STERLING ELEVENTH TO FILE

Midnight Is Deadline For Filing For State Office

DALLAS, June 2. (P) — Eleven applications had been filed today with Albert Johnson, secretary of the democratic state executive committee, for governor, subject to the action of the July democratic primary.

Midnight tonight is the deadline for filing for state and district offices.

Earle Mayfield and Ross Sterling of Houston, Dr. C. E. Walker of Grapevine, Frank Putnam of Houston, Barry Miller of Dallas, Clint Small of Wellington, Mrs. Miriam Ferguson of Austin, James Young of Kaufman, Thomas Love of Dallas, filed applications while friends filed for Governor Dan Moody and for Lynch Davidson of Houston.

File Here June 14

Date for filing names for places on the ballot as county or district office candidates is June 14. Homer W. Rowe, county democratic chairman, said today, State and district officers must file by midnight tonight, he said.

ENROLL 30 TODAY AS SUMMER TERM SCHOOL IS OPENED

Enrolling 40 students the first day, the summer school opened here this morning under the direction of Mrs. David Wright and Miss Thelma Lee Rippey. This is the largest first day enrollment ever recorded in a summer school here by at least 100 per cent, Superintendent W. W. Lackey said today, and necessitates adding another teacher to the staff.

High school courses and the grade school subjects are being taught.

To Give Prizes Tonight At Ritz

Prizes for those turning in estimates on the number of miles covered last week in the 100-hour endurance run will be given tonight at the Ritz theatre, John Bonner, of the Midland Theatres, has announced.

Several Midland business houses are contributing prizes. It is expected that this part of the program at the Ritz will take place at about 8:45.

MORE ADVERTISING

Mutual advertising of the other is underway by Midland hotels and hostellers in the parks region of the Davis mountains.

The Midland chamber of commerce is assisting in an advisory capacity.

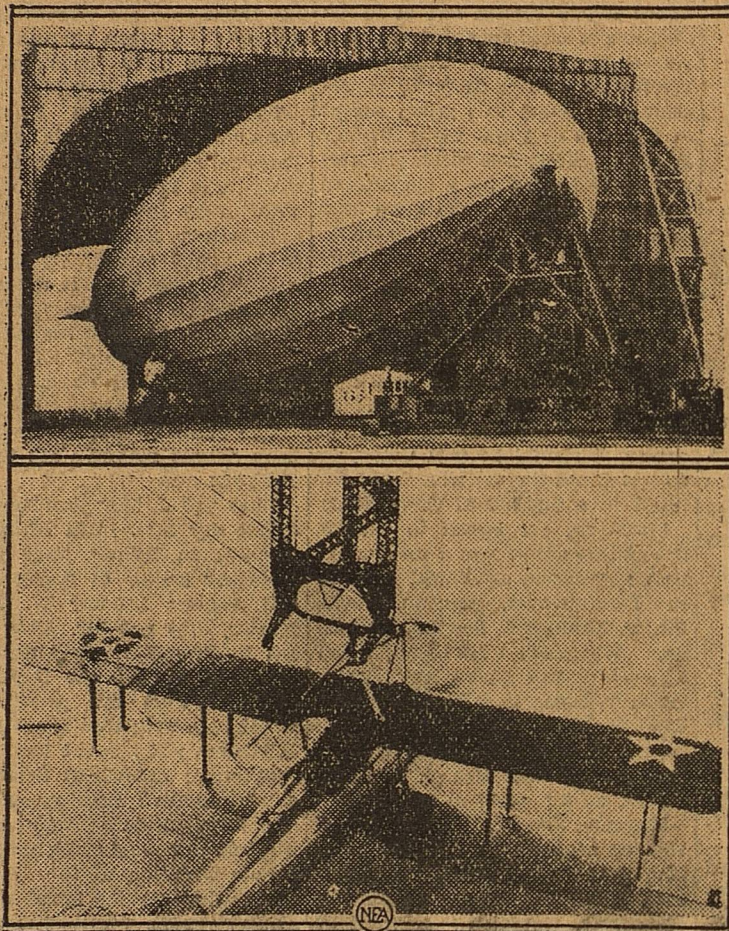

Tourists at either terminal of the district mentioned are told that good tourist camps and other conveniences are to be found at the other terminal.

MINISTER TO CONFERENCE

The Rev. Leslie A. Boone, pastor of the First Methodist church here, left Midland this morning for Brady, where he will attend district conference. After adjournment of the conference, he will go to San Antonio for a business visit. He will probably return one week from Tuesday.

Regular services at the Methodist church, except for preaching, were announced.

Los Angeles Has New Mast

These pictures show how the dirigible Los Angeles is being kept mechanically up-to-date. Above you see the big airship being drawn out of its hangar at Lakehurst, N. J., with the aid of a new portable stub mast which enables the craft to be handled by a ground force of only 60 men instead of 200, as previously. Below is a close-up of the plane-hoisting device, on the dirigible's underside, which was demonstrated before President Hoover at recent naval maneuvers off the Virginia Capes. A big navy biplane is shown after it had made contact with the hook in mid-air.

Negro Prophecies Two Drop Dead Soon After

SWEETWATER, June 2. (UP) — Scoffs and jeers at the Rev. E. N. Haggins, negro evangelist, by members of his race here turned to awe and respect when prophecies he was "moved by the spirit to make" were fulfilled and two blacks were dead in the manner he said they would die.

"Unless negroes turn to the Lord, some will fall dead," he said.

Rufus Riley dropped dead two hours after and Laura Matthews suddenly expired.

FLOOD FIGHTERS CONCENTRATE ON MARKSVILLE DYKE

ALEXANDRIA, La., June 2. (P) — Two large crevasses which permitted the swollen Red river to leave its channel caused flood fighters to abandon the farming area north of here and to concentrate on Marksville where the weakened dykes will receive the flood crest this week.

Two breaks yesterday spread water over 3,500 acres of plantation land from which residents had fled with their livestock.

The water was stopped three miles from Alexandria by an emergency levee and the city was considered safe from overflow, but precautions were taken at Pineville where the levee was endangered.

PAINLESS DEATH TO NEVADA PRISONER WHO IS GASSED

CARSON CITY, Nev., June 2. (P) — R. H. White, Elko gambler, died today in the lethal gas chamber of the state prison here. He was convicted on circumstantial evidence for the murder of

HIGH SCHOOL TO PLAY LAMESA AND COLORADO HERE

Midland high school is assured of having at least five home games during the coming football season as a result of arrangements made Friday by Superintendent W. W. Lackey of the city schools.

Colorado and Lamesa were signed to play games during the early part of the season. Lackey said this morning, That Midland has not yet completed her schedule allows for hope that more home games may be arranged.

Stanton will probably be the first game to be played during the new season. The Bulldog aggregation of Midland going there, tentatively, on Oct. 3. Colorado would be played the next Friday, or Oct. 10.

New equipment for the football eleven has been ordered, $1,000 representing the value of the order. Specifying bids on the proposed stadium have been asked.

It is believed that the stadium, when completed, would have a tendency to attract many teams to Midland who otherwise would insist upon playing upon their own gridirons. The Midland gridiron is to be sodded in approved collegiate fashion.

USE AIRMAIL STAMPS

Users of air mail are advised to use regular air mail stamps rather than those issued for ordinary mail carriage, it was given out this morning at the chamber of commerce.

It is only through cancellation of air mail stamps that a town is given credit for its volume of mail carried via mail planes, it was explained.

MAY BE FOR CONTROL OF BEER TRADE

Sunday Outbreak Is Followed Today By Deaths

CHICAGO, June 2. (UP) — Two more deaths today brought the week end gang war toll to six. Four others were wounded and two are believed to be dying.

The latest victim of gang guns is an unidentified man, found in an alley, shot four times and slugged. His body apparently was tossed from an auto.

The wave of gang wars started Saturday with the assassination of Phillips Guoflo, racketeer. Three were murdered yesterday by a machine gun, and one other victim died today in a hospital from wounds. Police said the murders marked the start of a battle between the Al Capone gang and the Aiello group to control the beer trade.

Outbreak in Detroit

DETROIT, June 2. (P) — Gangsters guns took five lives during the week end. Two policemen were shot down from an automobile they stopped in investigation of a hit-and-run accident.

At daybreak today, an unidentified Italian was shot fatally. Police connected his killing with the shooting of two Italians in a fish market Saturday.

To Head Sunday

The outbreak of gang disturbances into a definite killing wave was brought to a head Sunday with the rain of bullets fired from submarine guns into a restaurant where nine men and a woman sat together at tables.

Three men were killed and five, including the woman, wounded. With the orderly precision of an executive squad, the gangsters alighted from an automobile, drew snappily up at a front window, fired round after round of slugs into the restaurant and then dashed away at high speed.

The wounded were thrown into another automobile by spectators and carried to University hospital, where some were not expected to live.

Periodical outbreaks of the beer faction have long baffled Chicago police who, because of the remorseless sloop and hurried get-away of the criminal executioners, have little recourse to prevention of the slayings, and little afterward.

Organization is the impelling keynote of activities among Chicago gangsters, police say. This working against an espionage system depleted through lack of funds needed to combat gangster tactics makes the rings well high immune to anticipation of their plans.

Nichols Promoted; Goes To Ft. Worth

J. A. Nichols, head of the land department in this territory for the Texas Company, production department, will leave shortly for Mrs. Nichols for Fort Worth, he having been promoted and transferred by the company.

Mr. and Mrs. Nichols have been located here for three years with the company. His successor here has not yet been named.

Arrangements Closed Today For Football with El Paso

Midland to Probably Run Special Train To Border Town

Special recognition of the prowess of the Midland high school football machine was seen in results of telephone communication between Austin high school, El Paso, and Supt. W. W. Lackey of the Midland schools, relative to arrangement of a Sept. 27 meeting of the two gridiron teams in El Paso.

El Paso consented to pay the Midland team $750 for a game there at that time. Midland will go.

It is being arranged that either Grayhound busses or a special train be chartered for the trip, as it is thought more than 300 rooters from Midland will make the trip with the school.

ZEPPELIN READY FOR A TRIP INTO ATLANTIC WASTES

The Graf Zeppelin was being prepared today for the seventh trans-Atlantic crossing en route to its home base. It has touched three continents on the present voyage. Thousands have viewed the ship since its landing at Lakehurst. Workmen have been repairing broken struts and pumping gas and fuel aboard.

The start is scheduled to start tonight at 8 o'clock.

Minister Here Gets Valuable Graf Mail

The Rev. Leslie A. Boone, who probably has one of the finest collections of stamps in the South, received a total of more than 200 postal covers from Europe and South America by the Graf Zeppelin.

The big bag brought letters and cards and autographed pictures from most of the continental countries of Europe, and England and the various countries of South America.

One autographed photo of Hugo Eckener is said to be worth in excess of $50.

The mail was stamped in German postoffices, in the Graf Zeppelin and at Lakehurst, at the conclusion of the long voyage that carried the monster airship from Friedrichshafen to Seville, across the shelf of the African continent, to Rio De Janeiro, to Pernambuco, back over Rio, thence near Havana and north to Lakehurst.

It is due to take off today for its hangars in Germany.

KNOWS HIS CATTLE

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, (UP) — Difficulties of cattle rustling have become enhanced by the discovery that it is best to examine the animals for damming identification marks before removing them from their owners' premises. William Woods, of West Jordan, missed two heifers one morning. One of the animals, born during sub-zero weather last winter, had had its ears frozen off. Woods, accompanied by a deputy sheriff, started a tour of inspection, looking for a calf that boasted of no ears. The calf was found, and Arthur Cook, in whose corral the animal was frisking, was escorted to jail and charged with grand larceny.

DEATH NOTE IN LIPSTICK VIENNA (UP) — Before committing suicide with gas in the kitchen of her employer Grete Kikschmed, a 20-year-old Viennese housemaid, used her lip-stick to write a farewell letter to the effect that life had no further interest for her.

LATE FLASHES

WASHINGTON, June 2. (P) — Herbert Lord, former director of the budget, died today after a long illness. He had been in bad health since retirement from the office last year.

HOUSTON, June 2. (UP) — Howard Adams, 20, of Boling, was killed today near here when his car overturned. The man apparently went to sleep driving. A part of the roadster fell across his neck and he was strangled.

FORT WORTH, June 2. (P) — John Alsop, charged with murder, went to trial for the second time today in connection with the fatal wounding of Isaac Tate, negro, after attempted robbery of First State Bank Polytechnic April 10. At the first trial the jury was unable to agree on penalty after agreeing on Alsop's guilt.

CHICKASHA, Okla., June 2. (P) — Pushing investigation into mob activity here Saturday when Henry Argo, negro, accused of attacking a white woman, was fatally shot and stabbed. State and county officials today prepared for inquest Wednesday into negro's death. More than one hundred witnesses have been summoned.

HOUSTON, June 2. (UP) — Safe breakers and holdup men have taken $2,300.00 this week end in Houston. The biggest haul was made at a grocery store where knob knockers got fifteen hundred cash and three hundred in checks.

BRADY, Texas, June 2. (P) — William Roberts, Lohn State Bank cashier, expected to be prosecution's star witness in Lohn Bank robbery case, due to start today, was brought here with pistol wound above heart. Roberts was found shot at his home last night. Friends said he is in ill health but expected to live. Robbers allegedly forced Roberts to hand over nearly all the money and securities in the bank vault.

Stanton to Build Golf Course Soon

A meeting this afternoon in Stanton will probably result in naming of a new golf club formed there in a meeting Friday, and closing of a three-year lease with five year option on property west of Stanton.

The property is an 80-acre tract, suitable for golfing purposes. Nine holes will be built, with oiled sand tees, tee mats, clipped fairways, plenty of bunkers and sand traps, and other implements calculated to make the going rough.

Two of the fairways will be run across Mustang draw. Election of directors was accomplished Friday. Claude Holley, secretary-treasurer of the new organization, said while (See GOLF COURSE page 6)

Buttons Bought For Rotary Invitation

Buttons inviting Rotarians of the 41st district to Midland for the 1932 conference have been ordered by a committee of the Midland Rotary club. These buttons, to be placed on coat lapels, will be used by delegates from Midland who attend the conference of presidents and secretaries at Abilene July 7 and 8.

W. I. Pratt, Arthur G. Jury, Thos. D. Murphy and T. Paul Barron compose the local committee seeking to bring the conference here in 1932. Official invitation was extended by Jury and President Malcolm Meek at the conference in Temple in April.

MEXICAN ACE DOWN SOUTH S.A.

Thought Possible He Crashed South of This Town

SAN ANTONIO, June 2. (P) — After spending the night on a ranch 40 miles from San Antonio, Col. Roberto Fierro, Mexican flyer who will attempt a non-stop flight from New York to Mexico City, landed here at noon today.

Fear Expressed

SAN ANTONIO, June 2. (P) — Concern for the safety of Col. Roberto Fierro, Mexican flyer who was due here last night from California, was expressed by army officials today. No information as to his location or possible plight had reached Kelly field.

No Reports Here

Fear that Col. Roberto Fierro had crashed somewhere south of Midland while en route to the eastward was reflected in a continual string of wire dispatches from telegraphic press service enterprises and airport managers.

The flyer was thought to have lost his bearings or to have been forced down in rough country because of motor or other trouble.

Known as one of the finest flyers of Mexico, the whole country to the south of the United States was eagerly awaiting news of successful landing or the pall that would have inevitably descended upon intelligence that another aviator of the southern republic had been lost.

Mexico has had a series of air disasters during the past two years and the country was prepared just before noon for another such announcement.

Field-manager Harold M. Beecher, Harold M. Moss and other airport and government office officials reported they had had no information tangible to the flyer's position or plight. Beecher was ready to take the air at any moment following information from pilots along various airlines flying through here that wreckage had been sighted by them.

THE REWARD OF SERVICE

There's nothing especially new in the fact that the human race seldom goes out of its way to reward the people who have done the most for it.

Now and then, though, something happens to remind you of it again—something that makes you wonder if we really know what's good for us.

In London a man named Sir Ronald Ross recently celebrated his 73rd birthday; celebrated it in ill health, without any too much money to make his old age comfortable and without any great public celebration to mark the anniversary.

Sir Ronald Ross? No, you very likely never heard of him. He isn't widely known. But when future historians go to write down the names of the men who, in the last three or four decades, have served humanity the best; they will put his name somewhere near the head of the list.

A number of years ago Sir Ronald was a young officer in the medical corps of the British army in India, stuck away in a God-forsaken outpost simmering in the tropical heat. Malaria was a curse there; a curse, and an unsolved riddle. The young medical officer turned his attention to it. He had the audacity to doubt that it was caused by the climate, by the food and drink or by the weather. Instead, he suspected that it was carried from the sick to the well by some insect.

He outlined his idea to his superiors and was scoffed at. Undaunted, he got a cheap microscope and began to investigate. He put the mosquito down as his chief suspect, and went to work making microscopic examinations of the contents of thousands of mosquitoes' stomachs.

This painstaking work in the tropic heat with poor instruments was terribly hard. It undermined the officer's eyesight and ruined his nerves. There were years of it, too; for Ross' investigations came to nothing for a long time. At last, however, he found a new species of mosquito, got some specimens of it—and found his malaria germs, in his specimens' stomachs.

Within a short time he had proved his theory to a skeptical medical world and had enabled health organizations to cope with malaria for the first time in history.

Nor was that all. It was his work that put the American medical officers on the track of the yellow fever mosquito. The magnificent clean-up on that dreadful disease in Cuba, Panama and the southern states of America grew directly out of Ross' work.

So that's Sir Ronald Ross. He was knighted for his work—and then largely forgotten. Today England's highest honors rest on the shoulders of her war leaders—men who sent thousands upon thousands of men out to kill and to be killed. The man who saved uncounted thousands of lives; and whose work will go on saving lives long after he himself is dead, is ignored.

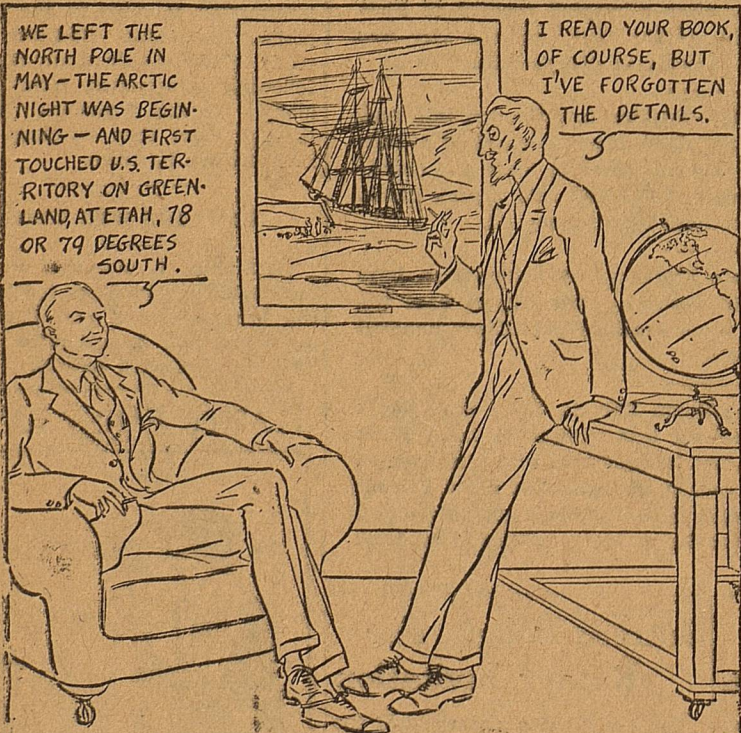

Really, we don't seem to know who our benefactors really are.

THE VOTERS DID WELL

The Pennsylvania primary seems to have turned out quite as well as could have been expected. The ineffable Grundy has been roundly defeated, and will have to go back to his old profession of lobbying; and while the victory of Davis means a triumph for Boss Vare, Vare's jubilation is decidedly dimmed by the victory of Gifford Pinchot in the gubernatorial race. Pinchot is a genuine liberal and belongs to no machine; his victory is a real step forward for Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania's voters were not given much of a choice in this primary, but they seem to have done just about as well with what was given them as anyone could ask. The state that gave Grundy to the United States Senators is now withdrawing him, and few tears will be shed anywhere.

Literary Digest Answers Charge That Wet States Got Extra Quota of Ballots

The charge that The Literary Digest favored the wet States with an extra supply of ballots in its twenty-million-ballot poll on Prohibition, and that the dry States were correspondingly cheated in answered vigorously and in detail by that magazine in a coming issue.

Having emerged safely from its stormy voyage of discovery, The Digest, in other words, "turns with alacrity to the task of proving that its critics, while nominally dry, are in a slangy sense 'all wet.'"

"Respectable statistical authorities have been quoted," the editor remarks, "and imposing rows of figures have been cited, to support the accusation that The Digest did not furnish the dry States with ballot quotas nearly adequate to their population, judged by the quantities we mailed to the wet States, and by the total of our ballots."

"Now let us examine the figures and compare them with our own, which are complete and final."

"We find in the first place the figures of our critics are based wholly on population statistics. This makes them misleading. The apportionment of Digest poll ballots among the States is governed by popular vote statistics—in this case those of the Presidential election of 1928."

"The difference is quite important, for the popular voting strength of some of the dry States is much smaller in proportion to population than that of the principal wet States."

Here The Literary Digest calls in its statistical experts, and they present a table furnishing a direct answer to the charge that the wet States were favored. A study of it, says the editor, will show that it was really the dry States which accidentally got a slight excess of those coveted ballots. The table has eight columns of figures, but the meat of the coconut is in the third, fourth, fifth and sixth. To quote:

"In the third appears the 1928 popular vote by States, and in the fourth come the percentages of State popular votes to the country's popular vote. The fifth shows how The Digest's grand total of 20,227,370 ballots were apportioned among the States, while the percentage of these State ballots to the total are shown in the sixth column."

Turning then to the two percentage columns, the fourth and sixth, we begin to get results—thus: "Take the first State, Alabama. In the fourth column we find that the percentage of its popular vote to the total popular vote of the nation is 0.6, while the sixth column reveals that Alabama received 1.04 per cent of The Digest's ballots."

"Looks as if we had befriended Alabama. "It's an amusing game to run down those fourth and sixth columns—keeping one eye on each if you can,—and see how well or ill The Digest treated each State. Some, like Arizona, Connecticut, Illinois, and Maine, come out pretty evenly between the ballots they were entitled to and those we sent them. Minnesota's credit and debit are remarkably close. So are Ohio's. And Oklahoma's actually tally to the dot."

"But Kansas, with only 1.93 per cent of the national popular vote, received 2.31 per cent of the Digest ballots, wherewith to score the banner dry percentage of the poll."

"Again we plead guilty of befriending the Camel. But let's get down to Texas."

"Texas is held up by Prohibitionist statisticians as a pathetic victim of The Digest's injustice. They point out that the Lone Star State, with a population almost naif that of New York, received less than a fourth of New York's quota of ballots."

"But we turn to the illuminating fourth and sixth columns and figures in our table and find that Texas in 1928 contributed only 1.92 per cent of the nation's popular vote. Hence its quota of 3.97 per cent of Digest ballots was more than generous. Really, it was awfully careless of us to send Texas so many!"

"Of course the explanation of why there is such a wide discrepancy between the population of Texas—5,487,000—and its popular vote—709,999—is that enormous blocks of its inhabitants do not vote. These are chiefly Mexican peons and Negro laborers. They do not receive Digest ballots, which are aimed at a voting, reading, purchasing public."

How about the populous anti-Prohibition States, such as New York? The critics say they were unduly favored. The reply is that New York in 1928 registered 12.11 per cent of the country's vote, whereas The Digest gave it only 10.10 per cent of the total number of ballots sent out. So the boot was on the other foot, and the "discrimination" was all against New York and in favor of Texas."

The figures thus refuted were contained in a Washington dispatch relating that Floyd Neff, mathematician, of Philadelphia, had been quoted by the Methodist Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals as saying that "47.91 per cent of the votes of The Digest's poll were from New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, New Jersey and Connecticut, having 28.56 per cent of the nation's population."

According to the same authority, New York having 9.62 per cent of the population, cast 18.03 per cent of the vote, and New Jersey, with 3.18 per cent of the population, cast 7.78 per cent. Furthermore, "the five dry States of Texas, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Georgia, having 13.79 per cent of the population, cast only 3.30 per cent of the total votes in the poll."

When this criticism was referred to The Literary Digest's statistical department is produced the following comment:

"Mr. Neff's conclusions are drawn from incomplete pool figures."

"As shown in the poll's tabulation in The Digest of May 24, the five Eastern States which he names returned 1,713,359 straw votes, or 36.01 per cent of the total returns."

"While it is true that these States represent 28.57 per cent of the population, they also represent 34.78 per cent of the 1928 popular vote. And they received only 29.63 per cent of Digest ballots mailed out."

"New York, with 12.11 per cent of the popular vote, received 10.10 per cent of the straw ballots and returned 11.97 per cent of the total poll."

"New Jersey, with 4.20 per cent of the popular vote, received 3.02 per cent of Digest ballots and returned 5.18 per cent of the final returns."

"The five Southern States named by Mr. Neff for comparison represent 6.93 per cent of the 1928 popular vote, received 9.64 per cent of the Digest ballots, and returned 6.95 per cent of the poll's total."

This is the magazine's final word: "So the more we look into the matter the more we discover that The Digest, in its desire to do justice to Prohibition—a cause revered by thousands of our oldest readers—actually leaned over to it a few degrees, like the Tower of Pisa."

The Fall Elections Are a Long Way Off, but the Washington Experts Are Worrying About Them Already—G. O. P. Margin in Senate Apt to Be Reduced Substantially

WASHINGTON, June 2.—Elections do not come until November, but more often than not a candidate for high public office doesn't have a thing to worry about after his nomination in the primary. Nevertheless, November of 1930 is likely to see more doubtful contests between the major party candidates for governor and senator than most election years. And that means that in the aggregate this year's primaries won't be quite as important as usual in determining who's going to get the jobs.

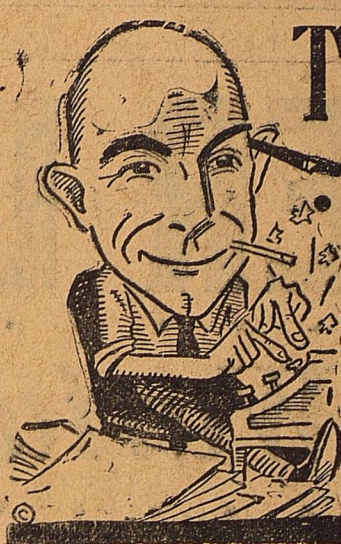

Thirty senatorial primaries are listed for this year in 29 states. As nearly as your correspondent can figure it out, the November winner will be determined by the primary result in 19 instances. In 11 states and 11 contests the result in November may at this time be considered more or less doubtful. Among the five states nominating by state conventions—Idaho, Georgia, New Mexico, Delaware and Rhode Island—the November outcome seems certain in three and uncertain in two.

In 12 contests the Republican candidate appears certain of election on account of his state's rock-ridden Republicanism and in 10 the Democratic candidate appears to a reasonably sure bet. That would involve no change in party representation among this group except in the case of Iowa, where Senator Daniel F. Steck, Democrat, probably will be succeeded by a Republican unless his backers make some kind of a deal for Republican support.

An addition of the "doubtful" states explains why the Republicans are worrying about Senate control in the next Congress. There are 13 such states and of the 13 seats at stake 11 are held by Republicans and only two by Democrats. In fairness to the Republicans, of course, it should be said that they do not doubt the uncertainty of the result in a number of these states.

Situations are bound to change, but as this writer sees it we can expect Republican senatorial victories in Pennsylvania, Oregon, Iowa, Maine, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Wyoming, Michigan, New Hampshire and Idaho. And Democratic victories in Alabama, Texas, Virginia, Mississippi, Tennessee, Arkansas, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia and New Mexico.

Now, as for doubtful contests: Montana and North Carolina will vote on senatorial seats now occupied respectively by Senators Thomas J. Walsh and Furnifold Simmons, Democrats. If Walsh is opposed by a wet Republican he may get licked. And whether Simmons or Joseph W. Bailey is nominated by North Carolina Democrats, there may be enough bitterness left over from the fight to make the state go Republican in the senatorial election as it did in the presidential contest.

The Town Quack

Reserves the right "quack" about everything without taking a stand on anything.)

How to keep down that ever threatening shadow of corpulence: reach for the spinach instead of the preserves.

Do you remember the old gag about the weekly paper that came out with a headline, right in the middle of a political campaign, saying "Half of the City Aldermen are Crooks"? Romped on by the aldermen, and threatened with a libel suit if the statement was not retracted, the editor got out his next issue with the following headline, "Half of the City Aldermen Aren't Crooks."

Fords have taken another drop, advertising says today. Must have driven off of the pavement.

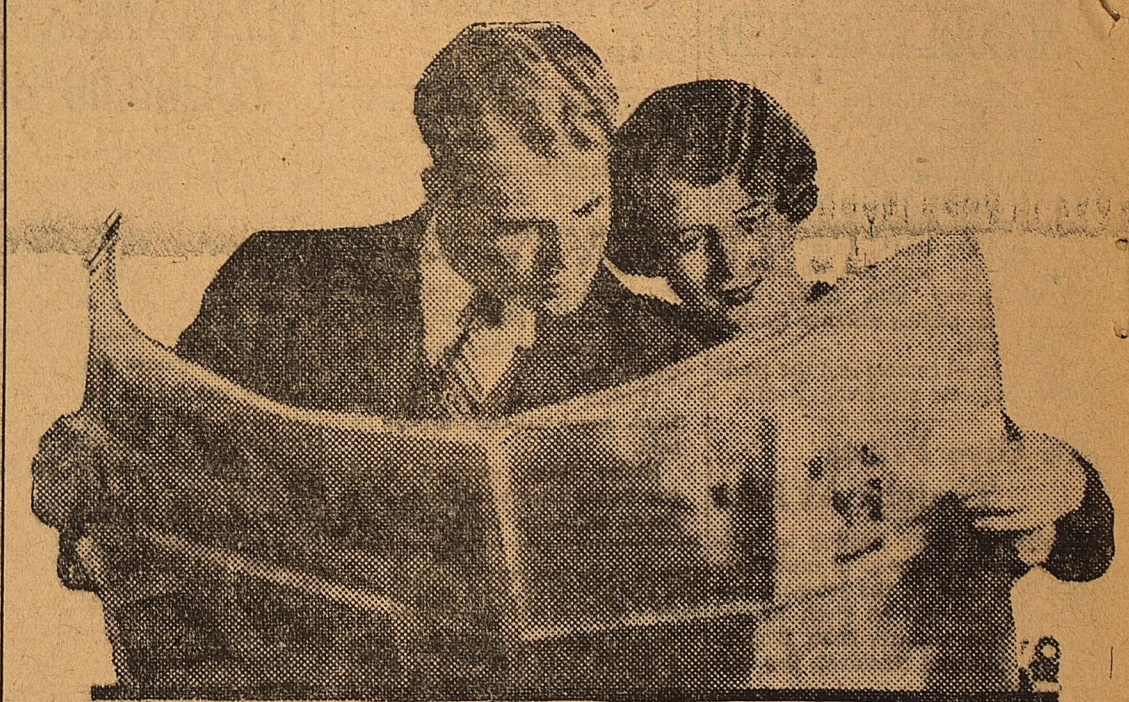

"Go weigh," he told her, handing her a penny.

I've decided to quit reading College wit and humor after finding the story about the absent minded college professor, who, when he jumped from an airplane, failed to release the parachute because it wasn't raining.

A Midland man went to another town and bought a suit of clothes at a very low price. He arrived home during one of the rains last week. Getting off of the train, he walked north up Main Street and by the time he reached Wall, the suit had begun to shrink. It was getting so tight and so short that when he met a local merchant, the latter asked where in the world he got that suit. "Bought it down at — on sale," he said, "but I don't see how I am going to get it off!" "Laugh that off," the merchant said.

the state which knows how to go Democratic for Dave Walsh and Al Smith, that Delaware will decide to have one Democratic as well as one Republican senator — as she used to have before the Hoover landslide—and that former Senator Peter Gerry in Rhode Island drives out Senator Metcalfe, as he is showing the utmost determination to do.

Living Room Winners Write Stories

Participating in a state-wide contest, county women of Midland held a living room contest recently with Miss Genevieve Derryberry as director.

Rooms were judged by Mrs. J. D. Young, who selected Mrs. Boyce Edison's room as first winner among the No. 1 class; Mrs. J. D. Bartlett second in the same class and Mrs. Pat Barber first place in class No. 2.

Each of these winners has written a story covering her room, which will appear in following issues of the paper. The first to appear was written by Mrs. Edison.

Bedroom Made Over

My new living room is a bedroom made over. Plain pine floors; walls covered with building paper, put on with tacks and brown in spots where the rain came in.

I had a bed, dresser, an old trunk and a small table, no chairs at all. A less inviting room could not be found in the country around.

In making my room over I had to paper the walls. The paper hanger I wanted cost $15.00. Miss Derryberry and I dismissed the idea of spending so much and she showed me how to put the paper on with the help of a neighbor. I built a new window seat, covered it, varnished tables, etc.; turned door facing and painted them ivory. They had been formerly green. I also put new face boards in. For draperies I put up natural colors and used theatrical gauze in old shades. A coat of varnish made the old portable phonograph look new.

Really I have not spent much time and a very few dollars. The room is comfortable and nice. It furnishes us a place to read, play or entertain.

HOW DEATH WAS SKIRTED BETWEEN HERE AND EL PASO

A True Yarn

The pilot peered intently ahead at a brownish haze over there to the southwest, noticed with a frowning of the brow the resolution of shape and other physical characteristics. He looked for a brief moment back into the semi-twilight that shadowed the cabin and saw that his passengers had not seen—or at least had not realized if they had seen.

A dry storm was brewing, and rapidly approaching from the low sand hills rising along the Rio Grande. Sand was whipping high into the air and blotting out the near horizon of that murky late afternoon.

The ship was droning and hammering into a strong quarter head current. It leaped high onto the breast of variable currents one moment and then dropped off into an abyss of rarefied air to even cut on a solid current fifty feet below. Yet the passengers knew that the slim little fellow stuck up there in the nose, realized that his guardianship of lives was merely a daily job he had discharged for more than a total of six thousand hours.

The serenity of the thought was not reflected in the face of the pilot, however. He glanced quickly at his map spread out on the dash. His head nodded slightly as he checked with his compass and wind drift.

The plane swept slightly around in a bank and headed from the pipeline course to the comparative safety of the Carlsbad road.

Seeks Carlsbad Road

Along this road planes can land, pilots will tell you. Along the pipeline one goes down with temerity. If the landing is made in a storm, the more fervid make brief movements of the lips in supplication.

The ship leaped high, almost intemperately high, as the first gust of the wind body struck. For a moment the pilot was too busy with his pitching craft to look behind him. When he did see the interior of the cabin he found one of the women laughing and re-arranging her hair. One of the traveling men had a look of ennui on his face that was distinguishably vanishing as he looked into the Sahara-colored southwest.

Like the dash of color blotted out in the south seas by the rushing down of the elements, the storm struck with all its force. The plane bored mightily into the fact of almost total darkness, the sound of the blow tempered in the rear of the Wasp to a semblance of waves striking the sides of a four-master, rolling tons of salt water on deck then subsiding slightly as it streamed into the scuppers. A wild repetition of sound and force. The plane was not steady now.

Ruddering to right and left, synchronizing every motion of the rudder with the stick, dodging here and there to keep in the less dense sand cloud area so that he might watch the ground so as to constantly keep an emergency landing place in sight a half mile ahead, the slim pilot was suddenly transformed from the slouching, seemingly negligent, almost automatically figure he had been a few minutes before.

He was tense in his straps. The number of things he was doing each minute would have amazed those riding behind him—the pretty twenty-year-old girl, the young woman of twenty-eight, the traveling salesman and that young fellow with the horn rimmed glasses who seemed to be an insatiable student as he persisted in trying to read from a heavy book that leaped in time to the unsteady motion of the ship.

Darkness Engulfs Plane

It was now quite dark. Try as he did, the pilot could not see the ground. Darkness below, the horizons gathered about him until a pilot of less experience would have felt strangled, and the world a

FIRST OF SERIES

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a series of true stories that will be written from time to time for this newspaper. They are done by a staff writer, who has either seen the stories "break" or has been correctly informed by characters intermixed in the narratives. For obvious purposes, names of characters and, in many instances, locations will also be given different names. The pilot in this instance flies daily through here with one of the three airlines serving Midland.)

seething place of blind force in the darkness. Tentacles of that unseen force howling in anger and disappointment as the object of their hate caught itself in time to mush slowly out of their grasp and straighten out for another encounter; screams of thwarted hope as another tentacle enmeshed the fragile craft and dragged it for seconds away from jealous, unorganized fellow conspirators.

The slim pilot was not watching his compass and bank and turn indicator. The wind blow had increased and he was holding the stick with all his force. The plane, in good weather accustomed to do everything but fly itself, was seemingly conjoined with the elemental insurrectos. It groaned and creaked in the terrific strain, but obeyed staggeringly the command of the hand on the stick.

Back in the cabin the young girl was telling her older companion about what a thrill it was, flying into the "innocent, but absurd looking clouds."

"I suppose we are so high now that we won't see the ground for a long time," she laughed.

"I don't know," her companion said. "I have been in this ship two other times, but I never flew up into these dense clouds before. I suppose the pilot is doing it for a reason."

The young man spoke up. That is to say he yelled out, in order to make himself heard above the din of combat:

"I cannot decide what kind of clouds these are. They are not listed in this book. Strange, the instructors never showed our class anything like them. Wonder if this is just a phenomenon."

The ennui had worn off the face of the traveling man. He seemed interested. One would have had the impression he knew what the whole thing was about.

Realized Missed Road

The pilot was fighting the gale with the grimness of a spectre. Shadow hollowed out his face, set his jaws, gave a piercing look to the eyes. Like a hawk, he watched everything, yet saw nothing beyond the swirling area chopped by the propeller a few inches ahead. One would have fancied him laughing at his plight had he been alone. The glance he took into the cabin behind him would have justified that impression. Intently he searched the faces of everyone, as well as he could in the pitching gloom.

Suddenly, with the additional sense through which some are warned, the slim man looked carefully at his instruments, ran his finger along his map, looked at his damned sand ought to shift enough to give me a rift," he said through tight lips. He tried again to turn the ship and was almost stalled as he came into the force of the blow. He was flying again in his original direction, but the problem that was bothering him was more existent than ever.

All at once, a shaft of morbid light penetrated the murk and with it the pilot saw something that made him jerk the ship roughly around while he had time.

There was the Carlsbad road!

Tenseness In El Paso

A moment later, he had taken new bearings. The storm closed in again and howled above and below him. The ground below could not be seen, but the pilot relaxed in his straps. He could feel his way in to a landing much easier here if the worst came to the worst.

El Paso, City of palms, of shaded streets, desert air, colorful Mexican-Spanish dwellings and tradition dating back to the conquistadores.

But El Paso on that day covered with gloomy, opaque skies that sagged on the river and cacti-dotted desert.

A group of weeping women at the airport, and anxious, straight staring fellows clad in dungarees.

There is an air of recent tragedy hanging over the place, and anticipation of something worse to come.

Inside is a sing-song voice talking over a telephone with the army station.

"Nothin' heard of him" the operator tells a man who runs his fingers through his gray hair.

A shout is heard. The man with the gray hair rushes out and comes in to report to the telephone operator that Jensen, the pilot with the best ears of the lot, heard the roar of a Wasp, but that a moment later he lost it in the direction of the army field. He is about to give orders for a call to be placed with the army officer in charge, when the bell jingles and the operator plugs in.

"They're down on the army field, and taxiing over to this field," he yelled, throwing off his ear phones and dancing around in wild unrestrained. The women out front strained their eyes into the gloom. The roar of Wasp could now be heard. Could it be the Wasp they awaited?

Pilot's Reception

It is so.

"That's Slim," Jensen shouts, as the faint outlines of the Pooker merge into the screen wall of blowing sand.

In a minute the ship has come to a stop, the motor turning idly. The two women get stiffly out on the ground. The women who had been crying as no report of the ship could be had, still held their handkerchiefs in their hand. And now they need them again.

As Slim climbs out of the plane they suddenly run for him. He is strangled by their arms. They kiss his grimy face and field attaches grasp his hands in bone cracking clasp.

"The Mexican liner cracked up a few minutes ago while trying to get in," one of them shouts into the ear of Slim when he is got into the dressing room. "Two pretty well done in. But how in hell did you manage?"

"Now! Now! that will do until later. How about a real Texas steak. I'm hungry as hell!"

And the pilot with a group of other flyers went into the restaurant.

The telephone operator was talking with the army station.

"Well, what 'y' think o' that he said to the gray haired man?" When Slim landed one of his passengers was reading a book and the others was asleep!

PUTTING FIRST THINGS FIRST—good taste, uniform quality, aroma, flavor—Chesterfield's popularity is built on knowing what smokers want . . . and giving it unflinchingly.

TASTE—THAT'S THE ANSWER and that's what smokers get in Chesterfield in fullest measure—the flavor and aroma of mellow tobaccos, exactly blended and cross-blended, all to a single, satisfying end . . . "TASTE above everything".

We state it as our honest belief that the tobaccos used in Chesterfield cigarettes are of finer quality and hence of better taste than in any other cigarette at the price. LIGGETT & MYERS TOBACCO CO.

MAXIE SCHMELING WOULD BE STRICTLY A MILK-FED CHAMPION

BUT BEER BRAWL MADE HIM A PUGILIST

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth of a series on "Mein Freund, Schmeling," and tells how Maxie goes for the milk and rhubarb.

By WERNER LAUFER, NEA Service Sports Writer.

ENDICOTT, N. Y., June 2.—If Max Schmeling should happen to polish off Jack Sharkey when they meet, June 12, he will be, in every sense of the word, a milk-fed world's champion.

The German drinks six quarts of milk a day. When the writer and a friend dropped in on the contender early one morning, Max greeted us and promptly did the honors.

Lifting a tall glass of the stuff to his lips, Maxie said "Prost!" "Maybe you boys would rather drink some ale, but I say this nice white milk is much better for you. This milk and the stewed rhubarb that Otto can make so good is what will make me strong when I fight Jack Sharkey. It tastes good, ja?"

But there seems to have been a time, when Der Max enjoyed something a bit stronger than milk. Everyone has been told at Endicott that the German has been a tee-totaler all of his 24 years. But at Johnson City, N. Y., lives a German gentleman by the name of Garbate, who a few years ago worked at his trade of bricklayer in Millheim, Germany. His helper was a muscular young fellow, Max Schmeling.

Mr. Garbate recently visited Max at his training camp and talked over old times. Following his visit, Mr. Garbate had a short chat with the newspaper men. He has a brand new version of how Maxie got into the fight game. One evening, after a hard day carrying the hod, Maxie was refreshing himself in a Mulheim beer garden with a few schoupers of beer. Three plug-uglies were in the garden prospecting for a brawl.

They picked out Maxie as the victim. But the beer aided Maxie's spirit and he sailed in to take all three of them. So Mr. Garbate thinks that beer was responsible for Maxie finding his fighting ability.

Schmeling likes to go to the movies. He likes the talkies because it is helping him master the English language. He sits through a picture without once moving his eye from the screen. But he keeps a "dead pan" even through some of the funniest sequences. Maybe he doesn't get them or maybe he is way ahead of them.

The training camp farmhouse is cluttered with cuckoo clocks Maxie brought from Germany. He has them hanging in all sorts of places and their cuckooing sometimes catches a story teller in the midst of a hair-raising yarn. This tickles Maxie. He laughs loud and long and displays his fine white teeth.

As at some of the more recent training camps, the great practical joke at Endicott is the "hot foot." This consists of the delightful sensation of having three or four matches stuck between the sole and the shoe and then lighted. The matches will burn down to the leather and the unsuspecting victim suddenly has a "hot foot." His stamping and kicking gives Schmeling a great laugh. He loves fun and doesn't get sore when he is the victim.

At the signing of the contract with Madison Square Garden, Max and Joe Jacobs, together with other dignitaries, posed for photographs. Somebody sneaked behind Mr. Jacobs and gave him a "hot foot." When Jacobs started stamping, Schmeling nearly had a fit.

Max's sense of humor brings memories of Jack Dempsey in training. Jack delighted in getting a headlock of the newspaper boys and applying enough pressure to make them say "Uncle." A good old-fashioned rough sense of humor does a boxer no harm. And if a man like Schmeling is our next champion, it will do the fight game no end of good.

H. Clay Searcy Here Visiting Sunday

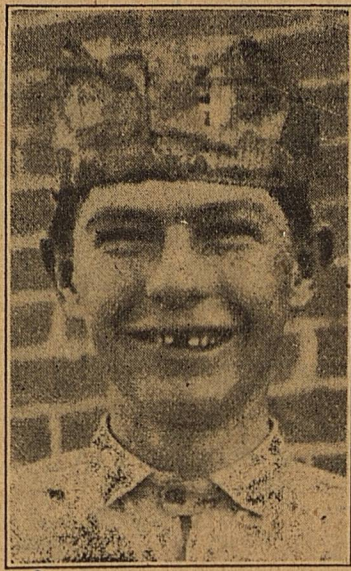

Mr. and Mrs. H. Clay Searcy of Victoria visited friends in Midland yesterday. Midland friends will remember Mr. Searcy has having been a teacher in the High School for two years, 1926 to '28.

The couple were married in Victoria last Tuesday and are making a short trip before he enters school in S. M. U. this summer.

One of the most remarkable kitchens in the world is to be found at the Lister Institute for Preventative Medicine, Chelsea, England, where meals are prepared daily for nearly 3000 different types of germs.

I SEEN TODAY

By ARKANSAS RUPLE

One of the frigid boys about town, K. E. Ambrose, was looking for the fellow who keeps singing about this fine, rainy weather. Kenneth wants to tell this cool spell is hurting his business over at the ice house.

There is one thing I have always wanted to tell Kenneth about. New refrigeration methods will come, as they have been coming. But I have an idea of my own. How about using dichloro-difluoro methane? It is scarcely poisonous, and the only effect it has on persons, when present in the air, is to induce a state of intoxication. Kenneth, by introducing this method of refrigeration, could become the most popular man in town, as well as prove his ability to step forward in the wake of those who do lots for science—by saving time in given operations. It would be far simpler to open a door and begin breathing, than to open a door, pull off a cap, turn up one's head and start drinking.

Go up to the pee-wee golf course and ask the girl who really does make good scores what the success of her game is, and she will tell you: "training." When closely questioned, she says she has nothing to do with me. They keep girlish thoughts away from golf, she admits. She does have her own ideas about holding a man, however.

"One must dress prettily for breakfast, get the husband to take you out twice a week and let him stay home the other evenings, pay the household bills before buying new dresses, never make the husband wipe the dishes, never permit the mother-in-law to visit on holidays, listen to the husband if he likes the sound of his voice, ask his advice on everything, be clinging, but not too clinging, make him think the woman is weak and he is a creature nine feet tall and as strong as an elephant," she said. With the knowledge, how does she find time for golf—even if it is pee-wee?

M. M. Seymour asked me if we didn't have a typographical error in The Reporter-Telegram the other day. Cited my attention to the story on Senhora Hansen of Rio De Janeiro, who recently gave birth to six infants, all within an hour. She is 23 years old, has been married three years and has 8 children. The last litter was all boys. Seymour wanted to know if the woman was really a woman or a sow. He had read somewhere about blooded animals being named like humans.

on a short visit to Midland this morning.

The links will be six miles from Stanton, fronting on the highway. Thirty-seven charter members attest to the favor with which the proposal to establish the course was met.

No club house will be built at present, Holley said. He said it is likely that a tournament will be played in celebration of the formal opening of the course a few weeks from now. Midland would probably be invited to this, as would several other nearby towns.

BUSHERS AND LENORAH SPLIT TWO-GAME MIX-UP AT LENORAH SUNDAY; TEAM GOES TO WESTBROOK FOR GO

Lenorah and Midland split a double header Sunday afternoon at Lenorah, Lenorah winning one 2-1, the Bushers taking the other 4-3, in some of the prettiest baseball seen this season. Both games were fought hard each step of the way.

Hill gave up five hits for Midland in the first game, while Timmons only allowed two singles. In the first game Girdley was touched for 8 hits while Rufus Day was rummaged for an even dozen by the Midland crew.

The first game went 13 innings, the Bushers winning 4-3, when Stevens singled, stole second and scored on Moon Myrick's double. This was a real pitcher's battle.

The second game saw little scoring, Midland losing 2-1.

The Bushers play in Westbrook Sunday.

EBREICHS DORF, Austria. (UP).—George Kruez, a 21-year-old peasant of Ebreichsdorf went into the forest just back of his father's house and hanged himself because at a local dance and general social gathering he played cards with a number of other peasant lads, lost 21 beers (beer being the stakes), found that he had money enough to pay for only 11, and was chagrined when a girl friend taunted him with being a pauper.

CAMELS are made to smoke

FROM THE DAY the choice leaves of sun-mellowed Turkish and Domestic tobaccos are first selected for Camel Cigarettes, every step in their manufacture is headed toward just one goal—the making of a thoroughly enjoyable smoke.

Pleasure, found at its best in Camels, is the only reason for smoking. That's why Camels make no pretense of being anything but a smoke. Camel is a blend of exquisite smoothness, mild and mellow and marvelously fragrant. Have a Camel!
