Cityline Community Pulse

Survey on curfews

On April 30, the city of Dallas imposed a curfew that prohibits youths 16 and under from being on the streets after 11 p.m. on weekdays and midnight on Fridays and Saturdays. Midland and Odessa city officials are studying the same type of curfew to help curb youth crime. Do you feel a curfew is necessary, or do you feel that such a law would not help reduce the youth crime rate in Midland? We'd like to know your views. . . . Call Cityline's Community Pulse Poll at 560-2400, and then enter category 7655. If you feel the curfew is necessary, press 1. If you feel time restrictions on youth are not needed, press 2. You also are invited to leave your comments. We ask that you leave your name, but that is optional. The poll will remain open until noon Tuesday. Results will be published in Wednesday's edition.

D-Day ceremonies

Two ceremonies are planned today to commemorate the 50th anniversary of D-Day. One is scheduled for noon at Centennial Plaza. It will include flyovers, recognition of World War II veterans and a speech by U.S. Air Force Brig. Gen. (select) Kenneth W. Hess of Laughlin Air Force Base in Del Rio. The Confederate Air Force and the American Airpower Heritage Museum is scheduled to dedicate the Memorial Garden at the CAF Headquarters at 10 a.m. The ceremony will be followed by a CAF missing-man flyover formation.

Jackpot rolls over

No tickets correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, state lottery officials said. The numbers drawn Saturday night from a field of 50 were: 16-30-20-36-7-10. Lottery officials estimate the jackpot for Wednesday night's game will be $17 million.

ABOARD M.S. PRIDE OF PORTSMOUTH, in the English Channel — In company with ships of many nations, the American carrier George Washington, with President Clinton and his entourage aboard, steamed on Sunday night toward Normandy and a rendezvous with memories of a mighty victory.

■ Related stories, photos/3B

For Clinton and other leaders of the World War II allies, a Sunday as mild and sunny as Saturday was dank and rainy passed in a swirl of color and high British military pageantry. Kings, princes, presidents, and prime ministers from three continents, the leaders had come together to mark the launching, precisely half a century ago, of the greatest seaborne invasion in history, Operation Overlord.

That assault, the president said in an anniversary message, signaled "the beginning of the end of the Second World War." In a speech to the crew of the George Washington, he called D-Day a "magnificent, heroic, almost unbelievable endeavor."

At a drumhead service on Sunday morning on Southsea Common, a spacious waterside green in Portsmouth, the colors of the 14 nations whose soldiers landed on the French beaches were stacked together, tepee-fashion, to symbolize unity of purpose. With upturned drums forming an altar, the flags were blessed as in days of yore, when such ceremonies were held for troops as they went into battle.

The royal family attended the service, including the Duke of Edinburgh, a naval officer in World War II, and the Princess of Wales — but not her estranged husband, Prince Charles, who was in France. Still, the focus fell upon survivors of D-Day combat from many countries. Many of the British veterans, the biggest contingent, wore their medals on business suits or windbreakers. In their ranks one could pick out commandos, in olive green berets, and paratroopers, in red ones.

There were similar if smaller services in churches all around Britain on Sunday, and there were also many little personal acts of commemoration, as this nation, which feared for a time in the early 1940s that it would be overrun by Hitler, gave thanks.

When a group of Americans finished their dinner at the White Horse Inn in Chilgrove, near Portsmouth, on Saturday night, the proprietor, Barry Phillips, hauled out a bottle of 1944 cognac.

Elderly paratroopers restage invasion-day jump, capture hearts

SAINTE-MERE-EGLISE, France — The first time around, they parachuted into the dark behind enemy lines, carrying rifles and heavy loads, certain of a hostile welcome. Sunday, they dropped gently into Normandy beneath multi-colored parasails and heard cheers instead of gunfire.

Of course, there was one other difference. The 38 World War II veterans who re-enacted the parachute drop that launched the liberation of Europe 50 years ago Sunday night are older now, some in their 80s. But it took a brave person to suggest that any one of them was past his best.

Fear? "No," Alfredo Sepulveda, 74, of California, answered sharply, as if offended by the suggestion.

"I'm in good shape. The wind blew me off course, and I landed behind some trees. But I'm fine. It was very good. I'm glad I did it."

James Rizzuto, 69, another veteran of the 82nd airborne, said he accomplished what he had to when he first jumped into Normandy.

Hundreds of cancer survivors gather, mark 1 more year of life

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Hundreds of survivors gathered Sunday to celebrate life on Cancer Survivors' Day by sharing their experiences with others and enjoying the company of friends and loved ones.

Area cancer survivors sang inspirational songs and one read a symbolic poem, while others shared their trials and tribulations in dealing with the disease.

The event was organized to acknowledge the large cancer survivor population, as well as to provide some healing time for those whose lives have been affected by the disease, said Sharron Havens, special projects-oncology nurse at Allison Cancer Center, which sponsors the annual event.

"It is a celebration of life, because all of us who have survived are so happy to be here, regardless of the length of time since diagnosis. We count ourselves survivors from the time we walk out of that doctor's office," Ms. Havens said.

"This has given me insight and sympathy. . . ."I'll never know 'why me?' but I faced it and I've gone on with life.'

— cancer survivor Pat Darden, 34

Ms. Havens herself is a survivor of breast cancer.

"Cancer Survivors' Day unites participants from coast to coast in a symbolic event honoring these cancer survivors; all those with a cancer diagnosis, from the time of the diagnosis and for the remainder of life, whether that is for months, for years, or for decades,"

2nd defendant's capital murder trial to begin

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Jury selection for the second defendant in the highly publicized trial involving the murder of an area hairdresser begins today. The trial is expected to start this afternoon, according to the presiding judge.

Michael Scott Thomas, 20, of Midland, faces charges of capital murder, aggravated robbery and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle.

Thomas is charged with the April 14, 1993, shooting death of Tommy Edward Musick, 48, of Midland. Musick was shot four times in the back of the head and left dying on a county road. He died in the early morning hours of April 15 in an Odessa hospital.

■ Trial updates can be heard daily on The NowLine. For reports at the completion of each day's testimony, call Cityline at 560-2400, enter category 1213.

Thomas is the co-defendant in the case. Ramsey Blake Harrell, 18, the other co-defendant was convicted of murder on Feb. 14 and sentenced to 12 years in prison. Harrell confessed to being the trigger-man.

Thomas remains free on a $25,000 bond that he posted in August. He is under "house arrest," confined in his home.

A Midland County grand jury reindicted Thomas last month and added additional charges to the former indictment of capital murder.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre presented evidence to the grand jury that resulted in the new indictment.

In May 1993, both men were

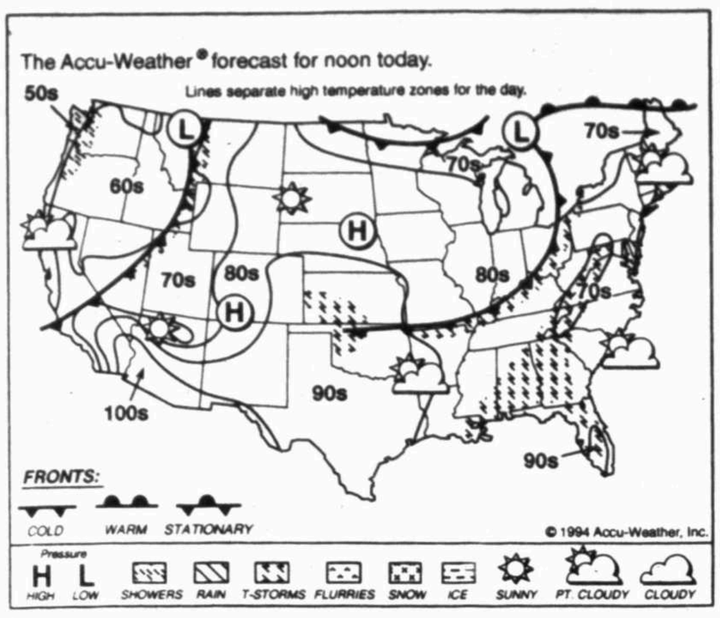
WEATHER WATCH



Sacre bleu! It might be 102

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high near 102 and south winds at 10-15 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low near 70, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be mostly sunny with a high near 101.

After an overnight low of 68, Sunday's high reached 101, compared to the record high for that date of 106 set in 1990. The record low was 56 set in 1983.

STATE

Parts of the state had a few showers Sunday, but all Texas was hot, according to the National Weather Service.

West Texas was sunny and hot, with temperatures mostly in the 90s. Marfa had the region's low of 87, while Reese Air Force Base near Lubbock had the high of 100. Winds were generally from the south at 10 to 20 mph and occasionally gusty.

Heat and sunshine should continue in West Texas through Tuesday. Lows today should be in the 60s, while highs should be in the upper 90s and low 100s.

There were showers and thunderstorms over the coastal plains and in southeast Texas, but winds from the Gulf of Mexico kept the region warm and humid. Temperatures mostly in the 90s. South Texas should have partly cloudy skies through today, with lows in the 70s and highs in the 90s.

North Texas was partly cloudy but hot, with temperatures mostly in the 80s and 90s. Winds were generally from the southeast 5 to 10 mph. Today and Tuesday should be mostly sunny, with highs in the 90s. Lows are expected in the 70s.

NATION

Thunderstorms spread across the central part of the nation Sunday with locally heavy rain on parts of the farm belt. Rain also fell in the Southeast and Northwest.

A cold front moving across the Plains produced thunderstorms from eastern Kansas through parts of the upper Mississippi Valley.

A severe thunderstorm watch was posted for much of southeastern Kansas and central and southern Missouri, the National Weather Service said.

For the six hours ending at 1 p.m. CDT, 1.30 inches of rain fell at Stilwell, Kan., with 0.67 of an inch at Lamoni, Iowa, and 0.59 of an inch at Des Moines, Iowa.

During the morning, 2.20 inches fell at Sheldon, Iowa, with 2.02 inches at Sioux Falls, S.D.; 1.60 inches at Essex, Iowa; 1.55 inches at Spencer, Iowa; 1.50 inches at Emmitsburg, Iowa; 1.27 inches at Ringsted, Iowa; and 1.01 inches at Sioux City, Iowa.

For the 24 hours up to 7 a.m., 1.89 inches fell at Huron, S.D; 1.55 inches fell at Watertown, S.D.; and Minneapolis-St. Paul, Minn., got 1.33 inches.

High wind caused some power line damage in Missouri, the weather service said.

A lingering frontal system produced thunderstorms across the Southeast, and afternoon heat contributed to thunderstorms from Arkansas into Florida.

At New Orleans, squalls turned to a thundering downpour just after thousands of spectators stood for the national anthem at a D-Day reenactment. The 4th Marine Air Wing Band had just played "Let It Rain."

During the night, a thunderstorm deluged parts of Anderson County, S.C., with 5.89 inches of rain, the weather service said.

During a six-hour period ending at 2 p.m. CDT, Pensacola, Fla., got 2.16 inches of rain, and Jacksonville, Fla., got 1.50 inches in just one hour, the weather service said.

A strong low pressure system moving into the Pacific Northwest produced a few showers along coastal sections of Washington and Oregon, and thunderstorms were possible, especially across eastern sections of the two states.

During the night into early today, very cool air was expected to spread into the region and allow the snow level to lower to around 5,000 feet across the northern Cascades and Olympics, and around 8,000 feet near Yosemite National Park in California. Up to 4 inches of snow was possible across the higher passes of Washington, the weather service said.

Early Sunday, temperatures only cooled into the 60s as far north as southeastern North Dakota and southern Minnesota.

But temperatures fell into the 40s across much of the Pacific Northwest and Rockies, with a few readings in the 30s at higher elevations. Lows also were in the 40s from the eastern Great Lakes into northern New England.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

JUMP: Vets re-enact jump, capture hearts

those who did not come back," he said softly, as friends crowded around to congratulate him. "I did it as a reminder."

Watched by hundreds of other veterans, thousands of French spectators and an impressive turnout of American brass and politicians, the old soldiers stole the spotlight Sunday as towns and villages across Normandy stepped up their commemorations of the 50th anniversary of D-Day in preparation for official ceremonies on Monday.

But Sunday there was still time for informality. Some of the veterans, reunited for the first time since the war, embraced emotionally. Others, war medals or ribbons displayed across their chests, were eager to recount their experiences landing on the blustery shoreline of Normandy on June 6, 1944.

All seemed to enjoy being feted by French people of all ages, who took their photographs and asked for their autographs.

Along the shoreline, children climbed over tanks, landing craft and half-track vehicles that stand as silent monuments to the fighting. And everywhere, it seemed, veterans and military buffs were cheerfully driving carefully restored World War II army jeeps and trucks festooned with flags and insignia. Even waitresses in one restaurant were wearing a modish version of combat gear.

Yet, probably no community in France has maintained closer ties with their "liberators" than Sainte-Mere-Eglise, which boasts that, at 4.30 a.m. on D-Day, even

"I wanted to do it today for those who did not come back. I did it as a reminder."

— James Rizzuto, 69, a veteran of 82nd Airborne before some 25,000 American troops began landing at nearby Utah Beach, this town was freed by the young men of the 82nd and 101st Airborne Divisions.

Over the past 50 years, the 1,500 inhabitants of the town have grown used to visits by many of the 13,000 American paratroopers who landed in this area.

The dummy of a soldier and his parachute still hang from the steeple of the 13th-century church to record how one paratrooper, John Steele, dropped into town on D-Day.

A local "liberation" museum has among its treasures a C-47 aircraft of the type that brought the paratroopers to Normandy.

When some veterans in San Diego thought up the idea of re-enacting their pre-dawn drop, Sainte-Mere-Eglise was the obvious place to do it. Both the Pentagon and French authorities were at first opposed, worried that the aging veterans had more imagination than parachuting prowess. But the veterans were stubborn and got their way.

Even so, the drop was almost canceled. Heavy rain covered the region Saturday, and while the weather was clear and sunny Sunday, there were strong gusts of wind.

"We were already up in the air and they were ready to cancel it," said Guy Whidden, 70, of Frederick, Md. "Then they said, 'Let's go for it.' "

Carl Beck, 68, from Atlanta, still exhilarated after landing safely, said: "It was about what I expected. We came in higher than I liked. On D-Day we jumped from 500 feet. Today, we came out at 3,500 feet and took forever to land."

Beck was one of 16 of Sunday's jumpers who parachuted into this area on D-Day. The others had variously parachuted into southern France, the Netherlands and western Germany. There was also one British paratrooper who was invited to represent the 7,000 Britons who jumped that morning in the eastern part of Normandy.

Of the "Return to Normandy" group, as they call themselves, only one, Earl Draper, 70, of Inverness, Calif., was unlucky. After his parasail begin to spin, he cut it away and pulled his reserve parachute. His landing was faster than that of the others and, albeit narrowly missing parked vehicles, he hurt his back and was taken to a local hospital for examination.

The oldest veteran, Rene Dussaq, 83, a former stunt man from Encino, Calif., also caused some worries because he was blown far from the landing spot. Only two hours later did his wife, Charlotte, learn that French firemen had picked him and taken him to Sainte-Mere-Eglise.

George Yochum, 72, was also blown off course. And before he was found to be safe, his daughter, Yvette, gave her opinion. "He's crazy," she said. "But he really wanted to do this for his best friend, Sgt. Houck, who died that night. It meant a lot to him."

But most of the others who jumped from a World War II C-47 and a Twin Otter landed fairly accurately in a large stretch of soggy green pasture in front of the crowd. They then gathered excitedly to receive a commemorative medal from Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan, chief of staff of the Army.

Moments later, 13 C-130 transport planes roared by and another 700 paratroopers — this time Americans as well as 70 French who are in active service — dropped out of the sky. They, too, assembled and then marched across open fields to Sainte-Mere-Eglise, two miles away, for a military parade.

But the highpoint for the town was when the mud-splattered veterans arrived by bus and, led by policemen on horseback, joined the march under the insignia of the 82nd and 101st Airborne draped across the main street, to the cheers of the huge crowds lining the way.

Sunday night, French Prime Minister Edouard Balladur came to pay France's official tribute to the 800 or so veteran paratroopers who gathered here. The town then gave a dinner for all its special guests and the evening ended with music and dancing in the church square which, at the same time 50 years ago, was still in German hands.

SURVIVORS: Hundreds gather to celebrate

(From 1A)

Ms. Havens said.

National Cancer Survivors' Day 1994 is an event designed to acknowledge that there is a large cancer survivor population in the community and they are active, productive citizens. This special day is set aside to celebrate their survivorship.

Oncologist Dr. David Snyder was one of three local oncologists to speak before the survivors. He said calling cancer patients "victims" isn't accurate. He said a better description of them is as "fighters."

He said that while the battle with cancer is often personal, the support from others is always helpful. Snyder said that as a doctor he gets to see the journey his patients take with cancer. He said that many times the journey turns spiritual along the way.

The doctor said he often is asked how he deals with his job. He said that by seeing the spiritual transformation his patients make he is provided with strength to carry out each day's work.

Cancer survivor Pat Darden, 34, spoke of his bout with the disease and how it changed him. He suffered a form of testicular cancer in 1992.

He said he gained respect for people who have or have had cancer. Darden said he had never thought much about what people go through before.

"I've gone through so little, this has given me insight and sympathy for these people," Darden said. "I'll never know 'why me?' but I faced it and I've gone on with life. I enjoy life, in general, more and I realize there are people a lot worse off than I am."

Dale Dunn, a survivor of lymphoma, which was diagnosed in 1993, spoke of the support and love of his family. It was his wife and children who urged him to seek medical treatment initially.

"Being a survivor meant I had to work hard to focus on myself — I learned to appreciate the blessings over the last year and I realize work wasn't the most important thing; my family is," Dunn said.

The final survivor to speak was George McDaniel, who was diagnosed with prostate cancer in 1988. He spoke of the way he isolated himself from the world at first before realizing he wanted to make the most of his life.

McDaniel then introduced the woman he began dating and later married.

The crowd was then treated to a special presentation of "The Other Lives of Survivors," a fashion show demonstrating that cancer patients/survivors have lives other than as patients.

The "models" first came on stage in hospital gowns and then modeled active wear, swimwear, leisure, daytime and after-5 attire. Between the different clothing styles, clowns from Oops Alley entertained the crowd.

At the conclusion of the fashion show, all of the models and their families who helped model came on stage to the theme from "Rocky" and made their way into the crowd to congratulate fellow survivors on one more year of life.

TRIAL: Thomas faces capital murder charge charged with capital murder in the case, but at Harrell's trial the jury found him guilty of a lesser charge of murder.

The new indictment, which essentially cancels the original indictment against Thomas, charges him with capital murder, aggravated robbery and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle.

Schorre said the additional charges were filed to give the jury "a couple of extra choices."

He said the prosecution won't change from the Harrell trial. Schorre said the evidence and testimony basically will be the same, unless Thomas testifies and contradicts any testimony from Harrell.

The trial will be held in 238th District Court, which is the same court where Harrell was tried. Harrell's highly publicized trial focused on his defense that he shot Musick, a homosexual, for making sexual advances toward Thomas.

Harrell testified in his own behalf during his trial in February.

According to Harrell's testimony, he, Thomas and Musick were in Musick's car parked in the driveway of Thomas' home. Harrell testified that Musick allegedly made a sexual advance toward Thomas and he became afraid and shot Musick in the back of the head. Harrell said he didn't recall pulling the trigger.

Harrell testified he was in shock after the shooting and indicated Thomas "took over" from there, instructing him to clean up the blood and push Musick's body into the back seat of the vehicle. The men then drove Musick's car to a vacant field off a county road and dumped the body.

Harrell claimed the pair never intended to rob Musick of his money or vehicle. Harrell said that after they dumped the body, Thomas drove the car and they left it near the airport. He said they then walked to Harrell's home.

They were arrested at Harrell's home in the early morning hours of April 15.

Harrell could have been sentenced in the range of five to 99 years. Following the announcement of his 12-year sentence, the Lesbian/Gay Rights Lobby of Texas organized a "Justice For All" rally to protest the sentence.

Other crime victims' families spoke up at the rally to complain about the justice system.

Thomas' attorney, Glen Aaron, held a press conference in May chastising news media for using stereotypes and sketchy information that caused "harm to his client."

Aaron said the media never looked at Thomas as a separate person during Harrell's trial, indicating "the media have had Scott ride the coattails of Ramsey Harrell."

HISTORY: Allies' leaders head for Normandy sounded as ships cruised along the seawall. It all looked and sounded a bit odd on such a balmy spring day in a Britain so thoroughly at peace.

Fifty years ago on Sunday, the original fleet set sail in a very different world — minesweepers, 255 of them, landing craft carrying tanks and jeeps, 6 battleships, 21 cruisers, 68 destroyers, and numberless smaller craft, including PT boats, barges, and troop transports.

Together, they formed the most powerful armada ever assembled, 5,339 ships, pointing for a 50-mile stretch of French coastline.

Emerging from a hundred harbors up and down England, the ships assembled just south of the Isle of Wight, off Portsmouth, at a point the sailors referred to as "Piccadilly Circus," then headed south across the Channel.

Fifty years ago on Sunday night, Dwight D. Eisenhower found a way to escape what he later called "the interminable wait that always intervenes between the final decision of the high command and the earliest possible determination of success or failure." He went to the encampment of the 101st Airborne Division to talk to its men as they waited, their faces blackened, for their leap into the dark.

Eisenhower, the supreme allied commander, whose decision it had been to begin the invasion despite desperately iffy weather, also wrote out an order of the day. "The tide has turned!" he said. "The free men of the world are marching toward victory!"

Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery, the Briton serving as ground commander, added his own hortatory words: "To us is given the honor of striking a blow for freedom that will live in history."

By the end of the first 16 hours, 132,715 Americans, Britons, Canadians, Free Frenchmen, Poles, Czechs, and others were ashore.

"Fifty years on, we thank them all," said the Most Rev. George Carey, the archbishop of Canterbury, who conducted the "national service of commemoration, thanksgiving and re-dedication."

He noted the special poignancy for many old soldiers in his audience of the words of Jesus that he took as his text: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Reminding the tens of thousands of onlookers how much they and generations yet unborn owed to those who died on D-Day, the archbishop said that all during the war Eleanor Roosevelt kept at her bedside a prayer that said: "Help me to remember, somewhere out there a man died for me today. As long as there be war, I must ask and answer, 'Am I worth dying for?' "

Carey paid tribute to all who fought to stop the Nazis, including those in the Soviet Union, which few other speakers this weekend have even mentioned. He hailed those who had suffered on "the vast, heroic Russian front." But the whole drumhead ceremony, while unmistakably British in its ceremonial tradition, accorded a special status to the United States.

Carey quoted not only Mrs. Roosevelt, wife of the wartime president, but also Abraham Lincoln, a wartime president himself. And the Band of the Royal Marines, in their distinctive white solar topees, was joined by the U.S. Army Field Band.

On Sunday afternoon, the president and his wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton, reboarded the royal yacht Britannia to watch a flyover by 100 vintage planes, including a tiny, slow-moving Swordfish torpedo bomber of the type that attacked the German battleship Bismarck, and to review the flotilla in the Solent, between Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight.

Vessels of all sorts, some of them carrying Normandy survivors, others Normandy survivors themselves, were drawn up in two parallel lines, with cabin cruisers and other sailing yachts swarming amidst them like pilot fish, leaving milky wakes in the green sea.

Among them were the QE2 and the Vistafjord, both passenger liners.

The World in brief

■ Thousands die from famine, disease

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — Famine and disease have claimed more than 5,000 lives in drought-stricken southern Ethiopia over the past two months.

Prime Minister Tamrat Layne expressed "grave concern" over the deaths and blamed inadequate food supplies and lack of coordination among Ethiopian relief and local officials, the state-owned Ethiopian News Agency reported Sunday.

Tamrat spoke Saturday following a two-day visit to southern Ethiopia, where officials say 1.5 million people need emergency food.

They are among 7.6 million people in Ethiopia and nearly 20 million in the Horn of Africa nations the United States says are threatened with famine unless donor nations deliver food quickly.

During his tour, Tamrat found an official of the state Relief and Rehabilitation Commission who had locked food in a store while awaiting instructions despite being surrounded by needy people.

Kifre-Mariam Amde-Michael, a commission official, said some deaths could have been avoided if local administrators had reported the crisis earlier.

The most serious problem facing the agency was a slow delivery of food promised by international donors, Kifre-Mariam said.

■ Iraq to use amputations as crime curb

NICOSIA, Cyprus — In an effort to combat soaring crime and corruption as Iraq's economy crumbles, Saddam Hussein has ordered Islamic-style punishments for those convicted of car theft or robbery: the amputation of a hand or foot.

A decree broadcast Saturday on Iraqi radio said Iraq's governing council would punish first-time car thieves and robbers by amputating a hand.

Second-time offenders will lose their left foot, according to the broadcast, monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp.

Offenders will be executed if found to have carried a weapon.

Amputations will not be done on minors, if the stolen property is worth less than $16,000 at the official exchange rate ($11.90 on the widely used black market), or if the robbery takes place between a husband and wife or close relatives.

The punishments are similar to those employed by Shariah, or Islamic law.

Iraq, while predominantly Muslim, is a secular state. But Saddam has recently been waging a spiritual campaign to fight rising crime.

■ Zimbabwe V.P. tells whites to leave

HARARE, Zimbabwe — Vice President Joshua Nkomo continued the government's attack on minorities Sunday, urging whites to "move out of our country now, before it is too late."

Nkomo, a standard-bearer of African nationalism in the former British colony of Rhodesia, was responding to reports that some of the country's 80,000 whites planned to commemorate the centenary of white settlement in Matabeleland, Nkomo's home area.

"Whites have continued shunning us and they undermine our ability to deal with undesirable elements among them," Nkomo told state news media. "I warn them to move out of the country now before it is too late."

Nkomo last month warned of "civil war" if white, Asian and mixed-race Zimbabweans continued to show little support for the ruling party.

On Saturday, President Robert Mugabe repeated claims that opposition parties campaigning for next year's parliamentary elections were controlled and funded by whites.

Mixed-race Zimbabweans, who make up 30,000 of the country's 10 million people, have been particularly vocal in accusing Mugabe's party of seeking scapegoats for corruption, inflation, unemployment and homelessness.

Many Haitians begin to favor military invasion

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The marble busts and oil paintings of Haiti's independence heroes enshrined in a museum testify to this country's battles against foreign invaders: Spanish, French, British and American.

But prolonged suffering under U.N. sanctions is leading many Haitians, especially the poor, to look more favorably on the idea of an American military invasion.

"Things are getting so bad here that people are beginning to forget history," said a guide at the Pantheon of the Heroes museum who identified himself as Jean-Marie.

Haitians of all classes remember with pain and indignation the 19-year U.S. occupation that began in 1915, when their land was under the rule of white Marines who didn't hide their racism and contempt for a nation born of a rebellion by black slaves.

Even exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide has long opposed a U.S. invasion on his behalf — although last week he said the United States should be "moving toward a surgical action" that could topple the military within days.

President Clinton has not ruled out military action. But Defense Secretary William Perry said Sunday that Washington is focusing on the sanctions and on establishing a new processing center for Haitian refugees.

On the streets of Port-au-Prince, however, many say that they would prefer a foreign invasion, even an occupation, to the hardships they now face.

AP Laserphoto

Women walk along the open sewer that runs through the middle of the Port-au-Prince slum of Cite Soleil, Saturday. International sanctions have hit the poor the hardest because of the Haitian military's stockpiling of embargoed goods for resale on the black market.

The sanctions are aimed at forcing out the military-backed government so that Aristide can return to power. U.N. economic sanctions followed soon after Aristide's ouster in 1991, but were tightened last month in the face of the military's refusal to allow him back.

Thousands of people have lost jobs over the last month as factories closed for lack of supplies and fuel. Port traffic has dropped 75 percent since the sanctions were tightened May 21, the newspaper Le Nouvelliste reported.

The cost of food and medicine is soaring and gasoline smuggled illegally into the country is priced out of reach for most people.

"I don't care about history, I care about right now," said Eric Victor, 29, as he sold religious books at the capital's main bus station. "And right now I am living in hell. . . . The Americans should either let the refugees go to Miami or they should invade, but they shouldn't leave us like this."

As Victor he spoke Friday, 122 Haitian boat people who had been turned back by the United States were being repatriated at a nearby Haitian immigration processing center.

"My husband used to work at a factory where they make cassettes but they closed it down because of the embargo," said a woman selling baby clothes on a street corner who identified herself only as Mrs. Edoin.

"This is how I feed my five children," she said. "If the Americans think it is better for us, then maybe they should invade. But if they put any more sanctions, we won't be able to survive."

At the Pantheon of the Heroes, Jean-Marie guided uniformed schoolchildren through a history of their nation, including a series of foreign invasions.

Exhibits showed the Spanish conquest; slavery under French rule in the 1700s; the revolt that led to independence in 1804; the fathers of Haitian independence: Toussaint Louverture, Jean-Jacques Dessaines, Alexandre Petion.

Shells explode near Italian envoy's plane in Rwanda

KIGALI, Rwanda (AP) — An Italian envoy on a fact-finding mission got a frightening welcome in Rwanda's capital Sunday when two shells exploded near his airplane, forcing it to take off without unloading passengers or cargo.

Meanwhile, the commander of U.N. forces in Rwanda said rebels were pressing in on the seat of government at Gitarama, 30 miles west of the capital, Kigali.

Gitarama and Kigali are the main targets of a rebel offensive that has taken control of about half the country the past two months. Rebels of the Tutsi-led Rwandan Patriotic Front hold parts of Kigali and are shelling government positions in the city center.

The rebels have seized the town of Kabgayi, three miles south of Gitarama and are moving forward. But Maj. Jean-Guy Plante, the U.N. military spokesman, said Gitarama is well fortified.

"Their normal procedure when they come to an area like that is to surround it, pound it and infiltrate it," said Maj. Gen. Romeo Dallaire, the Canadian who commands the 450 U.N. troops in Rwanda.

"We're not sure how far they've got beyond Kabgayi. They are infiltrating Gitarama and going a little west of it."

The general said he also had word of a counteroffensive by Hutu-dominated government forces in the south of Rwanda, but he offered no details.

Franco Rocchetta, an Italian Foreign Ministry official, had been scheduled to spend the day in Rwanda determining how best Italy could help the devastated country. He was to inspect the U.N. headquarters, a local hospital and a church compound where thousands of refugees are stranded.

Rocchetta flew in on a Canadian C-130 cargo plane that makes two flights a day from Nairobi, Kenya, when combat conditions permit.

As the plane swung in front of the terminal of the rebel-controlled airport and dropped its rear cargo ramp, a mortar shell landed beside the control tower 100 yards away. Moments later, a second shell hit the tarmac.

U.S. senators visit Sarajevo; Biden chides U.N. special envoy

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — The main congressional supporter of armed intervention against the Bosnian Serbs slammed the top U.N. official in the former Yugoslavia on Sunday as an impediment to peace.

The attack by Sen. Joseph Biden on Yasushi Akashi, the U.N. special envoy to the former Yugoslavia, came during a visit to the Bosnian capital by Biden, D-Del., and Republican Sens. Robert Dole and John Warner.

Biden and Dole, the Senate minority leader, are strong supporters of exempting the Muslim-led Bosnian government from a U.N. arms embargo and of more forceful NATO intervention against the Bosnian Serbs. Warner, a member of the Armed Services Committee, opposes lifting the embargo, saying that would lead to more fighting.

The three senators met President Alija Izetbegovic and other Bosnian government leaders before flying to Normandy for the D-Day anniversary.

Fighting persisted in central Bosnia on Sunday, and a boycott by the government appeared to have scuttled efforts to hold cease-fire talks in Geneva.

The government refused to take part in the talks, originally supposed to begin Thursday, claiming the presence of a few Serb stragglers around the Muslim enclave of Gorazde violated an agreement to pull out.

Akashi said he would make "one last assessment" of whether Serbs had pulled out of the exclusion zone around Gorazde by Monday morning.

"It has been a real see-saw game," said Akashi. "I hope we have had enough gymnastics and we will get down to serious negotiations tomorrow."

Serb forces were to have pulled back from Gorazde six weeks ago under a NATO ultimatum and the threat of air strikes.

Bomb explosion injures at least 26

ZAMBOANGA CITY, Philippines (AP) — A bomb exploded Sunday in a shopping area in the southern Philippines, injuring at least 26 people. Police said the blast could have been retaliation for military attacks against Muslim extremists.

Earlier Sunday, the military said troops had killed 28 members of the extremist Abu Sayyaf group during a three-day offensive on Jolo Island, about 100 miles southwest of Zamboanga.

The bomb, which was placed under a car in front of a restaurant, exploded Sunday evening near the shopping area in Zamboanga City, a major commercial center in the southern Philippines, police said. The blast knocked out electricity, plunging a wide area of the city into darkness.

The Zamboanga Regional Hospital said 26 injured had been taken there. It was unclear if there were other injured.

Police Chief Superintendent Roberto Lastimoso said the bombing could have been retaliation for operations against the Abu Sayyaf group, which is blamed for bombings and kidnappings throughout the southern Philippines.

The group claimed responsibility for the abduction of linguist Charles Walton of Philadelphia, who was seized Nov. 14 on an island near Jolo.

Walton was freed a few weeks later after the government paid hundreds of dollars in "food assistance" to the group.

On Friday, government troops captured a small camp of the Abu Sayyaf group.

■ Officials: Two open fire at party, kill 7

SAN MARINO, Calif. — A party celebrating the end of the school year turned tragic Sunday when at least two people opened fire in the crowded backyard of a suburban home. Two teen-agers were killed and seven other youngsters were wounded.

The attackers apparently had an argument at the party, left and returned around 1 a.m. to retaliate, Los Angeles County sheriff's detectives said.

Such shootings are almost never heard of in the wealthy suburb of 13,000, which has some of the state's most exclusive homes and is home of the Huntington Library.

The party, advertised by fliers in the area, was at the home of a high school student celebrating the end of the school year.

Guests were charged $2 to attend. The party featured a disc jockey but no alcohol, investigators said. Party goers ranged in age from teens to about 21.

The student's parents were home at the time and there was no indication the party had become rowdy or loud prior to the attack, detectives said.

At least two of up to 12 youths who returned to the party opened fire on about 100 guests with semiautomatic handguns, authorities said. They fled in three cars.

■ Hospital treats two with deadly bacteria

NORWALK, Conn. — Two people have been hospitalized with rare and deadly strains of a bacteria that kills flesh or muscle tissue.

The patients, a man and a woman in their 30s, were admitted to Norwalk Hospital at separate times last week with virulent forms of the streptococcus bacteria, hospital spokesman Bruce Hutchinson said Friday.

One has the form of the disease that kills flesh, called necrotizing fasciitis. The other has pyomyositis, which kills muscle tissue. The man was in critical condition Sunday and the woman was satisfactory.

Hutchinson said there is no known link between the two.

Last month, Britain's Public Health Laboratory Service reported that 15 people had been diagnosed with necrotizing fasciitis this year and 11 of them died.

Officials from the World Health Organization on Friday said there is no reason to fear a global outbreak of the bacteria. Any increase appears to be the result of improved monitoring and not the start of a major outbreak, said Dr. James LeDuc, WHO medical officer.

■ Baby left in car dies of heat exhaustion

ALBANY, N.Y. — A 5-month-old boy died of heat exhaustion after his father forgot to drop him off at a baby sitter's home and instead left him trapped in the back seat of the car for more than eight hours.

Police said Robert Gaito did not realize his mistake until his wife called him at work Friday to ask him why their son, Gregory, wasn't with the baby sitter.

"The child had been restrained in some sort of child seat and he struggled furiously against the belt," Dr. Jack N.P. Davies, who conducted the autopsy, said Saturday.

Gaito, 28, was charged with criminally negligent homicide. He was released Sunday on bail from the Albany County Jail.

Temperatures in the area were in the mid-70s Friday, and Davies said Gregory was dressed warmly.

GOP's religious conservatives show their power once again

By John King
Associated Press

■ More national news/4B

RICHMOND, Va. — Scurrying around with his 2-year-old daughter in tow, Eugene Delgaudio hardly looks like a revolutionary. But he has a pointed answer to those who say his faith has no place in his politics.

"Maybe they haven't been to church in such a long time they forget what it's like, they forget the backbone of this country is values," Delgaudio said. "It would do this country some good to listen to churchgoers."

Once again this weekend, religious conservatives like Delgaudio showed their power in Republican politics, boosting controversial Iran-Contra figure Oliver North to Virginia's GOP Senate nomination.

The latest victory for Christian conservatives over more moderate forces in the Republican Party exacerbates a perhaps chronic schism just as it hopes to focus all its energy on making major gains in November's midterm elections.

North's convention victory is a case study of both the Christian right's power in GOP politics and the quandary that can create for the party.

His support among evangelicals helped him withstand spirited opposition by establishment Republicans who tremble at the prospect of North serving in the Congress he once lied to, and the image problems that might create for the national party.

But the price of victory could ultimately be defeat: many delegates said they could never vote for North, and predicted he would lose a seat the GOP should win.

"They don't care about winning," James Crigger complained as he left in disgust. "It's like they want to run a religious crusade. Now you know why they call us the stupid party."

Virginia Republican Sen. John Warner says he is so concerned about the party's direction he might run as an independent in 1996. Warner infuriated state GOP leaders by promising to oppose North.

"The evangelicals are an important element of the party," Warner said. "But we should allow persons of other viewpoints in if we want to win."

Another recent win for the Christian right was a special House election in Kentucky, where fundamentalist bookstore owner Ron Lewis won a seat that had been in Democratic hands for 130 years.

Yet another will come this weekend, when Texas elects a new Republican chairman, replacing one who stepped down because it was clear Christian conservatives had the votes to topple him.

Similar battles are underway in state and county GOP organizations across the country, as Christian conservatives use church networks to turn out voters for party meetings and conventions and push issues like abortion, school prayer and opposition to gay rights.

"We cannot keep going to the extreme right as we are now," laments Betsy Lake, the moderate chairwoman of the county Republican Party in Houston. "It is going to cause the party to lose votes in November."

Democrats are counting on that, as they fight the historical trend of midterm elections.

Fans get to mingle with favorite stars at soap opera fair

By John Flesher
Associated Press

MACKINAW CITY, Mich. — Lisa McCullough wept as heartthrob Bo's fiancee was buried alive. If only she could meet him, plead with him not to lose hope.

But Bo is out of reach, existing only in the TV daytime soap opera "Days of Our Lives." The next-best thing for Ms. McCullough and thousands of other fans: meeting their favorite actors at the first-ever Soap Opera Fan Fair.

"I'm shaking all over," Ms. McCullough, 26, said Sunday after posing for a picture with Robert Kelker-Kelly, who plays Bo Brady on the NBC soap.

"He was really nice . . . he's gorgeous. It was worth every minute of sleep I lost."

And she did lose sleep. Ms. McCullough and her mother, both of Wooster, Ohio, were up at 4 a.m. to be first in line outside a sprawling tent overlooking Lake Huron, where about two dozen soap stars mingled with fans Wednesday through Sunday.

Ms. McCullough said she watches the show every day. "It's like they're family. If something bad happens, if people die or something, I cry," she explained.

The fan fair was conceived by Detroit promoter Syd Harris to boost tourism on the northern tip of Michigan's Lower Peninsula.

Summer tourism is big business here, but a chilly climate keeps the season short. Harris figured if anything could lure people early, it was the devotion of soap opera fans.

"He's a god," said Amy Smith, awaiting her moment of glory with Patrick Muldoon, who plays Austin Reed on "Days."

Ms. Smith, 19, of Northlake, Ill., drove eight hours and waited in line for seven more to meet Muldoon. When the time finally came Saturday, she gave him a pizza-sized cookie.

"For me? You've got to be kidding," a beaming Muldoon said. He draped an arm around Ms. Smith and pulled her close. She floated off in a daze.

Local officials say they'll hold the fair annually for at least a decade.

Alabama 10-year-old becomes youngest-ever college graduate

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Ten-year-old Michael Kearney got his bachelor's degree in anthropology Sunday, apparently making him the youngest college graduate.

He wants his parents to give him a car for his accomplishment, and figures by the time he's old enough to drive it, he'll have a master's degree.

Michael graduated with honors from the University of South Alabama. He finished with a grade point average of 3.6 out of 4.0.

"Probably I'll take the summer off and then go to graduate school," he said following the ceremony. "I've been sending applications in. Anybody who wants to have a 10-year-old graduate student who's soon to be 11, I'm here."

Michael's parents — Kevin and Cassidy Kearney — have been informed by officials with the Guinness Book of Records that he is the holder of three records.

■ He was the youngest high school graduate at the age of 6 years and 5 months.

■ He entered junior college at the age of 6 years and 7 months.

■ He graduated from college at the age of 10 years and 5 months.

The previous youngest college graduate was Adragon De Mello, who earned a degree the University of California at Santa Cruz at the age of 11 years and 8 months on June 11, 1988, according to Guinness.

Mrs. Kearney attended classes with her son. He can't write as quickly as older students, so she helped him take notes.

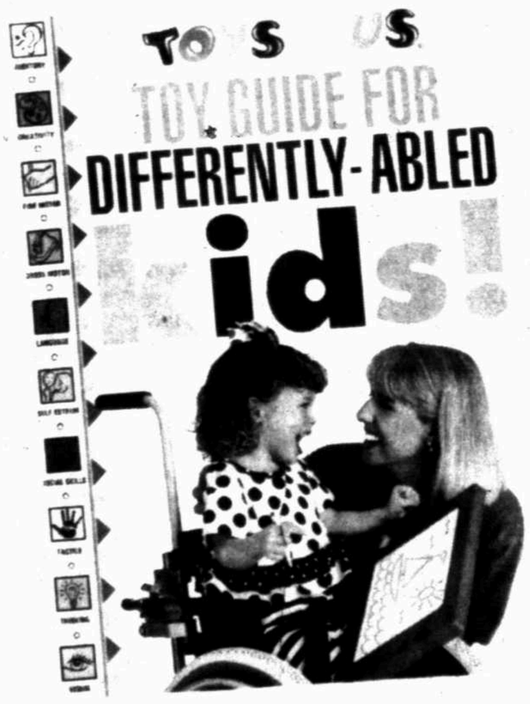
TOYS "R" US
TOY GUIDE FOR DIFFERENTLY-ABLED kids!


TWO GREAT ORGANIZATIONS JOIN HANDS FOR INNOVATIVE PROJECT!
Thanks to the efforts of Toys "R" Us and The National parent Network on Disabilities, a unique concept has been created: The Toy Guide for Differently-Abled Kids. This Toy Guide is a resource that will assist caring adults in selecting "off the shelf" toys for children with disabilities.
The Guide has over 20 pages filled with more than 75 toys, each ability-coded for differently-abled children. Each toy presents children with disabilities an opportunity to have fun and grow. The guide contains both tried and true favorites along with the newest toys available.
All the toys in the gude meet the standards set by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission and have been professionally tested by children with disabilities.
Toys "R" Us is dedicated to serving the needs of all children and their parents and adds this guide to their list of projects that serve children, like the Hospital Children's Playroom.
Together Toys "R" Us and The National Parent Network on Disabilities strive to enrich the lives of children with disabilities and will continue to assist them in reaching their goals.

Experts at conference discuss future of gaming

DALLAS (AP) — With bingo, lotteries and pari-mutuel betting already firmly entrenched in Texas, some officials say it's just a matter of time before the Lone Star State jumps into casino gambling.

Bills permitting floating casinos are expected to be filed in next year's legislative session, meaning Texas could join the other 21 states with some form of casino gambling.

In a debate sure to be repeated next year in Texas, casino operators and university researchers from around the country debated exactly what gambling means in America.

Speakers at the last week's International Conference on Gambling and Risk-Taking in Las Vegas split on whether gambling is a panacea or a passing fancy.

They also argued over whether state-sponsored gambling helps turn people into compulsive gamblers.

"Gambling is a disaster for human brains," said Vicki Abt, a sociology professor at Penn State University.

Sue Cox of Dallas, director of the Texas Council on Problem and Compulsive Gambling, complained that too little is being done in states with gambling.

Ms. Cox called for the federal government to fund a study to determine how many Americans are problem gamblers. She said the last national study was completed in 1974, but that legalized gambling has skyrocketed since then.

However, Larry J. Woolf, president and CEO of the MGM Grand Hotel, Casino and Theme Park where the conference was held, defended the industry.

Family-oriented casinos like MGM are entertainment enterprises that cater to the public's insatiable appetite for the "adrenalin high" they get from wagering, he said.

"Our appetite for adrenalin is increasing and increasing," he said.

Researchers at the conference, which ended Friday, said gambling is one of the nation's fastest-growing industries. They also said Texas may add to that growth.

Woolf said he is certain casino gambling will come to Texas, which he said is second demographically only to New York as a prime area for casino gambling.

Casino operators and consultants said in interviews with The Dallas Morning News that Texas is ripe for casino gambling.

Jeffrey Lowenhar of Cherry Hill, N.J., a management consultant and expert in casino marketing, termed the state a gold mine. He said dockside casinos, if approved, could bring in as much as $3 billion annually.

Woolf of the MGM said he is certain casino gambling will come to Texas. The only question is when. He said that except for New York, Texas has "the best demographics" for casino gambling.

Lawrence J. Truitt, a political scientist at Southern Illinois University, said floating casinos in Illinois have created more than 10,000 jobs and brought in $226 million in revenues to the state and nine cities in which they operate, he said.

Texas Gov. Ann Richards has said that if casinos are legalized, she wants them land-based with accompanying tourist attractions.

Rose, meanwhile, predicted that the Tigua Indians will win their battle with the state to build a casino on tribal lands in El Paso. And that probably will open the floodgate in Texas, where casino operators have staked out choice locations.

However, Nelson Rose of Whittier College School of Law at Los Angeles said the industry faces over-saturation.

Competition could damage the industry, he said, adding that gambling also could be hurt by a moral revolt.

Richards invites Republicans to switch parties

DALLAS (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards criticized Republicans and invited disheartened GOP members to switch over to the Democratic side at the party's state convention.

"To those of you in the Republican Party who, because of the dogma and the right-wing radicals in your party, feel unwelcome, we are delighted to have you in the Democratic Party," Richards told convention delegates Saturday in Fort Worth.

The governor's address highlighted a two-day convention during which the Democrats showcased their ticket, headed by Richards and U.S. Senate candidate Richard Fisher, a Dallas businessman.

Democratic leaders said the state Republican Party has been seized by religious conservatives bent on meddling in Texans' personal lives. A GOP spokesman denied those accusations.

"There is bigotry, there is repression, there is the suggestion that somebody has an absolute, divine right to force you to do what they think you ought to do," Richards said.

In her speech, Richards took aim at opponent George W. Bush, saying he has little experience in government.

Richards didn't refer to Bush by name when she said: "These are people who never seem to have the slightest interest in what the people care about, who were never there when the legislation was debated, who were never there for a public hearing.

"And suddenly, they jump out of a PR back room claiming they are the better way to do everything," said Richards, noting that her first term includes lower crime rates, prison construction, more jobs and improved government efficiency.

Bush, who ran unsuccessfully for Congress in 1978, is managing general partner of the Texas Rangers baseball team and the eldest son of former President George Bush.

A Bush spokesman said his political inexperience is helpful.

"His business experience gives him insight and vision," said Reggie Bashur. "Gov. Richards has been in government for three decades. Hers is a status quo approach.

"The Bush campaign is a campaign of inclusion and is reaching out to all Texans," he said. "Come election day, George W. Bush will be elected governor with the support of Republicans, independents and Democrats."

Republican Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, campaigning Saturday in Dallas, said the GOP also will try to lure voters away before November's general election.

"Pro-choice women and men are every bit as welcome in the Republican Party as they are in the Democratic Party," Mrs. Hutchison said.

She downplayed the significance of the battle to head the Texas GOP.

Delegates at the Democratic convention adopted what party officials called a centrist platform and re-elected Sherman lawyer Bob Slagle to his eighth term as party chairman.

Women continue roles in study with controversial drug

AUSTIN (AP) — More than 120 Austin-area women are continuing their roles in a $68 million breast cancer prevention study two months after being warned of fears concerning tamoxifen, the key drug used in the survey.

Only 11 local women have dropped out of the Breast Cancer Prevention Trial since the spring controversy, said Dr. Charles Geyer, principal investigator for the Central Texas part of the study.

Volunteers have been warned of possible dangers and recruitment is expected to resume later this month.

The study, being run by the National Cancer Institute, is designed to determine whether daily doses of tamoxifen can prevent breast cancer in healthy women at high risk for the disease.

Normal side effects of tamoxifen, which also is used to treat cancer, include hot flashes and slight fluctuations in weight, said Leslie Larson, a registered nurse involved with the study at Austin's Seton Medical Center.

Carolynn Elmshaeuser, a secretary at the University of Texas, is among those sticking with the program.

"My feeling is that nothing is without risk, and the benefits probably will far outweigh the risks," said Ms. Elmshaeuser, 53, who was 19 when her mother died of breast cancer.

In addition to Ms. Elmshaeuser, 123 other area women with family histories of the disease are remaining volunteers.

More than 16,000 women age 35 and older with family histories of breast cancer have volunteered for the study at about 250 medical centers in the United States and Canada.

Problems arose for the study when reports surfaced about fraud and possible conflicts of interest involving some of the test's leaders at the University of Pittsburgh and another study in Canada.

Concern peaked when it was learned that leaders waited six weeks before telling fellow researchers that four women died from uterine cancer linked to the use of tamoxifen.

Over that time period, hundreds of women were recruited for the study, thus exposing them to potential danger.

Group discusses Morales' plan to join immigration battle

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The recent decision by Texas Attorney General Dan Morales to sue the federal government to recover state funds spent on illegal immigrants was the talk of a Hispanic group's annual state convention.

The views, however, were split as some delegates at the League of United Latin American Citizens gathering in Laredo supported the lawsuit while others feared it would lead to anti-immigrant bigotry.

LULAC State Director Rosa Rosales of San Antonio warned that Texas must avoid following in the footsteps of California, one of several other states seeking similar paybacks from the government.

Ms. Rosales was referring to what LULAC perceives as the "extremely anti-immigrant" position taken by California Gov. Pete Wilson.

"LULAC is strongly opposed to any immigrant bashing," she said. "As far as the attorney general's action is concerned, he has assured me that this is not immigrant bashing, that his main concern is getting just compensation from the federal government."

Many delegates questioned Morales' decision and several others openly supported the lawsuit despite its possible adverse effects.

"He did the right thing, definitely," said Everardo Torres of Hondo. "The federal government can't stop them (illegal immigrants), and then the state is left holding the bag. We need the federal government to pay up."

Jose Telles, an attorney in Laredo, said Morales made the right move even though the suit likely will not last in court.

"I don't think Morales expects to win," Telles said. "He filed it as an attention-getting action.

Oscar Moran of San Antonio blasted the lack of accurate statistics about the illegal immigrant population.

"These guys (illegal immigrants) aren't here free-loading," Moran said. "Nobody says to them, "Ah, you're from Mexico, you don't have to pay sales tax.' These people are working."

Movement that advocates castration of violent criminals returns

HOUSTON (AP) — The movement to castrate some violent criminals has quietly returned with proponents taking a more temperate tack this time around.

Three years ago in Houston, State District Judge Michael McSpadden ignited a racial controversy when he granted a black man's request to be castrated in exchange for a probated prison sentence.

The case sparked an outcry from some black activists, and the judge later withdrew his approval because a doctor could not be found to perform the procedure.

Now, a few Texas conservatives are embracing a different approach.

Led by Republican state Sen. Teel Bivins of Amarillo, they are pushing castration as optional therapy, not punishment, for imprisoned child molesters, The Houston Post reported Sunday.

Texas prison officials currently refuse to permit surgical or chemical castration of inmates, but Bivins plans to introduce a bill in January that would let inmate child molesters volunteer to be surgically castrated at state expense.

Bivins and McSpadden said they have collected small piles of letters from inmates who believe the surgery will cure their sexual compulsions.

At last count, 7,856 men were serving time for sex crimes in Texas penitentiaries at a cost of more than $350,000 a day.

Dr. Louis Girard, a castration proponent, has become one of America's most insistent voices on the issue. The Houston eye surgeon said the surgery seems far more merciful than locking a man up for many years.

But critics liken the procedure to misguided attempts in the past to cure other human ailments such as lobotomies. And the very word castration opens old wounds for many blacks, whose forebears were sometimes castrated before they were lynched.

The Rev. Jew Don Boney, McSpadden's leading local antagonist on the issue, argues that many sex criminals are mentally ill or have been neglected and abused themselves as children.

Boney fears that if the judge has his way, America's most disenfranchised people, including a fair percentage of black men, will be systematically sterilized.

But Girard noted that white sex offenders outnumber blacks in the Texas prison system (42.1 percent to 33.7 percent). The disparity is greater among those who sexually abused children: 49.1 percent are white, compared to 23.4 percent black.

Methodists establish rules for sexual harassment

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — More than 1,000 representatives from United Methodist Churches overwhelmingly have approved new rules aimed at preventing and dealing with sexual harassment and abuse.

The decision was made Saturday during the final day of the four-day gathering of the Southwest Texas Annual Conference of the United Methodist Church held at the Bayfront Plaza Convention Center.

Along with the new rules, delegates also decided to ask individual churches to adopt policies for dealing with allegations of sexual harassment and abuse within their congregations.

"We have developed a process to deal with a current and volatile issue, one that is of great social concern," said Austin Frederick, superintendent of the Victoria district.

"Every claim is to be taken seriously. Our policies are sensitive to the liability of the annual conference and our desire to educate the conference on the issue of sexual harassment and abuse," he said.

A task force began drafting the comprehensive document two years ago after the General Conference of the United Methodist Church passed a resolution seeking clear directives on the subject.

"We're not here to choose sides," Frederick said. "Our task is to get to the side where truth, justice and mercy abound."

The agreement calls for consultation with the superintendent of the district where the complaint is filed and the use of a mediation team.

If the matter remains unresolved, the church can begin a grievance process that may lead to filing a formal complaint and a church trial, said Robert C. Schnase, a McAllen pastor.

The Methodist Church describes sexual harassment as "a violation of role ... never appropriate in pastoral ministry."

According to the document: "The ministerial role carries with it authority and power and the attendant responsibility to use this power to benefit the people who call upon the minister for service. Even if the other individual initiates sexual advances, it is still the minister's responsibility to maintain the professional boundaries."

The Southwest Texas Annual Conference includes district representatives from San Angelo and Austin to Brownsville. It meets annually and sends delegates to the General Conference of the United Methodist Church, which meets every four years.

Horn could bring reform to Hungary

Hungarians turned decisively to former Communists, now called Socialists, in the second and final round of parliamentary elections last week. The Socialists, who took a big lead after the first round of elections, have now won an outright parliamentary majority.

The resurrection of Hungary's Communists need not cause alarm. The Socialists have vowed to keep economic and political reforms alive — a vow made plausible by their record of bringing market reforms to Hungary in the 1970s.

True, the Socialist resurgence creates uncertainty. The Socialists are riven with factions — some partial to reinstating government control and others backing further market reforms. Their leader, Gyula Horn, has issued contradictory promises — pledging both to cut government spending and increase outlays for housing, pensions and jobs. And his own past is riddled with contradiction: as a young military officer he helped suppress the 1956 uprising against communist rule; then in 1989, as foreign minister, he knocked a gaping hole in the Iron Curtain by permitting East German refugees to escape to Austria through Hungary.

But Horn is shrewd enough to know he must convince skeptics he is serious about reform. That is why he has reached out to the center-left Alliance for Free Democrats to join him in a coalition government — even though his parliamentary majority makes coalition rule unnecessary. The Free Democrats say they could join only if the reform wing of the Socialists wins out. So if the coalition comes about, it will signal that Hungary will keep moving toward democracy and markets.

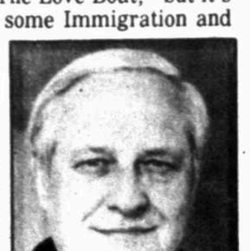
INS friends, families get exotic vacations

WASHINGTON — Romantic sunsets at sea, frolicking on sandy islands and hours of lounging on the deck. It sounds like an ad for "The Love Boat," but it's a day at the office for some Immigration and Naturalization Service inspectors — whose families and friends get to tag along free.



Anderson

The inspectors are assigned to search for illegal immigrants aboard luxury cruise ships. While the Clinton administration tries to trim 252,000 jobs from the federal payroll, there's no talk of downsizing, belt-tightening or reinventing government during a typical cruise. INS officials and their guests board ship at the crack of dawn and head for ports of call like the Bahamas.

At other times, INS officials have taken their wives on five-day, four-night luxury-liner cruises to exotic Mexican vacation spots. Their guests ride for free or reduced fares as long as they stay in the same room.

Federal law prohibits INS inspectors from bringing their friends and families along on discounted cruises. Since 1989, they have received two specific warnings that the trips for families and friends are illegal. But Department of Justice investigators recently found INS inspectors still illegally accepting such trips at least 15 percent of the time. Since inspectors have the authority to fine a cruise line up to $3,000 for each illegal alien they find on board, the free trips pose a conflict of interest.

"In our opinion, the free or reduced fares and accommodation rates for family members and friends are directly related to the INS inspectors' position and authority," DOJ investigators wrote in an internal report.

Rather than checking passport and immigration information when passengers reach port, INS officials often inspect passengers and crew members while they are en route to the United States. That's when friends and family of INS officials can travel at reduced rates.

According to conservative estimates by the DOJ inspector general, the taxpayers paid INS inspectors $218,000 in salaries and benefits to take 1,615 of these cruises in 1992. In 1993, there were 1,190 en route inspections.

Since the en route inspections are primarily for the convenience of the cruise lines, the ships pick up the inspectors' overtime costs and travel expenses — including taxis, food and lodging. Neither the INS or the cruise lines could provide receipts for inspectors' expenses, which "only exacerbates" the "appearance of a conflict of interest," according to the report.

INS officials in Washington responded to the report by saying, as they have in the past, that they are working "towards correcting the problems identified."

In letters to Attorney General Janet Reno and INS Commissioner Doris Meissner, Rep. Gary Condit, D-Calif., chairman of the Government Operations subcommittee on justice and transportation, has called for the dismissal of all INS employees who have violated the conflict-of-interest laws.

"This looks pretty blatant to me because they (the INS officials) had been warned, and they had been warned more than once," Condit told our associate Andrew Conte. "You've got to start letting people know by (firing them)... They can't give this perception that it's vacation time."

This may be only chance to stand with Clinton

The Clinton administration's forthcoming welfare "reform" proposal is far more timid than it needs to be, but we may forget about that once the shooting starts. Foes already are blasting a provision that states be authorized not to increase payments to welfare mothers each time they increase the non-taxpaying population.

Murchison

Huh? It doesn't make sense to discourage, rather than encourage, the enlargement of welfare families? Not to the Child Exclusion Coalition it doesn't. The coalition's members argue that such a policy change — implemented already in New Jersey, Georgia and Clinton's own Arkansas — is destructive. Under it, depending on who is doing the talking, there would be more abortions or fewer abortions. Either way, an American Civil Liberties Union official objects that the measure would "punish innocent children." "There is no valid basis," the ACLU asserts, "for the government to distinguish between middle-class parents who get income support through tax deductions and poor parents who get income support through (Aid to Families With Dependent Children)."

It is an odd posture — welfare as protection for children. Most evidence suggests just the reverse. Many of the raging dysfunctions in American families are traceable, logically and empirically, to the birth of the welfare culture in the '60s.

Charles Murray's "Losing Ground," published a decade ago, is the classic study. Murray demonstrated that welfare contributes to family breakup through relieving fathers of the need to support their offspring. Where is the help here for children? Detach the father from any sense of obligation, and you wind up with a culture of detached fathers. In such a culture, single mothers strive against the odds to raise their children, not all of whose needs are material.

There is, for instance, the need for moral guidance and discipline. Single mothers, stretched and strained, are ill equipped to satisfy all by themselves this basic requirement. Meanwhile, the violent crime rate soars in the physical heart of the welfare culture — slums heavily populated by fatherless blacks.

But that's not what the Child Exclusion Coalition is talking about. It's talking, rather, about some abstract "right" to a reward for behavior that harms and undermines the society conferring the reward — and, in the long run as well as the short, doesn't help the rewardee all that much.

"No other family in U.S. society receives an automatic increase in its family income if it has more children," says Robert Rector of the Heritage Foundation. "There is no reason to provide expanded welfare benefits to single mothers who have additional illegitimate children after they are already dependent on welfare."

IRS memo may cause normal heads to spin

Knowing that I collect classic examples of bureaucratic jargon, an employee of the Internal Revenue Service has sent me a splendid, authentic document.

Royko

It is a lengthy memo to all IRS workers, jointly prepared by the IRS commissioner and the head of the National Treasury Employees Union.

The memo seems to tell everyone how well the IRS and the union have been working together.

Or as the memo puts it: "Subject: IRS/NTEU Total Quality Organization Partnership Agreement — Second Edition."

And it goes on with such choice phrases as:

"... In January 1993, IRS and NTEU entered into the TQO Partnership Agreement. Again, the motivation for this joint undertaking was a recognized operational need and desire to significantly improve our mission delivery and a belief that the tenets of TQO would advance this goal. The TQO Partnership Agreement also acknowledges that improvement and re-invention of the magnitude called for in the Business Vision require the energy and support of the entire work force."

Got that? If so, let us go on:

"Over the past year, much has transpired. We have ... communicated our Business Vision, announcing our organizational configuration, which will impact on how we do business well into the 21st Century.... Developed a joint Redeployment Understanding which reconfirms our commitment to Policy Statement P-O-112, acknowledging the contribution that each of you can continue to make to the organization; and initiated an investment strategy to increase resources in front line compliance and customer service activities to assist us in reducing the tax gap and improving the level of compliance to 90 percent by the end of the decade."

Ah, yes, the old Business Vision trick. Later, it says:

"Our re-invention efforts have received additional support from the administration in the Vice President's National Performance Review (NPR). As with our TQO Partnership, a key component of the NPR is the involvement of employees and their exclusive representatives in the improvement of our governmental systems. President Clinton further emphasized the criticality of employee participation in government re-invention when he signed Executive Order 12871 on October 1, 1993. ...

"At the center of the partnership established by this Executive Order is the National Partnership Council. ...

"The primary goal of this council is to foster partnerships within federal government. This includes the development of legislative proposals for the President which are endorsed by all members of the council and which substantively change personnel laws and regulations. These proposals will focus on implementing human resource practices which will provide for and encourage an augmented contributory role of federal employees."

Well, is there anyone who isn't for an augmented contributory role? I hope not. And the excitement mounts, as the memo plows forward:

"Building on this Executive Order and our IRS/NTEU TQO Partnership Agreement, this memorandum signals the beginning of the next phase of our cooperative effort. Effective immediately through the bodies identified below, NTEU will have involvement in pre-decisional issues that shape our future.

Pre-decisional issues. I might drop that phrase into a lunchtime chat.

I hope this gives you a better understanding of why the tax forms and tax regulations can make you cross-eyed.

That's the way these people talk to each other too.

Gas distributors milk public dry

Well, today I bought some gas. I certainly couldn't afford much, especially since the price of gas went up six cents. What is the reason this time? I don't know what the stations will say, but I have a theory. This is going to be a holiday weekend, and school is going to be out soon, which means vacations are going to start. Big bucks. And what is more, all the stations went up at the same time, and the same amount. There is probably one station in town that didn't, that way they can all stand around and shake their heads and deny collusion.

Mr. Producer, you may defend this latest assault on the consumer, but it's against you too. I know you aren't making that much at the point of sale. The price of crude hasn't gone up that much. In fact it went down considerably. Did prices at the pump here in Midland plunge with it? No way. The distributor gets rich while the consumer suffers and the producer is just making ends meet.

Yes sir, let's hear it for supply and demand. They supply our demand, but pluck us doing it. Yes, it isn't as much as it is in Europe, only because the tax burden isn't as big.

Everyone in Midland isn't rich, some of us are married to lowly working stiffs. I could get a job, but then my car would need twice as much gas and I would only make a little more than already comes in. My overall expenses would skyrocket because I would have to put my children in private school instead of homeschool them. I'm not sending them to these schools, even if the powers that be think a 300 percent tax increase is going to make them good.

Some of you might say, "If you don't like it here, move." I would love to move to a cooler climate, but I do like Midland and I'm here for the long haul. I even vote.

Teacher of Year offers thanks

A sincere and heartfelt thank you to the Midland Chamber of Commerce for its most recent contribution in recognizing some of our outstanding Midland teachers through its Teacher of the Year Award. The time, effort and dedication that was spent on this project is deeply appreciated.

I would like to congratulate all of the teachers who were elected from their campuses to compete. It was an honor to be among such outstanding educators.

Thank you Midland chamber for making this event possible. Thank you for showing your support to education.

A special gratitude to the parents, students, and teachers of Ben Milam Elementary for making it possible for me to compete for this award. I am very proud to have the honor of representing Midland's Teacher of the Year.

Did drive-by increase esteem?

In the early morning hours of Saturday, May 28, a random, senseless drive-by shooting by one or more juvenile thugs resulted in extensive damage to a defenseless motorhome parked in the driveway at 4404 Ward St. Fortunately, no one was in it — no one was hurt physically.

But the repercussions of this wanton act of violence will be widespread, resulting in unexpected costs to the owners, the insurance company and the general public along with concern for the neighborhood's sense of safety. This was more than "criminal mischief" as shown on the official police report. This was a criminal violation of property rights that could have resulted in personal injury.

So, to the parties responsible, I say: "Hey-...DUDE! Tell me about your self-esteem! Do you feel better about yourself now that you have proved your manhood?"

Memorials may be made to Allison Cancer Center or Hospice of Midland.

DEAR ABBY

Passing plate is for giving, not grandstanding

DEAR ABBY: You told "Churchgoer in Plano, Texas": "While the person who gives to the church once a year may be very generous, those who see him passing the basket without putting anything in may assume he's giving nothing, which sets a poor example for others."

Van Buren

Without appearing sanctimonious, may I point out how Jesus instructed us to give: "So, when you give to the needy, do not announce it with trumpets as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and on the streets, to be honored by men. I tell you the truth, they have received their reward in full. But when you give to the needy, do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing, so that your giving may be in secret. Then your Father who sees what is done in secret, will reward you." (Matthew 6:2-4)

Abby, I am one of the few who count the collection after church each week. We do not care who gives monthly, weekly — or never. The only reason we keep track of how much individuals give is to provide them with income tax statements at the end of the year. — JANET SAULTER-HEMMER, UNITED METHODIST CHURCH, BOONTON, N.J.

DEAR JANET SAULTER-HEMMER: You were not the only reader who was critical of my response to "Churchgoer." Read on:

DEAR ABBY: A woman at our church once told the church secretary that "so-and-so" who sat near her rarely put anything in the collection plate. The secretary wisely told her that so-and-so gave monthly — and why did it matter to her?

Abby, I've counted offerings for 25 years and find it pathetic that some people are so intimidated by the opinions of others that I often find empty sealed envelopes in the collection basket.

You blew that one, Abby. Sign me ... GIVING IS PRIVATE, GLADSTONE, MO.

DEAR GIVING: You're right. I blew it big-time. Wait — there's more. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: You really missed the point in your response to the letter concerning making change from the collection plate.

I recall my childhood neighbors who had nine ragtag children and not a penny to spare. Yet they attended church regularly and were embarrassed when they had nothing to put in the collection plate.

Giving should be an act of generosity rather than the result of coercion. With self-addressed envelopes handed out at the end of the service, just as much money can be collected without peer pressure. If the answer to this suggestion is, "We'll get nary a penny," then perhaps the clergy should rethink the message that they convey to their flock.

I encourage everyone to change the collection tactics at his or her place of worship so that people can give whatever they can afford, without being embarrassed. — DAVID PATTERSON, RAMONA, CALIF.

Ceremony honors those who died in invasion

DENISON, Texas (AP) — Dwight Eisenhower, who ordered the Allied assault on Normandy 50 years ago, agonized over his decision for the invasion that marked the beginning of World War II's end in Europe, an Army retiree said Sunday at Eisenhower's birthplace.

R.C. Vaughn grew up within eyesight of the home where Eisenhower was born on Oct. 14, 1890. He said it was destiny for Eisenhower to lead Allied forces — including some Texas veterans — to French beachheads.

On the 50th anniversary of the Normandy invasion, seven North Texas veterans were honored at the shrine along with thousands of other former soldiers. The names of about 1,000 Americans who died in the June 6, 1944, invasion were read aloud.

"General Eisenhower as supreme commander of the European theater, oversaw the assembly of the greatest amphibious force in history. He and he alone had to make the final decision launching the invasion of Hitler-controlled Western Europe," said Vaughn, an army technical sergeant serving in the Pacific before the invasion.

Although Eisenhower gave the order to begin the campaign on June 5, bad weather had forced the supreme commander of the Allied Expeditionary Force in Europe to delay D-Day for 24 hours, said Vaughn, a 78-year-old retired judge.

"Then with some members of his staff advising yes and some advising no, and huge waves still heaving the waters of the English Channel he made the decision," Vaughn said. "How much stress and pain and prayer must have gone into making the decision to commit tens of thousands of men to the assault, knowing that thousands of young men would die in the attempt? What star of destiny!"

In a D-Day memorial service before a metal statue of Eisenhower, Grayson County residents who helped storm Normandy beaches received keys to the city of Denison from Mayor Pro Tem Michael Wright.

Premature baby roommates reunite after chance encounter

By Jane Faulkner
The Brazosport Facts

LAKE JACKSON — Anita Garcia and Hailey Cutler peer at the television screen as it replays their first days as preemie roommates at the old Community Hospital in Freeport. That was a little more than 16 years ago.

It's hard to believe that the images of the tiny infants in the film are the same girls — now high school students — who have been apart since their first birthdays. But just as fate first brought them together at birth in the fall of 1977, it unexpectedly stepped in and reunited them.

The latest mutual chapter in the girls' lives began shortly before Christmas last year when Anita, her parents, Maria and Manuel Garcia Sr., and her 15-year-old brother, Manuel Jr., had gone to the Potato Patch restaurant in Clute. Nearby, West Columbia resident Pam Cutler — Hailey's mom — was seated with her family.

"I told my husband, 'I know that lady,' and he said, 'Pam, don't start,' " Cutler laughed.

"But I kept studying her and thinking, 'That's got to be her!' I remember she had a baby boy, too. I thought that must be the baby. That has to be Maria, I mean right next to us.

"My cousin was sitting next to me and I said, 'Roger, let me out, let me out . . . I know this lady.' So I jumped out and went around and I said, Aren't you Maria Garcia?' and she said. 'Yes!' "

Cutler and Maria Garcia break into joyful laughter as they recall the chance encounter.

"We had not seen each other for about 15 years," Garcia said. "We had kept in touch the first year after Anita and Hailey were born, but Pam had moved. I tried looking for her, but I couldn't find her."

The bond that Pam and Maria share is a strong one. They were both first-time mothers when their babies came into the world two months premature. In Maria's case, acute toxemia nearly claimed her life before Anita was born on Nov. 20, 1977.

When her husband — who had been on a hunting trip — arrived at the hospital, he was told that Maria wasn't going to survive and that surgery was needed immediately to save the baby, she recalled. Drifting in and out of a coma, Maria did not get to see Anita — who weighed three pounds, five ounces at birth — until the baby was three days old.

"She was real, real tiny," Maria recalled. "I remember the first thing that I asked the nurse was whether she had the Garcia nose. I never did ask if Anita was going to make it or not because it never occurred to me that she wasn't going to make it."

As is commonly the case, Anita's weight dropped to two pounds, 13 ounces. But 32 days after her birth and packing a full five pounds, she got to go home Dec. 22.

"We were first-time parents and we were nervous wrecks," Maria said. "We didn't know what to do, and we were told that the first five years of her life would be crucial. She did great, but I didn't take her out for the first three months."

Hailey, too, got to go home for the holidays at four pounds, 15 ounces, but her first few weeks of life followed a somewhat rockier course. A ruptured placenta had set Hailey's birth in motion at 6 p.m., some five hours after Pam had left work.

"She was due Dec. 21 and I had her Oct. 22, almost two months and a day early," Pam said. "She weighed two pounds, seven ounces."

"I was in the hospital and Hailey wasn't supposed to live," she said. "They had given her a 1-in-10 chance and that was a month before Anita decided to drop in."

Hailey's first milestone came four days after her birth, when the late Dr. Oscar Johnson told Pam that the baby had cleared her first hurdle. After she went home, Pam recalled phoning the hospital every night at weigh-in time to find out Hailey's weight status. Once they were called to the hospital at 3 a.m. when Hailey had quit breathing.

Both mothers agree that they sometimes look back on the early infancies and wonder how they made it through them. "In retrospect, it kind of makes you re-evaluate everything," Pam said. "You know, God protects you. You don't know how bad it is until you're out of it."

Each mother had a second child under easier circumstances, although Pam spent the final four months of her last pregnancy in bed before little Stacey, now 3, was born.

Manuel Garcia Jr., who is 18 months younger than Anita, made his debut in Laredo after a normal pregnancy and birth. Maria's parents looked after Anita when her little brother was born and six weeks later the family of four returned to Brazoria.

Anita spent her elementary and some intermediate school years in Brazoria, but now attends Brazoswood High School since her family's move to lake Jackson. Hailey is spending her first year at Columbia High School after transferring from Alvin High School. Both girls ar sophomores.

And as fate once again would have it, many of the friends that Anita knew in Brazoria are now Hailey's friends at Columbia High School. For her part, Hailey has set her career sights on court reporting. She also hopes to next year become a member of PALS, a peer counseling group at Columbia High School. Anita is involved in the symphony orchestra at Brazoswood High School where she plays the viola. An honor roll student and Globe Scholar, she had been chosen to attend the National Hispanic Institute conference this year. She also has been affiliated with the National Spanish Honor Society and volunteers at Brazosport Memorial Hospital. She hopes to go into either medicine or science as a career.

The girls watch with amusement as their mothers examine a collection of baby photos. Pam points to Hailey's two-inch, inky footprint made on the day she was born. And they discuss other long forgotten details — like the fact that disposable diapers for preemies, when folded, are about the size of a 3x5-inch index card.

"It's hard to believe that they were that small," Maria said. "But it was all up to the girls. We really can't take credit that they made it, because they were the ones who had to do everything on their own. There'd never been a preemie in my family before, so we are just so proud of Anita."

"They were survivors," Pam added. "Preemies have a strong sense of survival. That's what the nurse explained to me when Hailey was born."

High school students use play to send message about AIDS

By Dai Huynh
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — A group of Houston high school students wants to send other teen-agers a message: AIDS knows no boundaries.

"They still think it's a gay problem. . . . AIDS is such a huge epidemic, and people are just not really listening to the wake-up call," said Sarah Guzick, a senior at the High School for the Performing and Visual Arts.

Guzick and 14 of her classmates are members of the cast of "The Age of Discretion," a play about young people and AIDS, that in a year has been staged in 45 schools in Houston and surrounding areas.

Almost always, the audience stands and cheers. But sometimes, people leave: during one performance, more than half of the audience left before the second scene.

Written and directed by drama teacher Sharon Ferranti and her brother, Jay, the play addresses all aspects of the disease, including transmission of the virus by sex and needles.

The play opens on graduation day with Jim silently watching his friends make plans for the future while he must deal with the knowledge that he's dying of AIDS.

As the years pass, instead of learning from Jim's death, his friends plunge into a lifestyle involving promiscuous sex and drugs. In the final scene, the students meet at their 10-year reunion. But this time, half have contracted the fatal disease.

Students rack up perfect attendance in school career

By Al Brumley
The Dallas Morning News

RICHARDSON — Geoff Camp and Robert Leedy have probably said the word "here" more than just about any other students around.

One hundred and eighty days a year, for 13 years, they said it.

While other kids stayed home holding oral thermometers next to light bulbs and watching reruns of "Bewitched," they said it.

While their fellow students concocted elaborate schemes to skip sixth-period algebra and hang out at the mall, they said it.

They said it, in fact, to perfection.

Geoff and Robert, both about to graduate from high school in the Richardson district, have done what to most students would be unthinkable: They have compiled perfect kindergarten-through-12th-grade attendance records.

But don't get the wrong idea — that doesn't mean they have tape on their glasses and pet names for their slide rules. In fact, they're both active, popular, well-rounded students.

And why not? After all, they have more experience at it than practically anybody else.

"It just gets to be such a habit, you don't think about not going to school," said Geoff, 17, who is about to graduate from Lake Highlands High School. "You just get up and go."

Robert, who will soon call J.J. Pearce High School his alma mater, agreed.

"There are nights when you've got a lot of homework that you're behind on, or a project due, and you pretty much have to pull an all-nighter," said Robert, 18. "And of course, in the morning you don't want to go in. But you do it anyway."

Of course, perfect attendance is not unheard of. Many school districts' graduating classes include a student who has managed to make it to the hallowed halls every day.

But to have two in the same class is unusual, said Dr. Arzell Ball, the Richardson school district superintendent.

In fact, Dr. Ball said he doesn't recall that it has ever before happened in a district where he worked. He credited the boys' parents for instilling the proper values at home.

"It's obvious that the boys have those values, and they're able to apply them when they leave home and are in school," said Dr. Ball, who himself has missed only five days of work in 45 years.

Geoff and Robert, who didn't even know each other until three months ago, said they first realized what they might be able to do when they were in junior high.

Each had been honored in sixth grade for perfect attendance. In the next year or two it hit them that they might actually be able to keep the streak alive through graduation.

"From kindergarten through the sixth grade — that's when your parents are still dressing you and pretty much running your life," Robert said. "In the seventh grade, you start doing things more on your own. That's when I started thinking that I had come that far, and it wouldn't really be impossible to go all the way with it."

Of course, good timing helped.

Geoff and Robert each had the usual childhood diseases — they just had them at what they now consider opportune times.

"I got chicken pox in the summer when I was 6," Geoff said.

"I got it over spring break when I was in kindergarten, so it worked out good," Robert said.

Each insists that he never went to school sick, and their parents concur.

"We would never have sent him to school with a fever," said Patsy Camp, Geoff's mother. "I honestly can't remember him ever getting up in the morning and saying, 'I really don't feel good; I want to stay home.' I really don't remember a time when he ever went to school and didn't feel good."

For Geoff in particular, feigning illness would have been tough.

Determined student doesn't let blindness interfere with goals

By John Moore
Wichita Falls Times Record News

WICHITA FALLS — Kelly Hill says her blindness has taught her the value of not giving up.

Miss Hill, 21, graduated May 14 from Midwestern State University with more than 900 other students, the largest graduating class in the university's history.

Miss Hill, who plans to earn a master's degree in clinical psychology from MSU and eventually teach at the college level, offered some words of wisdom for others facing difficulties in obtaining an education.

"You can't let anything stop you, no matter what the obstacles are," she said. "Whether you have no money, or you can't see or hear, or you have six kids, if you want to go to college, just tell yourself you're going to do it . . . you will find a way."

Miss Hill, who was born blind, underwent numerous operations to improve her vision. The corneal opacities, glaucoma and Peter's Anomaly that clouded her eyes were the first simultaneous occurrence of the symptoms that doctors had seen at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., when she was first treated there more than 20 years ago.

A prosthesis replaced her left eye after surgery rendered it useless about 12 years ago. She lost the vision in her right eye in December 1990.

"The surgery was just too much . . . my retinas collapsed," Miss Hill said. "I don't have any regrets about having the surgery because, this way, I know we tried."

That willingness to attempt difficult tasks has inspired others, said her mother, Barbara.

"People listen to her because she can speak from experience . . . and she's a good listener, too," her mother said. "She'll make a good psychologist."

Kelly studied for her major in psychology and minor in music using audio-cassette versions of college textbooks, which she said are "very difficult to have made."

Teen glamor

Fingernails are important to teen-age girls, judging by how much nail polish they use. Simmons Market Research Bureau surveyed 3,000 teen-agers and found nail polish was their favorite cosmetic, with 71.6 percent of the young women saying they used it.

Lipstick was a close second, used by 66.9 percent, followed by mascara at 59.9 percent, eye shadow at 54.5 percent and blush at 49.9 percent.

The survey also found working teens are more likely to use mascara, blush and foundation makeup than those who don't work — an indication that at an early age, women understand the importance of making a good impression on the job.

Conventional hotel

The vows of poverty nuns took before entering Mexico's Convent of Santa Catalina will be nowhere evident to guests at the landmark in Oaxaca.

The convent has been transformed into a hotel with air conditioning, direct-dial telephones and a bar and a restaurant — "and every other amenity for luxurious living," according to a news release describing the new hotel.

Luxury was probably the last thing the sisters expected when the convent was built during the 16th century.

All about Marilyn

First there were flying toasters and tropical fish, then Star Trek. And now, the Marilyn Monroe screen saver.

Two software companies, DeskTop Software Inc. and SoftImage Publishing Inc., have created a screen saver that is a series of photos of the late actress, including at-home pictures, bathing suit shots and the famous photo from "The Seven Year Itch" showing her white skirt billowing above a subway grating.

If you should tire of Marilyn, the software has a program allowing you to turn your own photos into a screen saver. There is no guarantee it will be as glamorous.

Back to the books

Corporate downsizing has been a real boon for education.

Shelling and Snelling, a nationwide employment firm, says many mid-level executives are getting retrained in new fields to help them find jobs after lay-offs.

Many of those who aren't switching careers must learn new skills, the company says. Most of the retrainees are going back to school, while others are taking temporary positions or resorting to on-the-job training.

Getting before-the-job experience

Hands-on training while in college vital to future success

By Mary Rowland
N.Y. Times News Service

Adam Hertzog is 21, but when he graduates from the University of Pennsylvania next spring, he will have eight years' experience in sports journalism, including a stint as the sports editor of a weekly newspaper and work at NBC Sports and HBO Sports.

That experience could be the difference between landing a permanent job as a sports announcer and coming up empty-handed.

"What companies are looking for today is unique kids who have a passion for something," said Dale Winston, president of Battalia Winston International, an executive recruiter in New York. "When you can demonstrate that you've done something with your time in school and done it well, it immensely increases your chances of getting a good job."

Few college students are as disciplined or as focused as Hertzog. Many still believe the perfect job will materialize if they get good grades and show leadership potential.

But the competition for first jobs is intense. "Entry-level positions for college graduates have declined by 10 or 11 percent every year since 1987," said Samer Hamadeh, co-author with Mark Oldman of "America's Top 100 Internships" (Princeton Review, 1994, $16.)

Increasingly, the deciding factor is work experience. "We asked every employer we talked to whether they emphasized grades," Hamadeh said.

From those interviews, Hamadeh and Oldman concluded that grade point averages make little difference when applying for that first job in most professions.

"We recently visited Georgia Tech where a lot of graduates were having trouble lining up jobs," Hamadeh said. "One woman had a 2.3 grade point average with a degree in civil engineering. No one thought she had a chance. But she was the first one hired because she had done five internships."

Internships can be used for career changes at midlife as well as for entering the work force after college. Oldman and Hamadeh described a 38-year-old man who worked for a small weekly newspaper in California and dreamed of a career in broadcast journalism.

He completed a six-month internship at the Center for Investigative Reporting in San Francisco and subsequently landed a job at a television network in New York.

Of course, the earlier someone begins building a resume, the better — especially for jobs in high demand. Hertzog focused on sports journalism when he entered high school. "I knew what my dream was," he said. "I knew I wanted to do sports communication."

He became sports editor of his high school paper in Scarsdale, N.Y. As a high school sophomore, he began covering games for the local weekly, The Scarsdale Inquirer. The next year, he became sports editor of the SAN FRANCISCO — Phil Adelman started working as a Marriott Hotel doorman in Massachusetts even before he donned his white pith helmet with its spray of bright red feathers for the first time.

To celebrate getting the job, Adelman and his wife drove all over Cambridge and Boston and wrote down step-by-step directions from the hotel to the places hotel guests were most likely to want to go, so Adelman would be able to tell them.

Eventually, the Cambridge Marriott printed the directions on cards to hand out to guests — one of many examples of how Adelman's presence and personality have made their marks on the hotel.

Adelman is one of 14 "front-line service workers" profiled in the new book, "The Real Heroes of Business and Not A CEO Among Them: How to Find, Train, Manage and Retain World-Class Service Workers," by Bill Fromm, the president of a Kansas City marketing and advertising agency, and Len Schlesinger, a professor at Harvard Business School.

The book focuses on the unsung heroes of the service sector, who are crucial to the success of their companies.

The service industry, whose "product" might be an opened hotel door, an unclogged drain, or a repaired car, has been showing significant growth in the last few years, even while much of the rest of the economy has been stagnant.

In the San Francisco Bay Area, service sector jobs are expected to grow 31 percent to 1.5 million between 1990 and 2010, according to the Association of Bay Area Governments, a land use planning agency headquartered in Oakland, Calif. (ABAG's definition of the service industry, which includes professionals such as doctors, lawyers and programmers, is broader than the book's.)

School-age scramble

Workers grapple with care for older children

By Lisa Genasci
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Natalie Hay was desperate. She and her husband both worked full time, and her two teen-age children refused to do homework in the afternoons after school.

"It was a real problem," said Hay, who works with Society National Bank in Columbus, Ohio. "Their report cards said they were always missing their assignments. I'd tried everything, including grounding them."

Finally, Hay called a counseling service that suggested drawing up a contract allowing the teens to determine homework hours and the punishment if they weren't kept. The last two report cards showed the two haven't missed any homework.

The service, run by the Boston consulting group, Work-Family Directions, is one of many new programs responding to a growing cry for help from working parents with school-age children.

When many companies started recognizing in the 1980s that employees needed help balancing work and family if they were to be productive, most attention was given to preschool and elder care.

Now, although much remains to be done in those areas, a new wave of dependent care programs is beginning to help some parents cope with children's vacations, as well as the time before and after school.

"As society has aged, the bulge in the work force that seven or eight years ago was screaming for pre-school care

The fad that is one-stop shopping

N.Y. Times News Service

For the one-stop shopper, the Schwab One Source Account is far from the only stop in town.

Almost two years ago, Charles Schwab & Co. started the account to cater to mutual fund investors who wanted a diversified portfolio of funds without the transaction costs and mountains of paperwork.

At about the same time, Jack White & Co. began a similar account, and last spring Muriel Siebert & Co. followed. Fidelity Investments joined a few months later. The latest entry, Waterhouse Securities, weighed in three months ago.

Experts see an even bigger future. "I think this will become a dominant way to distribute mutual funds," said Don Phillips, vice president of Morningstar Inc., the mutual fund research company based in Chicago.

Investors seem to like the programs. Data suggest the Schwab network was the third-largest distributor of direct-marketed funds last year, trailing just Fidelity Investments and the Vanguard Group, according to Strategic Insight, a mutual fund research and consulting firm based in New York.

The basic idea is simple. Investors can buy and sell shares in no-load funds from a large number of fund companies without paying a transaction fee. They can transact business with one telephone call, and everything is neatly summarized on one statement.

The two largest programs in terms of assets are Schwab One Source, with more than $10 billion under management, and the Fidelity No Transaction Fee account, with $5 billion ($4 billion of it in Fidelity funds).

Firms compete is by offering bigger selections. Schwab has 254 funds from 27 fund companies, compared with Fidelity's 335 from 34 companies. The Jack White No Transaction Fee fund now has the most, with 377 from 66 companies.

The programs add funds weekly and tout their gains. Neither Schwab nor any of the other programs that compete with Fidelity offer Fidelity funds.

Among the programs, there is an overlap of funds, but some fund groups chose only one program. The programs offer mostly the smaller fund groups; Scudder, Vanguard and T. Rowe Price, three of the biggest groups, have refused to participate.

As the number of funds approaches 5,000, the one-stop shopping programs are a reasonable way to focus research on which funds to buy. The programs "generally look for fund groups with good reputations to align themselves with," said Phillips, although he cautions that "that's diminishing as the number of choices rises."

For investors who systematically withdraw money from several funds, or add regularly in a "dollar cost averaging" program or periodically "rebalance" their portfolios — shifting money from funds that have performed strongly to ones that have lagged — the programs are particularly valuable.

"It's not practical to manage a diversified portfo-

Keep a wary eye on new stock funds

By Chet Currier
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — In contrast to the dramatic entrances sometimes enjoyed by new issues in the stock market, most new mutual funds make their debuts quietly.

Even the most ambitious stock funds arrive on the scene lacking a key attribute for star status — a performance record.

And since funds' values are determined by the worth of their portfolios, rather than open bidding by buyers and sellers, they can't soar in their first hours of availability the way a hot new stock issue can.

All in all, the standard advice from the experts is to approach new funds with great care, even if the manager is famed as a stock-picking genius.

The annals of the industry are filled with tales of star managers who flopped when they started new funds specifically designed to showcase their talents.

Furthermore, marketers of new funds are most likely to focus on what's hot at any given time. So the risk is high of buying into some investment specialty or strategy at the very moment that it is topping out.

In a study of the performance of hundreds of new funds over the past two decades, investment adviser Sheldon Jacobs found that slightly more than half posted first-year results that were below the average of their class.

"The odds of winning with a new fund are not too good," he concludes in his Handbook for No-Load Fund Investors.

"While some new funds are immediate winners, can you reasonably expect to select those heroes beforehand? Without performance records to analyze, it's a most difficult task."

But with all those caveats, spotting and tracking new stock funds can still be an intriguing venture for active fund investors.

For the sake of illustration, consider the example of the Newcomer Fund, an aggressive stock fund just added to the Hypothetical Group.

Hypothetical is a long-established family that has been poking along lately with only average performance results, and the powers-that-be in its management company badly want a winner to get their name on the quarterly and annual lists of the best-performing funds.

The older funds in the family aren't promising candidates to achieve this mission, if only because of their size.

But the Newcomer Fund is small, highly maneuverable and unencumbered with old losers in its portfolio. So if the analysts in the Hypothetical research department can come up with, say, one or two really good ideas a month, why not focus their efforts on getting Newcomer off to a good start?

In addition, Hypothetical's extensive trading on behalf of its whole family entitles it to a moderate-sized allotment of stock from each hot new issue that comes along.

If the shares of these new issues are parceled to all of Hypothetical's stock funds, the impact on the bigger funds' performance will be so small that nobody will ever notice it. But if the whole allotment is steered each time into Newcomer's account, it can help the baby fund take some big steps toward success.

While you won't find many people in the fund business admitting to doing this themselves, few dispute that it happens in places. It's the sort of thing that regulators are seeking to cover better as they modernize the rules to keep pace.

In the meantime, trying to cash in on any new fund's presumably favored status is still a high-risk undertaking. If a few new issues that are force-fed to the Newcomer Fund should happen to do badly, the results could be quite painful.

But even conservative investors who would never take a flyer on a fund like this might still pay heed. Perhaps a year or two from now they will be looking at the Newcomer Fund, attracted by its imposing early performance record.

Then they can pause to consider whether the fund has been nurtured in a hothouse environment that won't exist for it in future years.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Options for DRPs and the investor

By Bill Doyle

Q: I'm 35 years old and single. I have a $5,000 certificate of deposit, $10,000 of Series EE U.S. savings bonds and $40,000 in U.S. Treasury bills through a Treasury Direct account.

Doyle

As you can see, I'm a conservative investor, but I would like to put half of my money in stocks -- not for short periods to make quick profits by buying and selling, but as solid long-term investments.

I understand that small investors can purchase stocks directly from some companies. Can you provide details on how and where this is done? Above all, is this a good idea?

A: It is an excellent idea, one that has been gaining in popularity among investors -- but not with all members of the brokerage fraternity and federal securities regulators.

There are two basic ways to accomplish what you have in mind: through some dividend reinvestment plans (DRPs) and the investor registration option (IRO).

DRPs have been around for decades and are in operation at more than 800 U.S. corporations. The newer IRO method, the brainchild of the Securities Transfer Association, has been approved for use by only a handful of companies. The federal Securities and Exchange Commission has been painfully slow clearing IRO registrations.

In a DRP, a stockholder's dividends are automatically used to purchase more full and fractional shares. Many DRPs permit plan participants to send in extra payments to buy still more shares. And more than a dozen DRPs allow the initial purchase to be made from the company.

The IRO method is a great deal similar to a DRP. In both, the investor deals directly with the company or its agent -- not with a broker. Besides saving commissions, the investor's stock ownership is recorded on the company's books. Because there is no intermediary, all communications go directly to the investor.

Q: Where can I obtain a list of the companies that sell stock directly to investors?

A: There are a number of sources. My favorite remains the 162-page Directory of Companies Offering Dividend Reinvestment Plans, which contains a list of direct sellers and much other information about DRPs and IROs.

Evergreen Enterprises, P.O. Box 763, Laurel, MD 20725-0763, sells the 11th edition of that manual for $28.95 plus a $2 shipping charge.

Q: I had to visit five different brokerage firms before I found one willing to provide any information about DRPs and IROs. Are brokers opposed to these developments, for fear they will lose commissions?

A: Some are. And they really can't be faulted for not wanting to facilitate something that could reduce their future incomes. Some scalding letters from brokers and their spouses have come in on just that subject.

However, every time the subject is mentioned in this column, we hear from other brokers who contend they are in favor of DRPs. We also receive messages from readers who say their brokers are helpful in explaining DRPs.

Q: When purchasing stocks or bonds, my friend and I usually have the securities registered in both names as "joint tenants." I understand that if one of us dies, the survivor takes all.

Several times, however, the securities have been registered "joint tenants, WROS." What does "WROS" mean, and what will be the impact in the event one of us dies?

A: Those four letters stand for "with right of survivorship," giving the term "joint tenants, WROS" the same meaning as "joint tenants."

You summed it up. When one of you leaves this vale of tears, as we all must, the survivor becomes the sole owner of those securities. Until then, you two have equal ownership.

That must be a very dear friend.

SCHOOL: Companies recognizing family change

now needs school-age care," said Jonathan Carson, president of The Educational Publishing Group. "It's a real problem for parents, trying to fill a huge amount of time."

The growing number of working women, of single-parent families and the increasing concerns about safety and education have pushed many parents to the edge, said Betty Southwick of Work-Family Directions.

About 57 million women now work outside the home. Some 40 percent have at least one child, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. And while 18 million working parents have children under age five, 28 million have children of school age.

"Parents are concerned about the pre-school years, but they are obsessed with the next 10 years," said Ted Childs, director of work force diversity programs at International Business Machines Corp.

Recognizing the changes in their employees' lives, companies are starting to sign up for counseling and referral services that help. Some of the most progressive firms are sponsoring or helping to set up summer camps, vacation activities and before- and after-school programs.

The Work-Family counseling service, set up two years ago, averages 300 calls a week from parents needing practical advice from guidance counselors, principals, teachers, college admissions personnel and others in education.

The Educational Publishing Group puts out a newsletter eight times a year discussing trends in education as well as resolving work and family conflicts. It's aimed at parents with school-age children.

The publication, first issued in 1990, is free to employees of the 70 subscribing companies, including Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. and Dow Chemical Co. The companies pay $5 to $9 annually per subscription.

"We noticed that work and family programs primarily focused on pre-school and elder care," Carson said. "We try to plug the gap for parents of school-age children."

John Hancock Financial Services in Boston is among the pioneers in addressing the concerns of parents of older children.

In 1990, the company started a program to help employees and their families after surveys showed workers were having a tough time handling after-school hours and vacations, said Kathy Hazzard, director of work-family programs.

Under Kids-to-Go, parents can bring children ages six to 14 to the office during vacations in February, April, the last week of June and Columbus Day. From there, a staff takes not more than 50 children on trips to local museums, the beach, roller skating, or elsewhere. The day trips cost $20, and are so popular there was a waiting list for the most recent one.

Employees have told Hazzard they would be hard-pressed to leave Hancock because of its school-age program as well as its on-site child care center for 200 pre-schoolers.

Another company with programs specifically for older children is AT&T, which has invested $2.4 million in 117 such projects in 80 communities, said Deborah Stahl, director of the company's Family Care Development Fund. Many of those are in their first year of operation.

Not all companies have been willing or able to commit the time and resources to such programs.

Others have addressed the issue through the American Business Collaboration for Quality Dependent Care, companies that pool resources to address issues related to work and family conflicts.

More than one-third of the initiatives sponsored nationwide by the collaboration, which is now in its second year, are related to school-age children.

But many parents with school-age children can't afford such programs and corporations do little to subsidize them.

RESUMES: Hiring process geared toward screening the "heroic" qualities of many of their subjects weren't obvious on their job applications. At the time of his job interview, Adelman was 59 years old and had been unemployed for 3 1/2 years. He had never worked at a hotel, or in the hospitality industry.

Yet Adelman was the one who later convinced the hotel to spend half a million dollars on an expansive glass and steel canopy over the driveway to protect guests from the rain.

Fromm and Schlesinger said the application and hiring process at most companies is designed to screen out people like Adelman — not find them. Adelman got the job because he impressed one manager with his perception, enthusiasm and energy at a one-on-one interview — qualities that would be hard to spot on an application.

Fromm and Schlesinger selected their "service stars" after soliciting nominations from more than 800 companies, winnowing down the list to 40 and then following the semifinalists closely for two days.

Among their other picks:

— Wally Bojorquez, who spends his workday polishing, arranging and rotating fruits and vegetables into colorful and irresistible displays at a Vons supermarket in San Diego.

— Jorge Alvarez, who boards airplanes minutes before takeoff at Phoenix International Airport to make sure all the critical catering supplies are in order — from the vegetarian meal for one passenger to the pot holders for attendants.

— Marie Williams, a "champion talker," soothes patients and charms people who call her company's 800 telephone number to arrange special delivery of medications.

"Every one of these people sees his or her world, and job, from the customers' point of view," Fromm and Schlesinger wrote.

Their book supplements the stories of customer service "heroes" with practical advice on how businesses can find, hire, manage and nurture employees like them.

"When you have people like these, you need to help them do their best work," they wrote. "As you will see in the profiles, these folks are not always the easiest employees to have, but that is only because they never settle into complacency. Great service performers require understanding and supportive management — and management that is not threatened by being challenged."

paper and was paid $50 a week to coordinate the sports coverage.

As a freshman at Penn, he worked at the college paper and began covering games for a local radio station, eventually rising to student sports director.

In December of his freshman year, he began writing to all the radio and television stations in Philadelphia and New York to apply for summer internships.

Although many stations granted him interviews, they rejected him as too young and inexperienced. So he accepted an internship at The Scarsdale Inquirer, which paid him $50 a week for writing sports and other articles.

In his sophomore year, he received an internship with NBC Sports. He worked — without pay — for Bob Costas, collecting information for broadcasts. "I went to all the basketball games, prepared statistics and prepared the talent to go on the air," Hertzog said.

This summer he needed a position that paid. He has taken a production job at HBO Sports that pays $300 a week.

Last month, NBC paid him $90 to help out on the floor at a Knicks-Bulls basketball playoff game. "I was paid to cover something where the street price of a ticket was $1,000," he said.

Hertzog's advice to other students is to set goals, do some research and get an early start on applications for internships.

"Some of the deadlines are not until April," he said. "But I start working on my applications at the end of the year."

Although it is too late for students to apply for an internship this summer, many programs are available year-round.

"A number of deadlines are coming up on July 1," Hamadeh said. "Some internships, like those at the Supreme Court, are best done in the fall, when the court is in session."

"America's Top 100 Internships" gives a history and description of each program, the criteria for selecting candidates, job pay and perks and application deadlines.

About 20 of the internships listed in the book are available to high school students. Many are available to people changing careers at any age.

D-DAY
FIFTY YEARS AGO

Gathering honors, recalls legacy, victory of Eisenhower

By Edith M. Lederer
Associated Press

LONDON — The spirit of Gen. Dwight David Eisenhower filled the square under the windows of his wartime headquarters.

Staff members who helped organize the D-Day campaign were there. So was his old golfing buddy, Bob Hope, and the general who now commands Allied forces in Europe.

It was a time to remember the past and to consider the legacy of the man who planned the liberation of Europe and went on to become the 34th president of the United States.

A towering statue of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, America's wartime leader, was the backdrop for the ceremony in Grosvenor Square.

But it was the smaller statue of Eisenhower in a grassy corner of the square that cast a giant shadow over the crowd of about 200 comprising veterans, congressmen, allied military leaders and young American sailors.

Rep. Robert Michel, R-Ill., who hit the Normandy beaches as an enlisted man four days after D-Day and is now minority leader of the U.S. House of Representatives, read the orders Eisenhower issued to his troops at the start of the invasion:

"The eyes of the world are upon you. ... You will bring about the destruction of the German war machine, the elimination of Nazi tyranny over oppressed peoples of Europe. ... Your enemy ... will fight savagely. ... (But) the tide has turned. The free men of the world are marching together to victory."

Winston S. Churchill, a Conservative member of Parliament, read a report from his grandfather, Prime Minister Winston Churchill, to the House of Commons on June 6, 1944, hours after the invasion started.

Churchill spoke of his "complete confidence" in Eisenhower and said "there is a brotherhood in arms between us and our friends of the United States."

American historian Stephen Ambrose said: "Field Marshal (Bernard) Montgomery got it best and right when he said of Eisenhower, 'He has the power of attracting the hearts of men as the magnet attracts the bits of metal.'"

A statue of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower was unveiled in Bayeux, Normandy, Sunday.

U.S. Army veteran Don Pechacek, 72, scales the sheer cliffs of Pointe du Hoc on the Normandy coast of France, Sunday, during a reenactment of the feat he and others of the 2nd U.S. Army Ranger Battalion accomplished 50 years ago on D-Day.

Last climb

Old Ranger, symbol of D-Day spirit, again scales dreaded cliff

By Mort Rosenblum
Associated Press

POINTE DU HOC, France — In a Ranger helmet and old black jeans, smiling more than he did 50 years ago and met by a cheering family instead of Germans, Don Pechacek scaled the dreaded cliff.

"Aw, heck," he said Sunday, as freshly minted Rangers helped him scramble over the top and clucked at blood streaming from a scrape on his right hand. "I just got sensitive skin."

Weathered and fit, he did not look fragile. For the little crowd clustered around him, the 72-year-old farmer from Ellsworth, Wis., symbolized the spirit of the men who came back to honor D-Day.

Pechacek, of Czech Bohemian stock, was born near Minneapolis and has never lived more than five miles away from his first home. In the 1940s, he took time out from the crops to go help win a war.

On June 6, his job was to fling a grappling hook above the 120-foot-high cliff face and climb straight up into withering gunfire. He was among the first to make it. A lot of others died trying.

He was with the 2nd Ranger Battalion, assigned to take out six 155-mm guns that threatened the invasion fleet from a hardened bunker that naval artillery could not dent.

"It was no big deal at the time," he recalled on the eve of his fresh assault. "When you're 20, nothing bothers you. Hell, we thought the 225 of us could win the whole war."

The guns, in fact, were in a nearby barn. The Germans had not installed them. But the Rangers had little time to fret over the needless sacrifice.

Pechacek's unit pressed on into a 21-day stretch of combat, a trial of nerves that brings a shudder to anyone who has gone to war. For decades afterward, he could not talk about it.

Back with his buddies for a final catharsis, surrounded by two daughters, a son, grandkids and his wife, Elizabeth — 12 people in all — the old Ranger relived his war for a reporter.

From Normandy, he moved on through France and into Germany. He was one of the first to reach the extermination camps at Buchenwald.

Pechacek talked of death and pain and fear as matter-of-factly as if describing a corn blight. With no bravado, he told of death and pain and fear a long way from home. Suddenly, he was sobbing.

His daughters moved in gently, each nuzzling a cheek. He kept on talking, though inaudible for long moments, and soon the steady, detached tone returned. But tears kept streaming down his cheeks.

At his side, two other Pechacek generations weeped along with him.

Romance flourished between U.S. troops, women in England

By Bob Tutt
N.Y. Times Service

A magnificent oak tree that towered in the English town of Ramsbury holds a special place in the memories of the surviving members of the American paratroop battalion stationed there during World War II.

Under its great, spreading limbs, many young GIs met English girlfriends.

"The silhouette of that tree, especially at dusk and dawn, was part of Ramsbury's identity," said Robert R. Webb of Houston, then 19 and supply sergeant for the 3rd Battalion, 506th Parachute Infantry, 101st Airborne Division. "It was a place where guys met girls, and if you were drunk, that was the only thing you could home in on."

Across the United Kingdom, it was a time of romance between British women and many of the 1.5 million Americans massed there in preparation for the Allied invasion of France on D-Day — June 6, 1944.

Veterans who were in Britain say many Americans, especially married men, resisted romantic temptations and immersed themselves in the rigorous training and other preparations for D-Day.

Still, many Yanks found time for other pursuits. There were more than 50,000 Anglo-American marriages during World War II.

During the long D-Day build-up, a shortage of British men, due to casualties or overseas assignments, helped set the stage for the multitude of relationships that blossomed.

Harry H. Crosby, a retired Harvard English professor, served as a navigator in the U.S. 8th Air Force's 100th Bomb Group. In his book on that unit, "A Wing and a Prayer," he succinctly explained the attraction between American men and British women:

'Maybe never in history was there so perfect a fit between the women that men needed and the men that women needed.'
— from 'A Wing and a Prayer' by Harry H. Crosby

"Maybe never in history was there so perfect a fit between the women that men needed and the men that women needed."

Army Warrant Office Don Hawkins, now a retired insurance adjuster in Houston, met his future wife, Dorothy, in her hometown of Winchester, England, in December 1943. A combat veteran who had just arrived in England, Hawkins first encountered his bride-to-be when he chased away a drunken American soldier who was pestering Dorothy and a friend in a bar.

The Hawkinses celebrated their 49th wedding anniversary in March.

Dorothy Hawkins recalled how appealing British women found the Yanks.

Compared to Americans, she said, British men "tended to be rather small. American men seemed much taller and huskier. While British men tended to be more reserved, Americans were more extroverted and came on more strongly."

In her book, "Over Here," Juliette Gardiner cited this observation by a young British man serving in the Home Guard:

"The Yanks were the most joyful thing that ever happened to British womanhood. ... They had everything — money in particular, glamour, boldness, cigarettes, chocolate, nylons, Jeeps."

Radio ruled airwaves on D-Day

By Bob Salsberg
Associated Press

BOSTON — Amid the visual images of television specials and documentaries on the 50th anniversary of D-Day, it's easy to forget that radio — not the infant tube — delivered the news of that fateful day to most Americans.

There were only the staticky dispatches of Edward R. Murrow and other correspondents describing the event in powerful words for people on the homefront who huddled around radios in living rooms, barber shops and other gathering places.

"I remember what a big explosion of stuff we were doing. We were broadcasting day and night," said Carl de Seuze, retired announcer for WBZ Radio in Boston.

De Seuze remembers the commotion in the old WBZ studios that day as word of the invasion came in over wire service Teletypes and other sources.

In his book "Now The News, The Story of Broadcast Journalism," Edward Bliss Jr. wrote about the frenzy of activity in radio newsrooms around the country that followed an Associated Press bulletin, quoting the German News Agency Transocean as saying the Allied invasion had begun.

CBS Radio broke into an early morning music program with the bulletin, cautioning listeners that it had not yet been confirmed by the Allies.

A few hours later, following official confirmation of the landing, Bliss quotes Robert St. John of NBC as telling listeners: "Men and Women of the United States, this is a momentous hour in world history. This is the invasion of Hitler's Europe, the zero hour."

The first eyewitness report, by Wright Bryan of Atlanta's WSB, was broadcast by all the major radio networks. It described Bryan's experience flying aboard a C-47 from which some of the first paratroopers had jumped into France.

Marilyn Matelski, a professor of communications at Boston College who writes frequently about radio, said nearly twice as many people in that era called radio — and not newspapers — their primary source of information.

D-Day vets-Clinton group generation gap obvious

By Maureen Dowd
N.Y. Times News Service

PORTSMOUTH, England — President Clinton and his top White House aides have only read the history that many here have lived through. And as the administration flotilla started across the Channel to re-create the invasion of Normandy, there were signs everywhere that this is not exactly the Lindy Hop, Spam fritter and "Pennsylvania 6-5000" crowd.

In a fashion statement that it is hard to imagine Brent Scowcroft making, Calvin Mitchell III, a National Security Council official on the D-Day memorial tour, wore a gold hoop in his left ear.

At 32, Dee Dee Myers, the White House press secretary, is so young that her father was a Navy flier not in World War II but in Vietnam.

Andrew Friendly, the president's 25-year-old personal aide, had trouble getting in to do the advance work on a restaurant in the Eiffel Tower where Clinton was considering dining with his ambassador, Pamela Harriman, because the managers were scandalise that he was not wearing a tie.

Chad Griffin, 20, a communications official, blazed Sunday in neckwear that no Republican would be caught wearing: a Save the Children tie.

Chance photograph reveals long-lost soldier's fate

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — It took nearly 50 years, a random photograph and a wild series of coincidences for the family of Pfc. Andrew Relosky to learn that he died on D-Day, storming the beaches of Normandy.

For decades, the family knew only that the 25-year-old died in World War II. No one knew where, when or how.

Until Albert Menno, a Buffalo doctor and amateur photographer, visited France in the fall of 1992, and the coincidences began.

The picture was one of 600 Menno took on vacation and one of three he chose for a physicians' photo show about a year ago at Sisters Hospital. By chance, a nurse glanced at the photo — one of 75 at the show — and recognized the name, she knew a part-time nurse at Sisters named Julie Relosky.

The nurse suggested that Mrs. Relosky take a look. Mrs. Relosky called her husband's mother in Pittsburgh. They discovered that Andrew Relosky was the mother's brother.

"The odds against this are immense," Menno said. "I happened to be there. I happened to take a picture of that grave site. That picture happened to be chosen for the show. That happened to be the most readable marker."

On the 50th anniversary of the Normandy invasion, the Relosky family remains grateful that the mystery is solved: Andrew Relosky was killed on the bloodiest beach during the Allies' assault that started the fall of Nazi Germany.

"It puts to rest any question of what finally happened to him," said Frank Relosky, Andrew Relosky's nephew. "We know he is buried over there with the rest of his buddies. It closed the chapter on it."

TV's diversity marks 50th

NEW YORK (AP) — Wherever you tune in television for the next few days, you'll see the 50th anniversary of the D-Day invasion of Normandy. Here are some highlights you might want to look for:

Today, June 6:

NBC News' "Nightside" offers live coverage of the U.S. Ranger assault ceremony at Pointe-du-Hoc 1:30-2:30 a.m. CDT, followed by a joint French-U.S. ceremony at Utah Beach, with presidents Clinton and Mitterrand expected.

At 6 a.m. CDT, the Big Three networks have scheduled special, five-hour editions of their morning shows, including coverage of official ceremonies at Omaha Beach, with Clinton, Mitterrand and Queen Elizabeth II expected to attend.

Clinton's speech from the American Cemetery overlooking Omaha Beach in Colleville, France, is scheduled for 10 a.m. CDT.

ABC's "Good Morning America" features evening news anchor Peter Jennings reporting. "CBS This Morning" anchor Harry Smith and correspondents Bill Plante and Tom Fenton will be joined by former anchor Walter Cronkite, who covered the invasion for United Press.

NBC News' Brokaw, Gumbel and Katie Couric anchor their network's coverage.

A special edition of CNN's "Larry King Live" originates from the American Cemetery at Colleville at noon CDT, with interviews of survivors and heroes of the invasion, including Mabel Carney Stover.

Health-care legislation faces critical decisions in next few weeks

■ Five major committees push to finish work on reform by July 4.

By Christopher Connell
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The defection of a prominent, big-state Democratic senator from President Clinton's health bill was just one more kick at a plan that stood no chance of being enacted as presented.

The next four weeks may well determine whether Congress passes any health bill at all this year, or whether incumbents like Sen. Dianne Feinstein will have to face the voters having failed at the task.

None of the five major committees was able to finish its work by the Democratic leaders' informal Memorial Day deadline, and now they are all shooting for the Fourth of July.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., the pacesetter, is determined to push his Clinton-lite bill through the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee this Thursday — by 6 p.m., no less. He would keep the requirement that most businesses help pay for their workers' coverage.

The House Ways and Means Committee resumes work Thursday under a new acting chairman, Sam Gibbons, D-Fla., in the wake of the indictment of Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill. Gibbons will work from a subcommittee blueprint to open Medicare up to the uninsured and low-wage workers.

The staff of the Senate Finance Committee, which many lawmakers expect to serve as the engine of compromise, has spent the long Memorial Day break drafting a list of proposals that Democratic and Republican senators can agree on and options for dealing with their differences.

The Finance Committee will resume its informal, closed-door talks Wednesday, with a vote at least two weeks away. Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., told a convention of New York Democrats in Buffalo on Wednesday, "In this Congress, my mission is clear: Get the president his bill."

The liberal House Education and Labor panel will likely see its labor-management subcommittee, which has already voted for a version of the Clinton plan, put its stamp of approval as well Thursday on a Canadian-style, government-financed health system for all.

The House Energy and Commerce Committee is still one vote short of the 20 Democratic votes that its chairman, Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., is seeking for a compromise that spares the smallest businesses from Clinton's employer mandate.

White House Deputy Chief of Staff Harold Ickes said the push for guaranteed private insurance to all Americans is "on target," although he conceded, "The Clinton plan as we know it took a real beating."

Feinstein, D-Calif., does not sit on the key committees, and has not played a prominent role in the health reform debate. A strong favorite for re-election, she reportedly was under pressure from small businesses to disavow the White House prescription.

A week after quietly withdrawing her name from Clinton's Health Security Act, she issued a statement that said only: "I stand with the president on the need for health-care reform but it is now clear his bill will be substantially reworked in both the Senate and the House and I want to be able to get behind those specific proposals that will best serve the people of California."

Ewing slams Knicks to finals

■ Patrick Ewing follows a John Starks miss with seconds to play to lift New York to an NBA Finals date with Houston.

By Bill Barnard
AP Basketball Writer

NEW YORK — Patrick Ewing grabbed the ball just inches off the rim and with one thunderous dunk sent the New York Knicks to the NBA Finals.

Ewing's follow of John Stark's miss with 26 seconds to play, with the Knicks losing by a point, lifted New York to a 94-90 victory over the Indiana Pacers in Game 7 of the Eastern Conference Finals.

Next for Ewing and the Knicks are the Houston Rockets as New York makes its first trip to the finals since winning it all in 1973.

And make no mistake, winning the title is Patrick Ewing's mission — the job he was brought to New York to do when selected as the first pick in the 1985 draft.

The 7-foot center finished with 24 points, 22 rebounds, 11 on the offensive glass, five blocks and seven assists. He was at his best after he picked up his fourth foul with 4:39 left in the third period and the Knicks trailing by 12 points.

Ewing stayed in the game and that might be the only reason the Knicks stayed in the NBA playoffs.

"Patrick stepped up big time," Starks said. "He wanted this and he deserved it. The big fella wasn't going to let us lose."

New York's 4-3 series victory was built on Ewing's sheer force of will. The Knicks had 28 offensive rebounds — two short of the NBA playoff record and 19

Steers face Cubs

Big Spring's baseball team makes an appearance in the state tournament in Austin Thursday for the second time in two years.

And for the second time in two years the Steers have been paired against one of the premier high school baseball programs in the state. Big Spring faces No. 1 seed Brenham (32-3) Thursday at noon at Austin's Disch-Falk Field in the first Class 4A state semifinal. The other 4A semifinal game pits Carthage (28-5) against Belton (33-6) at 2:30 p.m. also at Disch-Falk. The championship game is set for 4:30 Friday.

In 1992 Big Spring lost to Robstown 8-4 in a state semifinal. The next day the Cottonpickers won their second straight state title.

Brenham has not been to the state tournament since 1989, but the Cubs have won six state titles, including three in a row from '86-'88.

The Steers (26-4) are the fourth seed in the tournament. They qualified for Thursday's play with 5-0 and 9-4 wins over Fort Worth Brewer in the Region I final series Friday and Saturday in Abilene.

Big Spring coach Bobby Doe said the Steers have a different attitude about the state finals this year.

"I think (outfielder) Todd Parrish made the statement (Saturday)," Doe said. "We were satisfied in '92 to get there, but we want to win it this time. And it looks like we get a real tough (team) right off the bat."

Rangers sign catcher Brown

BOSTON — The Texas Rangers on Sunday signed catcher Kevin L. Brown, who was their top selection in this past week's draft.

Brown, 21, who played at Southern Indiana and was the 56th player selected, will be assigned to Hudson Valley of the New York Penn League.

He batted .381 with 13 home runs and 50 RBI in 44 games at Southern Indiana this past season and was selected the Great Lakes Valley Conference Player of the year.

In three seasons, he batted .396 with 27 homers and 145 RBI.

It was the first time ever the Rangers had selected a catcher with their first pick.

Bad dreams

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — There will be no baseball Dream Team at the Atlanta Olympics.

The International Baseball Association on Sunday narrowly rejected a proposal that would have allowed professional baseball players to represent their countries in official IBA events, including the Olympics.

PARIS — Mary Pierce seemed to have everything going for her: momentum, homecourt advantage and a new happy-go-lucky attitude.

But on a day Spain celebrated a historic double at Roland Garros, Pierce was soundly beaten 6-4, 6-4 on Sunday by Arantxa Sanchez Vicario in the final of the French Open.

Missions clobber Angels

■ San Antonio uses a 22-hit attack to down Midland 13-6.

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

The San Antonio Missions didn't take their customary batting practice Sunday afternoon.

So they took it Sunday night.

The Missions erupted for 13 runs on 22 hits to defeat the Midland Angels 13-6 at Christensen Stadium Sunday evening in front of 3,655.

San Antonio, which has won three of its last four games, chalked up the most hits by a Missions team since 1991 as all but one San Antonio player had a multiple hit game.

Both teams came out swinging on Sunday as starting pitchers Korey Keling and Kevin Pincavitch could not last past the fifth inning.

Keling, a Texas League all-star pick for the upcoming Tex-Mex All-Star Series in San Antonio June 12-13, (6-3) had his worst outing of the season. He gave up seven runs, including three home runs, on 11 hits — less than a week after striking out 10 Missions in 7⅓ innings on Monday in a 7-3 win.

"Keling gave it to us pretty good earlier this week so we knew we had to come out early," said designated hitter Don Barbara who went 3-for-5 with four RBI. "(Seeing him a second time in the same series) you know what he has. I had never seen him throw until this week, but after watching him earlier you know what he has."

Barbara, who played on the 1991 Midland team that won the Texas League Western Division the second half of the season, was sent down to San Antonio from Albuquerque during first baseman Jay Kirkpatrick's stay on the disabled list. In the third, he hit his first double-A home run since playing for

COM takes WT Invite, hits many TAGS marks

■ City of Midland coaches happy with individual times as several swimmers qualify for state meet.

By Mike Butts
Staff Writer

In describing her own performance, ten-year old Shanna Halsell best summed up how the City of Midland swim team swam in the Brown and Wagner West Texas Invitational.

"I think I did wonderful," said Halsell.

Halsell and the rest of COM swam "wonderful" enough to easily win the meet, as expected, and also drop more times than expected in the meet that ended Sunday at Midland's Doug Russell Pool.

"We got a lot of our best times, which is what we're looking for," COM coach Brad Swendig said.

COM, with many times the swimmers of any of the other teams, won the meet by 1,034 points. But the best results were the number of Texas Age Group Swimmers state meet qualifying times that were met.

"School starts so much earlier this year that the (summer) season's shorter, so this (meet) really is critical," Swendig said. "If they get some times to drop in order to qualify, the better to do it now."

And many COM swimmers did, with most swimming their lifetime best, Swendig said.

Jimmy Johnson said recently, "...Jerry Jones at that time was a better friend to me than he had ever been. And with a $2 million check in my pocket, he was."

Jimmy takes it easy in Margaritaville

■ Jimmy Johnson removes his Super Bowl ring for more relaxing pursuits, like scuba diving in Florida.

Associated Press

DALLAS — Yes, Jimmy Johnson got a $2 million going-away present from Dallas Cowboys owner Jerry Jones.

Yes, Johnson would have liked to coach one more year.

Yes, he wonders when Jones first approached Barry Switzer about getting Johnson's old job as coach of the Dallas Cowboys.

And, no, he did not tell Jones what a great job the Cowboys did in their first draft without the coach who led them to consecutive Super Bowl titles.

Those were just some of the many things written and said about Johnson since his abrupt departure from the Cowboys on March 29.

Johnson confirmed all of those stories and more in a recent interview at his Tavernier, Fla., home with The Dallas Morning News that was published Sunday.

Johnson has been seemingly everywhere in the past two months, mostly at news conferences pitching his latest ventures: a local television show, a segment on a cable television program and his NFL analyst job on Fox.

He's also part owner in a new Dallas restaurant and has been seen popping out of a suitcase on a television commercial for a hotel chain.

Canseco continues Fenway heyday in sweep

Associated Press

BOSTON — Jose Canseco capped an outstanding weekend with his fourth home run in three days, a three-run shot in the 10th inning, giving the Texas Rangers a 10-7 victory and a sweep of the Boston Red Sox.

■ AL Roundup

Canseco went 10-for-13, scored 10 runs and had 10 RBIs as the Rangers collected 45 hits and outscored Boston 33-13 for their first sweep in Fenway Park since April 17-19, 1984.

Ivan Rodriguez walked to open the 10th against Jeff Russell (0-3) but was forced at second on Este Beltre's attempted sacrifice. One out later, Oddibe McDowell walked, and Canseco lofted a high drive into the screen in left-center for his 15th homer.

Jay Howell (3-1) closed out a Red Sox threat in the ninth and pitched the 10th for the win.

The Red Sox scored three runs in the eighth and tied it 7-7 in the ninth on Wes Chamberlain's two-run homer off Cris Carpenter. It was Chamberalin's first homer in the American League since coming to the Red Sox in a May 31 trade with Philadelphia.

Will Clark went 3-for-4 and drove in four runs for Texas. Clark went 9-for-15 with eight RBIs in the series.

Starter Kevin Brown, who was 1-4 with 7.01 ERA in his six prior career starts against the Red Sox, allowed seven hits and four runs, three earned, in 7 1-3 innings.

Royals 3, Yankees 1

NEW YORK — Kevin Appier combined with two relievers on a seven-hitter and Kansas City scored three runs in the first inning for a victory and a sweep of the Yankees.

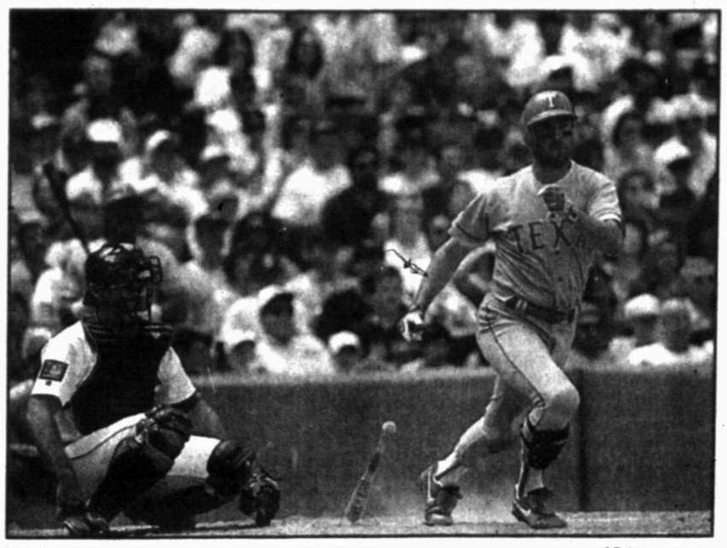
Appier (5-5) walked two and struck out seven in 7 2-3 innings before being relieved by Mike Magnante. Rusty Meacham pitched the ninth for his second save.

The Royals three-game sweep was their first in New York since July 15-17, 1978.

Paul O'Neill drove in the Yankees lone run with a single in the sixth.

Jim Abbott (6-4) threw 40 pitches in a first inning in which the Royals collected five of their eight hits and scored three times.

O'Neill singled twice in four at bats to raise his major league-leading average to .430.



AP Laserphoto

Texas' Will Clark drives in three runs with a triple as Boston catcher Rich Roland looks on. The Rangers swept a three-game series from the Red Sox at Fenway Park.

Tigers 5, Twins 3

DETROIT — Tony Phillips hit two homers and Mike Moore pitched a six-hitter, leading Detroit to a victory over Minnesota.

Phillips had his first career two-homer game, and Kirk Gibson also homered for the Tigers, who were routed 21-7 by the Twins on Saturday.

Moore (6-4) allowed three runs in second complete game this season. He walked two and struck out none.

Chuck Knoblauch hit two homers for the Twins.

Scott Erickson (5-5) allowed just six hits in seven-plus innings, but three were solo homers. He left with the score tied at 3 after Phillips led off the eighth with a homer and Lou Whitaker walked.

Orioles 8, White Sox 5

BALTIMORE — Cal Ripken's RBI single brought in the go-ahead run in Baltimore's four-run seventh inning as the Orioles defeated Chicago.

Leo Gomez, Rafael Palmeiro and Harold Baines homered for the Orioles off starter Alex Fernandez as Baltimore won for just the second time in seven games.

The loss ended Chicago's three-game winning streak.

Julio Franco had two RBIs for the White Sox and now has 58 this season. Toronto's Joe Carter entered Sunday's action leading the majors with 57.

Angels 3, Brewers 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Joe Magrane pitched a four-hitter, helping California snap a six-game losing streak with a victory over Milwaukee.

Magrane (2-2) who underwent elbow surgery in February and had averaged less than five innings in his first five starts, managed to survive six walks by using off-speed pitches to keep the Brewers off-balance.

Indians 8, Athletics 1

OAKLAND, Calif. — Albert Belle and Eddie Murray combined to drive in seven runs and Cleveland extended its winning streak to eight games with a win against Oakland.

It was the 11th time this season the A's were swept in a series. They dropped to a major-league worst 16-39 and are on pace to lose 117 games.

Charles Nagy (5-3) allowed one run and 10 hits in eight innings.

Blue Jays 5, Mariners 4

SEATTLE — Devon White and Paul Molitor hit homers in the first inning to help Dave Stewart beat Seattle for the 20th time in his career.

The Blue Jays took a 3-0 lead on the game's first eight pitches by Dave Fleming (3-8). Toronto, which took two of three from the Mariners, won their first road series this season.

White, who went 4-for-5, hit his eighth homer on Fleming's second pitch. After a Roberto Alomar single, Molitor hit his seventh homer.

JOHNSON: Jimmy loose

(From 1C)

But what he's been doing most on his self-imposed vacation/retirement is rest, relax and enjoy the water rushing under his "Three Rings" boat as he splashes through the Florida Keys.

"This really isn't a bad way to live," says Johnson. "I had it pretty well set in my mind that I was going to leave the Cowboys, I just thought it would be after one more season."

Once considered incredibly high-strung, Johnson is now the epitome of laid back. He's even going out of his way to be nice to sportswriters, an act he once considered akin to heresy.

"As long as we were playing football games, I was totally into it," Johnson said. "But Dallas was gradually becoming a situation I didn't enjoy being in. I don't know that I needed a year away from football. I needed a year away from the Cowboys and from Jerry Jones."

Jones: the man once publicly painted as Johnson's best friend since college who turned out to be the source of discontent that drove the coach from a dream come true.

But Jones apparently drove Johnson out in style, canceling the five years remaining on his initial 10-year contract and throwing in a hefty bonus. That payment was why they looked so chummy when Johnson said he was leaving.

"I was very appreciative that Jerry let me out of my contract without restrictions and gave me a $2 million check," Johnson said.

"If you recall what I said, it was that Jerry Jones at that time was a better friend to me than he had ever been. And with a $2 million check in my pocket, he was."

Johnson is not endorsing or denouncing Switzer. "With Barry, time will tell. What he needs to do this first year is stay the hell out of the way and not screw it up," Johnson said.

But Johnson is still slightly curious about when Switzer was asked to become the third coach in team history.

"I still have some questions about how it came about, about why Jerry and Barry couldn't get their stories straight on when they first talked, but I really don't care," Johnson said.

Free agency already has forced a change in the Cowboys since Johnson left, the biggest difference being depth. That's the biggest challenge Johnson sees for Dallas as it seeks an unprecedented third-straight Super Bowl title.

"Initially, they will start off as the most talented team," Johnson said. "I think by mid-season when backup players have to start playing starting roles, you may see some changes. ... You'll really have to watch and see if they're still the most talented team at the end of the year."

The Cowboys tried loading up on some spots through the draft, especially with top pick Shante Carver. After the draft, Jones said Johnson praised the selection, a conversation Johnson disputes.

"He called to ask about a trade I had made for Elvis Patterson, and the next thing I know he says I loved the Shante Carver pick," Johnson said. "I don't know anything about Shante Carver.

"All I said was it looks like you got a pass rusher because that's what he did at Arizona State. I have no idea if he can play."

Johnson, who has stopped wearing his Super Bowl ring partly because it interferes with his snorkeling and fishing, said he could have a job coaching this season if he wants it, but he'd rather wait.

For now, he's excited about the open water and wide-open future.

"The Cowboys are a team I used to coach," he said, "along with nine or 10 others."

Blauser, Braves rally late, clip Dodgers 6-5

■ NL Roundup

ATLANTA — Jeff Blauser's two-out, two-run double capped a four-run rally in the eighth inning Sunday and the Atlanta Braves beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 6-5 for their sixth straight win.

The Dodgers were swept in three-game series and have lost four in a row overall. Atlanta is 6-0 against Los Angeles this season and 18-1 against NL West opponents.

The Braves trailed 5-2 when David Justice opened the eighth by drawing a walk from Al Osuna. Darren Dreifort (0-4) relieved and walked Terry Pendleton and gave up a single to Javier Lopez, loading the bases.

Mark Wohlers (5-0) earned the victory with 1 2-3 innings of scoreless relief. He retired Tim Wallach on a fly ball to the warning track in right field with two runners on for the last out.

Mike Piazza homered and drove in four runs for the Dodgers. He had an RBI grounder in the first and a three-run homer, his 11th, in the third off Steve Avery.

Astros 4, Phillies 2

HOUSTON — Darryl Kile allowed five hits in eight innings and Houston defeated Philadelphia.

Kile (4-2) walked Lenny Dykstra to start the game, then gave up consecutive singles to Mario Duncan, Milt Thompson and Darren Daulton that put Philadelphia ahead 2-0.

Kile was helped by a relay that cut down Thompson, and he retired the next two batters to end the first inning. Kile did not allow another run, setting down 10 straight at one point, and struck out two and walked three.

John Hudek got three outs for his eighth save.

Giants 10, Cardinals 3

ST. LOUIS — Mark Portugal allowed five hits in eight innings and had his first career three-hit game as San Francisco broke out of a prolonged slump with a victory over St. Louis.

Matt Williams hit his 20th homer and had three RBIs as the Giants avoided a three-game sweep and ended a five-game losing streak attributed mostly to offensive failures.

The Giants entered the game with a major-league low .239 average and scored only two runs in the first two games of the series. They took out their frustrations on Rick Sutcliffe with six runs in the first inning, getting a season-high 17 hits and scoring more than three runs for the first time in eight games.

Barry Bonds, Dave Martinez and Darren Lewis each had three hits. Lewis drove in two runs.

Pirates 4, Rockies 3

DENVER — Kevin Young's second game-winning triple in two days drove in in the decisive run in the ninth inning as Pittsburgh edged Colorado.

The Pirates, posting back-to-back victories for the first time since May 8-9, got to reliever Marcus Moore (0-1) in the ninth. Jay Bell led off with a single, and Young lofted a fly ball into short left-center field. Neither of the Rockies' diving outfielders could make the play, and Bell scored with Young winding up at third.

Reds 9, Mets 6

CINCINNATI — Deion Sanders' daring baserunning tied it with two outs in the ninth inning, then Jerome Walton hit a three-run homer in the 10th that lifted Cincinnati over New York.

The Reds trailed 6-4 in the ninth when Brian Dorsett singled with two outs off John Franco. Sanders followed with a hard bouncer that deflected off shortstop Jose Vizcaino's glove, and Sanders hustled to second for a double.

Chicago's Shuwon Dunston is forced out at second by Montreal's Juan Bell (23) as part of a double play by the Expos.

Expos 10, Cubs 5, 13 innings

CHICAGO — Pinch-hitter Freddie Benavides tripled home the go-ahead run in the 13th inning and Sean Berry had a three-run homer as Montreal beat Chicago.

Montreal won its fourth straight game. The Cubs tied the game at four with a run in the ninth, and both teams left the bases loaded in the 10th.

Randy Milligan led off the Montreal 13th with a double against Dave Otto (0-1) and scored on Benavides' triple for a 5-4 lead. One out later, Mike Lansing hit an RBI double.

Gil Heredia (1-2) pitched three scoreless innings. Tim Scott gave up a run in the 10th on Mark Parent's double.

Marlins 10, Padres 5

MIAMI — Jerry Browne's two-run double and Benito Santiago's three-run home run in the seventh inning helped Florida beat San Diego, giving the Marlins a three-game sweep of the Padres.

Dave Magadan walked leading off the seventh and Chuck Carr reached when Pedro Martinez threw wide to first after fielding Carr's sacrifice bunt. Browne then lined a 2-0 pitch down the left-field line for a two-run double.

After Jeff Conine was walked intentionally, Santiago hit his third home run to cap the five-run inning.

Yorkis Perez (2-0) pitched 1 1-3 innings to win for the second day in a row and A.J.

KNICKS: Ewing tough

(From 1C)

more than they had in the two previous games combined — and they outrebounded the Pacers 51-29.

"I don't think I've ever seen anyone play a better game at the moment of truth," coach Pat Riley said.

"We were taking a lot of shots from the perimeter," Ewing said. "I told coach to run my plays. I said if we lose, I'm going to be the blame anyway. Let it be in my hands."

Pacers coach Larry Brown, whose team enjoyed a season of startling success with playoff upsets of Orlando and Atlanta, said Ewing delivered, as only an elite player can.

"Everybody in the league understands what Patrick is all about," Brown said. "He stepped up tonight and that was the difference. As a coach I'm in awe of him for what he's done."

Starks scored 17 points and Derek Harper had 16 for the Knicks. Reggie Miller, the hero of Indiana's Game 5 victory with 25 fourth-quarter points, finished with 25 points while Byron Scott had 17 on 6-for-7 shooting in just 13 minutes.

Miller was unconsolable in the locker room, barely able to speak.

"They killed us the whole game on the offensive boards," he said. "We gave it our best."

The Knicks sealed the victory following Miller's flagrant foul on Starks with 3.5 seconds left. That gave Starks two free throws and possession to New York. Starks made one shot, but the Pacers had to foul him again, and he made both this time.

"It's the conference finals and you can't call that," Miller said.

Said Referee Mike Mathis: "The definition of a flagrant foul is one that is excessive and unnecessary. That's what the foul was."

The Knicks, while improving their postseason record at Madison Square Garden to 9-1, increased to 19 the number of consecutive games won by the home team in seventh games of NBA playoff series. The last road team to win a Game 7 was Philadelphia, which won at Boston in the 1982 Eastern Conference finals.

The Knicks will face a Rockets team that made the NBA Finals in 1981 and 1986, but lost to Boston in six games both times. The series begins Wednesday night at Houston.

By making the finals for the first time since 1973, when they won the second of two NBA championships, the Knicks gave Riley a chance for his fifth title after capturing four with the Los Angeles Lakers.

The Knicks, holding Indiana to 28 percent shooting in the third quarter, rallied after trailing by 12 late in the period.

Derrick McKey's 3-pointer that was released with one second left on the shot clock gave Indiana a 74-69 lead with 10:38 remaining. A layup by Mason, a 3-pointer by Harper and a layup by Harper after a court-length pass by Ewing gave New York a 76-74 edge.

ANGELS: Missions get 22 hits against Midland

(From 1C)

Midland — a two-run shot — to give the Missions a 3-1 lead.

"It was one of those nights where check swings and everything were falling and there's nothing you can do about that," said Midland manager Mario Mendoza. "Keling got up in his zone tonight and got hurt. When he's down he's very effective."

San Antonio hit three home runs on the night while Midland's Mark Sweeney ended a power outage of sorts for the Angels in the third with a grand slam to give the Angels a 4-3 lead. Sweeney's home run was the first by an Angel since Luis Raven was sent to triple-A Vancouver May 30.

San Antonio reliever Carlos Thomas picked up the win after his longest relief appearance of the season, shutting down the Angels to one hit over 3⅓ innings.

ANGEL NOTES: Former Midland Angel Mark Dalesandro has been called up to Anaheim to replace Eduardo Perez who was sent to Vancouver. Former Angel Damion Easley was placed on the Angels' 15-day disabled list retroactive to May 30... Second baseman J.D. Ramirez went 1-for-3 on the night to extend his hitting streak to 20 of the past 22 games... The Angels front office announced that the start time for the Midland-El Paso games this week would begin at 6 p.m. beginning Tuesday. Tonight's game will be at its usual 7 p.m. start.

Georgia Tech routs Florida State in 2nd round

■ College World Series

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Jason Varitek's fourth RBI of the game opened Georgia Tech's eight-run 10th inning and the Yellow Jackets beat Florida State 12-4 Sunday in the second round of the College World Series.

The inning was capped by Matt Saier's grand slam and it lifted Georgia Tech (49-16) to its second victory in its first CWS appearance.

Varitek, Baseball America's player of the year, hit a three-run homer in the fourth inning to give the Yellow Jackets a 4-1 lead.

Georgia Tech next plays Wednesday night against a survivor from the losers' bracket.

Florida State (53-21) falls into the losers' bracket and on Tuesday will play the winner of Sunday night's Fullerton State-Louisiana State elimination game.

The Seminoles got within 4-3 in the fifth on a two-run error by second baseman Scott McIntyre as he let Doug Mientkiewicz's bases-loaded grounder go through his legs.

Fullerton St. 20, Louisiana St. 6

OMAHA, Neb. — Bret Hemphill and Sal Mancuso drove in two runs each in Fullerton State's record-tying 11-run first inning as the Titans eliminated defending College World Series champion Louisiana State 20-6.

Fullerton State sent 17 batters to the plate in the bottom of the first with Jeff Ferguson, Mark Kotsay and Hemphill each scoring twice.

LSU starter Brett Laxton (4-5) threw a three-hit shutout with a championship-game record 16 strikeouts in last year's title game against Wichita State. On Sunday, he managed to get only one out, allowing four hits, 10 runs, four earned, and four walks.

LSU (46-20) is the first team out of the double-elimination tournament.

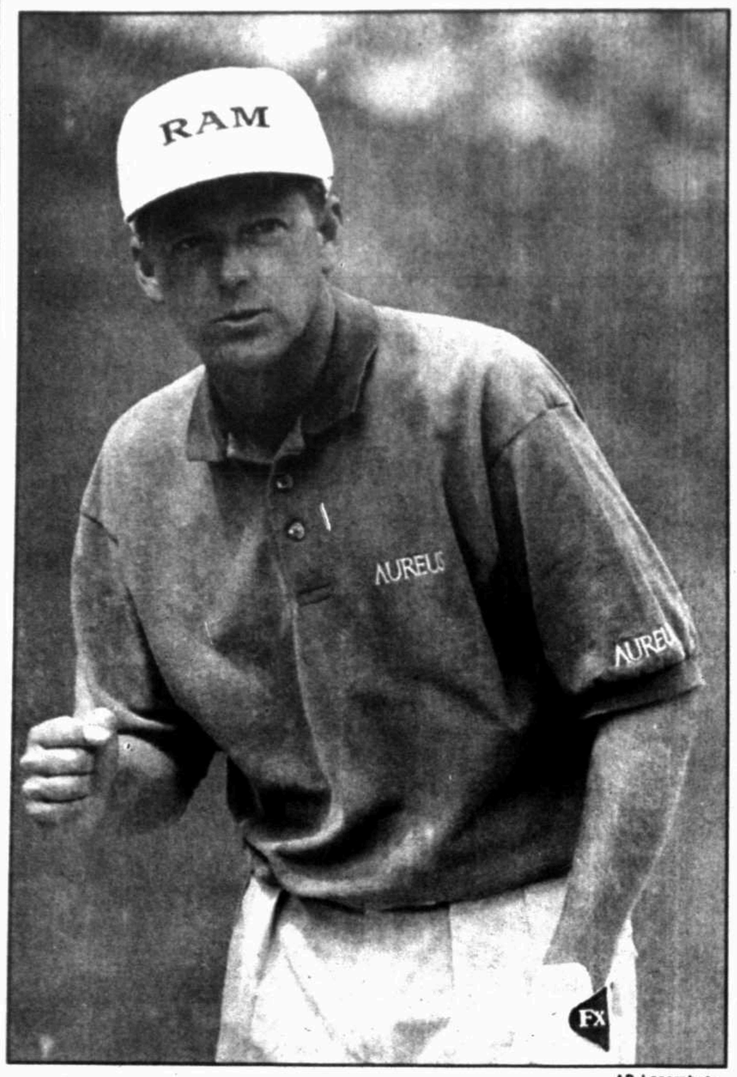
Fort Worth's Brooks takes title



AP Laserphoto

Fort Worth's Mark Brooks took advantage of Bobby Wadkins' lost ball to win his first tournament since 1991.

By David Ginsburg
AP Sports Writer

POTOMAC, Md. — Forget the other 71 holes. The Kemper Open was decided on the sixth hole of the final round, when Bobby Wadkins lost his ball — and a chance to win his first tournament in 20 years on the PGA Tour.

■ PGA Kemper Open

Mark Brooks won the Kemper with a 72-hole total of 271, closing out the tournament with a 2-under-par 69 that gave him a three-stroke victory over Wadkins and D.A. Weibring.

Wadkins led Brooks by one stroke after five holes, but his triple-bogey on No. 6 dropped him two shots behind. Brooks never lost the lead, cruising to his fourth career victory and first since 1991.

"After the sixth hole I didn't focus on Bobby anymore," Brooks said. "Then it was just a matter of staying ahead."

Wadkins started the day with a two-shot lead over Brooks, but the margin was halved when Wadkins' 7-foot par putt on No. 2 lipped out. Both went par-birdie-par before heading to the pivotal 520-yard, par-5 6th.

Brooks put his second shot into a creek on the left side of the green. Wadkins, refusing to lay up on his shot from the fairway, attempted to reach the green from a tough angle and clipped a tree. His ball caromed into the woods to the right of the green and was never found by an extensive search party that included dozens of people from the gallery.

"It was an ugly shot, but I didn't get the best break. There were 500 people looking for it," Wadkins said. "I can pull that shot off 70 percent of the time. I've hit a whole lot worse than that and found them."

Wadkins took a one-stroke penalty and shot again from the same spot. He again hit the same tree, and this time the ball landed in a bunker. Wadkins barely escaped the sand, hitting onto a despression outside the green.

He chipped out, then two-putted for a disastrous 8.

"An 8 never entered my mind," he said. "Maybe I should go to Las Vegas tonight and play 8."

Brooks, meanwhile, took his stroke penalty for hitting in the water and salvaged par with a 12-foot putt.

"That was the biggest putt of the day, no question," he said.

Brooks had a steady round of 16 pars and two birdies to finish at 13 under. The $234,000 top prize was his biggest payday in 11 years on the tour.

Wadkins shot a 74 and Weibring had a 68. Lee Janzen shot a 66 for a 275, tied with Phil Mickelson, who had a 69.

Dent overpowers back nine for win

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Jim Dent added some deft putting to his long driving and overpowered the back nine Sunday on the way to a two-stroke victory at the Bruno's Memorial Classic.

■ Bruno's

Dent birdied Nos. 10, 11, 13, 15 and 16 for a stunning 31 over the final nine holes, finishing with a 5-under-par 67 and a 15-under 201 total. Second-round leader Bob Charles could muster only one birdie down the stretch to go with eight pars and came up short with a 71, tying for second at 203 with Larry Gilbert and Kermit Zarley.

Charles had 66s in the first two rounds at the Greystone Golf Club and he continued his steady play, but Dent was spectacular in rallying for his first PGA Senior Tour victory in nearly two years.

Charles had a chance to lengthen his lead when Dent bogeyed Nos. 1 and 4, but the New Zealander failed to capitalize with a rare bogey of his own at 2.

Dent, who never won on the regular PGA Tour, received $150,000 for winning his eighth victory among the 50-and-over group — the first since the Newport Cup in July 1992. Charles finished as the Bruno's runner-up for the second year in a row.

The 6-foot-3, 224-pound Dent has always been one of the longest drivers on the tour but it was his putting that pushed him to the front Sunday. He made a 20-footer at 10, a 10-footer on 13, another 20-footer on 15 and an 11-footer at 16.

Charles, who plays a conservative, precise game that relies on wedge shots and putting to make up his deficiency with the driver, missed a 2½-foot birdie putt on 18 Saturday and never seemed to recover. His round was steady — one bogey, one birdie, the rest pars — but he kept missing the critical putts that Dent was making.

Gilbert, a former club pro who won his first tour event at the Dallas Reunion Pro-Am in April, entered the final round at 11 under, one shot off Charles' pace, and briefly surged into the lead with a birdie on 2. A double-bogey at 4 ended his run.

Gilbert did rebound for a spectacular eagle on 18, holing an 8-iron from 125 yards to move into a tie with Charles and Zarley, who was never in serious contention for the lead but made a big move with birdies on four of the last six holes.

Bob Murphy, the defending champion, appeared to be charging before his putter let him down. He missed short birdie attempts on 14 and 15 and settled for a 9-under 207.

Former amateur champion Jay Sigel moved to the front briefly with birdies on three of the first five holes, but he seemed to unravel after his group was warned for slow play. He bogeyed 6 and 7 and had a devastating double-bogey at No. 8 before rallying to finish at 10 under.

Now Omaha Beach is a golf course

■ Once a bloody battlefield, Omaha Beach will soon host a European PGA event — the D-Day Seniors Open.

By Dave Anderson
N.Y. Times News Service

On a short pier in Port-en-Bessin, France, on a soft summer afternoon, rock music was thumping in a cabaret. Voices sang and laughed. The beach itself was empty and silent.

Above the craggy cliffs of Normandy, beyond the sixth green of the sea nine at the Omaha Beach Golf Club, gray steps dropped into what seemed to be a narrow ditch in the grass and wild flowers.

Suddenly that ditch expanded into an abandoned Nazi bunker, its concrete cool and clammy, with the same spooky view of the English Channel that it had 50 years ago Monday when D-Day dawned.

But now Omaha Beach is a golf course.

Every year thousands of duffers, including many returning American veterans, play the three nines of the hilly farmland course that opened in 1986. This week a European PGA event, the D-Day Seniors Open, will be staged there.

Touring pros will be putting on the sixth green near that abandoned concrete bunker above the sand that stretches across the Normandy beach where the Allies landed on June 6, 1944.

"The officers and men of the 1st U.S. Infantry Division," proclaims the "1" memorial on the slope above the tidal pools in the sand at the western end of Omaha Beach, "who were killed in this period (6 June 1944-24 July 1944) while fighting for the liberty of the world."

In small worn and weathered white lettering, the names of the dead, from Acosta to Zukowski, are listed on the marble memorial. In several neat grassy cemeteries nearby, long rows of white crosses and Jewish stars mourn the total of 117,153 soldiers buried there: 39,187 members of the Allied forces (including 13,796 Americans) and 77,966 Germans.

In 1944 the St. Louis Browns would win their only American League pennant but lose a trolley-car World Series to the Cardinals. The Giants would lose pro football's championship game to the Green Bay Packers, 14-7. Maurice Richard had led the Montreal Canadiens to the Stanley Cup in April but the National Basketball Association had yet to be formed.

Of all the American athletes in service who were known then or in later years, not many were involved in the D-Day invasion.

Ben Schwartzwalder, soon to be the Syracuse football coach but then a major in the 82nd Airborne division, parachuted into France several miles away from his target. For a week he and his troops hid from the Nazis before being reunited with the Allied forces.

"I never thought," an officer named Matthew Ridgeway would tell Schwartzwalder later, "I'd see you alive."

In a 36-foot LCSS rocket boat a few hundred yards off Omaha Beach, 19-year-old Navy Seaman 1st Class Lawrence Berra, known only to his St. Louis pals as Yogi, peered at the Nazi bunkers and searched the sky for Nazi planes. The year before he had batted .253 with seven homers in the Class B Piedmont League for the Norfolk (Va.) Tars of the Yankee farm system.

"We went out from England the day before," he recalled, "but they called it off. Bad weather. June 6 we had to go. The tide was about to change."

In the Navy, LCSS stood for Landing Craft, Support Small, but its five sailors and their commanding officer, Ensign Holmes, had another name for it.

"To us it was Landing Craft, Suicide Squad," Berra said. "We went in before the Army. We fired our rockets, a five-inch shell. Then the Army hit the beach. The water was rough. When the shooting started, it looked like Fourth of July fireworks. I can still hear Ensign Holmes yelling, 'Get your head in.'"

While dead bodies floated in the water nearby, Berra and his shipmates had been ordered to shoot at any planes below the clouds.

"We shot down one plane we thought was German, but it was one of ours," he remembered. "The pilot lived. After he got fished out of the water, he really cussed us out."

Three weeks later, a transport took Berra to Italy, southern France and Africa before he returned to New London, Conn.

"I told 'em I didn't volunteer for submarine duty," he remembered his Connecticut posting with a laugh. "They wanted me to play baseball there."

Also offshore on D-Day was Lew Jenkins, the skinny puncher who had won the world lightweight championship in 1940 by knocking out Lou Ambers in the third round at Madison Square Garden. He retained the title with a second-round knockout of Pete Lello before losing it to Sammy Angott in a 15-round decision less than two weeks after Pearl Harbor.

Jenkins, whose life story Hollywood somehow has ignored, would earn a Silver Star as a legendary Army sergeant in Korea but on D-Day he was aboard a Coast Guard ship ferrying British troops to Normandy.

"When they told us we were takin' the British in, my heart wasn't in it," he told Bill Heinz, then a New York Sun war correspondent. "You know where my heart was? My heart was with the 1st Division here. I wanted to be with them I knew. Then I saw the Limies get killed, and then I liked them, too."

Those British soldiers died in the sand not far from that abandoned concrete Nazi bunker perched in the cliffs overlooking the English Channel, beyond the sixth green of the sea nine at the Omaha Beach Golf Club.

Not far from the rock music thumping now in a cabaret on a short pier in Port-en-Bessin on a soft summer afternoon. Not far from the voices singing and laughing. Not far from the beach that was empty and silent.

Daniel shatters 9-year-old mark

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — There was little doubt Beth Daniel would win the LPGA Oldamobile Classic. The main question was: How many records would she break on the way.

Daniel closed with a 4-under 68 Sunday, and her 20-under total tied the LPGA record for 72 holes by Nancy Lopez in the 1985 Henredon Classic at the Willow Creek Golf Club in High Point, N.C., also a par 72 course.

It was the second straight win for Daniel, who won the LPGA Corning Classic a week earlier. Daniel has won consecutive tournaments six times in her career.

Her total of 268 was four strokes better than Lisa Kiggens and five better than Amy Benz, neither of whom has ever won.

Daniel also left other marks at Walnut Hills Country Club, breaking the tournament record of 276 by Barb Mucha in 1992.

Daniel had a 63 in the second round, besting Deb Richard's tournament record by a stroke. Her 36-hole 130 and 54-hole 200 totals also set tournament marks.

Daniel now can gain entry in the Hall of Fame with either one win in a major, or six more victories on the regular tour.

There are two majors remaining this season. The next one also will be played in Michigan, when the U.S. Women's Open is held at Indianwood Golf and Country Club in the Detroit suburb of Lake Orion.

Daniel, playing methodically, began the final round 16-under, turned at 18-under and birdied No. 10 to drop to 19-under.

■ LPGA Oldsmoblie Classic

Daniel's real test began at the 440-yard, par-5 14th where her game faltered slightly.

Her drive on Ho. 14 hit a tree on the left side and her second shot dropped into a bunker in front of the green. Daniel was able to save par and remain at 19-under, but still lost a stroke to Kinggens and Benz, each of whom birdied to go 15-under.

Daniel put her approach in a greenside bunker again on the 15th but again was able to save par, maintaining her 4-stroke lead.

Benz birdied the par-3 16th, closing to within 3 shots of Daniel, who left a 9-foot putt on the lip.

That left it all up to Daniel at the 18th, a 364-yard, par-4 finishing hole.

Daniel's approach, from the right side of the fairway, landed about two feet in front of the pin, then bounced and rolled five feet past the cup.

With the crowd completetly ringing the green, including those who came up the fairway behind the players, Daniel — in gray shorts and a black shirt — appeared to have rolled the ball wide.

But it turned at the last instant and curled in high on the left side for her her first birdie since the 10th hole.

The victory was worth $90,000 for Daniel.

Pierce not as confident on Wimbledon's grass

PARIS (AP) — Mary Pierce just looks like a Grand Slam type tennis player, but don't expect to see her battling for the Wimbledon crown in four weeks.

In fact, the power-hitting player heralded as a potential savior of women's tennis will tune up for Wimbledon in a secondary grass-court tournament for juniors, skipping top-level prep events.

"Grass is a very peculiar surface for me. I never played on it very much," she said. "It's definitely not one of my favorite surfaces, but it is definitely different."

Grass aside, Pierce demonstrated clearly over the past two weeks that she has entered the elite of women's tennis. Though she lost Sunday's French Open final 6-4, 6-4 to Arantxa Sanchez Vicario, her straight-set rout of world No. 1 Steffi Graf in the semifinals established her as a threat to anyone.

"I'm only 19," she said. "It was only my first (Grand Slam) final and I have many others ahead of me."

She began the French Open ranked No. 12. She left it officially ranked as No. 7 but widely viewed as among the top three or four.

She plans to spend a few more days in Paris, then head to England to enter the Eastbourne Junior Tournament for players under 21.

"This will be my second time playing in grass and it is not very easy for me," she said. "I'd just rather play the 21-under event to kind of get used to it, and not have it really count as a major tournament."

She planned to enter Wimbledon last year, but illness at the last minute forced her out of her first match.

Even in defeat, Pierce acknowledged that she was a potential godsend for a women's tennis tour woefully in need of new excitement. Monica Seles and Jennifer Capriati are absent, Gabriela Sabatini and Mary Joe Fernandez are slumping, Martina Navratilova will soon retire, and Graf — until this tournament — had established a monopoly on recent Grand Slams.

"Many people say that something is missing in tennis, that it is less exciting," Pierce said. "I feel the public likes me well, especially here in Paris, and the way I attack."

Vancouver worried Rangers are ready to move in for kill

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — After getting a few breaks in Game 3 of the Stanley Cup finals, the New York Rangers moved in like sharks on the defenseless Vancouver Canucks.

Now that the Rangers can smell blood — their first NHL championship in 54 years — Vancouver coach Pat Quinn is worried they might move in for the kill.

"There's tremendous willpower on that club, no question about it," he said Sunday. "The closer they get, they start to smell it more and more."

Saturday's 5-1 victory gave the Rangers a 2-1 lead in the best-of-7 series. If they can win Game 4 Tuesday night, they'll have the chance to wrap up the title Thursday at Madison Square Garden.

"We're starting to hit stride," said goalie Mike Richter, who outplayed Vancouver counterpart Kirk McLean for the first time.

"Our team feels more comfortable, more immersed in this series."

At the same time, New York coach Mike Keenan and defenseman Brian Leetch are preaching patience.

Yes, the Rangers have almost lifted the 1940 Stanley Cup Curse once and for all, but ...

"You can self-destruct if you're not patient," Keenan said. "It's true, we're two wins away, but we have some distance yet. Pressure, injuries, calls, bad bounces. There are still some difficult things for us to deal with."

Leetch, who scored twice in Game 3 and has become the series' dominant player, said the Rangers need look back only to their previous series.

"We were up 2-1 on New Jersey, lost the next two and forced ourselves into a big hole," he said.

Rusty Wallace leads Ernie Irvan as the two NASCAR drivers duel for the Budweiser 500 title in Dover, Del. Wallace won the crash-filled race while Irvan was second.

Wallace outmatches Irvan for Budweiser 500 crown

DOVER, Del. (AP) — Rusty Wallace, biding his time as Ernie Irvan toyed with the field over the first 400 miles, Sunday won the crash-filled Budweiser 500 NASCAR race.

The two engaged in a brief but stirring duel before Wallace held off Irvan at the finish. The margin of victory was about three car lengths (.34 seconds).

"I couldn't catch Ernie," Wallace said. "He was flat tough. But then near the end, he was having some trouble keeping a low line in turns one and two. Then I found some killer horsepower."

Wallace's victory in the $931,186 Winston Cup race tied him with Irvan, the points leader, and Dale Earnhardt, the six-time and defending series champion, for the most triumphs this season with three.

A spate of blown tires resulted in 12 cautions for 99 laps at the treacherous Dover Downs International Speedway. The track is to be resurfaced next fall.

"We had our springs set up so we wouldn't use up our tires," Wallace said. "That was important."

Although he sat on the pole after breaking his own track qualifying record with a speed of 151.956 mph and dominated most of the race, Irvan was not upset with his second-place finish.

"We're looking at the big picture (the points race)," he said. "Rusty just got a little bit the better of it."

The dominance of the two Fords, never seriously imperiled by any of the others in the 42-car field, brought a crowd estimated at a record 94,000 to its feet with about 40 laps remaining. Irvan and Wallace exchanged the lead four times before the latter was able to drive away to an advantage of about a second.

More Sports/8C

It was reduced only becuase a late caution bunched the field. Wallace got one of his patented fast restarts, and Irvan was never able to make a serious bid when the final five laps were run under green.

Despite his strong run, Irvan was lucky to be there at the end.

The lapped car of Dave Marcis blew a tire just in front of him on the back stretch with 140 laps remaining. Irvan braked, narrowly avoiding the fate that befell Earnhardt and some of the other contenders.

Earnhardt, who now trails Irvan by 163 points, crashed his Chevrolet on lap 288. Geoff Bodine, whose Ford started next to Irvan on the front row, was collected in a five-car mishap on the 69th lap.

After 100 laps at the oval billed as the Monster Mile, only Wallace refused to join the vanquished. He passed Irvan on lap 400 and held the advantage until lap 445.

Ken Schrader was third in a Chevrolet, followed by the Ford of Mark Martin and Jeff Gordon's Chevrolet.

Penske rules without Mercedes under hood

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Who needs Mercedes-Benz?

This time, Marlboro Team Penske raced to a 1-2-3 sweep as Indianapolis 500 winner Al Unser Jr. fought off Emerson Fittipaldi to win Sunday's Miller Genuine Draft 200 at the Milwaukee Mile.

Paul Tracy, the third Penske-Ilmor driver, finished two laps behind in third as the 200-lap event was shortened eight laps by rain.

It was the third straight win for Unser and the fourth in a row for the Penske team, which got a triumph from Fittipaldi in April at Phoenix. That left Unser, who now has 22 career victories, leading the PPG Cup standings with 79 points, followed by Fittipaldi with 54.

A week earlier, Unser and Fittipaldi dominated the Indy 500 with much of the credit going to the superpowered Mercedes engines that car owner Roger Penske had built just for that event, the only Indy-car race run under U.S. Auto Club rules.

With the more conventional Ilmor Indy V8 back in the sleek Penske chassis, there still was no doubt who was the class of the field Sunday as the three teammates led every lap.

"This is one heck of a time to drive for this race team," said Unser, in his first season driving for Penske.

Fittipaldi said, "It's fantastic ... 1-2-3, what else do you need?"

Tracy, who finished a race for the first time this season, said, "I wish my car would have handled better, but Al and Emmo put on a great show and I was just sitting back waiting for the checker to come out."

■ IndyCar Miller 200

It was an unusually clean race, with no caution flags until lap 158, when a large piece of debris on the backstretch brought out the pace car for the first time. By then, only Unser and Fittipaldi were on the lead lap.

Fittipaldi had a shot at his teammate on the restart as the two red-and-white cars started nose-to-tail. But Unser was able to retain control.

Another chance for Fittipaldi came on lap 171 when Stefan Johansson's engine blew, bringing out the second yellow flag. Again Unser, the 1990 Milwaukee winner, was able to hold off the Brazilian on the restart.

That's when the rain, which had been threatening on and off throughout the event, began falling, bringing out the third and last yellow on lap 181. The cars finished the race under the caution, just as they did a week ago at Indy after a late crash by Stan Fox.

Michael Andretti passed defending race and series champion Nigel Mansell on the final restart to finish fourth, followed by Mansell, Robby Gordon, Bobby Rahal, pole-starter Raul Boesel and rookie Jacques Villeneuve, who was the Indy runner-up.

NASCAR's Moore remembers D-Day

■ Bud Moore says he still has nightmares about his part in the Normandy invasion

By Dick Brinster
AP Sports Writer

DOVER, Del. — Bud Moore stood silently, his head bowed and nodding. He was thinking about a day at the beach.

For a fleeting moment, one of auto racing's most successful car owners was lost in memory. He didn't move, but he wasn't there, either.

He was with his comrades — fallen and otherwise — back on the beach at Normandy.

"I don't mind telling you, I still have nightmares over it, and I think everybody else does that went on that beach," he said. "I'm going to be frank with you, I think every one of us was scared to death."

So, if he packs up and heads back to Spartanburg, S.C., without his 63rd career victory Sunday in the Budweiser 500, Moore won't pine for what might have been. He won't worry that it's been more than a year since his team has won in a sport where big-bucks sponsorship wants winners.

"That's nothing," said the 69-year-old stock car pioneer.

The anniversary he's dealing with comes Monday, the 50th commemoration of D-Day — June 6, 1944 — when a wannabe car builder learned about "building a better world."

His contribution began at 5 a.m. that day, when he and his colleagues from the 90th infantry division landed at Utah Beach.

"We had a job to do, and that was to rid the world of that maniac over there," he said. "We didn't know what to expect, but we knew the importance of what we were doing.

"You were wading ashore in water up to your armpits with a heavy load of equipment and they were shooting as us and we couldn't shoot back. My whole thought was to get out of that water, get across that beach and get me some kind of protection. The way we went across that water and beach, we were just like sitting ducks."

Moore was one of the lucky ones. He didn't get a single scratch — that day, at least. By the time the war ended, he had earned five purple hearts. Along the way, he and a few members of his unit surrounded a house and captured 15 German soldiers and four officers.

"All in all, as many times as I was blowed out of a foxhole, the times the shrapnel did get me, I was very fortunate I never had any what they call major problems," he said.

Just then a car fired its engine near Moore's car trailer at Dover Downs International Speedway. The sound was deafening. Moore laughed.

"That's nothing," he said, admitting he had one advantage in the garage area, thanks to the war. "With all the shelling, I can't hear real well. I had both ear drums busted. It was hell."

Moore returned home after the war and began building race cars. He'd work day and night in the grease and the sweat of the hot Southern summers. The filth and the stench may have bothered others. But not Moore.

"That's nothing," he said with a laugh.

Moore looked the floor. He was in Normandy again.

"The best I can remember, it was between four and five weeks before we changed our clothes," he said. "I don't even remember if anybody got to brush their teeth or shave or anything."

Long before Neil Diamond sang about the night coming like a friend, Moore learned the comforts of darkness.

"It was real thrilling for night time to come, because everything sort of stopped," he explained. "You'd have just a little peace. When you laid down in that fox hole ... you praised the Lord that you made it through the day and you prayed that you'd make through tomorrow."

Jobe sinks birdie for win in Hooters

DALLAS (AP) — Brandt Jobe of Littleton, Colo., birdied the first playoff hole Sunday to survive a four-man playoff and win the $100,000 Hooters Classic.

Jobe shot a 1-under-par 71 to finish at 16-under for the tournament. He had rounds of 66-68-67-71 and held the lead for three straight days.

Sharing second were Mike Swartz of Phoenix, Andrew Morse of Needham, Mass., and Jon Hough of Atlanta.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Too much comfort and luxury could slow you down. Stay active. Your contributions at work will accelerate career progress. Have faith in your ideas. A special financial opportunity gives you a chance to achieve something really wonderful. Be thorough when checking job applicants' references. A newcomer who appears very talented could lack the particular skills you require. Romance could suffer if you focus solely on work.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: comedian Sandra Bernhard, author Marian Wright Edelman, football player Ruben Mayes, comedian Dana Carvey.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Making a decision will be easier following a frank talk with your spouse or partner. Trust your instincts about a financial or job-related matter.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do everything you can to impress people who are in a position to do you some good. Exercise greater self-discipline where eating or spending is concerned.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Curb a tendency to make hasty financial decisions. Postpone forming a new partnership or alliance until certain that you will benefit. Follow your instincts if asked to mediate a conflict.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Smarten up! Get all of your ducks in a row. Give top priority to work duties, schedules and calls. Devoting more time to professional reading and research will prepare you to lead the parade.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be a risk-taker today. Whether your game is romance, sports or real estate, you will be a winner. Dress fashionably — you are likely to be thrust into the limelight. Put your best foot forward.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): New developments show that cash flow may not be as tight as anticipated. Patience helps handle an unexpected delay. Double-check information provided by well-intentioned friends before using it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Cut down on non-essential spending and delegate as many routine responsibilities as possible. Avoiding people who want to quibble or waste time will help you accomplish more.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Staying within your budget is a challenge. Find a way to get greater public exposure for your ideas. Candor pierces through the interpersonal fog in a business relationship.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Take a stand on an issue, even if it costs you someone's good will. Old friends may seem uninterested in what you are doing. Do not worry! Someone will grant you special privileges.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Getting involved with someone who has a dubious reputation could jeopardize your own good name. Consider signing a long-term financial agreement only after consulting experts!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Adequate preparation will ensure success. Taking an occasional break from your work will let you return to your duties with new enthusiasm. Avoid giving an opponent anything to attack you with.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Although family relationships take up much of your time, they are worth it! Setting a good example for a growing child will pay marvelous dividends in the future. Stop-gap measures are insufficient; be conscientious.

TODAY'S CHILDREN have much more stamina and strength than a casual observer might note. Their thin, wiry physiques are deceiving. These Gemini's endurance is awesome.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠7 ♡AQ93 ◇AKJ762 ♣96
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North

What action do you take?
A.—You have a pretty good hand and there are sure to be votes for a double to make sure you don't miss a heart fit. However, a two-level overcall, vulnerable, promises a good hand. Unless partner can act over an overcall, we doubt that you're missing game. Bid two diamonds.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ95 ♡AQ103 ◇82 ♣KJ9
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ◇	Dbl	Pass	2 ♣
Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Since partner did not bid a major or no trump, and does not have the values for an invitational jump in clubs there's no reason to expect the combined assets will produce a game despite your good hand. Therefore, we would pass before getting too high.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J73 ♡A874 ◇K732 ♣A3
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	2 NT	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Life would have been simpler had you responded one diamond rather than one heart. However, now that partner has confirmed four-card heart support you must do your duty. Your hand revalues to a full opening bid, so go on to four hearts.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A ♡A64 ◇KJ75 ♣AQ1094
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You have a very good hand and certainly want to get to game, but you can't be sure no trump is the right spot. Continue to describe your hand by making a reverse bid of two diamonds. In the modern style, that is a one-round force.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A43 ♡AK ◇K92 ♣109862
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	1 ♠	2 ◇	2 ♠

What action do you take?
A.—There's no need to be ashamed of your opening bid—it contains four prime cards. If you now suppress your three-card support for partner's suit headed by an honor and a ruffing value you might never catch up. Raise to three diamonds.

Q.6— As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠642 ♡AKJ75 ◇AQ4 ♣Q3
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one heart. What action do you take?
A.—An old bridge adage, which we have long endorsed, states that, when an opponent opens in your best suit the wisest action is to pass. That holds true here. You have no source of tricks to even think of looking for a no-trump contract.

Stapleton scoffs at thought of her being 'over hill'

RADNOR, Pa. — Only a dingbat would think that Jean Stapleton is over the hill.

Stapleton, who is described as seventyish in the June 11 issue of TV Guide, insisted that she has many good years left.

Stapleton insists she has many good years left.

"I don't celebrate my birthday," she told TV Guide. "I never have. It's limiting in every way and it leads to the prospect of deterioration, which is not necessary."

Stapleton currently plays a cheerful eccentric who prescribes uncommon cures for childhood problems in Showtime's new series, "Mrs. Piggle-Wiggle."

She admits that she still has trouble dealing with people who know her only as the dingbat Edith Bunker from "All in the Family."

"I'm still trying to find more grace when somebody calls me Edith," Stapleton said. "But I'm getting better. When people say, 'Oh, it's Edith!' I say, 'Hello, I'm Jean.'"

CONCORD, N.H. — Given a choice, James Earl Jones prefers the forces of evil over the forces of good. At least when he's choosing movie roles.

In real life, though, the man who provided the voice for Darth Vader decries the lack of modern-day heroes. He says there's no one who can affect this generation the way John F. Kennedy and the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. affected his.

Actor Jones decries lack of modern-day heroes.

"I don't have any heroes. I avoid them because I know they all have clay feet, and I don't want to lay my expectations on one being," Jones said at a fund-raising dinner Saturday night for the Christa McAuliffe Planetarium.

Jones nonetheless spoke hopefully of the future, and said he looked forward to a time when "the eyes of every child burn with a thirst for knowledge that is quenched and rekindled every day in every classroom, every library and every home."

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Don't expect Whitney Houston to sing her ubiquitous hit "I Will Always Love You" to her San Juan concert promoters.

Houston is suing the promoters, claiming they defrauded her out of a percentage of the receipts from her April 24 concert.

The lawsuit, filed Friday in U.S. District Court in San Juan, charges that the firm Pro Rok inflated expenses "to falsely show no profit from the performance." The suit lawseeks more than $300,000 in damages.

Pro Rok didn't respond to a message requesting comment on Saturday.

DANVILLE, Ill. — It was the Van Damdest thing you ever saw: a 60-vehicle parade through downtown Danville to honor Jerry Van Dyke.

More than 2,000 people crowded the streets Saturday as Van Dyke, who started his career in Danville in the late 1940s, waved and shouted from a 1953 bronze Lincoln convertible.

Downtown was decked out in the purple-and-gold team colors of Luther Van Dam, the bumbling but affable assistant football coach that Van Dyke has portrayed for six years on the ABC series "Coach."

At one point, the 62-year-old Van Dyke leaped to his feet, struck a Richard Nixon-style pose and screamed, "I will make a great president!" Later, he became emotional when officials announced that an intersection in this city of 34,000 had been dedicated in his honor.

"You don't realize it, but it brings tears to my eyes," Van Dyke said.

FRENCH: Spain reigns

her bid to become the first French woman to win the championship in 27 years, Sanchez Vicario and Sergi Bruguera became the first Spaniards to sweep the titles at a Grand Slam event.

As King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia of Spain looked on, Bruguera defended his men's title by downing countryman Alberto Berasategui 6-3, 7-5, 2-6, 6-1 in an uninspiring match between one-dimensional clay-court players.

Sanchez Vicario looked forward to the celebrations back home.

"It is going to be crazy," she said. "When we go back, the airport is going to be crowded with people."

Both finals were played on the same day because the women's match was suspended by rain Saturday after just 17 minutes of play. It was the first time since 1979, when both finals were scheduled on separate days for the first time, that the two title matches were staged together.

Throughout the tournament, Pierce exhibited a joie de vivre that contrasted sharply with the sad, troubled teen-ager who was best known as the daughter of Jim Pierce, banned from her life and women's tennis because of his abusive behavior.

Now coached by Nick Bollettieri, Pierce reached the final while losing only 10 games in six matches, a French Open record. She was coming off a semifinal rout over once-invincible Steffi Graf and was enjoying her new superstar status in France.

But Pierce couldn't cope with Sanchez Vicario, the 1989 French Open champion who is probably the quickest and best defensive player in the game.

Pierce hurt herself by committing 51 unforced errors, compared to 30 for Sanchez Vicario.

"She gets a lot of balls back," Pierce said. "She also fights a lot. She never gives you any free points. She doesn't attack very much, but when she has her chances, she will attack."

But both players agreed that the most important factor was Sanchez Vicario's edge in experience. The 22-year-old Spaniard was playing in her fourth Grand Slam final.

"I think she handled all the circumstances and situations better than I did," Pierce said.

"I knew how to handle it," Sanchez Vicario said. "There was a lot of pressure for her. I was more ready mentally than she was today."

The match started where the players left off Saturday evening — with Pierce ahead 2-1 and holding a break point. Pierce converted immediately by ripping a backhand winner to go up 3-1.

The next game proved to be pivotal. It lasted 16 minutes, went to deuce six times, and offered three game points for Pierce and four break points for the Spaniard. Sanchez Vicario, who repeatedly made great defensive gets and lobs, finally won the game.

Instead of being up 4-1, it was 3-2 for Pierce. Sanchez Vicario then won the next game for 3-3, giving her the momentum to take the set.

Both players had trouble holding serve in the second set. Sanchez gained the advantage by breaking for 4-3. Three games later, she served out the match. When Pierce's backhand flew wide on the second match point, Sanchez Vicario let out a scream of delight, dropped her racket and held up her arms in triumph.

At the trophy ceremony, Pierce shared a long hug with Francoise Durr, the last French woman to win here in 1967. She then thanked her mother, brother, cousins, aunts and coaches — everyone but her father. And she singled out Bollettieri "for being with me through the hard times."

The men's match featured players with similar styles. Both stayed far behind the baseline and traded groundstrokes in long rallies, with little variation.

The crowd seemed indifferent, almost disinterested. When the match ended after 2 hours, 22 minutes, there was only muted applause from the fans.

SWIM: COM excels

(From 1C)

second for the meet with 72 points, eight behind Amarillo Swim Team's Trey Hayes.

Swendig was impressed with several COM swimmers in the under-10 girls group. Halsell made TAGS in several events and Catherine Jelf made TAGS in five events. Halsell and Jelf finished first and second in the under 10.

"That's probably the best meet I've had," Jelf said. "I dropped eight seconds in my 200 IM (individual medley)."

Eight-year old Katie Lowry broke a 23-year old meet record in the 50-meter butterfly, swimming a time of 44.61 seconds. She also won her age group with 43 points.

And while Stroman was left hoping for better competition, Flowers got all he could handle.

Flowers, who finished fifth for Midland High as a junior in the 100 backstroke in March's UIL state meet, got a glimpse of what he'll be facing next UIL season in the Lubbock Swim Team's Tom Klement. Klement finished second in the 100 back Sunday with a 1:04.87. His recent move to Lubbock from New Mexico will put him in UIL Region I.

Flowers finished third in the 100 back with a 1:05.10. The twenty-one year old Hayes won with a 1:02.89.

"Everybody likes to win, but you're not going to get any better just by winning," said Flowers, who did win the 200 IM Sunday. "You're not going to know how good you are unless you have competition."

Stroman said the meet was mostly COM pitted against COM.

"Some people do better racing against (their own teammates) but I do need a little better competition to get me pumped up and ready to go."

310 General Help Wanted

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
- ★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
- ★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
- ★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- ★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?

Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?

A small deposit is required.
