Art show planned at annual banquet

The Snyder Chamber of Commerce banquet is now scheduled for March 31, a Tuesday, and planners this year will combine the annual banquet with an art show featuring area artists.

The speaker for this year's banquet is a painter himself, Kenneth Wyatt, noted for his western art as well as his humorous style of speaking.

Wyatt's works will be among the paintings and bronzes on display in the foyer of the coliseum one hour prior to the banquet. The theme for the event will be "Excellence on Display."

The art show will begin at 6:30 p.m. with light refreshments served. The banquet will follow at 7:30 p.m.

Entertainment from the Singing Cowboys is planned in addition to the traditional awards which honor aspects of service to Snyder and Scurry County.

These include the McLaughlin award honoring service in the oilpatch; the Winston award for agribusiness; the Vestal award for service to the city; and the Sizemore award given to the Gold Coat of the Year.

Master of ceremonies will be Rev. Miller Robinson.

Heading up the banquet committee of volunteers is Barbara Williamson, who will be assisted as general chairman by Martha Huddleston.

Other committee members and their areas of responsibility are Gingah Williamson, food; Sally Jordan, artist selection; Sue Travis, decorations; Donna Fowler, publicity; Donna Holt, programs; Jeanne Johnson, ticket sales; and Jane Womack, entertainment.

The committee is now in the process of accepting bids to cater the banquet.

Tickets are to go on sale within the next few weeks.

Deadline near for city vote

Wednesday is the final day to file as a candidate for expiring positions on the Snyder city council--an election which will decide two councilman seats and the mayor's post. All three will be elected at-large.

No new candidates have filed for the posts since Jan. 23.

To date, only one has filed for the mayor's seat, Troy Williamson, who has served on the council since April of 1984 and whose at-large term expires this year.

A second incumbent councilman, David Hines, has also announced he would again be a candidate for his seat. Hines was first elected in April of 1985.

Three others have announced their candidacy for the two at-large council seats. They include, in order of filing, John Johnson, Jim Tully and Evelyn J. Malone.

Ranger exhibition reception Sunday

The Scurry County Museum will mark the opening of its Texas Ranger exhibit with a reception from 1 until 4 p.m. Sunday with the public invited to attend.

The exhibit, on loan from the Institute of Texas Cultures, uses 40 historic photos and written material to trace the history of the Rangers from 1823 to the present.

Supplementing the traveling exhibit will be material loaned by local residents.

The Texas Rangers figured in the history of Texas as they fought Indians, pursued outlaws and suppressed riots. So impressive was the organization's reputation, that the saying "One riot, one Ranger," came to be.

Museum Director Shirley Leftwich notes that March 2 is Texas Independence Day. "We felt that the Texas Ranger exhibit would be especially suitable this time of year," she said.

"We thank local residents who are helping us by loaning special items for viewing in the show. We feel this adds even more interest."

Refreshments will be served during Sunday's opening reception.

Included in the Hamer exhibit are two pistols owned by the ranger and a book about his life provided locally by the Billy Bob McMullan family. (SDN Staff Photo)

2nd suspect arrested in Hermleigh robbery

Scurry County sheriff's deputies now have in custody a second suspect in the Wednesday morning robbery of the Hermleigh Allsup's.

Henry Ricky Mendez, 20, of 3112 Ave. I was arrested by deputies in Nolan County Friday afternoon and charged with one count of robbery.

He is being held in the Scurry County Jail in lieu of bond set at $25,000 on that charge.

Mendez is a parolee from the Texas Department of Corrections on charges from another county and local authorities are expecting to receive a "blue warrant" for parole violation that would prevent his being released on bond.

He is charged with participating in the robbery with a 16-year-old Spanish male who was arrested Thursday evening.

The pair are alleged to have entered the Allsup's store around 3 a.m. and forced the clerk to sit on the floor in a corner of the store while they emptied the cash register.

They were said to have fled the store on bicycles after taking less than $100.

Drug delivery charge ends with guilty plea

Anderson "Son" Davis Jr. was sentenced to 25 years in the Texas Department of Corrections Friday after entering a guilty plea to charges of delivery of a controlled substance.

The 65-year-old Davis, of 2104 31st St., was arrested last July 29 after an agent working for the Scurry County sheriff's office purchased the drug Hydromorphone from him using marked bills. Officers report these bills were found in his possession at the time of the arrest.

Davis was on parole from the Texas Department of Corrections at the time of the July arrest on a 1984 conviction for sale of a controlled substance.

He had been given a seven-year prison sentence in exchange for a guilty plea to that charge.

Davis remained in the Scurry County Jail Saturday morning pending transfer to the Texas Department of Corrections.

State, federal offices to be closed Monday

Banking employees, state and federal workers will have a day off Monday to honor Presidents' Day. County and city offices will be open, however.

State governmental offices scheduled to observe the holiday include the Department of Health, the Department of Highways and Public Transportation, the Department of Human Resources, the drivers license office and the Texas Employment Commission.

Federal offices in the Ag Service Center will be closed also, as will the Texas National Guard.

Postal officials say mail will be placed in boxes, but no residential deliveries will be made.

All of Snyder's financial institutions will be closed also.

The Rotary Club likes to claim more dignity than the Snyder Lions Club. And although the Lions Club likes for them to make the claim, such is not always the case.

A few weeks ago, an incident occurred during the weekly Rotary luncheon that makes it difficult to distinguish Rotarians from fun-loving Lions.

Rotarian Wayland Walton is manager of Higginbotham-Bartlett Lumber Co. Normally you can set your clock by Walton who does most everything at precisely the same time and in the same way.

It is his routine to go to bed at 10 each evening. One particular Wednesday, however, a TV show caused Walton to say up to the wee hours--15 minutes past midnight.

At noon Thursday, Walton settled in to listen to the program which is part of the weekly Rotary meeting. This time, Walton not only dozed off, he settled in for a noon nap.

Without waking him, fellow Rotarians made snoring sounds on behalf of the unaware Walton--and it was several days before Walton learned he was the target of the Rotary joke.

A couple of weeks ago we told about Mike Price, Rainbo bread man, who inadvertly made a long-distance call across town to his wife.

Virgie Tharp, teller at Snyder National Bank, had a similar experience Jan. 17--the day of the terrible ice storm in Snyder.

Mrs. Tharp lives across the street from her mother, Mrs. W. C. Tharp. Because the weather was so bad, Virgie decided to call her mother rather than crossing the street and chance slipping on the ice.

After several unsuccesful tries at ringing the number, Mrs. Tharp dialed the operator for assistance. When she got her phone bill this month, she was charged $1.30 for the call just a holler away.

Induction ceremonies due Sunday for PTK

Dr. Ed Barkowksy, first faculty sponsor for the Psi Zeta chapter of Phi Theta Kappa (PTK) at Western Texas College, will be guest speaker for the chapter's induction ceremonies at 2:30 p.m. Sunday.

The program, to be held in the Fine Arts Theatre, is part of the college's observance of National Community College Month. The public is invited.

Barkowsky will discuss "The American Dream: Past, Present and Future," PTK's theme for the year. Barkowsky is chairman of WTC's Division of Communications and Letters and is using this as a theme for an honors English class this semester.

Officers for the local PTK chapter will be in charge of the program. These include Bobby Mendez of Lubbock, president; Dalila Carrasco of Big Lake, vice president; Emily Thornhill of Haskell, secretary; Sandy Ross of Snyder, reporter; and Ellen Walker of Roby and Clayton Sorrells of Rule, co-historians.

The Psi Zeta chapter currently has about 50 members. About 30 new members will be inducted. Faculty sponsors are Drs. Duane and Mary Hood.

The WTC chapter of PTK was chartered in February of 1972, soon after the college began classes the previous fall. It is the only nationally recognized honor fraternity for students in junior-community colleges.

Barkowsky was presented an honorary membership in PTK in recognition of his service to the local chapter, the first to be so honored.

Palestinians receive many supplies

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Tens of thousands of hungry Palestinians in a besieged refugee camp received 15 tons of flour and two tons of powdered milk early today under an uneasy truce between warring Shiite Amal militiamen and camp defenders.

A three-truck relief convoy escorted by Syrian and Iranian observers rolled into Beirut's Bourj el-Barajneh camp at 1 a.m., unloaded the food and left an hour later.

Only hours earlier, an Iranian envoy was killed by gunfire that rang out as a separate U.N. convoy approached within a few yards of camp.

ISD dental screenings slated here this week

Snyder dentists will be visiting local elementary schools this week as part of the local observance of National Dental Health Month in February.

Snyder public schools, in conjunction with the American Dental Association-sponsored event, will be emphasizing dental health awareness.

The local dentists will complete dental surveys of elementary-age youngsters. Those participating include Drs. John Best, Michael Dunham, Judith Dunham, Robert Hargrove, David Hensley and Jay Kidd.

They will be assisted by school nurses to include Mrs. Angel Duncan and Mrs. Reba Erwin.

Following the dental surveys, students will be given a report from the school nurse to take home. These will indicate if there is need for additional dental services.

In addition, teachers in grades K-2 will instruct the "Tattletooth" curriculum provided by the Texas Dental Health Services and the Texas Education Agency.

In the third grade, students will be offered the Crest Dental Health School Program, and in grades 4-6, a textbook unit will address dental health.

As part of this instruction, students will be given a kit containing a toothbrush and a small tube of toothpaste.

Airport grant 'step' on county's agenda

Airport Manager Darrell Mize will discuss hiring an engineering firm for repairs to the county facility Monday, another step in the process to secure a Federal Aviation Administration grant to resurface airport runways and make other improvements.

Mize will meet with county commissioners during the court's regular weekly session, set to begin at 10 a.m.

County staffers are hopeful FAA officials will offer grant monies this spring.

Also during Monday's session, commissioners will formally change the county's 1987 general fund budget and the juvenile budget to move a secretary from the county attorney's office to the juvenile department. The move will satisfy a $19,000 increase in the juvenile budget now required by the state juvenile department.

The court is slated to meet also with members of the industrial development committee organized through the local chamber.

NIH researcher commits suicide

WASHINGTON (AP) — The suicide of a National Institutes of Health scientist was related to an investigation into possible fraud in a paper on genetics research, says his widow.

"There is no question in my mind that his death was related to the investigation," Laura Eisen, widow of Dr. Howard J. Eisen, said in an interview published in Saturday's edition of The Washington Post.

Contacted by telephone Friday night, Mrs. Eisen said, "I don't know how (his death) was related, but I think it was a factor, definitely."

Eisen, a researcher at the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, committed suicide Feb. 7 — 10 days after an appearance before a three-member committee investigating a manuscript that had been submitted for publication.

The manuscript is entitled "Analysis of Mammalian P450 Catalytic Activity By Genetic Engineering and Expression In Yeast."

Reagan ready to take lumps in the the Iran arms scandal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House says it's ready to "take our lumps" in a report set for release in 12 days by an investigatory board probing the Iran arms scandal.

"I think it's going to be a very critical report and a very tough report, and the tougher and the more critical the better," presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Friday.

The board, named by Reagan and headed by former Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, is the only investigatory group that has talked with Reagan about his recollections of the affair. It also is the only panel that has reviewed typewritten transcripts of his personal notes.

Other investigations are being conducted by a court-appointed independent counsel and Senate and House committees.

Meanwhile, a senior White House official was quoted Saturday as saying the Tower commission has uncovered "quite serious discrepancies" in the testimony of various administration officials and is expected to issue a report highly critical of White House foreign policy machinery.

The official, quoted but not identified by The New York Times, said there was not quite a cover-up but that the vast documentary record reveals deliberate attempts to conceal and distort facts about the Iran-Contra affair.

Some administration officials "said things they probably knew were not true" and, "Some people in the National Security Council were not anxious to have facts disclosed," the official said, according to the Times.

The president had a very brief exchange with reporters Friday, but his chief spokesman said a decision has been made to continue denying journalists regular opportunities to question him. Reagan has not been exposed to reporters' questions during any of his White House meetings since Dec. 4.

Responding to shouted questions on the White House grounds of whether there was a cover-up in the Iran affair and whether Secretary of State George P. Shultz was resigning, Reagan said, "No. No."

Fitzwater said Reagan "will answer questions when he's ready and when the doctors say there are no restrictions on his activities," but he later said doctors "haven't said anything about questions."

The spokesman said that Reagan called Robert C. McFarlane on Friday at the Navy hospital where his former aide, a key player in the Iran arms deal, is recovering from a drug overdose.

They talked for two or three minutes, Fitzwater said, adding that he did not know what was said. McFarlane is expected to remain in the hospital at least through the weekend, said his attorney, Leonard Garment.

On the Tower commission investigation, Fitzwater said, "We have said from the beginning: 'Let the chips fall where they may. We'll take our lumps. Get to the bottom of this. Tell us what happened.'"

Alzheimer's disease gene discovered by scientists

WASHINGTON (AP) — Researchers said Friday they have isolated a gene largely responsible for the abnormal deposits that clog the brains of people with Alzheimer's disease.

The gene, a piece of genetic material that triggers protein production, has been sought by researchers worldwide because its byproducts appear to be the key to making the nerve fiber tangles and scaly plaques that impair the brains of Alzheimer's sufferers.

In a letter published in the Feb. 13 issue of the British journal The Lancet, a group of New York researchers said they had confirmed the gene's location.

Alzheimer's disease is a degenerative condition of unknown origin. The condition, which normally strikes older people and robs them of memory and physical mobility, is largely responsible for behavior formerly known as senility. An estimated 2.5 million Americans have the illness.

The latest work was reported by Drs. Nikolaos Robakis, Henry Wisniewski, Edmund Jenkins and others at the Institute for Basic Research of the New York State Office of Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities, on Staten Island.

Last November, scientists from the National Institutes of Health, in an unscheduled presentation at a meeting of the Society for Neuroscience, said they had located what appeared to be the same gene.

Dr. Dmitry V. Goldgaber said his group at the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke found the gene on chromosome 21, a crucial repository of genetic information that previously has been linked to Alzheimer's disease and Down's syndrome.

"It fits nicely with what people know about these diseases," Goldgaber said afterwards.

Robakis said in a telephone interview that three research groups, including his and Goldgaber's, appear to have located and isolated the gene independently. Similar results were obtained by Dr. Muller Hill and associates at the University of Cologne in West Germany, he said.

Trade restriction hurting consumers

WASHINGTON (AP) — While restricting imports may save some American jobs, it isn't worth the added price consumers have to pay for imported goods, the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission says.

"The simple fact is that trade restraints hurt consumers," Daniel Oliver told the annual assembly of the Consumer Federation of America on Friday. And he called on consumer advocates to join his agency in opposing restrictions on foreign goods.

Overall, Oliver said, trade restrictions cost Americans $50 billion annually in higher prices. He contended that "the cost of saving jobs through import restraints far outweighs the benefits."

Some consumer groups support trade barriers in an effort to protect American jobs, but they actually are working against consumers, he said, adding that they "can't be both in favor of consumers and in favor of protectionism."

"The FTC's staff found that, for example, in the automobile industry, protectionism costs consumers over $200,000 a year for each job saved. Yet the average wage in auto manufacturing is only $40,000 a year. That's hardly a bargain for the American consumer," Oliver told the meeting.

Oliver noted that some consumer groups have contended that the cost of saving jobs is relatively small when spread out over all consumers.

The Consumer Federation of America, for example, has estimated the cost at about $300 per consumer. And Oliver's cost estimate of $50 billion would average out to just over $200 for each of the 242 million Americans.

"Of course, we're all sensitive to the jobs issue. But economists have found no correlation between unemployment and rising imports," Oliver said. He said that during the last four years, for example, while imports were increasing, the number of jobs in the U.S. economy was also growing.

Limits on imports, such as the quotas on Japanese autos, raise consumer prices by reducing the supply of goods available in the marketplace, Oliver told the group. The end result is more profits for Japanese automakers, he said.

Oliver said it is essential to allow the U.S. economy to restructure itself to fit into a global marketplace — "protectionism merely slows down the process and makes it more painful for everyone."

Cop suspended after incident with scalper

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas police officer has been suspended for 20 days because he threatened to arrest a ticket scalper who tried to charge the off-duty officer $50 for a $16.50 ticket to a sold-out basketball game earlier this season between the Dallas Mavericks and the Los Angeles Lakers.

Michael A. Hackbarth, 29, who joined the force three years ago, was suspended without pay for violating a city policy that prohibits an officer from using his position to secure special privileges, according to police Internal Affairs administrative officer Jim Chandler.

"He attempted to use his official position for personal gain," acting Police Chief Harold Warren said Friday after a closed-door hearing in which he handed down the suspension.

Hackbarth, who took the scalper to police officers working security at the arena and had him placed under arrest for disorderly conduct, obstructing the sidewalk and resisting arrest, also violated department policy by enforcing a Class C misdemeanor while off duty and out of uniform, Chandler said.

According to police, Hackbarth approached Wilson Graham, 43, identified himself as an officer and told Graham he could go to jail if he did not sell Hackbarth a ticket at its face value, Chandler said.

Kin separated for 45 years share Valentine's reunion

MAURICEVILLE, Texas (AP) — Chief Sanders will be celebrating a special Valentine's Day at a reunion with the mother he barely remembers and a sister that until one month ago he never knew he had.

The 47-year-old Sanders last saw his mother 45 years ago, but on Friday she and Sanders' sister, Becky Steer of Redlands, Calif., showed up for a surprise visit.

"When I got out of the car, I just stood there and looked at him," said Charlotte Persall, Sanders' mother. "All these years, I've remembered him as a baby. And here he is a man."

Sanders didn't know they were coming until a friend called from the local airport to say they were on the way over.

"Even with them sitting here in the kitchen, it's still hard to believe," a teary-eyed Sanders told the Beaumont Enterprise.

Sanders and his three older brothers were separated from their mother after a divorce. Sanders' father took the boys to Alabama, where he worked in a shipyard until he was drafted into the Army.

The boys stayed with an aunt until their father returned. Relatives believe he later abandoned them and the brothers ended up in a Corpus Christi orphanage.

Sanders was adopted by a couple in Aransas Pass and his adoptive parents never permitted him to visit his brothers, who eventually ran away from the orphanage.

Ron Seabridge, a martial arts instructor, had experience in locating lost families. He helped his wife regain contact with her family, and offered to help Sanders after reading of his desire to find his family.

He got as much information about the family as Sanders could recall and began making phone calls. He called cities in Texas, Alabama and California before he finally located Ms. Persall.

"When that man called me that night and told me my son was looking for me, I couldn't believe it," Persall says. "I stayed up all that night and cried."

When Ms. Steer got four days off work, she decided that she and her mother were going to Texas.

Friday, the reunited family ate fried chicken — just like any ordinary family might — but there was a lot more laughter going on.

"Right now, I guess I can say all my worries are over," Persall said. "I finally know where all my children are."

Justices plan to drop suit

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The attorney for two Texas Supreme Court justices, under investigation on allegations of misconduct, said his clients plan to drop their lawsuit against the House Committee on Judicial Affairs and two former high court briefing attorneys.

Austin lawyer Buck Wood said Friday that he will file court papers next week to withdraw the lawsuit in which Justices William Kilgarlin and C.L. Ray claimed they were defamed in testimony that two briefing clerks gave the House committee.

The justices' accusations involved testimony last summer by Jeff Armstrong and Kathryn Strolle during the panel's investigation into charges that the justices leaked confidential information to attorneys who had cases pending before the court.

State Sen. Frank Tejeda, who chaired the House committee during the probe and later won a seat in the Senate, was also named as a defendant.

The lawsuit originally sought to challenge committee subpoenas ordering the judges to appear and answer misconduct allegations under oath.

Wood said the judges decided to drop the litigation after the panel, under new leadership, voted early last week to discontinue any further public hearings into the matter.

Ladies defeat 'Stangs, 60-57

ANDREWS -- Coach Ken Housden's Lady Tigers completed their 1986-87 basketball season here Friday with a 60-57 victory over Andrews.

Snyder, which kept playoff hopes alive until the end, was knocked out of post season play Friday as Sweetwater defeated Monahans 58-34 to take the runnerup spot.

The Lady Tigers conclude the season with an overall record of 18-10 and 10-6 in District 2-4A competition.

"The kids played hard. They really wanted it," said Coach Housden. "It was good to go out with a win."

The Lady Tigers jumped out to an 18-9 first-quarter advantage here Friday, but were unable to hold it as Andrews stormed back to win the second period 20-12. The Lady Mustangs got their only lead of the game late in the second quarter. Snyder came back to score five points in a 20-second span, however, to lead 30-29 at halftime. The Tigers never trailed again in the ballgame.

"Teri Sue Henry had three fouls in the first two minutes (of the game) so she was only able to spot play the rest of the time," noted Housden. "Rhonda Echols came in off the bench for her and did a real good job for us, especially on the boards. And Christi Comer had a good shooting game."

Comer bagged 21 points while Stephanie McKnight and Melody Pickering added 10 apiece.

McKnight also came away with six steals and Pickering and Echols led on the boards with eight rebounds apiece.

Andrews, 11-17 overall and 7-9, got 23 points from Paula Jones. Holly Luck scored 18 and Kathleen Johnson pumped in 10.

Turnovers costly as Tigers fall 67-49 to AHS Mustangs

It was a combination of one team having a hot shooting hand and the other team not getting to shoot as the Andrews Mustangs ran over the Snyder Tigers here Friday, 67-49, in a boy's District 2-4A ballgame.

Andrews had the warm touch early while its full court press provided an unofficial 13 first-quarter turnovers. The result was a 26-13 advantage just eight minutes deep into the game. The eighth-ranked Mustangs then opened the second quarter with three unanswered buckets - running up a 32-13 lead en route to their 26th victory in 29 outings this season.

"We had 18 turnovers the first half and that was basically the game," said Snyder Coach Larry Scott afterward. "They shot the ball real well but we gave them 18 chances to score just on turnovers. If we even score on 40 per cent of those it's still a close game at halftime."

Although Andrews got the big lead early, it may not have been the killing blow. Snyder was, in fact, able to rally in the third quarter, taking advantage when Andrews suddenly went cold from the field.

"Coach Birks (assistant Bud Birks) came up with a different press offense and we were able to take advantage. We hit several layups off of their press," noted Coach Scott.

Snyder went inside to 6-4 senior Chris Garrett, who had 11 points in the quarter. The Tigers actually scored 11 straight points in the period, to pull from 20 down to within nine, 47-38, with 2:16 to go.

The teams then traded buckets, but a couple of late turnovers allowed Bernard Williams and Damon Clay to score for Andrews, extending the visitor's lead to 53-40 at the end of the quarter.

But the crucial moment came in the fourth. Snyder had pulled back within 10, 55-45, and had chances to cut the advantage to eight. Efforts by Garrett, Trey Tippens, Reynaldo Gomez and Kevin Combest all bounced harmlessly from the rim, however. Finally, Andrews rebounded and Louis Clay converted for the Mustangs.

The next trip up the floor for Snyder was a carbon copy as Tiger players shot or tipped the ball toward the basket seven times but couldn't get anything to fall. Again, Andrews finally rebounded and Mike Moisant scored. The Mustangs added another two-pointer moments later, and with a 61-44 lead had the game on ice.

"There were a couple of times there when we couldn't get the ball in the hole and that hurt," said Scott. "We were going up real strong but we needed to get a soft shot off and couldn't get it done."

Garrett's 26 points led all scorers while Terry Garza added 11 for the Tigers. Combest notched 5 points and Tippens 4 for the hosts, who fell to 16-12 overall and 9-5 in district play.

Andrews got 20 points from Williams, 17 from Gym Bice and 11 from Damon Clay.

Next action for the Tigers occurs Tuesday when they entertain San Angelo Lake View in Scurry County Coliseum at 7:30 p.m.

2-4A playoff reps known

District 2-4A basketball has found its playoff representatives, despite the fact that a week's worth of playing time remains in the boy's league.

Big Spring, 15-1 in league play and 25-4 overall, wrapped up the girl's championship a week ago. Sweetwater took the runnerup slot Friday night with a 58-34 victory over Monahans. The win put the Lady Mustangs at 11-5 in 2-4A play, edging out Snyder, which finished with a 10-6 mark.

The boy's race was also decided Friday. Andrews went 14-0 after defeating Snyder 67-49 while Lamesa sealed its playoff berth with an 84-78 victory over Big Spring. Both teams have two games remaining, including one with each other - but neither can be caught from behind now.

Lamesa's win put the Golden Tornadoes at 13-1 in district play and assured a playoff berth because the Big Spring Steers - in third place - fell to 10-4. The Steers are three games behind with only two left to play.

The only riddle left to be solved is whether Lamesa can upset the eighth-ranked Andrews Mustangs next week and thus force a co-championship between the teams.

Andrews is 26-3 overall while Lamesa is 25-4.

Late shot sinks Cats in junior varsity tilt

Todd Lucas hit a 20-foot jump shot with five seconds to play here Friday, propelling Andrews junior varsity boys past Snyder, 55-54.

Snyder will try get back on the winning track next Tuesday as it hosts San Angelo Lake View at 6 p.m. in Scurry County Coliseum.

Lucas hit 17 points for the night to lead all scorers. Brinson Hammond had 12 and Brian Boone 10 for the Mustangs.

Snyder was led by Van Echols' 16. Perry Greathouse scored 9 and Tracy Braziel added 8.

Snyder girls garner second in San Angelo Tournament

SAN ANGELO – Snyder's Lady Tigers shot a second-round 374 here Friday to take second place in the San Angelo Invitational Golf Tournament, the girl's first action of the 1987 season.

Snyder had turned in a 399 Thursday at San Angelo Country Club, falling behind leaders Andrews and Amarillo. When the action moved over to Bentwood Country Club on Friday, the Tigers shaved 25 strokes off their total - tying Andrews for the best score of the day.

"Lee Ann and Angie got some confidence and that really made a lot of difference," said Snyder Coach Jan Kruse of Lee Ann Thompson and Angie Lay, who both whittled 10 or more strokes off of their scores from Thursday to Friday.

Snyder's total 773 fell in second place overall to Andrews, which had opened the tournament with a 366 and finished with a total 740. Amarillo took third with a 783, followed by Big Spring at 827. Midland Lee at 833 and Fort Stockton at 839. Twelve other teams were entered in the competition.

Snyder's second-round scores were an 89 from Leslie Light, a 91 from Thompson, 97s from Lay and Camille Reed, and a 117 from Kristi Neill.

"This is the first time we've gotten better than fourth place at this tournament and it's the first time we've had all four (countable) scores under 100," said Kruse.

For the tournament, Light shot a 177 to tie for fourth place in the medalist race. Thompson had a 194, Reed a 198, Lay a 204, and Neill a 232.

Medalist was Chrissi Wittenburg of San Angelo, who shot a 163.

Stadler shares Williams lead

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) - After posting 62s in two consecutive tournaments, Craig Stadler thinks he just may have found his game again.

In 1982, Stadler won four tournaments, including the Masters, and led the PGA Tour in money won with $446,462. Since then, however, he has had only one victory and that was almost three years ago.

"The adrenalin is going," Stadler said. "I'm making some putts. My confidence is up and I feel like I can score again.

"It feels like it felt a few years ago. It's fun to play again," Stadler said Friday after his latest 10-under-par 62 earned him a share of the lead at the halfway point of the $500,000 Andy Williams Open golf tournament.

He completed 36 holes - one round over both the North and South courses at Torrey Pines - in 131, 13 strokes under par. He was tied for the lead with George Burns, who set a short-lived record for the North course with a 63 on Thursday and added a 68 over the South on Friday. Burns has now gone through two rounds without a bogey.

Stadler, who had a 62 that helped get him into a playoff last week in the Hawaiian Open, scored nine birdies and an eagle in breaking Burns' 1-day-old record.

"I played much better than I did last week," Stadler said. "I'm proud of myself, for once."

While Burns owned his course record for a day, Stadler ended up sharing his before the afternoon was finished.

Andy Bean matched Stadler's record score to complete two rounds at 132, a single stroke back. He was tied with Lon Hinkle, who had a 68 on the South, the more difficult of the two courses and the one that will be used for the remainder of the tournament.

U.S. Open champion Ray Floyd shot 68 on the South to lead a group at 11-under-par 133 that also included J.C. Snead, Dave Eichelberger, Tim Simpson, Canadian Dan Halldorson and Chip Beck.

Beck closed up with an 8-under-par 64 on the North course, where Simpson shot a 66.

Halldorson holed out a 5-iron shot for an eagle-2 during a round of 65 on the South course. Eichelberger had a 68 and Snead a 69, both on the South.

Tom Watson shot 69 in the cool, cloudy weather on the North course and completed two rounds at 137.

Seve Ballesteros of Spain was one stroke higher at 138 after another 69, this on the South course.

PGA title-holder and defending champion Bob Tway failed to qualify for the final two rounds of the tournament he won a year ago. He shot 72 on the North for a 143 total. A score of 4-under-par 140 was necessary to qualify.

Morris gets richest contract in salary arbitration history

DETROIT (AP) - Jack Morris, the winningest pitcher in the 1980s, has won again.

This time, the victory was worth a raise of nearly $1 million.

Morris won the richest contract in salary arbitration history Friday when he was awarded $1.85 million, rather than the $1.35 million the Detroit Tigers had offered.

Arbiter Richard Bloch, a Washington, D.C., labor lawyer, made his decision after conducting a hearing Thursday. Bloch's award paired Morris, who made $875,000 last year, with Fernando Valenzuela of the Los Angeles Dodgers as the highest-paid pitchers in the major leagues.

The ruling put an end to the recent and often-bitter differences between Morris and the Tigers. After last season ended, Morris said he would not return to Detroit in 1987 and declared free agency.

Morris made contract proposals - including an offer to let an arbiter determine his salary - to the New York Yankees, Minnesota, Philadelphia and California, but was rejected by all four teams, which claimed they could not afford him.

The right-hander, who joined the Tigers during the 1977 season and lost in salary arbitration in 1982, said he intended to put aside his differences with Detroit management.

Tigers spokesman Dan Ewald said, "This is the way the arbitration process provides now, and we will abide by it." Morris' standing as having won the largest salary in arbitration could change next week. New York Yankees star Don Mattingly is seeking $1.975 million, and his case will be heard Monday.

Bloch had ruled in 11 arbitration cases in the past, deciding in favor of the team seven times.

There were two other arbitration decisions Friday. Relief pitcher Greg Harris won his case and will be paid $620,000, rather than the $575,000 the Texas Rangers offered. Jim Acker lost his case and will make the $350,000 the Atlanta Braves offered instead of the $450,000 he sought.

Also in baseball news, the New York Yankees signed catcher Rick Cerone and the Texas Rangers re-signed pitcher Mike Mason.

McHale paces Boston Celtics to victory over Trail Blazers

by The Associated Press

The Boston Celtics are again looking like NBA champions, and it's Kevin McHale, not Larry Bird, who is sparking them.

"There's no question he's probably the best scorer in the league right now. He's just unstoppable down low," Bird said after McHale got 37 points and led Boston past the Portland Trail Blazers 131-116 Friday night.

The Celtics, tied with the Los Angeles Lakers for the best record in the NBA at 37-12, scored eight straight points in the third quarter to take control at 91-79. Boston went on to increase its lead to 21 points.

The Celtics are now 3-0 on an eight-game road trip that has lasted four days so far.

Elsewhere, it was Chicago 106, Seattle 98; Phoenix 105, Utah 98; the Los Angeles Lakers 113, Indiana 108; and the Los Angeles Clippers 110, San Antonio 96.

McHale got within one point of his season high. He shot 10-for-10 from the foul line. Danny Ainge added 26 for the Celtics.

Bird scored 22 points and had 13 assists. Surprisingly, Bird could not connect from two favorite spots, shooting 0-for-4 from 3-point range and missing both of his foul shots.

Steve Johnson scored 25 points and Kiki Vandeweghe 19 for the Trail Blazers, who were tied 74-74 with 7:04 left in the third quarter.

Bulls 106, SuperSonics 98

Michael Jordan, the NBA's leading scorer, scored 45 points and combined with Mike Brown to lead a 16-0 Chicago surge in the fourth quarter that led the Bulls over visiting Seattle.

Jordan made a foul shot with 5:36 left in the game to put Chicago ahead 89-88. Jordan then scored 11 of the game's next 15 points, with Brown getting the other four.

Lakers 113, Pacers 108

Earvin "Magic" Johnson scored 40 points, including nine during an 11-0 spree in the third quarter that sent the host Los Angeles Lakers over Indiana.

Johnson made consecutive three-point plays during the burst that put the Lakers ahead for good at 75-69 with 3:04 left in the third period.

Clippers 110, Spurs 96

Mike Woodson scored a season-high 37 points and Friday the 13th turned out to be lucky for the Los Angeles Clippers as they won in San Antonio.

The Clippers scored the first 10 points and led the entire way in winning for just the eighth time in 48 games this season. The Spurs lost their third in a row after having won seven straight before the All-Star break.

Suns 105, Jazz 98

Larry Nance scored 26 points and Walter Davis added 17 as Phoenix beat Utah.

Ed Pinckney's two foul shots and a stuff by Nance gave the host Suns the lead for good at 80-77 entering the fourth quarter. The Jazz got to within 97-96 with 1:57 left in the game, but Davis made two foul shots with 1:17 remaining and Nance hit a jump shot with 41 seconds to go.

Company abandons state oil lease in Gulf of Mexico

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — A Dallas-based oil drilling company is relinquishing its state lease in the Gulf of Mexico south of Shiprock, and state officials say they don't expect other companies to snap up the lease.

"We just drilled a well and thought we would find a big reef (containing large oil deposits).... We didn't find one," said Philip Beron Jr., a consultant for Sapphire Exploration and Production Inc.

Sapphire, which had leased 20,307 acres about four miles south of Ship Island from the state Commission on Natural Resources, formally relinquishes its drilling rights Monday. That is the due date for next year's rent of $72,735.

John Kellis, chief of the commission's Mineral Leasing Division, said that he has been notified by Sapphire of its decision to cut its losses and run.

"They didn't find anything out there," Kellis said.

Sapphire has owned drilling rights in the Gulf since last summer and began actual operations in September. Beron, whose consulting firm is based in New Orleans, said that within a month after it started drilling, Sapphire had pulled out of the area completely.

"They (Sapphire officials) just felt it wasn't justified" to continue drilling because they could find no oil, he said.

Beron indicated that once company officials began to have second thoughts about operations in the Gulf, they tried to find other drilling companies interested in assuming part of Sapphire's leased lands.

"In order to make it more attractive to someone to take the lease, we asked the Department of Natural Resources if it was possible to reduce the size of the lease, and they agreed," he said.

Kellis said that the commission had granted Sapphire's request to turn over part of the lease to other companies. The commission agreed to reduce Sapphire's acreage obligation from 20,307 to 14,547 beginning Monday. That would have meant a drop in annual rent from $101,535 to $72,735. Rent is $5 an acre.

"Usually, you can get another company to take over the lease," Beron said. "However, I wasn't successful."

The commission's executive director, Charles Blalock, said that the state would like to find another company to take over the lands because of the revenue that leases bring in.

S. Baptist split is predicted

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Southern Baptists could split over friction between fundamentalists and moderates unless they accept recommendations by a committee seeking to resolve tensions, the president of the North Carolina Baptist State Convention says.

Bill Poe, a Charlotte lawyer and a member of the Southern Baptist Convention's Peace Committee, said the strife could come to a head at the convention's annual meeting in June.

"I think the St. Louis meeting is going to be the crisis point in the convention," he told The Charlotte Observer. "If the Peace Committee report gets shot down and nothing comes out that is harmonious, I think there will clearly be some splinter groups coming out of St. Louis."

Poe said the emergence of the new Southern Baptist Alliance, announced Thursday by its president, The Rev. Henry Crouch of Charlotte, also could create problems within the convention.

"It sounds very much like the roots of another organization quite different from the Southern Baptist Convention," Poe said.

Crouch said the coalition of individuals and churches, born of frustration over eight years of battles between fundamentalists and moderates, would give moderates a way to lend moral and financial support to causes unpopular with the convention's fundamentalist leaders. He said the group calls for freedom to interpret the Bible, freedom for local churches to call female pastors, and freedom of thought at schools and seminaries.

"We would hope the convention would right itself so that an organization like ours would not be necessary," Crouch said. "But the chances of that are slim. The convention will probably move in the other direction."

However, The Rev. Adrian Rogers of Memphis, president of the 14.5 million-member convention, said the new group will "polarize people." He suggested that moderates and liberals who don't support convention policies simply go elsewhere.

While Crouch said his group isn't political in nature and won't draft a candidate for president at the St. Louis convention, The Rev. Robert Tenery, a fundamentalist leader from Morganton, disagreed.

He laughed at the idea that the alliance isn't a political group.

"If you can believe that, you can look for the tooth fairy," said Tenery, who edits the Southern Baptist Advocate, a national fundamentalist newspaper.

Today, there are more blacks in the United States than in any country except Nigeria or Zaire, says National Geographic.

"FILING SHORT FORM NOT SIMPLE," SAYS H & R BLOCK

Commodities to be distributed

Commodities of cheese, butter, rice, milk, honey and flour will be distributed to senior citizens and handicapped persons on Tuesday and to other eligible residents of Scurry County on Wednesday. Items will be distributed at the Senior Center, 2603 Ave. M, between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. both days.

Any participants not certified in January must be recertified before receiving commodities. All applicants must come in person, have proof of identity and proof of residence. If the applicant receives AFCD, food stamps, medical assistance only (MAO), or SSI they must bring proof of being in those programs by furnishing forms number 1009, 3087, 3088, or 1027 which establishes eligibility.

Eligibility guidelines for citizens of Scurry County are posted at the Senior Center. There will be no make-up day and all individuals are asked to enter through the north door of the building and to bring paper sacks or boxes to transport commodities.

In 1868, Republican Ulysses S. Grant won the presidential election over Democrat Horatio Seymour.

Jury refutes self-defense claim

AUSTIN (AP) — An Austin jury has convicted a man of murder for the death of his business partner during an outing on a boat last summer.

Rolland Lawson, 47, first contended that Elvin Leroy Pollock drowned accidentally last June 6 in Lake Travis. Pollock's body, weighted with an anchor and a rock, was recovered 17 days later in the lake.

Lawson admitted shooting Pollock, but told police he killed him in self defense. The two were partners in Austin Honda.

Lawson testified that after he shot Pollock, he decided to sink the body in the lake to keep from hurting Pollock's family and avoid the embarrassment of a trial.

Lower prices passed to city gas customers.

Lone Star Gas officials have announced that Snyder customers saved an estimated $378,000 during 1986 on their monthly bills due to lower gas costs for the company.

These savings passed along to Lone Star customers amounted to $80 million systemwide, according to Jim Rankin, vice president of the West Texas distribution system.

"This is a direct result of Lone Star's achieving a significantly lower current gas cost than the base cost of gas built into the company's rates," Rankin said.

"Between January and December of last year, the unit cost of gas purchased by the company was reduced by nearly 17 percent."

Using the Gas Cost Adjustment (GCA), Lone Star is able to pass the savings of lower gas prices on to each gas customer every month.

"Unlike other utilities which must wait to refund overcharges, we are allowed to pass the savings on to our customers immediately," he said.

In 1896, Republican William McKinley defeated Democrat William Jennings Bryan for the presidency.

Panama proclaimed its independence from Colombia in 1903.

Listed in the caption above are delinquent tax suits in which Judgments of Foreclosure have been rendered and Orders of Sale have been issued. The listing for each suit sets out: (1) the Cause Number; (2) the Plaintiff Tax Unit; (3) the Defendants; (4) the date of the Judgment-(5) the date of Levy; and (6) the property description.
Under the Order of Sale issued pursuant to each Judgment above listed, I did at the time specified for each suit levy upon each Property in such suit as described above as the property of the Defendants named or designated in such suit. On the sale date specified above, which is the first Tuesday of said month, I will offer and sell at public auction, for cash, each property described above, and all the right, title, interest and estate in and to each such property owned or claimed by the Defendants named in connection with each such property; PROVIDED, however, that no property shall be sold directly or indirectly to anyone other than a Tax Unit which is a party to that specific suit for less than the total amount of taxes, penalties, interest and costs due against that particular property or any adjudged value decreed, whichever is lower.
The Foreclosure Sales under this Notice will be held on the first Tuesday of said month, at the Courthouse door of said County, at the time set out above, by and through the LAW OFFICES OF GATES STEEN, 3001 N. Lamar Blvd., Suite 306, Austin, Texas 78705 (Area Code 512) 476-4688, my authorized representative.
The sale of each property shall be subject to the rights of the Defendants named in connection with each particular property, and any successors in title, to redeem such specified property in the time and manner provided by law; and subject also to the rights of any defendants to have each particular property owned or claimed by such defendants divided and sold in less dividions than the whole as provided by law. The sale as to each property is to be made to satisfy the Judgment rendered against that particular property and the Defendants named in connection with that particular property. The proceeds of the sale of each property are to be applied to the satisfaction of the Judgment against that particular property, and the remainder of the sale proceeds, if any, are to be applied as the law directs.

Civil rights leaders hail the verdict against the KKK

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Civil rights leaders Friday hailed an all-white jury's $7 million judgment against the United Klans of America for the beating death of a black teen-ager, with some calling it an "unequivocal message" to the KKK.

Coretta Scott King said she was "heartened and encouraged" that the jury "had the courage and decency to take a strong stand against racist violence. Let this decision serve notice that Klan terrorism will no longer be tolerated anywhere in America."

A federal jury returned the judgment Thursday against the nation's largest Klan group in a suit brought by Beulah Mae Donald, whose 19-year-old son, Michael, was slain by two United Klans members.

The money, Mrs. Donald said, "won't bring my child back. But I'm glad they caught the guilty and brought them to court, because I did everything I could to help."

Donald's corpse was hanged lynch-style in a tree on March 21, 1981. He had been abducted at random because he was black and killed to "show Klan strength in Alabama," a former Klansman testified.

The jury deliberated 4½ hours before returning the $7 million award against the corporate Klan and six of its present or former members, including two who were sent to prison for killing Donald.

The NAACP was originally a plaintiff with Mrs. Donald, but bowed out after winning an injunction against the Klan on Jan. 22. The injunction restricted United Klans activities that intimidate blacks, such as wearing robes or burning crosses in public.

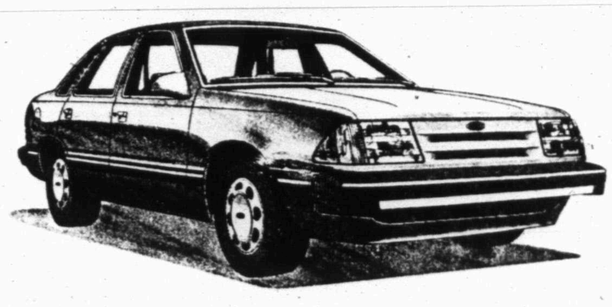

The Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in Atlanta, called it "probably the most significant verdict in history toward the Klan as an organization.

U.S. District Judge Alex Howard will hold a hearing later to determine the value of United Klans' assets.

By Vicki Brown

To his players and the fans in the National Junior College Athletic Association, Kelly Chadwick is known as "Coach." But in drag racing circles, the Dusters' leader remains "the Flying Professor."

A National Hot Rod Association Hall of Famer, the Western Texas College coach first gave up a successful career in high school athletic programs to rise to the top spot of the funny car ranks. A coaching offer later encouraged him to return to the coaching ranks.

Although he retired from active participation on the professional drag circuit in 1976, Chadwick points out the two sports feed his competitive drive. "Competitive people look for ways to express their competitiveness whether it's through having the best team, running the fastest car or making the most money."

The Oklahoma farm boy believes his background not only prepared him for the technical aspects of racing, but also instilled the desire to pursue the sport.

"I grew up on a farm in an era when you didn't take the tractor or truck to the shop to get it fixed. You did it yourself. I learned a lot about mechanics. And I think you have to have a mechanical background or aptitude to race," he said.

He added that a car's speed, not its looks, was important to high schoolers in the 1950s. That difference contributed to his desire to race as well. "When I grew up in the '50s, for some reason, cars were very important. We weren't interested in having the best stereo system, but we were more interested in having the fastest car," Chadwick explained.

"I'm not sure we even wanted a radio because the more weight the more it slowed you down."

A participant in circle track racing while in high school, Chadwick traveled to the races in Oklahoma City while attending Southwestern Oklahoma State University in Weatherford.

When he began his coaching career in Texas after graduation in 1955, he believed he would no longer race. "I thought that would be the end of racing for me. But at that time, drag racing became popular and I started going to the drag strip," he said.

Chadwick taught athletics throughout the week, but weekends would find him on the strip in the family vehicle. "I basically started with my family car. The joke was that you raced on Saturday night and rebuilt on Sunday so that your car would run Monday," he laughed.

Relying on his mechanical background, he built his first "real" racing car in 1960 using a 1932 Ford coupe. He transformed the street vehicle by changing the chassis, installing a 327 cubic inch Chevrolet engine, replacing the transmission and rear assembly and adding larger tires and axles. "My top speed was 110 mph in a quarter-mile race. Racing has come so far since then it's almost unbelievable. The same car with the same engine would probably reach 145 mph now. But, of course, it wouldn't even be a practical race car now," he said.

Although a newcomer and only a part-time racer on the professional circuit, Chadwick claimed the American Hot Rod Association's national drag racing championship in 1961.

Before the win, he considered leaving the sport primarily due to the difficulty of maintaining two careers. But the prestige in the top spot attracted the financial support he needed to continue. "It was the culmination of racing for me. My partner and I sold the car and I made up my mind to quit racing. It was expensive and it was hard to make a living (coaching) and still race. But I got a lot of publicity and people started wanting to help," he explained.

He placed his full attention on coaching through the first half of the 1962 racing season. But, with financial backing, he rebuilt a 409 cubic inch 1962 Chevrolet and returned to the stock car circuit.

Chadwick explained that in the late 1950s and throughout the 1960s, major automobile manufacturers invested heavily in the sport. Ford, Chevrolet and Chrysler-Plymouth officials often marketed a car to the public that was streamlined for stock car use.

In 1963, the national association barred Chevrolets from circuit. The company built only a limited number of cars and didn't plan to increase production to the association's specifications.

The ban led to a new competitive form — match racing. His belief that Chevrolets could outrun any other make in the field placed Chadwick among the most popular competitors in match racing.

"Each factory was into racing then, and each car maker would produce a fast car," he said. Match racing pitted the best models from each company against one another. The sport became a sort of sidebar to stock car racing. Drivers, like Chadwick, raced only for money and could not earn points for national competition.

Chadwick earned his "Flying Professor" tag while a high school drivers' education teacher in 1963. "The kids really identified with that and it really helped me out a lot with them I think," he said. "'Hot rod' was not a respectable term."

In 1966, he became one of the first racers to build a "funny car" — a modified stock car chassis on an elongated wheel base. Unlike stock car models, the front and rear axles on a funny car could be moved out about 10 to 12 inches from their original base.

His Chevy II (like today's Nova) ran 151 mph. "It was really a fast, lighter-weight car. But today's funny cars record about 259 mph in a quarter-mile race," he added.

Although the vehicles were not sanctioned by the association until 1968, Chadwick also built a 1967 Camaro funny car which became one of his favorite racers.

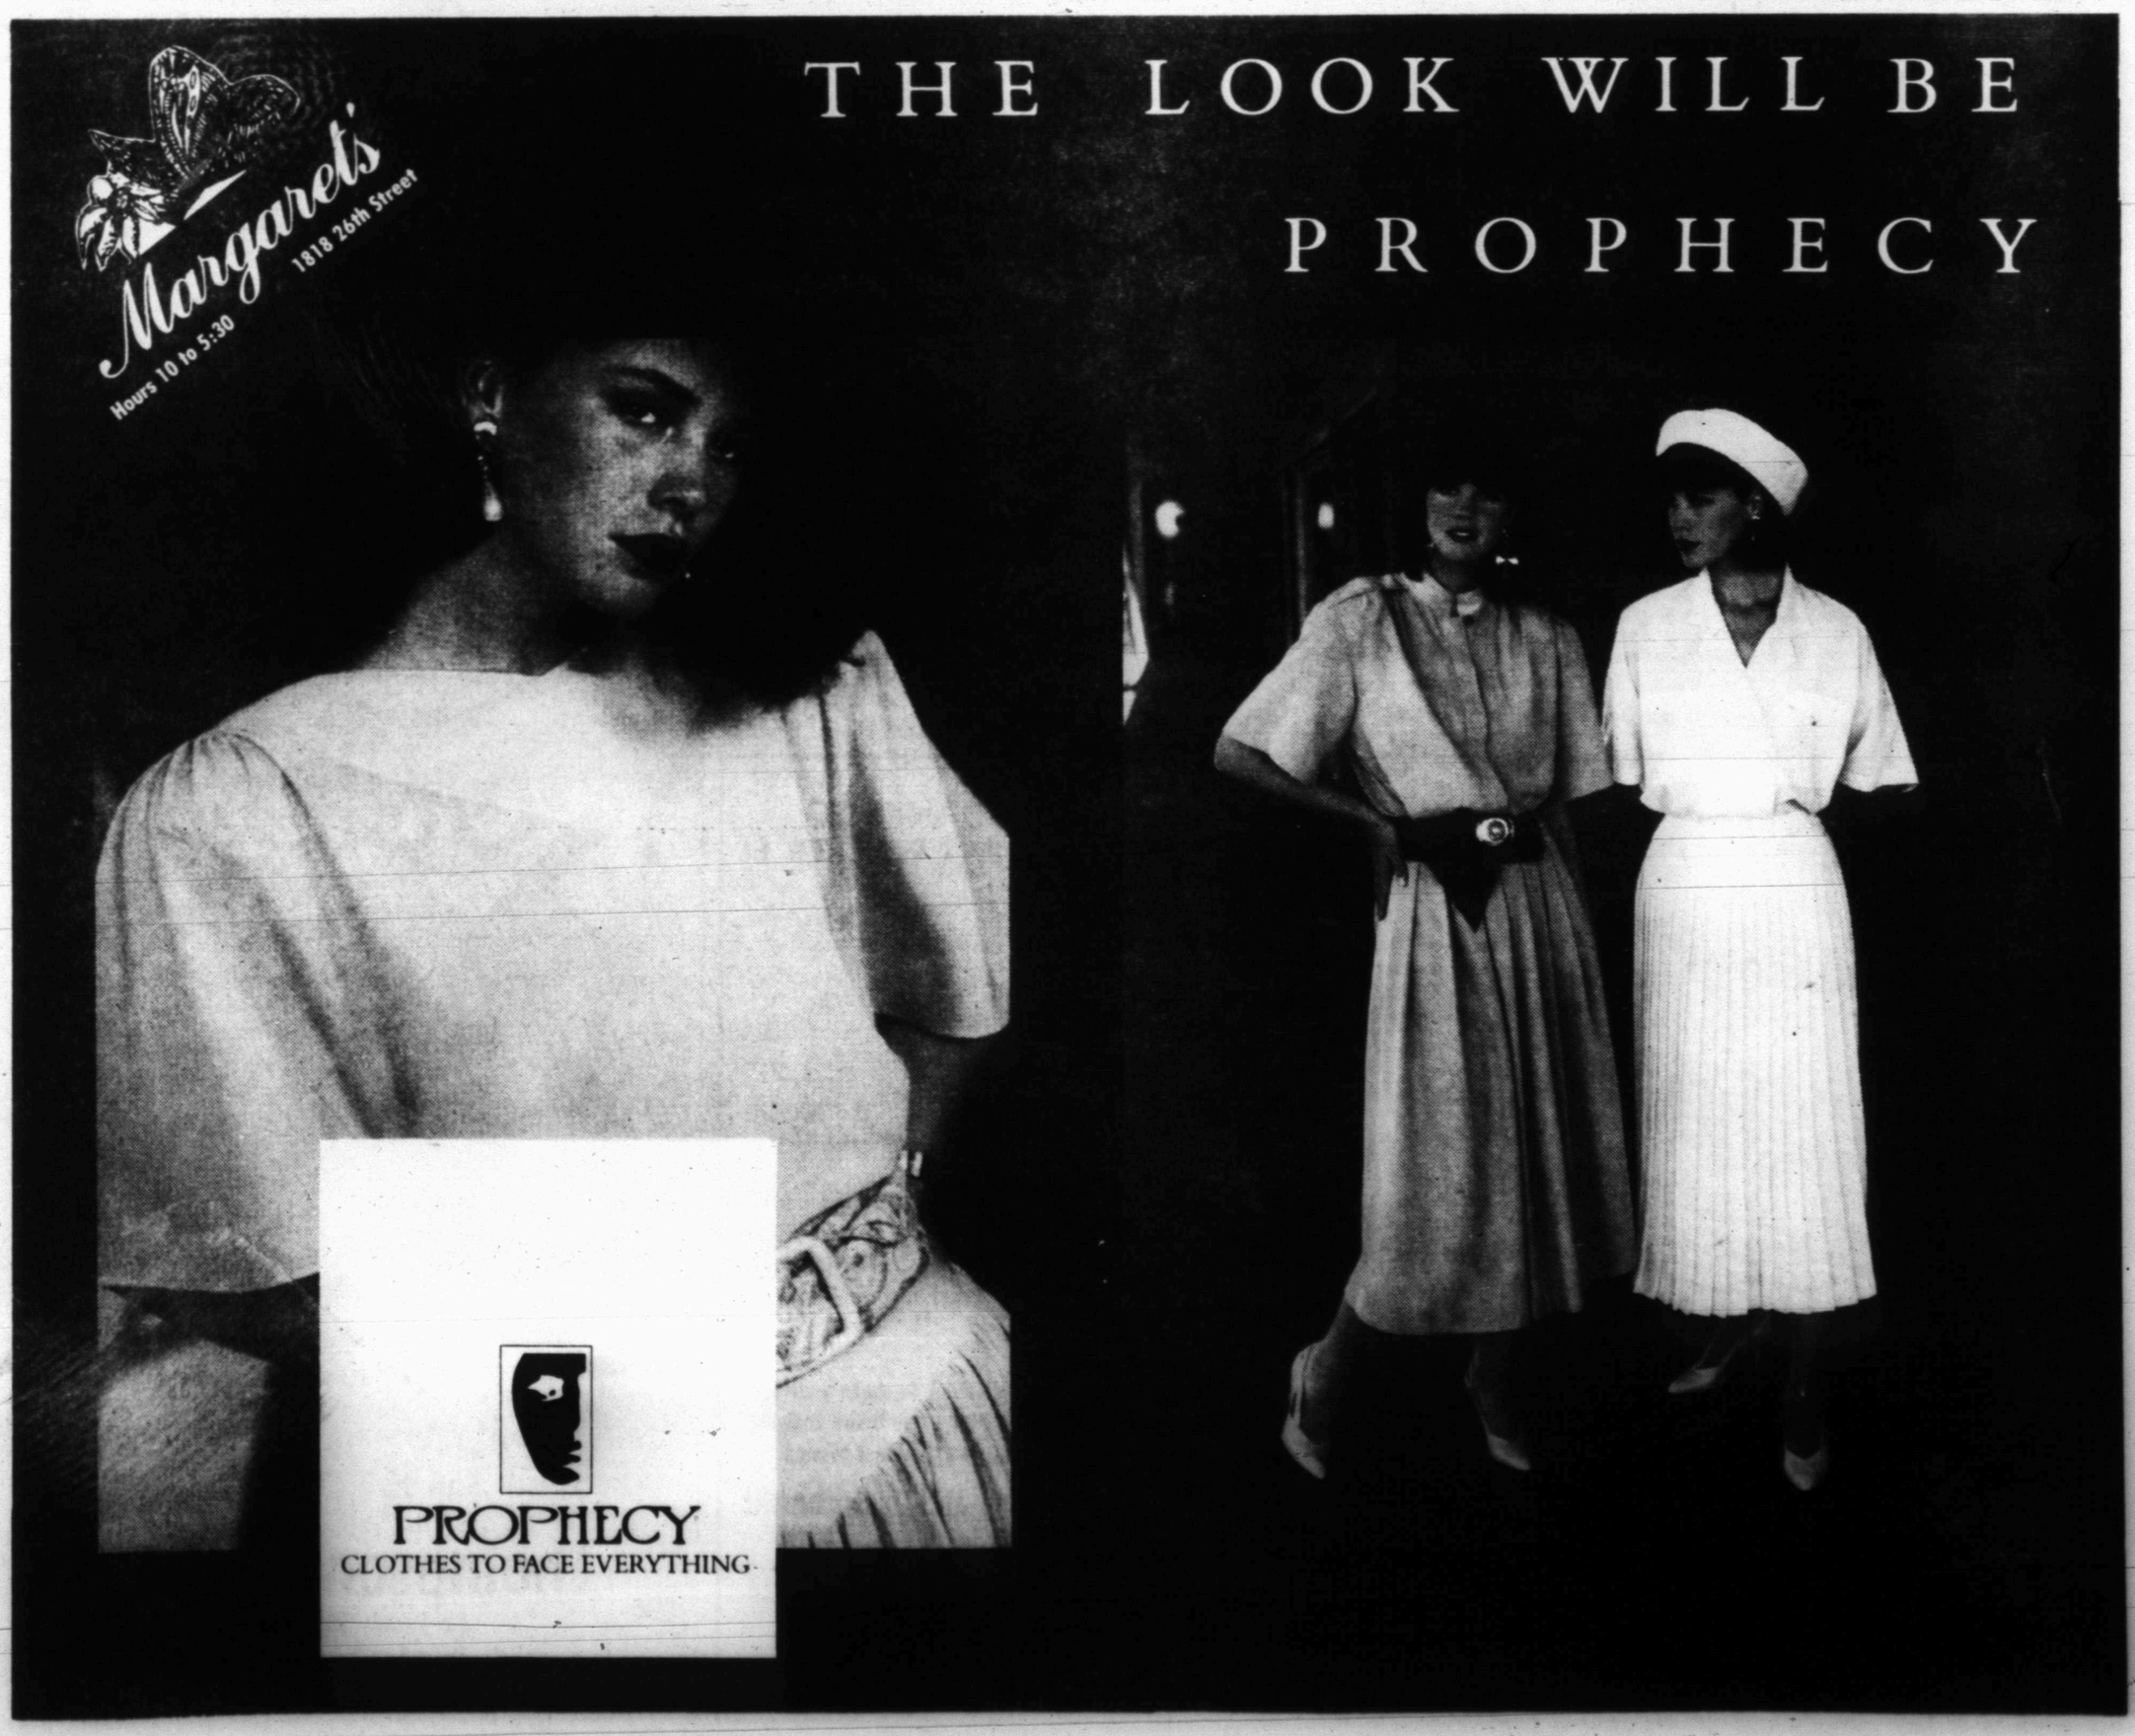

As his professional status grew, his racing schedule became increasingly frantic. Finally, in 1967, he quit coaching

Double wedding vows read

MR. AND MRS. LANDON DWAIN STURDIVANT — MR. AND MRS. HARLEY DON VINEYARD

Melissa Ann Sturdivant and Harley Don Vineyard were joined in matrimony in a double wedding ceremony with Penny Elizabeth Mauldin and Landon Dwain Sturdivant Jan. 27 at 2 p.m. in the Vineyard home. Rev. James Merrell, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, officiated the double-ring ceremony.

Parents of the couples are Mr. and Mrs. Milton Sturdivant of Snyder, Mr. and Mrs. Don Vineyard of Snyder, and Mr. and Mrs. Sam Mauldin of Pauls Valley, Okla.

The home was decorated with greenery accented by purple roses. Pots of orchid daisies completed the special decor.

Given in marriage by their fathers, the brides chose traditional white wedding gowns.

Penny wore a white taffeta creation with a lace overlay. The bodice featured a high sheer neckline and long sheer lace sleeves. The skirt extended from the fitted waist into a floor-length gown and train. Her head piece was borrowed from her mother's wedding. Her veil and train were borrowed from her sister.

She carried a white and orchid silk flower bouquet designed and made by her sister. Streamers of white ribbon and flowers completed the bouquet.

Melissa used her mother's wedding gown which featured a sweetheart neckline with a bodice of taffeta overlaid with lace. Sheer lace sleeves finished with a point over the hands. The floor-length skirt was embellished with a lace overlay. Her fingertip veil fell from a head piece of silk flowers.

She carried a bouquet of white and orchid silk roses with streamers of white and orchid ribbon.

Hadley Vineyard, Harley's brother, served as ring-bearer.

A reception followed the ceremony. The brides' table was covered with an orchid lace cloth and centered with an arrangement of deep purple, orchid and white flowers. The three-tiered cake was decorated with orchid flowers. Punch was served from a crystal bowl.

Servers at the brides' table were Carolyn Bond, aunt of the Sturdivants, and Hayley Vineyard, sister of the Vineyard groom.

The grooms' table was covered with a white cloth and was decorated with a horse-shoe shaped chocolate cake and a small, heart-shaped cake on each side.

After a wedding trip to Abilene, the Sturdivants will reside in Big Spring where the groom is employed as a social worker with the State Hospital.

The Vineyards make their home in Snyder where the groom is employed in farming. The bride is an employee of Permian Communications.

Nun relates struggle in decision

ELGIN, Ill. (AP) — What is it like for a young woman to make the difficult decision to become a nun? Sister Linette Howard, teacher at St. Thomas More School, was willing to talk about this personal decision.

Growing up in San Diego, Calif., and going to public schools, she rarely saw nuns. But there was a constant religious presence in her home, which she attributes to her mother.

"There was something driving me to help other people," she said.

She considered missionary work and the Peace Corps before she thought of becoming a nun. But she told no one. And for a time, other interests took over.

"You know how when you're growing up, you think about getting married and having a family, and you date. I kind of pushed it to the back of my mind."

It came forward again when she was working in an office in San Diego.

"Being out of school and working and trying to get a grasp on where I was going — that's when it came up more — and being not satisfied with what I was doing and wanting to know more about doctrine and about the church."

One evening after attending Mass, she went to the priest and asked him where the convent was.

"All I can say is, it was an inspiration of the Holy Spirit because it had been in my mind, but I never had had enough courage to pursue it."

She went to the convent that evening. It was arranged for her to help in the school where the nuns taught so she could familiarize herself with their life and work.

The sisters at the school were members of the Springfield Dominicans, a teaching and health-care community whose motherhouse (headquarters) is in Springfield.

Arrangements were made for Sister Linette to enter the order as a postulant, a probationary candidate for sisterhood, in August. Then came a time of doubt.

The nuns went away on summer assignment. Her friends were not supportive. Some were already married or engaged. They thought she was crazy. She vacillated. When August arrived, she told the nuns in Springfield she was not coming.

They invited her to Springfield for a "share-in," a time to live at the motherhouse and see what life in the order was like. "When I came for the share-in, the minute I walked through the motherhouse doors, I knew there was peace there," she said. "There was just an overwhelming feeling inside me that this was right."

She reversed her decision again and entered her postulancy, but this was not the end of uncertainty. She found difficulties adjusting to the Midwest and to religious learning.

"There were times when I felt like God was way off. And I was almost to the point where I was questioning, am I giving up God to know my religion?"

She eventually realized, "I had to go through that process of learning new things and deepening my spirituality. But it was so hard to go through and feel like you've been abandoned, like something you know so well was being taken away from you."

The sense of God's closeness returned, she said.

Her postulancy lasted nine months, and her novitiate lasted two years. After that, Sister Linette took temporary vows for five years. Last August, she took her final vows.

"God has always been there. He's always been in my life," she said. "I've always seen God as a best friend. I think I did a lot of talking to him, just what my first-graders would do, just talking back and forth."

In 1885, vice president Thomas A. Hendricks died at the age of 66, eight months after taking office.

Apple Strudel Baklava

By NANCY BYAL
Better Homes and Gardens
Food Editor

Austrian apple strudel and Middle Eastern baklava have two things in common: both feature flaky, wafer-thin pastry and both are scrumptious. This dessert, a melding of the two, is every bit as scrumptious as the originals.

You can find phyllo or filo (FEE-lo) dough in the freezer case of supermarkets and specialty food shops. Because it's almost as thin as tissue paper, it dries out and becomes brittle when exposed to the air. Keep the unused sheets covered with a damp towel while working with phyllo.

APPLE STRUDEL BAKLAVA

¾ pound phyllo dough
1¼ cups margarine or butter, melted
2 cups coarsely shredded peeled apples
1 cup chopped walnuts
1 cup chopped toasted almonds
⅔ cup sugar
¼ cup raisins
1 teaspoon finely shredded lemon peel
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon ground cinnamon
½ cup honey

Keep unused phyllo covered with damp towel while working. Lay six sheets of phyllo in bottom of a buttered 15 by 10 by 1-inch baking pan, brushing each sheet with some margarine. Combine apples, nuts, sugar, raisins, lemon peel, lemon juice and cinnamon. Sprinkle half the nut mixture over phyllo in pan. Top with 6 more sheets of phyllo brushed with margarine. Add remaining nut mixture. Top with remaining phyllo brushed with margarine. Trim phyllo even with edges of pan. Score into diamonds. Bake in 350-degree oven for 35 to 40 minutes. Warm honey; drizzle over diamonds. Cool. Makes 40 servings.

Installing pipe is a problem in the cold

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Beyond 60 degrees north latitude, installing natural gas lines underground for homes and plants is a short summer race against approaching winter.

When the city beyond that latitude is Anchorage, winter problems are compounded by the danger of its position along the volcanic "ring of fire" that circles the Pacific Basin. North America's strongest recorded earthquake hit the Anchorage area in 1964, dropping an entire river valley as much as five feet.

Major Alaska quakes are rare, but tremors frequently cause the earth to heave and shift, creating problems in keeping gas pipes intact under ground. Enstar Natural Gas says it solved most of its problems with gas mains and services by discarding the steel and copper it had used, and adopting polyethylene pipe for most mains and all service lines. The plastic pipe can withstand earth movements and it actually gains in strength as the temperature drops.

Rogers honored

CLAREMORE, Okla. (AP) — Legendary humorist Will Rogers was born in 1879 in what was then Colagah, Indian Territory (now Oklahoma).

In the 1920s and 1930s, he became a roving ambassador of homespun humor, acting as a spokesman for rural America and the common folk everywhere.

After his death in a plane crash in 1935, residents of Oklahoma founded the Will Rogers Museum as a tribute to him.

Naturalists offer last hope to rare species

——By JAY JORDEN
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — A pristine enclave of wilderness just 20 minutes from downtown Dallas may be the last and only hope for a variety of birds and plants that naturalists are sheltering from the stampede of urban progress.

The Greenhills Environmental Center, a 500-acre natural preserve, already is surrounded by development, and volunteers are stalking nearby fields, often just in front of bulldozers, to rescue rare plants about to be shredded into oblivion.

"We are really on the threshold of an explosion out here," said David Donohue, a Greenhills staff member. "We are surrounded by land in development."

Over the next few years, officials expect more than 15,000 acres of White Rock Escarpment lands surrounding the environmental center to be developed with houses and businesses. At that point, Greenhills will be the last significant parcel left in its natural state.

The preserve is the final retreat for rare plants like the White Troutlily, the Spring Coral-Root and the Texas Purplespike, specimens that only recently have been identified.

Greenhills also is one of the last nesting grounds for the Black-capped Vireo, a rare bird that has attracted the interest, and concern, of the Smithsonian Institution and the National Audubon Society.

But it's the still undiscovered rarities that most concern Dr. Geoffrey Stanford, the Greenhills director.

John R. Meyenberg of St. Louis patented evaporated milk in 1884.

Local coach lived in the 'fast lanes'

when he realized he could not build two careers at once. "I made more money in one day (driving) than in a month of teaching. And I knew I couldn't do both right."

He owned, drove and served as mechanic for his cars. As a full-time professional, he logged nearly 200,000 miles during the 10-month season each year "just driving to races. I don't know how many more miles I covered flying. It was a very demanding, a very hard life."

During the two "off season" months, he and his crew built more advanced cars and refurbished their current stock.

Chadwick counts traveling with the Coca-Cola Company's Cavalcade of Stars one of the highlights of his 16 years on the pro circuit. He coordinated the travel plans and appearances for the eight funny cars and their three-man crews sponsored by the company for two years of country-wide touring in 1969 and 1970. His efforts in those races earned him the cavalcade championship title both years.

Another racing highlight came in 1970 when he was named the Professional Race Car Driver of the Year. "The award meant a lot because it was by the vote of my peers," he said.

Continuing a winning tradition through the next six years, Chadwick appeared in a variety of advertisements touting everything from automobile oil to racers' clothing. The nation's leading car enthusiasts' magazines carried the stories of his exploits on the track and his byline with advice to professionals and amateurs alike.

Offered the opportunity to return to coaching in 1976, Chadwick quit the circuit and completely withdrew from the racing business.

"I guess I was really tired of the travel for one thing," he explained. "And I realized some of the danger involved in racing. I wasn't afraid of the race cars but there were many driving who just weren't capable drivers. Many wanted the chance to beat me because I was a big name. They could build them (fast cars), but they didn't have the experience and they took too many chances."

Although an expert driver, Chadwick noted that funny cars were among the most dangerous of racing vehicles. "Several of my friends were burned badly and some friends were killed. That made me wonder if I should stay."

In 1976, shortages of gasoline used in the towing cars and trucks also helped convince him to leave the sport. Fuel shortages often left racers stranded and unable to travel to their next engagement.

Although he considered retirement, Chadwick did not plan to return to coaching. "I owned a speed shop in Amarillo to sell racing parts and to build cars for other people. I also had other business opportunities and could just about choose whatever I wanted to go into," he explained.

After coaching the Corpus Christi Tuloso Midway High School girls two seasons, he returned to Amarillo for a seven-year stint as coach of the Lady Badgers of Amarillo College. He also served four years as the institution's athletic director.

In 1978-79, 1980-81 and 1982-83, his teams garnered the Region V championship and placed fifth in the national tournament in 1983.

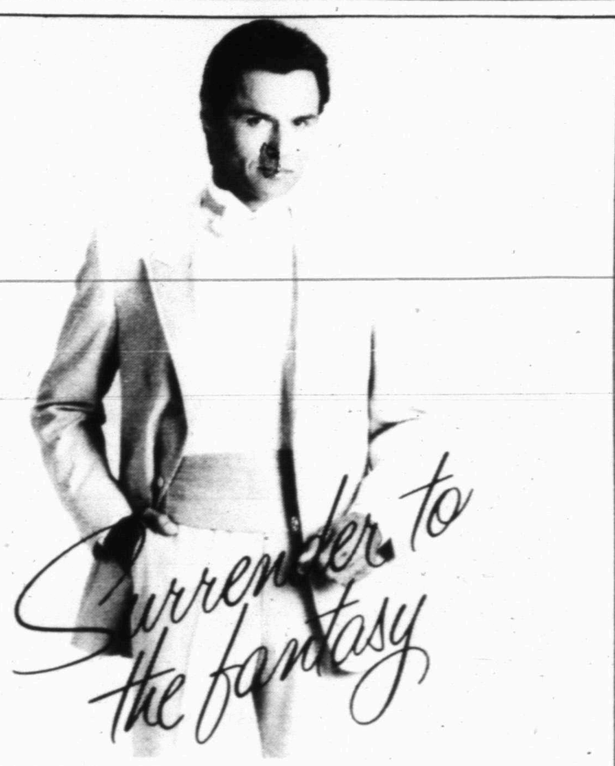

His efforts earned him the Panhandle Sports Hall of Fame Coach of the Year honor in 1979 and 1981. He was named Western Junior College Athletic Conference Coach of the Year in 1979 and 1981 and served as the WJCAC All-Star Coach those same years.

Although offered an opportunity to build another car surfaced two years ago, Chadwick completely broke away from the sport and no longer even attends racing events. "I've only been to one race since I quit. It's the one thing in life I love to do, and I know if I go, I will want to do it. I have never been the kind to be a spectator, not even at basketball games. I have to get in there and do it. I know I can't return to racing because I don't have the sponsorship or the money to do it now."

But the winning coach still hangs on to one racing record no other competitor has broken — his 236 mph speed record in a "pure" Chevrolet.

Rogers honored

CLAREMORE, Okla. (AP) — Legendary humorist Will Rogers was born in 1879 in what was then Colagah, Indian Territory (now Oklahoma).

In the 1920s and 1930s, he became a roving ambassador of homespun humor, acting as a spokesman for rural America and the common folk everywhere.

After his death in a plane crash in 1935, residents of Oklahoma founded the Will Rogers Museum as a tribute to him.

Naturalists offer last hope to rare species

——By JAY JORDEN
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — A pristine enclave of wilderness just 20 minutes from downtown Dallas may be the last and only hope for a variety of birds and plants that naturalists are sheltering from the stampede of urban progress.

The Greenhills Environmental Center, a 500-acre natural preserve, already is surrounded by development, and volunteers are stalking nearby fields, often just in front of bulldozers, to rescue rare plants about to be shredded into oblivion.

"We are really on the threshold of an explosion out here," said David Donohue, a Greenhills staff member. "We are surrounded by land in development."

Over the next few years, officials expect more than 15,000 acres of White Rock Escarpment lands surrounding the environmental center to be developed with houses and businesses. At that point, Greenhills will be the last significant parcel left in its natural state.

The preserve is the final retreat for rare plants like the White Troutlily, the Spring Coral-Root and the Texas Purplespike, specimens that only recently have been identified.

Greenhills also is one of the last nesting grounds for the Black-capped Vireo, a rare bird that has attracted the interest, and concern, of the Smithsonian Institution and the National Audubon Society.

But it's the still undiscovered rarities that most concern Dr. Geoffrey Stanford, the Greenhills director.

John R. Meyenberg of St. Louis patented evaporated milk in 1884.

Local coach lived in the 'fast lanes'

when he realized he could not build two careers at once. "I made more money in one day (driving) than in a month of teaching. And I knew I couldn't do both right."

He owned, drove and served as mechanic for his cars. As a full-time professional, he logged nearly 200,000 miles during the 10-month season each year "just driving to races. I don't know how many more miles I covered flying. It was a very demanding, a very hard life."

During the two "off season" months, he and his crew built more advanced cars and refurbished their current stock.

Chadwick counts traveling with the Coca-Cola Company's Cavalcade of Stars one of the highlights of his 16 years on the pro circuit. He coordinated the travel plans and appearances for the eight funny cars and their three-man crews sponsored by the company for two years of country-wide touring in 1969 and 1970. His efforts in those races earned him the cavalcade championship title both years.

Another racing highlight came in 1970 when he was named the Professional Race Car Driver of the Year. "The award meant a lot because it was by the vote of my peers," he said.

Continuing a winning tradition through the next six years, Chadwick appeared in a variety of advertisements touting everything from automobile oil to racers' clothing. The nation's leading car enthusiasts' magazines carried the stories of his exploits on the track and his byline with advice to professionals and amateurs alike.

Offered the opportunity to return to coaching in 1976, Chadwick quit the circuit and completely withdrew from the racing business.

"I guess I was really tired of the travel for one thing," he explained. "And I realized some of the danger involved in racing. I wasn't afraid of the race cars but there were many driving who just weren't capable drivers. Many wanted the chance to beat me because I was a big name. They could build them (fast cars), but they didn't have the experience and they took too many chances."

Although an expert driver, Chadwick noted that funny cars were among the most dangerous of racing vehicles. "Several of my friends were burned badly and some friends were killed. That made me wonder if I should stay."

In 1976, shortages of gasoline used in the towing cars and trucks also helped convince him to leave the sport. Fuel shortages often left racers stranded and unable to travel to their next engagement.

Although he considered retirement, Chadwick did not plan to return to coaching. "I owned a speed shop in Amarillo to sell racing parts and to build cars for other people. I also had other business opportunities and could just about choose whatever I wanted to go into," he explained.

After coaching the Corpus Christi Tuloso Midway High School girls two seasons, he returned to Amarillo for a seven-year stint as coach of the Lady Badgers of Amarillo College. He also served four years as the institution's athletic director.

In 1978-79, 1980-81 and 1982-83, his teams garnered the Region V championship and placed fifth in the national tournament in 1983.

His efforts earned him the Panhandle Sports Hall of Fame Coach of the Year honor in 1979 and 1981. He was named Western Junior College Athletic Conference Coach of the Year in 1979 and 1981 and served as the WJCAC All-Star Coach those same years.

Although offered an opportunity to build another car surfaced two years ago, Chadwick completely broke away from the sport and no longer even attends racing events. "I've only been to one race since I quit. It's the one thing in life I love to do, and I know if I go, I will want to do it. I have never been the kind to be a spectator, not even at basketball games. I have to get in there and do it. I know I can't return to racing because I don't have the sponsorship or the money to do it now."

A perfectly timed losing finesse

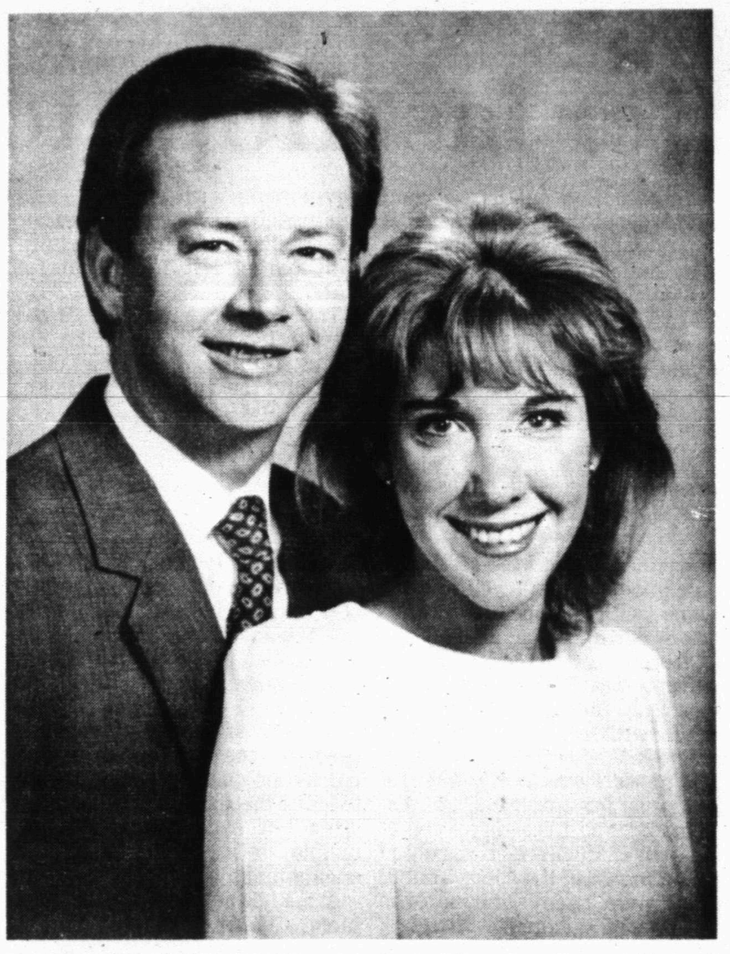

By James Jacoby

Partnership agreement will allow you to decide which of your bids are forcing after the opponents have overcalled an opening one no-trump bid. The common approach is that a minimum bid of a minor suit at the three-level is simply competing. On the other hand, when you are forced to bid your major at the three-level, it is better to play that bid as forcing since it gives the partnership more options in arriving at the best game contract. That's the way it went today. South's bid of three hearts was forcing and North was happy to carry on to game. Oddly enough, as the spades were situated, three no-trump would be unbeatable, but four hearts tested the declarer somewhat.

Spades were led and continued, and declarer ruffed the third spade high. If declarer draws trumps and carelessly plays a club to the queen, he will be set, since West will later take still another club trick. Declarer gave himself his best chance. He drew trumps in three rounds, noting that East had three hearts to go with his six spades. Then he played the diamond queen and a diamond to his king, noting that East followed suit both times. East could therefore have no more than two clubs. Declarer now cashed the ace of clubs, played a diamond back to his ace and led a club. When West played low, declarer went right up with dummy's queen. East won the king, but since he had no more clubs to play, he had to give South a sluff and a ruff for his contract.

A new book by James Jacoby and his father, the late Oswald Jacoby, is now available at bookstores. It is "Jacoby on Card Games," published by Pharos Books.

SODBUSTER PROVISION

The Sodbuster Provision of the Food Security Act of 1985 is aimed at discouraging the conversion of highly erodible land for agricultural production. If you plant annually tilled crops on highly erodible grassland, you may lose your eligibility for several United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) program benefits. The Sodbuster Provision applies to highly erodible land that was not planted to annually tilled crops during the period of '81-'85.

Sodbuster became effective Dec. 23, 1985, the date the Food Security Act was signed. If you break out a highly erodible field and plant it to an agricultural commodity without an approved conservation system, you become ineligible for certain USDA program benefits, not just on the highly erodible part, but on all the land you farm.

USDA Programs affected: Price and income supports, crop insurance, Farmers Home Administration loans, Commodity Credit Corporation storage payments, farm storage facility loans, Conservation Reserve Program annual payments, and other programs under which USDA makes commodity-related payments.

If you intend to break out highly erodible grassland or woodland to plant crops, or if you are not sure if your land is highly erodible, you can:

—Contact SCS to see if this provision applies to you and your land.

—Develop and apply, in cooperation with SCS and the local conservation district, a conservation plan for your highly erodible fields. The plan will help you reduce soil loss to levels that are technically and economically achievable. And you will retain eligibility for USDA program benefits.

—Break out land without using a locally approved conservation system, but you will not be eligible for certain USDA programs.

If you would like more information, please contact us at the Soil Conservation Service located at 3423 Ave. T in the Snyder Shopping Center, or call 573-1268.

RECORD KEEPING WORKSHOP

A "Record Keeping in Agriculture" workshop will be held Feb. 23 at 1:30 p.m. in Room A of the Scurry County Coliseum.

The workshop is sponsored by the County Extension Office and the Scurry County Field Crops Committee. The programs will be presented by Extension Specialist and representatives of local financial institutions.

With the current economic situation in agriculture, it is more important than ever for producers to become better managers. Most farmers and ranchers are good managers, but they must continue to improve because of the hard times in agriculture.

Record keeping is an important part of management. To become more efficient, producers must have complete records of farming operations.

Representatives of local financial institutions will also discuss the importance of record keeping when preparing for financing. Financial institutions need more information than what was required in the past.

There will be a $10 registration fee which will cover the cost of all materials available during the workshop. All area producers and other interested persons are invited. For more information, please call the Scurry County Extension Office at 573-5423.

UNDERSTANDING TEEN'S PEER GROUP NEEDS

Peers assume a more central role in the lives of teenagers than any other age group. In a sense, the heavy involvement with friends is a mechanism — like candy for a former smoker — for helping the young person make the transition from dependent child to an independent adult.

Most parents would say, "Of course I want my child to be independent." But they don't carry those words out with actions.

The more independent thought and behavior going on in a family, the more diverse the problems and more difficult the answers. So it's a natural tendency for parents to want to minimize problems through control of children's behavior. Yet in order for a teen to gain independence, parental control must decrease.

Once parents realize they must reduce their control, then they can address the issue of peer pressure. The influence of the peer group seems to be at its peak between ages 12 and 14 and gradually declines thereafter.

Parents can help their teenagers by adopting a friendly and loving attitude not only toward their own adolescent but toward their teenager's friends as well. Encourage them to "hang out" at your house when you are home. Stay in the background but be kind and friendly when approached. Don't be reluctant to make and maintain house rules, just don't nag about them.

Parents and adolescents should agree on the important moral issues and then give permission for individual decision making. Is it immoral for a 15-year-old boy to have a permed tail of hair? Then why worry about it. He likes it and so do his peers.

Parents of teenagers may do best to save their words and worry for the really important things. Keep communication open, direct. Be nonjudgmental of your teen's personality and attitudes, but speak out about your personal beliefs.

Make family outings as appealing to your teen as possible, but accept the fact that to the adolescent, friends are more fun than family. This attitude is an important part of the adolescent's life passage and will decrease with time.

THE FACTS ABOUT COMMON COLDS

Catch a cold and you're also likely to get a lot of advice — much of it misinformation. The medical experts don't know how to prevent the common cold, but they tend to agree to the following facts that we should all keep in mind:

—Colds are caused by specific viruses that appear primarily in winter.

—You don't catch a cold from getting your feet wet, being chilled or sitting in a draft. The only way to catch a cold is to pick up a virus through contact with another cold sufferer.

—Most people pick up colds from touching surfaces that have been contaminated with cold viruses by someone's sneeze or cough. These viruses can survive up to three days on hard surfaces, some fabrics, and even the skin.

—Children are more likely to catch colds than adults because they have not yet built up immunities.

—To help avoid picking up viruses, wash hands frequently and keep them away from your eyes, nose and mouth.

—Once you get a cold, over-the-counter medications can alleviate cold symptoms, but won't cure the cold.

—According to the National Institutes of Health, there is no hard evidence to verify that vitamin C will help prevent or cure a cold.

—Grandma's advice to drink plenty of liquids and stay in bed is probably still the best remedy.

Dear Abby

To Lovers, Young and Old: Here's How to Stay Happy

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1987 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR READERS: Hello, young lovers. And older lovers, too. Some years ago, I wrote a column on how to keep your man happy. As soon as that hit print, I was asked to write another column on how to keep your woman happy.

As a valentine to both men and women, here's an updated version on how to keep each other happy:

FOR WOMEN

Tell him often that you love him. (If you're married, don't ask him if he loves you, or he's liable to say, "I married you, didn't I?")

Never criticize him in public. If you do have a criticism, be sure it's constructive and offered in the spirit of love and helpfulness — never in anger as a put-down.

Clip newspaper and magazine articles that might be helpful to him in his work. Also pass along cartoons or an amusing article you think he'll enjoy. Sharing means caring.

Don't bad-mouth his friends — or worse yet, his relatives.

Never keep him waiting. If he has a tendency to be late, when you're meeting him somewhere, always have something in your purse to read. It makes the waiting more tolerable, and you'll be less apt to chew him out when he finally shows up.

Don't call him at work unless it's absolutely necessary. Every man needs a desk, a closet or a cupboard to call his own. Don't try to tidy it up for him even though it's a cluttered mess and an eyesore.

If he eats — or drinks — a little too much, don't nag him about it. But do remind him in a loving way that you wish he'd take better care of himself because you'd like to have him around to grow old and gray with.

Never quiz him about where he's been (or with whom) when you weren't with him.

Don't sulk. If something's bugging you, talk it out and clear the air.

Never lie to him. If there's something you prefer not to tell him, reserve the right to remain silent. But if you tell him something, be sure it's the truth.

Keep yourself kissing clean from head to toe.

Develop some interests other than him. The more interests you have, the more interesting you'll be.

Surprise him occasionally. A little love note left on his pillow, in his lunch pail or briefcase will warm his heart.

FOR MEN

Tell her you love her. She can't hear it too often.

If you like the way she looks, dresses, talks, smells — let her know it. You can't compliment a woman too much.

Never try to make her jealous.

Treat her with the same respect and courtesy you show women you don't know as well.

In addition to remembering her on all the usual gift-giving occasions — birthdays, anniversaries, Christmas or Hanukkah and St. Valentine's Day — surprise her with a little gift for no reason at all.

If you've had an especially wonderful evening, the next morning send her flowers or a single rose. If she's a working woman, send it to her place of employment. She'll appreciate it twice as much.

If you use her car, bring it back washed, with a full tank.

Walk up behind her and plant a kiss on the back of her neck.

Remember, cleanliness is next to godliness, so when you feel turned on, turn on the shower and jump in.

When you're at a party together, never leave her alone while you're off dancing — or being charming — with someone else. (Most women are not as resourceful and aggressive as men in social situations.)

Tell her she is absolutely the most wonderful person in the world, and she'll believe that you are.

If you want to be loved, be loving.

Be nice to her relatives and they'll tell her how lucky she is to have you.

Movie helps town

TECUMSEH, Neb. (AP) — A year ago, this farm town scraped bottom when its only bank closed.

The crisis of Feb. 7, 1986, was brief. The Johnson County Bank was federally insured, and it soon reopened under new ownership.

There was nothing unique about a bank failure — 138 federally insured banks failed last year. But it does explain something about the town's enthusiasm and affection for "Amerika," the television extravaganza that chose Tecumseh as its main locale.

"Amerika," a drama about life in America under Soviet rule, begins a seven-day, 14½-hour run on ABC Sunday night. It concludes Feb. 22.

"I think the morale boost was as great as the money boost," said Eloise Bartels, secretary-treasurer of the local Chamber of Commerce and the mayor's wife.

For her carpenter husband, Lavern, "Amerika" meant work.

For the members of the chamber, whose shops were boarded up and festooned with weeds for the filming, ABC left each with a fresh paint job and built a handsome gazebo on the courthouse lawn.

"They left the town much better than when they came in," said Mrs. Bartels.

"It was the best thing that could have happened to our town," said Sue Cooper, who is blind and sort of a newcomer, arriving eight years ago. "It brought income and jobs — a job for me, which I hadn't been able to find since moving here."

Ms. Cooper worked two days as an extra with help from Amber, her itchy, amiable golden retriever.

"It gave Tecumseh something new to talk about," she said. "I think it revived some people."

There's not much to Tecumseh, founded in 1856. It has 1,900 residents, a seven-page telephone directory, and a downtown on the four streets around the courthouse, an ornate red-and-white structure built in 1889 that is the town's only excuse to print postcards.

Hundreds of people worked as extras, marching in parades, standing in crowds, running from tanks, posing as exiled dissidents at a "squatter camp" outside town.

They rubbed elbows with Kris Kristofferson, Robert Urich and Mariel Hemingway. They waited a lot, worked a little and thought about what it would be like to live in a conquered country.

"I tell you, when the helicopters flew over the parade, tears came to my eyes," said Su Goracke, who talked about her role as an exile over coffee at Helen's Cafe, the town's daytime social center.

"They just scared you, and those men drove by you with guns," she said. "When you're dressed like we were dressed, it could have been happening."

Tecumseh residents sometimes are defensive about "Amerika," which has been criticized as anti-Soviet, or even as anti-American because it depicts a country that had no will to resist.

"I don't think anyone is trying to slam our nation, to say we wouldn't defend ourselves," said Ms. Goracke, who had seen the first four hours of "Amerika" at a January preview in Lincoln.

TEAMS PEP RALLY--To better prepare for the TEAMS tests which were given last week, Central third and fourth graders participated in a pep rally during which they sang positive songs such as "High Hopes," "Little By Little," "A Smile Is a Frown Upside Down," and "What Are Grins For?" Shirley Jones, fourth grade teacher, wrote a song entitled "The I Can Rap." Judy McLarty, music teacher, directed the program. Fourth grade teachers are Wanda Hudgins, Jones and Dianne Morton. Third grade teachers are Kathy Brooks, Mary Jimm Floyd, Marie Gloyd and Rudy Gutierrez. (SDN Staff Photo)

Bush is easing away from Reagan, Iran-Contra scandal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush is taking his first step toward political independence from President Reagan, disclosing that he privately "expressed certain reservations" about the administration's Iran policy.

Looking ahead to the 1988 presidential race, Bush said he doesn't intend to "jump away from the president" as he begins his own White House quest. At a news conference Thursday in Lansing, Mich., however, he added that there "might be a little bit of friction, might be a little contradiction."

"But I think the president would understand it," he said.

"The American people every eight years are entitled to expect change," said Bush, who has served as Reagan's unflinching defender for six years.

Bush fielded questions during a two-day Midwestern trip during which he also conceded the Iran-Contra controversy is hampering his still unannounced presidential campaign. Bush returned to Washington on Thursday afternoon after a stop in Springfield, Ill., and arranged a trip to Cincinnati today.

Bush is expected to make a formal announcement of his presidential candidacy next fall, but intends to step up the pace of his political travel in the next several weeks. He will visit seven cities in Iowa on March 5-6, touring the state that holds the first presidential caucuses of the election year next February.

The vice president's statement that the Iran-Contra controversy has hurt him politically coincides with public opinion polls showing him losing strength in recent months.

"What is happening is not that he is losing support, but people are saying, 'We want to wait' before deciding whether to support him," said one aide, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Bush's comments on Iran marked his first expression of dissatisfaction with any element of the president's Iran policy and amounted to a violation of his own oft-cited rule of never disclosing what he tells the president in private.

HARD OR SOFT LENSES?

This is a question that is commonly asked by those interested in contact lens wear. The answer is not always a simple one. In fact, recent technological advancements have produced lens materials that are hard, yet allow as much or more oxygen to pass through them than some soft lenses. Your eyes need oxygen to stay healthy and feel comfortable. Most people, even those with astigmatism, can be successfully fitted with gas permeable hard lenses. Make your appointment now to see if you can benefit from these new materials.

Noisy flag angers Bedford residents

COLLEYVILLE, Texas (AP) — A billboard-sized U.S. flag has been adopted by residents of Colleyville as a landmark to patriotism, but the broadcloth also is unfurling the wrath of residents in neighboring Bedford.

City officials in Bedford say the flag's nightly flapping is annoying. They claims the 110-foot flagpole exceeds the city's 35-foot height ordinance, and the pole stands astride the line that divides the two communities.

Residents of Colleyville, north of Fort Worth, are standing behind Steve Symonds, the flag's owner who says he has no plans to shorten or remove the pole.

"If I have to . . . I'll strap myself to the pole, and they'll have to shoot me off before I take it down. I can't believe the city of Bedford would make anyone take down the American flag, no matter how tall it is," said Symonds, a 29-year-old businessman who claims the city's height ordinance governs dwellings, not structures.

Symonds erected the pole last October, and christened it by playing the national anthem while hoisting to the pinnacle a 20-by-38-foot flag. Later, he installed a 1,500-watt spotlight to illuminate the nylon flag from dusk to dawn each day.

Shortly after the new pole was raised, one of the dozen neighbors whose $150,000 brick homes abut Symonds' property began complaining to Bedford city officials about flapping noises and glare from the light.

"We don't think of it as a flag, we think of it as a structure that makes noise," said the neighbor, who asked not to be identified.

Bedford officials say they will sue Symonds unless he removes or shortens the flagpole.

Such high-octane organizations as the American Society of Newspaper Editors and the APME (Associated Press Managing Editor's) are now fluffing up their skirts and "surveying" their membership to see who did what in conjunction with R. Budd Dwyer.

To refresh your memory, Dwyer was the state treasurer of Pennsylvania who stuck the barrel of a revolver in his mouth and killed himself last Jan. 22.

What made his case unique, of course, was his choice of settings--a press conference where the accused and convicted Dwyer was expected to announce his resignation from state office.

A series of photos from the event were distributed to AP members subscribing to the photo service--which the SDN does not--and television networks had access to video tapes which they picked up from their affiliates.

To a lesser or greater degree, the image was a widespread news item. The "lesser" being those which showed Dwyer waving the pistol while extending a warning hand to news men, and the "greater" showing the barrel in his mouth, the blurred and shocked expression on his face as he pulled the trigger and the final photos of his body slumped behind a desk.

The net effect, according to the news guys, has been a "wide response."

To address this, the surveys are being hauled out, asking both print and electronic types to reveal their news judgments made in conjunction with the incident.

Whoopee.

And we might add the question, "what for?"

To us, it seems like only so much after-the-fact PR.

This from the same bunch which has a running joke throughout the industry. "Know the difference between a good and a bad news photographer? A bad news photographer arrives at a mine explosion, sees helpless and mangled bodies beneath the rubble, throws down his camera and begins digging with his hands to save the victims. A good news photographer keeps taking pictures."

To be honest, we have no problem with those folks who "took" the pictures of R. Budd Dwyer. If they have been in the business more than two days, that concept--to get it first and think about it later--has been drilled into their head.

Neither can we find it right to criticize how different newspapers or TV stations used the stuff. Individual editors know their readership, and there is a wide range of what will be tolerated.

It's all the clucking afterward which rings false in our ears.

As long as there is news, there will be gruesome pictures. We are a nation which has seen a gut bucket full.

From Matthew Brady's portraits of the Civil War dead to napalm victims in Vietnam. From lynched black men to assassinated presidents.

And if you check the number of prize-winning photos over the years, the majority aren't of some dog catching a Frisbee in his mouth, although two million of these have been entered.

The winners show the pain on Lee Harvey Oswald's face after being shot by Jack Ruby and the fear in the eyes of a doomed Vietnamese prisoner with a revolver pointed at his temple.

As for Mr. Dwyer, a man is dead, and that means something.

But don't be too surprised if, at award time this year, the photos of his demise win something.

Country Life

By Deanie Francis Mills

It is a well-known but undocumented fact that all country mothers know the location of every public restroom in town. Especially if they have small children. The reason for this is basic: the further you live from town, the fewer trips you make into town each week. You do all your grocery shopping and errand-running on one or two marathon days.

In my opinion, these running-and-shopping days should be entered as Olympic athletic events. For one thing, they are timed. Many of the stores and businesses in town don't open until 10 a.m., so everything has to be crampacked between that hour and 2:30 p.m., when school is out for the early grades. For another thing, they have to be organized with all the efficiency of a well-oiled yachting team working to bring in the America's cup. (Do you honestly think Dennis Conners could have done it without a "to-do" list?)

For compulsive types like me, the items, or stops, on the list are numbered, usually in order of where they are located. It would be a foolish waste of time, for instance, to run by the post office, then the college, and then the library. Others like to number their lists according to priorities, putting off some things for the next trip. If you are laughing right now, I will tell you truthfully that on my last trip to town, my list contained a total of EIGHTEEN stops that were necessary for me to make. I always wear my running shoes.

My friend Treva once said, when her children were much younger, "I only go to the same places all the time: the grocery store, the drug store, the bank..." It can be depressing, rather like washing dishes. You just keep washing the same dishes, over and over and over.

On a typical errand-running day, I'll start off at the newspaper office, to drop off my column and pick up my check (I use it for Monopoly money). Then the bank, (I like to give the tellers a good laugh). On to the library (I am currently on the sheriff's Most Wanted list for overdue books). At the post office, I spend more money mailing off manuscripts than a rodeo cowboy might spend on beer. (It's all that return postage, so that the manuscript can come back to me in record time.) Over at the office supply store I get a commission on all the copies I make. (Just joking, guys.) At the book store I manage to spend most of what I earn, then over to the lumber yard to buy lumber for more bookshelves, and a do-hickey to fix something or other. I might just drop in on my friend, Ron Lepard, who helped me research my last novel and now does volunteer counseling for the Noah Project, and a trip to town wouldn't be complete without a visit to Linda Scalf at the Noah Project office. Maybe a couple sacks of feed.

That concludes my "town square" errands, and it's usually time to grab some french fries and a Coke to eat while I drive. The car usually needs to be gassed up and I like to spend a few minutes poking around the video rental place. By now I'm glancing nervously at my watch to see how much time I have before my youngest one gets out of school. I wanted to visit my friend, Karen, but it looks like I won't have time. Need to stop at the vet's for worming medication for the horses. Got to run by one of the large discount stores to stock up on doo-dads and thinga-ma-jigs, (keeping in mind a school party and cub scout meeting), then out to the college for one reason or another (Hi, Wanda). The drug store, for the kinds of things people in their thirties need a lot of, like aspirin and Alka-Seltzer.

I'm starting to speed a little now, and run on the balls of my feet. No time to pick up my order at Sears. Have to do that next time. I'm running late to get my little girl and skid into the empty parking lot in front of the school, spraying gravel. It's ok, she's used to being the last one to leave, and comes straggling out to the car with an accusatory look on her face.

We fly to the grocery store, racing up and down aisles, throwing things in the cart from yet another list in my hand. I find, to my dismay, that the cart is full and it is already 3:30, so I leave it parked beside the toilet paper, drag-race across town to Northeast Elementary to pick up one of the last remaining kids, my son, then back to the supermarket to finish that tedious chore.

I'm tired and crabby and want to go home, where I put away the frozen goods and leave the rest of the stuff for tomorrow. Brown sacks crowd counter tops and tables like unexpected company. We heat up a frozen pizza for supper. It's been a long day.

On an erasable list attached to the refrigerator I start jotting down the stops I wasn't able to make for the next trip. But a strange thing happens in the night while I am asleep. Those two little items on the list breed, and by dawn, there are 10 more things to do.

That's a fact.

SUNDAY
February 8

For the fourth time in its 16-year-history, enrollment at Western Texas College has exceeded the 1,300 student-level, it was reported Sunday.

The spring of 1987 will now stand as the fourth highest enrollment ever recorded. In addition, this year's final count fell only a few students shy of being the third highest at WTC.

The total this year, still unofficial since it may vary one to two students, is now set at 1,310.

MONDAY
February 9

Action by county commissioners Monday effectively ended a proposal to create a western truck route around Snyder by extending FM 1611 — a project court members approved last May 22.

In a 3-0 vote, court members agreed to write Raymond E. Stotzer, engineer-director for the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation, to discontinue the project.

Pct. 1 Commissioner Duaine Davis and Pct. 2 Commissioner Tommy Pate voted for the motion with Pct. 4 Commissioner Ted Billingsley, who was absent due to a family illness, voting by proxy. C.D. Gray Jr. abstained.

Lower speed limits were approved for College Ave. as well as the Lamesa and East Highways following action by the Snyder City Council Monday.

The changes are expected to be put into effect some time next month.

Renovation of the inner courtyard at Snyder Junior High School is now back on schedule after school trustees accepted a bid, adjusted upward some $925, first submitted to them in January.

Approval by the board came during its regular February session Monday, a meeting which also saw contracts renewed--one by a 3-2 split vote for the athletic director's post--for key district personnel.

WEDNESDAY
February 11

Scurry County sheriff's deputies were searching Wednesday morning for two suspects who robbed the Allsup's store in Hermleigh early Wednesday morning and fled the scene on bicycles.

According to preliminary reports, the two suspects entered the store around 3:15 a.m., forced the clerk into a corner and fled with less than $100 from the register.

Plans were announced Wednesday by local Lions to help organize a second men's civic club here, either a breakfast or an evening Lions organization.

A minimum of 20 members will be required to form a second club, it was noted.

THURSDAY
February 12

District Judge Gene Dulaney granted a change of venue motion Thursday morning in the case of Amanda Lynn Miles — an action which will see the case moved from Snyder for trial.

Miles is charged with capital murder for the March, 1986 killing of convenience store clerk Jack Huddleston during a robbery of the Allsup's store in Snyder.

That motion was agreed to in light of publicity surrounding the case and the trial in which Miles' co-defendant — Dorsie Lee Johnson Jr. — was convicted of capital murder.

Snyder High School Principal Ray Courtney crowned Chris Garrett and Cindy Martinez Mr. and Miss SHS for 1986-87 at the conclusion of coronation ceremonies in Worsham Auditorium Thursday afternoon.

Garrett and Martinez were selected from a field of 10 nominees after a ballot of the student body. The vote was conducted Monday.

Scurry County sheriff's deputies arrested a 16-year-old suspect Thursday night linked to the robbery of the Hermleigh Allsup's store reported early Wednesday morning.

Deputies say they are still seeking a second suspect in the case, described as a Spanish male thought to be in his late teens.

FRIDAY
February 13

The capital murder trial of Amanda Lynn Miles, accused in connection with the shooting death of an Allsup's convenience store clerk here March 23, will be moved to San Angelo, it was reported Friday.

District Judge Gene Dulaney, who granted an "agreed" change of venue in the Miles case Thursday, has transferred the trial to 51st District Court. A tentative date for the trial has been set April 27.

The latest sales tax figures for Snyder indicate the 1986 Christmas shopping season produced revenues down from the previous year by some 30 percent, it was reported Friday.

This deficit figure, the second of two months reported so far in 1987, brought the year-to-date percentage down to a minus 24.5 percent.

FIVE YEARS AGO

Snyder school trustees approved a new policy last night — Feb. 9 — making it possible for seventh grade athletic teams to travel to out-of-town games. Communities to be included with Snyder in a junior high "district" include Colorado City, Coahoma, Big Spring and Sweetwater.

Rosa Kennedy and Jeff Stubblefield were named Valentine Queen and King of the Scurry County Senior Citizen's Center in coronation ceremonies Friday — Feb. 13 — at the center.

10 YEARS AGO

Bill J. Voss and Bill Clayton became the first candidates announced for positions on the Snyder school board in 1977, announcing their plans to seek re-election shortly after the board set April 2 as election day Tuesday evening — Feb. 8.

Chamber of Commerce President Henry Clark today — Feb. 11 — officially accepted the new logo for the Snyder chamber — a design submitted by Snyder Savings and Loan vice president John Pickering.

15 YEARS AGO

Dr. Robert Hargrove, president of the Western Texas College board of trustees, last night — Feb. 8 — accepted a major memorial gift to the college from the family of John E. Sentell. The Sentell family gift will make construction of an elaborate outdoor stage facility in the college courtyard possible.

SHS FFA Poultry and Grass judging teams placed first in contests over the weekend at the Southwesterm Exposition and Fat Stock Show in Fort Worth. Team members included Johnny Foster, Beth Harrington, Mike Dickenson, Doug Sims, Jodie Hart, Jimmy Williams, Bo Robinson, Danny Helms, Sidney Wall, David Sims, Chris Covey and Jack Gorman.

Letters to the Editor

Editor's Note: The following two letters were submitted related to a study now underway by the city council and county commissioners for alternate approaches to providing ambulance service here. Options discussed include keeping the current service or consolidating the ambulance with either the local fire department or hospital. The current service is contracted to provide service through the end of March.)

To the editor,

I am a tax-paying citizen of Snyder and Scurry County. I have heard very alarming news that I believe all tax payers should know. I first feel that I should say that I am friends with the people who run Aid Ambulance, but I feel this also benefits me, because I know the dedication, work and love these people have shown to their patients.

They are hometown people with families here, and they go above and beyond the call of duty. I have seen them hurt for the patients, their families, call the hospitals to finds out how the patient is doing and help in a way only concerned people do.

I will give my experiences with the Ambulance Service, although I know about many more. It sounds to me like our City Council is trying to change our now very reliable Ambulance Service.

Five years ago, my husband had a motorcycle wreck in Colorado City. We called Snyder Ambulance to transfer him to Cogdell. It took over an hour for the Ambulance to arrive. Once it got there, there was only a driver, who I believe had little or no medical experience.

He did not know how to use the stretcher. It took another 45 minutes to load my husband with everyone's help. Everyone,

I-35 bandit nabbed

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Officers believe the man dubbed the "I-35 Bandit" has been apprehended after a holdup at a fast food restaurant that had been under police surveillance.

The 28-year-old Austin man was arrested after a brief chase Thursday moments after a man was seen leaving a restaurant with a money bag.

A 25-year-old Austin man who was seated in a parked car near the restaurant was arrested as a possible accomplice, police said.

A toy pistol, believed to have been used in a rash of more than 40 robberies in several cities along Interstate 35, was recovered along with the money bag, police said.

The restaurant robbed Thursday morning was one of several that had been staked out by Special Operations Unit officers, according to acting Police Chief William Gibson.

Search for dog continues

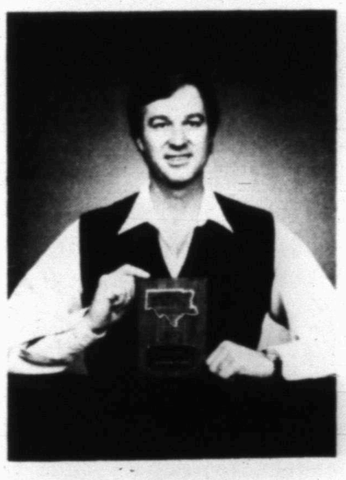

ORANGE, Texas (AP) — All cities have serious problems, but a wild dog is driving city authorities in this Southeast Texas city wild.

It seems that the wild dog has been roaming a neighborhood for some time and people living in the area have complained to city officials, who ordered city crews to catch the dog.

City crews say they have worked day and night, but they can't solve the problems of the dog-gone dog.

Once the dog sees them, she's gone.

"We've done everything short of putting the city's entire resources to get the dog," City manager Charles Curry said Thursday.

Your Birthday

Feb. 15, 1987

You could become involved in a bold enterprise in the year ahead that has substantial stakes. You may do it in conjunction with an individual who has influence with large organizations.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Follow your own instincts today in handling a delicate matter instead of the advice of a well-intentioned friend who doesn't understand the facts. Major changes are ahead for Aquarius in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Grpah, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Lady Luck is in your corner today, but she might not make her presence felt until the last minute. Hang onto your horseshoe.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) For the sake of efficiency, temporarily set aside tasks today that are too complicated and time consuming. Focus on chores you can knock off quickly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Participate in the types of involvements you truly enjoy today, but, by the same token, be sensible about how much you pay for your fun.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Neither you nor your mate should make important domestic decisions today without first consulting the other. Unless you're in accord, problems could result.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Take pains today to distinguish between being forthright or just plain blunt. Avoid making comments that could sting your listeners.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Be extra prudent and cautious in your financial affairs today, even if a flamboyant associate you'd like to impress encourages you to do otherwise.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Persistence is essential today in assignments that are personally important to you. If you hope to succeed, you're going to have to hop over several obstacles.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) If you judge others in advance of their actions today, you could be doing them, as well as yourself, a disservice. Try a wait-and-see attitude.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Examine the merchandise carefully before buying a second-hand item today. There may be a good reason why it's being sold.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Your authority might be challenged today regarding something you have a hand in managing. However, the result will vindicate your tactics.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You may be rather negative today concerning something about which you are usually positive. Don't let needless worry cast shadows on your thoughts.

Feb. 16, 1987

Everything will work out better for you in the year ahead if you stay where you are, doing what you are presently doing. Making changes for changes' sake could prove unwise.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Subdue inclinations to feel sorry for yourself today. It's a futile attitude because friends will have their own troubles and you'll get little sympathy. Major changes are ahead for Aquarius in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Keep your curiosity in check today regarding a matter about which a friend is reluctant to speak. He or she may be trying to spare your feelings.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Associates will not be very tolerant of your behavior today if they feel you are too inconsistent. Follow through on your original commitment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Don't be indifferent regarding logical health habits today. Remember, it's the ounce of prevention that's worth the pound of cure.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) In your commercial dealings today, be careful that you are not too gullible. Don't believe everything you're told if you have to deal with unproven entities.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) It's best not to make commitments today about which you intuititively feel uncomfortable. Your hunches could be more accurate than your overt assessments.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Ignoring a task today and hoping you'll get around to it tomorrow is not a wise course of action. Postponement contributes to complications down the line.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) When shopping today, guard against tendencies to buy merchandise that you may never use. Make your list out in advance and restrict it to essentials.

Union membership decline slows down

WASHINGTON (AP) — After backpedaling through the early 1980s with rapidly declining memberships, wage concessions and other lost benefits, American unions may be on the verge of a resurgence.

Union membership in terms of hard numbers is still falling, according to soon-to-be-published data from the government, but the losses in 1986 are a tiny fraction of what they were the previous six years, and the number of women carrying union cards rose by 70,000 last year.

In addition, Labor Department statistics show that union members last year enjoyed more than twice the average wage gains of their non-union counterparts in absolute dollars.

As a result, the pay gap between union and non-union workers widened from $108 a week in 1985 to an average $119 per week in 1986.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics figures, which were obtained by The Associated Press, showed the weekly wage earnings of union members rose $21 to an average $444 last year, compared with average pay increase of $10 for non-union workers, raising their earnings to an average $325 per week.

All is not rosy, however, for the American labor movement. Unions' share of the rapidly expanding job market continues to erode, and outside experts are skeptical that organized labor will ever regain the clout it enjoyed immediately after World War II and through the early 1950s.

"There is going to continue to be an organized labor movement," said Richard Belous, a labor market analyst for the Conference Board, a New York-based business research house.

"The interesting thing will be to see if they can reverse the numbers," Belous said. "It's going to be extremely difficult for unions to get back up to the point where they again represent 25 percent of the work force."

Unions' share of the U.S. labor force peaked at 35.5 percent in 1945 at the end of World War II. It held fairly close at that level until 1954, when it began declining, according to government data.

Cattlemen's Assn. to meet officials over cattle count

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Cattlemen's Association has been invited to meet with Agriculture Department officials to discuss complaints that USDA cattle inventory figures may have contained serious errors.

Association officials on Thursday asked the department to recheck the figures and "provide satisfactory explanations of the report's discrepancies." The complaint was outlined by NCA president Jack Dahl and Cattle-Fax president Gordon Rasmussen in a letter to Ewen Wilson, deputy assistant secretary for economics.

Wilson said he stood by the USDA's cattle inventory figures, which were released on Feb. 4. The report showed the Jan. 1 cattle inventory dropped 3 percent last year to a 25-year low of 102 million head. Many private analysts had predicted a decline of up to 5 percent.

The association's complaint was made known the day after the report was released, and the figures were reviewed by experts in the department's National Agricultural Statistics Service to see if the numbers were within the agency's normal tolerance for error, Wilson said in an interview.

"We couldn't find any evidence that this survey ... was more than average in its sampling error," he said.

Some of the figures, including cattle numbers for Texas, down only 1 percent from a year ago, and Oklahoma, unchanged, sort of "jump out at you," Wilson said. But the figures "are still confirmed, so far," he added.

Wilson said the department's statistical reporting programs need the support of the industry but that all users must have confidence that the methods are correct.

The association's representatives will be invited to go over the inventory numbers and procedures with USDA officials, he said.

Dahl and Rasmussen said in their letter that some of the figures in USDA's Jan. 1 inventory suggest that cattle herd liquidation has ended and that herd expansion is now under way. But other USDA data, including slaughter figures, contradict an expansion in the nation's cattle herd.

"Our arguments are not with the numbers themselves but with the illogical trends indicated in the report," they said.

Documentation developed by Cattle-Fax, a market analysis service associated with the NCA, was cited in support of the claim.

There was near-record cow-slaughter in 1986 but USDA's report showed that beef cow herd expansion was under way, Dahl and Rasmussen said. The cattlemen also questioned the report's figures on the calf crop and the number of feeder cattle and calves as of Jan. 1.

Nasal polyps can reoccur

DEAR DR. GOTT — I am over 50 and having trouble with nasal polyps. My doctor says I can control them with medication or have them cut off although they may regrow. Are there any new developments?

DEAR READER — Nasal polyps are common in people with inhalational allergies, like hay fever. Perhaps removal of the polyps, followed by treatment for your allergies (with shots or medicine), may solve your problem and keep the polyps away. See an allergist for his or her opinion.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I suffered from acute depression for years. The last psychiatrist told my children I would end my days in a mental institution. Then, because of a throat infection, I visited an ear, nose and throat specialist. She got suspicious, had lab work done and discovered I had hypothyroidism. She took me off "psychiatric" medicines and put me on Synthroid, which she monitors carefully. My recovery was immediate and amazing.

I am now in full possession of my faculties, my nerves are steady as a rock, I have become outgoing and my libido has risen considerably. Why don't doctors routinely check the thyroid function when a patient is depressed?

DEAR READER — An underactive thyroid gland can indeed cause depressive symptoms. The cautious and thorough physician should obtain thyroid blood tests on all patients who suffer from chronic depression. This is simply good medical practice.

DEAR DR. GOTT — Recently I had a glaucoma test. I did not pass. The doctor asked if I was on any medication. When I told him Xanax, he said I should stop taking it and repeat the test later. I did, and this time I passed. Is it true that Xanax affects the eyes?

DEAR READER — Xanax, a minor tranquilizer in the benzodiazepine family, is reported to increase ocular pressure. Therefore, patients with glaucoma should avoid Xanax unless they receive appropriate glaucoma therapy or unless the drug is prescribed by a qualified ophthalmologist. Xanax is one of many drugs that patients with glaucoma should not use or should be cautious about using.

DEAR DR. GOTT — Recently I have been taking the following amino acids for weight control: 500 milligrams of L-Ornithine, 500 milligrams of L-Phenylalanine and 1,000 milligrams of L-Arginine. Do these really help burn fat?

DEAR READER — They don't burn fat. Amino acids are used to make protein. They have no place in treatment of obesity. You may be the victim of diet quackery and a current fad that encourages the use of high-priced amino-acid supplements. This quakery claims that amino acid megadoses will promote weight loss, lengthen life and retard aging. In fact, the body treats these supplements as just another food and excretes most of the megadoses.

To lose weight effectively (and permanently), you need to eat a balanced diet and, at the same time, reduce your caloric intake. In short, eat less.

I'm sending you a free health report on weight reduction. Others who want this report should send $1 and your name and address to P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to mention the ask for WEIGHT CONTROL THROUGH CALORIE CONTROL.

'Primitive' drugs put ours to shame

Jane Goodall, the primate biologist, was puzzled by something that she noticed in the 1960s. Chimpanzees from Tanzania's Gombe National Park were eating — but not chewing — the young leaves of the Aspilia, a plant related to the sunflower. Because the phenomenon seemed so peculiar, other investigators became interested in it. The wild chimps appeared to gain no nutrition from the leaves, because the vegetation passed through their intestines completely undigested.

The chimps' behavior remained a mystery until 1984, when a biochemist extracted a red oil from Aspilia leaves. The oil displayed a novel effect. It was toxic to bacteria, fungi and certain roundworm parasites.

About the same time this discovery was made, a Canadian biochemist extracted the same oil from leaves of another sunflower-type plant, Chaenactis douglassi, which Indians from the Pacific Northwest used to treat skin and eye infections. The oil was subsequently named thiarubrine-A.

Other scientists discovered that African natives used Aspilia leaves in many folk remedies to heal wounds, to ease stomachaches and as topical antibiotics. The primitive people picked out the same new, young leaves as the chimps did.

Thiarubrine-A is still a long way from being available on the shelves of modern pharmacies. However, some biochemists believe that it shows great promise as a new antibiotic. Small amounts of the oil kill a variety of microbes, including Candida albicans yeast and staphylococcus germs.

Herbal medicines have been used by primitive people for centuries. Western scientists have been able to identify and synthesize many drugs from plant sources; these include aspirin from willow, digitalis from foxglove, curare from tropical Strychnos, reserpine from Rauwolfia serpentina, quinine from cinchona bark and the anti-cancer drug vincristine from the rosy periwinkle of Madagascar.

A report in MD Magazine notes that the Jivaro, a Peruvian tribe, "has plant-derived medicines for virtually every disease, or at least every disease they knew before the arrival of outsiders and their strange microbes." These Indians even use certain plants for birth control. After employing these plants, the Jivaro women must make use of other plants before they can become fertile again. The Peruvians also prescribe a drug to heal fractures. Interestingly, these medical unsophisticates treats ulcers, tumors and adhesions with a reddish sap. Could this be the same thiarubrine-A that was discovered in North America by Indians and in Africa by chimpanzees? Research is underway, despite the warnings by some skeptics who say that the extraction of new drugs from unfamiliar plants is not cost-effective.

Aboriginal medicine men are not willing to share their secrets. In this way they resemble their Western counterparts. The Jivaro still shrink the heads of their captured enemies, so when the natives told American researchers in the 1970s to vacate the premises, the scientists left.

Unfortunately, herbal recipes are endangered, they are not written down and codified. Neil Towers, a biochemist of the University of British Columbia, concluded that "this isn't a real problem in China, India or the Middle East, but it is in South America and Africa. It must have taken thousands of years to say this plant is good for coughs and this one is good for something else. A lot of that knowledge is being lost because nowadays, people can just go to a drugstore and buy a bottle of aspirin to fix up a headache."

I believe that our 20th-century scientists mustn't become so smug about our Western medicine that they fail to appreciate the value of herbal medicines. Some of these substances have been in continuous use since the dawn of time. Primitive medicine may not be that primitive at all. The South American healer, for instance, may be using a gamut of drugs that might put his "civilized" colleagues to shame.

American and European practitioners still may have much to learn from the experiences and experiments of healers in the underdeveloped world. Actually, by what criteria are these professionals considered to be "primitive" and "underdeveloped"? And where do the chimpanzees fit in?

Pennzoil decision upheld

HOUSTON (AP) — Pennzoil Co. won a new round in its high-stakes battle with Texaco Inc. as an appeals court upheld most of an unprecedented multibillion-dollar award against Texaco for interfering in a planned merger.

A three-judge panel of the 1st Texas Court of Appeals rejected 89 claims of error in the November 1985 state district court trial in which Pennzoil sued Texaco for interfering in a planned Pennzoil-Getty Oil Co. merger.

The appeals court, in its 162-page ruling issued Thursday, accepted one claim from Texaco, that the $3 billion in punitive damages awarded by the jury was excessive. The court cut that figure to $1 billion but upheld the $7.53 billion in compensatory damages.

Adding interest, the reduced judgment comes to $10.2 billion, down from $12.4 billion, said Pennzoil spokesman Bob Harper. Even with the reduction, the judgment remains the largest in U.S. history.

Texaco angrily criticized the ruling, promising an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary. The company does not have to pay any money while appeals continue.

But Wall Street reacted to the court ruling by selling off Texaco stock and snapping up Pennzoil. Texaco tumbled $4.12½ a share to $34.37½ on the New York Stock Exchange, while Pennzoil jumped $10.50 a share to $81.50.

"We will go forward in order to have this erroneous matter corrected," said Texaco's board chairman, Alfred C. DeCrane Jr. at a New York press conference today.

In the meantime, DeCrane said the company remains willing to negotiate a settlement with Pennzoil.

"We've said repeatedly we're prepared to seek a just and economic settlement of the matter," he said. "We haven't had any proposals from the other side. And you can't do this all alone."

He said Texaco had made some offers to Pennzoil, but refused to say whether the companies are currently in negotiations, citing a confidentiality agreement on that subject with Pennzoil.

meaning friends and family that had arrived. My husband was in a lot of pain and of course we thought this to be a big inconvenience. We also received an extra bill for that time he spent trying to load him!

I also had some personel experience with our newly run Ambulance Service. My son broke his hip and was transferred to Lubbock. A paramedic drove the ambulance and an LVN/ECA rode in the back with him. He was kept comfortable and in good spirits. The difference between the two trips amazed and impressed me.

I have felt safe with my family in Snyder since we have a very reliable Ambulance Service now. I hope most of the people of this town have had a chance to see or hear how well our Ambulance is run now.

I feel that the people should know that the county is trying to change it to save money. You know how they will do this? One way is by using a driver with no medical skills for non-emergency patients. Who is to say what is an emergency? If it is my husband or child, I would hope they would consider it an emergency or I would not have called the ambulance to begin with. I do not believe I am the only one in Snyder who would want experienced medical attention when called for. But unless something is done, we are going to lose this valuable service.

Thank you.

To the editor,

I understand that there is some question about the need for our Snyder Ambulance Service to continue and also a question about the county budget. Maybe if I tell you how the group at the Ambulance Service helped us, it will help decide in their favor.

My son, Todd White, overturned his car 5 miles northeast of Snyder on May 25, 1986. It was in the early morning hours. He was thrown from the car, breaking his neck in three places and cracking it in several other places. The impact shattered his pelvis on one side, punctured his lung on the right side by a broken rib, bruised his kidneys, cracked a shoulder bone and I'm sure I've left out considerably more.

In all, there were 15 breaks in his body! Snyder Ambulance was called. Please understand that even the slightest movement one way or the other would have killed him or rendered my son unable to move from the neck down.

Even though I was not there until they reached the hospital, my son later told me how carefully they worked with him and that they set about caring for him with great pains.

Later, they carried him to Methodist Hospital in Lubbock, where members of Snyder Ambulance Service stayed with me through the first dreadful minutes of my son's 63 day stay. On the way to Lubbock, they never lost patience with Todd even though he was scared and hurting. They encouraged me.

Later, Dr. Pal and Dr. Meyer told me that I could be assured that if the people with the Ambulance Service had not been well-trained, they would have only given Todd a 15 percent chance of full recovery, but with that first care — the most important for Todd — they hoped for a 95 percent chance of full recovery, although it might take a couple of years.

Well, Todd went back to work for L&A Well Service on Jan. 19, 1987, just eight months after this wreck!

So, if the people of Snyder and Scurry County think a budget cut is necessary, then look at your child or just ask my son or any member of our family what the Snyder Ambulance Service did for us, then pray that if they are cut back it is not your child who needs emergency care.

Symphony instruments are damaged in wreck

AUSTIN (AP) — Cellos were chipped but fared far better than basses when a truck carrying instruments of the touring Chicago Symphony Orchestra overturned on Interstate 10.

Musicians paced a concert hall loading dock as they awaited arrival of the second truck called in Thursday to rush the instruments to a concert hall at the University of Texas campus.

"It's like waiting for a baby to be born," said bassoonist Willard Elliot, who said his instrument was worth about $12,000.

"This trip is jinxed," said Don Moline, a cellist who noted that the orchestra had another pitfall two weeks ago when both the orchestra's wardrobe truck and instrument truck were delayed getting to a San Francisco concert.

About 170 instruments were in the 18-wheeler that overturn-Thursday morning west of Junction, 120 west of Austin, blocking traffic for about three hours, said David Wells, Department of Public Safety spokesman.

The instruments were en route from a Wednesday night concert in Scottsdale, Ariz., to a Thursday night performance at the University of Texas at Austin.

Most of the instruments, encased in padded steel trunks, were undamaged and the symphony carried out its program about 1½ hours later than scheduled.

Four basses suffered most of the damage, with three of them severly damaged, said Joyce Idema, CSO orchestra publicst.

"They're bigger, so they're more vulnerable," she said.

Some cellos were cracked and chipped and a set of timpani were slightly damaged.

"It's chewed up pretty bad, but it's nothing compared to the basses," said cellist Jon Pegis of his $15,000 instrument.

Damage estimates were not immediately available.

Warren Benfield said the neck, bow and bridge of his bass were broken, but he believed the instrument could be repaired.

"Look at it its broken right off, it smashed right off," Benfield said holding the neck of his 125-year-old instrument. "It's just frightening and it feels so badly; these wonderful old instruments.

"This is my birthday and it's a hell of a birthday present," said Benfield, 74.

But the 37-year orchestra veteran, said he was grateful he had not brought his second bass with him, which he said is worth $60,000.

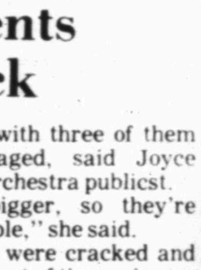

"I'll use the other one while this one is being repaired," he said.

Orchestra members made the trip by plane and arrived in Austin Thursday afternoon, said Carol Hacker, assistant coordinator of the Cultural Entertainment Committee at the university.

Nasal polyps can reoccur

DEAR DR. GOTT — I am over 50 and having trouble with nasal polyps. My doctor says I can control them with medication or have them cut off although they may regrow. Are there any new developments?

DEAR READER — Nasal polyps are common in people with inhalational allergies, like hay fever. Perhaps removal of the polyps, followed by treatment for your allergies (with shots or medicine), may solve your problem and keep the polyps away. See an allergist for his or her opinion.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I suffered from acute depression for years. The last psychiatrist told my children I would end my days in a mental institution. Then, because of a throat infection, I visited an ear, nose and throat specialist. She got suspicious, had lab work done and discovered I had hypothyroidism. She took me off "psychiatric" medicines and put me on Synthroid, which she monitors carefully. My recovery was immediate and amazing.

I am now in full possession of my faculties, my nerves are steady as a rock, I have become outgoing and my libido has risen considerably. Why don't doctors routinely check the thyroid function when a patient is depressed?

DEAR READER — An underactive thyroid gland can indeed cause depressive symptoms. The cautious and thorough physician should obtain thyroid blood tests on all patients who suffer from chronic depression. This is simply good medical practice.

DEAR DR. GOTT — Recently I had a glaucoma test. I did not pass. The doctor asked if I was on any medication. When I told him Xanax, he said I should stop taking it and repeat the test later. I did, and this time I passed. Is it true that Xanax affects the eyes?

DEAR READER — Xanax, a minor tranquilizer in the benzodiazepine family, is reported to increase ocular pressure. Therefore, patients with glaucoma should avoid Xanax unless they receive appropriate glaucoma therapy or unless the drug is prescribed by a qualified ophthalmologist. Xanax is one of many drugs that patients with glaucoma should not use or should be cautious about using.

DEAR DR. GOTT — Recently I have been taking the following amino acids for weight control: 500 milligrams of L-Ornithine, 500 milligrams of L-Phenylalanine and 1,000 milligrams of L-Arginine. Do these really help burn fat?

DEAR READER — They don't burn fat. Amino acids are used to make protein. They have no place in treatment of obesity. You may be the victim of diet quackery and a current fad that encourages the use of high-priced amino-acid supplements. This quakery claims that amino acid megadoses will promote weight loss, lengthen life and retard aging. In fact, the body treats these supplements as just another food and excretes most of the megadoses.

To lose weight effectively (and permanently), you need to eat a balanced diet and, at the same time, reduce your caloric intake. In short, eat less.

I'm sending you a free health report on weight reduction. Others who want this report should send $1 and your name and address to P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to mention the ask for WEIGHT CONTROL THROUGH CALORIE CONTROL.

'Primitive' drugs put ours to shame

Jane Goodall, the primate biologist, was puzzled by something that she noticed in the 1960s: Chimpanzees from Tanzania's Gombe National Park were eating — but not chewing — the young leaves of the Aspilia, a plant related to the sunflower. Because the phenomenon seemed so peculiar, other investigators became interested in it. The wild chimps appeared to gain no nutrition from the leaves, because the vegetation passed through their intestines completely undigested.

The chimps' behavior remained a mystery until 1984, when a biochemist extracted a red oil from Aspilia leaves. The oil displayed a novel effect: It was toxic to bacteria, fungi and certain roundworm parasites.

About the same time this discovery was made, a Canadian biochemist extracted the same oil from leaves of another sunflower-type plant, Chaenactis douglassi, which Indians from the Pacific Northwest used to treat skin and eye infections. The oil was subsequently named thiarubrine-A.

Other scientists discovered that African natives used Aspilia leaves in many folk remedies: to heal wounds, to ease stomachaches and as topical antibiotics. The primitive people picked out the same new, young leaves as the chimps did.

Thiarubrine-A is still a long way from being available on the shelves of modern pharmacies. However, some biochemists believe that it shows great promise as a new antibiotic. Small amounts of the oil kill a variety of microbes, including Candida albicans yeast and staphylococcus germs.

Herbal medicines have been used by primitive people for centuries. Western scientists have been able to identify and synthesize many drugs from plant sources; these include aspirin from willow, digitalis from foxglove, curare from tropical Strychnos, reserpine from Rauwolfia serpentina, quinine from cinchona bark and the anti-cancer drug vincristine from the rosy periwinkle of Madagascar.

A report in MD Magazine notes that the Jivaro, a Peruvian tribe, "has plant-derived medicines for virtually every disease, or at least every disease they knew before the arrival of outsiders and their strange microbes." These Indians even use certain plants for birth control: After employing these plants, the Jivaro women must make use of other plants before they can become fertile again. The Peruvians also prescribe a drug to heal fractures. Interestingly, these medical unsophisticates treats ulcers, tumors and adhesions with a reddish sap. Could this be the same thiarubrine-A that was discovered in North America by Indians and in Africa by chimpanzees? Research is underway, despite the warnings by some skeptics who say that the extraction of new drugs from unfamiliar plants is not cost-effective.

Aboriginal medicine men are not willing to share their secrets. In this way they resemble their Western counterparts. The Jivaro still shrink the heads of their captured enemies, so when the natives told American researchers in the 1970s to vacate the premises, the scientists left.

Unfortunately, herbal recipes are endangered; they are not written down and codified. Neil Towers, a biochemist of the University of British Columbia, concluded that "this isn't a real problem in China, India or the Middle East, but it is in South America and Africa. It must have taken thousands of years to say this plant is good for coughs and this one is good for something else. A lot of that knowledge is being lost because nowadays, people can just go to a drugstore and buy a bottle of aspirin to fix up a headache."

I believe that our 20th-century scientists mustn't become so smug about our Western medicine that they fail to appreciate the value of herbal medicines. Some of these substances have been in continuous use since the dawn of time. Primitive medicine may not be that primitive at all. The South American healer, for instance, may be using a gamut of drugs that might put his "civilized" colleagues to shame.

American and European practitioners still may have much to learn from the experiences and experiments of healers in the underdeveloped world. Actually, by what criteria are these professionals considered to be "primitive" and "underdeveloped"? And where do the chimpanzees fit in?

Pennzoil decision upheld

HOUSTON (AP) — Pennzoil Co. won a new round in its high-stakes battle with Texaco Inc. as an appeals court upheld most of an unprecedented multibillion-dollar award against Texaco for interfering in a planned merger.

A three-judge panel of the 1st Texas Court of Appeals rejected 89 claims of error in the November 1985 state district court trial in which Pennzoil sued Texaco for interfering in a planned Pennzoil-Getty Oil Co. merger.

The appeals court, in its 162-page ruling issued Thursday, accepted one claim from Texaco, that the $3 billion in punitive damages awarded by the jury was excessive. The court cut that figure to $1 billion but upheld the $7.53 billion in compensatory damages.

Adding interest, the reduced judgment comes to $10.2 billion, down from $12.4 billion, said Pennzoil spokesman Bob Harper. Even with the reduction, the judgment remains the largest in U.S. history.

Texaco angrily criticized the ruling, promising an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary. The company does not have to pay any money while appeals continue.

But Wall Street reacted to the court ruling by selling off Texaco stock and snapping up Pennzoil. Texaco tumbled $4.12½ a share to $34.37½ on the New York Stock Exchange, while Pennzoil jumped $10.50 a share to $81.50.

"We will go forward in order to have this erroneous matter corrected," said Texaco's board chairman, Alfred C. DeCrane Jr. at a New York press conference today.

In the meantime, DeCrane said the company remains willing to negotiate a settlement with Pennzoil.

"We've said repeatedly we're prepared to seek a just and economic settlement of the matter," he said. "We haven't had any proposals from the other side. And you can't do this all alone."

He said Texaco had made some offers to Pennzoil, but refused to say whether the companies are currently in negotiations, citing a confidentiality agreement on that subject with Pennzoil.

meaning friends and family that had arrived. My husband was in a lot of pain and of course we thought this to be a big inconvenience. We also received an extra bill for that time he spent trying to load him!

I also had some personel experience with our newly run Ambulance Service. My son broke his hip and was transferred to Lubbock. A paramedic drove the ambulance and an LVN/ECA rode in the back with him. He was kept comfortable and in good spirits. The difference between the two trips amazed and impressed me.

I have felt safe with my family in Snyder since we have a very reliable Ambulance Service now. I hope most of the people of this town have had a chance to see or hear how well our Ambulance is run now.

I feel that the people should know that the county is trying to change it to save money. You know how they will do this? One way is by using a driver with no medical skills for non-emergency patients. Who is to say what is an emergency? If it is my husband or child, I would hope they would consider it an emergency or I would not have called the ambulance to begin with. I do not believe I am the only one in Snyder who would want experienced medical attention when called for. But unless something is done, we are going to lose this valuable service.

Thank you.

To the editor,

I understand that there is some question about the need for our Snyder Ambulance Service to continue and also a question about the county budget. Maybe if I tell you how the group at the Ambulance Service helped us, it will help decide in their favor.

My son, Todd White, overturned his car 5 miles northeast of Snyder on May 25, 1986. It was in the early morning hours. He was thrown from the car, breaking his neck in three places and cracking it in several other places. The impact shattered his pelvis on one side, punctured his lung on the right side by a broken rib, bruised his kidneys, cracked a shoulder bone and I'm sure I've left out considerably more.

In all, there were 15 breaks in his body! Snyder Ambulance was called. Please understand that even the slightest movement one way or the other would have killed him or rendered my son unable to move from the neck down.

Even though I was not there until they reached the hospital, my son later told me how carefully they worked with him and that they set about caring for him with great pains.

Later, they carried him to Methodist Hospital in Lubbock, where members of Snyder Ambulance Service stayed with me through the first dreadful minutes of my son's 63 day stay. On the way to Lubbock, they never lost patience with Todd even though he was scared and hurting. They encouraged me.

Later, Dr. Pal and Dr. Meyer told me that I could be assured that if the people with the Ambulance Service had not been well-trained, they would have only given Todd a 15 percent chance of full recovery, but with that first care — the most important for Todd — they hoped for a 95 percent chance of full recovery, although it might take a couple of years.

Well, Todd went back to work for L&A Well Service on Jan. 19, 1987, just eight months after this wreck!

So, if the people of Snyder and Scurry County think a budget cut is necessary, then look at your child or just ask my son or any member of our family what the Snyder Ambulance Service did for us, then pray that if they are cut back it is not your child who needs emergency care.

Symphony instruments are damaged in wreck

AUSTIN (AP) — Cellos were chipped but fared far better than basses when a truck carrying instruments of the touring Chicago Symphony Orchestra overturned on Interstate 10.

Musicians paced a concert hall loading dock as they awaited arrival of the second truck called in Thursday to rush the instruments to a concert hall at the University of Texas campus.

"It's like waiting for a baby to be born," said bassoonist Willard Elliot, who said his instrument was worth about $12,000.

"This trip is jinxed," said Don Moline, a cellist who noted that the orchestra had another pitfall two weeks ago when both the orchestra's wardrobe truck and instrument truck were delayed getting to a San Francisco concert.

About 170 instruments were in the 18-wheeler that overturn-Thursday morning west of Junction, 120 west of Austin, blocking traffic for about three hours, said David Wells, Department of Public Safety spokesman.

The instruments were en route from a Wednesday night concert in Scottsdale, Ariz., to a Thursday night performance at the University of Texas at Austin.

Most of the instruments, encased in padded steel trunks, were undamaged and the symphony carried out its program about 1½ hours later than scheduled.

Four basses suffered most of the damage, with three of them severly damaged, said Joyce Idema, CSO orchestra publicst.

"They're bigger, so they're more vulnerable," she said.

Some cellos were cracked and chipped and a set of timpani were slightly damaged.

"It's chewed up pretty bad, but it's nothing compared to the basses," said cellist Jon Pegis of his $15,000 instrument.

Damage estimates were not immediately available.

Warren Benfield said the neck, bow and bridge of his bass were broken, but he believed the instrument could be repaired.

"Look at it its broken right off, it smashed right off," Benfield said holding the neck of his 125-year-old instrument. "It's just frightening and it feels so badly; these wonderful old instruments.

"This is my birthday and it's a hell of a birthday present," said Benfield, 74.

But the 37-year orchestra veteran, said he was grateful he had not brought his second bass with him, which he said is worth $60,000.

"I'll use the other one while this one is being repaired," he said.

Orchestra members made the trip by plane and arrived in Austin Thursday afternoon, said Carol Hacker, assistant coordinator of the Cultural Entertainment Committee at the university.

Postmaster routes messages of love

VALENTINE, Texas (AP) — For the past 34 years, Leila Doris Kelley has been getting love letters from all over the world.

And without a second thought, she promptly sends them on their way again.

It's not that Mrs. Kelley is hard-hearted — her twinkling blue eyes and friendly manner hint that she's a softie. She's just doing her job as postmaster of this West Texas hamlet.

"Last year we lacked only two states getting letters from, but I forget which," she said.

Mrs. Kelley last February received packages containing more than 7,000 cards and letters from people who wanted their Valentine's Day greetings to loved ones stamped with this village's postmark.

"I don't think this year we'll get near that," she said. "Last year, it was the Texas Sesquicentennial and Valentine's Day came just as the wagon train came through here. That's the most we've gotten in one year."

Texas celebrated its 150th anniversary in 1986 and the year-round festivities included a horse-drawn wagon train that traveled across the state, including a stop in this town, located about 150 miles east of El Paso.

So far this year, the Valentine post office has received mail from as far away as Italy, West Germany, Ireland and Australia to addresses in Sweden, Canada, Saudi Arabia, the Philippines, Scotland and West Malaysia, said Mrs. Kelley.

"Some of them ask me to hold (the pieces of mail) until the official February 14th cancellation date," she said. "It's a collector's item."

Mrs. Kelley won't get around to figuring out exactly how much mail went through the post office this year until March when she adds up the number of Valentine greetings that she logs in a notebook by the customer counter.

Some of the writers are people who have lived in this part of the state and moved away. Others have friends and relatives who tell them about Valentine, Texas, said Mrs. Kelley.

"People who travel in this area stop by all during the year and say they've read (newspaper) articles," she said.

Mrs. Kelley, a native of Petersburg, a town northeast of Lubbock, moved to Valentine in 1946. She has been postmaster here since 1953.

"I was appointed by President Eisenhower and confirmed by Lyndon B. Johnson. He was a senator at the time," she said. "When I first came into the post office, there were six or 10 Valentines at each season. Just within the town and round up about."

Every year, the number increased.

"In the last 10 years, people have become more conscious of Valentines," she said. "Different things appeal to young people."

The special postmark — in red ink, of course — is used in addition to the regular round black rubber stamp from Feb. 1 through the 13th, but on Feb. 14th it is used alone.

This February, the postmark is three hearts, each overlapping the next.

Some of the 328 residents of Valentine also send out their greetings, but getting thousands of pieces of mail in a two-week period poses no problem.

Former customs officer said indicted

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — A former U.S. Customs officer and two other men were indicted on federal charges of smuggling and distributing hundreds of pounds of marijuana in the Gulf Coast area.

Grand jurors Thursday indicted former officer David L. Harrison, 49, of Beaumont, and Earl Keith Lindell, 38, of Houston. Both face seven counts of conspiring to illegally import marijuana, importing marijuana into the United States and traveling from the United States to Belize with the intent to possess marijuana, the indictment says.

Each faces a maximum penalty of 35 years imprisonment and $100,000 in fines.

Jurors also indicted William Kinnear II, 39, of Beaumont, with three counts of distributing marijuana. He faces a maximum penalty of 15 years imprisonment and $45,000 fine.

Harrison was scheduled to appear before U.S. Magistrate Earl Hines today.

"The thing that makes this indictment so sad or so unusual is the fact that David Harrison was formerly a United States customs officer and was in charge of investigating drug cases," U.S. Attorney Bob Wortham said.

"He was the supervisor of the Port Arthur office and we feel that it is very important that the United States government clean up our own act," Wortham said. "If we have an agent that's dirty, we have to go after him because they're probably more culpable than the individuals in Columbia."

The Jews in Spain were told March 31, 1492, they had three months to accept Christianity or leave the country.

Valley View's grand dame leads very active lifestyle

VALLEY VIEW, Texas (AP) — It's not often that a mother of nine, grandmother of 40 and great-grandmother of 25 is also a head cook and bottle washer at a senior citizen center, chief advocate of a clean-up campaign — and a city mayor.

But at 76, Valley View's Mary Bierschenk has managed to juggle that loaded schedule, which includes serving up meals at the local community center, pushing to have the city's numerous deteriorating structures either fixed or demolished and presiding over city council meetings.

This is the sixth year Mrs. Bierschenk has been chief administrator of Valley View, and she seems to have made an impact on a small town that has been slowly gaining the attention of its bigger Cooke County counterparts.

Mrs. Bierschenk said she never has considered herself very civic-minded, but made a spur-of-the-moment decision to run for the mayoral position when she was working on the town's incorporation.

"This lawyer in Denton who I was working with on getting Valley View incorporated told me, 'Why don't you throw your hat in the ring for mayor?' " she said. "He said, 'When you want to get something across, you do it.'"

So Mrs. Bierschenk took the advice, and the gamble, and ended up head of a city — at 70 years old. Her age and the fact that she is a woman was "at first, a little bit of a problem," she admitted. But she said that her first all-male council quickly learned to live with the supervision of an older woman.

Building a center where senior citizens could gather for meals, activities and friendship had long been one of Mrs. Bierschenk's top priorities, even before she was elected mayor. With some help from the Texoma Area Council on Aging and many donations, the Valley View Community Center, a plain metal structure located off Farm Road 922, opened its doors to the town's seniors in 1979.

It was Mrs. Bierschenk's first and biggest accomplishment.

"For the ones that come, it's a blessing to them," she said. "If they didn't come here, they'd never get out anywhere."

Today, Mrs. Bierschenk runs the senior citizen's program at the center, preparing meals on Tuesdays and Thursdays and playing cards with the people that come here for the fun and fellowship.

Dow to sell South African plant; protests are cited

MIDLAND, Mich. (AP) — Dow Chemical Co. is reluctantly selling its South African pharmaceutical plant because of poor business conditions there and pressure from anti-apartheid protests, the company's chairman said.

The Dow-owned Mer-National plant in Clayville, South Africa, is being purchased by the the Premier Milling Group, a conglomerate of South African businesses, Dow spokesman Charles Infante said Friday.

Chairman Paul Oreffice said Thursday that Dow regretted the need to sell the plant and wished it could have remained part of the process for change in that white-ruled nation.

"This does not reflect a sudden change in attitude," the chairman said. "Our reason for wanting to do business in South Africa remains the same.

"We would have preferred to maintain our business there, but business and economic conditions, as well as a growing public concern in the U.S., made it impractical to continue."

Dow employs about 200 people in South Africa, about 125 of whom worked for Mer-National, Infante said from Dow's Midland headquarters. About 75 employees, most of whom work in sales, will remain on Dow's payroll, he said.

Many opponents of apartheid, South Africa's system of white minority dominance, have demanded that U.S. companies divest themselves of their South African holdings.

Until now, Dow was among the companies resisting the pressure to pull out of South Africa, contending majority rule could better be brought about by its presence as a force for change.

Texan among three people who won prize in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — Two scientists who developed disease-resistant rice strains and a man considered the father of laser technology won the third annual Japan Prizes in science and technology, the prize foundation announced Thursday.

The winners, two Americans and an Indian, will be awarded the $326,000 prizes, given for achievements that contribute to world peace and prosperity, in ceremonies April 14, officials said.

Henry M. Beachell of Alvin, Texas, and Gurdev Khush of India jointly won the prize for "biological improvement" for their work in creating high-yield and robust rice, said Masao Yoshiki, chairman of the prize committee.

One-fifth of the world's 375 million acres of rice paddies has been planted with varieties of the rice they developed, said Yoshiki, also president of the Science University of Tokyo.

Their work brought a "green revolution" in Asian agriculture, and gave many hunger-stricken Asian nations the opportunity to achieve self-sufficiency in their staple crop, the foundation said in a statement.

Winner of the prize for "electro-optics" was Theodore Maiman, who in 1960 developed the forerunner of the lasers used today, said Shigebumi Saito, a member Japan's Space Activities Committee.

Maiman persevered beyond the conventional ideas of his day to develop a ruby crystal laser that is "so practical it is still being used today, 24 years later," said Saito.

Each year, the foundation, a non-profit organization under the direction of the Prime Minister's Office, selects two science and technology fields in which to make the awards. Next year, prizes will be given in energy technology and preventive medicine, officials announced.

Beachell, 70, now a consultant to Farm of Texas Co., a private agriculture research firm in Alvin, Texas, developed a strain of rice in 1966 while working with the International Rice Research Institute in Los Banos in the Philippines.

The rice was a sturdy short-stemmed strain that responded exceptionally well to fertilizers and yielded double the harvests of conventional rice varieties.

Khush, succeeding Beachell in 1972 as head of the IRRI's plant breeding department, carried on Beachell's work and created an even stronger high-yield rice resistant to disease and insects.

Employee questioned in car bombing event

TEXARKANA, Texas (AP) — A Texarkana drug company employee arrested earlier this week on a charge of delivery of an explosive device has been questioned in connection with the Feb. 2 car-bomb slaying of Walsh-Lumpkin Drug Co. president Daryl Crouch, authorities say.

Texarkana Police Department spokesman Earl Cox said even though the Humco Laboratories employee was questioned, "he is at this time being treated like any other employee of the company." Investigators have questioned employees of both Humco and Walsh-Lumpkin.

Crouch had spent a portion of his day at Humco before returning to Walsh-Lumpkin where the car-bombing took place.

Although the explosives charge against the employee was dropped the day after his arrest by Bowie County Sheriff's Deputy Butch Gillespie and three members of the Ark-La-Tex Narcotics Task Force, he remains in custody on a charge of theft by exercising control over $750 and under $20,000.

Cox said citizens have responded to the police department's plea for information about a pickup truck seen coming out of the alley between McDonald's restaurant and Walsh-Lumpkin immediately after the explosion.

The pickup truck was described as a late 1970s model, medium dark brown on the bottom and top with light brown in the middle. The rear bumper is white, Cox said. The pickup is believed to have been occupied by one white male when it exited the alley, turned right and traveled south down State Line Avenue.

Police Chief Lee Spradlin said there were no new developments in the case as of late Thursday afternoon.

Rewards totaling $11,000 have been offered for information leading to the apprehension and grand jury indictment of the person responsible for the bombing.

Postmaster routes messages of love

VALENTINE, Texas (AP) — For the past 34 years, Leila Doris Kelley has been getting love letters from all over the world.

And without a second thought, she promptly sends them on their way again.

It's not that Mrs. Kelley is hard-hearted — her twinkling blue eyes and friendly manner hint that she's a softie. She's just doing her job as postmaster of this West Texas hamlet.

"Last year we lacked only two states getting letters from, but I forget which," she said.

Mrs. Kelley last February received packages containing more than 7,000 cards and letters from people who wanted their Valentine's Day greetings to loved ones stamped with this village's postmark.

"I don't think this year we'll get near that," she said. "Last year, it was the Texas Sesquicentennial and Valentine's Day came just as the wagon train came through here. That's the most we've gotten in one year."

Texas celebrated its 150th anniversary in 1986 and the year-round festivities included a horse-drawn wagon train that traveled across the state, including a stop in this town, located about 150 miles east of El Paso.

So far this year, the Valentine post office has received mail from as far away as Italy, West Germany, Ireland and Australia to addresses in Sweden, Canada, Saudi Arabia, the Philippines, Scotland and West Malaysia, said Mrs. Kelley.

"Some of them ask me to hold (the pieces of mail) until the official February 14th cancellation date," she said. "It's a collector's item."

Mrs. Kelley won't get around to figuring out exactly how much mail went through the post office this year until March when she adds up the number of Valentine greetings that she logs in a notebook by the customer counter.

Some of the writers are people who have lived in this part of the state and moved away. Others have friends and relatives who tell them about Valentine, Texas, said Mrs. Kelley.

"People who travel in this area stop by all during the year and say they've read (newspaper) articles," she said.

Mrs. Kelley, a native of Petersburg, a town northeast of Lubbock, moved to Valentine in 1946. She has been postmaster here since 1953.

"I was appointed by President Eisenhower and confirmed by Lyndon B. Johnson. He was a senator at the time," she said. "When I first came into the post office, there were six or 10 Valentines at each season. Just within the town and round up about."

Every year, the number increased.

"In the last 10 years, people have become more conscious of Valentines," she said. "Different things appeal to young people."

The special postmark — in red ink, of course — is used in addition to the regular round black rubber stamp from Feb. 1 through the 13th, but on Feb. 14th it is used alone.

This February, the postmark is three hearts, each overlapping the next.

Some of the 328 residents of Valentine also send out their greetings, but getting thousands of pieces of mail in a two-week period poses no problem.

Former customs officer said indicted

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — A former U.S. Customs officer and two other men were indicted on federal charges of smuggling and distributing hundreds of pounds of marijuana in the Gulf Coast area.

Grand jurors Thursday indicted former officer David L. Harrison, 49, of Beaumont, and Earl Keith Lindell, 38, of Houston. Both face seven counts of conspiring to illegally import marijuana, importing marijuana into the United States and traveling from the United States to Belize with the intent to possess marijuana, the indictment says.

Each faces a maximum penalty of 35 years imprisonment and $100,000 in fines.

Jurors also indicted William Kinnear II, 39, of Beaumont, with three counts of distributing marijuana. He faces a maximum penalty of 15 years imprisonment and $45,000 fine.

Harrison was scheduled to appear before U.S. Magistrate Earl Hines today.

"The thing that makes this indictment so sad or so unusual is the fact that David Harrison was formerly a United States customs officer and was in charge of investigating drug cases," U.S. Attorney Bob Wortham said.

"He was the supervisor of the Port Arthur office and we feel that it is very important that the United States government clean up our own act," Wortham said. "If we have an agent that's dirty, we have to go after him because they're probably more culpable than the individuals in Columbia."

The Jews in Spain were told March 31, 1492, they had three months to accept Christianity or leave the country.

Valley View's grand dame leads very active lifestyle

VALLEY VIEW, Texas (AP) — It's not often that a mother of nine, grandmother of 40 and great-grandmother of 25 is also a head cook and bottle washer at a senior citizen center, chief advocate of a clean-up campaign — and a city mayor.

But at 76, Valley View's Mary Bierschenk has managed to juggle that loaded schedule, which includes serving up meals at the local community center, pushing to have the city's numerous deteriorating structures either fixed or demolished and presiding over city council meetings.

This is the sixth year Mrs. Bierschenk has been chief administrator of Valley View, and she seems to have made an impact on a small town that has been slowly gaining the attention of its bigger Cooke County counterparts.

Mrs. Bierschenk said she never has considered herself very civic-minded, but made a spur-of-the-moment decision to run for the mayoral position when she was working on the town's incorporation.

"This lawyer in Denton who I was working with on getting Valley View incorporated told me, 'Why don't you throw your hat in the ring for mayor?' " she said. "He said, 'When you want to get something across, you do it.'"

So Mrs. Bierschenk took the advice, and the gamble, and ended up head of a city — at 70 years old. Her age and the fact that she is a woman was "at first, a little bit of a problem," she admitted. But she said that her first all-male council quickly learned to live with the supervision of an older woman.

Building a center where senior citizens could gather for meals, activities and friendship had long been one of Mrs. Bierschenk's top priorities, even before she was elected mayor. With some help from the Texoma Area Council on Aging and many donations, the Valley View Community Center, a plain metal structure located off Farm Road 922, opened its doors to the town's seniors in 1979.

It was Mrs. Bierschenk's first and biggest accomplishment.

"For the ones that come, it's a blessing to them," she said. "If they didn't come here, they'd never get out anywhere."

Today, Mrs. Bierschenk runs the senior citizen's program at the center, preparing meals on Tuesdays and Thursdays and playing cards with the people that come here for the fun and fellowship.

Dow to sell South African plant; protests are cited

MIDLAND, Mich. (AP) — Dow Chemical Co. is reluctantly selling its South African pharmaceutical plant because of poor business conditions there and pressure from anti-apartheid protests, the company's chairman said.

The Dow-owned Mer-National plant in Clayville, South Africa, is being purchased by the the Premier Milling Group, a conglomerate of South African businesses, Dow spokesman Charles Infante said Friday.

Chairman Paul Oreffice said Thursday that Dow regretted the need to sell the plant and wished it could have remained part of the process for change in that white-ruled nation.

"This does not reflect a sudden change in attitude," the chairman said. "Our reason for wanting to do business in South Africa remains the same.

"We would have preferred to maintain our business there, but business and economic conditions, as well as a growing public concern in the U.S., made it impractical to continue."

Dow employs about 200 people in South Africa, about 125 of whom worked for Mer-National, Infante said from Dow's Midland headquarters. About 75 employees, most of whom work in sales, will remain on Dow's payroll, he said.

Many opponents of apartheid, South Africa's system of white minority dominance, have demanded that U.S. companies divest themselves of their South African holdings.

Until now, Dow was among the companies resisting the pressure to pull out of South Africa, contending majority rule could better be brought about by its presence as a force for change.
