Plans could take Reagan to the summit

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, host to next week's summit of the world's major industrial democracies, may gain politically from being at the center of an international stage. But administration officials are aware a poorly-run summit could cost him dearly.

The president's aides have been preparing for the meeting in Williamsburg, Va., for nearly six months, and Reagan will spend most of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday in pre-summit briefings.

But there is concern that White House and State Department hopes for the conference could be skewed by serious differences among the participants, particularly over the U.S. budget deficit. Concern about the deficit is strong among leaders of the guest nations, since they contend it tends to push up interest rates, which in turn tends to raise the value of the dollar against other currences.

It was just a year ago, at the start of the summit conference in Versailles, France, that Reagan said he would succeed in reducing the federal deficit over the next three years "with a balanced budget in sight." Instead, estimates of the deficit have ballooned to the vicinity of $200 billion a year.

White House and State Department officials say that while the summit can have a short-lived impact on the president's political standing, the lasting impact can only come if the meeting improves the nation's economic picture.

"The history of economic summits is that they've only had a modest impact on the political standing of presidents," said David R. Gergen, Reagan's assistant for communications.

"The summit, over the Memorial Day weekend, will not be a spectacle for a lot of people," he said. "They won't be watching every night" on television.

But, he said, "if the summit explodes, that is harmful."

"The summit will focus on the U.S. president," said Henry Owen, who represented the United States at summit preparation conferences during the Carter administration. He said that the results of the meetings will be "largely in response to what the U.S. president says and does."

About eight more tornadoes trouble Texas

'Super' storm spars with weather-weary Southeast

HOUSTON (AP) — Tornadoes, hail, heavy rains and howling winds pummeled Southeast Texas for a second day Saturday, forcing at least 600 people to flee rising flood waters and hampering efforts to clean up destruction called the worst in more than two decades.

Residents in the six-county area in and around the nation's fifth largest city were granted a brief respite after waves of tornadoes ravaged the area Friday, claiming at least 10 lives and injuring at least 100, leaving as many as 1,000 families homeless and about 200,000 without electricity.

On Saturday, a third storm system spewed at least eight tornadoes as it marched eastward across the region. The system dumped rain and one-inch hail on swollen rivers and saturated ground.

The National Weather Service said the storm system moved into Louisiana Saturday evening, leaving lingering clouds but ending the threat of additional tornadoes and heavy rains that already have caused creeks and rivers to overflow.

"The worst is over," said NWS spokesman Bob Fields. "There may be some clouds and a few light sprinkles through the night, but no more. The front has shifted and moved into Louisiana and eastward."

Harris County authorities left intact flood warnings for people living in low-lying areas of Houston.

NWS meteorologist Steve Harned estimated Lake Houston would crest three-to five-feet above flood stage on Sunday and threaten residents in the Channelview and Lynchburg suburbs through Monday.

Civil defense officials urged residents to evacuate the area.

"That water will go right down the San Jacinto River. There are several thousand people in that area and we're advising them to get out while they still can," said John Caswell of the Houston-Harris County Civil Defense office.

Three tornadoes dipped out of the black skies near Sealy and Bellville in Austin County, west of Houston.

Two were spotted near Houston Intercontinental Airport, while one touched down in a open field in west Houston and another popped out of the sky west of downtown Houston.

In Port Arthur, a tornado was sited near Sour Lake but apparently did no damage.

The twisters retreated to the clouds without causing any damage or injuries, authorities said.

In Central Texas, tornadoes touched down near Gonzales and Northrup, where a woman was injured, and near Dublin and Gorman.

"My husband told me to take a vacation, get away and relax. So what do I do, I come to tornado country," said Linda Rolls of Reno, Nev., waiting in a Port Arthur airport terminal for a flight to Austin.

In Montgomery County, at least 500 people were evacuated from five subdivisions near the San Jacinto River and Caney and Peach creeks, said Nancy Mayes, civil defense director. Many homes had from one inch to five feet of water, said County Judge Jimmie Edwards.

The county has been the hardest hit by the storms, with two people killed and at least 350 homes and dozens of businesses damaged or destroyed.

"We have water in the homes and the river and creeks still rising. But we don't know how extensive the damage is or will be. We're still in the middle of a storm," she said.

Workers used boats and four-wheel drive vehicles to rescue residents in the threatened areas. But some refused to leave their homes, even though creeks swelled as deep as 20 feet over some county roads, said J. McDougal of the county constable's office.

"We've got several families over in east county that won't leave," McDougal said. "We've been telling them, 'OK, give me your name, date of birth and next of kin so we can notify them when we find your body.'"

About 100 people near Beaumont were evacuated as Hilldebrandt Bayou spilled from its banks, said Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman David Wells.

Authorities have made no estimates of damage, but Caswell predicted the destruction would be among the highest ever recorded.

"I was here for Hurricane Carla in 1961, and we have more damage already," Caswell said. When the hurricane slammed into the Texas coast, it killed 34 people and caused about $400 million in damage.

In parts of Houston, the sun briefly broke through the clouds about midday. Residents grabbed power saws and rakes and started cleaning up the rubble left by Friday's storms, which reduced mobile homes to splinters, snapped trees 2 feet wide, lifted roofs from homes, apartment building and one hospital in Port Arthur and mangled planes and hangars at two small airports.

"I drove over here with my mouth open all the way. I've never seen so much destruction," said Bob Hargrove as he and his wife, Betty picked up the pieces of their doughnut shop in north Houston.

Weather service hydrologist Russell Pfost said, "It's a very grave situation. Things are looking worse."

More heavy rains could raise the Pearl later this week to near the record 43.28 feet reached in a devastating 1979 flood. No one knew how flood plain construction and channel clearing since then might affect river levels in low-lying neighborhoods.

At least 1,100 people were forced to flee from their homes near the Yazoo River where it meets the Mississippi at Vicksburg, Civil Defense Director Luther Warnock said.

Between 4 and 8 inches of rain fell on Texas in the 24 hours ending at 9 a.m. Saturday. Flooding closed highways in three Texas counties — Caldwell, Comal and Fayette.

Flooded roads had cleared in Louisiana, state police Sgt. Donald Darcade said, but he added that the ground remained saturated and fresh rain would likely mean new flooding. "It would happen all over again," he said.

About 60,000 people in the Houston area were without electricity, down from 200,000.

In central Louisiana, a man drowned Saturday when his horse lost its footing while trying to cross a flooded roadway.

Another man drowned Saturday in Tennessee when he fell trying to get into a boat near his flooded home along the Obion River in the community of Bogota. His death brought to 26 the number of people who have died in storms across the Southeast since Wednesday.

In Memphis, Tenn., two men were in stable condition Saturday after they were struck by lightning while standing under a golf course tree waiting for rain to end.

As the vicious winds blew through Louisiana, they damaged schools, homes and barns. Friday night twisters cut through Chicot State Park and at Pine Prairie, but the damage was apparently confined to woods.

The weather service on Saturday issued a tornado watch for most of central and southeast Texas and 34 parishes in Louisiana, saying another "super" storm cell was in the area.

Flash flood watches were posted for much of Texas, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Kentucky and for all of Louisiana.

Louisiana shut down two ferries Saturday because Mississippi River water had covered their landings, and U.S. Army Corps of Engineers opened more gates at the Bonnet Carre Spillway to drain water from the swollen river.

In Jackson, Miss., jittery residents flocked to truck rental outlets as the rising Pearl River prompted evacuation warnings and a state of emergency was declared in the state capital.

The Pearl was forecast to reach 38 to 40 feet over the weekend, a level 10 to 12 feet above flood stage that would flood scores of Jackson streets.

Another "super" storm bore down on the Southeast on Saturday, pounding neighborhoods with hail and flooding highways while unleashing more tornadoes on Texans already reeling from a double punch that killed 10 people.

From Oklahoma to the Carolinas, relentless rains gorged rivers, while in Louisiana bayous overflowed. Hundreds were forced to flee their homes. In Mississippi, where the rising Pearl River threatened to match a 1979 record flood, a National Weather Service official called conditions "very grave."

Eleven tornadoes drilled through the dark Texas clouds early Saturday, including two that passed near Houston Intercontinental Airport, and authorities were trying to confirm other reported sightings in the early afternoon.

A twister also struck a vacant lot in the southwestern Louisiana town of Carlyss, but caused no damage or injuries.

Midland mothers organizing local Reye's Syndrome group

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Thirteen years ago it was difficult for Marilyn Ankeney to find any information about the "mystery" disease that killed her son.

Saturday night Ms. Ankeney — now the National Reye's Syndrome Foundation (NRSF) vice president for the southern region — traveled from Florida to help Midlanders Selita Wilson and Annel Creech inform people about the disease.

The two Midland women conducted an organizational meeting Saturday for a Reye's Sydrome chapter in Midland. They plan to schedule another meeting for officer elections within the next two weeks.

The NRSF, organized in 1974, provides awareness, research and support for the children's disease which primarily affects the liver and brain. Until recently, it was almost always fatal.

Incorporated in Bryan, Ohio, there are now 112 NRSF chapters in 35 states and a full-time executive director in Washington D.C.

Reye's Syndrome also has affected Ms. Wilson and Ms. Creech's lives. While Ms. Wilson's 18-month-old daughter survived the disease, Ms. Creech lost her 7-year-old son in April.

According to the NRSF, Reye's Syndrome afflicts children from infancy to about 19 years old. It is the second leading cause of viral-associated encephalopathy and death in children. Also, Reye's Syndrome is one of the 10 major causes of death in children 1 to 10 years old.

While the cause is unknown, scientists do know that the disease is not contagious. It has been seen most often following viral infections caused by the flu and chicken pox during the months of January, February and March.

Ms. Ankeney told the group of about 25 interested persons at the Sandpiper Inn there are few guidelines to start a chapter.

"Basically, you're free to do as you choose," she said. "The main function of the chapter is to make people aware of Reye's Syndrome and raise funds for research."

She said the foundation would provide 5,000 brochures and collection cans to begin the chapter. Additionally, materials — written specifically for physicians, health professionals — are available.

Ms. Ankeney said three slide presentations are available for chapters to provide to physicians, health professionals and the public.

"I think when the physicians see our information, which is professionally done, it gives a great deal of credibility to the chapter," Ms. Ankeney said.

Milk production down 6 percent

AUSTIN — Texas dairymen in April produced 352 million pounds of milk, which is down 4 percent from the March total but which is up 6 percent from January.

The number of milk cows — 335,000 — was unchanged from March, according to the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service, but production per cow dropped 40 pounds to 1,050 pounds per head.

U.S. milk production in April totaled 11.9 billion pounds; average output per cow was 1,078 pounds.

Insured cotton deadline June 10

SAN ANGELO — The final planting date for insured cotton in Midland, Glasscock, Reagan and Upton counties is June 10, says Marcus Kocich, district director for the Federal Crop Insurance Corp. (FCIC).

"Acres of cotton initially planted by June 10, insured by FCIC (or by a private company reinsured by FCIC), must be reported by June 30 to receive full insurance coverage," says Kocich.

Acreage planted after May 31 also must be reported by the June 30 acreage report as being planted too late for insurance.

"Farmers unable to plant prior to June 10 because of excess moisture conditions may sign a 20-day late planting agreement, which permits insurance coverage but provides for a lower pound-per-acre guarantee due to the late planting," he says.

Cotton farmers seek 'Son of PIK'

LUBBOCK — Only a couple of years ago, Payment In Kind (PIK) was the talk of the cotton industry, says the Lubbock-based Plains Cotton Growers (PCG). Today, it's "Son of PIK."

That phrase is applied to the bid procedure launched by the U.S. Department of Agriculture to make up for the shortfall of government-owned grain and cotton commodities needed to meet PIK commitments.

Under the PIK program, USDA committed itself to give participating farmers a specified amount of cotton or grain out of government-owned stocks in return for producer agreements to idle up to 50 percent of the acreage they otherwise would have planted in that crop. As it turned out, the government did not hold title to enough corn, wheat or cotton to fulfill its obligations.

Thereupon, the term "Son of PIK" was born.

There is no shortage of cotton to meet domestic and export market requirements, says PCG. Commodity Credit Corp. has in storage a more than adequate supply to fill both market and PIK requirements. But farmers, not the government, own much of this cotton, which is held by CCC as collateral for 10-month non-recourse loans and can't be used by the government for PIK requirements until those loans either expire or are forfeited.

EARNEST KIKER

Landscape trees should be watered

Our office has had recent requests for information concerning the irrigation of newly planted landscape trees. It is of utmost importance to provide adequate water to these trees. Bareroot, container-grown and balled and burlapped plantings must have their root zone thoroughly moistened at frequent intervals after transplanting.

Irrigation frequency and the total volume of water applied depend on the size of the root ball, soil type, weather and foliage production. Clay soils retain moisture and would require less frequent irrigation than sandy soils where the water leaches amd moves away freely. Temperatures above 70 degrees with high winds dictate more frequent water applications. The water must be applied to the entire root mass and beyond. Irrigating only the immediate trunk area of the tree is a poor practice. The root hairs (feeder roots, absorptive roots or whatever you choose to call them) are also growing at the edges of the root mass of newly transplanted trees and beyond the dripline of older established trees. Water must be applied to sufficiently wet the soil to a depth of two feet or more. As leaves and limbs grow, the tree requires more water.

Trees in West Texas require water in addition to that received from lawn irrigation. Deep, thorough waterings applied to the root hair zone of absorption result in healthy trees.

EXAMPLE: "I recenly planted Afghan pines at my home. Their root balls were one foot by one foot, tops were 3-4 feet and the soil is clay. They require weekly irrigations from a slow-running water hose. Total volume of water applied per tree is near 20 gallons. This moistens the root zone to a sufficient depth and lateral distance from the trunk. The pines are doing well and I plan to increase the soaking time as the summer progresses. If I had sandy soil, I would water twice a week."

The same method will work for pecans, fruits, shrubs, oaks, ground covers and hedges because the principles of root growth and water absorption are similar.

Pecan growrs in Midland County, as well as homeowners with backyard trees, need to be on the lookout for casebearers — those perennial pests that can destroy a pecan crop if not controlled.

Based on various prediction models, as well as trappings and scouting reports, casebearers should be showing up on pecan trees in Midland County this week.

Because of cooler spring temperatures, the casebearer is emerging a little later than normal this year. Normally, casebearers damage nuts within a two week period in May, from the first week of May in southern and coastal areas to the last week of the month in northern sections.

Based on these prediction models, which were obtained by using real time temperatures to the present and substituting average temperatures into the future until development requirements were satisfied, indicate "10 percent male emergence" in Midland County on May 23, with "first signigicant nut entry" on June 1.

To time stray applications for casebearer control, first check for eggs on a daily basis. Eggs usually are found on the tips of nutlets and are about the size of the ball in a ballpoint pen. The eggs are white when first laid, turn red over a three- to five-day period and turn white again after they hatch. Apply insecticide the third day after the first egg hatches, killing the larvae before they enter the nutlets. Since the larvae will hatch over a week-long period, a second spraying is advised.

Insecticides recommended for casebearer control include diazinon, Guthion, Pydrin, malathion and Zolone.

Persons interested in establishing an adult horse club are invited to attend.

Britain's major parties differ starkly on defense policies

By DAVID MASON

LONDON (AP) — Nowhere in their general election platforms do Britain's two major parties differ more starkly than on defense and Britain's relationship with the rest of Europe.

Should Labor win the right to form a government following the June 9 parliamentary elections, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and Europe could be in for significant adjustments.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservatives favor modern nuclear defenses and want Britain to remain a member of the 10-nation European Economic Community, or Common Market.

Michael Foot's Labor Party, running well behind the Conservative Party in the opinion polls, wants to scrap the British nuclear force and says Britain should pull out of the Common Market.

The Labor platform, however, includes enough qualifying phrases to cushion any overnight shock waves should the Conservatives lose the June vote.

The Liberal-Social Democratic Party Alliance, running a poor third in the polls, takes a somewhat midstream position on nuclear weapons, but solidly joins the Conseratives in wanting to stay in the European Economic Community.

The alliance, although seemingly out of the running on its own, could conceivably play a key role if neither of the major parties wins a clear majority in Parliament as a result of the June 9 vote.

THE MAIN DEFENSE and foreign policy stands of the alliance are far closer to the Conservatives than to Labor.

These are the Conservative stands:

Defense — Short of a U.S.-Soviet accord by the end of the year to eliminate intermediate-range nuclear weapons, Britain should go ahead with deployment of 96 NATO Tomahawk cruise missiles, the first of 572 cruise and Pershing 2 rockets planned for five European countries.

"The Western alliance can keep the peace only if we can convince any potential aggressor that he would have to pay an unacceptable price," says the Conservative platform, published last week.

An Analysis

The Conservatives also want to buy Trident II missiles from the United States to replace Britain's aging Polaris A-3 missiles in the next decade.

Europe — "The creation of the European Community has been vital in cementing lasting peace in Europe...We came to office determined to make a success of British membership...This we have done...Withdrawal would be a catastrophe for this country."

Mrs. Thatcher has been fighting, with some success, to reduce Britain's contributions to the Common Market budget but contends continued membership is important for employment and trading.

LABOR'S STANDS:

Defense — "Labor's commitment is to establish a non-nuclear defense policy for this country," the party platform says. "This means the rejection of any fresh nuclear bases or weapons on British soil or in British waters, and the removal of all existing nuclear bases and weapons."

Under a Labor government, the platform says, the Trident would be canceled and cruise missiles would not be permitted.This would be a unilateral action, regardless of what the Soviets do.

But Labor adds: "All this cannot be done at once." And it says it will continue "support for NATO" and "cooperation with our allies."

The program does not explain how this can be done while canceling Britain's role in deploying the 572 missiles — one of the NATO alliance's most important decisions in its 33-year history.

Europe — "British withdrawal from the Community is the right policy for Britain — to be completed well within the lifetime of the Parliament" (a maximum of five years).

THE LIBERAL-SDP alliance:

Defense — NATO "must be the cornerstone of the country's defense policy," but NATO must move toward a policy of no first use of nuclear weapons. The alliance would also consider a verifiable nuclear freeze on both sides.

Habib thinks troops will leave Lebanon

By The Associated Press

U.S. envoy Philip C. Habib on Saturday urged "all reasonable people and all reasonable nations" to support the Israeli-Lebanese troop withdrawal agreement. He said he was optimistic foreign troops eventually will leave Lebanon, despite Syria's opposition to the accord.

Habib, who flew to Tel Aviv Saturday, made his comments in Cairo, Egypt, after a 75-minute meeting with President Hosni Mubarak.

The American diplomat will meet with Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir Sunday and Shamir will then report to the Cabinet at its regular meeting, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

Habib is expected to return to Beirut, Lebanon, after his talks with the Israelis, an official at the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv said.

The presidential envoy rarely speaks to reporters about his talks, and his statement appeared to be part of an effort to persuade Syria to retract its condemnation of the withdrawal agreement. Habib and Lebanese officials have been visiting Arab nations trying to drum up support for the pact.

Syrian officials have refused to allow Habib into their country because of their opposition to the Israeli-Lebanese accord, signed last week.

"I am always a chronic optimist about this," Habib said when asked about his efforts. "I think that it is recognized throughout this part of the world that it is important that external forces leave Lebanon. With the agreement between Lebanon and Israel, the door is open for that now.

"The Israelis are prepared to withdraw. They have so stated in the agreement. Now the question is: are others prepared to withdraw so that Lebanon can gets its own territory back in its own hands?

"I think the Lebanese deserve the support of all reasonable people and all reasonable nations," he said.

In Cairo, Egyptian Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly, who sat in on Mubarak's meeting with Habib, said Egypt supported U.S. efforts to gain a withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon. He also called on Syria, the only Arab country with which Egypt has no contacts, to open a dialogue with Washington.

A Lebanese Foreign Ministry official, Abdel-Rahman Sohl, told reporters in Cairo there are "some prospects" for an agreement between Syria and Lebanon on withdrawing troops.

"I do not think hope has been lost," Sohl told reporters after meeting with Mubarak. "On the contrary, there is a possibility that the (Lebanese-Syrian) dialogue will continue and bring positive and satisfactory results in the future."

Sohl gave Mubarak an undisclosed message from Lebanese President Amin Gemayel.

Israel and Lebanon last Tuesday signed an agreement to withdraw Israeli forces within eight to 12 weeks after the accord is implemented.

But Israel, which invaded Lebanon last June, has said it will not honor the agreement until Syria agrees to pull out its estimated 40,000 troops, along with 8,000-10,000 Palestinian guerrillas.

The Syrians, who have been in Lebanon since the 1975-76 civil war, claim the Lebanese-Israeli agreement infringes on Lebanese sovereignty and endangers Syrian security.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts rain Sunday in a band from the Virginias to Maine. Rain is also forecast from Louisiana and Alabama to Ohio.

No rain in Midland's forecast

Another day of blowing dust and no rain is probably more certain today than the Texas weather, which always is changing.

Once again, no rain is in the forecast.

Instead, the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport has made a sure bet: It will be warm today when the temperature is to peak into the mid-80s. Winds are to be northwesterly at 10 to 20 mph and gusty. The low tonight is to be in the upper 50s. On Monday, the high is to be in the upper 80s.

Saturday's peak temperature was 83 degrees, though the record high for a May 21 was 105 degrees in 1953. The low Saturday morning was 53 degrees; the record low for a May 22 is 48 degrees in 1931.

POWs reminisce about good times

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Neither Geoffrey Nops nor Perry Pickett could — in good conscience — recommend prisoner-of-war life as a permanent lifestyle for anyone.

But 40 years after serving as POWs in a Nazi prison camp in Chieti, Italy, the Englishman and the American got together to reminisce over the bearable and relatively good times they experienced.

Neither chatted much about the more dismal aspects of war.

"But I don't recommend prisoner-of-war life," said 70-year-old Nops, a retired London barrister now living on Guernsey Island in the English Channel, while talking with his friend, Pickett, 67, a retired Texas district court judge.

"I think six months as a prisoner of war is good for anybody," suggested the 6-foot-3 Nops. "It makes you realize how fortunate you are..."

"...To be free," added Pickett.

Nops and Pickett are together this weekend for the first time since World War II, when they developed an enduring friendship under guard of the Germans and Italians — the Axis Powers.

"We remember a lot of amusing things that happened," said Pickett.

"We were always digging tunnels (designed by the escape committee)," reflected Nops. "The problem was trying to hide the earth."

Judge Perry Pickett, left, and his fellow ex-prisoner-of-war buddy, retired English barrister Geoffrey Nops, reflect over their World War II POW experiences. Pickett was a B-25 bombardier; Nops was a gunnery officer.

THE PICKETT-NOPS reunion came, as Nops and his wife, Sheila, were rounding out their fortnight visit to the United States. Pickett, who always got along "marvelously well" with the British POWs, quickly renewed his camaraderie with Nops. His wife and Pickett's wife, Valerie, complemented the friendship. "We're having a lovely time," Mrs. Nops said.

The Nops-Pickett friendship, compliments of the Luftwaffe and Field Marshal Erwin Rommel's Afrika Korps, began in December 1942. Pickett, then 26, had gone down in "the drink" after the B-25 in which he was bombardier was shot down by a German Focke-Wulf Fw. 190 fighter over the Mediterranean Sea. The B-25's six man crew later was rescued by the Germans even though Pickett's bomber had helped sink German vessels.

"During the early part of the war," said Pickett, "they were strictly chivalrous...They had the World War I spirit...Later in the war, it got rough." Later in the war, both the Allies and the Axis weren't as prone to take prisoners of war.

After Pickett's crew was in two rafts, a German pilot swept by and waggled his airplane's wings to signal that a rescue aircraft was en route. Later, the crew was picked up by a tri-engine amphibian.

Nops, a British gunnery officer during the Fall of Tubruq (Tobruk) in North Africa, was captured in June 1942 by the Germans after the fall of the port and was taken to Chieti.

"It (treatment of prisoners) depended on the Germans you met. Some were very gentlemanly," said Nops. "Some were not."

AT THE POW camp were 900 British officers and 217 American officers; most of the latter were fighter pilots or members of bomber crews.

"It was a very good lot of men," recalled Nops. "It really was...The American Air Corps was marvelous — marvelous, spendid men."

Americans noticeably were in the minority in the camp.

"But he (Pickett) was always very well liked by the British," said Nops. "It was his natural charm, I think."

"I'm very pro-British," said Pickett.

"I don't think that's why they liked him, though," said the Englishman.

"I loved to visit with the British officers," Pickett said.

"He was popular. The English liked him very well."

Among the now more notable POWs at the camp were Lord Robert Blake, the British historian, and mystery writer Michael Gilbert.

Though digging tunnels wasn't exactly full of amusement, Nops recalled the futility of the digs and the disposal of the dirt. The "scarecrow"-looking POWs would put the earth in their pockets, pants, cuffs and then inconspicuously shake the dirt out and spread the earth about the camp grounds.

The two ex-POWs recalled the American and British lot surrounding an Italian fire engine on the camp grounds, stripping it and hiding the ornaments.

"We had beautiful showers," Nops recalled, "but we had no water in them."

Though they, as officers, were treated civilly, they were underfed, recalled Pickett.

"We had a really jolly good time — marvelous," he said.

WHAT BOTH perceived as reasonably good times suddenly vanished. After Italy capitulated in September 1943, the American and British POWs were shipped by train to a camp in Germany. Among those escaping from the train but from separate cars were Pickett and Nops.

Later, both were recaptured. Nops was sent on to the German camp, which he described only as "very gloomy." He refrained from recounting those POW months except for the 1945 welcomed fly-in of the American transports, which flew them out at war's end. "They certainly cleared the camp out in about a half day."

Though the American, too, was recaptured by the Germans, Pickett again escaped and spent the next 11 months in hiding in Italian mountains.

"I slept in many a pig sty and haystack," said Pickett.

"Pig stys were my specialty," Nops said.

Their months together in the POW camp in Italy were, as it turned out, bearable.

"We just didn't have enough to eat," said Pickett. "We were thin and emaciated."

"Chieti wasn't a picnic," said the American.

"No, it was fun," suggested his British friend.

"I wouldn't have used the word 'fun,'" proposed Pickett. "It was interesting."

Nops said their view of the POW camp would have been somewhat different had they known the outcome of the war.

"We didn't know if we were going to survive at all."

THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT

City council to study changes in insurance

Guided by one of its more abbreviated agendas in recent months, Midland City Council Tuesday will study changes in the city's medical insurance and review an ordinance establishing various truck and "no truck" routes within the city.

During a regularly scheduled meeting beginning at 10 a.m. in City Hall council chambers, the council will consider authorizing changes in the city's group medical insurance and permitting the advertisement for bids for a self-funding group insurance program.

The council will also consider an ordinance establishing an expanded truck route, local truck routes and "no truck" routes on several city streets.

The council will consider an ordinance amending the city code to add a new subsection that would set a six-month waiting period before second applications for special temporary mobile home permits may be filed and considered.

Another ordinance on the agenda would establish stop signs at the intersections of Dormard Avenue and Pecos Street, Indiana Avenue and Pecos and Colorado Street and Gist Avenue.

The council will consider a request by Richard Lyons to waive a bonding requirement for public improvements in connection with a final plat of Wilshire Park Addition. Also before the council will be a request by the Woodmont Corporation to waive the required public sidewalk along Loop 250 in Midkiff Plaza, on the east side of Midkiff Road south of Loop 250.

A zone code amendment that would amend the Neighborhood Service District to permit self-service fuel sales with a specific use permit also will be reviewed.

At 1:35 p.m., the council will hold a public hearing to consider, on appeal, a request by T.C. Tubb and Dee Anderson for a zone change from NS District to Local Retail District on a 1.6 acre tract at the southeast corner of Wakefield Road and the Interstate 20 service road.

On its consent agenda, the council will consider resolutions to purchase a Jacobsen F-133, 5-gang hydraulic mower, 1983's annual supply of air, oil and transmission filters for the Municipal Garage and two aircraft band radios for the Aviation Department.

The council will consider a resolution approving the plans and specifications and authorizing advertisement for bids on rebuilding Illinois Avenue from Midkiff Road to Midland Drive.

Also, the council will consider amendments to the Federal Aviation Administration Control Tower Building lease to extend the pact because of construction delays at the new tower site.

County Commissioners

An expanded jail for Midland County again will be discussed by the Midland County commissioners, who had considered a relatively thrifty stockade and then a multi-million dollar jail-courthouse addition to house prisoners.

Commissioners last year eventually nixed the stockade approach and instead submitted an $11.69 million courthouse-jail bond proposal to the electorate. The measure was defeated April 23 by a 4-1 margin.

The commissioners in their 9 a.m. Monday meeting in the Midland County Courthouse will consider building a jail on county land which adjoins the Midland County Exhibit Building off U.S. Highway 80 East.

In other business, the commissioners are to:

—Listen to a report by Roland Wilkinson, chief appraiser for the Midland County Appraisal District.

—Consider requests for Midland County financial assistance in building a Volunteer Fire Department building and purchasing a fire engine to serve the Midkiff area.

—Discuss replacing the roof on the Midland County Courthouse.

MISD Board of Trustees

Trustees of the Midland Independent School District will sort through a short and routine agenda when they meet at 1:30 p.m. in the school Administration Building, 702 N. N St.

The board will consider awarding a bid for remodeling the office area at Midland High School, resignations of personnel and re-employing those on probationary contracts and where to deposit school district funds.

Summary of the California Achievement Test results for 1982-83 will be reviewed.

Trustees will discuss eligibility requirements for students participating in extracurricular activities.

And Human Relations Council will ask to rent a classroom at the old De Zavala school to use as its office. Tall City Lions Club and Black Advisory Council will request use of Carver Cultural Center Auditorium for a religious musical.

'Armed robbery' no joke at Arby's

An apparent "armed robbery" joke on a 17-year-old Arby's restaurant clerk was played by two men who drove up to the westside restaurant about 8:30 p.m. Saturday, placed their order and pointed a pistol at the clerk before paying the tab and driving off in a pickup truck.

"I gathered they meant it as a joke, but it wasn't very funny," said manager-trainee Jean Petit after the clerk served the men's order.

She said the clerk thought the men were just playing a prank.

"'This is a stick-up; this is a gun,'" one of the men, in their mid-20s, told the clerk, Ms. Petit said.

"'You've got to be kidding,'" the clerk reponded.

"'Yeah,'" the man replied and laid down the pistol.

Ms. Petit, who was robbed at gunpoint in an earlier job at a convenience food store, said the young clerk wasn't disturbed. "She didn't take it seriously." Ms. Petit, who did, called Midland police to report an attempted robbery.

"We're all right. Just shook up," she said.

New Mexican killed on highway

BIG SPRING — A New Mexico man was killed when he was hit by a car as he walked along U.S. Highway 87 four miles south of here early Saturday morning.

Pronounced dead at the scene by Howard County Justice of the Peace Bobby West was 36-year-old Robert Martinez of Hobbs, N.M.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Martinez was walking on the shoulder of the highway about 3:20 a.m. Saturday when he was struck by a southbound 1976 Mercury driven by Terry Gamble, 30, of Big Spring.

Martinez's body was taken to the morgue at Malone-Hogan Hospital in Big Spring, where an autopsy was to be performed. The DPS said an investigation into the accident is continuing.

Midland woman severely burned

A young Midland woman was severely burned in a house fire at 103 Sprayberry Drive early Saturday morning.

In critical condition in the burn unit at Lubbock General Hospital was 24-year-old Paula Potter.

She suffered second-and-third-degree burns to 60 percent of her body, according to a hospital spokesman Saturday afternoon.

Five fire department units responded to the call at 3:40 a.m. Saturday. Firemen remained on the scene more than two hours and used 1,500 gallons of water extinguishing the blaze, which heavily damaged the wood frame house and its contents.

No cause for the fire was immediately established.

Bentsen has income of at least $1.86 million

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Democratic Sen. Lloyd Bentsen had income in 1982 of at least $1.86 million as compared to at least $417,000 income for his Republican counterpxrt, Sen. John Tower, according to public financial disclosure reports released Thursday by the secretary of the Senate.

Tower reported income of $26,500 for the 16 speeches he gave and one article he wrote during 1982. Bentsen reported no honoraria income for 1982.

The largest sector of Bentsen's income came from transactions in securities, commodity futures and real property. He reported income ranging from $1.125 million to $1.56 million for those transactions, with purchases ranging from $125,000 to $280,000. Exact figures were unavailable for either Tower or Bentsen because they are required to report the value of financial transactions in categories that, in certain cases, can vary by tens of thousands of dollars and in other cases vary by hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The upper limit of Tower's total income has a more easily definable value because none of his transxations or property values exceeded $52,000. He holds property worth at least $127,000 but not exceeding $177,000, the bulk of which comes from the purchase in May 1981 of drilling rig equipment for $107,000.

Tower reported no outside earned income for 1982. Tower reported unearned income of between $15,200 and $52,000 from interest, dividends, rent, capital gains, trusts and estates. He did not specify the total value of his liabilities other than to list three loan transactions, each of which exceeded $10,000.

Bentsen reported liabilities of $630,000 and outside earned income of $204,860. His income from dividends, interest and rent was between $533,600 and $541,000.

Regarding the honoraria income received by Tower and other senators, a spokesman for Common Cause said Thursday that such income should be outlawed by the Senate because it has a "potential for conflict of interest." The spokesman, Randy Huwa, said fees for speaking engagements should be prohibited.

Rain water sweeps teen off San Antonio bridge

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A 15-year-old youth trying to cross a bridge swamped by the rain-heightened Salado Creek was knocked from the bridge into the water, swept downstream Saturday and presumed drowned, officials said.

Roderick Roff of San Antonio was with five companions Saturday afternoon when he attempted to cross the creek by the bridge, a part of which was submerged in the waterway swollen by a series of torrential thunderstorms since Thursday.

Bexar County Sheriff's Department divers suspended their search for Roff Saturday night. Officials said the teenager is presumed drowned.

Roff was knocked from the bridge at about 2:30 p.m. but was able to grab a fishing pole extended by Rosa Haynes, who had been fishing from a river bank.

Mothers organizing local chapter

She offered suggestions for fundraising projects, gave hints on how to ask the electronic media to give public service announcements and suggested how to pass on information about the disease.

"Some chapters do very well, while others struggle throughout the year to raise $100," Ms. Ankeney said, adding there are "idea" booklets available for possible fundraising events.

While 40 percent of the funds will support the Midland chapter, the remaining 60 percent goes to the national office.

In Ohio, the foundation uses the funds to support the organization and for research grants.

To inform the public, Ms. Ankeney said the chapter should request physicians to place literature in their offices, approach the school board to allow pamphlets be passed out at school and provide pharmacies with posters and booklets.

Although it is difficult to start a chapter with only one person, she said, it can be done.

"People address me as the Reye's Syndrome lady," she said, explaining that she has been THE chapter in Florida for a number of years.

"I'm forever knocking on doors and always carry literature in my purse. Our (NRSF) stand is parent education — through the physicians, hospitals, schools, clubs and organizations."

As one Midland woman, who also lost a son 13½ years ago to Reye's Syndrome said: "I feel the bottom line for this chapter should be education — let parents know about and be aware of Reye's Syndrome."

Thatcher turns shopper; Foot visits hospitals

LONDON (AP) — Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher turned shopper on the campaign trail, buying groceries and lecturing on prices in a supermarket in her north London district of Finchley.

A wearier opposition Labor Party leader, Michael Foot, plodded through hospitals and centers for the unemployed, promising more jobs and no nuclear missiles.

Mrs. Thatcher ignored the young Labor supporters' jeers this weekend in socially mixed Finchley, which she has represented for 24 years.

She was equally unmoved by the press and opposition criticism of her "headmistress" demeanor at news conferences — interrupting senior Cabinet ministers who flank her and twice last week publicly correcting Foreign Secretary Francis Pym on campaign issues.

"I've known some very, very good headmistresses who have launched their pupils on wonderful careers," Mrs. Thatcher told a television interviewer.

Finchley — where 25 percent of the 56,000 votes are working class — yielded Mrs. Thatcher an 8,000-vote majority in the 1979 election. Finchley is still regarded as a safe Conservative Party district, but by no means a guaranteed win for the Tories.

Accompanied by her daughter Carol, 29, and followed by a crush of party aides, security men and journalists, Mrs. Thatcher pushed a shopping basket in a 30-minute spree through a local supermarket.

She devoted a few minutes to talking about food prices with shopper Irene Hwaggan, 64. Her favorite theme was that her administration has cut inflation to a 15-year low of 4 percent.

"Whatever you think of her, she does what she says she's going to do. She's strong," commented Mrs. Hwaggan.

Foot had his own favorite theme to discuss when he visited the Banbury district: near-record unemployment of 3.17 million, or 13.3 percent.

The Tory margin of victory in the 64,700-vote district was 13,000 in 1979. Aides said Foot was there because the relatively prosperous north Oxfordshire town is now "marginal."

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher samples a British brand of cheese while visiting a supermarket in the north London district of Finchley, Saturday.

"Unemployment is a scandal...We're going to nail the Tory lie (that) there's no alternative," he said.

A man shouted, "Where the hell do you think you're going to get the money from?"

Borrowing, Foot replied, and using the "millions she (Mrs. Thatcher) is wasting on nuclear weapons."

Food added, "...and now for three cheers to a Labor victory in Banbury." Most cheered, but a few booed, and Foot set off to the next stop in Banbury — a home for mentally handicapped adults.

In the local Labor Party headquarters, a poster lamented the unemployment rate that has tripled since Mrs. Thatcher won power and said: "See what happens when you don't vote Labor."

Foot, looking tired and with two public rallies ahead in different towns that evening, sat beneath it. He led party workers in another three cheers for a Labor victory in Banbury.

U.S. doctor aids peasants

BOSTON (AP) — Dr. Charles Clements once piloted U.S. airplanes over Vietnam. Now he runs when American-made warplanes approach, because when they leave, he patches up the wounded.

For the past year, Clements has spent his days treating sick and wounded civilians in a hilly section of El Salvador. The 22-square-mile zone near the capital is controlled by rebels fighting the Salavadoran government.

The doctor, who is visiting Boston and other major U.S. cities to raise money for medical supplies, says he decided to work in El Salvador after hearing about torture and murder of medical personnel and patients in the country.

"I found it difficult to believe a government would attack health workers," Clements, 37, said in an interview last week in Boston.

Clements grew up in a military family, graduated from the Air Force Academy with honors and in 1969 was sent to Vietnam, where he flew cargo planes. He grew disillusioned with U.S. policy and left the service in 1971.

He became a Quaker and made a commitment to nonviolence, earning his medical degree in 1979. He heard about problems in El Salvador from refugees when he worked among farmworkers in Salinas, Calif.

Clements says he went to the rebel zone, known as Guazapa, because just one doctor was serving more than 10,000 residents there.

For the past 3½ years, leftist rebels have battled the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador, and guerrillas now control seven zones where 100,000 civilians live. The nation has a population of 5.2 million.

This year, the Reagan administration is seeking congressional approval for $60 million in military aid to the Salvadoran government.

Clements, who says he is not a Communist, opposes such aid and calls instead for negotiations between the government and the rebels.

In March of last year, Clements moved into a room with two Salvadoran families and began sharing their meals, usually half a cup of beans and two tortillas.

He treats more than 50 patients a day, most of them peasants whose families have lived and farmed the land in Guazapa for generations. Many are children.

Their problems range from diarrhea to burns from phosphorus bombs that eat through the skin.

The guerrillas get arms by capturing Salvadoran equipment, he said, with the standard issue being M-16's and other automatic weapons. The Reagan administration says the rebels get arms and aid from Cuba and Nicaragua.

Using a hospital as his base, Clements travels to health clinics in each village, encouraging people to build latrines and to wash fruit before eating. He also shows them how to make a rehydration solution of water, sugar and salt, to fight diarrhea.

He prescribes willow-leaf tea for arthritis as a substitute for scarce aspirin.

Agricultural cooperatives produce and distribute food in the zone, according to Clements, but peasants are free to grow their own as well. Local government and a primitive judicial system are operating, he said, adding that the rebels asked him to recruit an American lawyer to help them codify their laws.

Samba sways Danes

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of Danes swayed to the samba rhythm Saturday at Copenhagen's second annual Whitsun Carnival — a combination of the Rio de Janeiro Carnival and New Orleans' Mardi Gras with a Scandinavian flair.

Painted dancers gyrated to drum-beating, whistle-blowing tempos from Brazil, Africa and the Caribbean. One band was dressed as strawberries, another as jesters. A clown walked on stilts. Beer bottles were everywhere.

"It looks like we may get the 500,000 the Carnival Committee predicted," one police officer said.

The Carnival coincides with Pentecost, the 50th day after Easter. The holiday also is called Whitsunday.

The festivities — to last for three days — began with dozens of costumed processions led by samba bands that converged on the city center to form a massive parade snaking its way around the central shopping district.

Another contingent arrived in boats and sailing ships and docked at the old Nyhavn seamen's district.

The downtown section was closed to all but urgent traffic from 2 p.m. to midnight.

"It's just fantastic. The city is full and the spirit is high," said Bent of the organizing committee, which uses first names only.

"I think we had about 150,000 at the start, and we're expecting about 400,000 by early this evening," he said. The population of Copenhagen is 500,000.

Organizers launched Copenhagen's first carnival since the Middle Ages on Whitsun weekend, 1982. According to committee member Frances, "It was supposed to be a real folk festival for the Danish people, before the tourist season begins."

Peruvian guerrilla offensive leaves 20 dead, 20 wounded

LIMA, Peru (AP) — The biggest guerrilla offensive against the Peruvian government in three years killed 20 people, wounded 20 and left at least 2,000 under arrest, military sources and news reports said.

The leftist rebels of the Shining Path movement attacked the civil guard headquarters in Ayacucho, 350 miles southeast of Lima, and five surrounding towns Friday night.

Reporters in Ayacucho said armored personnel carriers patrolled the streets Saturday and that the city of 65,000 remained without electricity because of guerrilla dynamite attacks on power stations.

Police began house-to-house searches looking for homemade bombs and arrested more than 2,000 people in Ayacucho, military sources said. Reporters in the town said some of those arrested were children.

Police and the military command in Ayacucho declined to give casualty figures, but reporters said they counted the bodies of 12 civilians killed in a five-hour gunfight Friday night after the guerrillas dynamited a thermal electric station outside the city.

The guerrillas also destroyed a bridge leading to the town of Tambillos and kept much of Ayacucho under sniper fire during the night, reports from the city said. Police estimated the guerrillas' strength at 25-40 men.

There was no official government report on fighting in the Ayacucho area. Interior Minister Luis Percovich told reporters last week the guerrillas were under control and that Ayacucho was peaceful.

But the military command ordered a special alert in Ayacucho on Tuesday, the eve of the third anniversary of the start of the guerilla war.

Man to face charges in 11,584 deaths

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Albert Helmut Rauca was extradited Saturday from Canada to West Germany where he faces charges of responsibility for the deaths 11,584 Lithuanian Jews during World War II.

The West German government's petition for extradition claimed that Rauca was in charge of troops that murdered the Jews and that he personally killed five of the victims.

The Wiesbaden state criminal police headquarters said Rauca, 74, was being held in a prison near Frankfurt. He arrived on an early morning flight from Toronto.

Rauca was taken prisoner by the Americans at the end of the war, emigrated to Canada in 1949 and became a Canadian citizen in 1956. He is the first Canadian citizen to be extradited on war crimes charges.

Eight killed in Italian tunnel disaster

CELLE LIGURE, Italy (AP) — A truck smashed into cars stopped inside a tunnel Saturday morning, setting off an explosion and fire that killed eight people and injured 22, officials said.

Firemen said the dead were burned beyond recognition, and that more victims may be discovered as they continue to dig through the rubble.

They said two West Germans and the Spanish truck driver were among the injured in the accident — the third Italian tunnel disaster in less than a month.

Officials said first reports showed that the truck slammed into the back of a line of more than 20 cars stalled inside the tunnel on the superhighway about 18 miles south of Genoa on the Adriatic coast. They said the gas tanks in the vehicles exploded, filling the tunnel with fire and smoke.

Officials gave conflicting reports about what the transport truck was hauling, but the latest police report Saturday night said the truck carried liquid gas containers. Earlier reports said it had a load of oysters.

The truck's driver, Jose Gonzales Grancera of Spain, was put under police guard at a local hospital where he is expected to remain for two weeks for treatment of burns and smoke inhalation, officials said.

The accident occurred at 10 a.m. (4 a.m. EDT), and it took several hours to extinguish the flames. The death toll rose as firemen and police searched the tunnel, officials said.

The names and nationalities of the dead were not immediately available. Except for the truck driver and the Germans, the injured were all Italians, including a 16-month-old boy, officials said.

Two accidents occurring within hours of one another last April 27 killed 13 people in a tunnel near Florence on the Highway of the Sun.

Eleven children were killed and 14 were injured aboard a bus from Naples that was sideswiped by a giant steel pipe, which fell from a truck traveling in the opposite direction. A few hours later, a truck crashed into cars in the same tunnel, killing two people and injuring three.

Salvadoran guerrillas ambush convoys

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Left-wing guerrillas ambushed two military convoys early Saturday, setting off battles on an eastern road, military sources reported.

They said there also was fighting in northeastern Morazan province, near the Honduran border, and 20 rebels were killed.

The sources, with access to defense reports, said the rebels ambushed an army truck near Usulutan City, 69 miles east of the capital, early Saturday.

The soldiers fought back and a truck convoy carrying national guardsmen from the nearby city of Santiago de Maria to help the government troops also was ambushed, setting off a second battle, said the sources. They asked not to be identified for security reasons.

There was no immediate report of casualties.

Guerrillas set off seven bombs near Apopa, eight miles north of San Salvador, during the night, apparently intending to blast power towers and black out the eastern part of the country, a local commander said.

Divers try to net whale

SKIVE, Denmark (AP) — Divers on Saturday wrapped a net around an Arctic white whale trapped in a Danish fiord so they could take it home to the North Sea, but the would-be rescuers ripped the net and the whale swam away.

Rescue workers said they would repair the net, torn when a motorboat passed too close to it, and try again, perhaps on Sunday. It took them seven hours to wrap the net around the whale.

The animal, also known as a beluga whale, has been trapped in the inland basin since last Sunday after swimming 100 miles through a network of islands, shoals and straits. Scientists fear if it stays in the basin, it will be beached on a shoal.

Police said 30,000 people flocked to Lovn's Basin in the Limfjorden to watch the rescue attempt. The operation, sponsored by the environmental group Greenpeace, was delayed several hours as the whale disappeared for a swim around the basin.

If divers succeed in netting the beast, 13 feet long and weighing 1,540 pounds, it will be hoisted aboard a truck outfitted with special bed and driven 63 miles west to the coastal town of Torsminde. It will be sprayed constantly with water from a tank truck travelling close behind.

At the coast, it will be put into the harbor and followed by a Greenpeace dinghy until it is safely in open sea.

It is the first time a whale of the species has been seen in Danish waters since 1903. Such animals normally roam the Arctic Ocean.

Spanish students learn 'fine art' in ring of bullfighting school

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Fortunato "Fortu" Herranz stands alone in the middle of the small bullring, poised on the balls of his feet.

"Eh, toro! toro!" he calls defiantly, advancing across the sand towards his adversary, holding a sharp pointed stick, or bandillera, in each hand.

In a rush he lunges forward, plunging the banderillas into the oncoming wheeled contraption of wood, foam and metal topped with a pair of bull's horns.

He shouts and jumps aside. His glasses slide down his freckled nose.

Fortu is 12 years old. He is learning the fine art of fighting bulls — an art that Ernest Hemingway called a tragedy, not a sport.

From 5:30 every afternoon until 8:30 p.m, Fortu and about 60 other youngsters show up at the Casa de Campo, a large park on the outskirts of Madrid where some former bullfighters and assistants have set up a cooperative school through which they hope to keep bullfighting — Spain's most illustrious pastime — alive.

It is despised by people who believe it is cruel, but bullfighting is still very popular.

Enrique Martin Arranz, the school's director, said in an interview that there are not enough good bullfighters to satisfy the demand.

"Impresarios are always on the lookout for a new Manolete or El Cordobes," he said. "But when there is a lack of idols — like now — then not so many kids aspire to be bullfighters."

When Martin Arranz started out as a bullfighter's assistant in 1964, he said, the Ministry of the Interior issued 600 licenses to beginning bullfighters. The number is down to 50 this year.

Fortu Herranz knows it's a long way from the little bullring where he practices sticking banderillas into a metal wagon, to Madrid's Plaza de Toros where the stars perform during the Fiesta of San Isidro each year in mid-May.

But Fortu says he has "always wanted to be a bullfighter."

"Sometimes we get in fights with other kids who call us stupid," he said. "Why do you want to risk your life, they say. Why not play soccer."

But, Fortu says, "This isn't a sport — this is a life."

Of 400 boys and 18 girls who have gone through the school since it opened in 1976, fewer than 20 have had what it takes to go all the way to becoming full-fledged bullfighters, Martin Arranz said.

"Some get as far as doing cape work with cows here in the ring, and some have gone on to do Novilladas (fights with young, light bulls) but most realize it is much more dangerous than they had ever imagined."

The school is one of four in Spain. Those in Valencia and Albacete also are run as cooperatives by former professionals who donate their time. There is a private school in Cordoba.

Students at the Madrid school, ranging in age from nine to 24, pay a $4 registration fee and the equivalent of $2 a month tuition if they can afford it.

"This is a school for kids whose families don't have money," Martin Arranz said. "The ones with money who want to learn usually know bull breeders and can go to the farms to learn."

Radio Kabul denies Soviets killed thousands of civilians

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Radio Kabul on Saturday denied Washington's claim that Soviet bombing has killed hundreds and probably thousands of civilians in Afghanistan.

"Bombardments have not taken place," said the state-run radio in a broadcast monitored here. "In Herat City and around Herat everything is normal. People are doing everyday things normally."

Radio Kabul called the reports of bombings "propaganda and lies."

In late April, guerrillas fighting to topple the Soviet-backed government in Afghanistan reported the Soviet Union was bombing Herat, the country's third largest city near the Iranian border. The guerrillas said as many as 3,000 people were killed.

On Friday, the State Department accused the Soviet Union of "a slaughter...intolerable by any standard of civilized behavior." State Department spokesman John Hughes said the casualties from the bombings "certainly number many hundreds and are probably in the thousands."

Weak earthquakes shake Tokyo

TOKYO (AP) — Two weak earthquakes shook Tokyo and its vicinity within three minutes of each other Saturday night but there were no reports of damage or injuries, the Central Meteorological Agency said.

The first quake, at 7:46 p.m. (6:46 a.m. EDT), rattled sliding doors and windows, and registered 3 on the seven-point Japanese scale of quake intensity in Tokyo; Chiba, 21 miles southeast of Tokyo; and Yokohama, 18 miles west of Tokyo.

The second quake, at 7:49 p.m. registered 2 at Katsuura, 50 miles south of Tokyo.The metereological agency placed the epicenter of the two quakes in the Pacific Ocean, east of Chiba state.

Ugandans hold German doctor

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — A West German physician practicing in Kampala has been arrested by Ugandan police on suspicion of supplying medicine to anti-government guerrillas, the newspaper Munnansi reported Saturday.

West German diplomats identified the doctor as Nikolai von Bogdan, in his late 50s. They said he has practiced in Kampala for several months and has lived in Africa for some time, previously in neighboring Kenya.

A West German diplomat, reached by telephone, said an embassy official visited von Bogdan at the central police station last Thursday. He said a lawyer has been arranged for the doctor, but the police have not yet filed any charges against him.

Five killed in bus accident

SASBACHWALDEN, West Germany (AP) — A British military bus ran off the road and tipped over near this small West German town Saturday, killing five people, police reported.

Police declined to name those killed, but said three were in the bus, which was carrying about 35 members of the Royal Air Force on a tour through the Black Forest region.

Pope keeps his tailors in stitches

By DANIELA PETROFF

ROME (AP) — The Gammarellis, official tailors of the popes for nearly 150 years, have met a new challenge in the globetrotting John Paul II.

He wears his clothes out faster than any pontiff before him, say the Gammarelli brothers, who must create new kinds of garments for the extremes of climate faced by such a peripatetic pope.

Business is booming at Via Santa Chiara 34, the shop of Annibale and Francesco Gammarelli. An extraordinary Holy Year, a recent consistory and the strict papal requirements on ecclesiastical dress have kept the family tailors busier than ever with orders for clergymen from the pope on down.

Orders for cassocks, suits and ceremonial robes are piled up on the desk of 51-year-old Annibale, director with his younger brother, of the tiny shop nestled in the shadow of the Pantheon in downtown Rome.

"Priests have taken to caring how they dress again," said Annibale Gammarelli in an interview with The Associated Press.

THE FIFTH generation ecclesiastical tailor said that until John Paul II's recent letter requiring clergymen staying in Rome to wear the traditional garb of black cassock or suit and Roman collar, priests had let their dressing habits slip. The tailor said he was surprised at how quickly the churchmen rose to the occasion, and the orders from all over the world started flowing in.

The first Gammarelli tailor shop opened in Rome in 1793. Annibale's grandfather moved to the present address in 1890 from a smaller store in the nearby Via dei Baulari (street of the trunk makers).

The first pope dressed by the Gammarellis was the 19th century Pius IX. The family's commission needs to be renewed each time there is a new pope, but of this century's eight pontiffs only one — Pius XII — chose to go elsewhere for his clothes. Born a prince in one of Rome's oldest noble families, the Pacellis, he used the family's personal tailor.

Most of the popes became Gammarelli clients long before they sat on the papal throne. The relationship usually dated from their student days in one of Rome's ecclesiastical colleges.

THE REV. Giuseppe Roncalli, the future Pope John XXIII, was a Gammarelli customer by the time he went into the army as a chaplain in World War I. So he had his sergeant's uniform made by the tailors. Paul VI and John Paul I were also longstanding customers.

The Gammarellis keep on file the measurements of each new customer, which they adjust periodically. But their present most prestigious customer, John Paul II, had not previously appeared in their books. He had all his clothes made in his native Poland.

But upon being named pope, John Paul immediately appointed the Gammarellis his official tailors, and now his measurements figure in their files.

Although Gammarelli would not disclose them inch by inch, he said the pope fits a normal Italian size 54 (U.S. 44), and wears Italian size 44 (U.S. 10½) shoes.

Traditional papal garb — always white — is built around the simple cassock buttoned down the front with wide cuff and mozzetta, or capelet covering the shoulders. The cassock comes in two weights, heavy silk for winter, light wool gabardine for summer.

GAMMARELLI SAID Pope John Paul, used to the rugged climate of Poland, suffers from the heat and prefers his vestments as light as possible.

Accessories include the white papal zuccheto, or skull cap, and a broad brimmed, red velvet hat with matching floor length cape for outdoor wear.

A sash embroidered with the papal coat of arms girds the waist. Gammarelli said the pope, like all priests, wears regular trousers and a shirt under his cassock.

Traditionally popes wore soft red velvet slippers with silver buckles, but John Paul prefers simple maroon leather moccasins, "made for walking," as Gammarelli says.

He said John Paul wears out his clothes faster than any pope before him. Fraying the soonest are the wide cuffed sleeves because of the pope's habit during public appearances of extending his hand to any well-wisher who can grab it.

John Paul's many travels have forced the Gammarelli brothers to delve into areas of fashion they had never known before. A trip to the Marmolada, the highest peak in the Italian Alps, produced a white quilted eiderdown ski jacket, while for the first trip to Africa, the Gammarellis wove a straw version of the wide brimmed velvet hat, more suited to the continent's torrid climate.

ALL PAPAL fittings are conducted in the Vatican, and the brothers try to keep them to a minimum.

Bombing doesn't alter pope's travel plans

MONZA, Italy (AP) — A vandal threw a gasoline bomb Saturday at an altar in Milan where Pope John Paul II plans to celebrate Mass. But the pontiff continued his three-day visit to northern Italy with a stop in Monza, where he was greeted by a singing crowd of about 150,000.

Officials said a man hurled the gasoline bomb at a carpeted, metal-and- wood stand in front of the Regina Bacis Church in northern Milan, where the pontiff will hold a Mass on Sunday.

The attacker escaped on a motorcycle with another man, police said, and no one acknowledged responsibility for the act.

The damage to the stand should be repaired before the pope celebrates Mass there shortly before heading back to the Vatican, officials said.

A singing crowd — most of them young people — gave an emotional greeting in Monza to a sleepy Pope John Paul II, who spoke from the winner's platform at the Grand Prix racetrack.

"Help to build a new society" free of drugs and terrorism, the pope repeatedly urged the enthusiastic crowd — many of whom waited six hours to hear him speak. He told them to fill the "new society" with Christian love and charity for those "who cannot provide for themselves."

"You young people must be the proclaimers and witnesses of Christian hope," he said.

At one point, a parish priest read an emotional letter from 10-year-old Silvia Cesana, whose wealthy father, Giovanni, was kidnapped in Saregno last March and remains in the kidnappers' hands.

"In this country, kidnapping is a not an uncommon circumstance, in which the children suffer and the parents suffer," the pope responded.

Fifteen people have been abducted this year by Italy's kidnap gangs, who snatched 50 people in 1982.

The 63-year-old pontiff was visibly tired. Closeup television shots as he sat waiting to speak showed him closing his eyes.

President Reagan congratulates new graduates of Seton Hall University in South Orange, N.J., on Saturday.

Reagan addresses graduates

SOUTH ORANGE, N.J. (AP) — President Reagan, declaring "we just haven't been getting our money's worth," said Saturday that the nation's schools were not making the grade and more federal dollars will not help.

"The road to better education for all our people simply cannot be paved with more and more recycled tax dollars collected, redistributed, and over-regulated by Washington bureaucrats," the president told 1,900 graduates, faculty and guests at commencement ceremonies at Seton Hall University.

The four-year Roman Catholic college is in this north Jersey town, about 15 miles west of New York City.

Visits to the northeast have been rare for Reagan, who has been concentrating his public appearances in the politically friendly Sun Belt. The northeast is considered less crucial than the South and West to any re-election plans if Reagan seeks a second term.

But one Republican strategist, who spoke on condition that he not be identified, pointed out that New Jersey has been friendly territory for recent Republican presidential candidates. Reagan enjoyed a landslide victory there in 1980, President Nixon carried the state by a wide margin in his 1972 campaign for re-election and President Ford won there by a slight margin in 1976.

When he was introduced, Reagan was given a standing ovation from most, but not all, of the graduates.

At least one graduate and several faculty members walked out as the president started to speak. Earlier, they had distributed a notice of their plans to protest his appearance and the high unemployment rate in the area.

While the president spoke, chanting from about 100 persons demonstrating outside the campus' main gates could barely be heard. They were gathered to protest the president's arms policies and efforts to increase funding to Central America. Another group of about the same size came to support his stand against the regime of Fidel Castro in Cuba.

The president used his speech to seek support for his proposal to give parents of children in private schools tax credits based on the tuition they pay. The proposal would ease the cost of sending youngsters to religious and non-religious private schools, but critics contend the plan risks cuts in public school funding.

Reagan also encouraged prayer in schools, saying, "Although I know that this idea is not too popular in some supposedly sophisticated circles, I can't help but believe that voluntary prayer and the spiritual values that have shaped our civilization and made us the good and caring society we are, deserve a place again in our nation's classrooms."

The president advocated paying and promoting teachers "on the basis of their merit and competence."

"Hard-earned tax dollars should encourage the best," he said. "They have no business rewarding incompetence and mediocrity."

In most public school systems, pay raises are based on length of teachers' service and education level.

"We spend more money per child for education than any other country in the world — we just haven't been getting our money's worth," the president said.

"Many of our high schools are not doing the job they should," he said.

"Again and again, when compared to students in the other industrialized nations, many of ours place badly," Reagan said, adding that by some estimates, half the nation's gifted youngsters are not meeting their potential.

"That's a criminal waste of our most precious national resource, you, our sons and daughters, he said.

"There was a time, not too long ago, when the solution to this problem would have been summed up by most politicians in one big five-letter word: money. Just pour more money on the problem, the conventional wisdom went, and it would go away," he said.

Kentucky's gubernatorial race heats up

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — For almost four years in office, Kentucky's Gov. John Y. Brown Jr. kept his promise to remain neutral in the race for the next Democratic candidate for governor.

But in the last week before Tuesday's primary, the colorful and controversial Brown almost stole the spotlight from the three main hopefuls.

Prevented by state law from succeeding himself, the governor broke his silence Monday and endorsed Grady Stumbo, the one candidate who supports Brown's policies — and the one who has been running last of the three.

The two neck-and-neck frontrunners — Lt. Gov. Martha Layne Collins, who could become the first woman to head the state, and Louisville Mayor Harvey Sloane, who could be the first mayor of the state's largest city elected governor — initially played down the importance of Brown's endorsement.

But on Thursday — after Brown and his wife, former Miss America Phyllis George Brown, had spent two days campaigning with Stumbo — Sloane said Brown had become the major issue in the race.

"By trying to pick his own successor and ram his choice through the primary, he has turned Grady into nothing but a puppet," Sloane said. "It isn't Grady Stumbo running at all. It's John Y. Brown."

In the Republican race, state Sen. Jim Bunning of Fort Thomas, a former major-league baseball pitcher, is leading by a wide margin, with his main rival businessman Don Wiggins of Winchester. But because Republican governors are rare in Kentucky and because the GOP campaign has been a lackluster one, the state's attention is focused on the Democratic vote.

Before Brown's surprise endorsement of Stumbo, 38, a physician with no political experience until he was tapped by the governor to serve as state human resources secretary, the main question was whether Sloane or Mrs. Collins was ahead.

Mrs. Collins, 46, a teacher with a longtime involvement in all levels of state Democratic politics, has raised the most money, $2.2 million as of May 7. Because of her political connections, she has the most support among courthouses in the state, and she claims she will carry all seven of the state's congressional districts, including Sloane's home base of Louisville-Jefferson County.

She recently attacked Sloane's record as mayor, contending tax revenue has risen in the Louisville area since Sloane's impressive mayoral victory 18 months ago.

Sloane, 47, lashed back at what he called distortions and half-truths, insisting the increase was in the city's tax receipts, not the tax rate. Running second in contributions with $1.9 million, he has been endorsed by several state newspapers, whose editorials cited his experience and integrity.

All three candidates have said the fact that Mrs. Collins would be the state's first female governor is not an issue. However, Mrs. Collins has hinted that Sloane has subtly brought up the "woman issue" in what her campaign calls "macho" television commercials.

But all the other issues faded into the background last Monday when, to the theme music from "Chariots of Fire," Brown announced he "couldn't stand by and see my state not have the very best."

Stumbo has promised to fine-tune the state bureaucracy, which was overhauled by the Brown administration. Sloane and Mrs. Collins have criticized Brown's extensive reclassification of personnel and salary guidelines, but they haven't said how extensive any of their changes might be.

Although political observers still say Stumbo is behind, Brown's endorsement has led him to predict he'll make a late surge ahead of Sloane and Mrs. Collins. Running third in contributions, with $688,841 as of May 7, Stumbo said Wednesday that money was beginning to roll in.

In addition, Stumbo has widespread labor support, having been endorsed by several powerful unions, and he is relying on that, in combination with middle-class backing, to forge an upset.

Robot gets review at commencement

ARNOLD, Md. (AP) — Commencement exercises at Anne Arundel Community College on Saturday were absolutely traditional except for one thing: The speaker was 4½ feet tall, had a chrome head and went by the name of Robot Redford.

The decision by officials of the two-year college to march bravely into the future with a robot leading the way as commencement speaker created controversy within the student body and anxiety within the college administration.

But in the end, it all went smoothly.

Robot Redford had its big moment, doing little but roll to the front of the stage and turn from side to side while its creator, William Bakaleinikoff, spoke through an off-stage microphone. "Computers are now a part of us all," he said.

But Robot Redford was clearly upstaged by the event's human participants.

It was class valedictorian Kathleen Hammac who brought the crowd to its feet for a standing ovation, when she broke into tears while thanking her parents and two small daughters for their support during her education.

AP Laserphoto

Robot Redford moves to the front of the rostrum to deliver the commencement address Saturday as Anne Arundel Community College President Thomas Florestano, wearing robe with stripes on sleeves, gives what appears to be an approving smile. Reactions of other officials appeared mixed, matching the reaction of students to having a robot as their commencement speaker.

Trial set for two brothers

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — A trial has been scheduled July 25 for two brothers charged for the June 1980 murder of a St. Louis, Mo., man whose body was found at a Teton Pass campground.

District Judge Robert Ranck set the trial for Eugene Camp and his brother Victor, who have pleaded innocent to charges of first-degree murder and armed robbery for the death of Michael Fallert.

The men entered the pleas during their arraignment Thursday. They were bound over for trial by Teton County Justice of the Peace Robert Brodie following a preliminary hearing concerning the death of Fallert, 29, a tourist.

The victim's body was discovered in January 1981 in a shallow grave near the Trail Creek Campground in a rugged area along the Wyoming-Idaho border.

The Camps were extradited from the Idaho State Prison where they were sent for illegally using Fallert's credit cards. Authorities said the brothers also had Fallert's fishing rod and other personal belongings.

During the preliminary hearing, Ronald Evans, a convict brought in from the Texas State Penitentiary, said Eugene Camp discussed the murder with him.

Jesse Jackson crusades for black votes in South

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — It's Tuesday night and the United House of Prayer for All People is rocking with 3,000 of the faithful clapping and swaying as the traveling preacher from Chicago delivers the message of his crusade.

"Slave masters thought they brought us here to be their slaves. But God really sent us here to save the human race," he says.

"Oh, yeah," voices in the crowd respond.

"There is a time for us and a place for us. And this is OUR time," he says.

A piano tinkles. "Praise the Lord," the voices shout.

"We are a people whose time has come," says the reverend, sweat trickling down his brow.

"Amen," the voices reply.

Trombones blare, the choir breaks into a pulsating gospel tune and a sea of waving hands applauds the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

THIS IS THE beginning of a Jackson-led crusade to register an additional 2 million black voters in the South before the 1984 presidential election, before the conservative Boll Weevils, a predominantly Southern bloc of congressional Democrats who have sided with President Reagan on budget cuts, seek re-election.

It also may be the first campaign swing of a presidential candidate. Jackson, who advocates a black candidacy, recently placed third among potential Democratic aspirants in a national poll. He'll decide in August whether to run.

With an entourage of 10 in a two-camper caravan, dawn-to-dusk schedule and frequent police escorts, Jackson travels with the trappings of a candidate on the stump. Mothers ask him to kiss babies, and he is often introduced as "the next president of the United States."

BUT FOR NOW Jackson is spreading the message that with a few more of them on the registration rolls, blacks can flex a lot more muscle at the polls.

"God has placed us in the belly of the whale," he tells the crowd, who nod in agreement. "... If we are sober, sane and sensitive, we can grab the whale by his vital organs and make him say YES when he wants to say NO."

North Carolina, site of the first lunch counter sit-ins in 1960, is a logical launch pad for the registration drive. More than half its eligible black population — about 505,000 people — are not registered, Jackson said.

THE IMPLICATIONS of Jackson's message were demonstrated this year in Chicago, home of his Operation PUSH (People United To Serve Humanity).

An ambitious registration drive there added more than 200,000 blacks to the rolls, carrying Harold Washington into City Hall as the city's first black mayor. Washington won with almost unanimous support from blacks.

Last week's victory by another black, Wilson Goode, in Philadelphia's Democratic mayoral primary is encouraging, too, Jackson said.

Such triumphs, the civil rights activist said, can be repeated throughout the South. "Our vote can be the insecticide to destroy the Boll Weevils," Jackson said.

ONE OF THE FIRST targets is ultra-conservative U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, who was re-elected in 1978 by slightly more than 100,000 votes.

With 200,000 more blacks registered, Jackson suggested, Republican Helms could be out of work in North Carolina.

Gov. James Hunt, a Democrat, is aware of black voter potential. He met with Jackson last week and has endorsed legislation supported by the PUSH leader that would permit high school librarians and principals to register voters. Hunt is expected to challenge Helms in 1984.

If millions of blacks register, Jackson said, 15 Southern blacks could be sitting on Capitol Hill within a few years.

In more than half the Southern congressional districts, blacks make up more than 20 percent of the population. Yet only one black — Harold Ford in Tennessee — represents a Southern congressional district from among 11 states with 96 districts, according to the Congressional Black Caucus.

STATE LEGISLATORS in many Southern states fare no better: In North Carolina, only five of 170 legislators are black. In Virginia, it's five of 140. In Arkansas, it's five of 135.

And, Jackson said, there are 150 counties in the South with a majority black population with no representation.

The priorities of some Southern members of Congress — prayer in school, military patriotism and other conservative issues — are not the answer to problems confronting blacks, Jackson tells audiences.

"The South is the poorest region in the country with the most anti-black, anti-female, anti-worker legislators in the country," he told a Fayetteville breakfast for community leaders.

It is that message that the 41-year-old Jackson delivered through the week in North Carolina as he trekked from town to town in a camper, hopping from college auditoriums to church altars, preaching and praising non-stop from early morning to late night.

Cranston to campaign in 32 states

LOS ANGELES (AP) — U.S. Sen. Alan Cranston of California plans to broaden his campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination from 10 to 32 states, his campaign manager says.

Sergio Bendixen says Cranston, who originally planned to focus on 10 key states, now aims to campaign actively in all but two of the 34 states that select convention delegates by April 3. The exceptions are the home states of two rivals, former Vice President Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota and Sen. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina.

Bendixen said the strategy change stemmed from an increase in support. His comments were reported in Saturday's Los Angeles Times.

Company to build industrial park

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Allis-Chalmers Corp., whose work force in suburban West Allis has declined from about 14,700 to 2,500 in the past 25 years, has announced plans to convert unused manufacturing space into an industrial park that could provide as many as 3,000 jobs.

Wendell F. Bueche, president of Allis-Chalmers, announced Friday the company has spent about $500,000 on plans for the center, which could attract tenants, including defense contractors and heavy-machinery manufacturers, from throughout the world.

Child's death wasn't criminal

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — A Tacoma couple who shunned medical treatment for their 5-month-old daughter on religious grounds did not commit a crime when they let her die without seeing a doctor, a coroner's jury says.

Charles and Ora Andrews' baby died of dehydration April 27 after a two-week bout of diarrhea. The jury's 5-1 decision Friday came with a statement from two jurors saying they had "serious reservations" about the parents' actions.

The family, which belongs to a sect that says it "trusts God" for healing, had been investigated 10 years ago in the death of a 21-month-old son.

Administrators won't lose jobs

ROGUE RIVER, Ore. (AP) — Two administrators at Rogue River High School won't be fired for allowing a male stripper to perform before a group of girls at the school.

The Rogue River School Board voted 5-2 Friday night not to dismiss school Principal Chuck Moore and Vice Principal Nancy Lockwood. Instead, Moore was given a five-day suspension without pay and Ms. Lockwood was given a seven-day suspension.

The action resulted from an April 22 birthday surprise for an 18-year-old female student. A man stripped down to a brief bathing suit to the music of a rock 'n' roll record in a library meeting room at the school, and about 10 girls witnessed the show.

Charges filed against landlord

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Thirty misdemeanor charges have been filed against the landlord of a hotel where a man died in a fire May 13, although the fire itself was attributed to a cigarette in the victim's apartment.

Envoy to Central America would talk with Salvadoran guerillas

WASHINGTON — Richard B. Stone, former Florida Democratic senator President Reagan picked as special envoy to Central America, said Friday he "would be glad" to talk with Salvadoran guerrillas if it would foster the cause of peace in that troubled country.

Stone emphasized, however, that his mission is to encourage El Salvador and other Central American countries that consider themselves menaced by the Sandinistas in Nicaragua to negotiate their differences.

He told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that it would be "counterproductive" for the United States to attempt to dictate a solution to the problems of El Salvador and the other Central American countries.

Three Times, under questioning first by committee chairman Charles Percy, R-Ill., and then by Sens. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., and Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., stone affirmed that he would make contact even with the guerrilla leadership of the Farabundo Marti Liberation Front-Democratic Revolutionary Front of El Salvador, which has been waging guerrilla warfare against the U.S.-backed government for nearly four years now.

ASKED HOW HE would deal with Latin American peacemakers already active in the region, Stone told Kassebaum: "I am going to be working for them. If they wish me to work with them, that would be their decision.

— "I will be encouraging all opposition groups, as well as all elements within society, to work with them," Stone said.

He said he had been asked if he would be willing to talk to Guillermo Ungo, the civilian spokesman for the Salvadoran guerrillas, and that he had replied that "the proper and foremost people" with whom Ungo should talk are the members of the Peace Commission, recently established by Salvadoran President Alvaro Magana.

"But I would be glad to have a discussion with them (the guerrilla leaders) if that would advance or foster the ability of getting them all together," Stone said.

None of the questions put to Stone was hostile. All the members of the committee present — Percy, Pell, Richard Lugar, R-Ind., Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., and Kassebaum — indicated they will vote to confirm his nomination next week.

PERCY, HOWEVER, emphasized his concern at reports that "right-wing violence" was increasing in El Salvador in recent weeks.

Escalation of death squad activities would do more than anything else to undermine U.S. support for the embattled Salvadoran government, Percy said.

Tsongas also commented that if the death squads, which have been blamed for many of the estimated 30,000 political killings in El Salvador since the coup of Oct. 15, 1979, were not eliminated, "a feeling of disgust and non-American involvement" in El Salvador would grow in the United States.

Stone told the committee that the Magana government is working to bring an end to political violence. Stone already has established close contact with the Peace Commission, established to help work out arrangements for elections in which the opposition could participate. The commission is headed by Francisco Quinones, who was present, along with Salvadoran Ambassador Ernesto Rivas-Gallont, at the committee hearings.

AS SENATE RULES prohibit the testimony of other than U.S. citizens, Percy invited the two Salvadorans into a private office for discussions after the hearing was ended.

During the course of the 85-minute session, Stone turned aside questions that appeared intended to reinforce his "hard-line image," even though Pell had said at the start of the hearing that there are times when those "with hard-line images can accomplish more than those of us with soft-line images."

Stone told the Senators that "it is the role of the United States to support (Central and Latin American peacemaking) efforts ... rather than trying to impose U.S. views on Central America."

Judge gives youths sentence in drowning

NEWTON, N.J. — Two teenagers who kept a youth from climbing out of a lake until he drowned were sentenced to seven years in prison by a judge who called it a "cruel, stupid, vicious" crime.

"This was no prank, no booze-party joke," Superior Judge Frederic G. Weber said Friday of the Aug. 30 death of 16-year-old Paul Stephens.

After being beaten and thrown into Lake Hopatcong during a drunken brawl, Stephens was forced to remain in the water, according to authorities. He tired while trying to swim across the 150-foot cove and drowned.

Thomas Clark, 15, and Joseph Mills, 17, both of Hopatcong, must each serve at least three years in prison before becoming eligible for parole. Each was ordered to pay $1,000 from prison earnings to the state Violent Crimes Compensation Board.

"I don't know what to say," a tearful Clark told the judge. "I am very sorry for what I have done, your honor. If I wasn't drunk, I would have stopped the fight."

But Weber said, "This was a cruel, stupid, vicious, intentional, undeniably criminal incident that cost the life of a young boy. It must not happen again."

AIDS disease not harmful to general public

NEW YORK (AP) — For a time, before it even had a name, the ailment now known as AIDS was referred to offhandedly as a "gay disease," believed limited to male homosexuals.

Then it appeared in heroin users, Haitian immigrants and hemophiliacs.

Last week, the circle grew. It was reported in a New York City sanitation man and in heterosexual partners of drug abusers. There seemed to be evidence it could be passed from one member of a household to another without intimate contact.

Fears grew. But the leader of the fight against AIDS says the danger to the public has been overstated.

"The risk to the general public is minimal," says Dr. James Curran, head of the AIDS task force at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

"Ninety-five percent of the cases are in the four high risk groups (homosexuals, hemophiliacs, drug abusers and Haitian immigrants). Among the other 5 percent, many have either potential explanations or have been inadequately evaluated."

AIDS, acquired immune deficiency syndrome, first appeared in 1979, but it was not until the spring of 1981 that doctors in New York and California realized they were dealing with an epidemic rather than isolated cases.

Since then, the disease has spread quickly. The CDC now gets reports of four or five cases a day.

But reports that the number of cases is doubling every six months are, again, misleading, Curran says.

"It did double every six months the first three years, but the history of the illness is so short, that's almost meaningless," Curran says. "Eventually it's going to have to slow down."

How can he be certain? "Look at hepatitis B, serum hepatitis," he says. "Here is an infection that spreads more easily than AIDS and faster than AIDS. It's been around forever. It's had its opportunity to spread around, and it's still a much greater threat to gay men and drug addicts than to the rest of the population."

Another reason to think AIDS will not spread widely is that no health workers have yet come down with it.

"I've been taking care of AIDS patients for three years, and I haven't got AIDS yet, and there's been no spread in the hospital," says Dr. James Oleske of the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey.

"There will be people who don't have (AIDS) risk factors and will develop AIDS, but it's going to be a rare occurrence," he says.

Oleske says he has received many calls in the last few days from people on the verge of panic over AIDS. He says one caller asked whether she should dismiss her Haitian housekeeper.

Dr. Joyce Wallace, a New York physician who has several patients with AIDS, says the public reaction to the recent AIDS stories has been "pretty awful."

Curran and others are also emphasizing that AIDS is not uniformly fatal, as many news accounts have had it.

Russell Popp stands in the remains of his mobile home after a tornado lifted the roof and walls Friday leaving only a table of electronic gear in the middle of the room. Twisters tore through Southeast Texas killing at least eleven persons.

Fifty homes evacuated as Bayou overflows

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — About 50 residences were evacuated Saturday as the Hilldebrandt Bayou overflowed during a new wave of tornado-bearing storms, which a day earlier ripped through an airport and a hospital in far Southeast Texas.

The refugees were taken to shelters at public schools here and in Nederland, said Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman David Wells.

Meanwhile, a twister touched down about 12:30 p.m. Saturday near Pineridge, but caused no damage, said a Hardin County sheriff's dispatcher. A funnel was reported near Liberty about 2:45 p.m. but did not touch down.

Workers braved the heavy rains and tornado warnings Saturday to clear rubble from the Jefferson County Airport's main terminal at Nederland and St. Mary Hospital in Port Arthur.

A tornado with winds clocked at more than 125 mph Friday sent the terminal's roof crashing on a crowd of about 50 people, killing a Groves man and injuring at least 11 others.

Arthur B. Vela, 55, an ARCO Chemical employee, was killed when a beam from the ceiling hit him on the back of his head, authorities said.

Metro Airlines station agent Terry Gillespie, 31, saw the roof collapse and escaped injury by diving under a table.

"The roof began to make noises and we noticed it right after we found out that one of our planes out there had turned over," he said.

"Then the roof started to come down in there and people ran out into the middle," he said. "I got under this table back here and got away from it."

William Watkins, 39, of Dallas, said he saw a bulkhead above the airport restaurant starting to crack and fall.

"I saw hail mounting up on the ledge out there, and then we heard about that plane turning over," he said. "Then water started coming in and I saw that support across the restaurant start to crumble."

At St. Mary Hospital, three people were injured Friday when a tornado ripped off part of the roof.

"An employee got glass in his eye, a nurse was slammed in the chest by a swinging door, a visitor had an artery in his arm severed," said spokewoman Chris Hobart.

Rain washes 500 persons from homes

CONROE, Texas (AP) — Rescue workers used boats and four-wheel-drive vehicles in a race with new storms Saturday as about 500 people were forced to take refuge in Montgomery County centers.

Rain continued to pelt the area north of Houston and several tornado sightings were reported a day after twisters killed two county residents and injured at least a dozen others.

Some people refused to leave their homes even though creeks ran as deep as 20 feet over some county roads, said constable's officer J. McDougal.

"We've got several families over in east county that won't leave," he said. "We've been telling them, 'OK, give me your name, date of birth and next of kin so we can notify them when we find your body.'"

McDougal said the threat usually was effective.

One injured in Texas storm

AUSTIN (AP) — Four tornadoes skipped across central Texas Saturday, one of them injuring a woman in the tiny community of Northrup, authorities said.

Rodney Meyer, chief deputy in Lee County, said a tornado dipped down long enough Saturday morning to "twist a bunch of trees in two," tear up a barn and wreck a mobile home.

"The lady was inside of it," Meyer said. "She walked out of it, but they took her to the hospital."

He said the woman did not want to be identified. She suffered minor injuries, Meyer said.

Northrup is a few miles south of Giddings in Lee County.

Gonzales, about 60 miles east of San Antonio, was threatened by a twister Saturday morning, but the tornado caused no damage, authorities said.

Tornadoes also touched down at Dublin and Gorman in north central Texas, but caused no damage, according to the National Weather Service.

Roads were closed in Caldwell, Comal and Fayette counties of central Texas because of flooding.

Travis County Sheriff's officials said there were no reports of weather-related damage or injuries, but said citizens were alarmed by sheeting rain and strong winds that whipped through Austin and Travis County through Friday night and Saturday morning.

Some flooding and power outages were reported around Austin. Firefighters were sent out to monitor area creeks, which were almost over their banks at about 3 p.m. Friday. But the rains subsided and the creeks went down.

A motorist reported a funnel cloud over Del Valle, a community east of Austin and adjacent to Bergstrom Air Force Base, but authorities said it was not confirmed by the NWS and that no damage was reported.

Residents of Buda, south of Austin, reported hail larger than golf balls. Pea-sized hail fell in Austin.

By mid-morning Saturday, Travis County skies had cleared.

Congressman surveys Texas damage

By Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, May 20 – Rep. Bill Patman, D., Ganado flew to Texas Friday afternoon to survey damage in four counties in his South Texas district which have been hit by tornadoes.

Patman planned to take pictures and gather information preparatory to filing a disaster claim for federal rehabilitative funds.

The counties are: Austin, Waller, Montgomery and Houston.

Gonzalez: U.S. preparing to send additional troops into Lebanon

By Washington Bureau

Washington, May 20 – The U.S. is preparing now to send more troops into Lebanon, Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D., San Antonio has been informed.

President Reagan at his news conference Tuesday night said he had no intention of so doing.

"I know that we are at this very moment preparing to send more troops there," repeated the congressman.

"What worries me, also is that we have been manipulated into a position of commitment far and above what we can deliver without our going through the divisiveness we experienced over the Viet Nam war."

The congressman said that the commitment of more troops is part of a secret agreement which the U.S. arrived at with nations in the Middle East. He said the sending of the 75 F-16 planes to Israel now, after the delay, was part of the "secret agreement which the U.S. made in the Middle East."

The congressman said that both House and Senate committees dealing with foreign affairs have "abdicated" their responsibilities in not checking on the application of the War Powers Act and its limits on presidential powers in committing troops abroad.

Gonzalez was somewhat surprised when he received an inquiry from an involved House committee staffer wondering "Why is Mr. Gonzalez so concerned about this?"

"I am interested because this is my country and they (the Reagan administration and the Congress) are getting us involved permanently with forces overseas in a near-combat situation."

Here is the Congressman's further comments on the situation: "I predict that if there is any significant withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon, the President will order an increased number of U.S. Marines there."

"Last year the Administration laid plans for increasing the U.S. commitment to Lebanon, and said then that the only reason more troops had not been sent was that they were waiting for 'some progress' to be made on withdrawal of foreign forces (meaning Israeli and Syrian) troops there. Israrel has agreed to withdraw, and says that they might pull back even if the Syrians don't. That meets the definition of 'progress' that would trigger added Marine troop dispatches to Lebanon. I don't think the Israelis would be suggesting a pullback if they did not have some agreement that the U.S. would fill the vacuum."

"Also, it is important to note that in the withdrawal agreement signed earlier this week, there are side-- and secret– agreements. The Unied States is publicly committed to act as guarantor of the agreement, and to referee disputes. But what about the secret agreements? I think that those secret agreements are the key to the public agreement, and that they probably provide for these kinds of things: (1) U.S. economic and military support to Lebanon, against any Syrian economic reprisal or military attack. This would of course mean moving Marines into Lebanon so that Syrian attacks would involve the United States. (2) A possible agreement to move U.S. forces in the area between syrian and Israeli forces so that any Syrian move against Israeli troops would invole U.S. troops. (3) An agreement to provide Israel with satellete and other intelligence data, concerning Syrian movements and aims."

"Even though there is a multinational force in Lebanon (France, for example, has 2000 troops there, compared to our 1200) all sides are looking to the U.S to pave the way to agreements, and then to guarantee them. All along, the effort has been to bring the United States into a deeper involvement."

"Right now, in the Sinai, it is U.S. Army troops that guarantee the peace, by setting a condition that would make either Egypt or Israel kill Amerians in order to attack each other. It isn't so far fetched to suggest that Americans might likewise be set up as a screen between Syria and Lebanon, or between Syrian and Israeli forces down in the Bekaa Valley."

"Our Marines have already been in Lebanon far lonfger than the War Power Act permits. The law says that if our troops are dispatched into a war situation, Congress has to give its approval within 60 days. That hasn't happened. Congress in fact has abdicated. We haven't insisted on full, complete information about the nature and extent of our commitments in the Middle East. I don't want us backing into an open-ended, dangerous situation. I am asking that we look before we leap further into this briar patch."

Some ten or twelve mobile homes in the Brandywine Trailer Park north of Houston were destroyed Friday by a series of tornados which swept through southeast Texas killing at least eleven persons. A fourteen-year-old girl died in this park when her trailer overturned.

Death toll unusual for Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — The death toll from a swarm of tornadoes that ravaged Southeast Texas Friday is unusually high for the region, a storm expert says.

At least 10 people from Waller, Washington, Liberty, Montgomery and Jefferson counties were killed when the wave of twisters hit the area.

Previously, only nine deaths were recorded from nine tornadoes in Harris County since 1916, said Fred Ostby, director of the National Severe Storm Forecasting Center in Kansas City, Mo.

Each of the nine previous killer tornadoes caused only one death, Ostby told the Houston Chronicle.

While Harris County recorded 92 twisters from 1950 through 1982 — the highest number in the country — only four of them resulted in fatalities, he said.

That number still is the highest of any county in Texas, he added.

The Gulf Coast "also seems to get more than its share of tornadoes at night," putting a serious strain on warning systems, Ostby said.

High humidity, a key factor in the formation of tornadoes, may be a reason for the frequent nighttime formations, he said.

He said about 15 percent of the tornadoes that strike the Gulf states hit at night. Only 5 percent of the tornadoes that strike the Great Plains states occur between midnight and 6 a.m.

Bill concerning sick leave wins preliminary approval

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The House of Representatives has given preliminary approval to legislation by Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, providing for teachers to use sick leave or personal leave to care for an ill family member.

The bill would change existing law to provide that sick leave or personal leave could be used for an illness of the teacher, an illness of a member of the teacher's immediate family, a family emergency or a death in the teacher's immediate family.

Opponent holds press conference

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, May 20 – Garry Mauro, state land commissioner of Texas, reported that Robert Krueger of New Braunfels "is doing extremely well" in his race for the U.S. Senate to upseat Sen. John G. Tower, R., Texas. His remarks came during a press conference on preservation of Texas Gulf wetlands.

Mauro, a former campaign staffer for Krueger in a past campaign, said Krueger might not be so well known.

Craig Washington, the second black Texas senator in 100 years, wants more than a footnote in history. He'd like a full page, perhaps as Texas' next attorney general or lieutenant governor.

Senate's only black wants statewide office

AUSTIN (AP) — Craig Washington, only the second black senator in Texas in 100 years, wants more than a footnote in history. He'd like a full page, thank you, perhaps as Texas' next attorney general or lieutenant governor.

This "viable" candidate is 41, lives in Houston, has a wife and two children, goes to an Episcopal church, practices criminal defense law for a living and has moonlighted for a decade as a legislator.

Washington was a campus rebel who thought it a "badge of courage" to make "F's" at Prairie View A&M.He became an honor student in law who, by the time he graduated from Texas Southern University, was made assistant dean.

A friend, Mickey Leland — now Congressman Leland of Houston — talked Washington into running for the Texas House. In 1981, he was appointed assistant presiding officer, but gave up a "fair" chance at becoming House speaker this session to run unopposed for the state Senate, becoming the first black senator since Barbara Jordan in 1972 and the second since 1883.

His presence alone, as the only black senator, attracts close attention from black youths visiting in the gallery, but Washington dismisses the suggestion that he might be a role model for them.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Oil, gas important to Texas' economy

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Over the years, Texas' image has been linked — for better or for worse — with oil and gas.

And with good reason.

Texas remains a mainstay in the nation's oil and gas industry — and oil and gas remains of critical importance in Texas' economy.

Gov. Mark White noted that in his recent television spots urging Texans to tell their legislators the lawmakers should raise taxes on alcohol and cigarettes to provide for increased teachers' salaries.

"Because oil and gas production is low," White says, "we simply don't have the dollars needed for education."

In fact, because oil and gas production is down, Texas' economy and state revenues as a whole are suffering.

Comptroller Bob Bullock recently underscored the importance of oil and gas in Texas' economy with his release of a study showing 30 per cent of the state's sales tax, and 40 per cent of Houston's sales tax, is tied "directly or indirectly to the Texas oil industry."

Bullock reports oil and gas companies pay about 11 per cent of the total sales taxes statewide on a direct basis, with another 19 per cent paid "by the 286,000 Texans who work in the industry and spend their paychecks on taxable merchandise."

The study also shows the impact of oil industry sales tax payments is concentrated in Dallas and Houston — with those areas accounting for over 70 per cent of the industry's direct sales tax payments (with 52.5 per cent in Houston).

Class leaders look to future — and past

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

For Midland seniors, that time of climbing to the top, pausing and looking out into the future has arrived.

The end of high school is a time of remembering and a time of dreaming. It also is a time of uniting before separating.

"It's kinda like you're standing in a doorway and you look back. You're kinda sad, ya know, but then you look out the door and see what's ahead and you kinda forget what was left behind," Stace Bradshaw explained.

The Lee High School valedictorian has a little more grasp on what his future holds for him: West Point.

"Everybody gets new cars to go off to college and I get a hair cut," he said with a laugh.

But the leaders of the Class of '83 are firm in their feelings of unity — and excited about the future on their own.

"He's in a door, she's in a door and I'm in a fog," Midland High Valedictorian Steve Baskin said, laughing. "But looking at college — it is exciting."

Including salutatorians Dana Tompkins, of Lee, and Amy Candiotti, of MHS, the front-of-the-class foursome said the feeling of senior togetherness is an important experience. So is making it on their own.

"The closer you get to graduation, the closer you feel to everyone," Baskin said. "As soon as you start whistling 'Pomp and Circumstance,' you know you've got it made."

The cliques aren't as tight during the senior year, the four agreed. "I kinda float from one group to another — depending on what I wear that day," Bradshaw said with a grin.

STILL, THE TIME for new trickles of friends is approaching rapidly.

"In junior high, everyone pretty much decided about who was going to be the smart one, who was going to the class clown," said Baskin, who plans to attend Davidson College. "Going off to where no one knows you, you'll have a chance to change."

"Midland is so conservative," Ms. Tompkins agreed. By talking to people who have left Midland and returned to visit, and through out-of-town speech competitions, Ms. Tompkins said she has learned about the open-mindedness of other communities.

"In speech, we travel a lot," she said, "so we can see different places where there are different views. And we can pick up on different stuff.

"I think that's the way it should be," the future Aggie added. "Everyone is so engrained in this atmosphere that they won't even look into other ideas — like communism or socialism. And some don't even know what they really mean."

"I think Midland is ideologically sheltered," Baskin agreed. "But not socially. You know, the music I listen to and the games I play have been openly attacked as satanical."

BRADSHAW POINTED out the performance of rock singer Ozzie Osborn had been publicly opposed although the only arrest on his record was public intoxication. He said if Willie Nelson, who's been hit with driving while intoxicated charges and linked with cocaine, were to come to the area, there would be no opposition to his performance.

"They try to link rock and roll with this imaginary chain," Ms. Tompkins said. "It's not the music that makes kids do stuff — it's morals."

"Midland is the epitomy of capitalism," Bradshaw said.

"People in Midland, I think we've been sheltered, but when you think about what's going on in other parts of the country..." Ms. Tompkins said. "Sure, we don't have summer jobs but that's not as major as the 85 percent unemployment in St. Louis, I think.

"All the people out here are the same way they've been for years," she continued. "They won't let industry for blue collar workers come in."

Maybe the ideals and culture haven't changed, but the students think drug usage has.

"Our generation is looked on as really wild," Ms. Tompkins said. "But I think there is too much emphasis on the problems that exist and not much action on getting the hard users and busting parties. There's a lot of talk and less action."

According to Bradshaw, who is following two brothers out of high school, this graduating class isn't as "crazy" as previous ones.

"Guys then, and these are the leaders — the football studs — they'd go into Odessa into some ol' trucker bar and get in fights. They had a massive drug problem. Teachers were intimidated by them."

THAT'S NOT the case now, as students and faculty have shown more cooperation and support to each other, they said.

Bradshaw said the sexual revolution and drug culture from the 60's is fading. "Everybody is starting to grow out of it."

Alcohol, however, remains.

"I think drinking is highly overexaggerated by adults and also by students," Bradshaw said. "Probably only 75 percent of the drinking (bragged about) is actually done."

"Drinking is more popular than drugs," Ms. Tompkins said. "Drugs are out."

"Drugs are back seat," Bradshaw agreed, adding that those who use them don't push them on others. "They're pretty discreet."

But employment concerns are "in."

The four graduating leaders said a college education is necessary to find a good job, although money isn't the most important part of a job.

In the speech Ms. Candiotti will present at graduation Friday night, the message to fellow students is to follow their instincts — regardless of the monetary rewards.

"I think in the Midland area, the emphasis is on materialism," said Ms. Candiotti, who plans to return to Washington, her home state, for college.

ALTHOUGH SHE doesn't know what she plans to study in college, she does know the career she chooses won't be based on a high-paying salary.

The others agreed, although many in their classes may not.

"I bet 90 percent of the honor graduates are going into engineering," Baskin, who probably will major in liberal arts, said.

The main reason he wants to go into that major is to learn to communicate, he said.

"There are a lot of people who are highly educated but won't be able to communicate," he explained. "I think it's a good basis to have."

Regardless of the field, education past the four years of college is important, they said.

"IT'S MANDATORY," said Bradshaw. "You can't get hardly any (kind of employment) with a four-year degree."

Bradshaw said he will enter the military after college, while Ms. Tompkins said she has plans for medical school.

"Everyone keeps asking what I am going to do and I don't know," Ms. Candiotti said, laughing. A masters degree is a possibility, though, according to Ms. Candiotti and Baskin.

But the immediate future is important, too. There are the graduation parties, a brief vacation that ends in June for Bradshaw, traveling for Basken, a class at Midland College for Ms. Tompkins and a search for a summer job for Ms. Candiotti.

It is the shortage of jobs in Midland that has made the Class of '83 more aware of the advantages of a college education.

"If you don't want to cook tacos or hamburgers, you're out of luck," Bradshaw said.

City ousting two home businesses

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Max George Schulze says he had no idea the accounting business he set up 20 years ago at 1110 W. Indiana Ave. was in violation of municipal zoning ordinances that restrict commercial enterprise in residential neighborhoods.

Last week, however, he received a letter from the city informing him he has 10 days to cease operations or face fines of up to $200 a day for each day he remains in violation.

Dated May 16, the letter says: "Current zoning for (your) area does not permit use of the property for operation of an accounting business, as advertised in the Yellow Pages."

A similar letter went out to the owner of Aqua Maid Pool Service, a swimming pool maintenance company at 3307 Baumann Ave.

The city averages four to five complaints a year about illegal home businesses, according to Code Enforcement Administrator George Wolf.

"It's normally people who've just moved here and don't know about the ordinance," he said, "or those who didn't check first before starting a business.

"Zoning ordinances are designed to protect the integrity of a neighborhood by eliminating eyesores and noise, and by reducing vehicular traffic on residential streets."

While commercial operations in residential districts are not banned entirely, they come under certain restrictions spelled out in a section of the ordinance titled "Customary Home Occupations."

For instance, structural alterations can't be made to the building or any of its rooms; the employment of persons other than members of the household is prohibited; signs cannot be used to advertise the business; and commodities cannot be offered for sale on the property.

In addition, the business can't "involve visits to the premises (by) members of the public in the capacity of clients, patients or customers" on a daily routine basis.

Also, the "home occupation must be an incidental use to one of the principal uses permitted in the district and shall never be permitted as a principal use."

Included in the list of proscribed enterprises are barber shops, beauty shops, carpentry shops, radio or television shops, plumbers' shops, electricians' shops, auto repair shops, auto painting shops, furniture repair shops, sign painting shops "or other similar uses."

On April 26, the city council cited zoning restrictions and neighborhood opposition as the reasons for denying Carolyn Mitchell's request for a temporary, special-use permit to set up a house trailer in her backyard at 1105 W. Missouri Ave.

She said the arrangement would have allowed her 23-year-old handicapped son to be close to his family while he gained the roots of independence.

Denial of the request stirred up a controversy that Wolf believes prompted complaints about Schulze's accounting practice and the swimming pool maintenance service.

When Schulze established the practice in March 1963, he also lived at that address. But he subsequently moved to 3605 Imperial and the house at 1110 W. Indiana is strictly a business operation employing one secretary, he noted.

Our 'Bureau of Accuracy' program will continue

Monday marks the one-year anniversary of the Reporter-Telegram's Bureau of Accuracy, a program designed to enable us to monitor the quality and accuracy of the newspaper's content and to provide us with the reader input that helps us do that.

The program works like this: Each day our librarian clips and mails several news stories or features that appeared in that day's edition, accompanied by a questionnaire which asks if information in the story and the headline were correct and invites personal comment from the principal subject of the story. A postage-paid envelope is enclosed for the return of the questionnaire. Replies are routed to the writers involved, supervising editors and the newspaper's editor and publisher before being filed.

Response has been excellent. In the past year we have mailed more than 800 questionnaires and received more than 600 replies.

Overall, that response has been positive and shows us that we are publishing, at least most of the time, what we seek to accomplish: news and features that are interesting, accurate and fair. A few samples:

About 200 Midlanders enter logo competition

A total of 201 entries were received in the Midland Reporter-Telegram's logo contest, according to an announcement by the newspaper's Promotions Committee.

Deadline for entries was last Monday.

Sally Pate, a member of the Promotions Committee and chairman of the three-person subcommittee that directed the logo contest, said, "We were very impressed with both the number and quality of the entries in each of the three categories. Readers of the Reporter-Telegram really got involved in the contest.

"That's important because we wanted community help in selecting an emblem to represent the newspaper and Midland in general," she added.

Most entries received were in the adult category — 106. But 72 entries were submitted in the category for youngsters in grades one through six. There were 23 entries in the division for students in grades seven through 12.

Judging is scheduled to begin Monday and will continue through June 15. Judges will be the 10 members of the Promotions Committee, Editor Jim Servatius and Publisher George B. Irish.

Ten finalists will be selected in each of the three categories and from the finalists a winner will be chosen in each category.

'Mac' McPatrick still seeking an easy job

While many workers in both white and blue collars are tenaciously holding on to their jobs, others are pretty flippant about work. It comes and it goes — like the government dole.

"Mac" McPatrick, who is about as fictitious as Mr. Murphy, the law breaker ("If anything can go wrong, it will"), is a sterling, though somewhat tarnished, example.

He's 39 now, and always has been, but he's still at his old "con" game.

Back in the '30s, this mythical character was quite enterprising. While his fellow Americans were in soup lines and signing up for Civilian Conservation Corps and Works Progress Administration jobs, he was out whistling in the wind.

He sold miniature wishbones, replicas of apple cores and wilted-and-pressed four-leaf clovers.

The 'bones were for luck. He got more laughs and frowns than cash out of his wishbones. All he wanted was a nickel a piece. The problem was that everybody else wanted the same nickel but had more to offer, such as food or a chance on a raffle.

Then he really got competitive. He started selling those apples cores for less than the price of the whole fruit. His reasoning was that the frustrated masses in the Depression would scrape up those rare coins just for the satisfaction of chunking cores at politicians. He finally figured out the flaw in the core.

The four-leaf "thing" went limp, too.

Finally, he went to work for the CCC. He held up the side of buildings and tested walkways. He leaned and stood around a lot.

When the war came, he really got cunning. He beat the draft by getting a job essential to the war effort. He collected scrap metal and old tires for "The Cause."

In his spare time, he fixed up old rent houses he had bought for taxes in the late '30s and reasoned he could make good money by jacking up the rent, since there was military base near by. The OPA — Office of Price Administratin — talked him out of his scheme.

He lost his job collecting scrap and rubber and ended up drafted and in the Army. He managed to stay back in the supply lines while the war was being waged.

After the war, Mac went into the Army-Navy Surplus Store business. But profits weren't what he had envisioned, and he became bored from the drabness of his merchandise. Besides, he didn't like dealing with the government.

By then, drive-in movies were becoming popular. So, he got into constructing the towering screens and selling popcorn poppers. But television was making inroads, nutritionists were questioning the value of popped corn, and families quit coming to drive-ins.

After that, he got into television repair work, but the work part of the job drove him off.

Later in the 1950s, he decided to get smart and learned; he went off to college to study geology. But just as he got into the field and was making his usual unrealistic plans, geologists he looked up to were out of jobs. Some were pumping gasolines and changing oil and tires.

(See 'MAC,' Page 2B)

Bureau of Accuracy continues

"I think the story was accurate and factual. Both sides were given equal space. I hope you will continue this sort of coverage"..."We are very pleased. All the information is correct and well reported. The facts are well presented and very readable"..."I commend you on your straightforward reporting of the Permian Basin oil and gas business"..."We find it positive in the community that the R-T reports on many lifestyles, including those of various ethnic backgrounds."

Not all our subjects have felt that way. Among critical comments received were these:

"The paper needs to hire a good proofreader"..."My only criticism is that the story seems awfully disjointed. I had difficulty following it even though I participated in the meeting"..."I do not think this story rated the space nor the importance you have given it"..."It's just incredible to me that someone with even a casual acquaintance with the English language could read this article and then write these two headlines. They are completely misleading."

Equally important to us were comments concerning the program itself. These included:

"Thanks for asking and for your concern for accuracy"..."Glad to see this service"..."I believe this is a good program and appreciate your undertaking it"..."I have been quoted and misquoted many times by the press but this is the first time I have ever been given the opportunity to correct any misinterpretation."

As a result of readers' participation and the overwhelming number who responded with their comments, both positive and negative, we believe our staff of editors and writers tries even harder to produce the kind of newspaper you want and deserve. That response is a welcome and valuable tool in helping us do that.

The program will be continued.

Said Dorothy Oswald, who lives at 1108 Indiana, "It's totally ridiculous for the city to turn the Mitchells down when there are all sorts of illegal businesses going on in residential neighborhoods."

Mrs. Oswald added that she is not the person who complained about Schulze, who declined comment on the cease-and-desist order he received from the city.

Aqua Maid owner John Couch could not be reached for comment.

Wolf, meanwhile, advises people with questions about home occupations to contact the Planning and Zoning Department at city hall.

'Mac' McPatrick still after that easy job

That wasn't for Mac.

He quit geology, tried out his luck in selling used cars but turned out to be a lemon himself.

By and by, he got a sawmill job. But he didn't like the dust or the pay and felt he needed more respect.

That's when he moved out West, became part of the "oil field trash" genre and started making some money. The oil boom was gushing. And oil companies were groping for bodies to work on rigs.

Being an enterprising sort, he changed jobs about everytime the wind changed directions.

But the last of those jobs fizzled out. The boom was dying. Jobs were scarce. Suddenly, he became expendable, wasn't a choice body on the rig site, and wasn't in favor with the boss or his daughter.

Finally, he stumbled onto a new field which would meet his challenge: computers. Being a temperamental guy, he figured computers were his electronic cousin. So, he picked up a book on computer terms, hung around computer shows, and now he's looking for a job as a computer programmer, salesman or troubleshooter.

Clever fellow. He reasoned that since businessmen know as little about computers as he does, he can con one fellow after another out of a job to make a go of it until there's a market for wishbones, apple cores and four-leaf clovers.

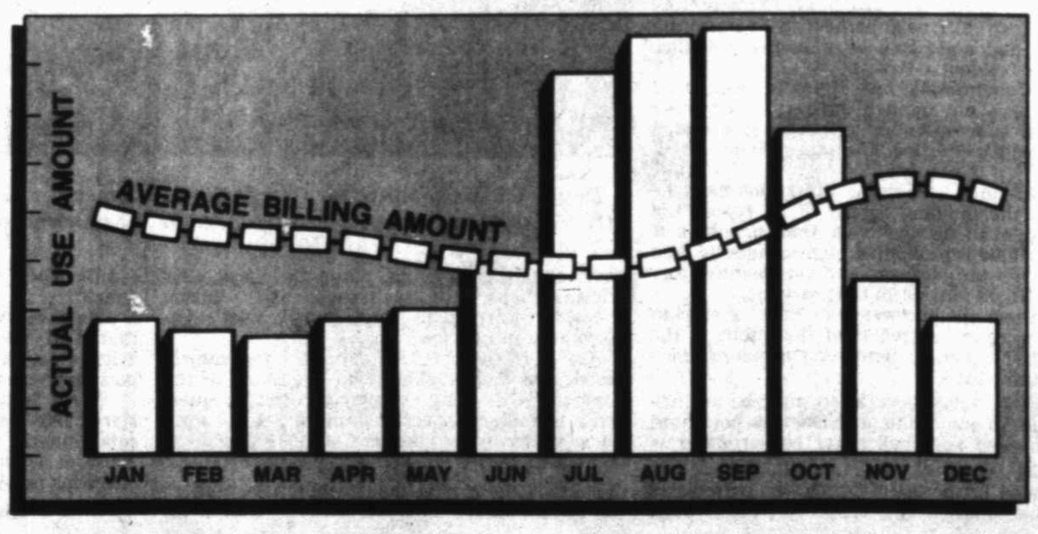
Average Billing can help smooth out high summer electric bills.



In the summer, intense Texas heat can make your air conditioner work longer and drive your electric bill up in a hurry.

Our Average Billing Plan can help by "averaging out" your payments. You still pay for all the electricity you use, and your payments will still vary from month to month. However, in high-use months you pay for less electricity than you use, and in low-use months you pay for more.

Average Billing can help smooth out high summer electric bills. It's available to both residential customers and churches. If you'd like to know more, give us a call at Texas Electric.

Where Your Money Makes A Difference

Answer Line

By Franchelle Moore

P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702

ATTENTION G.D.S.: In response to your question appearing in Answer Line last week, the following letter has been received:

"I am writing in reference to your column dated Sunday, May 15, 1983. There was an inquiry made on whether there were any food co-ops operating in Midland. I am happy to inform you that Casa de Amigos, an ecumenical Christian social service agency, is presently helping members of the community organize food co-ops. There are presently three food co-ops operating through Casa de Amigos. Anyone interested in organizing a food co-op should contact Martha at Casa de Amigos, 682-9701. — Martha Garza"

In connection with the recent trial in Midland of Eugene Lackey, it would be interesting to have someone in the legal profession shed some light on the following questions:

1. This was a second trial for Lackey because of improper questioning of a proposed juror in the first trial. Since a judge was present at the time of this questioning, why wasn't this corrected at that time, rather than resulting in the expense of a second trial? Should not the judge be responsible for allowing this impropriety be made to account for his apparent negligence?

2. A team of three lawyers for the defendant was mentioned. Where does the money come from for these lawyers; what amounts are allowed and paid for their services; and how is it determined that a person is unable to provide for his own defense? Is it simply a matter of saying you do not have the money?

In the recent trial of Michael Eugene Sharp, even though the jury wanted to assess the death penalty they were not allowed to because of a word that had been left out of the charge. Here again this seems to be a technicality that prevents justice being meted out. Here again someone is responsible for negligence and is there no recourse?

Finally, a comment by the legal profession on the fact that we go to the expense of having a jury trial, which is some cases assess the death penalty. Then, throughout the country, it appears impossible to bring about the punishment the jury assessed. Isn't this a matter that needs to be addressed either by our legislative bodies or the legal community? — Vera Wecker

ANSWER: Woody Leverett, Midland attorney, discusses your questions, pointing out that it is difficult to make concrete responses without knowing specific details.

Concerning your first question, Leverett does not know what the improper questioning was, but points out that in trials, especially capital murder trials, a judge has to make split decisions as to what is admissable and what is not, without having the time necessary to study each item.

He explains that when appeals are made by the defense attorneys, they obtain a transcript of the trial proceedings and study it closely to form grounds for appeals.

In a felony case, judges use discretion in deciding if a defendant is capable of paying for his defense. The defendant is questioned about his financial status, if he has dependents, etc. If a prisoner is unable to post bond and remains in jail, it is indicative he cannot afford an attorney. The defendant is usually required to sign a pauper's oath before the judge appoints defense attorneys.

Money for the defense of indigent criminals in Midland County is provided by the Midland County Bar Association and Midland County. Members of the bar not wishing to represent indigents make payments to the association. This money is used to pay lawyers who assume the responsibility. Lawyers appointed by a judge present an invoice of expenses involved in the defense. The judge then decides on the amount to be paid by the county and bar plan, and this amount, according to Leverett, is much less than what the lawyer normally receives in regular practice.

In a case such as the Sharp trial with the omission of a word in the charge, Leverett emphasizes that the prosecutor must "really be on his toes" in drafting the complaint. He also points out that a prosecutor in a small town does not have the funds and staff that those in larger cities do to prepare complaints. In some cases, due to a heavy case load, indictments are prepared in haste, increasing the possibility of human error. A lot of the blame also could be placed on the courts of appeal when an indictment is ruled incorrect because of an omitted word, Leverett says.

A Supreme Court judge, according to Leverett, recently turned down an appeal in the case of a death sentence, pointing out that either the death penalty should be abolished or, if not, the sentence should be enforced as quickly as possible. This matter, says Leverett, should be considered by both the legislature and appeals courts.

'Spacehunter' plot crafted like serial

A Review

As the story goes, television is the reason why we have motion pictures in three dimensions. It seems the moviegoing public in the '50s was fascinated by that new-fangled contraption — the television — causing movie attendance to drop off drastically. How to get the boob tube generation back into the theater houses across the nation? Well, according to the song, "You gotta have a gimmick."

The gimmick was 3-D, a method whereby filmmakers create the illusion of depth on the screen. It worked then in a sagging movie economy. But in recent years (remember "Friday the 13th Part III, 3-D" last year?) audiences have been exposed to the "Star Wars" high tech pyrotechnics that create such excitement and involvement in the viewing, so what can justify the inconvenience of ill-fitting paper glasses and headaches from crossed eyes?

Columbia Pictures thinks it has the answer with the first of this summer's crop of 3-D movies, "Spacehunter: Adventures in the Forbidden Zone."

Directed by Lamont Johnson ("The Last American Hero" and "Lipstick"), "Spacehunter," stars Peter Strauss as Wolff, an outer space salvage dealer who goes on a rescue mission to a restricted planet, Terra-11. Quarantined back in 2031 when space travelers came down with a disease, Terra-11 resembles the desert southwest in its more forbidding areas, and is home to a strange assortment of creatures, from the futuristic version of a Valley girl, Niki (Molly Ringwald), to giant-sized Pillsbury dough boys.

The plot, which is crafted like a serial, has just enough going on to carry you to next Saturday. There is the search for three Earth girls who are kidnapped when their spacecraft is jettisoned to the planet's surface from a trouble-ridden mothership, the struggle by Wolff and his tracker Niki to trek the vast wasteland of the planet to find them (and collect the reward), and the battle with their abductor, "Overdog" (Michael Ironside), a kind of phantom of the opera character with his very own life support system hung around his waist.

As 3-D goes, "Spacehunter" is easier on the eyes, partly due to improvements in the 3-D processing and partly due to efforts by UA Cine management to correct projection inadequacies of the past. A specially designed parallex lens projecting onto a silver screen is being used for this and future 3-D movies and should make this kind of movie viewing more pleasurable. But there is still the problem of the glasses.

Too light to stay in place for long and too large to insure a snug fit, the cardboard glasses are still a major detractor from the overall effect. And even though Hollywood's answer is to make the movie so engrossing the viewer forgets about the glasses, it hasn't happened for me — yet.

"Spacehunter" doesn't try to overuse the 3-D effect of having things come at the screen and does try to use dissolves — a technique which is difficult to do well in 3-D. Still, watching someone dissolve in 3-D is much like seeing the crew of the starship Enterprise beam up — only with more layers of existence being filtered.

Rated PG, "Spacehunter" is just one of this year's 3-D movies. Yet to come, are ""Jaws-3D," "The Man Who Wasn't There," (by the "Friday the 13th Part III, 3-D crew), "Amityville 3-D" and "Rottweiler".

With these and others soon to follow, 3-D is here to stay unless we say so. After all, our boycott of the movie houses back in the '50s is what started this whole thing. Nevertheless, 3—D has come a long way since then, some cities having movie houses devoted entirely to 3-D viewing. But it still has a way to go, especially on the mass distribution scale where equipment and exacting visual requirements are often not met.

Publisher says television show 'drama as it really is, not fantasy'

NEW YORK (AP) — Jacobo Timerman, the Argentine publisher whose best-selling book was the basis for an NBC movie to be broadcast tonight, says the TV production is "the drama of a Latin American country as it really is, not one of those Mexican-cowboy fantasies they like to do here."

Timerman, who has lived in Israel since 1979, when he was stripped of his citizenship and expelled from Argentina by the military government, describes "Prisoner Without a Name, Cell Without a Number" as an "accomplished" production.

"In it," he says, "are repression, a prisoner's isolation, the pain, the terrible feeling of torture."

The film was produced and directed by Linda Yellen, and stars Roy Scheider.

Oak Ridge Boys have nuclear roots

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

The Oak Ridge Boys trace the group's roots back to World War II and Oak Ridge, Tenn., where the top-secret "Manhattan Project" was being operated by the U.S. government.

"Our group has a very long and very fascinating history, and it dates back to the Second World War days," Richard Sterban said in a recent telephone interview. The Oaks, with special guest Michael Murphey, will perform Thursday at Odessa's Ector County Coliseum.

"Back in that period of time, a group of (country) singers known as the Country Cutups went on a regular basis to the atomic energy plant which was located in Oak Ridge, Tenn.,...to entertain the people there that were actually working on the development of the atomic bomb."

The group adjusted to suit its audience. And the music the Oak Ridge audience responded to was gospel, not country.

"As a result of going to Oak Ridge on a regular basis these guys became known as the Oak Ridge Quartet," Sterban said.

FORERUNNER TO The Oak Ridge Boys, the Oak Ridge Quartet disbanded in the mid-1950s, only to reorganize a year or so later.

"At the time of the reorganization, the name was changed to Oak Ridge Boys from Oak Ridge Quartet," Sterban said.

The type of music remained the same — gospel.

Since 1973, the foursome has remained constant — William Lee Golden (1964), Duane Allen (1966), Sterban (1972) and Joe Bonsall (1973).

"I think that's significant to the success that we're experiencing today. I think it's very necessary to have stability to really have a successful group in the music business that will enjoy longevity."

It was the music that changed. In 1977, the Oaks moved from gospel to country.

"Back in the days when we were a gospel group, we always had the goal in mind to take the kind of music we were doing and make it an art form that was accepted by the vast public here in our country.

"And we worked towards that end quite diligently, but we ran into a lot of resistance. After a while we realized that was never really going to ever happen."

TODAY, AFTER cutting nine albums since the 1977 change — all gold, one platinum and one double platinum — The Oak Ridge Boys are on top. And it took a saloon to boost them there.

" 'Ya'll Come Back Saloon' is the song that was the real turning point in the Oaks' career, and it's probably a song that means as much to us as any song we'll ever sing."

Timing is the constant factor in the history of how each Oak became a member.

"Everyone that is currently in the Oak Ridge Boys arrived in the position by being in the right place at the right time when change of membership was taking place."

For Sterban, whose first public performance was a soprano solo in Sunday School when he was 7, the opportunity came when he was singing bass for Elvis Presley.

"I was singing back around 1970-71 in that period with a group called J. D. Sumner and the Stamps Quartet. During that period of time, I had the opportunity to sing vocal backup to Elvis Presley" because "the Stamps were Elvis' backup group."

ALTHOUGH STERBAN found it "a real interesting experience in my life," he was still searching.

"While I was doing that, however, the Oak Ridge Boys gave me a call. They were looking for a replacement and I was their first choice.

"I almost literally jumped through the telephone," Sterban said, adding, "There was no question in my mind. I wanted to take the job right away."

Some people questioned his decision, asking him, " 'How can you leave a position singing with Elvis Presley, being a part of the Elvis Presley show, and join a group called the Oak Ridge Boys which was really basically a non-entity back in those days outside of gospel circles?'

Richard Sterban of The Oak Ridge Boys

ENTERTAINMENT

"I felt very strongly in the potential of the Oak Ridge Boys. I felt as though the Oak Ridge Boys could be a very big act someday." Then he added, "I think the success in recent years indicates that I made a very good decision."

The Oaks' success has afforded Sterban the opportunity to pursue another dream.

"Baseball is certainly a passion of mine," Sterban said. "Next to music, which is my number one interest, I would say baseball would have to be a strong number two.

"I'm really a frustrated athletic. I've always wanted to be a ball player from the time I was a little kid. But it did not take me very long in life to realize that I did not possess the talent to be a ball player. So when I got to the position in my career and my life where I did have a little bit of influence, a little bit of notoriety and a little bit of money to invest, I decided to get involved in baseball in the best way that I could."

TODAY, STERBAN is a part owner of two minor league teams — Nashville Sounds and Greensboro Hornets — and one hockey team — Nashville South Stars.

"We (Richard, Conway Twitty, Jerry Reed, Cal Smith and some local business people) brought professional baseball back to Nashville where it had not been for many, many years.

"This is our sixth season. Over the past five years, we've had really one of the most successful franchises in all of minor league baseball. We've averaged an excess of 500,000 fans every season."

Sterban considers it "an extremely high honor" to have the "opportunity to sing (the national anthem) at the 50th All-Stars Game — the 50th anniversary of the All-Stars.

"We will be entertaining at the pre All-Star Game banquet the night before in which all the living members of the hall of fame will be in attendance as well as all the current All-Stars. It's going to be just a great experience and, believe me, we are very, very excited."

Reflecting back over his career with the Oak Ridge Boys, Sterban said, "I don't think I ever really believed back in those days (early 1970s) that the Oak Ridge Boys would ever be as big as we are today. It's very, very gratifying to see the dreams that you dreamed become reality — but even bigger than you thought they would become."

Jimmy Stewart honored on birthday

INDIANA, Pa. (AP) — Actor James Stewart, honored in a birthday tribute for "plain old Jim," told the people of his small home town Saturday that he will always feel a part of them.

"I belong here," said Stewart, his voice cracking with emotion. "I'm proud, and in return I want you to know I call you friend."

Even though Stewart left Indiana for prep school, Princeton and his movie career, townspeople said they are glad he remembers where he was born.

Boyhood chum David Hall Blair said he thought Stewart is still "plain old Jim" because "I think he's still a small town boy." Stewart and his wife Gloria stayed at Blair's home during the celebration that began Friday and continues through Sunday.

"He trumpets the virtue of small-town life," said resident Bill Lundstrom. "We're just fortunate to have a man from this town of this class. He's such a class guy."

Aristocratic art historian Kenneth Clark dies

LONDON (AP) — Kenneth Clark, the aristocratic British art historian whose television special "Civilisation" brought Europe's great masterpieces into the homes of millions of Americans, died Saturday at the age of 79.

Clark died "peacefully after a short illness," at Hythe Nursing Home near his home in Kent, outside London, his family said. He entered the nursing home one week ago, the family said.

A distinguished writer, scholar and critic, Clark devoted his life to bringing art to the general public.

The 13-part television series "Civilisation," in which Clark guided viewers on a tour of Europe's great historical monuments and works of art, was first shown in Britain in 1969. In the same year, his book "Civilisation" was published and he was named a peer, giving him the title Lord Clark.

The TV series was relayed to the United States a year later and was an immediate success."I'm very highly thought of in America," Clark said in a 1977 interview. "There's no denying that."

Clark, a former art adviser to King George VI, was an authority on the Italian Renaissance painters Leonardo da Vinci and Piero della Francesca. He was former director of the National Gallery in London and vice chairman of the Royal Opera House and the National Theater.

Two of his best-known works of art history and criticism are "Landscape into Art" and "The Nude," written for both the expert and the general reader and praised by critics for their clarity and elegance.

Sir Michael Levey, the current director of the National Gallery, said Clark "probably did more to increase general appreciation of visual arts than any other single British figure since Victorian times."

"At its best, his urbane style of writing was unmatched among art historians," Levey said. "And of his earlier books, that on Leonardo da Vinci (1939) remains a masterly introduction to one of the most bafflingly elusive of the great artists."

Kenneth Mackenzie Clark, born July 13, 1903, was educated at Winchester, the private boys' school, and Oxford. In 1934, he was appointed director of the National Gallery at the age of 35, the youngest person ever named to the post.

Practicing for their Tuesday appearance at noon in The First National Bank outdoor plaza are members of the Midland College Roadrunners band, from left, Sherry Shankle, Ron Franklin, Steve Spear, Bill Jones and Rusty Chambers. This is the fourth in a series of free concerts during May planned by the Midland Arts Assembly. The Roadrunners also will perform free at Midland Park Mall at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Second US Festival may make, not lose money

DEVORE, Calif. (AP) — How do you follow up a rock music festival that cost more than $15 million to produce but lost a rumored $5 million or more? If you're Steve Wozniak, you put on a second one that's bigger, better and maybe even profitable.

The US Festival returns to Glen Helen Regional Park in the San Bernardino Mountain foothills Memorial Day weekend with three days of rock music featuring such superstars as The Clash, Van Halen and David Bowie. Generally, the May 28 rock show is New Wave, May 29 is a heavy metal extravaganza and May 30 is geared to "adult" rock fans.

A country show headlined by Willie Nelson makes its festival debut the following Saturday, June 4.

In addition to a science and technology fair, like that which accompanied the first US Festival last Labor Day weekend, there will be a career fair and a speakers program featuring science-fiction writer Ray Bradbury, comedian Dick Gregory and actress Bianca Jagger.

THERE WILL be a variety of non-concert entertainment, too — 300 performers including Japanese and Native American dancers, Afro-Cuban drummers, a magician, clog dancers, clowns and jugglers.

Wozniak, the Apple home computer designer who is financing US '83 through his UNUSON Corp., is particularly proud of a planned simulcast between a Moscow studio and the US Festival featuring rock music and educational panels on both sides.

The festival hasn't changed that much from last year, he adds.

"The major difference is that my wife and I don't plan to have a child on the first day of the show," he said, recalling the birth of his son, Jesse John, on the eve of last year's festival.

But there are improvements, not the least of which was closer attention to expenses. Almost every operating cost was lower this year except for performing fees, including $1.5 million each to Bowie and Van Halen.

Some expenses will be recovered from concession and licensing fees, but Wozniak hopes to draw at least 600,000 fans over the four days. Ticket sales so far are running about 200,000, with the heavy metal night the front runner, UNUSON spokemen say.

LAST YEAR, ABOUT half of the estimated 400,000 people who came to the festival bought their tickets at the gate, although UNUSON president Peter Ellis figures 10 to 15 percent got in with counterfeit tickets.

This year's tickets — $20 a day, or $25 at the gate — include a number of anti-counterfeiting features.

Those who attend will find the going a bit easier than last year, when music lovers battled windblown dust, 100-degree-plus temperatures and long lines for buses to parking lots and hot food stands.

The scraggly mess is gone. The park, located 60 miles east of Los Angeles, is an inviting sprawl of green hills dotted with ponds, trailers, portable toilets and the first few gaily colored concession tents.

An improved drainage system should prevent the huge mud puddles that formed around water fountains and open-air showers.

Midland student to present his senior piano recital

Shawn Wesley McCarter will present his senior piano recital at 7 p.m. Thursday in the church parlor at First United Methodist Church, Main Street at Illinois Avenue.

McCarter, a student of Harriett A. Motter's for the past 11 years, has received superior ratings from the National Fraternity of Student Musicians each year following participation in the Guild Auditions. This year he will receive the high school diploma in social music and the Paderewski Medal.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Dale McCarter, he is an honor graduate of Midland High School who plans to attend Texas A&M University.

He served as vice president of the National Honor Society at Midland High and has received three academic letters and four letters in band. A member of the All-Region Band for four years, McCarter has also been a member of the All-Region Orchestra and All-State Band where he was chosen outstanding soloist.

His recital program will include the Beethoven Sonata, Opus 13 first movement, "Pathitique," and the Chopin Waltz in D-Flat Major,

"Minute Waltz," as well as Bach's Invention No. 12, Mendelssohn's "Hunting Song" from "Songs Without Words," Opus 19, and the andante molto second movement from Grieg's Sonata, Opus 7.

Artist's works selected at annual art show

The 17th annual Southwestern Area Art Show opened to the public Saturday with a barbecue and awards presentation at the Museum of the Southwest.

After reviewing 307 slides from 110 artists, the juror for the show, Laurence Miller of the Laguna Gloria Art Museum in Austin, selected 59 works by 32 artists. The winners were announced Saturday.

Cash awards of $500 went to John Harmon of Midland, "Large Zag for Jim," clay, wood and acrylic; Polly Little of Irving, "Cricket's Lost," oil; and Linda Stanton of Austin, "Chivalry and Lust" and "Soft Dancing," both oil pastels.

Those who won $100 are M. Andrews of Midland, "Bubble Gum Daze," color photograph; Paula Babb Cox of Odessa, "Georgia in Red Chair," mixed media; David Blow of Denton, "American Post Card No. 5," serigraph; Ken Dixon of Lubbock, "Panda Mountain," watercolor, bichromate; and Nancy Lowrey of Denton, "45 Birds, C," graphite, pencil and acrylic.

The Midland Arts Association's purchase prize went to Frank R. Cheatham of Lubbock for his ceramic "Tomb Object No. 1071." This work will become a part of the museum's permanent collection.

The show will hang through Aug. 14. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday-Saturday and 2-5 p.m. Sunday. No admission is charged.

Midland's Cubs hung on to edge the Tulsa Drillers, 13-12, and move to within three games of rained out San Antonio, the Texas League West leader, at Cubs Stadium Saturday night.

That gives Midland a 2-0 lead in the series, but that's where the Cubs have been faltering. "We won the first two in Tulsa, then lost three in a row. We were fortunate to come off the road trip only four games out. But now we've got to buckle down," said Manager Tom Harmon as he looks forward to the first half stretch run. "We've won four in a row only once this year and now we need to put together five or six straight if we're going to catch San Antonio."

TREY BROOKS and Tom Lombarski delivered run-scoring singles in the ninth to give Midland a 13-10 lead, but the hits proved to be the winning margin when Tulsa's Dan Murphy hit one over the centerfield fence for two runs in the ninth before Ray Soff got around to nailing down the win for Jim Gerlach and earning his second save.

For a while, it looked like this homer business was overrated. Midland had three and Tulsa had a bunch of bunts, yet led 7-3 after four innings. However, to be honest, amongst all those bunts was a grand slam by Kevin Buckley to climax a seven-run fourth of Midland starter Ron Richardson.

"Actually, Ron didn't pitch all that bad, and if he had fielded that one bunt, he would have been out of it," reviewed Harmon. "But he let it bother him and he walked a batter and hit another before giving up the homer."

GERLACH came on in the sixth and got the win with three good innings. "He's been keeping us in the games lately," praised Harmon. Gerlach's ERA for his last six appearances is 2.86.

Randy LaVigne paced Midland's 17-hit offense with two homers, his sixth and seventh, and ran his hit streak to 7-for-8 before going out the last two times at bat. "The glasses (a new presciption) helped, but when you have a streak like that, it's also a lot of luck," he said.

Bill Hatcher had a double and homer while Lombarski and Bruce Chaney had three hit nights. Mike Anicich had Midland's fourth homer, all solos, which was music to Harmon's ears. It was Mike's first of the year. Last year he had 22 at Jackson.

"It would really help if Mike would start hitting, for power, not necessarily average, but he didn't get much action in spring and has been on the Disabled List, so he's way behind."

Midland rallied for seven runs in the fifth to not only get back in the game byt take a 10-7 lead. The Cubs collected five doubles in the rally, one short of the Texas League record. It was tied 10-10 after six and it was Hatcher's homer to left with two out in the sixth that put Midland ahead for the last time.

It was Don Hyman's two-bagger, the fifth, which put Midland ahead during the fifth inning rally.

Deputed Testamony runs to win

BALTIMORE (AP) — Deputed Testamony, kept at home while the favorites fought and fretted, romped through the slop to victory in the $346,200 Preakness Stakes Saturday and ruined Sunny's Halo's hopes for a Triple Crown.

The Maryland-bred colt overtook and beat Desert Wine, the horse that caused a controversy last week by going to court over the diuretic Lasix.

Deputed Testamony, who didn't arrive at Pimlico Race Track until Saturday morning, drew away from Desert Wine with an eighth of a mile to go for a 2¾-length victory in the second jewel of thoroughbred racing's Triple Crown.

Kentucky Derby winner Sunny's Halo faltered coming out of the gate and his trainer, David Cross, said he got bumped at the start by Common Sense, a 45-1 outsider. Sunny's Halo finished sixth.

"He definitely got bothered. It doesn't help with a track like this. It makes it a lot harder to make up ground," Cross said.

"He wasn't the horse he was in the Derby. He flattened out at the end. It wasn't his trouble. I think the No.9 (Common Sense) just bumped him out of the gate. Eddie (Delahoussaye) had to push him and he didn't have it left at the end."

But Dennis Manning, trainer of Common Sense, said that it was Sunny's Halo who bumped his colt.

Sunny's Halo had been bothered by a ringworm rash for the past several weeks, but Cross had said the Canadian-bred was physically capable of running Saturday.

Trainer Bill Boniface, who ran an entry of Deputed Testamony and Parfaitement, reportedly was upset by the court ruling Friday that allowed Desert Wine and Marfa, who finished fourth, to use Lasix — a trade name for furosemide, which has been effective in preventing exercise-induced bleeding.

BONIFACE'S ENTRY was sent off at 14-1 shot, while Sunny's Halo was the even-money favorite. Desert Wine was the second choice.

Ridden by 19-year-old Donald Miller Jr., Deputed Testamony covered the 1 3-16-mile event in 1:55 2-5 over a sloppy track and was the only horse in the field of 12 wearing mud caulks for better traction. Heavy downpours had occurred throughout the afternoon, but had ended before post time.

Desert Wine was four lengths ahead of third-place finisher High Honors, who was 1¾ lengths ahead of Marfa.

Blackwell, Ray, Carrasco named 4-5A All-District

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Three Tall City baseball players received first team All-District 4-5A honors this year at the recent coaches meeting in Big Spring.

For 4-5A runnerup Midland Lee, shortstop Barry Blackwell and pitcher Craig Ray made the elite unit while utility infielder Jose Carrasco was the only Midland High selection.

Blackwell, the 4-5A's leading hitter with a .521 average, was the most productive Rebel to make the squad. In 48 at bats, the left-handed hitter came up with 25 hits which produced 14 runs and 13 RBI.

He also led the team in power hitting with six doubles, three triples and two home runs. In the bi-district playoffs, Blackwell added three hits in nine attempts, including his third home run and seventh double to close out his high school career.

Ray was Lee's most effective starter throughout the district season, compiling a 5-1 record from eight starts.

In 35⅔ innings of duty, the junior left-hander led Lee in strikeouts with 47 and had an earned run average of 3.53. He pitched the Rebels to their only bi-district victory in the three-game series against Lubbock Monterey to pick up his sixth win.

Carrasco, with a .391 batting average and a 3-4 record as a pitcher, was awarded the utility infielder role for his work on the mound and at shortstop.

The senior led the Bulldogs in stolen bases with nine and in scoring with 17 runs. As a pitcher, Carrasco was on the mound for 56⅔ innings and compiled a .408 ERA while striking out 68 and walking only 22.

SAN ANGELO catcher Henry Klepac received double honors from the 4-5A coaches. He was named first team catcher and was also voted Most Valuable Player.

With a .479 batting average, the senior catcher helped guide the Bobcats to the 4-5A championship with an 11-3 record and to a 20-13 overall mark before being eliminated from the playoffs by El Paso Bel Air on Friday.

Also honored from San Angelo were pitcher Jim Osborn and Coach Rex Scofield.

Osborn, a junior with a 5-2 record, compiled a 2.92 ERA to earn his first-team pitching berth while Scofield was named Coach of the Year.

Abilene Cooper placed the most players on the first team for the 1983 season with three. All are underclassmen.

Sophomore second baseman Nathan Jones led the Cougar selections with a .398 batting average while juniors Kent Strain, outfield, .371, and Clay Clements, utility outfielder, .370, completed the list.

Abilene High and Big Spring each placed two on the first team while Odessa Permian and Odessa High added one each.

For the Eagles the selections were: senior David Oden at third base and No. 3 in 4-5A hitting at .500 and senior outfielder George Shannon at .400.

Big Spring placed senior outfielder Tom Cudd, .391, and senior designated Hitter Pete Valenzuela, .395, on the list while Kip Woodfin, senior outfielder, .474, was Odessa High's lone selection.

Finishing No. 2 in hitting was Permian senior first baseman Marty Martinez with a .513 average.

MIDLAND HIGH senior Tim Davis, for the first time in his high school career, was passed over for the first team unit and had to settle for second team outfield honors.

Missing half of the 4-5A season because of injuries, Davis still managed to tie for the team lead in RBI with 12 while hitting .391. Of his nine hits, two were doubles and three home runs.

Lee placed two on the second team, second baseman Ted Leps, a senior with a .333 batting average and junior outfielder Steve Woodlee at .429. Woodlee went the entire district season without an extra base hit, collecting 18 singles in 42 at bats. His first extra base hit came in Lee's 13-4 victory over Monterey in bi-district play when he hit a two-run homer over the left field fence.

Senior Kerry Robertson, 2-1, was Lee's top releiver during the season with six saves and was selected to the honorable mention squad. For Midland High, senior James Pitts, with a .306 average, was also picked for an outfield role.

Despite being passed up for the 4-5A first team, Davis was one of five players selected to represent the district as All-State Nominees. Klepac was the district's top choice followed by Blackwell, Davis, Shannon and Martinez.

Italy's Fabi breaks lap records

Indy rookie paces fastest field in history

By MIKE HARRIS
AP Motorsports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Italian Teo Fabi, a veteran road-racer, shocked the racing world Saturday by breaking the one-and four-lap records at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway and becoming only the second Indy-car rookie in history to win the pole position for the Indianapolis 500.

The fastest 33-car field in the 67-year history of the Indianapolis 500 was filled Saturday in a record qualifying effort. Sunday's final scheduled session of time trials, threatened by rain, now can only be used for bumping the slowest cars out of the lineup.

Fabi, 27, drove his green and white Cosworth-powered March racer to an an average of 207.395 mph, with a sizzling fast lap of 208.049.

That broke the records of 207.004 and 207.612, respectively, set last May by 1979 Indy winner Rick Mears.

The only previous first-year driver to qualify for the inside front-row spot at Indy was Walt Faulkner, who went on to finish seventh in the rain-shortened 1950 race. There was no qualifying for the first Indy race in 1911. Starting positions for that race were assigned by the Speedway according to the order in which the cars were entered.

FABI, FROM Milan, said, "I'm very excited about this. I ran 206 this morning (in practice) and I felt there was something left in the car."

Asked if there was any more speed left in the Skoal-sponsored Forsythe Racing car during his 10-mile qualification run, the diminutive Fabi grinned and replied: "No, no. That is as fast as the car can go."

The 5-foot-5 Fabi, an accomplished alpine ski racer, said, "When I first came to this track, the first five or 10 laps, I was really afraid. I said 'This is not for me.' Then I carried on with the tests and now I just love it."

He started his record-smashing effort with a lap averaging 207.273, followed with the record lap, slipped back to 207.622, then fell off to 206.640.

Mike Mosley, driving a March-Cosworth, took the middle position in the front row at 205.372. His fast lap was 205.997. Mears, in a Cosworth-powered Penske PC-11, made the outside of the front row at 204.301.

Saturday was the busiest qualifying day in the history of the Speedway, a fact attributed to the rainout of the first two scheduled days of time trials last week and the National Weather Service forecast of a 70 percent chance of rain Sunday.

The 33 qualifiers for the May 29 race broke the single-day record of 27 set in 1953 and tied in 1981.

Ten of those qualifiers were above 200 mph, helping make this group the fastest field in Indy history. Saturday's qualifiers averaged 198.030, compared with the mark of 197.740 set a year ago when eight cars qualified over 200 for the final field.

In case you yawned and missed it...

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

In case you were in the midst of a yawn and missed it, the heavyweight champion was in action Friday night. It kinda slipped up and by everybody before anyone noticed.

Well, as a matter of fact, there were two heavyweight champions in action on the same card, which tells you something about the direction the once most-glamorous division of knuckle-nosers has taken since Muhammad Ali hung 'em up.

The most well-known of the heavyweight champions is Ernie Holmes...or is he the one that played tackle for the Kansas City Chiefs? Well, if it isn't Ernie, then it's Larry. He fought someone whose main claim to fame is winning a controversial decision over Renaldo Snipes, whose main claim to fame was winning a fragant decision over Gerry Coetzee.

Well, Snipes main claim to fame was "decisioning" Coetzee until he floored Larry in a title fight, or was that Ernie he floored? Only trouble was that Holmes got up and before the night was over, Renaldo thought he was fighting both Ernie and Larry.

THE OTHER heavyweight champion in action was Joe Dokes, who was defending his title against Tim Weaver. I think that's their names. What, you say, it's Michael and Mike?

This one was a rematch and the Las Vegas Fire Department's fumigation department was standing by in memory of the first one. They tried to bury this one in Carlsbad or Hereford, but the residents refused to be a dumping grounds.

Weaver, it will be recalled, was ruled out of the first fight for nonparticipation.

So, he gets a rematch?

That probably is another indication of the depths to which the ring sport has sunk. It used to be that rematches were the result of public demand in response to a rousing battle in which a verdict was reached, but not everyone was convinced.

Remember Louis-Conn, Walcott-Marciano, Ross-McLarnin, Graziano-Zale, Saddler-Pep?

SPEAKING OF Joe Louis, there was no such thing as "two heavyweight" champions in his day.

Seventh inning singles lift Tigers past Rangers, 5-3

By The Associated Press

American League

DETROIT — Chet Lemon and Alan Trammell stroked RBI singles in a three-run seventh inning Saturday to lift the Detroit Tigers to a 5-3 victory over the Texas Rangers.

With Texas leading 3-2, Lance Parrish and Glenn Wilson opened the Tiger seventh with singles. After an infield out advanced the runners, Lemon greeted reliever Odell Jones with a single scoring Parrish. Center fielder George Wright bobbled the ball, allowing Wilson to score.

Lemon moved to second on a fly out and scored on Trammell's single.

Dan Petry allowed six hits in seven innings to up his record to 4-2. Aurelio Lopez pitched the final two innings for his fourth save.

Red Sox 11, Twins 4

BOSTON — Gary Allenson, Wade Boggs and Dave Stapleton drove in three runs apiece as the Boston Red Sox smashed the Minnesota Twins 11-4 behind the seven-hit pitching of left-hander Bob Ojeda.

The Red Sox nailed down the victory by scoring three runs in the second, third and fourth innings.

Royals 8, White Sox 4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Hal McRae belted two of Kansas City's six doubles while Willie Wilson and Amos Otis had three hits each in leading the Royals past the Chicago White Sox 8-4.

Steve Renko, 3-3, gave up seven hits in 7⅓ innings before needing relief help from Dan Quisenberry. Floyd Bannister, 2-5, was the loser.

Yankees 1, A's 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Dave Winfield's one-out single in the ninth inning drove in Willie Randolph with the game's only run as the New York Yankees beat the Oakland A's 1-0 behind the six-hit pitching of Shane Rawley and Rich Gossage.

Rawley, 5-3, allowed six hits, struck out three and walked two in 8⅔ innings. It was Rawley's fifth career win against Oakland.

Blue Jays 6, Orioles 0

TORONTO — Dave Stieb silenced Baltimore's bats with a four-hitter and light-hitting shortstop Alfredo Griffin drove in a pair of runs, leading the Toronto Blue Jays to a 6-0 victory over the Orioles.

Stieb, who entered the game leading the league in earned run average, victories, innings pitched and strikeouts, improved his record to 8-2 with his fifth straight victory.

Astros beat Bucs to end losing streak

By The Associated Press

National League

PITTSBURGH — Phil Garner slammed a two-run homer as the Houston Astros ended a five-game losing streak with a 6-4 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Houston scored five times in the first two innings against Randy Niemann, 0-1, who was making his first start since September 1980. Mike LaCoss, 3-3, got the victory although he needed help in the eighth inning after giving up a two-run homer to Jason Thompson.

In the Houston first, Tony Scott beat out an infield hit and scored when Dickie Thon's liner to right bounced over Dave Parker for a triple. Garner then hit Niemann's next pitch over the left field wall for his fifth home run of the year.

In the second, Luis Pujols and Omar Moreno singled and moved up on a wild pitch. Pujols scored on Scott's sacrifice fly and Thon followed with an RBI single that chased Niemann.

Houston added an unearned run against Lee Tunnell in the seventh when Moreno doubled, moved up on a passed ball and scored on Scott's second sacrifice fly.

Thompson doubled home Bill Madlock, who had singled, in the first, and the Pirates chased LaCoss in the eighth when Madlock singled home Jim Morrison and Thompson followed with his fifth homer of the year.

Cubs 8, Reds 4

CHICAGO — Ron Cey and Leon Durham slugged three-run homers in successive innings to lead the Chicago Cubs to an 8-4 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

Chicago beat Cincinnati for the first time this season after five straight losses to the Reds.

Cey's fourth homer of the season and third in three games capped a four-run fifth inning and Durham's sixth homer completed a four-run sixth. Paul Moskau, 2-2, was the winner, and Charlie Puleo, 0-1, was the loser.

Giants 5, Expos 2

MONTREAL — Tom O'Malley drove in three runs with a run-scoring double and a two-run single and Bill Laskey won his fifth straight game with five innings of one-hit ball as the San Francisco Giants earned a 5-2 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Laskey, 5-4, who lost his first four decisions, left after five innings when his right elbow stiffened. He was staked to a 3-0 lead in the first as the Giants jumped on Montreal starter Scott Sanderson, 3-4, who has lost four straight games.

Braves 4, Cardinals 1

ST. LOUIS — Dale Murphy smashed a bases-loaded triple off reliever Bruce Sutter with one out in the eighth inning, snapping a tie and powering the Atlanta Braves to a 4-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Murphy's clout increased his major league-leading RBI total to 36 as Atlanta beat St. Louis for the second straight night. It was his fifth game-winning hit of the season.

Steve Bedrosian, 3-2, got the victory in relief of Phil Niekro. John Stuper, 4-2, absorbed the loss.

Holmes needs to find a gimmick

Everybody knew who was the champion. No Association had to tell them.

Now, they have so many different associations controlling boxing, there's a promoter, champion and TV network for each. I think, Holmes is the IBC champion and Dokes represents the BAA, now let's see, is that Boxing Association of America or Basketball Association of America? Sometimes it's very confusing.

Of course, much of boxing's dilemma today is Holmes' fault. He may be a better fighter than Ali, but he doesn't have the public relations touch.

Ali knew that heavyweight boxing champions could get forgotten in the long layoffs between bouts, unless they were flagged down on a city street for speeding. Ali never let that happen.

He recognized what George Wagner did for wrestling and gave the ring his version of Gorgeous George. You remember the little rhymes before each fight, vintage Gorgeous.

Ali was outrageous. He told everyone how good he was so often, people believed him, whether it was true or not. Even opponents went into the ring convinced he was the "greatest."

Larry needs a gimmick. I mean, he's not even Larrupin' Larry or Loquacius Larry. Think about it. Larry. It kinds of just sits there. It doesn't generate respect, anger or awe. In fact, Ernie would sound better than Larry. What Holmes needs is a little Dick Wagner. What, you say, Lascivious Larry? That's no name for a heavyweight champion, someone the kids have got to look up to.

How about, Lockjaw Larry, Liquefying Larry, Homicide Holmes...

Are you a contractor specializing in odd and smaller jobs? Aren't they usually the kinds of jobs that might require special equipment? Isn't this the type of equipment that would only be used once in a while? For instance, a house might have especially high ceilings requiring special ladders or scaffolding, or curved walls that require special tools. In any case, when a tool or piece of machinery is needed only once or twice a year, renting is a good idea. Colbert lucks into Atlanta tie

ATLANTA (AP) — Jim Colbert, who broke a three-year victory drought last weekend, converted a lucky break into a 5-under-par 67 that tied him with Don Pooley for the lead Saturday in the second round of the rain-shortened Georgia-Pacific Atlanta Golf Classic.

Pooley birdied three of the last four holes to complete 66 in the mild, calm conditions of the afternoon and matched Colbert's 136 total for 36 holes, 8-under-par for two trips over the rain-slickened hills of the Atlanta Country Club course.

"My game is in good condition right now, close to being where I want it," Pooley said.

Colbert was considerably more enthusiastic about his performance.

"Unbelievable," said Colbert, who won six times in his first 17 years on the tour and now is bidding for two in a row.

He was quick to admit, however, that he had a piece of the lead only through a break.

Colbert drove into the water on the fourth hole, but the ball ricocheted off the surface of the pond and onto the bank. He got his next shot in a bunker, but one-putted for a hard-won par that he called "a good break for me."

Colbert, however, said he had an even better piece of luck.

"The best thing that happened to me," Colbert said, "was the rain-out on Thursday.

"I was very busy Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and Thursday. I was kind of flat. With the day off, I was able to relax a little, get rested.

"You hate to see the rain-out, and the tournament reduced to 54 holes, but the day off was perfectly okay with me."

Three tied for lead in Charity Classic

CLIFTON, N.J. (AP) — Amy Alcott, who is $4,140 away from $1 million in earnings, moved into a three-way tie for the lead Saturday after the second round of the 54-hole LPGA Chrysler-Plymouth Charity Classic.

Rookie Stephanie Farwig and first—round co-leader Donna White tied for first place in the $125,000 golf tournament.

Each was 5-under par with totals of 141 at the Upper Montclair Country Club.

Lori Huxhold was three strokes back at 144, 2-under par. Debbie Austin, Lynn Adams, Alice Miller, Barbara Moxness, Becky Pearson were 1-under par at 145.

Austin shot a tournament course record 67, breaking the record established by Friday's coleaders, White and Chris Johnson at 68.

Johnson, whose car was stolen from her hotel parking lot in Hasbrouck Heights Friday, lost her share of the lead with a second-round 81 Saturday, giving her a total of 149.

Nancy Lopez was six strokes off the pace at 147; Jan Stephenson was nine strokes back at 150, Beth Daniel was 12 strokes back at 153, and Kathy Whitworth was 13 strokes back at 154.

For the final round Sunday, 73 players qualified at 153 or better.

CADILLAC & LINCOLN OWNERS: COME IN AND TRADE UP TO A VOLVO.

If you've never considered a Volvo, it could be that reliability, long-lasting quality and safety were not top priorities on your new-car check list.
However, the introduction of the Volvo 760 GLE could change the way you look at a Volvo. And feel about one, too. Because it offers qualities you probably put a premium on: An elegant appearance outside and a cushy life inside.
The car's lines are rakish, less Volvo-ish. (The aerodynamic design reduces drag to a point that's lower than a Porsche 928's.) It's a look your friends will talk about...but not behind your back.
The all-new 760 GLE is more comfortable than any previous Volvo sedan. There's more room inside for people of stature. And more room in back for luggage. The automatic climate control completely changes the air five times a minute when the car's standing still. And a new air-conditioning system has kept the interior temperature at 63°F after an hour's drive through a 104°F oven.
So come in soon to size up the outside and luxuriate in the inside of the Volvo 760 GLE. A Volvo won't be foreign to you anymore.
THE VOLVO 760 GLE.
WE NEVER SOLD A VOLVO THAT WAS WORTH SO MUCH.

Sixers, Lakers against history too

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia 76ers and Los Angeles Lakers will have history against them when they face each other Sunday in the opener of their third National Basketball Association championship series meeting in four years.

The Lakers are trying to become the first team in 14 years to repeat as NBA champions. They beat the 76ers in the final series in 1980 and last season, both times in six games.

The 76ers, making their fourth championship series appearance since 1977 but still looking for their first title since 1967, had the best regular-season record in the league in 1982-83. But in recent years, that accomplishment has been more of an albatross than anything.

In the last decade, only the Boston Celtics in 1981 won the championship after winning the most games during the season.

But 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham and star forward Julius Erving said Saturday that they think about past failures only when questioned about it by the media.

"The past is irrelevant," Erving said after Philadelphia practiced for two hours at the Palestra, "because this is a different team than we had in past years. "Our confidence level going into the championship series exceeds what we felt before because we have depth we haven't had before and we also have Moses Malone, the dominant center we haven't had before."

"We're not thinking about the past," Cunningham said. "We're only concerned with the present. We have nothing to worry about except the Lakers. As long as we got this far, I didn't care if we were playing a high school team in the finals."

THE 76ERS have had plenty of rest since winning the Eastern Conference final series against Milwaukee on Wednesday. But the Lakers have had little time to prepare after winning the Western Conference with a hard-fought 101-100 sixth-game victory over the San Antonio Spurs Friday night.

"Our goal was to get to the finals," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "I was afraid we'd get upset on the way by Portland or San Antonio. Somehow that happens to the defending champion."

Erving said he wasn't counting on the Lakers being tired and unprepared on Sunday.

"They'll be tired, but they'll also be more determined," said Erving, who has averaged 18.1 points in Philadelphia's nine playoff games this year, eight of which have been victories. "When a great team has the circumstances against it, they dig down and play with more determination."

Cunningham said playing on Sunday afternoon after a Friday night game "will hurt the Lakers' preparation, but you never really know how they'll play until you get started. It's not so unusual that you have to play games close together. It happens a lot during the season."

THE LAKERS have basically used a seven-player rotation in the playoffs, but backup center-forward Bob McAdoo, who scored 14 points in the first half against San Antonio, is doubtful for Game 1 against Philadelphia. He sustained a deep thigh bruise and hardly played in the second half against the Spurs.

Cunningham said the Lakers and 76ers probably will have a series of "mixed-up matchups because with their team you can throw forward and guard labels out the window."

Cunnningham said that the Lakers defensively will sometimes have guard Earvin "Magic" Johnson guarding Erving, center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar guarding forward Marc Iavaroni, forward Kurt Rambis guuarding Malone, and forward Jamaal Wilkes guarding 76ers guard Andrew Toney. Only guards Norm Nixon and Maurice Cheeks are obvious matchups, Cunningham said.

The 76ers have two backup players with health problems going into the first game, which is scheduled for 3:30 p.m. EDT and will be nationally televised by CBS.

Guard Clint Richardson was hobbled in practice by a sore big toe and forward Bobby Jones skipped the workout because of strep throat.

"We'll just have to see how they feel Sunday," Cunningham said.

Thanks for help

Back on April 3 we announced the start of a logo contest intended to end with selection of an identifiable symbol readers can associate with the Reporter-Telegram in the future; something that will tell a reader something about Midland and the newspaper.

During the entry period, the Reporter-Telegram received a total of 201 entries and a vast amount of enthusiasm from readers. That's great because the newspaper's readers were vital to this contest.

It won't be easy choosing the emblem that will represent the Reporter-Telegram in the years to come. According to the Promotions Committee that is spearheading the contest, numerous exceptional entries were received. Finding the logo that depicts the vital aspect of Midland — her present, her future and her heritage — and the newspaper is a challenging task.

The way in the which Midlanders and those in the outlying region responded to the contest will make the task much simpler, though. A number of entrants included notes of thanks in their entry packages, expressing gratitude to the Reporter-Telegram for opening the contest to the public. We appreciate those notes, but it was essential that we include the people of Midland and this area in the process of selecting an emblem because this is their city and the Reporter-Telegram is their newspaper.

The judging process begins next week and will continue until June 15. Please bear with us and from time to time we'll inform you of our progress. Award winners in the three categories will be announced publicly along with the contest winner on June 25 at Midland Park Mall.

Thanks for helping make this newspaper a little more identifiable as specifically yours.

Ruckelshaus to rescue

The United States Senate seldom is referred to as a model for unanimity. So when 97 of the honorable solons vote for something or somebody, with nary a dissent, it has a special meaning.

That was the Senate's vote, 97 to zero, confirming William D. Ruckelshaus as administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. It meant that the Senate has consummate confidence in Mr. Ruckelshaus, and believes that the man who was the first administrator of EPA has the ability to rescue the agency from its recent turbulences. It meant that there is total senatorial agreement with Sen. Jennings Randolph of West Virginia, the senior Democrat on the Senate's Environmental Committee, that the appointee is "the right man at the right time for a difficult task."

It is a difficult task, for problems of the environment do not lend themselves easily to computerized solutions. That is the reason the EPA administration has gone through chaotic periods.

The U.S. Senate believes that William Ruckelshaus has the talent and the temperament, as well as the experience, to bring order out of chaos. That was what the unanimous confirmation vote said, loud and clear.

The new chief of the Environmental Protection Agency deserves more than the sympathy of the nation. He deserves its support. If he gets it, his rescue operations can succeed.

Another View:

Curb adventurism

That the United States is playing out a seemingly futile military option in El Salvador is bad. That the Reagan administration — contrary to the wishes of Congress — has been funding its own little war in Nicaragua adds insult to injury.

In an unusual public report, the House Select Committee on Intelligence has told just how much insult. What the administration has done in instructing the CIA to organize a destabilizing campaign against the Nicaraguan government, the report says, is to undermine its whole thesis of U.S. Central American intervention.

"The United States has allied itself with insurgents who carry the taint of the last Nicaraguan dictator, Somoza," the report says. "(It) has allowed the spotlight of international opprobrium to shift from the attempts to subvert a neighboring government (El Salvador) to attempts to subvert that of Nicaragua."

In other words, the CIA has managed to take the rather sullied image of the Sandinista regime and, by funding the henchmen of a despised dictator, make it look like one more victim of gringo manipulation. The House panel already has approved cutting out the covert operation — allowing in its stead an above-ground campaign to intercept Nicaraguan arms headed for El Salvador. Its report was to tell colleagues on the Foreign Affairs Committee and in the full House why it felt betrayed and angry.

Once told that the CIA was merely out to stop arms supplies from reaching Salvadoran rebels, the committee was later informed that — against its specific prohibition — the agency's goals had grown somewhat. The CIA was also trying to stimulate democracy in Nicaragua and pressure the Sandinistas to hold elections.

Here suddenly was a president fanning a military confrontation with money provided to help smother one in El Salvador. Beyond the question of authorization, was it smart? No, the panel concluded. Giving a country a "bloody nose" doesn't make it back down. On the contrary, it said, it has tended to stiffen Nicaragua's policies.

Finally, the CIA simply failed miserably in its original mission. Arms still flow with impunity to Salvadoran rebels, the report said, while U.S.-supported anti-Sandinistas singly-mindedly pursue their own agenda — taking guerrilla raids deep into Nicaragua. Such is the penalty for taking your eye off the ball.

At the very least, the House should back the committee effort to defund the CIA's sidetracked covert operation. It has proven far more costly — in diminished prestige, in the loss of innocent lives, in erosion in moral imperative — than Congress ever intended or was led to believe.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Carter rejected scrapping 'triad'

WASHINGTON — For a decade now, U.S. military policymakers have grappled with the growing vulnerability to Soviet attack of our land-based intercontinental ballistic missiles. Ronald Reagan campaigned in 1980 on the need to close this "window of vulnerability."

Jack Anderson

During the same period, Pentagon strategists suggested monumentally expensive, often ridiculous plans to close this window with a new missile — the MX. None of the options could guarantee that our land-based missiles would be safe from Soviet attack, however.

Recognizing this uncomfortable reality, the presidential commission on strategic forces, headed by retired Lt. Gen. Brent Scowcroft, decided the United States should just ignore the basic problem and deploy 100 MX missiles anyway. The argument still rages.

But for one brief moment, President Carter considered a radical solution to the window of vulnerability: scrapping the land-based missile systems altogether. That would have meant going from the time-hallowed strategic triad of land-based ICBMs, submarine-launched missiles and manned bombers to a dyad — literally, a group of two.

A personal, eight-page memorandum to Carter from his defense secretary, Harold Brown, dissuaded the president from abandoning the triad. The memo was classified top secret and locked away in White House and Pentagon vaults. But a copy has now been slipped to my associate Dale Van Atta.

Brown's memo to Carter began: "At our meeting on September 29, you asked why — since (the) Minuteman (missile) is becoming vulnerable, and since (one MX basing system) involves thorny questions of its own — we should not simply abandon the ICBM leg of the triad and strengthen the remaining two legs as necessary...."

Brown acknowledged that "in simplest terms, we could indeed abandon the ICBM leg and move to a dyad of SLBMs (submarine-launched ballistic missiles) and bombers." But, he added, "we would give up features of both perceptual and military value that we have enjoyed in the past."

Once warmed up, Brown struck hard: "The effect of the U.S. giving up, under successful Soviet pressure, a military capability of considerable value which the Soviet Union retains would, in my view, have disastrous consequences both internationally and domestically."

The defense secretary then laid out seven reasons why he and most Pentagon strategists had concluded the United States must spend billions on vulnerable silo-based missiles:

— Independence from tactical warning: ICBMs don't need to make a hair-trigger response to "possibly ambiguous warning," and thus an accidental nuclear war could be prevented.

— Endurance: ICBMs can "maintain some capability after an initial exchange — perhaps for days, or weeks, or even a few months." Bomber bases have no such survivability, Brown pointed out, while submarines, though eminently durable by being hard to find, would be difficult to communicate with for the same reason.

— Quick-response hard-target capability: Land-based ICBMs have superior accuracy and destructive power to eliminate Soviet missiles in reinforced silos. Their response time (30 minutes to Moscow) is also superior.

— Good command, control and communications: "ICBMs have great advantages" in reliable communications links to the president. Communications to bombers are highly vulnerable and those to submarines even worse.

— Diversity: In comments that read almost like a draft of the Scowcroft Commission's page-long defense of the triad concept, Brown explained that land-based missiles are "a hedge against marked Soviet progress in anti-submarine warfare," as well as "against Soviet development of a successful tactic against our bomber bases... or a much stronger Soviet air defense." Brown concluded that "failure of a single leg of even a dyad of SLBMs and bombers need not be catastrophic, but failure of both — unlike the triad — would be."

— Costs: Because reliance on a submarine-bomber dyad would necessarily mean beefing up these two forces, the overall cost of maintaining a triad of strategic options would not be significantly more, Brown argued.

— Warfighting capability: Finally, land-based missiles offer the greatest punch and versatility to fight a nuclear war once it has begun. "We can retarget them quickly and launch as few as one if necessary," Brown wrote. This means that the United States could hit military targets without an unnecessarily high death toll among the civilian population.

Brown concluded his memorandum with a fairly grim statement about fighting such a limited nuclear war.

"I should note," wrote Brown, "that I doubt that a strategic war of this (limited) kind is at all likely, or that it could be fought without rapid escalation to an unlimited spasm. But there are many indications that the Soviets are structuring their forces to fight such a war. Their plans and exercises point the same way. If they think they have such a capability, and we both know the U.S. does not, adverse military consequences are possible, and adverse political consequences very likely."

Footnote: Of course the MX missile, like every stationary, land-based weapon, would be vulnerable to a first strike.

GEORGE F. WILL

Brooklyn Bridge recalls greatness

NEW YORK — It speaks volumes about the American spirit that the Rocky Mountains, or other purple mountain majesties or fruited plain, have never inspired an American poem as fine as Hart Crane's "The Bridge," a hymn to the Brooklyn Bridge. Only God can make a mountain, but he has made so many. The West could call for men to match its mountains, but New York City would build urban mountains, beginning with the bridge which is now a century old.

George F. Will

It linked America's first and third largest cities (Brooklyn was independent until 1898) by vaulting a river — the East River — that is not a river but a tidal strait of salt water. Persons uneasy with any but banal explanations can say that the motivation for building the bridge was economic: the raising of property values in Brooklyn. But from the first conception, the bridge was an expression of the intangible beneath the tangible in America, the heroism of what has been called America's heroic materialism.

Writing in the 1860s about America's industrial energies, Walt Whitman exclaimed:

The shapes arise!
Shapes of factories, arsenals, foundries, markets,
Shapes of the two-threaded tracks of railroads, Shapes of the sleepers of bridges, vast frameworks, girders, arches.

Today, environmentalists would want Whitman to file an environmental impact statement with his poetry. Whitman, a Brooklyn boy, was fond of "singing the strong, light works of engineers." Today, intellectuals are inclined to resent the presence of machines in the American garden. A century ago the works of engineers seemed not a desecration of "nature" but an affirmation of the human drive to conceive and achieve. "Not one shall see it and not feel prouder to be a man," said a speaker at the opening of the bridge, May 24, 1883.

The bridge has had not only a magnificent poet in Hart Crane, who died at the age of 32 in 1932, but also a marvelous biographer in David McCullough. Of no other American artifact, save possible the Tennessee Valley Authority, can this be said: Its biography is the biography of an era. McCullough's theme is that any great achievement is a product of a great passion, in this case a passion for projects of great scale with utility proportionate to scale.

Today the biggest things mankind manufactures are either repetitious (Chicago's Sears Tower is bigger but no grander than the Empire State Building), diminishing (Manhattan's dispiriting canyons) or appalling (nuclear explosions). Today's excitement is on small frontiers — atoms, chromosomes. The 19th century thought big was beautiful: a big nation ("manifest destiny") with big ligaments (bridges, transcontinental railroads).

Crane compared the bridge to a harp. That is the sort of vision which, when a poet has it, becomes accessible to those of us who have more prosaic sensibilities. The cables are the harp's strings; the tensions in equipoise give the instrument harmony. A harp or violin is beautiful because it is the purest submission of form to function. Only America's clipper ships compare with America's bridges, and perhaps a few Western dams, as works of physical beauty.

Built of the ancient and modern materials — stone and steel — the bridge has been called an architecture of voids rather than solids. It was the first vision of the New World for millions of immigrants. Its twin towers were New York's first skyscrapers. In 1883 only the spire of Trinity church in Wall Street was taller. The towers' gothic arches were suited to this, our Notre Dame, our cathedral for the secular city. This vaulting creation expressed America's defining urge, the itch to get up, get moving, get across, get on the road.

It is a measure of how far we have come that today we have no sense of how far it was across the East River 100 years ago.

In 1876 the Centennial was resolutely forward-looking. Its centerpiece was the Philadelphia exposition of the latest machinery. In 1976 the Bicentennial had a retrospective cast. The highlight was a parade of Tall Ships, elegant echoes of a vanished age of dash and daring. Perhaps this was a symptom of flinching from a daunting future; if so, it was sterile nostalgia. However, today's keen interest in the great bridge's birthday may be exactly what this nation, and not least New York City, needs: an unthought but deeply felt impulse to rekindle confidence in our capacity for great works.

Wanted: Surly job applicants!

Apparently the job market for college graduates is still in the hi-tech industries. The trouble is that most graduates don't know how to apply for a hi-tech job.

When Rod Beaver came home from an interview the other day he was very discouraged.

"The personnel director only spent three minutes with me and said I wasn't qualified."

"Of course you weren't qualified," his uncle, who works for IBM, told him. "Look at the way you're dressed. You're wearing a blue suit and a white shirt and a conservative tie. And you shaved. Is that any way to apply for a position in a hi-tech industry?"

Beaver said, "I don't understand. I wanted to make a good impression."

"You don't make a good impression in hi-tech by wearing a shirt and tie."

"I thought everyone at IBM had to wear a dark suit, shirt and tie."

"That was in the old days when it was important to look nice. If you want to be a salesman you can dress like that, but if you're going for the big money in programming and research they don't trust you if you're too well dressed."

"What should he have worn?" Beaver's mother asked.

"A sport shirt, blue jeans and open sandals. You have to look like a crazy genius before they take any interest in you. You kids think you can just walk into a hi-tech company all slicked and dressed up and they'll be impressed with you. But it isn't so. They want people who look like they know something about computers."

"I've got an outfit in my closet I can wear, and I'll go out for an interview this afternoon."

"Don't go out until you grow a beard. Hi-tech executives hate people who are clean shaven. And don't get a haircut for a while. You want to look like a gorilla if you hope to get the personnel director's attention."

"Does he have to grow a beard?" his mother asked.

"It could make the difference between $25,000 and $45,000 a year," his uncle said.

"What do I say to the personnel director?" Rod asked.

"You don't say much. I'll be the personnel man. Now the first question I'll ask you is if you think you would be happy working for the company."

"Yes, sir. It's always been my dream to work for a company like this."

"That's not the correct reply. You say you have no idea, but you're willing to give it a try. Except you don't want to be bugged about how long it takes you to come up with something. And you don't want anyone checking on how many hours you put in."

"Does he have to be that surly?" his mother asked.

"There are hundreds of kids waiting out there for jobs in hi-tech, and all the companies are looking for are surly loners who don't want to be told what to do."

"If Rod is going to look unkempt and be surly how is he going to impress the hi-tech clients?" his mother wanted to know.

"If he gets the job he'll never see a customer. The people they hire for research and development are kept in a separate building in cages and they get a banana once or twice a day."

Rod thanked his uncle for the advice, and came back the next month to announce he got a job with the Apple Corporation. "I did everything you told me, and they were so impressed with the way I looked and how surly I was, they selected me over two guys from the Stanford Business School, and gave me a surfboard so I wouldn't get bored in my office."

Country should continue on course set by Reagan

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — Now that just about everybody realizes our economy is moving briskly out of an 18-month recession, the country should continue to steer the course President Reagan set when he took office.

Hearst

Just take a look at the big gain last month. The Commerce Department reported that the personal income of Americans jumped eight-tenths of 1 percent in April, the biggest gain since last summer. Consumer spending is up, too, meaning that gains in both categories are likely to induce companies to accelerate production and to do lots more hiring. When hiring begins, unemployment drops.

Under Secretary of Commerce Robert G. Dederick summed up the situation neatly when he declared that the economic upturn is fast becoming a cumulative "self-reinforcing process." It leads to higher production followed by higher spending.

"THIS IS THE stuff of which sustained business recoveries are made," asserted Mr. Dederick.

The Wall Street Journal apparently agrees as the following appeared in a news story in that prestigious paper this past week:

"As the numbers roll in, a bona fide upturn from the long, severe 1981-82 recession is unmistakable. And, as most analysts predicted a few months ago, it looks like a relatively robust rebound and not, as had once been feared, a rickety one.

"...most economists believe that the recovery not only is gaining strength but should continue to register solid, if unspectacular, gains throughout 1983 and beyond."

EDITOR'S REPORT

The barometers are many, retail sales being one of the key ones. They jumped ahead in both March and April, and are likely to do it again in May. The increases in those two months prompted the Commerce Department's Dederick to say:

"These back-to-back surges are clear evidence of renewed vigor in the consumer sector."

This new life in the retail business inevitably means factory production is on the way up. And although unemployment stands at 10.2 percent of the labor force — much, much too high — it is a fact that employment actually increased by 350,000 workers in April.

THE PRESIDENT had a right to needle his critics recently when he asked them what they were going to call "Reaganomics" now that it is working.

Yes, much has happened in Mr. Reagan's two years and four months in the White House. And my hunch is, "You ain't seen nothin' yet."

On the thorny issue of education in the U.S., the president firmly backed a return at his press conference to "basics" in schools. He said that this country went through about 10 years of federal aid to education which reached the staggering total of $14.9 billion. It was a soaring increase of 2,000 percent, President Reagan declared, for testing scores and associated facilities. So he appointed a commission which produced, in the president's words, "a masterful report that contains very little recommendation for more funds."

President Reagan continued his explanation carefully and deliberately with these thoughts, which I believe make good sense to repeat:

"What they're talking about (i.e., the commission) can be corrected without money. It takes some leadership. It takes some return to basics. It takes having students that have to learn what they're supposed to learn in a class before they're moved on to the next class. And there's an awful lot of that goes on. It also takes required courses in English, in the basics, in mathematics, in science, particularly in high school.

"AND YET we've seen a time in which you can get credits toward graduation for cheerleading in some of our schools. Or, how would you like to graduate by getting straight A's in Bachelor Life? We think there's some common sense that is needed and so we've proven that throwing money at it isn't the answer. The federal government can never match the funding of schools at the local and state levels, where we created the greatest public school system the world has ever seen, and then let it deteriorate; and I think you can make a case that it began to deteriorate when the federal government started interfering in education."

That's not politics; what the president stated are facts.

In a flat-out determination to resist congressional pressure and oppose new taxes, however they may be disguised, President Reagan declared his intention to veto any new tax legislation while the national economy moves into recovery. The president is staying the course even as weaker-willed critics in the Congress call for printing more money and raising fresh taxes as panaceas for deficits.

"THE AMERICAN people," President Reagan pointedly emphasized, "didn't send us to Washington to continue raising their taxes, spending more on wasteful programs or weakening defense."

Of paramount national importance, I thought, was President Reagan's remark that interest rates weren't going up. "As a matter of fact, I think in the very near future we're going to see a further drop in interest rates," he observed.

All of us remember the old adage about not swapping horses in midstream. Neither should we change courses. Look at the alternatives and weep.

SPEAKING OUT

Freedom of religion essential to country

By CYNTHIA LEHMAN-BUDD

Cynthia Lehman-Budd moved to Midland a year and a half ago from Vermont. Currently she is a student at Midland college and after completion of studies there, she plans to attend the University of Texas of the Permian Basin in Odessa.

At the time of the formulation of the United States Constitution and Bill of Rights, many infractions of the people's liberty were fresh in the minds of those responsible for casting a new governmental mold. One liberty the founding fathers viewed as essential was also unique for the time. Nowhere in the world were diverse religious beliefs as freely tolerated by a government as in America. The First Amendment, in protecting these rights, states "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof..."

Both the church and the state are sheltered from interference by the other under the First Amendment. The aim is to protect religious believers and nonbelievers from persecution and to protect the state from undue influence by any religious group. With the May 1982 introduction by President Reagan of a school prayer amendment, we are faced with the necessity of closely examining history and considering the future consequences of cracking what Thomas Jefferson termed the "wall of separation between church and state."

The school prayer amendment reads, "Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to prohibit individual or group prayer in public schools or other public institutions. No person shall be required by the United States or by any state to participate in prayer." America's religious leaders have taken stands on both sides of this issue for various reasons.

Voicing constitutional concerns, some religious leaders believe that school prayers will generate conflict among religious groups. Others are opposed because they believe legislated prayer will have little spiritual meaning. Those religious leaders who support the amendment believe prayer in public school will acknowledge our national dependence on God and ensure that all school children will believe in God.

Generally when people use the word "god" they are thinking in terms of their personal definition of deity. Our society has such a diversity in religious belief and organization that a definition of God acceptable to even a simple majority seems impossible. Those whose beliefs reject a deity altogether must be tolerated in the same way as those whose beliefs embrace a deity as the director of their lives. If we destroy the freedom of the non-believer we set a precedent for narrowing the definition and freedom of the believer.

School prayer advocates point out the voluntary nature of the school prayer amendment as a guarantee of freedom from coercion. Children who do not wish to pray may be excused from the room according to the voluntary plan. Acknowledging the power of peer pressure on children causes one to immediately question how free the choice will be for any child who wishes to leave the room.

Questioning this plan further the word segregation comes to mind, separating the prayers (read religious) from the non-prayers (read non-religious). Perhaps some, but certainly not all, adults could see beyond this black/white distinction, but it would be difficult for children to do so. Classmates might choose to leave the room for reasons ranging from an objection to government-instituted prayer to theological differences with the prayer. A public school system in a democratic society should not force school children to make these distinctions or to be separated from one another on the basis of religion. Prayer ought to be an element of union among people, not one of separation. The task of maintaining the union of a pluralistic people is not one that should be taken lightly.

The Encyclopedia of American Religions lists 1,200 active religious groups for the United States. A substantial portion of the population remains unchurched. We inhabit a land of religious pluralism and this is a fact of which we can be proud. A lack of sensitivity for this pluralism leads some people, including President Reagan, to believe that public prayers will not offend anyone. Our national diversity, however, creates an atmosphere wherein no single prayer could satisfy the spectrum of beliefs held by the students in one school or even one classroom.

The Supreme Court's ruling against prayer in public schools was a ruling against the establishment of a religious ceremony. Those people who clamor about the removal of God from our public schools argue a confusing position. Their religious beliefs proclaim an omnipotent, omnipresent deity, but on the other hand, they say that the same God can be removed from a school by mere mortals. Removing God and avoiding sanctioned acknowledgement of a particular definition of God are two entirely different positions. All people, adults and children, are free to quietly invoke a deity at any time in any place. Government legislation of public prayers is unnecessary and is, moreover, a dangerous step toward establishing a state religion.

The words of Jesus of Nazareth plainly describe the prayerful attitude. "And when you pray, you must not be like the hypocrites; for they love to stand and pray in the synagogues and at the street corners, that they may be seen by men. But when you pray, go into your room and shut the door and pray to your Father who is in secret..." (Matthew 6:5-6) The benefits of time spent in daily meditation, reflection or prayer are not questioned here. The question is, do we want our government to legislate when and where and with what words we will spend that time?

Decent citizen

To The Editor:

I'm writing to you as a concerned citizen for decency in Midland.

When we see our young people being tempted by drugs and alcohol and porno, we get concerned and busy wanting to do something about it.

We also get concerned and busy doing something when paramutuel horseracing is mentioned in Midland County.

But, we're supposed to smile behind our hands and act a little embarrassed when "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" is mentioned.

The Lord says in I Corinthians 5:6, "Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole loaf?"

Sin is sin. Evil is evil. We can't put "a little sin" before our young people and expect them to be untouched.

A few years ago we Christians in the Permian Basin banned together and prayed when the rock group "Kiss" was to appear in Midland. They never made it. A few months ago we banned together again and kept "Ozzie" out of the P.B. All of the Permian Basin parents were rejoicing with us.

Now, this play, "BLWT," is put forth as a funny, wholesome comedy. This is like trying to portray Adolph Hitler as a boy scout.

Let's keep Midland clean, pure and wholesome. We're proud to have a nice city to raise our children in.

Parents, put forth that concern again and get busy. We can't serve God and Satan together.

Mrs. James R. (Geneva) Giles

Gross inequity

To The Editor:

The federal attempts to locate a high-level nuclear waste repository in Texas are grossly inequitable. In fact, any attempt to establish disposal sites for any out-of-state waste products is patently unfair.

Most nuclear and chemical wastes, whatever the degree of toxicity or undesireableness, are products of an industrial process, and many are from non-governmental factories and installations. That means that they pay taxes to those states, counties and other taxing districts in which they are located. They thereby contribute to an economic base which in turn produces even more tax income to the area. It is only logical and equitable that these same recipients of tax monies live up to their attendant responsibilities; they should provide the waste repositories and foot the bill for disposal of the generated effluents.

Why should other areas and taxpayers be saddled with their rightful burdens? Shipping wastes to non-contributing areas is an unconscionable violation of others' rights. If the federal government wants to get involved, let them use federal lands, not the privately held property of individual taxpaying citizens.

If they generate, let them incinerate!

Personal regard

To The Editor:

I would like to express personal regard and appreciation to Special Investigator Dewey Lee in our district attorney's office.

My company was in a position to have to stand a large loss in the form of a small word processing system, and because of the concern and diligent efforts of Mr. Lee, our unit has been located in another state and will be returned to us. I am convinced that Mr. Lee showed an outstanding investigative ability and knowledge in his effort to be of help.

While other cities are busy trying to put their elected and employed folks in jail, it seems that we in Midland should take pride in the ability and integrity of our officials. We do seem to have good city and county employees and could certainly use more like Dewey Lee.

Disappointed

To The Editor:

I am terribly disappointed in Midland Community Theatre. I used to think they were OK and enjoyed going to their plays, especially the musicals. No more!

Their putting on "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" was too much for me. The title alone was disgusting. When we make light of sin, we are in effect condoning it: The Bible says in I Corinthians 6:18 "flee fornication" and in I Thessalonians 5:22 "abstain from all appearances of evil."

Laws for people

To The Editor:

I am a recent citizen of Midland and do not know any of the people involved.

All laws are made to fit a need or desire. But these same laws can be eased to fit a need.

Mr. Carlton is making a remarkable recovery from a serious accident, with help from his family, doctors and others. What he and his mother, Mrs. Mitchell, are asking now is for a two-year easement of this law (about a house trailer in this area) to see if he can be independent and make it on his own.

With his determination he can. This trailer should be a landmark to everyone that Midland does care and is interested in each citizen, not just a few.

Terrible person

To The Editor:

After reading the article about the City Council refusing to allow Mark Carlton the privilege of living in the travel trailer in his yard, I thought, what a terrible person Ms. Dunn must be. She sounds like some neighbor.

Maybe she could just stay in Austin; I'm sure Midland could do without her. Maybe she could take Tom Sloan, Carroll Thomas and Mr. Marcum with her.

I don't know any of the people involved in this dispute but seems to me, people should be a little more caring about people. After all, that's what really makes a good neighborhood.

Beautiful roses

To The Editor:

Our appreciation to the Midland County Rose Society for the beautiful Rose Garden on Texas Avenue.

They have developed a lovely area in Midland and share pleasure with those who pass each day.

If any person has not seen this well kept garden, a special trip will be worth the time and effort.

It certainly radiates a feeling of tranquility and thankfulness.

Thanks, Midland

To The Editor:

On behalf of the Robert E. Lee High School Band and Orchestra, I wish to thank you, Midland, for your wholehearted support this year. Without your help and encouragement we would not have been your representatives in the finals of both the State UIL Marching Contest or the Buccaneer Music Festival in Corpus Christi.

As the director, my biggest thank you goes to the parents of the band and orchestra members at Lee High School. The very high standards that you have taught your children at home make our job a real pleasure.

With the continued support of the citizens of Midland and with the super young people that we teach, I feel completely confident that Robert E. Lee High School will continue to represent Midland in the tremendous manner it deserves.

Statistics paint fuzzy picture of city

Statistics paint fuzzy pictures.

During 1981, the Tall City was basking in an unprecedented oil boom that boosted per capita income to the highest level experienced in the nation that year — $16,467. With that reality came well-deserved recognition that here was a city of oil millionaires. An image of Midland began to form.

Bill Modisett

That same winter, 65-year-old Thelma Hubbard huddled in a cardboard box on the south side outside her home, bundling up in rags to ward off the below-freezing winds. She slept outside her home, Mrs. Hubbard told a local social worker, because it was warmer there. Her house had few unbroken windows and rotting boards let the winter chill invade the structure.

The woman wasn't one of those blessed by the 1981 statistics. She was the other side of the Midland story, the unseen side. Poverty unsurpassed in the nation existed in Midland then. It exists today. It will exist tomorrow. Heart-wrenching poverty.

Thelma Hubbard knew. Her home at 805 S. Atlanta had no running water, no electricity, no bathroom. The only heat was provided by one small space heater. She had no cookstove, but heated her canned food in aluminum pie containers over the space heater.

Thelma Hubbard's heart is pure. Struggling to provide the necessities of existence for herself, she still fed stray dogs in her neighborhood from her own food stock.

Her generosity was matched only by workers for Christmas in April, a local volunteer housing repair project, who labored over the span of two years to virtually reconstruct her residence. The program has drawn national attention and acclaim, and rightfully so. It is one of the positive aspects of Midland unrevealed in the statistics.

The greatest danger to interpreting statistics is that the interpretation will be inaccurate, that they will create false assumptions. Statistics can't reveal the heart of a city, evidenced in Midland's case by the willingness of hundreds of people from all walks of life to give money and time to make life better for others.

Gaining stature as the wealthiest city in the nation per capita saddled the people of Midland with the weighty responsibility of proving that wealth does not translate into heartlessness. Traditionally, Midlanders have shared their wealth in a respectable fashion through charitable giving. Annually, independent oil companies — the backbone of the city's economy — give generously as do major oil companies located here. Other companies and individuals, too, have strongly supported community-oriented programs.

But how much is enough? When a city is number one in the nation in per capita income, the burden becomes greater and Midland now has the responsibility of recognizing to a greater degree than ever before the plight of its impoverished and continuing to work at reducing that level of poverty.

As people around the nation look toward Midland, they'll ask how residents of this community so blessed with material wealth are addressing social problems like environmental pollution, crime, racial bigotry, social injustice and, of course, poverty. Failure to address any social issue will immediately brand Midlanders as irresponsible and greedy.

The statistics don't lie in this instance, though. Midland is the nation's wealthiest city. Its wealth exists in the ability of its residents to make the community a shining example of how wealth can be utilized to forge a better life.

Midland's heart should be as pure as Thelma Hubbard's.

Guam police chief has blind date with next best thing to Tom Selleck

AGANA, Guam (AP) — Guam Police Chief Judy Guthertz couldn't take actor Tom Selleck to the Guam Police Week Ball, so she took the next best thing — his lookalike.

After Ms. Guthertz said she was heartbroken that the star of the television show "Magnum, P.I." had to turn down her invitation for Friday night's event, local businessmen took up a collection to fly in Larry Hutto, 34, of Atlanta, Ga. Hutto was winner of a national Selleck-lookalike contest.

The couple seemed pleased with the blind date arranged over 15,000 miles.

"He looks better than the real thing," Ms. Guthertz said. "He has a terrific personality and is a very attractive man in his own right."

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — Jihan Sadat says she owes her international reputation as a women's rights supporter to her late husband, assassinated Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

Jihan Sadat

"He wanted me to become a fulfilled and self-confident daughter of our age, although his own background had instilled traditional values in his personal way of thinking," she told the University of Vermont graduating class on Friday.

Mrs. Sadat, who teaches Arabic literature at the University of Cairo, credited her late husband with giving her the motivation to pursue her childhood dream of becoming a well-educated career woman. She pointed out that when she was a child, it was practically unheard of for women to pursue their own careers, and she married Sadat when she was 15.

She said she and her husband both believed she had a duty to perform as first lady.

"I feel the role of the wife of the president must be a link between the husband and the people," Mrs. Sadat explained. "I believe we were like two partners completing each other."

POSITIVE THINKING

Tension can win only if we let it

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Tension invades every area of our lives if we let it. In athletics coaches are finding now that it is counterproductive to scream at their players or exhort them to frenzied efforts. This is more likely to damage performance than improve it, because it heightens tension.

My friend the great former Dodger baseball pitcher Carl Erskine told me about a crucial game where he was the pitcher. It was the fifth of October, the fifth game of the world series, the fifth inning, and it also happened to be Carl's fifth wedding anniversary. The Dodgers had a four-run lead when the Yankees came to bat. They put men on bases, brought in two men, and then, with two men still on base, someone hit a home run, bringing in a total of five runs within minutes, putting the Yankees one run ahead. Carl was in trouble.

The fans were howling vociferously, urging Charles Dressen, the Dodger manager, to remove Erskine and put in another pitcher. Erskine felt as if his nerves were stretched to the breaking point. His confidence in himself was being drained away by tension. It grew worse as he saw Charlie Dressen come out of the dugout and walk slowly to the mound.

Dressen held out his hand for the ball. Carl gave it to him. Seventy thousand fans watched breathlessly. Would Dressen summon a right-hander or another southpaw? Erskine waited. Dressen looked up reflectively at the sky. He asked mildly, "Isn't this your wedding anniversary, Carl?" Erskine nodded, astonished. "What are you doing tonight?" Dressen went on. "I hope you're taking Betty out to dinner." Erskine thought, Seventy thousand fans watching me, and Charlie is asking about my wedding anniversary! Dressen slapped the ball back into the pitcher's glove as he said, "You're my man, Carl. See if you can get the side out before dark." And he walked back to the dugout.

The Dodgers tied the score in the seventh inning and scored again in the top of the eleventh. Erskine got nineteen consecutive outs and the Dodgers won the game and eventually the series.

In another game, Carl told us, he felt his control slipping. The familiar, paralyzing tension began to build up in him. Tension is really a muscle spasm in the mind that can interfere with the smooth functioning of the muscles of the body. Carl knew he had to head if off somehow.

He backed off the mound, picked up the resin bag, flung it down. He turned his back on the plate, groping in his mind for something that would neutralize the tension. He prayed for help, and suddenly he remembered a trip he had taken some time before with another Dodger pitcher whose nickname was "Preacher" Roe. Carl and Preacher were out fishing when they heard, from across the lake, hymns being sung at a religious meeting.

As Carl stood beside the pitcher's box, he imaged that peaceful, pastoral scene and the words of one those hymns came back into his mind:

Drop Thy still dews of quietness
'Til all our strivings cease;
Take from our souls the strain and stress,
And let our ordered lives confess
The beauty of Thy peace.

Quietness. Peacefulness. Ordered lives. Beauty. The tranquil power in those words drove the tension out of Erskine's mind, and as soon as it was gone from his mind it was gone from his body. He turned back to the mound and began firing strikes past the batters.

Adolescent son deserves privacy

Dear Dr. Solomon: Do you see any reason why a 16-year-old boy would want to keep the door to his room closed? My son and I have been having frequent and very angry arguments over this habit of his, and I have to do something about it. I would like your opinion. Why would a boy act the way he does? — Mrs. J.G., Flint, Mich.

Dear Mrs. G.: Without knowing your son's personality, I would simply have to assume that he wants to keep the door to his room closed so that he could have some privacy. What's wrong with that? I would hope that you and your husband keep the door to your room closed on occasion as well.

A more pertinent question than the one you asked is why you are so concerned that the door is closed. What do you think he might be doing? Your ability to consider this question objectively might help reduce the strain between yourself and your son.

There are enough problems confronting every family under the best of circumstances without creating a problem where none exists. Adolescents are at a stage in which they are trying to separate from their parents. Let your son do so. Permit him the privacy he seeks. If you really want him to remain close to you, you are going to have to let him separate from you.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I was at a party the other night and one of the guests was telling about being in a restaurant where someone started choking on some food, and someone else at the table put his arms around the guy who was choking and squeezed and the food popped out. And then another of the guests said he is a paramedic and what the guy in the restaurant did was not a good idea. The two of them got into a pretty heavy argument about it, and I would just like to know what your opinion is about it. — Eddie, Santa Rosa, Calif.

Dear Eddie: The controversy over the effectiveness and advisability of using the Heimlich maneuver, which is what you appear to be describing, extends beyond the party you were attending. The argument includes physicians and there is no general agreement as yet.

The Heimlich maneuver consists of abdominal thrusts, but many physicians believe that a combination of back blows and chest thrusts is a superior method of dislodging food when the airway is obstructed. The controversy is still not resolved.

WHY BMW CHOSE TO CHANGE THE "QUINTESSENTIAL SPORTS SEDAN."

BMW does not annually reinvent the automobile. Instead they periodically refine it.

So after six years the sedan Car and Driver nominated "the quintessential sports sedan"—the BMW 320i—has evolved into a new car: the 318i. A machine with a totally redesigned, fully independent suspension system, new aerodynamics, new technology, and a new fuel injection system that delivers even greater torque.

Dear Mom and Daddy,
I'm so happy! Brian and I bought a Fairgate Townhome and it was easy to qualify for the "nothing down" program. Ours is the 3 bedroom 2 bath floorplan, and it's just beautiful. The special features—drapes, ceiling fans, microwave, fireplace-make—Fairgate well worth $92,500. Please drive by Fairgate. They're west off Midland Drive just north of Wadley. You'll be so proud.

of our new home inventory has closed or gone under contract in the last six weeks. Four of our builder/clients are now involved in lot acquisitions, plan approval, etc. to begin more new homes.

But while these new houses are being framed we need additional homes to show our customers and sell!

We presently market homes in the Wydewood, Superior, Fairmont and Green Tree sub-divisions.

Our firm features a unique combination of years of experience and education in advertising, marketing and promotional strategies with a proven sales record in residential property and a thorough, on-going knowledge of new home finance.

If you need assistance in marketing your residential products give us a call, or drop by our office in San Miguel Square (next door to Mortgage & Trust).

SHE GRADUATED FROM MIDLAND HIGH SCHOOL. FIFTEEN YEARS LATER, SHE RETURNED ... WITH A CAMEL SADDLE.

SHE CALLS THE WORLD her home

Text by Diane Booth

Native Midlander Suzanne Gunter Richards is adjusting to Midland life. She returns to Midland with a 15-year collection of memories of countries she's been able to call home, including Egypt, Iran, Scotland, England, China, Singapore, Hong Kong, Saudi Arabia.

"I never thought I'd get myself out of here," she says, referring to the days before her 1965 high school graduation. But, she adds, she has tired of living the life of a gypsy.

After riding Arabian horses among Egyptian pyramids, wandering through Roman ruins, schussing down ski runs in the Swiss Alps, lingering over sumptuous dinners in Rome and island-hopping in Greece, Suzanne Gunter Richards is trying to adjust to life in Midland again.

For 15 years Mrs. Richards lived overseas and traveled extensively but she has given up a nomadic life to return to her native Midland.

Married to a petroleum engineer, Gary Richards' profession took the couple through Europe, the Middle and Far East.

During their 15-year marriage, the Richards have lived in Scotland, China, Iran, Singapore, England, Hong Kong, Saudi Arabia and Egypt. When Richards was not working the couple traveled "to almost every country."

After living near Cairo, Egypt for two years, Richards resigned his position last fall as a drilling superintendent for a major oil company. The Richards packed up their 18-room villa, bade farewell to the pyramids and a high-paying job and headed for Midland.

ALTHOUGH MRS. Richards said she cherishes her life abroad she tired of living the life of a "gypsy."

"I thought I would never get myself out of here," she said, thinking back to the days before high school graduation in 1965.

"After awhile you feel like you have no roots," she said. "We wanted to come back to the U. S." Mrs. Richards enjoys being close to her parents, who live in Odessa, and she and her husband are house shopping.

Excited about buying a home, Richards said, "People from other countries come here and buy our land and banks but Americans can't own property overseas."

But Mrs. Richards said it is difficult to come home. "When people overseas asked me where I am from I would tell them Midland. It is disappointing when you are a stranger in your own home. I used to know all the streets, the ministers and the store clerks. I would go to Walgreen's and get candy off the cuff and the clerk would say 'We'll catch your daddy when he comes in,' but I don't know Midland or the people anymore."

GETTING ACCLIMATED to Midland and the U. S. she said, is more challenging than orienting herself to living overseas. The chance to travel extensively more than made up for the hardships she endured living on foreign soil, she said. Mrs. Richards finds herself missing the sojourns to Venice, boat rides up the Nile River and motoring through Scotland's picture-book countryside.

Life in Midland is comparatively "boring," she said. "I told my husband I don't think I will ever adjust to Midland after so many years abroad."

But the life of an oilman's wife is not all romance and vacations, she said. Married when she was 20, Suzanne and her husband lived in 13 different states the first nine months of their marriage. They lived in trailers adjacent the rigs, which were far from the city lights. While her husband supervised oil rigs she cooked for the work crews. "I was always cooking for somebody."

THE MIDLAND native spent a lot of time alone. Richards worked for two consecutive weeks in the oil fields, for example, and returned home for a two week break. It was during that free time the Texans saw the world.

Their longest stay in any one country was when they lived in Aberdeen, Scotland for six years. Mrs. Richards adored Scotland because it is "beautiful, clean and the people speak English." She does not look back on their time in the Far East with fond memories. She calls life in China a "stone age" existence.

The Richards lived in Iran from 1978-79. Mrs. Richards was forced to leave the country when the late Shah of Iran fell from power and the Ayatollah Khomeini stepped in. She left Iran two weeks before Americans at the U.S. embassy were taken hostage. Her husband was allowed to stay behind to work for awhile.

"After the revolution, the U.S. embassy sent out notices telling us not to leave our homes and to send the servants out to shop and do errands. We really worried about our safety."

THEIR IRANIAN MAID was allowed to return to the house and pack up the couple's posessions. Four months later, moving trucks were permitted to retrieve their belongings, Mrs. Richards said.

(See RICHARDS, Page 2E)

The Richards' Egyptian camel saddle is one of the more unique souvenirs they've acquired throughout their travels.

Richards...

While living in Iran the couple seldom left the country because of the government's strict travel restrictions.

Although life for a woman in Maadi, Egypt was a challenge, according to Mrs. Richards, she enjoyed her two-year stay there. For people in the oil business, she said "Egypt is the cream of the crop of the oil countries," because of the perks employees and their families receive to compensate them for bad conditions.

"Egypt is so backward and a very poor country, but I loved it. It has some of the wealthiest and poorest people you will ever see."

The boxes used to move their belongings to Egypt were stolen by a few of the city's street people for shelter, she said.

Although she never grew accustomed to the familiar sight of guards and guns and street beggars, the American was charmed by the historic land inhabited by people with "a zest for living."

In addition to "good money," the couple enjoyed free rent on an 18-room villa, a company car and servants including a gardener, maid, cook and guard.

A male cook was hired after Mrs. Richards returned from what she described as an unsavory experience at the local meat market. Slaughtered animals were hung by hooks from the market ceiling and shoppers selected a roast or chops from the bloody carcass.

An Arabic-speaking guard was furnished following the assassination of late Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. He was stationed in front of the home to ward off people with anti-American sentiments. Their house was across the street from the Israeli embassy.

While Richards speaks Arabic, Mrs. Richards "knows just enough to get me in trouble."

Because of her husband's long absences, Mrs. Richards befriended many other oilmen's wives from all over the world. "We became a very close-knit group. We shopped and did things together because women don't go places alone in Middle Eastern countries."

Mrs. Richards recalls holding a garage sale with some other wives, but the plan to get rid of unwanted clothes and household items nearly resulted in a riot. "The Egyptians were fighting over everything. We finally had to close the gates and let in a few people at a time. It was like a Dallas Cowboys football game.

"It is a man's society in Egypt," and other Moslem countries, she said. "They completely ignore women's wishes." For example, if she asked her gardener to plant some roses he would amiably agree to follow her orders but wait for orders from her husband.

"I had difficulty dealing with the people because they would always want to wait for my husband to come home but sometimes he would be gone for weeks."

The Midland woman said she stood up for her rights but decided it was impossible to fight "thousands of years of traditions. When you live and work in a country you must respect its people."

She found it an experience just to get around Cairo and the environs.

"You aren't just dealing with cars but with donkey carts, camels, chickens and children."

As she adjusts to life in Midland, Mrs. Richards emphasizes how good Americans have it. "We are so lucky this is such an easy country to live in."

Although she figures she and her husband will remain in the U.S. for some time, she does not expect to shake the travel bug. Before leaving Egypt she participated in a ritual to make sure she would see the land by the Nile again.

"An old Egyptian legend says if you drink water from the Nile River you will return."

Men, women not equal, says insurance industry

Hearst Feature Service

Men and women are not considered equal by the insurance industry because their costs are not equal. Women tend to have higher medical bills, but live longer and drive more safely than men.

The insurance company insists that it's only reasonable to charge rates and pay benefits that correspond with the risks reliably identified by a person's sex. But the industry view is under stiff challenge in the courts and in Congress by senior citizen, civil rights and women's groups pushing for equal treatment in insurance.

Critics of gender-based insurance say that people should be treated as individuals, not as members of a particular sex. They note that society does not accept race as a valid risk factor in setting insurance rates, even though whites live longer on the average than blacks. Sex also is a socially unacceptable determinant of risk in insurance, critics say. Smoking, drinking and other behaviorial factors within a person's control are fairer and statistically more accurate predictors of risk than sex, they contend.

Although some rates favor women, the overall impact of gender-based insurance is that women pay more and receive fewer benefits than men, critics contend. The insurance industry, in turn, argues that women are the principal beneficiaries of sex-distinct rates.

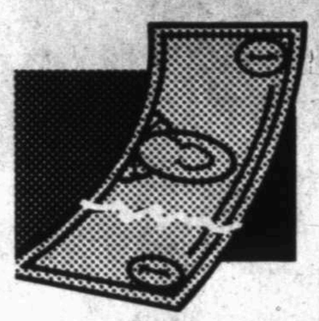
Since most Americans receive health and disability coverage under employer-provided group plans that don't discriminate by sex, women are the overall beneficiaries, according to Aetna Life Insurance. Aetna figures that a representative woman will pay between $3,300 and $5,600 less during her lifetime than the equivalent man.

The U.S. Supreme Court last week heard arguments that insurance companies should not be allowed to pay women retirement annuities smaller than those given men of the same age. Two lower federal courts have ruled that the two-tier system is illegal.

Legislation before Congress would extend civil rights laws to insurance by prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sex as well as race, religion and national origin. Even its foes say the legislation stands a good chance of passage.

For business, the stakes are high. Equal treatment of female and male policyholders would require a revolutionary restructuring of the insurance and pension business.

Life insurance dollars:



Of every dollar received by a typical U.S. life insurance company:

71¢ comes from premiums paid by policyholders.
29¢ comes from investments of premium income.

Each dollar is then divided by the company and paid:

49.8¢ benefits to policyholders
29.6¢ addition to policy reserve funds
9.2¢ company expenses
5.6¢ commissions to salesmen
2.6¢ taxes
2.1¢ additions to special reserve and surplus funds
1.1¢ dividends to shareholders

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Some 400 guests were on hand to share in an exciting evening May 12 at the benefit gala and Community Theatre Premiere of the hit musical comedy, "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas." The party was held in front of the historic Yucca Theatre, where the play is now running. Proceeds from the gala's ticket sales will go to the renovation of the Yucca, which opened in 1929 and was designated a Texas Historic Landmark in 1981.

The 200 block of North Colorado Street had been roped off for the occasion, and guests were wined and dined under a large blue and white striped tent. The mood of the evening was western, and dress was casual. Many of the guests were attired in western wear, including blue jeans, prairie skirts, fringed shirts and vests. Although cowboy hats and boots were not de rigueur, they were certainly a popular choice.

Continuous music was provided during the party by two alternating bands, "Jade" and "The Music Store of Texas."

Dinner, served by Chicken Charlie's of Balmorhea, Texas, featured tasty barbecued ribs, brisket and sausage, along with the pinto beans, cole slaw and relishes that are traditionally part of any barbecue we've attended in these parts, and the more unconventional fare of Mexican hominy, small individual loaves of bread and apple cobbler. Liquid refreshments were served from bars located in the four corners of the canopy.

Although the curtain was scheduled to go up at 8:30, the dinner line showed no signs of abating, so those who had finished eating enjoyed street dancing in front of the bandstand. The crowd was finally ushered inside an hour and fifteen minutes late to see the first community theatre in the nation perform former Midlander Larry King's play, but all agreed the evening's entertainment was worth waiting for.

We enjoyed visiting with Larry earlier in the evening and hearing his favorable impressions of the Yucca's magnificent renovation and of his feelings of nostalgia at being back in his hometown and seeing his play performed in the very theatre where he went to movies as a child and teen-ager.

It also was a pleasure to chat with the show's choreographer Jerry Yoder of New York City, who returned to Midland for opening night. Currently choreographing an Off-Broadway showcase, Jerry danced with the original Broadway company of "Best Little Whorehouse" and choreographed the Australian production. Also present for the festivities were Marvin Zindler, Houston TV newscaster whose expose of the famed "Chicken Ranch" at LaGrange led to its demise, and Sonny Stoltz, who was the city's mayor at the time of brouhaha.

Milling in the lobby and outside the theatre during intermission, the audience raved over the show. The consensus was that it was one of Midland Community Theatre's finest efforts and that our fair city abounds with talent. One Midlander stated that she liked MCT's version every bit as well as the Broadway show, and another long-time supporter said she felt "proud, like a fond mother," at what the theatre has accomplished.

A pre-party in the Executive Dining Room of the First National Bank was given for major contributors of the evening. To carry out the western motif, a hay wagon was used to transport guests from the Yucca parking lot to the bank and back.

Former Midlanders and theatre volunteers Helen and Karl Koch came in from Denver for the opening and were weekend houseguests of Liz and Bill Pennebaker. Among others we spotted in the throng were Alinda and Mike Wisenbaker, Mary Alice and Gordon Knox, Ellen and Larry Bell, Monta Jo and Ted Johnson, Jan and Joe O'Neill, Susan and Bill Gau, Patricia and Martin Allday, Carole and Johnny Warren, Barbara and Ed Magruder, Raye Ann and Boley Embrey, Liz and Tom Fowler, Wilda and Maurice Bullock, Shari and Bob Koziol, Janice and George Thomas, Patty and Tevis Herd, Sandy and Buster Landua, Rosalind and Arden Grover, Sally and Jim Salners and Betty Rae and Paul Davis.

SALLY (MRS. KEN) STEWARD and Margaret (Mrs. Jerry) Roan were accompanied by Louise (Mrs. Jack) Guyer of Austin on a glorious two-week tour of Europe. Using a European guidebook as their source, they traveled throughout the continent by Eurail and made their own choices about what to see and how long to stay.

Sally enjoyed the tourist attractions in London before joining the other women in Brussels, Belgium. From there, their itinerary included Holland, Germany, Austria and Switzerland. Highlights of their trip were the Keukenhof Gardens near Amsterdam, where they were awed by the breathtaking sight of acres and acres of tulips and other spring flowers; a boat ride down the Rhine in Germany to see the castles along the way; Salzburg, where they enjoyed a "Sound of Music" tour, and Garmisch, a ski resort high in the mountains of West Germany. They also spent some time in The Hague, Munich, Innsbruck and Zurich before departing for home from Frankfurt.

BARBARA AND CHARLES HARTWELL recently enjoyed a visit with their daughters, Holly and Milby, in San Antonio. Their reunion coincided with the Alamo City's annual Fiesta, where two of the Hartwells' nieces were selected as duchesses for the Queen's Court.

Holly came in from Dallas, where she is working as a securities analyst. Milby arrived from Austin, where she has just completed her junior year in the University of Texas School of Business and where the honors continue to rain oh her. She was recently elected president of her sorority, Kappa Kappa Gamma; tapped for Mortar Board, a senior honorary based on service, leadership and scholarship; selected as one of the four finalists for University Sweetheart, and elected to office in Orange Jackets, a women's service organization.

Sewing creates 'pack rats'

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

Once upon a time I thought it would be a good idea to clip and save every article or picture in every magazine or newspaper that had anything whatsoever to do with sewing.

What a dumb idea. It created an overwhelming space problem — plus some question about my sanity.

I discovered that, even though a particular article seemed pertinent at the time of clipping, it quickly lost its appeal and I never referred to it again. If we are to clip and save, we must learn to be selective.

If you can read through an article and retain the gist of it without further study, then read it and toss it. If, however, it contains details or instructions you will need to refer to again, it will make a good saver.

Recently I threw away a back-breaking four large trash bags full of clippings I had saved — some from as far back as 1970. I figure if I hadn't looked at them since 1970, chances are I won't be looking at them in the next six months.

Something else we pack rats tend to save are bits and pieces of trim, bias tape, rickrack and such. Tell me, what does one do with 6 inches of bright green bias tape? Not much. Unless you make doll clothes, or know someone who does, toss out those little tails.

On the other hand, saving patterns can be a good idea. If you don't want to save them, trade them.

What fabric do you save? It depends. If you are quilter or maker of doll clothes, no piece is too small. But, if you are a seamstress with no notion of either of the above, why keep a lot of scraps around?

If throwing something away causes you to break out in hives, find a place to give it away. Makes you feel better. Be a wise saver.

Keep lips kissably pretty

By COLETTE BOUCHEZ
Copley News Service

With the onset of warmer weather getting closer everyday, very special attention should be paid to your lips, an area that can easily become dry and parched due to the sun as well as exposure to saltwater and chlorine pools.

To keep your lips kissably soft and shiny be sure to use a creamy lipstick, as opposed to a lip stain and apply it frequently throughout the day. If you can, choose a lip gloss or add one over your regular lipstick, which will help seal in moisture, as well as protect your lips from harsh burning rays.

The latest lip "fashions" from Italy include a clear lip gloss with a slightly pearlized quality, that adds a soft shimmer when worn over your regular lipstick, and imparts a dewy, sexy look when worn alone. Since pastels are the rage this summer, these new lighter, but shiny lips work well when wearing white, as well as all the other soft colors on the palettes of top designers.

In addition, you can help your summertime lips by increasing your intake of water. According to Elaine Good, a top Hollywood makeup artist, when your lips are dry and parched it's the first sign of dehydration, and again, the best remedy is drinking lots of water.

Cruise offers many sites, one price

Copley News Service

Newlyweds today can honeymoon almost anywhere, thanks to the ease of travel and enticing incentives for a variety of honeymooner-oriented vacations. There is such a wide selection of romantic spots that it's hard to choose just one. So, why choose? Why not visit seven or eight different locations? Take a cruise.

Cruise travel offers the most complete blend of romance, excitement, luxury and totally carefree days. And the beauty of a cruise is that it is a complete vacation. You unpack your bags as soon as you board the ship and you're on your way to several exotic ports that otherwise would be difficult to enjoy in a relaxing fashion (even if you had the time and money to visit them all separately).

When you sail on your honeymoon, you can choose the pace of your vacation. You can join in the many activities on board, or plop into a deck chair near the swimming pool and feel the bright, warm sunshine and cooling ocean breezes. And when you decide to seclude yourselves in your cabin for a private, romantic dinner, your privacy is complete.

Honeymoon planning made simple

Copley News Service

When taking that much-needed honeymoon after months of hectic planning associated with the wedding, getting there should be half the fun. If like most honeymooners, you have precious little vacation time to begin with, every aspect of the holiday — from the very moment it starts — should be the ultimate in relaxation and enjoyment.

The key to a gratifying honeymoon? Planning. The honeymoon is as much a part of your wedding plans as the reception. Take enough time beforehand to research where you and your fiance would really like to visit, and what facilities and activities are offered.

There are a number of easy ways to get valuable information about honeymoon destinations. Most countries and Caribbean islands have their own tourist boards with branches in major cities. These offices stock a wealth of brochures and "how-to" flyers about their particular country.

Monthly travel and bridal magazines offer well-researched information about destinations around the world. Daily newspapers also offer insights into vacation choices. Most Sunday papers have special travel sections — and probably even a "write-in" consumer column that addresses specific questions. Individual airlines, hotels and local chambers of commerce also send out brochures — for just the writing or asking.

Oban: Historic, sacred islands

By JANET LOWE
Copley News Service

The rain slipped down the picture window of the pub as easily as Isle of Jura unblended Scotch whiskey passed the palates of visitors to the Regent Hotel in Oban, Scotland. And as steadily.

Members of a Glasgow scuba divers' club measured the downpour against their vast British Isles weather experience and opined that it would clear enough the next day to allow them to dive on a Spanish armada galleon sunk off Tobermory on the Isle of Mull.

Other tourists simply pondered the driest possible way to return to their hotels when it came time to leave the tweedy warmth of the pub.

Morning found a misty Oban Bay, with enough light to show shroudy clouds drifting just above Mull and Lismore. Both of the Inner Hebrides islands are visible from Corran Esplanade, Oban's bayside version of hotel row.

The "dreagh" Celtic sky had settled enough to allow the ferry and excursion steamer to make its rounds to Mull, Iona and Staffa and out through the maze of islands that Danish, Irish and other seafarers charted their way to the Argyle coast of western Scotland.

Oban, a resort and fishing town that graces the hills around the horseshoe-shaped Oban Bay, provides the perfect debarking point for exploring the sacred and historic islands which, despite their well-known beauty, hold on to an inescapable sense of remoteness.

It's a favorite holiday spot — especially during the sunny summer months — for British tourists, who frequently reach Oban by railway. Those who drive there find the roads curving through Scotland's vast forest parks, even past bonnie Loch Lomond and towering Ben Lomond. It's a slow and winding drive, but few would care to rush past the majestic lakes and mountains.

Accommodations in Oban range from simple to superior. The small Regent Hotel, directly across from the pier, specializes in the continental preparation of seafood brought in by Oban's own fleet. Most rooms at the Regent and other Esplanade hotels offer views of the waterfront and islands. Bed and breakfast accommodations are available throughout town, and economy hotels are clumped at the north end of the Esplanade. Those willing to rough it can stay at the Silver Jubilee Youth Hostel, also conveniently situated on the Esplanade, near the fishing boats, ferries and railway station.

Much of the coast north of Oban has been placed in the British National Trust for conservation because of spectacular land and seascapes. The Inner Hebrides are largely protected in the same way, not only because of their soft and moody scenery, but because they served as a central staging area for much of Scotland's history.

As the first ferry of the morning, the Caledonian, arrived at Oban from Tobermory, passengers gathered on the dock to board for the outbound trip. The certainty of cold winds and the possibility of more rain seemed no deterrent.

Chinese visa process announced

TRAVEL ADVISORY — THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA: The State Department advises all U.S. travelers to the People's Republic of China that the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs has announced a new visa issuance procedure to be effective immediately. It will now take 10 working days to process a visa, regardless of the type of passport or the purpose of one's travel. Application forms must be completed in duplicate in English and Chinese, accompanied by two photographs and $7 (U.S.).

QUESTION:

Is it possible to obtain from your office the dates and notations in a person's passport? I do not have my old passport and it might have been turned in to the Passport Office when I received a new one. I need the data that would be in the old passport.

ANSWER

Generally, when an applicant submits a previous passport with an application for a new passport, the previous one is canceled and returned to the applicant. The Passport Office does not retain old, expired passports. Thus, if you do not have your old passport in your possession, it is not possible to recover the data which was placed therein.

QUESTION:

I need a new passport and have heard of passports by mail — how do I get one by mail?

ANSWER:

To be eligible to apply for a passport using the mail-in application form, you must have a previous passport which was issued in your name prior to your 18th birthday and within eight years prior to the date you apply. Mail-in application forms are available at authorized post offices and clerks of county courts.

Train travel in Europe, via Eurailpass, is easy, economical and efficient. And you can view scenes like this Swiss village from the comfort of the neat, clean trains.

Eurailpass goes 1,341 miles

Copley News Service

After visiting Sigmund Freud's museum in Vienna while on a Eurailpass trip, I feel qualified to guess how he'd psychoanalyze this recurring dream I have of being on one of those wonderful European trains.

"It's elementary, my dear child," I can imagine him saying (I have read more of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle than I have Freud's work, but I do know the low regard Freud had for the female intellect and you can bet he'd have called even an old lady like me a child), "you want to relive the pleasures of riding the rails with your Eurailpass."

Well, now, I can tell you frankly that I wasn't too impressed with old Sigmund's museum (the famed couch wasn't even there). I thought it interesting, however, that his museum is part of an apartment complex that still is being used as living quarters, and a lovely location it is. And it would be a great place from which to send your analyst a picture postcard.

But dreams aside, it's a terrific travel bargain. To get down to basics, a 21-day Eurailpass will cost you $330, a one-month pass $410, and if you're strapped for time you can get a 15-day pass for $260, all rates first class. Second-class passes are available too, at even less. And if you're lucky enough to be under 26, you can purchase a Eurail Youthpass, valid in second-class accommodations. You must purchase your ticket at home — they are not available to Europeans or North Africans.

The glory of Eurailpass is its flexibility. You are entitled to unlimited travel on national railroads, many private rail lines, in addition to some steamers and ferries in 16 countries — Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Holland, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland.

Our group covered three countries, Switzerland, Austria and Germany, and 1,341 miles in 10 days.

Our Swissair flight landed in Zurich, which has to be one of the most convenient airports in the world. After showing your passport and claiming your luggage (you needn't go through customs if you have nothing to declare), you load your luggage onto "shopping carts" which you wheel up and down escalators, an adventure in itself, and find yourself in the train station.

Eurailpass...

Our first stop was St. Gallen, 50 miles of small villages and garden plots from Zurich. Known as the undeclared fashion capital of Switzerland, it has shopping streets that boast a sophisticated variety of everything from clothing (very expensive) to antiques, surprising in such a small town. The town has many attractions of its own — the Abbey Library with the first book printed in German and lovely inlaid wood floors that you put felt slippers over your shoes to walk on; the Embroidery and Lace-Work Museum, medieval churches, charming old homes with carved bay windows, a deer park.

And it is a good base for sight-seeing in the area. It is 15 minutes from Lake Constance, and a short train ride into the mountains to Appenzell, where you will find no women's libbers. The women of the canton have no say in the government, by their own choice. Be sure to see Appenzell's Music Museum, a fantastic collection of instruments and mechanical "musicians" that are amazingly lifelike.

From St. Gallen we took a "scenic Alpine journey" to Innsbruck, dining royally on the train. The food is delicious, nicely served and not too expensive — about $10 for a very good meal.

Innsbruck is famous, of course, for winter sports. But there is much to do any season of the year. And if you're a ski buff and arrive in summer, at least you can visit the newly opened Olympic Museum with video films of famous skiers and Olympic events, and audio in four languages. Of more general interest is the Hofkirche and Silver Chapel, with its monument to Emperor Maximilian I, guarded by 28 larger-than-life bronze statues of his relatives and retainers.

Innsbruck attracts many young tourists from everywhere and if you go to the Folkloric entertainment (which is open every night except Christmas, I believe) you can enjoy an evening of alpen horn playing, ethnic dancing and yodeling, and also enjoy the youngsters enjoying themselves.

Vienna was the next stop in our journey, everyone's favorite European city. There is much too much to include in such a short travelogue, but you must be forewarned that you probably will not be able to attend the Spanish Riding Academy's performance. Reservations must be made many months in advance. You can, however, watch the morning rehearsals with the stately Lippizanner stallions, a marvelous exhibition of horsemanship. And be sure to see the magnificent Schoenbrunn Palace, the Art Museum (you can skip Freud's) and have an afternoon indulgence at the world-famous Sluka coffeehouse. Never have I seen such sinfully extravagant desserts and pastries.

Early one morning we boarded the "Prinz Eugen," lunched in the train and arrived in Wuerzburg. So far we've been in Switzerland, Austria and now West Germany, with a minimum of hassle. You merely show your Eurailpass and passport to the conductor of the new country as you roll along.

Wuerzburg is another great city for walking, as all of the stops on this trip are. The Residenz here is the town's pride, a breathtaking piece of architecture adorned with amazing paintings. The thing that intrigued me, however, was a carving on a downtown church, showing how the Virgin Mary conceived — God is in heaven, talking through an earphone that extends down to Earth and is nestled against Mary's ear.

Heidelberg was our next destination, the lovely university town with its brooding castle looking down on the Neckar River. This is another town with a lot of young people — every fourth person is a student in this oldest university on German soil, started in 1386. The Charles Theodor Bridge was the only structure damaged in Heidelberg in World War II. Fortunately, the U.S. commander of the planes that had already taken off to bomb the city in the closing days of the war realized the stupidity of ruining this lovely city, a target that had no military value, and turned back.

The train ride to Lucerne, our next goal, originally had involved a two-minute train change but our guardian angels, Juergen Arnold of Germanrail and Peter Ueltschi of the Swiss Federal Railways, decided we weren't agile enough to make the change. And when the schedule says that your train arrives in Mannheim at 12:27 and your connecting train leaves Mannheim at 12:29, that's it. So we made a more leisurely train connection and got to see the Mannheim train station, a village in itself with hotel, shops, restaurants.

Which reminds me of a travel tip — use the restrooms on the train since they are free of charge, while the station requires a coin. And since you will be traveling through a number of countries with perhaps no chance to change currency, it's best to bring some coins of each realm from home to pay for just such emergencies.

Lucerne has such a lovely setting, snowcapped Alps, Lake Lucerne, the River Reuss with its Chapel Bridge. There are great museums, shopping is fantastic, everywhere you look there's a picture opportunity. But the thing that touched me was the Swan Father, a member of the Lucerne police establishment whose only duty is to feed and care for the swans and ducks and see that no harm comes to them.

Montreux, our final stop, is another place that would be a good base for sight-seeing via your Eurailpass. A compact little town, it is famous for its casino, the Jazz Festival in July, the Golden Rose TV contest each spring and the Montreux-Vevey Music Festival in autumn. The showpiece of Montreux is Chillon Castle, immortalized by Lord Byron's poem and a famous piece of graffiti — Byron's scrawled name on one of the pillars.

Seeing Europe the Eurailpass way is a travel experience you will never forget. So get your ticket, choose the countries you want to see, get the pertinent Eurail timetables free for the asking from your Eurail issuing office or invest in Thos. Cook's Continental Timetable.

Have fun and I wish I were going with you.

Travel industry urges service improvement

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

ACAPULCO, Mexico — As a recovering economy makes it feasible for a growing number of consumers to travel, the industry must place less emphasis on pure selling and more on improving service.

"There are many people around the world who would love to visit new places," says James B. Wiesler, vice chairman of California-based BankAmerica Corp., "but they don't because of the hassles of traveling."

It begins with confusion of available information, he notes, and with the variety of fares for the same class of service available to the same destination.

In a keynote address, Weisler told 1,250 delegates attending the 32nd annual Pacific Area Travel Association convention held recently in San Diego, that the industry "must do a better job."

"Ever tried to make reservations and no one answered? Ever showed up at the airport and found the flight was overbooked? Stood in line 40 minutes and have the flight closed? ..."

There's lost baggage through carelessness as well, he added, and, as important, customs delays and other problems at airports.

Noting that American railroads ran into trouble in the 1960s because they thought of themselves as being simply in the railroad rather than in the transportation business, Wiesler stressed the need for tourism to be customer-oriented, instead of product-oriented.

"The airlines and hotels are truly parts of one industry — travel and entertainment," he said. "Likewise, banking and insurance are part of only one industry — financial services."

But the two, he added, intersect.

"That's because we are both in the business of providing consumer satisfaction, not just goods or services."

Direct financial assistance to travelers, he said, is an important and growing segment of the bank business aiming for such goals.

"Last year Bank of America customers said, 'Charge it' to the tune of $6 billion," Wiesler stated, "and something between 20 and 30 percent of this was travel-related — air fares, hotels, restaurants, souvenir shops and auto rentals."

New Merlot wines test results

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

Merlot is gaining in popularity as a slightly less expensive substitute for Cabernet Sauvignon, so I staged a blind tasting of nine new Merlots to see how the variety was faring.

Few among the 13 tasters had ever had nine different Merlots at one sitting, and all agreed that the wines all were good, especially since the prices were lower, in many cases, than comparable Cabernets.

First the results:

1. 1980 Sterling ($10) — Relatively simple, but a clear winner because of its fruit and slightly "sweet" qualities.

2. 1980 Markham ($8.75) — Very fruity, youthful with violet overtones. Wine of potential. My favorite, and a good value.

PROGERIA

The disease that has prematurely aged Meg all of her 27 years

Text and photos by
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

She sat quite still, in shock at the man's words and their meaning sank in. A freak, he had called her. She did not scream, did not cry — tears would come later. For now, she simply stared at the big-bellied, red-faced carny who was blandly suggesting that she join his traveling carnival, and that if she let him handle her, they would both make a lot of money.

THEY GAZED AT each other in silence, alone on the whirling carrousel. At last the child's hurt surprise dawned on the man.

"You know what you look like, don't you?" he asked in astonishment.

"I know what I am," she finally blurted out. "I have a mirror."

She was 11 years old, and she was lying. Not until that hot summer evening in 1966, sitting on that carrousel in her hometown, did Meg Casey realize how some people viewed her.

"That was the first time I had to admit that something was wrong with me. That it wasn't just that I was small. I had to admit how the world saw me." The words come slowly: the recollection hurts. "You see, I wanted everybody to say I was pretty."

Meg is 4 feet tall. She weighs less than 40 pounds. A long blonde wig covers her bald head. Her spine is twisted. Her teeth are crooked and jut out of her too-small mouth. Her chest caves in on one side. Her left arm hangs limp and is shorter than the right. She walks with a stilted gait. She has trouble swallowing and sometimes drools. By any standard, she is not pretty.

MEG IS A VICTIM of a rare and little-understood genetic disorder called Hutchinson-Gilford Progeria Syndrome. Progeria stunts growth, disintegrates bones, removes body fat and muscles, causes baldness, removes most body hair, causes bulging eyes, a high pitched voice and a prematurely aged appearance.

Doctors know almost nothing about the disorder, except that it usually kills its victims before they reach adolescence. On April 1, when Meg celebrated her "27 1-2 birthday," it is believed that she became the world's longest-living progeriac.

Her longevity has confounded doctors; even more, her life has confounded anyone who, like the carny, believed that she could never amount to anything more than a freak.

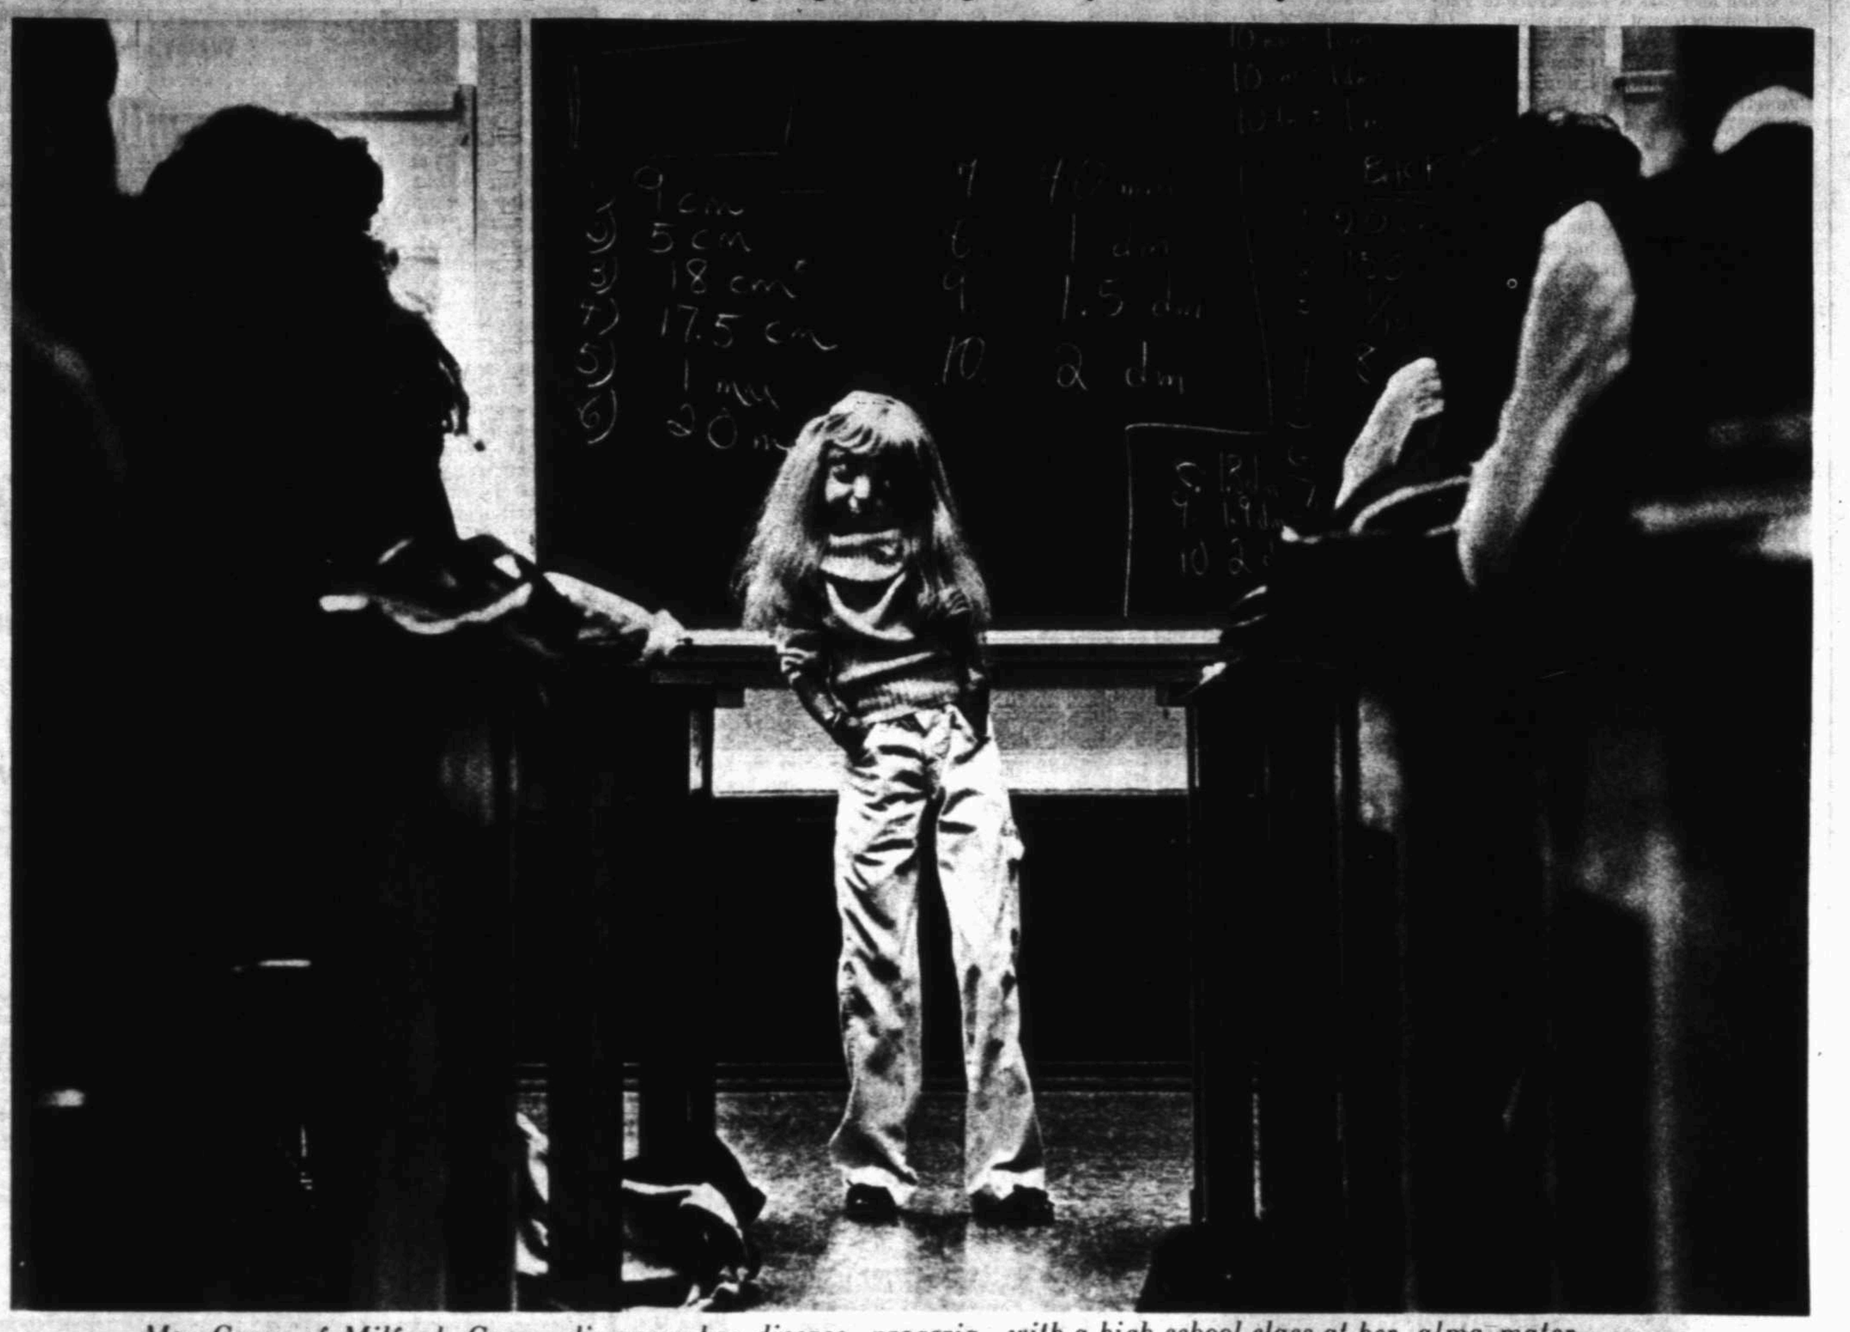
The carny's words jolted Meg into the long and painful process of facing her disorder, finding a way to cope with her disfigurement. At first, there was denial and defense, the rejection of anyone who might spurn her — just about everyone outside the large Casey clan.

But her rejection of people slowly evolved into a rejection of their stereotypes; her fear of being spurned evolved into a conviction that she was stronger, smarter and abler than anyone who would shun her because of her appearance. Meg Casey today is a self-confident, proud woman who commands respect from her peers, her family and her community.

"I AM WHAT MY parents made me," Meg said. In many ways, that is true. She was shielded by a devoted mother and father who were determined that, as nearly as possible, they would treat and raise their daughter just like her six brothers. Meg did not learn until she was 16 that her condition carried with it an early death. She did not learn until she was 24 the name of her condition. She never learned to accept its limitations.

In the last three years, she has moved into her own home, provided the impetus for a program for Milford's disabled, which she now heads, and traveled to Disneyland in Anaheim, Calif., to meet, and give hope to, three young progeriacs who thought that they were the world's only victims. She has spoken about her disorder on a national talk show, writes a weekly column for her hometown paper, and sits on the board of directors of the Bridgeport Goodwill Industries. In between, she toys with the idea of writing a book about her life.

Meg was born in Saint Vincent's Hospital in Bridgeport, Conn., in 1955, the seventh child and only daughter of Margaret and John T. Casey, a no-nonsense couple who raised their children in a boisterous two-story saltbox house on Rivercliff Drive in Milford. After six boys, the baby girl's arrival so delighted John and Margaret that after spreading the happy news, they went shopping for lace bonnets and painted their front door pink.



Meg Casey of Milford, Conn., discusses her disease, progeria, with a high school class at her alma mater.

IN A PICTURE taken when she was 5 months old, Meg looks like most newborn progeriacs — perfectly normal, healthy, plump and happy. That illusion lasted until Meg was 18 months old, when Meg's mother noticed the first symptoms of progeria.

Doctors do now know what causes progeria. They do not know how to prevent it. They do not know how to keep it from progressing. They think it is a genetic disorder, but cannot even prove that. One reason for the ignorance surrounding the disorder is that only one in 8 million children is affected. Fewer than 100 cases have been reported worldwide since an English doctor, Jonathan Hutchinson, first described the syndrome in 1886.

The early course of Meg's condition was typical. Symptoms usually begin sometime during the first two years of life — growth rate slows, weight drops, forehead veins protrude, the forehead itself begins to take on a bluish tinge. While parents do not know it, bone loss already has begun — soon lower-jaw and collar bones will disintegrate. Before long, their child will no longer resemble them, but look strikingly like the estimated 16 other living progeriacs.

DESPITE THE INFIRMITY that makes some people turn away and others gush over her saintliness and suffering, Meg, it seems, is like most other people. If she is warm, loving, brave, hard-working and, for the most part, uncomplaining, she also can be greedy, dogmatic, impatient, petty and afraid.

She can use her illness to get to the front of the line in theaters and restaurants. She is, she says, a born con artist.

"I learned at a very young age that if people were stupid enough to judge you on your looks, to use it to your advantage," she said.

She was, she knew, a special child — a princess. Margaret and John called her, and dressed her as if she were a doll, in leather leggins, velvet coats, satin-and-lace party dresses. And, when it was time to start school, a blonde, curly wig.

"I just thought I was gorgeous. At 5, being different isn't a stigma, it's wonderful," she said.

She got preferential treatment from waiters, sales clerks, teachers. Boys fought over who would sit beside her . girls quarreled over who would escort her to the girls' room or sit with her at recess.

"If I dropped a pencil, nine hands would be there to pick it up," she said.

THERE WERE, OF course, the few who taunted. Out on her bicycle one day, she was followed by teasing teen-agers shouting catcalls and insults. More than a few times, she was reduced to tears after older students yanked off her wig as she waled down school hallways. For the most part, though, they were happy days.

To the sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary at Saint Ann's Elementary School in Milford, tiny Meg was an angel to be petted and loved. They dressed her in a miniature nun's habit and told her stories about Roman Catholic Saints Teresa and Bernadette, virgin martyrs who reached sainthood through their pious acceptance of pain.

"I was Saint Ann's littlest angel. Those nuns honestly thought I'd be canonized someday," Meg recalled with a laugh.

Margaret Casey ran a tight ship, and any of her seven children who forgot that got set straight in a hurry. Meg might be frail, but she could swing a dust rag and was expected to. She might be tiny, but she had a loud mouth and her mother did not abide talking back.

When Meg's symptoms first became apparent, John refused to acknowledge them. The Caseys came from strong stock, he said, they did not run to the doctors. His own mother delivered her babies in the morning and served dinner that night.

AS USUAL, MARGARET listened, and did exactly as she wanted, taking their baby girl to geneticists at Yale-New Haven Hospital, then, when they were stymied, to Childrens' Hospital in Boston. In 1958, shortly before Meg's third birthday, Boston doctors told Margaret that her daughter suffered from dwarfish and a disfiguring genetic disorder that disintegrates collar bones and causes a short stature, but whose victims can expect to live a normal lifespan.

(See PROGERIA, Page 2F)

Margaret Casey, Milford, Conn., left, says she has always tried to treat her daughter, Meg, as her six other children, even though Meg is suffering the rare and little understood disease. At age 27 1/2, she is believed to be the oldest living victim of the disease.

Progeria...

Meg's dentist, Dr. Elias N. Fass, scoffed at the diagnosis. He had specialized in pediatric dentistry and studied disfiguring genetic disorders. He told Margaret that her daughter presented a classic case of progeria and showed her a book on the syndrome. Armed with her new information, Margaret went back to Yale.

"They ignored me," she said angrily. "I told them over and over that she had progeria. I knew Fass was right."

When Meg was 6, Fass wrote to Yale and told doctors of his suspicions.

Again, Margaret took Meg back to Yale; this time John went along. Two weeks of test finally convinced the genetic experts that the dentist was right. They regretfully told Margaret that progeria was a killer, that her daughter would be dead before she was 8.

Margaret Casey is a devout Catholic who is never very far from the tiny silver case that holds her rosary beads. Meg's illness was God's will, she says emphatically. God, who gave her the gift of faith, also gave her the strength to cope, she says.

People who dared to ask what was wrong with Meg received a hard stare and the same sharp retort — "Nothing, what's wrong with you?"

When Meg was old enough to ask the question, the answers were softer, but just as evasive. Meg was told that she was small, delicate. Nothing more.

John coped by deceiving himself that his only daughter was normal. He had refused to go along when Margaret and Meg made those first treks to hospitals and refused to go on later ones. He refused to read about progeria; he and Margaret never discussed it.

Both parents, however, were determined that no matter how short their daughter's life, as far as possible she would be raised as a normal, healthy child.

To that end, the fragile little girl took weekly dance, piano and ice-skating lessons. Despite her grousing, she was expected to finish her Saturday chores before being allowed to play. Self-pity was not permitted; no Casey child was a crybaby.

While her home life was as normal as her parents could make it, Meg's life outside was becoming more difficult. By sixth grade, girls began ignoring her as they huddled in classroom corners talking about boys, and about upcoming parties. High school — Lauralton Hall, a private day school for girls in Milford — was worse. Joan's parents could not afford Lauralton's tuition; for the first time, Meg was without a buffer. Popular and unpopular alike shunned her, or, as she puts it, "even the nerds stayed away from me.

"They were going through a teeny bop stage that I never was allowed to have," she said. "I didn't have anybody that I hung around with because people were afraid that the treatment I was getting would rub off on them."

But Meg had changed since grade school. By now, a fierce pride was part of her makeup. She took refuge in sarcasm; covered up her pain by faning disdain.

"I sort of grew into cynicism, began believing I was superior," she said.

Trips to the hospital were a continuing source of agony. Yale-New Haven geneticists, realizing that they could do nothing to help the child, went out of their way to follow her mother's stern orders that Meg not be told the diagnosis. Even so, Meg was and remains Yale's only progeria patient, offering its medical staff and students a rare opportunity to study the disorder.

Joan, now married and a New Haven schoolteacher, still cries when she recalls how hospital examinations affected the young Meg.

"We'd go into the girl's room and she'd cry and tell me how she had to sit naked on a table while a bunch of doctors stared at her," she said.

The worst, though, took place during Meg's junior year when she went to Yale-New Haven orthopedics department to have her broken arm checked. She was met by a doctor whom she had never seen before. He led her to the front of a darkened classroom, placed her under the room's only light, and to her horrified dismay, took off her blouse, pulled off her wig, and with a pointer, began showing medical students the various oddities of her body.

Tearful and enraged, she swore at the doctor and ran from the room.

She still had no idea what was wrong with her. Her mother still refused to discuss it, and Meg herself seemed not to want to know.

Her first summer after high school graduation,Meg convinced her parents to let her move into the family's ramshackle cottage on Cedar Beach. She used coathangers to open cupboards and turn on light switches. Even something as simple as fixing a sandwich took patience and caused frustration; her hands were so tiny, her fingers so weak.

Meg shopped for a roommate as carefully as she had planned the cottage's interior.

"She's noisy, she's rude, roommate, she's sloppy and foul-mouthed and rotten to her mother. And those are the things I like about her," Meg's roommate said.

"Those are the things we have in common," Meg shot back.

She learned the name of her disorder by accident in 1980 when a young intern told her that a foot problem she was having was common to progeria.

"Is that what I have?" Meg asked.

"You mean you didn't know?" the intern asked.

"Well, I knew I had something," Meg answered defensively.

A two-hour cram session with Yale-New Haven geneticists filled her in on the disorder. Now she was ready to talk about it. And she did — on "The Phil Donahue Show," then another television talk show in Philadelphia.

She began writing a weekly column in her hometown paper, a sort of Ann Landers with questions and answers intended to help close the gap between disabled and nondisabled people. She joined the board of the Bridgeport Goodwill Industries.

She gets angry with disabled people who grouse about their condition, telling one disabled friend to quit griping and look out his window.

"There's a sun out there, Angelo, go find it," she lectured.

Meg learned as a child that a sense of humor and an air of bravado go a long way. When people stare as she walks into a room, she holds her head a little higher, chatters a little faster. Under that tiny exterior, she says, is the soul of a grand dame. "It's very hard to deal with," she said. "I honestly don't think I'm ugly. The only aspect of my life that has been hurtful is sexual, all because of what someone else's idea of what pretty is. It hurts, not being a contender."

She has a dream, she says, that someday she will meet a man who will look past her infirmities. "Someday, my prince will come," she says, only half joking.

As difficult as it is for Meg to talk about sex, talking about her own death is even harder. Usually, she tries to sidestep that subject or answer it with a flip remark: "I want to die when I'm 99 of unnatural causes."

"I don't want to die of progeria," she says harshly. Then, after a long silence, "I'd like my ashes scattered, you know, how you blow a dandelion puff and the tiny seeds scatter all over? I think that's beautiful."

Graduating seniors plan all-night party

A party for graduating seniors from all of Midland's high schools will be held on May 27, from 11 p.m. to 4 a.m., at Midland Center.

Music from one western band and one rock band, free video games, a mechanical bull, food and snacks are planned for the the Annual Senior All-Night Party.

The party is a 29-year-old tradition started by John and Bernadine Carrigan, former Midlanders and managers of Midland Country Club, in 1954 to provide the seniors with a fun, safe evening.

Co-chairman of the 1983 party's planning committee are Bobbie Lookabaugh and Barbara Jowell.

Other committee memebers are Pat Causey, Nancy Milner, Barbara Porsch, Ginger Floyd, Jana Ross, Jane Garlitz, Sally Steward, Sharla Hotchkiss, Marsha White, Judy Jackson, Jan Kalil, Nancy Liberty, Lois Carpenter, Leila Seal, Joan Southerland, Karen Thompson, Joyce Owens, Margaret Hillin and Helen Mercurio.

Tickets are $10 at the door or $8 in advance. Advance tickets may be purchased at the high schools' Baccalaureate events, during lunch hours on May 23 and 24, and at commencement practices.

Ortega's Indian fry bread

Corn oil
2 cups all-purpose flour
1-3rd cup nonfat dry milk powder
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon shortening
¾ cup warm water

Add enough oil to a 10-inch electric skillet to have it 1-3rd full.

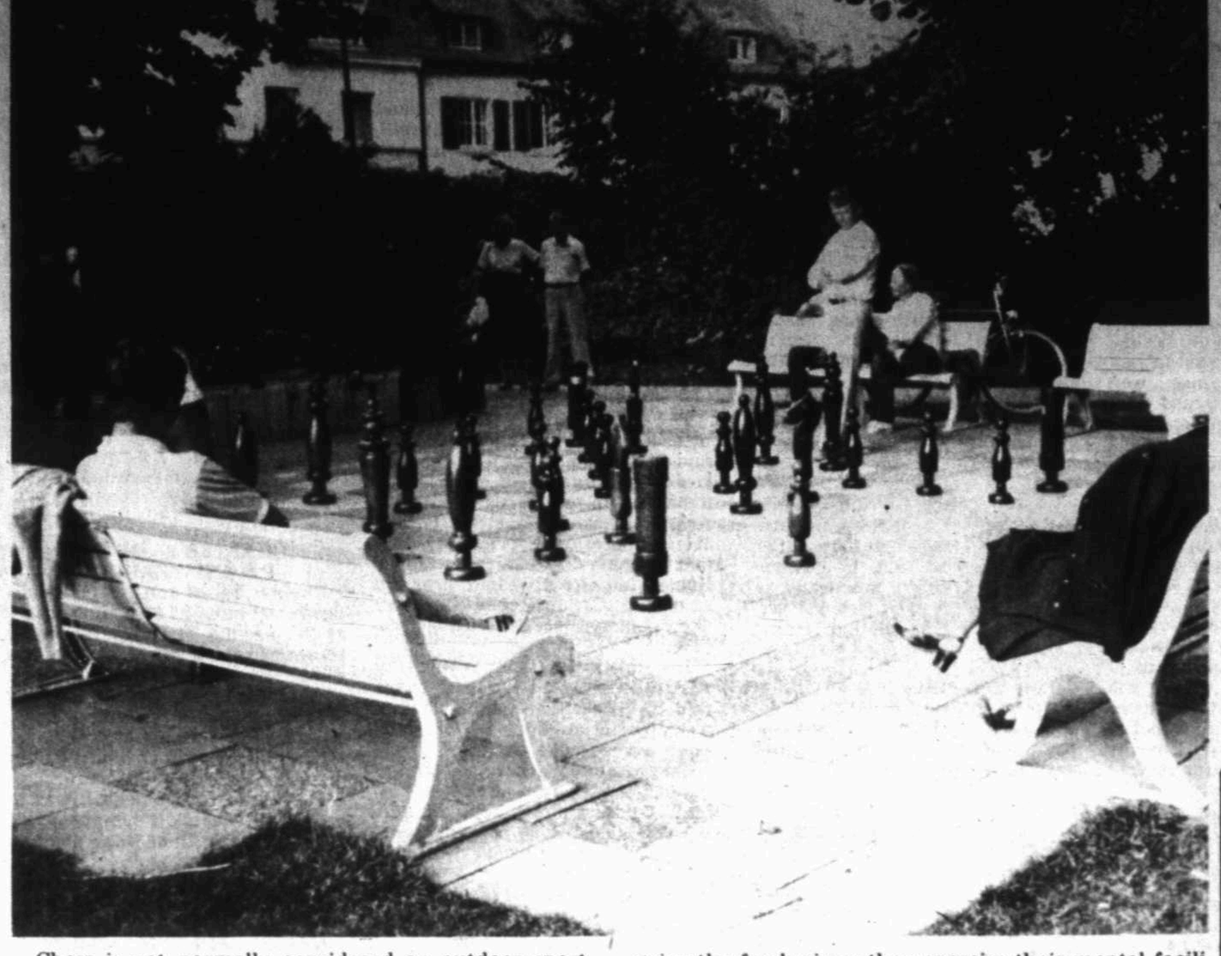
In a large bowl, stir together flour, dry milk, baking powder and salt. With fingers, work in shortening. With fork, gradually stir in enough water to form soft dough.

On lightly floured surface, knead until smooth and springy. Form into 6-inch roll. Let rest uncovered for 45 to 60 minutes. Slice crosswise into six 1-inch pieces; form each into a ball.

On lightly floured surface, with floured rolling pin, roll each ball to a thin 6-inch round — less than ¼-inch thick.

Pick up a round of dough; holding it close to the edge, start pressing and rotating the round between thumbs and fingers, keeping thumbs moving close together. Press close to edges of the dough; move thumbs down slightly and continue pressing to stretch and rotate until round is 7 or 8 inches in diameter — returning to press near edges if necessary. The round will be uneven in thickness. Repeat with remaining rounds.

Heat oil in skillet to 375-F. Add one round; with tongs push down often into oil to submerge; fry, turning once, until puffed and golden brown. Keep warm in oven. Repeat with remaining rounds. Makes 6.



Chess is not normally considered an outdoor sport, but these folks in Lake Constance, West Germany, might argue that point. In this park setting, players enjoy the fresh air as they exercise their mental facilities.

Survey on motherhood

NEW YORK (AP) — In answer to a questionnaire, "How Do You Really Feel About Motherhood?" in Redbook magazine, there were 46,000 replies. Of these, 83 percent expressed the opinion that motherhood is one of several important things a woman can do with her life — not the only thing.

The happiest mothers, the survey indicates, are: those who planned their children, feel proud of their motherly skills, are mostly satisfied with the housework and childcare help from their husbands, do not feel they gave up a great deal to have children, and have a good marriage relationship.

Lite beer not so 'lite' when it comes to calories

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Can a light beer have about the same number of calories as a regular beer?

Yes, indeed.

A 12-ounce serving of Michelob Light, for example, has 134 calories — only 2 calories less than the same amount of Pearl regular beer and only 6 less than Pabst regular, according to the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a consumer group that has petitioned the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms for improved beer labeling.

At present, there is no standard government definition for products that are labeled as light beer — although light beer typically is depicted in advertisements as a low-calorie product.

"Without a standard, some consumers may believe any brew called 'light' is low in calories," said Bruce Silverglade, CSPI director of legal affairs.

In fact, there is a plethora of light beer products that vary enormously in calorie content.

Here are two examples, based on a random survey of various beers:

— Some light beers have nearly twice as many calories as some other light beers. Pearl Lite, for example, has 68 calories per 12-ounce serving, compared to 134 calories for that amount of Michelob Light.

— Michelob Light, in fact, has a higher calorie count than some regular beers. It has one more calorie than the 133 in the regular Heidelberg, which is distributed in Northwestern states.

Under current BATF regulations, any beer or wine can be advertised, labeled and sold as light so long as the number of calories is listed on the product label. No calorie disclosure is required, however, for regular beer or wine.

Consumers who want to find out how many calories are in a regular beer can write to the brewer for information, but it is up to the company to decide if it wants to make the calorie count available.

FABRIC SECRETS

Correct the shoulder line of a sleeveless dress that falls too far to the front of the shoulder bone by first ripping the shoulder seam. Lift the bodice front, slipping it under the back shoulder seam until it forms a straight line from one inch behind the ear to the tip of the shoulder bone. Cut off the excess back shoulder seam. You may have to remove the sleeve facing and reset it. For those garments with a sleeve, rip out the sleeve across the top and follow the same procedure as above. Then, stitch across the top of the sleeve with a machine basting stitch and pull the bobbin thread until the sleeve fits the armhole.

DEAR ABBY

Hospital salvation for needy mothers

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Because of your longtime interest and support of the Salvation Army Booth Hospital for unwed mothers, I want to bring you up-to-date.

For two agonizing years we feared we would have to close our doors because our money was running out. In fact, a date was set and the hospital announced that no more girls could be admitted. Sick at heart, we all prayed a lot, and God heard our prayers because some generous people (and foundations) came to our rescue, and now the Booth Hospital is safe for another three years!

We are filled to capacity, Abby, but I'm sad to report that our unwed mothers keep getting younger and younger. Presently we have one 10-year-old and three 11-year-olds.

Our Emergency Lodge has become a haven for homeless families – especially mothers and their fatherless children. It, too, is filled to capacity – 100-bed, family-style accommodations, 2,050 persons served annually, 74,825 meals served annually.

Every spring, just before Easter, our board purchases new clothing for each child in the lodge. The mothers and children select their new clothes with the help of the Salvation Army officer. A "fashion show" is held, and the children model their new clothing. (These are the first "new" clothes that some have ever had!) It's always the happiest, most touching affair of the year.

Sorry about the length of this, but I knew you'd like to know. – ALICE WINTERS, PRESIDENT, SALVATION ARMY WOMEN'S AUXILIARY, CHICAGO

DEAR MS. WINTERS: Congratulations on keeping afloat for another three years. Now that the government has cut back so drastically on funding agencies that provide services to the public, let me remind those with money to give, and especially those who have foundations, that the Salvation Army has never asked, "What religion are you, or what color are you?" It provides food, lodging and clothing to all in need.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 16-year-old volunteer at a Baltimore hospital. Most of the patients on the 12th floor are on a weight-loss program, so one of the doctors thought of an incentive to get them to lose weight. He suggested that each one put $25 in a pot, and the first one who loses 20 pounds will win the jackpot. There will be no second or third prizes; the winner gets it all! There's a lot of money in that pot, and believe me, Abby, those fatties are losing weight faster than they put it on!

Please send me the "dieter's prayer" you published. (It starts out like the 23rd Psalm.) I want to post it on the scale the dieters use to weigh themselves on. It would really be encouraging. Thanks a lot. – ME IN MARYLAND

DEAR ME: The "dieter's prayer" is on its way. Now none of those dieters can say they never had a prayer.

DEAR ABBY: With the battle for bigger defense budgets going on in Congress, would it not be appropriate to remind your readers of the enclosed remarks from a speech Dwight D. Eisenhower delivered before the American Society of Newspaper Editors in April of 1953? – M.E.G., ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.

DEAR M.E.G. Yes, indeed. And thank you for it:

"Every gun that is made, every warship launched, every rocket fired signifies, in the final sense, a theft from those who hunger and are not fed, those who are cold and are not clothed. This world in arms is not spending money alone. It is spending the sweat of its laborers, the genius of its scientists, the hopes of its children. ... This is not a way of life at all in any true sense. Under the cloud of war, it is humanity hanging on a cross of iron."

(Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple, "do-your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's new booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Muscle, bone injuries common

ATLANTA (AP) — One of the nation's leading on-the-job health problems, injuries to muscles and the skeletal system, accounted for almost one out of five job-related injuries requiring emergency room treatment last year.

The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health said in a report released Thursday that musculoskeletal injuries accounted for 580,000, or 18 percent, of the estimated 3.1 million occupational injuries treated in emergency rooms. Low back injuries are the most common, the institute said.

Something amiss in imitation food

By Copley News Service

It may look like the real thing, smell like the real thing, even taste like the real thing, but is it as good as the real thing?

The answer is easy. No. The reasons WHY are often more complex.

"Basically, the word 'imitation' on a food product is going to mean that it's nutritionally inferior," says dietitian Debra Dyer.

It's also likely to mean the product contains excessive amounts of fat, sugar or salt, reduced amounts of fiber and costs as much or more than the real thing. That, the Long Beach, Calif., Memorial Medical Center dietitian says, makes it a bad bargain. Real foods come naturally endowed with combinations of more than 60 known nutrients — as well as others that may not have been discovered yet, she points out.

Imitation foods are totally synthetic — there is nothing inherently nutritious in them. Everything of value is added — like a vitamin pill mixed into a box of flavored sawdust. And even the most highly fortified imitation foods have no more than 15 nutrients tagged on, certainly not those which haven't been discovered, she says.

It's partially because of these missing nutrients — both known and unknown — that dietitians are studying imitation foods and speaking out about what they find.

"We're concerned that widespread use of imitation foods may compromise the nutrient value of the diet," Dyer says.

"We're also concerned about excessive amounts of sugar, salt and fat."

The problem is that many people may be unaware of what's being added, and for some people that can be harmful, if not dangerous.

Microwaves used to combat brain tumors

ORANGE, N.J. (AP) — A neurosurgeon says he is using microwave probes to treat malignant brain tumors and offer relief to patients who cannot be treated by surgery, drugs or radiation.

Dr. Arthur Winter says he has used the experimental method on two patients at the Orange Hospital Center and believes he is the first to employ the probes to kill cancerous cells in the brain.

"The heat prevents cancer cells from growing," Winter explained Wednesday. "Microwaves have been used in treatment of tumors in other parts of the body, but not in the brain."

The method has provided relief to two men who have received the treatments since December, although headaches and other symptoms have recurred in both patients, the doctor said.

The technique involves inserting a thin, tube-like probe into a tumor which cannot be treated by conventional means, Winter said. A wire inserted through the hollow tube is then attached to microwave equipment and the tumor is heated to about 110 degrees Fahrenheit, a temperature that hampers the growth of cancer cells but is not hot enough to damage healthy brain cells.

The doctor said he got the idea for using a microwave probe about a year ago after seeing a commercial for a microwave oven in which an ice cube wrapped in plastic is melted but the plastic is left intact.

"I thought that the plastic could represent the brain and the ice could be the tumor," said Winter. "There really hasn't been much done in recent years to treat malignant brain tumors. Often, the only thing we can do is give the patients drugs or radiation and wait for them to die."

Winter said it is too soon to determine the technique's effectiveness, although he noted one of its advantages is that microwave treatments can be repeated more often than radiation treatments or chemotherapy.

"Even if it doesn't send the growth into regression, if the microwaves can take away headaches and make a patient comfortable, then it's a good thing," Winter said.

Excessive jogging can be unhealthy

Copley News Service

Please answer the following by checking the correct answer:

1) Jogging can be beneficial.

2) Jogging can be harmful.

3) Both of the above.

As you may have guessed, No. 3 is the best answer.

Dr. Kenneth H. Cooper, who heads the Aerobic Center in Dallas and is considered the "father of aerobics," said that while jogging is an excellent exercise for the average person, many people are hurting themselves by overdoing it.

Cooper tells the Health Insurance Association of America that jogging actually isn't the best aerobic exercise.

The top five — in order — are cross-country skiing, swimming, jogging (or running), outdoor cycling and walking.

Other exercise instructors recommend 30 minutes of vigorous exercise.

Bake in a preheated 400-degree oven, turning once midway, until golden — 12 to 15 minutes.

Divorce grounds

By ERMA BOMBECK

For years, I've heard the term, "Mental Cruelty."

Other than knowing it was legitimate grounds for divorce, I had no idea what it meant.

Until recently. Mental cruelty is when your husband involves you in a conversation in which he cannot remember the name of the person, place or thing. When he is sure you are straining every brain cell and reflex in your entire body, he will say, "Oh, well, forget it; it's not important," and change the subject.

Without a doubt it is the most hideous form of mental agony ever foisted on another human being.

What does he mean, "Forget it"? To forget it is to admit that you're as flako as he is. It then becomes a desperate race to come up with the name that no one can remember.

It's a genetic thing with my husband. His mother had it. too. She'd sit there with me watching a late movie on television and as a waiter hovered in the shadows at the edge of the screen, she'd say, "What's his name? Oh, you know. He never really became a big star, but he's always the villain. Oh, well, never mind."

That was it for me. The movie stopped right there while I tormented myself trying to remember that man's name. First I tried going through the alphabet and pausing at every letter to see if a name popped out of my subconscious. Then I made a few inquiries on the phone. As my mother-in-law got up and walked toward the door, I demanded, "Where do you think you're going?"

"Home," she said. "It's late."

"And leave me with a man with no name? You've got to be kidding."

At 1 a.m. she called. My eyes were the size of garbage can lids and had been staring at the ceiling for three hours.

"It's Lyle Talbot," she said. "Good night, dear."

Sometimes there is no happy ending. We were all sitting around the other Sunday when my husband said, "What was the name of that restaurant back in Dayton that we used to go to all the time?"

We all tried. No one could think of it. "It begins with an R," he said, "I know that much." Dinner got cold. The dishes were cleared away and we all sat there, lost in our own thoughts, unable to make any conversation. We must have gone through a hundred names. Finally, I rummaged through some old drawers and found a Dayton phone book. "I've got it!" I shouted. "It's Cacchiatorri's. Now that you've ruined our entire evening, what about it?"

"Nothing," he said. "They closed."

I say divorce is too good for him!

New infectious disease epidemic rampant

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

ATLANTA — Row upon row of freezers in the basement morgue of a red-brick building here holds a quarter of a million vials, each containing blood from a victim of an epidemic of an infectious disease.

The frozen collection at the national Centers for Disease Control (CDC) stands as stark refutation of the promise of only a generation ago: that advances in science would soon make epidemics a thing of the past.

Once, after the conquest of diphtheria, smallpox and polio, Americans believed that modern medicine had beaten infectious disease. More antibiotics and vaccines were coming, and more success was thought to be imminent.

But today, new epidemics are raging, one upon another, of diseases most people cannot even name. Each year, the CDC investigates more than 1,000 new outbreaks of diseases such as Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS), Legionnaire's Disease and toxic shock syndrome.

The story of these diseases is the ancient one of evolution. An opportunistic bug seizes on a slight environmental change.

Medical science's failure to conquer infectious disease should have been expected. Each human generation is 20 years, but, among bacteria, a generation can pass in half an hour. Bacterial civilizations can rise and fall in weeks.

Technological advances as diverse as air conditioning and tampons have created ideal breeding grounds for germs that had been around for millennia. Modern transportation has conveyed exotic germs into new populations. The life style of some homosexuals seems mysteriously related to an epidemic of AIDS, one tragic new disease. Even hospitals are the cause of new deaths.

"Organisms have found new ways of getting to us, mostly through man's own advances," said Dr. John Bennett, assistant director of CDC's Center for Infectious Diseases.

AIDS appeared suddenly in the United States in 1981. Homosexuals in widely scattered cities were struck. First called the gay plague, it then appeared among drug addicts, Haitians, hemophiliacs and finally children.

It wipes out the body's immune system. Of the 1,128 persons reported suffering from AIDS since 1981, none has completely recovered and 423 have died.

Although its cause is unknown, AIDS appears to take advantage of changes in lifestyle and technology. It has certainly been "amplified," Bennett said, by the intense sexual activity of "fast-lane" homosexuals who frequent bathhouses and bars in large cities.

Drug users' sharing of needles may also transmit the disease. And AIDS may be spreading through blood banks to hemophiliacs.

Toxic shock syndrome is an example of a microbe that adapted itself to a new product designed specifically for cleanliness and convenience. The improved tampon, with its increased absorbency, appears to provide a hospitable home for an old kind of infection, familiar staphylococcus germs.

The disease can strike anyone — living in wounds, infecting burns, hiding under bandages — but its most frequent victims are young women between the ages of 15 and 24 who are using tampons.

Legionnaire's Disease came to light as a puzzling pneumonia outbreak among American Legion conventioneers in 1976. Legionella had lived harmlessly in the soil and water for thousands of years. But it has found a hospitable new home in modern buildings' plumbing and air-conditioning systems.

Hospital-caused infections are almost classic proof that in the battle between man and microbes, the bugs have the evolutionary edge.

Great teaching hospitals have been built and in them techniques developed so that the very ill are saved with miraculous skill and modern technology. For the most part, every new device helps heal, but with each comes a new danger of infection. Antibiotics have been used until some microbes are now resistant not to a single drug, but to dozens.

New diseases are being imported that were once isolated beyond U.S. borders. "Modern transportation has made the entire world a global community. We don't have the insulation we once had," CDC's director, Dr. William Foege, said. "Everything is just down the street when it comes to health."

From ancient times to the 20th century, infectious diseases often shaped history.

"The really dramatic cases occurred when civilized peoples with complex immunity to disease came into touch with previously isolated peoples. ... This happened over and over again," University of Chicago scholar William H. McNeill said.

Influenza is the best known case of a virus that changes so frequently that vaccines must continually be developed to keep up with it. Malaria-carrying mosquitoes also have become resistant to bug-fighting pesticides such as DDT; leprosy is becoming resistant to drugs used to treat it, and bacteria of several types have managed to retaliate against the potent antibiotic penicillin, producing their own enzymes to inactivate the drug.

An unusual form of attack — a piggyback bug — has also been detected, said Dr. Kenneth Sell of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. A subviral particle that cannot survive on its own hitches itself to the hepatitis B virus to create a form of the liver disease far more virulent than normal. It not only causes a life-threatening, short-term illness but also may increase the chance of chronic infection and long-term risk of liver cancer.

First detected in Italy in 1977, it was named the Delta agent.

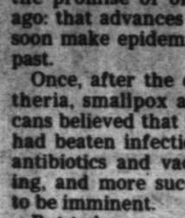
ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — A special library at Strong Memorial Hospital of the University of Rochester Medical Center helps sick children and their families understand and deal with their illnesses.

Started by the parents of a child who died of cancer, the Sarah K. Davidson Library is staffed by volunteers and houses 600 books and audio-visual materials for children and adults.



AT WORK

What to do with bright idea

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

Q - I have an idea for an electrical tool that I'm sure would be a big money-maker. I have only the idea, no finished product. Could you please explain the step-by-step procedure in making my idea into a finished product, patented, and on the market?

A — You have to do some market research before you actually make a prototype of your tool. Find out if there is anything like it already on the market by checking retail stores, trade shows, ads in trade magazines and those people who would use your tool.

If it does already exist, realistically assess whether two are needed. If it doesn't already exist, ask all the above sources whether they could use such a tool, how much they'd pay, and what they'd like it to do. If you still have reason to believe it's a go, then you are ready for the prototype.

You can make a cardboard model if you can't find some way to make a facsimile. If you don't have a place to work, use a friend's machine shop at night or on weekends.

Now about producing the tool. Certainly do not go into production until you have someone who is willing to buy. If you are hesitant about doing the actual operation, then consider selling your idea directly to the new products division of any major manufacturer. (Your local library has directories that list addresses of companies.) If you decide to sell your idea, write a letter of disclosure, describing your invention, to protect yourself.

Going into the invention business is a high risk, but according to J. Paul Getty, the only way to become rich is to have your own enterprise, no matter how small.

Q. My supervisor does not trust me nor use my skills to the fullest. He hinders any independence or initiative. Also, he admits I am overqualified for the job. Add to this the fact that upper management considers my boss a joke, in terms of competence. How can I change the situation that's existed for the past 15 years so that I can grow?

A — It is not written anywhere that life is fair. And those of us who do our jobs well and expect fair treatment in return are in for a grave disappointment.

When a situation like yours exists for 15 years, I worry even more. The toll grows greater every year and you grow more bitter about the company. So recognize that your supervisor isn't going to change and neither will upper management fire him, even though they may know about him. (I don't know why this is so, but laxity in firing incompetents exists in many companies, to everyone's dismay.)

Therefore, the only one who wants to change — and who therefore can — is you. You must make friends with those in other departments, or in the same department in a company branch, or in another company. You cannot and should not stay where you are unappreciated.

It is up to you to determine how others treat you — a lesson not taught in any school I know, except the school of hard knocks. So get a PR campaign going for yourself and make something good happen.

Unhappy with your job? Dr. Scheele can help. Write to her in care of this newspaper.

Arthritis cure within reach

ATLANTA (AP) — Preventing some forms of arthritis is within the reach of research scientists, the Arthritis Foundation said in its annual report released today.

"The newest, most promising area of arthritis research is the three-way link between several forms of the disease, heredity and an infectious agent," said Dr. Frederic C. McDuffie, the Atlanta-based foundation's senior vice president for medical affairs.

Scientists have found that the tendency to develop some types of arthritis is inherited. Each person has genetic markers, a type of blueprint on the surface of white blood cells. Apparently some of these markers are the seeds of disease, making a person susceptible to certain types of arthritis.

"But having a certain marker is not enough to cause arthritis," said McDuffie, a former research director at the Mayo Clinic. "Something must transform these substances, which lie peacefully on cells, into disease-causing agents. The evidence today points to bacterial or viral infections."

Shop carefully for video games

By WILLARD ABRAHAM
Ph.D.
Copley News Service

Q. Which home video games would be best for my children to have in order to learn eye-hand coordination? I'm also interested in their learning how to program and some parts of household management.

I'm sure there are games which would be helpful for my wife and me in handling daily problems and records, too.

A. Because the computer software market is so volatile and expanding so quickly, it is probably best for you to get in touch with a computer store in your vicinity and talk over your needs with a competent person there.

You might, of course, go beyond the game area and discuss the products of an educational nature that may also be enjoyable for your children and the whole family.

Q. Let me share our experience, which relates to your recent column about the gifted 6-year-old boy who already dislikes school.

We faced the same situation with our son when he was in second grade and bored to death. He even wanted to quit school because it was such a waste of time for him. After six weeks he had finished all of the work scheduled for the full year of second grade.

I talked to the teacher and principal and asked if he could be tested so that he might be sent up to third grade. They agreed but said the testing couldn't be scheduled till the spring (five months later). After a few more weeks I talked to them again and asked (almost demanded, but politely) that he be put ahead to see whether he could do the work. They finally agreed, and within two weeks he caught up on all the work he had missed.

I have never regretted having him moved ahead. He is now 14 years old, a straight-A student, taking computer courses, and happy in school.

I hope other parents of gifted children will be as persistent as I was, for it certainly paid off.

A. Acceleration of the type you mentioned does work out well for some bright children, especially if their physical and emotional maturity as well as intelligence are considered.

Other approaches have also been successful — special classes and resource rooms, for example. True "enrichment" in the hands of a skilled teacher may challenge a gifted child in the regular classroom too.

In my original reply, which you mentioned, I recommended published materials by James Gallagher, Joseph Renzulli and others, and one book of my own on this subject.

One issue, of course, is whether children really are gifted, a factor that some parents fail to approach objectively. I'll be glad to send a checklist to parents of young children who would like to get a little help in looking into this matter. Just send a stamped, addressed envelope with your request. Valid testing and teacher observation can be of even more value.

Q. When our younger son outgrows his crib (in about a year) we are considering putting our two boys (who will then be 5 and 3) in a room together. That will help make way for a hoped-for third child.

What are the pros and cons (mainly cons!) of sharing a bedroom, and how can alone-time be best handled? Are problems worse when teenagers have to share a room?

A. The major advantage is one you already recognize — making room for another child. However, even that "pro" factor has the possible problem involved of creating resentment toward the newcomer who has invaded the privacy of both older boys.

Other disadvantages include the increased chance for conflict between the brothers confined to the same bedroom and interference with the developing independence of children who have rooms of their own.

Obviously there are sometimes no choices, and that is why your awareness of "alone-time" is so important. Solitary reading space somewhere else in the house or apartment, time to be the only one with a parent and, later on, quiet study space are factors you can plan for, especially if you do put your two boys in the same bedroom — and even if you don't.

Floating galley cooking gadgets

By LYNNE
ORLOFF-JONES
Copley News Service

Any first mate will appreciate a gadget that makes cooking afloat easier. Ship chandleries would appear to be the most logical place to shop for galley items. Unfortunately, these stores have limited floor space, and cooking accessories often take a back seat to marine hardware.

But, department stores and gourmet shops specialize in cooking needs — on land or at sea. Today's market is well stocked with interesting and useful culinary aids.

Most of the following suggestions won't break the piggy bank and are available via mail and in stores.

STOVE TOP WAFFLER — This appliance follows the same principles of grandma's coal-stove waffle iron — it doesn't contain a heating element. You lay the waffler directly over the stove burner (works on both gas and electric burners) which provides the heat to cook the batter. The waffler has thermometers on either side, which indicates the degree of doneness. Cook one side for several minutes, then turn the waffler over and cook the other side.

The waffler can double for a toaster. Using the same method, place bread slices inside the waffler and cook until toasty. Available from: Nordic Ware, Highway 7 at 100, Minneapolis, Minn. 55416.

COLLAPSIBLE OVEN — Don't fret if your galley isn't equipped with an oven — this collapsible version may be just the answer. When not in use, the camp oven folds into a flat rectangular box that's easy to store. Once it's easily assembled, it becomes an oven box. It derives heat from the stove burner it sits on. The inside temperature is shown on a built-in thermometer on the oven door. Depending on the heat of the flame, it can take from five to 12 minutes to reach 350 degrees F.Made by Coleman — available at camping stores.

CAN-TO-PAN TO CAN OPENER — A unique cookbook that comes to the rescue of what to prepare with basic shipboard staples is, "Can-to-Pan Cookery." It contains recipes using canned and packaged products. Along with this book you receive a good Swing-A-Way can opener.

"Can-to-Pan Cookery" mail-order address is 143 Benson Ave., Vallejo, Calif. 94590.

THERMAL CARAFE WITH COFFEE FILTER — Brew coffee directly into a thermal carafe through a (Melitta-style) filter. Remove the filter and seal in the hot liquid with the carafe's lid.

Available from Hammarplast, 301 Route 17, Rutherford, N.Y. 07070.

Well logging engineer has total responsibility

A day in the life of a well logger

Logging an oilwell is like lowering a television set on a cord, into a deep hole as hot as an oven that's cooking dinner, playing your TV for awhile, then bringing it back up from the hole without damaging the hole or the equipment.

So says one engineer for Schlumberger, a well service company that gained $6 billion in revenues during 1982.

Well logging, where electronic tools are lowered into the open hole (cased holes yield less data) serves two purposes. The tools can correlate to show where wetness is and what part of it is oil.

Also, the profile of the rocks can give an idea of reservoir shape and oil/gas reserves. Schlumberger is one of the major well-logging companies sericing the Permian Basin.

ELECTRICAL engineer Pete Graham works for Schlumberger CSU Wireline, in the Monahans-Open Hole district. He is 24, transfered from Canada, and a graduate of University of Toronto. He orchestrates the series of tests in the delicate well logging process.

He gives oil and gas people the thumbs-up or thumbs-down on whether to finish and install casing in a hole they drilled — or whether to abandon it and look elsewhere for energy.

"I enjoy my work," Graham said last week, "because it's different, it's exciting. The biggest part is the challenge and the responsibility involved."

A well logging session — a "job" — lasts 24 hours, on average. But Graham said he will stay awake for three days without sleep, or much food, in order to personally monitor the work.

"THE PROCESS CAN take three to eight days. It pays to hang in there, and look at the log," he said. "My time is wasted if I go to sleep, a log is bad, and we have to repeat the sequence."

CSU Wireline is a division manned by engineer/salesmen like Graham — operating a fleet of sophisticated logging trucks. His truck contains Cyber Service Unit, a 128k RAM computer (with fully redundant systems) tied to a keyboard, a log-display video screen, two film recorders, and four mag tape units.

It's all squeezed into a round-backed blue-and-white truck with 30,000 feet of cable (specially made) and about eight or nine specialized downhole tools that "log" the formations of sedimentary rock where oil and gas are born from decaying matter.

Through several "trips" in and out of the hole, with the logging tools, Graham monitors a powerful computer and the actual logs as they are fed in through the cable and the tool is slowly moved up and down the well. He is doing several jobs at once while sitting at his console.

SCHLUMBERGER'S work schedule is rigorous, with a nine-days-on, three-days-off schedule for engineers. Time in the office without a job is good for clearing up paperwork and serving clients.

The job promotes a "Work hard, play hard" attitude. "Theoretically, you disappear on your three days off. Get out, get into nothing but motorcycles or boats," Graham's supervisor said.

Sometimes with help from the company's Midland computer center, Graham diagnoses producing the drilled well. He may tell the client if a well should produce hydrocarbons, from what zones, and at what flow rates.

Looking at hundreds of logs in a short time (more than most geologists ever see) Graham can often tell what certain rock is like because he has experience in the area. Although he can't give the operator the reason (results of other companies' logs are proprietary), Graham will advise the driller what to do.

HE SOMETIMES HAS to let an operator know — tactfully — if he spent money on a bad log. "It's a very tough situation," Graham said. "I never say another company runs bad logs. I will say: We provide better service and more advanced tools."

Chief on the engineer's problem list is convincing oilmen that a new tool — like their Electromagnetic Propagation Tool (EPT) — can be beneficial. By emitting microwaves and sensing transmission speed through fluids, the EPT can tell the engineer where hydrocarbons are in water zones.

Not many companies are familiar with the EPT, and the engineers are performing demonstrations of the tool. "Technology grows rapidly, and the client has to be re-educated. They are used to running a certain suite of logs," Graham said, "and it's difficult to convince them a new method works better."

WHAT ARE LOGGING tools? A six to 90-foot string of metal cylinders, filled with electrodes, high-temperature connections, and integrated circuits, in multiple types and for various jobs. It can be — in advanced tools — an actual downhole computer.

With 20 months of intense experience in the oilfield, an electrical engineering degree, and the company training program behind him, Graham has taken on responsibilities many jobholders would shrink from.

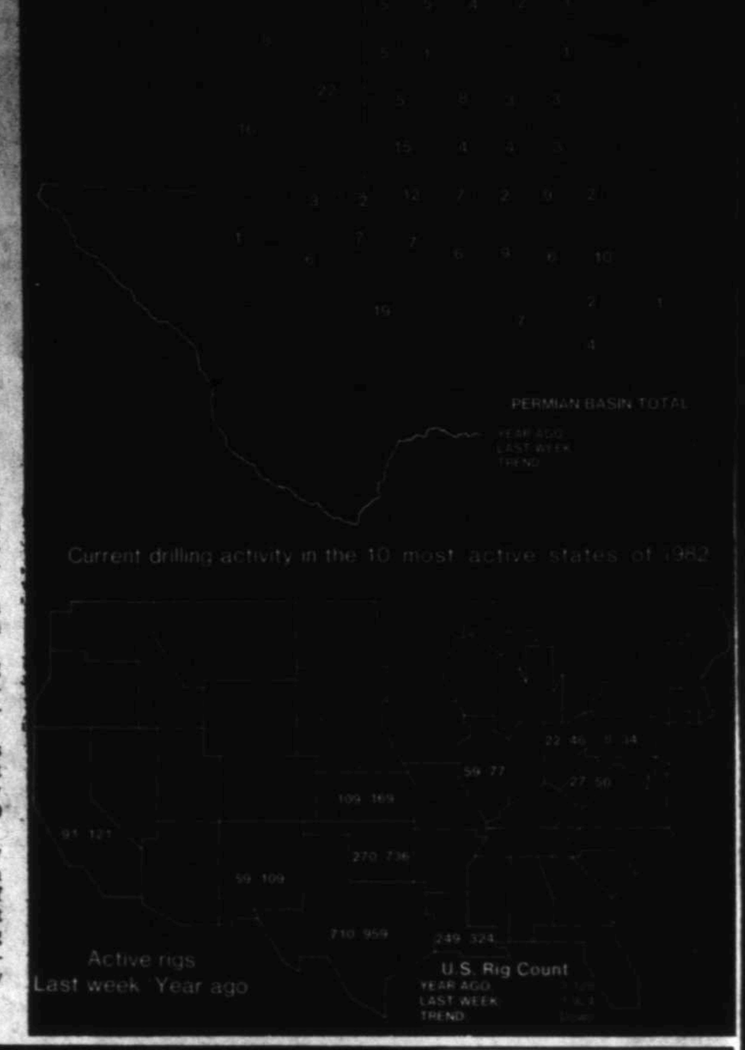
Stroh's and Stroh Light, original brands of the Stroh Brewery Company, made their appearance in Texas May 16 as part of the biggest single roll-out of its premium products in company history.

The beers will be distributed in the Midland-Odessa area by Basin Distributing Inc., Odessa.

The nation's third largest brewing company, Strohs is projecting first-year shipments to Texas of approximately one million barrels.

Basin Distributing anticipates gaining about 15 percent of market share with Stroh products initially in this area; later selling around 9 percent, company spokesmen said.

Stroh's and Stroh Light are now distributed in 31 states. The Stroh Brewery Company has been part of the Texas community since it acquired the Jos. Schlitz Brewing Company in 1982, includng that company's brewing and canning facility in Longview, Texas.



Tipperary finances improve

Despite lingering industry problems and second quarter earnings which dipped below projections, Tipperary Corporation continues to explore new opportunities for corporate growth, the company said in a letter to shareholders.

The current capital budget includes a new $2,600,000 cryogenic gas processing plant in the Denton field of Lea County, New Mexico, which should be on stream in August. This expanded facility will increase cash flow an annualized $1,200,000 at current market prices.

Tipperary also recently began feasibility studies for the construction of a $30 million co-generation plant in Houston, the letter said.

This plant would produce power for a local utility and steam for local industrial markets. Tipperary has the right to acquire a 20 percent equity in the plant as well as supply 50 million cubic feet of gas feedstock per day to the plant through its Sunburst gas transmission subsidiary.

For the three months ended March 31, Tipperary recorded a net loss of $242,000 or 4 cents per share, compared to a net loss of $2.3 million or 38 cents per share, in the same quarter of 1982. Revenues were $12,983,000 for the quarter, versus $11,859,000 last year.

For the six months ended March 31, net income was $519,000, compared to a net loss of $1.6 million in the same period a year ago.

President James D. Ross said in the May 16 letter he continues to believe fiscal 1983 will be profitable. During the second quarter, Tipperary encountered reduced markets for its gas transmission company, gas production curtailment, and a two dollar per barrel crude price reduction.

" Despite these developments, however, we believe that gas markets and crude prices have stabilized and that the current nationwide economic recovery should help alleviate these problem areas during the last two quarters of the fiscal year," he said.

Tipperary also reported to shareholders a Mississippian oil discovery in Dawson County, Texas. The well tested a calculated 207 barrels of oil per day through perforations from 11,241 to 11,362 feet on a 3/4" choke with 25 pounds of flowing tubing pressure. Tipperary is the operator and has a 17 percent working interest in the well and varying working interests ranging from 9 to 17 percent in the surrounding 2,200 acres.

There are five possible additional locations on the prospect.

Tipperary management regards 1983 as a transition year for the industry and company, the letter said.

"If our strategic plan is completed as projected, we will have laid the groundwork for significant growth in the future," it said.

Making Midland A Better Hometown

WHO'S BUYING WHICH HOMES?

When you talk about the purchase of homes-you are basically referring to two types-single detached homes and condominiums. Who's buying which and in what percentage?

Condomania not withstanding, detached single-family homes are still number one by far. Divorce statistics and high housing costs aside, most homebuyers are married, and nearly half are buying their first home.

Last year condos made up only 11% of all home purchases. One-third of those were conversions. More than three quarters of all homes purchased were detached homes.

Four percent of homebuyers were unmarried couples, and 22% were singles. Female singles tended to favor condos more than male singles. The median age for first-time buyers was under 30, but not by much.

And here's an important point. Last year, 85% of all homes were sold through Realtors. Sellers realize that the best way to sell is the professional way-especially when financing is such an important element in completing a sale.

Lessons from 30 years of regulation worth telling

An Analysis

By PAUL W. MACAVOY
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The Joint Economic Committee of Congress recently held hearings on regulation of the natural gas-producing industry because of concern over escalating wellhead prices and surplus supplies.

Gas prices under federal controls have increased sharply in recent months, while demands were decreasing and producing wells were being shut down. Such violations of basic market economics, by which deficient demands and excess supply have led to price increases, were enough to bring out distinguished members of both House and Senate for the hearing. They wanted to hear authorities on the subject tell what should be done to regulation to avoid the shortages of the '70s and the price spirals of the '80s.

The usual crowd was ready to testify. There was the regulator, the economics professor, a gas producer, the professional public-interest lawyer and the administration spokesman. Their collective testimony was so contentious and controversial that there was no agreement as to what regulatory reform would consist of. But, on reflection, it brought out lessons from the industry's 30 years of regulatory history that are worth telling.

Sales of natural gas at the wellhead were first regulated in the late 1950s after a Supreme Court decision mistook producers with gas wells for already regulated retail gas utilities with pipelines to home consumers.

FROM THE START, the various federal agencies faced with the task of wellhead price setting found it extremely difficult to determine "just and reasonable" public utility prices on contracts for gas to be produced over a 10-20-year period from thousands of wells across the country. After all, gas did not come out of a large plant serving a single community, but from multiple wells producing in conjunction with oil, with other liquids and with dry holes from an earlier exploration process. The challenge was to measure the separable costs of producing natural gas from these extremely diverse conditions and then to set cost-based prices.

By the late 1960s, the regulators had found a method that cleared out these administrative problems. It set regional price ceilings at 1960 production cost levels for all gas found earlier (old gas) and offered a premium over that level for gas discovered later (new gas). This wiped out vast dockets of backlisted regulatory cases, but created insoluble problems for the efficient operation of supply and demand in real markets.

HERE IS LESSON 1.

By allowing less for old gas, the regulatory agency was saying that earlier finds were cheaper. Just the opposite: The current costs of early finds at time of use were what was required to replace them, and these costs were higher because replacement supplies came from deeper reservoirs and less accessible locations. By pricing old gas below replacement cost, the agency created demand expectations of ever-available cheap supply and at the same time supply conditions in which replacement would not occur.

By freezing all prices in the 1960s and early 1970s, the agency ended both replacement and expansion of supplies, thereby creating massive shortages. With demands increasing, there had to be additional supplies, but such further supplies were only forthcoming at costs higher than the frozen prices. Excess demand redounded to the interstate pipelines buying under the federal controls.

A rough justice followed, since those in whose name prices were kept down, the "Northern consumers," got shortages in the mid-1970s of 30 percent or more. Much of Ohio, Indiana and northern New York state suffered in the winter of 1976-77 for lack of 40 percent of the amount of gas sought by consumers from their long-distance pipelines.

The last part of the first lesson is that regulation is never that perfect. A defect in the coverage of controls allowed sales for gas used within producer states to take place free of federal price ceilings. There were no shortages there, and thus no statewide shutdowns with highly inequitable job loss. Consumers paid more than the ceiling price and got as much gas as they wanted.

But Congress then passed the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 to deal with these critical conditions at the wellhead.

HERE IS LESSON 2: Nothing is learned from shortages worth using by Congress in the reform of regulation. The gas act kept the price of old gas below that of new gas, took the ceiling off prices for new gas and grabbed off the abundant intrastate supplies for Northern consumers by extending regulation to cover sales for use in the producing states.

This, of course, created the present escalating price increases. Current prices have risen above the prices that would have prevailed if gas had not been under controls because of the way in which this act worked between 1978 and 1983.

The new, deep-gas supplies acted like a pressure valve, with their prices exploding up to twice those for crude oil to rid the market of excess demands. And the excess demand conditions of 1979 and 1980 made for a sellers' market in which the owners of new gas required that their supplies be produced first (as an element of security, because the pipeline would always prefer to deliver price-controlled old gas first).

THE LAST LESSON IS: Never underestimate the effects of the business cycle on regulated behavior. With recurrent economywide recessions from 1981 to 1983, the demands for gas by industry fell off sharply. Indeed, there were not sufficient demands to require full capacity production of both old and new gas. The higher-priced new gas had to be taken first, and, with this new gas substituting for old gas when demand decreased, the average price level consequently increased without regard for market conditions.

What were the solutions for this price ratchet offered to the Joint Economic Committee? The witness representing the regulators said some adjustments in controls should be made, and the public-interest lawyer called for reregulating the prices of deep gas.

Learning the lessons from 30 years of adverse regulatory effect was not to be the task that day. Even when regulation was blamed, their explanation was that, indeed, there had been regulatory mistakes, but mostly because regulators were not trying hard enough. Anyone listening to the hearings with the slightest bit of common sense could see that if the old-new price split was keeping prices above unregulated market levels, then doing away with the split by deregulating all gas would cause prices to fall. That could scarcely fail to protect the consumer or even the professional public-interest lawyer.

Anyone in the room with the slightest sense of history could also see that regulation at the wellhead had developed a pricing system that gave consumers oscillating shortages and surpluses. Being one of the witnesses, I did not notice that those members of Congress listening so intently developed either the common or historical sense. Here we go again.

Pipelines permitted

AUSTIN — Railroad Commission Chairman Mack Wallace has announced that 15 permits to operate new pipelines in Texas were granted by the RRC in April. Last month the commission approved eight permits, and 25 were granted in April 1982.

Ten of the new permits were for gathering pipelines, three were for trunk transmission lines, and two were for other types of lines. Gathering lines bring oil and gas from production leases, while a trunk transmission line is a larger diameter line into which smaller lines connect.

Fourteen of the newly-permitted lines will transport gas, and one will carry products.

In April, five permits were granted to operate pipelines in deep South Texas, four in the Refugio area, two each in East Texas and West Central Texas, and one in North Texas. One was granted for an offshore line.

Gathering lines approved: High Island Pipe Line Inc., Houston, gas, offshore Jefferson County; Flatwood Gas Inc., Winters, Texas, gas, Eastland County; Teco Pipeline Co., Houston, gas, (five lines — one in Duval County and four in Live Oak County); Victoria Gas Corp., Corpus Christi, gas, Cameron County.

BUSINESS NOTEBOOK

Treasurer to examine bank board

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Treasurer Ann Richards says she wants to take a "hard look" at operations of the State Banking Board in granting new bank charters — saying she feels the board (on which she is one of three members) may have been too conservative in approving new charter requests.

Richards notes that no new States bank charters have been granted in Travis County since 1968, while a number of National bank charters have been approved (the Banking Board at its last voting session rejected a request for a State charter in Travis County).

Texas Department of Banking officials say fewer applications have been received in recent years for State charters because the U. S. Comptroller of the Currency has "virtually rubberstamped" applications for National characters and organizers of banks have decided it would be easier to seek charters at the Federal rather than the State level.

Richards contends the board has functioned too much as a "protective" mechanism for existing banks, and says that as soon as the legislative session is over, she wants to turn her attention to the baord's operations.

In addition to the State Treasurer, the board includes the banking commissioner (currently Robert E. Stewart) and a member of the public (currently R. E. Keamer, Houston) appointed by the governor.

Rate changes in worker's compensation will be considered by the State Board of Insurance July 14 at SBI's annual hearing on rates and rules.

SBI reports the hearing will consider changes based both on experience and modifications in benefits, as well as changes in stevedoring rates.

Until last year, SBI held separate hearing on those matters.

SBI advisory committee panels dealing with worker's compensation matters are preparing a number of matters expected to be on the July 14 agenda, including such proposals as a "rate lading" for radiation exposure — since Comanche Peak nuclear generating plant is scheduled to start up next year, and various changes in classifications of risks.

Senators adopted SR 524 by Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, providing for creation of an interim "Senate committee on Agency funds Management," to be composed of 12 members named by the governor and lieutenant governor, and including represenatives of various State agencies.

The panel will examine state agency handling of funds "held independently from the state treasury and of funds subject to periodic deposit in the state treasury" to assure that Texas is getting the maximum amount of interest possible.

Some of those agencies which have had funds outside the treasury are being brought under the general appropriations process, including those involved with regulation of financial regulatory institutions.

Final approval has been given to continuation of most of those agencies (such as the Department of Banking, Savings and Loan Department) under the "sunset' process. Legislation to continue the agencies also provides that they be brought under the general appropriations process — with their funds placed in the Treasury.

The State Fire Marshal's Office has issued a report for the last half of 1982, summarizing data furnished by fire departments in the state which are participating in the Texas Fire Incident Reporting System (Tex-FIRS).

The report covers data supplied by fire departments representing 39.5 per cent of Texas' population; a number of major cities aren't represented in the report since they are in the process of joining the reporting system.

Statistics showed 32,048 fires during the six months, with a dollar loss estimated at $62,494,213.

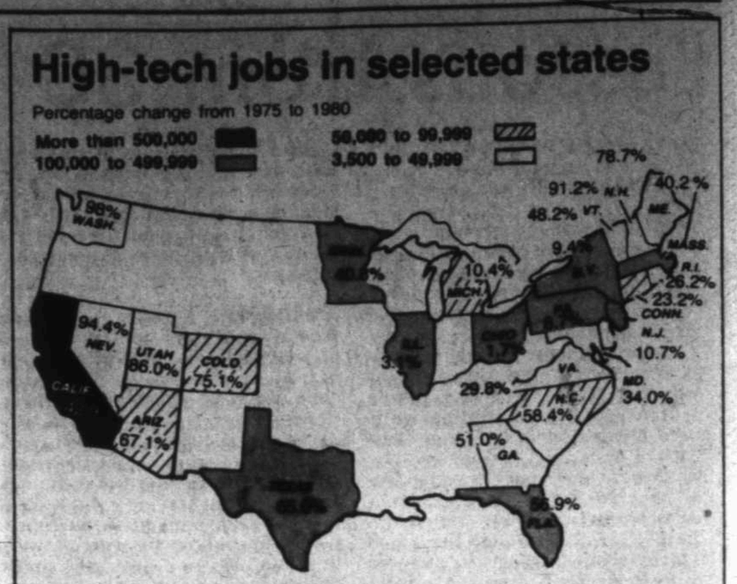
The fires involved 6,811 buildings, 6,834 vehicles and 18,403 other types of fires.

There were 72 fire-related deaths in the period, with 599 fire-related injuries.

The report indicates that more fires (and higher dollar losses) are involved with residential structures than other types of structures. These fires originated most frequently in kitchens or cooking areas.

Wood or paper was the type of material first ignited most often in structure fires — followed by fabrics and textiles.

"Misuse of heat or ignition" — meaning operator error — was the most frequent cause of such blazes, followed by mechanical failure or malfunction.



Note: States were cited because they are industrial, among the most populous or are growing the fastest in population

Well logging: An intense, high-tech job

He must oversee maintenance of his wireline service truck (over $1 million in capital outlay for the company), so that the systmes work when needed. He manages the crew that helps him run the truck, and he analyzes the data collection and provides some "answers" and "quick-looks" for oil and gas potential.

"When things go wrong (with your equipment), what are you going to do?," Graham asks. "You're in the middle of nowhere and time is an important factor. When the customer says 'Let's get going,' you need to be ready."

WELLS GO AWRY like equipment. Even though this team specializes in deep, high-temperature, hostile, pressurized wells, something can always go wrong. "The well starts kicking (with natural gas) and the oilman says, 'What am I going to do?'. The smaller client needs your help," Graham said.

Often, the Schlumberger crew will be using special well safety equipment to cope with extremes of temperature and pressure — up to five or six miles underground.

In Pecos County, while working a shallow well, the gas pressure caused a blowout. Graham was working on a set of tests, in his truck, when "The pressure blew sulfur water through the crown block — coming down in a shower. We couldn't see the well at all, and we were in the middle of making a (logging) trip."

Suddenly, the situation got worse and the crew was going to have to close off the well. Graham had to try to retrieve the expensive tools to avoid a "fishing" job. "We had to check the depth to make sure it was right on the mark," he said. "Bringing the tool out of the hole, we could not see it, and it could have been lost downhole — or pulled up too far, and dropped on the ground."

GRAHAM WAS ABLE to bring the tool safely in by paying close attention to magnetic 100' markings on the tool cable.

"There is an art to everything we do," said Monahans district manager Mark Cyran last week. "Nothing is just a second thought. This is a precise and scientific business." Schlumberger spends millions every year on advanced research.

"They ask, 'Should I case this well or plug it?'. You have to make a decision," Graham added. "It's going to cost them a lot of money to run casing — log information needs to be interpreted correctly."

Answers are demanded from these "pictures" of rock, with materials in the wellbore specifically identified: oil, gas, water, shales, lost drilling fluid. Scores of different downhole conditions, including high-temperature and -pressure problems, are compensated for in making log measurements.

Rig up, transportation and truck problems, winch operation, film developing, and blueprint making are a few of the things that operatiors do for the engineer they work under. Graham said the operators he may supervise could be older, and more experienced in the oilfield, than he is. So he manages them carefully.

"OPERATORS ARE worth their weight in gold, and the mechanical stuff is their territory," Graham noted.

Schlumberger logging is costly, but company spokesmen say it is worth the money. They point out their services cost an average of four percent of total drilling cost.

Due to advanced tools and computer data-correlation, the products and services have increased to the point that experienced people may need educating.

Advanced technology also increased the average number of services used by the client, Schlumberger says, from 3 to 4.5 per well.

THERE ARE PEOPLE doing what Graham does, for the same company, in 92 countries all over the world (China, Australia, and their neighbors have seen the biggest recent increases in well wireline services).

Company president Ian Strecker said recently that Schlumberger believes that its advanced "answer" services for oil and gas operators have helped increse world oil production — which jumped 34 percent from 1970 to 1980.

Schlumberger N.V. is a Netherlands conglomerate with main offices in Houston and in Paris. Its common stock trades on the New York Stock Exchange. It had over $6 billion in revenues last year — $4 billion of which was the total sales of the Oilfield Services segment of the firm.

Schlumberger is an oilfield company rated as highly survivable in hard times. They will be around. If their technologies prove helpful in stemming Texas' declining oil production, the industry will thank them.

Senior operator Jim Bracken works the winch and sheaves controlling a line of specially-made cable (foreground) that wireline tools are lowered into the well on. The tools are heavy machinery but contain delicate electronics — careful operation is required.

Hiring of disadvantaged teens gets U.S. tax credit

The U.S. Department of Labor is urging the private sector to get more involved in hiring disadvantaged teenage youth during the summer months by taking advantage of tax credits under the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit (TJTC) program.

According to Albert Angrisani, assistant secretary of labor for employment and training, employers can receive a substantial tax saving under new provisions of TJTC by giving disadvantaged youth a helping hand.

The new provisions, which went into effect recently, result from the Tax Equity and Financial Responsibility Act of 1982. This act added economically disadvantaged summer youth to TJTC's targeted categories.

Hired disadvantaged youth, who must be 16-17 years olds, will receive at least the federal minimum wage of $3.35 an hour, but the net cost to the employer can be as little as 50 cents an hour. For example, an employer can pay each youth hired under the program the minum wage for up to 90 days and claim 85 percent of the amount as a credit deducted from the firm's tax return.

"We're talking about a total cost of $262 for the summer to employers who hire an economically disadvantaged youngster between May 1 and September 15 under new provisions of the TJTC," Angrisani said.

Angrisani explained the eligibility rules on who can be hired and under what circumstances:

The teenager must be 16 or 17 years old on the hiring date.

He or she must come from a family whose total income the previous 12 months did not exceed the poverty level established by the Labor Department. The level ranges from $8,700 to $15,000 for a family of four, depending on the city or area of residence.

A local office of the state employment service, often called the Job Service, must establish that the youth is economically disadvantaged and certify this in writing before the youth goes to work.

Midland band "Puzzle" performs Thursday evenings at Robert's Copper Pot. Members of Puzzle, the serious band, include Curtis Horn (l.) and Stewart Griest (r.). Copper Pot frequenter Michael Grube comments, "I don't come here often enough on Thursdays."

True camaraderie found at Robert's Copper Pot

Robert's Copper Pot of Midland maintains a selection of domestic and imported beers unsurpassed by any other restaurant in Texas. The beer drinker's menu features 85 to 100 varieties of beer. Owners Bob and Bettye Conklin stock beer from Germany, the British Isles, Norway, Holland, Japan, Switzerland, China, U.S., Canada, Brazil, Mexico, Denmark, Belguim and Czechoslovakia.

In accordance with this variety of brews, Bettye Conklin established "The Beer Drinkers Hall of Fame." Eligibility requires sampling 30 different beers within a 30 day period. BDHOFERS - Beer Drinker Hall of Famers- are awarded a set of printed mugs or a brass and leather belt buckle. Current members of the BDHOFERS are emblazoned on a large plaque in the rear room of Robert's Copper Pot.

Bob and Bettye Conklin offer a glossary of terms associated with beer and ale in their secnd edition cookbook entitled Recipes from Robert's Copper Pot. Each beer is defined according to country of origin and flavor.

The second edition cookbook contains exactly 300 recipes. Bettye Conklin's advice is "to learn a recipe by following it absolutely the first time, then add your own touches if you feel it is nessecary."

Recipe number 300 is virtually foolproof - boiled water. Instructions read,"Put water in pan, put pan on stove, let boil until it runs over." It's understandable why Bob Conklin fondly calls wife Bettye "my crazy lady."

The current May issue of Ultra magazine names Robert's Copper Pot as the favored catering service "for both corporate and private high flyers."

Robert's corporate catering service originated in 1979. Jim Coonce, chief pilot for a major oil company inquired about catering services for executive and corporate flights. Thus planted the seed of the in-flight catering service offered by the Copper Pot.

General manager Jesse "Yish" Naftel prepares catered trays upon request. The selection includes seafood trays, sandwich trays, meat trays and cheese trays. Yish stresses that only choice products are used to prepare trays.

Robert's Copper Pot offers a comfortable, friendly atmosphere. Southwest Airlines magazine describes the setting as one where "everybody talks to you - friends, strangers, even the help. A place for people watching and people meeting."

Bob Coklin coins his Copper Pot as "small, close and fantastic customers." Bettye adds that "it's been rewarding as we have made many, many friends; We thank you all."

Robert and Bettye Conklin invite you to join the camaraderie of Robrt's Copper Pot. They are located at 3211 W. Wadley in Midland. Robert's is open Monday 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.; Tuesday through Saturday open 11:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. Stop by and enjoy "the Permian Basin's only real deli."

Falling oil prices dragging Alaska down

By HAL SPENCER
Associated Press Writer

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Like the mercury in a thermometer at windswept Prudhoe Bay, the world price of oil continues to inch downward in the face of falling demand.

That cold reality is shaking awake this oil-rich state, which once had dreams as grand as Mount McKinley.

Three years ago, Alaska repealed its personal income tax as billions of dollars flowed into state coffers from royalties on state-owned oil and gas leases.

Now, some legislators whisper privately about restoring the tax, as oil income, representing about 90 percent of state revenues, dwindles to less than half what it was two years ago.

"I'm scared," says state Sen. Don Bennett of Fairbanks, co-chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

"I don't think the people of Alaska realize how serious our fiscal situation is, or how much trouble we'll be in if the price of oil continues to fall."

EVERY DROP of $1 per barrel costs Alaska $150 million a year in revenue.

Others are less gloomy, but nevertheless worried.

"We're still in decent financial shape," says Peter McDowell, head of the state Office of Management and Budget. "But we no longer have the money to pay for a lot of things we've come to expect."

While most of the nation suffered from skyrocketing oil prices in the last decade, previously poor Alaska prospered.

The avarice of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) was cause for rejoicing in a state that had Prudhoe Bay, the nation's richest oil field, and the 800-mile trans-Alaska pipeline to get the oil to market.

ALASKA, whose land mass would cover one-fifth of the lower 48 states, embarked on a spending binge ranging from cash appropriations for hydroelectic projects to 100 percent funding for public education.

Now, says freshman Gov. Bill Sheffield, "The party's over."

"It's hangover time," adds Attorney General Norman Gorsuch, the governor's right-hand man.

Despite protests from special interest groups, Sheffield wants to scale back such ambitious projects as development of a farming industry in the interior.

THE STATE PUT about $114 million into loans and grants to clear land and finance barley farming near Fairbanks. But the sagging world grain market and high production costs have left the state with a marginal industry that critics call little more than a pipedream.

The governor also wants to cancel the oil revenue "dividend" program that last year put $1,000 checks in the hands of Alaska's estimated 460,000 residents. He hopes to use the $200 million earmarked for the program this year to help finance operating and capital construction costs.

That idea, too, is being greeted with protest by a vocal segment of the population.

Dividend supporters, including many state lawmakers and former Gov. Jay Hammond, argue that the Permanent Fund dividend program, financed with earnings from Alaska's $4.2 billion savings account, is the only way in which individual Alaskans can obtain their fair share of the state's oil wealth.

Sheffield has another reason for opposing the dividend program, which would provide $350 checks to individual Alaskans this year. He and his staff contend the "cash giveaway" program has given Alaska a black eye in Congress, where many would like to limit federal aid to the state and pass laws limiting its severance taxes on oil.

"We need the federal dollars now more than ever, but we're liable to lose them, and our severance tax on oil too, if we don't get rid of the dividend distribution," says Lt. Gov. Stephen McAlpine.

THE STATE FORECASTS general fund revenues of about $2.7 billion for fiscal 1984, as compared to $3.5 billion for the current fiscal year ending June 30, and nearly $6 billion in the peak fiscal year of 1982.

According to figures from the state Department of Revenue, $16.9 billion has flowed into the general fund since Alaska became a state in 1959. More than 95 percent has been collected since 1970, and more than two-thirds in the past four years.

Even reinstating the personal income tax wouldn't reverse the state's sagging fortunes, says Vince Wright, chief of research for the revenue department. "Income tax collections could never compare with the kind of revenue we were getting from oil," he says.

In a state largely shielded from the hard times "outside," there is a lot of talk now about the need to "lower expectations."

Alaska cities and towns, for example, have grown accustomed to receiving millions of dollars annually to pay a big chunk of operating costs and to build structures like the new $32 million sports arena in Anchorage.

BUT SEVERAL MAYORS, in a recent appearance before the Senate Finance Committee, were told that local property taxpayers would have to start picking up more of the tab.

"When our pockets were full, we were happy to give you the money," House Finance Chairman Al Adams of Kotzebue told the mayors. "But now they're not so full and we can't give you the money you want."

A worried Anchorage Mayor Tony Knowles said cities and towns are suddenly being hit with high operating costs for roads and buildings constructed by a generous state government. The mayors said local property taxes will rise as a result.

Alaska's rural residents will feel the pain too, says state Sen. Frank Ferguson, who represents Eskimos in northern and western Alaska.

Alaska's wealth has helped bring bush villages into the 20th century with sewer and water systems and better health care. But money is needed for more such projects and to help defray high maintenance costs.

WATER SYSTEMS, for example, have a tendency to freeze up in 30-below weather, and require more than the average amount of maintenance, Ferguson says.

But Ferguson, a part-Eskimo, says his people live close to the land and are accustomed to hardship, so they likely will weather the fiscal decline better than urban residents.

"Your urban Alaskans, the ones who came in recent years, have known nothing but prosperity and relatively low property taxes," says Gene Dusek, a Sheffield budget official. "These people are going to scream when they see what lower oil revenues will do to them."

Alaska's recent spending binge has profoundly changed the character of its residents, he says.

"Ten or 15 years ago, the oldtimers up here didn't want services. They were self-reliant. That's no longer the case."

THE FALL in the state's fortunes has implications for Alaska's private sector as well.

Gregg Erickson, an Alaskan financial consultant, reported recently that state spending now accounts for 44 percent of Alaska's personal income.

Smuggling apparently official

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst News Service

PARIS — British customs officials recently discovered 50,000 tons of steels smuggled into that country from Russia and Czechoslovakia after being falsely labeled as coming from West Germany, a Common Market partner.

The case highlighted a growing phenomenon of bigtime illicit communist bloc trade with the West. The European Economic Commission, which oversees Common Market trade, admitted in a report earlier this year that no one knows the exact extent of such dealings but that they "amount to hundreds of millions" of dollars annually.

What the report inferred was that the racket has become an integral part of Soviet bloc policy. Its twin aims are to earn hard currency by whatever methods possible and contribute in however minor a fashion to Western economic destabilization.

The steel smuggling affair may have been something of an anomaly. Authorities who have long been studying the matter say that the Soviet bloc countries normally use much more sophisticated procedures to get past Western trade barriers, often with the full complicity of Western businessmen.

According to Dr. Hans Eiseke of the Cologne Economic Institute, a wide variety of goods ranging from cigarets to pharmaceuticals and heavy machinery regularly makes its way from Eastern Europe to the European Common Market and even farther afield to the U.S. and Canada, falsely labeled as having been produced in the West, especially West Germany.

"In nearly every case, the goods are contracted for by Western firms eager to take advantage of the lower labor costs in the Soviet bloc," he explained. "Once inside the Common Market, their origins are doctored and they are transhipped as coming from a manufacturer in Stuttgart, let us say."

The sheer impenetrable complexity of the Common Market's trade regulations — responsible since its inception for just about every fraud conceivable to the larcenous mind — is responsible for much of this. But, Eiseke and other experts in the field claim, one regulation in particular has created an enormous opening which the communist governments have exploited to its maximum.

That is the rule laying down that East Germany is to be considered part of West Germany's "domestic" market as far as the European Community is concerned. The objective was to free trade between the two German states of tariff constraints and use commerce as a means of drawing them closer together. The results have gone beyond anything envisaged by the EEC's legal drafstmen.

Not only does the rule make it possible for East German goods to enter West Germany without paying customs or import taxes, but it means the items are practically unidentifiable once they are there.

"There is abosluetely no doubt that advantage has been taken of this to import goods from other communist bloc countries and Asia into East Germany and then ship them out again to West Germany as East German-made," Eiseke said.

Seismic crew count up

The number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U. S. and U. S. waters during April increased by two from the March total.

The April total reflected the first monthly increase since June, 1982. According to the Society of Exploration Geophysicists' latest monthly report, the April total was 449, compared with 447 the previous month. An additional five land crews had contracts but were idled due to inclement weather.

The April total (449) represents an increase of one-half of one percent over last month, a 28 percent decrease from April, 1982.

Oilmen can now buy the whole thing

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The federal government has held 69 sales of offshore oil leases in the Gulf of Mexico over the past 29 years but the one coming up Wednesday is entirely different.

Instead of offering a number of specific seabottom tracts for lease, the Department of Interior simply opened up the entire central Gulf and told oilmen to take their pick.

So an unknown number of oil companies will make an unknown number of bids on an unknown number of tracts — and the Mineral Management Service won't know any of the essential details until the day before the sale, when bids must be in.

"Actually, we don't even use the word 'sale' any more," said Barney Congdon, a service spokesman. "Now it's 'lease offering'."

Whatever it is will take place in a meeting room at the Superdome at 9 a.m. Oil industry people are reluctant to talk about it, so another unknown is the number of people expected to be thee.

John Rankin, acting director of the service, guesses that about 400 tracts, most of them nine square miles in size, will draw bids from oilmen who believe that oil or natural gas lies below.

Interior Secretary James Watt imposed this controversial "streamlined five-year schedule" of leasing offshore bottoms. He said it will bring about production of more oil and gas, more offshore finds, and thus more money to the government.

Federal offshore money already amounts to a hefty sum. For fiscal 1983, the government expected offshore royalties and leases to produce $17 billion — much of it from this Gulf area.

Critics contend this system won't bring in as much as the seabottoms are worth. David Russell, service deputy director, said sales are based on true market value — and the definition of that is the amount a willing buyer will pay a willing seller.

This is the first area-wide lease sale in the Gulf and it covers 46.9 million acres — which is one third of the continental shelf area.

Roughly, the western boundry line is the Texas-Louisiana border and the eastern boundry is almost to the Florida border.

It extends out from shore 220 miles, in water depths ranging from 13 feet to 10,000 feet, and the only parts not open to bidding are the 7.1 million acres already under lease due to previous sales.

This is familiar territory for oilmen. The offshore oil industry, with its exotic technology, was born in the Gulf and still thrives there.

Over 18,000 wells already have been drilled in this offshore area, most in relatively shallow water, and about 13,000 of them paid off. Twelve thousand miles of pipeline lace alon the bottom to connect 660 oil and gas fields to facilities onshore. Amost 3,000 production platforms stand on steel legs in the heaving sea.

Congdon said the Department of Interior has spent $3.5 million on environmental studies in the area.

Property exchanges

By ROBERT C. SNEERINGER

For the person holding appreciated property who wants to dispose of the appreciated property and acquire similar property, a like-kind exchange can be an effective method of accomplishing this objective without incurring a current tax liability. The payment of tax on the appreciation is deferred until the property received in the exchange is disposed in a taxable exchange. If the replacement property is retained until the recipient's death, the untaxed appreciation in the original property will permanently escape income tax due to the step up on basis to the value of date to death for property held by a decedent.

To qualify for the "tax free" treatment, property held for productive use in a trade of business or for investment must be exchanged for other property of a like-kind that's also to be held either for productive use in a trade or business or for investment. The words "like-kind" have reference to the nature of character of the property and not to its grade or quality. For example, an exchange of real property for personal property is not a like-kind exchange since the nature and character of the property differ. However, an exchange of improved real estate for unimproved real estate does qualify as like-kind property since the nature or character is the same with only the grade or quality differing. The Internal Revenue Code does exclude inventory, bonds, stocks, notes and other securities or evidences of indebtedness as property qualifying for like-kind exchange treatment.

Generally, the basis of property received in a like-kind exchange is the basis of the property surrendered. The basis of the property surrendered can be adjusted for "boot" received for gain recognized if there is a variation of the basic exchange of like-kind of equal value.

Often, in effecting an exchange, one party will be called upon to make cash payments in order to equalize values. Cash payments will have no effect on whether the exchange of properties is entitled to nonrecognition of gain. However, the party who receives the cash will be taxable on the gain attributable to the cash. If, in addition to like-kind property, a party receives unlike property, his gain, if any, is recognized to the extent of the fair market value of the unlike property received.

If mortgaged real estate is exchanged for other real property, the amount of the mortgage of which one party is relieved is treated by him as the equivalent of cash received. Any liability assumed by a party to an exchange increases the basis of the property received.

The holding period of the property exchanged in a like-kind exchange carries over to the similar property received. Therefore, long-term capital gain will resuslt if the property received in the exchange is sold after received provided the property exchanged was held more than one year.

The like-kind exchabnge can be a very useful tax saving technique to acquire property when you are holding similar property that has appreciated in value.

However, don't be lulled into a false sense of security by the "tax free" term that is often associated with the like-kind exchange. The like-kind exchange is merely tax deferral. Other than death, a disposition of the property received in the exchange will cause the appreciation to be recognized and the tax thereon to be paid.

Club contracting ClayDesta

Clayton Williams, president of ClayDesta Corporation, developers of ClayDesta Plaza, announced Friday a new private business and social dining club will sign a contract for 10,000 square feet of space on the sixth floor of the ClayDesta National Bank Building, now in its final stages of completion.

The club, yet to be named by its Board of Governors, will be operated under their direction by Club Corporation of America, Dallas-basedoperators of 118 private clubs; including the Metropolitan Club in Chicago, Inverrary Country Club in Ft. Lauderdale and Firestone Country Club in Akron.

"We're extremely proud to announce this relationship," Williams said. "The firm's reputation for operating high-quality, exclusive clubs is unchallenged.

The club's Board of Governors, currently being formed, will announce specific details as plans are completed. However, Charles Reichert, senior vice president of Club Corporation of America, said club members will be able to enjoy associate (reciprocal) membership in the more than 118 clubs nationwide that the firm operates.

That will include clubs from Anchorage, Alaska, to McAllen, Texas, and Honolulu to New York City," Reichert said.

He added, "The purpose of the club is to provide a distinguished place where members may meet their friends, dine in gracious surroundings, and satisfy their business and social entertainment needs."

Membership will be by invitation only and will be extended to both individuals and corporations as approved by the club's Board of Governors.

Williams said unsurpassed dining facilities, custom furnishings, fine food and impeccable service will be the hallmarks of the club as well as panoramically beautiful views of Midland and the surrounding area.

Border guards grabbing jeansrunners

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

SAN DIEGO — On a recent Saturday morning outside the San Diego Federal Building, a small group of U.S. Customs agents, federal marshals and an attorney for Jordache Enterprises Inc., the maker of designer jeans, huddled around a white Rolls-Royce Corniche.

Their mission was to catch and put out of business a Tijuana-based smuggling ring suspected of bringing phony Jordache jeans across the Mexican border for sale in Southern California. An elaborate sting operation was planned in which the attorney would pose as a rich American buyer eager to turn a quick but illegal profit, using the $130,000 Rolls as a convincing prop.

Nearly a week later, after two futile attempts, the law enforcement-private industry team met with success. On April 21, two Mexican men were arrested and 1,000 pairs of Jordache look-alikes were seized at the U.S.-Mexico border.

The focus of the sting was the international border at San Ysidro, 17 miles south of downtown San Diego and the newest "hot spot" in the United States for counterfeit merchandise traffic, according to federal customs officials and manufacturers of designer goods.

They say the border has become a busy two-way street for north and southbound transport of bogus designer goods. The schemes allow counterfeiters to sidestep or break federal laws that make it illegal to manufacture and export goods bearing a U.S.-registered trademark without the trademark owner's consent.

As with the Jordache look-alikes, some phony-label goods are made in Mexico and brought across the border to be sold at swap meets and retail shops in San Diego, Los Angeles and other U.S. cities. But a large percentage of the fakes pass through San Diego into Mexico to be bought by tourists and Mexicans at shops in Tijuana and other Mexican border cities.

In fiscal 1982, customs investigators in San Diego seized 29 shipments of phony name-brand or copyrighted products valued at $1.03 million — most of it bound for Mexico. The product list reads like a who's who of designer labels: Gucci, Polo, Lacoste, Cross pens, Playboy socks, Gloria Vanderbilt, Calvin Klein and Givenchy. At Los Angeles International Airport, senior customs inspector Susan Ozawa says that of more than $1 million in "piratical" or trademark-infringed items seized there since October, about 20 percent was destined for Mexico.

Traditionally, movement of counterfeit goods has been heaviest in cities like Los Angeles, Miami and New York, where international airports, major harbors or busy garment centers facilitate such trade.

But in the past year, for a variety of reasons, San Diego has entered the booming, multibillion-dollar underground business of trademark product counterfeiting.

"It's a very coming area," said Bill Ellis, president of National Sales Audit Co., a Los Angeles private investigations company that specializes in putting makers of "knock-offs" out of business by intercepting shipments and ferreting out makers and sellers of counterfeits.

Ellis said San Diego has become the third busiest city west of the Mississippi in counterfeit goods trafficking. Only Los Angeles and El Paso, Texas, rank higher.

And the International Anti-Counterfeiting Coalition, a private association of manufacturers headquartered in New York, places San Diego "fourth or fifth in the nation in the attempted entry of counterfeit goods," an association spokesman said. The same organization places Los Angeles in second place, between New York and Miami.

Examples of the burgeoning activity include:

—Seizure by U.S. Customs agents last December of 125,000 "E.T." dolls at Los Angeles International Airport and the border at San Ysidro. Had the Taiwan-made statuettes been trucked into Mexico to a Tijuana distributor, as apparently was planned, they could have grossed an estimated $1.2 million.

—An importer in Mexico who, according to investigator Ellis, had forged documents claiming he had the "exclusive license" to import Ralph Lauren designer apparel and sold to such fashionable outlets as Dorian's, a major Tijuana clothing store. The law caught up with the importer when he arranged for a $1 million shipment of bogus Ralph Lauren shirts made in Taiwan. About 35,000 shirts were intercepted and seized at Los Angeles Harbor, leading investigators to another 30,000 pieces caught as they were being trucked into Mexico, Ellis said.

—Confiscation several months ago of 20,000 fake Izod jackets at San Diego Harbor. The shipment originated in Taiwan, where the goods were made, and was bound for Mexico, with the likely sales target "American tourists traveling in Mexico," said William C. Steffin, a Los Angeles attorney for General Mills Inc.'s Izod-Lacoste clothing division.

—The much-publicized 1979 confiscation of 4,006 phony Cartier watches at San Ysidro. The watches, with a retail value of $1.8 million, were later crushed by a steamroller in front of Cartier's Beverly Hills store as a lesson to would-be counterfeiters.

Fermin Cuza, acting director of the U.S. Customs district office in San Diego, says it was the Cartier incident that made customs officials take notice of the trafficking of counterfeit goods in their backyard.

"We probably started this (crackdown) back in 1979," he said. To deal with the two-way flow, Cuza's office recently added a third investigator to its Contraband Enforcement Team, which has the job of examining suspicious shipments headed north and south of the border.
