PINKY DINKY

ONE-SIDED CONVERSATION

By Terry Gilkerson

GUNMAN'S BLUFF

Edgar Wallace

COPYRIGHT BY EDGAR WALLACE

"But—" she began. "I believe he's in Spain. If a man's in Spain he can't be in London, can he? And if he's a gentleman at large in Spain, taking long drives through the country, he can't be burgling Taffanny's or getting himself mixed up with Connor."

"Now, my Mrs. Maddison, I'm going to ask you that impertinent question all over again: exactly why did your husband leave you? No, no, I don't mean that. I know why he left you. But why did you suddenly leave him flat? I don't know that. I'll bet your husband doesn't know. Only you know—and Danty, I guess Danty knows."

She was silent; but she realized at that moment just why she had not destroyed Rex's last note. She had kept it to show Luke some day, and demand from him the explanation she should have asked for when it came to her. It was her justification—the only one she could have for her conduct.

"That is an extraordinary request for a stranger to make, Mr. Haynes, and I don't know whether to enlighten you or not."

She stood for a moment silent, and then, turning abruptly, walked out of the room. Haynes picked up his hat from the floor and rose, thinking the interview was at an end. But in three minutes she was back again with a little envelope in her hand.

"I'm telling you something that nobody knows but me and Mr. Morell," she said. "When my poor brother shot himself, this note was found in his room."

She took from the envelope two telephone slips and passed them to him. Gunner Haynes read:

Margaret darling, I have lost for months I have been gambling. Today I took a desperate step on the advice of Luke Maddison. He has led me to ruin—money is his god. I beg of you not to trust him. He has led me from one act of folly to another. God bless you.

REX.

He read it twice and then looked up.

"Is this your brother's handwriting?"

She nodded.

"Could you swear to it?"

"Yes, I'm sure it's his. I've had hundreds of pencilled notes from him, and I couldn't possibly be mistaken."

"Who found it?"

"Mr. Morell found it in Rex's room. Poor, dear Rex had a servant, a very trustworthy man, and he saw the note before Mr. Morell got it in his pocket."

"He didn't read it, of course?" suggested the Gunner. "The servant, I mean?"

"I don't think so. He only saw the note and Mr. Morell hid it."

The Gunner had an amazing memory. He could from that moment have repeated every word in the letter—there was no need for him to take a copy and he handed it back to the girl.

No man wasted less time or effort than Gunner Haynes. His method represented the very economy of labor. He was satisfied that Connor had carried away his victim, but was wrong when he associated Danty Morell with the abduction.

He called upon Connor but was told vaguely that the man had gone into the country. He did not attempt to seek an interview with Danty Morell, but after a day spent in a vain search of Connor's wharf, made his way to Half Moon Street, watched the house until he saw first Danty Morell and then Pi Colles leave. To get into Danty's flat was a very simple matter—a key blank, a piece of lampblack, a quarter of an hour spent in Green Park filling the soft metal, procured him an entrance.

Once inside the flat he proceeded at his leisure. He was not at all anxious at the thought of Danty's return. His hatred of Morell was in one sense illogical. They had been friends and partners, though he had lost sight of the man and the partnership had broken off. He had no direct proof of the duplicity he suspected. Gunner Haynes had loved that feather-headed little wife of his, and when she had disappeared, never to become more to him than a record in a workhouse register, a tremendous part of his life had been cut away from him. He might suspect Danty as the cause of his agony; he had no clear evidence that the story the man had told was untrue.

Danty had said the girl had disappeared, and that he was as ignorant of her whereabouts as her husband. Yet, for all this, the suspicion in Gunner Haynes' mind amounted to a certainty. He was a just man, and so long as that proof was missing, Danty Morell would come to no harm.

He made a quick but thorough examination of the two rooms. There were letters which had to be scanned, pocketbooks to investigate, drawers to be opened and searched, but in none of these did Haynes find the slightest clue to Luke Maddison's present place of imprisonment. He did find the note which Connor had scribbled, giving the address where Luke was staying, but no more. There remained only the safe, which was not so much a safe as a steel cupboard fastened with a spring lock—the type that is found in most business offices. To open this was a matter of five minutes patient work.

There were four shelves and each was crowded with letters, bills, and curious souvenirs which Danty had collected—the cupboard was in such disorder as only a man without method could create. On the third shelf he found a wooden box, the lock of which he forced. There were papers here—bundles of letters tied up with shoelaces, bits of old string—there was nothing romantic in Danty's disposition.

The first bundle did not interest him. At the sight of the writing on the second his face went gray. He brought the box into the dining-room and sat down, read three of the letters, glanced at the others, and very slowly and deliberately tied them back in the box. As he did so he caught sight of a scrap of paper exactly the size of that on which Rex had written his last message. He took it out—yes, it was scrawled in the same handwriting. But the message was unintelligible. It ran:

Danty Morell. The man is a common swindler. I was warned against him by—

And then in a flash he realized. He had an extraordinary memory, and could repeat almost word for word the supposed complete message Rex had left. With these words added it would have read:

Margaret darling, I have lost for months I have been gambling. Today I took a desperate step on the advice of Danty Morell. The man is a common swindler. I was warned against him by Luke Maddison. He has led me to ruin—money is his god. I beg of you not to trust him. He has led me from one act of folly to another. . . .

That was it. Danty had found that the first and last of those scraps made a complete message; he had put the second in his pocket (it still bore marks of being screwed up).

It came as something in the nature of a shock to Margaret Maddison to discover how completely changed were her feelings toward the man with whom she had passed through stages of toleration to liking, and from liking to a sort of passive affection, and from that again, in the cataclysmic revolution of feeling that her brother's death had brought about to the bitterest loathing.

For the first time in her life Margaret was in love, and in love with something which was neither a memory nor an idea, but something which was to her as real as her own hand. She had gained that sense of possession which is the wife's own sense—an understanding of her obligations. She could not afford to waste time in regrets at the amazing follies and wicked errors of the past; in the days that followed her mind was occupied with schemes for helping him out of the morass in which he struggled.

She did not hear from Gunner Haynes, although she stayed up until nearly two o'clock the next morning, having the telephone switched through to her bedside. Nor did the next day bring news. She was out when Danty called, and having no occasion to go to her check book, she did not discover his theft.

After she discovered it, she called on him.

Danton heard her voice and was coming across the hall to meet her before the door was closed.

"This is an unexpected pleasure, Margaret," he said. "Is anything wrong?"

She did not answer until she was in his room.

"Before I tell you why I've come," she said, "I think it is only fair that you should know I have left instructions that unless I am back in my house in three-quarters of an hour my butler will ring Mr. Bird and tell him where I have gone."

He frowned at this.

"What's the idea?" he asked harshly. "That's an extraordinary way to behave—why in the dickens shouldn't you be back in three-quarters of an hour?"

"Where are the remainder of those checks that you stole from my check book when you called the other day?" she asked.

She saw his face go red.

"I don't know what you mean," he said loudly. "I steal checks? What nonsense you're talking—"

"You came into my house and you were in my sitting room long enough to extract ten checks. One of them was brought to the bank today, made out in Luke's name and signed by him. On my instructions the checks was not honored."

"Not honored?" he stammered, and in his embarrassment he betrayed his share of the guilt.

"I'm less interested in the check than in my husband," she said quietly. "Where is he?"

WHAT A DIFFERENCE 90 DAYS MAKE!

TODAY A TODDLING CHICK... in 90 days a proud pullet about to lay. There's something to think about! Tiny bones and little muscles have grown several times in size... a delicate fuzz has sprouted into hundreds of feathers... a chick weighing grams has grown into a pullet weighing pounds... all in 90 short days!

A wonderful change... and only one thing can do it... good feed! This year consider Purina Startena Chow (mash) and Purina Chick Chow (scratch) or All-Mash Startena Chow for the first six weeks... and then Purina Growena and Purina Intermediate Hen Chow until your pullets are laying at 16 weeks.

Put these Chows before your chicks. You will see pullets that are built right... pullets that will lay eggs plentifully in fall and winter when eggs are always worth good money.

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for anybody's system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when Syrup Pepsin emptied the bowels just as promptly.

Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to the nearest drugstore and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

WHEAT PRICES DOWN! BREAD IS STILL UP

Have any of you folks who buy baker's bread noticed any difference in the price of the loaf since wheat went down to 80 cents, asks the April 1 Oklahoma Farmer-Stockman.

Probably not. And you won't notice any difference if wheat stays down. The loaf of bread is now selling to the consumer for the same price it sold for when wheat brought the grower $1.25. If wheat had been selling for $1.25 all winter bread would be selling for the same price it now sells for.

And if wheat should go down to 50 cents a bushel it is doubtful if the price of bread would drop very much, if any. On the other hand if wheat should go up to $1.50 to the grower there would be but little rise, if any, in the price of bread.

What a tragic fact for the wheat grower: the consumer is set to pay—will pay—that price for bread which will return to the grower a fair price for his wheat. But the grower gets less than it costs him to grow the wheat. Those who handle the wheat and its products from the time it leaves the hands of the farmer to the time the loaf is handed over to the customer, get the profit that the farmer ought to get.

A fair price for wheat seems assured to the grower if only the problem of fitting the supply to the demand is solved. This calls for control of production within reasonable limits and effective marketing. This is the goal to which the farm board has set itself, to accomplish which it is urging the active help and sympathy of every wheat grower.

BITTER TAX FACTS

For every $1 in general property tax paid by farmers of the United States in 1914, they now pay $2.62.

The increase in the tax rate was rapid from 1916 to 1922. But taxes on property continue to go up. During the past five years there has been a 6 per cent increase.

A part of the increase is explained by the lower purchasing price of the dollar. It takes $1.50 to pay as many salaries and buy as many goods now as $1 would pay and buy in 1914.

But after we make allowance for the higher cost of goods and services as compared to 1914 we find that taxes on property now stand at $2.12 as compared to $1 in 1914.

In other words the cost of government is double and more, what it was 15 years ago to the man who owns tangible property which the assessor can see and levy on.

And while the tax on real property—land and buildings—goes up rapidly the tax paid on other kinds of wealth has gone down rapidly.

The tax paid on bank stock in Oklahoma is only 4 mills on the dollar, or $4 on each $1,000. And some of the big banks in Oklahoma last year paid as high as 30 per cent on their stock after paying good salaries all around, Christmas bonuses, and salting down big reserves.

And in order not to "frighten away" capital from the state some years ago mortgages were relieved of taxes except for a modest stamp tax. So it has come about that the holder of a mortgage representing 75 per cent of the value of the property on which it is placed pays almost no tax. The holder of the property who must pay the interest on the mortgage pays all the tax on the property.—CLARENCE ROBERTS in the April 1 Oklahoma Farmer-Stockman.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

Ever since the stock market crash last fall many conflicting opinions have been expressed concerning the business outlook for 1930. There is no denying the fact that there has been a slowing down in certain lines, but the views of leading industrialists and business men appear quite optimistic with the advent of Spring.

There is no doubt that the concerted effort of these leaders to maintain high levels of production and distribution is having a wholesome effect. Besides, large expenditures for permanent improvements by Federal, state and local authorities are getting under way, while billions are involved in expansion programs of railroads, utilities and other basic industries.

An especially favorable trend is seen in the direction of home building and home improvement, concerning which a significant statement was made last week after a nation-wide survey by Altorfer Bros., makers of Spinner washers, who said: "Home construction is up 425 per cent since 1920, and wired homes have doubled in the intervening 10 years. Various leading electrical home equipment distributors throughout the United States reveal comprehensive plans to build new business during the year. There need be no apprehension; indeed, there can be only optimism regarding 1930."

Encouraging reports have been forthcoming from many other sources, so it appears that the temporary depression may soon be ended. Incidentally, the passage of the pending tariff bill should have a salutary effect upon the business situation, through relieving the feeling of uncertainty which now exists in several important industries.

For 3 years we have been selling tires here in Perryton, and during that time we have learned a good deal about this business.

We've had to learn. That's our job. We study tires, service them, repair them. And when a tire gets into our repair department, it can't hold back any secrets. Ever watch us repair a tire? Do it sometime.

We know the tires that are made to "just get by." We know the ones that "cheat." And we know the ones that carry an extra margin of strength and safety—that are honest through and through.

That's why we sell Hood Tires—because they don't skimp on materials or workmanship. We will be glad to tell you more about it if you wish, but at least, see this new Hood with the improved tread before you buy again.

PROGRESS DUE TO PUBLIC EDUCATION

By Lewis E. Soper, D. O.

Education pays—not only the individual, but the state and nation. In America, the common schools have paid by helping achieve our country's rapid rise to national greatness. Within a little more than a century and a half our vast frontier has been pushed rapidly westward until it has disappeared. In that time the country has grown from a group of colonies to a nation occupying the foremost position among the powers of the world. Part of this growth may, of course, be attributed to the abundant supply of natural resources, but it is largely due to an enlightened citizenry.

America's free public schools have been responsible. They have widened the opportunities for immigrants from overseas; they have given woman the highest place ever accorded her; they have established the best standard of living ever realized over a large area; they have made possible our large-scale production in industry; they have effected the highest level of intellectual life ever attained by the common people. At the same time, we have witnessed steady improvement in the art of self-government, and there has been an increasing appreciation of the significance of childhood and home life.

Comparative Figures

Considering such returns, the cost of education is small. In 1926, the latest year for which we have figures, we spent $2,255,251,327 for public schools, but this amount was only 2.68 per cent of our national income of $84,150,000,000 for the year, and was much smaller than the nation's total annual life insurance bill of $2,624,000,000. If we consider luxuries, we find the contrasts even more striking. For instance, in 1927, we spent nearly $11,000,000,000 for passenger automobiles, not including motor trucks, and the nation's bill for tobacco was almost equal to that for public education!

Certainly, then, the nation can afford to educate its children. In fact, it cannot afford to do otherwise.

How best shall America meet its obligation to the public schools? That question is agitating the minds of legislators, educators and public-spirited citizens. Many plans are suggested, but the most popular is that of establishing a Department of Education with a Secretary in the President's Cabinet. Such a department would serve the schools much as the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor serve other great national interests, yet it would permit the school to continue under the present system of state and local administration which has been developed as a typically American institution.

Throughout our nation's history, the federal government has been active in the promotion of education. Testifying to the wisdom of this policy we see America's progress. What doubt can there be that a continuation of this program, through a Secretary of Education, would likewise be a paying proposition?

Investigation Needed

Within the past three decades enough study has been given to school problems to discover how great the field is and how badly further investigation is needed. The school building suitable for one community may not be satisfactory for another, yet such studies as have been made of this problem have indicated that great savings might be realized through the proper planning and construction of these buildings. Similarly, with other matters, it is realized that while conditions vary from place to place, and from state to state, many problems are common to schools throughout the country.

To provide a national clearing house for these problems and to extend educational research, there should be created a Department of Education, with a Secretary in the President's Cabinet. Acting as a fact-finding, fact-distributing agency for education, it would offer the several states an invaluable source of information and guidance in improving their school systems. And through it our government, which spends millions for eradication of hog cholera and plant pests, would be able to perform its duty in the way of eradicating illiteracy and replacing ignorance with equality of educational opportunity.

Research Necessary

Not so long ago when grandfather planned a business venture, started out to plant potatoes, or tried to check a cold, he was guided by custom, tradition, or even superstition. Today this has changed. Science has entered into industry, agriculture and hygiene—in fact, into all phases of life.

As has been said by Edward A. Filene, a Boston merchant, "It is research, it is science that is taking the burden off men and putting it on machines. It is research, it is science, that has put success on a foundation of fact, not opinion."

Agricultural research has shown the practicality of "scientific farming." Here the government itself has taken a hand through the Department of Agriculture, and the director of the department's scientific research, Dr. A. F. Woods, says that for every dollar expended by Uncle Sam for agricultural research, the country has reaped an annual return of $500. One of the department's most recent accomplishments is its victory over the Mediterranean fruit fly in Florida.

American business, it has been estimated, is spending more than $200,000,000 a year on research—$7,000,000 of this sum coming from government appropriations and the remainder from commercial firms.

Despite all this attention to scientific investigation of our various problems, educational research is being neglected. Dr. E. L. Thorndike of Columbia University declares that "Our entire nation probably spends less on education research for its 20,000,000 school children than one business is spending on improving the 'talkies'."

WHAT'S THE OUTLOOK FOR THE CATTLEMAN?

During the last two or three years, the beef cattle industry has been near the low point of the production cycle and near the peak of the cycle of prices.

"The extreme low level in output and the crest of the curve of values probably have been witnessed," declares one of the midwest's leading farm economists in the April 15 Oklahoma Farmer-Stockman. "While prices probably will stay at the high level for another year or two, the long future holds the prospect of declining tendency."

"The outlook for the coming year for those who are now in the business of breeding and rearing cattle, if the view that prices will hold on a relatively high level for that period is correct, is optimistic. For finishers and graziers who buy thin, stock for breeders, however, the prospect is not so favorable owing to the high prices they have to pay for raw material.

"When the broad downward tendency in beef cattle prices to which we must look forward will become pronounced is a question. Cattle price cycles in the past have averaged seven or eight years down and seven or eight years up, making about 15 years for the complete circuit."

"The normal expectancy based on the cycle tendency is that production will increase in the next half-dozen years, at first slowly and then more rapidly, that market receipts will change but little for a two while young cattle are held back to build up breeding stock but that they finally will be considerable increase and lower level. It is probable that the changes will be less than those in the last 15

$22.50
Clothes

—it's the increased quality that will make you want a Hill suit!

MEN WE BELIEVE that the man who gets ahead wants better quality tailoring in his clothes than mass production alone provides. We believe that price is not the all-controlling and decisive factor in making a sale. So instead of attempting merely to maintain average quality and reduce the price, we have devoted our efforts to giving you increased quality—at the same low price. Naturally, you'll want your new Spring suit to have the quality advantages which distinguish Hill $22.50 Clothes!

The Quality Advantages

Pockets

There is a taped inner support from the coat pockets to the trousers which prevents sagging. The pockets of all Hill suits are of ample proportion and are lined with cloth of exceptional durability.

Collar

As you know, the whole fit of a coat is dependent upon the collar. We have had the collar linings of Hill suits cut separately by hand so that the lining fits the collar perfectly. You will like the snug "feel" of these suits.

Lining

Every Hill coat has a high grade alpaca lining which is perfectly fitted. Alpaca is selected for its enduring quality. It holds its shape after many months of hard wear.

Front

The coat front of Hill suits is carefully built up, shaped and cross stitched. This portion of the suit is made of half cloth distinguished for its trimness and form-holding qualities.

Hand Workmanship

All of our suits are basted by hand before sewing. This insures you of a perfect fit from a perfect pattern. There is no "guess-work" in the making of a Hill suit. Individual attention is used throughout the making.

All Wool Fabrics

The fabrics used in Hill's $22.50 Clothes are guaranteed to be all wool. These fabrics are perfectly woven by modern looms... and come in a variety of smart Spring colors.

MRS. G. I. CRABAUGH

"No medicine ever helped me as did Konjola," said Mrs. G. I. Cra-baugh, 739 Quaker street, Tulsa.
"For more than nine years I had trouble with my stomach. Gas accumulated after meals and I bloated terribly. The pains and pressure often made me short of breath and dizzy. Constipation was another of my worries and I became an almost daily user of cathartics.
I had terrible headaches and found it difficult to sleep. My nerves became badly affected and my general condition badly run down.

"I am delighted with the results
I obtained from Konjola. Before I had finished the second bottle my constipation had been relieved and my stomach greatly improved.
As I kept on with this great medicine my general health improved until I am feeling better today than I have in a long time. I have an excellent appetite and eat heartily without distress. Even neuritis which attacked me occasionally has been totally driven from my system. I cannot say too much in praise of this great medicine."

Though Konjola works quickly, six bottles are recommended as a fair trial. Although many people are benefited within a few weeks, the longer period is best.

Konjola is sold in Perryton, Texas,

TRY THIS ON YOUR McCORMICK-DEERING
—OR WHAT HAVE YOU?

Set aside your morning's milk to cool until you come in from the fields at noon. Insert a thermometer into the can and learn the accurate temperature;
then stir the milk and put it through your cream separator.

After you have finished separating, take out a generous sample of the milk you have just skimmed and have the local creamery test it. If your cream separator is a McCormick-Deering the amount of butterfat remaining in the skim milk will be much less than if the milk had been separated by any other cream separator under like conditions.

We are not guessing about this; actual test all over the country have shown that the McCormick-Deering Ball-Bearing Cream Separator will skim alongside any machine made, skim at like temperatures, and skim more efficiently. This outstanding ability to skim clean puts real money into the McCormick-Deering owner's pocket.

If you would rather have us conduct a cold milk skimming test for you, ask us to bring a new McCormick-Deering Ball-Bearing Cream Separator to your farm any day that you can have the cold milk ready for us. If you have an old machine, we'll try the test on it too; we are glad of every opportunity to prove to our friends the great superiority of the McCormick-Deering Cream Separator.

KNOWLEDGE

Knowledge does not apply itself; it lies dormant. You must convert it into energy by the power of your thought. The difference between the $25-a-week clerk and the $25,000-a-year executive is solely one of thought.
The clerk may have more brains than the executive. He may also have a better education, but he doesn't know how to apply his thought to get the greatest good from it. If you have brains, USE them. If you have skill, APPLY it. The world must profit by the use and application of your powers, and therefore you.

We all have inspired moments when we see clearly how we may do great things—but we do not believe in them enough to make them come true. An imagination which begins and ends in daydreaming is weakening to character.

Make your daydreams come true.

PRODUCTION IS SER-MENACE TO FARMERS

BOARD'S HARD-TO KEEP DOWN TO HAND

have been designated by the Farm Board as requiring special national selling agencies to handle them exclusively. They are cotton, dairy products, wheat, rice, livestock, wool and mohair, tobacco, poultry and eggs, seeds, potatoes and coarse grains. There are, of course, dozens of other agricultural products which will be organized either singly or in groups. An entirely new kind of administration machinery cannot be expected to get into full swing instantly. It is going to take three or four growing seasons, in all probability, before all of the farmers of the United States fully understand how the new system operates and how to take advantage of it.

Control of production, in the interest of more stable prices for growers, is a definite function of the Farm Board under the law which created it. And already the board has found the situation in some commodities, especially wheat, tobacco and cotton, to be such as to point definitely to lower prices because of overproduction.

Ten per cent decrease in wheat acreage is being advocated today by the Board, which points to a surplus of 100,000,000 bushels in 1929, above the total demand of the world's markets, in proof of its statement that too much wheat is being grown. Farmers could make more money out of 650,000,000 bushels than they are making now out of 850,000,000 bushels. And when the entire wheat market is in the control of the farmers themselves—and that is what the cooperative marketing program is headed for—it will not be so difficult to convince growers that low prices are not always the result of manipulation by speculative interests. They will recognize, as many of them do now, that the remedy is in their hands. The tobacco situation in the burley districts is so serious that the Farm Board the other day sent a long telegram to state agricultural extension directors in Tennessee and Kentucky warning them that planting reports for 1930 indicate a 15 per cent increase over 1929, which would give 75,000,000 pounds more tobacco than last year, and that last year's crop was 50,000,000 pounds more than the market for burley would absorb.

Cotton is much in the same situation with everything pointing to another large crop which, added to the carry-over from last year, will force prices down to 1926 levels or even lower.

So long as each individual grower is a law unto himself, there is no practical way to prevent overproduction. But when the only market, or the best market, available to the grower, is through the cooperative, and the individual grower who disregards the warning against planting too large an acreage finds himself unable to finance his operations through the channels which are open to his neighbors who do play the game of cooperation, there is hope for every farmer.

What is the grower of any commodity going to do when he is all set to grow one kind of crop and nothing else? There isn't anything for him to do but try something else. In an extremely interesting and important series of radio talks recently Mr. Samuel R. McKelvie, a member of the Federal Farm Board, illustrated this point. He said:

"There are available actual figures of the cost of production of various agricultural crops in different states and regions. If these facts were consolidated into one picture I, as a wheat farmer in eastern Nebraska, observing what it costs to produce wheat in Dakota, western Nebraska, Kansas, Montana and other regions, might conclude that I had an awful handicap because of the price of my land and my smaller operating unit. Then I would begin to see what else I could do to get out of competition with that wheat-growing farmer out West.

"I saw a statement by Mr. Henry Ford recently in which he said that he did not fire a man until he had to. If he found an employee was not adapted to one task he put him at something else and then at something else, until he found a niche in which that man fitted. So it is with us farmers. We must adapt ourselves to the thing we can do best."

There is no subject so important today and for a long time to come, to every farmer and every business man in communities which depend principally upon farmers for their trade than the program of the Federal Farm Board and the way in which that program is being put into effect. The Board has just issued an eight-page pamphlet in which the whole system is set forth in the form of easily understood questions and answers. No American can regard himself as adequately informed about fundamental conditions in this fundamental industry, farming, without knowing the answers to every question which can be asked about the Federal Farm Board. A copy of this pamphlet will be sent, I am informed, to anyone who will take the trouble to write for it. A post card will do. Address the Federal Farm Board, 1300 E. street, Washington, D. C., and ask for Circular Number One. Just give your name and address; you do not need to send postage.

COMPARE the delivered price as well as the list price in considering automobile values. Chevrolet's prices include only reasonable charges for delivery and financing. Easy G. M. A. C. Terms.

There is one sure way to get greater value in a low-priced car today—choose a Six!

This greater value is instantly obvious when you drive a Chevrolet Six. You notice first of all its greater smoothness. There is no tremor in the steering wheel—no rattle in the floor boards—no drumming in the body.

In addition to the finer performance of its six-cylinder motor, the new Chevrolet gives you truly remarkable economy.

Its six-cylinder smoothness saves the entire car from the strain and wear of vibration. This, of course, lowers the cost of maintenance and assures a longer-lasting automobile.

From the standpoint of operating expense, Chevrolet is equally economical. No automobile uses less gasoline and oil. No car shows a lower expense for tires. And no car costs less for service.

Because of its modern engineering, Chevrolet also assures a high re-sale value—for its entire design is just as advanced as its six-cylinder engine.

Chevrolet gives you fully-enclosed, weather-proof, 4-wheel brakes. It gives you a modern fuel system—with the gasoline tank mounted in the rear outside the body. It gives you four long semi-elliptic springs, mounted lengthwise in the direction of car travel. It gives you beautiful Fisher bodies built of combination hardwood-and-steel. It gives you a full ball bearing steering mechanism, an adjustable driver's seat, a Fisher VV non-glare windshield, and tilting beam headlights, operated by a foot-controlled button.

Before you decide on any car in the low-price field, see and drive the Chevrolet Six. The more thoroughly you investigate, the more certain you are to conclude that it's wise to choose a Six—for value, for performance and for economical transportation!

J. W. BUCKHAULTS

J. W. Buckhaunts, prominent farmer of the Waka community, passed away Monday in Shattuck after an illness of only a few days with pneumonia. Mr. Buckhaunts was taken ill Friday and his condition was serious from the start. The deceased was an overseas World War veteran and had been gassed, and this, no doubt, had much to do with his death.

Funeral services were held at the Waka church Wednesday afternoon, Rev. C. H. Brown, pastor of the Church of the Brethren, officiating. Pall bearers were members of the Waka Sunday School. The remains were laid to rest in the Ochiltree cemetery. The immense crowd at the funeral and the many beautiful floral offerings were a token of the high esteem in which the deceased was held.

Joe Wallace Buckhaunts was born December 2, 1884 in southern Texas and at the time of death was 36 years, 4 months and 10 days of age. His mother died when he was eight years old. He came to Ochiltree county in the early days and made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Jno. N. Stump, now residents of Perryton. In 1916, he united with the Church of the Brethren. When our country entered the World War, he enlisted in the army and put in eleven months overseas duty, being gassed.

After the war he returned to the Waka country, where on January 29, 1921, he was united in marriage with Miss Viva Thomson. To this union two boys were born, Joe Vernon, age 8, and Wendall Wallace, age 4. In March, 1923, he felt the need of re-dedicating his life to the Lord, so he, with his wife, was again baptized. He was always interested in the work of our Lord and gave very freely to the support of those who had answered the call of the Lord's work.

Wallace Buckhaunts was a good man, a kind and loving father, and a friend to man and his neighbor. His sudden going is a loss to his community, for he was substantial, honest and a hard working man who was making a success of his chosen vocation of farming. Surviving relatives are the wife and two small sons, his aged father, four sisters, three brothers, a number of nieces and nephews, and a host of friends who join in extending sympathy to the bereaved.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our sincere and heartfelt thanks to all who were so kind and thoughtful of us during the sickness and death of our dearly beloved one. The floral offerings were so beautiful. Thanks to the American Legion for their help and kindness. May God bless each and every one of our prayer.

KEEP THEM BUSY

Keep young chicks out of mischief and they won't be likely to develop bad habits, advises the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Regular feeding, watering, and attention will keep the chicks busy and prevent them from getting too hungry. If you supply green feeds between the regular grain feedings it gives them something to do. Keep the litter evenly distributed, as the chicks usually scratch it into bunches. Let the chicks get outdoors; the bad habit of toe picking often develops when they are too closely confined.

April 28, 1930, a total eclipse of the sun will be visible in the Western and Northwestern states, as the moon passes between the sun and the earth. In the East and South only part of the sun will be darkened.

TOTAL ECLIPSE OF THE SUN ON APRIL 28TH

PARTIAL ECLIPSE IN PANHANDLE SECTION AT ABOUT ONE O'CLOCK

By Caleb Johnson

On Monday, April 28, the shadow of the moon will fall on the earth in such a way that in some parts of the United States the sun will be totally obscured at midday. During the afternoon of that day there will be partial obstruction of the sun by the moon's shadow, visible in many parts of the country.

An eclipse of the sun is no longer a matter of superstitious awe although there are still savage tribes in outlying unsettled parts of the globe to whom it is a terrifying spectacle, because its cause is unknown to them. But to everybody it is an interesting event, and to most of us it carries a sense of the grandeur and mystery of this planetary system in which we live and of which, so far as we are concerned, the Earth is the center of our interest if not of physical fact.

As everybody knows, the moon revolves around the earth at an average distance of about 238,857 miles. The moon's path through the skies is not a perfect circle, however. It does not correspond to any fixed mathematical form, as a matter of fact. At some seasons the moon is more than 17,000 miles nearer the earth than its average distance; at other times it is nearly 14,000 miles farther away.

The moon and the earth move as one unit around the sun, which is almost 93,000,000 miles away, or three hundred and ninety times as far from the earth as the moon is. The diameter of the moon is only a quarter of that of the earth, while that of the sun is more than 100 times as great as that of the earth. Taking the relative size of the sun and of the moon into consideration, and the irregularity of the moon's motions, it is not surprising that it is only occasionally and at very irregular intervals that the moon gets into a position where it completely shuts off the light of the sun from any given point on the earth's surface.

It is impossible, of course, for an object as small as the moon to cast a shadow big enough to darken the whole earth at once. If the moon were nearer the sun than the earth that would be possible, but as it is the path of any total eclipse is only a few miles wide. Outside of the area of totality the sun is only partly cut off by the moon.

On April 28th the first total eclipse of the sun to be visible in the United States since 1925 will be seen as total only in a small section of the extreme Northwest. Elsewhere the sun will appear like a crescent of varying size, according to the distance from the path of the moon's shadow.

The tip of the shadow will come in from the Pacific ocean and will strike the coast at a point in Marin county, California, about twenty miles north of San Francisco. Over a strip only a mile wide at the most there will be total darkness as the shadow moves rapidly toward Helena, Montana. The speed of the travelling shadow is more than 500 miles an hour, so that total darkness at one point along its path will last only about a second and a half.

The eclipse will not be total through the entire length of the path of the shadow. Before the shadow reaches the coast, the view of the sun from a ship out in the Pacific Ocean will be that of a ring of fire with the round black shadow of the moon in the middle. This ring effect makes what is called an "annular" eclipse. And along most of the path along which the shadow will travel as it moves swiftly northwesterly across the Canadian border, then South of Hudson's Bay over Labrador and out into the Atlantic Ocean, the view of those directly under the sun will be of this ring of fire. Only for about 500 miles of its ten-thousand-mile race over the surface of the globe will the eclipse be total. Fifty miles or so east of Butte, Montana, the ring will begin again.

All along the line of totality, which roughly crosses California just south of Marysville and Honey Lake, passes over Nevada about 40 miles north of Reno, and cuts across the corner of Oregon and the panhandle of Idaho to Montana, astronomers with telescopic cameras, spectroscopes and other instruments will be lined up from all the great observatories of the world, to try to make a record of the sun's corona, which is visible only at times of total eclipse.

This corona is a halo of flames which constantly shoots out from the body of the sun, sometimes to the enormous distance of a million miles, or more than the diameter of the sun itself. To the astronomer, the chemist and the physicist the study of these flames is of great importance. Every burning substance gives off light. By the peculiar qualities of that light as shown by the spectroscope it is possible to tell what substance is being burned to produce. The light from blazing copper, for example, is quite different from that of burning iron. When nothing obscures the face of the sun, the light which comes from it is what is called "white" light which the spectroscope can divide into its component colors, but not with such certainty as when only the corona tongues of burning gasified elements are measured. A flame half a million miles high on the face of the sun may consist of nothing but burning hydrogen gas, or it may be iron or gold heated to the point where it becomes a gas and bursts into flame.

It may seem that there is no practical value in such study of the sun's contents but one example will show that it may be of immense value. Only a comparatively few years ago astronomers studying the corona and the spectroscopic records of it found some lines on their photographic plates which were not accounted for by any of the known elements. They agreed that there must be an element in the sun which was so far unknown on earth. It would be, they figured, a gas just a little heavier than hydrogen, the lightest of all the elements. Long before any of the substance had been found it had been named "helium," from the Greek name of the sun, "helios."

Chemists everywhere began to search for helium. At last it was found, contained in the natural gas from certain wells on Government property in Texas. A means was invented of separating the helium from the other gases, and it proved to have a weight-lifting power which fitted it for use in balloons and airships with the great advantage over hydrogen that it is not easily inflammable. The great Navy airship, "Los Angeles," is filled with helium, and the United States government has enough of this gas on hand, in tanks, to fill the much larger airships which it is now building. Helium has been found elsewhere only in Canada, but the United States supply has been greatly increased through examination of gases from other wells, and the whole future of air navigation seems more secure, all from the examination of the sun's corona by astronomers during an eclipse.

Besides the observers on the ground a number of astronomers will go up in airplanes and try to take photographs of the corona from above the clouds. The time when the eclipse will be total, in the regions where it is total, will be exactly noon, sun time. That will be a little before noon, Pacific Standard Time, in California, and a few minutes after noon, Mountain Time, at Butte, Montana. In Denver the sun will be seen as a narrow crescent of fire at 12:31 Mountain Time. In Chicago the eclipse will be like a slightly thickened crescent, and will be visible for a few seconds at 2:06 Central Time. In Atlanta only a slight shadow over one arc of the sun will be visible, and will be seen at 3:08 Eastern Standard Time. New York will see the sun at eclipse like the moon in its third quarter, at 3:27, Eastern Time.

Of course, nobody who values his eyesight will try to look at the eclipse except through smoked glass or some other dense semi-transparent medium. A very good screen for the eyes for looking at the sun is easily made by anybody who owns a pocket camera. Just expose a film pointed directly at the sun.

say a half a second. Then have that film developed. The overexposure will give it a uniform dark gray tone through which it will be difficult to see anything except the sun itself, but in front of the eyes it enables one to examine the sun without injury.

"I wouldn't take a thousand dollars cash for the good Argotane has done me," said Mrs. D. F. Garner, who resides at 413 1/2 Pierce Street, and is the owner of the well known apartments known as the Garner Place, Amarillo, Texas. "It may sound strange, but I have suffered with stomach trouble, abcessed liver and nervousness until I got to the place where I felt like nothing on earth would ever do me any good. Everything I ate soured on my stomach and made trouble for me, and in addition to the nervousness at times I would have a hard lump in my side that felt like a rock and pained me terribly. I just lived in misery all the time and couldn't get any relief."

THE PRESIDENT ON THE JOB

By FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE

II.—Prohibition Up to Now
Washington, D. C. President Hoover will use every lawful means in the power of the President of the United States to enforce the Prohibition laws and other Federal criminal laws.

He does not expect to achieve 100 percent enforcement. He does not know to what percentage it can be enforced. He knows that 100 percent is humanly impossible, in the case of this or any other laws. The ten commandments are not fully obeyed after 3,300 years of attempted enforcement. But his effort to enforce it will utilize 100 per cent of the facilities which the law puts into his hands. But 100 per cent of Federal facilities are really only about one-third of the forces needed on the job. About 33 per cent must be done by the state and 33 percent by local police because the enforcement of Prohibition is a tripartite action of national, state and local authorities.

It ought not to be necessary to state the President's position on Prohibition enforcement at this time. He has stated it himself often enough and clearly enough. But there is a large element of the population of the United States which is accustomed to discount the statements and promises of politicians, and in this element are to be found many who do not realize that the man now in the White House is a different kind of man.

President Hoover has no quarrel with the right of any man to agitate for the repeal of any law which he does not approve, including the 18th Amendment. He does not believe that they will succeed, for 14 states can block it.

He has stated his own view as opposed to its repeal. He insists also that it is his duty under his oath to enforce the laws.

He considers it his duty to demand of Congress that it give him better tools to work with in carrying out the Federal part of the job of enforcement which has been put up to him.

The weakness of the position of the present proponents of Prohibition repeal is their failure to recognize the fact that the thought of the whole civilized world has been concentrating on this problem of liquor traffic regulation by law for at least three generations. Russia under the Czar had abolished vodka long before the world war. France placed abstinence under the ban and is now trying to develop a plan to abolish cognac. Belgium has abolished hard drinks. Sweden's "Gothenburg system" of controlling the traffic in liquor is among the most famous of governmental efforts in this direction and was initiated a great many years ago. Americans generally are familiar with the vigorous and various methods which have been adopted at different times by the Canadian provinces, as well as the efforts of numerous of the United States which had resulted in 70 per cent of more of this country, geographically, being to all intents and purposes "dry" before the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted. The forces, social, economic and political, which have made the worldwide movement for prohibition, will result in upholding the Eighteenth Amendment or substituting some other form of legal repression. And the advocates of a change from the present system would strengthen their case in-mensely if they proposed a workable plan which embraces their universal claim that the saloon must never return—and if the saloon is to be kept away there must be the strongest sort of legal repression.

Mr. Hoover did not write the Eighteenth Amendment nor draft the Volstead Law. But in his seven years as a member of the Cabinet he was in a position to appraise the effectiveness—or lack of it—of the Government's machinery for Prohibition enforcement, and he took office as President with a clear understanding of the magnitude and complexity of the problem and with definite ideas of what was needed to make the Federal enforcement machinery function better, if not perfectly.

He lost no time after taking office in initiating the reorganization of the law-enforcing machinery of the United States Government. The reorganization is not yet complete, but it is under way. Until it shall have been completed, and is functioning to the best of its capacity, the President is not concerned with the popular outcry that "Prohibition cannot be enforced." That is a statement of opinion, not necessarily of fact.

That it has not so far been enforced effectively he is perfectly willing to concede. That is a fact. No one recognizes that fact more clearly than he does. The failure has been partly in the Federal machinery. But even though Congress has not as yet given him all of the tools for better enforcement for which he has asked, the President believes that the Federal machinery of enforcement is more efficient now, after his first year in office than it was before. He has reason to believe this for there has been a very great increase in convictions for all kinds of crime during the past six months.

And that, as he sees it, is what he was elected for.

Mr. Hoover was nominated for the Presidency on a platform which declared in no ambiguous terms for the vigorous enforcement of this provision of the Constitution.

Mr. Smith's platform called for "an honest effort to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment."

There is no national difference of opinion on this phase of the subject.

In other words, Mr. Hoover took office, as he believes, with a clear mandate from the people of the United States to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment and the laws adopted by Congress thereunder, and what is more, he considers the most important phase before the American people is the reduction of criminality and disobedience to laws of all kinds—and prohibition is not the only crime in progress.

How important he regards it is easily deduced from the emphasis which he laid upon it in his inaugural address and in his first regular message to Congress.

I am going to quote here from the President's public utterances, emphasizing the point that he still holds the same views.

"I have been elected to enforce and execute the laws of the country," Mr. Hoover said in his inaugural address. But he recognized there that the prohibition law can be enforced only with the cooperation of the public. "The measure of success that the Government shall attain," he said, "will depend upon the moral support which you, as citizens, extend."

"The duty of citizens to support the laws of the land is coequal with the duty of their Government to enforce the laws which exist. For our citizens to patronize the violation of a particular law on the ground that they are opposed to it is destructive of the very basis of all that protection of life, of homes and property which they rightly claim under other laws," he said on March 4, 1929. "If citizens do not like a law, their duty as honest men and women is to discourage its violation; their right is openly to work for its repeal. Our whole system of self-government will crumble if officials elect what laws they will enforce or citizens elect what laws they will support."

About all a President can do with the citizens of the country as a whole is to point out that they have an obligation to obey the laws as long as these laws are laws. But his active efforts at enforcement of the law are aimed at the professional lawbreakers.

"To those of criminal mind," he said at the same time, "there can be no appeal but vigorous enforcement of the law."

Well, what is President Hoover doing or trying to do, with or without "those of criminal mind" in the matter of prohibition enforcement?

He tackled this problem in the way in which he tackles every administration problem. "First get the facts."

The way to get facts is to engage experts in that particular kind of facts to dig them out. One of Mr. Hoover's first acts as President was to appoint a commission, headed by George W. Wickersham, to investigate and report upon the whole problem of law enforcement.

In the meantime, he turned his attention to the personnel of the Federal Prohibition Enforcement Unit.

One of the greatest obstacles to efficient enforcement has been the character of the men, or many of them, originally engaged to enforce the law. In the first few years of Prohibition the term "prohibition agent" became almost a synonym for dishonesty and corruption. The temptation to connive at violations of the law was too great for many of them to withstand. And many got themselves appointed because they wanted the opportunity to sell out the Government to the illicit liquor interests.

So long as appointments to the Prohibition and other law enforcement forces were made under political pressure and without regard to fitness, this state of things was bound to get worse instead of better. Congress had, after nearly nine years of the old system, authorized the Executive to pick the enforcement personnel in the same way other Government employees are chosen, by examination as to fitness and character.

Mr. Hoover believes that this is already resulting in improvement in the efficiency of the Prohibition forces, and the work is proceeding rapidly of improving the service. That process is going on, and men of a high standard of character, courage and a sense of duty are replacing the irresponsible ones.

Prohibition enforcement has been a function of the Treasury Department ever since the Volstead Act was passed. That was done in the first instance because there was already in the Treasury the nucleus of a force skilled in hunting down illicit liquor for taxation purposes. In the old days the Federal Government did not concern itself with who made or sold liquor, or where or when it was sold. It was concerned only with seeing that every gallon paid its tax, that every dealer paid his Federal license tax.

Tax-collecting was a proper function of the Treasury, but the enforcement of Prohibition never was. President Hoover urged strongly upon Congress his request for authority to transfer this phase of law enforcement to the Department of Justice, which is the proper place for it. Most other criminal statutes of great importance come under the jurisdiction of the Attorney General, who has a better machine for handling crime than the Treasury has or should have.

This transfer, which the President regards as the second important new tool in his hands for more efficient enforcement, has been agreed upon by the House of Representatives but not, as I write this, by the Senate. However, there seems little doubt that it will shortly have been made law by the action of both houses.

Then, Mr. Hoover thinks, he will have a more efficient enforcement machine, under better control, than he has had up to now.

For a third line of control, the President is urging upon Congress the consolidation of all of the border patrol and coastal protective services into one. There are five different units now engaged in protecting the borders of the United States against the entry of smuggled goods. They are the Customs Service, the Immigration Service, the Coast Guard, the Prohibition Unit and the Narcotics squad.

Each of these has its separate function, and not a man of one of them willingly does anything to help the others. They operate under different chiefs, with different methods.

All of these, the President believes, should be consolidated into a single Coast Guard border patrol, which would guard the Canadian and Mexican borders as well as the sea-coast. He has asked Congress to authorize this. What Congress will do is still uncertain. If the President gets the authority he seeks, he feels confident that the flow of imported liquor over the borders can be checked down to a trickle. He has no illusion that it can be stopped altogether. We have had laws against smuggling for a hundred years and more and still smuggling goes on. England has tried for a thousand years to stop smuggling, but still some illicit merchandise gets past revenue officers.

"It is not to be expected that any criminal law will ever be fully enforced so long as criminals exist," is the way Mr. Hoover has phrased it.

And if Congress does not strengthen his arm in the matter of protecting the borders, he will go ahead and do the best he can with the existing forces on the borders.

The next line of a statement that there is a real enforcement of laws—and there are something to learn the in the courts. So long as thieves, narcotic sellers, can be sure of two before they come to enforcement, as the Prohibition Unit in the Federal has been strongly urged to do, something like $6,000,000 of Federal revenue is brought before the courts each year, of which $500,000 go to final trial, the prisoners plead guilty, fined $100 or some small amounts, in effect, a system for bootleggers.

The reason for this Federal courts have no Prohibition cases and crimes by the provisions of a District Judge by jury. In state courts magistrates are law violations of law are without a jury. The prisoner to a jury trial but the great majority which men are some terms under a year, these minor courts.

Heart-shaped face, a soft, feminine mouth, wide blue eyes that appear startled, and close, golden-brown hair create a perfect presence of Jean Arthur, the fortunate actress who won the role of the year opposite Charles (Buddy) Rogers in "Young Eagles" showing at the Ellis Theatre today and Saturday.

Financial disaster, a screen career failure, and five years of fighting for recognition. "The old saying that opportunity knocks but once did not hold true in my case," says Miss Arthur. "It knocked twice. The first time it eluded me, but, the second time I was wise enough to take no chances. I made the most of my break." When family financial reverses forced Jean to go to work at an early age, she chose to pose for photographs for advertisements and for painters. Motion picture producers, always on the look-out for new faces, discovered her, and she won a contract. In Hollywood with her mother, she had her first opportunity for movie success. Sea-sickness, however, while making her first film, lost her that opportunity; her contract expired, and she had to begin all over again. She sought extra roles, and finally stepped into "horse operas."

GET READY FOR THE BIG PARTY

FUN AND FROLIC, PEP AND PETTING IN THE LATEST TALKIE, THE BIG PARTY

A girl who yearns for romance, a boy with the same idea, a pair of goldiggers, two business partners with an eye for blondes, the partners' wives with an eye on their lesser halves, a millionaire with a penchant for installing young ladies in expensive apartments—these form a few of the human ingredients in "The Big Party," John Blystone's latest Fox Movietone production which will make its local premiere at the Ellis Theatre next Monday and Tuesday.

Much of the story's action takes place at the "big party" from which the film gets its name and the balance of it against a kaleidoscopic background of metropolitan settings ranging from tenements to exclusive night clubs and modiste's shops.

The principal roles are played by Dixie Lee, Sue Carol and Walter Catlett, with Frank Albertson, Richard Keene and "Whispering" Jack Smith, heading the excellent supporting cast that includes Ika Chase, Elizabeth Patterson, Charles Judels, Douglas Gilmore and Dorothy Brown.

Harlon Thompson wrote the original story and dialog as well as the lyrics of several of the song numbers, with William Kernell composing the music for the latter. Nelson and Pease and Hanley and McCarthy also contributed catchy tunes to the picture.

Plays Dramatic Role

Lila Lee and Conrad Nagel Give Admirable Performance In New Talkie

With the child of his first wife dying in Switzerland and his second wife hourly expecting to become a mother in America, what should the husband do?

Conrad Nagel solves this dramatic problem in "Second Wife," Radio Pictures' all-talking domestic drama which opens Wednesday and Thursday at the Ellis Theatre. Nagel appears as a wealthy widower with a small son. He falls in love with Lila Lee. They are married, but she soon realizes that memories of his "first wife" are overshadowing their happiness.
