Oil- and agriculture-related Eden State Bank was closed Thursday by the FDIC, making it the 13th bank in Texas to fail this year.

Midland Reporter-Telegram

Daily 35¢, Sunday $1 — FRIDAY, AUGUST 1, 1986 — Vol. 61, No. 139

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby was in Midland Thursday seeking support for a combination of spending cuts and tax increases to help solve the state's budget crisis.

Hobby reiterates tax-hike stand

By DOUG DRUMMOND
Assistant City Editor

While some state legislators seeking re-election cringe when "tax hike" is mentioned, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby brandished the term Thursday as if it was a six-shooter.

And the target apparently was those same legislators who meet next week in a special session.

"I'm calling for a $2.2 billion tax bill," said Hobby, talking to a standing-room only crowd of businessmen at Mission County Club. "Encourage your legislators to do the job.

"Do it now. Don't try to balance the budget on the back of schools, universities and highways."

Hobby's 35-minute talk was the latest in his whirlwind trip across Texas to campaign for a tax hike.

Earlier stops included Dallas, Lubbock and El Paso. He is due in San Antonio today.

The issue — which state officials and legislators have haggled over for the past few months — is what Hobby has labeled a $2.9 billion deficit.

And, while Gov. Mark White has called the special session to solve the problem, Hobby said he already has the answer.

"It's improper, impractical and unwise to reduce expenditures by $3 billion," Hobby said. "We need a combination of spending reductions and revenue increases."

Hobby called for the expansion of the base of sales tax, meaning taxes should be applied to items now exempted by law.

Food and medicine are the only goods exempt under his plan.

That sales tax increase, coupled witn other hikes such as the motor vehicle tax, would raise about $2.2 billion, he said.

In addition, he said the state could reduce its budget by $650 million — thus, solving the problem.

The solution would include a rollback on a 3 percent pay hike for state employees and eliminating some agencies.

"It can be relatively easy done," he said, peering at the audience.

The speech began as Hobby, armed with statistics, spent 30 minutes describing what a $3 billion cut in spending would mean to the state.

His list included:

— a loss of some 7,750 jobs in the Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

— reducing most state agency appropriations by 34 percent, which would represent a savings of $1.2 billion. But this move, he quickly pointed out, would reduce services for blind children, mean fewer highway patrolmen, reduce university research and would spur local tax increases.

— more than 1,000 elderly would be denied nursing home care.

MC, MISD not planning tax hikes

From Staff Reports

Midland College and Midland Independent School District officials said today they are not planning on raising taxes to offset a projected state revenue shortfall.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby predicted a 26 percent tax hike for the school district and a 84 percent tax increase by the college to totally offset projected state revenue losses.

Hobby was in Midland Thursday lobbying for a $2.2 billion tax bill.

There is "no way" the school district would increase its tax rate by Hobby's prediction of 26 percent, said MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi.

Baressi says he doesn't expect the state revenue shortfall to be as large as Hobby's prediction.

"The information I have from Austin and the Texas Education Agency indicate there won't be cuts to that degree.

"From the figures I hear, the cut would be $200 million shared by all the school districts," Baressi said.

To offset these cuts, the district would trim it's budget for merit pay, fringe benefits and capital outlay projects, he said.

"My real concern is if they cut, they cut across the board. I'm hearing richer districts like Midland may be cut 20 to 40 percent, while poorer districts may not be cut at all.

"If there is a 10 percent reduction in state funding, all districts should receive that cut. The state should not punish some districts more than others," Baressi said.

Midland College President Jess Parrish said he did not expect the state revenue losses to be as large as the 34 percent cut predicted by Hobby.

"It would take an 84 percent increase in the tax rate to totally cover the shortage, but we're not planning on being cut by 34 percent," Parrish said.

Parrish says the college has planned for a 13 percent cut in state revenues.

City 'tickled' by concessions on Stacy Dam

From Staff and Wire Reports

Until Thursday, a few hundred rare snakes nestled in the way of a dam and reservoir needed to supply water to several West Texas cities.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service objected to the Stacy Dam and Reservoir because its proposed site was the habitat of the Concho River snake, a rare species which lives only at the confluence of the Concho and Colorado rivers.

But Frank Dunkle, director of the department, said Thursday he would drop his agency's objection if the water district takes steps to protect the snake.

Midland and Odessa city officials said today they were "tickled to death" with the agency's decision.

"We're elated over the fact that they dropped their opposition and we can complete that source of water," said Deputy City Manager Fred Poe.

"We're not opposed to that blooming snake if it's an endangered species, but there's room for it and us too," Poe said.

The service began to think about the welfare of the people, Poe said.

"They realized that the people have got to have the water. The best alternative we can do is work out something to protect the snake.

Odessa city utilities director Bob Derrington said, "That's good news. That would make us very happy to allow the construction to move forward for Stacy Reservoir because it is needed now for supplementing the water supply for the future growth of our area."

Derrington said he was surprised by the service's decision.

"At the public hearing they said they had until January 1987 to make up there minds. I'm certainly glad something has been decided so construction will be on time.

"That delay would increase the cost of the reservoir, which would increase the cost of water to our citizens," Derrington said.

Derrington, along with other Odessa and Midland city officials, attended a public hearing last week in Ballinger on the dam's environmental impact.

The service probably changed its mind after considering the cost to the people of West Texas, he said.

"I'm quiet sure there was a reconsideration due to the amount of people in our area and outside of our area that were concerned about the delay of the construction and the impact on the area.

"It would affect too many people and the economy and growth of the Permian Basin," Derrington said.

Joe Pickle, secretary for the Colorado River Municipal Water District, said the decision "opens a crack in the door."

"We're of course vastly encouraged. It appears the way is open to perhaps getting the full permit and with that we can start construction and working out these problems as we go along."

Compromise could hurt oil industry

WASHINGTON — House Democratic negotiators on tax law changes today were to present their Senate counterparts with a position that would score a damaging hit to the feeble domestic oil industry, according to informed congressional and industry sources.

Rep. Bill Archer, R-Houston, the only Texan on the House-Senate conference committee trying to forge a compromise tax bill that could clear both houses before the August 15 recess, said Republicans were excluded from drafting the position paper.

Archer and other oil state members of Congress and lobbyists for the oil industry said they are sure House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., will stake out the strongest possible bargaining position with the Senate as conferees go into a joint huddle.

Rostenkowski wants to broaden tax relief to the middle class while Senate Finance Chairman Robert Packwood, chairman of the Senate conferees, has as his main goal the lowering of tax rates to 15 and 27 percentfor individuals and 33 percent for businesses.

The House reportedly has agreed to accept the Senate's rate structure.

The Senate bill came up about $26 billion short of being "revenue neutral," and Packwood is believed to be interested in squeezing that money out of allowances permitted in the House- and Senate-passed bills.

In its bill approved last Dec. 17, the House would cut back on both of the two main remaining tax preferences of the oil and gas industry — the depletion allowance and immediate deductions for so-called "intangible drilling costs." The House allowed a 26-month write-off for producing wells. The Senate bill, passed June 24, would leave the preferences intact.

OPEC ministers iron out binding production cuts

GENEVA (AP) — OPEC ministers met one-by-one today with a new committee formed to set binding oil production quotas for each of the cartel's 13 members.

Eleven OPEC members have pledged to voluntarily cut their production for a total decrease of nearly 10 percent in the group's daily output. But industry experts believe that only binding quotas can shore up oil prices, which have dropped as low as $8 per 42-gallon barrel from $32 in November.

Ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, who have been meeting here since Monday, were scheduled later today to meet in a full session.

But individual ministers were seen earlier heading for the hotel suite of OPEC President Rilwanu Lukman, who is a member of the quotas committee set up Thursday.

The ministers avoided the main door of the Intercontinental Hotel and used an elevator that was screened off from reporters.

United Arab Emirates Oil Minister Mana Saeed Oteiba, however, left the hotel openly. He said he had refused to join the quota committee on orders of his government.

In addition to Lukman, Nigeria's oil minister, the committee members are Indonesian Oil Minister Subroto and Algerian Oil Minister Belkacem Nabi.

Lukman on Thursday described the voluntary production cuts as "quite satisfactory," but said they would be implemented only if agreement could not be reached on binding quotas.

"This is an interim arrangement; voluntary cuts will become superfluous if there is an agreement on quotas," he said.

Lukman said 11 countries pledged to cut production by a total of 1.925 million barrels a day. He has said OPEC produces about 20 million barrels a day.

He said Subroto was negotiating for more voluntary cuts. High-ranking OPEC sources who spoke on condition of anonymity said the cartel hoped to get voluntary pledges to cut up to 2.5 million barrels a day.

Texans praise Senate vote to abolish windfall profits tax

DALLAS (AP) — The U.S. Senate vote to abolish the windfall profits tax on oil was lauded by Texas politicians and industry leaders, although there was little hope the repeal would have an immediate effect on the ailing Texas economy.

"To put it bluntly, we don't need a Band-Aid right now. What we need is an electrical shock treatment," Charlie Seely, a Fort Worth independent oil producer, said after the Senate vote Thursday night.

Gov. Mark White said the action was late in coming.

"The Arabs beat 'em to it," he said. "The Saudi Arabians repealed the windfall profits tax when they flooded the market with oil and dropped the price below $22 a barrel."

The Senate approved by voice vote the proposal by Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla., which was an amendment to a pending bill raising the ceiling on the national debt. The repeal was passed after opponents failed by 51-47 to table, or kill, the amendment.

The levy, which is actually on oil produced and not on profits, takes effect only when oil prices are above 1979 levels. The tax has not been collecting any money during the recent price decline, and President Reagan had asked for its repeal.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said at the least the repeal vote "is an important step toward responding to the depression in the energy industry. If there ever were any windfall profits, they do not exist today since there are no profits.

"This is a burdensome tax, which has hurt every consumer and every energy producer. It collects no revenue today and imposes a very heavy paperwork burden on oil producers and on the government," Gramm said.

U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said he was "delighted" with the vote.

"It's been a long fight. I opposed it from the very beginning. I thought it was terribly unfair."

He said the best estimates available were that the paperwork costs $700 million a year.

Nickles and other oil-state senators, including Gramm and Bentsen, had asked for the repeal to save oil producers and the government from the bookkeeping.

"It's a small first step, but it's a beginning," Gramm said.

On a related issue, the Senate rejected 82-15 an amendment to impose a $10-a-barrel fee on imported oil.

Jobless rate sees decline

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — More than 200,000 Texans found jobs last month, dropping the state's record June unemployment rate 1.8 percentage points to 8.7 percent, the Texas Employment Commission reported today.

James Barnes, TEC labor-market analyst, said the statistics indicate most of the newly employed were students entering the summer job market. With the July rate tied with May's for the second highest in state history, Barnes said TEC officials are "a little bit cautious" of predicting a rapid economic recovery.

Bomb rocks Beirut commercial center

Third explosion this week kills at least one soldier

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A bomb exploded today at a crowded commercial center in Christian east Beirut, and police said the blast killed one Lebanese soldier and wounded 25 civilians.

The blast was the third deadly bombing this week in Beirut. Two car bombings — one Monday in east Beirut and the other Tuesday in the city's Moslem western sector — killed 57 people and wounded 310 others.

Today's mid-afternoon explosion sparked a fire at a taxicab parking lot at the Solemur building near an iron factory in east Beirut's Dora district.

Ambulances evacuated the casualties and firefighters extinguished the blaze, police said. Eight taxicabs were demolished by the blast and glass shards littered the streets.

Blood stained a sidewalk at the blast scene, which was cordoned off by army troops and Christian militiamen.

"Thank God it's a small one," said one shopkeeper at the scene, who refused to give his name. "We are used to bigger ones."

Police said the bomb contained 11 pounds of explosives. The Monday car bomb had a quarter ton of explosives.

Today's blast came a few hours after President Amin Gemayel proposed an emergency session of Parliament at which he, the Cabinet and legislators would debate a new power-sharing formula to end Lebanon's 11-year-old civil war.

The Christian-controlled Voice of Lebanon radio reported that army explosive experts had earlier defused a 37-pound bomb at the entrance to a bakery in east Beirut's Mekalles district. Two anti-tank mines were tied to the bomb to intensify its force, the radio said.

Gemayel said the proposed Parliament session should be attended by all members of Prime Minister Rashid Karami's Cabinet to discuss a peace accord based on "equality and a balanced distribution of powers." The Cabinet has five Christian and five Moslem members.

Craxi forms Italy's 45th postwar government

ROME (AP) — Socialist Bettino Craxi formed Italy's 45th postwar government today with himself as premier, resurrecting the five-party coalition he headed before inter-party feuding toppled the previous government five weeks ago.

Craxi handed a list of Cabinet ministers to President Francesco Cossiga at midday.

The previous government had set a longevity record in Italian politics since World War II by staying in power 34 months.

Parliament was expected to give the new Cabinet a vote of confidence next week.

"The government is a good government and I hope that it will obtain, in the next few days, the confidence of the Chamber (of Deputies) and the Senate of the Republic, so it will be able to start anew its work," Craxi said in a statement after leaving the presidential palace.

Craxi had resigned as premier June 27 after losing a secret parliamentary vote.

Leaders of the five coalition members — the Socialists, Christian Democrats, Republican, Social Democrat and Liberal parties — met Thursday night to approve the new coalition.

The coalition agreement stipulates that Craxi will turn over the premiership to the dominant Christian Democrats in March. The Christian Democrats hold three times as many seats in Parliament as Craxi's Socialists.

The coalition again excludes the Communists, Italy's second-largest party.

The announcement of the formation of a new government was received in Italy without excitement.

Government-run RAI television ran the news after a piece on the millions of Italians who are heading off for their annual August holidays.

Heinz Braun, right, gives an account of his escape to West Berlin.

East German escapes through checkpoint

BERLIN (AP) — An East German man said today he escaped to the West through a Berlin Wall checkpoint by dressing as a Soviet sergeant and putting three mannequins disguised as Soviet officers in the car with him.

Heinz Braun told a news conference he drove through the checkpoint in a station wagon he painted beige to look like a standard Soviet patrol vehicle.

Braun, 48, said he drove through the checkpoint Wednesday evening.

Rainer Hildebrandt, spokesman for the August 13 Working Group, a human rights organization, said Braun's car passed through Invalidenstrasse crossing near the Tiergarten area of Berlin. The crossing is in the center of the divided city.

Georg Henschel, a spokesman for the West Berlin Interior Ministry, told The Associated Press that "we only know what was released at the press conference by the working group." He said he could not confirm the story.

"We never take an official stance on escapes," he said.

Braun was wearing civilian clothes when he talked to reporters, and three mannequins dressed as Soviet officers were displayed on a table.

Hildebrandt had reported earlier that Braun operated an automobile tire service in the Pankow section of East Berlin and that he had tried to emigrate legally but was denied permission by East German authorities.

As members of the Allied powers governing Berlin under a postwar occupation agreement, Soviet soldiers may cross freely between the East and West sectors as long as they are in uniform. The other Allied powers are the United States, Britain and France.

East Germans under retirement age are normally barred from visiting West Berlin, which lies deep inside East Germany.

The August 13 group, which takes its name from the day in 1961 that East Germany began construction of the wall, holds occasional news conferences to document escapes and attempted escapes over the East German border, as well as to provide information about border fortifications and East Germany's treatment of political prisoners.

STACY

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, said "It looks like we can move forward on the dam and at the same time do some things that will help preserve the habitat and the existence of the Concho River snake, but most important, take care of the needs of about half a million people when it comes to water in an area where water's awfully precious."

Stacy Dam and Reservoir was designed to supply water to San Angelo; Abilene, Midland, Odessa and members of the water district.

But the Fish and Wildlife Service has been considering listing the Concho River snake as a threatened species and designating the proposed dam site as critical habitat.

Under provisions of the Endangered Species Act, those designations could have required the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to deny a construction permit.

"Mr. Dunkle's position marks a substantial change in the attitude of the Fish and Wildlife officials, who have previously insisted that the dam be moved or the project abandoned," Bentsen said.

Dunkle said the Fish and Wildlife Service will recommend that the water district hire a reptile expert to work for the snake's survival.

"We'll certainly hire a herpetologist. We'll comply with the terms of what they agreed on," Pickle said.

In making that recommendation, Dunkle said his agency will override a previous recommendation to deny the Stacy Dam permit.

The herpetologist will be asked to devise a plan which would increase the snake population, which studies now place between 300 and 800.

The Fish and Wildlife recommendation will go the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, which grants federal permits for dams.

HOBBY

— child care for more than 6,000 children would be eliminated.

"The state is facing its biggest crisis in a generation," Hobby said. "It's a very critical problem."

Hobby also provided spectators with a series of graphs and charts on the overhead projector.

The charts showed, Hobby said, a dilemma.

"There's not a partisan word in here," he said, listing public schools, higher education, the department of corrections and mental health.

Based on information he supplied, those areas represent 79.8 percent of the state's budget.

Hobby also said if $3 billion in spending is curtailed, it could mean a tax hike for Midland College and the Midland Independent School District.

At the end of his speech, Hobby said the citizens of Texas had options.

He said they could "do nothing," cut expenditures by $3 billion or use what he described as a "band-aid" technique.

"They (the legislators) could do part of it now and part of it later," he said, noting the state could do what it takes to "get-by."

"But do you want to pay now or pay later? If you pay later, you pay more."

He said it will cost $100 million annually to delay solving the problem.

When asked if the deficit would increase before a solution could be found, Hobby said he was unsure.

"The economy is so volatile," he said. "The revenue estimate (projected deficit) is a shot at a moving target. We have the best shot now, but it is a moving target."

In Basin, Hobby finds time to praise House Bill 72

By DOUG DRUMMOND
Assistant City Editor

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who made a Thursday stop in the Permian Basin to discuss the economy, also found time to praise House Bill 72.

In a press conference following his talk to Midland and Odessa business leaders, Hobby told reporters he favored the bill.

He also made quick plugs for a state lottery and allowing out-of-state firms to own Texas banks.

"It's mighty amazing," he quipped about no-pass, no-play, "that some consider controversial that the purpose of school was to educate."

He also said he was amazed that critics complained about teachers taking tests and making students attend a class to be eligible to pass.

"Teachers make a living giving tests," he said, "and it's amazing (there is a controversy) when they have to take them."

He said House Bill 72 was prompted by a need to re-direct educational goals in the state.

"In the 60's, the quality of public education went down, but in the 1970's the legislature pumped billions of dollars back into the system," Hobby said.

But in the 80's, Hobby said "billions of dollars" were still being pumped into the system, but it was getting less efficient.

"The bill was an emphasis change," he said. "It made the system more accountable."

Hobby called the bill a "noble" experiment by Gov. Mark White, but added it will have to be followed up to make the idea stick.

Also, when questioned by reporters about a possible state lottery, Hobby said he favored the idea.

"I think there is more and more interest in it," he said, noting it could be a $300 million revenue-producer.

He said he is unsure whether the issue will be addressed in the Legislature's special session next week.

Witness says Rehnquist used intimidation tactics

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former federal prosecutor said today he saw William H. Rehnquist take part in a Republican campaign that "was designed to reduce the number of black and Hispanic voters by confrontation and intimidation" in Phoenix, Ariz., in 1962.

The testimony by James J. Brosnahan came after Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee, conducting confirmation hearings on the man nominated to be the nation's 16th chief justice, were denied access by President Reagan to memos Rehnquist wrote as an assistant attorney general more than 15 years ago.

Brosnahan, who was assistant U.S. attorney in Phoenix in the early 1960s, specifically contradicted Rehnquist's Senate testimony in 1971 that he never challenged the qualifications of any voters in Phoenix and was merely trying to arbitrate disputes at polling places.

"This does not comport with my recollection of the events I witnessed in 1962 when Mr. Rehnquist did serve as a challenger," Brosnahan, a lawyer from San Francisco, told the committee in a prepared statement.

Brosnahan, summoned to testify today by Senate foes of Rehnquist's nomination, said he saw Rehnquist at a polling place in a predominantly black and Hispanic precinct in south Phoenix during the November 1962 elections.

"Because the challenges were so numerous, the line of voters in several precincts grew long, and some black and Hispanic voters were discouraged from joining or staying in the voters' line," he said.

"It was my opinion in 1962 that the challenging effort was designed to reduce the number of black and Hispanic voters by confrontation and intimidation," he said, and that Rehnquist was actively involved in the campaign.

In testimony at his confirmation hearings in 1971 to be associate justice of the Supreme Court, Rehnquist described his role in a GOP "ballot security" project as arbitrating disputes at polling places. "That is not what Mr. Rehnquist was doing when I saw him on election day in 1962," Brosnahan said.

The former prosecutor said he was summoned to the south Phoenix polling place to investigate complaints of illegal interference with balloting.

At the south Phoenix polling place, he said, "the complaints did involve Mr. Rehnquist's conduct."

The memos sought by committee Democrats were written by Rehnquist while he was an assistant attorney general.

STATE

"We're a little bit leery looking at one month and saying, 'We've turned the corner,' " Barnes said. "But perhaps we've seen the worst." He pointed out that second-quarter unemployment rates for 1986 are running about 2.5 percentage points ahead of 1985 figures.

Gov. Mark White called the news "a positive sign" toward recovery for the state, one he hopes will repeat itself through the fall. "I am concerned about the great number of Texans who continue to be dramatically impacted by the foreign manipulation of this nation's vital oil industry," White said.

The number of Texans employed in July hit 7.5 million, up from June's 7.29 million. The number filing for unemployment benefits drpped from 906,800 to 773,500.

"Given the current state of the state's economy, that would represent a fairly substantial jump in employment," Barnes said. "We're having trouble now trying to substantiate where that came from."

When compared to the 11 most populous states, Texas moved from last place in June to tied with Michigan for last this month. The Texas unemployment rate has crept steadily upward all year, except for a "statistically insignificant" 0.3-percentage-point decline from February to March, Barnes said.

The U.S. Department of Labor Statistics reported Friday morning that the nation's unemployment rate declined from 7.1 percent in June to 6.9 percent in July. The U.S. Department of Commerce also reported some favorable signs among their leading economic indicators.

OIL

Congressional friends of the oil and gas industry are most anxious, however, about the possibility that Senate conferees might give up its postion on "tax shelters" for investors in oil activities.

The Senate bill would create a new class of passive losses in cases where an investor in an oil or gas drilling enterprise has a working interest in the partnership, defined as some liability beyond his original investment.

Passive losses created by such deductions as the expensing of intangible drilling costs would still be permitted for working-interest partners.

The House offer, described as a "comprehensive offer," would delete the definition for working interest owners in the passive loss area, according to lobbyists and congressional sources who had access to details leaking out of the House Democrats' documents.

Carl Moody with the Independent Petroleum Association in Washington said the House proposal "sounds like it is totally unacceptable."

He conceded that the response to the House offer by Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and leader of the Senate conferees "is a major concern.

"We don't know how strong he is on our issues," Moody said. "There is no reason to believe he will be strong."

The oil and gas industry can count four strong friends among 9 Senate conferees — Sens. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, Russel Long, D-La., Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., and Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan. "But we don't know at what point they could simply be outvoted."

"We're going to take a hit; no question about it," said one Texas staff man. "The question is, how big?"

If the Senate takes an unmovable position on some issues — for example, favorable treatment to the oil and gas industry — Rostenkowsky at some point might gather his cards and walk away from the table, ending the possibility of a major tax overhaul in this session of Congress.

President Reagan has made tax reform his No. 1 priority for his second term, and would be extremely reluctant to see it slip away at this point.

Early today, Treasury Secretary James Baker, formerly a Houston lawyer close to the oil and gas industry, described by one Texas Republican as "the best friend we have in the administration except for Vice President Bush," met with the Republican Oil and Gas Task Force.

Rep. Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo, who chaired the meeting, said in an interview the Republicans were not successful in an attempt to persuade Baker to say the president would veto a tax reform bill that damaged the oil and gas industry. But he characterized the session as "a good meeting."

Others at the meeting said Baker gave some "fairly ironclad assurances" that the administration would support retaining current law on tax preferences to the oil industry.

The House package would deny tax deferred Individual Retirement Accounts to workers also covered by pension plans, but only for married couples with incomes of more than $50,000 and single taxpayers with incomes of more than $30,000. As it cleared the floor, the House version retained full deductibility of IRA's, but the Senate's version was near the new House offer.

The IRA provision is one of the most controversial elements of the tax reform legislation.

Senate conferees, even before seeing the House plan, feared it raised taxes on business too severely, risking a further slowdown of the already stagnant economy.

The Senate earlier this week offered to raise business taxes by about $27 billion, in Addition to the $93 billion hike alreadyin the Senate bill.

WINDFALL

Opponents said it would be costly to New England states, which import large quantities of oil, and hurt industries that depend on petroleum.

White said it was still necessary to impose an oil import fee.

The windfall tax repeal, he said, would have no effect until oil was again at $22 a barrel.

The governor said that when he was attorney general he had won a lawsuit against the tax but it had been reversed by efforts by the Republican adminstration. He took a jab at former Gov. Bill Clements, his GOP challenger.

"I thought he had a lot of influence with the administration. He was governor at the time that I won the lawsuit. If he had done his job then, they wouldn't have to go back and repeal it."

Clements could not be reached for comment Thursday night.

His press secretary, Reggie Bashur, said White's criticism "borders on the ridiculous."

"If Mark White had any kind of relationship with the Reagan Administration, Texas would be a lot better off. What kind of a spectacle is it when the governor of Texas cannot get himself invited to a White House summit meeting on oil?

"Mark White has not been a friend to the Texas energy industry," Bashur said.

Bentsen said the repeal measure will go to the House.

"I'm concerned about what the chairman of the committee will do in that regard. I hope that it will get the kind of support that it deserves. It's going to be a tough fight."

OPEC

Lukman refused to say which two countries refused to promise voluntary cuts. The sources identified them as Iran and Iraq, which have been at war for nearly six years and need oil revenues to finance the fighting.

The OPEC president also refused to specify how much each country was willing to cut back.

Iran's deputy chief delegate, Hossein Kazempour, said Saudi Arabia, OPEC's largest producer, pledged to cut output by 800,000 barrels a day.

Kazempour said the pledge was based on Saudi Arabia's declared daily output of 5.4 million barrels a day. But the Iranian delegate said Saudi Arabia's actual output was close to 6 million barrels a day, a figure published earlier this week by the Middle East Economic Survey.

According to one high-ranking OPEC source who spoke on condition of anonymity, Kuwait pledged to cut its production by 350,000 barrels to 1.25 million barrels a day, while Nigeria was ready to go down to 1.5 million barrels daily, a decrease of 175,000 barrels.

Saudi Arabia and Kuwait got most of the blame for creating the current oil glut by boosting their production.

The new quotas committee began meeting privately with delegations Thursday.

Education groups will push tax hike to avoid reform cuts

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN (AP) — The state's major education groups will push for a tax hike if it is needed to avoid cuts in public school reform measures, says an official of the Texas Elementary Principals and Supervisors Association.

Brad Duggan said TEPSA and other education groups are preparing a "united position" to present to legislators when they meet in special session next week to work on the projected $3.5 billion state budget deficit.

Duggan made the comments Thursday at a news conference at which his organization released survey results showing that elementary school administrators are pleased with the results of the 1984 school reforms.

"To retreat now would be to undermine the whole focus of the reforms. It takes a long time to restructure an education program and a long time to see results of new emphasis in programs," said Duggan.

Gov. Mark White, who called the special session that begins Wednesday, has said no cuts should be made that would harm the education reforms.

Duggan said, "All of the education associations will support whatever taxes are necessary to maintain this commitment.

"The education associations have met and will be releasing information about a united position for this special session that will deal with a united position in regard to change and a united position in regard to raising dollars," he said at a Capitol news conference.

Duggan would not discuss specifics of the program. Brad Ritter, a Texas State Teachers Association spokesman, said his organization has participated in talks with other education associations. But Ritter also would not release specifics of the program.

Survey results released at the news conference showed heavy support among elementary school principals and administrators for the reforms now in place. For example, 95 percent of them support the 22-student maximum for classes in Kindergarten through second grade.

Togetherness, tantalizing food key to family's business success

By BILL BROCATO

NEDERLAND, Texas (AP) — As Albert Ramirez neared his 40th birthday, his thoughts turned to his family and the wonderful years they shared.

Recalling those years, Ramirez remembers asking himself a question: What happens to my family if I die?

Ramirez became concerned that the savings he had accumulated as a commercial artist from 1946 to 1960 would not reach very far if his income was lost.

He considered investing in more life insurance.

But another question came to mind: I want to do more with my family while I live and what if I live to be 100 years old?

Ramirez, now 64, says those two questions helped him make a choice that has sustained him and his wife, his children and his children's children for 26 years.

As easily as Ramirez lays brush to canvas, he switched careers in midlife, withdrawing nearly all of his savings to open a new concept in Mexican restaurants: a drive-in, convenient fast-food service.

He laughs, rubbing his chin as he modestly compares his idea to contemporary Mexican fast-food franchises.

"I never thought about franchising or selling my idea. All I wanted was to do well enough to support my family and give them some kind of guarantee for their futures if anything happened to me," he says.

The Ramirez family restaurant, Taco Rey, began in Port Arthur with two skillets, a couple of pots and pans and a lot of desire.

Ramirez's wife, Cora, casts a smile that could warm a chilly Gulf Coast breeze. She remembers how she used to prepare her meals with a skillet and kept beans cooking at home on the stove while the family slept.

She picks up a cup of hot coffee. She takes a sip and sets the cup on the table before continuing her tale.

"We talked about opening a restaurant a few times. He (Albert) always said my cooking was good enough to sell. So we decided to give it a try," she says.

They were not prepared for the response they received.

"There were cars parked all over the place and down around the block. We were the only people offering a drive-in Mexican food restaurant in the area. And Cora's recipes for taco reys, what the people call a burrito today, were homecooked. Something that satisfied everybody," he says.

As their business grew, Albert and Cora were spending more hours at the restaurant. Because of the children, Albert added a room to the side of their restaurant — a place where the children could do their homework, rest and watch a little television.

When the children reached their teens, it seemed only natural that they would join the restaurant staff.

Delores Ramirez-Delgadillo, 31, who acts as manager now that the restaurant has relocated to Nederland, says "It never was a forced thing. We always wanted to work together and be together. It's family effort and we all are ready to do whatever needs to be done."

Delores laughs, her taffy-brown eyes sparkling from an unpleasant memory softened by the passing years.

"I can remember the time all of us came down with the flu. Mom was sick, I was sick, some of our help was sick. Dad had to cook and do everything," she says.

Albert adds, "That's the way it is around here. Everybody pitches in and everybody knows everybody's job."

As the noon hour nears, the pace quickens and customers flow through the front door.

The wood frame house, now converted into a restaurant with its own room for the grandchildren out back, is a Ramirez original sculpture, something created from bits and pieces of local history he has saved and cherished.

The hand railings were saved from the Port Aurthur train depot built in 1890. A small ceiling fan from the Goodhue Hotel in Port Arthur hangs just inside the front door.

The age-stained, wood walls and shelves are decorated with pictures, postcards and old movie posters. Visitors walking into the spacious rooms and tall ceilings of the restaurant are greeted with a mixture of the nostalgic aromas of yesterday and the "sense-sational" odors of today's refried beans, tacos and pots of simmerhng chili. Other family members, a daughter, Toni Ramirez-DeVillier, her husband, Kenny DeVillier, and their children, Stacy, 14, and Jason, 12, are busy filling large glass mugs of iced tea, placing warmed taco chips and dishes filled with spicy sauce on tables as each guest is seated.

Cora eases in and out of the kitchen. A cook without an apron, Stacy teases her because she looks so fresh with no evidence of spilled food platters or ladels of sauce on her clothes.

Delores greets her guests, ushers them to a table and listens to a little friendly teasing.

Someone asks, "How's the tacos?"

Delores laughs and replies, "About as good as the other 3,000 other tacos we sold yesterday."

David Crosby says he's quit drug habit, may be leaving Huntsville for California

David Crosby

HOUSTON (AP) — Rock star David Crosby may be leaving his prison cell in Huntsville and living in California soon, but only if the California Department of Corrections approves his parole application.

Crosby, 44, told the Houston Chronicle that he has kicked his 10-year drug habit and wants out of prison to pursue his musical career.

"It's either drugs or my life," Crosby told the Chronicle during a interview Wednesdy at a TDC Wynne Unit visiting room.

"It had gotten to the point where if I continued with the drugs, then that means no more music, no more of my daughter and no more of my life," he said. "I'm off the drugs."

California's prison spokesman Jack Corrie said the department received Crosby's application for a parole transfer Wednesday. Los Angeles parole officials now have 30 days to investigate Crosby's parole plans and decide whether the singer is a good risk.

"They will be checking out the program, where he is going to live, where he is going to work and whether he has family support," Corrie said.

Crosby could be released in the next two years if his Texas parole is approved by California officials where the musician is on parole, spokesman Mike Roach of the parole board said. The release has been approved by Texas officials, he said.

The singer is serving a five-year Texas sentence for a 1983 conviction of cocaine and possession of a firearm. He was arrested after a performance at a Dallas nightclub.

Crosby was a member of Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young, a group which gained fame when it released the antiwar song, "Ohio," several weeks after the May 4, 1970, shootings at Kent State University where four students were killed during a protest.

However, the rising tide of drugs, mostly cocaine and heroin, washed away a once bright career and pushed Crosby to the brink of death.

He walked away from expensive drug treatment hospitals six times before a judge sent him to the Dallas County Jail last November.

There, Crosby told the Chronicle he went cold turkey in a segregation cell.

"It was a dirty little closet with a steel shelf, and I was very sick," he said.

He doesn't fault Dallas County officials for sending him to prison.

"I gave them enough ammunition," he said. "I screwed up royally."

District Attorney Henry Wade "made it clear that money, position, fame would not get you out of a situation," Crosby said. "The truth is now, that I don't like being here, but it's had a beneficial effect."

Crosby now works the morning shift as a fabric cutter at the inmate mattress factory near the Wynne Unit. During the afternoons, he plays guitar and piano with an inmate band.

The rock star said he was happy to be reunited with a guitar which he had not been allowed to play in the Dallas jail.

Cocaine can kill first time says expert at workshop

AUSTIN (AP) — Cocaine is sufficiently potent to kill healthy, first-time users, an expert who has studied the drug and its effects for many years said at a workshop sponsored by the Texas Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse.

"The healthiest heart in the world can fail with the use of cocaine. It can alter the electrical systems in both the brain and heart by increasing the body's adrenaline supply, which can cause the heart to beat wildly or stop entirely," said Dr. David Smith.

Smith, the founder and director of the Haight-Ashbury Medical Clinics in San Francisco, spoke at the workshop Thursday.

Potent cocaine that produces quick effects is the biggest threat to the brain and heart, according to Smith. He said chronic users develop severe paranoia, schizophrenia, loss of sleep and other problems.

Paper rifled for clues

AUSTIN (AP) — Typewriter ribbons were confiscated and type samples taken in an investigation to find the author of an anonymous letter to the Houston Post that was critical of Public Utility Commissioner Jo Campbell,

Ms. Campbell called it a "personnel matter" and declined to discuss details.

"It was brought to the commission's attention that there was a possibility that someone was misusing state property," Ms. Campbell said.

"Certainly, I wasn't involved in" conducting the investigation, she said.

The Post on Thursday reported that "high-level sources at the PUC" said the investigation was conducted at Ms. Campbell's instruction one evening this spring by her administrative assistant.

Ms. Campbell would not confirm that the letter sparked the inquiry.

"You're involved in a personnel action that was a concern to the commission. We have a legitimate right to investigate it and other than that I can't comment. No action was taken. The only thing you have a right to know is if we took some action," Ms. Campbell told the newspaper.

Ms. Campbell, 54, was appointed to the three-member panel that regulates Texas utilities last November by Gov. Mark White. Before taking the post, she was an assistant attorney general.

Boys home sale postponed

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox has postponed the auction of a Tarrant County church's home for boys in order to prevent the sale of the church building.

A Tuesday auction of Community Baptist Church property had been scheduled to cover fines ordered for church officials who have refused to get a state license for the boys home in Forest Hill.

The Rev. W.N. Otwell, the church's leader, has said the license is an improper state infringement on religious freedom. But a state district court and an appeals court have ordered the school to get a license or close.

Hobby names Edwards

AUSTIN (AP) — Sen. Chet Edwards, D-Duncanville, has been named chairman of the Senate Nominations Committee by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

Edwards replaces Sen. Ed Howard, D-Texarkana, who has announced he is resigning his Senate seat to become a lobbyist.

The committee reviews all nominations submitted for Senate approval by the governor.

Senate wrangles over bill raising debt ceiling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, in a marathon session lasting until early today, voted to repeal the oil windfall profits tax, give Social Security recipients cost-of-living increases and fight money laundering.

The measures were all attachments to a bill needed to increase the national debt, and more were being added today.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole said the bill was so loaded that Congress may now need to pass a separate, temporary increase.

Congress has just two weeks left before its Labor Day recess. Although the House has already agreed to a new debt ceiling of $2.323 trillion, a $244 billion debt increase, the Senate amendments could tie up the bill in House-Senate negotiations.

"It's possible there could be a compromise" with the House, Dole said today. "But failing that, I suppose we could have a temporary extension (of the debt ceiling) for 30 days until we come back."

Failure to pass the debt increase before the recess could push the government into a default. The Treasury is bumping up against its current credit ceiling of $2.079 trillion and says it needs new borrowing by Sept. 2 to cover the government's obligations.

During the 16½-hour-long session that started Thursday, the lawmakers first rejected, 69-30, an attempt to abolish the entire Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing scheme. But they then turned to amendments far from that topic — including some that could drive up deficits:

— The fiscal 1987 budget was waived, 55-40, to allow spending of between $300 million and $1.5 billion on farmers in the Southeast, who have been hit by a severe drought. But a final vote on the farm plan, similar to legislation approved by the House Agriculture Committee on Wednesday, was delayed until later today after Sen. John H. Chafee, R-R.I., threatened extended debate to block it.

That plan would give farmers free feed for their livestock, compensation for drought-induced erosion and crop losses, and allow dairy farmers to delay making payments to a price-support program.

The budget was waived despite assurances from Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, that Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng would announce today similar initiatives by the administration.

Lyng did announce drought-aid measures, and Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, said he understood the administration plan would be done within existing spending limits.

— The Senate voted to repeal the windfall oil profits tax, which was imposed during the Carter administration in reaction to high prices by major oil companies. An attempt to block the repeal was defeated 51-47, and the amendment then passed by voice vote.

The tax, actually levied against oil produced and not on profits, has not been collected recently because oil prices have dropped below the tax threshold. Oil state senators said it should be repealed to eliminate wasteful paperwork, but opponents said they were confident the House wouldn't go along.

— The Senate voted to give Social Security recipients a cost-of-living increase on Jan. 1, by repealing a rule delaying the boost for a year unless inflation is 3 percent or more.

The Social Security payroll tax would automatically go up as the benefits increase. Recipients can expect about a 2 percent increase, according to budget estimates. Similar legislation is pending in the House.

— By a vote of 98-0, the lawmakers approved an amendment to increase the penalties for individuals and financial institutions that engage in money laundering.

The legislation, approved earlier by the Senate Judiciary Committee, also would change privacy laws so domestic and foreign banks could more easily tell law enforcement authorities when they suspect money laundering has occurred.

— A proposed $10-a-barrel fee on imported oil was rejected 82-15, despite arguments from oil state supporters that it would protect domestic producers and raise money for reducing the deficit.

Opponents said it would hurt other industries, which depend on oil products, to compete against foreign companies.

— An amendment requiring the Reagan administration in 1987 to give farmers advances on their income subsidies when they sign up for crop programs at planting time was approved 91-7. Such payments normally are not made until after harvest.

Negotiators agree on 'Superfund' plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional "Superfund" negotiators are agreed on an $8.5 billion battle plan to revive the nation's war on toxic waste, but the major question of who pays for the five-year effort remains unanswered.

After five months of intense bargaining, House and Senate conferees late Thursday approved compromise legislation to strengthen and expand a toxic cleanup program beset in 1983 by scandals over its administration by the Environmental Protection Agency and since last October by a money shortage.

The bill, hailed by environmental groups and EPA Administrator Lee Thomas, would increase Superfund's spending more than fivefold from the $1.6 billion budgeted in its first five years.

And to counter criticism that less than two dozen chemical waste sites have been cleaned and that some of them are still leaking toxics, the bill requires the EPA to begin at least 375 cleanups through 1991 and make sure the results meet health standards set by a variety of federal laws.

To minimize the shifting of toxics from one dump to another, the bill requires the EPA to use permanent treatment techniques where feasible.

The legislation also creates a $500,000 program to begin attacking the growing problem of leaking underground fuel storage tanks, which threaten water supplies, and to require large chemical makers and users to tell the public about toxics routinely escaping from their plants.

And to close a major loophole in the original 1980 Superfund law, the compromise will place toxics created by federal agencies — principally the Defense and Energy departments — under Superfund.

But before the stepped-up battle against toxic waste can begin, another group of negotiators must settle the basic question of who will pay: taxpayers, the oil and petrochemical industries, all large manufacturers or a combination of them.

The Superfund tax package will be written by members of the House Ways and Means and Senate Finance committees, many of whom are now busy hammering out the big tax-overhaul bill.

Superfund lost its main revenue source last Oct. 1, when a tax on basic petrochemicals expired. Since then, the cleanup effort has been running at about half-speed and faces further slowdown without new money, according to Thomas.

A Ways and Means aide, speaking on condition he not be identified by name, said Thursday that he doesn't think the tax end of Superfund can be completed before Congress begins a recess Aug. 15.

"I don't see how we can do Superfund right now," he said. "The idea of breaking off the tax (overhaul) conference for a substantial amount of time doesn't appear to be an option."

But one of the Senate tax-writers, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, had a different idea about Superfund. "There's no reason we should delay it. We ought to resolve it before the recess."

Thomas said that unless the Superfund bill is finished and signed into law within a month, he will have to begin notifying cleanup contractors they will be off the payroll in October.

"We need money by Sept. 1," Thomas said. "I just need some money."

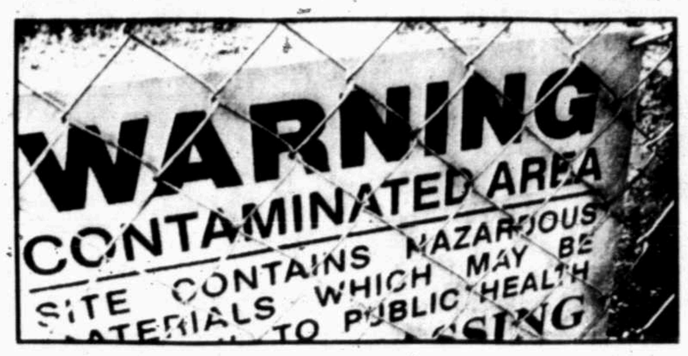
A coalition of environmental groups that was pushing for an even stronger bill said the compromise will provide "a shot in the arm" to Superfund, but they reserved final judgment until they see how the tax package is structured.

The chief Senate negotiator, Sen. Robert Stafford, R-Vt., said the legislation "will advance this nation's efforts to contain the threat posed by poisonous chemicals."

Thomas said that "it's a good, strong bill. We're ending up with a bill we can administer."

Rep. James Florio, D-N.J., author of the original Superfund law, said the compromise contains much of what he and other toxic hardliners wanted and fulfilled "our goal of putting teeth into the law."

One of the key House negotiators, Rep. Dennis Eckart, D-Ohio, said the compromise "addresses all the fundamental questions of Superfund. The public came out ahead. I think you've seen the last major rewriting of Superfund this century. In the future, it will be fine tuning."



Superfund

■ Original legislation: Passed by Congress Dec. 11, 1980; provided for $1.6 billion in federal funding over five years

■ Intent: To make hazardous waste dumpers pay for their mistakes while cleaning up dump sites close to populated areas

■ Funding: 86% from taxes on hazardous waste producers and haulers, 14% from federal revenues; states pay 10% of cleanup project costs when federal government has to conduct cleanup

■ How it works: Government asks polluters to clean up their toxic waste; if the polluters refuse, the federal Environmental Protection Agency may remove the hazard and sue the polluters for three times the cost of the cleanup

■ Sites: 5,200 have had on-site investigations; 850 sites are on national priorities list, of which 100 are in "planning and design" phase and 120 have cleanups underway; some 600 sites have received "short-term emergency" cleanups, of which about 300 are considered no longer hazardous

Senate panel votes for South African sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted 14-2 today in favor of sanctions against South Africa's white-minority government.

Included would be a ban on new U.S. investments and bank loans, along with a prohibition against importing coal and uranium from South Africa into the United States.

In addition, the committee added a ban on the importation of diamonds and strategic minerals to a list of options available to President Reagan one year from now if the South African government has failed to make significant progress toward dismantling its system of racial apartheid.

Only Sens. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Larry Pressler, R-S.D., voted against the final sanctions package.

The committee chairman, Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., said he realizes that the Reagan administration may be unhappy with the sanctions bill on first reading.

"And I think that on the fourth or fifth reading he will be quite enthusiastic," said Lugar, without explaining why he is optimistic.

Lugar had resisted attempts to make the bill so strong that moderate senators would shy away from it.

He stressed the necessity of building the largest possible number of votes in favor of the measure to reach the two-thirds majority needed to override a presidential veto.

The committee acted after rejecting a series of amendments offered by Helms that underscored his opposition to sanctions and his insistence that by hurting the South African economy the committee risked "handing over South Africa to the Soviet Union."

But Lugar said the sanctions were well chosen to send a signal to South Africa's white leaders that the United States expects negotiations to take place with black leaders to point the country toward a non-racial democracy.

The committee strengthened conditions under which the sanctions could be lifted or modified.

It did so by making one sanction — the release of black nationalist leader Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners — mandatory.

And it said the South African government must meet three of four other requirements, all aimed at dismantling the apartheid system and a genuine commitment to negotiations.

Lugar's original draft bill had exempted from the sanctions list such strategic materials as chromium, cobalt, manganese and platinum. Instead, the bill called on the president to prepare a plan to reduce U.S. dependence on imports of these South African minerals.

But Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, contended it was "hypocritical" of the United States to exempt such items and the committee sustained his position.

The committee took three separate roll calls on another Murkowski amendment that would have eliminated as an option a year from now the possible termination of U.S. military aid to nations which circumvent the arms embargo against South Africa and covertly supply it with military equipment.

Although no senator offered an explanation, the provision appeared to be aimed at Israel, a major beneficiary of U.S. military aid and a nation that has long been accused of selling military equipment to South Africa.

Anglican envoy waits 'anxiously' to hear from hostages' captors

LONDON (AP) — An Anglican Church envoy today said the pope and archbishop of Canterbury want him to return to Lebanon to resume negotiations with Moslem zealots who freed the Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco but still hold other Americans.

"I now wait anxiously to hear from the captors," said envoy Terry Waite. Waite spoke at a news conference in London, and was accompanied by Jenco, who was kidnapped on Jan. 8, 1985, and freed Saturday after 1½ years in captivity.

Jenco, a 51-year-old Roman Catholic priest from Joliet, Ill., then departed for Washington to deliver a message from his former captors to President Reagan.

Earlier this week, Jenco delivered messages from his former captors to Pope John Paul II at the Vatican and Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie in London.

Waite traveled to Beirut three times last year on behalf of Runcie, the spiritual head of the Church of England, and met with representatives of Islamic Jihad, the Shiite Moslem extremist group that claimed responsibility for kidnapping Jenco and four other Americans.

"I have been asked to return to the Lebanon as soon as possible in order to take further these discussions," Waite said today.

"His holiness, the pope, and the archbishop of Canterbury would wish the captors to meet with me as soon as possible to help find a solution to the problem based on the tenets common to Islam and Christianity," Waite said.

The kidnappers are holding at least three other Americans. The group claims to have killed a fourth American hostage, but his death has not been confirmed.

Islamic Jihad has said it would not free the other hostages until Kuwait releases 17 Shiites it imprisoned for bombing the U.S. and French embassies in 1983. Kuwait has refused.

Waite said the pope and the archbishop received with "sympathy and understanding" the message from Islamic Jihad delivered by Jenco.

"It is our belief and firm hope that there can be a resolution to this longstanding problem based on religious grounds," Waite said.

He did not divulge the contents of the captors' message, but said the same message was delivered to both religious leaders.

He said Thursday that the message to Reagan was "different in character," but would not elaborate. He also refused to say whether the kidnappers had made any demands.

Jenco said he had not told Waite or anyone else what the kidnappers wanted him to tell Reagan.

Asked today whether he could resume negotiations with the kidnappers if Reagan gave no response to their message, Waite said: "I believe that it is possible given some good will all around for a religious solution to be found to the problem, yes.'

Waite traveled to Beirut after Jenco and three other American hostages wrote to Runcie, appealing for his help in gaining their freedom. Waite's last visit was just before Christmas.

Waite said Runcie approved a return trip after studying the kidnappers' message. Waite also produced a document signed by John Paul that he said gave the pontiff's approval.

The envoy again refused to discuss the role he may have had in gaining Jenco's release. However, he said Thursday that his presence in the region was "not coincidental." The envoy was in Amman, Jordan, when the priest was freed.

Jenco, who has been diagnosed as suffering from heart disease, sat slumped slightly forward at the news conference. A fellow priest supported him by the arm as he entered.

After the news conference, Jenco boarded a U.S. Air Force jet at Heathrow Airport. He was scheduled to arrive at Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington later today.

The remaining American hostages, which whom Jenco was held, are: Terry Anderson, 38, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; David Jacobsen, 55, director of the American University Hospital in Beirut; and Thomas Sutherland, 55, the university's acting dean of agriculture.

Military satellites to be launched on unmanned rockets, officials say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Military satellites will be boosted into space more often on unmanned rockets, and virtually all commercial launches may be handled by private industry due to the shuttle Challenger disaster, government officials say.

Any effort to prod private industry into the launch business, in turn, could lessen the need to build a Challenger replacement, although President Reagan has made no final decision on that, the officials added.

Significant pieces of the administration's "space recovery plan" were outlined Thursday at separate White House and Pentagon briefings.

At the Pentagon, Air Force Secretary Edward C. Aldridge unveiled a five-year, $2.6 billion recovery program that formally reverses the military's reliance on the shuttle.

"The Expendable Launch Vehicles (unmanned rockets) are going to be the workhorse from now on" for the Defense Department, Aldridge declared. "We cannot afford to rely on a single launch system."

At the White House, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said a Cabinet group had recommended the NASA space agency be barred from accepting commercial and foreign payloads when shuttle launches are resumed.

"The issue was particularly timely in anticipation — in light of the shuttle situation and the backlog of scientific and military missions...that need to be flown," Speakes said.

Speakes said private industry had expressed interest in getting into the business of launching satellites, but that there has been a reluctance "knowing that the government might remain in it."

Aldridge added the Air Force supported the idea of reducing the use of the shuttle for commercial satellites and hoped to provide incentives to industry to take over the job. As part of its own recovery plan, the Air Force is asking defense contractors to develop a new, medium-lift rocket for the military that could also be used by industry, Aldridge said.

The Air Force is prepared to cover the cost of research and development, he said, which should make it easier for private rocket manufacturers to afford the launching business.

In other shuttle developments Thursday:

— Congressional investigators disclosed that Morton Thiokol Corp. skipped three of seven mandatory safety inspections of the solid rocket motor whose explosion destroyed Challenger in January.

— The House Appropriations Committee adopted a resolution requiring the space agency to get permission from Congress before taking any people or programs away from the Johnson Space Center in Houston. The vote came after NASA Administrator James C. Fletcher announced that a proposed reorganization of the space station program — shifting part of it from Houston to the Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala. — would be put on hold for 90 days.

— Published reports indicated Lt. Gen. Forrest McCartney, chief of the Air Force Space Division in Los Angeles, will be appointed director of the Kennedy Space Center in Florida. He would replace Richard G. Smith, who leaves the center this week to become the president and chief executive of the General Space Corp.

Much of the Air Force's recovery plan discussed by Aldridge had been disclosed previously. But the secretary spent an hour providing details and repeatedly asserting that national security — the need to launch spy, weather, navigation and nuclear-launch detection satellites — is too important to maintain reliance on the shuttle.

Aldridge also made it clear that the Air Force has urged President Reagan to build a Challenger replacement. The service is not abandoning the shuttle and there will always be high-priority missions that can only be conducted by men in space, he said.

In terms of the Air Force's specific response to the Challenger disaster, Aldridge said the new shuttle spaceport at Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif., would not be activated until 1992. The Air Force had planned to activate the facility this summer.

The move probably will eliminate more than 1,000 jobs at Vandenberg, and save about $1 billion in operational expenses over the next five years, he said. It will also ensure the existing fleet of three shuttles can be used to the best effect by basing them all at Cape Canaveral, Fla., he added.

Bright light apparently resets internal clock

WASHINGTON (AP) — People who feel fuzzy, drowsy or downright sick after changing work shifts or taking long plane trips may need only to see the light — literally.

A team of Boston researchers reported today that bright light in measured doses apparently can reset the body's internal clock, providing a likely way to head off such nagging problems.

There could also be reductions in on-the-job accidents, which tend to be highest among rotating shift workers, said the study's main investigator, Dr. Charles A. Czeisler, director of the neuroendocrine laboratory at Brigham and Women's Hospital.

His team's study, published in today's edition of the journal Science, dealt with just one woman, he said. But he added in a telephone interview that he's working now to set up a field study at a factory.

Eventually at many factories, he said, "workers on rotating shifts could get therapeutic doses of bright light on the evening shift to reset their internal clocks in preparation for the next week's rotation to the night shift."

In the meantime, he said, "there's a lot of spadework we need to do."

The report in Science involves the effect of light on a person's circadian pacemaker — a mechanism located behind the optic nerve at the front of the brain that synchronizes a person's system with his or her waking, working and sleeping schedule.

It has been long assumed such synchronization is achieved by habit — through years of getting up in the morning and going to bed at night because business and social activities are set up that way.

But Czeisler and his colleagues said their study suggests the body's pacemaker has to be reset daily by the light conditions that just happen to flow from such a schedule — the sun in the morning, darkness at night — and the timing can be changed drastically by changing the light conditions.

Worth the pain

What many Americans had dreaded about the investigation into the explosion that ripped apart the space shuttle Challenger came true this week with the revelation that the spaceship's intercom recorded an utterance indicating at least some of the crew were aware of what was happening.

That, coupled with the fact that analysis of gauges on two of the emergency air packs showed some of the air had been breathed out, led investigators to ostensibly conclude the horrible: That before being swept into unconsciousness by the tremendous forces they were subjected to during and after the explosion, one or more of the shuttle crew had time — regardless how brief — to recognize that the ship was in trouble and they were doomed.

Words don't exist to adequately express the anguish of Americans over that fact. The shuttle explosion last Jan. 28th and the resulting recovery of debris and body remains from the Atlantic Ocean floor were traumatic enough. Now comes the most recent revelation and the sad saga continues.

It's all necessary, of course, but it still hurts. If this nation is to continue to have a space program, the grueling investigation must be fully conducted to determine for certain how the explosion happened and how a subsequent tragedy can be avoided.

Such an in-depth investigation naturally reveals all a program's warts and blemishes. Americans already have learned that NASA was too concerned with keeping the shuttle schedule on target, that a warning from Morton Thiokol officials that the launch shouldn't be attempted due to icy conditions went ignored and that other safety precautions such as installing parachutes on the shuttle might have proved effective in saving all or some of the seven astronauts.

The investigation won't remove all the risk from future missions. Risk is a way of life for those venturing into the new frontier of space. The astronauts accept that risk boldly, knowing that death may lie just around the corner.

The point of the ongoing investigation into the Challenger explosion is to make future flights as safe as possible for all who follow those who led the way into space.

That knowledge makes the pain of this week's revelation a little easier to bear.

Another View:
Learning to compete

The export-enhancement program, to subsidize American farm exports, is a particularly flawed part of the five-year farm bill adopted last year, and now some farm-state senators, panicked by this year's election, are seeking to make it worse by broadening its already mischievous provisions. If they have their way, the export subsidies will be extended to such nations as the Soviet Union and China, and will be used in competition with nations such as Australia and Argentina that do not subsidize their exports. Thus the disruption of the world grain market would be compounded by unfair trading practices against nations that are important friends.

Leading the legislative battle is Bob Dole, R-Kan., majority leader of the Senate. Dole seems intent on winning votes for his party in the financially troubled farm belt, and also for his 1988 presidential bid. But the shortsightedness and counterproductive elements of his proposal undermine rather than enhance the credibility of the Republicans, and do not speak well of his own judgment as a leader. Those sponsoring this maneuver do a singular disservice to the farmers whom they pretend to help, for export subsidies are a guaranteed way to weaken the very world markets that they claim to be enhancing.

In its first year the export-enhancement program has been used with discretion to avoid undercutting free-market exporters, like Australia, that do not subsidize exports. It has been used only to counter export subsidies of the European Common Market — applied for the most part to wheat, flour and other U.S. grain exports.

Dole's proposal to sell wheat to Moscow at less than American consumers pay has an additional troubling dimension. The Soviets have not been faithful to the 1983 grain-purchase agreement that set minimum purchases over a five-year period. Last year the Soviet purchases of wheat alone were more than 1 million tons below what they had promised to buy, and this year they have purchased only 153,000 tons of the minimum agreed amount of 4 million tons — indicating the virtual certainty of a shortfall when the Oct. 1 deadline comes. There is no good reason to subsidize sales to a customer already in breach of contract.

Dole and his fellow farm-state legislators sell the wisdom of the American farmer short when they think that this sort of legislation will win votes. The farmers of America know that they need exports to prosper. They have learned over the years the value of free trade. As the lower 1986 loan rates take effect, American farm prices are declining, and the Department of Agriculture forecasts even more competitive prices by next month. Effectively competing in the world, not disrupting the market with export subsidies, is the best way to improve American farm security.

Don't repeat Bolivian fiasco in Belize

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon's embarrassing foray into the Bolivian drug wars may have a silver lining after all. The fiasco was of such stunning proportions that it just might lead the White House to call off its proposed use of American troops for a similar drug bust in the tiny Caribbean country of Belize.

Jack Anderson

The Bolivian government's lack of interest in a serious effort to stamp out drugs is certainly understandable. Dope brings in billions of dollars to the poverty-stricken nation. Congressional insiders tell us the main purpose of the pre-doomed raids was to put on enough of a show to assure continued U.S. aid to Bolivia.

Tipped off well in advance by Bolivian government sources, the drug traffickers got away scot-free. The net result was an increase in anti-U.S. sentiment throughout Latin America, where the U.S.-assisted raids were regarded as just one more example of high-handed Yankee interference, or "gunship diplomacy."

Meanwhile, our associate Donald Goldberg has learned that the Reagan administration was ready to send troops into the former British colony of Belize, on the Yucatan peninsula flanked by Mexico and Guatemala at the northwestern end of the Caribbean Sea.

There's little doubt that Belize is a strategic and climatic natural for drug lords aiming at U.S. markets. It's halfway between the cocaine fields of South America and distribution points in Florida and the other Gulf Coast states. As early as the 1950s, according to one confidential Drug Enforcement Administration report, "Belize (was) used as a transit point for substantial amounts of cocaine and heroin in the international traffic."

The DEA report pointed out that "marijuana is indigenous to Belize and grows in all parts of the country." The DEA estimates that nearly 700 tons of pot were grown in Belize last year, of which 85 percent was shipped to this country.

Our sources say the idea of sending GIs into Belize was first broached at an international law enforcement conference earlier this year, and the plans were then coordinated with the U.S. Embassy in Belmopan, Belize. Whether the plans will proceed in light of the Bolivian botchup is not clear.

With any luck, the White House will call off the Belize operation. Washington's drug-busters have already stirred up enough ill will in the tiny Caribbean country by their heavyhanded tactics.

As we reported last year, a Belizean cabinet official, Joe Briceno, was lured into a DEA sting operation in Miami, arrested and convicted. He claimed he was set up by the DEA after he successfully blocked the agency's plan to spray the Belizean countryside with the herbicide paraquat to kill marijuana crops.

A more recent case has exacerbated relations with Belize even further. Last November, John Zabaneh, a Belizean traveling in Guatemala, was nabbed by a DEA agent "who wore a 'Miami Vice' cap," according to court documents. Zabaneh was strip-searched, handcuffed and flown to Houston, where he was arrested.

A U.S. magistrate found that DEA agents "did not have authority to arrest" Zabaneh in Guatemala. Furthermore, the magistrate noted, the United States has valid extradition treaties with both Guatemala and Belize — which meant the abduction was unnecessary.

Nevertheless, the magistrate ruled that a 5-year-old indictment against Zabaneh for currency violations and marijuana dealing could stand. The media and public reaction in Belize have been intense, with editors denouncing the DEA for "infringing on Belize's sovereignty." There's no telling how great the resentment would be if U.S. helicopter pilots started swooping in on Belizean marijuana fields.

MINI-EDITORIAL: Congressional leaders have made it clear that any attempt to ban advertising of tobacco products or liquor will go nowhere. Key members think stifling ads is not the way to go — and we agree. We don't encourage the advertising industry's sometimes cynical efforts to hook young people on cigarettes and booze, and we realize that advertising has less First Amendment protection than news, commentary or political speech. But it's a fine line that separates these forms of expression, and we'd just as soon not see the line blurred.

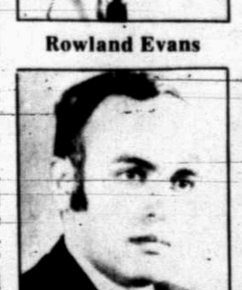
Israel's request of Bush indicates influence

WASHINGTON — Two weeks ago the Israeli Embassy delivered a secret admonition to Vice President George Bush not to visit Syria on his current Middle East trip, an unusual intrusion showing Israel's influence over U.S. policy quietly at work on decisions that U.S. diplomats insist should not be made by Israel.

Rowland Evans



Robert Novak

Bush was undecided about seeing President Hafez Assad. Abraham Tamir, director general of Prime Minister Shimon Peres' office, had earlier expressed a "personal opinion" during a visit to Bush's office on an unrelated matter that going to Damascus might be worth it.

But the Israeli Embassy takes orders from the Likud Party hard-liner, Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir, as well as the Labor Party's Peres. When word of Tamir's advice reached the embassy, the Israeli minister, Ely Rubenstein, was rushed to Bush's office within 24 hours with this word: Stay off the road to Damascus.

In retrospect, Bush's quick agreement with Rubenstein may have cost him political capital. On Saturday, the day after Bush left Washington with an eight-member "advisory group" of American Jewish leaders, Assad was credited with playing a role in gaining the release of the Rev. Lawrence Jenco. Jenco was one of five Americans seized in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley, presumably by radical pro-Iranian Shiites.

Middle East specialists here speculate that the timing of Jenco's release may have been intended to send this provocative message from Assad to Secretary of State George Shultz: Boycotting Syria will doom U.S. efforts to ease the Arab-Israeli dispute, which may be moving toward another round of warfare.

True or not, Rubenstein's visit to Bush's office and strong advice to boycott Damascus typifies what Arab critics here are now calling the "Israelization" of American policy in the Middle East.

In the case of Syria's Assad, that calls for the U.S. to continue denying the centrality of his influence and power and block any possibility of a U.S.-Syrian detente. Such a policy, following a decade of American conduct that treated Syria as one of the key players in the bloody Mideast game, began when Shultz gambled on Assad doing his bidding in 1982 — and lost.

In opposing a Bush stop in Damascus, Rubenstein said his government worried that Assad would improve his image from all the ceremonial aspects of the vice president's visit. With Syria accused by Britain of direct complicity in the aborted terrorist effort last spring to blow up an El Al airliner flying from London to Tel Aviv, the guilty Assad would unduly profit from all the publicity.

U.S. diplomats here, however, say that no proof has ever linked Assad personally to involvement in or knowledge about the El Al near-tragedy. They claim that Assad's personal liability in the affair may be roughly on a par with Prime Minister Peres' personal liability for Jonathan Pollard, the confessed Israeli spy. The Israeli government, contending that Pollard was recruited and bossed by a rogue spy ring beyond the government's control, asserts it had nothing to do with Pollard. That view has not been publicly disputed by Shultz.

Assad's political strategy in demonstrating the centrality of his influence in the Arab world has been on full view the past few weeks. In addition to taking at least partial credit for Father Jenco's release, he has moved powerful armed contingents into Lebanon to assert his claims there; he is being politically wooed by Jordan's King Hussein, who used to be America's most loyal Arab ally (and argued for Bush to visit Damascus), and he took the lead in belittling the "summit" between Peres and King Hassan of Morocco, probably causing Hassan to resign as head of the Arab League.

But policy-makers here, tuned in to the understandably one-sided view of the Middle East held by Israel, seem unimpressed. There were few raised eyebrows among Shultz's top Mideast aides when the Jerusalem Post recently editorialized that despite Pollard's spying and the U.S. investigations of other Israeli operations here, "Israel is entitled to special consideration from the U.S., even to the extent of benignly overlooking borderline Israeli activities in America."

The Jerusalem Post is esteemed both here and in Israel as an honest carrier of news and opinion. Its appeal for the U.S. to overlook "borderline" operations against America's own interest would have been unthinkable before the Reagan administration. So, too, would have been an unsought embassy intervention at so high a place as the vice president's office, with instructions from Jerusalem on where to go and whom to see in the vast land populated by enemies of Israel.

CHARLEY REESE
Previous 'oil crisis' predictions off base

I don't know Werner Meyer, executive editor of the Dartmouth Review, but if I did, I'm sure I'd like him. He has a devilish sense of humor which he knows how to use for the public good.

Charley Reese

Meyer has done what politicians and experts hate more than having lockjaw and seasickness at the same time. He has gone back and dredged up their predictions about the energy crisis.

In an appropriately titled article, "Snake Oil Salesmen," Meyer has collected all the wrong predictions and ridiculous claims made during the late 1970s and early 1980s about the oil crisis and published them in the summer issue of Public Policy, the Heritage Foundation's lively quarterly.

Bear in mind that oil imports have declined, gasoline prices have gone down, OPEC is in disarray, oil supplies are up, and oil prices are down. Bear in mind what you are paying for a gallon of gasoline right now.

Kenneth Arrow, professor of economics, Stanford University, confidently said in 1980: "We're heading into a world of considerably higher prices. There will be major impact on housing by 1983, and I'd be surprised if gasoline is less than $2 per gallon plus whatever inflation adds."

Guess he's surprised.

Also in 1980, John Matill, editor of Technology Review, said, "World oil prices have only one way to go in the next decade — up, and probably sharply so."

The Central Intelligence Agency, which can't even figure out the United States, much less the Soviet Union, said in a 1977 study by its learned experts: "U.S. imports will run some 10 million barrels per day in 1980 and could reach 12 to 15 million barrels per day in 1985."

In 1985 the U.S. imported 5.5 million barrels a day.

Jimmy Carter, who was not only wrong but always inclined to blame the American people, said in 1979: "We're going to have less oil; we're going to pay more for it. Those are the facts. They are unpleasant facts. And so far, the American people ...have refused to accept that simple fact."

Lester Brown, of the Chicken Little Worldwatch Institute, said in 1980: "It would be prudent for any American contemplating the purchase of a new car to assume that gas will cost $2 per gallon within a few years and $3 per gallon during the vehicle's lifetime. The day when a tankful of gasoline costs $50 is probably not far off."

Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., and a champion at being wrong on almost every issue, said in 1981, "I believe that decontrol (of domestic oil prices) will prove to be worse than the disease of oil addiction."

Senators Dale Bumpers and Edward Kennedy were screaming for gas rationing as the only solution.

Walter J. Levy, an oil consultant, said in The New York Times in 1979: "A conservative assessment would project the non-communist world's oil consumption as likely to advance from 51 million barrels daily in 1977 to 62 million per day in 1985."

Actually, in 1985, the 24 leading non-communist countries had cut their consumption to 34.2 million barrels per day.

A lot of what passes for argument is just special pleading and rationalization. Those opposed to decontrol of oil prices, for example, predicted apocalypse.

A lot of experts know they don't know anything about the future but feel compelled to predict it anyway. Notice in those quotations how many hedge-words are used: probably, likely, could, may, might.

Watch for hedge words. They usually mean that the speaker or writer really doesn't know but doesn't want to say so. It is hard to keep your status as an expert if you keep saying, "Gee, I don't know."

Vermont school has no apologies for cost

BENNINGTON, Vt. (AP) — When Bennington College's interim president John Williams II learned the school once again had been labeled the most expensive in the country, he smiled and shrugged.

He has heard it all before. He has explained it all before.

"Bennington is a school that must charge substantial amounts for the program it offers, and no apologies for that," Williams said Thursday.

According to The College Board's annual survey of college costs, Bennington will cost an estimated $18,350 this academic year — the highest of the nation's more than 3,400 colleges and universities.

Bennington is followed by Barnard College, $18,030; Brandeis University, $17,815; Princeton University, $17,805; Yale University, $17,750; Massachusetts Institute of Technology, $17,700; Harvard and Radcliffe Colleges, $17,695; Sarah Lawrence College, $17,285; Dartmouth College, $17,285; and Columbia University, Columbia College, $17,175.

The College Board survey found the average cost of a year at a private college will top $10,000 this fall for the first time.

Average college expenses will go up 6 percent in the 1986-87 academic year, the sixth straight year such costs at both private and public institutions will rise faster than the overall inflation rate.

The College Board survey found that at four-year private colleges, average costs will rise 6 percent to $10,199 for resident students, and $8,809 for commuters. Two-year private colleges will also be up an average 6 percent to $8,056 for residents, $6,757 for commuters.

At four-year public colleges, costs will rise an average 5 percent this fall — to $5,604 for resident students, and $4,467 for commuting students. At two-year public colleges, costs will go up an average 5 percent, to $3,768 for commuters.

Bennington College, with its 580 students, is tucked between two ribbons of mountains in southwestern Vermont.

Its emphasis is on the individual — not only the students, but the teachers, who personally guide each student through four years.

"The great thing is they're available all the time," said Julia Rosenblum, a senior from New York City majoring in drama and literature. "A lot of them live on campus, so if you have a problem late at night you can knock on their doors."

Also important at the school is learning for the sake of learning. There are no grades; students are evaluated.

The $18,350 cost includes $13,720 for tuition, $2,980 for room and board, $290 in fees and an estimated $1,360 for books, supplies, transportation and personal expenses.

The cost is high at Bennington because "it's a very labor-intense place, a people place," Williams said. About 42 percent of the annual budget is spent on faculty and staff. The student-faculty ratio is an unusually low 8-to-1.

Bennington also lacks a large endowment. Since its founding in 1932, officials have regarded such gifts as an unwanted influence.

Williams said it was only recently, because of soaring costs, that the college began to solicit and collect donations from former students, who are small in number and predominantly female. Bennington became co-educational in 1969.

About 55 percent of all students receive college grants that average $8,200 — close to half the cost of attending Bennington College, said Financial Aid Director Joan Goodrich.

She said her fear is that prospective students will shy away from Bennington because of its cost. "You see a $16,000 bill, and the wall goes up," she said.

Ms. Goodrich said she sent letters to students this year advising them that financial aid is available. "We want a mixed student body. We don't want a reputation as an elitist, expensive school," she said.

Drought could last into '87, expert says

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — The drought that has withered crops in the sun-baked Southeast could linger into 1987, according to a scientist who blames the lack of rain on sunspot activity in the 1970s.

But one expert, while agreeing that there appears to be a correlation between sunspots and drought, disputes the theory posed by Douglas A. Paine that the connection can be used to forecast dry spells.

Paine, professor of atmospheric science at Cornell University, said the drought that has caused more than $2.3 billion in farm damage was in the making in the late 1970s, when there were an unusually high number of sunspots.

A record number of sunspots occurred in 1958, about four years before a drought in the Northeast, Paine said in a telephone interview Thursday.

"I think it is more than coincidence that here in the '80s that drought again has come into the eastern United States four years after the second strongest period of sunspot maximum on record (in 1979)," he said.

Sunspots, which occur in approximately 11-year cycles, are colossal magnetic storms raging within the hot gases shrouding the sun. The storms send out extra ultraviolet light to Earth.

Increased ultraviolet light creates more ozone and heat in the stratosphere, an atmospheric layer about 30 miles above Earth. Paine said the extra heat decreases the exchange of air between the stratosphere and lower atmospheric levels, reducing the number and intensity of major storms.

The drought that struck the Northeast in the mid-1960s ended during the fall of 1966, about two years after the number of solar disturbances was at a minimum, Paine said.

The current cycle reached its trough in 1985, suggesting the drought that has plagued various portions of the United States this decade would give way to normal conditions in 1987, he said.

"It seems to make sense that sunspot cycles and the Earth's climate have a relationship," he said. "But most meteorologists want to work from factors contained in the lower atmosphere and oceans. They are not prone to look elsewhere for factors that determine the Earth's weather."

Murray Mitchell, a retired National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration scientist who has spent the last decade studying the effect of the solar magnetic cycle on weather, is among those who look elsewhere.

Mitchell looked at tree rings in conifers in the West and found a 22-year rhythmic tendency going back to 1600 A.D. that suggests a relationship between the sun and drought.

"I've found that the relationship is so vague, that you can't use it in making an exact forecast," Mitchell said.

Researchers found that the time most favorable for a prolonged drought to occur in the West was every second period of minimal sunspot activity in the 11-year cycle, he said.

Two groups are studying whether a similar trend can be found in trees in the East. If so, Mitchell said, scientists would expect an Eastern drought when the likelihood is lowest of a dry period in the West.

Migrant workers forgotten casualties of cruel drought

WASHINGTON (AP) — The drought in the Southeast is taking a substantial but largely unnoticed toll on thousands of migrant farm workers who subsist each summer by following the harvest northward in search of work.

"It's terrible," said Linda Brown, a 28-year-old worker who travels each summer with her 15-year-old son from Florida to Georgia, South Carolina and Delaware to harvest watermelons and other crops.

"The corn is turning brown and just wilted all over. People are here to do the work, and if they don't get a job, they're hungry. There's a lot of people out there in the same position I'm in. It's nobody's fault. We're just caught in the middle."

Ms. Brown appeared with David Cain, another migrant worker, and his family at a hearing Thursday before the House Select Committee on Hunger to plead for better nutrition, health and education programs for the estimated 800,000 people who make a living each year by harvesting crops from farm to farm.

"Thousands of migrants are without work or waiting for work in crowded, often unsanitary migrant camps because of the crisis in agriculture," said Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Texas, chairman of the committee.

Cain, 52, said his family is fortunate to be able to live rent-free, at least for now, in housing provided by a farmer near Bridgeville, Del. But he must borrow money for food, and can't afford the gasoline it would take to drive around and look for work while the family waits for the apple harvest.

He said he normally relies on harvest work to save a few hundred dollars over a summer to help pay winter living expenses at his house in Sebring, Fla.

"The drought's made it real bad. Just about everything's gone. Some places we didn't even stop in South Carolina. We'd stop to get gas and I'd ask them, and they'd say, 'There ain't no work here.'"

Eva Teig, secretary of the Virginia Department of Human Services, said the drought is wiping out many of the small farmers who provide jobs for the migrants. One Eastern Shore county has been hit by drought five times in the last nine years, she said.

"It is easy to understand why the number of migrants on the Eastern Shore has decreased from 10,000 to 4,000 in the past 10 to 20 years," Teig said. "The small local farmers cannot make it. Their businesses are literally drying up."

Gina Miserendino, an official of Delmarva Rural Ministries, which works with migrants in Delaware, Maryland and Virginia, said the drought is increasing the demand for nutrition crisis relief. Food stamps are available but difficult to get because migrants often lack adequate documentation and sometimes are not in an area long enough to go through the application process, which can take up to a month.

Cain said he and his wife and their four teen-age children, together with Ms. Brown and her son, were able to make $149 last week weeding a soybean field, but had not worked this week.

When work is available, the group of eight generally makes about $50 a day, of which $35 to $40 goes for a single motel room in which all eight stay. "That still don't leave us enough to eat off of," he said.

"I don't know whether I'll get a job tomorrow," Ms. Brown said. He said all hopes are pinned on the apple harvest, which begins after Labor Day.

"That's my last hope, is the apples, 'cause I need that money to get home and pick oranges," she said.

She said she recently met another migrant family from Moultrie, Ga., who were nable to find a place to stay on the Eastern Shore.

"They're here to do work, but they're sleeping in cars. You get scared out there."

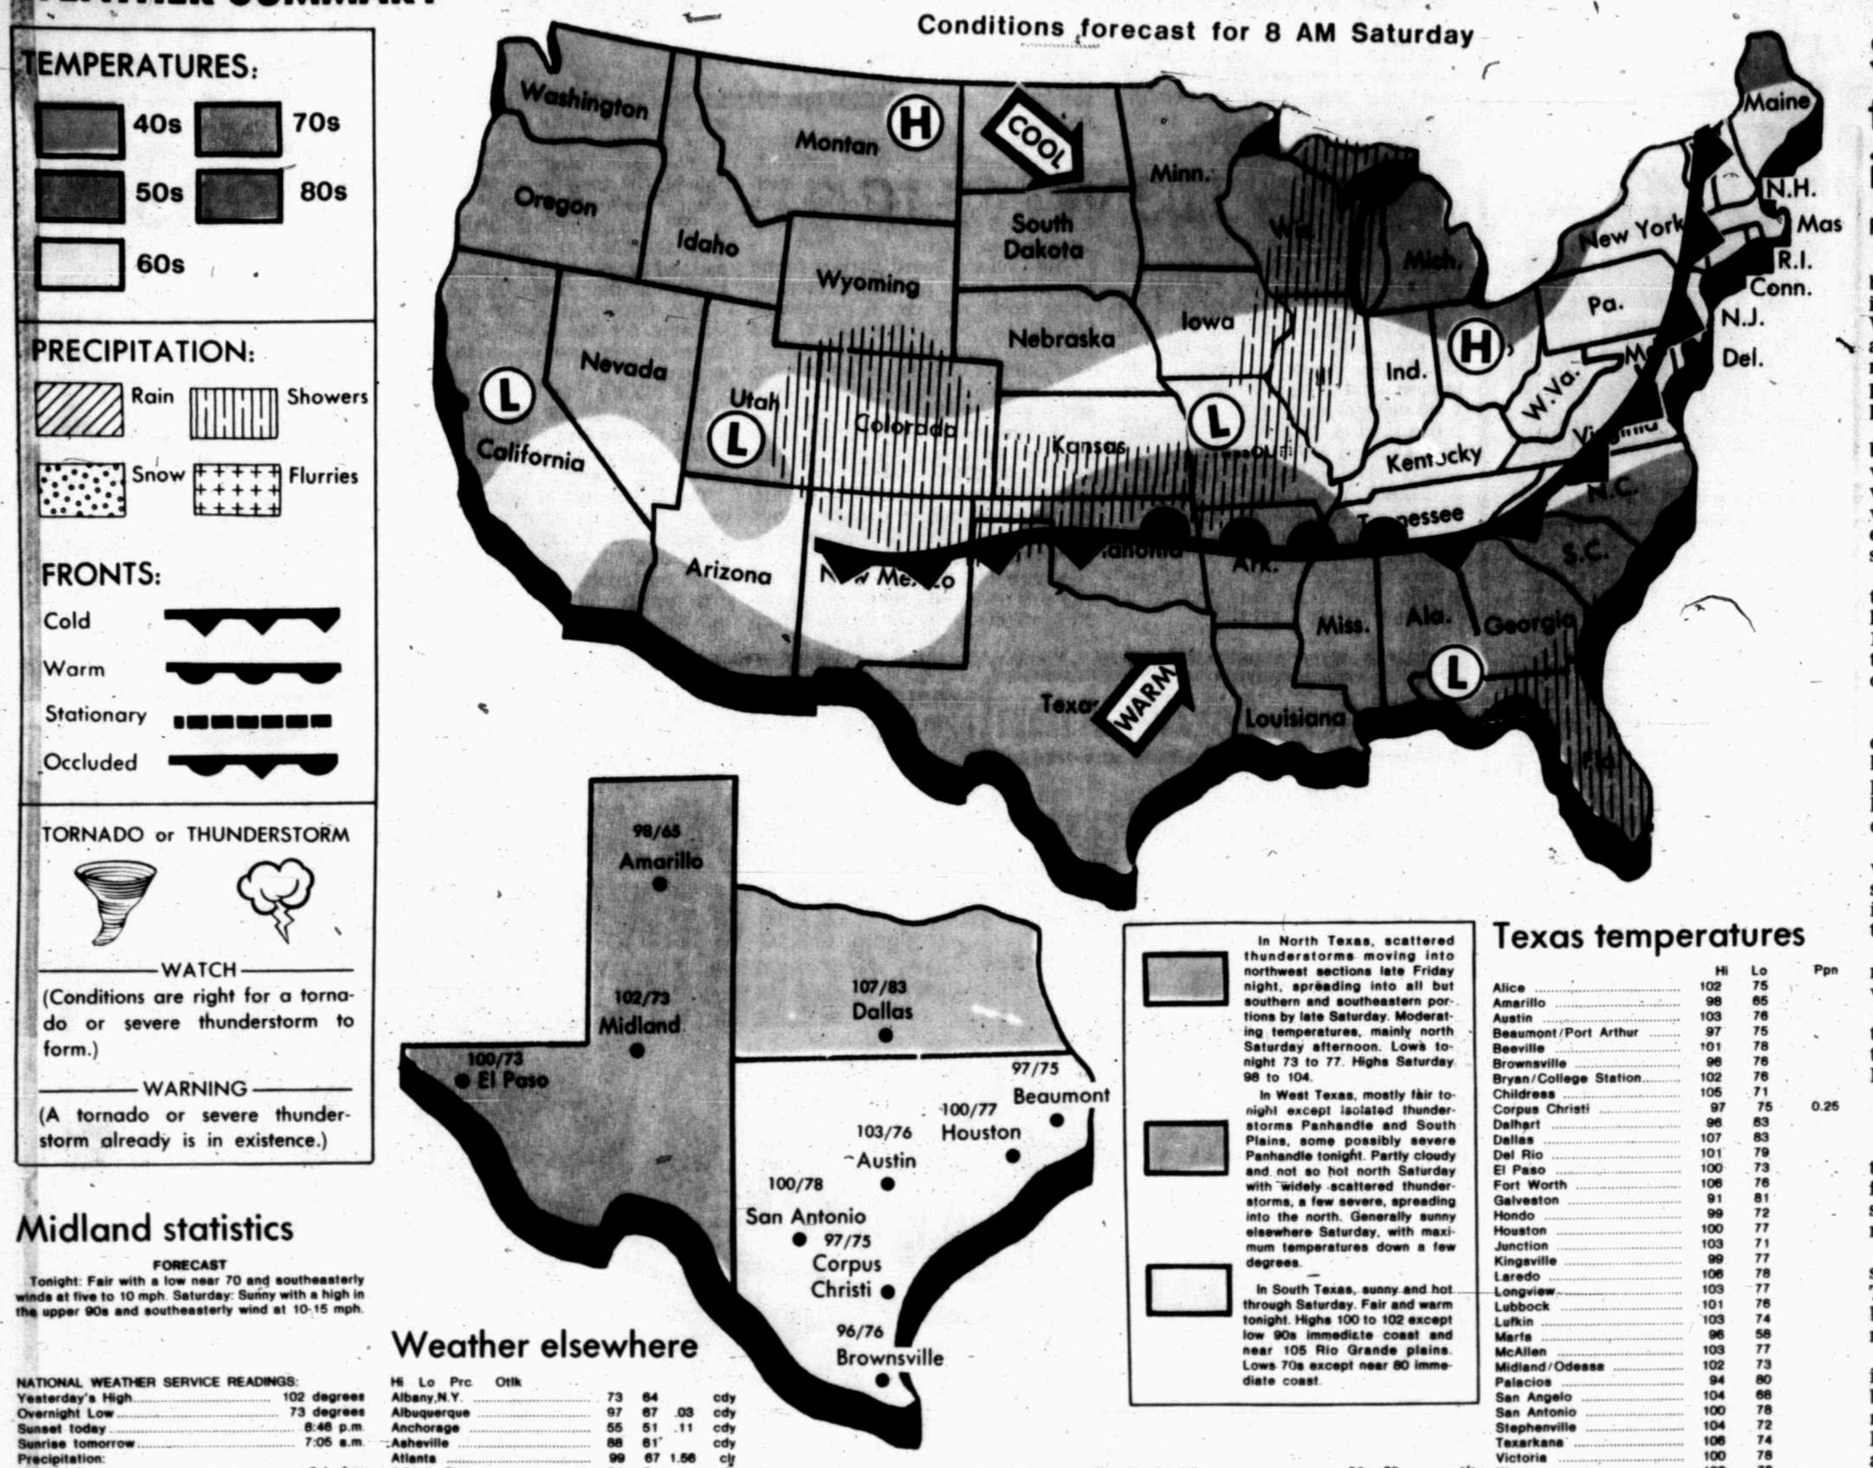
WEATHER SUMMARY



Slightly cooler temperatures in store for Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

Slightly cooler temperatures may be experienced on Saturday, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. The high is expected to reach into the upper 90s, as compared with the 100-degree plus temperatures of the last few days.

A low near the 70-degree mark is being predicted for tonight, along with fair skies and southeasterly winds at five to 10 mph. Saturday's winds will continue out of the southeast, increasing to 10-15 mph, under sunny skies.

Thursday's high of 102 was only three degrees short of the record high temperature set for that date in 1944. The record low of 56 set for today's date in 1936 was 17 degrees cooler than this morning's low.

STATE

Isolated to widely scattered thunderstorms over portions of the Panhandle and North Texas were expected to begin bringing some relief late today to heat-scorched portions of the state.

The National Weather Service warned, however, that the thunderstorms might become severe, mainly in the Panhandle, late today and tonight.

But most of the state was to get more of the same — hot, dry weather.

Heat index values were expected to remain at dangerous levels, between 105 and 110, over much of North Texas and East Texas.

NATION

Rain dotted the nation's heartland today and a heat wave held steady from the southern Plains to the south Atlantic coastal states, while mild weather prevailed in the North.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered across the High Plains, the Tennessee and lower Mississippi valleys and the southern Great Lakes region.

Early-morning temperatures were in the 70s to 80s across the heat wave belt, where record highs were reached Thursday in 28 cities. Little Rock, Ark., was 110, which tied its all-time high set Aug. 10, 1936.

Early-morning temperatures were in the 50s to 60s from the northern Plains across the Great Lakes, eastern Ohio Valley and the mid-Atlantic states to New England.

Scattered, severe thunderstorms developed along a stationary front from Oklahoma to Florida on Thursday. Strong thunderstorms also ranged across the Southeast, the central High Plains and western North Dakota.

In North Texas, scattered thunderstorms moving into northwest sections late Friday night, spreading into all but southern and southeastern portions by late Saturday. Moderating temperatures, mainly north Saturday afternoon. Lows tonight 73 to 77. Highs Saturday 98 to 104.

In West Texas, mostly fair tonight except isolated thunderstorms Panhandle and South Plains, some possibly severe Panhandle tonight. Partly cloudy and not so hot north Saturday with widely scattered thunderstorms, a few severe, spreading into the north. Generally sunny elsewhere Saturday, with maximum temperatures down a few degrees.

In South Texas, sunny and hot through Saturday. Fair and warm tonight. Highs 100 to 102 except low 90s immediate coast and near 105 Rio Grande plains. Lows 70s except near 80 immediate coast.

Men's tourney opens Saturday at Hogan Park

From Staff Reports

The Midland Reporter-Telegram Men's City Golf Tournament tees off early Saturday morning at Hogan Park Municipal Golf Course and when all the divots are replaced Sunday evening, it is assured there will be a new champion.

Last year's champion Ed Barnes has moved off to Amarillo and is ineligible to play this year, but it isn't likely the former Midland College golfer would have won anyway. No one has repeated the feat in the 1980s.

In his stead are several contenders including Midland College golfer Leon Van Rensburg, David Pritchett, Joe Hart, Alan Williams and Frank Tryon who top the list of contenders.

The 36-hole medal tournament will offer the more than 70 golfers entered an opportunity to win twice in gross and net divisions and in any of the five flights.

PRIZES OFFERED to winners will be a VCR for gross winners and a wall clock for the net winners.

Cars will be offered for the first hole-in-one each day on the par three ninth hole.

The winner of the championship flight will have his name engraved on the silver loving cup kept in the Hogan Park pro shop. So far there have been no repeats in this decade and the names include C.E. Boyd, 1984; Bill Baker, 1983; Royce Woolard, 1982; Kelly Enge, 1981, and Billy Sitton, 1980.

The tournament will be over the first 18 holes of the 27-hole municipal course.

Following Saturday's round Coca Cola and Sam's Barbecue will stage a feed for contestants and their wives or dates.

City crowns new queen of the greens

Dickson wins title on final hole

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

After nearly 10 years, Jo Dickson finally had her day in the sun.

Dickson won the Midland Women's City Championship Thursday, sinking a 12-foot putt for par on the 18th hole and breaking a match play deadlock with runner-up Penny Sutcliffe at Hogan Park Golf Course.

"This is a dream, I'm telling you. I still can't believe it," Dickson said. "For me to win the city championship is amazing. I've been playing golf for 10 years and I've had some great times — wonderful game that it is — but this is my greatest moment.

"I really didn't expect to win today."

But win she did, becoming just the third woman to hold the city title in the last 15 years. Last year Ann Coombes broke the 13-year stranglehold of Susan Britton on the title. And now, it is all Dickson's.

To clinch it, Dickson had to rally from holes down with just six to play as Sutcliffe blistered through the first 12 holes at even par. But she did that in no time, carding consecutive pars on 13 and 14 while Sutcliffe bogeyed each.

The pair matched scores on 15 through 17 and a playoff looked inevitable.

BUT ON 18, with both finalists lying two and still a short chip from the green on the par-four 18th hole Dickson looked to be in trouble when Sutcliffe chipped up within four feet of the cup and she rolled her shot past the pin by 10-12 feet.

But the 40-year-old Dickson stalked up to her putt and rammed it in the hole, putting the pressure on Sutcliffe, 22. But as it had throughout the final nine holes, Sutcliffe's putter deserted her.

"I just couldn't make a putt on the back nine," the former New Mexico State golfer sighed, after three-putting three times and missing several short putts. "I felt a lot of pressure, I guess, but Jo did too. We were both playing under the same circumstances."

And with a procession of more than 25 carts following the finalists, both were feeling the pressure of the championship round as it wound to its conclusion.

Dickson's hurried final putt was the last word in overcoming nervousness, however.

"If you think about a putt like that too long, you get all nervous inside. You've just got to go up and hit it," Dickson said. "If you wait over it, you just get more and more nervous and you start quivering."

DICKSON LEARNED that from experience. Pressure had caused both players' game to falter a bit on the back nine as the crowd grew. And on 15, a 355-yard par-four straight into the teeth of the wind, both players three-putted for a double-bogey, the worst hole of the match.

"I started to feel it a few holes back when I three-putted," Dickson admitted of the 15th hole. "I started shaking and just missed it on nervousness. I'm not used to all this attention."

By the 15th hole, however, Dickson had re-established herself in the match by pulling even with winners on 13 and 14, just when Sutcliffe looked like she might make a short day of it.

"I was getting worried because it looked like it might be over before I wanted it to be over," Dickson said. "But some good putting saved me on those two holes. 13 and 14 were the keys I think."

And it was putting throughout the day that saved Dickson and made her the new City Champion.

IN THE rest of the final day's results, Darla Smith won the consolation bracket with a 5-and-4 win over DeDe Plank and Jere Smith was the first flight champ with a 1-up decision over Kay Lawson. Consolation was won by Shirley Rosignol, 4-and-3 over Jane Koch.

Second flight winner was Marge Bassett, 5-and-4 over Jean Elkin, consolation was won by Marge Tope, 3-2 over Dorothy Melzer. Beverly Duncan was a 4-and-3 winner over Treve Gieb in the third flight championship, Ruthie Owens was consolation winner, 4-and-3 over Judy Hunnicutt.

The fourth flight went to Cheryl Kuzmich, 4-and-3 over Sandra Wagner, consolation to Pebble Corbell, 2-up on Ginny Piette. Fifth flight winner was Joyce Coleman, 3-and-2 over Jean Conner, consolation winner was Janell Glasshof, 1-up over Cleva Brown after 19 holes.

Cowboys find London cabbies a special breed

By MATTHEW NUGENT

LONDON (AP) — Cabbies the world over have a notorious reputation. But Dallas Cowboy Brian Salonen has found the ones he thinks are the best — London taxi drivers.

Salonen, a linebacker with the Cowboys, is in London this week for Sunday's exhibition game against the Super Bowl champions Chicago Bears at Wembley Stadium Sunday.

In between training sessions Salonen has tried to catch as many of the British capital's sights as possible. He's traveled to most of them in the back of a black London taxi.

"I've enjoyed my stay here a lot and I have been surprised by the friendliness of the London cab drivers,' Salonen said Thursday.

"Most of the time cabbies don't care too much, they just want to get you to your destination and collect the fare. But in London they have been very friendly and genuinely hope the Cowboys win Sunday," he added.

THE COWBOYS' day in London begins at 7:30 a.m. when they meet in the ballroom at their hotel to discuss game plans. After breakfast they head south of the city for a grueling two-hour practice session at the National Sports Centre, Crystal Palace.

After that, however, the players have a chance to take in the sights and soak up the atmosphere of this historic city.

"I've seen Big Ben, the houses of parliament and Buckingham Palace, I've been cramming in as much as possible while I've had the chance," said Salonen.

But Wembley Stadium is the sight that the Cowboy linebacker is most looking forward to. "I've heard so much about it, Wembley is one of the most historic sports stadiums in the world. It's going to be an honor to play there," added Salonen.

The Cowboys and Bears will each have a practice session at the famous London sporting venue Saturday.

Sunday's clash between two of the biggest names in American football has caught the imagination of the British public. Ladbrokes, one of Britain's leading bookmakers, reported heavy betting on the Super Bowl champions Thursday.

AT CLOSE of betting, the Bears were quoted at 2-7 and the Cowboys at 9-4.

Harrods, London's famous department store, reported that sales of American football merchandise, a new line for them, was "brisk."

Meanwhile, back in the U.S., the Indiansapolis Colts, Pittsburgh Steelers, St. Louis Cardinals, Green Bay Packers, Houston Oilers, Los Angeles Rams, Seattle Seahawks and New York Giants signed players in training camp activity Thursday.

Colts

Jack Trudeau has finally got his mind off money and on football, thanks to a lucrative contract he's signed with Indianapolis.

"Negotiations are very mental and that's the tough part," the quarterback from Illinois said after signing a four-year contract. "I'm glad it's over. I've got a lot of catching up to do."

Trudeau, the club's second-round draft choice and the 20th pick overall, had been a holdout since camp opened July 18.

Angels open brief homestand

From Staff Reports

The Midland Angels return home tonight in a 7:30 start for a short, five-game homestand with the first place San Antonio Dodgers.

Angels Stadium should be a welcome sight for the road-weary Midland club after a 10-game road swing through the Eastern half of the Texas League, a disappointing road swing to say the least.

The Angels dropped seven of 10 games on the trip — including the last four to Jackson — to fall into last place in the Western Division, 8½ games behind the Dodgers.

San Antonio, meanwhile, has been cleaning up on its Eastern foes Tulsa and Arkansas.

The Dodgers have won 11 of their last 12 to take a 1½ game lead into the final month of the regular season. The Dodgers, distant last place finishers in the first half, began their awakening in the second half with a five-of-six spanking of Midland just before the All Star break.

After the five-game stand, Midland will travel to Beaumont for five days then return for the final homestand of the season Aug. 11-20 against El Paso and the Golden Gators.

A&M frosh shine in All Star game

HOUSTON (AP) — Tomball's Lance Pavlas and Columbus' Percy Waddle have offered Texas A&M fans a sneak preview of what they can expect in future years.

Pavlas and Waddle, both headed for Texas A&M this fall, combined for record-breaking performances Thursday night to lead the South to a 17-13 victory over the North in the Texas High School Coaches Association All-Star football game.

Former Midland Lee offensive lineman Jake Young, ex-Permian star receiver Greg Anderson and Crane's two-way star Kenny Walker all played for the North squad.

"I look forward to playing with him (Waddle) for the next four or five years," said Pavlas, who was named the outstanding offensive player of the game.

"He's a great receiver. I've never thrown to anyone that fast."

Pavlas completed 16 of 32 passes for an all-star record 246 yards passing, breaking the old mark of 224 yards by Robert Armstrong of Houston Sam Houston in 1971.

"We started working well together from the start," Waddle said. "We were a little shakey at first but we're going to be a great team.

"If you have a great quarterback like him and a great receiver like me, you can work together."

WADDLE CAUGHT seven passes for 173 yards, breaking the record of 166 yards receiving by Bryan Willingham of Pasadena in 1971.

Pavlas hit Houston Jones' Kerry Simien with a 2-yard touchdown pass with 3:55 left in the game to rally the South to victory and narrow the North's lead in the series to 28-20-4.

The touchdown nullified a record 81 yard punt return for a touchdown by the North's Johnny Hurndon of Daingerfield that gave the North a 13-10 lead with 1:52 to play in the third quarter.

Hurndon's return broke the previous record return of 68 yards by Galena Park's Michael Frazier in 1971.

South defensive tackle Greg Oefinger of San Antonio Churchill won defensive player of the game honors.

Oefinger was credited with six tackles and three assists and stopped Greenville's Jay Mapps to stop a North drive at the South 12.

Shane Smith of Gregory-Portland kicked a 28-yard field goal on the South's second drive of the game and Hempstead's Harvey Williams leaped two yards in the second quarter to lead the Rebels to a 10-6 halftime lead.

Williams, who gained 5,883 yards and scored 70 touchdowns in his career at Hempstead, scored one play after Pavlas hit Waddle with a 40-yard pass to the North's two.

The North rallied in the second quarter on a touchdown run by Dallas White's Carmichael Moore, whose 7-yard score followed a 23-yard pass from Greenville's Jay Mapps to Stamford's Timmy Delce.

Giants pull one out; pull within 4 of Astros

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Roger Craig held a pre-game team meeting, perhaps to restore any confidence lost during the San Francisco Giants' recent four-game losing streak.

"I just knew that after that meeting, we'd score nine or ten runs," the Giants' manager joked after Candy Maldonado's bases-loaded walk in the bottom of the ninth gave the Giants a 3-2 win over the Atlanta Braves Thursday night.

"We didn't lose four in a row. We've won one in a row," he added, displaying the optimistic attitude which has been generally rampant in the clubhouse of one of baseball's most surprising teams. The Giants, losers of 100 games last season for the first time in the franchise's long history, climbed back to within four games of front-running Houston in the NL West.

The Giants managed only seven hits, six of them singles, and had only one hit over the final seven innings off Braves' pitching, but still found a way to break their losing streak. In the four previous games, they totaled four runs and lost a pair of 2-1 decisons.

Gene Garber, 4-2, walked Maldonado on a 3-2 pitch with one out and the bases loaded in the ninth inning to force in the winning run.

"This game was a perfect example of the way we were playing earlier this season, pulling out a win in the late innings. We showed we're a team of 24 players," said Maldonado, who picked up his 18th RBI as a pinch hitter. He leads the league with a .424 average as a pinch-hitter.

The Giants scored the winning run without getting a hit. Jose Uribe walked to opening the inning and Garrelts sacrificed him to second. Atlanta third baseman Rafael Ramirez then threw Dan Gladden's grounder past first, allowing Uribe to go to third. Garber walked Robby Thompson to load the bases before Maldonado watched a full-count offering stay wide, forcing home Uribe.

Tigers blow 7-1 lead; California slams A's

Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Ulcers may be tough on the stomach, but they can work wonders for your pitching arm, says Cleveland Indians relief pitcher Scott Bailes.

The 24-year-old rookie, who spent three days recuperating from two ulcers, returned to action Thursday night and shut out the Detroit Tigers on two hits for four innings as the Indians recovered from a six-run deficit to win 8-7.

"The only real effect of the ulcers is, I had three or four days rest. When your arm's rested, you get a little extra on the fastball, a little sharper breaking ball," the left-hander said.

Bailes, who is tied for the AL lead in appearances with 47, entered the game in the sixth inning after starting pitcher Rich Yett had allowed consecutive homers in the fifth by Alan Trammell, Kirk Gibson and John Grubb to fall behind 7-1.

The Indians scored three runs in the bottom of the fifth and four in the eighth while Bailes limited the Tigers to a pair of singles. Carmen Castillo's RBI double capped the Indians' eighth-inning comeback.

The loss was only the fourth in 15 games since the All-Star break for the Tigers. Cleveland ended its three-game losing streak, putting both teams six games behind first-place Boston in the tight AL East race.

Pat Tabler singled in one run and Julio Franco singled in two more for Cleveland to tie the game 7-7 in the eighth against Bill Campbell, 2-3. Franco took second on the throw from the outfield, moved to third on a wild pitch and scored the winning run when Castillo greeted Jim Slaton with a double off the fence in left.

Angels 8, A's 5

Brian Downing and Bob Boone each hit grand slams that led California over host Oakland.

Downing connected in the third inning for the Angels' first hit of the game off Eric Plunk, 3-7. Plunk had loaded the bases with three walks before Downing hit his sixth career slam and his 12th home run of the season.

Doug DeCinces led off the California fourth with a single and two walks again loaded the bases. Boone then connected off Plunk for his fourth home run of the year and first slam since 1976.

The Angels last hit two grand slams in a game on April 27, 1983, when Fred Lynn and Darryl Sconiers did it against Detroit.

Mike Witt, 11-7, gave up five runs in 6 1-3 innings and got the victory.

Oilers sign Pinkett

SAN ANGELO (AP) — The Houston Oilers signed two holdouts, including the third-round draft pick and a four-year veteran, but were still without two veteran players in their Angelo State University training camp, a team spokesman said.

Running back Allen Pinkett of Notre Dame became the eighth of 10 draft choices to sign with the team, spokesman Chip Namias said.

Pinkett was the all-time leading rusher in Norte Dame history with 4,131 yards. He scored 53 touchdowns which is the fourth highest total in the history of college football.

Tight end Chris Dressel also signed with the team Thursday, Namias said.

Dressel started in all 16 games last season and has caught at least one pass in the past 28 consecutive games for the Oilers.

During a scrimmage against Seattle Wednesday, linebacker Tom Briehal suffered a fractured right ankle and will be out 6-8 weeks.

Also missing Thursday workouts were offensive guard Mike Munchak with a groin injury; defensive lineman Mike Golic with a shoulder injury and a stomach disorder caused defensive tackle Mike Stensrud to sit out.

Gymnast Johnson redeems himself

By BARRY WILNER

HOUSTON (AP) — For Scott Johnson, the U.S. Olympic Festival provided a stage on which he could redeem himself for "falling all over the place" at the national championships.

The 1984 Olympic gold medalist in gymnastics did exactly that Thursday night, winning the all-around title with a workmanlike display. It wasn't as spectacular as his seven-medal performances in 1982 and '83, but it was enough to edge out Dan Hayden of Amherst, N.Y.

"At the U.S. championships, I fell all over the place," said Johnson, 25, of Colorado Springs, Colo. "It hurt my national ranking. I missed out on a chance to go to Moscow (for the Goodwill Games)

"It was depressing. I realized it was my own fault. I didn't train right. Not going to Moscow was a good thing — I was able to train consistently. I wanted to redeem myself here."

Johnson's scores for the six events were: rings, 9.65; vault, 9.55; parallel bars, 9.45; high bar, 9.70; floor exercise, 9.45; and pommel horse, 9.70, for a total of 57.50 points. Hayden had 57.40 points.

"Experience has a lot to do with dealing with pressure," Johnson said. "It's real scary. It's still tough. I was nervous tonight because I put so much pressure on myself."

HE AVOIDED some pressure by not watching Hayden on the rings just before Johnson concluded on the pommel horse.

Olympic Festival

"Dan was moving up so fast," Johnson said. "His last two events are his strongest. Pommel horse is my weakest.

"I didn't look at Dan on the rings. It takes your concentration away from your own routine. I did not want distractions and was scared to death."

John Sweeney of Phoenix came in third.

Two other 1984 Olympic medalists, Greg Louganis and Michele Mitchell, qualified for the U.S. team in the World Championships in Madrid by winning the 3-meter platform diving competition.

Louganis, 26, of Boca Raton, Fla., winner of two gold medals in the '84 Olympics, rolled up 1,431.090 points for his ninth Festival gold medal and 39th national title. Mark Bradshaw of Springfield, Ore., was second to also earn a World Championships berth.

Louganis said it was not his strongest outing.

"I felt I did a real consistent job," he said, "but I missed my reverse 2½ and my reverse 3½ pike. I need to work on those. Diving is such a mental game.

"I had to keep telling myself to relax. Competition to compete for the World Championships can get intense. But I don't see myself playing it safe in Spain. There is so much talent on the line you have to go for it."

Mitchell, long considered a platform specialist — she won a silver medal in that event at Los Angeles — continued her improvement in the springboard. She edged Kelly McCormick, who won a silver in the 1984 Games on the springboard.

"I just came into this event to have fun because my strong point is the tower," Mitchell said. "But I'm starting to be a contender on the springboard now."

THE SOUTH women won their fifth straight basketball gold, 83-78 over the North, as Tennessee sophomore Bridgette Gordon scored 22 points. Gordon, one of three Tennessee starters on the South squad, led the Festival in scoring with 86 points as the South compiled a 4-0 record.

"We really came together," said Gordon, who was named to the national junior team and was the tournament MVP. "It was like a family."

The West men, who had lost 12 straight Festival games coming here, registered a 103-94 win over the East for the gold. Syracuse-bound Steve Thompson has 28 points and was compared to Isiah Thomas by West Coach Ladell Anderson of Brigham Young.

"A lot of people think that the basketball level in the West is going down," the 17-year-old guard said. "But we proved that our team can play."

The track and field competition began Thursday night with the half-marathon. Sue Schneider of Minneapolis set a Festival record of 1 hour, 17 minutes, 11 seconds in 93-degree heat. The men's half-marathon gold went to Keith Hanson of Stevens Point, Wis., in a Festival record 1:06:03.4.

TRACK AND field lost several featured athletes. National champion Charlie Simpkins withdrew from the triple jump, and 400-meter national champ Darrell Robinson also dropped out. American pole vault record-holder Joe Dial won't be here either.

Maureen O'Toole of Long Beach, Calif., the leading scorer in women's water polo for the second consecutive year, had five goals as the North beat the South 10-6 for the gold medal. O'Toole finished the tournament with 16 goals, a Festival mark, and teammate Simone LaPay of Long Beach was second with 12.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Do not push yourself too hard and you should not have health worries. December will bring some moments of depression, but recovery will produce a great rush of productive and useful energy. Finances and career gains can be substantial. Much of your success depends on your ability to build relationships that endure.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Chicago Cubs rookie pitcher Derek Botelho, writer James Baldwin, actors Peter O'Toole and Carroll O'Connor, Sen. Paul Laxalt (R-Nev.).

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If you are going to the beach, get an early start to escape traffic snarls. Avoid all forms of speculation. Attend to correspondence. This evening enjoy the company of friends and neighbors.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Check all routes and reservations if starting out on a family vacation. Get in touch with someone you have long admired. You enjoy a nostalgic evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Decisions should be made with extreme caution. Make certain you have received all the relevant facts before coming to final conclusions. Your mate or partner is your strongest ally.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Think in terms of long-range plans. Do not allow a partner's irritating, little habits to get under your skin. Recreation helps relieve tension.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take the initiative if you are offered a chance to land a big moneymaking opportunity. Your mate could prove to be a valuable business partner. Short trips are useful for strengthening romantic relationships.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Friends or neighbors may require your assistance. Family life may not run a smooth course. Good luck comes in the form of a letter or telegram, giving you cause for celebration.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Those living at a distance have need of your expertise and are willing to pay generously for it. Your financial outlook continues to improve. Domestic life can present minor problems.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Travel proves a valuable tool in advancing business and romance. A move to a new city or profession is a distinct possibility. Be certain your romantic partner loves you for yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friendship is more meaningful if you seek quality rather than quantity. Long-distance calls are appreciated by parents. Romance begins to move into high gear.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not make any important moves today. A loan is likely to be denied. A critical domestic problem indicates the immediate need for a family conference.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friends or relatives play an important role in this very happy day. Be prompt in getting in touch with people you would like to see. Scheduling problems could arise.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You find exciting, new ways to combine business with pleasure. Happily you will have more free time to spend on family activities. Romance is the deciding factor in a domestic decision.

Opening lead: Ten of ♠

The same techniques that are available to declarer are also at the disposal of the defenders. Just as it is sometimes correct for declarer to hold up even when he has two stoppers in the suit led, so a defender can gain by pursuing the same tactic. Here's a case in point.

South's decision to open one no trump has our wholehearted approval. The modern tendency is to employ the bid even though one has only three suits stopped and a low doubleton in the fourth. Certainly, South's tenaces in the major suits suggested that he should declare rather than his partner. North's good five-card suit justified his jump to three no trump.

The sight of dummy brought no special joy to declarer. With only five fast tricks, he was going to need either three diamond tricks and a heart finesse, or four diamond tricks, to make his contract, and there was only one side-suit entry to the table. Declarer won the opening lead in hand and led a diamond to the king. East, looking at two sure stoppers, saw no harm in winning the ace and returning a spade. he was quickly proved wrong.

Declarer won the return in hand, cashed two high diamonds and conceded a trick to East. The king of spades was an entry to the board to cash the good diamond and take a successful heart finesse for nine tricks.

Note the difference if East had allowed the first diamond trick to hold. Suppose declarer takes a successful heart finesse before leading another diamond. East can then take the ace and, since there is only one entry in dummy, declarer will be held to only two diamond tricks and eight tricks in all.

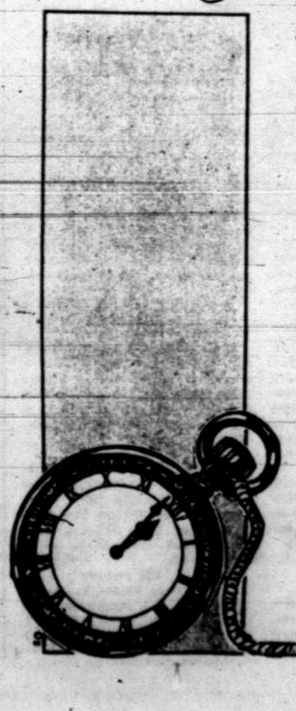
WATCHES



Mr. Sears and Mr. Roebuck got together because of a classified ad!

In the late 1800's, Richard W. Sears had a pretty good business going selling watches and needed someone to handle his watch repairs. He placed a classified ad in the newspaper and Alvah C. Roebuck got the job. That's how the nation's biggest retailer got started... through a classified ad!

If you need a good helper, try advertising in our classifieds. Who knows? You may spark the beginning of something big!

Stars shine on 'Moonlighting' as show captures 16 Emmy nominations

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Every few years a show comes along that captures the imagination and is treated in the Emmy nominations like Cinderella at the ball.

This year it's ABC's "Moonlighting," a comedy-drama starring Bruce Willis as a fast-talking, impulsive private eye and Cybill Shepherd as his glamorous, practical boss.

They're often at each other's throats and only a heartbeat away from falling into each other's arms.

The show, created by Glenn Gordon Caron, has sparkling dialogue and has done some daring and innovative things, including a 1940s-style black-and-white episode.

"Moonlighting" received 16 nominations for the 38th annual prime-time Emmy awards, announced Thursday by the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences.

They included nominations for best drama series, best drama seris acting for Willis and Miss Shepherd, best supporting actress for Allyce Beasley and best guest actress for Whoopi Goldberg. It also received two nominations for directing and two for writing.

Other big nominees were NBC's "The Cosby Show" and "The Golden Girls," tied at 15 each, NBC's "St. Elsewhere" and movie "An Early Frost," tied at 14 each, NBC's "Cheers" with 11, and NBC's "Amazing Stories" and the CBS special "Death of a Salesman," tied at 10 each.

"Moonlighting" got the most nominations for any show since the early 1980s, when NBC's "Hill Street Blues" was the darling of the public, the critics and the industry. Over five years, "Hill Street Blues" received 88 nominations and won 26 Emmys.

In its rookie year in 1980-81, the gritty police drama got 21 nominations and won eight awards. That's the most nominations and Emmys any regular series ever has received in a single year.

This year it was nominated for seven Emmys.

NBC's "The Cosby Show" likely would have tied "Moonlighting" with 16 nominations except Bill Cosby, who has said he doesn't believe in competition among performers, asked not to be nominated.

Last year's Cinderella show was NBC's "Miami Vice," which drew 15 nominations. But Cinderella lost her glass slipper on the way to the ball and won only four Emmys.

Only one of those was in a non-crafts category, the best supporting actor award that went to Edward James Olmos.

This year "Miami Vice" got four nominations. Olmos was nominated again for best supporting actor and the others were in the craft categories.

DALLAS (AP) — A funeral Mass and burial are schedule for Saturday morning for Gilbert Cuellar Sr., the founder of El Chico Corp. and sometimes called the "Father of Tex-Mex."

Cuellar died Thursday after a lengthy illness at the age of 75.

Cuellar, vice president of the Dallas-based restaurant chain, co-founded El Chico in 1940 with his four brothers, opening the first El Chico restaurant in south Dallas, company officials said in a press release.

The Cuellar brothers were inspired by their mother, Adelaida Cuellar, who first sold the family's tamales, chili and enchiladas at the 1926 Kaufman County Fair, the statement said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A cleaner at entertainer Michael Jackson's mansion has pleaded no contest to stealing jewelry and cash belonging to the singer's mother and sisters.

Arthur Lee Stewart, 21, charged in July with theft of $17,000 of jewelry and cash, entered his plea Wednesday to taking a watch, two rings and $300 from Jackson's Encino home, said Deputy District Attorney Lloyd M. Nash.

Stewart had been charged with taking $17,000 worth of jewelry and cash.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Jane Powell bent, stretched and reached for the stars while leading half a dozen arthritis sufferers in exercises that will be on a new videotape to be released later this year.

Miss Powell, 57, star of Metro Goldwyn Mayer's "Royal Wedding" and "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers," said the 45-minute video will not be like other exercise videos.

There will be no strenuous movements to hard, driving music. Instead, the exercises will be done to soothing Muzak arrangements and the emphasis will be on slow stretches.

TOKYO (AP) — Sempo Sugihara, a former Japanese diplomat who helped thousands of Jews leave Lithuania during World War II, died of heart failure Thursday. He was 86.

Sugihara, assigned as a consul to the Lithuanian city of Kovno, issued transit visas for nearly 6,000 Jews. He acted against Japanese government orders and was dismissed from the foreign service.

In a ceremony last year, Sugihara became the first Japanese to receive Israel's Yad Vashem Medal. Yad Vashem is an institute established to commemorate the Jews who died during World War II.

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. (AP) — Jazz pianist Teddy Wilson, who helped bring integrated music from after-hours jam sessions at small clubs to prime time performances with the Benny Goodman Orchestra during the 1930s, has died.

Wilson, who was 73, died Thursday at his New Britain home, where he spent the last several years of his life battling a digestive illness.

Wilson spent much of his career as a soloist or leader of his own small combos, but achieved jazz prominence during a four-year stint with the Benny Goodman Orchestra.

"What I got out of playing with Teddy was something, in a jazz way, like what I got from playing Mozart in a string quartet," Goodman once said of Wilson.

Wilson played with the Goodman trio, with Goodman on clarinet and Gene Krupa on drums, as well as the full band.

ABC-TV's "Moonlighting" collected 16 Emmy nominations Thursday, including best lead actor and actress nominations for stars Burce Willis and Cybil Shepherd.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ♠

The same techniques that are available to declarer are also at the disposal of the defenders. Just as it is sometimes correct for declarer to hold up even when he has two stoppers in the suit led, so a defender can gain by pursuing the same tactic. Here's a case in point.

South's decision to open one no trump has our wholehearted approval. The modern tendency is to employ the bid even though one has only three suits stopped and a low doubleton in the fourth. Certainly, South's tenaces in the major suits suggested that he should declare rather than his partner. North's good five-card suit justified his jump to three no trump.

The sight of dummy brought no special joy to declarer. With only five fast tricks, he was going to need either three diamond tricks and a heart finesse, or four diamond tricks, to make his contract, and there was only one side-suit entry to the table. Declarer won the opening lead in hand and led a diamond to the king. East, looking at two sure stoppers, saw no harm in winning the ace and returning a spade. he was quickly proved wrong.

Declarer won the return in hand, cashed two high diamonds and conceded a trick to East. The king of spades was an entry to the board to cash the good diamond and take a successful heart finesse for nine tricks.

Note the difference if East had allowed the first diamond trick to hold. Suppose declarer takes a successful heart finesse before leading another diamond. East can then take the ace and, since there is only one entry in dummy, declarer will be held to only two diamond tricks and eight tricks in all.

Mr. Sears and Mr. Roebuck got together because of a classified ad!

In the late 1800's, Richard W. Sears had a pretty good business going selling watches and needed someone to handle his watch repairs. He placed a classified ad in the newspaper and Alvah C. Roebuck got the job. That's how the nation's biggest retailer got started... through a classified ad!

Stars shine on 'Moonlighting' as show captures 16 Emmy nominations

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Every few years a show comes along that captures the imagination and is treated in the Emmy nominations like Cinderella at the ball.

This year it's ABC's "Moonlighting," a comedy-drama starring Bruce Willis as a fast-talking, impulsive private eye and Cybill Shepherd as his glamorous, practical boss.

They're often at each other's throats and only a heartbeat away from falling into each other's arms.

The show, created by Glenn Gordon Caron, has sparkling dialogue and has done some daring and innovative things, including a 1940s-style black-and-white episode.

"Moonlighting" received 16 nominations for the 38th annual prime-time Emmy awards, announced Thursday by the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences.

They included nominations for best drama series, best drama seris acting for Willis and Miss Shepherd, best supporting actress for Allyce Beasley and best guest actress for Whoopi Goldberg. It also received two nominations for directing and two for writing.

Other big nominees were NBC's "The Cosby Show" and "The Golden Girls," tied at 15 each, NBC's "St. Elsewhere" and movie "An Early Frost," tied at 14 each, NBC's "Cheers" with 11, and NBC's "Amazing Stories" and the CBS special "Death of a Salesman," tied at 10 each.

"Moonlighting" got the most nominations for any show since the early 1980s, when NBC's "Hill Street Blues" was the darling of the public, the critics and the industry. Over five years, "Hill Street Blues" received 88 nominations and won 26 Emmys.

In its rookie year in 1980-81, the gritty police drama got 21 nominations and won eight awards. That's the most nominations and Emmys any regular series ever has received in a single year.

This year it was nominated for seven Emmys.

NBC's "The Cosby Show" likely would have tied "Moonlighting" with 16 nominations except Bill Cosby, who has said he doesn't believe in competition among performers, asked not to be nominated.

Last year's Cinderella show was NBC's "Miami Vice," which drew 15 nominations. But Cinderella lost her glass slipper on the way to the ball and won only four Emmys.

Only one of those was in a non-crafts category, the best supporting actor award that went to Edward James Olmos.

This year "Miami Vice" got four nominations. Olmos was nominated again for best supporting actor and the others were in the craft categories.

DALLAS (AP) — A funeral Mass and burial are schedule for Saturday morning for Gilbert Cuellar Sr., the founder of El Chico Corp. and sometimes called the "Father of Tex-Mex."

Cuellar died Thursday after a lengthy illness at the age of 75.

Cuellar, vice president of the Dallas-based restaurant chain, co-founded El Chico in 1940 with his four brothers, opening the first El Chico restaurant in south Dallas, company officials said in a press release.

The Cuellar brothers were inspired by their mother, Adelaida Cuellar, who first sold the family's tamales, chili and enchiladas at the 1926 Kaufman County Fair, the statement said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A cleaner at entertainer Michael Jackson's mansion has pleaded no contest to stealing jewelry and cash belonging to the singer's mother and sisters.

ABC-TV's "Moonlighting" collected 16 Emmy nominations Thursday, including best lead actor and actress nominations for stars Burce Willis and Cybil Shepherd.

Wednesday to taking a watch, two rings and $300 from Jackson's Encino home, said Deputy District Attorney Lloyd M. Nash.

Stewart had been charged with taking $17,000 worth of jewelry and cash.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Jane Powell bent, stretched and reached for the stars while leading half a dozen arthritis sufferers in exercises that will be on a new videotape to be released later this year.

Miss Powell, 57, star of Metro Goldwyn Mayer's "Royal Wedding" and "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers," said the 45-minute video will not be like other exercise videos.

There will be no strenuous movements to hard, driving music. Instead, the exercises will be done to soothing Muzak arrangements and the emphasis will be on slow stretches.

TOKYO (AP) — Sempo Sugihara, a former Japanese diplomat who helped thousands of Jews leave Lithuania during World War II, died of heart failure Thursday. He was 86.

Sugihara, assigned as a consul to the Lithuanian city of Kovno, issued transit visas for nearly 6,000 Jews. He acted against Japanese government orders and was dismissed from the foreign service.

In a ceremony last year, Sugihara became the first Japanese to receive Israel's Yad Vashem Medal. Yad Vashem is an institute established to commemorate the Jews who died during World War II.

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. (AP) — Jazz pianist Teddy Wilson, who helped bring integrated music from after-hours jam sessions at small clubs to prime time performances with the Benny Goodman Orchestra during the 1930s, has died.

Wilson, who was 73, died Thursday at his New Britain home, where he spent the last several years of his life battling a digestive illness.

Wilson spent much of his career as a soloist or leader of his own small combos, but achieved jazz prominence during a four-year stint with the Benny Goodman Orchestra.

"What I got out of playing with Teddy was something, in a jazz way, like what I got from playing Mozart in a string quartet," Goodman once said of Wilson.

Wilson played with the Goodman trio, with Goodman on clarinet and Gene Krupa on drums, as well as the full band.

Hallberg tops Western Open

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — For the first time in his life, Gary Hallberg said, he went into a golf tournament with a set strategy for every hole.

"I stuck to my plan and it worked," Hallberg said Thursday after a no-bogey, 4-under-par 68 earned him a share of the first-round lead in the $500,000 Western Open Golf Tournament.

Hallberg, slowed earlier this season by a case of mononucleosis which caused him to lose about 20 pounds, said he took last week off and came to nearby Barrington, Ill. "for some of Mom's home cooking."

He also played six practice rounds over the Butler National Golf Club and developed a way to play each hole, "a cut shot here, a fade there."

"I'd never done that before. I can see how, when you get the routine down, it pays off," said Hallberg, whose only victory in seven years of PGA Tour activity came in the 1983 San Diego Open.

He followed the plan well enough to tie veteran Bob Gilder and journeyman Loren Roberts for the top spot in his hometown tournament.

Veterans Hale Irwin, a two-time U.S. Open champion, and Cal Peete, winner of two titles earlier this season, led a group of seven at 69, one shot off the pace.

Also at that figure were Tim Simpson and Scott Simpson (no relation), Dick Mast, Tom Purtzer and Bobby Wadkins, who began his day play by holing a 147-yard 8-iron shot for an eagle-2.

Tom Kite led a large group at 70, two under par on the course that usually ranks among the most difficult the touring pros encounter.

SWC snafu may bench some freshmen

DALLAS (AP) — Donald Harris says he has met all the qualifications to be eligible to play football this fall at Texas Tech, but there's one catch.

Because the Southwest Conference misinterpreted the NCAA's designated national testing dates for the American College Test and Scholastic Aptitude Test, the former Waco Jefferson-Moore student and other incoming freshmen may now be ineligible, officials say.

Under Proposition 48, tests that count toward eligibility must be taken on a designated national testing day instead of a regional or residual test time.

However, SWC officials say their interpretation of the NCAA's guidelines on Proposition 48, the new entrance requirements announced Feb. 19, was that any authorized ACT or SAT would be considered valid.

SWC commissioner Fred Jacoby said he discovered the conference's misinterpretationa after reading the July 2 issue of the NCAA News, which reported that regional or residual tests were invalid.

Jacoby sent letters to each of the nine SWC schools late last week explaining the National Collegiate Athletic Association's guideline.

BUT THE last national testing dates for the ACT and SAT were June 7 and June 14. The next national SAT is Oct. 11; the next national ACT is Oct. 25.

"I was told that I could take the ACT June 28 at McLennan Community Colege (in Waco)," Harris said. "I talked to my coaches last month and they said they could accept my score as long as it was the real ACT."

Proposition 48 requires an incoming freshman to have a minimum 1.8 grade-point average (a C-minus or D) in core curriculum — English, math and physical and social sciences — as long as he scores 740 on the SAT or 17 on the ACT.

The player can score as low as 660 on the SAT or 13 on the ACT if he has a 2.2 GPA or better on the sliding scale.

Several schools, including Baylor, Houston and Texas, say they could lose players because of the error.

The NCAA will not budge on its ruling, said Steve Horton, an NCAA legislative assistant.

"There is an appeals process, but I doubt if it would be allowed. There have been some appeals by other member institutions this summer about the same thing, and they were denied."

The SWC does not plan to appeal the ineligibility of any incoming freshmen, Jacoby said.

Dollar sinks

LONDON (AP) — The dollar hit a new postwar low against the Japanese yen today and fell in Europe against other major currencies except the British pound and the Canadian dollar. Gold bullion prices edged higher.

Currency traders attributed the dollar's decline in part to the U.S. Commerce Department's delay in releasing its index of leading economic indicators. The release was postponed from Thursday until 8:30 a.m. EDT today.

Traders in London and Frankfurt, West Germany, said the postponement was taken as a sign that the economic statistics would be worse than expected.

Here are the midmorning dollar rates compared with levels in Europe late Thursday:

— 2.0900 West German marks, down from 2.0915

— 1.6755 Swiss francs, down from 1.6785

— 6.7855 French francs, down from 6.8025

— 2.3570 Dutch guilders, down from 2.3600

— 1,437 Italian lire, down from 1,440.50

— 1.3800 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3790

The British pound edged down to $1.4905 from $1.4925.

The dollar sank to 154.10 Japanese yen in Tokyo, down from Thursday's close of 154.15. It was the second straight day the dollar has struck a record low since World War II. Later, in London, the U.S. unit was pegged at 154.05 yen.

London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a recommended midmorning gold price of $360.50 a troy ounce, up from $359.20 late Thursday.

Zurich's bullion market was closed for a public holiday in Switzerland.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose to a closing bid of $358.72 from $352.86.

Silver bullion was quoted in London at $5.06 an ounce, down 2 cents from late Thursday.

Economic index shows slight gain

Still no sign of economic rebound

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Commerce Department said today its economic forecasting gauge, the Index of Leading Indicators, climbed a slight 0.3 percent in June, suggesting signs of the long-awaited rebound in economic activity are not yet on the horizon.

The department said that the gain followed a 0.1 percent decline in May.

The index would have fallen in June as well, but the government revised its methods of tracking mortgage lending activity, which is one of the business statistics measured in the index.

Without the revision, the index would have dropped 0.1 percent in June. Officials said the added weakness came from the fact that a large savings and loan insitution converted to a savings bank and thus was no longer counted in the series, which covers mortgage lending activity at savings and loans.

Commerce Department spokesman Larry Moran said the department had decided to begin counting savings banks as well as savings and loans in its mortgage figures and had revised the index back to June 1985 to reflect this change.

The index has been lackluster for much of this year, rising by just 2.8 percent since December. It now stands at 178.6 percent of its 1967 base of 100.

Analysts said this weak performance was accurately reflecting the fact that the economy was showing little signs of an upturn.

The economy, as measured by the gross national product, rose an anemic 2.5 percent in the first six months of the year, far below the Reagan administration's forecast for GNP growth of 4 percent.

The administration is expecting growth will rebound in the second half of the year, but many private analysts believe that the country's giant trade deficit will continue to weigh down growth.

The May decline in the leading index was the first drop since January. The department had originally reported last month that the May index rose by 0.2 percent.

By one rule of thumb, a recession is signaled if the index declines for three consecutive months.

The biggest factor contributing to strength last month was a rise in the price of raw materials used in manufacturing. An increase in this component is considered positive for the economy because it often reflects growing demand.

Other factors which were positive influences were a rise in stock prices, a gain in capital equipment orders, an advance in the money supply, a rise in manufacturers' orders for consumer goods and a gain in building permits.

While six components showed increases, three were a negative influence on the index. The biggest drag on the index was a drop in business and consumer credit, followed by a change in the time business orders were filled and a drop in the average workweek.

Two indicators were unchanged in June — the number of new businesses and unemployment claims.

The economy's troubles have been blamed in large part on the country's giant trade deficit, which the government reported earlier in the week surged to a record six-month level of $83.9 billion with no sign it is about to begin decreasing.

Unless the trade deficit turns around and domestic manufacturers are able to sell more of their products at home and abroad, many analysts see little reason to hope for stronger growth.

Eden bank becomes 13th bank to fail

EDEN, Texas (AP) — A depressed oil and agriculture economy caused Texas' 13th bank failure this year as the Eden State Bank was forced to close its doors, Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. officials said.

"Deterioration in the loan portfolio had been identified by the bank's directors and examining personnel and resulted in losses well in excess of the bank's capital," said Texas Bank Commissioner James L. Sexton, who ordered the bank closed Thursday.

"Sizable losses were identified on loans originated under previous management and made to out-of-territory borrowers and into the local agriculture and oil economy," he said. "Efforts by the present owners and directors to rehabilitate the bank were unsuccessful."

Sexton closed the bank with assets totalling $13 million and named the FDIC as receiver.

Eden State Bank will be taken over by The Eden State Bank, forming a new chartered subsidiary of Eden Financial Corp. of San Angelo, said FDIC spokesman Bill Oicheski. The new corporation is owned by Ben Stibling of Eden.

The failed bank's only office in Eden will open today and its depositors will automatically become depositors of the assuming bank, subject to approval by the appropriate court, Oicheski said.

The Eden State Bank will assume about $12.4 million from 23,000 deposit accounts. The new management also agreed to pay the FDIC a purchase premium of $104,000, Oicheski said.

The new bank also will purchase certain of the failed bank's loans and other assets for $9.7 million. To facilitate the transaction, the FDIC will advance $2.9 million to the assuming bank and will retain assets of the failed bank with a book value of about $3.3 million, the spokesman said.

The FDIC will recover a portion of the $2.9 million through the liquidation of assets not transferred to the assuming bank, Oicheski said.

Eden State Bank was the 81st bank to close in the country this year and the 37th agriculture-related bank, Oicheski said.

Texaco, Pennzoil argue case in appeals court

HOUSTON (AP) — Attorneys asking an appeals court to set aside a landmark multibillion-dollar judgment a jury ordered Texaco Inc. to pay Pennzoil Co. say no evidence was presented to prove Texaco knowingly interfered with a planned Pennzoil-Getty Oil Co. merger.

Armed with an arsenal of attorneys, the two oil company rivals returned to court Thursday to argue the case before the state's 1st Court of Appeals. The court adjourned without issuing a decision after hearing more than four hours of arguments.

"There's not a shred of evidence in the record to say that Texaco knew (of any contract between Pennzoil and Getty)," Texaco attorney Richard Keeton said. "There was no contract and Texaco had no knowledge even if there was."

In November, a Houston jury found Texaco wrongfully interfered in the planned Pennzoil-Getty merger in 1984 and ordered Texaco to pay $10.53 billion in damages to Pennzoil — the largest in U.S. history.

Pennzoil's lead attorney, Joe Jamail, maintained the jury was correct in issuing the verdict. He insisted Getty and Pennzoil had an agreement and Texaco was aware of it.

"I thought they had a lousy case in the beginning and I still do," Jamail said after the hearing. "I was surprised at how weak their presentation was."

Jamail also attacked Texaco during the hearing, accusing the nation's third-largest oil company of using a media campaign made up of myths to overturn the verdict.

"It's another plea to another court for more sympathy," Jamail said. "They're still playing their game of mirrors.

"I think what these (Texaco) lawyers are telling us is how they would have liked to have the case tried," he told the panel of Justices James F. Warren, Jack Smith and Sam Bass.

Simon Rifkind, another Pennzoil attorney from New York, cited several cases of New York law in support of the Texas jury's verdict.

"It is as brazen an interference with another contract as I have ever seen," Rifkind said.

But Keeton contended Getty representatives encouraged Texaco to get involved.

Injunction issued against Coke purchase of Dr Pepper

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dr Pepper, the nation's No. 4 soft drink maker, is seeking another buyer now that a federal judge has put a hold on its merger with the industry leader, Coca-Cola.

"We would be interested in pursuing other interested parties," said Jim Ball, a spokesman for Dr Pepper in Dallas.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell issued the injunction Thursday at the request of the Federal Trade Commission, which objected to the proposed $470 million purchase on antitrust grounds.

Coke's brands account for 39 percent of the U.S. soft drink sales. Dr Pepper holds 7 percent of the national market, mostly in the South.

The injunction, preventing the takeover of DP Holding Inc., Dr Pepper's parent company, would remain in effect pending the outcome of FTC proceedings, which could take as long as several years, said commission spokeswoman Barbara Rosenfeld.

Coke announced Feb. 20 that it wanted to buy Dr Pepper after Pepsico Inc., the No. 2 soft drink maker, moved to acquire the No. 3 Seven-Up.

The FTC objected to both deals, contending they would reduce competition. After the FTC action, Pepsi acquired Seven-Up's foreign holdings, but abandoned plans to buy Seven-Up's U.S. operations. Coke, however, pursued its plan, resulting in the case before Gesell.

In its July 15 formal complaint, the FTC charged that the Coke-Dr Pepper merger would substantially lessen competition, making it more difficult for new firms to enter the market and more costly for existing firms to compete. The merger would likely lead to increased prices and restricted output of carbonated soft drinks, it said.

Jeffrey I. Zuckerman, director of the FTC's bureau of competition, said he was gratified by the court's decision, adding "It will help to ensure continuing competition in the carbonated soft drink industry to the benefit of American consumers."

The Gesell injunction is the second issued in the case. Royal Crown Cola Co. won a temporary injunction from U.S. District Judge J. Robert Elliott in Columbus, Ga. Elliott set an Aug. 25 trial date on Royal Crown's claim that the merger would stifle competition.

James W. Harralson, executive vice president and chief operating officer for Royal Crown, said the Gesell ruling confirms the decision in Georgia, adding, "Of course, we are pleased."

Coca-Cola officials were "disappointed with the court's decision," spokesman Randy Donaldson said, adding that officials had not reviewed the decision and would not comment further.

The FTC has scheduled a pre-hearing conference between the parties for Sept. 18. At that time, the starting date for hearings before an administrative law judge will be set. The administrative judge's decision can be appealed by either party to the full commission.

Dr Pepper's sales grew 8 percent last year. It was purchased by a group of investors for $650 million in 1984, but the buyers then sold off the company's Canada Dry division, nine bottling plants and some other assets.

USX suffers first strike in 27 years

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Picket lines began forming today at USX Corp. plants in nine states, as 22,000 workers began the first work stoppage against the nation's No. 1 steelmaker in 27 years.

The dispute, which the United Steelworkers union called a lockout and the company a strike, began after a 40-month contract expired at midnight Thursday. The sides failed to agree on a new pact, which also would cover 23,000 laid-off workers, in seven weeks of negotiations.

"We proposed to extend the agreement. Our proposal was rejected by the company. We are locked out," USW chief negotiator James N. McGeehan said early today.

USW President Lynn Williams joined about 200 workers outside USX's Clairton Works early this morning, shaking hands and offering encouragement.

The Steelworkers hung signs on telephone poles that read, "USWA Local Union Locked Out By USX," after being turned away by security guards at the plant gates when they tried to report to work at midnight.

Union members also took their positions this morning at the gates of the company's largest plant, in Gary, Ind., which employs 7,500 workers.

"We're going to war," Local 1014 Vice President Larry McWay told members gathered at a union hall near the Gary mill.

The union made an 11th-hour offer Thursday to continue working under the old contract and give USX, formerly U.S. Steel Corp., a 48-hour strike notice while talks continued. But USX chief negotiator J. Bruce Johnston flatly rejected the offer.

More state input sought in drilling mud study

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

A resolution calling for the federal government to include more state officials in its study of the hazards of drilling muds was unanimously passed by Interstate Oil Compact Commission (IOCC) at its midyear meeting in Anchorage, Alaska, earlier this month. Over 200 persons from 20 oil-producing states participated in the meeting.

The resolution calls upon the administrator of the Enivornmental Protection Agency to add appropriate IOCC representatives to the study's advisory group immediately. Texas is already represented on the advisory committee by Texas Railroad Commission director of underground injection control Jerry Mullican.

Under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA) Section 8002(m), hazardous waste exemptions were granted to oil and gas drilling muds and produced water. The EPA is currently conducting a congressionally-mandated study to determine whether those RCRA exemptions should continue.

The resolution also urges the EPA to direct its staff to consult with state oil and gas regulatory agencies and industry representatives during collection, analysis, review and completion of a draft study, and to "consider, incorporate, and/or respond to comments received from such state agencies and industry representatives."

IOCC member states are concerned that the study is restricted in scopeand that there are no apparent plans to utilize state or industry expertise in preparing or critiquing the report.

W. Timothy Dowd, IOCC executive director, says his group is not opposed to the study. "In fact, we are probably supportive of the study, or any study that would determine objectively if we have an environmental problem" he stated.

The resolution says classification of drilling muds and produced water as hazardous waste has the potential to increase drilling costs by such a factor as to eliminate the economic viablity of a great deal of exploration drilling.

The additional burden of hazardous waste handling could cost the nation the exploration incentive needed to find and develop its hydrocarbon resources, Dowd says.

OIL & GAS DIGEST

UPG Falco changes name to Enron Oil Trading

UPG Falco, one of the nation's leading purchasers and transporters of crude oil, refined fuels and pipeline condensates, has changed its name to Enron Oil Trading & Transportation Co. (EOTT), according to Mike Muckleroy, president of Enron Liquid Fuels Co.

Muckleroy said the new name, which became effective June 10, idnetifies the company with its parent Enron Corp., a multi-billion dollar diversified energy corporation headquartered in Houston. It also reflects EOTT's primary business of serving the crude oil marketing needs of its producing and refining customers.

The original discovery well, South Timbalier Block 245 No. 1, was drilled in 1984 to a depth of 18,000 ft. and logged 80 ft. of net natural gas pay in upper Pliocene sands.

Walker delays distribution pending refinancing

HOUSTON (SWN) — Walker Energy Partners (WEP) announced suspension of cash distributions for the quarter ended June 30.

John Walker, chairman and CEO, stated that the decision to suspend the second quarter distribution was based upon continued depressed oil and gas prices, the disruption of cash flow from Appalachian properties and the pending finalization of refinancing the company's long-term debt.

Negotiations for the refinancing, which includes an acquisition line of credit in excess of $30 million, are expected to be concluded very shortly.

Noble reports midyear results

ARDMORE, Okla. (SWN) — Noble Affiliates, Inc. reported a net loss from continuing oil and gas exploration and production operations for the 1986 second quarter and first half.

George J. McLeod, president and CEO, said, "The full effect of the precipitous decline in crude oil prices was realized during the second quarter of 1986."

For the three months ended June 30, the company had a loss from continuing operations of $4,274,000, or $.19 per share, on revenues of $27,659,000, compared with income from continuing operations of $5,772,000, or $.18 per share, on revenues of $44,964,000 in the same period of the previous year.

For the 1986 first half, the company had a loss from continuing operations of $2,189,000, or $.05 per share, on revenues of $70,186,000, compared with income from continuing operations of $11,849,000, or $.39 per share, on revenues of $91,970,000 in the first six months a year ago.

Noble Affiliates' 1986 revenues have been restated to reflect the spin-off of its contract drilling operations effective Oct. 1, 1985.

McLeod said the company's financial position remains strong. Efforts during the second quarter were concentrated on the exploration of existing discoveries, particularly in the offshore Gulf of Mexico area, he said. Meanwhile, the company is continuing its search for acquisitions and is currently evaluating numerous similar reserve purchases, McLeod added.

Leucadia National acquires 5.1 percent of Enron stock

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Leucadia National Corp. of New York says it has acquired 5.1 percent of Enron Corp.'s stock, a 2,286,000-share holding worth about $98 million.

In a report filed Monday with the Securities and Exchange Commission, Leucadia said it paid $93,164,696 for the stock of the Houston-based company over a 2½-month period. The total includes brokerage commissions, the company said.

An Enron spokesman in Omaha said the company had no comment.

Arthur B. Ralph, an attorney for Leucadia, said the company has previously competed against investor Irwin L. Jacobs of Minneapolis.

Jacobs has owned more than 5 percent of Enron's common stock since last fall. He said last week he has increased his stake in Enron to 11.4 percent. Jacobs also said he may seek control of Enron under certain circumstances.

Asked whether Leucadia would combine with Jacobs in a takeover attempt, Ralph said, "I doubt we'd go with Mr. Jacobs."

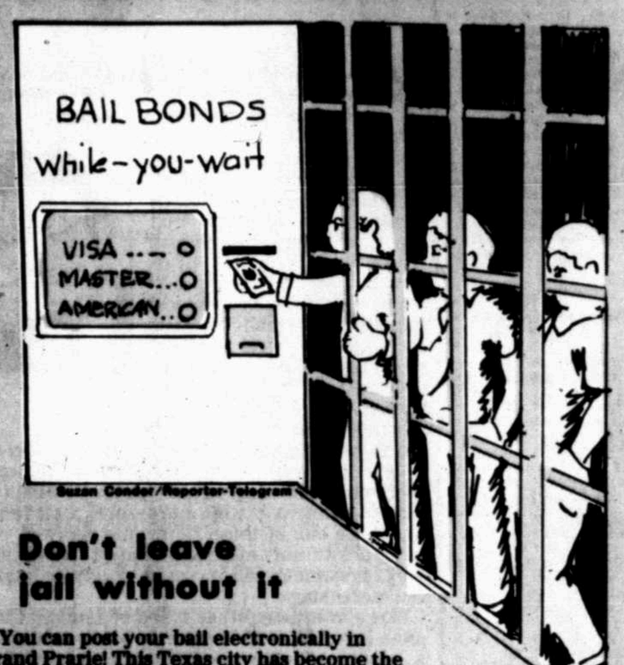
WHAT'S NEW IN BUSINESS



Susan Condor/Reporter-Telegram

Don't leave jail without it

You can post your bail electronically in Grand Prarie! This Texas city has become the first to adopt a state-of-the-art, high technology system for the posting of bail.

Using Cash Call, an electronic funds transfer service offered by FundsNet, Inc., you can post bail in Grand Prairie with Visa or MasterCard for misdemeanors or minor offenses.

The easy-to-adopt system requires only that the municipality's operator swipe the credit card through the Cash Call computer terminal and enter in the amount of funds needed using the terminal's key pad. In a matter of seconds, the computer will access the cardholder's credit line and, if funds are available, print out a check. Payment to the city is guaranteed by FundsNet and the transaction cannot be canceled by the cardholder.

The electronic funds transfer service not only saves an individual who needs to post bail from seeking the assistance of a family member, friend or even a bail bondsman, but saves Grand Prairie citizens the cost of housing and feeding a prisoner overnight.

Hammering out a living

Metalworker Jay Johnston is doing bang-up business fashioning customized suits of armor for those who yearn for the days of chivalry.

Johnston is armor artisan for the Society for Creative Anachronism, a nationwide group that enjoys clanking around in bulky steel suits recreating the days of the knights.

"I've wanted to be a knight in shining armor since I was a little kid," says the Ann Arbor, Mich.-based metalworker. Customers usually come to this Annandale Armoury for several fittings, with Johnston literally hammering out any adjustments in the fit of the suit.

Typically, the stylish knight can expect to pay $800 to $1,000 for simple fighting armor, the medieval equivalent of Army fatigues.

What's in a name?

Naming companies traditionally had been an easy task, one that did not involve the use of computers or expensive consultants.

Silicon Valley lore has it two computer company founders became so frustrated about naming their companies that they decided to call one NBI (Nothing But Initials) and the other Tolfan (Tired of Looking For a Name).

Creating new words can be easier than trying to make a name of existing words, consultants said, because most real words already have been registered as trademarks.

Sometimes the search for creative company names proves embarrassing.

When Houston Natural Gas Corp. merged with InterNorth Inc. last year, the two companies wanted a new name.

After many meetings with executives of the newly merged energy company, the name makers proposed a list of three names, topped by Enteron Corp.

But before the shareholders could vote, it was discovered that enteron has an English meaning. The Greek-rooted word means the alimentary tract, or the passage that food takes through the human body as it is digested, beginning at the mouth and extending to points South. The company quickly became the butt of jokes throughout the financial community once the meaning got out.

The board settled on a second choice: Enron Corp. "It has no meaning other than what we make it mean," said Nancy Davis, a spokeswoman for the Houston-based energy company.

Building permits indicate state of Midland economy

From Staff Reports

Twenty building permits valued at $329,850 were issued during the week of July 21 and July 25, bringing the month's total to approximately $1.9 million.

According to the F.W. Dodge Division of McGraw-Hill Information Systems, which tracks local construction activity, total building activity for June 1986 was down 27 percent compared to June 1985 levels.

June nonresidential construction was up 55 percent, but residential building was down 65 percent when compared with 1985 levels. On a cumulative basis, total construction activity is off 53 percent from 1985 levels, with nonresidential construction down 58 percent and residential construction down 49 percent.

The week's permits include permits for two new homes: Robert Graham Construction is building a new home at 3403 Woodhaven, valued at $90,000; Greg Frazier is constructing a new residence at 4904 Island Drive, valued at $180,000.

Permits for residential alteration and repair were issued to Homeowner, 4324 Harvard, $1,500; Paul Sanchez, 718 N. Jackson, $600; Permian Basin Builders, 3110 W. Kansas, $600; Warren Wallace, 1500 Bedford, $15,000; Homeowner, 300 S. Tilden, $700; and Homeowner, 3322 Providence, $4,500.

The homeowner at 1908 Morgan Way was issued a permit for a residential detached accessory, valued at $500.

Fencing permits were issued to I.W. Borem, 1301 W. Illinois, $600; two to Harold B. Shull, for 2110 W. Michigan, $100, and 2104 W. Tennessee, $100; Homeowner, 908 N. Edwards, $300; Homeowner, 1904 N. Lamesa, $600; Mike BOve, 214 W. Texas, $250; and Homeowner, 4626 Brookdale, $200.

Crown Gunite took out a permit for a swimming pool for 4405 Westminster, valued at $12,500.

Permits for commercial alteration and repair were issued to Bill Shields, 315 N. Midland Drive, $8,000, and to Raney Design, 1900 W. Texas, $11,000.

The city issued a permit for a sign to Permian Sign, 3323 N. Midland Drive No. 104, valued at $2,800.

Michael Evans, head of Evans Economics, a Washington forecasting firm, said without a decline in the trade deficit, manufacturing and business investment spending in this country will remain weak. He said he expected growth in the last half of this year would slump even further to an anemic 2 percent annual rate.

But David Berson, an economist at Wharton Econometrics of Philadelphia, said he believed the economy would start to pick up with the GNP expanding at an annual rate of 3.9 percent in the final three months of the year.

He said he believed that the trade deficit will begin to show some signs of improving and thus will be less of a drag on the overall economy.

"We are not in the group which is looking for the economy to slump into a recession," he said. "We still think all of the signs are there for a pickup later this year and even

TEXACO

"There are no agreements, there are no contracts. You are free to come in and we want you to come in. If you want to make an offer, come in now," he said Getty representatives told Texaco.

Texaco attorneys also argued the trial instructions to the jury were slanted in Pennzoil's favor and that the presiding judge misapplied New York law. The New York law is an issue because discussions of the mergers were held in New York.

State District Judge Solomon Casseb Jr., who stepped in as presiding trial judge when Judge Anthony Farris became ill, upheld the damage award and added another $600 million in interest.

Since the November award, the total has been gaining interest at a rate of $3 million a day, for a total of $708 million.

In February, Casseb refused to overturn the jury verdict, effectively denying Texaco's request for a new trial. Texaco then filed with the 1st Court of Appeals.

Thursday's appeals hearing drew so much attention from stockbrokers, reporters, law students, attorneys and others that the usual 40-seat courtroom used by the appeals court was abandoned in favor of a 750-seat South Texas College of Law auditorium.

The auditorium was filled to capacity and another adjacent room held 250 people, who watched on large television monitors.

Pennzoil Chairman Hugh Liedtke said after Thursday's hearing that he had expected more from Texaco's side.

"I thought that our side was presented in a very strong manner, and I was surprised at the weakness in their case," Liedtke said.

James W. Kinnear, vice chairman of Texaco's board, said nothing was said to change his conviction that "Texaco acted properly, legally and in accordance of the highest standards."

The panel could affirm the judgment, order a new trial or send disputed points back to the lower court for rehearing. If the judgment is affirmed, Texaco could appeal to the Texas Supreme Court.

The question of the bond Texaco had to post to appeal the case is still pending.

STRIKE

"The real purpose of (the) offer seems transparent," he said. "It attempts to convert the coming strike by the United Steelworkers into a legal fiction of lockout, thus aiding union-member claims for unemployment compensation."

USW spokesman Gary Hubbard said the union was "so desperate to reach an agreement ... we were willing to risk our tradition of no-contract, no-work."

But Hubbard said Thursday's offer could prompt some state labor officials to rule the work stoppage a lockout rather than a strike, which would qualify workers for unemployment compensation.

"All we're interested in is getting unemployment compensation," he said. "Out of nine states, if we can get half of them, why not?"

Unemployment compensation, along with the union's $210 million strike fund, could help support a lengthy work stoppage.

USX chairman David M. Roderick said Wednesday the company needed cuts of $2 to $3 an hour in its labor costs of $25.20 an hour to make it competitive with other major steel producers.

The union's proposal included a wage freeze and a small reduction in health benefits.

McGeehan said the company overstated its own labor costs — the union estimates them at $24.05 an hour — and underestimates those of its competitors, several of whom already have gotten concessions from the Steelworkers union.

The sides also disagree on language about subcontracting, McGeehan said.

In anticipation of a strike, USX began last week idling nearly all blast furnaces and other production facilities at its steel division mills across the nation. "There's no work scheduled, so there's no reason to go to the mills," said USX spokesman David Higie.

The work stoppage affects the active workers at 50 USW locals in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Texas, Alabama, Utah, Illinois, Minnesota and Michigan. Another 23,000 workers are covered by the contract but are laid off.

It is the first such action against USX since a record 116-day walkout in 1959 that shut down the nation's largest steelmakers.

City heat has electricity, water use hitting record

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Midlanders are using record amounts of electricity and water due to a week of 100-degree plus temperatures, local utility officials say.

Midland has topped the 100-degree mark for the past week, with only one 99-degree day on Monday, says Constantine Pashos with the National Weather Service.

Records for electricity use have been broken every day this week, says Stan Garrison, customer service manager with the Texas Electric Company.

The record set on Aug. 19, 1985, for 15,898 megawatts was broken Monday when consumption hit 16,236 megawatts, Garrison said.

On Tuesday the record was broken again when it hit 16,330 megawatts. Use went up on Wednesday to 16,537 megawatts and on Thursday use went down to 16,506 megawatts.

Although the record has not been broken, the city water department reports the highest peak so far this year with 37 million gallons of water used Monday, said Brent Payne, assistant director of utilities.

"We haven't broken any records because of the rainfall we had earlier," Payne said.

The record peak was 38 million gallons set on July 2, 1983, he said.

The department has been averaging about 35 million gallons of water a day, Payne said.

While it's been hot, many people are not seeking shelter at the Salvation Army or the community center Casa De Amigos, say center directors.

The Salvation Army's overnight shelter that houses about 30 people has been full, but not because of the heat, said Major Harvey Harwell.

The poor economy, domestic violence and people with no where else to go are filling the shelter up, Harwell said.

If the heat continues, however, Harwell says he suspects more people will start coming to the shelter during the day.

"We're thinking about setting up a dorm-type thing so they can come in and get out of the heat," Harwell said.

Midland Memorial Hospital and Physicians and Surgeons Hospital report no heat stroke or heat exhaustion patients during the past week.

Despite almost one week of 100-degree plus temperatures, the record for consecutive 100-degree days has not been broken, Pashos said.

The unbroken record, set in 1964, occurred when temperatures were 100 degrees or above for a 12-day period from June 30 to July 11, Pashos said.

The record was matched in 1981 when Midland went for 12 consecutive days with 100 degree temperatures from July 14 to July 25, he said.

Permian Basin High School chooses new administrator

From Staff Reports

Bryan Parnell

The Board of Directors of Permian Basin High School has named Bryan Parnell new school administrator.

Parnell, a two-year resident of Midland, has 34 years of teaching and administrative experience at both the public school and college level.

He earned a bachelor degree from Southeast Missouri State University and a master's degree from the University of Michigan. He also completed post-graduate work at Indiana University and the University of Evansville.

In addition to 12 years experience at the high school level, Parnell has served in various capacities at the college level, holding ranks of assistant professor, associate professor and professor.

He has served as a department chairman, division chairman and dean of Oakland City College in Indiana and as acting president while employed with Wabash Valley College in Illinois.

Parnell said he has known many students during his career who "got lost" in mass education and could have profitted by highly individualized and personalized attention had such a facility been available.

PBHS is a private, fully-accredited, non-sectarian junior and senior high school. The school advocates and utilizes a one teacher-one student ratio in the basic classes of English, math, science and social studies.

The administrator explained PBHS students normally take two basic subjects on Monday and Wednesday and two other subjects on Tuesday and Thursday.

A study lab between classes immediately follows all regular class work.

At the eighth grade level, students have a choice of attending a "traditional" schedule of five full days of classes or the student may elect the alternate day plan similar to high school schedules.

This fall PBHS will inaugurate a seventh grade program in which students will follow a traditional five-day schedule.

PBHS follows a calendar similar to other Midland schools.

"For one reason or another, students who attend PBHS often find that they progress farther and faster than they did while attending school elsewhere," Parnell said.

Midland's cocaine problem described currently as 'acute'

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Although officials say cocaine use in the Midland area is increasing, efforts by the Midland Police and Midland County Sheriff's office to curb the drug have resulted in only 11 grand jury indictments this year.

According to the agencies, about 40 arrests for cocaine possession or possession with intent to deliver have been made so far this year.

The Midland County District Clerk's office has 11 felony indictments for cocaine offenses on record for the year.

Four sentences have been handed down in 1986 for delivery of the drug, ranging from nine to 15 years in state prison. Three possession cases resulted in probationary sentences, two for six years and one for five years.

Three indictments for cocaine possession were dismissed, and one jury trial resulted in a not guilty verdict.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre describes the cocaine problem as "acute." He acknowledged most of the cases handled by his office have been for small amounts, but said authorities here eventually will tap a large supplier, like the arrest last month in Hobbs, N.M., where more than a half-ton of cocaine was confiscated.

"Most of the cases have been relatively small," Schorre said. "By the time we get the cases, they are ususally broken down into 'street sizes.' It's just a matter of slowly working into more major suppliers.

"There are a lot of cocaine cases that have been made by the various law enforcement agencies in the area," Schorre said.

"But from all appearances the problem is getting worse."

Schorre said his office will not offer probation in plea-bargain agreements except in cases where very small amounts are involved.

Sgt. Jim Newsom, sheriff's office investigator, said only about a third of the department's 103 narcotic arrests since the first of the year have been for cocaine. But he said the number could have been much higher.

"At first we thought heroin was a bigger problem, but we just recently started what you might call a war on cocaine," Newsom said. "We could be making as many arrests for cocaine, because there is as much cocaine in the area as heroin."

Newsom was involved in an arrest a week ago when sheriff's officers arrested a woman for possession of several grams. Newsom had said at the scene he expected to confiscate at least several ounces, but said because it is used in such small quantities, cocaine is easy to hide and dispose of (28 grams equals an ounce).

The cocaine found in that arrest was hidden inside a plastic flashlight in a metal storage shed.

Police say cocaine users and suppliers are notoriously difficult to apprehend, because they are usually affluent and tend never to be seen on the street.

"The cocaine business is more difficult to infiltrate than your normal group," said Det. Sgt. Mike Reed, MPD narcotics officer. "It's not the same group you are involved with in the use of marijuana, heroin, or pills. And, it's definitely on the upswing.

"It is a very lucrative business, and when economic times are bad, like now, people will do what they can, whatever they can, to save their homes and their businesses."

Reed said because of the drug's expense ($100 a gram and up) the user and distributor of cocaine fits a rough model: white, upper class, age from the mid-20's to the mid-30's.

Reed said much of the cocaine in the city, like much of the heroin, comes across the border from Mexico.

He said officers that work the streets are also seeing "much more" cocaine on a daily basis. He said "crack," a purified solid form of cocaine that is smoked to obtain a quicker and more intense high, is appearing in parts of the city, especially in minority neighborhoods where the common white powder has until now been too expensive.

Newsom also said crack, which costs only $10 or so per "hit," has begun to appear in less affluent areas of the county.

Sgt. David Cobos of the sheriff's office, who helps coordinate Midland Crime Stoppers, feels cocaine is a growing menace.

"Based simply on Crime Stoppers information, we feel the narcotics situation, cocaine as well as heroin, is on the upswing," Cobos said. "Cocaine is more of a problem right now, whereas two months ago the big problem may have been heroin."

Cobos said 60 to 70 percent of the calls received by Crime Stoppers are narcotic-related, and 90 percent of those are cocaine or heroin related.

Cobos, like Reed, said the Permian Basin's economic woes have contributed to the increased use of cocaine. He said what once was the user may also now be the seller.

An official with the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) in Midland said although the national problem with cocaine is worsening, Midland is "cleaner" than the average city. The official, who did not want to be identified, credited the police and sheriff's department and the Department of Public Safety with keeping the Midland area's streets more drug-free.

Dr. Joseph Wolpmann, medical director at Clearview, said it is difficult to gauge cocaine use by using the number of abusers he treats, because cocaine addiction may take several years to develop.

But, he said "probably what we're seeing here is an increase in people coming here for treatment of the use and abuse of cocaine."

Wolpmann said the recent deaths of former University of Maryland basketball star Len Bias and Cleveland Browns defensive back Don Rogers hopefully have awakened the public to the dangers of cocaine, and especially to crack.

"It is a very insidious drug — it is a trap," he said. "With crack, it is so potent and so highly addictive. It is also relatively cheap, just a few dollars.

"Saying we are clean or cleaner than a city such as Houston is putting your head in the sand," Wolpmann said. "The proportionate risk is always as great. The risk is 50-50 every time you use it.

"We need to get out to the community the fact that cocaine is dangerous, dangerous, dangerous," Wolpmann said.

Six legged frog a 'freak of nature'

By HOLLY LONGABERGER
Staff Writer

It is a frog only Miss Piggy could love.

With fully developed five hind legs and a stump, plus two normal front legs, the frog is very unique.

"And, man, can it jump," says Midlander Paul Dowling.

His two sons, Jim and Cal, ages 10 and 13 respectively, and their friend, Paul Howard, 8, found the frog Wednesday at Saddle Club North Lake Addition.

"It is unique because it is living. Most of the time these 'freaks of nature' do not live" Dowling said.

The boys were catching frogs at the lake to feed to their pet ducks at home. They have been doing it for several years but this was the first time they have run into anything this unique.

Dowling said it was not until later that day when the boys discovered the freaky frog.

"It was basically supposed to be a triplet, but it didn't develop like it was suppose to," Dowling, a science teacher at Midland and Lee High Schools, explained.

The frog, he added, was a Leopard Frog which usually measures about six inches. This frog measures about three inches.

The boys are going to keep the frog as long as possible. When it dies, Dowling said, they will probably put it in formaldehyde.

As of now the frog is residing at the Howard residence in Midland.

Retired banker pleads 'not guilty' to charges

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Retired Midland banker William Hoyle McCright Jr., who was indicted July 22 on four counts of bank fraud, has been released on his personal recognizance after he pleaded "not guilty" to the charges before U.S. Magistrate Darrell F. Smith.

McCright, 61, could be sentenced to a maximum of 20 years in prison and fined $25,000 if he is convicted on the four counts of embezzlement and misapplication of funds, fraudulently participating in a $1.925-million bank loan, and making false bank reports and entries.

"I have not done anything wrong," McCright said.

Trial date has not been set by U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

McCright, who is president of the Midland College board of trustees, retired in 1982 from The First National Bank of Midland (FNB-Midland) where he was executive vice president and a director. He had been associated with the bank, which failed on Oct. 14, 1983, for 34 years.

Smith said McCright was released on his personal recognizance under the federal Bail Reform Act.

"It is required that a defendant be released on his personal recognizance unless he poses a danger — a threat — to the community, unless he is charged with a crime that involves drugs (controlled substances) and entails a possible sentence of 10 years or more, and unless there is a flight risk," the magistrate said.

The federal grand jury alleged that McCright embezzled and misaplied $1.925-million in 1981 — two years before the bank failed —, that he shared in $330,000 through a loan of $1.925-million, and that he in 1982 made false entries in bank reports. McCright's defense attorney in the case is Ted Kerr of Midland.

Since 1985, McCright became the sixth former Midland-Odessa banker to be indicted as a result of Federal Bureau of Investigation probes into banking procedures in the Midland-Odessa area.

Last month, Olen Mack Brock, 49, former FNB-Midland vice president and loan officer, was indicted on three counts of embezzlement and fraud in 1981. If convicted, he could be sentenced up to 15 years in prison.

Four ex-bankers, including three former bank presidents, have been convicted by federal juries in Midland of embezzlement and bank fraud and were sentenced by Bunton to prison terms from 10 years to 24 years. All together, they were ordered to pay more than $1.72-million in restitution.

Those convicted included Eddie Thomas, 43, ex-president of the failed MetroBank at Midland Regional Airport; Max Malone, 53, former president of the defunct Permian Bank & Trust in Odessa; Bill Tapp, 42, former president of Bank of the West in Odessa; and Roger Harris Clark, 43, an engineer who was a former director of Permian Bank & Trust and was owner of manufacturing companies in Odessa and Tulsa.

Assistant U.S. Attorney James K. "Jim" Blankinship, who successfully prosecuted Clark, Malone and Tapp, also is to prosecute Brock and McCright. Assistant U.S. Attorney Wayne Speck of San Antonio prosecuted Thomas early in 1985 before Blankinship was named the resident federal prosecutor for the Midland-Odessa Division of the federal court system's Western District of Texas.

"Juries in the Permian Basin have delivered the same message," Blankinship said earlier. "You'd think that bankers and ex-bankers out there who have abused their positions would have received the message: 'Corrupt banking will not be tolerated.'"

MMH board seeks bare bones budget

From Staff Reports

Midland Memorial Hospital's Board of Trustees requested Midland County Hospital District Directors to adopt a 1986-87 budget that would not require a tax increase of more than 3 percent.

The request, made at the trustees' and directors' monthly meeting Thursday, met with approval from W.S. Parks Jr., M.D., president of the board of directors, who said the estimated district budget, so far, appeared to be within that limit.

Directors said the proposed budget would be presented at the next meeting Aug. 28.

The MMH Board of Governors presented a check to the hospital for $652,000 for continued improvements to the radiology department.

The check upped the total raised by the board to $2.2 million and leaves them less than $800,000 from their goal of $3 million, Paul Deitz, MMH Development director said.

Dr. Charles Younger and Dr. Richard Reese were appointed new trustees at the meeting.

Ray Branson, MMH president, announced the hospital had received the highest possible rating from a Medicare survey that rates hospital standards of those eligible for Medicare benefits.

Couples launch new wine making venture in Grayson County

By JOHN CLIFT

GUNTER (AP) — When Tiffany Greaves gave her husband, Tom, a winemaking kit for Christmas some 20 years ago in California, she never dreamed it would turn into a business in Texas.

"Our backyard was filled with grapevines and I thought Tom would enjoy the kit," she said, recalling the long-ago Christmas.

Greaves didn't stop with the kit, but went to several California colleges to study the art of winemaking.

Now, he will be the winemaker for a new venture he and his wife, together with Don and Ruby Prescott, have launched — the Preston Trail Winery.

The Greaves have 12 acres in grapes that were planted five years ago. The Prescotts have seven acres. The two vineyards are located in Grayson County near Gunter. The winery is located a block from the Hilltop Rest Home in Gunter, with the vineyard in the same area.

Among the grapes under cultivation are Chardonnay, Cabernet Sauvignon, Riesling, Sauvignon Blanc, Barbara and Pinot Noir.

The two couples originally were with the Texas Vineyards at Ivanhoe when that co-op was created. In fact, Greaves is a former president of Texas Vineyards.

"However, we decided we wanted our own little boutique winery. It will be small, even when compared to the Ivanhoe winery," Mrs. Greaves said.

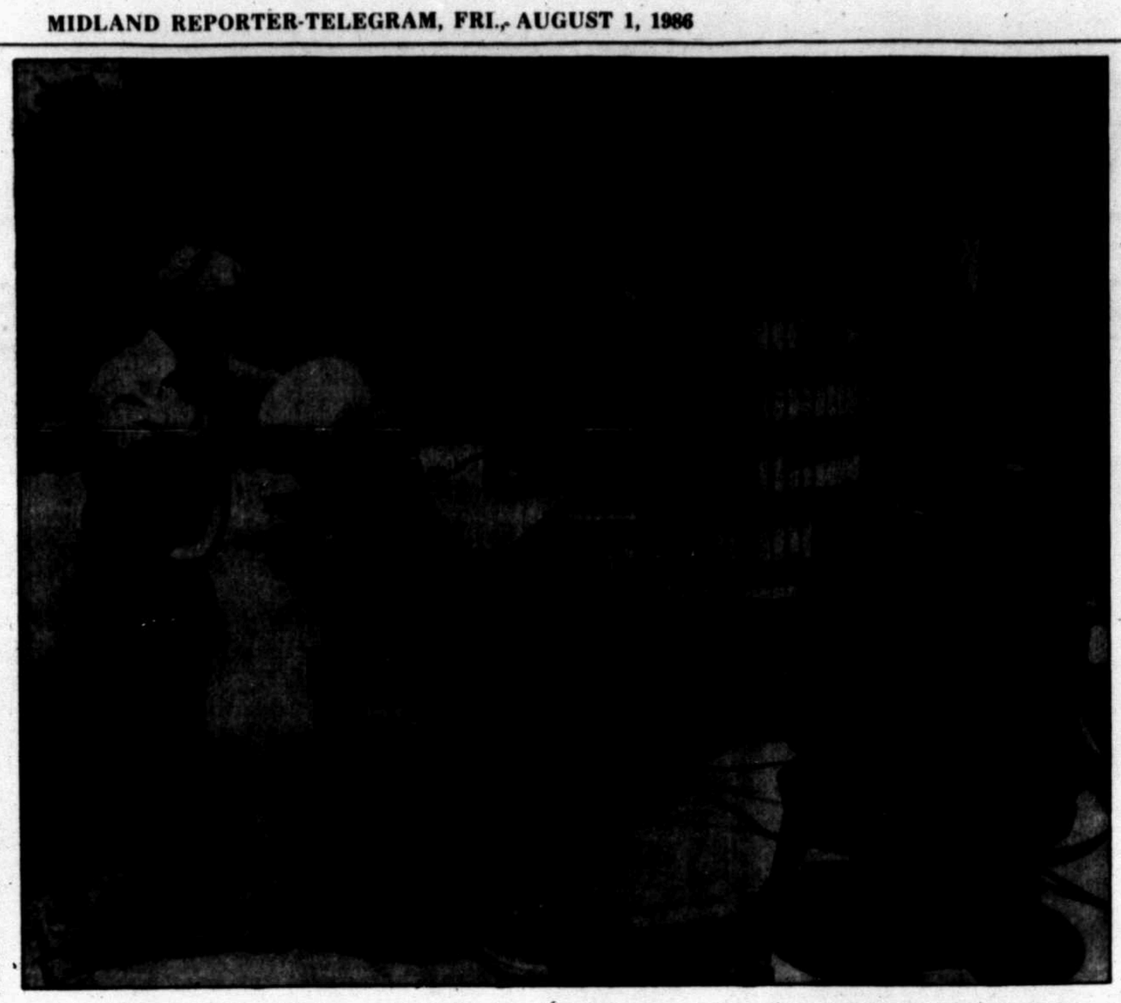
They hope to bottle 1,400 gallons this year and more than 10,000 gallons as their vines mature.

They decided to locate in Grayson County after reading about the late Thomas Volney Munson, and talking with Dr. Roy Renfro and Jack Dempsey of Grayson College.

"We also are history buffs. We wanted to be on the historic old Preston Trail. In fact, you can see the vineyards and winery building from Highway 289, which is the route of the old Preston trail," Mrs. Greaves explained.

Mrs. Greaves said they have learned that the Preston Trail was commissioned as a military route in 1840 and was a major southbound route for immigrants to Texas. After the Civil War it became a major northbound route for cattle drives.

Mrs. Greaves said their children help out in the vineyards, including grape picking this month. The fledging winery plans to buy grapes grown in the area to augment their early production.



Tom Greaves, a winemaker from Gunter, pours a bucket of grapes into a destemmer before sending the grapes to a press at the Grayson County winery recently. Greaves and his wife and another couple have about 19 acres of vineyard.

Teachers who failed competency test in March passed on second try in June

AUSTIN (AP) — About 71 percent of the Texas teachers and administrators who failed a competency test in March passed on their second try in June, the Texas Education Agency said today.

A total of 1,199 teachers failed both tests and won't be allowed to teach next year unless their school districts obtain a special, one-year extension.

The passing rates for ethnic groups on the second Texas Examination of Current Administrators and Teachers showed 95.4 percent of the black educators passed, 98.9 percent of Hispanics and 99.9 percent of whites, the TEA said.

Odessa man wanted since April in city's jail on several charges

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 23-year-old man, wanted since April 30 on an Ector County grand jury indictment alleging delivery of methamphetamines, was in the city jail today pending arraignment on several charges in munucipal court.

William Thomas Richardson, 7506 Mockingbird Lane, No. 7, suffered multiple lacerations and abrasions early today when he apparently lost control of his 1986 motorcycle while trying to elude police officers who attempted to stop him on a traffic violation, police said.

According to police spokesman Sgt. Frank Beam, officers tried to stop Richardson near the intersection of Parkway and Oakwood about 2:36 a.m. Richardson accelerated and hit a curb, throwing him and a passenger, Doris Jean Blackwell, from the motorcycle. Neither was wearing a helmet or other protective gear, Beam said.

Richardson and Ms. Blackwell, who suffered only minor injuries, were treated at Medical Center Hospital and released, according to an MCH nursing supervisor.

Beam said an identification check of Richardson by patrol officers B.J. Myrick and T.J. Davis showed Richardson was wanted by Ector County authorities on an outstanding grand jury indictment.

Richardson had been indicted April 30 on a charge of delivery of a controlled substance (methamphetamines) with bond set by 358th District Judge Bill McCoy at $10,000.

Police report apartment, Texaco station burglary

From Staff Reports

The Midland Police Department is investigating the Thursday burglary of an apartment. Jerry Eukich, 1003 S. Midkiff Rd., told police $1,000 cash, clothing valued at $500, and a .25 caliber automatic pistol valued at $65 were stolen from his apartment.

Police are looking for a suspect in the case, described as a black male, approximately 48 years of age, five feet nine inches tall, weighing about 180 pounds.

Police are also investigating the burglary of Reed Industries Texaco station, 3301 Andrews Hwy., which apparently occurred sometime between 10:30 p.m. Wednesday and 5 a.m. Thursday. Eighty cartons of cigarettes valued at $730 and at least 10 cases of beer were reported stolen.

In other reports, a five-inch portable television set valued at $200 and $10 in quarters were reported stolen Thursday from a Midland residence in the 2600 block of N. Loop 250. Marshal Hughes told police the burglary apparently occurred between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Reports said a door on the north side of the residence was pried open to gain entry.

Thomas, who currently is serving a 20-year prison sentence, was ordered by Bunton to pay $550,000 in restitution. Malone was sentenced to 24 years in prison and was ordered to pay $317,410.71 in restitution. Tapp was sentenced to 20 years in prison and was ordered to pay $481,565.02 in restitution. Clark was sentenced to 10 years in prison and was ordered to pay $378,317.65 in restitution. Thomas did not appeal his conviction. The others are appealing their convictions and are free.

McCright, a graduate of the Southwestern Graduate School of Banking at Southern Methodist University, ended his 34-year career with FNB-Midland in 1982, when he retired.

The 93-year-old FNB-Midland, which was Texas' largest independent bank, failed on Oct. 14, 1983. Subsequently, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC) took over the bank's assets.

Since mid-1983, four Midland-Odessa banks have failed in wake of the energy slump and depressed economy: FNB-Midland, MetroBank at Midland Regional Airport, National Bank of Odessa, and, just recently, Permian Bank & Trust of Odessa.

McCright, who has been active in community affairs, has served on the Midland College board of trustees since 1973.

Midland cyclists join pilgrimage to Pantex Nuclear Weapons Plant

From Staff Reports

Five Midlanders are participating in the third annual Bicycle Pilgrimage to the Pantex Nuclear Weapons Plant in Amarillo. The trip coincides with the anniversaries of the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, which occurred 41 years ago.

According to a press release from Basin Peace & Justice, the local cyclists' sponsor, the purpose of the pilgrimage is to educate people in towns along the way about nuclear weapons, point out the "deadly connection between nuclear power and waste, militarism and the arms race" and conduct a "peace witness" at the Amarillo plant.

Groups from Austin and Houston are also cycling to Amarillo for the pilgrimage and Peace Camp, which will be established outside the plants' gates.

The Houston group will arrive in Midland Monday afternoon. A press conference and "town meeting," hosted by BPJ, is scheduled for 6 p.m. Monday at Our Lady of Guadalupe Church, 1204 Cherry Lane. A slide show of last year's pilgrimage also will be presented.

On Tuesday, at 9 a.m., the five Midlanders — Kathryn Bowers, Peter Clark, David Clark, Mike Gray and Alan Harbert — and the Houston cyclists will leave for Amarillo from the Federal Building parking lot on Wall Avenue. Their first overnight stop will be in Lamesa.

Moths often become nuisance to rural homeowners

Night-flying moths, primarily cutworm moths, often become a nuisance to homeowners in the springtime of the year in the state of Texas. This is especially true for homes located in rural areas or near populated areas. The moths are attracted to light and are sometimes referred to as "candlemoths."

Control of night-flying moths attracted to light is a very difficult matter, and is not accomplished by following a simple set of rules. However, a number of steps can be taken and any one of the steps, alone or in combination with others, may provide relief under favorable conditions.

Step one: Reduce the attraction of the site.

Step two: Intercept the moths before they reach the site.

Step three: Exclude the moths from the house.

Step four: Destroy the moths which gain entrance into the house.

Reduce the attraction of house or buildings through proper light management. This step often provides substantial relief. Indirect lighting should be used where practical so that the source of light is shielded from the areas in which the moths may come. Light fixtures inside the buildings should be placed so that moths outside cannot see the lamp itself.

There is little evidence that any light is repellent to insects, but yellow is the least attractive to most insects.

During periods of heavy moth flights, outside lighting should be maintained at a minimum level.

Interception of insects before they become a nuisance has some possibilities for success. Placement of insect light traps at least 100 feet away from house or building will aid in attraction and capture of moths.

Exclusion of insects from houses or buildings involves proper screening of windows and doors. Screens should fit tightly. Air vents and ventilating ducts also require screening.

Some degree of control can be obtained with sprays of household insecticides applied to places where moths collect and rest outside, such as door frames, window sills, carports, porches and garages. Since the moths do not feed on anything where they are resting and they are protected by a heavy coating of scales, sprays will not provide any immediate or spectacular results. Ready-to-use household spray formulations of Diazinon and Baygon may be applied to resting sites and cracks and crevices where moths may enter buildings. Follow label instructions for "nuisance pest" control applying the sprays. Adding a commercial wetting agent or a teaspoon of liquid detergent per gallon of mixed spray will increase the effectiveness of the spray.

Destruction of moths inside the house or building is often accomplished with the use of a vacuum cleaner. A household pyrethrin aerosol spray will provide control of moths inside a room.

Please check the label on the insecticide container for instructions on dosage rates, in mixing and on applying the material.

Americans use agriculture hotline to help support drought-stricken farmers

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hundreds of Americans, including many from cities, are volunteering money, hay and moral support to drought-stricken farmers in the Southeast by calling the Agriculture Department's toll-free hotline, officials say.

"It's amazing," said John McClung, USDA's director of information. "Most calls now are about hay, from people who want to give hay or want to arrange transportation for it. Some city people want to give money, but we've had to tell them there's no way we can accept it. We refer them to the states."

The hotline was announced last week and went into operation last Friday. There were about 750 calls that day, many inquiring about the aid programs described by Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng.

The USDA phones also were staffed on Saturday, when about 300 calls were received. There were 500 on Monday and 300 on Tuesday.

When the calls began, about 90 percent involved hay, mostly from people wanting to donate it, Dave Lane, Lyng's deputy press secretary, said Wednesday. By Tuesday those calls dropped to about 75 percent, with most inquiring about transportation and how feed could be shipped to the Southeast.

When Lyng announced last week what USDA hoped to offer in the way of assistance to the stricken region, the focus was mostly on existing federal programs and how those would be adjusted to help drought victims.

Lyng began this week to designate specific counties in the various drought states where farmers could apply for low-interest emergency loans from the Farmers Home Administration.

And on Capitol Hill, legislation to put more muscle in the government's drought aid began to bubble, including measures to require USDA's donation of surplus feed grain or commodity certificates for use by farmers in obtaining livestock and poultry feed.

Lawmakers said that voluntary help, no matter how laudable, will not be enough to sustain the hard-hit farm families in the battered region extending from Pennsylvania to Florida, where losses have totaled nearly $2 billion so far.

The USDA's toll-free number, open between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. EDT Monday through Friday, is 1-800-433-0703.

Although department officials say they were impressed by the number of calls handled, those did not come close to some of the call-ins of the past that were arranged by some private agricultural groups.

In the spring of 1982, for example, the privately supported Agriculture Council of America logged more than 2,200 callers in 10 hours from people wanting to comment on the sagging U.S. farm economy. The call-in was co-sponsored by Farmland Industries of Kansas City, one of the nation's largest farm cooperatives.

Brian King, an Agriculture Council official, said the telephone company reported that about 1.9 million calls had been attempted that day, although only 2,200 were actually handled.

WASHINGTON (AP) — In Britain, it's soybean oil, and in West Germany it's popcorn that has enjoyed a consumer push from U.S. advocates.

The Agriculture Department says the American Soybean Association has been promoting its wares in the United Kingdom for several years, with impressive results. One result has been a greater public recognition of soybean oil in certain consumer products.

"Although soybean oil was available on British supermarket shelves, oil processors were blending low-cost soybean oil with other vegetable oils and then selling it to consumers as unidentified vegetable, cooking or salad oils," according to Foreign Agriculture magazine published by USDA's Foreign Agricultural Service.

The association's office in Brussels designed a program to increase consumer recognition of soybean oil as a premier, high-quality food product. As a result, 73 percent of Britain's major grocery stores now carry cooking oils made with soybean oil, according to Dennis Blankenship, head of the association's Brussel's office.

"And consumer use of cooking oils, which are identified on the bottle as soybean oil, has increased 32 percent in volume and 57 percent in value," he said.

The Safeway food chain now labels its house brand of cooking oil as "pure soya oil" instead of the previous "vegetable oil" label, Blankenship said. Safeway is one of 18 soybean oil marketers that now identify products as soybean oil.

Lake George, others on West Coast becoming victims of quiet invader

AGRICULTURE

LAKE GEORGE, N.Y. (AP) — Around this glacial lake, along waterways in Tennessee, on the West Coast and elsewhere, people are talking about the invader.

It appeared quietly in the ice-blue waters of Lake George last fall and sprouted over the winter. Now, according to some residents, it threatens to engulf beaches, attract disease and sully the 32-mile-long lake, once described by Thomas Jefferson as "the most beautiful water I ever saw."

The invader is Eurasian milfoil — a feathery red and green plant introduced in U.S. waters about 45 years ago. A tame weed in Europe, it has exploded in American lakes, scientists say, seizing thousands of acres of water and spawning a multimillion-dollar effort to control it.

"It is an invasion," said Dr. Charles Boylen, director of the Fresh Water Institute at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y. "The plant is very aggressive."

In Lake George, the weed is concentrated in three beds totaling only about four acres. But, Boylen said, it could cover 100 acres by fall if nothing is done.

"The business community is seriously alarmed," said Mary Arthur Beebe, executive director of the Lake George Association. "I cannot see tourists flocking to an area where the beaches are, green, smelly and unattractive."

Once the weed has a foothold, she noted, "there aren't many success stories" in fighting it.

Just 30 miles south of Lake George, Eurasian milfoil has infested the rim of Saratoga Lake to the point where authorities must use a harvester — a sort of giant underwater lawn mower — to shave paths for boats.

In the South, the weed has filled in 11,400 acres in Tennessee Valley Authority waterways since an unsuspecting dock owner, trying to beautify the water, introduced the weed 30 years ago, according to TVA biologist Leon Bates. The bill for weed control is now $1.5 million a year.

On the West Coast, Seattle faces a growing milfoil problem in sparkling Lake Washington, where the plant spreads at the rate of about 6 percent a year and now occupies nearly 1,500 acres, said regional water quality planner Judy Bevington.

Unlike the scores of normally harmless weeds in American lakes — coontail, parrot's feather, redhead grass and others — Eurasian milfoil has no predators in the United States.

Milfoil fragments, carried by birds and boats, take root and outstrip other weeds, shooting to heights of 15 feet or more in clear water.

"It's sort of like a forest," Boylen said in an interview on the institute's boat.

The plant cannot grow in deep water, scientists say, but it can clog bays and interfere with swimming and boating.

Even worse than the plant's mass, they add, is its potential to attract organisms that breed disease, give off a garbage-dump odor and threaten to turn clear water into "pea soup."

"You can't even tell where the plant ends and the (algae) growth begins," said Boylen, wiping green organic goo from a freshly plucked milfoil stem.

At Lake George, county and lake association officials maintain that eradication is only feasible with chemicals. They are pinning their hopes on fluoridone, a herbicide recently approved by the Environmental Protection Agency. But state environmental officials have refused an emergency permit to use the fluoridone.

Authorities in several states have decided against the use of chemicals for fear of contaminating drinking water or producing unknown long-term side effects.

County agricultural agents discuss future of profession

County agricultural agents from throughout Texas will be engaged in discussions relating to the future of agriculture and professional improvement at the annual meeting of the Texas County Agricultural Agents Association in Fort Worth, August 3-6. The Worthington Hotel will be headquarters for the meeting.

Some 300 county agents with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service of the Texas A&M University System are expected to attend the annual meeting, which has the theme, "It's Harvest and It's Promise."

The program officially gets under way at 8:30 a.m. on Monday, August 4. Featured speakers at that session include Dr. Zerle L. That afternoon will be devoted to tours of points of interest in Fort Worth and the surrounding area, including Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association, Fort Worth Stockyards, Botanic Gardens, Western Company Museum, Van-Roach Cattle Company, Standard Meat Company, and La Buena Vida Vineyard and Winery.

Tuesday's program will feature Gene Jernigan of Fort Worth with the Texas Electric Service Company, David Simmons with the National Finance Credit Corp. of Fort Worth, and David Alders of Dallas, a land leasing agent with the Trammell Crow Co.

A special luncheon that day will honor county agents who have been selected as winners of the Distinguished Service and Achievement Awards. Distinguished Service Award winners (and their counties) are Stanley M. Young, Lynn; John South, Wise; Robert Roark, Andrews; Jimmy V. Vanstory, Coryell; D.B. "Bo" Wheeler, Jr., Lee; Leroy J. Luncheon speaker will be Roy Eaton of Decatur, president and publisher of the Wise County Messenger.

One highlight of the four-day meeting will be the "Man of the Year in Texas Agriculture" banquet Tuesday evening. Seven leaders in Texas agriculture and related areas have been selected for the honor and include the following: State Rep. D.R. "Tom" Uher of Bay City (Matagorda County); State Rep. Jerry Clark of Buna (Jasper County); Randall Conner of Winters (Runnels County); Horace F. McQueen of Whitehouse (Smith County); Dick Yeager of Vernon (Wilbarger County); Bedford Forrest of Amarillo (Potter County); and Norman Rousselot of Sonora (Sutton County).

A business meeting Wednesday morning will conclude the program and will feature remarks by stock show officials from across Texas.

Sand unlikely, yet acceptable, agricultural land

YUMA, Ariz. (AP) — Sand lies in a 30-foot-deep layer over the Yuma Mesa — not very promising farmland. Yet, with the right kind of irrigation and fertilizer, that sand can be prime agricultural land, researchers say.

Two University of Arizona soil scientists say they've demonstrated that it's possible to get commercially acceptable yields of vegetable crops on Mesa sand.

Dr. Bryant Gardner and Robert Roth, Yuma Mesa Agricultural Center, use self-moving irrigation systems, careful management of the nitrogen fertilizer levels and a special, modified deep chisel plow to grow a range of vegetables.

They've tested asparagus, broccoli, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, cucumbers, lettuce, potatoes, sweet corn and watermelons.

Roth says that the Mesa consists of 100,000 acres of fine, river-bottom sand. Some of the land is being used as a bombing range; only 25,000 acres are within an irrigation district, with some of the land developed for raising citrus trees, jojoba and asparagus.

"The most important result of our research is to show that we can get the same yields of high-value vegetable crops off marginal land as most growers get from prime agricultural land," Roth says.

Furrow or flood irrigation is inefficient on this deep sand, the soil scientists say. Water sinks so quickly into the sand that an excessive amount has to be applied to reach from one side of the field to the other. Nitrogen fertilizer follows the water — straight down.

Self-moving, low-pressure sprinklers, spray or drop hose techniques save energy and make both water and fertilizer use more efficient.

Roth and Gardner used Colorado River water with an average 900 milligrams per liter of dissolved salts. High-yielding wells are available on the Mesa, but this pump water is saltier than the river water. Water with a higher salinity level can be used to irrigate crops, however, yields could be reduced, they say.

Their experimental sprinkler irrigation system is a self-moving lateral design. With light, frequent irrigations, the soil stays moist during seed germination. Roth and Gardner say that seeds can be planted shallowly.

Stand establishment under this sprinkler system is comparable to that on heavier, flood-irrigated soils, they say.

Organic farming approaches extinction in Midwest, according to soil specialists

By NORM HEIKENS

CARBONDALE, Ill. (AP) — Organic farming, a growing method that two decades ago was touted as an answer to chemical pollution and alleged food safety problems, is approaching extinction — at least in the Midwest.

That is the consensus of experts who are familiar with the method that utilizes chemical-free inputs instead of insecticides, herbicides and petroleum-based fertilizers.

Although no formal records have been kept of the numbers of organic farmers, it is generally acknowledged that of the dozens who tried it in Southern Illinois, only a handful remain.

Ed Varsa, a soil fertility specialist at Southern Illinois University, says interest in organic farming has waned because it wasn't economically feasible and because earlier concern over food safety was unfounded.

Questions about chemical safety were sparked in the mid-1960s when Rachel Carson released her book "Silent Spring," which exposed the ill effects of DDT, a pesticide that was responsible for the decline in the nation's bald eagle population, among other things.

Agriculturalists began looking for alternatives to chemicals. A few settled on refining methods used in the later 19th century which allowed farmers to raise crops without chemical inputs and to become mostly self-sufficient.

Since then, organic enthusiasts have scorned traditional farmers and have started organic farming publications that contain articles on how to succeed with the method.

Varsa said many who made the transition were not familiar with agriculture and were the product of a cultural movement in the 1960s that distrusted chemicals.

"I think there is a level of control in these chemicals by the Environmental Protection Agency so that there is a level of safety built in to minimize risks to people who use them," Varsa said.

"We have the safest and probably the most nutritious food of any country in the world," he added.

But "there is still that clientele who want nothing to do with food or feed for animals that have been fed feed with additives," Varsa said.

Crops raised organically usually are sold in specialty markets where the products are priced higher. Varsa said the higher prices commanded at the markets were needed by organic farmers because labor costs were high.

Older women boost unwed births

WASHINGTON (AP) — Divorced women and those who put off marriage but want children before their age makes it risky are helping boost the nation's rate of unwed mothers to record levels, government statistics show.

Childbearing by unmarried women in 1984 accounted for more than one baby in five, the highest level since the government began collecting data on the subject in 1940, according to the report from the National Center for Health Statistics.

"There were increases in the nonmarital birth rates for women of all ages under 40 years, except those aged 15-17 years," who marked the first decline since 1978, the study said.

While births and birth rates fell among the youngest group, the center noted that increasing birth rates for women in their 30s and 40s continued, as it has over the last decade or so.

This appears to be a result of "making up for delayed childbearing," said the study, noting a sharp rise in first births among women aged 35 and over.

"The growth in the population of unmarried women has outpaced that of all women because of the widespread tendency to delay marriage to increasingly older ages, as well as the increasing number of divorces," the report said.

For example, in 1974 about one in seven women aged 30 to 34 were married. By 1984 that had risen to one in four.

While women have been delaying marriage, some seem to have decided to have children before their age makes that physically risky or impossible, according to population experts.

In addition, social pressure on single women to wed after becoming pregnant has declined in recent years as the stigma of having an out-of-wedlock child has lessened.

There were 770,355 births to unmarried mothers in 1984, up 4 percent from the year before, according to the new study. That was about 21 percent of the 3,669,141 live births in the nation in that year, the most recent complete statistics available. That amounted to 31 live births per 1,000 unmarried women, the highest rate on record.

Utah had the lowest proportion of unwed births, with 7.7 percent. Mississipi had the highest rate among the 50 states with 32.3 percent of all babies born to unmarried women. The rate of unwed births in the District of Columbia was 56.9 percent.

The figures from the Center for Health Statistics are higher than those of the Census Bureau, which a month ago estimated that unmarried women had delivered about 625,000 babies in the year ending June 1985. That would have constituted about 18 percent of the 3.49 million births it estimated for that period.

The Center for Health Statistics collects its data from birth certificates compiled in each state, while the Census report was based on a survey of 57,000 households in 729 communities.

When looking at all births — those to married and unmarried women — the statisticians found a decline in the rates for women aged 15 to 29.

"Although the reductions in the rates were relatively small, the rates for teenagers 15-19 years dropped to the lowest levels observed in the United States since 1940, and for women aged 20-24 years, to the lowest levels ever observed. The rate for women aged 25-29 years was lower than for any year since 1976," the study said.

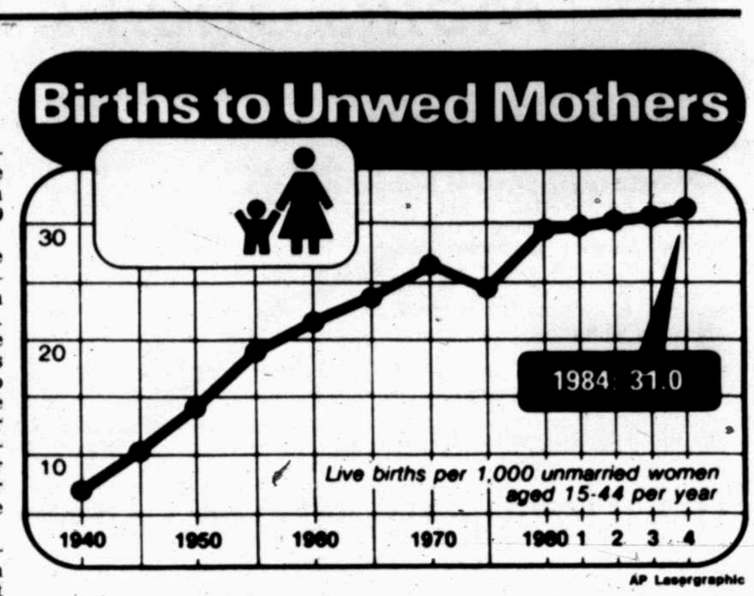
While the rates for unwed mothers go back only to 1940, records on overall birth rates have been kept since 1918.

Stephanie Ventura of the Center for Health Statistics noted that a decline in the number of young teenage women has helped reduce their total number of births, but reasons for the birth rate decline in that group are not obvious.

Perhaps these girls have increased use of contraceptives or abortion, she suggested in an interview.

The national rate of 31 births per 1,000 unmarried women aged 15-to-44 was up from 30.4 in 1983, the study showed.

For girls aged 15-to-17, however, there was a decline from 22.1 to 21.9 over the year.



Unwed births hit record high

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here is a year-by-year rundown of the rate of births to unwed mothers in the United States.

The rates are for women aged 15-to-44 and indicate the number of live births per 1,000 unmarried women during the year.

There were 31 births per 1,000 women in that group in 1984, the National Center for Health Statistics reports, the highest rate since it began keeping such statistics in 1940:

YEAR	RATE
1984	31.0
1983	30.4
1982	30.0
1981	29.6
1980	29.4
1975	24.5
1970	26.4
1965	23.5
1960	21.6
1955	19.3
1950	14.1
1945	10.1

Clinics tackle teen pregnancies

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — Cathy, a withdrawn teen-ager who for years refused to attend classes, went to her high school health clinic for a pregnancy test, hoping it would promise a baby to fill the void in her life.

Her visit to the school-based clinic, one of three in the Kansas City School District and more than 30 across the country, produced positive results — but not the kind that meant Cathy would join the growing number of teen-age mothers.

Instead, 18-year-old Cathy, whose name has been changed to protect her privacy, ended up graduating two years later — without a baby — and even was named to the honor roll her last two semesters.

"We let her hang (out) in the clinic, rather than sit outside skipping class in the winter," said Gerard Kitzi, executive director of the Adolescent Resources Corp. in Kansas City, which manages the clinics in the inner-city district. "We eventually had her attending three classes a day, then all her classes.

"She never joined family planning because we dealt with her pregnancy-related issue by dealing with her self. She learned to focus her life."

Planned Parenthood says more than 3,000 teen-agers become pregnant every day. Among those who carry their pregnancies to term, about half will never be able to finish high school, the New York City-headquartered agency said.

High school-based health clinics are proving to be a viable vehicle for reducing teen-age pregnancies — not just by issuing contraceptives but by offering mental health and sex education services.

The Kansas City clinics do not offer birth control devices but do offer contraceptive information. Surveys taken in 1983 and 1985 at two in-school clinics in Kansas City, including the one visited by Cathy, showed a decrease in pregnancies and of births among students using the clinics. Sexual activity was reported the same both years.

Clinic users were "much more likely" to have used birth control than those who had not used the clinic (55.1 percent users vs. 34.9 percent non-users), the surveys showed.

Kansas City in 1982 was the fifth city to start a school-based clinic. The city's third, at Northeast High School, opened in March. There are more than 30 cities with such clinics, another 50 to 60 cities are preparing to form them and at least three cities are considering the idea.

In-school clinics in Dallas and Chicago offer birth control devices and several school boards across the country are considering dispensing contraceptives at yet-to-be established clinics.

However, officials at such clinics are quick to point out the variety of services provided by them.

"I mean the pill hasn't gone to school here. We're just looking at the health care delivery system and the changing society," Kitzi said.

In Kansas City, the staffs of the clinics include a physician, dentist, nutritionist, nurse practitioners, medical assistants and social workers.

Kitzi said that of 33,000 visits at two high school clinics in Kansas City, only 12 percent were for family planning services. The majority of services are mental health related.

Among the most common medical services are treatment of injuries and ailments associated with the flu or common cold.

Kitzi emphasized his dissatisfaction with news coverage of school-based clinics, saying it focused too much on reproductiye services, "like that was the only thing that was going on."

Cities that want to start in-school clinics are "facing more and more barriers in this because of the sensationalism," Kitzi said.

"If the community starts thinking it's only family planning, we've blown it; we've missed the boat.

"The clinics are much, much more valuable than that. The damage that's being done by just focusing in on just one area is going to cause thousands of kids never to be able to receive health care."

COPING WITH JOB LOSS

Children sense situation

By JIM MAY and MARTI VERMILLION

May

Vermillion

DEAR COPING: My husband is unemployed and I am concerned as to what we should tell our children. They are 5 and 7 years old. Until recently I thought we should not tell them anything. But now I think we should tell them something. Should we? What and how much should we tell them about what is going on without worrying them or making them anxious. — J.R.

DEAR J.R.: Your question is sensitive one that many other parents are often concerned about.

While we, as parents, want to "protect" our children's feelings, sometimes we attempt to do that by trying to hide issues from them. With the best intentions, we may instead cloud and "mystify" situations through our efforts to keep them under cover. As you have probably experienced yourself, wondering what lies ahead is a lot more anxiety-producing and dreadful than the encounter itself.

So, yes, get the facts before your children and don't try to hide that which is impossible to hide anyway.

Individuals at all ages have a remarkable ability to sense what is going on around them — simply because those around them are always communicating — verbally or nonverbally.

Your children, without a doubt, are aware that your husband is not going to a job every morning. They are aware also of the other unspoken messages that go with his being home — tension, worry, relief, assurance or whatever theme is being communicated in your household. Not being let in on the details is much more confusing to them than having the situation discussed openly.

How much to tell your children? Whatever, however and how much you tell them, be aware that you will be communicating more than just the facts. You will also be telling them the value you place on work, work's relationship to money and to a person's worth and the value each of those carry in your own life. The meaning you give to unemployment, security, money, etc. will come to be the meaning they will then give to those same issues.

So tell them the truth, bring sensitive to all the messages you are sending along the way.

If they are aware that loss of employment means loss of income and wonder where their sustenance will come from, acknowledge their concerns. Don't deny their feelings and muddle their confusion with a brush off like, "Don't worry, it'll all work out."

After acknowledging their questions and feelings, discuss your plans for resolving the dilemma and let them know your plans for continued living until the situation is resolved.

In short, don't keep them in the dark. Don't deny their concerns. Deal with both of them, being aware of all the messages you are sending.

DEAR COPING: My question is do you think teen-agers should work? I guess I can ask you this question since mine are "unemployed" and our family is trying to make a decision about that before school starts. — N.W.

DEAR N.W.: Part-time jobs for adolescents can be either beneficial or detrimental. Jobs most help teens when the parents are involved in using the employment as a learning situation.

You did not mention several things which would help in answering your question: what do your adolescents think, what have you discussed together and what is prompting the question?

One of the main factors to be considered is the number of hours worked each week. Jobs during adolescence are most beneficial if viewed as tools that serve to teach the teen-ager life-skills rather than transforming the teen into a tool to serve the job. That is, when the teen lives for the job so that it becomes the adolescent's "life" and interferes with — and becomes more important than — school, friends and family functions, then the hours spent on the job need to be curtailed. It has been found that there seems to be a cutoff point above which students are more likely to develop problems.

The critical point varies for each individual. Research has shown that while part-time work has been known to lead to falling grades, absenteeism or substance abuse for some teens, that doesn't have to happen. The critical factor in whether or not a job becomes detrimental to adolescent development has been found not to be the type of job, by, again, the number of hours spent at work and the quality of life during the other hours.

Work can be a positive experience for young people. Jobs can use excess energy and time which would otherwise be spent in "hanging out." Jobs can provide young people with workplace experience, teach lifelong skills of punctuality, responsibility, getting along with co-workers and employers and give a feeling of personal accomplishment. Earned income can provide a sense of pride and autonomy which is so important for the developing teen.

Most important is learning how to manage spending. While we are usually eager for our offspring to learn how to earn income, we often don't teach how to manage that income.

If bringing home wages is seen as an end in itself, then the teen has come to exist for the job. Instead, the job and wages should be a beginning lesson in a rich education that employment has come to offer the new employee. Money management and spending patterns established early will serve as the foundation for patterns that will develop on through adulthood.

So, for continued healthy adolescent development, if your family does decide in favor of teen-age employment, don't allow it to take precedence over the other areas of their emotional, social, educational, family and spiritual development, but rather to enhance those areas.

Listening skills helpful

CARSON, Calif. (UPI) — You get to the last question on a critical final examination and your mind goes blank. You know the material was covered in class but your mind was drifting that day.

To avoid such situations, learn to listen more effectively, says a lecturer in speech and theater arts at California State University in Carson.

"About half of all communication involves listening and yet we only comprehend about 25 percent of what we hear," says Sydell Weiner.

Weiner outlined several techniques that can be used to develop effective listening skills:

■ Decide what type of listening you're going to be doing. Weiner breaks the types down into "therapeutic, listening for pleasure, listening for comprehension — such as at a business meeting — and critical listening to decide whether you're going to accept or reject something."

■ Try to find a personal message in what the speaker is saying. Even if you find the topic uninteresting, look for something relevant. "Even if you can't use it," she says, "you can pass it on to someone else."

■ "Try to be energized," she said. "Become an active listener by questioning in your mind or verbally what the speaker is saying."

Some workers overcome severe arthritis at work

ATLANTA (AP) — Remaining employed is difficult for many people with advanced rheumatoid arthritis, says the Arthritis Foundation.

Studies show, however, the ability to continue working depends more on job and social factors than on the severity of the disease. One study showed that people who had the freedom to control the hours, pace and conditions of their jobs were much more likely to remain working than were assembly-line workers.

Another study analyzed people with advanced arthritis who continued to work well. It identified such characteristics as having a non-physically demanding job, a stable marriage and a history of steady employment in the same job.

Computers help pick job benefits

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — For many of the salaried employees at NCR Corp., the firm's own personal computers have become a novel employment perk that helps them make financial planning decisions.

A company-designed software program allows the workers to calculate what selection to make among the optional company benefits available. The program keys decisions to family needs and income projections and allows changes as individual needs and goals change. The company has set aside 256 PCs for employee use only.

NOAA Weather Radio handy for summer outlook

WASHINGTON (AP) — The weather is one of the most discussed topics all year, but with outdoor activities most popular in summer the outlook becomes even more crucial — and the government has handy radio updates available.

While local radio and television stations, newspapers and cable systems offer lots of weather information, visitors to an area may not be sure where to look for details.

The answer may be NOAA Weather Radio, a system of 374 low-power radio stations scattered across the nation, operated by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

These stations provide continually updated weather reports from local National Weather Service offices, broadcast on an FM radio frequency and with a range of 30-to-40 miles. The agency estimates that the stations cover about 90 percent of the nation's population.

In general the broadcasts cannot be picked up by normal radios, requiring special instruments to receive one of their seven frequencies. These radios are readily available in electronics stores, however, selling at $20 to $250 depending on the sophistication needed.

For example, in addition to regular weather conditions and forecasts, the NOAA stations transmit emergency warnings including a special tone.

The more costly radio receivers can be set to respond to that emergency tone, issuing an alarm and turning themselves on to warn people of impending danger.

The radio transmitters use seven frequencies to keep from interfering with one another. They are 162.400, 162.425, 162.450, 162.475, 162.500, 162.525 and 162.550 megahertz.

In addition, several hundred rest stops along major highways rebroadcast the local NOAA radio reports on low-power AM radio, which can be received by nearby car radios. Generally they will post signs saying where to turn the radio.

DEAR ABBY

Grammar causes grumbles

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Last week I attended my granddaughter's high school graduation and had the dubious pleasure of overhearing a conversation between a gaggle of graduates. The conversation went like this:

"Hey, Amy, stand over by the lilac bush so's I can get your pitcher. And for gawd's sake, get that cap tassel out of your eyes! The sucker don't add nothin' to your beauty, you know."

"I seen Kevin and I told him he done real good in his salitory speech, and he — you know — blushed bright red an' an' — you know — acted like the wimp he is."

"Lisa asked me if I was invited to Joe's party an' I go, 'Sure, why not?' an' she goes, 'Well, I thought him an' you split,' an' I go, 'No way! Him an' me still have a thing goin,' ya know — like wow!"

"Ain't this graduation a blast? Really awesome — and I mean it. Everyone got their diplomas."

Abby, what language are these graduates speaking? Where did they learn it? In their English classes? From their peers? But who are these peers who have matriculated in several years of training in grammar and still can't speak intelligently enough to be accepted for more than the most menial job? — PERSNICKETY

DEAR PERSNICKETY: The graduates are speaking English, as they learned it from their peers. It was not taught in the classroom — but it was tolerated there. My heart goes out to the young people. Their manner of speaking is not necessarily a fair evaluation of their intelligence. It is more a reflection on an educational system that failed, and on a society that doesn't care.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "Fixed Income in Kentucky," who complained that physicians prescribe too many expensive pills at one time and when they don't work they have to be thrown away.

One can always ask the pharmacist to have the prescription only partially filled until the buyer knows how she (or he) reacts to the medication.

When I had an adverse reaction to a procedure in the dentist's chair, my dentist wrote a prescription for 15 Valium tablets — my first ever. He anticipated my need for more for future visits.

My pharmacist was fully cooperative when I asked him to give me only five tablets. That was six months ago, and I still have two left. — C.H. IN OKLAHOMA CITY

DEAR C.H.: You were wise. Most people hand the prescription to the pharmacist and buy the amount prescribed. It's a good idea to ask the pharmacist to give you a "trial" quantity to see how you react to it. Most will cooperate, but if yours does not, there's usually another drugstore across the street.

DEAR ABBY: In my wildest imaginations, I never thought I would be writing to Dear Abby, but listen to this. After attending a 50th high school reunion, my "first love" wrote to me telling me the old feelings had never died. Abby, he has a marriage of 42 years and I am a recent widow.

He's written some beautiful letters and I have answered all but the last one. Now my good friends, whose judgment I respect, are saying, "No more correspondence with this old flame!"

So far it's been very exciting but harmless. What do you think? — BLONDIE, CLASS OF '35

DEAR BLONDIE: With such smart friends you don't need any advice from Dear Abby.

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about sex, drugs and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WIT'S END

Children not clean

By ERMA BOMBECK

Someone ought to come right out and say it.

When it comes to keeping America beautiful, the burden must be assumed by those who have no children. I'm sorry, but it's time we stopped kidding ourselves. Children do not believe cleanliness is next to Godliness. It's next to impossible and it skips a generation. That means the generation who lives in squalor will begat children who launder dust balls before they throw them away. It also means you have constant conflict between the nagger and the naggee.

In a poll somewhere, the No. 1 complaint of parents everywhere was the condition of the rooms of their children. One mother told me that religion seems to play a large part in her son's life because around the holidays he "tidies up." Not EVERY year, but sometimes. She said one year he gave her a trash bag of clothes and said, "When you get a chance, would you wash some of this stuff?"

After the bag quit moving, she opened it carefully and was overcome with fumes of socks that had been inside out for three years. She put the clothes on "soak cycle," producing a mixture that by legal standards should have exploded. Most of the socks had no heel or toe, but she was told to hang on to them as they were his "emergency socks."

There are parents who believe in their heart that dirt and clutter are something their kids will outgrow. (They also believe their stomach is elastic and will not hang around their knees following birth.) "I shall remember to my dying day the first time I walked into my son's apartment," says another mother. "I sucked in my breath only to realize what I had just done to my lungs. Visions of diphtheria entered my mind. I went to work scrubbing and scouring. I realized it was a waste of time on my next visit. I looked at that 6-foot-3, 200-pound baby with rosy cheeks who does 300 pushups a day with one hand and thought, 'How can he be that healthy in all this filth?'"

Because it skips a generation, occasionally you will have organized, pristine children who grow up with parents who have seen too much cleanliness and there is a backlash against order.

I knew of a woman who never unpacked her groceries or used plates for food. They ate from wrappers. I was there the day one of her kids came in and said, "Any phone messages?" She nodded and said, "On the coffee table." It was written in dust. She yelled, "Sit on it when you're finished."

Her kids followed her around with a sponge in both hands.

The worst part of having children who choose "scum tile" for their bathrooms and wear shirts that pollute your contact lenses is that it reflects on your upbringing. People think you accept and condone their lifestyles.

The kindest thing my children have ever done for me is not to use their right names.

Space still popular

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (UPI) — The American public is still strongly in favor of the space program, according to a poll conducted at Walt Disney World's Epcot Center.

More than 7,000 visitors to Walt Disney World were asked, "What should the U.S. commitment toward the space program be from now on?"

Over half of those surveyed in June and early July — 53 percent — said commitment to the space program should increase. Thirty-four percent of the respondents wanted the level of commitment to remain the same.

These results indicate that public support for the space program has increased over the last four months. When the same question was posed in March, 42 percent said commitment to the program should increase, while 43 percent said that commitment should be the same.

ASK DR. RUTH

Man advised to 'get lost'

By Dr. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Ruth

Q. The two women I am involved with know about each other, and although this causes many tearful scenes, neither one will tell me to leave. Instead they beg me not to. I hate to hurt them, but it seems I do, although I have been fair and open. What can I do?

A. Being open about a basically harmful behavior doesn't make it acceptable. I do suppose you have been fair and open, but to stop hurting them, you can only leave them both. Leave only one and you hurt the other. I should think you would go anywhere, at least leave town, to get away from the tears and cries of those devoted women! Even if they beg you to stay.

Think: The sooner you depart, the sooner they will recover a little. Not totally — no doubt one will sleep clutching your forgotten can of shaving foam, the other with an odd sock pressed to her lips. If either of them asked my advice, it would be to give you the boot, though they probably wouldn't do it. So, it's your move. For their sake, get lost.

Q. I'm in love with a girl four houses down the street, but we are both too shy to get started. My heart pounds and my lips get paralyzed. How can I ever ask her out?

A. Don't. Get more talk going between you first. It doesn't have to be brilliant, and she will be grateful for any effort you make to ease things. Carry some jelly beans until you meet her again. Offer her some and be sure you ask her which is her favorite color. (I'll bet it's the black ones.) Carry a book and lend it to her if she shows any interest in it. Or make it a rock album, and lend her that — or offer to play it for her on your stereo.

When you both have loosened up a little, you might ask her to go to the zoo some afternoon. The zoo is full of live conversation starters. You find yourself talking about the gorilla, the baby bears, the flamingos with their amazing necks. Take turns rowing a boat on a lake. Move on to movies, ball games, concerts. When you have shared some fun, you'll find you have lots to talk about.

Director John Carpenter, right, poses with actor Kurt Russell, star of his new movie, "Big Trouble in Little China." A decade ago Carpenter made his first movie with a budget of $60,000. "Big Trouble" cost between $23-26 million, but could have been higher.

Director has no 'big trouble' with recent film

ENTERTAINMENT

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A decade ago John Carpenter made his first movie with a budget of $60,000. His new movie cost between $23-26 million, but could have been higher.

Such galloping inflation doesn't faze the filmmaker, who first achieved fame with such low-budget, high-grossing movies as "Halloween" and "The Fog."

His latest is 20th Century Fox's summer release, "Big Trouble in Little China," which he describes as a science fiction-action-adventure-comedy-kung fu movie. It stars Kurt Russell and Kim Cattrall.

"Actually the experience with 'Big Trouble' was a lot like the old days when I was working with low budgets and had to learn to live by my wits," Carpenter remarked. "Shooting started last October and finished Jan. 10 for a July release. That put enormous pressure on post-production, especially with all the special effects.

"It is a system that was perfected at Paramount by Barry Diller (now Fox production chief). It saves money because you don't have all that time to play around with the movie. It saves the interest money that would be accumulating until the picture is released. It also puts tremendous pressure on the filmmaker."

Reared in Bowling Green, Ky., John Carpenter started making "Dark Star" while a film student at the University of Southern California. Four years later it was released by the folks who gave you "Deep Throat" and "The Texas Chainsaw Massacre." Lacking an agent, Carpenter saw none of the profits.

"I was naive enough to think that a limousine would drive up in front of my house and the driver would say, 'Mr. Carpenter, we're ready on the set,'" he said. "It didn't happen. I was not perceived as a director.

"So I wrote myself into the industry. I worked for John Wayne and Barbra Streisand on projects that weren't made. You can make a good living on options."

Carpenter managed to locate a Philadelphia investor willing to gamble $100,000, and the result was "Assault on Precinct 11." He followed with a series of box-office winners, mostly in the scare category. Last year's "Starman," which won an Academy Award nomination for Jeff Bridges, changed his image and proved he could handle other material.

"I thought of it as a science fiction version of 'It Happened One Night,'" Carpenter said.

"Big Trouble in Little China," which opened to less than warm reviews in New York, is his fourth movie with Kurt Russell.

"Together we tend to do projects that are more extreme than Kurt's other work," said Carpenter. "Nothing had a greater potential for disaster than 'Elvis,' but it managed to work. In 'Escape to New York,' he played a risky character, also in 'The Thing.' Kurt likes to do things that are a little bit on the edge.

"In 'Big Trouble in Little China,' the usual roles in an action-adventure are reversed. Dennis Dun is the sidekick, but he's the one with few words and quick action. Kurt is the star, but he's the bumbler who seems out of place. Yet you like him because of his courage. He thinks he's John Wayne, but he's really Harold Lloyd."

Carpenter not only directed "Big Trouble," he also wrote the score, along with Alan Howarth. Once a member of a rock band, Carpenter formed the Coupe de Villes with fellow directors Nick Castle and Tommy Lee Wallace. They perform the title song and can be seen on the music video.

Matthau speaks on 'Pirates' adventure

'I enjoy fighting with directors. It helps me get a grasp on the character. Whenever Polanski said something I didn't agree with, I said so.'

— Walter Matthau

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — The lean, slack-shouldered figure shambling into the Beverly Hills Tennis Club was undoubtedly Walter Matthau, but why was he limping? Was he preparing for another of his oldster roles as in "Kotch" or "The Sunshine Boys"?

"I tore a ligament in my right leg running across Pacific Coast Highway in an attempt to save my life," he explained in his famous rueful rasp. "Here — wanna see the brace?" He lifted a pant leg to expose a solid piece of plastic on his lower leg, injured while car-dodging on the perilous Malibu roadway.

Matthau chose an outdoor table affording a view of a voluptuous brunette lounging on the opposite side of the swimming pool. "Nice legs," he observed as he eased into a chair for a luncheon interview concerning his new film, Roman Polanski's "Pirates."

A waitress took Matthau's order and thanked him for tickets to a preview of the movie, which she called "simply wonderful." The actor's review was more restrained.

"For character and atmosphere I would give it four stars," he said. "I would not give it four stars for plot and action. I will say that Polanski is a genius for making an atmosphere seem real. Most films have a counterfeit quality to them."

The 65-year-old actor had viewed the project with Matthauian dubiety: "I didn't like the script. I didn't understand the script. First it was the ship against the pirates, then the pirates against the ship, then the ship against the pirates. I didn't think it was funny or adventurous or anything. And the thought of swimming and climbing and dueling on one leg for five or six months in Tunisia didn't appeal to me.

"It was my youngest son Charlie who changed my mind. He said, 'You gotta take it, Poppa. You'll get to work with Roman Polanski, one of the great directors today. It's an open-air part that could change your career. You gotta take it."

And so he did. But he must have wondered when the six months turned into an entire year, two months of preparation and 10 of shooting. He spent a month alone on the accent.

"They wanted me to use a Bristol accent, but it goes like this," he said, demonstrating an unintelligible lingo.

"That sounds like an American actor doing a bad Irish accent, like this." He demonstrated. "I decided I would speak cockney, and they got me an expert, Jennifer Patrick of the National Theater. Pretty soon it came very easily." As the only American in the multi-national company, Matthau was surrounded by foreign languages.

Polanski, he said, "spoke Polish to the stunt men, Italian to the special effects, costume and hair people, French to the makeup people and the French actors. Then he would bawl everyone out for not speaking English. 'This picture is in English!' he shouted. 'I want everyone to speak English!'"

He and his wife, Carol, were housed in "two large bathhouses — they call them villas over there. One of them was for luggage." He claims his wife brought 152 designer dresses and 300 pairs of shoes.

"The roofs over there are built so that when it rains, the water flows right through the house. During a big storm, we complained to the landlord. He brought us 300 towels and said, 'Mop it up.'"

The rains forced the "Pirates" company to shift to the Seychelle Islands, where it was 95 degrees with lots of lizards.

"They call it a paradise. Maybe that's because it has sun, sky, beach and water. Nothing else, just sun, sky, beach and water," said Matthau.

The actor said that although he fought with Polanski, he respected the director's talent and knowledge.

"I enjoy fighting with directors," he said. "It helps me get a grasp on the character. Whenever Polanski said something I didn't agree with, I said so. He has an enormous ego, and it was hard for him to accept opinions from this American actor."

Matthau didn't think of going into acting until he got out of the Army.

"I knew that I enjoy making speeches, both in school and the Army, but it never occurred to me that I could make a living out of acting," he said.

"When I got out of the Army, I enrolled at the Columbia School of Journalism. After three weeks I switched to (the New School of Social Research) Dramatic Workshop. Acting seemed simpler than writing, and the school was closer to the Garden — Madison Square Garden. It was a good way to make $90 a month on the G.I. Bill and to meet girls.

"Gradually I began to realize that what I was doing on the stage was cashable. People got a kick out of me. It was a good time to be an actor because television was opening up, and I could play crooks, cops, doctors, lawyers, pimps, anything."

Walter Matthau became a busy character actor in television, theater and movies, appearing in such films as "Charade" and "Lonely Are the Brave."

"The big change came when that guy over there wrote 'The Odd Couple,'" said the actor, nodding toward sweating playwright Neil Simon who was involved in a doubles tennis match. "I met him at a party at Hal March's house and he said, 'I'm writing a play for you.' I said, 'That's interesting, send it to me.'

"Six months later he sent me the first two acts. I told my wife, 'Even if he can't find a third act, it's gotta be a hit.' And as a matter of fact, he never could fix the third act, and he had to with the second act to accommodate it."

Studying Simon, Matthau mused: "Look at him over there, looking just like a normal tennis player. You'd never know that from his typewriter came $250 million worth of material."

The playwright finished his match and stopped at the table for a bit of banter. Simon recalled when Matthau first met Polanski in the Paramount studio commissary 20 years ago, after the director had filmed his first hit, "Repulsion."

"I was lunching with him and my mind went blank when I introduced Walter," said Simon. I said, 'This is Roman Repulki.'"

Matthau added, "And I said, 'No, you mean Roman Polansion.'"

Looking back on the "Pirates" experience, Matthau, a self-styled "degenerate gambler," found one saving grace: "At least it kept me away from the bookkeepers for a year."

During that time he was able to lay bets only on the NBA playoffs — he won — and the World Series — he lost.

Turtle racing breeds patience in the most eager of men

MARINA DEL REY, Calif. (AP) — It takes patience to race turtles. At the recent turtle races behind Brennan's pub, a seven-foot dash to the finish line can last nearly half an hour.

"The longest race I remember was last winter. It took 25 minutes because the turtles kept going to sleep. They were hibernating," says turtle-breeder Hesh Feder, a five-year veteran of the races. His Direct Connection Stables sports nine racing turtles.

For 11 years, turtle aficionados have gathered weekly at Brennan's in this seaside Los Angeles suburb to cheer on their prized reptiles.

The race begins when the starting gate is lifted at the center of a 14-foot-wide arena. The first creature to lumber across the white line around the edge of the ring is the winner. A judge looks on in case of a photo finish.

Malibu resident Dave Schwab, whose Mudsliders Stable includes two red ear slider turtles and a Mississippi Map variety, says the animals are drawn to spectator shadows at ring's edge.

"What happens is the turtle is looking for darkness to hide," said Schwab. "So when it sees the shadows of the people watching on the sides, that's what it's racing toward.

"That's why pointing is not allowed. First of all, they think you're a snake and will stop right there and hide their head."

The amphibious turtle is surprisingly fast. But the land tortoise lives up to its reputation and is agonizingly slow.

Reptiles arrive at the track in picnic-style ice chests. Cars pull up, tailgates come down and owners struggle with red and white metal boxes more commonly found at football games. The coolers bathe the turtles in 80-degree water to maintain their body temperature.

"They're cold-blooded, so the only way to keep their metabolism up is warm water," explained Schwab. "A turtle is only as warm as its environment. Of course, we don't recommend keeping them in soup."

Competition can be fierce and fickle, Feder says.

"There used to be a tortoise here named Flip. He would come up to other tortoises during the race and flip them over on their back. He'd just grab the shell with his beak, flip them over and walk away.

"During the summer, male tortoises fight for territory and it's basically a push and ram situation, like goats when they butt heads. And we've had turtles that have actually pushed other turtles across the finish line backward."

Jim "Duffy" Duffer, producer of the Brennan's races, divides his events according to size and breed. If there are several of the larger varieties, an additional monster category is added. An all-star match finishes the evening.

"We don't race snapping turtles because they're endangered and dangerous," said Duffer, who awards trophies and champagne to the owners of the winners in each category.

"And we keep records of the entries, breeding, number of times raced and amount of wins.

"Sometimes, people will try to slip a mechanized turtle in, but I always catch it."

The races have drawn visitors from Japan, Sweden, Australia and New Zealand, Duffer says. During the summer, up to 500 people and 150 turtles attend. First-timers can shell out $3 to rent a turtle for the night.

On a recent Thursday, there were about 50 people in the crowd. One race lasted almost 10 minutes as several entrants turned around and went back to the starting point.

When a small but quick tortoise crossed the finish line in a mere four seconds, a boisterous fan joked that the race was fixed and demanded the animal be tested for drugs.

Elementary school children get a feel for snake in University of Texas class

By MICHELLE STEIN

ARLINGTON (AP) — Sliding her 7-year-old finger over the slithering snake definitely was not included in Christy McDonald's book of Fun and Exciting Things to Do on a Tuesday afternoon.

"It's gross!" she whined, covering her glasses with her small hands.

And slimy, she added emphatically.

"I don't like snakes," she whispered through her fingers.

Maybe not. But then again, Christy had never met Sunshine, a corn snake.

"When I take her out of the bag, I want you to ooh and aah, just like you would if it were a kitten," Jo Eklof told a continuing education class entitled That's Entertainment at the University of Texas at Arlington.

The audience of 50 children — and a handful of adults — did not disappoint.

Shunshine the Snake nearly got a standing ovation.

Christy held her hands over her eyes.

"There are 147 differednt kinds of snakes," said Eklof, a Dallas Zoo volunteer for nine years who regularly visits schools throughout the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

"But there are only four kinds that are poisonous in the United States," she said.

Good news. But which ones?

"COBRA!" screamed half the audience.

Sorry. They live in India, Eklof said.

"ASP!" yelled the other half of the audience.

Nice try. But no dice.

Finally, somebody remembered the rattlesnake — and his venom stuffed friends, the water mocassin, the copperhead and the coral snake.

Christy shrunk further into her seat.

"Now if you find a snake in the field, don't pick it up," Eklof said. "You never know if it is poisonous."

Audience members vigorously shook their heads in agreement.

NATION IN BRIEF

Cotton merchants, mills eligible for huge subsidies

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hundreds of cotton merchants, textile mills and cooperatives become eligible today for federal subsidies that in some cases may total tens of millions of dollars, say government and industry sources.

The payments are part of a new U.S. agriculture strategy that calls for reversing years of high price supports, dramatically cutting prices to make American crops more competitive in world markets.

Under the 1985 farm law, anyone holding "free stocks" — bales of old-crop cotton unencumbered by government loans — will be entitled, beginning today, to one-time "inventory protection" payments of about $200 for each 500-pound bale.

Holders of eligible cotton will receive government commodity certificates that can be sold or exchanged for cotton now in government stocks.

Agriculture Department and industry estimates put the amount of eligible cotton spread across the country at 2.5 million to 3 million bales, worth $500 million to $600 million to those holding the stocks.

Mutant AIDS virus created

WASHINGTON (AP) — A newly created AIDS virus mutation, which spreads but doesn't kill, could be a step toward a treatment or vaccine for the deadly disease, scientists say.

The mutant virus, administered to an AIDS victim, could compete with the genuine virus in a battle for cells that are vital to the body's immune system, perhaps keeping the system functioning, suggests a report published today in the journal Science by researchers from the National Cancer Institute.

But there is still much work to be done, and not even the most preliminary experiments on humans are scheduled, said one of the researchers, Dr. Flossie Wong-Staal.

Until scientists learn more about possible negative effects of the altered virus they have created, experiments on humans would be "crazy, irresponsible," she said.

But she said in a telephone interview that the new report should at the very least "shed new light" on the workings of the always-fatal disease that has killed more than 12,000 Americans.

AIDS spending may increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — Spending for AIDS research and treatment would increase 33 percent under a $103.7 billion appropriation approved by the House for the Departments of Health and Human Services, Education and Labor.

The appropriation measure, approved on a 328-86 vote Thursday, increases expenditures for federal AIDS programs from the current spending level of $112.3 million to $336.8 million in the 1987 fiscal year.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome, a fatal disease that attacks the body's ability to fight infection, has been diagnosed in 22,000 Americans since 1980.

Woman saves daughter

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — A woman trapped with her two daughters in a burning automobile pushed one of the girls to safety as her final act before flames engulfed the car, police said.

Lillian Payumo Hansen, 35, of Oakland and her 4-year-old daughter Melissa Ann died Tuesday night when the family car collided with a tractor-trailer rig and slammed into a freeway divider.

Moments before her death, the mother shoved her 7-year-old daughter Cheryl through a car window and into the arms of a motorist who struggled to free them, said Dave McClain, a spokesman for the California Highway Patrol.

Canada pushes South African sanctions

WORLD

OTTAWA (AP) — Canada takes a hard line on South Africa into next week's summit meeting of seven Commonwealth leaders in London, pledging tough economic sanctions if the other nations fail to agree on joint measures.

Prime Minister Brian Mulroney also has threatened to break diplomatic relations with what he calls the "evil regime" in Pretoria, unless the government makes fundamental changes giving equality to blacks.

His stance contrasts with that of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who opposes sanctions, and with the positions of some of Canada's NATO allies — the United States, West Germany and France — who have substantial trading links with South Africa.

Mulroney's personal envoy, Bernard Wood, said Commonwealth leaders he met with on a pre-summit tour want a ban on purchases of South African farm goods or the cancellation of civil air links as the "minimum bottom line" from the three-day meeting that begins Sunday.

Canada already embargoes air links with South Africa.

If Mrs. Thatcher refuses, it will be "absolutely disastrous" and could prompt Zambia and other black countries to quit the 49-member association of Britain and its former colonies, Wood told a news conference Thursday.

South Africa accounts for 10 percent of Canada's global trade outside the United States, and Ottawa has much to lose if relations crumble.

Nevertheless, Mulroney "is not going to blink" when it comes to imposing strict sanctions, Wood said.

In 1961, South Africa withdrew from the Commonwealth after an anti-apartheid campaign led by Canada's then-Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, who said the apartheid policy of racial separation was wrong by Commonwealth standards.

In the past year, Canada has imposed an arms embargo on South Africa, ended federal procurement of South African goods and withdrawn the accreditation of four U.S.-based South African diplomats.

The government has also asked Canadian businesses and banks to ban the sale of Krugerrand gold coins and the lending of money and sale of oil to South Africa.

Wood suggested that the Canada might be able to successfully negotiate a minimum package of sanctions at the meeting agreeable to all seven nations — Britain, Canada, Australia, India, the Bahamas, Zambia and Zimbabwe — with additional measures taken by individual countries.

Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda has said Canada is the only country that can save the Commonwealth, but Wood stressed that Canada's influence is limited and will be "a little more behind the scenes" than at past meetings.

Wood said leaders he consulted "value the Commonwealth very deeply. They see the Commonwealth as part of the solution, not as part of the problem."

Nevertheless, India, the Bahamas, Zambia and Zimbabwe are among the nations boycotting the Commonweath Games in Edinburgh to pressure Mrs. Thatcher to take a harder stance against South Africa. Canada did not join the boycott.

South Africa's ambassador in Ottawa, Glenn Babb, a fiery opponent of sanctions, said in a recent interview that Canada seeks a leadership role in the Commonwealth so that it can "strut on the world stage."

But being anti-South Africa will not make all African countries sit up and listen to Canada, Babb said.

"Underneath the rhetoric, there's a very strong undercurrent of political, economic, strategic and sociological cooperation" between those nations and South Africa, he said.

Sanctions against Pretoria could put an end to South Africa's customs union with surrounding states, preferential trade accords, tourist access and other benefits, Babb warned.

Sixteen injured as plane crashes in Mexico City

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The crash of a twin-engine plane at a busy downtown thoroughfare injured 16 people, one of them seriously, and one witness said the din sounded like a building had collapsed.

The cause of the Thursday afternoon crash was not known. The government news agency Notimex said it apparently was caused by mechanical failure.

An official at Mexico City International Airport, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the Cessna 310 was on a flight from the Pacific Ocean resort of Puerto Vallarta and was trying to land at the airport when the crash occurred.

Witnesses said the plane's wing grazed a five-story building, and that the aircraft then smashed into the roof of an adjacent two-story building before falling into Lazaro Cardenas Avenue.

The plane broke into three pieces.

"It was coming in very low and it was making no noise until it crashed," said Jose Luis Corona, his pants blood-stained from helping rescue victims.

Jose Santiago Mendoza, a clothing store employee, said: "I heard a noise when it crashed. It sounded like a building falling."

Capt. Miguel Gil Gaona of the airport command center said the results of the crash investigation would be available in about three weeks.

He said officials did not yet have a transcript of the conversations between the control tower and the plane, which he said was carrying five people.

Notimex said the pilot, Manuel Alverdi, 40, had not reported any problems to the control tower. The plane had enough fuel for the three-hour flight, the news agency said.

The airport official said the aircraft was based at a smaller airport in Toluca, 32 miles west of Mexico City.

The injured — the pilot, the co-pilot, one passenger and 13 passers-by — were taken to two city hospitals.

At Balbuena Hospital, a 46-year-old man was listed in very grave condition with head injuries, said hospital spokesman Francisco Javier Carballo. He said a 13-year-old boy suffered minor injuries.

Kremlin boosting prices to cut alcohol abuse

MOSCOW (AP) — The price of vodka and other strong alcoholic drinks increases by as much as 25 percent today as the Kremlin continues to crack down on alcohol use despite huge revenue losses.

The 20-to-25 percent price hikes — the second increases in a year — were announced Thursday by Nikolai Glushkov, chairman of the state price committee, in a statement published by the official Tass news agency.

At the same time, prices of "a wide range of goods in everyday demand" will decrease 20 percent to 30 percent, Glushkov said. Prices of children's clothing, which generally are very high, are being cut for the second time since 1984, he said.

Prices of some shoes will decline, along with the cost of clocks and watches, photographic equipment, motorcycles, fur coats, fur jackets and other fur products, and other recreational and household goods, he said.

He gave no other information on the cuts, and did not say what specific increases would be applied to various kinds of alcoholic drinks.

Rumors had been circulating that the price of strong alcoholic drinks was about to go up, and Muscovites reported vodka was disappearing from stores.

The last increase, put into effect Aug. 27, 1985, raised vodka prices to between 6.80 rubles (nearly $10 at the official exchange rate) and 7.90 rubles ($11.50) for a half-liter bottle, which is about a pint.

Depending on how they are distributed, the new increases would raise the cost of the least-expensive bottle of vodka to between 8.10 rubles ($11.75) and 8.50 rubles ($12.40).

Cognac starts at 11.50 rubles ($16.75) a half-liter and ranges much higher for better-quality brands. Liqueur prices vary widely.

Official Soviet statistics indicate the average industrial wage is about 200 rubles a month, or about $290 at the official exchange rate.

During his recent swing through the Soviet Far East, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev told a crowd on a Vladivostok street corner that his anti-alcohol campaign had cost the government 5 billion rubles, or about $7.25 billion, in lost revenue.

But he vowed to toughen the campaign, saying the effort slashed consumption of vodka by 35 percent in the past six months, reduced accident-related deaths by 20 percent and cut into the divorce rate.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Filipino controllers end strike after seven hours

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — More than 250 air traffic controllers went on strike today, but resumed work less than seven hours later after receiving word they would likely get raises.

The sit-down strike, which began at 7 a.m., snarled air travel in the Philippines and left hundreds of passengers stranded in Manila alone.

Victorino Palpal-latoc, director of the Bureau of Air Transportation, said the controllers agreed to resume working after Transportation Minister Hernando Perez said he would recommend unspecified salary increases.

Perez was meeting with President Corazon Aquino to discuss the situation, he said.

Palpal-latoc had earlier been summoned to the presidential palace, and said Mrs. Aquino seemed sympathetic to the strikers.

Locust swarm hits Niger

NIAMEY, Niger (AP) — Swarms of locusts descended on this West African nation this week, and have been ravaging crops in the southwest region, officials said.

High temperatures and strong winds have hampered attempts to halt the spread of the locusts by aerial spraying, with much of the insecticide evaporating, the officials said Thursday.

Particularly hard hit by the insects was the Niamey area and farmland near the region of Dosso, where a large section of millet fields was devastated, the officials said.

The coming of the locusts, which were drawn by unusually wet weather, had been expected for weeks, giving farmers time to protect much of their crops.

The swarms arrived in the country earlier this week. In some regions, as many as 150 locusts per square yard were reported, officials said.

Teen gives birth on plane

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — A 17-year-old Portuguese woman gave birth to a 7-pound girl on a trans-Atlantic flight to Lisbon, the news agency Noticias de Portugal reported.

The agency said the baby was born Thursday shortly before the TAP-Air Portugal airliner landed at Lisbon airport, and that a doctor traveling on the flight and a stewardess who had been trained as a nurse took part in the delivery.

Noticias de Portugal said the mother and baby were taken to a Lisbon hospital and that both were well. It said the state-run airline planned to give the baby a free flight when she is older.

The agency did not say where the flight originated.

Van Gogh inn site sold

AUVERS-SUR-OISE, France (AP) — The inn where Dutch painter Vincent Van Gogh died has been bought by a businessman who plans to turn it into a tourist complex in time for the 1990 centenary of the artist's death.

Dominique-Charles Janssens, 38, who paid $357,000 to buy the inn in this town north of Paris, said Thursday that he hopes to maintain "the spirit" of the building while developing it for tourism.

Micheline Tagliani, the inn's owner for the past 31 years, is to leave the premises by October 31.

She and her daughter, Regine, have offered sightseers free access to the dilapidated room where Van Gogh lived. He died at the inn in 1890.

By a decision of the Culture Ministry, Van Gogh's room and the staircase leading to it cannot be altered in any way.

Nine teens, driver killed

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Nine teen-agers and a driver returning from summer camp were killed when their van collided head-on with a truck, police said today.

The van was hurled into the air by the impact of the collision Thursday near Afula, 50 miles northeast of Tel Aviv, and burst into flames after hitting a tree, police said.

The driver and passengers were trapped inside.

After dousing the flames, rescue teams removed the charred bodies from the debris, police said. One of the nine teen-agers survived the crash, but died soon afterward at the hospital.

Police said the truck apparently swerved and collided with the oncoming van. The driver of the truck suffered slight injuries.

Iraq may lose its war

AMMAN, Jordan (LAT) — A growing number of Western military analysts believe that Iraq may eventually lose its war with Iran, an event that would send shock waves through the oil-rich but defenseless Arab nations along the Persian Gulf.

The analysts cautioned that that it was still premature to predict outright defeat for Iraq, which is in its sixth year of warfare with Iran. But the analysts were unanimous in their belief that the crucial "balance of morale" has swung sharply in Iran's favor in recent months.

"It's beginning to look like the Iraqis may lose," said British Army Maj. Bob Elliott, of the prestigious International Institute for Strategic Studies in London. "The Iraqis are not sufficiently able to get their act together to kick the Iranians out. They have a morale problem all the way up to the top."

There are reports circulating in diplomatic circles in Baghdad, the Iraqi capital, that President Saddam Hussein has turned the prosecution of the war over to Iraq's general staff, removing himself and other leaders of the Arab Baath Socialist party from the decision-making.

The action reportedly followed complaints from generals in the field that inept political interference was in part responsible for Iraq's recent military setbacks against the Iranians.

Chernobyl spurs changes

MOSCOW (AP) — The Chernobyl disaster has forced some changes in the Soviet nuclear power program, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda said Thursday.

Andranik M. Petrosyants, head of the State Committee for the Use of Atomic Energy, told Pravda that the No. 1 and No. 2 reactors at Chernobyl would be working again in October.

Plant operators will work two-week shifts and live in a special settlement being built 25 miles south of Chernobyl, Petrosyants said.

Pravda said last week that the workers' families would live either in Kiev, 80 miles south of Chernobyl, or in Chernigov, 55 miles east of the ruined reactor.

Goose Lake, which is located both in Oregon and California, is also the name for a train — a three-month-old short-line railroad owned by Lake County, Ore. Twice-a-week the train, operated by Great Western Railway Co. of Loveland, Colo., makes round trips carrying lumber between Lakeview, Ore., and Alturas, Calif.

Town's postmaster helps save short-line railroad

WILLOW RANCH, Calif. — The train rumbled down the tracks of the Goose Lake 55 — the railroad saved by a postmaster and a state lottery and named by a high school student — heading slowly south through sparsely populated Modoc County in the northeast corner of California.

Flocks of ducks and geese and a lone bald eagle soared overhead as the 14-car lumber train made its way along the placid eastern shore of Goose Lake. As red-bearded engineer Dave Lafferty, 36, sounded the whistle of the chop-nose orange-and-white diesel No. 1617, antelope grazing near the tracks looked up.

The train traveling the tracks of the Goose Lake 55, a three-month-old short-line railroad owned by Lake County, Ore., was on one of its twice-a-week round trips between Lakeview, Ore., and Alturas, Calif.

It looked for a while as though there might not be any trains on this track after the Southern Pacific Transportation Co. announced plans 2½ years ago to abandon the branch line, which had been in operation since 1912.

But then Lakeview Postmaster Orval R. Layton, who was worried about the effect on the local lumber industry, got into the act. Layton, 59, a Lake County railroad commissioner, organized a committee to save the railroad.

These days everyone calls him Choo-Choo.

It eventually took legislation in Oregon to launch the railroad with the unusual name on Jan. 18. The legislation authorized Lake County to own property outside of Oregon and promised that Lake County would abide by California laws and regulations as it operated its railroad in Modoc County.

Layton has suggested erecting "Entering Lake County, Oregon" signs along the single-track roadbed as it threads its way through 40 miles of California. The railroad has 15.5 miles of track in Oregon.

"Our little town would have been devastated if the railroad went out of business," said Layton, who has worked for the Lakeview Post Office for 40 years, 28 of them as postmaster. "It was a matter of survival. We have four sawmills in Lakeview. Lumber is what keeps us going. The railroad is our lifeline. If the railroad goes, the sawmills go."

There were 220 jobs at stake in Lakeview, population 2,800. The Lakeview Chamber of Commerce reported that closing the mills would cause a $1.5 million loss in annual salaries, with a ripple effect producing a $5 million yearly loss to the community's economy.

Southern Pacific offered to sell the track and 55.5 miles of the 20-to-160 foot-wide track bed for $1.7 million. "Too high," Layton argued. After considerable negotiations, the two sides agreed on a price of $560,000.

Where to get the money was the next question.

Layton and others thought of Oregon's year-old state lottery. Funds generated by the lottery are supposed to promote economic development.

LAT Photo

Molly Peterson is the high school student who gave the endangered Goose Lake 55 railroad its name. The 55 refers to the 55.5 miles of track that Southern Pacific had offered to sell for $1.7 million but eventually settled on $560,000.

In early January, the largest grant of lottery profits in Oregon to date — $475,150 — was awarded to Lake County to purchase the line from Southern Pacific. The county had to raise the rest. When the four mills each contributed $21,212.50, for a total of $84,850, the money was there.

But there was still no train to roll down the tracks.

The county's seven-member Railroad Commission, consisting of Layton, one representative from each sawmill, a representative from Lakeview and another from the county, called for bids from rail operators throughout the nation.

Great Western Railway Co. of Loveland, Colo., was awarded the contract to run the railroad.

"Not 1 cent of taxpayers' money was used to purchase the railroad nor to operate it," Layton said. "Great Western stands all the costs. It is responsible for maintenance and operation, for payment of taxes, the whole works."

Southern Pacific, which still collects shipping fees from the lumber mills, turns over to Great Western $300 for each carload hauled from Lakeview to the Southern Pacific main line in Alturas. In addition, the mills pay a $152 surcharge directly to Great Western for each car.

Great Western, in turn, places $25 for each car into an emergency fund to cover disasters and unforeseen problems.

The Goose Lake 55 has no rolling stock. Great Western has provided two engines. The lumber cars come from Southern Pacific.

When the negotiations to purchase the line were completed, the 400 students in Lake County's two high schools were asked to compete in a name-the-railroad contest, with the winner getting $100.

Molly Peterson, 18, a senior at Lakeview High School, is probably the only high school student in the nation to name a railroad. She said she suggested Goose Lake 55 "because the train runs along Goose Lake, a lake that is in both states, and it is 55 miles from Lakeview to Alturas."

Bob Evans, 47, manager of the Fremont Sawmill, said that processed lumber and wood chips from the four mills are transported throughout the nation, the lumber used in construction, the wood chips used by pulp mills.

"Geographically this is a bad location for trucks. It's difficult to get trucks to come to this remote place. Shipping by truck, for us, is much more expensive than by rail. We save $25 per 1,000 board feet of lumber by using the railroad," Evans said.

The four mills ship more than 1,000 lumber cars from Lakeview each year.

In abandoning the Lakeview-to-Alturas line, Southern Pacific followed a pattern of major railroads throughout the country in closing short-line operations because of high labor and maintenance costs.

When Southern Pacific operated the train, at least six men worked on each run. In its petition to abandon the line, filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, the company said that it was losing $500,000 a year on the operation.

The Goose Lake 55 employs an engineer and a conductor and a track maintenance crew of four.

A recent editorial in the Lake County Examiner noted: "Without Postmaster Orval Layton, Lake County would be without the services of a railroad. It is as simple as that. The people of Lake County owe Mr. Layton a debt of gratitude that can simply never be repaid."

Choo-Choo Layton hasn't received a penny for saving the railroad. But there is another form of compensation for the chairman of the Railroad Commission.

"It's just so good to hear that railroad whistle blowing," the postmaster mused over a cup of coffee as Lafferty rolled the engine out of the sawmill yards past the old Lakeview railroad depot and set out on another scenic run to Alturas on the Goose Lake 55.

Brown University haven for American history buffs

By CHARLES HILLINGER
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Are you a writer, researcher, scholar or film maker needing information about the Americas from the day Columbus first set foot in the New World?

Consider a visit to Brown University, founded in 1764, the seventh-oldest college in the nation. Hundreds of scholars and history buffs come here each year to tap the rich resources of the school's libraries in the shadows of the capitol of the country's smallest state.

For more than a century the university's John Carter Brown Library, with an endowment of $7 million, has been assembling a growing collection of materials about the discovery, exploration, settlement and development of the New World.

It contains the world's largest collection of Revolutionary War pamphlets, an extensive collection of New World maps, the largest collection of books published in Mexico prior to 1600, and the largest collection of books about Brazil, Peru and Chile published before 1800. There is also a vast collection of books printed in the colonies and in Europe about ongoing activities in the New World.

The latter begins with a first edition of the rare Christopher Columbus letter of 1493 telling of the discovery of America. The library publishes a newsletter about Columbus regularly sent to 500 Columbus scholars and buffs.

Among the 2.5 million items in the university's John Hay Library is the Caleb Fiske Harris collection of American poetry and plays, considered the most complete assemblage of its kind.

Curator Rosemary L. Cullen notes that 63 percent of all titles in the Standard Bibliography of American Poetry published prior to 1820 are here as well as 79 percent of the American plays prior to 1820.

There is poetry of many descriptions including collections of single sheet poems published by newspapers and distributed by newsboys on New Year's Day, a custom dating from 1720 to the early 1900s. The poetry would describe events of the just-completed year accompanied by a note requesting a gratuity for the carrier boy.

Military historians and film makers come to the John Hay Library to do research in the Ann S.K. Brown Military Collection of 30,000 books, 60,000 prints and 5,000 miniature lead soldiers, plus numerous drawings, watercolors and manuscripts devoted to military history.

"They use the collection as a prime resource for authentic reproductions of uniforms, descriptions of battles from every nation on Earth dating back to the earliest recorded times," said curator Richard B. Harrington.

The John Hay Library is named after the university's 1858 graduate who was a poet, private secretary to President Abraham Lincoln and later secretary of state and ambassador to Great Britain.

The library's Lincoln collection includes life masks of the president, several famous original paintings, such as Alexander Hay Ritchie's "The Death of President Lincoln," busts, statues and 13,000 books about the Great Emancipator.

John D. Rockefeller Jr., a 1897 Brown alumnus, purchased the Lincoln collection in 1923 and presented it to the university. The main library on campus is named after Rockefeller.

"This really gives you a sense of history," said Jennifer B. Lee, curator of the Lincoln collection, as she held the oroginal muster roll of an 1832 Black Hawk War Regiment. It is one of more than 900 letters, manuscripts and documents written or signed by Lincoln in the collection.

"All of Hay's personal papers are here," noted Lee, "including his three-volume White House diary, a personal record of day-to-day events, behind-the-scenes conversations and impressions of people."

Hay was 22 when he became Lincoln's secretary, she said. "Lincoln used him as a sounding board. When the president could not sleep at night he would wake Hay up and talk to him about everything and anything, much of which Hay recorded in his diary."

The John Carter Brown Library at Brown University has the world's foremost collection of Americana from 1492 through 1820. Brown University, located in Providence, R.I., is the seventh oldest college in the nation.

In the midst of the ivy-covered classrooms and libraries and the historic old gates on the Brown campus is a large mausoleum containing the remains of a Civi War general and his wife. It is yet another library.

The Annmary Brown Memorial contains the crypts of the two university benefactors as well as a world-famous collection of incunabula, books printed before 1500 and of prime importance to those who studied medieval and renaissance culture.

In the crypts are the remains of Annmary Brown Hawkins, granddaughter of Nicholas Brown, the man the university is named after, and her husband, Gen. Rush Christopher Hawkins.

When his wife died in 1903, Hawkins erected the memorial to hold the remains of his wife, himself, his priceless books and his valuable paintings from the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries.

Readings and special programs are held regularly beside the two crypts, abiding by instructions in Hawkins' will, said Catherine Denning, curator of the library.

The campus libraries are remarkable given the relatively small size of the school, said Merrily Taylor, university librarian. There are 5,400 undergraduates, 1,200 graduate students and 250 in the medical school.

Ramirez handles outsiders with poetic flair

By BRYNA BRENNAN

Ramirez

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — When outsiders come to talk about the revolution in Nicaragua, the Sandinista directorate usually turns them over to Vice President Sergio Ramirez — poet, novelist, short-story writer.

Those who have dealt with Ramirez say he has a smooth, convincing style that contrasts sharply with the generally harsh Marxist rhetoric of other Sandinista leaders.

He meets with visiting Americans and Europeans to explain Sandinista viewpoints. He has talked to members of the U.S. Congress who have come on fact-finding trips to Nicaragua and he has made trips to Europe.

But while his style differs from other Nicaraguan officials, his thrust in an interview with The Associated Press was down-the-line Sandinista:

— U.S. aid to the anti-Sandinista rebels is a "monumental error" with extremely dangerous consequences.

— "The worst slander is to say our helicopters are piloted by Cubans, Soviets. We are not mentally retarded."

— "The idea of the revolution is to fight for independence for a small country."

— The closing of the opposition newspaper La Prensa in July was a correct move. "I don't view this as a subject of press liberty. It's security for the country during a time of war. I believe deeply in freedom of the press."

Other Sandinista officials speak of the rebels as "CIA mercenaries." The United States always is the imperialist aggressor. President Daniel Ortega recently likened President Reagan to Adolf Hitler.

Ramirez avoids name-calling.

"He's quite convincing," said a Western diplomat who has met him. "His words are palatable."

Unlike the commanders who fought in the mountains during the revolution that ousted the Anastasio Somoza dictatorship in 1979, Ramirez battled on the political front, acting as spokesman for a group of prominent anti-Somoza professionals.

Ramirez, 43, speaks English, which he said he learned during an intensive 10-week course at the University of Kansas in Lawrence in 1967. He also speaks German, which he picked up during a two-year stint as a visiting professor at the Free University of Berlin in that city's Western sector. He taught himself to read French. He earned a law degree at Nicaragua's National Autonomous University.

But of it all, he said, his first love is writing.

U.S. again rejects World Court's order to halt Nicaraguan rebel aid

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United States, again rejecting the World Court's order to halt aid to Nicaraguan rebels, vetoed a Security Council resolution calling for compliance with the judgment.

U.S. Ambassador Vernon Walters said the resolution voted on Thursday, which 11 members of the council approved, "painted an inaccurate picture of the true situation in Central America" and would not have contributed to peace in the area.

The negative vote of the United States, one of five permanent members of the 15-member council, killed the measure. Thailand, Britain and France abstained.

The resolution stressed "the obligation of all states to seek a solution to their disputes by peaceful means in accordance with international law."

Walters said the World Court's June 27 decision, which ruled that American support for the Contras violated international law, included "baseless assertions" against the United States and ignored "very substantial evidence of Nicaraguan misbehavior."
