Regulations urged after canyon crash

GRAND CANYON VILLAGE, Ariz. (AP) — The collision of a helicopter and a twin-engine sightseeing plane over the Grand Canyon that killed 25 people may help end unregulated flights over national parks, a congressman says.

"As is so often the case, it takes a sad tragedy like this to point out the need for some reasonable safeguards," Rep. Richard Lehman, D-Calif., a member of the House Subcommittee on National Parks and Recreation, said of the collision Wednesday morning.

Emergency crews reached the crash site on a sloping shelf one mile from the Colorado River and 2,000 feet above it, and were to begin removing bodies today to a temporary morgue and then to Flagstaff 130 miles away.

The plane's tail section was found roughly one-quarter of a mile away from the rest of the wreckage and probably was sheared off in the collision, said Park Ranger Charlie Peterson, the first to reach the crash site.

The pilots of both craft had been keeping track of other aircraft visually and neither was being tracked by FAA radar, said Larry Bjork of the Federal Aviation Administration's flight service at Prescott.

Those aboard the Grand Canyon Airlines plane included 11 Dutch, two Swiss, one South African and six Americans, said Charles Farrabe, a National Park Service management assistant.

Authorities said the four passengers aboard the helicopter and the pilot were Americans.

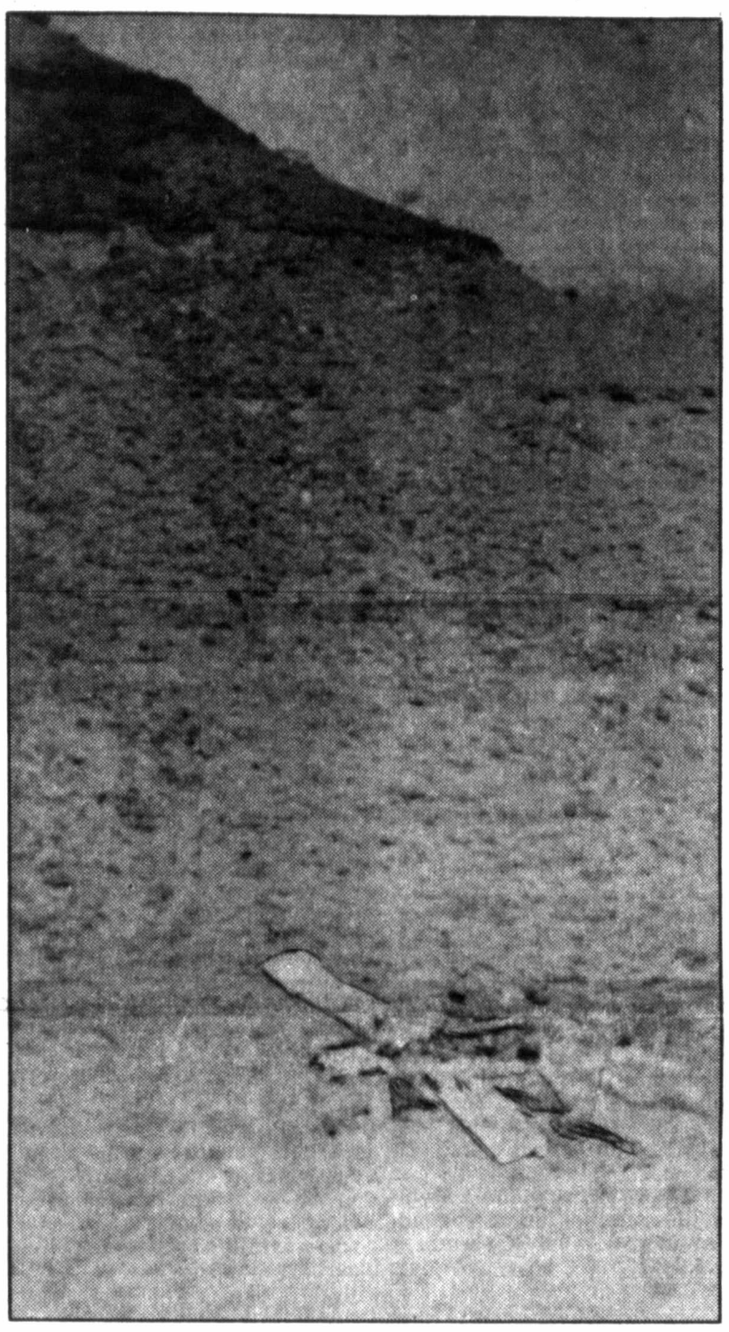

Authorities released only the names of the airplane crew — James Ingraham and Bru e Grubb — and helicopter pilot John Thybony. There were no survivors.

Helitech Inc., which owned the five-person Bell 206 helicopter, was new to the area, said Grand Canyon National Park Superintendent Dick Marks.

"They've been open a matter of three weeks, but the pilots have all flown in the area for many years," he said.

Grand Canyon Airlines spokeswoman Mary Donaldson and a spokesman for Helitech both declined comment.

Environmentalists have opposed the more than 50,000 low-level flights over the canyon each year, saying they keep hikers and backpackers from enjoying the grandeur of the park amid natural sights and sounds. Tourism companies counter that mechanized transportation is the only way the infirm and handicapped can experience the same sights.

Toughness of bill may kill sanctions

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The surprising House approval of a bill calling for a total prohibition on U.S. companies from doing business with South Africa was supported by Republicans who hope they have made the sanctions so tough they stand no chance of becoming law.

"This whole bill is dead. Sanctions are dead," said Rep. Mark Siljander, R-Mich., moments after the House approved the anti-apartheid sanctions in a surprising voice vote Wednesday afternoon.

The strict sanctions were proposed by Rep. Ronald Dellums, D-Calif., who said he was stunned that they were easily adopted to replace milder anti-apartheid restrictions that were part of the original proposal.

"I'm going to have a heart attack," said Dellums as he and other anti-apartheid leaders in the Democratic-controlled House celebrated their win.

Dellums' proposal would require all U.S. businesses to leave South Africa 180 days after it became law. It would also halt all trade between the two nations.

It replaced proposals for a graduated series of sanctions, measures Siljander said might have won approval in an election year.

But the sanctions won't become law unless they are also approved by the Republican-run Senate and then signed into law by President Reagan, who has opposed sanctions against the white minority-Pretoria government.

The Senate is unlikely to consider the bill until later in the summer.

The original bill "would have sailed through the House and the Senate, would have been forced in an election year to mark something up," explained Siljander, one of the tacticians behind the Republican move.

Opponents of sanctions argue that ordering U.S. businesses out of South Africa would mean the United States would have no leverage over the white government.

Adm. John Poindexter, Reagan's national security adviser, opposed sanctions in a leter distributed Wednesday by Republicans. Poindexter said sanctions "will erode our capacity to promote negotiations" and would "further separate an already divided society."

Siljander was one of only a handful of the 435 House members who were on the floor atthe time of the vote.

They won't work, Shultz says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Economic sanctions such as those voted by the House would make the United States incapable of promoting "something constructive" in South Africa, Secretary of State George P. Shultz says.

In an interview just before Wednesday's vote, he acknowledged the Pretoria government often did not heed U.S. advice. But, he said, "If we so structure our pressure — called sanctions — that we're not there anymore, it's hard for me to see how we can be part of something constructive if the opportunity arises."

At the same time, Shultz rebutted charges the Reagan administration had not put pressure on South Africa to abandon its policy of racial separation known as apartheid. "We express our view and we exert pressure," he said.

Shultz cited U.S. opposition to the declaration of a national state of emergency and its suggestion that South Africa consider an initiative by Commonwealth countries that it negotiate with black opponents.

"They have heard from people all over the world, and they are following a course of their own," he said.

On a voice vote Wednesday, the House approved a proposal that would require all U.S. businesses to leave South Africa 180 days after it became law. It also would halt all trade between the two nations. The sanctions need Senate approval and President Reagan's signature.

On another issue, Shultz criticized Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., the chairman of a House subcommittee who has called on the State Department to testify today about a General Accounting Office report that some of the $27 million in U.S. non-lethal humanitarian aid to Contra rebels in Nicaragua was misappropriated.

Shultz said the department needed more time to conduct its investigation of the allegations. "Barnes has gotten up this quickie thing he doesn't want to see the evidence on," Shultz said.

State Department officials will appear before the subcommittee, Shultz said, "but first we have to get the information."

In another jab at Barnes, he said, "That's what leads us to think he's more interested in the issue than the outcome."

Among other points made by Shultz in the 40-minute session in his seventh floor sitting room:

——The latest Soviet arms control proposal is "substantive" and "it's being taken very seriously." By presenting it to U.S. negotiators in Geneva instead of in a public forum the Soviets "delivered it in the right place, to the right address."

——Former Philippines President Ferdinand E. Marcos has been warned he could be wearing out his welcome by using Hawaii as a base against the new Philippines government. Shultz, due to visit Manila next week, said Marcos had been made "very, very well aware of our attitude."

Texan executed despite pleas

HUNSTVILLE, Texas (AP) — A 37-year-old convicted killer was put to death by injection early today for the 1974 shooting death of a Houston convenience store clerk despite pleas from the victim's father and a prosecutor.

"Naw, I'm ready," said Kenneth Albert Brock of Houston when asked if he had any final words before the lethal drugs flowed through his veins.

"Take care of yourself Bob, Nancy (Dodson)," he told his brother-in-law and sister who were his personal witnesses. "Thanks."

Bob Dodson gave the 37-year-old inmate a thumbs up as he entered the death chamber.

After he took a deep breath Brock said "OK, bye."

Mrs. Dodson told her brother, "Kenneth, I love you." He replied, "I know."

Brock, who was wearing his glasses, then took about eight deep breaths and then snored before going silent.

Mrs. Dodson called for her brother three times as she leaned against a rail, crying softly and holding a Kleenex in her hand while her husband had his arm around her.

"Kenneth, can you hear me?" she asked.

Doctors pronounced him dead at 12:18 a.m., eight minutes after the last lethal solution was injected into his right arm.

Brock was convicted in the May 21, 1974, shooting death of 31-year-old Michael Sedita, a manager of a northeast Houston 7-Eleven convenience store.

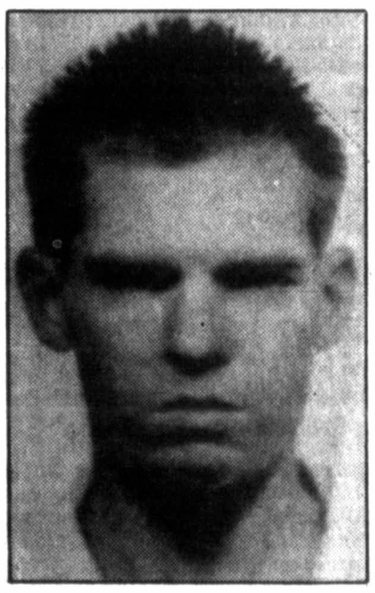

The Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles on Tuesday refused to commute Brock's death penalty to life imprisonment. Gov. Mark White on Wednesday also refused to grant a 30-day repreive.

"Killing Kenneth Brock is wrong. It will not change what has happened to my son," Joseph M. Sedita, the victim's father of Houston told the board in a sworn statement Tuesday.

"Killing Kenneth Brock will not ease my suffering or my wife's suffering or the loss of Michael," he added. "Two wrongs don't make a right. I could not be at peace if Kenneth Brock dies."

Excedrin capsule recall nationwide

SEATTLE (AP) — Investigators testing Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules following the death of a woman from poisoning found cyanide in a second bottle, prompting a nationwide recall of the product and an investigation of an earlier death.

The Food and Drug Administration late Wednesday issued a warning against use of the medication, and the manufacturer, Bristol-Myers, followed that with a recall of Extra-Strength capsules.

"The bottle shown to us did show positive for potassium cyanide," said Sue Hutchcroft, an FDA spokeswoman in Seattle, after a lab inspection.

That second bottle was taken to authorities by Stella Nickell of Auburn, Wash., whose husband's death June 5 was initially attributed to natural causes.

Ms. Nickell noticed that the lot number, 5-H102, on the bottle from which her husband reportedly took capsules matched those on a bottle used by Katherine Sue Snow, 40, of Auburn, who died June 11 of cyanide poisoning, authorities said.

The death of Bruce Nickell, 52, "is now being investigated as a cyanide-related death," the King County medical examiner's office said in a statement Wednesday night.

Test results on Nickell's remains were expected late today, said Bob Hill, spokesman for the medical examiner's office.

Cora Rice, Nickell's mother-in-law, said her daughter "has had a real tough time with this. It's going to take her a while before she can sort things out."

A neighbor of the Nickells', Jim Rogers, said the two Auburn deaths linked to cyanide have made him think for his own safety.

"The Tylenol thing was no big deal to me because that was back East," he said," referring to seven deaths in Chicago in 1982. "But when I heard it the other day, I went to the medicine cabinet and made sure I didn't have any. I won't take capsules again."

Bristol-Myers asked all consumers who have Excedrin capsules to return them in exchange for Excedrin tablets or a cash refund. Only the Extra-Strength form of Excedrin comes in capsules.

The company had earlier asked all major chains, wholesalers and distributors to remove the product from their shelves.

Jerry Parrott, company spokesman in New York, said the company had received no threats or other communication in the case.

States can't quit Social Security

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled today that state and local governments may not withdraw their employees from the nation's Social Security system.

In a 9-0 ruling, the court upheld a 1983 federal law designed to protect Social Security's economic integrity by barring state and local governments from pulling out.

The decision is a victory for the Reagan administration, which said more than $3 billion could have been drained from Social Security by 1990 if state and local governments were allowed to withdraw.

The law was challenged by California officials and others who said the law unconstitutionally allowed the federal government to break its contract with the states.

Justice Lewis F. Powell, writing for the court, said, "The contractual right at issue in this case bears little, if any, resemblance to rights held to constitute property" as defined by the Constitution.

He said the law "simply was part of a regulatory program over which Congress retained authority to amend in the exercise of its power to provide for the general welfare."

The court overturned a 1985 ruling by a federal judge in California.

States and local governments have been allowed to enroll their employees in Social Security since 1950, and local government workers in all 50 states are enrolled today.

As of 1983, some 9.4 million of an estimated 13.2 million state and local government employees participated in Social Security. Only five states — Alaska, Maine, Massachusetts, Nevada and Ohio — do not have their own employees enrolled in Social Security.

NEW FIRE STATION— Wheeler Volunteer Fire Department Chief Daryl Snelgrooes rests in front of the new Wheeler fire station, which will be having an open house from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday. Snelgrooes said the 30 x 125 foot fire station has seven bays for its vehicles and a meeting room that is equipped with a kitchen and a pool table. The city of Wheeler paid for the building while the fire department funded the interior. He estimated the new building costs $60,000. The city now uses the old fire station to house its vehicles. Execution refused interviews with The Associated Press.

Former Harris County District Attorney George Jacobs, who prosecuted the case 11 years ago, had asked the parole board to revoke Brock's sentence because he did not deserve to die.

Brock, a Marine deserter, took Sedita hostage into nearby woods after a police officer saw him robbing the store, said Jacobs, who is now in private practice in Houston.

"In the excitement, the gun could have gone off," he said. Jacobs said the gun may have gone off accidentally because of a hair trigger.

Harris County District Attorney John B. Holmes Jr., whose office argued against granting a reprieve, said Jacobs' opinion was inconsistent with the way he handled the case.

"If he felt that death was not an appropriate penalty at the time, maybe he shouldn't have tried it as a death penalty case," Holmes said.

Brock was the first to be tried in Harris County under revised capital murder laws in Texas.

Stanley Schneider, one of Brock's trial lawyers, described the robbery-slaying as an "average run-of-the-mill hijacking" that frequently takes place in Houston.

The execution was the fifth in Texas this year and the 15th since the death penalty was resumed in 1982. The state still has 232 convicts on death row. Five of them have scheduled execution dates.

Attorney General Jim Mattox said he anticipated at least one execution a month for the rest of the year.

This was Brock's third execution date.

KIMBERLY RANDALL

Benefit dance scheduled Saturday

The Pampa Firemen's Wives will hold a dance Saturday at the Sportsmen's Club on South Barnes to benefit three-year-old Kimberly Randall, 941 S. Nelson, who was injured when struck by a car last month.

Susan Fisher and Sandra Horton of the Firemen's Wives said proceeds from the dance will be used to help pay the youngster's medical expenses.

The dance will be from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and feature the band Country Comfort. Set-ups will be provided and the Firemen's Wives are asking $5 per person.

Kimberly, the daughter of Kelly and Rhonda Randall, spent four weeks in the Northwest Texas Hospital intensive Care Unit in Amarillo after she was struck by a car in the street in front of her home May 13. She received head and leg injuries and a ruptured rectum but no permanent injuries.

Those seeking to provide donations for her medical expenses or further information on the dance can contact Fisher (665-5557), Horton (669-9716) or the Central Fire Station (669-6441).

Scientists oppose 'Star Wars'

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 1,600 scientists at top government and industrial laboratories warned Congress today that the Reagan administration is trying to boost "Star Wars" spending too quickly and is thereby risking "a significant escalation of the arms race."

Many of those who signed the letter work at laboratories engaged in Star Wars research, including the government's Livermore, Sandia and Los Alamos laboratories, and at private defense contractors such as Boeing, Bell, Raytheon and the Lincoln Laboratory at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Star Wars, formally known as the Strategic Defense Initiative, "has grown into a major program without the technical and policy scrutiny appropriate to an undertaking of this magnitude. We therefore feel that we must speak out now," the scientists said in a letter to Congress.

The letter was delivered to a news conference sponsored by Sens. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., and Dan Evans, R-Wash., who have put together a bipartisan coalition of 48 senators opposing further increases in the SDI budget. The coalition is three members short of an absolute majority in the Republican-controlled Senate.

Reagan has said the United States should develop the Star Wars technologies to decide in the early 1990s whether to deploy such a system, which is envisioned as a space-based defense against ballistic missile attacks.

Last year, the administration asked Congress to approve $3.77 billion in Pentagon spending on SDI, and nearly $400 million by the Energy Department. Congress approved $2.76 for the Pentagon and $282 million for the Energy Department.

This year, the administration is seeking $4.8 billion in SDI spending by the Pentagon, and $606 million for the Energy Department, a total of $5.4 billion.

But the House Armed Services Committee staff is proposing just $3.1 billion for SDI, and the Senate Armed Services Committee is considering a proposal to cut Reagan's request to $4.6 billion, according to congressional sources speaking Wednesday only on condition of anonymity.

"A highly accelerated research program will inevitably result in waste, overburdened management and incomplete technical scrutiny," he said.

New speed limits on Kentucky St.

On Friday morning motorists traveling on Kentucky west of Hobart need to be aware of new speed limits established by new city ordinances.

The Pampa City Commission adopted a new ordinance on May 27 setting new speed limits for Kentucky west of Hobart, reported Gene Winegeart of the Street Department.

A maximum speed of 35 miles an hour will be permitted on Kentucky west of Hobart to Price Road. A maximum speed of 40 mph will be permitted on Kentucky west of Price Road to the west corporate limits of the city.

"We caution all drivers to be aware of the changes and to obey the new speed zone signs," Winegeart said.

Starr County TECAT case reaches Supreme Court

AUSTIN (AP) — In raising teacher salaries, the Legislature also demanded competency in the classroom, a lawyer defending the teacher literacy test has told the Texas Supreme Court.

Assistant Attorney General Kevin O'Hanlon was asked by Chief Justice John Hill on Wednesday if teachers had been "singled out" among other employees to pass a reading and writing test to keep their jobs next fall.

"No, they're not," O'Hanlon responded. He said certified public accountants, lawyers, medical students and engineers all must pass multiple-part tests to be certified.

O'Hanlon said House Bill 72 had raised the national rank of Texas teaching salaries from 34th to 21st but also had required competency from those "who received benefits of the state's largess in this area."

He said the test "comports with the intent of the Legislature, and that is to make teaching truly a profession in this state."

O'Hanlon's arguments before the Supreme Court involved a plea on behalf of 350 Starr County educators against the literacy test.

The court was advised, however, that the lawsuit did not include all the issues raised by educators against the Texas Examination for Current Administrators and Teachers, or TECAT.

The Texas State Teachers Association had asked the court to delay the Starr County suit and consolidate it with the TSTA suit in which the 3rd Court of Appeals at Austin ruled last Friday that the literacy exam was a legal exercise of the state's "police power."

The Supreme Court denied the TSTA motion.

"Ours is the only case which includes all the issues — both statutory and constitutional — and ours is the only case which represents all administrators and teachers in Texas," TSTA President Charles Beard said in a statement.

Representatives of TSTA were in the courtroom for arguments on the Starr County case filed by Project Principle, Inc., a nonprofit teachers' organization.

The organization obtained a temporary restraining order from State District Judge Ricardo Garcia that said the state could not take away the educators' teaching certificates if they failed the exam.

G. Allen Ramirez, a Rio Grande City lawyer representing Project Principle, argued that the Legislature had deleted provisions providing state funds for recertification of teachers yet the State Board of Education had used state money for that purpose in connection with the TECAT.

Chief Justice Hill asked Ramirez if that was "best" argument, and Ramirez replied, "I think it's one of the strongest."

"The Legislature did not intend to deny certification on one test alone," he said. He added that a test on subject matter would be a 'better gauge" of a teacher's competency.

Alice lawyer Jaime Garza, also representing Project Principle, said public reform legislation required at least three — "I count five" — exams but the TECAT was presented as subordinate. To rely on that test, he said, "is the tail wagging the dog. It totally alters the statutory scheme."

Aliens to get unemployment benefits under agreement

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice of Tyler on Friday will consider approving an out-of-court settlement that would extend unemployment benefits to some aliens and refugees living in Texas, the Longview News-Journal reported today.

The agreement stems from a lawsuit filed against the state in 1983 by Fred Ibarra, who was denied unemployment benefits because he wasn't a U.S. citizen.

Ibarra is represented by the federally-funded East Texas Legal Services Inc., which represents the poor and indigent.

The Texas Employment Commission has authorized the attorney general's office to settle the lawsuit with the proposed agreement, Assistant Attorney General Carla Crisford, who is representing the state, told the newspaper.

Ms. Crisford said she did not know what it would cost the state to extend the benefits, but she said that the number of previously rejected applicants who would qualify if the agreement is approved is about 1,500.

"In my opinion those people are not eligible for these benefits, period," said William J. Chambers, a member of the board of the Federation of American Immigration Reform, which is opposing the agreement.

"My prime point is that only those who are permanent residents are eligible, and none of these categories they list are permanent residents, and none of them are legal residents," said Chambers, who also is a retired director of the Dallas office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

According to the News-Journal, under the terms of the agreement the following persons could qualify for benefits:

— Refugees.

— Aliens conditionally admitted.

— Aliens paroled into the United States.

— Aliens granted deferred or extended-voluntary departure.

— Applicants for status adjustment.

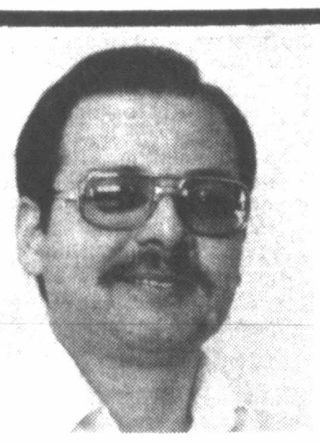

— Those seeking or granted asylum or withholding of deportation.

— Those seeking or granted suspension of deportation.

— Cuban or Haitians with status pending.

— Persons possessing non-expiring visas.

— Persons who are the beneficiaries of preference visas and who are entitled to priority dates not more than 60 days later than the date shown in the latest Visa Bulletin published by the U.S. Department of State.

No child of winter am I

I was born just a couple of days before the start of winter one November day back in 1946. But though a Scorpio, I feel more like a summer's child.

My earliest memory is of a summer morning, one of those days that dawn clear and bright with a golden ball just over the horizon.

For some reason, I — just a young lad of 2 or 3 — had gotten up earlier than the rest of the family. I was drawn toward the open screened door by the beaming warmth and just walked on outside.

There I just wandered around toward the back and entered onto the grass-and-weed-covered dead-end alley behind our house, enjoying the pleasant feeling of the dew on my bare feet. I remember laughing and running, my briefs falling to my ankles.

I was having a great time, just enjoying being alive in the silent, sun-kissed morning.

But then I heard my mother yelling for me, and she soon discovered my Adamic state. She wasn't amused. Instead, she picked me up, spanked my bare bottom and carried me back into the house.

I learned too early that pleasurable experiences can't always last.

But summer still offers some of the earliest and most welcome memories of my youth.

On a summer vacation sometime when I was 4 or 5 the family went up into the mountains of Colorado for a camping trip. The mornings weren't as warm there high up above the flat Panhandle we had left behind, but the scenery and later-warmed hours made up for the early coolness.

I have only images of that trip, not remembering how long we were gone or where all we went. I remember my mother showing my sister and I a small pool by the river bank, where the two of us were entranced by the mosquito larvae dancing around. I was still young and curious enough then to enjoy that sight instead of reaching for some pesticide like I do in later years.

An exciting part of the trip was watching my older brothers — Benny and Russell — and their friend Jimmy, who had accompanied us, chasing around the campsite and cornering some small animal, a chipmunk or squirrel, in the concrete fireplace. Russell reached in and grabbed the creature, and we brought it back to Texas.

We had it at home for several weeks. Then one day, when we had it out of the cage, it escaped through the door as someone came in. It darted quickly for the giant elm in our yard and climbed towards the sky. Russell climbed after it, but the creature eluded his grasp, heading towards the thinner upper branches where Russell couldn't reach.

It or at least some of its descendants may still be around town. Or so I like to think.

On another vacation, the following year I believe, we headed to Lake Texoma. Not all the memories are great: I caught my thumb on a trotline Dad was preparing, one of the early experiences that kept me from becoming a fisherman. And one day it rained and we had to dig trenches around the tent base to keep the water out.

But I remember sitting on the red-clay shore in one of the inlets with Dad while he fished and I watched the boats on the lake, enjoying the father-son closeness.

Again my brothers — my heroes and idols back then — and their friend Jimmy provided another exciting memory. Somewhere they had found an old rowboat, with a thin metal body over the wooden frame, as I recall. It was leaking, but they patched it up as well as they could and took it out on the lake, keeping near the shore.

I and Shirley were a little upset, though, because they wouldn't let us get into the boat with them. And Mother wisely agreed with them as she viewed the shaky structure.

When we left, they were informed they couldn't bring the boat back home, upsetting them. But with the optimism of youth, they hid it along one of the stream banks, covering it with vegetation to preserve it for their return.

I like to think others found it later and enjoyed it as well as the young men did. Or even better, it's still there yet, waiting for me to rediscover it if I ever make it down there again.

And all the subsquent summers have offered lingering memories: bicycle rides, neighborhood kids playing hide-and-seek or sheep-in-my-pen, family reunions at Lake McClellan, picnics in the park with my cousins, vacations, stargazing and meteor hunting at night, escapades with best friends Mike and Neal, endless nights on the drag in high school, the summer songs on the radio, listening to Wolfman Jack, going to dances — the list could go on.

Let others enjoy the snow and ice, skiing down the mountainside under the gray skies of winter.

Just give me summer with its bright sun, hot days, warm nights with cooling breezes, visions of lakes and beaches, tanned skin — and someday maybe yet I can experience being an Adam again running amid some field of wild grass, with no one calling me to shame.

Censure of Helms sought

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Two Hispanic leaders have sent telegrams to U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms demanding an apology for his comments about Mexico, and to Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole asking for a censure of Helms.

"We demanded an immediate apology to the country of Mexico and to the Latin American nations," said Ruben Bonilla, chairman of the Texas Mexican American Democrats.

His brother, Tony, chairman of the National Hispanic Leadership Conference, on Wednesday read to The Associated Press excerpts of the telegrams sent by the two former presidents of the League of United Latin American Citizens.

Included in the wire to Helms were the words: "You have continuously verbally attacked Mexico, its leaders and latinos in general with your callous, irresponsible and insensitive remarks. In the process, you have damaged our relationship with our country's third largest trading partners."

To Dole, the two said that Helms' comments "are serously damaging America's relationshp with Mexico. This slander of Latinos in our country, by suggesting latinos are volatile, should not be tolerated by the United States Senate ...

"We therefore call on the United States Senate to censure Sen. Helms for his erratic, offensive and unstatesmanlike behavior."

In Mexico, Helms' latest allegations about electoral fraud in Mexico attracted little response Wednesday.

Crude oil price slump puts financial squeeze on cities

DALLAS (AP) — City workers in Dallas recently received an unwelcome reminder of how the oil industry slump is affecting government — their pay was cut.

In Houston, officials are considering laying off more than 700 employees, and throughout Texas, cities are scrambling to ward off huge projected budget shortfalls, brought on as the municipal mainstays of sales and property tax funds sink under the weight of declining oil revenues.

Most cities are reporting flat sales tax revenues, a radical change from the years when the Sunbelt state seemed immune from the economic ailments of the rest of the nation, said Ted Willis, executive director of the Texas Municipal League in Austin.

"Although we may have weathered some previous dips better than other parts of the nation, by Texas standards we're in a very serious situation," Willis said.

League members are considering such measures as layoffs, tax hikes, reduction of services and switching to a 37-hour work week, Willis said.

Dallas officials were caught by a $7 million deficit this spring, necessitating a pay cut that took a 5 percent chunk out of administrators' pay checks and 1 percent from rank-and-file employees.

The deficit was due partly to disappointing sales tax revenues and partly because the city had to pay back money it had erroneously received in previous years, said deputy city manager Jan Hart.

Next year, city revenues are projected to fall $45 million short. Hart said that figure assumes some planned expansion will take place. She said officials have not decided whether to go ahead with the expansion and raise taxes or to scale back operations further.

Despite the deficits, Hart said the city likely will bear less of the brunt of falling oil prices because it is more diversified, with oil accounting for about 10 percent of the area's economy.

Dallas' economic growth rate dawdled to 1 percent last year, compared to 3 percent in 1983, but did not actually take a step backwards, said Bernard Wein stein, director of the Center for Enterprising at Southern Methodist University.

"I think the long-term outlook for is still very positive, number one because of our diversity. We're not heavily wedded to one particular industry," Weinstein said.

In Houston, the problem of dealing with a projected $70 million deficit next year stretched a recent council meeting into a 12-hour marathon.

Mayor Kathy Whitmire proposes to make ends meet by axing 770 positions, contracting out some city services and instituting a new garbage fee, said Mike Loftin, assistant director of finance and administration.

Eight council members have said they will not support the garbage fee, previously paid out of property taxes. One councilman has proposed rolling back February salary hikes to ward off layoffs.

In West Texas, the Permian Basin oil field cities of Odessa and Midland both dealt with shortfalls of more than $1 million this year by leaving vacancies unfilled and economizing where possible.

Odessa manager City Manager John Harrison said he is considering reallocating or eliminating about 50 positions because of an expected $1.5 million deficit this year and an additional $1.5 million shortfall next year.

"This year we thought that we had bitten the bullet, so to speak, and we could live within the existing revenues and not rely on reserves — until January," when oil prices plummeted, Harrison said.

Property values in both cities have dropped an average of about 7 percent. Officials are considering raising the property tax percentage but concede that will be unpopular with taxpayers fighting their own battle against hard times.

But at least one Texas city will finish the year in the black. Fort Worth assistant city manager Ruth Ann McKinney said the ranks of the unemployed have been swelled by migrants from the West Texas oil patch, but sales tax revenues have been stronger than expected and a moderate expansion is planned for next year's budget.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Our opinion

Golf course vote wasn't up to par

When the Gray County commissioners were first asked to help build a public golf course in Pampa, they said they wanted to find out how the taxpayers would feel about the the county providing equipment, manpower and possibly money before making a decision.

Although a public opinion survey authorized by commissioners showed a huge majority in favor of county participation in the project, it is doubtful they know any more now than they did then about how the taxpayers feel. The reason they don't know is because the survey wasn't limited to taxpayers. The survey forms, which included blanks so that several people could vote on each, were mailed to all households with registered voters, regardless of whether they pay property taxes.

There was no apparent effort to find out how "taxpayers" feel. And the fact that nearly 6,000 votes were hand-counted in about 90 minutes doesn't seem to eliminate the possibility of the same people voting more than once, or allowing the vote of children, and possibly even the family dog, to be included in the final tabulation.

Although the vote is not binding and the county is not obligated to enter the project, commissioners are now planning to conduct a feasibility study on the proposed course.

But before a final decision is made, taxpayers should raise several questions.

If the county, as has been suggested, can provide the men and machines to do about $500,000 worth of dirt work for the course without neglecting regular duties, doesn't that indicate that the county is now employing more men and owns more machines than it needs? Could the taxpayers look forward to a reduction in work force and in the cost of buying more equipment after the golf course is completed?

Commissioner Ted Simmons Monday said he could probably spare two maintainers, a bulldozer and several trucks when and if construction begins. On the same day, he was authorized to advertise for bids on a new pickup truck. If he has that many excess trucks now, taxpayers might wonder why he's buying a new one.

Commissioners have indicated they might consider helping to build the course, but don't intend to subsidize its operation if it doesn't pay its own way. But since the course would be deeded to the county, what would they do with it if it isn't self-sustaining? Will there be deed restrictions limiting what they could do? That'll be something interesting to watch for?

We trust that the commissioners will examine the feasibility of the project with extreme care before making a final decision. They have been told that public golf courses in other area towns operate at a profit, but they haven't been told that those towns are the same size as Pampa and have three golf courses, as Pampa would have if a public course is built.

We hope there won't come a day when county officials have to choose between admitting they wasted a lot of time and money building a golf course that won't sustain itself, or pouring in even more taxpayers' money to subsidize a project that provides recreation for only a few. We hope that doesn't happen if the county gets involved, but we wouldn't bet on it.

Your property threatened

If you think the apartment house from which you receive rental income is your private property and your ownership rights are fully protected by the laws expressed in the founding documents of our republic, think again.

If you think you own the house in which you live and are, therefore, secure in your property, don't be so confident.

If you think you own the farm from which you have been struggling to earn income, you could be surprised.

If you think that the business which has been in your family for years is yours to operate in any way the market indicates so that you can keep it profitable, you may be in for a rude awakening.

Recent federal court decisions, plus the arguments being made by advocates of something called "industrial reform" — arguments based on the logic of these court decisions — strongly suggest that any and all levels of government are free to take any property for any reason a legislature may deem to be "public use."

The only sense in which one may be said to possess property rights in anything — whether it be one's labor power or some so-called "real" object such as land — is in the sense that such "rights" convey the power to dispose of said property in any way the possessor deems appropriate. To the extent that government can and does use its coercive power to limit, restrict, or deny one the right to dispose of their property in any way, those so restricted or denied have lost a portion, if not all, of their property rights.

When I was an undergraduate I had one particular political science professor who constantly ranted and raved about something he called the "conflict between human rights and property rights." After every one of his lectures of this sort I would take him out for a cup of coffee and tell him that I thought that he was as crazy as a betsy bug. Property rights, I would argue, are the most fundamental of all human rights. Government evolved, I contended, not to confer upon individuals the right to possess property but, rather, to protect and defend the individual's right — a right that is as old as human history — to hold and dispose of his own property.

This particular political scientist was a deeply committed Christian. On one occasion I opened the Bible with him and asked him to interpret what he read in Genesis 23:1-23 — especially verses 17 through 23. I asked him what this revealed about the nature of property in ancient times. He wouldn't relent. He continued to argue that property was "socially determined", i.e., the government giveth and the government can take away.

And the government has been active in "taking away for" many years. As University of Chicago Law School Professor Richard Epstein has recently argued in his book The Takings (Harvard University Press), federal, state, and local governments have been routinely violating the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution — the "just compensation" clause — with the full aid and consent of the Supreme Court.

"The eminent domain clause," Epstein argues, "should render infirm or suspect many of the heralded reforms and institutions of the 20th century: zoning, rent control, workers' compensation laws, transfer payments, and progressive taxation." The reason the courts have stood mute in these assaults on the private property rights of individuals is because the courts have, as stated in the Hawaiian Housing Authority v. Midkiff decision (1984), taken the position that: "In short, the Court has made clear that it will not substitute its judgment for a state legislature's judgment as to what constitutes a public use...when the legislature's purpose is legitimate and its means are not irrational, our cases make it clear that empirical debates over the wisdom of takings — no less than dictates over the wisdom of other kinds of socioeconomic legislation — are not to be carried out in the federal courts."

In a word, the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that if the state wants your property, the state can have your property.

Dr. Richard McKenzie of Washington University (St. Louis) has recently published a study of the use to which the Supreme Court's decision in the Hawaiian Housing Authority case is being put to use by those who are seeking to block the right of a company to close an unprofitable plant. He poses the question: Can government's "taking powers" (i.e. the use of eminent domain) be applied to plant closures? He concludes that in so far as recent court decisions provide precedent, the answer is, yes. "A state may quickly declare the saving of jobs and the community's tax base as the necessary 'public use and purpose' " to take a plant from its owner rather than allow that plant to be closed.

McKenzie contends that those who want to deny the force of the market are pressing for the use of eminent domain to force unprofitable enterprises which employ large numbers of people to keep operating, no matter what the cost in inefficiency to the rest of the economy. "Indeed," McKenzie argues, "it would appear that there are many areas of economic life to which eminent domain could be applied" by those anxious to forfeit the rights of the individual to the use of his own property.

That such use of eminent domain would be a violation of one of mankind's oldest and most sacred rights doesn't seem to disturb these advocates of "industrial reform." Once again those who know how to use the power of government to benefit some at the expense of many are on the loose.

Clicker prevents anarchy

My friend Rigsby, the lover, is planning to get married. He asked my advice concerning a pre-nuptial agreement.

I happen to be an expert on such matters because I learned the hard way. I've had three wives, but no agreements. If my ex-wives and I formed a musical group, we'd be Po' Boy and the Alimonyettes.

I informed Rigsby he most certainly should have a pre-nuptial arrangement and that he not forget one very important item.

"Make certain you get control of the clicker," I told him.

"The what?"

"The clicker," I went on. "The little remote control deal that changes the channels on the TV."

"Why is that so important?" Rigsby asked me.

"Without the clicker," I said, "a man is nothing. He has no power."

"Explain," said Rigsby.

"In every household," I began, "somebody must be designated — even if it is necessary to use brute force — to be in control of the clicker or else there would be anarchy.

"One person might say, 'I want to watch Wheel of Fortune', and another might say, 'I want to watch a cable movie,' and another, 'I want to watch the wrestling matches.'

"So everybody would go for the clicker and domestic violence would erupt."

"You mean they might hurt each other?" Rigsby asked.

"There was a story in the papers last week about a family in Tumblewood, Okla.," I told him. "A man and his wife and their two children sat down to watch an evenings' television. All four wanted to see a different program, and nobody had official control of the clicker. They all dived at it at once.

"The man suffered severe scratches from his wife's fingernails, and she was bitten on the ankles by one of the children, who got poked in the eye during the melee. The other child got the clicker and ran outside as he was being chased by the rest of the family and was hit head-on by a jogger. All five were treated and released at a local hospital."

"I never realized something like that could happen," Rigsby said.

"It's like this, my friend," I continued. "Your wife wants to watch The Newlywed Game, and you want to see three basketball games, a golf tournament and the last thrilling moments of a Charles Bronson movie on HBO where he blows away a small city.

"If you have the clicker, you can switch back and forth and keep up with everything you want to see. If your wife has control, you'll have to sit there and watch while some woman tries to remember what color undershorts her husband wore on their wedding night."

"I see your point," said Rigsby.

It must be wonderful to have a friend like me.

Officials plan emancipation celebration throughout state

By The Associated Press

For most of her 91 years, San Antonian Lella D. Thomas has subscribed to the philosophy that people should never be afraid to fight for their rights.

She says it has served her well, including the era when discrimination against blacks was common — and legal — in Texas.

Her 14-year-old granddaughter, Phyllis Callies, said it means hope during an era when all ethnic groups share equal opportunities.

Today, both could reflect on their freedoms with other Texans observing Juneteenth, the celebration of the day in 1865 when Texas slaves finally learned they were free.

"This is not like a birthday or national holiday. We're celebrating people who were once enslaved and now they're not," says state Rep. Al Edwards, a Houston Democrat who wrote and sponsored the 1980 bill making June 19 an official holiday.

The Emancipation Proclamation was issued by President Lincoln in 1862. But word did not reach Texas until June 19, 1865, when Union Maj. Gen. Gordon Granger issued an order in Galveston that freed all slaves.

Since then, Juneteenth has been celebrated officially and unofficially in Texas. The 1980 bill made the day a state holiday but employees have the option of exchanging that holiday for another.

Edwards said he hopes to persuade more private companies to recognize the holiday and will work in the next session of the Legislature for a measure closing state banks.

Thomas, the mother of community activist the Rev. R.A. Callies and 12 other children, said she will spend today remembering when whites forced her to sit in the back of a train and go to segregated schools.

She will recall being threatened while traveling to church as a child and while sitting in her home as an adult.

Discrimination, she said, "broke our heart ... but as far as being afraid, my daddy taught us all the time not to be afraid of nobody. And I'm not afraid of nothing because I know God knows right from wrong, and out of one blood God made all men."

Phyllis, the minister's daughter, said she will give thanks today that social attitudes have changed and will remind herself that she has to work hard to continue to enjoy freedoms that were long in coming for her grandmother.

"You still find prejudiced people now and then, but you just have to ignore them," Phyllis said. "Black people my age should be thinking of what they want to be as adults. They should have a goal and dedication."

He said Juneteenth should be used as a day to turn attention to the past, present and future and explore the contributions of the Afro-American.

Juneteenth activities across the state include a prayer service in Galveston in historic Ashton Villa, featuring a reading of the Emancipation Proclamation.

In San Antonio, Miss Juneteenth will be crowned and an Afro-American Style Show will be held.

In Austin, there will be a parade and a second annual Juneteenth celebration at the Capitol, cosponsored by the Legislative Black Caucus and the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History.

Gov. Mark White was to make a keynote address in the Senate Chamber. The Austin Juneteenth Committee and other organizations are sponsoring a celebration in a city park and a parade.

In Fort Worth, four days of festivities begin today with a parade downtown. Also planned is a celebration featuring food booths, carnival rides and music at Sycamore Park.

Committee hears from former employees of Supreme Court

AUSTIN (AP) — Former employees of the Texas Supreme Court told a House investigating committee that all judges and their staffs were warned in 1983 about contact with attorneys with cases before the court.

Former Chief Justice Jack Pope sent out an "All Hands" memo warning everyone on the third floor, where the justices' offices are, to beware of contact with information-seeking attorneys.

Jeff Armstrong, former briefing attorney for Justice C.L. Ray, said another briefing attorney for another justice "was uncomfortable because he had heard a judge discussing a case with attorneys like hw would his staff."

"He wrote a letter to Chief Justice Pope asking guidance on contact with attorneys and Justice Pope's memo came out the next week," Armstrong testified before the House Judicial Affairs Committee. He was ordered to appear under threat of contempt of the Legislature.

Another witness said that one Supreme Court justice promised a campaign contributor help on a matter before the court while another justice showed a confidential court file to a state senator.

"We learned some things today but we will have to review the transcript to see where we go from here," said Rep. Frank Tejeda, D-San Antonio, chairman, after almost five hours of testimony.

Tejeda said the committee also must decide when it will meet again and if it will subpoena more witnesses.

Houston investor Henry J.N. Taub told the committee that Associate Justice C.L. Ray told him at a fund-raising affair in Houston that he would help Taub in a matter before the court. Taub said he found out later the court already had ruled against Taub, who wanted a rehearing in a Webb County oil and gas lease case.

Armstrong, Austin attorney who formerly was a briefing attorney for Associate Justice Franklin Spears, said he was present when Associate Justice William Kilgarlin came into Spears' office and asked to see Spears' file on aa pending court case.

Armstrong said another Spears assistant gave the file to Kilgarlin who turned and handed it to a man, that Armstrong later learned was state Sen. Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas, who also is a Dallas attorney.

Mauzy is the Democratic nominee for a pace on the Supreme Court. He has a Republican opponent in the November election.

"It (the file) had confidential information, memos, and special notes on the case made by Justice Spears," said Armstrong.

Armstrong said Mauzy looked at the file and returned it intack. Armstrong said he did not know if Kilgarlin had permission from Spears, who was not in the office.

Before hearing testimony Wednesday the committee voted 7-1 to recommend that any witness refusing to testify before the group be cited for contempt of the Legislature.

Attorneys for subponaed former court employees have argued the investigation should be conducted by the state Commission on Judicial Conduct.

"This places the committee in the place of violating the civil rights of these witnesses," said Rep. Smith Gilley, D-Greenville, who opposed Wednesday's contempt motion. "I believe this is coercive and you are threatening them with punitive action."

Taub said he had a case pending before the Supreme Court in 1984 involving details on a lease on 2,716 acres of land in Webb County. A Webb County district court and the Beaumont appeals court had decided in his favor, but it was appealed to the Supreme Court. Taub lost the decision but asked for a rehearing.

Taub said he talked with Ray about 20 minutes at an October 1984 fund-raising affair in Houston, after the request for a rehearing.

"He mentioned that the case was a tough one," Taub said. "I told him how important this case was to me. It was worth several million dollars," Taub said.

"He said something to the effect that he would go back and see what could be done about it," Taub told the committee "He said he had plenty of time to take care of the matter, whatever that meant."

Taub said he found out the next day the court had rejected his request for a rehearing.

"They had to have made the decision before I talked to him (Ray)' Taub said.

Also testifuung Wednesday, under threa t o .e contempt citations, were Kath Spurgin, stk7bormerly adm3nistratve hssist$nt5 s 'ub,and LaurasWorsm, Dallas attorney and former briefing attorney for Ray.

Ms. Spurgin said Ray had her shred all records of telephone calls after he said he found Armstrong had been found looking at them.

Ms. Worsham said she accompanied Ray to a speaking engagement in San Antonio once and the two visited the offices of Pat Maloney Sr., prominent attorney, afterwards. She said she met Clinton Manges, South Texas rancher, who had an important case pending before the Supreme Court. She said she did not see Manges in the presence of either Maloney or Ray and she did not hear anyone talking about the Manges case.

The donor provided Baby Nicky of Texas with another chance for life, after a plea went out when Nicky's first heart transplant didn't work correctly.

Baby Nicky gets second heart transplant in two-day period

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — A 3-year-old Texas boy today underwent his second heart transplant 28 hours after a Colorado couple agreed to donate the heart of their son, who was fatally shot by a playmate.

The operation on Nicky Carrizales began around midnight, and his new heart was beating by 1:05 a.m., said Anita Rockwell, spokeswoman for Loma Linda University Medical Center.

Drs. Leonard Bailey and John Jacobson performed the surgery, she said.

Nicky, of San Antonio, had received the heart of a 2-year-old late Tuesday, but the organ began to fail almost immediately.

At 4 a.m. Wednesday he was returned to the operating room. Before the second donor was found, Ms. Rockwell said Nicky's condition was extremely critical.

The research facility 65 miles east of Los Angeles made an urgent request for another heart to the Los Angeles-based Regional Organ Procurement Agency of Southern California, which in turn alerted other Western U.S. procurement agencies and hospital intensive care units.

Spokesmen at Loma Linda declined to release details about the second donor.

But a spokeswoman at Swedish Medical Center in the Denver suburb of Englewood said a 6-year-old who had been shot in the head was flown to Loma Linda after his parents donated his organs.

Young Jason Lars Kendrick was pronounced brain dead at 1:45 p.m. Wednesday, shortly after a 10-year-old friend pointed a loaded .22-caliber rifle at him and the gun discharged, said Swedish hospital relations coordinato Debbie Felker.

Nicky's father, Rudy Carrizales, told the San Antonio Light that the donor heart for his son's first transplant vas from a 2-year-old child. Additional details about the first donor were not released.

Nicky had been hospitalized in critical condition for five days at Loma Linda after suffering a heart attack last week, said Carrizales, an X-ray technologist at Kelly Air Force Base in Texas.

He suffes from cardiomyopathy a fatal degeneration of the hert muscle.

The Texas ot is the oldest child to undergo surgery in Loma Linda's infant-to-infant heart transplant program, which has recorded five successes in five attempts since November.

The fifth patient, Jesse Dean Sepulveda, received the heart of a brain-dead Michigan boy June 10 following extensive publicity that arose because the boy was rejected for a transplant until his young, unwed parents surrendered custody to Jesse's parental grandparents.

In 1984, Bailey, who has headed up the surgical team in all five operations, attempted a baboon-to-infant heart transplant on an infant identified only as Baby Fae. Baby Fae died 20½ days later.

Suit filed against Texas Utilities over Comanche Peak construction

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Municipal Power Agency and another utility have sued Texas Utilities, claiming fraud in constructing the problem-plagued Comanche Peak nuclear power plant.

The lawsuit asks that the agreement between the owners of the long-delayed and costly project be rescinded or modified, and that the plaintiffs be awarded damages.

The suit asks for the refund of money paid by the plaintiffs for the nuclear power plant, unspecified punitive damages for alleged gross negligence and willful misconduct, and triple damages for alleged deceptive trade practices.

TMPA was joined by one of the other Comanche Peak minority partners, the Tex-La Electric Cooperative of Texas Inc., which has headquarters in Nacogdoches.

The two plaintiffs asked that a third minority partner, Brazos Electric Power Cooperative of Waco, also be brought in as a plaintiff.

In an apparent effort to outflank an earlier lawsuit filed against all three minority partners by Texas Utilities in Dallas, TMPA and Tex-La filed their lawsuit in Austin. A jury in Dallas County would normally be composed largely of Texas Utilities customers. In Travis County, though, the big utility has only 3,300 customers.

A spokesman for Texas Utilities declined to comment on the action.

According to the lawsuit, Texas Utilities already was aware of numerous deficiencies in the plant's construction when the minority partners joined the Comanche Peak project.

The lawsuit contends Texas Utilities failed to inform its partners of a report detailing the deficiencies. The company also failed to provide the report to federal licensing authorities for five years, until 1985, the suit claims.

Texas Utilities' actions, said the lawsuit, "have caused the NRC (Nuclear Regulatory Commission) to question whether the project ever can be safely operated and whether TU has the competence and ability to do so."

TMPA and Tex-La claim that Texas Utilities has no "near-term hope" of obtaining an operating license, and that they believe federal authorities will not license the first reactor for operation until January 1988.

The plaintiffs contend "a strong possibility exists that commercial operation will be delayed even beyond those dates."

The lawsuit alleges seven separate causes of action, including breach of contract, fraud and deceit, violation of the Deceptive Trade Practices Act, and negligent and willful misconduct.

Among the things Texas Utilities has failed to do, TMPA and Tex-La contend, is pursue legal action against Gibbs & Hill, the architect-engineer for Comanche Peak, and Brown & Root, the contractor.

The Comanche Peak plant has been under construction since 1973 in Somervell and Hood counties, southwest of Fort Worth. Originally, it was to cost $764 million, according to Texas Utilities, and the first of the twin 1,150-megawatt reactors was to be operational in 1980.

The estimated cost has risen to at least $5.46 billion, and Texas Utilities announced in April it cannot estimate the ultimate cost. Even though one reactor is virtually complete and the other 82 percent finished, the managing partner has said it does not know when the plant can open because of continuing licensing problems.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Our opinion

Golf course vote wasn't up to par

When the Gray County commissioners were first asked to help build a public golf course in Pampa, they said they wanted to find out how the taxpayers would feel about the the county providing equipment, manpower and possibly money before making a decision.

Although a public opinion survey authorized by commissioners showed a huge majority in favor of county participation in the project, it is doubtful they know any more now than they did then about how the taxpayers feel. The reason they don't know is because the survey wasn't limited to taxpayers. The survey forms, which included blanks so that several people could vote on each, were mailed to all households with registered voters, regardless of whether they pay property taxes.

There was no apparent effort to find out how "taxpayers" feel. And the fact that nearly 6,000 votes were hand-counted in about 90 minutes doesn't seem to eliminate the possibility of the same people voting more than once, or allowing the vote of children, and possibly even the family dog, to be included in the final tabulation.

Although the vote is not binding and the county is not obligated to enter the project, commissioners are now planning to conduct a feasibility study on the proposed course.

But before a final decision is made, taxpayers should raise several questions.

If the county, as has been suggested, can provide the men and machines to do about $500,000 worth of dirt work for the course without neglecting regular duties, doesn't that indicate that the county is now employing more men and owns more machines than it needs? Could the taxpayers look forward to a reduction in work force and in the cost of buying more equipment after the golf course is completed?

Commissioner Ted Simmons Monday said he could probably spare two maintainers, a bulldozer and several trucks when and if construction begins. On the same day, he was authorized to advertise for bids on a new pickup truck. If he has that many excess trucks now, taxpayers might wonder why he's buying a new one.

Commissioners have indicated they might consider helping to build the course, but don't intend to subsidize its operation if it doesn't pay its own way. But since the course would be deeded to the county, what would they do with it if it isn't self-sustaining? Will there be deed restrictions limiting what they could do? That'll be something interesting to watch for?

We trust that the commissioners will examine the feasibility of the project with extreme care before making a final decision. They have been told that public golf courses in other area towns operate at a profit, but they haven't been told that those towns are the same size as Pampa and have three golf courses, as Pampa would have if a public course is built.

We hope there won't come a day when county officials have to choose between admitting they wasted a lot of time and money building a golf course that won't sustain itself, or pouring in even more taxpayers' money to subsidize a project that provides recreation for only a few. We hope that doesn't happen if the county gets involved, but we wouldn't bet on it.

Your property threatened

If you think the apartment house from which you receive rental income is your private property and your ownership rights are fully protected by the laws expressed in the founding documents of our republic, think again.

If you think you own the house in which you live and are, therefore, secure in your property, don't be so confident.

If you think you own the farm from which you have been struggling to earn income, you could be surprised.

If you think that the business which has been in your family for years is yours to operate in any way the market indicates so that you can keep it profitable, you may be in for a rude awakening.

Recent federal court decisions, plus the arguments being made by advocates of something called "industrial reform" — arguments based on the logic of these court decisions — strongly suggest that any and all levels of government are free to take any property for any reason a legislature may deem to be "public use."

The only sense in which one may be said to possess property rights in anything — whether it be one's labor power or some so-called "real" object such as land — is in the sense that such "rights" convey the power to dispose of said property in any way the possessor deems appropriate. To the extent that government can and does use its coercive power to limit, restrict, or deny one the right to dispose of their property in any way, those so restricted or denied have lost a portion, if not all, of their property rights.

When I was an undergraduate I had one particular political science professor who constantly ranted and raved about something he called the "conflict between human rights and property rights." After every one of his lectures of this sort I would take him out for a cup of coffee and tell him that I thought that he was as crazy as a betsy bug. Property rights, I would argue, are the most fundamental of all human rights. Government evolved, I contended, not to confer upon individuals the right to possess property but, rather, to protect and defend the individual's right — a right that is as old as human history — to hold and dispose of his own property.

This particular political scientist was a deeply committed Christian. On one occasion I opened the Bible with him and asked him to interpret what he read in Genesis 23:1-23 — especially verses 17 through 23. I asked him what this revealed about the nature of property in ancient times. He wouldn't relent. He continued to argue that property was "socially determined", i.e., the government giveth and the government can take away.

And the government has been active in "taking away for" many years. As University of Chicago Law School Professor Richard Epstein has recently argued in his book The Takings (Harvard University Press), federal, state, and local governments have been routinely violating the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution — the "just compensation" clause — with the full aid and consent of the Supreme Court.

"The eminent domain clause," Epstein argues, "should render infirm or suspect many of the heralded reforms and institutions of the 20th century: zoning, rent control, workers' compensation laws, transfer payments, and progressive taxation." The reason the courts have stood mute in these assaults on the private property rights of individuals is because the courts have, as stated in the Hawaiian Housing Authority v. Midkiff decision (1984), taken the position that: "In short, the Court has made clear that it will not substitute its judgment for a state legislature's judgment as to what constitutes a public use...when the legislature's purpose is legitimate and its means are not irrational, our cases make it clear that empirical debates over the wisdom of takings — no less than dictates over the wisdom of other kinds of socioeconomic legislation — are not to be carried out in the federal courts."

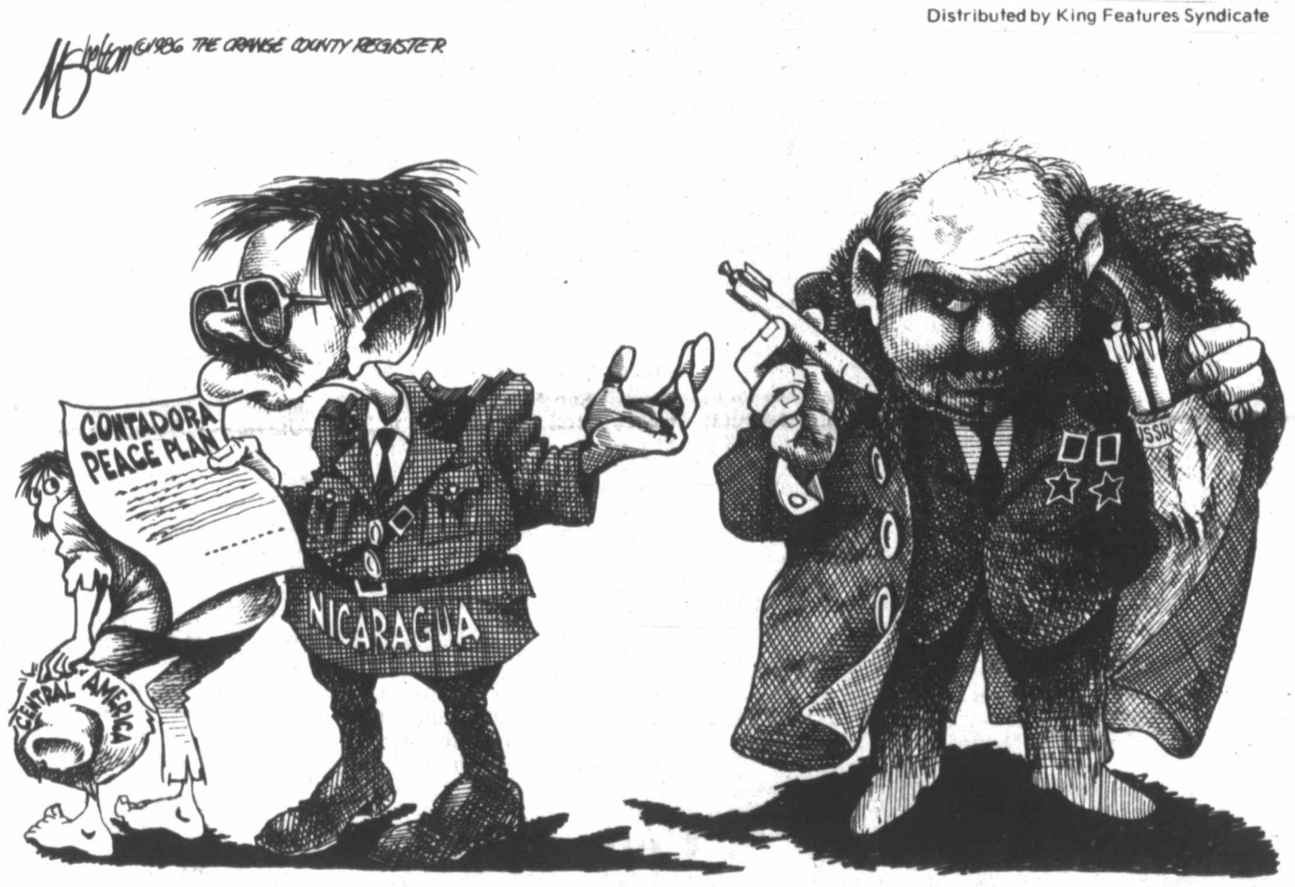

In a word, the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that if the state wants your property, the state can have your property.

Dr. Richard McKenzie of Washington University (St. Louis) has recently published a study of the use to which the Supreme Court's decision in the Hawaiian Housing Authority case is being put to use by those who are seeking to block the right of a company to close an unprofitable plant. He poses the question: Can government's "taking powers" (i.e. the use of eminent domain) be applied to plant closures? He concludes that in so far as recent court decisions provide precedent, the answer is, yes. "A state may quickly declare the saving of jobs and the community's tax base as the necessary 'public use and purpose' " to take a plant from its owner rather than allow that plant to be closed.

McKenzie contends that those who want to deny the force of the market are pressing for the use of eminent domain to force unprofitable enterprises which employ large numbers of people to keep operating, no matter what the cost in inefficiency to the rest of the economy. "Indeed," McKenzie argues, "it would appear that there are many areas of economic life to which eminent domain could be applied" by those anxious to forfeit the rights of the individual to the use of his own property.

That such use of eminent domain would be a violation of one of mankind's oldest and most sacred rights doesn't seem to disturb these advocates of "industrial reform." Once again those who know how to use the power of government to benefit some at the expense of many are on the loose.

Clicker prevents anarchy

My friend Rigsby, the lover, is planning to get married. He asked my advice concerning a pre-nuptial agreement.

I happen to be an expert on such matters because I learned the hard way. I've had three wives, but no agreements. If my exwives and I formed a musical group, we'd be Po' Boy and the Alimonyettes.

I informed Rigsby he most certainly should have a pre-nuptial arrangement and that he not forget one very important item.

"Make certain you get control of the clicker," I told him.

"The what?"

"The clicker," I went on. "The little remote control deal that changes the channels on the TV."

"Why is that so important?" Rigsby asked me.

"Without the clicker," I said, "a man is nothing. He has no power."

"Explain," said Rigsby.

"In every household," I began, "somebody must be designated — even if it is necessary to use brute force — to be in control of the clicker or else there would be anarchy.

"One person might say, 'I want to watch Wheel of Fortune', and another might say, 'I want to watch a cable movie,' and another, 'I want to watch the wrestling matches.'

"So everybody would go for the clicker and domestic violence would erupt."

"You mean they might hurt each other?" Rigsby asked.

"There was a story in the papers last week about a family in Tumblewood, Okla.," I told him. "A man and his wife and their two children sat down to watch an evenings' television. All four wanted to see a different program, and nobody had official control of the clicker. They all dived at it at once.

"The man suffered severe scratches from his wife's fingernails, and she was bitten on the ankles by one of the children, who got poked in the eye during the melee. The other child got the clicker and ran outside as he was being chased by the rest of the family and was hit head-on by a jogger. All five were treated and released at a local hospital."

"I never realized something like that could happen," Rigsby said.

"It's like this, my friend," I continued. "Your wife wants to watch The Newlywed Game, and you want to see three basketball games, a golf tournament and the last thrilling moments of a Charles Bronson movie on HBO where he blows away a small city.

"If you have the clicker, you can switch back and forth and keep up with everything you want to see. If your wife has control, you'll have to sit there and watch while some woman tries to remember what color undershorts her husband wore on their wedding night."

"I see your point," said Rigsby.

It must be wonderful to have a friend like me.

Officials plan emancipation celebration throughout state

By The Associated Press

For most of her 91 years, San Antonian Lella D. Thomas has subscribed to the philosophy that people should never be afraid to fight for their rights.

She says it has served her well, including the era when discrimination against blacks was common — and legal — in Texas.

Her 14-year-old granddaughter, Phyllis Callies, said it means hope during an era when all ethnic groups share equal opportunities.

Today, both could reflect on their freedoms with other Texans observing Juneteenth, the celebration of the day in 1865 when Texas slaves finally learned they were free.

"This is not like a birthday or national holiday. We're celebrating people who were once enslaved and now they're not," says state Rep. Al Edwards, a Houston Democrat who wrote and sponsored the 1980 bill making June 19 an official holiday.

The Emancipation Proclamation was issued by President Lincoln in 1862. But word did not reach Texas until June 19, 1865, when Union Maj. Gen. Gordon Granger issued an order in Galveston that freed all slaves.

Since then, Juneteenth has been celebrated officially and unofficially in Texas. The 1980 bill made the day a state holiday but employees have the option of exchanging that holiday for another.

Edwards said he hopes to persuade more private companies to recognize the holiday and will work in the next session of the Legislature for a measure closing state banks.

Thomas, the mother of community activist the Rev. R.A. Callies and 12 other children, said she will spend today remembering when whites forced her to sit in the back of a train and go to segregated schools.

She will recall being threatened while traveling to church as a child and while sitting in her home as an adult.

Discrimination, she said, "broke our heart ... but as far as being afraid, my daddy taught us all the time not to be afraid of nobody. And I'm not afraid of nothing because I know God knows right from wrong, and out of one blood God made all men."

Phyllis, the minister's daughter, said she will give thanks today that social attitudes have changed and will remind herself that she has to work hard to continue to enjoy freedoms that were long in coming for her grandmother.

"You still find prejudiced people now and then, but you just have to ignore them," Phyllis said. "Black people my age should be thinking of what they want to be as adults. They should have a goal and dedication."

He said Juneteenth should be used as a day to turn attention to the past, present and future and explore the contributions of the Afro-American.

Juneteenth activities across the state include a prayer service in Galveston in historic Ashton Villa, featuring a reading of the Emancipation Proclamation.

In San Antonio, Miss Juneteenth will be crowned and an Afro-American Style Show will be held.

In Austin, there will be a parade and a second annual Juneteenth celebration at the Capitol, cosponsored by the Legislative Black Caucus and the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History.

Gov. Mark White was to make a keynote address in the Senate Chamber. The Austin Juneteenth Committee and other organizations are sponsoring a celebration in a city park and a parade.

In Fort Worth, four days of festivities begin today with a parade downtown. Also planned is a celebration featuring food booths, carnival rides and music at Sycamore Park.

Committee hears from former employees of Supreme Court

AUSTIN (AP) — Former employees of the Texas Supreme Court told a House investigating committee that all judges and their staffs were warned in 1983 about contact with attorneys with cases before the court.

Former Chief Justice Jack Pope sent out an "All Hands" memo warning everyone on the third floor, where the justices' offices are, to beware of contact with information-seeking attorneys.

Jeff Armstrong, former briefing attorney for Justice C.L. Ray, said another briefing attorney for another justice "was uncomfortable because he had heard a judge discussing a case with attorneys like hw would his staff."

"He wrote a letter to Chief Justice Pope asking guidance on contact with attorneys and Justice Pope's memo came out the next week," Armstrong testified before the House Judicial Affairs Committee. He was ordered to appear under threat of contempt of the Legislature.

Another witness said that one Supreme Court justice promised a campaign contributor help on a matter before the court while another justice showed a confidential court file to a state senator.

"We learned some things today but we will have to review the transcript to see where we go from here," said Rep. Frank Tejeda, D-San Antonio, chairman, after almost five hours of testimony.

Tejeda said the committee also must decide when it will meet again and if it will subpoena more witnesses.

Houston investor Henry J.N. Taub told the committee that Associate Justice C.L. Ray told him at a fund-raising affair in Houston that he would help Taub in a matter before the court. Taub said he found out later the court already had ruled against Taub, who wanted a rehearing in a Webb County oil and gas lease case.

Armstrong, Austin attorney who formerly was a briefing attorney for Associate Justice Franklin Spears, said he was present when Associate Justice William Kilgarlin came into Spears' office and asked to see Spears' file on aa pending court case.

Armstrong said another Spears assistant gave the file to Kilgarlin who turned and handed it to a man, that Armstrong later learned was state Sen. Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas, who also is a Dallas attorney.

Mauzy is the Democratic nominee for a pace on the Supreme Court. He has a Republican opponent in the November election.

"It (the file) had confidential information, memos, and special notes on the case made by Justice Spears," said Armstrong.

Armstrong said Mauzy looked at the file and returned it intack. Armstrong said he did not know if Kilgarlin had permission from Spears, who was not in the office.

Before hearing testimony Wednesday the committee voted 7-1 to recommend that any witness refusing to testify before the group be cited for contempt of the Legislature.

Attorneys for subponaed former court employees have argued the investigation should be conducted by the state Commission on Judicial Conduct.

"This places the committee in the place of violating the civil rights of these witnesses," said Rep. Smith Gilley, D-Greenville, who opposed Wednesday's contempt motion. "I believe this is coercive and you are threatening them with punitive action."

Taub said he had a case pending before the Supreme Court in 1984 involving details on a lease on 2,716 acres of land in Webb County. A Webb County district court and the Beaumont appeals court had decided in his favor, but it was appealed to the Supreme Court. Taub lost the decision but asked for a rehearing.

Taub said he talked with Ray about 20 minutes at an October 1984 fund-raising affair in Houston, after the request for a rehearing.

"He mentioned that the case was a tough one," Taub said. "I told him how important this case was to me. It was worth several million dollars," Taub said.

"He said something to the effect that he would go back and see what could be done about it," Taub told the committee "He said he had plenty of time to take care of the matter, whatever that meant."

Taub said he found out the next day the court had rejected his request for a rehearing.

"They had to have made the decision before I talked to him (Ray)' Taub said.

Also testifuung Wednesday, under threa t o .e contempt citations, were Kath Spurgin, stk7bormerly adm3nistratve hssist$nt5 s 'ub,and LaurasWorsm, Dallas attorney and former briefing attorney for Ray.

Ms. Spurgin said Ray had her shred all records of telephone calls after he said he found Armstrong had been found looking at them.

Ms. Worsham said she accompanied Ray to a speaking engagement in San Antonio once and the two visited the offices of Pat Maloney Sr., prominent attorney, afterwards. She said she met Clinton Manges, South Texas rancher, who had an important case pending before the Supreme Court. She said she did not see Manges in the presence of either Maloney or Ray and she did not hear anyone talking about the Manges case.

DENVER TRANSPLANT BABY ARRIVES — Loma Linda University medical team brings the new heart transplant donor from a Citation jet at Norton Air Force Base, Calif., late Wednesday. The donor provided Baby Nicky of Texas with another chance for life, after a plea went out when Nicky's first heart transplant didn't work correctly.

Baby Nicky gets second heart transplant in two-day period

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — A 3-year-old Texas boy today underwent his second heart transplant 28 hours after a Colorado couple agreed to donate the heart of their son, who was fatally shot by a playmate.

The operation on Nicky Carrizales began around midnight, and his new heart was beating by 1:05 a.m., said Anita Rockwell, spokeswoman for Loma Linda University Medical Center.

Drs. Leonard Bailey and John Jacobson performed the surgery, she said.

Nicky, of San Antonio, had received the heart of a 2-year-old late Tuesday, but the organ began to fail almost immediately.

At 4 a.m. Wednesday he was returned to the operating room. Before the second donor was found, Ms. Rockwell said Nicky's condition was extremely critical.

The research facility 65 miles east of Los Angeles made an urgent request for another heart to the Los Angeles-based Regional Organ Procurement Agency of Southern California, which in turn alerted other Western U.S. procurement agencies and hospital intensive care units.

Spokesmen at Loma Linda declined to release details about the second donor.

But a spokeswoman at Swedish Medical Center in the Denver suburb of Englewood said a 6-year-old who had been shot in the head was flown to Loma Linda after his parents donated his organs.

Young Jason Lars Kendrick was pronounced brain dead at 1:45 p.m. Wednesday, shortly after a 10-year-old friend pointed a loaded .22-caliber rifle at him and the gun discharged, said Swedish hospital relations coordinator Debbie Felker.

Nicky's father, Rudy Carrizales, told the San Antonio Light that the donor heart for his son's first transplant was from a 2-year-old child. Additional details about the first donor were not released.

Nicky had been hospitalized in critical condition for five days at Loma Linda after suffering a heart attack last week, said Carrizales, an X-ray technologist at Kelly Air Force Base in Texas.

He suffers from cardiomyopathy, a fatal degeneration of the heart muscle.

The Texas tot is the oldest child to undergo surgery in Loma Linda's infant-to-infant heart transplant program, which has recorded five successes in five attempts since November.

The fifth patient, Jesse Dean Sepulveda, received the heart of a brain-dead Michigan boy June 10 following extensive publicity that arose because the boy was rejected for a transplant until his young, unwed parents surrendered custody to Jesse's parental grandparents.

In 1984, Bailey, who has headed up the surgical team in all five operations, attempted a baboon-to-infant heart transplant on an infant identified only as Baby Fae. Baby Fae died 20½ days later.

Suit filed against Texas Utilities over Comanche Peak construction

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Municipal Power Agency and another utility have sued Texas Utilities, claiming fraud in constructing the problem-plagued Comanche Peak nuclear power plant.

The lawsuit asks that the agreement between the owners of the long-delayed and costly project be rescinded or modified, and that the plaintiffs be awarded damages.

The suit asks for the refund of money paid by the plaintiffs for the nuclear power plant, unspecified punitive damages for alleged gross negligence and willful misconduct, and triple damages for alleged deceptive trade practices.

TMPA was joined by one of the other Comanche Peak minority partners, the Tex-La Electric Cooperative of Texas Inc., which has headquarters in Nacogdoches.

The two plaintiffs asked that a third minority partner, Brazos Electric Power Cooperative of Waco, also be brought in as a plaintiff.

In an apparent effort to outflank an earlier lawsuit filed against all three minority partners by Texas Utilities in Dallas, TMPA and Tex-La filed their lawsuit in Austin. A jury in Dallas County would normally be composed largely of Texas Utilities customers. In Travis County, though, the big utility has only 3,300 customers.

A spokesman for Texas Utilities declined to comment on the action.

According to the lawsuit, Texas Utilities already was aware of numerous deficiencies in the plant's construction when the minority partners joined the Comanche Peak project.

The lawsuit contends Texas Utilities failed to inform its partners of a report detailing the deficiencies. The company also failed to provide the report to federal licensing authorities for five years, until 1985, the suit claims.

Texas Utilities' actions, said the lawsuit, "have caused the NRC (Nuclear Regulatory Commission) to question whether the project ever can be safely operated and whether TU has the competence and ability to do so."

TMPA and Tex-La claim that Texas Utilities has no "near-term hope" of obtaining an operating license, and that they believe federal authorities will not license the first reactor for operation until January 1988.

The plaintiffs contend "a strong possibility exists that commercial operation will be delayed even beyond those dates."

The lawsuit alleges seven separate causes of action, including breach of contract, fraud and deceit, violation of the Deceptive Trade Practices Act, and negligent and willful misconduct.

Among the things Texas Utilities has failed to do, TMPA and Tex-La contend, is pursue legal action against Gibbs & Hill, the architect-engineer for Comanche Peak, and Brown & Root, the contractor.

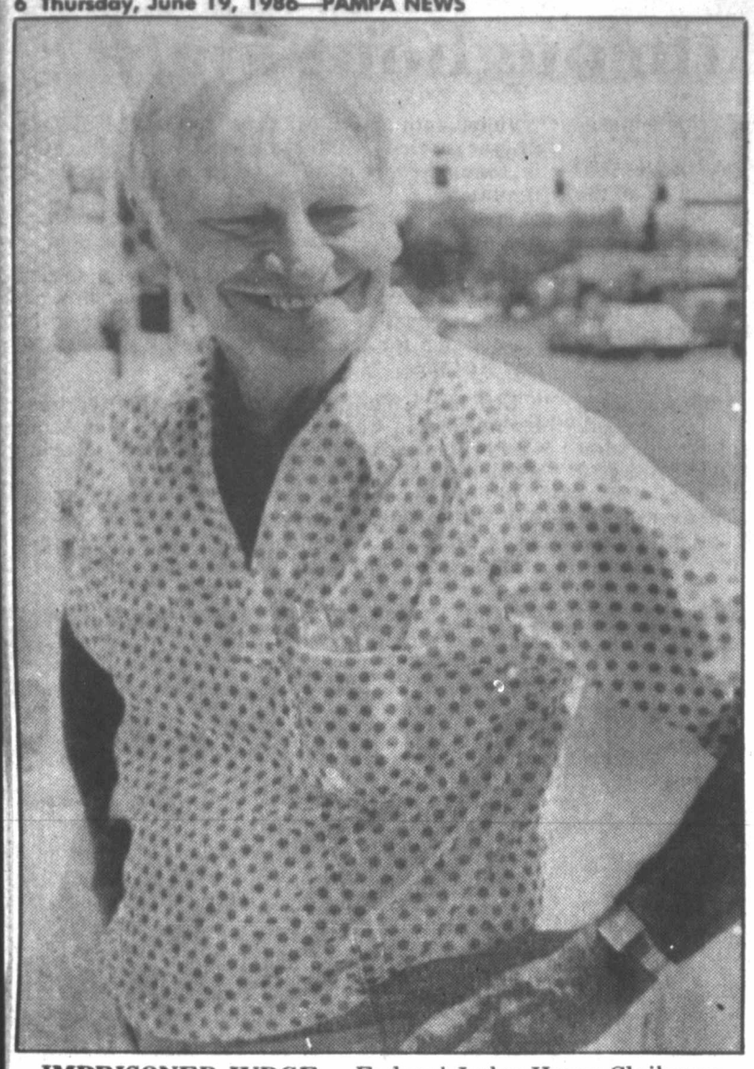

The Comanche Peak plant has been under construction since 1973 in Somervell and Hood counties, southwest of Fort Worth. Originally, it was to cost $764 million, according to Texas Utilities, and the first of the twin 1,150-megawatt reactors was to be operational in 1980.

The estimated cost has risen to at least $5.46 billion, and Texas Utilities announced in April it cannot estimate the ultimate cost. Even though one reactor is virtually complete and the other 82 percent finished, the managing partner has said it does not know when the plant can open because of continuing licensing problems.

IMPRISONED JUDGE — Federal Judge Harry Claiborne of Las Vegas, Nev., who is curently serving a two-year prison term on tax evasion charges, is scheduled to appear before a House subcommittee today. The subcommittee is studying the judge's possible impeachment. Claiborne is shown May 15, the day before he entered prison, as he waited on a last-ditch Supreme Court appeal. (AP Laserphoto)

Parliament chambers reject security bills

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The Indian and mixed-race chambers of Parliament rejected bills granting sweeping powers to security forces in "unrest areas," dashing President P.W. Botha's hopes of having the bills approved by the legislature.

Botha moved Wednesday to refer the tough new security measures to the white-dominated President's Council, which can implement legislation rejected by the Cape Town Parliament.

The lawmakers' decision came against the backdrop of a nationwide state of emergency, during which authorities have reported 45 people killed.

The government has said the emergency declaration, made last Thursday, came in part because it could not get the two bills approved in time for Monday's 10th anniversary of black riots in Soweto.

The 1976 rioting, which marked a turning point in the struggle against apartheid, was commemorated Monday with a nationwide general strike that was observed by millions of blacks.

Under the state of emergency, journalists are barred from unauthorized news coverage of security force activity, including arrests.

They are also barred from identifying people detained under the emergency regulations, entering black townships, disseminating statements deemed subversive and sending live television broadcasts by satellite.

It was the second rejection of the bills by Indian and mixed-race lawmakers in the three-chamber Parliament, in which blacks are not represented. The white chamber approved the bill for a second time last week.

The legislation would give security forces broad powers and indemnity from prosecution in any district deemed "an unrest area." The bills also would allow police to detain people without charge for 180 days instead of the current 14.

An estimated 1,000 to 2,000 people of all races were detained without charge immediately after the emergency decree was issued.

In Washington, the State Department said two Americans jailed during the crackdown were released Wednesday and will be leaving the country in a few days.

The Americans released from Cape Town's Pollsmoor Prison were identified as Scott Daugherty, 19, of San Diego, a student at Humboldt State University in northern California, and Rodney Williams, a retired army colonel from Kaneohe, Hawaii.

One unidentified American remains in prison, and two other Americans taken into custody were released earlier this week, a State Department spokesman said.

In another development, the House of Representatives in Washington unexpectedly approved the harshest sanctions yet proposed against the Pretoria government.

Studies show

Coffee drinkers face increased cancer risk

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Heavy coffee drinkers may face an increased risk of cancer but they suffer no greater risk of heart attacks than other people, separate studies have concluded.

Colorectal cancer, or cancer affecting the intestinal area, occurs 2½ times more often among people who drink more than two cups of coffee a day than among those who consume fewer than two cups, researchers found in one study.

The results were outlined to the Society for Epidemiologic Research on Wednesday by Cedric Garland, assistant professor of epidemiology at the University of California at San Diego.

But other researchers also reported Wednesday that they found no correlation between coffee drinking and heart disease in a nine-year study of 12,866 men around the country, contradicting earlier reports linking the two.

A estimated 60,000 people are expected to die of colorectal cancer this year, and 140,000 new cases of the disease are expected to be diagnosed, according to the American Cancer Society.

Garland's findings are based on a 10-year study of 703 people living in Rancho Bernardo, Calif., a retirement community that is part of San Diego.

Of the 703, most of whom were in their 60s, 14 developed colorectal cancer, said Garland. Seven of the cases were fatal.

Three percent of those drinking at least two cups of coffee a day eventually developed the cancer, Garland said. The incidence rate was 1.4 percent for those consuming less of the beverage or none at all.

Smoking and other high-risk factors were taken into consideration, Garland said.

"It's a big difference, but I'm cautious," he said. "This is the highest relative risk that has ever been reported. At this point, we don't have enough information to be able to make a dietary recommendation."

Previous studies have shown a link between coffee and colorectal cancer among people 65 and older but not for younger consumers, while other researchers have found no correlation at all or possibly even a preventive effect.

"We need to do studies that determine how coffee is prepared and the method of preparation," Garland said, adding it may not be caffeine that is responsible for the increased risk of cancer.

"Caffeine is only a small part of coffee," he said. In addition, "coffee reduces the presence of calcium, therefore that might play a role in the risk of colorectal cancer."

Similar discrepancies have been reported in studies of coffee drinkers and heart disease.

In the second study announced Wednesday, researcher Arlene Caggiula, associate professor of epidemiology at the University of Pittsburgh, said "There is no consistent relationship with the number of cups of coffee consumed per day and ... heart disease mortality. This association was true for both smokers and nonsmokers."

About 800 deaths were reported among the 12,866 men studied, about half of which were heart-related, she said. The University of Pittsburgh was one of 22 health centers that took part in the study.

Caggiula said moderation is the key to drinking coffee.

"Coffee does look OK with the caveat that heavy coffee consumption is associated with other patterns that have risk-like significance" such as smoking, she said. "It might not be the coffee that kills you but other things you have with it."

Stuntman blows himself up

HOUSTON (AP) — A 70-year-old man who blows himself up inside a dynamite-filled coffin has pleaded innocent to charges he violated a federal law against storing explosives too near to a residence.

Patrick Albert O'Brien, alias "Captain Dynamite," denied the charges Wednesday and said: "I don't blow anybody up but myself."

O'Brien is accused by U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents of storing 18 pounds of dynamite too close to a nearby residence.

He denied the charges before U.S. Magistrate Calvin Botley and was released on a personal recognizance bond.

"You're lucky to be alive here at these proceedings," Botley told O'Brien. "I don't even mess with dynamite at my age."

O'Brien could receive up to one year in prison and $1,000 in fines if convicted. It is the second such charge for the elderly daredevil who in 1979 received one year's probation for improperly storing explosions.

"He's gotten used to explosive situations," said defense attorney Tom Berg.

The latest charge was filed in 1984 but agents did not track O'Brien down until earlier this week even though he has lived at the same Houston address for the past seven years.

O'Brien uses the dynamite in a traveling road show which he performs across the country at county fairs, shopping centers and sports events. He also has performed motorcycle stunts since 1935.

Testimony begins in piracy trial

GENOA, Italy (AP) — A judge ordered testimony to begin today in the trial of 14 people charged with the hijacking of the Achille Lauro luxury liner and the slaying of a crippled American passenger.

Only five defendants, including three Arabs accused of the actual piracy, were in the heavily guarded courtroom when Judge Lino Monteverde read the list of charges at the trial's opening session on Wednesday.

The other defendants are considered fugutives and are being tried in absentia, including Mohammed Abbas, the Palestinian guerrilla leader also known as Abul Abbas, who is accused of masterminding the hijacking.

An anonymous caller claiming to speak on behalf of Abbas' faction of the Palestine Liberation Front told a Western news agency in Beirut on Wednesday that the group would strike at the Italian judiciary in particular and Italian interests in general for holding the trial.

"It will be very easy for us to hit anything related to Italy, be it inside or outside Italy," the caller said in Palestinian-accented Arabic.

Authenticity of the call, released by an editor of the news agency today, could not be verified.

Four Palestinians seized the Achille Lauro on Oct. 7 off Port Said, Egypt, and held more than 300 passengers and crew members hostage until their surrender to Egyptian authorities Oct. 9.

Leon Klinghoffer, a 69-year-old handicapped New Yorker, was killed during the ordeal, and his body was thrown into the Mediterranean along with his wheelchair.

Abbas was involved in negotiating the hijackers' surrender. He was aboard an Egyptian jetliner that carried the four accused Palestinian pirates out of Egypt, but that was forced down in Sicily by U.S. warplanes.

Italy jailed the four men accused of the actual hijacking but freed Abbas over U.S. protest.

Premier Bettino Craxi's government, which nearly fell as a result, said at the time that there was no evidence on which to hold Abbas.

The court on Wednesday rejected a defense motion that the trial be ended immediately on grounds that only Egypt had jurisdication in the case.

U.N. says European-U.S. grain war threatens African recovery

ROME (AP) — U.N. crop specialists say a grain war between the United States and Europe threatens agriculture in Africa, which is emerging from deadly drought, with the crippling effects of too much food at bargain prices.

Delegates to the annual World Food Council ministerial conference that ended here Wednesday differed in heated discussion over how to prevent such a crises on the African continent.

Said U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Richard Lyng, "Unless developed countries cooperate to reform their agricultural policies, I see no end to the pitiless cycle of economic crisis .. . in Africa."

Later, he said there was American ambivalence over U.N. efforts to raise money to move food from surplus to deficit countries within Africa.

"The idea of surpluses in Africa is something we hadn't anticipated," he said with a slight laugh. "We are concerned about our own surpluses."

New U.S. legislation allows the government to subsidize food exports to help recover what it considers to be its share of the world market. U.S. officials want farm products covered by general world trade agreements.

Opening the three-day ministerial session Monday, Italian Agriculture Minister Filippo Maria Pandolfi warned that not only Africa but the entire Third World risked suffering from the U.S.-European price war.

"Remarkable progress in the Third World risks being made useless by competition — often heavily subsidized — from industrialized countries," he said.

In some cases, African governments now can buy for $90 a ton grain that might cost them $150 a ton to produce because of high costs for fertilizers, pesticides and transportation.

An "infernal machine" is spurring world grain production and pushing surpluses onto the market at cut-rate prices, Alain Vidal-Naquet, senior aide to the WFC said. "This will crush the Africans and their agriculture, and people don't realize this."

Vidal-Naquet said some African countries cannot sell their farm surpluses, estimated at 1.7 million tons.

SALT II is dead ... isn't it?

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — "There is nothing confusing about what I said," presidential spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters. "SALT no longer exists."

That certainly sounded simple enough. But Speakes' comments late last week, when coupled with those of the president at a news conference a day earlier and measured against more carefully drafted written language issued two weeks before, so confused those who follow arms control issues that the spokesman's staff was swamped with inquiries.

And Speakes' deputy for foreign affairs twice appeared in the White House press room to try to answer the myriad questions.

At the same time, Ambassador Paul Nitze, Reagan's arms control adviser, told reporters elsewhere the SALT II treaty no longer had any legal standing, although Reagan was keeping the United States in technical compliance with it.

Each new clarification, it seemed, only served to raise additional questions and concerns.

All this confusion and mis-understanding is not entirely accidental.

The administration has staked out a deliberately ambiguous position on the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, and every effort to straighten out the confusion seems only to complicate it further.

An AP News Analysis

On the one hand, the administration contends the treaty was never much good anyway; it was never ratified by the Senate and therefore not legally binding, and its provisions have expired regardless of its legal standing.

That, however, is irrelevant. For more than five years both the United States and the Soviet Union had announced they would comply with the treaty's negotiated limits, and that mutual observance served as a damper on the arms race, despite U.S. charges that Moscow was violating some provisions of the treaty.

By announcing it would no longer be bound by the treaty, the Reagan administration served notice that the Soviet Union would either have to negotiate a new agreement — one designed to reduce the size of the superpowers' nuclear arsenals — or risk a runaway arms race.

At the same time, the president kept the United States technically within the treaty's limits for the time being to help quiet criticism in Congress and among U.S. allies concerned about the implications of operating in a world of unrestrained nuclear arms.

He is thus in the position of trying to pressure the Soviets to make a new deal while making the necessary political concessions to keep his own supporters in line.

Administration analysts calculate that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev is too preoccupied with his own domestic economic problems and the political fallout from the Chernobyl nuclear reactor accident to commit vast sums to a new generation of offensive nuclear weapons. But it is by no means clear that Congress, already skeptical about the Reagan defense budget, would be prepared to continue supporting the administration buildup if Reagan appeared determined to launch a new round of competition.

Shultz warns Marcos against using Hawaii as 'base' against Mrs. Aquino

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Philippines President Ferdinand E. Marcos is on notice that he might be wearing out his welcome by using Hawaii as a "base" against the Philippines' new government, Secretary of State George P. Shultz says.

Shultz, due to visit Manila next week, said in an Asso iated PCRESS INTERVIEW Wednesday that Marcos had been made "very, very well aware of our attitude."

Another U.S. official, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said the State Department had advised Marcos "on at least a couple of occasions" that he could jeopardize his status as an exile.

"He was told directly that his partisan political activity with respect to the Philippines was inconsistent with his status as a guest," the official said.

Marcos fled the Philippines on a U.S. Air Force plane in late February and was given refuge in Hawaii. A Philippines government commission has estimated he misappropriated as much as $10 billion during his 20 years as president.

The former president, who apparently is in poor health, was granted temporary refuge in Hawaii. But in the four months since he and his wife, Imelda, took up residence there no other country has offered publicly to give him a permanent home.

"We don't think that the United States, under the circumstances, should be used as a base for Marcos to try to disrupt the present government of the Philippines," Shultz said. "It's important that that government be effective."

Astro-Graph

June 20, 1986

In the year ahead, you will be in a position to assume more direct control over situations pertinent to your personal ambitions. You are entering a cycle where you'll now make substantial progress.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You could be in for a pleasant surprise today when someone you didn't take too seriously will come through on a promise made in the past. Career advantages and problems in the year ahead are discussed in your Gemini Astro-Graph predictions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) It's imperative that you do a good job today if you are being employed by another. Your compensation will be in exact proportion to the quality of your efforts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You're well liked by others, but today you'll be even more popular than usual. But you are apt to feel most comfortable in the company of old pals.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Tenacity and staying power are the prime ingredients required for success today. If you can hang in there until the end, the laurels will be yours.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Good news you've been hoping for will come your way today through an old and loyal friend who has always had your best interests at heart.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Something you have worked hard and long for is finally coming through, and it could happen today. Keep your shoulder to the wheel.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Early in the day, you are likely to be a bit serious-minded. But when you begin to mingle with friends, their warmth will transform your sobriety into lightheartedness.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You're going to be in for a pleasant surprise today. Something that had you worried will turn out positively instead of negatively as you had anticipated.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Companions will have a strong influence on your outlook today. Be tight with pals who are optimistic and let pessimists find their own friends.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) An important objective can be achieved today but you're going to have to work for it every inch of the way. You'll take pride in an accomplishment you've earned.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) A solution to a vexing problem can be found today. This will put your mind at ease and give you a good reason for doing a little celebrating.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your greatest possibilities for gain will come from a joint endeavor today. It's an involvement that you have with a person you really like.

Eating disorders: weighty obsession

EDITOR'S NOTE — She started dieting in the eighth grade and in high school she began making herself vomit after she ate sweets and felt guilty. Her fear of obesity eventually drove her to stealing laxatives. Finally it put her in a hospital. This is the story of one young woman's obsession with staying thin.

By THERESA HUMPHREY
Associated Press Writer

TALLEYVILLE, Del. (AP) — Corlien Schaffers was popping up to 300 laxatives a day, binging on a dozen scrambled eggs and sticking a spatula down her throat to make herself vomit in a trash can.

Miss Schaffers, 24, who works for a major pharmaceutical company, has spent the last few years of her life abusing laxatives and her body. Since she was 16 she has suffered from bulimia, compulsive induced vomiting, and later a combination of bulimia and anorexia nervosa, that starvation syndrome that strikes so many young women who irrationally fear obesity.

Although these neurotic aberrations occur separately with great frequency, it is less common to find this kind of double-header.

Miss Schaffers began dieting in the eighth grade, but she was concerned about her weight from the fourth or fifth grade. (A recent University of California study indicates that 80 percent of eighth graders diet.)

Miss Schaffers told her story in graphic detail because she hopes it will help others.

"I want other women out there to know that there is good, sound help available," Miss Schaffers says.

She was admitted to Philadelphia's Renfrew Center, the nation's only residential, nonhospital treatment center for bulimics and anorexics. She spent 39 days there late last year to learn how to eat properly and find the deep-seated causes for her behavior.

She's back home now and working. She says that, although she is not cured, she has come a long way.

Miss Schaffers remembers the bulimia started in her junior year of high school when she "probably ate a sweet" and then felt guilty. She made herself vomit.

From bulimia she progressed to anorexia until her whole life was consumed by both illnesses and the need "not to be fat."

But the real horrors began after she graduated from college in May 1984 and continued until she sought help in November 1985.

Dr. Leonard Levitz, Renfrew's clinical director, says anorexic-bulimics sometimes swing back and forth between different manifestations of their behavior.

When Miss Schaffers came to Renfrew, she was an underweight 105 pounds at 5-feet-6 and would do anything to maintain that weight.

After graduation from Covenant College in Chattanooga, Tenn., she moved home with her parents in nearby Chalfonte and found her limited dieting and binging and purging were not so easy to hide.

"So I resorted to laxatives. That was the way I kept the weight off. Instead of the normal one or two, I would take four or five...I would have diarrhea for a day or so and that would make me feel thin again. If I ate something that I felt like I would gain weight from, I would take the laxatives.

"Within a year and a half, I had abused laxatives so much that I was taking up to 300 at a time."

She had it down to a science. Through trial and error she knew harsh laxatives containing a certain ingredient, yellow phenolthalein, would give her the results she wanted along with a little nausea and cramps.

In relation to the high doses, she said, "I never knew for sure if I was going to be all right, whether I was going to live through it or not."

Once she took 600 laxative pills and became so ill she was hospitalized for a night. It was recorded as a suicide attempt.

But to her it wasn't a suicide attempt. She insists she just didn't want to gain weight.

"I thought I was going to die," she says. "It was like someone was taking a knife and just stabbing me...That didn't even stop me...The need to be thin was so great I was willing to risk my life again to be thin. That's how distorted my view was.

"My parents would always know when I took them. They would know because they would hear the bathroom run at night or they would look at me and they could tell because my eyes would get sunken in almost because I was dehydrated."

At first she bought her laxatives, but as her need grew she stole them.

She knew she was breaking her parents' hearts so she moved into her own apartment in August 1985.

"It was really difficult for them to watch me slowly kill myself, which is what it is," she says. "It's a slow type of suicide."

Isolating herself from her friends, she became "much more sophisticated" in her binging. She didn't buy expensive food, and she planned each session.

She would throw down a dozen eggs, and then throw up, and go through the whole thing again a half hour later.

Before going for help at the Renfrew Center, she had tried a self-help group, Christian counseling and counseling from a physician. She said they didn't work because she really didn't want to change.

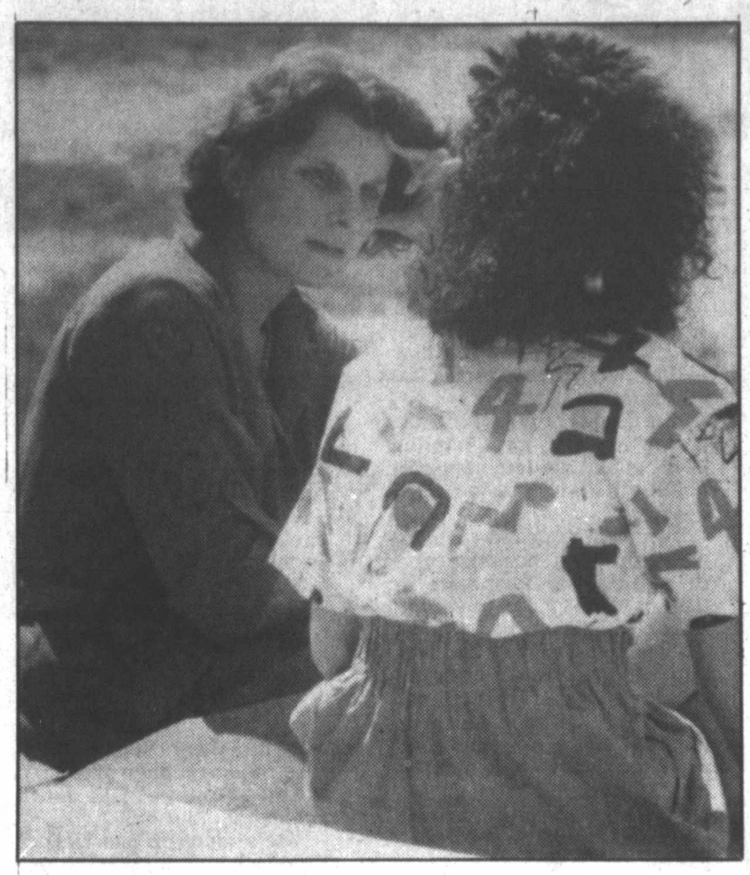

Once at Renfrew, determined finally to alter her lifestyle, she found it was more difficult than expected.

She went there weighing 110 pounds and lost seven pounds during her stay.

The Renfrew's treatment integrates medical, nutritional, psychological, physical and behavioral elements, including individual and group psychotherapy, family therapy, lectures and discussions.

Miss Schaffers said her concern about her weight really stemmed from low self-esteem and the need to please everyone. She felt that if she didn't please people, they didn't love her.

"It's like I was trying to be a perfectionist all the time," she says. "I still struggle with that."

Dear Abby

Wasted pills, wasted pennies result from overprescription

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: You seem to have a lot of compassion for us senior citizens, so maybe you can do something about this problem.

I am not the only one this has happened to; many of my friends complain of the same situation: The doctor writes a prescription for $90 worth of medicine. You take four of one kind, two of another kind and three of the third kind every day. You get all kinds of bad reactions from the pills, so the doctor changes your medication, leaving you with about $80 worth of pills you can't use. "Flush them down the toilet," he says, "so you won't take them by mistake!"

Why can't the doctor prescribe a small amount to begin with? You can always get a refill if the medication works, and if it doesn't, you won't be stuck with a lot of pills you can't use.

The druggist says it's against the law for him to take back pills once they are out of the store. Too bad I don't know another poor person who could use these useless pills prescribed for me. I would be glad to give them mine. I have a medicine cabinet full of them.

DEAR FIXED: You make an excellent point. Physicians, please take note, and consider the patient's pocketbook PRN.

DEAR ABBY: Rita (not her real name) and I just split up after a three-year relationship. She's 25 and I am 28. During the time we went together, I gave Rita many gifts. Some were expensive and others were not, but I asked her to return all my gifts. (She had given me some gifts, too, which I returned, although she told me she didn't want them.)

Well, last Sunday morning I found all the gifts I had given her dumped on my front lawn! Of course my neighbors saw this stuff on my lawn, and now I'm the laughingstock of the neighborhood.

How would you handle this? I had given Rita a three-piece set of patio furniture, a microwave oven, a stereo, and about 20 stuffed animals. And to think I almost married her!

BURNED UP IN ALABAMA

DEAR BURNED: A gift is a gift — not a loan. True, Rita was spiteful to have dumped your gifts on the lawn for all to see, but it was tacky of you to ask her to return them. The exception would have been an engagement ring, which carries with it a promise to marry, in which case if she broke that promise, the gift should have been returned, quietly.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I've been living with a man for nine years. We have a 7-year-old son together, and I now feel as though it is important for us to get married and become a real family.

Whenever I bring this up, my boyfriend gives me a lot of excuses why he can't marry me. None are legitimate. This does not leave me feeling very good about myself. How can I get him to marry me?

DEAD END

DEAR DEAD END: You can't force a man to marry you if he doesn't want to. If you are concerned about your "rights," see a lawyer and find out if you are living in a state that recognizes common-law marriages. You may have all the legal rights of a wife, although what you really want is a ring on your finger, a certificate of marriage and a "Mrs." in front of your name.

Panhandle plans for July 4

PANHANDLE — Theme for Panhandle's annual July 4 celebration is "Texas Sesquicentennial" featuring a variety of events for the whole family.

Kicking off the day's events is a Fun Run at 8 a.m. A parade, anticipated to be the biggest ever, is set for 9:30 a.m. on Main Street. Look for clowns, music, horses, and lots of floats.

Prince and Princess contests on the court house steps follows the parades. Contestants are children and grandchildren of Carson County residents. Winners are to be chosen in three age groups — 1 year, 2-3 years, and 4-5 years.

Booths are to be set up on the courthouse lawn and at the War Memorial building, featuring cold drinks, hot dogs, pop corn balls, nachos, snow cones, candy apples, homemade pies, balloons, belt buckles, T-shirts, Texas Flag windsocks, crafts, fingerprinting of children, horse shoes, treasure hunts, games for children.

Miss Carson County contest begins at 2:30 p.m.

Don Sutton rejoices after 300th win.

Sutton 3-hits Rangers for 300th victory

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Don Sutton, who says he's a man of little outward emotion, joyously thrust his right arm into the air and suddenly was hugging his teammates, his manager, his family.

As a backdrop, an Anaheim Stadium crowd of 37,044 continued a roaring ovation that had begun with the start of the ninth inning.

Wednesday night, the California Angels' right-hander became just the 19th player in baseball history to win 300 games.

He did it in grand fashion, with a three-hit, no-walk, complete-game performance in the Angels' 5-1 victory over the Texas Rangers.

Earlier, the 41-year-old Sutton had said he might prefer to go after 300 in front of empty stands, but asked if that was the case Wednesday night, he replied: "No. It was hard to remain unemotional.

"That was the nicest, sweetest roar I've ever heard."

Sutton smiled as he recalled a brief conversation with California Manager Gene Mauch just after the game.

"Gene said, 'Nice going; I got a thrill out of that, too,' " Sutton related. "I said, 'I know you're against this kind of thing, but you can hug me if you want.'

"He said, 'This one time and this one time only.' "

His 300th win was vintage Sutton, as he got the Rangers 14 times on flies, nine times on grounders including one double play while facing just two batters over the minimum.

The only hits by the Rangers — who lost their fifth straight and saw their American League West lead over the Angels dwindle to a half-game — were singles by Ruben Sierra in the second and eighth innings, and Pete Incaviglia's 12th homer, a solo shot in the seventh.

Bobby Valentine, the Texas manager who used to be a Los Angeles Dodgers teammate of Sutton, said he didn't think back then that Sutton would go on to win 300 games.

But Valentine quickly added: "He's been a great competitor and he's battled all the way and made the best of his ability."

Rangers pitcher Charlie Hough, also a former teammate of Sutton's with the Dodgers, said he'd have preferred that Sutton get his 300th against another club.

"He's going to the Hall of Fame whether he won this one or not. He was going to win another one somewhere."

The Angels staked Sutton, who now has a 300-233 career record and 5-5 mark this year, to a 3-0 lead in the first inning.

The Rangers' Jose Guzman, 6-7, walked Gary Pettis to open the inning and Pettis eventually scored on a groundout. Later in the inning, Rob Wilfong singled home two more runs.

The other California runs came on solo homers by Ruppert Jones, his sixth, in the fifth inning, and Brian Downing, his eighth, in the seventh inning.

"The fact that I got three runs early kept fresh in my mind my last time out," said Sutton, who'd gotten an early 4-1 lead against the Kansas City Royals last Saturday but wound up with no decision in the Angels' 6-5 win.

"I didn't intend to let that happen again."

Sutton, who describes himself as a "mechanic, an unspectacular grinder," said it would take him some time to really digest what reaching the milestone means to him.

But he did say: "I've been trying legally ... and illegally ... to get here for years. What it means is that I just stayed around 21 years to win 300. You have to sacrifice, you have to discipline yourself.

"You're playing for something other than money. You set goals and go after them."

Asked what his goals are now, he answered: "Seven hundred starts, 5,000 innings ... and 301 wins."

Angels owner Gene Autry, congratulating Sutton, said: "I've had a lot of thrills and a lot of heartbreaks in baseball, but nothing has made me as happy as seeing you and your batterymate, Bob Boone, get 300.

"You've been an asset to baseball, an asset to this club, and I wish I'd had you 20 years ago."

Wallach gets revenge on Gooden as Expos overpower Mets, 7-4

By BEN WALKER

AP Baseball Writer

The statistics showed that Dwight Gooden should have blown away Tim Wallach. So much for statistics.

Wallach, who entered the game 1-for-19 with 11 strikeouts in his career against the New York ace, hit two homers and drove in five runs against Gooden on Wednesday night, powering the Montreal Expos past the Mets 7-4.

"In the past, I've been glad if I could just make contact," Wallach said. "The way I've hit him in the past, it would have been unthinkable."

Wallach hit a sacrifice fly in the first inning and then led off the fourth with his 11th home run of the season. Wallach knocked out a shaky Gooden in the seventh with a three-run homer, marking the first time anyone had homered twice off Gooden in a game.

"I didn't know the statistics, but I knew I was getting him out a lot," Gooden said. "I just didn't make good pitches against him."

In other National League games, Chicago edged Philadelphia 5-4 in 10 innings, Cincinnati rallied past Houston 3-2, Los Angeles beat Atlanta 5-2 and San Francisco stopped San Diego 6-3. Pittsburgh defeated St. Louis 2-1 in 12 innings after the Cardinals beat the Pirates 4-2 in a game resumed after it was improperly stopped Monday night.

Pirates 2, Cardinals 1

Bill Almon hit a sacrifice fly in the 12th inning, lifting Pittsburgh over St. Louis in the night's regularly scheduled game.

Prior to the Pirates' victory, the Cardinals wrapped up a 4-2 triumph in the resumption of a game improperly halted in the sixth inning Monday night because of rain.

Mike Bielecki and three relievers combined to hold St. Louis to four hits in the Pittsburgh victory. Bielecki gave up two hits in eight innings, but Don Robinson, 2-0, got credit for the victory.

The Cardinals sent the game into extra innings by scoring a run in the eighth on a bloop, RBI single by Jose Oquendo.

Pittsburgh, trailing 4-1 in the sixth at the time of Monday's halt, was unable to rally and win the suspended game despite successfully arguing its protest to NL President Chub Feeney that umpire-in-chief John Kibler should not have called the game after a 22-minute rain delay.

Elliott wins title

Mike Elliott of Pampa won the 14-15 age group championship in the Cola-Cola Golf Classic held Wednesday in Amarillo.

Elliott shot a 78 and won a sudden-death playoff from Chris Ray of Amarillo on the first hole of the PGA Junior Tour tournament held at the Ross Rogers Course.

Elliott also won the chipping contest.

There were 118 entered in the competition.

Last-place Reds edge Astros

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Cincinnati Reds celebrated like they had won a championship after taking the division-leading Houston Astros for a second consecutive game.

The last place Reds players stormed onto the field after Eric Davis smashed a two-run home run in the ninth inning to win 3-2 Wednesday night.

"The reaction was really the first like it this year," said Reds first baseman Dave Parker. "But really, we haven't had much happening.

"Two in a row over the league leaders can help us out. They've been treating us like stepchildren," Parker said. The two teams meet again tonight for the finale of a three-game series.

The Reds had been behind the whole game and didn't get their first hit until a solo home run in the sixth inning.

Houston starter Mike Scott, who kept the Reds hitless through five innings, tired and left the game in the ninth with a three-hitter, leading 2-1.

Then, with one out in the ninth, Parker singled and Davis hit his homer.

"Scott told me after the eighth inning that he was tiring," said Astros Manager Hal Lanier. "After he struck out Pete Rose to lead off the ninth inning he told me he had given everything. I didn't hesitate to take him out."

Then Lanier brought in his bullpen ace, right-handed Dave Smith, who has 16 saves.

"Even if DiPino had gotten Parker out, I would have made the same move," said Lanier. "Smith's the best reliever in the league and it was his time. I don't care if everyone second guesses that move."

"The first pitch by Smith was fastball and then he came in with a forkball. It was up, and Davis caught up with it quick with a nice, easy swing."

Cornelsen, Lady Harvesters honored

Pampa High Track Coach Gary Cornelsen and four of his Lady Harvesters were among 51 athletes and coaches honored for their May performances by the Amarillo Chamber of Commerence Sports Committee.

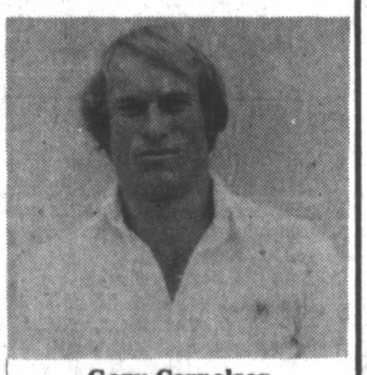

The Pampa group was honored during the Amarillo Chamber's monthly awards luncheon at the Holiday Inn. Cornelsen led the Lady Harvesters to the Class 4A state track championship this year. The 400-meter relay team of Yolanda Brown, Courtney Brown, Sandee Stokes and Tanya Lidy won with a time of 47.8. Lidy, a sophomore, also won the 200-meter dash with a time of 24.1.

Other state qualifiers from Pampa were Laquita Brown, Schivonne Parker and Andrea Hopkins. Tonya DeArman, a freshman, went to state as an alternate. Laquita Brown and Parker were members of the 800-relay team along with Courtney Brown and Yolanda Brown that placed third at state. Hopkins placed second in the discus.

Pampa never lost a meet all season long and won the state meet by a six-point margin over Brenham. It was the first state championship for a Pampa girls' team in any sport. Laquita Brown, Yolanda Brown, Parker, Hopkins, along with Lidy, return to boost Pampa's chances for a second consecutive state championship.

Most of those honored by the Amarillo Chamber were state champions.

Former Pampa Assistant Football Coach Ron Pinckard was also honored for leading his Booker girls' golf team to the Class 1A state title. Booker shot a 36-hole total of 839 to win the championship while Flatonia finished second with an 843.

Gary Cornelsen

Both the Clayton boys and girls won the New Mexico state track titles. Coaches honored were Miles Watters for the boys and Phil Ehly for the girls.

Coach Barry Haenisch guided his Gruver High School boys' track team to the Class 1A state championship. Gruver nipped Calvert, 42-40, for the title.

University Interscholastic League comes down hard on team

AUSTIN (AP) — The University Interscholastic League has stripped the Class 2A state golf championship from Weimar for violating a UIL rule despite pleas from the players' parents, including one couple who said the coach had always played by the book.

The UIL state executive committee Wednesday also disqualified 3A golf runner-up Abilene Wylie and called for a statewide study of alleged widespread violations of UIL golf rules.

UIL director Bailey Marshall said Weimar would have to forfeit its championship trophy and medals. He said the second-place team, Stanton, would be declared champion.

In 3A, Devine would advance from third to runner-up to replace Wylie.

The UIL executive committee disqualified Weimar on a finding that its team, with the exception of one player, had violated a league rule by playing a practice round on the Colony Creek Country Club Golf Course at Victoria on Sunday, April 20, prior to the regional tournament on Monday.

The coach, Jack Kroll, who drove the team to the course on the school bus, was given a public reprimand and was placed on one-year probation.

"There were probably 10 other teams practicing at the same time we were practicing," said Kroll. "If there was a violation, it was in complete ignorance, and it's my fault."

Weimar Superintendent Wayne Wise testified, "There was no intent on anybody's part to violate a particular policy."

Frank and Genie Kainer, the parents of a team member, wrote that Kroll was "an excellent coach who always stayed within the rules."

Wise said in a May 19 letter to the UIL, "Coach Kroll has been in the coaching profession for 27 years, and to my knowledge, he has never knowingly violated a UIL rule or policy."

Abilene Wylie was disqualified for playing at its regional site, the Mission Country Club Course in Odessa, on Sunday, April 20, eight days before the tournament, and also was disqualified for playing the course again on Sunday, April 27.

The UIL executive committee ruled May 7 that any school prior to regional competition which played more than 18 holes at the regional site or practiced on Sunday at the regional site should forfeit.

A motion to issue a private reprimand of Wylie golf coach Terry Lambert, which is the minimum penalty, failed on a 2-2 vote with one committee member abstaining.

Lambert said the first practice round came about when a parent drove the golf team to Odessa and he did not accompany the team. He added that he had been advised by the regional director that it would not be a violation if the team members used their own equipment.

Lambert said of the 32 teams in Wylie's region, "only one did I not see at the regional site on Sunday (April 27). Sunday practice was violated by everyone at the regional except one, and they may have."

"We've got a mess, to say the least," said UIL committee member James Havard.

Committee member Lynn Anderson called for a statewide study of compliance with UIL golf rules after citing "alleged and apparent random and wholesale violations." His motion was approved without objection.

The study would include consideration of revising the rule, the committee agreed.

In yet another golf ruling, the UIL committee dismissed a case in which Liberty Hill Principal-Athletic Director Charles Braun turned in his golf team for playing a Sunday practice round prior to regional at Victoria.

"Our league is going to be strong only if schools who do commit violations turn themselves in," Braun told the committee. "I know of a number of schools who did not report themselves."

Liberty Hill did not qualify for the state tournament so the ruling had no effect on the state tournament results.

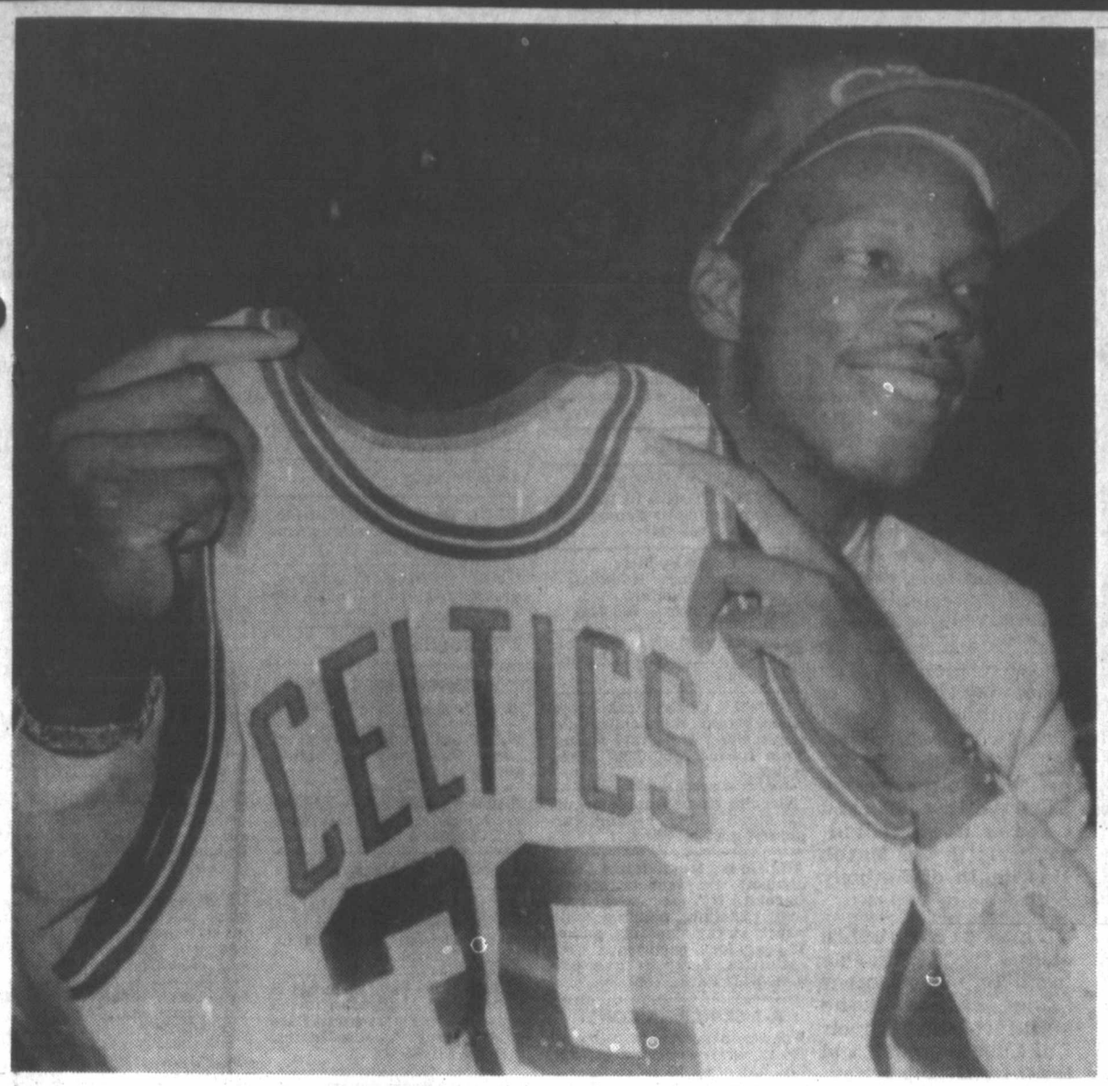

In other action Wednesday, the UIL committee:

— Placed Dallas South Oak Cliff track coach Leonard Grant and SOC football coach Edmond Peters on one-year probation for allegedly verbally abusing the referee at the Region II-5A track and field meet at Mesquite May 3. The coaches also will be given public reprimands.

Referee Pat Mitchell said the incident occurred after he had overruled a protest by Grant, who claimed his fourth runner on the 1,600-meter relay had been fouled by a runner from Texarkana.

Athletic Director John Kincaide of the Dallas Independent School District said his investigation of the incident showed that the "environment had been damaged, and the coaches were guilty of damaging that environment."

However, Kincaide said, "It was not an eyeball-to-eyeball confrontation."

"The Vulture" strikes as Spain shocks Denmark

MEXICO CITY (AP) — He came swooping in from nowhere. He pounced on loose balls, sped to waiting passes, outmaneuvered the opposition at every turn.

"The Vulture" had struck.

Emilio Butragueno scored four times Wednesday, tying a World Cup record for goals in a game, leading Spain to a 5-1 romp past previously unbeaten Denmark and into the quarterfinals. It was the ninth four-goal game in the World Cup's 56-year history and first since Eusebio accomnplished the feat for Portugal in 1966 against North Korea.

Spain joined England, which downed Paraguay 3-0, in the final eight. The Spanish will play Belgium in Puebla on Sunday, while England takes on Argentina in Mexico City in their first major sporting encounter since the 1982 Falklands war.

The other games feature host Mexico against West Germany in Monterrey and Brazil playing France in Guadalajara, both on Saturday.

Butragueno, the 22-year-old striker from the Real Madrid soccer club, personally demolished the dreams of Denmark, which had recorded a 9-1 goal differential in three first-round victories. The Danes, making their World Cup debut, had become one of the glamour teams of the tournament.

But Butragueno removed much of their shine.

"Four years ago when I started professional soccer, I never dreamed I would achieve what I achieved today," he said. "This has been the most important day of my career."

Italy may be losing two key performers from the national team — Coach Enzo Bearzot and striker Sandro Altobelli, who had four goals in the World Cup.

The 58-year-old Bearzot said Wednesday he had been offered a position with the Italian Soccer Federation which would put him in charge of all the country's teams. He has a contract through 1990, when the Cup will be held in Italy.

Bearzot coached the team to fourth place in the 1978 World Cup and to the championship in 1982. His 11-year tenure is the longest of any coach in the 1986 tournament.

Altobelli cited family problems for wanting to quit the squad.

Floyd another super oldster

ATLANTA (AP) — Ray Floyd doesn't mind being referred to as another of the oldtimers to win a major sports event in 1986.

"I'm very honored to be mentioned in the same context with those fellows," Floyd said Wednesday during a news conference on the eve of the $500,000 Georgia-Pacific Atlanta Golf Classic.

Floyd, 43, became the oldest player ever to win the U.S. Open when he shot a 4-under-par 66 last Sunday at tough Shinnecock Hills course on Long Island.

It made him another big winner among sports' figures supposedly in the twilight of their career who have come up big this year — joining Masters champion Jack Nicklaus, 46, Kentucky Derby winner Willie Shoemaker, 56, and Winston 500 race winner Bobby Allison, 48.

"Professional sport is a young man's game," Floyd said. "You're at your best when you're young. For me to still be competitive at my age is a rewarding thing for me."

The fourth major title of his 24-year career thrust Floyd into the favorite's role in the Atlanta event, one that has drawn a surprisingly strong field for a tournament held the week after a major championship.

The season's top four money winners are in the field of 156, and seven of the top nine money earners will compete on the hilly, 7,007-yard, par 72 Atlanta Country Club course beginning today.

Floyd won his first major title in 1969 — the PGA. He added a Masters title in 1976 and a second PGA crown in 1982.

The only major missing from Floyd's list of achievements is the British Open.

"The premium was on the U.S. Open and the British," Floyd said. "Now the premium would definitely be on the British."

The 1986 British Open will be held at Turnberry, Scotland, July 17-20.

Floyd's major competition in Atlanta is expected to come from the top four money winners — Greg Norman, Andy Bean, Bob Tway and Hal Sutton, each have already won two events this year.

Another two-time winner this year is Calvin Peete, who won in Atlanta in 1983. Wayne Levi is back to defend the title he won last year.

Celtics' draft choice dies of apparent heart attack

RIVERDALE, Md. (AP) — Len Bias, the 22-year-old University of Maryland basketball star drafted Tuesday by the National Basketball Association's Boston Celtics, died suddenly early today after suffering an apparent heart attack, a hospital official said.

Bias was brought to Leland Memorial Hospital, outside Washington, at 6:50 a.m. after suffering cardio-respiratory arrest, said Frank Berry, a spokesman at Leland Memorial Hospital. He was pronounced dead at 8:50 a.m.

Bias was brought to the hospital in an ambulance, said Berry.

Jack Zane, the University of Maryland's sports information officer, said Bias was stricken ill at his campus dormitory. He said his teammates summoned help.

Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell and members of the team also went to the hospital, Zane said.

Bias was the second man chosen in the first round of the NBA draft.

A two-time Atlantic Coast Conference Player of the Year for Maryland, the 6-foot-8 forward averaged 23.2 points during his senior, All-American season.

Shortly after the draft Tuesday, Bias, and his father, James, left New York for Boston and a chance to meet the Celtics media. The trip forced postponement of a celebration party for Bias and his family at their Landover home.

Bias is the third University of Maryland basketball player to die suddenly, either while still a student or shortly after graduating, in about the last 12 years, Zane said.

In 1974, about a year after he graduated, Owen Brown died while playing in a pickup game. Also during the mid-1970s, Chris Patton, while still enrolled at Maryland, died after being stricken ill while playing basketball near Byrd Stadium, said Zane. Both were found to be suffering from Marfans Syndrome.

Only one Maryland basketball player had ever been drafted higher than Bias. John Lucas was the No. 1 player taken in 1976 by the Houston Rockets.

Bias was brought to the hospital in an ambulance, said Berry, who could provide no other details about the circumstances leading to the sudden illness.

Hospital officials said they did not know where the ambulance had picked him up.

Bias was the second man chosen in the first round of the NBA draft.

Aguirre happy to be a Maverick

DALLAS (AP) — Mavericks' forward Mark Aguirre, apparently close to being traded to the Los Angeles Lakers on NBA draft day, says he is just as happy to stay in Dallas.

"I love Dallas and I'd love to keep on playing here," Aguirre said. "I hope we play the running kind of game we did against Los Angeles in the playoffs. I feel that type of game is more suited to me."

Aguirre was at Reunion Arena, headquarters for the Mavericks, for Tuesday's draft and was aware of the rumors that Los Angeles was engineering a deal.

The hottest rumor would have sent Aguirre and power forward Roy Tarpley, drafted seventh by the Mavericks, for forward James Worthy and either Michael Cooper or Byron Scott.

"I'm sorry there is no trade announcements," said Dallas personnel director Rick Sund. "There have been a lot of rumors floating around with no validity."

Aguirre himself fueled speculation.

"I heard from an inside source that the Lakers are really interested," he said. "I talked with Magic (Johnson) the day before. He's actually pushing it quite a bit."

Aguirre, who is a longtime friend of Johnson's, said he wouldn't mind playing with the Lakers. "Who wouldn't? I'd like to play with Magic. He would love to play with me.

"But if I could stay here with no problems, I'd like to stay here."

Aguirre, the Mavericks' star scorer, has been at odds with Coach Dick Motta at times and a trade would surprise few who follow the team.

"There's a conflict of styles," Aguirre said. "I can fit in any style but there comes a point where talent level comes into play.

"And right now that talent is dormant. I have to be allowed to show that talent."

He says a trade still is possible.

"As hard as they seemed to be trying, it looked like it might happen," he said. "There are times when I think Dallas will deal me. Of all the teams they could deal me to, the Lakers would be a good place for me to go."

He said he's taking a weight-training class and doing a lot of running to be ready for a quick start next season.

"That way, if I'm here people won't be upset with me. And if I'm not my new team will be pleased."

No matter what happens, he said, he bears no resentment toward the Mavericks.

"It would be hard to leave here," he said. "But if they think that trading me will help them get better, I can't blame them."

Rangers trade Wright

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Texas Rangers General Manager Tom Grieve says the team has traded outfielder George Wright to the Montreal Expos for a player to be named later.

Grieve said a dropped fly ball in the crucial ninth inning of Charlie Hough's no-hitter bid against California Monday night had nothing to do with the trade. The three-base error put the Angels' runs on base and the Rangers wound losing, 2-1.

Pierce leads barrel racing

Barrel racer Kimbra Pierce of Miami won the first two go-rounds in the Texas High School Rodeo at Seguin. Miss Pierce's time was 15.815 in the first go-round and 15.185 the second go-round.

Drew Johnson of Wheeler was third in the first go-round in boys' tie-down calf roping with a time of 12.432. He failed to finish among the top four in the second go-round.

Clay Harris of Amarillo was second in bull riding in the first go-round with 62 points, but failed to qualify in the second go-round.

Dean Greene of Spearman won the second go-round in boys' tie-down calf roping with a time of 9.485.

The rodeo continues through Saturday with the top four finishers in each event advancing to the nationals in Rapid City, S.D.

Six apply for Pampa High basketball post

Six applications have been received for the head basketball coaching job at Pampa High School, Superintendent James Trusty announced today.

Trusty said the names would have be kept confidential until the vacancy was fulfilled.

"It wouldn't be fair for others who may want the job to release these names," he added.

The Pampa head coaching job became available when Garland Nichols resigned to accept a similar position at South Garland.

"We're anxious to fill this position, but we have no set deadline on filling it yet," Trusty said.

Trusty and Pampa Athletic Director John Kendall are currently examining the credentials of the applicants and will pass on their recommendations to the Pampa School Board.

"The next opportunity to fill the position will be at our July 15 board meeting, but we may not be able to make a recommendation by then," Trusty added.

Kimbra Pierce of Miami has won the first two go-rounds in the barrel racing event at the Texas High School Rodeo in Sequin. (Staff Photo)

ANTI -WALDHEIM DEMONSTRATION — An unidentified demonstrator wearing a Nazi officer uniform is arrested by plainclothes policemen Wednesday ouside the Austrian Embassy in Paris. The banner associates newly-elected Austrian President Kurt Waldheim with accused Nazi war criminal Klaus Barbee, known as the "butcher of Lyon." The man and approximately ten others were arrested and released later. Swastikas were painted on the embassy building by the group. (AP Laserphoto)

Waco doctor's 'babies' may be retired before he does

By LYNN BULMAHN
Waco Tribune-Herald

WACO, Texas (AP) — Back in 1926, the newly-graduated Dr. Hannibal L. "Joe" Jaworski often got night-time calls to pinch-deliver babies for other, drowsier doctors.

"Many times, the wives of the older dotors would call me to say I was needed to deliver a baby while their husbands were delivering another baby — but really, they were sleeping," Jaworski said. "I'd deliver in the country, in the little side streets. Often, the grandmother was giving the chloroform, and I delivered the baby by the light of a coal oil lamp."

Now, after six decades, it's a pretty solid bet that some of the babies he delivered under the kerosene glow will retire before he does. Still steady of hand at 84, Jaworski keeps his office open for patients half of each day and assists surgeons in their operations. Although he no longer operates on patients himself, other doctors often call him for consultations.

Known as "Dr. Joe" to thousands of patients, Jaworski began his medical career in Waco after graduating from Baylor College of Medicine in Dallas on May 31, 1926.

The following day, he began work as an intern at Central Texas Baptist Hospital, now Hillcrest Baptist Medical Center. With him came a caring attitude and a penchant for innovation.

His philosophy of "be good to my patients, be honest with them and do the best I can" led him to:

— Help test penicillin on wounded soldiers in World War II. He remembers giving a patient what is now considered a tiny dose of penicillin — and staying up all night worrying, afraid the drug would kill the patient.

— Setting up the construction of surgical instruments to assist doctors in the first "blue baby" operations.

— Becoming the first local doctor to use an electrocardiogram.

— Becoming one of the first physicians to perform a Caesarean section — a procedure frowned upon at the time.

"They told me if I couldn't deliver babies in the 'normal' way, not to do it," Jaworski said. "They said if the baby died at birth that was the way the Lord intended it."

— Developing in 1937 the surgical technique of modified mastectomies as teatment for breast cancer. The technique is still in use, he said.

Jaworski went into medicine at the persuasion of his father, a minister who came to the United States from Germany when Jaworski was a baby.

Jaworski's late brother, Leon — who grew up to gain national fame as the Watergate prosecutor — originally wanted to be a doctor. The boys' father wanted them to practice together.

Before deciding on a career, "Joe" Jaworski tested himself in a hospital job to "see if I could stand the blood."

The nickname "Joe" was inherited from the orderly — named Joe — he replaced on that first job. His supervisor began calling Jaworski "Joe" — and it stuck.

"I was later Dr. Joe when I came back with my medical degree, Col. Joe in the Army, and Bwana Joe when I went game hunting," Jaworski said. "Half of my patients don't know my first name."

After his internship, he worked as a junior surgeon, one of several who "worked ourselves to death" for $100 a month.

The going rate for office calls was $1, house calls $1.50. "We got paid for very few of them," he said.

In 1929, he left Waco for postgraduate work in New York.

"Many surgeons advised us young doctors to go to Vienna, if only for a few months, and observe the surgical procedures. Vienna at the time was the center of surgery, as America is now."

Jaworski studied in Vienna and later in other European cities, before returning to Waco.

In 1942, Jaworski volunteered for Army medical service. "I was told by Selective Service here that I was not necessarily eligible," he said. "I was 40 years old and had the largest practice in Waco."

During the war, he supervised McCloskey General Hospital in Temple as director of surgical service.

"At the time, McCloskey was considered one of the largest Army hospitals with outstanding service to World War II casualties," he said.

Jaworski was transferred to the Philippines to set up hospitals in preparation for the anticipated American invasion of Japan. Doctors were told to expect 1 million casualties, but the invasion was canceled with the dropping of the atomic bomb.

When the war ended, Jaworski returned to set up practice in Waco, but he didn't stop seeing action.

New neighbors shun 'terrified' label; want to ask Mark Thatcher to tea

DALLAS (AP) — Countering their ugly label in the British press as "terrified Texans," the newest neighbors of Mark Thatcher want to invite the son of the British prime minister to tea.

Ruby Beene, assistant manager of the condominium complex where Thatcher recently moved, said there has been "very little" support for a memo circulated by one resident who said Thatcher should be forced out because he was a terrorist target and posed a threat to his neighbors.

"Most of it's (the reaction) the other way," she said Wednesday. "They would like to invite him to tea."

She later amended that: "They said if he's here, they want to invite him to tea."

Ms. Beene said she couldn't verify that Thatcher actually lives in the luxury high-rise. "We have nothing official," she said, although one unidentified resident said management had confirmed Thatcher lived there.

Thatcher was evicted from one Dallas apartment where his landlords said they couldn't protect him from terrorist threats that followed the U.S. bombing of Libya, which garnered the support of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

After his move into a condominium complex, one of the residents last week circulated a memo to neighbors asking them to urge management to force him out again because his protection by the U.S. State Department doesn't extend to other residents.

News of the memo prompted former U.S. Sen. John Tower to say the fearful resident made Texans look like "a bunch of yellow-bellies."

"This reads bad back in London," he said.

In a Monday story, the tabloid London Daily Mail said, "Mark Thatcher is being hounded from his home for the second time by terrified TEXANS."

With the label of "chicken Americans" already flying from the British press, America's most macho state was suddenly at risk of being branded a wimp.

A Houston newspaper, in an effort to distinguish Houston from Dallas, invited Thatcher to move to Houston.

"The son of the British prime minister would find a welcome at a number of Houston apartments," the Houston Post said. "And in Houston he would see the real Texas, not a TV-show clone."

Tom Lewis, vice president of economic development for the Dallas Chamber of Commerce, commented, "That's interesting. If he lived in Houston, maybe he would have the same problem. When you say problem, it's obviously a few people."

One of Thatcher's new neighbors, in fact, said he threw away the memo calling for Thatcher's eviction.

"I felt, and most everyone in the (condominium) office felt, that it was ridiculous. It seemed so high school," said the resident who was walking his dog outside the well'secured building. He declined to give his name.

Former U.S. Ambassador Richard Rubottom, director of Dallas' Office of International Affairs, said he doubts Dallas' image will be permanently stained.

"I seriously question whether that is the case. I think this is regrettable, but almost inevitable in view of the media attention given Mark Thatcher," he said.

"It also shows that personal security and public security interests don't always coincide. But above all, it shows all of us become involved whether we like it or not," said Rubottom, who has served in several international posts, including U.S. ambassador to Argentina.

Added Lewis: "I guess this is something that's new to probably all Texans, this terrorism situation."

Defense points at another defendant

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — Defense attorneys in the organized crime trial of three men have tried to point the finger at a fourth man also facing the same charges but awaiting separate trial.

Attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes told the court he was trying to show Mark Hamilton was predisposed to violence and was the "active aggressor" in torture sessions that led to the death of an Alabama drifter.

Hamilton is charged along with Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., 55; his son Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., 33; and Carlton Robert Caldwell, 21; in the March 1984 death of Anthony Bates.

The prosecution claims the Ellebrachts lured Bates and other hitchhikers with the promise of work to their Hill Country ranch and then forced them to stay.

The state also alleges Bates was tortured to death with a cattle prod, then his body burned.

The defendants are charged with conspiring to commit aggravated kidnapping and murder in connection with Bates' death.

The defense Wednesday called Sheri Hamilton, Mark Hamilton's wife, who denied her husband is violent.

But she admitted under further questioning "when he gets mad, he threatens me."

Mrs. Hamilton, who earlier testified for the prosecution, told the court she had seen her husband use a cattle prod on Bates.

She said he also told her he had helped burn Bates' body.
