th century Chinese export porcelain, and in winter warmed by a cozy fire, visitors have found that taking tea by Cliveden is memorable way to experience this remarkable house.

On the Cliveden grounds, a newly refurbished barn features an unusual preservation gift shop, exhibits and facilities for group meetings. The barn exterior is restored to reflect its 19th century appearance.

LAYERED LOOK — The vested layered look is an important statement for fall. The camel wide wale corduroy vest has button flap patch pockets and leather buttons. It is fully lined in natural pure wool pile. A green camel and rust plaid wool shirt features upper patch and flap pockets and tops a solid camel wool shirt.

Herpetology Enthusiast Maintains Reptile Haven

By CHARLES CHAMBERLAIN

LISLE, Ill. (AP) — In the tidy living room of the large, modern log cabin filled with antiques, 61-year-old Esther Lewis has a 5-foot-long, 40-pound alligator on her shoulder, holding it as you would to burp a baby.

"Don't mind Eddie hissing," she says. "Dogs bark at strangers, don't they?"

Mrs. Lewis has been collecting reptiles and the like since her childhood in Mt. Ayr, Iowa, where she turned an open pit with a fountain into a "snake museum" and persuaded local grocers to save tarantulas for her when banana shipments arrived.

Talking a mile a minute, Mrs. Lewis leads the way to what would be the family room, where a sliding glass door opens onto a huge, manicured back yard and a wooded section beyond. In the room there is the sound of running water, a play area, partitioned units with sliding doors, glass cages. Everything is spic and span, and odorless.

It's here that the petite Mrs. Lewis, a former model and a founder of the Chicago Herpetological Society, pampers her turtles, snakes, North American alligators, tarantulas and an iguana named Dottie.

Mrs. Lewis has reached into a glass case and has come out with Zaremba, a tarantula with a body the size of a silver dollar. It crawls on her blouse.

"Give me a hand with Gorgeous George," she said later, trying to lift a tongue-flicking python from its case. Out and out it came, all 14 feet, as Mrs. Lewis and a visitor pulled and held.

With Gorgeous George put back, Mrs. Lewis turned her attention to "Tea," a 34-pound alligator. She cuddled him against her shoulder. Tea did not hiss. He even looked as if he was smiling.

"Tea has been held by 8,000 children and taken by leash to shopping centers and other places for charity appearances," said Mrs. Lewis, who hosts school groups, conducting educational programs in herpetology and conchology. In addition to the reptiles, she collects sea shells from the world over and has a half million of them on dazzling display in special rooms.

"When Tea was only 6 inches long, some smart alec tossed him into a public swimming pool at Fort Myers, Fla., and he started scaring people," she related. "We got him out and he's been with us 20 years now. He's trained to go to the toilet in a plastic tub and can climb up an incline to a bed, push away the spread, open the sheets, get between them and rest his head on a pillow. He's been on TV, you know.

"I learned to handle alligators from Seminole Indians in Florida," said Mrs. Lewis, who frequently entertains at parties in her home and has family reunions with 13 grandchildren.

"Alligators love to eat rats. Tea has five once a week. In fact, I use up 40 to 50 rats and mice every week. A woman raises them just for me. The only time my husband ever put his foot down was refusing to let me raise my own rats and mice in the house."

Mrs. Lewis peels a banana and feeds it to Dottie the iguana.

"Dottie also loves peas, green beans and carrots right out of the can," she said.

Mrs. Lewis said she had no favorites, but considered her rarest reptile to be "Black Beauty" a black boa constrictor.

"When we go on vacations, members of our herpetological society baby-sit for us," she said. "And I baby-sit for their pets. Right now my guest list includes a Burmese python, an Asian green rat snake, a red rat snake and its baby, a sand boa and two crocodiles."

Has Mrs. Lewis ever been bitten by her pets?

"Of course," she said. "An alligator occasionally snaps. So does Lassie."

Salamander Delays Seco Water Project

SAN ANTONIO (UPI) — Concern for a blind salamander that feeds on bat feces has delayed for two years the building of a water project that would help recharge the Edwards Underground Aquifer, a limestone formation that supplies water to San Antonio and dozens of other cities.

Officials of the Edwards Underground Water District say environmentalists have held up the project based on sketchy information and are asking Texas Sens. John Tower and Lloyd Bentsen to push for a complete overhaul of the Environmental Protection Act to prevent such delays in the future.

Col. McDonald D. Weiner, general manager of the water district since retiring from the Corps of Engineers, said the delay of the proposed Seco Recharge Project, 17 miles north of D'Hanis is the same type of postponement caused by the snail darter at a multi-million dollar dam project in Tennessee.

Except, Weinert avers, there is absolutely no basis for environmentalists to oppose the Seco project. He said the district has spent $17,000 on the delayed project, including about $10,000 hiring attorneys to defend allegations by environmentalists.

The project has been delayed because the Sierra Club and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Office at Albuquerque, contend introduction of water into the limestone aquifer through a sink-hole would endanger "a rare salamander."

However, the Texas Water Rights Commission approved the construction last January after five days of testimony from scientists and engineers and from the Sierra Club and Fish and Wildlife officials.

McDonald contends the testimony, including that of salamander scientist Dr. Glen Longley of Southwest Texas State University, showed:

—Not one federal official has ever set foot on the property where the project is planned, much less lowered himself 174 feet into the cave to determine whether there were any salamanders.

—Although it has been proposed as an addition to the endangered species list, the so-called "Valdina Farms salamander" still has not been declared endangered.

—Bats, whose fecal matter provided food for the salamanders, have abandoned the cave.

—There was no evidence to show that introducing water into the cave year-around, at the same rate it naturally flows into the cave from Seco Creek, would in any way damage the salamander, if any remain in the cave.

—There are thousands of salamanders throughout the 175-mile long Edwards Aquifer despite the contention they are "rare."

Weinert said Longley, who was commissioned to do the study after the environmentalists objected, "crawled on his hands and knees scraping through mud and muck of the bed of the stream that runs through there and in no place was he able to locate any sign, not only of a salamander, but of any aquatic life except one small catfish."

"I'll bet anybody a considerable amount of money they never get this one on the endangerged list because there are literally hundreds and thousands of salamanders. You can give them all kinds of funny names you want to, but they all wind up being salamanders," Weinert said.

"I'll tell you, my friend, they (environmentalists) have never explained why a half gallon of water would kill a salamander quicker than a quart. We know we wouldn't drown them out. Furthermore, we spent so much money and we had such a good project, in order to allay or shut them up or, to be perfectly honest with you, to bribe them, we said, 'okay, we'll install a gate in the channel through which we propose to divert the water and we'll regulate the water through that channel at such a rate so that it will not be enough to endager the salamander."

Weinert said two such recharge projects already have been completed and another is underway. After the water is filtered through limestone, it emerges as one of the nation's purest drinking supplies, needing only the clorine required by law.

The projects involve damming a stream and diverting part of the water underground to recharge the underground reservoir.

Because of the environmentalists' objections, the director of the Corps of Engineers at Fort Worth must give his approval next month before the project can resume

Carter May Have To Get Tough

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — His economic performance rated weak, and with important promises unfilled, President Carter conceivably might be forced to act in a manner that could be construed as domineering.

At stake, among other things, are President Carter's reputation as an international leader, and his credibility on the major domestic issue of restoring price stability to an inflation-distorted economy.

Analysis

The promises were restated at the just-completed meeting of industrial nation leaders in Bonn, West Germany, when Carter pledged to cut both the rate of domestic inflation and the use of imported oil.

The problem with such promises is the delivery, and the chance exists that Carter can deliver only if he takes unusually aggressive and authoritarian action that is bound to stir harsh controversy.

At this moment, the president is hardly succeeding in his efforts to control inflation, now running at better than 10 percent annually. And his efforts to pass an energy bill have been frustrated by Congress.

In fact, criticism and resistance might even have grown stronger over the past year, and could be forcing the president to consider actions he has so far dismissed.

The administration's anti-inflation effort has been meeting resistance from business and labor, who fear that voluntary restraints might only worsen their position while inflation in general runs unchecked.

So long as this attitude prevails, the administration's jawboning can only get tougher. And that, says a U.S. Chamber of Commerce economist, is what has been happening: "Rougher and more precise."

"There is a certain deja vu about it," he said. "We've heard it before." When? "In August 1971," he replied, "when President Nixon froze wages and prices."

President Nixon at that time already had standby authority from Congress to impose controls. President Carter does not, despite an assumption that authority is passed on from president to president.

Can Carter obtain the authority? "Congress has always been happy to give the president standby authority because it takes responsibility of its back," said the Chamber economist.

Others might react differently.

Business and labor might consider such a move to be a dictatorial interference with their rights, and an explosion of criticism might be expected. But some of the public might react with relief.

Still, controls are widely thought to represent failure, a resort to power after more sophisticated and democratic efforts have collapsed.

And the same attitude might pertain to the oil situation also. The president has attempted to persuade Congress to tax crude imports, but with little success. His next move could be to impose quotas.

Again, such a move might be interpreted by some to be arbitrary and a failure of the democratic process. And it would lay the president open also to the accusation that he was merely contributing to inflation.

Still, the president has made his promises to the heads of the other industrial nations, and for reasons of honor, prestige and reputation he undoubtedly feels compelled to demonstrate he is a man of his word.

CB Convac

By INK DIPPER

The uneven monitoring of Channel 9 around the country is serious, particularly with vacationing peak approaching and travelers, probably about one of every eight, depending upon CB for communications when in trouble.

Government agencies recognize the value of in-vehicle communications. All extol the values of Channel 9, but seem to leave monitoring up in the air.

Traveling through Northern Pennsylvania recently, we came across several active CB clubs which endeavor a maintain a fairly constant monitoring process. Heaviest dependency, however, is on the Pennsylvania Highway Patrol. Frequent state markers on the highway advise that Channel 9 is monitored by the state police. But there is a lot of highway through the mountain fastness between DuBois and Wilkes Barre-Scranton, Tunkhammock and Towanada, just to mention a few long stretches of road. Late at night there was little or no activity on 9, but the driver couldn't help wondering if this was because in the urban areas the channel was crackling.

Michigan has done a great job through its police monitoring system. But, here again, it is the more desolate stretches of road that are intimidating. An example occurred in Florida that highlights this point.

"It was just after six o'clock one evening that I was stranded on a road outside the Orlando city limits," Diana McGowin reported to the Orlando Sentinel Star. "After calling for ten minutes on my CB on Channel 9, I realized I had to get out of my car and walk for assistance. It is a desolate stretch of road with no buildings, just palmettos and sand. In high heels, perspiring and stumbling, really afraid I could be assaulted, I walked two and one-half miles. To add insult to injury, a city patrol car passed me by."

Yet Florida says it monitors Channel 9. Obviously, Miss McGowin was out of range of the state police and the local police were too busy with other matters.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has a program where it will provide funds for states that extend their NEAR (National Emergency Aid Radio) application to highway safety. Twenty-seven states are now participating. The reasons are quite obvious: the safety and service benefits from in-car-communications, faster notification of traffic incidents and reduced response time, highway information transfer and improved efficiency through citizen participation.

This is all well and good. But if the monitoring is not set up on a systematic basis, it is hit or miss at best.

Some time ago, this column reported on the Fort Worth Plan, which is being adopted by many communities in the Southwest, El Paso being the most recent to come to note. The plan uses volunteers on a 24-hour schedule, seven days a week, the crews are supervised by a Fort Worth officer whose assignment is to make the plan work. And work it does. Not only has it become well-known throughout the state, but it is being copied by other communities interested in making CB the instrument it was intended to be the most personal of all communications media.

A national plan could be effected through the state and local police forces that would permit volunteers to participate and everyone to benefit from a 24-hour monitoring of Channel 9. Let's do it.

Religious Conversion Stirs Border Dispute

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Controversial legislation banning religious conversion in the Indian territory of Arunachal Pradesh has drawn a battleline between Christians and non-Christians in India's sensitive northeast border region.

The territorial legislature in May enacted a law which bans conversion of any kind and makes the act punishable by two years in prison and a fine the equivalent in rupees of $1,250.

Another part of the act seeks to punish conversion from "one indigenous faith to any other faith or religion by use of force, inducement or by fraudulent means." Force is defined as "show of force or a threat of injury of any kind, including threat of divine displeasure or social excommunication."

India's constitution guarantees "all persons ... freedom of conscience and the right to freely to profess, practice and propagate religion."

This constitutional provision has led Mrs. Rano Shaiza, a Christian and a member of the national Parliament from the neighboring tribal-state of Nagaland, to call the Arunachal legislation "unconstitutional and anti-Christian." Mrs. Shaiza met Prime Minister Morarji Desai recently to protest the act which she says is aimed at legalizing the persecution of Christians. Like many Nagas, she is a Baptist.

Mrs. Shaiza said Desai gave her a patient hearing but said he had not read the bill. She added, however, that he promised to look into the matter.

When she attacked the legislation, Mrs. Shaiza was sharply criticized by two Arunachal legislators. They claimed her references to Christianity proved that the aim of Christianity is to "invade the beliefs of weaker sections for whom protection has been provided in the bill."

Arunachal Pradesh, literally the land of sunrise, is 969 miles east of New Delhi and has a 440-mile border with China.

The 1971 census reported 82 tribes form 79 per cent of the population in Arunachal Pradesh, which was formerly known as the Northeast Frontier Agency. It has a population of more than 460,000, of whom a majority are nature worshipers. There are more than 100,000 Hindus, 60,000 Buddhists and 3,000 Christians. The tribesmen speak more than 50 different languages.

India has always been sensitive about its northeast region because of its proximity to China and the Chinese-aided guerrilla wars which raged for a long time in the jungles of Nagaland and Mizoram. Foreigners are usually refused permission to visit these areas and even Indians require special permits to enter the "inner line" area.

Writer Wins Prize For Movie On TV

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The $250,000 Humanitas prize, given by the Human Family Insititute, has been awarded to John Sacret Young for his screenplay of "Special Olympics," a CBS television movie about athletics for the handicapped.

The "Annie Laurie" episode of the TV series "Family" won $15,000 for Carol Evand McKeand and David Jacobs. Other awards went to Larry Rhine and Mel Tolkin for an "All In the Family" episode; Tom Spain and Bill Moyers for "The Aliens" and "The Fire Next Door."

Endowed by the Lilly Endowment of Indianaapolis, the Humanitas prizes are designed to encourage TV writers to use the medium "to facilitate human growth."

'I Love Lucy' Music To Make Revival

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "I Love Lucy" goes on, and on. Not only is the comedy hit of the 1950s still playing in reruns all over the world; the series' music is now destined for a revival.

First Artists has announced purchase of the music rights to "I Love Lucy," including the title song, from Desi Arnaz Sr., who produced and starred in the series with Lucille Ball. First Artists Records plans to issue an album of the music, also to re-record the songs for the disco market.

Girl To Stay On System

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County officials have obtained a temporary injunction to prevent a critically ill girl from being taken off her life support systems.

Macil Gray, 12, was admitted to Texas Children's Hospital after being rescued Sunday from a smoke filled cottage at Burnett-Bayland Home, a county welfare facility.

State District Judge Wallace Miller signed the injunction Wednesday after hospital authorities notified the county the girl would be considered medically dead if her brain waves continue to register a flat response.

Miller scheduled a July 31 hearing.

"It has come to a point where the state of the law in Texas is so confusing concerning legal death that we are, in effect, asking the court to clarify just what it is," said Judy Hay, county community relations director.

Miss Hay said the county is responsible for giving the child hospital care and may have to enter into a decision on whether to withdraw the life support systems.

"Other reasons for requesting the injunction were that we have been unable to locate the natural father and we really need to know our role as the managing conservator," she said.

A hospital spokesman would say only the child remains in extremely critical condition and has not improved since she and another girl were rescued Sunday by a vacationing policeman who spotted the fire while driving home.

School Talks Ruled Open

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A Chancery Court judge has ruled that a 12 member citizen's committee looking for a new city school superintendent must open its meetings to the public.

Chancellor Robert A. Hoffman said, however, that the applications of individuals who are seeking the job are not covered by Tennessee's open records law and thus may be kept confidential.

Hoffman ruled in a lawsuit filed by the Memphis Board of Education after reporters from the city's two daily newspapers, The Commercial Appeal and The Press-Scimitar, were rebuffed in their attempts to cover the meetings.

The committee was set up by the school board to recommend candidates to succeed Dr. John Freeman, who is retiring Sept. 30.

The school board's lawsuit, naming the Memphis Publishing Co. and its two newspapers as defendants, asked for a declaratory judgment on whether the committee's deliberations were covered by the state's open meetings law.

Second Game In Chess Match Ends In Draw After 29 Moves

BAGUIO CITY, Philippines (AP) — Champion Anatoly Karpov and challenger Viktor Korchnoi today battled to a second draw in the 13th world chess championship in a game that offered more surprises and excitement than their short-lived opening match.

As he did in Tuesday's opening game, the 27-year-old Soviet titleholder offered Korchnoi the draw, this time after 29 moves and 3½ hours of play.

"It was a better game in every respect," said Yugoslav grandmaster Dragan Marovic. "The opening was rather interesting, and complications set in at the beginning so that both players had to solve some problems. It's the problems that made the game interesting. And in my opinion, both players played their best."

Tuesday's game ended after 18 moves.

Karpov today used one of his favorite openings, a Ruy Lopez P-K4, and the 47-year-old Russian defector Korchnoi thwarted it with one of his favorite answers — an open defense after knight took pawn on the fifth move.

Korchnoi's response to Karpov's Spanish opening surprised many experts, who had expected him to resort to the French defense he used in seven games against Karpov during their last match in 1974.

Karpov's victory over Korchnoi in that candidates' match gave him the world crown in 1975 after American champion Bobby Fischer refused to defend his title.

In today's 14th move, after Karpov sent his rook to his king's position, Korchnoi deviated from the book and surprised the experts with a P-QB5. Many agreed it was an innovation.

Both players were on even terms after the 17th move, though American grandmaster Robert Byrne said the position at that time was "very tricky." He predicted then that the game would end in a draw but said, "Black (Korchnoi) has to be very careful."

Raymond Keene of Britain, one of Korchnoi's seconds, credited the challenger's performance to "brilliant preparation by the Korchnoi team — it was only the last few moves that we hadn't worked out beforehand."

The first player to win six games will get the title and $350,000. The loser will receive $200,000. The match may take two or three months. Three games are to be played each week, on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, with adjourned games continued the next day.

Winners Often Losers After Proposition 13

By STEPHEN FOX

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Californians are feeling the effects of the tax revolt, and many can't tell whether they are winners or losers.

Gerald Edwards, who lives in Fountain Valley, got the lower property taxes promised by Proposition 13. But the 32-year-old homeowner isn't all smiles — the teaching job he hoped for was eliminated because taxes were cut.

"We bought in 1975 and our taxes have gone up, but I valued my teaching job more than the decrease in property taxes," said Edwards, a substitute teacher in Orange County for two years.

Jack Kenan saw property taxes fall at Academic Specialties Inc. in El Cajon, but Kenan, a contract estimator there, isn't sure the school supply firm really gained. Proposition 13 slashed property taxes; that meant curtailed spending for education.

"What we've lost in business more than offsets what we save in property taxes," Kenan said. "I have mixed emotions. We want our government to be well run and efficient, yet on the other hand we know it's going to hurt our business."

Kenan and Edwards, their livelihoods tied to revenue-short schools, already feel Proposition 13. Others find it tougher to figure out where they stand under the tax-cut measure.

Homeowners, big supporters of Proposition 13's 57 percent average property tax reduction, generally came out ahead. Many banks already have cut mortgage impound payments to reflect property tax savings.

Yet homeowners also will have less to deduct from federal income taxes and will face — along with many others — increased fees for everything from dog licenses to golf games as cities try to make up for the lost property tax revenue.

Renters, 47 percent of the state's residents, have seen few pass-on rent cuts and generally feel they are victims of greedy landlords.

"There's been no impact at all from Proposition 13," says Joe Caux, chairman of a renters group in apartment-short Orange County. "We've gotten reports from 36 apartment complexes in the last week and a half that rents are going up August 1."

Landlords say that higher municipal fees and uncertainty over their final savings from Proposition 13 make rent cuts impossible now.

"The various city and county agencies have added all sorts of charges — license fees, sewer charges and so on," said Gordon Thill, an aide to Proposition 13 sponsor Howard Jarvis and a landlord. "If the politicians and bureaucrats leave me alone, I can make a rebate. But if they hand me some whopping increases ... I can't."

The real impact of Proposition 13 has been delayed by use of the state's $5 billion budget surplus to help local governments bear the $7 billion loss. Already, however, there are hints of the future.

In the Los Angeles suburb of Downey, for example, dog licenses now cost $10 — double what they were a month ago. Golf fees on Sacramento courses have been increased $1 and the state Capitol's parking meters now demand a quarter per hour instead of the pre-Proposition 13 dime.

One long-term effect of Proposition 13 may be a good one: an easing of the housing shortage that helped push up property values — and therefore taxes — in the first place.

Ben Bartolotto of the California Construction Industry Research Board says Proposition 13, by making home owning cheaper, could stimulate construction of 179,000 more units through 1980. That would mean 365,000 jobs in building and related industries, he says.

"Business benefits from the property tax reduction as well as homeowners, so this can mean improved economics for new business ventures, or in the case of existing companies, extra cash for expansion," Bartolotto said.

Not all executives would agree with Bartolotto's assessment but California's business community, which stands to recoup about $4.5 billion under Proposition 13, is under intense pressure to recycle that money into the state's economy.

Business leaders say, however, that lower property tax deductions translate into higher corporate income taxes that will consume half their savings right away. Proposition 13 also reinstated California's business inventory tax and many business spokesmen say that and other hastily enacted municipal charges may wipe out their "windfall."

Oakland, for example, increased its business license fee from 90 cents per $1,000 of gross receipts to $14 per $1,000 — about 1,500 percent.

Also worrying businessmen are moves in the State Legislature to split the tax rolls and restrict Proposition 13 savings to residential property only, including rental units.

"It's difficult for business to make any decisions on what might be done with tax savings until we know whether business will in fact realize any tax savings," said a spokesman for Standard Oil of California, the state's largest industrial firm. "If these other taxes and fees go into effect and then they exempt business from Proposition 13, you wind up paying more."

Meanwhile, tax-cut movements have sprung up in other states and a congressional study says Proposition 13 will cause a spillover loss of 60,000 jobs nationally but a dip in the Consumer Price Index. Federal pension and Social Security payments, union wages and even some alimony payments are pegged to that index of inflation.

Most observers agree that the real impact of Proposition 13 will come next year — after the state's budget surplus is spent. How Californians react then may well determine whether their tax rebellion is real — or another West Coast fad.

VICTIMS OF PROPOSITION 13 — A cross-section of Californians carry protest signs against budget cuts and subsequent loss of jobs in the implementation of Proposition 13 during a demonstration outside the California Capitol in Sacramento recently. According to a study by the Congressional Budget office, similar tax limitation movements in other states could cause a nationwide loss of 60,000 jobs. (AP Laserphoto)

Local Bank Reports Window Damages

Burglars and persons who apparently just had nothing better to do than cause trouble were continuing to make life miserable for many residents and businessmen here.

Someone reportedly chipped three bullet-proof glasses at the Plains National Bank drive-up windows currently under construction at 50th Street and Akron Avenue. Reports indicated the criminal activity resulted in a $1,500 loss.

In recently reported break-ins, Ignacio Lara of 303-B Ave. T told officers whoever broke through a door at his home Wednesday carried away almost $1,600 worth of stereo equipment and a $400 television.

William F. Norris of 2504 22nd St., rear, was unhappy that someone stole a television set and edger from his residence Wednesday. The complainant said the grass trimmer was in the back yard and there was no forced entry into the house.

Neither was there forced entry into a storage shed at the rear of a house at 2323 15th St., reports showed. Gene Blackburn of 2709 55th St. told police a $160 air conditioner was stolen from the property.

Jewelry store owner Jim Jones said burglars took an undetermined amount of merchandise, including watches, crystal and other items, after breaking through the front glass window at his shop at 322 University Ave. early Wednesday.

James Croy of 4601 52nd St., Apt. 3-A, said someone apparently stole a portable radio valued at $860 from the Plains Co-Op Mill, 2901 Ave. A, recently.

Whoever stole a television set belonging to Linda Chayez of 2606 E. Auburn St. inflicted a nearly $1,100 loss on the victim. Also taken was a home box office converter, reports indicated.

L.A. Caraway of 1503 1st Place said thieves took an AM/FM radio from a car at Modern Chevrolet, 40th Street and Avenue Q, Tuesday or Wednesday. Also swiped were four wire wheels and the license plates, altogether valued at about $450.

ABC Signs 'Angel' For Comedy Show

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Kate Jackson has her future planned for her. ABC has announced signing the co-star of "Charlie's Angels" for a half-hour comedy show to be produced after the conclusion of her current series.

That would make three series in a row for Miss Jackson, who co-starred in "The Rookies" for four seasons.

Solons Urging Grand Jury Hearing

DALLAS (AP) — Three state legislators have asked U.S. District Judge Sarah T. Hughes to a set a grand jury hearing on possible civil rights violations in the case of Santos Rodriguez, a 12-year-old Mexican-American slain five years ago by a then-Dallas policeman.

State Reps. Ben Reyes and Craig Washington of Houston and Matt Garcia of San Antonio met Wednesday with Judge Hughes in an attempt to have a grand jury consider the case before the statute of limitations expires Monday.

The legislators' action came after U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell last week announced the Justice Department has decided not to pursue the Rodriguez case on civil rights charges.

Bell's decision has been loudly criticized by some Mexican-American leaders who had hoped the Justice Department would seek a federal case against Darrell Cain.

Cain, a former policeman, was convicted of shooting Rodriguez while the youngster sat handcuffed in a patrol car in 1973.

Although Bell already has ruled out a civil rights prosecution in the case, Garcia said Wednesday that technically, because the statute of limitations has not run out, a grand jury could still return an indictment.

"We recognize the constraints and the fact that the deadline is Monday, but we have to keep trying," said Garcia.

Even if Judge Hughes allows the legislators to present the case to the grand jury, U.S. Attorney Ken Mighell has said that, because of Bell's decision, he could not sign any indictment that might be returned.

Garcia would not say what was Hughes' reaction to the legislators' request, he said "she assured us that she is concerned about the Rodriguez case."

Judge Hughes would not comment about the meeting.

Sen. Aikin Named Dean Emeritus

DEAN OF SENATE HONORED — Sen. A.M. Aikin, of Paris, was recognized Monday in the Texas Senate as the senator with the "lowest voice but the greatest influence," and they named him as dean emeritus for life. Aikin, in the legislature since 1933, retires in January because of rheumatoid arthritis. (AP Laserphoto)

AUSTIN (AP) — Sen. A.M. Aikin — the "conscience of the state Senate" — has been named by his colleagues as dean emeritus for life.

Aikin, D-Paris, probably has already been honored as much as any Texas legislator. His portrait has hung in the Senate chamber since 1973.

Monday, the resolution naming him as dean emeritus cited him as the senator with the "lowest voice but the greatest influence."

"This is the most important thing you will see during this so-called special session," said Sen. W.T. Moore, who introduced the resolution.

It was co-sponsored by the entire Senate.

Aikin, 72, is hobbled by rheumatoid arthritis and is giving up his front row center seat because of poor health.

He has been in the Legislature since 1933 and the Senate since 1937. Incredibly, he has been absent only 2½ days in a 45-year legislative career that purportedly ranks him second in length of legislative service in the United States.

The resolution noted that Aikin's legislative accomplishments include the 1949 Gilmer-Aikin laws that committed the state to its present massive program of aid to public schools.

He co-authored bills creating the teacher retirement system and the Commission on Higher Education, which was the predecessor of the Texas College Coordinating Board.

Teacher pay raises have been one of his primary legislative goals.

Aikin also sponsored the first state appropriation for Houston's M.D. Anderson, one of the nation's leading cancer hospitals. That $300,000 appropriation 37 years ago has grown to $90 million for 1978-79.

Aikin's power stems from his chairmanship of the finance committee, a job he has held continuously since 1967.

He is known for being thrifty and closes his Capitol office between sessions, a practice that enables him to regularly return expense money to the state treasury.

"Nobody wants to come down here and just visit my secretary," he has often said. "People know they can find me at the (clothing) store in Paris."

After the resolution had been read, senators gave Aikin a standing ovation, and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby shook his hand.

"I love the Senate of Texas, and I know I'm going to miss it," said Aikin. "Some of the best friends I have are in this Senate. . . . I feel very humble and, indeed, most grateful."

Aikin will be succeeded by Ed Howard of Texarkana, a former House member who won the Democratic primary in May.

Moore, D-Bryan, will become dean in January. He is 60 and has been in the Senate since 1949.

Shreveport Theater Stops Showing Film

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — A new adult movie theater has agreed to stop showing its debut film, "The Joy of Letting Go," which was confiscated on opening night under an obscenity warrant.

However, Henry Walker, the lawyer representing the Glenwood Theatre, said Monday the theater will continue to show what he called soft core adult films. Walker said the Glenwood will not fight to prove the film should be allowed on Shreveport screens, and it will be shipped back to the distributors.

The raid was the first in Sheveport since "Last Tango in Paris" was challenged several years ago. A court order against showing "Tango" in Shreveport was eventually overruled in court.

Assistant District Attorney Steve Glassell said his office will continue to monitor the films at the theater.

Board Sets Professors' Workloads

AUSTIN (AP) — On legislative orders, the Texas College Coordinating Board approved workload reporting requirements for state university and college teachers.

"This was the 900-pound gorilla," said Sam Young, chairman of the committee that thrashed out the controversial issue.

Under the regulation, colleges must report to the Legislature how much time each teacher — by name — spends on direct instruction, administration and other professional activities.

The 1977 Legislature ordered the coordinating board to develop a standard form to report faculty members' salaries, work appointments and funding sources to pay each professor's salary.

The coordinating board overruled a committee recommendation to rely on each institution's "good faith effort" to provide information required by the Legislature. The committee suggested postponing development of a standard reporting form.

"I truly feel that if this board abdicates its responsibility to collect the minimum data, then there will be direct legislative action which could be punitive," Betty Jo Hay said in opposition to the committee recommendation.

The author of the faculty workload legislation told the board that the three broad categories of faculty work time would be the "minimal" requirements.

Rep. Bill Caraway, D-Houston, said in a letter that failure to adopt a minimum reporting form would violate legislative intent.

In other action, the board defeated a proposed appropriation request for $350,000 to fund 25 undergraduate minority scholarships for prospective medical students over the next two years.

The proposal was referred to the health affairs committee for more work.

Opponents said there was nothing to stop scholarship recipients from going to out-of-state schools or abandoning medical school plans altogether.

The program would provide financial aid during an undergraduate's last two years, so that he or she could concentrate on grades, said Kenneth Ashworth, commissioner of higher education.

Japan Reports Increase In Trade Surplus

TOKYO (AP) — Japan posted a customs clearance-based trade surplus of $2.376 billion in June, up sharply from a surplus of about $632 million in May, as dollar-based exports rose 21.7 percent from a year ago to $8.108 billion.

Meanwhile, imports dipped 1.8 percent to $5,732 billion, the Finance Ministry said Tuesday in a preliminary report.

The June figures bring the surplus for the half year to a record $8.336 billion, up from the $2.3 billion for the same period last year which had marked the prior record.

For the half year, exports rose 22 percent to $45.627 billion while imports rose 6.3 percent to $37.291 billion.

The dollar-based trade surplus for June was only slightly below the record $2.455 billion surplus record in March. The announcement, which came one day after Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda pledged in Bonn, West Germany, to reduce Japan's huge trade surpluses, indicates that the current account for June was in surplus by about $2.7 billion, bank analysts said. June balance of payments figures will be announced Thursday.

June exports to the United States showed a moderate 4.5 percent increase from a year ago but imports were off 9.5 percent.

Ballistics Expert Knows Weapons

BALTIMORE (AP) — Joseph A. Reitz began his career as a factory worker in a gun manufacturing company 15 years ago.

The parts to six Smith & Wessons — used by police officers — were plunked down in front of him and he put them together.

Reitz stayed at the Springfield, Mass., gun factory for two weeks. It was part of his apprenticeship for his job in the Baltimore Police Department's firearms unit.

Today, as supervisor of a four-man team, Reitz has learned that just about anything can be used as a weapon to fire off a bullet.

In order to become qualified as a ballistics expert, Retiz says three years of apprenticeship are required. It is one of the few jobs in the department where prospective employees cannot go to college to get their education.

"I was assigned to the factory for two weeks and went in just like a factory worker at 7:30 a.m.," Reitz said. "They gave me parts to make six revolvers and I had to have them inspected.

"It was great training," he added. "Instead of referring to that little lever there, I knew what the proper name was."

Since then, much of his time has been taken up with weapons which don't carry the standard parts of a handgun.

"Guns can be made out of cigarette lighters, auto antennas, hatchets — you name it, they've made it," he said. "And we had one used in a homicide which was made out of pipes and a clothespin."

As he walks through the weapons museum where 1,800 samples of guns are displayed, Reitz picks up a walking cane from Germany that was confiscated in a narcotics raid. A twist of the hand and the trigger drops out and the cane is ready for firing.

"We don't know how it ever got into this country," Reitz said.

He has also compared the markings on bolt cutters used to steal a motorcycle. Although the cycle was not found in the suspect's van, positive identification was made on the cutters that sliced the chain locking the cycle to a tree.

One of his most unusual cases came from a suspected suicide, Reitz said. Following the autopsy, the coroner told Reitz there was no way the man could have killed himself. One bullet from the Saturday night special was imbedded in his brain, a second in the skull.

"We found that two bullets were fired because of the sloppy chamber," he said. "At 25 yards, the bullets would separate enough that it would be possible to shoot two people standing five feet apart."

And then there was a vending machine operator who was "reborn" after Reitz found the words "In God" imprinted on the bullet which a would-be robber fired at the victim.

"The bullet hit his money bag and creased itself around a nickel. 'In God' was on the bullet," Reitz said.

Reitz says the secret to success is being "diligent and having patience." Even a routine case will take from two hours to two days.

That time will be cut down tremendously when the Baltimore department is hooked up to a nationwide computer. The computer will give officers the types of guns from which a bullet could have come.

Reitz's team has also been called upon to recreate crime scenes to prove the feasibility of a defendant's testimony, to restore obliterated serial numbers on stolen items such as saxophones, adding machines and weapons, and to check the fingers to determine if a suspect has fired a weapon.

Reitz says the only time he longs to return to patrol duty "is when the weather is beautiful. I wouldn't mind being back on the street then."

But he quickly adds: "I love guns, handling them and working with them. It never becomes boring."

Navy Cites Shortage Of CPOs

By ROBERT C. MILLER

HONOLULU (UPI) — U.S. military commanders in the Pacific are divided on the question of restoring the draft.

The air force brass questioned in Hawaii, Korea and the Philippines said they have all the talent they need to carry out their assignments.

"Of course we would like to have more people — every military commander does," said one squadron commander. "But we have an adequate supply of qualified people to do the jobs assigned us."

The air force reports a comfortable cushion of senior non-commissioned officers, enlisted personnel and flying officers.

Army authorities say they are getting plenty of recruits — a high percentage of them black — but that up to 50 percent are being rejected because they often fail to meet the army's requirements, mostly because of education deficiencies.

Maj. Gen. David Grange, commander of the 2nd Division in Korea, said both he and his officers are "quite high on" their black soldiers.

He said the army offers a lot to blacks as a field in which they can move upward strictly on merit compared with discrimination faced in civilian life.

However, the army faces a problem in that enlistees can select specialties. One army colonel suggested a national guard draft to provide a reservoir of trained combat ground troops. he said his biggest problem was in filling the quotas for rifle companies.

"Nobody wants to be an infantryman anymore," he said.

The navy's problem is a shortage of chief petty officers. The senior officers said far too many chiefs officers are taking early retirement or quitting to take civilian jobs.

One chief summed up his unhappiness by saying:

"When I came into the navy a first class was St. Peter and a senior chief was Jesus Christ himself, and they were given the equivalent respect. Today, if I give a swabby a dirty look, I end up not only explaining to my division commander, but to the swabby's congressman. There is no respect for discipline left in the navy anymore. I'm getting out."

The problem is so great that the new chief of naval operations, Thomas B. Hayward, has created a special task force of chiefs to investigate the causes of the resignations, and come up with a plan to make the navy more attractive to the people it needs the most — its senior noncommissioned officers.

The air force noncoms believe the navy's problem stems from the long periods of time navy men are away from their families. They point out that foreign duty stations cause few hardships in the air force because families are allowed to accompany senior noncoms on many overseas assignments while the six, nine and 12 month tours by the navy are usually periods that split the families.

All authorities agree that more than warm bodies are required today in every branch of the service.

Boats Need Sufficient Equipment To Cope With Any Emergency

By BART KINCH
United Press International Writer

No one should venture out on the water in an ill-equiped boat. In addition to the safety items specified by federal authorities, adequate precautions should be taken to cope with accidents or illness.

Such precautions should include a well stocked medical kit and an up-to-date book on first aid by a competent medical person.

Dr. John Bergan, a Chicago surgeon and yachtsman and author of the new official first aid book for the U.S. Yacht Racing Union, offers some sound advice.

In addition to the usual bandages and tape, Bergan suggests the following items be included in your cruising gear:

—Antacids that contain magnesium and aluminum hydroxide to take care of any indigestion. Sodium bicarbonate, otherwise known as baking soda, is a well known remedy for neutralizing acidity.

—Antiseptics of the common household variety such as Betadine for treatment of minor cuts and scrapes.

—Aspirin can alleviate pain and reduce fever. It helps soothe aches and pains from muscle cramps, dental cavities and headaches.

—Non-prescription Dramamine or other motion sickness pills can help to prevent or relieve vomiting and nausea.

—Insect repellent to help ward off irritating insects. Hot water compresses or even ice cubes help take the bite out of chiggers, prickly heat or insect bites. Calamine lotion also helps soothe the irritation. Some people advocate taking vitamin B-12 as an insect repellent.

—Eyeglasses: take an extra pair along just in case. Also be sure to take along a pair of good sunglasses. If you're an eyeglass wearer, consider having a pair of prescription sunglasses made. Non-eyeglass wearers can get by with a quality pair of sunglasses.

—Metamucil to aid regularity.

—Sun screen preparations containing para-aminobenzoic acid (PABA) to block the sun's harmful rays and equally damaging rays reflected from the water. Zinc oxide also is a very effective sun blocker.

—Keep all medications out of the reach of children.

Dr. Paul B. Sheldon in his book "First Aid Afloat" suggests that the ship's medicine kit also include a thermometer and case, a sling, a three inch Ace Bandage, an oval eye patch, splinter forceps, small scissors and safety pins.

The more distant the cruise, the more elaborate the medicine chest should be stocked and Sheldon offers several lists from the minimum to the most elaborate for a trans-ocean voyage.

Steve Colgate, president of the Offshore Sailing School headquartered in New York City, has a number of suggestions in his latest book, "Fundamentals of Sailing, Cruising and Racing," on how to combat seasickness.

Colgate, a veteran of the America's Cup trials, the 1968 Olympics and numerous ocean races, cautions against drinking liquor excessively the night before departing on a cruise.

"The slight morning-after feeling can be compounded many times on a boat," he says. Colgate also suggests avoiding greasy foods. "The first sign of seasickness is indigestion it often never gets past that point.

"Drink a soft drink and other fluids to avoid becoming dehydrated. Eat crackers. They absorb the excess acidity very well. " He also suggests that if the indigestion is really bac, an antacid tablet should prove helpful.

Additionally, Colgate says, "Stay on deck where the air if fresh and you can see the horizon ... if you have a choice of berths, don't choose one in the forward cabin. There is less pitching motion in the center of the boat."

It reduces your chances of becoming seasick and also reduces its debilitating effect on you if you do," he says.

For more detailed information on first aid afloat contact the U.S. Yacht Racing Union, P.O. Box 209, Newport, R.I. 02840.

Cameras Can Help Insurance Claims

By United Press International

Take along a camera the next time you go sailing. In addition to the usual rewards of pleasant photos or movies to view at a later date, a camera loaded with film can be helpful in collecting insurance claims in case of accident or theft.

According to the American Institute of Marine Underwriters, snapshots taken after damage and before repairs are almost required if you hope to reach a quick settlement, especially when the pictures can be compared with original condition shots.

Thomas A. Fain, president of the institute, says that although pictures "do not verify losses, they do show the extent of damage and support repair or replacement costs."

The Internal Revenue Service also recognizes snapshots as one way to establish property damage for tax deduction purposes on losses due to fire, theft, hurricanes and accidents not covered by insurance.

Close-up pictures of valuable equipment, such as the compass, wind, speed and distance instruments, radio equipment and depthsounder, have proven helpful to police in tracking down stolen property.

The back of each print should include the date each item was purchased, the cost and the serial number.

Photographs have been used in court actions resulting from collisions and also can be helpful when re-evaluating insurance for next season's coverage or increasing the current policy to cover recent improvements.

Kodak experts offer the following advice:

—Choose an easy to operate pocket-size camera that lets you concentrate on the subject matter.

—Take pictures of the boat from all four sides. If you cannot show an entire section in one snapshot, photograph it in sections overlapping each shot slightly.

—If the boat is kept on a mooring, use a dinghy as your shooting platform.

—Once the pictures are developed and labeled properly, stow them in a safe deposit box or other secure place.

—Don't forget the fun pictures.

Photos that capture the thrill of sailing should be taken underway. These action pictures are easy to take with the new easy-to-operate cameras such as the Kodak Ektramax.

If it can be arranged, often spectacular pictures of sailboats can best be captured from another boat. Once again, the dinghy can be used. Let the photographer drift off in the dinghy and then have the "mothership" pass by on various points of sailing.

Take along a plastic bag to protect the camera against possible spray. If you're heading into the wind, slip the camera inside the bag, leaving only the lens exposed. Clean any spray off the lens as quickly as possible.

C.R. "Bud" Toomey, the veteran boat photographer often used by Johnson Motors, suggests that people be included in snapshots and movies whenever possible.

"People shots generally are the best, the most interesting," he says. "If you want a picture of your boat, set up a shot of the boat with people in it. Happy people. Don't just 'grab' the shot. Take a few seconds to frame it and to make sure the subjects aren't covered with dark shadows.

"Then you, the photographer, might still have to remind these 'happy' people that they have to look happy, too."

"If it's people, move in close. If its scenery, move back. Don't try to include too many things in one picture.

Richard Matt, another Johnson photographer, warns the casual snapshooter not to attempt a picture from a moving boat unless he can dial a fast shutter speed on his camera. He suggests a shutter speed of at least a 250th of a second.

But don't pass the shot up if you just have a simple camera with a fixed lens and shutter speed. Very often a blurred subject adds to the illusion of speed and movement.

So regardless of whether your camera is simple or sophisticated, take it alont the next time you go boating.

For anyone wanting additional information on photographing valuables for insurance purposes, Kodak offers a booklet entitled "Photos Help You When Disaster Strikes" (AM-4). You can obtain the booklet from a photo dealer or by writing to Department 841, Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N.Y. 14650. Be sure to include a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Lebanese Community Peaceful

By GEORGE A. KRIMSKY

EL MINA, Lebanon (AP) — The goal was to find a town in Lebanon with all the prerequisites for peace:

Christians and Moslems living in harmony. No recent bombings or gun battles. No armed militias, guerrillas or occupation armies. No war refugees living in squalid camps or squatting in other people's homes.

To find a reasonable facsimile, one has to come to northern Lebanon. Since the civil war, it has been largely removed from the waves of crisis that still engulf the country from Beirut down to the Israeli border.

Driving up the highway that snakes along the rocky edge of the Mediterranean, one comes to this port city on the outskirts of Tripoli, Lebanon's second largest city 55 miles north of Beirut.

El Mina is a town of peace where Moslems and Christians coexist with easy grace, as rare in this country as a diamond in a coal mine.

This municipality of 50,000 has all the characteristics looked for, except one: there is still an occupying force of Syrian soldiers, who police the fragile peace here as they do throughout most of the country. Public reactions are mixed on whether El Mina could maintain its quiet without them.

There are numerous communities in Lebanon that live in varying degrees of peace, where a casual political argument in the street or a nighttime stroll into another neighborhood do not necessarily lead to trouble. But all too few towns can boast of real coexistence between religious and political sects.

Most Lebanese villages are either Christian or Moslem, but not mixed. In the cities, the communities are usually segregated.

The estrangement between sects has been a main factor in the civil strife that has taken nearly 40,000 lives.

In this town, the Moslems, making up two-thirds of the population, and the Christians live together, work together, go to school together and even marry each other — the last a taboo for many Lebanese.

Why is it different from other communities?

It seems to be a mixture of historical accident and self-interest, woven together into a tightly knit social fabric.

President, or mayor, Abdel Kader Alameddine says El Mina escaped all but marginal involvement in the civil war and has been thriving ever since, "because no strangers came to make trouble."

During the war, both Christian and Moslem youths formed neighborhood vigilante groups to make sure no outside "rabble rousers" stirred up trouble, Alameddine said in a recent interview.

The town's harbormaster, Victor Razzi, a Christian, stressed the value of economics as a peacekeeper. "Both sides needed their jobs, needed the money coming in from the port and needed each other. They saw no future in the fight going on outside."

History and geography also provide some answers to El Mina's good future.

As a port, El Mina has always been a mecca for fishermen, for the unskilled willing to sweat and for artisans working the wood and stone shipped from outside. The main criterion was workmanship, not religion or politics.

MOMENTUM has extra pain-fighting medicines. A fast-acting pain reliever. A longer-lasting one. And a special calmative doctors often recommend. It relieves the tension that helps cause your muscles to tighten.

If you're suffering low back pain...don't expect an ordinary headache remedy to give you all the strength and relief you get from MOMENTUM. Discover the big difference in MOMENTUM Tablets. Use only as directed.

Longhorns Make Comeback In Cattle Industry

By GREG THOMPSON

BRACKETTVILLE (AP) — The television producers didn't want too much from Happy Shahan, only a measly 500 Longhorn cattle for the filming near here of a Western mini-series.

That would have been no problem back in the 1870s, when millions of the rangy, rugged beasts were being driven thousands of miles to supply most of the nation's beef.

A century later, however, the television assemblage makes up the largest single herd of rare Longhorns since the days of the storied cattle drives, claims Shahan.

The lengendary, fiesty beasts, which thrived among rattlesnakes and cactus in barren South Texas and easily endured harsh 2,000-mile trail drives, were no match for fenced-in pastures and the progress of the railroad.

They nearly became extinct by the 1920s, as cattlemen turned to less hardy breeds that fattened faster, provided more meat and didn't need to trudge thousands of miles to Kansas railheads.

"They were just almost gone. There were only a few left," said Shahan, who owns a sprawling Southwest Texas ranch. "They're coming back, though. This is the largest herd of Longhorn cattle in modern history, since the days of the cattle drives."

The Longhorn has begun re-emerging in the American cattle industry, where its hardiness, disease resistance and ease in calving make it perfect for cross-breeding with Charolais, Angus, Herefords and other breeds, said Shahan.

There are more than 8,000 purebred Longhorns now, compared to less than 400 in the 1920s. Shahan said more than 10 million were driven up cattle trails to market from 1865 until 1900.

Shahan provided his herd of 243 Longhorns — one of the largest in the world — for the television project. Thirteen other cattlemen added their Longhorns to bring the total to 520.

The cattle are insured for $520,000 during the filming. Shahan, president of the Texas Longhorn Breeders Association, estimates that they are worth more than $2 million.

"The cattle get cranky in the sun," said Alex Beaton, producer of "The Longhorns" segment for NBC's 25-hour mini-series, "Centennial." He added tongue-in-cheek, "They're not unlike Hollywood extras, except I think cattle are easier to handle."

The two-hour segment, depicting a cattle drive to Centennial, Colo., in the late 1860s, is being filmed this week in 100-degree temperatures on a dust-choked Southwest Texas ranch.

It was those cattle drives that brought Texas' cattle boom of the late 1800s. Impoverished former Confederate soldiers found it relatively easy to get in the cattle business — just capture some of the millions of wild Longhorns that were descended from the cattle brought by Spanish conquistadors and toughened by 200 years on the range.

"No animal can take care of itself on the range better than a Longhorn can. A Longhorn can starve any other breed to death on the same range," said Shahan. "These cattle developed their own way of breeding and protected themselves."

By the 1920s, however, fewer than 400 survived, kept as a hobby by a few ranchers. Congress appropriated $3,000 in 1927 to purchase some of the surviving Longhorns for a protected herd at the Wichita Wildlife Refuge in Oklahoma. Another protected herd was started a few years later at Fort Niobrara National Wildlife Refuge in Nebraska.

Longhorns from those herds have been auctioned each year to private buyers, but it wasn't until the 1960s that interest began to revive in the Longhorn as a commercial animal.

"The thing that brought the Longhorn back was that science started finding they had a lot of qualities — longer life, better calf crop, more disease resistance — that made them attractive," added Shahan.

Annual Fair Sets Cutting Contests

Open and youth cutting contests approved by the National Cutting Horse Association will be conducted during the 61st annual Panhandle South Plains Fair here this fall.

Competition is scheduled on Sept. 28-29. The eight-day fair run is Sept. 23-30.

Ken Cook of Lubbock will serve as superintendent and John Trimmier of Hale Center will represent the National Cutting Horse Association.

An entry fee of $75, plus a $40 cattle and office charge, has been established for the open contests — one preliminary round plus finals.

A $750 purse, plus entry fees, will be paid.

Buckstitch halters will go to the first through third place winners in the youth division, while trophies will be awarded for fourth through sixth places. There is no entry fee for the youth division but a $25 fee will be assessed for cattle and office charges.

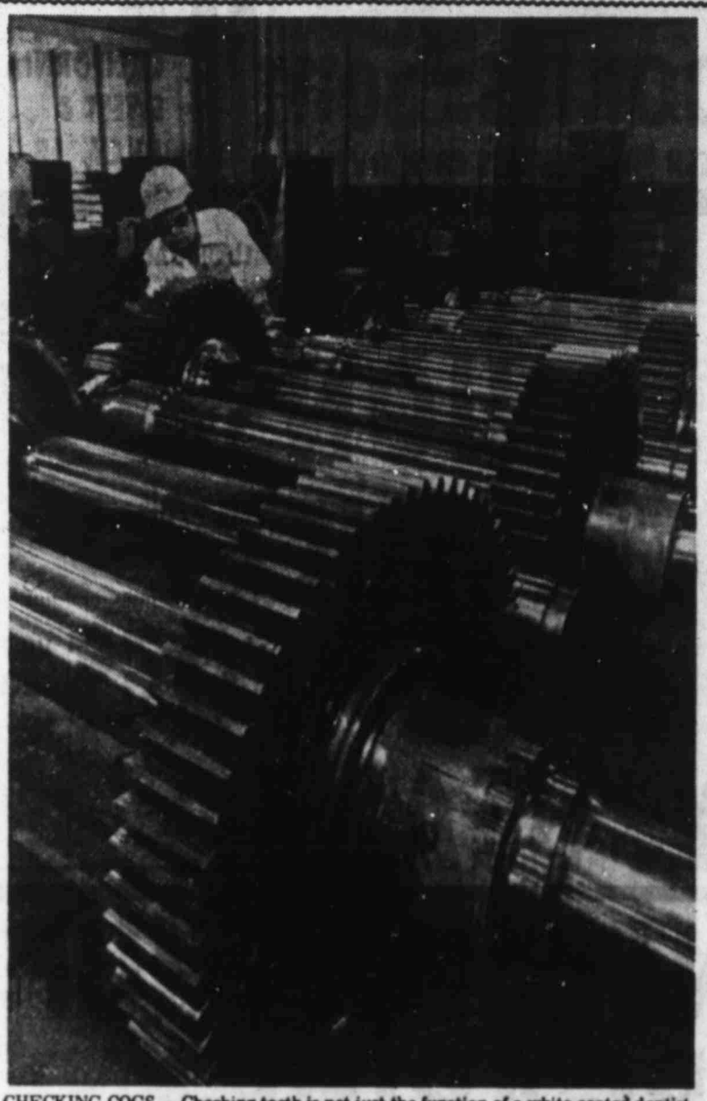

The events are sponsored by the fair association and Lubbock County 4-H.

Entries will be accepted up to one hour before each contest.

Six stage shows have been scheduled in connection with the fair. The Fair Park Coliseum lineup includes: Charley Pride, with Dave and Sugar, 5 p.m. and 8 p.m. on Sept. 24; the Statler Brothers, 5 p.m. and 8 p.m., Sept. 25; Johnny Rodriquez and Linda Hargrove, 8 p.m., Sept. 26; the Jim Ed Brown Show, with Helen Cornelius and Wendy Holcombe, 8 p.m., Sept. 27; Eddie Rabbitt and Jerry Clower, 8 p.m., Sept. 28, Mel Tillis anbd the Statesiders, 8 p.m. Sept. 29 and 5 p.m. and 8 p.m. Sept. 30.

All seats are reserved. Tickets for all shows are priced at $4, $5 and $6. Mail order reservations now are being accepted by the fair at P.O. Box 208, Lubbock, 79408. However, no tickets will be mailed prior to Aug. 1. A self-addressed, stamped envelope is required.

Court Orders Contempt Charge Against Tom Curtis Dismissed

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals says it does not endorse sharp remarks made by Potter County District Attorney Tom Curtis to an Amarillo district judge, but Curtis should not have been held in contempt.

The appeals court Wednesday ordered the criminal contempt charge against Curtis dismissed.

In dismissing the charge and three-day jail sentence, the appeals court granted a writ of habeas corpus sought by Curtis.

Curtis was held in contempt by State District Judge Bryan Poff for remarks Curtis made during a pre-trial hearing March 9 for former Potter County Commissioner Robert Hicks.

Poff sentenced Curtis to 10 days in jail. After a hearing, State District Judge David Gulley found Curtis guilty of contempt July 11 but reduced the sentence to three days.

— "Merely because I feel that you are acting . . . in favor of this defendant in derogation of the state's case illegally and improperly . . ."

The exchange occurred after the judge had quashed two counts of an indictment against Hicks. Several other counts were waived by Curtis.

The appeals court said "there is no indication" that Curtis' "statements were made in a boisterous tone or that they disrupted the proceedings in any way."

"Although we cannot and do not endorse the relator's remarks — or the acrimonious dispute of which they are a part — we cannot agree that they were any more contemptuous than the remarks made in" two previous cases in which contempt convictions were reversed, the appeals court said.

Furthermore, the appeals court said, Curtis' remarks "were relevant to the issue (of jury contamination)" which Curtis and Poff were discussing.

"The parties would be wise to remember," the court added in an eight-page opinion by Judge Truman Roberts, "that the principal function of the criminal justice system is not that the self-edified coterm of lawyers and judges be preserved; it is that all individuals be tried and sentenced in accordance with law."

Presiding Judge John Onion said he reluctantly concurred with the majority opinion.

"I would, however, point out that I do not consider relator's conduct and statements to be ethical or proper. Relator's actions were undignified and discourteous conduct which was demeaning to the tribunal before whom he was appearing as an attorney and officer of the court," Onion said.

Strike At Hospital Enters 22nd Day

TEXARKANA (UPI) — A strike against Wadley Hospital was in its 22nd day Wednesday with no signs of a settlement despite a new negotiating session.

Officials of the hospital and the Communications Workers of America met under the auspices of federal meditor Gene Zimmerman of Dallas, but no progress was reported. No new sessions were scheduled, either, officials said.

The strike began June 28.

The three-hour negotiating session Wednesday broke up with both sides reporting no progress.

Tourists Flock To Frontier Days

CHEYENNE (UPI) — A hot, dry wind moves through the high-plains towns of southeast Wyoming this time of year, and tourists who come for the 82nd annual Cheyenne Frontier Days, the "Daddy of 'em All," smell the leather of new cowboy boots in the air outside ranchwear shops along 16th Street.

Cowtown, the tourists call it. They roll into Cheyenne in camper trailers and station wagons, checking into motels called the Stagecoach, Hitching Post, Big Horn and Frontier.

Easterners crowd the sidewalks of 16th Street beneath the ever-galloping mechanical horse over Corral West Ranchwear. They buy Stetson hats and cowboy boots at the western outfitter stores, Charles Russell prints and brass belt buckles at Tom Bradley's Wigwam Shop.

A half-million people will visit Cheyenne during its nine brightest days of the year, when the largest bunch of professional cowboys ride at the world's richest rodeo in a dirt arena on the northwest side of town.

Crowds will line the streets Saturday and watch parade floats and horseback riders clip-clop from the golden-domed Wyoming Capitol on one end of Capitol Avenue down toward the depot on the other end of the street, where Cheyenne's history began with the arrival of the Union Pacific Railroad in 1867.

Cheyenne was a railroad town years before it was a cowtown. The first man arrested for riding his horse into a town saloon was a railroader, not a cowboy. The first law requiring guns to be checked on entering town was passed in 1868, before the transient railroad workers left to lay track westward.

Huge cattle herds appeared on the grassy plains around Cheyenne the next decade, and Cattle was king in the 1880s: the years of the famous Cheyenne Club, where cattle barons read the New York World and smoked Havana cigars in an elegance foreign to the stark plains of Wyoming.

Nothing remains of the old club with its wide veranda. It was razed in 1936, and the site is occupied by Chamber of Commerce building: On its roof is a giant painted cowboy tipping his hat to the tourists flowing in for a smell of the Old West.

Cheyenne was only 30 years old when someone — no one quite knows who — decided it needed an annual celebration. Some say a railroad passenger agent, F.W. Angier, flashed on the idea while watching cowboys load a stubborn horse into a stockcar.

On Sept. 23, 1897, Battery A, 76th Field Artillery fired a cannon. Ka-Boom, the first Frontier Days celebration began, and Cheyenne created an event that in later years would retain an Old West culture the town itself would lose much of to modern times.

"Everybody in the town has a piece of the darn thing," said Duane Von Krosigk, chairman of the Frontier Days Committee. "For 50 years some of those volunteers have been walking to the same corner to be a parade marshal."

It's all volunteers, more than 2,000 of them in a town of only 58,000, who organize Frontier Days. All year they plan for the nine days each summer.

The oldest is Dazee Bristol, 100. She designed the first parade floats in 1926, played the organ on one of them for 52 years, and still does some work for the committee. It takes a Dazee Bristol to explain what Frontier Days means to Cheyenne.

"Well," she said. "We don't have much else to do.

"Denver's got the Elich Gardens and other things. We just don't have that much.

"And maybe it's the spirit of the Old West," she said. "Everybody wants to talk about how long they been here in Cheyenne and how much they know about the town."

The money is nice too. The nine days bring a million dollars or more to Cheyenne, according to Frontier Days Director Jack Miller. Motels raise their rates a bit, but not enough to annoy, and the bars are so crowded there is no need to raise the price of a beer.

Scan the list of the Frontier Days Committee: an automotive parts warehouse manager, an insurance man, a dentist, a judge, an Air Force officer, a lawyer, and others of diverse backgrounds. They and others in the town pull on cowboy boots and wear bright shirts and Stetson hats, dressing themselves up the way Frontier Days dresses up the town for nine days a year.

It's not all makeup. Cheyenne is still a cowtown, still a railroader's town, only not so much anymore.

Much of Cheyenne during the year dresses in leisure suits or shirt-and-tie of the office worker — there are many in this town of state and federal government offices — but about 75 freight trains a day still crawl into Cheyenne, and the cowboys still drink in town each weekend.

In the Mayflower Bar on Friday nights, or on the street shopping on Saturdays, are the cowhands. You can tell them by the sweat-stained hat, the worn boots and calloused hands. They slump in the stands during the rodeo afternoons and swagger the brassy midway at night, playing the cheap carnival games and kicking to the music near the bandstand.

All afternoon rodeo cowboys ride the bulls and stallions, rope calves, wrestle steers; all night long the music plays on the midway and Cheyenne does what it does best: host its annual Old West legacy.

While the tourists hear the night music and watch rodeo cowboys get thrown into the dirt each afternoon, the trains that first put this town on the map, keep rumbling through the south side of Cheyenne. Their whistles can be heard, even to Frontier Park, a low drone of a reminder.

Only two sections remain standing of the old Union Pacific Roundhouse, built on the south end of town during the last years of a past century.

CIA Study Says Soviet Protection Insufficient

WASHINGTON (AP) — A CIA analysis of the Soviet civil defense system concludes that it does not provide sufficient protection to encourage the Russians to risk starting a nuclear war, Sen. John Culver, D-Iowa, said Wednesday.

Releasing the unclassified study, Culver said it demonstrates that Soviet civil defense efforts "are not sufficient to prevent millions of casualties and massive industrial damage in the event of a nuclear war.

"In short, Soviet programs are not enough to tip the strategic balance against us."

Critics of the arms limitation agreement now under negotiation between the United States and the Soviet Union often point to Soviet civil defense efforts as a factor that would give the Russians an advantage over the United States in a nuclear exchange.

Culver, who is emerging as a leading defender of the Carter administration position in the SALT negotiations, called a news conference to counter the claims of SALT critics.

"Despite widespread claims that Soviet leaders might launch a nuclear attack because they expect to suffer only moderate damage and few casualties — and we hear that suggested today in a number of quarters — the professional judgment of our intelligence community is that they would not be emboldened to expose their country to a higher risk of nuclear attack," said Culver.

The senator contended that even under the worst conditions for the United States — assuming it had been struck by a massive Soviet nuclear attack, inflicting 100 million casualties — the U.S. retaliatory strike would devastate the Soviet Union.

Black Colleges Gain Popularity

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
United Press International Writer

Between 1976 and 1977 there was a 12.4 percent increase in the number of freshmen signing up at the 41 institutions supported by the United Negro College Fund.

At predominantly white colleges nationally, meanwhile, there was an 0.8 percent drop in enrollments during the same period.

The black private schools are in a growth curve on total enrollment which increased 12.6 percent over the years 1975-1977.

"The trends indicate the awakened interest on the part of black youngsters to a college education, and especially an education at a historically black college," said Christopher F. Edley, the fund's executive director.

The UNCF's Annual Statistical Report, compiled by Alan Kirschner, research director, shows also that about 40 percent of the students come from families with income of less than $5,000 a year.

Some 75 percent are from families with incomes under $10,000. By contrast, according to Kirschner, only 15 percent of students in private colleges nationally come from families with less than $10,000 a year.

Only 3 percent of the students at the black private colleges comes from families with incomes over $20,000 a year. Families in the same economic bracket at other schools make up 52 percent of the total.

Another statistical index pointing to the economic problems of students at the predominantly black private colleges is this: At least half of the prospective freshmen require maximum financial assistance due to the fact that median expected parental contribution is zero dollars.

The median expected parental contribution of other college-bound high school seniors nationally is $1,200.

The poor economic base of students means the United Negro College Fund schools cannot raise tuitions as the solution to the common financial problems on the academic trail — inflation, higher fuel costs, raises for staff.

The black colleges charge an average of $3,216 for room, board, tuition, books, supplies. Private colleges nationally charge 20 percent more — $4,405.

Teachers at the United Negro College Fund schools are said to help with financial sacrifices.

The average professor's salary at a Fund school is $16,371, compared to a $20,000 average at other colleges in the southeast, where most Fund schools are.

Edley said the issue for the private black colleges and universities these days is whether they will be able to find resources sufficient to keep pace with rising costs, new program development and salary improvement.

"Further increases in tuition would discourage and deprive large numbers of students from attending these schools," he said.

The Fund currently is in a drive for capital funds. The Honorary Chairman is President Jimmy Carter. Chairman is Thomas A. Murphy, head of the board, General Motors Corp.

The goal is $50 million.

Church Eyes Farm Plan

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — United Methodist leaders are meeting with farmers in Wichita in an "Emergency Farm Crisis Consultation" to draw up a plan of action for solving farm problems.

The national leaders of the church were asked earlier this week to get more involved in farmers' problems and deal with them as public issues as they have dealt with abortion, child labor laws, and racial issues in the past.

Fifty farmers from across the country are meeting at Kansas Newman College this week to educate national church leaders on their plight at the first such church-sponsored meeting in the country.

The "Emergency Farm Crisis Consultation" was mandated at the national Methodist meeting earlier this year. The mandate called for participants to draw up a plan of action.

Harold McSwain, a professor at United Theological Seminary and Methodist Theological School in Columbus, Ohio, explained the church's situation. "These farmers are just tired of the church saying, 'Produce, but don't make a profit; produce, but don't even break even.'"

McSwain said the meeting would be a basis for future proposed legislation inside the church.

Vietnam Entering Role Of Diplomatic Nation

By ALAN DAWSON

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — Long a self-proclaimed world leader of revolution, Vietnam has sheathed its big stick and changed its tune.

Its chief spokesman, on an extended foreign tour, has been Vice Foreign Minister Phan Hien, Vietnam's international trouble-shooter.

But area ambassadors, recently recalled to Hanoi apparently for new important instructions, also are at the forefront of the changed policy.

In Tokyo, where he had interviews and a news conference, Phan Hien spoke softly of possible diplomatic relations with the United States and of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), a five-member non-Communist regional grouping.

The reasons for all this, of course, hinges on the Hanoi disputes with China and Cambodia, and with Vietnamese attempts to remain basically independent of Moscow.

Relations with Washington would provide a counterbalance to the Russians in

Analysis

Hanoi, while peace with ASEAN could undercut China's all-out support for the five-nation bloc.

"Times change," an American diplomat said. "Vietnam is trying to change with them."

The softening and apparent turnaround on the United States has been startling. A year ago, Hanoi's official Communist party newspaper Nhan Dan said:

"The stand of the government of Vietnam is so just and clear. We stand for an over-all, package deal solution to three questions which are closely interrelated."

The three issues are diplomatic relations, the U.S. "obligation" to aid Vietnam and accounting for U.S. war missing.

As late as last January, Prime Minister Phan Van Dong told a news conference in Sri Lanka that his country "insists on a package deal solution."

But last Monday (July 10) in Tokyo, Phan Hien indicated the package idea may have been discarded, and Hanoi may be moving toward the stand of the Carter Administration for diplomatic relations with no aid commitment.

"New bright developments may prevail," he said. "Even if the U.S. Congress rejects reconstruction aid, we look forward to establishing full diplomatic ties."

Even more stunning is Vietnam's turnaround on ASEAN, the five-country grouping of Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia and the Philippines.

Less than a year ago, Vietnam pilloried ASEAN as an American-dominated bulwark of imperialism.

A Nhan Dan editorial declared, "ASEAN leaders boast of their independence and neutrality, while allowing U.S. imperialists to set up military bases, request U.S. troops to remain in Southeast Asia and asked for U.S. weapons and dollars."

Vietnam itself has proposed a zone of peace and neutrality in the area (an official ASEAN goal) and Vietnamese officials have indicated Hanoi may attend future ASEAN meetings as observers.

All this was unthinkable just last year.

Sirhan Parole Bid Rejected

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The state's Community Release Board has rejected a plea by convicted assassin Sirhan B. Sirhan for an early parole date, District Attorney John Van de Kamp's office says.

The district attorney's office opposed Sirhan's request on grounds that he "had made little effort toward vocational or academic rehabilitation," Tom MacDonald, a spokesman for Van de Kamp, said Wednesday in announcing the decision. The board ruling cited similar reasons.

Sirhan, a Palestinian immigrant, in 1969 was convicted of killing Sen. Robert Kennedy of New York on June 5, 1968, in Los Angeles after Kennedy won the Democratic presidential primary.

Sirhan is eligible for parole on March 1, 1985, but was petitioning the Community Release Board to move up that date. The board handed down its decision after a 3½-hour meeting Tuesday at Soledad State Prison, about 100 miles south of San Francisco.

"Confinement short of life imprisonment is unacceptable in Sirhan's case," Los Angeles County Deputy District Attorney Robert Johnson told the board.

Psychiatrist Defends Action On Prescription

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House drug abuse fighter Dr. Peter G. Bourne is on paid furlough today after conceding he put a fictitious name on a prescription for an emotionally troubled employee who wanted to keep secret that she was getting the much-abused sedative Quaalude.

All day Wednesday, the White House press office, Bourne and other principals refused to comment about disclosure that police in suburban Virginia are investigating the matter and have charged a former roommate of Bourne's employee with a felony.

At 7:45 p.m., White House Press Secretary Jody Powell handed out a three-page statement by Bourne and announced that the 38-year-old psychiatrist had requested the leave "because of my desire to clear my name as soon as possible and my concern that these implications do not interfere with the effective operations of the White House."

Bourne said: "I have consulted legal counsel and believe that what I have done was neither legally nor morally wrong."

But Paul Ebert, commonwealth's attorney in suburban Prince William County, Va., said he was considering prosecuting Bourne on either a misdemeanor or felony charge but would await completion of the investigation before deciding what to do.

According to Bourne's statement and that of his administrative assistant in the White House west wing, Ellen J. Metsky, here is what happened:

Miss Metsky came to Bourne concerned about emotional problems which had caused her difficulty in sleeping. She asked that her name be kept secret.

Bourne gave her a prescription on July 7, made out to a fictitious name, for 15 tablets of the tightly controlled sedative methaqualone, also known by the brand name Quaalude.

Miss Metsky found she did not have time to get the prescription filled and asked a former roommate, Toby M. Long, to get Bourne's prescription filled for her.

It was learned that Bourne wrote the prescription in the name of "Sarah Brown."

Miss Long, a 26-year-old physical therapist, was arrested July 11 in suburban Woodbridge, Va., by Prince William County police when she tried to have it filled near where she worked.

It was learned that Bourne's prescription did not specify which of two pill sizes to use, and the druggist became suspicious. He called the telephone number on the prescription and was unable to reach Bourne because the number was out of date. He then called police.

During a second briefing later Wednesday night, Powell disclosed that Bourne has written a total of 10 prescriptions for White House staffers, but only Miss Metsky's methaqualone prescription was made out in a phony name.

Of the 10, five were for substances controlled by the federal government, Powell said, including Miss Metsky's methaqualone and diet pills for President Carter's top aide, Hamilton Jordan.

Powell said both Miss Metsky and Jordan also got antibiotic prescriptions from Bourne. Others who received prescriptions did not waive their confidentiality, Powell said.

Mis Metsky, who began working with Bourne in July 1975 during Carter's presidential campaign, was described by a campaign worker, who declined to be identified, as having recently broken up with a boyfriend. "Maybe she was very upset about that and that's why she needed tranquilizers," this woman said.

Miss Metsky said she knew that records are kept of prescriptions and sought to keep her name secret, because "I know of the controversies in which Dr. Bourne becomes engaged regarding drug policy. His ... name as well as my name are well known in the area of drug enforcement. Consequently, I feared that my name would become known to those who might attempt to influence that policy."

Bourne, who said he is licensed to practice medicine in the District of Columbia and three states, said: "She and I were concerned about the protection of her confidentiality both with regard to her taking medication and to the creation of a record anywhere that she had been treated by a psychiatrist."

He cited canons of medical ethics emphasizing the confidentiality of doctor-patient relationships and said, "I took what I believed to be legitimate precautions .... The use of a pseudonym is one way of protecting confidentiality."

However, in Chicago, a lawyer for the American Medical Association, Bruce Nortell, said that "generally it is not lawful for a prescription to be written that contains any falsified information."

In Topeka, Kan., Dr. Herbert Klemmer, chairman of the ethics committee of the American Psychiatric Association, said, "I don't believe this question has ever come up before and I'd prefer to sit on that a while before making a judgment."

It is a violation of the District of Columbia Code to write a prescription in a name known to be fictitious, but authorities normally do not prosecute a doctor who does so in what he perceives to be a patient's interest. Rather, they warn the doctor not to do it again.

Powell said he first heard of the matter from Department of Justice officials who called him in Bonn, West Germany, during Carter's visit there July 13-17. He could not say when Carter first heard of it.

According to Powell, "This decision (to take a leave of absence) was Dr. Bourne's own decision. The president was informed after he had made that decision and, of course, agreed to his request to leave."

Powell said Bourne neither offered nor was asked to resign. "It seems to us at least that in the interest of not prejudging the matter ... it would be somewhat excessive to fire him."

Powell said he assumed Bourne's $51,000-a-year salary would continue while he is on leave.

Quaalude is prescribed medically to induce sleep in cases of severe insomnia, according to Con Dougherty, a Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman. The drug also is sought by drug abusers for its alleged aphrodisiac effect, as well as its sedative effect. Dougherty said the drug has been nicknamed "heroin for lovers."

Quaalude falls under Schedule II of the federal Controlled Substances Act, thus placing it under the tightest controls applied to any drug used for medical purposes. Only such drugs as heroin and LSD are under stricter federal control.

Miss Long, free on $3,000 bail, is charged with "attempting to obtain a controlled drug known as Quaalude by fraud, deceit or misrepresentation," a felony charge. A court hearing was set for Sept. 19. The penalty on conviction in Virginia is one to five years in prison.

LEAVE FOR BOURNE — Dr. Peter G. Bourne, President Carter's special assistant on health and drug abuse matters, prepares to water his flowers before leaving for work Wednesday in Washington. Later Wednesday, Bourne was granted a leave of absence by the White House after it was learned he wrote a prescription for a controlled drug, Quaalude, made out to a fictitious person. # Bourne Called 'Foremost Drug Expert'

By ROBERT M. ANDREWS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dr. Peter G. Bourne once was described by his close personal friend, President Carter, as "perhaps the world's foremost expert on drugs ... their use, the effect on the human body, how they might be controlled."

Ironically, it was Bourne's prescription of the highly controlled drug Quaalude, using a fictitious patient's name, that has landed him in hot water at the White House and possibly within the medical profession.

Bourne, 38, a suave, English-born psychiatrist who came to the United States in 1957, is no stranger to controversy.

He returned from Vietnam, where he served as a U.S. Army research psychiatrist, "totally disenchanted with the war." He helped found Vietnam Veterans Against the War and demonstrated in the streets of Chicago during the 1968 Democratic National Convention.

When he met Jimmy Carter the next year, Bourne was a pro-civil rights, pro-abortion liberal running a mental health center in an Atlanta ghetto, and Carter was running for governor of Georgia.

Carter admired his work and, once he was elected governor, hired Bourne as his health and mental health adviser. Bourne later became chief of the state's much-praised drug abuse program.

Bourne was the first man to suggest, during a plane ride with the governor in 1971, that Carter run for the presidency. From 1972 to 1974, while he was working as a drug abuse adviser in the Nixon White House, Bourne was cultivating the Washington political establishment in behalf of his friend in Georgia and helping map Carter's successful strategy for winning the Democratic presidential nomination.

After Carter entered the White House, he appointed Bourne as a special assistant at a salary of $51,000 a year, while Bourne's socialite wife, Mary King, was named deputy director of ACTION, the federal volunteer agency, at $50,000 a year.

From a small, windowless office in the White House basement, Bourne concentrated on a wide range of health issues, including national health insurance, drug abuse and world hunger, and stirred repeated controversy.

His position favoring an easing of marijuana laws earned him the popularity of young people, tempered somewhat by his support for the Mexican government's spraying of marijuana plants with the deadly herbicide paraquat.

Bourne ran into a congressional buzz saw last month when he testified that the administration did not support a bill aimed at clamping down on the use of PCP, a strong hallucinogenic drug. Bourne urged Congress not to overreact to the problem of misuse of the drug.

He recently prompted a White House denial when he said the administration had agreed to a substantial compromise on containment of hospital costs.

On another occasion, relations between the United States and Colombia became strained with the leak of a document Bourne had prepared which suggested that Julio Cesar Turbay — later elected president of Colombia — was involved in cocaine traffic. Bourne later said the allegation was unsubstantiated.

Throughout it all, Bourne maintained his warm friendship with the Carters and his easy access to the Oval Office.

Drug Touted As Sex Aid

NEW YORK (AP) — The drug Quaalude has been touted as the "heroin for lovers" because of its alleged aphrodisiac qualities and has been taken regularly by some of the best-known names in the entertainment industry.

The late actor Freddie Prinze was a Quaalude user.

Quaalude, the most popular brand name for the drug known generically as methaqualone, is a sedative that has risen from obscurity to wide use in the 1970s.

In 1973, law enforcement efforts against illegitimate use of the drug were increased because methaqualone was changed from Schedule III to Schedule II of the federal Controlled Substances Act. Drugs on Schedule II, such as cocaine, are considered more dangerous than those on Schedule III, such as pentobarbital. Heroin is on Schedule I.

According to the Drug Enforcement Administration, methaqualone when abused can cause slurred speech, disorientation and behavior that simulates drunkenness. An overdose can produce shallow respiration, a weak and rapid pulse, coma and possible death.

Indian Movement Leaders Get Cold Shoulder In Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — Indian leaders are discovering the bittersweet reality of protest marches — people may support their cause, but the government can turn a cold shoulder.

For three days the Indians have paraded through Washington, staging demonstrations at the Capitol, at the FBI, at Lafayette Park across the street from the White House. And for the most part, Indian leaders say they have been ignored by official Washington.

"Perhaps they don't want to sit down and face the issue of colonialization, sovereignty and treaty rights," said Vernon Bellecourt, an Objibwa who is one of the leaders of the militant American Indian Movement.

The demonstrations followed completion of "The Longest Walk," the California-to-Washington protest march to oppose legislation that would abrogate treaties, abolish reservations and deny Indians traditional fishing, water and land rights.

While walking across the nation, Bellecourt said, the Indians found a warm reception from citizens who donated clothing, food and money.

But since arriving in Washington, said Bellecourt, the Indians' reception "cannot even be described as lukewarm. It's been somewhat of a cold reception by members of Congress and the administration."

When they marched to Capitol Hill, Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., was the only member of Congress to address the group. By comparison, two senators spoke one day later to a protest rally composed of traveling salesmen.

"Allegedly there are 13 senators who are strongly on the Indian side. They didn't show," noted Russell Means, an Ogalala Sioux.

The Indians also requested a meeting with President Carter, but so far it has been denied. Tribal elders met with Vice President Walter F. Mondale, but Indian leaders were not satisfied.

Phillip Deere, a Muscogee leader, noted that Carter has criticized other nations "for denying human rights to their people." But he refuses to "look in his backyard" at the problems facing Indians, Deere said.

"Maybe we should go to Berlin and Russia and talk about human rights because the President is over there talking about human rights," suggested Deere, referring to the President's recent trip abroad.

Forest Gerrard, assistant Interior Department secretary for Indian Affairs, noted the lack of congressioonal support, saying there is "a bad mood" on Capitol Hill stemming from Indian legal victories and disputes over natural resources on Indian lands.

Means, however, views the situation differently. With about 500,000 Indians living on reservations, and perhaps that same number living off reservations, the congressmen "know we don't have any political power. They know we don't have any economic power," Means said.

"The establishment has ignored us," he said.

'Papers' Bill Advances

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation making presidential papers the property of the government has advanced in the House by getting approval from the Government Operations Committee.

The bill would require that a president, beginning with the one elected in 1980, must turn over all official White House records to the National Archives when he leaves office. Under current practice, a president's official records are regarded as his own property.

The committee approved the measure 33-2, but rejected a proposal that would have given Congress power to block a president's ability to dispose certain records while in office.

The bill permits disposal of records which the president deems to have no administrative, historical or informational value.

However, before a president may destroy records, he would have to seek the views of the archivist and give Congress 60 days notice. Congress could bring public pressure on a president to retain records if it felt he should save the papers he was planning to destroy, but it would have no other recourse.

The bill also would permit an outgoing president to limit access to classified documents or material regarding national defense, foreign policy or appointments for up to 10 years after leaving office.

He also would be allowed to restrict access to documents dealing with trade secrets, advice from aides and personnel and medical files.

Even though President Carter has pledged to turn over his papers to the government when he leaves office, the White House had sought to have him exempted from the measure. The administration complained that should Carter seek and win re-election, different standards would apply to the records of the two terms.

'Down-Filled' Items Probed By FTC

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some "down-filled" sleeping bags, skiwear and other products may contain much less down than required by the federal government, the Federal Trade Commission says.

The commission on Wednesday announced an investigation of the $500 million-a-year down products industry. Down, the fluffy feathers from the underside of waterfowl, is supposed to make garments warmer and lighter than other insulating material.

The federal standard require that products marketed as down-filled contain 80 percent down. In some investigations only half the products contained that amount.

Carter Delays Merger Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter has decided to delay the proposed merger of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and U.S. Customs, Rick Hernandez, a deputy assistant to the president said Wednesday.

Hernandez said the delay in making a final decision, which includes putting the final combined agency in the Treasury Department, was designed to allow time for more consultation with different groups.

"Frankly we had some ideas but we feel we need to do more study and consultation," Hernandez told the San Angelo Standard-Times. "We want plans that are not only good for the border but also for the country."

The merger was opposed by several Mexican-American groups and U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger, D-Tex.

Kilmer Needed As Alibi

HERSKOWITZ

By MICKEY HERSKOWITZ
And STEVE PERKINS

Q. Now that Roman Gabriel is out of the picture at Los Angeles, what is the possibility that Billy Kilmer will wind up with the Rams? I know George Allen has said he wants Kilmer.

—Danny Fazella, Norfolk, Va.

A. According to Kilmer, the possiblility is zero. "Edward Bennett Williams is running the Redskins now," Kilmer told us, "and he sent down the word: Don't trade the Rams a jock strap.'

"He doesn't want to do anything that would help George look good out there. I think I'd have a shot at winning the Super Bowl with the Rams, but it will never happen. They want to keep me around so they can blame me for the bad season we're going to have. I've asked them to guarantee me two years in Washington and they only want to guarantee me one."

Q. I recently read a series of articles, or part of a series, about the ladies pro golf tour. Perhaps I missed some of it, but was there ever any reference to lesbianism among the women golfers?

—Mrs. J.G.K., Dallas.

A. The series by a woman sportswriter was written for The Washington Post, and it made only an oblique reference to the subject—to the effect that there was some "concern" about the fact that so many of the tour regulars are single. (Obviously, no writer has ever expressed concern over the number of bachelors on the men's pro golf tour.)

We are told, by one of the married women who has been on the tour a number of years, that lesbianism is a fading problem, unlike the days of 10 and 20 and 25 years ago when a victory was celebrated with passionate kisses on the 18th green.

Q. My daughter has been very active in a number of sports in YWCA and other youth leagues here, and now she is entering high school. Can you tell me what the chances are that she might qualify for an athletic scholarship to defray college expenses if I encourage her to keep up with athletics?

—Mae Gillespie, Miami.

A. The chances are getting better all the time. Last year there were 100,000 college women competing on teams vying for one of 17 national championships. And 10,000 of them were on athletic scholarships worth a total of $7 million. As of now, there are 460 schools that award grants to women athletes (compared to 710 that give scholarships to men).

Q. It appears quite possible that Tony Dorsett is headed down the same road as former short-lived Cowboy star Duane Thomas. I recall one of Duane's advisers was Jim Brown who attempted to make a racjal issue out of Duane's problems. Do you know if Dorsett and Brown are friends?

—Joe Seville, Lubbock.

A. The difference between the two cases is that Dorsett has very astute advisers and listens to them— except perhaps now and then at 2 o'clock in the morning.

Jim Brown may have ill-advised Thomas, but it was he who led the halfback into the Cowboy fold just in time for the Super Bowl season of 1971. Brown and Dorsett have yet to meet.

Field Chases Nancy Lopez

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — O.K. men! Start planning ahead if you want marry an attractive young lady whose quick stardom on the women's golf tour has produced a bank account that could help assure financial stability.

"I think I'm just like any other girl my age. I want to get married and have children"' said Nancy Lopez, the 21-year-old rookie whose record five consecutive victories this year shot the popularity of women's golf to its highest level ever.

"It's not in my immediate plans," said Miss Lopez as she prepared for today's opening of the 26th Women's U.S. Open at the Country Club of Indianapolis, "but hopefully within the next four years I'll get married.

"I wouldn't want to have my husband and children following the tour like some families," she said. "I'd like to have them at home and spend a lot of time with them."

But, she doesn't plan to leave the women's tour. In fact, this year's leading money-winner with $135,564 in official earnings said she thinks she can play competively for 15 more years.

"I don't think I've reached my peak," she said. "And I don't know when I will. I try not to think too far ahead. I find I'm getting a lot older quicker than I like."

Success on the golf tour is bringing additional rewards and making additional demands on the spare time of Miss Lopez, who hopes to improve on last year's runner-up finish in the Open in her final tournament as a rookie.

"I've learned to say 'no' when I feel something interferes with my golf," continued Miss Lopez. "Golf has put me where I'm at. I have to give all my time

Doubleheader Starts Action In NBC Meet

The West Region NBC Tournament resumes play today at Mackenzie Park with the Town Draw Brewers of Lubbock and El Paso West Wind the only undefeated teams.

However, by the time those two potent units clash at 8:30 p.m. Friday, the double-elimination tournament, which began with 24 teams, will be down to only six squads.

Today, it's the Lubbock Cardinals against the Lubbock Chaps at 6:30 p.m. and the Brownfield Astros against the Lubbock Z's at 6:30. And then at 6:30 p.m. Friday, the Lubboock Bulls take on Abilene.

And, if everything goes according to the "book", it will be the Chaps, Z's and Abilene that survive those elimination contests.

But what about the biggie? Well, El Paso got superb pitching from Jeff Hogan (a six-hitter in an 11-3 win over Wichita Falls), Tom Airington (a one-hit, 10-strikeout, two-walk performance in a 14-0 win over Abilene) the first weekend.

However, over the last five years, El Paso has always been a fast starter in this tournament, but two treks from the Border City within ten days always seemed to take its toll the second week.

West Wind managed 12, 11, and 12 hits last weekend, with Bobby Alsup going 5-for-12 with with two homers and 8 RBIs, Louis Llamas 3-for-6 with two homers and 3 RBIs, and Glenn Villarreal 4-for-10 with a pair of homers and 3 RBIs as the team blasted seven homers.

The Brewers have firepower, too, as Scott Leimgruber went 5-for-9 with 6 RBIs and Jim Horton 5-for-7 to pace the Lubbockites, who are unbeaten for the summer. Pete Mills hurled a two-hitter with eight strikeouts and without a walk in an 11-1 win over the Cardinals. Chad Johnson spun an eight-hitter in a 5-4 win over Brownfield, and Doug House had a five-hitter in an 11-3 verdict over the Z's.

Tonight's opener could develop into a pitching duel between the Chaps' Bob McNicol, a southpaw who allowed only two hits, walked two and fanned eight in two appearances totaling nine innings last weekend, and Cardinal flamethrower Larry Horn, who toiled professionally earlier this summer.

The first weekend was a hitter's paradise despite the few brilliant mound showings. Twenty-four homers flew out of Mackenzie Park over the first five days, including 16 Saturday.

The early games this week will determine the full weekend slate, but Wichita Falls will play the Bulls-Abilene winner Saturday at 3:30 p.m.

Landry Smiles Despite Loss

IRVINE, Calif. (AP) — Dallas Cowboy rookies fell to San Diego in a controlled scrimmage Wednesday, but Cowboy Coach Tom Landry found a few things to smile about anyway.

Landry's youngsters lost, four touchdowns to three, but he pointed out that San Diego had more veterans in camp and participating. "But we had a lot of people hustling and hitting, so it was a good evaluation overall," Landry said.

"Actually, working against more veterans gives our rookies a chance to have a little bit better evaluation," said Landry. "I've said all along that the squeeze is on the rookies with the veterans' later reporting date and the shorter preseason schedule."

Dallas scores came on a 40-yard interception return by linebacker Harold Randoph, a 58-yard pass from quarterback Glenn Carano to Vollen Dixon, and on a one-yard plunge by fullback Todd Christensen. Christensen rushed for 42 yards on 10 carries and caught three passes for 27 yards. He's the club's No. 2 draft choice from Brigham Young.

"He's an excellent daylight runner," Landry said.

Second year quarterback Carano had a long afternoon, hitting just 3 of 12 passes.

Bunt: As Good As Homer In Hit Column

By The Associated Press

It was probably the game's least important hit — and yet it was clearly the biggest one of all.

One thing the Cincinnati Reds didn't really need in the ninth inning Wednesday night was a baserunner. After all, Ken Henderson had hit a three-run homer in the seventh inning and George Foster had unloaded a grand slam in the eighth, all the clout the Reds needed to wallop Philadelphia 7-2.

But with nobody on and one out to go in the top of the ninth, there was still the matter of Pete Rose's hitting streak. Rose had grounded out twice, had struck out once and in the eighth inning had received a controversial walk. With that, it appeared Rose's streak would end at 31 straight games, six shy of Tommy Holmes' National League record.

But that walk started what turned out to be the Reds' biggest inning and it brought him back to the plate one inning later. "That's what happens when you play with a great offensive team," he said later.

And after one pitch, Rose was on first with a bunt single, acknowledging the cheers of 45,608 Phillies fans. The streak was still alive!

The first pitch to Rose from Phils' reliever Ron Reed wound up rolling tantalizingly down the third base line. "It was a perfect bunt," said third baseman Mike Schmidt, who tried a bare-handed scoop of the ball but never really had a chance to throw Rose out.

"It was a damn good bunt," Rose grinned. "I've given enough to baseball to bunt once in awhile. I did it a few years ago to win a batting title. . .It took me 16 years to get hits in 32 (straight games) and if they're going to give me the bunt I'm going to take it."

After taking several moments of thunderous applause from the same fans who had been booing him earlier, Rose acknowledged the standing ovation. "Rich Hebner told me to tip my hat or we'd be here all night," Rose said of the Phils' first baseman.

In the eighth, the count to Rose went to 3-0, then he swung at a bad pitch from Tug McGraw and, on 3-1, hit a liner foul — barely — down the right field line.

On the 3-2 pitch he appeared to swing and miss for a strikeout — but both home plate umpire Dutch Rennert and first base ump Lee Weyer said he's checked his swing for ball four.

Did the walk bother Rose? Obviously not. "Hell, I started a four-run inning," he said.

Ken Griffey's single, an intentional walk to Joe Morgan and Foster's fifth career grand slam then turned the nail-biter into a rout. It was Foster's 23rd homer of the year, tying him with Boston's Jim Rice for the major league lead.

Giants 7-5, Cubs 4-7

In San Francisco's first game, Larry Herndon collected four RBI with a trio of singles to make Vida Blue a 13-game winner, but the Cubs rebounded in the nightcap with Larry Biittner's three RBI on two singles.

The win in the second game went to Lubbockite Donnie Moore, who was working in relief. The win hikes Moore's record to 5-2 for the season..

Expos 8-1, Braves 6-3

Ellis Valentine hit his 17th homer of the year, a two-run rocket in the fifth inning, and Warren Cromartie unleashed his first career grand slam and fifth homer of the season to cap a five-run ninth that sent Montreal past the Braves in their opener.

Jeff Burroughs' sixth-inning two-run homer, No. 13 for him, was all Atlanta needed in the finale as Buddy Solomon and Dave Campbell teamed for a four-hitter against the Expos.

Astros 8-1, Mets 3-2

Bob Watson ripped a two-run single in the first inning and hit his 10th homer of the season, a solo shot, in the third to propel Houston to its first-game victory over the Mets' Pat Zachry, 10-6. Luis Pujols had a pair of RBI for the Astros in the opener.

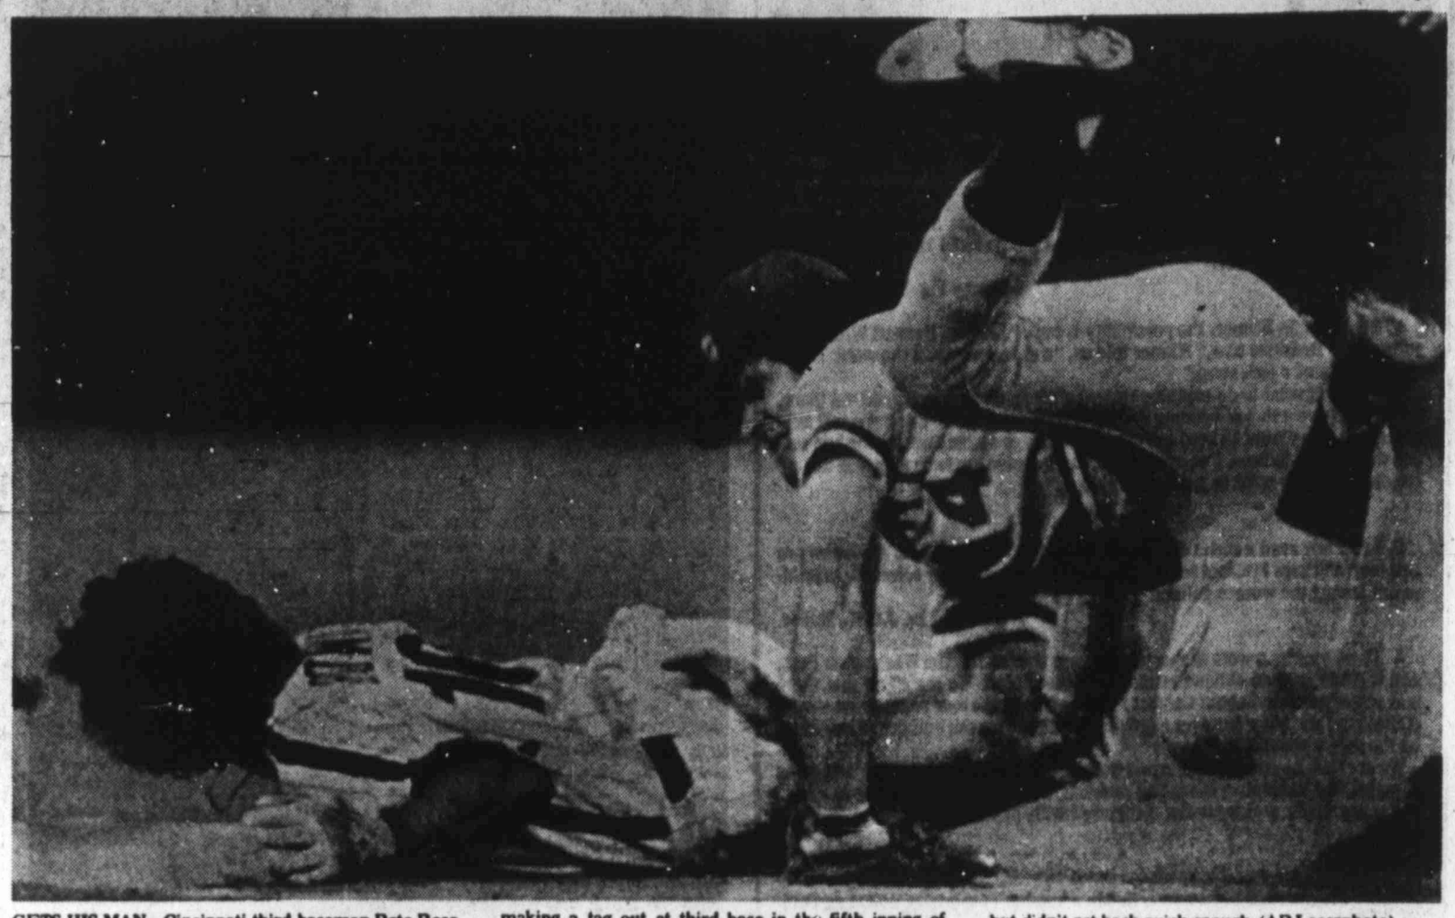

New York managed a split on the seven-hit pitching of Craig Swan and Willie Montanez's two-run double in the first inning of the finale.

Pirates 6, Dodgers 3

The Pirates pounced on Doug Rau for three runs in the second inning and Dave Parker hit a two-run homer in the fifth to snap Los Angeles' three-game winning streak, drop the Dodgers into third in the West, 2½ games back of the Giants and inch third-place Pittsburgh within four of the Phils in the East. Reggie Smith hit a two-run homer for the Dodgers.

Padres 5, Cardinals 3

Dave Winfield climaxed a three-run first inning with an RBI triple and Gene Richards had an RBI double to cap a two-run fourth in San Diego's victory. All the scoring came off St. Louis right-hander Roy Thomas, making his first major league start.

City To Host State Girls Softball Meet

Lubbockites will have a chance this weekend to see the best girls softball teams in action.

The City Parks & Recreation Department is sponsoring the state Texas Amateur Athletic Federation tournament.

Sixteen teams from over the state will be competing in the Saturday-Sunday action at Mackenzie Park. And two of the teams will be locals.

Lampe Construction won the local championship as well as the regional TAAF crown. The regional champ qualifies, but the host city is given a berth in the tournament. However, since Lampe won the regionals, Lubbock was awarded a second spot. Metro Optical team will be representing Lubbock also.

Lampe comes in with an 8-0 record this season. The team has lost but three girls games in three years, four of the losses coming in the state tournaments, two last year at Fort Worth and two the previous year at Corpus Christi.

Calgary Claims 23-21 CFL Win

CALGARY (AP) — The Calgary Stampeders scored on their first two possessions, then hung on to edge British Columbia Lions 23-21 before 25,606 fans at McMahon Stadium Wednesday night.

Calgary led 20-11 at the half but the Lions went ahead 21-20 after three periods and threatened to take away the game with its patented hard-attack offense right to the end of the contest.

Rookie James Sykes run for three yards and veteran receiver Tom Forzani grabbed a nine-yard pass from quarterback John Hufnagel to give Calgary its first two touchdowns.

Kicker Cyril McFall booted three field goals of 17, 45 and 28 yards and converted both TDs to round out the Calgary scoring.

Lubbock Advances In BR Tourney

PAMPA (Special)—Lubbock's Babe Ruth all-stars demolished the Eastern Panhandle team 14-3 Wednesday to stay alive in the Senior Babe Ruth Baseball Tournament.

Lubbock, playing in the loser's bracket, will take on Plainview tonight at 6. The tournament is down to six teams, the others being Panhandle-Caprock, Wichita Falls, Eagle Pass and Eastern Panhandle.

The tournament will continue through Saturday.

Nicklaus, Top Golfers Grumble About Phillie

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Jack Nicklaus is at the Whitemarsh Valley Country Club for the $250,000 Philadelphia Golf Classic which started today, but the game's top attraction made it clear that he would rather be somewhere else — at home.

Nicklaus accepted his responsibility to play on the tour this week, because the event has been given designated status, but he didn't like it. A designated tournament means the game's top players have to participate.

"If this were not a designated tournament I wouldn't be here," Nicklaus said Wednesday. "Don't get me wrong, I like the golf course. I've won here twice. I'm willing to cooperate."

The only member of this year's top 10 money winners not teeing off in the 72-hole tournament over the 6,615-yard course is Gary Player, who was excused by the sponsors when the South African pleaded exhaustion.

Nicklaus is fresh from winning the British Open, and has twice won on the tour this year. He won at Whitemarsh in 1964 and 1965, and in eight appearances here has earned $83,159. No wonder he likes the course.

The 38-year-old Nicklaus understands the concept of the designated tournament — to help bolster places that need golf's top draws to insure financial stability. He alone can be the difference between profit and loss.

Nicklaus likes to play in 12 to 15 tournaments a year, including the Masters, U.S. Open, British Open and PGA. Although there are only two designated events this year — there will be only one in 1979 — Nicklaus doesn't like to be told when he has to play.

Tom Weiskopf, 12th on the money winning list and another of the game's leading attractions, also reluctantly accepts the philosophy of the designated tournament. He also said he wouldn't be at Whitemarsh if it wasn't a command performance for the Professional Golf Association.

Weiskopf suggested that the PGA not have a designated event after a major such as the British Open.

"I was over there (Scotland) preparing a week before the British Open," said Weiskopf, who finished tied for 17th at St. Andrews. "And usually after I come back it takes a week to be myself."

SO THERE—Lee Trevino shows his reaction to a putt which doesn't fall during a pro-am tournament at Whitemarsh Country Club in suburban Philadelphia Wednesday. The Philadelphia Classic opens at Whitemarsh today. (AP Laserphoto)

IOC Extends Time For LA Decision

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The deadline for Los Angeles to agree to International Olympic Committee conditions or lose the 1984 Summer Olympics can be extended until Aug. 21, IOC president Lord Killanin has told the U.S. Olympic Committee.

That keeps alive the possibility that Los Angeles might still host the Games, although a proposal that a private corporation rather than the city undertake the financial responsibility for the Games remains the major obstacle.

The private corporation plan was formed to avoid any burden on Los Angeles taxpayers in staging the Games.

When Killanin, in a recent letter, rejected giving financial responsibility to the private businessmen's group, Los Angeles mayor Tom Bradley reacted by asking the City Council Tuesday to withdraw the city's Olympic bid.

Killanin said Wednesday that he thinks Bradley acted too hastily.

Killanin's message went to Robert Kane, president of the USOC. The IOC president said he agreed to a 21-day extension and added: "I do feel that the mayor's reactions were somewhat rapid and consider that you should both review my letter with care."

John Argue, head of the Bradley-appointed private Olympic committee that would accept the financial responsibility for Los Angeles, had sent a message to Killanin asking for a face-to-face meeting and an extension of the July 31 deadline to Aug. 31.

But the message from the Irish lord appeared to reject face-to-face talks requested by officials of the private corporation.

"Until the Games are awarded, it is essential to deal with the USOC and the mayor," Killanin said.

Killanin said that the IOC could meet with USOC and Los Angeles officials in Europe in the next month to discuss the situation.

Councilman Ernani Bernardi tried without success Wednesday to get the city council to take action on the mayor's recommendation to withdraw the Olympic bid. Bernardi said the council was "stalling around because they are hoping there is some way of working this out."

Bernardi said Bradley's recommendation is not an official action of the city, and only the council can withdraw the bid for the Games.

In other Olympic developments, New York Governor Hugh Carey said he was ready to meet with the USOC to explore the possibilities of his state as a location for the 1984 Games.

Although financial backing by the state would be essential, the New York city administration would have to make a final decision whether to bid for the Games. Mayor Edward Koch said Wednesday that before he would be in favor of the Olympics coming to New York, he would require assurances that city finances would not be drained.

In Munich, mayor Erich Kiesl, whose city staged the 1972 Summer Olympics, said his city would be interested in hosting the 1984 Games if Los Angeles drops out.

But West German Olympics officials said they'd only be willing to talk about the idea as a last resort.

Horner Selected Coach At Silverton

SILVERTON (Special)—David Lynn Horner has been hired by the Silverton school system as head basketball coach.

Horner succeeds Lyndel Norwood who resigned to accept a position at River Road High School in Amarillo.

Raiders Sign Four Tracksters

Signing is Clay Daniels of Hobbs, along with Steve White of Slaton, Reggie Harvey of Houston Jones, Ed Bruning of San Angelo, and Carl Heinrich of Houston Memorial.

Daniels had a top time of 48.0 in the 440-yard dash and was second in the New Mexico state meet.

Harvey, who will compete for a spot on the Tech football team this fall, has a best time of 9.4 in the 100 and 21.4 in the 220. He Bruning was regional runner-up in the 880 with a time of 1:54.0, and White was a state meet qualifier in the 880 in Class AA.

Lopez Picked

to it. . .I always have a decision to make when someone asks me to do something. So far I've agreed to do four commercials.

"I turned down a chance to be on the Today show because the timing wasn't good for my schedule. I'm going to be on the Johnny Carson show. . .I'm having a lot of fun and I'm kind of sad that my rookie year is going to be over."

Still, Miss Lopez' face has not become as familiar as someone like Jimmy Carter.

"I remember flying a few weeks ago," she said. "I don't fly first class. I fly in the back like everyone else. I was sitting next to someone who was reading an article about me. My picture was on the cover. The man turned to me and said, 'She's a pretty good golfer, isn't she?'

"A woman on the same plane learned I played golf. She asked me, 'Do you know Nancy Lopez? She's on the LPGA tour too.'"

Miss Lopez said she doesn't think the winning score in the Open will be low, although two-time winner JoAnne Carner predicted that if someone drives well it might take a record low score to finish first in the $100,000, 72-hole tournament on the 6,115-yard, par-71 course.

Louise Suggs set the record with a 284 at the Bala Golf Club in Philadelphia in 1952. A 287 by Mickey Wright in 1959 and Donna Caponi Young in 1970 are the closest anyone has come to the record.

"You have to position your iron shots and the greens are slower than they usually are in an Open," said Mrs. Carner, about the course she and 152 other women will be battling in the tournament which ends Sunday.

"This is a fair golf course for all players," added Mrs. Carner, who finished third, behind Miss Lopez and champion Hollis Stacy last year. "There are not too many bunkers and some short hitters may be able to bounce the balls onto the greens."

Mentioned Briefly

TENNIS

WASHINGTON — Jimmy Connors ousted Australian Terry Rockavert 7-5, 6-2 to move into the third round of the $175,000 Washington Star International men's tennis tournament. Earlier, Ken Rosewall advanced to the third round by defeating Erick Iskersky of Trinity University 6-4, 6-1.

AVILES, Spain — Sweden and Spain advanced into the final round of the Galea Tennis Cup Spanish zone with victories over Brazil and Mexico. Sweden beat Brazil 3-2 and Spain defeated Mexico 5-0. The winners of the final round will move into the final phase of the Galea Cup in Vichy, France, next week.

BASTAAD, Sweden — Ray Moore of South Africa defeated Alvaro Fillol of Chile 6-2, 7-6 in a first-round match at the Swedish Open tennis championships. In other first-round contests, Mark Edmondson advanced when Gianni Ocleppo retired in the second set with Edmondson leading 6-3, 4-0; Balazs Taroczy of Hungary defeated Barry Phillips-Moore 6-1, 6-1; and Stanislav Birner beat Peter Szoeke 7-5, 6-3. In the second round, Chris Lewis beat Jonathan Smith 6-2, 6-4 and Kjell Johansson downed Louk Sanders 6-4, 6-2. In women's first round matches, Ingrid Bentzer upset top-seeded Katja Ebbinghaus 7-6, 6-2; and Elisabeth Ekblom defeated Mariana Simionescu 6-2, 6-1.

QUEBEC — Second-seeded Lars Elvstrom beat Brad Coleman 6-1, 6-1 to advance to the third round of the $15,000 Quebec Open Tennis Tournament. First seed Bill Lloyd advanced over Glen Holroyd 6-1, 4-6, 6-2 while unseeded Francois Synaeghel ousted Australian Rob Casey 6-4, 6-4. In women's singles, Elaine Pelletier defeated Kate Glancy 7-6, 6-0 and top-seeded Zenda Liess defeated Dorte Ekner 4-6, 7-5, 6-1.

SAILING

SANDHAMN, Sweden — Australian defending champion Frank Tolhurst, sailing Arunga III, took his third straight victory in five starts of the world 5.5 meter sailing championships. Thomas Sprecher of Switzerland, sailing Joker IV, was second, followed by Albert Fay of the United States in Wildfire, Hans Aeppli of Switzerland in Illas and Lars-Goran Johnsson of Sweden in Arunga II. Tolhurst has a wide overall lead over American Albert Fay, his closest Gold Cup rival.

TRACK AND FIELD

MEDELLIN, Colombia — World record holder Alejandro Casanas of Cuba set a regional record of 13.72 seconds in capturing the 110-meter hurdles as Cuba continued to dominate the 13th Central American Games. Four other regional records were shattered. Mexico's Charlotte Bradley took the women's 1,500 meter event in 4:30.78; Cuba's Armando Guillermo Orozco won the hammer throw with a toss of 199 feet, 8 inches; Cuba's Hilda Ramirez won the shot put with a 55-9¼ toss; and Ruben Camino of Cuba won the pole vault with a jump of 16-5. In other action, Cuba beat the Dominican Republic 21-9, assuring itself of the gold medal in baseball.

NBC Builds Staff For '84 Show

By HOWARD SMITH
Associated Press Sports Writer

With two years to go before the Olympic Torch is lit to start the Summer Games in Moscow, things are going swimmingly over at NBC.

Don Ohlmeyer, executive producer of NBC Sports entrusted with leading the network out of the wilderness, is getting NBC geared up for what it hopes will be among the greatest shows in television history.

"I have every confidence the Olympics from Moscow will be the biggest thing on network sports ever," says Ohlmeyer, "and I have every confidence NBC Sports is going to cover the Games as well or better than they have ever been covered before."

Murphy's Law states that if anything can go wrong, it will. And the variety of things that can go wrong between now and 1980 is virtually infinite. Relations between the United States and Russia have not been the best of late, what with American newsmen being harrassed by Soviet officials and assorted dissidents being carted off to prison.

But all of that is beyond NBC's control, so the network is concentrating on matters it can deal with. Ohlmeyer says the camera positions for the Games are set. NBC knows which lenses will be used for which cameras and exactly where the mobile units will be located. It is in the process of shipping miles of cable to Moscow for installation this summer.

NBC will send about 650 workers to Moscow and the production people are already being lined up. Those that will handle track and field, for example, will spend the next two years covering track and field events in preparation for the Olympics.

The on-air talent is being assembled. O.J. Simpson was the first announcer named to the team, and Bruce Jenner was second. Now the lineup is taking shape.

Ohlmeyer says that Dick Enberg, Curt Gowdy, Jim Simpson, Charlie Jones and Mike Adamle have been assured of spots on the NBC team. So have specialists Al McGuire and Billy Packer, basketball; Nancy Theis, gymnastics; John Naber and Donna de Varona, swimming, and Micki King, diving. And Merlin Olsen and John Brodie will both be there.

Exact roles have not been determined but Simpson and Jenner will probably act as hosts for the afternoon sessions and, unless the network hires someone from outside, Enberg will probably have the prestigious role of prime time host. Adamle — "He is going to be one of the major people in this business in five years," says Ohlmeyer — will be given extensive exposure.

Ohlmeyer also plans to have some representatives from NBC News on hand. "We need people who have news credibility," he says. "Even if we do a piece on the Moscow Subway, we don't want to leave ourselves open to charges of propaganda."

Most of the time slots have been more or less determined. And with 150 hours of coverage planned, spread over 16 days, there are a lot of time slots involved.

Ohlmeyer says the basic coverage on weekdays will run from 10:30-12:30 p.m.; 3-4 p.m.; 7-10 p.m., and 10:30-midnight, all times CDT. Weekend sessions will run from noon-6 p.m. and 6-12:30 a.m. Due to the seven-hour time difference, some of the afternoon sessions will be live but most everything else will be taped.

NBC says it has already sold 80 percent of the commercial time available for the telecasts at any average rate of $80,000 per 30-second spot. Among the companies with expensive committments are Coca-Cola, Miller Beer, American Express and Toyota.

The network paid $85 million to acquire the Games and Ohlmeyer estimates it will probably cost another $20 million before the operation is over.

J.T. THOMAS

Thomas Hides Disease From 3-Year-Old

LATROBE, Pa. (AP) — But for the sensitivity of three-year-old Kimberly Nicole Thomas, the world might know what blood disease has stricken Pittsburgh Steeler cornerback J.T. Thomas.

Steeler president Dan Rooney announced Wednesday that the 27-year-old starter will miss at least one season while undergoing treatment for the ailment. But details of the disease were withheld because Thomas wants to protect his daughter.

"She's at an impressionable age. This is his only concern," a team spokesman said.

"We're respecting his wishes. He just doesn't want to talk about it," Rooney told reporters at training camp.

He said the disease is not fatal.

He added, however, that Thomas, a 6-foot-2, 196-pounder who whose interception clinched the 1974 AFC playoff that led to Pittsburgh's first Super Bowl victory, may be gone longer than one year.

"He's looking into his future," Rooney said. "We're not saying that he'll never return, but that's something he has to look to.

Rooney also announced that a slowly healing compound leg fracture will indefinitely sideline kick returner Laverne Smith, the fastest runner in Steeler history with 4.3-second speed in the 40-yard dash.

Rooney was less optimistic about Thomas, a Florida State graduate who was the Steelers' first draft pick in 1973. He said he knew of only one other player to return to the NFL after suffering from the disease. "He came back, but not for long."

Lubbock Babe Ruth Tops Dimmitt 11-8

CANYON (Special) — Stephen Aguilar pitched Lubbock West Babe Ruthers to an 11-8 victory over Dimmitt in the loser's bracket of the 13-year-old Babe Ruth Baseball Tournament here Wednesday.

Lubbock had lost an 11-8 verdict to Lamesa Tuesday to fall in to the loser's bracket of the double-elimination meet. Today at 5:30, Lubbock will play again, against the loser of Wednesday night's late game between Lamesa and Del Rio.

Steelers' 5-9 Rookie Not Worried About Size

LATROBE, Pa. (AP) — Frank Collins' muscular frame stops at 5 feet 9 inches, but his aspirations don't.

"This is a real high point in my life," the 180-pound rookie running back said between workouts at the Pittsburgh Steeler preseason training camp at St. Vincent College.

"It's a turnaround in my life."

Ever since Collins was turned away for midget football in his hometown of Beaver Falls, Pa., he's been proving people wrong about who can and who can't play the game.

"I bought a brand new pair of cleats. I was so excited," he recalled. "But the coach said I was too short and he sent me home."

He persisted, however, and went on to play football for his junior high school, Beaver Falls High School, and the University of Utah, where he won three letters at runningback.

Now Collins wants to prove once and for all that he can play.

"If I could make this team I could go back to Beaver Falls and be a big man."

The Steelers signed four players this year who are 5 feet 10, including first-round draft choice Ron Johnson, an Eastern Michigan cornerback, and sixth-round pick Randy "Rat" Reutershan, a receiver-pass defender from Pitt.

"I'm the smallest guy out there," said Collins, smiling.

His roommate at camp is rookie wide receiver Roscoe Coles, a 5-foot-10 170-pounder who also feels the dual pressures of being a free agent and competing with taller players.

"I could spend a lot of time wishing that I was bigger," Coles said. "But I guess it wasn't intended to be."

It was only by chance that they became roommates, but it was by design that they exchanged positions on the field.

Collins, who came to camp as a wide receiver, was switched to runningback, the Steelers announced Tuesday. Coles, a graduate of Virginia Tech, was asked to try out as a runningback but has been made a wide receiver.

Like Collins, he heard discouraging predictions about his chances of playing football.

"But if I believed them, I wouldn't be here right now," he said.

Coles was contacted by the Steelers. Collins, on the other hand, didn't take any chances that the team might overlook him.

He got on the telephone from Kansas State, where he was an assistant coach last summer, and didn't stop calling Steeler officials until they offered him a tryout.

"I stayed on them. I really persisted," said Collins, who gets extra distance out of his 5-foot-9 frame with extra work.

"I hustle all the time. I'm never doggin' it.

"I started preparing for camp in February and worked all spring. I even resigned my job so I could work out. If they gave me a contract for five or ten thousand dollars, I wouldn't care. I just want to play football."

Broncos

FORT COLLINS, Colo. (AP) — The Denver Broncos will begin heavy hitting today as full-pad, twice-a-day workouts commence at the National Football League club's summer training camp here, coach Red Miller says.

The Broncos began workouts Wednesday, and Miller said the group of first-year players and veterans who were at the practice were moving toward being the "best-conditioned group" that he has worked with.

He said he wants to meld the group with the remaining 38 veterans who are scheduled for physicals today in Denver and will join the club Friday.

The entire squad of 91 veterans and first-year players will practice as a unit for the first time on Saturday.

Following Wednesday's workout, The American Football Conference champions' top two draft choices, Don Latimer and Bill Gay, drew praise from Miller.

"Latimer has amazing quickness, and he looks like a real strong player with the pads on. And Bill Gay has the makings of a fine player," he said.

Rams Moving To Anaheim

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Rams' move to Anaheim Stadium beginning with the 1980 National Football League season will be announced Aug. 1, the Los Angeles Times said in Thursday's editions.

Rams sources say owner Carroll Rosenbloom made the decision this week after months of considering a shift out of the Los Angeles Coliseum, the Times reported.

The report went on to say Anaheim officials have agreed to expand the baseball stadium to seat more than 60,000 for football; the name Los Angeles Rams will be retained; and the team's regular season practice grounds will be moved from Long Beach to Anaheim.

Anaheim city officials have offered "the only concrete plan" seen by Rosenbloom so far, the newspaper quoted the club sources as saying. But it also was noted that nothing has been finalized between the stadium officials and the builders.

Another plan presented to Rosenbloom called for staying in a remodeled Coliseum. It has been reported the Rams prefer a stadium without a running track between the fans and playing field.

Bengals

CINCINNATI (AP) — Rookie Fullback David "Deacon" Turner has two ambitions with the Cincinnati Bengals — to play in snow and make the team.

"That's the first thing that came to mind when I found out the Bengals drafted me," in the second round of the National Football League draft, chuckled Turner as the rookie camp wound up Wednesday.

His job will be tougher starting today when the regular Bengals camp opens at Wilmington College at Wilmington, Ohio, where he must try to beat out veterans Boobie Clark and Pete Johnson.

"It's a lot of pressure knowing you have some other good backs on the team too, but like I told a writer in May, I don't expect to come in as a rookie and start right way. Right now, I just want to make the team and be a Bengal," said the All-America from San Diego State.

"I called my lawyer and had him get mother a house. I come from a poor family. My mother was on welfare and there were nine of us—six boys and three girls," said the 22-year-old back who ran for 1252 yards, 13 touchdowns and caught 33 passes his senior year.

"As long as I can remember, we lived in dumpy houses, ever since I was little. Now, I can do something about it," he said.

Turbiville Named To SWC Post

DALLAS (UPI) — Officials of the Southwest Conference have chosen Tom Turbiville to replace former Avalanche-Journal sports staffer Brooks Tinsley as the group's assistant information director, it was announced Wednesday.

Turbiville, sports editor of the Irving Daily News for the last five years, is a graduate of the Texas Military Institute at San Antonio and received a degree in journalism from Texas Tech.

Tempers Flare, Hobson Sneaks In, Boston Wins

By The Associated Press

This particular argument took place between Milwaukee catcher Charlie Moore and home plate umpire Rich Garcia in the midst of a game-turning rally that helped the Boston Red Sox beat the Brewers 8-2.

Ooh, was Moore mad.

Enraged when Garcia called George Scott safe on a play at home in the seventh inning, Moore dropped the ball and charged the umpire. Milwaukee pitcher Lary Sorensen had to restrain the catcher with a full Nelson hold.

"I thought when Scott slid, he missed the plate," said Moore. "So I dove after him as he came back for the plate and tagged him on the hand way before he got back. But the umpire said he got in the first time around, because he called him safe immediately."

Garcia concurred that Scott was in fact safe the first time and that he didn't have to come back to make sure.

"When Scott slid by the plate, he caught the edge with his hand," said Garcia. "I signalled him safe immediately. The play was over there. I don't know why he came back, and obviously he would have been out then if he hadn't touched it the first time. But he did."

Moore was burned twice on the play, for while he was arguing with Garcia he forgot to call time. Butch Hobson sneaked all the way around from first base to score the fourth run of the inning and the Red Sox soon had enough runs to win with a 4-2 lead.

Frank Duffy's run-scoring single capped the controversial four-run seventh for Boston and the Red Sox scored four more times in the eighth to win going away.

Orioles 10, White Sox 3

Rick Dempsey and Doug DeCinces drove in two runs each to key a six-run rally in the fourth and Jim Palmer won his first game in more than a month as Baltimore defeated Chicago.

The triumph snapped a four-game losing streak for Palmer, 11-8, who had last won June 18 against Oakland. The loss was the sixth straight for the slumping White Sox.

"I haven't been pitching well lately, but 10 runs makes it a lot easier," said Palmer. "You can throw those two-run home run pitches in the ninth and not worry about them."

Yankees 2, Twins 0

Ed Figueroa tossed a six-hitter and slumping New York won for just the third time in 12 games in beating Minnesota. Figueroa, who has suffered from muscle problems in his pitching arm, recorded his first victory since June 13 and raised his record to 8-7.

The Yankees scored single runs in the fifth and seventh innings. With two out in the fifth, Mickey Rivers singled and stole second before scoring on a base hit by Thurman Munson to make it 1-0. Consecutive singles by Mike Heath, Willie Randolph and Rivers in the seventh gave New York a two-run cushion.

Angels 3, Indians 0

Struggling Nolan Ryan finally won a game after seven misses and regained the American League strikeout lead as he paced California over Cleveland with a six-hitter.

Ryan, 4-8, had dropped five games in succession since beating Chicago on May 23. He struck out 10 batters, reaching double figures in strikeouts for the seventh time this season and 111th time in his career. The hard-throwing right-hander surpassed New York's Ron Guidry with his 138th strikeout in the fourth inning, and added four more for the night.

Tigers 5, A's 4

Jason Thompson's two-run single in a three-run seventh inning rallied Detroit over Oakland. Lou Whitaker's hit to deep short scored Phil Mankowski from third base and tied the score at 3-3. After Matt Keough, 6-6, walked Rusty Staub to load the bases, Thompson drove in the deciding runs with a ground single through the right side of the infield.

Mariners 6, Blue Jays 2

Julio Cruz had three hits and drove in two runs and John Hale also knocked in two runs to lead Seattle over Toronto. Cruz's RBI single and Larry Milbourne's run-scoring double gave the Mariners a 3-2 lead in the second.

Cruz and Hale drove in runs with two-out singles in the sixth to give Seattle a 5-2 advantage and Hale's sacrifice fly in the eighth provided the Mariners with an insurance run.

Kansas City Royally Drubs Rangers 11-4

He found one.

"Boston beat us 12-4," said the Texas manager Wednesday night in the wake of a 11-4 shellacking by the Kansas City Royals. "But that doesn't count because Boston is in a league all by itself this year. This one counts where it hurts worse, in the standings."

The Royals, with a 14-hit attack, left the Rangers 3½ games behind in the tight American League West chase, notching their fifth victory in a row and 10th in 12 games amid high hopes that this, finally, may be the hot streak they've been waiting for.

"Ask me in about two weeks," said manager Whitey Herzog. "But there's no denying the fact that we're playing well. What I'd really like to do is play like his until about Oct. 1 and then take my chances."

Rich Gale boosted his record to 11-3 with a seven-hitter. But the rookie righthander, who carried no-hitters into the seventh inning the first two times he faced the Rangers, gave up home runs to Bobby Bonds and Kurt Bevacqua and said he didn't have his best stuff.

"Thank God for the eleven runs," he said. "I was struggling all night long, couldn't get that first strike over the plate consistently and then I was afraid to go with the breaking ball. But give those guys credit. They're good hitters and they've seen me three times now."

The Royals jumped on Ferguson Jenkins, 9-5, for two runs in the second inning, then chased the veteran righthander, who hadn't lost to them since 1976, with seven in the third.

Clint Hurdle's two-run triple, just out of the reach of centerfielder Juan Beniquez, knocked in Pete LaCock and Amos Otis with the fourth runs of the inning. Then Jim Umbarger walked Willie Wilson, gave up a single to Fred Patek, and back-to-back doubles by Frank White and George Brett.

"Jenkins wasn't hitting the spots very well," Hunter said. "But Beniquez came within an inch of catching Hurdle's triple in the third. That could have made it a different ball game."

Almost every Kansas City starter fattened his batting statistics. White had a double and triple and three runs batted in, Patek hit three singles and stole two bases, Hurdle had two singles to go with his triple and Darrell Porter hit two doubles.

"We'll just have to take tomorrow night's game and start again from there," he said. "Ninety victories might win this division this year. It doesn't look like anybody's going to run away from the pack. Yet, I still feel that if anybody does, we can be the ones to do it.

SuperStars To Resume

Lubbock SuperStars will invade Maxey Park again next Sunday for the final men's competition.

The 37-39, 40-42 and 43-and-up age groups will participate in the event, according to the sponsoring City Parks & Recreation Department.

Entries are still being accepted for those age groups and all of the womens' divisions. Entry forms can be picked up at the Park & Recreation Department, 1010 9th St.

A practice session will be staged Saturday at 6 p.m. at the park, and all contestants may participate.

For more information contact the Parks & Recreation Department, 762-6411, ext. 2670.

Deeds Captures LCC Fem Tourney

Sis Deeds, who had led after the first day, held that top spot in winning the two-day women's handicap golf tournament at Lubbock Country Club.

Mrs. Deeds finished with a net score of 142, bettering Joanne Batson by 4 strokes. Katie Quest was third at 149 in the championship flight.

Emma Nell Neal had a 144 net to win the first flight over Sherry Godwin, 148, and Marsha Craig, 154. In the second flight, the winner was Kathryn O'Hair at 138, followed by Sandra Rushing, 148, and Ann Ahlenius, 151.

Expansion Plan For Local Sporting Goods Store

Cleveland Athletics announced this week plans for 4,000 sq. ft. additional warehouse space. Joe Lombard, Store Mgr. stated that due to plans for larger inventories for soccer, softball & baseball the new two story structure was needed. Work is to begin in early July at the 34th Street location between Slide Rd. & Loop 289.

Festival Gives View Of Cultures

Under the shelter of a spreading tree, an octogenarian East Texan, a Middle Eastern oud player, a fiddle-playing English professor and a lye soap maker swap stories over a cold drink.

A sunny hillside provides the seating for stages featuring ethnic folk dancers. Visitors watch, and can join performers like the Filipino "tinikling" (bamboo dance) dancers, Ukrainian cossacks or Spanish flamencos.

Visitors laze under the Brush Arbor eating Greek souflaki, Irish stew or Scandinavian Varm Korv (hot dog) and sing "Serving Jesus With a Smile" with a black gospel group. Others learn the unfamiliar sounds and syllables of a Dutch folk song.

Untested hands try such pioneer skills as horsehair rope spinning, log splitting, basket weaving or sheep shearing. A chicken who just might break the world's record in long-distance flying is cheered along, and the delicacies of possum are described by the Professor of Possumology.

The medley of activity is the annual Texas Folklife Festival. The symphony created out of the diversity of Texas' people, occupations, skills and fun will be presented Aug. 3-6 on the grounds of The Institute of Texan Cultures in downtown San Antonio.

Texas was settled by more than 30 cultural and ethnic groups who came here seeking opportunity and freedom. Although their lifestyles were altered by the frontier experience, many shared traditions and customs, creating a common bond in all Texans. The pioneer skills celebrated at the Festival reflect this — Germans, Czechs and Japanese contributed to farming methods; Mexicans and Spaniards shared their knowledge with that first Anglo cowboy.

The seventh annual Festival, like those that precede it, is a revival and celebration of customs, some passed down through generations, some only a tale read in a book. It adds up to educational entertainment where each Texan is brought closer to his heritage, and non-Texans discover aspects of the state that differ greatly from popular sterotypes.

The Festival is sponsored by The Institute of Texan Cultures, a learning and communications center that actively and dramatically presents the history and folk culture of the state. The Festival was the forerunner of the Institute's living history programs. It originated in 1968 when the Smithsonian Institution invited Institute staff to help stage a tribute to the Lone Star state at the Festival of American Folklife. The Texans returned ready to do it again for the folks back home. Since 1972, the Festival has presented its four-day, non-stop, celebration of this culture.

Some 5,000 people come to San Antonio from more than 130 towns and cities around the state to help the Institute describe Texas' heritage. Italians from Montague County bring their bocce balls to teach an old-world lawn game to others. The Cajun's rowdy, foot-tapping music set crowds to dancing the "fais-do-do" as though they'd known the steps all their lives. Old John Henry's tribulations are better understood by those hardy enough to lift a sledgehammer and bring it down on a railroad spike.

Goose pluckers, Polish paper cutters, Russian egg dyers, Wendish noodle makers, German chair caners, weavers and outdoor kitchen builders work to the tunes of bluegrass, Swiss yodelers, German oompah, jazz bands, blues and Polish folk singers.

Non-stop entertainment competes for attention on seven stages. Constant craft demonstrations are scattered across the 14.5 acre grounds. Visitors stroll among music, food, games, contests, builders and storytellers. Visitors can sit at the feet of a group of storytellers and listen to them swap tales or a few may gather around one lone cowhand, like Bill Corkery, who reminisces about days gone by.

When Corkery isn't banging out a version of "Rye Whiskey" on his old guitar or telling his colorful anecdotes and jokes, he describes the life and acts of the Wild West show he used to perform in.

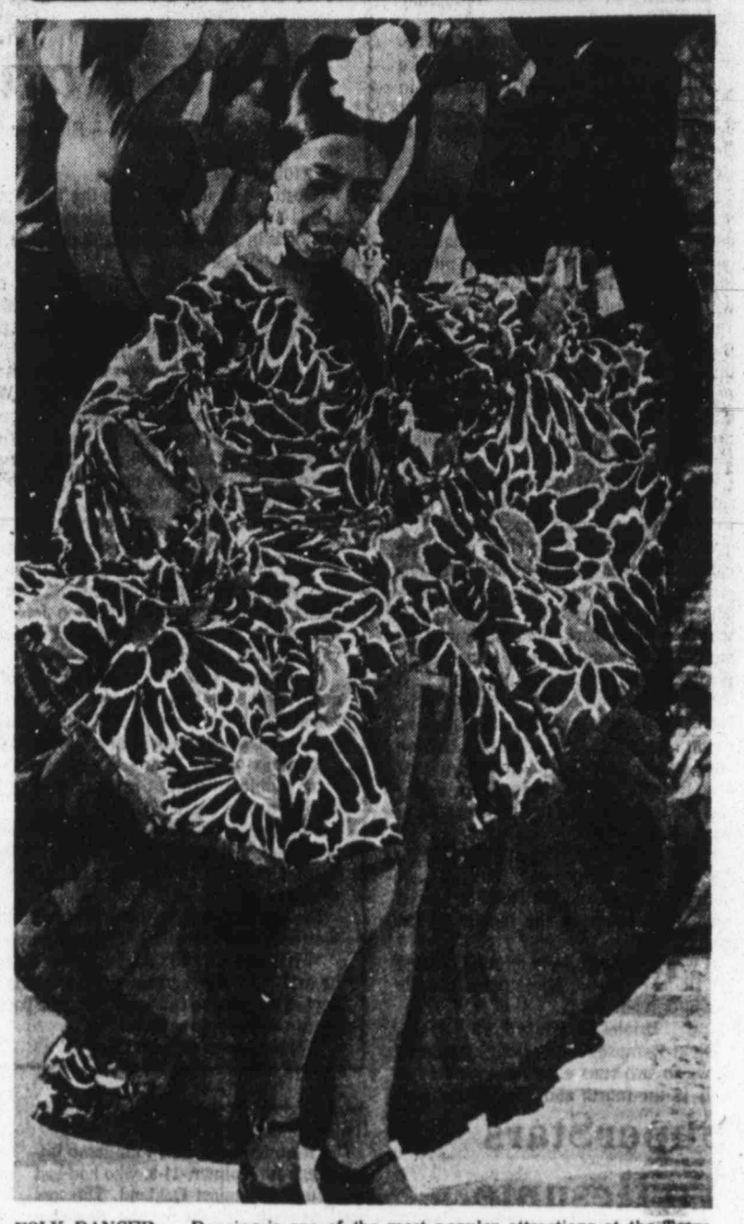

"We had an act called the Pony Express. The pony express rider would be chased by two boys who rode out and shot away with guns that had soap plugs in them. When they shot, the soap iginited, throwing out a long flame. It looked mean, see. Now, if they got too close and hit an old boy on the leg, it stung. And he got mad. So he'd pile up on the guy and knock him off the horse. And the other boy would jump in and they be out there in the middle just beating the devil out of one another and the crowd says, 'boy, that sure looks real, don't it?' They didn't know that it was real."

And there is Hazel Bowen. Hazel's

FOLK DANCER — Dancing is one of the most popular attractions at the Texas Folklife Festival. The gypsy-like flamenco dances performed by Teresa Champion typify the colorful folk dances featured each year.

DECORATIVE DOLLS — In 1903, a young girl's broken china doll began a family folk art that is now shared with visitors to the Texas Folklife Festival. Kingsbury's Charlene Berryman makes corn dolls the same way her grandfather did when his daughter's glass doll broke.

SPECIAL SPINNER — Bill Brett is a spinner — of horsehair ropes and yarns about life in East Texas. Visitors to the seventh annual Texas Folklife Festival will discover both skills in San Antonio. Brett joins some 5,000 other Texans who put on this celebration of Texas heritage and culture.

LASTING LEGENDS — Yarns about a wild west show featuring Colonel Jack and a trick donkey will be told told by Cowboy Bill Corkery at the annual Texas Folklife Festival in downtown San Antonio.

world is centered around farm life and horses. "I was raised in the country. Grew up behind horses. We worked them in the fields and grew all our own food. I loved it all."

Then, in 1976, the Pennsylvania Bicentennial Commission chose Hazel to be the wagonmistress for the wagon from Texas to make a country-wide trek to Valley Forge. She drove a replica of a conestoga wagon, traveling several thousand miles, living like her pioneer forefathers. At the Festival, Hazel shares her fond recollections of the trip with all visitors and drives youngsters around the grounds in the mule-drawn wagon.

"I make lots of little ones happy telling them about the trip and about the wagon and horses. It's a real treat for most children today to hear about that kind of life."

Hazel Bowen and Cowboy Bill Corkery will join the rest of the storytellers at the log cabin and between them all, listeners can discover a Texas never known before. O.C. Fisher from Junction and Hiram Phillips from San Angelo will swap tales of West Texas ranching. The storytellers are just part of the harvest of Texans that gather at the Festival each year.

Exotic ethnic foods have always been a highlight of the Texas Folklife Festival. This year's menu is no less tantalizing, but visitors will have a chance to learn more about the food than how good it tastes. Food preparation and preservation techniques will be demonstrated throughout the Festival grounds.

German Texans from New Braunfels will demonstrate sausage stuffing while Italian Texans show visitors how to properly pickle an olive. The Wends from East Texas will make and cook noodles while visitors watch and the Swiss teach observers how to make the perfect fondue.

Everyone can learn to make taboole, the Lebanese health salad before moving on to the Mexican area for the tamale making demonstration. Alvin Sueltenfuss and his fellow citizens from Kendall County will make sauerkraut and let onlookers try a foot at winemaking. The Greek Texans will demonstrate the making of dolmades, rolled grape leaves. Cliff Teinert from Albany will share his recipe for sourdough biscuits while the Chili Appreciation Society International makes real Texas chili.

A special area has been set aside for pioneer food preservation demonstrations. O.T. Baker from Boerne will build a smokehouse on the site and teach techniques for curing venison and beef.

More information on the Texas Folklife Festival can be obtained from The Institute of Texan Cultures, P.O. Box 1226, San Antonio, 78294.

Tickets may be ordered from the same address. They are $3 for adults and $1 for children under 13. Group tickets may be purchased in advance. A pass for four people, or a four day pass for one person, is $10 for adults, $3 for children. A hand stamp allows visitors to enter and leave the Festival grounds as often as they wish during the day.

The Festival opens Thursday, August 3, at 5 p.m. This year, for the first time, the Festival gates will open at noon on Friday as well as Saturday and Sunday. Festival grounds close at 11 p.m. each night. Free shuttle buses from downtown parking lots will run approximately every 20 minutes.

Books Turning To Dust On Library Shelves

By DANIEL Q. HANEY

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — With shuddering regularity, students pull books from Harvard's vast library stacks and find nothing between the covers but dust.

The problem is enormous for Harvard, owner of 9.3 million books. But it is just as painful for lovers of the written word everywhere.

From humble paperbacks to leather-bound first editions, books by the billions are dying in public and private collections across the country. The reason: They are printed on paper that self destructs.

For all its look of permanence, a new book these days has a life expectancy of only 30 to 50 years. Soon after the start of the next century, the pages of this year's histories and mysteries will be yellow, brittle and crumbling.

The classics, of course, will survive, because they are reprinted. But librarians fear that a lot of popular literature — the thrillers and romances that people read for fun — will be lost forever.

"We are fighting a tremendous problem," says Doris Freitag, book preservationist for Harvard's 96 libraries. "I am afraid we are going to lose an awful lot of books."

Small lending libraries regularly get rid of old books to make room for new ones. So dying books are most often a problem of the big research libraries built by cities and universities.

The number of books turning to dust is overwhelming. For instance, the Library of Congress, the world's biggest, has 35 acres of books, 18 million volumes, and one-third of them are too brittle to read.

The problem is what these books are printed on. The quality of paper started to go downhill about 1850. Ever since there's been what some librarians call "the era of bad paper."

For the 600 or so years up to the mid-1800s, paper was very durable. Craftsmen made it from linen rags and coated it with gelatin. It seemed to last forever.

But then people learned cheaper ways. They started making paper from wood pulp and coating it with alum-rosin compounds. Pulp is less durable than linen, and the alum-rosin gives off sulfuric acid that eats the paper.

Combine this with rough handling, high humidity, heat, mold and cockroaches, and today's books don't stand a chance.

What will be lost? Librarians fear plenty.

Take for instance the romances that were popular in the late 1800s. Even by the standards of the times, these books were printed on poor quality paper.

"It's things like that that will almost disappear, and they are part of the culture," says Robert DeCandido, a book preservationist at New York Public Library.

"The whole problem is one of what you can do without," he says. "How much cultural baggage can a culture do without before it really starts to be felt?

"Everybody expects to lose part of his culture as time goes on. But so much of our culture is based on information, and so much of that information is on paper, and so much of that paper is disintegrating that I wonder just how long our civilization can bear to lose that much and still remain what we want it to be."

Recently, the New York library restored the Brownings Book, a children's magazine published briefly in Harlem in the 1920s. In the process, they discovered a poem by the noted black poet Langston Hughes that had never been published elsewhere.

"I checked to see who else owned the Brownings Book, and apparently there is only one other complete copy in the entire United States," DeCandido says. "If this hadn't been restored, that poem might have disappeared. This is just one example of the kind of thing that can happen."

It is possible for libraries to restore yellowed books, but the process is slow and expensive. They take the books apart and wash them page by page in calcium carbonate or magnesium bicarbonate. Then they rebind them. The treatment takes the acid out of the paper, but it doesn't undo the damage already done.

Often the process costs $300 or $400 a book. Obviously, only the most noteworthy volumes get this treatment.

Firm Seeks Gas Tanker Terminal

NEW YORK (AP) — Citing opposition by environmentalists and delays by regulatory agencies in the United States, a pipeline company has asked the federal Energy Department to approve construction of a liquified natural gas tanker terminal in Canada, where it is welcome.

Although there are alternative locations for the facility in the United States, the plant should be built in New Brunswick, Canada, because of time considerations as well as the quality of the proposed site, Dale L. Wright, an attorney for Tenneco Atlantic Pipeline Co., said at an Energy Department hearing this week.

The company hopes to invest some $6 billion in tankers, pipelines, liquification facilities, and a regasification plant. The tanker terminal and regasification plant would be located near St. John, New Brunswick, with pipelines moving the gas to the eastern United States.

Wright said time is crucial because Tenneco Atlantic's natural gas supplies to the East could be curtailed by about 25 percent in the early 1980s if the LNG facility isn't built promptly.

Rhode Island is one of the possible U.S. locations for the tanker terminal and regasification plant. But Dennis J. Roberts, a special assistant to the attorney general of Rhode Island, said his state would be opposed to having such a plant and added that fog conditions on Narragansett Bay would make tanker movements dangerous.

David J. Bardin, administrator of the Department of Energy's Economic Regulatory Administration who presided over the hearing and who will eventually make a recommendation on the proposed project, said its effect on the United States' balance of payments was one of the most important concerns of federal policy makers.

"This project has the full support of the Province of New Brunswick," Hatfield declared.

Samuel Reddy Jr., representing the New Hampshire Governor's Council on Energy, also urged quick approval of the project, claiming that his state would suffer greatly if gas is curtailed.

JACL Seeks Reparations

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Delegates to the national Japanese American Citizens League convention here have unanimously endorsed a resolution to ask Congress to approve reparations for Japanese-Americans placed in relocation camps during World War II.

The resolution passed Wednesday asks that the federal government pay $25,000 for each person incarcerated in the camps.

Dr. Clifford Uyeda, a member of the JACL's Committee On Redress, said the issue has been within the league's goals since the 1940s. But he said Japanese-Americans were earlier economically and emotionally unable to pursue it.

"Now some 30 years later, we feel we can do it," he said. "Also, the climate is right. President Carter is insisting on protection of human rights throughout the world and we cannot understand how the U.S. can expect others to do something she will not do herself."

The resolution asks that heirs receive the $25,000 that would have gone to deceased relatives who spent time in the camps.

Uyeda said the request also is an attempt to deter future imprisonment of U.S. residents on the sole grounds of their ancestry.

The biennial convention includes workshops on such topics as interracial marriage, the role of Japanese-Americans in politics, the effects of the relocation camps and the role of traditional Japanese culture on today's youth.

Finance Company Gives Tips On Reducing Burglaries

The number of burglaries committed in the United States rose 23 percent between 1972 and 1976, the most recent year for which figures are available, says Glen E. Jorgensen, president of a home improvement finance company.

Jorgensen said 3.089 million burglaries were reported in 1976.

Here, from Jorgensen and a New York City-based private security firm, are tips on protecting your home when you are there or away:

—Install chains on all outside doors that are long enough to let you see out but too short for an arm to reach in. But be aware that a man's full weight thrown only once against a chain lock often will force it to give way.

—Use automatic electrical timers to turn lights and radios on and off. They can fool a burglar into thinking you are home when you're not.

—Consider sacrificing some privacy provided by dense, overgrown shrubbery and hedges: they make good hiding places for thieves.

—If your sash windows are reachable from the ground, install a simple bolt-key lock that effectively secures the bottom and top sash together from the inside.

—If your exterior doors are paneled, bolt a strong plywood or metal sheet to the inside surface, then paint and trim it with decorative molding.

—Use a special etching device, now available on loan from many police departments, to put your name or social security number permanently on valuables. This helps police trace and possibly recover stolen articles.

—Install dead-bolt locks on outside doors. They operate with a key inserted in a cylinder. Be sure the cylinder is pick-resistant and protect it with a guard plate, an inexpensive metal device that keeps the cylinder from being removed.

—Use safety glass for large window panels or cover the panels inside with strong mesh or steel bars.

—Folding or sliding steel gates are the only effective way of protecting glass terrace or french doors that are screened from public view or located where breaking glass would not be immediately heard. The gates should be inside on heavy tracks top and bottom, so they cannot be pried and bent enough to let a thief in.

—Consider adding emergency exterior floodlighting. Burglars hesitate to attack a well-lighted house and many have been surprised into fleeing when lights suddenly come on all around them.

Computer Cueing Aids Deaf

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. (AP) — Elena Beadles' parents learned when she was 18 months old that she had been deaf since birth and would be fortunate to ever learn to use the English language on the adult level.

That prospect spurred her father, Robert, an electronics expert, to become involved in the development of a system that uses minicomputers to help the deaf understand the spoken word.

Although reading is a window open to those who become deaf in later life, those who are deaf before they learn to speak seldom learn to read beyond the elementary school level.

But Elena, who is now 11 years old, has used the "cued speech" method to learn to clearly understand spoken English, to read and otherwise to communicate effectively.

Cued speech is a hand code that is used along with lip reading to make spoken English clearer to a deaf child. Since most people don't use hand cues, it would normally be of limited use to a child.

However, Beadles and Dr. Orin Cornett of Gallaudet College in Washington, D.C., the world's only college for the deaf, are developing a computer device that would automatically analyze speech and produce the cues necessary for a deaf person to understand the words as clearly as a person with normal hearing.

Some experts believe the development of an automatic cuer, small enough to be worn like a hearing aid and capable of flashing the "cues" on the lenses of a pair of glasses, would be a breakthrough in communication for the deaf and could lead to a revolution in the way the deaf relate to people with normal hearing.

Besides helping the deaf to understand the spoken word of others, the automatic cuer would have the additional advantage of producing cues to a deaf person's own speech — helping the wearer to learn to speak normally.

After seeing a television report on experiments with sign language several years ago, Beadles and his family learned to use cued speech with Elena.

"Within a few months, it was clear Elena was learning language much more rapidly than before," said Beadles.

But educators of the deaf are divided on the issue. There are the oralists, who believe the deaf should use only lip reading, and the manualists, who maintain that only sign language can bring early communication.

Although the oralists and manualists have been feuding for a century, cued speech offers a middle ground, the advantages of both philosophies.

Cued speech consists of eight hand shapes held at four different positions near the face. The cues help distinguish between the syllables and words that look alike to lip readers — for instance, there are 60 words that look like "met" to a lip reader.

Beadles and Dr. James Brown, head of the Center for Technology Applications at the Research Triangle Institute, went to Washington in 1971 for a meeting with Cornett to discuss the possibility of designing a wearable cuer based on compute analysis of the voices of people speaking.

The three men decided that such a device might be feasible, and it has developed into a collaborative effort between RTI and Gallaudet, receiving funds from the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke and from Gallaudet.

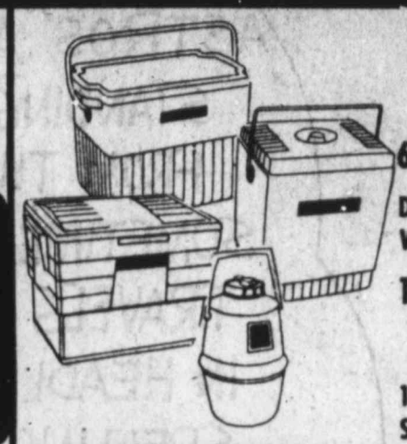

Researchers expect to develop an automatic cuer that will use light-emitting diodes, like those on digital watches, to flash cues on the lenses of the eyeglasses. The deaf person could move his head to position the images just beside the mouth of the speaker.The analyzer would be a tiny computer no larger than a package of cigarettes and would analyze voices and flash the cues on the lenses.

Model Prisoner Granted Parole

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — The skipper of the Nevada State Prison's "SS Neversail," a mock-up boat used in a celestial navigation course he taught, is shipping out.

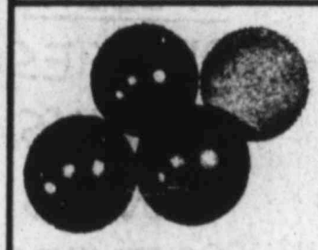

The Parole Board decided Monday to parole Richard Dunn, who had been serving a life term for slaying one man and wounding two others in a barroom shootout in Las Vegas. One board member said Dunn had "a strong recommendation" for parole both from the prison and from a psychologist as a result of his active role in teaching and improving himself.

Problem Groups Get Assistance

(EDITOR'S NOTE — If you have a personal problem, there's probably an anonymous group for you. If you can't find it, check with the self-help group that helps find anonymous self-help groups.)

By TERRY KIRKPATRICK

NEW YORK (AP) — Are you fat, tall, short, brilliant, neurotic, emotional, addicted, in debt, about to give birth, a parent, not a parent, a parent of twins, depressed, divorced, widowed, or a gambler?

If so, there's a group for you, probably meeting nearby. It's estimated that 5 million people are members of everal hundred different types of self-help groups.

There's even a sort of self-help group for self-help groups. It's called the National Self-Help Clearinghouse. If anti-war and environmental clearinghouses were symbolic of the 1960s movements for broad social change, the self-help clearinghouse is a sign of the '70s preoccupation with personal problems.

"People in different self-help groups have much to learn from one another," says Alan Gartner, a bearded, jovial professor of urban studies and co-founder of the clearinghouse.

Like where to meet. How to find new members. How to keep them coming back. What to do if they don't. A Parents Anonymous group in New York recently wanted to contact some parents who came a few times then quit, but it couldn't locate them. They were anonymous.

Such concerns have been considered at a half-dozen conferences sponsored by the clearinghouse since it was formed a year ago under the auspices of City University of New York, where Gartner teaches. Since it began its newsletter, the mailing list has grown from several hundred names to 5,000.

"It seems to be clear that there is a much greater growth in self-help groups now than 10 years ago," Gartner says.

For one thing, he says, problems today are more likely to be chronic or behavior-related. As people live longer they are more subject to incurable conditions like diabetes, arthritis, cancer, hypertension or emphysema. Behavioral problems like overeating or smoking can't always be treated by doctors, either.

The popularity of self-help groups also stems in part from an anti-professional mood — although many groups were started by professionals and depend on them — and a growing awareness that government health and welfare programs are too bureaucratic. A person in a self-help group that uses a "buddy system" doesn't need to make an appointment or fill out a form to get help.

Among the people from various self-help groups at a clearinghouse conference last year was a member of Overeaters Anonymous, who discovered to her horror that a luncheon buffet, the worst kind of temptation, was planned. She phoned her "buddy," who joined her, with a supply of cottage cheese, celery and fruit.

Gartner also sees self-help groups filling the gaps left by the declining influence of the family, church and neighborhood.

"And a lot of people feel alienated in a big society," says Frank Riessman, co-founder of the clearinghouse and professor of education at Queens College. "People feel powerless to solve society's larger problems. But they can do something in a group. There is an immediate result and benefit."

Riessman himself has joined groups concerned with overeating, high blood pressure and raising men's conciousness. It turns out the men in the latter group all had wives who had joined a women's liberation group.

Many groups follow the pattern of Alcoholics Anonymous, which was formed in 1935 and is perhaps the oldest such group still going.

Emotions Anonymous, for instance, was started in 1971 in St. Paul, Minn., by someone with an emotional problem. Since then about 300 chapters have begun around the country and abroad. Each has anywhere from five to 30 members.

They are people who have had professional help or who are just struggling to cope. "Anyone looking for peace and serenity," a spokesman says. "Something is missing in their lives. We learn to accept and love ourselves."

They meet once a week to describe to each other their success in following 12 steps borrowed from Alcoholics Anonymous. These are designed to lead a person to recognize his problem, deal with it and try to make amends for its effect on others.

Self-help groups begin in diverse ways. The Jewish Funeral Directors of America Inc. recently hired a social worker experienced in setting up groups to write a book telling funeral directors how to form groups for widows.

"Its a marketing tool," Gartner says.

"It's a nice thing for funeral homes to do," Riessman says.

Both acknowledge that groups might harm as well as help. They might delay a person from seeking needed professional help. They tend to blame the victim for his troubles when the blame may lie elsewhere. A person may become dependent on the group. It may perpetuate the problem.

A woman called Gartner one day to find a group she could join. He explained how the groups work.

"I don't think this self-help is for me," she said. "I don't have enough patience to listen to other people's problems."

Tomorrow's Horoscope

By Bernice Bede Osol

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Old obligations have a way of rearing their ugly heads at inconvenient times. Tomorrow, one you've been trying to keep submerged may come to the surface.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) One-to-one relationships could be a bit tricky for you tomorrow. The fault you find in associates might be due to the mote in your own eye.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Minor responsibilities you neglect tomorrow could fester into something rather nasty. When duty calls, respond promptly.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) In social situations tomorrow you may not display your usual charming qualities. People who annoy you won't experience your customary tact.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Even advice from well-intentioned friends is not likely to be warmly received by you tomorrow if they poke into your domestic affairs.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Keep in mind tomorrow that you're not the only one in the world capable of coming up with bright ideas. Associates will resent it if you pooh-pooh their concepts.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Be wary of involvements tomorrow where it appears to take only a little seed money to get your feet wet. This could be just the tip of the iceberg.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Companions will exert a great influence over your outlook tomorrow. If you're with negative types you, too, will soon be seeing dark clouds.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) No matter what you do for a person you know, it's never enough. He or she will be filing complaints once again tomorrow.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Make it a point not to malign a mutual friend in front of others tomorrow. Word will get back to fracture the relationship.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You're capable of realizing your ambitions tomorrow, but you may affend others in the process. Try not to leave a wake of angry onlookers.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Be certain you have the facts tomorrow if you're presenting information you want others to believe. What you say will be challenged from several sources.

Your Birthday

July 20, 1978

You'll get ahead this coming year by sharing the good things that are forthcoming with friends or associates who have helped you previously. It's the dawn of a new cycle. You must be unselfish, not self-serving.

Court Strikes Down U.S. Pledge Law

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A federal appeals court has affirmed a ruling that it is unconstitutional to compel school students to stand during the Pledge of Allegiance.

The 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled Tuesday in favor of Deborah Lipp, 16, of Mountain Lakes, N.J. U.S. District Judge H. Curtis Meanor, who originally heard the case, had struck down a portion of the New Jersey statute that required students "to show full respect to the flag while the pledge is being given merely by standing at attention."

Actor Gets Big Break As Clone

By JAY SHARBUTT

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Steve Ross, a handsome young actor, has struggled to make it here for five years. He recently got the Big Break. Problem is, most everyone looks like him in his first TV movie.

It's "Clone Master." Steve plays one of 13 clones of the main event, actor Art Hindel. All were chosen by Paramount Television for their similarity in looks to Hindel.

Ross, 30, of Fremont, Neb., grinned when asked how those making the film for NBC, which hasn't scheduled it yet, described his role.

"They didn't describe it very well," he mused. "I walked in they slapped a mask on my face and said, 'I think this one will do. Next!' Then I went and read for the producer."

Ah, show biz. Which is what Ross decided on when, after graduating from the University of Nebraska and teaching two years, he left it all to do what he'd enjoyed most in high school and college — act.

He and his wife, actress Alana Kaye, came west in 1973. They sought agents, made the traditional rounds of casting offices, and finally landed their first movie together, a Western.

Alas, it proved Grade-Z in budget. He explains it this way:

"My wife was the star. I played a cowboy. But three days after we started shooting, the producer got a job — as a security guard — to get enough money to continue the movie.

They exited the epic to seek work anew. During this period, Steve, suffering a severe case of the fiscal shorts, could be seen at Hollywood's best and worst restaurants, waiting on tables.

"A great training ground for actors," he intoned. "You name it, I've hit 'em all: Italian places, tuxedo-captain places, even jeans and dirty T-shirt places."

Last year, his luck changed. He says he did TV commercials and modeled for print ads. He guested on "Tonight," albeit among a squad of hearties toting a casket during a skit.

He also taped a TV pilot, a musical version of "Adam and Eve." He played Adam. The grounds of Mount St. Mary's, a nearby women's college, played the Garden of Eden.

He concedes that in "Clone Master," he felt a bit odd seeing so many himselves, or Art Hindels, as the case may be.

"It was a strange sensation," he said. "I don't know how many times I reintroduced myself the next day when the mask was off, telling the guys, 'Went through this before, remember me?'"

Did he and the director suffer a kind of identity crisis?

"Nah," Steve said. "Only a couple of times did he look at me and say, 'Art?'"

Businessman Cited For Tax Evasion

NEW YORK (AP) — Louis Ostrer, a businessman linked to organized crime, has been indicted on federal charges including evasion of almost $7 million in taxes and embezzlement of $1.2 million in Teamster union pension funds.

Ostrer, 56 — who has homes in Kings Point, N.Y., and Miami and Hollywood, Fla. — last May began serving a two-year sentence after losing a long court fight to upset his 1973 conviction with labor racketeer John "Johnny Dio" Dioguardi for stock fraud.

All-Star Game Puts ABC Atop TV Ratings

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC scored a double hit with baseball's All-Star Game last Tuesday and regained first place in the networks' battle for the prime time TV viewer, A.C. Nielsen Co. figures show.

The week's most-watched program, however, belonged to NBC, and CBS had five of the first 10. No. 1 "Quincy" was NBC's lone entry in the Top 10 shows for the week ending July 16. The baseball game was second and the pre-game show No. 7.

CBS's best for the week was No. 3 "Alice," the previous week's top-rated program. CBS had finished first in the ratings race two weeks in a row.

The rating for "Quincy" was a full point more than the baseball game's — 27.2 to 26.1. Nielsen says that means of all the homes in the country with television, 27.2 percent saw at least part of "Quincy."

ABC, thanks to the ball game, "Happy Days" and "Charlie's Angels," also in the Top 10, finished the week with a rating of 15.1, followed by NBC at 13.6 and CBS at 13.2.

The networks say that means in an average prime time minute, 15.1 percent of the homes in the country with TV were tuned to ABC.

The bottom five included "Saturday Comedy Special" on ABC, No. 59; "Carol Burnett Show" on CBS, No. 60; and "Free Country" on ABC, No. 61 — and two news specials: ABC's report on asbestos followed by CBS's special on the newspaper business.

Here are the week's Top 10 shows:

"Quincy," with a 27.2 rating representing 19.8 million homes, NBC; "All-Star Baseball," 26.1 or 19 million, ABC; "Alice," 20.8 or 15.2 million, "All in the Family," 20.4 or 14.9 million, and "Switch," 19.1 or 13.9 million, all CBS; "Happy Days," 19.1 or 13.9 million, and "All-Star Pre-Game Show," 18.7 or 13.6 million, both ABC; "Lou Grant," 18.6 or 13.5 million, and "One Day at a Time," 18 or 13.1 million, both CBS; and "Charlie's Angels," 17.8 or 13 million, ABC.

Here are the next 10 programs:

"Love Boat," ABC; Big Event-"Death of Richie," and Monday Movie-"Girl in the Empty Grave," both NBC; "Barnaby Jones," CBS; "Three's Company," Sunday Movie-"The Take," and "Starsky and Hutch," all ABC; "Hawaii Five-O," CBS; Sunday Movie-"Return to Fantasy Island," ABC; and "Rockford Files," NBC.

Music Firm Sues Evel Knievel

AUSTIN (UPI) — Evel Knievel is being sued for more than $500,000 by a music company for reneging on a promise to perform at a September 1976 event.

Jurors began hearing the hearing Tuesday in 53rd District Court. Music Capital Inc. claims Knievel made an oral promise to perform a motorcyle jump. The company is asking for $50,000 expenses and $500,000 it claims was lost in expected profits.

Knievel's attorney, H. Lee Godfrey, said Monday he did not expect the motorcyle daredevil to appear during the trial. He said Knievel, who lives in Butte, Mont., could not be subpoenaed to testify unless he is within 100 miles of the place of the trial.

OREGON TIMBER

Half of Oregon, or about 30 million acres, is thickly forested and the state leads the nation in value of forest products, over $30 billion a year. Production and lumber, furniture, paper and other forest products provides jobs for about 75,000 workers.

Nureyev Puts Style Into Classic Ballet

By MARY CAMPBELL

NEW YORK (AP) — Rudolf Nureyev displayed his own energetic "Romeo and Juliet" — if those two kids took off their toe shoes they'd go out disco dancing — Tuesday night as the London Festival Ballet began a two-week season.

This appearance at the Metropolitan Opera by the Festival troupe, the second major ballet company in England, is its first in this city since 1954.

Nureyev has choreographed to the music, by Prokofiev, that generally is used for a full-length "Romeo and Juliet." But Juliet especially has a different character than the usual gentleness. This Juliet is no doll-clutching child who has to be coaxed to go to a party which marks her adulthood. She's eager to go and delighted to dance with her suitor, Paris. When she and Romeo fall in love at first sight there, she doesn't tremble. She dances to show off for him.

The balcony duet is always the most romantic of the evening, and Nureyev has not betrayed it. It is radiant. But instead of softness and lyricism, Nureyev and Patricia Ruanne, his Juliet, dance with the energy of healthy teenagers, plus the bursts of adrenelin caused by their exploding emotions.

They're obviously nice kids and they're dancing beautiful balletic movements. But they're doing them in a whirl. And if he decided to swim a moat, or start dancing disco, she'd be right beside him.

Later, Juliet makes it clear that she has always been the darling of her parents and had her way. When they get tough about her marrying Paris, she has a fierce tantrum.

This "Romeo and Juliet" is quite busy, always something going on. We liked most of it, like the acrobats waving flags in the market square. We didn't care for several acted-out dreams in act three.

The British Royal Ballet, the Royal Danish Ballet and the Stuttgart Ballet have often done "Romeo and Juliet" evenings here. Those three versions are more similar to each other than this is to them. Nureyev has made many changes in the story, such as the way both Mercutio and Tybalt die.

Kenneth MacMillan's sumptuous, dignified, romantic version for the British Royal is still our favorite. But Nureyev's is so interesting it may now be second.

We have heard the music played better than on Tuesday. But there wasn't a weak dancer on stage.

Presley's Letters To Pen Pal Published

NEW YORK (UPI) — The late Elvis Presley had a secret love with whom he corresponded regularly for a year until her death — at the age of 10.

Presley's pen-pal letters to the little girl — identified only as Karen — have been published for the first time in the current issue of McCalls's magazine. The magazine says Karen was dying at the time in a Swedish institution for the handicapped, and that Presley became aware of her when a Hollywood reporter told him her only dream in life was to receive a letter from him.

She received not one, but many, in the months that followed.

In one letter, Presley told her, "Believe me, I see pretty ladies all the time, and it gets to be a bore. Being real is what counts, and I can tell that you are. I am on my way to Nashville to cut a record. If it turns out okay, perhaps I'll send you one. In the meantime, I hope you will write again ..."

"Every now and then," Karen's nurse is quoted as saying, "unexpected packages and presents were delivered. Records, photographs, T-Shirts — always with the note: 'To my friend, Karen, from Elvis Presley.'"

In one letter to Presley, Karen wrote, "I haven't told anybody that I know you. I like to have your friendship for my very own secret. I hope you don't mind."

Presley responded, "It is just as important to me to have you for my friend and I am very proud to know you. It's okay with me if we keep it a secret. It's really nobody else's business but yours and mine anyway ... P.S., I Love You Too."

Karen died in 1963 pen in hand, while writing a letter to Preslay.

Her last words were, "To Elvis, With Love."

Holocaust Bill Approved

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The state Assembly has voted to require high schools to teach students about the persecution of Jews and other minorities in Europe during the Holocaust.

The bill, which now goes to the Senate where its fate is uncertain, passed 88-20 Tuesday over the objections of lawmakers who said more and more groups might demand similar courses.

"It is none of our business to interfere in this regard," said Assemblyman John Flanagan, who said the course would be the legislature's first venture into legislating what schools should teach on a specific topic.

Sponsor Charles Schumer said he and others had persuaded the Board of Regents, which oversees the state's school systems, to make teaching about the Holocaust part of the suggested curriculum. But the board did not require the course and only 1.5 percent of the schools are actually offering such a course, he said.

"The schools have ignored it," Schumer said, calling the need for such instruction a "moral imperative" and its lack "an insult to the suffering of millions."

"What about the persecutions of the Irish and the Armenians?" demanded Assemblyman John Daly.

"What we have done to the American Indians is a disgrace. That should be taught," said Robert Wertz.

"I am against the persecution of any race," said Assemblywoman Estella Diggs, but she sharply reminded lawmakers that the attempts of black lawmakers to add black history courses to the high school curriculum had been rejected.

Schumer's bill would require all high school students to get at least one period of instructtion in the persecutions of minorities in Europe from 1933 to 1945.

Pat Nixon Says Former President Broke Vow

NEW YORK (UPI) — For Richard Nixon, the political road that led him to the White House was one of power and glory, but to his wife, it was one of pain, sacrifice and a promise broken even though her husband had put it in writing.

"I gave up everything I've ever loved," Mrs. Pat Nixon is quoted as saying in the August edition of Good housekeeping magazine, released Tuesday. "The people who lose out are the children. Any of the glamor or reward in it comes to the grown-ups. It's the children who really suffer."

The former first lady is quoted as saying she hated politics from the first time her husband entered the arena in 1946.

It was then, she said, that she demanded, and was promised, two ground rules — that she would never have to make speeches and that their children would be sheltered from the limelight. Both promises eventually were broken.

The article, adapted from Lester David's book, "The Lonely Lady of San Clemente," said each time a disparaging cartoon of Nixon appeared in the newspapers, Tricia and Julie would come home from school in tears, tormented by classmates who jeered about their "monkey father."

So great was her opposition to Nixon's driving political career, that in 1954 Mrs. Nixon urged him to give it up and he promised that he would.

"On a sheet of paper she brought to him, he wrote, 'I promise to Patricia Ryan Nixon that I will not again seek public office,'" the article said. "He wrote the date, folded the paper and placed the promise in his wallet."

Earlier, at the 1952 GOP convention in Chicago — the very night Nixon was nominated for vice president — Mrs. Nixon again had pleaded with her husband not to accept, and the article said she felt he would respect her wishes.

But she learned later that night — through a television bulletin — that he had indeed accepted.

"Quickly she rushed to the convention hall and joined Nixon on the platform, smiling, gracious and cool," the article said.

Though she loathed campaigning, although in the early years she had demanded that she not be asked to participate, she eventually worked as Nixon's entire full-time office staff, typing campaign literature, hauling it to the printer, then to the post office. Eventually, she even made the speeches.

TODAY IN HISTORY

By United Press International

Today is Thursday, July 20th, the 201st day of 1978 with 164 to follow.

The morning star is Jupiter.

The evening stars are Mercury, Mars, Venus and Saturn.

Those born on this date are under the sign of Cancer. Sir Edmund Hillary, New Zealand explorer who was the first man to conquer Mount Everest, was born July 20, 1919.

On this day in history:

In 1859, American baseball fans were charged an admission fee for the first time as 1,500 spectators paid 50 cents each to see Brooklyn play New York.

In 1917, the first lottery draft of Americans for World War I duty was conducted in Washington.

In 1945, the flag of the United States was raised over Berlin as the first American troops moved in to participate in the occupation government.

U.S. Sells 'Non-Military' Data On Soviets To Chinese Groups

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States has sold $105,000 worth of "non-military" information about the Soviet Union to Communist Chinese interests in Hong Kong, government sources say.

The 2,800 "frames" of information were collected by two U.S. Landsat satellites which circle the globe from 570 miles above the earth and have the capability of scanning an area the size of a football field.

Officials of the U.S. Geological Survey on Wednesday acknowledged in interviews that a "foreign applicant" made the purchase request, but they refused to identify the applicant nor say where the data was collected.

But other U.S. government officials, who also declined to be identified, said the purchase request originated with Communist Chinese interests in Hong Kong and that it appears the Chinese are trying to gain information of potential military valve about the Soviet Union.

The Hong Kong interests were not further identified.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has two Landsat satellites in circular orbit. The two satellites together are capable of scanning every spot of the globe except for certain polar regions every nine days, experts said.

The experts said the satellites are equipped with a variety of infrared and other sensors that detect temperatures, geological formations, areas of varying population densities, crop conditions and other phenomena on the earth's surface.

The information on the "frames" sent back from the Landsats can be formed into pictures, they said.

Officials at the Geological Survey's data center in Sioux Falls, S.D., said in telephone interviews that the U.S. satellites can discern such things as airfields and highway systems.

No request was made to the National Security Council or to the Defense or State departments to clear the $105,000 foreign request for satelite data.

"It's open to anybody," said one officials. "They don't have to say why they want it."

He said the reason for the agency's refusal to provide the names of applicants for information is to protect their privacy and the commercial rights of companies seeking such information.

TODAY'S STOCK PRICES

Stock Mart Unchanged At Noon

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market turned mixed today, erasing the morning's 5-point gain.

At noon, the Dow Jones index of 30 industrial stocks was unchanged at 840.70. But advances led declines by about a 2-1 margin among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 15.49 million shares in the first two hours of trading, against 12.71 million at noon Wednesday.

Although many forecasters are predicting an economic downturn toward the end of the year, investor hopes have been buoyed somewhat by healthy second-quarter corporate profit reports. In addition, spending on durable goods and housing has continued strong, possibly because of buying in advance of expected price hikes.

With inflation predicted to reach about 7 percent this year, consumers are spending because they have "has no confidence in paper money or politicians anymore," said Robert Stovall at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

Stovall also noted traders have been encouraged by suspicions that the Federal Reserve may have decided against further credit-tightening policies for the present.

Airlines, which have been recording earnings gains on booming passenger traffic and which have been placing sizable orders for new planes, were among the most actively traded Big Board issues. Pan American led the most-actives, up ⅛ at 7⅝, while Eastern Airlines rose ⅛ to 14. UAL Inc. rose ½ to 35.

Eastman Kodak was down 1½ at 57⅜. The photo industry leader reported a better-than-anticipated 42 percent gain in second-quarter earnings Wednesday and was ahead 3½ in the previous session. Polaroid, which also reported improved earnings, gained ⅛ to 42¼. IBM rose ¾ to 270½ after a published report said the giant computer maker may be near the top of the industry in growth over the next year.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks rose .11 to 55.21; at the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .43 at 151.43.

COURT VOIDS ELECTION RESULTS — Gen. Juan Pereda, the Bolivian military government's hand-picked candidate, shakes hands Wednesday with members of the National Election Court. Pereda, declared winner of the nation's July 9 presidential election, asked the court to annul the election and to hold another vote. The court agreed and called for another vote within 180 days. # Bolivian Election Court Voids Presidential Vote

By HAROLD OLMOS

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — The National Election Court has voided the results of Bolivia's first presidential election in 12 years at the request of the military government's candidate after opposition charges that his victory was fraudulent.

The court called for another election within six months.

Gen. Juan Pereda, who had been declared winner of the July 9 election, asked the court Wednesday to annul the results and call another election "to avoid sorrow and tears for the nation." But adverse reaction from President Hugo Banzer indicated a split among the conservative officers who ousted a leftist military faction seven years ago.

Well-placed sources said Pereda made his decision after an all-night meeting with the military high command. But Banzer on Wednesday said if the court annulled the election he would turn the presidency over to the military Aug. 6, the day that had been set for the inauguration of the new president.

It is up to the armed forces to make "the decisions which are best for the life of the republic," Banzer said.

Pereda, a former air force commander and interior minister, said another election should be held "to avoid sorrow and tears for the nation." He said he was sure his proposal would have the full support of the people and the military government.

The electoral court stopped giving out results in the seven-man presidential race last weekend. It said then that about 70 percent of the vote had been counted, Pereda had 50.13 percent and former President Hernan Siles Zuazo was running second with 21.8 percent. The civilian politicians charged massive vote fraud to give the military candidate the majority necessary for election on the first ballot. Otherwise the new Congress also being chosen in the election would have to choose between the two top men.

The action of the election court also voided the congressional election since the distribution of seats was decided by the presidential results in each election district.

In annulling the vote, the election court seconded the opposition charges. It said there were irregularities all the way — in the campaign, the voting and the vote counting. And it said they were "of such magnitude that validation would constitute the establishment of an historical precedent."

Siles Zuazo, a 69-year-old center-leftist who was president from 1956 to 1960, started a hunger strike Monday to protest the outcome of the election. He abandoned it on hearing of the court's announcement.

Chronically unstable Bolivia has had more than 170 coups in the past 150 years, and Banzer fended off at least 19 attempts to unseat him.

Refugees Receive Offer

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Turkish Cypriot leader Raouf Denktah renewed his offer to let 35,000 Greek Cypriot refugees return to their homes in Turkish-occupied Famagusta, but this time he offered them an interim government "under the aegis of the United Nations."

The Greek Cypriots fled from their homes in the Greek Varosha section of the east coast city when the Turks captured Famagusta during their invasion of the island four years ago.

The Greek Cypriot government refused Denktash's earlier offer to let the Greeks return because it specified that the city would stay under Turkish occupation. There was no immediate Greek Cypriot reaction to the new proposal.

Denktash said the refugees from Famagusta could return to their vacant homes as soon as the Greek and Turkish Cypriot governments resume negotiations for a constitution to reunite Cyprus. He said the interim government would be "without prejdice to the existing or final political status of the area."

Peace talks between the two governments have been deadlocked for more than a year. They broke off in April after Spyros Kyprianou, the Greek Cypriot president, rejected Turkish proposals fpr a federation. He said the proposal would legalize the division of the island.

Kyprianou is holding out for the withdrawal of all foreign troops and the unconditional return of the 200,000 Greek Cypriot refugees to their homes in the Turkish sector.

Israeli Women Win Exemption

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Israeli Parliament passed a controversial bill today making it easier for religious women to get exemptions from compulsory military service. The opposition Labor Party called the bill discriminatory and predicted it would lead to a military manpower shortage.

Israeli women are drafted at age 18 for 24 months. Most serve as secretaries or in communications, although a few have joined a new tank program.

Critics of the bill estimate up to half the eligible women will seek exemptions under the new bill, straining manpower as men are pulled from combat duty to fill desk jobs.

The amendment to the 1959 draft law was approved 54-45 after a 12-hour filibuster by the Labor Party and the coalition Democratic Movement for Change.

Because all Israeli governments have allied with religious parties to form parliamentary majorities, the universal conscription law has never been fully enforced.

Previously, women demanding exemption on religious grounds were examined by rabbinical boards. The new amendment requires only that women sign an affidavit asserting that they abide by Jewish dietary laws and do not travel on the Sabbath.

The Agudat Israel Party represented by four rabbis in the 120-member Knesset, or parliament, insisted on the amendment as its price for joining Prime Minister Menachem Begin's coalition last year.

The Knesset debate over the draft law was one of the bitterest in recent years. Opponents proposed 90 objections or amendments, insisting on a separate debate and vote for each.

British To Change Secrets Act

LONDON (AP) — Britain's Labor government announced plans to reform the much-criticized Official Secrets Act by abolishing a catch-all section prohibiting unauthorized disclosure and publication of all official information, even trivia.

But 30 left-wing Laborites introduced a motion in the House of Commons Wednesday night "deploring the failure" of the government to keep a 1974 election promise to replace the 1911 act with a measure requiring the government to justify withholding information.

Home Secretary Merlyn Rees made public the White Paper outlining the proposed new policy Wednesday night. It said the government has come to no conclusion about "right to know" legislation that would force the government to justify refusal to disclose information on demand.

The proposal would narrow down the categories of information protected by security laws to include security and intelligence, foreign policy and confidential information on citizens held by the government.

Officials claimed this would open up "most functions" of government. But the National Council for Civil Liberties called the proposal "hopelessly inadequate" and said it would deny citizens types of information freely available in the United States.

There was no indication when the proposed new Official Information Act would be submitted to Parliament. There was speculation it might be introduced at the next session, opening in November, if the Labor government is still in office.

Journalists Duncan Campbell and Crispin Aubrey and a former army corporal, John Berry, were charged last year with violating the present law by discussing aspects of military-intelligence gathering. An associate of Campbell, American journalist Mark Hosenball, was deported on security grounds after he and Campbell wrote a report on electronic surveillance for the radical weekly Time Out.
