Parents recount agony since son's death

Doubts, questions linger for Pendletons

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

Ten months of patiently enduring countless rumors, innuendoes and discrepancies involving their son and the circumstances surrounding his death are enough for Charles and Pam Pendleton.

Now they are ready to set the record straight.

"Mentally, emotionally and everything else — we have been put through a wringer," Pendleton said. "Some of the things we've been put through are not normal. A lot of lies have been told. We want the public to know what a family has been through."

Sumner Pendleton, 23, died on Aug. 31, 1991, under unusual circumstances. Family members found him in his car in the garage of an abandoned Midland house at 3118 Auburn Drive — the apparent victim of suicide.

Since his death, officials have disinterred the body twice and performed two autopsies to determine exactly how he died.

The first autopsy, conducted on Sept. 6, 1991, indicated carbon monoxide poisoning as the cause of death.

But the Pendletons' doubts about Dr. Ralph Erdmann's conclusions and whether he even performed the autopsy on their son were fueled in October when the couple finally got their hands on a copy of the report, several months before Erdmann came under fire for allegedly performing faulty autopsies.

"It (the report) listed his weight as 180 pounds. At his heaviest, he weighed 145 pounds, and before he died he had lost

Clinton rides jump in polls to Big Apple

■ Candidate regains his political equilibrium, wins Rev. Jesse Jackson's backing on his terms.

By R.W. Apple Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — As the cast of characters for the 41st Democratic National Convention assembled in Manhattan on Saturday, the Rev. Jesse Jackson ended a long holdout and endorsed Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas and Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee — the ticket the delegates will ratify later this week.

Clinton, who has seemed to regain his political equilibrium in recent days, won Jackson's backing, however grudging and however tardy, on his own terms. Unlike other recent Democratic nominees, he declined to bargain with the black leader for his support, lest he seem a captive.

"I have decided to vote for Bill Clinton and Al Gore," Jackson said, but he did not say he would campaign for them. And he implicitly chided Governor Clinton for his strategy of concentrating on middle-class voters with the comment, "We need a big-tent vision that makes room for us all."

The endorsement removed the next-to-

Perot calls black audience 'you people,' offends some

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Ross Perot, making his first campaign stop outside the friendly confines of his volunteer army, offended members of an NAACP audience Saturday by referring to blacks as "you people."

He said afterward that if he upset anyone, "then I'm sorry," and he repeated the apology later in a telephone interview broadcast on Cable News Network. "It never occurred to me that they would be offended and if I offended anybody in any way I certainly apologize," Perot said.

Speaking to the civil rights group, Perot recounted his family's ties to blacks in Texarkana, Texas, recited his hope to make America's "melting-pot" diversity a strength, and offered his standard anti-crime, clean-up-the-economy speech.

"Financially at least, it's going to be a long, hot summer," Perot told the group. "Now I

AWOL soldier resurfaces, cites orders by Ouija Board

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — An Albuquerque man says he and five friends went AWOL from their Army intelligence posts because Ouija Board spirits told them they were needed to help lead the world through an impending cataclysm.

But Vance Davis denies the group went to a Florida beach to await the second coming of Jesus Christ in a UFO, as had been reported.

"How ridiculous can you get?" said Davis, 27. "Jesus Christ is Jesus Christ. Why would he come in a flying saucer?"

The six former intelligence analysts, all with top-secret security clearances, were reported missing from their Augsburg, West Germany, base on July 9, 1990.

They were arrested five days

New dictionary offers latest word on changing America

By Michael Bezdek
Associated Press writer

BOSTON — Dictionaries are hardly snuggle-up-with kinds of books, but each new edition tells a story. And the latest update of the American Heritage dictionary is a pretty good read.

This third edition of 200,000 entries contains 16,000 words added since the last edition 10 years ago.

It documents weighty contemporary realities such as "date rape," "serial killer," "chemical dependency," and "AIDS," as well as lighter linguistic fare such as "soft news," "infotainment" and music known as "ear candy."

New entries also reflect the continuing computer and video booms, the "wellness" craze, the business of "junk bonds" and "preowned" cars, and sweeping changes in geopolitics.

The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language, Third Edition, published by Houghton Mifflin, with a suggested retail price of $39.95, is due in bookstores next month. It took four years and the effort of 390 people.

Dictionary Executive Editor Anne Soukhanov and her staff spent the past decade, however, combing publications for words and usage common enough for addition to the dictionary first published in 1969.

Decisions are not made hastily.

A dictionary is a fairly exclusive club, too small to admit all but a small proportion of words from any given field, such as science, and too enduring to include what could be ephemera. Some Watergate terms, for instance, such as "Deep Throat," are still being considered for entry pending wider usage.

A usage panel of 173 experts helps choose entries and weigh changing definitions. For example, the majority opinion on the panel now finds it acceptable to use "intrigue" to mean arouse interest, "aggravate" to mean irritate, and "anxious" to mean eager.

The dictionary also added words such as "ombudsperson" that reflect an abiding concern for gender bias that Soukhanov feels is the most profound trend in the language.

"I would like to say quite clearly that we believe the concern for words that are gender-tagged is the most important shift in English usage in the last 400

Miss Tarrant wins

FORT WORTH — Miss Tarrant County, Amy Parker, a speech communications senior at the University of North Texas, captured the 1992 Miss Texas crown Saturday night. Miss Parker laughed, then cried as she accepted the crown and a bouquet of yellow roses at the Miss Texas Scholarship Pageant. Wearing a full-length white strapless ball gown, the hometown favorite waved her right arm in triumph before making her victory walk across the stage at the Fort Worth-Tarrant County Convention Center. First runnerup was Miss Humble-Kingwood, Monica Perry, who won a $5,000 scholarship. Second runnerup was Miss Lake O' The Pines, BaShara Chandler, who won a $3,000 scholarship. Third runnerup was Miss Cleveland DeAnn Fowler, who got a $2,000 scholarship.

Official to resign

DUNCANVILLE — A school superintendent filmed visiting adult bookstores and theaters during school hours said Saturday he will resign, but maintained he visited the businesses to conduct a personal investigation. Ed Stevens, 49, superintendent for seven years, was filmed visiting the businesses by Dallas' KDFW-TV, which aired the tape Thursday. The report showed entering and leaving several adult bookstores and movie theaters, remaining several hours on some visits.

'This town is . . .'

OKEMAH, Okla. — Woody Guthrie, the wandering minstrel of the Depression and the Dust Bowl, no longer is being shunned at home. It took 24 years and the fall of communism, but his memory is welcome in Okemah. Woody, this town is your town. Again. Guthrie, whose folk songs include "This Land is Your Land" and "So Long, It's Been Good to Know You," had been condemned in this aging oil-boom town, even after his death in 1967. Only four years ago, a City Council member dubbed him "a disgrace to this community." Now, 80 years after Guthrie's July 14 birth, the critics are hushed. Okemah extends its apologies to Guthrie, his family and his fans.

Terrorists fire grenade at consulate in Istanbul

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — Two terrorists fired a rocket-propelled grenade at the U.S. consulate, but caused no damage, a police official said.

Also Saturday, a firebomb at the General Motors sales facility in the Aegean port of Izmir destroyed 30 cars and caused damage estimated at $2 million.

Both attacks were claimed by Dev Sol (Revolutionary Left), an underground organization which said it was avenging the police slaying of 12 of its members last year before a visit by President Bush.

In Istanbul's residential district of Sariyer, the police defused a bomb seen being planted underneath the car of a U.S. citizen.

A police official identified the apparent target as Melvin A. Vitter, an official of the board running several U.S. educational institutions in Turkey.

In the first incident, the attackers fired the grenade at the consulate from about 100 yards away, said a police official speaking on condition of anonymity. The round exploded in the building's back yard, he said.

Dev Sol later claimed the attack through an anonymous phone call to the left-wing newspaper Ozgur Gundem.

"We destroyed the U.S. consulate in memory of our martyrs of July 12 (1991)," the caller said, saying he was from the Armed Revolutionary Units of Dev Sol.

A similar message was phoned to Cumhuriyet, another left-wing newspaper, shortly after the Izmir attack.

They appeared to be referring to the slaying of 12 Dev Sol members by the police in Istanbul and Ankara in swoops on the eve of a state visit by Bush last year.

The organization had claimed a similarly ineffective attack on the U.S. consulate on April 16.

SOLDIER: Ouija Board ordered them to leave their posts, man says

later after one was stopped for a broken tail light in Gulf Breeze, Fla., a beach town known for reported UFO sightings.

Two weeks later, they were honorably discharged from Fort Knox, Ky., after an Army investigation found no evidence the soldiers from the 701st Military Intelligence Brigade had been involved in espionage.

As punishment, they were reduced to the lowest rank and forfeited half a month's pay for "the offenses of AWOL and forged leave papers," the Army said. Military officials refused to discuss the investigation.

As the story of the soldiers' disappearance unfolded, officials and friends speculated they had gone to the Florida town near Pensacola to await Christ's arrival via spaceship.

Davis said he wants to tell his story after two years of self-imposed hiding to set the record straight and because, according to the Ouija Board, race riots in Los Angeles were to be a signal the group should go public.

He says the others will come forward, one by one, depending on public reaction to Davis.

Others in the group, with ranks and ages at the time of their arrests, are: Pfc. Michael Hueckstaedt, 19, of Farson, Wyo.; Pfc. Kris Perlock, 20, of Osceola, Wis.; Pfc. William Setterberg, 20, of Pittsburgh; Spc. Kenneth Beason, 26, of Jefferson City, Tenn.; and Sgt. Annette Eccleston, 22, of Hartford, Conn. Davis, originally from Valley Center, Kan., had the rank of specialist.

The group is waiting to see if "certain parts of the government" will "come after us or not," said Davis, who now lives in a southeast Albuquerque apartment with his wife and 8-month-old daughter, does odd jobs and gives seminars on "self-sustaining lifestyles" through an organization called Earthgate.

It all began innocently in November 1989, he said.

"We decided to do some experimentation into things," he said. "We wanted to see if there was something actually to it — ESP, parapsychology, ghosts, Tarot cards."

Davis said the members of the group "hit brick walls" until finally they tried a Ouija Board.

"Someone showed up," he said. "I'm talking spiritually."

In the months that followed, Davis said, several spirits talked to the group, predicting the Gulf War and the 1990 Iran earthquake.

"At the end of May we were told we might think about trying to get out of the service because there's going to be some serious things occurring in the next five years, and being in the service would not help us grow and become what we were supposed to become," Davis said.

What they were destined to do, he said, is teach and prepare people for the coming world chaos.

"This will be the changing of the Earth and Jesus is involved," Davis said. "He will come back, and Rapture is real."

Some fundamentalist Christians believe that during the Rapture, believers will be swept to heaven before the world ends. Davis grew up in the fundamentalist Church of Christ, while others of the group were raised as mainstream Christians, he said.

The group's research into psychic phenomenon had nothing to do with their military jobs, he said.

As a non-Morse interceptor-analyst, Davis worked with teletype and fax transmissions at strategic installations, said Shari Lawrence, spokeswoman at U.S. Total Army Personnel Command in Alexandria, Va.

"The majority of what they do would be highly classified," Lawrence said.

Davis said that when the group couldn't find a legal way out of the Army, the Ouija Board told them, "Leave, just leave."

Stunned, they decided to put their faith in the board's message that "things would work out."

"We had top-secret clearances and never did anything wrong in our life," Davis said. "Being AWOL was the furthest thing from our mind."

But on July 3, 1990, they hopped a flight from Munich to Atlanta, making their way to Gulf Breeze to see two friends, a psychic and her housemate who would become Vance's wife, Iris.

After their arrest and release from the Army, the group split up. Davis and his family moved to Albuquerque because they had a friend here.

"With everything we were told that's supposed to be occurring in the next five years, we want to be here to help," Davis said.

The changes, he says, include numerous earthquakes and volcanoes — including a major eruption of Mt. Rainer in Washington state — the devastation of New York City by gas leak, food and race riots in every major U.S. city that will lead to martial law and economic collapse.

"When all this occurs, we'll be gone again," Davis said.

But meanwhile, Davis said, the group may write a book, follow up on a possible movie deal, and — if offered — do an advertisement for Parker Bros.

CLINTON: Convention to provide a test of unity

last threat of a disruptive squabble at the convention, which opens Monday night in Madison Square Garden.

Former Gov. Jerry Brown of California, who fought Clinton for the nomination through the last primaries on June 2, has still not indicated whether he will join the party's effort to present a harmonious picture to the nation as Clinton begins an arduous three-sided campaign.

With recent polls showing him closing the gap on his rivals, President Bush and Ross Perot, and with a generally warm reaction to his selection of Gore last week, the Arkansas governor appears far more confident than he did during the primary season.

But the convention, bereft of conflict and suspense though it may be, represents a crucial test for Clinton.

He must avoid the kinds of confusion that marred the Democratic conventions of 1968, 1972 and 1980, and cost the party dearly in the fall of those years.

Even with the reduced television coverage planned this time by the broadcast networks, the convention will leave an image of the party and its candidates with many voters; the Democrats want to seem orderly, unified, serious, concerned, determined and above all stable and trustworthy.

"We have to demonstrate that this is not your typical Democratic convention," Ronald H. Brown, the party chairman, said Saturday in a rueful allusion to the tumultuous gatherings of the past. "This is not a convention to heal wounds. We are already in the general election campaign."

But John C. White of Texas, one of Brown's predecessors, warned that important work in rebuilding party unity remained before the broader appeal to the country begins.

"Bill Clinton's got the nomination, and he's got the power," White said. "But he's still got to bring the party together. He's got to make these regular Democrats feel like they're really part of it."

The party leaders and Clinton's strategists hope to reintroduce him to the nation during the convention, emphasizing the story of his rise from humble origins in the hope that it will make many voters forget, or attach less importance to, the kinds of character issues that have dogged his campaign.

They are convinced, as Robert Squier, one of his media consultants, remarked recently, that "the more you get to know Bill Clinton the more you like him."

Gore began the process of reintroduction even before Clinton arrived in New York. In a joint appearance on the steps of the courthouse in Carthage, Tenn., his home town, Gore told a friendly crowd how the Arkansas governor had grown up poor, in the kind of single-parent family that is now an American commonplace.

Commenting that it was "hotter than a pickup's windshield" under the blazing Southern sun, Clinton stripped his suit jacket off and said he intended to "renew the sense of can-do optimism" that had once typified the United States.

He asserted that "the American people are at sea now, they're disillusioned, they're confused, and many of them are scared."

Clinton told reporters that he was happy to be returning to New York, where he won one of his most important primary victories on April 7, defeating Jerry Brown by a relatively narrow margin after a bruising fight that featured tough questioning by reporters.

This time, Clinton said, "it will be a different campaign, one that really reaches out to the people of the state."

Asked about a television advertisement designed to revive charges that he carried on a 12-year affair with a former nightclub singer named Gennifer Flowers, he replied: "America knows everything they need to know about it. They know what my position is. It is just more sleazy Republican politics."

The advertisement, which has not yet appeared on television, was produced by Floyd G. Brown, who produced the Willie Horton commercial in 1988.

The new one, urging viewers to call a telephone number to listen to purported tapes of conversations between Clinton and Ms. Flowers, has been disavowed in strong terms by President Bush.

After their rally in Carthage, during which members of both families stood with them to symbolize the ticket's commitment to "family values," Clinton and Gore traveled to nearby Nashville to speak at the convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Perot had preceded them to the podium.

In a preacherly introduction, the organization's outgoing director, the Rev. Benjamin L. Hooks Jr., predicted that Clinton would probably be "the next president of the United States."

The probable nominee answered by telling the audience that his mother had once said, "You could be a preacher if you were just a little better boy."

"So I wound up in politics," Clinton said.

It was an important stop for him because of his frayed relations with Jackson, with whom he recently clashed sharply over a rap performer, Sister Souljah.

Some black leaders, though by no means all, have also criticized the Democratic ticket, which is composed of two white Southern Baptist men, as too narrowly based for a highly pluralistic society.

While his rivals spoke in Tennessee, Bush was at his seaside home in Kennebunkport, Maine, resting up after summit conferences in Munich and Helsinki.

Cameramen were permitted to videotape him driving onto the golf course in a cart, which many politicians here thought a curious bit of image management at a time when he is under attack for indifference to the economic plight of the middle class.

WORD: Dictionary turns page to changing U.S.

years," she said.

Lexicographers — the writers and compilers of dictionaries — felt until recently that changes in our language dictated updates every 10 to 12 years. But the pace of change is now so rapid, Soukhanov believes lexicographers must think of new editions in about half that time.

Computers have spawned much of the growth in language, but they also make tracking that growth easier. Information services that store newspapers, magazines and other publications allow researchers to hunt for a word's use in hundreds of documents in a fraction of the time it once took.

They can find that "sneaked" is preferred 7-2 as the past tense over the stigmatized form, "snuck," with authors Anne Tyler and Garrison Keillor in the minority among users of the word. They can eliminate some words as passe, such as "Dictabelt" and "Army Air Force."

Soukhanov believes computers soon will reduce by one-quarter the time and number of people required to produce a new edition of a major dictionary.

Soukhanov is watching the word "biodiversity," which "burst into general parlance during the Earth Summit." And she's keeping an eye and ear toward Ross Perot, who has stirred interest using "sound bite" as a verb and "gotcha" as a noun.

"This book is really a property book of the American people," said Soukhanov, who writes a column on language for The Atlantic Monthly. "It reflects their thoughts and beliefs and actions."

PEROT: Reference offends some in audience

(From 1A)

don't have to tell you who gets hurt first when this sort of thing happens, do I?

"You people do, your people do. I know that, you know that."

Someone in the audience yelled at Perot to protest the "you people" term, but Perot didn't hear. Two men yelled again, one saying "Correct it!," and Perot, appearing again not to hear, said simply, "Thank you, sir."

He went on, and later repeated the term. Applause from the audience was sporadic and polite and NAACP executive director Benjamin Hooks said he saw people cringe at some of Perot's wording.

Other officials from the organization, which traditionally leans toward Democratic candidates, said Perot was simply naive.

" 'You people' is not a term you use to an African-American audience," said Lacy Steele, an NAACP national board member from Bellevue, Wash. "The term 'you people' shows he is not sensitive to African-Americans. People in the audience were beginning to get very frustrated."

"He didn't understand, and to me that was the message," added Harold Sanders, president of the chapter in Tucson, Ariz.

"I don't think he's racist, he just doesn't know," said newly elected national NAACP President Rupert Richardson of Baton Rouge, La. "The 'you people' thing is definitely a no-no, but I think he just doesn't know what things turn us on, and what things turn us off."

Perot left the NAACP's convention immediately after the speech, but was asked later if he was aware that he had offended some people.

"If I did, then I'm sorry," Perot said.

As word of the incident was broadcast, CNN reported that Perot had telephoned anchorman Bernard Shaw, who is black, to say again that he was sorry if he offended anyone. The network said Perot told Shaw perhaps he should have said "our people" in his NAACP remarks. His second telephone conversation with the network was carried on the air live.

Hooks said later he planned to call Perot's campaign aides and try to explain why blacks were offended.

"It's something we all have to work on, but I don't think it's a sign of irreparable failure," Hooks said. "None of us liked that language, but we don't want to lose the emphasis of the speech over one thing. I hate to see his appearance here marred."

Still, when Hooks later introduced Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton to the group, he called him "very likely the next president of the United States."

Democratic Party Chairman Ronald Brown, speaking at a fund-raising reception in New York on Saturday night, called Perot's comments "disappointing but not surprising."

"There's nothing in Ross Perot's background to indicate he has any sensitivity to race," he said.

Some delegates to the NAACP convention said Perot appeared uncomfortable and stiff before the audience, which numbered more than 1,000. The Dallas billionaire also said he supported representation in Congress for predominately black Washington, D.C., and supported changing banking regulations to stimulate lending in inner cities.

"You have made tremendous progress in your work, but there is more to be done," Perot said. "... We will not have a great country until we get rid of hate and divisiveness."

Perot noted the impact of crime on blacks, saying, "Good and decent people all over this country, and particularly your folks, have got bars on windows." Drug use, Perot said, "is absolutely devastating to our country and absolutely devastating to you and your people."

Perot opened by saying that his remarks came from the heart and that he spoke without the help of a speech writer.

"He should have someone help him with his speech," said Hosac Sharpe, a 21-year-old student.

DOUBTS: Pendletons began to absorb, decipher 'official misinformation' weight and was down to 120 or so," Pendleton said.

Other questions regarding Erdmann's practices, including allegations that many autopsies were never performed, have surfaced since his February indictment in Hockley County.

Two month ago, Midland District Attorney Al Schorre decided to request the second autopsy in hopes of putting the issue to rest. Midland County paid all costs of the second autopsy.

"The main thing is, we were interested in trying to verify what Erdmann did," Schorre said. "Then we could get the matter behind us."

Officials exhumed the body from Resthaven Memorial Park and Mausoleum and drove it to the Southwest Institute of Forensic Science in Dallas in late June.

Results of the autopsy, performed July 1, will be available pending the completion of toxicology reports. Officials estimate that those reports probably will be concluded within the next two weeks.

The inconsistencies of Erdmann's report helped convince the Pendletons to consent to a second autopsy — with the stipulation they bring along their own pathologist to observe the examination.

"We wanted to have someone there to answer our questions. We wanted someone we could trust. We wanted to make sure it was our son," Pendleton said.

parents of two other children, an older daughter and a younger son, cite several other inaccuracies in the report.

"First, it said he was 'totally unembalmed,' but we were charged with the embalming by the funeral home," Pendleton said.

According to officials, the body only could be partially embalmed because of accelerated decomposition brought on by the hot garage and the time that had elapsed before it was found.

But the Pendletons had other questions, including concerns regarding the whereabouts of the first toxicology report that indicated high levels of carbon monoxide in the blood.

"The original autopsy report stated no blood could be taken because of the condition of the body, but then later it shows that blood work was done," Mrs. Pendleton said. "We still don't know what was actually done."

But the Pendletons first began absorbing and deciphering what they call "official misinformation" about their son's death long before the autopsy report alerted their concerns.

"We've accepted from Day 1 that it was a suicide, but we had also accepted from Day 1 that it was a gunshot that killed him," he said. "We soon learned otherwise."

The Pendletons buried their son on Sept. 3, still believing he had shot himself in the head. But the following day, while reading the newspaper, they learned

"When the sergeant came to 'officially notify us', he said our son had died of a gunshot to the head — unquestionably. And there would be no need for an autopsy," Pendleton said.

"When he told us a gunshot — it made sense. He (Sumner) had gone to kill himself and when it didn't work fast enough — he decided to use the gun, we figured," Mrs. Pendleton said. "The sergeant went to a lot of trouble to explain that it (the gunshot wound) was right under the left eye and that tests showed gunpowder on his hands. They went to a lot of trouble to construct a story for some reason."

According to the district attorney's office, the error about the cause of death probably occurred because the body had decomposed for at least 24 hours, causing blood to accumulate on the head and face.

The Pendleton's believe the Police Department should have recontacted them to retract or apologize for the false statement.

Police officials claim they did.

"They were told before the autopsy that he didn't die of a gunshot wound — and they were told by the Police Department," Sgt. B.G. Johnson said. "It was the impression of everyone at the scene that he had shot himself due to the condition of the body. They (the Pendleton family) found him. They should know it was hard to tell."

The Pendletons believe assumptions should not have been made.

gun underneath him in the car. I guess that's where the information got twisted somehow," Pendleton said. "Sumner had brought a gun (a .357-caliber pistol), but he never fired it."

And the Pendletons problems continued at the funeral home. When friends of the family tried to pay their respects to the deceased, funeral-home employees informed at least two visiting families that there would be no public viewing because "he had blown his head off."

Out of respect for the grieving parents, the friends withheld this information until about a month later.

"We weren't in any condition to hear that at the time. But when we did, it was hard to absorb — and it still is. Those sort of things shouldn't be said, especially when they're not true and especially by funeral-home employees," Mrs. Pendleton said.

The Pendletons also question why the funeral home told them to bring clothing so the body could be dressed for burial, even though it was a closed-casket ceremony. Pictures taken at the autopsy show the body unclothed in a body bag inside the casket.

Officials of the funeral home had no comment on their handling of the body and services.

Several days after the funeral, the Pendletons say they were told that Justice of the Peace Robert Pine remembered seeing bumps on their son's head, prompting the

"Before that time we had never raised doubts of foul play. When the 'bumps' were mentioned after the funeral service, we became concerned," Pendleton said.

"The district attorney told our attorney (Hal Brockett) that Judge Pine remembered seeing the bumps," Mrs. Pendleton said.

Pine remembers the events differently.

"I didn't see any bumps. I don't know why anyone asked for the autopsy and did that (disinterred the body) other than to satisfy the continuing investigation," he said. "I just signed the order."

Police told the Pendletons' attorney that the reason for the first autopsy was to investigate the possibility of trauma or injury to the head or body of Sumner Pendleton. However, Erdmann's report did not mention any entry into the scalp or skull to check for such an injury.

"We didn't even want the first autopsy. We believed he had killed himself," Mrs. Pendleton said. "We said we didn't want it done, but we were told we really didn't have a say in the matter."

"It's a shame that a person's rights can be taken away that easily," she said.

Finally, X-rays allegedly taken during the autopsy did not surface until June 18, more than nine months after the examination. The Pendletons' attorney learned that the X-rays had just been located at the Midland Police Department last September. Again, Erdmann's report did not mention X-rays being taken.

"The entire investigation on Dr. Erdmann and all of the lies helped us agree to having the second autopsy," Pendleton said. "(There are) so many doubts about nearly everything."

Regardless of the results of the second autopsy, the Pendletons are ready to put the body of their son to rest.

"We're not inhumane people. We don't like having him being reexamined," Pendleton said. "There is still a part of him in that casket — and we care about what happens to it."

Rabin hopes to meet with U.S. leaders

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister-designate Yitzhak Rabin said Saturday he hoped to meet with U.S. leaders by early August to talk about speeding up autonomy talks with the Palestinians and winning American aid for Israel.

Rabin also said he would present his left-of-center government to Parliament for approval on Monday, even though two potential coalition partners dropped out at the last minute.

He said he hoped the two factions, the right-wing Tzomet and the ultra-Orthodox United Torah Front, would join later and said he would reserve portfolios for them.

"We have to leave our options open to widen the basis of the government," Rabin told Israel television.

The hawkish Tzomet opposes Rabin's flexibility on the peace issue. The United Torah Front dropped out to protest Rabin awarding the coveted Education Ministry to the secular Meretz bloc.

Rabin wants to have as broad a coalition as possible so no party can blackmail him by threatening to quit.

Rabin's Labor party has already signed coalition agreements with the dovish Meretz bloc and the ultra-Orthodox Shas party. The three parties control 62 seats in the 120-member Parliament, and can also count on the support of two Arab and three Communist legislators.

Also Saturday, Israel radio said Shimon Peres, a former prime minister and Rabin's longtime rival in Labor, would be named foreign minister.

Rabin told Peres during a meeting Saturday he would be given a role in the autonomy talks, the report said. Last week, Rabin reportedly had offered Peres a watered-down foreign affairs portfolio without any say in the autonomy negotiations.

In the television interview, Rabin reiterated that he would try to accelerate the negotiations with the Palestinians for self-rule in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip. He has said he would seek to negotiate a deal within a year.

Asked Saturday what his first step in that direction would be, Rabin said: "I assume that by the end of the month or the beginning of next month, I will meet with the decision makers in the United States in order to examine both the extent of U.S. aid and also if it is possible to speed up the (peace) process, first and foremost with the Palestinian residents of the territories."

Rabin has expressed confidence that he can win the $10 billion in U.S. loan guarantees that Israel has requested to help accommodate immigrants. Washington denied the aid to outgoing Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir because of his refusal to freeze the construction of Jewish settlements in the occupied lands.

Rabin has pledged to curb construction, but has been vague about what limits he would set.

Polish lawmakers approve Cabinet

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Parliamentary deputies on Saturday approved the Cabinet of new Prime Minister Hanna Suchocka, ending a five-week impasse that left Poland virtually without a government.

Her 22-member Cabinet is backed by a coalition of seven parties descended from Solidarity, the trade union movement that forced the Communists from power in 1989.

The Finance Ministry and other key economic posts are held by politicians who favor pressing on with Poland's bold, market-oriented reforms.

"I am very happy that it turned out as it did," a radiant Ms. Suchocka (pronounced soo-HAHTS-kah) told state television shortly after the vote.

She was elected Friday as Poland's fifth post-Communist prime minister and the first woman to hold the post. A 46-year-old constitutional lawyer, she belongs to the centrist Democratic Union.

The vote in the Sejm, the lower house of the National Assembly, was 226-124, with 28 absentions.

The Senate vote, still to come, is seen as a formality.

Little-known before she was catapulted into the political spotlight a week ago, Ms. Suchocka has quickly developed a reputation for a no-nonsense approach. This was borne out during her short summing-up after deputies gave party statements assessing the program she presented parliament Friday.

"The difficult coalition, made up of seven parties, requires compromise in matters where compromise is possible," she said. "I assure this chamber I am ready to compromise and to make difficult decisions where compromise is impossible."

Minutes earlier she showed her mettle when proceedings seemed to stall as a right-wing nationalist party tried to block a vote on appointment of the key privatization minister.

Ms. Suchocka rose, made a terse appeal for common sense, and to resounding applause brought proceedings back on course.

Her Cabinet includes familiar and respected figures such as Krzysztof Skubiszewski, foreign minister since 1989, and Labor Minister Jacek Kuron. Most other posts were divided among the Democratic Union, Christian National Union and Liberal Democrats to correspond with their voting strengths in the Sejm.

President Lech Walesa was present throughout the session and told state TV before the vote, "I am really delighted by the prime minister. She is a very talented lady and ... we have much in common."

Even before she was chosen, Ms. Suchocka won wide respect from her colleagues for her organizational skills and for staying outside the political feuding that hobbles Poland's attempts to throw off the legacy of four decades of Communist rule.

Waldemar Pawlak, Walesa's personal choice for premier, was eliminated from consideration Friday after trying unsuccessfully for five weeks to form a government. He was not affiliated with Solidarity, and his Peasants Party once was closely tied to the despised Communists.

Walesa, revered as Solidarity's leader but the target of strong criticism as president, said Friday, "We changed governments too often. Now there is time for great stability."

Cholesterol Discovery Passes Mom's Test

WASHINGTON -- The mother of a research scientist recently lowered her cholesterol more than 20% without changing her eating habits.

After a visit to her doctor, a Florida woman learned that her cholesterol level was an elevated 308 and she was encouraged to change her eating habits. When she returned 10 weeks later, the doctor was astounded that her cholesterol level had dropped to 243. Asked if she achieved the amazing results just by dieting she replied, "No I didn't diet at all, in fact I ate the things I shouldn't eat like bacon, sausage and ice cream. The only thing I did different was take some tablets my son gave me."

The woman's son is Dr. William Morris, director of research and development at National Dietary Research, an organization that seeks nutritional solutions to health problems. Dr. Morris admits that the tablets called Vancol 5000 were designed as a dietary supplement to be used with a low fat diet plan. "She just wanted to put the tablets to the test," says Dr. Morris. "Of course I was pleased with the results she achieved, but now were working on reducing some of the fat in her diet to lower her cholesterol even further."

Vancol 5000 is a chewable food tablet that contains extracts from foods known to lower cholesterol. According to the exclusive distributor for Vancol 5000, inquiries about the new discovery are being received from all over the country and has peaked the interest of doctors used to prescribing expensive cholesterol lowering drugs. A 30 day supply of the Vancol 5000 Chloesterol Lowering Plan is only $29.98.

Quake jolts Southern California; 1 person injured

MOJAVE, Calif. (AP) — A moderate earthquake jolted Southern California Saturday, one of dozens of temblors felt since twin quakes devastated desert and mountain communities nearly two weeks ago. It caused slight damage and minor injuries to one person, authorities said.

The quake's magnitude was estimated at 5.1 on the Richter scale, said Tom Heaton, a seismologist with the U.S. Geological Survey in Pasadena. It struck at 11:14 a.m. and was centered 12 miles north-northeast of the desert community of Mojave, about 90 miles north of Los Angeles.

"It was really strong," said Michelle Leftwich, bartender at Reno's Restaurant in Mojave. "In the bar, the glasses went crazy."

The quake was felt in downtown Los Angeles, where authorities rolled out fire engines to make a routine post-quake inspection of neighborhoods.

The quake wasn't in the aftershock zones for either the magnitude-7.4 Landers or the magnitude-6.5 Big Bear quakes that struck June 28, said Heaton.

However, he noted that those quakes triggered other temblors hundreds of miles away. He said Saturday's quake probably was in some way related to the earlier jolts.

The June 28 quakes killed one child, injured hundreds and caused more than $90 million in damage. There have been hundreds of aftershocks, at least a dozen of which were magnitude 5.0 or greater.

In Saturday's temblor, one man in the Norwalk area sustained minor injuries when he fell during Saturday's temblor while walking on a rain-slickened sidewalk, Los Angeles County fire dispatch supervisor Steve Riddell said.

The quake caused minor wall cracks and knocked books, dishes and pictures off shelves in California City, about 15 miles east of Mojave, but there were no reports of major damage.

The quake hit in the nearby town of Quartz Hill when Joanie's Coffee Shop was full with 40 customers.

"We were full up and when it happened everybody just stopped what they were doing and stared," said owner Joanie Woolworth. "But as soon as the shaking was over, everybody just went back to eating except for one couple that was really shook up and left."

Heaton said the quake occurred near, but not on, the Garlock Fault. The Garlock is one of California's most dangerous faults, running from the southern San Joaquin Valley east to Death Valley. Scientists have said it is capable of producing major quakes of more than 7.0 in magnitude.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude.

Bush avoids further political damage on last overseas trip

By Terence Hunt
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — After an aggressive trade trip to Asia and a go-it-alone stand at the Earth Summit in Brazil, President Bush almost became an invisible man when world leaders gathered first in Munich and then in Helsinki last week.

Bush suffered personal embarrassment and political beatings in Asia and Brazil. This time, facing an increasingly tough battle for re-election, the president appeared determined to avoid any more damage in Germany and Finland.

Bush went along with broadly worded communiques at the Munich economic summit of industrialized nations and the Helsinki gathering of 51 leaders for the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

Yet, nothing from either meeting carried an imprint of leadership from George Bush.

Though he was the most powerful leader at both meetings, he seemingly made no demands of his partners and did not attempt to bend them to compromise. Instead, he kept his head down and played it safe.

At home, Ross Perot and Bill Clinton played along, acting as if they didn't know that Bush were overseas.

■ An Analysis

Of course, the president knew in advance that the Munich summit would fail to produce a long-sought agreement to revamp the world's trading system and that it would offer only vague promises for world growth even though global economies are struggling.

Investing little energy in its outcome, Bush hardly could be blamed for its failure.

In Helsinki, the results also were sparse.

The leaders failed to take a strong stand on the Balkan crisis, merely expressing "dismay" at the bloodshed that has claimed many thousands of lives. Russia blocked stronger language.

In a largely symbolic gesture, the United States and Western Europe agreed to send ships off Yugoslavia to monitor observance with U.N. sanctions. It was a far cry from the naval blockade that had been contemplated.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III said the United States did not want to get trapped in a "quagmire" — a buzzword from the Vietnam era.

And Bush stressed that the United States was not trying to settle the bitter ethnic dispute.

"I think people are reluctant to get bogged down in ... guerrilla warfare," Bush explained Friday. He said the U.S.'s chief responsibility was providing humanitarian relief.

He said there was "reluctance on the part of people to go storming into a situation that is very complicated from a military standpoint. And also we think diplomatic pressure, sanctions, and humanitarian relief is the answer right now."

Like Bush, all of the leaders in Munich were politically weak and their economies were feeble. Bush was strapped by a staggering budget deficit that limits his hand. And with the collapse of the Soviet Union and the end of its military threat, European leaders are looking for ways to assert their own independence.

It was almost preordained that not much would result last week.

French President Francois Mitterrand, always prickly toward the United States, refused to go along with British efforts for a compromise on farm subsidies that are at the heart of the trade impasse.

U.S. officials said Mitterrand was fearful of offending the politically powerful farm bloc as he approaches a crucial vote in France on European political and monetary union.

"We are the sole remaining superpower," Bush said after the Munich meeting. And yet, "That doesn't mean that the way you lead is to dictate."

Protesters rally in New York City

NEW YORK (AP) — The Democrats weren't all in town yet, but demonstrators held rallies around town Saturday to publicize their messages about abortion and the homeless. Three people were arrested in one protest.

Several hundred abortion-rights advocates — shouting "New York is proud of choice! Welcome to the city!" — gathered at a midtown women's clinic to prevent anti-abortion protesters from blocking the doors.

Only about 30 members of the anti-abortion group Operation Rescue showed up, and they stayed within police barricades set up 15 feet from the clinic doors. There were no arrests.

But later three anti-abortion demonstrators were arrested and charged with criminal trespass after they entered an Upper East Side clinic and chained themselves to each other, said Sgt. Ed Burns, a police spokesman.

Eight Operation Rescue protesters and about 150 abortion-rights advocates held counter demonstrations at the Manhattan East Medical Office, Burns said.

And Randall Terry, founder of Operation Rescue, held a prayer vigil at the Eastern Women's Center.

Elsewhere in the city, about 40 people rallied at Union Square and marched up Fifth Avenue to the Great Lawn in Central Park on behalf of public support for homeless children in the city.

"We want to tell everyone here and attending the Democratic Convention that this is a serious event and we won't stop until there are investments in housing for homeless children," said Mike Harris, director of a coalition of groups calling itself The Alliance for the Homeless.

The marchers held up signs that read: "Pray for Homeless Children" and "Homeless Children Need Education and Housing."

42 parties to welcome Democratic delegates

By Judie Glave
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Sea lions are co-hosting the bash for Washington state delegates. American Samoans will dine amid miniature palm trees made of lox. And Texans will step back to the Swing Era.

New York is out to prove it knows how to party.

The 56 delegations to the Democratic National Convention will be feted today at 42 welcoming parties in locations from Staten Island to the Bronx.

Mayor David Dinkins plans to stop by each shindig. But if your invitation is permanently "in the mail," here's a look at what you'll miss:

■ Smallest party: The American Samoa and Guam delegations, with 12 delegates apiece, are invited to a garden dinner at writer and producer Christopher Cerf's Manhattan brownstone. Dinner for 100.

Cerf and his partner, Henry Beard, a founding editor of the National Lampoon, promise a party featuring Guam drops, S'amoars and palm trees sculpted from lox. The band will play "Pongo, Pongo," to the tune of "New York, New York."

■ Largest party: A tie between the New York and California soirees. New Yorkers will gather at a converted bread factory — the Silvercup Studios in Queens. International flags will hang from the rafters and guests will dine on food from around the world. Host Delta Airlines issued 1,500 invitations.

California's 440 delegates and another 1,000 guests will sample New York's ethnic diversity under the vaulted ceilings of Macy's flagship store at Herald Square. Deli food, Chinese food, "soul food," and more.

■ Best blast: A close call between the Texas and Idaho parties.

The Texas fete will feature the all-woman, 12-piece Kit McClure swing band; 520 feet of yellow bunting and roses; and cast members of the Broadway show "Most Happy Fella" singing "Big D" (Dallas). They'll gather at the stately New York State Theater at Lincoln Center.

"We're going to focus on partying not politics," promised Nina Eshoo, party planner for host Barnes & Noble.

Jim Lebenthal, of the investment brokerage company Lebenthal & Co. Inc., has similar hopes for the Idaho bash at the Village Gate jazz club in Greenwich Village.

"We're not serving tea sandwiches with punch and Mountain Dew," Lebenthal said. "We're going to have top-of-the-line booze, food that you don't have to lift your pinky high off the bone to devour and good, hearty music" — provided by a band called "Filthy Rich."

Lebenthal picked the Idaho delegation in honor of his wife, Jacqueline, who comes from Twin Falls.

■ Odd bashes: The American Stock Exchange will take Oklahoma delegates back in time on the floor of the exchange with scenes of "Old Wall Street," complete with top hats, canes and old New York show tunes.

If it's a carnival atmosphere delegates crave, the Utah and Vermont contingents will find it on the stage of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, which will turn into the Coney Island boardwalk for the night.

The carnival will feature street performers, fortune tellers, carny games and those silly cardboard cutouts where you poke your head through a hole, and voila, you're a mermaid. The food: Brooklyn fare like Nathan's hot dogs, egg creams, lager beer and Junior's cheesecake.

■ Strangest co-hosts: Washington state delegates will be co-hosted by sea lions at the Central Park Zoo with Consolidated Edison footing the bill.

Guests will dine in a tent next to the sea lion pool, sampling seafood from the Fulton Fish Market, hot dogs, popcorn and knishes, which, quipped Con Ed spokeswoman Martha Liipfert, "are probably not known in Washington."

Navy: Sex scandal investigator disciplined

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Navy investigator who was suspended for alleged overtures to a women involved in the Tailhook sex scandal was disciplined a year earlier for abusing his authority, the service said Saturday.

Naval Investigative Service Agent Laney S. Spigener had been separated from his wife and was romatically involved with a female civilian while assigned to a Marine installation near Beaufort, S.C., said a Navy spokesman, Lt. Cmdr. Bill Hendrix.

A Navy source, who requested anonymity, said the woman was the wife of an enlisted Marine.

When another woman attempted to publicize the relationship, Spigener verbally confronted her.

Spigener was suspended for seven days without pay for "unauthorized use of the authority of his position," Hendrix said.

The Washington Post, which reported the incident in Saturday's editions, said Spigener also was transferred to the local NIS office at the Washington Navy Yard.

Last fall, Spigener was assigned to investigate charges from one of the 26 women involved in the Tailhook incident. The women — half of them Navy officers — said they were fondled and disrobed while being pushed down a gantlet of drunken aviators in a Las Vegas hotel hallway.

Navy investigators found that officers closed ranks and impeded their inquiry into the incident. The Defense Department's inspector general's office is conducting its own probe.

Lt. Paula Coughlin, one of the victims, alleged that Spigener pressured her to date him and called her "Sweet Cakes" while she was reviewing photographs of Navy and Marine aviators to identify those who had assaulted her.

Navy spokesman, Cmdr. Mark Van Dyke, said Thursday that the NIS removed Spigener from the case and reassigned him to other duties after Coughlin filed her complaint last November. The agent subsequently was suspended without pay for three days.

Van Dyke said the agent made "no apparent attempt to demean, threaten or harass Lt. Coughlin. His conduct was considered to be a matter of poor judgment in that the agent attempted to establish a relationship deemed to be improper with a victim."

Revenge is possible motive in Reso killing, FBI says

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Arthur D. Seale, charged with kidnapping and killing Exxon International Co. president Sidney J. Reso, may have been motivated by revenge against the company for his 1987 firing, an FBI spokesman said Saturday.

"That's certainly one of the motives we're looking at as to why Exxon was chosen," said Bill Tonkin, a spokesman for the FBI in Newark.

Until now, authorities portrayed Seale and his wife, Irene Jacqueline, as desperate fortune-hunters motivated by greed. The Seales were unemployed and living at his parents' home in Lebanon Township when the crime occurred.

But Tonkin cautioned that any theories about Seale's motivation must be "characterized as speculation at this point."

Tonkin, however, confirmed an account in today's early editions of The Philadelphia Inquirer saying the former Hillside police officer also seemed to strongly resent the FBI because some former agents were promoted over him at Exxon's security division.

Seale began working for Exxon as a chauffeur in New York City in 1976, was promoted to a security position in Florham Park and then fired after several conflicts with colleagues, the FBI said.

The newspaper, quoting unnamed FBI sources, said a review of what the agency called Seale's written ransom demands seeking $18.5 million from the company betrayed a profound animosity toward Exxon, which is based in Irving, Texas, and the FBI.

"There is some basis to the statement that Seale did not like law enforcement and the FBI," Tonkin said. "That is something we're trying to define."

Seale evidently used phones at Exxon service stations to place many of his ransom calls to authorities, the FBI told the newspaper.

The 57-year-old Reso, who had a heart ailment, died May 3 inside a dingy, poorly ventilated storage facility in Warren County just four days after he was abducted from his $650,000 home in affluent Morris Township.

Reso was shot in the arm during a brief struggle in the Seales' van in the initial moments of the abduction. He was bound, gagged and placed in a coffin-like wooden box where the temperature reached 100 degrees, the FBI said.

Reso's body was found June 27 in a shallow grave in the Pine Barrens. Irene Seale directed authorities there after agreeing to cooperate. She later pleaded guilty to extortion and conspiracy.

Tonkin also confirmed that Seale could have selected Reso as his target because of where the executive lived and not because of who he was.

"It's accurate that that place had been reconnoitered, surveilled," Tonkin said. "It lent itself because the houses are far apart ... it's a cul-de-sac with low traffic volume."

Priest bans state from church

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A priest who says the separation of church and state cuts both ways is barring state emblems and prayers for officials from his church in retaliation for a U.S. Supreme Court ban on commencement prayers.

The Rev. Edward Mullen, pastor of St. Edward Catholic Church, told parishioners he would not allow flags, patriotic songs or prayers for public officials at the church.

By ruling last month that prayers at commencement exercises were unconstitutional, the court declared "God is not welcome on public property or in public events," Mullen said.

"Well, if God is not welcome on public turf, neither is the state welcome on church turf. This separation cuts both ways," Mullen said.

Bronze casts of Lincoln's head missing from museum

CHICAGO (AP) — Rare bronze casts of Abraham Lincoln's head and hands by Augustus Saint-Gaudens were stolen, and police and museum officials said Saturday they suspected the theft was an inside job.

"In theory, we just don't know how anyone could have gotten in and done this since the house was closed to the public at the time" and security alarms weren't tripped, said Carol Callahan, curator of the Glessner House Museum on the city's South Side.

Callahan on Saturday wouldn't give the value of the set, though she previously estimated it in the tens of thousands of dollars. The set was insured, she said.

Police questioned everyone who was in the museum Thursday but no charges have been filed, police Sgt. Kenneth Januszyk said.

"We have no evidence that anyone actually forced their way in," Januszyk said. "We have to assume that if it was a burglary, someone had to have a key."

The sculpture, made from a plaster cast taken of Lincoln shortly after he was elected president, was last seen an hour before the museum closed Thursday. It was discovered missing early Friday by a guide making rounds before the museum opened, Callahan said.

"She actually encountered me in the hall and asked me if I had moved the sculpture," Callahan said. "At that point, I had the horrible feeling that something was wrong."

The tightly guarded museum has an electronic security system, and visitors must phone from the front door to be escorted in. They are also escorted out when they leave. The sculpture was displayed on a desk behind ropes.

Callahan said no tours were conducted Thursday; the only people at the museum that day were officials of the Chicago Architecture Foundation, which owns and administers Glessner House, and office delivery workers, she said.

Saint-Gaudens, an Irish-born American sculptor famed for his memorial statues, made the bronzes in 1886 from plaster casts taken of the president-elect in 1860, Callahan said. Of 33 bronze casts made, only 17 are known still to exist, she said.

The museum acquired its set in 1968 from the granddaughter of John Jacob Glessner, for whom the museum is named.

"To this museum, it is irreplaceable," Callahan said. "It is Mr. Glessner's own copy. It was cast in 1860 from Lincoln's living face. It was not a death mask."

John Engman, executive director of the foundation, said the piece likely would be hard to sell.

"It's not easily marketable because it's so well known," Engman said. "We'd just like it returned, no questions asked."

Boy might not be able to testify in front of his parents, doctor says

FORT WORTH (AP) — A psychologist says the 12-year-old brother of a boy who was starved to death might not be able to testify in the upcoming trial of his parents.

Psychologist William Ratliff testified Friday in the pretrial hearing for Jay and Linda Hill of White Settlement.

The two are charged with injury to a child in the starvation death of their 13-year-old son, Stephen. The parents also are charged with murder and kidnapping in Stephen's death.

The boy, who was found chained and starving in the family's home last Nov. 3, went into a coma and never regained consciousness. When he died in a hospital on Nov. 16, he weighed only 55 pounds.

Officials said Stephen's brother, Douglas, also was underweight when he was found, but he was in good condition. He has been in state custody since Stephen's death.

During Friday's hearing to determine whether Douglas would be forced to testify, Ratliff said he doubted whether the boy would be able to speak if he were in the courtroom with his parents.

In counseling sessions, Douglas frequently is "overcome with emotion" and curls up in an "almost fetal position," Ratliff said.

"That's all he can do for a while, is just sob profusely," Ratliff said.

The doctor, who has counseled Douglas almost weekly since January, said the boy could suffer an emotional setback if he were to face his parents.

"It is my opinion that he cannot, without dire consequences," Ratliff said.

Prosecutors have asked state District Judge Bill Burdock to allow the boy to testify via closed-circuit television. The judge said he wouldn't rule on that request until a decision is made on whether to move the trial from Tarrant County.

Defense attorneys, who have requested a change of venue, contend that extensive publicity about the case will make it impossible for the Hills to get a fair trial in Fort Worth.

The couple, who could receive life sentences if convicted, are being held in the Tarrant County Jail in lieu of $300,000 bail each.

Low-skill jobs increase the most, TEC says

DALLAS (AP) — Lower-skilled, low-paying jobs proliferated in Texas during the 1980s, and the quality of the state's job growth should cause concern, the Texas employment commissioner says.

"Our economic prosperity is tied to the jobs Texans hold," said Texas Employment Commissioner Mary Scott Nabers.

The occupation adding the most jobs in Texas during the last decade, according to TEC information, was janitor-cleaner. As higher-paying manufacturing and mining jobs were replaced by service jobs, real income in the state declined.

"That's purchasing power. That's your customer," Ms. Nabers told a group of business leaders during a breakfast Friday in Dallas.

Between 1980 and 1990, Texas' total labor force grew by 25 percent. That compares with 46 percent in the previous 10 years.

Despite the slower growth, there were 1.2 million jobs created in Texas during the '80s. The quality of those jobs should send a startling message, said Mark Hughes, TEC's director of economic research.

Janitors, maids and cleaners led the list of most new jobs, followed by cashiers, secretaries, food preparation workers, registered nurses, cooks, waiters and waitresses, secondary school teachers, general managers, elementary school teachers, and nursing orderlies and aides.

Occupations that lost the most jobs were in the manufacturing sector and included sewing machine operators, roustabouts, carpenters, machinists, carpenters helpers and construction supervisors.

"A large portion of the job growth came in occupations we would call less-skilled," Hughes said.

The new jobs are also less well paid. For 1990, the average weekly wage in manufacturing or goods-producing was $540. It was $406 in service and $240 in retail, another fast-growing sector.

Real wages fell 5 percent in Texas between 1984 and 1990.

To differentiate itself in economic development, Texas should start with its youth, said Bob Gholson, IBM consultant for economic development. Instead, with a high dropout rate and a relatively poor record on infant health, Texas' youth is "self-destructing," he said.

"Who is managing the human capital?" he asked.

Ms. Nabers said the long-term job and education trends need to be reversed or "it doesn't matter whether this recession is going away — we're still going to have some real problems here."

Police arrest jogger who ran in street

ARLINGTON (AP) — An avid marathoner didn't know she was running afoul of the law when she chose to use the street rather than the sidewalk for her training.

Henri Salazar now faces a court date Aug. 17 after being ticketed and subsequently taken to jail for running in the street.

Police say Ms. Salazar violated a state law by running in a street that had a sidewalk. She was taken to jail because she continued to run in the street after being warned by a patrol officer, police said.

Ms. Salazar, 37, said she did not know such a law existed. Police say it's meant to keep runners from impeding traffic and getting hurt.

"I've run in Dallas, Fort Worth, Irving, and I've never been stopped anywhere, except for here," said Ms. Salazar, an unemployed waitress.

Ms. Salazar, a runner for 10 years who is training for a marathon in November, was cited June 22.

A patrol officer pulled up, wrote her a ticket, and told her not to do it again, Ms. Salazar said.

After getting the ticket, Ms. Salazar said, she started jogging on the sidewalk but zipped into the street to avoid an elderly man approaching on the sidewalk.

That's when the same patrol officer stopped her again. Ms. Salazar said she was handcuffed and taken to jail, fingerprinted and left in a cell for 90 minutes until a friend bailed her out.

Deion deadline

SUWANEE, Ga. (AP) — The Atlanta Falcons, trying desperately to coax Deion Sanders out of his baseball uniform and into shorts for the start of training camp, have extended the deadline of their $800,000 bonus offer to August 1.

The Falcons, who lost safety Brian Jordan when he signed a multimillion dollar, baseball-only contract with the St. Louis Cardinals earlier this summer, apparently fear that Sanders will opt to stay with the Atlanta Braves as long as they remain contenders in the National League West.

Long considered a raw but promising baseball talent, Sanders has blossomed this season as a sometimes starting outfielder for the Braves. Through Friday night's games, he was batting .315 and had a major league-leading 11 triples.

Two weeks ago the Falcons offered Sanders $1 million to report for the start of pre-training "concentration camp" on Monday, or $800,000 to be there for the first day of regular workouts on July 25.

Sanders, in Chicago for a weekend series between the Braves and Cubs, told Falcons officials he would "be uncomfortable if he didn't honor his baseball contract," according to Taylor Smith, the Falcons' president.

Austin in HOF

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Two-time U.S. Open champion Tracy Austin, renowned for her success at an early age, Saturday became the youngest player ever to be inducted into the International Tennis Hall of Fame.

In 1979, Austin became the youngest player ever to win a U.S. Open title. Only 16, she defeated Chris Evert.

Two years later, she won her second U.S. Open, beating Martina Navratilova.

All-Star scoring sparse

■ CBS' miniature camera inside first base might be safer at home plate, where recently few All-Star baserunners have ventured.

Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — Tune in Tuesday night to the All-Star game and you'll see baseball from a neat, new perspective, thanks to a camera that CBS plans to install inside first base.

Needless to say, after paying thousands of dollars for the lipstick-sized lens, CBS does not want to get its gadget broken. That being the case, maybe the network should mount it someplace where it won't get stepped on too often, someplace like, say, home plate.

The reasons are plenty, but the result is always the same — no one ever scores anymore.

Fact: In the last six All-Star games, the National Leaguers have gotten a grand total of 10 runs. In that time, they've hit one measly home run.

Fact: In the last eight All-Star games, only once has the loser scored more than two runs. In that span, only twice has a team gotten as many as 10 hits.

It's too bad, too. Because as thrilling as it is to witness a tense pitching duel on a September afternoon, watching Roger Clemens match zeros with Jack Morris, it's just no fun to see that on a hot summer night when Mark McGwire, Barry Bonds, Kirby Puckett and Ryne Sandberg are all in attendance.

Why has the NBA All-Star game become so popular? Because Michael Jordan & Co. put on a pointfest. Why has even the NHL All-Star game become entertaining? Because Mario Lemieux and friends put the puck in the net like crazy.

Just think, what was the highlight of last year's All-Star game in Toronto? Not the game, but what happened the day before, when Cal Ripken put on a power show in the home run derby.

And, in the last few years, what's the one — and maybe only — truly memorable moment in All-Star play? The time Bo Jackson led off the 1989 game with a monster shot over the center field fence, of course.

There's certainly nothing magical in seeing Rick Aguilera strike out Paul O'Neill or watching Dennis Martinez get Sandy Alomar Jr. on a grounder. But, more and more, that's what the games have become. And, in this case, no runs equals no excitement.

U.S. should dominate in Barcelona

By Steve Wilstein
AP Sports Writer

BARCELONA, Spain — This time, there are no excuses, no blaming inexperience, lack of money, decrepit gyms, ruthlessly efficient communist sports factories.

This time, the oldest, richest, best-trained and deepest U.S. Olympic team in history is going to the Summer Games amid a shifting political landscape, with every expectation of regaining world dominance in sports.

This time the playing field is level, as U.S. Olympic Committee vice president George Steinbrenner puts it, or tilted in America's favor, as other nations see it.

In short, Spain's fiesta is looking like America's picnic.

And not just in basketball, where the zillionaire Dream Team is poised to bully the world and turn the second half of their games into garbage time. That prospect of overkill worries NBC, which could blow more than $300 million on the Games between its regular broadcasts, its pay-TV fiasco and lost revenues from promotional costs.

In track, swimming, volleyball, wrestling, you name it, the USOC pumped

Laoretti tops Seniors field

■ David Stockton loses the lead in the U.S. Senior Open with a round of 77 Saturday.

Associated Press

BETHLEHEM, Pa. — Larry Laoretti picked a good time to lead a tournament for the first time.

The cigar-chomping Laoretti snatched the lead after 54 holes of the U.S. Senior Open on Saturday as second-round leader Dave Stockton collapsed with five bogeys in a seven-hole stretch.

Laoretti, who started the third round seven strokes behind Stockton, shot a 4-under 67 to lead the field by one stroke with a 6-under 207. Stockton fell apart with a 6-over 77 and an overall 210.

Laoretti rolled in five birdie putts and only once lost a stroke to par as the leaders emulated the mass retreat

Frenchmen continue dominance

France's Pascal Lino, the overall leader of the Tour de France, waves a European Community flag as he crosses the Belgian-Dutch border in Masstricht with a pack of other riders Saturday.

Associated Press

VALKENBOURG, Netherlands — French cyclists continued to dominate the Tour de France on Saturday, as Gilles Delion became the second Frenchman in a row to win a stage and Pascal Lion retained the overall lead through seven stages.

Meanwhile, the favorites and former winners continued to jockey for positions leading up to Monday's important 41-mile time trial in Luxembourg.

Sunday, the Tour goes to Germany for a stage that finishes at Koblenz, 128 miles away.

Saturday was Stephen Roche's turn to gain on the field, just as Greg LeMond and Claudio Chiappucci did Friday.

Roche gained more than a minute on the other contenders and was making his best showing since winning the Tour de France-Tour of Italy-World Championship triple in 1987.

He was in fourth place, 4 minutes, 11 seconds, behind Lino.

Lino held the lead for the fifth consecutive day, with Steve Bauer of Canada second, 3:11 back, and Chiappucci third, 3:34 behind.

LeMond remained 4:29 back, but dropped one place to sixth. He was still ahead of Gianni Bugno and Miguel Indurain.

Roche was second to Delion after a strong finish in the 123-mile trek from Brussels, Belgium, to Valkenbourg.

Since winning the race five years ago, Roche has been plagued by injuries, and bounced from team to team. This year, he is part of the Carrera team, which also has Chiappucci.

Roche started the day in eighth place overall.

Angels' Abbott strains left rib cage

N.Y. Times News Service

DETROIT — As if 11 personal losses and 52 club losses weren't depressing enough, California Angels left-hander Jim Abbott added a little more misery to an already distasteful season Saturday afternoon.

In the fourth inning of his start against the Detroit Tigers — a game the Angels won, 2-1, at Tiger Stadium — Abbott reached for a ground ball through the box and strained his lower right rib cage.

He made one more pitch and removed himself from the game.

Abbott said he did not know exactly how he got hurt, but the last thing to happen before it was Mark Carreon's run-scoring single and a lunge by Abbott to his backhand side.

Trainers and coaches watched several warmup pitches by Abbott, who then indicated he could resume. However, on ball one to Skeeter Barnes, Abbott stepped from the mound and waved them back.

Afterward, Abbott wore a brace and said his ribs hurt constantly, even while breathing. There was no prognosis, although interim manager John Wathan said it may be longer than a week-and-a-half before Abbott could pitch again.

"We'll see if he can pitch in about 10 days," Wathan said.

Out-of-court settlement a possibility in trial recess

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Attorneys in the NFL antitrust trial have mixed feelings about coming to an out-of-court settlement during a two-week recess in the case.

After four weeks of arguments and testimony, one dismissed juror, three failed mistrial motions and pages of unflattering financial data, the owners say their position has not changed: they don't want to be in court.

"We've always maintained that these issues are best resolved between the league and the players, not by a jury in a courtroom," NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said.

But no meetings are scheduled during the hiatus, which began Thursday when New Orleans Saints quarterback Bobby Hebert finished testifying. The trial is scheduled to resume July 27.

"There are no talks scheduled, but it could happen instantaneously with one phone call," Aiello said.

Attorneys for the eight players who are suing the league are dubious about the possibility of an out-of-court settlement.

"Given the history of this thing, I'm not optimistic," said Jim Quinn, lead attorney for the players. "They (the owners) have never been people who settle. They have to be told to settle."

Judge David Doty reminded the eight-woman jury to keep an open mind for the next two weeks. The players have one witness left to call, an economist who's an expert in antitrust damages, before the owners get their chance.

The players' attorneys estimate the trial will last four more weeks after it resumes. Depending on the length of jury deliberations, that would finish things up in late August, well into the NFL preseason.

Hopes for a quick-paced second half of the trial faded after the NFL produced its witness list, which includes 25 names.

Included as a potential witness for the league is Toronto pitcher Jack Morris, who left the hometown Minnesota Twins as a free agent last year.

Miami coach Don Shula, NFL assistant coach Joe Greene and former Steelers coach Chuck Noll are on the list. Also expected to testify are owners Patrick Bowlen of Denver, Al Davis of the Los Angeles Raiders and Dan Rooney of Pittsburgh.

The suit is an outgrowth of the 1987 players' strike, which left the league without a collective bargaining agreement and eventually forced the NFL Players Association to abandon collective bargaining in favor of a court-oriented strategy.

The plaintiffs are Freeman McNeil of the New York Jets, Dave Richards of the San Diego Chargers, Don Majkowski of the Green Bay Packers, Mark Collins of the New York Giants, Frank Minnifield of the Cleveland Browns, former Giant and Brown Lee Rouson, who is now retired, Niko Noga of the Los Angeles Raiders, and Tim McDonald of the Phoenix Cardinals. All were free agents in 1990 but were protected under Plan B.

The Plan B system, which began in February 1989, allows each team to retain limited rights to 37 of its 50 to 60 players each season. A protected player is unable to sign with other teams without giving his old team the first chance to sign him or forcing his new club to compensate his old club if he goes elsewhere.

The unprotected players become Plan B free agents for two months.

Stormin' Norman, Retton honor U.S. Olympians

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — About 50 U.S. Olympians were guests of honor for a star-spangled send-off gala Saturday featuring pep talks from retired Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf and gymnastics gold medalist Mary Lou Retton.

"Win, lose or draw, be proud to be an American and we'll be proud that you're our team," Schwarzkopf said in a speech at the Gold Medal Celebration dinner, a fund-raiser for the Olympic team.

The dinner was held in the 16-day period during which many of the athletes were passing through on the way to Barcelona, where the Olympics begin on July 25.

Schwarzkopf, commander of American troops in the Persian Gulf war, said the important thing for the athletes was pride, not winning.

"Because we are admired and envied by so many people in the world, you are going to be under special scrutiny. They will be looking to you based on your actions in victory or defeat," Schwarzkopf, a Tampa resident, said. "What we want is for you to be proud of yourselves."

Some 1,000 guests paid $250 a plate to dine on steak, lobster and wine.

LPGA Phar-Mor in three-way tie

Associated Press

VIENNA, Ohio — Meg Mallon solved her putting problems by sinking an 87-yard eagle that helped her tie Betsy King and Katie Peterson-Parker for the second-round lead Saturday in the LPGA Phar-Mor in Youngstown.

King, Mallon and Peterson-Parker were at 6-under-par 138 on the 6,297-yard Squaw Creek Country Club course, one shot ahead of a logjam of five golfers at 139, including Beth Daniel and first-round leader Denise Baldwin.

Also at 139 were Donna Andrews, Rosie Jones and Dottie Mochrie.

Nancy Lopez, still seeking her first win of the year, was tied with Brandie Burton at 4-under 140, two strokes from the lead.

"It's pretty much a shootout," King said.

King shot a 67 that included a flurry of five birdies in six holes. She finished early in the afternoon and said she doubted her two-day total of 6-under would merit a share of the lead heading into Sunday's final 18 holes.

But no one got past 6-under at any point in the afternoon, and only Mallon, with a 69, and Peterson-Parker, 68, were able to keep up with King. Peterson-Parker, like Mallon, used an eagle to get her round back on track.

Mallon won four events last year but hasn't finished higher than second in 1992. She was one stroke off the lead heading into the final round of last week's Jamie Farr Toledo Classic before a double bogey on No. 18 dropped her to eighth place.

"That was very disappointing," she said. "I haven't had that bad a back nine holes in a long time. I sat in the fairway and couldn't decide on a club. That's always a bad situation."

Her eagle Saturday came on the par-5 17th hole — the eighth hole of her round, because she started on the back nine. She had only pars and a bogey to show for the previous seven holes.

"I got to 17 wondering what I was going to do about my putting," she said. "Well, I figured it out on 17. I hit it in from the fairway with a pitching wedge."

Peterson-Parker eagled the 453-yard, par-5 fourth hole, reaching the green in two and sinking a 6-foot putt.

"I'm just happy to be in this position and to get the experience," said Peterson-Parker, a second-year LPGA player. "They say the more times you're here, the better you're going to handle it."

On Friday, rain suspended play with 52 golfers still on the course. They finished their first rounds Saturday morning, which led to some confusion about tee times because the second round began while the first round was being completed.

Andrews was still in bed at her hotel minutes before she was due to begin.

"I got a call at 8:30 this morning telling me I was on the tee in 10 minutes," she said.

Dougherty catches Hatalsky in Busch Classic

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — One member of the PGA Tour's fortysomething crowd put it into neutral in the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic, and another roared right past him.

Ed Dougherty, still winless but plugging away at age 44, shot a 5-under-par 66 in Saturday's third round to overtake 40-year-old Morris Hatalsky.

"It's not foreign territory," Dougherty said of his front-running status. "Sure, I'd like it to happen more often, but when it does happen, I'm thrilled."

With a strong start and a better finish, Dougherty wound up with six birdies and a lone bogey to complete three tours of Kingsmill Golf Club at 12-under 201.

Eleven players were within five shots of him heading into Sunday's final round of the $1.1 million event.

"It's not hard if you say it fast," Dougherty said, "but all you have to do is shoot the low round tomorrow."

David Peoples had a chance for a share of the lead, but pulled his tee shot on the par-4 18th down a hill and into the left rough and made a bogey. He wound up with a 67 for a 202 total.

Hatalsky, who needed just 46 putts in the first two rounds, including 27 one-putt greens, couldn't find the magic Saturday.

He had two birdies and three bogeys in a 1-over 72 that left him at 203, joined by Bill Britton and Bruce Lietzke. Britton had a 64 and Lietzke, complaining of back troubles, carded a 68.

"It was just not there today," said Hatalsky, who had led after each of the first two rounds. "The good news is I struggled, played not so hot, and I still have a chance to win this tournament."

"It's pretty much a crap shoot now," said Britton, whose 64 was the day's low round.

Jim Gallagher Jr. was alone at 204 after a 68.

At 8-under 205 were Kingsmill resident Curtis Strange, Keith Clearwater, P.H. Horgan III, Frank Conner and Peter Persons. Clearwater and Horgan had 66s, Strange a 67, Conner a 69 and Persons, who began the day in second, three shots back, struggled to a 71.

Tom Lehman, the top money winner on last year's Hogan Tour, was alone at 206 after a 71.

SENIORS: Laoretti celebrates 53rd birthday with lead of last month's U.S. Open at Pebble Beach.

It seemed like the only mistake Laoretti made was misjudging the length of his cigar. Ashes fluttered in the air when he tried to put his hat back on after tipping it to spectators following his final putt.

"I started smoking when I was 17 in the Navy on Guam and I've been smoking ever since," he said.

He said he goes through six or seven a round, but because of a cold had only four on Saturday. He's treating the cold "with pills and some good Italian red wine."

A club pro, Laoretti never played on the PGA tour. He joined the Senior group in 1989, and is yet to win in 81 starts. He celebrated his 53rd birthday Saturday with the lead in the Senior Open.

Al Geiberger shot a 71 to take the runnerup spot with a 5-under 208. Gibby Gilbert was another stroke back at 209 after a 73, snapping at eight his string of sub-70 rounds.

Then came Stockton, Gary Player and Jim Colbert at 210. Player shot 71 and Colbert 73. Charles Coody was at 211 after a 73.

Stockton, who slipped from 9-under to 3-under, was joined by Gilbert, South African Simon Hobday defending champion Jack Nicklaus and Lee Trevino, all victims of the tricky, undulating greens on the 6,700 yard Saucon Valley Country club course.

Nicklaus started the day 4-under, but dropped to even par after a 75 that included five bogeys. Hobday, who began the third round 5-under, also fell to even par after a 76 and Trevino shot a 76 to fall nine strokes off the pace at 216.

Stockton's blowup was similar to that of Gil Morgan last month in the U.S. Open, when he blew all but one shot of a seven-stroke lead after the seventh hole of the third round.

Laoretti was the only player among the leaders to improve his play over the second round, and he had an explanation. "It was not their birthday. It was my birthday."

Laoretti, who plays every shot with the cigar dangling from his mouth, birdied the first hole with a 12-foot putt, rolled in a 12-footer at the fifth and a 14-footer on the sixth to make the turn in 3-under 33. On the back, he made his only bogey when he hit over the green on 11 and missed a 4-footer.

He finished with a flurry, an 8-foot birdie at 15 and a 13-footer at 16.

"I consider a bogey on 11 a par today," Laoretti said. "It was a real tough green, almost unfair.

"I drove real good today and if you're going to win an Open you have to drive real good. To keep the ball in play is the key to winning here. And I putted well. I didn't have a three-putt."

Stockton's downfall began at the 154-yard, par-3 fourth where he took the first of five bogeys. He lost a stroke each at the eighth and ninth holes and turned in 3-over 39. Things continued badly on the back nine with three more bogeys by the time he'd finished 14.

Stockton poked fun at himself after the round.

"Maybe my biorhythm is bad. Maybe I need to smoke a cigar and have a birthday," he said.

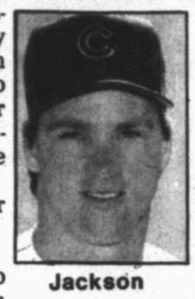
"I threw a no-hitter today. That will teach me to talk about my putting. It's been a real fun day. It's unbelievable. It wasn't like I had breaking putts or anything. I just didn't make any today. I pushed a couple. I pulled a couple. And I hit a couple I thought were in."

Cubs probably got the best of Buechele-Jackson trade

By Joe Kay
AP Sports Writer

CINCINNATI — The Pittsburgh Pirates have given up a lot for a 4-9 pitcher.

Buechele



Jackson

Manager Jim Leyland thinks they had no choice.

The NL East leaders made a major move Friday to take care of their main weakness, acquiring left-handed starter Danny Jackson from the Chicago Cubs for third baseman Steve Buechele, one of their steadiest players.

"We had to come up with pitching," Leyland said. "Buechele was not easy to part with, believe me."

It became apparent in the last few weeks that Pittsburgh was going to flounder until it got another dependable starter. The Pirates had lost six of nine and their lead over Montreal had dwindled to three games.

The offense has been sluggish, but the pitching has been scary.

"It was obvious to everybody that we needed another veteran-type pitcher," Leyland said. "Pitching is the name of the game, pitching and defense. We feel Danny Jackson is a quality pitcher."

It was Pittsburgh's second trade in a week. They acquired speedy outfielder Alex Cole from Cleveland last Friday for two minor leaguers.

Their latest trade was announced during a rain-delayed 4-0 victory over the Cincinnati Reds that didn't start until 10:51 p.m. Buechele started the game, but left in the second for a pinch hitter. He wasn't available for comment — an operator at the team's hotel said his phone was off the hook.

Leyland said the trade was completed just as the game was starting, resulting in the unusual timing. Two thunderstorms had delayed the start of the game by three hours and 16 minutes.

"Obviously, a lot of details have to be worked out on something like this," Leyland said. "I was going to walk out with the lineup card when I got the call."

Jackson, 4-9 with a 4.22 ERA in 19 starts, will join them after the All-Star break, giving them a rotation that includes Doug Drabek, Zane Smith and Randy Tomlin.

The left-hander hasn't done much since winning 23 games for Cincinnati in 1988. He was hurt the next two seasons, then went to the Cubs as a free agent. Injuries limited him to a 1-5 mark in 17 games last year.

The Pirates think he's finally healthy.

"He's pitching very well," Leyland said. "He hasn't missed a start since spring training. To my knowledge, he's totally healthy."

Buechele hit .249 in 80 games with eight homers and 43 RBIs. The Pirates got the Gold Glove third baseman in a trade with Texas last August for pitcher Kurt Miller.

The Cubs were looking for offense, and have searched several years for a full-time third baseman.

"I think we need to add one bat to our lineup," Cubs general manager Larry Himes said. "We're getting an outstanding defensive player who I think is going to be able to drive in runs for us."

The successful rehabilitation of injured Mike Harkey made the Jackson-Buechele deal possible. Harkey is expected to move into Jackson's spot in Chicago's starting rotation.

John Wehner, who moved to third Friday night after Buechele left the game, is one of the candidates for the full-time job. The Pirates made another roster move after the game, promoting promising third baseman Kevin Young from Class AAA Buffalo. They optioned rookie pitcher Victor Cole back to Buffalo.

The Pirates also have Jeff King.

Brown wins 14th, Rangers still unbeaten under Harrah

Associated Press

AL Roundup

ARLINGTON — Kevin Brown became the majors' first 14-game winner, pitching a six-hitter as the Texas Rangers defeated the Cleveland Indians 5-1 Saturday night.

The Rangers won their third consecutive game under interim manager Toby Harrah.

Brown (14-4), who has won five straight, gave up a first-inning home run to Carlos Baerga, but had little trouble after that. He walked two, struck out three and got 19 groundouts in pitching his sixth complete game of the season.

Jeff Mutis (0-2), making his second start of the season, gave up eight hits and five runs in two innings before being relieved by Ted Power.

The Rangers tied it in the bottom of the first on an unearned run, then added three more runs in the second. After tripling, Rafael Palmeiro scored when Felix Vermin threw the ball away on a grounder by Ruben Sierra.

In the second, Dickie Thon tripled with one out and scored on a single by Donald Harris. Jeff Frye followed with a run-scoring double. After Mutis walked Dean Palmer, Palmeiro doubled for a 4-1 Texas lead.

Brian Downing homered for the Rangers in the third inning.

Red Sox 11, White Sox 2

BOSTON — Tom Brunansky had a grand slam and Mo Vaughn added a three-run homer as Boston routed Chicago.

The win was the Red Sox' fourth in their last five games and the 11 runs a season high.

John Dopson (6-4) was the winner, pitching five innings and allowing both Chicago runs on six hits. He also walked four.

Athletics 3, Blue Jays 1

TORONTO — Mike Moore allowed two hits in eight innings, outduelling Juan Guzman and pitching Oakland to a victory over Toronto.

The Athletics' offense was highlighted by Eric Fox' first major-league hit, a leadoff home run in a two-run third.

Moore (10-7) struck out five and walked two before leaving for Dennis Eckersley, who pitched a perfect ninth for his 30th save. One of the two hits off Moore was John Olerud's ninth homer in the second.

Guzman (11-2) allowed three runs on eight hits over seven innings. He and struck out seven to take over the American League lead with 122 strikeouts, two more than Roger Clemens.

Angels 2, Tigers 1

DETROIT — John Morris and Ron Tingley hit back-to-back home runs in the fifth inning to give California a victory over Detroit.

It was the second straight victory for California after an 11-game losing streak, but they lost starter Jim Abbott in the fourth inning with a strained muscle in the rib cage.

Chuck Crim (2-2) combined with Joe Grahe to allow just two Detroit baserunners in the last five innings. Crim retired all seven batters he faced and Grahe pitched three scoreless innings for his fourth save.

Going into the game, both Morris and Tingley were hitting under .180.

Mariners 5, Yankees 3

NEW YORK — Omar Vizquel's 12th inning single drove in Dave Cochrane with the go-ahead run as Seattle defeated New York.

Cochrane opened the 12th with a single to center and moved to second on Tino Martinez' one-out hit before Vizquel slashed a hard one-hopper off the glove of first baseman Don Mattingly.

Shane Turner's sacrifice fly drove in Martinez who had moved to third on Vizquel's hit as Russ Swan (3-5), the fourth Mariners' pitcher, earned the victory.

John Habyan (3-3) was the loser.

Twins 6, Orioles 5

BALTIMORE — Shane Mack and Kent Hrbek each drove in two runs as Minnesota built a six-run lead, then held on to Baltimore.

The Twins led 6-0 in the seventh before starter Bill Krueger gave up a three-run homer to Tim Hulett and a one-out double to Bill Ripken. Krueger then threw two balls to Rick Dempsey before Mark Guthrie relieved and completed the walk.

More Sports, 8B

Brewers 5, Royals 1

MILWAUKEE — Bill Wegman won his first game in three weeks and rookie Pat Listach had a two-run double as Milwaukee beat Kansas City.

Wegman (8-7) pitched a complete game for the Brewers despite giving up 13 hits, including four to Wally Joyner and three to Jim Eisenreich. He allowed at least one hit in every inning as the Royals stranded nine runners through eight innings.

Pirates win battle of division leaders, 9-3

Associated Press

NL Roundup

CINCINNATI — Orlando Merced hit his fifth game-winning homer of the season Saturday night, a three-run shot that sent the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 9-3 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

Zane Smith (8-7) won his third consecutive start by scattering four hits over six innings before leaving with a stiff pitching shoulder. The left-hander has been tough in July, giving up one run and 14 hits in the three starts.

Smith had his streak of scoreless innings snapped at 19 when Reggie Sanders hit into a run-producing double play in the third. Cincinnati didn't threaten again.

Merced added to a remarkable streak with his fourth-inning homer off Keith Brown (0-1) for a 4-1 lead. All five of his homers this season have given the Pirates the lead in games they went on to win.

Andy Van Slyke had a single, double and triple, driving in a pair of runs, and Barry Bonds had two RBIs.

Mets 8, Astros 2

HOUSTON — David Cone allowed eight hits over eight innings and Bobby Bonilla and Chico Walker had three RBIs apiece in New York's victory over Houston.

Cone (9-4), who struck out Casey Candaele with the bases loaded to end the eighth inning, had nine strikeouts and four walks. Lee Guetterman worked the ninth.

Jimmy Jones (4-3) went three innings for the loss, giving up six runs on three hits and five walks.

Giants 3, Expos 0

SAN FRANCISCO — Bud Black pitched a six-hitter and Will Clark hit his 10th home run to lead San Francisco to a victory over Montreal.

Black (7-2) retired 16 of the first 17 batters and improved to 6-0 at Candlestick Park as the Giants won for the sixth time in their last eight games. He struck out five and walked one in pitching his first shutout and first complete game since May 10, 1991, against the New York Mets.

The Giants took a 1-0 lead in the second inning when Robby Thompson scored on Jose Uribe's single behind second base, knocking the ball out of catcher Gary Carter's glove in a collision near the plate.

Clark homered to lead off the sixth inning off Dennis Martinez (9-8). It was his first homer ever off Martinez in 53 at-bats. The Giants added a run on successive singles by Kevin Bass, Matt Williams and Thompson that chased Martinez.

Cardinals 4, Dodgers 1

LOS ANGELES — Tom Pagnozzi doubled in two runs and Ozzie Smith set a major league record with his 15th consecutive season of 20 or more stolen bases as St. Louis beat Los Angeles.

Mark Clark (2-3) allowed an unearned run and six hits over six-innings plus in his first career appearance against the Dodgers. Clark struck out three and walked three.

Lee Smith, the third St. Louis pitcher, worked the ninth for his National League-leading 23rd save.

The Cardinals' staff has a 1.29 ERA in its last 15 games. The Dodgers helped by going 0 for 7 while stranding four runners in scoring position.

Mike Scioscia, a two-time All-Star catcher, experienced one of his worst innings, commiting a throwing error and a passed ball as the Cardinals scored three times in the third to take a 4-0 lead against Orel Hershiser (7-7). Scioscia also lost track of the number of outs and headed off the field after Hershiser fanned Clark for only the second out.

Smith set the record in the fifth inning, becoming the first player with at least 20 steals in each of his first 15 years. That broke a tie with Willie Wilson and Herman Long.

Hershiser gave up four runs over five innings, striking out three and walking one.

Padres 3, Phillies 2

SAN DIEGO — Jerald Clark, who entered the game in the eighth inning, continued his hot hitting with a one-out, 11th-inning single to give San Diego a victory over Philadelphia.

Pinch-hitter Oscar Azocar singled to open the inning and was sacrificed to second by Phil Stephenson, hitting for Tim Scott (2-1). After Tony Fernandez was walked intentionally, Clark, who now has 14 hits in his last 30 at-bats, singled to left-center off Mike Hartley (4-4).

The Phillies have now lost seven in a row and 11 of their last 13.

Braves 3, Cubs 1

CHICAGO — Deion Sanders' two-run homer in the eighth inning lifted Atlanta to its fourth straight victory.

Pinch-hitter Otis Nixon opened the inning with a single before Sanders hit his eighth homer into rightfield off loser Bob Scanlan (2-5).

Steve Avery (7-7) worked seven innings, allowing only three hits with two walks and four strikeouts.

The Cubs ended a string of 23 scoreless innings against Atlanta in the third.

Angels lose to Tulsa

Edmonds, Merriman called up

Staff report

TULSA — The Midland Angels, leading by a 4-3 margin heading into the bottom of the eighth inning, dropped a 5-4 Texas League decision to the Tulsa Drillers here Saturday night.

However, the Angels got some good news when Shreveport defeated El Paso 7-6 to keep the Diablos and Midland tied for the West Division's second half lead. Both own identical 13-9 records in the second half.

Tulsa won it in the eighth when Jose Oliva hit his 12th home run of the season, a two-run, two-out shot off reliever Don Vidmar (1-2). It was a monster blast to left.

Midland outhit the Drillers by a 12-7 margin, but left 10 men on base. Tulsa left only three on base. J.R. Phillips' 11th homer was Midland's only extra base hit while Tulsa had four.

The Angels also made some player moves that will play a significant role in the stretch run. Centerfielder Jim Edmonds, the only Angel regular to be hitting over .300 (.313), and closer Brett Merriman (9 saves) have been sent to Triple-A Edmonton.

Edmonds has been red hot and recenlty had six homers in a six-day span. Merriman had a 2.70 ERA, but his ERA over the last 20 games was 1.78.

Outfielder Garret Anderson (.324 with one homer at Class A Palm Springs) will replace Edmonds while California's No. 1 minor league prospect, Troy Percival, a reliever, will replace Merriman.

Percival, who has had arm soreness this year, is now healthy after a 1-1 start at Palm Springs and a 4.82 ERA. He has a 95 m.p.h. fastball.

ALL-STARS: Big batters not familiar with opposing pitching

(From 1B)

"The hitters get one at-bat against a pitcher they have hardly, if ever, see before," Paul Molitor said before last year's game, not much of a 4-2 classic. "I think it is very difficult for hitters to be successful in that situation."

"One at-bat and the pitcher has a better chance to dominate that situation," he said, "no matter how good a hitter the guy happens to be."

That partly explains why Sandberg is only 3 for 23 in All-Star competition, with Ozzie Smith even worse at 2 for 20. Puckett is just 3 for 13 and Ripken was 3 for 20 before winning last year's MVP honors with a three-run homer and a single.

"It's more fun when you get a few hits and a homer," Ripken said.

Not for the pitchers, naturally. In the NBA and NHL All-Star games, it's OK to have a lot of scoring because no one really gets shown up; baseball is much different, though, and no pitcher wants to get tagged, even in an exhibition.

In the past, plenty of top hitters had their troubles in All-Star games. Orlando Cepeda was 1 for 27, Eddie Mathews was 2 for 25, Luis Aparicio was 2 for 28 and Roy Campanella was 2 for 20. Mickey Mantle hit at only a .233 clip with Yogi Berra and Willie McCovey each under .200.

Program offers 'shock' therapy

Not long ago a juvenile probation officer in San Antonio came up with what appears to be a novel idea for dealing with youthful crime offenders — confining them to camps where they would receive the same "basic training" new recruits on a military installation receive.

The plan offered by Joe Castillo, Bexar County's chief juvenile probation officer, is so elemental that it's bound to be successful. Castillo obviously is operating on the principle that most youthful offenders lack only sufficient discipline and a basic understanding of how society functions. "Basic training" would permit them to receive a full burst of discipline and military manners — "shock" treatment of a sort.

U.S. Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio, and U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio, both expressed interest in the plan although stopping short of endorsing it. Gonzalez and Smith each represent a portion of Midland County.

Additionally, Gonzalez commented, "I don't know how they (San Antonio authorities) can get around the constitutionality of compulsive confinement of juveniles on a military base."

Perhaps the program will be ruled unacceptable by the courts, but with the rising ranks of young people who get into trouble with the law and the acknowledged lack of discipline in many homes and the schools today, we wouldn't throw Castillo's plan out too quickly. An effective program for dealing with young criminals is definitely needed and we haven't seen anybody else offering potentially worthwhile suggestions.

In reference to Gonzalez's "rights" comment, if the youngsters are on their way to a penitentiary sentence, they'll end up stripped of their "rights" anyway. Castillo's plan at least gives them a shot at being salvaged as useful members of society, and isn't that what the concept of rehabilitation is all about?

We'd like to see more about Castillo's plan. It appears to offer real promise for turning youthful criminals away from lives of crime.

State phone records should be retained

The Legislature ought to step in now that the General Services Commission has chosen to continue its sudden new practice of destroying records of state telephone calls after only one week. The hurried destruction of records can only make it more difficult to uncover any misuse of state phones by the Austin political establishment.

Lawmakers should take the first opportunity to pass legislation preserving these phone records long enough so that it is effectively possible to check them for inappropriate calls made at public expense. These records were once kept for a month or more. The General Services Commission's speedup decision appears to be nothing more than an attempt to help cover up any future misuses of state telephones, state resources and state employees' time.

The point is that these are public records which ought to be retained long enough so they can be checked if allegations of misuse arise. Keeping them for only one week is obviously not long enough. The commission maintains long distance records for a month or more. It should do the same for local calls.

Taxpayers could win battle over 'perks'

Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., normally not a partisan bomb-thrower, has lobbed a mortar shell from the U.S. Capital toward 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., and it may blow open a political Pandora's box of perks and privileges.

DeConcini recently introduced S. 2867, the Senior Government Officer Benefit Limitation Act, which is aimed at cutting executive branch perks.

Of course, members of Congress and their staffs are equally well-pampered. Look for the Bush administration to fight back.

When the war is over, if all the perks and privileges and the people who enjoy them lie bloodied and beaten on the battlefield, there will be a few winners: the 200 million or so taxpayers who have footed the bill for this foolishness for years.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, July 12, the 194th day of 1992. There are 172 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On July 12, 1812, United States forces led by Gen. William Hull entered Canada during the War of 1812 against Britain. (However, Hull, concerned about a new alliance between the British and Indians led by Tecumseh, retreated shortly thereafter to Detroit, and surrendered to the British a month later.)

On this date:

In 100 B.C., the Roman Emperor Julius Caesar was born.

In 1543, England's King Henry VIII married his sixth and last wife, Catherine Parr, who outlived him.

In 1690, Protestant forces led by William of Orange defeated the Roman Catholic army of James II at the Battle of the Boyne in Ireland.

Democrats brace for 'Willie Horton' ad

WASHINGTON — Floyd Brown is on the verge of accomplishing a major feat: producing a political ad that makes his inflammatory Willie Horton commercials of 1988 seem cerebral by comparison. Brown plans a carpet-bombing campaign against Bill Clinton for which Democrats fear there may be no adequate defense.

Anderson

Unlike his racially tinged attack on Michael Dukakis four years ago, Brown, a conservative activist, has gotten racy against Clinton. The 60-second spot previewed this week is as vile as it is voyeuristic — a pay-per-call service that, for $4.99, allows the public to eavesdrop on excerpts of Bill Clinton's taped conversations with Gennifer Flowers. The ads also revisit the questions of draft-dodging and marijuana smoking.

Brown's pitch can only be described as bordering on soft porn. "You sit and listen to the pillow talk of Bill Clinton and Gennifer Flowers, and then you're allowed to judge for yourself," he happily concedes. Brown is looking to crash the Democrat's party by flooding local New York TV stations with these ads during convention week.

"Why is Bill Clinton running from the past?" the ad begins. "Call the Clinton fact line. ... What really happened between Bill Clinton and Gennifer Flowers? Call ... and get to know Bill Clinton the way Gennifer Flowers did. ... Listen to the taped excerpts. Judge for yourself if this is the way a man talks to a woman that is just a friendly acquaintance."

Brown, a self-described Reaganite who clamors for "traditional family values," seems keenly aware of the titillation content of his commercials. Some parts of the ad sound more like solicitations for phone sex than a serious political message: "Warning: Explicit language. No callers under 18. Callers charged $4.99 per call to a major credit card."

Brown heads the Presidential Victory Committee, a conservative group of free-lancers, which is not connected to the Bush-Quayle campaign, but independently does its dirty work.

Democrats have had four years to find a miracle vaccine, to inoculate themselves against the attack ads like Willie Horton that were so crippling in 1988. "Democrats need to launch their own independent efforts," one top Democratic strategist told our associate Ed Henry. "It's there, legally, to use. My hat's off to Floyd Brown because he seems to be the only person that understands the federal election law and is using it."

Officially, Brown is disowned by the GOP. Democrats believe (but can't prove) there is some form of collusion between the Brown and Bush camps, and wonder if the ancient proverb — "my enemy's enemy is my friend" — applies in this case.

Brown denies collusion. But what about cooperation?

Brown's brainchild revolves around the "first use of interactive technology by an independent expenditure committee. We're really plowing totally new ground." He says viewers will be able to call up and hear, "Thank you for calling the Bill Clinton fact line, please enter your credit card number." The callers would hear a menu of choices, according to Brown, such as "intimate conversations of Bill Clinton and Gennifer Flowers as Gennifer Flowers taped them. Press 1 now." With an ear-to-ear grin, he promises that listeners will be privy to parts of conversation that were censored by the news media.

"I think they'll hurt us as badly in '92 as they did in '88," a Democratic strategist said forlornly. "Clinton's so undefined with the electorate, he's a sitting duck. They can plant seeds of doubt about him even more so than they did to Dukakis."

Other Democrats think Clinton has already proved his mettle. "He took some severe body blows and was doubled over with pain," said Rep. Mike Espy, D-Miss., about Clinton's early trials. "This is not a neophyte campaign."

Americans are happiest trying to be happy

NEW YORK — One spends four years rebuilding one's belief that human beings have souls, and then the political conventions come 'round again.

Usually conventions are boiling seas of strange hats and stranger ideas, the former worn by people attending for fun, the latter held by people grimly earnest. Usually conventions do more damage to Democrats than Republicans because Democrats believe in government and hence demand more from it and, thus seem, in convention assembled, like a swarm of imperious appetites. Republicans are more content — that is one reason they are Republicans — and therefore seem more serene and disinterested.

Will

Dan Quayle has been values-mongering, saying Bush is for "basic values," a.k.a. "family values," and doesn't regard "all life-style choices as morally equivalent." Quayle's innuendo — that Clinton so regards those choices — is, presumably, a response to Clinton's courtship of gay voters.

Apparently Quayle's idea — the only Republican idea just now — is that presidents are the nation's moral tutors, or role models, or something. Anyway, presidents supposedly make the difference between excellent and disastrous "life-style choices." Gosh. Murphy Brown is in her 40s, which means she, like most Americans, has lived most of her life under Republican presidents.

Republicans are harping on something barely relevant to presidential duties — "life-style choices" — because of the intellectual bankruptcy of Bush-style Republicanism, and because Democrats have made themselves vulnerable to exploitation of the nation's sense of disorder, moral as well as material.

Once upon a time, during the Depression and after, Democrats concentrated on material matters such as FDR's one-third of a nation ill-housed, ill-clad, ill-nourished. The New Deal also began the federal government's conscious expansion of the middle class. All this made the nation more conservative because it blunted the appeal of class-oriented politics.

But beginning thirty years ago, in the 1960s, the very success of the policies of material amelioration made the Democratic Party susceptible to a radicalism — a radical reorientation of politics. Democrats, or at least many intense, articulate, materially comfortable and politically conspicuous factions, became preoccupied with what can be called "identity" issues — rights based on ethnicity and sexuality.

Clinton's choice of Al Gore as a running mate may signal a turn back toward a politics that gives order, and mundane material preoccupations, their due. Certainly it signals a confidence about cracking the Republican's presidential base, the South. The Arkansas-Tennessee ticket is the first geographically contiguous ticket since the Missouri-Kentucky ticket of Truman-Barkley — not a bad omen.

Franklin Roosevelt (nothing to fear but fear itself; happy days are here again) understood this, as did his most successful emulator, Ronald Reagan ("Morning in America"). Clinton can defeat Bush if he can remember what Reagan said, what Roosevelt understood and what subsequent liberals have forgotten: Americans are happiest when pursuing happiness, happiness understood as material advancement, pursued with government's help but not as a government entitlement.

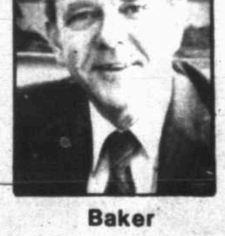
RUSSELL BAKER

We're all leading lives of noisy desperation

Sometimes I infuriate myself. Just the other day, for instance. On television selling a book I was, but too much the gentleman, too much the eleventh-rate salesman, alas, to look the camera dead in the eye and say:

"My book will not only make you smell better, relieve your headache, transform dingy yellow teeth to gleaming white and add five miles per gallon to your gas mileage, it will also make you live twice as long while enjoying twice as much happiness and getting twice as young every year."



Baker

Instead, with mouth rattling along completely free of brain control — television cameras always do this to me — I started talking about America's anger. Why was the country so filled with anger? What in the world did Americans have to be furious about?

It had just prevailed in the 45-year Cold War. The threat of nuclear holocaust was suspended. Stores were overflowing. The choice of entertainments was infinite. There were millions of cars to carry Americans wherever whim or necessity dictated.

There was easy access to deadly weapons for every temperament, be it sporting, criminal, political, entrepreneurial, suicidal, self-pitying, paranoidal or just plain fun-loving.

Moreover, Americans could worship such gods as they chose, or none if they chose. And what about other people from all over the world risking everything to get here? If the place was really such a hate-filled sinkhole, why were foreigners dying to get here?

I hate to hear people talking like this, and afterward I hated myself for having done it. It is un-American. Misery is the new American condition, and making a loud noise about your misery is now the most American thing you can do, having replaced washing your car on Saturday afternoon.

Remember when you could sing that old spiritual, "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen," and mean it? Not anymore. Nowadays everybody knows the trouble you've seen. That's because you've told them.

You probably told them at the top of your lungs, too, maybe out in the streets screaming it to television cameras or even inside a TV studio shouting it on a misery panel to some competitive boaster who claims his troubles have been worse than yours.

There is so much competition for the misery championship these days that you have to scream to remain a contender.

Thoreau wrote 150 years ago that most people lead "lives of quiet desperation." What an antique idea. Nowadays most people lead lives of noisy desperation, and if you're not shrieking your laments you will be dismissed as a mere flyweight in the misery department.

What we're seeing is a competition to be Number One in Pain and Suffering, to win a statuette for Most Victimized, or Most Oppressed, or Most Forgotten, or Most Abused, or Most Unfairly Treated, or Most Tax-Ridden, or Most Bureaucracy-Persecuted, or Most Medically Ill Treated, or Most Telephonically Violated, or Most Supreme-Court-Deprived ...

The fact, of course, is that contrary to the whine that everything was better in the old days, almost everything was actually much worse in the old days.

True, the old days weren't afflicted with the telephone, much less the fax, but they didn't have air-conditioning either, or the electric car crank, or television, or unemployment compensation, or Social Security, or overnight dry-cleaning, or movies right there in the parlor alongside the cast-iron woodstove with the isinglass windows.

Easy now with those poisonous pens, ye angry millions: I am not saying we ought to count our blessings instead of whining, moaning and wailing it up.

It's natural for each new generation of modern times to think it is born into the worst of times. This may even promote happiness. In a century that has lost its certainty about the purpose of life, it can be comforting to believe you are needed to do hero's work.

Deprived so abruptly of the Cold War's "long twilight struggle" between heroes and monsters, we haven't found much in the way of a new heroic task to pick us up.

Perhaps this fascination with our own troubles is a healthy omen, portending a real effort to use this quiet time to neaten up the American act. Omen or not, it beats washing the car on Saturday afternoon.

Bill would remove Bell's freedom

Your recent editorial "Brooks bill would help consumers" (Editorial Page, June 26) would leave to Congress what we think consumers should decide.

Congress is debating whether consumers should be able to receive information services or purchase telephone equipment designed or manufactured by the Bell companies. The newspapers say Congress should decide the issue; the Bell companies say, let consumers decide.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram is backing a bill that would instantly wipe out hundreds of American jobs in research and development, and take away services that Southwestern Bell customers now use nearly 50,000 times a month. The bill would obstruct efforts to introduce new products and services such as pocket phones for Midland customers.

Even worse, the bill would prevent the Bell companies from offering future services that thousands of Americans would welcome, including:

- Taking the paperwork out of insurance claims by linking doctors, hospitals and insurance companies electronically.
- Electronic publishing for easy access to encyclopedias, databases and all kinds of up-to-the-minute information.
- Electronic yellow pages that help customers find the companies they want, when they want them.

The bill, sponsored by U.S. Rep. Jack Brooks, would take away the Bells' existing freedom to offer information services and perform research and development. The bill also would continue existing restrictions on manufacturing and long-distance. It would put all Bell company plans for future information services on hold. The bill would dictate to consumers where they can and cannot get information — newspapers, yes; Bell companies, no.

The bill would block the creation of new jobs in one of America's leading industries — telecommunications. The Bell companies can design, develop and assemble products overseas. But not in America, where restrictions have sidelined half of the assets in the U.S. telecommunications industry and allowed foreign companies to exploit this competitive imbalance.

Your accusation that the Bell companies would not operate fairly with the other information providers is unfounded and foolish from a business perspective. We are in the information delivery business today and we would not risk losing this major part of our business by favoring any information service delivery company (even our own) over any other customer.

Character of U.S. needs remolding

Come on America, let's settle on solving problems rather than creating new ones. The time has come to put down your protest signs, get off of our "special interest" soap boxes and find a little common sense. Or is that too logical?

The recently sparked issue of abortion is now an out of control inferno. It seems as though one must instantly choose which side of the issue to support, and hold fast to it — even at the cost of ignoring common sense. The phrases "pro-choice" and "pro-life" further polarize a complex issue. We must realize that not every pregnancy is intended or desired, yet abortion is NOT the answer for sex determination, irresponsibility or immorality! The recent Supreme Court decision is a voice of moderation in a debate which leans too readily toward the radical ends of the spectrum. The "pro-life" advocates must swallow the fact that abortion may be the best answer in certain situations. On the other hand, "pro-choice" advocates must face the fact that abortion is depriving a life and therefore wrong! Why can't we see that declining personal responsibility causes unwanted pregnancies and unnecessary abortions — or are Americans afraid to?

Furthermore, the issue of homosexuality is one that shouldn't exist. The proliferation of ex-gay ministries in the past 20 years has helped thousands of men and women to recover their sexual identities, and to lead normal, heterosexual lives. Yet the media consistently portrays those who don't accept this immoral lifestyle as bigoted, small-minded people. Today there are many who say, "This is the '90s, just accept it." Not in the world of common sense, high morals and high character. Gay rights activists say we must accept them and respect their way of life — will they respect our rights and beliefs to be morally opposed to them?

America needs a national reconstruction of its moral character, rather than another round of handouts to "special interests." Americans must take responsibility for their actions and use a little common sense, without hiding behind the phrase, "This is the '90s, just accept it!"

People should give budget talk input

This is a very important time of year for all of our taxing entities and for you the taxpayers. Summer is the season for the very painful budget preparation process and we should all be a part of it.

Both City Council and Commissioners Court have indicated that they will be diligent in their deliberations to contain the budgets so that there will be no increase in taxes in the coming fiscal year. These economies will be achieved through various reductions in costs of operation and staff through attrition (not replacing those employees who retire or quit) wherever that is possible.

You are invited to attend these sessions. City Council will concentrate their deliberations during the week of July 13-17 in the basement conference room. The County Commissioners have already had some sessions and will resume their budget studies beginning this next week. Just phone the city manager's office and/or the office of the county judge to learn the exact date and time of the sessions. Unfortunately, the Memorial Hospital and Medical Center board's deliberations are not so open. The deliberations and decisions are arrived at in private. Our board of directors sit only to pass those decisions that have already been made.

Are you aware of the many dollars being spent on the former Clearview facility? To make it into a rehab and skilled nursing operation the renovation cost was $1,190,500 plus $99,568 furniture and equipment (mostly esthetics). That's Phase I. Phase II is the addition of 15,500 square feet to the building with $1,460,000 approved for this plus another $354,107 for additional capital equipment for both phases.

When asked where the money is coming from to pay for all of this, the answer is "from hospital revenue." This means from profit from many increased charges for everything patients must pay for. Since the hospital cannot legally make profits, that word is not used. It would be very refreshing if management would consider reducing cost to patients. MMMC is in danger of losing its tax-exempt status.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702.

We need to pray for those who've fallen

I've never written you before but felt strongly compelled to write concerning an article in the Tuesday, July 7th, paper.

Gary Ott makes a point of focusing on two televangelists who've made mistakes and fallen, but he could only find one man of God that he thought was worthy of his trust. That makes me wonder how many he knows. Robert Tilton and Jimmy Swaggert have had their faces and names plastered all over the media because of their wrongdoings, but in this country it is not newsworthy to be righteous, so no one ever hears about the tried and true men of God, unless they place their foot wrong then everyone will know their name.

I think it is time that we stop hopping on the wagon of crucifixion and spend some time being Christ-like enough to forgive others, as we expect God to forgive our shortcomings. Rather than condemn, we need to pray for those who fall short of the glory of God. Also I'd like to point out for those who didn't know, there are some televangelists who ask for our donations for an honest reason. Unless things have changed, the electric company still has to be paid in cash, not in prayers, and telling the phone company, "God bless you" has never made me owe them any less. Let's be realistic about this, it costs money to be on television and not everyone that asks for it is putting it in their own pocket. Ott may not have seen them take up an offering while watching Billy Graham crusades, but somebody had to pay for the air time. Before lumping all televangelists in one pile, Ott should try watching channel 12 for at least 24 hours, just to see if he can find a few more true men of God. I recommend highly programs with Benny Hinn, Dwight Thompson, Jerry Barnard, Jessie Duplantis and Rod Parsley.

I don't know whether or not Ott professes to be a Christian, but I'd highly recommend that he get to know the Lord in an intimate way if he does not. Ott may not appreciate my opinion, but I hope he will understand that it is said in love, much more love than he is showing for televangelists or men and women of God in general.

Appreciation shown for parade's success

Thank you, Midland Reporter-Telegram (Charles Spence, Publisher; Elizabeth Edwin, Lifestyle; and Mary Hardin, Advertising) for your superb publicity in advertising the 30th Annual DAR Children's July 4th Sidewalk Parade, sponsored by the Colonel Theunis Dey Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

This parade was originated in Hill Park; from there it was moved to Wadley-Barron Park; then it was held several years at the Museum of the Southwest; and now the permanent location is beautiful downtown Midland around the Courthouse Square and Centennial Plaza. Also, a special thanks to the Parks and Recreation Department, the Midland County Sheriff's Department, and the Midland Police Department.

One hundred twenty children participated in the 1992 parade, which compared only to the bicentennial year of 1976. Thank you, future Americans, for your efforts and spirit on a Saturday morning plus the efforts of your parents, our flag bearers (Amy Bishop and Dixie Doss), our banner carriers (Stephen and Michael McKeller), our cornet quartet (Alissa Schuttes, Brian Canotic, Steven Nelson, Chris Alman), and our nine judges. The above mentioned are fine examples of true Americans; they make things happen, and we salute them for caring!

Our theme of patriotism and honoring the red, white, and blue was carried to the ultimate in advertising and in participation. The children, ages 0 to 12, put a lump in your throat as they paraded by waving their flags, a gift to each participant from the Colonel Theunis Dey Chapter. The spirit of America was flowing as the vehicles were rolling! If and when you are feeling that our nation is not at its best, just plan to attend this July 4th Children's Parade, and your spirits will be uplifted.

As parade chairman for the past 18 years, what a privilege and honor it is to lead the future of Midland and of America in their very own parade, as they learn to express their love for our country at an early age.

Lawmaker: Fetuses don't have rights

Nat Henthoff, a well-known columnist in an article in the Village Voice, states that he has known Congressman Don Edwards, D-Calif., for a long time and disagrees with him on the matter of unborn life. Rep. Edwards does not believe that those not yet born have any constitutional rights, or any rights at all. And his "Freedom of Choice Act" reflects that conviction. The Rep. Edwards' so-called "Freedom of Choice Act" says simply:

"A state may not restrict the right of a woman to choose to terminate a pregnancy (1) before fetal viability or (2) at any time, if such termination is necessary to protect the life or health of the woman.

As there is no definition concerning the word "health," it could be construed as morning sickness or a headache and would legally — constitutionally — allow abortion just minutes before birth.

As Henthoff observes, "There are a good many nurses and some doctors who abhor participating in second-trimester abortions — or the much fewer third-trimester abortions." At that stage, there is no way to claim that only a "clump of cells" is being disposed of. You see clearly that one of us is being killed.

Also most important the "Freedom of Choice Act" does not have a conscience clause for such nurses and doctors.

Story brings back pleasant memories

I have two compliments: Number 1, I enjoyed the story "Annual Juneteenth trail ride honors memory of Texas pioneers" (June 21st, p. 12A).

There are two small farming communities in that area. Post Oak and St. John — one white, one black. I was born Sept. 4, 1912, in a house that sat between those communities. I have two infant brothers who are buried in the Liberty Cemetery near St. John. Although I am not black, the story brought back some pleasant memories. My parents had as many friends in one community as the other and my sister and I played with the black children as often as with the white children. Some wonderful people live in that area.

"Memories are made of this."

Number 2, today, Sunday, June 21st, you printed a letter written by Sylvia Bailey-Munoz that I most heartily agree with. She said things that needed to be said — things I've wanted to say but she said them much better. I'd like to shake her hand. Her letter should be on the front page of every newspaper and read on all news broadcasts in this country.

Americans, let's forget about race this or race that and work together.

Pets have feelings, can express love

A comment made by a person that I was trying to advise on animal abuse has prompted this letter. The comment was "It's just a dog." A quote from Albert Schweitzer so well expresses my attitude. "Until man extends the circle of his compassion to all living things, man will not himself find peace."

Recently, my family found a small newborn sparrow on the ground. We took it in, called Midge Erskine and found out how to care for it. We nursed it to adulthood and found that even a small sparrow has a great amount of love and feeling. We've offered him the "wild life." He prefers to stay with us. We call him Billy Bird. He comes rushing to us and will sit on your hand. Yes, I guess Billy is just a bird, but Billy feels and Billy loves. God himself says "not one sparrow falls that He does not see."

Please remember all animals have feelings and if you own a pet please take good care of it. Feed it, water it, provide shelter and attention. In return your special friend will give you love and devotion.

"Just a dog?" I guess so, but what a special creation of our Father to extend His love to us.

Personnel at 911 competent, caring

About three weeks ago, I received a call from my older son, from another state. His speech was garbled. He said he intended to kill himself and had taken "... a bunch of pills," to that end. Then the phone went dead. I tried to call him back several times but was not successful.

At first, I talked to several operators and representatives at the phone company. I did not get any advice or assistance from any of them that was of any value to me. At one point they connected me with the suicide prevention hotline in the city where my son was. I was promptly told that if I was not considering suicide, they could not talk to me.

At this point, in desperation, I called 911. Then the pros took over. I gave them the details of the situation. They said they would work with the proper authorities and get back to me as soon as possible. They did exactly as they said they would.

They contacted 911 in the other city. They went to my son's apartment and took him to the hospital. There he received the appropriate treatment and made a complete recovery. The 911 people put me in touch with the hospital staff and I talked to them for some time.

Throughout the evening I talked to several 911 people. Unfortunately, I don't remember their names. However, they all were competent, caring people. I am deeply grateful to all of them.

People shouldn't leave trash on roads

We live northwest of Midland, 1½ miles from the city limits off County Road 60. Our family enjoys July 4th celebrating with fireworks. From our house we can see three fireworks stands with enough lights on them that it looks like Christmas. On a clear night we can even see the fireworks display at Angel's Stadium.

It is our custom to sit out in our front yard and pop firecrackers and watch the sky. The problem is that our street looks awful when everyone that comes out to shoot off fireworks leaves their trash behind. Think about it — every one of them are packed in some kind of paper or cardboard container. Every year on July 5th our family walks up and down our neighborhood picking up someone else's mess.

We enjoy seeing your fireworks, but not what you leave behind. Next year please be more responsible for your trash.

Hill made difference at care facilities

On July 2nd we lost one of the finest healthcare professionals ever. But today our Heavenly Father called Wanda Hill home.

To those of us who were so very privilidged to have known and worked with her she will be sorely missed.

Very few people cared for others as Wanda Hill did. She was a friend to the residents and staff members of our local long term care facilities. She was always there when we needed her. She gave of herself in a very successful effort to improve the care of our elderly and working conditions of staff members in long term care facilities. And because of Wanda Hill conditions have improved. She made a difference.

She instilled a goal in me that lives on today. To provide the best care for our elderly residents of long term care facilities that I, as one person, possibly can. I carry this goal with me every day of my life.

So I feel that a part of Wanda Hill will always be with me. And the difference she made shall live on.

I will never forget our good times. I will never forget Wanda Hill.

Clinton, Gore are strong ticket to provide change

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — Momentous movements are under way that will affect for good or bad the destiny of America, Europe and the Middle East before the end of this decade.

Hearst

That seemed evident to me after following the news during the past week. While I am continuing to make recuperative progress from the heart ailment I suffered last February, I still rely on my associates, particularly Joe Kingsbury Smith, our national editor in Washington, to provide fuller information on the current developments. Following is Joe's report:

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton will be crowned with the Democratic presidential nomination in Madison Square Garden next Wednesday. On Thursday his choice for running mate, Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, will be nominated for vice president. Although both men are southern politicians, I think it will make a strong ticket for those who desire a change in Washington.

If they should win the White House, Gov. Clinton, age 45, and Sen. Gore, 44, would be the youngest presidential team in our country's history.

Both have stressed their relative youth. Gore was quick to link the southern team with John F. Kennedy's rousing election theme that "the torch has passed to a new generation of Americans." He spoke of "a new generation of leadership."

Clinton won with a program primarily aimed at stimulating economic growth. He would do so by spending $200 billion dollars over four years on public investment, mostly in building high-speed railroads, a national computer network and improving education and job training. To fund the plan, he would slash the Pentagon budget. He also hopes to soak the richest 2 percent of Americans by $92 billion in higher taxes over four years. This would probably affect people earning more than $200,000 annually. The Democratic nominee also plans to cut Washington's bureaucracy by 100,000 workers and reduce federal government costs by 3 percent a year. Six winners of the Nobel prize in economics support his program.

The Arkansas governor's selection of Gore for the vice presidency was a shrewd move. Clinton has been criticized for lacking experience in foreign affairs. Gore brings credibility and strength to the Democratic ticket on foreign policy issues. A highly respected member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, a Vietnam veteran, a passionate environmentalist who played an important role in the recent world environmental conference in Brazil, he was one of the few congressional Democrats who supported President Bush's determination to stop Iraq's Saddam Hussein's brutal conquest of Kuwait and threat to control Middle East oil resources.

Bush, however, is far more experienced in foreign affairs than the Democratic team and independent Ross Perot. The latter now is likely to concentrate on luring rightwing Republicans away from Bush.

Despite all the liberal media criticism of the president's handling of domestic and foreign affairs, the most recent polls show Bush is slightly ahead of his two competitors in a close three-way race.

Some of the other major developments this month included the promise by the world's seven richest countries, including the U.S., to reduce the Russian republic's part of the Soviet Union's $70 billion foreign debt. Russian President Boris Yeltsin also told the western leaders he is willing to swap debt relief for Russian land, raw materials, oil and gas exploration rights. Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney called the offer a "bolt from the blue."

A disturbing development of potentially far-reaching import is Saudi Arabia's attempt to gain virtual military domination of the Persian Gulf region. It is seeking to buy a large supply of American F-15 fighter aircraft which played such a vital role in the Desert Storm campaign. More than 200 members of Congress signed a letter to Bush opposing the sale. The Saudis are threatening to buy somewhat similar aircraft from Britain.

Since the Gulf War, we have already sold $14.8 billion worth of major military equipment to Saudi Arabia. This military build-up by the unreliable Saudi royal regime is a dangerous threat to Israel. It could wreck Bush's plans for a Middle East peace settlement.

This last decade of the 20th century will be a fateful one.

OLYMPICS: U.S. could haul in as many as 120 medals more than $300 million into spending on athletes and training facilities over the past four years to keep older champions competing and develop younger ones. Corporations tossed in millions more to sweeten the deal for elite athletes, all in the name of fair play and good business.

Five hundred years after Spain's king and queen shipped off Christopher Columbus in search of Oriental spices and treasures, the "New World" he bumped into is coming back in quest of gold, silver and bronze. The United States could sail away with 120 medals — 26 more than four years ago in Seoul — with a little luck in yachting, rowing and other sports it has been sinking money and effort into.

The Americans are planning, at the very least, their biggest medal haul since a table-topping 107 in Mexico City in 1968 — not counting the Soviet bloc-boycotted 1984 Los Angeles Games. With 783 medals up for grabs, they have a good chance of leaping past the still-potent, Russian-led Unified Team and a united Germany.

The Soviet Union and East Germany, before their economies, political systems and sports machines broke down, finished one-two in 1976, '80 and '88. But the upheaval of the past few years will be much more apparent than they were in the smaller Winter Games, which always favor the snow-bound, mountainous countries of Europe.

Familiar faces will be missing — Carl Lewis in the sprints, Butch Reynolds in the 400, Greg Foster and Edwin Moses in the hurdles, Greg Louganis in diving — but there is enough of a blend of older and younger athletes to more than make up for their absence. Jackie Joyner-Kersee looks golden again in the heptathalon and long jump, as do Janet Evans and teens Anita Nall, Summer Sanders and Jenny Thompson in swimming.

Dave Johnson remains a favorite to win the decathalon gold and that glorious title, "World's Greatest Athlete," especially since he won't be challenged by Dan O'Brien. The bizarre miscalculation by O'Brien while pole vaulting in the trials as he chased a world record cost him a spot in the Games and probably a medal for the U.S. team, not to mention $10 million or so in endorsements if he won.

This Olympics marks a watershed not only for the United States, but for the rest of the world.

For the first time in two decades, nobody's boycotting. Instead, a record 10,000 athletes, professionals and amateurs, from at least 172 countries, are gathering in this rapidly modernized metropolis, once a Roman outpost, nestled between the mountains and the Mediterranean Sea.

Cuba, suffering economically and absent from the Olympics since the 1980 Moscow Games, still has superb athletes in baseball, boxing and track, and is likely to challenge the giant Chinese team, with its young divers and gymnasts, for the fourth spot.

The next generation of American baseball stars will preview its talent against perhaps the last generation of Castro-controlled Cuban stars. They met in a thriller at the Pan American Games in Havana a year ago, Cuba eking out a 3-2 victory over a less-powerful U.S. team than the one now, and the sequel could be just as dramatic.

South Africa's athletes, banned from the Games for 32 years by politics, also have returned — barely avoiding another politically charged move to keep them out.

The Unified Team, facing disunity as the separate republics prepare to go their own ways in four years, still boasts some of the planet's finest athletes. None soars higher than pole-vaulter Sergei Bubka, favored to repeat as gold medalist.

Germany, the wall fallen between East and West, has a united team for the first time since 1964, and other nations will be proudly waving the flags of their new-found independence: Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Slovenia and Croatia.

Meanwhile, Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, which hosted the 1984 Winter Games, lies in ruin from civil war.

For all the idealism of the Olympic Games, they cannot escape drugs, politics and the threat of terrorism.

First held in 776 B.C. to pay homage to Zeus and offer a break from the battlefield, the Games are as contemporary as the latest performance-enhancing steroids, civil wars and social unrest.

Those who go cannot ignore the threat of ETA, the Basque separatists who have been waging a 23-year war of attrition with the Spanish government. ETA "loves to blow up policemen or anybody with a Spanish uniform," says a U.S. security expert. "There's always the danger of an innocent bystander getting hurt." His advice: Stay away from groups of policemen and soldiers.

Some 10,000 army troops have been assisting police prior to the Games, while 3,000 soldiers patrol the Pyrenese border with France and another 3,000 are deployed at airports, railway stations, power plants and other strategic sites.

Staunchly-proud Catalans, who demand autonomy for the Barcelona region, are more likely to resort to pranks than to terrorism, the security official says. "They might jump into a pool or foul up a race, but they're not seen as a major threat," he says.

Keep an eye out for muggers and pickpockets, though. Sleep late, dine late, and be prepared to spend plenty of pesetas. Cash and credit spoken here.

Time moves unevenly in Barcelona, fast and slow like the passionate and melancholy rhythms of flamenco. It is a city of lazy, languid mornings, bustling, steamy afternoons, balmy, romantic nights, and never-ending parties.

Antoni Gaudi's gaudy masterpiece, the multi-spired church of the Sagrada Familia, remains unfinished more than a century after it was begun. But hotels, arenas and thousands of businesses have sprouted in a flourish of enterprise since the 1975 death of dictator Francisco Franco set off celebrations in a city that hated him.

Barcelona, ravaged through history by invasions, plague and civil war, endures and thrives with all its problems. So, too, will its Olympics.

Another drug scandal may loom despite all the tests and warnings by the International Olympic Committee and legal tribulations of Butch Reynolds, who won his case in the U.S. courts, but lost on the track.

"There's a runner who I know is on steroids," says Johnny Gray, America's top 800-meter runner. "I've watched him use it. But he passes the drug tests. I don't know how. Every time I see him he kids me about it. He says, 'Johnny you should use it.'"

That runner, Gray said, is an American who won a gold medal at Seoul but didn't get caught like Canada's Ben Johnson, winner, then big loser, in the 100.

"He was using it at Korea," Gray said of the American, whose name he refuses to disclose. "I thought for sure he'd get busted. Other athletes also used drugs and didn't get caught. You can pretty much judge who's on steroids if you know the sport. You can judge by the consistency of the athlete."

Terry Todd, a former national weightlifting champion and kinesiology professor at the University of Texas, claims that "people are beating the drug tests right and left. In many ways, it's sort of a joke."

Many athletes are beating the tests by using drugs that mask the presence of steroids, sports scientists say. For every new test, there's a new drug that makes detection more difficult.

"Competing at the Olympic level is tantamount to being a pharmacologist," says Dr. Gary Wadler of Cornell University Medical College.

Swimmer Astrid Strauss, a silver medalist in 1988 for the drug-tainted East German team, recently was banned from the Olympics and all other competition for six months for unusually high testosterone levels that indicated steroid use.

Katrin Krabbe and two other German sprinters banned for alleged manipulation of drug tests, recently pulled out of the Games after four months of fighting the charges.

Not everyone is a cheater, and the innocent unfortunately and unfairly suffer from suspicions raised by the guilty.

Jackie Joyner-Kersee, the world's best female athlete in 1988, retains the power, speed and grace that brought her two golds in Seoul, without a hint of impropriety.

"I feel stronger, faster and healthier than I did four years ago," says Joyner-Kersee, who won the seven-event heptathlon and the long jump despite knee and Achilles tendon injuries.

World champion gymnast Kim Zmeskal is favored to flip-twist-leap to gold. The men's volleyball team, fired-up by the return of Steve Timmons, Jeff Stork and Bob Ctvrtlik, could be headed toward its third straight gold. Bone-cracking wrestler John Smith should lead a near-sweep in the freestyle events. The tennis team has No. 1-ranked Jim Courier on the clay he loves.

In swimming, the United States boasts a legion of young women capable of winning in world-record times. Nall, born on the fourth day of the 1976 Montreal Games, joins Sanders, Thompson and 20-year-old veteran Evans.

But give age the respect it's due on the men's squad with Matt Biondi, Pablo Morales, Tom Jager, Mike Barrowman and Melvin Stewart. Biondi, 27, won five golds, a silver and a bronze in Seoul, and is concentrating on only three races this time — the 50-and 100-meter freestyles and the 400 freestyle relay.

Nowhere is the United States likely to be more dominant, though, than on the basketball court — certainly with the men's team and almost certainly with the women's.

The so-called Dream Team, 11 of the NBA's best plus Duke's Christian Laettner, is so packed with talent it should make the rest of the world look silly, like the Harlem Globetrotters taking on their regular patsies. Never mind that most NBA teams are terrible on the road, or that even the best players need time to gel together.

Archaeological organization plans to buy well sites

■ National non-profit preservation group to purchase 9-acre tract of land at Mustang Springs.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

For about 2,500 years, beginning about 7,500 years ago, the high plains area — which includes Midland — was unbearably dry.

"It was far worse than anything we've ever seen historically. Basically you had a parched earth. It was a pretty inhospitable place," said David Meltzer, an archaeologist with Southern Methodist University.

As a result, ancient man abandoned the life-threatening climate, some archaeologists believed.

But evidence uncovered by Meltzer in recent years indicates that man may have weathered through that dry climatic period known as the Altithermal.

"It was dumb luck, I happened to be out there at the right time," Meltzer said of his discovery.

It was the spring of 1985 and Meltzer was visiting Midland to give a lecture about an unrelated matter.

While at Mustang Springs — an area about 20 miles northeast of Midland in Martin County — Meltzer noticed electric-company workers putting up a power pole.

The dirt from the hole had a bluish color.

"That was suspicious enough to make me curious about what lay beneath the surface," Meltzer said.

Blue or white dirt is indicative of a past presence of diatoms, tiny planktonic algae.

"That tells you there was a lake

Handcuffed man hijacks DPS trooper's cruiser

By Myra Lee Salcedo

ODESSA — A 17-year-old Odessa man remained in jail late Saturday following a wild early morning spree involving an accident, a stolen car, a hijacked DPS cruiser, an escape on foot and a manhunt, according to Department of Public Safety reports.

The eventful morning began about 12:30 a.m., when DPS troopers arrived at the scene of a one-vehicle rollover of a black 1982 Ford pickup on Farm-to-Market Road 2227.

When troopers arrived, they determined that the driver, Saul Estrada Ordaz, was uninjured. When Ordaz became combative, troopers suspected he was intoxicated and arrested him, according to reports.

The officers handcuffed Ordaz's hands behind his back and put him into the passenger side of a trooper's vehicle, reports said.

While troopers began to investigate the scene of the accident, Ordaz worked his hands — still cuffed — in front of his body. He then scooted over to the driver's seat and escaped in the trooper's

That car and a four-door Chevrolet were involved in the accident at the intersection of Garfield and Front streets. The vehicles came to rest far apart at the crossroads, and the Chevrolet crashed into the sign for the Little Rock Saloon, just west of the intersection. Drivers of both vehicles were transported to Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, but police and medical reports were not available late Saturday.

Old-timers go on parade in Martin County reunion

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

STANTON — The old-timers, who each year seem to be getting younger and younger, were closing down their "Ye Olde Brush Arbor Revival" parade float on a windy, sunny Saturday afternoon at the 59th annual Martin County Old Settlers' Day Reunion.

Dewitt Davis, decked out in a somber black suit, black top hat and bow tie, white shirt, and red suspenders, stood tall beneath the float's willow-covered lattice work like a fire-and-brimstone preacher.

"I didn't do any preaching," Davis, 66, confessed. "I was just there for looks."

So was the outhouse trailing the brush-arbor float.

"(It's) a real classic, too, built by the CCC (Civilian Conservation Corps), I think," said Gene Clements, a 65-year-old fiddling farmer.

Davis, a Stanton native, recalled how a long-ago old-timer had viewed the coming of indoor plumbing, indoor toilets, and rolled toilet paper.

"'People used to go outside to use the bathroom and go inside to eat,'" Davis said. "'Now, they go inside to use the bathroom and go out to eat.'"

His grandson, Gary Davis, 13, from Little Rock, Ark., rode the outhouse float. His main prop was an old Sears & Roebuck Company catalogue, which, for country folks, was somewhere between corncobs and rolled tissue paper.

"I had heard about outhouses before," the boy said, "but I had never been in one."

The Reunion Day parade, which some native Stanton folks said was the longest one yet, was headed by Dan Saunders, the Martin County sheriff who is in his 40th year in the post.

"Dan is a good fellow," said Davis, a retired truck driver. "Any man who can stay in public office 40 years and not be corrupted is bound to be a good man."

While many former and current Martin County people were at the Community Center getting a dose of gospel, country, patriotic or other music, a few others were bellying up to the soda-fountain bar at the Stanton Drug Store.

The town's main street, St. Peter, already had been washed down and cleaned up following high-spirited game playing: cow-chip throwing, Jell-O eating and bubble-gum blowing.

The drug store is somewhat of a landmark, along with the restored red-stone Martin County Old Jail, the Sisters of Mercy Convent and Academy being restored and the Martin County Historical Museum's Connell homestead.

Herminia "Herman" Gonzalez, 33, worked behind the store's soda fountain in her youth.

"Everybody comes over here (to the drug store) and gathers to drink coffee," Ms. Gonzalez said. "It's a gathering place, especially for the old folks."

Ruth Maness Green, at 75, said there are a lot of drug-store patrons "older than I am." Some are into their 90s.

Her 51-year-old daughter, Joyce "Tooter" Gerdes of Weatherford, returned to Stanton to see old friends, visit her parents, and expose her grandchildren to rural West

West Texas farmers recall bizarre weather

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

STANTON — Buster Haggard vividly remembers the seven-year drought in the 1950s when rain in West Texas was as rare as 3-percent bank interest rates are today.

Times were poor.

"We didn't have enough money to go to town and back," said Haggard, who farms in the old Valley View community up near a place that the homebodies call "Ignert Flat" but that passersby term "Ignorant Flat."

"We have seen lots of hard licks," the farmer said.

Back in the '50s, when sand blew whenever the wind got up, you would just about have to shovel sand off of the supper table to find grub, Haggard said.

"We have seen it blow sand day and night and day and night for days without any letup," Haggard, 59, said Saturday at the Martin County Old Settlers' Day Reunion.

"I got lost in my own field" once in 1951, he said.

Haggard, who didn't have to swap any tall-tales to talk about hard times and bizarre weather,

Life sometimes puts a sad, painful twist on our passions

Sometimes it is better to remember things as they were.

People too.

See if this sounds familiar.

You have a friend from the past and your memories of that person, while admittedly clouded by the passage of time, have remained strangely unique nonetheless. It is hard to put your finger on the exact reason, but you've always considered him to be a special individual, the kind who was a little different from all your other friends. Sort of a free spirit.

Ott

When he entered a room, the place lit up. He possessed a certain charm that lured people to his side. He had charisma, or in current political jargon, "a presence" that made him fun to be around.

Maybe it was because he could make you laugh, force you to see the good side of things, even when it seemed your entire world was crumbling. Perhaps it was due to the fact that he could stretch your mind, enabling you to see beyond the creative barriers that too often exist, limiting dreams and expectations.

Better yet, maybe it was because he was one of those truly decent human beings who made life more enjoyable for everyone with whom he came in contact.

I say "he," but, of course, it could just as easily be "she."

This type of person is not limited to a particular gender.

But they are few in number.

That's what makes them special. And that's why if you find one, you'd better not let him get away.

You could be a long time in finding another.

But as the first sentence of this column implies, there can be a sad and painful twist to all of this.

Simply put, the person in question just might up and change on you.

It happens. I know. I experienced it first hand the other day. And it has bothered me ever since.

The phone call came Tuesday morning. It was out of the clear blue, as they say, a flash from the past. We hadn't talked in years, and now all of sudden he was in Midland, just a few city blocks from where I sat. Strange indeed.

"I'm just passing through," he said. "Let's have lunch."

Plans were quickly arranged. I gave him a time and place. He said "no problem," and within 45 minutes we were reliving the past, rekindling old memories.

Still, something was different.

He said all the right words — we talked about college politics, foolish antics from our youth and old friends — yet, something was missing. As he spoke, I studied his face, searching for clues.

Maybe it was in his eyes. They didn't dance with anticipation like I had remembered. There was a seriousness, bordering on sadness, that seemed to have replaced the youthful exuberance that had always been his trademark.

Sure, time had passed, and certainly we have all matured over the years, but it was more than the aging process.

But what? I couldn't be sure. I only knew that changes had occurred.

There was a tiredness about him. The energy that had always been so much a part of his personality was missing. To use an old cliche, he had lost the bounce in his step.

The more we talked, the more obvious it became.

There was a cynicism, a jadedness, about him that I didn't remember. He said things like, "What's the use?" "There's nothing I can do about it." "Who cares?"

And there was no attempt at wit in his voice. He was stating the fact. He really didn't care.

Finally, I asked him. "What's wrong? You seem depressed."

He shrugged. "Not really. I'm just getting by. Everyone deals with life the best way they can." Then he shrugged again.

I asked him about the passion — the lust for living — for which he was so famous. "You used to tell me that everyday was a new adventure, that the biggest sin a man could commit was to let one of those adventures slip away without being fully experienced."

He laughed. "Sounds pretty good. Did I really say that?"

We both laughed some more.

Then he turned serious. "I just don't care about things as much as I used to. You said 'passion' awhile ago. That was a good choice of words. I don't have it any more. It disappeared. I used to wake up, go outside, breathe in the fresh air and literally get excited.

"Now, I don't have that enthusiasm. Life is more of a burden. I'm not what you would call unhappy. I just don't care. I'm bored."

With that, we paid up and went our separate ways. I thought of the old days one more time. It made me sad.

As I drove away in my car I put "The Best of B.B. King" in the tape deck.

Somehow, the blues seemed appropriate.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Odessa collision injures four people

Staff report

ODESSA — Four persons were transported to Medical Center Hospital following a two-car accident near Penwell about 11:40 a.m. Saturday.

Auden Vega, 17, of Odessa, was driving a 1990 GMC pickup eastbound on Interstate 20 when he apparently fell asleep at the wheel, according to Texas Department of Public Safety reports.

Vega veered left into oncoming traffic. He collided with a 1989 Dodge van traveling west on I-20. Nila Araujo, 38, of Roland Heights, Calif., was driving the van.

Vega was listed in stable condition with cuts, bruises and possible internal injuries late Saturday night.

His passenger, Jose Corrales, 22 of Odessa, was reported in serious condition with head and neck injuries and a broken pelvis.

Ms. Araujo, was reported in stable condition with a broken nose and kneecap, bruises and cuts. Her passenger, Alfredo Araujo, 13, also of California, was treated and released.

All four occupants of the vehicles were wearing seatbelts.

Woman remains jailed

Staff report

The 21-year-old woman who allegedly attempted to rob Bank of the West in Odessa Friday, remained in custody Saturday in the Midland County Detention Facility.

Kristen Lea McDaid, who told officials she is a California resident, is being held by order of U.S. Marshals pending federal charges.

She was apprehended about 1 p.m. Friday at the bank, located at 1601 W. University, after slipping a note to a teller demanding $10,000, police said.

said that his 42-year-old farmer-daughter, Ann Schafer, "never saw it rain for six years — (not) until she started to school."

However, Haggard confessed, "It came a little ol' shower or two between dust storms" but no rain fell on the family farm until 1957.

Ms. Schafer, who farms north of Garden City in Glasscock County while her husband, Hugh, ranches and works as a pumper on oil leases, remembered the drought and her first rain.

"It didn't rain until 1957," she said, "and I was in the first grade."

Haggard said that his daughter "can drive a tractor as good as anybody. I taught her how. She's a pretty good farmer."

While the West Texas farming country in 1992 is hardly drought-stricken because of recent generous rains, some Martin County farm land has been "hailed out, rained out, or blown out," said Kathryn Burch, a Martin County history buff and weather watcher.

Sammy Yates, a 55-year-old "young" old-timer who farms cotton in the Lenorah community, figured that West Texas farmers have "got the best chance" of making a fair crop "we have had in years. And it's a chance."

LAND: Group plans purchase of well sites

there once," Meltzer said. "And lakes and ponds are usually attractions for humans."

With the thought that evidence of human activity was in the sediment, Meltzer returned that summer.

"I was cutting with a backhoe and cut through a well," he said.

In 1987, Meltzer returned and excavated the site with financial assistance from the National Geographic Society and the Potts-Sibley Foundation of Midland.

Meltzer discovered a dry lake bed surface that had formed during the Altithermal buried more than six feet underground.

In the exposed lake bed, early man had dug more than 50 water wells within a 750 square-foot area. The well holes were from under a foot to six feet deep and averaged two feet in diameter.

"They are exceedingly rare on the high plains," Meltzer said.

"It tells us about people's ability to cope and adapt to drought," he said.

In order to allow study of the wells and humans who resided in the area, the Archaeological Conservancy, a national non-profit preservation organization, is purchasing the 9.17-acre tract of land, said Jim Walker, southwest regional director of the Santa Fe, N.M.-based organization.

"It's amazing we are able to go back and piece this story back together," Walker said.

Information contained at the well site can tell scientist about the climate changes and how man adapted, Walker said.

"We hope at some time this site will be excavated and open to the public. There is an important story to tell about early man in West Texas," he said.

"These are perhaps the earliest wells ever drilled by man discovered in the area," Walker said.

The wells were apparently drilled by people seeking water.

"They discovered if they drilled wells where the lake was they would discover water," he said.

After the Altithermal period and the climate improved, about 5,000 years ago, a lake reappeared, Walker said.

"For thousands of years there was a lake at Mustang Springs and old-timers remember swimming in it," Walker said.

But during the 1940s, during heavy irrigation use, the water table dropped and the lake disappeared.

As for why the lake dried up the first time: "It's really not known. It was time of dramatic climate change all over the world," Walker said.

On Friday, Meltzer will be in Midland to give a lecture titled: "Human Adaptation Under Stress: The Archaeology of Mustang Springs." The lecture, open to the public, will be at 7 p.m. at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

The lecture also will start the Conservancy's drive to fund acquisition of the preserve and provide an opportunity for the Midland Archaeological Society to present a special award of appreciation to Margaret Bissel, in honor of contributions by her late husband, Col. C.E. Bissel and their family in conserving and preserving High Plains archaeological records.

Professor's poll shows Perot pulling ahead

HOUSTON (AP) — Ross Perot held a sizable lead among Texas voters over President Bush and Democratic candidate Bill Clinton in a poll last week of 683 registered Texas voters, according to The Houston Post and Houston television station KHOU-TV, who commissioned the poll.

Of the 683 voters surveyed from Sunday through Thursday, 34 percent were reported as favoring Perot, 27 percent as supporting Bush and 22 percent as backing Clinton.

The poll, conducted by the Rice Institute for Policy Analysis, has a margin of error of plus or minus 4.5 percent.

Rice University political scientist Bob Stein coordinated the poll.

Six percent of those surveyed said they supported none of the top three candidates and 11 percent said they were undecided or wanted to keep their preferences private.

Of the substantial number of undecided voters surveyed, most said they were leaning toward Bush.

Bush also leads his opponents in the number of supporters who say they are unwilling to consider voting for another candidate.

Much of Perot's Texas support comes from white voters, the poll shows. Of the white voters surveyed, most said they back Perot, with Bush coming in a close second.

Clinton, who garnered the support of a mere 16 percent of the whites surveyed, outdid his opponents among blacks and Hispanics.

PARADE: Old Settlers' Reunion lures residents back

(From 1C)

Texas life, in a town where Sheriff Saunders is pretty much the law.

"My daddy always had him (Sheriff Saunders) keep an eye on us to keep us out of trouble," Ms. Gerdes reflected.

Did it work?

"Pretty good," the daughter said.

"Fair to middling," said her mother.

Stanton prides itself on being the "Home of 3,000 friendly people and a few old soreheads."

Brenda Kaye Kendall, who, at 35, views herself as one of Stanton's growing corps of good-humored soreheads, said the community will "sorely" miss Saunders, when he retires as sheriff.

"Dan is just an institution," she said. "He has been here (as sheriff) 40 years. Dan knows everybody. He knows what you have done and haven't done."

Saunders, a gentle, sentimental fellow who led the "Those-Were-The-Days" parade on a ranch horse obviously more accustomed to the pasture than to the downtown streets, earlier had viewed the Old Settlers' Reunion as "a fun day, a memorial day, a remembrance day."

And the sheriff, like the old-timers on the brush-arbor float, recalled those old, country days of outhouses. Any running water was in creeks or from windmill-pumped water wells.

Saunders grew up on a Lenorah cotton farm in north Martin County in the 1930s.

"When I was a kid," Saunders recalled, "we had a cotton sack hanging over the doorway of our outhouse."

But back then, people in the more well-to-do Courtney farming community "had a regular door" on their outhouses.

"And I was jealous," Saunders reflected. "I thought, 'Boy, if I can ever live to have a regular door on an outhouse instead of a cotton sack hanging there, that would be the height of my ambition.'"

Times have changed.

"And now," said Saunders, who lives in town, "we all go inside."

car.

Ordaz began driving the car north on FM 2227. He pulled off to a service road of Interstate 20 and began driving west, then drove west on Murphy Street, DPS reported.

Officers pursued Ordaz for a distance of 10½ miles while he traveled in speeds of more than 100 mph. While he eluded officers, Ordaz used the police radio to threaten suicide and to ram the cars of pursuing officers, according to reports.

At one point Ordaz slowed his car to between 10-20 mph, jumped out of the moving vehicle, and escaped on foot, the officers reported.

One trooper was able to stop the driverless vehicle. A manhunt then ensued, involving DPS, the Ector County Sheriff's Department and the Ward County Sheriff's Department. The search began about 12:41 a.m. — roughly 11 minutes after the troopers had arrived at the scene of the rolled-over pickup.

At 6:10 a.m. a citizen informed troopers that Ordaz was underneath the overpass at the intersection at Farm-to-Market Road 1936 and I-20. Troopers proceeded to the location where they found Ordaz at 6:20 a.m. — with his hands still cuffed in front of him — and took him into custody without further incident, DPS reported.

Ordaz had traveled 6.8 miles on foot from the time he escaped from the moving vehicle.

Officers later determined that the black 1982 Ford pickup involved in the rollover had been stolen from the parking lot of Los Arcos Ballroom, according to the report.

Ordaz was charged with unlawful use of a motor vehicle, a third degree felony.

Justice of the Peace J.E. Pressly set bond at $10,000. Ordaz had not posted bond and remained in Ector County Jail late Saturday night, officials there said.

Import regulations hurt U.S. business, merchants say

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — U.S. merchants say newly enforced import regulations in Mexico that limit border residents to $50 per shopping trip to the United States are hurting Brownsville business.

Tamaulipas federal officials are trying to change the regulations.

Mexican Customs officials began enforcing the 2-year-old law in early June, former Customs chief Jose Alberto Valdez Villarreal said.

Traffic lights with push buttons were installed on the Mexican side of both Brownsville international bridges, to determine which cars would be inspected by Mexican Customs. Drivers who get a green light are waved on; a red light results in an inspection.

The crackdown was needed "to give the Mexican government credibility," he said. "People were bringing in contraband almost at will."

The regulation allows residents of Central Mexico a duty-free limit of up to $300; it limits border residents to $50, Valdez said.

"It's a very unfair law — it's harming the border's economy," said Downtown Merchants' Association President Joe Calapa.

The enforcement began just in time for the busy summer season, he said, when "tourists come up from all over Mexico to buy."

Opponents draw battle lines in homestead law debate

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin bureau

AUSTIN — The debate over Texas' status as the only state forbidding home owners to use their home equity as collateral for borrowing money has roots that go back more than 150 years.

State homestead laws, first enacted in 1839, prohibit foreclosure on a home except for default on the first mortgage, debt for a home improvement loan or unpaid property taxes.

Homestead law opponents say huge amounts of wealth are locked into houses, and people who need the money cannot get to it. Changing the laws could create billions of dollars in new capital to spur the economy, they say.

But homestead law supporters say they protect families from losing their homes because of debt unrelated to the home itself. They point to the latest recession and wonder how many more people would be homeless if they had been permitted to take on additional debt they couldn't repay.

As might be expected, special interest groups are doing the debating, and the issue is an economic one.

Banks, thrifts, credit unions and consumer lenders want the homestead laws changed. They see home equity as a vast, safe and profitable market for loans.

Realtors, consumer groups and labor unions are lined up against changes. Realty agents believe if home owners borrow out their equity, they will not be able to move up in the marketplace by selling their homes and buying larger ones. Currently, the only way for Texans to get the cash value build-up in their home is to sell it.

Lending groups have tried in every legislative session this century except last year's, to modify the homestead laws. So far, they have had little success. But sensing that the time might be right, they are gearing up for a major assault in 1993.

Because most of the homestead laws are in the constitution, it will take a two-thirds vote in both houses of the Legislature to get anything on a statewide ballot.

Members of a coalition called the Texas Conference on Homeowners' Rights include the Texas Bankers Association, Independent Bankers Association, Texas Savings & Loan League, Texas Mortgage Bankers Association and Texas Financial Services Association.

On the opposite side are organizations such as the Texas Association of Realtors, Texas Consumers Association, Public Citizen and Texas AFL-CIO.

State leaders of the American Association of Retired Persons are surveying members to determine their position. Texas AARP members have opposed previous efforts to change the homestead laws, although their national association supports a type of second mortgage called a "reverse home equity mortgage."

The reverse mortgage works for senior citizens who have paid for their homes but who need additional income to live on. They cannot borrow more than the value of the home, and they are protected from foreclosure. When they die, their heirs can sell the property and pay the debt.

Some lawmakers have suggested a compromise to permit home equity lending, but only for specific purposes, such as to pay for a college education, to start a new business or for medical emergencies.

In other states, homeowners have used equity loans to pay credit card debt and car loans. One reason is that the interest on home loans is deductible from federal income taxes, while interest on consumer debt is not.

Most banks would make loans equal to 80 percent of the equity. If an appraiser valued a home at $100,000, and the owner owed $50,000 on it, a bank would lend an amount equal to 80 percent of the $50,000 equity. Some banks would lend 90 or 95 percent, depending upon the homeowner's income and other debt.

Rob Norcross, general counsel for the Texas Bankers Association in Austin, said statistics compiled by states show home equity loans have lower default rates than any other type of loan, including auto, consumer and first mortgage home loans.

He said supporters cite three primary reasons for equity loans:

"One, 49 other states have them and there hasn't been a disaster; in fact, they've worked very well. Texas is only state that is lagging behind.

"Two, Texans are very independent, and it irks a great many of them that the state is telling them what they can and can't do with their money.

"And three, it is common in other states for hard-working couples to borrow against their equity to send their kids to college.

"Other people want to start their own business and, in Texas, a lot of them are turned down because they don't have enough collateral. Their option is to sell their home and move into a cheaper house. In other states, they can stay in their home and borrow the money for the business."

Lenders also are conservative and examine any loan request carefully, he added. Banks don't want to get into the foreclosure business, take possession of a house and pay on the first mortgage while they try to dispose of the property, he said.

Texans should have all the financial options to manage their economic affairs, other bankers said.

And still others asked why consumer groups believe that Texans, alone in the 50 states, are too irresponsible or too easily conned to use home equity loans wisely.

The Texas Association of Realtors takes a different view.

"Our position is very simple. We are opposed to any change in the homestead laws," said Charles Betts, director of administration.

"Think how much worse residential foreclosures might have been from 1985 to 1990 had Texans borrowed up to the limit on their homesteads," Betts said. "My guesstimate is average property values declined 35 to 40 percent during that time. Had Texans borrowed on their equities, the foreclosure problem — as bad as it was, and as bad as it still is — might have been a great deal worse."

Betts said there is no groundswell of equity-lending support from citizens. All the impetus is from bankers and consumer lenders, "who are looking for additional sources of collateral to further secure their loans," he said.

'State-of-the-art' computer system takes getting used to at MC

By H.A. Tuck

If this edition of Letter From College seems a bit disjointed, blame it on the computer age. This past week, after working with a rather "user friendly" word processing system for eight years, we received new "state-of-the-art" computer systems for the Public Relations Department. This has meant learning many new key-strokes, commands and phrases that are recognized and acceptable to the new system.

Tuck

It's also meant developing a new communications system for transmitting stories from the office to the newspaper.

The fact that this is appearing is a credit to the departmental secretary, Mary Lopez; the patience of campus systems coordinator Paul Porter; and various other computer gurus who inhabit the place.

Oh, we were told to get acquainted with the equipment by playing some of its already-installed games. How wonderful to report that we played Solitaire and various other games most of the day. The result is that we were better at Solitaire than Ms. Lopez. So much for compter literacy.

Midland College was in Sports Illustrated magazine's July 6 issue. Joe Williams, the college's highly successful tennis coach, was saluted in SI's "Faces in the Crowd" section for leading the women's team to three consecutive national team titles, plus a runner-up finish for the men. It was a fitting salute for Williams, who had become the most successful tennis coach in the junior college ranks.

And the icing on the cake might have been that the photo of Williams was made by John Faught, a Midland College graduate.

Oh yes, there will be an announcement soon about the future utilization of the Midland College tennis complex, now that varsity tennis won't be using the courts. The courts, for the most part, are available for open play when they aren't being used for college physical education classes. The original 12 courts and the tennis shop were constructed as a joint project by MC and the city of Midland.

And the Armstrong Tennis Shop is still open Monday-Saturday with a nice assortment of clothing, shoes, tennis accessories, instruction and quickest stringing service you can imagine.

Registration was some weeks ago, but there are a few openings left for students in "Teens on Campus" that begins Monday. TOC is for youngsters who have completed seventh or eighth grades. They can enroll for one or two classes for a two-week session, Monday-Thursday afternoons. The single session ends July 23.

The second of Kids' College at Midland College is planned for the same dates. There might be some openings in a few classes for these youngsters as well. Kids' College is open to children who have completed first through sixth grades. They have three class sessions daily, but may register for one, two or three classes.

If you are interested, call 685-4518 Monday morning and get the details.

With a bit of luck, the new entrance/exit road to the campus will be open this week. The short road is being constructed to allow traffic to enter or leave the campus from Garfield Street, where it intersects with (south) Siesta. The road curves to intersect with Chaparral Circle just northwest of the Student Center. There won't be a traffic signal at the new intersection, but it should relieve peak-time traffic congestion at the Garfield at Wadley intersection, especially for those leaving the campus and wishing to go north on Garfield.

One out of four teenagers in the United States is a high school dropout. In Texas, the number is one in three. This sobering statistic is the subject of a new public-service video produced by the Texas Young Lawyers Association.

The video, aimed at an adolescent audience, provides a stark view of five young convicts, all high school dropouts. The documentary-style video was filmed in the maximum security prison in Huntsville.

The video will be available on a free-loan basis through the Public Information Department of the State Bar of Texas in Austin.

For information call (512) 463-1520.

Odessa College trustees to tackle budget issues

Staff report

The Odessa College Board of Trustees are set to begin grappling with the college's 1992-'93 budget Tuesday.

At issue is a $300,000 shortfall.

According to preliminary figures from the Ector County Appraisal District, the college would generate $300,000 less next year in ad valorem taxes if the tax rate remained at the current 16.49 cents per $100 of assessed property valuation.

Roger Coomer, OC vice president for business affairs, said trustees will discuss whether to hold the line on taxes by adopting the effective tax rate of 17.15 cents — which would be the rate needed to raise the same amount of taxes as this year or to keep the current tax rate and thereby lower taxes.

Another method to make up for the $300,000 tax revenue shortfall — which is the result of declining values for oil, gas and real estate — would be to increase tutition by $2 per semester hour, Coomer said. The increase would result in Ector County residents paying $14 per semester hour, up from the current per-semester-hour rate of $12.

Trustees will also discuss giving OC employees salary increases for the school year beginning Sept. 1.

Luxurious townhomes in the French tradition

By Sonia Merrick

One of Midland's best-kept secrets is this exquisitely lovely and peaceful neighborhood. It seems to have been transported from the French Quarter and carefully tucked just off a typical West Texas street.

At the center of its brick thoroughfare is a long, landscaped strip — it boasts mature trees, a gurgling fountain and a profusion of blooms and flowers. The street itself is flanked by lovely townhomes, some exteriors are tiny colored, all vary, all are beautifully landscaped. Although the homes are new, they create the illusion of having been there forever.

It is in this serene little neighborhood that we climb the stairs to one of these lovely homes.

Open the door to a small yet very light, tile-floored foyer. Facing are plantation shutters behind which lies a formal dining area. To the left is an elegant formal living area — with plush champagne-colored carpeting and a stone fireplace with built-ins to one side. Large windows present a delightful view of the park-like main street.

The formal dining room boasts chair-back molding. Straight ahead is a large, very functional kitchen. White tile floors, double oven, dishwasher, abundant cabinet and counter space make it a lovely, convenient work area for the most discriminating of cooks.

Past the formal living and dining areas, at the back of the house, find a cozy den with a splendid view of the enclosed rear courtyard. One wall is all windows and doors that visually bring the perfectly manicured patio and yard area indoors. The patio is covered, tiled and has a slate floor.

Climb them to find a large master suite on the left. Right off of it is a huge master bath with long vanity area, double sinks, lots of built-ins, one of the suite's two walk-in closets and a separate shower.

In the center of a hall is a conveniently located laundry room.

At the other end of the second floor, find another large full bath and a second, sizeable bedroom that overlooks the courtyard.

Other amenities include plantation shutters and ceiling fans throughout, downstairs powder room, two-car garage with opener, lots of storage, fresh flower beds.

This home is offered by Chaparral Realtors for $93,500.

This home will be open from 1 to 5 p.m. today. Call 694-6933 or 686-7000 for information.

The value of a Homeowners' Association

The overall appeal of the subdivision affects the value of housing in the entire neighborhood. Newer subdivisions have Homeowners' Associations to help ensure the beautification and safety of the neighborhood, which, in turn, affects the value of the home.

A Homeowners' Association formed by residents acts as the governing body for the neighborhood. The Association sets rules and restrictions for the residents to live by and enforces action on those who don't.

The enforcement of these restrictions causes many residents to be non-supportive of the governing Association. Usually, the non-supportive residents are the offenders. Maybe they did not have time to mow their yard ALL MONTH. If their truck has been sitting in their driveway for three months, so what? These "eyesores" can make a beautifully manicured house next door decline in value.

A potential home owner notices immediately if there is an active Homeowners' Association. The Homeowners' Association is responsible for maintaining the surrounding grounds, swimming pool, club house, tennis courts and the overall safety of residents. By enforcing restrictions the Association may hire security guards, landscape contractors, life guards with money collected from minimal yearly dues. The minimal yearly dues are well worth the services provided as well as the added benefit of keeping the value of a home.

How to keep your deck from decaying

AP Special Features

Whispering breezes and the tangy scent of barbecue can make life on your deck seem heavensent. A few splotches of rotten wood or a few niches carved by hungry termites, however, can cloud your sunny perceptions in a hurry.

Here's how to plan to save your deck:

■ Sketch your plan of attack by first determining what wood species was used in your deck. Most common are redwood, Western red cedar, and cypress heartwood — all possess tremendous natural resistance to rot. Other untreated woods are easy prey for decay. Softer pines — firs, spruces, and hemlock — are usually pressure-treated with preservatives for an added injection of strength.

■ All decking, however, needs backup protection. Heartwoods and other finished woods require immediate treatment. Pressure-treated lumber can also be treated immediately.

■ Liquid protection is easy to use but tough to select. There are many water coats, sealers, repellents, and preservatives to choose from.

■ Water-repellents prevent moisture from penetrating and causing mildew, warping, and decay. Experts suggest oil-base products, and some companies also offer alkyd stains.

■ Mildewcides, or wood preservers, guard against mildew fungi. The mildew, usually gray or black, thrives in moist, shaded areas.

■ Pigmented sealants reflect sizzling ultraviolet rays, which can crack your deck and sap the color. Protectants include colored or semitransparent stains, bleaching stains for a weathered look, or clear natural-wood products that show off the grain.

■ Insecticidal additives can quash bug woes. Specific termite-control products may be needed in severe cases. Most homeowners, however, can defeat pests by maintaining good airflow around the lumber, keeping the deck clear of standing water and debris, and not letting vegetation or the ground stay in contact with the wood.

If you need only water protection, an all-purpose product may not work as efficiently as one specifically designed for that problem. Otherwise, choose a product that covers all of your needs.

Prepare the deck surface before applying a protectant: Sweep it, wash it, and let it dry thoroughly. Scrub away most discolorations with a household cleaner or bleach. To keep your deck fresh, reapply protective coats every year or two.

Here are just a few of the many reasons to hire a real estate professional

If time is no object, you may want to try selling your home without an agent. But rather than saving money, the do-it-yourselfer approach may cause you to lose it.

Most homes don't sell themselves. The time and trouble of attracting prospects, showing them your home, finding out what their needs are and completing the paperwork could cost you more in personal and financial terms than what a real estate agent would earn in commissions.

And, to make matters worse, the price you get when you sell your home yourself might be less than what an agent could help you sell it for.

A good agent does a lot more than just put up a yard sign to attract a few buyers. Here are the services you should expect an agent to provide.

■ Help you set a price that attracts buyers.

■ Gather all the data that will present your home and your neighborhood to their best advantage.

■ Target the market for your home — determine who the most likely buyers will be and judge the best way to reach them.

■ Qualify the lookers. Weed out the half-interested buyers and drive-bys who are more curious about seeing your home than buying it.

■ Eliminate the total strangers who may want to tour your house in preparation for breaking into it later.

■ Show your home to serious lookers.

■ Provide financing information that may clinch the sale for the vast number of prospects who don't have their home financing arranged already.

■ Help you in negotiations with buyers.

■ Handle all necessary paperwork and perform all the legwork involved in final negotiations.

■ Guide you through the complicated settlement and closing procedures.

BRIEFING

Oil prices

More workover rigs were out last week, stimulated by higher oil prices. However, oil prices this week tumbled from $22.10 to $21.40, brought about by fear of excessive supplies and lower than expected demand. Prices increased to $22.10 last week, as a result of technical factors in the market, and because buyers did not want to be caught short over the holiday weekend.

Safety review

The needs and benefits of oil company safety programs are reviewed in an article by oil writer Mella McEwen, who looks at why one company's workmen's comp cost has fallen 80 percent, while another company has gone six years without a loss-time accident.

Fire safety

A new training facility jointly sponsored by Amoco and the City of Brownfield will help train volunteer fighters around the Permian Basin in putting out oilfield fires.

OSHA calling

In a recent informal survey of members of Texas Association of Business (TAB), the majority of respondents answered that proposed reforms to the Occupation Safety and Health Act of 1970 (OSHA) will increase government regulation of private business.

Under the new rules, companies with 11 or more employees would establish at each work site a safety and health committee composed of equal numbers of employer and employee representatives, and OSHA would conduct work site inspections in response to any complaints, including anonymous ones.

Net down

WASHINGTON — The net income of a group of 20 major oil companies fell 57.2 percent during the first quarter of the year compared to the same period a year ago, the American Petroleum Institute reports.

It was the poorest three-month period for the companies surveyed since the fourth quarter of 1986.

By contrast, API said, the net income of a group of 100 non-oil companies rose 103 percent compared to the first three months of 1991.

According to an analysis by the institute, net income of the 29 oil companies in the first quarter amounted to $2.6 billion. A year ago it was $5.8 billion. Non-oil company first quarter income was $14.3 billion compared to $7.1 billion in 1991.

The analysis shows that the oil companies surveyed experienced an even sharper drop-off in their estimated operating income (net income before non-recurring and special items).

Concho Valley

Next week's Oil Report will focus on the Concho Valley and the San Angelo area.

Awareness is key to safety

■ A safety company, drilling company and oil company tout benefits of quality safety instruction.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

Ask any oil company safety official what is the prime ingredient in a safety program and he will tell you awareness.

The better the information and the better it is communicated, the greater the awareness and the better the safety program. It's that simple and that's the reason oil companies and service firms are continually looking for better ways to communicate safety awareness.

There is no question that safety programs work. Since safety instruction intensified more than a decade ago, accidents have decreased dramatically saving the industry millions. Industrywide, the accident rate, which includes offsohre activity, has fallen from 3.91 accidents per 200,000 manhours in 1987 to 2.49 in 1991.

In the domestic land drilling category, the decline is even more dramatic, dropping from 9.14 accidents per 200,000 manhours in 1987 to 6.59 in 1991.

To the individual companies achieving those rates, reduced accidents can represent tremendous savings. If three accidents are eliminated per 200,000 manhours, and each accident has the nominal cost of $20,000, it would total savings of $60,000 per 200,000 manhours. It is little wonder, then, that safety awards are a traditional ritual for most companies in the industry and safety records are posted for everyone to see.

"There is tremendous savings potential for safety," said Stephanie Sparkman, marketing manager for Diamond S Safety in Midland, "and that's why the focus is now on the quality of safety education to make employees more safety aware."

Focus on OILFIELD SAFETY

"Quality makes the difference," she said. "Too many firms often just go through the motions of teaching safety for obligation purposes and don't get the desired results."

She noted that the way information is presented can make a difference. "We try to impress upon them the fact that life-saving equipment is not there because its the law, but because it saves lives."

Because presentation makes a difference in awareness, companies resort to a variety of unique training and reporting techniques. Some, like Schlumberger's Safety & Environment Passport is an in-house approach while FWA Drilling Co. utilizes a store-bought program, and Fina Inc. creates authentic drills.

The Schlumberger passport, which looks like a real passport, has a place for employee photo and personal information such as details about blood type, allergies, injuries and other in-

Cleaning up the 'patch'

■ The move toward a drug-free oilpatch has had a very positive impact on safety.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

When a young roughneck was asked: "What's the best thing to happen to the oilpatch in recent years?" He didn't hesitate in his reply. "Getting the dopers off the rigs," he said.

While there are still some roughnecks that will occassionally test positive on a drug test, it is nothing like it used to be, says Ronald Backer PhD., lab director for Harrison & Associates of Midland.

"In the oilpatch about 10 percent still test positive for drugs, that is higher than other industries, but far less than it once was when companies would test as hight as 38 percent. In California it went as high as 72 percent for some oil service companies."

Harrison & Associates, which recently received the National Institute of Drug Abuse certification, is one of the nation's leading forensic laboratories, conducting drug and alcohol tests for companies in over 30 states.

Roy Harrison, owner of the testing company, says the impact of drug

Oil companies up overseas spending

■ Survey shows trend toward overseas spending is still on the increase.

HOUSTON (AP) — Money spent for oil and gas exploration and development overseas jumped 27 percent last year to $31.4 billion as publicly held energy companies continued a trend to invest outside the United States, a survey released Tuesday showed.

The same analysis of 241 publicly traded companies by the Houston office of the accounting firm of Arthur Andersen & Co. showed domestic spending down 4 percent to $17.7 billion. Five years ago, the survey showed spending equally divided between domestic and foreign.

The 241 companies account for more than 60 percent of all U.S. oil and gas reserves and production. Tuesday's results mark the fifth consecutive year spending by those firms showed increases overseas.

"Companies have to look for the most bang for their buck and most of the opportunities are out of the United States," said Victor A. Burk, managing director of oil and gas services for Arthur Andersen. "Areas (in the United States) that offer the most potential for reserves now are closed to drilling."

The cost of doing business also is much higher in the United States.

"Outside the U.S., from an administrative standpoint, it's generally much easier to operate," Burk said, pointing out that companies doing business overseas routinely deal with a government-operated oil monopoly rather than layers of federal, state and local government bureaucracies in the United States.

While the companies are not abandoning domestic production, the firms more likely are looking for niches in the United States, Burk said.

"The magnitude of, and the continuing increases in, exploration and development spending outside the U.S. are confirming signs of the energy industry's globalization," he said. "Unfortunately, it also means that, in exploration and production and in oilfield services, global trends have resulted in job losses in the U.S."

He noted that over the past decade, job losses in the domestic energy industry have totaled some 400,000, including 40,000 this year. He speculated another 40,000 to 50,000 would be lost in the next year.

Markey-Scheuer threatens energy bill

Pitts

The Markey-Scheuer Amendment to the National Energy Bill has sort of taken a back seat in recent weeks, amid political promises that the amendment would be stripped in the Senate-House Conference Committee. But now it looks like the onerous law, that seeks to control natural gas proration in Texas, is not as dead as predicted by some.

According to a briefing paper sent by Texas Railroad Commissioner Bob Krueger to certain members of the press and members of the oil industry, the proponents of Markey-Scheuer may have the upper hand in this confrontation and getting the amendment stripped may not be the cinch some suspected.

Complicating the matter is the fact that the amendment could be introduced on the Senate floor. Krueger points out that if someone like Sen. Bill Bradley of New Jersey, who supports the amendment, offers the Markey-Scheuer Amendment for debate on the Senate floor that it will most likely pass, in which case it would not go to the conference committee for debate, but would remain a part of the final bill.

If that happens there are only three ways remaining in which the amendment could be defeated and none look too appealing: First, the amendment could be filibustered. Two, it could be voted down by the entire Senate, and three it could be killed by trading the consumer states something for their willingness to sacrifice Markey-Scheuer — perhaps some aspects of FERC Order 636, as Krueger points out.

Of the first option, to filibuster, Krueger doesn't sound optimistic about this prospect and notes that no one has yet come forward with a pledge to filibuster the bill.

Secondly, the Railroad Commissioner sees little hope that the entire energy bill will be voted down, just because of the amendment, because the Senate wants to see an energy bill this year.

That leaves only the blackmail option of trading something we need for something we can't stand. What would that something be? What could the liberal, northeastern political thugs take away from the oil industry that they haven't already taken away?

Krueger notes that many of the consuming states view Order 636 as favorable to the natural gas producers and not favorable to consumers. "Some in Washington believe that producers may be requested to give up some benefits offered to them in FERC Order 636 in order to keep the Markey-Scheuer Amendment from being considered in the Senate," he noted.

It is a notion that is about as appealing as child abuse. The very thought of having to give up decades of diligent effort to decontrol natural gas and put producers and pipelines on a competitive, level playing field, in exchange for removing a clearly punitive and oppressive piece of legislation is enough to make the skin crawl.

To do so would be a slap in the face of Martin Allday and company at FERC who have suffered abuse, frustration and midnight oil to clean up one of the biggest regulatory messes in our time. It would also be a kick-in-the-teeth to producers who would have to continue to suffer under some of the lowest prices in history.

Any Texas politician who would think for a moment about a "capitulation" along these lines should be drummed out of office by voters. It is this kind of dealing that has caused Americans to turn their noses up at the art of "political compromise."

For one reason or another Krueger failed to mention two other options to kill the Markey-Scheuer Amendment. They are the presidential veto and the U.S. Supreme Court.

In an interview with Energy Secretary James Watkins last week, he flat out told me that the amendment was "vetoable." He was outraged that the Energy Bill should get bogged down with this counter-productive legislation. However, it is difficult to say exactly what "vetoable" means in political-speak. I took it to mean that the president would veto an energy bill that contained the amendment. On the other hand, it may not have been a promise at all.

But that still leaves the Supreme Court. Legal experts believe the amendment, which interferes with the regulation of a state's natural resources, could be challenged on constitutional grounds.

One would hope that this confrontation would not come down to a veto or U.S. Supreme Court battle, but the way it's looking those options become stronger everyday.

AWARENESS: Counts

formation. It also contains information about the company's safety philosophy, hazardous situations and materials and the employee's personal safety training.

FWA utilizes a safety awareness program marketed by DuPont.

Called STOP, the purpose of the program is to prevent all unsafe acts in the workplace with non-critical instructions.

"The program is working very well for us," said Sid Hicks, FWA's safety director. "Statistics show that 96 percent of all accidents are caused by unsafe acts. To stop accidents, one needs to stop unsafe acts."

Hicks said few drilling companies are using the program so far, but he expects more will follow. He said it takes about six months to implement the quality communication program, then a series of refresher courses to keep it on track.

Working primarily on the supervisory level, it is designed to make employees aware of unsafe practices by immediately stopping work to ask employees critical and non-offensive questions.

"For instance," said Hicks, "a driller might stop running drill pipe walk over to a floor hand and ask him if he is aware that where he is standing might result in an injury if the backup tongs were to slip."

The employee will not be criticized but he will be asked to explain why he is standing where he is and why he is doing what he is doing, said Hicks. In training sessions employees might be asked to explain what would happen if a bolt fell from the top of a derrick onto a head without a hard hat.

"Employees become aware very quickly of unsafe acts," Hicks said. "That is the point of the program to increase awareness of dangerous acts."

To reinforce the program, FWA provides a safety bonus for no-loss time from accidents on a rig. The company is also in the process of producing an in-house safety video for training purposes.

To reinforce safety awarness at Fina Inc., the company uses a unique drill program. An employee might be approached by a safety engineer and handed a card, which will simply read: "The main tank battery has just blown up." From that moment, the employee is expected to put into place all the procedures that would be followed in the event of a real accident," said Rick Hagar, a spokesman for Fina. "It makes them very aware, and once they get into the rehersal it becomes very real."

Announced drills begin at a plant when a team of a dozen different people arrive on site, take positions, then hand out cards to get the drill underway.

Explained Hagar: "The dock manager is handed a card that says the pipeline to a barge has just broken spilling 1,000 gallons, but this is just a diversion for the real problem. At the same time the plant manager is handed a card telling him that the main pipeline in one of the processing units has burst."

Observers placed throughout the plant then watch as the employees go through the procedures. "It's one thing to have all these procedures and programs, but they have to be tested," said Hagar. "Once they have been successfully tested, employees are more aware of safety procedures and tend to feel more secure. It gives us a chance to learn what we do right and what we do wrong."

He said one valuable lesson learned by the oil company is that it takes a great deal more air in breathing apparatus when it is humid and hot and the individual wearing it is excited and breathing heavily. As a consequence the tanks now contain more air.

CLEAN: Testing for drugs

(From 1E)

Almost everyone who has worked in the oilpatch for any length of time has a drug horror story to tell about that period when drug use went unchecked. There were stories about drillers who were drug pushers, drug vendettas erupting in the oilpatch and tool pushers coming on to the rig floor and finding the entire crew under the influence of drugs.

"Many drug users have been weeded out in the oilpatch. Some companies have gone from 35 percent positive testing to one percent, but there is still a lot of work to do to keep the industry free of drug use," said Backer, who is now in the process of writing a major report on drug use in the West Texas oilpatch. He is looking for tends that will explain why the oil field still has a higher incidence of drug use than other industries.

"So far we have identified several reasons for the higher percentage of positive drug tests in the oil field," said Roy Harrison.

One is the higher number of tests. While some companies only require five screening tests for drugs, oil companies require ten.

Second, is the increased frequency of testing. While other industries may use random testing, and only test 50 percent of employees per year,oil companies generally do more stringent, on-the-job testing, which means 100 percent testing of all employees on a regular basis. Also, mandatory pre-employment screening is pretty standard in the oil industry. "We see a lot of the same people taking the same drug test for different employers, and failing each time," said Backer, who noted that this could drive up the percentage.

A third reason is that oilfield work is sporatic. If a roughneck's rig is stacked for a few months, he may be inclined to smoke a marijuana cigarette, thinking he won't be back working in time to get caught. "You generally won't find as high percentage of positive tests on well service units, where employees must work everyday," said Harrison.

With the drug problem mostly under control, Harrison says many oil companies are now beginning to test for alcohol, which is also a cause of accidents.

It is no secret that the oilpatch which for years turned its head when it came to tipsy workers has now adopted a super tough zero tolerance for drugs and alcohol on the job. Some months ago a toolpusher called the Oil Report to complain that he had been unjustly fired from his job over an alcohol incident.

It seems he had gone on a family picnic over the weekend, and had accidently left his beer cooler in the pickup when he went to work Monday. Two beers were left in the cooler and that constituted a violation of bringing alcohol onto the rig site and resulted in immediate termination.

"I can believe that story," said Harrison. "The oilpatch is getting very tough on drugs and alcohol."

He concluded however that failing a drug test is not the end of one's career. All testing information is the property of the employer and is not public information. If an employee is terminated because of a drug test the employer can only state on his personnel record that he was terminated for a violation of company policy.

Mobil gets environment award

WASHINGTON D.C. — Mobil has been honored by the National Environmental Development Assoc. (NEDA) for its environmental efforts in innovative noise abatement, waste minimization and the installation of bird netting over oilfield pits in West Texas.

The company was also cited for its leadership in Gulf of Mexico fisheries studies, a 60,000 refish stocking program in West Galveston Bay and leadership in the Gulf-wide Beach Cleanup Program.

Charles Spruell, president of Mobil Exploration & Producing U.S., said it was gratifying that the award was based on many accomplishments rather than just one.

NEDA is dedicated to fulfilling public demand for a clean environment and economic development.

Harken pins hopes on Bahrain wells

■ Harken Energy is counting on its efforts in Bahrain to ease its financial troubles.

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Harken Energy Corp. is trying very hard to keep a low profile these days.

At 5 p.m. on a recent Friday, Harken held its annual meeting. It lasted eight minutes. The Grand Prairie-based oil and gas company chose a hotel just outside Chicago O'Hare Airport for the gathering. Executives said little about Harken's grand oil and gas exploratory prospects in Bahrain.

Eleven people were in attendance — two reporters, a photographer, a stockbroker, three shareholders and four Harken representatives.

The peculiarly scheduled meeting was quite a contrast from just a few years ago. Harken's annual shareholders meeting at a D/FW Airport hotel in 1989 was packed, with standing room only. The company's best-known director was in the back of the room (he couldn't even get a seat) smiling and shaking hands, his father recently elected president of the United States.

At the Chicago meeting, George W. Bush wasn't around. In fact, he had already told Harken's board of directors that he would take a leave of absence from the board and from his $44,000-a-year Harken consulting job.

The public learned only last Tuesday that Bush would temporarily leave Harken to concentrate on his father's presidential campaign. He also said he wanted to remove Harken from his limelight.

Harken has come under particular scrutiny because the president's son sits on the board. Securing a concession to drill for oil from the government of Bahrain drew still more attention to the company. Many surmised that the only way a small oil and gas company from the mid-cities could be awarded such a contract is because of its influential investor, Bush.

Actually, Bush was never a major Harken player. His stock holdings in the company have been modest compared to some of the others.

Currently he owns 105,000 Harken shares — less than 1 percent of the company's stock. Bush sold two-thirds of his Harken stock for $848,560 in mid-1990. That transaction drew publicity after a mixup in which attorneys responsible for filing the transaction with the Securities and Exchange Commission left the trade unreported. The SEC learned of the transaction 10 months later, but no charges of insider trading were pursued.

In 1989, Harken Energy was a $1 billion company, up from a meager $4 million in 1986 revenues. Harken counted 900 employees; it currently has 90. Management had pieced together several companies with operations from the wellhead to the convenience-store gas pump. Shareholders at the 1989 annual meeting were entertained with a detailed slide show, touting Harken's outlook.

A year later, Harken decided to dismantle the company after conditions in the convenience-store industry soured and natural gas marketing faltered. In 1991, Harken completed the spinoff to shareholders of its gasoline retail and wholesale distribution subsidiary, E-Z Serve Corp., and its natural gas gathering, transmission and storage subsidiary, Tejas Power Corp. Last year, Harken's revenues declined to $6.77 million.

Mikel D. Faulkner, Harken chairman and chief executive officer, defends the decisions to buy and then sell the subsidiaries as the "opportunistic thing to do."

Assets the company values at $38 million consist of 7.25 percent and 6.59 percent of the common stock of E-Z Serve and Tejas, respectively; a 12 percent stake, or a scant 5 million barrels of equiva-

Training center open to volunteer firemen

■ Amoco facility will improve fire safety for oilpatch towns.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

Most towns in the Permian Basin are surrounded by oil fields, and where there is flammable oil and gas there is the potential for fires.

Oilfield fires can be both intense and dangerous, requiring special skills in handling. That's why Amoco Production Co. has created a regional fire training center to serve the entire Permian Basin.

"There are dozens of small community volunteer fire departments throughout the Permian Basin oilpatch and often these volunteer firefighters are the first on the scene of an oilfield fire," said Amoco spokesman Ray Thompson.

Located at Brownfield, the training facility is a joint venture between Amoco and the City of Brownfield, and will be used to train not only members of volunteer fire departments but industrial and and municipal firefighters from throughout the Permian Basin.

The City of Brownfield contributed 15 acres for the facility, while Amoco provided $175,000 in construction costs.

Brownfield Mayor Graham Swain said the center was proof that industry and government can work together effectively for the benefit and safety o

Tony Repka, a member of the Brownfield Fire Department and an assistant maintenance foreman at Amoco's Wasson Plant said the facility could encourage other oil companies and towns to work together on mutual training exercises. He said the training and expertise would be especially beneficial in an area that is spread out geographically.

"The smaller volunteer fire departments are often called on to assist one another, and through mutual aid exercises here at the center, they will have a better idea of what kind of help they can expect at a fire."

When the training center is completed later this summer it will have 10 outdoor training areas where a variety of industrial fires can be simulated. It will also have a smoke house where trainees can learn to safely navigate their way through a smoke-filled structure, a confined space area where rescue techniques are taught, a vertical gas processing tower to simulate fighting fires within a gas plant, a ground fire area, flange fire and pipeline fire areas, classrooms and observation tower.

Midland firemen ready for oil fires

■ Midland firefighters repeatedly practice how to safely put out big oilfield fires.

By Ellen Hopkins

Occasionally Midland residents notice a black cloud of smoke on the southeastern horizon that seems to disappear for a few moments and then reappear, disappear and reappear again.

It's not exactly a fire that someone can't seem to extinguish. It is a fire drill, held at the Midland Fire Department's training facility off Farm-to-Market Road 307.

Gary Chastain, assistant chief of operations for the Midland Fire Department, said local firemen practice drills at this facility involving oil field pit fires, LPG (liquified petroleum gas) fires and container fires.

"An oil-related fire is extinguished by putting a vapor barrier over the petroleum," said Chastain. "We use a foam to smother the fire, and we practice the technique over and over."

Chastain referred to the foam as "FFF" which stands for Film Forming Foam. The Midland Fire Department has 200 gallons of FFF on hand to use on oil-related fires in the area. They also have a 2,000 gallon tank truck.

"Several hundred additional gallons of foam are stored at Midland International Airport," said Chastain. "We can haul this to a scene in a truck if we need it."

He said it's not unusual for lightning to strike a tank battery, blow the top off and start a fire. He explained that when any oil-related fire is reported or discovered, the Fire Department responds with a tanker truck and crew from the nearest substation.

"This would be between four and seven men," said Chastain. "We would also send an ambulance if we considered the situation to be life hazardous.

"How we respond depends on the extent of the fire," he said. "We have a procedure we follow: the first things we check for are the presence of any H_2S (poisonous hydrogen sulfide gas), the wind direction, and the name of the oil company that has the location so we can notify them immediately."

Chastain explained that oil companies will promptly send a representative to the fire scene so the flow of oil feeding the fire can be shut down.

"Most of the time the damage is done by the time we get there," he said. "So it's better for us to wait, if the fire is not spreading, and let company personnel dictate which lines and equipment to shut down."

Chastain said one oil company has requested Midland Fire Department never put out any fires at its locations because of concern about injury.

Bill Shipman, emergency management coordinator for the city, said most oil companies plan to take care of their own spills and fires.

"The city has plans for disasters which are drilled and exercised, and the oil companies have their own exercises," Shipman said. "Often they call us to be a part of their drills. We share rolls to be sure every circumstance is covered."

Shipman said in the case of a petroleum spill, the plan is to let the oil company handle the cleanup.

"Our job is to contain it and keep the public away from it," Shipman said. "If the oil company doesn't have a preference, we have three environmental cleanup/chemical response companies we use."

Chastain said the three private companies are known as haz-mat (hazardous material) response teams and are used on a rotational basis.

"Our job is to initiate only," Chastain said. "We call the next haz-mat response team on the list and stand by until the spill or hazard is taken care of. If it's a spill at a service station rather than out in the oilfield, we handle it the same way."

Midland County Fire Marshal Dale Little said the county knows what the oil company's emergency response plans are.

"We combine their plans with our plans," Little said. "We have National Fire Protection haz-mat response books and state DPS (Department of Public Safety) haz-mat response books. We also handle training for the county and some of the area's volunteer fire departments."

Little said they have used training tapes and programs in their own classes, and also participated in training programs through Midland and Odessa Colleges, in San Angelo, and at Texas A&M.

Chastain said the Texas A&M Extension Service has been attended by the aircraft rescue firefighters who work at Midland International Airport.

"We do all types of this training here now," Chastain said. "All our firefighters have hands-on and classroom training once a month. There is a required number of hours of continued training to remain state certified."

He said Midland Fire Department has a rookie school consisting of 400 hours of basic firefighting. The latter is required for firefighter state certification.

"When our firefighters respond to an oil-related fire, they each carry a self-contained breathing apparatus," Chastain explained. "We know what we can handle."

If additional help is needed, Midland Fire Department can rely on backup assistance from volunteer fire departments in the area.

"Martin County, Gardendale, South Ector County, Greenwood and Northeast Midland County are all volunteer fire departments," Chastain said. "Also St. Lawrence and Midkiff. Midland County backs them up when they request it. Years ago we even sent a fire truck to a refinery fire in Big Spring."

Chastain said his department even keeps a list of private companies which can be called on for assistance.

"Private industry can be very helpful," he said. "For example, we know which companies have vacuum trucks or earth movers in case we need them for a spill.

H2S: Poison in the patch

■ Hydrogen sulfide is a dangerous gas that remains a major safety concern in the oilpatch.

By Johnnye Montgomery

A mud technician walks out behind the derrick to the flowline to catch a mud sample, then suddenly collapses. A roughneck sees him go down, runs to help, and collapses beside him.

A weekend cowboy building corrals touches a joint of junk pipe with a cutting torch and it pops and explodes into fragments.

A morning tour driller passes out and wrecks the car on the way home, killing himself and injuring two of his crew.

A derrick hand's wife becomes nauseated and disoriented while sorting laundry.

The common denominator linking these Permian Basin incidents is their cause — hydrogen sulfide — H_2S.

Hydrogen sulfide is colorless, heavier than air, water soluble, and highly flammable. You can smell its characteristic rotten-egg odor in concentrations of as little as one part per million.

But if you encounter it, and you smell it, consider yourself very lucky. Increase the concentration to just 100 ppm and your olfactory nerves deaden. Your eyes and skin may burn, you'll cough, and experience a tightness in the chest. In levels of as little as 700 ppm H_2S in air, you may collapse, go unconscious and die.

Operators are required under Texas Railroad Commission Rule 36 to provide warning signs, wind direction indicators, detection and alarm equipment, and fences to protect people and animals from the danger of H_2S.

Protective breathing equipment must be maintained and made available to anyone on location. All personnel who work in the area must be trained to recognize and protect themselves against H_2S poisoning, and a special H_2S observer has to be on location at all times once the presence of H_2S is known.

Bobby Hampton, general manager of Bell Safety Division; said that under Rule 36, hundreds of people every year receive intensive training in H_2S safety. These people won't receive a certificate until they learn to recognize the symptoms of H_2S poisoning, take the necessary precautions, and know by heart and in the dark, the rescue procedures.

Yet, he said people can be certified over and over but if they forget the basics of their training in an emergency, that certificate won't protect them.

"The most frequent error is that if somebody goes down, they'll run out to get them (without the breathing apparatus) and then they'll go down too," he said.

"We've had as many as six people killed in one incident."

Hampton said he treads a thin line. "We don't want to spook people, but they do need to be cautious."

However, the danger doesn't end at the location. Hampton said people can be conscientious about wearing the breathing apparatus at work, do all the right things, then take the danger with them on their clothes.

"We warn people over and over that their clothing will become contaminated, and if they're not very careful to keep out of a confined area, like the cab of a pickup truck with those clothes on, H_2S will break out of the clothes they're wearing. We've had accidents happen where people became unconscious and turned the vehicle over because they were in a confined space.

"Another thing they need to remember is never to take it home. They finish their tour, change clothes and come home and never think a thing about it. They carry this clothing and paraphernalia they've been wearing into the house and give it to Mother to wash. People need to be aware that you don't bring this stuff home and expose your family to it. They need to be very careful about where they store them in the house.

"We tell people in classes and I remind our own people and anybody I come in contact with, to take a change of clothes, including a change of shoes, and put them in a plastic bag, and when you change, put the contaminated clothes in the plastic bag and place it in the back of the pickup — don't put it up front.

"They should be water-washed outside the residence before they're taken in. My best recommendation is to take them to a car wash, and use a little car wash soap and water to wash those coveralls down. Dispose of your gloves. Be very careful about taking (H_2S) to the family. We've had situations where people became sick and nauseated and they couldn't figure out what caused it."

Hampton said there are other pitfalls to watch for, long after the immediate exposure danger is past.

"There's been a good job done in the field to educate people in the industry about pipe embrittlement. Most people are aware that we have H_2S-trim pipe in the hole once they start producing a well. But H_2S embrittlement sets in, in standard pipe. Once the H_2S has been dealt with, if there was unprotected pipe, the damage has already been done. Before people take discarded pipe off a location they should check with somebody. A black color is not necessarily an indication."

Because of the risk of flammability, Hampton said taking pipe away from an unknown location to build a corral or a yard fence is extremely risky. "If somebody starts up a cutting torch, it could explode. Or if you drop it, it will shatter like an eggshell.

"We don't want to scare people, but they need to be made aware. Education is our job."

Hampton says Bell's business, which involves safety supervision and rental equipment as well as training and certification, has suffered along with every other oil-related business.

"We've noticed a big difference in the Permian Basin since Jan. 1," he said. "We've had to cut corners, lay off some people. We're cross-training in order to keep from laying off. If we had to hire someone tomorrow, we'd make sure they could do a lot of different things, instead of being specialists. Our second quarter has picked up a little, but we don't expect this year to be good.

"We've cut back on our contributions. I get five or 10 calls a day, and we just don't have the money to give like we used to."

Baroid will reopen barite mine

HOUSTON — Baroid Drilling Fluids, Inc., a subsidiary of Baroid Corp., has announced a $4 million investment to reopen its Rossie barite mining operations near Dunphy, Nevada. This will allow the company to once again take advantage of its vast domestic reserves of barium sulfate. This ore is processed into barite which is used in the formulation of fluids used in drilling for oil and gas. The Rossi barium sulfate reserves are regarded as containing the highest-purity barite in the world.

The vast majority of barite currently used in the U.S. is imported. However, securing imported supplies involves long lead times and carries the risk of having to turn back shipments which fail to meet Baroid's high ore purity standards to comply with more stringent environmental and customer demands. Through Baroid's reinvestment in domestic barium sulfate mining, the company can now reduce its dependence.

An added benefit is that increased use of national gas will help protect Florida's air quality.

Expert says California difficult for Canada gas

Canadian natural gas producers will have trouble competing in the increasingly volatile and competitive California market, but will send more gas into markets in the Midwest, according to natural gas expert William A. Johnson, speaking at a conference on "Canadian Gas and the California Market."

New forms seen for gas contracts

BOSTON — Increased emphasis should be placed on natural gas contracts as companies return to more aggressive buying and selling modes in the current industry turnaround, JOFREE Principal Carol Freedenthal told the Association of Energy Engineers at their annual meeting today.

"There are benefits to long and short-term contracts and prudent buyers and sellers are taking advantage of both," Freedenthal said. "Short-term contracts have worked during this period of excess of deliverability since they provide the lowest possible price as well as secure supplies. But, it is also a good time to take advantage of long-term contract because natural gas, the commodity, is low priced now."

Freedenthal noted that in the future, long-term contracts will no longer be essentially fixed price arrangements but will fluctuate with he market. "What you're really contracting for is the right to do business together," he said. "The marketplace has demanded that both sides be protected. Therefore, long-tern contracts are no longer for 15 or 20 years, but for much shorter periods."

The new emphasis on contracting is due to increased recognition that the surplus of gas that created havoc for the industry during the 1980's is drying up, Freedenthal said. "The low drilling rig count, the flight of producers from the U.S., and the demise of the independent producer are all going to have an effect on supplies over the short term and into the future."

Hanson

Hanson to head AAPG division

Staff report

Midland independent geologist Bernold M. "Bruno" Hanson has been named president of the newly formed Division of Environmental Geology of the American Association of Petroleum Goelogists.

The new AAPG division will focus on "basic environmental issues that should be addressed from a geological point of view," Hanson said, "thereby transferring the profession's understanding of technology and the earth to solving environmental problems."

Hanson, who was AAPG president from 1986-87, said it would also offer petroleum geologists an opportunity to increase their knowledge of environmental matters and also allow AAPG to have a scientific voice in the public arena.

The new division was formed by a vote of the AAPG House of Delegates at the annual meeting in Calgary, Canada attended by over 5,800 persons.

The DEG is the third existing AAPG Division.

The division was the outgrowth of environmental and hydrogeological committees formed by AAPG to provide information and assistance to those geologists forced from the industry into alternative geologic careers.

AAPG is the world's largest geoscience organization with over 33,500 members in 103 countries.

Lufkin finals Russian pump deal

■ Pump company will sell $95 million of equipment to Siberian fields.

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON – U.S. and Russian officials signed a trade charter Tuesday expected to help an East Texas oil services firm to ship $95 million worth of oil field pumps to western Siberia, a deal that is expected to save as many as 1,000 American jobs.

Commerce Secretary Barbara Franklin and her Russian counterpart, Petr Aven, signed documents creating the U.S.-Russia Business Development Committee, which will work to lower barriers to American trade and investment in the fledgling new states of the former Soviet empire.

During a signing ceremony here, Franklin told reporters that the long era of mistrust between the nations was over, to be replaced with an ambitious commercial partnership.

"We are, in a word, bullish on Russia," she said. "Cautious and realistic, yes, but bullish nonetheless."

The $95 million Lufkin Services deal was one of five U.S.-Russian credit arrangements announced Tuesday that will be guaranteed by the U.S. Export-Import Bank.

"This is a big step for us," said Herbert Green, president of Lufkin Industries, which has been selling oil field equipment to the Russia state oil company and the former Soviet Union for the past two years. In 1991, he said the company had sales to Russia totaling $47 million.

With domestic oil and gas drilling in a steep decline, Green said the pact could keep his Lufkin-based firm from laying off workers in the hard-hit industry.

"We're just talking about preserving jobs here," he said. Lufkin Industries is one of the country's largest oil field service companies, with more than 2,200 employees and 1991 sales worth $250 million.

Lufkin Industries is one of many oil-related companies attempting to find ways to strengthen the promising oil industry in Russia. For the hard-pressed Russians, oil could provide much-needed hard currency as well as jobs.

But Green said the deal was only 95 percent complete, and awaits final approval by the Russian government, which could come in about two months.

"All the outstanding problems are on the Russian side," he said.

With their huge foreign debt, unconvertible currencies and still-shaky governments, the former republics of the Soviet Union are regarded warily by most western business leaders, who are anxious to invest in Russia but uneasy about the stability of those deals.

One businessman told reporters his company could not trade with Russia unless its exports were backed by the Export-Import Bank.

But Green said Lufkin Industries hadn't encountered major problems, adding that his firm needed U.S. backing only because of the large size of the proposed deal.

"If we got paid by our other customers as quickly as we get paid by the Russians, we'd be in pretty good shape," Green said. "They're very fine customers, very professional people, very good oil people."

Overall oil earning lower

Staff report

Income for 258 energy companies was 34 percent lower in the first quarter of 1992 than in the first quarter of 1991 according to a recently released Energy Information Administration (EIA) publication. The 258 companies include major petroleum companies, independent oil and gas producers, independent refiners, drillers, coal companies, natural gas pipeline companies, and electric utilities.

EIA Administrator Calvin Kent noted "that the net income for 110 petroleum companies was 57 percent lower than the first quarter of 1991, significantly more than offsetting the increases last year during the Persian Gulf conflict." All segments of the petroleum industry reported reduced net income, with the independent producers and refiners/marketers registering the largest declines.

Oil and gas producers were hurt by lower crude oil prices, which on average were $3 per barrel lower in the first quarter of 1992 than in the first quarter of 1991, and by exceptionally low natural gas wellhead prices. Between the first quarter of 1991 and the first quarter of 1992, the domestic and foreign oil and gas production operations of major petroleum companies reported net income declines of 53 and 21 percent, respectively. Over the same period, the independent oil and gas producers saw their net income drop from a positive $170 million to a negative $2 million.

Downstream earnings fell for both major petroleum companies and for independent refiners during the first quarter of 1992, as relatively mild weather and sluggish economic activity resulted in reduced refining margins. Between the first quarter of 2991 and the first quarter of 1992, the major petroleum companies reported earnings declines of 78 and 69 percent, respectively, in their domestic and foreign refining and marketing operations.

Oil firms increasingly emphasize safety

■ Throughout the oil industry, firms are emphasizing safety.

By Mella McEwen
Staff writer

As never before, the oil industry is emphasizing safety.

Throughout the industry, from producers to drillers to service companies, each company has established its own safety program. Many of the programs are mandated by state and federal regulations, but they are also a result of the company's concern for its employees.

At Conoco, the company has adopted the philosophy that all injuries can be prevented, and holds management responsible for preventing injuries. But, said Lonnie Ashley, safety and occupational health coordinator for the company, "each individual ultimately is responsible for his safety and those around him." Each employee at Conoco has not only the authority but an obligation, he said, to stop any unsafe operation or act.

The company offers all the training and tools required by law to handle, for example, H_2S safety training and responding to hazardous material spills. Other safety programs include safety leadership seminars held for all division employees, a safety climate survey of all exploration and production employees — where employees are asked to point out what they feel could be improved — and pre-job and daily morning safety meetings. The division manager has also established a safety council and there are safety councils in the office and in the field.

While the company has a Safety Leadership challenge contest and Safety Sentinel recognition program, Ashley said "while we do give awards, we're not buying safety...our employees realize their real award is getting to go home every night safe and sound."

Conoco, a subsidiary of DuPont since 1981, has been recognized 11 out of the past 15 years by the American Petroleum Institute for having the lowest employee lost workday cases among oil companies. The Midland division will reach a milestone Wednesday when it observes six years without an employee lost workday case.

Like Ashley, Ken Self of Meridian Oil Co. said safety is the number one priority at his company. And like Conoco, Meridian emphasizes that safety starts with the individual employee, the one who works in the field. He pointed out that government can mandate all the safety training in the world and management can establish all the safety programs it wants, but they are useless unless the one actually doing the work makes a commitment to safety.

Self, senior safety representative for the company, said Meridian has done quite a bit of safety assessment in recent years and encouraged its field employees to bring up any concerns they have. Meridian, he said, has corrected those concerns without any concern about cost.

The company has safety programs covering H_2S and lock out-tag out and others dictated by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, as well as others "we think are good business." Another major program at Meridian is defensive driving. According to Self, in 1988 there were 12 accidents involving employees, last year there were none.

Meridian has also added safety programs for office employees. "Primarily, when we started the safety program, the focus was on lease operators. We neglected the people on the office staff," he explained. "The last two lost time injuries we had happened in the office, so we can't forget about them."

Meridian's efforts have paid off handsomely for the bottom line. The company's workers' compensation costs are now 20 percent of what they were, Self said.

And the efforts pay off in a human way too. Keeping people healthy, he said, is especially important today as oil companies run lean operations. "If you don't have enough employees anyway and you get someone hurt for a long period of time, you've lost that employee." And as he and other safety directors point out, it costs less to emphasize safety than it does to pay for an employee's injuries.

At Exxon, Wayne Achee, production manager, said, "Safety is one of our core values and has been throughout Exxon/Humble's history. Anyone in the workplace who observes an action or condition that is unsafe has an obligation to intervene and address the situation.

To help our employees do this, we have trained safety leaders in all of our field and office locations and a safety department that stewards a variety of proactive programs. Our safety training programs vary from off-the-job areas such as lawnmower safety to job-related education such as First Aid/CPR and respirator training.

We also conduct safety meetings daily and monthly for field employees and quarterly for our Midland Office employees. We believe safety is first in all we do."

The oil industry is one of the most potentially hazardous industries in the world, and drilling in particular can be hazardous if caution is not exercised.

Like other companies, TMBR/Sharp Drilling offers the required training in a number of areas such as H_2S, HAZCOM or right-to-know, HAZWOPPER, and first aid — law requires at least one person on location be trained in first aid and CPR.

"It seems like about on a weekly basis, either OSHA or the EPA or someone is coming up with new standards and regulations for the industry that require us to do certain training to be in compliance," said Dwight Rambo, the company's safety director.

Some new training programs facing the company are HAZWOPPER, which deals with hazardous materials spills, the clean-up and notification of proper government agencies, and what Rambo calls the Bloodborn Pathagens Standard.

"These are all equally important because they pertain to the industry. This is a dangerous occupation, but it's gotten to the point where safety is a major

DISCOVERIES LEAD TO A NEW ACIDIZING APPROACH

Acid stimulation treatments that deliver less than the expected results are perplexing to oil producers. Acid Engineering, Inc. has discovered that in many cases treatment programs are affected by asphaltene sludges which form during acidizing.

Asphaltic crudes produce asphaltene sludges when exposed to hydrochloric acid. Although the addition of anti-sludge agents often helps prevent formation damage and rigid-film emulsions, in many cases it does not work as well as expected when high amounts of iron are encountered.

Acid Engineering, Inc. utilizes a testing procedure which involves adding both ferric and ferrous iron to the acid system to simulate down-hole conditions. Failure to test with iron results in many misleading test conclusions. We believe it is the principal reason that oil producers are disappointed from acidizing when, in fact, the presence of iron makes good results virtually impossible to obtain with conventional acidizing packages.

HOW SLUDGES FORM

Asphaltenes are amorphous polyaromatic hydrocarbons. Normally they do not sludge out because a surface coating of asphaltic resins keeps them in a stable colloidal dispersion. However, in the presence of acid or acid plus iron, asphaltenes form an insoluble sludge or rigid film emulsion. Acid creates sludges by destabilizing the polar charges around asphaltene particles. Without these charges to keep particles separate, a precipitate (sludge) forms. In the presence of acid, iron actually binds to the asphaltene resins, which also causes de-stabilization and even polymerization of the colloidal systems. In terms of causing sludge, ferric iron (Fe+3) and ferrous iron (Fe+2) contribute to the problem.

In addition to asphaltenes, sludges may also contain resins, paraffin waxes, high-molecular weight hydrocarbons, formation fines and entrapped water.

AS66 SLUDGE PREVENTION CHEMICAL

AS66 is an anionic acid sludge preventer that is a carefully balanced group of components which stabilizes the colloidal dispersion of asphaltene resin that surrounds asphaltene particles. The AS66 not only completely eliminates asphaltene sludges due to iron contamination but also acts as the non-emulsifier and the corrosion inhibitor.

Iron control agents are incorporated dependent upon the type and amount of iron present.

AS66 is a state of the art chemical compound designed specifically to control asphaltene sludges.

SAFETY: Costs aren't a concern

concern not just with drillers but with the majors. Safety has to be a number one priority not just for economics but because we can't afford to get people hurt. The company has too much invested in equipment and personnel."

He said TMBR/Sharp, in addition to its training programs, has an extensive drug screening program that includes random testing and pre-employment screening and testing after each accident. In addition, employess go through a pre-employment testing at Odessa Physical Therapy for a stress test to see if they're capable of doing the work and if there are any pre-existing conditions that could prevent the employee from doing the work or cause problems in the future.

He said the company's programs — and those of other companies — have helped lower the industry's accident frequency.

The driller also has in place a safety incentive program that ranges from pairs of gloves to Red Wing work boots. And if toolpushers go a year without a lost time accident, they receive a Rolex watch. Rambo says that's quite an accomplishment because the toolpushers are generally supervising four crews of four employees each. Drillers receive a watch if they go three years without a lost time accident.

Still, Rambo said, he believes those working in the oil field are changing their attitude about safety, and the random testing has helped decrease the incidence of substance abuse.

Rick Eicher, safety director at Yale E. Key Well Service, said his company has safety programs ranging from first aid to spill and response to medical emergencies, adverse weather conditions, fires and explosions, to hearing conservation and drugs and intoxicants.

While he supports many of these programs, Eicher pointed out that "I believe in programs that will, in fact, establish a safer work environment. But I look at it from a realistic point of view, not an idealistic point of view; I believe you can't prevent all accidents because of the human factor."

He said the key is convincing the guy in the field that the company is genuinely concerned about his safety and that of his family, by doing that the worker will more willingly adopt safer work habits.

He added that creating a safe work environment also takes commitment from the top management on down throughout the organization. "There are so many rules and regulations designed to make it safer, but the bottom line is, the workers have to believe in you and your safety program or all the rules and regulations in the world won't work."

Schlumberger has recently received the "Safety in Seas" award from the National Ocean Industries Association for its New Employee Safety Training (NEST) program.

Steve Bartz said the NEST program is one of several safety programs the company has, all with the goal of continuous improvement year to year.

"We emphasize awareness through local programs and specific training required through state and federal regulations and various customer-required training," he said.

The company has found that one of the biggest risks is driving and so has established a defensive driving school that it shares with Dowell Schlumberger in Kellyville, Okla.

In addition, the company found that 84 percent of its lost time accidents involved heavy lifting, so it developed MoveSmart, comprised of nine basic techniques for stepping and heavy lifting. The course is designed to teach how to keep balance, handle packages, walking up and down stairs and proper lifting. The company expects to have all employees trained in the program within the next 18 months.

"We've already seen a significant impact," said Bartz. "This gives them something they can work with and take to their families. We believe in including the whole family unit."

The company also holds training schools for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and is working to form training partnerships with its clients.

Emphasis on safety will most likely continue to grow among oil patch employers, whether out of concern for employees or because new programs are required by state or federal regulations.

As Rambo of TMBR/Sharp said, "I just don't feel it should be part of the job classification for a roughneck to get hurt. We want our workers to know they can come to work and not get hurt."

Oil countries discuss environment

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Key oil exporters and importers grappled over the world's contradictory needs for energy and environmental protection at an international workshop.

Some at the two-day, closed-door conference that ends today feared that curbing fossil fuel use, with such measures as environment taxes, would endanger the future of their oil-dependent economies.

Others feared that failing to do so would endanger the future of the planet.

Norway, with co-sponsors Italy and Egypt, summoned top officials from 22 countries, OPEC, the United Nations, and the European Community to the talks at a fjordside hotel near the west coast city of Bergen.

"It is crystal-clear that we cannot enter the future without the firm commitment to provide sufficient energy for those who need it," said Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland in her opening address Thursday.

"It is equally crystal-clear that present energy (consumption) patterns cannot be multiplied without grave consequences for the environment and the global climate," she said in a prepared speech.

Brundtland said she wanted the delegates to the Ministerial Workshop on Energy to meet informally, without making binding decisions.

Delegates included OPEC Secretary General Subroto, British Energy Minister Tim Eggar, U.S. Deputy Assistant Secretary of State William C. Ramsay and China's Vice President Zhang Yongyi.

Saudi Arabia, Iran, Kuwait, France, Germany, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, Poland, Russia, Spain, Venezuela, and the United Arab Emirates also sent top officials.

Brundtland, who gained international recognition as chairwoman of the U.N. Commission of the Environment, was one of the first leaders to impose an environment tax on fossil fuels.

China-Vietnam tensions heated up by exploration

N.Y. Times News Service

BEIJING — In an aggressive move to take control of disputed territory in the South China Sea, the Chinese government has signed an oil exploration contract with a U.S. company for a stretch of the sea that is also claimed by Vietnam.

The contract marks the first time in many years that any country has acted unilaterally to develop the rich mineral resources in the southern part of the sea, which is the subject of overlapping claims by China, Vietnam, the Philippines, Malaysia, Indonesia, Taiwan and Brunei.

The last time such a contract was awarded was apparently 1973, when the collapsing government of South Vietnam gave Western companies oil concessions that included disputed territory. That led to a battle in January 1974 between Chinese and Vietnamese naval forces.

China has pledged that it will use its navy to back the U.S. oil company, Denver-basd Crestone Energy Corp., and the move seems certain to raise tensions in the area.

Vietnam has protested strongly, the Philippines has described the award of the contract as "unhelpful," and other nations are concerned that Beijing now intends to use force to assert its claims.

"There are some indications that China is changing its policy toward disputed areas and taking a more aggressive stance," an Asian diplomat in Beijing said. "But it's still too early to say if this is a turning point."

Randall C. Thompson, chairman of Crestone, said he knew that the area was disputed but had strong backing from China.

"I was assured by top Chinese officials that they will protect me with their full naval might," Thompson said in a telephone interview. "That's what they told me in negotiations — that they'll have the entire full naval fleet out there backing me up, if necessary."

Giving the contract to a U.S. company was a canny move by China, because it means that any forceful intervention by Vietnam might harm relations with Washington as well as Beijing.

Vietnam has made great efforts in recent years to improve ties with China, and it particularly wants to establish diplomatic and economic relations with the United States.

A senior Chinese official said he was confident that there would be no war. He reasoned that Vietnam would acquiesce rather than lose its newly established economic and political links with China and that the Philippines and other Southeast Asian countries did not have strong enough navies to challenge China.

China claims a huge swath of the South China Sea, extending more than 1,000 miles south of the nearest populated Chinese island. The waters it claims as its own virtually lap against Vietnam, Malaysia and the Philippines. In 1988, China and Vietnam fought a brief naval battle over the disputed waters.

The area includes the Spratly and Paracel island groups, which China calls the Nansha and Xisha chains. These archipelagos, consisting mostly of uninhabited palm-lined islands, control fisheries and important international sea lanes and are also thought to contain valuable oil and mineral deposits.

The new contract, which was signed on May 8, covers 9,700 square miles that are claimed only by Vietnam and China. Vietnam says the area includes its continental shelf.

A representative of another international oil company said China had also informally offered it another block in the disputed area, with naval protection in case anything went wrong.

But for now the major oil companies — several of which also do business with Vietnam — seem to prefer to wait and see what happens to Crestone.

Thompson said that the area was extremely promising, but that Crestone would first have to conduct extensive data analysis and that it will be a year or two before it sends any boats into the area.

China had previously said that while the territory is its alone, it would allow joint exploration and development of the area pending a resolution of the sovereignty dispute. But the Chinese Navy appears to have urged a more aggressive posture, perhaps partly to give itself an important mission and justify a larger budget.

Early this year, the Chinese government passed a new law formally annexing the Spratly and Paracel groups, as well as another archipelago whose ownership is disputed with Japan.

In April, a navy deputy commander was quoted in the official Chinese press as saying, "It is high time for China to readjust its marine strategy and make more efforts to recover the oil and gas resources in the South China Sea."

The Chinese military has been building up the forces it could use in any clash in the area. In particular, it is trying to develop air refueling ability for its fighter planes and is negotiating to buy a large aircraft carrier that Ukraine is building.

A U.S. embassy officer was present at the signing of the contract with Crestone, but the embassy said later that it had no involvement in the negotiations.

HOPES: Counts on Bahrain wells

(From 3E)

lent reserves, in a limited partnership that has stopped drilling; and 18 idle land drilling rigs and eight workover rigs, all with a poor outlook for work in a depressed drilling market. Finally, there are unknown prospects in Bahrain.

Bahrain is the wild card.

Exploration in Bahrain since last year could catapult Harken stock or sink it, said Charles M. Strain, an independent oil analyst in Houston, one of the few on Wall Street still following the company.

Today an investment in Harken stock "is a crap shoot," he said. "We have two more rolls of the dice, and then the company will either be worth $30 a share or 30 cents."

Harken's concession in Bahrain, a small group of islands off the Arabian Coast, covers a region smack in the middle of the world's richest fields. Within a 50-mile radius of Bahrain is Saudi Arabia's Ghawar Field, considered to be the world's largest, and one of the world's biggest natural gas fields, the North Dome field offshore Qatar.

Under an agreement with Fort Worth's Bass Enterprises Production Co., the Bass company will fund the drilling of three exploratory wells. At that point the Basses can walk away from the project if no commercial reserves are found or can opt to drill three more wildcat wells.

For funding the deal, the Basses are entitled to 50 percent of Harken's share of production from the concession.

So far, the project has produced a dry hole at an estimated cost of more than $13 million. In March, Harken announced that the well, drilled to a depth of 14,000-plus feet, had been abandoned.

Investors are waiting to hear when and where the second well will be drilled.

Analysts have estimated that Harken could discover a multi-billion-barrel field, the kind the industry labels an elephant or a world class discovery.

The company is taking its time evaluating where it will punch the next wildcat, which the company expects to announce by the end of this year, said Harken's Faulkner.

The results of the first well "were very disappointing, a heartbreaker," Faulkner said.

"We're trying to evaluate a number of leads and take advantage of hindsight from the first well," he said. "This is a risky business, and these are high-risk wildcat wells. It's a very speculative project."

If the Basses elect to leave the project after three wells, Harken plans to take the deal back to the industry. The company needs a partner because the project is too expensive for a small company to go it alone, Faulkner said.

Harken's diminutive size and lack of international experience prompted speculation about just how the Bahrain contract was secured. Since the deal was announced in January 1990, much has been written pointing to high-profile director Bush.

Harken could have only gotten the contract because of the president's eldest son's ties, many have speculated.

Harken and Bush have denied that the concession was some kind of favor or repayment to the Bush family for stopping Saddam Hussein in the Persian Gulf war.

Bush referred a recent interview request to Harken management, and Faulkner declined to discuss rumored ties between Bush and Harken's Bahrain deal. Faulkner told shareholders in Chicago that the Bush conjecture was "false" — but offered little more "with reporters in the room."

Instead of explaining how Harken secured the contract, Faulkner referred to a story published last year in The Houston Post that gave credit for the contract to Michael Ameen, a retired Mobil Corp. executive. The article was "an accurate account of how it happened," he said.

In a telephone interview last week, Ameen said, "I'm the one who put this deal together regardless of what you've read in the papers ... so help me on my mother's head, and I'm looking at my Catholic wife right now."

Ameen said he can prove he was the man behind the deal with documentation of meetings and other longstanding relationships, including a 35-year friendship with Bahrain's energy minister, Yousuf Shirawi.

It was Shirawi who asked for a small U.S. independent to explore for oil in Bahrain. The country is currently producing only about 30,000 barrels a day from the Awali Field, one of the oldest fields in the Middle East. The country desperately needs to boost production.

Ameen said that he really didn't know any small independents after a career largely spent with the major oil companies but that he would look.

In recent years, more and more small independent oil and gas producers have entered the international arena. Some national oil companies prefer to deal with the smaller firms that often have niche technical expertise and are able to move quickly, unlike the large, more bureaucratic majors. Thus, the request in Bahrain for a small company wasn't unusual.

Through contacts with Stephens Inc. of Little Rock, Ark., Ameen was introduced to Harken, he said.

As a consultant, Bush's duties with Harken included finding sources of financing for the company. He had known the principals of Stephens Inc., a large regional investment banking firm, from their involvement in Republican politics and his father's campaign. Stephens Inc. arranged an investment in Harken in 1990, according to the Wall Street Journal.

A series of meetings that began in early 1989 concluded with a concession agreement in January 1990, Ameen said.

In fact, Ameen said, "George Bush was against the whole thing." The president's son, according to Ameen, didn't think the company was financially strong enough and didn't have the international experience to tackle the project.

WATER WORKOUT

Aquatics instructor Leaf Faller (right) shows arthritis sufferers Karen Thompson (left) and Dean Greene how to use empty jugs for balance and mobility while doing leg movements.

Informing arthritis sufferers about the benefits of water exercise is just one of the ways the Arthritis Support Group is reaching out to help those in the Midland area who are afflicted with this disease that affects more than 37 million Americans. The next meeting is 7 p.m. Friday at the Alamo YMCA.

Not long ago, Karen Thompson was an active woman living and working in New York City. She had noticed feeling fatigued and achy, but thought it was due to her hectic schedule. That was until she awoke one morning and literally could not get out of bed.

Arthritis had set in, totally disabling her. She had suffered with arthritis when she was 19, but it had gone into remission and she had experienced only minor aches and pains for almost 20 years. But that morning was her first step on a very long road to recovery.

That morning also lead to the beginning of the Arthritis Support Group in Midland.

Alamo YMCA aquatics instructor Leaf Faller (foreground) shows Dean Greene arm exercises to help increase her range of motion.

Because she could not do anything for herself, Ms. Thompson moved from New York City to Midland to live with her parents who could care for her.

"I was bedridden for 10 months. I just kept thinking I would get better," Ms. Thompson said. "I came to Midland to live with my parents, thinking it would be temporary. But I soon had to realize that it wasn't."

After over a year spent under the care of a doctor and therapists, Ms. Thompson is doing much better. She swims three times a week, has recently been able to drive again and hopes to start looking for a job sometime in the near future.

"I'm just one example, but there are a lot of people who are much worse and some who aren't as severe," Ms. Thompson said. "But I have made dramatic improvements."

One "improvement" she has made really can't be considered medical, but rather emotional — and not just for herself, but for anyone who is interested in participating. She has organized an Arthritis Support Group in Midland.

While under the care of Dr. B.K. Khandelwal at the Arthritis and Osteoporosis Center, Ms. Thompson said he told her that several of his patients had asked him about a support group for people who suffer from arthritis. He suggested she try to coordinate a group and offered his offices as a meeting place and source of information.

She took on the challenge and in March, Ms. Thompson set up an organizational meeting where those present decided what focus the group would take.

"We decided we wanted a place to share experiences as well as information," Ms. Thompson said. "No one wanted to come to a complaint session, but it's nice to talk to someone who understands what you are talking about, or may have had the same side effect to medication or found something that worked well for them that they wanted to share."

Please see GROUP/2F

Although Karen Thompson is now able to get in and out of the pool on her own, some arthritis sufferers are not. Here, Ms. Thompson demonstrates the Alamo YMCA's chair lift, which is available for those who cannot use the pool's steps.

GROUP: Water exercise usually helpful

(From 1F)

The group's first four meetings have been on the third Thursday of each month. A program is presented and then it's time for refreshments and socializing. There is no formal membership, no dues and no obligation.

However, this month's meeting will be 7-9 p.m. Friday at the Alamo YMCA, 901 N. Midland Drive, due to the special program. Leaf Faller, aquatics instructor at the Alamo YMCA, will present warm water exercises specifically designed for people with arthritis.

"What I will be teaching is sanctioned by the Arthritis Foundation. It is a program that the YMCA and the foundation worked on together," Ms. Faller said. "This is my fifth year to be associated with the program."

Those attending can come dressed to swim and participate in the demonstration or simply observe from poolside.

"We work from the shoulders down," Ms. Faller said, adding that participants need not know how to swim or even get their head wet. "We start out with walking in the water to loosen up and then do exercises that are designed to gain flexibility and greater range of motion, and in time can help in gaining strength and increasing muscle tone."

"Our goal is to reach people now, during the summer, to encourage them to try special water exercises that can help them year-round," Ms. Thompson said. "Water exercise is sometimes the only exercise people with arthritis can do without damaging the joints.

"The benefit of doing the exercises in water is that the warmth of the water helps loosen up the muscles and the water helps support the weight," Ms. Faller said. In addition to the Alamo Y pool being heated, it also has a chair lift for people who have trouble using stairs. However, Ms. Faller cautioned that people do need to be able to stand on their own and be self-mobile to participate.

WATER EXERCISES also put less pressure on the joints. "On land, we work against gravity, but in water, we work against buoyancy," Ms. Faller said. "For those who have limited motion, any of the exercises can be modified to fit their ability."

Three times a week, the Alamo YMCA offers warm water exercise classes for arthritis sufferers. However, this meeting of the Arthritis Support Group is designed to help more people become aware of the benefits of water exercise for arthritis and to offer people a chance to learn how to do them so they can be done on their own if they have access to a pool.

"I have never taken a class like this," Ms. Thompson said. "I've exercised with swimming for a long time, using things I've been taught in physical therapy, but I'm excited to go to this meeting and see what she is teaching."

However, Dean Greene — who was diagnosed with rheumatoid arthritis in 1987 — is a charter member of the Alamo Y's arthritis water exercise class and attends regularly three time a week during the cold months. During the summer, she does the exercises every day in her backyard pool.

"My knees are what are really bad for me," Ms. Greene said. "I have a noticeable difference when I don't go. You can do so much more in the water; you get so much more flexibility and with so much less pain.

"I feel it's something I have to do for myself, for my health. Three times a week is a big chunk of your week, but it's worth it to feel this much better," she said.

While the water exercises are very helpful physically for Ms. Greene, she said the camaraderie between those who attend classes is helpful emotionally.

"The camaraderie is really great too. We call each other on the phone, go out to breakfast together," Ms. Greene said.

WHILE THE classes focus on those who suffer from arthritis, Ms. Faller said, "I have people who come with back problems, knee replacements, hip replacements ... The exercises help all of these with range of motion without putting pressure on the joints."

"Inflamed joints are very painful," Ms. Thompson said. "The water helps take the pressure off the joints and the movement of the water over the body is very relaxing."

The Arthritis Support Group invites anyone who suffers from arthritis — no matter what stage of the disease — to attend. It also opens its doors to those who have friends or relatives who suffer from the disease.

"Friends or family of those with arthritis might benefit from coming because it might help them get a better picture of what we (arthritis sufferers) are going through," Ms. Thompson said. "It's a roller coaster disease. You are better one day, then the next day you can't open a jar. Sometimes it's hard for others to understand why if you could do something yesterday, why you can't do it today."

There are an estimated 37 million Americans who suffer from some type of arthritis, a word which literally means joint inflammation. According to the Arthritis Foundation, arthritis refers to more than 100 rheumatic diseases in which one or more joints are inflamed, a reaction causing swelling, pain, stiffness and redness. Rheumatoid arthritis is one of the more common of the rheumatic diseases that affects the joints, muscles and connective tissues of the body, afflicting as many as 7 million people in the U.S.

While there still is no cure for arthritis, in almost all cases it can be managed through proper treatment programs.

WHAT A DOCTOR recommends for treatment will depend on how severe the disease is, what joints are affected, and the patient's age, occupation and everyday activities. It usually involves a combination of medication, rest, exercise and methods of protecting the joints.

"The problems with arthritis don't have to be overwhelming — they can be dealt with. The element that will enable you to do that is staying informed and not letting the arthritis be the center of your life," Ms. Thompson said.

"At these meetings we share our experiences, and by just being there, you never know who else you might be helping."

DEAR ABBY

American melting pot has many distinctive flavors

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I was appalled by your statement, "Most Asians think all Americans look alike." The person who wrote to you is fortunate to live in a multicultured community, and needs to interact with his neighbors on a personal level. He might then discover that this person with an Asian face might have a Chinese family tree that can be verified for 2,000 years, or be a third-generation U.S. citizen whose parents met inside an American prison camp for Japanese-Americans during World War II; or be a Filipino-American whose grandfather enlisted as a cook in the U.S. Navy; or be a recent immigrant from Cambodia, Laos or Vietnam who was displaced because of U.S. foreign policy.

Van Buren

Abby, please encourage inclusion for all groups, rather than the stereotyping that inevitably results from statements that begin "all Asians, all Catholics, all Jews, all women," etc.

Incidentally, I happen to be a Japanese-American married to a Scottish-American who teaches with an Irish-American in a classroom of children who are predominantly Mexican-American, with a few Native-Americans (Indians), as well as many other types of hyphenated-Americans.

I play bridge with a Jewish-American; I bowl with a Hungarian-American, an Italian-American and a WASP-American. And I can guarantee that not even the most recent Asian immigrant would agree that "all Americans look alike." — RON YOSHIDA, SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.

DEAR RON YOSHIDA: My apologies. Three cheers for the red, white and blue — and the yellow, black, red, brown, white, and all the combinations, too!

DEAR ABBY: You were "right on" with your advice to the woman whose boyfriend persuaded her to get involved with group sex.

My husband and I were also looking for something to "spice up" our marriage, and our experience was similar to that of the couple who wrote to you. We were a little shy and embarrassed at first, but were told that after a while we would overcome our "childish inhibitions." However, it didn't take very long to realize that our inhibitions were not so childish after all.

It was hard to find people to party with. (It's rather awkward to bring up the subject while bowling), so we answered some ads in one of those sleazy swingers and swappers magazines. That's when we realized how sick some of these dedicated swappers were. They were into masochism, bestiality, sadism, etc. We were never pressured into anything, but we came to realize what a dangerous game we were playing when none of these people practices safe sex.

The excitement and curiosity quickly faded, and now we are finished with all of it. However, we still don't have the courage to get tested for HIV or AIDS.

I was glad you told that woman to stay away from people who engage in group sex. Sign me ... OLDER AND WISER

DEAR OLDER AND WISER: Thanks for reaffirming what I had always known to be true. Sex between two people who are committed to each other is beautiful. I did, however, get some mail from readers who suggested that I "chill out" and get with it.

DEAR ABBY: Your limericks are an absolute delight. (I enjoy limericks of every color.) Here's my favorite:

"The limerick packs laughs unanatomical,
"In a space that is most economical.
"But the ones that I've seen,
"So seldom are clean,
"And the clean ones so seldom are comical."
— ARTHUR H. LASSERS, SKOKIE, ILL.

AT WIT'S END

Where there's smoke in this backyard, there's serious fire

By Erma Bombeck

We have never been a barbecue-friendly family. I can admit that after a Father's Day celebration brought a fire truck and five firemen to our patio.

Bombeck

Basically, we are pathetic people who follow the trend like a herd of sheep. When we moved to the suburbs many years ago, we succumbed to all the trappings that went with it: station wagon with the wood on it, an eagle over the toilet in the powder room, a riding mower for a lawn no bigger than a coffee table, and an outdoor grill.

Then I discovered something about my husband I had not known before. He wasn't like the men we had seen in the ads for grills. We could dress him in a funny apron, put a fork with a three-foot handle in his hands and march him to a smoking grill — but we couldn't make him cook.

He counted out the briquettes, never using more than six at a time. He did not have a secret barbecue sauce that made him a legend in his own time. He always looked worried, like he does when we put lights on the Christmas tree.

The kids loved to grill but drove my husband crazy. They didn't "save" the six briquettes by spraying them with water and, after they had cooled, storing them in a plastic bag. They didn't scrub the grill until it sparkled and return it to its original box, sealed with tape to keep the dust out.

When my father died a few years ago, my mom asked us one day if we wanted their grill. This was a serious mechanism, complete with propane tank, two grill inserts, rotisserie attachments and hood. She said they never used it.

Years went by, and last Father's Day the kids decided to grill steaks for their dad. They circled the grill as if they were surveying a shuttle launch. They turned on the gas, dropped a match in and closed the lid. When they opened it to check on the heat, flames shot higher than the patio roof, the roar was deafening, and the heat drove everyone inside to await the explosion that was sure to come.

The firemen responded and put out the blaze before it blew up. We dragged the blackened grill, bottom burned out and melted double by the heat, to the garage. All that was left was the hood, half a handle and the pedestal.

My mother said, "I wouldn't use that again until you have it checked out."

Jack Handey's 'Deep Thoughts' is season's hit

By Scott Williams

NEW YORK (AP) — And now ... "Deep Thoughts" ... by Jack Handey ...

The BOOK!

Yes, at last, in the privacy of your own home or cell you can enjoy a book of the "Saturday Night Live" featurette that was the hit of the 1990-91 season and ALMOST as big as the "Copy Machine Guy" character!

Think of it! An entire, slim, $6.95, trade paperback devoted to the elegant meditations made famous by Handey, the only "Saturday Night Live" comedy writer ever to have attended the University of Texas at El Paso!

What's a "Deep Thought," you say? Well, it goes something . .. like this:

"If you define cowardice as running away at the first sign of danger, screaming and tripping begging for mercy, then yes, Mister Brave Man, I guess I am a coward."

Or:

"If God dwells inside us, like some people say, I sure hope He likes enchiladas, because that's what He's getting!"

And how about:

"The face of a child can say it all, especially the mouth part of the face."

Who is Jack Handey? Visualize a winningly saturnine face on the lines of an elongated hexagon, midway between "SNL" writer-performer Al Franken and actor Charles Martin Smith miscast in the role of a misunderstood youth.

"People think Jack Handey is a made-up name and are totally surprised to hear that there's a real person," Handey said. "It's sort of my shame now. I realize that I have a joke name.

"My friends will go, 'Oh, I love those 'Deep Thoughts!' And the name is perfect!"

HE BEGAN HIS career in comedy as a reporter. He worked for newspapers in New Mexico, where a then-unknown Steve Martin was his next-door neighbor in Santa Fe. He wrote a humor column in San Antonio, Texas.

Handey finally quit the news dodge and contacted Martin, whose career was taking off. Handey sent him some recycled columns and the comedian used them.

Handey went on to write Martin's first two TV specials, "Comedy Is Not Pretty" and "A Wild and Crazy Guy." Over the years he also has written many humor pieces for National Lampoon, Omni, Playboy and many others.

A writer-producer for "SNL" for six years, he has written such sketches as "Unfrozen Caveman Lawyer," "Johnny Canal," "Anne Boleyn," "Tales of the Runaway Boulder," "All-Drug Olympics," "Attilla the Hun: The Early Years," and the immortal "Toonces, the Cat Who Could Drive a Car."

Ah, yes. The cat who can drive — just not very well. How does a guy think up things like that? "It must be bad wiring or something," he replies.

"We have a cat. His real name is Norton. And somehow it became Nortoonsky, and then Toonces. It was one of those titles for a sketch that I had written down that became a sketch."

"Deep Thoughts" grew out of so-called "inspirational books" of the 1970s, slim volumes with names like "Notes to Myself" and "I Touch the Earth, the Earth Touches Me."

"I thought, 'These things are ripe for parody,'" he said. "And one of my favorite characters is an earnest idiot, a real eager kind of fool who's just trying to be sensitive. It sort of took off from there."

"I guess I've always sort of liked making fun of the idea that there are formulas for living," he said.

YES, BUT HOW do you think up deep thoughts like, "When you go for a job interview, I think a good thing to ask is if they ever press charges"?

"You really have to sort of get yourself in the mood for them," Handey said. "I lie on the bed and throw the rubber ball against the ceiling for several hours at a time, just sort of free associating.

"If you get 10 a day, tht's good. And then after a month you have 200. And then you go through those and maybe you have 25 that really make you laugh, and then maybe you even pare that down to 10."

Where does "Deep Thoughts" fit in the scheme of things? The book closes quite humbly:

"Perhaps, if I am very lucky, the feeble efforts of my lifetime will someday be noticed, and maybe, in some small way, they will be acknowledged as the greatest works of genius ever created by Man."

Bird expert tours Texas coast

By Steve Stein
Associated Press

PORT ARTHUR — Roger Tory Peterson, a man considered the world's dean of bird-watchers, was nestled in a bird rookery managed by the Star Enterprise refinery in Port Arthur.

The 84-year-old American artist, author and naturalist, took a couple of tumbles on some of the slippery, muddy trails of the 422-acre Wildlife Habitat Enhancement site east of Savannah Avenue and the refinery.

But he still spoke in glowing terms about the rookery's inhabitants, such as the colorful Roseate Spoonbills and Great Egrets,

As he has done for most of his life, Peterson has been willing to travel anywhere in the world to document wild species.

When he was 8 years old, a teacher in his native state of New York interested him in the Junior National Audubon Society, and his ability to draw birds became abundantly apparent. After putting himself through design school in New York City, Peterson made some contacts in the publishing world and in 1934 "A Field Guide to the Birds," which he wrote and illustrated, became an instant success.

His first publisher took a look at this 26-year-old artist and thought Peterson had stumbled on to something that would interest nature lovers, but it was the heart of the Depression. "He told me he would print 2,000 copies, but I wouldn't get any royalties on the first 1,000 copies," Peterson said. "Even at $2.75 a copy he was afraid to take too much of a chance, but the copies sold out in a few days."

Today, and 46 books later in the series, Peterson's publishers print 100,000 copies of the first edition of his new book. Most of his works continue to be lifelike paintings that actually are diagrams of wildlife he has encountered in places such as Antarctica, Africa, South America, Australia and the United States.

Peterson, awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1980, still draws and writes 12 hours a day, seven days a week, for certain parts of the year.

But Peterson likes to go on photography tours, like the one last week to the Star Enterprise rookery, to get away from his desk in his office in the Northeast. "I can only stay at my desk for three months at a time," Peterson said. "I need the sunlight, I need to get away from the slavery of the art work."

Peterson says photography does help him with his work but serves him best because it relaxes him. The 11 photographers on the tour included Dan Guravich, a wildlife photographer best known for his work with polar bears. The photography tour, organized by Guravich, also took in the Sabine Wildlife Refuge, Lake Charles, La., and the Chandeleur Islands off the coast of Louisiana.

Kim Hebert, a Lamar University-Beaumont graduate and biologist who manages the wildlife habitat for Star Enterprise, said a Lamar study identified more than 100 species of birds that nest or come to feed or rest at the rookery.

The habitat, created in 1990 after Star employees expressed concern for the wildlife that kept returning to the area, also contains alligators, rare rodents, snakes, a family of coyotes and many other wild animals.

Star Enterprise is dismantling some of its crude oil storage tanks near the habitat to create even more wetlands, Hebert said.

Grub worms attack lush lawns

By Deborah A. Benge

They're out there. Silently doing their duty, laying eggs in your beautiful lawn. Ironically, the healthier and lusher your lawn is, the more likely it is to become a target for white grub worms.

Benge

Actually, lawns become a target for the white grub worms' momma to lay eggs in. Momma is a light, reddish-brown beetle about ½- to ¾-inch long that can be seen around the lights at night during June. The adults mate and begin laying eggs in turf, the grubs' favorite food.

Female June beetles can still be seen just after dark flying two to three feet from the lawn surface seeking a good place to lay their eggs. Egg laying generally lasts up to 30 days and a female can lay 30 to 40 eggs in her life span. Females dig down into the soil, laying eggs two to five inches deep, sometimes in clumps. Eggs hatch in three to four weeks.

Larvae (immature June beetles) hatch from the eggs and pass through three larval stages. The first two stages occur rapidly, in about three weeks; the third stage lives in the soil for the rest of the year until they pupate and turn into the adult beetles in about May of the following year.

The first and second larval stages of the white grub worm grow rapidly and feed heavily on grass roots. Heavy feeding in July and August can cause large brown or stressed areas in the lawn. Grasping grass with both hands and pulling will result in the turf lifting in patches or rolling back like a rug. Underneath the affected grass you will see there are almost no roots and probably see several grub worms in the soil.

It's the third larval stage that most of us are most familiar with. This large white grub with a reddish-brown head is what we see when digging in gardens and flower beds in the spring. During the third stage, control is very difficult due to the large size.

Control of grubs is difficult but there are some management steps you can take to deal with the white grub worm. Turf grass selection, cultural practices and as a last effort, chemical control can help you with grub worm management.

Some turf grass species can tolerate grub worm feeding better than others. Common bermuda grass and buffalo grass are among the most tolerant to grubs. Incidentally, these are also the most adapted turf grasses to our growing conditions. Tall fescue, St. Augustine and some of the hybrid bermudas are very susceptible to grub damage.

The amounts of water and fertilizer a lawn receives will have a bearing on grub numbers and damage. Lawns maintained at high levels of water and fertilizer will be more attractive to female beetles resulting in higher grub numbers as compared to a lawn given modest amounts of water and fertilizer. And lawns that are given minimal amounts of water develop a hard soil surface making egg laying more difficult and less likely to occur.

Biological control of grub worms is just now being looked at. There are some parasitic nematodes that will parasitize grubs, but the research work has not been done at this time for West Texas.

Milky spore is another biological control method that is effective against grubs, but not our species of white grub. It won't work for us, so save your money.

If you have a serious grub worm infestation that warrants chemical control, timing and method of application of insecticides are vital for good control. Check turf in several spots for young grubs, three or more per square foot is an indication that chemical control is necessary.

Insecticides need to be applied mid- to late-July. Insecticidal applications made at any other time will not be as effective.

Watering before and after insecticidal application is also very important. Watering heavily before using the insecticide will move grubs up to the soil surface where they can breathe. Watering immediately after applying the insecticide will move the chemical where the grubs are. This means one to two hours of watering at the time of treatment.

Insecticides that are recommended for the control of white grub worms include Oftanol, MOCAP, Diazinon and Triumph.

Remember that this harmful insect pest can be discouraged through grass selection, moderate water and fertilizer applications, stressing lawn for water in the month of June and if necessary proper insecticidal applications.

"Olya's Reception" is what the artist calls a portrait painting. It shows the artist's personality through depicting the atmosphere that she creates around herself. The painting was included in an exhibition in Houston in June of 1991 at the Kauffman Gallery.

Opening the door to FANTASTIC REALISM

By Georgia Todd Temple Photos by Brian Adamcik

Despite being born into a family of famous Russian artists, artist Olya Cherentsova grew up with an unneasy feeling that she had somehow been misplaced, that Moscow was not home, but rather a place she lived en route to another.

"My life was not happy there, and I always felt like I belonged to somewhere else," Ms. Cherentsova said.

Then, in the early 1980s, when she was 29 years old and worked as a part-time model and clothes designer, she met a Texan who would change not only her surrounding but her world.

When Dallas native Kyle Collins graduated from Southern Methodist University with a degree in languages, he went to Moscow to perfect his Russian at the university.

"I had friends who lived in America, and they asked him to send a letter to me, and they also told him about my mother, about her art, and he was very curious to see it," Ms. Cherentsova said, recalling how they were introduced.

When they met, there was an immediate attraction between them. He proposed four months later. Whatever objections either family may have had, they kept to themselves. The only question Collins' father asked was, "Does she speak English?"

"Kyle said, 'She's learning,' which was not the case. We were just having fun."

In Russia, in the early 1980s, Ms. Cherentsova said, "It was very easy to get married, but it was not easy to get out of the country."

Actually, she didn't want to leave for one of the oldest reasons in the world.

"I had a lot of doubts," said Ms. Cherentsova. "I wanted him to stay in Russia because I was afraid of coming here, but he refused, of course. I'm

Ms. Cherentsova's "The Antique Shop" is an example of a life-size window that creates the illusion of a real window. Of the painting the artist says: "The painting is about the connection between history and the present time. I'm showing the antique shop and all the objects are supposed to be old, but they don't look old. They look like they were made just recently. There is no distance between history and the present time. It's like a circle."

Artist Olya Cherentsova sits in front of the doorway to her painting, "Christopher's Room." The artist, originally from Russia, moved to Midland this spring, joining husband, Kyle Collins. She has tentative plans to exhibit her work at Gallery 1114 in January.

'Chop-socky' film steps up in class

Associated Press

The chop-socky movie, a staple since Bruce Lee first flexed his deltoids, steps up in class with "Universal Soldier."

Devotees of the genre can get their kicks from not one but two stars, Jean-Claude Van Damme and Dolph Lundgren. Crossover moviegoers may be attracted as well.

The TriStar Pictures release comes from Carolco, the fiscally ailing purveyor of mindless violence (the "Rambos," "Terminators," "Total Recall"). The action is almost continuous and frequently brutal. Yet there is a certain fascination in how far filmmakers can stretch a whopper of a premise.

A before-the-titles sequence is a puzzler. During a raid on a Vietnam village, a U.S. sergeant (Lundgren) orders a soldier (Van Damme) to execute a young native couple. When the soldier refuses, the sergeant does the deed himself. Then the two Army men kill each other in a gun duel.

Where could the movie go from there? Twenty-five years later, Van Damme and Lundgren are members of an Army SWAT team aimed at combatting terrorists. They have been repaired, frozen and programmed as killing machines.

At outlaw band has captured hostages and is killing them one at a time until their political demands are met. Enter the Universal Soldiers. The siege is quickly ended.

A nosy television reporter, Ally Walker, invades the Army's high-tech camp and learns enough to threaten an expose. Meanwhile Van Damme begins to retrieve his lost memory, and his conscience. Lundgren also recalls his Vietnam past, and he vows to kill his fellow soldier.

Van Damme rescues the reporter from an Army hit squad, and they escape. The deadly pursuit begins.

"Universal Soldier" follows the Carolco formula of spectacular stunts, grisly killings, massive explosions and grim wisecracks, yet it has a certain vitality of its own. This is largely due to the inspired pairing of a two beefy actors who have starred in their own action films (how about adding Chuck Norris, Steven Seagal and Arnold Schwarzenegger for a sequel?).

Guns N' Roses

Guns N' Roses plays Las Cruces, N.M.'s Aggie Memorial Stadium Aug. 27. Also on the program are Metallica and Faith No More. Reserved and festival seats are on sale and may be purchased by calling 1-800-638-4253, or through Endless Horizons, Odessa.

Music sales soar to $7.8 million

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans spent $7.8 million on music last year despite the recession, according to figures released recently by the Recording Industry Association of America.

Country music sales grew more in 1991 than any other kind. But it still trailed rock and urban contemporary in overall sales. Rock captured 36.3 percent of the market, and urban contemporary 18.2 percent. Country followed with 12.5 percent.

Compact disc sales surpassed cassette sales for the first time, 49.6 percent of sales vs. 43.3 percent.

And remember records? Those big, round, vinyl things?

Those pulled in 1.4 percent of 1991 sales.

Besides country, gospel and children's music were the other categories to increase their share of the recording market, picking up 1.1 percent and 2.9 percent respectively. Gospel accounted for 3.5 percent of total sales, and children's recordings 3.3 percent.

ART: Artist developed own style

Although Ms. Cherentsova could only say "Hello" and "I'm tired" in English when she arrived in Dallas 11 years ago, she realized the decision to come to the United States was the right choice for both of them.

"It was very different," she said, recalling her first impression. "First of all, I was impressed by the supermarkets and by the friendliness of the people. But I was so shocked. It was a cultural shock that I couldn't even think straight.

"But I knew right away, this is my home. And I'm happy here," she said, attributing part of her happiness to the friends she has made in this country.

Throughout her childhood, Ms. Cherentsova studied art under her mother, Aelita Lomakina, who died three months ago. In addition, she had taken art classes for young artists sponsored by the Soviet Artists' Union, Moscow. Yet, she traces her career as an artist to her arrival in the United States.

"I became an artist 11 years ago when I came to America," said Ms. Cherentsova, who is currently working on paintings for a showing in Detroit, Mich., in September. She has tentative plans to exhibit her work at Gallery 1114, Midland, in January.

Her husband, a linguist with a speciality in Russian, also underwent a career change when returning to Dallas. Currently, he's a computer analyst with ARCO. The couple still speaks Russian at home.

ALTHOUGH THE inspiration for Ms. Cherentsova's paintings began in her native country, youthful rebellion against following the path of family members, plus the Soviet Union's support of painters who painted realism, a style which did not appeal to her, were major factors in her not pursuing a career in art in Moscow.

"Most of my works were created in the United States, even though the subjects were born in Russia.

"The idea of doing life-size windows and doors came to me when I lived in a communal apartment in a very small room. There was just one tiny window, which looked out on a blank wall. And I thought about creating a painting which would give you the illusion of a real window, allowing you to escape from reality.

"I completed the idea several years later in Dallas, when I had a one-person show, 'The House,' at the gallery of Modern Dallas Art."

Her first showing at Modern Dallas Art Gallery entitled "Dallas Works by a Moscow Artist," was in 1987. "The House" was in 1989.

"The gallery was established by two young, enthusiastic men whose goal was to support and promote emerging artists. Being with the gallery was my first break.

"I presented them with my idea and the gallery director, Glenn Lane, and I transformed the gallery into a symbolic house with doors, shelves, windows, mirrors. Each piece was done to scale and led every viewer to the real world of imagination. The combination of fantasy and realism creates an allegorical reality which my art is all about."

HER PAINTINGS IN "The House" was described by Dallas Magazine as employing "a trick of the mind, because they fool the waking eye into believing it's dreaming." Others have called her work surrealistic. Ms. Cherentsova, who now speaks fluent English, calls it "fantastic realism."

"I was impressed by surrealism and that's how I started developing my own style, my own perception of surrealism. I combined two opposite styles, realism and surrealism, and I'm creating my own style — fantastic realism."

For Ms. Cherentsova, realism, "if it's very traditional, looks like a photograph, and I can't relate to that even though I can respect it.

"I think if you're an artist, you should not just use reality, you should use your own imagination. You shouldn't copy just the reality, you should add something personal."

When surrealism was created at the beginning of this century, they tried to express their dreams, their subconscious, through their paintings, Ms. Cherentsova said.

"I'm using both. I'm trying to express subconscious and sometimes even dreams, like they did, but at the same time the environment is real. It's reality and the objects are real. So it's combining real elements and surrealistic elements."

She also considers her paintings "symbolically religious," while at the same time warning those who see her work to not look for "traditional religious art or symbols in my work.

"I BELIEVE THAT spirituality is a part of religion. If you are living a spiritual life, you can detach yourself from a lot of material things.

"The creativity in spirituality might take you away from the reality which might be very painful. My windows and arches and doors do take you away from reality."

Ms. Cherentsova, whose father is a Russian movie director, also expresses human energy through her paintings. She calls these works unconventional portraits.

"For example, I have a painting, 'Christopher's Room,' which is my son's room. I painted a lot of the objects which he possesses. I'm trying to express his spirit through the objects he has."

The idea of her unconventional portraits dates back to her childhood.

"The idea goes back a long time ago to when I lived in Moscow with my Grandfather. My grandfather was in his 80s. He could not take care of himself and was very depressed over the death of my grandmother, with whom he had lived for 52 years.

"I moved in with him, which was quite an adjustment for both of us. He passed away five years later, and I still remember sitting alone in our small apartment feeling his presence even though he was not there anymore. I felt his energy through all the personal things he left behind.

"ANCIENTS BELIEVED that if you preserved the possessions of the dead, you will keep their souls forever. So I've decided to try to do the same thing with my painting."

Although Ms. Cherentsova has not returned to Russia since leaving 11 years ago, she has had company from there.

"My mother came here to visit me," Ms. Cherentsova said. "Because she was married, her husband (Ms. Cherentsova's step-father) was a hostage. I hope my brother (an artist) will be here soon. We want to have a show here together in America."

Her reason for not going to Moscow is simple.

"I know it will be difficult for me to leave the country again psychologically. There are a lot of painful memories there, and I want to concentrate on my art right now. I don't want to be disturbed by any negative feelings."

HOROSCOPE

Sunday, July 12, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Take stock of where you are and where you want to be. Careful planning is the key to greater success. Turn over a new financial leaf in August. Showing real interest in a child's activities brings you closer together. Romance should run more smoothly by December. Travel helps you promote both business and a pet project early in 1993. Reach out to prominent acquaintances.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Seeing old friends proves both fun and relaxing. Limit your spending on entertainment, however. Someone who has always appeared indifferent pays you a compliment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Give yourself a break. Seek new surroundings and friends. A relative could have delusions of grandeur. Being critical will only create a rift between you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A domestic upset or clash with an authority figure is possible. Why get into a tizzy because others are moody? Enjoy a peaceful day with friends. A telephone call brings welcome news.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A rigid stance will not win you any popularity contests. Lighten up! A long-cherished desire is fulfilled. Avoid playing games in romance or you could spend a miserable evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Have fun daydreaming, but use common sense when making important decisions: Your rapport with romantic partner reaches a wonderful new high. Spend a pleasant, relaxing day with your family.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Make entertaiment plans early in the day after consulting family members. Romance could suffer if you try to impose your ideas on loved ones. Tact helps you avoid a confrontation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A cheerful, positive attitude is your strongest asset today. You are able to accomplish more when you feel well-rested. Romance thrives when you learn to express your feelings.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be careful not to overdo if taking part in an athletic event. Romantic partner may want to spend more time alone. Do not view this request as a rejection. Show your understanding side.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Domestic duties could keep you from reaching the top of the mountain today. A vital step into the future awaits you. Someone else's success spurs you on.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 12): Hanging around the house will not be much fun. Journey someplace new, but make certain your travel plans are practical. Someone you meet today could play a major role in your life.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look for entertainment that is inexpensive as well as fun. A platonic relationship could be more rewarding than you dreamed possible. Do not rock the boat. Be sensitive to family members' feelings.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Taking public transportation could be more convenient than driving today. Try to overlook your loved ones' complaints; they could be ill or weary. A compliment encourages someone to try harder.

There is no more colorful player in the game today than Pakistani internationalist and globetrotter Zia Mahmood. Bridge My Way (Granovetter Books, 252 pp, hard cover, $19.95 plus.$2 postage and handling from The Bridge World, 39 West 94th St., New York, N.Y. 10024) is a vivid account of how Zia became hooked on bridge and rose to the top of the world stage. Written in an easy style, the book is crammed so full of interesting hands and sound advice that you can easily overlook the odd moments of grandiloquence that creep in.

This hand features one of our favorite players and partners, Paul Chemla of Paris. Playing in the 1986 World Olympiad Teams, Chemla became declarer at what seemed to be an impossible four-heart contract, thanks mainly to a 5-0 trump split. North's hand, all prime and with a ruffing value, was worth considerably more than the 18 high-card points it contained, and, therefore, fully worth a raise to game.

Playing at a rapid pace, Chemla won the opening lead in dummy with the king and cashed the ace of hearts to learn the bad news. Declarer took the remaining spade winners before leading a diamond to the ten and king. East could do no better than return a diamond, won in the closed hand with the queen.

When declarer led a low club, West ducked and dummy's king won. The ace of diamonds was cashed and declarer continued with another diamond. East ruffed low (no other defense was any better), declarer overruffed and exited with a club. West took the ace in order to continue with clubs, but it didn't help. East overruffed dummy, but then was forced to lead away from the queen of trumps into the table's major tenace. Making four-odd.

Former Midlander takes to Big Apple's airwaves

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff writer

Native Midlander Elliot Forrest remembers as a child seeing his name on many occasions at the Westwood Theatre.

"It had a profound effect on me, I think, to see my name upon the marquee," said Forrest, whose middle name then was Forrest and his last name Gould.

"That other Elliot Gould was not famous when I was born so there was really no intent to name me after a famous person."

Now the talk show host for the Morning Show on New York City's 104.3/WNCN-FM, a popular classical radio, Forrest recently signed a contract to host a new show for the Arts & Entertainment Network, tentatively titled "Breakfast with the Arts," which will be seen on A & E every Sunday from 9 a.m. to noon, Eastern Time.

"It's long form programming, and I'll do what they call wrap-around. I'll introduce the piece and come back every commercial break, and then I'll have a few words at the end," Forrest said.

A & E also has asked him to write and report news.

"I'm thrilled. I'm having the time of my life," Forrest said, adding, "I've been very lucky.

" It's very gratifying to work on a project when you're in charge because you take all the risks, and if it works, you get the glory and, hopefully, the money."

The son of Midland optometrist Dr. Norman S. Gould and his wife, Evelyn, Forrest is pleased to have grown up in Midland.

"IT WAS A fun place to grow up, and I think it really helped a lot of us to have a place like Midland to grow up in where we could pretty much do whatever we wanted. It was not like a big city where we were afraid to go out and not like a tiny city where there is nothing to do."

'Somewhere in college I had dropped the idea about being famous just to be famous. It stopped being important to me. But the more successful I seem to get, along comes with it a small amount of notriety.'

— Elliot Forrest

Forrest traces his involvement with radio and television back to his family and Midland Community Theatre, more specifically the Pickwick Players.

"Initially, my brother and my parents were involved with the theater, and I thought I would give it a try," Forrest said. "My brother was in it for a while and then dropped out. A lot of people joined and dropped out, but it sort of struck a chord in me. Although I'm not involved in theater that much anymore, it certainly was the basis for me being involved in show business and then radio and television.

"I would not be working in radio today if I had not worked for KNFM. Because of that first job in Midland, I got the next job in Kansas City, then the one in Long Island and then New York. That's the way to do it. Start off in a small city — then the biggest radio market in the world."

Forrest, who graduated from the University of Texas at Austin, also worked for Coterie, a professional children's theater company, while in Kansas City. The radio station he worked for in Kansas City was a classical music station.

Hosting the grand opening ceremony of Bryant Park's Music and Dance Half-Price Ticket Booth this summer is former Midlander Elliot Forrest, center, flanked by actor Tony Randall, left, and Kitty Carlisle Hart, chairwoman of the New York State Council on the Arts.

"I WAS IN the band in high school at Lee High and also at Goddard so I have a little background, and my father had classical music records," Forrest said.

"But I just sort of fell into it in Kansas City. I was there about two years, and I learned a lot about classical music and classical music radio."

Forrest finds himself still surprised at the difference in receiving gratification for his work in radio as opposed to appearing on the stage.

"After doing theater for so long where the reaction is immediate, it's funny to be in radio where sometimes when I'll do a joke, I'll get a letter a week later and somebody will say how that was funny."

Theatre brought together Forrest and his wife, Kara Sheridan from Maryland. She is a professional stage manager. The couple has a 16-month-old daughter, Tyler Elizabeth.

Forrest feels that he had been fortunate throughout his life.

"I feel very fortunate that I've always had the love and support of my family, my parents. They've always been there for me."

Forrest feels that he has been fortunate throughout his life.

"I feel very fortunate that I've always had the love and support of my family, my parents. They've always been there for me."

FORREST ATTRIBUTES his success to date to flexibility and an open-minded attitude.

"I've always been open for opportunities to present themselves so that I can take my best shot, or weight the opportunity and see what it is that I want to do most. I've always been slightly skeptical of anyone who had planned their life too precisely for five or 10 years ahead, and then set out to do that. I think someone like that is not open to what could present itself. Although having a sense of purpose and a vision about your career is still very important."

Despite being a person who "keeps going till someone tells me no," 35-year-old Forrest still "never dreamed that this would be my life."

Yet, there are certain aspects of his life which do not surprise him.

"I always felt like I would be successful," Forrest said. "Somewhere in college I had dropped the idea about being famous just to be famous. It stopped being important to me. But the more successful I seem to get, along comes with it a small amount of notriety."

Many New Yorkers who don't listen to Forrest know his face. It's captured in an advertizement on side of the buses in the city's mass transit system.

"It's a big town. I have a relatively small group of listeners that listen to me every morning on the radio. But that number is around 200,000 people. That's still relatively small in New York. But that blows my mind. That's Midland and Odessa. But New York's a big city."

And how does it feel to have 200,000 people listening in? Forrest's answer is brief. "I try not to think about it."

Made possible in part by a grant from the Texas Commission on the Arts, the cycle of this year's subgranting program is for projects beginning Jan. 1, 1993 to Dec. 31, 1993.

"Eligible programs must serve the residents of and/or visitors to Midland," said a release from Junanne Brock, director.

"Consideration will be given to the project's impact on the economy and the promotion of tourism, and whether it serves the education of the citizenry, supports the preservation and enrichment of the diverse cultural resources of the community and contributes to Midland's growing reputation as a regional cultural and entertainment center."

"In addition, administrative and fiscal responsibility of each applying organization will be evaluated."

Interested applicants are asked to contact the Arts Assembly at 687-1149 for information, guidelines and application materials.

Campbell to perform at Cactus Moon

Staff report

Stacy Dean Campbell performs at Cactus Moon Wednesday.

Campbell

The concert and dance is a celebration of the Moon's first anniversary. Doors open at 6 p.m. The evening includes a complimentary buffet and long necks for a quarter. Campbell will do one show beginning at 10:30 p.m.

Campbell is one of the new breed of young country artists recognized as a "Country Hunk."

Born in Carlsbad, N.M., Campbell put his first band together when he was 17. The band never performed publicly.

"Initially, I guess my real incentive to start singing was a combination of my brother's urging and the fact that I needed a hobby back then," Campbell said. "Somewhere along the way my hobby became extremely important to me. My direction got clearer."

'Initially, I guess my real incentive to start singing was a combination of my brother's urging and the fact that I needed a hobby back then. Somewhere along the way my hobby became extremely important to me. My direction got clearer.'

— Stacy Dean Campbell

After high school, Cambell joined a local band, The Nichels, of which his brother had previously been a member.

"We performed at various college dance clubs in the central Oklahoma area. I'd sing everything from Dwight Yoakam to John Cougar Mellancamp live with The Nichels."

During this two-year band stint, Campbell attended college at Central State University, Edmond, Okla., where he majored in criminal justice.

At the same time, brother Spencer Campbell was working in Nashville as a drummer and bass player on the road and in the studio for artists such as Judson Spence.

Spence, after hearing Stacy Campbell's voice and music through Spencer Campbell, suggested Stacy Campbell pursue his singing and songwriting aspirations.

Campbell followed Spence's advice. His debut single is "Rosalee" and his disc is "Lonesome Wins Again."

Management has requested that those interested in the Cactus Moon anniversary party, who are customers from the past, contact KNFM Radio or the Moon for a complimentary invitation.
